articulated in this list's thread on the subject, this poetry would be considered "crap"--it's often not formally innovative (in the mod or postmod sense), it's declamatory, agit-prop, and it's often not even carefully written. But in contrast to what Perloff has just asserted, I would argue that some people most definitely NEED this poetry--the campesinos in the FMLN of El Salvador, the FRELIMO cadres of Mozambique, and the Sandinistas in Nicaragua certainly needed poetry at various moments in their struggles. This isn't to claim that these movements were "right" and, therefore, their poems are "good"--rather, what interests me is the ways in which poetry does matter to certain social groups during periods of historical/political struggle. There's a certain luxury involved in claiming that poetry makes nothing happen or that no one needs poetry--and it also strikes me that such claims serve to secure the institutional and ideological status of Poetry as luxury, conserving it as a right of the privileged.

Michael Bibby
Department of English
Shippensburg University
1871 Old Main Drive
Shippensburg, PA 17257
[redacted]

↑ Index

695. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Oh Yeah!
Sun 22 Nov 1998

---

what i would ask of pinsky---AS poet laureate---is that he work to promote an (inclusive) understanding of poetry (which might not square well with his own practice as a poet)... i think it would be nice for our laureates to communicate a sense of how diverse poetry is, aesthetically and ideologically, how poetry is not simply about the dozen or so names one finds in the poetry section of waldenbooks, how poetry is not (as karen notes) simply about rhyme or songwriting or greeting card verse, how poetry is difficult and conflicted in fact, and anxiety-producing at times, how poetry is a matter of often heated debate (as hereabouts), how so many people give their lives to it, to the arts in general, and how so few of the many who labor for so long end up with the privilege of being named anything like "laureate"...

that's it---nothing more and nothing less... and that's a LOT, no?... but once in a position of relative power, and sanctioned by the government no less, i would think that what i'm asking of the poet laureate is appropriate... if he wishes to opine re what he likes/dislikes, i think---as laureate---his doing so must be accompanied by a heightened awareness of his public privilege... that is, i would think he must come to terms, as laureate, with just how fortunate he is in having been given such public access (and yes, it's a job---but hey, what a job!)... i mean, heck, there's some responsibility that comes of being ensconced in that position... i certainly don't envy pinsky, or anyone, in that position, but i do hold anyone in that position largely accountable for what's done under its auspices...

pinsky-as-poet is, for me, an entirely different matter... or should be, and pinsky should attempt to make it so... and btw, i'm not certain what i think of pinsky's efforts to illustrate the "common person's" love of poetry... it seems to me that this can reinforce all sorts of normative views that really, in the end, continue to make poetry seem such a luxury, a realm of human idiosyncracies (incl. e.g. "genius") as opposed to something more elemental... but i don't wish here to start a debate about that...

still, perhaps we should be directing some of our talk at what, exactly, it means to have a "poet laureate" in the first place?... what responsibilities should be placed upon such an individual?... i don't find the laureate concept as such useless, however problematic, even if i'm certain that any particular nomination will likely be saturated with controversy...

best,

joe

↑ Index

696. ken|n|ing

Kenning #3 / the autumn/winter 98 issue

Sun 22 Nov 1998

ANNOUNCING KENNING #3 THE AUTUMN/WINTER 1998 ISSUE $5.00/1 $9.50/2 ISSUE SUBSCRIPTION

NEW POETRY: Daniel Bouchard Standard Schaefer Sheila Murphy Charles Bernstein John Lowther Hoa Nguyen Peter Ganick Mark DuCharme Lisa Jarnot Ida Yoshinaga Mark Prejsnar Andrew Levy Gustaf Sobin Ray DiPalma

POETICS: Tina Darragh John Taggart

NON FICTION: Susan Smith Nash

INTERVIEW: Nathaniel Mackey

REVIEWS: Yedda Morrison's The Marriage of the Well-Built Head Jordan Davis' Poem on a Train

*as of this announcement, Kenning 1 & 2 are out-of-print; subscriptions begin with issue #3.

future issues include work by such authors as Lyn Hejinian, Leslie Scalapino, Anselm Berrigan, Eileen Myles, Kathy Lou Schultz, Mac Wellman, and many others.

Kenning is a not-for-profit "newsletter" published independent of institutional support or guidance. contributions and mail-orders are accepted at the address below. please make checks payable to the editor, Patrick F. Durgin.

*Kenning is published three times a year. subscribers, excluding institutions, receive the magazine in a loose-leaf format, as well as a hand-printed portfolio to accommodate several stacks. Note to contributors, your copies are on the way. | | k e n n i n g``` ```| ``` ``` a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing |418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

697. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue
Sun 22 Nov 1998

---

but michael b---and i take your point seriously---what you're calling for is exactly what's BEEN happening for so long now... this is what cultural studies has been doing, e.g.---looking at the value of various literary (and increasingly non-literary) production in cultural terms, for how consumption/reception of same supports/complicates specific sociocultural issues (of representation, say, or in more activist terms, of identity)...

i think the point is that, as unpopular as it may be to say it, judgment of an aesthetic sort is often lacking when the issue of cultural work is made paramount... to the point at which one wonders, e.g., what literary criticism may have to say to the generative issues that are at stake when one sits down to write a poem in the face of an overwhelmingly powerful marketplace that is so markedly unreceptive to that which challenges the status quo (however it does so)... now, there has to be a direction in which to take the aesthetic per se that's not simply reactionary, not simply a return to new criticism... while at the same time i like cultural studies, much of it, the provocation is that we find a way to proceed---not around---but through those insights...

which is why, e.g., i mentioned the situation in women's romance fiction... at the risk of being completely and obsessively redundant, let me cut & paste here two items from my prior posts (on the assumption that the snow squall of posts---mea culpa---may have buried these thoughts, and that, again, this issue is sufficiently vital to repeat mself):

(1)
>witness, e.g., tania >modleski's piece a week ago in _the chronicle of higher ed_ where she >discusses (finally, and imho long overdue) problems with romance fiction >[gasp!]... recall that modleski was among those (radway, others) who >championed an analysis of such fiction as giving voice to women's issues >(which they do, in fact---but they do other, less desirable things as >well)...

addendum: and if you're trying to write what is now called "literary fiction"---well, you'll feel the influence of romance fiction that much more, if only b/c you now find yourself in this category!...

(2)
>esp. when i bump up against artifacts >that emerge from cultural conditions of which i have limited knowledge, or >esp. when i sense that my "status" (not ontologically, but socially) puts >me in a problematic relationship vis-a-vis said artifact, i may do well to >remain silent, listen, see if i can't hear a murmur unlike any i've heard >before...

the latter hits on the issue you raise, michael... i think, e.g., that we must be esp. careful in rushing to judge a film like smoke signals (which btw, i like a LOT, whatever its flaws---a judgment that i won't unpack here)...

hope this makes sense, michael...

best,

joe

↑ Index

698. Mark Weiss
Re: Rhetorics
Sun 22 Nov 1998

"Academic" in the context of poetry is a somewhat archaic synonym from the 50s thru 70s for Iowa School or, roughly speaking, "What Gets Published in the New Yorker." It has nothing to do with how poets make their livings. It's continued survival reflects the lack of a newer consensual term. "Academic" poets, by the way, never called themselves such.

Ron: Pinsky's performance is rather the opposite of what you suspect. No pretense to afflatus. More "anybody can do this, and it's good for you, although not all that important." A bit like Mr. Rogers.

At 08:37 AM 11/22/98 -0500, you wrote:
>I don't get my news much from TV, so haven't caught Pinsky's act on PBS, but >I certainly have seen 10 or 15 poets in recent weeks do grand imitations of >someone inhaling deeply so as to capture the inner spirit of some word, so >it would appear to be having some visibility. Looks like an asthma attack of >the heart or some such. Would it be different if we had Susan Howe in that >role? I think it's arguable, not because Susan's not a better writer but >because it's role, as I gather from my secondary sources, is to stand >ineffably for The Poetic. What if it were Bob Holman or Patricia Smith or >Meikel And in that seat?
>
>But I don't think you can have any sense of what a Susan Howe accomplishes >if you don't read a Pinsky, at least with an anthropological view of it. So >I do believe in the importance of checking in with that world, even if I >read it intolerantly.
>
>By the bye, to acknowledge Peter Quartermain's grump about the trashing of >the "academy," that's a term whose history and meanings certainly could >stand a little unpacking. It is after all the same ideological state >apparatus that has so famously shat upon the likes of Andy Levy and Joe >Amato and literally hundreds of other good and competent people, and which >leads to the creation of institutions such as the Academy of American Poets, >but it also has other meanings as well. It is what enables and empowers >other folks: Peter, Charles B (the absent father in Buffalo, as somebody >referred to him recently), Bob Perelman, et al. I'd be curious to see what >the breakdown of jobs is on the Poetics List, all 700 folks, since I suspect >Peter's right that perhaps 500 are in some connection to the academy, but as >one of the other 200, no, Peter, it's nothing like 100%.
>
>Ron
>
>

↑ Index

699. Mark Weiss
Re: Marjorie Perloff is Wrong
Sun 22 Nov 1998

One more: critical stance rarely engenders. It usually follows from practice. But here's an uneducated hunch: in the period you target there was a lot of sentiment for the establishnment of a national literary voice, differentiated from the brits, for obvious reasons. Hence, perhaps, whatever degree of tolerance there may have been.

At 08:49 AM 11/22/98 -0500, you wrote:
>On Sun, 22 Nov 1998, mj devaney wrote:
>
>> Gabriel Gudding wrote:
>> >
>> > MP wrote:
>> > > >But neither poetry nor criticism ever came out of tolerance;
>> > > >they are born out of opposition (to earlier poetries, rival poetries, >> > > >political systems, forms of oppression), resistance, and --hard as it is >> > > >to use the word at the moment-- discrimination.
>> >
>> > 1). Actually, this isn't true. Even a slight familiarity with American >> > literary criticism during the first half of the 19C will show that >> > without a turn toward a more tolerant kind of criticism, the burgeoning >> > of letters known as the American Renaissance would certainly not have >> > happened.
>>
>> But then:
>>
>> > 2). In his _The Origins of American Critical Thought, 1810-1835_ (1936), >> > William Charvat declared the literature of American romanticism differed >> > markedly from that of the British Romantics, attributing the difference to >> > the influence of a radically judicial strain of, as he called it,
>> > "Scotch-based" American criticism during that quarter decade.
>>
>> Doesn't this support Marjorie's point, since American romanticism here >> is defined in opposition to British romanticism?
>>
>> --MJ Devaney
>

>To beat a dead donkey thread: No, Charvat said this, Walhout bettered >Charvat's metaphor and research, and I'm saying that there is probably a >relation btw the new open critical milieu (which Walhout takes not of) and >that blossoming known as the Am Ren. I'm not "praising" hermeneutical >criticism: I'm saying here's an instance of extreme critical openness and >isn't it interesting that it coincides with a fascinating explosion of >letters. Dead donkey oh it dead. I'm tired of these rifles. Whey da >shotguns go? -- Gigi
>
>

↑ Index

700. Mark Weiss
Re: Oh Yeah!
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I got you. Of course Howe and Oinsky are not the only choices. Niedecker might have steered her in the right direction and been an easier first swallow.

Just caught the Oinsky above. An accident, but I'll keep it.

At 08:59 AM 11/22/98 -0800, you wrote:
>Okay, here's a question:
>
>Yesterday morning my neighbor corralled me in the carport to ask about poetry.
>Apparently she's always tried to write, but could never "get it to rhyme." Okay, >simple answer: "It doesn't have to. Write what you want."
>
>She didn't ask me who she should read, but in perusing this thread, I wonder: if >she had said to me, Hey, should I read this guy Pinsky, or this Susan Howe >chick? what would I have said? I think I would have leaned toward Pinsky, >throwing in a few caveats.
>
>Coincidentally, tolerance is a big thread on the women's bodybuilding list I >subscribe to: fitness shows or bodybuilding contests: which is destroying the >fiber of our beloved sport? Heading on one post: "It's all good." Chalk one up to >hevily-muscled tolerance.
>
>

↑ Index

701. Mark Weiss

Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue

Sun 22 Nov 1998

Right. A given artfact in a different context is a different artifact. And the same artifact can be the object of study of different disciplines. Doesn't much impact the argument in this discipline and context.

At 12:48 PM 11/22/98 -0500, you wrote:
>I've been following the various permutations of this thread with great >interest and Majorie Perloff's recent response has prompted me to step out >of lurkdom and venture into the fray. As an "academic" and teacher, I am >deeply concerned about this issue of "tolerance" vis a vis poetry/poetix.
>Granted poets feel very passionately about their poetix and, naturally, >will "discriminate" in their choices of who they read, what they like, >what they use, etc. But isn't it possible to also "study" poetry >without making the kinds of value judgements Perloff & others on this list >call for? I'm thinking, for example, of work I've been doing on the role >of poetry in revolutionary movements. By most of the measures articulated >in this list's thread on the subject, this poetry would be considered
>"crap"--it's often not formally innovative (in the mod or postmod sense), >it's declamatory, agit-prop, and it's often not even carefully written.
>But in contrast to what Perloff has just asserted, I would argue that some >people most definitely NEED this poetry--the campesinos in the FMLN of El >Salvador, the FRELIMO cadres of Mozambique, and the Sandinistas in >Nicaragua certainly needed poetry at various moments in their struggles.
>This isn't to claim that these movements were "right" and, therefore, >their poems are "good"--rather, what interests me is the ways in which >poetry does matter to certain social groups during periods of >historical/political struggle. There's a certain luxury involved in >claiming that poetry makes nothing happen or that no one needs >poetry--and it also strikes me that such claims serve to secure the >institutional and ideological status of Poetry as luxury, conserving it as >a right of the privileged.
>
>Michael Bibby
>Department of English
>Shippensburg University
>1871 Old Main Drive
>Shippensburg, PA 17257
>[redacted]

>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

702. Christopher Reiner
tolerance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I'd rather deal with the idea of advocacy--which, as an editor of a journal of criticism and reviews, I've decided to advocate. I've never published a bad review of a book in Witz...and I've gone back and forth in my own mind about it, but I guess I'm more interested in why someone likes a book than why they don't. Which is not to say I haven't learned a lot from bad reviews (Pauline Kael's pans were usually more interesting than her praises), but I think of Witz as an advocate for risky contemporary writing. It's not a matter, for me, of tolerance vs. intolerance. If you like something, you want to tell everybody, to hell with restraint or objectivity. (And that doesn't mean you have to ignore the weaknesses in the work.)

Oh, and when you do decide to write that review or essay...send it to Witz.

--Chris Reiner

↑ Index

703. Bob Grumman
Re: tolerance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Robert Archambeau thinks "Pinsky has written sympathetically about poets quite different from himself (Oppen, Ashbery and Creeley, for example)."

Yow, yet another critic, like David Lehman, who has gotten all the way to c in the alphabet of contemporary poets!

--Bob G.

↑ Index

704. Donald Wellman
Re: tolerance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

For me, "tolerance" comes into play when politics (in a fairly narrow sense) comes into play. The poet laureate is a political appointment, supposedly he should be "tolerant" and others should feel free to attack or praise. "Academic"

too is a politically charged word from the poetry wars of the 50's. I'd like to think those wars were a reflection of the broader cold war dynamic--that we need no longer defend an active counter-tradtion (one opposed to the mainstream) and could instead define work in relation to what it does. I would also like to think that what "it" does bears some relation to the language form on the page, but I am suspicious of any attempt to classify poetry by appearance alone. I think to that degree at least a detente exists within the sphere of literary politics.

Now it also so happens that those forms of tolerance and those notions of freedom advanced above are part of a humanistic ideology. Feeling the sometimes censorial brunt of that ideology, I am capable of making the argument that I believe was at the heart of "The Politics of Poetic Form," that one function of poetics is to test even the most seemingly benign forms of emancipatory discourse. It is poetry that does that testing that most interests me, that is my meaning of "what it does" -- as opposed to a lot of self-congratulatory hogwash about how great and tolerant we have become. I get very risible when I see self praise of any "us" --even when it appears on this list.

"Tolerance" has threaded itself into the language of poetry and science as a way of coping with uncertainty and maintaining propriety. I'd rather get a little naked about the facts of estrangement from time to time -- that is the condition I would like to celebrate, but then I am also entirely aware of how wearying that can be given the lack of any criteria for the value of distraction, still I'd rather not wear the weary face of tolerance myself -- that can be really harmful when I meet a young poet excited by Rita Dove or whatever. At least Rita speaks for someone and something other than a vast diffidence, even if she doesn't speak to me. That young poet might be able to speak to me and in so far as I appear only tolerant whoosh--no conversation.

don wellman

↑ Index

705. Michael W Bibby

Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue

Sun 22 Nov 1998

Joe:

Point well taken--but:

Although you say that the cultural studies approach to poetry has been "happening for so long now," I fail to see very much of it at all in poetry studies. In fact, the preponderance of critical work published in the major academic journals and read at major conferences (e.g., MLA) I feel tends to be of the judgmental type, and largely seems interested in theorizing/analyzing the very issues of aesthetic criteria you address in the second para. of your post. I think, however, that more work needs to be done on articulating aesthetics from the ground up (so to speak)--that is, I would like to see more poetry studies devoted to studying what values, modes, styles, attitudes, beliefs, etc. of specific social groups form their specific aesthetics in particular historical moments. In other words, I would question whether there is an "aesthetics per se," and that my problem is with universalizing what is ultimately local. Which is not to say that I want to chuck the concepts of valuation, judgement, aesthetics--but simply that I'd like to localize them in ways that help me appreciate how an aesthetix/poetix might have a particular value for specific groups. This necessarily calls for close reading--and certainly of the kind Perloff advocates. Someone else on the list (can't recall right now who) cited Busta Rhymes and this led to a string of musings about "jump-rope rhyme" and black vernacular expressive modes--yet until very recently poetry criticism had little in the way of an adequate critical apparatus to talk intelligently (rather than just dismissively) about the "poetics" of such forms of expression until people started trying to figure out what poetics was specific to these forms. Obviously, at some point, this kind of poetry studies may call for critical judgement, but it seems to me more convincing because its judgement may be based on values intrinsic to the social contexts for the poetry's production, and hence, more respectful of its audiences, their needs, their values, etc.

But ultimately my real concern is with the ways in which certain people in certain times need poetry--and certain kinds of poetry. The kind of brechtian/poundian/olsonian avant-gardist poetry as defamiliarization stuff might certainly serve the needs of certain social groups in certain times--it obviously didn't mean much to the New Critical academics of the 40s and 50s, but it means much more to a professional class of poetry critics today. I just don't see any reason--as a teacher, student of poetry, to universalize this poetix and see any other poetix as "intolerable."

Michael Bibby
Department of English
Shippensburg University
1871 Old Main Drive
Shippensburg, PA 17257
[redacted]

↑ Index

706. Billy Little
Re: tolerance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I'll second Chris' emotion, there aren't enough hours in the day to write all the praise of new poets and masters, friends and strangers, wordsworths and rilkes, i want people to know about these writings so they'll go out and read them for themselves, a really bad book i might go out of my way to publish a two line warning ala dotty parker, charlie's uncle, or who said romance w/o finance aint got no chance, was it Prez? believing with Louis B. Mayer? as long as you spell the name right it's all good publicity Pinksky's propably chuckling over how much promotion he's been getting from this list, some non=members just gazing over the archives subject lines might imagine we think the laureate is the new creeley, and the correspondance with howe the new mayan letters. is there any need to rewrite that.

billy little
4 song st.
nowhere, b.c. V0R1Z0
[redacted]

Go ahead and say something true
before the big turd eats You
You can say any last thing in Your poem.

-Alice Notley

↑ Index

707. Susan Schultz
Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Dear Marjorie and others on the in/tolerance thread--

OK, I'll re-enter the fray--I'm not sure I agree that no one NEEDS poetry. I have students for whom the first experience in their lifetimes of reading a poem "about them" (as they put it) is a transformative one, whether the poem is by Lois-Ann Yamanaka, Haunani-Kay Trask, Joe Balaz, or other local or Hawaiian writer--or Caribbean writer. Literature matters in a place where literature has historically been in import rather than a local industry. Now I may surely try to nudge students by showing them that there is poetry "out there" that is less narrative in structure, less transparent in language, than, say, Yamanaka's, but I'm not about to tell them that their reaction is to something less aesthetically valuable than Susan Howe's work, much as I (who perhaps do not need poetry as much--though I do, actually) prefer the latter in my own experience. As for Howe: I taught her last week to a group of exceptionally fine undergraduate honors students. They liked her work, but they also honed in on the contradiction between her desire to give voice to women and to Native Americans. I mean, try telling a group of non-white students, some of them native Hawaiian, that Mary Rowlandson is a heroic figure. They see the native Americans painted as "savage" and it's damn hard to pull them back into the world where being a white woman lost in the wilderness is a terrifying thing. Or where being a woman writer is a radical move.

That's why, to my mind, we must think of there being various kinds of experiments and innovations. Different people need different experiments, and their needs change (often radically) over time. It's instructive to see "white writers" regarded as the "same old same old," no matter how radical they are and minority writers presented as revolutionary when it's more a question of content than of form. Intolerance works in mysterious ways.

This is not to say that I don't make value judgments of my own. It is to say that I refuse (or try to refuse) to make them for others, especially when their daily poetic requirements are so different from my own. It does not mean that I don't feel passionately about poets I care about; I just don't want to deny that feeling to people whose passions are different. It also means that my priorities shift when I change my hats from teacher to critic to writer (but that my hair remains mussed with the impress of all of them).

all my best, Susan Schultz

↑ Index

708. nuyopoman
Pinsky/Howe
Sun 22 Nov 1998

<< Joe Amato writes: to distinguish among works that aim simply to entertain (which may be fine in itself), and works whose reach exceeds their grasp (if you get my drift)...>>

The dynamic “to entertain” is not intellectually inhibiting, but rather the reverse, if you accept that poetry (“language in gear”) can’t be “simply” anything. “Reach exceeding grasp” PLUS “entertaining” ah! there’s the equation.

Where do you find that synapse zap? seems to be Marjorie’s rallying cry, “it's time to start being a bit intolerant and make the case for the poetry we believe in” and how can we further it? Marjorie, do you give Howe a 9.8 and Pinsky a 3?

For me, I must tell you, my tastes aren’t always the same. Late at night I squeeze into some ED, and in the morning it’s DJ Renegade.

Seeing how a poet moves from book to book as we grow older! exciting to see poet grow or falter, crash against poetry's possibilities, scratch onto shore of one's own whirring. I've been dead wrong about poets -- heard a poet read who seemed standard victimization rash, only to check in a year later to hear the perky vocab and personae flips that marked a real poet up there.

Hmm. I guess my question is, Is Poetry itself the agenda? Off this list, most people I know think of Pinsky/Howe as being in same boat.

To be "intolerant" of someone's poem, how do you do that?

Bob Holman

↑ Index

709. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue
Sun 22 Nov 1998

---

well this thread has most obviously hit a nerve in me...

michael, again, i won't tread in the in/tolerable waters, b/c that's not me...

when i used "aesthetic per se," i meant to denote emphasis... as opposed to "politics per se"... i'm certainly not suggesting "aesthetics" is, in actuality, completely bracketed from "the world"... but i have to say, michael---when you call me on this point, i begin to think that i'm dealing more with a critic than with a poet... i mean zero insult in saying this---i value good writers/writing of whatever genre---but i'm trying to be candid, to tell you what i candidly think... had i written "politics per se," would you have called me on that?... my hunch is no, but i may be wrong... and can we really operate---as critics OR poets or whatever---as though there are no differences twixt the aesthetic and the political, as though at no point in time might we be able to discuss primarily one and not the other?...

how do poems get written?...

also, i didn't mean to say that we've had, for years, tons o cultural-studies influenced work in poetry... quite the contrary, as you indicate... and some of the folks on this list (to name but two, maria d and aldon n, apologies to the unnamed) have done some stellar work on same...

but let me be a bit strident: is the point now that cultural studies is to turn its attention to poetry, finally, and do only what it's been doing right along?... i'd like to think not, for all of the reasons posted prior, and then some (and here i must observe that much of my own work is directed at examining/enacting something quite a bit different---though i'd never offer anything i do as a model for future work... which is to say, i have vested interests in so asserting)...

still, i like your post, michael... when you write

> *But ultimately my real concern is with the ways in which certain people in certain times need poetry--and certain kinds of poetry.*

i want to ask, with some (rhetorical) urgency, "certain people in certain times" refers to poets too, right?... you mean to say, among other things, that we might look at the question of writing culture(s), using as an example practicing poets?... but in any case, how would we go about designating what's important enough to fall under our gaze?... would we simply assign "importance" on the basis of what a specific group seems to "need"? (i'm not arguing against doing so)... how would one go about choosing said group?... at the same time, would we focus on aesthetic criteria (will you allow me this latter?) that we find manageable critically, and would this manageability speak to what's "important" for those who are, as well as those who are not, poets?... i've found that many critics develop and deploy such criteria almost tacitly (i.e., when they do account for their choices)... and i've found that many poets i've known do the same... but when you find that your life's work is difficult to publish, is generally not grasped by your family, falls on deaf social ears, etc. etc. etc.---well, you can ill afford NOT to know where you stand, aesthetically OR politically... and this is a measure at times of what poets deem important (---which, again, is not an either/or proposition in any of its implications, but helps to draw out some of the angst on this list re more orthodox work... thing is, around here, "orthodox" is sometimes misapplied [he sez] to more formally conventional work that nonetheless poses its own challenges)...

this is what's going through my mind when i read your helpful post, michael, and i think the provisional answers i'm seeking will have much to do with what comes out of my pinkies when i sit down to write (poetry, i mean)... i don't believe, either, that accounting for one's aesthetic judgments is necessarily a matter of universalizing---no question that one can remain constructively plural in appreciating and negotiating multiple aesthetics (in context)... one issue has to do with how resilient one can be at inhabiting multiple genres and inclinations---this is the case even in a more political sense (e.g., i may hold to a cherished operating construct---such as justice, in my case---through which i wish to work out critical evaluation)... further, local value is never merely local in the hands even of a great critic, i would venture---it's always a value-added activity, if only b/c critics in general, as critics, operate from outside of a particular (artistic) discourse... there may be sound political reasons not to appreciate specific aesthetic qualities (the bind of participating even as reader in a fascist-derived art form, say)---and again, no doubt in my mind that those selfsame qualities may be desirable in another context... yet all of this, all of it, still constitutes (among other things), in its selectiveness and allegation of value---in a word, judgment... it just can't be that we continue to interpret and remark and comment (as scholars or critics) w/o at the same time exhibiting our likes and dislikes (and i wish i'd written that last sentence w/o any residual oppositionality, but to riff a bit on raymond williams, emergent forms that provide opposition, and not merely alternative possibilities, are also of value, esp. in a consumer culture such as ours)...

in any case, again---i would think it imperative that rendering judgment be conducted with great care, as in any worthwhile reckoning... what i object to is the apparent absence of (aesthetic) judgment, of the (almost transcendental) critical move that takes us completely away from the generative controversies of a given body of work to its (popular) reception, with little discussion of how the work does the cultural work it does, how it creates/reinforces (in its readership) specific experiences... this must of necessity be a matter both of formal complexities (or lack of same!) as well as cultural context---and i trust i'm not just 'western man' speaking here... in fact the situation in romance fiction, to come back to a fairly clearcut example, reveals that critics (critics who in fact have spelled-out their political motivations) have not been asking the aesthetic questions, as these relate to sociopolitical context---they were more interested in salvaging a specific body of work that spoke to women (fine in itself) w/o asking whether such work exploits zillions of women through recourse to conventional narratives and narrative form... that is, this latter constitutes the reading experience, which surely corresponds to why such books get written (and published) in the first place...

btw, i entirely understand and appreciate christopher r's desire to hear about what's good, as opposed to what's not-so-good... i would add only that critique is a complicated affair, as i'm sure christopher is well-aware, and that going after what's good is bound to be as messy, in the long run, as going after what's bad... b/c if it's not just a matter of how popular a work may be with _____, it's also not just a matter of how formally innovative or complacent it may be, either...

best,

joe

↑ Index

710. Kathleen Crown
: Re: Marjorie Perloff Has a Point
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Susan Schultz's comments make a lot of sense to me, and I hope for more "dialogues" of the kind that Marjorie Perloff describes. When I was surveying recent books on feminism and contemporary poetry, I found that the more inclusive books (such as Lynn Keller's) made the most valuable observations. The ones that got in the most trouble were those that limited the work under consideration to a single poetics favored by the author. For example, Kim Whitehead's book, _The Feminist Poetry Movement_, discussed a stylistically narrow range of voice-based lyrics (by Rich, Jordan, Anzaldua, etc). This allowed her to make claims about women poets' need first to "find a woman-self," next to experiment with form and genre, and finally to return to personal experience (ie, first-person lyric) to achieve a feminist or "coalitional voice." If Whitehead had broadened her vision to include the work of such poets as Fraser and Howe she could not have made those claims so easily.

Casting a wide net does not necessarily mean one relinquishes the critical faculty. Indeed, it could just as easily be viewed as a critical responsibility. I think Keller, for example, "discriminates" among the wide range of poetry that she analyzes. Just because one wants to make room for "everything possible for poetry" (as Rich put it at the Poetry and Public Sphere conference) does not mean that "anything goes."

A note on what critics find compelling in Susan Howe's work: Andrew points out that trauma & witness are hot topics now (though why not in poetry? that's work that needs to be done). But what I see critics shrinking from discussing in any detail is Howe's linkage of the experiential, archival, and testimonial with a rhetoric of ecstasy, vision, and possession. Howe argues for an suppressed but still available enthusiastic legacy, which she sees as radically disturbing to most academics (eg, the keepers of the manuscripts). --Kathy Crown

Susan Schultz wrote:

>So I like Marjorie Perloff's passion; I love the poets she loves (though she says she can't abide Riding!); I prefer her poets to members of the Pinsky
team. But I also cherish the notion of tolerance--perhaps because I have to.
It's always worth talking to each other--even when we have very little to say.

<!doctype html public "-//w3c//dtd html 4.0 transitional//en"> <html>

Susan Schultz's comments make a lot of sense to me, and I hope for more "dialogues" of the kind that Marjorie Perloff describes. When I was surveying recent books on feminism and contemporary poetry, I found that the more inclusive books (such as Lynn Keller's) made the most valuable observations. The ones that got in the most trouble were those that limited the work under consideration to a single poetics favored by the author. For example, Kim Whitehead's book, _The Feminist Poetry Movement_, discussed a stylistically narrow range of voice-based lyrics (by Rich, Jordan, Anzaldua, etc). This allowed her to make claims about women poets' need first to "find a woman-self," next to experiment with form and genre, and finally to return to personal experience (ie, first-person lyric) to achieve a feminist or "coalitional voice." If Whitehead had broadened her vision to include the work of such poets as Fraser and Howe she could not have made those claims so easily. Casting a wide net does not necessarily mean one relinquishes the critical faculty. Indeed, it could just as easily be viewed as a critical responsibility. I think Keller, for example, "discriminates" among the wide range of poetry that she analyzes. Just because one wants to make room for "everything possible for poetry" (as Rich put it at the Poetry and Public Sphere conference) does not mean that "anything goes." A note on what critics find compelling in Susan Howe's work: Andrew points out that trauma & witness are hot topics now (though why not in poetry? that's work that needs to be done). But what I see critics shrinking from discussing in any detail is Howe's linkage of the experiential, archival, and testimonial with a rhetoric of ecstasy, vision, and possession. Howe argues for an suppressed but still available enthusiastic legacy, which she sees as radically disturbing to most academics (eg, the keepers of the manuscripts). --Kathy Crown Susan Schultz wrote: >So I like Marjorie Perloff's passion; I love the poets she loves (though she says she can't abide Riding!); I prefer her poets to members of the Pinsky team. But I also cherish the notion of tolerance--perhaps because I have to.

It's always worth talking to each other--even when we have very little to say.

 </html>

----------BBDDE59142498F987E583655--

↑ Index

711. Laura E. Wright boulder poetry
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Well, as Rachel accidentally informed us, we do have poetry in Boulder. Here's some of what's been happening lately (sorry for the lack of quotes, I neglected to take notes).

As part of the Museum of American Poetics' ongoing lecture series, Lisa Jarnot gave a talk Tuesday (Nov. 17) on Robert Duncan. While the focus was originally to have been on heroic figures in Duncan's life and work, she decided instead to focus on _The Opening of the Field_ and ended up covering both admirably.

A tape of this talk should eventually be available on the Museum of American Poetics Web Site (www.poetspath.com/)

Wednesday night, we were graced with a reading by Michael Friedman and Anne Waldman, the latest installment of the inimitable Left Hand Reading Series. Michael read prose poems of a beautifully bizarre yet almost quotidian nature. Anne read part of a recently-unearthed supposedly ancient collaboration with Bill Berkson -- a wild lovely commentary on growing up in New York, and a variety of new work, including an excerpt from "Marriage, a poem" and a new section of Iovis that will soon be scored as opera. Many thanks to Mark DuCharme and Patrick Pritchett for keeping the Left Hand series alive. (And yes, Bobbie West's reading here was fabulous.)

--
Laura Wright, Library Assistant
Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
2130 Arapahoe Ave
Boulder, CO 80302
[redacted]

"Speech keeps strangling itself, but wisdom has not come."
--Henri Michaux

↑ Index

712. Henry Gould
what is tolerance of thread?
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Following up on Bob Holman's point, I think a good essay could be written on the affinities between Howe and Pinsky. There is the parochial effort to express the "core" of "American" experience for which I would assume many non-North Americans would have some difficulty finding the tolerance required for any enjoyment of their work, but which in Schuchat's Confucian terms probably represents the substance of their charm, their "essence" as poets. Their essence is their search for this essence. Don't get me wrong: I consider the parochial to be the saving grace of human civilization. For Pinsky, it's the jersey Jewish boy groping line-by-line toward the center of America; for Howe it's the old Boston WASP groping stutter by stutter toward the periphery; they need each other, just as "alternative" poetics needs the old-timey music. We should be grateful for the keepers of the fumes.

Poetry records the adventures of a particular language in history, & I would guess that the prospectors of the early 21st century will not exactly repeat the paradigm of "opposition", of a philistine exterior and a sophic core, of a

Longfellow vs a Dickinson or Whitman, in re-reading late 20th century poetry in English. I'm not sure what the paradigms will be but they won't be that, exactly. Schuchat & Holman may be onto something. Transparency & confidence bespeak a poetic power that can afford to be tolerant as it spreads its meanings far & wide. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

713. Tom Beard

Re: Howe/Pinsky

Sun 22 Nov 1998

> I don't think it's going to be possible to see a criticism > that includes > language, visual, sound, folk, and Pinsky poetry until we have poetry > readings that incorporate all of these poetic offshoots.

But there are individual poets who include all of these strands into their writing. An example might be Edwin Morgan (quoting from unreliable memory):

langpo: Thoughts of a module; code poems vizpo: Three persian cats having a ball; Message clear soundpo: The Loch Ness monster's song folkpo: various dialect pieces
Pinskpo: Instamatic poems; Strawberries; Glasgow Sonnets

The last category is a guess: I'm (s/gl)ad to say that I've never read Pinsky, but the titles I mentioned are certainly in a conventional lyric mode. Also, I'm not sure whether any of Morgan's poems, no matter how language centred or "non-representational" they get, can be considered "language poetry". He certainly doesn't seem to claim the same political values for his techniques that "Classical" language poetry does: while there are political purposes at times, he seems in the main to be pursuing play and possibility.

You could probably also add gaypo & scifipo to the list, as well as several categories that don't (yet) exist. Any model of criticism that can accommodate all of Morgan's modes would have to be broad indeed.

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

↑ Index

714. Eliza McGrand
whistles & bangs down the hall
Sun 22 Nov 1998

the angst over mr. pinsky's triumphs is akin to angst these days over slam poetry. on the one hand, one (presumably, as member of list devoted to poetics) applauds outbreak of interest in poetry, any poetry. as m. weiss so ably put it, appreciation can move from one poet/poem to the next, not a heirarchical ladder, but more like, really, spilled orange juice. sticks to all, trickles into all, soaks through all, and the scent remains.

but, is the appreciation for mr. pinsky, or for slam poetry (not that i am equating the two) really an appreciation for poetry, and as such, subject to trickle down/over/up/into effect? or is it appreciation for trappings of appearing to appreciate poetry?

example: vast arrays of self-described "poets" on web now at various poetry sites, many of whom do not, in fact, want to be bothered with reading poetry. they read greeting cards, each others poems. but they don't subscribe to poetry magazines, or get anthologies, or take classes, or study historical evolution/shaping of poetry. slam poetry -- most often of that ilk. reading of painfully unoriginal recirculated images and poses for dramatic effect. occasional actual poet as i would define it, someone so personally and intensely interested in poetry that not only do they ravenously read it, they keep trying to write it, and write better, newer, sharper.

i am not prepared to take a fixed position on this yet, but sadly, my suspicion is that the participants in slam poetry are not, for the large part, going to really seriously take up intense and focused study and writing of poetry. pinsky-ites? i think of bu program turning out long tail of earnest male clones, a factory of pinskyians. i'm not sure how many of them will attain enough confidence and fire to let go of imitating, and the received version of a poetic, enough to go off on their own. is it pinsky's fault? i'm not sure.

i suspect a good teacher of writing, a good Important Writer, dislikes and distrusts being copied enough that she/he discourages it and if in charge of some official "class" or "group," will endeavor to send each writer off in their own individual direction however opposed to I.W.'s own project it might be. i've had teachers who went out and started reading and writing techniques of another writer just becuase i was so excited about it and they wanted to encourage, rather than squash or mold me. i may have written in ways completely different than theirs, but if anything, they were amused and excited by it. mr. pinsky does seem to change and evolve. will his followers? will he cease molding followers? does he know he has followers? can he HELP having followers?

e

↑ Index

715. Eliza McGrand
Re: Society of Unimportance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

dear mairead

i would join your society of unimportance, except i refuse to be a member of any group that will have members. so, i sit slipping in and out of the edge of your society cheerfully raising my glass in between bouts of a wild rage of poetry. e

↑ Index

716. Tom Beard
Tolerance & the academy
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I see the word "tolerate" as very much double-edged, in the mode of "condone", implying that one feels distaste for something but grudgingly concedes that it has a right to exist. In this sense, it's more of an insult to tolerate something than to honestly criticise it.

It reminds me of the days when I was first groping my way into poetry, when I staggered through the limbo of weekend workshops and Poetry Society readings. Everyone's too polite to say "I don't like that", so they ooh & aah & nod their heads in gentle encouragement. It's a pleasant change when someone considers one's writing worth the effort of criticising.

> I'd be curious to see what > the breakdown of jobs is on the Poetics List, all 700 folks, > since I suspect > Peter's right that perhaps 500 are in some connection to the > academy, but as > one of the other 200, no, Peter, it's nothing like 100%.
>
> Ron

There's probably a continuum of academic affiliation (no, "continuum" is too simple: it probably has at least two dimensions, possibly about 2.5). Some points along the axis of literal academe:

- never studied lit beyond high school
- studied lit at varsity/college, as part of another major
- majored in lit (or linguistics/cultural studies/etc)

- post-grad education in the above
- teacher and/or researcher in the above

Some points along another axis, which is often what people mean when they say "academic", but is perhaps more accurately called "intellectual":

- Never write/read poetry - Write/read only poetry that is "accessible"/conventional/populist - Write/read poetry of the workshop persuasion, perhaps a little bit of post-mod playfulness, but nothing too obscure (Jenny Bornholdt?) - Write/read poetry, criticism & theory that requires (or at least is enhanced by) some familiarity with post-structuralism - Exclusively write/read po/crit/theory that requires a solid grounding in theory; have been known to quote Lacan (in the original) to taxi drivers; once wrote an essay in which the word "reification" appeared three times in a sentence

I'd guess that most people on this list are towards the end of the second list, and at least past the middle of the first. There are of course a smattering of outliers: perhaps academics in other fields who have never formally studied literature but who read Howe & Bernstein & Foucault & Adorno in the bath; people with PhDs in cultural studies who think that all poetry is boring; taxi drivers who read Lacan in the original but disagree with everything he says.

If we're going to plot ourselves in some sort of po-space or cloud of academic possibilities; I'd say that I'm someone who's in a fairly unusual space, list-wise: I've never studied poetry formally since I was 16; I'm academic in the sense that I have post-grad qualifications (in geophysics), but I've moved from being an operational meteorologist into graphic design (for which I have plenty of enthusiasm but zero qualifications); I've stumbled my own way into poetry and even get published from time to time in various odd places; I write criticism and am attracted to a quasi-scholarly attitude; I'm an Armani-clad yuppie who likes underground culture & experimental art; I'm intrigued by langpo & contemporary theory but am not entirely sold on 'em (hell, I still like early Eliot, I still like Geoffrey Hill); and this list is about the only contact I have with people who have even _heard_ of Creeley or Benjamin or Hejinian. The vast majority of people I know would consider me "academic" (or at the very least, "pretentious"); but I don't think I'd be academic by the standard of this list.

Phew, now that I've bored the list with that, I'll sink back into lurkage.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

717. Ron Silliman

Further

Sun 22 Nov 1998

"Academic" in the context of poetry is a somewhat archaic synonym from the 50s through 70s for Iowa School or, roughly speaking, "What Gets Published in the New Yorker." It has nothing to do with how poets make their livings. It's continued survival reflects the lack of a newer consensual term. "Academic" poets, by the way, never called themselves such.

But, once Auden left, the Iowa City poets tended to be neglected by the Gnu Yawker in favor of Louise Bogan's closer friends in the Lowell and post-Lowell circle, no. My own understanding of "Academic" as it was first used around the world of poetry is that it really referred to those poets (Warren, Lowell, etc.) who were too cozy with the New Critics, a group after all mostly composed of poets whose schtick was to show that they could out-professional everyone by means of close reading and the development of the so-called specialized reader.

The Writers Workshop was, more or less from the first, a mechanism for the writers there to free themselves of too much association with All That and one of the great successes of the workshop model was that it showed writers all across the country how to survive in the university in spite of cloistered poetics/politics of the N.C. crowd. So it became the relief from theory site on many a campus. When Syracuse a few years back wanted to mandate theory (a term with a far different meaning in the late 1980s than in the mid-50s) as an undergraduate requirement for English majors, the school had, as I understand it, to split off the creative writing program from the English dept. since they held enough votes to block it. So the creative writing department became the official No Theory Here locale for otherwise literate types. The so-called Naked Poetry types of the writing departments were a sharp contrast with the decidely well-dressed Brahmins.

It was precisely the return to close reading by many of the so-called langpos in the 1970s that sent various sorts (both of the Iowa City and also some of the more rigorously anti-intellectual New American types a la Clark and Codrescu) into conniptions.

But, as I believe Whalen once wrote of the Greeks,

"rooty toot toot,
we're the boys from the Institute"

Ron

↑ Index

718. Ron Silliman
Citation
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I should have noted that the first paragraph in that last posting was a quotation from Mark Weiss's missive of earlier in the day.

Hey, Bob H, your friends perception about Susan H & Robert P is not wrong,

Ron

↑ Index

719. MAYHEW
Re: Tolerance & the academy
Sun 22 Nov 1998

Tolerance as a concept is both negative and vacuous, negative because it implies being able to withstand unpleasantness, and vacuous because it is impossible to be tolerant in the abstract, without reference to some specific thing. It's good to be intolerant of racism. "Zero tolerance" of drugs, maybe not. Pinsky is a "tolerable" poet--mediocre but we can stand him in small doses. I have a low tolerance for pain. In each example the word tolerance seems to mean something different.

As for the term academic, I always thought of it like the European "academies," the kind that didn't let the impressionist painters show their work. Thus the salon des refusEs and the beginnings of the idea of the avant-garde as oposed to the academic. This meaning of academic then came to apply to universities--it seemed to fit Audenesque poets of the 1950s, given the fact we call higher education academia.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese

University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

720. Bob Haynes
Re: tolerance
Sun 22 Nov 1998

I am new to this list and so feel a bit self-conscious even posting this small missive. This thread about tolerance, however, is quite fascinating to me and I wanted to keep it alive. A while back I had a conversation with a poet "friend" exchanging ideas about new directions and what we (perhaps erroneously) labled avant-garde/experimental. I was talking about liking John Asbery and her reaction was one of horror, saying she thought J.A. to be one of the biggest fakes in poetic history, and that critics were but silly goofs for even commenting on his work. She reacted in a very intense and personal manner, citing how the real poetry was being shaped by the likes of Mary Oliver, Mark Doty, and a few others. Not that I dislike the poets she named, but rather I felt machine-gunned by her reaction, which seemed to me at the time anything but "tolerant." She has her opinion and it's the law. That's why I am intrigued with Marjorie Perloff's idea of side-by-side comparison as a mean toward "intolerance." One must have a modicum of tolerance to even "compare" (if the reaction of my friend is any indication of how we so easily and quickly get "set in our ways").

Bob Haynes

↑ Index

721. Katie Degentesh
Re: whistles & bangs down the hall
Sun 22 Nov 1998

> occasional actual poet as i would define it, someone so personally and intensely interested in poetry that not only do they ravenously read it, they keep trying to write it, and write better, newer, sharper.

This "occasional actual poet" is as rare in creative writing programs, Pinsky-led or "langpo" or otherwise, as it is in the slam poetry scene. The fact of the matter is that there are now so many people interested in something they call poetry (whether or not everyone else would define it as such) that it's impossible for all of them to be "actual poets." In any genre, an actual poet is a rare thing. "Intense and focused study and writing" is not always -- or even usually -- enough to create one. For every "actual poet", there are going to be about a hundred semi-actualized poets. This is inescapable. In fact, in some ways it's good, because at least it creates an educated audience for the "actual poets." In this "educated audience" I include most slam participants, who if nothing else at least have a sense of how to judge a reader, if not always a poem. All we can do is be passionate, vehement, and verbal about pointing out medicrities, likes and dislikes (this is, I believe, what we have been referring to as "intolerance" -- that unfortunate buzz-word that pushed so many PC buttons) while allowing others to do the same (tolerance).

↑ Index

722. A. Jenn Sondheim
Julu, Waiting on a Lounge Chair
Mon 23 Nov 1998

-

Julu, Waiting on a Lounge Chair

.desc as waiting for you to .examine me ... You are known as: julu as waiting for you to .examine me ... .examine julu
---------- ay, how would you describe me? you'd take a moment and look at me, maybe when you log on or through the .w command and that would excite you! more, you'd always ask for, beg for; nearing the end, you might run an .examine julu, just to see what would come up. i'd be waiting for something about warm pulsating walls or rather i'd be waiting for someone in warm pulsating walls, hoping for the concrete before the conclusion initiated by the presence of a single or singular dot, isolated on a line by itself, hovered in the silence of a perfect conclusion. now you know i am lingering about, waiting to see what you make of my perfect description. you will want me and you will search my name, hungering for more and more, writing me as you realize that you and i were made for each other. it is a long way home from there, but you and i know the way.
---------- Listening to shouts and tells.

↑ Index

723. Ramez Qureshi
anyone tolerate Reading?
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Forgive my ignorance, but i've just come across the British poet Peter Reading. Is anyone familiar with his work? Offer comparisons to contemporary American poets? Suggest how to approach him? etc.

much thanx,
RQ

↑ Index

724. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap
Re: need?
Mon 23 Nov 1998

"First there is need...then there is the way..."

__Reznikoff

↑ Index

725. Angela Szeto
Travel business
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Hi Everyone -- I'm stopping over in Paris for two weeks on my way to Dubai and I was wondering if anyone knew of anybody who needs someone (me! me! me!) to housesit for them. I will be in Paris from about January 18 to February 5 in the new year.

PLUS

If anyone has to come to Vancouver for Christmas and needs a place to stay, I might have something for them.

Please backchannel

Regards,
Angela Szeto

↑ Index

726. Gabriel Gudding
Weiss: My Thumbnail Sketch of Am Ren
Mon 23 Nov 1998

On Sun, 22 Nov 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:

> One more: critical stance rarely engenders. It usually follows from practice. But here's an uneducated hunch: in the period you target there was a lot of sentiment for the establishnment of a national literary voice, differentiated from the brits, for obvious reasons. Hence, perhaps, whatever degree of tolerance there may have been.

Mark, I'm right there with you in everything you say, except your first sentence: the relation between formal reception (critical milieu) and the practice or creation of poetry should not be oversimplified for the sake of a dictum ("critical stance rarely engenders"). In the case of renaissances, an open critical stance is an integral part of literary happenings.

I'm only targeting this period because there WAS such a very clear relationship btw criticism and creation. The push for a national literary voice was one of THE MAIN facets of this criticism, and eventually it was this push that brought about a new critical milieu: in many ways, I'm saying, this push for a national literary voice brought about a need to RE-EVALUATE criticism, and this re-evaluation of criticism was the nest in which our tweety american chick of Whitman and Company was born. Here's how I would sketch it:

Americans grafted the British prophetic role of poetry upon their German-influenced nationalistic hopes for America -- and considered poetry the apex of American letters.

No other genre and no other art at that time could boast the same expectations of it. The hopes that were placed upon and the role that was given to poetry were extravagant. To some extent, its failure to meet this challenge contributed to poetry's eventual fall toward a secondary role in American letters, explaining in part, in the words of the contemporary historian Joseph Harrington, "why American poetry is not American literature."

The constant fact of the crucial quarter century of Scots criticism is that one can draw a distinct line between the poetics and the criticism of the time: the poets were not contributing greatly to reviews, nor were critics writing poetry; the reviewers were not minutely concerned with how to create poetry, so much as how to judge it.

Finally, and most importantly, poetry, because of the high hopes placed upon it, was considered the laggard of American letters: Even during the debates about copyright in the 1840s, which brought about many comparisons between the literary productions of America and England, it was poetry that was considered the runt of the literary litter.

Oddly enough, given that the main audience of poets in America (for over the quarter century preceding the great flourishing of letters known as our Renaissance) was critics, few literary historians have considered what influence this relationship had on American poetics -- and this is mainly because these historians have assumed American poetics to be a slightly distorted mirror image of British poetics.

Contrary to popular opinion, there was a HUGE difference btw American and British romanticism: vast wonking differences.

Until the 1840s, the critic was seen as the arbiter of public taste; he distrusted both the reading public's ability to choose appropriate works for purchase, as well as the poet's ability to create suitable pieces for the public. I'm sorry, but it just cannot be denied that the poets of antebellum America felt their poetry was opposed -- whether by a vague almost demonic and unpoetic force, by professional critics, the reading public, or by the incidental reviewer, journalist or editor.

I mean, some of the rhetoric against critics during the period prior to the 1840s is JUST CRAZY. But once the rhetoric clears, and you have a few years of non-cantankerous get-along, you begin to hear from the early Whitman and Thoreau and Fuller and others.

The historical correlations are extraordinary: so extraordinary that it is almost impossible to graft onto them the same old tired rhetoric of struggle and opposition being of themselves engendering factors.

I'ma get some coffee.

Gabe

↑ Index

727. Jim Andrews
Clemente Padin vispo and enigma n for ie4
Mon 23 Nov 1998

I've put together a pretty good webliography (though not complete, I suspect) on the work of Clemente Padin available on the Web, and tonight put up nine works of his at Vispo from Clemente's Visual Poems 67-70.

Also, I finished the Internet Explorer version of Enigma n this weekend. This is a philosophical vispo toy that is written for philosophers and poets from age 4 up. It is most interesting in Internet Explorer, rather than Netscape, but it works in both.

Both Clemente's fine work and Enigma n are reachable from http://speakeasy.org/~jandrews

Jim Andrews

↑ Index

728. Gabriel Gudding
Perloff & The Rubicon of Stupidity
Mon 23 Nov 1998

1). A canid's soppy-tongued thankyou to Henry Gould & Mairead Byrne, Eliza McGrand & Chris Reiner for so gently articulating what I could only bark.

2). There is a fine line between Stupidity and Idiocy -- and I have crossed it. Thus I continue:

3). There are two kinds of critics: those who pave the way for Authors and those who pave the way for Anthologists. Jorie Perloff, in her advocacy of THE IMPORTANT, proves herself, like Vendler and Bloom, to be one of the latter.

4). A Prolegomenon to All Future Adversaries: if your argument is as powerful as the smell from your lap, you might defeat me.

Good lord, I'm barking again.

-- Guttapercha Bunsen

↑ Index

729. Pete Landers
Re: Susan Howe thread/Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

There are some long, well reasoned, and probing comments on this thread. My own theory as to how Howe finally got the recognition and attention she deserved is far more simple. WWNorton took over distribution of New Directions. I think other things changed hands in that deal, including publication rights for some famous works that have long been New Directions staples. But whatever else happened, ND had lots of money. They looked around to see what had been going on now that they could afford to do anyone's book. Ms. Howe was one, but there were others who they added to their booklist.

It takes more than an established literary publisher to establish a poet in the mainstream. It also takes good content, unique voice, rigor, and an intellectual respect, to name a few characteristics. And it's not like anyone has a list they check off. It's the total effect. But it REALLY helps to have that ND name on the spine.

I know what my instant reaction to her work was. When the Montemora supplement came out, Pythagorean Silences, I stored four on the back shelves and took one up front. Cracked open to the first page as I walked and... sat down and read it! Well... I had to work, so I bought it.

Do you like King Arthur? Do you like Shakespeare? Do you like Emily? Do you follow modern poetics? Do you argue or agree with long dead writers? If yes to all, Susan Howe might just "take the top of your head off".

Pete

p.s. gotta unsub for a while till I have a new address. I don't work at this address after today.

↑ Index

730. David Kellogg
Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Mon 23 Nov 1998

OK, I've got a big stake in this, as those who've read my work know.

In these Southern parts, I hear a lot of anti-tolerance talk, of the following type: "They don't want me to just tolerate their perverted, ungodly lifestyle, they want me to accept it and promote it."

Actually, tolerance would be just fine.

Marjorie wants to separate political from aesthetic tolerance, but don't think such separation can or should be done, esp. since the operations of the "academic" (which as Ron pointed out, has yet to be unpacked) mean that poetry evaluation and poetry jobs go uneasily together.

Jonathan Mayhew may be right that the word "tolerance" is both negative and vacuous, but our whole language for dealing with these issues is bankrupt -- whaddaya wanna do, not talk about it?

Jonathan, if Pinsky is a "mediocre poet," are those who actually enjoy his work mediocre readers? Mediocre intellects? Mediocre people?

I'm with Susan Schultz (hi Susan!) -- I'll passionately advocate my tastes, but I'm not about to speak for another.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

At an open mike, toleration is essential. When you edit a magazine you do not have to tolerate anything. Your choices may result in an alienated readership, but they will be _your_ choices. Nobody is interested in a magazine, for instance, that "tolerates" everyone. Editors and critics are expected to have opinions. When they fail these expectations, their usefulness falls into doubt. We compare our own opinions to theirs and use the result when choosing what to read. For instance, if Hoover/Chernoff accept a poem into NAW, you and I gauge that against our opinions about what they will accept. While a literary critic is not the same as a movie critic with her thumbs in up or down positions, her choice of what to explore clearly indicates her preferences.

Therefore, Ms. Perloff is doing her job when she is intolerant.

But I'd rather express this in terms my ex-in-laws can understand. I can tolerate Pabst Blue Ribbon, but I won't drink it. I don't think ill of people who do drink it. However, if a beermeister at Heineken tolerated the flavor of Pabst in my Heineken, I would stop drinking it.

Any poet who claims to accept or admit everything as equal in the eyes of poetry can't be speaking honestly. It takes a strong fortitude to sit through the full open mike, but those of us who do not leave early stay from courtesy, not toleration. We have taste, we just don't feel it is necessary to express opinions of taste all the time. Other times, opinions of taste are required.

Pete

↑ Index

732. Michael W Bibby
Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue
Mon 23 Nov 1998

This exchange, Joe, is helping me think through some issues crucial to my work--so to respond:

On Sun, 22 Nov 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> when i used "aesthetic per se," i meant to denote emphasis... as opposed to "politics per se"... i'm certainly not suggesting "aesthetics" is, in actuality, completely bracketed from "the world"

I didn't mean to suggest that you were doing this, rather I wanted to note something I felt was inherent in the phrase that pointed to a tendency to think aesthetics as somehow outside or above the contingencies of the world--

> ... but i have to say, > michael---when you call me on this point, i begin to think that i'm dealing more with a critic than with a poet... i mean zero insult in saying this

None taken--and you're right here--I'm not a practicing poet--I'm a teacher, student, critic-- > had i written "politics per > *se," would you have called me on that?*

Well, yes, actually I would have--although, I prefer not to think of my response on the "per se" as "calling" you on it-- > and can we really operate---as critics OR poets or whatever---as > though there are no differences twixt the aesthetic and the political, as > though at no point in time might we be able to discuss primarily one and > not the other?...

Precisely not, and this insistence on the political nature of aesthetics (and, perhaps, the aesthetic nature of politics) was what I have in mind-- > but let me be a bit strident: is the point now that cultural studies is to > *turn its attention to poetry, finally, and do only what it's been doing* > right along?

Not at all--I didn't mean, by remarking on how little cultstds has analyzed poetry/poetry production/poetry cultures, that it's high time it did--rather my point was that Poetry Studies, as I see it being practiced in the US, tends to be very invested in the business of discerning aesthetic values, discriminating between what's good and what's bad, which has, I believe, a tendency to stifle other methodologies, other interests. Ultimately I'm not very interested, as a teacher/student (leaving out critic, which implies criticizing [altho need not always]) in working out why Howe is better than Pinsky--I'm personally more interested in figuring out why, for example, certain social groups like Pinsky more and others like Howe. Someone just recently mentioned on the list that perhaps the Pinsky and the slam-po phenoms appeal only to audiences "sense" of poetry and have very little to do with "real" poetry--but that's also (but not solely) of interest to me--the ways social groups perceive and/or articulate the "poetic."

> i want to ask, with some (rhetorical) urgency, "certain people in certain > times" refers to poets too, right?... you mean to say, among other things, > that we might look at the question of writing culture(s), using as an > example practicing poets?...

Most definitely--

> but in any case, how would we go about > designating what's important enough to fall under our gaze?... would we > simply assign "importance" on the basis of what a specific group seems to > "need"? (i'm not arguing against doing so)... how would one go about > choosing said group?... at the same time, would we focus on aesthetic > criteria (will you allow me this latter?) that we find manageable > critically, and would this manageability speak to what's "important" for those who are, as well as those who are not, poets?...

Ah ha! and here I'm caught and we're back to making choices, discriminating, being "intolerant" of one thing so we can look at another. Naturally, judgement must play a role in the defining one's field of study. I'm not calling for the banishment of reasoned choices--I'm suggesting that such choices need not be put in the service of advocating one set of aesthetic criteria over and against another--but I'm also not suggesting that there is never any place for the advocacy of a particular set of aesthetic criteria. Of course, poets do this all the time--they have to because, as you suggest, that's basically how they come to define what they do--they write to make language strange, for example, or to capture the sound of a diasporic language, or whatever. But my point is that I don't feel I need, as a teacher/student, to come to the poet's work with an Aesthetic already in place--rather I want to understand what the poet's aesthetics are and understand how those aesthetics relate to her discursive community(ies).

> further, local value is never merely local in the hands even of a great critic, i would venture---it's always a value-added activity, if only b/c critics in general, as critics, operate from outside of a particular (artistic) discourse...

True--and this poses some very difficult problems for the kind of work I want to do--it's sorta the ethnographer's dilemma in a sense--and so, i don't think one should try to ignore it, go around it, or dismiss it--rather it seems more important to engage one's own value-system and one's own situatedness head-on-- > it just can't be that we continue to interpret and remark and comment (as scholars or critics) w/o at the same time exhibiting our likes and dislikes (and i wish i'd written that last sentence w/o any residual oppositionality, but to riff a bit on raymond williams, emergent forms that provide opposition, and not merely alternative possibilities, are also of value, esp. in a consumer culture such as ours)...

True--but I'm just asking for a poetry studies that does less advocating one's likes/dislikes (contra Perloff's suggestion which began this thread) and more describing how poetry means/does in its various communities--because it seems to me this makes possible more ways to teach and appreciate more and more poetries--

> in any case, again---i would think it imperative that rendering judgment be conducted with great care, as in any worthwhile reckoning... what i object to is the apparent absence of (aesthetic) judgment, of the (almost transcendental) critical move that takes us completely away from the generative controversies of a given body of work to its (popular) reception, with little discussion of how the work does the cultural work it does, how it creates/reinforces (in its readership) specific experiences...

> this must of necessity be a matter both of formal complexities (or lack of same!) as well as cultural context

I agree--and it's through close reading that one understands and appreciates what a poem does in its contexts--I would not at all advocate a kind of superficial, topical cultural study of poetry--"this poem advocates resistance to oppression because it says `off the pig' and therefore it's a good poem in its contexts"--but I don't know many doing the sort of cultural study of poetry I'm advocating who do that--certainly Maria, Aldon, Cary Nelson, and James Sullivan don't.

but I've blabbed on far too long-- michael

↑ Index

733. Wendy Battin
CAPA--call for o.p. books
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Lately I've been discouraging people from submitting poetry books to CAPA because we've were so far behind, but we've recently been blessed with a couple of competent and energetic work-study students to do scanning--hallelujah!. If you hold copyright to your out-of-print books and want them made available online in the archive, contact me--backchannel, please, at the address below.

CAPA is open to full-length books of poetry published in North America-- no vanity publications or previously unpublished collections, please. Details available at the CAPA site, http://capa.conncoll.edu

Wendy

ps: Don't mail the books to me in Mystic--I don't want them languishing here for 8 months while I'm away. I'll post the new snailmail address at the CAPA site later this week.
(I'll be able to make corrections and attend to problems from Greece, as far as I know, but I'm still working out the procedure.)

==========
Wendy Battin [redacted]

Contemporary American Poetry Archive
http://capa.conncoll.edu

↑ Index

734. Charles Alexander
Re: tolerance
Mon 23 Nov 1998

At 11:38 PM 11/22/98 EST, you wrote:
>I was talking about liking John >Asbery and her reaction was one of horror, saying she thought J.A. to be one >of the biggest fakes in poetic history, and that critics were but silly goofs >for even commenting on his work. She reacted in a very intense and personal >manner, citing how the real poetry was being shaped by the likes of Mary >Oliver, Mark Doty, and a few others.

Here's where reading has to come in (I hope). Not to disrespect your friend, but I have known others, with similar opinions, who simply haven't read enough of the work to have the right (in my opinion) to spout the opinions above. My first questions to her would be -- What Ashbery have you read? Have you read other poets in Ashbery's circle or context that offer illumination of such poetry? What in his work makes you think he's a fake? and on the other side -- What do you really like about Doty's poetry? Oliver's? -- and maybe get to questions eventually, like -- What do you think Ashbery tells us about the relationship of individual and world / speaker and audience / society and language / etc.? Do you think Oliver's and Doty's implications about such matters are as interesting as Ashbery's? Why? And I do think this line of questioning can be done in a way which is not insulting or threatening to your friend or to people who have espoused such ideas. Not that they will all let you get too far with such questioning before they just walk away.

Just that, all too often, when I hear such blanket discountings, I have found out, on probing, that whoever is saying them is repeating what a favorite teacher or mentor told her or him, and often that it wasn't original with that favorite teacher or mentor, either. So there's just a lot of unquestioned assumptions out there. So I tend, in talking about Pinsky or Gerald Stern or others I don't care a lot about, to simply say that I've read only a little and I wasn't inclined to read any more -- the work just didn't interest me very much. Whereas if I want to make such assumptions as your friend is making, I'd better prepare myself to back them up.

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

735. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: A PS on the Tolerance issue
Mon 23 Nov 1998

michael, thanx for your post, helps much...

only thing i would add (and this is probably raising an issue that's been raised too many times at this point) is that i took the gist of marjorie's post to advocate both discrimination and close reading (i.e., discrimination on the basis of, among other things, close reading)... implication being that there's critical work out there that tacitly offers us in essence all sorts of discriminations w/o close reading---that claims are often made in the absence of formal interrogation, and in the service of a broader cultural view...

and perhaps this (!): a prime reason that poets, all artists in fact, get pissed at critics is b/c they feel that the urgencies with which they come to their work are not at all present in critical discourse... i'm speaking in the abstract, and what critics wish to do about this, well---that's part of this thread, i guess... it's true, as you say, that a certain portion of established critical practice, coming out of the old guard, too easily dismisses such & such work as shoddy, or such & such work as a masterpiece... but it's equally true that recent perpetual harping about what's valuable (or not) to a specific group---and i'm not hinting at "multi-culturalism" here, though i do have cultural studies in mind---in the absence of any sustained analysis of the work, risks a situation where there is little distinguishing among reading experiences (what happens, in effect, is that one charts, almost demographically, enthusiasms and fascinations, but never really looks with a critical eye at how the work is actually accomplishing such... work!)...

i feel obliged to aver (my but i go on!) that anyone who knows me knows i mean nothing anti-theoretical in observing so... i get pissed mself at the creative writers ron s mentions, who position themselves against theory (and against any but more conventional forms of poetry, too)... but (i may as well spell it out) some of the more emancipatory claims i've heard (read) of late for cultural productions of one sort or another are falling from the mouths of some of the most aesthetically conservative literary-critical types (please don't ask me to name names)---folks who would no doubt regard much of the writing with which this list is preoccupied as enlightened blather (that is, if they were willing or capable of regarding it at all---and here i simply must mention the incredible amount of work marjorie has done in opening up academe to such writing, and w/o losing sight of aesthetic issues)... and i take david k's point, too, re the impossibility of entirely disengaging political and aesthetic tolerance, for one, owing to intersections of intellectual capital and the academic job market---but you'd still have to have some knowledge, david (as you know), of what you mean by an political and aesthetic "tolerance" so engaged...

(i still don't like this word, tolerance, in this context... when i think of tolerance, i think of machine tolerances---allowable deviations from a standard)...

i'd almost like to go on here, try to bring this discussion around to questions of literacy... for my money, i see older (print) literacies in the process of being displaced (and i can understand how this might be a good thing, in some sense)---but what worries me is that i don't see much rushing in to fill the void, other than various forms of marketplace savvy, i mean... but that's another (probably pedagogical, probably long) story, for another time...

best,

joe

↑ Index

736. Mark Prejsnar
neononanticounteracademicism
Mon 23 Nov 1998

On Sun, 22 Nov 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:

> "Academic" in the context of poetry is a somewhat archaic synonym from the 50s thru 70s for Iowa School or, roughly speaking, "What Gets Published in the New Yorker." It has nothing to do with how poets make their livings. It's continued survival reflects the lack of a newer consensual term. "Academic" poets, by the way, never called themselves such.
>
> Ron: Pinsky's performance is rather the opposite of what you suspect. No pretense to afflatus. More "anybody can do this, and it's good for you, although not all that important." A bit like Mr. Rogers.

The latter paragraph is wildly funny...Much appreciated. But i wanna bounce off of Mark's first paragraph, which is both amusing and accurate i believe.

(By the way, Peter Q. and Ron S., not all the discussion of Susan Howe vis-avis academe, had anything to do with putting down academics; i was involved in starting that thread, and i was merely trying to clarifiy the current social locus of Howe in the poetry world: someone had said she was now a popular poet among academics, and i begged to differ, and i think because i had just seen a bunch of Pinsky being reshelved at Emory's main library, i used him as an example of what it seems to me folks around University Engl. Lit depts are encouraged to read, if!! they read anything contemporary.. a huge if!)

(And no not everyone on the list is an academic by a long chalk Peter: tho i'm a clerical worker in academe, anyone who's done that will tell you it's pretty far from being within academe...Quite a few personal friends and acquaintances on this list are like me poets and not academics...Nonetheless, i don't think most of us are putting you-all down when the shape of criticism in academe is discussed...)

Anyway having gotten hopelessly sidetracked, let me quickly sum up what i wanted to say bouncing off of Mark W.'s first paragraph above: he points to one of the real confusions we all fall into (including me): we say academic poetry, and are refering to the niche within the academy of the writing-workshop phenomenon; people often express incredulity and confusion, because the theorists they know in lit. departments are into postmodernist trends, and this seems closer to the "experimental" stream of poetry than to the "neo-New Yorker" one. But the economic/social/cultural locus of "workshop" poetry is in the academic world, even though (from the point of view of post-Derrideans in literature and other depts) it is not of it. This tension has been pointed to by Perelman, Silliman, Perloff and others in passing in various places. So i'm not saying anything new. But it helps to keep this odd anomaly in mind, when someone starts tossing around "academic" to refer to workshop (or, as Mark so sharply puts it, New Yorker) poetry.

markedly,
Mark (p.)

↑ Index

737. Judy Roitman

Re: Perloff & The Rubicon of Stupidity

Mon 23 Nov 1998

(from Gabriel Gudding):

> 3). There are two kinds of critics: those who pave the way for Authors and those who pave the way for Anthologists. Jorie Perloff, in her advocacy of THE IMPORTANT, proves herself, like Vendler and Bloom, to be one of the latter.

This is hard to take. Have you ever actually _read_ Perloff? She ain't no Vendler or Bloom.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code

---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

738. Gabriel Gudding
Toleration & The Polyanthos
Mon 23 Nov 1998

The excerpt below (from a piece entitled "New Art of Criticism") is taken from the August 1809 issue of The Polyanthos, an American journal. It's a tongue-in-cheek article supposedly written by Henry Brooke.

The kind of poetry written during that age -- an age of heavy critical intolerance -- was awful. Whenever strictures are placed on a community of writers, the writing suffers.

Much of the off-hand commentary on this list, unfortunately, follows the dictum in the first sentence below. Defining oneself and one's writing as "not that" is rather too hippy-ish for my tastes: some hippy vibes coming of this list at times. One of the reasons so much of language poetry has been so famously B=A=D is it's violent refusal to be anything _but_ oppositional.

"RULE I. Find fault, at first sight, with every thing that is published. This is the first and fundamental rule of all good criticism; and is itself founded upon solid reasons. For, 1st. It is ten to one but you are in the right; there being at least ten bad productions published every day, for one good one.

2dly. Because finding fault implies a plain superiority of genius....Claim boldly, then, for criticism hath, in this respect, some resemblence to calumny; and, indeed, it is so like it, in some hands, that none can adept distinguish them; and you know the rule, calumniare fortiter (in English criticise boldly).... It is a clear consequence from this rule, you should always censure those works most, which are thought most to excel....

RULE III. ÒIf your own authority is not sufficient to quell opposition, and carry your point; why then, two or three of you join forces, and call yourselves the WORLD -- and the work is done....[A] critic is a judge; and everyone knows, the business of a judge is, not to draw up pleadings, but to pronounce sentence."

-- Guttapercha Bunsen

↑ Index

739. Poetry Project
Dan Featherston
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Anyone who can privately send me Dan Featherston's e-mail address will forever occupy a warm chamber of my heart. -- Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

740. Mark Prejsnar
Gabriel Gudding is WRONG
Mon 23 Nov 1998

> The kind of poetry written during that age -- an age of heavy critical intolerance -- was awful. Whenever strictures are placed on a community of writers, the writing suffers.

That's the silliest thing i've ever heard....."Critical intolerance" in the sense for which Marjorie and Peter are arguing, has and can have nothing whatever to do with producing "awful poetry"

As they suggest, lack of passionate commitment produces "awful poetry" (though it has other causes too).

i'm glad for the occasion to use this header, though.

↑ Index

741. Gabriel Gudding
Mark Prejsnar is a Crumbcake
Mon 23 Nov 1998

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> The kind of poetry written during that age -- an age of heavy critical intolerance -- was awful. Whenever strictures are placed on a community of writers, the writing suffers.
>
> That's the silliest thing i've ever heard....."Critical intolerance" in the sense for which Marjorie and Peter are arguing, has and can have nothing whatever to do with producing "awful poetry"

Mark, I appreciate the heavy-handed comeback (thank st peter someone else out there knows how to assert a statement with rabidity), and I know that I'm dealing with some very old and timeworn ideas about the role btw poetry and criticism (most of the ideas, remember, promulgated by critics), but THE HISTORY JUST DOESN'T SUPPORT YOUR ASSERTIONS.

> As they suggest, lack of passionate commitment produces "awful poetry" (though it has other causes too).

Marjorie Perloff asked me why I called her assertions "romantic" and you can see now why I did so: because rhetoric like yours is nearly always applied in lieu of serious historical work: "passionate commitment" indeed.

> i'm glad for the occasion to use this header, though.

So am I: that was fun. Love you, --Guttapercha

↑ Index

742. Henry Gould
yarn tolerance chart
Mon 23 Nov 1998

This simple chart can be used by poets and critics for quick positioning of good and bad poets and avoidance of embarrassing passion (ie. "the worst are full of passionate conviction" - Yeats).

MAINSTREAM - ALTERNATIVE - UNREAD

BODY - SHADOW - SOUL

The chart can be utilized in either the anterior or posterior mode, ie. "Robert Pinsky" can be placed in the mainstream/body position either before or after the critic has chosen a position, and either before or after the critic has actually read the work. In the case of the latter the resulting critique will produce more heat than light, and vice versa; the choice of the CRITIC position usually regulates the overall smoke level. Eric Blarnes, in an unpublished monograph entitled "The Wye of Criticism : How to Reed without Bellowing through a Horn", calls on critics to ply their craft from the Unread/Soul position, as this mode of quietude often allows for a more thorough & discerning Exhumation of the Work at Hand.

I have no particular axe to grind in that regard. Nevertheless one might surmise a diminution of critical aptitude & acuity in the unworldly and supra-mellow precincts of small beer and large potatoes habitued by our dear friend Prof. Blarnes, mightn't one? Eh?

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

743. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Mark Prejsnar is a Crumbcake
Mon 23 Nov 1998

> Marjorie Perloff asked me why I called her assertions "romantic" and you can see now why I did so: because rhetoric like yours is nearly always applied in lieu of serious historical work: "passionate commitment" indeed.

Serious historical work????

Haven't seen any yet...

↑ Index

744. Mark Weiss
Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Here's a poem of Pinsky's from the NYRB for Oct 22.

PROLOGUE: FOR A STAGE PRESENTATION OF THE INFERNO

To go into it: in the declivity
At the center of Hell
Furthest from the light,
Knotted in ice the Beast himself weeping.

Misery of cold, treachery of dark, agony
Of sin, bottomless sorrow of evil:
Not punishment, but the agony of rage unspent.

To go into it: sorrow of revenge
Never sufficient, extravagant.

Bottomless agony of the self-wounded
Soul in self-extinction.

Treacherous soul.

To go into it
The pilgrim becomes the voice of the sinners.
The reader's voice becomes the pilgrim's
As the pilgrim becomes the writer.

To go into it--grappling at the ice-matted
Flank of the Beast, to bring Sorrow to light.

Unreadable
Body of losses.

To go into it and through it
Or to go into it and never
Through it.

Withdrawal from the world of light.

To go into it to go through it: agony
Of despair, hand in the dark Plucking at the knot that
The same hand tied
In the light.

What was Charles Alexander's phrase in his wise and temperate post? This disinclines me to look further at the man's work. For one, as I think anyone who's read Dante, or for that matter almost any medieval religious work, this is the Cliff Notes version--true as far as it goes, but the most obvious possible commentary. The core of Catholicism then and now is that one makes one's own fate. The light/dark imagery also involves no discovery--it's the core of Dante's imagery, and self-consciously so. So what's left? Sorrow, agony, loss, sorrow, agony, loss, repeated agonizingly, and never concretized, so that we're asked to feel empathy for abstractions.

This whole exercise appears to be at the service of setting up the revelation in the last four lines, which is at best a piece of slight cleverness that also advances understanding, whether of Dante, or Pinsky, or poor humanity, or poetry, not a whit. But worse--there's every indicatiion in the poem that Pinsky knew the end, shallow as it is, before he sat down to write. And for me this is the desideratum, the line in the sand. For me poetry is only poetry if it's an act of discovery (and there are many kinds of discovery, some linguistic or formal and some psychological or political), not a recitation of the given.

This is not a question, Gudding, of defining oneself in opposition. The non-"experimental" in the sense defined above is simply irrelevant.

↑ Index

745. Judy Roitman
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

---

from Pinsky in NYRB:

> Unreadable
> Body of losses.

Mr. P. says it for us, doesn't he.

> But worse--there's every > indicatiion in the poem that Pinsky knew the end, shallow as it is, before he sat down to write. And for me this is the desideratum, the line in the sand. For me poetry is only poetry if it's an act of discovery (and there are many kinds of discovery, some linguistic or formal and some psychological or political), not a recitation of the given.

Bravo, Mark Weiss.

Live words vs. dead words. That's the issue.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

746. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Gabriel Gudding is WRONG
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Dear Listees: I have a feeling that those who produce "awful poetry" produce it with the same passion as those who produce wonderful poetry. When we imagine "the other" (assuming our poetry isn't awwful), it's always easier to ascribe baser values and more shallow motives to them. What's actually true and even more troubling is their firm commitment to the "aesthetic" they've accepted. Whether it's an articulated or implied aesthetic is immaterial. So the progressive notion that somehow we can educate them through "tolerance" mainly isn't true. Of course, some people change their direction in writing, undergo a conversion, as it were, but to imagine that someone who appreciates Rita Dove will be convinced by gentle coaxing or close reading to see the higher goals of Susan Howe? A possible but not probable scenario.

I wonder, however, if Marjorie's initial post had something of this sort unstated in it: "they" show little, if any, tolerance for us, so why are "we" suffering their presence in our sphere (this list, our work-related poetry activity, our own criticism and writing). If you examine the list of laureates, Guggenheims, major prizes, it's obvious "they're" winning. It's their figures who determine what gets discussed in most venues where something called "poetry" is the topic. Meanwhile, the "other Tradition," which we know to be the one of value, creates an enormous and vital life of its own-- here, in major poetry cities, at certain universities, with a number of presses committed to its writers.

Maybe then, the discussion should be, to paraphrase Raymond Carver, what they talk about when they talk about "poetry," which is a cultural issue, a media issue, an issue of who "they" are vs. who we are.

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

747. MAYHEW

Re: Toleration & The Polyanthos

Mon 23 Nov 1998

I propose you add the following rule: never forget to discount whole areas of writing by asserting, in passing, "one of the reasons so much of X school is so famously bad, is that..." After all, you are likely to be right--much work of any category is likely not be be excellent. At the same time, you will give the mistaken impression that you have actually done a statistical study of how much poetry written under the rubric of a particular label is bad.

I see there is a message just posted saying Gabriel Gudding is wrong so I will now sign off to read it.

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Gabriel Gudding wrote:

> The excerpt below (from a piece entitled "New Art of Criticism") is taken from the August 1809 issue of The Polyanthos, an American journal. It's a tongue-in-cheek article supposedly written by Henry Brooke.
>
> The kind of poetry written during that age -- an age of heavy critical intolerance -- was awful. Whenever strictures are placed on a community of writers, the writing suffers.
>
> Much of the off-hand commentary on this list, unfortunately, follows the dictum in the first sentence below. Defining oneself and one's writing as "not that" is rather too hippy-ish for my tastes: some hippy vibes coming of this list at times. One of the reasons so much of language poetry has been so famously B=A=D is it's violent refusal to be anything _but_ oppositional.
>
> "RULE I. Find fault, at first sight, with every thing that is published. This is the first and fundamental rule of all good criticism; and is > itself founded upon solid reasons. For, 1st. It is ten to one but you are in the right; there being at least ten bad productions published every day, for one good one.

>
> 2dly. Because finding fault implies a plain superiority of genius....Claim boldly, then, for criticism hath, in this respect, some resemblence to calumny; and, indeed, it is so like it, in some hands, that none can adept distinguish them; and you know the rule, calumniare fortiter (in English criticise boldly)....
> It is a clear consequence from this rule, you should always censure those works most, which are thought most to excel....
>
> RULE III. ÒIf your own authority is not sufficient to quell opposition, and carry your point; why then, two or three of you join forces, and call yourselves the WORLD -- and the work is done....[A] critic is a judge; and everyone knows, the business of a judge is, not to draw up pleadings, but to pronounce sentence."
>
> -- Guttapercha Bunsen

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

748. Michael Magee
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Evidentally Mr. Pinsky missed Pound's admonitions against abstraction. He's just short of invoking "dim lands of peace..." -m.

According to Mark Weiss:
>
> Here's a poem of Pinsky's from the NYRB for Oct 22.
>
> Misery of cold, treachery of dark, agony
> Of sin, bottomless sorrow of evil:

> the agony of rage unspent.
>
> sorrow of revenge

> Bottomless agony of the self-wounded
> Soul in self-extinction.
>
> agony
> Of despair>

↑ Index

749. MAYHEW
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Good point MM:

I honestly thought this poem was Mark's parody when I first read it, but when when I looked more closely and saw that it was in the New York Review of Books I realized it had to be for real. It's curious how a certain "poetic" diction has made a big comeback amoung our Laureates. The agony of rage unspent indeed! Again, the point is not that such patently bad (in this case not merely middling) writing exists, but that it is celebrated in prestigious journals.

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Michael Magee wrote:

> Evidentally Mr. Pinsky missed Pound's admonitions against abstraction.
> He's just short of invoking "dim lands of peace..." -m.
>
> According to Mark Weiss:
>
> Here's a poem of Pinsky's from the NYRB for Oct 22.
>
> Misery of cold, treachery of dark, agony
> Of sin, bottomless sorrow of evil:
>
> the agony of rage unspent.
>
> sorrow of revenge
>
> Bottomless agony of the self-wounded
> Soul in self-extinction.
>
> agony
> Of despair>

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese

University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

750. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

I've been bemused reading the storm over Pinsky and tolerance and the rest. First of all, I like Cliff Notes, and this aint Cliff. A Cliff Notes poem about the Inferno would be wonderful. The worst thing Ted Berrigan could say about a poem was that it was boring: this poem is boring. But maybe I'm not tolerant, and it's actually very interesting, moving, linguistically zappy. Maybe this is my taste -- and there is room for different poetries. Tolerance is not the best word in this regard; perhaps multiplicity. Certainly, I'm not interested in skewering the poem -- it's just that if Mark Weiss hadn't inserted it into this discussion I probably would never have gotten to the end of it. I do like close reading -- it's one of the great pleasures -- and I was almost tempted to say, "What other kind of reading is there?" But then I thought of distant skimming, intimate misreading, stand-offish decoding, and other pleasures I enjoy almost as much as, sometimes more than, close reading. Does this mean I establish a "school?" Marjorie Perloff is right that passionate response, discriminating taste, aesthetic chutzpah are positive; others are right that small-minded fault-finding and in-group/out-group nastiness are negative: unfortunately, so many poets and critics confuse the two. Critical and social intolerance are not entirely identitcal -- and, as David Kellog pointed out, in many circumstances I wouldn't mind being tolerated. In literature, the only thing I can't tolerate is indifference -- and so this Pinsky poem leaves me indifferent -- and intolerant.

Hilton Obenzinger

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Here's a poem of Pinsky's from the NYRB for Oct 22.
>
> PROLOGUE: FOR A STAGE PRESENTATION OF THE INFERNO
>
> To go into it: in the declivity
> At the center of Hell
> Furthest from the light,
> Knotted in ice the Beast himself weeping.
>
> Misery of cold, treachery of dark, agony

Of sin, bottomless sorrow of evil:
Not punishment, but the agony of rage unspent.

To go into it: sorrow of revenge
Never sufficient, extravagant.

Bottomless agony of the self-wounded
Soul in self-extinction.

Treacherous soul.

To go into it
The pilgrim becomes the voice of the sinners.
The reader's voice becomes the pilgrim's
As the pilgrim becomes the writer.

To go into it--grappling at the ice-matted
Flank of the Beast, to bring Sorrow to light.

Unreadable
Body of losses.

To go into it and through it
Or to go into it and never
Through it.

Withdrawal from the world of light.

To go into it to go through it: agony
Of despair, hand in the dark Plucking at the knot that
The same hand tied
In the light.

What was Charles Alexander's phrase in his wise and temperate post? This disinclines me to look further at the man's work. For one, as I think anyone who's read Dante, or for that matter almost any medieval religious work, this is the Cliff Notes version--true as far as it goes, but the most obvious possible commentary. The core of Catholicism then and now is that one makes one's own fate. The light/dark imagery also involves no discovery--it's the core of Dante's imagery, and self-consciously so. So what's left? Sorrow, agony, loss, sorrow, agony, loss, repeated agonizingly, and never concretized, so that we're asked to feel empathy for abstractions.

> This whole exercise appears to be at the service of setting up the revelation in the last four lines, which is at best a piece of slight cleverness that also advances understanding, whether of Dante, or Pinsky, or poor humanity, or poetry, not a whit. But worse--there's every indicatiion in the poem that Pinsky knew the end, shallow as it is, before he sat down to write. And for me this is the desideratum, the line in the sand. For me poetry is only poetry if it's an act of discovery (and there are many kinds of discovery, some linguistic or formal and some psychological or political), not a recitation of the given.
>
> This is not a question, Gudding, of defining oneself in opposition. The non-"experimental" in the sense defined above is simply irrelevant.

↑ Index

751. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

A question here - Who _does_ like Pinsky? What are the demographics? What do they say? What is the laureate-function at work? And given the func- tions and institutions and critical apparatus which has singled him out - what can we say about these? That they have less critical acumen? That they prefer simpler and safer writing, more conservative writing? That they are culturally-dysfunctional in one or another sense?

I'm not asking these questions out of ignorance or the desire to defend - I don't defend in fact. But I think there are other and overlooked con- texts (perhaps?) that are critical, themselves (perhaps?) to the discus- sion. For quite simply, if _x_ is bored with Pinsky, who is _not?_

Alan

↑ Index

752. Gabriel Gudding
Re: Guttapercha Bunsen is a Ninny
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Judy R. & Mark P.,

1). I believe I have been mistaken for a serious person.

2). Have I read Marjorie Perloff?: not a paragraph!

3). I feel like the old mean catapult who was abandoned on the pointy hill.

4). Rambo come to me, Chuck Norris

come.
Mad Max
I say come to me: Samson
in Gaza, eyeless, come -- with long hair -- to me and bring thy jawbone so useful.

Bruce Lee
where art thou Jackie Chan
I need thy skinny justice.

5). The next time I offer my services as an agent provacateur, I'm charging.

6). It was nice to be among the billyclubs again.

Warmly, GB

(ps: yes of course I have read Perloff and I always enjoy doing so.)

↑ Index

753. Henry Gould
Guttapercha Bunsen is RIGHT
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Who wants to be the receiver of received opinions? Who wants to go into receivership? The only criteria for criticism is informed intelligence. Andrey Gritsman, at the Translation conference, argued that you cannot even begin to understand a poet in a foreign language until you immerse yourself as much as possible in the sensibility and the bio-historical literary background of what you're reading. This goes for reading any poetry. Does this mean everybody has to become a jumpin' mandarin? NO!!!! You & you & you too & me too are perfectly free to make snap conclusions based on a brief whiff of 2 lines of a poem - what is literature all about if not that? But don't call it CRITICISM. I could plop down a juicy poem of Howesky that would sound just as turrible as Pinsky if I had her books handy, but that's too damn EASY. Oh Lordy set us free from these narrows & shallows!! Bring on the big frigates, bring on the men o'war & the women o'war, bring on the Spanish galleons & the sloops & trawlers while You're at it! But nay, thou shalt not call the tinny piping of the post-pinsky faction CRITICISM!!! Oh, bloody not mine ears with the little clubs of aren't-we-so-great alternativos once again!!! Oh the windy self-righteous snores of it all!!! Somebody with an ear for Poetry, hey! - Henry Gould

↑ Index

754. Tom Beard
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Wow, I'd assumed that Pinsky was old and distinguished, but he's apparently a 17-year-old who listens to a lot of Marilyn Manson and The Cure:

self-woundedSoulself-extinctionTreacheroussoul.
despairdarkPluckingknottiedlight.

Does he wear black mascara?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

755. Elizabeth Treadwell
Debbie AN EPIC
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Thank you Wendy for the breathless information. Where who how can I find it?

Debbie by Lisa Robertson.

Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

756. MAYHEW
Re: Guttapercha Bunsen is RIGHT
Mon 23 Nov 1998

But Henry, this poem is written in English and we are all all too familiar with its diction, its tone, its devices, its rhetoric. I have read hundreds of poems of this ilk over the past 25 years or so. That it takes about 10 seconds to render a judgment about Pinksy's poem does not mean that it is a superficial judgment--it could be the product of years of experience. It's like hearing an out of tune piano--you don't have to think about it for hours to know it's out of tune, do you?

We are all somewhat schooled in a certain mainstream tradition just because it is mainstream, in a way that mainstream people are not schooled in the avant-garde. I could even tell you why someone would think this is a good poem, coming out of this tradition, and its not because of its heavy metal imagery either!

Jonathan

↑ Index

757. Michael Magee
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

I feel like I might have something useful to say here re "who reads Pinsky" though whether it'll shed light I'm not sure. I'm someone who didn't grow up with a sense of allegiance to experimental writing, so I read a lot of stuff: Edward Hirsch, Dave Smith, Robert Haas, things like that - lot's of it, and I read it carefully and generally liked it. I will still argue that folks like Elizabeth Bishop and Robert Lowell should be read w/ care and not dismissed, that this exercise pays off whether one decides they "like" the poems or not. So, what does this have to do with little Bobby Pinsky? well, one way to approach it would be through the metaphor of deterioration: say what you want about classic list nemeses like Lowell (or even Eliot): they were smart and rigorous and wanted to say something important; I think the tradition that claimed Lowell (that claimed Life Studies for the most part) was full of people who, for whatever reason, took the easy way out - by which I mean, they got the gist of it and then used the tradition as self-validation to write a lot of very self-indulgent and innocuous poems. Sometimes they'll even write a pretty good poem, as Hirsch's poem "The Abortion (1969)" is: that poem turns the confessional conceit on its head by telling a very "private" story of an abortion and then revealing that the young woman had never been pregnant, that the two teenagers involved had made some diagnostic screwup, which renders the confessional moment both bathetic and awful.

I'm digressing now so I'll just say this: whether Hirsch's poem is "good" is really neither here nor there b/c his attititude towards "poetry" remains constant - there is always the sense that he knows exactly WHAT A POEM IS. Pinsky, in the poem we've been discussing, is a good deal worse: he shares Hirsch's attitude and writes a really bad poem to boot. So again, to circle back, why read Pinsky? Well, for many young readers, one reads Pinsky because he's there: and more precisely, because Perelman and Mullen and Lauterbach and Mackey and the gang are not there. I can honestly say these latter writers DID NOT EXIST at my undergraduate college - and it would have taken some strange and heroic intervention for me to have been introduced to them before the age of 21. So what you have is Pinsky and you do the best you can (young readers can be quite ingenious in entertaining themselves with bad poetry). Or you do what I eventually did: you say, "wait a minute, one tires of Pinsky a hell of a lot quicker than one tires of Stevens or Williams or Moore or Dickinson;" that's step one; the second step involves dismissing the "there's no great poetry anymore, only good poetry" argument and if you don't know any better this is a very persuasive argument: it encourages you not to look around; but if you're lucky enough to dismiss it then you do start to look around and the Pinsky spell is broken! My post-Pinsky discoveries went something like this: Creeley, Neidecker, O'Hara, Ashbery, Perelman, LangPo, Mackey, Mullen, experimental diaspora.

As for the older folks who like Pinsky, well, they are Pinsky or resemble him very strongly. And it's a mathematical certainty that Pinsky will like Pinsky 90% of the time.

-m.

According to A. Jenn Sondheim: >
> A question here - Who _does_ like Pinsky? What are the demographics? What > do they say? What is the laureate-function at work? And given the func> tions and institutions and critical apparatus which has singled him out - > what can we say about these? That they have less critical acumen? That > they prefer simpler and safer writing, more conservative writing? That > they are culturally-dysfunctional in one or another sense?
>
> I'm not asking these questions out of ignorance or the desire to defend -
> I don't defend in fact. But I think there are other and overlooked con> texts (perhaps?) that are critical, themselves (perhaps?) to the discus> sion. For quite simply, if _x_ is bored with Pinsky, who is _not?_
>
> Alan
>

↑ Index

758. Marjorie Perloff
Re: enough already!
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Wow--I never expected to unleash such fury! If Gabriel G had paid attention to my first posting, he would have realized that I began by noting that Bob von H and I have just had quite a good dialogue on Howe and Pinsky with interesting pros and cons and I said there that I respected Bob's opinion very much as you'll see when that "dialogue" comes out! In the meantime, nothing like pouncing on the word "tolerance" and giving me the business.

It's becoming tiresome. But I want to correct one thing David Kellogg said which is that "Marjorie separates political from aesthetic tolerance" etc. When the dialogue comes out, David, you'll see that my central caveat about the poem in question ("History of my Heart") is political--specifically, the patronizing treatment of the mother which I take to be quite sexist and smug. But then David loves to jump to conclusions!

Another caveat I have is about the argument that New Directions, once Norton became its distributor, decided oh hell, might as well publish a new poet like Susan Howe. This is absurd because the issue would be: what new poets did they refuse to publish--a long list, some on this list and many of them women! So why did they prefer Howe? That would take a little bit of investigation, wouldn't it?

What really troubles me is the endless name-calling here. When in doubt, compare Perloff to Bloom and Vendler --not that I mind that comparison since I have a lot of respect for both of them. Instead of taking up the challenge and looking at Pinsky's poetry (or Howe's)--the only person who did was Hilton O in a fabulous posting--we get endless slurs or bravos, etc. etc. It only proves my original point that the discourse has hit a real low! But then I'm afraid I don't know where Gabriel Gudding publishes his interesting commentaries. In what journals do they appear?

xxx
Marjorie

↑ Index

759. Mark Weiss
Re: Guttapercha Bunsen is RIGHT
Mon 23 Nov 1998

At the risk of responding seriously, Henry, why don't you read thru all of Pinsky and post us something really wonderful? Or are you disenclined?

But I doubt you'll find much gold in them hills, and here's why--Susan Howe and everybody else who writes has probably written bad poems (by the way, setting Susan up as the champion of the light is a little unfair. Whoever brought her into this was probably just using her name as a shorthand for the band of angels). But the kind of bad poem that Pinsky published in NYRB is hard to imagine from a poet who was capable of something superbly better. This is not a failed experiment, it's a failure to read with intelligence and a failure of courage and a failure of ambition.

Or maybe it was just an amazingly bad day. And maybe it was another when he decided to push it to so public a venue.

At 04:10 PM 11/23/98 EST, you wrote:
> Who wants to be the receiver of received opinions? Who wants to go into >receivership? The only criteria for criticism is informed intelligence.
>Andrey Gritsman, at the Translation conference, argued that you cannot >even begin to understand a poet in a foreign language until you immerse >yourself as much as possible in the sensibility and the bio-historical >literary background of what you're reading. This goes for reading any >poetry. Does this mean everybody has to become a jumpin' mandarin?

>NO!!!! You & you & you too & me too are perfectly free to make snap >conclusions based on a brief whiff of 2 lines of a poem - what is >literature all about if not that? But don't call it CRITICISM.
>I could plop down a juicy poem of Howesky that would sound just >as turrible as Pinsky if I had her books handy, but that's too damn >EASY. Oh Lordy set us free from these narrows & shallows!!
>Bring on the big frigates, bring on the men o'war & the women o'war, >bring on the Spanish galleons & the sloops & trawlers while You're at it!
>But nay, thou shalt not call the tinny piping of the post-pinsky >faction CRITICISM!!! Oh, bloody not mine ears with the little clubs >of aren't-we-so-great alternativos once again!!! Oh the windy >self-righteous snores of it all!!! Somebody with an ear for >Poetry, hey! - Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

760. Angela Szeto
Bright lights
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Some of the issues raised in the Pinksy/Howe thread have been on my mind for a long time. Particularly the conflict between the gut response and the head response. Sometimes the gut response really isn't the gut -- sometimes it's whatever's been mercilessly drummed into you and impacted by reasonable fear. Trouble enters when you hear of marvelous things about Gertrude Stein, say, or Susan Howe from people you love and respect and you want to see what everyone else sees so badly but old habits keep you on the other side of the window display, looking in at all the bright lights

↑ Index

761. George Thompson
Re: Perloff & The Rubicon of Stupidity
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Well, I'm going to leave the barking to Gabriel Gudding, who does it so well, and so full of bite.

I'm interested in poetics, to be sure. But I'm interested in all kinds. Mostly, as some of you know, I'm interested in the really old kinds, Vedic poetics, Homeric poetics, the poetics of Indo-Europeans whose poetry we no longer have but which we in our all-too academic minds reconstruct by means of meticulous comparisons and inter-weavings from long dead languages. Weird stuff, but not quite theoretical.

I'm also interested in the poetics of this list. Sometimes I see a kind of convergence between these old poetics and the "new" ones of this list. I see things new as a result of such convergences. My interest, in both, becomes renewed.

I've been reading Vedic for going on 25 years, and I still don't get it. I get glimpses pf something really different, really unknown to me. So I keep on with it. It is fascinating.

I admit that I am not much interested in Pinsky. I read Pinsky and I get it, more or less, right away. So I lose interest, and move on. Without meaning to offend, however, I find much of the poetry mentioned, advocated, generated, on this list much closer to Pinsky's than what, as a Vedicist, I'm used to. As Charles Alexander politely puts it, there is little there that I'd go back to read again.

After only a little while, disjunctive syntax is not hard to get, after all, and what I wind up seeing inside this poetry is not so very different from what's going inside Pinsky's. The disjunction, the weird loops, the flight from coherence, from narrative, etc., all of it: okay. I like it. But a lot of the time there isn't much in it, as far as I can see.

There are exceptions of course: Howe's, Hannah Weiner's [never heard of her until I joined this list], some others. They remain intriguing after many readings. Yes. More close reading, by all means.

But I think we should all be humble, because in fact we most of us most of the time are not doing anything very interesting.

So the little devil in me says [or is that a little buddha there?].

GT

↑ Index

762. Keith Tuma
Re: Pinsky
Mon 23 Nov 1998

> *As for the older folks who like Pinsky, well, they are Pinsky or resemble him very strongly. And it's a mathematical certainty that Pinsky will like Pinsky 90% of the time.*

As Marjorie noted in her post before the pack let loose to scramble for the last turd, Robert von Hallberg is an admirer of Pinsky's work and can be quite passionate and intelligent about it. I can assure you that he is not Robert Pinsky. An Explanation of America is a poem I once read with interest for its effort to deploy neo-Horatian and neo-Augustan verse-essayistic modes. I look much less like Robert Pinsky than Robert von Hallberg does. The more recent Pinsky verse--after that book really-- seems to me considerably weaker as well as very different, in mode as well as in its relentless and finally (for me) uninteresting worrying of a thematics of "desire" that I suspect RP took over from his friend Robert Hass. And there are limits to my interest these days in the earlier mode at work in Explanation's post-Vietnam discursiveness, with its perhaps too-resonant closure warring with its nightmare scenarios of nascent reaganism. But it's a book that one might well know whether one decides to hate it or not. Passion requires context and even knowledge.

Before you make a statement such as the one above you might read what von Hallberg has written of Pinsky in his 1984 book on American poetry, which also sympathetically discusses poets such as Creeley, Ashbery, Olson, Dorn, Bishop, Lowell etc. and remains a good study of poetry and nation-building (the emergence of a tone of the center in poetry as well as politics post WWII). Or you might read Pinsky's The Situation of Poetry, which quotes, among others, Bruce Andrews. Then go ahead and lob a few bombs: they'll be taken seriously. Mark Weiss, at least, quoted a (terrible) poem.

I'm with Ron Silliman when he says that he finds it important to read poets in the other so-called camp. There's a funny line, by the way, in one of Ron's books--forget which--about "Merrill's Pinsky." That continuity would be worth considering, Auden behind them both, Pinsky's (early) mode crossed by exposure to Yvor Winters.

It's a strange day when I find myself grateful for Henry Gould. (Hello Henry.)

Perhaps some wit with the venom would help too. Always grateful for that. Sorry not to have any ready today but this discussion is depressing me.

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

763. Pritchett,Patrick

Vole in Boulder

Mon 23 Nov 1998

Lisa Jarnot and her band VOLE will perform their new rock opera, "Follow the Sandpiper," this Wednesday, Nov. 25, 7pm, at the Boulder Museum of Contemporary Art.

Y'all come down, y'hear?

↑ Index

764. Susan Clark

RADDLE MOON 17, some Vancouver writers

Mon 23 Nov 1998

---

hello all,
hope the below is readable. for further information, please contact Susan Clark at [redacted].

****

Announcing the publication of RADDLE MOON 17
-- dedicated to the memory of Charles Watts --

A special section, "Some Vancouver Writers," with work by : Marie Annharte BAKER, Ted BYRNE, Susan CLARK, Peter CULLEY, Kevin DAVIES, Jeff DERKSEN, Dan FARRELL, Deanna FERGUSON, Maxine GADD, Dorothy Trujillo LUSK, Rob MANERY, Paul MUTTON, Meredith QUARTERMAIN, Lisa ROBERTSON, Nancy SHAW, Christine STEWART, Colin SMITH, Catriona STRANG, Lary TIMEWELL, Melissa WOLSAK.

Work from Quebec, curated by Nicole Brossard :
Cynthia GIRARD, Michael DÉLISLE,
translated by Robert Majzels and Erin Mouré,

New work from :
William FULLER, Jean DAY, Jackson Mac Low,
Gil McElroy and Rae Armantrout

Photograms by Katrine Le Gallou

DISTRIBUTION:
in Canada :
individuals, please order through New Star Books, Vancouver:
[redacted] (Visa accepted)
booksellers, please order through General Distribution : Ontario & PQ:
[redacted]
in the rest of Canada: [redacted]

in the USA :
individuals, please order through : Small Press Distribution, Berkeley, [redacted] or [redacted]
or through Bridge Street Books, Washington, DC : contact Rod Smith,
[redacted]

US booksellers, please order through :
General Book Distribution, Toronto, Canada : [redacted]
OR through
Small Press Distribution, Berkeley above.

in Britain: through Paul Green, at Spectacular Diseases, 85b London Road, Peterborough, Cambs, England PE2 9BS, or through New Star (VISA accepted)

Erratum: Marie Annharte Baker's name is spelled [consistently] incorrectly throughout the issue as Annehart. Most issues were shipped before this error was noticed and so lack erratum slips. Apologies to Marie.

↑ Index

765. Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON price
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Dear all,

I managed to send off our announcement without mentioning the price:

single issues of RM17 are $10, postage paid subscriptions are still only $15 (US subscribers, please pay in US$)

(single issues will be going up next issue to $12, so a subscription will save $7 over the price of two copies)

back issues are $8
our ISSN is: 0826-5909

hope that's it,
Susan

↑ Index

766. David Dowker
Re: Debbie AN EPIC
Mon 23 Nov 1998

Thought I should throw my two cents worth in and mention that some excerpts from "Debbie: An epic" can be found at http://home.ican.net/~alterra/robe.html

David

"By representing a trait as mutual a coin certainly does lead us into debt, but this coin, which the debtor accepts as existence, has been struck in the likeness of one's soul by the indestructible Imperium." - Debbie

> Thank you Wendy for the breathless information. Where who how can I find it?
>
> Debbie by Lisa Robertson.
>
> Elizabeth
>
> Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
> P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
> http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

767. david bromige

debbie an epic

Tue 24 Nov 1998

I am gladdened by the interest this book is stirring among Listmembers. Its deployment of its various rhetorics is constantly engaging, and thru its devices some of the agony of our fix can actually be heard to speak, which is a phenomenal accomplishment. Its humor is excruciating; we laugh that we may not weep. The intelligence is penetrating & lucid--witness the citation re coinage from David Dowker. _Debbie_ is wicked and exonerating, despite its recurring analyses of complicity. I find this poem irresistible.

Equally so "The Device," a poem that reads like a footnote to _debbie_ , and which can be found at http://www.theeastvillage.org

It was published originally in Cabri and Manery's zine _Hole_.

David

↑ Index

768. aerialedge

Out of Control @ Bridge Street -- new Retallack, Mayer, Mackey, Rasula/McCaffery, Trupwire &&&

Tue 24 Nov 1998

LOTS -- New Retallack, Mayer, Mackey, Rasula/McCaffery, Tripwire &&&. Ordering & discount info at the end of the list. Bernstein's _My Way_ from U Chicago Press due in soon.

1. _Avec Sampler # 2_, ed Cydney Chadwick, $12.95. Michael Palmer, Julie Kalendek, Ann Lauterbach, Nick Piombino, Charles Borkhuis, Gad Hollander, Mary Angeline, Joe Ross, Michelle Grangaud trans Guy Bennett, Andrew Joron, Camille Guthrie, Lisa Lubasch, Pierre Alferi trans Cole Swensen, & Elizabeth Treadwell.

2. _An Anthology of New Poetics_, ed Christopher Beach, U Alabama, $29.95. David Antin, Rae Armantrout, Charles Bernstein, Maria Damon, Michael Davidson, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Lyn Hejinian, Susan Howe, Hank Lazer, Nathaniel Mackey, Steve McCaffery, Bob Perelman, Marjorie Perloff, Leslie Scalapino, James Sherry, Ron Silliman, John Taggart, & Barrett Watten.

3. _Ted Berrigan: An Annotated Checklist_, compiled by Aaron Fischer, Granary Books, $32.95. Essays by Fischer & Lewis Warsh. A short book for the price, 70 pages, but the Schneeman/Berrigan collaborations here, many in color, must be seen.

4. _William Blake's Illuminated Books: Collected Edition Vols. I-VI, William Blake Trust, Princeton U Press, boxed set of six paperbacks, $165.00. The volumes are Jerusalem, Songs of Innocence & Experience, Early Illuminated Books, The Continental Prophecies, Milton, & The Urizen Books.

5. _songs from navigation_, chris cheek and Sianed Jones, Reality Street, $24.95.
Book w/ C D. "that putting the key in the hole left no exit wound"

6. _The Common Good_, Noam Chomsky, interviews by David Barsamian, Odonian, $12. Don't buy it at Barnes & Chernobyl.

7. _Dance Writings and Poetry_, Edwin Denby, ed Robert Cornfield, Yale, $18. Much more of the dance writing than the poetry.

8. _Open Me Carefully: Emily Dickinson's Intimate Letters to Susan Huntington Dickinson_, ed. Ellen Louise Hart and Martha Nell Smith, Paris Press, $19.95. On the back it says "This remarkable correspondence brings to light Susan Huntington Dickinson as the central source of the poet's passion and inspiration."

9. _The Feminist Memoir Project_, ed Rachel Blau DuPlessis and Ann Snitow, Three Rivers Press, $20. Memoirs and responses by 32 writers including Kate Millett, Vivian Gornick, Michelle Wallace, Alix Kates Shulman, Joan Nestle, Jo Freeman, Yvonne Rainer, Barbara Smith, Ellen Willis and many more embody the excitement that fueled the movement and the conflicts that threatened it from within.

10. _Futures_, Ken Edwards, Reality Street, $13.95. A novel. "Eye: Yes, of course."

11. _Morning Light_, Lee Harwood, Slow Dancer, $13.95.

12. _Elephant Surveillance To Thought_, Andrew Levy, Meow, $6. "The thrall of computerization overlooks the softer, subtler aspects of a good imitation.

Inappropriate intrusion is the private sector's last ditch effort. Try soaking with fly juice to give it that emerger affect like the scared fish it imitates."

13. _Whatsaid Serif_, Nathaniel Mackey, City Lights, $12.95. " Sun cult. Cargo cult. Pharaoh's / Andalusian song our secret cargo, the / sun burning a hole in the sky . . . / The voice / was a boat where there'd be no boat. / No balm, no abdominal blessing, unless the / voice draw the torso up . . . Abdominal / scuff / and impatient loin-rut . . . Ache and orexic / trunk / sung from under . . . Hoist and thoracic / struff. . . / Dreamt beginning. Unbased / itch and intransigence. . . / End / urged inside / out"

14. _Oulipo Compendium_, ed Harry Mathews & Alistair Brotchie, Atlas Archive Six, $19.99. Large format paperback including substantial primary, biographical, bibliographical, and theoretical material including Queneau's "100, 000, 000, 000, 000 Poems."

15. _Two Haloed Mourners_, Bernadette Mayer, Granary Books, ltd edition of 100 copies, 42 pages, $12. "harmless / garden variety / like this poem / I hate it I wont mention / Alcohol stimulants & solitude / & that's why / people like Shakespeare so much / he never mentioned it / besides burning everything / leave alone one leave alone two"

16. _The Forgiveness Parade_, Jeffrey McDaniel, Manic D, $11.95. "Read the palm trees and weep."

17. _Species of Spaces & Other Pieces_, Georges Perec, Penguin, $14.95.

18. _Imagining Language: An Anthology_, ed Jed Rasula and Steve McCaffery, MIT, $55. A stunning book. Rasula and McCaffrey take examples of twentieth-century avant-garde writing as the starting point for a collection of writings that demonstrates a continuum of creative conjecture on language from antiquity to the present. The result is more laboratory than inventory. Beautifully produced oversized hardcover, 620 pages.

19. _How To Do Things With Words_, Joan Retallack, Sun & Moon, $10.95. Signed copies. Includes the hits "The Woman in the Chinese Room," "Shakespeare was a Woman," "A I D /I/ S A P P E A R A N C E," "Steinzas in Mediation," "Japanese Presentation I & II," & "The Earlier N'ames Are Almost Forgotten."

20. _Ribot 6: over 60 under 30_, ed. Paul Vangelisti, $9.95. Robert Heinecken, Catherine Wagner, Jeff Clark, Gellu Naum, Rosmarie Waldrop, Carl Rakosi, Laura Owens, Amiri Baraka, Scott Keeney, Paul Long, Brian Lucas, Noah de Lissovoy, James Mulholland & Amy Wright, Nathaniel Tarn, Keith Waldrop, Gilbert Sorrentino, Barbara Guest, Gwen McVay, &&&. "an elephant is a nice normal thing."

21. _Mortal City_, Jocelyn Saidenberg, Parentheses Writing Series, $10. "unwittingly / the guardians of taste / romance / a dead horse"

22. _Ron Silliman and the Alphabet_, ed Thomas A. Vogler, Quarry West 34, $15. Thomas C. Marshall, Hank Lazer, Tyrus Miller, Lytle Shaw, Marjorie Perloff, Silliman interview, essays, and bibliography.

23. _Talisman 19: Armand Schwerner_, ed Ed Foster, $9. Theodore Enslin, John Tritica, Andrew Schelling, Burt Kimmelman, Brian McHale, Garrett Kalleberg, Pam Rehm, Heather Ramsdell, Lisa Jarnot, Susan Wheeler, &&&. "Anomalous circus events take the shape of mandible density in the great outer planets."

24. _tripwire: a journal of poetics #2_, ed Yedda Morrison & David Buuck, $8. Stephen Farmer, Benjamin Friedlander, Danielle Collobert, Rodrigo Toscano, Brenda Iijima, Brian Kim Stefans, Noah de Lissovoy, Kristin Prevallet, Jack Hirschman, Lawless Crow, Sarah Amme Cox & Elizabeth Treadwell, Rod Smith, Robert Fitterman, Dodie Bellamy, Patrick F. Durgin, Willam T Ayton, Kathy Lou Schultz, Pamela Lu, Louis Cabri, Juliana Spahr, Anslem Berrigan, Lytle SAhaw, & Chris Chen.

25. _Homing Devices_, Liz Waldner, O Books, $9. "I still want corn ships here"

Some Bestsellers:
Poetics Journal 10: Knowledge, $14.
The Germ #2, $6.
Mysteries of Small Houses, Alice Notley, $14.95.
The Letters of Mina Harker, Dodie Bellamy, Hard Press, $13.95.
Poet Be Like God: Jack Spicer and the San Francisco Renaissance, Lew Ellingham and Kevin Killian, Wesleyan, $35.
Another Crushed Pinecone, Bernadette Mayer, $10.
The Lion Bridge: Selected Poems, Michael Palmer (signed copies), $18.95
Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word, Charles Bernstein ed., $24.95.
Poem on a Train, Jordan Davis, $6.
Fray, Jessica Grim, $10.
Criteria, Sianne Ngai, $10.
The Seven Voices, Lisa Samuels, $10.
Life & Death, Robert Creeley, New Directions, $19.95.
An Anthology of New (American) Poets, Lisa Jarnot, Leonard Schwartz, and Chris Stroffolino ed, $21.95.
Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women, ed. Mary Margaret Sloan, $27.95.

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

769. A. Jenn Sondheim
The Use of Full Emotion (fwd)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

-

The Use of Full Emotion

@examine Alan
Alan sob boohoo sniff weep wail

Has been logged on for 15 seconds.
Alan is not currently idle.
Cumulative login time is 13 hours, 41 minutes and 41 seconds.

Listening to shouts and tells. Receiving logon/logoff messages.

(Alan) Oh wail! For I do try
Alan falls swiftly down, so sadly as he stumbles, gains his speech - (Alan) to be conveyance of desperate misery
(Alan) so much so to give credence, as I do breathe
(Alan) or lay a wreath upon this darkened earth!
Alan weeps!
Alan wails!
Alan whimpers, as in a wake for dearest friends, in this deep and mournful world
(Alan) or in this swollen hollow, as grief sustains itself with public declamation
(Alan) Think sob, think whimper, wail and sniff
(Alan) Enough to make your tears flow full; I would be sore in selfish adulation, were I ignorant of your presence, and gasp and wow and hold-the-breath and laugh and giggle and all the tattered day
(Alan) against the Shouts and Tells, against the Message, appearing without source or destination: I beg you, Read me!
Alan cries!
Alan sobs to the very fullest!
(Alan) This is the strife that makes me die content,

(Alan) Since you shall never know my full intent.
Rains fall, storms gather around stark and broken trees!
(Alan) Consider the earth, the swarm, this doomed and shattered wreath!
(Alan) Content, again, and one last sob and wail
(Alan) Or *whimper" lost, oh sniff and I set sail!
ALL SHIPS CRASH

↑ Index

770. George Bowering
Re: tolerance
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> She reacted in a very intense and personal > manner, citing how the real poetry was being shaped by the likes of Mary > Oliver, Mark Doty, and a few others.

Are these 2 real or made-up names?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

771. Robert Archambeau
Re: Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> Evidentally Mr. Pinsky missed Pound's admonitions against abstraction.
> He's just short of invoking "dim lands of peace..." -m.

He didn't miss it -- Yvor Winters at Stanford convinced him that abstractions were the only thing that could save us from madness. A nutty conclusion, I admit, and not a good one for RP's poetry. But it wasn't a question of missing.

Bob

↑ Index

772. david bromige
re : tolerance Bowering-style
Tue 24 Nov 1998

George! What are you doing, up this late? Yes, those names are actual. You must be kidding. There are plenty more where those came from. I dreamt I was lying in bed & the radio said the smallest piece of Canada was going to come thru the roof. I relaxed expecting a mosquito but it was Prince Edward Island! A pretty place, almost naif, good for tourists but bad news busting thru the roof. George, go to bed! I'm going to. Don yr Old Codger tasseled nightcap & yr puppy-&-kitty slippers & shuffle off of Buffalo for the peace of Bowering Manor. I'm going to. There will be time for these lists of names, & the names of the books they writ, in the morning.....then ensues the reading of them. You _are_ kidding, aren't you! Brahms

↑ Index

773. miekal and [Fwd: FLUXLIST: Celebrating the Life of Dick Higgins]
Tue 24 Nov 1998

by westbyserver.westby.mwt.net (8.8.7/8.8.6) with SMTP id JAA26355 for <[redacted]>; Tue, 24 Nov 1998 09:38:19 -0600 (CST)
From: "Fluxus Bulletin Board" <[redacted]>
Subject: FLUXLIST: Celebrating the Life of Dick Higgins
Date: Tue, 24 Nov 1998 10:30:23 -0500
Apparently-To: [redacted]

"Celebrating the Life of Dick Higgins" Sunday, December 27 at 3 pm
Judson Memorial Church
New York, New York

↑ Index

774. Charles Alexander
Re: re : tolerance Bowering-style
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> But then people here have been talking about one Pinsky--as if anyone had ever read Pinsky. I never have. I dont know anyone in Canada who has read Pinsky. But I know 100 Canadians who have read Tom Raworth.

here's to those Canadians!

and yes, Raworth should be the poet laureate of Great Britain and Lyn Hejinian the poet laureate of the USA and Phyllis Webb the poet laureate of Canada -- although I understand she isn't writing poetry any more, so perhaps we'd give this one to Bowering, who would clearly be a sexy presence on the tube. I might have to get a satellite just to pick up the right Canadian stations

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

775. henry
Re: Guttapercha Bunsen is RIGHT
Tue 24 Nov 1998

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998 15:36:35 -0600 MAYHEW said:
>But Henry, this poem is written in English and we are all all too familiar >with its diction, its tone, its devices, its rhetoric. I have read >hundreds of poems of this ilk over the past 25 years or so. That it takes >about 10 seconds to render a judgment about Pinksy's poem does not mean >that it is a superficial judgment--it could be the product of years of >experience. It's like hearing an out of tune piano--you don't have to >think about it for hours to know it's out of tune, do you?

Undoubtedly, Jonathan. The poem was dim lands of terrible. But my point was that if critics want to be intolerant, they need to be highly informed first. The Pinskys and Heaneys (2 very different-calibre poets I guess) occupy literary space in the "real" world - a stance more complicated & subtle than is suggested by comparing the latest postmodernist acado- experiment with a bad poem by Pinsky. That's why I liked Schuchat's suggestion about the Chinese tradition of "transparency" - basically "character is style". This might be a way to ground a criticism that takes groups & politics & subcultures into account - seriously - without skimming over the detailed characteristics of an individual writer's approach.

- Henry

↑ Index

776. Henry Gould
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Now Marjorie, you know all us "virtual" people just go into the squiggles when a "real world" critic actually joins the conversation. You shouldn't take it as picking on you at all. Nor is examining the word "tolerance" a low point of discourse for this list. But asking Guttapercha Bunsen for his resume is a bit ad hominem for conversational purposes, no? Just because he's more virtual than you are doesn't mean you have a right to rub his nose in real academic dirt ("where have YOU been published"?) & get away with it. This is snobbish, if not intolerant. & it gets my poet knickers in a dither. Because there's a point at which the clanking gears of academic controversy & intellectual rhodomontade LOSES POETRY COMPLETELY, all the while posing as the art's curators. Sorry - it's the poets who manage that themselves. Your "seriousness" & power as a critic is exemplary - & your question about publication reminds us of the sheer labor & dedicated consistency involved in pursuing any "real" vocation. And what it takes to BE the challenging critic you are calling for. But nobody has to flash their credentials to talk on this list. That's part of the wonder of it, as well as the inconsequence.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

777. Mairead Byrne
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Hey hey Henry Gould someone should write you a song!
But rhodomontade what a word!!
Couldn't agree with you more -- and I thought you were up to no good at that job of yours!
As an aside, can't help noticing M. Perloff's tolerance of Bloom and Vendler as we poets eviscerate one another. Certainly don't want to be a member of the Rough & Dainty Flayers of Pinsky Group.
Do agree, though, with M.P. about literary and political tolerances being mutually imbued.
Woody

On Tue, 24 Nov 1998, Henry Gould wrote:

> Now Marjorie, you know all us "virtual" people just go into the squiggles when a "real world" critic actually joins the conversation. You shouldn't take it as picking on you at all. Nor is examining the word "tolerance" a low point of discourse for this list. But asking Guttapercha Bunsen > for his resume is a bit ad hominem for conversational purposes, no?

> Just because he's more virtual than you are doesn't mean you have a > right to rub his nose in real academic dirt ("where have YOU been > published"?) & get away with it. This is snobbish, if not intolerant.
> & it gets my poet knickers in a dither. Because there's a point > at which the clanking gears of academic controversy & intellectual > rhodomontade LOSES POETRY COMPLETELY, all the while posing as the art's > curators. Sorry - it's the poets who manage that themselves.
> Your "seriousness" & power as a critic is exemplary - & your > question about publication reminds us of the sheer labor & > dedicated consistency involved in pursuing any "real" vocation.
> And what it takes to BE the challenging critic you are calling for.
> But nobody has to flash their credentials to talk on this list.
> That's part of the wonder of it, as well as the inconsequence.
>
> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

778. Michael Magee

Re: Pinsky

Tue 24 Nov 1998

Keith, don't tell me you didn't recognize this final line of mine below as tongue in cheek? Ain't I adressing your request for "some wit with the venom"? And, respectfully, did you read the rest of my post? I have in fact read von Hallberg's book as well as Pinsky's "Situation" albeit a while ago now. And, as I said about young readers, the resourceful reader can like almost anything b/c reading is a creative act: von H is one of these resourceful readers to be sure. I can do a lot with Pinsky myself, though in most cases I end by questioning his merit. Take these opening lines from "The Living," from 1984:

The living, the unfallen lords of life
Move heavily through the dazzle
Where all things shift, glitter or swim -

Not bad, huh? Well, that's because they're not really his exactly. He's taken them from Emerson's essay "Experience," which opens with a poem beginning "The lords of life, the lords of life," and, in its opening paragraph, describes a state where "all things swim and glitter." "Heavily" also appears there, as does the word "shift." So as far as I can tell the only words of Pisnsky's are the not-so-hot "through the dazzle." Now, I write about Emerson, so I can do some work on this poem in that regard. And it really isn't a bad poem. But, finally, the comparison to Emerson works very much to Pinsky's detriment. Even here (and I'd say this is one of his best) the tendency to a kind of confident abstraction grows tiresome. What makes the engine of Emerson's "Experience" run is the sense of specificity - the particularity of his stunningly casual (read: not confessional) admission that the essay revolves around the death of his five year old son which somehow "leaves no scar" - and the sense of fragmentation: "I know better than to claim any completeness for my picture. I am a fragment and this is a fragment of me." I would to god Pinsky had read those words carefully! Instead he seems very comfortable in the role of chronicler of "the world's rage" as he calls it in that poem. Is there such a thing as "the world's rage" in the absence of specifics. Most of all, I feel like Pinsky could have used a good dose of the Objectivists to mediate against his double-dose of Ivor Winters. Oppen wrote, "mere autonomy of the mind or the emotions is mendacity," and "the actuality of consciousness cannot be doubted." Good lessons.

-m.

According to Keith Tuma:
> > >As for the older folks who like Pinsky, well, they are Pinsky or > >resemble him very strongly. And it's a mathematical certainty that Pinsky > >will like Pinsky 90% of the time.
>
> As Marjorie noted in her post before the pack let loose to scramble for the > last turd, Robert von Hallberg is an admirer of Pinsky's work and can be > quite passionate and intelligent about it. I can assure you that he is not > Robert Pinsky. An Explanation of America is a poem I once read with > interest for its effort to deploy neo-Horatian and neo-Augustan > verse-essayistic modes. I look much less like Robert Pinsky than Robert von > Hallberg does. The more recent Pinsky verse--after that book really-- > seems to me considerably weaker as well as very different, in mode as well > as in its relentless and finally (for me) uninteresting worrying of a > thematics of "desire" that I suspect RP took over from his friend Robert > Hass. And there are limits to my interest these days in the earlier mode > at work in Explanation's post-Vietnam discursiveness, with its perhaps > too-resonant closure warring with its nightmare scenarios of nascent > reaganism. But it's a book that one might well know whether one decides to > hate it or not. Passion requires context and even knowledge.
>
> Before you make a statement such as the one above you might read what von > Hallberg has written of Pinsky in his 1984 book on American poetry, which > also sympathetically discusses poets such as Creeley, Ashbery, Olson, Dorn, > Bishop, Lowell etc. and remains a good study of poetry and nation-building
> (the emergence of a tone of the center in poetry as well as politics post > WWII). Or you might read Pinsky's The Situation of Poetry, which quotes, > among others, Bruce Andrews. Then go ahead and lob a few bombs: they'll > be taken seriously. Mark Weiss, at least, quoted a (terrible) poem.

>
> I'm with Ron Silliman when he says that he finds it important to read poets > in the other so-called camp. There's a funny line, by the way, in one of > Ron's books--forget which--about "Merrill's Pinsky." That continuity would > be worth considering, Auden behind them both, Pinsky's (early) mode crossed > by exposure to Yvor Winters.
>
> It's a strange day when I find myself grateful for Henry Gould. (Hello Henry.)
>
> Perhaps some wit with the venom would help too. Always grateful for that.
> Sorry not to have any ready today but this discussion is depressing me.
>
> Keith Tuma
>

↑ Index

779. Mark Prejsnar
Camping it up
Tue 24 Nov 1998

>
> I'm with Ron Silliman when he says that he finds it important to read poets in the other so-called camp.

Well, this is true, but i'm becoming increasingly bemused by the repetition of this banality....

Are there people on this list who have not read widely in all types of poetry, including the most dominant workshop/poet laureate modes????

No doubt there are some, though i wonder if there quite as many as these schoolmasterly admonitions assume....

↑ Index

780. David Kellogg
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> Wow--I never expected to unleash such fury! If Gabriel G had paid attention to my first posting, he would have realized that I began by noting that Bob von H and I have just had quite a good dialogue on Howe and Pinsky with interesting pros and cons and I said there that I respected Bob's opinion very much as you'll see when that "dialogue" comes out! In the meantime, nothing like pouncing on the word

> "tolerance" and giving me the business.
>
> It's becoming tiresome. But I want to correct one thing David Kellogg said which is that "Marjorie separates political from aesthetic tolerance" etc. When the dialogue comes out, David, you'll see that my central caveat about the poem in question ("History of my Heart") is political--specifically, the patronizing treatment of the mother which I take to be quite sexist and smug. But then David loves to jump to conclusions!

Hi Marjorie. Can I correct your correction?

I wasn't referring to your dialogue, which as you rightly point out, I haven't had the chance to read, but to your post. To quote:

"Tolerance of other people is essential in any community that professes to be democratic, yes.

But "tolerance" of poetries that one takes to be --as one member of the List said--not poetry at all but just crap is a way of undercutting the very poetry one believes in and has had a terrible effect of making things bland and unimportant."

Within the context of your post, I don't think I was jumping to conclusions. Do I really love to do that? Nor was I "giving [you] the business" -- I have too much respect for your opinions to do that. I post relatively infrequently on this list precisely because I think too-frequent posting leads to such jumping.

Love,
David
~~~
~~~

just about anyone in the Norton anthology of Modern Poetry. I "studied" writing with Karl Shapiro and Thom Gunn as an undergraduate. I guess it would be possible now, for a young person who happened to get hooked up with an avant-garde mentor early on, to bypass a lot of the mainstream or academic tradition, in which case this banality-- "you really should check out Lowell and Auden"--would have some meaning.

On Tue, 24 Nov 1998, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> I'm with Ron Silliman when he says that he finds it important to read poets in the other so-called camp.
>
> Well, this is true, but i'm becoming increasingly bemused by the repetition of this banality....
>
> *Are there people on this list who have not read widely in all types of poetry, including the most dominant workshop/poet laureate modes????*
>
> No doubt there are some, though i wonder if there quite as many as these schoolmasterly admonitions assume....

Jonathan

↑ Index

782. louis stroffolino
Fescue Rant (asy)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

DOES ANYBODY KNOW THE EMAIL ADDRESS FOR HEATHER FULLER? thanks.....c

↑ Index

783. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli pleasure
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Mr. Schuchat: Who said there was anything wrong with reading for pleasure. I was merely pointing out that when you attempt to browbeat a pinsky people into reading, say, Olson's Maximus, there usual response is along the lines that I only read peauxtry for pleasure. Then when I reply that I read the Maximus for pleasure, they look at me, as though I'm nuts or a liar. I'm gettin' a complex from it. Can you help me?---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

784. Gabriel Gudding

GABRIEL GUDDING'S RESUME

Tue 24 Nov 1998

Dear MP:

1). From what I can see of the screen through the wine stain on my glasses, I find that once again I have been mistaken for a legerdemainist.

2). As you WELL KNOW, Marjorie Perloff, I have written several definitive studies of American poetry, as well as a few seminal articles on the rhetoric of academic prose.

3). The most famous of the former, I'll remind you, is my work on the influence of Trolle's _Das italinische Volkstum und seine Abhngigkeit von den Naturbedingungen: Ein Anthropo-Geographische Versuch_ upon Whitman's 1855 Edition of LoG.

4). The work I am most proud of is "The Posthumanity of Late Capitalist Micro-Narrativity in the Novels of Pynchon and Q.R. Serif," but there's also "Re-imaging Aristotelian _Eudaimonia_ as a Legitimating Signifier in the Fuller-Thoreau Editorial Conflict" to bolster my flagging ego on morning's like these.

5). My current work-in-progress is (so far) entitled "_Times Roman_ vs. _Palatino_: A Study of the Influence of Fonts on Acceptance Rates at Leading Literary Journals, 1985-Present." (I could really use your thoughts on this one!)

6). My only book thus far is _A New Definitive and Thoroughgoing Late-Bakhtinian, Post-Lacanian, Somewhat-Foucauldian, and Certainly-Deleuzean Creative Rereading of David Bromige's Tight Corners and What's Around Them._ (Pseudonymously published under the name Omnibus P. Poppycock.)

7). I was also thinking of writing something called _The Posthuman Always Already Rings Twice: Barthes & The Importance of the Dialectical Semiotics of Nationalist Representations of Left-Handed Mail Deliverers Wearing Mauve Great Coats in Central European Epistolary Short Stories_ but I think that title might already be taken by one of your students.

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Marjorie Perloff wrote:

> But then I'm afraid I don't know where > Gabriel Gudding publishes his interesting commentaries. In what > journals do they appear?

You take care, Marjorie Perloff. Yours & only yours, Gabe

↑ Index

785. miekal and chicago recommendations
Tue 24 Nov 1998

---

will be in Chicago (for the first time in years) this Thanks weekend & looking for some recommendations about good small press / experimental / zine book-stores to check out... also wouldnt mind hearing if there's any wild readings or shows going on.

miekal

↑ Index

786. Gabriel Gudding
What Are The Virtues of Name-Calling?
Tue 24 Nov 1998

On Mon, 23 Nov 1998, Marjorie Perloff wrote:
> What really troubles me is the endless name-calling here.

1). What are the virtues of name-calling?
   a). It says, I resent your exclamation points.
   b). It says, Your question marks have not been earned.
   c). It is a nice substitute for fisticuffs in an era of keyboards.
   d). As the first sublimation of physical battle, it is the spice of intellectual battle.
   e). For the abacus and the kazoo could not argue without first giving each other names.
   f). For we are all essentially nameless, and calling names highlights this little truth.
   g). It shouts DIE to the hippy vibe.

-- Guttapercha

↑ Index

787. miekal and Re: Deepening tolerance
Tue 24 Nov 1998

---

slogan-free poetics

is like gravy without the meat

↑ Index

788. Kristen Gallagher
Re: Fescue Rant (asy)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

[redacted]

> DOES ANYBODY KNOW THE EMAIL ADDRESS FOR HEATHER FULLER?
> thanks.....c

↑ Index

789. schuchat
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

it's true, Alphaville is a pretty good used bookstore. I've never spoken with the staff, though, so my taste has never been commented upon. nevertheless, I do read poetry for pleasure. I didn't know there was anything wrong with that.

↑ Index

790. Joseph Conte
Stern and Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

I'm intolerant to the extent that I will not pay good money to read poetry I dislike.

Marjorie Perloff, in many lectures in which she's had at the trolls of mainstream poetics, always amazes me with the thoroughness with which she's read the poets she dislikes. She is intolerant of their mannerisms, but she knows their work well enough to attack them in public.

Know your enemy. Reconnaissance.

Did anyone catch the mewling Gerald Stern (not the howling Howard) on the News Hour last night? Holding up the copy of his book-award winning volume like a box of Bisquick? Reading the most banal poems with what one could only call a respiratory tic?

If it comes to this, please let us have the dashing, mellifluous, dare I say sexy, Mr. Pinsky as the representative of American poetry on the News Hour. However much we might prefer not to read his poetry, let's not pass over the fact that an engaging spokesperson probably "sells" more Americans on the pleasures of poetry than the unattractive, self-congratulating, boorish, and un-interesting Mr. Stern.

Joseph Conte

Content-Description: Card for Conte, Joseph begin: vcard fn: Joseph Conte

n: Conte;Joseph
org: SUNY at Buffalo
adr: Department of English;;306 Clemens Hall;Buffalo;New York;14260-4610;USA email;internet: [redacted] title: Associate Professor tel;work: [redacted] x1009
tel;fax: [redacted]
tel;home: [redacted] version: 2.1
end: vcard

----------2910AF89A6ACFA125B8DDC8C--

↑ Index

791. Fred Muratori

Re: Stern and Pinsky

Tue 24 Nov 1998

>Did anyone catch the mewling Gerald Stern (not the howling Howard) on >the News Hour last night? Holding up the copy of his book-award winning >volume like a box of Bisquick? Reading the most banal poems with what >one could only call a respiratory tic?
>
>If it comes to this, please let us have the dashing, mellifluous, dare I >say sexy, Mr. Pinsky as the representative of American poetry on the >News Hour. However much we might prefer not to read his poetry, let's >not pass over the fact that an engaging spokesperson probably "sells"
>more Americans on the pleasures of poetry than the unattractive, >self-congratulating, boorish, and uninteresting Mr. Stern.
>
>Joseph Conte
>
Actually, I just thought Stern (whose popularity and reputation I've never been able to fathom) looked befuddled, tentative, out-of-his-element, as most 70-something folks unaccustomed to being on television might be. His attempt to hold his book up to the camera only succeeded in catching the white glare of the studio lights, obscuring the cover entirely. It was just embarassing. And sad. What I found more irritating were the host's (can't remember her name) attempts to ask penetrating questions ("Now...what _about_ that tortoise?") that only reminded me of a high school English teacher trying lamely to rouse a snoozing class. Almost made me run out of the room like a hare. Like a hare. Like a hare.

Still wasn't enough to make me wish for Pinsky, though.

-- Fred M.

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

792. A. Jenn Sondheim
Jennifer says
Tue 24 Nov 1998

-

Jennifer says

Jennifer says, already dead, we're more alive than you are. Jennifer says, take three giant steps. Jennifer says, your feet are rotting, and I just said something and you can't speak. Jennifer says, shake those arms and legs. Jennifer says, see how they run. Jennifer says, pass the antler down to Julu.

Julu says, already dead, we're more alive than you are. Julu says, I took those steps. Julu says, now spread your legs and somersault. Julu says, now shake your head in No No No! Julu says, your head falls off but we don't care. Julu says, see how you run. Julu says, see how they run after you. Julu says, pass the antler down to Nikuko.

Nikuko says, already dead, we're more alive than you are. Nikuko says, I gave those steps. Nikuko says, now drink the drink and eat the meat. Nikuko says, now jump your bones up and down. Nikuko says, shake those bones and shake that meat. Nikuko says, take three steps backward, pass the antler down to Jennifer.

Jennifer says, already dead, we're more alive than you are. Jennifer says, I said those steps. Jennifer says, now turn yourself from side to side. Jennifer says, now run away and don't come back. Jennifer says, see how they run. Jennifer says, see how they run after you. Jennifer says, place the antler on the ground.

Julu says, place the antler.
Nikuko says, place the antler.
Jennifer says, place the antler on the ground.

↑ Index

793. Carl Wilson
Re: Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

((Pardon me for jumping in here all wet for the first time; we'll skip intros for the moment, though it may be useful to know I'm writing from Toronto.))

While not agreeing with all his aesthetic shadowplays, i appreciated what Michael Magee had to say late yesterday on the Pinsky perplex: Yes, it's intriguing to consider why he has a readership that Susan Howe and all the howler monkeys we esteem haven't got. But it really is a matter of Who Exists to people who've not breached the fence and gone out searching in the wilderness -

- whether that's from lack of passion/time or simply not having had a clue dropped in their faces that there's anything beyond the fence, any door in the Magrittean sky to exit tinytown culture - or, more likely, anything other than mistaking (as is easy for any urban youth) the so-called counterculture, the hip-and-dirty bohemia in the movies and off-hours of MTV, for the Other Tradition.

As a young'un, for instance, my encounters with O'Hara were always - from my small-town-ontario vantagepoint - mediated by a misapprehension that lumped him w/ Ginsberg, Kerouac, Corso - which made me take his poems as spontaneous-bop-prosody, assume they were self-celebrating slapdashery, and not read more closely. It took till years later for me to revisit them and appreciate how much F.O'H's version of extasy was self-subverting, rather than simple Beat machojaculation as I'd thought. The all-too-easy miscontextualization slowed down what I coulda gained and where I coulda gone.

By contrast, as a Canuck undergrad, I became aware reasonably early on of the Canadian exemplars of outside-the-lines writing - bp nichol, Chris Dewdney (before he let himself be swallowed in the techno-hipoisie), some of Michael Ondaatje, eventually even Paul Dutton, Steve McCaffery, Karen MacCormack, who happened to do a reading in Montreal when I was there. But since nobody-butme seemed to notice or talk about these people, they only half-existed. I was left to assume for years that they were random mutations in the Canadian wild, not connecting them to their forerunners and contemporaries south of the border and therefore not really Getting much of what they were about. I couldn't even have articulated why I liked them, at the time, having no broader poetics, no figure-to-ground relationship, to refer to.

Sure, it was inevitable, after all that, that I'd eventually figure it out. But then I was dedicated to the attempt. Lately I've had letters from friends from those old periods, with whom I'd fallen out-of-touch, and they'll quote stuff like Pinsky to me with delicate reverence -- not, Michael, because they are Pinsky, but in a sentiment of we-always-liked-poetry-didn't-we-? and that's all they've stumbled on since. I'm not about to laugh or argue at them, but the distance apart is certainly emphasized at such moments.

I see no reason why those same people couldn't get into Howe. They're smart enough. But to alter the dynamic would take changes in, for instance, how Howe gets talked-up by publishers and brought into a public sphere. Eg., what living poet can we name who'd want to be Laureate whom we'd like to be Laureate? (Same reason there are no politicians worth voting for, btw.) At least Pinsky works the job hard, if with excess gravit-ass.

As well there'd have to be a change in the Other Tradition's self-image. The question of opposition is fraught: kneejerk oppositionalism reads to the outsider as "we're against people like YOU, you Pinsky-pinching pantywaist." No wonder they don't rush to buy up the whole Sun & Moon backlist. On the other hand, if aesthetic oppositionalism values itself as invisible but perpetual counterweight, as may be true, then there's no use complaining about minoritarian status and treating that as odd or inexplicable.

carl patrick wilson

↑ Index

794. Pritchett,Patrick

FW: Contemp. Women's Poetry & the Tradition (1/5; ALA, 5/27-5/30)

Tue 24 Nov 1998

Of use? If not, w.p.b.

> -----Original Message-----
> From: Lisa Sewell [SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Monday, November 23, 1998 1:34 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: CFP: Contemp. Women's Poetry & the Tradition (1/5; ALA, > 5/27-5/30)

>
> I am interested in organizing a panel on women's poetry for the upcoming American Literature Association conference in Baltimore, May 27-30. My idea for the panel is to contextualize the work of contemporary women poets within the larger tradition of twenieth century poetry. If contemporary women poets have inscribed their own tradition, what are its characteristics? How do women poets rewrite, reject or conform to conceits that are central to our understanding of the tradition. All theoretical approaches, but papers that make use of theories of women's writing are especially encouraged.
> Please send or email abstracts only to Professor Lisa Sewell, Deparment of English, Villanova University, Villanova, PA 19085.
> [redacted]. by January 5, 1999.
>
> Please note: I will be choosing papers that seem to make up the best, most coherent panel, and sending in a proposal to the Association of American Literature. Panel proposals are due Jan. 30, so I need to get all the submissions by the beginning of the month.
>
> ==========
> From the Literary Calls for Papers Mailing List
> [redacted]
> Full Information at > http://www.english.upenn.edu/CFP/ > or write Erika Lin: [redacted]
> ==========

↑ Index

795. Mark Prejsnar
once again, knee-jerks all around
Tue 24 Nov 1998

On Tue, 24 Nov 1998, Carl Wilson wrote:

> As well there'd have to be a change in the Other Tradition's self-image. The question of opposition is fraught: kneejerk oppositionalism reads to the outsider as "we're against people like YOU, you Pinsky-pinching pantywaist." No wonder they don't rush to buy up the whole Sun & Moon backlist. On the other hand, if aesthetic oppositionalism values itself as invisible but perpetual

Carl Wilson's post was really thoughtful and fascinating. However we really have had enuff i think of this "knee-jerk" bizness.

There is a chronic, hand-wringing self-doubt among people whose poetics put'em outside the mainstream, that tends to manifest itself in repeated use of phraseology like that quoted above. In 1997 and 1998 there were several "dialogues" in different mags, in which poets castigated themselves and their peers for "knee-jerk experimentalism;" i found this so peculiar and misdirected a tendency that i subtitled a whole issue of the magazine i edit, "Special knee-jerk experimentalism issue."

In my experience, there really isn't quite as much bullying of Pinskites as the above seems to declare. Why, i haven't beaten anyone up for reading Lowell or Pinsky for, jeeez, it must be 4 or 5 months...

swaggeringly,
Mark

↑ Index

796. david bromige
Carl Wilson's question
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> . Eg., what living
> *poet can we name who'd want to be Laureate whom we'd like to be Laureate?*

Charles Bernstein. Ron Silliman. Lyn Hejinian. Leslier Scalapino. Barrett Watten. Bob Perelman. Robert Grenier. (More to the point, how about Grenier replace Letterman and the Late Night Show replace movie stars with counter-culture poets? --I entirely agree with Carl Wilson, people are smart enough, they only require exposure : to echo EP,

The thought of what America would be like [x 3]
if Bob Grenier was in charge of the Late Show ah well, it troubles my sleep.

And it would disturb America's sleep for good. [Fond as I am of Paul Schaeffer, I think he should be replaced by Larry Ochs and the Rova Quartet].)

db3

↑ Index

797. Poetics List
Two Tenure Track Jobs (fwd)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

F.Y.I.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 24 Nov 1998 14:25:25 -0500
From: Rachel Blau DuPlessis <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Two Tenure Track Jobs

Subject: Two Tenure Track Jobs

Dear Listafarians: I am sorry that my posting of the following may have historical layers that I don't and didn't control, but I wanted you all to know the following, which was just announced to us: Temple University, Department of English Two Provost Authorized Assistant Professor tenure-track positions 1) Creative Writing, with expertise in poetry and creative non-fiction (memoir, autobiography, poetics, etc.). Ph.D. or MFA in hand by September 1, 1999; 2) Professional and Organizational Writing, with expertise in business and technical writing, global corporate and institutional discourses, writing program pedagogy. Ph.D. in hand or by September 1, 1999. Additional expertise in British or Anglophone litertures (1700 to the present) preferred for both positions. Evidence of strong scholarly/ creative potential and strong teaching credentials expected for both positions. Top candidates will be interviewed during campus visit early in Spring 1999 semester. Appointments will be made by the end of February 1999. Please send letter of application, C.V., writing sample, and at least two letters of reference, by January 10, 1999, to Daniel T. O'Hara, Chair, department of English, Temple University, 1114 W. Berks Street, Philadelphia, PA 19122-6090. Temple University is an Equal Opportunity Employer. That is the official wording of our job announcement. Thanks for your attention. Rachel Blau DuPlessis ========== Rachel Blau DuPlessis Temple University Philadelphia, PA 19122 [redacted] ========== Rachel Blau DuPlessis Temple University Philadelphia, PA 19122 [redacted]

↑ Index

798. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: outtake from preparing _whether hotel_ for PERFORATIONS

Tue 24 Nov 1998

:
m i s p e l l e d nomad
a d l r e e i n c a t t i r t i y c

↑ Index

799. Carl Wilson
Re: once again, knee-jerks all around
Tue 24 Nov 1998

At the risk of being kneejerk myself, a quick response to Mark P's response:

I wrote:
>The question of opposition is fraught: kneejerk oppositionalism reads to the > outsider as "we're against people like YOU, you Pinsky-pinching pantywaist."
>No wonder they don't rush to buy up the whole Sun & Moon backlist. On the >other hand, if aesthetic oppositionalism values itself as invisible but >perpetual counter... (etc)

And Mark said:
> we really have had enuff i think of this "knee-jerk" bizness...
>In my experience, there really isn't quite as much bullying of Pinskites >as the above seems to declare. Why, i haven't beaten anyone up for >reading Lowell or Pinsky for, jeeez, it must be 4 or 5 months...

Point taken, but it was a problem of syntax not intent - I should have said, "oppositionalism tends to be read from outside as kneejerk, as indiscriminate in its target practice and so (to venture the word) intolerant." That is, not that it is kneejerk, but that people's natural fear of exclusion and inaccess creates the expectation. That doesn't make loyalty to an anti-tradition less valuable, but it does make it "fraught." Inherent in the attempt to-boldly-go beyond outlying frontiers is that there'll be a public-relations gap. I think the Other Tradition could use more genial popularizers, but I think there's been evidence in this discussion of some bitters over what's pop and what's not. Which is kinda disingenuous or at least unrealistic.

Carl

↑ Index

800. Carmen Butcher
Thanks Hilton Obenzinger
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Your intolerant and articulate paragraph was much appreciated by this poetry enthusiast, also near Stanford. Cheers, Carmen Butcher

↑ Index

801. Mark Weiss
Re: Stern and Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Frde--my take on this exactly. What I found most curious was Stern's attempts to elucidate the hidden imagery in the poems--at one point a poem refers to an animal's grey whiskers, and we're apparently supposed to divine that that's a reference to hasidim. If so, it's more opaque than Zukofsky. That said, the poems were at least more interesting than Pinsky, altho the camera presence was simply cruel.

At 03:00 PM 11/24/98 -0400, you wrote:
>>Did anyone catch the mewling Gerald Stern (not the howling Howard) on >>the News Hour last night? Holding up the copy of his book-award winning >>volume like a box of Bisquick? Reading the most banal poems with what >>one could only call a respiratory tic?
>>
>>If it comes to this, please let us have the dashing, mellifluous, dare I >>say sexy, Mr. Pinsky as the representative of American poetry on the >>News Hour. However much we might prefer not to read his poetry, let's >>not pass over the fact that an engaging spokesperson probably "sells"
>>more Americans on the pleasures of poetry than the unattractive, >>self-congratulating, boorish, and uninteresting Mr. Stern.
>>
>>Joseph Conte
>>
>Actually, I just thought Stern (whose popularity and reputation I've never >been able to fathom) looked befuddled, tentative, out-of-his-element, as >most 70-something folks unaccustomed to being on television might be. His >attempt to hold his book up to the camera only succeeded in catching the >white glare of the studio lights, obscuring the cover entirely. It was >just embarassing. And sad. What I found more irritating were the host's >(can't remember her name) attempts to ask penetrating questions >("Now...what _about_ that tortoise?") that only reminded me of a high >school English teacher trying lamely to rouse a snoozing class. Almost made >me run out of the room like a hare. Like a hare. Like a hare.
>
>Still wasn't enough to make me wish for Pinsky, though.
>
>-- Fred M.
>
>*******
>Fred Muratori

>([redacted])
>Reference Services Division
>Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
>Cornell University
>Ithaca, NY 14853
>WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

802. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I haven't had much stake in this discussion being one of those outmoded individuals who feel that the potentialities of modernism have either been abandoned or betrayed for the lesser idioms, but let me provide some raw data from the realm of commerce e. g. my bookstore. Anyone who's been here will attest to the fact that we maintain the best selection of USED poetry in Washington, DC, just as Rod Smith at Bridge Street has the best new selection. Our selection is so good because we are insiders--that is we know something about poetry. Not from a published critical standpoint (that was a cheap shot from Perloff though Gudding's knowledge seems to be exceptionally limited, so why bother with him) but from our reading and writing and, of course, public discourse-much of which takes place in the store. Pinsky fans to paraphrase Eliot cannot bear too much reality, at least as regards their poetic tastes. They generally are reluctant to provide an exegesis of what they are reading. They admire the clarity of a Pinsky, Stern, Graham, Hass et al. and often that's all they require. If they write reviews for the papers or blurbs for books the word that always appears is 'accessibility'. The Georgians used to call it 'perspicuity'. They associate accessibility with universality and by extension regard their own condition as template for the rest of the world. This has been called 'liberal' or 'bourgeois'. They find my decades long modernist passion for ruminating and writing upon and through Europoean transcendental philosophy, the philosophy of science and technology and American history among other subjects to be utterly extraneous to what they "look for in poetry" and downright intimidating. Some, because I engage them concerning their poetic tastes, have stopped coming to my store or only come when they can feel certain I will not be there. They are less likely to be poets themselves than those in the Susan Howe camp (if I may be allowed to carry forward these crude distinctions and general observations.) The Susan Howe requesters are decidedly from a smaller coterie and less connected to people who read "poetry for pleasure." Like most underdogs, as they perceive themselves, they are more likely to be willing to engage in theoretical discourse, trying to hammer home their own position. They also are more inclined to read poetry to establish for themselves a sense of poetic-historical continuity. Pleasure does not appear to be their primary motivation. If you link pleasure and consumption, like I'm forced to do everyday as a merchant, you can draw some distinctions (possibly worthless) between two generalized though hotly perceived approaches to poetry. I like to watch sales anomalies at the store. It relieves some of the banality and boredom of operating a business. One such phenomenon surrounds T.S. Eliot and the popularity of the Broadway musical Cats based on Eliot's Old Possum's Books of Practical Cats. Apparently after seeing Cats, many people who either read no poetry or very little went out and purchased the Complete Poems and Plays of Ol' Possum. Then finding there was more to Eliot than anthropomorphised animals, they dumped unread mint copies on the used market. It was also a Book of the Month Club selection. But even though I've bought perhaps several dozen copies of the Eliot, I'm often, as now, sold out. Anyone serious about poetry buys one; but so do many people who read poetry for pleasure. Eliot is one of the most 'accessible'. That's why he is treated with some deference, say, by journalists at the Washington Post who have nothing but smug dismissiveness for Pound, Joyce, Olson and Duncan. The Post was in a tizzy over the recent promotion of Ulysses as the 20th century's greatest novel because they, being the full measure of all discourse, literary political and otherwise, could not understand it. I had just with great pleasure and much thoughtful exegesis and criticism for help just finished Finnegans Wake. But my quite natural and superior knowledge of Joyce would never land me a review much less a job at the Post or anywhere else because I have a natural inclination away from what Altieri calls the melodramatic, and a natural affinity for texts that take me out of myself so I'm confronted with new worlds of information. A "CLOSE READING" of Eliot might reveal an element of a perceived gap between whatever was the perceived gap in the flurry of postings above. I've got to draw the line at praise for Vendler. I can appreciate the scholarship but some of the "twisty thoughts" she has to invoke to make a case for say, Jorie Graham go way, way ,way beyond the pale. Bloom's writing on the other hand was useful to me when I was a young know- nothing punk, which is the way I'm sure Dr. Perloff remembers me. I can still recite every recorded Lenny Bruce routine by heart.---Carlo Parcelli

Marjorie Perloff wrote:
>
> Wow--I never expected to unleash such fury! If Gabriel G had paid > attention to my first posting, he would have realized that I began by > noting that Bob von H and I have just had quite a good dialogue on Howe > and Pinsky with interesting pros and cons and I said there that I > respected Bob's opinion very much as you'll see when that "dialogue" > comes out! In the meantime, nothing like pouncing on the word > "tolerance" and giving me the business.

>
> It's becoming tiresome. But I want to correct one thing David Kellogg > said which is that "Marjorie separates political from aesthetic > tolerance" etc. When the dialogue comes out, David, you'll see that my > central caveat about the poem in question ("History of my Heart") is > political--specifically, the patronizing treatment of the mother which I > take to be quite sexist and smug. But then David loves to jump to > conclusions!
>
> Another caveat I have is about the argument that New Directions, once > Norton became its distributor, decided oh hell, might as well publish a > new poet like Susan Howe. This is absurd because the issue would be:
> what new poets did they refuse to publish--a long list, some on this > list and many of them women! So why did they prefer Howe? That would > take a little bit of investigation, wouldn't it?
>
> What really troubles me is the endless name-calling here. When in > doubt, compare Perloff to Bloom and Vendler --not that I mind that > comparison since I have a lot of respect for both of them. Instead of > taking up the challenge and looking at Pinsky's poetry (or Howe's)--the > only person who did was Hilton O in a fabulous posting--we get endless > slurs or bravos, etc. etc. It only proves my original point that the > discourse has hit a real low! But then I'm afraid I don't know where > Gabriel Gudding publishes his interesting commentaries. In what > journals do they appear?
>
> xxx
> Marjorie

↑ Index

803. Laura Moriarty grin ear
Tue 24 Nov 1998

It's true. Bromige is right. Letterman is the fallen form of Bob Grenier. It's the same grimace - but Letterman's is frozen in place.

I've been away (from here) for awhile, but have a new chap book (Spicer's City/ by Poetry New York) to trade with anyone who has something and wants to trade. Backchannel me.

Laura

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

804. MAYHEW
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I love it! A bookstore owner who makes his clients feel embarrassed about their poetic tastes. They've got to sneak in for their academic poetry when he isn't there.

Jonathan

↑ Index

805. Mark Weiss
Re: Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I'm in substantial agreement, with a few demurs. First, it wouldn't hurt to take another look at Ginsberg and Kerouac. Minus the media hype they look a lot less slapdash etc. than you thought. 2nd, on oppositionalism: I don't know anyone who sits down to write a poem thinking about what isn't going to go onto the paper. Oppositionalist talk is another matter and I think is an expression of frustration, because it's not just bad public relations that keeps more interesting poetry out of the larger marketplace. And patience doesn't help much: Pound and Williams are barely accepted in that market, Zukofsky, Oppen and Niedecker are almost invisible, Spicer, despite the two new books, entirely so, and Creeley is also almost unknown compared to say Stephen Sandys or certainly Merrill. I wish I had a solution, but as long as the old guard maintains its grip on the wide-circulation magazines, the bulk of the award circuits, most creative writing departments, and the prestige sinecures we're not likely to see a whole lot of access offered to the other side for poetry readers who might be vulnerable to reeducation. The situation for all I know may be different in Canada because of its comparatively massive arts funding.

At 03:07 PM 11/24/98 EST, you wrote:
>((Pardon me for jumping in here all wet for the first time; we'll skip intros >for the moment, though it may be useful to know I'm writing from Toronto.))

>
>While not agreeing with all his aesthetic shadowplays, i appreciated what >Michael Magee had to say late yesterday on the Pinsky perplex: Yes, it's >intriguing to consider why he has a readership that Susan Howe and all the >howler monkeys we esteem haven't got. But it really is a matter of Who Exists to >people who've not breached the fence and gone out searching in the wilderness -
>
>- whether that's from lack of passion/time or simply not having had a clue >dropped in their faces that there's anything beyond the fence, any door in the >Magrittean sky to exit tinytown culture - or, more likely, anything other than >mistaking (as is easy for any urban youth) the so-called counterculture, the >hip-and-dirty bohemia in the movies and off-hours of MTV, for the Other >Tradition.
>
> As a young'un, for instance, my encounters with O'Hara were always - from my >small-town-ontario vantagepoint - mediated by a misapprehension that lumped him >w/ Ginsberg, Kerouac, Corso - which made me take his poems as >spontaneous-bop-prosody, assume they were self-celebrating slapdashery, and not >read more closely. It took till years later for me to revisit them and >appreciate how much F.O'H's version of extasy was self-subverting, rather than >simple Beat machojaculation as I'd thought. The all-too-easy >miscontextualization slowed down what I coulda gained and where I coulda gone.
>
>By contrast, as a Canuck undergrad, I became aware reasonably early on of the >Canadian exemplars of outside-the-lines writing - bp nichol, Chris Dewdney >(before he let himself be swallowed in the techno-hipoisie), some of Michael >Ondaatje, eventually even Paul Dutton, Steve McCaffery, Karen MacCormack, who >happened to do a reading in Montreal when I was there. But since nobody-butme >seemed to notice or talk about these people, they only half-existed. I was left >to assume for years that they were random mutations in the Canadian wild, not >connecting them to their forerunners and contemporaries south of the border and >therefore not really Getting much of what they were about. I couldn't even have >articulated why I liked them, at the time, having no broader poetics, no >figure-to-ground relationship, to refer to.

>
>Sure, it was inevitable, after all that, that I'd eventually figure it out. But >then I was dedicated to the attempt. Lately I've had letters from friends from >those old periods, with whom I'd fallen out-of-touch, and they'll quote stuff >like Pinsky to me with delicate reverence -- not, Michael, because they are >Pinsky, but in a sentiment of we-always-liked-poetry-didn't-we-? and that's all >they've stumbled on since. I'm not about to laugh or argue at them, but the >distance apart is certainly emphasized at such moments.
>
>I see no reason why those same people couldn't get into Howe. They're smart >enough. But to alter the dynamic would take changes in, for instance, how Howe >gets talked-up by publishers and brought into a public sphere. Eg., what living >poet can we name who'd want to be Laureate whom we'd like to be Laure-ate?
>(Same reason there are no politicians worth voting for, btw.) At least Pinsky >works the job hard, if with excess gravit-ass.
>
>As well there'd have to be a change in the Other Tradition's self-image. The >question of opposition is fraught: kneejerk oppositionalism reads to the >outsider as "we're against people like YOU, you Pinsky-pinching pantywaist." No >wonder they don't rush to buy up the whole Sun & Moon backlist. On the other >hand, if aesthetic oppositionalism values itself as invisible but perpetual >counterweight, as may be true, then there's no use complaining about >minoritarian status and treating that as odd or inexplicable.
>
> carl patrick wilson

>
>

↑ Index

806. Eliza McGrand
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

ick. ms. perloff, i think better of you than your post would allow.

i started off on a literary criticism track, but got too annoyed to continue. i might go back there sometime -- they say age does wonders for patience and annoyance. but until i do, does that mean i don't get to publically comment on other writers? do i get to think about other writers about other writers if i don't publically comment? if i don't publically comment, and i promise to think only the thoughts of Important Literery Commenters, THEN do i get to think? is it thinking if it isn't my thoughts?

you see, this is all kind of a chicken and egg scenario -- if i can't think or publically comment until i amass a critical mass of articles in One Big Kahuna Review, how will i ever attain this mass, since any article in One Big K. R. is, in effect, a public comment and, one would hope, evidence of some sort of thinking?

no wonder i got too annoyed to continue.

yours from the unimportant club which is so unimportant it refuses to have members; i lift an upside down beer stein to the possible yet to be amassed (but not probably) pile of critical articles that will allow me to read and write critical articles...

e

↑ Index

807. David Kellogg
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> you see, this is all kind of a chicken and egg scenario -- if i can't think or publically comment until i amass a critical mass of articles in One Big Kahuna Review, how will i ever attain this mass, since any article in One Big K. R. is, in effect, a public comment and, one would hope, evidence of some sort of thinking?

I saw the One Big Kahuna Review travelling company after the Las Vegas gig ran its course. Bloom and Perloff were quite good, but Vendler was having trouble with the high kicks, and her straw boater kept falling off. A low point was audience member Cary Nelson lobbing tomatoes at the stage.

↑ Index

808. Carl Wilson
Re: Pinsky
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Mark Weiss writes:
>it wouldn't hurt to take another look at Ginsberg and Kerouac. Minus the >media hype they look a lot less slapdash etc. than you thought.

yeah, both at their peaks have worthy cloudcover, though Ginsberg's peak was very short and Kerouac's plateau was long but very bumpy; still, both are worlds away from O'Hara's game, even if just-down-the-street (at another bar) at one point in time. my point was that there was a period in my reading life when i couldn't distinguish the diff, because "beat" was the sole discernible image from the burg where i wuz raised. the slurs on their writing were incidental to the story.

Mark's points on oppositionalism i agree with -- as i was saying, it's not a poetic problem, it's a public problem. -- but this:
>The situation for all I know may be different in Canada because of its comparatively massive arts funding.

?? nah.

first of all, the "massive funding" bit is a myth. our percentage of GDP support of arts is much smaller here than in Europe, it just looks big per capita from the States; but that's entirely outweighed by the fact that comparatively speaking there is no private-sector support for the arts in Canada, whereas the US has (despite what you'd think) an internationally exemplary level of arts-oriented philanthropy, conservative as it usually but not always is.

there are some 'nuck advantages in re: grant money, but even that's minor; the highprofile awards, readings, media attention etc all go to very conservative poetry here, too, with small exceptions. our Arts Councils are no more adventuresome than the NEA and often less. a couple of figures have broken through (the late bp nichol's a Toronto hero; Ondaatje was recognized for his experimental work, ie, Billy the Kid for instance, before he became a moviestar; 1 or 2 others) -- but not much more so than i'd say Creeley has. (he ain't famous but he's respected, known.) in Canada there are far fewer academic shelters, urban institutions, foundations, etc that promote poetry at all, much less "outside" poetry. if the playing field seems more level it may just be because it's all one big hole in the ground.

Carl

↑ Index

809. Aldon Nielsen
this needful thing
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Michael B.!

I'm interested in the project you describe, but wonder about what appears to me an inescabaple epistemological problem --

I need poetry -- I'd like to say that everybody needs poetry --

but HOW are you going to figure out "what kind" of poetry any particular people might be properly said to need at any given time???? We can speak of what poetry they HAVE produced and/or read -- we can talk of the use they made of it,,,, we can look at what they have said about their own needs -- but how would we ever come to any kind of statement about X needed poetry of the type Y at Z point in time??????

I begin to think "need" isn't the right word?

what you think? (I'll be away till Monday,,,, but want to hear you on this)

↑ Index

810. Bob Grumman
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I posted the message below early this morning to--I thought--the Buffalo Group, assuming the "Mail To" would automatically take it to Buffalo, the origin of the message I was replying to. I do this all the time. Anyway, my reply went to Marjorie Perloff only, so I am belatedly posting it again--even though Marjorie has already asnwered it to me personally. If she wants to post her answer to the group as a whole, I will answer it there--and try to send my answer where I want it to go.

What Marjorie said: "It only proves my original point that the discourse has hit a real low! But then I'm afraid I don't know where Gabriel Gudding publishes his interesting commentaries. In what journals do they appear?"

What I replied: "I thought the discourse reached a real low with Gabriel Gudding's first post--but it went significantly lower with Marjorie Perloff's last two sentences above. I think they're a pretty good epitomization of the term, "academic."

--Bob G.

↑ Index

811. Eliza McGrand

one trip ticket to New American Poetry of the 80's/90's/forever?

Tue 24 Nov 1998

---

ok, a few months ago a friend of mine, c.e. chaffin ([redacted]) gave me a whooping up about a pet literary bug of his which i am afraid may have turned into a twainian "one trip ticket." i herewith pass it on in hopes i will come out the tunnel on the other side unbeset.

in summary that does no justice to c.e., he finds there to be a prevailing mode in modern poetry of first person, intimate address. poems start off as if narrator addressing best friend over a half-full beer glass and launch, forthwith, into personal woes. he has begun to find this annoying.

i brushed it off with an "oh c.e., what does it matter what case a writer chooses for the narrator of her or his poem? poems throughout history have been written in the first person, adn addressed that way to the reader." c.e. was not convinced.

i thought that was the end of it, a difference of opinion between writing chums. but as i read many of the poems moving across my screen, in zines, journals, anthologies, books, something began to bite a path from my ear to my brain... i opened up a variant of this discussion with another chum, r.j. mccaffery ([redacted]). we both discussed the navel-gazing feel of poems constantly fixated on "I..I..I" and how poem ABOUT ANOTHER PERSON, i.e. telling their story, felt less neurotic and self-absorbed, both as writer and as reader.

now during current discussion of robert pinsky, that bug in my ear set to whining in a high pitched mosquito noise. i got out my New American Poets of the 80's to read what there was of pinsky, as well as a couple of other sources. lo, it was the "I."

but even worse, the poem groupings excerpted of larry levis, mark doty, micheal burkard, mark jarman, denis johnson, robert long, steve orlen, greg pape, bin ramke, michael ryan, micheal sheridan, john skyoles, gary soto, maura stanton, david st. john, james tate, richard tillinghast, leslie ullman, michael waters, roger weingarten, .. god, i'll stop now. but the poems in their section, poems i've been reading from that era, poems i'm seeing lately, seem, way too often, to be these extended "here let me tell you about my sad self, my precious observations, my sensitive soul, what makes me feel X Y Z" or these vague, I Am Pronouncing epics wrapping the whole world up in a ball, covering it with tin foil, and shooting it into the corner in front of what is supposed to be an admiring crowd.

in short, they began to sound, to me, like a guy trying to get laid.

i admit, the latter image came from yet another source -- a friend saying "there is only one reason a guy dances in public -- he's trying to get laid." and he went on to describe the bravado, grope after rhythm, intent expression, bizarrely focused energy, of... well, of a guy trying to attain some of the proverbial.

and there is a long history, in poetry, of guys writing the things because they are trying to get laid. and of course, anthologies reflect the neurosis of the anthologists.

but listafarians, is it just me? yes, pinsky has gone on to write many other poems sounding nothing like an attempt to talk someone into the horizontal. but don't they, often, sound like, well... isn't it sort of an Iowa Writers Workshop sound, the earnest tortured and sincere confessional (and almost all of the writers in New American Poets ... seem, one way or another, to have an affiliation with Iowa W.W. All of them have an academic affiliation. most of them are male. doesn't that seem pretty fucked up for an anthology purporting to represent the best new american writing of hte 80's? and both of the anthologizers, jack myers and roger weingarten, included themselves! -- THAT to my mind is really self serving to the limit.)? isn't writing, from late 60's on, way too caught up in these personal monologues? i used to love sexton -- haven't dared open up one of her books lately... maybe one of the really experimental (and refreshing) things about langpo/pomo writing (and it's offspring) is a focus on something other than the earnest "I"?

r.j. had been particularly tryuing to sell me on thomas lux and stephen dobbyns. neither wallows in the earnest "I" -- they stick out in this anthology, for example, like anything.

comments? slingshot shots? flowers? horrified silence (elliza SHUT UP!)?

will someone, in four months, write with an insane twinge "one trip ticket, one trip ticket... all that earnest "I" can't they talk about something besides themselves or those sophmoric My View Of Life essays?"

shall i inflict quotes on you all to back this up -- i'm not sure i could stand it.

e

↑ Index

812. Chicago Review

Peter Dale Scott in Chicago

Tue 24 Nov 1998

For those in the Greater Chicagoland Area:

Chicago Review is hosting a poetry reading by Peter Dale Scott
Monday December 7 at 4:30 pm
Classics 10
1010 E. 59th St. on the University of Chicago campus.

Scott has recently completed a remarkable trilogy--Coming to Jakarta, Listening to the Candle, and Minding the Darkness--which mixes politics and autobiography, beginning with the 1965 slaughter of more than a half million Indionesians. His brilliant use of collage in the composition of a long poem is clearly in the tradition of Pound, if to very different ends. James Laughlin has said of the first volume in the trilogy: "Not since Robert Duncan's Groundwork and before that William Carlos Williams' Paterson has New Directions published a long poem as important as Coming to Jakarta."

The most recent issue of Chicago Review (44:3 & 4) features a special section on Scott's poem.

If anyone needs directions, more information, etc. feel free to e-mail me.

Devin Johnston

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Chicago Review
The University of Chicago
5801 South Kenwood Avenue
Chicago IL 60637
ph/fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

813. Karen Kelley
Re: what isn't going to go onto the paper
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> I don't know anyone who sits down to write a poem > thinking about what isn't going to go onto the paper.

That's exactly what new workshoppers do. And for a Pinsky- (and his ilk) induced reason: They see something like the NYRB Pinsky & figure from the prestigiousness of the mag that the poem must be "good." But they also sense something's missing (duh...passion, engagement, etc.)--so lots of people go along thinking good poetry is a kind of bland hole, sensitively rendered.

↑ Index

814. J Kimball
Deepening tolerance
Tue 24 Nov 1998

slogan-free poetics

↑ Index

815. Tom Beard
Resumes & typography
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> 5). My current work-in-progress is (so far) entitled "_Times Roman_ vs. _Palatino_: A Study of the Influence of Fonts on Acceptance Rates at Leading Literary Journals, 1985-Present." (I could really use your thoughts on this one!)

Actually, this doesn't sound too far away from something I'm working on: the use and significance of typography in literary journals & books. Not so much on the conscious use of layout by the poet, but on the decisions & assumptions made by editors.

Here at least, literary journals & small presses tend to fall into two camps:

1) Traditional "fine printing", "proper" typography: Garamond/Bembo/Minion/Baskerville/Bodoni, with small caps, old-style figures, ligatures etc. Chiefly from University presses, or those who want to be University presses.

2) Anti-slick, we-don't-give-a-fuck-how-it-looks, "anti-" typography: Times/Arial/Courier, layout according to Word's defaults. Either from those whose knowledge & resources truly don't allow for typographic niceties; or from those who are using this look as a conscious signifier for cheapness, urgency and the separation of form from content.

What's interesting is that no-one (with a few exceptions, such as "The Pander", which is a more general arts/culture/politics magazine) is aiming for a potential third approach: a consciously-designed "magazine" look, rather than either the linearity of an academic journal or the "Word default" look. It seems that layered type, Emigre fonts, blurring the line between type & image, and all the other tropes of contemporary design are reserved for skateboarding magazines and annual reports.

Another possible approach is represented by Alan Loney's "A brief description of the whole world". As an A4, photocopied, stapled mag, it has some of the elements of the "antislick" look. But since contributions are photocopied as is, there has been the opportunity for writers to control the look of their own pages. There's a lot of Times in there, as one might expect, but also a lot of visual work. Tony Green, John Geraets (are you still on the list, guys?) and Alan Brunton have played around with typefaces & sizes; Wystan Curnow photocopied maps & telephone books; Michele Leggott has a subtle approach to leading and placement; others have used dot-matrix printers; and I've done a bit with Freehand and photocopiers. Interestingly, Loney's own editorials have been in justified Palatino: I would have expected Kis-Janson or perhaps Electra.

Anyway, while Gabriel intended it as a joke, there _is_ a lot to read into something like the choice of typeface. Fonts signify. If anyone has any examples from the US (or elsewhere) that choose other paths, I'd love to know.

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

↑ Index

816. Keith Tuma
Camp R(I)P
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Michael writes:

> *Keith, don't tell me you didn't recognize this final line of mine below as tongue in cheek? Ain't I adressing your request for "some wit with the venom"? And, respectfully, did you read the rest of my post? I have in fact read von Hallberg's book as well as Pinsky's "Situation" albeit a while ago now. And, as I said about young readers, the resourceful reader can like almost anything b/c reading is a creative act: von H is one of these resourceful readers to be sure. I can do a lot with Pinsky myself, though in most cases I end by questioning his merit.*

Well, Mike, my apologies if I DID misread the tone, certainly not impossible. Along with the passage I excerpted yesterday, it was your reference to "little Bobby Pinsky" that I took to be condescending and, moreover, exactly the kind of rhetoric that defeats your good purposes. Yes I did read the rest of the post; I prefer the remarks above and those that followed. And I have no doubt that you've read lots there at Penn (I think you're there) with Bob P and Al F and what sounds like a lively community.

Mark, quoting one of my cheesier sentences, writes:

> I'm with Ron Silliman when he says that he finds it important to read poets in the other so-called camp.
>
> Well, this is true, but i'm becoming increasingly bemused by the repetition of this banality....
>
> *Are there people on this list who have not read widely in all types of poetry, including the most dominant workshop/poet laureate modes????*
>
> No doubt there are some, though i wonder if there quite as many as these schoolmasterly admonitions assume....

I'd call attention first to the "so-called," omnipresent and weak academicism that it might be, and maybe the typing should have landed it before "other." And just as Robert Creeley is fond of Hank Williams, I'm rather fond of banalities as they stagger through permutational forms and performance. Otherwise, why would I remain on this list and suffer its eternal return? (My first Poetics List statement on this matter can be found on the bottom of Jed Rasula's Wax Museum, page 339. I was 12 years old when I wrote that, and now I am 87.) As for the "schoolmasterly," will you please put that on letterhead and mail it to my department so that they will recognize that their apathy and/or befuddlement about my various activities derives from their failure to recognize that they have an F. R. Leavis in their presence?

Jonathan,following Mark, writes:

> Banality it is, with the added implication, almost comical, that there are only 2 "camps"--us and them. I think Mark is right that most of us have, at one time or another, read a wide variety of poets. In my misspent youth I used to read Josephine Miles, Howard Nemerov, Seamus Heaney, Anthony Hecht, John Betjeman, Robert Bly, W.S. Merwin, Louise Gluck, Louis Simpson, John Berryman, just about anyone in the Norton anthology of Modern Poetry. I "studied" writing with Karl Shapiro and Thom Gunn as an undergraduate. I guess it would be possible now, for a young person who happened to get hooked up with an avant-garde mentor early on, to bypass a lot of the mainstream or academic tradition, in which case this banality--"you really should check out Lowell and Auden"--would have some meaning.

That's a stellar list, you're right, though there are poems by several of these folks I'd give to any student about to be brainwashed by me. But what I find interesting is the self-recrimination and the scare quotes (maybe) around "studied." Is this meant to suggest that you learned little or nothing of value from Shapiro and Gunn? I also refer you to the "so-called" re "camps." If it seemed so, I surely did not mean to imply that there are only two camps out there. From a certain perspective, there are of course infinite differences among "us." And then from other perspectives--let's say those informed by Pierre Bourdieu maybe (Hello David Kellogg)-- I'm sure that the differences and alignments usually referred to when poets such as Howe and Pinsky are contrasted and not "threaded"-- as in my first post on this matter--resemble bowlers choosing between red and blue balls. And so on and so on. I am not going to commit sociology today.

KT

↑ Index

817. Tom Beard
the first person (to get laid)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

> "there is only one reason a guy dances in public -- he's trying to get laid."

Hey, don't knock it, it works!

(or at least it used to - these days I just get arrested)

But seriously, Eliza, though you are being a little reductive, it could be a useful reduction. Many (if not all?) writers consider the image that their writing might give their readers, at least in the back of their mind. Perhaps one of the more common impressions that poets (often, but not entirely, male) are trying to give is, I admit, "I'm sensitive and intelligent, so please sleep with me".

Here are some other messages that various poets send out:

- "I'm witty and charming, so please invite me to your dinner parties."
- "I'm a double-hard bastard, so don't fuck with me."
- "Hey look! I've read Derrida!"
- "I'm thoughtful and accessible and comforting, so please make me Laureate."
- "Ha, no-one's done _this_ before!"
- "I've got a nice garden full of nice flowers, and a nice house full of nice cushions."
- "If you'd had a proper education, you'd be able to read Provencal and Sanskrit too."
- "I exist, and I have a point of view that's worth reading."
- "I'm such a genius (Byron & Ginsberg & Jim Morrison all rolled into one) that I don't need to revise or edit."
- "If I use 'sd' and 'thru' and 'cld', you might think I was at Black Mountain."
- "I write about drugs & television, so I'm not a boring middle-class fart like you."

Exercise for the reader: match these up to poets you know.

> we both discussed the navel-gazing feel of poems constantly fixated on "I..I..I"

I agree, this gets dull..dull..dull. But I think that this is _the_ reason that a lot of people start writing poetry, at least for those without a literary background. Not out of narcissism (many won't even show their poems to anyone else), but because they want to validate and express their experiences. One hopes, however, that if they continue to write, their writing will go beyond "expression" towards a thoughtful exploration of experience/emotions, and how the act of writing can shape experience.

There's another good reason to "fixate on 'I'": the sense of I-ness is a bloody important fact of our lives. Consciousness & subjectivity are worth exploring. It could be argued that Langpo's mission to deconstruct the unified subjective "I" of lyric poetry is itself an obsession with "I..I..I". The deafening absence of "self" underscores it's importance. I know that a poem of mine where I intentionally avoided all use of personal pronouns (no "I", "you", "we", "they") ended up being one of the most intensely personal that I'd ever written.

Of course, it's not the exploration of selfhood that you're attacking: it's the unexamined "I" or workshop poetry. One might write a poem full of "I" and still challenge received notions of I-ness (Creeley; Rimbaud's "I is an other").

The poetics and politics of personal pronouns seems endlessly fascinating. The pronoun of choice among the local workshop crowd (otherwise known as the VUP mafia) is "you": "You walk/beside water. Your/mouth is full of song." To me, it makes everything sound like a choose-you-own-adventure book: the Sundaystream crowd complain that it makes everything sound detached and bloodless. It's probably the result of wanting to be impersonal, but not wanting to use the word "one" because it makes one sound like Prince Charles.

Someone in a workshop once told me off for using the word "we" in a poem. She claimed that it was arrogant, the royal "we", and that "you can only speak for yourself". It made me think, but I still use "we" quite a lot, because it allows a subtle ambiguity of speaking positions: an intimate speech between friends or lovers; satirically speaking for one's generation; an almost mythological mode of speaking for the species; and yes even the royal "we" at times.

> he went on to describe the bravado, grope after rhythm, intent expression, bizarrely focused energy, of... well, of a guy trying to attain some of the proverbial.

To me, this sounds like a description of some fairly interesting poetry...

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

↑ Index

818. Mark Weiss

Re: one trip ticket to New American Poetry of the 80's/90's/forever?

Tue 24 Nov 1998

You're certainly to my mind describing the target group, a pretty flaccid group at best. But first person as criterion needs a little refinement. There's also "Of arms and the man I sing..." and "I saw the best minds of my generation..." and "My quietness has a man in it..."

At 06:30 PM 11/24/98 -0500, you wrote:
>ok, a few months ago a friend of mine, c.e. chaffin ([redacted]) >gave me a whooping up about a pet literary bug of his which i am afraid may >have turned into a twainian "one trip ticket." i herewith pass it on in >hopes i will come out the tunnel on the other side unbeset.
>
>in summary that does no justice to c.e., he finds there to be a >prevailing mode in modern poetry of first person, intimate address.
>poems start off as if narrator addressing best friend over a half-full >beer glass and launch, forthwith, into personal woes. he has begun to >find this annoying.
>
>i brushed it off with an "oh c.e., what does it matter what case a writer >chooses for the narrator of her or his poem? poems throughout history have >been written in the first person, adn addressed that way to the reader."
>c.e. was not convinced.
>
>i thought that was the end of it, a difference of opinion between >writing chums. but as i read many of the poems moving across my >screen, in zines, journals, anthologies, books, something began to >bite a path from my ear to my brain... i opened up a variant of this >discussion with another chum, r.j. mccaffery ([redacted]).
>we both discussed the navel-gazing feel of poems constantly fixated on
>"I..I..I" and how poem ABOUT ANOTHER PERSON, i.e. telling their story, >felt less neurotic and self-absorbed, both as writer and as reader.
>
>now during current discussion of robert pinsky, that bug in my ear set to >whining in a high pitched mosquito noise. i got out my New American Poets >of the 80's to read what there was of pinsky, as well as a couple of other >sources. lo, it was the "I."
>
>but even worse, the poem groupings excerpted of larry levis, mark >doty, micheal burkard, mark jarman, denis johnson, robert long, steve >orlen, greg pape, bin ramke, michael ryan, micheal sheridan, john >skyoles, gary soto, maura stanton, david st. john, james tate, richard >tillinghast, leslie ullman, michael waters, roger weingarten, .. god, >i'll stop now. but the poems in their section, poems i've been >reading from that era, poems i'm seeing lately, seem, way too often, >to be these extended "here let me tell you about my sad self, my >precious observations, my sensitive soul, what makes me feel X Y Z" or >these vague, I Am Pronouncing epics wrapping the whole world up in a >ball, covering it with tin foil, and shooting it into the corner in >front of what is supposed to be an admiring crowd.

>
>in short, they began to sound, to me, like a guy trying to get laid.
>
>i admit, the latter image came from yet another source -- a friend saying
>"there is only one reason a guy dances in public -- he's trying to get >laid." and he went on to describe the bravado, grope after rhythm, intent >expression, bizarrely focused energy, of... well, of a guy trying to >attain some of the proverbial.
>
>and there is a long history, in poetry, of guys writing the things because >they are trying to get laid. and of course, anthologies reflect the neurosis >of the anthologists.
>
>but listafarians, is it just me? yes, pinsky has gone on to write >many other poems sounding nothing like an attempt to talk someone into >the horizontal. but don't they, often, sound like, well... isn't it >sort of an Iowa Writers Workshop sound, the earnest tortured and >sincere confessional (and almost all of the writers in New American >Poets ... seem, one way or another, to have an affiliation with Iowa >W.W. All of them have an academic affiliation. most of them are >male. doesn't that seem pretty fucked up for an anthology purporting >to represent the best new american writing of hte 80's? and both of >the anthologizers, jack myers and roger weingarten, included >themselves! -- THAT to my mind is really self serving to the limit.)?
>isn't writing, from late 60's on, way too caught up in these personal >monologues? i used to love sexton -- haven't dared open up one of her >books lately... maybe one of the really experimental (and refreshing) >things about langpo/pomo writing (and it's offspring) is a focus on >something other than the earnest "I"?
>
>r.j. had been particularly tryuing to sell me on thomas lux and stephen >dobbyns. neither wallows in the earnest "I" -- they stick out in this >anthology, for example, like anything.
>
>comments? slingshot shots? flowers? horrified silence (elliza SHUT >UP!)?
>
>will someone, in four months, write with an insane twinge "one trip >ticket, one trip ticket... all that earnest "I" can't they talk about >something besides themselves or those sophmoric My View Of Life >essays?"

>
>shall i inflict quotes on you all to back this up -- i'm not sure i >could stand it.
>
>e
>
>

↑ Index

819. George Thompson
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I agree with Marjorie Perloff that it is time to put this thread to bed. I just want to say that the subject heading that I used in my last post was an act of carelessness, a typical misuse of the automatic REPLY button, and was not intended as an act of indirect bashing [just in case it may have appeared to be].

Putting aside the messy rhetorical baggage that attached to the term tolerance, once the thread got rolling, I at least have no problems with what she has argued for, except that I think that there is a default [therefore automatic] definition of poetics which much of the list operates with, and which I think is too narrow [or: too us vs them]. I say this as someone who is not involved in any of the camps [I gave up camping to study Sanskrit].

As for the list's discourse hitting a real low here, I have to agree with Henry Gould: I've seen it MUCH lower than this [for example sll the sordid things that Bromige and Bowering do, and have been doing for years apparently, to their ex-friend Eliza McGrand (not her real name): I don't know why the list, never mind poor Eliza, puts up with them].

I send this in the dark

GT

↑ Index

820. BETSY ANDREWS
Re: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Tue 24 Nov 1998

Amen to David Kellog's post! As a Jew and a lesbian, I really resent the suggestion that tolerance is mediocre or unnecessary or apolitical or dirty or any other negative. Tolerance is just about the most we expect of each other in a complicated world. As for the entire thread, critique masks elitism masks insecurity. Forgoodness sakes, people. There is enough room out there in the world for zillions upon zillions upon zillions of words. Shouldn't we be HAPPY that there is a greater interest in poetry in this country? Shouldn't we THANK slam poetry for that, you snobs? Sure, there are the economic and political issues of who gets published and who gets the jobs, but everyone is guilty of playing that game, and you never know who will rule the next hegemony. (Everyone might benefit from re-reading Czeslaw Milosz. You know, the ironic question, "What is poetry which does not save nations or people?") For instance, all you "experimental" 'zine editors won't be publishing any progenies of Pinsky or any slam poets, no matter how talented they may be and how moving their work might be. This thread has been a turf battle blown up into a jargonistic farce. No one has absolute authority over aesthetics. Not even you all. In the name of bad taste, I leave you with a poem about my lover's ass:

BEHIND

You. Vista.
Past the blue chewed frisbee and sleeping dog what an ass in the air says to me about composition the drive toward regularity, formality, toward heaven such simple material inflated, dialogic relentless choral couplets ballade in perfect rounds spondee with caesura the conspicuous 3rd eye in the boom-boom thrust toward godhead we make like the divine molding animal crackers Polly wants a...Polly wants a...Polly wants it perfect choicest cut but get closer and the almost imperceptible assymetry unfolds something in the air about the form is slightly off on the swells a tiny shark yawns inky blue persuasion old tattoo human cant the difference between rhyming and poetry is this:
hair hemorroid pimple pock and the acrid open moment of one's wanting still and all the 3rd eye winks the new day dawns the sharp sweet mess of it-- so human so actual-- unknots

anti-vanguardist, betsy

> From: David Kellogg <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
> Date: Monday, November 23, 1998 9:22 AM
>
> OK, I've got a big stake in this, as those who've read my work know.
>
> In these Southern parts, I hear a lot of anti-tolerance talk, of the > following type: "They don't want me to just tolerate their perverted, > ungodly lifestyle, they want me to accept it and promote it."
>
> Actually, tolerance would be just fine.
>
> Marjorie wants to separate political from aesthetic tolerance, but don't > think such separation can or should be done, esp. since the operations of > the "academic" (which as Ron pointed out, has yet to be unpacked) mean that > poetry evaluation and poetry jobs go uneasily together.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew may be right that the word "tolerance" is both negative
and > vacuous, but our whole language for dealing with these issues is bankrupt
--
> whaddaya wanna do, not talk about it?
>
> Jonathan, if Pinsky is a "mediocre poet," are those who actually enjoy his > work mediocre readers? Mediocre intellects? Mediocre people?
>
> I'm with Susan Schultz (hi Susan!) -- I'll passionately advocate my tastes,
> but I'm not about to speak for another.
>
> Cheers,
> David
>
~~~
~~~

> [redacted] Durham, NC 27708
> FAX [redacted] http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg/

↑ Index

821. Mark W Scroggins
Re: enough already!
Tue 24 Nov 1998

In re Carlo's post-- yes, Alphaville's a pretty damn good used bookstore, with good prices to boot. And without even buying a book, you can get roundly abused by the owner! (who says there's no pleasure involved in reading poetry? beats out "La Nouvelle Justine: The S&M Cafe" [motto: "If you have reservations, stay home"] any day!) Mark S

↑ Index

822. Ramez Qureshi
Re: Enough already. /Bad news about "The Paper."/p.s. Marjorie Perloff was wrong
Tue 24 Nov 1998

I've stayed away from this discussion, being but a grad student who tweaked his way into a creative writing program that dosn't make you write blank verse. I've recently been saved from the likes of Lowell and Auden, and can't get enough of Pound on down. This said, "The Paper" (The New York Times of course) ran a review today on Heany's selected poems along with Venthelaw's new book on Heany, calling her America's "most astute and erudite poetry critic." Now, the Times will publish ten full reviews a year max on poetry books in their Sunday review, but very very rarely will they give one a review as part of their daily regimen. Which is only to show just how entrenched the "establishment" is, when the likes of Pinsky's fellow unextraordinary Bostonian gets reviewed. On the other hand, I find Stevens in Rothenberg's _Revolution of the Word_ anthology, and isn't ol' Harpo Bloom one of Ashbery's strongest promoters? Like Perloff I like Montale, and isn't Montale published (his late work) by New Directions? The penultimate issue of The NYRB may have had its Pinsky poem, but the current one has an article on Pessoa, not in the American avante-garde tradition (and yes the review was by Merwin), but he does get discussed on this list. I don't know if i've just said anything, but anyway. Why is it that i'm not alone in prefering the American avante-garde and the foreign giants? (Examples of the latter include not just Pessoa and Montale, but recent NYRB reviewees Milosz, Zagajewski, and Venclova) Heany excepted, along with Brodsky. Whatever.

P.S. Marjorie Perloff was wrong. I "need" poetry
-RQ

↑ Index

823. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap
poetics and the holidays (we pass)
Tue 24 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

>

HAPPY HOLIDAYS
(for fifty-thousand received and sent E-mails)

> the shot--lands--I'm sure
> in the "best part"
>
>
>
> ps: wonderful how a friendship is--now--e- > maild--and electronic--like Whitman's tele- > graphic line--we are > McLuhan's only
> children--now
> that we "know" what we know " "
> about the world and each other > through the wires. Too, poetry > is slow, as money is > costly to print
> the faces on those bills
> unseen and read. Poetry > is "useless", finally, and > politically, I believe, a trap--all > those who feed others
> know the poem is > an ornament--blast-pheme
> he said, a poet
> streaking across the sky
> like some ram-
> jet of old--but really--
> if you were hungry you
> wouldn't go to > college, would you? trans- > formed--the ballet--into > wings--not yet
> transmited, and yet,
> Ballanchine died

> for want of > nothing less.

by swan.prod.itd.earthlink.net (8.8.7/8.8.5) with SMTP id QAA13062;
Tue, 24 Nov 1998 16:27:54 -0800 (PST)
Date: Wed, 25 Nov 1998 04:32:25 +0000
From: Todd Baron /*/ ReMap <[redacted]> Organization: Re*Map
To: Hoa Nguyen <[redacted]>
CC: [redacted]
Subject: Re: as if I were References: <[redacted]>

the shot--lands--I'm sure
in the "best part"

All love to you, two, too

Todd B.

ps: wonderful how a friendship is--now--e-maild--and eletronic--like Whitman's telegraphic line--we are McLuhan's only
children--now
that we "know" what we know " "
about the world and each other through the wires. Too, ReMap is slow, as money is costly to print
the faces on those bills
unseen and read. Poetry
is "useless", finally, and politically, I believe, a trap--all those who feed others
kow the poem is an ornament--blas-phere
he said, a poet
streaking across the sky
like some ram-
jet of old--but really--
if you were hungry you
wouldn't go to college, would you? transformed--the ballet--into

wings--not yet
transmited.

----------12071CE04736--

↑ Index

824. J Kimball
Deepening name-calling
Wed 25 Nov 1998

gravy-free poetics

↑ Index

825. Emily Lloyd
I ain't for Iowa
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Ach, everybody off Marjorie. It was a low dig, but it was a good dig, & I see no reason why someone with power & publications shouldn't be permitted to win a cat fight. To say "We expected better of you, Marjorie" and not to say the same to Gabriel seems a ridiculous reinforcement of exactly what most here are attempting to argue against: the notion that one is superior simply because one's got more pubs. It's just that here you're talking moral superiority. WHY would you expect better of Marjorie? It's as if people are secretly glad to have a popularly accepted reason to slap her wrist...a chance to write "I told off MARjorie PERloff today!" in their journals.

So yeah, enough. We could've cornrowed Lucie Brock-Broido's hair in the time this thread's taken.

Eliza--on the "I" thing: it seems "I"s often become the scapegoat for plain old self-indulgent writing that assumes the poet's life &/or thoughts are inherently interesting. "I" comes to stand for "egocentric." Perhaps the pronoun lends itself to easy abuses, but I disagree with those who assume it necessarily leads to them (or that a poem lacking an "I" can't be at least as self-indulgent). It was hard not to crack up when, on the first day of a course called "Open Poetics," the professor--w/all the passion of Garbo--cried, "We must get RID of the I that PLAGUES us!!!" And the "I" gets identified with "academic" poetry, yet it pops up in many of Bernstein's & Mayer's infamous exercises; Joe Brainerd's never taken to task; Hejinian's _My Life_ isn't accused of assuming LH's life is inherently interesting. Why? I guess because it's so damn good. It lances those nasty PLAGUE buboes.

What of poems that go beyond the elevation of the poet's private life to the elevation of the poet's private jokes? Is this even more self-indulgent? It would seem so. Yet in Stein it works (for me) rather charmingly. But when Rod Smith writes, in _In Memory of My Theories_, "Why does Ron Silliman hate Shakespeare?...Do a fractal of it"? Here it's not only the poet's life, but Ron Silliman's (eek! another poet with another life!) taste in literature that's assumed inherently interesting. I ain't saying I didn't laugh when I read it.

Just that "I" doesn't stand for "Iowa."

Speaking of--what does Iowa stand for, now that Hejinian's teaching there? I for one inherently interesting one am now regretting having steered clear of it (for the reasons you mentioned) when searching for MFA programs to join and drop out of...(oy! for Lyn, I might've stayed)...

em

↑ Index

826. david bromige

6). My only book thus far is _A New Definitive and Thoroughgoing Late-Bakhtinian, Post-Lacanian, Somewhat-Foucauldian, and Certainly-Deleuzean Creative Rereading of David Bromige's Tight Corners and What's Around Them._

Wed 25 Nov 1998

While I realize Gabriel spoke in jest, no doubt somewhat at random, & even perhaps in disparagement ("Omnibus P. Poppycock" would scarcely write anything worthwhile), like Tom Beard with his typography project [which I find fascinating] I feel that my 1974 book, _Tight Corners_ , would yield much to such a reading. I had not read any of those authors at that time, so nothing of theirs is woven in; discounting trickle-down and cultural synchronicities, then, the tight corners would prove perfect vehicles for projection.

I say everything you're thinking. I have no thoughts of my own.

David

↑ Index

827. George Bowering

re : tolerance Bowering-style

Wed 25 Nov 1998

> You _are_ kidding, aren't you!
> Brahms

No, honest. I never heard of those people. I wondered whether they had been heard of by others, or just the person who mentioned them.

But then people here have been talking about one Pinsky--as if anyone had ever read Pinsky. I never have. I dont know anyone in Canada who has read Pinsky. But I know 100 Canadians who have read Tom Raworth.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

828. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: enough already!

Wed 25 Nov 1998

Another Henry misread screed. Nada by fiat.--cp Henry Gould wrote:
>
> I love the header for this thread. Especially around Thanksgiving.
> No Mom, I DO NOT want any more jellified squash! Enough already!
>
> Okay, some sociology before pie. Rules for research:
>
> 1. Do not blame the established digestive tract for the lack of Vitamin > Experimental. Zukofsky had sex appeal - he was just too hypochondriac > & didn't get around enough. Typical introvert.
>
> 2. Do not measure literary popularity in terms of acid relief medication.
> Do not misjudge the general public. Regular peeples have enough poetry > in their lives - that's why they don't take any book pitches seriously.
> That's why there were all these angsty "I"s hanging around the singles > bars - it was a tough scene. Casanovas are a dime a dozen - but Masters & > Johnson appear just once in a generation.
>
> 3. Book people want to change the world through books because books > are their world. Same deal with poets. In modern times everybody > understands revolution - it's like the neighborhood Sunday riot - > very few understand the good life. And I'm not talking barbecues, > daquiris and Caribbean tub-time. Thomas More wrote Utopia as a farce.
> That's why we're always talking sociology on this list, power relations, > rather than the individual achievements & skill & marvels of particular > poets & poems. Nobody's doing their homework. The high point of this > thread was when Mike Magee pointed out the too-obvious cops from Emerson > in Pinsky's poem. I don't know where he got that from but SOMEBODY's > reading poetry. The cure is obvious - do your homework & write good > indie-crit.

>
> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

829. miekal and
Nedge
Wed 25 Nov 1998

What's Nedge? Why should its mailbox be full? What kind of word is it anyway?

↑ Index

830. Joe Brennan
Re: enough already!
Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

as someone who actually frequents alphaville on a regular basis -- it's a terrific bookstore -- I've never seen carlo parcelli insult anyone who didn't insult him first, nor do I know anyone who's more passionate and involved with poetry then he is, and that includes those of us on this listserv. folks who suggest anything to the contrary simply don't know what they're talking about, which on this list is not all that unusual....

happy turkey day....

joe brennan

↑ Index

831. Henry Gould
Re: enough already!
Wed 25 Nov 1998

I love the header for this thread. Especially around Thanksgiving. No Mom, I DO NOT want any more jellified squash! Enough already!

Okay, some sociology before pie. Rules for research:

1. Do not blame the established digestive tract for the lack of Vitamin Experimental. Zukofsky had sex appeal - he was just too hypochondriac & didn't get around enough. Typical introvert.

2. Do not measure literary popularity in terms of acid relief medication. Do not misjudge the general public. Regular peeples have enough poetry in their lives - that's why they don't take any book pitches seriously. That's why there were all these angsty "I"s hanging around the singles bars - it was a tough scene. Casanovas are a dime a dozen - but Masters & Johnson appear just once in a generation.

3. Book people want to change the world through books because books are their world. Same deal with poets. In modern times everybody understands revolution - it's like the neighborhood Sunday riot - very few understand the good life. And I'm not talking barbecues, daquiris and Caribbean tub-time. Thomas More wrote Utopia as a farce. That's why we're always talking sociology on this list, power relations, rather than the individual achievements & skill & marvels of particular poets & poems. Nobody's doing their homework. The high point of this thread was when Mike Magee pointed out the too-obvious cops from Emerson in Pinsky's poem. I don't know where he got that from but SOMEBODY's reading poetry. The cure is obvious - do your homework & write good indie-crit.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

832. Randy Prunty

the power (or not) of pronouns

Wed 25 Nov 1998

I recently experimented with a poem in which I tried to go "over the top" with the use of "I". I was in every line. not easy to do. then I wrote a mirror poem by replacing every I, I'm, I'll with You, You're, You'll etc. Had a rather interesting effect, read really with a different vibe, and helped me figure out what I really wanted to do with the poem. I considered changing to "we", but by this time the experiment was over.

Randy

↑ Index

833. Gabriel Gudding

Re: 6). My only book thus far is _A New Definitive and Thoroughgoing Late-Bakhtinian, Post-Lacanian, Somewhat-Foucauldian, and Certainly-Deleuzean Creative Rereading of David Bromige's Tight Corners and What's Around Them._

Wed 25 Nov 1998

On Tue, 24 Nov 1998, david bromige wrote:

> While I realize Gabriel spoke in jest, no doubt somewhat at random, & even perhaps in disparagement ("Omnibus P. Poppycock" would scarcely write

No, David Bromige, I most emphatically NOT speak in disparagement.

How can I put this without sounding fawning: I. Fucking. LOVE. Your. Work.

Yours, Brenda Floribunda

↑ Index

834. Judy Roitman
Re: enough already!
Wed 25 Nov 1998

> it's true, Alphaville is a pretty good used bookstore. I've never spoken with the staff, though, so my taste has never been commented upon. nevertheless, I do read poetry for pleasure. I didn't know there was anything wrong with that.

Amen, and I read Susan Howe for pleasure and I'll bet most of the folks on this list do to.

The folks Carlo Parcelli is writing about don't read for pleasure, they read to have their prejudices confirmed. As against (to quote C.P.) "a natural affinity for texts that take me out of myself so I'm confronted with new worlds of information." Which doesn't necessarily mean a natural affinity for, say, Susan Howe (apologies should she be reading this for the way in which her name is ceaselessly invoked as an emblem), but at least an affinity for folks who pay attention to what they are doing and don't settle for the obvious. Which can be done within any poetic persuasion.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

835. Henry Gould
air for thanksgiving
Wed 25 Nov 1998

AIR FOR THANKSGIVING

I was just leaving our Little Olde Post Office here in Providence, to check as I do every day my little too-empty Nedge mail box (c'mon you snobs & snobbettes - send us some poems & reviews! Nedge ain't gliss but it's dirigible), medgitating and coditating on a previous message sent in which Henry claimed that the "parochial is the essence of world civilization" or some such thing, when Our Big Olde Postal Employee with the scraggly gray hair over ye Olde Bald Pate & the rubicund Falstaffian manner called out, "yeah, I'm going down to get some coffee & hang out with the POETS!! Hah ha hah!" Which caused the scrappy wee bantam-weight olde Chap he was serving to turn & say "Yes! You DESERVED that! Ha hah!" & dash out the door with Henry; this fellow, ye Olde Local Character RISD professor Providence-born- &-bred contributor to historical reminiscence columns of local paper English teacher jazz afficionado will-go-nameless literature lover shook my hand & re-introduced himself for the thousandth time as we strolled along ye Olde Sidewalk, past - a newly-vacant lot.

Not long before, a little TINY old red clapboard one-story one- person house had stood there, dwarfed by Burger King on one side & latest restaurateur-real-estate mafia (truly) ye Olde Campus Adjunct Parasite creation on the other. In that little old house lived quietly a little OLD African-American lady. Now dear reader you must understand that bellifluous Providence is a delicate diorama of Historical Preservation- Erasure, and this little old lady represented a very anomalous ungentrified holdover in that particular spot; she even played a bit part in Henry Gould's magnificent 2000-quatrain epic poem which takes place over a few blocks of prime Providence real estate. So Henry's ears pricked up when ye Olde Bantam Raconteur said: "yes, she's gone - remember the house there? I knew her - took a lot of photographs there - the nicest old lady - afraid toward the end she was being ripped off by her nurse attendant - and now she's gone - and I wanted that little house to be YOUR OFFICE!"

Henry was a bit puzzled by this remark until he realized ye Olde Prof was speaking poetically as he continued - "Brown should have bought that & put some mild harmless scholar in there to do their thing - that was the glory of Yale in the old days - but you know it was that mafia boy's doing, tearing it down - now it will be a parking lot - "

Henry spoke up tentatively - "Yeah, I was interested - put her in a long poem of mine - "

"Well now it's just a VOID - nobody will remember - it will be a PARKING LOT!"

Henry, trying to smooth things over, said, "Well, have a nice Thanksgiving" or some such poetic remark - the olde Prof said - "you too - what are you having? Not turkey, I hope!" Henry replied (honestly) "well... I don't know actually".

Spake the Prof: "ahh.. you ARE a poet! There are still POETS around! That's what a POET would say! Ha hah!"

And after they bade ye olde farewells, Henry felt a knot of bitterness in his belly, and realized... he was having NOTHING for thanksgiving - in fact, he'd just received it, in his solar plexus. And that departing olde bantam Rhode Island Red - HE was the poet - & Henry was just... the turkey. And the grass grew in the little square plot where the little red house where the little old black woman had lived, long ago, yesterday. Cowwamaunsch. Moshassuck. Cowwamaunsch.

↑ Index

836. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher so don't read this unless---
Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

well, just unless... i thought i'd try to get back to one loose end in the prior (i hope it's prior) and trying discussion re tolerance/intolerance, why i'd rather avoid those terms... reason is that they may well have broader cultural implications than they might appear to have (which are not about to be understood, pace gg's remarks, via antebellum romanticism, however defined)...

so for you trivia buffs out there, the following excerpt from david m. potter's _people of plenty: economic abundance and the american character_ (u of chicago p, 1954 originally---year before i was born---but the edition i'm quoting from is 1973))... potter's (dated as put forth yet still intriguing) thesis has to do with how the usa as a land o plenty (today we might say, represented as a land o plenty) has created institutions predicated on abundance... anyway, the following comes after a brief discussion of the levelling effect of radio soap-operas:

"In a sense---a negative sense---the desire to offend no one involves an attitude of what may be called 'tolerance.' As David Riesman tellingly remarks, the writer and broadcaster, addressing himself to the amorphous audience, does not know how the virus of indignation may be received, and he must therefore 'be preoccupied with the antibodies of tolerance.' But, clearly, this tolerance is, as the phrase implies, one of mental asepsis rather than one of mental nourishment. It deals with ideas not by weighting them but by diluting them. Tolerance once implied that the advocates of an idea might be heard without prejudice and judged on their merits, but this toleration merely implies that, since society will refrain from exercising the power to judge them, it will relieve itself of responsibility to hear them. It involves not impartiality of judgment but simply default of judgment." (186-7) i would argue that this particular postwar effect (still with us? resurrected of late?) accords nicely with jed rasula's premise in _the american poetry wax museum_ that the "age of sociology" provoked in poetry a formalist's formalism... of course the beats (e.g.) may be understood as rising in opposition to this---as risking offense---in part b/c of their associated theorizing (as rasula argues---though this latter point is in some sense more controversial)... and oh yes---i do believe the argument via broadcasting (potter eventually goes on to discuss advertising) is pertinent to other cultural forms...

in any case, one might conclude, like me, that "tolerance" as "default of judgment" leaves something to be desired... if this in fact does have something to do with (not only potter's) "american character" (albeit revised to incl. a half-century of rearticulation and modification), well then to ask in the late 90s that we be "tolerant" is at the very least a complicated request, complicated (for one) by one's sense of relative abundance perhaps (i.e., one's economic class perspective---whether one feels we can "afford" to be tolerant)...

ergo i'd rather simply avoid the term... but just so's i make mself remotely clear... for my part, i prefer to situate today's urgencies against the backdrop of more recent histories, if only b/c of the amplified nature of our public domain...

///

joe

↑ Index

837. miekal and
sorry, help
Wed 25 Nov 1998

CAN SOMEONE B/C ME WITH INSTRUCTIONS HOW TO SET DIGEST & THEN RESTORE IT LATER?

↑ Index

838. henry
Re: Nedge
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Hi Miekal - it's a poetry mag - comes out about every 9 months - tiny circulation - struggling to move beyond parochial-traditionalist-amateur status, but not struggling too hard - would be happy to send you a sample free if you send address - you probably know some of my biases already (I prefer Hart Crane & Wallace Stevens for example), but we have published people like Leslie Scalapino, Jacques Debrot, Wendy Kramer, Eileen Myles, & other explorers -

Nedge is a neologism born out of an acronym. Formerly Northeast Journal, an old RI litmag, which people would call NEJ. I turned it into a word. Was happy to learn it already was a word, sort of: mathematical shorthand for "number of edges".

- Henry

↑ Index

839. sylvester pollet
Re: Resumes & typography
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Tom, have you looked at NYQ (New York Quarterly)? ed. William Packard has been choosing different fonts for each poem for many years. I have my doubts about the results, but you should definitely take a look at what he does. It's still in that "linearity" mode, for the most part, I guess, but trying to move it. best, Sylvester

> What's interesting is that no-one (with a few exceptions, such as "The Pander", which is a more general arts/culture/politics magazine) is aiming for a potential third approach: a consciously-designed "magazine" look, rather than either the linearity of an academic journal or the "Word default" look. It seems that layered type, Emigre fonts, blurring the line between type & image, and all the other tropes of contemporary design are reserved for skateboarding magazines and annual reports.
>
> Anyway, while Gabriel intended it as a joke, there _is_ a lot to read into something like the choice of typeface. Fonts signify. If anyone has any examples from the US (or elsewhere) that choose other paths, I'd love to know.
>
> Cheers,
> Tom Beard.

↑ Index

840. Emily Lloyd bobbing for laurels
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Charles writes: and "Lyn Hejinian [should be] the poet laureate of the USA"

Oh, no. Oh, no no no. "Lyn Hejinian" rolls off the tongue so well that it'd be an acoustic tragedy if she changed her name to Robert. That's the prereq., yes? Sooner or later, if laureate pickers in motion tend to stay in motion, they've got to get to Creeley; let us give thanks for that.

em

↑ Index

841. henry
ye olde SORRY - delete
Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

sorry - classic backchannel should-have-been. HEY SEND NEDGE SOME WORK ANYWAY!!!! WE USE "FUNNY FONT" - AN ELASTIC ALPHABET COMBINING MANDARIN WITH STONE RUBBINGS FROM WAMPANOAG ROCK CARVINGS!!

↑ Index

842. Anya Lewin
IET details
Wed 25 Nov 1998

>X-Sender: [redacted]
>Date: Wed, 25 Nov 1998 16:01:31 +0000
>To: Anya Lewin <[redacted]>
>From: [redacted]
>Subject: IET details
>
>Greetings!
>
>Writing Research Associates UK / NL in association with the Utrecht School >of the Arts, NL and Dartington College of Arts, UK are pleased to announce:
>
>IN THE EVENT OF TEXT: EPHEMERALITIES OF WRITING >a second international symposium on writing & performance >Utrecht, Netherlands
>April 28 - May 2, 1999
>
>[PLEASE SEND REGISTRATION FORM (see below) TO: <[redacted]>]
>
>'In the Event of Text' is a 5-day symposium on contemporary strategies in >performance and writing with intensive workshops led by artists of >international reputation and working with writing in various media.
>
>The four 3-day intensive workshops run in parallel, are based in practice, >and will be concerned with ephemerality, exploration and process in >differing media. the contents of the workshops feed into the 2-day >conference weekend and provide a convergence of issues and debates in >contemporary performance writing. Workshops will be lead by * Jason E.

>Bowman (visual artist), * Paul Pourveur (playwright), > * Leslie Hill & Helen Paris (digital artists) & * Sianed Jones (voice >artist). Further details of the workshops are available at ><http://www.hku.nl/events/iet> or on request by post) or by email (see >contact addresses below) from December 1998.
>
>
>The conference will include papers, presentations and panel discussions >around ideas of the ephemeralities of writing, and text as event. papers >will include recent work on tactical media * poetics * telematics * >authoring * post-dramatic texts * internet radio collaborations * text and >memory.
>
>'In the Event of Text' aims to explore, through work and discussion, the >ways in which writing can be seen to function as a time-based, transient, >ephemeral artform when played out in the context of different media and >environments. curated work will take place under the following broad >categories:
>
>* the disappearing text and contemporary live performance >* the dispersal of written material through new interactive and sonic media >* electronic writings, cybertext and hypertext >* the local sites of mobilised writing including poetic and book-based >practices
>
>Emphasis is placed on performances, installations, readings, open showings >and curated exhibitions as an integral part of the conference. A virtual >cybertext collaboration will be initiated by writer in residence John >Cayley. The first symposium in the series was held at Dartington, England >in April 1996. [See >http://www.dartington.ac.uk/Performance_Writing/perf_writing.home.html].
>The conference language will be English.
>
>Invited contributors include:
>* Fabienne Audéoud * Jason E. Bowman * Arnold Dreyblatt * David Garcia *
>Heidi Grundmann
>* Leslie Hill & Helen Paris * Sianed Jones * Kirsten Lavers * Hans-Thies
>Lehmann * Tertia Longmire
>* Jurrienne Ossewold * Paul Pourveur * Joan Retallack * Paul Sermon *
>Enno Stahl * Aaron Williamson

>
>Writer-in-Residence: * John Cayley
>Exhibitions Curator: * cris cheek
>Catalogue: * Sally Tallant
>
>Initiated & Organized by: * Ric Allsopp * Caroline Bergvall * Nirav Christophe
>
>Contacts: Conference website: http://www.hku.nl/events/iet * Conference
>email: [redacted]
>Conference contact address: IET, HKU Faculteit Theater, Janskerkhof 18, >3512 BM, Utrecht, NL.
>
>~~~

>* Dates: 'in the event of text' will open on wednesday 28 april at 12.00 >(registration 10.00-12.00) and finish on sunday 2 may at 18.00. *
>registration for conference only (friday 30 april - sunday 2 may) will be >between 17.00 - 18.00 on friday 30 april (conference begins at18.00).
>
>* Fees: fees include all conference events, performances and exhibitions;
>tea, coffee, lunch, and supper on friday 30 april only. accommodation is >NOT included.
>
> [ ] workshop & conference inclusive (5 days) NFL. 500 (£175)
> [ ] conference only (2 days) NFL. 250 (£90)
>
>* Workshop choice: (please indicate first & second choices)
>
>Workshop 1: Paul Pourveur [ ]
>Workshop 2: Leslie Hill & Helen Paris [ ]
>Workshop 3: Jason E. Bowman [ ]
>Workshop 4: Sianed Jones [ ]
>
>Early booking for workshops is advised as there is a maximum of 10 >participants per workshop
>
>* Accommodation & Travel: participants will need to arrange their own >accommodation and travel
>
>Please send * list of hotels and guesthouses [ ] * travel information
>[ ]
>
>* Food: lunch will be provided from wednesday 28 april - sunday may 2.
>supper will be included on friday 30 april
>
>* Specific Needs: Dietary requirements: * vegetarian [ ] *
>non-vegetarian [ ] * Other [ ]
>* Other needs: (please specify) [
>
>* Payment: Payment in full should be made by April 1st EITHER by transfer >to Postbank No. 2354345 in name of 'HKU/Theater Utrecht' mentioning 'IET' >OR by UK or NL bank cheque/ Eurocheque/ International postal or money order >made payable to 'HKU/Theater Utrecht' and sent to address below.
>
>Nirav Christophe, In the Event of Text, HKU Faculteit Theater, Janskerkhof

>18, 3512 BM, Utrecht, NL
>tel. 0031 30 [redacted], fax. 0031 30 [redacted].
>
>[PLEASE SEND REGISTRATION FORM (see above) TO: <[redacted]>]
>
>END
>
>~~~~~~~~~~~~
>Writing Research Associates, UK
>Amberleigh, East Allington, Totnes, >Devon UK. TQ9 7RD
>tel. 0044 (0)1548 521436 >   0044 (0)1803 861631
>fax. 0044 (0)1803 866053
>email. [redacted]
>www. http://huizen.dds.nl/~sdela/wra
>
>Caroline Bergvall
>Performance Writing, Director
>Dartington College of Arts
>Totnes, Devon TQ9 6EJ, England
>
>
>

↑ Index

843. Maria Damon
Re: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

coming late to this and tried to stay out of it. my tendencies as you know are toward the michael bibby end of the pole, though i like very much marjorie AND robert von hallberg as colleagues. and this more i have to say about marjorie's post. i've learned not to mind, to even appreciate, poets' strong likes and dis-likes in other poetry. but to blame the proliferation and hegemonic popularity of poets like PINSKY on MULTICULTURAL TOLERANCE, for Godsake. Methinks someone slipped up here. Is affirmative action (which has certainly resulted in OUR being as well treated as we are, Marjorie, like it or not) really responsible for the popularity of poets like Robert Frost, Robert Hass, Robert Pinsky and all those other crusty, fusty Roberts that everyone oohs and ahhs over? Did folks really die in the 1960s and 70s, shot by police in their sleep or as they worked out in the prison yard, so that Black studies programs etc could be established, living conditions improved, infant mortality curbed, and the ROBERT Barons put in power? i mean, puh-leeze. perhaps "hordes of foreign immigrants" are responsible for the current impeachment proceedings. perhaps we should abdicate our right to vote and to hold property and to be gainfully employed in a manner commensurate with our talents and aspirations so that we can get Susan Howe declared poet laureate. it seems to me that multicultural tolerance has done a great deal more good than harm in the academy, in the poetry scene, and specifically in unseating the status quo in the nexus between poetry and visibility/power.

↑ Index

844. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: pleasure

Wed 25 Nov 1998

O.K. Omnius Kollidimus. As Ollover Krumwall sayed when he slepped ueber his grannyamother. Kangaroose feathers. Who in the name thunder'd ever belevin you were that bolt? But you're holy mooxed and gaping up the wrong palce as if was seeheeing the gheist that stays forenenst, you blessed simpletop domefool! Where's your belested loiternan's lamp? You must lap wandret down the bluishing refluction below. Her trunk's not her brainbox. Hear where the bolgylines, Yseen here the puncture. So he done it. Luck! See her good. Well, well, well, well! O dee, O dee, that's very lovely! We like Simperspreach Hammeltones to fellow Selvertunes O'Haggans. --- Troping, Ix florted twad Musstus Isendhowitzers, slurping her his hemlook.---I kon lysurgically entfart that moul with my bouche, mordamn, he slaid.---Dinka, applead the laidy, but hausa dem ultratheen shempskeen connundumns.---Is that a quetschen, me poky hole?---No, an ardor, me pine noodle!---O, Maim me! --- I know I'm having a good time.---Carlo Parcelli

schuchat wrote
> I guess some people just don't know how to have a good time.
>
> R. Gancie/C.Parcelli wrote:
> >
> > Mr. Schuchat: Who said there was anything wrong with reading for > > pleasure. I was merely pointing out that when you attempt to browbeat a > > pinsky people into reading, say, Olson's Maximus, there usual response > > is along the lines that I only read peauxtry for pleasure. Then when I > > reply that I read the Maximus for pleasure, they look at me, as though > > I'm nuts or a liar. I'm gettin' a complex from it. Can you help > > me?---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

845. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT
Re: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Wed 25 Nov 1998

On Wed, 25 Nov 1998, Maria Damon wrote:

> poets' strong likes and dislikes in other poetry. but to blame the proliferation and hegemonic popularity of poets like PINSKY on MULTICULTURAL TOLERANCE, for Godsake. Methinks someone slipped up here.

I didn't read Perloff's mail as blaming Pinsky's popularity on multicultural tolerance. What I thought she said was that a NOMINAL multiculturalism has created a situation where tolerance has become an unquestionable virtue. And that few (academics) make a case for poetry they feel strongly for, or the value of which they believe in. Which includes, I guess, a multiculturalism that doesn't only pay homage to domestic mainstream poetic values.

Speaking as someone doing research on poetry I feel I have to ask if there aren't people on this list who read poetry not for pleasure mainly or for personal reasons, but because of a more general interest in language, reading and writing? Not that these interests exclude each other, but for me poetry is not something I usually feel strongly about or believe in. Nevertheless I have a great interest in poetry as a way of reading, & a possibility of self-reflective linguistic construction. Feeling strongly rarely enters the picture, but it's difficult to be interested in someone like Pinsky cause it's not construction work whereas Howe is.

Fred

↑ Index

846. Pierre Joris
Faraj Bayrakdar
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Now that the Pinsky/Howe thread (or rather the egoless egos's chewing of that bit of american fat) has spooled itself down & out ad nauseam, and just before every good thinking american poet gets down to his or her turkey or tofu thing, permit me to offer up a meager morsel for thought. Not about the lesser or greater redundancy of a laureate's work, or the lesser or greater hackademic acceptance or non-acceptance of an experimentalist's work, but about a matter of actual existence for a poet. How many on this so well-read & -spoken list know who Faraj Bayrakdar is?

He is a poet, like you and me, except he is a Libyan poet who has now spent all of the last 11 years in jail, goulaged for life by a repressive system for having publicly advocated democratic reform, asked for the liberation of all political prisoners, and — most likely the worst offense, because it did reach print — dared to publish and tried to keep going an independent poetry magazine. Repeated queries to the Libyan Embassy always gave him as "disappeared," until recently when Michel Deguy, Abdellatif Laabi and several other poets yet again went to the Libyan Embassy in Paris where they were told that Faraj Bayrakdar in fact ... "did not exist."

He does, and has managed to smuggle work out of jail, clandestinely published in Beirut and now in translation in France, under the title "Neither Dead nor Alive." Here a retranslation (after Abdellatif Laabi's French version) of "Portrait" -- that of a prison guard.

Malediction said to him: be and he was
His eyes, two blackened copper buttons
His nose, a badly drawn exclamation point
His mouth, a revolver's silencer
And in the detonator, his tongue
On his shoulders, peacock insignias bloated with defeats
His debts threaten the blood banks with all out bankruptcy
With his blind heart
he protects us
and with barbed wire
he guards us
His intentions are booby trapped and his smile announces carnage
For him death is wisdom's surrogate and hell justice's
Excuse me, I have to stop
I'm nauseous
Maybe he is not totally like that
And yet

(February 1993)

Pierre

--
==========

Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Through the living the road of the dead
— Ungaretti
==========

↑ Index

847. MAYHEW
Re: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Wed 25 Nov 1998

If feeling strongly about poetry rarely enters into the picture I would guess you're in a very small minority of subscribers to the list. We don't just "do research on poetry." And my interest in reading, writing, and language is not "general" but extremely specific. Poetry is at the center of this for me.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

848. schuchat
Re: pleasure
Wed 25 Nov 1998

I guess some people just don't know how to have a good time.

R. Gancie/C.Parcelli wrote:
>
> Mr. Schuchat: Who said there was anything wrong with reading for > pleasure. I was merely pointing out that when you attempt to browbeat a > pinsky people into reading, say, Olson's Maximus, there usual response > is along the lines that I only read peauxtry for pleasure. Then when I > reply that I read the Maximus for pleasure, they look at me, as though > I'm nuts or a liar. I'm gettin' a complex from it. Can you help > me?---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

849. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Thoughts on the Pinsky/Howe
Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

well i understand maria's taking marjorie up on the matter, and i would like to think that nobody here is advocating an anti-civil rights stance (whatever our diverse views may be as to how to go about it)... but inasmuch as i've already said what i had to say about m's post (which has been read reductively in at least two ways on this list), i'll let sleeping dogs lie...

an interesting synchronicity: i've just today rec'd my direct mail for the "tolerance challenge 1999"---incl. my "southern poverty law center/teaching tolerance decal," on the back of which the word is defined as follows:

tol*er*ance n: the capacity for or the practice of recognizing and respecting the beliefs or practices of others

(the american heritage dictionary)

of course they want me to help "reduce bigotry and prejudice in america by supporting the educational work of TEACHING TOLERANCE"... and so i am asked to enclose a tax-deductible contribution of ____ ($25 or more gets me their mag, a 22-minute "seeking justice" video, and a quarterly newspaper)...

now, assuming all of this is on the up & up (i think it is), there's nothing wrong with any of it, and in fact it sounds to me like it might raise some consciousness (as we used to say)...

but i don't think you can import this notion of "tolerance" into the poetry sphere(s) 'as is' (even setting aside the academic/job issues david k rightly raises)... lots of difficulties associated with doing so, no?... i would imagine, too, that corporate america (though of course it sometimes endorses good causes) would see nothing at all wrong with this effort... which might give us reason to consider that it's, well, not enough---not nearly so---not even from a teaching pov...

anyway///

best,

joe

↑ Index

850. Eliza McGrand
Re: I ain't for Iowa
Wed 25 Nov 1998

1) ms. perloff's dig WAS a low dig but, i think, not a good dig at all -- "someone wi power and publications" should certainly participate if she or he chooses in a debate, but it would be nice not to see list beset with catfights, and as to winning, no one wins them. all participants just end up looking bad. one can rebut without participating.

2) gabriel HAS, in fact, been multiply reprimanded both front and back channel. moreover, reprimand has moved to satire and even funpoking -- best methodology for removing "catfight" strain i've seen so far.

3) i WOULD expect betterof ms. perloff because i've not seen her fall into catfight before. and she hasn't ever before, that i've seen, tried to dis and squash people (at least on this list) based on publication/academic creditialing but has respected multiple, open, and slightly wild nature of this venue. if one wants venue where only published academicians allowed to talk, one can go to m.l.a., no? except there'd be considerably less to discuss there since good number of writers (remember writers? what all this is based on, the writers?) are not academicians, so they wouldn't be allowed to be published or discussed.

4) might i ask, could we not engage in pointless pejorative? -- i did not, as it happens, post as i did so that i could go home and write in my journal "i told m. perloff off today" as you suggest. i posted for exactly the reason i said i did, and a pretty good reason it was: iwas strongly distressed at an effort (however hasty and ill thought out and unmeant as i'm sure it was) by one with a fair degree of influence to coral the list over to only those who were published academic critics. it is not the "well published academic critic list," it is the "poetics list" and if you read the charter, it is MEANT to be open to all. and it DID appall me that this corraling came from ms. perloff particularly becuase as far as i've seen, she is last person to want to put down non academics and cut writers out of list. certainly it was a hasty moment of temper, and not unprovoked either. but precisely because she has that bit of influence, i wanted to be quick to add a voice to tip the balance so that list stays open to all.

5)re the "i" thing, of course there are always those who make any trend a vehicle for abominations -- you have only to look at polyester and leisure suits, or george bowering and raincoats, for examples. that goes w/o saying, surely. my point is, again, as i said: that once youget ticked onto this "i" business, there seems to be an awful lot of it, some emanating from people with talent and imagination that seems particularly ill-served by such dull dog tricks and self-indulgence.

the degree of tedium extant in elevation of one's private life, or jokes, to public writingt might, of course, be based in part on skill and in part on material. but surely it is also in part based on Glamour of writer. a truly charismatic writer might convince readers and critics to twist themselves into knots interpreting (consider charges of lit crit investing in the obscure because of High Priest(ess) positions that accrue). what about all those lesser, perhaps, or certainly duller janes and joes who plod along that path, though? or, perhaps, the dianthas and braemores who get kidnapped into being jane and joe dull? the young tender shoots in m.f.a. programs, the anthology readers, the followers of literary journals (in an effort to be published) who subsume their budding imagination to service of this "I I I" mode?

e

↑ Index

851. Anya Lewin

Re

Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

feeling strongly about a way of reading seems to me to be a perfectly fine entrance to poetry even if one has a passion about reading that touches on poetry w/o it being central - reading across mediums - reading as studying, making, writing, less borders. Personally I mostly make pictures sometimes moving ones and an involvement with poetry for me can be about a particular poem or writer but feels more like a general approach and that seems specific.

At 02:11 PM 11/25/98 -0600, you wrote:
>If feeling strongly about poetry rarely enters into the picture I would >guess you're in a very small minority of subscribers to the list. We don't >just "do research on poetry." And my interest in reading, writing, and >language is not "general" but extremely specific. Poetry is at the center >of this for me.
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas
>[redacted]
>[redacted]
>

↑ Index

852. Carl Wilson
Re: Faraj Bayrakdar
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Thanks, Pierre, for an antidote to all the ego-snipe of the past couple days... is there any org'd action people can take in support of Bayrakdar, aside from the usual contacting embassies/politicians etc.? (Is he a PEN case?)

carl patrick wilson

↑ Index

853. Karen Kelley
Re: the first person (to get laid)
Wed 25 Nov 1998

I dated a Vendler-lionized&anthologized Harvard poetry chair poet almost 15 years ago when I was in charge of the poetry section in a Harvard Square pre-computerized bookstore (btw, Carlo, the people who don't believe you read Olson for pleasure either think you're lying or, if they think themselves erudite, that you're trying to one-up them). Anyhow, this guy is one of the "sensitive" poetry types, but was a BOOR on our date, and he got really mad when I laughed because I realized that the reason he was so grudging about Ashbery winning a MacArthur grant was because he thought he deserved it more. Anyhow, it was a first and a last date, regardless the allure of his dancing.

A few years later in grad school, his name came up. One of my fellow students gushed, "Oooh, I love him." I told her I'd known him in Boston, and she asked, "Is he as sensitive as his poetry is??" I felt a little taken aback, it was clear she was invested in his being as sensitive as his poetry.

But what the hell, I told her the truth. She still wouldn't read Maximus, but it was a start.

Tom Beard wrote:

> "there is only one reason a guy dances in public -- he's trying to get laid."
>
> Hey, don't knock it, it works!
>
> (or at least it used to - these days I just get arrested)
>
> But seriously, Eliza, though you are being a little reductive, it could be a useful reduction. Many (if not all?) writers consider the image that their writing might give their readers, at least in the back of their mind. Perhaps one of the more common impressions that poets (often, but not > entirely, male) are trying to give is, I admit, "I'm sensitive and intelligent, so please sleep with me".

>
> Here are some other messages that various poets send out:
>
> - "I'm witty and charming, so please invite me to your dinner parties."
> - "I'm a double-hard bastard, so don't fuck with me."
> - "Hey look! I've read Derrida!"
> - "I'm thoughtful and accessible and comforting, so please make me Laureate."
> - "Ha, no-one's done _this_ before!"
> - "I've got a nice garden full of nice flowers, and a nice house full of nice cushions."
> - "If you'd had a proper education, you'd be able to read Provencal and Sanskrit too."
> - "I exist, and I have a point of view that's worth reading."
> - "I'm such a genius (Byron & Ginsberg & Jim Morrison all rolled into one) that I don't need to revise or edit."
> - "If I use 'sd' and 'thru' and 'cld', you might think I was at Black Mountain."
> - "I write about drugs & television, so I'm not a boring middle-class fart like you."

↑ Index

854. Pierre Joris
Re: Faraj Bayrakdar
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Carl Wilson wrote:

> Thanks, Pierre, for an antidote to all the ego-snipe of the past couple days... is there any org'd action people can take in support of Bayrakdar, aside from the usual contacting embassies/politicians etc.? (Is he a PEN case?)
>
> carl patrick wilson

Not sure yet what the best thing to do is from here. Not even sure if there's a Lybian Embassy in DC these days, depite the fact that the White House, State Department & Mil-Indus Complex have changed their Arab whipping boy this decade.

The French section of the Pen Club is aware & involved -- US Pen members should check with their various branches.

One thing we could do would be to bring out his book in English translation -- and use whatever power we may have together to try & raise awareness of his fate. And, even faster, one could start by creating a web-page, maybe on the epc (Loss? what you think?).

Could even, strange thought, be the occasion to test the mettle of our US Poet Laureate?!

And I'm sure you all will come up with more ideas.

Pierre

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Through the living the road of the dead
— Ungaretti
==========

↑ Index

855. Mark Baker
POETICS Readers Reading Right
Wed 25 Nov 1998

> The folks Carlo Parcelli is writing about don't read for pleasure, they read to have their prejudices confirmed. As against (to quote C.P.) "a natural affinity for texts that take me out of myself so I'm confronted with new worlds of information."

Poetry, it seems to some, is dangerous, best when the poet doesn't know what will happen, best of all for readers eager to have prejudices overturned.

More cliches from the Why Read Poetry lecturers.

I already know about the prejudices of the "folks" who don't know how to read right. Tell me some prejudices anyone here has had challenged by any particular poem. Does this mean some revelation like, "Before reading this poem-like thing, I thought I was an I, but now we know better"?

Mark Baker

↑ Index

856. Poetry Project
Kenward Elmslie
Wed 25 Nov 1998

A pre-Thanksgiving reminder:

On Wednesday, December 2 at 8 pm, the Poetry Project hosts a reading by

Kenward Elmslie

Tickets are $7, $4 students and seniors, free for members

Kenward Elmslie's books include the long-awaited and just-published _Routine Disruptions_ from Coffee House Press, which will be on sale the night of the reading at the Project. His other recent books include _The Champ_ and _Sung Sex_, both with drawings by Joe Brainard. Elmslie has written six opera librettos, including _Lizzie Borden_, and the book and lyrics for the Broadway musical _The Grass Harp_. He has toured widely with solo performances of his musical, _Postcards on Parade_.

For more information, call [redacted].

Happy Thanksgiving!

↑ Index

857. david bromige
happy thanksgiving wishes
Wed 25 Nov 1998

to Charles of Chax Press : George Bowering is already a noted tv and radio personality in B.C. (His voice, as Rachel, Maria, and Eliza can testify, is basso-Profumo). He would make a fine Poet Laureate, as he knows some French phrases as well as the farm argot of the dark interior of his home province. Added to which, he "_is_ " the David Letterman of Canada. The clincher : his book on all the Canuck Premiers is just about written. It will cement his national fame. I'm glad I will be able to say "I knew him when" to his fans as they push past me, Sob.

to Dale Smith of Chip N Dale's Strip Club Zine : Only kiddin', kid. It looked like the thing to do, at the time. Listen, you'll be one of the greats. You got under my skin, but I'll delete your f-c posts in future, for the sake of a peaceful List. Best o' luck, child of my loins! B-c when you find work, & an Aged P cottage behind your Inn of Happiness. All best to your wife, lucky lass.

to George Bowering, Bowering Manor, 29 The Winch, Grimsby : Now you're to be Poet Laureate of Canada and the Orcas Islands, George, you are simply gonna _have_ ta read those poets from the other side of the blanket. Honestly, it's not so bad--their poems are Evelyn Wood fodder, so not much time spent, and plus which (b) you find out something further about what makes the way _you_ write, distinctive. Well, anyway, the way _I_ write. Oops, but you had your Thanxgvng a month ago, eh? Never mind, then....Back to work!

to Carl Wilson, Yonge and Bathnite, Toronto : Welcome to the List! Some fine maiden posts. Excuse us while we baste the turkeys (it'll be a metaphor of what we do to one another's idols, on the List).

to Enery : Henry, on the bright side, you still know you _have_ your solar plexus. Knowing the sun rises and sets in one's own belly-button ain't so bad. Especially a "solar" as "plexus" as yours, man of many v(o)ices! May the coming year bring you more Indians than Puritans, and all your punkins be sweetie-pies!

to Gabriel Gudding : Well hey man my tight corners fuckin.love.you.too.

They had been preenin n primpin in the bathroom mirror all morning long. He had had to pee in the kitchen sink. Now he was relieved, but they looked ready to express himselves.

to David W. McFadden : where did you go, Dave? Come back to the List! You are sorely missed! Your fans are getting pissed!

Happy Thanxgvng everybody! Who cares what banks fail in Yonkers, long as you got that kiss that conquers! Answer : I do, I do!

Broadway Dave

↑ Index

858. Pritchett,Patrick

Kenward Elmslie at Naropa

Wed 25 Nov 1998

Kenward Elmslie paid us heathens in Boulder a marvelous visit this week past. I'm sorry to say I missed his performance at the Boulder Museum of Contemporary Art, but the raves I heard later were sky-high.

I did, however, catch him last Saturday in the Shamballa Room at Naropa. Although the name conjures up visions of celestial daiquiris (at least for me it does), the place, alas, is quite dry - not a waiter, much less a bar, in sight.

Kenward Elmslie is a very large and graceful man. He looks like a Roman senator -- in tennis shoes -- and carries about him his own private orb of gravitas. The reading began with works from his new collection _Routine Disruptions_, out from Coffee House. The deep, rich baritone of his voice, which at times verged on a basso profundo, belied the antic play of these marvellously witty poems - and at the same time lent them a graver hilarity. His first poem revelled in the bright obsessional aura of pop figures and icons like Marilyn Monore and James Dean even as it sharply critiqued capitalist pretensions and anxieties over identity. This was followed by a long and very powerful elegy for Joe Brainard that really defies any easy summary -- a deeply moving combination of wryly ironic recollection and honest pathos.

Next, Kenward burst into song. Now, these songs took me a bit of getting used to at first. Perhaps it was the pre-recorded accompaniment, with its electronic drum beat giving it a kind of cheesy Vegas patina, that put me off. But very soon I was completely charmed and won over by these delightful and witty numbers -- Cole Porter (or Sondheim) meets the NY School, ha-cha-cha. Kenward and Steven Taylor performed a number of duets together -- among them: "Propped Up In The Rain;" the rousing "Brazil" (originally from the musical of Capote's "The Grass Harp," and updated to include the latest in scnadla du jour); "They," a laugh out loud funny ditty on paranoia; and the bluesy "One Night Stand." By tunrs these songs were notable for their cheeky joie de vivre, their outrageous over-the-topness, and their sweet and oddly touching qualities.

Also of note: Kenward's solo rendition of "Original Parkway," a tour de force of first lines and an index of titles from a fictional work that creates a vivid and wickedly funny narrative of its author's obsessions and petty grudges. In a word, brilliant. As was the entire evening. Hearing Kenward Elmslie made me think that within every poet is a frustrated song-and-dance person waiting to burst into a tap routine while twirling a cane. Instead, as the Senator intoned, we became the next best thing - writers.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

859. Emily Lloyd
Re: I ain't for Iowa
Wed 25 Nov 1998

Eliza, peace! I typed "It's AS IF people [want to write such & such in their journals]"--I didn't even know you had a journal! It simply seemed as if many were adding, almost as afterthoughts to posts which weren't really conerned with the issue, "Bad Critic No Turkey" P.S.s to Marjorie.

Plus, I thought you wanted to initiate a discussion on the "I," that your post was an invitation. If I'd known you just wanted to be agreed with, I would've remained that less close to carpal-tunnel syndrome. (Not to be catty or anything. I don't appreciate [except on "Celebrity Death Match"] cat-fights, either. But I don't expect Marjorie to be wearing a "What Would Jesus Do?" bracelet any more than Gabriel, and I defend her right to defend herself at the level at which she was attacked. It's not like she can build a fort out of copies of her books and, once respectably inside, not feel blows).

Finally--goodness, I hardly think one slingshot aimed at GG foreshadows MP trying to knock us (I don't know if you're in that us, but I'm in that us) amateurs off the list. Nor do I think that if she were, we'd leave. Do we quit writing when our peers--or even we--get rejection letters? Am I seriously to take your earlier post as an upthrust fist for the proletariat?

Please, please, calm down, before either one of us gets accused of being hysterical females. I think we're supposed to be thankfully cooking or some such.

steadily,
em

↑ Index

860. Jim Bennett
Last chance to see...
Wed 25 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

charset="iso-8859-1"

Please excuse the cross posting.

But there is just enough time for you to catch a plane, boat, train and = get to Liverpool in time to attend the FREE POETRY EVENT OF THE DAY. = Come and be amazed at the courage of two of Liverpool University's = Lecturers presenting their own work to an audience of ravenous students. = Come support them, please bring your own rope.=20

David Bateman and Jim Bennett, in a free reading, at the Everyman = Bistro, Hope Street, Liverpool (Everyman Theatre).

Thursday 26th November (today) - 8pm sharp for a start some time after = that...

be there or be elsewhere.

Love and lots of it.

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. =
http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=3D1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

```
      charset="iso-8859-1"

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD W3 HTML//EN"> <HTML>
<HEAD>

<META content=3Dtext/html;charset=3Diso-8859-1 = http-equiv=3DContent-Type> <META content=3D'"MSHTML 4.72.3110.7"' name=3DGENERATOR>
</HEAD> <BODY bgColor=3D#ffffff>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2>Please excuse the cross = posting.</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2>But there is just enough time for
=
you to catch a=20 plane, boat, train and get to Liverpool in time to attend the  FREE =
POETRY=20
EVENT OF THE DAY.  Come and be amazed at the courage of two of = Liverpool=20 University's Lecturers presenting their own work to an audience of = ravenous=20
students.  Come support them, please bring your own rope. = </FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2>David Bateman and Jim Bennett, in a = free=20
reading, at the Everyman Bistro, Hope Street, Liverpool (Everyman=20 Theatre).</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2>Thursday 26th November (today) - 8pm sharp for a = start some=20
time after that...</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2>be there or be elsewhere.</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2>Love and lots of it.</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2>Jim</FONT></DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2></FONT> </DIV>
<DIV><FONT size=3D2>Click on this link to vote for my site.  <A=20 href=3D"http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=3D1780">http://conline.net/vote.mv?= id=3D1780</A>
```

Click=20
on this link to visit my site.
<A=20
href=3D"http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/">http://www.geociti
=
es.com/Athens/Academy/1127/</A>

"Poetry=20
is what the future makes of it." John=20 Garner

</FONT></DIV></BODY></HTML>

↑ Index

861. Eliza McGrand

Re: I ain't for Iowa

Wed 25 Nov 1998

---

emily

this wierd-seeming thing (but explicable if one thinks in terms of secure and insecure) happens whenever list kaboxes and blanks. scads of new people (who haven't been through it yet) think their screens are electron-bereft because they've been snipped out for excesses of uncoolness. people SEEM secure, act like they are, but i'll come out and say it here, _I_ wasn't, and after all the "hey, did i get kicked off list" panics i've seen, i KNOW lots of others aren't.

a pretty well known academic squashing someone by saying basically, well who are you to say anything anyway, you haven't ... PUBLISHED! whatever the provocation, is going to make people uncomfortable. it wierded me out. so as i said, regardless of the provocation, i didn't like the idea or the effect. i said so. nicely, but clearly. period. and if ms. p. thinks i was out of line for saying it, maybe she could be left to say so herself to me, eh? re getting off her case, you may not have picked it out, but that is what well over half the messages have been suggesting, including the notes i have NOT sent out over the now infamous "ms. p. was wrong" banner and what every note bannered by mockeries like "g. was wrong" or "my cat is snoring" or "enough already" etc. was doing in a peter-pannish sort of way. in ways that didn't slam gaga (poor thing, after the hydrangea transplant and unsuccessful reconceptualization in shades of morning buttercup and blue blast, he has never been the same), ms. p. has been getting lots of help out of hot seat.

i really don't think there is anything in my post(s), demeanor, responses (many of which have been, so far, giggling), or karma to suggest i wanted instant agreement. just like there was nothing in ditto to suggest i responded to the putting in our unwashed and unpublished place post in order to be able to chalk one up for my Gallant Gabriel Pin Finder in my presumed journals. odd, but many who know me find me NOT to be overzealous in search of righteousness or brushes with the Great. it is, perhaps, just all the broccoli i have been eating that causes my ennui that way. i pass over the effects of the asparagus except to say, don't visit bowering manner in the spring -- the plumbing has never been what it used to be...

one for the files -- if it had been a nobody, one of the great un-washed/published, i have an odd hunch there are perhaps a smidgin or two of Gallant Defender posts that would not have been posted, n'est ce pas?

yours from the land of the resentfully staring at the CLEAVER before it comes down, but go ahead, eat that turkey anyway, don't mind us, we'll just sit in the dark, suck down Beano pills, and play with our pop-up indicaters till they say "Cooked Through"...

e

↑ Index

862. Randy Prunty pronouns
Thu 26 Nov 1998

"I'm only pronouns and I am all of them."

Ted Berrigan from the poem Red Shift as heard on the Exact Change CD

↑ Index

863. Gabriel Gudding
Loving-Kindness Vibes and one last Bark
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Before I go make my chocolate cake for my fruitcake guest, Jasper, and catapult the 18 lb tofu turkey into the chamber of flaming gas for the tiny family, I just want to wish everyone a great day and say yes in fact I heard George Thompson out there in the west without one tut-tut crackling open his Dhammapada all the way across these Alleghanies, to tell us a little abbot tolerance, one of the 13 mental perfections.

And I heard Eliza,Eliza and her odd-grown sentence whipping its chilly chain and the "chink" of that chain cacchinating all the way up the Hudson Valley onto my dark old stoop goddamn, And D.Bromige doing lawd knows what to his Keyboard to make us laugh god knows how, And Henry Gould in his fucked-up epic timbre scatting to his own devil-tuned trombones, & Mairead Byrne booted from the fug of Dublin pubs thinking she's P.Kavanagh pissing on an old back wall "No I was not important I was not important no", then trying to deal with the elitist devil vibes whirling out of Palo Alto with George Thompson watching and the old Pali words saying "One whose mind is free of malice certainly wouldn't strike another living thing" and I'm thinking "yeah but does Perloff count, is she living" and knowing I'm being a total jerk and Weiss and Parcelli and Mayhew saying what the fuck do You know and DuCharme back there just waiting to kick my ass and BETSY ANDREWS wherever she is making me cry with joy and my Good Brain is reminding my Bad Brain mp's HUMAN she's HUMAN be decent be decent, but lawd ain't it HARD when people talk that way?: FOR

1). Is not the action of criticism which exercises the terms Important Bad Good & Lasting just normalizing criticism, FOR

2). are not MP's books being read by old guard students all over the country just so they can know what and how to think, FOR

3). is not MP the old guard despite who she's chosen to write about, BECAUSE as well all know It's not WHO she writes about it's HOW she writes BuT

I _will not_ be swayed from my course fuck it fuck it and may my argument be as Deft as the brushstrokes of Tintoretto, FOR

did I NOT cry Bruce Lee where art thou?, annd did he not come he DID, F-O-R

Lord I am barking again and there is some serious psychomachy rifling under my furious hair, saloon fight in frontal lobes, and YES

May your Thanksgiving be GOOD and for those not celebrating it due to constraints of non-north american sub-canadian geography and/or custom or beliefs about food, may you all, including those in Palo Alto, feel real warm and like it says on the gravemarker for cb: Don't Try. Just LOVE. love, Gaga

↑ Index

864. Bob Grumman

Re: Loving-Kindness Vibes and one last Bark

Thu 26 Nov 1998

Gabriel Gudding wrote (among other things):

1). Is not the action of criticism which exercises the terms Important Bad Good & Lasting just normalizing criticism?

Yeah, you could call it that but discrimination is a better term for it. Sanity is perhaps the best term for it. We don't have time to read everything, Gabriel, so we need help to decide what to read. And the strength of character not to let anyone's help enslave us.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

865. Henry Gould
all poetics is local
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Enjoying my braised & spitted air here on Thanksgiving & I sure hope you all are too, David, Elliza, Marjorie, Maria, Lurker #124, Mairead, Gabe, keyboard weirdos all. Not to forget Jack & Eric, good buddies.

Now on to the substance abuse of this post. Irregardless of her own (Maria's) exaggerations, and totally irregardless of the pros & cons of the Marjorie P. fandango, what I found interesting in Maria's post on the "enough already" bit was the presence of political memory.

Because it started some thinking in this old pate about some things that believe it or not the great "I, Henry" do not have the answers for & am actually, I, Henry, looking for discussion on.

This is a little hard to put into words. But essentially it's that I find it difficult to find a poetry that represents my own political aspirations. I have tried to do what I could in my own writing but have not gone far enough. I am very aware that the relations between actual politics, cultural politics, and art are very, very paradoxical and complex.

For example there has been issue, problem, or identity-oriented political art for some time. Dealing with feminist, racial-cultural, ecological, national-military issues; with poverty & oppression around the world. The most vital art in any medium takes its conceptual freedom & does something dynamically RELEVANT with it. This is the ethos of most engaged work.

Okay I will try to come to the point here. First, I don't see this engaged perspective as playing a role in the discourse about poetry much. What we have instead is a transmutation of real politics into cultural or art politics: your style or your clique is a political act in itself. But this is to displace real politics with a sort of sub-politics. The reason for this is, paradoxically, the ideological-conceptual STRENGTH of poetic tradition. Poetry is a medium of transmission not only of relevant or engaged issue politics; it's a medium of world-views, philosophy, comedy-tragedy, life as it is, ultimate questions, etc. etc. - i.e., poetry absorbs everything into its discourse. This is why the choices of style & voice & allies are so fraught with (pseudo) political meaning. & why we debate these abstractions (experimental, mainstream) over & over.

Let's say that writing poetry is political in itself, first of all. The best work of this century has been oppositional - it's art's sphere of freedom & possibility speaking - saying NO to things as they are on behalf of something better. It's art's freedom from consequences & allegiances using that freedom to expand horizons. Some artists & poets take that one step further into issue-engaged or even politically committed (i.e. committed to the consequences of their dreams) poetry. This is a dangerous step which involves both losses & gains.

I would guess that the best practitioners of this kind of work are neither theoretical leftists of "experiment" & coterie-academy writing, nor artists "representing" the political aspirations of one particular segment of society (remembering that very few good poets can be pigeon- holed this way anyway); the best are probably some amalgam of slam- street work that has moved into performance art of some kind & is simply below the radar of most of us on this list.

But that still leaves me with the dilemma which I started out with in this post. As a reader & writer, I'm looking for a poetry which consistently & variously expresses MY politics. Because I'm for the working class, but I'm not a Marxist; I consider myself a feminist, but I don't think feminism is a master key to all issues; I'm for the poor, but I believe in private property; I'm against capitalism more like the Pope than like your coffeehouse intellectual; I'm a populist. People like Adrienne Rich & Thomas McGrath are more radical than me, but their poetics of looking for that populist idiom seems more relevant to me than experiment-as- leftism. Basically I'm looking for a Green Party that emphasizes government for the common good - a politics of compromise between bourgeois self-interest and universal ideals. Compromise - but on the side & with the strength of the mass, not on behalf of corporate lobbies & bought-out political honchos. The deal-maker mafias that run the world. If you go into this with your eyes open regarding human nature & traditions, this is an extremely difficult project & capable of become a joke, a parody or a tragedy very, very easily, as history shows over & over. But the "democracy" movements are ABOUT those ideals, and they aren't dead yet. (Tragedy: i.e., as in St. Petersburg last week.)

What I would like, if anybody's interested, is not a list of names of poets I should read, or a defense of "experiment", but a discussion about how as writers we all connect our local political lives & aspirations with our ambitions & aspirations as writers. Ezra Pound is a terrible name to bring up, but all his ranting & raving about "autarchy" (local control of self-sufficient economies; banks which serve the public interest) is something I find extremely suggestive when it comes to imagining a more vital, rooted, vibrant, sane, happy, artistic, independent "way of life"; a more conscious integration of education, craft, vocation, employment, ecology, art & culture in communities really struggling to survive as cultural entities. I know this sounds like a deracinated a-historical vague utopian goof. But I'm not talking about these abstracts in isolation from the particular local histories of places & communities. I'm doing a Mumford for Thanksgiving.

- Henry "the Old Buzzard" Gould

↑ Index

866. dee morris

Re: Out of Control @ Bridge Street -- new Retallack, Mayer, Mackey, Rasula/McCaffery, Trupwire &&&

Thu 26 Nov 1998

Here's my order. My address is

Dee Morris
431 Brown Street
Iowa City, IA 52245

Thanks for these terrific packages. & Happy Thanksgiving to you . . .

Dee

> 2. _An Anthology of New Poetics_, ed Christopher Beach, U Alabama, $29.95. David Antin, Rae Armantrout, Charles Bernstein, Maria Damon, Michael Davidson, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Lyn Hejinian, Susan Howe, Hank Lazer, Nathaniel Mackey, Steve McCaffery, Bob Perelman, Marjorie Perloff, Leslie Scalapino, James Sherry, Ron Silliman, John Taggart, & Barrett Watten.
>
> 7. _Dance Writings and Poetry_, Edwin Denby, ed Robert Cornfield, Yale, $18. Much more of the dance writing than the poetry.
>
> 19. _How To Do Things With Words_, Joan Retallack, Sun & Moon, $10.95. Signed copies. Includes the hits "The Woman in the Chinese Room," "Shakespeare was a Woman," "A I D /I/ S A P P E A R A N C E," "Steinzas in Mediation," "Japanese Presentation I & II," & "The Earlier N'ames Are Almost Forgotten."
>
> 22. _Ron Silliman and the Alphabet_, ed Thomas A. Vogler, Quarry West 34, $15. Thomas C. Marshall, Hank Lazer, Tyrus Miller, Lytle Shaw, Marjorie Perloff, Silliman interview, essays, and bibliography.
>
> 23. _Talisman 19: Armand Schwerner_, ed Ed Foster, $9. Theodore Enslin, John Tritica, Andrew Schelling, Burt Kimmelman, Brian McHale, Garrett Kalleberg, Pam Rehm, Heather Ramsdell, Lisa Jarnot, Susan Wheeler, &&&. "Anomalous circus events take the shape of mandible density in the great outer planets."
>
> _The Letters of Mina Harker_, Dodie Bellamy, Hard Press, $13.95.
>
> Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

> Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

867. A. Jenn Sondheim
Do Men Cry, By Jennifer (fwd)
Thu 26 Nov 1998

-

Do Men Cry, By Jennifer

No, men do not cry, and I am not sure they could be Taught to. I have seen many men and they do not cry, even when there are things that would make Them cry if they could. I am sure of this from my obversation Study. Now I have seen many a distrawt woman who will be sitting in a Chair looking very sad with tears runing down her Face. She is doing Crying. And then a man will come Over to that woman and he will put his Hand on her showlder. He will Stand there just with his Hand on her showlder. And she will put Her hand on his Hand. Then she may not be So distrawt, I do not know from obversation study. But he will not Cry too.

↑ Index

868. david bromige
re : all poetics is local
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Dime to a donut Bowering weighs in on that "irregardless" vocab item. (His Dad was a schoolteacher, y'know.) Part of what I admire about GB is that, for a poet, he is very leftbrain. So watch out, here he comes. . . . .

↑ Index

869. Amy King
Re: Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee
Thu 26 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

charset="iso-8859-1"

Do you know how many pages yet?

Thank you,

Amy King

-----Original Message-----
From: Steven Clay <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Wednesday, November 18, 1998 7:17 PM
Subject: Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee

Granary Books
announces the publication of Log Rhythms
by Susan Bee and Charles Bernstein

In Log Rhythms, Susan Bee sets and illustrates a long serial poem by Charles Bernstein, offering a running visual dialog with the poem's textual acrobatics. Bee has created a visual counter-text for Bernstein's poems in four previous books Little Orphan Anagram (Granary), The Occurrence of Tune (Segue), Fool's Gold (Chax), and The Nude Formalism (Sun & Moon). In this work, Bee's illustrations comment on and extend the many far-flung motifs of the poem, from a list of "Bob's" businesses to fractured and re-sung nursery rhymes ("Oh, do you know the muffled man?"). At times dark, at times dizzyingly demented, swerving from the wildly comic to the searingly political, from the whimsical to the elegiac, Bee and Bernstein explore the psychopathology of everyday life with what The New York Times calls (in reference to Little Orphan Anagram) "real visual éclat".

Log Rhythms is printed in black and white. The illustrations were first made with brush, ink, and wash combined with collage and then printed offset by Brad Freeman on Warren's Lustro Dull. Cover design by Susan Bee and Philip Gallo, laser-printed in color at the Hermetic Press.

The edition consists of 500 copies; 8 1/4 x 11"; ?? pages.

The price is $25 till December 15; $35 thereafter

Residents of the state of New York add 8 1/4% sales tax Shipping is $3 (U.S. & Canada) $6 (everywhere else).

ISBN 1-887123-25-3

Granary Books
568 Broadway #403
New York, NY 10012 USA

[redacted]
www.granarybooks.com

charset="iso-8859-1"

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD W3 HTML//EN"> <HTML>
<HEAD>

<META content=text/html;charset=iso-8859-1 http-equiv=Content-Type><?fontfamily><?param Helvetica><?smaller> <META content='"MSHTML 4.72.3510.1400"' name=GENERATOR> </HEAD> <BODY bgColor=#ffffff> <DIV><FONT color=#000000 size=2>Do you know how many pages yet?</FONT></DIV> <DIV><FONT color=#000000 size=2></FONT> </DIV> <DIV><FONT size=2>Thank you,</FONT></DIV> <DIV><FONT size=2></FONT> </DIV> <DIV><FONT size=2>Amy King</FONT></DIV> <BLOCKQUOTE style="BORDER-LEFT: #000000 solid 2px; MARGIN-LEFT: 5px; PADDING-LEFT: 5px"> <DIV><FONT face=Arial size=2><B>-----Original Message-----</B>
<B>From: </B>Steven Clay <<A href="mailto:[redacted]">[redacted]</A>> <B>To: </B><A href="mailto:[redacted]">[redacted]</A> <<A href="mailto:[redacted]">[redacted]</A>>
<B>Date: </B>Wednesday, November 18, 1998 7:17 PM
<B>Subject: </B>Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee

</DIV></FONT>Granary Books
announces the publication of Log Rhythms
by Susan Bee and Charles Bernstein

In Log Rhythms, Susan Bee sets and illustrates a long serial poem by Charles Bernstein, offering a running visual dialog with the poem's textual acrobatics. Bee has created a visual counter-text for Bernstein's poems in four previous books Little Orphan Anagram (Granary), The Occurrence of Tune (Segue), Fool's Gold (Chax), and The Nude Formalism (Sun & Moon). In this work, Bee's illustrations comment on and extend the many far-flung motifs of the poem, from a list of "Bob's" businesses to fractured and re-sung nursery rhymes ("Oh, do you know the muffled man?"). At times dark, at times dizzyingly demented, swerving from the wildly comic to the searingly political, from the whimsical to the elegiac, Bee and Bernstein explore the psychopathology of everyday life with what The New York Times calls (in reference to Little Orphan Anagram) "real visual éclat".

Log Rhythms is printed in black and white. The illustrations were first made with brush, ink, and wash combined with collage and then printed offset by Brad Freeman on Warren's Lustro Dull. Cover design by Susan Bee and Philip Gallo, laser-printed in color at the Hermetic Press.

The edition consists of 500 copies; 8 1/4 x 11"; ?? pages.

The price is $25 till December 15; $35 thereafter

Residents of the state of New York add 8 1/4% sales tax Shipping is $3 (U.S. & Canada) $6 (everywhere else).

ISBN 1-887123-25-3

Granary Books
568 Broadway #403
New York, NY 10012 USA

[redacted]
www.granarybooks.com<?/smaller><?/fontfamily> </BLOCKQUOTE></BODY></HTML>

↑ Index

870. Randy Prunty
Re: Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Amy, I've been wondering the same thing!!!

I think i really might want to buy that book, but there's no way I'm gonna commit until I know how many pages. who knows what kind of devious scam they might be running.

Rinde Skepticov

↑ Index

871. Amy King
Re: Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Esp. during the holiday seasons ... "free" poetics indeed!

-----Original Message-----
From: Randy Prunty <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Thursday, November 26, 1998 4:07 PM
Subject: Re: Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee

>Amy, I've been wondering the same thing!!!
>
>I think i really might want to buy that book, but there's no way I'm gonna >commit until I know how many pages. who knows what kind of devious scam they >might be running.
>
>Rinde Skepticov
>

↑ Index

872. Hank Lazer
self-portrait in a convex mirror
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Why I Am Not Bob Dylan

I'm Charles Bernstein

omnivorous schtick

the whiz of metaphysics

do you know

the muffled man

the muffled man

hell

they all use a megaphone

and croon a jewish klezmer tune

bar mitzvah boy

bar mitzvah boy

this

my pride & joy

& danced by the light of the moon

A happy turkey day, Charles, to you, Susan, Emma, & Felix.

Hank

↑ Index

873. David Baratier
Re: Listen, Kent
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Eliza--

I am checking mail on the road right now (more on poetix when situated) and while I thank you for placing me on the HOT list with the other adoreables, I must say that I am quite tired of yet another attributation towards my transgendered identity. It was the eighties, when all men had to grow hair, wear lipstick and the like to get a record deal. While Drew Barrymore has been inside me, all these people bringing it up again in the past few weeks infuriates.

Regarding the choice of the Levis etc. "I" poems, that is bent of the anthologist, who gets laid quite frequently and placed together the anthology to uplift a few winter months when the seasonal affectation disorder runs full swing and to look at later and feel better during moments of low self esteem.

Gotta go, Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

874. Eliza McGrand
Re: all poetics is local
Fri 27 Nov 1998

---

henry

i was thinking of a few authors when i read your post. i won't do this as a list of who you must read, but i do want to suggest some of the ways i've seen writers translate their political/social/personal beliefs into their writing within a loose, quick, theoretic frame.

i don't think a politically/etc influenced poetic need be dramatic, big, obvious, earthshaking. it can be as simple and personal as the choice r.j mccaffery and i, seperately and without knowing each other, made -- mine influenced by something martin espada said. we all write poems about other people, poems telling other people's stories. i decided to make a point of making at least 1/2 of my writing be about someone else. espada talked about writing the stories of people he knows who don't write, so they are part of the cultural literary legacy. i liked that. a small thing, eh? but politics/ethics put into poetic practice.

or, judy grahn wanted to see women's stories get told, she wanted to explore rhythms of language she heard from women and didnn't hear in male-centric writing, and she wanted the lives and images of working class women to enter poetic body of text. so, _Common Woman Poems_. and she cared for an older friend who was dying, and began confronting death and it's effects, and wanted to write a poem for other people, especially women, burdened with knots around notion of death, so, "A Woman Is Talking To Death." and her early linguistic experiments.

bruce weigl wanted to write about things that were important to him, especially vietnam and his working class hometown and family roots. but at the same time, he didn't want to be considered "a vietnam writer." he wrote poems, some about vietnam, criticism, got ph.d., and then, he joined with some other vietnam vets in project to break down walls he felt were culturally/governmentally imposed between american vets and vietnamese. so they all began travelling to vietnam, corresponding with vietnamese, researching the culture, and just in general, countering the propaganda during the war aimed at dehumanizing vietnamese. it is not just that a number of books have come from this with poems about going back to vietnam, or that he has begun translating vietnamese poetry. it is that buddhism, vietnamese culture, vietnam war from viewpoint of vietnamese have all begun changing his world view. i could name a bunch of other writers involved in project -- tim o'brien, larry heinemann, kevin bowen. or there is lady borton -- not a poet but an autobiographist, essay writer, a quaker woman busdriver who ran a refugee camp for vietnamese and cambodians, who worked as hospital manager during vietnam war. politics in action.

or, again not poets, but look at the lives and writing of tillie olson, meridel leseuer. both working class women, poor, struggling, who wanted to put those aspects of their lives not just into literature as SUBJECT matter, but as style, form, philosophy, imagery.

none of this, perhaps, madly dramatic, none of it sudden fixes. all of it a direction, really, of writing, of choice, that comes from personal/political choices. another example, again, personal? _The Battered Poems_, my latest finished ms. of poetry, has a section of poems about the framingham eight, one for each woman. in one poem, i found myself thinking that the woman, shannon booker, when i've heard her speak, has stressed alot how she didn't speak out in her own life, how she was taught NOT to speak. so when i sat to write a poem about her, i decided i'd include a lot of quotes from her own words, to let her "speak" in my poem, and i found myself shaping the movment and themes toward things she had expressed. or with another woman, patricia allen, i felt as if there was this "how could she have done it" attitude expressed by the prosecution in her case that blatantly ignored a lot of the evidence, the obvious circumstances of the case. so i made the poem a collage of voices, many of them people like social workers, the major political figures of the day (ray-gun, quayle), legal counsels...

again, not earthshattering, but just natural extensions of some of the ethical questions/issues/thoughts i had about subject, or they felt natural to me anyway...

hope this is in some way a useful discussion...
e

↑ Index

875. George Bowering
re : all poetics is local
Fri 27 Nov 1998

> Dime to a donut Bowering weighs in on that "irregardless" vocab item. (His Dad was a schoolteacher, y'know.) Part of what I admire about GB is that, for a poet, he is very leftbrain. So watch out, here he comes. . . . .

Nah, disirregardless of what Brom says, I am a sloppy liberal all over.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

876. Susan Wheeler
Long Island Reading
Fri 27 Nov 1998

I'll be reading Saturday evening at 6:00 at Canio's bookstore in Sag Harbor, for anyone out Long Island-way.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

877. Mairead Byrne
Re: Do Men Cry, By Jennifer (fwd)
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Some Men Cry

I have known criers. Male criers. Lusty criers. Broken-hearted criers. When men cry bone-cages shake, hair wettens, hands crawl to heads, faces break. Lost loves come tumbling out sometimes when men cry. Down close to the dirty carpet he cries looking for something left over inside his hands. He cries wildly. He cries without connection to any damn thing, hunting for string that should attach him at shoulder at elbow at hip and knee to something, even to himself. Sometimes his sobs rack with hers: maybe the best cries. If a man who does not cry comes to a crying woman and puts his hand on hers, she cries more.

On Thu, 26 Nov 1998, A. Jenn Sondheim wrote:

> -
>
> Do Men Cry, By Jennifer
>
> No, men do not cry, and I am not sure they could be Taught to. I have seen many men and they do not cry, even when there are things that would make Them cry if they could. I am sure of this from my obversation Study. Now I have seen many a distrawt woman who will be sitting in a Chair looking very sad with tears runing down her Face. She is doing Crying. And then a man will come Over to that woman and he will put his Hand on her showlder. He will Stand there just with his Hand on her showlder. And she will put Her hand on his Hand. Then she may not be So distrawt, I do not know from obversation study. But he will not Cry too.
>
> ---

↑ Index

878. litsam

Re: Do Men Cry

Fri 27 Nov 1998

Finally! A poetic resurgence from the group. On the day AFTER Thanksgiving, I am a grateful and, yes, sometimes crying man.

Sam

Original Message -----
From: Mairead Byrne <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Friday, November 27, 1998 5:36 AM
Subject: Re: Do Men Cry, By Jennifer (fwd)

> Some Men Cry
>
> I have known criers. Male criers. Lusty criers. Broken-hearted criers. When men cry bone-cages shake, hair wettens, hands crawl to heads, faces break. Lost loves come tumbling out sometimes when men cry. Down close to the dirty carpet he cries looking for something left over inside his hands. He cries wildly. He cries without connection to any damn thing, hunting for string that should attach him at shoulder at elbow at hip and knee to something, even to himself. Sometimes his sobs rack with hers:

> maybe the best cries. If a man who does not cry comes to a crying woman and puts his hand on hers, she cries more.

↑ Index

879. Steven Clay
Announcing: Log Rhythms by Charles Bernstein & Susan Bee
Fri 27 Nov 1998

The book has 24 pp.
sc.

↑ Index

880. Hannah J Sassaman
I Love Learning Things!
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Just saw IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE for the first time yesterday. Never knew where the journal name ZUZU'S PETALS came from -- now I know!

When I learn tidbits like that from a movie so integral to holiday pop culture, you know it's time for me to pick up some NYT bestseller and snuggle in with a cup of hot chocolate. Bah to journals, while I'm home for Thanksgiving, at least!

Happy Turkey Days to you all,

Hannah Sassaman

****

Hannah Jane Sassaman
Sophomore, University of Pennsylvania
Majoring in Theatre Arts and English
Editor at CrossConnect (http://ccat.sas.upenn.edu/xconnect)

School Address: Home Address:
4009 Pine St. 42 Framingham Lane
Philadelphia, PA 19104 Pittsford, NY 14534

Talk not of wasted affection; affection never was wasted.
-- Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

My father warned me about men and booze, but he never mentioned a word about women and cocaine.

-- Tallulah Bankhead

↑ Index

881. James Brook
new issue of Pharos
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Actually, it's the "newly arrived" issue--the spring 1998 issue of Pharos magazine, based in Paris, is on these shores and otherwise available.

Contents includes poems by Alice Notley, Douglas Oliver, Dawn Michelle Baude, James Brook, and Nina Zivancevic. There's a funny story about the cracker-thin pleasures of a literary party, too.

Price is 30 francs, which translates to about five or six dollars.

Address for business of all kinds is

Pharos
The British Institute
11, rue Constantine 75007 Paris
France

↑ Index

882. Billy Little reading treats
Fri 27 Nov 1998

i'm still reading kimball and bromige's poetries of canada, each click opens another morsel, collections of this strength are rare and to have it all at the beck of your cursor tripley so. two of the reasons i like it this morning are 1.

George Stanley

The Power of the Unhappy People

The unhappy people have great power.
They invest in the unhappiness of others.

Not generic unhappiness, the kind of unhappiness anyone could feel,
but designer unhappiness, the exact
shape of the hole in your heart.

These are dreams without doors. Let the blonde demonstrator slip one around your feelings.
As it goes on, it clings like shrink-wrap.

Now the birds can cry in the night, and you won't hear them. Or your ancestors. Or jazz.

The image of your death will dance for you
with as many veils as you please.

In your fog-coloured room, in your Queen Anne chair,
you may wish you were dead, but be glad of that wish since it sets you above the common sort inured to ordinary unhappiness.

And we, the investment community, will grin.
(Though like you, we cannot feel the sun or hear the rain.
Or jazz.) We will grin at the thought of you dreaming.

More & more people must become rich & unhappy,
so the original unhappy people can die rich.

and 2

Meredith Quartermain

Prayer for Geography

To all who fall
to matter
write the earth
a space of white
break of bread
plates break in relief
write stones cocks cry
to collected waters
or hollow fire of iron.

Eat atmosphere, a garland
sift on a drift
post out the earth's hearth
to horizon and swallow heat
of antipodes
plants ride out in leaves

to mirror oceans
to finger rivers tribulations
smooth away our tombs.

Figures of earth, press out our bodies.
Strange our urge into that which takes stand.
Distribute our loom
work through the scape the seek of air
each ear our forgotten art.

For these are our herdsmen
and without this earth as risk we have no
right of river hear
our three yonders a sphere
of being of geography to the ring of ocean above them
the maps antipodean
tenderness in all who fall
to matter who come simply to throw shadows on the moon's shifting horizon who devote constellations to the ends
of the earth wide
from the road of symmetry.

Colin Smith's Multiple Poses from Tsunami is a scream and cheaper than a roller coaster and you can go back ad eternatum for the same low price. A Frank O'Hara for the 21st century? these words seem to careen from the epiglottis, his tongue twisting makes a resonance with gerry gilbert and dotty lusk and gerry creede and renee rodin for that matter, very vancouver? quel marrant, seriously funny, manick soars/fissionary elucidations, in the fewchair they'll say his spew flew, spitterature is one of the strong points of the KSW/ downtown Vancouver praxis, Kevin Davies and Jeff Derksen being exemplar. You don't have to take my word for it you can check out in

The New Raddle Moon which features a strong selection of vancouver writers with naturally some overlapping with poetries of canada, more Meredith Quartermain, more Melissa Wolsak, Lisa Robertson, Lary Timewell, Kevin Davies, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Jeff Derksen, even the brainwashed bagdaddy, the sweetheart of sebastapol, the romeo of the russian river hisself, and more Marie Anneharte Baker, the star of the bp conference reclaiming coyote. Susan Clark has done another marvelous job with Raddle Moon's issue 17 also includes some new quebecois poets selected by Nicole Brossard, some new poems by Jackson Mac Low, Rae Armantrout, in the classiest package all for merely $10, or two issue subscriptions for $15,

billy little
4 song st.
nowhere, b.c. V0R1Z0
[redacted]

Go ahead and say something true
before the big turd eats You
You can say any last thing in Your poem.

-Alice Notley

↑ Index

883. sylvester pollet
Re: I Love Learning Things!
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Three cheers for Hannah! You get my Best Message Title Award, for bringing some joy to this world-weary list. Happy Turkey Days to you! (& all). Sylvester, in rainy Maine.

At 11:13 AM -0500 11/27/98, Hannah J Sassaman wrote:
>Just saw IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE for the first time yesterday. Never knew >where the journal name ZUZU'S PETALS came from -- now I know!
>
>
>When I learn tidbits like that from a movie so integral to holiday pop >culture, you know it's time for me to pick up some NYT bestseller and >snuggle in with a cup of hot chocolate. Bah to journals, while I'm home >for Thanksgiving, at least!
>
>Happy Turkey Days to you all,
>
>Hannah Sassaman
>

↑ Index

884. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: AntolerInce
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Isn't this debate really about--to use that weary, beaten term, at once victimized and despotic--the CANON? I agree with a number of the poets who have written in--of course, if one makes work, there's tons of other work one detests. God! That person who writes this palaver--they must be blind! No ear! They were born and bred on milquetoast! They're ruining the eyes and ears and movements of all those who read them! They're butchers--putting out eyes and ears and bodies liike so many candles! One could get far more violent--and one does in one's heart so to spak--but don't waste time looking at the waist line as the Contours used to sing--better to get on with the work, keep on guerilla style

. . . The fallacy of Perloff's argument to me is that she is NOT A POET--(and here of course I may be practising my own form of intolerance . .)--
BUT she is in the position and has been for years of telling others who (the right) poets are-- i.e. she is working away on the edifice called the canon, inscribing her own name on it as on the spines of her books-- and in her classes-- as last year in teaching a visual poetry course--which frankly could have thrown a lot of beautiful monkey wrenches into the whole works of the Stanford machinery!--and opened up some people's eyes, ears, bodies, n0ses, hands--and instead Perloff ignored the generous and highly informed advice of a number of visual poets (who also do write essays and reviews, publish the work of others and participate in exhibitions and performances) on this list and blithely went on teaching a kind of revised (er, updated) version of her books-- of course Perloff has every right to do so-- yet this is about the making of canons--not OPEN reading, but CLOSE(D) reading-- by OPEN--think of any poet whom you passionately care for--don't they continually OPEN everything for you? and that openess is not some fuzzy feeling, but a challenge thrown done--and any passionate reader is a "close" reader--but not a closed one . . . well--take a cannon to the canon--why not? but it's hard to knock it down! it's well guarded and well financed by the Perloffs of the world--who exploit the intolernace so called of poets into the intolerance of the academy, the market, the teaching of the next generation of teachers and critics . . . in short, a form of hypocrisy which is so self righteous that it can claim intolerance as a virtue . . . to exploit-- in the name of the poets!

but then it's a funny world eh? as the Brazilian proverb says "When shit is worth money, the poor will be born without assholes" . . . close/open--in a dream this poem appeared as a graffiti on a shattered building in Boston, where i among the squatters lived--

the po em is in side

intolerance/tolerance--maybe not either/or but both/and . . as many of the poets demonstrate in their posts-- but that's not laying down the law on your fellow workers--it's just telling them off--they're wasting paper for God's sake! they suck! they're pigs--they suck up everything!--by God! we'll show them! we''ll make something far better and more challenging and all! we'll ignore their continual braying! --and so on-- maybe the difference might be summed up by a phrase by Clark Coolidge on writing: "if you're going to be a speaker, say it"-- maybe Perloff and Bill Bennett can go on tour . . . dbc

↑ Index

885. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: AntolerInce
Fri 27 Nov 1998

David, if you log back in, DELETE DELETE DELETE or I will & then go home & clean house

tina

↑ Index

886. Jacques Debrot
Re: PERLOFF
Fri 27 Nov 1998

The question of (in)tolerance is a difficult one, isn't it? On the one hand, innovative poetry demonstrates & embodies the pleasures of contradiction. On the other hand, the difference between Pinsky & Howe is an ethical as much as an aesthetic distinction inasmuch as their work implicates opposing moral values. Neutrality, then -- or tolerance -- can seem merely lazy. At the same, it seems important not to respond to traditionalist work in automatic & predictable ways --either in a positive or a negative sense. (A distinction might also perhaps be drawn here between the function of reviews vs. that of literary criticism.) In any case Perloff's willingness to engage with opposing poetries is well documented -- you might want to check out Hank Lazer's excellent book _What is a Poet?_ however to see how such a dialogue cannot & should not result in anything like a reconciliation of differences. There, the dialogue between Perloff, Louis Simpson, Gerald Stern, Charles Bernstein, Helen Vendler, David Ignatow, et. al., clearly reveals the irreconcilable ethical dimension lurking beneath formal & aesthetic choices. Perloff has her own canon, obviously, but then so does each of us & she can hardly be faulted if, through her energy & intelligence, her canon is more consequential in the world than, say, my own. My initial reaction to her asking Gabriel for his credentials was quite negative & yet her remarks could also be interpreted as an invitation & a challenge to engage with her in a wider venue than the Poetix List. Even she might perhaps concede however that, in the arts, the impulse to bite the hand that feeds you (hers in this instance) is fundamentally a healthy one -- every truly original poem, every truly original critique, after all entails destruction as much as creation.

↑ Index

887. Joe Brennan
Re: PERLOFF
Fri 27 Nov 1998

In a message dated 11/27/98 3:29:52 PM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<< the other hand, the difference between Pinsky & Howe is an ethical as much as an aesthetic distinction inasmuch as their work implicates opposing moral values. N >> an interesting remark, Jacques, and i wonder if you would elaborate on it?

joe brennan

↑ Index

888. Marjorie Perloff
Re: non-poets on poetry
Fri 27 Nov 1998

Christina Chirot informs the List that I have no right to comment on poetry because I'm not a poet. Then in her next paragraph she declares that my course on Visual Poetics was suspect because I didn't listen to "well informed" people who could tell me what to teach (like their own visual poems!). So now it seems I'm not allowed to be an academic either because by some wonderful inverse reasoning, only poets decide what should be taught in such a course!

The TOLERANCE exhibited here is really something.

↑ Index

889. MAYHEW
Re: AntolerInce
Fri 27 Nov 1998

It seems to me the argument "Perloff is not a poet" is totally bogus. There are poets who are idiots.

Also, someone who is so well-known can make an easy target for people who are basically anonymous. So when MP says "and what have YOU written?" it could be taken in this spirit: what do you offer to this debate? Let's debate YOUR writing. If someone disagrees with some specific thing Perloff has written, that's fine. But the blanket statement: Perloff is the sort of critic who... has no validity in my accounting.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese

University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

890. michael corbin
Re: AntolerInce
Fri 27 Nov 1998

MAYHEW wrote:

> totally bogus.
> poets who are idiots.
>
> for people who > are basically anonymous.
>
> But the blanket statement:
> my accounting.
>
> University of Kansas

I was just reading Alfred Crosby's _Measure of Reality_.

I liked in particular the history of double-entry book-keeping.

A kind of radical artifice.

In the age of media and lists.

And the attempts at the oppositional manqué

in the various performed celebrity and intellectual labor.

My eyes are getting bad, so when I look up at the dome in the Jefferson building, main reading room

all the paean to poets laurels seem lost in the dust motes, but maybe that is what congressional libraries are bout.

Demos, nihil obstat.

mc

↑ Index

891. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

I have to agree strongly here with Marjorie Perloff. By such criteria, none of us could critique anything whatsoever example whatever is genera- ted by (for me, suspect) identity politics. It's not even a question of tolerance. Everyone has a right to her or his own opinion; Perloff's is certainly well-informed, but even if it wasn't, one would hope the _ideas_ would be discussed - instead of ill-natured ad feminem/hominem attacks.

If anything, Perloff has generated more intelligent discussion on this list re- cently than most of the other contributors, including myself.

Alan

On Fri, 27 Nov 1998, Marjorie Perloff wrote:

> Christina Chirot informs the List that I have no right to comment on poetry because I'm not a poet. Then in her next paragraph she declares that my course on Visual Poetics was suspect because I didn't listen to "well informed" people who could tell me what to teach (like their own visual poems!). So now it seems I'm not allowed to be an academic either because by some wonderful inverse reasoning, only poets decide what should be taught in such a course!
>
> The TOLERANCE exhibited here is really something.

↑ Index

892. Kathy Lou Schultz
Re: non-poets on poetry/salient points
Sat 28 Nov 1998

I remember the number of "poets" I encountered in my MFA program who had read very little, if anything, and were quite happy about continuing in this state of ignorance because their writing was about "personal expression." Do I think these people are qualified critics or teachers or poetry? No I certainly do not. Give me a team of Perloffs any day. The classroom is not, despite what some might hope, a democracy in which "poets" decide what poetry should be taught. Every person on this list who teaches a course is--hopefully--relying upon years of study and careful consideration of the subject in making critical choices about what to include on any given syllabus. And, yes, they are allowed those choices, and debate about those choices can hopefully proceeed along the level of careful textual analysis and comparison rather than unwarranted personal attacks. The more interesting points, I believe, are: what is the role of literature, what is the role of criticism, and finally, what is the relationship between the two. This ties into an examination of the process of canon formation. For example, Marjorie Perloff and others on this list have contributed in interesting and expansive ways to the discussion of the canon of "women's writing" and what that entails. Is it only "subject matter" that these writers have in common, or can we also consider technical/textual innovations are part of the discussion in feminist literary criticism? These are some of the things I'd personally like to hear debate about on the poetics list. All are invited to join. Kathy Lou Schultz

Marjorie Perloff wrote:
>
> Christina Chirot informs the List that I have no right to comment on > poetry because I'm not a poet. Then in her next paragraph she declares > that my course on Visual Poetics was suspect because I didn't listen to > "well informed" people who could tell me what to teach (like their own > visual poems!). So now it seems I'm not allowed to be an academic > either because by some wonderful inverse reasoning, only poets decide > what should be taught in such a course!
>
> The TOLERANCE exhibited here is really something.

↑ Index

893. joel lewis
Re: I Love Learning Things
Sat 28 Nov 1998

Hannah--

I just saw It's a wonderful time for the 300th time & decided that Pottersville (the honky-tonk town that emerges because George Bailey is never born) looks a whole lot more appealing than dull Bedford Falls!

joel lewis

↑ Index

894. Bob Grumman
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

I see why Marjorie Perloff tends to keep aloof from squabbles like this one. She's not too deft at the kind of fencing required.

Now she has decided that Dave Chirot ("dbc," not Christina Fairbank Chirot, whose name is in the "from" box of Dave's message) has claimed that she is "not allowed to be an academic" because she is not a poet. Actually, Dave was claiming that her argument was flawed, to him, because she was not a poet and therefore (I gather) unable to connect to the poet's point of view in this ONE particular case (something I'm afraid I disagree with Dave about). I'm quite confident Dave does not believe non-poets should be prohibited from being academics.

Maybe I should take back my remark about Marjorie's skill at squabbling: she IS good at the fencing required, here misrepresenting an opponent so as to be able more easily to put him down.

As one of the ""well informed"" people who provided Marjorie with advice on what to teach at her visual poetry seminar (at her request to the list, and never presuming to TELL her what to teach in the seminar), I naturally agree with Dave that Marjorie ought to have paid more attention to my advice. Marjorie is certainly NOT well-informed about visual poetry. I might add that I never suggested she include my own visual poems in her course, though I may well have suggested (diffidently, in an aside) the inclusion of my book about visual poetry and poetry-in-general, Of Manywhere-at-Once, soon to be out in a third (self-needless to say-published) edition, which I (undiffidently) consider of as much value in the field as any text she used in her seminar, which isn't much of a boast.

In conclusion, I go along with Dave's remark, intolerance/tolerance-- maybe not either/or but both/and." And would like to add the following to his charmful poem

```
     the po       em
is       in side
```

:

```
     eht me       op tuo       si edis
```

--Bob G.

↑ Index

895. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy
Marjorie Perloff IS a poet
Sat 28 Nov 1998

This lovely poem by Marjorie Perloff (quoted below) appears in her essay _Sentence, not Sentence_ which is available on her home page http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/perloff

Randolph Healy

****

Noun phrase with adjectival modifier

past participles used as predicate adjectives imperative clause (or past indicative verb + adverbial compliment)

past indicative verb + prepositional phrase

complete clause (subject, verb, predicate) in past tense

prepositional phrase modified by preopositional phrase

noun phrase with adjectival modifier

past indicate verb + present participle noun phrase + prepositional phrase past progressive verb + object infinitive + conditional clause

adverb + qualifier + adverb

complete clause (subject +predicate) adverbial phrase of timefrom [redacted]

from [redacted]

↑ Index

896. Peter Ganick
new website
Sat 28 Nov 1998

low-tech site with a long poem i've been working on since december 1997...

click on:
<http://members.home.com/zeropoet> ...

peter ganick
potes & poets press / a.bacus

↑ Index

897. WENDY KRAMER
debbie
Sat 28 Nov 1998

---

sorry for the hiatus elizabeth treadwell the publisher address for debbie an epic is:

New Star Books Ltd.
[redacted] Commercial St.
Vancouver, BC
V5N 4E8

tried and failed to backchannel--but mebbe others want this info...

↑ Index

898. Randy Prunty
Re: Ganick's long poem
Sat 28 Nov 1998

Peter, I can't read your poem. Now, what does this mean. It means I can't treat your poem like I treat (most) other poems. I can't say "in section 48 you say, 'fortunes of excelling intentionality looking at atoms opened for herself in snapped gratitude'; what were you going for there"? I mean I can say it. I just did. But even if you had a response to that, its not like that would help me "get" your poem. But then some people don't "get" some of my work. And if they ask me what a certain section or phrase means then i'm just dumbstruck because if they don't get it then I can't explain it. I think I mean i can't complete your poem. But i remember I once thought i couldn't read/complete Coolidge's Crystal Text. but so what. I "get" it to the extent it works. and it DOES work for me. in me. I'm pretty sure that you realize that I write this not as a criticism, (I'll say here that your piece in the latest Kenning is one of the cool contributions that makes it such a good issue. and perhaps I've said to you before how much I enjoyed your chap Agoraphobia) but rather as an open question to you and other listees about writers and readers. Do you find readers who read your long works with a kind of intensity/obsessiveness with which you write them? I mean, Peter, that's MASSIVE. you expect it to be consumed so soon after Thanksgiving? or do you expect/hope that I and others will visit frequently for Around A Corner sandwiches. i'm assuming you care about having readers or you would not publish. so, another question, do you intentionally try to overwhelm the reader? to try to force me/us out of the "this is a nice little poem" mentality? you force me to expand what I think of as a poem. if you say its a poem, then its a poem. like finnegans wake is a long mindfuck poem. like Crystal Text is a meditative-language-experience poem. I hope you respond to this, but perhaps not until you've allowed others to respond to your work and my questions.

Randy

↑ Index

899. Burt Hatlen

Re: POETICS Digest - 26 Nov 1998 to 27 Nov 1998 (#1998-137)

Sat 28 Nov 1998

Dear Members of the Poetics Listserv,

I'm writing to you as a member of the steering committee of the newly formed Modernist Studies Association, which is designed to bring together scholars who are working on all facets of literary and cultural activity between the later 19th- and the mid- 20th century.

The inaugural conference of the new association will take place October 7-19, 1999 at Penn State University (University Park). The title of the conference, "The New Modernisms," speaks to the revitalization and the variety of new developments in the field over the last several years. At our first conference, we will run sessions on topics such as the expansion of the modernist canon, particularly in light of recent concerns with race, class, gender, region, and ethnicity; the "postmodern" revaluation of modernism; the new interest in modernism, science, and technology; the reassessment of the socio-political contexts of modernism; issues of nationalism, imperialism, and colonialism; the marketing of modernism; the impact of new editorial principles and procedures; and new approaches to the relations among the various arts and sciences of the era.

You should be hearing about the conference over the next few months. We'll be distributing flyers over the next month or so, and the official conference brochure, which will contain a call for papers and a registration form, will appear in early spring. You can also check out our website (still under construction) at http://www.psu.edu/dept/english/MSA/msa.htm. For further information, feel free to contact me or any one of the conference planners, Michael Coyle ([redacted]), Cassandra Laity ([redacted]), Gail McDonald ([redacted]), or Sanford Schwartz ([redacted]).

Since we are still in the process of constructing our mailing list, I wondered if you could suggest the names of several colleagues (along with their institutional affiliations and e-mail addresses if you have them) who might be interested in the organization and the conference. I or one of the other members of the steering committee would be happy to contact them.

Best wishes,

Burt Hatlen ([redacted])

↑ Index

900. Gabriel Gudding
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

On Sat, 28 Nov 1998, Bob Grumman wrote:

> one. She's not too deft at the kind of fencing required.
>
> tuo si
> edis

1). As to your Latin: I DID edit the above by myself.

2). Kenneth Tynan: "A critic is someone who knows the way but cannot drive the car."

Trouble is, poets keep making shortcuts. I think the critic in question needs a new Baedeker.

-G. Bunsen, III

↑ Index

901. David Erben (Art)
Forgive Me For I Have Sinned...
Sat 28 Nov 1998

Friends,

Some of you who recall my name appearing regularly on this list in the distant and recent past might have noticed that I have taken a few months off from posting here. I could say I was travelling out west on vacation or I was enjoying time without teaching in more than a few years or that I had a series of respiratory infections and was on massive doses of interventionist drugs most of the time and all of those would be at least partially true.

But more recently there is a somewhat more nefarious reason my name and my words haven't appeared on your screens. I have been being "others." Using my childhood memories from CCD education and tones so over the top that I thought someone would surely notice quickly; and starting with an insidious series of provocative subject lines targeting a well known critic (sorry Marjorie!)), moving on to create narratives as an agent provacateur , then duelling using the rhetoric of various absolutisms, and finally concocting a paranoid fantasy of Arababble about non poets not being able to critique poetry that would make Ross Perot proud, I have been, for the past week and a half, creating a number of cyber-personas (borrowing from Joyce and the Old Testament sneaking in a few jokes about JD's "on the one hand, on the other hand" strategies in the De Man essays, the early thing on Freud, and elsewhere). I was going to continue this little performance, but the listowner tells me I must come clean at this point since things are getting out of hand (sorry...). So this is my little announcement/circumfession. I hope no one took any of my silliness seriously, all that talk about my book on visual poetry and the fear and trembling at 1789 and May '68, and the hack-job poem pricking the sensitive by using Foucault (I particularly like the lines I came up with on the virtues of name calling). How could those of you who know my whimsical tendencies towards dramatic excess not have heard me there? So much for intention and the re-marking of the signature...dissemination indeed!!!...and all that. Its all gotten to be an awful lot of work though, and kind of tedious, posting all these things, so the time has come to put this thing to bed.

So this is me saying so long and reminding everyone about some favorite lines from Glas and Lyle Lovett . . .

"Its/His signature, as thought of the remain(s), will envelop this corpus,
but no doubt will not be contained therein.
This is -- a legend." (1a)

"Words are like posion..."

↑ Index

902. Hannah J Sassaman
Re: I Love Learning Things
Sat 28 Nov 1998

I agree -- one thing that struck me about Pottersville was how similar it seemed to any portrayal of New York in "showgirl-makes-good" type movies of the thirties and forties. Everyone in those movies owned nightclubs and drank themselves silly. IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE is morally polarized in comparison to those flicks. Which world were the moviegoers of the era rooting for most of the time?

Hannah

joel lewis said:
(c;
(c; Hannah--

(c;
(c; I just saw It's a wonderful time for the 300th time & decided that Pottersville
(c; (the honky-tonk town that emerges because George Bailey is never born)
(c; looks a whole lot more appealing than dull Bedford Falls!
(c;
(c; joel lewis
(c;

--
****

Hannah Jane Sassaman
Sophomore, University of Pennsylvania
Majoring in Theatre Arts and English
Editor at CrossConnect (http://ccat.sas.upenn.edu/xconnect)

School Address: 4009 Pine St. Philadelphia, PA 19104
Home Address: 42 Framingham Lane Pittsford, NY 14534

Talk not of wasted affection; affection never was wasted.
-- Henry Wadsworth Longfellow

My father warned me about men and booze, but he never mentioned a word about women and cocaine.

-- Tallulah Bankhead

↑ Index

903. MAYHEW
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

So we're back to petty sniping at Marjorie Perloff's syllabus? This was one of the low points of the list almost a year ago.

My point about relative anonymity: most people's syllabi are not publicly debated by a group of 700 people. Let's turn the spotlight on Bob Grumman for a while.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

904. Bob Grumman
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

Jonathan Mayhew wrote:

"So we're back to petty sniping at Marjorie Perloff's syllabus? This was one of the low points of the list almost a year ago.

"My point about relative anonymity: most people's syllabi are not publicly debated by a group of 700 people. Let's turn the spotlight on Bob Grumman for a while."

Nor was Marjorie's: only three or four people found fault with it; a half dozen of so others tch-tched. Certainly 700 did not participate. Moreover, I wasn't the one to restart the squabble but felt I ought to correct what Marjorie said about it in her retort to the one who did. But I'm all for laying off Marjorie and spotlighting Me! I have a few poems and an essay at Light & Dust, stuff at my own hardly-ever-visited Comprepoetica site (address below) and a play that almost nobody thinks much of at http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Olympus/3228. You should be able to get enough ammunition to use against or for me from these.

--Bob G.

Bob Grumman

[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site

----------276647F05A4D--

↑ Index

905. Bob Grumman
Re: Forgive Me For I Have Sinned...
Sat 28 Nov 1998

Well, David, you sure fooled me. I thought you were writing Marjorie's posts.

--Bob G.

David Erben (Art) wrote:
>
> Friends,
>
> Some of you who recall my name appearing regularly on this list in the > distant and recent past might have noticed that I have taken a few months > off from posting here. I could say I was travelling out west on > vacation or I was enjoying time without teaching in more than a few years > or that I had a series of respiratory infections and was on massive doses > of interventionist drugs most of the time and all of those would be at > least partially true.

>
> But more recently there is a somewhat more nefarious reason my name and my > words haven't appeared on your screens. I have been being "others." Using > my childhood memories from CCD education and tones so over the top that I > thought someone would surely notice quickly; and starting with an > insidious series of provocative subject lines targeting a well known > critic (sorry Marjorie!)), moving on to create narratives as an > agent provacateur , then duelling using the rhetoric of various > absolutisms, and finally concocting a paranoid fantasy of Arababble about > non poets not being able to critique poetry that would make Ross Perot > proud, I have been, for the past week and a half, creating a number of > cyber-personas (borrowing from Joyce and the Old Testament sneaking in a > few jokes about JD's "on the one hand, on the other hand" strategies in > the De Man essays, the early thing on Freud, and elsewhere). I was going > to continue this little performance, but the listowner tells me I must > come clean at this point since things are getting out of hand (sorry...).
> So this is my little announcement/circumfession. I hope no one took any > of my silliness seriously, all that talk about my book on visual poetry > and the fear and trembling at 1789 and May '68, and the hack-job poem > pricking the sensitive by using Foucault (I particularly like the lines I > came up with on the virtues of name calling). How could those of you who > know my whimsical tendencies towards dramatic excess not have heard me > there? So much for intention and the re-marking of the > signature...dissemination indeed!!!...and all that. Its all gotten to be > an awful lot of work though, and kind of tedious, posting all these > things, so the time has come to put this thing to bed.
>
> So this is me saying so long and reminding everyone about some favorite > lines from Glas and Lyle Lovett . . .
>
> "Its/His signature, as thought of the remain(s), will envelop this corpus,
> but no doubt will not be contained therein.
>   This is -- a legend." (1a)
>
> "Words are like posion..."

↑ Index

906. Emily Lloyd

Critic-Penitents, Poet-Penitents

Sat 28 Nov 1998

Critcs have so much "power" in poetry because poetry has so little power (despite gains) in the U.S. as a commodity. People will see heavily hyped films whether or not film scholars/critics "approve" them--and even whether or not pop critics like Siskel & Ebert do. I don't know of any pop poetry critics--by which I mean critics whose opinion the average person (let's say even average college or post-college graduate) doesn't have to go looking for, doesn't have to be already interested in poetry to read, hear, or be bombarded with. The closest to pop would not be Vendler, but, now, Hass--the Sunday Washington Post having a larger, I'm pretty sure, readership than the New Yorker. And, for the most part, poetry is to the novel as "20th Century Music" is to the overwhelming majority of the music on FM radio. I'm not even talking Babbitt or Boulez poetry "equivalents." I'm talking Robert Pinsky. Go door to door and ask folks who the current poet laureate is--who ANY of the laureates (besides, of course, Frost) were. Poetry only sells well if it's by a singer, actor, pope or ex-president. Or, whoops, Maya Angelou. Most people will still define poetry as writing that rhymes. These are not stupid people. Even among "cultured" people--or people who wish to appear cultured--knowing who's being put forth as tops in poetry in the mainstream (don't even think about any other stream) is no priority.

Poetry crit is read by poets, critics, and college-students-who-are-forced. This, I think, is why it seems less to separate the wheat from the chaff that to separate poets from poets. The ultimate use (far, perhaps, from the ultimate interest or concern of the critic) to which crit is put is to determine what's taught in schools. Not what's read by any other or the larger population. Perhaps not what's actually read by those students to whom it's assigned.

Why are we angry when what we consider bad poetry (I'll cite Pinsky for the ease of it) is put forth as the best (or even as good)? I can't imagine it can be too much about money. I'd guess it's because we have some kind of love and respect for poetry (that ol' abstraction, "poetry")--such that the "bad" stuff feels like an abuse of poetry. Bad poetry has occasionally made me, at least, stomp around the house, bang my head against a wall, rant, and practically pluck my eyes out because they've offended me. I've responded (and will again, probably) more indignantly to bad poetry than I have to all manner of shootings, a couple bombings, etc. This is either because I'm a poet, a critic, or a crazy person, all things I've actively been at certain times.

I take it for granted that critics, too, have a love of & respect for poetry--and of course they need not be poets. Many excellent poets are lousy teachers and critics; many excellent critics might be lousy poets. Frankly, the closer I've come to reading as much or knowing as much about poetry as the most qualified (ok, credentialed) critics, the less likely I've been to write it. I quit writing poetry a year and a half ago--out of love & respect for poetry. I still consider myself highly qualified to critique it (and no, I'm not, nor have I ever tried to be, a published critic.) Perhaps more highly than when I wrote it. Perhaps more highly for having written it. What's clear is that I wasn't able at the time, and may never be, to write the poetry that I, as a critic, would find worthy of "poetry." For the record, I quit when in the peak of high favor with my MFA profs & other poets whose work I respected. That's a big "so what." I did not consider them rigorous enough critics. One prof, in workshop, asked the poets to forget her critiques and concentrate on mine instead. So it's not a case of "I'm my own toughest critic." I was everyone's <grin>.

Finally (and I apologize for having been rambling & disjunct), I would never assume a necessary relation between a love of poetry and a love of poets (and keepin' 'em all happy). I'd far prefer a love of poetry. Hell, I'd prefer blind submission processes to even the lowliest of litmags (which reminds me: eds. of litmags should be at least as infuriating to this crowd as critics, no?) As yet, I think we should still be grateful to Perloff (and Perelman, Lazer, etc.) The Canon is still a far more "dangerous" opponent than their (or our individual) canons. All of this kind of reminds me of my 2 yrs. or so of "hardcore" lesbian feminism. More energy & time was spent on such questions as "Should lesbians be allowed to wear lipstick?" and "Should we even SPEAK to bisexual women?" than, well, I dunno, "How can we stop courts from automatically denying lesbian mothers custody?"

Focue. Perspective. Practicality.
em

↑ Index

907. William Slaughter
Mudlark
Sat 28 Nov 1998

MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

New and On View: Mudlark Poster No. 15

"The Point of Touching" and "Moving Bodies"

Prose Poems by Michael Hettich

* * *

Current Issue: Mudlark No. 9

THE ROAD TO OCOSINGO

Chapbook by Andrew Schelling

* * *

Next Issue: Mudlark No. 10

IMPROVISATIONS ON TITLES OF WORKS BY JEAN DUBUFFET

Chapbook by Diane Wald

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter, Editor
E-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

908. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: non-poets on poetry

Sat 28 Nov 1998

imho, difficult poetries profit from intervention by critics who are sensitive to same... and from where i sit, marjorie is one of the latter, and one of the best, period... (if i may, marjorie) prof. perloff didn't become prof. perloff just b/c she's at stanford---anyone who knows anything about her knows how hard she's had to work to distinguish herself, to even "make it" with the stanford crowd... in her ability to read various works "closely" (shorthand alert here), she often speaks directly to my aspirations and experiences as a poet...

there are other, more broadly cultural studies of poetry that are valuable, as well, and that help make my work valuable to me... we have a number of folks on this list capable of such reckonings, as i've said before... and of course i continue to value and respect the work of so many other poets (of course)...

i find mself friends---and friendship is what i value---both with marjorie, for example, and with dave chirot... i dislike it when i see friends quarrel, but i understand that the world, too, can be a difficult place...

from where i'm sitting, i think kathy lou schultz points to the salient issue---the relationship twixt the (only apparently) dichotomous realms of literature (e.g., but may be expanded in semiotic terms) and critique... these are nice categories to deploy, in certain situations, but can be extremely delimiting under certain other situations (just ask a. jenn sondheim, for one)...

i think this discussion is beginning to sound a whole lot like the hoary "two cultures" conflict (humanities "vs." sciences)... i appreciate david erben's (hi david!) sense of humor... and i admire jonathan m's capacity for cutting to the quick of things...

binaries can be useful, in that they point to actualities of practice... but they can be reified, to use an overworked expression... i hear some reified rumblings rumbling forth from these vicinities on occasion, though i sympathize, i really do, with the poet tribes, "academic poet" that i am, even as i will rise to the defense of the critical function (me, who imagines himself a scholar-poet sometimes, but other times a plain ole writer)...

oh and if i had three feet, one would most certainly be up my ass...

///

joe

↑ Index

909. Joe Brennan

Fwd: let's play monopoly

Sat 28 Nov 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_912281360_boundary

thought this might interest some list members.

j..

--part0_912281360_boundary

> air-za01.mail.aol.com (v51.29) with SMTP; Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:37:52 -0500 > [128.143.200.198])
> by rly-za01.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
> with ESMTP id LAA01840;
> Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:37:51 -0500 (EST)
> LAA75037 for heidegger-outgoing; Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:16:46 -0500 > [redacted] using -f > lists.village.virginia.edu (8.8.5/8.6.6) with ESMTP id LAA34328 for > <[redacted]>; Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:16:41 -0500

From: [redacted]

by imo17.mx.aol.com (IMOv16.10) id SNRQa08006 for <[redacted]>; Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:15:37 -0500 (EST)
Date: Sat, 28 Nov 1998 11:15:37 EST
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: let's play monopoly

please forward to everyone you know who reads:

Fellow Writers and Readers:

For those of you who've missed the front page news this past week, Barnes and Nobel, and biggest bookseller in the country, as just bought Ingram, the biggest book distributor in the country. The Washington Post likened the deal to King Kong buying Godzilla. To say that it will change the publishing industry forever, or that independent booksellers, authors, and publishers are unhappy about it, is a gross understatement.

The following message from Tom Purdom, a member of Science Fiction Writers of America (SFWA) is being forward to writers' organizations all over the country with the request that it be forwarded to anyone and everyone who ever buys a book. I'll be sending my letters, per Tom's letter, and I hope all of you will consider doing the same.

Mary

[BEGIN TOM'S MESSAGE]

Last night I received a message from Science Fiction and Fantasy Writers of America asking me to write the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission. I've written both of them, and it occurs to me this issue should interest anyone who reads.

On Friday, Barnes and Noble announced it is buying Ingram Books-- the major national wholesaler in the book business. Ingram is the primary supplier for the independent bookstores and chains in the United States. If this deal goes through, the largest retail bookstore in the country will control the major wholesaler. Ingram is also the major supplier for Barnes and Noble's chief online competitor--amazon.com.

For the last twenty years, writers have been dealing with a corporate consolidation that has changed the nature of the publishing industry. The overall result has been a reduction in the choices offered readers.

The American Booksellers Association is asking its members to write the Attorney General and the FTC. SFWA is joining in this effort. Other writers organizations are probably jumping on the bandwagon. The founder of SFWA, Damon

Knight, has urged all SFWA members to send letters. Another SFWA past president, Jane Yollen, has called the takeover "the final nail in a number of coffins."

To quote the ABA statement: "This acquisition, should it be allowed to take place, is just one more example of the large scale corporate consolidation that has infiltrated every corner of our culture.....Consumers are left with an environment in which fewer and fewer people are deciding which books get published, and ultimately, which books Americans can read and buy....This deal would make independent bookstores virtually dependent upon their largest competitor....While there are some smaller, unaffiliated book wholesalers that provide independent booksellers with excellent service, Ingram Book Company is a primary distribution source for the vast majority of ABA member stores...."

The relevant addresses are:
Attorney General Janet Reno
Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20530

Robert Pitofsky
Chairman
Federal Trade Commission
Pennsylvania Avenue & 6th Street, NW
Washington, DC 20580

The ABA would like to receive courtesy copies of all letters to Reno or Pitofsky. Their fax number is [redacted]. Their mailing address is:

American Booksellers Association
828 South Broadway
Tarrytown, NY 10591

Two years ago, Senator Hatch made two attempts to slip significant changes in the copyright law through Congress. The American Society of Journalists and Authors mailed everyone on its list, we responded with faxes and emails, and Senator Hatch retreated. In the past, writers and readers have been an invisible community. By the time we learned about developments like the Barnes and Noble deal, it was usually too late to do much. Now, thanks to online communications, we can join campaigns like this knowing thousands of other writers and readers are mounting an immediate response.

The ABA is asking for letters, not emails or faxes. If you don't have time to write a couple of paragraphs, two sentences will do. Just tell the AG and the FTC you support the ABA position on Barnes and Noble's attempt to buy Ingram and hope the Justice Department will initiate anti-trust action.

Please feel free to forward this.

For more information on this subject, you can consult the ABA Bookweb site at http:www.bookweb.org

bob

--part0_912281360_boundary--

↑ Index

910. Karen Kelley
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

The Poetics of Indeterminacy being a prime example.

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> imho, difficult poetries profit from intervention by critics who are sensitive to same... and from where i sit, marjorie is one of the latter, and one of the best, period...

↑ Index

911. Charles Bernstein
Free Poetics
Sat 28 Nov 1998

I am not writing to dispute an assertion or tone in any specific post, though I have several in mind, but because I am concerned that the tabloidization of the recent list is discouraging people from participating who don't want to enter into such a fray. By tabloidization I mean persistent posts that are big on attitude but little else; that are more focussed on generating attention than provoking thought. Maybe I am just sticking my hand against the wind, to feel the breeze; that is, I realize that some of what I am concerned about here is part of the structure of the listserve environment. But technology is not destiny and I am convinced that the group of people subscribed to this list can edit themselves in a way responsive to what this list might aspire to be. I am not writing this to provoke a round of defensive remarks -- I understand that every specific I might give would be open to question, no doubt reflects my misunderstanding of the underlying issues, or simply reflects my disagreement with another perspective, etc. I am, of course, expressing my preference, with the understanding that, as list moderator, that preference needs to be articulated to the list more forcefully than I have generally been willing to in the past.

For this list is moderated, as all the subscribers now. Joel and I are reluctant to intervene in any given exchange, or about any given post, because I believe that free and open and even intemperate exchange is a fundamental feature of dialogue. Disagreement is always welcome. But the viability of this space requires a greater level of care in what is posted than has been evident in some -- indeed a small but visible minority -- of the posts in the recent past, where self-proclaimed "cheap shots" and "name calling" end up dominating the space, creating more spectacle and than conversation . Heavy attitude is fine at times, but I am finding that while I can tolerate a heavy diet of it, I am losing my patience for it.

↑ Index

912. Gabriel Gudding
The Virtues of Going Over The Top
Sat 28 Nov 1998

On Sat, 28 Nov 1998, David Erben (Art) wrote: > tones so over the top that I thought someone would surely notice quickly

What are the virtues of going over the top?

1). When, like the sides of a hippy fortress, the sides of debate are so thickened by tedious argument and tut-tuttle that one cannot punch through them, one must go over them.

2). Just as the arrow must fly over the cat in the plum tree in order to penetrate the rainbow above the meadow of oleander, so also must my rhetoric overshoot your feline brain on its way to the moon.

3). All successful catapults fling items _over_ palisades, missiles being unable to fly through the ground.

4). Aside from skirts and possibly socks, the best garments go over the top.

5). All "boss" poetry goes over the top. And why shouldn't argument follow it?

-- Gaga Gagarin

↑ Index

913. Leonard Brink
Re: non-poets on poetry
Sat 28 Nov 1998

> Chirot informs the List that I have no right to comment on poetry because I'm not a poet.

Marjorie, a lot of the posts can be boiled down to simply being critical of you for being a critic, doing what critics DO, i.e. making a difference between the good, the bad, and the merely ugly as you see it; taking a stand for what you believe in instead of being "tolerant."

Pinsky...Howe...Howe?...Pinsky?..."Can(n)ons to the right of us ... Can(n)ons to the left of us"... personally, I can't tolerate the idea of having to side with either of them. Maybe that means I'm a loose cannon caught in the crossfire of the Determinacy of Criticism.

↑ Index

914. louis stroffolino

Re: Critic-Penitents, Poet-Penitents

Sat 28 Nov 1998

I (sometimes) like arguing with critics and/or scholars. But of course I realize when I do so, I realize that they do something I either can't, won't, or simply didn't, do. There is a skill to a certain kind of general, binary, sweeping, thinking that critics often employ. It is something I respect, even if it seems sometimes I don't. I think it can be useful for poets. I, for one, know that some of my poems are written out of arguing with critics (and eventually arguing against arguing). I'd rather do it IN the poem often than in what some would say is more "legitimazing" prose, but then I'm aware that some would say that such poetry is really more "like" criticism (the enemy) than it is like poetry. Sometimes this dilemma can be very fascinating. Sometimes I can even get myself to be "reductive" enough to write things that "pass" for essays in an academic, or journalistic, sense (it's an "or" not an "end"). (and sometimes I'm even "lyric" enough to pass for what some journals call "poetry").

Anyway, this isn't really about me. So, let me just say that--at thew risk of sounding fuddy-duddy in valuing communication--that I have been on a Shakespeare email list for about as long as I've been on this... And there's a certain (at the risk of sounding sexist, which is NOT my intention) "gentlemanliness" to the nature of the argument on that list which is lacking here. I don't want to hold the discussion there as a STANDARD that we, at poetics, should strive for (for there's a lot of silly dross there too). But at least there's an idea of respect for the varying speakers there admist the disagreements about opinions. Bitterness is often justified, entertaining, and a powerful tool for communication, but the email forum seems to encourage no time for reflection---especially when the list is so free ranging. Awhile back Kevin or Dodie said something about how those who complain about hierarchies may really want them. I sometimes we think we need to "free" poetics FROM its current "freedom" and set some limits to the discussions.... well, this seems incredibly BLAND of me (to myself at least) to say this. Maybe we could PAY somebody to be a moderator (like the talk about paying NFL officials), but then it would make the most interesting talk backchannel pleas to the moderator (but then a lot of the most interesting talk MAY VERY WELL BE backchannel anyway), like lobbyists doing the real work while the floor of congress is a figurehead. ---chr

On Sat, 28 Nov 1998, Emily Lloyd wrote:

> *Critcs have so much "power" in poetry because poetry has so little power (despite gains) in the U.S. as a commodity. People will see heavily hyped films whether or not film scholars/critics "approve" them--and even whether or not pop critics like Siskel & Ebert do. I don't know of any pop poetry critics--by which I mean critics whose opinion the average person (let's say even average college or post-college graduate) doesn't have to go looking for, doesn't have to be already interested in poetry to read, hear, or be bombarded with. The closest to pop would not be Vendler, but, now, Hass--the Sunday Washington Post having a larger, I'm pretty sure, readership than the New Yorker. And, for the most part, poetry is to the novel as "20th Century Music" is to the overwhelming majority of the music on FM radio. I'm not even talking Babbitt or Boulez poetry "equivalents." I'm talking Robert Pinsky. Go door to door and ask folks who the current poet laureate is--who ANY of the laureates (besides, of course, Frost) were. Poetry only sells well if it's by a singer, actor, pope or ex-president. Or, whoops, Maya Angelou. Most people will still define poetry as writing that rhymes. These are not stupid people. Even among "cultured" people--or people who wish to appear cultured--knowing who's being put forth as tops in poetry in the mainstream (don't even think about any other stream) is no priority.*
>
> *Poetry crit is read by poets, critics, and college-students-who-are-forced. This, I think, is why it seems less to separate the wheat from the chaff that to separate poets from poets. The ultimate use (far, perhaps, from the ultimate interest or concern of the critic) to which crit is put is to determine what's taught in schools. Not what's read by any other or the larger population. Perhaps not what's actually read by those students to whom it's assigned.*
>
> *Why are we angry when what we consider bad poetry (I'll cite Pinsky for the ease of it) is put forth as the best (or even as good)? I can't imagine it can be too much about money. I'd guess it's because we have some kind of love and respect for poetry (that ol' abstraction, "poetry")--such that the "bad" stuff feels like an abuse of poetry. Bad poetry has occasionally made me, at least, stomp around the house, bang my head against a wall, rant, and practically pluck my eyes out because they've offended me. I've responded (and will again, probably) more indignantly to bad poetry than I have to all manner of shootings, a couple bombings, etc. This is either because I'm a poet, a critic, or a crazy person, all things I've actively been at certain times.*
>
> *I take it for granted that critics, too, have a love of & respect for poetry--and of course they need not be poets. Many excellent poets are lousy teachers and critics; many excellent critics might be lousy poets. Frankly, the closer I've come to reading as much or knowing as much about poetry as the most qualified (ok, credentialed) critics, the less likely I've been to write it. I quit writing poetry a year and a half ago--out* > of love & respect for poetry. I still consider myself highly qualified to critique it (and no, I'm not, nor have I ever tried to be, a published critic.) Perhaps more highly than when I wrote it. Perhaps more highly for having written it. What's clear is that I wasn't able at the time, and may never be, to write the poetry that I, as a critic, would find worthy of "poetry." For the record, I quit when in the peak of high favor with my MFA profs & other poets whose work I respected. That's a big "so what." I did not consider them rigorous enough critics. One prof, in workshop, asked the poets to forget her critiques and concentrate on mine instead. So it's not a case of "I'm my own toughest critic." I was everyone's <grin>.

>
> Finally (and I apologize for having been rambling & disjunct), I would never assume a necessary relation between a love of poetry and a love of poets (and keepin' 'em all happy). I'd far prefer a love of poetry. Hell, I'd prefer blind submission processes to even the lowliest of litmags (which reminds me: eds. of litmags should be at least as infuriating to this crowd as critics, no?) As yet, I think we should still be grateful to Perloff (and Perelman, Lazer, etc.) The Canon is still a far more "dangerous" opponent than their (or our individual) canons.
>
> All of this kind of reminds me of my 2 yrs. or so of "hardcore" lesbian feminism. More energy & time was spent on such questions as "Should lesbians be allowed to wear lipstick?" and "Should we even SPEAK to bisexual women?" than, well, I dunno, "How can we stop courts from automatically denying lesbian mothers custody?"
>
> Focue. Perspective. Practicality.
> em

↑ Index

915. Steven Shoemaker

Re: Free Poetics

Sat 28 Nov 1998

Well, I imagine the backlash is on its way, but I'm with Charles on this one. I use to think that one of the things I liked most about the list was its tendency toward anarchy, the fact of it *un*moderation etc. And there have been plenty of zesty brouhahas along the way that I've enjoyed. But lately it seems as if there is very, very little actual discussion going on, and I'm certainly one of those people Charles mentions who have found themselves gradually alienated by the just-plain-nastiness (my word, not CB's) that has become so prevalent.

steve

↑ Index

916. Ron Silliman

Bull Run

Sat 28 Nov 1998

I took the kids to Manasas yesterday to see the site of the first Battle of Bull Run only to discover that the Civil War re-enactment was really going on here on The List whilst our backs were turned. My attitude toward this is pretty much the same as my answer to Colin's question yesterday, "Who were the good guys?" "They all were. That's what makes war so wasteful and stupid."

I've often thought that the really radical distinction between our age and those of decades past is not one of more (or less) good poets per se [although I'm inclined to believe that there are more good writers right now than ever before in history], but rather that there are far fewer critics of substance. I think that Marjorie Perloff (and Peter Quartermain, Jerry McGann, Alan Golding, Steve Evans, Maria Damon, Tom Vogler &c &c &c) takes a lot of flack because she (and they) stands in for "all of criticism" in its positive functions. If Marjorie's work has a weak spot, I think it's that she knows just how little good criticism is being written about contemporary poetry and she's always trying to fill all of the gaps. Her energy always astounds me as does her ability to bring extraordinary powers of concentration of every project she tackles.

A much more interesting question than why does X or Y not make it onto reading list A is always "what is it about X or Y that keeps someone from putting it onto reading lists A, B, C, etc.?"

Yes, it's true that critics who don't write or publish or primarily publish poetry will see the poem differently than do other poets. Poets often read the poem as though the other poet were "solving the problems" put forward by the poem and vote heavily with their (my) emotions on how well that gets done. Is it the only way to read a poem? Is there any such "only way"? Not in this galaxy there's not. And I write this as one of the loudest proponents of poets writing criticism there has ever been.

I note that I, for one, don't feel "disabled" to speak about the fiction I read, although I haven't ever published fiction (tho I did "win" one Pushcart Prize for same and was ostensibly hired as a fiction teacher by UCSD some 16 years ago, which says more about the institutionalization of genre than anything else). Ditto the films I see or music I hear, although I've never ventured into those media either. I've been reading Kathy Acker on Goya this weekend. Should I presume that this should not have been written?

There are also people in virtually every poetry scene who are important to it who publish neither poetry nor criticism, or else very very little. We lost two of these folks in the past year or so in Barry Cox and Charles Watts. Were their opinions not of value? That seems non-sensical on the face of it. I think it's very difficult to understand or articulate precisely how poetry is diminished by the loss of someone who doesn't characteristically speak up, but I never met anyone who knew these people (or others like them) who wouldn't admit it.

In some ways, that silence replicates the position of most of the folks who lurk on this list. This list, after all, has 700 recipients but can handle only 50 messages per day.

If anything, we need more of all these social functions in and around the poem. We certainly need 100 Marjorie Perloffs, preferably all in contention with one another so as to create a true public discourse about literature that we would, every one of us, benefit from. If nothing else, the arguments who have more in the way of nuance.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

917. Leonard Brink

Re: Ganick's long poem

Sun 29 Nov 1998

Randy Prunty writes:

> Peter, I can't read your poem.
> Now, what does this mean. It means I can't treat your poem like I treat (most) other poems. .....
> I hope you respond to this, but perhaps not until you've allowed others to respond to your work and my questions.

To me, reading Peter's poem is like picking one's way through a sort of multi-colored and many-faceted Australia in the shape of a mountain. It is an immense, hard going, and deserted place in terms of the visitor's prior expectations but so rich on its own terms that one fears getting lost in it.

↑ Index

918. A. Jenn Sondheim

==========

Sun 29 Nov 1998

=====

==========

Fierce Theodor has wrought this sonnet.
Norn walked to Valkyrie, true fey Princess lost in Mordor's distance, wilt thou say I abjure rumor lost and truth regained. I speak of Mordor's legions, O charmful Magister, of fired visage, know thou what Norn will speak, in light of tongueless Norn, in light of mouthless Norn and speechless Norn? The Portal formed the Wander of many a fey Princess; I formed them, they formed them. Would that Sorcery have no role but obvious Sincerity; would Upper and Nether World clash at volcanic Rim, defeat of legionnaire and Norn alike.

==========

↑ Index

919. Peter Ganick

Fwd: GOMA/english y castellano version

Sun 29 Nov 1998

> UA+MA
> URGENT ACTION OF MAIL ART
>
> GOM@>(Global Organization of Mail Artists)
>
> November, 26, 1998
>
> Pinochet, the justice and Humberto Nilo
>
> Approximately a year ago, the Director and Academic of the Arts School of the University from Chile, Humberto Nilo Saavedra, promoted a Mail Art call to please the freedom in education for the arts. Months later, he was expelled from his chair. The dictatorship continued operating. Now, the ex-dictator and Chilean life senator, Augusto Pinochet, has been arrested . In such an unexpected way, he is in the custody of the court in England as a result of the request for extradition from a Spanish judge, Baltasar GarzÃ³n. The charges are for more than 90 crimes of genocide, international terrorism and tortures. Faced with the danger that the process can be stopped by Spanish reactionary forces, we asked for solidarity to all the mail artists for justice to be strictly applied.
>
> The group AU MA+gom@ (Urgent Action â€“ Mail Art), consider the first stage of this project to be closed, once achieved that both Spanish and English Court sentenced the ex-dictator and Chilean life senator, Augusto Pinochet, must to be put in trial for crimes of genocide, international terrorism and torture.
>
> For these crimes, Pinochet was requested by the laws of several countries (Spain, France, Germany, Switzerland...and others). The extradition proceedings will take time. However, we consider the precedent established will make possible to be optimists about the make up of an International Court to fight the crimes against humanity.

On the other hand, our campaign was mainly aimed at Mail Art world, even thought a lot of people from another circles did identify with our call. In that respect, we want to declare that our report of the case of Humberto Nilo -ex Director of the University of Chileâ€™s Fine Art School, who was dimissed from his position after the organization of the Mail Art exhibition "Stop: liberty, diversity and pluralism"- is still not solved. Because this reason, we will continue making all efforts to give him back his position.

Adhesion to the list: [redacted] subject: adhesion
Participate in future actions of GOM@ : [redacted] subject: member

Pinochet, la justicia y Humberto Nilo

Hace aproximadamente un aÃ±o, el profesor de BB.AA. de la Universidad de Chile, Humberto Nilo Saavedra, promovÃa una convocatoria de Mail Art en favor de la libertad de enseÃ±anza para las artes. Unos meses despuÃ©s, era expulsado de su cÃ¡tedra. La dictadura seguÃa operando. Ahora ha sido detenido el ex-dictador y senador vitalicio chileno, Augusto Pinochet. De la manera mÃ¡s insospechada ha quedado bajo custodia en Inglaterra ante la peticiÃ³n de extradiciÃ³n de un juez espaÃ±ol, Baltasar GarzÃ³n. La acusaciÃ³n es de mÃ¡s de 90 delitos por genocidio, terrorismo internacional y tortura. Ante el peligro de que el proceso sea detenido por fuerzas reaccionarias espaÃ±olas, solicitamos a todos los mail artistas su solidaridad para que la justicia se aplique con todo rigor.

EL COLECTIVO AU MA+gom@ (AcciÃ³n Urgente - OrganizaciÃ³n Mundial del Mail Art), da por concluida la primera etapa de este proceso, una vez conseguido que tanto los tribunales espaÃ±oles como los ingleses hayan sentenciado que el ex-dictador Chileno y senador vitalicio Augusto Pinochet, debe ser juzgado por los mÃºltiples crimenes de genocidio, terrorismo internacional y tortura.
Delitos cuyo procesamiento ha sido solicitado por diversos paÃses.(EspaÃ±a, Francia, Alemania, Suiza...) El proceso de extradiciÃ³n, probablemente serÃ¡ largo. Pero consideramos que a partir de estos momentos, el precedente sentado permitirÃ¡ contemplar con nuevas perspectivas la formaciÃ³n de un Tribunal Internacional para combatir los crÃmenes contra la humanidad.
Por otro lado, nuestro manifiesto iba dirigido al universo del Mail Art, que es donde nos movemos. Bien es cierto que al mismo se han sumado otras personas y colectivos que se han identificado con nuestro llamamiento. En este sentido, queremos dejar constancia de que nuestra denuncia por el caso del ex-Director de Bellas Artes de la Universidad de Chile, Humberto Nilo, expulsado de su cÃ¡tedra despuÃ©s de organizar una covocatoria de Mail Art por "La Libertad en la EnseÃ±anza de las Artes", no ha sido solucionado. Es por ello que proseguiremos en nuestro esfuerzo para que le sea restituido su cargo.

Adhesiones a la lista a: [redacted] subject: adhesion
Participa en futuras acciones de GOM@: [redacted] subject: member

More than 300 Signatures/Firmas until/hasta 25 November 1998:

A Cova da Terra
Abel Figueras
Abraham Vecina GutiÃ©rrez
AG(+A)e-1
Agurrak
Aiolidiggi
Alberto Duarte
Alberto GonzÃ¡lez
Alejandra Sequeira
Alejandro BeltrÃ¡n
Alfons Herraiz
Alfonso Sorribes
Alicia Bay Laurell
Alicia Gil
Aljosa Abrahamsberg
Amir Brito Cador
Amoniako-Markt
Amy Baylaurel Casey
Ana Tiscornia
Ana-Aj
Anabel Vanoni
AnahÃ Caceres
AnahÃ Flores
Anchi
Andrea CÃ¡rdenas
AndrÃ©s Burbano
Anna Banana
Anna M PÃ mies
Annie Wallois
Antonio Lirio Barajas
Archivo Situacionista
Arenaton-Docks
Armando PÃ©rez
Artur Matuck
Ateneu GastronÃ³mico Restaurant Enoteca Culture
Beatriz Cilleruelo

> Beatriz RamÃrez
> Beatriz Silva
> Bod Grumman
> BOEK 861
> Boog
> Bora Balar
> Bora Ercan
> Bruno Pollacci
> Btmadra
> Cabrespina
> Calen Rsign
> Carla Sala
> Carles Canetti
> Carlos Ãngel SÃ¡nchez
> Carlos GarcÃa Tomillero
> Carlos RedÃ³n Pastor
> Carlos Romano GarcÃa
> Carlos Vaz Ferreira
> Carmen Cilleruelo
> Carmen Delgado
> Carmen GarcÃa
> Carmen Patricio
> Centro de Iniciativas Culturales y de ComunicaciÃ³n (CICC)
> CÃ©sar Espinosa
> CÃ©sar Reglero
> Charles Francois
> CGT (Tarragona)
> Clara Gari
> Claudia Castelo
> Claudia Liekam
> Clemente Padin
> Colectivo Cine Delirio
> Colectivo Stidna
> Concha JÃ©rez
> Cracker Jack Kid
> Cristiane Neder
> Cristina MartÃnez
> Dan Ferdinande
> Daniel Barrachina Sala
> Daniel Daligand
> Daniel Quiroga
> Daniele Gardiol
> David Batista Chirot
> Denis J. Highberger
> Dinka Todorovick
> Dolores Abrahamsberg
> Dolores May
> Dorren Borrow

> Dr. Olu. Oguibe
> Dulcimira Capisani
> Editorial Pix
> Eduardo DÃaz Espinosa
> Eduardo Lara
> Ejs Kapretz
> Elias Adasme
> ElÃas Levin
> Emanuela Carone
> Emmanuel Ayah Okwabi
> Encuadernaciones El Pavo Real
> Enrique Aguelo
> Ernest NÃºÃ±ez
> Esteban Ãlvarez
> Esteban Tranche
> Estefano Pasquini
> Ettienne Christiaens
> Eugeni Bonet
> Eugeni Guell
> Ever Arts
> Fabio Doctorovich
> Felix Duque
> Fernando GarcÃa Delgado/VÃ³rtice Argentina
> Fernando Reglero Campos
> Festival AtlÃ¡ntico de Lisboa
> Florencia Crescimbeni
> Francesca Maniaci
> Francisca Salvador
> Francisco Arias SolÃs
> Francisco Felipe
> Gabriel Villota
> Gabriela Rangel Mantilla
> GalerÃa Ze dos Bois (Lisboa)
> GB - Debora Gavensky
> Geert De Decker
> Gerhard Ostfalk
> Ghe Schmidt
> Gianni Broi
> Gilbertto Prado
> Giovanni Strada
> Giovanni Tessicini
> Group Public Projects
> Gue Schimdt
> GuÃa Cultural Flirt de Lisboa
> Guido Vermandel
> Guillermo MarÃn
> Guy Bleus
> Guy Ferdinande

> GyÃ¶rgy Galantai
> Hale Tenger
> Hans Braumueller
> Harry Polkinhorn
> Helen Karasavidou
> Hilda Paz
> Hugo Pontes
> Hugo Sil
> Humberto Nilo
> Ina Blom
> Irving Weiss
> Isabel GonzÃ¡lez
> Isabel Jover
> Isabel Ron-Pedrique
> Ivana MartÃnez Vollaro
> Jalil
> James Durand
> James Jabir Titelman
> Jane MarÃa Chambault
> Jas W Felter
> Jaume Bobet
> Javier Almeida
> Javier Creus
> Javier Ildefonso Sobrino
> Jean Torregrosa
> Jennifer Demello
> JJP
> Joachim
> Joan Miqueu Spinasse
> Joe Galliva
> Joel Chace
> John M. Bennett
> Jordi Barrachina
> Jordi Folgado Illa
> Jordi SolÃ©
> Jordi Vidal
> Jorge Daffunchio
> Jorge GarcÃa
> Jorge Garnica
> JosÃ© Antonio LÃ³pez
> Jose Carlos Preciados Domenech
> Jose E. LÃ³pez GÃ¡lves
> Jose Emilio AntÃ³n PecharromÃ¡n
> JosÃ© Espinoza
> JosÃ© Guevara Castro
> JosÃ© Iges
> Jose LÃ³pez GÃ¡lvez
> Jose Van Den Broucke

> JosÃ© Venegas
> Josep Aguilo
> Josep CamÃ³s
> Josep MÂª Damenson
> Josep MÂª Yago
> Josep Noiret "LÂ´Estaminet"
> Joy Garnett
> JPG
> Juan CamÃ³s
> Juan Carlos Romero
> Juan Clua Monreal
> Juan Francisco AragÃ³n
> Juan Guerrero
> Juan M. Niza
> Juan Ragno
> Juan Vicente Aliaga
> Julia Klaniczay
> Julia Lohman
> Julien DÂ´Abrigeon
> Julio Plaza
> K. Van Den Broucke
> Kakart
> Karen Michelsen
> Karl Jirgens
> Klaus Rupp/Merlin
> Koichi Sughiara
> Kurt Vereecken
> L. Nicolas Guigou
> La Clau DÂ´Euterpe
> La Pluie d'Oiseaux
> Ladislao Pablo Gyory
> Latuff
> Laura Andreoni
> Leo Robertazzi
> LeÃ³n Ferrari
> Leonello ZambÃ³n
> Llum GarcÃa
> LuÃs FernÃ¡ndez - Aleph Arts
> Luis Romero
> Luisa Taliento
> Luiz de Aquino Alves Neto
> Luiz Monforte
> Maite Blasco
> Manuel Redon Blanch
> Mar Montero Soya
> Marcelo Sosa
> Marcos Lutyens
> MarÃa Alemany

> MarÃa Antonia YÃ¡Ã±ez
> Maria Jose GÃ³mez NÃ³voa
> MarÃa Luz Zamora Loureiro
> Mariana Perata
> Marianne Muggeridge
> Maribel MartÃnez
> Marisa GonzÃ¡lez
> Marlowe
> Marta Gonzalves
> MartÃ Pineda
> Martim Erre
> Mauricio Guerrero Alarcon
> Mauro Molinari
> Michael Lumb
> Michele Sigurini
> Mikel GarcÃa
> Mircia Rojo
> Miroljub Todorovic
> MisÃº
> MÃ³nica Gallardo
> Montse FornÃ³s
> Muriel Frega
> Muruvvet Turkyilmaz
> Museo de la Nada
> Natalia GarcÃa
> Nathalie Hamard-Wang
> Natxo Xeca
> Navarro Manoli
> Nekane Aramburu
> NÃ©stor Tellechea
> New Jazz
> Nora Menghi
> Norberto Isca
> Norberto JosÃ© MartÃnez
> Norma Morandini
> Nuria NoguÃ©s
> Ozgur Uckan
> P.O.Box
> Paloma Mateos
> Paloma Porras
> Parking
> Pascal Lenoir
> Pascale Follard
> Pat Binder
> Patricia Salas
> Patxi
> Paulo Condini
> Pedro Custodio

> Pedro Meyer
> Pere MoratÃ³
> Pere Sousa - Merz Mail
> Pete Spence
> Pete Spence
> Philippe Castellin
> Philippe Espinesse
> Pier Paolo Limongelli
> Pilar Guijosa
> Postart / "Roodom"
> Postmaster PCBD
> Proyecto Sorpresa
> Pusula Haber Programy
> Rafael Juarez
> Ramiro Ãlvarez
> Ramiro LarraÃn
> Reed Altemus
> Renate Carelse
> Reni Hofmueller
> Richard De Meester
> Robert Adrian
> Roberto Duarte
> Rod Summers
> Rogelio Cerda Castillo
> Rogelio Rodriguez Coronel
> Roger Morris
> RomÃ¡ SolÃ©
> RubÃ©n Sanchez
> Ruth Turner
> Salvador Cobos
> Sandra Botner
> Selim Birsel
> Sepp Rothwangl
> Sergey de Rocombole
> Sergui QuiÃ±onero
> Shifra Goldman
> Silvina Szperling
> Silvio De Gracia
> Simon Baudhuin
> Simona
> Simone Rondelet
> Sugar Irmer
> Susanne Kunkele
> Taller del Sol
> Tamara Stuby
> Tartarugo
> Teresinha Pereira
> The GastronomÃa of the Mediterraneo

> Therese Ectors
> Thierry Merger
> Transforma
> Unai Reglero
> Vagner T.S.
> Vanessa HernÃ¡ndez
> Veha Abrahamsberg
> Veterinarios sin fronteras
> Viktor Todorovick
> Viola Siruthairath
> Vittore Baroni
> Viviana Sasso
> VÃ³rtice
> www.crosses.net
> Xabier Idoate
> Xavier Moreno
> Xer
> Xtof Bruneel
> Xurxo Estevez
> Zaida Reverter
>
> Read more about GOM@ and
> the memory of our action Pinochet, Justice and Humberto Nilo on:
>
> http://www.teleline.es/personal/tartarug
> http://www.fut.es/~boek/Nilo.htm
> http://www.crosses.net/nilo/
> http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Workshop/6345/justicia/auma.htm
>
> please send your cross
> http://www.crosses.net
> ----------
> ----------
> Hans Braumueller
> Licenciado en Artes Plasticas
> Osterstrasse 98
> 20259 Hamburg
> Germany

↑ Index

920. Daniel Carter
thanks torch the angst befired
Sun 29 Nov 1998

glassy void leafy triggerlink the oblique

among other

maybe not so oblique

the/a (Thea)

multi-dimensional

spirallytic spectrum

hard-glowing ardent drive

the emergence of light

immerse/emerge ([m]a[y]a) selves

frayous aspects (of self/Self) in(k) the coming/commingling days/daze knock on word

glyphliff

↑ Index

921. Daniel Carter

Re: Ganick's long poem

Sun 29 Nov 1998

Leonard Brink writes:

> Randy Prunty writes:
>
> Peter, I can't read your poem.
> Now, what does this mean. It means I can't treat your poem like I treat (most) other poems. .....
> I hope you respond to this, but perhaps not until you've allowed others to respond to your work and my questions.
>
> To me, reading Peter's poem is like picking one's way through a sort of multi-colored and many-faceted Australia in the shape of a mountain. It is an immense, hard going, and deserted place in terms of the visitor's prior expectations but so rich on its own terms that one fears getting lost in it.

I copied every bit of Peter's poem to hard drive so I could immerse myself in it in the coming days (knock on would) of living/glyphing.

↑ Index

922. Daniel Carter
Re: thanks torch the angst befired
Sun 29 Nov 1998

> spirallytic spectrum

maybe that should be "spiralytic".

↑ Index

923. henry gould
Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

I haven't seen any civil wars on the list lately, but some little canons have been lining up & popping away - Generals Perloff, Bernstein & Silliman moving up on the left flank - scattered potshots from Gudding Grumman & Gould out on limbs high in the trees - the usual buzzard-shoot around Thanksgiving - settle down, boys! When's Gen'l $50 thousand-dollar Grant gonna get here? - Capt. Gould

:) :) :) :) :) :) rah for the musketeers! :) :) :) _+%- @!

↑ Index

924. Michael W Bibby
Re: this needful thing
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Hi, Aldon:

On Tue, 24 Nov 1998, Aldon Nielsen wrote:

> I need poetry -- I'd like to say that everybody needs poetry --

But this isn't what Perloff said, and her assertion that no one needs poetry inspired my counter-statement that some people do need it--

> but HOW are you going to figure out "what kind" of poetry any particular people might be properly said to need at any given time????

Why is it necessary for me to determine the "kind" of poetry needed? This seems to me to fall back into a prescriptive critical trap--

> We can speak > of what poetry they HAVE produced and/or read -- we can talk of the use > they made of it,,,, we can look at what they have said about their own > needs -- but how would we ever come to any kind of statement about X needed > poetry of the type Y at Z point in time??????

Maybe I'm missing something, but it often seems to me that examining what poetry is produced, circulated, valued, what a social group says about its needs in any given historical moment, all amount to saying "X needed poetry of the type Y at Z point in time"--I don't mean this to be naively presentist--but this just seems to be a matter of analyzing the available evidence, and as a cultural historian of a particular poetry written by specific groups in certain historical moments it seems only just that I begin by listening to what these people have to say about their needs and study this in relation to the poetry they produce--

mb

↑ Index

925. Ruth Danon

Re: Bull Run

Sun 29 Nov 1998

Came back from over the river etcetera to find that the (dreary) argument of last week had escalated. Thank you Ron Silliman and others for suggesting that we have more important things to do with our time (I had 99 messages when I came home). I keep wondering if all this contrariness has to do with some little thing that Pound said -- you can't write poetry in a manner 20 years old. Seems like maybe there are are a lot of 20 year old runs that have reached their limits and the scary questions have to do with where do we go from here (not necessarily falling into the modernist cry of "make it new" -- still there is this question of what do we do now.) In this country poetry proliferates at a great rate. Tomaz Salamun claims that nowhere is there so much support for poetry as in the USA.

Here's something I think about a lot. If I know exactly what I'm about to say and how it will emerge then I'm in deep trouble. Perhaps we all need to know little less about what we are doing, be a little less sure of ourselves, our presuppositions, our stances. Don't mind referring to Yeats here -- out of the quarrel with ourselves we produce poetry-- and y'all know the rest.

And maybe it's this quality of self-sure "knowingness" that links Pinsky (in his typical poems) with so-called experimental writers who already know before they start what the formal, linguistic and political positions need to be to write an "acceptable" poem.

Gotta be lost in the woods a bit to get anywhere.

and at the same time, that statement does undo itself & I know it.

Curious to hear some thoughts.

> From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Bull Run
> Date: Saturday, November 28, 1998 10:35 PM
>
> I took the kids to Manasas yesterday to see the site of the first Battle of > Bull Run only to discover that the Civil War re-enactment was really going > on here on The List whilst our backs were turned. My attitude toward this is > pretty much the same as my answer to Colin's question yesterday, "Who were > the good guys?" "They all were. That's what makes war so wasteful and > stupid."
>
> I've often thought that the really radical distinction between our age
and > those of decades past is not one of more (or less) good poets per se > [although I'm inclined to believe that there are more good writers right now > than ever before in history], but rather that there are far fewer critics
of > substance. I think that Marjorie Perloff (and Peter Quartermain, Jerry > McGann, Alan Golding, Steve Evans, Maria Damon, Tom Vogler &c &c &c) takes a > lot of flack because she (and they) stands in for "all of criticism" in its > positive functions. If Marjorie's work has a weak spot, I think it's that > she knows just how little good criticism is being written about contemporary > poetry and she's always trying to fill all of the gaps. Her energy always > astounds me as does her ability to bring extraordinary powers of > concentration of every project she tackles.
>
> A much more interesting question than why does X or Y not make it onto > reading list A is always "what is it about X or Y that keeps someone from > putting it onto reading lists A, B, C, etc.?"
>
> Yes, it's true that critics who don't write or publish or primarily publish > poetry will see the poem differently than do other poets. Poets often read > the poem as though the other poet were "solving the problems" put forward by > the poem and vote heavily with their (my) emotions on how well that gets > done. Is it the only way to read a poem? Is there any such "only way"?

Not
> in this galaxy there's not. And I write this as one of the loudest > proponents of poets writing criticism there has ever been.
>
> I note that I, for one, don't feel "disabled" to speak about the fiction
I
> read, although I haven't ever published fiction (tho I did "win" one > Pushcart Prize for same and was ostensibly hired as a fiction teacher by > UCSD some 16 years ago, which says more about the institutionalization of > genre than anything else). Ditto the films I see or music I hear, although
> I've never ventured into those media either. I've been reading Kathy Acker > on Goya this weekend. Should I presume that this should not have been > written?
>
> There are also people in virtually every poetry scene who are important
to > it who publish neither poetry nor criticism, or else very very little. We > lost two of these folks in the past year or so in Barry Cox and Charles > Watts. Were their opinions not of value? That seems non-sensical on the face > of it. I think it's very difficult to understand or articulate precisely how > poetry is diminished by the loss of someone who doesn't characteristically > speak up, but I never met anyone who knew these people (or others like them)
> who wouldn't admit it.
>
> In some ways, that silence replicates the position of most of the folks who > lurk on this list. This list, after all, has 700 recipients but can handle > only 50 messages per day.
>

> If anything, we need more of all these social functions in and around the > poem. We certainly need 100 Marjorie Perloffs, preferably all in contention > with one another so as to create a true public discourse about literature > that we would, every one of us, benefit from. If nothing else, the arguments > who have more in the way of nuance.
>
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

926. Mark DuCharme

Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run

Sun 29 Nov 1998

I completely agree with Charles Bernstein's post. What Charles talks about as "attitude" has been defended here recently as "humor" or "satire." Although humor sometimes says as much as polite discussion, name calling, personal attacks, "bravado" & heckling say nothing-- except about those individuals who insist on behaving like teenagers when taking part in a virtual discussion. (Although most teenagers I know behave more maturely than some of the "rebels" on this list).

By using the word "rebels," I'm deliberately alluding to Henry Gould's response to this thread, in which he took up the "Bull Run" theme to say that what was happening was nothing more than pot-shots at the "generals." Why do you feel there are "generals," Henry? One unfortunate remark of a few days ago notwithstanding, no one has addressed the list in a way that calls rank into question. Furthermore-- as you all know-- cheap shots are not reserved for the Marjorie Perloffs. This is not a matter of real rebels staking their turf. Real rebels want to talk about issues, they aren't interested in flippantly defending the practice of cheap shots in a way that's sure to get their name mentioned in a subject heading while shutting down all further discussion.

Mark DuCharme

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

927. s. kaipa
Poetry on CD
Sun 29 Nov 1998

For those of you who might be interested in a collaboration, permutation that crosses poetry into the genre of "experimental" music, you should check out the newest Ninian Hawick's CD, _ Steep Steps_. Patrick F. Durgin does a fabulous reading/rap/performance of an early version of a poem that appears in his new chapbook, _Pundits Scribes Pupils_. If the words Seefeel, Felt, and Suicide mean anything to you . . .

Just came out, will be in stores soon, ask for it on the Grimsy label.

Best,
Summi Kaipa

↑ Index

928. Mairead Byrne
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

On Sun, 29 Nov 1998, Mark DuCharme wrote:

> Why do you feel there are "generals," Henry? One > unfortunate remark of a few days ago notwithstanding, no one has > addressed the list in a way that calls rank into question.
>
There are generals. While stewing over Henry Gould's enquiry of some days ago, in preparation for a considered response, starting with Berlin and the ignominy of not having earned the right to triumph when the wall came to be dismantled, to such antedeluvian but real achievements as the legalization of contraception and divorce in Ireland, to recent ceasefires, and my all too ready deletion of Barnes & Noble takeover notices, to Libyan poets,imprisonment, and all sorts of censorship, to my growing understanding of what "moderation" means in terms of this list (YES, the tap of the cattle-drover, the nudge away from silliness to be followed by the poke? And then by the lash? Or excommunication from THE LIST?). Some Mark's comment of weeks ago still echoes: to the effect that intolerance in aesthetics/poetics had no connection with intolerance in civil issues. I said "I wonder" but I don't. Henry, I'm still pondering your question and will, from the poverty of my position, reply. But there are generals, I'm pretty sure about that.
Mairead
> >

>

_____
> Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>

↑ Index

929. Mairead Byrne
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Another little logical knot in Mark Du Charme's post: how exactly do "real rebels" perform in "virtual discussion"? "Teenagers" is a put-down, right? As opposed to "real rebels"? Who the heck are the "real rebels"? You are beginning to sound like the teenager's nightmare: the Law of the Father is to rebel: but really, virtually, democratically.

↑ Index

930. Mairead Byrne
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Excuse me: DuCharme.

On Sun, 29 Nov 1998, Mairead Byrne wrote:

> Another little logical knot in Mark Du Charme's post: how exactly do "real rebels" perform in "virtual discussion"? "Teenagers" is a put-down, right? As opposed to "real rebels"? Who the heck are the "real rebels"? You are beginning to sound like the teenager's nightmare: the Law of the Father is to rebel: but really, virtually, democratically.

↑ Index

931. Mark DuCharme
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

What's the point of rebelling if there's nothing at stake? Or, nothing more important than ego, or less important than poetry, at stake? & It's not a law if you don't have the power to make laws or to enforce them. At least that's what I'm told the people who have really stood up to real (non-metaphorical) generals have always said.

--not "one of the Mark's"

>Another little logical knot in Mark Du Charme's post: how exactly do "real >rebels" perform in "virtual discussion"? "Teenagers" is a put-down, >right? As opposed to "real rebels"? Who the heck are the "real rebels"?
>You are beginning to sound like the teenager's nightmare: the Law of the >Father is to rebel: but really, virtually, democratically.
>

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

932. Maria Damon marco polo anyone?
Sun 29 Nov 1998

fwd from masha zavialova; i don't know the dude myself, but my curiosity's been piqued by her inquiry:

To: Maria Damon <[redacted]> Organization: Private person (St.Petersburg)
Date: Mon, 21 Dec 1998 10:23:31 +0300 (MSK)
From: "Sergei A. Zavialov" <[redacted]> Subject: Marco Polo
Lines: 12

Dear Maria Do you happen to know a guy Marco Polo? There is a chap here in St. Petersburg who is currently teaching American poetry in the Institute of Culture (they train librarians mostly). He says he is a poet from the US and wouldn't let me come to his classes. A weird guy judging from his messages (I haven't seen him yet) Says one of the main reasons he is here is our girls who have no penis envy and who enjoy being women not like crazy females in the West. That's his words. Another adventurer looking for easily available love affairs? For two centuries St. Petersburg has been quite a place for fortune-seekers from the West. Much of our culture has been done by them - architecture mostly and mostly Italians. Hugs Masha

↑ Index

933. Mark DuCharme
more bull
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Apologies for that last post, which was written in haste &, as a result, was probably the sort of thing I was complaining about in terms of behavior on the list.

Certainly Mairead was right to the extent that rebellion is anything you want it to be, & there certainly are no rules about what is "real" in that sense. I was only trying to talk about rebellion that might be effective, that might be taken seriously by the power structure one opposes, & thus result in change. Yes, my comparison of certain people on the list to teenagers was a put down. Mairead, do you find it an inaccurate one?

As to the question of generals, I personally have never heard of anyone, with the possible exception of Henry Gould, trying to dictate how one should write poetry, or how one should write _about_ poetry. Even so prominent a critic as Marjorie Perloff gets called on the carpet here for a thoughtless comment-- as well she should, in that case. Now of course there are hierarchies in academic departments, & if one is so employed (I'm not an academic, fortunately or unfortunately, at the moment) then, yes, there are generals _there_. But I wasn't talking about that sort of professional politics, though perhaps I should have been more clear about that, & I do thank Mairead for being so diligent in pointing such "loopholes" out.

Cheers,
Mark DuCharme

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

934. Henry Gould
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Sun 29 Nov 1998

On Sun, 29 Nov 1998 14:17:59 PST Mark DuCharme said:
>I completely agree with Charles Bernstein's post. What Charles talks >about as "attitude" has been defended here recently as "humor" or >"satire." Although humor sometimes says as much as polite discussion, >name calling, personal attacks, "bravado" & heckling say nothing-- >except about those individuals who insist on behaving like teenagers >when taking part in a virtual discussion. (Although most teenagers I >know behave more maturely than some of the "rebels" on this list).

I completely agree with Charles B's post too, since, as some of you know, I wrote something very similar to the list about a week prior to CB, interpreting what "free poetics" might mean. I also said I liked short funny posts, which was what the Bull Run "canons" were meant to be, nothing more.

> By using the word "rebels," I'm deliberately alluding to Henry Gould's response to this thread, in which he took up the "Bull Run" theme to say that what was happening was nothing more than pot-shots at the "generals." Why do you feel there are "generals," Henry? One unfortunate remark of a few days ago notwithstanding, no one has addressed the list in a way that calls rank into question. Furthermore-- as you all know-- cheap shots are not reserved for the Marjorie Perloffs. This is not a matter of real rebels staking their turf. Real rebels want to talk about issues, they aren't interested in flippantly defending the practice of cheap shots in a way that's sure to get their name mentioned in a subject heading while shutting down all further discussion.

Mark asks: are there generals? The gravity with which any subject or posting connected with certain names is taken, suggested to me that there might be. People question a distinguished critic, and they are scolded for "picking on" her. I guess I'm getting what I deserve for calling myself for less humor & grandstanding on the list recently. I take that back. Humor is a sign of sanity. Nevertheless I stand by what I said before : I agree in principle with Chuckie's position. Free poetics from these boring higgler epics; talk poetry specifics, not generals. - Henry Gould p.s. Mark - you've never heard of anyone prescribing how to write poetry besides me? Well, I'm flattered, to say the least! But you know - just for your information - there was Pound too, & Eliot, & a few thousand other poets going back at least to Theocritus, I believe, who did such - Wordsworth, Poe... gosh, I could name quite a few!

↑ Index

935. Henry Gould
how to write poetry
Sun 29 Nov 1998

---

from THE LOST NOTEBOOKS

14.

A little rain on Thanksgiving. Then moist air, light clouds flowing under a luminous half-moon. I walk along wet streets (whiff of turkey floating with me) to the curved corner guarded by an old, elaborate iron gate into the playground, quiet tonight, where we brought them long ago. Light patter on the fallen leaves. The distance.

Yours, theirs... my own. The infinite abandoned garden. _I shall not drink with you again._
Until. Henry in his cardboard coracle (man overboard), and Blackstone, carving in granite the gnarled character for hollowness, and Bluejay, waiting on the empty table, pilgrim-servant-scavenger - the whole stable gathering together by the empty sofa, sees her, coming aboard - the day of Jubilee.

Across the empty plate of prairie where the wind is born, and, ghostly, elevates a clay-bowl memory (into eternity).

Because every feast's Thanksgiving, after all - a shared-out superflux, unto the Peaceful One;
and every woman's Indian, and every man is rubicund - ruddied by the blessings of the fall;

and while we walk beneath the twilight sphere in gradual harmony, an excess love extends its kelson overhead - the cosmos sends a simple letter, momentary sentence: _Join me here._

11.26.98

↑ Index

936. Karen Kelley
People of the List
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Saw last night, surprisingly & serendipitously, documentary footage of the community of chimpanzees I'd just finished reading about in Jane Goodall's book "Through a Window." The documentary is called "People of the Forest" & ought to show up a few times this month on Animal Planet. These animals are remarkable. If one does something to aggravate another, the aggrieved party hoots, or, if that doesn't work, bites (relatively lightly) the other's foot, or steps on him/her, or threatens a bit with a branch of leaves. There's a hierarchy that changes, but only through great struggle. Social gatherings are sometimes tumultuous, lots of squabbling and hierarchical displays, and then everyone settles back to community life.

The most amazing and pleasing thing about these films is seeing how deeply emotional & related the chimps are without language. Kind of weirdly extra-human because all the words aren't there to interfere.

And as an even further aside: I've been wondering what people on the list read other than poetry & poetry criticism.

Ruth Danon wrote:

> Came back from over the river etcetera to find that the (dreary) argument of last week had escalated. Thank you Ron Silliman and others for suggesting that we have more important things to do with our time (I had 99 messages when I came home). I keep wondering if all this contrariness has to do with some little thing that Pound said -- you can't write poetry in a manner 20 years old. Seems like maybe there are are a lot of 20 year old runs that have reached their limits and the scary questions have to do with where do we go from here (not necessarily falling into the modernist cry of "make it new" -- still there is this question of what do we do now.) In this country poetry proliferates at a great rate. Tomaz Salamun claims that nowhere is there so much support for poetry as in the USA.
>
> Here's something I think about a lot. If I know exactly what I'm about to say and how it will emerge then I'm in deep trouble. Perhaps we all need to know little less about what we are doing, be a little less sure of ourselves, our presuppositions, our stances. Don't mind referring to Yeats here -- out of the quarrel with ourselves we produce poetry-- and y'all know the rest.
>
> And maybe it's this quality of self-sure "knowingness" that links Pinsky (in his typical poems) with so-called experimental writers who already know before they start what the formal, linguistic and political positions need to be to write an "acceptable" poem.
>
> Gotta be lost in the woods a bit to get anywhere.
>
> and at the same time, that statement does undo itself & I know it.
>
> Curious to hear some thoughts.

↑ Index

937. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: People of the List
Sun 29 Nov 1998

People of the List, Current Reading

Hiaasen and others, Naked Came the Manatee Mish, ed. The Anchor Anthology of Short Fiction of the Seventeenth Century Rosemont, ed. Chinese Texts and Philosophical Contexts
Hakutani, ed., Selected English Writings of Yone Noguchi, 2, Prose Ford,etc., eds., Android Epistemology
Morgan, Using Java 1.2
Dyson, Release 2.1
Thomas, ed, Sing the Sun Up, Creative Writing Ideas from African American Literature
Current issue of 2600, The Hacker Quarterly

Highly recommend Tanizaki, Some Prefer Nettles

Alan (like liszt)

↑ Index

938. A. Jenn Sondheim
Desperate Realms (fwd)
Sun 29 Nov 1998

==

Desperate Realms

--- Review of Conversation ---------- (Julu) I am terrific Norn I have Killed Two Million Orc
(Alan) Oh Oh Oh I am an Orc I must Mourn Goodbye Fellow All My Orc (Nikuko) I am Valkyrie Fly-Girl I will Kill Terrific Norn!
(Julu) Oh My Oh Oh! I will do be Dying Now, Oh Magister I pray!!!
(Magister) Oh Dearest Julu, You will now true to be Live Now!
(Nikuko) Argh and Graahr! I have not to power you Oh Magister help!
(Magister) Oh Darlingest Nikuko, Julu will Truly die Now!
(Julu) Alas! Alack! There is no one to Save me and I die!
(legions of Mordor) We have lost Our Dearest Julu!
(masses) Our Dearest Julu is Gone from Henceforth now From Here!
(Alan) Oh YAY! I would Have Been Deaded by Julu!
(Jennifer) Oh Now I will Kill you for the Deaded Julu, Ah Ha, Ah Ha!
(Alan) I am killed Dead and Now Do Join My Fair Fey Deaded Julu!
(Jennifer) Oh I will now Kill Nikuko Argh and Graahr!
(Magister) Oh I am So Alone In Uppter-Nethery-World!

(Jennifer) Well we have Wonderful Game Played, Now we will Play Another!
They All Rises!

.echo (Jennifer) Well we have Wonderful Game played, now we will Play Another!
(Jennifer) Well we have Wonderful Game Played, Now we will Play Another!
.echo They All Rises!
.w

Alan somersault naked with frock overhead Idle 10 minutes

You are all alone in Worldly-Worlds.
.q You depart Worldly-Worlds.

↑ Index

939. Laura Moriarty
but what do they want?
Sun 29 Nov 1998

Karen -

Thanks for asking. I've been enjoying reading Linda Nagata's Vast - sci fi in relation to nano tech and info tech - but very different from old cyberspace stuff. And have also just finished Gerge B (machines are alive) Dyson's Darwin Among the Machines. While I was reading it I tended to believe that everything was alive. I'd be curious if any other listers have any interest in this book, which is advertised as having cult status. Basic thesis is that machine mind is already or almost already upon us. Memory is supposed to be about equal - bit for bit, with them(it?) gaining fast.

Laura

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

940. Maria Damon
Re: People of the List
Sun 29 Nov 1998

current and recent reading:
various students' prelims
Georges Bataille on Gilles de Rais--full of blood and pathology, mmm

Dominick La Capra, History and memory after Auschwitz (or something like that), intro seems defensive Carla Harryman, Never rose w/o th. an article on globalization by stuart hall and tony mcgrue, sound byte city!
mullen, muse + drudge raddle moon most recent--groovy as heck!
west coast line most recent-ditto diane glancy, primer of the obsolete, amazing little charmer of a book, from chax no less

↑ Index

941. Katie Degentesh
9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9
Mon 30 Nov 1998

9x9 INDUSTRIES presents:

JASON CAMLOT, poet and essayist whose works have appeared, most recently, in Rampike Magazine, sub-Terrain, Journal X, and Poetry Nation: The North American Anthology of Fusion Poetry (Vehicule)

and

DAVID MCGIMPSEY, author of two collections of poetry, Dogboy and Lardcake (both available from ECW Press) and a critical study, Called Shots: Baseball as Modern American Fiction, due this spring from University of Indiana Press.

POETRY READING!

ADOBE BOOKSHOP, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1998
3166 16TH ST. (AT GUERRERO)
8 PM, FREE

9X9 INDUSTRIES http://www.paraffin.org/nine/
[redacted]

WE STILL DON'T LIKE POEMS
THAT ARE LIKE POEMS!

↑ Index

942. Leonard Brink
Norma Cole, George Oppen, Marjorie Perloff
Mon 30 Nov 1998

The 9x9 reading announced earlier is occuring in "The City," I believe, (for those of you who don't know where 16th & Guerrero is.)

Also occuring in San Francisco on the same evening, Thurs. Dec. 3: Norma Cole will be giving the annual George Oppen Memorial Lecture at the First Unitarian Church on Franklin St. (1700 block I think) at 7 p.m. The event is sponsored by the Poetry Center at SFSU from which one can order tapes of previous Oppen lectures including a really nice one given by General Perloff in 1989 which I was listening to in my car the other day. In it she describes a washing machine ejaculating quarters into a woman's apron (and she says she's not a poet.)

↑ Index

943. jen hofer
hey all you chicago-area folk!
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Film/poetry event in Wicker Park this Wednesday: please come & bring all your friends--

"Moving Words"--Films and Poems
Celebration of issue #2 of Interlope & issue #3 of Kenning

Films by Amie Siegel, David Gatten, Heather Seybolt, Ken Eisenstein and Sarah Jane Lapp

Poems by Amie Siegel, Jen Hofer, Patrick F. Durgin, Summi Kaipa and Tina Celona

8 p.m., Wednesday December 2, at David's Studio @ In These Times Magazine 2040 N. Milwaukee Ave. (just above the Western stop on the Blue Line)

All are welcome.

We did the same program this recent Friday the 13th in Iowa City & it was quite a blast--trash film strips in lovely little bundles all over the house & ended with a screening of a film created in the Atlantic Ocean which destroyed itself as it ran through the projector. The poems were more durable but just as thrilling.

↑ Index

944. Ron Silliman
Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Just finished Philip Dick's Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep? (Surprised actually at how different it was from the film Bladerunner, which extracts a very single narrative line and runs with it). Also Walter Mosley's Always Outnumbered, Always Outgunned (I highly recommend this). Currently reading Kathy Acker's Body Works and Sarah Schulmann's Rat Bohemia. Enjoying them both,

Ron

↑ Index

945. Roger Day
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Thanks, Ron. Mine if I chip in with my current reading?

"The Deregulated Muse", Sean O'Brien. Verbose yet small account of Postwar British & Irish poetry.
"The Last Of the Mohicans" William Fenimore Cooper. Better than expected, but not surprised they left the bear - and a lot else - out of the Michael Mann film.
"The Last Avant Garde", Lehman. Just can't put this book down. Absolutely deleesh. Was reccomended by someone on this list (Kent Johnson | Henry Gould|A.N.Other?). Thankyou.
Selected Poems of Osip Mandelstam (Clarence Brown & WS Merwin Trs). Wow.
"UML Distilled" You don't want to know.
"About Face", Ditto.
"Dylan, The Language". Ditto.
At 30/11/98 10:59:33, Ron Silliman <[redacted]> wrote:
Just finished Philip Dick's Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep? (Surprised actually at how different it was from the film Bladerunner, which extracts a very single narrative line and runs with it). Also Walter Mosley's Always Outnumbered, Always Outgunned (I highly recommend this). Currently reading Kathy Acker's Body Works and Sarah Schulmann's Rat Bohemia. Enjoying them both,
#
Ron
#

Roger

↑ Index

946. Pierre Joris
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Just started into Niklas Luhman's _Observations on Modernity_ as part of my (very haphazard) attempt to keep up to date with European socio-eco-epistemo-political thinking.

But continuously dragged back into, ugh, the wider reaches of poetry as I just got the fabulous Rasula/McCaffery _Imagining Language: An Anthology_ (MIT; $55 but worth every penny, the perfect xmas present to yourselves) and can't put it aside.

Another recom someone made on this list some time ago: Yve-Alain Bois & Rosalind Kraus' _Formless_ (Zone Books). Excellent thinking about art if Bataille's thought interests you.

Just finished the massive (600pp) critical biography _Mauric Blanchot / Partenaire Invisible_ by Christophe Bident. A superb book, the best writing on Blanchot I venture to say -- difficult to compare to other recently read biographies such as the much liked (by me) Spicer one and the much disliked (by me) _The Last Avant-Garde_.

And yet another biography: Bruno Etienne's work on the 19C Algerian cheikh / freedom fighter/ sufi mystic Abdelkader.

Henry Corbin's _Alchémie comme art hiératique_.

Michael Brett and Elizabeth Fentress: _The Berbers_.

Régis Debray's _La République expliquée à ma fille_, a short book in a series in which various writers/ intellectuels explain/ write about various aspects of politics/philosophy/ psychiatry etc. as if or in fact explaining these matters to their children. Interesting exzercise in toning down the jargon. Debray, at any rate, has always been one of my favorite writers & I pick up every new book he produces.

One Tintin (_The Cigars of the Pharaoh_) and a French young person's edition of the Labors of Herkules as bedtime reading for Miles, and as corrective reading versus the US tv Herkules.

Lucie Bolens: _La cuisine andalouse_ a wonderful treatise on food and the art of living in XI-XII C Andalusia. Some recipes I will try out before the end of the year.

Pierre

==========
Pierre Joris

[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Through the living the road of the dead
— Ungaretti
==========

↑ Index

947. Michael Magee
Re: Critic-Penitents, Poet-Penitents
Mon 30 Nov 1998

According to louis stroffolino:
>
> I sometimes we think we need to "free" poetics FROM its current
> "freedom" and set some limits to the discussions....
>

Chris, there's a journal entry of Emerson's where he defines liberty as "neither chain nor chain of chain." Your thought about "freedom" from our current "freedom" reminded me of it. As dedicated to liberty as I think most of us are, might we sometimes "rebel" merely for the love of that idea, and not in some genuinely worthwhile context? And might this then be not rebellion but simply sniping? I think so, and have been guilty of it myself at times. Of course once we try to set rules of debate the difficulty of that becomes to obvious to detail. And words like civility and - ugh - "decorum" are yucky words. But all of us deserve a certain amount of respect, we've all earned that in various ways. And one measure of respect is to try to make your posts "count" in one way or another (lot's of ways of course, w/ new ones always being invented). And I'm going to try to remember this. -m.

↑ Index

948. Eliza McGrand
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

just finished all the work by james (or jamie?) lee burke that i could find in my libraries. action/mystery, set in new orleans for the most part. primary series about character, dave robichaux, vietnam vet, policeman. it is funny, there were actually times when i had to stop reading, just stop and reread because the writing was so gorgeous. it is hard to describe, but burke can set a scene, open out the emotions/visual/sensual aspects of an imagined scene in almost no words, so clearly, in a simple way that seems so easy and yet is not (as those who've tried with fiction will know).

got five stories by louisa may alcott written under psuedonym -- interesting. much more worldly, in some ways, than one would expect, but with that curious victorian/edwardian innocence which inserts the most complex, difficult, questionable devices as if they were perfectly simple -- example, one character -- a "haggard woman of at least thirty"! -- disguises herself as a young girl, with a bit of paint, some "pearly white" false teeth, and facial expressions. hollywood, as well as us haggard women of at least thirty!, would pay mightily for such easy renewal!

am craving mark twain again. got _Life on the Mississippi_ but read that not very long ago, and will exchange it for soemthing less familiar i think.

saw "The Boxer" and it was so rich and nuanced it felt like a book. daniel day lewis is an extraordinry actor. story bitter, wierd, complicated.

finally, _Deadstick_ by Terence Flaherty. first novel, mystery/suspense, with, i kid you not, a feel in it of F. Scott fitzgerald (though no one else has mentioned it in reviews). that outsiders looking on feel?

e

↑ Index

949. Emily Lloyd

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Mon 30 Nov 1998

Hey, I was reading _About Face_ too, for a bit. Then I stopped.

The novels of Ian McEwan. I'd read _The Cement Garden_ and dug it in high school (more than I did on a recent rereading), but none of the others. _The Child in Time_ I find excellent; _Enduring Love_ scared me so badly that I had to clench my hands tight to the boards to keep from dropping it. Not least because I saw disturbing signs of my high school self in its deranged, eroto-manic antagonist. What a weird moment that always is, when one finds out one had some psychotic syndrome after years of thinking it was "only life." My tongue in just half of my cheek.

After seeing Queen Christina for the first time, I checked out _Walking With Garbo_--a book whose author I can't remember (tho it was before me, what, 2 days ago?). I skimmed it, mostly reading only the lengthy quotes from Garbo.

I'm very late to Garbo, I know, so this may be general knowledge, but it surprised me to find that she constantly, easily, referred to herself with masc. pronouns: "I was just a silly boy then; now I'm a tired old man," etc. A few yrs. back, and still fondly in my head, I was yipping all around, over & through books on trans/gendered/ness--ancient cases, etc., and concluding (insofar as one can) that Gert Stein had more of a touch of the tg in her than the lesbian. I thought I'd read pretty deeply "in gender." And here I find this Hollywood actress, who I'd heard was queer & had some fun with gender (for the most part, who hasn't?), seriously, constantly, and seemingly without affectation, calling herself a dude. I don't know; I'm still kind of a geek about/fool for fucked genders (though I'm told it's very out-of-date of me)--I swooned.

em

↑ Index

950. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

evidently the _chronicle of higher ed_ this week includes the following story:

THE RETURN OF AESTHETICS: Scholars in the humanities, weary of cultural studies and political criticism, have begun once again to discuss the pleasures of good, powerful -- even beautiful -- writing. (Research & Publishing Section)

some of us may well find ourselves asking, RETURN?...

i haven't yet read the piece (i will) but am forced to consider whether this constitutes a *reaction against" cultural studies... having taken cult. studies to task a bit mself here (and superficially so, though a more bracing argument can be made) i'd like to suggest that considering aesthetics (this term, like others, may slip & slide) need not be a matter of avoiding "political criticism"... it does seem to me (again) that aesthetics may be understood as operating at micro levels of text/textuality (a good thing), even as it comes to be understood (as a function, i mean) within or alongside more macro concerns... and that aesthetics is not limited to the "pleasures of good, powerful -- even beautiful -- writing," but may provoke more complex experiences... of course one would have to ask what a given text is actually doing, and not simply as a function of reception at the social/cultural level(s)... i can go on and on about "jane austen," e.g., and generate all sorts of intriguing insights about reception of her work, w/o having really dug into her writing (which would no doubt generate all sorts of additional intriguing insights)...

i'm most interested, mself, in work that manages to work both aspects of this issue... and i do note the implicit binary that i've set up here, which will undoubtedly dissipate some once one really gets into things...

anyway...

best,

joe

↑ Index

951. Bobbie West
A Wild Salience
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Burning Press is currently preparing for publication a booklength collection of responses to the work of Rae Armantrout--

"A WILD SALIENCE": THE WRITING OF OF RAE ARMANTROUT, edited by Tom Beckett.

Among other things, "A WILD SALIENCE" will include new work by Rae Armantrout, an interview with Lyn Hejinian, an interview with Tom Beckett, and critical work by Laura Moriarity, Aldon Nielsen, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Brenda Hillman, Fanny Howe, Susan Wheeler, Lydia Davis, Kit Robinson, Bobbie West, David Bromige, Charles Alexander, Hank Lazer, Ron Silliman, Bob Perelman, Jessica Grim and Robert Creeley.

"A WILD SALIENCE" is the first book in a projected series of volumes to be devoted to responses to individual contemporary writers. Following publication of this initial offering Tom Beckett will function as Series Editor and work to pair guest editors with important but underappreciated innovative writers.

We are working to develop the most complete mailing list possible to publicize what we hope will come to be seen as an important contribution to the field of innovative writing. If you wish to be on the mailing list, or if you know of persons or institutions that ought to be, or if you have a mailing list you would care to share, please contact one of us:

Tom Beckett, Editor
[redacted]

Bobbie West, Assistant Editor
[redacted]

And stay tuned.

↑ Index

952. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

oh yeah, in no particular order:

(1) email from this list
(2) "St. Martin's Press credits an innovative point-of-purchase [POP] display with increasing display orders by 30% for their bestselling novel, _Neanderthal_." [Book Marketing Update]
(3) this email
(4) "Reminder: The [ ] interviewing teams will begin interviewing at MLA as early as 8 a.m. on Sunday, December 17 [sic], 1998."
(5) this email
(6) student essays
(7) "There was no poetry in Richard Nixon." [can't get this line (of theodore h. white's) out of my head]
(8) this email
(9) "I will be arriving at the MLA convention in San Francisco on Sunday evening..."
(10) _letters for the living: teaching writing in a violent age_, michael blitz & c. mark hurlbert (ncte, 1998)
(11) snippets of various issues of chain, raddle moon, famous reporter, cross-cultural poetix, notre dame review, chloroform, chicago review, big allis, explosive magazine, kenning, tinfish, bombay gin, the temple, mr. knife/miss fork, samizdat, rain taxi (i finally subscribed, thanx gary!), abr, academe, arshile, review of contemporary fiction, saveur (yep, the cooking mag), the nation...
(12) _screenplay: the foundations of screenwriting_, 3rd ed., syd field (mjf books, 1994) [thanx to barbara wilder!]
(13) pmla, program for the 114th convention
(14) _postmodern american fiction: a norton anthology_, ed. geyh/leebron/levy
(15) _giscome road_, c. s. giscombe (dalkey archive, 1998)
(16) _elephant surveillance to thought_, andrew levy (meow p, 1998)
(17) _wittgenstein's ladder_, marjorie perloff (u of chicago p, 1996)
(18) i forgot
(19) this email

-30-

joe

↑ Index

953. Laura Moriarty
details about Norma Cole on George Oppen
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Norma forwarded me more details of her talk this Thursday as well as a short bio - Note that the talk starts at 7:30, not 7:00 - I have been hearing her describe the writing of the talk which sounds great -

The Poetry Center presents

The George Oppen Memorial Lecture on Twentieth Century Poetics

Norma Cole, "The Poetics of Vertigo"

Thursday, December 3, 1998
7:30 PM
First Unitarian Church
1187 Franklin Street, SF
$4 general
Poetry Center members free

Norma Cole's recent books are CONTRAFACT, MOIRA and DESIRE & ITS DOUBLE. Her translations include Danielle Collobert's IT THEN and Anne Portugal's NUDE. She has been a recipient of the Getrude Stein Award several times, and has received a Gerbode Award for Poetry as well as an award from the Fund for Poetry. A Canadian from Toronto, Cole has lived in San Francisco for the last twenty-one years. She currently teaches part time at San Francisco State University.

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

954. Elizabeth Treadwell
Last call for Outlet (3) Ornament
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Outlet (3) Ornament will feature work which addresses fashion: ornament, the (synthetic) fixtures of the body, & the languages/technicalities of attire, both contemporary & historical. [Also: anthropologias, decorative arts, etc.] Deadline December 15, 1998. Please include SASE.

Response by late January.

The issue will be available in March 1999. $5 ppd. (cash & stamps are fine, checks to E. Treadwell)

Note to REVIEWERS: please contact me about the status of your review. Thanks.

E.T.

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

955. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

I forgot who first started this run of mini book reviews, but I want to express my thanks. After Bull Run it has been a delight to get glimpses of wildly different reading lists -- and a token of what's been most interesting to me about discussions on this list: shards of different light to add to my own store. I can't speak much about my own reading list: I've just finished Henry James' "The Bostonians" and I was reminded of why he irritates me so much, and I'm in the middle of Gay Wilson Allen's "A Reader's Guide to Walt Whitman" -- I find it very sweet, informative -- plus "Walt Whitman: The Measure of His Song" ed. by Jim Perlamn, Ed Folsom & Dan Campion, which tickles me greatly and the multifarious influence of the barbaric yawp intrigues me.

I suggest that someone host a current reading list bout every month or so -- and Pierre Joris needs to translate Andalusian recipes.

Thanks,

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

956. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Bull Run
Mon 30 Nov 1998

In between being told how fortunate I am to be permitted to operate my bookstore in upper Northwest Washington by people who haven't read anything more substantial than Primary Colors, I've reflected on Charles Bernstein's post. I've concluded that Bernstein is dead wrong and short sighted to boot. I signed up for this list in part to see if my own form of enforced autodidactism and vocation to modernism measured up to what other people on the list, especially folks on campuses where you get to walk the walk and talk the talk as part of your everyday existence, could bring to poetic discourse. Because Pound when he said "make it new" was not advocating a marketing blitz or the inauguration of an age of poetic fads, I found I could participate on the site. But, out of a sense of personal and artistic responsibility, I've also found myself reading and thinking in order to better grasp and often to contend with other strains on the site. However, the truly pleasant surprise for me has been the 'fumiste' style that many of the folks on the sight show a real talent for. I'm referring to "the combination of the outrageous and the deadpan that constituted the Chat Noir style." The email format, if it has any virtues beyond basic communication, seems an ideal venue for a revival of this style. It comes naturally and vehemently on this list. And to Hell with content, personality, name calling etc. At the risk of flattering you hucksters, this list has intelligence, wit, heart, and knowledge to spare for the kind of voices that fit the 'tolerances' of the medium. Although not every 'fumiste' post is 'successful', this is email's imaginative edge. Some voices may not be appropriate for the medium's creative dimension, but nothing 'historic' is going to be derived here from putting up snippets of standard critical fare or listing publications and readings though this news never hurts. Its only lively and unique and I would insist legitimate function may be a medium that combines the content of critical reading and the outlandishness of the Hydropathes. Ron Silliman hasn't resisted this impulse in his attached post e.g. "Bull Run", just as Henry Gould considers a post without puns, punditry, mixed metaphors and meanderings a post without sunshine. Look, I'm a towney in a town usurped by Hass and now Pinsky. You go to a gathering of poets here and the last thing they want to talk about is poetry. Getting mentioned in the Washington Post or getting a grant take top priority. If I thought face to face, I could maintain the kind of lively discourse that takes place on this site, I'd move all your asses here. With the exception of an occasional post by Rod Smith or Simon Schuchat, I don't see D.C. poets (and I've been here all my life) getting into the fray on this list or any list whatever. They wouldn't have the knowledge, the committment, the passion, the imagination or the guts. Don't ruin a unique thing.---Carlo Parcelli

Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> I took the kids to Manasas yesterday to see the site of the first Battle of > Bull Run only to discover that the Civil War re-enactment was really going > on here on The List whilst our backs were turned. My attitude toward this is > pretty much the same as my answer to Colin's question yesterday, "Who were > the good guys?" "They all were. That's what makes war so wasteful and > stupid."
>
> I've often thought that the really radical distinction between our age and > those of decades past is not one of more (or less) good poets per se

> [although I'm inclined to believe that there are more good writers right now > than ever before in history], but rather that there are far fewer critics of > substance. I think that Marjorie Perloff (and Peter Quartermain, Jerry > McGann, Alan Golding, Steve Evans, Maria Damon, Tom Vogler &c &c &c) takes a > lot of flack because she (and they) stands in for "all of criticism" in its > positive functions. If Marjorie's work has a weak spot, I think it's that > she knows just how little good criticism is being written about contemporary > poetry and she's always trying to fill all of the gaps. Her energy always > astounds me as does her ability to bring extraordinary powers of > concentration of every project she tackles.
>
> A much more interesting question than why does X or Y not make it onto > reading list A is always "what is it about X or Y that keeps someone from > putting it onto reading lists A, B, C, etc.?"
>
> Yes, it's true that critics who don't write or publish or primarily publish > poetry will see the poem differently than do other poets. Poets often read > the poem as though the other poet were "solving the problems" put forward by > the poem and vote heavily with their (my) emotions on how well that gets > done. Is it the only way to read a poem? Is there any such "only way"? Not > in this galaxy there's not. And I write this as one of the loudest > proponents of poets writing criticism there has ever been.
>
> I note that I, for one, don't feel "disabled" to speak about the fiction I > read, although I haven't ever published fiction (tho I did "win" one > Pushcart Prize for same and was ostensibly hired as a fiction teacher by > UCSD some 16 years ago, which says more about the institutionalization of > genre than anything else). Ditto the films I see or music I hear, although > I've never ventured into those media either. I've been reading Kathy Acker > on Goya this weekend. Should I presume that this should not have been > written?
>
> There are also people in virtually every poetry scene who are important to > it who publish neither poetry nor criticism, or else very very little. We > lost two of these folks in the past year or so in Barry Cox and Charles > Watts. Were their opinions not of value? That seems non-sensical on the face > of it. I think it's very difficult to understand or articulate precisely how > poetry is diminished by the loss of someone who doesn't characteristically > speak up, but I never met anyone who knew these people (or others like them)

> who wouldn't admit it.
>
> In some ways, that silence replicates the position of most of the folks who > lurk on this list. This list, after all, has 700 recipients but can handle > only 50 messages per day.
>
> If anything, we need more of all these social functions in and around the > poem. We certainly need 100 Marjorie Perloffs, preferably all in contention > with one another so as to create a true public discourse about literature > that we would, every one of us, benefit from. If nothing else, the arguments > who have more in the way of nuance.
>
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

957. Bob Haynes
Poetry in Phoenix
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

i just moved down to Scottsdale, AZ, from the San Francisco area. Anyone out there know of poetry events, lectures, readings, whatnot, happening in and around the Phoenix area??? I'd also be interested in writing groups, or cafes....anything that might offer poetry.

Bob

↑ Index

958. daniel bouchard
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

At 10:24 AM 11/30/98 -0800, you wrote:
>... a delight to get glimpses of wildly different reading lists ...

yes, mere lists even of what people are reading are far more interesting than the posts I'm deleting.

Autobiography (WC Williams)
Selected Letters (WC Williams)
Tropic of Cancer (Miller)
Picasso; Everybody's Autobio. (Gertrude Stein)
Sky Memoirs (Blaise Cendrars)
The Words (Sartre)
Cezanne (Ambroise Villard)

Paris Sewers and Sewermen (Donald Reid)
The Lady of Situations (Louis Auchincloss) Present Day Paris and the Battlefields [1922] (Sommerville Story)
The Enlightenment in France (Frederick B. Artz)
Strange Communists I Have Known (Bertram Wolfe)
I, Claudius (Robert Graves)
The Twelve Caesars (Suetonius)

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
  fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

959. ken|n|ing
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Is this what we're doing, posting lists? In that case, I submit my current non-poetry reading:

Jean-Luc Nancy The Sense of the World, The Gravity of Thought
Louis Zukofsky Prepositions
Adelaide Morris, ed. Sound States
Jed Rasula American Poetry Wax Museum
Steve McCaffery North of Intention

Patrick F. Durgin

|
|
k e n n i n g``````````````|```````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

960. Mark DuCharme
Re: Free Poetics / Bull Run
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Humor is a sign >of sanity. Nevertheless I stand by what I said before : I agree in principle >with Chuckie's position. Free poetics from these boring higgler epics; >talk poetry specifics, not generals. - Henry Gould

Couldn't agree more, Henry. For the record.

>p.s. Mark - you've never heard of anyone prescribing how to write poetry >besides me? Well, I'm flattered, to say the least! But you know - just >for your information - there was Pound too, & Eliot, & a few thousand other >poets going back at least to Theocritus, I believe, who did such - Wordsworth, >Poe... gosh, I could name quite a few!

Well, yes, certainly, I'm aware of these, & I'll add the name of Andre Breton, for one, to that list. I was trying to talk about contemporaries, & specifically individuals on the Poetics List. I don't think anyone still feels bound to the dictums of Pound, for example-- though didn't somebody on this list quote one of his slogans recently?

Mark DuCharme

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

961. Mark DuCharme
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Roger day wrote:
>"The Last Of the Mohicans" William Fenimore Cooper. Better than expected, >but not surprised they left the bear - and a lot else - out of the Michael >Mann film.

does memory completely fail, or is it _James_ Fenimore Cooper?

MDC

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

962. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Bull Run
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Joe Brennan has taken exception to being lumped in with the 'set in concrete' set that comprise the Washington poetry scene. It is only my long friendship and boundless admiration for this knowledgable and passionate Freudian-Lacanian poetic voice that led to my unforgivable oversight.---Carlo Parcelli Thanks to Dan Rather at the Averrill Harriman memorial service for the excessively fawning tone of the above. -- ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

963. schuchat
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Am about halfway through Gershom Scholem on Sabbatai Sevi. Just finished General William Odom (Ret.) THE COLLAPSE OF THE SOVIET MILITARY, extremely interesting discussion of what Gorbachev thought he was doing versus what he actually was doing. Before that, TLOOTH. Also (re)reading around in the new Denby dance writings collection from Yale, always a pleasure to read such clear, elegant observation.

Also, not long ago I read my second Tom Sharpe novel, THE THROW-BACK, entertaining British slapstick.

↑ Index

964. shana
reading lists!
Mon 30 Nov 1998

This is so cool. I love lists--my grocery list occasionally has footnotes. Recent reading for me--

Diary of an Unknown-Jean Cocteau
The Life of Poetry-Muriel Rukeyser
The Children of Abraham (sequel to The Book of Abraham)-Marek Halter
The Best Defense-Alan Dershowitz

Wild Light-Collected Poems-Yona Wallach love stories on FOP-L
The Managed Health Care Handbook
Chutzpah-Alan Dershowitz
Tales of the City series (for the 2nd and 3rd time)-Armistead Maupin
my diary from 12th grade
old love letters (I highly recommend them)

ps, I love The Cement Garden.

Shana

↑ Index

965. daniel bouchard
Re: reading lists!
Mon 30 Nov 1998

At 03:32 PM 11/30/98 -0500, you wrote:

> my diary from 12th grade
> old love letters (I highly recommend them)

Please send them to me at the address below.

ps-- this was the obvious reply, no? I'm terribly sorry.
Self-imposed silence for two months as contrition.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

966. Judy Roitman
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

> You're right, Joe. When the discourse gets too heated the function of the list-moderator might be to gently remind us that things have gotten out of > *hand. If someone really spouted hate speech on the list, I'm sure that person would be blasted pretty quickly. The tone would escalate once again. I didn't take you to be saying that any current subscribers would be capable of hate speech as defined in contemporary American, e.g. overt homophobia, racial slurs, anti-semitism, etc...*

>
> Has anyone read Butler's _Excitable Speech_?
>
> I took Carlo to be saying that the vigorous nature of the debate was one of the attractions of the list for him, and I feel the same way.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew

Hi, JM. Vigorous debate is fine, but the personal vendettas and itertions of self-justification get pretty unpleasant. We both know folks who have dropped off for one or the other or both reasons, folks who would be nice to hear from.

(This disguised note to Jonathan is of course to everyone.)

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

967. MAYHEW

Re: from today's _academe today_...

Mon 30 Nov 1998

Interesting questions, Joe, from where I sit. Cultural studies is considered very au courant in Peninsular (Spanish) studies these days. It usually doesn't include anyone working on poetry. The Latin American side has been highly politicized for years. To take aesthetics seriously, in my field, is the hallmark of a cultural conservative. So I find myself siding--on many issues-- with people in Latin American literature, who might not be interested in "aesthetics" as I am, as opposed to more traditional peninsularists--whose "aestheticism," derived from the New Criticism, has been dulled by the years. But when I see a book like John Beverly's _Against Literature_ I have to cringe. I'd welcome a return to aesthetics, as long as it wasn't just a recycling of the literary criticism of 30 years ago.

I was in a splenetic mood last week, which accounts for some of the tone of my posts. But Carlo Parcelli's response to Ron makes me feel a little better.

Jonathan

↑ Index

968. Erik Sweet
Tool Party/Reading Postponed
Mon 30 Nov 1998

The "Tool a Magazine" party and reading scheduled for Friday December 4th at Segue will be postponed until January-

Sorry about the change!

Issue number 2 will surface in early January..

E.S.

↑ Index

969. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

jonathan, interesting to see these terms play themselves out in a field of which i am (as per) largely ignorant...

but yes, "aesthetics" can be retro as hell, esp. when you get folks chiming in with unexamined notions of "beauty"... the halls of poetry, the halls of _____, are filled with such prattle...

i have to believe, though, in the possibility of being moved (as my high school physics teacher used to say, "in various & sundry ways")... there has been talk hereabouts in the past as to the persistence, even necessity of the sublime... it sometimes seems to me that we need something like this as an antidote to the prevalent cynicism (not that the latter can't be useful at times, but after a spell it's about as interesting as watching paint dry)... well there are other ways of handling this too, but i've repeated mself by now...

on an entirely different matter (that you also raise): i take carlo's point, but i also take charles's intervention... let's say someone started spouting hate speech hereabouts---it's safe to assume that we can all imagine what this might likely consist of?... what then?---do we simply turn a deaf ear?---do we rail against?... i'm not even hinting that such a thing has happened here---but i think the duty of a list moderator is to try to make things, well, in basic terms, hospitable for list inhabitants, regardless of 12345678xyz... which would be a matter, in part, of attempting to persuade folks not to insult, or to add insult to injury...

which is certainly not to say that tempers may not flare, that there isn't all sortsa leeway around here...

but this, too, is a matter of judgment... and whenever an actual judgment is made around here, you can see how controversial things quickly become... of course charles has de facto more (list) power than any of us---he can always pull the plug... so in one sense we're all operating out of his sense of what's worth-while (which is of course hardly unique---by which i mean zero insult)... whereas when anyone else asks (e.g.) for more "civility," that rhetorical request can only ever be just that---a request...

still, i think it's important to recognize that there are some responsibilities that come of "free poetics" (which are anything but "free," as some have indicated)... i wouldn't wanna legislate same, but i sure would wanna worry them some...

best,

joe

↑ Index

970. MAYHEW

Re: from today's _academe today_...

Mon 30 Nov 1998

You're right, Joe. When the discourse gets too heated the function of the list-moderator might be to gently remind us that things have gotten out of hand. If someone really spouted hate speech on the list, I'm sure that person would be blasted pretty quickly. The tone would escalate once again. I didn't take you to be saying that any current subscribers would be capable of hate speech as de-fined in contemporary American, e.g. overt homophobia, racial slurs, anti-semitism, etc...

Has anyone read Butler's _Excitable Speech_?

I took Carlo to be saying that the vigorous nature of the debate was one of the attractions of the list for him, and I feel the same way.

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

971. Michael Magee
COMBO 2 - HOT FUN IN THE WINTERTIME
Mon 30 Nov 1998

End of the Fall and COMBO comes back...

Hi, hi, hi, hi there!!

...those winter days, those COMBO days...

HOT FUN IN THE WINERTIME!! HOT FUN IN THE WINTERTIME!! HOT FUN IN THE WINTERTIME!!

```
 CCC   OO   MM   MM BBB   OO      222
C   C O  O  M M M M B  B O  O    2   2
C     O  O  M  M  M BBB  O  O      2
C     0  0  M  M  M B  B O  O     22
C   C O  O  M  M  M B  B O  O    2
 CCC   OO   M  M  M BBB   OO     22222
```

FEATURING POEMS BY...

Pattie McCarthy Brett Evans Prageeta Sharma

Heather Fuller David Kellogg Ray DiPalma

Lee Ann Brown Chris McCreary

Ange Mlinko Kit Robinson Standard Schaefer

and Lev Rubinshtein

---

for those who missed our first issue, COMBO is a quarterly journal of poetry and poetics emphacizing work by experimental writers roughly under 35. COMBO is 52 pgs on nice off-white paper w/ printed glossy card stock cover. Single issues, $3.00 (a bargain!) 4-issue subscriptions $10.00 (a bigger bargain!). E-mail to [redacted], and/or send checks payable to Michael Magee, 31 Perrin Ave., Pawtucket, RI 02861. Ask around: this is a happenin' mag & we aim to please. Woo-hoo!!!

↑ Index

972. Maria Damon
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

At 3:13 PM -0600 11/30/98, MAYHEW wrote: >Interesting questions, Joe, from where I sit. Cultural studies is >considered very au courant in Peninsular (Spanish) studies these days. It >usually doesn't include anyone working on poetry. The Latin American side >has been highly politicized for years. To take aesthetics seriously, in my >field, is the hallmark of a cultural conservative. So I find myself >siding--on many issues-- with people in Latin American literature, who >might not be interested in "aesthetics" as I am, as opposed to more >traditional peninsularists--whose "aestheticism," derived from the New >Criticism, has been dulled by the years. But when I see a book like John >Beverly's _Against Literature_ I have to cringe. I'd welcome a return to >aesthetics, as long as it wasn't just a recycling of the literary >criticism of 30 years ago.

...

why does beverly make you cringe? i really like that book, at least the intro; but as a cult studs jock, i'm in the minority here on the list...

↑ Index

973. MAYHEW
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

On Mon, 30 Nov 1998, Maria Damon wrote:

why does beverly make you cringe? i really like that book, at least the intro; but as a cult studs jock, i'm in the minority here on the list...
>

Now I (JM) write again:

You might be a minority in cultural studies too, Maria, because you actually care about POETRY. I think your work bridges the gap in a way that sets a great example for other critics.

In the first place, there's the title, with its implication that literature is a useful thing to be against Why does cult studs have to be against literature? Why assume that various nefarious uses to which "literature" has been put in the past define all its possible future uses? Doesn't his position basically rule out any useful role for the practicing poet, playwright, or novelist by defining literature as that which is already studied as such in the university? I could repeat an argument Chas. Bernstein makes about Eagleton in an essay in _Content's Dream_ several years ago (even more relevant in today's climate): why concede to a conservative faction of academia the right to define what literature is?

What specifically did you like in the introduction to _Against Literature_? Maybe I was cringeing too hard and missed something important.

Junuthun Muyhuw

↑ Index

974. Maria Damon
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

At 4:59 PM -0600 11/30/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>Now I (JM) write again:
>
>You might be a minority in cultural studies too, Maria, because you >actually care about POETRY. I think your work bridges the gap in a way >that sets a great example for other critics.

thanks; there are some other folks --peter hitchcock, amitava kumar, walter kalaidjian, kristin ross, increasingly michael davidson (tho he sticks to "high" --tho hip) literature for his literary references), etc not to mention important forebears like adorno and benjamin (stay tuned for my dream anthology, Poetry and Cultural Studies: A Reader, to be published when i get the energy). but in general, it's hard to find folks to talk to --there's often a breakdown somewhere, because in cult studies (and i to some extent agree w/ this) we are not supposed to be hung up on any particular genre, but rather simply READ cultural phenomena. but why is "poetry" so seldom the cultural phenomenon that gets read? is my thing. and i'd like to do more of the actual stuff i used to do, like reading housing project poetry, rather than endlessly tub-thumping for bridging poetry and cultural studies...
>
>In the first place, there's the title, with its implication that >literature is a useful thing to be against Why does cult studs have to >be against literature?

i don't see this as cult studs against literature, but poetry against literature. my other project, to be pursued when i have the energy (when will that be???) is a book called "Poetics for a Post-literary 'America,'" which will address this very issue.

Why assume that various nefarious uses to which >"literature" has been put in the past define all its possible future uses?
>Doesn't his position basically rule out any useful role for the >practicing poet, playwright, or novelist by defining literature as that >which is already studied as such in the university?

no, in my eyes, precisely not. it foregrounds the practice of verbal culture as excluded from academic considerations --weird language, non-literary poet-ries (micropoetries, i call them, after mark slobin's micro-musics of the west),

etc. my work is very "aestheticist", according to my colleagues, not because it focuses on canonical work (which it doesn't, though theirs does), but because it is not "historicist" in the current sense, of applying historical inquiries to canonical literature (ho hum). they work on "great literature," pretending to have no aesthetic stake in their subjects; i work on relatively unknown writers, with a fully acknowledged aesthetic investment, like, i actually like the stuff others consider doggerel on the one hand or unreadably "elitist" on the other. i even like mainstream stuff, not so much in itself but in what it obviously means to people.

I could repeat an >argument Chas. Bernstein makes about Eagleton in an essay in _Content's >Dream_ several years ago (even more relevant in today's climate): why >concede to a conservative faction of academia the right to define what >literature is?
>
>What specifically did you like in the introduction to _Against >Literature_? Maybe I was cringeing too hard and missed something >important.

it was a while ago, but what i liked was his beginning to move away from the category of the literary, though he sort of "takes it back" by then saying, i'm not against literature, really; but i wanna look at some things against the backdrop of literature, *that's what i meant by "against" literature. then he backs his way into lacan, as i recall, and abandons what could have been a promising step away from literariness.
>
>
>Junuthun Muyhuw

↑ Index

975. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: from today's _academe today_...
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

maria, question: you mention being tagged "aestheticist" over and against "historicist"... to what extent do you see this repeating the (now quite old) distinction stuart hall once made between "structuralist" and "culturalist" cultural studies? (i never liked the latter term, though i've always found the work of someone like williams (a culturalist by hall's account) invaluable)...

my sense of cult. studies in fact (gross generalization coming) is that it's gone increasingly structuralist in some increasingly unproductive ways (neither structuralist nor culturalist excluded the historical---they just treated it differently)... perhaps trying to work with poetry is pushing a culturalist agenda into this highly structural (or poststructural) arena?... as a result of the difficulties associated with the subject position (or broadly, subjectivities) at stake in poetry?... which would seem to operate almost at the surface of articulation/utterance?...

anyway... quick, perhaps badly posed questions, but i'd be much interested in any response you may have...

best,

joe

↑ Index

976. Robert Corbett
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

or perhaps William James Fenimore Cooper . . .

On Mon, 30 Nov 1998, Mark DuCharme wrote:

> Roger day wrote:
> "The Last Of the Mohicans" William Fenimore Cooper. Better than expected, > but not surprised they left the bear - and a lot else - out of the Michael > Mann film.
>
> does memory completely fail, or is it _James_ Fenimore Cooper?
>
> MDC
>
> _____
> Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

Robert Corbett "you are there beyond/ tracings flesh can [redacted] take,/ and farther away surrounding and University of Washington informing the systems" - A.R. Ammons

↑ Index

977. michael corbin
Re: Bull Run
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Ron Silliman wrote:

> I took the kids to Manasas yesterday
>
> "Who werethe good guys?" "They all were.

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> maria, question:
> ?... as a result of the difficulties associated with the subject > position (or broadly, subjectivities) at stake in poetry?... which would > seem to operate almost at the surface of articulation/utterance?...

There were, of course, more than one Bull Run. Though Antetium seems more about the uselessness of that America.

But Manasas is something more. Poetrywise.
Disney had claims.
And these were warded off.
By Refrerence to bloody-soiledness.
And nation-state-needs.
We only need so many living history theme parks, no?
Living-history. Needs.
But then suburban sprawl covers much of that stuff. Even outthere in Harper's Ferry. Robert E. Lee, Marching out with the Union Troops to put down that Jown Brown.
Guerilla war, in the Appalachians.

Maria's _Dark End_
Opens up.
And it is a question of where to go from here.Civil War poetry.
Like Edmund Wilson's _Patriotic Gore_.
And poets still trying to be outside of history. And the superorganic or CULTURE and fumblings of alienated listservservers believing that civility and manners will out in the end.

mc

↑ Index

978. r. drake
Re: A Wild Salience
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Wanted to add Ann Vickery to the list of contributors to A WILD SALIENCE... and also to mention that we're soliciting proposals for further issues in this series--contact me direct if interested.

luigi-bob drake
Burning Press
[redacted]

> Burning Press is currently preparing for publication a booklength collection of responses to the work of Rae Armantrout--
>
> "A WILD SALIENCE": THE WRITING OF OF RAE ARMANTROUT, edited by Tom Beckett.
>
> Among other things, "A WILD SALIENCE" will include new work by Rae Armantrout, > an interview with Lyn Hejinian, an interview with Tom Beckett, and critical work by Laura Moriarity, Aldon Nielsen, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Brenda Hillman, Fanny Howe, Susan Wheeler, Lydia Davis, Kit Robinson, Bobbie West, David Bromige, Charles Alexander, Hank Lazer, Ron Silliman, Bob Perelman, Jessica Grim and Robert Creeley.
>
> "A WILD SALIENCE" is the first book in a projected series of volumes to be devoted to responses to individual contemporary writers. Following publication of this initial offering Tom Beckett will function as Series Editor and work to pair guest editors with important but underappreciated innovative writers.
>
> We are working to develop the most complete mailing list possible to publicize what we hope will come to be seen as an important contribution to the field of innovative writing. If you wish to be on the mailing list, or if you know of persons or institutions that ought to be, or if you have a mailing list you would care to share, please contact one of us:
>
> Tom Beckett, Editor
> [redacted]
>
> Bobbie West, Assistant Editor
> [redacted]
> ---
>
> And stay tuned.

↑ Index

979. Karen Kelley
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Through a Window: M Thirty Years with the Chimpanzees of Gombe Jane Goodall
In the Shadow of Man Goodall
In Trouble Again: A Journey Between the Orinoco and the Amazon Redmond O'Hanlon Intoxicated by my Illness Anatole Broyard
The World is the Home of Love and Death Harold Brodkey
Formless Rosalind Krauss

↑ Index

980. Eric Gleason, a.k.a Agent Sunshine dec/jan nyc readings
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

howdy everyone. been out of touch a little lately, i'm trying to find out about what readings and such are coming up during december and january. are the segue and zinc bar readings continuing every week?

thanks,
eryque

↑ Index

981. Steven Marks
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Crime and Punishment -- Dostoyevsky

Unleashing the Killer App: digital strategies for market dominance -- Harvard Business School Press -- uh, I feel like I have to explain this one. I'm writing a series of articles about the so-called New Economy. You can't write about this without going into the belly of the beast. I'm also reading some of my Uncle Karl's work as well since there are many who say that Marx would see the information revolution as the way to get all those material needs met. Yeah, right.

Alone -- Admiral Richard E. Byrd -- an account of his solo expedition during the Antarctic night in the interior of that continent. What's fascinating about the book is that the very technology that allows him to inhabit his small cabin in -70 degree weather is the same technology that is slowly killing him. Carbon monoxide poisoning from an oil stove and a hand-cranked radio (connecting him to the hq at Little America) which saps what little strength he has left. This book led me to reread Kafka's short story, "The Burrow."

Steven

↑ Index

982. Bob Haynes
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

I guess everybody's doing it--so here's mine:

-Poems for the Millenium (vol. 2), Rothenberg & Joris, eds.
-Deepstep Come Shining, C.D. Wright
-The Book of Disquiet, Fernando Pessoa
-Science and Steepleflower, Forrest Gander
-Songs of Degree, John Taggart
-Fairy Tales of the Brothers Grimm, Jack Zipes, trans.
-Java Script Developers Guide...

↑ Index

983. Bob Haynes
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Mon 30 Nov 1998

---

ooops, please ignore that last post....I was a bit hasty...put in some poetry books, too...sorry....call me Fishmeal.....

↑ Index

984. F. W. Perrella
Web Del Sol Update 12/1/98
Mon 30 Nov 1998

Perihelion #3 is up: http://webdelsol.com/Perihelion

Ever wonder what those poetry editors are thinking as they sift through all those submissions? What if poetry editors are also poets? Perihelion #3, now online, is devoted to the works of poets who are also editors. In the Discussion section, Jennifer Ley hosts five editors from online and print, who tackle topics such as the varying perspectives on the editor's role: editor as collector, match-maker, creator, "one who dares to give". Come take a look.

Two journals newly associated with WDS are also available for sampling:

Quarterly West http://webdelsol.com/Quarterly_West

Editor Margot Schilpp has a sampling of contemporary/experimental literature, including fiction, short-shorts, poetry, and nonfiction.

and New England Review http://webdelsol.com/New_England_Review

Edited by Stephen Donadio, NER features fiction, poetry, performance pieces, essays, translation, and interviews.

Hope you're working on your creative non-Quictions, too - contest deadline is January 31, 1999. Guidelines are at http://webdelsol.com/cnq.htm

Thanks!

Anne Perrella

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

December 1998

690 messages · Thu 26 Nov 1998 – Tue 22 Dec 1998

December 1998 was the rare month the Poetics list looked up from itself — and could not, in the end, stop looking at itself either. In a single week the United States bombed Baghdad and the House moved to impeach a president, and for once the room engaged the war: Iraq ran to more than fifty messages, Susan Schultz sick to her stomach, Rachel Levitsky treating the list as her only source of news. But it engaged on its own terms alone — the war admitted as a poem, a book-list, a gloss on the day's absurdity, Hilton Obenzinger observing that "recent political discourse has gone way beyond Jabberwocky." The Pentagon's name for the operation, Desert Fox, never once appears; and the archive falls silent on the eighteenth, so the impeachment vote itself drops into a darkness the record never fills.

The month's largest thread was, with terrible aptness, about erasure. Joanna Fuhrman had opened it to flee the list's endless talk about the list — a genuine poetics thread, on the erased text as a form, from DuPlessis's Drafts to Rauschenberg rubbing out a de Kooning — and within days it had been swallowed by the very quarrel it meant to escape. For as the room theorised erasure, one of its own performed it: Henry Gould, the list's most tireless arguer, unsubscribed and was gone. William Slaughter marked the vanishing in five words that were their own found poem — "Henry Gould erased Henry Gould."

For December's true subject, the one it could not put down, was its own government: who might speak, how often, and whether a private word of rebuke amounted to harassment. Mark Wallace and others proposed a limit of one post a day; Mairead Byrne answered with a satire that laid bare the proposal's gendered edge, wondering what such rationing would do to the list's vitality. It curdled fast. Gabriel Gudding, who days earlier had written "But already I miss Henry." — mourning the departed Gould — was now himself the target, Pierre Joris telling him flatly, "Get off this list." And under the flames the list's co-editor, Joel Kuszai, resigned.

And yet, even burning, the room kept doing the thing it does — it played. The book-lists went on, what to read on the bus and what to buy a beloved; the wordplay went on, Emily Lloyd mishearing a menu into barbarian cremes; and the politics it would not debate head-on it smuggled in disguised as verse, as when Daniel Bouchard slipped an Iraq poem onto the list whose flattest line —

“No sane person actually lives in Iraq.” — did more than any argument. The list was coming apart and writing poems about it in the same breath.

The record does not end so much as give out. Its last full day is the eighteenth, the bombs still falling, and it is spent watching the list’s stewards reach for the exits: Kuszai gone, Charles Bernstein scrambling to pick up the administration and admitting he wanted to bow out himself, Charles Alexander saying the plainest thing anyone said all month — “Goodbye. I’m sorry you’re leaving, Joel.” Then, on the nineteenth, three messages; on the twenty-second, one; and after that, nothing. I have set the war and the list’s own unravelling on the same few days exactly as December left them, because that is how the year went dark — not with a vote or a ceasefire, but with a room full of poets, mid-argument, going quiet.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 690 in all.

WRITERS

(Art), David Erben 395, 434
Aerialedge 539
Alexander, Charles 1, 2, 36, 74, 178, 319, 419, 485, 529, 664
And, Miekal 58, 87, 93, 135, 136, 183, 184, 221, 252, 287, 345, 390, 452, 457, 544, 562, 596, 611
ANDREWS, BETSY 448, 508
Andrews, Jim 85, 130, 174, 216
Archambeau, Robert 525, 655
Balestrieri, Peter 524, 597
Baratier, David 421, 688, 689
Beard, Tom 556
Bell, Thomas 212, 213, 245, 283
Bennett, Jim 41, 42, 137, 222, 382, 389, 417, 482, 635
Bernes, Jasper 47, 656
Bernstein, Charles 164, 304, 551, 582, 682, 683
Billitteri, Carla 507
Bouchard, Daniel 102, 105, 250, 587, 615, 625, 629
Bowering, George 8, 38, 81, 82, 83, 86, 131, 132, 282, 340, 341, 481, 541, 574, 575, 576, 641
Brennan, Joe 43, 125, 140, 192, 249, 271, 350, 444
Brink, Leonard 379, 478, 494, 569, 686
Bromige, David 65, 67, 234, 257, 327, 416, 526, 542, 605, 620, 642, 653
Brook, James 6, 359
Butcher, Carmen 179, 224, 261
Byrne, Mairead 57, 59, 72, 97, 126, 151, 162, 205, 239, 256, 315, 387, 433, 613, 639, 676
Cabri, Louis 40, 467
Cameron, David 48, 157
Carl, David 96
Carpenter, Brian 54
Carter, Daniel 11, 294, 383, 384
Charssmith 361, 364, 666, 667
Cheek, Cris 165
Cheney, Don 322
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 120
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 29, 139, 145
Clark, Susan 342
Clay, Steven 64
Corbett, Robert 7
Corbin, Michael 69, 172, 374, 637
Curnow, Wystan 122, 408, 410, 415
Damon, Maria 465, 614
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 23, 24
Danon, Ruth 320
Davis, Jordan 16, 103, 116, 265, 398, 430
Day, Roger 9, 94, 355, 391, 420, 594
Dbkk 80, 246, 373, 396
Debrot, Jacques 422, 450
DeDeo, Simon 284, 317
Delville, Michel 84
Devaney, MJ 363
Divizio 634, 636, 687
Drake, R. 530
DuCharme, Mark 37, 225, 472, 665
DuPlessis, Rachel Blau 267
Durand, Marcella 407, 456, 515
Eurydice 414
Farr, Roger 99
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 13, 26, 51, 60, 113, 169, 170, 195, 204, 208, 233, 296, 356, 393, 458, 535, 537, 553, 651, 658, 677, 684
Foster, Edward 53, 148
Fristrom, Edward 196
Fuhrman, J. 180, 226
Gancie/C.Parcelli, R. 238, 302, 306, 437, 442, 644
Garrison, E.M. 307, 308, 439, 610
Gottlieb, Michael 392
Gould, Henry 173
Grindell, Nicholas 248
Groberts 160, 223, 254, 403, 425, 528
Grotjohn, Bob 325
Grumman, Bob 492, 502
Gudding, Gabriel 10, 90, 118, 141, 186, 253, 266, 367, 394, 405, 424, 438, 577, 581, 633, 643, 645
Haynes, Bob 30, 70, 108, 127
Healy, L. MacMahon And T.R. 219, 459
Hickman, David 121
Hofer, Jen 400
Ike/clare 5, 376
Izak 344
Jarnot 617
JOHNSON, KENT 230, 241, 242, 264, 323, 334
Joris, Pierre 71, 185, 228, 412, 536, 543, 545, 557, 578, 657
Kalleberg, Garrett 388, 511, 602
Kane, Daniel 21, 281, 401
Kelleher, Mike 519
Kelley, Karen 35, 44, 124, 201, 235, 473, 669
Kellogg, David 98, 630, 674
Ken|n|ing 46, 358
Kimball, J 39

Kimmelman, Burt 270, 330
King, Amy 244, 300, 375, 565
Kozaitis, Anastasios 293, 559, 612, 650, 654
KRAMER, WENDY 4, 45
Kuszai, J 92, 123, 189, 191, 286, 316, 321, 324, 453, 454, 628, 646
Latta, John 259, 546
Lazer, Hank 110
Lennon, Brian 447
Levitsky, Rachel 231, 292, 305, 352, 353, 381, 487, 570, 591, 608, 609, 618
Levy, Herb 193
Lewin, Anya 329
Lewis, Joel 279, 531, 561, 580, 627
List, Poetics 20, 243, 406, 690
LIT, Fredrik Hertzberg 486
Little, Billy 3, 32, 176, 326, 397, 423, 490, 513, 549
Lloyd, Emily 28, 313, 335, 337, 362, 368, 372, 404, 413, 461, 489, 495, 517, 564, 668
Loden, Rachel 73, 133, 505
Magee, Michael 49, 142, 347, 366, 385
Marks, Steven 449
Marsh, William 106, 202
MAYHEW 25, 31, 200, 288, 426, 429, 497, 552, 585
McCarthy, Pattie 349
McCreary, Chris 255, 297
McGrand, Eliza 61, 62, 68, 100, 150, 154, 194, 229, 332, 411, 466, 647
McGuire, Jerry 586
McKevitt, Karen 662
McVay, Gwyn 348, 440, 503, 504, 516, 626
Mitchell, Stuart 236
Muratori, Fred 428
Nagler, Chris 175, 509
Nelson, Jason 496
Neufeld, Pete 560
Nguyen, Hoa 370
Nielsen, Aldon 27, 107, 109, 298, 399, 431, 532, 533, 681
Obenzinger, Hilton Manfred 144, 275, 331, 619, 661
Oliver, Douglas 343
Orange, Tom 163, 217, 218, 339, 380, 462, 463, 468, 512, 540, 623
Perrella, F. W. 451
Pollet, Sylvester 104, 554, 600
Pompeii, Jessica 563, 590, 592, 675
Prejsnar, Mark 19, 50, 299, 310, 351, 360, 386, 435, 616, 673, 679
Pritchett,Patrick 52, 101, 260, 263, 550, 622
Project, Poetry 95, 290, 291, 432, 624
Prunty, Randy 134, 197, 198, 295, 418, 455, 476, 484, 584
Quartermain, Peter 336, 631
Qureshi, Ramez 89, 199, 269, 648
R.Gancie/C.Parcelli 15, 18, 115, 119, 155, 159, 161, 166, 258, 272, 301, 365, 460
Raea100900 56
Raphael, Dan 470
ReMap, Todd Baron /*/ 215, 501
Review, Chicago 22
Roitman, Judy 111, 112, 114, 251, 309, 312, 499, 500, 522, 523, 547, 649, 670
Rosenberg, Jim 91
Ruggles, Trace 632
Ruggles, Tracy S. 147, 354
Ruttan, Jack 589
Salerno, Mark 78, 79, 573
Samuels, Lisa 237
Schuchat 63, 182, 289, 369, 477, 660
Schultz, Kathy Lou 33, 75, 77, 181, 220, 338, 480, 567
Schultz, Susan 247, 558, 599
Shana 548, 588
Shemurph 357
Shoemaker, Steven 117, 149, 203, 207, 262, 278, 464, 520, 527, 601
Silliman, Ron 88, 188, 190, 333, 443, 604
Slaughter, William 76, 303
Smith, Dale 168, 273, 371, 469, 471
Sondheim, A. Jenn 17, 55, 128, 146, 177, 227, 285, 318, 377, 402, 446, 479, 510, 572, 593, 598, 606, 621, 663, 678, 680
Spahr, Juliana 209
Stroffolino, Louis 280, 314, 441, 493, 671, 672
Sullivan, Gary 138
Sumner, Alaric 346, 514
Tabios, Eileen 427
Thompson, George 171, 276, 474, 483, 506
Tosh 34, 152, 328, 534, 538, 566, 607, 638, 659, 685
Tranter, John 568
Treadwell, Elizabeth 14, 129, 153, 158, 211, 445, 603
Upton., Lawrence 488, 491, 555, 579
Vogel, Aviva 436
Wallace, Mark 143, 268, 595
Weiss, Irving 652
Weiss, Mark 156, 167, 210, 214, 240, 475
Wessman, Ralph 274
Wheeler, Susan 187
Wilson, Carl 277, 311, 409
Wright, Laura E. 206, 518, 521, 583
Zauhar, David 12, 66, 498
Zimmerman, Daniel 232, 378, 571, 640

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 14, 490, 524
Adams, Robert 595
Adie, Kate 579, 594
Adorno, Theodor 29

Albright, Madeline 260
Alexander, Jane 407, 409, 419, 447
Alice, Mary 176, 206, 337, 352, 362, 505, 506, 513, 528, 572
Allison, Dorothy 274, 338
Altemus, Reed 139
Americans, Asian 14, 50, 337, 352, 432, 438, 443, 534, 620, 621, 629, 640, 642, 675
Amnasan, Mike 33, 80, 181
Anderson, Beth 614
Anderson, Laurie 50, 396, 534
Andre, Michael 6
Andrews, Bruce 40, 268, 304, 333, 335, 414, 467, 539, 671
Antin, David 299, 412, 552
Anton, Robert 652
Aragon, Louis 407, 419, 447
Armand, Louis 247
Armantrout, Rae 1, 3, 21, 56, 122, 342
Arnold, Bob 274, 445
Ashbery, John 63, 231, 281, 472
Atlanta, Mark P. 299
Auden, W. H. 85, 437
Auster, Paul 42, 44, 144, 171, 275, 372, 378
Austin, Geer 39, 273, 370, 385, 418
Baker, Mary 3, 278, 342
Balaz, Joe 247
Baraka, Amiri 412, 612
Baratier, Dave 416, 422, 431
Barnard, Mary 679
Barnes, Diane 534
Barnett, Anthony 689
Barnett, Catherine 273, 371
Barney, Matthew 274, 337, 352
Barthes, Roland 14, 542
Barwin, Gary 530
Basinski, Michael 507
Bataille, George 273
Beatty, Warren 138
Becker, Robin 618
Beckett, Samuel 642, 676
Beckett, Tom 360
Beckman, Joshua 138
Bellamy, Dodie 33, 80, 179, 181, 338
Belle, Cecelia 475
Benjamin, Walter 274, 425, 447, 614
Bennett, John M. 139, 635
Berger, John 490, 524
Bergvall, Caroline 414
Berkeley, Michael 14, 89, 129, 153, 156, 158, 211, 219, 220, 240, 342, 445, 534, 603, 618, 642, 666
Berkson, Bill 370, 385
Berlin, Irving 50, 71, 74, 447
Berman, Tosh 34, 152, 215, 328, 534, 536, 538, 566, 607, 638, 659, 685
Bernard, George 407, 419, 447
Bernstein, Emma 10, 13, 15, 26, 32, 43, 51, 57, 59, 60, 83, 115, 141, 264, 266, 335, 337, 350, 352, 427, 446, 489, 525, 540, 542, 553, 589, 643, 644, 684
Berrigan, Anselm 95, 290, 308, 385, 432, 507, 539
Berrigan, Anslem 539
Berrigan, Eddie 370, 472
Berrigan, Edmund 263
Berrigan, Ted 472
Berryman, John 317, 335
Bertholf, Robert J. 526, 573
Beuys, Joseph 365, 387, 394
Bibby, Michael 533
Birmingham, Jed 30
Blackburn, Paul 104, 123, 412
Blake, William 336, 434, 449, 505, 518
Blanchot, Maurice 185, 228, 238, 251, 254, 258, 263, 412, 536, 543, 545, 557, 578, 579, 657
Blarnes, Eric 188
Bogosian, Eric 291
Borges, Jorge Luis 586
Bourdieu, Pierre 29
Bradbury, Steve 247
Bradley, Tom 243, 531
Brady, Taylor 346, 414
Brainard, Joe 36
Brannen, Jonathan 247
Brashear, Jim 80
Brautigan, Richard 12
Brazil, David 644
Brecht, Bertolt 266
Brossard, Nicole 3, 342
Browne, Colin 379, 571
Bruno, Franklin 106, 139, 302
Budd, Billy 193
Bukowski, Charles 327
Burke, Carolyn 104
Burton, Philip 526, 551
Butler, Judith 618
Buuck, David 672
Byron, Philip 10
Caddel, Richard 336
Caesar, Little 274
Cage, John 251, 539
Callas, Maria 10
Campbell, Jeremy 482, 534
Carll, Steve 247
Carlos, William 22, 139, 173, 193
Carroll, Jon 475, 483, 484, 486, 489, 497, 499, 505, 506, 509, 522, 560
Carroll, Lewis 474, 475, 478, 483, 484, 494, 499, 505, 506, 521, 556
Casey, Sean 139
Castro, Michael 139, 274
Cather, Willa 193

Catlin, Alan 379
Catullus 322, 381, 490, 524
Celan, Paul 29, 432
Cha, Theresa Hak Kyung 338
Chace, Joel 139
Cheatham, Robert 572
Chomsky, Noam 238
Claire, Paula 274
Clark, Cheryl 89, 435, 618
Clark, Emilie 373
Clarke, Jack 274
Clemente, Francesco 29
Clinton, Bill 260, 580, 587, 598, 616, 618, 619, 620, 624, 625, 627, 632, 638, 640, 642, 650, 659, 661, 679
Cobbing, Bob 139, 336, 488, 491, 514, 555, 579
Coffey, Michael 123
Cohen, David 652
Colby, Todd 291
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 95
Collins, Phil 274
Columbus, Christopher 135, 688
Conover, Roger 104
Coolidge, Clark 63, 288
Cooper, Paula 9
Cope, Stephen 123, 396, 614
Corso, Gregory 32
Coultas, Brenda 273, 371
County, Mike 273, 371, 390
Coupland, Douglas 355
Crane, Lee 18, 63
Creeley, Robert 32, 63, 71, 74, 176, 412, 479, 528
Croggon, Alison 274
Crozier, Andrew 336
Cunningham, Michael 55
Daive, Jean 71, 74
Daley, Ryan 630, 672
Darragh, Tina 539
Davenport, Steve 497
Davidson, Ian 572
Davidson, Michael 25
Davies, Alan 392
Davies, Kevin 3
Davis, Martin 89, 190, 193, 273, 322, 534, 571
Degentesh, Katie 672
Delany, Samuel 138
Deleuze, Gilles 163, 217, 339, 462, 463, 465
Democracy, Rachel 231, 305
Dennis, Michael 362
Derksen, Jeff 3
Derrida, Jacques 228, 238, 251, 254, 258, 377, 525
Dickinson, Emily 95
Didion, Joan 338
Donnelly, Jean 539
Downing, David 274
Drucker, Johanna 64
Duncan, Andrew 32, 63, 123, 176, 274, 412
Duncan, Robert 263, 485, 615
Durgin, Patrick F. 46, 358, 379
Edgar, Chris 273, 274, 371, 418, 493
Edmond, Murray 52, 247
Edwards, Ken 414
Eigner, Larry 111, 112, 114, 251, 258, 309, 312, 499, 500, 522, 523, 527, 547, 649, 670
Eliot, Joe 497
Eliot, T. S. 388
Ellen, Mary 104, 138
Emerson, Claudia 523, 527
England, Amy 95, 139, 200, 336, 342, 621
Ernst, Max 6, 302
Eshleman, Clayton 412
Evans, Steve 507, 569
Evenson, Brian 138
Everding, Kelly 138
Falwell, Jerry 681
Featherston, Dan 247
Feld, Ross 266
Felix, Joel 139, 164, 166
Finkelstein, Norman 275
Fischbach, Chris 138
Fisher, Harrison 539
Fisher, Roy 336
Fitterman, Rob 539
Fitzgerald, Scott 193
Fletcher, Nielsen 346, 505, 572
Foley, Jack 18
Forrest, Lisa 338
Foucault, Michel 238
Foust, Graham 414, 507
France, Peter 139, 190, 277, 311, 320, 359, 529, 534, 644, 676
Fraser, Kathleen 104
Freeman, Brad 36, 344
Friedlander, Benjamin 396, 507
Friedlander, Lee 614
Frost, Corey 337, 352
Fuhrman, Joanna 180, 212, 214, 224, 226
Fuller, Heather 539
Gaddis, William 52, 622, 681
Gander, Forrest 338
Ganick, Peter 244, 300
Garcia, Jerry 440
Garcia, Rodrigo 652
Gardner, Janet 505, 521
Garrison, Deborah 307, 308, 439, 610, 611
Gass, William 138, 337
Gilbert, Roger 231, 534
Gilmore, Gary 53, 148
Ginsberg, Allan 32
Ginsberg, Allen 206, 245, 518, 521, 583, 622

Gizzi, Peter 231
Gladman, Renee 247, 305
Glancy, Diane 138
Glass, Jesse 388
Gluck, Robert 33, 80, 179, 181, 335, 338
Goetsch, Douglas 421
Goldberg, Ariel 29, 506
Goldman, Judith 139, 190
Goodman, Amy 347
Goodman, Paul 347
Gordon, Ruth 278, 571
Gould, Glenn 52, 141, 230, 264, 266, 304, 323, 421, 435, 582
Gray, David 64, 164, 166
Green, Paul 342
Greene, Jonathan 505
Grenier, Bob 63, 335, 443
Grenier, Robert 176
Griffiths, Bill 336
Guest, Barbara 104
Gunn, Paula 138
Hamilton, Diana 226, 530
Hampton, Fred 622
Hansen, Jefferson 238
Hardy, Thomas 301, 419
Harris, Ken 27, 274, 446
Harryman, Carla 396, 539, 614
Harvey, David 425
Harwood, Lee 291
Hatlen, Burt 526, 551
Hayden, Robert 54, 207, 210
Hayes, Jared 652
Healy, Randolph 219, 240, 274, 459
Heath, Jennifer 138
Heidegger, Martin 228, 238, 301, 377, 506
Hejinian, Lyn 313, 317, 335, 338, 400, 404, 410, 413, 417, 460, 461, 526, 539, 551, 582
Hengst, Clifford 33
Henri, Charles 71, 74, 206, 245, 425, 456, 459, 518, 521, 571, 583
Herman, Rachel 193, 568, 622
Hernandez, Victor 292
Hewicker, Scott 33
Hicks, Sue 622
Higgins, Dick 184, 370, 385
Highfill, Mitch 291
Hirschman, Jack 182
Hollo, Anselm 600, 613
Holmes, Janet 95
Holt, Henry 438
Homer 276
Horton, David 27
House, White 621, 661
Howard, Richard 6, 107
Howe, Bill 145
Hunter, Carrie 30
Inman, Peter 595
Irby, Ken 71, 74
Ireland, Lauren 414
Israel, David R. 619
Israeli, Henry 642
Jackson, Jesse 3, 27, 30, 246, 365
Jacobs, Jane 409
Jaeger, Peter 145, 507
Januzzi, Marisa 104
Javier, Paolo 139, 652
Jenkins, Margaret 274, 531
Jennings, Peter 187
Jirgens, Karl 139
Johns, Jasper 118, 346
Johnston, Devin 22, 526
Jones, Bob 278, 412
Jordan, June 16, 18, 105, 124, 273, 371, 453, 501
Joseph, Safdie 365, 581
Joyce, James 622
Joyce, Michael 18, 213, 438, 443
Juan, Don 509
Kafka, Franz 35, 534
Kaipa, Summi 247
Kathryn, Mary 259
Kavanagh, Patrick 10
Keaton, Diane 10
Keats, John 542
Kelly, Paul 40, 401, 408, 412
Kelly, Robert 71, 74, 408, 412
Kerouac, Jack 622
Killian, Kevin 33, 80, 246, 388, 507
Killian, Sean 33
Kimball, Cynthia 39
Kinsella, John 58, 247, 582
Koch, Kenneth 265, 490, 524
Krusoe, Jim 534
Kuzsai, Joel 314, 686
Kyger, Joanne 32
Laughlin, James 22
Lauterbach, Ann 243
Law, Sarah 414
Lease, Joseph 120
Lederer, Katy 250, 388
Lehman, David 12, 78, 138
Leigh, Mike 274
Levertov, Denise 412
Levin, Jonathan 139
Lomax, Alan 344, 379
London, Frank 185, 342, 488, 491, 514, 555, 579
Lorberer, Eric 138
Lorca, Federico García 138
Louise, Bobbie 274, 278
Mac Low, Jackson 243, 342
Lowell, Amy 317, 335
Lowry, Malcolm 622
Luoma, Bill 63, 247, 322

Lynch, David 88
Lyons, Kimberly 168, 273, 371
Macdonald, Helen 414
Machlin, Dan 388
Mackey, Nathaniel 567
Madison, James 71, 74, 185, 190, 193, 228, 238, 412, 536, 543, 545, 557, 578, 579, 657
Madrid, Anthony 652
Majzels, Robert 342
Mallarmé, Stéphane 228, 238, 351
Mandel, Tom 571
Mangold, Sarah 344
Marie, Julie 3, 342, 652
Markotic, Nicole 396, 614
Marlowe, Christopher 139
Martin, Chris 190, 193, 521, 572
Martinez, Michael 652
Marvin, Lee 135
Mathews, Harry 138
Maxwell, Susan 445
Mayer, Bernadette 123, 410, 413
Mayer, Jane 344
Mayhew, Jonathan 25, 183, 188, 197, 288, 435, 443, 552
McCaffery, Steve 551, 579
Mead, Taylor 291
Melville, Pierre 193, 622
Meredith, William 3, 342, 396, 505, 600, 613, 614
Merrill, Stuart 138
Meyer, Tom 139
Milne, Drew 379, 414
Milton, John 534, 536
Mingus, Charles 73, 338
Mirakove, Carol 273, 371
Mitchell, Stephen 236, 274
Monroe, Bill 344
Moody, Rick 278
Moore, Marianne 193
Morgan, Robin 249, 274, 595
Morris, Tim 139
Mossin, Andrew 614
Mottram, Eric 336
Moure, Erin 342
Moxley, Jennifer 176
Mullen, Harryette 476, 481
Murphy, Michelle 274
Murphy, Sheila E. 357, 379, 569
Myles, Eileen 265, 370, 385
Naylor, Paul 569
Neilson, Melanie 414
Nelson, Cynthia 273, 371
Neruda, Pablo 490, 524
Nicholson, Andy 278
Nixon, Richard 620, 640
Nolan, John 302
Norman, Peter 390
Norton, John 551
Notely, Alice 370, 385
Notley, Alice 3, 32, 63, 273, 371, 507
O'Hara, Frank 3, 78, 370, 373, 385
Olson, Charles 50, 238
Olson, John 247
Ong, Walter 276
Oppenheimer, Joel 573
Osman, Jena 191, 396, 614
Ovid 76, 490, 524
Owen, Maureen 53, 148
Ozick, Cynthia 622
Pacific, Asian 206, 247, 558
Padgett, Ron 206
Padin, Clemente 29, 139, 652
Paglia, Camille 362
Paige, Abby 274
Palmer, Michael 180, 212, 214, 224, 226
Parker, Karl 475, 534
Pastan, Linda 335
Paterson, William 18, 22
Patterson, Ian 138
Pearson, Ted 396, 614
Pelton, Ted 507
Perelman, Bob 319, 396, 428, 542, 614
Perez, James 292
Perloff, Marjorie 10, 15, 26, 29, 104, 264, 266, 424, 428, 469, 525, 537, 540, 553, 589, 644, 684
Perry, David 50
Phillips, Malcolm 6
Phillips, Tom 226
Pinsky, Robert 73, 238, 266, 424, 428
Plath, Sylvia 317, 327, 335
Polkinhorn, Harry 139, 652
Pollock, Jackson 246, 261
Pound, Ezra 173
Pound, Scott 22, 32, 115, 173, 176, 199, 238, 505
Powell, Douglas 88
Di Prima, Diane 479
Purdy, James 542
Pynchon, Thomas 622
Quarles, Lanny 505
Quixote, Don 14
Ramsdell, Heather 414
Randall, Karen 138, 274
Rasula, Jed 551
Ratcliffe, Stephen 569, 571
Rauschenberg, Robert 239, 246, 303
Raven, Francis 520, 523, 527
Raworth, Tom 336, 378
Reagan, Nancy 426, 435, 497
Reeves, Jennifer 274
Retallack, Joan 243, 365, 539
Revell, Donald 138
Rexroth, Kenneth 666

Reynolds, Sean 274, 518
Reznikoff, Charles 63
Rich, Adrienne 335, 551, 582
Riding, Laura 240
Riley, Peter 247
Rilke, Rainer Maria 76, 447
Rivera, Alex 292
Roberts, Wendy 274
Robertson, Lisa 3, 176, 274, 326, 397, 414, 423, 490, 507, 513, 549
Robins, Maureen 39
Rodefer, Stephen 322
Ronk, Martha 379, 569
Rosenthal, Chuck 534, 536
Rosenthal, Sarah 344
Rothenberg, Jerome 71, 74, 396, 412, 551, 579, 594, 614
Rothenberg, Jerry 408, 412
Roy, Camille 33, 80, 181
Rubin, Michael 338
Russo, Linda 123, 507
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 33, 80
Sailers, Cynthia 344
Sanchez, Jorge 139
Sanders, Jay 291
Santos, Craig 292
Sauer, Carl 54
Scalapino, Leslie 176, 526, 539, 551, 582, 584
Schmidt, Paul 139, 652
Schneider, Dan 370, 379, 385, 569
Schulman, Sarah 291
Schultz, Susan M. 247
Schuyler, James 498
Schwartz, Judy 190
Schwerner, Armand 230, 412
Scroggins, Mark 507
Searle, John 274
Selby, Spencer 357, 364, 379, 569
Sexton, Anne 337, 352
Shakespeare, William 76, 505
Sharma, Prageeta 273, 371
Shaw, Lytle 373, 396, 614
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 95, 542, 560, 570
Sheppard, Robert 584
Sherry, James 322
Sherwood, Kenneth 274
Shoemaker, Steve 143, 159, 266
Sikelianos, Eleni 53, 388
Simon, Greg 34, 139, 274, 284, 307, 313, 317, 335, 343, 404, 407, 413, 419, 447
Simone, Frank 52, 139
Simpson, Bennett 274
Sloan, Margaret 507, 618
Smith, Rod 40, 333, 342, 467, 539
Smith, Tracy K. 33, 80, 234, 274, 291, 539
Sokal, Alan 238
Sondheim, Alan 174, 305, 510, 524, 572, 642, 644
Sondheim, Jennifer 600
Spahr, Boyd 168, 250, 274, 322
Spandrift, Jack 118
Sparrow, John 95, 370, 385, 412
Spence, Pete 139
Spicer, Jack 78, 528
Stanley, George 3, 32, 481
Starr, Ken 533, 587, 616, 624
Stein, Gertrude 14, 153, 156, 198, 240, 554, 576, 586
Stein, Suzanne 28, 63, 84, 86, 91, 313, 317, 335, 337, 347, 352, 362, 368, 389, 424, 435, 438, 586
Steinberg, Hugh 247
Stevens, Wallace 438
Stewart, Christine 414
Stewart, Susan 274
Stone, David 29
Strang, Brian 33, 80
Strickland, Stephanie 414, 582
Summers, Rod 139
Sutherland, Mark 505
Sweeney, Jennifer K. 89
Taylor, Jesse 291
Teasdale, Sara 17
Tejada, Roberto 273
Templeton, Fiona 414
Terrill, Mark 138
Terry, Philip 274
Texas, Irving 4, 273
Thayler, Carl 370
Thomas, Dylan 336, 414, 507
Thompson, Jon 37
Thomson, Stephen 190, 193
Toklas, Alice B. 337
Toscano, Rodrigo 33, 80, 414
Tribune, Chicago 390
Trujillo, Dorothy 3, 342
Tuma, Keith 104
Turner, Brian 139
Tuttle, Richard 36
Tyler, Mary 572
Tzara, Tristan 506
Valentine, Jean 274
Veronica, Angela 336
Vidal, Pierre 139
Vincent, Gregory 138, 176
Virgil 37, 284, 307
Vizenor, Gerald 138
Waldman, Anne 104, 138, 252, 259, 579, 594
Waldman, Ken 252
Waldrop, Keith 343
Waldrop, Rosemary 501
Walker, Margaret 27, 30
Walker, Scott 34

Wallace, Sara 278, 539
Walsh, Catherine 414
Warner, Jim 39
Washington, Harold 7, 268, 342, 407, 419, 489, 539, 621, 644, 659
Watson, Sasha 42, 44, 94
Watten, Barrett 335, 396, 507, 539, 614
Watts, Charles 342
Weber, Charles 69, 122, 425
Whalen, Philip 370, 385
Wharton, Samuel 14, 193
Whitman, Walt 335, 347
Whyte, Ryan 572
Wieners, John 32
Wilkinson, John 414
Williams, Jonathan 600
Williams, Raymond 29, 425
Williams, Tony 130, 173, 193, 274
Williams, William Carlos 12
Williamson, Aaron 414
Wilson, Colin 138
Wilson, Rob 247
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 301
Wolff, Rebecca 338
Wolsak, Melissa 3
Woolf, Virginia 655
Wordsworth, William 635
Wright, Laura E. 206, 245, 518, 521, 583, 588
Wright, Richard 534
Yau, John 407, 419, 447
Zamsky, Robert 507
Zukofsky, Louis 136, 161, 322, 438, 490, 524
Zummer, Thomas 572
Zurawski, Magdalena 326

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 30, 292, 304, 305, 345, 397, 432, 445, 618, 621, 642, 679
Aesthetics 140, 142, 202, 213, 228, 238, 264, 272, 301, 304, 305, 317, 335, 469, 471, 492
African American poetry 534
Anthologies 10, 14, 29, 263, 273, 299, 336, 371, 400, 410, 413, 432, 443, 469, 501, 553
Anti-Semitism 29
Appropriation 15, 51, 57, 100, 115, 123, 140, 142, 180, 240, 319, 441, 621, 628, 636, 639, 643, 673, 689
Archives and libraries 4, 12, 20, 28, 123, 135, 185, 188, 190, 193, 206, 237, 245, 252, 259, 268, 339, 408, 428, 445, 518, 521, 529, 530, 534, 536, 583
Autobiography 6, 12, 64, 139, 338, 356, 370, 385, 591
Avant-garde 1, 4, 21, 78, 79, 266, 337, 352, 424, 471, 552
Beat generation 42, 44, 622
Beauty 10, 39, 284, 307, 326, 327, 407, 419, 439, 447, 528, 594, 684
Biography 5, 95, 263, 400, 689
Black Mountain 542
Book announcements 6, 40, 63, 237, 247, 263, 319, 328, 357, 359, 388, 507, 530, 537
Bookstores 64, 135, 534, 644
Capitalism 69, 92, 122, 616
Censorship 15, 102, 115, 140, 142, 143, 159, 163, 169, 256, 304, 305, 315, 323, 350, 387, 391, 394, 411, 421, 444, 453, 458, 534
Cities 6, 89, 284, 292, 307, 326, 407, 409, 419, 420, 425, 447, 456, 459, 489, 515
Class 338
Climate 206
Close reading 29, 64
Collage and montage 4, 22, 506, 529, 553
Conferences and festivals 3, 27, 89, 100, 123, 139, 160, 177, 183, 204, 218, 298, 313, 419, 453, 549, 622, 635
Confessional poetry 313, 324, 327, 335
Copyright and permissions 6, 20, 30, 88, 107, 167, 193, 240, 510
Craft 106, 319, 553, 589, 639
Creative writing pedagogy 1, 21, 73, 101
Dada 12, 71, 74
Deconstruction 238, 411, 463, 465
Difficulty 20, 191, 411, 439, 505
Disability 135
Dreams 3, 4, 29, 51, 57, 89, 115, 194, 198, 317, 319, 324, 390, 423, 581, 644
Ecology and ecopoetics 57, 58, 115, 266
Editing 20, 129, 137, 139, 164, 166, 169, 196, 266, 287, 296, 304, 323, 367, 375, 387, 390, 432, 439, 444, 453, 454, 467, 469
Electronic poetry and hypertext 20, 29, 143, 151, 159, 164, 166, 183, 188, 213, 218, 221, 247, 268, 322, 333, 358, 390, 544, 595
Elegy 251, 254, 656
Empire and imperialism 169, 621, 654
Epic 475
Erasure 224, 228, 229, 233, 235, 238, 251, 254, 257, 258, 275, 276, 277, 278, 286, 299, 300, 301, 310, 311, 312, 316, 320, 327, 329, 331, 343, 349, 355, 372, 375, 377, 378, 382, 387, 464, 468, 483, 484, 486, 499, 542
Ethics 154, 162, 249, 267, 272, 277, 283, 286, 304, 309, 310, 311, 320, 331, 349, 372, 378, 387, 458, 542
Experimental poetry 80, 135, 160, 247
Fascism 262, 296, 356
Feminism 129, 319, 352, 407, 419, 456
Film 5, 9, 29, 88, 190, 275, 278, 330, 370, 385, 519, 531, 535
Formalism 29
Free speech 92, 686
Gender 36, 51, 57, 67, 115, 158, 168, 207, 208, 210, 262, 267, 272, 273, 304, 313, 337, 352, 362, 371, 419, 439, 453, 480,

526, 579, 593, 594
Grants and funding 89, 106, 326, 609, 618, 622, 640, 642, 666, 668
Haiku 264, 274, 312
Humour and satire 10, 13, 15, 26, 160, 277, 311, 320, 337, 347, 386, 397, 415, 424, 429, 433, 437, 622, 676
Ideology 229, 264, 266, 304, 356, 360, 496
Imagism 193
Improvisation 529
Indigenous and Native poetics 260, 504, 571, 621
Interviews 1, 20, 21, 56, 104, 138, 176, 190, 412, 441, 531, 550, 618, 622, 629
Israel and Palestine 619, 642
Jewish poetics 352
Language poetry 2, 65, 101, 116, 268, 284, 307, 313, 317, 319, 330, 335, 347, 351, 365, 400, 404, 410, 413, 416, 422, 426, 431, 432, 453, 462, 470, 497, 525, 529, 553, 644
Latino and Latin American poetry 292
Letters and correspondence 20, 193, 278, 304, 305, 338, 359, 467, 489, 496, 529
List moderation 51, 57, 59, 69, 92, 100, 102, 112, 113, 115, 116, 122, 126, 137, 147, 164, 166, 169, 176, 177, 203, 220, 256, 267, 272, 287, 296, 304, 315, 326, 360, 366, 384, 387, 391, 393, 394, 397, 398, 405, 423, 424, 428, 453, 458, 467, 469, 490, 513, 549, 643, 663, 680
Little magazines 10, 14, 20, 36, 73, 80, 89, 100, 129, 130, 145, 153, 154, 156, 158, 190, 206, 211, 219, 220, 240, 247, 263, 266, 268, 273, 274, 284, 303, 307, 326, 338, 343, 346, 350, 352, 358, 369, 370, 371, 373, 379, 385, 390, 407, 410, 413, 419, 421, 431, 443, 445, 453, 456, 462, 471, 501, 507, 511, 525, 529, 557, 568, 572, 603, 627, 635
Lyric poetry 168, 289, 290, 308, 336, 338, 339, 343, 351, 373, 432, 468, 525
Materiality of the text 419, 467
Memory 130, 139, 239, 258, 267, 268, 272, 282, 302, 309, 342, 360, 365, 408, 426, 467, 474, 475, 492, 494, 509, 514, 522, 527, 572, 578, 640
MFA programs 338, 428
Modernism 10, 29, 50, 64, 228, 238, 277, 311, 320, 336, 622, 654
Mourning and loss 20, 59, 193, 194, 198, 209, 253, 277, 311, 320, 323, 337, 352, 390, 396, 458, 469, 471, 614
Multiculturalism 29, 284, 307, 593
Music and poetry 3, 29, 32, 37, 77, 139, 168, 176, 190, 193, 274, 289, 319, 326, 336, 343, 351, 379, 395, 397, 412, 423, 473, 490, 495, 498, 502, 505, 513, 530, 531, 534, 549, 561, 565, 571, 597, 612, 668, 688
Nationalism 73, 627
Nature 20, 61, 123, 130, 143, 156, 159, 164, 166, 169, 183, 188, 193, 206, 287, 301, 323, 335, 347, 390, 391, 425, 427, 462, 492, 495, 502, 505, 542, 610, 611, 642, 659
New York School 268, 432, 467, 468
Obituary and memorial 20, 30, 390
Ontology 125, 230, 301, 510
Oulipo 138, 277, 311, 320
Performance and the poetry reading 22, 39, 63, 71, 74, 75, 89, 174, 206, 231, 263, 268, 337, 352, 526, 595
Phenomenology 54, 238
Philosophy 106, 180, 214, 229, 238, 268, 270, 299, 301, 304, 312, 324, 365, 463, 465, 520, 523, 527, 537, 540, 553, 593
Place and region 64, 595, 622, 628, 636, 639
Poet laureate 73
Poetics 10, 20, 26, 46, 48, 54, 59, 61, 62, 64, 72, 73, 75, 76, 92, 95, 100, 101, 104, 105, 106, 118, 123, 124, 126, 132, 133, 137, 147, 154, 160, 163, 164, 166, 167, 174, 177, 183, 189, 191, 206, 209, 218, 220, 221, 228, 236, 237, 238, 243, 256, 264, 266, 267, 272, 275, 293, 300, 303, 304, 305, 312, 319, 321, 323, 358, 374, 377, 387, 390, 393, 394, 399, 400, 406, 408, 411, 412, 414, 415, 420, 430, 432, 437, 439, 441, 442, 444, 450, 454, 455, 458, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 471, 472, 473, 476, 477, 479, 481, 482, 485, 498, 507, 508, 514, 525, 526, 539, 544, 553, 564, 569, 572, 577, 619, 623, 642, 644, 651, 659, 661, 662, 664, 668, 673, 675, 676, 679, 682, 690
Post-structuralism 510
Postmodernism 238
Print vs. digital 35, 52, 64, 125, 190, 191, 226, 237, 268, 277, 278, 282, 292, 311, 313, 320, 352, 359, 361, 363, 401, 408, 416, 435, 446, 489, 519, 534, 536, 542, 544, 551, 582, 622, 689
Prizes and awards 30, 220, 278, 338, 421, 591, 622, 686, 689
Procedural and constraint writing 51, 57, 115, 457
Prose poem 1, 21, 26
Prosody and meter 337, 352, 502, 506
Psychoanalysis 347, 506
Queer poetics 8, 71, 74, 100, 335, 337, 352, 353, 362, 571
Race and poetry 29, 31, 101, 168, 273, 371, 419, 534, 593
Reading announcements 265, 338, 514, 595
Religion and the sacred 89, 106, 154, 279, 299, 312, 348, 505, 509, 612, 622, 635, 654, 661

Representation 228, 238, 267, 272, 277, 286, 310, 311, 320, 327, 337, 352, 453, 467, 480, 505, 510, 542
Reviewing and criticism 10, 16, 18, 20, 22, 26, 29, 30, 64, 78, 100, 123, 162, 163, 167, 174, 176, 177, 190, 191, 193, 202, 209, 212, 213, 214, 231, 238, 245, 250, 260, 268, 273, 275, 283, 323, 336, 347, 352, 356, 370, 373, 385, 389, 394, 410, 413, 418, 421, 424, 435, 444, 445, 446, 451, 469, 507, 514, 550, 553, 573, 595, 622
Revision 229
Romanticism 327
Science 69, 122, 221, 238, 251, 258, 301, 345, 352, 365, 510, 542
Semiotics 446, 462
Serial poem 22, 338, 378, 390, 600
Small press publishing 4, 20, 33, 64, 80, 107, 163, 167, 177, 179, 181, 209, 245, 263, 303, 322, 328, 342, 364, 373, 379, 390, 453, 471, 515, 534, 536, 595, 612, 614, 676, 689
Software and code 100, 106, 127, 150, 177, 202, 213
Sonnet 12, 372, 378
Sound poetry 139, 514, 560
Structuralism 510, 552
Subjectivity 7, 20, 41, 123, 144, 152, 160, 168, 215, 251, 258, 297, 352, 367, 387, 391, 439, 446, 467, 492, 509, 542, 572, 593
Sublime 76, 90, 526
Surrealism 4, 326, 337, 351, 628, 636, 639, 656
Terrorism 139
The academy 4, 7, 10, 12, 20, 22, 25, 29, 30, 64, 84, 89, 98, 104, 107, 111, 112, 114, 115, 135, 139, 160, 164, 166, 180, 185, 190, 191, 193, 247, 251, 252, 258, 259, 267, 272, 275, 276, 281, 288, 289, 309, 312, 319, 336, 338, 344, 351, 363, 365, 389, 401, 408, 412, 425, 428, 446, 463, 465, 472, 498, 499, 500, 522, 523, 527, 547, 552, 553, 571, 622, 630, 649, 652, 670, 674
The body 10, 20, 407, 419, 446, 447, 495, 509, 510, 593
The canon 29, 313, 337, 352, 373
The Gulf War 621, 632, 650
The Holocaust 29, 277, 311, 320
The internet 85, 91, 106, 164, 166, 196, 222, 304, 511
The Iraq war 598, 599, 606, 608, 609, 615, 618, 619, 621, 625, 627, 628, 629, 632, 636, 638, 639, 642, 644, 649, 650, 651, 658, 659, 661, 667, 671, 673
The line 20, 273, 371, 467
The listserv 19, 20, 26, 29, 46, 51, 57, 58, 76, 89, 92, 93, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 105, 108, 109, 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 117, 119, 123, 124, 129, 137, 139, 141, 142, 143, 151, 153, 155, 156, 158, 159, 160, 163, 164, 166, 167, 168, 169, 171, 177, 180, 182, 183, 188, 189, 191, 195, 197, 200, 203, 204, 205, 207, 210, 211, 215, 219, 220, 222, 225, 230, 231, 237, 238, 240, 244, 253, 256, 260, 262, 264, 271, 273, 276, 278, 284, 287, 288, 293, 296, 297, 300, 304, 305, 307, 310, 314, 315, 316, 321, 323, 326, 334, 346, 347, 350, 356, 358, 360, 366, 374, 375, 386, 387, 393, 394, 397, 398, 403, 405, 406, 407, 408, 418, 419, 420, 421, 424, 428, 430, 437, 439, 441, 442, 443, 444, 450, 452, 453, 455, 458, 469, 489, 496, 529, 544, 551, 571, 577, 593, 608, 615, 642, 644, 646, 647, 655, 660, 662, 663, 664, 665, 668, 669, 677, 682, 683, 684, 686, 687, 690
The New Sentence 400
Theatre 33, 141, 193, 396, 531, 571, 614, 621, 669
Torture and Abu Ghraib 139, 651
Translation 5, 41, 63, 71, 74, 125, 144, 175, 185, 238, 302, 322, 326, 329, 339, 342, 343, 372, 378, 387, 388, 468, 489, 500, 504, 512, 521, 534, 536, 552, 556, 557, 571, 583, 585, 588, 591, 592, 597, 640, 654
Vietnam 123, 568, 620, 640, 642
Visual and concrete poetry 4, 29, 64, 85, 106, 130, 135, 216, 336, 507, 555, 579
Visual art 53, 148, 180, 212, 214, 224, 229, 232, 235, 246, 261, 337, 352, 552, 635, 652, 659
Women's writing 123, 168, 453, 454, 469, 471, 480, 501, 535

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 690 in all.

26 NOV 1998

1. Charles Alexander — Re: Rae Armantrout interview

27 NOV 1998

2. Charles Alexander — Re: Reads On Busses
3. Billy Little — reading treats

30 NOV 1998

4. WENDY KRAMER — check it out
5. ike/clare — Re: Current reading (non poetry)

1 DEC 1998

6. James Brook — current reading (cont.)
7. Robert Corbett — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
8. George Bowering — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
9. Roger Day — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
10. Gabriel Gudding — Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
11. Daniel Carter — dare the air sweet child
12. David Zauhar — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
13. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
14. Elizabeth Treadwell — my reading list
15. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
16. Jordan Davis — failure
17. A. Jenn Sondheim — Some of "A Cry" by Sara Teasdale, Some of Other Words
18. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: failure
19. Mark Prejsnar — Superior people
20. Poetics List — Welcome to Poetics List
21. Daniel Kane — Rae Armantrout interview
22. Chicago Review — Chicago Review Poetry Reading
23. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — stein quite quote
24. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — hejinian query
25. MAYHEW — query
26. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — a measure of peace...
27. Aldon Nielsen — Sad News
28. Emily Lloyd — Re: stein quite quote
29. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Free Poetices & A self examination
30. Bob Haynes — Re: Sad News
31. MAYHEW — Re: Free Poetices & A self examination
32. Billy Little — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
33. Kathy Lou Schultz — LIPSTICK ELEVEN: It's a party! It's a reading!
34. Tosh — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
35. Karen Kelley — Re: Current reading (non poetry)
36. charles alexander — reading list

2 DEC 1998

37. Mark DuCharme — Re: stein quite quote
38. George Bowering — Re: stein quite quote
39. J Kimball — Nonpoetry reading
40. Louis Cabri — PhillyTalks 8
41. Jim Bennett — Help
42. Jim Bennett — Re: reading list
43. Joe Brennan — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
44. Karen Kelley — Re: reading list

45. WENDY KRAMER — raddle moon
46. ken|n|ing — WWW LITPRESS COM
47. Jasper Bernes — Re: stein quite quote
48. David Cameron — poetics list
49. Michael Magee — Re: stein quite quote
50. Mark Prejsnar — that dreary nonpoetry stuff
51. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
52. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: that dreary nonpoetry stuff
53. Edward Foster — This week-end in New York
54. Brian Carpenter — non-po reading
55. A. Jenn Sondheim — performance
56. raea100900 — An error in my interview with...
57. Mairead Byrne — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
58. miekal and — interactive geographies
59. Mairead Byrne — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
60. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
61. Eliza McGrand — free (speech, typos and all) poetics
62. Eliza McGrand — Re: free (speech, typos and all) poetics
63. schuchat — two or three things
64. Steven Clay — Announcing 'Figuring the Word' by Johanna Drucker
65. david bromige — Reads On Busses
66. David Zauhar — Re: Reads On Busses
67. david bromige — setting the record straight
68. Eliza McGrand — Re: setting the record straight
69. michael corbin — Re: fail safe
70. Bob Haynes — Re: setting the record straight
71. Pierre Joris — Re: two or three things
72. Mairead Byrne — Re: setting the record straight
73. Rachel Loden — pig wars and other truffle-snuffling battles
74. charles alexander — Re: two or three things
75. Kathy Lou Schultz — Antidote to Rae Armantrout's bad hair day
76. William Slaughter — favor (fwd)

3 DEC 1998

77. Kathy Lou Schultz — non-po reading
78. Mark Salerno — THE LAST AVANT-GARDE
79. Mark Salerno — THE LAST AVANT-GARDE
80. dbkk — SPT: Lipstick 11 Reading
81. George Bowering — Re: Reads On Buses
82. George Bowering — Re: setting the record straight
83. George Bowering — Re: two or three things
84. Michel Delville — Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
85. Jim Andrews — Infoanimism
86. George Bowering — Re: Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
87. miekal and — quick history
88. Ron Silliman — A bus ride is better than most art
89. Ramez Qureshi — Fwd: [Fwd: "Hell no, we won't grade" (Salon)]
90. Gabriel Gudding — I Will Irony No More Forever
91. Jim Rosenberg — Re: Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
92. J Kuszai — My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
93. miekal and — Re: I'll cc' Joel's 2 cents, raise him 5
94. Roger Day — Re: quick history
95. Poetry Project — Re: reading/2 or 3 things
96. David Carl — stein pedantics
97. Mairead Byrne — Re: quick history
98. David Kellogg — Re: stein pedantics

99. Roger Farr — the list
100. Eliza McGrand — contributed to poetics list navelgazing (del. if bored wi/)
101. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
102. daniel bouchard — I'll cc' Joel's 2 cents, raise him 5
103. Jordan Davis — numerology
104. Sylvester Pollet — Mina Loy/Woman & Poet
105. daniel bouchard — 666
106. William Marsh — Re: Infoanimism
107. Aldon Nielsen — Re: A bus ride is better than most art
108. Bob Haynes — Re: My 2 cents
109. Aldon Nielsen — Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
110. Hank Lazer — Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
111. Judy Roitman — Re: raddle moon
112. Judy Roitman — Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
113. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
114. Judy Roitman — Re: one post per day, and a chicken in every pot
115. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
116. Jordan Davis — Campaign finance reform and the moderated list
117. Steven Shoemaker — one post per day, and a chicken in every pot
118. Gabriel Gudding — skewer
119. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: one post per day, and a chicken in every pot
120. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Please backchannel
121. David Hickman — Troubling Posts, Insults, and Childishness
122. Wystan Curnow — (Fwd) Re: fail safe
123. J Kuszai — fuck guns & where to go from here [long post]
124. Karen Kelley — Re: 666
125. Joe Brennan — Fwd: New Fraentzki
126. Mairead Byrne — Re: Troubling Posts, Insults, and Childishness
127. Bob Haynes — Re: Infoanimism

4 DEC 1998

128. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: Infoanimism
129. Elizabeth Treadwell — fuck guns
130. Jim Andrews — Re: Infoanimism
131. George Bowering — Re: quick history
132. George Bowering — Re: pig wars and other truffle-snuffling battles
133. Rachel Loden — delete if not interested in arcane arguments re: pig wars and other truffle-...
134. Randy Prunty — David Todd and Dirigible
135. miekal and — Avant Writing Collection
136. miekal and — Re: quick history
137. Jim Bennett — Re: Troubling Posts, Insults, and Childishness
138. Gary Sullivan — Rain Taxi Vol. 3 No. 4
139. Christina Fairbank Chirot — poets/troublemakers/Chile (a fwd)
140. Joe Brennan — free charles
141. Gabriel Gudding — Re: skewer & love of this list
142. Michael Magee — Re: free charles
143. Mark Wallace — perhaps another suggestion
144. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger — Re: Help
145. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: email addresses question
146. A. Jenn Sondheim — Experiments in Poetry, by Jennifer*
147. tracy s. ruggles — Re: AUTOMATIC REPLY
148. Edward Foster — Re: Tonight
149. Steven Shoemaker — Re: perhaps another suggestion
150. Eliza McGrand — Re: perhaps another suggestion
151. Mairead Byrne — Re: perhaps another suggestion

152. Tosh — Re: perhaps another suggestion
153. Elizabeth Treadwell — Re: the backchannels I knew I'd get this morning.
154. Eliza McGrand — nav.gaz. ethical query on new subject
155. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: quick history
156. Mark Weiss — Re: the backchannels I knew I'd get this morning.
157. David Cameron — Re: perhaps another suggestion
158. Elizabeth Treadwell — I become my own enemy
159. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: perhaps another suggestion
160. groberts — my two cents laid on the r.r. track
161. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: quick history
162. Mairead Byrne — Re: nav.gaz. ethical query on new subject
163. Tom Orange — suggestions: self-control, et al.
164. Charles Bernstein — Freedom Is Never Free
165. cris cheek — Re: it feels like harassment
166. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Freedom Is Never Free
167. Mark Weiss — Re: suggestions: self-control, et al.
168. Dale Smith — The Hat
169. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Freedom Is Never Free
170. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Freedom Is Never Free
171. George Thompson — Re: Auster Studies
172. michael corbin — Re: Freedom Is Never Free

5 DEC 1998

173. Henry Gould — showdowns
174. Jim Andrews — Infoanimism and trickster accusations
175. Chris Nagler — Re: Des Forets query
176. Billy Little — defining audience
177. A. Jenn Sondheim — moderation, posting, etc.
178. Charles Alexander — Re: Erasing/rigor
179. Carmen Butcher — West Coast Poetry Live--Lipstick Eleven Party/Small Press Traffic
180. J. Fuhrman — Re: Erasing
181. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: West Coast Poetry Live--Lipstick Eleven Party/Small Press Traffic
182. schuchat — Re: Freedom Is Never Free
183. miekal and — whodunnit / festival
184. miekal and — higgins memorial
185. Pierre Joris — Re: Des Forets query
186. Gabriel Gudding — reading recommendations
187. Susan Wheeler — DC Reading
188. Ron Silliman — Policing the List
189. J Kuszai — test--please delete--do not respond to this
190. Ron Silliman — Janet Lewis
191. J Kuszai — Numbers, Daughter of The Book
192. Joe Brennan — Re: reading recommendations
193. Herb Levy — Janet Lewis
194. Eliza McGrand — Re: Erasing
195. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Policing the List
196. Edward Fristrom — Re: Freedom Is Never Free
197. Randy Prunty — Policing the List
198. Randy Prunty — Re: Erasing
199. Ramez Qureshi — Query Pound
200. MAYHEW — Re: Policing the List
201. Karen Kelley — Re: Erasing
202. William Marsh — new media criticism [was Infoanimism]
203. Steven Shoemaker — enervation effect
204. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Janet Lewis and Miekal And
205. Mairead Byrne — Re: enervation effect

206. Laura E. Wright — Re: Erasing and non-po reading
207. Steven Shoemaker — Re: enervation effect
208. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: enervation effect
209. juliana spahr — why I am not a reader of the poetics list
210. Mark Weiss — Re: enervation effect
211. Elizabeth Treadwell — it feels like harassment
212. Thomas Bell — Re: Erasing
213. Thomas Bell — Re: new media criticism [was Infoanimism]

6 DEC 1998

214. Mark Weiss — Re: Erasing
215. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap — Re: perhaps another suggestion
216. Jim Andrews — v i s u a l a n g u a g e
217. Tom Orange — Erasing
218. Tom Orange — whodunnit / festival
219. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — Re: it feels like harassment
220. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: it feels like harassment
221. miekal and — poetics of hypertext
222. Jim Bennett — Re: perhaps another suggestion
223. groberts — Re: Erasing
224. Carmen Butcher — J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
225. Mark DuCharme — Re: free Henry
226. J. Fuhrman — Re: Erasing
227. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: Erasing
228. Pierre Joris — Re: Erasing
229. Eliza McGrand — Re: J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
230. KENT JOHNSON — My one post for December
231. Rachel Levitsky — hello again and query
232. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Erasing
233. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Erasing
234. david bromige — i want you to make love to me
235. Karen Kelley — Re: J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
236. Stuart Mitchell — Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Dec 1998 to 5 Dec 1998 (#1998-145)
237. Lisa Samuels — numbers, daughter of the book
238. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Erasing
239. Mairead Byrne — Re: Erasing
240. Mark Weiss — feels like harassment to me, too
241. KENT JOHNSON — Happy Holidays
242. KENT JOHNSON — A web site for the imagination
243. Poetics List — 2 NYC Reading
244. Amy King — Re: why Peter Ganick cannot think... a listserv

7 DEC 1998

245. Thomas Bell — Archieval Revival Re: Original Good Reads
246. dbkk — Erasing
247. Susan Schultz — Fwd: TINFISH 7 is out!
248. nicholas grindell — Re: Happy Holidays
249. Joe Brennan — Re: Erasing
250. daniel bouchard — the wasp of capital
251. Judy Roitman — Re: Erasing/rigor
252. miekal and — Re: Anne Waldman Archive
253. Gabriel Gudding — Henry Gould, News Regarding
254. groberts — Re: Erasing
255. Chris McCreary — address queries
256. Mairead Byrne — Re: Adieu
257. david bromige — re erasure/rigor: judy's question
258. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Erasing/rigor

259. John Latta — Anne Waldman Archive
260. Pritchett,Patrick — FW: Declaration on Rights of Indigenous Peoples
261. Carmen Butcher — Jackson Pollock on "destroying the image"
262. Steven Shoemaker — irony goggles (Be Safe: Wear Them!)
263. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Left Hand Reading Series for December
264. KENT JOHNSON — Concerns
265. Jordan Davis — Eileen Myles . Kenneth Koch . Poetry City
266. Gabriel Gudding — God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters
267. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Erasing
268. Mark Wallace — poetry reading in D.C.
269. Ramez Qureshi — erasing
270. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Erasing
271. Joe Brennan — (no subject)
272. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Erasing
273. Dale Smith — Readings in Austin / The Hat (if this gets through...)
274. Ralph Wessman — famous reporter 18 (apologies for x-posting)
275. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger — Re: Auster Studies
276. George Thompson — Note on the Indo-European origins of Gabe Gudding's game
277. Carl Wilson — Re: Erasing
278. Steven Shoemaker — non-po reading
279. joel lewis — f.y.i. (ho-ho)
280. louis stroffolino — ATTENTION KEVIN AND DODIE---
281. Daniel Kane — "The Academy of the Future is Opening..."
282. George Bowering — Re: i want you to make love to me

8 DEC 1998

283. Thomas Bell — Re: Erasing
284. Simon DeDeo — (no subject)
285. A. Jenn Sondheim — boo-boo
286. J Kuszai — erased
287. miekal and — The Martyrology of St. Henry
288. MAYHEW — ccoolliiddggee qquueerryy
289. schuchat — Re: call me morbid call me pale
290. Poetry Project — call me morbid call me pale
291. Poetry Project — readings at the Poetry Project
292. Rachel Levitsky — [Fwd: Protest Institutional Violence in NYC Jails]
293. Anastasios Kozaitis — Vanishing posts
294. Daniel Carter — items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
295. Randy Prunty — Re: items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
296. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Concerns
297. Chris McCreary — a modest proposal
298. Aldon Nielsen — Re: whodunnit / festival
299. Mark Prejsnar — under and over erasure
300. Amy King — Rachel raises a good point: She Speaks of Poetry
301. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: erasing
302. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — Erasing
303. William Slaughter — ANNOUNCEMENT
304. Charles Bernstein — Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)
305. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Home and Tone
306. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — forked tongue?
307. E.M. Garrison — (no subject)
308. E.M. Garrison — Re: call me morbid call me pale
309. Judy Roitman — Re: erased
310. Mark Prejsnar — Re: erased
311. Carl Wilson — Re: erased
312. Judy Roitman — Re: under and over erasure

313. Emily Lloyd — Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"
314. louis stroffolino — Re: a modest proposal
315. Mairead Byrne — Re: The Martyrology of St. Henry
316. J Kuszai — 2 of per diem
317. Simon DeDeo — Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"
318. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: Home and Tone
319. Charles Alexander — new book announcement
320. Ruth Danon — Re: Erasing
321. J Kuszai — Re: Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)
322. Don Cheney — Book Announcement: The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart
323. KENT JOHNSON — A response to Charles Bernstein
324. J Kuszai — ack-farewell (a confessional poem)
325. Bob Grotjohn — three questions
326. Billy Little — Xplo 6!!!!
327. david bromige — re The Cold of Poetry/Em's strand
328. Tosh — Serge Gainsbourg's Evguenie Sokolov
329. Anya Lewin — Re: Erasing
330. Burt Kimmelman — Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"
331. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger — Re: Erasing
332. Eliza McGrand — Re: a modest proposal
333. Ron Silliman — Announcements, Events
334. KENT JOHNSON — Whose sexual organs?
335. Emily Lloyd — L=A & L.H.

9 DEC 1998

336. Peter Quartermain — Coming in December, puff puff puff!
337. Emily Lloyd — Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
338. Kathy Lou Schultz — Special to Bay Area teachers/students (Course Announcement)
339. Tom Orange — call me morbid call me pale
340. George Bowering — Re: A response to Charles Bernstein
341. George Bowering — Re: re The Cold of Poetry/Em's strand
342. Susan Clark — RADDLE MOON again
343. Douglas Oliver — Re : Abstract lyric
344. izak — Transfer Reading
345. miekal and — f.y.i.
346. Alaric Sumner — British Poets in digest form
347. Michael Magee — Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
348. Gwyn McVay — Re: three questions
349. Pattie McCarthy — Re: Erasing
350. Joe Brennan — Fwd: blick
351. Mark Prejsnar — Call me abstract, call me French
352. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
353. Rachel Levitsky — Re: oh and one more thing
354. tracy s. ruggles — Re: Ingram and B&N (was: 2 of per diem)
355. Roger Day — Re: Erasing
356. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — half-rant, and a question...
357. shemurph — The Big R - Spencer Selby
358. ken|n|ing — Big Allis
359. James Brook — correspondance avec guy debord
360. Mark Prejsnar — My final List polemic
361. charssmith — MLA ?
362. Emily Lloyd — Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
363. MJ Devaney — Re: MLA ?
364. charssmith — Angle Press Announcement
365. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — 'Democracy is Merry' - Beuys will be Beuys
366. Michael Magee — Re: My final List polemic

367. Gabriel Gudding — announcement: SUBMIT YOU DOG
368. Emily Lloyd — correction, spell-check, self-check
369. schuchat — Re: three questions
370. Hoa Nguyen — Frank O'Hara, Skanky Possum
371. Dale Smith — The Hat
372. Emily Lloyd — Re: erasure/frags
373. dbkk — L. Shaw talks F. O'Hara in SF
374. michael corbin — Re: Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)

10 DEC 1998

375. Amy King — Re: Erasing and the Ghost of Listserv Present
376. ike/clare — Re: ErAuster
377. A. Jenn Sondheim — Erasing
378. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: erasure/frags
379. Leonard Brink — Announcement - Inscape #4
380. Tom Orange — STOP IMPEACHMENT! Free call to Congress. (fwd)
381. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Book Announcement: The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart
382. Jim Bennett — Re: Erasing
383. Daniel Carter — Re: items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
384. Daniel Carter — Torque Inly failed the skies
385. Michael Magee — Re: Frank O'Hara, Skanky Possum
386. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Erasing and the Ghost of Listserv Present
387. Mairead Byrne — Re: Erasing
388. Garrett Kalleberg — TF7
389. Jim Bennett — Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
390. miekal and — Word Express Mention
391. Roger Day — Re: Erasing
392. Michael Gottlieb — Alan Davies, Carole Miracove NYC Reading
393. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Erasing
394. Gabriel Gudding — Re: Erasing
395. David Erben (Art) — San Francisco
396. dbkk — Poets of the MLA
397. Billy Little — Re: mars/bars/spars/stars
398. Jordan Davis — Don't all call me Archibald Cox at once (or even James G. Farley)
399. Aldon Nielsen — the poetics of impeachment
400. jen hofer — thoughts not announcements: on meaning, hejinian, my life
401. Daniel Kane — "Deep Image"
402. A. Jenn Sondheim — Jennifer on Republicans
403. groberts — Re: erasing
404. Emily Lloyd — Baratier's Silliman question
405. Gabriel Gudding — Re: Don't all call me Archibald Cox at once (or even James G. Farley)
406. Poetics List — Posting to the list
407. Marcella Durand — urban space
408. Wystan Curnow — Re: "Deep Image"
409. Carl Wilson — Re: urban space
410. Wystan Curnow — Re: Baratier's Silliman question
411. Eliza McGrand — miss priss speaks up (ahem)
412. Pierre Joris — Re: "Deep Image"
413. Emily Lloyd — Re: Baratier's Silliman question
414. eurydice — Re: Big Allis Information
415. Wystan Curnow — Re: God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters

11 DEC 1998

416. david bromige — Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
417. Jim Bennett — Re: Baratier's Silliman question - Post-Lanpo
418. Randy Prunty — Re: Readings in Austin / The Hat (if this gets through...)
419. charles alexander — Re: urban space

420. Roger Day — Re: urban space
421. David Baratier — Big Mouth Strikes Again
422. Jacques Debrot — Re: Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
423. Billy Little — Re: miss priss speaks up (ahem)
424. Gabriel Gudding — Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
425. groberts — Re: urban space
426. MAYHEW — Re: Baratier's Silliman question
427. Eileen Tabios — Re: 3 questions re A. Sze poem
428. Fred Muratori — Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
429. MAYHEW — Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
430. Jordan Davis — Posting to the list
431. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
432. Poetry Project — Thanks for implications
433. Mairead Byrne — Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
434. David Erben (Art) — Reggae William Blake
435. Mark Prejsnar — Jonathan Mayhew is a Language Poet
436. Aviva Vogel — Deep Image - Original Materials - Inquiry
437. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters
438. Gabriel Gudding — recommended readings
439. E.M. Garrison — Re: Posting to the list..and a Query.
440. Gwyn McVay — Emperor a la Nordine
441. louis stroffolino — ADOPT A "POET"
442. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Posting to the list
443. Ron Silliman — Jonathon Mayhew is a language poet
444. Joe Brennan — Fwd: news that stays news
445. Elizabeth Treadwell — Eliza Jen Juliana & Concerns or erase
446. A. Jenn Sondheim — SEMCOM:, Books: Semiotics (fwd)
447. Brian Lennon — urban space
448. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: boo-boo
449. Steven Marks — Re: Reggae William Blake
450. Jacques Debrot — Re: Poetics Suggestion

12 DEC 1998

451. F. W. Perrella — New at: The Literary Review and North American Review - Web Del Sol
452. miekal and — listserv gratuties
453. J Kuszai — Re: The Hat/women writers
454. J Kuszai — Re: The Hat/women writers
455. Randy Prunty — Re: Poetics Suggestion
456. Marcella Durand — urban space
457. miekal and — The cat in the hat omnibus
458. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — report to the committee...
459. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — Re: urban space
460. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Lyn Hejinian
461. Emily Lloyd — new address, & Lyn
462. Tom Orange — origins of Langpo as term
463. Tom Orange — poetics of impeachment
464. Steven Shoemaker — Re: poetics of impeachment
465. Maria Damon — Re: poetics of impeachment
466. Eliza McGrand — Re: poetics of impeachment
467. Louis Cabri — a phillytalks thot
468. Tom Orange — labels and referentiality
469. Dale Smith — The cat in the hat
470. dan raphael — Re: Baratier's Silliman question - Post-Lanpo
471. Dale Smith — Addendum to the Cat's Hat
472. Mark DuCharme — Re: Academy of the Future
473. Karen Kelley — Re: poetics of impeachment

474. George Thompson — non-referential poems for your consideration
475. Mark Weiss — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
476. Randy Prunty — Re: poetics of impeachment
477. schuchat — Re: poetics of impeachment
478. Leonard Brink — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration

13 DEC 1998

479. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: poetics of impeachment
480. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: The Hat
481. George Bowering — Re: poetics of impeachment
482. Jim Bennett — Re: poetics of impeachment
483. George Thompson — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
484. Randy Prunty — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
485. charles alexander — Re: poetics of impeachment
486. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
487. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Jennifer on Republicans
488. Lawrence Upton. — Writers Forum
489. Emily Lloyd — (no subject)
490. Billy Little — seducers
491. Lawrence Upton. — (no subject)
492. Bob Grumman — syllable-sounds
493. louis stroffolino — Re: The Hatters
494. Leonard Brink — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
495. Emily Lloyd — Re: syllable-sounds
496. Jason Nelson — the words of cb
497. MAYHEW — pseudo-reference
498. David Zauhar — Re: poetics of impeachment (pomes fer cortin')
499. Judy Roitman — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
500. Judy Roitman — (no subject)
501. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap — Re: The Hat/that women writers write to wear 502. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable-sounds
503. Gwyn McVay — Re: syllable-sounds
504. Gwyn McVay — the bar scene
505. Rachel Loden — "My NAME is Alice, but-- "
506. George Thompson — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
507. Carla Billitteri — Announcing a new electronic journal . . .
508. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: poetics of impeachment
509. Chris Nagler — Re: Louis Carroll, Hugo Ball, etc

14 DEC 1998

510. A. Jenn Sondheim — MLA Session, Letter Sensations and Embodied Life (fwd)
511. Garrett Kalleberg — TF7(b)
512. Tom Orange — syllable-sounds
513. Billy Little — Re: "My NAME is Alice, but-- "
514. Alaric Sumner — the performance Alaric Sumner wrote about
515. Marcella Durand — dyslexic urban flies
516. Gwyn McVay — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
517. Emily Lloyd — Re: syllable sounds
518. Laura E. Wright — Re: Reggae William Blake
519. Mike Kelleher — The Shining
520. Steven Shoemaker — Re: syllable sounds
521. Laura E. Wright — Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
522. Judy Roitman — Re: Louis Carroll, Hugo Ball, etc
523. Judy Roitman — Re: syllable sounds
524. Balestrieri, Peter — seducers/Billy Little
525. Robert Archambeau — Query: De Man & Comment: Perloff
526. david bromige — MLA Poetry Event

527. Steven Shoemaker — Re: syllable sounds
528. groberts — Re: syllable sounds
529. Charles Alexander — L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E
530. R. Drake — OUTSIDE THE HAT
531. joel lewis — f.y.i. (hidden injuries of class department)
532. Aldon Nielsen — Re: this needful thing
533. Aldon Nielsen — Re: this needful thing
534. Tosh — Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
535. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — three items...
536. Pierre Joris — Re: Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
537. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Query: De Man & Comment: Perloff
538. Tosh — Re: Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
539. aerialedge — New Hejinaian/Scalapino from Edge Books

15 DEC 1998

540. Tom Orange — Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
541. George Bowering — Re: syllable sounds
542. david bromige — bernstein/perloff: orange question
543. Pierre Joris — Re: syllable sounds
544. miekal and — Re: MLA Poetry Event
545. Pierre Joris — MR
546. John Latta — Re: syllable sounds
547. Judy Roitman — Re: syllable sounds
548. shana — Re: syllable sounds
549. Billy Little — Re: Digital Arts and Culture 98
550. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: syllable sounds
551. Charles Bernstein — Re: MLA Poetry Event
552. MAYHEW — submorphemic sememes
553. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
554. sylvester pollet — Re: syllable sounds
555. Lawrence Upton. — Domestic Ambient Noise
556. Tom Beard — Re: syllable sounds
557. Pierre Joris — Re: syllable sounds
558. Susan Schultz — Re: TINFISH reminder
559. Anastasios Kozaitis — hambone
560. Pete Neufeld — Re: syllable sounds and reference
561. joel lewis — f.y.i.
562. miekal and — Re: welcomed
563. Jessica Pompeii — welcomed
564. Emily Lloyd — Re: poetics of impeachment
565. Amy King — Re: f.y.i. - Heino - I wish I threw rocks back then.
566. Tosh — Re: f.y.i. - Heino - I wish I threw rocks back then.
567. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: hambone

16 DEC 1998

568. John Tranter — Herman Utix.
569. Leonard Brink — Announcement - Windhover #2
570. Rachel Levitsky — Re: syllable sounds and reference
571. Daniel Zimmerman — lost in translation?
572. A. Jenn Sondheim — NEW OBSERVATIONS issue on Cultures of Cyberspace (fwd)
573. Mark Salerno — Joel Oppenheimer
574. George Bowering — Re: syllable sounds
575. George Bowering — Re: syllable sounds
576. George Bowering — Re: syllable sounds
577. Gabriel Gudding — Posting to the list (fwd)
578. Pierre Joris — Re: syllable sounds and reference
579. Lawrence Upton. — Re: syllable sounds

580. joel lewis — f.y.i.
581. Gabriel Gudding — Re: syllable sounds and reference
582. Charles Bernstein — MLA/Open to Public
583. Laura E. Wright — Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
584. Randy Prunty — Re: New Hejinaian/Scalapino from Edge Books
585. MAYHEW — Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
586. Jerry McGuire — syllable sounds
587. daniel bouchard — Re: is a language poet
588. shana — Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
589. Jack Ruttan — Re: Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
590. Jessica Pompeii — no buddies buz
591. Rachel Levitsky — Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
592. Jessica Pompeii — Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
593. A. Jenn Sondheim — --==[ANNOUNCING CYBERCULTURE]==--
594. Roger Day — Re: syllable sounds
595. Mark Wallace — poetry reading at the DC Arts Center (fwd)
596. miekal and — wag the dog
597. Balestrieri, Peter — Re: Lost in Translation
598. A. Jenn Sondheim — Saddam, Turn on your Radio / TV , Change of Channel
599. Susan Schultz — Re: Iraq
600. sylvester pollet — Special Offer
601. Steven Shoemaker — The Drop
602. Garrett Kalleberg — TF7 unsound
603. Elizabeth Treadwell — Merle Bachman
604. Ron Silliman — Arghh
605. david bromige — a change of heart

17 DEC 1998

606. A. Jenn Sondheim — (no subject)
607. Tosh — Re: a change of heart
608. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Iraq
609. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Iraq
610. E.M. Garrison — Query
611. miekal and — Re: Query
612. Anastasios Kozaitis — Poem of the Day
613. Mairead Byrne — Re: Special Offer
614. Maria Damon — Re: Poets of the MLA
615. daniel bouchard — Re: Arghh (rack)
616. Mark Prejsnar — general clinton is not a language poet
617. jarnot — address query
618. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Demos today SF & NYC
619. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger — Re: Iraq
620. david bromige — Why Impeach Clinton?
621. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: CALL FOR FLOODNET ACTION FOR PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST (fwd)
622. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Exuent Gaddis
623. Tom Orange — theory and poetics
624. Poetry Project — Re: what we deserve
625. daniel bouchard — Re: what we deserve
626. Gwyn McVay — Re: Exuent Gaddis
627. joel lewis — f.y.i. (x3)
628. J Kuszai — Re: what we deserve
629. daniel bouchard — Aarrgh// infinity
630. David Kellogg — need emailaddress for Rachel M. Daley
631. Peter Quartermain — address query
632. Trace Ruggles — "degrade"

633. Gabriel Gudding — Re: Exuent Gaddis
634. Divizio — Re: what we deserve
635. Jim Bennett — Notice
636. Divizio — Re: what we deserve
637. michael corbin — (no subject)
638. Tosh — Re: Why Impeach Clinton?
639. Mairead Byrne — Re: what we deserve

18 DEC 1998

640. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Why Impeach Clinton?
641. George Bowering — Re: address query
642. david bromige — The poetics of impeachment
643. Gabriel Gudding — Joel Kuszai, Take a Vacation
644. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
645. Gabriel Gudding — Re: Joel Kuszai, Take a Vacation
646. J Kuszai — please don't bother to backchannel either
647. Eliza McGrand — joel, ignore creepy posts with your name in subject header
648. Ramez Qureshi — syllable sounds arn't quite so loud as bombs
649. Judy Roitman — Re: what we deserve
650. Anastasios Kozaitis — Re: "degrade"
651. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: The poetics of impeachment
652. Irving Weiss — mail art call
653. david bromige — loveliest of syllables, the Sunday Times...
654. Anastasios Kozaitis — PotD
655. Robert Archambeau — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
656. Jasper Bernes — Re: water cool
657. Pierre Joris — Lancing a boil
658. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
659. Tosh — Re: The poetics of impeachment
660. schuchat — sorry to see you go
661. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger — Re: The poetics of impeachment
662. Karen McKevitt — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
663. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: Lancing a boil
664. Charles Alexander — Re: please
665. Mark DuCharme — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
666. charssmith — Re: Pacifica Radio
667. charssmith — KPFA, ps
668. Emily Lloyd — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
669. Karen Kelley — Re: water cool
670. Judy Roitman — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
671. louis stroffolino — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
672. louis stroffolino — Re: THANK YOU
673. Mark Prejsnar — Re: The poetics of impeachment
674. David Kellogg — Eventually, Gabe will be the only one left
675. Jessica Pompeii — Why are Americans
676. Mairead Byrne — Re: Lancing a boil
677. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
678. A. Jenn Sondheim — Swinburne
679. Mark Prejsnar — Beyond the Vestiges
680. A. Jenn Sondheim — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
681. Aldon Nielsen — William Gaddis
682. Charles Bernstein — (no subject)
683. Charles Bernstein — what is intention?
684. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
685. Tosh — chill
686. Leonard Brink — Beating pens into swords at the water cooler

687. Divizio — Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
688. David Baratier — water cooler poem
689. David Baratier — One more time before it passes

22 DEC 1998

690. Poetics List — Poetics List Reorganization

1. Charles Alexander
Re: Rae Armantrout interview
Thu 26 Nov 1998

Yes, thank you for this. I searched it out. The URL to go directly to the interview with Rae Armantrout is http://www.twc.org/forums/poetschat/poetschat_ra1198.html

charles

At 03:19 PM 12/1/98 -0500, you wrote:
>There is an interview with Rae Armantrout up on the Teachers & Writers >Collaborative "WriteNet" web site. Since the page is devoted to issues >specific to teaching poetry to students in grades K-12, Rae talks about >ways one can teach the prose poem, and suggests methods for introducing >avant-garde work to students (and teachers) that are not fraught with >anxiety. Poems Rae talks about include "The Mix Up" and "Wake Up," both >from her book _Necromance_.
>
>
>--daniel
>
>
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

2. Charles Alexander
Re: Reads On Busses
Fri 27 Nov 1998

I know I read Tjanting on a bus. And that ride WAS better than most art.

charles

At 01:29 PM 12/2/98 -0800, you wrote:
>Listfolk, I dont think Rae should have to apologize for alleging Ron >Silliman read his poetry out loud on a bus, do you? It's certainly time for >the apocrypha of Language Writing to commence, non? If Ron didnt read out >loud on a bus, well he ought to have, and it fits in with Barrett Watten's >remark re most non-Ron poetry : "A bus ride is better than most art." While >it is true that Ron and 26 or 46 of us read Ketjak (or Tjanting) aloud in a >Bart station, I would rather hear of the events that never happened, but >should have. David

>
>
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

3. Billy Little reading treats
Fri 27 Nov 1998

---

i'm still reading kimball and bromige's poetries of canada, each click opens another morsel, collections of this strength are rare and to have it all at the beck of your cursor tripley so. two of the reasons i like it this morning are 1.

George Stanley

The Power of the Unhappy People

The unhappy people have great power.
They invest in the unhappiness of others.

Not generic unhappiness, the kind
of unhappiness anyone could feel,
but designer unhappiness, the exact
shape of the hole in your heart.

These are dreams without doors. Let the blonde demonstrator slip one around your feelings.
As it goes on, it clings like shrink-wrap.

Now the birds can cry in the night, and you won't hear them. Or your ancestors. Or jazz.
The image of your death will dance for you
with as many veils as you please.

In your fog-coloured room, in your Queen Anne chair,
you may wish you were dead, but be glad of that wish
since it sets you above the common sort
inured to ordinary unhappiness.

And we, the investment community, will grin.
(Though like you, we cannot feel the sun or hear the rain.
Or jazz.) We will grin at the thought of you dreaming.

More & more people must become rich & unhappy,
so the original unhappy people can die rich.

and 2

Meredith Quartermain

Prayer for Geography

To all who fall
to matter
write the earth
a space of white
break of bread
plates break in relief
write stones cocks cry
to collected waters
or hollow fire of iron.

Eat atmosphere, a garland
sift on a drift
post out the earth's hearth
to horizon and swallow heat
of antipodes
plants ride out in leaves

to mirror oceans
to finger rivers tribulations
smooth away our tombs.

Figures of earth, press out our bodies.
Strange our urge into that which takes stand.
Distribute our loom
work through the scape the seek of air
each ear our forgotten art.

For these are our herdsmen
and without this earth as risk we have no
right of river hear
our three yonders a sphere
of being of geography to the ring of ocean above them
the maps antipodean
tenderness in all who fall
to matter who come simply

to throw shadows on the moon's
shifting horizon who devote constellations to the ends
of the earth wide
from the road of symmetry.

Colin Smith's Multiple Poses from Tsunami is a scream and cheaper than a roller coaster and you can go back ad eternatum for the same low price. A Frank O'Hara for the 21st century? these words seem to careen from the epiglottis, his tongue twisting makes a resonance with gerry gilbert and dotty lusk and gerry creede and renee rodin for that matter, very vancouver? quel marrant, seriously funny, manick soars/fissionary elucidations, in the fewchair they'll say his spew flew, spitterature is one of the strong points of the KSW/ downtown Vancouver praxis, Kevin Davies and Jeff Derksen being exemplar. You don't have to take my word for it you can check out in

The New Raddle Moon which features a strong selection of vancouver writers with naturally some overlapping with poetries of canada, more Meredith Quartermain, more Melissa Wolsak, Lisa Robertson, Lary Timewell, Kevin Davies, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Jeff Derksen, even the brainwashed bagdaddy, the sweetheart of sebastapol, the romeo of the russian river hisself, and more Marie Anneharte Baker, the star of the bp conference reclaiming coyote. Susan Clark has done another marvelous job with Raddle Moon's issue 17 also includes some new quebecois poets selected by Nicole Brossard, some new poems by Jackson Mac Low, Rae Armantrout, in the classiest package all for merely $10, or two issue subscriptions for $15,

billy little
4 song st.
nowhere, b.c. V0R1Z0

Go ahead and say something true
before the big turd eats You
You can say any last thing in Your poem.

-Alice Notley

↑ Index

4. WENDY KRAMER
check it out
Mon 30 Nov 1998

hello, it's wendy kramer. i work as a librarian in the branches of the new york public library, and thot i'd post titles ordered by the branch libraries that might be of interest to listmembers. as someone who used to have access to a university library but has it no longer, i've become more adamant in my advocacy for poem-holdings and related materials in public libraries. i'd like to make the standard disclaimer that my posts do not reflect the interests, policies, opinions, etc. of the new york public library-- i post as an off-hours listmember and as myself, so to speak. or, i speak as a public library user who works in a public library system, a _large_ public library system--there are at least 87 branches to the new york public library (and i've lost count since), in the boroughs of manhattan, the bronx, and staten island. there are also 4 research libraries (some differences between "research" and "branches" being purpose, types, scope, depth, & focus of collections & whether items can be checked out (no for research libraries, yes for circulating items in the branches). i restrict my posts to the branch libraries. i think these postings might be useful for a number of reasons. First, many people on this list live in the area, and as i've remarked in a former post, the more the public library materials get used and requested, the more likely such materials will be ordered. But besides the local interest, there is the broader issue of availability that these postings advocate. there was a thread a few weeks ago about archiving small press and avant-garde poems. and someone posted something about not just the occasional sun& moon press book being represented. in the branch libraries, i'm happy to get that sun & moon, and dream of a public _circulating_ library for chapbooks, visual poetry, artists books, and other hard-to-buy-at-barnes-and-noble materials. (this morning on the way to the subway b&n had a huge banner in the window that said if barnes & noble doesn't have the books you read, nobody does--- cringe hiss & boo! is that a threat!?) meanwhile, there's quite a bit of material coming into the branches. sun & moon's come up for order regularly, as does other small press material, and spd as a distributor shows up on book order lists. (also, i noticed that spd started a sort of outreach to librarians newsletter and program). so, all this to say, books are out there for the borrowing. and for those of us without much cash, it's a way to read stuff we wouldn't otherwise manage to see. a final note, if you're a new york public library user: you can reserve circulating books from any branch and have them sent to any branch, at no charge. however, brooklyn and queens each have separate library systems and are not part of new york public library, so you can't reserve a book belonging to a staten island branch and have it sent to, say, flushing. you can have up to 15 reserves at a time.

hope i haven't left out anything crucial or said anything grievously incorrect--anyone with additions or questions, please post. so, tonight's posted title is:

Penelope Rosemont. _Surrealist Women_ published by University of Texas

this title a tip from nancy burr--suggested it in backchannel, & a couple weeks later i noticed it on an order list. now it's in the catalog! thanks, burr!

gotta go collage--- so, for now wendy

↑ Index

5. ike/clare

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Mon 30 Nov 1998

Speed Tribes: days and nights with japan's next generation Karl Taro Greenfeld very entertaining-from money drinkers to porn actors to foreign hostesses and back.

City of Life
Witold Rybczynski
fun to read, though i'd recommend _Looking Around_ before this one.

The Poet Yi Mun-yol fictionalized biography of my poet ancestor, Kim Sakkat, who now, dubiously, has a traditional korean alcoholic beverage named after him. I've only found a handful of his poems translated into english, but have found several copies of this book secondhand (boo hoo).

Hi-Fidelity
Nick Hornsby
recently finished this one-sure to be a hit movie starring the candy-bar-eating-security-guard guy from "The Full Monty"

Ike

↑ Index

6. James Brook

current reading (cont.)

Tue 1 Dec 1998

A raft of divers things--

Jean-Francois Martos, Correspondance avec Guy Debord (just out--and rumored to be unobtainable already because of legal action re copyright infringement), which includes the kitchen sink.

Andre Pieyre de Mandiargues, La Marge (done into English 30 yrs ago by Richard Howard as The Margin, from Grove Press); Barcelona before the Olympics and the sad triumph of right-wing Catalanism.

Phillips et al., Beat Culture and the New America (the catalog to the show)

Ernst Toller, I Was a German: The Autobiography of a Revolutionary; an Expressionist and revolutionary made proud by Hitler's burning of his books.

on deck but unread is Richard Lehan, The City in Literature, which beckons, beckons from that deck chair dappled with spray in the hot sun which doesn't shine here, in San Francisco, does it?

and even though it's poetry and not to be counted, Ron Padgett's New & Selected Poems, a friendly flashlight in the gloom of business. . . .

↑ Index

7. Robert Corbett

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Tue 1 Dec 1998

---

as a non-poet, with opinions about poetry (what i want to know is how good a poet you have to be to have opinions about poems or poems about opinions) here is my reading list of the moment

che - a life of che guevara (everybody needs a little revolution) james tate - distance from loved ones (i know the subject says non-poetry, but . . .) operation shylock - philip roth (because sometimes you have to read to someone whose voice starts at their heels) ursula k. leguin - klatsland origins reconsidered - richard leakey

robert

Robert Corbett "you are there beyond/ tracings flesh can [redacted] take,/ and farther away surrounding and University of Washington informing the systems" - A.R. Ammons

↑ Index

8. George Bowering

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Tue 1 Dec 1998

Just finished reading Spider Robinson's _Lifehouse_, the usual Spider stuff, but a very intricate plot involving three very different couples, and best of all set in Vancouver.

Am half way thru Timothy Findley's most recent book of stories, _Dust to Dust_, stories about people getting old and closer to death, half Gay half not. Everyone drinks a lot of wine and smokes a lot of cigarettes.

Also reading Carl Hiaasen's _Double Whammy_ to my wife Angela in the hospital. She is a Hiaasen fam. I am getting a little enjoyment from it.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

9. Roger Day

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Tue 1 Dec 1998

At 30/11/98 19:20:50, Mark DuCharme <[redacted]> wrote:
Roger day wrote:
>"The Last Of the Mohicans" William Fenimore Cooper. Better than expected, >but not surprised they left the bear - and a lot else - out of the Michael
>Mann film.

You're right: I looked at the cover this morning and, blush it was "James Fenimore Cooper" staring out at me. Ah well. Just one of those email days. Prior to this, in another email, I'd managed to subtract a minute off of Cage's (John or Ben?) 3'33". Maybe there's a name for this malaise. It only ever seems to happen in emails...

Roger

↑ Index

10. Gabriel Gudding

Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?

Tue 1 Dec 1998

"Better a witty fool than a foolish wit."

1). Having punched my screen before completely reading Bernstein's message Saturday, I am now writing this without the aid of a functioning monitor, and am in effect blind above my keyboard Stevie Wonder.

2). I have received two very pointy backchannels from Charles Bernstein informing me to clarify my position or else, also informing me I am to write no more than "a few" posts a week. CB's been nice enough to share with me his opinion that I am not thinking clearly (what's Haldol?) and really I ought for everyone's sake clarify my position regarding slapstick in poetry. Hence this post. Clarify clarify.

I will try to write as clearly as he does.

3). Roman Jakobson had it that "poetics deals primarily with the question, _what_ makes a verbal message a work of art?"

4). In my case, I'm interested in how slapstick, humor, antic mood, and yes insults make "a verbal message a work of art," ie a poem.

Poetry and slapstick figured interestingly in much modernist work, and slapstick is still an important if not prominent element of much contemporary poetry. Poetry and insults go way back. (Many of you know, for instance, there is a long tradition in Irish poetry of the insulting poem.)

But what makes a great insult? What makes an insult funny? How does it lighten rather than darken the mood of the "verbal message" -- that is, the poem (or sometimes the post)?

What, furthermore, is the social role of insult, of humor, of the antic taboo-defying impulse? how does it Work, where does it Fail, and how, ultimately, does poetry include these elements?

Let me demonstrate. [One caveat please: I have NOTHING against any of the people in number 5: I read their criticism avidly and admiringly]. Now to demonstrate:

5). If I were to write that

Listening to Perloff, Vogler, and Bernstein discuss poetics is like listening to a boil, a blister, and a tumor discuss the importance of the body,

I would be breaking taboos of politeness and hence I would never write that -- even as a demonstrative quote to illustrate a point. But if I WERE to write this, would it not be funny, and would it not add to a poem's (or a post's) mood? -- ie, would it be comedic or even poetically comic art? Of course it would. But why?

6). Furthermore, is it possible to use verbal slapstick without making an effigy, without, that is, socially injuring a particular person and without hurting someone's feelings? For instance, I have recently in the spirit of good fun "insulted" Mark DuCharme [Nov 6, "My Discoball of Wrath"] and Eliza McGrand [Nov 13, "Re: Free reading..."] (and hope to get around to Henry Gould soon), and of the two of them Mark DuCharme, I think, took it personally: I have NO hard feelings about this or toward him at all (antic antic). I am in fact a pacifist and rather mousey.

So the question becomes: how do we avoid effigies?

7). First, the insult and the humor must be "over the top," it must be VERY wonked. Why?: Two reasons: It is important that the person attacked first be turned into a caricature, lest he/she be mistaken for an effigy; but it is also important that the person attacking first turn himself into a caricature, lest the insult, after all is said and done, be thought to be truly meant and later held against one.

8). Thus, MP is an elitist critic yadayada: NOT!
Thus, CB is a controlling prig: NOT!
Thus, MD is a sycophantic wuss: NOT!

9). The challenge of slapstick poetry (or in some cases posts) is not to make effigies, as I have just done with Perloff, DuCharme, and Bernstein. Such utterances are boorish and hence not slapstick. (So please don't hit me on #8: I was trying to illustrate a point.)

10). This is one beauty of slapstick: it provides the delight of sin without its presence. Quite a trick. It is one of the great kathartic inventions of performative art.

11). SO, what, if anything, can anyone out there tell me about slapstick poetics, insultive poetry/letters, bibs (Byron, Pope, etc), etc. Must I write another book!

12). George Thompson: how heavily does insult, mockery, slapstickery play in the old Indo-European poetics? I can read ancient Pali, but as you would suspect there is very little insulting done in the Dhammapada. The closest portrayal of insult in the Pali is a nameless king hires a beggar to throw goat dung in the mouth of the king's overly talkative priest (CB's ears pricking here).

13). Henry Gould: what about contemporary Russian poetry? much insulting htere? I am aware of Victor Raskin's journal about humor, but could anyone point me to particular articles either in this journal or elsewhere.

14). In case any of you are wondering who the heck I am and if in fact I'm an actual boor or if I'm just pretending not to be, here's a statement of "my" sentiment:

15). These inspired cliches: to insist along with Patrick Kavanagh that we aren't alone in our loneliness; to second Bill Knott's opinion that a portrait of Marcheta Casati would look beautiful even if hung improbably and inappropriately upon a man's forehead; to write upon my own forehead, as Tully wished citizens might, what I think of the republic; to insist that we are all bookmarks in a holy anthology; that though each of us is a nobody, we are together consequential; that those among us of greater consequence never forget the ache in their forearms; that all anger is unjust; that Jesus and Lenny Bruce spoke the same language; that Janis Joplin could out-sing Maria Callas and Buster Keaton out-talk Christopher Lyden; that buffo, not rage, that inanity, not reason, are the only viable means of wresting dignity from the hands of bureaucrats and professionals; that the ready ease with which an academic will assume someone to be stupid is more repugnant than a barfight; that yodelling at a plate of eggs can satisfy one's curiosity for a better life; that underdogs can be jerks too; and finally to concur loudly, like a car horn with lips, with Henry James when he said that three things in human life are important: being kind, being kind, and being kind.

16). It is the thought of Tully's that gets me: to write upon my own forehead what I think of the republic:

17). Prose is when you write in sentences. Poetry is when you write on your own forehead. Slapstick poetry is when you write on your own forehead and then head-butt someone.

18). SO, HENRY GOULD, to end with reference to a question you posed the list last week: it is precisely BECAUSE so many of us have such an anemic political and public life that it is imperative our Poetics List and our poetries not be devoid of humor and good-natured insults, that our aggression be sublimated in humor and for the sake of humor, and that utterances pertinently nonsensical and pointlessly adamant not be banished from discussion.

PS, I HOPE TO BE ALLOWED TO JOIN THE RANKS OF THE OTHER CHILDREN SOON, IN TERMS OF THE FREQUENCY OF MY POSTING, NOW THAT I HAVE EXPLAINED MYSELF.

--Gabriel

↑ Index

11. Daniel Carter

dare the air sweet child

Tue 1 Dec 1998

---

this up pills t' be the caves inner hitch-vined mince play station the hiss 'n' hot seething the rue 'n' ruin lieumenation in the mid-stuff may raise points honor front plate guard her delivery techsome time offer hands open peace 'n' air nothin' tear but the breeze sound o' dim breathin' full focus in the foggy distance this dance the old glassy gull flyin' hen over herd her orders trance

apparent a parent of wakefulness in stark contrast t' mediatistic expectation t' the gone tray ray a platter of general splatter shatter matter put before during and after you in the dark rain ran the haunting seance 'n' infizzibility the latter term as a pose up on the ladder firm of another germ multi-ply multi-ploy multi-play all 'n' pleat the fold won't hold but spill the pills all loud upon the ground itself in turn grave way write out from endure reverie one of money who buy in the hem-cells tethered dear but disrespeculated bets own the table as swell t' swollen spectra with all o' y'all's blood is the game luck stuck in the stocks 'n' payroll of a barrel bond of mono-keys in pleasant tents mass crass class disease own dawn the load 'tis heavenly endure the influence two eyes d' use t' demon-strayed its intended actions in the plays of underneath the down too often sweat in the nun-descript night with insults results thus pay her wants newly tear-eyed pride open t' the day-write stride-wheel yeast as in her unwitting lies 'n' ties t' rise just enough deriving striving de-rivering her fairy very vest t' kid along within the mess at hand she was dealt though this never be the broach that high eye would re-commend with hen the generative matrix there for her may tricks defend without real harm to anyone indeed and in seed disquiet the contrary/counter-rarity of manyfistation in a moneural hoof's peeking peaking agloss the port abrim expanse a clause the desert of time's illusion born of illu-sion born of tool-making fool awakening alas than never (in love)

↑ Index

12. David Zauhar

Re: Current reading (non poetry)

Tue 1 Dec 1998

Currently still recovering from a recent saturday in a library at which, for (pseudo)scholarly purposes, I read all three of Robert Lowell's 1973 sonnet vol-umes, _{Avoiding}History_, {A Big Fuck You}For Lizzie and Harriet_, and {Flogging}The Dolphin_. Still, recent read/am reading Eugenia Semyonovna's Ginzburg's _Journey Into the Whirlwind_ (a memoir of her years in Stalin's camps), a novel: The Burn by Vasily Askyanov (finished it thanksgiving morning and found out that afternoon he is E. Ginburg's son), Jung's _Synchronicity_ (well not really but I should have been all things considered), Hugo Ball's _Flight out of Time: A Dada Diary_, and Larry River's _What Have I Done_ (from which, I'm convinced, David Lehman cliffed his entire chapter on the New York painters in his The Last Avant Garde), and I'm w/in striking distance of finishing _English,August_ by Indian novelist Upamanyu Chatterjee. On deck for the holiday break: Fever Pitch, by Nick Hornby (about his life and times as a soccer fan) and whatever I find in a various public libraries to which I have access.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"And I remember somebody leaning up against the dirt wall of the hillside, deriding William Carlos Williams, when suddenly there was a loud roaring, crunching noise and a chunk of the hill fell off and covered the person up to his neck. The person, being a young classical poet fresh from NYU, begun screaming that he was being buried alive. Fortunately, the landslide stopped and we dug him out and dusted him off. That was the last time he said anything against William Carlos Williams. The next day he began reading _Journey to Love_ rather feverishly."

--Richard Brautigan.

↑ Index

13. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?

Tue 1 Dec 1998

---

gg: that's all well & good... but if you wish to play the part of court jester, i suggest you have a good long look, again, at the danny kaye flick...

ok, now i'm being a shit...

but part of the problem with what you're advocating is that you don't account for the recent failure, as some of us would have it, of your slapstickery (or whatever)... you find that some of us "don't get" your humor, hence you imagine the need to "explain" effigies & the like to us (which is something a bit different from clarifying your position)...

it is possible, old salt, that some of us just don't appreciate the peculiar attributes of your mocking sensibility---by which i mean to aver that we just don't find it esp. funny, however clever... this is not to say we (some of us) don't have a sense of humor... but there is something oddly condescending at times about your post(ition)---odd too, b/c in general i would assume (self-)mockery could be a great aid in debugging pretentiousness... but then, right along with your remarks on the history of comedic form, you slip into your roll-call of little chestnuts, from celebrating janis (and who among us would not do so?) to the old sympathy ploy of evoking the loneliness of the long distance runner...

sorry for the contra & quasi-moral tone of this post, gabe... but mightn't you simply go back to the drawing board & find a way to evoke falstaff & co. w/o (as i read you) the latent, sometimes blatant, acrimony?... after all, this list is not simply a performative domain... mself, i feel on some occasions that you're just goofing off, but on others it seems to me you're using the semblance of same as a mask to get in some real digs... & please---please don't try to persuade me that the "gap" or some such between these two impressions is the very reality you wish to exploit (not least b/c this would clearly constitute protesting too much)...

finally, gabe: if everyone's bark is not all that hard, nor should we ask it to be, man...

best, really

joe

↑ Index

14. Elizabeth Treadwell
my reading list
Tue 1 Dec 1998

READING

The Gods Arrive (Edith Wharton)
The Making of Americans (Gertrude Stein)
Don Quixote (Kathy Acker)
The Writings of Medieval Women (An anthology trans by Marcelle Thiebaux)
The Fashion System (Roland Barthes)
Model: The Ugly Business of Beautiful Women (Michael Gross) (those last 2 are skimmers!) several dictionaries
the Bible

Don't make fun of people for reading their old diaries!! You BOYS!

Genderly tenderly,
Eliz.

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

15. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Tue 1 Dec 1998

I for one am glad to see in Gab Gudding's post that I didn't kill off a certain vitality by naming it. I think Gab has made his position clear. His posts are intended to be considered as rancid fumistiere. He just ain't no Alphonse Allais and that's why his posts are rancid. To the degree with which your penetrating counter-post exposes inconsistencies and paradoxes in his approach, you simultaneously address why his posts fail. He himself exposes the vulnerability of his style by declaring his own vulnerability e.g. as "a pacifist and somewhat mousey." Until this assertion has been tested empirically, it has no force as satire. It's pathetic. Personally, I think Gab is too much bluff and not enough substance. Names can be manipulated ironically; but content even more so with much richer results. But the requirements are more severe. He and I have discussed this.

As for Perloff, damned if Gab et al didn't seem to be fulfilling in their own way exactly what she was calling for in her original posts.
She just couldn't handle the heat. And substance wouldn't matter here.
It, more than likely, would just have been ignored.
No one on this list could be blamed for interpreting General Bernstein's actions as the establishment not being able to take the heat when in this case it was the establishment that called for the heat and is fond of criticising, however politely, those other establishments for things such as censorship. Bernstein has used that very word. Has he not?
Unlike some people on this list, I can say whatever I like precisely because I have nothing at stake except my own sense of integrity and I can take that on down the road.
Folks like me develop good ears. Perhaps you should not allow us on the list in the first place because, from my experience mastery of a subject or set of ideas has little to do with 'belonging.' Given these circumstances, to my mind, Gab's responses were legitimate, appropriate if not quite artistic triumphs and should be addressed as you did, in the open but on a level playing field.---Carlo Parcelli Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>
> gg: that's all well & good... but if you wish to play the part of court > jester, i suggest you have a good long look, again, at the danny kaye > flick...
>
> ok, now i'm being a shit...
>
> but part of the problem with what you're advocating is that you don't > account for the recent failure, as some of us would have it, of your > slapstickery (or whatever)... you find that some of us "don't get" your > humor, hence you imagine the need to "explain" effigies & the like to us > (which is something a bit different from clarifying your position)...
>
> it is possible, old salt, that some of us just don't appreciate the > peculiar attributes of your mocking sensibility---by which i mean to aver > that we just don't find it esp. funny, however clever... this is not to say > we (some of us) don't have a sense of humor... but there is something oddly > condescending at times about your post(ition)---odd too, b/c in general i > would assume (self-)mockery could be a great aid in debugging > pretentiousness... but then, right along with your remarks on the history > of comedic form, you slip into your roll-call of little chestnuts, from > celebrating janis (and who among us would not do so?) to the old sympathy > ploy of evoking the loneliness of the long distance runner...

>
> sorry for the contra & quasi-moral tone of this post, gabe... but mightn't > you simply go back to the drawing board & find a way to evoke falstaff & > co. w/o (as i read you) the latent, sometimes blatant, acrimony?... after > all, this list is not simply a performative domain... mself, i feel on > some occasions that you're just goofing off, but on others it seems to me > you're using the semblance of same as a mask to get in some real digs... & > please---please don't try to persuade me that the "gap" or some such > between these two impressions is the very reality you wish to exploit (not > least b/c this would clearly constitute protesting too much)...
>
> finally, gabe: if everyone's bark is not all that hard, nor should we ask > it to be, man...
>
> best, really
>
> joe

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

16. Jordan Davis
failure
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Moved by Carlo's suggestion that G Gudding's posts "fail" to note the assertion I forget whence originating that Hart Crane's "The Bridge" "failed" -- but wouldn't failure imply something was being attempted? something measurable, something outside parties could agree on?

Criticism can't really be building a consensus all over again, can it? I like the differences I have with you all, they mean something, though I don't like it when they're mysterious or when they divide attention unjustly -- and no offense to the Anti-Hegemony People, but Gudding's pretty close to Poe, no?

all right, enough questions -- too many questions implies not enough answers and I prefer to protect myself from the discourse here, too -- Jordan

↑ Index

17. A. Jenn Sondheim

Some of "A Cry" by Sara Teasdale, Some of Other Words

Tue 1 Dec 1998

==

Some of "A Cry" by Sara Teasdale, Some of Other Words

Oh, there are eyes that she can see,
  And hands to make her hands rejoice,
But to my lover I must be Only a voice.

Oh, there are breasts to bear her head,
  And lips whereon her lips can lie,
But I must be till I am dead
    Only a cry.

Oh, there are words that she can hear,
  And words that she returns to me,
But I must be for lock and weir
    Only a key.

Only a key, a voice, at night,
For my life goes locked across the wires,
And I have neither sound nor sight
And he is there, and there are pyres

Burning brilliantly my bones,
And there are fires out of sight,
And I will die on these dark stones,
My words are lost against his light.

And she shall never hear from me,
Through bridge and router, eternally.

↑ Index

18. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: failure

Tue 1 Dec 1998

Crane's The Bridge fails as done Pound's Canto's and Duncan's Groundwork. But there are failures and then there are failures e.g.
Williams' Paterson where the good doctor is decidedly out of his depth, so to speak. Gab's failure is however of a different order of all those above. But I don't care. In my book, he should be given every opportunity to fail/succeed/engage/disengage.
And then there is success, which doesn't imply superiority to failure.
But when huge artistic ambition and success, call it completion perhaps, conflate---Oh, Joyce! Oh, Wake!---Carlo Parcelli
By the Bo-. Did you folks know that our managing editor of FlashPoint, Jack Foley, wrote a book length unpublished study of Crane? Since there's so much interest in Crane, maybe I can convince him to publish it (or at least a piece of it) in an upcoming issue.
Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> Moved by Carlo's suggestion that G Gudding's posts "fail" to note the > assertion I forget whence originating that Hart Crane's "The Bridge"
> "failed" --
>
> but wouldn't failure imply something was being attempted? something > measurable, something outside parties could agree on?
>
> Criticism can't really be building a consensus all over again, can it? I > like the differences I have with you all, they mean something, though I > don't like it
>
> when they're mysterious or when they divide attention unjustly -- and no > offense to the Anti-Hegemony People, but Gudding's pretty close to Poe, no?
>
> all right, enough questions -- too many questions implies not enough answers > and I prefer to protect myself from the discourse here, too -- Jordan

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

19. Mark Prejsnar
Superior people
Tue 1 Dec 1998

On Tue, 1 Dec 1998, R.Gancie/C.Parcelli wrote:

> Unlike some people on this list, I can say whatever I like precisely because I have nothing at stake except my own sense of integrity and I can take that on down the road.
> Folks like me develop good ears. Perhaps you should not allow us on the list in the first place because, from my experience mastery of a subject or set of ideas has little to do with 'belonging.'

What are "folks" like Carlo like? How did they get to be so much better than ordinary mortals, and to have such a sense of integrity?

It must be great to have all that impressive mastery.

Perhaps, far from not allowing 'em on the List, we should hand it over to them! from the above passage it would appear that they're the only ones with sufficient "mastery" to run things!!

↑ Index

20. Poetics List
Welcome to Poetics List
Tue 1 Dec 1998

A reminder (and as stated below):

*Do not send attachments to the list
*Do not include the whole text of the post to which you are responding *Notices of new publications are welcome.

Note that this welcome message has been revised 12/1/98.

****
(This message is sent out to all new and renewing subscribers and it is sent out to the list at the beginning of every month)

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, College of Arts & Science, the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: Poetics Program, 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260 inquiries: [redacted]

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), with the participation of Loss Pequeño Glazier ([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons
New obstacles for exchange arise
Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently almost 700 subscribers, though all of these subscribers do not necessarily receive messages at any given time.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

We remain committed to promoting the editorial function of this project in all ways available to us. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry or other topics. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible.

While individual posts of participants are generally sent directly to all subscribers, we reserve the right to review posts before distribution.

We encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below). Such announcements constitute a core function of this list.

Please keep in mind that all posts become part of an on-line archive. Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

We recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities for exchange in this still-new medium. We request that those participating in this forum keep in mind the specialized and focussed nature of this project.

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager.
For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge, but formal registration is required. We ask that when you subscribe you provide your real name, street address, and phone number. All posts to the list must provide real name, as registered. All subscription-related information and correspondence remains confidential.

with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Phill Phillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages. _____

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. Subscribers who, in the judgment of the editors, overpost to the list will be asked to limit the number of posts they send.

While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message. As an outside maximum, the listserv is set to accept no more than 5 messages a day from any one subscriber. Participants who post more frequently than these parameters suggest will receive a reminder asking them to limit the volume of their posts.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files. The use of "styled" text or HTML formatting in the body of email posts to the list appears not to be compatible with the the list's automatic digest program and as result such messages disrupt the format of the Digest, even though this coding is readable for some subscribers who do not use the digest option. When sending to the list, please send only "plain text". Note, however, there is no problem with sending clickable URLs in HTML format

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

or try:

review POETICS by name review POETICS by country which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If your word processor will save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short announcements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

21. Daniel Kane
Rae Armantrout interview
Tue 1 Dec 1998

There is an interview with Rae Armantrout up on the Teachers & Writers Collaborative "WriteNet" web site. Since the page is devoted to issues specific to teaching poetry to students in grades K-12, Rae talks about ways one can teach the prose poem, and suggests methods for introducing avant-garde work to students (and teachers) that are not fraught with anxiety. Poems Rae talks about include "The Mix Up" and "Wake Up," both from her book _Necromance_.

--daniel

↑ Index

22. Chicago Review
Chicago Review Poetry Reading
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Chicago Review is hosting a poetry reading by Peter Dale Scott
Monday December 7 at 4:30 pm
Classics 10
1010 E. 59th St. on the University of Chicago campus.

The reading will be followed by a reception.

Scott has recently completed a remarkable trilogy--Coming to Jakarta, Listening to the Candle, and Minding the Darkness--which mixes politics and autobiography, beginning with the 1965 slaughter of more than a half million Indionesians. His brilliant use of collage in the composition of a long poem is clearly in the tradition of Pound, if to very different ends. James Laughlin has said of the first volume in the trilogy: "Not since Robert Duncan's Groundwork and before that William Carlos Williams' Paterson has New Directions published a long poem as important as Coming to Jakarta."

The most recent issue of Chicago Review (44:3 & 4) features a special section on Scott's poem.

If anyone needs directions, more information, etc. feel free to e-mail me.

Devin Johnston

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Chicago Review
The University of Chicago
5801 South Kenwood Avenue
Chicago IL 60637
ph/fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

23. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

stein quite quote

Tue 1 Dec 1998

---

can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl. reference.

↑ Index

24. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

hejinian query

Tue 1 Dec 1998

---

today in class someone asked how hejinian composed My Life. did she write it sequentially, did she collect sentences from all over and then compile them in an "order," etc?

↑ Index

25. MAYHEW

query

Tue 1 Dec 1998

Does anyone have e-mail adress for Michael Davidson? Please back-channel.

Thanks in advance.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

26. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
a measure of peace...
Tue 1 Dec 1998

or perhaps, as k burke once inscribed it, ad bellum purificandum...

it's probably best (as gabe just advised backchan) for me to post this exchange...

first gabe (in response to my post to poetix, which was in response to his long post), then my response to gabe... hope we can all move on now...

best,

joe

////////

GABE TO ME, backchannel

Dear Joe, I'm afraid that I can't respond frontchannel for a few days but I'd like to reply now so i do so privately. First, thanks, as always, for your gentle replies.

I'm well aware, to my chagrin,t hat much of my humor falls short and that i'm in many eyes nothing more than a boor, and I am also aware that many think i'm just being "performative," (showing off). But that is far from the case: i'm interested, as i've always been, in finding the new, the disturbing, and the unappreciated in poetry, and my interests have long lay in humor. My posts DO have an inquiring purpose: I am indeed mocking myself constantly in my posts: the whole ridiculous posture is MEANT to be self-parody, which, I see you feel, falls short: okay, it falls short: I intend NO slight whatsoever to CB or MP or MD: people expect me to and that's precisely why I wrote #8.

Sometimes,yes, I know my posts "fail," sometimes, though, they do not: I have it on good faith that my posts are welcome by many on the list. More below. On Tue, 1 Dec 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> humor, hence you imagine the need to "explain" effigies & the like to us
> (which is something a bit different from clarifying your position)...

when i'm tlaking of effigies there I'm thinking aloud, making a query of the list, trying to elicit addenda or embellishments to these first ideas I've had about all this: look I took CB at his word, to clarify, and I'm trying my best, Joe, I am: I'm not just messing around, but am trying to think here,to do so openly, WHILE attempting (and, I see, often failing) to embody what I'm writing about.

> *it is possible, old salt, that some of us just don't appreciate the*
> *peculiar attributes of your mocking sensibility---by which i mean to aver*

absolutely absolutely: but coudl you tell me WHY??? I -really-really- want to know, Joe.

> we (some of us) don't have a sense of humor... but there is something oddly condescending at times about your post(ition)---odd too, b/c in general i would assume (self-)mockery could be a great aid in debugging pretentiousness...

the whole point is that the pretentiousness is meant to be so darn ridiculous that it's laughable -- in a way that the garden-variety pretension of hte list isnt. I do mean to mock myself first of any.

but then, right along with your remarks on the history > of comedic form, you slip into your roll-call of little chestnuts, from > celebrating janis (and who among us would not do so?) to the old sympathy > ploy of evoking the loneliness of the long distance runner...

None of it's meant to be a ploy: that's who I am, thank you very much.

> sorry for the contra & quasi-moral tone of this post, gabe... but mightn't you simply go back to the drawing board & find a way to evoke falstaff & co. w/o (as i read you) the latent, sometimes blatant, acrimony?... after

That acrimony is in MANY MANY of the comments of people on this list to begin with: it's just directed outward at "them." I'm directing it inward at us, via schlocky and often raunchy bad humor. Look, my affiliations are with experimental poetics and poets, with decency in general: when I say I love and admire and read Perloff, Bernstein and Vogel avidly, I MEAN IT!: I DO. I have stated clearly what I don't like about Perloff's work and I have stated clearly, with a tiny history to back it up, why I think it's important she not center much of her criticism around the terms IMportant, Bad Good, Lasting etc.

but that's neither here nor there, no sense rehashing same stuff

> *all, this list is not simply a performative domain... mself, i feel on*

I, as I just mentioned, give Many reasons, thumbnail sketches of whole critical milieus, quotes, reasoned argument -- many many many more, in most cases, than those who simply pipe up with Poo-poos -- AND, yes, I also "goof off" -- but I never goof off without a point. I disagree with you there: never without a point (except for the insults to MD and McGrand, but those too I was writing with prose poems in mind: i'm trying recently to work in slapstick elements into my own work,a nd much of that ducharme post has worked its way into a poem of mine "Tippetycanoe Delendum Est," about going postal.

> some occasions that you're just goofing off, but on others it seems to me you're using the semblance of same as a mask to get in some real digs... &

I intend in those moments to caricature myself by "going over the top,' indeed if I in fact use negative energy to place that in the reader's mind I also pull it out and call myself a boor, and if that fails, as you say it does, I'll work on it, I hear you.

> please---please don't try to persuade me that the "gap" or some such > between these two impressions is the very reality you wish to exploit (not > least b/c this would clearly constitute protesting too much)...
>
well I spose in places i did just that.

> finally, gabe: if everyone's bark is not all that hard, nor should we ask it to be, man...

i think you think i'm some kind of vicious putz: i'm not in the least: i MEAN IT when I say that insult fascinates me: i'm a young guy with a tiny baby daughter a wife a step-child and am in love with life, poetry, and being good: am also, however, fascinated by slapstick. i think i said elsewhere that i don't have a mean bone or ligament in my body: my only problem, joe, and i htink you've pointed this out, is that i think i'm damn funny. good lord. pray for me, joe.

i will write that book: seeif you can't help me with it than!!

with every warm and kind wish, gabe

ME TO GABE, backchannel

gabe, thanx for your kind post...

no---sweet post, really...

now it seems to me---but i can't be sure, b/c it's only me---that if you were to have posted to poetix anything like what you've just posted me bc (please don't ask me to explain), nobody would take offense, and not a few folks would think much more highly of you, as i do now... perhaps this is b/c i'm not nearly, mself, as forgiving or as generous as i imply in my various urgings... hell, i'm a LOT less likable in person, if i do say so, have long enjoyed the benefit of email filtering out my more talky, aggressive qualities...

if you like, append this post of mine to your bc post to me, and post the result to poetix as a "dialogue" twixt the two of us... this should help relieve the stress/strain factor on poetix of late, and perhaps do everyone a bit o good...

on the other hand, i'll understand entirely if you choose not to... in any case peace, best---

joe

↑ Index

27. Aldon Nielsen
Sad News
Tue 1 Dec 1998

> Date: Mon, 30 Nov 1998 10:49:41 -0500 (Eastern Standard Time)
> Reply-To: [redacted]
> Sender: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (Trudier Harris)
> To: [redacted] (Horton Society)
> Subject: Sad News
> X-Sender: [redacted]
> X-Listprocessor-Version: 8.1 -- ListProcessor(tm) by CREN
>
> Dear Horton Society Members:
>
> *I write to inform you that Margaret Walker died this morning in Chicago. I am told that services will probably be in Jackson, Mississippi. I hope some of us can go. Her appearance with us at the Horton Society Conference in Chapel Hill in April was apparently her last stellar performance, which she thoroughly" enjoyed. Thank you for being a part of that experience.
>
> Please pass along this news to Society members who may not yet have email.
>
> Thank you.
>
> Trudier Harris
>
> P.S. When I receive more details about the service, I will pass them along.

↑ Index

28. Emily Lloyd
Re: stein quite quote
Tue 1 Dec 1998

In the piece "Sacred Emily," which is in one of the Catharine Stimpson -edited (Library of America) volumes--_Gertrude Stein: Writings 1903-1932_ or _Gertrude Stein: Writings 1932-1946_. Don't know which vol., though--my copy of "Sacred E." having been kindly xeroxed for me by Gwyn McVay... mostly secular emily

On Tue, 1 Dec 1998, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl. reference.

↑ Index

29. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: Free Poetices & A self examination

Tue 1 Dec 1998

(This is dave baptiste chirot)-- (Apologies for the length--) (Please note, if you are interested in the BLACKBIRD anthology mentioned below, which is visual poetry, essays, poetry, reviews and Holocaust memoirs from artists and poets around the world--all based on one four line poem by Paul Celan--feel free ro ask for more information . . . .) I've been away from this list for several days now. My two younger children were ill and then out of the blue the Ukrainian visualpoet Rafael Livshin and his wife Lilia stopped by for a visit, to exchange news of friends, to share works in various media and exchange addresses of places to send the works to in countries around the globe. This time away from the list (and I often am, not having email at home) gave me time to reflect on what I had written regarding Dr. Perloff and the issues she raised. In the first place, I'm appalled at the post I sent--there are a few interesting points, good ones hopefully, but they are buried beneath a refuse heap of mean sp[irited, ignorant invective--a kind of grand guignol caricature of hooliganism, ignorance and mob noise--there's no clarity, no reason, no sense of exchnage as in an open discusssion-- I'm not writing to apologize or to defend myself and those words. This isn't self criticism in the truly grand manner of the Stalinist Purges nor the Maoist Cultural Revolution. I've seen and heard and studied about enough of these--and they are always present with us--to have no taste at all for such. Self examination however does seem worthwhile, if one is to have any self respect and to be of use through one's life and work in the community of peoples.. That being the case--how did such an appalling bit of malarkey emerge? It might be easy to attribute it to the unconscious, a sudden flowing forth of carefully concealed invective and venom, beneath the "cultivated" surface. No, on reflection I realized that I had fallen for the bait, "seen red" as they say, and like the bull to the cape had charged full force forward . .. The reason I was so angered by Dr. Perloff's post was three simple words: Intolerance, multiculturism, discrimination. I undersdtand Dr. Perloff's points re close reading and (I hope) a literary and critical sense of discrimination (which is sometimes allied to the concept and practice of taste as the work of Bourdieu has demonstrated), I understand these and many of the High Modernist and Formalist issues of critique that Dr. Perloff is invoking. The problem for me, and what made me see red at the time (don't worry, I calmed down . . .) is that by throwing in the word and issue of multiculturalism (implicity perhaps as a lowering of standards, in the face of which a more rigorous critique is needed)--this linking of the three words made me deeply uneasy. It's very disturbing and needs a far more reasoned and thought out approach than that which I employed in the heat of the moment. (I recall ruefully Tom Mandel's comments re wanting to punch Ed Dorn--and Tom's amnger at Adorno--the difference is Tom expressed himself well . . . was not only passioante but thinking . . .) I'll try to explain as brtiefly as I can my seeing red--to give it a context and to explain my own being appalled at what I wrote within that context, which context includes Dr. Perloff and this list but as well many many other things-- First--at the end of my post I did make one point which is worth thinking about: intolerance/tolerance not as either/or but as both/and. As a mixed race person I encounter this both/and every day of my life--and in dreams and works as well. One is the living presence of one's ancestors' warring with and loving each other. In an odd way just to look into the mirror or see which way you are accepted one way or another--it's an interesting living out of Heraclitus' assertion that strife is the source of what is created, over and over again--an ancient yet living companion to Foucault's posing of power as productive and not solely destructive at the end of the first section of Discipline and Punish. So--this idea of intolerance versus tolerance, to me, is far more complex. And it is an important issue to think on as more and more people living in the USA--the future, really, to be through all these children--are mixed race. This mixing causes as is well known a good deal of "mixing" up so to speak in the canon--and I understood a good deal of Dr. Perloff's post to really be concerned with this issue, hence her argument for a High Modernist intolerance versus the muddied and at times mushy waters of the pc contingent--however, Perloff included multiculturism. This is a not an uncommon argument. (The lowering of standards . . . the need for rigorous readings . . .)I understand the reasons for all this--until they come to intolerance being extended to includes forms of discrimination (in it's doubled sense). One can't but feel the hair rise on the back of oone's neck . . . As to this issue of the canon--intolerance and discrimation at times is a kind of "revolutionary" act--an act of purification (whether a form of militant Puritanism or a Purge is always the danger . . .) I think the arguement is to forward the cause of the poets Perloff steadfastedly has for quite some time. Bob Grumman had at one time called Language centered works "aco-dominant"--and many on this list disagreed. I do as well--I think that the writing Perloff is attempting to advocate is what Raymond Williams would call "emergent" (or Bob might want to call "aco-emergo--dominant")--that is, work which is not yet dominant in the academy, but is steadily working its way toward being so. In this case, Dr. Perloff's intolerance of certain works and types of work, constitutes a very real and very powerful (in the sense that what she says and thinks and writes have had and do have immense consequences in the academic world--and by extension, to what is known and studied by students around the usa, and to what is considered worthy of being published, anthologized and the like . . .)--constitutes a very real and powerful force, a force whose effects are extensive, yet radiate from one center, and one alone.

So--my two main points, buried in the rubbish heap of cheap vitiriol and disturbing (above all to oneself) attitude --are the issues of intolerance and its extension into and being allied with the canon. As to the context of my seeing red--I thought that over a good deal. There is a context for it, not an excuse nor an apology, but a context, which by my post I contradicted--and that is what does appall and disgust me--not that I acted towards others as I did, but that that the action countermanded much long and hard work of my own.
In the last months I have been involved with various mail art and visual poetry exhibitions, demonstrations and activities--now the catalogues and various other related materials are arriving, bringing with them new invites and so on. One of the packages which arrived about ten days ago was the first printing of BLACKBIRD, edited by David Stone and available from Phoenix Press in Berkeley. (The first pressing of which I have a contributor's copy, is in black and white, the second printing will be in color. For those interested, I will supply the addresss, etc)-- BLACKBIRD iis an anthology of visual poetry, poetry and Holocaust memoirs and essays and reviews based on a poem of four lines by Paul Celan. The idea of the anthologfy is to demonstrate the ungoing presence of poetry despite those who asserted (as did Adorno, though he's not mentioned) that poetry could not be written after the Holocaust. Artists and poets from around the world contributed--there is an extensivce amount of visual poetry--here showing that visual poetry plays an integral part in the poetic continuance of the voices and images of the Holocaust--that there is no end . . .
As well, by dedicating the anthology not soley to "THE Holocaust" alone but to a poet and the Holocaust, this demonstartes the value of poetry in its historical and human rights opposition to intolerance. At the same as BLACKBIRD arrived, I was finishing works for an exhibition for Human Rights in Argentina, had sent statements to accompany works in an exhibition Against Racisme in Vienna and received catalogues of the Chiapas Exhibit organized by Clemente Padin and recieved more news regarding the events in the aftermath of the February exhibit in Santiago, CHILE called STOP (the theme of the exhibit; FREEDOM--DIVERSITY--PLURALISM IN THE TEACHING OF ART) --the show resulted in the firing of the head of the art department and curator of the museum, Dr. Humberto Nilo, not only one of the foremost academics and critics in Chile but as well a great visual poet. Many others involved with the show were thrown out of their jobs and many of the Chilean artists now are in dangers from the government--and to make matters worse there is the issue of Pinochet . .. Now new petitions are ebeing distriubuted, new works asked for to fight this, to support Dr. Nilo . . . So--these are all activities allying poetry nd the public sphere, in an international setting . . . the consequnces for these actions can at times be very dangerous--not only intolerance of them, but discrimation against them-- In this context I was in the midst of reading Mort a credit by Celine (Death on the Installment Plan)--Celine is one of my favorite writers. Yet reading his work, lurking there, is as well the knowledge of his anti-semiticism, his alliance with the nazis . . I was trying to resolve some of this in relation to my own works against all that Celine stood for in the realm of politics and race--and my own being mixed race . . . So, to see Dr. Perloff's post, instead of continuing with thinking, I just exploded. I would note that I am very familiar with Dr. Perloff's works, not only five of her books but many of her essays as well--those in Sulfar, APR, at the EPC and elsewhere. Being a bibliography nut, I have made much use of Dr. Perloff's valuabale bibliographies, what ever I disagreed with in a text of hers. For my own part, I spent five years being a film, book and music reviewer, regular and freelance, for many papers in Boston. I have been in academia-taught five years altogether, etc and have degrees to tack on after my name when I hang out my shingle . . . I've written critical essays that have been and are to be published--two of them papers given at academic conferences-- This to say, I understand the complexities and issues from not a poet vs. critic stand point--again, I'm both-- A long time ago, around 1911 or so, Marinetti attempted to put forward a critical system of weights and measures. One could say in its own way it was a precursor to Bill James' Sabremetrical ananlyses and abstracts regarding baseball statistics. (A friend of mine and I once thought of trying to apply this to poetry, as a kind of Rube Goldberg experiment . . .)

In the end, what disturbs me is not only this issue of intolernace, of the canon, of racism, of discrimation, of the academy, of poets and non -poets--but the most truly frightening thing of all--that after working so hard and much against all such, one fell immediately into the trap, took up the bait and ran headlong into the burning fire, burning oneself, with indignation and all--yet completley unaware that one was not attacking well armed or with a plan, but filled onself with the bile one was abhorred by . . .

The burning question, then . . .

↑ Index

30. Bob Haynes
Re: Sad News
Tue 1 Dec 1998

This was posted on the news wire for those interested:

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) -- Margaret Walker Alexander, who wrote poignantly in poems and the novel ``Jubilee'' about life as a black woman in the Deep South, has died. She was 83.

Ms. Alexander died Monday after battling breast cancer for months.

Her 1942 poem ``For My People'' won the Yale Award for young poets. She wrote: ``Let a new earth rise, Let another world be born, Let a bloody peace be written in the sky, Let a second generation full of courage issue forth, Let a people loving freedom come to growth.''

``Jubilee,'' published in 1966, told the story of the daughter of a slave and a white plantation owner. The New York Times Book Review said it ``chronicled the triumph of a free spirit over many kinds of bondage.''

``Margaret Walker Alexander was a woman for all seasons,'' said Clarence Hunter, a Tougaloo College archivist. ``She was a poet, a novelist, a teacher, a mentor, a scholar, a humanitarian, an activist, a fighter for rights of people. She was everything you can expect of a great woman.''

Ms. Alexander was born in Birmingham, Ala., on July 27, 1915, the daughter of a college professor. She moved at age 10 to New Orleans and left the South for college. She graduated from Northwestern University in 1935 and received master's and doctorate degrees from the University of Iowa.

In 1949 she became a professor at Jackson State University, where she founded the Institute for the Study of the History, Life and Culture of Black People in 1968. She served as its director 11 years, and the center was later renamed in her honor.

``I don't know anybody who has captured the heart and soul of black people any more than she did,'' said Alferdteen Harrison, director of the institute.

In all, she spent the past five decades in teaching and writing in Mississippi.

``She could have been in New York and been a big, big name,'' said Wanda Macon, a professor of English at Jackson State University. ``She stayed connected to the soil, stayed connected to the voices she heard and the voices she wrote about. That was just as important to her as the fame.''

Ms. Alexander sued author Alex Haley in 1988, alleging his book ``Roots'' infringed on her copyright for ``Jubilee.'' The case was thrown out of court.

Ms. Alexander, who was a widow, died in Chicago, where she was visiting one of her four children.

↑ Index

31. MAYHEW
Re: Free Poetices & A self examination
Tue 1 Dec 1998

A few suggestions for listafarians: posts should be at least as well written as prose; to use no solecism, typo, or misspelling that is not necessary to the presentation; to read what you are responding to; to come to the point in the first five pages of a post; to accuse noone of racism or crimes against humanity gratuitously; to compose in the sequence of a musical phrase, not in the sequence of the metronome...

Jonathan

↑ Index

32. Billy Little
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Tue 1 Dec 1998

OK i'm a geezer, i drank too much w/oppenheimer, smoked too much w/olson, being old fashioned i believe that poetry requires nurturing irreverence/questioning authority. The corollary of Pound's notion that everyone deserves to have their ideas considered one at a time, is that if somebody has a great idea once doesn't mean their next idea isn't ridiculous, witness pound. so everyone, even the buddha, may be, should be, will be challenged. The challenge should be anticipated in the emotional budget, appreciated as a negative praise(you're important enough to be challenged in the first place, you're worth the effort) and maybe, if you're old enough or important enough or published enough you'll actually be stirred by the opposition to outdo yourself to disprove the rude upstart's ridiculous assertions. Duncan used to say if you haven't published a new masterpiece for six months in San Francisco they come around banging on your door hollaring Robert, you're all washed up, you phony phruitcake, you couldn't write your way out of a lemon meringue pie. Is that Joanne Kyger knocking? Or George Stanley? So all this to say I think Gabriel Gudding should be unleashed, i don't expect i'll ever agree with everything he has to say, but i appreciate his risk, and when i double click on his message among my morning 35 i'm prepared to be astonished, i suspect he's young, and nervous to be playing in the same pen with the demi-gods, and trying to do the same thing that Bromige and Johnson and McGrand do so well, parrying and exasperating the opponent, but being less sure(or experienced) he's gotta go one better and actually tweek the nose or pinch the cheek. It may be excessive but excess and poetry are like a hoarse and carriage. Wieners screaming at Creeley in the bars of buffalo, cackling at Al Poulin's reading. Corso heckling Ginsberg in Vancouver. Opera is one of the necessary correctives for a language polluted by journalists superlatives, politician's pieties, and psychophants hipocrisy.

irrepressibilly,

billy little
4 song st.
nowhere, b.c. V0R1Z0
[redacted]

Go ahead and say something true
before the big turd eats You
You can say any last thing in Your poem.

-Alice Notley

↑ Index

33. Kathy Lou Schultz
LIPSTICK ELEVEN: It's a party! It's a reading!
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Friday, December 4, 7:30 p.m.
Small Press Traffic
New College Cultural Center, 766 Valencia, San Francisco
$5

Featuring LIVE THEATRE Luminaries Kevin Killian, Wayne Smith, Rex Ray, Clifford Hengst, and Scott Hewicker in a scene from Killian's and Smith's "Diamonds and Rust." Don't miss this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to see Norma Cole as Isabella Rossellini!

FICTION (etc)
Mike Amnasan
Dodie Bellamy
Robert Gluck
Camille Roy

POETRY (etc)
Norma Cole
Jocelyn Saidenberg
Brian Strang
Rodrigo Toscano
Truong Tran
Robin Tremblay-McGaw

PLUS: Fabulous, FREE raffle prizes!

↑ Index

34. Tosh
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Scott Walker: Another Tear Falls by Jeremy Reed
The Glamour Chase: The Maverick Life of Billy MacKenzie
You Don't Have To Say You Love Me by Simon Napier-Bell
Starmaker & Svengalis by Johnny Rogan
One Thousand and One-Second Stories by Inagaki Taruho
I Spit on Your Graves by Boris Vian (a TamTam project)

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

35. Karen Kelley
Re: Current reading (non poetry)
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Thanks for the tip--I love books like this! There was an amazing article on Ernest Henry Shackleton's Antarctic shipwreck in a recent national Geographic. And lots of books on the disastrous Everest expedition of a few years back--John Krakauer's _Into Thin Air_ and Anatoli Boukreev's _The Climb_ being fascinating accounts (and rather remarkably different accounts) of the same events. I love these stories of extreme experiences, and I love Kafka, but I've never thought to think of them together---- But I love these horrifying stories that take place in frozen environments, and my favorite Kafka story is "A Country Doctor"--hmmm, maybe not a coincident...

> Alone -- Admiral Richard E. Byrd -- an account of his solo expedition during the Antarctic night in the interior of that continent. What's fascinating about the book is that the very technology that allows him to inhabit his small cabin in -70 degree weather is the same technology that is slowly killing him. Carbon monoxide poisoning from an oil stove and a hand-cranked radio (connecting him to the hq at Little America) which saps what little strength he has left. This book led me to reread Kafka's short story, "The Burrow."

↑ Index

36. charles alexander reading list
Tue 1 Dec 1998

Sigmund Freud, Introductory Lectures Making Worlds: Gender, Metaphor, Materiality, ed. by Susan Aiken, Ann Brigham, Sallie A. Marston, Penny Waterstone Small Sculptures of the 70's, Richard Tuttle (this one is amazing) several issues of The Journal of Artists' Books, ed. Brad Freeman Bolinas Journal, by Joe Brainard (not poetry, although there are a couple of poems in here) canadas (there's a little more to the title, but it seems only reproducible in its own typography, which my email program will not emulate) -- this is also Semiotext(e) #17, 1994 -- just sent to me by a friend, thank you very much and some html and web graphics books

charles

↑ Index

37. Mark DuCharme
Re: stein quite quote
Wed 2 Dec 1998

>can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a >rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl.
>reference.

I believe it's in _Four Saints in Three Acts_, her play which was set to music by Virgil Thompson. I'm not sure where in that text it appears, nor do I know in which of her collections the complete text appears. It's _not_ in _The Yale Gertrude Stein_. An excerpt from it appears in _Selected Writings_ edited by Carl Van Vechten.

Mark DuCharme

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

38. George Bowering
Re: stein quite quote
Wed 2 Dec 1998

> can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl. reference.

The World is Round

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

39. J Kimball
Nonpoetry reading
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Deviant children grown up. L. Robins

Joan of Arc. M. Warner

Art and beauty in the Middles Ages. U. Eco.

Stituational Chinese. Beverly Hong

The narrative of the life of Frederick Douglas, an American slave, written by himself.

Aviation English. Shozo Yokoyama

Animal sounds and communication. W. Lanyon & W. Tavolga (Eds.)

How to do things with words. J. L. Austin

Building a winning strategy. Pharmacia & Upjohn

↑ Index

40. Louis Cabri
PhillyTalks 8
Wed 2 Dec 1998

I'm currently reading the next installment in the PhillyTalks newsletter project, #8, which is now available, featuring "dialogue" between Rod Smith and Bruce Andrews, prelude to their live encounter Dec. 10 in the Philadelphia Kelly Writers House, 3805 Locust Walk, at 6pm, (215-573-writ).

PhillyTalks is available from:
Louis Cabri
4331 Pine St., #1R
Philadelphia, PA
19104

↑ Index

41. Jim Bennett
Help
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Hello listies

I have been collecting information about PAUL AUSTER for a paper about his work esp his poetry. I obviously have the books and translations which he has written, but I would be grateful to make contact with anyone who knows him, knew him or has any information which may be of use. (I have tried to contact him direct but I think I have an old address). I am still in the collation phase at the moment and am looking for a direction from which to approach the subject.

His early struggles strike me as poignant, and the story of the manuscript of "The Chronicles of the Guayaki Indians. All very interesting esp in the light of his piece "Why Write?" from "The Art of Hunger".

Thanks

Jim

↑ Index

42. Jim Bennett
Re: reading list
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Dear all,

Here are my offerings.

The Chronicle of the Guayaki Indians. by pierre Clastres (trans, Auster) Highly recommended, a wonderfully evocative story of an amazing people.

The Art Of Hunger, Paul Auster
Some great writing (and some not so great)

The Birth of the Beat Generation, Steven Watson.
One of those I just keep going back to.

Love and lots of it

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner (after Basho)

↑ Index

43. Joe Brennan
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Wed 2 Dec 1998

In a message dated 12/1/98 9:02:18 PM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<< I think Gabriel Gudding should be unleashed, i don't expect i'll ever agree with everything he has to say, but i appreciate his risk, >>

amen to this....

jb...

↑ Index

44. Karen Kelley
Re: reading list
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Will you say more about the Chronicle? Is it a field study? When was it written?

Jim Bennett wrote:

> Dear all,
>
> Here are my offerings.
>
> The Chronicle of the Guayaki Indians. by pierre Clastres (trans, Auster)
> Highly recommended, a wonderfully evocative story of an amazing people.
>
> The Art Of Hunger, Paul Auster
> Some great writing (and some not so great)
>
> The Birth of the Beat Generation, Steven Watson.
> One of those I just keep going back to.
>
> Love and lots of it
>
> Jim
>
> Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780
>
> Click on this link to visit my site.
> http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/
>
> "Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner (after Basho)

↑ Index

45. WENDY KRAMER
raddle moon
Wed 2 Dec 1998

could you backchannel with subscription address again please? i lost it thanks, wendy

↑ Index

46. ken|n|ing
WWW LITPRESS COM
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Has anyone out there been checking the listings at www.litpress.com lately? They seem to have fallen behind, which is reasonable considering the amount of material they likely must sift through each week. At any rate, I'm posting my query to the list so as to alert you all to their service, a valuable one I think. Are they still up and running? Patrick F. Durgin

```
                    |
                    |
k e n n i n g``````````````|```````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry,  poetics,  and  non-fiction writing
                    |418 Brown St. #10  Iowa City, IA 52245  USA
```

↑ Index

47. Jasper Bernes
Re: stein quite quote
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Maria Damon:

yes, it's in TENDER BUTTONS. I don't know who publishes it.

Jasper Bernes

On Tue, 1 Dec 1998, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl. reference.

↑ Index

48. David Cameron
poetics list
Wed 2 Dec 1998

I received a message asking for my name, address & telephone number. Before I give out this information, why do you need to have it? Your message states that you need it for your records, but why do you need my phone number? Please reply with the insurance that you will not be giving out my personal information to any phone/mail solicitors, and that you will not be calling to solicit me.

David Cameron

↑ Index

49. Michael Magee
Re: stein quite quote
Wed 2 Dec 1998

TB is from Sun & Moon Classics -m.

According to Jasper Bernes:
>
> Maria Damon:
>
> yes, it's in TENDER BUTTONS. I don't know who publishes it.
>
>
> Jasper Bernes
>
> On Tue, 1 Dec 1998, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> > can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a > > rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl.
> > reference.
> >
>

↑ Index

50. Mark Prejsnar
that dreary nonpoetry stuff
Wed 2 Dec 1998

1. Bookend : anatomies of a virtual self. Joe Amato. Well, this has to be called "sort of non-poetry;" out of control and a wild ride. i'll post something on it when i feel able to cope. But should not be missed.

2. Many thousands gone : the first two centuries of slavery in North America. Ira Berlin. Strong emphasis on the ways African Americans fought within slave-society for areas of autonomy, as well as for complete freedom.

3. Early downhome blues : a musical and cultural analysis. Jeff Todd Titon. There are two books that should be read to begin to learn about blues (by which i mean the country blues, the real stuff): the first is David Evans' Big Road Blues. This (which i've just discovered) is the only study that comes close to Evans'. And the 1994 2nd edition comes with a fabulous 19-track CD.

4. Mapping the West European left. ed. Perry Anderson. A bit dated but solid.

5. Tula : the Toltec capital of ancient Mexico (Diehl) and Chalcatzingo : excavations on the Olmec frontier (Grove). i'm a mesoamerica nut (i think Olson got me started in that direction when i was about 15, but i seem to have repressed this, and only recently recalled that that was how it happened..) These are a little dry if you don't share my obsession but accessible, and cool for anyone who likes archeology.

6. Seven faces : Brazilian poetry since modernism. Charles Perrone. I think everyone should read this!! It's a great discussion of "my other country's" poetic development from 1930 to the present. Perrone is very sharp and political and always makes the right call in juding the importance and success of different poets and movements (which is to say, i always agree with him). Style is a sort of dryly idiosyncratic post-Derrida academicspeak, influenced rather a lot by Portuguese and French theoretical prose. But substance-wise this is super.

prosily,
mark

↑ Index

51. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Wed 2 Dec 1998

that was a great post by dave chirot...

let me offer a few more thoughts, and i apologize once again for any hint of self-righteousness:

if anyone should think it impossible to destroy a list "community" forever and ever, think again... it's happened, i've seen it happen, and it ain't a pretty sight (and this has been said around here before)... this is a region of our own doing, as tentative and perishable as anything else human...

so while i'm all for letting folks do what they do, so to say, i'm also for some working sense of self-restraint (modulations as implied in what follows)...

charles b. is trying to use what tools the establishment has given him in order to help make this place livable for 700+ subscribers---no easy task... which is to say, he has a certain responsibility as list moderator to everyone on the list---much as we have a responsibility to one another [he sez]... after all, this is a moderated list, whatever one thinks of same---and there are reasons why it's moderated (which we can discuss at length)... but those of you who have served (even as) listowners, like me, will no doubt be able to address the difficulties of keeping such a list going in productive directions w/o the potentially damaging fall-out of nastier exchange... (((and yes, i'm using what amounts to media-ecology language here, and i think it appropriate)))...

and to reiterate: it's simply not the case that everyone --more specifically, every so identified grouping -- feels equally "at home" hereabouts, for all sortsa reasons (i might mention gender as an operating construct, but wish to avoid another jihad)... and it's simply not a matter of "if you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen" (this should be self-evident)... so the way i see it, folks should be attentive to the list environs as such, whatever their intentions or motivations, and stop to consider whether they really wish merely to alienate, or insult, or offend, or silence, or drive away (all as opposed, say, to raising anxieties)... i don't say we should in any sense aim to please -- and i understand only too well the necessary risks that come of pushing those envelopes -- but i do say that, however outlandish or unorthodox our sentiments, we should find a way to respond to what's coming back to us via the list, and not continue as though "no harm could possibly be done"... assuming we value a diverse list population, we can prove our commitment to same only through our actions---which around here = words...

finally: i regard this medium we're all busy exploiting as still quite new, despite how tried & true it often seems... it allows for more performative posts, near-synchronous exchange, fairly deliberate exposition, quick procedural communique, tones of moral indignation [mea culpa], on and on and on... over time i suspect we'll all learn better how to tickle these keys, to offer up our wildest dreams in ways that won't give offense (thoug of course we'll no doubt give offense too, being only human)... but folks, we often don't know one another all that well---e.g., despite the incredible rhetorical skills that so many of you possess, you can't really see/hear me winking at you right now, saying in so many words "but you don't need me to tell you this, right?"...

---

and if all of this sounds impossible, well that's something worth aiming for i think...

///

joe

↑ Index

52. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: that dreary nonpoetry stuff
Wed 2 Dec 1998

I hardily concur with Mark Prejsnar's endorsement of Joe Amato's _Bookend: Anatomies of the Virtual Self_. There _is_ a method to the madness, but I'm having too much fun with it to say yet just what that might be.

Also reading:
Marvelous Possessions by Stephen Greenblatt.
The Recognitions by William Gaddis.
Gravity & Grace by Simone Weil.
The Sin of the Book: Edmond Jabes, edited by Eric Gould.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

53. Edward Foster
This week-end in New York
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Friday, December 2nd

Talisman benefit reading by

Lyman Gilmore (_Don't Touch the Poet: The Life and Times of Joel Oppenheimer_)
Joel Lewis (ed. _Reality Prime: Selected Poems_ by Walter Lowenfels)
Maureen Owen (_American Rush: Selected Poems_)
Ed Roberson (_Just In: Word of Navigational Challenges: Selected Poems_)

Terrific refreshments, wonderful conversation, great poems

Denise Bibro Gallery
429 W. 20th Street, 4th floor
7:00 p.m.

(Copies of Ed Roberson's _Just In_ and the new edition of William Bronk's _Some Words_ arrived at Talisman Central from the printer yesterday and will be unveiled at the reading.)

AND:

Saturday, December 3rd:

Goats & Compasses benefit reading by

> Zhang Er
> Ed Foster
> Anne Mette Lundofte
> Eleni Sikelianos

Together with an exhibit of _beautifully_ designed books. Just when you thought everything would soon be on a computer screen, Goats & Compasses arrived to prove that paper and ink are still provide the best way to read poems.

Trans Hudson Gallery
416 West 13th Street
6:30 P.M.

↑ Index

54. Brian Carpenter
non-po reading
Wed 2 Dec 1998

---

my captivating list...

-- Hayden White, Metahistory: the historical imagination of ninteenth centuty europe

-- Gaston Bachelard, The Poetics of Reverie (reread), trans. daniel russell (i think)

-- Greg Bear, Anvil of Stars (aliens! exploding planets! starship intrigue!)

-- Carl Sauer, Land & Life: collected essays

-- Merleau-Ponty, Phenomenology of Perception (ever so slowly...)

phew!

BC

↑ Index

55. A. Jenn Sondheim performance
Wed 2 Dec 1998

This Sunday at PS122 I think at 4 or thereabouts, Foofwa d'Immobilite (dancer Freddie Gaffner who worked with Merce Cunningham for years, still stars in Ocean) and myself (shamisen) will be doing a performance as part of an improvisational series; I'm slightly hazy on this, but you might enjoy it, even if the shamisen gives out... PS122 is on the corner of 9th and 1st Ave in NYC. Alan

↑ Index

56. raea100900
An error in my interview with...
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Hi all-

Apparently, I said at least one silly thing in my interview with Teachers and Writers Collab (www.writenet.org). Apparently, though I can't bring myself to check, I claimed that Ron Silliman once read aloud from his work on a bus. Of course, I should have said that he and 26 other people read from Tjanting in various public sites, including (I think) a Bart station. I knew that, but I find that almost anything can pop out of one's (my) mouth during a taped conversation. Pretty alarming. I only looked at the site myself long enough to determine that I was having a very bad hair day. Sorry Ron.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

57. Mairead Byrne
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Wed 2 Dec 1998

On Wed, 2 Dec 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

>
> let me offer a few more thoughts, and i apologize once again for any hint > of self-righteousness:
>
It's not so much the self-righteousness as the overweening earnestness.

> *charles b. is trying to use what tools the establishment has given him in order to help make this place livable for 700+ subscribers---no easy task... which is to say, he has a certain responsibility as list moderator to everyone on the list---much as we have a responsibility to one another*

*[he sez]... after all, this is a moderated list, whatever one thinks of same---and there are reasons why it's moderated (which we can discuss at length)... but those of you who have served (even as) listowners, like me, will no doubt be able to address the difficulties of keeping such a list going in productive directions w/o the potentially damaging fall-out of nastier exchange... (((and yes, i'm using what amounts to media-ecology language here, and i think it appropriate)))...*

*and to reiterate: it's simply not the case that everyone --more specifically, every so identified grouping -- feels equally "at home" hereabouts, for all sortsa reasons (i might mention gender as an operating construct, but wish to avoid another jihad)... and it's simply not a matter of "if you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen" (this should be self-evident)... so the way i see it, folks should be attentive to the list environs as such, whatever their intentions or motivations, and stop to consider whether they really wish merely to alienate, or insult, or offend, or silence, or drive away (all as opposed, say, to raising anxieties)... i don't say we should in any sense aim to please -- and i understand only too well the necessary risks that come of pushing those envelopes -- but i do say that, however outlandish or unorthodox our sentiments, we should find a way to respond to what's coming back to us via the list, and not continue as though "no harm could possibly be done"... assuming we value a diverse list population, we can prove our commitment to same only through our actions---which around here = words...*

*finally: i regard this medium we're all busy exploiting as still quite new, despite how tried & true it often seems... it allows for more performative posts, near-synchronous exchange, fairly deliberate exposition, quick procedural communique, tones of moral indignation [mea culpa], on and on and on... over time i suspect we'll all learn better how to tickle these keys, to offer up our wildest dreams in ways that won't give offense (thoug of course we'll no doubt give offense too, being only human)... but folks, we often don't know one another all that well---e.g., despite the incredible rhetorical skills that so many of you possess, you can't really see/hear me winking at you right now, saying in so many words "but you don't need me to tell you this, right?"...*

-----

and if all of this sounds impossible, well that's something worth aiming for i think...

///

joe

↑ Index

58. miekal and interactive geographies
Wed 2 Dec 1998

on another channel, John Kinsella has initiated a writing project among the poetry etc listees, writing a paragraph of prose about their locality, everything submitted to the list to be coagulated & re ordered & released as a Salt chapbook....just to show that real work is possible in the email environment-- poetry etc - a list administered by John Kinsella - http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Square/8574/

miekal

sorry I havent jumped into the various frays, tho I feel disappointed that the real issues of media ecology, sustainability & community are not discussed with the same passion & investment that perloff & the listbrats are. its quite obvious that one wouldnt spend the time to fire off elaborate quips if they didnt really feel like they were part of something worth being part of. (speaking of interactive geographies....

↑ Index

59. Mairead Byrne
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Sorry Joe, I was just rolling up my sleeves to reply at more length to your post when I was overcome by irresistible ennui, decided to leave it till later, and pushed the wrong button by mistake: another factor of exhaustion, I'm afraid. So I didn't intend to dismiss your whole post with one aside. I suppose what I was shaping up to say was that I like the short, the sharp, the funny. I find much of the posting here exclusive: I think it was David Bromige who posted Thanksgiving greetings to nine or ten of his list-mates, exclusively male. Maybe the way discourse unfolds, and between whom, and in response to whom, is less noticeable than gg's jigging around. If one has to be reasonable all the time, posts get very opaque and tedious. As far as moderation is concerned, I'm somewhat at a loss. Since I moved to New York state, I have noticed a desperate belief in rules and control: maybe it's just a bad run of luck. But are the ravening hordes of Poetics folk, all 700 of them, champing at the bit and in need of regular settling down lest they turn into crazed beasts? They seem pretty quiet to me; even gg confesses to being mousey. Anyway, I'm glad when posts are open enough to let me squeak in: vivas for those who have "failed"! Mairead

↑ Index

60. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?
Wed 2 Dec 1998

mairead, yes, i'm being 'overweeningly earnest,' i think you're right... i apologize for that too, but am willing to venture same to help settle things down.. i really don't know WHAT the lurkers on this list are thinking---but i'll say again that i've found that flames of the sort experienced here of late CAN in effect shut a list down, simply by silencing and/or chasing away otherwise interested parties...

anyway, that said, and to pick up on two other items: (1) i'm anything but mousy, and (2) re new yorkers and rules: i hail from syracuse mself so

WHAT'S IT TO YA?!...

just kidding///

best,

joe

↑ Index

61. Eliza McGrand
free (speech, typos and all) poetics
Wed 2 Dec 1998

jonathan

i know you mean well, and so forth. but do you know what i am reminded of? more than once, i've gotten a badly spelled, cliched, boring, banal, self- contradictory (in a stupid way, i.e. "she pursed her cherry red lips with pain/ and yearned after his tender kiss again/ and then her pale face and lips withdrew/ to the lonely aching sorrow she did so knew") poem, have sent back crits that were fairly blunt and pointed out tired images, contradictions (i.e. pale lips and cherry lips, so which is it?), made suggestion that poet write POETS words, not borrow others. and gotten back some silly, spiteful bit of junk complaining because i don't use uppercase letters in the email and there was a typo.

listen, all day, all bloody day and weekend and many a night i sit about picking and picking and particularizing -- my words, other people's words, picking and picking fo r typos, slurring of logic/intent/word meaning, and i am simply sick and tired of it. there has to be a place in my life, writing, where i do not have to be so painfully painstakingly careful but can be relaxed. now, i claim email for this. i'm not the only one -- one of the charms of email, and net, has been the "quick" nature, and the funny typos. it is also one of the dangers, witness painful nature of "flames." none of this is particularly original -- there is lots of lit. on subject of email/net writing.

i would rather pay attention to the content of posts, ideas, analysis, than waste my time picking and spitting over typos, demanding things be polished and pretty and spare. we all do enough of that elsewhere. so no, i don't have a problem with misspells, typos, etc. unless they are in a citation and cause me to spend more time finding something, or unless the typo/misspell distorts one's words. i would take time to de-typo a quote, that seems only fair. but i will not stop being comfortable and quick on posts when i feel like it and i for one would not want anyone else to.

e

↑ Index

62. Eliza McGrand

Re: free (speech, typos and all) poetics

Wed 2 Dec 1998

---

i don't mean to compare you, by the way, to the Awful Writer. but what i do want to bring to earth is that Awful Writer writes me back rude silly responses completely discounting pretty good crit on writing because i am not rolling on my back salivating, i.e. giving AW the response they want. and rather than consider my content, he/she picks on my form. it is sad, a little funny, a lot pathetic, and a terible waste of time, theirs and mine.

you request that psots be perfectly spelled, etc. and i do not doubt that part of that arises from a finely tuned "reading" ear. but there is fun in cacophany. and i think you are wasting your time in form at the expense of content, and even, missing an integral aspect of this email "form" -- its spontaneity.

huzzah for the quick, huzzah for the spontaneous.

but also, huzzah for those posts which one thingks about a bit, rereads, proofs -- i "tolerate" those as well! am catholic in my tastes! (which is, by the by, a very odd turn of phrase. it means open to many things, but one would think a person "catholic" in their tastes would be exceedingly jesuitical and particular. i know the religeuses in charge of my early indoctrination never struck me, then or now, as open to many things!).

e

↑ Index

63. schuchat
two or three things
Wed 2 Dec 1998

1. I noticed in some post or another a reference to Charles Bernstein as the "gray professor of poetry" at SUNY Buffalo. Say it ain't so! I do not recall Charles as gray in any sense.

2. Non-non poetry reading:

DARK -- Hoa Hyugen -- I strongly recommend this book.

CLINCH -- selected poems of Michael Scholnick, just published by Coffee House. Wonderful works, some echoes of Reznikoff, Denby and Hart Crane. I strongly recommend this as well.

ROOTS AND BRANCHES -- my favorite Duncan, often to which I permitted to return, etc.

LIFE & DEATH, Robt. Creeley

MYSTERIES OF SMALL HOUSES, A Notley

WORKS & DAYS, Bill Luoma

all recommended, actually.

3. So what about translation. American into other languages, that is. My Russian vocabulary is probably already adequate to translate some Stein into Russian, but would it sound like Stein in Russian? How to translate Ashbery into another language -- other than French, of course. (I prefer "you" in the plural. -- how do you do that without our unique second person?) Go for texture? Would reproducing the sensory surface have the same effect in Swedish or Japanese? What about Clark Coolidge or Bob Grenier? If you were translating WCWilliams into a rhyme-rich language, would you go out of your way to avoid rhymes or what? I recall that one among we listniks has translated THE PISAN CANTOS into Chinese, what a wonderful idea, I need to read this version. Anyone read any other current American poetry in other languages?

↑ Index

64. Steven Clay
Announcing 'Figuring the Word' by Johanna Drucker
Wed 2 Dec 1998

<fontfamily><param>Geneva</param>Figuring the Word: Essays on Books, Writing and Visual Poetics collects diverse writings by Johanna Drucker previously published in literary and scholarly journals. Topics include: "The Word Made Flesh," "Writing as Artifact," "Visual Poetics," "Artists' Books Past and Future," "The Future of Writing," & "Personal Writing." The book also includes an anecdotal checklist of Drucker's artists' books and an informative introduction by poet Charles Bernstein.

"Figuring the Word is a work of poetics rather than criticism or theory in that these essays are the products of doing as much as thinking, of printing as much as writing, of designing as much as researching, of typography as much as composition, of autobiography as much as theory. The mark of the practitioner-critic is everywhere present in these piecesŠFiguring the Word is a wide-ranging collection of Drucker's essays from the early-80's to the present. Written in a variety of styles and presented in a variety of formats, the book reflects many divergent aspects of her work and thinking, while at the same time demonstrating how cohesive her project has been. Drucker begins with a wonderfully digressive discussion of her work as a book artist in which she gives an account of what lead her not only to her book art, but also to her related scholarly investigations. She then provides a series of close readings of the work of a number of contemporary language artists, providing in other essays overviews of the historical precedents for this work. The book includes not only a perceptive essay about the use of language in the landscape but also a prescient essay about the use of language in the new electronic frontier of cyberspace."

-from the introduction by Charles Bernstein, Poet, Editor and David Gray Professor of Poetry and Poetics at SUNY-Buffalo.

Johanna Drucker has been making books since 1972. Her recent critical publications include The Century of Artists Books (Granary Books, 1995), The Alphabetic Labyrinth (Thames and Hudson, 1995), Theorizing Modernism (Columbia University Press, 1994) and The Visible Word (University of Chicago Press, 1994); creative titles include: Prove Before Laying (Druckwerk, 1997) and Narratology (Druckwerk, 1994).

Paperback original. ISBN 1-887123-23-7 $24.95

300 pages; illustrated throughout.

Available at better bookstores, our primary distributor D. A. P. (1-800-338-BOOK); Small Press Distribution ([redacted]), or direct from the publisher: Granary Books 568 Broadway #403 New York, NY 10012 ([redacted]; [redacted])

</fontfamily>

↑ Index

65. david bromige
Reads On Busses
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Listfolk, I dont think Rae should have to apologize for alleging Ron Silliman read his poetry out loud on a bus, do you? It's certainly time for the apocrypha of Language Writing to commence, non? If Ron didnt read out loud on a bus, well he ought to have, and it fits in with Barrett Watten's remark re most non-Ron poetry : "A bus ride is better than most art." While it is true that Ron and 26 or 46 of us read Ketjak (or Tjanting) aloud in a Bart station, I would rather hear of the events that never happened, but should have. David

↑ Index

66. David Zauhar
Re: Reads On Busses
Wed 2 Dec 1998

On Fri, 27 Nov 1998, Charles Alexander wrote:

> I know I read Tjanting on a bus. And that ride WAS better than most art.
>
> charles

Once read Ted Berrigan's _Train Ride_ going from Kingston RI (not quite Providence) to Boston. . . And last March read most of Johnson's ARK on a weather-delayed Amtrak surrounded by whispering Amish and passing Ohio/Pennsylvania countryside.

DZ

↑ Index

67. david bromige
setting the record straight
Wed 2 Dec 1998

> Happy Thanxgvng everybody!

By 'everybody,' I meant women as well as men, and you, Mairead, for your pithy posts, especially. That I had named 7 men (not 9 or 10, though a line always seems longer when you're waiting to hear your name called) before my general greeting, was down to it being a 'men's group energy morning' for yours truly. When the vibes are turned towards the female, the balance will be restored. What goes around, comes around. As my ex-wife, who had already quit, said when she looked in my car ashtray and saw all the Vantage butts on my side, and all the True Menthol 100 butts my girlfriend smoked on the other, "Kharma." I havent the faintest idea why she said that then. Because the car was a Kharman-Ghia? Anyway, be that as it may, I feel discomfort at the beam Political Rectitude turned my way by Mairead's post. Is this how it has to be, equal gender time in all of one's posts? Gee, it's like when the kids were real young, and you had to be extra-careful when handing out candy in case there were tears before bedtime. Has anyone done a count to see which males and females of us frequent posters respond more often to male than female posts, or vice versa? And then there is the problem of cross-dressers, like George Bowering. Or Rachel Loden. Or.....David.

↑ Index

68. Eliza McGrand

Re: setting the record straight

Wed 2 Dec 1998

---

i HAVE done a count. in fact. ehr hum.... here is MY count, by ME, that is my very OWN count...

male posters, featuring explicitly male anatomy, have been banned in fifteen states along with assault rifles. 9 out of 10 doctors assure us there is a corollary, which could require an emergency bypass. that is why the male posters do not speak from their mouths.

ten out of nine posts are by women over the age. they did not consent to this posting, and all acts that are non consensual are deplorable and should be banned.

if ron silliman tries to read on a bus, he should be banned, unless he has a poster featuring explicit anatomy (exquisite, male, or female) in which case he should be banned twice and his assault rifle should be taken aaway. nor is smoking allowed.

rachel loden and rachel lewinsky both are to be allowed to post, but must wear their explicitly female outfits before posting. this could include (but is not limited to) the domestic, the maternal, or anything drip dry with pleats.

if george bowering appears in pleats everyone must turn in their assault rifles and then bowering should be made to sit down. he may post female posters but not post female posts. bully for george, huzzah. huzzah.

david bromige always wears white suits, ice cream suits, rather like colonel sanders. if he exists (bromige OR sanders, there is controversy regarding both). numerous people have sighted him, in white suits. so he can post either as a male or as a female, just not after memorial day.

gaga, well, we'll draw a vail over poor gaga except to say that he and kent, well, it wasn't pretty, that's all, it just wasn't pretty and neither of them is female, or a poster, no matter what they might claim. and i think they should give bowering back his raincoat -- the longer they wait, the more money bowering will borrow from the rest of us on the strength of it ("hey, got a dollar, i need a raincoat...")

queen of posting protocal
elliza

↑ Index

69. michael corbin
Re: fail safe
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Jordan Davis wrote:

> Moved
> that Hart Crane's "The Bridge"
> "failed" --
>
> david bromige wrote:
>
> aloud in a
> Bart station,

"they called to the streets, and the streets killed them". Weber, on Rosa Luxembourg and Karl Liebknecht.

Its not just a vertigo of modernity, I think, to be undone by this built environment. Yes, Yes, it is postmodern bricolage. Architecture. But what I'm confronted with is the concrete mixer. Dump truck. And those ubiquitous stanchions or tapered dividers that they put out at the construction sites, road repair, infrastructure development. Or more, scaffolding. Pinned up against the building. Rising up. Or those cranes they must deploy at the construction site, for the high-rise or sky-scraper. Signs everywhere. "Sidewalk Closed/Please Cross Street." "Bus No Longer Stops Here." "Board Bus On Mt. Pleasant Street".

What did Schumpter call capitalism? "Creative destruction"? I don't know. Just destruction. He was wrong. But, but the building seems to go on and on and on. Cities become ugly in there inhumanity. Or even ugly in their humanism. And the fragility of 700+ (sic) is no more than the fragility of walking across, through, various engineered behemoths, believing they will hold our weight, with moderators, and moderation, Believing, That, engineering and maybe even physics are on our side.

mc

↑ Index

70. Bob Haynes
Re: setting the record straight
Wed 2 Dec 1998

In a message dated 12/2/98 2:03:40 PM, [redacted] writes:

<< queen of posting protocal >>

wow! what a great post. I don't know who some of the people are yet, but I think this is why I want to. bully for elliza, huzzah, huzzah.

↑ Index

71. Pierre Joris
Re: two or three things
Wed 2 Dec 1998

---

schuchat wrote:

> 1. I noticed in some post or another a reference to Charles Bernstein as the "gray professor of poetry" at SUNY Buffalo. Say it ain't so! I do not recall Charles as gray in any sense.

I'll vouch for that -- it's only the Chair he inhabits at Beau Fleuve that is Gray. The man hisself and the work is anything but that.

> 2. Non-non poetry reading:
>
> DARK -- Hoa Hyugen -- I strongly recommend this book.

Am reading it just now -- excellent work, highly recommended.

> 3. So what about translation. ... Anyone read any other current American poetry in other languages?

Just read (aloud even, at Beaubourg, in gay Paree last month) translations into French of Ken Irby and Robert Kelly. Wouldn't want to comment on their quality as I did the translations myself. The same evening heard Jean Daive read his Robert Creeley versions. French is a tough language for to put amerikan over and into, it tends to flatten the lines. impose melody on what was rhythm and dull the _arete_, the sharpness, especially in as tight and chiselled a syntax as Creeley's. But Daive has been slaving over these for many years and has come up with creditable versions. Wish I were in Berlin where Jerome Rothenberg is reading tonight no doubt with his German translator by his side. "Cockboy" and "that dada strain" in Hölderlinisch would be quite interesting to hear.

Come to think of it, this very afternoon I was zu Gast at Skidmore College in a French class to talk about my work, questions of translations, and the poetry of Henri Michaux -- and wound up at one point reading one of my poems as translated into French by Michel Maire. Whenever -- rarely -- I have done this -- always more or less forced -- it has made me feel strange and uneasy -- an uncanny experience, completely dissimilar from reading either my own work in the original English or that of another poet, be it in English or in translation.

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Through the living the road of the dead
— Ungaretti
==========

↑ Index

72. Mairead Byrne
Re: setting the record straight
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Okay okay. I don't like candy but I'm whirling in rapid regression through teenagerhood all the way back to babyness. With a bit of luck I'll become embryonic. So bond away you great hunks -- and that goes for you too O far from mousey Joe Amato. I know this post does not concern poetics so I'm keeping it short so I won't be banished but is there a tiredness and a crotchetiness that's affecting a lot of folks at this tailend of the year? Especially as the weather round these parts is anticipating both Christmas AND summer holidays. Roll on this very last year of the century that still thinks it's new: hey, by the time the REAL new century comes I'll probably be a little scrap of genetic material, or at least back in God's pocket as we used to say. Mairead

On Wed, 2 Dec 1998, david bromige wrote:

> Happy Thanxgvng everybody!

↑ Index

73. Rachel Loden

pig wars and other truffle-snuffling battles

Wed 2 Dec 1998

I see that my name is being taken in vain again on this list. Eliza refers to "rachel loden and rachel lewinsky." I knew that GB was having one of his back-street flings with Rachel Levitsky, or maybe just stepped on his eyeglasses and couldn't tell us apart, but if Monica L. has a sister in these climes I really don't want to know. Why can't she earn her poet laureate kneepads somewhere else, maybe on Robert Pinsky?

But anyway. Re: the recent mishegoss, I like what Charles Mingus wrote on a record he sold me (and many others, no doubt) through the mail: "Thank you in this, your DISCRIMINATING purchase."

Check out Susan Wheeler's excellent "What Outside?" in the latest _Talisman_ for more light on turf battles. She quotes Auden's "rebuke to Spender when Spender, flitting through the issue of a new journal, came across a poem it pained him to envy, 'Yay! More to raid!'" And later: " . . . the problem is not what happens with assimilation, a trope that still depends upon opposition, it is rather how do we acknowledge and yet ignore, move through, not so much to accrue the goods (as the elect angels) but to develop the work . . . What is the result of the action of inserting more interesting work into less interesting work, or vice versa? . . . How does the culture alter by interbreeding? . . . Now, consider the result of this codification, this self-definition against an Other. Less to raid. Less to read. A snugger rug. New-found affinities. And a border to protect. An economy to support. A kind of nationalism complete with colonizing outposts in the classroom . . . "

I might add that Susan's own SMOKES (Four Way Books, 1998) is one of the strongest arguments I've seen for this freedom to raid and read.

In other bits of random business, David Bromige addresses

> George Bowering, Bowering Manor, 29 The Winch, Grimsby : Now you're to be Poet Laureate of Canada and the Orcas Islands

Now, when you talk about Orcas, you're talking about the trees some of my ancestors fell out of. The San Juan islands haven't been Brit since the resolution of the Pig War (an altercation worthy of the POETICS list) in 1872. My great-grandparents, John Loudon Gow and Emilie Harding, both of Orcas, would have looked unkindly on any suggestion that they curtsy before Lord Bow'ring.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

74. charles alexander
Re: two or three things
Wed 2 Dec 1998

---

but I have a photo of him he was making a sandwich and a few hairs a gray or was it grey poupon?

At 10:28 PM 12/2/98 -0400, you wrote:
>schuchat wrote:
>
>> 1. I noticed in some post or another a reference to Charles Bernstein >> as the "gray professor of poetry" at SUNY Buffalo. Say it ain't so! I >> do not recall Charles as gray in any sense.
>
>I'll vouch for that -- it's only the Chair he inhabits at Beau Fleuve that >is Gray. The man hisself and the work is anything but that.
>
>>
>>
>> 2. Non-non poetry reading:
>>
>> DARK -- Hoa Hyugen -- I strongly recommend this book.
>
>Am reading it just now -- excellent work, highly recommended.
>
>> 3. So what about translation. ... Anyone >> read any other current American poetry in other languages?
>
>Just read (aloud even, at Beaubourg, in gay Paree last month) translations >into French of Ken Irby and Robert Kelly. Wouldn't want to comment on their >quality as I did the translations myself. The same evening heard Jean Daive >read his Robert Creeley versions. French is a tough language for to put >amerikan over and into, it tends to flatten the lines. impose melody on >what was rhythm and dull the _arete_, the sharpness, especially in as tight >and chiselled a syntax as Creeley's. But Daive has been slaving over these >for many years and has come up with creditable versions.
>   Wish I were in Berlin where Jerome Rothenberg is reading tonight no >doubt with his German translator by his side. "Cockboy" and "that dada >strain" in Hölderlinisch would be quite interesting to hear.
>   Come to think of it, this very afternoon I was zu Gast at Skidmore >College in a French class to talk about my work, questions of translations, >and the poetry of Henri Michaux -- and wound up at one point reading one >of my poems as translated into French by Michel Maire. Whenever -- rarely

>-- I have done this -- always more or less forced -- it has made me feel >strange and uneasy -- an uncanny experience, completely dissimilar from >reading either my own work in the original English or that of another poet, >be it in English or in translation.
>
>
>
>--
>==========
>Pierre Joris
>[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>6 Madison Place
>Albany NY 12202
>tel: [redacted]
>fax: [redacted]
>==========
>Through the living the road of the dead
>— Ungaretti
>==========
>
>

↑ Index

75. Kathy Lou Schultz

Antidote to Rae Armantrout's bad hair day

Wed 2 Dec 1998

HAIR-DO DOLLS
with clothes and 31 different hair-dos!
By Queen Holden

"Queen Holden is the most famous paper doll artist in the U.S. Her paper doll booksales exceeded 28,000,000 copies and are highly collectible. She was first published in the 1920's."

This and other FABULOUS prizes can be yours at the Lipstick Eleven reading and party this Friday, December 4, 7:30 p.m., at 766 Valencia in San Francisco.

What has this to do with poetics? Oh, everything darlings, everything. Just ask Elizabeth Treadwell about her upcoming Outlet issue on "ornament."

Kathy "How Shall I Wear My Hair" Lou (proud purveyour of the Crass Lecherous Guy Reading Series)

↑ Index

76. William Slaughter favor (fwd)
Wed 2 Dec 1998

Dear Poetics List,

Some of you may have wondered at the unusual blissful non-clutter of your Poetics List mail lately without any Henry postings. I have been put on "review" status by the list manager for "overposting". I'm not sure if this is a first - is Kent here somewhere? - but I thought people might like to know.

I'm writing to say that I understand the list manager's exasperation & desire to have more diversity of messages posted. And that it's been an enlightening experience to be in the doghouse, on mandatory fast. Once many years ago, when I thought God had appeared to me & I needed to get closer to Him, I fasted for 13 days. I remember the lightness, the heightened awareness, and riding around on my bike observing the tinkling circus atmosphere that emanated from the rows of commercial food establishments & shops in the neighborhood.

The Poetics List now seems to emanate the same atmosphere for me. Once I was part of it. Now I am on mandatory fast. It feels good.

Poetry is neither a product of serious-minded scholarship nor an expression of stylish "fumiste" joie-de-vivre. Or perhaps it CAN be these things, but in my current hungry state I'm interested in something else.

Poetry is part of the seriousness of life in a deeper sense that scholarship or reasoning can bear. It's linked with those words & expressions that transform us. I am not thinking of the velvet metamorphoses of an Ovid or a Rilke or even a Shakespeare, but of those words - those few words - that make a path into and through the depths of experience. We inhabit a reality of heavens and hells which is moving inexorably toward either disaster or joy, and is climaxed for each of us & for those we love by a terrifying unknown - or at least a suspenseful unknown. We are possessed by love which overtakes us & transfigures everything. These are the things that a poet tries to become worthy to express.

The world is large & poetry is deep, sublime and profound. We should be careful we don't deaden the awareness of its presence with our tinkling cymbals.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

77. Kathy Lou Schultz
non-po reading
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Beneath The Underdog: His World As Composed by Mingus by Charles Mingus

Now, the middle can be a bit slow-going. But the beginning and the end have brilliant moments including "Why this is not as good as being treated privately by my own psychologist, or HELLVIEW OF BELLEVUE." Also of note are the sections in which great live jazz performances are enacted in the text via conversations between the players, giving rise to some interesting possibilities for examining the relationship of jazz rhythms to "vernacular" speech. Mandatory listening while reading this book: "The Black Saint and the Sinner Lady."

Kathy Lou Schultz (with special thanks to Louis Chude-Sokei)

↑ Index

78. Mark Salerno
THE LAST AVANT-GARDE
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Kevin:

The next issue of Arshile will feature a special project on Frank O'Hara, and for this we would like to run a review of the new Lehman book THE LAST AVANT-GARDE. Would you have an interest in writing such a review? I think you could do a wonderful job on it.

Let me know.

Mark

P.S. I'm finally getting around to your Spicer book. And enjoying it immensely! Thanks for writing it. (And thanks for the mention on your acknowledgements page).

↑ Index

79. Mark Salerno
THE LAST AVANT-GARDE
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Colleagues:

My apologies for the accidental front channel of an intended back channel.

Mark Salerno

↑ Index

80. dbkk
SPT: Lipstick 11 Reading
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

A bookparty for Lipstick Eleven

Friday, December 4, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
$5

Come celebrate the long-awaited publication of Lipstick Eleven, an annual multi-genre journal of experimental writing. Sexy, smart, socially-aware texts--along with a generous helping of irreverence. Get your dose at the publication party for Lipstick Eleven No. 1, edited by Jim Brashear, Catalina Cariaga, Roxane Marini, and Kathy Lou Schultz. All attendees will receive a free raffle ticket for o-o-h, a-h-h fabulous prizes.

Readers will include Mike Amnasan, Dodie Bellamy, Norma Cole, Robert Gluck, Kevin Killian, Camille Roy, Jocelyn Saidenberg, Wayne Smith, Brian Strang, Rodrigo Toscano, Robin Tremblay-McGaw, and Truong Tran.

↑ Index

81. George Bowering
Re: Reads On Buses
Thu 3 Dec 1998

> it is true that Ron and 26 or 46 of us read Ketjak (or Tjanting) aloud in a Bart station

Several years ago a bunch of the young Montreal poets were videotaped while reading in a Station of the Metro.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

82. George Bowering
Re: setting the record straight
Thu 3 Dec 1998

> And then there is the problem of > cross-dressers, like George Bowering. Or Rachel Loden.
> Or.....David.

I want to go on record as saying this: I dont WEAR the cross; i BEAR the cross.

Bromige should know this, because every time he gives me a kiss, I give him 30 pieces of silver. That's $7.50 US.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

83. George Bowering
Re: two or three things
Thu 3 Dec 1998

I love Bernstein. And I happen to know that he wears gray underwear.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

84. Michel Delville
Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
Thu 3 Dec 1998

>can anyone tell me where i can find stein's famous "a rose is a rose is a >rose is a rose"? i know it's several places, i just need one bibl.
>reference.

Stein coined the phrase "Rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" in "Sacred Emily." The phrase reappeared, preceded by the indefinite article, in a later prose sketch entitled "Objects Lie on the Table": "Do we suppose that all she knows is that a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" (Operas and Plays; 1932).

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3 Place Cockerill
4000 Liège
BELGIUM
fax: ++ 32 4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

85. Jim Andrews
Infoanimism
Thu 3 Dec 1998

A short essay entitled "Infoanimism" that grew out of Enigma n awaits you at http://speakeasy.org/~jandrews/vispo/EnigmanInfoanimism.html

An excerpt:

...conceive of a word that appears on the screen as being an object with its own properties and behaviors. W.H. Auden once said that he'd give less chance of success to a young writer who said he had something to say than he would to a writer who said he liked to watch the way words hang around together. DHTML allows writers to make documents in which words hang around together and interact with each other and with the reader and possibly with other documents and readers on the Web in ways that can be relevant to what Auden said but in radically different ways than he had in mind.

↑ Index

86. George Bowering
Re: Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
Thu 3 Dec 1998

> *Stein coined the phrase "Rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" in "Sacred Emily." The phrase reappeared, preceded by the indefinite article, in a later prose sketch entitled "Objects Lie on the Table": "Do we suppose that all she knows is that a rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" (Operas and Plays; 1932).*

She also used it as a circular device on her stationary for a while. The circular version also happens, if i remember aright, in The World is Round.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

87. miekal and quick history
Thu 3 Dec 1998

wondering if someone could give me a quick history lesson, when was the atom first split, Im guessing around 1937-38...

I miss henry

miekal

↑ Index

88. Ron Silliman
A bus ride is better than most art
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Actually,

it was a solo reading of the whole of Ketjak, in September 1978 (20 years ago!), at the original branch of the Bank of America, #1 Powell Street, directly in front of the cable car turnaround, and then, several years later (1982 or 83), a reading of the whole of Tjanting at the Church Street Muni Metro station with some 26 odd (some very odd) people assisting.

The latter would have been in a BART station if I could have gotten permission to do so, but I was able to wrangle it from Muni because I knew two members of the Public Utilities Commission, one from my work as a political organizer and the other being John Sanger, whom the sharp-eyed on this list will recognize as having been (1) the producer of the David Lynch film _The Elephant Man_; (2) Michael Palmer's upstairs neighbor during much of the 1970s; (3) the director of the very last TV episode of Twin Peaks.

I have written books on public transit, but never given a reading on same.

Ron

↑ Index

89. Ramez Qureshi

Fwd: [Fwd: "Hell no, we won't grade" (Salon)]

Thu 3 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_912682721_boundary

some interesting news
(just made my non-poetry reading list)

--part0_912682721_boundary

air-zd01.mail.aol.com (v51.29) with SMTP; Wed, 02 Dec 1998 07:26:16 -0500 by rly-zd01.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id HAA29654 for <[redacted]>;
Wed, 2 Dec 1998 07:26:15 -0500 (EST)
(LSMTP for Digital Unix v1.1b) with SMTP id
<[redacted]>; Wed, 2 Dec 1998 7:25:23 -0500
1.8a) with NJE id 5772 for [redacted]; Wed, 2
Dec 1998 07:26:07 +0000 1796; Wed, 02 Dec 98 07:24:10 ECT V2R2)
with TCP; Wed, 02 Dec 98 07:24:08 ECT blue.spectra.net (8.9.0/8.9.0) with ESMTP id HAA31539 for <[redacted]>; Wed, 2 Dec 1998 07:26:10 -0500
Newsgroups: bit.listserv.enggrad
Date: Wed, 2 Dec 1998 07:22:30 -0500
From: "J. Elizabeth Clark" <[redacted]>
Subject: [Fwd: "Hell no, we won't grade" (Salon)]
To: Ramex Qureshi <[redacted]>

Thought you all might be interested in this...
Liz

[128.226.10.60])
by blue.spectra.net (8.9.0/8.9.0) with ESMTP id PAA16637 for <[redacted]>; Tue, 1 Dec 1998 15:16:41 -0500 [128.226.108.246]) by mail.binghamton.edu (8.8.7/8.6.12) with SMTP id PAA24933;
Tue, 1 Dec 1998 15:11:05 -0500 (EST)

Date: Tue, 01 Dec 1998 10:05:45 -0500
To: [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted]
From: Wayne Ross <[redacted]> (by way of Lennard Davis
<[redacted]>)
Subject: "Hell no, we won't grade" (Salon)

>>HELL NO! WE WON'T GRADE!
>>
>> [SALON , Nov. 30] -- this is an on-line magazine.
>>
>> Will the upcoming strike by University of California graduate >>teaching assistants raise them from their serflike status -- or spell >>their eventual doom?
>>
>> BY SEAN McMEEKIN
This week, graduate students employed as >>teaching assistants in the massive University of California system >>plan to kick off the holiday season by going on strike. California's >>graduate TAs have clashed with university administrators frequently in >>the past decade over such matters as health insurance benefits and >>tuition fee remissions, but this will be the first time they have >>walked out simultaneously on all eight U.C. campuses. Never before >>have the graduate student teachers of U.C. been so well organized, or >>so unanimously focused on one goal: collective bargaining rights.
>>Union recognition of TAs is the bjte noire of the U.C. Regents, the >>university's conservative governing board, and of the individual >>chancellors who carry out their policies. So far, the Regents have >>stubbornly resisted the drive for TA recognition in the courts, and >>university administrators have survived brief, largely uncoordinated >>strikes for union recognition staged at individual U.C. campuses each >>of the last three years.
>>
>> But the December action promises to be different. Rather than >>try, somewhat quixotically, to shut down enormous public research >>universities, TA strikers will deploy a "porous" picket line and even >>encourage their undergraduate students to continue attending classes.

>>Having learned from the notorious public relations failure of a >>semester-end strike at Yale three years ago -- when TAs graded >>assignments but refused to release their grades, thus incurring the >>wrath of undergraduate students and their parents -- California's >>striking TAs will simply withdraw their labor for the month of >>December, in effect daring their universities to hire scabs to grade >>finals. The December walkout, which is organized and underwritten by >>the United Auto Workers (which has branched out deeply into the >>clerical and educational fields), may turn out to be, in the words of >>Christian Sweeney, a leading TA organizer at UC-Berkeley, "the largest >>graduate student labor action ever."
>>
>> Although it has carried a lower media profile than the curriculum >>wars and the ongoing struggle over affirmative action, the >>ever-tightening academic labor crunch is unquestionably the central >>issue facing higher education in America. The underemployed Ph.D. has >>become a clichi in a job market that has seen the number of annual >>tenure-track job openings decline for most of this decade, even as >>undergraduate enrollments boom and class sizes inexorably rise. As >>universities have struggled to scale back budget outlays in response >>to decreasing public investment in higher education, they have >>increasingly filled classrooms with cheap, temporary labor. Large >>state schools such as the University of California have primarily done >>this by using a surplus pool of graduate students, whose numbers have >>exploded in the 1990s despite diminishing prospects in the academic >>job market. Smaller universities and community colleges, lacking >>extensive graduate programs, have largely relied on non-tenure-track
>>"adjunct" professors, who now make up well over 40 percent of the >>academic labor force nationally, and are expected to outnumber >>full-time tenured and tenure-track faculty by 2001.
>>
>> The lot of the adjuncts is not a happy one. Spin magazine >>recently published an exposi by ex-doctoral student Eric Weisband on >>"Sucker Ph.D.s," who were gulled by a now infamous 1989 Mellon >>Foundation report into believing "that an expected wave of faculty >>retirements beginning in the mid-'90s would threaten the health of >>higher education unless more college students could be persuaded to >>apply for doctoral degrees." Professors have, as expected, retired in >>great numbers in the 1990s, but their tenured positions have been >>retired along with them. Because they constitute an amorphous, >>transient and migratory work force, adjuncts have no unions and are >>consequently even more poorly compensated, on an hourly basis, than >>most of the unionized clerical and custodial employees of the schools >>where they work. Even graduate TAs, such as the U.C. strikers, make a >>better wage than adjuncts -- although adjuncts have Ph.D.s and >>graduate students do not. Alarmed that once-full-time faculty >>positions have been downsized into cheaper, part-time teaching >>junkets, the Higher Education Department of the American Federation of >>Teachers has issued a special report on "The Vanishing Professor."

>>
>> A labor conference held at the Graduate Center of the City >>University of New York in April 1998 has raised limited hopes that >>adjuncts in the nation's largest urban college system might win >>recognition through CUNY's faculty union, the Professional Staff >>Congress. But adjuncts are still outnumbered 9-1 by full-timers on the >>Staff Congress -- although they make up nearly 60 percent of the CUNY >>faculty. The prospect of collective bargaining rights for adjunct >>professors remains, for most, a laughable pipe dream.
>>
>> With adjuncts largely powerless, the only effective resistance >>offered to the forces transforming the academic labor market has come >>from graduate students at large state research universities, where >>their numbers have reached critical mass. The universities of Oregon, >>Wisconsin and Michigan, long heavily dependent on graduate teaching >>assistants, have already been forced to recognize TA unions. Trends in >>the teaching demographics of the University of California seem to >>point in a similar direction. After a decade-long boom in doctoral >>program enrollments, graduate students now make up nearly 60 percent >>of U.C.'s instructional staff; full-time tenured or tenure-track >>professors account for 20 percent; the remaining fifth are adjuncts.
>>And these TAs do not merely lead discussion sections of large lecture >>classes. Graduate students teach first-year foreign language classes, >>freshman English seminars and even many advanced colloquia devoted to >>undergraduate honors research. In light of these facts, it is hard to >>argue with the motto of U.C.'s TA unions: "The University Works >>Because We Do." By refusing to work this December, TAs are putting >>their slogan to the test: Will the university work without them?
>>
>> After being flooded with e-mails from undergraduates concerned >>that their university will, indeed, not "work" without the services of >>its graduate TAs, UC-Berkeley Chancellor Robert Berdahl called a >>special meeting with TAs from Berkeley's top-ranked history department >>to discuss the upcoming strike. Himself a history Ph.D., Berdahl hoped >>to defuse pre-strike tensions by exchanging views with graduate >>students he regarded as future colleagues, in their own department, in >>a setting geared toward the "collegiality" of academic discourse.

>>
>> Berdahl, a Midwesterner of imposing size but extremely congenial >>temperament, is only in his second year at Berkeley, and is still >>anxious to make a good impression on students who feel they barely >>known him. His gesture of solidarity with history doctoral students >>was not, however, received cordially. E-mails flew among history grads >>after his Oct. 28 invitation, accusing Berdahl of "scare-tactics and >>intimidation" among other things. But Sweeney, a second-year American >>history grad and TA union leader, convinced his colleagues that >>meeting with the chancellor of U.C.'s "flagship campus" offered an >>"opportunity to communicate why we want a union with collective >>bargaining rights and what we're willing to do to achieve that goal."
>>Two brainstorming sessions followed, in which the graduate students >>worked out a strategy of rhetorical attack.
>>
>> When Berdahl arrived in the conference room of the history >>department on Nov. 12, the stage was set for an ambush. Although more >>than half of Berkeley's current history TAs have declined, for one >>reason or another, to walk out in December, not a single TA spoke out >>against the strike in front of Berdahl. Galvanized by Sweeney's >>strategic bull sessions, graduate students attending the meeting spoke >>as one, letting forth an eloquent cascade of grievances against >>Berkeley's academic labor practices. Unlike unionized employees of the >>University of California, TAs do not receive regular cost-of-living >>increases in their wages; they bore the brunt of state budget cuts on >>higher education enacted under Gov. Pete Wilson.
>>
>> Berkeley's graduate students, Monica Rico pointed out, won >>limited health coverage and tuition-fee remissions in previous strike >>actions, but these gains were granted by the university "on an ad-hoc >>basis," and could easily be revoked in the absence of permanent, >>union-negotiated contracts. Without collective bargaining recognition >>for TAs, the university could, in Rico's view, continue to take >>advantage of graduate students with impunity. After all, she >>complained, as a TA, her "$13,000-a-year voice [doesn't] have much >>chance of being heard." Only a union would give Rico and other TAs a >>fair chance for "redress of grievances." Graduate students with >>children, Vera Candiani explained to the chancellor, desperately >>needed a certain level of "predictability": They must be able to plan >>for future expenses without worrying about a possible revocation of >>health benefits or a reinstitution of fees. It was in order to lock in >>guaranteed compensation levels, Candiani declared, that "we have >>chosen a union to represent us, [and] that is our right."

>>
>> Against a chorus of hostile voices committed to TA unionization, >>Chancellor Berdahl struggled to uphold an idealistic view of the >>university as a haven of "collegial" discourse where the adversarial >>model of the shop floor had no place. Citing his prior experience as a >>member of the American Federation of Teachers union, and as a >>negotiator with TA unions at the University of Oregon, where he had >>been associate dean of undergraduate education, Berdahl argued that >>"collective bargaining isn't a dialogue." Because each group involved >>employs agents, "professional negotiators ... whose purpose is to win >>a point," the upshot of unionization was, in Berdahl's estimation, "to >>utterly destroy hope ... of collective conversations on either side of >>the table." Because of their devotion to "collegiality" and >>constructive "dialogue," universities were in the chancellor's view
>>"not factories ... not like any other industry." And yet, when pressed >>by one graduate student to explain the ongoing "outsourcing" of >>academic labor in the 1990s -- the employment of adjuncts -- Berdahl >>tacitly admitted that in this instance, the factory model may have >>invaded the academy. This did not mean, however, that unionization was >>the answer.
>>
>> "Unions," Berdahl reminded the history TAs ominously, "have not >>prevented [corporate] downsizing." Nor would recognition of TAs' right >>to bargain collectively, he warned, necessarily "lead to different >>decisions by the university" on employment practices than would >>otherwise be made. Even while declaring allegiance to the lofty ideals >>of academia, Berdahl hinted, none too subtly, that he was willing to >>bow to the bottom line if necessary.
>>
>> The hidden subtext of Berdahl's warning was this: Graduate >>students are expendable. At an elite university like Berkeley >>especially, TAs are an expensive commodity. Permanent faculty members >>may love to have graduate students around who share a passion for >>scholarship, who provide cheap research assistance and who are, almost >>by definition, eager to please professor-mentors who act as >>all-powerful gatekeepers to academic success.
>>

>> But from the standpoint of university administration, graduate >>students are a luxury. They are not merely paid more than adjuncts >>when they teach; they also drain university resources with their >>fellowships, research and travel grants, and by tying up significant >>quantities of professors' own teaching time and office hours. Compared >>to the undergraduates whose tuition underwrites their paychecks, >>graduate students are indeed a privileged lot. Even the opportunity >>enjoyed by graduate students to teach undergrads, in many cases with >>little or no prior experience -- and of course, without the Ph.D.
>>degree that ostensibly qualifies them for such teaching -- could >>arguably be considered a privilege, a valuable apprenticeship. TAs >>receive a salary, which currently includes health coverage, for what >>is, in effect, on-the-job training. Not everyone outside the academy >>is so lucky.
>>
>> Of course, the chance afforded graduate students to teach is not >>merely a privilege, but also a serious responsibility. And many TAs, >>unwilling to abdicate their duties to their students at a critical >>time of year, have opted out of the December strike, regardless of >>their personal views on unionization. Graduate students were, after >>all, once undergraduates themselves, and most of them do not take >>lightly the prospect of walking out on their students.
>>
>> Lisa Swartout, the head TA of Berkeley's core European history >>survey course this fall, was herself an undergraduate at Berkeley, and >>knows how crucial a role graduate TAs play in large lecture courses.
>>As an undergrad, Swartout recalls, "I really had to fight for any >>attention that I got"; as a graduate TA, she now feels a reciprocal >>obligation to her undergraduate students, recognizing that she >>represents "one of their lifelines to the university." To cut off this >>lifeline is not an easy decision to make, and even many dues-paying TA >>union members are hesitating before making it.
>>
>> When the University of California reinforces the ranks of these >>non-striking TAs with recruits from the vast statewide pool of >>underemployed Ph.D.s -- all potential scabs, on the cheap -- the >>expendability of graduate teaching assistants may be rudely exposed.
>>If graduate students continue the national trend of striking for union >>recognition, Chancellor Berdahl admonished Berkeley's history TAs in a >>barely veiled threat, "universities will shift resources towards >>[adjuncts]." After all, doing so would be both "cheaper" and "easier" >>than dealing with militant union representatives. What's more, Berdahl >>concluded, the inevitable result of more adjunct hiring would be a >>"shrinking of graduate programs." By demanding to be treated as union >>labor, strikers may indeed win the right to be treated as union labor, >>and see most of their jobs taken over by non-union adjuncts -- who >>will actually be more qualified and more experienced than the >>unionized employees they are replacing. Those few TAs still hired each >>semester may enjoy "predictability," with full knowledge of their >>rights and benefits; but the mushrooming ranks of graduate students >>turned down for teaching positions would enjoy no benefits, no >>compensation, at all. The strikers may, in short, be punished by their >>success.

>>
>> By diverting attention away from the desperate plight of the >>adjuncts, graduate student strikers may also have unwittingly played >>right into the hands of the cost-cutting university administrators who >>are their true adversaries. In California, the TA strikes have >>mobilized the university's legal department in a concerted, and very >>expensive, effort to block unionization. After their battles with >>striking graduate students, U.C. administrators are not likely to >>suffer kindly any future unionization drives by adjuncts; and without >>the eventual organization of adjuncts, it is hard to imagine that the >>tenured academic labor squeeze -- the vanishing professor problem -- >>will disappear. The frustrating experience with TA unions may instead >>teach universities that exploiting adjuncts is the ideal way to toe >>the bottom line and accelerate the process of academic corporatization >>already under way. Graduate students are, ideally, future professors >>in the making, but in practice most of them will end up, sooner or >>later, as adjuncts. Many of these unlucky adjuncts may come to regret >>the way they abused the privileges they once enjoyed as graduate >>students, when they bit the hand that was still feeding them >>generously even while those less fortunate fought desperately for any >>scraps thrown their way. SALON | Nov. 30, 1998
>>
>> Sean McMeekin is a Ph.D. candidate in history at UC-Berkeley. He >>is not currently teaching and does not belong to the union.

E. Wayne Ross
SUNY Binghamton

"Ain't it sad when your only friend is the blues
You can't keep your love afloat on a sea of fools."
-Rod & Honey Piazza

--part0_912682721_boundary--

↑ Index

90. Gabriel Gudding
I Will Irony No More Forever
Thu 3 Dec 1998

On Wed, 2 Dec 1998, Eliza McGrand wrote:

> gaga, well, we'll draw a vail over poor gaga except to say that he and > kent, well, it wasn't pretty, that's all, it just wasn't pretty and > neither of them is female, or a poster, no matter what they might

A). Because I am dumb and cannot defend myself, I try to ignore those who slight me. When I am at my best, and my being is working like a glinty and powerful bike, I do not even notice it when people slight me, for I am as the spiff pedals pumping over the leaves.

B). And yes in deference to Henry Gould's recently smuggled and very wise words about poetry and despite them furthermore I would like to say the following to Elliza McGrand, and then get on to one or two points regarding this holy order that is our Poetry:

Dear Impostor:

I like it best when you are mute.

It is fundamentally important you understand at least 3 (three) of the 5 (five) reasons I have attested in court to your derangment:

The First: You remind me of a dog hurled over a roof: yapping to no effect.

The Second: Yes I WAS the disturbed looking individual over there shouldering a rifle with one arm and a shovel with the other. My intention? To dig myself to hell where I planned to find and threaten the mud-mouthed beast who wrote "as for gaga let us put a veil over him."

For Third: Though I have been accused of infliction with Halitosis of The Keyboard, it is my fundamental impression, poetry can survive even the holy art of insult hence I insult you.

May you bang into the roost of an eagle.

An hungry eagle. An hungry angry people-hater of an eagle who cannot be suade by the cheap talk of which you are so overfond dear manic impostor.

yrs, gaga

Henry Gould:

On Wed, 2 Dec 1998, Henry Gould wrote:
> The world is large & poetry is deep, sublime and profound. We should > be careful we don't deaden the awareness of its presence with our > tinkling cymbals.

"Mercy on us, that God should give his favourite children, men, mouths to speak with, discourse rationally, to promise smoothly, to flatter agreeably, to encourage warmly, to counsel wisely: to sing with, to drink with, and to kiss with: and that they should turn them into mouths of adders, bears, wolves, hyenas, and whistle like tempests, and emit breath through them like distillations of aspic poison, to asperse and villify...."

Mercy on us, indeed. We can give words, I think, Henry, but Mercy comes from elsewhere, maybe from the big G (not me), maybe from Poetry, who knows: but thank you (and this from a profaning person) for reminding us. gg

↑ Index

91. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Stein's Rose w or w/o indefinite article
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Michel Delville <[redacted]> writes:

> Stein coined the phrase "Rose is a rose is a rose is a rose" in "Sacred Emily."

It's been a lot of years now, but as I recall I read somewhere (sorry, can't remember the source) there was speculation that the first 'Rose' in this phrase in fact was a person's name. If this is true it gives the phrase an entirely different shading.

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

92. J Kuszai
My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Henry's recent use of another person's account to send messages to to the list will only aggravate an already difficult situation, I assure you. And for what it is worth, I have long advocated that this list become a MODERATED list, even while mostly maintaining an atmosphere of an open forum (not free). Charles has resisted this, though I think he is being principled, stubborn. I realize that this is an unpopular position, and I am used to taking unpopular positions.

Most of the people who were on this list when it began are now long gone. Some of them have started lists deriving their interests from the original intention of this one, while maintaining a limited scope and a limited "membership." For me, this list has always been an extension of the poetry and poetics community constituted around certain ideolologies and circumstances, whether poetix communities, graduate school programs, etc. It isn't about VIRTUAL anything--that is a bunch of cosmic cyber hype. The emphases reflected here, it seems to me, are related to these interests as expressed in the Welcome Message, which is reiterated monthly. Charles has never apologized for the intended focus of this list, nor should he. There are plenty of other lists, with differnt interests, foci, and rules of conduct. This list has to be run by someone, and only recently has the notion of pulling the plug on this forum become something resembling a real possiblity. Most of the people that I know who have left the list usually indicate that the low-quality of the conversation, the incessant chat-like behavior, etc., as the major reasons for their departure. Many of them have mentioned Henry (and others) as reasons for their departure. For what it's worth, if this list were moderated (and I was the moderator), most of what Henry has written would be fine with me. Always at issue (at least as far as I can tell) has been the sheer number of posts, the insistence that every post must be replied to, even if with a one-liner. (which isn't to say anything about the nastiness--even my post about my trip to LA was met publicly with scorn and derision--and there many subtle things in there that I was trying to indicate were missed completely, cast off as being ass-kissing &whatnot. Certainly not the kind of response that has me wanting to participate. In any event, it doesn't really matter what I think)

But on that note, I think it is time to end this list as it is presently known. Charles probably does not agree with me, and he has he reasons, I am sure. Perhaps one of the disaffected here will rise to run their own listserv program, listbot (like Kinsella's succssful PoetryEtc list). And it isn't that I wish to become the moderator. I am tired of being demonized for doing my job and I think that the next poetics list manager will want to take a more proactive role. There is no reason that this list has to mimic the worst aspects of l.f. capitalism or the fantasy of free speech.

I think this list has become too large to hear everyone.
Too few people dominate an increasingly paranoid conversation.

UNSUB TODAY!

↑ Index

93. miekal and Re: I'll cc' Joel's 2 cents, raise him 5
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

daniel bouchard wrote:

I know of a Listserv organized as an alternative this one. It's closed (or restricted) to prevent it from turning into this one. It's riddled with its own problems as a result.

?which one might that be?

↑ Index

94. Roger Day
Re: quick history
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Theres' a timeline of events at <URL:
http://www.nmsi.ac.uk/on-line/electron/section3/>

Atoms were first smashed in 1932, Cockcroft and Watson, Cavendish Laboratory.

"Splitting the atom" - detecting subatomic particles - was in 1911, Rutherford

At 03/12/98 09:09:23, miekal and <[redacted]> wrote:
wondering if someone could give me a quick history lesson, when was the atom first split, Im guessing around 1937-38...
#
#
I miss henry
#
#
#
miekal
#

Roger

↑ Index

95. Poetry Project
Re: reading/2 or 3 things
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Been reading Richard Holmes bio Shelley The Pursuit, which, along with his bio of Coleridge's early life, is some of the best biography I've ever dragged my eyes across. I've been hearing that the second part of Holmes' Coleridge bio is out or out in England or about to come out & wonder if anyone can verify this.

I'd third or fourth the recommendation of Hoa Nguyen's Dark, & say as well that eyes can be kept out for another collection of Nguyen's, Hood, which ought to be out some time in 1999 from Buck Downs' Books.

Last week staying in my cousin's room for a couple nights I read four or five Calvin & Hobbes books & remembered that that's where I got my poetics from, along with Dickinson & the New York Post. Plus a creepy Children's Bible to rid myself of some plague pictures that have haunted me worse than the albino roach families on St. Mark's Place; & flipped through Hakeem Olajuwon's auto-biography which gave me a feeling inside.

One other thing, a book by Sparrow called Republican Like Me, a diary/account/poetry boke of Sparrow's 1996 campaign against Dole for the repub. presidential nomination, is one of the funniest things I've read all year. It's from Soft Skull Press.

Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

96. David Carl stein pedantics
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

yes but it's "rose is a rose is a rose" no first 'a'

↑ Index

97. Mairead Byrne
Re: quick history
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Free Henry Gould

↑ Index

98. David Kellogg
Re: stein pedantics
Thu 3 Dec 1998

On Thu, 3 Dec 1998, David Carl wrote:
>
> yes but it's "rose is a rose is a rose" no first 'a'

Somewhere in Finnegans Wake, I recall reading

    eros is eros is eros

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

poetics list... i feel as if i have a very primitive awful mail handler, but maybe i'm better off than many? except most people here seem to have eudora. in my program messages come with sender and header. if header is on topic i'm not interested in, i delete. ditto, if sender annoys me. poetics list... every day, there is at least one new idea. several message that amuse. suggestions to read things that i tuck away and try and follow up on. new places to send work.

poetics list... i get in a stupid argument with a neighbor who thinks monica lewinsky was a whore and should be arrested and its her fault clinton fooled around anyway, or another real life example, god sent AIDS to kill gay people because they are evil. and i get home, or terminal at work, plug into poetics, and read about... use of spaces in poem. quote from zukofsky. new magazine from toledo ohio. an argument on whether a writer writes for audience, and should she/he. a report from a conference on laura riding.

yes, there is dreck, but there is also lots of gold. now joel, you say people complain and de-sub. that is part of net space, lists, in general. i'm on an outing club list, and every year, freshman join the list, then bumble around and flood list with requests to unsubscribe. people join lists thinking they are going to be one thing and they turn out to be another. you seem to be forgetting something -- the list has 700 subscribers. 700 people who joined and stayed on. that is pretty unbelievable. to complain on the one hand that people are quitting, while complaining that list is too big?... see a contradiction?

tone. i liked your report from la. earmarked it and meant to write you a note welcoming you back. lost it in my savage email program. one of my profs once said, about class reviews, you can get 26 glowing ones, but what you'll remember and brood about is the one that panned you. i recall people enjoying report from la. there were surely lots of people like me who meant to write and didn't, but would have written warm and happy-to-hear-from-you notes. tone in general. yes, poetics in general can be bitchy, snipping, mean-spirited. even, at times, downright ugly. welcom to cyberspace. i've never yet seen a list without flames, and poetics has had fewer than any other i've been on or read from.

henry. this whole thing puzzles me. there were posts in the last round that sucked -- mean, careless, sweeping and silly. but henry? he has consistently fought to bring up "poetics" questions, has asked those wild interesting abstract questions, included a scintillating corruscory of wordplay, wit, erudition. and calm. even his irritated posts are informed. so, like you, i would keep his posts. frequency? there are days he is about the only one posting.

frequency. easier solution -- programmers out there, i know this can be done in pascal. we can ask that it be done by conscience. suppose we set number, say, 3 posts per day max. if you want to post more than 3, you wait till end of day and if total posts < 50, you post your >3 post(s).

or could be set into programming -- each sub gets n=3 posts accepted, >3 posts get sent into queue. if total number (N) of posts N =< 35, say, then queue released.

moderator: should utterly foolish flame posts be deleted? on the one hand, we don't have to read, or get het up about them. on the other hand, maybe foolish flame poster can learn from seeing response to post? on other hand, are we here to teach. on other, why not screen the worst? final thought: comparatively speaking, very few flames overall, and large number of happy subscribers (or reasonably so, remember, you can vote with your feet). why fix what ain't broke. as a community, i think people know how to punish those perceived as out of line. and if you are bored with a line of inquiry, indicate same backchannel and delete front channel. easy, n'est ce pas?

final: with every post, i see people in sturdy tweed suits bearing down upon me ready to slap me silent with their mortarboards. that is my problem. i can imagine people such as would (and doubtless do) loath everything i say -- i've had roomates like that. does that mean i cease to speak? i also get backchannel and frontchannel posts thanking me for posts about every time i post. have to figure it evens out. in my paranoia, i can easily now imagine i am one of the ones "frequently complained about." does that mean i hoard up each congratulatory post, canvass friends to post "Great Post" posts, so that i have ammunition against the complainers? wouldn't that generate an awful lot of boring trash? why not just stopcomplaining to list moderators and take matters into our own individual, honest, taking responsibility, saying to face anything we have to say and not sneaking around behind people, etc. selves and write anyone we think is posting inappropriately, or in mean way, etc. ourselves BACKCHANNEL. and leave poor charles/joel/list/etc. out of it? people getting enough complaints probably would, i would think, do something about it themselves.

i hope none of the 700 (including you, joel, whose warm, funny, explorative posts i have always enjoyed) unsub, and that lots of the silent 700 pipe up. if you hate me, my posts, the horse i rode in on, write me and leave charles/joel/etc. alone. maybe we can figure out something together. if you like me, my posts, my horse, write me if you feel like it. sez i.

e

↑ Index

101. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Joel's judicious post raises some disturbing issues. Is it really apocalypse time for the venerable List? I for one would miss it terribly. And yet, my participation in the conversation has gone - over the course of three years - from timidly lurking to avidly active to overwhelmed by it all. Has the list become a victim of its own success? Or am I just busier than I used to be and suffering from List fatigue? I'm not sure I agree with Joel that the quality of the talk has waned all that significantly. Sure, there's a lot of happy gabbing that goes on - some of it rather amusing, some of it not - but I still find much here that is absorbing, instructive or provocative. If I had the time, I'd give a rundown of my own personal highlights from the past 3 months or so. One that does come to mind was the animated dialogue around issues of teaching "racist" texts in the classroom that Aldon Nielsen and others vigorously pursued. Another would be the issue of the legacy of Language Poetry that was taken up by Mark DuCharme, Mike Magee and many others. Of course the very form of this List militates against consensus - rightly so, I think, however frustrating that may be - and unfortunately, it also amplifies silliness into plain nastiness.

But beyond the intrigue of debating various poetics issues, the List has great value for me in two of the things Charles designed it for: the announcements of readings and events; and the announcement of new publications. This may strike many as banal, but by performing this quotidian service the List provides a sense of continuum or environment where information about "fellow travelers" and their activities is no longer fated to wither away on some local vine, but enjoys a kind of second bloom through its dissemination here. The number (and quality) of poetic and critical texts I've learned of here is simply staggering and I'm very grateful for the opportunity they've given me to delve more deeply into poetics. Where else can one find about these things?

Rather than impeach the List, ought we not to censure and move on? Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

102. daniel bouchard
I'll cc' Joel's 2 cents, raise him 5
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Joel,

I agree with a lot of what you said. Personally, I think this List has become an enormous drag: the goading and near-flames only somewhat less annoying than the nice-nice posts that could better be back-channeled and other things that are probably intended to be witty comments that don't quite cut it on e-mail.

But I stay for two reasons: 1) vulnerability to the definition of the List made in last year's ILS Dictionary: "inane chatter; check constantly," and 2) inane as it is, it is read at work where my e-mail access is, and breaks up the day.

And then posts announcing new publications, readings, reading reports, trip reports, and reading lists make it worthwhile.

I have little sympathy for the people too delicate to participate. This list is anarchy; everyone can type and send a message from a level ground. Everyone can read each post in turn. No post is louder than another or arrives with greater authority than another. Maybe this list is boring as a result, but there is little or no flaming and that has been due either to peer pressure or mutual respect, whichever you prefer. You can delete posts wholesale; I do this regularly.

But I really meant to say something in defense of Henry Gould. His posts may outnumber anyone else's but I have never read them as being malicious or mean-spirited. There are many other over-chatty people too. Why not censor (or moderate) them too? Why not limit posts to one per-person each day? That ought to make one think before one writes.

Also, anyone who follows up a mistakenly-sent post to this List with an apology for doing so should be immediately reprimanded (via back-channel).

I know of a Listserv organized as an alternative this one. It's closed (or restricted) to prevent it from turning into this one. It's riddled with its own problems as a result.

having no answers to anything,

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

103. Jordan Davis
numerology
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Not to interrupt the end of the world, but where'd anybody get this "700" club idea of the list? Looking at the subscriber list, I see 668 names, --

with RON SILLIMAN SUBSCRIBED THREE TIMES!!!

I mean you know what this means don't you????????

J

↑ Index

104. Sylvester Pollet
Mina Loy/Woman & Poet
Thu 3 Dec 1998

At long last, the National Poetry Foundation title _Mina Loy, Woman and Poet_, ed. Maeera Shreiber & Keith Tuma, has arrived. 640 pages, $24.95 paper, $49.95 cloth. Full description on NPF website, http://www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/

SPECIAL POETICS LIST OFFER!!! PAPER $20., CLOTH $40., NO SHIPPING CHARGE (USA).

Contributors include Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Peter Quartermain, Marjorie Perloff, Roger Conover, Carolyn Burke, Ellen Keck Stauder, Kathleen Fraser, Barbara Guest, Anne Waldman, both editors, and quite a few others. There's a Mina Loy Interview by Paul Blackburn & Robert Vas Dias, and an annotated bibliography by Marisa Januzzi. Photographs, etc. etc.

Order by e-mail to Gail Sapiel <[redacted]> Ask her about postage for non-USA. We can ship and bill, or take a card #, or you can send a check.

National Poetry Foundation Room 302
5752 Neville Hall
University of Maine
Orono Maine 04469-5752

(p.s. Without the Poetics List, where would I post this? Let's all calm down here. Pax, Sylvester)

↑ Index

105. daniel bouchard
666
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

700 Club debunked.

668- (minus) 3 Ron Sillimans (plus one RS) = the Buffalo List, or Satan.

It means the Poetics list is The Beast, and Henry is the whore of Babylon.

ha. ha.

(This is the kind of stupid e-mail that I should have back-channeled to Jordan, but send here to prove a point. It is called fluff.

Or fluff-E.

Now do as I say, not as I do-- no more fluff-E.

Jordan wrote:

> Not to interrupt the end of the world, but where'd anybody get this "700" club idea of the list? Looking at the subscriber list, I see 668 names, --
>
> with RON SILLIMAN SUBSCRIBED THREE TIMES!!!
>
> I mean you know what this means don't you????????

> J
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

106. William Marsh
Re: Infoanimism
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Jim

you're interesting article speaks to issues that make for a tough poetics, particularly in the way your explanations and definitions re DHTML suggest distinct but somehow integrated layers of text / i've chatted with 'coder' friends about the idea of 'hidden languages' -- akin i think to your 'neath text' -- and like to think sometimes that poetry writes a hidden text, ie, 'neath' the popular languages of commerce and company xmas parties / i'm troubled i guess by the way items start to stack up though when we venture into this layering mode -- one passage in your essay in particular i kept coming back to:

"When we look at documents on the Web, we see text and graphics and controls and so forth. But upon understanding the basics of DHTML, we begin to see the 'neath text, what's unseen but present in the source code and begin to reconceptualize the document as a collection of objects with properties that can be changed in real-time. The objects can also respond to changes in the other objects or initiate changes in the other objects. And changes can be caused either by the underlying logic of the neath text or be caused by the reader's responses to the visible manifestation of the document."

"understanding the basics of DHTML" i guess is similar to knowing the sacred code / or for me at least the quasi-mysticism of the 'neath' text or the "unseen but present" in the source code brings up a lot of questions about the user-devotee's relation to this code, degrees of understanding, etc. / i read the above as a statement regarding in fact your reconceptualization of the document after experimenting with Dhtml, rather than what is necessarily a reader-viewer's response -- it then dovetails into a description i think of general DHTML functions, ie, what can be done with it in composing a document, and this i think is a different issue altogether -- a craft thing comparable to discussing pigment in relation to color, or instrumental timbre in relation to orchestral sound

when i look at "enigma n" (http://speakeasy.org/~jandrews/vispo/enigmanie.htm) i see an animated anagram (a good one), and the chaotic cycling of the letters puts some thoughts in motion regarding letters-in-relation, meaning, and 'meaning' as a composite of letters "signifying nothing" -- a fun puzzle indeed / i'm intrigued by this because it enters into a long tradition of word art centering on the anagram (reading lately the Ren. philosopher Bruno who saw in the arrangement of letters the "potential elements of new worlds") / while i know your discussion of document 'objects' above is from a coder-writer's perspective, here and elsewhere in your essay the determinism of the language bothers me a bit / later you write that viewing a doc in DHTML "allows us to conceive of a word that appears on the screen as being an object with its own properties and behaviors." -- i don't think DHTML allows this so much as it and other languages and applications provide interesting tools for formalizing practices long in development and which hardly "begin" with DHTML / i grant there are differences, but i'd rather call them differences of degree not kind and spend time clarifying those degrees languages neath languages concealing languages is an interesting idea but in definite need of some crisper articulations of exactly what gets revealed and concealed and who and by what mechanisms the concealed gets revealed / otherwise i'd like to know more about how DHtml creates a "document as a collection of objects with properties that can be changed in real-time."

a lot of loose questions and concerns hidden right here / thanks for pointing to your article all best,

bill

- - - -

grandeur as well as allowing me the pleasure of rubbing my pixels next to the high-profile individuals who frequent here. The publications and urls for web-pages and magazines have been a blessing... Trying to use Yahoo or other search engines just doesn't cut it. So, I'd rather spend my hours wading through the bickering and bitchiness of the poets here to find even one impressive site than to wallow in impersonal boolean searches. It seems the personalities here are strong, and egoes even stronger, but thank god for the smuggled-in Henry Gould email. His comment about "Poetry is part of the seriousness of life" makes me glad. I miss him and wish he were back. Henry said it so well in that message: "We are possessed by love which overtakes us & transfigures everything. These are the things that a poet tries to become worthy to express." And it seems to me this is what Henry has been attempting (for the most part) with most of his messages. A humorous nudge here, a dialectic tug there, back toward the direction/discussion of poetry.

--bob

↑ Index

109. Aldon Nielsen
Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

as an early adopter who has come and gone from the list at varied times I'd just like to say that I still find it immensely valuable -- As long as I have a delete button, I have no real concern about some of our sillier moments -- when people get too insulting I just absent myself for a few days -- But I can attest to the fact that this list has made my life and my work go better -- I remember the day some years ago when I posted a question about a name that appears in Bob Kaufman's work -- Ron Silliman shot back with an answer for me almost immediately -- It would have taken me weeks to track down the information on my own --

and I have enjoyed running into people from the list at different meetings and readings around the country --

Unsub if you must this old, gray list

but, If Charles is taking suggestions, I'm in favor of his current, minimal moderation --

↑ Index

110. Hank Lazer
Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
Thu 3 Dec 1998

I second Aldon's views. Sure, there are times when this List gets tedious. But those times, no doubt, are different for each of us. There will be stretches of more delete, and stretches of more rapt engaged attention. I, too, have found the list to be very informative. I hope the list continues in its somewhat anarchice current manner.

Hank Laer

↑ Index

111. Judy Roitman
Re: raddle moon
Thu 3 Dec 1998

> could you backchannel with subscription address again please? i lost it thanks,
>
> wendy

Maybe frontchannel too.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

112. Judy Roitman
Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)
Thu 3 Dec 1998

> as an early adopter who has come and gone from the list at varied times I'd just like to say that I still find it immensely valuable -- As long as I have a delete button, I have no real concern about some of our sillier moments -- when people get too insulting I just absent myself for a few days -- But I can attest to the fact that this list has made my life and my work go better -- I remember the day some years ago when I posted a question about a name that appears in Bob Kaufman's work -- Ron Silliman shot back with an answer for me almost immediately -- It would have taken > me weeks to track down the information on my own --

>
> and I have enjoyed running into people from the list at different meetings and readings around the country --
>
> Unsub if you must this old, gray list
>
> but, If Charles is taking suggestions, I'm in favor of his current, minimal moderation --

And if we're taking a vote: me too.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

113. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: My 2 cents (.94 due to inflation)

Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

well if it's come to a vote then:

henry's posts are usually a scream... so free hg, yes, but by all means

FREE LEONARD PELTIER

the list, all said and done, is quite valuable to me, if not quite a blessing... i am grateful for it... i would preach (as you all know by now) self-policing rather than moderation... (i know this may not always work, and i'm not aligning mself with/against anyone here, and i don't mean to sound panoptical... but i think joel's "unsub" was sent in the spirit of trying to get folks to listen to themselves)...

db: no hard feelings, but i DO have sympathy, not for "delicate" ears (fuck that), but for those who feel attacked/excluded... this is a judgment call, of course, and i won't rehearse what i've already writ re same... but sometimes it's downright clear to me when someone/some group is feeling attacked/excluded... and though i can certainly hit the <delete> key quick as anyone (to eliminate some of the godawful trivia that floats by my eyes, e.g.) i don't think that's the whole answer to things getting nasty...

btw, so far i've enjoyed some of the posts writ in order to defend the list (as it were) than a lot of what i've seen prior (incl. of course my own volumes)... make of it what you will, i'm trying to mself...

best,

joe

↑ Index

114. Judy Roitman

Re: one post per day, and a chicken in every pot

Thu 3 Dec 1998

> *s I've already said recently, I'm one of those who have been frustrated with the quality of discussion on the list. But I also hate the idea of some sort of strict control being imposed, and I'm not crazy about the idea of policing particular people either. What I'd like to see happen is for people to exercise greater self-control on their own, but I guess it's unlikely that this will happen.*
> I'm coming around, then, to the idea that a single post per day limit might be a very good compromise. No particular person's posts would have to be restricted; everyone would operate under the same limitation. The abuse of the list by over-posters like Henry would be eliminated (and I see this as a major problem--though I read many of Henry's posts--perhaps even as much as a tenth or a twentieth of them--with great interest). It would also be much more difficult for flurries of sniping and obstreperous back-and-forth exchanges to dominate any given day. When tempers flared there would be a built-in cool-off period, etc.
>
> I still like too much about the list to want to see it come to an end, so maybe we can do something to make it work better. steve

Once a day? Cheez. Back-and-forth is _fun_. I mean here I am grading a stack of papers or something and I turn on the list and there is db flirting with db and what could be lovelier?

Just try to keep it short folks...

More seriously, I think a lot of the tiresomeness is people trying to tell us what they meant to say or how somebody didn't understand what they said or justifying what they've already said or etc. Here are Judy's Simple E-Rules for E-Etiquette:

1. Never defend.
2. If you've said it once don't say it again.

And of course there is the every-important

3. Never attack.

These work pretty good at meetings too. But hey I wouldn't shut anyone up for not sticking to what are, after all, just my own personal rules.

Cheers.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

115. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: Response to Bernstein: What is a Discoball of Wrath?

Thu 3 Dec 1998

I don't know what all this "handwringing" is about and I don't paticularly relish sounding like an ACLU lawyer defending the Neo-Nazi's right to march in Skokee, but yesterday in the throws of a three day migraine that's rolled into four, I reread issues of the Lewis/Pound mag, Blast. It occurred to me that Lewis and Pound would have definitely been scoured from this list or would have faced a lesser punishment if they had brought to the list the prestige of their historical reputations. I won't go into the irony of Gab's wack at Pound in an earlier post and the decided similarity between his post and Blast's visceral postions. A passionate tactic, perhaps.
Opportunity here is open ended.
Blast! Dammit! Joe! This is our roots. No wonder we come off as a marginalized group of fops. What's the difference between moderation and censorship? This is how the academy/nonacademy shit gets started.
I hope this post meets the content requirement. Now, I'm going to lapse back into the delicious nausea and pain of the four day migraine.
Free Henry!---Carlo Parcelli
> that was a great post by dave chirot...
>
> let me offer a few more thoughts, and i apologize once again for any hint
> of self-righteousness:
>
> if anyone should think it impossible to destroy a list "community" forever > and ever, think again... it's happened, i've seen it happen, and it ain't a > pretty sight (and this has been said around here before)... this is a > region of our own doing, as tentative and perishable as anything else > human...

>
> so while i'm all for letting folks do what they do, so to say, i'm also for > some working sense of self-restraint (modulations as implied in what > follows)...
>
> charles b. is trying to use what tools the establishment has given him in > order to help make this place livable for 700+ subscribers---no easy > task... which is to say, he has a certain responsibility as list moderator > to everyone on the list---much as we have a responsibility to one another > [he sez]... after all, this is a moderated list, whatever one thinks of > same---and there are reasons why it's moderated (which we can discuss at > length)... but those of you who have served (even as) listowners, like me, > will no doubt be able to address the difficulties of keeping such a list > going in productive directions w/o the potentially damaging fall-out of > nastier exchange... (((and yes, i'm using what amounts to media-ecology > language here, and i think it appropriate)))...
>
> and to reiterate: it's simply not the case that everyone --more > specifically, every so identified grouping -- feels equally "at home" > hereabouts, for all sortsa reasons (i might mention gender as an operating > construct, but wish to avoid another jihad)... and it's simply not a matter > of "if you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen" (this should be > self-evident)... so the way i see it, folks should be attentive to the list > environs as such, whatever their intentions or motivations, and stop to > consider whether they really wish merely to alienate, or insult, or offend, > or silence, or drive away (all as opposed, say, to raising anxieties)... i > don't say we should in any sense aim to please -- and i understand only too > well the necessary risks that come of pushing those envelopes -- but i do > say that, however outlandish or unorthodox our sentiments, we should find a > way to respond to what's coming back to us via the list, and not continue > as though "no harm could possibly be done"... assuming we value a diverse > list population, we can prove our commitment to same only through our > actions---which around here = words...
>
> finally: i regard this medium we're all busy exploiting as still quite > new, despite how tried & true it often seems... it allows for more > performative posts, near-synchronous exchange, fairly deliberate > exposition, quick procedural communique, tones of moral indignation [mea > culpa], on and on and on... over time i suspect we'll all learn better how > to tickle these keys, to offer up our wildest dreams in ways that won't > give offense (thoug of course we'll no doubt give offense too, being only > human)... but folks, we often don't know one another all that well---e.g., > despite the incredible rhetorical skills that so many of you possess, you > can't really see/hear me winking at you right now, saying in so many > words "but you don't need me to tell you this, right?"...

>
> -----
>
> and if all of this sounds impossible, well that's something worth aiming > for i think...
>
> ///
>
> joe

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

116. Jordan Davis
Campaign finance reform and the moderated list
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

no no no!

vote NO on Proposition Moderation!

Moderate language poets? Zoiks

Decenter'd narrative, the author's dead, yada yada ... Free Henry!

J

↑ Index

117. Steven Shoemaker
one post per day, and a chicken in every pot
Thu 3 Dec 1998

---

s I've already said recently, I'm one of those who have been frustrated with the quality of discussion on the list. But I also hate the idea of some sort of strict control being imposed, and I'm not crazy about the idea of policing particular people either. What I'd like to see happen is for people to exercise greater self-control on their own, but I guess it's unlikely that this will happen. I'm coming around, then, to the idea that a single post per day limit might be a very good compromise. No particular person's posts would have to be restricted; everyone would operate under the same limitation. The abuse of the list by over-posters like Henry would be eliminated (and I see this as a major problem--though I read many of Henry's posts--perhaps even as much as a tenth or a twentieth of them--with great interest). It would also be much more difficult for flurries of sniping and obstreperous back-and-forth exchanges to dominate any given day. When tempers flared there would be a built-in cool-off period, etc.

I still like too much about the list to want to see it come to an end, so maybe we can do something to make it work better. steve

↑ Index

118. Gabriel Gudding skewer
Thu 3 Dec 1998

See at Poetics List,
ey in a purple twist,
ey gotta aggravate
before de dudes dilate, or else ey confiscate
ya motha's condoMINium - yo - ya wi me - talkin thu MINimum - a no dim sum -
cause when de keys is hot,
you betta watch ya shot,
ya make a baby slip ya boody gonna drip - yo - talkin to ya - sayin - a Fatmouth Ghouley-boy
he some winduppity-puppity-lovey-dovey-talkin toy - he smooth it ova nice
a then he ice you twice, he gotsa snakey mouth
you better go back south,
he shoot you down right NOW
wid all his cockabull Po-po - SHO!
hea come da Language Pos,
he shoot em in da toes,
hea come da bureaucrats,
he gonna burn em cats,
hea come da high-strut Johns,
he make em look like clowns,

he gotsa witchy voice,
he gonna tail yo noise,
yo - betta lookout now!

watch ya keyboard, dahlin!

- Jack Spandrift

↑ Index

119. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: one post per day, and a chicken in every pot

Thu 3 Dec 1998

On the contrary. I think the number, tenor, quality, wit, wisdom, inanity etc. of the posts should be entirely open ended. Remember Wabash.---Carlo Parcelli
P.S. Blast! is great to read when your suffering double vision from a migraine---the prints so large.
Steven Shoemaker wrote:
>
> s I've already said recently, I'm one of those who have been frustrated > with the quality of discussion on the list. But I also hate the idea of > some sort of strict control being imposed, and I'm not crazy about the > idea of policing particular people either. What I'd like to see happen > is for people to exercise greater self-control on their own, but I guess > it's unlikely that this will happen.
> I'm coming around, then, to the idea that a single post per day limit > might be a very good compromise. No particular person's posts would have > to be restricted; everyone would operate under the same limitation. The > abuse of the list by over-posters like Henry would be eliminated (and I > see this as a major problem--though I read many of Henry's posts--perhaps > even as much as a tenth or a twentieth of them--with great interest). It > would also be much more difficult for flurries of sniping and obstreperous > back-and-forth exchanges to dominate any given day. When tempers flared > there would be a built-in cool-off period, etc.
>
> I still like too much about the list to want to see it come to an end, > so maybe we can do something to make it work better. steve

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

120. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Please backchannel
Thu 3 Dec 1998

I am looking for an e-mail or phone address for Joseph Lease.

Please backchannel

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

121. David Hickman
Troubling Posts, Insults, and Childishness
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Speaking as one of the (usually) silent listoids riding into the valley with the rest of the 600 +,I'm surprised at the surprise expressed over the recent flap concerning troubling posts, insults, and childishness. Poets are, after all, human beings. Why would anyone be surprised when they act like it? Notions of civility are perhaps the real trouble here, not because civility is not useful when actually achieved, but because it is less than civil to expect others to achieve such behviors consistently, or some to achieve it more than occasionally. After all, sublimation is not easy, and one of the things poets often like to do is allow the unconcious and see where it leads. Something I have very much liked about the list is the level of tolerance that has been afforded those who do not necessarily subscribe to the "norms" of it's behavior. Certainly it is sometimes annoying to me to read through posts I'm not interested in or have significant problems with. (I occasionally delete those I know I'm not interested in, though I usually remember that if I have a problem with something, the problem is at least as much mine as it is the sender's). But I would rather have the posts there to read through or delete than to think that people were not allowed their voice because there is a clash around the notion of what polite behavior is. David Hickman

↑ Index

122. Wystan Curnow
(Fwd) Re: fail safe
Thu 3 Dec 1998

michael corbin wrote:

> Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> > Moved
> > that Hart Crane's "The Bridge"

> > "failed" --
>
Hart's
Failed?

> david bromige wrote:
>
> aloud in a > Bart station,

Farts are out in a art station

>
> "they called to the streets, and the streets killed them". Weber, on Rosa > Luxembourg and Karl Liebknecht.
>
> Its not just a vertigo of modernity, I think, to be undone by this built > environment. Yes, Yes, it is postmodern bricolage. Architecture. But what I'm > confronted with is the concrete mixer. Dump truck. And those ubiquitous > stanchions or tapered dividers that they put out at the construction sites, road > repair, infrastructure development. Or more, scaffolding. Pinned up against the > building. Rising up. Or those cranes they must deploy at the construction site, > for the high-rise or sky-scraper. Signs everywhere. "Sidewalk Closed/Please > Cross Street." "Bus No Longer Stops Here." "Board Bus On Mt. Pleasant Street".
>
>
> What did Schumpter call capitalism? "Creative destruction"? I don't know. Just > destruction. He was wrong. But, but the building seems to go on and on and on.
> Cities become ugly in there inhumanity. Or even ugly in their humanism. And the > fragility of 700+ (sic) is no more than the fragility of walking across, > through, various engineered behemoths, believing they will hold our weight, with > moderators, and moderation, Believing, That, engineering and maybe even physics > are on our side.

>
> mc
>

In a Station of the Metro

The apparition of these faces in the crowd:
Ron Silliman, David Bromige, Rae Armantrout.

Wystan

↑ Index

123. J Kuszai
fuck guns & where to go from here [long post]
Thu 3 Dec 1998

Dear Listers,

as many of you know, I have been researching in the Archive for New Poetry, and I am preparing number of projects out of material stored there. As I am doing this, I have treated myself to reading around in various archives, including Lyn Hejinian's, Mac Low, and the papers and recordings of Paul Blackburn. The recently acquired Bernadette Mayer papers are still in-cataloging (or so Stephen Cope tells me), but I can't wait to look at what is there, and to read the many years of dedicated writerly (& teacherly)-ness that her archive represents.

[pardon the long digression : there will be some reward at the end]

What I am getting to is somewhat complicated, and is bound-up in my own sense of the troublesome nature of this list, my relationship to it (as lurker, sometimes contributor, and as "burrocrat" in the unfortunate position of managing the daily comings and going--and on that note, Michael Coffey, your server is bouncing every poetics list message and you may want to review the poetics archive to see the hoopula of the last 24 hours or so)))ANYHOW(((my point, if I can return to it is that I do as well infact appreciate the dynamic nature of this list, even as down low as it may at times go. If I get frustrated about that, it may be due to the deterioriating quality of my own life, living so far from the civilization I once knew. The arguments for "sorting through and deleting at will the inanity of the list" to find the nuggets of golden bedraggled friendliness, sharp-witted argumentativeness, yaYaYa, this argument falls on partially deafened ears. It comes down for me to the question, what kind of world do I want to live in, what kind of world do I want to help make, and what can I do to advance the goodness that I need to see in the world in order to continue in it. You may snicker and think that I am being all peachy, preachy, or cheeky. I'm not.

Yesterday I asked my classes if they had ever killed anyone. (We had been talking about gun control laws--most of my students, even the ones I like and think to be "progressive" are ardent gun freaks, not to mention the kid who raises chickens to fight, a real-live cockfighter, if you will pardon the expression) I was surprised in one class when a vietnam veteran rose his hand and mentioned that he had served. While I have many vets at the CCs where I teach, he is the only one to have seen active combat. After discussing what it was like to live in combat--and the students were never more attentive than when this man spoke. He later told me that he had never told anyone what he had told the class, and he seemed amazed at having done so. Then, after a 20 minute commute, fighting the "inanity" of freeway traffic, etc., I asked another class of somewhat younger students the same question. Here I learned that one boy had held a friend who died quaking in his arms after a drive-by; another guy (active Navy) described two shooting incidents where he was the shooter (on the so-called streets). When reminded by a classmate that the question was whether or not he had killed anyone, he finished one of the stories with an "I don't know" if any the bullets he had sprayed the playground with had inflicted deadly damage. Rather than do time for the first story's offense, (the second in terms of chronology), this guy was given the opportunity to enlist, and he now serves at the North Island Naval Facility in San Diego. The point of this story--which has to be told if anyone is to understand my growing impatience with this list (an impatience, it seems, that few people share)--is that even after hearing of these incidents, many of the students, including the lovely boy who held his friend as he died, many, nay, nearly all of them were in unanimous support of the RIGHT TO BEAR ARMS and they all, the faithful servants of the constitution that they are, recited some talk-show version of the 2nd Amendment. They told me that you had to have protection. Anyhow- the conversation went on. We talked about many things. Many of their arguments were like arguments for the "self-moderation" many people want to see on this list. If everyone is packing, and we're all coming to the table free & equal, then the sense that we'll all control ourselves will win out.

I can accept this vision of things-- and I admire the good-natured vision of the world it promotes. But I am not sure if this is a world I can live in, finally.

Perhaps my complex emotional state makes any coherent conversation about these issues more difficult than I had first thought. And unlike many people on this list, I prefer longer, more developed and sustained "arguments" rather than little lunchtime quips. While both are easily deleted with equal force, the sustained attention required by longer posts and more complex argumentation (even if flawed, or failed), this attention is the activity that draws me to the list. Granted there is much information that is exchanged--and it is my lifeline. What are people doing? what do they want to know? what is happening?. I have several research questions I would like to ask the group, and if I can ever get out of these paragraphs, I will. But for me, and perhaps it is only me (I can no longer see the trees for the forest)--I need the more developed exchange of essayistic presentation. Is there another list out there with similar interests requiring that kind of level of participation? It seems that this list is for many people a kind of infotainment. While I don't want to take that away from anyone, as Roger Farr so eloquently entreated me earlier, I think it may be time for me to move on and look for other pastures to graze in, other cows with which to chew and moo. So, on that note, if someone could privately (backchannel) me with information about other poetics lists (and I am always surprised to hear about the number of limited,private ones out there) I would be eternally grateful.

If you have made it this far, I am sorry to have victimized you with the above melancholy meandering, you are in it for the whole-hog haul. [the 5th caller to send a note with the words "happy new year bubby & moby" in the subject line to [redacted] will receive a Meow Press luv-pak of newerish books]

It seems to me that much of what this list can achive has been alluded to by people earlier today, so I won't reiterate that here. But I must say that I think that it can be an extension of the real, and as has been suggested privately, perhaps there should be some kind of meeting of this particular tribe. I look forward to the Page Mothers conference to discuss some very important writers, such as Rae, Fanny, Lyn and Leslie, Laura, and Bernadette, among others, I think (sorry if I'm leaving anyone out). And I think that this space can act as a kind of electronic (not virtual) conference space. Like Kinsella's featuring of poets at his poetryetc list, I suggest that we begin a series of discussions in advance of the conference scheduled for March 1999 dedicated to those writers. I don't know if Linda Russo is still on this list: her name appears in the review-list, but like many of th 666 people on this list, I would suuspect that she is actually set to nomail. In any case, Linda's research into women editors of poetry magazines is one of the more exciting projects I can think of and I would love to hear a status report if possible. I mention the possible "conference effect" of this list to suggest A) something for us to talk about in a constructive way (and given that, in my opinion, women writers have produced some of the most important writing and community development actions since 1968--including the recent Bay Area magazines Lipstick and Outlet which I just received--such a discussion of these writers and editors could bear importantly on what sense we make of this current climate of which the p-list is only a small part) and B) such a discussion could provide for a model of civic/list behavior. And if we think of the list as a conference, someone grabbing the mic (whether it is coolio hipster Rbt Duncan, or coolio hpster Henry G) would be completely scandalous and inappropriate. So-- that is my suggestion. And my suggestion, that we discuss these writers--in advance of an already scheduled conference here at UCSD-- is only one suggestion. The subject line could be used to announce the writer under discussion & whether it is a reply or an advancing of a "reading" or whatnot. Ok, that's it.

↑ Index

124. Karen Kelley
Re: 666
Thu 3 Dec 1998

I rather like this sort of post; it's like listening to your friends when they're feeling silly. Of course, if you're in a bad mood, they seem irritating, but then, if you're in a bad mood, you probably shouldn't have come to the party (so just delete).

And I have never heard Henry say anything mean-spirited, nor do I think his silence will induce lurkers to come forward.

daniel bouchard wrote:

> 700 Club debunked.
>
> 668- (minus) 3 Ron Sillimans (plus one RS) = the Buffalo List, or Satan.
>
> It means the Poetics list is The Beast, and Henry is the whore of Babylon.
>
> ha. ha.
>
> (This is the kind of stupid e-mail that I should have back-channeled to Jordan, but send here > to prove a point. It is called fluff.
>
> Or fluff-E.
>
> Now do as I say, not as I do-- no more fluff-E.
>
> Jordan wrote:
>
> Not to interrupt the end of the world, but where'd anybody get this "700" club idea of the list? Looking at the subscriber list, I see 668 names, --
>
> with RON SILLIMAN SUBSCRIBED THREE TIMES!!!
>
> I mean you know what this means don't you????????
>
> J
> <<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
> Daniel Bouchard
> The MIT Press Journals

> Five Cambridge Center
> Cambridge, MA 02142
>
> [redacted]
> phone: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
> <<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

125. Joe Brennan

Fwd: New Fraentzki

Thu 3 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_912737831_boundary

--part0_912737831_boundary

air-zb01.mail.aol.com (v53.17) with SMTP; Thu, 03 Dec 1998 14:05:11 -0500 [128.143.200.198])
by rly-zb03.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id OAA29083;
Thu, 3 Dec 1998 14:05:07 -0500 (EST)
NAA44949 for heidegger-outgoing; Thu, 3 Dec 1998 13:53:48 -0500
[redacted] using -f lists.village.virginia.edu (8.8.5/8.6.6) with SMTP id NAA76433 for <[redacted]>; Thu, 3 Dec 1998 13:53:43 -0500 by mailout05.btx.dtag.de with smtp id 0zlc9K-0000Am-00; Thu, 3 Dec 1998 18:02:42 +0100 by fwd02.btx.dtag.de id <m0zlc90-0004tVC>; Thu, 3 Dec 1998 18:02:22 +0100
Date: Thu, 3 Dec 1998 18:02:22 +0100
To: [redacted]
References: <4$[redacted]>
<[redacted]>
Subject: New Fraentzki
From: [redacted] (Michael Eldred)

Cologne, 03 December 1998

Something for readers of German (in particular, Henk):

The second part of Fraentzki's magnum opus is now out and available from Verlag J.H. Roell (e-mail: [redacted]) or via the book tr= ade.

=09Ekkehard Fraentzki
=09Daseinsontologie
=09Zweites Hauptstueck: Vom Wesen der Wahrheit
=091998 166 pp.
=09ISBN 3-89754-130-0

Another characteristic examplar of inimitable Fraentzkian lucidity and Ger= man Bierernst.

Michael _-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_- artefact text and translation _-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_- _-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_-_ graphical), it seems to me of service namely as a metalanguage. Metalanguages, however, are an exciting possibility (or even existing component) in poetry. HTML and by extension DHTML are subsets of an even more heinous beast: SGML. The idea of SGML was to break down the "objects" of a typical published work and identify them so they could be manipulated individually. Such identification is accomplished by surrounding the "object" (say a title, chapter head, or footnote) with code. The code itself is further defined by "attributes" that affect the direction, positioning, size, orientation, etc., of the objects they define. In SGML a separate document (sometimes called a program) is required to hold the attributes of the objects. When the coded document is put through the seive of the attributes document/program, voila! a formatted text appears. Now in HTML and DHTML the attributes are themselves part of the identification process and thus a part of the code. A browser such as Netscape is used to parse the codes, apply the attributes, and assemble the objects. The D in front of HTML simply stands for "dynamic." You can make things ("objects") move. Of course, with AOL (which doesn't yet understand version 4.0 of the HTML international standard) you can't view the "D" in the DHTML (unfortunately my current version of Netscape doesn't seem to understand it either).

The enigma n site also uses another language Javascript (not to be confused with Java, which is full-fledged programming language). The Javascript, which incidentally has errors in it, speaks back and forth with (D)HTML and provides additional functionality to a browser (such as Netscape.) The proliferation of languages and scripts goes on and on. If there is a microkernel of truth in all of it for use in poetry...again, I think it boils down to a metalanguage in a language. These are clearly examples in our real world now. What if anything can be made of this?

Bob

↑ Index

128. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: Infoanimism
Fri 4 Dec 1998

There are a lot of javascript texts online at this point; it's useful, be- cause it doesn't depend on the downloading of applets. And the older ver- sions of html are in some ways more advanced/interesting than the newer ones, since it was billed as a _semantic_ markup language that would med- iate between your browser/window/computer properties and the page itself - type occupying different widths and styles depending on the window size you've set, etc. It was fluid. The recent html versions and the use of style sheets transform the page more into an _object,_ dynamic or not, controlled by the author (push technology in a way).

What's interesting about javascript is that it lives in the page that's delivered, unlike perl or java. You generally can see the script itself with the view option in the browser.

It's very difficult to talk of languages/metalanguages or form/content, I think with all of this. I've written about this a lot - what I call on occasion the porousness of languages. For example, perl can run at a shell prompt, call up shell programs, write or read shell programs - all of the languages including scripting languages can reference each other, pass information back and forth. What's base and what's meta is problematic. There are markers you can use, for example saying that everything between < and > is meta, and that will hold for the most part - at least the browser will try and interpret it. But when you get into more elaborate areas, the distinction blurs - look at www.jodi.org which places some of the 'relevant' (my word) content as invisible comments - you've got to use the view command to see it. (That's also true of some of my black on black pages.)

Alan

↑ Index

129. Elizabeth Treadwell fuck guns
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I am here to respond to Joel publickly! I too have felt frustrated with the list, too frustrated to say anything, in fact (I appreciate Joe's comments about people who don't speak, not that I'm yr cybervictim, no way in hell, thank you). Time feels very precious and easily wasted, and I don't want to spend it at a party with all these boys who like to talk a LOT. (You know who you are.) Excuse my extreme left handed feminist pull on the carstool. Though that said I certainly have appreciated mentions here of my work writing and editing, which have been made by two of the male persuasion, Joel and Standard Schaefer. I would especially like the conversation to be more thoughtful, essayish, and most importantly about topics that feel IMPORTANT (compelling, generative ? -- oh excuse me!) to me. Such as occurs in my small reading/writing group here in the Bay Area, where we read a book superclosely, and yes, sometimes get in entanglements. I am hungry for places to discuss writing, but much of what happens here is to me a mess. I have had many a backchannel complaint from gal pals as well as guy pals. I don't like to listen to anyone who talks as much as Henry. Sorry to be honest.

Perhaps I'll go curl up with Vogue and my dear sig other,

Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

130. Jim Andrews
Re: Infoanimism
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Bill,

I'm told that W.C. Williams said something like 'A poem is a machine made out of words.' It's odd to think it so, given the utterly human nature of many poems. Yet there is a sense in which it's true: language itself is surely a technology insofar as it is a tool made by people; our tools and technologies are not dumb and lifeless externalities that we pick up at need to do a job; instead, they often are truly extensions of ourselves: extensions of our minds and feelings and imaginations (language); extensions of our eyes (electron and radio telescopes); extensions of our memory (books); extensions of our voices (telephones); etc. Poets are familiar with the odd feeling of seeing their poems in type, particularly in something as apparently external as a book or magazine; it's as though a part of themselves had somehow been transferred by machines to the external and other. There they are, our silent running soul devices.

In a sense, I have just rewritten my little essay Infoanimism in a different context. Even the nature of the printed document needs re-examination. We freak out about machines and say they are no part of us but the truth of the matter is quite different. It is apparently ironic that we use machines to convey our humanity, but the irony is only apparent when we acknowledge the ghost in the machine and acknowledge also that we made the machine for the ghost to travel in. Subtle ghost in there with "the popular languages of commerce and company xmas parties" you mention, lovely graceful ghost.

Whether a poem is spoken or written or uses dhtml, as I am amused to do these days, it is, in the above way, a machine made out of words. Dhtml poems highlight this dramatically.

The neath text is to some forbiddingly technical and automated. Yet the ghostie may appreciate it, the ghostie neath and above and around the neath text.

Infoanimism is at http://speakeasy.org/~jandrews/vispo/EnigmanInfoanimism.html and links to Enigma n. The link you provided to Enigma n is actually a link to only the Internet Explorer version, Bill, but thank you anyway.

:)
Jim

↑ Index

131. George Bowering
Re: quick history
Fri 4 Dec 1998

> Free Henry Gould

Oh, bad timing! I paid $25 just a month ago.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

132. George Bowering
Re: pig wars and other truffle-snuffling battles
Fri 4 Dec 1998

> Now, when you talk about Orcas, you're talking about the trees some of my ancestors fell out of. The San Juan islands haven't been Brit since the resolution of the Pig War (an altercation worthy of the POETICS list) in 1872. My great-grandparents, John Loudon Gow and Emilie Harding, both of Orcas, would have looked unkindly on any suggestion that they curtsy before Lord Bow'ring.
>
> Rachel Loden

That is a little odd, that coincidence. Happens that I gave a swift and sure account of the Pig War in my book _Bowering's B.C._ , Viking 1996, Penguin 1997. But it took place just on San Juan Island. Some crummy Kraut was the arbitrator and gave the island to the Yanks years later.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

133. Rachel Loden

delete if not interested in arcane arguments re: pig wars and other truffle-snuffling battles

Fri 4 Dec 1998

George, just to defend my honor, since it is clearly under siege (I guess Brom was right when he said your dad was a schoolteacher). If you'll reread my post you'll notice I do not say that the Pig War took place on Orcas Island. I don't say where it did take place, sensing somehow that this is not a matter of great fascination for the P-list.

There are 172 named islands in the San Juan archipelago, San Juan and Orcas being two of the largest. The point is that the line drawn by Kaiser Willie gave all of them to the US (thus my statement that they haven't been British since the resolution of the war in 1872). Kapish? I don't say it was right but that's how the colonial cookie crumbles.

The war itself took place in 1859. Witnesses to all this stupidity were the Lummi Indians, some of whom were still living traditionally on Orcas when my mother grew up.

Sorry to bore everyone, and slipping into deep lurk,

Rachel

George Bowering wrote:
>
> >Now, when you talk about Orcas, you're talking about the trees some of > >my ancestors fell out of. The San Juan islands haven't been Brit since > >the resolution of the Pig War (an altercation worthy of the POETICS > >list) in 1872. My great-grandparents, John Loudon Gow and Emilie > >Harding, both of Orcas, would have looked unkindly on any suggestion > >that they curtsy before Lord Bow'ring.
> >
> >Rachel Loden
>
> That is a little odd, that coincidence. Happens that I gave a swift and > sure account of the Pig War in my book _Bowering's B.C._ , Viking 1996, > Penguin 1997. But it took place just on San Juan Island. Some crummy Kraut > was the arbitrator and gave the island to the Yanks years later.
>
> George Bowering.
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,

> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

134. Randy Prunty
David Todd and Dirigible
Fri 4 Dec 1998

---

anybody know what's up with the mag Dirigible? anybody have a current address for David Todd? email or snail ok.

please back channel

Randy

↑ Index

135. miekal and
Avant Writing Collection
Fri 4 Dec 1998

---

from John Bennett:

"I am developing a new collection here of Avant Writing, and you are one of the people I have on my list to contact. The collection is a kind of outgrowth of the extensive archive of William Burroughs' papers that were donated to this library (parts of which I have been cataloguing). As Bob (Grumman) suggested, my budget for starting this is miniscule, so I have indeed been asking people for donations of material. So anything of yours, and anything from your various publishing activities would be most welcome indeed, and would be very much at the center of what I'm trying to build here. Basically I'm collecting innovative and experimental work that is not to be found in most libraries, bookstores, and this is generally ignorred by the established institutions, but that I believe is the most important and exciting writing being done. I am convinced that this material will be recognized and valued for what it is in the future, and this collection will provide a valuable resource for future scholars and readers. As will the collections of SUNY Buffalo and Marvin & Ruth Sackner.

And yes, by all means, please add my name and address to your list of archives. You can add anything you think significant from the above as a note, emphasizing that we are accepting donations of materials in the areas of innovative and experimental writing and poetry, visual poetry, audio poetry and related materials - books, broadsides, ephemera, serials, etc.

Use this address:

John Bennett; Curator
Avant Writing Collection;
Rare Books and Manuscripts; University Libraries;
Ohio State University;
1859 Neil Ave. Mall
Columbus, OH 43210-1286

I do have email ([redacted]) but am somewhat limited in what I can do with it due to a visual disability. I can print out and read messages, however and make brief responses. I much prefer to work through snail mail. I've enclosed my website address - my son (Squid) set it up and manages it. "

JOHN BENNETT'S WEBSITE
http://www.geocities.com/Pipeline/4848/lbp.html

↑ Index

136. miekal and
Re: quick history
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Its surely a study in poetic consciousness to note how a thread which originally started by asking the date the atom was split has turned into missives from the chairman of the Free Henry Gould Committee. Tho I must admit that everytime I write one of these short posts now I feel self-conscious (& those who know me, know that is an achievement) & have this mental image of someone else out there unsubscribing because of it. Is this the hive mentality devolving into spit-fire anarchy?

Rasputin Zukofsky

↑ Index

137. Jim Bennett
Re: Troubling Posts, Insults, and Childishness
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Mairead Byrne wrote;

It seems to me that a lot of the current problems on this list are caused by those very same poets whom you indulgently call human beings. Do they know the difference between poetry and poetics, I ask myself. Would it be possible, in the interests of moderation, to ask subscribers to identify themselves, to the closest possible denominator, as either poets or poeticists: or at least to make a confirmed choice. I for one would be all for gagging the poets. Troublemakers.

I agree with the sentiments expressed - but could we add editors to the list as a sub (human) group (species) together with agents and critics - perhaps they could be placed in a special list of their own while the nice poets discuss (or argue) in peace about important maters of poetry which editors especially would have no interest or specialist knowledge. (Only problem I suppose is that most poets at some point get to do some editing or write criticisms) Oh well its a nice thought.

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

↑ Index

138. Gary Sullivan
Rain Taxi Vol. 3 No. 4
Fri 4 Dec 1998

The new issue's available

Featuring: Interview with Anne Waldman by Eric Lorberer; an essay on Mary Butts by Carolyn Kuebler; interview with Harry Mathews (attributed to "Rain Taxi," so probably eds. Kuebler, Lorberer & Randall Heath); essay on the Oulipo by Marc Lowenthal; a profile on Nazraeli Press by Eric Lorberer; "Sortilege: On Mary Caponegro" by Rikki Ducornet; Samuel Delany on Vincent Czyz's _Adrift in a Vanishing City_; "Colin Wilson Watch," by Kelly Everding; reviews of new books by William Gass (David Auerbach), Ellen Gilghrist & June Spence (Lucinda Ebersole), Umberto Eco (Jason Kuykendall), Franz Wright (Brett Ralph), Kenward Elmslie (Gary Sullivan), Donald Revell (Brian Beatty), Susan Wheeler (Juliet Patterson), Joshua Beckman (S.P. Healey), Lorca (Frank Johnson), David Lehman (Chris Fischbach), R. Crumb (Chase Madar), Christopher Sawyer-Laucanno (Mark Terrill, Merrill Gilfillan (Paul Bogard), Gerald Vizenor, Paula Gunn Allen and Diane Glancy (Heid Erdrich), Brian Evenson (Xandra Coe); the next "New Life" cartoon installment by yours truly . . . and much, much more.

Subscribe already! 'Scheap! $10 (domestic), $20 (international) for four issues!

Rain Taxi
P.O. Box 3840
Minneapolis, MN 55403

As per usual, I have copies I'd be glad to send out to those of you who can't afford subscriptions. Just lemme know (backchannel, please, I'm on "nomail" for a bit).

Thanks,

Gary

↑ Index

139. Christina Fairbank Chirot poets/troublemakers/Chile (a fwd)
Fri 4 Dec 1998

(from dave baptiste chirot)

on 3 december 98 Mairead Byrne ended a post by demanding identification as poet or poeticist and noted: "I for one would be all for gagging the poets. Troublemakers."

This made me think of a brief autobiographical poem by the great English visual/sound poet and performer Bob Cobbing (who does indeed go about "sockless in sandals"):

IF HE KNEW WHAT HE WAS DOING, HE WOULD DO IT BETTER !

Sockless in sandals,
gibbering his wares
in unintelligible shrieks and hisses, a 'poet' merely disrupts the solid, sensible business of the night.

the people hear gibberish;
Poets! how can nothing be said with all that noise?

below a post re activites regarding the intertwined cases of Humberto Nilo and Pincohet. Included are email addresses to send in your support. Those interested may backchannel--or I cd fwd to the list if so invited--an day-by-day update of all the activities since this particular post, as well as what the now second stage projects are for AU MA + GOM

UA+MA
URGENT ACTION OF MAIL ART

GOM@(Global Organization of Mail Artists)

November, 26, 1998

Pinochet, the justice and Humberto Nilo

Approximately a year ago, the Director and Academic of the Arts School of the University from Chile, Humberto Nilo Saavedra, promoted a Mail Art call to please the freedom in education for the arts. Months later, he was expelled from his chair. The dictatorship continued operating. Now, the ex-dictator and Chilean life senator, Augusto Pinochet, has been arrested . In such an unexpected way, he is in the custody of the court in England as a result of the request for extradition from a Spanish judge, Baltasar GarzÃ³n. The charges are for more than 90 crimes of genocide, international terrorism and tortures. Faced with the danger that the process can be stopped by Spanish reactionary forces, we asked for solidarity to all the mail artists for justice to be strictly applied.

The group AU MA+gom@ (Urgent Action â€“ Mail Art), consider the first stage of this project to be closed, once achieved that both Spanish and English Court sentenced the ex-dictator and Chilean life senator, Augusto Pinochet, must to be put in trial for crimes of genocide, international terrorism and torture.

For these crimes, Pinochet was requested by the laws of several countries (Spain, France, Germany, Switzerland...and others). The extradition proceedings will take time. However, we consider the precedent established will make possible to be optimists about the make up of an International Court to fight the crimes against humanity.

On the other hand, our campaign was mainly aimed at Mail Art world, even thought a lot of people from another circles did identify with our call. In that respect, we want to declare that our report of the case of Humberto Nilo -ex Director of the University of Chileâ€™s Fine Art School, who was dimissed from his position after the organization of the Mail Art exhibition "Stop: liberty, diversity and pluralism"- is still not solved. Because this reason, we will continue making all efforts to give him back his position.

Adhesion to the list: [redacted] subject: adhesion Participate in future actions of GOM@ : [redacted] subject: member

Pinochet, la justicia y Humberto Nilo

Hace aproximadamente un aÃ±o, el profesor de BB.AA. de la Universidad de Chile, Humberto Nilo Saavedra, promovÃa una convocatoria de Mail Art en favor de la libertad de enseÃ±anza para las artes. Unos meses despuÃ©s, era expulsado de su cÃ¡tedra. La dictadura seguÃa operando. Ahora ha sido detenido el ex-dictador y senador vitalicio chileno, Augusto Pinochet. De la manera mÃ¡s insospechada ha quedado bajo custodia en Inglaterra ante la peticiÃ³n de extradiciÃ³n de un juez espaÃ±ol, Baltasar GarzÃ³n. La acusaciÃ³n es de mÃ¡s de 90 delitos por genocidio, terrorismo internacional y tortura. Ante el peligro de que el proceso sea detenido por fuerzas reaccionarias espaÃ±olas, solicitamos a todos los mail artistas su solidaridad para que la justicia se aplique con todo rigor.

EL COLECTIVO AU MA+gom@ (AcciÃ³n Urgente - OrganizaciÃ³n Mundial del Mail Art), da por concluida la primera etapa de este proceso, una vez conseguido que tanto los tribunales espaÃ±oles como los ingleses hayan sentenciado que el ex-dictador Chileno y senador vitalicio Augusto Pinochet, debe ser juzgado por los mÃºltiples crimenes de genocidio, terrorismo internacional y tortura. Delitos cuyo procesamiento ha sido solicitado por diversos paÃses.(EspaÃ±a, Francia, Alemania, Suiza...) El proceso de extradiciÃ³n, probablemente serÃ¡ largo. Pero consideramos que a partir de estos momentos, el precedente sentado permitirÃ¡ contemplar con nuevas perspectivas la formaciÃ³n de un Tribunal Internacional para combatir los crÃmenes contra la humanidad. Por otro lado, nuestro manifiesto iba dirigido al universo del Mail Art, que es donde nos movemos. Bien es cierto que al mismo se han sumado otras personas y colectivos que se han identificado con nuestro llamamiento. En este sentido, queremos dejar constancia de que nuestra denuncia por el caso del ex-Director de Bellas Artes de la Universidad de Chile, Humberto Nilo, expulsado de su cÃ¡tedra despuÃ©s de organizar una covocatoria de Mail Art por "La Libertad en la EnseÃ±anza de las Artes", no ha sido solucionado. Es por ello que proseguiremos en nuestro esfuerzo para que le sea restituido su cargo.

Adhesiones a la lista a: [redacted] subject: adhesion Participa en futuras acciones de GOM@: [redacted] subject: member

More than 300 Signatures/Firmas until/hasta 25 November 1998:

A Cova da Terra
Abel Figueras
Abraham Vecina GutiÃ©rrez
AG(+A)e-1
Agurrak
Aiolidiggi
Alberto Duarte
Alberto GonzÃ¡lez
Alejandra Sequeira
Alejandro BeltrÃ¡n
Alfons Herraiz
Alfonso Sorribes
Alicia Bay Laurell
Alicia Gil
Aljosa Abrahamsberg
Amir Brito Cador

Amoniako-Markt
Amy Baylaurel Casey
Ana Tiscornia
Ana-Aj
Anabel Vanoni
AnahÃ Caceres
AnahÃ Flores
Anchi
Andrea CÃ¡rdenas
AndrÃ©s Burbano
Anna Banana
Anna M PÃ mies
Annie Wallois
Antonio Lirio Barajas
Archivo Situacionista
Arenaton-Docks
Armando PÃ©rez
Artur Matuck
Ateneu GastronÃ³mico Restaurant Enoteca Culture
Beatriz Cilleruelo
Beatriz RamÃrez
Beatriz Silva
Bod Grumman
BOEK 861
Boog
Bora Balar
Bora Ercan
Bruno Pollacci
Btmadra
Cabrespina
Calen Rsign
Carla Sala
Carles Canetti
Carlos Ãngel SÃ¡nchez
Carlos GarcÃa Tomillero
Carlos RedÃ³n Pastor
Carlos Romano GarcÃa
Carlos Vaz Ferreira
Carmen Cilleruelo
Carmen Delgado
Carmen GarcÃa
Carmen Patricio

Centro de Iniciativas Culturales y de ComunicaciÃ³n (CICC)
CÃ©sar Espinosa
CÃ©sar Reglero
Charles Francois
CGT (Tarragona)
Clara Gari
Claudia Castelo
Claudia Liekam
Clemente Padin
Colectivo Cine Delirio
Colectivo Stidna
Concha JÃ©rez
Cracker Jack Kid
Cristiane Neder
Cristina MartÃnez
Dan Ferdinande
Daniel Barrachina Sala
Daniel Daligand
Daniel Quiroga
Daniele Gardiol
David Batista Chirot
Denis J. Highberger
Dinka Todorovick
Dolores Abrahamsberg
Dolores May
Dorren Borrow
Dr. Olu. Oguibe
Dulcimira Capisani
Editorial Pix
Eduardo DÃaz Espinosa
Eduardo Lara
Ejs Kapretz
Elias Adasme
ElÃas Levin
Emanuela Carone
Emmanuel Ayah Okwabi
Encuadernaciones El Pavo Real
Enrique Aguelo
Ernest NÃºÃ±ez
Esteban Ãlvarez
Esteban Tranche
Estefano Pasquini

Ettienne Christiaens
Eugeni Bonet
Eugeni Guell
Ever Arts
Fabio Doctorovich
Felix Duque
Fernando GarcÃa Delgado/VÃ³rtice Argentina
Fernando Reglero Campos
Festival AtlÃ¡ntico de Lisboa
Florencia Crescimbeni
Francesca Maniaci
Francisca Salvador
Francisco Arias SolÃs
Francisco Felipe
Gabriel Villota
Gabriela Rangel Mantilla
GalerÃa Ze dos Bois (Lisboa)
GB - Debora Gavensky
Geert De Decker
Gerhard Ostfalk
Ghe Schmidt
Gianni Broi
Gilbertto Prado
Giovanni Strada
Giovanni Tessicini
Group Public Projects
Gue Schimdt
GuÃa Cultural Flirt de Lisboa
Guido Vermandel
Guillermo MarÃn
Guy Bleus
Guy Ferdinande
GyÃ¶rgy Galantai
Hale Tenger
Hans Braumueller
Harry Polkinhorn
Helen Karasavidou
Hilda Paz
Hugo Pontes
Hugo Sil
Humberto Nilo
Ina Blom

Irving Weiss
Isabel GonzÃ¡lez
Isabel Jover
Isabel Ron-Pedrique
Ivana MartÃnez Vollaro
Jalil
James Durand
James Jabir Titelman
Jane MarÃa Chambault
Jas W Felter
Jaume Bobet
Javier Almeida
Javier Creus
Javier Ildefonso Sobrino
Jean Torregrosa
Jennifer Demello
JJP
Joachim
Joan Miqueu Spinasse
Joe Galliva
Joel Chace
John M. Bennett
Jordi Barrachina
Jordi Folgado Illa
Jordi SolÃ©
Jordi Vidal
Jorge Daffunchio
Jorge GarcÃa
Jorge Garnica
JosÃ© Antonio LÃ³pez
Jose Carlos Preciados Domenech
Jose E. LÃ³pez GÃ¡lves
Jose Emilio AntÃ³n PecharromÃ¡n
JosÃ© Espinoza
JosÃ© Guevara Castro
JosÃ© Iges
Jose LÃ³pez GÃ¡lvez
Jose Van Den Broucke
JosÃ© Venegas
Josep Aguilo
Josep CamÃ³s
Josep MÂª Damenson

Josep MÂª Yago
Josep Noiret "LÂ´Estaminet"
Joy Garnett
JPG
Juan CamÃ³s
Juan Carlos Romero
Juan Clua Monreal
Juan Francisco AragÃ³n
Juan Guerrero
Juan M. Niza
Juan Ragno
Juan Vicente Aliaga
Julia Klaniczay
Julia Lohman
Julien DÂ´Abrigeon
Julio Plaza
K. Van Den Broucke
Kakart
Karen Michelsen
Karl Jirgens
Klaus Rupp/Merlin
Koichi Sughiara
Kurt Vereecken
L. Nicolas Guigou
La Clau DÂ´Euterpe
La Pluie d'Oiseaux
Ladislao Pablo Gyory
Latuff
Laura Andreoni
Leo Robertazzi
LeÃ³n Ferrari
Leonello ZambÃ³n
Llum GarcÃa
LuÃs FernÃ¡ndez - Aleph Arts
Luis Romero
Luisa Taliento
Luiz de Aquino Alves Neto
Luiz Monforte
Maite Blasco
Manuel Redon Blanch
Mar Montero Soya
Marcelo Sosa

Marcos Lutyens
MarÃa Alemany
MarÃa Antonia YÃ¡Ã±ez
Maria Jose GÃ³mez NÃ³voa
MarÃa Luz Zamora Loureiro
Mariana Perata
Marianne Muggeridge
Maribel MartÃnez
Marisa GonzÃ¡lez
Marlowe
Marta Gonzalves
MartÃ Pineda
Martim Erre
Mauricio Guerrero Alarcon
Mauro Molinari
Michael Lumb
Michele Sigurini
Mikel GarcÃa
Mircia Rojo
Miroljub Todorovic
MisÃº
MÃ³nica Gallardo
Montse FornÃ³s
Muriel Frega
Muruvvet Turkyilmaz
Museo de la Nada
Natalia GarcÃa
Nathalie Hamard-Wang
Natxo Xeca
Navarro Manoli
Nekane Aramburu
NÃ©stor Tellechea
New Jazz
Nora Menghi
Norberto Isca
Norberto JosÃ© MartÃnez
Norma Morandini
Nuria NoguÃ©s
Ozgur Uckan
P.O.Box
Paloma Mateos
Paloma Porras

Parking
Pascal Lenoir
Pascale Follard
Pat Binder
Patricia Salas
Patxi
Paulo Condini
Pedro Custodio
Pedro Meyer
Pere MoratÃ³
Pere Sousa - Merz Mail
Pete Spence
Pete Spence
Philippe Castellin
Philippe Espinesse
Pier Paolo Limongelli
Pilar Guijosa
Postart / "Roodom"
Postmaster PCBD
Proyecto Sorpresa
Pusula Haber Programy
Rafael Juarez
Ramiro Ãlvarez
Ramiro LarraÃn
Reed Altemus
Renate Carelse
Reni Hofmueller
Richard De Meester
Robert Adrian
Roberto Duarte
Rod Summers
Rogelio Cerda Castillo
Rogelio Rodriguez Coronel
Roger Morris
RomÃ¡ SolÃ©
RubÃ©n Sanchez
Ruth Turner
Salvador Cobos
Sandra Botner
Selim Birsel
Sepp Rothwangl
Sergey de Rocombole

Sergui QuiÃ±onero
Shifra Goldman
Silvina Szperling
Silvio De Gracia
Simon Baudhuin
Simona
Simone Rondelet
Sugar Irmer
Susanne Kunkele
Taller del Sol
Tamara Stuby
Tartarugo
Teresinha Pereira
The GastronomÃa of the Mediterraneo
Therese Ectors
Thierry Merger
Transforma
Unai Reglero
Vagner T.S.
Vanessa HernÃ¡ndez
Veha Abrahamsberg
Veterinarios sin fronteras
Viktor Todorovick
Viola Siruthairath
Vittore Baroni
Viviana Sasso
VÃ³rtice
www.crosses.net
Xabier Idoate
Xavier Moreno
Xer
Xtof Bruneel
Xurxo Estevez
Zaida Reverter

Read more about GOM@ and
the memory of our action Pinochet, Justice and Humberto Nilo on:

http://www.teleline.es/personal/tartarug
http://www.fut.es/~boek/Nilo.htm
http://www.crosses.net/nilo/
http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Workshop/6345/justicia/auma.htm

please send your cross
http://www.crosses.net

Hans Braumueller
Licenciado en Artes Plasticas
Osterstrasse 98
20259 Hamburg
Germany

↑ Index

140. Joe Brennan free charles
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I object to the censorship being imposed on henry for allegedly posting too frequently, even though he stays within the daily limit of 5, and on gabriel for the quality of his "content," a word that more than smacks of exclusionary elitism. as a matter of fact, I often enjoy reading henry's posts -- and his commitment to, and passion for, art is, from my point of view, beyond question. as for the content issue, there are certainly more trivial remarks posted everyday than anything that gabriel has posted. to single out these two poets seems to me to be wrongheaded, whatever the rationale. much more obnoxious is the assumption that anyone, solely because of proprietary interests, should take it upon themselves to arbitrarily restrict either the frequency or quality of the work of other list members without anything resembling due process. those who advocate freeing henry, gabriel & kent johnson have it wrong -- we need to free charles and his clones from the mistaken assumption that exclusion and censorship are the appropriate responses to what are essentially political and aesthetic differences.

joe brennan

↑ Index

141. Gabriel Gudding
Re: skewer & love of this list
Fri 4 Dec 1998

My Dear Sir I cannot forward yr post below as I have received from Bernstein a note from his twelve lawyers via fax late late last night, waking me, the printing of which fax was so greatly jangling and rattling for some reason, as if vile counsel's words were actually BUMPY. Couldn't believe roaring threats. anyway upshot is (1) the "pressure" lastly mentioned yesta'day in hasty subterranean note to Gould was my own leaden chagrin at having fuckeditup, story of my life, Secondly I think the tree outside my window to the right is about to pop into bloom you should see this thing, birds billeted all over it, fuck-a-duck. Fourth, I sick all stinking apologies to this list as if it were a delicate thing: if it's going to die let it die, but i say we don't kill it by apologizing and as parceilli wrt 'handranging" not kill it. And ninthly CERTAINLY let's not kill the vitality of it, for what brought the stupid gaga to list was henry's messages, posts of genius, & good lord i LOVE this list and what i learn from it and what PRAXIS of OPEN THINKING it gives me and how i am eternally GRATEFUL for this COMMUNITY buffalo PROVIDES, its BOUNTY, the buffalo BOINKY OF BOUNTY, the furthermore and tenth and lastly I cannot post but a "few" times a week, so I'm waiting until tomorrow when I will post a Violent Bomb of Words which will beckon wrath of ALL in the goddamn name of WAKEY-UPPEY, at which action List will be restored to former Henry state of affairs, this being the terminal action of my own soldiering, whence i will with dainty personal decency begin again my own annoying postings of hack and drama. yours with weapons of pewter & foil, GAGA

On Thu, 3 Dec 1998, henry wrote:

> brutha, be cool...
> 'preciate what ya doin f'me....
> ya wanna pologize f'both of us, sokay by me...
>
> why doan ya write in & clarify it wuz from Huffy in a huffy mood & promises > to be the LAST stealth bomb to the list... tellem we bot' love da list an > all its peoples & Henrah sez he will bide by what he hears & try seriously > man to clam the jam fo while... let sumbuddy else talks f'while...
>
> why doan ya forwars dis one...
>
> sorry, brutha, f' the heavy pressure - ain't yo fault, s'mine...
>
> - Henrah

↑ Index

142. Michael Magee
Re: free charles
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Excuse my fogginess on this issue but, has Henry actually been banned from posting on the list? If so, this seems absolutely outrageous to me! Joe's sentiment that "Henry's commitment to, and passion for, art is, from my point of view, beyond question" is absolutely true and quite pertinent. I've rassled with him as much as anyone but the idea that we would somehow keep him from posting really disgusts me. I hope I've got this wrong. -Mike.

According to Joe Brennan: >
> I object to the censorship being imposed on henry for allegedly posting too > frequently, even though he stays within the daily limit of 5, and on gabriel > for the quality of his "content," a word that more than smacks of exclusionary > elitism. as a matter of fact, I often enjoy reading henry's posts -- and his > commitment to, and passion for, art is, from my point of view, beyond > question. as for the content issue, there are certainly more trivial remarks > posted everyday than anything that gabriel has posted. to single out these > two poets seems to me to be wrongheaded, whatever the rationale. much more > obnoxious is the assumption that anyone, solely because of proprietary > interests, should take it upon themselves to arbitrarily restrict either the > frequency or quality of the work of other list members without anything > resembling due process. those who advocate freeing henry, gabriel & kent > johnson have it wrong -- we need to free charles and his clones from the > mistaken assumption that exclusion and censorship are the appropriate > responses to what are essentially political and aesthetic differences.
>
> joe brennan
>

↑ Index

143. Mark Wallace
perhaps another suggestion
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I enjoy the open-ended nature of the list and the chance for give and take, but like Steve Shoemaker and some others I also believe too high a number of posts per list to the day by a single person has a habit of shutting conversation down--at a total of only 50 allowable messages a day, it's literally NOT true that anyone can say anything at any time--a concerted attempt to post many times a day does effectively shut out the possibility of other people posting to the list.

While it seems to me that one post per day may cut out too much potential give and take, I'd like to suggest a limit of TWO posts per day, and I'd like to suggest that the owner of the list could and should write a limit on the number of posts into the official Welcome List information. Why two per day? Well, it does allow for response--you can both make your post and respond to any and all who respond to you on the same day, provided you can restrain yourself long enough to allow those other posts to come in. It might even have the added virtue of making people think further about how they're going to respond--while everybody would still be welcome to fire back as quickly as possible if they felt like it, they would do so with the awareness that one quick jab a day is all they're going to have.

I would even suggest that a person who posts THREE times a day should not be given a warning until, say, perhaps the third time they've overposted. An initial warning at the third time, a second warning at time number four, and at time number five having their posting privileges taken away for a limited period of time, say perhaps one or two months. Individuals who post more than three times a day should receive one immediate warning, a second warning, and then be removed from the list on a third occasion.

Obviously, the exact nature of the numbers here should clearly be subject to adjustment. But while I think nothing can or should be done about the tone, etc, of various posts, however frustrating that can be, I do think something can and should be done about individuals who actually do take away from the democracy of the list by their attempt in some literal sense (whether conscious or not) to SEIZE message space.

I would encourage Charles and Joel, again, to write such limitations into the initial message list, and I believe that these limitations will HELP the democratic nature of the forum. But I would further suggest the following--that perhaps a VOTE by the members of the list on the issue of such limitations is also possible. A motion could be put forward by the list owners--people who cared to vote on the issue would have say a week period in which to register their vote.

I look forward to any discussion of this or other possibilities for enabling some level of list modernation that does not in fact constitute censorship.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

144. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger

Re: Help

Fri 4 Dec 1998

Jim Bennet --

I tried backchanneling you regarding "Auster Studies" but the computer belched it back. If you backchannel me I may be able to offer you suggestions.

Hilton Obenzinger

On Wed, 2 Dec 1998, Jim Bennett wrote:

> Hello listies
>
> I have been collecting information about PAUL AUSTER for a paper about his work esp his poetry. I obviously have the books and translations which he has written, but I would be grateful to make contact with anyone who knows him, knew him or has any information which may be of use. (I have tried to contact him direct but I think I have an old address). I am still in the collation phase at the moment and am looking for a direction from which to approach the subject.
>
> His early struggles strike me as poignant, and the story of the manuscript of "The Chronicles of the Guayaki Indians. All very interesting esp in the light of his piece "Why Write?" from "The Art of Hunger".
>
> Thanks
>
> Jim

↑ Index

145. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: email addresses question

Fri 4 Dec 1998

Might anyone here have the email addresses for Peter Jaeger and/or Bill Howe (Essex journal)?

These would be deeply appreciated.

↑ Index

146. A. Jenn Sondheim

*Experiments in Poetry, by Jennifer

Fri 4 Dec 1998

==

Experiments in Poetry, by Jennifer*

Today being such a Beautiful Day in Capital City,
I want to gather parentheses! (One,
Until There is a lovely bouquet in Capital City (By One,

Which I will give to the Very Saddest Person (By One,
And they will be happiest having Lovely all at Once!)))

...

I do will see a Perfect Cloud which is a Metaphor or Like A Simile that you just Make you think a Perfect Picture of

...

If you give me your Name, I will Tell you a story
And I will keep your Name, and there will be a Sound
Of all those Names leaping from the story
And falling Down on the Cooling Ground

.....

End of Experiments in Poetry, by Jennifer

...

*Oh, these are all I could think of! How could Anyone keep this up!!

↑ Index

147. tracy s. ruggles
Re: AUTOMATIC REPLY
Fri 4 Dec 1998

On Friday, December 4, 1998, Someone wrote:
>
> THIS IS AN AUTOMATICALLY GENERATED MESSAGE
>
> ----------[http://metapoetics.listbot.com]----------
>
> Are you tired of going to the POETICS list to read about > the art of mailing list moderation and online community > building/rebuilding/destructing?
>
> FREE POETICS by using This List, the MetaPoetics list, to > talk about the talk about talking about the POETICS list, > and return the POETICS list to Poetics.
>
> Thanks,
> MetaPoetics List Owner

>
>

↑ Index

148. Edward Foster
Re: Tonight
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Maureen Owen

Ed Roberson

Joel Lewis

Lyman Gilmore

7:00 PM
Friday, December 4th

Denise Bibro Gallery
529 West 20th Street, 4th floor
New York City

↑ Index

149. Steven Shoemaker
Re: perhaps another suggestion
Fri 4 Dec 1998

As a staunch proponent of the single post per day platform, I must strenously oppose Mark Wallace's suggestion that two posts per day be allowed. Wallace's proposal, it should be pointed out, doubles the number of allowable posts and so leaves us precariously poised at the very brink of a slippery, indeed exponentially slippery slope: what next--4 posts per day? eight? sixteen? thirty-two? No, my friends, our only salvation lies in the Single, the Unitary, the One.

Oh, ok, I actually think Mark's plan is a better one--it had already occurred to me after I made my post, but of course it would have been too unseemly to violate my barely formulated single-post principle by making another post that same day... steve

↑ Index

150. Eliza McGrand
Re: perhaps another suggestion
Fri 4 Dec 1998

mark

as i pointed out in my post on this issue, there is a limit on total posts, i.e. 50 per day, BUT, BUT, many, in fact most, days go by without limit being reached. why say people can only post once, or twice, a day, on the premise that with 50 as max more posts will shut people out, when even with multiple posters, the great majority of days we do not reach 50. remember, everytime we exceed 50 list gets frozen and that wierd paranoic reaction among those who haven't experienced frozen list occurs, and we haven't had that in WEEKS.

as i also suggested earlier, one could ask for a simpler self control mechanism, with possibly a programming routine built in. i verymuch like your notion of waiting till all resaponses are in, and posting collective answer as means of cutting posts down, rather than posting quick multiple jabs.

but, how about initial suggestion: each person gets max 3 posts day. at post (p) > 3, posts get shunted into queue. if total number of posts (N) =< 35, say, or 40, by say 11 pm, then queue gets released. otherwise, it is released on next day.

or, if same done as self control, you ask people to post max 3, 2 if list mail heavy that day, and wait till 11:30 pm to post any more, or send any additional postings to subsidiary queue area where it is released if N =< 35 or 40 by 11pm. or, if that sort of programming impossible, make it total honor system, i.e. don't post more than 3 until 11:30 pm, if there is still room.

there have been days where there were maybe 10, 15 posts. to sit about and frown and sit on people saying don't want too many posts when there were, in fact, not many posts, seems a bit heavyhanded. i realize i'm acting like a prickly rule-hating anarchist-stereotype poet/writer here, bu but i yam what i yam, old sweet potato...

e

↑ Index

151. Mairead Byrne
Re: perhaps another suggestion
Fri 4 Dec 1998

On Fri, 4 Dec 1998, Mark Wallace wrote:

>
> I would even suggest that a person who posts THREE times a day

> should not be given a warning until, say, perhaps the third time they've > overposted. An initial warning at the third time, a second warning at time > number four, and at time number five having their posting privileges taken > away for a limited period of time, say perhaps one or two months.
> Individuals who post more than three times a day should receive one > immediate warning, a second warning, and then be removed from the list on > a third occasion.
>
I could not agree more with Mark Wallace's suggestion. Could we consider giving a warning, though, before the third and final warning (re: offence number five), so that offenders will know that this warning
(i.e., the ultimate rather than penultimate warning I am proposing) will result in the immediate stripping of posting privileges for the agreed upon length of time (I think this aspect of Mark's post requires further refining). By the way, as I will not be teaching next semester, I may be available for the monitoring of the new system, if terms can be agreed.
Mairead
> /----------\
> | |
> | [redacted] |
> | GWU: |
> | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> | EPC: |
> | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> |_____|
>

↑ Index

152. Tosh

Re: perhaps another suggestion

Fri 4 Dec 1998

My favorite way of responding to the subject of 'too many postings' is to delete the one's I am not interested in. Plus people can backchannel if they want to get really into a subject matter. The choice should be up to the writer of the post, but should also be aware that you are sending out a post that is reaching ....? so many people. Focus who you want to speak to... if it is all, then send it. If it is one person, just send it to that one person.

Case solved! Next case please!

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

153. Elizabeth Treadwell
Re: the backchannels I knew I'd get this morning.
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I write a bit blindly into the list right now as I am on digest and thus haven't seen the latest frontchanneling.

Public apology to Henry Gould for my joining in the public scapegoating. Though heat is what you often get for posting, so when posting often, watch out.

I knew I'd get some lecturey backchanneling and here is what I'd like to respond to from Mark Weiss:

> Then why not bring those discussions to the list? Unless you try and no one listens there's not much to complain about.

I have tried, just not recently. Early summer, Gertrude Stein; later, Laura Riding -- my asking seemed to spark a lot of conversation, which I listened rather than added to. And there were some others.

Maybe I am one of those you automatically delete.

Please don't send any more backchannel to lecture me!!!! I'm a busy and stubborn girl.

cheers to poetry

ELizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

154. Eliza McGrand
nav.gaz. ethical query on new subject
Fri 4 Dec 1998

listafarians: i write this query from, in my bleak moods, what i think may be a naif manque position, and in my better moments, what i think may be a majority, rationalist position. could we kick this query around pretty honestly -- i think the data would merit the perhaps embarrassing self-exposure it may generate.

to set question up: a few months ago, poems for workshop type crit, one of the members from an arena where i often participated in workshop crit appeared to post in another area where i have some admin say. let's call this post K2. K2 was a mocking poem, not particularly great but ok. suddenly appended to K2 was post saying apparent signed poster was not, in fact, poster.

i'll spare you the thrasher details, but in my response to supposed originator of K2, call person "K," i was apparently less than the ultimate in clarity. i got back in response an appallingly vitriolic little gem, saying, among other things (and here is CRUX of matter) something like "you are a mediocre, if that, poet and i always thought your critiques were shallow and self-serving."

now, K had always been, if anything, almost syncophantic. well, that goes too far, but perhaps a bit uncritically admiring? nothing obvious, or excessive, just a faint sense. good at taking a sharp crit, almost invariably positive about my writing. almost always at least one, usually more good points of critique. there had never been anything to prepare me for vitriol.

i wrote back in shock, saying what on earth, and what has upset you, and so forth. nohting about "how could you denigrate my work" because i didn't want to be a whiner. well, again, cutting to chase, apparently my comments on K2 post completely misunderstood to be critical, even, to suggest i was the fake K2 poster. when K got it all straight, wrote apology and said oh, have always liked and respected your writing immensely and great crits etc. type things.

HERE IS CRUX: i was almost nauseous. i simply CANNOT imagine saying either that i like someone's work when i don't, or, conversely, in burst of pique saying i think they suck when i never did think so. it completely, utterly grossed me out. i now have absolutely no trust in K's opinion. it was made worse by rumors sent me that apparently K was/is very religious. this hypcrisy from a purportedly RELIGIOUS person?

i've tried to think, since. sometimes, i've said, it is true, less sharp things than i was thinking. i've made some polite noises about work i am less than wild about. but never actually said anything like "your writing is great" -- more, i'll find an image, or line, or if i can, single poem i like and praise that. and if asked, really asked, i'll be honest about what i don't like.

there are writers i don't like, with work i DO like. if i speak about work, talk about work. i always try, at least, to leave personal opinion out of it. that seems like most basic degree of respect about writing one must have to really be able to do it well, or so i thought. there are people i've been angry at, jealous of, and it is possible i don't accord their work the respect i should, or as fair a reading as i should. and when i think that could be the case, i try to shut up about anything critical unless i'm really totally certain. but i miss in this.

but have you, listmates, ever deliberately slammed work, publically or privately, because you didn't like writer, or thought writer didn't like your work and wanted to "get" them back?

have you, verifiably, seen this happen -- not suspected, but SEEN it as i did in way that makes it unmistakable?

do you think this should be a basic ethical requirement we should make of ourselves as critics? i don't ask thses as straw questions.

for myself, i have this wierd feeling that if i lie, engage in this kind of dishonesty (and i do lie, we all do, but i mean, lie in THIS SPECIFIC WAY), it will pollute my writing. it is maybe superstitious, or voodoo, but at most rational level i can describe, seems like so muc hof writing is instinct and deep truths, i.e. unmediated so as to hold on to raw/edgy malleability and "artistry," that if you muck around by dishonesties about writing, you risk losing your ability to BE honest. and if you do that, you will lose your writing edge. so, in all honestly, it is perhaps selfishness that has made me toe this line more than anything. if i was assured that i could be dishonest in this way and it wouldn't effect my writing, would i do it? i think i probably would not, that it is self-belittling to be untruthful, beneath one. but it is also possible i am completely blindsiding to occurences of this in myself...

even as i write this, the glory of the poetics list is happening -- i'm hearing all of your voices already in response, and i can think of lots of you trying to work out if you know of any dishonest critics who are good writers to bring up as counters. i can't think of any just now, but i will work on it too. K. is, by the way, not a great writer. ok, sometimes flat, sometimes cliched, sometimes overreaching and not succeeding in project of poem. but not in permanently, deeply awful way. more in way that suggests someone new to writing than anything else, someone with work to do that they might, in fact, actually be able to do at some point...

but meanwhile, do you engage in, or know of people who have engaged in this kind of knowingly slanted crit? would you allow someone you knew to do it to write in zine/mag/journal you had control over? or do you know it regularly to occur and automatically factor it in when reading crit/ doing admin tasks involving assessment?

e

↑ Index

155. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: quick history
Fri 4 Dec 1998

As chairman of the Free Henry Gould Committee I feel it is my duty to inform the list that George Bowering's check bounced.---Carlo Parcelli
George Bowering wrote:
>
> >Free Henry Gould
>
> Oh, bad timing! I paid $25 just a month ago.
>
> George Bowering.
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

156. Mark Weiss
Re: the backchannels I knew I'd get this morning.
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Well then, frontchannel. Twice issues raised and discussion provoked would seem to indicate that the system now in place in fact works.

I think Elliza McGrand got it right: maybe on three or four occasions since I've been on the list I've had to wait till the next day for a post to appear because the list was maxed out. Hardly a crisis.

As to the occasional eruptions of imbecility or unseemly passion, or the times when the conversation ties itself into a knot, that's the nature of communication. The britlist recently spent what seemed like a year (or was it two weeks) angrily discussing an article that only one member had read (and refused to quote apparently for fear of legal retribution--they still use the stocks over there). So there were a lot of "If what you're implying he said x, then y...," answered by "actually it was more like z, but you should really look at the article, which is unfortunately virtually unavailable, as the ten copies printed floated down river with the livestock in last week's flood" kinds of posts, all of them vehemently passionate, many of them, given the lack of data, character assassination by way of inuendo. The topic finally went away of its own accord, as would have this one, spurred by Marjorie's initial post, which, having taken on its own life, went some fairly interesting, if intemperate, places before becoming lost in nothing but name-calling. In the past this little polity has survived worse, and without any deus ex machina. Boredom and quiet diplomacy seem potent enough.

Enough handwringing. Maybe what we need is public confessions--Fritz Perls and Mao would have loved that.

On another topic: the word "assassination" implies that it helps to be stoned when you pull the trigger. Is that also true of character assassination?

> I knew I'd get some lecturey backchanneling and here is what I'd like to respond to from Mark Weiss:
>
> Then why not bring those discussions to the list? Unless you try and no one listens there's not much to complain about.
>
> I have tried, just not recently. Early summer, Gertrude Stein; later, Laura Riding -- my asking seemed to spark a lot of conversation, which I listened rather than added to. And there were some others.
>
> Please don't send any more backchannel to lecture me!!!! I'm a busy and stubborn girl.
>
> cheers to poetry
>
> ELizabeth
>
> Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
> P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
> http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

157. David Cameron

Re: perhaps another suggestion

Fri 4 Dec 1998

As a possible solution to the ongoing debate over how many posts one should be allowed to post in a single day, I would like to suggest that anyone who posts to this list be automatically unsubbed from it.

D.

↑ Index

158. Elizabeth Treadwell
I become my own enemy
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Pals and countrypeople,

Am I not allowed to back up Joel in his complaint??? Clearly he has invested WORK in this list, and I wanted to publicly comment on his comments.

Mark Weiss wrote me:
>My point exactly--one can raise issues and provoke comment, even as things >stand.
>Instead we get all this handwringing. The list rapidly turns into a gestalt >therapy session.

I don't want backchannel!!! I don't want to post 3 times a day!@! Perhaps this is my last post ever, posthaste..

To clarify, I want people to be concise and thoughtful -- & respectful maybe, I don't know, it tends to ease REAL COMMUNICATION! I would love LOVE to be on a list I felt more attuned to. For one thing,(not to alienate any dear pals or nothin) this list can feel very like an utterly male dominion, I know I am not the only one who thinks so. It also can feel like a dysfunctional family. Great. Two things I have been running from for years. (not to gestalt ya, pls ignore except as an intellectual construct).

I don't want the list to function as a boredom-at-work easer for people. Or I don't want to be on a list that is. Do your work, go home, go for a walk, whatever. Try a matinee!! Try a chatroom!! I would love the list to be for announcements and thoughtful discussion.

Even as things stand --my definition of which is: there are sometimes things that interest me being discussed, I have made new great contacts-- I am thinking of dropping off the list. Why?? Witness what happened to Jen Hofer when she mentioned gender-neutral pronouns.* Why?? These back -- and later, in the digest, who knows what front- channel lectures from everyone who somehow OWNS the list (or worse yet, poetry- or the entire English language of he's and his's and for all mankind), and these will tend to be -- less than charming

Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

159. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: perhaps another suggestion

Fri 4 Dec 1998

Well, its official. Mark Wallace's post shows that he has been living in this city of bureaucrats too long.
But it did remind me of an incident from my distant past. When I was a kid in Catholic grade school, we had a weekly discussion session with one of the parish priests. Inevitably, one of the sessions dealt with the so-called moral question, "If you were on a life raft that could hold only six people and there were seven survivors who should make the supreme sacrifice?" Because I was perpetually hungry, questions like this irritated me. So I asked the priest, "What if one of the survivors was a communist?" The priest, a gentleman of Polish descent, leaned over an inch from my face and whispered, "Then drowning would be too good for him."
I've suspected limits and boundaries ever since.
Mark Wallace wrote:
>
> I enjoy the open-ended nature of the list and the chance for give > and take, but like Steve Shoemaker and some others I also believe too high > a number of posts per list to the day by a single person has a habit of > shutting conversation down--at a total of only 50 allowable messages a > day, it's literally NOT true that anyone can say anything at any time--a > concerted attempt to post many times a day does effectively shut out the > possibility of other people posting to the list.
>
> While it seems to me that one post per day may cut out too much > potential give and take, I'd like to suggest a limit of TWO posts per day, > and I'd like to suggest that the owner of the list could and should write > a limit on the number of posts into the official Welcome List information.
> Why two per day? Well, it does allow for response--you can both make your > post and respond to any and all who respond to you on the same day, > provided you can restrain yourself long enough to allow those other posts > to come in. It might even have the added virtue of making people think > further about how they're going to respond--while everybody would still be > welcome to fire back as quickly as possible if they felt like it, they > would do so with the awareness that one quick jab a day is all they're > going to have.

>
> I would even suggest that a person who posts THREE times a day
> should not be given a warning until, say, perhaps the third time they've > overposted. An initial warning at the third time, a second warning at time > number four, and at time number five having their posting privileges taken > away for a limited period of time, say perhaps one or two months.
> Individuals who post more than three times a day should receive one > immediate warning, a second warning, and then be removed from the list on > a third occasion.
>
> Obviously, the exact nature of the numbers here should clearly be > subject to adjustment. But while I think nothing can or should be done > about the tone, etc, of various posts, however frustrating that can be, I > do think something can and should be done about individuals who actually > do take away from the democracy of the list by their attempt in some > literal sense (whether conscious or not) to SEIZE message space.
>
> I would encourage Charles and Joel, again, to write such > limitations into the initial message list, and I believe that these > limitations will HELP the democratic nature of the forum. But I would > further suggest the following--that perhaps a VOTE by the members of the > list on the issue of such limitations is also possible. A motion could be > put forward by the list owners--people who cared to vote on the issue > would have say a week period in which to register their vote.
>
> I look forward to any discussion of this or other possibilities > for enabling some level of list modernation that does not in fact > constitute censorship.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
> /----------\
> | |
> | [redacted] |
> | GWU: |
> | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> | EPC: |
> | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> |_____|

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

160. groberts
my two cents laid on the r.r. track
Fri 4 Dec 1998

In the spirit of the long confessionals hereabouts of late...The following suffers from a lack of facetiousness, which no doubt leaves its earnestness open for ridicule: oh well, I 'll take my chances, because I agree that Joel's posts call for more responses from us. I hope it will be clear that my rhetoric of anonymity is deliberate; I pretend to speak for the list but am only speaking for myself, "myself" of course being itself only a caricature.

Who is the list for? For its sponsors and its users (myself and strangers), but not for everyone.

This much (or little) is granted easily enough. But after all it's not so easy as that. Which I think means corollary and perhaps more interesting questions should be asked, yet again.

What is this list for? My generic answer is: To realize day in and day out the notion that this technology can fulfill certain loosely defined but specific goals and needs supposedly shared by sponsors and users alike. But this way of answering the question is perhaps not very helpful after all. And so: What is the list used for? And thus: What do I use the list for? Or: How do I use the list?

-To learn more about experimental poetry and poetics (list as ritual space for the display of secrets to the uninitiated). I first heard about the list from a new friend I made at an academic conference at Orono, ME, so my decision to subscribe to this "community" (with at that time a head count of about 300 and already considered by some overpopulated) was based on an idealized description of it as a well-established venue for the same exhilarating exchange of names, notices, ideas, and opinions that I shared then face to face with other already subscribed listees. I am one of the horde of graduate students who have attached ourselves to the list in the vain hope that we might learn more about poetry ignored or dismissed at the schools to which we are also attached. I sometimes feel that this horde, which consists of individuals who are on some level in economic competetion with each other (a not negligible claim that I have intended to make before), doesn't have any real quickening effect on the discussions, and may even have the reverse effect. Hurrah for those who do not believe that they have a precarious economic interest in what goes on here and contribute out of other personal or political motivations!

-To hear more about publications (list as bulletin board). By far, most of the postings that I have saved over the last two and a half years are announcements about stuff that I can buy, read, view, attend, order, covet, etc..

-To practice and perform an ethos (list as karaoke bar, cruising street, or playground). I occasionally post throwaway verse constructed out of or in response to discussion threads and intended as my contribution to the anarchic polyphony that is so characteristic of this list. The abject and retrograde character of my satires on our own "jargon of tribal intersubjectivity" (de Man) is fun for me to assume and infrequently enough interjected to be harmless as far as I am concerned. I very much appreciate, for example, Alan Sondheim's "experiments in poetry" and think that this list is a good place to find out how the poetics of satire and enunciative position work when they are predicated on a new medium of distribution.

I have tried to participate on the list at least once a month, in however tangential or tentative way, because I think more users need to delurk in order to actively shape this discourse community. I also feel that I would be exploitatively benefiting from the work of others if I did not act to make the list work for them and me in accord with what I understand to be the list's premises and purposes. This is the onlysuch list that I have subscribed to for the simple reasons that I only have so much time for this sort of thing and I still believe this venue can provoke and persuade me to articulate my own poetics, which are not identical with but include that which I described above. Several times, I have been dismayed enough by the amount of what I consider blather and carelessness to unsub. I haven't yet done so because: I still learn something now and then, I am fascinated by the creative potential of this medium, and I am adept at deleting the many posts that don't interest me and that make this list so tantalizingly banal.

Gary R.

↑ Index

161. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: quick history

Fri 4 Dec 1998

What about Bowering's frivolous post that superceded in time, space, cyberspace, hyperspace et al my frivolous post. Viva frivolity. I love listening in on the Bowering/Bromige love cooing. Perhaps, they would coo for us again today.---Carlo Parcelli miekal and wrote:
>
> Its surely a study in poetic consciousness to note how a thread which > originally started by asking the date the atom was split has turned into > missives from the chairman of the Free Henry Gould Committee. Tho I > must admit that everytime I write one of these short posts now I feel > self-conscious (& those who know me, know that is an achievement) & have > this mental image of someone else out there unsubscribing because of > it. Is this the hive mentality devolving into spitfire anarchy?

>
> Rasputin Zukofsky

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

162. Mairead Byrne
Re: nav.gaz. ethical query on new subject
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I was strongly encouraged to write a negative review for the Village Voice a long time ago. I resisted (my editor had something against the author); my copy was badly affected; I didn't write any more reviews for VV. On the other hand, I once wrote a somewhat negative review of a friend's book: I was and continue to be naive and driven. My friend was absolutely enraged: I had broken a serious code. I no longer review professionally: for the most part, I found greater satisfaction in publishing favorable reviews. However, as I say, I am a strikingly naive and lonesome dude: I know this is not the way the great world works. And I still say we should all have to piss standing up. Mairead

↑ Index

163. Tom Orange suggestions: self-control, et al.
Fri 4 Dec 1998

---

the wealth of poetic knowledge and experience that this collection of 700 +/- list subscribers manifests is too great a treasure for it to be diminished in any way.

i thrive on: closely argued disussions of issues in poetics; suggestions and promotions of books and essays to read, small press publications and journals to hunt down and read; compelling cases made for writers whose work i might not otherwise check out; announcements of readings and events, even in places i might have to make an effort to get to; reports from readings and events that i would like to have attended but could not; simple queries that generate broader discussions; and yes, even some bickering (e.g. perloff-gudding, generational agon, etc).

i am enervated by: personal attacks, showboating, grandstanding, baiting, running in-jokes, coffee-talk, idle banter as cure for work-a-day boredom, coterie witticisms. and nit-picky things like misdirected backchannels (careful with that reply key eugene!), whole posts copied into subsequent posts (if you don't know how to change yr email settings, find out!), front-channel requests for the email addresses of people who as it turns out are list subscribers (if you don't know how to review the list of current subscribers, find out!), requests for information that has already been posted (if you don't know how to search the list archives, find out!). (btw, "find out" = read welcome message or backchannel me!)

certainly not everyone shares my tastes, but at the risk of drifting into can't-we-all-just-get-along, let's simply show some respect and responsibility for ourselves and each other.

i suggest the following as a minimal standard for posting: will my post be of interest and relevance to a majority of the 700 subscribers to this list? (as corollary to the notion, stated in the welcome message, that posting here is a form of publication)

((and hoping i havent herein violated my own dictum; poster's worst fear, akin to kent's nobody likes me: am i one of those you auto-delete?)) another suggestion: perhaps those interested could put a rein on the anarchy -vs- censorship debate by the backchannel drafting of some sort of rules of the roost which could then be submitted for general approval?

allbests, tom
[redacted]

---------- There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze ----------

↑ Index

164. Charles Bernstein
Freedom Is Never Free
Fri 4 Dec 1998

A couple of weeks ago I got a note from a friend on the list (yes I still do have some friends on the list) who asked me why the messages had stopped coming. I quickly checked to see what the story was and I discovered the list was locked because over 50 messages had been sent that day. I sent out a message to free the locked posts, but I sent it to the list rather than listserve. Thus my cryptic post of a couple of weeks back: Free Poetics. But the response to that message made me aware that I had not been active enough in exercising the editorial functions of the list. My attention was simply elsewhere, although I continued to read the list.

The Poetics List is by its nature limited and it can't reflect the desire of all its participants, for as has been well articulated by others, the direction that some of the subscribers might wish to take the list will drive others away from it: it has already has. The alienation of many subscribers who for me constitute a core constituency for us is an issue that those of involved in maintaining the list are necessarily more concerned about than some list participants. This has been an issue that has come up in this and every year since the list was started in late 1993 and this is something like the reply I have given in those earlier instances: I may well be mistaken about this, but it has been a founding principal of the list and one I have stated more than any other one except the centrality of announcements of readings and publications for the list.

Indeed, in 1995, when the list had only 200 subscribers, I made the point this way: “I am interested in continuing to explore what formats and styles of posting encourage, rather than simply allow, participation in this ‘virtual uncommunity’. The volume of messages is certainly a useful measure of list activity; but volume itself may be an obstacle for some to participate, just as it may encourage others.”

A year or two later I put it this way: “The paradox is that in an attempt to be open and nonexcluding one can end up excluding those who are unable to handle the volume: people are drowned out rather than kept out until Dreamworks Interactive, Inc., guides us and we asphyxiate.”

In any case, I do not feel obliged to let those who post the most or are the most belligerent in their posts determine the direction of the Poetics List. However, I, along with my collaborators, are reading and considering any and all suggestions we get frontchannel but also, significantly, backchannel.

I am making no claim as to what is right in all cases; I am rather asserting the particular editorial parameters of this specific Internet project, and indeed my own editorial judgment (in cooperation with those who share responsibility with me for the list). Others will surely want to create different lists with different focuses and different limits, but it seemed to me worthwhile at this time to try to reassert the values of the list to which those of who organized it and maintain it are committed.

This is a private list. No one is required to participate, no one is guaranteed a right to participate. Its function, structure, and aims are determined by its editors. I believe in the value of editing and I believe this value does not increase in the age of the Internet, but, if anything, increases. Editorial decisions are open to question; they may be wrong or misguided. The lack of editorial intervention is also a form of editing, subject to dispute.

This is and has always been a moderated list, albeit lightly moderated; the very minimal intervention combined with maximum maintenance (thanks, Joel!) is not to limit the range, anarchy, feistiness, good or bad manners of posts -- but rather to allow space for such exchanges to continue. The parameters of this list does not include absolute right of anyone subscribing to it to send out unlimited messages; indeed, one of the very few ground rules for the list states just the opposite. I am very reluctant to express this in the number of posts per day or even week, because back and forth at any given moment is one of crucial features of the list. However, we ask that those participating in this forum stick to a general sense of limit as measured, over longer periods of time. When, in the judgment of those of working on the list, this limit has been exceed , a polite message, emphasizing that the issue is volume of posts not content, may be sent out; this should suffice for anyone wishing to participate in the list. In the history of the list, I believe we have sent a request to decrease the volume of posting to only four people among the possibly 1000 who have subscribed at one time or another. When a subscriber responds to such multiple requests by increasing the frequency of their posting, then it is our obligation to recognize that the structure we have set up is not working in this one instance and to act accordingly.

I want a Poetics List that I can read straight through, not the only the posts I'm likely to like, but the one that annoy or irritate or surprise or baffle me. I want a list where the folks subscribed don't set their filters (automatic or manual) to delete posts from those people they feel have already heard enough from (or otherwise use their delete button more than their view button) . I may be the only one on this list who has attempted to read all the posts that have been sent to it from the day the list was started. Maybe this makes me a bad judge maybe lists are condemned to cycles of always new readers who stay on till they have had enough. But that's not the kind of list I want.

Maybe I'm imposing reading values based on print journals or "real time" conversation and dialogue onto a new and different medium. Maybe I'm just holding onto an impossible ideal, against all odds, and against those who feel that the instant gratification of being able to post not just a much as you want (which has never been limited) but also as often as you want is a fundamental value of the list. The Internet, we all know, offers much more information that we can take in. I want a list that is not just another example of too much unfiltered, unconsidered product; that can be quiet, even silent, some days, and noisy others that doesn't follow the imperative of the more the better, since the space is "free and unlimited".

Electronic space is neither free or unlimited because our lives are neither free or unlimited.

The economy of the list is affected by who posts more or less, what tones they use, who is scared off and who is egged on, who has the time to read it and write to it -- and who doesn't and perhaps feels unable to post because never able to get the end of the last series of posts before the topic has flown on to something else. My temperament may indeed be contrary to this medium: I seek containment, a space I feel I can inhabit, that is slow as much as fast, kind as much as unkind. A space I can think in and a space I want to go for conversation. These expectations are unreasonable and perhaps that is the site of the conflict here: for I want a list that articulates limits rather than imposes them by volumetric default. And I want to bring this about by self-reflective engagement of all those participating. This may not be the way some of you see these issues, but I invite those interested to stick with me in this electronic experiment.

I don't propose to stop the list or to change its structure. I propose to stick with it, pretty much as it has been these past several years. No one has been deleted from this list, but those of us running the list reserve the right to limit the number of posts that subscribers can send and, from time to time, to make editorial comments on posts that have been sent.

Last night when I got home my son six-year old son Felix said to me, "I wish everyone in the whole school lived in the same building". Thinking of the Poetics List, I can't say I feel the same way. But I do wish we were all in the same conversation. I want to work for that, because I know it won't be easy to get there. It never has been.

Charles Bernstein
David Gray Professor of Poetry and Letters
Poetics Program
Department of English
438 Clemens Hall
State University of New York
Buffalo, NY 14260
[redacted]
fax: [redacted]

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein

↑ Index

165. cris cheek
Re: it feels like harassment
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Hi Randolph,

> that no one has the right to tell anyone to > shut up and that if they like points so much they should stick their heads > in a pencil sharpener.

ouch! mine's a 2B (or not too buzz-buzz, gloes that money). Maybe i misunderstrode the question. You can't make a Hamlet without breaking posts.

understanding (i'll respect your shit if you respect my shit?) often misses the point as you so eloquently put it. Shanks for the memo bro.

let this list roll - with respect (more quirky humours, less guffaws)

I mean, if this be turf, why so many people out cutting the grass?

love and love
cris

↑ Index

166. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Thanks to Charles for confirming everything in Joe Brennan's earlier post.---Carlo Parcelli Charles Bernstein wrote:
>
> A couple of weeks ago I got a note from a friend on the list (yes I still do > have some friends on the list) who asked me why the messages had stopped > coming. I quickly checked to see what the story was and I discovered the list > was locked because over 50 messages had been sent that day. I sent out a > message to free the locked posts, but I sent it to the list rather than > listserve. Thus my cryptic post of a couple of weeks back: Free Poetics. But > the response to that message made me aware that I had not been active > enough in > exercising the editorial functions of the list. My attention was simply > elsewhere, although I continued to read the list.
>
> The Poetics List is by its nature limited and it can't reflect the desire of > all its participants, for as has been well articulated by others, the > direction > that some of the subscribers might wish to take the list will drive others > away > from it: it has already has. The alienation of many subscribers who for me > constitute a core constituency for us is an issue that those of involved in > maintaining the list are necessarily more concerned about than some list > participants. This has been an issue that has come up in this and every year > since the list was started in late 1993 and this is something like the reply I > have given in those earlier instances: I may well be mistaken about this, but > it has been a founding principal of the list and one I have stated more than > any other one except the centrality of announcements of readings and > publications for the list.

>
> Indeed, in 1995, when the list had only 200 subscribers, I made the point > this > way:
> “I am interested in continuing to explore what formats and styles of posting > encourage, rather than simply allow, participation in this ‘virtual > uncommunity’. The volume of messages is certainly a useful measure of list > activity; but volume itself may be an obstacle for some to participate, > just as > it may encourage others.”
>
> A year or two later I put it this way:
> “The paradox is that in an attempt to be open and nonexcluding one can > end up excluding those who are unable to handle the volume: people are drowned > out rather than kept out until Dreamworks Interactive, Inc., guides us and > we asphyxiate.”
>
> In any case, I do not feel obliged to let those who post the most or are the > most belligerent in their posts determine the direction of the Poetics List.
> However, I, along with my collaborators, are reading and considering any and > all suggestions we get frontchannel but also, significantly, backchannel.
>
> I am making no claim as to what is right in all cases; I am rather asserting > the particular editorial parameters of this specific Internet project, and > indeed my own editorial judgment (in cooperation with those who share > responsibility with me for the list). Others will surely want to create > different lists with different focuses and different limits, but it seemed to > me worthwhile at this time to try to reassert the values of the list to which > those of who organized it and maintain it are committed.
>
> This is a private list. No one is required to participate, no one is > guaranteed > a right to participate. Its function, structure, and aims are determined by > its > editors. I believe in the value of editing and I believe this value does not > increase in the age of the Internet, but, if anything, increases. Editorial > decisions are open to question; they may be wrong or misguided. The lack of > editorial intervention is also a form of editing, subject to dispute.

>
> This is and has always been a moderated list, albeit lightly moderated; the > very minimal intervention combined with maximum maintenance (thanks, Joel!) is > not to limit the range, anarchy, feistiness, good or bad manners of posts -- > but rather to allow space for such exchanges to continue. The parameters of > this list does not include absolute right of anyone subscribing to it to send > out unlimited messages; indeed, one of the very few ground rules for the list > states just the opposite. I am very reluctant to express this in the number of > posts per day or even week, because back and forth at any given moment is one > of crucial features of the list. However, we ask that those participating in > this forum stick to a general sense of limit as measured, over longer periods > of time. When, in the judgment of those of working on the list, this limit has > been exceed , a polite message, emphasizing that the issue is volume of posts > not content, may be sent out; this should suffice for anyone wishing to > participate in the list. In the history of the list, I believe we have sent a > request to decrease the volume of posting to only four people among the > possibly 1000 who have subscribed at one time or another. When a subscriber > responds to such multiple requests by increasing the frequency of their > posting, then it is our obligation to recognize that the structure we have set > up is not working in this one instance and to act accordingly.
>
> I want a Poetics List that I can read straight through, not the only the posts
> I'm likely to like, but the one that annoy or irritate or surprise or baffle > me. I want a list where the folks subscribed don't set their filters > (automatic > or manual) to delete posts from those people they feel have already heard > enough from (or otherwise use their delete button more than their view button)
> . I may be the only one on this list who has attempted to read all the posts > that have been sent to it from the day the list was started. Maybe this makes > me a bad judge maybe lists are condemned to cycles of always new readers who > stay on till they have had enough. But that’s not the kind of list I want.

>
> Maybe I’m imposing reading values based on print journals or “real time” > conversation and dialogue onto a new and different medium. Maybe I’m just > holding onto an impossible ideal, against all odds, and against those who feel > that the instant gratification of being able to post not just a much as you > want (which has never been limited) but also as often as you want is a > fundamental value of the list. The Internet, we all know, offers much more > information that we can take in. I want a list that is not just another > example > of too much unfiltered, unconsidered product; that can be quiet, even silent, > some days, and noisy others that doesn’t follow the imperative of the more
> the > better, since the space is “free and unlimited”.
>
> Electronic space is neither free or unlimited because our lives are neither > free or unlimited.
>
> The economy of the list is affected by who posts more or less, what tones they > use, who is scared off and who is egged on, who has the time to read it and > write to it -- and who doesn’t and perhaps feels unable to post because never > able to get the end of the last series of posts before the topic has flown on > to something else. My temperament may indeed be contrary to this medium: I > seek > containment, a space I feel I can inhabit, that is slow as much as fast, kind > as much as unkind. A space I can think in and a space I want to go for > conversation. These expectations are unreasonable and perhaps that is the site > of the conflict here: for I want a list that articulates limits rather than > imposes them by volumetric default. And I want to bring this about by > self-reflective engagement of all those participating. This may not be the way > some of you see these issues, but I invite those interested to stick with > me in > this electronic experiment.
>
> I don’t propose to stop the list or to change its structure. I propose to > stick > with it, pretty much as it has been these past several years. No one has been > deleted from this list, but those of us running the list reserve the right to > limit the number of posts that subscribers can send and, from time to time, to > make editorial comments on posts that have been sent.
>

> Last night when I got home my son six-year old son Felix said to me, “I wish > everyone in the whole school lived in the same building”. Thinking of the > Poetics List, I can’t say I feel the same way. But I do wish we were all in > the > same conversation. I want to work for that, because I know it won’t be easy to > get there. It never has been.
>
> Charles Bernstein
> David Gray Professor of Poetry and Letters
> Poetics Program
> Department of English
> 438 Clemens Hall
> State University of New York
> Buffalo, NY 14260
> [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
>
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

167. Mark Weiss
Re: suggestions: self-control, et al.
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I have included most of your post because I assume that many, like me, have a hard time remembering what is being referred to, particularly in this forum, where several discussions may be going on at once. Part of what this list (I suppose any list) is is a community. Much of what you don't like is a form of community bonding. That I can share a witticism with someone I've never met and who, prior to my meeting them here, have never read, is I think a good thing. That I am allowed into the intimacy of a running joke, which is, by the way, an exemplary text (sorry, David, George and Rachel, if that spoils some of your fun) is for me a privilege. But there are always posts that I'll delete. Reports of readings I think are fairly useless. I'm glad they're there for others who like them, and I'm glad I don't have to read them. I of course have no idea what's of interest to the 700 subscribers, and pitching my posts with that in mind would render me mute more often than I would like. I can try to be relevant to my own interests, just as I am in work that I choose to publish, and hope that others may also be interested. I know no other mechanism. Here's a rule of courtesy I would like to see observed (I observe it myself). Backchannelled messages should never be frontchannelled without the original sender's permission. I often use backchannel for quiet diplomacy or because I think that my message might be too incendiary if sent to the entire list. I'm aware that a backchannelled message may be seen as offensive or even harassing (I hope none of mine have been). If that's the case the recipient, it seems to me, should in the first place have recourse to Joel or Charles.

> i thrive on: closely argued disussions of issues in poetics; suggestions and promotions of books and essays to read, small press publications and journals to hunt down and read; compelling cases made for writers whose work i might not otherwise check out; announcements of readings and events, even in places i might have to make an effort to get to; reports from readings and events that i would like to have attended but could not; simple queries that generate broader discussions; and yes, even some bickering (e.g. perloff-gudding, generational agon, etc).
>
> i am enervated by: personal attacks, showboating, grandstanding, baiting, running in-jokes, coffee-talk, idle banter as cure for work-a-day boredom, coterie witticisms. and nit-picky things like misdirected backchannels (careful with that reply key eugene!), whole posts copied into subsequent posts (if you don't know how to change yr email settings, find out!), front-channel requests for the email addresses of people who as it turns out are list subscribers (if you don't know how to review the list of current subscribers, find out!), requests for information that has already been posted (if you don't know how to search the list archives, find out!). (btw, "find out" = read welcome message or backchannel me!)
>
> certainly not everyone shares my tastes, but at the risk of drifting into can't-we-all-just-get-along, let's simply show some respect and responsibility for ourselves and each other.
>
> i suggest the following as a minimal standard for posting: will my post be of interest and relevance to a majority of the 700 subscribers to this list? (as corollary to the notion, stated in the welcome message, that posting here is a form of publication)

↑ Index

168. Dale Smith

The Hat

Fri 4 Dec 1998

I read Jordan Davis and Chris Edgar's first issue of The Hat this morning, which I like for its focus and consistency of tone and 'spirit.' Two male editors publishing a first issue with only women is quite notable and the results are not what I expected. (Hoa came into my room last night with a stack in one hand of poetry submissions from men and in the other ONLY one piece from a woman). So, I understand building an issue of women's writing is no easy task. To find a grouping of work that corresponds or echoes internally is difficult enough. Restricting that to a particular, traditionally under-represented gender, is moreso.

Lisa Jarnot's mix of high and low "tones" produces a lyric composition that dips into the literal revelation of her experience--emotional, cultural and intellectual. She writes:

In New Haven all the lights go on across the sun, and for millennia those who kiss fall into hospitals, riding trains, wearing black shoes, pursued by those they love, the Chinese in the armies with the shiny sound of Johnny Cash, and in my plan to be myself
I became someone else with soft lips and a secret life

The movement of phrases builds speed, injambing the lines to form a poetic structure that "sounds" like a poem in the classic sense. That is, her tone is elevated (as is the subject, I think) but the pieces, the fragments of life drawn in, are personal, popular, or trivial: mundane pieces elevated through the transmundane song of the poet.

In 'Moo is Om Backwards' Jarnot offers a similar song of heightened musical sensitivity that works if you don't mind the repetition and cuteness of its mooing cows and "daisies in the fields." Still, even the repetition (increased to abstraction), roots itself in song. It is a goofy song and I for one demand more goofiness from poetry! There is an expressiveness here worthy of mention, especially in this cynical domain.

Janice Lowe's poem 'The Summervilles of Pickens County' foregrounds racial concerns in an intense way. Although her use of the little 'i' is an annoying tick, she breaks the polite surface of the usual composure and repression surrounding such issues. She writes:

i tell the black ones calling me red
    you wanna be red like me nigger
the white ones
    you redder than me you gotdam cracker
all this is turning me
into a kind of peckerwood nigger

i don't like for people to be black and greasy at the same time
i prefer yellow women for lovemaking some have said
all my children have lightskinned mothers
of course i'm a race man

Attention to coloquial speech ("gotdamn cracker") and an emotional velocity that is specific to theme and location allows for the tension of this poem to expand out beyond theoretical concerns of race into actual perceptive rendering of the embodied word.

Kimberly Lyons short-lined poems attend to perceptions of event and object, executed with the confidence of a poet: elegant, tight, sonorous, commanding delight from those (like me) who find it hard to give. Prone to 'realistic' perception rather than forced abstraction, these poems radiate a lyric charm and sympathetic interior that makes her voice vulnerable to charges of naivetee and empty chatter.

On the bar
last night I saw
Three martinis,
trembling triangles.
Nancy said
this is the first time
I've felt happy.
Big white trucks.
I guess everybody goes there
at least once.

Sutured is that kind of medical word.

August just whitens things down into themselves.

It's not the paratactic stanza jumps that bother me, but the occasional weight one word is forced to carry, words simply not worthy of the emotional depth conveyed in her phrasing. Still, 'overall,' a fine, (and by far the largest grouping here--20 pages), selection of poems.

Juliana Spahr closes The Hat with a single poem called 'Poem.' It addresses the yankee anxieties of the pronoun (the List covered this territory some weeks ago) in a direct, syllogistic address from "Albany or maybe Honolulu."

One fine day one woke up and found one's self gone.
But one didn't leave the boys behind.
One didn't leave the girls behind.

One didn't end nothing or it.
So one called out: mix with [generic pronound deleted]; mess with [generic pronound deleted].
Or I or he or she am or is trying missing or mixing things up.
Thanks for the directions.

This self-proclaimed "love poem" might be void of lutes and forlorn troubadors, but it is a kind of offering of the self, however guarded by the playfulness of syntactic play. This sophisticated piece plays with the implied meanings and reverberations of syntax and word-choice native to Spahr's socio/cultural concerns. But you'll have to read it for yourself to see the playful layers she weaves.

There are many other pieces worthy of mention but I am exhausted as are you, dear reader, I'm sure. So check out The Hat. Its editors have made something that is new to me, revealing an aspect of women's writings overlooked b

---

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

169. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Fri 4 Dec 1998

carlo, i just don't think it's that simple, man...

here charles has taken the time to situate his own motivations---his sense of what the list is, how it works, what he'd like to see happen... he can't be faulted for taking the time to state his opinions---though he can always be faulted to the extent that, as the person who founded (and provides some moderation for) the list, he invokes his (as he puts it) editorship in ways that may conflict with what some "we" out here likes or dislikes... and sure, charles's sense of the list is itself, as he indicates, a function of what he likes and dislikes, and what he's learned re such lists over time...

but the list, like that "we" two sentences back, is clearly neither univocal, nor binary... based on the last few dozen statements from various folks re what they like/don't like about the list (incl. you and me, carlo), one might well conclude that there is NO consensus at all as to what we should do re how this list runs... there is no consensus that it be left entirely to its own devices, there is no consensus that it NOT be... some of us (incl. me) have taken the rhetorical stance that it'd be better if we exerted a bit more self-moderation (i won't spell this out again)... some of us (like you, i'd say) are asking for a more vigorous, even potentially agonistic exchange, in the belief that only with this measure of "freedom" might we collectively attain something of lasting value (fair gloss?)... and some of us don't understand why we're even bothering about any of this... we all have our reasons, that is, which may be entirely rational (or whatever)... but we all have our reasons...

let us assume the list functions out of some working dissensus, ok?... then, how best to handle this?... "do nothing" is surely not the only, nor is it necessarily the most democratic, response (if i believed this, i'd hardly go for ANY form of govt.)... neither is "censorship"...

and note: much of what we have at our disposal by way of gauging what IS being done around here is the list history---which itself varies considerably (some of us have been here for a month, some for a number of years)---and our experiences with other such lists (which varies in the obvious ways)...

again, like it or not, charles is free [cough] to take a stand here, and it's clearly not one based on sheer "censorship," but on editorial judgment---as he conceives it... whatever else, it's clear to yours truly, anyway, that charles is not merely casting out of the poetix empire those who fail to meet his arbitrarily-imposed parameters---though here again, you are free [cough] to see things otherwise...

i wonder though: are we really at such odds here, carlo?---or are we, both of us in our ways, being teased by the seductive nature of this medium---our words---to fall into such polarized quarters?...

alla that said: though i'd no doubt turn the screw somewhat differently than charles (b/c, for one, i'm not charles), i can only applaud his persistence here... and in any case i find his willingness to engage with us (an inclusive and dissenting us, mind you)---not in condescending terms, either, but by being forthcoming about what he finds important, and urgent---ample evidence that he's listening to what's being said...

best,

joe

↑ Index

170. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Fri 4 Dec 1998

---

oh & forgot to say that i had a chestnut blow up in my face the other day... the pulp hit me in my left eye, no shit...

& i pricked the shell too prior to roasting, as i always do...

tis the season, gotta watch them little suckers...

ok, gonna go watch the grinch steal xmas now...

///

joe

↑ Index

171. George Thompson
Re: Auster Studies
Fri 4 Dec 1998

Perhaps the list would benefit from your suggestions. I would be interested in them.

GT

> Jim Bennet --
>
> I tried backchanneling you regarding "Auster Studies" but the computer belched it back. If you backchannel me I may be able to offer you suggestions.
>
> Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

172. michael corbin
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Fri 4 Dec 1998

I'm not sure of the ground work.

She helped me move the boxes. And put the books on the shelf. It got to be late. And she stayed. I didn't know he was returning. We weren't lovers, he and I, anymore, but there were future possibilities. And we still loved. We all needed a place to sleep. We could all save face.

"Because there is this unfinishing that partitions our being in common, there is 'literature', that indefinitely repeated suspended gesture of touching the limit, indicating and inscribing it but without crossing it or abolishing it in the fiction of a common body. To write for others means in reality to write because of others. The writer gives nothing and destines nothing to others; the project she has in view is not to communicate anything whatsoever, neither a message or herself. To be sure, there are always messages and persons, and it is important that both (treating them, if I can, as identical for the moment) to be communicated. But writing is the necessity of exposing the limit--not the limit of communication, but the limit on which communication takes place." Jean-Luc Nancy, "Of Being-in-Common", _Community at Loose Ends_.

Difficult, when the bus is full (H4 line before 9 AM) to scribble. To send messages. But we are shoulder-to-shoulder. "Please move all the way back." "Pull to signal driver to stop".

mc

↑ Index

173. Henry Gould
showdowns
Sat 5 Dec 1998

"And for God's sake you didn't expect anyone to _listen_ to your foul- mouthed broadcasts, did you? Some listened until bored to death and then quit. Viola listened and was fed up with your ranting. I didn't listen at all, the mere fact of your broadcasting at all at such a time was enough for me. You might as well realize that there is a point in all controversy beyond which a man's life (his final card) is necessarily forfeit. A man accepts that and goes on with his eyes open. But when the showdown comes he loses his life." - William Carlos Williams, Letter to Ezra Pound, March 29, 1946. (Pound was awaiting trial for treason.)

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

174. Jim Andrews
Infoanimism and trickster accusations
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I think that the difficulties of any sort of poetics that involve things like dhtml or javascript or, really, any high-tech--and Alan Sondheim, Bob Haynes, and Bill Marsh have alluded to difficulties here--is to bring it home. Though this is also a general challenge in writing anything. To bring it home isn't to get lost in the technicalities of scripting, sort of like a creative writing approach that talks about line breaks and technique interminably. Though it is interesting to consider a criticism that can at once talk about the neath text in an engaging way while also finding ways to talk about totally non-technical dimensions of new media. Ideally, we develop a critical language that can lite through all the dimensions of the work and the frame and the other frames without getting bogged down in technicalities. That's what I'd like, anyway, and that's what I'm working toward in ditties like Infoanimism and even Enigma n.

I appreciate the opportunity to talk about these things here among writers with a real interest in these things, Alan, Bob, Bill, all.

Which brings me to my own two bits worth on the 'posting scandal'. Anyone who's ever organized poetry readings for a while or probably any public arty forum eventually seems to suffer the old phenomenon of the trickster insurrection and accusation. Lordy it's a bore the fifth time around. It's a bore and it's annoying because the important issue of freedom of speech is trivialized by the trickster who turns it into a childish sideshow for the sake of getting attention, nothing more.

↑ Index

175. Chris Nagler
Re: Des Forets query
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Does anyone know of any English translations of novels by Louis-Rene Des Forets? If so, what is your impression of their quality?

chris nagler

↑ Index

176. Billy Little defining audience
Sat 5 Dec 1998

---

in the Creeley interview in the Cortland Review:
Who are some of the up and coming writers that interest you? Or are there any?

There are always far more than anyone as myself can keep track of or even recognize. The old are hardly the best judges for the young. "The old order changeth yielding place to new..." Hardly a new recognition. I remember Pound saying years ago that, after fifty, one can't keep ones eye on all the sprouting corn. After seventy it's hard enough even to see it. I think quickly of two young writers who interest me and always have: Jennifer Moxley, Vincent Katz. Susan Howe (who I have to remember is not young!) interests me always. Alice Notley, Leslie Scalapino. To you they might seem already too settled. But some writers, as Robert Grenier, are never so "done" as that presumes. They are always at work, on the way. Writers as Duncan McNaughton still wait for a defining audience.

what do you think he means by "a defining audience"

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.

His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

177. A. Jenn Sondheim
moderation, posting, etc.
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I hesitated about writing this post because I knew it would be a long one. For about five years, I've moderated or co-moderated a number of email lists, including Cybermind which has heavy posting at times; we reached an all-time high a couple of years ago at 117. We've also been trolled, hacked, and otherwise targeted by people wanting to bring down the list. Given that, I'm happy to see Poetics, in fact, so healthy. And every list goes through self-reflection; every list has in-groups, frequent posters - and lurkers, etc.

First point - when Michael Current and I started Cybermind, we thought of a list as a privilege - that subscribers are privileged to be on it - that it shouldn't ever be taken for granted. Even if the moderator does very little in terms of focusing, there is no reason whatsoever to assume that you have a _right_ to be on a list.

Why? Because a list is always running on free labor - on the labor of the sysadmins, the software designers (who are usually updating), and so forth. And especially the labor of the moderator. Don't _ever_ take this for granted; while at this point, my lists pretty much run themselves, there have been times (and will be more) when I've had to work hours and hours a day to keep them going. These times include heavy periods of subbing and unsubbing and requests regarding both; advertising the list whenever a change is made; searching for and augmenting a new 'home' for the list (Cybermind has moved three times); dealing with error messages - which can be nothing, or extremely bothersome if a loop's set up (one day I was on 16 hours taking care of that) feeding forward exponentially into people's mailboxes; dealing with problems of focus and other content issues; dealing with groups who deliberately try to troll or otherwise derail a list; and backchanneling constantly to keep things going smooth- ly.

This is all done freely, by me, and I assume by Charles, and by others who are running lists. And there _never_ is an answer to questions of focus, on-topic, off-topic, etc. that makes sense. Right now, I'm working with several people, starting a focused semi-moderated list dealing with cyber- culture, because Cybermind has become an entrenched community (which I do not mean as a criticism). I notice Poetics is becoming the same, and that worries me.

What's the problem? That there are hundreds and hundreds on this listserv, and yet the number of high-volume posters is very limited. These posters know each other; they reference each other by first name, tell in-jokes about each other, create false and sometimes real squabbles and faux texts, and so forth. While this givesa sense of community, it is also very exclusionary; I understand in fact that there _is_ another list that has split from Poetics perhaps because of this.

We all want to be supportive of each other. Anyone working in the arts (however you want to define it) is under attack. Almost no one can support her- or himself. The statistics given in _Information on Artists, A study of artists' work-related human and social service needs in four U.S. loca- tions,_ written by Joan Jeffri and published by the Research Center for Arts and Culture at Columbia, are pathetic. In 1996, almost half NY artists (47.6%) earned less than $3000 from their work. So what is the point here?

That one way support occurs is through community formation. But commun- ity formation can also be organized around limited spoils - who gets grants, who doesn't, who's invited in the _other_ list, who isn't. The same community that's supportive is also exclusionary. The same devices on an email list that are supportive - first name and reminiscence for example - also create a feeling among others (including myself for that matter) that they're looking in through a window, which can't help, by the very terms and intensity and firewalling of that window, be a sign of privilege.

I don't honestly know what to do about this; other lists have the same symptoms, the same debates, the same trajectories - even the same splits into other lists (Future Culture and Fop-l and Phil-Lit all have had their splits). The splits sadden me, since they're more divisive than the on- list behaviors they critique by their very removal.

Now, Poetics is admirable. There are a high number of female posters - which you might take for granted, but this is by no means always the case. Flames here are like embers elsewhere; they're not particularly igniting. And the discussions are usually, almost always, focused - even these recent discussions are focused.

So what I would like to see, is, first, no quota for a person, but the 50 a day is reasonable (I think Cyb is currently set up with the same). Second, sensitivity to in-group/out-group behaviors - if you're _really_ writing something, say, to Peter Holiday, do you need the whole list to see it? While the writing might be great, etc., it does all too often create an image of eclusion. Third, advertising books and magazines etc. are terrific here and necessary - where else? Small press distribution has a hard enough time. Fourth, perhaps there should also be a few more calls for papers and conference announcements. Sixth, try and bring others into the discussion through open-ended questioning at times. This may seem ab- surd and unnecessary, but again, all lists follow these trajectories, and it would be great if we could slightly switch off here.

And seventh, even though this is a private list, I don't think it would be a bad idea to actively try and bring new writers - who would benefit of course - onto it. At 660 or so, it's not _that_ private; Cyb's been around only 350 and we're completely public, listed all over the place.

Finally, I think calls from the moderator shouldn't be easily dismissed; he or she has spent _a lot_ of time working on the list, overseeing it, notices constantly, so it's easy to keep track of the overall trajectory of the list; when discussion on Cybermind gets nasty, the unsubs come in pretty quickly. So by all means give her or him the benefit of the doubt here - for us, Poetics is a space of discussion or presentation or dis- tribution - but we're not as aware of the full architecture as the mod- erator.

I'm not calling, btw, for a bow-down to authority or anything of that sort. Nor am I saying moderators are always right; there was a time I really blew it badly on Fop-l. But I am asking for a possibly more open and accommodating list than has been indicated in the recent past (of course from the viewpoint of the dinosaurs, all past is recent here).

Anyway, elsewhere I've lectured myself hoarse on issues of list gover- nance, and it's no wonder that so many moderators go, literally, crazy. But that's another topic and elsewhere.

Alan

↑ Index

178. Charles Alexander

Re: Erasing/rigor

Sat 5 Dec 1998

> For example, the programs Jim Rosenberg created to realize the vision of John Cage (this was the stuff with key words appearing vertically down the middle of the page, a sort of variation on acrostic, taken from existing texts --- anyone remember the name of this form?).

mesostic
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

179. Carmen Butcher
West Coast Poetry Live--Lipstick Eleven Party/Small Press Traffic
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I went to the Lipstick Eleven Party tonight, a frosty night in SF, and the readings were wonderful. The half of this event I heard was superb. The scene from Kevin Killian's and Wayne Smith's "Diamonds and Rust" had the audience laughing. Dodie Bellamy of Small Press Traffic, Norma Cole (also Isabella Rossellini in "Diamonds and Rust"), Robert Gluck, and Robin Tremblay- McGaw read fresh, engaging pieces. And the raffled prizes were very pink and splendid.

I heard about the reading here! Cheers, Carmen

↑ Index

180. J. Fuhrman
Re: Erasing
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Like everyone else I am sick of the meta-list talk and am anxious to get back to talking about poetry (if that's really what the list is for.) I thought I would pose a questions since many have said it would benefit the list if more people asked open-ended questions. I am a poet, not an academic or scholar so if my question seems clunky so be it. Lately I have been reading Rachel Blau DuPlessis's brilliant and haunting _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_,. In it, the image of text erased comes up. This image is also frequent in Michael Palmer and many other contemporary poets as well as visual artists. (Though I can't think of the names of any visual artists at the times, my head is full of images of text erased, blocked or blurred.) O.K. so my question, what is it about the decade we are in that makes this image resonate with us now. I guess the easy answer is that language poets and conceptual arts are interested in the philosophical issues that surround the question of "what is a text?" but I wonder if there might be more to it. In the sixties, poets were drawn to images of stones and bones partly because they may have been reading Jung-- but I think there were larger forces at work. The retreat into basic archetypal imagery was a response to the violence of the era. I think this argument is from _The Psyco-Sexual Muse_-- is that the book's title? I don't think I read it but I remember when it came out.) Anyway,I am searching for a sort of cultural answer and maybe it doesn't exist-- but I would be interested in what people think. If a cultural answer isn't appropriate, why not?

Joanna Fuhrman

↑ Index

181. Kathy Lou Schultz
Re: West Coast Poetry Live--Lipstick Eleven Party/Small Press Traffic
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Woo-hoo! And might I add that Camille Roy was sultry, Mike Amnasan funny, and the lovely boy winner of the Hair-Do Dolls very gracious and grateful. Champagne and lovely La Med finger food was enjoyed in abundance. The readers/performers were all wonderful, as was the audience. Thanks to everyone for attending; I counted approx. 50 lovelies in all. And, remember, you heard about it here. Kathy Lou eyes of blue with a blond hair-do

Carmen Butcher wrote:
>
> I went to the Lipstick Eleven Party tonight, a frosty night in SF, and the > readings were wonderful. The half of this event I heard was superb. The > scene from Kevin Killian's and Wayne Smith's "Diamonds and Rust" had the > audience laughing. Dodie Bellamy of Small Press Traffic, Norma Cole (also > Isabella Rossellini in "Diamonds and Rust"), Robert Gluck, and Robin Tremblay-> McGaw read fresh, engaging pieces. And the raffled prizes were very pink and > splendid.
>
> I heard about the reading here! Cheers, Carmen

↑ Index

182. schuchat
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Sat 5 Dec 1998

---

the relevant work of scholarship on the issue of "whither the list" is Albert O. Hirschman, EXIT, VOICE AND LOYALTY, written in the 1960s. I recommend it to all.

↑ Index

183. miekal and
whodunnit / festival
Sat 5 Dec 1998

---

this is only half of the story, Id like to see word count & see how the fabulous 20 stacks up, maybe you could bribe the twins to do it, in exchange for a free lifetime sub to the list.

Henry Gould 39
Gabriel Gudding 34
Kent Johnson 32
Mark Weiss 29
Jonathon Mayhew 29
A. Jenn Sondheim 25
David Bromige 24
miekal and 21
Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher 20
Eliza McGrand 19
Mairead Byrne 17
Mark Prejsnar 17
Mark DuCharme 14
Michael Magee 14
Aldon Nielsen 13
Dale Smith 13
Patrick Pritchett 12
George Bowering 12
Judy Roitman 11
Kathy Lou Schultz 11
Ron Silliman 11
Maria Damon 10
Todd Baron /*/ ReMap 10

one things that occurs to me & only one since alan, charles & ron have done a remarkable job of stroking the fire without smouldering it, is commeraderie, private sub lists, conspiracies & reconfigurations of the electronic space is how the electronic wilderness sustains itself. the more edges the more diversity. one evolution of the list that hasnt been discussed is it feels its time for real life poetics list gatherings/festivals, gatherings that would have the breadth that the list has achieved, a gathering where visual, sound, performance, & plain old poets who write words in lines could meet for several days & maybe shake up the patterns that have developed & do real work as well -- this is the same conclusion that the mailart network came to in the middle 80s, 1000s of people had mixed it up in the mail & it was time to meet face to face & invoke alliances of personality, taste & attraction that werent possible from simply exchanging art via mail. just an idea, the logistics of such gatherings would be daunting.

I too would like to return to the regularly scheduled broadcasts & am scheming of initiating a project on the list, that could occupy a narrow band of this broadcast. Im interesting in collectively creating a poetics of the hypertext that would withstand the enslaught of the many invigorated minds & styles -- & to create such a dialogue / reading thru as a hypertext. To do this everything posted to this discussion would have to useable on a website other than the archives. Much of the hypertext & its discussion is quite bland & unremarkable & it would be a significant contribution to the field as a whole is we (or at least the fabulous & verbose 20) could take a stab at changing the static & 3 dimensional way hypertext thought seems to be evolving.

miekal

↑ Index

184. miekal and higgins memorial
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Does anyone know who is setting up the Dick Higgins memorial at Judson Church on December 27?

↑ Index

185. Pierre Joris
Re: Des Forets query
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Chris Nagler wrote:

> Does anyone know of any English translations of novels by Louis-Rene Des Forets? If so, what is your impression of their quality?
>
> chris nagler

I don't know if they are still in print, but you may be able to get them through a University Library:

Des Forets, Louis-Rene. _The beggars. _(D. Dobson, London, 1948) (Translation of Les mendiants.)

_The children's room. _
(Calder, London 1963)
Translation of La chambre des enfants. (Includes The bavard.--The children's room.--The great moments of a singer.)

The latter would be a great find as it contains the core works (I think The Bavard is his best fiction) -- though I don't know how good the translation is, never having read it. Des Forets is a wonderful writer -- I guess he is getting somewhat better known here now because of Blanchot's renown.

Pierre

==========
Pierre Joris

[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

186. Gabriel Gudding
reading recommendations
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I have just been reading John Lennard's _But I Digress: The Exploitation of the Parentheses in Printed English Verse_ (Clarendon [Oxford], 1991) and want to wholeheartedly recommend this very strange, clear, captivating book and its treatment of the history and dramas of the parentheses, including perforce a running history of English print and publication (Tom Beard, you might get a kick out of this [thank you by the way for yr recent post re type-face]). I have just reached 1680-1780 when type-face, grammar, syntax, style become less confused, less messy, clearer, giving over to a kind of Rationalization of The Page. At this time too a great denigration of Rhetorick.

Finally I want to recommend the reading of this List. It is a great read, including even its ructions. I read every post and no I do not have much leisure time no, being a guy barely 30 with a tiny baby, responsiBILities and who must wake at 4 am each day just to find time to write poetry before baby Clio wakes up, YES I recommend this list: it is indeed a great read, ructions and all. The Lord bless this list and its boinky of bounty! God bless the lurkers too; let them lurk if they want; God bless the blabbermouths too, whoever they are.

Lector, lege in toto. gaga

↑ Index

187. Susan Wheeler
DC Reading
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Lane Jennings & Susan Wheeler

Sunday, December 6
2:00 pm
The Writer's Center, Bethesda
[redacted]

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

188. Ron Silliman
Policing the List
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I think that the List is an unprecedented resource for poetry. The fact that 666 people subscribe to it speaks eloquently enough for us all.

I'm sympathetic with the problems of stewardship that Charles and Joel have shouldered in making possible such an amazing project. Anyone who has ever spent time checking out the poetry usenet groups knows what a totally unedited, public resource might look like. By placing the most modest conception of "private" around the space, the List has managed to become something very different indeed. The problem is how to keep that conception modest indeed.

So I'm also sympathetic to the perspective faced by Henry Gould and my personal vote here is to bring the man back. If Henry represents the extreme example, it's not all that different from what a lot of us on the list do and have done. My own sense is that the only good reason to 86 someone from the list is if the person uses it to make violent, threatening or maliciously false statements. Talking too much even with a keyboard may be obnoxious, but it's not on the same order.

I think that the list works best when we self-govern it, which means self-governing ourselves and our own behavior.

Lets look at how the list really works. In the month of November, 1998, there were 984 messages posted by 215 different people. The EPC archive for that month lists 219 posters, but 5 of them appear to have been Henry (including once as Eric Blarnes). At 50 messages per day for a 30 day month, November had a capacity for 1,500 messages. That means that we left fully one-third of the potential space unused. 516 messages that never got written and sent.

215 posters means that 451 lurkers chose not to send a single message. Sixty four people sent only a single message. So 151 people chose to send more than one. On average, people posted 4.5 messages for the month. (And, 451 "silent lurkers" could have each posted once and we still would have had room for another 65 messages, two per day for the entire month.)

23 of us, myself included, more than doubled the average of posts made by active users. In fact, these 23 people accounted for 437 messages, 44% of the entire months conversation. We all know who we are, but for the record, here by number of November posts (Henry's five groups bundled into one total), are the heaviest users:

Henry Gould 39
Gabriel Gudding 34
Kent Johnson 32
Mark Weiss 29
Jonathon Mayhew 29
A. Jenn Sondheim 25
David Bromige 24
miekal and 21
Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher 20
Eliza McGrand 19
Mairead Byrne 17
Mark Prejsnar 17
Mark DuCharme 14
Michael Magee 14
Aldon Nielsen 13
Dale Smith 13
Patrick Pritchett 12
George Bowering 12
Judy Roitman 11
Kathy Lou Schultz 11
Ron Silliman 11
Maria Damon 10
Todd Baron /*/ ReMap 10

Seven folks count for more than 20 percent of the month's messages, but in fact, Henry's not so far above Gabriel and Kent. What I see here is a continuum of use. There is no magic number below which usage drops suddenly. Unless it's the benchmark between one and zero.

My question is -- is this a problem if in fact a third of the list's potential capacity remains unused? Not so very much of one, I think.

I do think -- I've said this before -- that it makes sense to stop and think before posting more than two times on a given day. But even Henry has an average of under 1.3 posts per day.

When people do post more than once per day, there is usually a reason, more specifically some thread, whether it's one of high theoretical seriousness or the sort of banter that George, Eliza and David treat us to (without which this list would lose a lot of its personality, frankly). In fact, an absolutely equal distribution of posts among users would mean just 2.2 messages per month, which would make the list more or less incoherent I suspect, since threads would be almost impossible and we would be reduced to listing readings, books, etc. (there may someday be need for such a list, but we haven't gotten there yet).

What this leads me to conclude is that we should -- each of us -- be our own personal editor (doing the police, literally, in different voices). I'm not convinced that we need any heavier hand at this point, although I think discussions like this one are worthwhile to keep us mindful of the list's realities, limitations and needs.

Finally, one aside, on the nature of my own three addresses: one ([redacted]) is for a digest version of the list; a second ([redacted]) is to get messages "in real time," which allows me on a slow day to read what's been going on from the office. [I often just read the digest and then go back and delete everything from the "real time" version, which means that personal messages sent to that address run some risk of never being read.] The third account (netcom) is an old email account that I've been unable to get Joel to remove from the list. I don't have access to it anymore and can't self-unsubscribe from that address. But I tried getting Joel to do it for me when he was attempting to manage the list without benefit of either a permanent email address himself or even a steady home. (Talk about herculean dedication to the list!) Maybe now that account can go away.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

189. J Kuszai
test--please delete--do not respond to this Sat 5 Dec 1998

---

ahem...testing...testing...

can you hear me?

this is only a test, please delete do not respond to this post as it constitutes 1/50 of the days conversation

i am conducting an analysis of the poetics list subscribers settings and the last part of it (to double check) requires that I post something to the list to get an acknowledgement

I will send a message in a few minutes explaining what I have discovered. (in partial reply to Ron's stats)

jk

↑ Index

190. Ron Silliman
Janet Lewis
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Janet Lewis
Stephen Schwartz
Saturday, December 5, 1998
©1998 San Francisco Chronicle

URL:
http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/chronicle/archive/1998/12/05/MN4835.DTL

Janet Lewis, an internationally known poet, novelist and opera librettist, has died at her Los Altos home. She was 99.

The widow of the poet and critic Yvor Winters, who died in 1968, Miss Lewis lived to see her fame outweigh his, thanks to her authorship of ``The Wife of Martin Guerre,'' a novel about 16th century France, which was adapted for opera, screen and musical stage productions.

She was born in Chicago and grew up in Oak Park, Ill., a contemporary of Ernest Hemingway, and contributed to the same high school magazine as he.

She graduated from the University of Chicago, with a major in French. While there, she met Mr. Winters, whom she married in 1926 and accompanied to California.

At first, she preferred poetry as a medium, publishing several books, beginning with ``The Indians in the Woods'' in 1922.

Later, however, she concentrated on fiction, authoring ``The Invasion,'' an account of the interplay between white and Indian culture on the frontier, published in 1932.

She is best known for three short novels on historical themes. The first, ``The Wife of Martin Guerre,'' was written in Los Altos and finished in 1937.

It was issued in a hand-printed edition in 1941, by The Colt Press, a distinguished enterprise run by writer and book designer Jane Grabhorn, and supported by businessman William Matson Roth.

The book was reissued in 1959 by The Swallow Press and has remained in print ever since.

``Guerre,'' told from a woman's viewpoint, deals with a man who poses as another, and whose identity must be resolved by a trial. The story was presented in opera form, with music by Bay Area composer William Bergsma, in 1961.

That work was praised by music critic Richard F. Goldman, of the Music Quarterly, as ``the best American opera I have heard.''

In 1984, a French film version, ``The Return of Martin Guerre'' was released with Gerard Depardieu. It was remade as an American film set in the Civil War, ``Sommersby,'' released in 1993 with Jodie Foster and Richard Gere.

Of Miss Lewis's remaining short historical novels, ``The Trial of Soren Qvist'' appeared in 1947, and ``The Ghost of Monsieur Scarron'' in 1959.

The three short novels were based on actual incidents. In addition, ``Against A Darkening Sky,'' a novel based on the 1933 kidnapping of a department store heir in San Jose, and the lynching of his accused abductors, was published in 1943 and reprinted in 1985.

During the 1960s, Miss Lewis taught in the creative writing department at Stanford. Her writing attracted even greater attention with the rise of the feminist movement.

She also published several volumes of stories and other poetry collections, including ``Poems Old and New: 1918-1978.''

In a comment with which many authors would agree, she told an interviewer in 1996, ``The exciting moments come when you're writing. They disappear so fast.''

She is survived by a daughter, Joanna Thomson of Madison, Wis., and a son, Daniel Winters of Davis. No service has been announced.

©1998 San Francisco Chronicle

↑ Index

191. J Kuszai

Numbers, Daughter of The Book

Sat 5 Dec 1998

Dear poets, poeticists, poetasters, taskers, and criticks-

my last post was sent simply to generate this following message:

Your message dated Sat, 05 Dec 1998 08:50:19 -0500 with subject "test--please delete--do not respond to this" has been successfully distributed to the POETICS list (452 recipients).

That 452 recipients is pretty consistent with the numbers that I gathered through looking at the list of subscribers and their settings. This means that about 214 or so people are set to NOMAIL. After looking at this list of people set to NOMAIL, I am pretty sure that many of them are not coming back. Some of them are either dead, moved on to new academic institutions, new ISPs, or whatever. There are many duplicates, as has been pointed out. Of the people who were set to NOMAIL, I noticed probably a dozen or so (at most) who were or have been, and probably will be, active members (readers &/or contributors) to the list. Of the rest, many of them have never posted, as far as I can tell. If you send the following command in a one-line message to the [redacted] address you will see that there are 666 (+/-) people listed. Three are concealed, and one of the concealed is (oddly) also set to NOMAIL.

REVIEW poetics

Perhaps there is some sense of "who's who" that makes people who aren't interested in participating keep their names in the coolio hipster poetics list register. Anyone on the list who needs to find Jena Osman, say, or whomever, can find that person without much difficulty. So I do think that there is some functionality to being set NOMAIL.

Of the remaining 450 or so people who receive poetics list posts, currently about 200 (with a 1% margin of error) are set to digest. This means they receive all of the messages as one message at 12:00am ET. This leaves about 250 or so participants reading these messgaes one at a time. Because it is much more difficult to reply from the digest mode to a particular issue, the greatest amount of participation comes from these 250 who are regular subscribers to the p-list. Very few digest members of this list ever write in to the list and it seems to be one step from NOMAIL in the sense that the amount of effort to delete what has been at times a several hundred page document (each day's digested message) is about the same as it is cancel a transaction at the ATM.

in response to Ron, who says:

"215 posters means that 451 lurkers chose not to send a single message. Sixty four people sent only a single message. So 151 people chose to send more than one. On average, people posted 4.5 messages for the month. (And, 451 "silent lurkers" could have each posted once and we still would have had room for another 65 messages, two per day for the entire month.)"

If we chop off 200 hundred for NOMAIL and maybe estimate that less than half (?) of the digest people are actually reading these messages (though I would suspect that it is much lower) then lets say that there are approximately 150-200 lurkers

The problem here, Ron, is that growth of replies out of a source post is exponential. I would bet that if 50 or so people who don't write in to this list, but who are regular readers of it, were to START posting something, there would be a wildfire of response multiplying the top people on your list into numbers that would ruin your "still room left under our tent" theory.

perhaps I am wrong, maybe they would all be ignored....

↑ Index

192. Joe Brennan
Re: reading recommendations
Sat 5 Dec 1998

In a message dated 12/5/98 7:42:41 AM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<< God bless the blabbermouths too, whoever they are. >>

& the troublemakers....

jb...

↑ Index

193. Herb Levy
Janet Lewis
Sat 5 Dec 1998

From this morning's NY Times (The composer of the Martin Guerre opera was Bergsma, not Bergsman):

Janet Lewis, 99, Poet of Spirit and Keeper of the Hearth, Dies

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS Jr.

Her first writings to reach print ran shoulder to shoulder with Ernest Hemingway's. For her first published poetry she was grouped with William Carlos Williams and Marianne Moore. She made it to Paris ahead of both Hemingway and F. Scott Fitzgerald. She was a leader of the University of Chicago school of imagist poets, and if hers is not a household name, by the time she died on Monday at the age of 99 in the house in Los Altos, Calif., she had occupied for two-thirds of a century, Janet Lewis had the satisfaction of knowing she had written poetry throughout the 20th century and seen it published and praised in every decade since the first.

Her reputation has seemingly been eclipsed by that of her late husband, Yvor Winters, the poet, professor and critic who wrestled Hart Crane's "Bridge" into print and made Stanford -- and Los Altos -- a magnet for three generations of poets. Yet there are many who will assure you that when the literary history of the second millennium is written at the end of the third, in the category of dazzling American short fiction her "Wife of Martin Guerre" will be regarded as the 20th century's "Billy Budd" and Janet Lewis will be ranked with Herman Melville. (Though, to be fair, her prose is more often likened to Stendahl's.)

What makes her accomplishments even more impressive is that over the course of a a career in which she wrote hundreds of poems, a single collection of short stories, a couple of children's books, a handful of novels, the words to five operas and one acclaimed masterpiece, Miss Lewis pursued a literary life in which the focus was on the life and the life was one of such placid equilibrium and domestic bliss that she had to reach deep down in her psyche -- and far back in the annals of criminal law -- to find the wellspring of tension that produced some of the 20th century's most vividly imagined and finely wrought literature.

She also had to find the time.

As she once observed, women of prodigious literary output, like Willa Cather and Edith Wharton, tended not to have children. As the mother of two, Miss Lewis willingly put her work aside when her children were young and cheerfully accepted other duties as well. "It's a question of what you want to do with your life," she once said. "You might also want to take care of your husband."

The daughter of a poetry-spouting English professor, Miss Lewis was born in Chicago and grew up in Oak Park where she and her 1899 contemporary, Ernest Hemingway, contributed their first works to the same high school literary magazines, she deriving inspiration by summering even deeper in the north woods than he and finding a lifelong fascination with nature and the natural flow of life.

Her sentiments were expressed in a 1922 poetry collection, "The Indians in the Woods," in a series of stories later included in a 1946 collection, "Good-Bye, Son and Other Stories," and in a 1932 narrative, as she called it, "The Invasion," the multi-generational account of a Scotch-Irish-Indian family.

After two years at a junior college, Miss Lewis completed her education at the University of Chicago, majoring in French while joining the famous Poetry Club and meeting Mr. Winters, who had spent time at a tuberculosis sanitarium in Santa Fe, N.M.

After a brief stay in Paris after graduation in 1920, Miss Lewis returned to Chicago but soon contracted tuberculosis herself and spent five years at the same sanitarium, engaging in a passionate correspondence with Mr. Winters and eventually marrying him and following him to California, where she threw herself into a satisfying domestic life that included tending to her husband's registered Airedales, harvesting the fruit from the adjacent orchard and serving as a sort of serene den mother to an extended, animated family of her husband's awed acolytes.

One of the first and by far the fiercest and most controversial of the New Critics and a man of cocksure opinions, for all his fabled influence on 20th century American poetry, Mr. Winters may have made his greatest contribution to literature when his wife, whose life was virtually without drama, complained that she had trouble finding suitable plots and he gave her a chance copy of a 19th-century compilation of famous old legal cases.

By the time she had finished it, Miss Lewis had all but abandoned poetry and embarked on what turned out to be three short historical novels, "The Wife of Martin Guerre" (1941), "The Trial of Soren Qvist" (1947) and "The Ghost of Monsieur Scarron" (1959), all based on actual cases and so compellingly imagined and told that she inspired the 1956 "Wife of Martin Guerre" opera by William Bergsman, who asked her to write the libretto. The composer Alva Henderson was so impressed he got her to write the libretto for his 1976 opera, "The Last of the Mohicans," and two others.

The historical novels, Miss Lewis said later, represented the "heavy thinking" of a literary career that did not include her poetry. Her poems, she said, were always personal, a quiet corner of her life.

Devastated by her husband's death in 1968, Miss Lewis, who never took his name off the mailbox and maintained his writing shed as a shrine, sought to deal with her grief by revisiting the Southwest, rediscovering her fascination with the local Indians and producing a series of memorable poems.

For Miss Lewis, who is survived by a daughter, Joanna Thomson of Madison, Wis.; a son, Daniel Winters of Davis, Calif., and three grandchildren, her family was always more important than her work, and her life is well reflected in her final collection, "The Dear Past," (1994) with poems covering most of the century.

Under the influence of her husband, she had done her share of experimenting, but the woman who had begun her career by taking part in the imagist revolution that sought to strip poetry of its former artifice, ended it the same way, using spare, lyrical language to describe and celebrate the simplest scenes of nature.

For a woman who charmed generations of troubled poets and other literary figures with her almost otherworldly serenity, looking back over the domestic scenes of a long, literary life it would be hard to find a more compelling image of Miss Lewis -- or one more evocative of the flesh-and-blood life beneath the surface of 20th-century literature -- than one of the many at the family's house after a warm, rollicking meal with the couple's dearest friends.

You may have to close your eyes to conjure up the sight, but there they are forever, two 1899 contemporaries standing side by side at the kitchen sink, Janet Lewis washing, Vladimir Nabokov drying.

Copyright 1998 The New York Times Company

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

194. Eliza McGrand
Re: Erasing
Sat 5 Dec 1998

i think it might be because we are becoming aware of the huge amount of accrued, present, and about to appear text out there. plus the 15 seconds of fame notion gnaws at us. so, even as we read, and try and conceptualize it in the classic ways we've been taught ("one of the ten best..." "one of the rare books about..." "one of...") in a sense we fear already losing it, already having forgot the "quantity" of read matter from sheer wight owhoops weight of volume.

reminds me of one of my main anxiety dreams, the one where i suddenly realize it is months into the semester and there is a class i have forgotten to go to. and now i must take a test in it. or job i've forgotten i have. sense of so much to keep track of, loss of individual things in it. ?? my guess anyway e

↑ Index

195. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Policing the List
Sat 5 Dec 1998

just to say, some great stuff there from alan s and ron s... along with 'why i'm on this list' posts (like eliza's and others') it helps in fleshing out the list function entire...

perhaps, then, this sort of house-cleaning/reflexive air-play is a necessary part of keeping such places alive?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

196. Edward Fristrom
Re: Freedom Is Never Free
Sat 5 Dec 1998

"I believe in the value of editing and I believe this value does not increase in the age of the Internet, but, if anything, increases."

?

↑ Index

197. Randy Prunty
Policing the List
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I for one am one. And as one I am one and I am one. I for one will post in the lovely month of December and I will post 100 times. I will post and I will post and I will make Ron Silliman's list.

Randy

Henry Gould 39
Gabriel Gudding 34
Kent Johnson 32
Mark Weiss 29
Jonathon Mayhew 29
A. Jenn Sondheim 25
David Bromige 24
miekal and 21
Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher 20
Eliza McGrand 19
Mairead Byrne 17
Mark Prejsnar 17
Mark DuCharme 14
Michael Magee 14
Aldon Nielsen 13
Dale Smith 13
Patrick Pritchett 12
George Bowering 12
Judy Roitman 11
Kathy Lou Schultz 11
Ron Silliman 11

Maria Damon 10
Todd Baron /*/ ReMap 10

↑ Index

198. Randy Prunty
Re: Erasing
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I for one am two and as two I am too. Eliza writes of her anxiety dream and I have had that dream too. And this is an account of a true event and it is very interesting. I for one have been lurking and I have been lurking for a year. Since then and since then I have been lurking and now I'm not lurking to make Ron's list and I will have fame and not as much as she and not as much as Gertrude Stein. And I for one have been erased and my lurking has been my erasing before I was even written.

Randy

Eliza wrote: "i think it might be because we are becoming aware of the huge amount of accrued, present, and about to appear text out there. plus the 15 seconds of fame notion gnaws at us. so, even as we read, and try and conceptualize it in the classic ways we've been taught ("one of the ten best..." "one of the rare books about..." "one of...") in a sense we fear already losing it, already having forgot the "quantity" of read matter from sheer wight owhoops weight of volume.

reminds me of one of my main anxiety dreams, the one where i suddenly realize it is months into the semester and there is a class i have forgotten to go to. and now i must take a test in it. or job i've forgotten i have. sense of so much to keep track of, loss of individual things in it."

↑ Index

199. Ramez Qureshi
Query Pound
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Can anyone give me the source and verbatim quote for Pound's wise-ass dictum on new poetry not sounding as it may have been written twenty years ago? Thanx in advance, R.Q.

↑ Index

200. MAYHEW
Re: Policing the List
Sat 5 Dec 1998

I'm a little embarrassed to have 29 posts in November. I'm going to slow down. The 1st couple months I was subscribed I was very slow to post, and anxious about the response of y'all. As a gradually gained confidence about what I had to say, my monthly totals crept up. It takes incredible ego to think that what I have to say will be of interest to hundreds of people, only about a dozen or so I have met face to face. But when I saw so many "throw away messages" I said "why not?" As an experiment I refrained from posting for a few days--to see the effect of my absence. The conversation turned to the nomenclature of Mars bars in England, Canada, and the US. Yet it might have easily taken a more scintillating turn...

Jonathan

↑ Index

201. Karen Kelley
Re: Erasing
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Also that in the course of life, there are moments & times when words reveal themselves as elusive, illusory--in the most serious, least serious, most tragic, most joyous times--when life is so much stronger than any words that could be appended.

For example, we grow facile with words and then someone close dies--and we get first row visions of silence and disbelief and time-going-on. And all the words that could explain fall away.

I admire those who try to write into these voids (Harold Brodkey's _This Wild Darkness_ comes to mind, or the late work of Herve Guibert).

I always feel like a prehistoric creature in the face of extreme events. I realize how late language came to our biologies.

↑ Index

202. William Marsh
new media criticism [was Infoanimism]
Sat 5 Dec 1998

At 09:20 PM 12/4/98 -0800, Jim wrote: Though it is >interesting to consider a criticism that can at once talk about the neath text in an engaging way while also finding ways to talk about totally non-technical >dimensions of new media. Ideally, we develop a critical language that can lite through all the dimensions of the work and the frame and the other frames without >getting bogged down in technicalities.

indeed, a criticism with its own neath text -- especially if the criticism is composed in dhtml / that layering again...

but seriously, i agree with your call here and would even like to see criticism that separates these dimensions, if only temporarily and for the sake of discussion / perhaps a new breed of polarized critique that on one side (of the page?) stresses the non-technical and on the other the technical aspects of the work -- some formal possibilities here / also could make for some neat collaborations between folks more attuned to the aesthetics and others better versed in the software

bill

- -
William Marsh | PBrain | http://bmarsh.dtai.com
- -

↑ Index

203. Steven Shoemaker
enervation effect
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Ok, flexible (or maybe just wishy-washy) fellow that I am, I'm now abandoning my advocacy of the two-post per day platform (since it's never going to happen anyway), and am now all in favor of the virtues of self-moderation. This is what I wanted all along anyway (as I said)--I had just begun to wonder if it could really happen. Now I've decided to be, once again, infused with optimism about this possibility. But I did want to mention something that seems to me to be missed by Ron's analysis of "how the list really works," and by those others before him who pointed out that the ceiling of 50 posts per day is most often not reached. It seems, to me at least, that there is something enervating* about reading multiple postings from the same people, day after day, especially if there seems little in the way of rewarding content in those posts. This "enervation effect," I would argue, has an unfortunate effect on the vitality of the list, and this effect occurs even if the day's limit is not literally exceeded. One's list-appetite can be surfeited on this sort of diet long before that limit is actually reached.

*enervate--Tom Orange has already used this word in relation to list dynamics, and it seems to me peculiarly applicable. "To deprive of nerve, force or strength; to weaken physically, mentally, or morally; to render feeble." The word also, to me, has a pleasingly fin de siecle ring about it. I predict a new vogue for it as the cyberage approaches the millennium.

steve

↑ Index

204. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Janet Lewis and Miekal And
Sat 5 Dec 1998

herb, thanx... geezus, what a story!... and i have to say, i don't think i've ever read a word by janet lewis...

so i guess i have to add her to my ever-growing list...

&

well now that miekal has posted to the list something i've felt should happen for a good while now, i'll 2nd the motion: i too think we should have an f2f conference, derived somehow from (owing somehow to?) this list... how i'm not sure, but it's all open to discussion... perhaps "conference" isn't the right word either---perhaps a gathering of the tribes would be more apropos... or a festival, or a garden party, or----- of course not just logistics and money are involved... TIME would be involved, somebody's time in particular... so what, now, do we ask charles to put this together for us?... again, is this up to charles (and joel, et al.)?... i can only help out (i think) via this box here mself...

so what, now?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

205. Mairead Byrne
Re: enervation effect
Sat 5 Dec 1998

On Sat, 5 Dec 1998, Steven Shoemaker wrote:

> seems, to me at least, that there is something enervating* about reading > multiple postings from the same people, day after day, especially if there > seems little in the way of rewarding content in those posts. This > "enervation effect," I would argue, has an unfortunate effect on the > vitality of the list, and this effect occurs even if the day's limit is > not literally exceeded. One's list-appetite can be surfeited on this > sort of diet long before that limit is actually reached.
>
If we could get rid of the 4 or 5 female posters in the top 23, that might be a start. I have noticed that females sometimes tend to write many short posts rather than a single long "rewarding" posts. This definitely saps the masculinity, I mean the vitality, of the list. I know there aren't that many women piping up but guys like Henry and Gabe also contribute to the splintering or splitting of male, sorry mail, energy. Look at the end of the last century -- those cissies Beardsley and Wilde. Down with weakness, physical, mental, or moral. Be aware: I have no vested interest in this post (I'm a man).
Mairead

> enervate--Tom Orange has already used this word in relation to list dynamics, and it seems to me peculiarly applicable. "To deprive of nerve, force or strength; to weaken physically, mentally, or morally; to render feeble." The word also, to me, has a pleasingly fin de siecle ring about it. I predict a new vogue for it as the cyberage approaches the millennium.*
>
> steve

↑ Index

206. Laura E. Wright
Re: Erasing and non-po reading
Sat 5 Dec 1998

For me, a fascination with the idea of the poem going around what it is "about" rather than directly on or through it. A circumnavigation rather than description, or description of "everything but" the purported subject. Also, the tantalizing nature of omission. Strikethrough is a sort of sleazy cousin to this, omitting, but allowing us to see what was omitted. Good for those of us with insatiable nosiness.

And while I'm here, my recent non-poetry reading includes
The Annotated Alice
Bachelard, The Poetics of Space

An Article on Global Warming written by my uncle in Nucleus magazine
Padgett, Creative Reading (read that a while ago, but have to mention it)
Pacific Crest Trail Guidebooks

Best,
Laura
--
Laura Wright, Library Assistant
Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
2130 Arapahoe Ave
Boulder, CO 80302
[redacted]

"Speech keeps strangling itself, but wisdom has not come."
--Henri Michaux

↑ Index

207. Steven Shoemaker
Re: enervation effect
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Ah, yes, that's it, that sensation I was trying to pinpoint: the feeling of having my precious (male) bodily fluids drained, like Sterling Hayden in Dr. Strangelove...

I meant to be poking fun at myself a little with the "enervation" thing, even as I also had a point to make, but maybe that didn't come across. But if we do seriously look at this thing from the standpoint of gender, it seems to me that the more pertinent fact is that only four of the twenty-five top-posters are women. And the women who do post to the list, or have tried to, have often complained about this sort of male dominance of listchat. Further, if you look at just the top 5 posters, or even the top 10, they are all male. It seems, then, that there may be an interesting correlation between the predominantly male frequent-posting phenomenon and the feeling of exclusion so many female listmembers have complained about over the years.

steve

On Sat, 5 Dec 1998, Mairead Byrne wrote:

> On Sat, 5 Dec 1998, Steven Shoemaker wrote:
>
> seems, to me at least, that there is something enervating about reading multiple postings from the same people, day after day, especially if there* > *seems little in the way of rewarding content in those posts. This "enervation effect," I would argue, has an unfortunate effect on the vitality of the list, and this effect occurs even if the day's limit is not literally exceeded. One's list-appetite can be surfeited on this sort of diet long before that limit is actually reached.*

>
> If we could get rid of the 4 or 5 female posters in the top 23, that might be a start. I have noticed that females sometimes tend to write many short posts rather than a single long "rewarding" posts. This definitely saps the masculinity, I mean the vitality, of the list. I know there aren't that many women piping up but guys like Henry and Gabe also contribute to the splintering or splitting of male, sorry mail, energy. Look at the end of the last century -- those cissies Beardsley and Wilde. Down with weakness, physical, mental, or moral. Be aware: I have no vested interest in this post (I'm a man).
> Mairead
>
> enervate--Tom Orange has already used this word in relation to list dynamics, and it seems to me peculiarly applicable. "To deprive of nerve, force or strength; to weaken physically, mentally, or morally; to render feeble." The word also, to me, has a pleasingly fin de siecle ring about it. I predict a new vogue for it as the cyberage approaches the millennium.*
>
> steve

↑ Index

208. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: enervation effect

Sat 5 Dec 1998

---

steve, let me risk raising my tally to (1) post less than 100 words (an amazing feat for me, as you all know by now), and (2) to say, with as much (masculinist?) emphasis as possible, RIGHT ON re gender... of course to be more inclusive means (and here i risk what is by now a bromide) to be willing to entertain difference...

best,

joe

↑ Index

209. juliana spahr

why I am not a reader of the poetics list

Sat 5 Dec 1998

This is my confession.

I can't read poetics list anymore. I have a shortage of time in my life. I have a loss of patience. I am a girl and it feels like it isn't a friendly place for girls. In fact, some days it feels like it is only friendly to white men. I know I generalize. That is why I use the word feel.

But what I mean to write here is why I am sad about the poetics list.

I like to buy books. I like to send money to small presses and get things made by hand back. I like to read these and then put these in my bookshelves. They bring me comfort at faculty meetings where it is said that younger people do this or don't do that and and thus they should all be punished. Or they give me something to read on long airplane trips back to the contiguous 48.

But because I can't read poetics list I can't get all the good announcements of books to buy.

At one point, years ago, someone, was it Marjorie?, suggested that the poetics list be a place of announcements only. This was protested. I myself wasn't so sure it was a good idea.

But might it not be time to reconsider this?

There are various ways now that one can set up one's own list for free. And those that have lifestyles that allow them to read a lot and post a lot and feel like the place is friendly for them and like to post a lot, well they should be posting a lot. Isn't that the right of boundless opportunity of electronic and consumer society? But maybe they should be doing this with those that like to read a lot of postings on a list set up for this. The high post poetics list say? Or it might good now to have total listserve anarchy and for there to no longer be a central convesation but rather for there to be the creation of self-governing, special interest lists.

And then the poetics list could be the announcement of readings list. Really I would like it to be the call for work, the announcement of readings, the I published this, the order this, the does anyone know where this quotation is from, and the brief review of something I read recently list. With maybe around 5-6 posts per day.

Or in my utopia there would be no conversation. No I agree or I disagree. No so and so is stupid. All that would go on the adjunct list for day to day conversation or the one for good general loving conversation or the one for many posts per day conversation or the one for attacking conversation among those who have the wonderful luxury of time or the better abilities of efficiency than me.

I don't know. I just makes me sad that this list, which is a huge, and perhaps only, information resource, is something that I can't do or that feels hostile.

I miss the old days.

With kindness and loving and trying not to be insulting,

Juliana Spahr

↑ Index

210. Mark Weiss
Re: enervation effect
Sat 5 Dec 1998

As one of the top five posters, but also a poster of usually very brief messages, I'd like to point out that I'm only mostly male.

At 05:01 PM 12/5/98 -0500, you wrote:
>Ah, yes, that's it, that sensation I was trying to pinpoint: the feeling >of having my precious (male) bodily fluids drained, like Sterling Hayden >in Dr. Strangelove...
>
>I meant to be poking fun at myself a little with the "enervation" thing, >even as I also had a point to make, but maybe that didn't come across.
>But if we do seriously look at this thing from the standpoint of gender, >it seems to me that the more pertinent fact is that only four of the >twenty-five top-posters are women. And the women who do post to the list, >or have tried to, have often complained about this sort of male dominance >of listchat. Further, if you look at just the top 5 posters, or even the >top 10, they are all male. It seems, then, that there may be an >interesting correlation between the predominantly male frequent-posting >phenomenon and the feeling of exclusion so many female listmembers have >complained about over the years.
>
>steve
>
>
>
>
>On Sat, 5 Dec 1998, Mairead Byrne wrote:
>
>> On Sat, 5 Dec 1998, Steven Shoemaker wrote:

>>
>>
>> > seems, to me at least, that there is something enervating* about reading >> > multiple postings from the same people, day after day, especially if there >> > seems little in the way of rewarding content in those posts. This >> > "enervation effect," I would argue, has an unfortunate effect on the >> > vitality of the list, and this effect occurs even if the day's limit is >> > not literally exceeded. One's list-appetite can be surfeited on this >> > sort of diet long before that limit is actually reached.
>> >
>> If we could get rid of the 4 or 5 female posters in the top 23, that might >> be a start. I have noticed that females sometimes tend to write many short >> posts rather than a single long "rewarding" posts. This definitely saps >> the masculinity, I mean the vitality, of the list. I know there aren't >> that many women piping up but guys like Henry and Gabe also contribute
to >> the splintering or splitting of male, sorry mail, energy. Look at the end >> of the last century -- those cissies Beardsley and Wilde. Down with >> weakness, physical, mental, or moral. Be aware: I have no vested interest >> in this post (I'm a man).
>> Mairead
>>
>> > *enervate--Tom Orange has already used this word in relation to list >> > dynamics, and it seems to me peculiarly applicable. "To deprive of nerve, >> > force or strength; to weaken physically, mentally, or morally; to render >> > feeble." The word also, to me, has a pleasingly fin de siecle ring about >> > it. I predict a new vogue for it as the cyberage approaches the >> > millennium.
>> >
>> > steve
>> >
>>
>
>

↑ Index

211. Elizabeth Treadwell
it feels like harassment
Sat 5 Dec 1998

OK, I frontchanneled a back channel msg from Mark W. Really not feeling like making enemies for no reason, but to me, a back channel msg basically telling me to shut up because what I am saying is obvious or pointless, well IT feels like harassment to me!

sick of the list,
seeya

Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

212. Thomas Bell
Re: Erasing
Sat 5 Dec 1998

Good question, but I think the answer doesn't need to bring in "larger" philosophical/psychological stuff. A interest in negative space and clearing away room in the arts goes back at least as far as Matisse and surfaces in a cyclical fashion from that time on. For me this "negative" interest is also more concrete and relates to the poem on the page.

tom bell

J. Fuhrman wrote:
>
> Lately I have been reading Rachel Blau DuPlessis's brilliant and > haunting _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_,. In it, the image of text erased comes > up. This image is also frequent in Michael Palmer and many > other contemporary poets as well as visual artists.
--
//\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\
OOOPSY \//\\\/\//\\\/ <><>,...,.,
WHOOPS J K JOVE BY HHH ZOOOOZ ZEUS'WRATHHTARW
LLLL STOPG [EMPTY] SPACER

index of online work at http://members.home.net/trbell
essays: http://members.tripod.com/~trbell/criticism/gloom.htm

↑ Index

213. Thomas Bell

Re: new media criticism [was Infoanimism]

Sat 5 Dec 1998

bill (and jim), while i applaud your interest in criticism of hypertext writing that takes an interest in the "non technical" dimension, i'm more than a little leery of separating technical and non technical aspects. As a writer I can't do this and in my "critical" work i'm finding that drawing that particular distinction can be misleading.

"We need to see ourselves at depth and engaged: within the historical scene, not confronting it, authoring the text of our future, projecting and not projected upon."

"In constructive hypertexts we are able to see our thought in movement, to see ourselves as light and not in shadows" Michael Joyce, _Of two minds

tom

William Marsh wrote:
>

> indeed, a criticism with its own neath text -- especially if the criticism is composed in dhtml / that layering again...
>
> but seriously, i agree with your call here and would even like to see criticism that separates these dimensions, if only temporarily and for the sake of discussion / perhaps a new breed of polarized critique that on one side (of the page?) stresses the non-technical and on the other the technical aspects of the work -- some formal possibilities here / also could make for some neat collaborations between folks more attuned to the aesthetics and others better versed in the software
>
> bill

--
/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\
OOOPSY \//\\\/\//\\\/ <><>,...,.,
WHOOPS J K JOVE BY HHH ZOOOOZ ZEUS'WRATHHTARW
LLLL STOPG [EMPTY] SPACER

index of online work at http://members.home.net/trbell
essays: http://members.tripod.com/~trbell/criticism/gloom.htm

↑ Index

214. Mark Weiss
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

And beyond Matisse to Rembrandt by way of Whistler. Check out their graphic work. More recently in verse Schwerner's _Tablets_ is almost a dictionary of negative space--origin late 60's.

At 10:38 PM 12/5/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Good question, but I think the answer doesn't need to bring in "larger" >philosophical/psychological stuff. A interest in negative space and >clearing away room in the arts goes back at least as far as Matisse and >surfaces in a cyclical fashion from that time on. For me this >"negative" interest is also more concrete and relates to the poem on the >page.
>
>tom bell
>
>J. Fuhrman wrote:
>>
>> Lately I have been reading Rachel Blau DuPlessis's brilliant and >> haunting _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_,. In it, the image of text erased comes >> up. This image is also frequent in Michael Palmer and many >> other contemporary poets as well as visual artists.
>--
>//\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\
>OOOPSY \//\\\/\//\\\/ <><>,...,.,
>WHOOPS J K JOVE BY HHH ZOOOOZ ZEUS'WRATHHTARW
> LLLL STOPG [EMPTY] SPACER
>
>index of online work at http://members.home.net/trbell
>essays: http://members.tripod.com/~trbell/criticism/gloom.htm
>
>

↑ Index

215. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap
Re: perhaps another suggestion
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Tosh wrote:
>
> My favorite way of responding to the subject of 'too many postings' is to > delete the one's I am not interested in. Plus people can backchannel if > they want to get really into a subject matter. The choice should be up to > the writer of the post, but should also be aware that you are sending out a > post that is reaching ....? so many people. Focus who you want to speak > to... if it is all, then send it. If it is one person, just send it to > that one person.

>
> Case solved! Next case please!
>
> ----------
> Tosh Berman
> TamTam Books
> ----------

NOT SOLVED

I checked in today and received 90!!!!!!!!!! mails/postings.

While I applaud and sing the praises of the list
How the heck can ANYONE have so much time
AWAY from the "real work"
of writing????

GEEEEEEZ!

Todd Baron
++++++++
ReMap Readers

↑ Index

216. Jim Andrews
v i s u a l a n g u a g e
Sun 6 Dec 1998

---

v i s u a l a n g u a g e is a new piece at http://speakeasy.org/~jandrews/vispo/VisualLanguage/frame.html based mainly on a search of altavista for the term "visual language" (with the quotes), but also on my cogitations these days on visual language.

Regards,
Jim.

↑ Index

217. Tom Orange
Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

joanna,

do you have time to post a part of the duplessis text that you feel speaks to this issue and comment? i haven't been able to get a hold of it yet... a line of speculation one could trace regarding erased texts and blank pages might go from mallarme's un coup de des, through blanchot and jabes, to current work by anne-marie albiach and even barbara guest's latest, which seems to be particularly "evacuated" (which along with "enervated" seems to be my fin-de-siecle hommage for the week). i'm interested in the comparative evacuative strategies that might be at work here...

bests,
t.
[redacted]

---------- There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze ----------

↑ Index

218. Tom Orange
whodunnit / festival
Sun 6 Dec 1998

miekal,

for this poetics of hypertext project, are you talking about working off a new website or siphoning stuff from this list? (or both...)

t.
[redacted]

you wrote: "Im interesting in collectively creating a poetics of the hypertext that would withstand the enslaught of the many invigorated minds & styles -- & to create such a dialogue / reading thru as a hypertext. To do this everything posted to this discussion would have to useable on a website other than the archives. Much of the hypertext & its discussion is quite bland & unremarkable & it would be a significant contribution to the field as a whole is we (or at least the fabulous & verbose 20) could take a stab at changing the static & 3 dimensional way hypertext thought seems to be evolving."

↑ Index

219. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy
Re: it feels like harassment
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Elizabeth,

This is unhappy news. I am tempted to say that sending such a msg bc rather than fc is cowardly, that no one has the right to tell anyone to shut up and that if they like points so much they should stick their heads in a pencil sharpener.

But I'd rather say how much I like your posts, all of which I read, and which bring a valuable light to the list

Randolph Healy

from [redacted]

> From: Elizabeth Treadwell <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: it feels like harassment
> Date: 06 December 1998 00:59
>
> OK, I frontchanneled a back channel msg from Mark W. Really not feeling > like making enemies for no reason, but to me, a back channel msg basically > telling me to shut up because what I am saying is obvious or pointless, well
> IT feels like harassment to me!
>
> sick of the list,
> seeya
>
> Elizabeth
>
> Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
> P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
> http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

220. Kathy Lou Schultz
Re: it feels like harassment
Sun 6 Dec 1998

---

1. I would hate to see Elizabeth T. leave the list as she (gasp!) actually posts about (gasp! gasp!) poetry and poetics, and has spurred interesting discussions here. Also I wanna hear about the doings at Double Lucy (my favorite press name).

2. Charles Bernstein is hereby named winner of the Bionic Eyeball Award for having read ALL (gasp!) the posts on this list since its inception. Good god, man! I think you should lie down or something.

3. I'm so pleased to have made someone's top 25 and, hey, I tied with Ron Silliman.

4. I think efforts by Charles and Joel to moderate the list are made in good faith and must be accompanied by good will and self-moderation on the part of the listees.

Now, everyone get some sleep. We'll all feel better in the morning.

Peace,
Kathy Lou

Elizabeth Treadwell wrote:
>
> OK, I frontchanneled a back channel msg from Mark W. Really not feeling > like making enemies for no reason, but to me, a back channel msg basically > telling me to shut up because what I am saying is obvious or pointless, well
> IT feels like harassment to me!
>
> sick of the list,
> seeya
>
> Elizabeth
>
> Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
> P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
> http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

221. miekal and
poetics of hypertext
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Tom Orange wrote:

> for this poetics of hypertext project, are you talking about working off a new website or siphoning stuff from this list? (or both...)

tom, it is my hope to use any resource available but in particular to get a project going on this list, & make a quantum leap out of the necessary self consciousness weve been under the spell of. anyone working on this would have to agree to their "texts" being put up on a website.

↑ Index

222. Jim Bennett

Re: perhaps another suggestion

Sun 6 Dec 1998

> I checked in today and received 90!!!!!!!!!! mails/postings.
>
> While I applaud and sing the praises of the list
> How the heck can ANYONE have so much time
> AWAY from the "real work"
> of writing????

Like many writers that I know I spend most of my time trying to find thing to do that will distract me from the laborious task of writing. Getting up from the computer to start redecorating the room is not unheard of simply to avoid the awful truth which is that I have to write to earn my living (perhaps "justify my existence" is a more direct phrase albeit cliche). Anyway the truth is, the lists to which I belong, yes I belong and receive in indigestible(?) form the whole content of 4 lists, I read. In fact I must be the singularly most clued up screwed up obsessively anal retentive listee on the planet.

There is just nothing better in my day than the wonderfully chirpie voice which announces, "incoming mail", this means I have to leave my work, change screens and pay attention to some inane rambling from another, stranger, world. Occasionally I even respond to them. (like now).

So I do not mind leaving my work for the few moments which are required to pay attention to mail, and I suppose I have the advantage of working mostly when the majority of listees are asleep on the other sides (sic) of the world. But then again I am a really sad case, and suitable for treatment, if it was not for the lists I think I would have to go train-spotting.

But seriously... I really believe the lists are an impressive function of the net phenomenon, and when the furore and immediacy of the fashion aspect of the internet die down (remember CB radio, hoola hoops et al) the lists, perhaps developed into net meetings, will be the abiding feature which makes the technology worthwhile.

The problem I have with email is its lack of permanence. Occasionally an email will contain a splash of brilliance, (never the ones I write unfortunately) and I always feel inclined to try and save them to a disc. But whereas researchers have letters and notes available from past years, little remains of the electronic transmissions of recent times, except the list archives, but how permanent are they?

Any way keep posting and save me from myself,

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

↑ Index

223. groberts
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Also there is Rauschenberg's famous erasing of a de Kooning drawing. RR asked de Kooning for a drawing to be erased, and was given a mixed media thing because de Kooning wanted to make it a difficult process. RR apparently used about a dozen different kinds of erasers to get the job done, and he claimed it took him about a month to finish.

I've never seen this piece reproduced or in any collection: it just exists for me as a rumor.

Gary R.

↑ Index

224. Carmen Butcher
J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
Sun 6 Dec 1998

This topic puts me in mind of the Anglo-Saxon palimpsests I worked with in the British Museum. Yes, they were "making room," recycling available "paper" by erasing and writing over. It is wonderful to see the old text underneath the new, since erasing was hard work and not always fully accomlished. Why was the old text being erased? Lack of vellum? Mistakes? New ideas needing space? Sometimes this erasure even made the latest text hard to read, which was also in some sense marvelous, if somewhat frustrating. You think of archaeological tells when you read such a manuscript. Also, Vikings, who helped make texts scarce.

I also think of the Medieval approach to plagiarism. You did simply use the works of others as your own and you built on that, took of them whatever you needed, and made your own work without blushing. You hadn't stolen. Everything built on everything else, the mindset of the palimpsest, in many ways.

I realize this doesn't address the question below directly. But will follow indirection to truth if I can. I thought the question excellent, one that will keep turning over in my mind for time to come...

Cheers, Carmen tom bell wrote: "...clearing away room in the arts goes back at least as far as Matisse and surfaces in a cyclical fashion from that time on." J. Fuhrman wrote: Lately I have been reading Rachel Blau DuPlessis's brilliant and haunting _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_,. In it, the image of text erased comes up. This image is also frequent in Michael Palmer and many other contemporary poets as well as visual artists.

↑ Index

225. Mark DuCharme

Re: free Henry

Sun 6 Dec 1998

I don't believe he is actually banned from posting, but my understanding is all his posts have to be approved by Charles Bernstein, &/or he is limited to a certain # per week. I'll second Mike & everyone else-- as I already backchanneled to Henry last week-- that I don't at all agree with this action.

Mark DuCharme

P.S. to Charles Bernstein: hey Charles, does the list get to vote on this? It certainly seems that everyone disagrees with with restricting Henry.

Michael Magee wrote:
>Excuse my fogginess on this issue but, has Henry actually been banned from >posting on the list? If so, this seems absolutely outrageous to me!
>Joe's sentiment that "Henry's commitment to, and passion for, art is, from >my point of view, beyond question" is absolutely true and quite >pertinent. I've rassled with him as much as anyone but the idea >that we would somehow keep him from posting really disgusts me.
>I hope I've got this wrong. -Mike.

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

226. J. Fuhrman
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Some lines from DuPlessis,

from "Draft 17 Unnamed"

It's true that every ending only erases the board rather then filling it.
The poems are written in strange chalk strange, a chalk in some light dark, plump with serifs on a scumbled, agitated whiteness, but mainly a white chalk on a whiter page.

from "Draft 26: M-m-ry"

On her cake the "e" in "years" got smudged.

From "Draft XXX: Fose"

Imagine a book, a little book whose words are covered one by one with the smallest pebbles--

(As DuPlessis reminds us in her notes the book does exist, created by Ann Hamilton) I have seen work by other artists that participates in a similar blocking of letters.

Also here's some Palmer from "Disclosures" in _At Passages_

Beneath the writing on the wall is the writing it was designed to obscure. The two together form a third kind from "Untitled (February '92)"

Words are made of electrons it turns out Words remind us of fragments it turns out parts of legs and parts of arms

It's inviable ink which blots them out.

----- My question, again, has to do with why these images of erased, smudged or blocked text speak to us at this point in time. While I was typing this I just remember that Heather McHugh has an essay on Tom Phillips _A Hummument_(an art book in which a new story is created by blocking the old text) in her book _Broken English_ In the essay, she writes

All poetry is fragment: it is shaped by its breakages, at every turn. It is the very art of turnings, toward the white frame of the page, toward the unsung, toward the vacancy made viable, that wordlessness in which our words are couched. Its lines insistently defy their own medium by averting themselves from the space available, affording the absent it say, not only at the poem's outset and end but at each line's outset and end.

I suppose part of the reason there are so many poems and works of art about "erased texts" is that we are now more self-conscious about the power of fragments than we were.

On Sun, 6 Dec 1998, Tom Orange wrote:

> Joanna,
>
> do you have time to post a part of the duplessis text that you feel speaks to this issue and comment? i haven't been able to get a hold of it yet...

↑ Index

227. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Some of the javascript pages I have at www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt speak to this; in one, columns of text efface each other (depending on the browser); in other, a text appears for a split second; in a third, with changing pages, a black page appears - the text is black on black, visible only by using the view command. www.jodi.org of course uses the view com- mand a lot; what appears on the surface is often scrabbled. the piece i did with overlapping columns, btw, is also readable in view - and view is interesting, revealing the bones of works, to the extent that it's acces- sible, i.e. not blocked from view itself.

finally, there are real-time effacements - if one is talking on ytalk for example, where each letter typed appears as soon as it's typed, it may be the case that a line is typed then suddenly erased, for example

i want you to make love to me

appears for a split second, then is gone. it's present and absent simultaneously, a trace or murmur, leaving an impression

Alan

↑ Index

228. Pierre Joris
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

> Joanna --

I tend to think that the poetics (or the aesthetics) of erasure are one of the 2 dominant modes (the other being its near opposite, that of the ever-unfolding fullness of the world in the text, say, the gamble of EP's Cantos etc.) that poetry has taken since the early days of modernism -- I'd put Mallarmé up there as as one core originator of this thought. And, in his wake, a whole range of French poetry this century, a quasi "minimalist" mode -- the likes of Daive, Du Bouchet, Albiach, Royet-Journoud. (Literally, much of their work is based on erasing text from first draughts, eliminating words, whittling what they consider the too full representational magma of written text they start from down to a final structure that consists of a careful interplay of "le Blanc" the (mallarmean) whiteness of the page and the few inscribed traces of text left over. That sense of "erasure" is also allied to a range of notions developed later by Maurice Blanchot (absence, unworking, etc.) The term "erasure" in the sense of something being "under erasure"as such comes, if I'm not mistaken, into French theoretical thought via Derrida out of Heidegger.

Pierre

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

229. Eliza McGrand
Re: J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
Sun 6 Dec 1998

one listmember, brenda iijima-uchman, will address this better than i will, but in quick summary, brenda (who is unbelievably gifted visual artists as well) and i were talking about revision. brenda said that she tried not to get stuck in past work, when i said thtat i would sometimes get work from four or five years ago, and then angst about the mistakes/problems in it, then try and fix it. i think her mindset comes more from painting world, where a big part of making art is knowing when to stop. but she elaborated about a sort of self-erasure, almost phoenix from the ashes in a sense.

she described getting interested in X problem(s) -- ideologic, philosophic, materials-oriented -- and producing work addressing/connected to that problem/query. then at certain point, getting interested in new prob/que, moving on to that, and letting go of old, letting that old body of work "represent" her from that period and not going back to revise.

it would be interesting to know if this self-erasure is a visual/plastic arts tendency, or if writers experience it as well. if writing can be whoops writers can be divided into those who practice self-erasure, who view work as time-permeated and best left in its context, and those who, like me, continually go back and ERASE parts of old work and palimpset it into present work! my hunch is that writers keep and revise. e

↑ Index

230. KENT JOHNSON
My one post for December
Sun 6 Dec 1998

I've been reading over, trying to digest some of the discussion in this amazing posting-politics thread (for I am one of the six no-mail "active" listees Joel alluded to). Now that Ron has posted the numbers, we know who has caused all this trouble: a handful of bulemic-like posters, the three most afflicted of whom have, over the entire month of November, averaged a fraction more than (get your calculators out) _one post per day_. In these bulemia sweepstakes, I come in third, and I apologize to any one of the hundreds at this table who has been made by my condition during the month of November (or other months, though Nov. has been the cuelest one for me, I believe) to feel marginalized, silenced, enervated, bored, nauseous, whatever. I admit I sometimes have a problem with controlling my appetite, and I would gladly take every one of those posts back and even never post again if it would help in some small way to save the List from this crisis of too many posts-per-person-- a crisis that is ever and dangerously deepening as those individuals who seem most anxious about the problem (including males worried about too many males posting) are now bombarding the List with multiple posts per day in an attempt to theorize how this problem might be solved without hurting the feelings of those poor souls who post too much. I mean the irony of this is so rich and effortless it kind of makes a try-too-hard ironist like me want to hurl chunks of envy all over my screen!

And could I ask if it's someone's joke or if it's _really_ the case that Henry Gould, the poster who most passionately and consistently and intelligently talks about Poetry on this List (though I am personally enervated by a good deal of what he says), has really been temporarily "86'd"?? What's the story with this, anyway? My solution to the problem: Let people like Henry, who post and psot about Poetry and the difficult love for it post all they want so as to keep the List at its core focused and debating about what the List is here for, for goodness sakes. Let there be one, two, three, many Henry's. Then all the peripheral jabberers like me and some others who like to talk about cadavers and sex and slinky underwear will just be an amusing sideshow instead of an ontological cul-de-sac..

Along with DuPlessis and Armand Schwerner, Ronald Johnson is one of the most interesting and brilliant "erasers."

Kent

↑ Index

231. Rachel Levitsky
hello again and query
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Hello,

Rachel Democracy here, back on the list. If at first you don't. . .

Just wanted to say I never did switch to the new email address, if any of you tried to reach me at mindspring, would ya try me at my old email.

Also, does anyone have an email for Gilbert Alter-Gilbert and does anyone have a suggestion for how to contact Christina Peri Rossi?

P.S. Not a Review-- Went to see Peter Gizzi and John Ashbery yesterday at Double Happiness/Segue reading series and feel renewed. Peter read some new work which seems more playful including a renewed piece, a series of, I think 7 poems meditating on the boogieman. I'd just the night before met a dog named Boogie. Ashbery was sparkling and funny and lewd and open and I was very very happy. He read unpublished work and I'd thought I'd write down titles but I got carried away. I was amazed at how he's kept reinventing himself within himeself, his singular Ashbery rhythm and how (this was the first time I'd seen him) his voice was just exactly the voice I'd heard on taped readings, tears literally popped out of my eyes!

P.S.S. Could I start a thread on poetry residencies? What has folkses experience been?

Thanks a mill,
R. Democracy

↑ Index

232. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

[redacted] wrote:
>
> Also there is Rauschenberg's famous erasing of a de Kooning drawing. RR > asked de Kooning for a drawing to be erased, and was given a mixed media > thing because de Kooning wanted to make it a difficult process. RR > apparently used about a dozen different kinds of erasers to get the job > done, and he claimed it took him about a month to finish.
>
> I've never seen this piece reproduced or in any collection: it just exists > for me as a rumor.
>
> Gary R.

The Albright-Knox Art Gallery in Buffalo has it, I believe.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

233. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

---

related to erasures: well worth checking out jim rosenberg's hypercard project, _intergrams_ (available from eastgate systems), where word clusters materialize and dematerialize by moving the cursor, each cluster consisting of lines that partially obscure other lines...

so many artists have played with print technologies over the past century... i once generated some great-looking busted-up script by running my stuff off on a daisy-wheel printer with an outworn ribbon...

best,

joe

↑ Index

234. david bromige
i want you to make love to me
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Thats' how the message from Julia, to Winston Smith, would have appeared then disappeared (v. Sondheim, Re Era sure) had 1984 been written today.

Thats mainly what I wanted to say, but feeling obliged to provide further substance, would remark that this novel's chief contribution is not its vision of a future, banal as it is, but its life as a love story--which is also a de (con) struction of the love affair. Perhaps the vision was not banal in 1948, but to those of us who have lived thru the 50 years since, it is--whereas the excruciating anaylsis of passionate love and the society whose stability is thought to depend upon its repression, has currency and will travel.

Or, in the interests of a more interactive, kind und gentle List, consider those assertions to be couched as questions. They certainly open themselves to qualification. . . .

db3

↑ Index

235. Karen Kelley
Re: J. Fuhrman's Question on Palimpsests
Sun 6 Dec 1998

I never go back to old work and always order book manuscripts chronologically, because they are written in/for a specific time & are then finished. I can't imagine working with an old text. I don't want the psychological baggage of having to feel responsible for "unfinished" pieces forever. I figure it's done once it's published in a mag, and I erase the whole manuscript from disk once it's published as a book. And that erasure is such a pleasing one!

But I was a sculpture major undergrad.

Eliza McGrand wrote:

> it would be interesting to know if this self-erasure is a visual/plastic arts tendency, or if writers experience it as well. if writing can be whoops writers can be divided into those who practice self-erasure, who view work as time-permeated and best left in its context, and those who, like me, continually go back and ERASE parts of old work and palimpset it into present work! my hunch is that writers keep and revise.
> e

↑ Index

236. Stuart Mitchell
Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Dec 1998 to 5 Dec 1998 (#1998-145)
Sun 6 Dec 1998

This is my first posting to the Poetics list.

I write from Glasgow, Scotland.

I receive the Digest of this Poetics List to keep informed about US poetics and poetry - I do buy books on a regular basis - I'm sort of educating myself in recent poetry, realising a couple of years ago thatI knew very little about the poetry being written right now.

So I feel kind of inexpert pitching in on topics, although I do gain a great deal from lurking.

Recently, I have been re-assessing my approach e-lists. I value the discussions but feel, as a reader, that I need to absorb what is happening at quite a slow rate: pressures of work, time to catch up with issues I know nothing about preclude hitting the Reply button.

So I digest.

Best wishes
Stuart Mitchell

↑ Index

237. Lisa Samuels
numbers, daughter of the book
Sun 6 Dec 1998

dear joel -- and to the many blessed persons who are writing in about writing in to this community chest, i am on the list of 'set to nomail' list members. i would like to stand and confess my reasons: email space (the in-box gets flooded) & time (it's hard to check and read and delete all the time to keep it from getting flooded). having no desire either to separate myself or to discourage the flow of words on this list (why not change the maximum number of permissable messages to 75, or 100, a day? -- is there any particular technical reason? -- or is 50 a kind of happy maximum?), my solution is to read postings through the wonderfully organized archives you maintain (or the machine, having been programmed wonderfully, maintains). i click on my 'poetics archive' bookmark and scroll through postings for individual months. i usually do so every day. i watch the subjects build and build ('numbers, daughter of the book -- 2 messages'), and i love to read poetics this way. it's like a new book every month -- you never know how it will end. and then -- january comes! so even though i =seem= to be a nonparticipant, my 'nomail' setting belies my constant reading of poetics posts. i wonder how many others do this?

i've always been intrigued by the word 'lurkers' -- it sounds so voyeuristic, so slurpy and hungry and shy and full of unsatisfied desires. but when i read a book, say, i don't feel like a lurker, even though the words i mutter as i'm reading resonate only against the walls of my room.

i don't post much because (apart from the kind of busy life-building we're all doing) what i might write usually swerves away from 'conversation' -- into something i'd rather write essays about, i guess -- and this doesn't feel like an unmediated literary talking time, to me. there are eternal recurrences here -- i'm glad to read them -- but even now i have a sense that i'm adding water to the wordy world.

nonetheless, i will send this, prompted to tell joel that people are perhaps listening more than they seem to be. or at least this people is.

thanks to all who do write. really.
lisa s.

↑ Index

238. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Yes, and Heidegger could be seen as a kind of pivot here and antidote to both a naive realism and positivism. Its Heidegger the phenomenologist as much as Heidegger the existentialist and its springs from his understanding of the futility of Husserl's approach where Husserl intends to peal away the inefficient aspects of languages relation to the 'real' by applying a mode of discourse that he has systematically unraveked from the sclerotic accretions of centuries and to eliminate the need for ever proliferating sets of meta-contrivances while acknowleding the contigent demands of time. Thus Logical Investigations is in its own way a very absorbing failure. Husserl kept freezing (trapping) the entity he wanted to free in his language, a natural result of analysis or verbal vivisection. I find Kant useful here in that he insists ding an sich cannot be captured through in its wholeness (see Bohm). It always struck me that he was quite presciently saying, and their are plenty of writers who have winnowed the same idea so its no big deal here, that knowledge is contingent. Schopenhauer among other things covered Kant's flank by foreseeing the need to address questions arising from what he called 'naive realism.' These same fundamental questions above were at the heart of the philosophical revival in the physics community around quantum theory in the late twenties and early thirties (see Heisenberg, Physics and Beyond. also Hansen, Bohr, Feyerabend, Putnam, Quine etc, etc, ad nauseam) and not surprisingly have been unconsciously fundamental to the debate leveled by conservative elements in the scientific community as well as the Cartesian left of Noam Chomsky and Alan Sokal against Deconstruction and Postmodernism. The problem is these factions (with the exception of Chomsky who is simply an unabashed Cartesian) ignore the roots of Decon/Postmod in European Transcendental Philosophy and the philosophical debate such as that which resulted in the Copenhagen Interpretation surrounding discoverys in quantum mentioned above. The criticism from Gross, Levitt, Sokal et al also lacks a sense of play, that is a sense of/for art which is found in Derrida, Foucault, Latour or as an artist might say the freedom to simply say it, whatever it might be. As Pierre suggests art and especially poetry has a huge stake in this. Mallarme, Pound, Olson, (well the list is immense) have all sensed that the fragment provides an alternative epiphanic glimpse at an essence. The Pinsky/Howe debate touched upon some of these issues. I've always suspected that Pound came to possiblities of the fragment, at least in part, when he 'edited' the Wasteland erasing long, narrative passages while maintaning enough of Eliot's text to provide a series of 'luminous details.' I like to think that the enervated harmony of personal anguish in the context of historical anxiety that is the Wasteland as we know it, must have continually stunned Pound (and suggested a form for the Cantos) as he simply went about cutting much of Eliot's personal narrative away. We haven't looked at translations of ancient texts which exist only in fragments, in the same way since the moderns. Derrida and deconstruction as well as postmodernist writers are familiar with all the threads I awkwardly touched upon above. In this their contribution if not entirely unique (e.g. The Frankfurt School) is in direct and oblique ways highly supportive of art and poetry in particular in a world that largely doesn't give a damn. Erasure is a preposturous notion to, say, a Cartesian rationalist or a pragmatist. What is left out can't be measured. Unlike a mathematical equation, The elidings do not follow rules and the result is evocative and not necessarity 'elegant' though Mallarme's Un Coup de Des certainly qualifies as both.---Carlo Parcelli Pierre Joris wrote:

>
> > Joanna --
>
> I tend to think that the poetics (or the aesthetics) of erasure are one > of the 2 dominant modes (the other being its near opposite, that of the > ever-unfolding fullness of the world in the text, say, the gamble of EP's > Cantos etc.) that poetry has taken since the early days of modernism -- I'd > put Mallarmé up there as as one core originator of this thought. And, in his > wake, a whole range of French poetry this century, a quasi "minimalist" mode
> -- the likes of Daive, Du Bouchet, Albiach, Royet-Journoud. (Literally, much > of their work is based on erasing text from first draughts, eliminating words, > whittling what they consider the too full representational magma of written > text they start from down to a final structure that consists of a careful > interplay of "le Blanc" the (mallarmean) whiteness of the page and the few > inscribed traces of text left over. That sense of "erasure" is also allied to > a range of notions developed later by Maurice Blanchot (absence, unworking, > etc.)
> The term "erasure" in the sense of something being "under erasure"as such > comes, if I'm not mistaken, into French theoretical thought via Derrida out of > Heidegger.
>
> Pierre
>
> --
> ==========
> Pierre Joris
> [redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> 6 Madison Place
> Albany NY 12202
> tel: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
> ==========
> Nomadism answers to a relation that > possession cannot satisfy.
>

> — Maurice Blanchot
> ==========

↑ Index

239. Mairead Byrne
Re: Erasing
Sun 6 Dec 1998

On Sun, 6 Dec 1998 [redacted] wrote:

> Also there is Rauschenberg's famous erasing of a de Kooning drawing. RR
> asked de Kooning for a drawing to be erased, and was given a mixed media > thing because de Kooning wanted to make it a difficult process. RR > apparently used about a dozen different kinds of erasers to get the job > done, and he claimed it took him about a month to finish.
>
My memory of the story is that Rauschenberg somewhat self-effacedly asked for a spare or losable drawing but de Kooning insisted that a really fine piece be used.
Mairead

↑ Index

240. Mark Weiss
feels like harassment to me, too
Sun 6 Dec 1998

I'm sorry that Elizabeth is opting out, but before I become the latest bete noire I think I'd better reproduce my entire backchannel discussion (complete, I think--I may have edited a line or two before saving) with her.

E. [frontchannel] I would especially like the conversation to be more thoughtful, essayish, and most importantly about topics that feel IMPORTANT (compelling, generative ? -- oh excuse me!) to me. Such as occurs in my small reading/writing group here in the Bay Area, where we read a book superclosely, and yes, sometimes get in entanglements. I am hungry for places to discuss writing

M. [bc] Then why not bring those discussions to the list? Unless you try and no one listens there's not much to complain about.

E. [bc] I have tried, just not recently. Early summer, Gertrude Stein; later, Laura Riding -- my asking seemed to spark a lot of conversation, which I listened rather than added to. And there were some others.

M. [bc] My point exactly--one can raise issues and provoke comment, even as things stand. Instead we get all this handwringing. The list rapidly turns into a gestalt therapy session.

Bully that I am, I thought that we were having a conversation. And I do think that it was appropriate to go backchannel (all 400 or 700 of us really fascinated by this interchange?). And I reiterate that it's just bad manners to publish a private interchange by going frontchannel without permission.

PS. I just looked up bete noire in my handy dandy Larousse. Seems the phrase originally meant wild boar, and not just any black beast, something I truly don't wish to become, despite the flavor.

At 08:06 AM 12/6/98 -0000, you wrote:
>Elizabeth,
>
>
>This is unhappy news. I am tempted to say that sending such a msg bc >rather than fc is cowardly, that no one has the right to tell anyone to >shut up and that if they like points so much they should stick their heads >in a pencil sharpener.
>
>But I'd rather say how much I like your posts, all of which I read, and >which bring a valuable light to the list
>
>Randolph Healy
>
>
>from [redacted]
>
>----------
>> From: Elizabeth Treadwell <[redacted]>
>> To: [redacted]
>> Subject: it feels like harassment
>> Date: 06 December 1998 00:59
>>
>> OK, I frontchanneled a back channel msg from Mark W. Really not feeling >> like making enemies for no reason, but to me, a back channel msg >basically >> telling me to shut up because what I am saying is obvious or pointless, >well
>> IT feels like harassment to me!
>>
>> sick of the list,

>> seeya
>>
>> Elizabeth
>>
>> Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
>> P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
>> http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy
>
>

↑ Index

241. KENT JOHNSON
Happy Holidays
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Best Fruit Cake Ever

1c. butter
1c. sugar
4 large eggs
1c. dried fruit
1tsp. baking powder
1tsp. soda
1tsp. salt lemon juice
1c. brown sugar
nuts
1 or 2 qt. whiskey

Before you start, sample the whiskey to check for quality. Good isn't it? Now go ahead. Select a large mixing bowl, measuring cup, etc. Check the whiskey again as it must be just right. To be sure the whiskey is of the highest quality, pour 1 level cup into a glass and drink it as fast as you can. Repeat. With an electric mixer, beat 1 cup of the butter in a large, fluffy bowl. Add 1 teaspoon of thugar and beat again. Meanwhile, make sure that the whiskey is of the finest quality. Cry another tup. Open second quart, of necessary. Add 2 arge leggs, 2 cups fried druit and beat till high. If druit gets stuck in beaters, jsut pry it loose with a drewsciver.

Sample the whiskey again, checking fro tonscisticity, then sift 3 cups of salt or anything, it really doesn't matter. Sample the whiskey. Sift 1/2 pint lemon juice, fold in chopped butter and strained nuts. Add 1 babblespoon of brown thugar, or whatever you can find, and mix well. Grease oven and turn cake pan to 350 degrees. Now pour all of the shit into the coven and ake. Check whiskey again and bo to ged.

↑ Index

242. KENT JOHNSON
A web site for the imagination
Sun 6 Dec 1998

The Museum of Jurassic Technology

www.mjt.org

--you gotta check this out. Truly amazing. A museum to poetic spirit un-bounded. There is also the magical book on the MJT from a couple years ago, _Mr. Wilson's Cabinet of Wonder_, thoguh I don't have author's name handy.

How about postings from time to time on favorite web sites Listfarians might check into? I sit at my Alta Vista Search window and my mind goes blank more often than not.

Kent

↑ Index

243. Poetics List
2 NYC Reading
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Ann Lauterbach and David Bradley Reading

Wed. Dec. 9 at 6:30

City College
138th Street and Convent Ave.
NY

'NAC' Buliding Room 6141

Free Admission

Refreshments

Jackson Mac Low and Joan Retallack Reading

Fri, Dec. 11 at 7:00

Dia Center for the Arts
548 West 22nd St
NY

Reduced admission for students
Free admission for all CCNY Creative Writing MA students

↑ Index

244. Amy King
Re: why Peter Ganick cannot think... a listserv
Sun 6 Dec 1998

Grizzly Matt Tragic

opens the rose, petal by pedal, as if a bike stood solely on two paths, wearing.

Warring binds another matter in all: The Enemy Papers want a bite; we all eat one way or another and sacred boundary issues of nurturing ways conceal amongst the eggs of easter baskets, sun-dried color-filled. Who rode from last year's advice into an inventory of this year's litany ... de-cauterize, bound to truth, roped in on the lying train straight for the Byzantine arsenal. Ira has been there– take care of the law revealing, squelch the revealed. Behind the caboose separates you from hermetics, just plain tea leaves and mug, mugging for the adopted scene in sequins of flaking parts, the rough road of stars generate pressure for a day in the making:

he has taken it apart, the fate's doldrums tinker behind that curtain's day, wheels spin for shadows of eye's day casting. Jesus is in the ceiling if we just look hellbound. In a puddle, a program, showbill, nightly agenda creeps emitting omissions, our sonic leftovers of a dinner two years in the interim between the sky east and west, never again landing. In cold feet, I stand on what's not mine. Enough of this wishy-washy pie. Command your presence:

sent to the bowl and swiped some cherries. There's more vine left than these old stalkings. Of those party ways, what would hors doeuvres sound like when using conversation as we see fitting. To blow off the tirade for a mutual lingo overtone annihilation undertaken in dissonant harmony, to begin with the neverending. (Caution. May wear dictionary & still use blind guardians.)

↑ Index

245. Thomas Bell

Archieval Revival Re: Original Good Reads

Mon 7 Dec 1998

For some reason (perhaps because of my derangement) I've kept your post in my todo box. I really like your D-E-R-A-N-G-E-D comment and I would appreciate hearing from other D-E-R-A-N-G-E-D poets (not critics or psychologists who could define it)

tom bell

Laura E. Wright wrote:
>
> > This chapbook In Aethers of the Amazon is truly deranged.
> >
>
> I've been trying all day to come up with a real opposite of cliche (one issued > raised by Ted Fristrom) and I think "truly deranged" is a pretty good one.
>
> Good derangement cannot be taught, though some learn it on their own, whether > their early cliches are harshly criticized or not.
>
> The D=E=R=A=N=G=E=M=E=N=T school poets have usually never met each other, in fact, > some of them have never met anyone at all.
> --
> Laura Wright, Library Assistant
> Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
> 2130 Arapahoe Ave
> Boulder, CO 80302
> [redacted]
> * * * * * *
> "Then there was a situation with tufts (and flowers). This did not agree > with me either, and time just kept on passing."
> (Henri Michaux)

--
//\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\
OOOPSY \//\\\/\//\\\/ <><>,...,.,

WHOOPS J K JOVE BY HHH ZOOOOZ ZEUS'WRATHHTARW
LLLL STOPG [EMPTY] SPACER

index of online work at http://members.home.net/trbell
essays: http://members.tripod.com/~trbell/criticism/gloom.htm

↑ Index

246. dbkk
Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
>
> [redacted] wrote:
>
> Also there is Rauschenberg's famous erasing of a de Kooning drawing. RR asked de Kooning for a drawing to be erased, and was given a mixed media thing because de Kooning wanted to make it a difficult process. RR apparently used about a dozen different kinds of erasers to get the job done, and he claimed it took him about a month to finish.
>
> I've never seen this piece reproduced or in any collection: it just exists for me as a rumor.
>
> Gary R.
>
> The Albright-Knox Art Gallery in Buffalo has it, I believe.
>
> Dan Zimmerman

No no Dan, it is not at Albright-Knox, it is (or will be shortly) here in San Francisco's Museum of Modern Art, hooray!! The Museum here has a new director the notorious David Ross lately of the Whitney and to welcome him the trustees must have spent a zillion dollars to buy all kinds of things, incl. the Erased de Kooning drawing (purchased directly from Rauschenberg) and San Francisco's first Eva Hesse, Mondrian, etc., some incredibly beautiful works. When I go to the museum now I feel sad because my favorite piece is on loan (Jackson Pollock's "Guardians of the Secret") for the big Pollock retrospective but on the other hand they have just acquired that famous Magritte one, mm, I can't remember what it's called ("Personal Values"? "Relative Values"?) but you know, the walls of the room look like the sky and there's a giant comb, shaving brush, pill, all leaning against the furniture of an ordinary bed sitting room.

Well, come on down everyone, to San Francisco and take a look. Besides the erased De Kooning drawing they also have the Rauschenberg piece where John Cage drove a truck over huge sheets of paper. Heavy metal thunder. Oh, and the original drawings ("they" say) for Duchamp's "Bride Stripped Bare by her Bachelors, Even," even.

Evenly yours,
Kevin Killian

↑ Index

247. Susan Schultz
Fwd: TINFISH 7 is out!
Mon 7 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_913018627_boundary

--part0_913018627_boundary

air-zb04.mail.aol.com (v53.20) with SMTP; Mon, 07 Dec 1998 03:09:59 -0500
by rly-zb04.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with SMTP id DAA10673 for <[redacted]>;
Mon, 7 Dec 1998 03:09:58 -0500 (EST)
SMTP id <150586(2)>; Sun, 6 Dec 1998 22:09:55 -1000
Sun, 6 Dec 1998 22:09:33 -1000
Date: Sun, 6 Dec 1998 22:09:31 -1000
From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
To: Peter Riley <[redacted]>
cc: [redacted], [redacted]
Subject: Re: TINFISH 7 is out! Geographically interactive!

TINFISH 7 is now available for purchase ($5 each, or $13 for a subscription to 3 issues). TINFISH is a journal of experimental poetry, with emphasis on the Pacific region.

Contributors: from Hawai`i, Ida Yoshinaga, Bill Luoma, Steve Carll, Michael McPherson, Joe Balaz, Rob Wilson, Kathy D.K.K. Banggo, and John Rieder (book reviewer). From the U.S.A.: Renee Gladman, Bobbie West, John Olson, Summi Kaipa, Jason Olive, Dan Featherston, Hugh Steinberg, Jonathan Brannen. From Australia: John Tranter, Stephen Oliver, Louis Armand (well, Czech Republic), John Kinsella (well, U.K.), Coral Hull. From New Zealand: Murray Edmond. From China: Hsia Yu, Steve Bradbury (trans.).

The marvelous covers, inner and outer, by Gaye Chan (HI) and Lisa Asagi (San Francisco).

Please order from me, Susan Schultz, at the address below, or at 47-391 Hui Iwa Street #3, Kaneohe, HI 96744, USA. Barter is possible, especially where different currencies are involved.

Thanks, Susan

Susan M. Schultz
Associate Professor and Director of Creative Writing Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

--part0_913018627_boundary--

↑ Index

248. nicholas grindell
Re: Happy Holidays
Mon 7 Dec 1998

---

dear list

just wanted to express my gratitude for the most excellent birthday cake.
i recently switched to digests in a bid to focus my list-reading time.
it worked. besides the thick blanket of fresh snow, this morning brought mr johnson's recipe, which triggered an outburst of at-the-screen mirth.
i read the whole digest through every day. every so often i post something.

greetings from berlin

nicholas

↑ Index

249. Joe Brennan
Re: Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

gut Morgan!

if anyone's interested, there's some heidegger in lacan's "Ethics of Psychoanalysis" where lacan serves up his take of several heideggerian concepts, most noticeably das Ding.

joe...

b/t/w/ my spellcheck wants to change heidegger to headgear....

↑ Index

250. daniel bouchard
the wasp of capital
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Juliana Spahr has written a stimulating and brief work called "Spiderwasp or Literary Criticism" (Spectacular Books, 1998). Beside the metaphor, the "or" refers to the verso/recto binary of narrative and text; the recto also vertically divided with provoking notes.

Spahr has begun an initial mapping of contemporary poetry in terms that have often been discussed on this List; namely, from where/what is current poetry taking its cues: new american? post-language? both? neither? Through the works of three "emerging" writers, again briefly, Spahr applies this query. It's thoughtful and direct and articulate.

I read it Saturday and felt compelled to recommend it.

Perhaps Katy Lederer can post the ordering information again.

- db

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

251. Judy Roitman

Re: Erasing/rigor

Mon 7 Dec 1998

> Carlo Parcelli wrote: "What is left out can't be measured. Unlike a mathematical equation, elidings do not follow rules and the result is evocative" etc.
>
> To which I would adduce the qualifying example of Joan Retallack's "AI/D/SAPPEARANCE" from HOW TO DO THINGS WITH WORDS: this elegy follows rules of subtraction which are brutally rigorous. "Evocative" does not feel like the right word for the resulting illustration of systematic erasure. The poem eliminates groups of letters from itself, and sort of spirals into nothingness like a curled shell. Near the end, the remaining y's and n's (and a single x) become merely "y", which is more plaintive and angry than evocative because it can be vocalized as a full sentence. The shorthand for "yes" becomes a pun for "why?" When it goes, there is only silence and invisibility rather than the play of the fragment. But this blankness is only one state in the series, so perhaps it is a fragment. Does its situation as the final state in the series endow it with a special status?
>
> Whether or not the silence of the dead can be read in/as text, and whether or not this silence is total or irrevocable would seem to be related to the issues of how Derrida, Blanchot et al theorize erasure and the connection between body and inscription. And in turn whether absence of text can represent death, or instead must always represent more text. Can there be different kinds of palimpsests, created by different gestures of blotting, erasing, tracing, collaging.....? Schwerner's Tablets.....Is blankness possible only as a hypothetical case beyond the horizon of the line?
>
> Gary R.

Only slightly (well, maybe more than that) changing the subject, there are other examples of "brutally rigorous" rules producing evocative work. For example, the programs Jim Rosenberg created to realize the vision of John Cage (this was the stuff with key words appearing vertically down the middle of the page, a sort of variation on acrostic, taken from existing texts --- anyone remember the name of this form?).

Back to the subject --- absence of text can represent many things besides death or more text. And why should it represent anything at all?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

252. miekal and
Re: Anne Waldman Archive
Mon 7 Dec 1998

John Latta wrote:
>
> I thought some may be interested to know that the Special Collections > Library at the University of Michigan just acquired the papers of Anne > Waldman,

john, do you know anything more about this special collection, what other kind of works are in it, & in particular a contact address?

↑ Index

253. Gabriel Gudding
Henry Gould, News Regarding
Mon 7 Dec 1998

---

hg has left the list. this is, for me, a great loss.

but of course he had no knowledge, no expertise, no worthy thoughts, nothing in that nut-like pate and nothing in that dessicated prune of a heart to make his posts edifying or humorous or prodding.

he was just a windbag, wasn't he.

good riddance.

↑ Index

254. groberts
Re: Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Carlo Parcelli wrote: "What is left out can't be measured. Unlike a mathematical equation, elidings do not follow rules and the result is evocative" etc.

To which I would adduce the qualifying example of Joan Retallack's "AI/D/SAPPEARANCE" from HOW TO DO THINGS WITH WORDS: this elegy follows rules of subtraction which are brutally rigorous. "Evocative" does not feel like the right word for the resulting illustration of systematic erasure. The poem eliminates groups of letters from itself, and sort of spirals into nothingness like a curled shell. Near the end, the remaining y's and n's (and a single x) become merely "y", which is more plaintive and angry than evocative because it can be vocalized as a full sentence. The shorthand for "yes" becomes a pun for "why?" When it goes, there is only silence and invisibility rather than the play of the fragment. But this blankness is only one state in the series, so perhaps it is a fragment. Does its situation as the final state in the series endow it with a special status?

Whether or not the silence of the dead can be read in/as text, and whether or not this silence is total or irrevocable would seem to be related to the issues of how Derrida, Blanchot et al theorize erasure and the connection between body and inscription. And in turn whether absence of text can represent death, or instead must always represent more text. Can there be different kinds of palimpsests, created by different gestures of blotting, erasing, tracing, collaging.....? Schwerner's Tablets.....Is blankness possible only as a hypothetical case beyond the horizon of the line?

Gary R.

↑ Index

255. Chris McCreary
address queries
Mon 7 Dec 1998

If anyone has addresses, e-mail or pony express, for Will Alexander &/or Myung Mi Kim, please back channel. Thanks much in advance.

Chris McCreary

↑ Index

256. Mairead Byrne
Re: Adieu
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Henry gently says goodbye. Though he did mention trained seals. I guess he didn't like the doghouse, despite all the fine and well-aimed bones. I've never met Henry. But he definitely is a big shaggy person in my mind. Is personality too raw for poetics?

What do you guys really think about censorship/moderation? I know in my own case I was taken aback, on November 7, when I received an unsigned advisory notice telling me "to keep posts to the list close to the focus of the list as indicated in the Welcome Message." How many of you have received such warnings? Being fairly new to the list, I posted news of my advisory notice but received no feedback. I can only conclude that such notices are either very common or very rare.

How many of you have been in the doghouse? Are you still on the list and why?

Mairead

↑ Index

257. david bromige
re erasure/rigor: judy's question
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Mesostic, I believe, is the word for the kind of acrostic you refer to, Judy.

↑ Index

258. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Erasing/rigor
Mon 7 Dec 1998

I thank Judy and Gary for pointing up an obviuos error or omission of possiblities at the end of my earlier transmission.---Carlo Parcelli
Judy Roitman wrote:
>
> >Carlo Parcelli wrote: "What is left out can't be measured. Unlike a > >mathematical equation, elidings do not follow rules and the result is > >evocative" etc.
> >
> >To which I would adduce the qualifying example of Joan Retallack's > >"AI/D/SAPPEARANCE" from HOW TO DO THINGS WITH WORDS: this elegy follows > >rules of subtraction which are brutally rigorous. "Evocative" does not > >feel like the right word for the resulting illustration of systematic > >erasure. The poem eliminates groups of letters from itself, and sort of > >spirals into nothingness like a curled shell. Near the end, the remaining > >y's and n's (and a single x) become merely "y", which is more plaintive > >and angry than evocative because it can be vocalized as a full sentence.
> >The shorthand for "yes" becomes a pun for "why?" When it goes, there is > >only silence and invisibility rather than the play of the fragment. But > >this blankness is only one state in the series, so perhaps it is a > >fragment. Does its situation as the final state in the series endow it > >with a special status?
> >
> >Whether or not the silence of the dead can be read in/as text, and whether > >or not this silence is total or irrevocable would seem to be related to > >the issues of how Derrida, Blanchot et al theorize erasure and the > >connection between body and inscription. And in turn whether absence of > >text can represent death, or instead must always represent more text.

> >Can there be different kinds of palimpsests, created by different gestures > >of blotting, erasing, tracing, collaging.....? Schwerner's > >Tablets.....Is blankness possible only as a hypothetical case beyond > >the horizon of the line?
> >
> >Gary R.
>
> Only slightly (well, maybe more than that) changing the subject, there are > other examples of "brutally rigorous" rules producing evocative work. For > example, the programs Jim Rosenberg created to realize the vision of John > Cage (this was the stuff with key words appearing vertically down the > middle of the page, a sort of variation on acrostic, taken from existing > texts --- anyone remember the name of this form?).
>
> Back to the subject --- absence of text can represent many things besides > death or more text. And why should it represent anything at all?
>
> ---
> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] |
> fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ---
> Note new area code
> ---
> http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/
> ---

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

259. John Latta
Anne Waldman Archive
Mon 7 Dec 1998

I thought some may be interested to know that the Special Collections Library at the University of Michigan just acquired the papers of Anne Waldman, described as "over 24,000 manuscripts, letters, business and personal documents, photos, and audiotapes." The collection at this point is totally unprocessed, meaning it will be some months before it will be ready for regular use. Kathryn Beam ([redacted]) notes that interested parties can contact her, though, with specific questions, with the caveat that details about items included in the archive are not now fully known by the staff.

John Latta

↑ Index

260. Pritchett,Patrick

FW: Declaration on Rights of Indigenous Peoples

Mon 7 Dec 1998

> -----Original Message-----
>
> Hi friends,
>
> I realize you get lots of e-mails and lots of requests for action from me .
> But I'm writing because there are some very important activities taking place in Geneva which will affect the future long-term status of indigenous > people all over the world. The Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous > Peoples is being considered and the United States is at the head of the charge to gut the document. The document is the result of 15 years of work > of indigenous people from all over the world. If you can fax or email letters to the people mentioned below it would be very helpful to the indigenous folks in Geneva and around the world.
>
> Thanks,
>
> Carolyn [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> Here's a little background info.
>
> The next UN Intersessional Working Group on the Draft Declaration is taking > place from November 30-December 11 in Geneva, Switzerland. This year's meetings, we believe, will be vital to the fate of the declaration. We believe that the U.S. and other nation-states will attempt to gut the draft > of all protections of indigenous peoples' collective rights-particularly the > right to meaningful self-determination. The U.S. has already stated its opposition to Article 3 of the draft, which reads "Indigenous peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development." Indigenous peoples present at the UN have agreed unanimously that Article 3 is essential to the Declaration, and must not be weakened in any way. Your hard work in this action is vital to protecting indigenous peoples' fundamental human rights!!

12/3 The United States Department of State released its position on the UN Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples to the UN Intersessional Working Group working in Geneva to review the Draft. As anticipated, the US recommends significant changes in the Draft Declaration. Those recommendations include:

A call for a new declaration*
Focusing on the rights of individuals (not the collective rights of peoples) to preserve identity and culture* Elimination of political self-determination.*
Removing the "s" from the phrase "Indigenous Peoples" and redefining the operative definition in terms of individuals or groups or populations, but not "peoples". [The word "peoples" reflects the nation status that many Indigenous Peoples hold. The word "People" does not.]*

In essence,the United States' position would undermine the work of over 160 Indigenous Peoples' organizations, forty two UN state members, nine specialized UN agencies, and other interested non-government organizations who worked for eleven years to develop the currrent 1993 Draft which represents for indigenous peoples a minimum standard of human rights. The US position also seeks to impose aspects of US Federal Indian Policy onto the rest of the world.

ACTION ALERT!!!!!!!

SUPPORT JUSTICE FOR INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

December 4,1998

As you read this, the government of the United States, is participating in a meeting at the United Nations in Geneva, Switzerland. At this meeting, the U.S. delegation is taking a public position that the rights of Native peoples are only individual rights, threatening the collective existence that Indigenous Peoples have known since the beginning of time. The U.S. has suggested that the people of the U.S. do not support the right of Indigenous Peoples to possess the internally-recognized right to self-determination. We think that this official position is simply a contemporary version of the conquest and assimilation U.S. Indian policy of the last century. We think that the U.S. delegation is both incorrect and morally wrong in taking these positions, and we are asking for your help.

Please contact the officials below and tell them that:

 THE OFFICIAL POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES SHOULD BE THAT INDIGENOUS PEOPLES MUST BE AFFORDED THE STATUS AND RECOGNITION OF ALL OTHER PEOPLES IN THE WORLD.*

 YOU SUPPORT THE INTERNATIONAL RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION FOR ALL INDIGENOUS PEOPLES.*

 YOU SUPPORT THE DRAFT UNITED NATIONS DECLARATION ON THE RIGHTS OF INDIGENOUS PEOPLES AS IT IS CURRENTLY WRITTEN, AND THAT THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT SHOULD SUPPORT IT AS IS.*

 YOU BELIEVE THAT INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS SHOULD EMBRACE BOTH INDIVIDUAL AND COLLECTIVE RIGHTS, AND THAT THE U.S. SHOULD EXPAND ITS OFFICIAL POSITION ON HUMAN RIGHTS TO REFLECT THIS.*

 TREATIES BETWEEN THE U.S. AND INDIGENOUS PEOPLES ARE BINDING INTERNATIONAL DOCUMENTS THAT SHOULD BE SUBJECT TO INTERPRETATION BY IMPARTIAL INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNALS.*

Please communicate these messages immediately to the officials below, and send copies of the communication and/or responses to: NETWARRIORS (kekula @aloha.net)

President William J. Clinton
[redacted] (ph.)

> [redacted] (fax)
> [redacted]
>
> Secretary Madeleine Albright
> Secretary of State
> [redacted] (Fax)
> [redacted]
>
> Mr. Harold Koh, Asst.Secretary of State for Human Rights -
> [redacted] (fax)
> [redacted]
>
> U.S.Mission to the UN in Geneva
> tel:011-41-22-[redacted]
> fax:011-41-22-[redacted].
>
> This position endorsed by:
> American Indian Movement,Indigenous Law Institute, American Friends Service > Committee
>
> ---------- End Forwarded Message ----------
>
> You are receiving this from the Left Hand Books event list. To be removed from the list contact:
> [redacted]

↑ Index

261. Carmen Butcher

Jackson Pollock on "destroying the image"

Mon 7 Dec 1998

A Pollock quote I have on my desk where I write poetry, to remind me of something I find true:

When I am in my painting, I'm not aware of what I'm doing. It is only after a sort of "get acquainted" period that I see what I have been about. I have no fears about making changes, destroying the image, etc., because the painting has a life of its own. I try to let it come through. It is only when I lose contact with the painting that the result is a mess. Otherwise there is pure harmony, an easy give and take, and the painting comes out well.

Carmen

↑ Index

262. Steven Shoemaker irony goggles (Be Safe: Wear Them!)
Mon 7 Dec 1998

First of all, congratulations to Kent Johnson for his astute detection of delicious ironies like: males posting to the list about males posting too much! This one was so juicy it almost squirted me in the eye when I bit into it. Luckily, I was wearing my irony goggles. Also luckily, I'm not all that afraid of irony anyway--or Kent's post might seem to suggest that there is no way for males to attempt to address questions of gender inequity. This would be a convenient way of thinking, in that us males would be absolved from ever having to talk about the issue. But I'm sure this isn't what Kent would want to suggest, given the urgent interest in political and social issues he has often demonstrated in his posts. Oops--things are getting delicious again!

Also, just for the record, if Henry has really left the list it's a shame, and I for one would never have wanted it to happen. As I've said front-channel and back-channel, and will say again, I've always valued a great deal of what Henry has had to say. I hope he'll come back. I've also been operating under the assumption, though, that the list wouldn't be hurt by a little self-examination, by an exploration of how to enrich the conversation, perhaps by including more voices, etc. But for some folks any suggestions along these lines seem to be interpreted as a sort of quasi-fascistic intervention into a situation (the status quo) that was somehow always already "free." This strikes me as a profoundly conservative reaction, even as it comes from folks who like to think of themselves as rebels and radicals.

steve

↑ Index

263. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Left Hand Reading Series for December
Mon 7 Dec 1998

> The Left Hand Reading Series for December proudly presents an evening of pre-soltitial/postprandial Brilliance:
>
> LISA JARNOT
> MARK DuCHARME
> EDMUND BERRIGAN
>
> Thursday, December 17 @ 8:30pm at Left Hand Books

> 1825 Pearl Street, Boulder, above the Crystal Market
>
> An Open Reading will proceed the featured readers.
>
> FREE - but donations are requested.
>
> Lisa Jarnot is the author of "Some Other Kind of Mission" and the forthcoming "Ring of Fire" (from Zoland Books) and is co-editor of "An Anthology of New American Poets," which was named by Publishers Weekly as one of the best new books of the year. She is currently working on a biography of Robert Duncan and teaching at the Naropa Institute as visiting faculty.
>
> Mark DuCharme is the author of "Contracting Scale" and "Three Works." His chapbook "Near To" is forthcoming from Poetry New York. His poetry and essays have appeared in many journals. He has taught at the Naropa Institute and is co-director of the Left Hand Reading Series.
>
> Edmund Berrigan is the author of several chapbooks of poetry and an editor of Log magazine. He lives in San Francisco.
>
> "To write is to let fascination rule language." - Maurice Blanchot

↑ Index

264. KENT JOHNSON Concerns
Mon 7 Dec 1998

List companions:

Charles Bernstein posted me b-c in response to my message yesterday about the posting wars. Below is my response to him. Because a later message from him this AM suggests he misunderstood the concerns I was trying to express in my reply to him below, and because I think the issues involved are very important (Henry Gould's apparent quitting of the List shows that the issues are, indeed, important), I thought I would share my letter to Charles. I don't do this lightly, nor do I presume, even, that most people on the List wish to discuss the controversy any further. There seems to be an understandable desire to move on and to "get back to the way things were." But I do feel that there are some things that have been left unsaid in all of this, and unless they are fully and honestly discussed, things will never really be "the way they were," at least as I have come to understand and love the spirit of this List. So as someone who has been quite active on this space over the past couple of years and and as someone who feels grateful for the deep enjoyment and _true education_ that activity has provided, I feel compelled to say a few things, realizing tht doing so may well perhaps lead to my own leaving of the List.

I wrote in a post yesterday (the one with the barely believable title "My one post for December"), that the real issue in this whole affair has nothing to do with numbers as the consensus has painted it. If it did, then why not just cut people off after the alloted five posts, or reduce the daily limit for everyone to provide more space? Or how could it really have to do with numbers if, as I pointed out, Henry-- poster numero uno-- averaged only a fraction more than one post per day for the whole month of November. He and Gabe Gudding-- Gudding at number three with the most posts-- have been told (and I ask to be corrected if I'm wrong), that their posts are to now be reviewed and judged before they may appear. But I, _as poster number two_, have been forewarned of nothing and have been reassured by Charles that no one has made a move to do so. All of these things put together only reaffirm for me the unpleasant and fairly obvious truth that no one seems willing to frankly discuss: That what has given rise to this whole affair is a somehow unwelcome _content_ in the sometimes biting, even, yes, iconoclastic, posts of Gould and Gudding-- a contentious content that is being "corrected" (and with the apparent acquiescence or direct approval of many on this List) through ideological monitoring and outright censorship. And I choose my terms so as to call a spade a spade.

I'm frankly stunned by this development. And I reject the argument that this is merely a matter of excercising an unfortunate but sometimes needed control for the benefit of the greater community. Yes, there would certainly be bizarre situations that would warrant such action, but no one has expalined _what it is_ about Gould and Gudding's posts that would warrant this turn of events. I, for one, as a member of the List, truly grateful, as I make clear below, for all of Charles's vision and work in makeing this space possible in the first place, do not want to be--cannot bring myself to be-- part of a "community" that has drawn an unacknowledged but very real invisible shock fence around it-- especially of a community that exists to discuss, quarrel, and _collectively_ search this unbounded and always opening subject of poetry.

I want to make absolutely clear that in stating these concerns I am in no way impugning "bad" motives to anyone. Let me be clearer at the risk of seeming maudlin: I have a sense of debt to Cahrles Bernstein, though he doesn't know it, not only out of tahnks for his efforts on this List but also in the sense that I have learned much from his thought in poetics, as I have from a number of other peopel on this List. I'm even granting Charles the best of intentions in his actions. But I do think there is an unacknowledged "political unconscious" at work in the moves to "exercise control" of the List, think that those moves are unfortunate ones, and I'm not going to let any gratitude and indebtedness I might feel keep me from saying what I think. If peopel _would_ say what they really think about this matter THEN the List can truly get back to the way it was, and perhaps, even, a person valuable to the rich heteroglossia of our conversation like Henry will come back. I hope so anyway.

Kent

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------From: Self <STUDENT/KJOHNSON> To: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]> Subject: Re: yr post to Poetics Date: Sun, 6 Dec 1998 17:34:39 -0500

Charles:

No, no one has asked me to reduce my postings, but I have to wonder why, since in the past couple of months I have posted almost as much as Henry and more than Gabe Gudding. In expressing your concern that the List had recently been topping out at 50, your post to everyone suggested that the issue was numbers, and the crisis-like disussion has indeed focused on that as the "problem." And so this frankly leads me to feel, especially following Ron's smoke 'em out tally, that most of those expressing concern must well have had me in mind as one of the "troublemakers." My own concern (and I know it is shared by others) is that the numbers really have very little to do with this and that what underlies the brouhaha is an impatience on the part of some with the stubborn and feisty voicing of positions that counter the dominant "aesthetic politics" of the List. It should be reaffirmed, and clearly, I think, that people on the List can argue for any kind of Poetics they want to. Ove rthe past year or so that has been the case, wiht Henry adding much of the exotic spice, and _in part_ because of that this List has been a great place to be, a big renga-house to wander and think and learn within.

Most recently, Gabe Gudding's hilarious and sometimes biting rants were a perfectly healthy thing for the List, whcih I consider to be a wonderful, wonderful thing, and for which I, like everyone, am very grateful to you. Please take the above, then, as an honestly felt critique of your (surprising, to me) intervention into the controversy (which was _really_ sparked, I feel, by Gudding's cheekiness contra Perloff), and understand that it is offered in appreciation for the tremendous effort over the years that you have given to make this space exist in the first place. But I think it would have been best to simply let things ride-- and it would be best, in my humble opinion, to not step-up any kind of level of "supervision."

Sincerely,
Kent

↑ Index

265. Jordan Davis
Eileen Myles . Kenneth Koch . Poetry City
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Eileen Myles and Kenneth Koch will read from their work this Thursday night December 10 at 7 pm at Poetry City
in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative 5 Union Square West in New York

The reading will be free will you?

↑ Index

266. Gabriel Gudding
God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters
Mon 7 Dec 1998

> "You are impertinent, they said to me.
> I'm not impertinent, I said: I'm lost."
>
> -- Brecht, "Emigrant's Lament"

I was going to reserve this 30 min's of freetime tht I now have for posting a few more thoughts on the THEORY OF SLAPSTICK POETICS. But the news of Henry's departure has so saddened me I am moved to write a meta-poetics commentary.

The little backchanneling of late that CB and I have done is I think fairly summed up by the above quote.

Some have said CB is killing an essential part of this list with his interventions.

I have even gone so far as jokingly to call CB a controlling prig.

One or two of us have however gone on to compliment CB on his open-minded and fair attitude (I am one of these). I compliment CB on his open mind.

Then some have come on and wrongly and scathingly denounced CB as a pompous, washed-up, control-freak who has chained letters to an outdated linguistic ideology and is someone unwilling to face the literary reality that little if any true BRISANCE can be found among the work of those who subscribe to this ideology and that his over-editing of this list's tone and content in order that no one malign this ideology is bruising the fruit of the orchard that is this list, thereby reducing its boinky of bounty. But I think that's more than unfair and possibly grossly inaccurate.

Some have even insisted that this list now be killed off in the name of all that is decent, just, fair, true, wise, excellent, healthy, progressive, non-tv-oriented, and ecologically sound.

But I am not one of these. I love this list and its boinky of bounty.

But already I miss Henry.

Some -- not I -- wrote in saying CB was a mistake, a literary accident, a flash-in-the-pan turned into a slightly-lingering coruscation-in-the-air and soon to blip into a retinal after-image on the disco-floor of letters (and whoever wrote THAT obviously had no sense of when enough is enough.) AGAIN, I am not one of these: I enjoy his work. It is important. Besides, this is everyone's fate.

Some have said it is quite plain CB's muzzling of Gould & yrs truly had little to do with volume and more to do with content -- perhaps GG's subject lines might indicate something here: "Ross Feld on Bernstein," "Bernstein and The Avant-Bored," "Bernstein Better a Haberdasher," "Marjorie Perloff is Wrong" etc etc. All of which is irrelevant, unless of course someone says different.

Despite my subject lines, I don't stand with these people: I have thanked CB both publically and privately for his open-mindedness, Indeed I am the _Boyu-na_ the harmless snake of Ceylon.

Some have even forgodsake written in impotently flaming that in the name of all that keeps our lungs pink CB should forthwith be removed post-haste like Pinsky from his poet-post, since he never deserved it in the first place these people are beneath contempt icky icky. They are sciolists and nothing more.

But let us forgive these people. They are only a little LOST in their thinking. And afterall, what is an avant-garde but a group of artists dedicated to being lost?

WITH WHOM THEN DO I STAND? With my fellow lost, of course.

MY AFFILIATIONS ARE WITH THOSE WHOSE IDEALS MATCH THOSE MENTIONED IN THE WELCOME MESSAGE OF THIS LIST. Despite many of their foibles, these Lost have much to say: a great deal of it is said in disagree-ment, with varying tone, with wild conjecture, with blicky froth of death, with mild I-would-hit-you's and with rash I-Hate-You-I-Hit-You's. In the words of the sage, It's all good. Let's suffer our mutual foibles (enervating and annoying though they be) for the sake of our many fruits.

With whom then do I stand? The lost. Not the found or the well-housed; not the comfortable. And certainly not with the well-behaved.

Be wise and write well. Warmly, Gabe

[[ps, and when that editor at Gladhanding U Quarterly Journal writes you and says "I like everything about your poem but THE TONE, just wanna change a few things and then I'll publish it," would you think twice about saying "Puh, no thank you"? I'm sure Mairead Byrne wouldn't, Henry wouldn't. And Bernstein wouldn't, that's for sure.

God bless this list and its boinky of bounty: God bless Charles and Joel! God bless Henry Gould!

& since nonymity is what it's all about: A pubic and wholehearted thankyou to Henry, Joel, Charles, Mairead, Elliza and Eliza, Steve Shoemaker, Joe's Amato & Brennen, Callow Parcelli, KENT JOHNSON, George Thompson, Billy Little, oh and Marjorie Perloff & others for hashing this out. Now: who's got henry's ph #?

↑ Index

267. Rachel Blau DuPlessis

Re: Erasing

Mon 7 Dec 1998

Dear List, as I was erasing a lot of messages, 365 piled up in a few days (cf. Big Debate, inc. gender isues [finally!], moderations, etc), I came upon <me> and the issue of erasing. So of course, I stopped erasing, and started posting. I am interested in memory and the issues of amnesia (personal and historical). This interest is both personal (I have a bad--i.e. porous-- memory) and historical (in the twentieth century there are many attempts to obliterate groups, to erase them from the face of the earth). The trauma of amnesia and the trauma of remembering, witnessing are intertwined for me. My interest did not begin "textually" (that is solely as a question of rhetoric, representation, or formal interests) tho it takes shape textually. There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a vacuum; making texts, and alluding to textual stuff (like black pages, or glosses) is absolutely linked to depths of ethical and social and poetic feeling. I don't know whether this is totally clear. I am a little wary of putting my own poems up here, but the following, for those who want to read it, might be germane. From Draft 17: Unnamed (in _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_) The first 11 lines are cited and italicized. She stood at the pit where, this 50 years,

155 Jews were shot.
There, near a field of rye,
she'd found dozens of notes and addresses

tossed away
moments before their deaths.
To this day,

she regrets
that, out of fear,
She did not pick them up.

The poetics seems plain.
Since then
there ar many people spend their time

picking up the notes.
But they are not there.
They are as gone as possible to be.

So the gathering
is imposible.
But still the shapes are bowed,

and search
this otherwhere of here.
Yet had they actually

been there
that time
being remembered,

it is equally possible
they too would have left
all of them where they lay.

(the poem continues; but this is what I will post)
==========
Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Temple University
Philadelphia, PA 19122
[redacted]

↑ Index

268. Mark Wallace
poetry reading in D.C.
Mon 7 Dec 1998

We hope that you can join us for a poetry reading on Saturday, December 12 at 7:30 p.m. at the Ruthless Grip Art Project (1508 U Street NW, on U Street near the corner of 15th, beside the big black sign!) for a poetry reading by LISA SAMUELS and ROD SMITH.

Much to the amazement of everybody who noticed it here in D.C., LISA SAMUELS' first book-length collection of poems, SEVEN VOICES (O Books) received a glowing (if short) review recently in the Washington Post, making it pretty much the first non-mainstream poetry collection ever to be reviewed in the Post, as far as anyone around here seems to know. But everybody should read the book anyway! Sophisticated and philosophical, SEVEN VOICES offers a highly theoretical, yet still emotionally engaged, look at the contemporary condition of language and the world that language both makes and can't quite find.

ROD SMITH is the author of a number of books of poetry, including IN MEMORY OF MY THEORIES (O Books) and THE BOY POEMS (Buck Downs Books). He is also the editor of AERIAL magazine, whose forthcoming issue on the work of Bruce Andrews forms the backdrop of an interchange between Rod and Bruce in the most recent issue of PHILLY TALKS. Once called by Connie Deanovich a "New York School Poet in Language Poetry clothing," Rod's work is actually far more unique and surprising than such a label suggests--but it's still a pretty funny thing to say, anyway.

We hope to see you there and for all festivities afterwards.

```
/-----------------------------------------------------------------------\ |
| |     [redacted]                                  | |     GWU:
| |     http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw                                | |     EPC:
| |     http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace                    | |
_____________________________________________________________________________|
```

↑ Index

269. Ramez Qureshi
erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Another instance of this sort of thing in Cage is his _Empty Words_, in which he subjects a Thoreau text to random I-Ching operations.
-RQ

↑ Index

270. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

rachel et al.:

are you familiar with the work of the german philosopher (recently deceased) hans blumenberg? one of his core ideas, i think (a friend of mine is a blumenberg scholar--i'm not, alas), is the necessity of forgetting.

burt

Burt Kimmelman
Department of Humanities and Social Sciences
New Jersey Institute of Technology, Newark, NJ 07102
[redacted] (p) [redacted] (f)
[redacted] (e) http://eies.njit.edu/~kimmelma (i)

↑ Index

271. Joe Brennan
(no subject)
Mon 7 Dec 1998

---

this morning I heard, sadly, that henry gould had called it quits, and now kent johnson b/c me to say that several posts that he and gabriel gudding have sent to the list have thus far not appeared. just as a matter of information, are any, or all messages submitted to the list being monitored prior to publication?

joe brennan

↑ Index

272. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Your segue into your poetics, to my mind, is perfectly legitimate. If your brief theoretical disquisition seems somewhat forced in order to conform to the set of preceding posts, well, then we've all done that from time to time in order to be a part of one discussion or another. Your subject matter is beyond reproach even if your aesthetic does not conform to the fundamental bias of this list.---Carlo Parcelli
Rachel Blau DuPlessis wrote:
>
> Dear List, as I was erasing a lot of messages, 365 piled up in a few > days (cf. Big Debate, inc. gender isues [finally!], moderations, > etc), I came upon <me> and the issue of erasing. So of course, I > stopped erasing, and started posting. I am interested in memory and > the issues of amnesia (personal and historical). This interest is > both personal (I have a bad--i.e. porous-- memory) and historical (in > the twentieth century there are many attempts to obliterate groups, > to erase them from the face of the earth). The trauma of amnesia and > the trauma of remembering, witnessing are intertwined for me. My > interest did not begin "textually" (that is solely as a question of > rhetoric, representation, or formal interests) tho it takes shape > textually. There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a > vacuum; making texts, and alluding to textual stuff (like black > pages, or glosses) is absolutely linked to depths of ethical and > social and poetic feeling. I don't know whether this is totally > clear. I am a little wary of putting my own poems up here, but the > following, for those who want to read it, might be germane. From > Draft 17: Unnamed (in _Drafts 15-XXX, The Fold_) The first 11 lines > are cited and italicized.

> She stood at the pit
> where, this 50 years,
>
> 155 Jews were shot.
> There, near a field of rye,
> she'd found dozens of notes and addresses
>
> tossed away
> moments before their deaths.
> To this day,
>
> she regrets
> that, out of fear,
> She did not pick them up.
>
> The poetics seems plain.
> Since then
> there ar many people spend their time
>
> picking up the notes.
> But they are not there.
> They are as gone as possible to be.
>
> So the gathering
> is imposible.
> But still the shapes are bowed,
>
> and search
> this otherwhere of here.
> Yet had they actually
>
> been there > that time
> being remembered,

>
> it is equally possible
> they too would have left
> all of them where they lay.
>
> (the poem continues; but this is what I will post)
> ==========
> Rachel Blau DuPlessis
> Temple University
> Philadelphia, PA 19122
> [redacted]

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

273. Dale Smith

Readings in Austin / The Hat (if this gets through…)

Mon 7 Dec 1998

The second of our monthly readings took place on Saturday night in Autin, Texas, with Roberto Tejada reading a selection of his work. His investigation of "rhetoric" as a tool for expressing the greater complexities of experience revealed a transmundane whisper within physical objects worthy of critique and desire. He pastes passages from Bataille next to the Joys of Cooking, from which he details the evisceration of an eel, the soft belly revealed for gutting once the surface-layer has been removed. He is a gracious reader, kind to his audience even as his poetry borders the limits of Texan sensibilities. Luckily, in the mouth, words move faster than many can comprehend. Such is the depth of his imagination: powerful, 'real' and expressed at high velocity.

Afterwards, of course, the usual rounds of tequila, beer and wine were consumed in the unusual, "unseasonable" open air. Several of us decided that evening to begin a reading group centered on Hamlet's Mill. Have any of you listees read this book? I'll keep you posted on this series, as it promises to make sense of apparently contradictory elements of science and myth.

Finally, I wrote a post on Friday for delivery to the list, but through some kind of intervention, it never arrived. It was a review of The Hat, edited by Jordan Davis and Chris Edgar. I suggest checking it out because this first issue is comprised only of women, having been published by men. The quality of writing varies, but it is especially interesting to read compared to the recent Moving Borders Anthology.

The writing in The Hat is motivated by various complex yankee anxieties of who and what women are. J. Spahr's piece addresses the issue of gender specific pronouns in the process of revealing a kind of "love" poem to some equally, distant being bound in the process of internal re-imagination. Her lines are expressed according to syllogistic logic, direct but complicated by other syntactic "movements" of repetition and rhetorical positions.

"So this," she writes, "is what is meant by the 'seeking that takes place between prelanguaged and languaged states, before and behind the 'I.'"

And then a few lines later:

"Or I or he or she am or is trying missing or mixing things up.
Thanks for the directions."

Juliana's insistent position that we examine and articulate the complexity of gender and human construction is valiant, moreso since her critique has tightend here, for me, becoming more direct and less hesitant. Although firmly entrenched in the socio-cultural, her energy appears to come from another place entirely, but other readers can determine that for themselves.

With 20 pages, Kimberly Lyons receives the most space in this issue. The poems are sharp, angular, focused on naturally occuring phenomena. Objects lie in juxtapositions that create imaginative possibilities. Some might find only colors and shades here; others only sentimental attachments. But the phrasing and rhythm, the space around the lines-- these things create a radiation of event that swells up from within the poem:

Trees fill the window and light is thin, holds its dust.

On the bar
last night I saw
Three martinis,
trembling triangles.
Nancy said
this is the first time
I've felt happy.
big white trucks.
I guess everybody goes there
at least once.

The line breaks and injambment play with meaning. There's a strangeness here that resists explanation. There's a sense of revelation without opaque self-consciousness. You can see why the editors chose so many pieces from her.

Janice Lowe address race directly in her poem, "The Summervilles of Pickens County." She resists theorizing the assumptions and details of racial encounter by addressing the details in language that live "in the mouth." Although her use of the little 'i' is annoying, the coloquial articulation of this poem builds a powerful address.

i tell the black ones calling me red
    you wanna be red like me nigger
the white ones
    you redder than me you gotdam cracker
all this is turning me
into a kind of peckerwood nigger
i don't like for people to be black and greasy at the same time
i prefer yellow women for lovemaking some have said
all my children have lightskinned mothers
of course i'm a race man

Witness the velocity of those lines, the build-up and speed. Like many of the pieces in this collection, the concerns of the social are delivered in a language that feels threaded to other agencies of expression. This only complicates and increases the emotional trajectories aimed against the dominate regimes of the social.

Anyhow, it's a magazine worth checking out. Poems by Catherine Barnett, Brenda Coultas, Tonya Foster, Greta Goetz, Lisa Jarnot, Carol Mirakove, Ange Mlinko, Cynthia Nelson, Hoa Nguyen, Alice Notley and Prageeta Sharma are also included.

Contact Jordan if you're interested. The Hat is cool.

Dale

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

274. Ralph Wessman famous reporter 18 (apologies for x-posting)
Mon 7 Dec 1998

---

famous reporter 18

To be launched by Christiane Bostock - at Hobart Bookshop 5.30 p.m., Thursday 10th December.

In this issue:
poetry
John Allison, Marilyn Arnold, eric beach, Christiane Bostock, Laurie Brinklow, Adrian Caesar, SM Chianti, Alison Croggon, MTC Cronin, Alison Daniel, Stephen Edgar, Rory Harris, Greta Harrison, JS Harry, Pete Hay, Randolph Healy, Jennie Herrera, Karen Knight, Jules Leigh Koch, Yve Louis, Myron Lysenko, Angela Mahoney, Claire Mahoney, Stephen Mallick, Lorraine Marwood, Lissa Mitchell, Mal Morgan, Adam Morgenstern, Louise Oxley, Bill Pitt, Lyn Reeves, Charmaine Salter, Emma Searle, Andrea Sherwood, Matt Simpson, Juliana Spahr, Maurice Strangard, John West, Terry Whitebeach, Les Wicks, Elizabeth Winfield and Quendryth Young

reviews
Geoff Dean Over The Fence (Barney Roberts)
Benjamin Gilmour The Song of a Hundred Miles (David Jack) Hobo magazine (Marilyn Arnold)
Robert Manne The Way We Live Now (Anne Collins)
Cassandra Pybus Till Apples Grow on an Orange Tree (Lisbet De Castro Lopo)
Henry Reynolds This Whispering in our Hearts (Elizabeth Dean)

articles Kevin Brophy, Medieval Thinking and the Novelization of the Poem (a talk presented at the Wollongong Poetry Workshops, January 1998)
Jane Downing, Getting Away From It All
Mary Jenkins, A Meditation on Women, Place and 'The Sound of One Hand Clapping' Robyn Mathison, Farmhouse Fragments
Mark O'Flynn, launch speech: Five Islands Press New Poets Program - Ric Adamson, Lucy Dougan, Jane Gibian, Judy Johnson, Alistair Stewart and Jane Williams
Lisa Robertson, Essay (from "Soft Architecture")
Liz Winfield, Aftertaste - a brief exploration of recently published journals and collections opinion Freedom of Speech & the Fatwa Against Rushdie Yasmine Galenorn The Satanic Verses, Art or Libel? Rukhsana Khan Tasmanian Parliamentary Reform Norm Adamczewski, Robert Bell, Simon Cubit, Fred Duncan, Neil McCormick, John Shimmins, Annie Willock

prose
Orson 'Steve' Claridge / Anne Shimmins / Zenda Vecchio

Young Writers
poetry and prose by Katie Astrinakis, Bridget Eltham, Daniel Grey, Chess Haig, Alena Hrasky, Jamie McCallum, Kate Murphy, Liz Rogowski, Paige Smith, Ben Walter and Megan Williams

100 words prose & poetry section
Ann Abrahmsen, Emma Buss, Bill Collis, David Farnsworth, Sandy Fitts, Kevin Gillam, Jacqueline Hogan-Toll, Catherine Mair, Marguerite Varday, John West and Rosmarie Winter

haiku
Ross Clarke, Ysobel Copp, John West, Kate McMaugh, Estelle Randall, Sue Mill, Robin Loftus, Marylee Valentine, Carol Easton, Margarita Engle, Patricia Prime, Cornelis Vleeskens, Matt Hetherington, Catherine Mair, E.A. Horne, Martha Connors, Sue Stanford, Bill West

famous reporter # 18 ... $8 from Walleah Press, PO Box 368, North Hobart, Tasmania 7002 Australia

↑ Index

275. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Auster Studies
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Jim Bennett and George Thompson asked for any resources on Paul Auster's poetry. I dug through bibliographic sources -- most of which is in French or German. In fact, it's quite startling and disturbing to see the reception and commentary Auster receives in Europe and how relatively ignored he is in the US. I found only one article about his poetry: "In the Realm of the Naked Eye: The Poetry of Paul Auster" by Norman Finkelstein in the collection of esays on Auster's work, Beyond the Red Notebook (Phil: U of Penn, 1995). Of course, most of his work is fiction (and now film), so the paucity of criticism on his poetry has some explanation. But, given the questions of poetics he addresses (such as the erasure discusion going on right now), his fiction and poetry should be receiving far more attention than it has. This may be one instance where "academic" or more scholarly consideration is far behind other venues. Perhaps other folks know more and can share..

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

276. George Thompson

Note on the Indo-European origins of Gabe Gudding's game

Mon 7 Dec 1998

Gabe Gudding and I have been talking off-list about the history of "insultive traditions". Since I am aware of such traditions in old Indo-European at least, I thought that some of the list might be interested to know that there is a kind of long intellectual background to what GG has been doing on this list.

An Old Irish poet [a fili, a 'seer'], for example, if you annoyed him enough, could curse, mock, revile, or 'insult' you. And you would become shamed, or disgraced, or even disfigured, as a result. You might even die of shame, if the poet were a really good one in this genre. We call it blame poetry these days. I wonder if anyone on this list has suffered any disfigurement, etc., lately.

Maybe it would be interesting to consider Gabe's game in light of Old English 'flyting' [see OED 'flite, flyte'], or the Old Norse verbal duels that Loki, among the gods, was fond of. You could also check out "The Contest of Homer and Hesiod" [or, even better, the BATRAXOMYOMAXIA, 'The Battle of the Frogs and Mice']. Or, on a more perssonal note, look at what happened when Archilochus trashed Lycambes [L. and his three daughters unfortunately committed suicide, so they say].

Walter Ong has been mentioned on this list in the past. He is the Jesuit who has been interested in oral literature and oral consciousness since the sixties, and has written some books that many on the list know about [Presence of the Word, Interfaces of the Word, Orality and Literacy, and something called Fighting For Life: Contest, Sexuality and Consciousness]. In this last one Ong examines the agonistic roots of culture [esp. male culture], and claims that oral literature is predominantly agonistic, that academic culture is predominantly agonistic, and that intellectual culture in general is predominantly agonistic. Hard to argue with him, given our own experience. Isn't poetic culture predominantly agonistic too?

I don't know if this is a cultural universal. In general, I don't trust claims of cultural universality. But in any case this list's behavior seems to confirm Ong's thesis, as does my familiarity with Vedic culture and literature. May I trouble the list with one more example, this time from Vedic literature? [Please erase this if you please; erasure is interesting too, to be sure...].

People tend to think of the Vedas as populated by wise or vacant swamis and yogis, or chanting brahmins pouring smoking ghee into midnight fires. Well, there's some of that in them. But there is a surprising lot also of what Gabe calls "insultive tradition."

Now the Vedic horse sacrifice, which I do believe tells us more about ourselves than the Pisan Cantos do [no, I don't know why], has many interesting features which I'm sure the list would enjoy [Bowering and Bromige in particular, but let's not go there]. But I will confine myself to the insults that are exchanged between the brahmins on the one hand and the chief queens on the other [an exchange that immdiately follows the riddling that frames the central mystery of this Vedic "Mass": the sacrifice of the horse].

I won't get into what the horse and the chief queen do, though that is in fact what triggers the insults that follow. The brahmins proceed to insult the queens by calling tauntingly to the queens' little tweetees [literally: little birds]., and the queens respond to this taunting by insulting the size of the brahmins' little peckers [literally again: little birds].

Well, a whole lot of indiscriminate insulting, of a shockingly graphic sexual kind, ensues, [including the suggestion, made by the guy who has sponsored the whole damned expensive sacrifice, the king himself, that the queen should be buggered by his proxy, the horse...]. Makes you want to convert to Buddhism.

Well, in the end, or up the rear, the point is this: according to the Vedas, "insulting speeches are for all kinds of attainment, for through the horse sacrifice all desires are achieved..."

So what has Gabe attained? I don't know. But you're supposed to end the Vedic horse sacrifice with some sweet smelling verses, in order to propitiate those who have been offended [i.e., the gods]. And Gabe I think has done things as prescribed in the Vedas, after all.

So, why has Henry Gould been sacrificed as well? There seems to me to be no need for this, since all of the correct insulting has already been accomplished, and, after all, it was only a ritual.

The ritual is supposed to protect us from the real.... what has happened here?

GT

↑ Index

277. Carl Wilson
Re: Erasing
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Erasure as both a poetic and a personal concern: There was a time in my writing when i wanted to pare down to the single luminous statement, to let the writing serve as much as a mark for what wasn't said or understood as for what was. I was influenced in this i think both by a sort of mystical catholic heritage, in which writing felt like a gestural ritual to evoke grace, pain, mystery, (but also a sort of domination and control), and by my thin adolescent knowledge of eastern writing, which seemed to me then to deal much with evanescence, the sparsity and insufficiency (and wonder) of our perceptions and of the thingness of things.

Later i began to feel that it was more true to my own hyperactive, compulsively descriptive and analytical personality (a product of the culture i really grew in) to be more expansive, to catalogue and imagine via language how much muchness seemed to be, that the sparseness i was fascinated by was interior, more a product of how little i knew - being a writer seemed to imply facing some overwhelmingly indefinite variability.

Today, it doesn't seem to me to be a choice between, as Pierre put it, fullness/unfolding and erasure/minimalism. It's the interplay of the two - which i think Rachel's work in the Drafts displays quite powerfully. Erasure as the outside (and other) to the folding and unfolding. Because erasure - loss - forgetting - elimination - is both dangerous and necessary.

Erasure refers to the huge pit of absence that an event like the holocaust opens in history. Erasure is also a hazard to be faced - denial, forgetting, loss of history. But it is also true to the process of letting go of, for instance, prejudice or other sick habits of thought, confining codes, errors, the crippling power of trauma. Reinventing the self (and the social, and their respective languages), so necessary to continuance, involves selective forgetting.

Much of what we do in poetry now, i think, is to represent such processes of transformation, loss and gain, but always in flux. Modernism's forward-thrust (make-it-new revolution, extincting the old) has given way to a spiral. (Not that this is unprecedented - Stevens' poem as act of the mind, ye olde stream-of-consciousness etc.) Many of us work on non-linear models to call up the ways that thought, perspective, representation, articulation double back on themselves, forget some things, repeat and recall others, bog down, calm down, agitate again, bifurcate, split, mark, break, erase, write. Little of interest is happening in still-lifes, static judgments.

Yet we are haunted by those erasures, their smudges and tears. If it's all transformation, how do we judge our responsibilities (and ethical choices). Where does the forgotten go? How much of the etymology and how many past uses of a word lurk under its apparent surface and sound? The unspeakability of that haunting interrupts our accounts of interruption, pins them to their tracks, demands its own recognition.

The mention of Retallack's ai/d/sappearance - alphabetic subtraction - also reminds of the Oulipo lipograms, esp. Perec's La disparition or (in English) A Void, in which the erased letter (E) from the vocabulary of the book also becomes the central point of the plot - everyone is looking for the thing that has been erased. While Perec is comic about it, mostly, the seriousness of the theme for Perec in postwar France is fairly evident.

These seem inescapable writing issues, but Rachel's quite right I think to note this as a particularly end-of-this-century urgency. I'm curious how this approach to erasure, at least in tone, might change in 10 or 20 years.

carl patrick wilson

↑ Index

278. Steven Shoemaker
non-po reading
Mon 7 Dec 1998

I'm a little behind the eight ball on this one, what with all my demanding but oh so rewarding work on the Rules Committee. But I love the list when it lists, and listens.

Dodie Bellamy--Letters of Mina Harker. Picked this up as a result of all the glowing recommendations from various listmembers. And it does glow, like a radioactive isotope.

Nicholson Baker--The Size of Thoughts, Essays and other Lumber. Baker is a bit wonkish sometimes but also brilliant, funny, & one of the master practictioners of the sentence writing today (though maybe not the new sentence). Of special interest to list-types are two wonderful essays, one on the history of punctuation and another on the demise of the card catalog system. I went into the latter essay thinking about how the old card catalogs always gave me a stiff neck, and remembering that you couldn't log in from home back in the days, but B. makes a damn good case that the destruction of these catalogs to make way for on-line systems has been an atrocity. (He's not saying we shouldn't have gone on-line, but he's pissed that libraries simply dumped & destroyed the old catalogs, and he points out both some lost virtues of the old system and some serious flaws in the new one. Might consider this one under the "erasure" thread.)

Humberto R. Maturana and Francisco J. Varela--The Tree of Knowledge: The Biological Roots of Human Understanding. Weird neurobiologists from Chile.

The O. Henry Awards Prize Stories, Best of 1997. The Prize Jury for this one was Louise Erdrich, Thom Jones, & David Foster Wallace. Some too-familiar formulas here & there, but also some pretty good stories, including the first-prize winner by Mary Gordon, and one that made it in from Conjunctions by Rick Moody. I hadn't known either of these writers, but it says in the back that Moody wrote the novel The Ice Storm. I'm assuming that this is the novel the movie was based on, but don't know for sure. Anyway, I liked the movie--anyone read the book?

steve

↑ Index

279. joel lewis
f.y.i. (ho-ho)
Mon 7 Dec 1998

 Canada co. pulls Jesus cellular ad

RED DEER, Alberta (AP) - An Alberta telephone company pulled a TV ad featuring one of the Three Wise Men pitching cell phones to the baby Jesus after receiving about 100 complaints. "We felt people felt strongly about this religious issue and that it would be better to withdraw the ads," said Arnie Stephens, vice president of marketing for Telus Mobility, the company that canceled the ad Friday. The commercial featured two of the Wise Men offering frankincense and myrrh to a figure off-camera, presumably Jesus. Instead of offering gold, the third Wise Man offers a deal on the phone company's prepaid cell-phone plan. "We expected we would get some calls," Stephens said. "The intensity of the feelings, that's something new to us." ###

↑ Index

280. louis stroffolino
ATTENTION KEVIN AND DODIE---
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Could one of you (or both of you) backchannel me?
thanks, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

281. Daniel Kane
"The Academy of the Future is Opening..."
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Could someone let me know what poem the line "The Academy of the Future is Opening its Doors" is from -- an Ashbery poem, I know, but which one? And if you know for sure that the line "feminine, marvellous, and tough" is "originally" from F. O'Hara, could you let me know which O'Hara poem it is? Please backchannel responses to <[redacted]>. Much appreciated.

↑ Index

282. George Bowering
Re: i want you to make love to me
Mon 7 Dec 1998

Bromige is a genius--but then I always almost knew that. Iteacher.n my overquick memory/thinking abt that novel, I considered the political story in its broad parodic swipe as the main show, and had never thought that long about the love story, seeing it as just one of many human aspirations shown to be battened but still seeping. But Brom is right. The love story, and its limits and "betrayal" a terrif centre of the book. Thanks, ol'

> Thats mainly what I wanted to say, but feeling obliged to provide further substance, would remark that this novel's chief contribution is not its vision of a future, banal as it is, but its life as a love story--which is also a de (con) struction of the love affair. Perhaps the vision was not banal in 1948, but to those of us who have lived thru the 50 years since, it is--whereas the excruciating anaylsis of passionate love and the society whose stability is thought to depend upon its repression, has currency and will travel.

GB

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

283. Thomas Bell
Re: Erasing
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Thank you for posting what you did. I have seen verbalizing as an important element in resolving trauma in my work (as psychologist). In my work as poet I have felt an impulse to obscure or obliterate what I've said for some time (going so far at times as incorporating visual work that covers the text. I suspect that all these are related.

tom bell

Rachel Blau DuPlessis wrote:
> textually. There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a > vacuum; making texts, and alluding to textual stuff (like black > pages, or glosses) is absolutely linked to depths of ethical and > social and poetic feeling. I don't know whether this is totally > clear.

--
//\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\/\\
OOOPSY \//\\\/\//\\\/ <><>,...,.,
WHOOPS J K JOVE BY HHH ZOOOOZ ZEUS'WRATHHTARW
 LLLL STOPG [EMPTY] SPACER

index of online work at http://members.home.net/trbell
essays: http://members.tripod.com/~trbell/criticism/gloom.htm

↑ Index

284. Simon DeDeo
(no subject)
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I'm sorry to hear the Henry Gould has left the list; I've had my fair share of conflicts with him, and, even when I'd been lurking and disengaged from most of the debates on the list, I still welcomed his voice.

Have been reading Lyn Hejinian's _The Cold of Poetry_, which is my first real forary into the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets. I'm working on a feature for the arts magazine here on "metaphysical" poets (beginning with Eliot's notion in his lectures), and the piece has been widening its scope step by step until I decided that one useful thing I might do is try to bring a writer (Lyn) into the discussions that happen around the campus, which usually center around a resolute conservative position. The basic idea -- that much of what is considered poetry today is a simple concatenation of aphorisms about suburban life, sometimes widened into a "multicultural" domain.

I began considering the piece when I realized the strange dead feeling that came over me when I read so much of the "approved" poetry of recent years; once upon a time, reading opened avenues into new experience. Now, so much of what is written seems to be a series of anguished reworkings of what is always around. Reading the _Cold of Poetry_, I realized how much I had been missing simply because I had "gotten too good" at reading, say, the Confessionals -- which is partly my fault, but partly, I think, theirs.

In other news: I'm beginning the ground work for a paper on notions of beauty in an urban context (it's actually for Elaine Scarry's class that came up for discussion here a few days ago). Is there anybody on the list that can point to some interesting works on urban space? There is, unfortunately, so much bad work out there in this field that I feel I need a Virgil to guide me to useful starting points.

-- Simon

[redacted]
http://www.fas.harvard.edu/~sdedeo/localpapers.html

↑ Index

285. A. Jenn Sondheim
boo-boo
Tue 8 Dec 1998

==

boo-boo

When I die, I want to take you with me, I want to take ten of the ten, and fifteen of the fifteen, And I will wear the dreary blue-blue you have given me - There will be one atom left, to placate the dreary vacuum, One molecule grappled by cell-counts sloughed and scrambled, Tissue rent asunder, organs corroded, soul's debris abandoned - And I will wear the blue-blue, I will wear the overcoat and ring, Carnelion round my neck, magnetite across my throat, and singing - Your name - as I am torn asunder, the fifteen dreary words, The ten lost and forlorn colors, the fifteen dying notes, The ten corroded sites - you Blue-Blue, wear my overcoat - You Blue-Blue wear my ring - placate my death with dreary yours - What a vacuum here, and souls of dying atoms split asunder Stumble just beneath you Blue-Blue, taking me abandoned -

---

↑ Index

286. J Kuszai
erased
Tue 8 Dec 1998

i find it a sad commentary on the state of this list that we get Rachel Blau DuPlessis out of her erasing-frenzy to respond to a thread with some serious potential, and yet, not one post in reply. Perhaps we should have another round of "Free Henry"-- as that seems to be what keeps people going around here. I would like to cite a passage from Rachel's post and throw it back into the mix, as I think it warrants further attention:

"... The trauma of amnesia and the trauma of remembering, witnessing are intertwined for me. My interest did not begin "textually" (that is solely as a question of rhetoric, representation, or formal interests) tho it takes shape textually. There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a vacuum; making texts, and alluding to textual stuff (like black pages, or glosses) is absolutely linked to depths of ethical and social and poetic feeling."

it would be good to hear further elaboration as to what is meant by this statement. Obviously we don't live in isolation, nor in a vacuum. I would be curious to hear of instances of poetic value which assert themselves as such-- i.e. as without regard to externalia in this day and age; and perhaps more importantly, how do the various poets and/or critics on this list see/ or solve the issues raised by questions of erasure. I am thinking, initially, of Susan Howe's Eikon Basilike and the resolution of such by "making the dead walk again" ... more from Rachel, whose work on Susan and others has been at the fore, would be much appreciated...

↑ Index

287. miekal and
The Martyrology of St. Henry
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

to charles & joel & the players

feels to me
like the silence & confusion imposed upon the list comes from a lot of wondering from all of us
"am I to be censured, scolded, moderated next?"

beyond the question of whether st henry or st gabe or st kent conformed to some mysterious preconception of list ettiquette, is a need as a reader to want to build a faith & trust among this written community so that what we say is supported & given chance to rise about the ordinary, to be more than digit noise in the cathode fantasy.

my understanding of such establishing of trust includes having available to us the microscopic truth of what the saint fuck is going on, that moderation & the wizard behind the curtain is exposed & made visible, so that we can put a stop to wondering if we are are the next target

& speaking personally, Im prompted to jump into this for a moment, not because Im paranoid, but because this textual wilderness comes with responsibilities & accounting,
which would seems to me to be relevant to the list as a whole, not just the select few who are closest to the editorial closet

truly the undersigned

st and the impaired

↑ Index

288. MAYHEW
ccoolliiddggee qquueerryy
Tue 8 Dec 1998

A query:

Is there any recording commercially or otherwise available of Coolidge reading with the Rova Quartet?

Is the list "enslaved" once again? Let's hope it is soon free again to work its magic.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

289. schuchat
Re: call me morbid call me pale
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I don't know French, so I am probably the best person to answer your query.

The "abstract French lyric" is by Pierre Reverie.

The "French abstract" lyric is an academic piece, a song about a list of articles either in French or on French.

Can the "Abstract" French "Lyric" can cut the mustard?

Le lyric abstruit Fran-swa? C'est moi!

However, there is also the possibility of Isidore Isou, the Romanian (naturellement) inventor of Le Poesie Lettriste, who wrote "in French" to the extent that lettriste poesie would be in a language.

It is possible that Andy Britain also wrote a French abstract lyric.

As we say in Russia, "etot vsou"

↑ Index

290. Poetry Project
call me morbid call me pale
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I was wondering if anyone could, in public or in private, explain to me what exactly the "Abstract French Lyric" or the "French Abstract Lyric" is? I hear rumors of its existence, but no one has ever grabbed me by the waist & pointed one out.

Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

291. Poetry Project
readings at the Poetry Project
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Hi Everybody,

The readings at the Poetry Project this week are:

Ange Mlinko & Lee Harwood on Wednesday, December 9th at 8 pm

This is a very rare stateside appearance for Lee Harwood, who has just published his first full-length collection in many years, _Morning Light_.

Jaywalking Blues: d.a. levy Lives on Friday, Dec. 11th at 10:30 pm with Edward Sanders, Mike Golden, and others.

Robert Bove and Janice Lowe on Monday, Dec. 8th at 8 pm

Mitch Highfill & Ed Roberson on Wednesday, Dec. 16th at 8 pm

AND

Not Home for the Holidays--Dysfunctional Family Stories with Todd Colby, Sarah Schulman, Bonny Finberg, Taylor Mead and Hal Sirowitz on Friday, Dec. 18th at 10:30 pm

That will be our last reading before the 25th Annual New Year's Day Marathon Reading on JANUARY 1ST, starting at 2 pm (Patti Smith, Eric Bogosian & Cecil Taylor are some of the headliners)

For information, call [redacted].

↑ Index

292. Rachel Levitsky
[Fwd: Protest Institutional Violence in NYC Jails]
Tue 8 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

Maybe some of you can go to this today in NYC. I'll be teaching.

Bytheway regarding my backstreet affairs with GB: I thought I was having backchannel affairs and could no longer be arrested by the Disney Police but its true they threw the book at us for considering our demographics and insisting they mattered despite our wealth and it didn't help matters at all that children were crying over the icky fluids we'd gotten all over their rugrats.

by igcb.igc.org (8.8.8/8.8.8) with ESMTP id NAA14468;
Thu, 3 Dec 1998 13:51:37 -0800 (PST)
by igce.igc.org (8.9.1/8.9.1) with SMTP id NAA06122;
Thu, 3 Dec 1998 13:45:10 -0800 (PST)
From: "richie perez" <[redacted]> Organization: boricuanet
To: [redacted], [redacted],
"Melissa Hernandez" <[redacted]>, [redacted], [redacted], Monifa Akinwole <[redacted]>,
"Monique M. Larocque" <[redacted]>, [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
"Ray Rivera" <[redacted]>
Date: Thu, 3 Dec 1998 16:08:44 +0000
Subject: Protest Institutional Violence in NYC Jails
Priority: normal

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
From: Self </rperez>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Protest Institutional Violence in NYC Jails
Date: Thu, 3 Dec 1998 16:01:39

JUSTICE FOR JOSE SANTOS
STOP INSTITUTIONAL VIOLENCE IN NYC JAILS

Tuesday, Dec. 8, 1998, 5:30 - 7:00 pm
Dept. of Corrections/60 Hudson St.
(1,2, A trains to Chambers St.)

Jose "Rolow" Santos was murdered by Rikers Island correction officers on June 9, 1997. The killing was covered up as a "suicide" by the NYC Dept. of Corrections.

An independent autopsy revealed injuries inconsistent with suicide and consistent with violence--violence which witnesses say started in a confrontation with correction officers in the visiting room the day before Jose Santos's death.

Ever day, the number of young people, overwhelmingly young Blacks and Latinos, that are imprisoned grows. Like police brutality on the outside, violence in NYC prisons at the hands of correction officers has escalated to the point that the city was recently forced to settle a federal lawsuit for assault and murder against prisoners.

The Santos family, which has joined other families fighting police abuse, urges you to join them. Their son, like thousands of others awaiting trial on Rikers Island, was supposed to be INNOCENT UNTIL PROVEN GUILTY. But brutal guards, protected by a brutal system took away his rights and his life.

Richie Perez
National Congress for Puerto Rican Rights
[redacted].
Richie Perez
[redacted]
[redacted]

----------6CC16258225--

↑ Index

293. Anastasios Kozaitis

Vanishing posts

Tue 8 Dec 1998

I must admit I'm one of the lurkers, and I was one of the digest folks, to boot. I think I did it for two reasons. I didn't think I could resist the temptation to read each and every post I was receiving throughout the day at work. So, I signed up as a digest reader. This allowed me the opportunity to get acquainted with the scope and the discourse of the list. I also understand the I wasn't getting as much as I could out of the list by not entering the dialogue. But, I believed that I need a bit of an education or that I should take the cotton out of my ears and stuff it in my mouth as an orientation. I also realized it became difficult to respond when I read the digest each night on the way home from work, and I would miss many of the weekend posts. I still miss the weekend posts. Reading the digests, however, has been a good education for me, and I have learned a great deal about things I never considered when it came to poetry.

The recent banter has been educational as well. I, for one, miss Henry Gould's posts and wish he'd come back.

Yesterday, I switched back to mail poetics rather than digest. And, it appears that no one has posted in almost 24 hours. This post may be more of a test than anything else.

Open ended question: Why do the poets on this list write poetry?

↑ Index

294. Daniel Carter
items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

time atoms heavenlyweight reefer lexicon feathery quill tonal recall list: leathery queue will/shall until still the elements and things of maya evenly weighted Ur's the her's day skat ladle moon re: fire spray doubt 'n' co-up-links lead car what sin spiral channel recall a vital verbidity something about the taste a chilly little riddle lick dis'n the world as a hole info-host cavity propulsion unit t' self-untie unity divine my destined candy mass tick-up tea cup hiccupsphere even further hidden class dis t' ink shut-ins writ all out plain 'n' ample sample up here to disappear down there derive pie lonesome displacement by one t' be the cave-sinner preywrist addition edition on wedding day in favorable write nuffin' tear rhyme wit ear-leering works fray blown t' melt a physical entrances upon the lathery pre-take off spiralling off somewhere the recipient of mail domination: subject: energy depletion flawprof points of inflammation shot with sugar brainstream of the very clearest words some planet screen Shadow Town valves via sedentary entrances hisses t' rue careerest works the act of joining taken to some other field location so as not to prematurely disturb or truncate current spaces these for emphasis apt laws 'n' modern spice re-braining t' trance fire imprunity ticklinkly gun sitter link-time daily is a name rotational report on our lather sensuous mutual versations/verse-actions hastily t' Lola way one zone leaf a gloss o' tea plays all rougher me gentle swayin' easy

↑ Index

295. Randy Prunty
Re: items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
Tue 8 Dec 1998

hey Daniel. I like your manifesto.

Randy

↑ Index

296. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Concerns
Tue 8 Dec 1998

well now we have two posts---juliana's and kent's---which in many ways are oppositionally aligned, insofar as their approach to the "content" of this list goes (what it should be, whether it should be controlled in any way, etc.)... i suppose i don't have to note, as well, that juliana is a woman (a fact re which she makes direct reference) and kent is a man...

i'm reminded of the fascist vs. anarchist debates in italy... only reminded though...

one additional issue that needs to be brought to the fore here: one of the reasons we're struggling of late is that this medium has brought us all together in some unprecedented ways... yes, the issue of medium---i won't belabor it here, but the public-private dimension of this list constitutes in some ways a direct challenge to print practices, incl. perhaps the editorial function that charles is trying, in my view is trying at some pains, to institute (and i'm not "accusing" or "blaming" charles here---i've no doubt he's doing his best)...

we're stuck (in the sense i long ago came to appreciate via pirsig's _zen and the art of motorcycle maintenance_), and the only way out of our stuckness, i think, will be to find a way to make for infrequent, real-time, up-front moderation (much as self-moderation/regulation currently works in collective terms)... but i'll leave it to charles, as listowner, to listen to what we're all busy telling him (front & backchannel) and weigh in here with what he thinks we can/should/might/oughtta do...

best,

joe

↑ Index

297. Chris McCreary
a modest proposal
Tue 8 Dec 1998

This is in response to Juliana Spahr's tentative suggestion that the list could possibly become a more restricted forum limited to the posting of announcements, etc.

I'd just like to point out that that's all most of us are apparently on the list for, anyway. I know that my life became much easier once I started deleting every message that didn't have the word "announcement" in its subject line or wasn't written by someone who I know &/or whose opinions interest me. I'm sure that I've missed an interesting thread or two, but I consider the trade off to be worthwhile there.

Maybe folks announcing a reading, publication, or whatever could be sure that the subject line for their message reflects this-- that way, those of us who don't read each & every message would still know to actually read the announcement...

Despite Mom's advice, ignoring the schoolyard bully didn't always work-- they could still push you in the mud puddle & take your lunch money. Here, though, the power is all in your "delete" command... use it wisely & use it often. & remember, when it comes to the temptation to read the messages from the pompous blowhards that you love to hate, just say no.

--Chris McCreary

↑ Index

298. Aldon Nielsen
Re: whodunnit / festival
Tue 8 Dec 1998

> Aldon Nielsen 13
> Dale Smith 13

matter / antimatter???

Dale, how did we ever become so symmetrical?

↑ Index

299. Mark Prejsnar
under and over erasure
Tue 8 Dec 1998

It seems to me folks have pinpointed TWO levels of erasure, in responding to Joanna's challenge...

1. erasure being mentioned, and woven, as an image/conceptual nexus, into a poem;

2. the absence of words from blocks of space in the poem, as a formal and structural dimension of the writing;

...the first seems exemplified by the passages from the Drafts Joanna quotes; the second by the Tablets, as someone mentioned.

Then there was the poem by David Antin, whose form was skywriting.

Which brings up an interesting point. I agree with a very early response to JF, which mentioned the overwhelming universe of clotted and crowded information/data/bricolage that characterizes contemporary subjective experience....As tho poets were trying to clear away space, to speak (to breathe!); but also as if they were apprehending the crush of info overload and noise, as itself a form of erasure: things fail to cohere and are in effect lost because of the overburden of hyperactive and disconnected "meanings."

But there's another source for erasing, which is a philosophical concern with the reality of things, of activities, of poetry, of ideas. This was part of Antin's motivation, i would say. I think that poets who have been influenced to some degree by Buddhistic and similar traditions, would be among those interested in erasure: like the disappearing of the mind when it realizes its own nonreality, in Buddhism, Taoism, etc. ...the achievement of nonself.

Unfortunately, i don't recall offhand a use of erasing modalities (of either type) in the poets i know and like best, who were influenced by these traditions: Mac Low, Cage.

Kent Johnson might wish to speak to the general topic of Buddhism-influenced poets and erasure (if i had read his magnificent anthology as closely as it deserves, maybe i could come up with more)

The Atlanta poet John Lowther has spent time living in Asia, in part to encounter and study these Eastern traditions. He also counts Mac Low and Cage (as well as Antin) among his primary interests and influences...He has a long work in which he used Duchamp's random generated forms, called "stoppages," to erase sections of prose from a number of books on Duchamp's life and work....These are further worked, and the result is a sequence of poems shaped and formed by useing exclusion or erasure as the primary poetic technique, in a sense.

Some of this work has just now appeared in Kenning 3. More is going to appear soon in Misc. Proj.

Mark P.

↑ Index

300. Amy King

Rachel raises a good point: She Speaks of Poetry

Tue 8 Dec 1998

I am not so much pissed for I do not mind the contention but being young and lazy with books
I would like to read more about poetics and poetry
but Poetics not only describes behavior between poets

The poets like to show what they know as well as what they feel

Sometimes you put your neck out in the world in text and ex-pect

(or ate) it to come back.

Rachel, I don't think this is solely a "girl" thing as suggested of intimidation tho some of it but it is a community (person/s) that comes with communal dynamics including checks and balances, desires/endeavors/skeletons, never clear cut, fluxuating though topics creep up and die (deleting ...)
This one wins this time tho for a Tirade, a long one and yes, I wish it would move on a bit, not back, so I can lurk and learn and hear poets talk about other poet products and one day speak.

Thanks Rachel.

-----Original Message-----
From: Rachel Levitsky <[redacted]>
To: Amy King <[redacted]>
Date: Tuesday, December 08, 1998 1:13 PM
Subject: Re: why Peter Ganick cannot think... a listserv

> Amy I liked this a lot am interested in the form between a sentence and > a poetic line and between in the missing parts, erasure, seems both > pissed and romantic, up my alley
> --Rachel

↑ Index

301. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: erasing
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Yes but this is the 'chance' of vivisection. Because though the permutations possible from throwing the yarrow (sic?) sticks is very high, it is still finite and therefore not truly random or subject to chance. Jacques Monod in Chance and Necessity tries to make an 'ontological' case for discrete operations but falls back on the throw of dice as a metaphor with banal philosophical results. The same misinterpretation occurs throughout the physico-philosophical literature e.g. Max Born, early Quine, all of the Vienna Circle excepting the divine Herr Wittgenstein who was really not a member, and Logical Postivism. The sticks or the die contain their own discretion (e.g. discrete) or limitation but as Kant or Schopenhauer would say only for the thrower e.g. the perceiver. This takes us back to Heidegger who strongly insists that attributing a process that is fundamentally a product of Dasein e.g. 'being in the world' to 'being' throuugh Dasein comes to its knowing contributes to the existential dislocation that he relates to the modern technological condition. The 'flowering out' of Cage's best work comes from these limitations or discretions and are accorded an aesthetic and not an ontological status as a result. Erasure here can operate successfully precisely because there is an upper bound---acknowledged or not. The misuse of the words chance and randomness are unfortunate, but probably no more so than they are in complexity or chaos theory. The mathematician, G.H. Hardy, once said, "Rigor is what Littlewood [his assistant] and I call gas." The double meaning is both true of the physical nature of gasses and scatalogical in order to illustrate that too much must not be made of this nature.---Carlo Parcelli
Ramez Qureshi wrote:
>
> Another instance of this sort of thing in Cage is his _Empty Words_, in which > he subjects a Thoreau text to random I-Ching operations.
> -RQ

--
ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

302. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli
Erasing
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Rachel et al: Burt Kimmelman's suggestion is a good one; Hans Blumenberg's ideas around 'the necessity of forgetting' are interwoven with much else in his works. This from his Work on Myth which, if my memory serves me, contains Blumenberg's central idea [sorry about the 'in medias res' form of the quote]: "At the same time the art myth of the [Auf den] Marmorklippen [by Ernst Ju(umlaut)nger] shows that everything that man gained in the way of dominion over reality, through the experience of his history and finally through knowledge, could not remove the danger of sinking back--indeed, the longing to sink back--to the level of his impotence, into archaic resignation, as it were. But for this sinking back not only to become possible but to become the epitome of new desires, something had to be forgotten. This forgetting is the achievement of distance through 'work on myth' itself. It is a necessary condition of everything that became possible on this side of terror, of the absolutism of reality. At the same time it is also a necessary condition of the fact that the desire to return home to the archaic irresponsibility of simple surrender to powers that cannot be gainsaid does not need to be resisted and is able to penetrate to the surface of consciousness." Three of Blumenberg's books have been translated into English; Work on Myth, The Legitimacy of the Modern Age and, my personal favorite, The Genesis of the Copernican World. I especially draw from the chapters that focus on the Nolan, Bruno, but any and all are well worth your time.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

303. William Slaughter
ANNOUNCEMENT
Tue 8 Dec 1998

ANNOUNCEMENT

Henry Gould, late of this list, has a new Flash Poem in MUDLARK.

You can find his chapbook,
Island Road, & his broadside,
"Millennial Grain Elevator,"
"Bilbao, Drydock," & "Halloween," in MUDLARK too.

Rauschenberg erased de Kooning.
Henry Gould erased Henry Gould.

His voiceprints are everywhere to be found in MUDLARK

William Slaughter

_____
MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

↑ Index

304. Charles Bernstein
Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)
Tue 8 Dec 1998

“The unhappy have fewer rights but bigger ones.” Bruce Andrews at KGB Bar reading last night.

*
[Quoting Kent Johnson's post earlier today"]:
>I wrote in a post yesterday (the one with the barely believable title
>"My one post for December"), that the real issue in this whole >affair has nothing to do with numbers as the consensus has painted >it. Or how could it really have to do with numbers if, as I >pointed out, Henry-- poster numero uno-- averaged only a fraction >more than one post per day for the whole month of November.

This is untrue.

The situation here is based on a correspondence on this matter with the subscriber going back many months. We have written to this subscriber numerous times in the past. For example, near the end of March of this year, the subscriber was informed that while the two other most frequent posters had 27 messages, or an average of one per day, his were already at twice that number (total for that month alone: 61). I could go on detailing this correspondence but I haven't because I considered it private. At a certain point, you realize that polite requests for cooperation are not working. I think those who want to turn this matter into something ideological are doing a great disservice to all the people involved here.

The choice we made was the best option we had if we were indeed serious about keeping limits on postings. Going back to Kent Johnson’s accusation, one might wonder how even such a formidable crew as those of at Poetics List Central could have known, before the end of November, what the total posts would be for this month. We are not clairvoyant. Kent Johnson chose not to consider the more obvious conclusion that the total posts for November might have been different if we had not ever so politely asked a couple of our beloved frequent posters to observe an often repeated list ground rule about overposting to the list. As it happens, all of the amazing (I think) four people in the history of the list we have ever written to gently request that they might consider consolidating their posts have been written to because -- I realize it defies belief -- they were -- stop for a second to take this in -- posting too much, more than anyone else. NOT THE CONTENT OF THEIR POSTS! If a subscriber to the list makes unambiguously manifest that she or he has no intention of abiding by the basic ground rules of the list, then those responsible -- not only to the list but for the list, I would add -- need to act fairly and generously but also decisively. This is no more than a cliché of List Management 101.

> He and Gabe Gudding-- Gudding ... have > been told (and I ask to be corrected if I'm wrong), that their posts > are to now be reviewed and judged before they may appear.

You are wrong. Gabriel Gudding's subscription status has never been changed and his ability to post to the list directly is the same as all 600 plus current list subscribers. In future, you might want to ask Joel or me before posting such misinformation to the list. In your Sunday post you also claimed that Henry Gould had be "86d" from the list. This is also wrong, as anyone reading my post from Friday would be aware.

*

There was no improper relation.

I did not ask anyone to lie.

The assumption that those of us who are spending considerable time and energy providing this service are somehow guilty of something -- let’s assume that and find the crime later! -- seems to me, um, er, counter-productive. (But I know: Tis far nobler to tear down those institutions we’ve established than find ways to support them.)

*

I realize I have an apology to make to the list. Many of those who were most active on this list, and most cared about it, have urged me to do something to make it readable, and make it habitable, again. They spoke of the list being dominated by a few men (yes gender is an issue) whose tone tended to be harsh or scolding and that when they did post their posts were either ignored or treated derisively. They responded to my inaction has been to leave the list or stop reading it.

Their contributions are very much missed.

But no fanfare was made about these folks, who felt very much pushed out by the volume of posting, by the often hectoring tones of many posts on this list and also what they described to me, over and again, as the squandering of the list space by posts that would have been better sent backchannel. I hesitated to act, for one thing because I was committed to having the list be as minimally moderated as possible -- and for this I probably should be held accountable, even censured. But I also knew that even the tiniest amount of editorial intervention on this list, on the most unassailable grounds, and in strict compliance with the stated policies of the list in the Welcome Message, would be subjected to a firestorm of protest.

*

The fact is -- I realize again this must be shocking to a few of you -- that no post has ever been censored on this list and that the only complaints we have received about censorship concern those who post more than anyone else on the list. There is an irony here if you want to find it.

*

The few men who post most frequently on this list, who dominate the discussion, are not the ones being silenced.

*

Like several others who have recently address this issue, my concern about the list is not focused exclusively on the needs and rights of those who want to post in an unlimited way. Rather than lament that one person, who has posted more to this list, I suspect, than anyone in the history of the list, has chosen to leave the list rather than restrict the number of his posts, I lament the dozens and dozens of people who have told me they felt pushed off the list by the exactly the problems that we have been trying to address in the past few weeks, by exactly the hubris expressed in several recent posts: that to post more than anyone else, to try to dominate the tone of the list, the psychic release involved in being belligerent -- is an unimpeachable right and that anyone who tries to interfere with that right will be defamed in one way or another. People rarely make list announcements about the signing off the list of this legion of “others”, or publicly laments their absence, but each of these departures has been as important as the one resignation that has been focused on recently.

*

The tendency a very few list members to assume and broadcast the worst about the minimal list moderation that we do is, perhaps, expectable. However, it is not only my sense but also the strongly voiced opinion of most people I speak to that the list needs more editing not less -- surely, some people have other ideas about lists, but the point is not necessarily to always follow the least line of resistance, although that would certainly make for less flak.

Indeed, as I've noted, I have been inundated with complaints by one person after another that if the editors of the list can't create a better and more readable environment, people will stop reading it. Of course, there are others ready to replace them, who don't share these concerns -- that may be the heart of the issue -- whose list is it? It seems only common sense that you won't see multiple posts from people who find it an inhospitable place to post because they are most likely to shy away from the predictable stock responses out of the macho training camp: if they can't take it let them unsub, if they can't stand the heat let them keep quiet, how dare they censure my right to speak by questioning me, etc. The real sympathy must go to those "bad boys" who show their mettle by refusing to respond to even the most reasonable requests of the list editors. I have a fairly thick skin, but not thick enough. I hope my skin never gets that thick.

* In any case, the idea that most people support the abdication of any editing or moderation of the list is exactly the opposite of what I hear -- it's that idea of what the list is that has driven away more people than I care to name. We -- and it's not just me -- are committed to making editorial and indeed aesthetic judgments as an integral part our list ownership: that is the foundation for the list. Such judgments mean making choices with which some people, even very vocal people, will disagree with. That's reasonable and understandable. But our choices are not arbitrary or motivated by the desire to suppress any one tone or point of view, but rather to foster an environment which will enable greater participation.

The editors of the Poetics List make very few editorial suggestions directly to subscribers: it almost never happens. In the history of the list this has occurred maybe three or four times to check extended "chat", maybe a couple of times to reconsider "tone", and the few instances of asking folks to consolidate messages, already mentioned. For myself, I have been reluctant to post critical remarks about other posts on the list because I felt, as list owner, that such remarks might take on more significance than I would intend. That is, for all these years I have avoided making any unnecessary interventions on this list of any kind -- front channel or back channel.

*

In my experience, the Poetics List has been among the most open poetry institutions I have encountered. In one sense, it is not as open as a newsgroup or an chat list because some constraints are put in place. Without these constraints, however, the range and depth of contributions would be, I believe, diminished; many of the people on this list would depart post haste, and without fanfare.

Nor would there be anyone now involved willing to maintain the list. The openness of the Poetics List is a product of its mission, as stated in the Welcome Message in terms both aesthetic and structural. So it is openness is framed by the terms of the specific project for which it was designed. I mistyped something in my last post, so let me rewrite it now: in the age of the Internet, I believe more editing not less is required. Those who are philosophically against moderated or edited or private lists should work to create the kinds of lists they want and show those of us who are skeptical that we are wrong. But debunking this list for its editorial commitments seems to me misguided and does not serve the cause of openness. This list cannot fulfill all the desires for all who would like to be its members. No list can. Yes, this list reflects my editorial, philosophical, ethical, and aesthetic judgments, tastes, predilections, commitments. Anyway I hope it does, as best I can make it. I have asked too many people to hang in with this list (in too many cases unsuccessfully), too many people to join the list, too many people to take the chance to post something, etc., for that not to be the case.

*

Do to my own time limitations, I cannot spend all the time some of the people on this list seem to need to respond to questions of list management. For example, I will not be able to spend much more time this week on the list and will be away from any computer access for part of the week. Changes in the list management are in process, and as soon as these can be finalized, we will get back to you. In the meantime, I hope all of you will understand that my time for this project has simply run out.

↑ Index

305. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Home and Tone
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Argh. I'm trying to catch up with the List crises and there are many holes in my understanding but want to pitch in. Like the rest of you I have much to eulogize about the list. If it weren't for the list I would have remained aesthetically isolated in Boulder. I would not have made correspondence with Patrick Pritchett, Hoa Nguyen, Alan Sondheim, Renee Gladman, David Bromige and many others which has been one lynchpin of of my poetic home. And for all the other reasons mentioned, quick info, publishing, audience, obviously, this list is crucial.

I think we slam Charles Bernstein way too quickly with charges of censorship. In fact I was on an alternative, selective list for a little while and got off because I found it too internal, found the dialogue to self-reflective and self-conscious/polite/uniform. Betsy Andrews call Poetics the "populist" list, and I agree with her. Obviously its keepers are doing something right.

But it does get bogged down with vituperative and personal rants and repartee. This stuff effects the list's ratio of usefulness/interest to time consumption demanded and narrows the scope of debate. Granted I've been in my own world for several months but there wasn't much on the list that was energetic except a sort of tit for tat.

I appreciate Juliana's suggestion that it be limited to exchange of information but we will then lose that occasional gem of a thread that grabs even the most sleuthful lurker and puts them on the screen.

I am a member of the Park Slope Food Coop here in Brooklyn. Like the list it is shopping for members only but membership is absolutely open and available to everyone. If you can't afford the $100 deposit, you can pay as little as you can and accrue the deposit over as long as it takes. There is childcare and special memberships for folks with special needs. There are over 3,000 members and so, of course working together to run the store is a challenge. The way the challenge is met is that every problem is answered by a policy, approved of by the membership. Clearly, some policies are repugnant to some people, for example, that you must show your empty bags before buying your food to prevent intentional and unintentional theft. And I have one friend who gets angry every time--but her overall feeling of gain makes her have to go along.

I've been as annoyed as anyone by both this list and the food coop but in my world, these attempts of vastly diverse people to get together and create something, that is better than malls and disney, merits sticking to it.

As an activist I've come to have a policy of always placing my appreciation of what a person is doing above my critique, if possible. I've also stated on this list that I've been in a position to censure someone in the effort to maintain a tone that allows for diverse community. A generous assessment of Charles Bernstien's motives for trying to manage some particularly present voices, is that he is trying to maintain a balance.

Proposal: Can a letter, approved of my this list, be sent each month to the five big posters automatically--not to judge the content of their post, just to let them know they've been particularly visible that month and they may want to give five others a chance to be particularly visible the next month? With this letter of reminder, perhaps loud mouths (I am one, no?) could regulate themselves?

Again, I want to urge us to save this list. There is no good reason as far as I can tell, to self-destruct.

yours truly,
Rachel Democracy Levitsky

↑ Index

306. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli forked tongue?
Tue 8 Dec 1998

"[T]he only significant alternative to the neutral-toned plain style of most philosophical writing of the present time is the weightier tone of judiciousness; BUT RARELY WHIMISCAL TONES OR ANGRY, OR BEFUDDLED OR LETHARGIC OR IRONIC, AS IF THESE TONES WERE MOODS THAT HAVE BEEN BANISHED, REALMS OF HUMAN EXPERIENCE THUS SYSTEMATICALLY UNTOUCHABLE. NOT ONLY IS THE QUESTION OF METHOD SUPPRESSED, BUT EVEN THE POSSIBILITIES OF TONE WITHIN THE STYLE ARE REDUCED![!]"---

---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

307. E.M. Garrison
(no subject)
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Simon DeDeo wrote:

> I'm sorry to hear the Henry Gould has left the list; I've had my fair share of conflicts with him, and, even when I'd been lurking and disengaged from most of the debates on the list, I still welcomed his voice.
>
> Have been reading Lyn Hejinian's _The Cold of Poetry_, which is my first real forary into the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets. I'm working on a feature for the arts magazine here on "metaphysical" poets (beginning with Eliot's notion in his lectures), and the piece has been widening its scope step by step until I decided that one useful thing I might do is try to bring a writer (Lyn) into the discussions that happen around the campus, which usually center around a resolute conservative position. The basic idea -- that much of what is considered poetry today is a simple concatenation of aphorisms about suburban life, sometimes widened into a "multicultural" domain.
>
> I began considering the piece when I realized the strange dead feeling that came over me when I read so much of the "approved" poetry of recent years; once upon a time, reading opened avenues into new experience. Now, so much of what is written seems to be a series of anguished reworkings of what is always around. Reading the _Cold of Poetry_, I realized how much I had been missing simply because I had "gotten too good" at reading, say, the Confessionals -- which is partly my fault, but partly, I think,

> theirs.
>
> In other news: I'm beginning the ground work for a paper on notions of beauty in an urban context (it's actually for Elaine Scarry's class that came up for discussion here a few days ago). Is there anybody on the list that can point to some interesting works on urban space? There is, unfortunately, so much bad work out there in this field that I feel I need a Virgil to guide me to useful starting points.
>
> -- Simon
>
> [redacted]
> http://www.fas.harvard.edu/~sdedeo/localpapers.html

Simon, When I think of the concept of beauty of in urban places, I think of graffiti. Now, Im not going to bother to defend this view to those that would say that graffiti is an act of destruction with my view that acts of destruction have with in them the seeds of creation, except to say that these works have a definite voice, and it should be considered.

beth

↑ Index

308. E.M. Garrison
Re: call me morbid call me pale
Tue 8 Dec 1998

To whomever decides to reply...Please do it in public...Im always hungry to Know....

beth

Poetry Project wrote:

> I was wondering if anyone could, in public or in private, explain to me what exactly the "Abstract French Lyric" or the "French Abstract Lyric" is? I hear rumors of its existence, but no one has ever grabbed me by the waist & pointed one out.
>
> Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

309. Judy Roitman
Re: erased
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Thanks to Joel K. for his pushing on this.

I was also interested in Blau duPlessis' description of her memory as porous and what this says about a notion of self as it plays out in the work; erasing not as willed but inescapable. (Which describes me fairly well.)

Both also raised the huge issue of language/world vis-a-vis ethics, and perhaps the lack of response is because this subject is so enormous and humbling. I would like to encourage short, tentative posts on this --- no need to attempt completeness.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

310. Mark Prejsnar

Re: erased

Tue 8 Dec 1998

Errr, Joel, one of the problems is that posts are not getting thru; one lengthy post of mine was sent yesterday and resent a couple of hours ago and it has not been posted on the List...

Now while it was before Rachel's post and therefore doesn't respond to her, it's a very substantive post on the erasure thread...Hasn't anything to do with freeing Henry or the List thread. Why has it not appeared? you can hardly snipe at list members for not posting, when we are posting and the posts aren't getting thru!

(if my post appeared to others, i apologize for this querulous plaint! But it hasn't appeared here, and i am set to receive my own posts to this list, and always in the past have...)

mark p.

On Tue, 8 Dec 1998, J Kuszai wrote:

> i find it a sad commentary on the state of this list that we get Rachel Blau DuPlessis out of her erasing-frenzy to respond to a thread with some serious potential, and yet, not one post in reply. Perhaps we should have another round of "Free Henry"-- as that seems to be what keeps people going around here. I would like to cite a passage from Rachel's post and throw it back into the mix, as I think it warrants > further attention:

>
> "... The trauma of amnesia and the trauma of remembering, witnessing are intertwined for me. My interest did not begin "textually" (that is solely as a question of rhetoric, representation, or formal interests) tho it takes shape textually. There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a vacuum; making texts, and alluding to textual stuff (like black pages, or glosses) is absolutely linked to depths of ethical and social and poetic feeling."
>
> *it would be good to hear further elaboration as to what is meant by this statement. Obviously we don't live in isolation, nor in a vacuum. I would be curious to hear of instances of poetic value which assert themselves as such-- i.e. as without regard to externalia in this day and age; and perhaps more importantly, how do the various poets and/or critics on this list see/ or solve the issues raised by questions of erasure. I am thinking, initially, of Susan Howe's Eikon Basilike and the resolution of such by "making the dead walk again" ... more from Rachel, whose work on Susan and others has been at the fore, would be much appreciated...*

↑ Index

311. Carl Wilson
Re: erased
Tue 8 Dec 1998

> i find it a sad commentary on the state of this list that we get Rachel Blau DuPlessis out of her erasing-frenzy to respond to a thread with some serious potential, and yet, not one post in reply.

i agree completely; the same theme broke my own busy-deleting-finger habit - but i did post in reply and after two attempts it strangely hasn't come through. i'll make a final effort and, again, apologies to anyone who receives this twice.

* * *

Erasure as both a poetic and a personal concern: There was a time in my writing when i wanted to pare down to the single luminous statement, to let the writing serve as much as a mark for what wasn't said or understood as for what was. I was influenced in this i think both by a sort of mystical catholic heritage, in which writing felt like a gestural ritual to evoke grace, pain, mystery, (but also a sort of domination and control), and by my thin adolescent knowledge of eastern writing, which seemed to me then to deal much with evanescence, the sparsity and insufficiency (and wonder) of our perceptions and of the thingness of things.

Later i began to feel that it was more true to my own hyperactive, compulsively descriptive and analytical personality (a product of the culture i really grew in) to be more expansive, to catalogue and imagine via language how much muchness seemed to be, that the sparseness i was fascinated by was interior, more a product of how little i knew - being a writer seemed to imply facing some overwhelmingly indefinite variability.

Today, it doesn't seem to me to be a choice between, as Pierre put it, fullness/unfolding and erasure/minimalism. It's the interplay of the two - which i think Rachel's work in the Drafts displays quite powerfully. Erasure as the outside (and other) to the folding and unfolding. Because erasure - loss - forgetting - elimination - is both dangerous and necessary.

Erasure is awareness of the looming absences events such as Holocaust create. Erasure is also a hazard to be faced - denial, forgetting, loss of history. But it is also true to the process of letting go of, for instance, prejudice or other sick habits of thought, confining codes, errors, the crippling power of trauma. Reinventing the self (and the social, and their respective languages), so necessary to continuance, involves selective forgetting.

Much of what we do in poetry now, i think, is to represent such processes of transformation, loss and gain, but always in flux. Modernism's forward-thrust (make-it-new revolution, extincting the old) has given way to a spiral. (Not that this is unprecedented - Stevens' poem as act of the mind, ye olde stream-of-consciousness etc.) Many of us work on non-linear models to call up the ways that thought, perspective, representation, articulation double back on themselves, forget some things, repeat and recall others, bog down, calm down, agitate again, bifurcate, split, mark, break, erase, write. Little of interest is happening in still-lifes, static judgments.

Yet we are haunted by those erasures, their smudges and tears. If it's all transformation, how do we judge our responsibilities (and ethical choices). Where does the forgotten go? How much of the etymology and how many past uses of a word lurk under its apparent surface and sound? The unspeakability of that haunting interrupts our accounts of interruption, pins them to their tracks, demands its own recognition.

The mention of Retallack's ai/d/sappearance - alphabetic subtraction - also reminds of the Oulipo lipograms, esp. Perec's La disparition or (in English) A Void, in which the erased letter (E) from the vocabulary of the book also becomes the central point of the plot - everyone is looking for the thing that has been erased. While Perec is comic about it, mostly, the seriousness of the theme for Perec in postwar France is fairly evident.

These seem inescapable writing issues, but Rachel's quite right I think to note this as a particularly end-of-this-century urgency. I'm curious how this approach to erasure, at least in tone, might change in 10 or 20 years.

carl patrick wilson

↑ Index

312. Judy Roitman

Re: under and over erasure

Tue 8 Dec 1998

Mark P. said:

> But there's another source for erasing, which is a philosophical concern with the reality of things, of activities, of poetry, of ideas. This was part of Antin's motivation, i would say. I think that poets who have been influenced to some degree by Buddhistic and similar traditions, would be among those interested in erasure: like the disappearing of the mind when it realizes its own nonreality, in Buddhism, Taoism, etc. ...the achievement of nonself.
>
> Unfortunately, i don't recall offhand a use of erasing modalities (of either type) in the poets i know and like best, who were influenced by these traditions: Mac Low, Cage.

That's because "the disappearing of the mind when it realizes its own nonreality, in Buddhism, Taoism, etc. ...the achievement of nonself" is perhaps not the best way to put it. The notion of emptiness --- each thing is inherently empty of its own thingness --- is not about erasure. The mind realizing its own nonreality, so to speak, is then free to become full of everything --- that's why the mirror analogy is used so often ("red comes, red; white comes, white"). Traditional East Asian poetics influenced by Buddhism and Taoism tends to focus very much on particular things (I'm not talking about the philosophical stuff like, say, the Hsin Hsin Ming or the Tao Te Ching) --- in haiku this is raised almost to a fetish.

(Although I'm not a specialist in East Asian poetics, and perhaps there is a tradition there of the sort Mark P. posits that isn't well known in the U.S.)

(And thanks for telling us all about John Lowther's work.)

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----

http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

313. Emily Lloyd
Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Dear Simon, etc.,

For what it's worth, it's pretty fascinating to read _The Cell_ after reading TCOP's "The Composition of The Cell." I have no idea which came first--a lot of the material in each is the same (or a resemblance: a draft? a backdraft?); logically, I suppose "The Composition" would come first, as it seems more like notes for things that eventually ended up in the book-length sequence _The Cell_. And logically, I suppose _The Cell_ would come first, for one could only speak of its composition after the fact--or (it might break one's back) simultaneously. Then there's the joke that "The Composition of The Cell" doesn't necessarily refer to the composition of _The Cell_.

Which brings me to the fact that no one, at least publicly, replied to Maria Damon's query about the composition process of LH's _My Life_. While a whole slew of people replied (and some, excuse this, incorrectly) to MD's question about Stein's rose. I'd be interested in hearing the "answer" to the "composition of _ML_" query frontchannel, for one. Perhaps this could kick off the discussion/s Joel K. suggested not too long ago--on female "experimental" poets that are going to be either present or discussed, I unfortunately forget which (both?), at an upcoming conference (name of which I don't remember either)...

Also, Simon, do, if possible time-wise, read LH's _My Life_ (and all the rest, but there's a point here). Read it because you've been reading "confessional" poetry. Strangely, maybe (and I'm afraid perhaps <?> offensively to the poet, yet with the utmost admiration), I often find Hejinian to have rescued/challenged/subverted and continued to work with "confession" or "confessional poetry." I also often think of Stein as a confessional poet, without all the freight of the Confessional Poetry lowelly "movement" entering into my thinking the words "confessional poet." I guess what I mean is that I find it interesting that, when reading the poems of Confessional Poets, I feel like I'm coming up against a wall--not hearing anything "confessional" or intimate, but something quite to the contrary. Whereas I find much of Hejinian's & Stein's work what I'm ashamed to call, but must for lack of better words-'n-smarts, unbelievably intimate, beyond "confessional" & "personal"...I suppose because it's beyond "speech"--doesn't attempt to pass for something whispered or wailed, as does Confessional Poetry. At any rate, I couldn't comfortably call either one of them L=A=N=G poets...

On the "girls v. boys" issue, gotta post an (old, old) poem here quickly:

Strap-On Canon

His feet are too clean for my hair.

Just throw the ball of wool, I'll clap

my knees, admit
I hated to be an apprentice...

Whenas, whenas--knowhutImean?
I left the tip on her throat.

Two francs. I bet

she walks crooked
all the way home

from Cho-Fu-Sa!

----------em, who mostly identifies w/those whose gender is unguessable--now.

↑ Index

314. louis stroffolino

Re: a modest proposal

Tue 8 Dec 1998

Hey, re Chris McCreary's point (and Juliana's?)
that we should restrict the list to ANNOUNCEMENTS,
I say "bland, bland, bland!"
I much rather agree with Joel Kuzsai of taking things such as the poem RBDP posted and addressing things it raises...
That takes more time, which I will have when I'm unemployed in 10 days and counting....
(assuming they don't take my account away), but just to say.....
chris

↑ Index

315. Mairead Byrne
Re: The Martyrology of St. Henry
Tue 8 Dec 1998

As I courageously emerged from the closet and blandished my own "advisory notice" to the list, and solicited replies to 5 questions relating to censorship / moderation (which everyone has ignored: is it that delete button?), I am anxious to be elevated to some type of sainthood too. Furthermore, as the FIRST to bring this censorship issue to your screens on this List, folks, I do want to claim my ignoble laurels. Henry, Gabe, Kent, let me join in your shame or do you feel compelled to hog it all, you dogs. Mairead

↑ Index

316. J Kuszai
2 of per diem
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

in case it werent mentioned, everyone was silenced for nearly 20 hours or so as the listserv was down sorry for my hasty notice for non response re: erasure & Rachel this morning

--tired from grading papers
(I used to stay up all night writing papers now I stay up grading them) but I think non-response is silence is erasure is pavement or hoffa in new jersey time to circle the mob (paranoiacs: read conspiracy) a suggestion: don't take the bait ignore threads that don't interest you and eventually the bickering banter will die away

on another BOOKSALES oriented front,
did anyone else hear the news that BARNES & NOBLE has purchased
INGRAM DISTRIBUTION?

I thought Ingram was long gone already....any info here would be greatly appreciated.

↑ Index

317. Simon DeDeo

Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"

Tue 8 Dec 1998

Emily, and, of course, all --

The notion of Lyn Hejinian being somehow "more" than confessional is interesting. The notion of hitting a wall in reading the trad. confessionals is interesting: for me, there is an "aesthetic experience" (i.e., I do think it's somehow poetic, and not simply a hashing out in verse.) I understand your saying "I hit a wall", then, as the aesthticization of hitting a wall. My problem with someone like, say, Lowell, is not that I think his work is bad, but rather that I don't have a taste for it in the end. I just don't really want to spend time in such a resolutely "bipolar" language world, by which I don't intend to say that someone who is psychophysiologically bipolar can only write in bipolar language. I prefer the more polyvalent aspects of someone like Hejinian. Someone like Plath, I think, belongs in a different category from the main Lowell thread; her poetry is, to much, closer to Heijinan in the way it has multiple nodes, multiple resting points. Plath is neither a whisperer or a wailer in the way that Lowell is (or, more obviously, I think, Berryman, who focuses his dream songs around that.)

If it makes sense to talk "about" poetry at all, I guess. You're right, of course, that I need to read more of Hejinian's work.

I'm also interested in your statement that you couldn't comfortably call either Stein or Hejinian a L=A=N=G. poet. What does it mean, for you, for someone to be a L-poet? I approached Hejinian thinking, OK, here's someone who is "in" this scheme, and a way for me to come to know what the movement itself means. Is L-poetry constructed before the poetry within it? Or is it just that someone else is more 'authetically' a L-poet than H? I don't mean to raise the usual aporias about "well, these are just terms, they mean what you want". How do you perceive H in relation to more "normative" L-poets, and who might those be?

-- Simon

[redacted]
[redacted]
http://www.fas.harvard.edu/~sdedeo/localpapers.html

↑ Index

318. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: Home and Tone
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I want to second Rachel here. For me, the discussion is wonderful; a lot of us are not part of any poetry community, and the chance to participate here is vitally important. I value the announcements, but I also value the talk.

It's remarkable that it has run so long without these problems.

I wish Henry would come back. I wish people would post a bit less. I don't think there's a need for reminders to be sent to the top posters, but only for everyone to be aware that it's a public list, much larger than the number of posters would indicate.

Perhaps someone could write Henry. Perhaps we could all be grateful for this space a bit.

Alan

↑ Index

319. Charles Alexander
new book announcement
Tue 8 Dec 1998

New from Chax Press

SPEECH ACTS
by Eli Goldblatt
$10
ISBN 0-925904-24-4

Poetics list members pay no shipping/handling charges if they declare themselves as poetics list members, and if they live in the USA. Foreign orders will be billed appropriate shipping charges.

Please send all email orders directly to Chax Press at
[redacted]
Or send check with order to Chax Press
101 W. Sixth St., no. 6
Tucson, AZ 85701-1000

"Energetic and engaging work, ranging over ache and embrace, reality and dream in a rich, quicksilver language. Goldblatt's Speech Acts puts 'Everything on my radio.'"

--Rachel Blau DuPlessis,
author of Drafts and of The Pink Guitar: Writing as Feminist Practice

"In Speech Acts, Eli Goldblatt writes realist lyrics; this is not a world that is "utterly changed," it's more the place where the question,'What language does the poet speak?' is beginning and goal of writing. These poems speak our languages, with care and passion."
--Bob Perelman, author of Virtual Reality and of The Marginalization of Poetry: Language Writing and Literary History

"THREE POEMS" in Speech Acts

HISTORY

having planted corn, you wait for corn to grow. The enemy is the penchant to believe you know.

Wheat in bread is bleached to sell.
Roads ripple in heat, split in cold.
Light bends out of courtesy to mass,
a social arrangement between peers.

No schoolman can tell a sentence
how to mean. Like border guards, children learn their craft by losing the nationality they're paid to defend.

Metaphors rise against their masters.
No player's marginal in plague &
Time runs counter to its crop.

MUSIC OF THE SPHERES

Our ghost story you could learn to croon unhurried into microphones. Ears ready for the kill, listeners expect each moment a crash as you steer the story past Crab & Dragon & on to dusk. After the plot runs out, mechanisms still roll--sets shift, props drift down river toward an uneasy sea.

Spectators murmur in their crape. Cattle standing all day sleep standing & old hotels maintain their facades; an owner must care for his property. No motion among stars is harmonious. Ghouls & caped heroes play their part under weather that is neither fair nor just. Squeal, flex, erupt: among humans earthworks catch on fire.

I have always felt like a native of this planet

but a stand-in for my ghost.

WHOLESALE SURRENDER

A backdoor melody spieling of spring wins nothing, pulls ahead of the pack on the road to release.

A creased pant leg can mean the difference between promotion & serial obsession, one silk-screened beside the other in infinite regression.

A rime honeys tea or, given the proper economics, signals a secret crop among the tenants.

Televised, repeated blows to the head & gut don’t raise questions for the fan at home.
Even a quark shares space--o unholy alliance--with that fool, History.

ELI GOLDBLATT is currently the University Writing Director and an associate professor of English at Temple University. His other books include Sessions 1-62, Journeyman’s Song, Herakles, ‘Round My Way, and, for children, Leo Loves Round and Lissa and the Moon’s Sheep. charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

320. Ruth Danon

Re: Erasing

Tue 8 Dec 1998

I'm jumping in on this one, lurker that I've been. Some time ago I found myself writing poems in which concrete nouns simply disappeared. Gone. Couldn't conjure one up to save the day. I read Kristeva's Black Sun and began to understand why. The strategy of Perec's book has a similar source in the incapacity to grieve or to find adequate expression for loss.

There are cultural and poltiical equivalents. Cliches that separate modernists from post modernists say that pomos "embrace apoacalypse." Bah humbug. Who isn't scared of the dark? As the chunks of ice fall away from the arctic ice shelf who doesn't shudder in their quiet little bones?

> From: Carl Wilson <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Erasing
> Date: Monday, December 07, 1998 8:05 PM
>
> Erasure as both a poetic and a personal concern: There was a time in > my writing when i wanted to pare down to the single luminous > statement, to let the writing serve as much as a mark for what wasn't > said or understood as for what was. I was influenced in this i think > both by a sort of mystical catholic heritage, in which writing felt > like a gestural ritual to evoke grace, pain, mystery, (but also a sort > of domination and control), and by my thin adolescent knowledge of > eastern writing, which seemed to me then to deal much with > evanescence, the sparsity and insufficiency (and wonder) of our > perceptions and of the thingness of things.
>
> Later i began to feel that it was more true to my own hyperactive, > compulsively descriptive and analytical personality (a product of the > culture i really grew in) to be more expansive, to catalogue and > imagine via language how much muchness seemed to be, that the > sparseness i was fascinated by was interior, more a product of how > little i knew - being a writer seemed to imply facing some > overwhelmingly indefinite variability.
>
> Today, it doesn't seem to me to be a choice between, as Pierre put it, > fullness/unfolding and erasure/minimalism. It's the interplay of the > two - which i think Rachel's work in the Drafts displays quite > powerfully. Erasure as the outside (and other) to the folding and > unfolding. Because erasure - loss - forgetting - elimination - is both > dangerous and necessary.

>
> Erasure refers to the huge pit of absence that an event like the > holocaust opens in history. Erasure is also a hazard to be faced - > denial, forgetting, loss of history. But it is also true to the > process of letting go of, for instance, prejudice or other sick habits
> of thought, confining codes, errors, the crippling power of trauma.
> Reinventing the self (and the social, and their respective languages),
> so necessary to continuance, involves selective forgetting.
>
> Much of what we do in poetry now, i think, is to represent such > processes of transformation, loss and gain, but always in flux.
> Modernism's forward-thrust (make-it-new revolution, extincting the > old) has given way to a spiral. (Not that this is unprecedented - > Stevens' poem as act of the mind, ye olde stream-of-consciousness > etc.) Many of us work on non-linear models to call up the ways that > thought, perspective, representation, articulation double back on > themselves, forget some things, repeat and recall others, bog down, > calm down, agitate again, bifurcate, split, mark, break, erase, write.
> Little of interest is happening in still-lifes, static judgments.
>
> Yet we are haunted by those erasures, their smudges and tears. If it's > all transformation, how do we judge our responsibilities (and ethical > choices). Where does the forgotten go? How much of the etymology and > how many past uses of a word lurk under its apparent surface and > sound? The unspeakability of that haunting interrupts our accounts
of > interruption, pins them to their tracks, demands its own recognition.
>
> The mention of Retallack's ai/d/sappearance - alphabetic subtraction > also reminds of the Oulipo lipograms, esp. Perec's La disparition or > (in English) A Void, in which the erased letter (E) from the > vocabulary of the book also becomes the central point of the plot - > everyone is looking for the thing that has been erased. While Perec
-

is > comic about it, mostly, the seriousness of the theme for Perec in > postwar France is fairly evident.
>
> These seem inescapable writing issues, but Rachel's quite right I > think to note this as a particularly end-of-this-century urgency.
I'm
> curious how this approach to erasure, at least in tone, might change > in 10 or 20 years.
>
> carl patrick wilson

↑ Index

321. J Kuszai
Re: Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

dear chalres, your courage as papabear keeps me going or i would have quit this silly "community" long agao. i am so tired, man, of the sad ness i reap from the ugliness on the list--and the spankings i get for wanting it to be fruitful, meaning ful. or for thinkint that it is all there is for me right now. san diego is cold, like a desert moon circling a star with no center. our poetics family seems to have burnt out and you tired paternal badboy on triel for obligoatory offenses. sorry you have to take the blume.

i am lonely here and it is cold. my arthristis keeps my fingers in statinary orbit around hungry keyboard.

i suspect things will happen faster now in manageamtn swtichover and the bailure of juliana and our other lovely friends to hang in there speeds up the creation of a new listserv syntax, which i will write to you about after i have time to think about. the new co-manager must have an iron gut; i dread the idea of going anywhere now and having to talk about this mess, and just assume shoveoff. from here this bale full of wax i can see how quickly that would happen anyway, and i promise to finish my disseration before the millenial purge.

and the idea of having to read another research paper on serial killers, or how to care for lizards, (i sswear)..... and yet i love teaching and seeing progress in the most banal topics such as supporting arugments and with good thesis statments and blahblahd blah ... i am down. it has been a terrible week. before i said i felt that I was sendtenced to the slist and now i feel like i'm clinging to some family unit represented by that forum HOW PATHETIC -- fuck ideogloy. ! if those morons only knew how little time there was for itogdldy., anyhow-------- sorry to be so weepy. I have half a sixpack of beer in my friedge and i am too frozen to go get aeven one bottle of it. meanwhile imbeachment is like a subtle harpsichord, i cnnot play

i suggest you remove yourself as active owner and just be sponsor as we discused and i will try to check in for everyday until holiday and mla -- i will see you in san fran and we can exhanxcge secret hand-signals as you wont recognize me with beard and cane...

anyhow.....as i said....love, j

↑ Index

322. Don Cheney
Book Announcement: The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I'm proud to announce that my first book of poetry is now out from Meow Press:

The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart by Don Cheney

27 poems from the full length work.

The poems were selected by Bill Luoma and the cover drawing was done by Rose Anne Raphael.

Here are some reader comments on _The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart_:

"You and Zukofsky are a 1,2 punch out Catullus." James Sherry

"I'm a big fan of your Catullus translations. You're a fucking genius." Juliana Spahr

"Your Catullus is truly great. I read it once a day to ward off the demons." Bill Luoma

"I like it a lot, so ill and so urbane." Stephen Rodefer

"The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart is delightful. That's a decision I reached after I got used to the language, which I then began to enjoy thoroughly - the quirky, surprising, incongruous, humorous diction - Somehow the recurrence of those Roman names with their burden (in more conventional texts) of solemnity in the midst of this modern-day idiom and sometimes these Southern California images is very pleasing also." Lydia Davis

THE QUALMS OF CATULLUS & K-MART: Get it while the getting's good.

Meow Press, 32 pages, 1 drawing, 6 bucks!

via Small Press Distribution [redacted]

SPD Online: http://www.spdbooks.org/

Meow Press Online: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/presses/meow/

Don Cheney Online: http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791

Thanks,
Don Cheney

↑ Index

323. KENT JOHNSON
A response to Charles Bernstein
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Charles:

You are the Listowner and you make decisions as you feel they best serve the List as you understand its nature, purpose, and function. You make that point clearly and I have no argument-- as merely one of the hundreds who visit here-- with your right to run the List in any way you choose. The List is private, as you say.

My concerns were offered in sincerity and good faith, out of a sense that too heavy a hand was being applied to the situation you outline. And while I _do not_, to say it again, feel you have been guided by dishonorable motives in your recent decisions, nothing in your post changes my opinion about the politics of the matter. In fact, to the contrary.

Now, most people on the List seem fairly uninterested in the controversy (as I rightly ascertained in my last post) so I will try to be brief. Let me make just a couple of points, pausing here just to say that if you choose to reply you may call me just "Kent" and not "Kent Johnson," which repeated five times or so makes me feel somewhat like a thing rather than a person...

So now my response: You (unintentionally, I think) reveal, Charles, by going back to the situation "over many months," that the perceived problem of post volume coming from Henry Gould was actually getting better. Getting better in November, it seems, by 100%. Why, then, was Henry placed on "review" at a time when he seemed to be doing precisely what he was being asked to do?

I want to say that I apologize if I misunderstood Gabriel Gudding and misrepresented his situation to the List. You seem to be upset about this, but it wasn't my intent to offer "misinformation" in speaking of him as in the same category with Henry, and Gabriel can perhaps elaborate separately on the nature of his communications with you. But I was right, it appears from your comments, in asserting that Henry's "subscription status" _was_ changed. I understand as well that two of the three posts Henry submitted while he was on such "special status" never appeared on the List. Because of your emphatic assertion that "no post has ever been censored from this list," I now assume that this must have been a technical glitch and had nothing to do with any implementation of special conditions governing Gould's "review" status. But I admit I felt concern about that when I learned of it.

And I still feel concern, frankly, about the issue of censorship. This does not mean that I feel _you_ see your editorial actions as constituting such, but when you send a message reading

"You appear not to have been willing to reduce the frequency of your posts despite the request made to you earlier in the week. Daily posting is not an option. Please reduce your posts to no more than a few each week."

to a person (Gabe Gudding) who is relatively new to the List and thus has no history behind him of "over-posting," you in effect selectively, and --according to my sincere evaluation of the overall situation-- because of matters of content, remove a privilege given publicly to all members of the List: a limit of five posts per day, which to my knowledge no one has come close to violating in any kind of systematic way. To my mind, candor behooves one to acknowledge such intervention as censorship, whether one is doing it for the perceived "greater good" or not. For when in a community it is decided by someone who exercises a function of power that a few are not permitted to say what they would like to say, when they would like to say it, and in the form they would like to say it, _when others are given the full privilege to do so_, it becomes something akin to an opposition newspaper in a state-controlled distribution system being allowed the "freedom" to publish, but only with the supply of newsprint that the state has purposely and emphatically curtailed for the sake of the "common good." The state may well be benevolent and have the loftiest of goals, but it is censorship de facto, with the de jure hanging unsaid like a sword behind the screen. Why put someone under "review" if the threat of a post's possible erasure is not there and ready to be wielded?

Of course, this is a Listserv to discuss poetics, not Nicaragua when the Sandinistas were in power. But if I've helped make an issue of the situation it's because I've come to adhere to that school of head-in-the-clouds anarchist thought that believes that any repressive measures against wayward voices have future and noxious consequences that undermine the lofty vision one hopes to achieve. I suppose I believe that in poetry as in poetics as in the institutions enacted by "oppositional" poets for the democratic promulgation of new forms and contents, form and content must be one, or must be an interlocked figure, as someone once said, and that what appears to be plain madness may actually, seen in an unexpected light, prove to be a meaningful part, or, even stranger yet, prove to be part of the ancient and exciting Vedic poetic tradition of insult! Leaders of a community of poets searching wild and open form, then, faced with situations of a wild and sudden irruption of someone saying that other member's cocks and cunts, for example, are not so fine as claimed (see George Thompson's wonderful post of today) should not --in response to the scandalized "core constituency" of the community-- so quickly say to the wild one that daily posting is not an option; leaders may, rather, want to tell the upset valued members who are complaining to please remember that poetry and poetics is a wild, sometimes frustrating thing in its overwhelming heteroglossia and that if you go away it's probably going to be your loss. And please come back, if you change your mind. We'll always be here.

This is more or less what I meant by being so presumptuous as to suggest that it would have been simply best to allow each and every member to post within the stated limits of five posts per day without the threat of punitive measures. Rather than single some people out and tell them that "daily posting is not an option," it would be best to clearly remind those bothered that they can post the same amount, delete any post with the undesirable name, or propose a change in the List's governing rules for posts per day which the Listowner will take into consideration. But never, in my personal and perhaps overly idealistic opinion, no matter who the person is who threatens to go away, should a leader say, OK, I'll put this guy under special rules in the hopes that he'll change his tune.

But clearly, the decison has been made. I think this is long enough. I will be leaving the List for a long time now. I have greatly enjoyed being here, and I thank Charles, as I did before, for making this space possible. But honestly, something I can't be a part of seems to be happening.

Kent

↑ Index

324. J Kuszai
ack-farewell (a confessional poem)
Tue 8 Dec 1998

"Silvio's Consolidation of Philosophy"

Written to esteem
the common sort of index thought your laughter I love any Flora angry crime he perplexed
he would explain:
"I be sick with seeing"
"Destroy their being"
"Hearse be vexed"

some end that here tears be poured out in store make playn thyn hert that it be not knotted that the tulips may have share for some late fault on death beds better stone
dear boy
these assemble not my lovely boy

   help
 help
I see it faint

how shall breath hold out wind tide no   it is an ever-fixed mark
 I took pen in hand, wrote:

'quit vain-spent mine gold drum sleep should not help harm no fire less forged mind love doth mark where I rest file dream-name your mind balm be plaints found may move in Time click and sweet spot

 I had not gone hence'

from _"A Miscellany"_ (Meow Press, 1998)

↑ Index

325. Bob Grotjohn three questions
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Question 1:
I am reading Arthur Sze--"Redshifting Web." In that sequence he has these three lines:

Instead of developing a navy, Ci Xi
ordered architects to construct a two-story
marble boat that floats on a lotus-covered lake

Does anyone know this story? Who Ci Xi was? How I might spell his name to have more luck finding out who he was? Where to look to find the story?

Question 2: In another part of the poem, he has this line: "as a lobster mold transforms a russula into a delicacy." What is a "russula"? OED on line was no help.

Question 3: I have figured out what a redshift is (more or less). Does anyone know if there is such a thing as a redshifting web--astronomically, cosmologically, referentially to the universe outside the poem--, or is Sze writing to his poem?

Thanks

↑ Index

326. Billy Little Xplo 6!!!!
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

i've been reading minus tides, the mag from the next island over, it's a local situationist/surrealist literary political rag(no matter how often the bourgeois drunken television reader says the 60s are over i suspect the sixties are alive all over in the rural and there's an entire new generation our kids with the same values do you find that tu autre rurales?), it includes the work of another poet from nowhere, amanda hale, whose work i couldn't say i like but it disturbs me passing emily dickinson's test of making the hairs on the back of my neck stand up:

Homecoming

the undertaker has grown rich solid flesh covers bone
the imprisoned maggot eats its pathways through the soul

the city is full of vampires swooping on the antennaed dark banks of blood are changing hands entire lives

a small clone screams all genitals and mouth impotent rage cribbed in the parlour

sperm fruit conceived on the embalming slab soul still glimmering
on the gathering dark

Amanda Hale

Canada is paved with poets

turn left or turn right out votre porte d'or you're liable to bump into your favorite i was reading the britpoets list the other day and there was my favourite bill bissett reading in london i hope you know bill bissett's work his pomez n is payntings are a tomic you can hear them buzzing on the page and on the canvas and when you hear him sing them
the transformation is complete he also performs with a band, the luddites bowering hates him that ought to be enough of a recommendation bowering doesn't hate him he's just jealous
kerouac praised bissett everybody canadian starved for attention in this ocean of poets was jealous of bissett
just george never got over it i take that back dorothy livesay nor leonard cohen wasn't jealous of bissett if you're writing english and you're not canadian what chance have you got?
michael ondaatje wasn't jealous of bissett.
margaret avison wasn't allowed to be jealous.
frank davie doesn't have a jealous bone in his body.
gertrude stein never heard of jack kerouac.
you look at the shape of his words they're repeated they're repeated over and under as if they merely filled in the drawing these repeated but then you hear him sing and shake and suddenly you're not in the words you're in the woods and cool wildman guillaume kerouac's pet has got you there three angels and one old goat work at my post office goddess bless them
they brought me the new Hexplosive mag, no 6 $5
what a beauty i've been impressed with every issue of Katie Lederer's magazine that i've seen and this one is the best, the list is well represented, who is nava fader with this marvelous false translation of canto xvi from dante's inferno and dave morice hooray make me laugh madman, Magdalena Zurawski wowski! she's splitting the nucleus! and dave morice hooray the hysterical poems of jackson maclow he thinks a mile a second that old man keeps coming to life, Susan Shultz formidable! Dale Smith a gem. This is an important issue. Let's give her all the support we can, she's this good now imagine what's to come subscribe increase her possibility her confidence let her thrive five dollars it's a steal, there's twenty dollars worth of reading here, send her twice as much as she wants subscribe for a friend it's chanukah she should have a grant to make this bilingual capische? Arigato. Tovarich.

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

327. david bromige
re The Cold of Poetry/Em's strand
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I have shared your disappointment, finally, with the Confessional poets, for exactly the same cause--they arent confessing much of interest. I am tempted (ands am going to yield to this temptation) to reframe Bob Grenier's "I Hate Speech" and write "I Hate Confessional Poetry." Just as Bob meant (IMHO) "I hate the representation of speech as currently practiced in poetry", so I dislike the representation of confessing, etc.etc. I apologize, to myself first & foremost, for certain generalizations here, but the Confessionals seldom break their frame, and once you've decoded that, what is there to maintain interest? It is like watching a wind-up doll bounce off the walls.

The Confessional poet I've probably read most, is Charles Bukowski. He's not usually called that, but basically, thats what he is up to. I have read a lot of his books because we shared a publisher, who would give me each new Buke as it appeared. I would take it home and devour it like a box of chocolates, and then I would feel just as if that's what I'd done : guilty of time-wasting, ashamed of my self-indulgence, and nauseous.

One objection along this "one-frame-monotony" trail, that I have, is the convectication (if thats a word), the swollen image, of the poet who is delivering the poem. So much comes to depend on his/her life--"interesting"? "Old New England family"? "ex-beauty queen"? "Bogart-cloned alcoholic sex-addict smoker"? Now, no one can help where they come from, but I object where these arbitrary (to me) matters dominate, where they substitute a "life" I cant assume, for a liveliness of text which I can. (Such liveliness, say, as makes Plath readable, despite her being a "Confessional"). [NB : I appreciate that there are groups who value this or that poet as a welcome mouthpiece for hitherto-unaired concerns. I am talking esthetics here, however, not message.]

Maybe some will be surprised that a poet as "personal" as I have been, should feel this way. But (and here I feel especially in line with Emily Lloyd) this interest is precisely why I find Confessional poetry inadequate. Inadequate to personal life as I've known it; a masquerade of personal life, painted mask, con job. Being alive is so much more various, strobe not ditch. Or can be. Might be. Could be. Maybe I only write the wish. Moreover, I see no need to always be pointing out that it is "I" writing it. There's an author's name at the foot of the poem. How the heck would a reader suppose those words had got there, on the page?

In Lyn's "My Life," while we glimpse much of her actual lifetime, what one reads for (again, IMHO) are the sentences, their quality, their variety, their intelligence--and their unpredictable juxtapositions, a non-sequitur quality that keeps a reader on tiptoe.

*

Like many Listafarians, I am distressed and chastened by our recent eventuations, reluctant to post at all yet wanting to help provide something to chew on. I know I perpetrated some of what's been objected to : tit for tat, and also that I have brought my silly-bugger side front-channel, if to the amusement of some, then to the boredom and chagrin of others. I shall try to rein these shadow-side emanations in. I hope today's posting can keep a thread going, and that it doesnt appear that I am pissing on someone's favorite plinth.

I have also wanted to post on the Erasure thread to the effect that erasure is a subset of textual deformation, a process I see as inherent to poetry, not just since the Romantics. Again, my position as a high-poster has held me back. But perhaps Lisa Samuels could weigh in here, with news of her project with Jerome McGann? Erasure, for historical causes accurately discerned by some posts to this thread, is a dominant mode in our century. Had it not been, however, we should have had to invent another. IMHO.

David

↑ Index

328. Tosh
Serge Gainsbourg's Evguenie Sokolov
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I just want to mention that my title Serge Gainsbourg's Evguenie Sokolov is now available at Small Press Distributions as well as Amazon.com, etc.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

329. Anya Lewin
Re: Erasing
Tue 8 Dec 1998

I was thinking about erasure in the process of translating - in texts - but also in the fact of someone who is exiled or leaves in choice their country and adopts a new language what happens to their old - particularly people whose language of orgin was representative of horrors etc

↑ Index

330. Burt Kimmelman
Re: The Cold of Poetry &, eventually, "girls"
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

seems to me that confessing as it is usually understood depends on language that possesses coherence in the way that Langpo is thought not to. moreover, the pizzazz of lowellian poetry (and yes the same can be said more or less for plathian or berrymanian) is that the language is done up to suggest a identifiable and thus somewhat unified or coherent "self" albeit perhaps a self that is in pain because of its self-perceived fragmentation (like the wicked witch of the west from a movie that is more or less contemporaneous?).

bk

↑ Index

331. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Erasing
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Rachel speaks of textuality linked to the depths of ethical and social and poetic feeling -- to differentiate from a kind of abstract literary fascination -- and I agree with her. Treblinka was to be covered over and made into a park. So, then, what is the opposite of erasure? Inscription? Imposition? Bloating up the void? Being written down? A deep sense of presence?

Every blank page (every blank computer screen) writes over a past; every time something is written, it blocks out something else, which is a kind of erasure. Every possibility ends possibilities. While we usually consider erasure as something to recover from, to re-inscribe -- such as the erasure of whole peoples, of memories, of pasts -- there is another aspect: erasure as a positive complement to inscription.

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

332. Eliza McGrand
Re: a modest proposal
Tue 8 Dec 1998

---

if you go back to juliana spahr's post, she suggested seperate list FOR announcments, and other for the rest. and she mentioned enjoying rest beside announcements until she got way busy and clogged down, and sick of recent spate of snarls.

finally, if you peruse posts going back a few weeks, you will see that most lurker posts (and others) do NOT, as mr./ms. mccreary states, say that they only like announcements.

i am not particularly happy to see namecalling, and the "schoolyard bully" pejorative would, i think, have been better left unsaid.

but gabriel gudding-wise, i must point out a delicious irony: as a woman, am too often treated to persons overendowed with entitlement who feel it is encumbent upon them to "explain" what i have said, speak FOR me, and in so doing, completely ignore what in fact i HAVE said. i suspect that the numerous people, lurkers and otherwise, who have been posting that they like the multiplicity of posts, in addition to announcement posts, are perhaps less than idyllic about having it "explained" that in fact they were posting to say they only read announcements. how quaint that the interpretation is conjoined to disparagement of "schoolyard bullies."

i feel the same frisson of distaste about "schoolyard bully" taunt whether i am, or am not, considered to be lumped among them. how bully of me -- mairead, watch it or i'll take over your "Butch" spot...

call me spike...
e

↑ Index

333. Ron Silliman
Announcements, Events
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Juliana's point is well taken, but so is the comment "bland, bland, bland"

The EPC has a links page for publishers, but what if it had a page that listed nothing but reading announcements. And another that listed descriptions only of books and magazines. Posted of course by the folks who want the word out about such events.

Anyone who feels overwhelmed by the # of messages should definitely get the digest version. It makes a huge difference to get 3 messages if you've been off-line for 72 hours instead of 150.

I only wish all the other lists (PoetryEtc, UKPoets, and subsubpoetics, say) had the same capacity. CAP-L has a digest option but seems these days to be stuck on just one or two messages per day.

Big event here in Philly this week is Bruce Andrews & Rod Smith in the PhillyTalks series at Writers House, 3805 Locust Walk, 6 PM on Thursday!!

Ron

↑ Index

334. KENT JOHNSON
Whose sexual organs?
Tue 8 Dec 1998

May I bother the List with with a small correction for clarity's sake? When I said in my reply to Charles Bernstein that > Leaders of a community of poets searching wild and open form, then, faced with situations of a wild and sudden irruption of someone saying that other member's cocks and cunts, for example, are not so fine as claimed (see George Thompson's wonderful post of today)

I should like the apostrophe to be placed _outside_ the 's' in "member's," lest the odd impression be given that I am thinking of a many-organed individual.

Ah, my last post to the List, and see what I am reduced to. A fiddling with cocks and cunts.

Think of me, every now and then.

Kent

↑ Index

335. Emily Lloyd
L=A & L.H.
Tue 8 Dec 1998

Simon & all,

I don't think I've earned the right to define what "L=A=N=G" poetry is (which is to say I know I'll get in trouble here for my simpledom--simpletondom?)...that would mean, of course, that neither have I earned the right to call Hejinian a NON-L=A=N=G poet. But, ugh, I did, so here's an attempt at explaining why.

My simplest, puritan definition of an L=A poet would be a poet whose primary interest is in abandoning (nicer light: questioning) "the signifying function of language, evoking instead the sounds, the non-referentiality of words." In quotes because I scrawled it in my copy of Tender Buttons as being something Chas. Bernstein said about Stein--this is probably a paraphrase, and it was not intended by CB, to my knowledge, as a definition of L=A=N=Gpo. I also've got there that CB said the desire to "decode" Stein reflects the reader's "misplaced urge to 'make sense' of poetry." I disagree with CB on Stein here (but I disagree with almost everyone on Stein, inc. CB's "opposites," who say TB's just one big coded lesbian statement). And I don't know if I agree or not with myself putting this fwd as a definition of L=A=N=Gpo (there's some awkward multiple nodes for ya <grin>). I do know that I would name _Writing Is an Aid to Memory_ as what seems to me Hejinian's closest moment to L=A=N=Gpo, but at the same time I'd feel facile in doing so...

The term "confessional" is clearly problematic. Someone quite rightly backchanneled me on my earlier use of it, wondering just what the hell it meant to me. I identified, earlier, capital-C confessional poetry with "speech" and (not or) transparent use of lang., etc., ostensibly about the self--that is, the self not just of the narrator, but of the writer. Such a definition (esp. in the sense of transparency) would not usually apply to Plath or Berryman. It would sometimes apply to Whitman & O'Hara, Hass & Gluck. I dare say there are moments when it would--at least nearly--apply to S.Howe (whom I can't think of as a L=Apoet, either). I failed to say what I identified lowercase-c confessional poetry with, other than, abstractly enough, a sense of "intimacy." Even less academically, I'd say a sense of honesty. At some point, and I can't explain why, I stopped "trusting" (jeez, this is sounding like a confession) the word(s) of those poets who seemed to be consciously asking for my trust, for me to believe their stories, or their observations, and why not!, since they were putting it in the clearest, more see-through language possible, and in writing (much as I've loved much of her work, for me, one of the most obnoxious lines in poetry is the first sentence of Forche's "The Colonel": "What you have heard is true."). It'll sound like an idiot's mobius/mobile, but when I wrote of hitting a "wall" in reading Confessional Poetry, I meant that I felt something, I think, akin to the (more documented at my schools) way that many students feel when first encountering L=A=N=Gpo (or, sometimes, Stein--but not Hejinian). The "wall" is the language of the poem. For whatever reason, "transparent" language, when used in a poem--and I'm operating as one who cannot think of a "poem" itself as transparent: by "nature," it's a written, crafted thing--anyway, transparent language, when used in a poem, so as to (the poet hopes?) direct attention to the "ideas" or "story" or "thoughts" in the poem and not the language, calls truckloads of attention to the language. Of Confessional po., Simon writes, "for me, there is an 'aesthetic experience' (i.e., I do think it's somehow poetic, and not simply a hashing out in verse)." Okay: a poem is an aesthetic experience; a poem in "transparent" language feels, to me, like it's quietly (read: LOUDLY) trying not to be. But I'm talking transparent here. Maybe not even Lowell, but, say, Linda Pastan.

"Trust," "truth," "honesty"--I'm embarrassed even to be writing of them. And yet I trust Hejinian's poetry, and I trust Stein's. I trust these because they manage to be, to me, both critically aware of (and sometimes delighting in) language/artifice/poemhood and, well, intimate. Whereas, say, when Adrienne Rich goes "and this is the oppressor's language," it just doesn't seem either (critically aware/intimate). In a similar way I have come to think Marianne Moore's work as almost scarily--so intensely is it--intimate.

Could it be that I can't explain (and certainly can't convince) because I'm in love? and for the wrong reasons? I don't doubt it for a second. At any rate, Simon, I hope my tone & stumblings here make it clear that I didn't, in my last post, mean to suggest that you "need to read more of Hejinian" because you're in some way glaringly wrong in calling her a L=Apo. My disagreement is more from the gut than from the intellect (or, to be sure, the background in L=Apo that I don't have). And I don't know who the "most exemplary" L=A=N=Gpoets are, but when I was academically functioning I found _The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_ & some of Bob Perelman's _The Marginalization of Poetry_ helpful in that arena (L=A=N=Gpos, Simon: don't take this last bit as cheeky. I mean it sincerely: I read the books, I digested them, I can remember finding them very good. But my scholarhead burnt out not long after and I truly can't remember exactly who self-identifies, or is suspected of identifying, as a L=Apo. Bernstein? Silliman? Andrews? Watten? Grenier? Not--egads--Hejinian?)

Transparent As I Wanna Be,
em

↑ Index

336. Peter Quartermain

Coming in December, puff puff puff!

Wed 9 Dec 1998

--==========_913209710==_

If you're going to the MLA convention, you might try the University Press of New England / Wesleyan University Press book stand for the following, just puffed in Publishers Weekly. The cover, I might add, is a knockout.

--==========_913209710==_

from _Publishers_ Weekly_ 30 November 1998 page 67

_OTHER:_British_and_Irish_Poetry_Since_1970_
Edited by Richard Caddel and Peter Quartermain.
Wesleyan Univ., $19.95 (352 p) ISBN 0-8195-22589; cloth
$45 -22414

Though England has seen a spate of recent anthologies of alternative U.K. poetry, this collection marks the first published in the States in more than two decades. Caddel, a noted poet, and Quartermain, a prominent critic of postmodern poetry, collect a diverse and exciting range of work that is evenly balanced between such trends as Caribbean dub poetry; the mellifluous, baroque lyric as it has been developed in Cambridge; London-based performance and concrete poetry; and "outsider" figures such as Bill Griffiths (an independent Anglo-Saxon scholar) and Tom Raworth, whose Reverdy-inspired early lyrics first found appreciation in the States. The compelling introduction portrays a late-millennium English milieu that is marked by overlapping ethnicities and class perspectives, but that traces an experimental tradition "back to Clare, Blake, Smart and the two Vaughans, Henry and Thomas." The selections from the 55 poets are brief yet excellent. Barry McSweeney, a self-styled Rimbaudian, is represented by a number of terse, direct poems that flaunt pvocative language. Denise Riley's subtle, tradition-conscious ear allows lines that are unexpectedly comforting, while Raworth's "That More Simple Natural Time Tone Distortion," a sonic joy-ride of one- to three-word lines that bristle with pixilated narrative, is a contrast to his traditional short lyric "Out of a Sudden." Tom Leonard's Glasgow Scots, not unlike John Agard's Guyanese-inflected idiom, brings to eye and ear a sweet, confident music that is unlike anything in this country. Veronica Forrest-Thomson, a poet and critic who died at 28; Cris Cheek; Maggie O'Sullivan and concrete poet Bob Cobbing are all well represented, as are important figures who guided the influx of New American poetry to the islands: Eric Mottram, Roy Fisher and Andrew Crozier. This is an important sourcebook to a literature that is probably more marked by multi-culturalist energy and divergences from the main modernist line than that of the United States. (_December_)

--==========_913209710==_

+ +

Peter Quartermain
846 Keefer Street
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V6A 1Y7
Voice : [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

+ +

--==========_913209710==_--

↑ Index

337. Emily Lloyd

Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"

Wed 9 Dec 1998

In my last post, I mentioned disagreeing with Charles & some other pro. critics on Stein's Tender Buttons, but didn't go into why. Below is why. It's a longish why--a msg. I sent a yr. or so ago to a friend who was unfamiliar with both some major critics' and, um, my takes on TB, so there appear quotes from critics, then my takes on the quotes.

If length/tone/or topic is unbearable, please delete at will. But I didn't think it was--honorable?--to leave with "I disagree with the world-on-Stein" and no "here's why"s. em

---

On Tender Buttons: *Eliz. Frost, fr. Postmodern Culture, v.5 n.3: "Stein's poetic experiment remains separate from the social and political realms that avant-garde artists of her day addressed in their highly polemical & disorienting art & manifestoes. One need only compare TB to any # of Marinetti's pronouncements, or to Apollinaire's "Merveilles de la Guerre," or even Breton's first surrealist manifesto, to see the extent to which Stein insisted on the privacy of her language...Stein's fetishization of lang. both exalts lang. to the status of material object & participates in disguising the erotic 'content' of TB as a whole... [note: GS' tendency to "isolate intimate, personal experience from the public sphere is being revisited/critiqued by fem. theorists who stress the political implications of speech in the public sphere & the 'impossibility' of separating the symbolic realm of lang. from the social realities lang. reflects] *in somewhat of the same vein, William Gass & Lisa Ruddick, on TB, suggest GS uses this hermetic space to create a private lang. of lesbian experience in which particular words function as clues ("THIS IS THIS DRESS, AIDER"= "this is distress, Ada"--where "Ada" was a nickname Stein had for Toklas). Individual words also function as codes for sexual experience (cow=orgasm, etc.).

My Thoughts on the Above: bullhunky, mostly. Must everyone assume the forms Stein uses are used as hiding places--is that the only way to interrogate these forms, if we know she was a dyke? First of all, it does not appear to me that Stein is hiding anything in her writing--nor would that thesis gel with the open way in which she lived. Second, "private lang." published/publicized isn't all that private anymore, is it? How can one say the erotic content of TB is disguised? One would need to lack much imagination & sense of humor about eroticism to believe this--the sort of person who needs to see genitals called genitals before s/he realizes sex is being talked about...or thinks s/he is special for realizing sex is being talked about when genitals aren't explicitly referred to, thinks the general reader won't get this, so it must be patiently explained in a scholarly essay. How about the idea that words that refer specifically to genitals are TIRED? Aren't cheeky, aren't erotically FUN anymore? Take the poem called "PEELED PENCIL, CHOKE," the entire text of which, after the title, is "Rub her coke." I find this dizzingly, a bit disturbingly, but most importantly, powerfully erotic. Would Eliz. Frost have it read "Rub her clit"? Does she think this really reads as a command to fondle someone's soda-pop bottle? I think of the time K. and I were interrogating the ways in which pop-culture sexual scripts filtered into our own lives as if naturally--how K., an atheist, would say "Oh, God" during sex--and so we actively decided to try and eroticize previously "non-erotic" phrases (say, "I'm a little teapot") by using them in a sexual context. Of course this works. Basically, one is freshening, or re- inventing, sex, as one might say that GS freshens, or re-invents, language. One is naming. While I'm not convinced that the question of whether or not GS was politically "radical" enough in her poetry is the place to start interrogating her form, it seems clear that this naming, freshening, or whatever you want to call it, is radical at a far less surface level than penning "I love you, you love me, homosexuality!" It is also re-naming/inventing sex & lang. in a far less narrow way: by this, I mean, NOT just for lesbians. Dudes can rub her coke, too. She can rub a dude's coke, and then we have to re-guess what coke might mean. Insofar as GS' work contains specifically lesbian content (in places in TB, more obviously in "Miss Furr and Miss Skeene" and "Lifting Belly"), it seems to me that she is embracing erotic experience, period, and that "lesbian sex" is simply the context in which she knows it. She's not trying to exalt lesbianism over other erotic experiences, as so many lesbian writers seem hell-bent on doing: Stein is in no way defensive about her sexual choices. She's not on the defense, so she doesn't need to be on the offense. I expect fem. theorists make their mistakes about Stein because they find it impossible to explain how she could be so utterly open, so "so what," about her lesbianism in the early 1900s, when VERY few lesbian writers are "sho what" about it even now. It IS almost impossible to believe. However, that's how it was, I think. To the greatest possible extent, Stein seems (in life, at least) to have simply expected others to rise above thinking there was anything special about her being a dyke...this "aside" should certainly pale, she'd think, to her being a "genius." Which she was convinced she was, with relatively little public support to substantiate her claim. A genius is not a woman, or a lesbian, or a man, or what-have-you (Stein might think). It's another species. It should not be disturbed with such trivial things as objections to its sex, sex life, weight, etc. And, for the most part, it seems that she wasn't (by salon visitors, etc.). This must, to some extent, have been due to her demeanor (and her charisma). Everyone knows that you can get away with shoplifting if you just walk in the store acting as though it were your right, and nothing out of the ordinary, to pocket something. Note that there was a large, tight-knit community of lesbians and bi women on the left bank in Stein's time, salon-ing at Natalie Barney's place--and that Stein had nothing to do with them. Why? Because they were not geniuses. Picasso, Alfred Whitehead-- others Stein considered geniuses--were her chosen company. Today's fem theorists gnash their teeth upon hearing that GS, when asked what she thought of "The Woman Question," replied that it had nothing to do with her. They are unable to understand how it had nothing to do with her. In the name of fem & gay liberation, they would have preferred that Stein confine herself to these issues in her writing. How liberating. Gass and Ruddick are correct when they speak of Stein's private jokes and punning, to the extent that these jokes do appear in her writing. They do not constitute the main of it, though, and it doesn't seem at all necessary to refer to them as a "private language of lesbian experience." They're private jokes, period. Indulgences, and perhaps a weakness in Stein's writing. There probably aren't many writers of any era, gender, or sexuality that haven't stuck a private joke in here or there in their writings. It's difficult to resist--and may be even more so when you keep hearing that no one understands any of your work, anyway. I do not believe it is something that should be particularly focused on in an exploration of Stein's work.

Another Pro's Take: Charles Bernstein argues that, in TB, Stein abandons the signifying function of language altogether, evoking instead the sounds, the non-referentiality of words. CB says the desire to "decode" GS reflects the reader's "misplaced urge to make sense of poetry."

My Reaction to Bernstein: GS obviously plays with sound in TB; one of the more amusing "plays" appears in "ROASTBEEF," when the paragraph beginning "Lovely snipe and tender turn" slips aggressively into rhymed tetrameter--clearly a "referential" move, one that refers to capital-P poetry. It seems to me that the desire to "decode" TB does indeed reflect a misplaced urge of the reader--not the urge to make sense of poetry, but the urge to make sense of, as seen above, a lesbian who doesn't use lesbian catch-phrases in her work. I simply do not think it possible to logically claim that Stein "abandons the signifying function of language altogether." For one thing, she preserves syntax and uses a fairly constant tone--one of a primer, sometimes, of someone making true, indisputable statements. There's also a frequent use of negatives: "this is not," "this does not make," "this is no," etc.--declaratives, "proofs," etc. She might be playing with the idea that one can communicate/teach through silly old words, she might be making fun of sense in the way it's popularly conceived. But here again, it seems to me that she's simply re- inventing/freshening an old idea of what making sense is. By which I mean that she is making sense in TB, but in a new way, in a way that forces the reader to question "sense" and making it in the same way that K. and I were forced to question sexual scripts. To say that TB does not make sense and is not representational is akin to saying that a Cubist painting does not make sense and is not representational. Of course a Cubist painting is representational of reality. It's representational of multiple realities/perspectives, though. It changes the boundaries of what is meant by "reality." In this, Cubism seems to me very purposeful, very scientific--an absolutely logical reponse of painting to photography, which at that time was "taking over" traditional representational painting. GS' work has been compared to Cubist paintings, and some of the poems in TB read almost like word-painting representations of their titles (for ex. "A METHOD OF A CLOAK," "WATER RAINING," and the--menstrually-ruined?--petticoat of "A PETTICOAT"). What's interesting is that, while Cubism follows naturally from photography's "threat" to "directly representational" painting (naturally in time/history), Stein's forms could really, as avant- garde as she seemed then and does even today, have happened ages before Stein "invented" them. Writing as a method of representing reality has always occupied a challenged space, and poetry in particular had long been seen as something "other" than the representation of reality, whether it be seen as a "heightened" reality or whatever. "Real people don't speak in rhymed meter," etc. It seems the most obvious thing in the world to say "Stein was before her time," but was she really? I can think of nothing occurring in history at Stein's particular moment that made her form "necessary" right then, as Cubism & abstract expressionism seemed necessary to the survival of painting in a photographable world. It could've happened a century, centuries earlier. I imagine Stein understanding this and being absolutely at a loss as to why others considered her work so "out there." I imagine her almost laughing because she'd "lucked in" to her genius-ness: noticed what, "unbelievably!", no one had noticed before. It could be said, bizarrely, that Stein's writing is both primitive and avant-garde. She alternately telescopes and microscopes, steps incredibly close to and back from objects. The TB phrase "Object that is in wood," from the poem "A WAIST," reminds one of an archaeologist reporting on an artifact whose use is unknown. Whatever the "object that is in wood" is, no one who knows the name of said object would refer to it as an "object that is in wood." An observation that basic is (nearly) no longer available when one knows the name of the object. Your generalized poet would take the name of the object and then add description to the name, would build on the given. Here, Stein builds backwards from the given. Somewhere Anne Sexton writes that a poet is one who builds trees out of wood furniture. I do not think this is often the case, but with Stein, with "object that is in wood" and its equivalents, it is apt. I guess I'd say here GS works to uncover what the "civilized, educated" psyche smooths over--what is no longer available to the all-too-trained (and rushed) eye. Stein's dealing with the psyche, here, as she does in more obvious ways Three Lives and The Making of Americans (and there it is only more obvious because she's actively questioning the motives/architecture of different personality "types"--whereas here, it's any reader's, any observer's, psyche that is being not questioned, but, in some way, restored: Stein is really restoring ways of seeing that have been lost, as much as or more than she is inventing new ways of seeing).

Misc. Notes (not on Tender Buttons) Always controversial is Stein's statement "There is no such thing as repetition," esp. since so many readers read her as repetitive: in The Making of Americans, some of the portraits., etc. (not TB). "Repetitive"-looking passages in Stein are often permutations, not repetitions of a phrase (a compliment Stein always cherished was someone's comparison of her work to Bach's fugues). But there ARE certain sentences repeated verbatim, and more than once. What were these to Stein, if not repetitions? How should we read them? Okay, my thesis: it's not at all hard to argue that one can't repeat the same sentence when speaking. It'll never sound exactly the same way twice--the timbre of the voice might vary, a car might pass by, acts of speech are inherently acts of performance, etc. I think Stein is insisting that neither can one type the same sentence twice. Perhaps forcing us to imagine the conditions under which each sentence was typed. There can be no repetition because this sentence was typed at 10:41, and this sentence, which contains exactly the same words, at 10:42. Hence Stein's concept of the "continuous present." I think? If so, she was bumping against the langue v. parole debate somewhat before the debate supposedly officially started (at least as we read it today). Claiming the same primacy (and indeterminacy?) for the written as for the spoken word. And for the read word: I read the sentence in different conditions than you, so each sentence is endlessly new. Hmm.

Re: femtheory, lesbians, & gender identity: In addition to saying that the "woman question" didn't concern her, Stein referred to herself as "husband" and Alice as "wife" (Stein & Picasso in one room discussing art, their wives dicussing hats and perfume in the other room). It would be wrong, however, to label theirs a butch-femme relationship. Stein was no butch. There were famous butches in Paris at the time: Radclyffe Hall, Lady Una Trowbridge, etc., as well as famous femmes: Natalie Barney, etc. These butches dressed the part--hats, trousers, ties, short slicked- back hair. Stein wore skirts, not pants, and only cut her hair to Caesar-length quite late in life. It would be more accurate to view theirs as a male-female relationship than a butch-femme one...that is, more accurate to see Stein as "transgendered" than as a lesbian. The woman question did not concern her because she was not a woman. This may be hard to grasp, and it's hard to communicate. But butch-femme relationships are highly coded ones, and dress is an essential--perhaps THE essential--marker of them. And when I say "transgendered," I don't necessarily mean that Stein thought of herself as a man. I think she thought of herself as a Stein (or a genius)--somehow outside of gender. She seems to have dressed in whatever she found comfortable, rather than making the very active & time-consuming decisions a butch must in putting together a coded appearance. Similarly, in "Patriarchal Poetry," where Stein denounces "Patriarchal Poetry," I think it's a definite mistake to read this as a denouncement of poetry by men. Huge! Some fem-lesbs latch onto this one poem as "proof" that Stein was politically conscious and cared about them. But by "patriarchal poetry," I believe Stein means "establishment poetry," or canonical verse. Not all men write patriarchal poetry, and some women do. There is no call for a "matriarchal" poetry, and remember that Stein was buying non-establishment paintings by men before anyone else-- while everyone else was defacing them at painting exhibitions. It would be the same "patriarchy" keeping these male painters from being appreciated that kept Stein's work from being appreciated...

↑ Index

338. Kathy Lou Schultz

Special to Bay Area teachers/students (Course Announcement)

Wed 9 Dec 1998

I would appreciate your help in spreading the word about this course. It is open both to students who are enrolled in the "regular" university AND to those who are not. (Come one! Come all!) Students receive 3 units of credit in creative writing, which counts toward the major. Thanks.--KLS

WINTER SESSION COURSE

Creative Writing 510: Personal Narrative

CW 0510-01 (J) 3.0 Units
01/04/99—01/21/99 MTWTH 0900—1245 HUM 384
San Francisco State University College of Extended Learning

Description: This multi-genre, upper-division writing course will examine the ways in which writers transform the raw material of personal experience into publishable works of art. Students will read genres including the novel, memoir, short story, personal essay, and the long poem. Topics to be covered include work, family, sex, personal/history, politics, and the writing life. Throughout the course students will be encouraged to push the boundaries of what we define as both "personal" and "narrative." Responses to the texts (both critical and creative), in-class writing assignments, and a final project are required. We will also spend time workshopping student work.

Texts include: Bastard Out of Carolina by Dorothy Allison, Beneath The Underdog: His World As Composed by Mingus by Charles Mingus, This Boy's Life: A Memoir by Tobias Wolff, Dictee by Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, My Life by Lyn Hejinian, essays by Joan Didion, The Letters of Mina Harker by Dodie Bellamy, Marjorie Kempe by Robert Gluck, and selections from Working Classics: Poems on Industrial Life.

Instructor: Kathy Lou Schultz, MFA has published poetry, prose, critical essays, and book reviews in a variety of journals including Mirage, Tripwire, Idiom, Outlet, Lyric&, and Fourteen Hills. Recent work is also forthcoming in Rhizome and Kenning. Her collection of poems, Re dress, was selected by Forrest Gander as the winner of the Michael Rubin Award given by San Francisco State University. Kathy Lou is co-editor of Lipstick Eleven, a magazine of experimental writing.

For more information, contact the instructor at: [redacted] or [redacted]. The number for SFSU College of Extended Learning is [redacted]. The schedule number for this course is 10356.

↑ Index

339. Tom Orange
call me morbid call me pale
Wed 9 Dec 1998

---

anselm, beth:

by "abstract french lyric" my guess at the work being referred to would be that of anne-marie albiach, claude royet-journoud, perhaps also dominique fourcade, jacqueline risset, jean daive, phillipe denis, and of a slightly older generation, jacques dupin, andre du bouchet, et al. french originals might be had at a good library, and translations available from presses like sun/moon, burning deck, post apollo...

hoping that helps,
t.
[redacted]

---------- There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze ----------

↑ Index

340. George Bowering
Re: A response to Charles Bernstein
Wed 9 Dec 1998

What makes me reach for the delete key is the damned godawful Length of a lot of those argumentative posts.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

341. George Bowering
Re: re The Cold of Poetry/Em's strand
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Now that last Bromige posting on Bukowski---that was long, and it was worth it, because it was a literary discussion, not a lot of dressing down of some other gink on a minor point.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

342. Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON again
Wed 9 Dec 1998

---

hello, I notice that a couple of people asked about the address for RM subscriptions, so I thought I'd repost my earlier post;
for further information,
please contact Susan Clark at [redacted].

****

Announcing the publication of RADDLE MOON 17
-- dedicated to the memory of Charles Watts --

A special section, "Some Vancouver Writers," with work by : Marie Annharte BAKER, Ted BYRNE, Susan CLARK, Peter CULLEY, Kevin DAVIES, Jeff DERKSEN, Dan FARRELL, Deanna FERGUSON, Maxine GADD, Dorothy Trujillo LUSK, Rob MANERY, Paul MUTTON, Meredith QUARTERMAIN, Lisa ROBERTSON, Nancy SHAW, Christine STEWART, Colin SMITH, Catriona STRANG, Lary TIMEWELL, Melissa WOLSAK.

Work from Quebec, curated by Nicole Brossard :
Cynthia GIRARD, Michael DÉLISLE,
translated by Robert Majzels and Erin Mouré,

New work from :
William FULLER, Jean DAY, Jackson Mac Low,
Gil McElroy and Rae Armantrout

Photograms by Katrine Le Gallou

****

SUBSCRIPTIONS:
in Canada : subscriptions ($15 indiv/$24 inst); single copies, $10 in USA or overseas: same as above, in US$; (add $16 per sub for airmail overseas)

send address and issue you want to start with to:
RADDLE MOON, 518-350 East Second Av., Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8 Canada for subscriptions using credit card please contact:

New Star Books, Vancouver:
[redacted] (Visa accepted)

DISTRIBUTION:
individual orders:
New Star Books, Vancouver:
[redacted] (Visa accepted)
booksellers, please order through General Distribution : Ontario & PQ:
[redacted]
in the rest of Canada: [redacted]

in the USA :
individuals, please order through : Small Press Distribution, Berkeley, [redacted] or [redacted]
or through
Bridge Street Books, Washington, DC : contact Rod Smith,
[redacted]

US booksellers, please order through :
General Book Distribution, Toronto, Canada : [redacted]
OR through
Small Press Distribution, Berkeley above.

in Britain: through Paul Green, at Spectacular Diseases, 85b London Road, Peterborough, Cambs, England PE2 9BS, or through New Star (VISA accepted)

 our ISSN is: 0826-5909 **********

Erratum: Marie Annharte Baker's name is spelled [consistently] incorrectly throughout the issue as Annehart. Most issues were shipped before this error was noticed and so lack erratum slips. Apologies to Marie.

↑ Index

343. Douglas Oliver
Re : Abstract lyric
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Hi Anselm! I think Simon's "Reverie" on the French abstract lyric is a little off-base. Hi Simon! As I understand it, the term was introduced more recently to explain why contemporary French post-Derridean poetry which, in Celan-like terms, raised the problem of the lyric voice nevertheless had a lyric look and feel to it, as indeed Celan's poetry had. The lyrical tendency is abstracted into a play of language influenced by a theoretics; and the personal emotional content is cauterised or ablated or something, although the impulsion of poet into poetry remains what it always has been, from the gut. But the lyrical music still lives along the fragmented lines, and let's not even mention "erasure" please! Perhaps the finest example, if I'm right in my derivations, would be Anne-Marie Albiach's work, some of it recently translated by Keith Waldrop as Geometry. But I think more particularly of her Etat and Viva Voce. When you hear her read (not usually possible), you can sense what I can only call a lyrical time interval occur within the Mallarméan white spaces of the page. The specifically post-Derridean movement in French poetry really began, following Tel Quel mag of the sixties, with Claude Royet- Journoud's, Anne-Marie's, and Michel Couturier's magazine Siècle à Mains in 1969-70 in my opinion.

Doug

↑ Index

344. izak
Transfer Reading
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Reading for Transfer 76

Monday, December 14th
from 7 to 9 p.m.
at the Poetry Center
San Francisco State University

FREE

* Mike Freeman
* Ruth Goldstone
* Cynthia Green
* Dana Teen Lomax
* Sarah Mangold
* Dan Mayer
* John Monroe

* Rose Najia
* Sarah Rosenthal
* Cynthia Sailers

↑ Index

345. miekal and
f.y.i.
Wed 9 Dec 1998

> {{Courtesy of Andy}}
>
> August, 1998, Montevideo, Uruguay:
>
> Paolo Esperanza, bass trombonist with the Simphonica Mayor de Uruguay, in a misplaced moment of inspiration decided to make his own contribution to the cannon shots fired as part of the orchestra's performance of Tchaikovsky's 1812 Overture at an outdoor children's concert.
>
> In complete seriousness he placed a large, ignited firecracker, which was equivalent in strength to a quarter stick of dynamite, into his aluminum straight mute and then stuck the mute into the bell of his quite new Yamaha in-line double-valve bass trombone.
>
> Later, from his hospital bed he explained to a reporter through bandages on his mouth, "I thought that the bell of my trombone would shield me from the explosion and instead, would focus the energy of the blast outwards and away from me, propelling the mute high above the orchestra, like a rocket."
>
> However, Paolo was not up on his propulsion physics nor qualified to use high-powered artillery and in his haste to get the horn up before the firecracker went off, he failed to raise the bell of the horn high enough so as to give the mute enough arc to clear the orchestra.
>
> What actually happened should serve as a lesson to us all during those delirious moments of divine inspiration. First, because he failed to sufficiently elevate the bell of his horn, the blast propelled the mute between rows of players in the woodwind and viola sections of the orchestra, missing the players and straight into the stomach of the conductor, driving him off the podium and directly into the front row of the audience.
>
> Fortunately, the audience were sitting in folding chairs and thus they were protected from serious injury, for the chairs collapsed under them passing the energy of the impact of the flying conductor backwards into

> row of people sitting behind them, who in turn were driven back into the people in the row behind and so on, like a row of dominos. The sound of collapsing wooden chairs and grunts of people falling on their behinds increased logarithmically, adding to the overall sound of brass cannons and brass playing as constitutes the closing measures of the Overture.
>
> Meanwhile, all of this unplanned choreography not withstanding, back on stage Paolo's Waterloo was still unfolding. According to Paolo, "Just as he heard the sound of the blast, time seemed to stand still.
>
> "Everything moved in slow motion. Just before I felt searing pain to my mouth, I could swear I heard a voice with a Austrian accent say "Fur every akshon zer iz un eekvul un opposeet reakshon!"
>
> Well, this should come as no surprise, for Paolo had set himself up for a textbook demonstration of this fundamental law of physics. Having failed to plug the lead pipe of his trombone, he allowed the energy of the blast to send a super heated jet of gas backwards through the mouth pipe of the trombone which exited the mouthpiece burning his lips and face.
>
> The pyrotechnic ballet wasn't over yet. The force of the blast was so great it split the bell of his shiny Yamaha right down the middle, turning it inside out while at the same time propelling Paolo backwards off the riser. And for the grand finale, as Paolo fell backwards he lost his grip on the slide of the trombone allowing the pressure of the hot gases coursing through the horn to propel the trombone's slide like a double golden spear into the head of the 3rd clarinetist, knocking him unconscious.
>
> The moral of the story? Beware the next time you hear someone in the trombone section yell out, "Hey, everyone, watch this!"

↑ Index

346. Alaric Sumner

British Poets in digest form

Wed 9 Dec 1998

Ron Silliman suggested that british-poets does not have digest. This is untrue. If you are a member of the list then you can set and unset digest thus:

> Setting digests
>
> To receive messages as a digest, send this command to [redacted]
>
> set british-poets digest
>
> And to stop receiving messages as a digest, send this command to

> [redacted]
>
> set british-poets nodigest

±±±

langauge is not necessarily non-signifying langauge. Stein would have understood this as well, being a student of William James. Tender Buttons does indeed signify all over the place, though I don't believe it is particularly concerned with the referentiallity of language.

But - in regards to the quote from you above, I'd be inclined to agree with you. Particularly in regards to your statement that "it does not appear to me that Stein is hiding anything in her writing." TB has always seemed to me not a repressed work in the least -- not a matter of closeting or any such thing. To believe so would be to drop Freud very oppressively into Stein's brain and, again, as far as psychology is concerned, Stein is not a Freudian bu a Jamesian. So what else is there to say then. Well, I think there's another way to talk about codes without talking about hiding. And here it is: I think then when we're dealing with TB we are properly in the realm of slang. Here's Paul Goodman on slang and I think it's pretty relevant to what's going on it TB:

"Much of slang is first invented as a neologism of a gang or special group...yet it comes into circulation as slang by breaking out of its sub-culture. When the boundary is broken, there is a different kind of language, not self-naming and defensive but common and wild...slang creates new language just like poetry, and it can be regarded as a kind of folk poetry...Whitman says, 'Slang is the lawless, germinal element below all words and sentences and behind all poetry.'"

So, when we're talking about lines like "rub her coke" I would say, as I think you said, that we're not talking about language which is secret and coded but, as Goodman says, "common and wild." That's what's so great about it! What the hell's so fun about saying Stein was trying to hide the fact that she was a dyke? Not only does it seem quite wrong, it seems - worse! - boring. Stein's intent doesn't interest me that much but if I had to address it I would say that she knew enough about the nature of language as fundamentally public (i.e., collaborative, un-hideable, un-tameable, circuitous) to understand that one's codes never stay hidden - they move out into common arenas and do work with/on/against/through other codes.

As an aside, I'd like to say that this sort of talk (the kind Emily initiated) is an important part of this list. It's not just announcements and the occassional brief, inevitably kind review. I know that to open it up to more than this risks occassional chaos, hurt feelings, and abandonment by listmembers we admire. But I also believe (and I say this with full sympathy for posts such as the recent one from Juliana) that the list cannot remain viable and vital if it is merely an uncontentious bulletin board. Thanks. -Mike.

↑ Index

348. Gwyn McVay
Re: three questions
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Bob,

To grok "redshifting web" in a possible Buddhist context, search on either "Indra's web" or "Indra's net"--Hindu-Buddhist version of "a thousand points of light," sorta.

Gwyn

↑ Index

349. Pattie McCarthy
Re: Erasing
Wed 9 Dec 1998

In a message dated 12/9/98 12:28:35 AM, you wrote:

<<Rachel speaks of textuality linked to the depths of ethical and social and poetic feeling -- to differentiate from a kind of abstract literary fascination -- and I agree with her. Treblinka was to be covered over and made into a park. So, then, what is the opposite of erasure? Inscription? Imposition? Bloating up the void? Being written down? A deep sense of presence?>> but isn't erasing / forgetting more strenuous than remembering? I agree that this cld never BE an abstraction. had Treblinka been made into a park, I don't suspect many wld have forgotten that it had been Treblinka -- cld it have ever become a void, truly? or, in a broader sense, cld anything erased become void? or wld it become something else entirely -- itself transmuted in an attempt to erase? which then, textually, does it become itself plus the process? in which case itself 'erased' is more charged than forgotten? I agree w/ "erasure as a positive complement to inscription" but find myself wandering here in this maze of what is the void & how is this inescapable? Rachel's poem excerpted earlier begins : "It's true that every ending only erases the board / rather than filling it." which seems to embrace the inextricable entaglement of forgetting / remembering & their simultaneous natures. so then, yes -- what is the opposite of erasure but also what is erasure? usually lurking, Pattie

↑ Index

350. Joe Brennan
Fwd: blick
Wed 9 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_913216830_boundary

in an effort to give HG an opportunity to respond to CB in front of the only audience for whom it's important, I forward this to the List.

joe brennan

--part0_913216830_boundary

air-za03.mail.aol.com (v53.20) with SMTP; Tue, 08 Dec 1998 21:50:16 1900
by rly-za02.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with SMTP id VAA01014 for <[redacted]>;
Tue, 8 Dec 1998 21:50:14 -0500 (EST)
Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]> with BSMTP id 7862; Tue, 08 Dec 98 21:50:07 EST (LMail V1.2a/1.8a) with BSMTP id 5949; Tue, 8 Dec 1998 21:50:08 -0500 Resent-Date: Tue, 08 Dec 98 21:48:40 EST
Resent-From: henry <[redacted]>
Resent-To: [redacted]
Date: Tue, 08 Dec 98 21:27:40 EST
From: henry <[redacted]>
Subject: blick
To: gabe <[redacted]>

Dear Joe, I forwarded this to Kent also. I wish somebody would post to list. as my last say. Bernstein appears to have hunkered down for the long phony haul. Bizzarro. - Henry ----------Original message---------- Hey Gerber, you still breathin there, foxhole?? I'm following it on the website.

Bernstein let quite a big one there. I wish somebody would clarify oncet & for all why I quit. It was the censorship, not the limitation. The fact that 2 of my "reviewed" posts got disappeared. Kent & Mairead are gettin there...

plus he makes it sound like I was constant overposter. blow. he warned me abo ut 3-4 times tops over the last 3 yrs. Evry time I consented to his demand & reduced posting. politics, baby.

the smear about intimidating people. he shd talk. I treated everybody to the same candid sop. rough sometimes, maybe. but hey, are we baby consumers here, looking for a magazine rack?? I tried to stick to the issues.

can you forward this to somebody? I can't reply. Bernstein has slandered me.

- Henry

--part0_913216830_boundary--

↑ Index

351. Mark Prejsnar
Call me abstract, call me French
Wed 9 Dec 1998

"The abstract French lyric" is an infamous coinage of Ron Silliman's, in Philly Talks. He claimed that this was what most poets were today publishing (not including the workshop types, natch). And that it was very limited and limiting, that most people were only doing the A.F.L. This occasioned much bemused head-scatching, here in @lanta, and elsewhere. The "French" is especially intriguing. Totally off-base, i would say; but intriguing and provocative. Is it because contemporary post-L=A=N=G tendencies trace back historically to Rimbaud and Mallarme? Certainly Char and surrealism are not the primary inputs in contemporary u.s. work! (Throwing down the gaunlet here to RS, to defend his honor)

mark p.

On Tue, 8 Dec 1998, schuchat wrote:

> I don't know French, so I am probably the best person to answer your query.
>
> The "abstract French lyric" is by Pierre Reverie.
>
> The "French abstract" lyric is an academic piece, a song about a list of articles either in French or on French.
>
> Can the "Abstract" French "Lyric" can cut the mustard?
>
> Le lyric abstruit Fran-swa? C'est moi!
>
> However, there is also the possibility of Isidore Isou, the Romanian (naturellement) inventor of Le Poesie Lettriste, who wrote "in French" to the extent that lettriste poesie would be in a language.
>
> It is possible that Andy Britain also wrote a French abstract lyric.
>
> As we say in Russia, "etot vsou"

↑ Index

352. Rachel Levitsky

Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"

Sun 9 Dec 2012

Murmur pet murmur pet murmur.
Push sea push sea push sea push sea push sea push sea push sea push sea.
Sweet and good and kind to all.
--Stein from Sacred Emily

Emily,

Thanks for your Stein posts, they are great. Who are the feminists you take issue with? I think the issue of what Stein was thinking about is slippery, clearly her work is no political gripe even when she is head on the subject of global politics, mostly her thoughts observations are fodder for the experiments. Some of her projects seem more transparent to me as a reader than others. Maria Damon's discussion of Yet Dish as Yiddish in her essay in _the dark end of the street_ came as a revelation to me, and I can no longer think German w/o hearing 'gem in' or Polish without 'a polish' or Russian, 'rush in slice' (and then I rush to Brighton Beach to have a rush in slice of smoked salmon)

As far as her gender identification--yes perhaps not an issue, she liked girls and girls was good but what if she didn't like girls? I mean don't you think the desexualization of men is meaningful to her accomplishment? Also, I think that the time and place of Paris when GS was writing there, while N.Barney et al were saloning it up was the last time before the 1990's when there was an actively aestetic context for lesbians. "Lesbian" per say may not be an aestetic category but social context--as separate as she was from it--could allow Stein to have a 'so what' attitude and yet not be rendered invisible by denial. She was separate but in contact with the both the lesbian scene and the black scene, and my sense is that these were important to her in terms of being "of her time" rather than outside of it, ahead of it, which she flatly denies as a possiblitity. "No one is aheat of his time, it is only that the particular variety of creating his time is the one that his contemporaries who also are creating their own time refuse to accept." (Composition as Explanation) Which to me is a great rebuke to those prissy gasps and the fact that GS counted her self among a handful of world geniuses--there are varieties of being genius, someone else could have her handful too. I'm going off here but I think what's shocking is that Stein (and this goes back to Damon) had the chutzpah to say what she thought of herself and what allowed her to indulge in the experiment of writing. It's more palpable and gentile in these parts to say "I'm nobody! Who are you?"

So, by the way, who are people's five living geniuses? I'll have to think about that myself.

By the way, check out below what happened to your post on my server.
How much did I miss?
Emily Lloyd wrote:
>
> WÃüTpbo\Þùrw¶´Íï}
> P[ÿév½üõÃ|Rœ` ‡–ÇÉ•mkË_åRØ¹*í •“|_ ï×ºùÝo‡¥,ßww¼c†–¹\à > ¯ Æn6ošÅìåûÖ¶Æb¦ïA{aÿu™ÍÖ}0 ý_úž9É F4¡],àïšyÊ~¶ÿí˜#=éò¾¶Ä’>r!jÜâ
Â—q®n;\ê?—zÎvÞp¦C½Ñ&/xÕ 6²|/ã?' {Ì!
> ï‘]Käùè6È ¯«i½Ûï:Ø·ã-1l‰ÍãcÚÛUÆ´ ÷láF'Û¼ènsº×d ³ûÝ¼F·¹ÁœîyÃÛ¿çÞtM
> œovóóÞêæî»y]^˜à ··½ þ^}‹t£Õ °¼‘{ð ·›µ¼µ8!.ßˆWÜà ¯, {GNr¥º·ä=íÈC{Ùà~Ö¬/ kË³\Ï Ä|ª %î?onXž'ö¤*Ç)SË:Ú ¸Ü±.å«\ 9[tÂŽv«< :W“
and eventually the bickering banter will die away
>
> on another BOOKSALES oriented front,
> did anyone else hear the news that BARNES & NOBLE has purchased > INGRAM DISTRIBUTION?
>
> I thought Ingram was long gone already....any info here would be greatly > appreciated.
>
> ould be greatly > appreciated.
>
> he most extensive book distribution > > >system in the country, enabling online book buyers to get books > > >as fast as possible. (Imagine the advertising tagline: "Every book > > >tomorrow.") B&N also takes control of Amazon.com's largest > > >wholesaler-supplier. (In 1997, Ingram supplied 58% of Amazon.com's > > >books, although that percentage likely has dropped significantly > > >following Amazon.com's opening of a warehouse in Delaware and > > >generally diversifying its sources of supply.)
> > >
> > >The Wall Street Journal speculated today that the FTC and > > >Justice Department would approve the purchase because it is a > > >"vertical" purchase, i.e., not the purchase of a company in the > > >same part of the business. The ABA is campaigning for government > > >disapproval and reported that a Justice Department spokesperson > > >said that the purchase is "definitely something that would come > > >under review." But the Bertelsmann purchase of Random House > > >was approved earlier this year with no problem, and the > > >government has shown more concern with purchases that result > > >in a combination that dominates one segment of an industry.

> > >
> > >Blurred somewhat by the focus on online bookselling, however, > > >is what the purchase means for both the country's largest book > > >retailer and largest book wholesaler.
> > >
> > >At B&N, this purchase is the latest sign of how seriously the > > >company views the potential of online bookselling and shows > > >that B&N is once again reinventing itself.
> > >
> > >But reinvention this time is occurring with much more speed > > >and less control than in the early 1990s, when B&N gradually > > >went from being the biggest mall bookseller to the largest book > > >superstore operator. (That superstore strategy, incidentally, > > >seems to have lost steam. One measure: the pace of B&N > > >superstore openings has declined dramatically from 90-95 a > > >year to only 11 in the first half of the current fiscal year.) At > > >that time, B&N set the pace and stayed in the lead as a new > > >retail concept swept through the book world. This time, it was > > >blindsided by Amazon.com and appears to be desperately > > >playing catchup. (For its part, Borders, B&N's primast importantly, powerfully erotic.
> Would Eliz. Frost have it read "Rub her clit"? Does she think this really > reads as a command to fondle someone's soda-pop bottle? I think of the > time K. and I were interrogating the ways in which pop-culture sexual > scripts filtered into our own lives as if naturally--how K., an atheist, > would say "Oh, God" during sex--and so we actively decided to try and > eroticize previously "non-erotic" phrases (say, "I'm a little teapot") by > using them in a sexual context. Of course this works. Basically, one is > freshening, or re- inventing, sex, as one might say that GS freshens, or > re-invents, language. One is naming. While I'm not convinced that the > question of whether or not GS was politically "radical" enough in her > poetry is the place to start interrogating her form, it seems clear that > this naming, freshening, or whatever you want to call it, is radical at a > far less surface level than penning "I love you, you love me, > homosexuality!" It is also re-naming/inventing sex & lang. in a far less > narrow way: by this, I mean, NOT just for lesbians. Dudes can rub her > coke, too. She can rub a dude's coke, and then we have to re-guess what > coke might mean. Insofar as GS' work contains specifically lesbian > content (in places in TB, more obviously in "Miss Furr and Miss Skeene" > and "Lifting Belly"), it seems to me that she is embracing erotic > experience, period, and that "lesbian sex" is simply the context in which > she knows it. She's not trying to exalt lesbianism over other erotic > experiences, as so many lesbian writers seem hell-bent on doing: Stein is > in no way defensive about her sexual choices. She's not on the > defense, so she doesn't need to be on the offense. I expect fem.

> theorists make their mistakes about Stein because they find it impossible > to explain how she could be so utterly open, so "so what," about her > lesbianism in the early 1900s, when VERY few lesbian writers are "sho > what" about it even now. It IS almost impossible to believe. However, > that's how it was, I think. To the greatest possible extent, Stein seems > (in life, at least) to have simply expected others to rise above thinking > there was anything special about her being a dyke...this "aside" should > certainly pale, she'd think, to her being a "genius." Which she was > convinced she was, with relatively little public support to substantiate > her claim. A genius is not a woman, or a lesbian, or a man, or > what-have-you (Stein might think). It's another species. It should not > be disturbed with such trivial things as objections to its sex, sex life, > weight, etc. And, for the most part, it seems that she wasn't (by salon > visitors, etc.). This must, to some extent, have been due to her demeanor > (and her charisma). Everyone knows that you can get away with shoplifting > if you just walk in the store acting as though it were your right, and > nothing out of the ordinary, to pocket something. Note that there was a > large, tight-knit community of lesbians and bi women on the left bank in > Stein's time, salon-ing at Natalie Barney's place--and that Stein had > nothing to do with them. Why? Because they were not geniuses. Picasso, > Alfred Whitehead-- others Stein considered geniuses--were her chosen > company. Today's fem theorists gnash their teeth upon hearing that GS, > when asked what she thought of "The Woman Question," replied that it had > nothing to do with her. They are unable to understand how it had nothing > to do with her. In the name of fem & gay liberation, they would have > preferred that Stein confine herself to these issues in her writing. How > liberating.
> Gass and Ruddick are correct when they speak of Stein's private > jokes and punning, to the extent that these jokes do appear in her > writing. They do not constitute the main of it, though, and it doesn't > seem at all necessary to refer to them as a "private language of lesbian > experience." They're private jokes, period. Indulgences, and perhaps a > weakness in Stein's writing. There probably aren't many writers of any > era, gender, or sexuality that haven't stuck a private joke in here or > there in their writings. It's difficult to resist--and may be even more > so when you keep hearing that no one understands any of your work, anyway.
> I do not believe it is something that should be particularly focused on in > an exploration of Stein's work.

>
> Another Pro's Take: Charles Bernstein argues that, in TB, Stein > abandons the signifying function of language altogether, evoking instead > the sounds, the non-referentiality of words. CB says the desire to > "decode" GS reflects the reader's "misplaced urge to make sense of > poetry."
>
> My Reaction to Bernstein: GS obviously plays with sound in TB; one of > the more amusing "plays" appears in "ROASTBEEF," when the paragraph > beginning "Lovely snipe and tender turn" slips aggressively into rhymed > tetrameter--clearly a "referential" move, one that refers to capital-P > poetry. It seems to me that the desire to "decode" TB does indeed > reflect a misplaced urge of the reader--not the urge to make sense of > poetry, but the urge to make sense of, as seen above, a lesbian who > doesn't use lesbian catch-phrases in her work. I simply do not think it > possible to logically claim that Stein "abandons the signifying function > of language altogether." For one thing, she preserves syntax and uses a > fairly constant tone--one of a primer, sometimes, of someone making true, > indisputable statements. There's also a frequent use of negatives: "this > is not," "this does not make," "this is no," etc.--declaratives, "proofs," > etc. She might be playing with the idea that one can communicate/teach > through silly old words, she might be making fun of sense in the way > it's popularly conceived. But here again, it seems to me that she's > simply re- inventing/freshening an old idea of what making sense is. By > which I mean that she is making sense in TB, but in a new way, in a > way that forces the reader to question "sense" and making it in the same > way that K. and I were forced to question sexual scripts. To say that > TB does not make sense and is not representational is akin to saying > that a Cubist painting does not make sense and is not representational.
> Of course a Cubist painting is representational of reality. It's > representational of multiple realities/perspectives, though. It changes > the boundaries of what is meant by "reality." In this, Cubism seems to me > very purposeful, very scientific--an absolutely logical reponse of > painting to photography, which at that time was "taking over" traditional > representational painting. GS' work has been compared to Cubist > paintings, and some of the poems in TB read almost like word-painting > representations of their titles (for ex. "A METHOD OF A CLOAK," "WATER > RAINING," and the--menstrually-ruined?--petticoat of "A PETTICOAT").
> What's interesting is that, while Cubism follows naturally from > photography's "threat" to "directly representational" painting (naturally > in time/history), Stein's forms could really, as avant- garde as she > seemed then and does even today, have happened ages before Stein > "invented" them. Writing as a method of representing reality has always > occupied a challenged space, and poetry in particular had long been seen > as something "other" than the representation of reality, whether it be > seen as a "heightened" reality or whatever. "Real people don't speak in > rhymed meter," etc. It seems the most obvious thing in the world to say

> "Stein was before her time," but was she really? I can think of nothing > occurring in history at Stein's particular moment that made her form > "necessary" right then, as Cubism & abstract expressionism seemed > necessary to the survival of painting in a photographable world. It > could've happened a century, centuries earlier. I imagine Stein > understanding this and being absolutely at a loss as to why others > considered her work so "out there." I imagine her almost laughing because > she'd "lucked in" to her genius-ness: noticed what, "unbelievably!", no > one had noticed before. It could be said, bizarrely, that Stein's writing > is both primitive and avant-garde. She alternately telescopes and > microscopes, steps incredibly close to and back from objects. The TB > phrase "Object that is in wood," from the poem "A WAIST," reminds one of > an archaeologist reporting on an artifact whose use is unknown. Whatever > the "object that is in wood" is, no one who knows the name of said object > would refer to it as an "object that is in wood." An observation that > basic is (nearly) no longer available when one knows the name of the > object. Your generalized poet would take the name of the object and then > add description to the name, would build on the given. Here, Stein > builds backwards from the given. Somewhere Anne Sexton writes that a > poet is one who builds trees out of wood furniture. I do not think this > is often the case, but with Stein, with "object that is in wood" and its > equivalents, it is apt. I guess I'd say here GS works to uncover what the > "civilized, educated" psyche smooths over--what is no longer available > to the all-too-trained (and rushed) eye. Stein's dealing with the psyche, > here, as she does in more obvious ways Three Lives and The Making of > Americans (and there it is only more obvious because she's actively > questioning the motives/architecture of different personality > "types"--whereas here, it's any reader's, any observer's, psyche that is > being not questioned, but, in some way, restored: Stein is really > restoring ways of seeing that have been lost, as much as or more than she > is inventing new ways of seeing).
>
> Misc. Notes (not on Tender Buttons) Always controversial is Stein's > statement "There is no such thing as repetition," esp. since so many > readers read her as repetitive: in The Making of Americans, some of the > portraits., etc. (not TB). "Repetitive"-looking passages in Stein are > often permutations, not repetitions of a phrase (a compliment Stein always > cherished was someone's comparison of her work to Bach's fugues). But > there ARE certain sentences repeated verbatim, and more than once. What > were these to Stein, if not repetitions? How should we read them? Okay, > my thesis: it's not at all hard to argue that one can't repeat the same > sentence when speaking. It'll never sound exactly the same way twice--the > timbre of the voice might vary, a car might pass by, acts of speech are > inherently acts of performance, etc. I think Stein is insisting that > neither can one type the same sentence twice. Perhaps forcing us to > imagine the conditions under which each sentence was typed. There can be > no repetition because this sentence was typed at 10:41, and this sentence, > which contains exactly the same words, at 10:42. Hence Stein's concept of > the "continuous present." I think? If so, she was bumping against the > langue v. parole debate somewhat before the debate supposedly officially > started (at least as we read it today). Claiming the same primacy (and > indeterminacy?) for the written as for the spoken word. And for the read > word: I read the sentence in different conditions than you, so each > sentence is endlessly new. Hmm.

>
> Re: femtheory, lesbians, & gender identity: In addition to saying that the > "woman question" didn't concern her, Stein referred to herself as > "husband" and Alice as "wife" (Stein & Picasso in one room discussing art, > their wives dicussing hats and perfume in the other room). It would be > wrong, however, to label theirs a butch-femme relationship. Stein was no > butch. There were famous butches in Paris at the time: Radclyffe Hall, > Lady Una Trowbridge, etc., as well as famous femmes: Natalie Barney, etc.
> These butches dressed the part--hats, trousers, ties, short slicked- back > hair. Stein wore skirts, not pants, and only cut her hair to > Caesar-length quite late in life. It would be more accurate to view > theirs as a male-female relationship than a butch-femme one...that is, > more accurate to see Stein as "transgendered" than as a lesbian. The > woman question did not concern her because she was not a woman. This may > be hard to grasp, and it's hard to communicate. But butch-femme > relationships are highly coded ones, and dress is an essential--perhaps > THE essential--marker of them. And when I say "transgendered," I don't > necessarily mean that Stein thought of herself as a man. I think she > thought of herself as a Stein (or a genius)--somehow outside of gender.
> She seems to have dressed in whatever she found comfortable, rather than > making the very active & time-consuming decisions a butch must in putting > together a coded appearance.
> Similarly, in "Patriarchal Poetry," where Stein denounces
> "Patriarchal Poetry," I think it's a definite mistake to read this as a > denouncement of poetry by men. Huge! Some fem-lesbs latch onto this one > poem as "proof" that Stein was politically conscious and cared about them.

> But by "patriarchal poetry," I believe Stein means "establishment poetry," > or canonical verse. Not all men write patriarchal poetry, and some women > do. There is no call for a "matriarchal" poetry, and remember that Stein > was buying non-establishment paintings by men before anyone else-- while > everyone else was defacing them at painting exhibitions. It would be the > same "patriarchy" keeping these male painters from being appreciated that > kept Stein's work from being appreciated...

↑ Index

353. Rachel Levitsky
Re: oh and one more thing
Sun 9 Dec 2012

Being that I am into the incorrectness of identity, I am collecting names and emails of writers who consider themselves queer. Please forward if you are interested in being collected by me.

Rachel Levitsky

↑ Index

354. tracy s. ruggles
Re: Ingram and B&N (was: 2 of per diem)
Wed 9 Dec 1998

On Tuesday/8.December.1998 2.23.31pm, J Kuszai wrote:
>
[...]
>
> on another BOOKSALES oriented front,
> did anyone else hear the news that BARNES & NOBLE has purchased > INGRAM DISTRIBUTION?
>
> I thought Ingram was long gone already....any info here would be greatly > appreciated.

Here are some news articles:

http://www.seattletimes.com/news/business/html98/altamaz_110698.html http://www.sfwa.org/news/bni.htm
http://www.ingram.com/press_release.htm
http://www.bkstore.com/images/home_page/110698.html

↑ Index

355. Roger Day
Re: Erasing
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Interesting points. I have spent a fair section of my life not erasing, but recovering. I currently help support a system that deliberately keeps all the changes and every document submitted to the aegis of this system can be viewed at a particularly point in it's change history. In addition to this, there can be more than one current version of the document: the development tree can be split into trunk and branch. Nothing ever gets erased, although there is an illusion of erasure. The way the system does this is for the tip to be the latest copy, and the changes required to take it back to it's original state are kept on a version basis. And disk-space isn't at a premium in these matters.

Indeed, the whole system of changes has been developed to a high ceremony where the requests (for changes), the changes, the source and the tasks (to do the changes) are managed.

I would also note that the erasure discussed here reminds me of space management on a computer's hard-disk: go and delete a file, and it disappears from your folder. It hasn't gone - most systems flag the disk space used by the file for further usage rather than erasing the file (some systems actually write nonsense in it's stead as a kind of track-covering (another erasure)). You can get systems which resurrect these "lost" files - although obviously, this is sometimes partial. I'd like to think you could re-cover such deletions into some kind of textuality.

Douglas Coupland described people as "amnesia machines". I would go further. I think erasure is the easiest and is always. If things weren't erased/forgotten we'd have "eternal return" - and what a terrible burden that would be. The best we can hope is that fragments and distortions remain.

Roger

↑ Index

356. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher half-rant, and a question...
Wed 9 Dec 1998

suffering from severe vertigo at the moment, rushing from one tube to another, trying to follow the impeachment hearings on tv and the one here on poetix... i feel for henry g's plight, but must observe that what charles sez is no less true: that many folks have unsubbed from poetix for all sortsa reasons (incl. my wife/partner kass, above "from" line), and that nary a public tear has been shed when this has happened (and if it's happened in silence, we all know why---or should)... whatever else, however much i believe that charles should operate on a strictly frontchan basis---and contra henry (and kent---sorry guys)---i yet do not attribute evil ideological motives to charles, and believe that to do so is, well, just plain unfair, maybe even ungrateful...

this list is now enjoying (?) it's fifth anniversary as a public-private list---it began back in december of 93, if i recall correctly, at the end of a semester when it was used as a list for charles's grad course... and having been here 'from the beginning,' i think it's been an amazingly productive forum, and feel, with alan, that it's likewise amazing that our recent problems have taken this long to e-merge... moreover, this is itself a clear sign of the even-handedness with which charles has run this list (even allowing that recent allegations are in any sense true)... anyone who doubts this ought to have a good long look at those first coupla of (sometimes contentious) years...

to pick up on something i said, in jest, earlier, and as i just backchanned some-one (so nice to work out my thinking elsewhere for a change!): the whole thing reminds me of the anarchist/fascist split in italy... and i guess i have to be one of the fascists, b/c there's only two groups [cough], and the anarchists have clearly proclaimed their loyalties as such... and as to the "insult poetry" thread, which has taken such scholarly directions of late (thank the lord), but which in some sense precipitated our recent melt-down: even setting aside the fact that (as i've said before), the list is not merely performative; and even imagining an actual insult thread in which folks (mostly men, no doubt) exchanged insulting/agonistic barbs in order to attain, uhm, enlightenment: are any of you really suggesting, really, that this is how you wish to use your time?... well if so, ok (and btw, just to be clear: i hear the kent/eliza/david b/george b thread in somewhat different terms---no real insults there, far as i can tell)...

but i wouldn't be the first to observe that anyone tossing insults, even in such obviously modulated terms ("for fun"), is likely to be outclassed when it comes to same by the most unschooled of the blue-collar workers i grew up around, and sometimes worked with... nothing against said blue-collar workers, mind you, but just so's we're all on the same page, that y'all are aware i'm extremely good at spotting even the glimmer of a silver spoon up someone's ass...

hell, it's too bad we're not celebrating the fucking list right now---raising w/o ire, perhaps by way of a "review," what reservations we may have---rather than picking to pieces the person who's primarily responsible for its existence in the first place...

---

anyway, yes, i DO have a question, and would greatly appreciate any backchan help: i'm trying and have been unsuccessful at tracking down a citation for valery's "all theory is autobiography" (or something to this effect)... can anyone help me out here?... sorry to have to post the list for something this straightforward, but for some reason it's eluding me... probably owing in part to my vertigo, above...

many thanx... and apologies for the delete-able prologue...

best,

joe

↑ Index

357. shemurph
The Big R - Spencer Selby
Wed 9 Dec 1998

I highly, admiringly recommend Spencer Selby's new book from Angle Press - The Big R. This is an exceptionally wonderful work that you won't regret having and reading and re-reading. I've always liked Spencer's work. This particular example of it is more stunning than ever. Read to find out why. Buy it and savor!

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

358. ken|n|ing
Big Allis
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Seems as though I had this information at one time or another, but I can't seem to find it now. Has anyone got contact, subscription, and contents information for the magazine, Big Allis? By "contents" I mean a partial list of contributors to the latest number. It might be helpful to others to post your reply to the list as a whole . . . at least, in the flurry of reconsidering the role of this list in building a community around poetics, or of poetics, it remains my belief that publication announcements are central. Patrick F. Durgin
P.S. Speaking of which, although it's a vast job, the epc appears to be lagging a bit in keeping the print-mag listings up to date. It might be time for the sort of list Juliana Spahr suggested the other day, which would be limited to such announcements / listings.

|
|
k e n n i n g```````````````|```````````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

359. James Brook
correspondance avec guy debord
Wed 9 Dec 1998

The following is the Jeff Martos' own announcement for his recently published--and soon to be suppressed, perhaps--book of correspondence with Guy Debord.

- - - -

JUST PUBLISHED: CORRESPONDANCE AVEC GUY DEBORD
by Jean-Francois Martos

One volume 12.5cm x 21.5 of 320 pages.
ISBN:2-903557-03-9

Price: 140FF (French Francs) + postage

Publisher: Le fin mot de l'Histoire,
BP 274,75866 Paris Cedex 18, France

Please send your request with a check or a postal money order for 165 French Francs to the order of "Le fin mot de l'Histoire".

or write or phone:

[redacted]
Telephone: (33-1)42.59.97.45

A trial to seize the book is imminent, we cannot certify that it will be available in the third millenium.

==========

↑ Index

360. Mark Prejsnar
My final List polemic
Wed 9 Dec 1998

On Wed, 9 Dec 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> suffering from severe vertigo at the moment, rushing from one tube to another, trying to follow the impeachment hearings on tv and the one here on poetix... i feel for henry g's plight, but must observe that what charles sez is no less true: that many folks have unsubbed from poetix for all sortsa reasons (incl. my wife/partner kass, above "from" line), and that nary a public tear has been shed when this has happened (and if it's > happened in silence, we all know why---or should)... whatever else, however much i believe that charles should operate on a strictly frontchan basis---and contra henry (and kent---sorry guys)---i yet do not attribute evil ideological motives to charles, and believe that to do so is, well, just plain unfair, maybe even ungrateful...

I believe that the above is true, and apt, and yay to Joe for saying it. There have been far more expressions of support for Henry than for the significant number of people who have left before him (because like Henry they felt stifled). A number of them have posted...And i must say two who in recent memory have also like Henry left in a rage, are FAR more important to me as poets and positive presences on the poetry scene than he is: Tom Beckett and Juliana Spahr.

Now i have been looking back at JS's post of a couple of days ago; i believe it would be more constructive to discuss her accusations toward the List, than Henry's. Is it really a place that is "only friendly to white men"? As a white man, it's a little hard for me to contradict that. (Nor do i want to contradict it: i hope all of us will examine it...)

I can't think of a poet of greater promise and accomplishment on the scene right now, than JS. And her highly political and challenging work has been very valuble to me. That she should make so sharp a critique, and leave the List, seems to me the real important issue of this recent tumultuous period.

Anyway, to wrap up, i also agree with Joe and others that Charles B. has done a very good job. Is doing a good job. As someone posted in the last couple of days, the listowner/moderator on any listserv does a huge amount of work and donates significant resources and time and nerves and energy and vulnerability. They do this because they cared enuff to do it. They have and must have the space to moderate.. (Unless they act in a strikingly arrogant and insulting way; and contrary to the gouldites I believe that is not the case here.)

I believe that Kent (for whom i have lotsa liking and respect), and others who've taken up the cudgel on behalf of Henry, are using a model that assumes this is a radical democracy, here on the List. Like a collective. It is not that. It cannot be that. As a socialist i want to establish a radical democracy without private ownership of capital in society at large; and i want there to be community wherever we can meaningfully build community. But we cannot declare a listserv a community any more than we can declare that all the little poetry magazines by right should belong to their readers and contributors, and prnounce that they are now collectives and communities, and have been liberated from their editors.

A few people are providing resources that the rest of us are benefitting from; if all of us could help CB shoulder the burden of running this thing, then it could be a collective and people could vote, etc. In the meantime, the list managers have to take the heat for things that happen here. No one can change that. So they also have ultimate say over what happens here--no one can change that either, any more than on any other moderated listserv.

in struggle,
mark p.

↑ Index

361. charssmith
MLA ?
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Is the book exhibit hall at the MLA accessible to the academically unencumbered?

charles

↑ Index

362. Emily Lloyd
Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Rachel writes: <<<I'm going off here but I think what's shocking is that Stein (and this goes back to Damon) had the chutzpah to say what she thought of herself and what allowed her to indulge in the experiment of writing. It's more palpable and gentile in these parts to say "I'm nobody! Who are you?">>>

Darn tootin'. I like Camille Paglia, Nietzsche, and Dennis Rodman in some cases more for their nearly refreshing chutzpah than their work. Of course, they've made said chutzpah an issue, while Stein seems to have been more graceful. Or more interested in making "more important" things her issues.

I learned much from Damon's essay on "Yet Dish," too, and hear those same echoes.

Rachel also writes:
<<I mean don't you think the desexualization of men is meaningful to her accomplishment?>>
and <<"Lesbian" per say may not be an aestetic category but social context--as separate as she was from it--could allow Stein to have a 'so what' attitude and yet not be rendered invisible by denial.>>

That first one's a really tough question. There was a time when I would've said "of course" and assumed those who didn't were either woman/or homo phobic.

Now I want to be slower to say yes. The desexualization of men probably helped her to see men as her own brother singulars--to not get bogged in the "I'm just a girl, what does my stuff matter?" thing or the "I must have male approval of my writing" thing. And many sexy Stein poems (esp.the "banter between GS and ABT" one) mightn't have turned out the same way were she not desexualizing men. Though possibly she would've written just as sexy "heterosexual poems". I guess I want to say that I don't think desexualizing men is in any way connected with escaping either of the two bog-things I've just mentioned. Lesbians, for the most part, are still seen as women and "women"--of whatever sexuality--for the most part, are still going to be "trained" to consider male approval important, and witness enough to cause the "I'm just a girl, what does my stuff matter?" to happen. H.D., for a time, an admittedly young time, was a pretty pathetic queer re:these--and who wouldn't have been? (and yet, Loy wasn't too pathetic a heterosexual)

These days it might be even more amazing to meet a lesbian writer with the chutzpah to not need lesbian, rather than male, approval. Stein rarely seems to have required (I don't say wanted) the approval of readers of any gender or sexuality. Except maybe Alice. And on bad days Leo. I think of Stein less as having desexualized men and more as having degendered herself, at least in wondering which may have had more to do with her accomplishment. I think of Stein when I read Hejinian's (uh-oh, not her again) "No wonder there are no/ single notes, no unique gender" and think "bull." Who was it, Witting?, who made the claim "Lesbians are not women"? I disagree with whoever it was. There're all kinds of lesbians who would collapse without their male friends or male approval as others might collapse w/o same from females (and far rarer others who wouldn't collapse from lack of support from anyone). To say "Stein was not a woman"--in the sense that Witting/whoever meant "woman"-- wouldn't seem wholly unlikely to me. Somehow she slipped through--or chiseled & kicked, w/o making much noise, through--the cracks. Stein was a being.

Please don't get me wrong. I certainly think Stein's queerness affected her work. I just think it was a queerer queerness than lesbianism...in the "degenderate" sense, or in the queerness of having a skyrocket's measure of chutzpah & faith in one's own work.

I'm afraid on GS I can be a bit like someone standing on a st. corner kind of raving at everyone who walks by, yelling some obsessive "point", & not backing it up with passages from scripture, or "She Bowed to Her Brother," or any text. Someone with a big hunch on her shoulder. But I hope this had been in some way clarifying--?

incorrectly, collectable em

↑ Index

363. MJ Devaney
Re: MLA ?
Wed 9 Dec 1998

If you have a badge, you can get into the book exhibit, and anyone can get a badge (but you have to pay for it, alas (you have to pay for it if you are academically encumbered too)--I don't know what the registration fee is).

cheers, MJ

_____
MJ Devaney
Humanities Editor
University of Nebraska Press

At 01:24 PM 12/9/98 EST, you wrote:
>Is the book exhibit hall at the MLA accessible to the academically >unencumbered?
>
>charles

↑ Index

364. charssmith
Angle Press Announcement
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Posted for Brian Lucas (direct inquiries to the address below):

Angle Press announces the publication of the following books:

The Big R by Spencer Selby $10 (incl. postage) (perfectbound)

Jeweled Chrysalis by Patrick Monnin $3 (incl. postage) (chapbook)

also available is

The Trustees in Spite of Themselves by Brian Lucas $5 (incl. postage)

(this second edition published with pink clouds by Neko Buildings. Those interested may order from Angle Press a copy for Christmas friends).

All of these books are "divine and interesting" according to William Cloud, esquire and lover of tides. A pearl hatchery has been incubating these babies for a millenium--they all come with a bit of the author's processes intact!

make checks payable to: Brian Lucas

Angle
PO Box 220027
Brooklyn, NY 11222-0027

[redacted]

↑ Index

365. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

'Democracy is Merry' - Beuys will be Beuys

Wed 9 Dec 1998

WE FEEL IT IS OUR DUTY TO INFORM YOU THAT CHARLES BERNSTEIN HAS COMMITTED A GREAT SLANDER UPON THE MEMORY OF JOSEPH BEUYS!!

Through some cruel irony, Joan Retallack and Jackson MacLow will be reading December 11 at DIA Center for the Arts in New York City.

DIA is concurrently hosting an exhibit of the installations of the German artist Joseph Beuys. Beuys, of course, felt that he should make the time to build an artistic legacy that would be generous and inclusive.

Beuys felt a strong committment to teaching & as such felt it morally wrong to turn away anyone seeking to enter the dialogue about art.

On the first day of the winter semester of 1972 'Beuys wrote the names and addresses of the 125 candidates who had been rejected in August on the basis of their portfolio submissions; by doing so he confirmed their admission to his class. Beuys then demanded that all the rejected applicants be formally registered.'

"If 400 students want to study with me I'll stay here as long as they want."

Beuys felt that we had a 'restricted idea of culture which debases everything'.

"We reject now and in the future, as a wrongful infringement of academic freedom, any attempt to impose an admissions policy on our class. The same goes for any regulations regarding the number of students in our classes. (The Academy is free). And the same goes for any other regulations that infringe on this principle of freedom. It is thus possible for a teacher, if he is willing, to admit 142 additional students, although others - tenured teachers - feel themselves overburdened with six or so students. Questions of Academy capacity, shortage of space, shortage of service staff, shortage of teaching materials, shortage of teachers, have no bearing whatever on admissions regulations. Responsibility for such deficiencies, in relation to those involved and to the people as a whole, lies with the authorities concerned, with their officials, and ultimately with the party politicians who rule in disregard of the majority. An arbitrary limit on student numbers is a violation of basic rights and not a proper solution to the problem of capacity."

Such is the spirit of Beuys violated by the sentiments of those who control this list.

"The Academy is like a battleship under fire. We are in an emergency. I want to portray a sick system and to try, as far as possible, to work within it. The school has a reponsiblity to society. The concept of liberty plays an essential role here. I consider it my duty above all not to turn away students who want to enter my class. I shall not yield until the tanks draw up to the Academy!"

The Langpo's so typically want to usurp the thunder of someone like Joseph Beuys without taking the tiniest risks. Joseph Beuys should not be so dishonored.

The quote in my earlier post, "forked tongue?", is from Charles Bernstein's Writing and Method. He recommends among other things 'anger' in philosophical discourse. However, what's good enough for philosophy is obviously too much of a living idea for peauxetiquettes.

Finally, Beuys wrote: "The evolution of Western Thought, in philosphy, and of the resulting concept of science, especially what is called exact scientific thought, has been a quest to attain matter....[But] you only attain matter when you attain death...." That quote was just for me. ---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

366. Michael Magee
Re: My final List polemic
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Just a word in support of these words from Mark P:

"A few people are providing resources that the rest of us are benefitting from; if all of us could help CB shoulder the burden of running this thing, then it could be a collective and people could vote, etc. In the meantime, the list managers have to take the heat for things that happen here. No one can change that. So they also have ultimate say over what happens here--no one can change that either, any more than on any other moderated listserv."

and a clarification of what I said earlier (apologies if this seems self-indulgent but I feel like otherwise I might be misrepresented and I'm the nervous type when it comes to such things). Yes, in some ways this list clearly cannot be a radical democracy, but in other ways it can and is, and I don't think Charles's moderate restrictions preclude such democratic possibility - they only preclude anarchy which is quite different. In any event, I have no problem with moderate restrictions designed to ensure the most liberty for each listmember compatible with the liberty of all other members. My original worry was that Henry had actually been banned from the list which would have been a real drag.

But to set some guidelines for number of posts seems both inevitable and wise. So for what its worth, my sense of Henry's value to the list doesn't contradict, as far as I'm concerned, support for Charles who I think does a bang up job just keeping this mess up and running.

-m.

↑ Index

367. Gabriel Gudding
announcement: SUBMIT YOU DOG
Wed 9 Dec 1998

The e-zippy zingy-zine SUBMIT YOU DOG is now accepting submissions (of poetry only) and subscriptions for its January issue. December's issue featured

Miekal And
Mairead Byrne
John Barna
Tony Beeman
Julie Babcock
Guttapercha Bunsen
Andy Scott

& several anonymous submissions of erased texts

We have no editorial policy (we accept everything submitted to us) except that we order submissions alphabetically (though we even get that wrong sometimes since I just learned the alphabet myself ([and still count on my fingers]).

*ASCII format only. We send this out in one digest post. Each contributor gets three contributor's copies (we email it you three times).

Coming soon to a website near you.

Those interested, please email [redacted] with SUBMIT YOU DOG in the subject line.

yrs sincerely, persona non gaga

↑ Index

368. Emily Lloyd correction, spell-check, self-check
Wed 9 Dec 1998

I wrote: <<The desexualization of men probably helped her [Stein] to see men as her own brother singulars--to not get bogged in the "I'm just a girl, what does my stuff matter?" thing or the "I must have male approval of my writing" thing.And many sexy Stein poems (esp.the "banter between GS and ABT" one) mightn't have turned out the same way were she not desexualizing men. Though possibly she would've written just as sexy "heterosexual poems". I guess I want to say that I don't think desexualizing men is in any way connected with escaping either of the two bog-things I've just mentioned.>>

2 things I want to edit-for-the-record there: I meant "banter between GS and ABT ones, in the plural. And it looks pretty ridiculous to have writtem "The desexualization etc. probably helped her to not get bogged etc." and a few lines later "I don't think desexualization is in any way connected with escaping the bogs."

I meant necessarily connected--more importantly, to me, is that it's the latter statement I meant and mean to put forth. The earlier was a forgot-to-edit-it-out first-thought-process kind of thing.

embarrassedly,
em

↑ Index

369. schuchat
Re: three questions
Wed 9 Dec 1998

---

to answer your first question,

Ci Xi was the Empress Dowager of China. She is generally considered to have ruled China from the 1870s through till her death, in the first decade of 20th century. She is accused of having wasted money which was supposed to be spent on the construction of a navy on adornments to her pleasure garden at the summer palace, thus, the marble steamboat. The traditional Confucian view is that when women rule the state there is disaster, so in this view (which the Communists have partially bought into, being good patriotic Chinese) it was her reactionary, obscurantist, corrupt, etc, rule that the western powers were able to defeat, control, humiliate, etc, China. otherwise, the Brits would never have won the opium war, there would have been no foreign concessions, the boxers would have succeeded in expelling all foreigners from China, etc, etc. journalist Sterling Seagraves has a book (DRAGON LADY) which attempts to debunk some of these stereotypes about Ci Xi but of course being mere journalism it has problems of its own.

the marble steamboat is quite pleasant. it doesn't actually float, and is adjacent to the shore, so it lacks that feeling of being on the open waters, but it is a delightful monument and much better than the real fleet that the money was actually spent on (by Li Hongchang) and which the Japanese sank in 1895.

↑ Index

370. Hoa Nguyen
Frank O'Hara, Skanky Possum
Wed 9 Dec 1998

--(please forgive cross postings)--

Hello everyone:

I am currently taking orders for:

A new pamphlet sized book(like the old Black Sparrow books), _What's Up with Modern Art_, selected short reviews and other art writings by Frank O'Hara, edited by Bill Berkson. A charming unpublished photo of FOH graces the back. The collection takes its name after a wonderful article, reprinted here, subtitled "Kids Quiz A Critic" from _Ingenue_, a glossy magazine "for sophisticated teens", (1964). From Mike and Dale's Press. Only $5 (US)dollars.

As some may know, I was to edit the fall issue of _Mike and Dale's Younger Poets_ under the title _Mike and Dale and Hoa's Younger Poets_. Mike has since gone on to other projects; Dale & I are to continue publishing a quarterly poetry magazine in the same format and similar vein. To recognize the shift in editorship, we are naming the new venture _Skanky Possum_ after the venerable critter that skanks around our neighborhood. _Skanky Possum #1_ includes poets such as Eileen Myles, Linh Dinh, Rachel Loden, Sotere Torregian, Anselm Berrigan, Carl Thayler and Alice Notely, as well as an exerpt from a memoir of Philip Whalen by Tensho Schneider and classic-movie reviews by Bill Berkson. _Skanky Possum_ features hand painted covers. From Skanky Possum Press. Only $5 (US) dollars.

To order either, please indicate your order (title, # of copies) and send a check made payable to me (Hoa Nguyen) to:

2925 Higgins Street
Austin, TX 78722

Please forward this announcement to anyone who may be interested. Thanks for your support.

Love, Hoa

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

371. Dale Smith
The Hat
Wed 9 Dec 1998

If you haven't already, check out The Hat, edited by Jordan Davis and Chris Edgar. The quality of writing varies, but it is especially interesting to read next to the recent Moving Borders Anthology.

The writing in The Hat is motivated by various complex yankee anxieties of gender, race and 'consciousness,' with language as the mediating force. J. Spahr's piece examines gender-specific pronouns that are used to construct a kind of "love" poem to some equally distant being bound in the process of internal re-imagination (or is it re-ordering?). Her lines are expressed according to syllogistic logic, direct but complicated by other syntactic "movements" of repetition and rhetorical positions.

"So this," she writes, "is what is meant by the 'seeking that takes place between prelanguaged and languaged states, before and behind the 'I.'"

And then a few lines later:

"Or I or he or she am or is trying missing or mixing things up.
Thanks for the directions."

Juliana's insistent position that we examine and articulate the complexity of gender and human construction is valiant, moreso since her critique has tightend here, for me, becoming more direct and less hesitant. Although firmly entrenched in the socio-cultural, her energy appears to come from another place entirely, but other readers can determine that for themselves.

With 20 pages, Kimberly Lyons receives the most space in this issue. The poems are sharp, angular, focused on naturally occuring phenomena. Objects lie in juxtapositions that create imaginative possibilities. Some might find only colors and shades here; others only sentimental attachments. But the phrasing and rhythm, the space around the lines-- these things create a radiation of event that swells up from within the poem:

Trees fill
the window and light
is thin, holds its dust.

On the bar
last night I saw Three martinis,

trembling triangles.
Nancy said
this is the first time
I've felt happy.
big white trucks.
I guess everybody goes there
at least once.

The line breaks and injambment play with meaning. There's a strangeness here that resists explanation. There's a sense of revelation without opaque self-consciousness. You can see why the editors chose so many pieces from her.

Janice Lowe address race directly in her poem, "The Summervilles of Pickens County." She resists theorizing the politics of racial encounter by revealing experience that lives "in the mouth." Although her use of the little 'i' is annoying, the coloquial articulation of this poem builds a powerful address.

i tell the black ones calling me red
    you wanna be red like me nigger
the white ones
    you redder than me you gotdam cracker
all this is turning me
into a kind of peckerwood nigger
i don't like for people to be black and greasy at the same time
i prefer yellow women for lovemaking some have said
all my children have lightskinned mothers
of course i'm a race man

Witness the velocity of those lines, the build-up and speed. Like many of the pieces in this collection, the concerns of the social are delivered in a language that feels threaded to other agencies of expression. This only complicates and increases the emotional trajectories aimed against the dominate regimes of the social.

Anyhow, it's a magazine worth checking out. Poems by Catherine Barnett, Brenda Coultas, Tonya Foster, Greta Goetz, Lisa Jarnot, Carol Mirakove, Ange Mlinko, Cynthia Nelson, Hoa Nguyen, Alice Notley and Prageeta Sharma are also included.

Contact Jordan if you're interested. The Hat is cool.

Dale

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

372. Emily Lloyd
Re: erasure/frags
Wed 9 Dec 1998

One more post, then I'll stop being such a space glutton.

In a course once, while we were discussing the work of a poet who wrote in fragments, somebody said, "But once we get the whole fragment thing, why do we need any more poems written in fragments? I mean, I get it already." Basically a riff on Williams' "All sonnets say the same thing," replacing "sonnets" with "fragments," and of course I countered with "Why do we need any more sonnets?" etc. I couldn't decide whether the person was playing devil's advocate or just being kind of stupid.

I'm ready for folks to be similarly indecisive about me: when does the proliferation of "erasurey" work at this point in time go from being the (only? most?) possible, logical, ethical response to the past half-century to being, well, maybe, kind of trendy? Ever? ("Instant Ethics! Just add white space!" ...and when did the term "stubble fields" go from being a term one might but probably needn't ever use to the requisite included term in all poems published in Poetry?)

On another tack--what, if any, is the relationship between "the poetry of erasure" (not bad lyrics for a europop group) and, also specific to our last (max.?) 50 yrs or so, the poetry of "breaking one's silence" (if one's in any group viewed as or treated as a minority)? Can one "break one's silence" w/ an erasure? I think so! How about that! Interesting.

Hilton brought up Paul Auster. I've only read The New York Trilogy, in which characters become the obsessive, thorough, unwitting agents of their own erasure. In doggedly trying to fill some gap or void--some previous erasure?--they erase themselves. This translates with more slippery consequences, I think, than those poems which "ethically" describe/reflect an erasureful or fragmented world in an erasureful or fragmented way. For one, it implicates the writer/maker-of-things in the fall/corruption/breakage; the writer is inescapably held responsible, too...the "helplessness" or "impossibility" of the writer to honestly write in anything but fragments &/or erasures seems, somehow, more genuine & horrifying to me here--where those who are hell-bent on helping (read: writing in whitespaceless sentences) and "equipped," they think, to do so, end up helpless, too...and this process is recorded/enacted.

em

↑ Index

373. dbkk
L. Shaw talks F. O'Hara in SF
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Small Press Tafffic presents

"Frank O'Hara and Coterie"
a talk by Lytle Shaw

Friday, December 11, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, Room 11
$5

Shaw's work on Frank O'Hara examines his career as a way to recast debates about the politics of reference and community within 1950s and early 60s American poetry and art. This talk will begin with what has been the most common problem for readers of O'Hara-the charge that, because his poems prominently feature obscure proper names, he is merely a coterie poet. By unpacking the social and linguistic implications of O'Hara's systems of poetic reference, Shaw situates O'Hara's practice of coterie writing 1) against a tradition of modern poetry and poetry criticism for which proper names should reference canonical sites of knowledge or structures of myth and 2) beyond familiar oppositions between particularity and universality. Don't worry, he'll explain!

Lytle Shaw is a poet and scholar, author of many critical publications on contemporary poetry and theory. His own poetry has appeared in many journals including Lyric&, Non, Log, Idiom, Explosive, and Mirage #4/Period[ical], and in three forthcoming books. With Emilie Clark he edits the journal of pre-poetics, Shark.

↑ Index

374. michael corbin
Re: Impeach or Censure (Was: Concerns)
Wed 9 Dec 1998

Charles Bernstein wrote:

> I hope all of you will understand that my time
>
> for this project has simply run out.

Rachel Blau DuPlessis wrote:

> There is (for me) no sense of textuality
> as a value in a vacuum;

Subject: why I am not a reader of the poetics list
From:
juliana spahr <[redacted]>

> I can't read poetics list anymore. I have a shortage of time in my life.

Tick Tock. (Out of Time)

Cumberland Gap. Donner Pass.

"Ever since sentences started to circulate in brains devoted to reflection, an effort at total identification has been made, because with the aid of a coupla each sentence ties one thing to another; all things would be visibly connected if one could discover at a single glance and in its totality the tracings of an Ariadne's thread leading thought into its own labyrinth".

the list is dead/long live

list/list

mc

<HTML>

<P>Charles Bernstein wrote:

<P>> I hope all of you will understand that my time
<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>for this project has simply run out.</BLOCKQUOTE>

Rachel Blau DuPlessis wrote:
<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>There is (for me) no sense of textuality as a value in a vacuum; </BLOCKQUOTE> Subject: why
I am not a reader of the poetics list

From:

          juliana spahr
<[redacted]>

<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>
<PRE>I can't read poetics list anymore. I have a shortage of time in my life.</PRE>

</BLOCKQUOTE>

<P>Tick Tock. (Out of Time)

<P>Cumberland Gap. Donner Pass.

<P>"Ever since sentences started to circulate in brains devoted to reflection, an effort at total identification has been made, because with the aid of a coupla each sentence ties one thing to another; all things would be visibly connected if one could discover at a single glance and in its totality the tracings of an Ariadne's thread leading thought into its own labyrinth".

<P>the list is dead/long live

<P>list/list

<P>mc</HTML>

----------54DCC90196B3EFF7B435EF7E--

↑ Index

375. Amy King
Re: Erasing and the Ghost of Listserv Present
Thu 10 Dec 1998

-----Original Message-----
From: Mark Prejsnar <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Tuesday, December 08, 1998 5:02 PM
Subject: under and over erasure > *has a long work in which he used Duchamp's random generated forms, called "stoppages," to erase sections of prose from a number of books on Duchamp's life and work....These are further worked, and the result is a sequence of poems shaped and formed by useing exclusion or erasure as the primary poetic technique, in a sense.*

This version of erasure is the closest I've read so far about the erasing that seems to have struck much pop culture as of late: to take a set of conditions and remove some element in order to define the reconfigured result.

The X-Men at Marvel are recently finding what it means to live as if Wolverine never was made; One of Buffy's friends wished the Slayer had never come to town on this week's episode; this weekend Xena will learn what the world would be like if she had never quested for power but stayed in her little village for life.

Soon, Scrooge
will be popping up to be erased for seasonal festivities.

I think this cultural obsession stems from more than just wanting to know how much we'll be missed. Of course, the implications abound, but specifically, and I have not thought about this thoroughly yet, but this erasing seems to be about measuring "power" by erasing a presence to reveal the places that presence affected. The gaps get filled in, but by what? The wrench in the monkey is that we all know that someone was here, now she's gone but let's pretend she never was. Buffy's writers did a poor job because she still popped up in the town she wasn't supposed to ever come to. She filled in her own gaps.

But I am far more interested in this kind of erasing as a technique I have never consciously tried within poetry, aside from editing out to avoid being expository in my work. I've heard about poets writing about a topic without using words that define or reveal that topic but what about the "What if it was here and I've removed it" practices?
Does anyone know of work that plays with those implications, not as random word erasing, or am I simply being too abstract/oblique here?

Henry has not gone; he has become the ghost of Listserv Present.

↑ Index

376. ike/clare
Re: ErAuster
Thu 10 Dec 1998

---

i've read _The Invention of Solitude_ and _Leviathian_ and none of his poetry.
Both of these works, the former a meditation on his father and a strange altered family photo, the latter about a man(1) who retraces how a man(2) who has blown himself up has affected this man's (1,3) (love) life, are mighty erasurly. maybe my fortune cookie was right: Absence makes the heart grow fonder.

ike

↑ Index

377. A. Jenn Sondheim
Erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

I don't honestly see HG as the ghost here, any more than others come and gone. Lists change all the time; the oddity is that Poetics changed so little for so long. Populations pass through them. There are others who have left here out of chagrin, and I've had to go off from time to time as a result of overflowing mailboxes.

Meanwhile, one might look at instances of _the disappearing woman,_ which form a matr/ix covering a great deal of ground (metaphysical and other- wise). Not only Lilith as an obvious case (the doubled Eve creation in B'rashit), but also Melies' use of _the sawed woman_ or _disappearances_ of women by magicians. From there through Patty Hearst, so much narrative depends on this disappearance and suturing (and think of Irigaray's in- stance of the woman as a _transitive function_ or other between the same/ same relations among men - not to mention functions of 'wife-swapping' (never called 'husband-swapping'), etc.).

With Heidegger, Derrida, with Freud's absent answer to 'what does woman want,' with Lacan's lack, and so forth (think again of the absence of pubic hair on all those classical statues), it is the woman/womyn, that is turned-aside, as if in embarrassment. In erasure, there is this political context, then, political economy. It's a deeper/other level than that of erasing a drawing or a text or obscuring part of a work, which in fact might even be said to operate precisely as suture, making the world safe for absence. (To say this is not to make it so, of course - I am only pointing out that erasure doesn't necessarily carry liberation, but in fact can be politically problematic. Randomly erasing a text is one thing; randomly erasing people, say in Stalinist Russia, is another. In any case erasure is loaded, is overdetermined in so many ways.)

Alan

↑ Index

378. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: erasure/frags
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Emily,

Thank you for your wonderful posts [after reading them once, I've had to save them for later savoring]. Anent erasure, two things: first, the first section from Anselm Hollo's "four stills from _the poet_ / for Tom Raworth" [in _Maya_], for me a locus classicus re erasure:

_the poet, drunk, is seen composing a poem to the revolutionaries of the world._

it is to be a long poem.

while working on page 9 he realizes that he is stone cold sober:
he stops, goes back,
reads what he has written starts crossing out words -- lines -- sections -- whole pages.

one line remains,
on page five. it says:

the heroes, their mouths full of it is not a very good line. maybe he only forgot to cross it out.

we cannot ask him.
he has fallen asleep.

[<<27 years ago, I performed -- no doubt in much the same state -- a similar service for the esteemed Finn; I hope he has forgiven me>>]

Second: my sonnetoidal "Isotope" poems, which I began to write in August, 1997 [based on anagrams of 4x4 wordsquares I construct] result from a kind of erasure of all but 14 of the possible combinations of the 16 letters in each wordsquare which form lines of words. In each case, I work with a complete and finite set of such lines [usually several thousand]. In the "Isotopes," though, one can restore all the erased elements by taking any of the remaining lines and running it through an anagram generator -- so, in a sense, they constitute a ratour sans ratour, a presence signalling or floating upon a determinate absence.

I hadn't thought of them in this way until I'd begun to 'wind up the golden ball' of this erasure thread, but it helps me to scope out [theodolize] the 4x4iverse. Muchas gracias, amiga.

Dan

Emily Lloyd wrote:
>
> One more post, then I'll stop being such a space glutton.
>
> In a course once, while we were discussing the work of a poet who wrote in > fragments, somebody said, "But once we get the whole fragment thing, why > do we need any more poems written in fragments? I mean, I get it > already." Basically a riff on Williams' "All sonnets say the same thing," > replacing "sonnets" with "fragments," and of course I countered with "Why > do we need any more sonnets?" etc. I couldn't decide whether the person > was playing devil's advocate or just being kind of stupid.
>
> I'm ready for folks to be similarly indecisive about me: when does the > proliferation of "erasurey" work at this point in time go from being the > (only? most?) possible, logical, ethical response to the past half-century > to being, well, maybe, kind of trendy? Ever? ("Instant Ethics! Just add > white space!" ...and when did the term "stubble fields" go from being > a term one might but probably needn't ever use to the requisite included > term in all poems published in Poetry?)
>
> On another tack--what, if any, is the relationship between "the poetry of > erasure" (not bad lyrics for a europop group) and, also specific to our > last (max.?) 50 yrs or so, the poetry of "breaking one's silence" (if > one's in any group viewed as or treated as a minority)? Can one "break > one's silence" w/ an erasure? I think so! How about that! Interesting.
>
> Hilton brought up Paul Auster. I've only read The New York Trilogy, in > which characters become the obsessive, thorough, unwitting agents of their > own erasure. In doggedly trying to fill some gap or void--some previous > erasure?--they erase themselves. This translates with more slippery > consequences, I think, than those poems which "ethically" describe/reflect > an erasureful or fragmented world in an erasureful or fragmented way. For > one, it implicates the writer/maker-of-things in the > fall/corruption/breakage; the writer is inescapably held responsible, > too...the "helplessness" or "impossibility" of the writer to honestly > write in anything but fragments &/or erasures seems, somehow, more > genuine & horrifying to me here--where those who are hell-bent on helping > (read: writing in whitespaceless sentences) and "equipped," they think, to > do so, end up helpless, too...and this process is recorded/enacted.

>
> em

↑ Index

379. Leonard Brink

Announcement - Inscape #4

Thu 10 Dec 1998

INSCAPE 4 features 32 pages of poetry by:

Patrick Durgin
Brydie McPherson
Sheila E. Murphy
Laynie Browne
Jono Schneider
Dana Lomax
Alan Catlin
Gian Lombardo
Spencer Selby
Drew Milne
Yours Truly

it's printed on good paper and available from:

Instress
P.O. Box 3124
Saratoga, CA
95070 for $4

But Wait! That's not all. For the low, low price of just $10 you can receive this cute little magazine PLUS the following chapbooks of similar size:

Emblems by Martha Ronk
&
Next Song by Maxine Chernoff

Both contain very nice poems which are printed on 70 lb. linen-finish paper with translucent fly-leafs and semi-attractive covers -- fun to hold in your hands and read.

But Wait! That's not all. Whether you are new to the Instress series or already a subscriber, why not give the gift of chapbooks to a friend or loved one this holiday season for the super low price of just $9 for each additional set!

No friends? No loved ones to share the holiday spirit with? Why not support the arts, spread holiday cheer, AND make a new friend by sending a check to me, Leonard Brink.

↑ Index

380. Tom Orange

STOP IMPEACHMENT! Free call to Congress. (fwd)

Thu 10 Dec 1998

STOP IMPEACHMENT! Call the Capitol Switchboard for FREE:

1-877-TO-MOVEON ([redacted])
December 9, 10, 11
Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday
==========

The House leadership is rushing to IMPEACH the President before the newly elected Congress is sworn in, on a purely partisan vote. THE VOTE WILL BE VERY CLOSE. If they succeed, the nation will be paralyzed for months as the President is put on trial in the Senate.

You can prevent this.

(1) CALL 1-877-TO-MOVEON ([redacted]) to be connected to your representative for FREE
(2) Alert your friends and colleagues by forwarding this message
(3) Get others to call 1-877-TO-MOVEON this week -- talk to them personally
(4) Click on http://www.moveon.org/actionplus.htm so we can count your call and report totals to the press.

For just three days, December 9th through December 11th, we have arranged for FREE long distance calls direct to Capitol Hill. We need to make Congress understand the nation's passionate opposition to this cynical and destructive use of the impeachment process. Everyone must call. Call toll free 1-877-TO-MOVEON ([redacted]) to reach the Capitol Hill switchboard and ask for your representative. If you get a busy signal, try again or use the direct numbers given above. The direct D.C. number is better for lobbying, but will cost a few dimes.

Tell your friends and colleagues about 1-877-TO-MOVEON. They can just give the operator their zip code to be transferred to their Member of Congress. It's easy and FREE.

Once you reach your representative's office, let the staff member know (1) that you are a constituent (by giving your name and city) (2) that you are opposed to impeachment, (3) and that you expect Congress to immediately "MOVE ON" to important issues. Express your own personal concerns and ask for a response from your representative.

Click on http://www.moveon.org/actionplus.htm to do even more. We've got to act now.

Free calls are provided courtesy of Working Assets Long Distance (http://www.wald.com). The 1-877-TO-MOVEON action line will be active from December 9 to December 11, 1998 only. You can call the congressional switch-board at any time directly at [redacted].

↑ Index

381. Rachel Levitsky

Re: Book Announcement: The Qualms of Catullus & K-mart

Mon 10 Dec 2012

I love this book. I really love this book.

Try it. You might love this book too.

↑ Index

382. Jim Bennett

Re: Erasing

Thu 10 Dec 1998

Hi all I thing there are two possible strands at work in this erasure discussion (well there are others , but two that I want to address), The first is erasure to make a poem more permeable, transparent in parts which invite the reader to fill in (or fall in) and it is true that some poems are accessible because of what has been omitted, or erased, but left visible below the text. The second is the idea of compression which I think is different and often creates an impermeable wall forcing the reader to accept the writers images. In our own minds erasure is non selective, but I am always intrigued at the quotes I remember, I think seamlessly only to find words missing or transposed.

I am very interested in accessibility in writing and it is the transparent quality of language used which creates the eye kick and the immediacy quotient, but that is selected through choice, and selection implies erasure. And how much can be taken away before meaninglessness takes over or does it ever? Perhaps the spacial quality of words means that there will always be a gestalt forced on the reader.

Jim

erasure permeable transparent accessible visible compression impermeable images seamlessly transposed

accessibility transparent
quality of language immediacy
erasure
meaninglessness

gestalt

↑ Index

383. Daniel Carter
Re: items eye polite dangers and other softnesses
Thu 10 Dec 1998

> hey Daniel. I like your manifesto.
>
> Randy

why thank you very much/(for the inkcouragement), Randy.

Daniel

↑ Index

384. Daniel Carter
Torque Inly failed the skies
Thu 10 Dec 1998

distant(ly) his sway(ing) frame of flame(s) Torque Inly veiled the skies that tangent thin thus slowingly that tan gent did swarth 'n' swerve is-way though gently oh missing letter planeted win new sighs (that newly now) mattered M cooly sparked madness writ dawn the day when thus and not lived therefore relieved not relived thereof the clothedness of hem add herness shy of nest her nest would have pen but toured without a hat though therein planted nun the lesson he did listen 'n' list therein the hen could not re-systematize

↑ Index

385. Michael Magee
Re: Frank O'Hara, Skanky Possum
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Hoa, could you send me a copy of What's Up with Modern Art? - check's in the mail. -m.

According to Hoa Nguyen:
>
> --(please forgive cross postings)--
>
> Hello everyone:
>
> I am currently taking orders for:
>
> A new pamphlet sized book(like the old Black Sparrow books), > _What's Up with Modern Art_, selected short reviews and other art > writings by Frank O'Hara, edited by Bill Berkson. A charming > unpublished photo of FOH graces the back. The collection takes its name > after a wonderful article, reprinted here, subtitled "Kids Quiz A > Critic" from _Ingenue_, a glossy magazine "for sophisticated teens", > (1964). From Mike and Dale's Press. Only $5 (US)dollars.
>
> As some may know, I was to edit the fall issue of _Mike and Dale's > Younger Poets_ under the title _Mike and Dale and Hoa's Younger Poets_.
> Mike has since gone on to other projects; Dale & I are to continue > publishing a quarterly poetry magazine in the same format and similar > vein. To recognize the shift in editorship, we are naming the new > venture _Skanky Possum_ after the venerable critter that skanks around > our neighborhood. _Skanky Possum #1_ includes poets such as Eileen > Myles, Linh Dinh, Rachel Loden, Sotere Torregian, Anselm Berrigan, Carl > Thayler and Alice Notely, as well as an exerpt from a memoir of Philip > Whalen by Tensho Schneider and classic-movie reviews by Bill Berkson.
> _Skanky Possum_ features hand painted covers. From Skanky Possum Press.
> Only $5 (US) dollars.
>
> To order either, please indicate your order (title, # of copies) and > send a check made payable to me (Hoa Nguyen) to:
>

> 2925 Higgins Street
> Austin, TX 78722
>
> Please forward this announcement to anyone who may be interested.
> Thanks for your support.
>
> Love, Hoa
>
>
>
> _____
> Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>

↑ Index

386. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Erasing and the Ghost of Listserv Present
Thu 10 Dec 1998

On Thu, 10 Dec 1998, Amy King wrote:

> One of Buffy's friends wished the Slayer had never come to town on this > week's episode; this weekend Xena will learn what the world would be like if she > had never quested for power but stayed in her little village for life.

The Buffy episode is a parody of It's a Wonderful Life (thus the Xmas timing); presumably the other is too.

Pop culture is getting too cute fer its own good--

O chateaux! O pomo!

↑ Index

387. Mairead Byrne
Re: Erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

For me, the erasing and censorship/moderation threads are aligned. This, I hope, is the last time I will post on this subject so I will go for full disclosure.

In November, still in the first frolics of having joined this list, full of high jinks and excitement and pleasure in relation to all the talk about poetry, and the notion of so many hundreds of experimenting poets out there, I jumped into a bout of silliness initiated by Roger Day, I think, on the subject of Mars Bars (Yes Jonathan). Well, I'm Irish and I get lonely (but don't get me started again). I noticed that the contributors to this "thread" or "filament" were noticeably British / Irish / Canadian: yes, I for one was indulging in a bit of a canter in very few words. A post of eight words brought me the following message:

Date: Sat, 07 Nov 1998 13:57:26 -0500(EST)
From: Poetics List <[redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: advisory notice

This is an advisory notice from the administration of the Poetics List to remind you to keep posts to the list close to the focus of the list as indicated in the Welcome Message. Thanks for your cooperation.

On November 10, I posted reference to this notice to another "frolicking" thread -- the one about how Bill, Kent, David Baratier etc were such nice guys and should be invited to your town to read: Did they get advisory notices, I would ask, if the whole problematic of asking questions on this list did not inhibit me.

Witness my next post (December 7) on the subject where I asked the following 5 questions:

Is personality too raw for politics?
What do you guys really think about censorship/moderation?
Have any of you received warnings?
How many of you have been in the doghouse?
Are you still on the list and why?

None of my questions received an answer, except perhaps from Charles Bernstein who has said that very few advisory notices of any kind have been sent out in the history of the list. This does not make me feel better.

Is the list able to tolerate banter from some people and not from others? My question in relation to advisory notices was intended to draw forth the legions waving their notices. None came forward. Charles says advisory notices are hard to come by. I got one. Why? My banter worse than anyone else's? In what way? Why?

Erasure: certainly I feel that conversation/argument/ and yes, the second most favorite word after "enervated": rhetoric, takes place over my head. The Gabe/Henry/Kent controversy, consisting as it did of many long, wordy,outraged paragraphs (if we were lucky) attracted many more long, wordy, outraged paragraphs, mainly from men.

I am doubly miffed: miffed at being censured, miffed at being erased. I STAND UP HERE AMONG YOU IN CAPITALS. But then I remember my previous dedication to the one-member society of unimportance. And I remember the kindly and thoughtful back-channels I have received from Eliza and Rosalie. And I remember that I like Gabe/Henry/Kent for making me laugh. And I like the list for making me think, putting me in touch with people, helping me towards certain books. But please, can I make a plea for a form of listening, even within our posts. I too believe this is a performative space, and I am totally behind Joseph Beuys. But guys, you talk too much. You see length, yes surprise surprise size, as the important thing. There must be other ways of playing this game.

In the spirit of communication, I have translated what I wanted to say into the type of longish message favored by this list. To adopt another strategy favored here, I will say that:

1. Ego is not the only form of transport for ethical issues.
2. Language is at our disposal: let us play.
3. Personality is at our disposal: let us be human.
4. Editorial censure would be better received if it were not anonymous and unsigned.
5. This medium is new: let us play.
6. Long live the backchannel.
7. Women: speak out.

I always enjoy Alan Sondheim's posts, and his post of today got me started on this. My interest in a narrative, no matter how funny, which demands my disappearance, is bound to be limited. I will be dead long enough.

Mairead
>
> Meanwhile, one might look at instances of _the disappearing woman,_ which > form a matr/ix covering a great deal of ground (metaphysical and otherwise). Not only Lilith as an obvious case (the doubled Eve creation in > B'rashit), but also Melies' use of _the sawed woman_ or _disappearances_ > of women by magicians. From there through Patty Hearst, so much narrative > depends on this disappearance and suturing (and think of Irigaray's instance of the woman as a _transitive function_ or other between the same/> same relations among men - not to mention functions of 'wife-swapping' > (never called 'husband-swapping'), etc.).
>
>

↑ Index

388. Garrett Kalleberg
TF7
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Other echoes
Inhabit the garden. Shall we follow?
Quick, said the bird, find them, find them
- T. S. Eliot, Four Quartets

The Transcendental Friend Issue No. 7, December 1998

http://www.morningred.com/friend/1998/12/cover.html

This month's issue features some birds, some more birds, alien flight, a Flight of Imagination, and an Iguana, with work by Kevin Killian, Zhang Er (translated by Eleni Sikelianos & Zhang Er), Katy Lederer, Garrett Kalleberg, Daniel Machlin & Richard Tyson, and P. M. Deshong (presented by Jesse Glass).

Back issues of The Friend are now available from the new Home page, at http://www.morningred.com/friend

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

↑ Index

389. Jim Bennett
Re: Stein,Charles,&LesbianCodes:one girl's fantasy "Oprah"
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Please note. If you get more mailings from me than is acceptable, some were sent yesterday (my time) and this is tomorrow, or something like that cos you are still having yesterday (I think).

Dear Emily (and list)

Thank you for posting your (essay?) anti-criticism, re appraisal. I found it stimulating and innovative. It echoes thoughts I have had for some time, and which have grown from discussions. Fortunately I never attempted to group these thoughts together, I say fortunately, because I do not think I could have produced anything like the depth of your piece.

I would ask, (in general, so not necessarily related to sex) if the use of specialized language, jargon or argot, has the effect of marginalising, and whether the introduction of the definitions or use of the words from common vocabularies albeit with differing definitions actually helps in the process of general acceptability or normalising because people will find a common word out of context or in a different context easier to interpret?.

Jim

_____
Jim Bennett
University of Liverpool
U.K.

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

↑ Index

390. miekal and
Word Express Mention
Thu 10 Dec 1998

What small press publishers are actively publishing & reading experimental fiction? In particular, presses which are not buried by years of yet to come out mss. There used to be Dalkey Archives & Fiction Collective. Guess Ive been out of touch with it too long.

_____

does anyone have an eaddress for douglas rothchild or someone actively involved with setting up readings at the zinc bar

_____

the last few weeks during the muck & suck of poeticslist's growing pains, Ive been simultaneously recovering a ms which I began while in high school. It is the first book of what eventually became a long poem in 17 books called SAMSARA CONGERIES. it is really the only work of mine which remains unpublished because no one publishes long poems anymore. the section I am at work on now is called RAW. SWAY. ALOUD. and derives from an obituary I found on microfiche in the local Wisconsin Rapids Tribune. This natty little obit was the gem that inspired the whole complex of volumes. About a very modern Modoc man named Shacknasty Jack:

SHACKNASTY JACK
A touching obituary notice

Again we are called upon to perform the painful duty of announcing the death of one who, if not altogether [word unknown, blotted out] was chief among a fraction of thousands of spirits who are not yet perfect. We refer to "Shacknasty Jack," the genial, whole-souled, or perhaps (considering his mixed parentage) we would say, half-souled, copper-colored gentleman, who recently died peacefully and in pieces, in his little lava bed. Jack, "poor fel," did not wrap what little drapery he had about him and lie to pleasant dreams, but his demise was hastened by a seven-inch shell that entered and exploded in his diaphragm, ruining his digestive apparatus that had never been disturbed by banquets of roast dog, salt horse, washed down by copious draughts of fiery, untamed benzine and needlegun whiskey. As we recall the virtues of the deceased, our pen unconsciously drifts into mourning, and we are led to exclaim:

Oh Shacknasty, thou hast left us,
No more horses wilt thou steal;
But twas Gillem that bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

First we heard it was old Schnochin,
The heard twas Scar-Faced Charles
But the latest news, Shacknasty,
Says tis you have quit the earth's snarles,
Gone, but not forgotten.

Friends of the family invited to attend—covered carriages for all who wear gloves. Born of poor but honorable parents, "Jack" manifested at an early ago those traits that in after years made him famous, and would in time have sent him to Congress if his soul had not been shelled out of his ephemeral shell by a cast of iron namesake. He had served his tribe as tax collector, president of the baseball club, and was about organizing a "YOUNG RED MEN'S HORSE PLAGIARIZING ASSOCIATION," when he felt a sensation of goneness of the pit of the stomach, and was gone. Possessing many of the virtues that marked the Credit Mobelier operators, Shacknasty was almost as generous as the increased salary voters, who oly drew their back salary to pay off the public debt, and the news of his sudden death will cause a thrill of anguish in many a bosom—anguish that he was not permitted to die longer and slower by inches.

—reprinted from the Journal of American Bureau of Mines

Grand Rapids Tribune
Grand Rapids, Wood County, Wisconsin
Saturday, August 30, 1873

This obit spurred me, then a curious high school lad, to research the life of this man & perhaps write thru his words & the transliterated Modoc language, a poetic fantasy of what his life must have been. After contacting the Modoc tribal roll (they had been moved to Norman, OK from the lava beds of Eureka area of northern CA) I discovered that according to them no one had ever existed by that name. As far as I was concerned, all the better. I later came to the conclusion that he was the portmanteau creation of 2 other well know Modoc personalities, Shacknasty Jim & Captain Jack.

All of the above is simply to preface the question, to all those who have created their own history of texts, how do they honor their own lost, forgotten, neglected mss, particularly ones from another time & place, texts that are informed by another time's poetics, a different school of poetry & most certainly a past generation's dreams? --

---

I can't get it out of my head that Charles B has tried to read all of the posts. I would never want to be made accountable for my actions if that was something I had done.

postalage

post haste

---

still wrinkling my thoughts for ways to make a poetics of hypertext project manifest front channel....as an exploration in a semi public workgroup. one of the most encourage list experiences Ive had of late was watching the texts stream thru the poetics etc list, completely taking advantage of the broadcast nature of a list, sort of an editorial voyeurism, but more provocative. the key factor for me is that there has to be a concrete & accessible body of work that comes out of it. most probably a mini-website, as archives are not useable as a functional group hypertext.

Miekal And

↑ Index

391. Roger Day
Re: Erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

At 10/12/98 15:20:08, Mairead Byrne <[redacted]> wrote: # For me, the erasing and censorship/moderation threads are aligned. This, # I hope, is the last time I will post on this subject so I will go for full # disclosure. # # In November, still in the first frolics of having joined this list, full # of high jinks and excitement and pleasure in relation to all the talk # about poetry, and the notion of so many hundreds of experimenting poets # out there, I jumped into a bout of silliness initiated by Roger Day, I # think, on the subject of Mars Bars (Yes Jonathan). Well, I'm Irish and I # get lonely (but don't get me started again). I noticed that the # contributors to this "thread" or "filament" were noticeably British / # Irish / Canadian: yes, I for one was indulging in a bit of a canter in # very few words. A post of eight words brought me the following message:

Fingered. Ouch! Henceforth, all my posts will be of a singular and solemn nature. My frisky frolicking seal-like nature will be eclipsed by a greyer, solemnicle umbrella and high jutting collar.

No, seriously. I do think there are worse crimes in the world than talking about Mars Bars, even on a list like this, although I realise that the noise-to-signal ratio should be low. BTW, apologies to Mairead on this: didn't mean to cause these problems.Oddly, I never received a similar warning message.

I do miss Henry and Kent. Well-sized, well-structured, elegant posters both.

Wibble.

Roger

↑ Index

392. Michael Gottlieb
Alan Davies, Carole Miracove NYC Reading
Thu 10 Dec 1998

All Listers in or near NYC:

Alan Davies will be reading, with Carole Miracove, this coming Sunday evening, 12/13/98, at 6:30 PM at Zinc Bar.

Zinc Bar is located at 90 W. Houston St. NYC (just west of La Guardia Place).

This'll be great.

Michael Gottlieb

↑ Index

393. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

---

mairead, i like your seven points... may i add a friendly amendment to item 4?

to wit, and just a draft:

4. Moderation by listowner (or designee) would be better rec'd if frontchannel, signed, employed only in the most dire of controversies, and good-spirited. List members should likewise do their utmost to avoid flaming, and to be receptive of different agenda.

i assume we all know the difference twixt flames and dry ice... i'm not sure if some of this isn't already in the poetics "welcome message" (too lazy to check), but just for the sake of conversing...

best,

joe

↑ Index

394. Gabriel Gudding
Re: Erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

CB, PLEASE DON'T ERASE THIS!!!

THANK YOU, MAIREAD! SEe below.

On Thu, 10 Dec 1998, Mairead Byrne wrote:

> Is personality too raw for politics?

In my opinion, no. I've received several backchannels egging me on: people love Personality, but folks are a little afraid to show it here. I think in large part because of messages from CB like those below, which I enclose here with VERY weak apologies to CB:

"Date: Sat, 28 Nov 1998 16:59:24 -0500
From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
To: Gabriel Gudding <[redacted]>
Subject: addendum to "Free Poetics"

Your quote of Kenneth Tynam I suppose was intended to be self-mocking, since your contributions to the list as far as I have been aware have been entirely in the realm of literary criticism. Before your next post, I hope you will consider not only where you are going but how, as I get the sense you are too little aware of both. What impression you choose to make on individual readers of the list is of course your problem, but what impression you make on the environment of the list as a whole is mine as well."

Date: Sat, 28 Nov 1998 17:05:05 -0500
From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
To: Gabriel Gudding <[redacted]>
Subject: overpositng the list
Parts/attachments:
  1 OK 4 lines Text

2 Shown 6 lines Text

[Part 1, Text 4 lines]
[Not Shown. Use the "V" command to view or save this part]

<html> on the issue of frequency of posting: you have posted more messages this month than anyone else. You appear not to have been willing to reduce the frequency of your posts despite the request made to you earlier in the week. Daily posting is not an option. Please reduce your posts to no more than a few each week.</html>

> What do you guys really think about censorship/moderation?

I'm with Beuys and Rosalie & Callow, I'm with Henry, I'm with Eliza, and I think I'm with you, Mairead. I'm also with Silliman: self-moderation is good, is fine. But let's cut out the backhanded high-handed under-handed authoritative backchanneling. I say "authoritative" because CB wasn't willing after to reply to the first two responses I gave to his messages.

His posts read like the man's GOT A TEMPER!

> Have any of you received warnings?

Javol

> Are you still on the list and why?

The reasons I'm still on the list are to follow.
>
> None of my questions received an answer

I'm sorry I didn't answer them: two reasons: 1. CB had already, i thinkd by that point told me to cut back to "a few" times a week, anything else being "not an option"; 2. your questions were frankly too close to home -- answering them wd have brought out THE 12 BLICKY DEMONS.

I thank you for your boinky, Mairead.

love, Gabe

↑ Index

395. David Erben (Art)
San Francisco
Thu 10 Dec 1998

My wife and I will be attending the MLA in San Francisco and I would like to ask listmembers for suggestions on restaurants/poetry venues/jazz clubs to visit.

Please backchannel.

Thank you

↑ Index

396. dbkk
Poets of the MLA
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Mark your calendars!

Poets of the MLA

Tuesday, December 29, 7:30 p.m.
New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
$5

Every year the Modern Languages Association convenes during the last week of the year somewhere in the world and this year it's San Francisco's turn. Small Press Traffic has invited many of the finest poets in the world to read for five minutes apiece, a kind of Supermarket Sweep of the mind. They include Beth Anderson, Charles Bernstein, Stephen Cope, Benjamin Friedlander, Loss Pequeno Glazier, Carla Harryman, Pierre Joris, Tan Lin, Nicole Markotic, Andrew Mossin, Sianne Ngai, Jena Osman, Ted Pearson, Bob Perelman, Meredith Quartermain, Jerome Rothenberg, Lisa Samuels, Gail Scott, Lytle Shaw, Chris Strofolino, Barrett Watten.

We'll post a reminder closer to the date.

↑ Index

397. Billy Little
Re: mars/bars/spars/stars
Thu 10 Dec 1998

---

sorry mairead
i got an advisory b/c about the same issue and i thought i had wrestled the candy bar into a stanza to wit

in new york in august we kept our mars bars in the freezer, break them with a hammer, yum, cold and sweet, no gooey. the more delicate saw a slice off with a serrated knife, let the cool chocolate melting lubricate their murderous thoughts and i responded f/c with another pome which i seem to have lost right now and you even responded appreciatively so i thought you understood we were in the same doghouse i've been an activist all of my adult life and know how anger can poison my days and even effect those i least want to burden so if i can deal with it right away and transmute that energy into something useful like a poem or comic relief, turning that anger into pride enables me to protect my associates, i thought joel was a little overzealous but i could see he was anxious about his relocation and how it would affect his relationship with charles and his stewardship of the list so i shrugged and got a little solidarity note i thought b/c from you. I remember Bowering posted on this as well and i wondered at the time if he got a note from joel but i never asked just switched my allegiance to o henry bars.

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

398. Jordan Davis
Don't all call me Archibald Cox at once (or even James G. Farley)
Thu 10 Dec 1998

So, just to be clear, is this now
a moderated list? Just want to know what I'm posting to, and
whether I can expect messages I (or anybody else on the list) sends to be delivered.

Luv,
Hilary Rodham Donald Segretti

↑ Index

399. Aldon Nielsen
the poetics of impeachment
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Just heard the majority counsel describe interrogatives as declaratives. I suspect, given his resume, that he does know the difference. Is this, to use my newly acquired word, "perjurious"? without an Office of Independent Grammarian I suppose we're in for any amount of abuse of language powers this week -- and, having heard so much about this, I just looked up "sexual relations" in my Websters -- despite the fact that the entry for "sexual intercourse" includes a secondary definition that seems to accomodate non-penetrative genital contact (now that was a surprise to me), the one and ONLY definition for "sexual relations" reads, in its entirety, "COITUS" --

↑ Index

400. jen hofer
thoughts not announcements: on meaning, hejinian, my life
Thu 10 Dec 1998

as for:
>My simplest, puritan definition of an L=A poet would be a poet whose >primary interest is in abandoning (nicer light: questioning) "the >signifying function of language, evoking instead the sounds, the >non-referentiality of words."

it is firmly my belief that all words reference. (i.e. we cannot get away from the denotative & connotative signifying functioning of language, though we can--thankfully--disrupt those in many & delightful ways.) i cannot speak for lyn hejinian, but i would be shocked if she subscribed to the belief that she does not mean her words to mean. this is not to say that she (or any other poet) means her words to mean for you what they mean for her, or even that we believe our words to mean now what they will or might mean tomorrow, or etc. questioning (or challenging or exploring) the signifying function of language, and the politics of such, is not the same thing as abandoning signification (were that even possible).

i find it much more useful to think of langpo as a historical moment, involving certain players (hejinian among them, along with many others whose initial alleged L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E texts can be found in the delightful anthology of that very name edited by bernstein & andrews) rather than a homogenized ideology or poetics that binds these very diverse writers together. like any historical moment, especially one well-documented textually, langpo has vast & varied reverberations. plus gives young folk like myself the option of calling ourselves "post-language" which, to my ear, is rather delightful.

& while my virtual mouth is open (which it rarely is for reasons already mentioned by the much-appreciated likes of juliana spahr & elizabeth treadwell) i'll mention this about _my life_: according to the biographical notes at the end of the sun & moon volume, "Hejinian further explored her own past and autobiography (in _My Life_). Writing it in 1978, in her 37th year, Hejinian constructed a work of 37 sections of 37 sentences, each section paralleling the year of her life. For the second Sun & Moon edition, published eight years later, Hejinian added 8 sections and 8 new sentences to each previous section to account for her current age."

when she added the new sentences, she did not just tack them onto the end of each section, but rather interspersed them throughout the various sections, thereby changing the resonances of some of what she had written earlier. she did not allow herself to re-write the previously published text, though i am pretty sure she cut out a few words here & there.

i hadn't posted on _my life_ earlier because i figured that many people knew this information & would have already backchanneled maria; therefore, if this is redundant, please forgive.

je

↑ Index

401. Daniel Kane
"Deep Image"
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Am wondering if anyone on this list can point me to essays which analyze the "Deep Image," particularly if such essays look at the "movement" in an historical perspective -- i.e., by looking at the magazines "Trobar" and/or "Pictures from the Floating World" and their complicated relationship to/reconciliation of "outsider" poets like R. Kelly and "academic" poets like James Wright. You can backchannel me at <[redacted]>. Much appreciated.

Also want to say that the book _Close Listening_, ed. Charles Bernstein and published by Oxford University Press, is just terrific -- smart essays dealing (finally!) with and exploring the fact that poetry is experienced as a spoken and social thing as much as a read thing. Anyone know if there are essays looking at the potential effects of stage fright on reception of a given poem?

↑ Index

402. A. Jenn Sondheim
Jennifer on Republicans
Thu 10 Dec 1998

=

why i'm dead meat, by jennifer

Republicans ooze from their heads what is left of soul's rubbish
i could not stand to be in a room with one of them
they are objects for me, they reek of flesh gone sour
i would be a lichen to their rock, corroding their violent granite
they would kill everyone with guns and they are all white men every last one of them, no matter what drear affirmation white men filled with dead pus: they stomp the children of the poor, rape pollution laws, guarantee we'll drown the world in poison.
we're raped with rusted guns from world war two three four while they fight the righteous fight against women sex longing holding dead children on sticks to slap us with, banner banner big money big money
i couldn't stand to party with righteousness
i couldn't stand to fuck righteousness but their holes are closed
they have no holes, shit leaks from their mouths,
piss leaks from their eyes, they write vomit
they are a real danger, never forget this, behind words are guns and mobs and real men, you never forget a real man
when you look into his dead dead eyes, when you see a Republican on the road, kill it, it is not quite human

- Jennifer

↑ Index

403. groberts
Re: erasing
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Of syllables and words I sing,
Of scribbling and eras---.

"The Perfectionist"

He sat up at nights in a rage,
A-rub-rub-rubbing at his page.

"The Suitors' Discovery"

'Listen, something's got to be done:
Every night her weaving's undone!'

"Savage In-dig-nation"

The antic horde were hell-bent on razing
The Tower, and it fell down, erasing

"Pop Art"

Daffy's upset that the Hand defaced him,
So to clear things up the Hand erased him.

"On Some Shells Found Inland"

Some whole, most broken, but all bleached
By the light of the end they've reached.

"The List Remains Behind"

Into the space of the gods who departed,
Some laughed, some cried, some sighed, and some farted.

↑ Index

404. Emily Lloyd
Baratier's Silliman question
Thu 10 Dec 1998

I feel weird about this, because I'm unclear on whether it constitutes an uncouth "frontching" of a backch--plus, I didn't save the bc and now must paraphrase. BUT, David, the sequence: Simon mentioned Hejinian as a L=A=N=G poet; I mentioned that I didn't think so; he asked why & who was if not she; I tried to answer re: Hejinian but (frontch) deferred to someone like Ron or anyone more in the know as to who IS because (this is what I wrote) I don't know exactly who identifies as a L=A=N=G poet. Ron backchanneled that he didn't think anyone "identified as a Language poet" but that it was a label sort of externally foisted on certain writers, and that Hejinian's recent work is certainly as languagey as any language poet's.

I didn't write back to Ron; I really just don't know enough. It was my impression that some folks got together and this eventually culminated in, among other things,_The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_--a book that included folks that identified as L=A=N=G poets. I thought perhaps Ron's different spelling/version, "language poet" might stand for the more casual slung-around use of the word that has developed since those early yrs, and that people didn't identify as language poets, but perhaps some identify as L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets (although I'd always used the "equal sign" spelling in my frontch posts). I took it that Ron meant either that, or that I was dead wrong (entirely possible; I read

The L=A=etc. Book very long ago), and that it never was at some point a conscious "movement" or "set of ideas" or "set of people."

At the time I didn't know why Ron backchanneled that response, as it was Simon who originally wanted to know "who the L=A=N=G poets are, if not Hejinian." Since it seemed designed to inform and not to "get personal," I don't think it's wrong, or too wrong, to paraphrase it here, now...

em

↑ Index

405. Gabriel Gudding
Re: Don't all call me Archibald Cox at once (or even James G. Farley)
Thu 10 Dec 1998

On Thu, 10 Dec 1998, Jordan Davis wrote:

> So, just to be
> clear, is this now
> a moderated list? Just > want to know what
> I'm posting to, and
> whether I can expect
> messages I (or anybody > else on the list) sends
> to be delivered.

DEAR HILLARY RODHAM WHATEVER SIGRETTI:

No, you cannot expect your messages necessarily to reach the list. Henry had two that were erased because they did not pass muster and I have had one that has disappeared from my screen this afternoon and has not resurfaced in this esteemed and ringing piazza, and yeah it's a little fucking irksome, nor furthermore has my POLITE query about where in Ultima Thule my post went been answered.

Wondering if you'll get this,

Guttapercha B.

↑ Index

406. Poetics List
Posting to the list
Thu 10 Dec 1998

In reply to recent queries, there has been no change in the structure of the list. The Poetics List is edited and will remain so for the forseeable future; however, please be aware that all posts sent to the list by subscribers go immediately to the list, without exception.

↑ Index

407. Marcella Durand
urban space
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Simon,

as a poet intensely fascinated by urban spaces & structures, here are some books I've found most helpful & interesting:

City of Quartz by Mike Davis
Flesh & Stone: The Body and the City in Western Civilization by Richard Sennett (Sennett in general good read)
Cities by Lawrence Halprin
Design of Cities by Edmund N. Bacon
Angst: Cartography by Mojdeh Baratloo & Clifton J. Balch
The Life & Death of Great American Cities by Jane Alexander (not sure on author name, someone stole my book,as it is irresistable read)
Lost Cities by Vittoria Calvani
Architecture without Architects by Bernard Rudofsky (not precisely on urban planning, but I think deals with unexpected urban beauty)
The Built, the Unbuilt and the Unbuildable, by Robert Harbison
Big City Primer, John Yau
Invisible Cities, Italo Calvino
Paris Peasant, Louis Aragon

There was some eco-magazine out for a while, Terra Verde? Terra Infirma? Can't remember exact name, but had some great essays on particular urban topics, especially in one issue called "Wild City." There was also a feminist magazine (I'll try & look it up--scribbled it down somewhere) in the 80s that has a super issue on women & urban spaces--really interesting essay on woman who designed gardens in Washington DC, counterpoint to huge pointy monuments...

And a digression: on the whole List debate, I am a digester & mostly lurker who frequently deletes the entire thing unread, so missed the initial sparks. But somehow this resultant explosion has opened up the List more for me--made me feel that it is growling & moving, even if every step is not perfect for everybody. I haven't reconciled how I feel about someone being cut off the list, but must admit that the list now feels less monotonous, more names, voices cropping up here & there, more breathing space

↑ Index

408. Wystan Curnow
Re: "Deep Image"
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Daniel,
You should search the POETICS archive. I have a memory of Jerry Rothenberg who is on the list posting something on the term.
Robert Kelly I remember as a list member although not heard from for a long time.
Wystan
> Am wondering if anyone on this list can point me to essays which analyze > the "Deep Image," particularly if such essays look at the > "movement" in an historical perspective -- i.e., by looking at the > magazines "Trobar" and/or "Pictures from the Floating World" and their > complicated relationship to/reconciliation of "outsider" poets like R.
> Kelly and "academic" poets like James Wright. You can backchannel me at > <[redacted]>. Much appreciated.
>
> Also want to say that the book _Close Listening_, ed. Charles Bernstein > and published by Oxford University Press, is just terrific -- smart essays > dealing (finally!) with and exploring the fact that poetry is experienced > as a spoken and social thing as much as a read thing. Anyone know if > there are essays looking at the potential effects of stage fright on > reception of a given poem?
>

↑ Index

409. Carl Wilson
Re: urban space
Thu 10 Dec 1998

> The Life & Death of Great American Cities by Jane Alexander (not sure on author name, someone stole my book,as it is irresistable read)

Jane Jacobs, who's generally a superb writer on urban space/economies.

Carl W.

↑ Index

410. Wystan Curnow

Re: Baratier's Silliman question

Thu 10 Dec 1998

Dear Emily, Ron Silliman also frontchannelled along related lines Nov.18. when he referred to a Poetry Flash of 1979 as the first use of the 'language poets' label. That sort of local knowledge is invaluable. My first encounter was in 1980 when I bought 6 issues of L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E magazine from Sandollar books. Ron doesn't refer to the magazine, which predates the Poetry Flash issue and is surely the source for the label. (The L=book is of course an anthology of pieces from the (by that time defunct) magazine.) The equal signs between the letters stretch serve to stretch the title across the top of the front cover Lyn Hejinian contributed to number 3, (1978), no 7 (1979), is a featured writer in number (1979 and she is reviewed in number 11 (1980) and number 13 (1980) in which Bernadette Mayer review's My Life. In so far as the contributors to the magazine made up a community of shared interests, she is clearly a member of that community. To identify that community by the name of the magazine between whose covers they were gathered seems quite reasonable to me.

Wystan

Ron
> backchanneled that he didn't think anyone "identified as a Language poet" > but that it was a label sort of externally foisted on certain writers, and > that Hejinian's recent work is certainly as languagey as any language > poet's.
>
> I didn't write back to Ron; I really just don't know enough. It was my > impression that some folks got together and this eventually culminated > in, among other things,_The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_--a book that included > folks that identified as L=A=N=G poets. I thought perhaps Ron's different > spelling/version, "language poet" might stand for the more casual > slung-around use of the word that has developed since those early yrs, and > that people didn't identify as language poets, but perhaps some identify > as L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets (although I'd always used the "equal sign" > spelling in my frontch posts). I took it that Ron meant either that, or > that I was dead wrong (entirely possible; I read _The L=A=etc. Book_ very > long ago), and that it never was at some point a conscious "movement" or > "set of ideas" or "set of people."
>

↑ Index

411. Eliza McGrand
miss priss speaks up (ahem)
Thu 10 Dec 1998

ok, i've been saying this backchannel, i think a bit frontchannel, but i'll say it straight out now and those of you who disagree or feel pointed at are welcome to email me about it.

1) alan s. and i have discussed this a bit -- those of you who feel this list is in some sort of terrible shape, awash in censorship, mean posts, etc., you are being awfully spoiled and naive. this isn't a bad thing -- people who are demanding (even if because from privilege and naivete,) while annoying, are often helpful -- their demands and expectations help set and keep up standards. but as a quick reality moment, in my not-even-that-extensive list experience, poetics is a HAVEN of subject-focused, intelligent, witty, pleasant posts. i have NEVER seen flames of the ilk i've seen elsewhere. without verbatim quoting, suffice to say i've seen other lists/bulletin boards with posts of MUCH lower levels, routinely, despite other posters of erudition and charm; i'm talking about posts with vitriolic, namecalling, swearing, just plain dumb/missing logic and schoolyard rhetoric. and i mean schoolyard, as in "you %$(&^%)%$(* your mother is a)@#)(*." if you have difficulty believing this, take a few hours and browse around on poetry bbs and listserves. this list is amazing; please stop selling it short.

2) i am just plain sick and utterly tired of the backchannel, backstabbing, cowardly complaining going out to charles/joel. if you have a beef with someone's post, instead of writing joel and charles about how someone is a blah blah blah and their posts are blah blah blah and please revoke their membership to the country club and we wouldn't want the kaffirs getting the wrong idea and heavens they're offending the mem sahib, just, for heavens sake, get a spine and write the person whose posts bug you DIRECTLY telling them their posts bug you and why. i.e. start a dialogue with the person you have a problem with and take responsibility, up front, for what bothers you. there is more than one person on this list with whom i have done this and i've never had an impossibly terrible experience. in some cases, i've made a new friend. in all but one case, poster and i came out of it with each having gotten some insight. it is totally unfair, burdensome, and i'm sorry, but i think, cowardly and irreponsible to pester joel and charles with these sorts of complaints. i could see it in case of actual danger -- at one point on this list, someone was sending mailbombs, both to list, and when i wrote them about something else, to me. that is the one contrary instance. in that case, i did drop a note to j&c to the effect that so and so was mailbombing not just list, but me. joel and charles both got very upset and immediately wrote to make suggestions and offer support. that is the only situation i can think of at moment when i would complain, backchannel, privately, to them about something i might not take up directly with person offending me.

this complaining about so and so's posts not being up to scratch to charles and joel just reminds me of the gossip and throatcutting of a petty middleclass country club. having had a peripatetic (metaphorically) childhood, i have had occasion to see a group of petty bourgois, as one example, debating whether so-&-such REALLY belonged in club because at s&s's party, toward the end of the evening, someone saw s&s pouring store-brand liquor into namebrand bottles. said group delegated someone to complain to manager of club. can anything be more petty and disgusting? if so, i have no wish to hear about it.

just as in that instance, i probably would have asked s&s if they had run out and would like me to make a liquor run if i thought that was the case, or if i thought they just didn't want to waste expensive alcohol on drunken people, or didn't have the money to spend, shrugged and left it alone so, in the instance of posts one doesn't like, there are, as has been said, numerous simple remedies. we don't have to be suburban and complain they are "ruining the neighborhood"; the delete key is democratic and available to all. or one can discuss the matter directly with person involved -- life is open to varied and multiple interpretations, no? do you ALWAYS know what someone meant, exactly, by a post? lacan/deconstruction/lacan/deconstruction...

3) more than once, i've heard complaints and distress by women. things it revolves around are a) post by woman being ignored by subsequent male posters, or issues therefrom being attributed to another poster (male); b) long windy posts appearing to exist primarily to quash and abash female poster-of-origin on topic, or respondant; c) posts dismissive of women and women's issues. i've heard it enough that i believe it. i speak from some abashment as a frequent poster (am perhaps inherently a noisy, tough lot) but even so, have much sympathy for other, less thick-skinned sisters. and am saddened and pained by each gentle, sad note i have received (and there have been many) backchannel thanking me for posting on thus and such (especially women's issues, but also by newbies) and mentioning a personal difficulty/diffidence/ discomfort that prevents frontchannel mention.

suggestions: all (not just men), could we be more sensitive to source of issues/ questions/posts? careful not to misattribute/obliterate anyone's (especially women's) portion of debate in issue? an effort to respond not just to the windy, like me, but the shy and short posters? an effort to be especially welcoming to women/newbie posting?

as a subnote, there is among women (i think anyway) an elaborate and exquisite ritual of mutually affirming sarabande, of placing any critique/comment in a context of affirmation, compliment, reassurance. i would refer you all, for particularly adroit and lovely examples of this, to any post by maria damon. i think for women, one learns to be careful and respectful. for some, what feels like normal posting may feel, to women, like rude and dismissive and disrespectful response. all i can say is, whenever i read a maria damon post, i invariably feel soothed, interested, and utterly awed by her grace. could we all try to take on some of that care and respect? i'd love to see this tendency toward carefulness used to elevate and better posting, rather than dismissed.

the lovely and gracious and noisy and always-perfect
e

↑ Index

412. Pierre Joris
Re: "Deep Image"
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Daniel Kane wrote:

> Am wondering if anyone on this list can point me to essays which analyze the "Deep Image," particularly if such essays look at the "movement" in an historical perspective -- i.e., by looking at the magazines "Trobar" and/or "Pictures from the Floating World" and their complicated relationship to/reconciliation of "outsider" poets like R. Kelly and "academic" poets like James Wright. You can backchannel me at <[redacted]>. Much appreciated.

Ah! wish there was such a work -- been trying to get a grad student to do a diss on exactly this subject for years now. But it hasn't happened yet, and I don't know of anything specifically on DI except for bits and pieces here and there, for example some of the early pages in Paul Christensen's book on Eshleman. What you can however get ahold of is the raw material, i.e. the essays & correspondence re Deep Image. Essential in looking at that event is however the fact that what you call the "outsider", i.e. Robert Kelly (& Jerome Rothenberg. whom you don't mention) were in fact the "insiders" (Yes, I know how you are using the term in your query) : "Deep Image" as an _appellation controlée _was taken over after the fact (& the brief duration) of the initial burst of thought & writing about that idea by the "academics" like James Wright -- & this happened, I believe, via the one outsider momentarily close the the original DI poets, namely Iron John hisself. The hijacking of the name (which the original conceivers of the trademark had indeed by then if not renounced, at least left behind as not only being of limited use qua poetics but also because of an unease or unwilligness to create a 'movement' with the usual avant-gardish manifestos, etc.) has now gone down in lit-crit so that references in trad lit histories (if indeed they do mention it) to DI will cite the latter pale imitators.

So that, the texts needed to look at to get a sens of DI are indeed foremost the issues of Trobar & Floating World. The first issue (1960) of Trobar, for ex., is poetry rather than statement (i.e. the horses rightfully in front of the cart) and includes work by Antin, Duncan, Economou, Eshleman, Kelly, Rothenberg & a few more. Issue 2 (1961) has the same minus Antin plus Rochelle Owens, Seymour Faust, Armand Schwerner and poets (only liminally or not DI) such as Blackburn, Creeley, Dorn, Jones (now Baraka). It also has Robert Kelly's statement "Notes on the Poetry of Deep Image." This statement is a response to Rothenberg's writing on Deep Image in issue # 2 of The Floating World. Issue #3 of Trobar has a similar line-up of poets and Rothenberg's essay "Why _Deep_ Image?" Next important gathering on DI is in Kulchur #6 which prints an exchange of letters between Rothenberg & Creeley (reprinted in Rothenberg's volume of essays "Pre-Faces"). There were some other letters (notably a Denise Levertov letter I have not been able to locate).

Issue #7 of VORT (the Antin/ Rothenberg issue) has excellent interviews with both JR & DA that bring up the matter of DI. (It also prints a useful essay by Kevin Power called "An Image is an Image is an Image" and Eric Mottram's excellent "Where the Real Song Begins"). Vort #8 has a Schwerner interview which also addresses AS's connections to & thinking about DI. Then there is Robert Kelly's "Statement" from, I believe, 1968, published as a pamphlet by Black Sparrow. Diane Wakowski, also an early DI participant, has a small essay called "Jerome Rothenberg's Deep Image" -- and her Sparrow #3 issue, "Form is an Extension of Content" also helps to configure the issue.

That's all I have energy for tonight --

Pierre
--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

413. Emily Lloyd
Re: Baratier's Silliman question
Thu 10 Dec 1998

Gotcha. I owe you an apology, Simon (and whoever else listened): Hejinian's a L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poet. Plus, I've just heard bc that she refers to herself as one to this day. Sorry if I misled or put you on the defensive. And thanks, Wystan, for clearing it up.

em

On Fri, 11 Dec 1998, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> Dear Emily,
> Ron Silliman also frontchannelled along related lines Nov.18. when he referred to a Poetry Flash of 1979 as the first use of the 'language poets' label. That sort of local knowledge is invaluable. My first encounter was in 1980 when I bought 6 issues of L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E magazine from Sandollar books. Ron doesn't refer to the magazine, which pre-dates the Poetry Flash issue and is surely the source for the label. (The L=book is of course an anthology of pieces from the (by that time defunct) magazine.) The equal signs between the letters stretch serve to stretch the title across the top of the front cover
>
> Lyn Hejinian contributed to number 3, (1978), no 7 (1979), is a featured writer in number (1979 and she is reviewed in number 11 (1980) and number 13 (1980) in which Bernadette Mayer review's My Life. In so far as the contributors to the magazine made up a community of shared interests, she is clearly a member of that community. To identify that community by the name of the magazine between whose covers they were gathered seems quite reasonable to me.
>
> Wystan
>
> Ron backchanneled that he didn't think anyone "identified as a Language poet" but that it was a label sort of externally foisted on certain writers, and that Hejinian's recent work is certainly as languagey as any language poet's.
>
> I didn't write back to Ron; I really just don't know enough. It was my impression that some folks got together and this eventually culminated in, among other things,_The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_--a book that included folks that identified as L=A=N=G poets. I thought perhaps Ron's different spelling/version, "language poet" might stand for the more casual slung-around use of the word that has developed since those early yrs, and that people didn't identify as language poets, but perhaps some identify > *as L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets (although I'd always used the "equal sign" spelling in my frontch posts). I took it that Ron meant either that, or that I was dead wrong (entirely possible; I read _The L=A=etc. Book_ very long ago), and that it never was at some point a conscious "movement" or "set of ideas" or "set of people."*

↑ Index

414. eurydice

Re: Big Allis Information

Thu 10 Dec 1998

I'm a smidgen loathe to post this, since I'm not otherwise taking part in discussions lately, and also because I posted heaps of Big Allis information several months ago, but as it was especially requested (and I'm thrilled by the interest), here goes.

The initial contact for subscriptions and related matters is me:
Deirdre Kovac
20 Douglass Street, #3
Brooklyn, NY 11231
[redacted]

The initial contact for submissions and related matters is:
Melanie Neilson
11 Scholes Street
Brooklyn, NY 11206

As for contents--the most recent issue, Big Allis 8 (lukewarm of the presses), featues a selection of work by writers in Great Britain and Ireland (guest edited by Fiona Templeton), namely: Caroline Bergvall, Karlien van den Beukel, Andrea Brady, Miles Champion, Ken Edwards, David Kinloch, Sarah Law, Tertia Longmire, Helen Macdonald, Rob McKenzie, Drew Milne, Catherine Walsh, John Wilkinson, and Aaron Williamson. The other contributors to this issue are: Bruce Andrews, Graham Foust, Bob Harrison, Noah de Lissovoy, Alison Lune, Heather Ramsdell, Lisa Robertson and Christine Stewart, Juliana Spahr, Stephanie Strickland, H. T. (Heather Thomas), Rodrigo Toscano, and Liz Waldner.

A single issue is $8 (there was a special "poetics et alia" offer through Halloween for $6--which could perhaps be extended through the upcoming holidays if someone asks), and a two-issue subscription is $16.

I think that covers all the bases. Many thanks to Patrick for the enquiry. (Considering throwing my hat into one other fray or another some evening when there's more hours in the day.)

Best,
Deirdre Kovac

↑ Index

415. Wystan Curnow
Re: God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters
Thu 10 Dec 1998

> Gabriel Gudding wrote (in part)
>
> I was going to reserve this 30 min's of freetime tht I now have for posting a few more thoughts on the THEORY OF SLAPSTICK POETICS. But the news of Henry's departure has so saddened me I am moved to write a meta-poetics commentary.
>
> Some have said CB is killing an essential part of this list with his interventions.
>
> I have even gone so far as jokingly to call CB a controlling prig.
>
> One or two of us have however gone on to compliment CB on his open-minded and fair attitude (I am one of these). I compliment CB on his open mind.

Dear Gabriel, This so-called Slapstick Poetics of yours, it really seems to have made an impact. I'm not sure I quite grasp it, as you have had precious little to say theoretically about it. But let me try it myself and you can tell me how I'm going,ok?:

Gabriel Gudding is an abusive, insulting, humourless, garrulous no- count poseur (I'm sure I wrote poster?) so say some people. Not frontchannel mind you. And not me. I love him. He's so fine.

Some say his failed attempts at humour which simply end up giving gratuitous offence is doing damage to the sense of community on which the success of the list depends. But not me. I did not say it. I did not. I love him. He is an honourable man. Others say his posts are hilarious, challenging, cheeky. Not me, however.

Is this how it goes, Gabe? And where does it go from here? I am not sure of the point of saying gross, stupid, things about a person and then nice approving things about them, except that it is rather liberating and such fun and gets up people's noses, so perhaps you could go into this in more depth. Thanks.

Wystan

↑ Index

416. david bromige
Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Ron I'm sure is accurate in identifying 1979 as first use of "language poetry" (? language writing?) as a term for that poetry now known by that name. I think, though, that the zine L=A=N etc started up in '78? There is also Michael Davidson's title "The Poet as Language" for a piece he published in _Credences_ zine in 1975 on the book _Tight Corners_ .

Btw, I assumed that it was L=A=N etc because of the care required to move back and forth, typing, from uc to lc to uc, etc. That was token of a care in reading same.

David

↑ Index

417. Jim Bennett
Re: Baratier's Silliman question - Post-Lanpo
Fri 11 Dec 1998

For clarification. Thank you for the interesting information about Lanpo and esp the origins of L=A=N the symbol. I realise that you were talking about the position of Lyn Hejinian in aligning herself to a group with shared interests, but by the same token of inclusively, does the same postulate mean there are no writers who could be considered part of that "movement" if not in the original mag? Are they "Post-Lanpo" or "Post-L=A=N" etc. Perhaps with the inclusion of many of the experimental techniques in mainstream poetry collections, we should use "After Lanpo" as a description, and save Post-Lanpo for the cutting edge a-g.

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

↑ Index

418. Randy Prunty
Re: Readings in Austin / The Hat (if this gets through...)
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Dale, your post reviewing The Hat made it through to me.
Randy

Dale wrote: <Finally, I wrote a post on Friday for delivery to the list, but through some kind of intervention, it never arrived. It was a review of The Hat, edited by Jordan Davis and Chris Edgar.>

↑ Index

419. charles alexander
Re: urban space
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Marcella,

With this interest in space, you might like a book from a symposium a few years ago. Thebook is MAKING WORLDS: Gender, Metaphor, Materiality, ed. by Susan Hardy Aiken, Ann Brigham, Sallie A. Marston, & Penny Waterstone, pub. by U of Arizona Press in 1998. It is described as follows: MAKING WORLDS brings together feminist activists, artists, and scholars to address a series of questions that resonate with increasing urgency in our global environment: How is space imagined, represented, arranged, and distributed? What are the lived consequences of these configurations? And how are these questions affected by gender and other socially constructed categories of "difference" -- race, ethnicity, sexuality, class, nationality?

Not specifically about urban space, but includes that, and gives a differently gendered approach than that of most authors in the list below.

charles

At 09:18 PM 12/10/98 -0500, you wrote: >Simon,
>
>as a poet intensely fascinated by urban spaces & structures, here are some books I've found most helpful & interesting:
>
>City of Quartz by Mike Davis
>Flesh & Stone: The Body and the City in Western Civilization by Richard Sennett (Sennett in general good read)
>Cities by Lawrence Halprin
>Design of Cities by Edmund N. Bacon
>Angst: Cartography by Mojdeh Baratloo & Clifton J. Balch

>The Life & Death of Great American Cities by Jane Alexander (not sure on author name, someone stole my book,as it is irresistable read)
>Lost Cities by Vittoria Calvani
>Architecture without Architects by Bernard Rudofsky (not precisely on urban planning, but I think deals with unexpected urban beauty)
>The Built, the Unbuilt and the Unbuildable, by Robert Harbison
>Big City Primer, John Yau
>Invisible Cities, Italo Calvino
>Paris Peasant, Louis Aragon
>
>There was some eco-magazine out for a while, Terra Verde? Terra Infirma? Can't remember exact name, but had some great essays on particular urban topics, especially in one issue called "Wild City." There was also a feminist magazine (I'll try & look it up--scribbled it down somewhere) in the 80s that has a super issue on women & urban spaces--really interesting essay on woman who designed gardens in Washington DC, counterpoint to huge pointy monuments...
>
>And a digression: on the whole List debate, I am a digester & mostly lurker who frequently deletes the entire thing unread, so missed the initial sparks. But somehow this resultant explosion has opened up the List more for me--made me feel that it is growling & moving, even if every step is not perfect for everybody. I haven't reconciled how I feel about someone being cut off the list, but must admit that the list now feels less monotonous, more names, voices cropping up here & there, more breathing space
>
>

↑ Index

420. Roger Day
Re: urban space
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I've often loitered over "The Poetics Of Space" - a title and book which nicely conflates your topic and this list - by Gaston Bachelard, Maria Jolas (tr) - but never bought it. I think I shall. See <URL:http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0807064734/qid=913388146/sr=1-2 /002-1202663-4479056> for reviews.

> # >And a digression: on the whole List debate, I am a digester & mostly lurker who frequently deletes the entire thing unread, so missed the initial sparks. But somehow this resultant explosion has opened up the List # more for me--made me feel that it is growling & moving, even if every step # is not perfect for everybody. I haven't reconciled how I feel about someone # being cut off the list, but must admit that the list now feels less # monotonous, more names, voices cropping up here & there, more breathing space

Change will do you good..mmm..mm...

Roger

↑ Index

421. David Baratier
Big Mouth Strikes Again
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I have been in absentia for a bit, I want to get to some scene reports but first a number of things to say--

First, has anybody seen the new Georgia Review, I understand they reviewed one of Pavement Saw's titles _Wherever You Want_ by Douglas Goetsch & I am unsure of what their words were.

Second, when I visited APR I was amazed to find out that they too ran a fully anonymous submission process, and for the Honickman award they too ended up with a new comer who only had three credits in little magazines. As a plug, one of these fine magazines, Nedge, is run by our former list member Henry Gould. Yet another nail in the coffin of my theory that anonymous competitions result in publishing unknown/rarely published talent.

Third, for Ron Silliman, I understand there was question posed a few weeks back about people upholding the Language movement and not to see a response from Ron seemed odd. I say this because a few weeks ago when I went to hear Rae A. read at Penn for some unknown reason the introduction consisted of Ron emphasizing that Rae was a Language poet. While I was hoping for an articulation of why he found her work scintillating, instead he spent his time reifying that she was a language poet through saying it over and over again without justification as to why. Such statements as "while her lines are different than most people associated with the movement, she is a language poet" were offered as clarification. I found this quite baffling for a movement that has prided itself on its use of theory in and about poetry. I still am curious as to why Ron thought this type of introduction was necessary.

As for this debate about people leaving, and the questions presented, I have been on for at least three years maybe four and have never received a warning. I have not always been active on the list for this duration either. Censorship or perceived censorship is a wonderful conduit for writing. What can be better than emotionally charging or intellectually challenging one to action? Even if the action is to leave this list and transit to another stable of writers. If one feels they are in strife or opposition with one particular sect, it fuels something, preferably new. Perhaps I sparked a few things which could be considered dog-house material, esp. when first starting. I am on the list because little attention is paid to Language and Language influenced material outside of the two coasts. I want to be aware of the rare flares of excellent material. Being aware of who the popular practicioners of the movement are also allows me to pick up the books in the cut out bins of Ohio and sell them for a profit when heading coastward.

Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

422. Jacques Debrot
Re: Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I have heard that the title for L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E was designed by Ray Di-Palma; curious to know whether this is so.

↑ Index

423. Billy Little
Re: miss priss speaks up (ahem)
Fri 11 Dec 1998

---

it would be merveilleux si nous reponde a chaque posting we'd like to respond to mais miraculous akin to anti-gravity though it's long overdo for me to say how much i delight in the majority of your postings eliza and pause in thought over them you add a very positive energy a hopefully contagious bouyancy po-ets in general women men transgenederd les het celibate poets at large are more often such sensitive plants easy to bruise even the blustery oaf poets are easy to hurt some lay awake waiting for offense to apear in their dreams. The last page of Horkheimer and Adorno's Dialectic of Enlightenment is useful here, i believe it's called the genesis of stupidity. The anti-paranoia squad requires me to say over 50% of questions i've posed have been totally ignored by all 677 lurkers and their loved ones but don't worry i'm going to do the same to each and every one of you if it takes me to the fourth millenium

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.

Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

424. Gabriel Gudding

Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread

Fri 11 Dec 1998

CHARLES, PLEASE DON'T ERASE THIS! (joke)

Why I Have Been So Virile & Insulting:

1). I began these skirmishes more than 3 or 4 weeks ago in dinky annoyance at the unflaggingly petulant and oppositionalist (a)mentality that was then in vogue on this list (I'm sure never to return). This was the Pinsky/Howe-Stern=Gerontion thread, heightened then for me by MP's injection of Intolerance-etc.

2). Devising an experiment, I did, with gestures bombastic, heighten my rhetoric daily, the purpose of which was to eventuate (yes I use it as a transitive verb) a call for Tolerance or Moderation or Open-ness (i say we hyphenate all double consonants) -- this in part having been effected. My attempts to upset this list's petulant equilibrium were intensified in commentary to Perloff in brilliant contravocality to her insufferable advocacy for an increased intolerance in this company. Said rhetoric has continued to heighten.

3). I am now told many have left this list because of said racier intra-groupal-insulting rhetoric, which is bearing some of the finest argumentative techniques we have (and bristling with them furthermore): irony; satire, humor; atopical disquition, ad hominem, attribution of improper, foolish or otherwise ludicrously incongruous attributes of character and intellect (name-calling), and the use of a contemptuous tone and diction. Most of which intentions have already been posted publicly. I would make a bomb. (joke). Purpose?: Direct idiotic avant-garde pukery inward. Mine was a moral and a merry war.

4). My rhetoric was High, Frothy, & Exciting, yes. Very blurtive & potent. At times, devastating. Perhaps I should have directed my attacks against the gestalt otherwise known as "The List"; instead I chose to attack some of its core members, including the list owner. I thought this a more effective method to turn The List's knee-jerk scorn inward, and in many ways, it turns out, this does constitute a more "family-oriented" approach, keeping things personal. I saw -- as an arriviste will -- the Hodgepodge of this list as a Hegemony curled up like a Hedgehog. I needed to attack the Prominent Personalities curled in its underbelly, rather than all the barbs and spines on its dorsal side. Doing this (I am told) "outed" the uglier aspects of these personalities: someone suggested to me b-c just how closely all this parallels Wizard of Oz, in which our Dorothy (yours truly) crushes ruby-slippered critic with house-dropping rhetoric and goes on to waltz and pout her way to the unveiling of Wizard (cb) behind curtain (bad gender parallels in that sorry, but the anecdotal isn't necessarily apocryphal). Since that time people ahve been asking me in helium voice, "Are you a good witch or a bad witch?" Be that as it may, please note:

5). I took great pains to be bombastic and exaggerated -- not only to mock the earnest, but to underscore my purposes and keep Enemy guessing as to my intentions, but ALSO TO BE FUN, PEOPLE. I tried to work in caricatures not with effigies: those of you who missed this, please take a vacation.

6). My target was not Dignity but Vanity.

7). THERE IS A GREAT DIGNITY TO THIS LIST. It should be proud of itself; I am proud to be a part of it: you cannot know how much I appreciate Emily's post regarding Stein, how much I love to read these archives, how I enjoy the tiffs, what a great kick I get out of the PERSONALITIES of McGrand and Billy Little of Mairead Byrne and the poster formerly known as Henry Gould. I respect the generations represented here: the long and noble "struggle" [ahem, MP] this list represents and I respect what its subscribers have given to American letters for, in some cases, 50 years.

8). I felt compelled to attack LIST VANITY for sake of LIST BOINKY.

9). If I however had known this forum was SO delicate, so brittle, so unlike kentucky fescue, so OVERLY serious and earnest in its own self-regard, I certainly would not have posted what I did FOR

a. A cowboy does not ride upon a cat
b. A pig does not gallop in a pot
c. A man will not surf on a puddle

Once again, I thank you for your boinky. I hereby lay down my cudgels.

But I reserve the right to use my ligneous atlatl every so often.

Be well and write however the fuck you want. -persona non gaga

PS, ONE LAST THING: I love Charles Bernstein, he continues to teach us a great deal. But it is a hard love.

↑ Index

425. groberts
Re: urban space
Fri 11 Dec 1998

In addition to the books/essays already mentioned, you should also (I would say "first") look into the work of Raymond Williams, Henri Lefebvre, Michel de Certeau, David Harvey, Lewis Mumford, Georg Simmel, Max Weber, and Walter Benjamin. Lefebvre's THE PRODUCTION OF SPACE is especially important. I have an essay on the early history of urban poetry in English coming out in a collection to be published late next year from University of Arizona Press; the book will probably be entitled The Nature of Cities, and will feature essays on the relationships of literature to urban environments.

Gary R.

↑ Index

426. MAYHEW
Re: Baratier's Silliman question
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Someone said here recently (was it Ron?) that a language poet was anyone who had ever been publicly accused of being a language poet. Thus I have a favor to ask: would someone please accuse me of being such? Then I can count myself among this illustrious group.

I'm not sure what a non-referential language would be. When Silliman writes a line like "teaching Reagan to count backwards by eights" (I'm quoting from memory probably inaccurately) does the word Reagan not refer* to the former president? Same problem with non-signifying or non-syntactical--this would be like saying a non-linguistic language. Sure, we can reject a sort of facile "reference" theory of language that people pretend to believe in while they are accusing people of being language poets.

Jonathan

↑ Index

427. Eileen Tabios
Re: 3 questions re A. Sze poem
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Hello. This is my first post to this list. I am woman, too. In response to the 3 quedstions about Arthur Sze's poem, I thought I might as well ask Arthur what he would say about them (I didn't mention it was being discussed on this list because, if I understand this list's protocol, we're not supposed to tell non-list members what's being discussed here? Anyway, below is what Arthur would say about the 3 questions.

Eileen

p.s. C. Bernstein had suggested I join a couple of months ago. How interesting you all are (I mean that positively, not objectifyingly) -- none of you are "gray."

> I am reading Arthur Sze--"Redshifting Web." In that sequence he has these three lines:
>
> Instead of developing a navy, Ci Xi
> ordered architects to construct a two-story
> marble boat that floats on a lotus-covered lake
>
> Does anyone know this story? Who Ci Xi was? How I might spell his name to have more luck finding out who he was? Where to look to find the story?

1: Ci Xi is the pin-yin spelling, used throughout China now, of the late Empress Dowager of the Ch'ing Dynasty. Instead of allocating her funds to develop a navy to help counter threats from other countries, Ci Xi lavishly spent a fortune to develop a two-story marble boat that could float on water. The boat exists and is part of the Summer Palace in Beijing. In Chinese culture, the boat is seen as a symbol of supreme lavishness and as an attempt to avoid the pressure of reality.

> Question 2:
> In another part of the poem, he has this line: "as a lobster mold transforms a russula into a delicacy." What is a "russula"?

2: A "russula" is the genus name for a series of mushrooms that have gills and chalky white stalks. Some russulas are edible, others can cause severe stomach upset. A lobster mold usually attacks a russula or lactarius mushroom; it covers the mushroom and transforms it. The new lobster mushroom is not only edible; it's an extraordinary delicacy. I'm thus using the lobster mushroom as an example in nature where something can be transformed into something astonishing.

> Question 3:
> I have figured out what a redshift is (more or less). Does anyone know if there is such a thing as a redshifting web--astronomically, cosmologically, referentially to the universe outside the poem--, or is Sze writing to his poem?

3: In our understanding of the cosmos, it is now clear that, as Heraclitus once said, "everything is in motion." Galaxies that are traveling away from the earth, which is of course also moving, send out sources of light that are bent toward the red end of the spectrum. So, redshift is an image of the expanding universe. I wanted to connect the infinitely large (cosmological redshift) with the infinitely small (a web), so I created the phrase "the redshifting web" as the title to my book. It connects the very far to the very near. It's thus an image of a poetics of an expanding cosmos, but also implies that the poet is like a spider that creates webs with words.

Thanks for relaying this response.

Very best,

Arthur

↑ Index

428. Fred Muratori

Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread

Fri 11 Dec 1998

Might as well 'fess, up Guelph-Ghibelline, your raucous posts of late are really components of an MFA-thesis-in-progress which will be published (or "eventuated," as we say in Mondo PostPoMoBelmondo) in the year 2000 by Roof Books (intro by Bob Perelman), corretto? True, you might have to work in some images of gorges and sunsets to appease us locals, but why not? It's a twee country, after all.

Too voyeuristic to unsubscribe,

Fred M.

>CHARLES, PLEASE DON'T ERASE THIS! (joke)
>
> Why I Have Been So Virile & Insulting:
>
>1). I began these skirmishes more than 3 or 4 weeks ago in dinky > annoyance at the unflaggingly petulant and oppositionalist > (a)mentality that was then in vogue on this list (I'm sure never to > return). This was the Pinsky/Howe-Stern=Gerontion thread, > heightened then for me by MP's injection of Intolerance-etc.
>
>2). Devising an experiment, I did, with gestures bombastic, heighten my > rhetoric daily, the purpose of which was to eventuate (yes I use it > as a transitive verb) a call for Tolerance > or Moderation or Open-ness (i say we hyphenate all double > consonants) -- this in part having been effected. My attempts > to upset this list's petulant equilibrium were intensified in > commentary to Perloff in brilliant contravocality to her > insufferable advocacy for an increased intolerance in this > company. Said rhetoric has continued to heighten.

>
... -persona non gaga

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

429. MAYHEW
Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I think Gabriel Gudding might have been the only one laughing at his own humor. Insulting people is not inherently funny, nor is experimenting to see how long it will take for others to lose their tolerance for such insults. Just because you claim to be funny or ironic doesn't mean others will take it in that spirit. It's like someone telling a joke and laughing him/her self. Neither particularly moral nor merry. And please don't accuse me of lacking sense of humor. I laughed so hard at story of firecreacker in trombone valve that I gave myself an asthma attack.

Jonathan

↑ Index

430. Jordan Davis
Posting to the list
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Thanks, anonymous voice, for the note. I am confused by the apparent contradiction between the list being edited and all posts being forwarded immediately. My confusion increases when Henry tells me two of the posts he sent before he unsubscribed were not forwarded.

Please clarify.

Jordan Davis

Poetics list wrote: In reply to recent queries, there has been no change in the structure of the list. The Poetics List is edited and will remain so for the forseeable future; however, please be aware that all posts sent to the list by subscribers go immediately to the list, without exception.

↑ Index

431. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Baratier/Silliman/origins of Langpo as term
Fri 11 Dec 1998

The typography of "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E" also served, whether this was the intent or not, to distinguish the pub. from its cousin, the linguistics journal _Language_.

↑ Index

432. Poetry Project
Thanks for implications
Fri 11 Dec 1998

My thanks for the responses to the "french abstract lyric" question. It's interesting, to me, to have a rather general term for a "form" be defined so precisely, albeit with variance based on who's doing the defining, in a (some) French poetic context(s), when I've only really run across the term in question as an allusive gesture towards an unnamed horde of young American poets. In one sense I was already aware of the possibility of an abstract lyric via Celan, as Doug writes, where the human impulse behind the poem remains transparent despite the reconfiguring of the lyric form & literal content into something wholly other. But on the other hand it's somewhat sickening to realize that there's another term in the air that anyone can use to corral a bunch of poets into definition for the sake of furthering an argument or theory. There's also something wrong with the designation of writing by Americans as falling under the label of "French" & then that label being put forward as demonstration of a problem in American poetics. I'm not looking to assign blame in writing this, or to kickstart another boring polemic dispute. It does seem to me sometimes, however, that much of what qualifies these days as poetic discourse is overly dictated by the freedom to assign labels to people, poems, forms, etc. & it's hard not to do so often enough, when the topic of conversation is constantly reduced to "what is Language poetry" or "what is New York School poetry" & placed in terms of a, some, any opposition (or as if those questions are actually crucial). Other than what they seem to mean for the purposes of editing anthologies I tend to think of these things as largely meaningless, mainly 'cause it seems that if I don't I won't see anything very clearly. Oh well. Thanks in advance for bearing with.

Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

433. Mairead Byrne
Re: Final (Hopefully) Note about Insult Thread
Fri 11 Dec 1998

There's no accounting for taste though, I thought the trombone story was kinda tragic. And I definitely rendered Gudding boinky laughs.

On Fri, 11 Dec 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> *I think Gabriel Gudding might have been the only one laughing at his own humor. Insulting people is not inherently funny, nor is experimenting to see how long it will take for others to lose their tolerance for such insults. Just because you claim to be funny or ironic doesn't mean others will take it in that spirit. It's like someone telling a joke and laughing him/her self. Neither particularly moral nor merry. And please don't accuse me of lacking sense of humor. I laughed so hard at story of firecreacker in trombone valve that I gave myself an asthma attack.*
>
> Jonathan

↑ Index

434. David Erben (Art)
Reggae William Blake
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Jah Wobbble has just released a CD, "The Inspirations Of William Blake," that includes a reggae version of The Tyger.

Does anyone know of any other reggae versions of Blake? Romantic poetry? Victorian?

I'm also reminded of a alternative version of "The Emperor of Ice Cream" I heard once in New Orleans. Unfortunately, I never learned who the group was.

↑ Index

435. Mark Prejsnar

Jonathan Mayhew is a Language Poet

Fri 11 Dec 1998

Jonathan Mayhew is a Language Poet (cap's and everything)...

So it's nice that he posted the short discussion of referential (not!) language...citing the line about teaching Reagan to count backward.

I agree that it is very hard to claim non-referentiality for a work of poetry, and not be dead wrong. There is the very non-normative use of words, but as in JM's example, and as in relatively non-linear writing from the Cantos and Stein on down to most of what i see in the little mags today, most non-normative writing has distinct thematic resonances.

There was a debate about this among several @lanta poets two nites ago..one feels that "lack of aboutness" is one of the main faults in the contemporary poetry he sees coming out now, when it doesn't quite work. Others thought that that was not the main problem..

I would add that this poet has published some VERY non-linear, and disjunctive work himself. So while superficially his point sounded like some of the critiques that've been articulated well here in the past, as by H. Gould and Joe Safdie, he was really saying something different, not just insisting on the communicative value of consevative form.

Anyway, i disagree: most of the stuff i see coming out, if it fails to have sufficient focus on a "theme" or "subject", that seems to have as much to do with poor or unrealized writing, as with any intent to be abstract or nonreferential...

A good example here might be Clark's The Little Door Slides Back. This book has been much praised and it has lots of fascinating stuff, and shows flashes of exciting and brilliant writing. But (this is tentative, as i'm still in the process of going over it and clarifying what i think) much in the book seems to overreach and to try to write in too many rapidly shifting ways, and to accomplish too many ideational/narrative clusters, with writing that's too unfocused, not sharp-edged, that's kind of mushy, not sufficiently worked-over and alive to the ear. These parts would probably fall under my friend's critique as "lacking aboutness," but i think the real problem is a need to tighten the writing.

Anyway that shouldn't be taken as a reasonable review of Clark, obviously: that i hope to do later; but a gesture at the book, which others might look at to see what i think i'm saying...

This referentiality stuff is a tricky bizness, sez i..

Welcome to the (Lang.) club, Jonathan!

↑ Index

436. Aviva Vogel
Deep Image - Original Materials - Inquiry
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I was getting more and more excited reading someone's message about the original materials that might be used for a "deep image" dissertation, and with a system-freeze and a newly-installed AOL, I lost the message permanently. Would someone be generous and forgive this pedestrian plea and forward the message to me? Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

437. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: God Bless the Tumors, the Boils and the Blisters
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Yeah, but he does it so much better than you, Wystan. Did your folks name you after the Auden. I was named after my grandfather. He was a swineherd.---Carlo Parcelli Wystan Curnow wrote:
>
> > Gabriel Gudding wrote (in part)
> >
> > I was going to reserve this 30 min's of freetime tht I now have for > > posting a few more thoughts on the THEORY OF SLAPSTICK POETICS.
But the > > news of Henry's departure has so saddened me I am moved to write a > > meta-poetics commentary.
>
> > Some have said CB is killing an essential part of this list with his > > interventions.
> >
> > I have even gone so far as jokingly to call CB a controlling prig.
> >
> > One or two of us have however gone on to compliment CB on his open-minded > > and fair attitude (I am one of these). I compliment CB on his open mind.
>
> Dear Gabriel,
> This so-called Slapstick Poetics of yours, it really seems to > have made an impact. I'm not sure I quite grasp it, as you have had > precious little to say theoretically about it. But let me try it > myself and you can tell me how I'm going,ok?:

>
> Gabriel Gudding is an abusive, insulting, humourless, garrulous no> count poseur (I'm sure I wrote poster?) so say some people. Not > frontchannel mind you. And not me. I love him. He's so fine.
>
> Some say his failed attempts at humour which simply end up giving > gratuitous offence is doing damage to the sense of community on > which the success of the list depends. But not me. I did not say it.
> I did not. I love him. He is an honourable man. Others say his posts > are hilarious, challenging, cheeky. Not me, however.
>
> Is this how it goes, Gabe? And where does it go from here? I am not > sure of the point of saying gross, stupid, things about a person and > then nice approving things about them, except that it is rather > liberating and such fun and gets up people's noses, so perhaps you > could go into this in more depth. Thanks.
>
> Wystan

↑ Index

438. Gabriel Gudding
recommended readings
Fri 11 Dec 1998

---

of late reading, the following have been particularly interesting:

* _Arshile_ (#s 3,4,5, & 10)

* _Third Wave: The New Russian Poetry_, edited by the former Kent Johnson and Stephen M. Ashby. U Mich, 1992

* _The Book of Insults, Ancient and Modern: An Amiable History of Insult, Invective, Imprecation & Incivility (Literary, Political & Historical) Hurled Through the Ages & Compiled as a Public Service by Nancy McPhee_ by Nancy McPhee, St. Martins, 1978. A definite must for all Americans.

* _The Projectile Throwing Engines of The Ancients_, by Sir Ralph Payne-Gallwey, a 1973 American reprint of a 1907 British version. Great drawings.

* _The STrange Lives of Familiar Insects_, Edwin Teale, 1964. Great photos, spiff drawings, great insect melodrama told in breezy style. Ever wonder how far the common housefly can travel in one day? It's all here.

* _Insect Stories_, Vernon L. Kellogg. Henry Holt, 1910. A collection of 12 true tales about the miraculous doings of insects.

* _Little Lives: The Story of The World of INsects_., Julie Kenly. 1938. A good, if somewhat romantic, look at some of the more famous insects (eg, flies, cockroaches and bumblebees).

* _The Senses of Nonsense_, Alison Rieke, Iowa, 1992. A clear and down-to-earth study of nonsense in Joyce, Stevens, Stein, and Zukofsky. HIGHLY RECOMMENDED.

gg

↑ Index

439. E.M. Garrison
Re: Posting to the list..and a Query.
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Ive had posts that came thru late and garbled. I believe its a technical problem, somewhere along the line, much as in the spring of this year when there was a breakdown (major server)on the east coast. This showed as difficulty sending or recieving email to or from europe. Communications do occasionally break down. Duh.

As to the editing, (feel free to correct me if I am mistaken) I believe that this means to stay close to the subject, not introducing, say.....Plums! into the subject matter, or remain relevant. This is of course difficult to say the least..so many ..many subjects and posters..it is almost impossible.My own opinion ? More rope, please. I want to be in charge of my own hanging, spectical and all. Anyone out there knit?

Mairead, please continue to raise your voice !! I dont always have time to respond..though I want too....Time In very short supply here. If I did have the time, I would try to say much as you have said..though I know I would not do it half so well.My hat is off to you. You speak eloquently for many of us. Bless the Irish!.. in us all....

Gabe. Hard post, Dude. You were coming across as emotionally dishonest. It just simply doesnt work, especially from a poet. That is the beauty of language. You can be as rude as you like. But be real. When you are, your words shine...dont go stomping off either.As Henry..and Kent, have done. there is nothing to be gained, and you would be sorely missed.As they are.

We are all adults, and know when banter is working. We Know.And enjoy it, or dont.
I like it myself. If something offends me, I function as my own editor. delete.

I was so pleased to see the support that Mairead received from the "guys" in response to her post. Gender equality does indeed exist on this list. Thanks, Guys...Your support is appreciated..and not lost in the roar of words.

Im new here. Every day. Not always time to post.Standard disclaimer for misspelled words, apologies for any stepped on toes.

QUERY: Does anyone know of any list functioning as a sounding board for work in progress? Please backchannel me. All time and effort is appreciated, and I thank you in advance.

Peace,

beth

Jordan Davis wrote:

> Thanks, anonymous voice, for the note. I am confused by the apparent contradiction between the list being edited and all posts being forwarded immediately. My confusion increases when Henry tells me two of the posts he sent before he unsubscribed were not forwarded.
>
> Please clarify.
>
> Jordan Davis
>
> Poetics list wrote:
> *In reply to recent queries, there has been no change in the structure of the list. The Poetics List is edited and will remain so for the forseeable future; however, please be aware that all posts sent to the list by subscribers go immediately to the list, without exception.*

↑ Index

440. Gwyn McVay
Emperor a la Nordine
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I'm also reminded of a alternative version of "The Emperor of Ice Cream" I heard once in New Orleans. Unfortunately, I never learned who the group was.
<<<

Ken Nordine has a fabulous riff on "Emperor" on one of his recent albums--I believe it's on /Devout Catalyst/, which has guest perf-poet Tom Waits on one track and guest guitarist Jerry Garcia on several.

Gwyn

↑ Index

441. louis stroffolino
ADOPT A "POET"
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Dear Poetics list-- I will be in San Francisco (for a job interview) from Dec. 25th until early on the 30th, and am looking for a place to crash, a couch, a floor even. I will be clean. I will do your laundry or make icecubes or mow your lawn or whatever errands you may wish to devise for me (I will sing for my supper if you have a piano, and even be a brilliant conversationalist if you're into that sort of thing). I know it's unreasonable to expect that any single person (or couple or trio) would be able to put me up the whole time I'm there--but if I can get enough people to say that I wouldn't be too much of a pest on any single night, I could alternate--- I am especially worried about where I would stay xmas night, being that there's no room at the inn, etc. If anybody has any room--or any leads on anybody who might--for any of these 5 nights, I would deeply appreciate it. I will owe you one-- I will let you stay at my place if you happen to be in NYC, and if I get the job I'm interviewing for, I will even offer you money somewhere down the line.....

(i hope such requests are not inappropriate for the list-- i--for one--would like to see more of these!)...
sincerely, Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

442. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: Posting to the list
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Poetics List wrote:
>
> In reply to recent queries, there has been no change in the structure of > the list. The Poetics List is edited and will remain so for the forseeable > future; however, please be aware that all posts sent to the list by > subscribers go immediately to the list, without exception.
Wha!? Clarify! Clarify!

↑ Index

443. Ron Silliman
Jonathon Mayhew is a language poet
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I believe it was "counting backwards by sevens," a standard part of the mental status exam given in psych emergency wards every day (the president for whom

I was named could not pass this test). [Another question on the list is to name the last six presidents of the US, but a few years back the APA decided that the omission of Gerald Ford would not count as an error since so few Americans seemed to know that he had been president.]

I agree that there is no such thing as non-referentiality. It's a term like non-narrative that is its own self-oxymoron. (The unfolding of meaning in time, the only definition of narrative that makes any sense to me, occurs even in the single letter poems of Joyce Holland's "Alphabet Anthology." Every letter has a beginning, middle and end, although Grenier is the only poet I know who seems to be able to manipulate this effectively.)

On the use of the "=" in the name of the journal to which Wystan referred, I've always presumed that it referred back to Saussure's conception of difference as the governing principle of language (dont be so sure, as CB would say). Tho I never did figure out the "/" in the magazine M/E/A/N/I/N/G.

Has anyone noticed that what's happening in Congress right now isn't an impeachment but a coup?

Ron

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

444. Joe Brennan

Fwd: news that stays news

Fri 11 Dec 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_913411213_boundary

--part0_913411213_boundary

air-zb03.mail.aol.com (v53.20) with SMTP; Fri, 11 Dec 1998 13:55:04 -0500
by rly-zb04.mx.aol.com (8.8.8/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with SMTP id NAA04318 for <[redacted]>;
Fri, 11 Dec 1998 13:55:02 -0500 (EST)
Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]> with BSMTP id 5365; Fri, 11 Dec 98 13:55:10 EST (LMail V1.2a/1.8a) with BSMTP id 8543; Fri, 11 Dec 1998 13:55:11 -0500 Resent-Date: Fri, 11 Dec 98 13:54:52 EST
Resent-From: Henry <[redacted]>

Resent-To: Joe <[redacted]>
Date: Fri, 11 Dec 98 13:43:21 EST
From: Henry <[redacted]>
Subject: news that stays news
To: Joe <[redacted]>

Joe, can you forward this to the list? Thanks - Henry

Dear Poetics List,

Just to clarify:

1. I agree with everybody that list-hogging is bad for the list.

2. I was not consistently the high poster each month. The few times I was asked to slow down, I did.

3. I left the list not out of frustration but because the "review" status I was put under led to unexplained censorship & hidden editing of the list. I could not participate in that. Could you?

4. The new diversity & plurality of postings to the list is great. If I can further that by remaining in exile, fine. Remember, I recommended these things - more people participating, more careful listening to topics of messages - back in November, before anyone else. I find that hilarious.

5. My last official post to the list was a poem about thanksgiving. So happy holidays one & all. Do you believe in Santa Claus? Do you believe in the Invisible Hand? Better be good!

- Henry Gould

--part0_913411213_boundary--

↑ Index

445. Elizabeth Treadwell
Eliza Jen Juliana & Concerns or erase
Fri 11 Dec 1998

Responding having read some into the archive.

Am I one of Joel's "bailures"? Don't know. Appreciate the girl wagon that has been somewhat acknowledged.

I had told Joel privately that I'd "BE BACK", just LIKE Arnold Schwarzenegger w/ a review of Meow Press's '98 publication, Thrum by Noemie Maxwell, which I read quickly, tenderly, and excitedly, a new writer for me, a prose that gets the words to change their typical stance as noun or verb, something that fascinates me as I think about what is narrative or not-- --but that I'll put in a future issue of Outlet, with 200 copies planned, I don't know if my thoughts on this book would get more or less readership there or via this here channel.

!!!: I must protest, and perhaps too much, that Mark, when he posted our "entire" b/c "conversation" did not actually post its entirety, nonetheless I will leave this quote from Eliza to stand in for my feelings on that subject

> i must point out a delicious irony: as a woman, > am too often treated to persons overendowed with entitlement who feel it > is encumbent upon them to "explain" what i have said, speak FOR me, and > in so doing, completely ignore what in fact i HAVE said.
> --Eliza Mc Grand

And I , copying Juliana, am not wanting to hurt anyone's feelings -- tho mine have been knocked about here --- and on third thought, "HURT SO GOOD", gentlemen of the judiciary committee, think about the fact that it does seem to be a climate that girls abandon, and maybe the climate's changing, and I don't know how to act proper, I just know I need to spend my time on WRITING!!

set to nomail, set to bratty, Outlet 3 'll be out in March happy hols, the gentlelady from California yields,,,,,

Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

446. A. Jenn Sondheim
SEMCOM:, Books: Semiotics (fwd)
Fri 11 Dec 1998

This might be of interest to readers here.

Alan

==========
========== SEMCOM
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
==========//is an online bulletin primarily for dissemination of semiotic, semiological, discursive, linguistic, visual and allied information pertaining to the study of signs. It is solely owned and operated by Alan C. Harris Ph.D. and is distributed free of charge to members of the Commission on Semiotics and Communication, National Communication Association, members of the Semiotic Society of America, and other "fellow travelers" who request the service. . . // [If you would like to be included in the SEMCOM list, please reply or send a note to [redacted] with the command, "add SEMCOM", in the body. tia, a.]

==========
========== From: LINGUIST Network <[redacted]> From: [redacted] Subject: The Written Poem: Semiotic Conventions From Old to Modern English

Huisman, Rosemary (University of Sydney); The Written Poem: Semiotic Conventions From Old to Modern English;Available from Cassell;Hb.: 0 304 33999 7; US$75.00/ 45.00

This book defines a focus of interest: contemporary poetry and its historical construction as a 'seen object', and uses current literary and social theory to facilitate its study. Thus the book contains matter of relevance to practising poets, to those engaged in literary studies and to those with a sociolinguistic interest in the English language, especially in relation to technical and social changes in language technology and literacy. Part One discusses the use of graphic, that is visual, conventions in contemporary poetry in English. How do we recognize 'a poem' (including apparent contraventions, such as the 'prose-poem')? Once a poem has been recognized, what are the interpretative conventions brought into play for reading it? And especially, how has the spatial arrangement on the page become 'meaningful' in its own right for much contemporary poetry? The last question, of the semiosis of the 'seen poem', is discussed at length, with numerous examples from individual poems. For a consistent descriptive vocabulary for 'discourse' and 'genre', a model of language and social context, derived from the work of the linguist M.A.K. Halliday and the sociologist Basil Bernstein, where relevant, is explained and used. Part Two explores questions which have been brought to the fore in Part One. What is the origin of the line as the primary generic sign of poetry? How does the potential for seen, rather than spoken, meaning emerge? It particularly focuses on changes in manuscript conventions from Old to Middle English poetry, on the comparitvely late significance of print for poetic discourse, on the change, in an increasingly literate understanding of 'literature', from a social to a personal understanding of poetic meaning from the late eighteenth century through the nineteenth century. If what has been regarded as an object, 'the poem', is an outcome of the social processes of textual interpretation and production, so too is what has been regarded as 'the subject', that through which meaning is authorized. AVAILABLE FOR REVIEW. EMAIL: [redacted]

LINGUIST List: Vol-9-1746

↑ Index

447. Brian Lennon
urban space
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I'd also recommend Rem Koolhaas's _Delirious New York: A Retroactive Manifesto for Manhattan._ (New York: The Monacelli Press, 1994):

<paraindent><param>left</param>"Not only are large parts of its surface occupied by architectural mutations . . . utopian fragments . . . and irrational phenomena . . . but in addition each block is covered with several layers of phantom architecture in the form of past occupancies, aborted projects and popular fantasies . . ."

</paraindent>

Walter Benjamin, "A Berlin Chronicle," "A Berlin Childhood," "Moscow," "Marseilles," "Naples," "One Way Street," etc. (in _Reflections_ [New York: Schocken, 1978]; _Moscow Diary_ (Harvard UP, 1986).

Rilke, _The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge_ (Vintage, 1990).

Mike Davis has a second book out---also on L.A.; I can't recall the title though.

> Date: Thu, 10 Dec 1998 21:18:09 -0500
>
> From: Marcella Durand <<[redacted]>
>
> Subject: urban space
>
>
>
> Simon,
>
>

>as a poet intensely fascinated by urban spaces & structures, here are > some books I've found most helpful & interesting:
=

>
>
>
> City of Quartz by Mike Davis

>Flesh & Stone: The Body and the City in Western Civilization by Richard
=

> Sennett (Sennett in general good read)
>
> Cities by Lawrence Halprin
>
> Design of Cities by Edmund N. Bacon
>
> Angst: Cartography by Mojdeh Baratloo & Clifton J. Balch

>The Life & Death of Great American Cities by Jane Alexander (not sure on > author name, someone stole my book,as it is irresistable read)
=

>
> Lost Cities by Vittoria Calvani

>Architecture without Architects by Bernard Rudofsky (not precisely on > urban planning, but I think deals with unexpected urban beauty)
=

>
> The Built, the Unbuilt and the Unbuildable, by Robert Harbison
>
> Big City Primer, John Yau
>
> Invisible Cities, Italo Calvino
>
> Paris Peasant, Louis Aragon

↑ Index

448. BETSY ANDREWS

Re: boo-boo

Fri 11 Dec 1998

I like this poem quite a bit.

> From: A. Jenn Sondheim <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: boo-boo
> Date: Tuesday, December 08, 1998 3:27 AM
>
> ==
>
>
> boo-boo
>
> When I die, I want to take you with me,
> I want to take ten of the ten, and fifteen of the fifteen,
> And I will wear the dreary blue-blue you have given me -
> There will be one atom left, to placate the dreary vacuum,
> One molecule grappled by cell-counts sloughed and scrambled,
> Tissue rent asunder, organs corroded, soul's debris abandoned -
> And I will wear the blue-blue, I will wear the overcoat and ring, > Carnelion round my neck, magnetite across my throat, and singing -
> Your name - as I am torn asunder, the fifteen dreary words,
> The ten lost and forlorn colors, the fifteen dying notes,
> The ten corroded sites - you Blue-Blue, wear my overcoat -
> You Blue-Blue wear my ring - placate my death with dreary yours -
> What a vacuum here, and souls of dying atoms split asunder

> Stumble just beneath you Blue-Blue, taking me abandoned -
>
>
> _____

↑ Index

449. Steven Marks
Re: Reggae William Blake
Fri 11 Dec 1998

I've heard a reggae version of The Tyger. Not sure if it was Jah Wobble, but it was outstanding. My wife was listening to it on the radio and she called for me to come in, knowing how much I love Blake. We just stood transfixed in front of the receiver. It was a lovely moment I won't forget.

Steven

On Fri, 11 Dec 1998, David Erben (Art) wrote:

> Jah Wobbble has just released a CD, "The Inspirations Of William Blake," that includes a reggae version of The Tyger.
>
> Does anyone know of any other reggae versions of Blake? Romantic poetry? Victorian?
>
> I'm also reminded of a alternative version of "The Emperor of Ice Cream" I heard once in New Orleans. Unfortunately, I never learned who the group was.

↑ Index

450. Jacques Debrot
Re: Poetics Suggestion
Fri 11 Dec 1998

There is something pleasant about reading your own posts I have to admit, it's a little like enjoying the smell of your fingers. Then, too, there is the way that this venue seems to encourage a degree of exhibitionism. It's not that the people who post very frequently aren't often interesting, but when a small minority of subscribers is continually determining the tone of the List the same things are always being said. Here's a suggestion: why must subscribers receive their own posts back from Poetics? Perhaps someone could provide a convincing justification for this, but from my point of view, it's not at all necessary & deprived of that "pleasure" I think a lot of the problem with over-frequent posting to the List would abate. -- Anyway, looking forward to seeing this in my mailbox in a few minutes.

↑ Index

451. F. W. Perrella
New at: The Literary Review and North American Review - Web Del Sol
Sat 12 Dec 1998

New at The Literary Review:
http://webdelsol.com/tlr

The Fall 98 issue has a new batch of work to keep you thinking - check out The Dance School, by Manfred Wolf, or Summer Garden, by Laurie Byro.

The North American Review has new material, too:
http://webdelsol.com/nar

Two works you may want to see there: Goodnight Irene, by Corrine Clegg Shales, and Goddess of Desire and Paris West, by Judith Shatnoff.

Enjoy -

↑ Index

452. miekal and
listserv gratuties
Sat 12 Dec 1998

PRAYER TO KUMUSH

Our father on high living: Your name all revere your mind come to every one us Here too on earth in the same manner be done just as on high is done To us this day bread give you Not us wicked render you equally as our men-kindred love You keep off from our hearts thoughts good our heart make you You alone power you heart strong perpetually great of Kumush Thus well

[from the Modoc]

↑ Index

453. J Kuszai
Re: The Hat/women writers
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

dale, hoa, & other editors:

thanks for the description of The Hat. You mention that Jordan and Chris (two boys) haved edited an issue of a magazine with all women poets. Why is this a surprise? While it may be unusual, I think it is only as one famously male's male's male would say, "apropos." Women, generally, are doing much more interesting writing these days, and have been since the 70s. Not that there aren't useful boy-originated poets, but in my opinion, these last few decades have been really marked by this tendency. Representation of women by male editors is another issue, and leads people, for instance, to say that 'language poetry is male dominated,' when in fact if you look at the writing this isn't true. As far as all-women issues of magazines, whether edited by men or women: Are you suggesting that using some fairly restrictive criteria of editing that one would end up with anything but the same? Is it something that has to be set aside, like "this is our mission" or "no boys allowed" etc.?

this came up at the now historic New Coast conference in buffalo back in 93. When discussing this issue, the over representation of men by men in presses and magazines, one editor said that the problem was really that women didn't send in their work, while men are quick to submit work for consideration. Some people have said (sorry for lack of specifics, I don't mean to sound like Henry Hyde) that there aren't as many women writers so they get published much easier, become more sought after and therefore, somehow (and I find this one hilarious) more difficult to get to send work to mags and presses. The implication being here that women have more choices and that there is a "shortage" of women's writing...when in fact this simply couldn't be further from the truth.

In my experience as an editor, you can't wait for the writing you want to publish. So, with a few exceptions, unsolicited writings are generally male and generally not what I'm looking for. Dale, your description of Hoa's showing you the pilo submissions by men and the lone submission by a woman further strengthens what i like to call the "receptical theory of editing"--if you provide a trash can, it is likely to filled up. Which isn't to say that unsolicited work can't have a place in the development of a literary community, or a publishing sequence, whether a periodical or chapbook series. I'm only trying to say that such methods are limited.

I used to think that the gender-limit on such editing projects was problematic. As a form of editing, like my fantasy of a moderated listserv (which, if I get my way, will become a reality) such limit-oriented projects have their place. This was originally the focus of Chain and there are many projects out there that tend to focus on women's writers. I've stated that this doesn't need to be arbitrary, but it often is. I now kind of like that arbitrary restriction, and have toyed with that in planning future series of the meow press chapbooks. We all have these restrictions anyways, so why not extend them to fit a whole class of people: like white boys, or just boys in general. Where maybe once I would be offended by such editorial specificity, now such CENSORSHIP excites me, and I mean that honestly, sincerely (in case that was ever in question). Because I don't feel that it is censorship, but rather an editor's perogative.

Anyhow, all that aside, I am currently reading manuscripts for books scheduled to be published next summer -- and while for me there are a few interesting male-dominated writers out there, I would like to invite the women on the poetics list to send either manuscripts or proposals for manuscripts (of poetry, prose, or for monograph critical pamphlets) to: po box 948568 la jolla ca 92037

↑ Index

454. J Kuszai
Re: The Hat/women writers
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

i wanted to respond to myself in public and suggest that i didnt mean that i was going to use the women-only restriction for the editing of meow press. while that is certainly an emphasis (especially during my current reading), that more has to do with the writers i like being women for the most part, and i am currently actively in contract talks with some very interesting writers who happen to be women. so my plea to poetics for submissions is an invitation, not the focus of my research.

as far as "arbitrary" restrictions, I don't mean to suggest that such projects as Chain or Outlet are anything resembling arbitrary. I do mean to suggest that I may use such an arbitrary restriction in the future, as has been described on this list: only poets with relatives in Michigan, etc...

↑ Index

455. Randy Prunty
Re: Poetics Suggestion
Sat 12 Dec 1998

In a message dated 12/11/98 11:23:15 PM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<< There is something pleasant about reading your own posts I have to admit, it's a little like enjoying the smell of your fingers. Then, too, there is the way that this venue seems to encourage a degree of exhibitionism. It's not that the people who post very frequently aren't often interesting, but when a small minority of subscribers is continually determining the tone of the List the same things are always being said. Here's a suggestion: why must subscribers receive their own posts back from Poetics? Perhaps someone could provide a convincing justification for this, but from my point of view, it's not at all necessary & deprived of that "pleasure" I think a lot of the problem with over-frequent posting to the List would abate. -- Anyway, looking forward to seeing this in my mailbox in a few minutes. >> no, Jacques, no! if we didn't receive our own posts then I'm afraid (very, very) that would cause the list to implode. I think that the satisfaction of getting your own post back IN A FEW MINUTES helps compensate for the weeks or months of waiting to hear back from editors. with the list we can create a baby and see it born instantly- Guaranteed! (well, given recent history, almost guaranteed). in the welcome message we are urged to consider the list a form of PUBLICATION more than communication. not only that but we are ARCHIVED! Whew! heady stuff. I considered sending this backchannel, but...

Mr. Randy Edward Prunty I

↑ Index

456. Marcella Durand
urban space
Sat 12 Dec 1998

Brian, Charles, et al

thanks for reading suggestions--the quote from "delirious new york" has me, well, delirious. I thought Henri Lefevbre wrote on insects--my family has some lovely old books by him with intricate drawings? Am I thinking of other? What books did he write on urban/space/cities?

I will definitely look up Making Worlds--after reading the feminist issue on space/architecture by yet unnamed journal(too many little pieces of paper about, too many scribbles) in friend's house, had me hungry for more.

best-
M

↑ Index

457. miekal and
The cat in the hat omnibus
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

my post called Word Express Mention still hasnt come thru to my computer tho others have responded to it, so at least some people have seen it.

would be nice to clear this up, tho it does produce some facinating aleatoric results

m

↑ Index

458. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher report to the committee...
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

i've just emerged from a long, often frustrating week of posting folks backchannel re the recent (and apparently ongoing) list controversy... please, don't any of you feel you're being singled-out here... if you've heard from me backchannel, any of you, it's probably fair to say that you can multiply whatever you've heard from me by 10 or 20 anyway, and that this gives some idea of the amount of backchannel conversation i've been having... perhaps you've been in the same boat as me... whatever the case, i will risk, again, a bit of overweening sincerity in trying to convey what i've learned...

i think it's fair to say that, as these backchannel conversations have proceeded (and in some cases, escalated), my thinking and writing has at times been tortured, gnarled (as i will no doubt give evidence of here)... i suppose this is b/c i've been at some pains in trying to present something like the whole me---which, in my view, impinges upon my full(er) understanding and articulation of the more conflicted aspects of the recent ruckus... i.e., mixed feelings and motivations i might have, why i might have them, how my more personal relationships with some of you influence my judgment, trying to account for my relationships, trying to be objective and considerate---an apologia at times, at other times simply a (self-)confrontation... i've been told, by some, that they are in complete accord with what i'm saying... i've been told, by others, that we remain worlds apart, and that in fact my motivations as a mediator (if you will) have been murky, impure, compromised in ways that i seem unable or unwilling to grasp...

in addition to some troubled sleep patterns, i've emerged from the last week, all told, with the same conclusion about these spaces that i came to some six years ago: that it would be wrong to take what is said here, on the list (or even in one-on-one communique)---however well-intended, however mean-spirited, however apparently moderate---as the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth...

((and yes---i mean to imply that this all, for me, resonates with the ongoing judicial "hearings," which have rapidly devolved imho into an attempt to railroad clinton out of office, as some of you have suggested... a reality, imnsho, far more pressing than what goes on on this list))...

the reason why i observe (allege?) that the truth (as above) is not to be had quickly, or completely, or without reservation: we are more than the sum total of our words, and esp., our words in these regions... i don't believe for a moment that one can obtain some unmediated, disembodied truth, and i certainly don't believe one can obtain same simply by virtue of this sort of exchange... if i did believe this, kass and i might have decided upon marriage online, so to speak... albeit there turned out, in our case, to have been much truth exchanged in our months of courting (as it were) online---in addition, i should say, to certain miscues (i am potentially much mouthier and obnoxious f2f, as any who know me well can bear witness to)---there was additional truth to be gotten from spending time with each other... and of course there has been more truth exchanged since we began living together, a process that will (i hope!) continue as time passes...

to me it is in fact the assumption of something remaining to be understood that provides me with a tentative, provisional, but nonetheless necessary grasp of something called "truth"---and leads me, i would like to think, to some operating conception of what is just, and fair... as, i would trust (but which may not be the case), such an assumption might lead each of you...

i find as a result of my transactions, then, that it's necessary not to leap to judgment, that it's necessary to try to give everyone the benefit of the doubt... were we dealing with what appeared, more clearly, more certainly, to be (e.g.) neo-nazi behavior, i might not advocate such care, such thoughtfulness...

((and here again: one of the problems with the recent impeachment hearings, imnsho, is that the republicans, in treating the current articles of impeachment as having the same gravity as the watergate articles, are insidiously citing watergate-inspired words in justifying their actions))...

((well even here, you can see how one can get oneself into all sorts of trouble---i would seem to be aligning those who are against me (against charles, to cut to the quick) with the republicans... i.e., with conservative, right-wing thinking (apologies to you republicans out there)... nothing could be further from what i intend---and in any case, and as i've said to some of you backchannel, the left has always proved itself expert at tearing itself apart... nevertheless there is, i think, a certain positive and instructive correlation here with the flawed logic of the republicans---which of course is a politically motivated logic, in their case... though not so in the case of those who consider themselves, sadly, my ethical "adversaries" in the recent poetics brouhaha... clearly i believe the impeachment hearings crucial enough to risk confusing with the controversies of this list... just as clearly, i believe it to be a great mistake to assign to anyone here a strictly insidious intention, such as "censorship," thence to argue strictly on the basis of such an assignation---which is what, i respectfully submit, i believe my most adversarial "adversaries" have done... and of course they believe me in this regard to be part & parcel of the general 'corruption,' ETC.))...

let me not lose my own point in the muddle of this post: i think listening, and listening generously, brings certain rewards over time... i am not calling for more "moderate" (adj.) posts---we can rock & roll, sure, of course... self-moderation, as i understand it, simply means that, whatever one is about, one listens (to oneself, among others) in contributing to whatever this list is, and is in the state of becoming... how else can one envision this list actually working as such?... i must admit to being at somewhat of a loss if what i'm saying here seems idiosyncratic in its appeal to putting a bit of (a bit of) faith in our capacity for creating a vital communal (and certainly not homogeneous) gathering, one predicated on goodwill...

anyway, i hope what i've said here makes some small amount of sense, and will prove modestly useful as we continue together, and apart, in such uncertain times...

best,

joe

↑ Index

459. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy

Re: urban space

Sat 12 Dec 1998

> From: Marcella Durand <[redacted]>
> I thought Henri Lefevbre wrote on insects--my family has some lovely old books by him with intricate drawings? Am I thinking of other? What books did he write on urban/space/cities?

Perhaps you are thinking of J. H. Fabre, author of "The Life of the Fly", and discoverer of larval dimorphism. He and his family, having joined the first and last member of a line of processionary moth caterpillars, took it in shifts once to observe them marching round and round the edge of a barrel for an entire day until the circle broke up in exhaustion.

Randolph Healy

↑ Index

460. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

Re: Lyn Hejinian

Sat 12 Dec 1998

"They used to be the leaders of the avant garde, but now they just want to be understood, and so farewell to them."---Lyn Hejinian -- ÐÏ à¡± á

↑ Index

461. Emily Lloyd
new address, & Lyn
Sat 12 Dec 1998

>>"They used to be the leaders of the avant garde, but now they just want to be understood, and so farewell to them."---Lyn Hejinian<<

Right. And "as for we who 'love to be astonished,'" Lyn's a language poet.

My e-address changed today, so I may have missed some backchannels (Joel kindly fwded me the missed frontchs). They were all out of lukewarmmail, so here's where I'm at. Thanks. em

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

462. Tom Orange origins of Langpo as term
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

jacques debrot asks of dipalma's involvement in the naming of L=A=...

i understand that charles bernstein bounced the name Language (no equal signs) off of steve mccaffery, and steve suggested "Pegatext(e)" as an alternative.

assuming that aldon nielsen and ron silliman are both correct -- that the equal signs served both to distinguish this project from the linguistics journal and to emphasize the differential nature of the saussurean signifier -- one wonders what would have been the comportment of a burgeoning (so-called, or even post-) "P=E=G=A=T=E=X=T=(E) poetry"!

t.
[redacted]

---------- There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze ----------

↑ Index

463. Tom Orange
poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

interesting the way that poetry gets mobilized in the endgame of this whole thing: shippers quotes longfellow, clinton receives poetry from an old dear friend -- can anyone identify the lines from clinton's statement yesterday: "the moving finger writes and having writ moves on..."? (the rest of the quote actually resonates somewhat with our thread on erasing) also that berman (d-ca) would, in his opening statement, refer to the president's efforts to "deconstruct" words: continues to amaze me how that term has migrated from the highly specialized discourse of continental philosophy, through an (american) academic elite, and into our common parlance to mean simply "render ambiguous"...

t.
[redacted]

---------- There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze ----------

↑ Index

464. Steven Shoemaker
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

Tom--Clinton's quote yesterday comes from the Edward Fitzgerald's Rubaiyat, and I too thought about in relation to our erasure thread, although the emphasis in this case is really on the impossibility of erasure: with the passage of time itself troped as a kind of writing. Here's the passage in full:

The Moving Finger writes: and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all thy Piety nor Wit
  Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all thy Tears wash out a Word of it.

↑ Index

465. Maria Damon
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

that's from the rubayat of omar khayyam.

At 1:45 PM -0500 12/12/98, Tom Orange wrote: >interesting the way that poetry gets mobilized in the endgame of this >whole thing: shippers quotes longfellow, clinton receives poetry from an >old dear friend -- can anyone identify the lines from clinton's statement >yesterday: "the moving finger writes and having writ moves on..."? (the >rest of the quote actually resonates somewhat with our thread on erasing)
>
>also that berman (d-ca) would, in his opening statement, refer to the >president's efforts to "deconstruct" words: continues to amaze me how >that term has migrated from the highly specialized discourse of >continental philosophy, through an (american) academic elite, and into >our common parlance to mean simply "render ambiguous"...
>
>t.
>[redacted]
>
>----------
>There are no straight lines, neither in things nor in language. Syntax is >the set of necessary detours that are created in each case to reveal the >life in things. -- Gilles Deleuze
>----------

↑ Index

466. Eliza McGrand
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

---

do you suppose the bill bought ms. monica a copy of rubyat as well? you know, leave sof grass is just not the same to me now. has acquired a slightly hackneyed feel, like the proverbial convenience store single-red-rose of the (seemingly extinct these days) date.

how odd. poetry used to be written to court, has become one of those trite truisms, but one seldom if ever sees it employed to such purpose these days (or not where i hang out). on one hand, one hopes (ever solicitous of sales opportunities) that the bill's gift choice might spark a fad, but on the other, begin regurgitating hairballs at the thought of all those kalil ghibran and rod mckuen books changing hands...

if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her?

my vote for today: if i was flush for money and time, might get oxford complete richard hart lovelace. or june jordan's _haruko_, or new hoa nguyen or e. treadwell or dodie bellamy or judy roitman book just so i could 1) get a look at them myself; 2) support fellow listafarians; 3) get points for being at least imaginative!

e

↑ Index

467. Louis Cabri
a phillytalks thot
Sat 12 Dec 1998

Here's a tiny incomplete ill written thought on the subject of the materiality of format and on dialogue, using PhillyTalks 8.

> Of interest to me over the course of the newsletters has been how each poet-pair "dialogues"; it reflects, in a way, "deeper" aspects of each poet's work and - to use a dated Olsonian word - "stance." Bruce Andrews takes the occasion of contributing to # 8 to reread all of Rod Smith's work, and to write a "reading" of it (a strategy Bruce has used in many responses to other poets). As those will know who have read Bruce's piece in the newsletter, Bruce takes lines from all of Rod's poetry and orders them anew as sentences, then adds bracketed metacommentary in between some of the sentences. The sentences are organized into prose chunks that Bruce then supplies his own titles to. The titles match-up with familiar categories in Bruce's poetics: representation, nonrepresentation, mediation, praxis, and so on. Bruce's "dialogue" with Rod's work, then, is formal, in the sense that "Rod Smith" is wholly "read" through a grid of Bruce's poetics -- it is "dialogue with Rod," on Bruce's terms. The terms are, in fact, the fifteen terms of Bruce's latest writing project, "the millenium project," which he read from the other night, terms which stem from his "Tips for Totalizers" essay in _Paradise & Method_, an essay that was formulated, he says, during the writing of _Lip Service_ (unpublished). Bruce calls his piece on Rod, "Aerializing."
>
> He mailed it to Rod (Bruce does not use email).
>
> So, Rod had to respond to Bruce. Rod's response to Bruce and contribution to the newsletter is poetry, and a piece called "introduction" to Bruce Andrews's writings. Rod could have read Bruce through a grid of Rod's poetics, if Rod's poetics were in some sense structural like that. But that Rod reads Bruce already occurs by default, formally, in Rod's poetry. The lead poem by Rod, in the newsletter, a funny poem, "Taboo gratitude," is marked "for Bruce." Especially when Rod read his work the other night here in Philly, I could hear an Andrews-like organizing of minimal units of maximally-differentiated sound (which is not as apparent on the page, since Rod uses spacing and linebreaks, which emphasize single words and phrases, whereas Bruce's prose fuses sounds in a more apparent way due to the words' proximal syntactic relations).

> What Rod somewhat thematizes, as an additional component to "dialogue" understood as formal influence, is gratitude (in his lead poem's title, and in the very idea of an essay as "introduction"). Rod presents an affect, that he addresses to Bruce, but also problematizes, as in some sense a "taboo" affect. Is this gratitude as much directed to Bruce as to what Bruce represents when he theorizes poetry through his theoretical grids? Is there some nostalgic return, in the title, "Taboo gratitude," to a memory of theory's role in poetry, for Rod--as in his book title, _In Memory of My Theories_? Affect in Rod's poetry generally is perhaps in some sense a reflexive realization of a _fall_ out of "theory" and into something that has no name as such, but is full of affect. In this his poetic affect is not simply a return to the New York School. The extremes in Bruce - of linguistic "mess" (a good word Rod uses in his intro) and ideational structure - find a middle ground, in some non-middle-road sense, in Rod's work.
>
> *So, I think one could extend from their sense of dialogue, a sense which results from material constraints on their practices (that Bruce does not have email, that Bruce mails a completed piece to Rod, partly becuase he does not have email, which makes correspondence easier, etc) to think about their work in general. One little point. Formally, how can one not feel at least in a minour but systemic way, other than flattered, if one were Rod, and received one of Bruce's essays incorporating all of one's work (the "Aerializing" essay)? Almost as if Bruce's version of "dialogue" admits, affectively, one type of response: gratitude. But flattery is not necessarily a productive poetic affect to write from, and is in a way taboo for practicioners, and especially to Bruce's practice as he writes about it by means of his grids.*

Anyway. Something like that.

I'm very grateful that noone has felt outraged to have never received the Phillytalks newsletter, or to have received it only sporadically. Not only is PT a moderated forum, small as it is; it is also "censured," and thwarted, and edited, daily, and in the very love-labor of its production, by such factors as costs of mailing and distribution, reproduction of the page as material surface of inscription, curation, editing, proofing, etc. And in none of these aspects is it unique.

louis

↑ Index

468. Tom Orange
labels and referentiality
Sat 12 Dec 1998

anselm writes of how a formal description (altho arguably "abstract" suggests to me something of content as well) of french verse is / can be applied, largely exclusively, to current american poetics, and further suggests that this is done as something of a convenient labelling of (or "coralling") such work, "that much of what qualifies these days as poetic discourse is overly dictated by the freedom to assign labels to people, poems, forms, etc.", and that such labels are ultimately pretty meaningless.

i agree with these sentiments and suggest an approach to labelling as an heuristic, as a way of furthering investigation within a milieu or frame of reference -- a frame which should, in the last instance (and with apologies for the heideggerian-derridianism), be held under erasure.

as i suggested earlier, i take "abstract french lyric" to refer to the work of albiach, royet-journoud, et al. but who is meant when this is applied to current american work? i certainly don't have an exhaustive list, but for me, i can take, as example, two to whom this label might apply: gale nelson, claire needell.

how might this label apply to these two writers? well, there's a sparseness to their work, a kind of evacuation, an "abstraction" from (pulling away from, removal from), for lack of a better term, poetic reference. "shall we avoid analogy?", the french dictum asks, and the practical answer leaves the barest of referents both semantically and visually on the page.

now why apply this label, aside from the obvious answer that it seems an appropriate albeit very general level of descriptive poetics. well for me, it's an heuristic, it gets me going in a direction, it situates the writing within a milieu, so if someone were to ask me what the work of gale nelson or claire needell is like, i might be able to give her some sense of how i read them by referring to an "abstract lyric like that of albiach or royet-journoud."

however, beyond the general descriptive level, there is also a more material level at which this milieu can be seen to work. nelson and needell are both published by burning deck, which publishes english translations of much "abstract french lyric poetry" and is owned and operated by the waldrops who themselves translate much of this work for other presses like awede, post-apollo, etc.

now obviously delimiting such a milieu can only get us so far: nelson and needell do work that can't be contained within these descriptive and material levels; burning deck publishes work that similarly cannot be contained. i could further complicate things by adding another writer to the two already mentioned, namely barbara guest, whom i think, from fair realism to defensive rapture and finally quill solitary apparition, moves progressively into a more evacuated poetics -- reinforced materially by the fact that while the first of the two above-mentioned books are from sun and moon, the third is from post-apollo (albiach's most recent english publisher); and perhaps undermined materially by the bulk of guest's prior work in the manner of the "new york school".

the danger in labels, i think, comes when they are used less for heuristic purposes and more for value judgments. i think the "abstract french lyric" tag, applied to current american work, can be and is used (as anselm suggests) in a belittling or pejorative sense.

now in another context, mark prejsnar writes:

> most of the stuff i see coming out, if it fails to have sufficient focus on a "theme" or "subject", that seems to have as much to do with poor or unrealized writing, as with any intent to be abstract or nonreferential...

let me say i admit the gist of what mark is saying here: there is a real danger to simply taking up uncritically what albiach or any other writer does. i dont agree that "un-poor" or "realized" writing must demonstrate a "sufficient focus" on theme or subject. but this is a whole other matter.

my problem is this: i can delimit a milieu of abstract french lyric tendancies in current american poetics, one which i think can be resonably and objectively challenged, and which can only get you so far until you start dealing in specifics; but i wonder how to delimit "poor or unrealized writing"... whether it's "abstract" and "french" or, to take mark's example, jeff clark.

and i mean this as a sincere question -- my jury, like mark's i think, is still out on clark's book. and tho i like mark's description of why the clark book does not work for him, i don't wish to take up that book again cuz i posted on it some months ago and have not revisited it since. i'd rather work it from this abstract french lyric angle, and pose the question this way:

how does one decide when a current american abstract french lyric is "successful" and when it is not, when it is simply abstract or nonreferential for abstraction's and nonreferentiality's sakes?

(i'll hint at my initial answer: i don't think we have sufficiently developed criteria for this yet beyond the "gut level"...)

(the same question applies, for me, to so-called post-language poetries as well, provided you pick terms other than "abstract" and "nonreferential" for your scope...)

thanks and bests,
t.
[redacted]

↑ Index

469. Dale Smith
The cat in the hat
Sat 12 Dec 1998

There is some weird tech glitch in the Listserv system because my original post of the Hat review was sent by me to the List on Dec 4, only to reach the List on Dec 12? In the interim, I rewrote the post and sent it on the 7th. That one didn't go public until the 10th. Another post on the same subject went immediately from my machine to the list on the 9th. Hopefully this will explain some of the repetition.

Joel, I am surprised two male editors produced an issue of women's writing. Aren't you? I don't see that every day. And what prompted the reviews I wrote was the writing within, which is exciting, and provides a rich contrast to the recent Moving Borders Anthology, which to me is limited in its presentation of women's writing. (How do you determine value, by the way, in a poem? How do you navigate (moderate?) your editorial decisions?)

In addition to using your "receptical theory of editing" (which I value because of the strange, long-shots that arrive out of nowhere), we solicit a good amount of work. And even when we solicit work from women we rarely receive as much as we had hoped. Although I don't share your egalitarian heart, I'm hip enough to read the conflicting and contradictory motivations and struggles for and against participation in a scene that desires experiemental art for political and social transformation. On one hand, sheer numbers strengthen the political movements, but at the loss of qualitative production. That quality, like value, varies for all of us, I think. And how our values (aesthetic and/or politic) are exchanged on the poetic market reveals the limits of our toleration. What Marjorie Perloff brought up some weeks ago is key to this. One can be tolerant of cultural struggles and intolerant of aesthetic practices that are used by some members of cultural groups to whom one is sympathetic.

Anyhow, this concerns represenations of the social, which I am interested in because, as an editor, these conflicts proliferate around me. Poetry has much wider concerns and its reality is limited by discourse in social environments.

Dale

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

470. dan raphael
Re: Baratier's Silliman question - Post-Lanpo
Sat 12 Dec 1998

At Bowling Green State, either fall of 74 or winter of 75, i took a class taught by ray dipalma that covered works by andrews, coolidge, silliman, & dipalma. dont remember what the name of the course was, but the term 'language poetry' definitely came up in that class.

↑ Index

471. Dale Smith
Addendum to the Cat's Hat
Sat 12 Dec 1998

Joel, I didn't mean to suggest that you or anyone else is packing pages of journals, chapbooks, books etc just for the sake of diversity, as if no selection, or qualitative decisions were being made. I think aesthetic decisions are being made all the time, decisions that are shaped by the dominant voices of the "avant-garde." What is your selection/solicitation process? How do you manage experimental product while living up to your own self-generated demands of art & cultural/political transformation?

For me the issues consist of: aesthetics--is this a poetics you respect; quality--how does an individual piece, even if it represents an aesthetic position you identify with, stand up to your own singular demands, and if it doesn't, what validates its inclusion in your journal; human diversity--does my journal reflect a range of human variety; impact--how will these pieces stand up in the cultural market, what will they represent of my process and spirit. More importantly, to what level, if any, have I produced a work of active dissent focused many places at once. I'm not interested in a journal's reception so much as its circulation of thought and emotion. Part of this is an active process. I am seeking all the time. The process is also passive; work falls out of the aether to challenge and confront my own good opinions.

I get confused when discussing the way certain groups are represented, because it's not my position to represent, but to reveal, in any way, the very complex diversity of human composition through the agency of poetic expression. I am dedicated to women's writing, but I don't make it my crusade; it's not a banner by which I wish to gain acceptence or approval from anyone.

I wrote:
>On one hand, sheer numbers strengthen the political movements, but at >the loss of qualitative production. That quality, like value, varies >for all of us, I think. And how our values (aesthetic and/or politic) >are exchanged on the poetic market reveals the limits of our >toleration.

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

472. Mark DuCharme

Re: Academy of the Future

Sat 12 Dec 1998

I'm a little behind in catching up with the Poetics List, & this may already have been responded to, but the "academy of the future" line is from the title poem in _Rivers & Mountains_. I'm pretty sure that "feminine, marvelous & tough" is not from any FOH poem; the line appears in _The Sonnets_ by Ted Berrigan, & may appear in other poems by Berrigan as well.

Mark DuCharme

>Could someone let me know what poem the line "The Academy of the Future
is >Opening its Doors" is from -- an Ashbery poem, I know, but which one?
And
>if you know for sure that the line "feminine, marvellous, and tough" is >"originally" from F. O'Hara, could you let me know which O'Hara poem it >is? Please backchannel responses to <[redacted]>. Much appreciated.
>

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

473. Karen Kelley

Re: poetics of impeachment

Sat 12 Dec 1998

> if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her?

Michael Palmer's _Sun_
Leslie Scalapino's _Considering How Exaggerated Music Can Be_ Ronald Johnson's _Ark_

↑ Index

474. George Thompson

non-referential poems for your consideration

Sat 12 Dec 1998

I'm sorry, I don't remember who it was, but someone earlier expressed doubt about the possibility of non-referential poems, or something like that [I have been deleting faster than Gabe Gudding shoots from the hip, I mean lip, lately, so I cannot recall the particular thread].

Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is 'referential'?

Twas brillig and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
All mimsy were the borogoves
And the mome raths outgrabe.

[this is from memory; hope I got it right].

OR, from Hugo Ball [not from memory]:

KARAWANE
jolifanto bambla o^ falli bambla
grossiga m'pfa habla horem
e'giga goramen
higo blioko russula huju
hollaka hollala
anlogo bung
blago bung
BlAGO BUNG
bosso fataka
ue ueue ue
schampa wulla wussa o'lobo
hej tatta go^rem
eschige zunbadq
wulubu ssubudu uluw ssubudu
tumba ba- umf
kusagauma
ba - umf

I think that there is a lot of non-referential poetry out there. I also think that there is a lot of non-referantial non-poetic discourse out there as well.

For example, when I slip on a banana peel and fall painfully on my ass, and as a result shout out "FUCK" in indignant anger, the utterance, it seems to me, is non-referential.

Am I wrong?

GT

↑ Index

475. Mark Weiss
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sat 12 Dec 1998

As to the Carroll, you got it right, and the reference--what he's sending up--is one of the genres derived by romantics from the Childe Ballads (La Belle Dame Sans Merci is an examole of an allied genre--all are a sort of folksy medievalism): the epic hero ballad. Apparent here in the metrics, and confirmed as such later in the poem. The Ball derives I think from subSaharan linguistic forms, but it speaks less to me. Years ago I heard Linda Parker read her "non-referential" poems and was profoundly moved. They seemed to me to be at the edge of having explicit content, although there were no recognizable words. Either my reaction was physiologically conditioned--that certain sound combinations produce certain reactions--or there was a referentiality in the sounds themselves. It would be interesting to tease out the referentiality if that's what it was, but I haven't done so.

At 08:01 PM 12/12/98 -0500, you wrote:
>I'm sorry, I don't remember who it was, but someone earlier expressed doubt >about the possibility of non-referential poems, or something like that [I >have been deleting faster than Gabe Gudding shoots from the hip, I mean >lip, lately, so I cannot recall the particular thread].
>
>Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is >'referential'?
>
>Twas brillig and the slithy toves
>Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
>All mimsy were the borogoves
>And the mome raths outgrabe.
>
>[this is from memory; hope I got it right].
>
>OR, from Hugo Ball [not from memory]:
>
>KARAWANE
>jolifanto bambla o^ falli bambla
>grossiga m'pfa habla horem

>e'giga goramen
>higo blioko russula huju
>hollaka hollala
>anlogo bung
>blago bung
>BlAGO BUNG
>bosso fataka
>ue ueue ue
>schampa wulla wussa o'lobo
>hej tatta go^rem
>eschige zunbadq
>wulubu ssubudu uluw ssubudu
>tumba ba- umf
>kusagauma
>ba - umf
>
>I think that there is a lot of non-referential poetry out there. I also >think that there is a lot of non-referantial non-poetic discourse out there >as well.
>
>For example, when I slip on a banana peel and fall painfully on my ass, and >as a result shout out "FUCK" in indignant anger, the utterance, it seems to >me, is non-referential.
>
>Am I wrong?
>
>GT
>
>

↑ Index

476. Randy Prunty
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

<< if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy > him/her? >>

Trimmings, Harryette Mullen

↑ Index

477. schuchat
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sat 12 Dec 1998

> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her? >>

O'Hara, LOVE POEMS (TENTATIVE TITLE)

↑ Index

478. Leonard Brink
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sat 12 Dec 1998

> Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is 'referential'?
>
> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.

Well, for starters, "brillig" refers to a time of day (approximately 4 pm) and "slithy toves" refers to toves that are both slippery and lithe.

↑ Index

479. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her? >>

Creeley For Love
Di Prima, Dinners and Nightmares

↑ Index

480. Kathy Lou Schultz
Re: The Hat
Sun 13 Dec 1998

I find this to be an interesting, yet odd problem. At Lipstick Eleven, we receive numerous submissions from women. But don't forget, you can always solicit work if you're having problems with "representation" in your mix of writers. Publish women and more women will follow. Kathy Lou Dale Smith wrote:

>
> I read Jordan Davis and Chris Edgar's first issue of The Hat this > morning, which I like for its focus and consistency of tone and > 'spirit.' Two male editors publishing a first issue with only women is > quite notable and the results are not what I expected. (Hoa came into > my room last night with a stack in one hand of poetry submissions from > men and in the other ONLY one piece from a woman). So, I understand > building an issue of women's writing is no easy task. To find a > grouping of work that corresponds or echoes internally is difficult > enough. Restricting that to a particular, traditionally > under-represented gender, is moreso.
>
>

↑ Index

481. George Bowering
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her? >>
>
> Trimmings, Harryette Mullen

A Gentle Northern Winter by George Stanley

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

482. Jim Bennett
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sun 13 Dec 1998

-----Original Message-----

>> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you >> buy him/her? >>
>
Obsession - Ramsey Campbell

Men are from Mars etc..

Drums At New Brighton (1999) - Jim Bennett (well I would)

Jim

Click on this link to vote for my site. http://conline.net/vote.mv?id=1780

Click on this link to visit my site.
http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Academy/1127/

"Poetry is what the future makes of it." John Garner

↑ Index

483. George Thompson
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is 'referential'?
>
> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.
>
> Well, for starters, "brillig" refers to a time of day (approximately 4 pm) and "slithy toves" refers to toves that are both slippery and lithe.

I don't think so. 'Brillig' in fact is simply filling certain slots [metrical, syntactic, narrative, etc.] in a linguistic structure, a machine, or if you want a poem.

Maybe those of us who have a vague sense of the history of the language can detect a Germanic suffix in the sequence '-ig' at the end of 'brillig'. With that in mind, as well as the phonic association with 'brilliant' and maybe even memories of Old French, we still wouldn't know that this is a word in English except for its position after 'twas'. The point, I think, is that we could put ANYTHING in this slot, and as long as it satisfies all the relevant metrical, syntactic, and narrative requirements, it would WORK. That is, it would mean "a time of day (approximately 4 pm)", or something similar.

The same applies to 'slithy' and 'tove' and in fact to all of the other so-called reference words in the poem.

Speak of erasure. Carroll has erased all reference here, leaving only the function words that have value only within a given linguistic system. We recognize the '-s' at the end of 'toves' as a plural marker. It is a very familiar morpheme in English, of course. But it has no reference to anything outside of the universe of the English language. Neither does 'twas'.

As Mark Weiss suggests, it WOULD be interesting to tease out the so-called referentiality here, if that is that it is.

GT

↑ Index

484. Randy Prunty
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sun 13 Dec 1998

<< >Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is >>'referential'?
>>
>>Twas brillig and the slithy toves
>>Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
>>All mimsy were the borogoves
>>And the mome raths outgrabe.

Leonard Brink writes: >Well, for starters, "brillig" refers to a time of day (approximately 4 >pm) and "slithy toves" refers to toves that are both slippery and lithe.

George Thompson writes:
>> I don't think so. 'Brillig' in fact is simply filling certain slots [metrical, syntactic, narrative, etc.] in a linguistic structure, a machine, or if you want a poem. ....Speak of erasure. Carroll has erased all reference here, leaving only the function words that have value only within a given linguistic system. We recognize the '-s' at the end of 'toves' as a plural marker. It is a very familiar morpheme in English, of course. But it has no reference to anything outside of the universe of the English language. Neither does 'twas'.<<

It seems that more than nouns and adjectives are referential. "did" refers to a sense of curiousity or a statement that something has happened. "all" refers to inclusivity. "were" refers to the past. and so on. so it seems to me that this poem still is referential even if the lexical words are as George says. And maybe the question should be REFERENTIAL FOR WHOM? If Leonard says that

"brillig" refers to 4pm for him, then I guess it does, though it apparently does not for George.

Randy

↑ Index

485. charles alexander
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sun 13 Dec 1998

At 12:48 AM 12/13/98 -0500, you wrote:
>> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you >> buy him/her? >>

Phyllis Webb, Naked Poems
Robert Duncan, The Opening of the Field

↑ Index

486. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sun 13 Dec 1998

On Sun, 13 Dec 1998, George Thompson wrote:

> Speak of erasure. Carroll has erased all reference here, leaving only the function words that have value only within a given linguistic system. We recognize the '-s' at the end of 'toves' as a plural marker. It is a very familiar morpheme in English, of course. But it has no reference to anything outside of the universe of the English language. Neither does 'twas'.

Tove is my wife's name. A fairly common Scandinavian female name. Slippery, someone said?

↑ Index

487. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Jennifer on Republicans
Sun 13 Dec 1998

This is great Alan. Have you seen Star Trek "Insurrection?" The bad guys are stretching their skin trying to stay young and every time they become enraged over not getting their way, blood spurts out of tears in their forehead.

A. Jenn Sondheim wrote:
>
> =

>
> why i'm dead meat, by jennifer
>
> Republicans ooze from their heads what is left of soul's rubbish
> i could not stand to be in a room with one of them
> they are objects for me, they reek of flesh gone sour
> i would be a lichen to their rock, corroding their violent granite
> they would kill everyone with guns and they are all white men
> every last one of them, no matter what drear affirmation > white men filled with dead pus: they stomp the children of the poor, > rape pollution laws, guarantee we'll drown the world in poison.
> we're raped with rusted guns from world war two three four
> while they fight the righteous fight against women sex longing > holding dead children on sticks to slap us with, banner banner
> big money big money
> i couldn't stand to party with righteousness
> i couldn't stand to fuck righteousness but their holes are closed
> they have no holes, shit leaks from their mouths,
> piss leaks from their eyes, they write vomit
> they are a real danger, never forget this, behind words > are guns and mobs and real men, you never forget a real man
> when you look into his dead dead eyes, when you see a Republican > on the road, kill it, it is not quite human
>
> - Jennifer

↑ Index

488. Lawrence Upton.
Writers Forum
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Writers Forum has over 800 publications out in print but is not on the net.
On its behalf, here are some recent additions etc
*
All orders / enquiries to New River Project, 89a Petherton Road, London N5 2QT
*
COLLABORATIONS FOR PETER FINCH by Lawrence Upton & Bob Cobbing, ISBN 0 86162
784 9, Writers Forum, October 1997, having been out of print for some months, has been reprinted. This is an offshoot of the Domestic Ambient Noise, parts of which was first published by Object Permanence # 8

*
DOUBLE REFLEX by Bob Cobbing & Lawrence Upton, ISBN 0 86162 844 6, December 1998; £1.00 plus p & p
*
DEAD ROADS YOU'LL NEVER USE AGAIN by Lawrence Upton & Bob Cobbing, ISBN 0 86162 845 4, December 1998; £1.00 plus p & p
*
DAN DIPTYCH ISBN 0 86162 846 2, Writers Forum, December 1998, 75p plus p & p - This is the text used in the performance Alaric Sumner wrote about the other day

↑ Index

489. Emily Lloyd
(no subject)
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.

Re:syllables/sounds that refer: "The Red Pencil"'s an obnoxious little daily column squeezed onto The Washington Post's Comics page, written by "[redacted]." A month back or so, "wrytor" laid down the line on the sounds of words & what they trigger. The sounds in "melody," it was written, make more people "smile" than the sounds in "thatched" (there was no evidence of a survey, of course). "Wrytor" went on to suggest that it would "behoove poets" to choose words with sounds that "people like" when crafting their poems. Most "atch" words were on the short-lived list I kept of words I liked for their sounds. "Melody" certainly was not, & "lily melody" sure made me grunt when a friend ran my name through an anagram program.

Separately: a linguist I know is currently working on a book about nonsense words "in English." His not-so-ambitious thesis is that nonsense words written by English writers don't (or rarely do) contain sounds that aren't already "acceptable" or "recognizable" to the English reader/speaker. And that we tend to make "bad-guy" aliens, if they're speaking a language (written by an English speaker), which translates to "if they're speaking nonsense," sound vaguely like speakers of languages from whatever country "we're" ("nation-wide") most afraid of or pissed at when the language/nonsense is created. Germans, Russians, etc.; he's got all the proof needed there. The "sounds already acceptable" applies to the Carroll; as another lister (which?) pointed out, that makes "The Jabberwocky" at least refer to the English language. And it was written for English readers. I'm curious as to whether Carroll's poem (surely the book it appears in must've been) has been translated into another written/spoken language: anyone know? I'm curious as to how nonsense words are represented in signed languages. Simply spelled out in the letters of the signer's country? Are there any "nonsense words" peculiar to signed languages? Anyone know?

Yet another lister (forgive me, I'm stil learning this new e-mail acct & can't retrieve the msg while composing) wrote "My wife's name is Tove...Did someone say slippery"? Did someone on the list? If so, I missed it. Carroll said slithy. As much as I hate to admit anything to "wrytor," it seems as if sounds & syllables do refer, if only because readers are tempted to make them refer. The Bernstein quote that started off the whole non-referentiality hubbub makes more sense in this context: "the reader's misplaced urge to 'make sense' of poetry." Replace "poetry" with "nonsense."

I know I've always gotten a swampy, slippery feeling from that first stanza of "Jabberwocky," even when I became aware that it was intended as a send-up. I've also always "felt" that the nouns "refer" to creatures/animals: mome raths, toves, borogoves...not inanimate objects, I suppose, because of the verbs, the "fact" that the nouns are verbing. Yet "outgrabe" could easily be read as an adj., say "All pink were the borogoves, and the mome raths grey." Yet I've never read it that way, never "felt" it that way. I'm in no way prepared to agree with "wrytor" that the sounds of words are "pleasant" or "unpleasant" in & of themselves. If more people like the sounds in "melody" than in "thatched," I'd call that a response to what the words, not the syllables, refer to. Or at least, I would very much want to. Yet the sounds in "The Jabberwocky" combine in such a way as to give me an overall sense of "swampiness," and I'd be interested to find out if others out there have "felt" this "sense," or another sense--say, an urban one. Or "felt" no "sense" at all--felt the words entirely non-referential. It pisses me off that I'm not capable of "not getting a feeling" about the sense of those words & syllables, that I'm a captive of referrals, that "slithy" might make me hear "slippery" and "slimy" and think "slithy" a stronger "English word" for making me feel both those two words and something else--say the excitement, or say the nausea, of an unrecognizable word...

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

490. Billy Little seducers
Sun 13 Dec 1998

>> << if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you >> buy him/her? >>
>
>
Vita Nuova Dante
Amores Ovid
Catullus by Louis Zukofsky
Twenty Love Poems Pablo Neruda
Gypsy Guitar David McFadden
Art of Love Kenneth Koch
Kathy Goes To Haiti Kathy Acker
g. John Berger
Hermetic Definitions H. D.
More Pansies D.H. Lawrence

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

491. Lawrence Upton.
(no subject)
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Apologies. I didn't quite manage to write the following in English -

COLLABORATIONS FOR PETER FINCH by Lawrence Upton & Bob Cobbing, ISBN 0 86162 784 9, Writers Forum, October 1997, having been out of print for some months, has been reprinted. This is an offshoot of the Domestic Ambient Noise; parts of it were first published by Object Permanence # 8

All orders / enquiries to New River Project, 89a Petherton Road, London N5 2QT, UK. Send s.a.e. / i.r.c. with enquiries please

↑ Index

492. Bob Grumman
syllable-sounds
Sun 13 Dec 1998

In disagreement with Emily, I'm convinced that there are naturally- pleasant sounds. There is research, I'm fairly sure, to corraborate this, but I'm going by experience and vague memory of a lot of reading in or near the subject. I think the "euphony" of "ah," "oh" and "ooo" is widely-recognized and follows from these sounds being baby- sounds, and unbelligerant; "aah," "ih," "eh" and similar sounds are normally associated in nature with threatening sounds, or sick sounds. Compare a baby's cooing with adult rage or the sound of someone barfing. Similarly with consonants: sibilants sound "nicer" than harsher sounds (the name of which escapes me)--because harsher sounds are more usually part of growls, etc. Also, "nice" sounds are generally, perhaps always, easier to say than harsh ones.

For the same reason, I contend that there are naturally harmonic chords, though this gets into the structure of the human auditory system. Primary colors, too, are naturally more appealing than secondary colors.

So, the argument comes back, why do I prefer lime green to blue. Because we mature out of simple, natural "good taste," especially those of us who are artists, or aesthetically-sensitive. Too much of a good thing equals boredom, so we come to like discord as a hedge against boredom. There are all kinds of further complications I don't have time to get into. Just wanted to throw out the cocktail-party- level preliminaries.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

493. louis stroffolino
Re: The Hatters
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Everybody is making an assumption that Chris Edgar is a male...
It isn't like her name is Edgar Chris

↑ Index

494. Leonard Brink
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> << >Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is 'referential'?

> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.
>
> Leonard Brink writes: >Well, for starters, "brillig" refers to a time of day (approximately 4 > pm) and "slithy toves" refers to toves that are both slippery and lithe.
>
> George Thompson writes:
> I don't think so. 'Brillig' in fact is simply filling certain slots

For what it's worth, I wasn't just gyring and gimbling. If memory serves, it was Lewis Carroll who said those words referred to those things.

Mimsily,

Leonard

↑ Index

495. Emily Lloyd
Re: syllable-sounds
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Bob G wrote: >>>sibilants sound "nicer" than harsher sounds (the name of which escapes me)--because harsher sounds are more usually part of growls, etc. Also, "nice" sounds are generally, perhaps always, easier to say than harsh ones.<<<

But do sibilants sound nicer to speakers of all, or even most, languages? The German "Ich" sounds a bit like someone gagging, but its "Gott" sounds firm and strong compared to "Dieu"'s 'boneless string of vowels.' French is so smooth that (oh forgive me, French posters) it can sound like someone murmuring English in her sleep. A British friend tells me that after a year in Russia, English sounds choppy, clumsy, disjunct. Nice sounds are easier to say than harsh ones for whom? Those whose languages do not include many harsh ones...(?)

>>For the same reason, I contend that there are naturally harmonic chords, though this gets into the structure of the human auditory system.<< Oh, Bob, we do disagree! Play nothing but atonal music for a month or so and it sounds "correct" in the body; my old electronic music prof actually felt (at least, I believed it when I saw it) physical pain if one played a C-major chord on the piano. I've felt a bit queasy on hearing them after lengthy forays into non-harmonic listening. I'd hate to chalk up my preference for such music to my "good taste," to having become bored with more "natural" chords...I

chalk it first to (assigned) immersion, and not-too-long after that, a feeling/conviction that it was what was "natural" (read: sounded good) to me now. Did I need to be immersed in harmonic music before it felt "right" to my body? I have no idea; I was immersed in it before I was born, and while a cooing baby...one more question for the wild boy of Aveyron...

I'm glad for your good arguments for disagreement, though; I even agree with some of 'em. No question that I'd rather hear a cooing baby than a puking adult. But what if adorable babies sounded like puking adults, and puking adults sounded like cooing babies? At any rate, it's all tangled up in referentiality & nature vs. nurture & heavenly labia, oops, -ls, in a world of gutturals. And whatever the oops purports, I'm one of those who thinks "it's" a choice...

best, em

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

496. Jason Nelson
the words of cb
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Oh list,

A few day ago, as days do, a Mr. charles bernstein posted a rather long mentioning of various things. I was rather, then rather empty that day.

So to eleviate things or other things I took some of his words and hid them. I kept the others that seemed to fit together best in the following badly fitting inter-textual poem: I don't have a title: can they suggest or is that a throat problem.

(possibly: a title?) (Oh, and this is just part one, enjoy as enjoy goes)

This is untrue,

the subscriber going numerous past, the end while the two or one were twice detailing correspondence.

But I haven't, because I considered at a certain point. You realize matter into something ideological a disservice , indeed serious’, accusationmight.

Even such a formidable as the end would be not clairvoyant. The more obvious conclusion might have=asked to observe as four consolidating.

Their posts realize a second else.

Unambiguously manifest she or he no intention abiding by the basic. Decisively. You are wrong.

Gabriel Gudding's status has never been.
And his ability directly is the same as anyone reading would aware.

There was the assumption. Considerable and providing are guilty of something and, er, know to find ways.

I realize those and most do something=again.
They spoke of the list being tone, tended or scolding and ignored.

Hectoring tones described to me, over and again, the space for one thing. I was committed Having the list be=even the tiniest amount. Intervention, the most unassailable grounds, and compliance, the stated firestorm

The fact is -- I realize.

Anyone else=irony. Here.
The few men address about=the needs and those who want an unlimited I.
history rather number by exactly

Belligerent is anyone in one way or another. People rarely focused on recently.

The tendency is however. It= is but also the of=to.

things being what things being,

Jason Nelson

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

497. MAYHEW
pseudo-reference
Sun 13 Dec 1998

I didn't mean to suggest that all language is referential (in my post that helped get this thread going), just that this wasn't a useful discriminator for L=a=n=g poetry (e.g. all language poetry is non-referential). Yvor Winters wrote about psuedo-reference apropos of certain lines of Eliot and other modern poets. In other words, you can refer to something that doesn't exist and for which there is no context for the reader to identify. L. Carroll was doing something similar--by syntax "brillig" has to refer to a time of day or season of the year, etc.. In some sense the reader* wants* this to be referential, even in absence of specifiable referent. Blue psuede-shoe-referentiality.

Where can I get a copy of The Hat? I have deleted original announcement if there was one. Also, in my misremembering of teaching Reagan to count backwards by sevens I had substituted 8, associating this number with his two presidential terms (8 years)--another sort of pseudo-reference perhaps. Also I remember an essay by G. Davenport on Olson's Kingfisher--to the effect that several individuals who had recommended him the poem in the strongest possible terms had no idea what it was about referentially--for example no one could tell him who "Fernand" was.

Jonathan

↑ Index

498. David Zauhar

Re: poetics of impeachment (pomes fer cortin')

Sun 13 Dec 1998

> At 12:48 AM 12/13/98 -0500, you wrote:
> if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her?

James Schuyler, the Selected or the Collected.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"Opaque melodies that would bug most people, Music from the other side of the fence."

--Captain Beefheart

↑ Index

499. Judy Roitman

Re: non-referential poems for your consideration

Sun 13 Dec 1998

> Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is 'referential'?
>
> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe

> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.
>
> Well, for starters, "brillig" refers to a time of day (approximately 4 pm) and "slithy toves" refers to toves that are both slippery and lithe.
>
> I don't think so. 'Brillig' in fact is simply filling certain slots [metrical, syntactic, narrative, etc.] in a linguistic structure, a machine, or if you want a poem.
>
> Maybe those of us who have a vague sense of the history of the language can detect a Germanic suffix in the sequence '-ig' at the end of 'brillig'. With that in mind, as well as the phonic association with 'brilliant' and maybe even memories of Old French, we still wouldn't know that this is a word in English except for its position after 'twas'. The point, I think, is that we could put ANYTHING in this slot, and as long as it satisfies all the relevant metrical, syntactic, and narrative requirements, it would WORK. That is, it would mean "a time of day (approximately 4 pm)", or something similar.
>
> The same applies to 'slithy' and 'tove' and in fact to all of the other so-called reference words in the poem.
>
> Speak of erasure. Carroll has erased all reference here, leaving only the function words that have value only within a given linguistic system. We recognize the '-s' at the end of 'toves' as a plural marker. It is a very familiar morpheme in English, of course. But it has no reference to anything outside of the universe of the English language. Neither does 'twas'.
>
> As Mark Weiss suggests, it WOULD be interesting to tease out the so-called referentiality here, if that is that it is.
>
> GT

But I can _picture_ all of this! In fact, if I could draw, I could draw a picture of all this.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

500. Judy Roitman
(no subject)
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> Separately: a linguist I know is currently working on a book about nonsense words "in English." His not-so-ambitious thesis is that nonsense words written by English writers don't (or rarely do) contain sounds that aren't already "acceptable" or "recognizable" to the English reader/speaker. And that we tend to make "bad-guy" aliens, if they're speaking a language (written by an English speaker), which translates to "if they're speaking nonsense," sound vaguely like speakers of languages from whatever country "we're" ("nation-wide") most afraid of or pissed at when the language/nonsense is created.

I was listening to NPR the other morning when someone speaking an indigenous Indonesian language came on --- you know, the 10 second snippet before the translator starts in --- and I thought of course! the bar scene in star wars! that's where they got it from!

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

501. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap
Re: The Hat/that women writers write to wear
Sun 13 Dec 1998

J Kuszai wrote:
>
> dale, hoa, & other editors:
>
> thanks for the description of The Hat. You mention that Jordan and Chris > (two boys) haved edited an issue of a magazine with all women poets. Why > is this a surprise? While it may be unusual, I think it is only as one > famously male's male's male would say, "apropos." Women, generally, are > doing much more interesting writing these days, and have been since the > 70s.

I want to second J's response here and once more sugest to those that haven't to GET (now!) Margy Sloan's MOVING BORDERS anthology: 3 decades of innovative writing by women. As I continue to read through it I am moved by the language of the poets here--from the amazing Neidecker piece to Diane Ward to Cole Swenson to Waldrop to....the end of the alphabet.

By the By--what was anyone's reaction to the New York Times Magazine article on Laser Tech. detective work (2 weeks ago--sunday) on Emily Dickinson's letters and poems regarding her sister/in/law/lover etc and/or the rest? The article focused on the "personal" as overriding the public art of Beethoven (or his privates--his love life as evidenced by hair strands and the DNA test that might prove he had syph.) and Emily Dickinson's "external" life as evidence by new laser "readings " of her work.....

---

yours,

Todd Baron
(ReMap)

↑ Index

502. Bob Grumman
Re: syllable-sounds
Sun 13 Dec 1998

Back to you briefly, Emily:

I would guess that sibilants (and "silibants" wasn't a typo, but I saw it was wrong as soon as I saw myself quoted, so I guess there's hope for me) initially sound nicer to all human beings, and maybe even mammals. But language is hugely complex, and expressiveness much more important than euphony. My bottom-line point, strongly on nature's side versus nurture, is that we start in all sensory modalities with simple near-universal likes, and grow away from them into various levels of complexity. Gustatory likes seem this way, though influenced by each person's physiology. In music I suspect all humans initially prefer chords whose component notes are in a simply harmonic relation to each other. Maybe the ratios would vary from one culture to another, but not the fact of simple ratios. I'll bet that truly atonal music is an acquired taste in all cultures. I'm sure repetition is the basis of pleasure--and of boredom; so some but not too much repetition is best. A note an octave above another would initially seem most pleasurable to a baby, I believe, once the baby has become bored with the second note's repetition.

Nice sounds are easier to say than harsh ones for whom? For everyone. I'm just referring to how much one has to open one's mouth and shape it, etc., to say a sound; by this criterion, vowels are more pleasant than consonants--except for a cat's purr, of course. Sibilants are easier to say than--still can't recall the word.

Metric verse is initially more pleasurable than non-metric, all else kept equal. But there's the danger of boredom. And the problem of losing other values through over-concentration on meter.

Sure, acquired tastes eventually feel natural. And the too-simple unpleasant. I remember working at a place that played a muzak station; fifty employee and I remember feeling rather superior because only I and a grad student in music who was working there part-time complained about it. It really did make me almost physically ill. I even purposely turned on the computer press (back then big and noisy and I wasa computer operator) because I preferred its sound to that of the "music," most of whose melodies I liked! And I still have trouble believing people who tell me that pop music is just noise. To me its problem is that it's too innocuous, too much the predictable opposite of noise.

I think if puking adults sounded like cooing babies do now and happy babies sounded like puking adults do now, we would naturally hear puking sounds as pleasant, cooing as unpleasant--except for the klinker that cooing is an easy sound to make (the long o, I would say, is the easiest sound to make, then the u in cooing--and both, come to think of it, come into play when one is hurt), so babies by my reasoning would not naturally make puking sounds to express content, nor puking's sounds (biologically "chosen" to alarm others into helping, I believe, and thus not likely to be innocuous) likely to be simple coos.

No more. Too complicated for less than a book--and easier access to more research, etc., than I have!!!

--Bob G.

↑ Index

503. Gwyn McVay
Re: syllable-sounds
Sun 13 Dec 1998

>A note an octave above another would initially seem most pleasurable to a baby, I believe, once the baby has become bored with the second note's repetition.<

This being the case, then why don't infants flip for /West Side Story/, with that octave jump on "Ma-RI-a"?

Gwyn,
just another alto singing the boring part for the sake of harmony

↑ Index

504. Gwyn McVay
the bar scene
Sun 13 Dec 1998

>>>indigenous Indonesian language came on --- you know, the 10 second snippet before the translator starts in --- and I thought of course! the bar scene in star wars! that's where they got it from!

Judy, Lucas is not shy about sampling Earthling languages; in the non-climatic climactic battle scene in the last of the three movies, Lando Calrissian says something urgent to his fish-jowled copilot, who responds in some genuine African language, I want to say Swahili--"Ten thousand herds of elephants are standing on my foot!"

Combine that with the Star Trek episode about a planet of beings who speak only in metaphor, and you're off.

Gwyn

↑ Index

505. Rachel Loden
"My NAME is Alice, but-- "
Sun 13 Dec 1998

"It's a stupid name enough!" Humpty Dumpty interrupted impatiently. "What does it mean?"

"MUST a name mean something?" Alice asked doubtfully.

"Of course it must," Humpty Dumpty said with a short laugh: "MY name means the shape I am--and a good handsome shape it is, too. With a name like yours, you might be any shape, almost.'

*

"Of course you know your ABC?" said the Red Queen.

"To be sure I do." said Alice.

"So do I," the White Queen whispered: "we'll often say it over together, dear. And I'll tell you a secret--I can read words of one letter! Isn't THAT grand! However, don't be discouraged. You'll come to it in time."

*

OED:

'slithy, a.1 Obs.1
? var. of sleathy a.
1622 W. Whately God’s Husb. ii. 116 We make no great matter of the lower degrees of sinne, and so grow slithy, and fashionable, and dead in our confessions.

slithy (_____), a.2 Also †slythy. [Presumably a blend of slimy a. and lithe a.] A word invented by ‘Lewis Carroll’: ‘smooth and active’ (‘Carroll’, 1855, 140) and popularized esp. in phr. slithy toves from Through the Looking-Glass (1871). Also in subsequent allusive uses. 1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 Twas bryllyg and the slythy [1871: slithy] toves Did gyre and gymble in the wabe. 1920 ‘K. Mansfield’ Let. 27 Sept. (1928) II. 48, I watched him [sc. a lizard] come forth to-day–very slithy–and eat an ant. 1928 A. S. Eddington Nature of Physical World xiii. 291 Eight slithy toves gyre and gimble in the oxygen wabe; seven in nitrogen. 1937 G. Frankau More of Us 2 While the free-versifier gyres and gimbles The slithy tove–with his own ‘private symbols’. 1960 H. Marchand Categories x. 368 Lewis Carroll’s slithy.., chortle..have become common property. Shakespeare’s glaze (f. glare and gaze) has not. 1981 Time Out 2026 Mar. 54/1 Pity the slithy toves of academe.

tove (____).
A factitious word introduced by ‘Lewis Carroll’ (see quot. 18552).
Quot. 18551 also occurs in the first verse of ‘Jabberwocky’ in Through the Looking-Glass (1871) i. 21.
1855 [see slithy a.].
1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 142 Tove, a species of Badger. They had smooth white hair, long hind legs, and short horns like a stag: lived chiefly on cheese.
1928 [see slithy a.].
1937 G. Frankau More of Us 2 While the free-versifier gyres and gimbles The slithy tove–with his own ‘private symbols’.

gyre (_____), v. poet. Also 5, 7 gire.
[ad. L. gyrare, f. gyrus (see prec.).]
1. trans. To turn or whirl round. rare.
c1420 Pallad. on Husb. i. 327 The side in longe vppon the south, let sprede..gire hit from the colde west, if thow conne.
1628 Bp. Hall Rem. Wks. (1660) 25 With the spightful Philistim, he [the Devil] puts out both the eyes of our apprehension and judgement, that he may gyre us about in the Mill of unprofitable wickednesse.
1885 G. Meredith Diana Crossways xxii, She was out at a distance on the ebb-sands hurtled, gyred, beaten to all shapes.

† 2. To revolve round, compass. Obs.
c1420 Pallad. on Husb. x. 203 September is with Aprill houris euen, ffor Phebus lijk in either gireth heuen.
3. intr. To turn round, revolve, whirl, gyrate.
1593 Drayton Eclog. ii. 71 Which from their proper Orbes not goe, Whether they gyre swift or slow.
1598 Yong Diana 10 When to the west the sunne begins to gyre.
1633 P. Fletcher Purple Isl. ii. xxxvii, A..groom..Which soon the full-grown kitchin cleanly drains By divers pipes, with hundred turnings giring.
Ibid. iv. viii, Round about two circling altars gire In blushing red.
1808 J. Barlow Columb. iii. 785 Mutual strokes with equal force descend..now gyring prest High at the head, now plunging for the breast.
1814 Southey Roderick xii, The eagle’s cry, Who..at her highest flight A speck scarce visible, gyred round and round.
1871 ‘L. Carroll’ Through Looking-Glass i. 21 ’Twas brillig, and the slithy toves Did gyre and gimble in the wabe.
1920 W. B. Yeats Demon & Beast in Coll. Poems (1950) 210 To watch a white gull take A bit of bread thrown up into the air; Now gyring down and perning there.
1930 E. Pound XXX Cantos xxv. 114 Three lion cubs..which born at once began life and motion and to go gyring about their mother.
1951 S. Spender World within World v. 283 The bomber was gyring and diving.
Hence
'gyring vbl. n., revolution, gyration.
'gyring ppl. a., revolving, whirling, gyrating; also, encircling, encompassing; whence
'gyringly adv., with revolving motion.
1575 Laneham Let. (1871) 18 With sundry windings, gyrings, and circumflexions.
1590 Peele Polyhymnia 36 At the shock The hollow gyring vault of heaven resounds.
1594 J. Dickenson Arisbas (1878) 72 One colour teinteth all, Turrets, doores, and gyring wall.
1598 — Greene in Conc. (1878) 150 Wind-tossed waues which with a gyring course Circle the Centers-ouerpeering maine.
1635 Quarles Embl. iv. ii. (1718) 193 This gyring lab’rinth.
1635 Heywood Hierarch. ii. 63 They [the Heavens] alter in their gyring more or less.
a1640 Day Parl. Bees (1881) 76 The massie world..That on Gyreing [so

MS.] spheares is hurld.
1659 Torriano, A-gironda, giringly, about and about.

wabe (____).
A factitious word introduced by ‘Lewis Carroll’ (see quot. 18552).
1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 The slythy toves Did gyre and gymble in the wabe.
Ibid. 140 Wabe, (derived from the verb to swab or soak). ‘The side of a hill’ (from its being soaked by the rain).
1871 — Through Looking-Glass 24 The slithy toves Did gyre and gimble in the wabe.

mimsey (_____), a. dial. Also mimsy, mimzy. [f. mim a.: cf. clumsy, flimsy, tipsy.] ‘Prim, prudish; contemptible’ (E.D.D.). Lewis Carroll’s mimsy, which may be an invented word, has influenced all subsequent uses. 1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 All mimsy were the borogoves. Ibid. 140 Mimsy, (whence mimserable and miserable). ‘Unhappy.’ 1880 Antrim & Down Gloss., Mim, Mimsey, prim, prudish. 1895 S. Christian Sarah (ed. 4) 262 She is no mimzy miss to be scared, or a reed to break if you lean your hand on it. 1911 C. Mackenzie Passionate Elopement xxi. 186 Four shillings and sixpence, ma’am, for a little mimsy book not so thick as the magick history of Jack the Giant Killer. 1920 D. H. Lawrence Touch & Go 6 Good plays? You might as well say mimsy bomtittle plays, you’d be saying as much. 1933 W. de la Mare Lord Fish 171 Treading mimsey as a cat. 1934 Times Educ. Suppl. 24 Mar. p. iv/2 A people unimaginative enough to accept a mimsy and scrannel ‘P.R.’ in place of the organ music, the soul-uplifting harmony of ‘Proportional Representation’. 1936 Punch 10 June 650/1 ‘It’s the glamour of it,’ sighed Josephine. ‘Whenever I smell a programme I go quite mimsey–honestly I do.’ 1937 ‘N. Blake’ There’s Trouble Brewing i. 24 An affected mimsy sort of voice that she reserved presumably for cultural pronouncements: Nigel preferred her normal, unmitigated boom. 1956 J. Cannan People to be Found vii. 91 With horror they had seen the lawns of the Botanic Gardens torn up and replaced by a mimsy pseudo-Elizabethan rose-garden. 1963 Times 8 Feb. 14/3 Moreover his interpolated variation in the first act, danced to the normally unused andante of the pas de trois and consisting largely of slow pirouettes en attitude, looked as mimsy as the borogroves [sic], and could not be regarded as successful.

mome (____), a. A factitious word introduced by ‘Lewis Carroll’ (see quot. 1855). Also occurs in Through the Looking-Glass (1871) i. 21. 1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 All mimsy were the borogoves; And the mome raths outgrabe. Ibid. 140 Mome (hence solemome, solemone and solemn), ‘grave’. 1960 M. Gardner Annotated Alice 195/1 ‘Mome’ has a number of obsolete meanings such as mother, a blockhead,..none of which, judging from Humpty Dumpty’s interpretation, Carroll had in mind. 1970 R. D. Sutherland outgrabe (_____), v. A factitious word introduced by ‘Lewis Carroll’ (see quot. 18552). (In quot. 1903 used for ‘outdo’, after the style of out-Herod, etc.) Quot. 18551 also occurs in the first verse of ‘Jabberwocky’ in Through the Looking-Glass (1871) i. 21. 1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 All mimsy were the borogoves; And the mome raths outgrabe. Ibid. 140 Outgrabe, past tense of the verb to outgribe. (It is connected with the old verb to grike or shrike, from which are derived ‘shriek’ and ‘creak’.) ‘Squeaked.’ 1876 — Hunting of Snark v. 50 The Beaver had counted with scrupulous care, Attending to every word: But it fairly lost heart, and outgrabe in despair, When the third repetition occurred. 1903 Sat. Rev. 7 Feb. 164/1 Deadmanship! wrote..Dr. Shrapnel..; and the word is fit to stir the jealous admiration of Carlyle or even Lewis Carroll. Indeed Dr. Shrapnel ‘outgrabed’ them both.

Lang. & Lewis Carroll vii. 149 Humpty Dumpty is reporting the generally accepted meanings... The information he imparts is ‘as sensible as a dictionary’... He admits some difficulty with mome.

rath (____, ___), n.2 A factitious word introduced by ‘Lewis Carroll’ (see quot. 18552). Quot. 18551 also occurs in the first verse of ‘Jabberwocky’ in Through the Looking-Glass (1871) i. 21. 1855 ‘L. Carroll’ Rectory Umbrella & Mischmasch (1932) 139 All mimsy were the borogoves; And the mome raths outgrabe. Ibid. 140 Rath, a species of land turtle. Head erect: mouth like a shark: the fore legs curved out so that the animal walked on its knees: smooth green body: lived on swallows and oysters.

↑ Index

506. George Thompson

Re: non-referential poems for your consideration

Sun 13 Dec 1998

First of all, it was not Lewis Carroll who suggested that 'brillig' means 'four o'clock in the afternoon.' It was Humpty Dumpty. Now, this is the same egg who assured Alice that 'glory' means 'there's a nice knock-down argument for you' [Gabe Gudding, are you listening?].

When Alice questioned this meaning, H.D., of course, replied ['in a rather scornful tone'], 'When I use a word it means just what I choose it to mean -- neither more nor less.'

Seems like a lot of this list has the same theory of semantics that H.D. has. Me, I'm with Alice on this one. I know the difference between meaning and reference, for example [as for Carroll, he was rather close to Alice too, on this occasion as on others, and in fact I think he was teasing us about 'brillig'].

We are flirting with an interesting phenomenon here, though, as Jonathan Mayhew suggests in talking about pseudo-reference. He suggests that the reader wants 'brillig', etc., to be referential.

I don't question Judy Roitman's ability to _picture_, even draw in great detail, in response to Jabberwocky. I think I can too. That's one of this poem's great charms. But my point is that this picture that we see, that we want to see, so well, has been accomplished by a Rube Goldberg machine, I mean a poem, that has no real-world referenece in it.

We have recognizable meter and rhyme and stanza shape. We have utterly regular and standard syntax and grammatical structure. We have standard narrative conventions and cues at all of the right places. But, I think, we have no reference.

Tristan Tzara PROMISED that if you use one of our now old-favorite cut-up techniques to generate a random poem, 'THE POEM WILL BE LIKE YOU.'

What? Is this magic? Is it psychoanalysis? Is it poetic genius?

No, none of those.

It is, in my view, the autonomous play of language in our heads. To be more precise, it is the play of the phonemic, morphological, metrical, syntactic, etc., rules of a linguistic system that governs our minds far more strictly and pervasively than Charles Bernstein governs our list.

To toss in another big gun: as Heidegger also said, Die Sprache spricht [not us].

Language is one of those voodou loas that ride us, is my point.

Now I'll listen for a week.

seasons cheers to one and all [Henry too]

GT

↑ Index

507. Carla Billitteri

Announcing a new electronic journal . . .

Sun 13 Dec 1998

L A G N I A P P E

poetry and poetics in review

Edited by Graham Foust and Ben Friedlander

now available on-line at http://writing.upenn.edu/~foust/lagniappe.html

Issue no. 1 (Fall 1998) features an essay on sound and visual poetry by Michael Basinski and includes reviews by Chris Alexander, Carla Billitteri, Steve Evans, Benjamin Friedlander, Graham Foust, Brian Lampkin, Linda Russo and Robert Zamsky.

Books reviewed include:
Kevin Killian, _Argento Series_
Elaine Equi, _Friendship with Things_
Alice Notley, _Mysteries of Small Houses_
Barrett Watten, _Bad History_
Thomas Pepper, _Singularities_
Cole Swenson, _Noon_
Anselm Berrigan, _They Beat Me over the Head with a Sack_
Peter Jaeger, _Stretch Conflates_
Lisa Robertson, _Debbie: An Epic_
Theodore, Pelton, _Malcolm and Jack_ Mary Margaret Sloan, ed., _Moving Borders_
Mark Scroggins, ed., _Upper Limit Music_

Deadline for submissions for issue no. 2:
February 1, 1999

E-mail queries to:

[redacted] or [redacted]

Send material for review to:

Graham Foust or Ben Friedlander
Department of English
306 Clemens Hall
Buffalo, NY 14260

↑ Index

508. BETSY ANDREWS
Re: poetics of impeachment
Sun 13 Dec 1998

> if you were going to court a beloved, what poetry book would you buy him/her?

Christina Peri Rossi's EVOHE

↑ Index

509. Chris Nagler
Re: Louis Carroll, Hugo Ball, etc
Sun 13 Dec 1998

On the subject of nonsense words, there's a fascinating chapter in Friedrich Kittler's book _Discourse Networks:1800/1900_ that discusses nonsense words emergent function for psychophysics in the late nineteenth century. Kittler discusses the work of Hermann Ebbinghaus who conducted some of the first empirical research on memory by forcing himself to memorize strings of nonsense syllables (which he generated combinatorially) for hours every day for years, in order to quantify the amount of data a mind can retain. In this process, Ebbinghaus began losing his experiential memories as well as his ability to speak his native language: "For the sake of a few formulas, Ebbinghaus sacrificed (as Nietzche did for the desert) his subject of knowledge (psychophysics). Dizzy, numbed by all the syllables, his mind became a tabula rasa." But then, interestingly, Ebbinghaus performed the same experiment using, instead of nonsense syllables, cantos from Byron's Don Juan. He found that it made no difference to mnemonic retention whether he used nonsense or sense. "From this point of view it almost seems as if the difference between sense and nonsense material were not nearly so great as one would be inclined a priori to imagine." What is important in this is that meaning and nonmeaning (referentiality and non referentiality) become equal, as far as the mechanics of our perception is concerned. "If the difference between sense and nonsense dwindles, then the kingdom of sense -- that is the entire discourse network of 1800 -- sinks to the level of a secondary and exceptional phenomena." According to Kittler, the view that psychophysics could destroy the exotic mystery of meaning had great repercussions in the ways people conceive of culture and language, and especially poetry, in this century. "Instead of the classical question of what people would be capable of if they were adequately 'cultivated'', one asks what people have always been capable of when autonomic functions are singly and thoroughly tested." So, in a certain sense, interest falls away from culture, and lands on the body's own intelligible, involuntary posessions, its limits, its unconscious, etc. From this point on, the point of "truth" becomes the body which is in the process of "breaking down" ,"losing its faculties", going insane. Poetry (especially the poetry discussed in this thread: Louis Carroll, Hugo Ball; as well as Christian Morgenstern and others) latches on to this "truth of the body", and begins to imitate it. This is why Kittler says that much of the literature after 1900 is a "simulacrum of madness". Not that I agree with everything Kittler says, but I am intrigued with the question of whether we can think of any writing that strikes us as nonsense as referring to a state of communication which is in some sense "insane"; a state which might give us a window into what we might think of as pure material, pure body, not because it really is more material than everyday, rational communication, but because it reveals to us the essential equanimity of the two.

Chris Nagler

↑ Index

510. A. Jenn Sondheim
MLA Session, Letter Sensations and Embodied Life (fwd)
Mon 14 Dec 1998

(sorry for the repetition - Alan)

MLA Session, Letter Sensations and Embodied Life

from Ann Weinstone re: Our MLA session in San Francisco. Forwarded with permission. Please come if you can. A slight outline of my own contribu- tion follows.

======

Dear Colleagues,

I am writing to let you know about an upcoming Special Session at this year's MLA.

Letter Sensations and Embodied Life seeks to open a different kind of conversa- tion about writing and biological life. We want to ask, in the wake of poststruc- turalism, how we can begin to speak about the effects of language on embodied experience. How do bodies and language transform each other? Does the body speak or write? Do letters live?

In "Sensible Letters," Vicki Kirby connects Saussure's fascination with ana- grams, clairvoyancy, and trance induced glossolalia to current discour- ses of artificial life. Her reading suggests that the letter may be pos- sessed by a life force of its own that extends well beyond conventional ideas about the ontology of language.

Alan Sondheim's "Is There a Body in This Text?" opens up notions of phys- ical and psychical constitution to consider interpenetrations of avatar, fleshly, and on-line entities.

Ann Weinstone's "On the Junk Beam" suggests strategies of aliteracy that might helpfully mutate current poststructuralist/bioinformatic intensifi- cations of the adequation of writing and making.

Jeffrey T. Schnapp will serve as chair.

The session is number 599 and will take place on Tuesday, December 29th, 1:45-3:00p.m., Union Square 21, San Francisco Hilton.

Hope to see you there!

======

(My rough outline.)

I'd like to talk on "is there a body in this text, is there a text in this body" - using a number of approaches, depending on the time:

1 talking about the projection/introjection of emotion on the Net (whose emotion?)
2 talking about 1/2/3/other person on chats etc. (representations of the constituted body as usual)
3 ytalk, ICQ, and the (dispersed) space of the body
4 my own work with jennifer, julu, nikuko as system interrupts, resonances - _effusions_
6 considering the future of the Net as 'seamless virtual reality,' the interpenetrations and mixups on the Holodeck - Jennifer writing Alan, jennifer-function, body-function, quantum-logic superimpositions

I will be working from notes/outline, not a completed paper - the relation of the body to speech is integral for me -

---

↑ Index

511. Garrett Kalleberg

TF7(b)

Mon 14 Dec 1998

Due to technical difficulties...

Some of you may have experienced some problems with viewing the cover to this issue of The Friend. This was the result of an effort to begin to incorporate sound into the journal. Most of the problems have since been resolved, and I hope you will return again. (Internet Explorer users will probably still not hear any sound, but should no longer see any error messages.) Feel free to write me if you continue to have difficulties - the more specific you can be about what the problem is, what browser & version no. you are using, what platform and what kind of a machine, &c. the better.

http://www.morningred.com/friend/1998/12/cover.html

Thanks very much,

Garrett

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

The Transcendental Friend can be found at:
http://www.morningred.com/friend

↑ Index

512. Tom Orange
syllable-sounds
Mon 14 Dec 1998

On Sun, 13 Dec 1998, Emily Lloyd wrote (describing somone else's project):

> And that we tend to make "bad-guy" aliens, if they're > speaking a language (written by an English speaker), which translates to
> "if they're speaking nonsense," sound vaguely like speakers of languages > from whatever country "we're" ("nation-wide") most afraid of or pissed > at when the language/nonsense is created. Germans, Russians, etc....

for the ancient greeks, peoples who spoke other languages were collectively referred to as "hoi barbaroi," literally, people who sound like they are saying "bar bar" -- hence, barbarians.

t.
[redacted]

↑ Index

513. Billy Little
Re: "My NAME is Alice, but-- "
Mon 14 Dec 1998

---

rachel that was quite the poem thank you the electronic equivalent of livingston loews rove to sanido

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

514. Alaric Sumner
the performance Alaric Sumner wrote about
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Lawrence Upton wrote:

> DAN DIPTYCH ISBN 0 86162 846 2, Writers Forum, December 1998, 75p plus p &p
> -
> This is the text used in the performance Alaric Sumner wrote about the other day

Actually, I had posted the review to British Poets not Poetics on the grounds that it was a UK event. However, since it has now been mentioned here, it might as well appear here too (sorry to those of you on both lists). (Explanation: DAN = Domestic Ambient Noise, an ongoing series of 300 collaborative books of visual performance texts produced in the form of a Theme by Bob or Lawrence which is then varied by the other. Domestic Buoys = one of many nicknames for the duo.)

> The Domestic Buoys (Lawrence Upton and Bob Cobbing) gave a short but entertaining reading at SubVoicive, London, on the 1st Dec. which was added to by many involuntary noises from the audience (including a delightful fit of giggles from one thoroughly engaged member).
>
> Upton began by explaining the DAN affair to us (aware there were some in the audience who were not regulars on the 'scene') but following an "interruption" by Cobbing (posed as a deliberately incoherent question) this language soon merged into sounds (though recognisible language still frequently burst through). Upton's inventiveness seemed an easy (in the sense of 'competent' not 'facile') access to surprising himself within a large frame of sound and language (bounded only by the formats that he sets himself within the DAN project). Cobbing's abilities in timing were fully evident (sound poet as brilliant stand up comedian?) but the layers of sensitive sonic material weaving in and out of the sonic environment and in particular in and out of Upton's work produce subtleties of relation, tone, texture, text. The precise relation of visual material (the DAN DIPTYCH score they were using) to sonic/performance material is one I have often found difficult, but on this occasion (as yet unanalysed) my memory of the performance and my memory of the visual work seem surprisingly consonant. Though at the time amusement seemed the most prominent aspect of my response, as I write this I am rehearing/seeing: Bob's subtle use of his beer mug to change tone; Lawrence's "he wipes his nose" followed by Bob's amusing/intricate use of the hanky as a sound source; Lawrence's weave of word and sound; and am left with much more subtle textures that I am continuing to revisit.

Alaric Sumner

↑ Index

515. Marcella Durand
dyslexic urban flies
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Thanks Randolph--you're absolutely right, it is J.H. Fabre and what drawings! Every thorax, every sensitive hair in magnified insectecoidal glory! As I remember (and all 666 people on this list have gotten to see how wonderful my memory is, particularly regarding author's names--see "why people lurk"), the writing was pretty intricate as well.

(backchannel whisper: got chapbooks, they're beautiful)

best,
Marcella

↑ Index

516. Gwyn McVay
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Seems like a lot of this list has the same theory of semantics that H.D. has.<<<

George Thompson has called my attention to the eerie coincidence of initials between Humpty Dumpty and Hilda Doolittle.

Gwyn McVay
General Motors
Good Morning

↑ Index

517. Emily Lloyd
Re: syllable sounds
Mon 14 Dec 1998

& re: Tom Orange's barbarians:

A few months back I was in a Dunkin' Donuts and the guy in front of me ordered six barbarian cremes. em

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

518. Laura E. Wright
Re: Reggae William Blake
Mon 14 Dec 1998

David Erben (Art) wrote:
>
> I'm also reminded of a alternative version of "The Emperor of Ice Cream" I > heard once in New Orleans. Unfortunately, I never learned who the group > was.

Probably a completely different thang, but Roger Reynolds composed a "The Emperor of Ice Cream" for voice and... I can't recall. He also wrote an orchestral response to "Self Portrait in a Convex Mirror."

Tangentially,
Laura
--
Laura Wright, Library Assistant
Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
2130 Arapahoe Ave
Boulder, CO 80302
[redacted]

"Speech keeps strangling itself, but wisdom has not come."
--Henri Michaux

↑ Index

519. Mike Kelleher
The Shining
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Hi all.

I am thinking of using Stephen King's _The Shining_ for a comp course next semester and was wondering if anyone had read it and what their thoughts might be - I'm trying to decide if it'd be worthwhile to read the book as opposed to just showing the movie, or if doing both would be useful.

Any comments, b/ or f/c, 'd be apurshiated.

Truly,

Mike

↑ Index

520. Steven Shoemaker
Re: syllable sounds
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Bob Grumman wrote:

"the long o, I would say, is the easiest sound to make, then the u in cooing"

There's a moment in Poe's "Philosophy of Composition" when he claims that "r" is the "most producible consonant." Since the claim comes at a rather hyperbolic moment, when Poe is arguing that on the basis of sound alone no other word than "Nevermore" could have served for the refrain of "The Raven" (the long "o" also figures here as "most sonorous vowel"), I hadn't really given it much serious thought. But one of my students this semester made a convincing case for its validity by making dog-like grrrrrrowling noises in his throat. steve

↑ Index

521. Laura E. Wright
Re: non-referential poems for your consideration
Mon 14 Dec 1998

George Thompson wrote:
>
> Would anyone claim that the following stanza from Lewis Carroll is
> 'referential'?
>
> Twas brillig and the slithy toves
> Did gyre and gimble in the wabe
> All mimsy were the borogoves
> And the mome raths outgrabe.
>
Martin Gardner, in _The Annotated Alice_ gives a translation of this. It goes something like:
It was midday and the smooth badgers
Were boring holes in the hillside...

This, like Finnegan's Wake, is multi-sense as opposed to strict nonsense. No matter what any writer intends, though, we will find references where we will.

--
Laura Wright, Library Assistant
Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
2130 Arapahoe Ave
Boulder, CO 80302

[redacted]

"Speech keeps strangling itself, but wisdom has not come."
--Henri Michaux

↑ Index

522. Judy Roitman

Re: Louis Carroll, Hugo Ball, etc

Mon 14 Dec 1998

Many thanks to Chris Nagler for a most interesting post, but I would like to point out that context does matter to some people's memories. In fact some of us (I'm one) can not only only remember in context, but sometimes can only remember the context and have to reconstruct the rest. Ebbinghaus' experiment tells us a lot about the way Ebbinghaus' memory worked, and, unfortunately, considering the great sacrifice he made, not much else.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

523. Judy Roitman

Re: syllable sounds

Mon 14 Dec 1998

> Bob Grumman wrote:
>
> "the long o, I would say, is the easiest
> sound to make, then the u in cooing"
>
> There's a moment in Poe's "Philosophy of Composition" when he claims that "r" is the "most producible consonant." Since the claim comes at a rather hyperbolic moment, when Poe is arguing that on the basis of sound alone no other word than "Nevermore" could have served for the refrain of "The Raven" (the long "o" also figures here as "most sonorous vowel"), I hadn't really given it much serious thought.
> But one of my students this semester made a convincing case for its validity by making dog-like grrrrrrowling noises in his throat. steve

But to a singer, r is one of the most difficult sounds to make. m & n are so much easier. Even percussive consonants (b, p, t etc.) are easier because they are impossible to actually _sing_, they are just punctuation.

long o followed by ah are easy; there is a trick to eeee & when you know it eee becomes easy. long u is okay, short i (as in it) and similar vowels are hard.

Anything that closes the throat is hard. (Like, say, "hard"). "By the rude bridge that arched the flood" (Emerson, we had to memorize it in fifth grade) is one of the hardest lines to read out loud I know.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

524. Balestrieri, Peter
seducers/Billy Little
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Just wanted to say what a great list I think Billy's assembled here. Especially Zukofsky, McFadden, and Acker. Billy, you seduced me long ago with your erudite posts that come a courtin' with sexy language that goes to the head. And the heart.

Tambien for Alan Sondheim whose work would be great for wooing the Right One. As long as they weren't Republicans.

Pete

Billy wrote:

Vita Nuova Dante
Amores Ovid
Catullus by Louis Zukofsky
Twenty Love Poems Pablo Neruda
Gypsy Guitar David McFadden
Art of Love Kenneth Koch
Kathy Goes To Haiti Kathy Acker
g. John Berger

Hermetic Definitions H. D.
More Pansies D.H. Lawrence

↑ Index

525. Robert Archambeau
Query: De Man & Comment: Perloff
Mon 14 Dec 1998

So here I am back in Illinois for a month, and I've left the books I need 4,200 miles away in Sweden. So:

I'm looking for the passage where Paul De Man, comparing himself to Derrida, says that the difference between them is that "I can do nothing without a text" (or words to that effect). Anyone know where to look?

By the way -- there was a fascinating talk by Marjorie Perloff and Charles Bernstein at the Museum of Contemporary Art a couple of days ago, with a couple of listees in the audience. Although the title of the talk referred to "the future of poetry" much of the talk had to do with the past, with the 20 year history of language poetry. Bernstein began with a slide of cro-magnon man making cave paintings in a dreary cavern and the comment "this was the state of poetry before my magazine -- you can see the poets struggling with the problem of the personal lyric." Best send-up of "heroic langpo" I've witnessed.

Also good to hear in the after-show schmooze that Marjorie is co-writing a book on poetics with Steve Fredman and Gerry Bruns, two of my profs from Notre Dame. Should be of interest to a lot of listees -- Fredman's "Poet's Prose" was a really fine book, and Bruns' "Modern Poetry and the Idea of Language" deserves to be read by more people.

Joe Amato -- you were there. What'd you think?

Herr Doktor Bromige -- I'll send the pictures of Bjuv, Sweden as soon as they're developed.

Bob Archambeau

↑ Index

526. david bromige
MLA Poetry Event
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Listmates, it may not be too early to post this, as some of you will be leaving your desks and heading for San Francisco very soon.

Event # 375. A Poetry Reading by David Bromige, Lyn Hejinian, and Leslie Scalapino, 5:15-6:30 p.m., Monday Dec.28, Franciscan Room A, San Francisco Hilton.

THIS EVENT IS OPEN TO THE PUBLIC.(v.p.1272, "Special Events," for verification).

While I'm at it, let me mention also Event # 181, "The Poetics of Robert Duncan," 8:30-9:45 a.m., Monday Dec. 28, Parlor 9, Continental Ballroom, San Francisco Hilton. Session Leader : Burton Hatlen. Panelists: Robert Bertholf ("Serial Form in RD's 'Medieval Scenes'"), Devin Johnston ("'Sublime Undoing' :RD and the Metaphysics of Dictation"), and David Bromige ("A Poetics of Delivery : RD's Reading of 'Moving the Moving Image'").

My paper looks at an article I published in 1975 on Duncan's 1970 reading aloud of this poem (Passages 17), focussing on the excerpts from the "Perfect Sermon or the Asclepius" included in that poem; and at Duncan's letter to me in response to this article ("You've centered in on one of the most tricky intents in Passages for me too. And one I still feel so uncomfortable about that I avoid tackling it"). My paper concerns much else besides : a turn in a literary friendship, the tedding-out of two sets of poetics, an Oedipal interlude, foreshadowings of Poetry Wars to come; gender, class, behaviorism and free will, ancient Greek Egypt, 19th Century Britain, and USA 1970's. NOT OPEN TO THE GENERAL PUBLIC. (Would give 'em nightmares!)

I'll re-post this Xmas Eve or near as dammit. David

↑ Index

527. Steven Shoemaker

Re: syllable sounds

Mon 14 Dec 1998

Interesting paradox here. "R" is an easy sound to make in a kind of crude, animal-like grrrrrrowling way, but difficult to make when singing, projecting, articulating. This doesn't reflect well on Poe's arguments vis a vis "Nevermore."

It might also be pointed out that when dogs sing, which happpens quite often in my neighborhood, they go for the "ooooooo."

steve

On Mon, 14 Dec 1998, Judy Roitman wrote:

> Bob Grumman wrote:
>
> "the long o, I would say, is the easiest sound to make, then the u in cooing"

> There's a moment in Poe's "Philosophy of Composition" when he claims that "r" is the "most producible consonant." Since the claim comes at a rather hyperbolic moment, when Poe is arguing that on the basis of sound alone no other word than "Nevermore" could have served for the refrain of "The Raven" (the long "o" also figures here as "most sonorous vowel"), I hadn't really given it much serious thought.
> But one of my students this semester made a convincing case for its validity by making dog-like grrrrrrowling noises in his throat. steve
>
> But to a singer, r is one of the most difficult sounds to make. m & n are so much easier. Even percussive consonants (b, p, t etc.) are easier because they are impossible to actually _sing_, they are just punctuation.
>
> long o followed by ah are easy; there is a trick to eeee & when you know it eee becomes easy. long u is okay, short i (as in it) and similar vowels are hard.
>
> Anything that closes the throat is hard. (Like, say, "hard"). "By the rude bridge that arched the flood" (Emerson, we had to memorize it in fifth grade) is one of the hardest lines to read out loud I know.
>
> ---
> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] |
> fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ---
> Note new area code
> ---
> http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/
> ---

↑ Index

528. groberts
Re: syllable sounds
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Since Spicer has not been mentioned in nigh on a couple of weeks now:

"Drugs" from "Homage to Creeley"

The bell went "rrrr"
And we both went "rrrr"

And there was a beauty
In talking to him.

But angel-talk howls
At the edge of our beds
And all of us now
Are partners of hell.

For the crocodile crys
Every tear that we know
And our tears are our blankets
Wherever we go.

As the explanatory notes to this section and others make clear, the Alice books figure prominently here (in hell).

Spicer's take on the costs of language use is complex enough to swamp his little poem-boats, and I'm not a fast enough bailer. Those fluent in Martian may be able to help out....

Gary R.

↑ Index

529. Charles Alexander
L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Someone asked on the list last week if Ray DiPalma designed the title L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E. I had heard Ray tell how this came about, but wasn't sure I could report it accurately, so I send him a post asking him to relate the story once again. Here's his reply to me.

>Dear Charles,
>
>Thanks for asking. As I've explained for friends in France (& recently for >someone at the NY Public Library Berg Collection) who had asked how the L=A=N= >thing came about, I should be able to do it succinctly here—
>
>Around the time the magazine was in its late planning stages (1978) I went up >to Charles' then apartment on Amsterdam Ave to have lunch with him. When I >got there he told me that he & Bruce were thinking about calling the magazine >Language—but he wanted to put something between the letters of the word. I >immediately sat down at his IBM Selectric II and typed L=A=N-G=U=A=G=E. I >told him "There's the name for your magazine and a logo as well." It was as >instantaneous as that.

>[Bruce once told] me at a party—after the magazine had been >going for around a year or so—that he especially liked what I had done because >when the magazine was now mentioned in some other print context its name took >up so much space on the page. (That's certainly NOT what I had in mind when I >created the configuration).
>
>Remember, 1978 was pre-computer days for all of us & the IBM Selectric II
was >the high tech writing machine—Charles, at the time, was the only one of us >(Bruce, Steve McC, Ron, me) who owned one. So I liked falling by his place >from time to time and occasionally improvising as well as typing drafts on my >own work on his machine. (The writing of the LEGEND collaboration was also >underway at this time. So we were all in touch a great deal either in person, >thru the mails or over the phone. LEGEND, by the way, is another work for >which I provided the title. But that's a whole other story.)
>
>I finally got my own IBM Seletric II in 1980 & worked directly on it when >drafting new poems. I also began to explore its possibilities for creating >graphic works and pushed the limits of the machine's typographic aspects.
>From '84-86 I did a large series of pieces called UCCELLI that derived from >very close typing of specific letters from particular fonts (frequently >changing the type balls) while advancing the platten by hand. A lot of hand->eye work involved in balancing the progression through a slowly unfolding >lettristic space both on the vertical and horizontal. It was quite like >working at a loom. Later cut-up (and further manipulated on a xerox machine)
>sections of UCCELLI appeared in a work I did called TEXT & OCCULTATION which >appeared in a magazine called "Central Park" in the mid-late '80s. Pages from >UCCELLI proper have never appeared in print & as far as I know my wife >Elizabeth is still the only person to have seen them. They are too wide to fit >into a filing cabinet, so I must have them stored flat in a box somewhere.

>
>All the best-RAY
>
>

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

530. R. Drake
OUTSIDE THE HAT
Mon 14 Dec 1998

---

fun stuff!

> This just in!
>
> My new poetry collection just went online.
>
> Outside the Hat
>
> (replete with animated graphics & music, and yeah, a few poems) > is now available at:
>
> http://www.chbooks.com/online/outside_the_hat/
>
> It's published by Coach House Books. A print version will follow in the new year.
>
> Hope you enjoy it.
>
> Gary
>
> ---
> Gary Barwin, Ph.D.
> Program Director/Composer
> Composers in Electronic Residence
>
> escargot post: 178 Glen Rd. Hamilton ON CANADA L8S 3N1
> pharyngeal post: [redacted]
> eek mail: [redacted]
> telepathy:

Barwin website: http://www.maltedmedia.com/barwin/

Composers in Electronic Residence Website: http://www.edu.yorku.ca/ciermain.html

---

↑ Index

531. joel lewis
f.y.i. (hidden injuries of class department)
Mon 14 Dec 1998

MTV Apologizes to Teen for Bad Edit

MTV Apologizes to Teen for Bad Edit HAMILTON, N.J. (AP) _ A teenage boy who won a nationwide contest to interview a rap group on MTV says the cable channel aired a segment that was horribly out of tune. The 24-hour music network has apologized to Bradley Jenkins, and agreed to redo a segment that the family claims portrays them as destitute and unhappy. ``When you look at the tape, it looks like my life is really bad and my family is really broken,'' the boy told The Times of Trenton in Monday's editions. ``It was supposed to be a really positive experience for me and it turned out to be really horrible.'' Jenkins was chosen to interview the hip-hop group A Tribe Called Quest. The network boiled down 20 hours of film into a 12-minute segment that showed a down-and-out family and a teen lifted from despair by the group's positive message. Bradley's father, Walter Jenkins, said he and his wife were so upset by the segment that they missed several days of work. They said worried relatives from as far away as Oklahoma started calling the family to ask if anything was wrong. ``I can't put into words how totally disappointing this thing is,'' Walter Jenkins said. ``How could they do that? Maybe they've got this one editor with a tabloid mentality or something.'' MTV producers and editors called the family last week to apologize. They also re-edited the segment to remove the embarrassing parts. ``We want to make people happy,'' MTV spokeswoman Marnie Malter said. ``We want this experience to be wonderful for everyone. We think it's a terrific episode that presents Brad in a positive light.'' Bradley plays varsity football, baseball and basketball at Steinert High School, and is a member of Future Business Leaders of America. His grades are in the A and B range, and he sometimes performs as an actor in Princeton's McCarter Theatre.

↑ Index

532. Aldon Nielsen
Re: this needful thing
Mon 14 Dec 1998

By the way -- just got an undergraduate paper with citations to both your book and Vince Gotera's -- which the student turned up with no prodding from me -- so the work IS getting around --

↑ Index

533. Aldon Nielsen
Re: this needful thing
Mon 14 Dec 1998

OK -- that message was for Michael Bibby -- sorry --

By the way, if you check out the footnotes to the Starr Report you'll find Lewinsky's thankyou note to the President for the copy of LEAVES OF GRASS -- a hoot in itself --

The Report also describes VOX as a book about phone sex -- I suppose that's true enough, in the same sense that GREAT GATSBY is a book about Long Island --

↑ Index

534. Tosh
Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
Mon 14 Dec 1998

TamTam Books

E-Mail: [redacted]

Monday, December 14, 1998
PRESS RELEASE

TO CONTACT: Tosh Berman

e-mail. [redacted]

I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES BY BORIS VIAN (1920-1959)
ISBN 0-9662346-0-X Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 97-80958
Translated from the French by Boris Vian & Milton Rosenthal 200 pp. $17.00

The most talked about novel of the year in Paris in 1947 was the work of an American black writer, but he was not Richard Wright. The book was published in French as J'irai cracher sur vos tombes, by Vernon Sullivan. The English title would be "I Spit on Your Graves", but as was expected in a preface by the book's translator - Boris Vian, again - Sullivan had no hope of seeing his work published in his native country. For one thing, it was obscene, containing many descriptions of sexual acts. For another, it was extremely violent, and the violence was that of a black against whites. "J'irai cracher sur vos tombes" charts the erotic adventures of a light-skinned Negro, Lee Anderson, after he takes up a job managing a bookshop in the small Southern town of Buckton. Like Joe Christmas in Faulkner's novel Light in August, Lee is light enough to pass for white. He becomes fixated on two sisters,but his desire to dominate them sexually is morbidly, fatally, connected to a need to obtained vengeance on behalf of his darker-skinned brother, a victim of white violence in the past. Seducing a series of white girls with pathologically inspired energy, Lee revels in a private revenge (they do not realize he is a Negro); but it is not sufficient to satisfy him, and in the end he murders both sisters, before being killed himself by a police bullet.

According to the translator, Sullivan's light skin would have enabled him to live, like his protagonist, among whites, but he preferred 'les Noirs'. While "J'irai cracher sur vos tombes" became highly successful, Sullivan remained an enigma. In fact, this Afro-American novel was a hoax. The book had been written in French, and 'Sullivan' was a ghost. His real name was Boris Vian.

Taken from PARIS INTERZONE by James Campbell

"Published in Paris in 1946 as a thriller loaded with sex and blood, allegedly censored in the US and "translated" into French, J'irai cracher sur vos tombes --I Spit on Your Graves-- was a pure mystification, but also a direct homage to American literature and movies, by a young author, Boris Vian (1920-1959).

More deeply, it was also a violent attack on racism by a jazz fan who had already befriended many black musicians and was to become the closest French friend of Ellington, Davis and Parker.

The novel became a best seller in France and established a scandalous reputation for Vian. But for the past forty years, Vian has become one of the most famous writers of the mid 20th Century, as his hoax of 1946 is only one example --provocative and outrageous, though powerful and meaningful -- of his prolific production: novels and short stories, plays and songs."

-Gilbert Pestureau

"In the tradition of Karl May and Franz Kafka, Boris Vian imagines an America even more amazing than the land he has never visited. I Spit on Your Graves is the first novel to put quotation marks around the 'hardboiled' --a vivid and startling performance." -J. Hoberman

"To Americans Boris Vian has long been one of the hidden glories of French literature. In I Spit on Your Graves, he wrote an utterly untypical work, a blast from his Id that may well have killed him. Even now, with misogyny disguised as racial justice, its venom remains potent and disturbing, in equal parts appalling and riveting. It is a singular book, not for the squeamish, and not to be passed by." -Jim Krusoe

I Spit on Your Graves is available through:

Small Press Distribution at Small Press Distribution
1341 Seventh Street
Berkeley, CA 94710-1409
[redacted]

Also at Amazon.com, Barnes & Nobel, and through your local independent bookstore.

End of Press Release

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

535. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
three items...
Mon 14 Dec 1998

---

for one's beloved?... i'll be a bit old-fashioned... dover puts out a nice little boxed-set of "great women poets" in four volumes (costs but $5-6)... it might do the trick... incl. is christina rossetti, _goblin market, and other poems_ elizabeth barrett browning, _sonnets from the portuguese, and other poems_ edna st. vincent millay, _renascence, and other poems_ emily dickinson, _selected poems_

---

i'll sneak this in here, b/c i think it's important and urgent enough: the move-on website that tom o posted a while back is now set up for those so inclined to sign a petition to congress (with notification to their congressperson) that censure is the way to go, and that impeachment is not (the way to go)... takes no more than half a minute... go to http://www.moveon.org/ to sign the petition...

---

about _the shining_: i view the film, anyway, differently than i once did... but one aspect worth looking for, i think, is the effect of isolation/solitude on the writing process... that is, the film might be understood as making a good (if completely over-the-top) case for collaboration (in the most general sense) as an essential aspect of the composing process, requiring some 'input' from outside the writer's consciousness... in the absence of which, you go NUTS (which of course leads to the question of cerebral architectures etc.)... i haven't worked any of this out, and it's certainly a stretch for me to say so (esp. given that i haven't 'explained' the apparent haunting embedded in the plot)---but i have to admit to getting a kick out of nicholson's reaction whenever shelly duvall interrupts his typing... most of you who've lived with another writer can probably relate---which is not to say that, in the end, we all don't need interruption as such...

well anyhow...

best,

joe

↑ Index

536. Pierre Joris
Re: Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Tosh wrote:

> TamTam Books
>
> E-Mail: [redacted]
>
> Monday, December 14, 1998
> PRESS RELEASE
>
> TO CONTACT: Tosh Berman
>
> e-mail. [redacted]
>
> I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES BY BORIS VIAN (1920-1959)
> ISBN 0-9662346-0-X Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 97-80958
> Translated from the French by Boris Vian & Milton Rosenthal 200 pp. $17.00

yes indeed, though I don't know this translation, (well, Vian himself was involved, so it should be good) the book is highly recommended -- one of the absolute hits of my adolescence -- sent me straight to the classic amerikan klassik krime writers. Don't know if the other two great Vian novels are available here

(_L'Ecume des Jours_, the Foam of the Days, or something like that, which has a wonderful character called Jean-Saul Partre, and _L'Automne à Peking_, Autumn in Peking) -- if not, hey, Tosh, what you're waiting for? (_L'Ecume_ has a major prop -- a cocktail-piano, where every string, besides creating sound, is attached to a bottle that pours, so that you can create a wild range of cocktails, depending on the tune you play).

Pierre

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

537. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Query: De Man & Comment: Perloff
Mon 14 Dec 1998

---

bob & others,

kass and i had a ball listening to marjorie and charles... i mean, listening to marjorie and charles!... the two are obviously comfortable talking with each other, and in public, and this made for an engaging performance---incl. charles's reading poetry from his new book, just out on u of chicago p and highly recommended (by me), _my way_...

as to substance: i found their talk both accessible and provocative, exhibiting far more intellectual reach than i generally enjoy at such well-attended public events... as you know, bob, i posed a question afterward re the relationship among poetry, theory and the arts... i don't know if we ever got around to the last part of my question... but marjorie's ruminations as to how statements of poetic intent have become rather de rigueur these days (and not all that useful, in her opinion), and charles's collapse of the "theory vs. [poetry, e.g.]" distinction into the (passionate, writerly, readerly) essay form---while reserving, as i heard him, a somewhat privileged place for philosophical discourse itself---well, their exchange provided food for much thought on this end, anyway...

best,

joe

↑ Index

538. Tosh
Re: Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Thank you Pierre for your kind attention to Vian. And yes, I do plan to publish the other Vian books.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

539. aerialedge
New Hejinaian/Scalapino from Edge Books
Mon 14 Dec 1998

Announcing publication of Sight

by Lyn Hejinian & Leslie Scalapino

112 pages, perfectbound.

$10.00 postpaid to poetics subscribers. Regularly $12.

Checks to:
Aerial/Edge
POBox 25642
Washington, DC
20007

AERIAL/EDGE complete listing

They Beat Me Over the Head With a Sack, Anslem Berrigan, $5.
Integrity & Dramatic Life, Anselm Berrigan, forthcoming January '99, $10.
the julia set, Jean Donnelly, $4.

Marijuana Softdrink, Buck Downs, forthcoming 1999.
World Prefix, Harrison Fisher, $4.
Metropolis 16-20, Rob Fitterman, $5.
perhaps this is a rescue fantasy, Heather Fuller, $10.
Sight, Lyn Hejinian and Leslie Scalapino, $12.
Late July, Gretchen Johnsen, $3.
Asbestos, Wayne Kline, $6.
Stepping Razor, A.L. Nielsen, $9.
Errata 5uite, Joan Retallack, $8.
Dogs, Phyllis Rosenzweig, $5.
Aerial 9: Bruce Andrews, Rod Smith ed., forthcoming February 1999.
Aerial 8: Barrett Watten, Rod Smith ed., $15.
Aerial 6/7 featuring John Cage, Rod Smith ed., $15.
Aerial 5 featuring Harryman/Hejinian, Darragh/Retallack, Rod Smith ed., $7.50.
On Your Knees, Citizen: A Collection of "Prayers" for the "Public" [Schools], Smith, Brown, and Wallace, eds., $6.
Cusps, Chris Stroffolino, $2.50.
Nothing Happened and Besides I Wasn''t There, Mark Wallace, $9.50.

Orders to: Aerial/Edge, POBox 25642, Washington, DC 20007. Add $1 postage for individual titles except _Sight_. 2 or more books postpaid.

They have this peaceful but wild existence -- where everything's disturbed in it, but not by them
--Leslie Scalapino

There may be no animal boundary -- just the stream and the pleasure that lies in it
--Lyn Hejinian

↑ Index

540. Tom Orange
Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
Tue 15 Dec 1998

---

joe, could you elaborate on the positions articulated here? i'm not quite clear on what's being said...

thanks,
t.
[redacted]

"marjorie's ruminations as to how statements of poetic intent have become rather de rigueur these days (and not all that useful, in her opinion), and charles's collapse of the "theory vs. [poetry, e.g.]" distinction into the (passionate, writerly, readerly) essay form---while reserving, as i heard him, a somewhat privileged place for philosophical discourse itself---well, their exchange provided food for much thought on this end, anyway..."

↑ Index

541. George Bowering
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

542. david bromige
bernstein/perloff: orange question
Tue 15 Dec 1998

> charles's collapse of the "theory vs. [poetry, e.g.]" distinction into the >(passionate, writerly, readerly) essay form-

Apologies for the length of the ensuing. I have excised it from a considerably longer, complete piece. Without a substantial portion, the effects will not be apparent.

MY POETRY

David Bromige, 1978

My poetry does seem to have a cumulative, haunting effect--one or two poems may not touch you, but a small bookful begins to etch a response, poems rising in blisters that itch for weeks, poems like ball-bearings turning on each other, over & over, digging down far enough to find substance, a hard core to fill up the hand. It's through this small square that my poems project themselves, flickering across the consciousness, finally polarizing in the pure plasma of life. The reader grows impatient, irritated with my distancing style, coming at him in the rare book format, written under not one but two different kinds of dirty money, & knowing me to be an english teacher.

"The Protestant Poem" & the prose piece "He Was" typify my tendency to write over-elaborated series of possibilities which become arid & abstract. It's possible for even the best current poetry to sink into oblivion without wholly justifying itself through such an absolute renunciation of mediocre success. "The Protestant Poem" & certainly, "He Was," are not arid, they're great (except maybe, "kaleidoscopic world"). My poetry is "curiouser & curiouser" as it makes a descent into the rabbit-hole where descent becomes the subject of the poem's concern....

At this point, then, we begin to glimpse what is the profound vocation of the work of art in a commodity society : not to be a commodity, not to be consumed, not to be a vacation. Isn't this the piece talking to itself, hoping to be overheard, & contradicted. Because, the interest evident in the construction, rhythm of the sentences, obviates the need for the content. (Not to deny the feelings, of course). And I, as you probably do _not_ know, am a sucker for children in pain. If you allow Cezanne to represent a third dimension on his canvas, you must allow Landseer his gleam of loyalty in the spaniel's eye. I really don't think I'm demanding too much. The idea that poetry is good fora person & should be choked down like a horse pill is ridiculous....

Bernstein composes using a vocabulary which at all points (nearly) proposes itself as the other--this vulnerability, constantly expressed, is a sign of what (why does he insist on it?)--yet "what I want to call attention to is that there is no natural writing style" which of course is exactly what Barthes was sayiong in '53, _non_ ? These are the poles & what moves the piece is that there is no resolution, point of equilibrium. Here too, the problematic mode proposed as a strategy for composition, as such--this whole body of poems is a big jump forward for me, in that I'm no longer writing "just poems," each work is somehow myself....

The constant erasure of signs for presence leaves the poem an interstitial agent in the service of intentionality, & the uncertainties & doubts which Keats saw as the essential condition for poetic creation become the characteristics of generation in any form. The non-instrumental, which gives instance of what stands for itself & so not a call to revolution or a representation of the struggle & how it is peopled, but an instance of it (product, the unalienated or re-integrated itself : while still putting off (& on) other myths of "presence" which turn on a misunderstanding of how language operates & how we operate in it, which is to say no e,y,e,s).

The blurb on the book says the usual blurb-things. "David Bromige writes carefully, with _pleasure_ --which is the point." Well, which _is_ ? I am the author of previous books, which is the point. A stunning achievement. Good images ("as carefree as a coffin-nail commercial"), & often a good use of language."Still there" is a remarkably clear, beautiful poem. The poem ceases to be a process of discovery. You go to step on the boardwalk & it's rotten. I try to transcend my petty anger & bring you into an area of engagement under the rule of Poetry. Notes are made along the way toward a remembered edifice. Even a divine physics cannot make categorical thought-determinations of realities intuitable in the plain, ordinary way ; as little as divine omnipotence can bring it about that elliptical functions should be painted or played on the fiddle. The tone is objective, rendered ironic by contrast with the monstrous behavior portrayed. What does the "one who knew this" know?....

In my poetry the search shows, & so do the seams often, but my poetry gains authenticity from its deliberate ruggedness. Bull shit. Everywhere there is the tension of an incomplete sentence, an ambiguous antecedent, an unnatural act, an illogical causality.

> A sentence, as the expression of a > complete thought, is not natural & > does not exist in nature. Is not > natural & does not exist in nature.

The prose pieces are of a deft, deadpan order, hinting at more than they state. It's difficult to say whether this prose makes too much ordinary sense, for it is less zany & irritating than _Tender Buttons_ --as if that were some kind of discus mark set in 1911 for extra-syntactic competitors. Yet is it teasingly nonsensical when it is most clipped & aphoristic....A slight, simple poem is slight & simple, & for A.R.Ammons there's no getting away from that. I've been thinking lately about some sort of code of ethics for reviewers. Everywhere the ceremonies of the Phallus are rehearsed, questioned & continued. It is that agonizing lust to express with which I can personally empathize....The poet A.W. Purdy was gleeful :

> I have a very low opinion of the Black Mountain > "method" of writing poems (which is partly the > exclusion of any other method) & have seen some > of David Bromige's reviews of myself & others before.

Either poetry is real, real as, or, as Shelley for one believed, realler than, life; or it is nothing, a stupid & stupefying occupation for zombies. Freud's condensation & displacement are figured here in the poet's tasks....

This is just to say I've gained the art & language in which I bring my readers deeper than any consideration of a personality to the awarenss of a living man -- hence in reading these recent books of mine one may find oneself in a solitude & a -- "Tight Corner," I might call it--edge or risk of Being that seems even as it is most mine to be speaking for a depth of one's own inner being. Climb bean sort of is substitute destiny. Extremely useful & succinct on the problem of writing verses literature. Silence amounts to the same thing, recommended for university & large college libraries :

Sign on Librarian's Desk

R E V E N G E

I could never have done it alone. The self to write about the products of the self which the self tries to make as selfless as possible, in order that they may be seen to come from the true self, by involving it with & invoking it for contiguous other selves (readers)...;

[etc, etc].

This, in its uncut version, appeared in Perelman & Shaw's _Hills_ , then in _My Poetry_ from The Figures, 1980. This book is long o.p. & Sun & Moon at one point expressed intention to bring it back into print, with an intro by Ron Silliman; the intro has been written, but the reprint, though announced, appears unlikely.

I thank you, if you have come this far, for your attention. David

↑ Index

543. Pierre Joris

Re: syllable sounds

Tue 15 Dec 1998

George Bowering wrote:

> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

& I remember some piece of research years ago that found that for most people the euphonically most beautiful word in English was "carcinoma."

Pierre

--
==========
Pierre Joris

[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

544. miekal and
Re: MLA Poetry Event
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Charles Bernstein wrote:

Oxford tells me they will be offering Close > Listening at a 50% discount at the party (eg: $10). If the book selling is > not > in place by 5:15, I will take orders and have any books ready, signed by any > and all present, by the time the reading is over.

I'll take one.

Good to see you writing to the list, C, thought maybe the listbrats had driven you to swear off electronic poetics.

miekal

↑ Index

545. Pierre Joris
MR
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Today is the birthday of Muriel Rukeyser,

who wrote:

"My night awake
staring at the broad rough jewel the copper roof across the way thinking of the poet
yet unborn in this dark

who will be the throat of these hours.
No. Of those hours.
Who will speak these days,
if not I,
if not you?"

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

546. John Latta
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

I used to routinely ask students to list "most beautiful" words (also "funniest"). My favorite response to the former was that of a rather shy woman: "syringe." The only "funniest" I recall was "chum."

John Latta

↑ Index

547. Judy Roitman
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

> George Bowering wrote:
>
> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,

> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
>
> & I remember some piece of research years ago that found that for most people the euphonically most beautiful word in English was "carcinoma."
>
> Pierre

And there's the baby named, many years ago in the U.S. South, Poliomyelitis. Or is this just a rural legend?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

548. shana
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

On Tue, 15 Dec 1998, Judy Roitman wrote:

> George Bowering wrote:
>
> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
> And there's the baby named, many years ago in the U.S. South, Poliomyelitis. Or is this just a rural legend?

I heard a legend about an immigrant couple who named their child what they thought was the most beautiful word in the english language-- "diarrhea."

I'm actually in love with pharmacological words--my recent favorite is "Propecia," the name of a hair growth drug for men. Zithromax is good, too.

shana

↑ Index

549. Billy Little
Re: Digital Arts and Culture 98
Tue 15 Dec 1998

---

any reports from the Digital Arts and Culture conference in Norway?

Let go, shirk off the moderate little grace of vain
Cupid and grease the silver and lascivious age.
His livid qualms dope our cool arrival.
Rich poems sag like great nuns; art cheats time's martyrs.
--Lisa Robertson XEclogue

billy little
4 song st
satori, b.c. V0R1Z0

↑ Index

550. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

That "Asian" must have read the Paris Review interview with Don DeLillo (in the 40th anniversary issue, a few years back) where, in a discussion about the famous "Toyota Celica" passage in _White Noise_, he cites an alleged study that reached the same conclusion.

Patrick Pritchett

> George Bowering wrote:
>
> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
> George Bowering.

↑ Index

551. Charles Bernstein
Re: MLA Poetry Event
Tue 15 Dec 1998

One of the highlights of the MLA convention later this month in San Francisco is surely the Lyn Hejinian, Leslie Scalapino, and David Bromige reading, organized by Burton Hatlen. Not to be missed. It was a treat to read David's "My Poetry" just now on the list: a work I have been totally amazed by since I first read it and David is quite right that "My Poetry" is exemplary of the sort of writing I had in mind in my comments in Chicago the other night.

Anyway, back to the MLA: by a cruel quirk of fate, the Poetry Division cash bar and book party is at the same time as the reading and while conflicts are endemic to these conventions, this one is particularly unfortunate.

The Poetry Division cash bar and book party follows a reading and conversation with Adrienne Rich, which takes place Monday Dec. 28, 3:30-4:45. The Cash Bar goes from 5:15-6:30. Both events are in Plaza Room A, San Francisco Hilton. The book party is for Rich's new collection Midnight Savage (Norton) and for Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word, which I edited (Oxford Univ. Press), Imagining Language, ed. Steve McCaffery and Jed Rasula (M.I.T. Press), and Poems for the Millennium, vol. 2, ed. Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris (Univ. of California Press). Rich and all the editors will be present.

Since the Rich reading ends at 4:45, perhaps those attending the Bromige/Heninian/Scalapino reading can come by Plaza Room A at that time, and hang out till 5:15, when the reading starts, since it takes place very nearby (Franciscan Room A). I think most of us will be there then, and hopefully at least sample copies of the books will be there too -- even if we have to wait for them to set up the bar. Oxford tells me they will be offering Close Listening at a 50% discount at the party (eg: $10). If the book selling is not in place by 5:15, I will take orders and have any books ready, signed by any and all present, by the time the reading is over.

↑ Index

552. MAYHEW

submorphemic sememes

Tue 15 Dec 1998

This discussion of syllable sounds calls to mind Antin's talk 'the structuralist' with its tale of a red-haired dwarf painter/linguist who writes a poem using only "submorphemic sememes," e.g. phonemes or combinations of phonemes that seem to signify naturally. For example gl is the "sememe of visual manifestation" (197), as in glimmer, glance, gloom, glimpse, etc... Also check out Genette's Mimologiques (translated as Mimologics). The Antin piece is in the book _what it means to be avant-garde_ (New Directions 1993).

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

553. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
Tue 15 Dec 1998

---

tom, basically marjorie was arguing that it's become all the rage to fashion one's "poetics" ex post facto, and that in many cases said poetics are neither urgent nor compelling... she referenced, e.g., the collection of such statements at the back of many anthologies of poetry...

charles was questioning whether in fact "theory" wasn't itself often used as a way of narrowing---pinching---discourse... he would prefer, as i understood him, to think of the essay form itself as permitting for theoretical speculation---whether by poet or by critic... he did reserve a place for philosophy as the proper site of more rigorous thought (as opposed, that is, to theory)...

perhaps it will help if i clarify a bit why i asked my question: it seems to me that an argument can be made that what distinguishes much of the more oppositional/alternative/non-mainstream writing is a willingness to theorize one's "craft" (i use the latter with some skepticism intact---the word often constitutes the alpha & omega of theoretical speculation on the part of more conventional writers for whom (e.g.) de man's "resistance to theory" is already theoretically excessive)... jed rasula has argued this vis-a-vis the beats, and i think the same might be said of language poetry-writing (though might not be said, perhaps, of more populist poetic forms and events)... how academic and professionalizing forces figure into the question of "theory" (note quotes here) is a matter i'll leave open for the moment... suffice to say that, when i used the term, i do not mean to delimit theory in popperian terms (i.e., falsification etc.), and that "theory" is certainly a commodity in academe these days (albeit not the commodity it was even a decade ago)...

so to suggest that "theory"---a basic self-reflexive quality, a challenging of one's own assumptions---need not be so constraining, and yet is at the same time an important part of one's practice, situates one somewhat contra certain academic work, and at the same time, contra certain artistic presumptions (e.g., "just feel it")...

the question remains though: since theory as such constitutes a literacy (as we've known it thus far) completely tied-up with print literacy, and since any move toward the visual (or the aural) takes us away from the latter (not in a strict sense, but generally)---how might we "theorize" (note quotes again) our poetic articulations so conceived w/o forcing visual-aural work to tow what is in essence a literary line?... how do you theorize words/images/sounds w/o selling images and sounds short? (a picture is worth a thousand etc.)...

nothing exactly "new" here, nothing unprecedented, and nothing that hasn't been the focus of all sortsa discussion... but i think it's becoming more and more topical, esp. in light of our electronic media... and i could, too, toss around words like "hybrid," "creolized," even collage, etc., to point to possible ways of addressing this issue... but worth thinking through, i think, however one does so...

best,

joe

↑ Index

554. sylvester pollet
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

At 11:00 PM -0800 12/14/98, George Bowering wrote: >I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd >ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]

Bust him for plagiarism--it was Gertrude Stein who said that (though I can't footnote it at the moment). I'd have to concede, though, it's better than cell door. ho ho ho, Sylvester

↑ Index

555. Lawrence Upton.
Domestic Ambient Noise
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Writers Forum announces the two latest sections of DOMESTIC AMBIENT NOISE by Cobbing and Upton

IMBALANCE Bob Cobbing / Lawrence Upton ISBN 0 86162 847 0 December 1998

OF ZERO AND INFINITY Lawrence Upton / Bob Cobbing ISBN 0 86162 848 9 December 1998

Each £1.00 plus postage

190 published so far. 110 to go.

All orders / enquiries to New River Project, 89a Petherton Road, London N5 2QT. Enquiries with s.a.e./i.r.c. please

---------- Lawrence Upton's website: http://members.spree.com/sip/lizard/
---------- "WORD SCORE UTTERANCE CHOREOGRAPHY in verbal and visual poetry" edited by Bob Cobbing and Lawrence Upton Writers Forum, London, 1998; 156 pp; ISBN 0 86162 750 4

↑ Index

556. Tom Beard
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

> At 11:00 PM -0800 12/14/98, George Bowering wrote:
> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful > English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".

Didn't someone famously state that the most beautiful word in English was "elbow"? But I'd have to agree that "cellardoor" sounds gorgeous: it sounds un-English, perhaps the exotic island of Selador, or perhaps "c'est la d'or".

As for me, the two most beautiful words in the English language are "Transaction Accepted".

And speaking of syllable sounds & Lewis Carroll, I remember that in Godel, Escher, Bach there are 'translations' of Jaberwocky into French & German, with very strange and revealing results. Does anyone know who the translators were?

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

↑ Index

557. Pierre Joris
Re: syllable sounds
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Tom Beard wrote:...

I remember that in Godel,

> Escher, Bach there are 'translations' of Jaberwocky into French & German, with very strange and revealing results. Does anyone know who the translators were?

Putative French by one Frank L. Warrin as published in _The New Yorker_ (1931) und Putatives Teutsch by one Robert Scott, as published in _MacMillan's Magazine,_ 1872.

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

558. Susan Schultz
Re: TINFISH reminder
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Just a reminder that the new _Tinfish_ is available. Each cover is--in part--a different weather map of the Pacific (Gaye Chan fished them out of a National Weather Service dumpster); I found one map with two typhoons and a tropical depression. So order more than one and partake in Pacific flux! $5 per and $13 for a subscription to three. They make great holiday gifts, as do our chapbooks (ask backchannel about any of this).

I won't be at MLA, but best wishes to everyone who will be, especially those of you in search of employment.

Susan Schultz
47-391 Hui Iwa Street #3
Kaneohe, HI 96744 USA

↑ Index

559. Anastasios Kozaitis
hambone
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Can someone please f/c or b/c me email or address info for HAMBONE?

thanks.

AK

==========
Anastasios Kozaitis
274 President Street, #4R
Brooklyn, NY 11231
[redacted]
==========

↑ Index

560. Pete Neufeld
Re: syllable sounds and reference
Tue 15 Dec 1998

I agree with Jen Hofer's post a few weeks back, where she argued "it is firmly my belief that all words reference." For a word or utterance to truly lack a reference would require, in my mind, that it had no dissimilarity from all other utterances that, through differences, would define it. I mean to say that context seems most important when one reads-- for example-- "brillig" in a poem, in this case, by Louis Carroll. Even it if lacks a clear definition or dictionary entry, it still points towards a possible meaning, even if that meaning might be in permanent abeyance. And we can say all sorts of interesting things about it, what it attempts to do, how it undermines x and y, how it fits the syntax of this or that, and so on. So in the end I would argue that it signifies, and that we demand that it does. I think even something as unrecognizable as Hugo Ball's sound poetry or Kurt Schwitter's _Ur Sonata_ still refer, they re-ferre, literally in the Latin "carry-back, report," (actually a military term all over Caesar's _Gallic Wars_)upon what exactly, I would agree, is clearly open to debate. Even if you can't read Bob Grenier's work, it still signifies, in fact we tend to insist that it does. I find it hard to imagine a non-referential language, the two seem incompatible. As far as sounds and syllables and the men and women who loved them, Shelley voted "syphilis" the most pleasing word to the ear in the language.

Pete

↑ Index

561. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Tue 15 Dec 1998

EMI Stops Production of Nazi Songs COLOGNE, Germany (AP) _ International recording label EMI says it has stopped production of a cassette by German folk singer Heino that contains traditional marching songs the Nazis used during World War II. The cassette, titled ``As We March Side By Side,'' was produced several years ago but never marketed commercially because of EMI's concerns about its content, EMI spokesman Erich Grote said Monday in Cologne. The 60-year-old Heino, popular mostly with older Germans, has been singing folk music since the 1960s. ``As We March Side By Side'' contains songs popular before the Third Reich but exploited by the Nazis as propaganda about the glories of Germany. Heino also sings the German national anthem on the cassette, including the original first verse that was banned after the war. It begins: ``Deutschland, Deutschland ueber alles,'' or ``Germany above all.'' The decision to stop production of the cassette followed a German TV report that ``As We March ...'' was being offered for sale by mail order in the extreme right-wing German National Newspaper. ``This was an unpleasant surprise,'' the EMI spokesman told The Associated Press. ``We immediately informed our customers that we would not fill any more orders (for the cassette), because we in no way want to support this kind of product.'' Heino was not immediately available for comment about EMI's decision. The newspaper, published in Munich by politician Gerhard Frey, had been running the mail-order advertisements for about a year, the station ARD reported.

↑ Index

562. miekal and Re: welcomed
Tue 15 Dec 1998

Jessica Pompeii wrote:

I am certain you are all kind hearted > academics.

Ya got me pegged.

dyed in tweed pipesmoker

miekal

↑ Index

563. Jessica Pompeii welcomed
Tue 15 Dec 1998

I feel everything about everything. It seems at some point. Or all at the same time. For instance now. This list. I am certain you are all kind hearted academics. And vice-versa. My fave greek was/is Carneades. He believed in odds to determine his actions and perceptions. Yet was always open to new statistics. Opening. Hi. -js

↑ Index

564. Emily Lloyd
Re: poetics of impeachment
Tue 15 Dec 1998

> If you were going to court a beloved etc.>>

Sadly, strangely, unfortunately, or coincidentally, no one I've ever courted (or been beloveds with) has had a lick of interest in poetry. I'd feel like Alvy Singer pushing death & dying books on Annie Hall.

HowEVer, if anyone out there wants to come a'courtin here, I'll be happy to provide an extensive, alphabetized list that'd work at least as well as a backrub-with-motives, beginning, now that Charles mentions it, with Close Listening and vol.2 of Poems for the Millenium.

hankie-droppingly yrs,
em

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

565. Amy King
Re: f.y.i. - Heino - I wish I threw rocks back then.
Tue 15 Dec 1998

-----Original Message-----
From: joel lewis <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Tuesday, December 15, 1998 5:41 PM
Subject: f.y.i.

> EMI Stops Production of Nazi Songs
> COLOGNE, Germany (AP) _ International recording label EMI says it has stopped production of a cassette by German folk singer Heino > that contains traditional marching songs the Nazis used during World War II.

This Heino truly is disturbed. I've seen footage of performances (70's?) that do not present a "folk singer" of the traditional long hair, acoustic guitar playing, granola in the back pocket genre.

Some were quite entertaining, even innovative (a stand in does some karate kicks and flips, really "gets down" for him during one song - a feat only Madonna has replicated since), but a piece I remember vividly was of the suit clad Heino singing to some underage girls while obviously oogling them from behind his trademark sunglasses. However, he does only hold their hands, stroke their shoulders. Not too shabby for a grown man. The old celebration of the respectable drooling perv. He reminded me of the scalely men who "fed pigeons" in the park where my teen girlfriends and I met up to smoke.

↑ Index

566. Tosh

Re: f.y.i. - Heino - I wish I threw rocks back then.

Tue 15 Dec 1998

All my friends tell me that Heino is cool (in sort of a bad retro way). Are there any plans to publish the complete lyrics of Heino?

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

567. Kathy Lou Schultz

Re: hambone

Tue 15 Dec 1998

Hambone
Nathaniel Mackey, Editor
134 Hunolt Street
Santa Cruz, CA 95060

Anastasios Kozaitis wrote:
>
> Can someone please f/c or b/c me email or address info for HAMBONE?
>
> thanks.
>

> AK
>
> ==========
> Anastasios Kozaitis
> 274 President Street, #4R
> Brooklyn, NY 11231
> [redacted]
> ==========

↑ Index

568. John Tranter
Herman Utix.
Wed 16 Dec 1998

A young boy (his parents were born in Vietnam) at my children's school (in Sydney, Australia) had a Vietnamese name which unfortunately sounded very rude in English. A teacher spoke to the parents and tactfully suggested that their child would have a less miserable time at school if he changed his name. After considerable thought they agreed, carefully chose a neutral-sounding English name, and registered it by deed poll. The boy wore his new name with pride: Germain Grommet.

from John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted] Editor, Jacket magazine:
http://www.jacket.zip.com.au/welcome.html Homepage: five megabytes of glittering literature, free, at http://www.alm.aust.com/~tranterj/index.html

↑ Index

569. Leonard Brink
Announcement - Windhover #2
Wed 16 Dec 1998

The second edition of Windhover is now on-line at:
http://home.sprintmail.com/~windhover

It features POETRY by:

Maxine Chernoff
Henry Gould
Martha Ronk
Stephen Ratcliffe
Paul Naylor
Sheila E. Murphy

Spencer Selby
Miekal And & Maria Damon

REVIEWS by:

Steve Evans
Jono Schneider

& POETICS by:

Kent Johnson

Windhover is dynamic i.e. this issue will continue to accept submissions for a few weeks.
(The first edition, for those who missed it, is still on-line.)

↑ Index

570. Rachel Levitsky
Re: syllable sounds and reference
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Shelley voted "syphilis" the most pleasing word to the > ear in the language.
>
Today my ear is obsessed with "sidereal"

↑ Index

571. Daniel Zimmerman
lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Dear Listees:

Having received the following message on U. Penn's LINGUIST listserv, I tried to produce a poem that would lose nothing [well, almost nothing] in translation.

It uses [except for "a" and "in"] words which K. S. Chung regards as strong candidates for words recognized pretty much everywhere around the world [though a Turkish student tells me that "curry" doesn't work in her language]. I confess I couldn't bring myself to use "golf," but I did get all the others into the piece.

So: the first 'international' poem that loses nothing [asuming it has something to begin with!] in translation:

SAUNA

neon alleluias!
chocolate ninja czar
a shock in yoga-jazz
curry T-shirt!
OK, cocoa bikini!
platinum card!

--Dan Zimmerman

Date: Sat, 12 Dec 1998 10:27:26 +0800
From: Karen Steffen Chung <[redacted]>
Subject: International Words

Last August I posted a query regarding 'international' words (LINGUIST 9.1151) like _chocolate_, which seem to end up as phonetic loans in just about any language/culture that is acquainted with the referent concerned.

I got quite a few interesting replies, which I've collated below.

I'd like to ask a further question here: Does anyone know of a word or words for 'chocolate' in native Mexican/Mesoamerican languages? One correspondent, Antony Dubach Green in Germany, suggested that if any language had a word for 'chocolate' that is not somehow a phonetic loan of _chocolate_, it would most likely be a Mexican language, where chocolate is native (Nahuatl: _xoco_ 'bitter' + _atl_ 'water').

John Koontz gave some very detailed and interesting information on Omaha-Ponca and Teton Dakotan, offering exmaples of non-cognate words for 'tea'. See also the note below on 'coffee' in Amharic from Robert Ratcliffe in Japan. Please reply to me privately if you have any further input on any of the above data.

John Koontz offered a useful suggestion, i.e. that maybe one cannot be too absolutist in looking for a word that is a phonetic loan in all known languages. His comment:

> I haven't thought of any potential international non-food terms. I wonder, though, if you might not need to be somewhat less than absolute in identifying such terms. Widespread and crossing the boundaries of known relationships, or of known origin, might suffice.

This makes sense, since words like 'tea' and 'coffee' get pretty close to being 'international' words, based on the data collected so far.

Heartfelt thanks to:

Diana ben-Aaron [redacted]
Sylvia Bendel [redacted]
Bart de Boer [redacted]
Gordon Brown [redacted]

Wayles Browne [redacted]
John Brownie [redacted]
Vassilis Christodoulou [redacted]
Helmut Daller [redacted]
Radu Daniliuc [redacted]
Karen Davis [redacted]
Nancy Frishberg [redacted]
Antony Dubach Green [redacted]
Earl Herrick [redacted]
George Huttar [redacted]
John E. Koontz [redacted]
Rina Kreitman [redacted]
Rick McCallister [redacted]
Mark Mandel [redacted]
Mike Moss [redacted]
Mohammed Moubatassime [redacted]
Douglas Mullins [redacted]
Tara L. Narcross [redacted]
Lukasz Pielasa [redacted]
Robert R. Ratcliffe [redacted]
Carsten Sinner [redacted]
Sijmen Tol [redacted]
Larry Trask [redacted]
Cristina Varga [redacted]
Colin Whiteley [redacted]
Sean Witty [redacted]

Below follow lists of possible candidates for international words, along with others that failed either the Chinese or another language test, based on the responses I received. I used Mandarin Chinese as a key test since it is a language that tends to use loan translations/calques or original coinings where possible rather than phonetic loans.

Possible 'international word' candidates (that pass the Chinese test):

alleluia bikini card
[the chemical elements] chocolate cocoa curry

czar/tsar golf jazz ninja OK sauna shock
T-shirt
yoga

Words suggested that didn't pass the Chinese (or some other) test:

alcohol allergy automobile banana calculator catastrophe chess class climate cocktail coffee* (see note below) computer democracy detective diskette elephant fax football garage gas gay hygiene jeans jogging kangaroo karate mama (Japanese _haha_) mass metal microphone muesli

music organisation
papa (Japanese _chichi_) planet radio rendez-vous rock (music)
sex appeal striptease sugar symbol taxi tea
television telephone theater tiger train tunnel video violin xerox zoom (lens)

Notes

*But take Coffee. It is indigenous to the area around the strait of Bab-el-Mandeb, that is Yemen and Ethiopia. In Yemen (that is in Arabic) it is called _qahwah_, which becomes _kahve_ in Turkish _kafe_ in Italian _kawfi_ in English _koohi_ in Japanese. But in Ethiopia (at least in Amharic) it is called _bunn_. This word _bunn_ is also used in Arabic to refer to fresh coffee beans, before they are roasted and ground. I hope some Americanist on the list will have an interesting story to tell about chocolate.

- Robert R. Ratcliffe <[redacted]>

Omaha-Ponca xa'de maN'kkaN 'tea; lit. grass (or herb) medicine' Omaha-Ponca maN'kkaN sa'be 'coffee; lit. black medicine' Teton Dakotan c^haN-khal'yapi 'tea; lit. warmed wood (bark)' Teton Dakotan phez^u'ta sa'pa 'coffee; lit. black medicine (or weed)' Omaha-Ponca and Dakotan are Siouan languages (North America). In Omaha-Ponca there are no words for chocolate or curry, though presumably the English terms would be used, with little or no adaptation. Omaha-Ponca is certainly not without loan words and certain vocabulary fields (dates, numbers, English given names) are normally filled with more or less unadapted English terms. However, I think there is a feeling that such foreign words are expedients rather than naturalized, and in general there is some resistance to loans. They seem to be much less prevalent than in European languages. Calques are more common, often from the old trade pidgin in the case of European items, e.g., ppe'de niN' 'fire water' for 'whiskey' (cf. ardent spirits?) or maN'ze ska' 'white metal' for 'money' (cf. French argent?).

- John E. Koontz [redacted]

Suggested references (heavily weighted toward 'international' words in European languages only):

Braun, Peter, Burkhard Schaeder, & Johannes Volmert (Hgg.). 1990._Internationalismen: Studien zur interlingualen Lexikologie und Lexikographie_. Tubingen: Niemeyer. 193 p. (Reihe Germanistische Linguistik; 102)

Goursau, Henri & Goursau, Monique. 1989. _Dictionnaire europeen des mots usuels, francais-anglais-allemand-espagnol-italien-portugais_. Saint-Orens-de-Granville: Edition Goursau.

Walter, Henriette. 1994. _L'aventure des langues en occident_. Paris: Editions Robert Laffont.

Karen Steffen Chung
National Taiwan University
[redacted]

↑ Index

572. A. Jenn Sondheim

NEW OBSERVATIONS issue on Cultures of Cyberspace (fwd)

Wed 16 Dec 1998

A new issue of NEW OBSERVATIONS, on Cultures of Cyberspace, is now out, and available from New Observations for $6. Edited by Alan Sondheim, the magazine is 8.5x11, with glossy purplish cover, approx 40 pps. with _a lot_ of text. The writers are from 'all over,' including many from the Cybermind and Fop-l email lists (as well as Future Culture, Poetics, etc.).

From the Introduction:

"This issue of _New Observations_ focuses on Cultures of Cyberspace - the kinds of exchanges and communities that have grown out of the Net over the past twenty years or so. The oldest document is a reproduction of a dia- gram from a 1972 paper describing failures in the original ARPA network, the ancestor of today's online monster. [...] The illustrations have been chosen as a counterpoint to the texts; they reflect spaces and bodies that are effaced, occluded, ghostlike - in short _uncanny_ spaces that, to my mind at least, parallel the 'feeling' of being online."

I must say I'm quite pleased with the publication - which captures a cer- tain aspect of online subjectivity. The articles range from accounts of the phenomenology of email lists to a description of ThePalace, from MUD and MOO analyses to posts from alt.adjective.noun.verb.verb.verb.

The writers include Michael Spirito, Miekal And, Ryan Whyte, Eve Andree Laramee, Jerry Everard, John Suler, Caitlin Martin, Adrianne Wortzel, Radhika Gajjala, addicted2words, S. McKenzie, Nick Mamatas, Ted in St. Louis, Jon Marshall, Alexanne Don, Art McGee, Laurie Cubbison, Steven Meinking, Drew Shiel, Paula Davidson, Amy Fletcher, and Guiseppe Iann- icelli. Artists include David Smith, Fanny Jacobson, Janieta Eyer, Emily Cheng, Thomas Zummer, Tyler Stallings, Nancy Haynes, Wenda Gu, Ichi Ikeda, Robert Cheatham, Barbara Simcoe, Kim Mcglynn, and Alice Glenn, among others.

You may order it from:

New Observations
611 Broadway #701
New York City, NY, 10012

(Single Issue #120, Cultures of Cyberspace)

The telephone is [redacted] (fax as well).
Email: [redacted]

Subscription for this arts/cultural journal (next issue is on Memory Palaces) is 1 year / 4 issues: $22.00 and 2 years /8 issues: $38.00

Enjoy! See what the fuss is about!

- Alan

↑ Index

573. Mark Salerno
Joel Oppenheimer
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Colleagues:

Arshile seeks someone to write a review of Joel Oppenheimer's COLLECTED LATER POEMS, edited by Robert J. Bertholf (Buffalo, N.Y.: The Poetry/Rare Books Collection, SUNY, 1997). Interested parties please backchannel.

Mark Salerno

↑ Index

574. George Bowering
Re: syllable sounds
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Before my girlfriend/wife Angela knew any Spanish, I used to whisper in her ear,
"caracoles," and she had a frisson I loved.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

575. George Bowering
Re: syllable sounds
Wed 16 Dec 1998

> I'm actually in love with pharmacological words--my recent favorite is "Propecia," the name of a hair growth drug for men. Zithromax is good, too.
>
> shana

The Japanese word "rimbyo" sounds lovely and it means gonorrhea or literally "drip-sickness"

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

576. George Bowering
Re: syllable sounds
Wed 16 Dec 1998

> Bust him for plagiarism--it was Gertrude Stein who said that (though I can't footnote it at the moment). I'd have to concede, though, it's better than cell door. ho ho ho, Sylvester

Oh, excreta! you're right. I remember reading that not too long ago. I am going to bop that Singaporean.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

577. Gabriel Gudding
Posting to the list (fwd)
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Hullo?

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 11 Dec 1998 12:15:08 -0500
From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Posting to the list

Thanks, anonymous voice, for the note. I am confused by the apparent contradiction between the list being edited and all posts being forwarded immediately. My confusion increases when Henry tells me two of the posts he sent before he unsubscribed were not forwarded.

Please clarify.

Jordan Davis

Poetics list wrote: In reply to recent queries, there has been no change in the structure of the list. The Poetics List is edited and will remain so for the forseeable future; however, please be aware that all posts sent to the list by subscribers go immediately to the list, without exception.

↑ Index

578. Pierre Joris
Re: syllable sounds and reference
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Rachel Levitsky wrote:

> Today my ear is obsessed with "sidereal"

or as Ed Dorn has it, somewhere, if memory serves:

"the inside real and the outsidereal"

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

579. Lawrence Upton.
Re: syllable sounds
Wed 16 Dec 1998

|& I remember some piece of research years ago that found that for most |people the euphonically most beautiful word in English was "carcinoma."

ye-e--e---ss
but at this closeness surely the euphony is tied up with the voice of the individual uttering and the auditor's response to that pronunciation

Pierre uttering "carcinoma" would produce a very different set of sounds to... say Kate Adie - a BBC correspondent of great verbal-vocal precision, arising not least from her being half or more Swedish - I am *assuming you will have heard her. In case not, let's say Jerome Rothenberg... or Steve McCaffery - gender balance! or Karen MacCormack or Anne Waldman. All quite different in what they would do with that set of sounds. Given the range of pronunciations /musical effects available to speakers, I don't see how one word could be awarded an unequivocal accolade as the euphonically most beautiful word

AND the situation changes when the one word is put with another:
cellardoor carcinoma
OR
carcinoma cellardoor
quite different sonic AND stress interrelationships

L
|
|Pierre
|
|
|--
|==========
|Pierre Joris
|[redacted]
|http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
|6 Madison Place
|Albany NY 12202
|tel: [redacted]
|fax: [redacted]
|==========
|Nomadism answers to a relation that
|possession cannot satisfy.
|
|— Maurice Blanchot
|==========
|

Lawrence Upton's website: http://members.spree.com/sip/lizard/

"WORD SCORE UTTERANCE CHOREOGRAPHY in verbal and visual poetry" edited by Bob Cobbing and Lawrence Upton Writers Forum, London, 1998; 156 pp; ISBN 0 86162 750 4

↑ Index

580. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Wed 16 Dec 1998

 An impeachable offense: As if President Clinton doesn't have enough trouble on Capitol Hill, now he's got problems down under. Er, ah, Down Under. It seems that organizers of Madame Tussaud's traveling wax museum of 110 life-like statues have encountered some troubles in Sydney, Australia. Their guests just can't keep their hands off of the Clinton model's naughty bits, unzipping his pants as a prank. So, Vicky Brown, general manager of the exhibition has ordered Mr. President's fly sewn shut. Prior to her stratagem, security guards were checking on Clinton's state of affairs every couple of hours to "avoid embarrassment," Brown said.

↑ Index

581. Gabriel Gudding
Re: syllable sounds and reference
Wed 16 Dec 1998

> Rachel Levitsky wrote:
>
> Today my ear is obsessed with "sidereal"

I have always been fascinated by the sound of Farts (the word, people). I love Dentals and Fricatives. I also love fajitas, which might explain some of my attraction to this word. Ferret is also a perky word and possesses at least one very sharp Dental. Note how the introduction of the words Ferret and Fart radically change the sonic texture of this bit from Genesis.

Ferret was wroth with his servants, and put me in a ward in the captain of the guard's house, both me and the chief baker: And we dreamed each man according to the interpretation of his dream. And there was there with us an young man, an Hebrew, an servant of the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he interpreted to us our dreams; to each man according to his dream he did interpret.

Ferret sent and called for Joseph, and they brought him hastily out of the dungeons: and he shaved himself and changed his raiment, and came in unto ferret. And ferret said unto Joseph, I have dreamed a dream, and there is none that can interpret it: and I have heard say of thee, that thou canst understand a dream.

That is when Joseph turned into a fart and was inhaled by degrees.

↑ Index

582. Charles Bernstein
MLA/Open to Public
Wed 16 Dec 1998

I neglected to mention in my announcement yesterday about the MLA events that the ones I listed are free and open to the public; and indeed the idea for these events was, in part, to have a few poetry-related events open to poets living in the Bay area:

David Bromige/Lyn Hejinian/Leslie Scalapino reading: Monday, 28 December, 5:15pm. Franciscan Room A, Hilton, which is the Ballroom Level, Building 1.

Adrienne Rich Reading (followed by conversation): Monday, 28 December, 3:30-4:45, Plaza Room A, Hilton, which is immediately followed, in the same room, by Poetry Division Cash Bar and book party for Rich, and for Poems for the Millennium II, Close Listening, and Imagining Language. Plaza Room A is on the Lobby Level, Building 1

Other MLA events free and open to the public include these five readings, which, remarkably, all take place at the same time!: 5:15-6:30 on Tuesday, December 29 in the Hilton (titles for readings are those listed in the program):

John Kinsella in Franciscan Room A

Hypermeida Poetry/Fiction with Stephanie Strickland & M. D. Coverley in Parlor 2, Continental Ballroom

Charles Wright in Continental Ballroom 6

West Coast Native Women's Poetry with Gloria Bird, Janice Gould, Deborah A. Miranda, and Nora Davenhauer in Yosemite Room B

Asian American Writers Catherine Liu & R. Zamora Linmark in Union Square 15 and 16

In addition, there is a free reading by Czeslaw Milosz: 12/27, 7pm, Yosemite Room A

Another things SF area folks who are not registered might enjoy is the great and large book exhibit. According to the convention program, "MLA convention registrants may obtain free passes to the exhibit hall for guests they accompany in the hall. Persons who are not registered for the convention and who are not guests of registrants may purchase a one-day pass to the exhibit hall for $10. These passes are available near the entrance to the exhibit hall." Well worth the $10, by the way. The book exhibit is in the Grand Ballroom Salon A and B, Building 2, San Francisco Hilton.

↑ Index

583. Laura E. Wright
Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

> OK, cocoa bikini!
>
> --Dan Zimmerman

I can't believe "alcohol" didn't "pass the test"! But I vote, today, for OK, cocoa bikini
as having very pleasing shape to tongue and ear.

Meanwhile, a two-headed question for any takers: 1) How do you (or do you?) guard yourself / your work against people who are inclined to, for example, question your lover in pointed detail about your sex life after hearing you read? These people, it should be noted, do not question the poet about the work, but the assumed subject/object of the work about itself.

2) If people insist on referring one's work back to one's lover, how to protect the lover (not in a sheltering sense, but a compassionate one) from feeling attacked by the work?

(Sorry if this is a bit, I feel necessarily, vague -- but would greatly appreciate any thoughts along these lines.)

In minor poetic crisis, seeking extra soothing syllable sounds, Laura
--
Laura Wright, Library Assistant
Allen Ginsberg Library, The Naropa Institute
2130 Arapahoe Ave
Boulder, CO 80302
[redacted]

"Speech keeps strangling itself, but wisdom has not come."
--Henri Michaux

↑ Index

584. Randy Prunty
Re: New Hejinaian/Scalapino from Edge Books
Wed 16 Dec 1998

hello Rod

could you put a copy of Sight in the mail to me and I'll send you the $10?

Randy Prunty
1221 Sheppard Dr.
Lilburn, GA 30047

↑ Index

585. MAYHEW
Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Laura: How incredibly rude! I'm sure Miss Manners would tell your lover to say, politely, "It's actually none of your business" and leave it at that. Why anyone would feel obliged to entertain such questions is beyond me.

Jonathan

↑ Index

586. Jerry McGuire
syllable sounds
Wed 16 Dec 1998

> I recently heard an Asian say that the most beautiful English word he'd ever heard was "cellardoor".
>
> Bust him for plagiarism--it was Gertrude Stein who said that (though I can't footnote it at the moment). I'd have to concede, though, it's better than cell door. ho ho ho, Sylvester

Bust me for laziness, because I won't check the archives either, but I recall that it was Borges who said that his _students'_ favorite expression in English was "cellar door." Could they have been reading Stein?

Jerry

↑ Index

587. daniel bouchard
Re: is a language poet
Wed 16 Dec 1998

At 01:15 PM 12/11/98 PST, Ron Silliman wrote:
>Has anyone noticed that what's happening in Congress right now isn't an >impeachment but a coup?
>

I noticed. I think. I've got to write this note quickly though and beat out the lunchtime crowds at Filene's Basement.

In new england there is a mechanism in people that aims for the worst in particular situations. For example, if it is cold and raw and ugly outside, one would say to one's fellow, "well, at least it ain't snowing." Or, if there is heavy snow and a tree falls on your house, one would say "well, at least it didn't hit the truck." And so on.

So there is a coup in Congress--the sick fruition of an effort begun on Inauguration Day 1992. Well, at least nobody's been shot yet.

Ken Starr, he "investigated" a Clinton real estate investement, and no one particularly cared.
So "travelgate" came to pass, and no one was impressed.
Contributions to the Clinton campaign were scrutinzed but the public lacked enthusiasm.
Legions of felt-up associates came forward but no one in power was so shameless as to pretend they were interested in "protecting" women from sexual harassment.
Now the leader of the free world, in covering his ass for screwing around,
is accused of perjury and will be tried for high crimes and treason.

This is all still pretty tame by Roman standards.

All public officials know well enough from this day forward not ever to fuck with health care again; no socialization of any industry whatsoever.

The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
and I hate him a lot.
The gist of it is there is nothing one can do about it anyway.
I guess we'll get what we deserve by christmas anyway.
The interesting part is borne out of mandatory passivity.
The interesting part is free lessons in double-plus bad speak.
Tiberius was a sexual predator too.
Clinton is not fit to lace his sneakers.
The interesting part will begin once he's gone.

Thankfully I am a provincial and have few international associates to be embarrassed before.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

588. shana
Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

On Wed, 16 Dec 1998, Laura E. Wright wrote:
>
> Meanwhile, a two-headed question for any takers:
> 1) How do you (or do you?) guard yourself / your work against people who > are inclined to, for example, question your lover in pointed detail > about your sex life after hearing you read? These people, it should be > noted, do not question the poet about the work, but the assumed > subject/object of the work about itself.
>
> 2) If people insist on referring one's work back to one's lover, how to > protect the lover (not in a sheltering sense, but a compassionate one) > from feeling attacked by the work?

I'm with Jonathan--anyone who does this is incredibly rude. I can't even imagine this sort of scene taking place. Do people really come up to your lover after a reading, sipping their grocery store wine, and say, "So, you really get off on having that birthmark on your ass caressed?"

It seems that a bigger problem would come about when a really ballsy person insists on referring your work back your current lover when the work in question was pointed toward a past lover...

I knew there was a reason I don't invite my ex-lovers to readings...Now I'm paranoid. I'm hiding all my lover poems away in a box with a big post-it (tm) note saying, "To be read after I'm halfway across the world."

Shana
[redacted]
http://www.bway.net/~shana

↑ Index

589. Jack Ruttan
Re: Bernstein/Perloff in Chicago
Wed 16 Dec 1998

I think the reason for theory/manifestoes/whatnot, at least at the beginning, was a need to distinguish oneself from the mainstream/what has gone before. You wanted to maintain that you were different from all that other junk, and then someone had the nerve to ask "in what way?"

Jack Ruttan, Montreal

Joe Amato wrote:
> perhaps it will help if i clarify a bit why i asked my question: it seems > to me that an argument can be made that what distinguishes much of the more > oppositional/alternative/non-mainstream writing is a willingness to > theorize one's "craft" (i use the latter with some skepticism intact---the [...]
--

http://www.axess.com/users/jackr

↑ Index

590. Jessica Pompeii
no buddies buz
Wed 16 Dec 1998

I would tell them it is a story.
-js

↑ Index

591. Rachel Levitsky
Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Laura,

How archaic I think. I mean all this talk about non-referentiality and we still need to preface our words when reading and tell people "this is not about you or me." It's the confessional craze the idea that a memoir really is or really is history or accurate or that there is a fact or a real can you believe this bill of goods?

Rigaberta Menchu is being hounded by fact seeking academics who are hell bent in rendering her story non-valid. Thank goddess the nobel people got the idea right in their retort to demands her prize be taken away in saying, all writing embellishes, that was not the point.

I unfortunately get something similar quite often. Whenever I read the lines "you fucking me, me screaming," men inevitably come up to me all smiles and invitations. I wonder if anything I wrote was heard. And when I read my poem "She said she didn't think my ego was a problem" I've had men following me saying "I just never thought about lesbians that way before" and I think jeez I'm not a poet I'm a social worker.

in struggle,
Rachel

↑ Index

592. Jessica Pompeii
Re: syllable sounds/lost in translation?
Wed 16 Dec 1998

---

cussing, very satisfying all the shhhhhhhhhhhh
-Jesica

↑ Index

593. A. Jenn Sondheim
--==[ANNOUNCING CYBERCULTURE]==--
Wed 16 Dec 1998

= (new project - Alan)

ANNOUNCING

CYBERCULTURE

AN ELECTRONIC FORUM FOR THE DISCUSSION OF THE IMPLICATIONS OF SUBJECTIVITY AND COMMUNITY IN CYBERSPACE

We are all dwelling in cyberspace, coursing through the wires, becoming cyborg and becoming human, alone at the keyboard, together online. We are subjects of a realm which offers new ways of envisioning Self and Oth- er(s), and where a global cyberculture is in the process of creation. Cyberculture is devoted to an examination of the new subjectivities and collectivities that are emerging. We are interested in the cultural, political, philosophical and psychological issues engendered, on all levels of the social.

The Cyberculture email list is not a community-forming enterprise as such, but a place to discuss culture and community online. The list will remain focused on these topics; it will also be a clearing-house for work-in-pro- gress, calls for papers, and so forth.

Some issues that may be relevant:

* the formation (or ad hoc re-constitution) and functioning of online communities, such as Quake Clans or MUD/Usenet/e-mail groups; * the place of the political in online communities and the functioning of power online; * work on sex, gender, race, sexual behaviour in relation to online (vir- tual) subjectivity; * the implications of symbolic and technological extensions of the human (cyborg, android theory, etc.); * financing the Net, the production of the Net consumer, and so forth; * the social implications of computer interfaces and operating systems - in other words, the role of the apparatus in online behavior and commun- ity; * and the interactions between online and offline culture (how social/ cultural ideas shape online and offline 'realities').

This will be a relatively open list - posts on all aspects of cyberculture will be welcomed. We stress, however, that our intent is to explore these issues in the broadest sense, within a focused, substantial discussion, with a minimum of distraction.

One concern we hope to address is the way in which much theoretical work on cyberspace to date reflects an exclusive, hegemonic bias, thus fore- closing some of the most interesting and radical possibilities for the development of cyberculture. We plan to challenge ourselves and the list members to integrate issues of race, gender, class and multiculturalism in our examinations and theories of cyberspace.

==========
==========

If you are going to subscribe to the Cyberculture mailinglist then

--==[PLEASE KEEP THIS MESSAGE FOR FUTURE REFERENCE!]==--

The remainder of this message contains the information of how to SUBscribe or UNSUBscribe from the Cyberculture mailinglist.

[redacted]

Do NOT use a subject line. Put the following in the body of the message:

SUBSCRIBE CYBERCULTURE Firstname Lastname

or go to the following website and complete the form:

http://lists.cmhc.com/cyberculture/about.htm

To UNSUBscribe, send a message to:

[redacted]

Do NOT use a subject line. Put the following in the body of the message:

UNSUBSCRIBE CYBERCULTURE

↑ Index

594. Roger Day

Re: syllable sounds

Wed 16 Dec 1998

At 16/12/98 13:47:25, "Lawrence Upton." <[redacted]> wrote:

|& I remember some piece of research years ago that found that for most |people the euphonically most beautiful word in English was "carcinoma."
#
ye-e--e---ss
but at this closeness surely the euphony is tied up with the voice of the individual uttering and the auditor's response to that pronunciation
#
Pierre uttering "carcinoma" would produce a very different set of sounds to... say Kate Adie - a BBC correspondent of great verbal-vocal precision, arising not least from her being half or more Swedish - I am *assuming you will have heard her. In case not, let's say Jerome Rothenberg... or Steve McCaffery - gender balance! or Karen MacCormack or Anne Waldman. All quite different in what they would do with that set of sounds. Given the range of pronunciations /musical effects available to speakers, I don't see how one word could be awarded an unequivocal accolade as the euphonically most beautiful word
#
AND the situation changes when the one word is put with another:
cellardoor carcinoma
OR
carcinoma cellardoor
quite different sonic AND stress interrelationships

Indeed. And there has been some research in this area, involving cadences in speech and comparing them between dialects and between different languages, but I can't find it anywhere. The nearest I could get to it was <URL:http://www.conknet.com/~mmagnus/>, which might have some sort of Radio 2 link to the topic - phonosemantics, although it doesn't beauty. Or truth, come to that.

I've always had a partialness to "quark", although "yellowhammer" seems to be cropping up a lot recently.

Roger

↑ Index

595. Mark Wallace
poetry reading at the DC Arts Center (fwd)
Wed 16 Dec 1998

We hope you can join us on Sunday, December 20 at 3 p.m. at the DC Arts Center (2438 18th St. in Adams Morgan, just below the corner of 18th and Columbia) for a poetry reading by SHERRY BRENNAN and P. INMAN.

SHERRY BRENNAN's chapbook TAKEN, published by D.C.'s primitive publications, was one of the highlights of D.C. poetry publishing in 1997. Last time she was here, she tore up a poem as she read it, and said certain things over and over without ever repeating herself. Now she's back again for another reading, and those of you who missed her the first time have a chance to not make the same mistake again. Her work has also appeared recently in CHAIN, MASS AVE, NO ROSES REVIEW, and SITUATION.

By his own admission, P. INMAN was once described as "a typical language poet/unfeeling in small reviews." In books like RED SHIFT, VEIL, and CRISS CROSS, Inman has invented a poetic language unlike any other, where the lack of conventional referentiality has been replaced by a shifting verbal landscape of fractured phrases and dislocating repetitions that have no intention of getting you anywhere.

We hope to see you there and for all festivities afterwards.

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

596. miekal and
wag the dog
Wed 16 Dec 1998

what happened to the good ole days when the movies imitated reality. we have emetically entered the 21st century.

m

↑ Index

597. Balestrieri, Peter
Re: Lost in Translation
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Hi Daniel, You forgot to list "Coca Cola," which, according to Ciardi, is the most recognizable word in the world, followed by OK. It would be interesting if a new Esperanto were growing, fueled by advertising and mass media. Pete

Daniel Zimmerman wrote:

So: the first 'international' poem that loses nothing [assuming it has something to begin with!] in translation:

SAUNA

neon alleluias!
chocolate ninja czar
a shock in yoga-jazz
curry T-shirt!
OK, cocoa bikini!
platinum card!

↑ Index

598. A. Jenn Sondheim
Saddam, Turn on your Radio / TV , Change of Channel
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Baghdad's live now on TV, tracer bullets everywhere. They're going to impeach the President. Saddam plays into the expected narrative - he controls it. Derails the impeachment. The Republicans will call Saddam a Liberal. Everyone fulfills everyone. In both senses, Everything is All Over. "Bombs will hit the ground and people die," quote from the news. Suddenly "incoming" is seen. "Some sort of decoy." "A few moments ago some sort of impact with the ground." Saddam takes his turn at wri- ting the story. The Republicans will take over. Clinton, branded, his skin searing, smoking, turns his hands into buttons, the Y2K prob- lem coming early.

"Everything is full capacity."

Stay tuned.

↑ Index

599. Susan Schultz
Re: Iraq
Wed 16 Dec 1998

I presume that you've heard that the USA is now bombing Baghdad and that Trent Lott has announced that he will not support the President's policy. Feeling rather sick to my stomach at present about all of it.

Susan

↑ Index

600. sylvester pollet
Special Offer
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Hello last minute shoppers. Bombs falling, impeachment, Armageddon poetry special! Backwoods Broadsides Chaplet Series, gift subscriptions. Just send me your address & the recipient's, and I'll send him/her the latest, #38 Anselm Hollo, PEBBLES, and #39 Meredith Quartermain, VEERS. I'll include a personal note, saying the sub is a gift from you, and I guarantee they will get there before the end of Hanukkah, Christmas, Kwanzaa, or the Solstice.
You can send me the $10 bucks later (sub is a year's worth, 8 issues ppd.) The next two in the series will be going out mid-Jan., so please also send address corrections before I update my mailing list. # 40 will be Jonathan Williams, AMUSE-GUEULES FOR BEMUSED GHOULS, and #41 Rachel Blau DuPlessis, DRAFT 37: PRAEDELLE. Jonathan Williams is Jonathan Williams. Rachel's, a piece of her long poem-in-progress, was written in July 1998 in Umbria, with the bizarre limitations of the format in mind. The Spring duo will be Joan Retallack and Alan Jennifer Sondheim. Cheers,

Sylvester Pollet
963 Winkumpaugh Rd.
Ellsworth ME 04605

↑ Index

601. Steven Shoemaker

The Drop

Wed 16 Dec 1998

I hesitate to post this. I wrote it earlier today--title and all--thinking mostly of an odd state of semi-lucid semi-paralysis, and thinking of this state in mainly "personal" terms. Then I went to the gym and got on the treadmill, with all the tvs tuned to the scene Alan has described, the scene of waiting for the bombs to drop, and the poem began to seem in some way "political."

The Drop

In some ways a limited state of consciousness, as if one were sitting in a sparsely furnished room.

Some things are missing from the room, things

one might want. But each object present

shines in a clear light.
This light comes slanting in as if from a high window.

Even the swirling of motes in its beams seems a dance of precision and subtle logic.

The words stand out on the page, big and few,

just as they did in the school days of early youth.

Time unfolds slowly, in no hurry. It is almost impossible to think of the future.

This liberation is both disturbing and exhilarating.

There are things one is supposed to do that will not be done. As always,

there are terrible truths waiting. The single moment continues to expand, stretching like a bubble,

reaching toward imponderable dimensions.

One wonders, idly and without great concern,

when it will burst.

↑ Index

602. Garrett Kalleberg
TF7 unsound
Wed 16 Dec 1998

"Always make the audience suffer as much as possible".
- Alfred Hitchcock

The (un)sound cover to TF7 has been moved to a link on the Note page of this issue of The Transcendental Friend, replaced by user-friendly silence:

http://www.morningred.com/friend/1998/12/cover.html

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

The Transcendental Friend can be found at:
http://www.morningred.com/friend

↑ Index

603. Elizabeth Treadwell
Merle Bachman
Wed 16 Dec 1998

Hi, excuse my rude frontchannel, please. Does anyone have snail or email info on Merle Bachman? Please graciously backchannel.
Thanks
Clownily yours,
Elizabeth

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

604. Ron Silliman
Arghh
Wed 16 Dec 1998

"So there is a coup in Congress--the sick fruition of an effort begun on Inauguration Day 1992. Well, at least nobody's been shot yet."

Dan,

You were about 4 hours early on that judgment. Or does bombing not count?

Ron

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

605. david bromige
a change of heart
Wed 16 Dec 1998

POEM

IMPEACH
CLINTON

I could not have written this poem yesterday

↑ Index

606. A. Jenn Sondheim
(no subject)
Thu 17 Dec 1998

=

There are cars in the streets of Baghdad with an all-different sky. Some cars there are in Manhattan where I see Baghdad. The whole pretty world is so safe for me, I can go out on the street and eat and walk. Sometimes I can ride on the subway here and there and it is so fun. It is SO FUN! I know that Mr. Saddam cannot reach me here with his Long and Evil Clause! I know we can do anything we want in Irak too and it is so fun! What a wond- erful War when you can Watch it and No one Gets Hurt!

Timmy

↑ Index

607. Tosh
Re: a change of heart
Thu 17 Dec 1998

> POEM
>
> IMPEACH
> CLINTON
>
> I could not have written this poem yesterday

Impeach him for what?

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

608. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Iraq
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Fuck fuck fuck, I just got home and the list has been my only sort of news since the morning. This is Clinton's rage no? I'll send in a petition in a sec.

Susan Schultz wrote:
>
> I presume that you've heard that the USA is now bombing Baghdad and that Trent
> Lott has announced that he will not support the President's policy. Feeling > rather sick to my stomach at present about all of it.
>
> Susan

↑ Index

609. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Iraq
Thu 17 Dec 1998

This is all I've got so far:
I'll send more as I find it.

OTHER SUGGESTIONS FOR ACTION From the Fellowship of Reconciliation

Please contact: the President ([redacted]), the Vice-President ([redacted]), the Secretary of State ([redacted]) and your Senators and Member of Congress and urge them to support UN Secretary General Kofi Annan's plan to resolve the Iraq crisis. Also, please thank those members of Congress who made public statements against the proposed bombing (Lynn Rivers/MI, John Conyers/MI, Cynthia McKinney/GA and others (General address is http://www.house.gov/writerep/

Congressional Toll-Free numbers: Call during business hours. Ask the switchboard operator for the name of the Representative or Senator you want to bug. Of course, you won't get your elected official, but a staff member. It is a good idea to get the name of any staffer you establish some rapport with so you can ask for her/him in future calls. Also, there is a Congressional web page which will give you information about each Representative or Senator, http://www.capweb.net/directory.html. The toll-free numbers I have used with best success are (in order of infrequency of busy signals):

[redacted]

Susan Schultz wrote:
>
> I presume that you've heard that the USA is now bombing Baghdad and that Trent
> Lott has announced that he will not support the President's policy. Feeling > rather sick to my stomach at present about all of it.
>
> Susan

↑ Index

610. E.M. Garrison

Query

Thu 17 Dec 1998

Is anyone out there aware of a list for works in progress? A sounding board for poets in the wilderness?
Please backchan., if so.....

Thanks ,

beth

↑ Index

611. miekal and
Re: Query
Thu 17 Dec 1998

E.M. Garrison wrote:
>
> Is anyone out there aware of a list for works in progress? A > sounding board for poets in the wilderness?
> Please backchan., if so.....

no don't b/c, go public, that's a good question

↑ Index

612. Anastasios Kozaitis
Poem of the Day
Thu 17 Dec 1998

HEATHENS

(Freedom Jazz Dance or Dr. Jackle)

1 They Ugly
on purpose!

2 They get high off Air Raids!

3 They are the oldest continuously functioning
Serial Killers

4 They murder to Explain Themselves!

5 They think Humans are food.

6 They imitate conversation
by lying

7 They are always naked and always dirty

the shower & tuxedo don't help

8 They go to the bathroom to have a religious experience

9 They believe everything is better Dead. And that everything alive is their enemy.

10 Plus Heathens is armed and dangerous.

--Amiri Baraka
from _Heathens and Revolutionary Art_ Published in Heaven Chapbook Series #45 White Fields Press
for more info: [redacted]

↑ Index

613. Mairead Byrne
Re: Special Offer
Thu 17 Dec 1998

On Wed, 16 Dec 1998, sylvester pollet wrote:

> Hello last minute shoppers. Bombs falling, impeachment, Armageddon poetry special!
> Backwoods Broadsides Chaplet Series, gift subscriptions. Just send me your address & the recipient's, and I'll send him/her the latest, #38 Anselm Hollo, PEBBLES, and #39 Meredith Quartermain, VEERS. I'll include a personal note, saying the sub is a gift from you, and I guarantee they will get there before the end of Hanukkah, Christmas, Kwanzaa, or the Solstice.

Under current (and all) circumstances, you may as well include Ramadan which is due to start about now.

Mairead

↑ Index

614. Maria Damon
Re: Poets of the MLA
Thu 17 Dec 1998

At 9:58 AM -0800 12/10/98, [redacted] wrote:
>Mark your calendars!
>

>Poets of the MLA
>
>Tuesday, December 29, 7:30 p.m.
>New College Theater
>777 Valencia Street
>$5
>
>Every year the Modern Languages Association convenes during the last week >of the year somewhere in the world and this year it's San Francisco's turn.
>Small Press Traffic has invited many of the finest poets in the world to >read for five minutes apiece, a kind of Supermarket Sweep of the mind. They >include Beth Anderson, Charles Bernstein, Stephen Cope, Benjamin >Friedlander, Loss Pequeno Glazier, Carla Harryman, Pierre Joris, Tan Lin, >Nicole Markotic, Andrew Mossin, Sianne Ngai, Jena Osman, Ted Pearson, Bob >Perelman, Meredith Quartermain, Jerome Rothenberg, Lisa Samuels, Gail >Scott, Lytle Shaw, Chris Stroffolino, Barrett Watten.
>
>We'll post a reminder closer to the date.

wow what a dizzying festyble of semantickle cosmo-chaos. i am expecting my ears to flap off my head and wing their way up to the aether.

↑ Index

615. daniel bouchard
Re: Arghh (rack)
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Preface: Here are some personal views of mine shoddily disguised as poetry. It's the only way to sneak them onto the List. Consider Robert Duncan & a Tradition hereby "mentioned." While keeping in mind that I can write this awful drivel without fear of arrest or state violence (violence to me individually), the idea that posting a poem to 666 hypothetical readers, or protesting on the Boston Common later today, or calling a Congressperson, is akin to pissing in the wind.

Why get angry about what one won t understand?
No sane person actually lives in Iraq.
It has taken only a quarter century to apprehend Pinochet.
At least now the murders are almost Official.

So US began by bombing Baghdad one Wednesday.
On Thursday a vote to impeach had been slated.
Not thru the president only did we begin bombing for no one in the House questions the act.

The right do so belongs to US.
And the bombing began well before Ramadan
(a compensatory holiday for the heathen who lack christmas, and for this convenient scheduling the NSC claim benignity, a further token of our good will).

That the bombing coincides with impeachment proceedings brings media attention to the "highly suspicious" timing of the attack, but no one--not a single voice with the capacity to reach large numbers (that is, the "liberal" media)-- will question the god-given right of US to bomb Baghdad.

The major paper in Boston said
"Saddam's response was a defiant call to arms" as if defiance constituted defending oneself against what the major paper in Boston called "waves of cruise missiles and bombers" because the US has made it plain for half a century that any attempt to repel US attacks is an act of intolerable rebellion.

At 07:14 PM 12/16/98 PST, you wrote:
>"So there is a coup in Congress--the sick fruition of an effort begun on >Inauguration Day 1992. Well, at least nobody's been shot yet."
>
>Dan,
>
>You were about 4 hours early on that judgment. Or does bombing not >count?
>
>Ron
>
>
>_____
>Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals

Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

616. Mark Prejsnar
general clinton is not a language poet
Thu 17 Dec 1998

The main point--ignore 'em all and tear down the capitalist system. (Yes: i know it takes a while; i'm working on it!!) A coup within the republicrat machine, one right-wing against the other right-wing, gets my blood up even less than it does Daniel's.

This approach has the lovely side benefit that you don't have to pay attention (with any degree of personal investment) to Starr, clinton, the much missed Newt etcccc.

Of course when someone launches a war to get around impeachment, all bets are off....

But it does illustrate that the existing system is among the most barbaric and irrational of all options...

vladimir illyich prejsnar

On Wed, 16 Dec 1998, daniel bouchard wrote:

> At 01:15 PM 12/11/98 PST, Ron Silliman wrote:
> Has anyone noticed that what's happening in Congress right now isn't an impeachment but a coup?
>
> I noticed. I think. I've got to write this note quickly though and beat out the lunchtime crowds at Filene's Basement.
>
> In new england there is a mechanism in people that aims for the worst in particular situations. For example, if it is cold and raw and ugly outside, one would say to one's fellow, "well, at least it ain't snowing." Or, if there is heavy snow and a tree falls on your house, one would say "well, at least it didn't hit the truck." And so on.
>
> So there is a coup in Congress--the sick fruition of an effort begun on Inauguration Day 1992. Well, at least nobody's been shot yet.

Ken Starr, he "investigated" a Clinton real estate investement, and no one particularly cared.
So "travelgate" came to pass, and no one was impressed.
Contributions to the Clinton campaign were scrutinzed but the public lacked enthusiasm.
Legions of felt-up associates came forward but no one in power was so shameless as to pretend they were interested in "protecting" women from sexual harassment.
Now the leader of the free world, in covering his ass for screwing around, is accused of perjury and will be tried for high crimes and treason.

This is all still pretty tame by Roman standards.

All public officials know well enough from this day forward not ever to fuck with health care again; no socialization of any industry whatsoever.

The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
and I hate him a lot.
The gist of it is there is nothing one can do about it anyway.
I guess we'll get what we deserve by christmas anyway.
The interesting part is borne out of mandatory passivity.
The interesting part is free lessons in double-plus bad speak.
Tiberius was a sexual predator too.
Clinton is not fit to lace his sneakers.
The interesting part will begin once he's gone.

Thankfully I am a provincial and have few international associates to be embarrassed before.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

617. jarnot
address query
Thu 17 Dec 1998

I need to get in touch with Daphne Marlatt and Gerrit Lansing. (need phone numbers and/or email addresses). If anyone has info could you please backchannel me?

Thanks,
Lisa Jarnot

↑ Index

618. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Demos today SF & NYC
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Last Update: 12/17/98

> WAR ALERT!
> EMERGENCY
> DEMONSTRATION IN NYC
> AND SAN FRANCISCO BAY > AREA, 5 pm, THURSDAY, > DEC. 17: DON'T BOMB > IRAQ! END THE > SANCTIONS NOW!
>
> SATURDAY NOON
> DEMONSTRATIONS: NYC:
> SW corner 34th & 7th; SAN > FRANCISCO: 24th & Mission; > and Wash. DC (info to be > announced)

There will be a demonstration in New York City at 5:00 p.m., Thursday, December 17, in Times Square at 43rd Street and Broadway. The demonstration is sponsored by the International Action Center, Fellowship of Reconciliation, War Resisters League and others.

The demonstration in San Francisco Bay Area will be at 5:00 p.m. at the Berkeley BART Station. Call [redacted].

Ramsey Clark, of the International Action Center stated, "A new bombing of Iraq will certainly kill hundreds and perhaps thousands of civilians. Just because Richard

Butler, the chairperson of UNSCOM, contends that he is displeased with Iraq's compliance with UN inspectors, does not give the Clinton administration the rights to carry out a wanton act of mass murder ."

For press interviews, information and analysis contact the International Action Center at [redacted]. Contact: Deirdre Sinnott, Brian Becker, Sarah Sloan, or Sara Flounders.

http://www.iacenter.org/demo1216.htm

↑ Index

619. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Iraq
Thu 17 Dec 1998

At least a month ago I was only half joking that Clinton would bomb Iraq in time for the impeachment vote, and people who follow Middle East events were quite prepared for the eventuality. The fact that he returned from Israel/Palestine with the Palestinians once again making concessions and Netanyahu once again raising new demands to stall the "peace process" and then goes on to launch war against Iraq -- it's all too stupendous to grasp. Stop the war/stop the impeachment: the coup is getting more and more complex. Have you ever seen so many Republicans object to bombing anyone, much less Iraq? All of this connects to issues of poetics: people were discussing referentiality and nonsense before, and I would suggest that recent political discourse has gone way beyond Jabberwocky.

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

620. david bromige
Why Impeach Clinton?
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Tosh's question, which hardly seems worth answering, if he has to ask: for waging an illegal war. Congress has to declare war. True, they never declared war on Vietnam, and it's okay with me if retroactively JFK, LBJ and Nixon are impeached for the same crime.(The Gulf of Tonkin Resolution was a means to sneak around the constitutional requirement). And since Congress appears to support this illegal war, impeach them, too.

Americans make so much of the Constitution--yet Representatives flout it at will.

Even the to-me dubious authority to wage war of the United Nations has been flouted this time. And I am ashamed of Britain that they permit their government and armed forces to murder Iraqis to save Bill Clinton's skin. If you know any history, here's another poem:

THE WAR OF JENKIN'S EAR
THE WAR OF CLINTON'S ASS

Kudos to Rachel Levitsky, for being the Conscience of this List, and for keeping Poetic Justice alive. David

↑ Index

621. A. Jenn Sondheim

Re: CALL FOR FLOODNET ACTION FOR PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST (fwd)

Thu 17 Dec 1998

> From the Electronic Disturbance Theater

CALL FOR FLOODNET ACTION FOR PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST VITRUAL SIT-IN ON THE WHITE HOUSE WEB SITE

Friday, December 18, 1998

FROM 10:00 AM TO 4:00 PM
(Washington D.C. TIME)

FROM 4:00 PM TO 10:00 PM
(GMT- GREENWICH MEAN TIME)

http://www.aurorablue.org/projects/rdom/zapsPublic/ddkfoyer.htm

****

We oppose the U.S. military attack on Iraq and believe that the timing of this assault is designed to detract attention from President Clinton's impending impeachment hearing in Congress.

We do not accept the logic of the White House and the Pentagon that Iraq poses a national security threat. If any country is guilty of harboring weapons of mass destruction it is the United States.

We know that the U.S. government views the Middle East as a strategic area because, in part, it is an oil rich region. And we know the United States consistently uses the veil of "national security" as a means to pursue and justify its agenda of global economic domination.

We support the skeptical and angry views of the Russian, Chinese, and Iraqi ambassadors to the United Nations Security Council who strongly voiced their opposition to U.S. and U.K. aggression against Iraq.

We are saddened by the images on CNN of the innocent people who were injured in the first hours of the aerial bombardment. Moreover, we are aware that these victims are just a few of the hundreds of thousands of Iraqis who have either died or suffered greatly since the first Gulf War in 1991 and under U.S. backed sanctions that have existed since then.

We support the lifting of sanctions against Iraq. We support the efforts of international human rights organizations, groups like Friendship Across Frontiers, and other sectors of international civil society who have been working for years to help the Iraqi people.

We do not support Saddam Hussein but we believe it is not our right as Americans to go beyond merely having opinion. It is up to the Iraqi people, and others in the Arab world, to remove Saddam Hussein from office, if that is their desire and will.

We believe the age of imperialism should come to an end. It is quite telling that the imperial power of the 19th century, Great Britain, and the imperial power of the 20th century, the United States, have joined forces alone as we enter the 21st century.

In one instance, we agree with a characterization of the United States, made by Iraqi leaders. The history of U.S. military and intelligence intervention, both covert and overt, in Latin America, Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and domestically within sovereign Native American territory, is enough evidence to support the classification of this country as an Evil Empire.

We support all efforts to denounce, oppose, protest, and resist the joint U.S.-U.K assault on Iraq, both domestically within the United States and England, in other European countries, in Middle Eastern countries, and throughout the world.

We recognize that resistance to the current bombardment of Iraq, and resistance to all future war, will take place in two spheres. One is on the ground, in the streets, in offices, in universities, in factories - in real spaces. The other is on the Net, in what the Pentagon now calls "battlespace." And we support the development and practice of joint virtual-real actions of resistance.

We do not believe that only nation-states have the legitimate authority to engage in war and aggression. And we see cyberspace as a means for non-state political actors to enter present and future arenas of conflict, and to do so across international borders.

We do not know how long the current U.S.-U.K. aerial assault on Iraq will last. Indications are that it will be short-lived. It may therefore not be an appropriate or strategic moment to attempt to inspire, coordinate, and sustain a campaign of virtual-real actions of resistance.

We do feel, however, compelled to take some action. And therefore we will use FloodNet, the same tool we have been using against web sites of the Mexican government, to now make a symbolic gesture of our opposition to the current assault on Iraq.

We therefore urge all people of good conscience who have the clarity of mind to oppose these aerial assaults to join us in a ongoing, nonviolent, virtual sit-in on the White House web site. We urge you to join us in a FloodNet Action for Peace in the Middle East.
****

Friday, December 18, 1998

FROM 10:00 AM TO 4:00 PM
(Washington D.C. TIME)

FROM 4:00 PM TO 10:00 PM
(GMT- GREENWICH MEAN TIME)

http://www.aurorablue.org/projects/rdom/zapsPublic/ddkfoyer.htm

The Electronic Disturbance Theater

↑ Index

622. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: Exuent Gaddis

Thu 17 Dec 1998

> December 17, 1998
> William Gaddis, 75, Innovative Author of Complex, Demanding Novels, Is Dead
> By MEL GUSSOW
> William Gaddis, author of "The Recognitions" and "JR," and a novelist of immense range, complexity and satiric humor, died Wednesday at his home in East Hampton, N.Y. He was 75.
> Gaddis was one of the most innovative and demanding of writers. His four published novels stand tall and totemic in the field of modernist literature. For "The Recognitions," his first novel, in 1955, he was compared to James Joyce. With other books, critics drew parallels with Malcolm Lowry and Herman Melville. Aspects of all three and others figured in his work, but most of all he was, in Cynthia Ozick's words, "an American original."
> Reviewing Gaddis's 1985 novel, "Carpenter's Gothic," in The New York Times Book Review, Ozick looked back on "The Recognitions" as "the most overlooked important work of the last several literary generations." It was, she said, "a vast fiction about fabrication and forgery, about the thousand faces of the counterfeit, and therefore, ineluctably, about art and religion."
> "Carpenter's Gothic," Ozick said, was an "unholy landscape of a novel -- an extra turret added on to the ample, ingenious, audacious Gothic mansion William Gaddis has slowly been building in American letters." In her judgment the book marked a turning point in his career; admirers hoped that it would bring him a wider audience.
> Despite rapturous reviews and a covey of awards (including two National Book Awards and a MacArthur "genius" grant), he was not destined to have a popular readership. He was often considered one of the least read of important American writers. But his books have become contemporary classics.
> As his reputation grew, he was surrounded by academics seeking symbols and offering deep analyses of his work. He maintained his equilibrium, saying, "What can I do if people insist I'm cleverer than I think I am?"
> Observing Gaddis at a writers conference in the Soviet Union in 1985, Louis Auchincloss said that he was "reserved and quiet, impeccably clad, with the patient composure of a man of the world and the piercing eye of a wit," and that he spoke "in measured tones of the small sales that the serious novelist might expect."
> Gaddis was born in Manhattan on Dec. 29, 1922, grew up in Massapequa, N.Y., and went to boarding school in Connecticut and Farmingdale High School on Long Island. He studied English literature at Harvard University, and wrote stories, poems, essays and reviews for the Harvard Lampoon. In his senior year, he was asked to resign from the college after he and a friend were involved in an altercation with the police.

In New York, he worked as a fact checker at The New Yorker, and spent his free time in Greenwich Village with Allen Ginsberg, Jack Kerouac and other writers of the Beat Generation. Leaving New York, he traveled through Mexico and Central America, joining insurgents in Costa Rica during a brief civil war. Subsequently he went to Spain and Africa, gathering experience and material while working on "The Recognitions."

He continued work on the novel through the early 1950's. Published in 1955, it weighed in at a hefty 956 pages. It received generally unappreciative reviews. In a brief one in The New York Times Book Review, Granville Hicks said that the author had "ostentatiously aimed at writing a masterpiece," but had written a book that was "no more than very talented or highly ingenious or, on another level, rather amusing." Gaddis said the book's reception was "a sobering experience."

It was 20 years before he published another novel, but during the interval, "The Recognitions" was reprinted in a paperback edition and was published abroad, and it began building an underground reputation for the author. To continue his fiction, Gaddis supported himself by teaching and writing nonfiction on assignment. For four years, he worked in public relations for the Pfizer pharmaceutical company. In 1963 he won a National Arts and Letters grant and, four years later, another from the National Endowment for the Arts.

In 1974, "The Recognitions" was reissued in a mass market paperback. Tony Tanner took that occasion, in a review in The New York Times Book Review, to extol Gaddis, ranking him alongside Thomas Pynchon as an experimentalist: "In its scope, its witty-serious use of erudition, its endless exploitation of the resources available to a modern text, its brilliant use of language, and, not least, its marvelous humor and range of tone," the book seemed to him "one of most important American novels written since the last war."

By the time "JR" was published the following year, Gaddis had achieved the recognition that had been denied him upon publication of his first novel.

In The New York Times Book Review, George Stade characterized the theme of "The Recognitions" as "the multiple and paradoxical relations between recognition and forgery," and said the book had raised the question whether "all human products and activities are each no more than items in a series of copies for which there is no original."

The reviewer continued that "as much, and more" could be said about "JR," and concluded that "no recent novel I know of with anything like the fullness or accuracy of 'Jr' is at once so inventive and subtle in the structure of relations among its parts."

The title character of "JR" is an 11-year-old who becomes a wizard of Wall Street. In a Paris Review interview, Gaddis explained why the character was so young. "He is in this prepubescent age where he is amoral" and "dealing with people who are immoral, unscrupulous," he said, "whereas his good cheer and greed he considers perfectly normal."

Praised by William H. Gass and other writers, "JR" won the National Book Award. "Carpenter's Gothic" followed in 1985. At 262 pages, it was Gaddis's shortest work. At the time of the book's publication, the author > said in an interview that there was no underlying scheme to his novels. "There is an obligation not to bore or be bored yourself in doing your work," Gaddis said. "If a writer is bored, the reader will be too." For "A Frolic of His Own" in 1994, a book about plagiarism and intellectual property, he won his second National Book Award.

> In addition to his daughter, a novelist who lives in Asheville, N.C., and Sag Harbor, N.Y., he is survived by a son, Matthew Hough Gaddis, a filmmaker in Manhattan.
> In "JR," the writer Jack Gibbs is trying to finish a book titled "Agape Agape." Before his death, Gaddis finished his fifth novel, also titled "Agape Agape." It is, said his son, an extension of that original idea in "JR," a novel about "the secret history of the player piano." The player piano was an early obsession of the author, who considered it to be an example of a "a nonparticipatory art form." In other words, the new Gaddis will be about the destructive elements of mechanization and the arts

↑ Index

623. Tom Orange
theory and poetics
Thu 17 Dec 1998

---

joe,

is the argument, then, that theorizing one's poetics has now become so de rigeur that many such theorizations are not urgent, not compelling, and that the essay that collapses theory-poetry distinctions offers (or at least can offer, as in bromige's case) a more urgent and compelling statement of poetics? (bear with me as i conflate bernstein, perloff, and amato, and please draw distinctions where you see fit...)

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

624. Poetry Project
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Dan -- do you think what we deserve is a govt. where the strongest branch by far is congress, which seems likely if impeachment passes in the house, irre-gardless of what happens in the Senate. The ramifications of impeachment seem densely layered & scary, despite Clinton's lunacy.

At 01:15 PM 12/11/98 PST, Ron Silliman wrote:
>Has anyone noticed that what's happening in Congress right now isn't an >impeachment but a coup?

>

I noticed. I think. I've got to write this note quickly though and beat out the lunchtime crowds at Filene's Basement.

In new england there is a mechanism in people that aims for the worst in particular situations. For example, if it is cold and raw and ugly outside, one would say to one's fellow, "well, at least it ain't snowing." Or, if there is heavy snow and a tree falls on your house, one would say "well, at least it didn't hit the truck." And so on.

So there is a coup in Congress--the sick fruition of an effort begun on Inauguration Day 1992. Well, at least nobody's been shot yet.

Ken Starr, he "investigated" a Clinton real estate investement, and no one particularly cared.
So "travelgate" came to pass, and no one was impressed.
Contributions to the Clinton campaign were scrutinzed but the public lacked enthusiasm.
Legions of felt-up associates came forward but no one in power was so shameless as to pretend they were interested in "protecting" women from sexual harassment.
Now the leader of the free world, in covering his ass for screwing around,
is accused of perjury and will be tried for high crimes and treason.

This is all still pretty tame by Roman standards.

All public officials know well enough from this day forward not ever to fuck with health care again; no socialization of any industry whatsoever.

The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
and I hate him a lot.
The gist of it is there is nothing one can do about it anyway.
I guess we'll get what we deserve by christmas anyway.
The interesting part is borne out of mandatory passivity.
The interesting part is free lessons in double-plus bad speak.
Tiberius was a sexual predator too.
Clinton is not fit to lace his sneakers.
The interesting part will begin once he's gone.

Thankfully I am a provincial and have few international associates to be embarrassed before.

↑ Index

625. daniel bouchard
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Anselm,
(is this Anselm's note?)

Impeachment in the House won't necessarily make the House the strongest branch. The strongest branch of government over the past couple of years has been the Office of Independent Counsel, a new branch Grafted by the House to Propagate the demise of the Executive branch.

And that House branch will likely experience a mighty Shaking when the next election rolls around.

By "deserve" I don't necessarily mean the result Stemming from the last few weeks of impeachment proceedings. I mean it will be laid out for us, like an Xmas present under the Tree (and timely too), given by people who make decisions.

Even so-called conservatives have conceded that polls exist which show 2/3 of the citizenry do not want the President impeached. But what people want is not at issue. I wonder if the division of votes will be downplayed or spotlighted in the press (i.e., ALL republicans FOR impeachment, ALL democrats and the single rep. who is neither D or R AGAINST). My bet is it will be highlighted, and if nothing happens (i.e., a riot) it will be drawn out.

The last time this country had a bona fide impeachment, everyone was living in log cabins. (So the history books tell us.) I hope Clinton sticks it out. I hope he sits thru trial in the Senate and spills his entire bowl of beans.

By "deserve" I mean a disavowal of faith in the system, a repugnance for the scope of political discourse in the country (comprising 10 degrees of a circle, if that), an impatience that less than half those eligible bother to vote, etc etc etc

Would there be such a clamor today over the bombing of Baghdad if there were not impeachment proceedings going on? I think not.

- db

At 01:34 PM 12/17/98 -0500, you wrote:
>Dan -- do you think what we deserve is a govt. where the strongest branch >by far is congress, which seems likely if impeachment passes in the >house, irregardless of what happens in the Senate. The ramifications of >impeachment seem densely layered & scary, despite Clinton's lunacy.
>

>
>
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

626. Gwyn McVay
Re: Exuent Gaddis
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Okay, I know I often stick my steel-toed Doc Marten boot in my mouth when I try to fix Latin, but I'm pretty confident about this one. The above subject line should just be "Exit Gaddis," as only one of him, the one and only, passed on to glory. If more than one person leaves the stage at the same time, it's "exeunt," plural, and if everybody splits, "exeunt omnes," everyone's leaving.

Goddang, ovary cysts make a gal cranky.

Gwyn

↑ Index

627. joel lewis
f.y.i. (x3)
Thu 17 Dec 1998

 Russia may ask Lewinsky for help

MOSCOW (AP) - Russian legislators considered a motion Thursday appealing to Monica Lewinsky to help halt the American attack on Iraq. "The State Duma appeals to Ms. Lewinsky to undertake corresponding measures to restrain the emotions of Bill Clinton," said the motion by nationalist lawmaker Alexander Filatov. Lawmakers in the Duma, the lower chamber of parliament, considered including the motion in a broader resolution denouncing the attack on Iraq. But seeking to speed up passage of the resolution, they approved it later Thursday without any additions. There was no separate vote on the Lewinsky amendment. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2557652490-468

 Heinz touts benefits of ketchup

NEW YORK (AP) - Here's a new reason to pour ketchup on your next burger: It may help reduce your risk of cancer. With anemic growth in ketchup sales, the king of ketchup - Pittsburgh, Pa.-based HJ Heinz Co. - is unfurling a marketing campaign to tout the health benefits of the processed tomato concoction. Next month Heinz will join the growing number of food companies touting the health benefits of their products when it launches an ad campaign to show that its ketchup contains lycopene, an antioxidant which has been linked to reducing certain cancers. The print ads are scheduled for runs in The New York Times Sunday Magazine, USA Today, Health magazine and Prevention. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2557646311-63b

 Man held in piranha food choking

GLENDORA, Calif. (AP) - A 26-year-old man was arrested after allegedly choking his mother because she didn't buy food for his two pet piranhas. Nathan Ricketts was being held Wednesday on suspicion of battery and possession of drug paraphernalia, Officer John Bur said. Bail was set at $100,000. "He choked her almost into unconsciousness," Bur said. Officers also confiscated two 7-inch-long piranhas that Ricketts had brought into the house earlier this week and placed in a 30-gallon aquarium. He refused to tell officers where he got the bloodthirsty South American fish, which are illegal to own. Wildlife officials ordered the fish destroyed, Bur said. ###

↑ Index

628. J Kuszai
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

I realize that this is a topic that everyond is talking about. This is not a water cooler. While I appreciate creative and/or critical responses to world politics, the possibilities of using this list for social and political organizing, this here is the kind of use of this list that I personally find to be inappropriate. The bombing of Iraq and the surreal political landscape surrounding it requires more than mindless chitchat.

Divizio wrote:
>
> >The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
> >The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
> >and I hate him a lot.
>
> MAN.....don't you see that THIS IS THE FUCKING PROBLEM?

↑ Index

629. daniel bouchard
Aarrgh// infinity
Thu 17 Dec 1998

... so you see, the question/dilemma is only whether the Chief Executive Weasel craftily staged an attack to divert attention from proceedings on Capitol Hill. It's the timing, the timing.

... the question must never be framed around whether U.S. has the right to bomb a city we've been starving for 7 years. That we may attack anyone (provided they are not strong enough to put up a fight) at any time is unquestionable.

Poll: Americans support bombing of Iraq

WASHINGTON (AP) - Americans overwhelmingly support President Clinton's decision to order air strikes against Iraq, according to three polls released today.

About three-quarters of adults said they backed the action, polls taken by CBS, ABC and NBC showed.

About 60 percent in the NBC poll said Clinton's action was warranted, while just over one in four Americans said they thought the military action was timed to delay impeachment proceedings that had been scheduled to begin today. House action on that front has been postponed indefinitely.

So far, the decision to take action against Iraq has not changed public opinion about impeachment. In the ABC poll, 40 percent said the House should impeach the president, while 58 percent said he should not be impeached. Those numbers are essentially unchanged from last week.

All three polls were conducted Wednesday night. ABC interviewed 510 people and NBC polled 503. Both polls error margins plus or minus 4.5 percentage points.

The CBS poll was based on 413 people and had a margin of error of plus or minus 5 percentage points.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

630. David Kellogg
need emailaddress for Rachel M. Daley
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Thanks.
~~~
~~~

Voice : [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

+ + + +

↑ Index

634. Divizio
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

> The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
> The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
> and I hate him a lot.

MAN.....don't you see that THIS IS THE FUCKING PROBLEM?

↑ Index

635. Jim Bennett
Notice
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Published January 1999

Drums At New Brighton

A new collection of poetry by
Jim Bennett

Published in the U.K. by Starwood Publishing under the sponsorship of The Seaside Heritage Trust

In this new collection of poetry, jim Bennett explores the relationship between people and the places they inhabit, and the effects of modern life in distancing them from the natural world.

Drums At New Brighton is an abstract from Painting On Sand, a full collection of poetry due in September 1999

What the critics said about "Lessons and Love", Jim Bennett's 1996-7 Poetry Tour
"Amazing images, a real mix of the traditional and the modern." Signpost Christian
Festival Magazine
"Great stuff... Jim Bennett is an original." Poetry House Mag
"A new name a new style... it is "New Metaphysical"... it is a style that deserves to be read widely." John Leyard

Advance copies of Drums At New Brighton can be ordered from;
GFK Enterprises,

39 Oransay Close, Sycamore Grove, Gt Billing, Northampton, NN3 9HF

£3.50 includes the cost of p&p (Overseas £4.75)

Past Time - from _ Drums at New Brighton

We drove along the lanes that Wordsworth walked Past lakes whipped into white tipped waves,
Past fields over which he strode for love,
Past gift shops, flower shops, tea shops.
Past bookshops selling the collected works.
Past his home, his other home and hers.

Then to Dove Cottage and the obligatory tour,
To see the things he lived with,
To hear the sound of creaking beams he heard.
To smell the plaster, feel the wooden floor.
To see a pen he wrote with
And a letter written at this desk.

But in it all no sign of him
Just spores left in his wake
He has gone, heaved anchor sailed off
To find Arcadia.

Arrived home past nine,
Past time collating memories.
Then found him lurking in a poem.

Leasow Beach - From _Drums At New Brighton_

Wings frozen in rigor flight
Soaring into death
Elegance hidden by black tar
The silent gull lies on the sand

Once it lay on the thermals of the world
Uplifted by invisible hands
Shaping the air with each wing sweep
As it sculled across the sky

But now encased in death
Its sightless eyes, and beak, wide
Its final shriek locked in a swollen throat
It lies stiff and cold on Leasow Beach

We came, as we often do, to find shells,
See the pool life, rest our feet on drying sand

Instead, we found the gull,
A metaphor mummified by waist.

↑ Index

636. Divizio
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

> I realize that this is a topic that everyond is talking about.
> This is not a water cooler. While I appreciate creative and/or critical responses to world politics, the possibilities of using this list for social and political organizing, this here is the kind of use of this list that I personally find to be inappropriate. The bombing of Iraq and the surreal political landscape surrounding it requires more than mindless chitchat.

"Wag the Dog" was kind of like wasting time.

The gentleman's comment in question "The problem is I hate the...alot.....hate the.....hate hate hate....

Yes that's the problem.

So OK.....as I get my feet wet here on this list perhaps I'll write something better than watercooler Chit chat.

Sorry I'm very busy and too emotive.
Humbly,
David 2 Divizio

↑ Index

637. michael corbin
(no subject)
Thu 17 Dec 1998

A. Jenn Sondheim wrote:

> =
> The whole pretty world is > so safe for me, I can go out on the street and eat and walk.

david bromige wrote:

> I could not have written this poem yesterday

When the car caught on fire at the Blair House: The Park Police rode-up en masse, thinking there was TERRRORRRISM afoot. And the horses were much bigger than the placards with magic-markers. So we fell into retreat. Obtaining the right vector analysis for piss in the wind and cruise mistle-toe.

I don't live here anymore.

How is it possible?

Not to Explode.

I don't live here anymore.

mc

↑ Index

638. Tosh
Re: Why Impeach Clinton?
Thu 17 Dec 1998

> Tosh's question, which hardly seems worth answering, if he has to ask:

What's wrong with answering a simple question?

> Even the to-me dubious authority to wage war of the United Nations has been flouted this time. And I am ashamed of Britain that they permit their government and armed forces to murder Iraqis to save Bill Clinton's skin.

It didn't save Bush's ass when he bombed Iraq. Do you really think it will stop Clinton from being impeached by him (US) r bombing Iraq. I am sorry, but I feel you are wrong on these two points above. The Iraq issue is different from the current Impeachment issue.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

639. Mairead Byrne
Re: what we deserve
Thu 17 Dec 1998

Joel, I couldn't disagree with you more. I was mighty relieved when I found people trying to squeeze out a somewhat coherent response to U.S./U.K. bombing of Iraq. I also have a lot of respect for the people who posted poems to the list today. You know, I have only ever seen the water cooler situation you disparage in movies. Mindless chitchat? How weird it would have been today if no-one attempted to lurch round their great awkward and inadequate craft to at least get in their sights the news of today. Expletives come easy to me when I think of your post. I will desist. Mairead

On Thu, 17 Dec 1998, J Kuszai wrote:

> I realize that this is a topic that everyond is talking about.
> This is not a water cooler. While I appreciate creative and/or critical responses to world politics, the possibilities of using this list for social and political organizing, this here is the kind of use of this list that I personally find to be inappropriate. The bombing of Iraq and the surreal political landscape surrounding it requires more than mindless chitchat.
>
> Divizio wrote:
>
> The trouble is I have no compulsion to defend the guy.
> The problem is I hate his enemies more than I hate him,
> and I hate him a lot.
>
> MAN.....don't you see that THIS IS THE FUCKING PROBLEM?

↑ Index

640. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Why Impeach Clinton?
Fri 18 Dec 1998

David:

The same act of congress that established the CIA also empowered the President to issue National Security Decision Directives, basically granting dictatorial powers to the Presidentto initiate military actions without Congressional approval for, I think, 60 days. Clinton doesn't seem to have issued such a directive in this case, but he does have the authority to do so. To characterize his actions, however repellent, as "illegal" doesn't wash. Vietnam, however, clearly fell under the definition of "illegal."

I find more disturbing the eagerness to impute the motivation for the present carnage to a Clintonian oilspray-from-the-rear-bumper "Thunder Road" attempt to sabotage the impeachment process. Since when did cincidence translate automatically to cause? Didn't Hume [not to mdention Jung] disabuse us of this nonsense? _Something_ has to work for the guy: "Slick Wilie odomized by the Fortuitous"? Poetic Justice with a smile?

I'd rather think so than believe that Clinton -- more right on than any president in recent memory -- would act so heinously. He really seems to believe he didn't perjure himself ["what 'is' is," &c]; why not grant him the benefit of [the? his?] doubt? The law does...

The new Speaker's boffed a billion bimbos, evidently, BUT "uh, gee... no one ever asked me about it under oath" [see _asshole_ in the dictionary for his 8 x 10]. That turd wants to weasel on a technicality, but won't let Bill? "Gentlemen, start your engines."

AMERIKA {not Clinton -- whaddya think? one gut runs this juggernaut?] has discovered Victor Frankenstein's Social Security card in its wallet and -- after vain [and vainglorious] attempts to remonstrate [don'tcha love that word?] with The Creature -- finds itself a galley slave in a trireme [not kayaking solo] hoping to ram Saddam's Ghost Armada.

"Why Impeach Clinton?" Duh: so Gore can't get two terms!

;~(

Dan

david bromige wrote:
>
> Tosh's question, which hardly seems worth answering, if he has to > ask: for waging an illegal war. Congress has to declare war. True, they > never declared war on Vietnam, and it's okay with me if retroactively JFK, > LBJ and Nixon are impeached for the same crime.(The Gulf of Tonkin > Resolution was a means to sneak around the constitutional requirement).
> And since Congress appears to support this illegal war, impeach them, too.
>
> Americans make so much of the Constitution--yet Representatives flout it at > will.
>
> Even the to-me dubious authority to wage war of the United Nations has been > flouted this time. And I am ashamed of Britain that they permit their > government and armed forces to murder Iraqis to save Bill Clinton's skin.
> If you know any history, here's another poem:
>
> THE WAR OF JENKIN'S EAR
> THE WAR OF CLINTON'S ASS
>
> Kudos to Rachel Levitsky, for being the Conscience of this List, and for > keeping Poetic Justice alive. David

↑ Index

641. George Bowering
Re: address query
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> I need to get in touch with Daphne Marlatt
> Thanks,
> Lisa Jarnot

Daphne is being writer in resident at U. Saskatchewan this semester. But maybe she'll be home for Xmas. As far as I know she has never done e-mail.

I just lookt, and dont have a Victoria phone number for her, but this last Victoria address:

1281 Denman St.,
Victoria, BC,
V8T 1L7

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

642. david bromige
The poetics of impeachment
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> It didn't save Bush's ass when he bombed Iraq. Do you really think it will stop Clinton from being impeached by him (US) r bombing Iraq. I am sorry, but I feel you are wrong on these two points above. The Iraq issue is different from the current Impeachment issue.

Tosh is in agreement with 3/4 of the U.S. population, to whom it is not at all obvious that Clinton ordered these attacks AT THIS TIME as a diversionary and complicating tactic to delay/avoid impeachment. I suppose I am one of those the media has already characterized as cynical on this score--although to me it seems more cynical of Clinton to kill Iraqis at this time. I'm with Trent Lott (the Trent of yesterday, before he'd read the latest polls).

I am reminded of the years in Berkeley in the late 60's, when Berkeley was so much in the news. It appeared to us-all that the war in Vietnam MUST come to a halt very soon--that our protests, which were getting so much ink and so much tv exposure, must somehow spread thru the nation as a whole. How mistaken!

No longer resident in Berkeley, I nonetheless listen to its PBS station, KPFA, a great deal, and particularly during such crises as this one. After being all day long tuned-in to speaker after speaker who shares my views, I forget that many people are denied any contact with radical radio (I have no idea how that liberal station what's it's name is handling this issue). One speaker today, an expert on Middle East affairs, whose name I regret I didnt catch, was saying "if you believe there is no connection between impeachment and bombing Iraq, you believe that Santa is coming down the chimney next week and that the fairy came and took your tooth away." I grant you that this was not the reasoned part of his argument. For the reason that I live in a cocoon of radical truth, Tosh's question 'Why impeach Clinton?" [for illegal airstrikes on the civilian population of another sovereign nation] struck me as absurd. I apologize. I have a nose for this kind of political jiggery-pokery, and knew from the start that the Tonkin Gulf Incident was being manufactured in order to widen the war. This turned out to be true--many years later. But perhaps the problem is that I have insufficient respect for authority, which, after all, by its very nature, knows best.

I will add that the naivite of even educated Americans, when it comes to foreign policy, fills me with dismay. Here's some more, but different, naivite:

I AS IN IMAGINE

I as in America
I as in Iraq
I as in East Timor
I as in Indonesia
I as in India
I as in Pakistan
I as in Russia
I as in China
I as in Libya
I as in Israeli
I as in Jordanian

need I go on? An illegal++ airstrike is murder, is it not? An unsanctioned killing of...of your mother, Tosh, or your wife, or your child. Or mine. I as in Imagine. Maybe because as a child I was bombed (legally, however) by the Germans, I find it impossible to distance myself when even dark-skinned people are being burned and blasted apart. Unfortunately for the rest of the world, the USA has not been subject to aerial blitzkrieg.

Joel, I hope that this is not one of those "water-cooler" posts you had in mind. IMHO, what happens to the language of truth during such international

"negotiations" has a strong connection with poetry and poetics. It feels that w/o Rachel Levinsky and Alan Sondheim, to mention just two, we would be fiddling while Rome burns. Or I mean Baghdad. True, I can't imagine Samuel Beckett posting to the List in protest against American foreign policy, for there seems little to be done, and he was often the first to notice when such was the case. Perhaps mine is a pointless sounding-off, and if so, I apologize again.

A d even if the commander-in-chief can be taken at his word,I dont know how you locate half-a-glass of anthrax--enough for us all--with even ten thousand Cruise missiles. Oowww! Damn, but it hurts to be burned!

Happy Ramadhan. David

++ thanks, Dan Zimmerman, for the qualification re Clinton not needing Congress to ok the first 60 days of lethal violence against other peoples using our tax dollars i.e. our selves. However, he does require the UN Security Council's okay, and this he does not have.

↑ Index

643. Gabriel Gudding

Joel Kuszai, Take a Vacation

Fri 18 Dec 1998

On Thu, 17 Dec 1998, J Kuszai wrote:

> I realize that this is a topic that everyond is talking about.
> This is not a water cooler.
> mindless chitchat.

Joel,

If this is the kind of frontchannel list "moderation" thought necessary by the team of list "moderators," I must say that I prefer the old method: Deletion. Just delete the posts that don't pass your obviously high standards of what constitutes Non-mindless chatter [maybe all the posts having to do with Mindless Commerce and Careerist Buttkiss, for instance].

Rather than posting your attempts at moderation in a beery swagger (had you been drinking?), why don't you just abandon your job altogether: you obviously find the work burdensome, judging by this and the last few frontchannels to your Fellow Cop, Charles Bernstein.

You and Bernstein can't seem to decide between the Invisible Hand and the Heavy Hand: "Ahh, do I delete Henry's posts or just attack him as a moron?" "Do I delete this new guy's post or just slur a paragraph about mindlessness?"

You keep going this way, you two, and this list is going to become as boring as CB's poetry. And that's saying something. Loosen up, Kuszai: you've got the ring of the Office Dead in your voice. Get thee to the MLA, boy: that'll put some spring in your step.

Your comment to D was frankly rather piggish, far more "mindless" and indeed more offensive to my sensibility than David's emotive outburst. The US is bombing Iraqis again and you want to diddle about what's an appropriate comment? If YOU can make one, post it.

Gabriel

↑ Index

644. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Joel,
This is Bullshit! Your attack on David D.'s post had the net effect of humiliating a newcomer to the list and if you didn't do it intentionally, it certainly had that effect judging from his followup response. Wher's your apology to David D. Your "water cooler" post had the same cold, calculating, unfeeling tone that Bernstein's purges of Henry Gould had. And don't use the 'Alan Sondheim comments' canard. What Sondheim knows about Post-World War II American history you could put in a paper bag, light on fire and leave on Vernon Walters' front porch. Actually, I take that back; it doesn't reach the level of a prank. The concensus against Gudding on the list sounds like the 'patriotic' concensus for the current institutionalized murder over the skies of Iraq and there are certainly enough sociological studies on the nautre and operation of institutions to explain why this appears so.
Admittedly, I stayed out of the Blow Up/Job discussion because, Joel is right. In this venue it could never rise above a media reactive 'water cooler' generalized breast beating. But that's not to say I'd stop it; I'd simply choose not to participate. I would certainly not try to regulate based on the poster's artistry and/or professional position; something that seems to happen with some frequency through the Poetics ministry of information.
There was a little blither on this list about Pinochet. But nothing about the tens of millions of dollars that transnational corporations and their stooges on both sides of Congress, in the executive, as well as several intelligence services flooded the Venezuelan elections with in order to defeat Hugo Chavez. All that illegality and immorality failed and we have the makings of another Chile/Indonesia/Brazil/Guatemala etc. etc. that Joel, one can presume, would have arbitrated in an ignorant and passionless fashion after the fact. The Post for Dec. 12 had a headline that read, "Venezuelans Relieved As Chavez Eases Rhetoric." The inquisitive reader is left to wonder if the majority of Venezuelans who voted for Chavez and the 3/4 of the population that are starving, 300+ of whom died in bread riots that led to Chavez's failed coup, are the ones relieved. Of course not. The Post means the 2% Venezuelan elite, transnational corporations and their stockholders and the puppet governments in Washington and Langley that already have an array of contingencies in place if Chavez fails to bow to 'free market democratic principles.' The Post means the people that 'matter', e.g. the ones with money and power, are relieved.

This list is too petty to establish a parallel with the above. But its also too petty to provide an alternative.
Can you deny there is ass-kissing galore on this list? Haven't any of you read Amato's posts from the Perloff/Bernstein lecture? And wasn't Bernstein's approach either delusional or intentionally contentless, at least as can be determined from what Amato billed as a F/2/F with B. That didn't sound like the parts of the anatomy that were meeting in this instance. And Bernstein had been caught out in some lies. Can you have poetics much less poetry in this atmosphere? Or do you end up with a bunch of nobodies outside their tiny little professional lives deluding themselves about the importance of their essentially meaningless projects. Christ, I'm one fuckin' step away in my bookstore and your discussions would never find resonance there.
And so what if Gudding is a better imaginative writer/poet than Bernstein. I've read both guys and that's the way the talent hierarchy falls out in my judgment. But then again, I'm not going to MLA. Further, this makes conversation with Gudding more valuable to me than fraternization with Bernstein, Perloff or Joel for that matter. Joel's not evil enough to, say, conjure up images of Baby Doc getting on a plane for the south of France and the list if it persists in its priggishness won't be worth a damn in the world most of humanity operates in anyway. And its participants will be able to bring less and less to that world as they persist in their bunker poetics, which for all the world smells like a consequence of Langpo. I would never dream of discussing history with you folks. I got a half dozen retired CIA operations guys to scream at in my store. And they come back for more because, and it hurts me to say it, they believe, in their own 'complicated', lesser of two evil ways. I'd never tell them I'm a poet because poetry in its present incarnations is so ludicrous and immaterial, they'd laugh in my face.---Carlo Parcelli

J Kuszai wrote:

>
> Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed > me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me,
> I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do > what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not > trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving > it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the > poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I > do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted > that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in > mind, I wish you all well.

↑ Index

645. Gabriel Gudding
Re: Joel Kuszai, Take a Vacation
Fri 18 Dec 1998

I wish to apologize for the lack of imagination in my insults to joel and charles this morning: I was at the christmas sherry [Savory & James, Manzanilla {imported}] and had just switched to some port when I wrote that; my liver and pancreas hadn't yet adjusted, sending my brain into a hypoglycemic reeling [any port in a storm]; will try in future to show the muse into my malice. gaga

↑ Index

646. J Kuszai
please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me, I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in mind, I wish you all well.

↑ Index

647. Eliza McGrand
joel, ignore creepy posts with your name in subject header
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

hey joel, and list

i thought perhaps your response re: water cooler chat might have been better made backchannel and in milder tones, but it was not such an affront to humanity that it deserved gabriels deeply personal, nasty post. i am sorry that appeared on the list.

e

↑ Index

648. Ramez Qureshi
syllable sounds arn't quite so loud as bombs
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Came across a list of words voted most agreeable to the British ear in a 1980 _Sunday Times_ poll.
1)melody
1)velvet
3)gossamer
3)crystal
4)autumn
5)peace
6)tranquil
7)twilight
8)murmur 10)caress
10)mellifluous 10)whisper

No carcenoma!
Though, given recent events,
i'd be glad to in a twilight hour, whisper it repeatedly, with a melody, into the ears of Mr's Clinto & Blair.

↑ Index

649. Judy Roitman
Re: what we deserve
Fri 18 Dec 1998

While agreeing with Joel (and always suspicious of the tendency of my own political ventings to affirm my sense of righteousness and delusion of having taken action), it was Alan Sondheim's early note that alerted me (and perhaps others) to the bombing, for which I am grateful. I would not otherwise have known until the next morning.

There is always the issue of language and image. Technocratic gloating in the media is particularly offensive here. But scenes from Baghdad remind us that the people our bombs are killing are indeed human.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

650. Anastasios Kozaitis
Re: "degrade"
Fri 18 Dec 1998

NAKED AGGRESSION

At 02:36 PM 12/17/98 -0800, you wrote:
>Has anybody else noticed how much the word "degrade" is being used in >reference to the attacks on Iraq? It seems that with each major event >there is a word or phrase that somehow describes the thought-form or >psychic locale of the whole operation.
>
>The whole Clinton affair began with "perjury" and "private life", but it >seems ironic that in the definition of "degrade" there is mention of >reducing in rank, which is at the heart of the impeachment efforts.
>
>Does anybody recall what were some of the other "keywords" surrounding >Bush's desert storm?
>
>--trace--

>
>degrade \De*grade"\, v. t. [imp. & p. p. Degraded; p. pr. & > vb. n. Degrading.] [F. d['e]grader, LL. degradare, fr. L.
> de- + gradus step, degree. See Grade, and cf. Degree.] > 1. To reduce from a higher to a lower rank or degree; to > lower in rank; to deprive of office or dignity; to strip > of honors; as, to degrade a nobleman, or a general > officer.
>

↑ Index

651. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: The poetics of impeachment
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

well my email system went down when we started bombing iraq, go figure...

i was relieved to see around here responses/reactions to this sad event, b/c this is one of the places where i hang out and i like to think you poets and poetry-inclined are all concerned citizens...

tom o, from that (now (three day) old) thread: yeah, that's about right, your articulation of things...

---

i don't think clinton should be impeached, and i don't think we should be bombing iraq... so i surely don't think we should be bombing iraq now, and i don't think clinton should be impeached now... as kass would say, lots of political hay being made on all sides of this issue, even as blood is spilled "over there"...

and that said: i do believe we (the planet earth and its tribal communities) need to devise some sort of international mechanism to remove tyrants (ok?) from "office" (we need international mechanisms for a LOT of things, incl. the environment)... i wish i had all the answers, but i'm positive that the answer is not to claim merely that all nations have a sovereign right to kill and torture their own citizens to their leaders' content---which thereby leaves us with the relative luxury of retreating into an apparently non-interventionist stance (while in actuality helping to install puppet regimes ad nauseum)... which is to say, i don't hold for isolationism, real or imagined... personally, i think that a military intervention into iraq using (de facto internationally constituted) ground troups---whose mission was, first and foremost, to remove hussein---would result in many fewer civilian casualties (but of course more military losses on "our" side), and would result in less damage to the iraqi infrastructure, which itself is causing such misery in that poor country... though obviously there's no "perfect" solution in this far-from-perfect world...

my two bits' worth, from my swivel chair...

best,

joe

↑ Index

652. Irving Weiss
mail art call
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Forwarding this. If already done so, please excuse.

From: "tartarugo" <[redacted]>
To: "Jordi Riera" <[redacted]>, "Jordi Barrachina" <[redacted]>, "John Bennett" <[redacted]>, "Johel Cohen" <[redacted]>, "Joachim" <[redacted]>, "jjp" <[redacted]>, "Jim Hayes" <[redacted]>, "Jean Michel Espinasse" <[redacted]>, "Javier Creus" <[redacted]>, "Jane Marie Chambault" <[redacted]>, "James Durand" <[redacted]>, "Jack Kid" <[redacted]>, "J. Lehmus" <[redacted]>, "J Felter" <[redacted]>, "Ivana Martinez Vollaro" <[redacted]>, "Isabel Ron-Pedrique" <[redacted]>, "Irving Weiss" <[redacted]>, "industrias mikuerpo" <[redacted]>, "Ina Blom" <[redacted]>, "Illumination Gallery" <[redacted]>, "IBIRICO-A.M.A.E." <[redacted]>, "Hugo Sil" <[redacted]>, "Hugo Pontes" <[redacted]>, "Hugo Fernandez" <[redacted]>, "Horacio Espinosa" <[redacted]>, "Honoria" <[redacted]>, "Harry Polkinhorn" <[redacted]>, "Hale Tenger" <[redacted]>, "Guy Ferdinande" <[redacted]>, "Guy Bleus" <[redacted]>, "Gue Schmidt" <[redacted]>, "Group Public Projects" <[redacted]>
Subject: Mail Art Call
Date: Thu, 3 Dec 1998 19:44:57 +0100

At the end of the exhibitions, a catalogue will be publish and send to participants.

Deadline for the first exhibition (Tarragona): February/28/1999.

Send your works to the first exhibition to:

Boek861/Taller del Sol
Apartado 861
43080 Tarragona
Spain

More information at:

http://www.fut.es/~boek861
http://www.teleline.es/personal/tartarug
http://www.crosset.net
http://www.geocities.com/Soho/Workshop/6345/vortice.htm

Or writting to the organizers:

César Reglero Campos// Apartado 861// 43080 Tarragona// Spain
Tartarugo//Apartado 822// 36280 Vigo//Spain
Montse Fornós// Bailén 199, 2-1-//08037 Barcelona//Spain
Hans Braumueller// Osterstr, 98// D-20259 Hamburg// Germany
Clemente Padín// Casilla C. Central 1211// 11000 Montevideo// Uruguay
Fernando García Delgado// Bacacay 3103// 1406 Buenos Aires// Argentina
Jose Emilio Antón//Atocha 69//28012 Madrid//Spain
Elías Adasme// Urb. University Gardens 1009 Georgetown San Juan PR 00927-4822

PLEASE, COPY AND PASS

AU MA
(Acción Urgente de Mail Art)
+
Gom@(Global Organization of Mail Artists)

Le invita a participar en la exposición de Mail Art:

Por la libertad en la Enseñanza de las Artes: Readmisión de Humberto Nilo (La influencia de los regímenes totalitarios en la Cultura)

Técnica : libre.

Formato: A4

No hay selección.

Las obras no se devolverán. Pasarán a formar parte de los archivos de AU MA + [redacted] Europa y América.

Se organizará una exposición itinerante a través de Tarragona y Barcelona (España), Hamburgo (Alemania), Montevideo (Uruguay) y Buenos Aires (Argentina). Es posible que el circuíto se amplíe a otras ciudades aún sin confirmar.

Documentación periódica.

Al final del itinerario se publicará un catálogo que será enviado a todos los participantes.

Fecha límite de admisión para la primera exposición (Tarragona): 28-Febrero-1999.

Enviar las obras a:

Boek861/Taller del Sol
Apartado 861
43080 Tarragona
Spain

Más información en:

http://www.fut.es/~boek861
http://www.teleline.es/personal/tartarug
http://www.crosset.net
http://www.geocities.com/Soho/Workshop/6345/vortice.htm

O escribiendo a los miembros del comité organizador:

César Reglero Campos// Apartado 861// 43080 Tarragona// Spain Tartarugo// Apartado 822// 36280 Vigo//Spain Montse Fornós// Bailén 199, 2-1-//08037 Barcelona//Spain Hans Braumueller// Osterstr, 98// D-20259 Hamburg// Germany Clemente Padín// Casilla C. Central 1211// 11000 Montevideo// Uruguay Fernando García Delgado// Bacacay 3103// 1406 Buenos Aires// Argentina

Jose Emilio Antón//Atocha 69//28012 Madrid//Spain

Elías Adasme// Urb. University Gardens 1009 Georgetown San Juan PR 00927-4822

POR FAVOR, COPIA Y DIFUNDE

↑ Index

653. david bromige
loveliest of syllables, the Sunday Times...
Fri 18 Dec 1998

FOR READERS OF THE SUNDAY TIMES
(Britpoetry List, please x-post)

This mellifluous melody caressed my ears with its whispers and murmurs one crystal autumn gossamer velvet tranquil twilight:
Peace to your sleep, Sunday Times reader, we do not murder to exist.

↑ Index

654. Anastasios Kozaitis

PotD

Fri 18 Dec 1998

EVERY MORNING AFTER KILLING
THOUSANDS OF ANGELS

I

I read a boy's poem called
"Every Morning After Killing Thousands of Angels"
I forget the poem, but the title won't leave me
I drink some coffee read a paper read by millions all the misery
all the destruction in the world herded into headlines and catch phrases the only part I trust is the financial page
a completely blank space governed by the mechanics of capital and pure speculation

2

That boy's mornings and my mornings-- how are they different?

3

But the boy can see the angels' faces

4

What do you do
after you kill them?

I go out walking

Where?

To a river with a very big bridge over it

Every morning?

Every morning
while my hands are still bloody

5

I can't kill thousands of angels but I walk a dry path to the beach the hot sky's still filled with sweating typhoon clouds the sea's a later color fall is not summer at the horizon narrow streams run through spaces silted with darkness weak-looking capillaries float on my thin hands:
no place to anchor a big bridge

6

Noon at this end of the bridge everything shines shirt buttons decayed tooth an air rifle broken sunglass lens pink shells
smells of seaweed river water mixing with the sea sand
and as far as my footprints

7

It's my turn now
I'll tell you about the world at the far end of the bridge the shadow world things and concepts totally shadow shadows feeding on shadows spreading, radiating like cancer cells decomposing, radiating like cancer cells decomposing organs and drowned bodies green thought swelling and distending medieval markets surging with merchants and prostitutes and monks cats, sheep, hogs, horses, cows every kind of meat on the butcher shop hooks but no blood anywhere

8

So I can't see the bridge unless I kill thousands of angels?

9

What sight excites me most sexually?
the bridge has disappeared
a riderless black horse crosses the world of light slowly, toward the shadow world but exhausted, it falls crying animal tears but not rotting gleaming directly to bone pure white bone
and then to earth and then dawn comes I've got to go out and live after killing killing thousands of angels

--RYUICHI TAMURA
Translated from the Japanese by Christopher Drake

Japan (b. 1923)

Ryuichi Tamura was born in Otsuka, a suburb of Tokyo, and he grew up in the black room of a restaurant run by his mother. This was during an era of natural disasters, economic hardship, and militarism in Japan. In an effort, he said, to "break away from the conservativism and anachronism" of his culture, he began writing self-consciously modernist poems in school and fell in with a group of poets who looked to T.S. Eliot's work for inspiration. He studied at Meiji University but before graduation was drafted into the navy during the last two years of WWII. In postwar Tokyo writers questioned all the old values. "We were glad to be the living dead," he has said of that time, "with nothing to lose. We wanted to question the basic principles behind an industrial society based on war and imperialism, I tried to make my poems into holes or windows that would let me see through the indefinable spiritual waste as well as the obvious spiritual destruction." Since that time Tamura has continued to explore alternatives to the industrialized mechanisms of contemporary life.

↑ Index

655. Robert Archambeau
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Emily Lloyd said exactly the right thing:

> Don't you listers who are flaming Joel & > Charles realize what an easy position you're in, and what a difficult > one they're in?

List discourse is often read as more hostile and less amusing than it is meant to be, but when it is -meant- to be overtly hostile and insulting, it probably shouldn't be posted.

I hope the list survives all this -- I suppose it can, the way most families survive the spontaneous annual reenactments of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf that go under the name of Thanksgiving Dinner.

Peace and Goodwill,

Bob Archambeau

↑ Index

656. Jasper Bernes
Re: water cool
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Please fire cruise missiles at following:

ELEGY WITH CROSSHAIRS

Science is visiting the Middle East, today;
the dollar is the new political dance craze people do in flames. The planes are invisible.
A child licks fat snowflakes out of air, here.
Were this the tropics, I could--perhaps--scrawl my scent on the street
SOS. Instead the man who found my wallet eats nothing, in Mexico.
I think of my passport in the landfill and nod.
Recursive viral advertisements!
like a trace poison leaked worldwide-- a man running back and forth in a field like a crazy wide receiver; a tap drip;
a courtyard of exploding pigeons.
Someone puts their love in singles and another in empties.

The computers are drowning in numbers.
I hate surrealism, they say, frothing.
They think, logically, that it's a mutilation of a mutilation, a logarithm bending away from the earth's kiss.
The computers drown in men's fingers.
In their lightning speech, wildly dialing,
the word for disease means cure, to touch a scalpel to a star is flower. It's not surreal. It's power. It's a bomb.

---J-)*&# Q. B%@,>(

↑ Index

657. Pierre Joris

Lancing a boil

Fri 18 Dec 1998

Enough is enough. Gudding, you may think you are hot shit in a champagne glass, but you are something less than luke warm diarrhea in a dixie cup. An absolute shit for sure. Your insults are unacceptable. Your apologies are unacceptable. Get off this list.

--
==========
Pierre Joris
[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
6 Madison Place
Albany NY 12202
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
==========
Nomadism answers to a relation that possession cannot satisfy.

— Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

658. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

as i've said, i just read through the poetix posts this morning... seems to me joel was responding specifically to

> MAN.....don't you see that THIS IS THE FUCKING PROBLEM?

(by way of example)

i don't see joel as the fucking problem... which is not to say i see the above as the fucking problem, either, or even that i see "mindless chitchat" as the fucking problem... i think one fucking problem is when discussion heats up to the point of sending little electronic bombs out across the ether... and i thought joel was trying to say (whatever you make of what he said or how he said it) that perhaps it would behoove us not to be too impetuous, that what we don't need, esp. at this moment in historical time, is to amp up our email to the status of weaponry, defensive or offensive, in order to generate more adversarial exchange... albeit it's true that the events of the past few days are bound to produce just that...

come to think of it, maybe many of us do need to spend more time at the water cooler... hey, i'm on my way, gonna go soak my head, b/c i can't believe what's happening on the house floor, and in the skies over iraq, and---

best,

joe

↑ Index

659. Tosh
Re: The poetics of impeachment
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Tosh's question 'Why >impeach Clinton?" [for illegal airstrikes on the civilian population of >another sovereign nation] struck me as absurd. I apologize. I have a nose >for this kind of political jiggery-pokery, and knew from the start that the >Tonkin Gulf Incident was being manufactured in order to widen the war. This >turned out to be true--many years later. But perhaps the problem is that I >have insufficient respect for authority, which, after all, by its very >nature, knows best.

When I asked the question "Why impeach Clinton?" I was responding to David's one sentence/poem "Impeach Clinton." At the time I didn't know if he was responding to the Iraq crisis or the ongoing debate in Washington about Clinton's sexual activity. I wasn't sure what David was talking about - so the question was very simple. Impeach him for what? And again, these are two different issues. If you want to impeach him for attacking Iraq - that is one issue. If you want to impeach him for lying under oath about his sex habits - that's another issue. I wasn't clear in regards to what David was responding to > need I go on? An illegal++ airstrike is murder, is it not? An unsanctioned killing of...of your mother, Tosh, or your wife, or your child. Or mine. I as in Imagine. Maybe because as a child I was bombed (legally, however) by the Germans, I find it impossible to distance myself when even dark-skinned people are being burned and blasted apart. Unfortunately for the rest of the world, the USA has not been subject to aerial blitzkrieg.

Actually a friend of mine - a painter from Iraq, his brother died in Iraq due to the fact that he couldn't get medical aid due to the restrictions placed by the U.S. as well as other Western countries. So yes, I am touched by any forms of violence committed - where ever it is happening in Europe, Asia, or down the street from me. I think ANY airstrike is murder - because someone (almost always) innocent gets killed.

best,
Tosh

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

660. schuchat
sorry to see you go
Fri 18 Dec 1998

I'm sorry to see Joel leave the list; I always liked his posts, sensible and good humored.

↑ Index

661. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: The poetics of impeachment
Fri 18 Dec 1998

The attack on Iraq was expected for some time -- particularly that it would occur before Ramadan (a perverse nod towards religious propriety and the fact that the Muslim world would be even more enraged if the bombing was done during the holy month). US policy has been directed towards "containment" of Iraq (and Iran) for some time. There is no expectation (and possibly no real desire) to overthrow Saddam Hussein, simply because there are no compliant "good" dictators to take his place. Bombings and further aggression have been on the agenda for years. It's quite likely that if there was a Republican president in office now exactly the same policy would be carried out -- since there is no substantial difference in policy regarding protecting "our" oil between the two parties. Clinton's bombing MAY be timed to coordinate with the impeachment crisis (although, keep in mind, the machinery has been in place for nearly a month) but the bombing policy has not been invented for domestic political purposes. I say this in response to David Bromige's understandable rage -- but the fact is that Clinton is not being impeached for war crimes but for sex crimes, and while the rightwing impeachment coup MAY have serious implications for foreign policy, it certainly has serious implications for domestic policy, the "culture wars," the rise of the Christian right, etc. (which in turn may create even more dangerous foreing policies, i.e. the return of "Armageddon" mentality to the White House).

I just had dinner with an Egyptian novelist last night who remarked on the strangely untenable positions so many people are being put in: he doesn't like Saddam Hussein, but he is no friend of Clinton; he objects to the bombing, but the opposition is dominated by Islamic radicals that he can have nothing to do with -- the contraries go on. Same here: Stop the bombing -- and stop THIS impeachment. As untenable as such a contradictory position may seem.

Events swamp poetics; poetics are shaped by "smart" bombs -- so I think it's appropriate to discuss this here. Without insults.

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

662. Karen McKevitt

Re: please don't bother to backchannel either

Fri 18 Dec 1998

Hotmail has a wonderful email function. It's called "block sender." I haven't employed it yet, but I imagine it could solve the should I stay or should I go dilemma.

>Date: Fri, 18 Dec 1998 08:02:59 -0500
>Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group
<[redacted]>
>From: J Kuszai <[redacted]>
>Subject: please don't bother to backchannel either
>To: [redacted]
>
>Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed >me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me,

>I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do >what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not >trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving >it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the >poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I >do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted >that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in >mind, I wish you all well.

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

663. A. Jenn Sondheim
Re: Lancing a boil
Fri 18 Dec 1998

I want to second the motion. The list is losing far too many good people, and Gudding is not one of them. If I want flaming, I can go to alt.flame.

Alan

↑ Index

664. Charles Alexander
Re: please
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Goodbye. I'm sorry you're leaving, Joel.

I still rather naively want to see this list as something of a team (albeit not one with a specific goal), and though I don't know Eliza and Gabe and George and Rachel and many others and I do know Karen and Joe and David and Juliana and many others, I value (or valued, if they're already gone from the list) all their presences here, even if the team is sometimes rather dysfunctional (I've never been on one that wasn't, and I've been on some that coming through aspects of the dysfunction made them stronger). I do know Joel and value his presence here as well as his presence with me in other aspects of our work in poetry and poetics.

Thank you, Joel, for all you have given to this list -- your hard work, your good counsel, your honesty, your care.

charles

At 08:02 AM 12/18/98 -0500, you wrote:
>Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed >me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me,
>I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do >what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not >trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving >it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the >poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I >do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted >that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in >mind, I wish you all well.
>
>

↑ Index

665. Mark DuCharme
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

"And the rude shall inherit the list...."

--apocryphal post

>Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed >me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me,
>I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do >what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not >trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving >it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the >poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I >do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted >that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in >mind, I wish you all well.
>

Goodbye Joel.
--Mark DuCharme

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

666. charssmith
Re: Pacifica Radio
Fri 18 Dec 1998

KPFA, as David must really know, is a part of the independent (no corporate funding) Pacifica Radio network, whose anarcho-founding members in 1949 included Kenneth Rexroth, & it has NO affiliation with PBS. News views & frames unavailable even on 'liberal' PBS stations. KPFA has recently made their live broadcasts available through Real Audio on their web page.

The programs Democracy Now & Flashpoints are highly recommended.

home page: http://www.kpfa.org/index.htm

streaming audio: https://swww.igc.apc.org/kpfa/0_e_real.htm

Often grim listening. First choice during crises.

all best,
Charles Smith

David writes:

<< No longer resident in Berkeley, I nonetheless listen to its PBS station, KPFA, a great deal, and particularly during such crises as this one. After being all day long tuned-in to speaker after speaker who shares my views, I forget that many people are denied any contact with radical radio >>

↑ Index

667. charssmith
KPFA, ps
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

discussed & turned over yesterday:

"does this bombing of Iraq represent the end of diplomacy?"

↑ Index

668. Emily Lloyd
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Joel writes: >>>Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed me are as courageous in person as you are virtually.<<<

Dammit, dammit, dammit. Don't you listers who are flaming Joel & Charles realize what an easy position you're in, and what a difficult one they're in? How dare you persecute them for trying to handle as best and as humanly as possible a job like theirs? Especially if, like me, you've only been with the list, say, 1/10th (me, about 1/100th) of the time they have? And yes, I DO think the length of the time commitment they've made deserves your respect. Flamers have made it nigh impossible for Joel or Charles to post their opinions the way the rest of us can. It's like there's a fucking e-paparazzi out there just waiting for C's & J's posts to appear in order to morph them into national-enquirer level post-scandals. Why would you do this to a person? Why would you do this to a person?

When I was a closeted, confused, bitter high school student I made quite a reputation on malicious jokes, song parodies, etc. I was excellent at it, far more excellent than I have been at anything since. It's FUN to be a quick-draw, brilliantly biting, genius hurter of people. Having spent my time that way is my only enduring regret. So yes, I understand that you're having a lot of FUN with Charles & Joel. I know how seductive that is; I know the thrill of crafting the perfect put-down. But please, please stop it. Stop having fun & start talking about poetics. Maybe that could be fun, too. Probably not as-instantly gratifying fun, I'll grant that. It's work.

Gabriel, you, for ex., I know, have a kid. I do not think you'll appreciate the jest if the kid comes home one day after having been verbally brutalized as much as Joel & Charles have been by you. You'll probably want to kick the bully's ass.

I don't want to kick anyone's ass or to kick anyone off the list. But I feel physically sick when I think of Joel leaving. He has given, and continues to go out of his way to give, me reasons to post & feel welcome here. Whether or not you've felt, as I have, that Joel is a generous, hardworking, fair & concerned person, you at least, I hope, will agree that Joel is a person. Nothing justifies the consistent thrashings you've given to a fellow person. In the same way that nothing justifies the U.S.'s dropping bombs on Iraqi people. With the latter, we can only hope that our voices & vigils will make a difference. With the former, you making a difference is as easy as thinking before you post, and remembering there's a person (or 666 people) on the other side of that post. Stop it; just stop it.

Joel hopes he can meet Gabe someday. I hope I can meet Joel someday, to tell & show him in person how much his work, outreach, & thoughtfulness have meant to me and, I'd be willing to bet, the majority of subscribers to this list.

Joel, I'm sorry.

em

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

669. Karen Kelley
Re: water cool
Fri 18 Dec 1998

I watched some of the interminable hyperbolic impeachment debate at the gym & came home & had a call from an elderly friend who remarked on how dys-functional one can get over the holidays & now I've read Charles' measured post regarding the recent rather awful drama of the list, and it seems obvious that even though we have facility with words, sometimes it's best to just bite one's tongue. A certain honor in living with one's emotions rather than blurting them all over.

I hope everyone has as peaceful a holiday as possible.

↑ Index

670. Judy Roitman
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> I hope I can meet Joel someday, to > tell & show him in person how much his work, outreach, & thoughtfulness > have meant to me and, I'd be willing to bet, the majority of subscribers > to this list.
>
> Joel, I'm sorry.
>
> em

Amen.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | mem-
ory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

671. louis stroffolino
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Dear Joe Amato---
sometimes aphorisms and koans are valuable little "bombs"

(one would think those who value the "fragment" and think Bruce Andrews is just the bees' knees would appreciate such little "bombs" as you call them)

I mean this particular post was posted by somebody who--I think-- had largely been silent before. And despite whatever good intentions might be attributed to JK, it does seem there was an attempt to nip in the bud somebody who was trying to actually bring the discussion of the Iraq crisis to a more meta-level than Bouchard's righteousness (I'm not taking sides on this issue right now-- i.e. is there a difference between hating and hating the haters?) ---- Anyway, I'll shut up now....coz I gotta drink some water and there's no cooler but a sink..... c

On Fri, 18 Dec 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> as i've said, i just read through the poetix posts this morning... seems to me joel was responding specifically to
>
> MAN.....don't you see that THIS IS THE FUCKING PROBLEM?
>
> (by way of example)
>
> i don't see joel as the fucking problem... which is not to say i see the above as the fucking problem, either, or even that i see "mindless chitchat" as the fucking problem... i think one fucking problem is when discussion heats up to the point of sending little electronic bombs out across the ether... and i thought joel was trying to say (whatever you make of what he said or how he said it) that perhaps it would behoove us not to be too impetuous, that what we don't need, esp. at this moment in historical time, is to amp up our email to the status of weaponry, defensive or offensive, in order to generate more adversarial exchange... albeit it's true that the events of the past few days are bound to produce just that...
>
> *come to think of it, maybe many of us do need to spend more time at the water cooler... hey, i'm on my way, gonna go soak my head, b/c i can't believe what's happening on the house floor, and in the skies over iraq, and---*
>
> best,
>
> joe

↑ Index

672. louis stroffolino
Re: THANK YOU
Fri 18 Dec 1998

"I wasn't born there, perhaps I'll die there...."

I would like to express gratitude to several people who have very generously come through with offers to allow me to stay with them--or at least "hang" with them while I am in San Francisco. Specifically Katie Degentesh, Rachel Daley, Pete Neufeld, David Buuck, Chris Nagler and Amar Ravva, Garrett Caples---

In the words of Ron Silliman, you "know the meaning of community"
(as does Joel Lewis who has given me a lead on a dentist) again, thanks, I'm looking forward to meeting you (plural)------

Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

673. Mark Prejsnar
Re: The poetics of impeachment
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> Events swamp poetics; poetics are shaped by "smart" bombs -- so I think it's appropriate to discuss this here. Without insults.
>
> Hilton Obenzinger

I agree with this...at least up to a point. So let me briefly mention: i have great respect for many of the posts expressing outrage, pain, fuy, depression.... Many have been beautiful and many eloquent.

As i've already tossed out (rather bruquely) once, i understand the problem we are facing to be a systemic one and not one of particular evil powerful men. In this respect i feel many of the specific comments made about "why" and "how" we are in this situation, are inadequate.

(i'm moved to reiterate this now, because of Hilton's comment that the "right-wing impeachment coup" will have various consquences--he implies it will strengthen the x'n right, cause things to go worse in the "culture wars" etc. ....All of which is surely approximatly accurate.)

My problem with the liberal analysis that folks have offered, both regarding the aggression against Iraq and the impeachment circus, is that they vastly overestimate the importance of clinton and his regime.

i submit that no aspect of life in the U.S. was improved by the accension of clinton and his wing of the republicrat struture: THEY ADMITTED as much, emphasizing the right-wing character of their agenda.

Look at the overall dynamics: of capital's attack on unions, the runaway of US industry to low-wage markets and the reduction of us in the US to primarily a minimum wage postindustrial service economy, the hostility to any politics of liberation (continually attacked in the media as "pc"), the furious destruction of what was always a laughably minimal US welfare structure, the disappearance of affordable housing, the smashing of affirmative action, the breath-taking rapidity with which (due to social policies and corporate strategy, working together) income and affluence and free time are polaraizing between a tiny upper 12 percent and the majority of people...who are becoming something close to a peon class, disenfranchised and inactive.

If our culture, poetic and otherwise, is to have any chance of breathing, i would argue that we need to understand where the violence and social problems are coming from: they do not come from the republican wing of the republicrat structure, and this is why (in contrast to Hilton's eloquent posts) i do not feel that the "impeachment coup" is anything but a distraction. The right wing (of which clinton is an important leader) wants most of all for citizens to think the impeachment nonsense matters. It does not.

It is alternatives to the republicrat monolith that will give hope to democracy and the public sphere in US life. Not imagining that slick Willy and the "Democrats" are our friends....

Mark P.

↑ Index

674. David Kellogg

Eventually, Gabe will be the only one left

Fri 18 Dec 1998

And the interest of that conversation will be . . .?

~~~
~~~

↑ Index

675. Jessica Pompeii
Why are Americans
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

so afraid of adversity? Thanks for the mean posts once in awhile. I am bored shitless. Linguistics and show-offs don't = poetics. The best writing I know is about personal relationships, it always ends up a metaphor for politics. Let it ride.... -Jessica

↑ Index

676. Mairead Byrne
Re: Lancing a boil
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Joel objected to what David Divizio said about impeachment/war and he said so, somewhat insultingly. I objected to Joel's put-down and I said so, with minimal insult. Gabe also objected to Joel's put-down and he said so, very insultingly. (Insult is very much a male sport thus far). Pierre Joris rode in with luke warm diarrhea in a dixie cup: he objected to Gabe's objections and he didn't just say so, he also told Gabe: "Get off this list."

Thus far several folks have written in paying tribute to Joel. Now several other folk write in paying vituperation to Gabe. Many of these people take to insults as to the manner born. Problem is: they also try to flex muscle: Get off this list...I second that... Get thee hence, Gabe.

Okay, everyone's hot under the collar today, and yesterday (maybe because of powerlessness?). But do you really want to create a mini-list-parody of the parody that's happening in Congress? What we deal with here is language, a dangerous enough property. What does it mean to say "Your insults are unacceptable. Your apologies are unacceptable. Get off this list"? Are you claiming the high moral ground, despite your production of variously temperatured shit? And are these little poetics prose missiles intended to eliminate, delete, annihilate? One speaker after another may well pipe up "I second that" -- eliminate the irritant; just as one speaker after another is standing up in Congress saying the same thing; and those ole cruise missiles, which have just about given up on talk, are just pop-popping with the same message: eliminate him/them.

We have words here. We're nobodies in this democracy. Let's use them to the best of our ability, this way and that way and any which way. Let's slip down off the high moral ground. Let's have the discretion to choose our words carefully as individuals. And for the sake of the little gaps between words or the next chapbook or god knows the MLA or whatever you/we guys hold valuable, let's stop issuing marching orders.

Mairead

P.S. To David Bromige: Samuel Beckett probably would have very little to say about all this (though he was quite a proponent of "insultive poetics" himself, witness "Waiting for Godot"). In some sense, I suppose, the French Government awarded him the Croix de Guerre for keeping his mouth shut. And France was Beckett's "country" only because he allowed it to be.

↑ Index

677. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

---

chris, hey... i did indicate that i didn't think the statement in question was "THE fucking problem"...

and i should add, that joel managed in his post to use the word "personally"---have a look at his post again...

point is that i was differentiating mself from joel, even as i spoke on his behalf (as it were)... which (i think, very understandable) way of conducting oneself ends up becoming a matter of polarizing forces on the list (listen up, gabe, while you toot that horn of yours)... not wishing to polarize further, chris, i think what you say has to do with how joel went about saying what he said... i still think what he wanted was to nip in the bud what seemed to him (yet another) escalating exchange... but i take your point re nipping a potential contributor, even if i think joel's departure over this matter is downright disheartening, not least b/c i think (as others have indicated) that we owe him our gratitude for all of his work on this list over the years...

---
on another thread:

mark p, i do hear what you're saying, believe me, and i respect (as you know) your political acumen... but don't you think, politically speaking, that we've got to support what vestige we have of liberal/left thinking?... i mean, clinton is no utopia, but he's a far sight better than a hard & fast right-winger, no?....

joe

↑ Index

678. A. Jenn Sondheim
Swinburne
Fri 18 Dec 1998

just came over as the Unix fortune:

Pine finished -- Closed folder "INBOX". Kept all 3 messages.
From too much love of living,
From hope and fear set free,
We thank with brief thanksgiving,
Whatever gods may be,
That no life lives forever,
That dead men rise up never,
That even the weariest river winds somewhere safe to sea.
-- Swinburne
Ju1lu% b
You have no new mail.
Ju2lu%

Now this seems apropos, but isn't, and that fascinates me.

Alan

↑ Index

679. Mark Prejsnar
Beyond the Vestiges
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> ----
> on another thread:
>
> mark p, i do hear what you're saying, believe me, and i respect (as you know) your political acumen... but don't you think, politically speaking, that we've got to support what vestige we have of liberal/left thinking?... i mean, clinton is no utopia, but he's a far sight better than a hard & fast right-winger, no?....
>
> joe

Joe----

i agree with folks who feel that some room needs to be left for actual direct exchanges on poetics.

So i'll try to be terse. Clinton really has not pursued policies to the left of Reagan and Bush, in a vast majority of areas and issues. He was selected for the demo nomination in the first place because of his profound commitment to crushing unions and working people in Arkansas.

i believe very very intensely, that you're increasing the problems we face, when you imagine that the demo wing of the republicrat structure can in any way help us.

it is completely controlled by big capital; THAT IS WHAT IT EXISTS FOR.. ; in the fine eloquent formulation of Canadian labor scholar and activist Elaine Barnard, the D & R wings of the republicrats are not parties (parties are sustained by a mass membership, who have voting rights and determine the party's direction), they are guided entirely by those who have huge amounts of funds, & essentially they function as arms of the government: they are voter registration mechanisms ;

i shudder a bit at the phrase "liberal/left"...But let me not become contentious over semantics (..there's more than semantics at issue there, but i'm trying to be terse!!)

If you wish to "support what vestige we have of left thinking," then please do so!!! One CAN'T do so by "wasting one's vote" (and other resources) in support of clinton and the "demo's", whose agenda is essentially that of the repubs.. I would argue that the vestige we need to support resides in the section of the Left that is trying to build a movement that can reach ordinary people with a politics not beholden to corporate hegemony: the New Party, the Labor Party, the various state and national Green parties, Campaign for a New Tommorow, the Independent Progressive Politics Network (which links many of the parties i've mentioned), etc.

tersely (sorta)

Mark P.

↑ Index

680. A. Jenn Sondheim

Re: please don't bother to backchannel either

Fri 18 Dec 1998

Thanks for the attack. What I know about WWII history? You don't know a damn thing about me or what I know.

I love how mean-spirited this list is getting at this point. Let's all flame each other - why not?

I found your comments insulting to the extreme. Not that it matters here any-more.

Alan

↑ Index

681. Aldon Nielsen
William Gaddis
Fri 18 Dec 1998

as if we did not have enough to be sad about today -- while watching the Rev. Falwell (he of $$$$ support for murder in southern Africa) sounding off about impeachment and morality, I couldn't help thinking of the Rev. Ude,,, among Gaddis's more prescient creations --

The LA Times felt compelled to print the obit. under a headline describing Gaddis as an "unread" novelist --

If only all of our unreading were so rewarding -- will be off-line till New Years -- hope to see some of y'all in San Francisco --

↑ Index

682. Charles Bernstein
(no subject)
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Chris,

I very much support all the points you make in your note just now (by the way, should I continue to cc these note to "nonce") and your approach seems wise to me. I think the quicker you get out the new Welcome Message the better it would be. When do you think you will do this?

JOEL AND I WILL BOTH BE AVAILABLE TO HELP YOU AS LONG AS YOU NEED US!

I think it would be worthwhile to send out to the new sub that Joel authorized but who did not verify address -- [redacted] -- the following note:

We very much appreciate your interest in the poetics list. We have not yet received your registration form, as requested. Registration is required of all those joining the list. Please be sure to return this form to us soon that you subscription can be confirmed.

I would then send a message to the listserv:

quiet del poetics [redacted]

and only OK sub when you receive confirmation. You might want to wait a bit for this to see what happens, but verification has been in place for over a year and is a sensible policy. But that's up to you.

I am not going to reply to "R. Gancie/C.Parcelli" <[redacted]> because I have already spoken to these spurious points and there doesn't seem anything to gain by it; except that of course some people out there will no doubt believe anything bad said, I suppose -- However, I think restrain remains the best policy for me.

I'd hold off on all new subs till after New Year's.

***
This should be put on top of the Welcome message for anyone requesting a subscription. No one should be added to the list without getting this back.

Thanks for your interest in the Poetics List. Information about the list is provided below and should help you determine if you want to join the list. If you do wish to subscribe, we ask that you register with (the information you provide will be kept confidential).

Name:
Address (no po boxes please):
Phone:
How did you hear about the list?
What is your interest in the list (be as brief as you like)?

Once you have registered with us by replying to these questions (and send your responses as a reply to this message, that is to [redacted]) go ahead and subscribe to the list yourself by following the instructions below.

Charles

↑ Index

683. Charles Bernstein
what is intention?
Fri 18 Dec 1998

OK -- now I have done it. Since Joel's resignation today I have been scrambling to pick up the administrative details of the list, despite feeling very leery about the whole state of affairs here, and wanting myself to bow out of this situation, I had hoped more gracefully than I appear to be. I am trying to find someone to take over the management of the list, something I cannot continue to do. Meanwhile, I am trying to follow up the list maintenance issues left unresolved, including the question of unconfirmed list registration. Unfortunately, my last communication on this was sent out over the list instead of privately, but I suppose it expresses my extreme personal frustration with the situation.

↑ Index

684. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

> Can you deny there is ass-kissing galore on this list? Haven't any of you read Amato's posts from the Perloff/Bernstein lecture? And wasn't Bernstein's approach either delusional or intentionally contentless, at least as can be determined from what Amato billed as a F/2/F with B.

carlo, i hope to hell you're not accusing me of asskissing... for one thing, i am, as i've said again and again, friends with marjorie and charles (so yes, please, consider the source when i refer to these two)... bob archambeau can attest to the fact that the following is what i posted him (backchan) when he asked me (on the list) to say something about marjorie's and charles's talk:

> wasn't gonna post on the marjorie/charles event, given the recent shenanigans on >poetix (and my feeble attempt to mediate same), but am glad you gave me the >opportunity of doing so...

naturally, i felt that posting in on the event would be read as asskissing... that said, i'm happy bob gave me the opportunity by coaxing me some, b/c i had a few things to say (albeit not all that much, b/c that's not my m.o.)...

anyway, i don't as a rule kiss ass (i like to think i NEVER do, but i probably do in ways i'm not aware of)... in fact, asskissing is the one thing i was taught as a kid NEVER to do... i'm not sure how to go about proving that i'm not an as-skisser, which of course points to the beauty of making such an allegation in the first place... but if we ever do get to meet f2f, i'm pretty certain you'll walk away from the encounter firmly believing that i'm anything but an asskisser...

yeah, so I sez, i know...

my sincere apologies, carlo, if i'm misreading you here... if i'm not (misreading you here), well i've got boundless energy, as you know, to beat the drums with you backchannel about this sort of bullshit...

///

joe

↑ Index

685. Tosh
chill
Fri 18 Dec 1998

It is an odd culture these lists. I think everyone should read a book or something and just chill for a day or two.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

686. Leonard Brink
Beating pens into swords at the water cooler
Fri 18 Dec 1998

And the blue ribbon award for free speech goes to...
Joel Kuzsai:
>> Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed >> me are as courageous in person as you are virtually.

So now we've resorted to physically threatening people who don't agree with us? The list might be a nicer place with a little less testosterone and a little less alcohol.

↑ Index

687. Divizio
Re: please don't bother to backchannel either
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Joel, I too noted that you indicated "personally". I hope I'm not the straw.....because it would be a pity if honest naive innocent ignorant emotion...the thing we so cherish MOST were what was pushing you off such an IMPORTANT LIST. This place is about far more than vanity. Hey, take a break.....the truth doesn't have to. It's always here. You'll be back.

I'm sorry I didn't email you last night if that would have helped.....but then again I'm glad I didn't. Real situations bring up real responses.....and that's how we move forward.....or sideways.....but please don't BACK UP!

Sincerely,
David 2 Divizio

PLEASE backchannel. I've quickly understood what's out there!

-----Original Message----- ·ol : J Kuszai <[redacted]>
ˆ¶æ : [redacted]
<[redacted]>
“úŽž : 1998”N12ŒŽ19“ú 0:52
Œ–¼ : please don't bother to backchannel either

> Gabe, I hope we can meet someday. I hope you and others who have flamed me are as courageous in person as you are virtually. If it was up to me, I would have deleted you a long time ago. But, since I don't get to do what you want, and you do, I have decided to leave the list. I'm not trying to be dramatic. This list has been a lifeline for me and leaving it is not easy. I appreciated Alan's comments on the bombing and the poetry and critical discourse swirling around it. On the other hand, I do think I was pretty specific about what I objected to. I also noted that I was "personally" opposed to that sort of thing. So, with this in mind, I wish you all well.

↑ Index

688. David Baratier

water cooler poem

Fri 18 Dec 1998

Ffarewell, the rayn of crueltie!
Though that with pain my libertie
Dere have I boght, yet shall suretie
Conduduyt my thoght of joyes nede.

Of force I must forsake pleasure:
A goode cause iust syns I endure Thereby my woo, which be ye sure
Shall therwith goo me to recure.

I fare as oon escaped that fleith:
Glad is gone yet still fereth,
Spied to be cawght, and so dredeth
That he for nought his pain leseth.

In ioyfull pain reioyse myn hert,
Thus to sustain of eche a part;
Let not this song from the estert;
Welcome emong my plaisaunt smert.

*

Lueve tys new spelle checkere. I just moved & am now up and running. New address:
David Baratier
3252 Indianola Ave, Apt A
Columbus, OH 43202
[redacted]

Ffarethee & be wyll,

David Baratier

↑ Index

689. David Baratier
One more time before it passes
Fri 18 Dec 1998

Pavement Saw Press Chapbook Contest $500 and 25 copies of the winning chapbook will be awarded for the finest collection of poetry received. Ruth Anderson Barnett will be the judge. Submit up to 32 pages of poetry. Include a cover letter with your name, address, phone number, poem titles, publication credits and a brief biography. Entry fee $7. Make all checks payable to Pavement Saw Press. All entries must be postmarked by December 20th, 1998 for consideration in this years contest. Each US entrant will receive a copy of the winning chapbook provided a 8 1/2 x 11 SASE with $1.01 postage is included, add appropriate postage for other destinations. All manuscripts will be recycled. Send all entries to: Pavement Saw Press / Chapbook Contest / 7 James Street / Scotia, NY 12302

The Pavement Saw Press Chapbook Award was established in 1995 to promote writers whose work challenges conventions of contemporary poetry while encouraging multiple readings. Writers world-wide are invited to participate. Each year, one manuscript is selected by a writer with a thorough familiarity of the small press realm. Publication, a prize of five hundred dollars, and ten percent of the book run is awarded to the winner.

Be well

David Baratier, Editor, Pavement Saw Press

↑ Index

690. Poetics List
Poetics List Reorganization
Tue 22 Dec 1998

My doctor tells me I need more rest
But I know the quiet is killing me

We are presently reorganizing the Poetics List and will be announcing our new format shortly after New Year's. No further posts to the Poetics List will be sent out until our reorganization is complete, so please don't send any post to the list in the meantime.

Sorry for any inconvenience

& best to all the holidays to all!

Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

January 1999

131 messages · Mon 11 Jan 1999 – Fri 29 Jan 1999

January 1999 opened onto a world in high ceremony and the Poetics list nowhere in it. In Washington the Senate convened only the second impeachment trial of a president in the nation's history; in Europe a new currency came into being; in Brazil a currency died — and the room that had spent December bombing itself was not even present to ignore any of it. It had gone dark. For the first ten days of the year there was silence where the loudest list in poetry had been, and when a message finally arrived, on the eleventh, it was not an argument but an announcement, and the list that sent it was not quite the same list.

For the Poetics List had been reconstituted. Charles Bernstein and a new editor, Christopher Alexander, brought it back in January as something deliberately quieter: fully moderated now, its six hundred subscribers no longer free to speak at will. The new Welcome Message declared it "no longer a discussion list as such", and went on, over many sober paragraphs, to legislate the room that December had torn apart — submissions reviewed by editors, real names required, no more than five messages a day, and, in a clause that read like an epitaph for the preceding year, flame messages no longer tolerated. The list that could not stop talking had been, at last, made to hold its tongue.

What remained was a noticeboard, and a useful one. Through the second half of January the list carried what its charter now asked of it: new titles from Roof and Coach House, a Creeley book, readings from New York to Boulder, the Page Mothers conference, fresh pages at the Electronic Poetry Center. It was orderly, and it was generous, and it was almost entirely without conversation — thread after thread arriving and closing in a single message, the arguments that had been the room's whole weather simply gone. One could admire the calm and still feel the loss in it.

And yet, stripped of its quarrels, the list showed something the quarrels had hidden: that underneath the years of argument it had always been a mutual-aid society for an art the wider world does not attend to — poets telling other poets where the readings were, which small presses had survived, what book had just come into being. The bulletin was not a lesser thing than the brawl. It was the same devotion with the noise removed, a record of a community that keeps itself because almost no one else will.

It took a death to make the new list briefly a room again. On the twenty-first Paul Metcalf died — born, as Don Byrd's notice observed, on the very day of the Russian Revolution, the author of two dozen books in a genre he had invented, and almost unread outside a small and devoted few — and the moderated, announcement-only list did the one thing no charter could forbid: it grieved. Byrd posted the news; Peter Quartermain answered with the truest sentence of the month, asking who would mark the loss and answering himself: "who will notice, outside this list? Hardly anyone". I have set that small elegy at the end of a month of orderly announcements exactly as January delivered it, because it is the whole case for such a list, tamed or wild — that it is the one place a poet like Metcalf is noticed at all.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 131 in all.

WRITERS

Acgold01 87
Aerialedge 12, 43
Alexander, Charles 88, 97, 121
And, Miekal 1
ANDREWS, BETSY 91
Archambeau, Robert 65, 73
Baratier, David 124, 127
Beckett, Tom 95
Bernstein, Charles 24
Boughn, Michael 42
Bowering, George 76
Bromige, David 84
Brown, Lee Ann 69, 70
Byrd, Don 78
Clay, Steven 27
Clements, Brian N 72
Damon, Maria 131
Davis, Jordan 15, 108
Dbkk 18, 32, 52, 116
Degentesh, Katie 9, 63
Delville, Michel 11
Durand, Marcella 60
Ferguson, Jamie 130
Fodaski, Elizabeth 47
Ganick, Peter 39, 40
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 37, 62
Glover, Albert 28
Grumman, Bob 56, 96, 101
Hamshaw, CL 118
Hatlen, Burt 51
Joseph, Safdie 75
Kane, Daniel 6, 100, 111
Kelleher, Mike 126
Kimmelman, Burt 66, 68
Kirschenbaum, Matt 30
Lazer, Hank 71
Levy, Herb 59, 74
Lewis, Joel 67
List, Poetics 2, 3, 21, 22, 45, 46, 48, 79, 93, 94
Magee, Michael 4
Manery, Robert 26
Manson, Peter 98
Marsh, William 104
McKevitt, Karen 86, 123
Molina, Joanne 115
Neufeld, Pete 7, 36
Nielsen, Aldon 19
Nuyopoman 107
Oliver, Douglas 57, 129
Perez, James 120
Piuma, Chris [Steve] 90
Pompeii, Jessica 50, 77, 110
Pritchett,Patrick 14, 61, 117
Project, Poetry 13, 44, 83, 85, 105
Quartermain, Peter 31, 89, 112
Raea100900 8
Reiner, Christopher 109
Ross, Joe 58
Russo, Linda V 125
Sherry, James 38, 49
Silliman, Ron 34, 41, 64, 80, 113, 119
Slaughter, William 20
Sondheim, A. Jenn 92, 102, 128
Sumner, Alaric 10
Teichman, Harold 99
Tosh 5
Tranter, John 103
Treadwell, Elizabeth 25, 53, 54, 106, 122
Upton., Lawrence 35, 81, 82
Wallace, Mark 17, 29
Warsh, Lewis 55
Wolff, Rebecca 33, 114
Wright, Laura E. 16
Zinnes, Harriet 23

NAMES MENTIONED

Abbot, Keith 45
Abrams, Jen 19
Abrams, Sam 100
Albee, Edward 43
Alexander, Christopher W. 2, 3, 93
Alice, Mary 23
Allsopp, Ric 10
Amato, Joe 11
Anania, Michael 65
Andrews, Bruce 34, 43, 83
Anne, Sarah 25
Antin, David 71
Armantrout, Rae 8, 43, 71
Arnold, Bob 43
Ashbery, John 70
Ashley, Robert 96
Austin, Geer 45
Baker, Lori 43
Baraka, Amiri 43
Barg, Barbara 83
Barnett, Catherine 108
Bartlett, Lee 74
Bartlett, Martin 74
Beach, Christopher 43, 71
Bee, Susan 12, 17, 24, 43

Bellamy, Dodie 90
Benjamin, Walter 48
Bennett, John M. 96
Bergvall, Caroline 10, 43
Berkeley, Michael 25, 28, 30, 39, 42, 48, 54, 106
Berlin, Irving 47
Berman, Tosh 5, 7
Bernstein, Emma 12, 17, 37, 43
Berrigan, Anselm 45, 126
Berrigan, Eddie 45
Berry, Jake 39
Blackburn, Paul 43
Blake, William 30
Blaser, Robin 42, 74
Blau, Rachel 43, 71
Bookout, Melanie 39
Borkhuis, Charles 36, 122
BpNichol 21
Brady, Andrea 43, 47
Brady, Taylor 126
Braxton, Anthony 19
Brennan, Joe 22
Brennan, Sherry 47, 115
Brodey, Jim 55
Brooks, Gwendolyn 70
Brossard, Nicole 44, 60
Brown, Ray 19
Browne, Colin 59
Bryan, John 30
Bryant, Dana 59
Bukowski, Charles 109
Bunting, Basil 99
Burket, Cheryl 40
Burroughs, William S. 83
Buuck, David 43
Byrne, Edward 43
Caddel, Richard 43, 81
Cafe, Poets 63
Cain, Stephen 21
Cameron, David 47
Campbell, Jeremy 79, 88
Carey, Peter 30, 45
Carey, Steve 45, 55
Carlos, William 43, 74
Carroll, John 47, 105
Carson, Anne 114
Carter, Angela 55
Carter, Charlotte 55
Ceravolo, Joseph 55
Chernoff, Maxine 11
Child, Abigail 47
Chomsky, Noam 43
Clark, Emilie 48, 83
Clark, Susan 43
Clarke, John 28, 42
Clarke, Robin 42
Clausen, Andy 58
Cobbing, Bob 57, 82, 129
Coffey, Brian 43
Cohen, Ethan 120
Colby, Todd 55, 83
Cole, Barbara 43
Cole, Peter 43
Collom, Jack 43, 45
Columbus, Christopher 53, 122
Comments, Poets 1
Conner, Bruce 33
Conrad, Tony 45
Coolidge, Clark 55
Cooper, Dennis 69, 70
Cope, Stephen 58
Corbett, William 55
Cory, Alex 48
Coultas, Brenda 107, 108
Creeley, Robert 28, 42, 62, 66, 87
Culley, Peter 43
Daley, Ryan 39
Daniels, Chris 47
Davidson, Daniel 43, 107
Davidson, Michael 71
Davie, Donald 79
Davies, Kevin 43
Davis, Martin 19, 43
Davis, Tim 15, 47
Day, Jean 43
Deming, Barbara 63
Dennis, Carl 55, 74
Derksen, Jeff 43, 47
Dickinson, Emily 71, 109
Dickinson, Mark 48, 71, 109
Dickison, Steve 45
Donne, John 130
Doris, Stacy 26
Downing, Brandon 9, 45
Drucker, Johanna 24, 27, 37
Duncan, Robert 18, 30, 42, 45, 47, 118
Durgin, Patrick F. 39
Dylan, Michael 74
Edgar, Chris 43, 70, 108
Edwards, Ken 43
Eliot, Joe 109
Ellen, Mary 43
Elliot, Joe 37
Elliott, George 120
Ellis, Stephen 74
Eluard, Paul 55
England, Amy 21, 30, 74, 103
Eshleman, Clayton 43
Espada, Martin 109
Etter, Carrie 39
Eugene, Brett 94
Evans, Brett 4
Evans, Steve 48

Fagin, Larry 15
Farmer, Steven 47
Farrell, Dan 43
Featherston, Dan 39, 88
Ferguson, Jesse 43, 130
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 45
Fischer, Norman 88, 121
Fisher, Allen 43
Fleisher, Kass 11
Foreman, Richard 43
Foster, Paul 13, 36, 47, 108
Foucault, Michel 48
Foust, Graham 43, 48, 126
France, Peter 14, 16, 45
Frances, Mary 30
Fraser, Kathleen 43
Friedlander, Ben 47, 126
Friedman, David M. 83
Friedman, Michael 13, 15
Frost, Corey 70
Frost, Elizabeth 43
Frost, Robert 70
Fuller, Heather 4, 29, 43, 44, 60
Fuller, William 43
Fullman, Ellen 74
Gadd, Maxine 43
Gardner, Drew 47
Garland, Judy 72
Garrison, Deborah 43
Gascoyne, David 129
Gilmore, Gary 43
Ginsberg, Allen 43, 55, 58
Giorno, John 83
Giscombe, Cecil 43
Gizzi, Michael 18, 45, 47
Gizzi, Peter 18, 43, 45
Godfrey, John 47, 55
Golding, Alan 87
Goldman, Judith 15
Gooch, Brad 83
Gordon, Robert 96, 123
Gottlieb, Michael 49
Gray, David 17, 27
Greenwald, Ted 15
Grossman, Pam 88, 121
Guest, Barbara 43, 45, 70
Guston, Philip 55
Halsey, Alan 21
Hamshaw, Carol L. 79, 118
Hardy, Edmund 21, 123
Harris, Kaplan 43
Harryman, Carla 8, 48
Haynes, Bob 74
Healy, Randolph 43
Hehir, Kevin 126
Hejinian, Lyn 8, 48, 71
Heller, Mike 45
Henderson, David 13, 44
Henning, Barbara 55
Henri, Charles 14, 16
Hickman, David 22
Highfill, Mitch 55
Hillman, Brenda 33
Hofer, Jen 123
Hollo, Anselm 14, 16, 43, 45
Holloway, Rob 86, 123
Holman, Bob 55, 107
Holmes, Janet 65
Hood, Robin 21
Hoover, Paul 11
Howard, Scott 48
Howe, Susan 43, 71
Hughes, Langston 48
Hunt, Erica 121
Iijima, Brenda 25
Irby, Kenneth 37
Ireland, Lauren 43
Jackson, Jesse 55, 83
Jaeger, Peter 35, 82
Jaffe, Larry 88
Jarnot, Lisa 15, 28, 43, 108, 126
Jeanne, Sarah 59
Johns, Jasper 10
Johnson, Nicholas 57, 129
Johnson, Robert 14, 16, 43, 47, 89, 97, 109
Jones, Brian 13, 30, 43, 44
Joris, Pierre 43, 123
Joron, Andrew 43, 53, 122
Kalamaras, George 43
Kalleberg, Garrett 47
Kasper, Catherine 65
Kaufman, Bob 71
Keller, Lynn 87
Kellogg, David 4
Kelly, Robert 47
Kelsey, Karla 116
Kempton, Karl 96
Kennedy, David 43
Killian, Kevin 32, 43, 52
Kim, Myung Mi 116
Kimball, Jack 39
King, Rodney 127
Kirschenbaum, Matthew 30
Kizershot, Julie 45
Koch, Kenneth 43, 100
Kushner, Bill 55
Kushner, Tony 43
Lacy, Steve 43
Latta, John 123
Lawton, Pamela 55
Lederer, Katy 39
Leftwich, Jim 39
Lenhart, Gary 55
Levin, Jonathan 120

Levy, Andrew 47
Lima, Frank 83
Little, Billy 22
London, Frank 21, 30, 35, 48, 57, 82, 99, 129
Loo, Jeff 120
Louise, Bobbie 55
Mac Low, Jackson 43
Lubasch, Lisa 36, 122
Luther, Martin 13, 44
Lyons, Kim 108
Macdonald, Helen 43, 57, 129
Machlin, Dan 13, 47, 105
Mackey, Nathaniel 43, 71
Magee, Kevin 40
Majzels, Robert 43
Malcolm, Janet 25
Mangold, Sarah 39
Marie, Anne 43
Marshall, Robert 21
Martin, Camille 109, 121, 127
Mason, Janet 59
Mathews, Harry 43
Maxwell, Andrew 94
Mayer, Bernadette 43, 55
Mayer, Jane 55
Maynard, James 10
McCaffery, Steve 15, 21, 43, 71
Mead, Taylor 83
Medal, Frost 70
Meredith, William 43
Messerli, Douglas 43
Metcalf, Paul 78, 89, 97
Middleton, Peter 11
Miller, Jane 33
Miller, Paul D. 43
Mills, David 44, 83
Milne, Drew 43
Milosevich, Karla 32
Milton, John 55
Mirakove, Carol 108
Mobilio, Albert 43
Monk, Geraldine 43
Moore, Allison 125
Moore, Marianne 70, 125
Moriarty, Laura 25
Morris, Dee 30
Morrison, Bill 43
Morrow, Bradford 45
Morton, Kathryn A. 30
Mottram, Eric 43
Moure, Erin 43
Mulford, Wendy 43
Mullen, Harryette 43, 45, 59
Mullen, Laura 33
Muratori, Fred 123
Murphy, Paul 43
Murphy, Sheila 88, 104
Murray, David 19
Murray, Ian 43
Myles, Eileen 6, 83
Nathanson, Tenney 121
Neilson, Melanie 43
Nelson, Cynthia 108
Nelson, Jason 25
Nelson, Paul 28, 30, 43, 87, 123
Neruda, Pablo 109
Nguyen, Hoa 108
Nixon, Richard 113
Noble, Joseph 43
Norman, Peter 28, 121
Notley, Alice 43, 45, 55, 59, 108
Noto, John 40
O'Hara, Frank 55
O'Sullivan, Maggie 43
Oliver, Doug 129
Olsen, Lance 63
Olson, Charles 28, 42, 43, 47
Olson, Kirby 45
Oppen, George 26, 45
Orange, Tom 126
Ostashevsky, Eugene 9
Owen, Maureen 45, 83
Padgett, Ron 43, 55, 83
Palmer, Michael 26, 36, 43
Parker, Evan 74
Parks, Lori 43
Paterson, Don 20
Patton, Julie 45
Pearson, Ted 47
Perelman, Bob 43, 49, 71
Perloff, Marjorie 8, 43, 71
Pessoa, Fernando 43, 47
Peters, Robert 43
Peterson, Katie 23
Phillip, Andrew 43
Phillips, Beth 88
Phillips, Rodney 43
Phipps, Wanda 83
Portugal, Anne 26
Pound, Ezra 21, 43, 96
Pound, Scott 126
Di Prima, Diane 28, 55
Prince, Richard 27
Pritchett, Pat 14, 61, 117
Prufer, Kevin 123
Purcell, Greg 118
Rakosi, Carl 45
Ramsdell, Heather 43, 47
Rasula, Jed 43
Raworth, Tom 43
Regan, Max 45
Retallack, Joan 43
Reuters, Boston 117
Revell, Donald 33

Reverdy, Pierre 55
Reznikoff, Charles 43, 45
Ribot, Marc 58
Richman, Jan 9
Ridge, Cedar 45
Riding, Laura 43
Riley, Denise 43
Rinder, Larry 32
Roberts, Gary 22
Robertson, Lisa 13, 43, 48
Robinson, Elizabeth 4, 30, 33, 43, 49
Robinson, Kit 43
Rodefer, Stephen 15, 83
Rollins, Henry 127
Ronk, Martha 43
Rosenthal, Bob 55
Rosenthal, Sarah 123
Rothenberg, Jerome 43
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 13
Salerno, Mark 13
Sanders, Jay 45
Sappho 111
Savage, Tom 55
Scalapino, Leslie 8, 47, 71
Schelling, Andrew 45
Schneeman, George 55
Schulman, Sarah 13
Schwartz, Leonard 36, 43
Sewell, Lisa 120
Shakespeare, William 96
Shapiro, David 88
Sharma, Prageeta 4, 15, 47, 108
Shaw, Lytle 48
Shepard, Sam 43
Sikelianos, Eleni 45, 47, 111
Simic, Charles 72
Simmons, Diane 123
Simon, Ann 48
Simon, John 30
Sinclair, John 57, 129
Skinner, Jonathan 45, 47
Sloan, Margaret 8, 32, 43, 87
Smith, Colin 43
Smith, Harry 10, 32, 37, 47, 105
Smith, Rod 48
Sondheim, Alan 39, 92, 93, 102, 112
Sonnenberg, Kerri 59
Spahr, Boyd 43, 108
Spahr, Juliana 8, 59
Spears, Patricia 13, 44
Spicer, Jack 18, 43
Spillway, Phil 3
Stecopoulos, Eleni 47, 126
Stefans, Brian 47
Stefans, Kim 47
Stein, Gertrude 21, 26, 43, 47, 58, 63, 74
Steiner, Konrad 130
Stevens, Wallace 70, 109
Stewart, Christine 43
Stewart, Jon 30, 43
Strand, Mark 109
Strang, Brian 43, 74
Strickland, Stephanie 43, 65
Stroffolino, Chris 33, 43
Sullivan, Andrew 28
Sun, Chicago 19
Swensen, Cole 61
Swiss, Thomas 46
Szamatowicz, Carol 15
Taciuch, Dean 123
Taggart, John 71
Tardos, Anne 55
Tarn, Nathaniel 43
Taylor, Steven 58
Tchicai, John 19
Templeton, Fiona 43
Texas, Irving 58, 72
Thackrey, Susan 18
Thilleman, Tod 36
Thomas, Dylan 30, 43
Thompson, George 19
Toscano, Rodrigo 43, 47, 88
Towle, Tony 15
Treadwell, Carol 25
Trinidad, David 123
Trujillo, Dorothy 43
Tuma, Keith 43
Turner, Michael 118
Turner, Victor 118
Tuttle, Richard 47
Tysh, George 55
Vangelisti, Paul 43
Venuti, Lawrence 130
Vermont, Charlie 55
Veronica, Angela 43
Violi, Paul 83
Virgil 48
Viscomi, Joseph 30
Wald, Diane 20
Waldman, Anne 43, 45, 55
Waldrop, Keith 11
Waldrop, Rosmarie 11, 33
Walsh, Catherine 43
Washington, George 12, 17, 30, 43, 94
Watson, Craig 43
Watten, Barrett 48, 71, 87
Weiner, Hannah 37, 55
Weinstein, Eric 43
Weiss, Irving 25
Wellman, Donald 43
Whitman, Walt 9, 48
Whyte, Ryan 39, 102, 112
Wilbur, Richard 19
Wilkinson, John 43

Williams, Paul O. 43
Williamson, Aaron 43, 129
Williamson, Lindz 129
Willis, Elizabeth 45, 130
Wilson, Karen 43, 74
Wolsak, Melissa 43
Wright, C. D. 33
Wright, Laura E. 16
Yates, Katie 58
Yau, John 83
Zavatsky, Bill 43
Zavialova, Masha 65
Zucker, Rachel 47, 123
Zukofsky, Louis 71
Zummer, Tom 102, 112
Zurawski, Magdalena 47

CONCEPTS

Aesthetics 71
Anthologies 11, 14, 16, 18, 43, 45, 47, 71, 72, 74, 76, 81, 118
Appropriation 3, 45, 55, 82, 114, 130
Archives and libraries 3, 30, 43, 48, 50, 56, 70, 113, 124
Autobiography 23, 27, 43, 96
Avant-garde 19, 48, 71
Beauty 130
Biography 20, 44, 48, 93
Black Mountain 43
Book announcements 10, 12, 14, 16, 17, 18, 21, 23, 29, 38, 47, 48, 55, 58, 61, 66, 94, 95, 96, 111, 123, 124
Bookstores 24, 27, 39, 63
Calls for submissions 11, 31, 46, 86
Capitalism 43
Cities 79, 109, 129
Close reading 27
Collage and montage 123
Conferences and festivals 8, 37, 45, 46, 65, 74, 81, 82, 87, 103
Copyright and permissions 3
Craft 121
Difficulty 3, 33
Dreams 23, 48
Ecology and ecopoetics 68
Editing 2, 3, 18, 30, 33, 51, 105, 125
Electronic poetry and hypertext 1, 3, 24, 29, 37, 45, 47, 62, 68, 81, 82
Elegy 14, 16
Epic 48
Experimental poetry 45
Feminism 25, 43, 71
Film 18, 45, 47, 118, 129
Fluxus 32
Gender 46, 71, 102, 112
Grants and funding 20, 47, 63, 121
Humour and satire 45, 48, 55
Identity politics 43
Ideology 71
Improvisation 20, 39, 58, 74
Indigenous and Native poetics 79
Interviews 3, 10, 19, 43, 109
Jewish poetics 119
Language poetry 11, 17, 39, 43
Latino and Latin American poetry 127
Letters and correspondence 2, 3, 73
List moderation 2, 3, 55, 93
Little magazines 3, 17, 18, 20, 25, 29, 33, 43, 47, 54, 55, 58, 74, 82, 90, 91, 103, 106, 109, 118
Lyric poetry 47
Memory 1, 32, 38, 82
Modernism 11, 43, 45, 51, 118, 125
Mourning and loss 3, 37, 62
Multiculturalism 11
Music and poetry 19, 28, 30, 39, 46, 47, 48, 55, 58, 71, 74, 120
Nationalism 48
Nature 3, 42
New York School 43, 48
Obituary and memorial 3, 41, 64
Objectivism 45, 48
Ontology 48
Oulipo 43
Performance and the poetry reading 3, 14, 16, 28, 47, 59, 61, 63, 79, 93, 100, 105, 121
Philosophy 92, 93
Place and region 1, 27
Poetics 2, 3, 4, 18, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 43, 45, 46, 47, 48, 51, 59, 60, 71, 79, 92, 93, 94, 97, 109, 115, 130, 131
Politics and poetry 11
Postmodernism 11, 43, 51
Print vs. digital 1, 5, 7, 24, 27, 62
Prizes and awards 9, 20, 26, 47, 58, 63, 112, 118, 121
Prose poem 90
Queer poetics 63, 86
Race and poetry 46, 55, 61, 71, 102, 112, 127
Reading announcements 23, 24, 28, 45, 60, 61, 118
Religion and the sacred 30, 47, 67, 102, 112, 121, 130
Representation 42
Reviewing and criticism 3, 19, 20, 27, 33, 34, 47, 48, 51, 58, 63, 86, 99, 118, 123
San Francisco Renaissance 43
Science 45, 48
Serial poem 45
Small press publishing 3, 5, 7, 18, 20, 21, 27, 29, 33, 39, 42, 43, 45, 47, 48, 50, 58, 72, 104, 106, 115, 116, 123
Software and code 47
Sonnet 28, 130

Structuralism 48
Subjectivity 3, 65
Surrealism 26, 45, 129
The academy 3, 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 30, 33, 46, 47, 51, 61, 65, 68, 71, 84, 86, 88, 116, 117, 121, 123
The body 3, 33, 92, 129
The canon 11, 30
The internet 3, 11, 37, 43, 68, 79
The line 3
The listserv 2, 3, 5, 7, 38, 43, 45, 65, 71, 87, 93, 120, 125, 130
The New Sentence 71
Theatre 43, 55, 58, 63, 118
Translation 14, 16, 25, 26, 43, 45, 47, 48, 65, 73, 90, 117, 130
Visual and concrete poetry 27, 129
Visual art 18, 21, 23, 30, 53, 94, 121, 122
Women's writing 8, 45

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 131 in all.

11 JAN 1999

1. miekal and — Literature Nation
2. Poetics List — Welcome to the (new) Poetics List!
3. Poetics List — (new) Welcome Message
4. Michael Magee — COMBO 2 & website
5. Tosh — TamTam Books
6. Daniel Kane — Eileen Myles on WriteNet
7. Pete Neufeld — Re: TamTam Books
8. raea100900 — Page Mothers Conference
9. Katie Degentesh — 9x9 Industries Reads at Beyond Baroque

12 JAN 1999

10. Alaric Sumner — PAJ Writing and Performance
11. Michel Delville — POSTWAR AMERICAN POETRY / University of Liège , Belgium
12. aerialedge — Bernstein publication reading in DC
13. Poetry Project — New Poets on Website
14. Pritchett,Patrick — FW: re: Left Hand Reading Series - 1/21/99
15. Jordan Davis — SHINY / Steve McCaffery and Karen McCormack @ POETRY CITY
16. Laura E. Wright — Boulder Event
17. Mark Wallace — Charles Bernstein @ Bridge Street Books
18. dbkk — Gizzi and Thackrey at SPT
19. Aldon Nielsen — one more for posterity
20. William Slaughter — Mudlark No. 10
21. Poetics List — Coach House Books
22. Poetics List — TROPE
23. Harriet Zinnes — reading and performance
24. Charles Bernstein — My Way & Figuring the Word in New York
25. Elizabeth Treadwell — Call for work Outlet (4/5) Weathermap--early edition
26. Robert Manery — Norma Cole reading & talk

13 JAN 1999

27. Steven Clay — Johanna Drucker / Figuring the Word & a note on Granary Books
28. Albert Glover — <No subject>
29. Mark Wallace — SITUATION #17 and #18 are now available
30. Matt Kirschenbaum — Blake Archive's January Update

14 JAN 1999

31. Peter Quartermain — CALL FOR PAPERS: POETRY AND THE INAUTHENTIC
32. dbkk — "The Vegetable Kingdom"
33. Rebecca Wolff — Fence Volume 1, no. 2
34. Ron Silliman — Review of Sally Silvers in NY Times
35. Lawrence Upton. — Writers Forum announcement
36. Pete Neufeld — Reading
37. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New @ EPC / Default Home Page
38. James Sherry — ROOF Books New Titles

15 JAN 1999

39. Peter Ganick — POTES & POETS CHAPBOOKS
40. Peter Ganick — A.BACUS 1999
41. Ron Silliman — Grotowski obit
42. Michael Boughn — Books
43. aerialedge — New Bernstein, Dipalma, Drama, &&&@ Bridge Street
44. Poetry Project — this week's readings

45. Poetics List — Naropa forward
46. Poetics List — conf. announcement
47. Elizabeth Fodaski — [redacted] Happiness
48. Poetics List — Notes to Poetry 49 (fwd)
49. James Sherry — Roof Books New Titles
50. Jessica Pompeii — Beyond Baroque

16 JAN 1999

51. Burt Hatlen — Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Jan 1999 to 14 Jan 1999 (#1999-4)
52. dbkk — "The Kink of Chris Komater"
53. Elizabeth Treadwell — San Francisco-January 31-AVEC SAMPLER READING @ CANESSA
54. Elizabeth Treadwell — Los Angeles--January 29--Double Lucy @ Beyond Baroque
55. Lewis Warsh — (no subject)
56. Bob Grumman — Comprepoetica Annoucement

18 JAN 1999

57. Douglas Oliver — Re : London readings
58. Joe Ross — Re: San Diego-January 24-Beyond The Page READING
59. Herb Levy — Subtext Readings: Winter/Spring 1999 (Seattle)
60. Marcella Durand — Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Jan 1999 to 17 Jan 1999 (#1999-6)
61. Pritchett,Patrick — FW: U. of Denver Reading Series
62. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New Creeley Book

19 JAN 1999

63. Katie Degentesh — 9X9 INDUSTRIES PRESENTS
64. Ron Silliman — Fred Hopkins has died
65. Robert Archambeau — SAMIZDAT #2/Free Offer
66. Burt Kimmelman — Re: New Creeley Book
67. joel lewis — f.y.i.

20 JAN 1999

68. Burt Kimmelman — Job Opening (see description way below)
69. lee ann brown — NYC SUBLET
70. lee ann brown — Barbara Guest receives Frost Medal
71. Hank Lazer — Beach, announcement & discount
72. Brian N Clements — Firewheel Chapbook Competition

21 JAN 1999

73. Robert Archambeau — SAMIZDAT update
74. Herb Levy — Catriona Strang/Francois Houle CD & Vancouver performance
75. Safdie Joseph — SEATTLE SUBLET
76. George Bowering — Re: Other
77. Jessica Pompeii — I'll trade ya maybe.
78. Don Byrd — Paul Metcalf

22 JAN 1999

79. Poetics List — TELEPOETICS VANCOUVER
80. Ron Silliman — John Frederick Nims
81. Lawrence Upton. — Re: Other
82. Lawrence Upton. — (no subject)
83. Poetry Project — readings at the Poetry Project
84. david bromige — Our own Rachel
85. Poetry Project — Laserprinter
86. Karen McKevitt — Last Call for Submissions
87. acgold01 — 20C Lit. Conference Chairs
88. charles alexander — POG readings
89. Peter Quartermain — Re: Paul Metcalf

23 JAN 1999

90. Chris [Steve] Piuma — flim: a free page, Volume three, Issue three, now online.
91. BETSY ANDREWS — questions for prurient interests
92. A. Jenn Sondheim — ANNOUNCEMENTS: TWO POETRY LISTS OF INTEREST TO YOU

24 JAN 1999

93. Poetics List — note to re-welcome
94. Poetics List — Playing with a Full Deck
95. Tom Beckett — a poem and a note
96. Bob Grumman — Valuable Info for Self-Publishers Plus an Announcement
97. charles alexander — Re: Paul Metcalf
98. Peter Manson — NYC Readings?
99. Harold Teichman — Bunting Noticed in LRB
100. Daniel Kane — Sam Abrams / Andrei Codrescu
101. Bob Grumman — Address for Of Manywhere-at-Once
102. A. Jenn Sondheim — ANNOUNCEMENT: NEBULOUS AWARDS: PLEASE TRY AND READ!!! (fwd)

25 JAN 1999

103. John Tranter — Cambridge UK poetry conference
104. William Marsh — murphy/ganick chap from PaperBrain
105. Poetry Project — a reading
106. Elizabeth Treadwell — Los Angeles--January 29--Double Lucy @ Beyond Baroque (Reminder & Det...
107. nuyopoman — rEAL liVE pOETRY in NC
108. Jordan Davis — Hat going fast
109. Christopher Reiner — Poetry on Billboards
110. Jessica Pompeii — love
111. Daniel Kane — sikelianos talks sappho

26 JAN 1999

112. Peter Quartermain — Re: ANNOUNCEMENT: NEBULOUS AWARDS: PLEASE TRY AND READ!!! (fwd)
113. Ron Silliman — Holbrook Teter
114. Rebecca Wolff — Re: NYC Readings?
115. Joanne Molina — Announcing Propjet Chapbook Series
116. dbkk — Myung Mi Kim residency at SPT
117. Pritchett,Patrick — Elvis= Enlil?
118. CL Hamshaw — Art and History Lectures-Vancouver

27 JAN 1999

119. Ron Silliman — Position available (must know Yiddish & Russian)
120. james perez — Fwd: poetry and sound in philly
121. Charles Alexander — fischer & grossman in tucson
122. Elizabeth Treadwell — Avec Sampler Readings in SF

28 JAN 1999

123. Karen McKevitt — New Fourteen Hills!
124. David Baratier — Will Alexander's Above The Human Nerve Domain is out
125. Linda V Russo — Editing Modernism
126. Mike Kelleher — a l y r i c 9
127. David Baratier — billboards

29 JAN 1999

128. A. Jenn Sondheim — (no subject)
129. Douglas Oliver — Re: Locker & Steerer
130. Jamie Ferguson — Steiner, Venuti, Polish Baroque verse
131. Maria Damon — alchemy bibliography

1. miekal and
Literature Nation
Mon 11 Jan 1999

<Awkword Ubutronics is pleased to announce a new language hypertext> a narrative dissolves into a

"LITERATURE NATION"

interwriting by Maria Damon & Miekal And media manipulations by Miekal And, Allegra Fi Wakest & Zon Wakest

MediaWindow, 6 Hosts, 450 Text-Moments, Too Many Clickables To Count,

"semantics means. each theory replaces the previous memory, how long they last. termination is succinct, succession is giant. I cannot reach the book on the top shelf, lower case is better. what's all the hoopala about, the crystal remains misspelled."

"winged innoculation, they push the words across the landscape with their persistent inequalities. great migration of theory, driven below the level of thought. syllabic diaspora, disparate conclusions. in the alphabetic logic, they wound and found each other."

Comments & Curiosities invited

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/litnat/index.html

↑ Index

2. Poetics List
Welcome to the (new) Poetics List!
Mon 11 Jan 1999

"The blue distance that does not resolve into the foreground and rolls off at our approach..."

--

Welcome to the (new) Poetics List!

Numerous changes have been made in the list format, and both old and new subscribers will want to look at the revised Welcome Message for details of those changes. Foremost is that the list is now =fully moderated=; with the corollary that, with 600+ subscribers, Poetics can no longer be a discussion list as such. We've decided, for the time being, to restrict list traffic to event/publication announcements, though in future we may be accepting event and "scene" reports, book reviews, statements/responses and the like, as well as a limited amount of somewhat more informal correspondence.

The list is also coming online with a new editorial staff, consisting principally of me, whom many of you will recognize from this list or other poetry-related contexts. I'm looking forward to working on this list, which has been very useful to me in the past. Cheers,

Christopher W. Alexander

A copy of this message and the (new) Welcome Message will go out shortly to notify those set to "nomail" of the changes.

↑ Index

3. Poetics List

(new) Welcome Message

Mon 11 Jan 1999

Welcome to the Poetics List & The Electronic Poetry Center

..sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, College of Arts & Science, the State University of New York, Buffalo /// Postal Address: Poetics Program, 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY Buffalo, NY 14260

Poetics List Editor: Christopher W. Alexander
Please address all inquiries to <[redacted]>.

Electronic Poetry Center: <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc>

= Contents =
1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Submissions
4. Cautions
5. Digest Option
6. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
7. "No Review" Policy
8. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
9. Poetics Archives at EPC
10. Publishers & Editors Read This!

Above the world-weary horizons New obstacles for exchange arise Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded by Charles Bernstein in late 1993 with the epigraph above. Now in its second incarnation, the list carries over 600 subscribers, though all of these subscribers do not necessarily receive messages at any given time. A number of other people read the Poetics List via our web archives at the Electronic Poetry Center (see section 9 below).

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

are reviewed by the editors in keeping with the goals of the list, as articulated in this Welcome Message. We remain committed to this editorial function as a defining element of the Poetics List. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible.

=The Poetics List is no longer a discussion list as such.= Due to the increasing number of subscribers and the need for close moderation, we are no longer able to maintain the open format with which the list began. Rather, we encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this list. For further information on posting to the list, see section 5 below. Publishers and series co-ordinators, see also section 10.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. See section 7 for details.

We recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities for exchange in this still-new medium. We request that those participating in this forum keep in mind the specialized and focussed nature of this project. For subscription information or to contact the editors, write to <[redacted]>.

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to the Poetics List are free of charge, but formal registration is required. We ask that when you subscribe you provide your real name, street address, email address, and telephone number. All posts to the list must provide your full real name, as registered. If there is any discrepancy between your full name as it appears in the "from" line of the message header, please sign your post at the bottom.

<[redacted]>. Your message should include all of the required information. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

PLEASE NOTE: All subscription-related information and correspondence remains absolutely confidential.

To unsubscribe, send this one-line message, with no "subject" line to
<[redacted]>:

*If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note: sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to continue to receive mail from the Poetics List. To avoid this problem, unsub using your old address, then return to your new address and send this one-line message, with no "subject" line to <[redacted]>:

Remember to replace "Phil Spillway" with your own name. If you find that it is not possible to unsub using your old address, please contact the editors at <[redacted]> for assistance.

*Eudora users: if your email address has been changed, you may still be able to unsubscribe without assistance. Go to the "Tools" menu in Eudora, select "Options" and then select setup for "Sending Mail": you may be able to temporarily substitute your old address here to send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increased quota from your system administrator. (University subscribers may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You might also consider obtaining a commercial account. In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply re-subscribe to the list (once your account problem has been resolved!) by sending this one-line message, with no "subject" line to
<[redacted]>:

Remember to replace "Phil Spillway" with your own name.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address <[redacted]>. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Submissions

are reviewed by the editors in keeping with the goals of the list as articulated in this Welcome Message (see section 1). Please note that while this list is primarily concerned with poetics, submissions relating to politics and political news will also be considered. All correspondence with the editors regarding submissions to the list remains confidential.

Unsolicited submissions are welcome. In particular, we encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this list. Also welcome are other sorts of news, e.g., event reports, obituaries, and reading lists (annotated or not). Queries may be posted to the list when deemed appropriate; we request that the posting subscriber assemble "highlights" from respondents' posts to be published to the list. PLEASE NOTE: All submissions should be sent to the poetics list at <[redacted]>, and not to the editors.

Solicited submissions (by subscribers or non-subscribers) will also appear on Poetics from time to time. The editors reserve the right to contact any subscriber regarding possible submissions.

Posts to the Poetics List must abide by the rules of "Fair Use" when quoting material for which the posting subscriber does not hold copyright. Please do not post to the list personal or "backchannel" correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author!

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment directly to that individual, and not to the list editors.

When sending to the list, please send only "plain text". Note, however, there is no problem with sending clickable URLs in HTML format.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files. The use of "styled" text or HTML formatting in the body of email posts to the list appears not to be compatible with the the list's automatic digest program; as a result such messages disrupt the format of the Digest, even though this coding is readable for some subscribers who do not use the digest option.

Like all machines, the listserver will sometimes be down: if you feel your message has been delayed or lost, please wait at least one day to see if it shows up, then check the archive to be sure the message is not posted there; if you still feel there is a problem, you may wish to contact the editors at <[redacted]>.

As an outside maximum, we will accept for publication to Poetics no more than 5 messages a day from any one subscriber; in general, we expect subscribers to keep their post to less than 10-15 posts per month.

For further information or to contact the editors, please write to <[redacted]>.

---

4. Cautions

It may take up to a week or more to respond to your questions or to subscription requests or to handle any other editorial business or any nonautomated aspect of list maintenance.

Please do not publish list correspondence without the express permission of the author! Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

"Flame" messages will not be tolerated on the Poetics List. In this category are included messages gratuitously attacking fellow listees, also messages designed to "waste bandwidth" or cause the list to reach its daily limit. These messages are considered offensive and detrimental to list discussion. Please do not bother submitting such messages to the editor. Offending subscribers will receive only one warning message. Repeat offenders will be removed from the list immediately. Please do not put this policy to test!

---

5. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you the option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option.

Send this one-line message, with no "subject" line to <[redacted]>:

    set poetics digest

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

    set poetics mail

NOTE!! Send these messages to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this Welcome Message!!

---

6. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail.

You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending this one-line message, with no "subject" line, to <[redacted]>:

set poetics nomail

You may re-activate your poetics subscription by sending this one-line message, with no "subject" line, to the same address:

set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See section 8 below.)

---

7. "No Review" policy

For the safety and security of list subscribers, the "review" function of the Poetics List has been de-activated. Non-posting subscribers' email addresses will remain confidential. Please do not ask the list editors to give out subscriber addresses or other personal information.

---

8. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

The World Wide Web-based Electronic Poetry Center is located at <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc>.

Our mission is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and around the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning electronic resources in new poetries including RIF/T and many other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts and bibliographies, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

9. Poetics Archives at the EPC

Go to the Electronic Poetry Center <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc> and select the "Poetics" link from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. Or set your browser to go directly to <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive>.

You may browse the Poetics List archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

---

10. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: The Electronic Poetry Center listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible for our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate!

Send a list of your press/publications to <[redacted]>, with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line.

You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If your word processor will save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable.

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs or backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

You might also want to send short announcements of new publications directly to the Poetics List as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

4. Michael Magee
COMBO 2 & website
Mon 11 Jan 1999

Howdy folks, in all the fuss & muss of poetics list armageddon last month, some of you may have missed my announcement of COMBO 2 (set to the sounds of Sly & The Family Stone's "Hot Fun in the Summertime.") Anyway, our second issue features Pattie McCarthy, Brett Evans, Prageeta Sharma, Heather Fuller, David Kellogg, Ray DiPalma, Lee Ann Brown, Chris McCreary, Ange Mlinko, Kit Robinson, Standard Schaefer, & Lev Rubinshtein.

By now, someone you know should have seen COMBO and will be happy to tell you how great it is. Go ask them. If they look at you quizzically, go to our web-site:

http://dept.english.upenn.edu/~wh/combo/index.html

where you'll find info as well as sample poems. You can also contact me:

email: [redacted] snail: 31 Perrin Ave.
Pawtucket, RI 02861

Single issues: $3.00 Subscriptions: (4 issues) $10.00.

Glad to be speaking to you all again.

-Mike Magee.

↑ Index

5. Tosh
TamTam Books
Mon 11 Jan 1999

Small Press Distributors are now handling TamTam Books. Two titles are out now:

Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES (ISBN 0-9662346-0-X) $17.00 and Serge Gainsbourg's EVGUENIE SOKOLOV (ISBN 0-9662346-1-8) $17.00. Upcoming title is Guy Debord's CONSIDERATIONS ON THE ASSASSINATION OF GERARD LEBOVICI.

If you wish to see the book covers and read commentary on the books (Vian & Gainsoburg), you can locate them on the Amazon.com website.

If you wish to be on the TamTam Books e-mail list, backchannel me and I will add your name to the list.

ciao,

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

6. Daniel Kane
Eileen Myles on WriteNet
Mon 11 Jan 1999

This month on Writenet's <www.writenet.org> "Poets on Poetry" page, Daniel Kane and poet Eileen Myles talk about the relationship between color and poetry, Eileen's dog, and how to use specific, everyday details in poetry in an effort to not sound maudlin and phony. You can also download a WAV file of Eileen reading her poem "School of Fish." To go directly to the Myles page, point your browser to http://www.writenet.org/poetschat/poetschat_em0199.html

↑ Index

7. Pete Neufeld
Re: TamTam Books
Mon 11 Jan 1999

-----Original Message-----
From: Tosh [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, January 11, 1999 11:29 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: TamTam Books

Small Press Distributors are now handling TamTam Books. Two titles are out now:

Boris Vian's I SPIT ON YOUR GRAVES (ISBN 0-9662346-0-X) $17.00 and Serge Gainsbourg's EVGUENIE SOKOLOV (ISBN 0-9662346-1-8) $17.00. Upcoming title is Guy Debord's CONSIDERATIONS ON THE ASSASSINATION OF GERARD LEBOVICI.

If you wish to see the book covers and read commentary on the books (Vian & Gainsoburg), you can locate them on the Amazon.com website.

If you wish to be on the TamTam Books e-mail list, backchannel me and I will add your name to the list.

ciao,

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

8. raea100900
Page Mothers Conference
Mon 11 Jan 1999

I want to announce that U.C.S.D. will host Page Mothers, a conference celebrating California women poets as editors and publishers, on March 5th and 6th.There will be two days of panel discussions featuring Lyn Hejinian, Carla Harryman, Mary Margaret Sloan, Leslie Scalapino, Juliana Spahr, Dodie Bellamy, and Marjorie Perloff, just to name a few. For more information about this event, please check out our website. Its address is http://orpheus.ucsd.edu/lit/pagemothers.html

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

9. Katie Degentesh
9x9 Industries Reads at Beyond Baroque
Mon 11 Jan 1999

Just wanted to pass on this information to those of you in the LA area... 9x9 Industries is reading this Saturday, January 16th, at Beyond Baroque.

9X9 Industries, San Francisco's premier poetry/performance cartel, rides to LA! The readers are:

Brandon Downing, 1997 Chelsea Award for fiction
Katie Degentesh, 1998 Ina Coolbirth Memorial Prize
Tarin Towers, 1998 Pushcart Prize winner
Abie Hadjitarkhani, director of the Paraffin Arts Project
Jan Richman, Academy of American Poets 1995 Walt Whitman Award
Eugene Ostashevsky, "His whines emanate from the root of all suffering" (Playboy Online)
The Mysterious Mr. Clam, so mysterious we don't know his awards
Alicia Wing

Sat. JAN. 16
Beyond Baroque
681 Venice Blvd (cross sts. Lincoln x Abbot Kinney)
[redacted]
7:30
$5 students, $7 "regular people"

9X9 may be found online at http://www.paraffin.org/nine/

↑ Index

10. Alaric Sumner
PAJ Writing and Performance
Tue 12 Jan 1999

The following is part of the contents page of PAJ 61 (out now) listing the Performance Writing section that I have edited. Full contents page available at: http://muse.jhu.edu/journals/performing_arts_journal/toc/pajv021.html#v021.1

Writing & Performance

Ric Allsopp
Performance Writing

Alaric Sumner
Wade in Words

Alaric Sumner
The Unspeakable Rooms: A Prescript of Performance Possibilities

Alaric Sumner
The Unspeakable Rooms: A Performance

Carlyle Reedy
(Interviewed by Alaric Sumner)
Language Image Sound Object

Carlyle Reedy
Intimations and Intimidations of Aphrodite

Carlyle Reedy
Compassion

Lawrence Upton
Sunken Garden Stone Head M

Caroline Bergvall
The Hungry Form (G.eek Mix)

Cris Cheek
The Place of the F (lute) oot in C (alt.) ure

Julian Maynard Smith
(Interviewed by Alaric Sumner)
Codifying Behavior into Language and Re-enacting It

The Johns Hopkins University Press

E-ISSN: 1520-281X

Print ISSN: 0735-8393

Edited by Bonnie Marranca and Gautam Dasgupta

Subscription Information

Electronic Pricing Schedule

Annual Subscriptions (1999):
Print for Individuals: $24.50
Print for Institutions: $60.00
Online to Institutions: $54.00 (Now available!)
Both Online and Print for Institutions: $78.00 (Now available!)

Special rates available for full database institutional subscriptions to Project Muse.

Single Print Issues:
Individuals: $8.50
Institutions: $21.00

Agency: 5%

Other Discounts:
Orders for 10 or more issues will receive a 10% discount.

Foreign:
Please add $6.00 postage for Canada & Mexico; $8.00 outside North America.

Sample Issues:
Print: Sample copies are available upon request.
Online: Sample issue available!

To place an order for electronic or paper subscriptions, contact

The Johns Hopkins University Press
Journals Publishing Division
P.O. Box 19966
Baltimore, Maryland 21211
Phone: [redacted]
FAX: [redacted]

Toll-Free: [redacted]
Electronic mail: [redacted]

http://muse.jhu.edu/journals/performing_arts_journal/information/subscription.ht ml

↑ Index

11. Michel Delville

POSTWAR AMERICAN POETRY / University of Liège , Belgium

Tue 12 Jan 1999

(LAST) CALL FOR PAPERS

POST-WAR AMERICAN POETRY
(http://www.ulg.ac.be/facphl/annonces/pwap.html)

University of Liège (Belgium) -- March 3-4, 1999

Guest readers and keynote speakers

Joe Amato
Maxine Chernoff
H. Kassia Fleisher
Paul Hoover
Pierre Lagayette
Peter Middleton
Keith Waldrop
Rosmarie Waldrop

Abstracts / one-page proposals for papers on any aspect of post-war American poetry are invited.

PROPOSALS ON THE WORKS OF ATTENDING WRITERS ARE ESPECIALLY WELCOME.

Other possible topics include:

- anthologies; canon formation
- American poetry in an international context
- American poetry and multiculturalism/multilingualism
- the use, or nonuse, of traditional modes, genres, and subgenres
- the politics of poetic form
- poetry and the performing arts
- American poetry and postmodernism
- Language writing
- American poetry and the mass media

The proceedings will be published.

Please send abstracts and proposals, by January 20, 1999, to:

Michel Delville & Christine Pagnoulle
Université de Liège
Département d'anglais
3, Place Cockerill
4000 Liège
(Belgium)
Fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted] or [redacted]

More program information is available on the web:
http://www.ulg.ac.be/facphl/annonces/pwap.html.

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3 Place Cockerill
4000 Liège
BELGIUM
fax: ++ 32 4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

12. aerialedge
Bernstein publication reading in DC
Tue 12 Jan 1999

Charles Bernstein

Sunday January 17 @ 8 PM

You are cordially invited to a publication reading for Bernstein's new books: _My Way: Speeches and Poems_ from the University of Chicago Press, and _Log Rhythms_ (Granary Press), poems, with illustrations by Susan Bee.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington DC

ph [redacted]

(5 blocks from the Foggy Bottom Metro, next to the Four Seasons Hotel in Georgetown)

B.Y.O.E.

(Bring Your Own Ears)

↑ Index

13. Poetry Project
New Poets on Website
Tue 12 Jan 1999

A new selection of work by

Tonya Foster
Dan Machlin
Lisa Robertson
Jocelyn Saidenberg
Anthony Salerno

in "Poets & Poems" at the Poetry Project's website

http://www.poetryproject.com

And this week at the Poetry Project

Wed. Jan 13th
Michael Friedman & Sarah Schulman
8 pm

Fri. Jan 15th
Martin Luther King Jr. pre-celebration with Hettie Jones, David Henderson, Patricia Spears Jones, Sharan Strange and more 10:30 pm

↑ Index

14. Pritchett,Patrick
FW: re: Left Hand Reading Series - 1/21/99
Tue 12 Jan 1999

> * THE LEFT HAND READING SERIES INAUGURAL READING FOR 1999 ****
>
> ANSELM HOLLO
> PATRICK PRITCHETT
> LAURA WRIGHT
>
> Thursday, January 21, 1999 at 8:30pm.
> Left Hand Books, 1825 Pearl Street (above the Crystal Market).
> Admission is FREE, but donations are requested.
> An Open Reading will precede the featured readers

> Anselm Hollo, a native of Finland and professor of poetry at Naropa, is the author of over 35 books, including recently "Corvus," and "AHOE2: Johnny Cash Writes A Letter To Santa Claus." He is one of this country's pre-eminent translators. This reading marks his return to Boulder from a residency in Fontainebleu, France.
>
> Patrick Pritchett is the author of "Ark Dive," an elegy for the poet Ronald Johnson. His essay on Anselm Hollo will appear later this spring in Andrei Codrescu's Exquisite Corpse anthology, "Thus Spake The Corpse." His poems have appeared in New American Writing, Prairie Schooner and many other journals.
>
> Laura Wright is the author of "Where Hunger Is A Place" and "Hide: what's difficult," forthcoming from Poetry New York. A classically-trained musician as well as a poet, she is currently working on translations of the poetry of Henri Michaux.

↑ Index

15. Jordan Davis

SHINY / Steve McCaffery and Karen McCormack @ POETRY CITY

Tue 12 Jan 1999

Two free events
at POETRY CITY
in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative 5 Union Square West NYC
over the next two weeks:

Friday January 15 7 pm

SHINY Michael Friedman editor Larry Fagin guest editor

Reading from No 9/10 featuring Jordan Davis Tim Davis Judith Goldman Ted Greenwald Lisa Jarnot Stephen Malmude Ange Mlinko Charles North Ron Padgett Stephen Rodefer Prageeta Sharma Tony Towle Carol Szamatowicz Paul Violi

Friday January 22 7 pm

Steve McCaffery and Karen McCormack

as always a cordial bourgeois atmosphere replete with snacks and booze

↑ Index

16. Laura E. Wright
Boulder Event
Tue 12 Jan 1999

 THE LEFT HAND READING SERIES INAUGURAL READING FOR 1999 ***

ANSELM HOLLO
PATRICK PRITCHETT
LAURA WRIGHT

Thursday, January 21, 1999 at 8:30pm.
Left Hand Books, 1825 Pearl Street (above the Crystal Market).
Admission is FREE, but donations are requested.
An Open Reading will precede the featured readers

Anselm Hollo, a native of Finland and professor of poetry at Naropa, is the author of over 35 books, including recently "Corvus," and "AHOE2: Johnny Cash Writes A Letter To Santa Claus." He is one of this country's pre-eminent translators. This reading marks his return to Boulder from a residency in Fontainebleu, France.

Patrick Pritchett is the author of "Ark Dive," an elegy for the poet Ronald Johnson. His essay on Anselm Hollo will appear later this spring in Andrei Codrescu's Exquisite Corpse anthology, "Thus Spake The Corpse." His poems have appeared in New American Writing, Prairie Schooner and many other journals.

Laura Wright is the author of "Where Hunger Is A Place" and "Hide: what's difficult," forthcoming from Poetry New York. A classically-trained musician as well as a poet, she is currently working on translations of the poetry of Henri Michaux.

↑ Index

17. Mark Wallace
Charles Bernstein @ Bridge Street Books
Tue 12 Jan 1999

FRANK SINATRA WATCH OUT! The following literary event may present a very serious challenge:

Charles Bernstein

Sunday January 17 @ 8 PM

@ Bridge Street Books

You are cordially invited to a publication reading for Bernstein's two new books: _My Way: Speeches and Poems_ from the University of Chicago Press, and _Log Rhythms_ (Granary Press), poems, with illustrations by Susan Bee.

Charles Bernstein is David Gray Professor of Poetry and Letters at the State University of New York at Buffalo. He coedited the influential journal L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E and has authored twenty books of poetry including _Dark City_, _Rough Trades_, and _The Sophist. His essay collections are _Content's Dream_, and _A Poetics_.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington DC

ph [redacted]

(5 blocks from the Foggy Bottom Metro, next to the Four Seasons Hotel in Georgetown)

B.Y.O.E.

(Bring Your Own Ears)

↑ Index

18. dbkk
Gizzi and Thackrey at SPT
Tue 12 Jan 1999

Small Press Traffic presents

Peter Gizzi
Susan Thackrey

Friday, January 15, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

We jump into 1999 with the inimitable Peter Gizzi, whose new book Artificial Heart (Burning Deck) shows him off at his absolute best, as a supple and lyrical poet who can make anything happen with words. His poetry is playful, mathematical, highly constructed and romantic, like that Chinese nightingale in Yeats' Byzantium poems, but living and sentient, a hot line to the real. Peter Gizzi was born in 1959 and grew up in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. His editing projects have included the celebrated little magazine O.Blek: A Journal Of Language Arts (1987-93), the international literary anthology the Exact Change Yearbook (1995), and The House That Jack Built: The Collected Lectures Of Jack Spicer (Wesleyan, 1998). He lives in Santa Cruz and teaches literature and creative writing for the University of California.

Susan Thackrey has long been a fixture of the Bay Area art and poetry scene, and her admirers have waited for fifteen years for the release of her first book, Empty Gate, now available from Berkeley's terrific Listening Chamber press. Empty Gate is a pungent distillation of experience and uncertainty; its short little lines, serial notation, and hints of mythic grandeur are homeopathic in their simplicity and efficacy. Thackrey's poetry has been published in Acts, Apex of the M, Avec, Talisman, and Hambone. She owned and ran an art gallery and has published critical writing on film and photography in Cinemagraph and Afterimage. During the early days of New College's Poetics Program, Susan Thackrey studied with Robert Duncan; his ghost will be walking the halls of New College tonight during this great event.

↑ Index

19. Aldon Nielsen
one more for posterity
Tue 12 Jan 1999

A musician who has worked with many poets -- see in particular his work on the new John Tchicai jazz/poetry disk

> Date: Sun, 10 Jan 1999 13:30:19 -0600
>
> Here's the obit for Fred Hopkins from the Chicago Sun-Times:
>
> "Fred Hopkins, jazz bassist, dies
>
> January 9, 1999
>
> BY LLOYD SACHS ENTERTAINMENT CRITIC
>
> Fred Hopkins, widely acknowledged in avant-garde circles as one of the most fiercely talented, charismatic and original bassists in modern jazz, died Thursday at the University of Chicago Hospital. He was 51. The cause of death was heart-related. Further details were not disclosed.

A South Side native who moved back to his hometown in 1997 after more than 20 years in New York, Mr. Hopkins was best known for his work in Air, an acclaimed trio. Formed in 1975 in New York, it included saxophonist Henry Threadgill and drummer Steve McCall, with whom he had played in the early-1970s Chicago group, Reflection.

An integral part of later Threadgill groups, Mr. Hopkins worked regularly with such major figures as Muhal Richard Abrams, David Murray, Anthony Braxton and Don Pullen. His stature is reflected in his presence on dozens of important recordings.

A product of Capt. Walter Dyett's famed music program at Du Sable High School, Mr. Hopkins trained with the Civic Orchestra and later studied the bass with Joseph Guastafeste of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

A free-spirited, hard-living, effusively outspoken individual, he brought a carefree brilliance to his playing, which featured sometimes outlandish bowing effects. He prided himself on being able to play in diverse settings, counting among his important influences the classical bassist (and conductor) Serge Koussevitsky as well as jazz bassists Wilbur Ware, Richard Davis and Ray Brown.

``What you want to do is express yourself on your instrument, to share your thoughts about sound,'' he said in an interview last year, having just formed his first band as a leader. ``But doing that has gotten me in trouble. The more creative I become, the more people try to tell me how to play. Well, listen, no one is going to tell me how to play the bass. That's what I do.''

``He was one of the most fascinating soloists on the bass I have ever heard,'' said trumpeter Malachi Thompson. ``His total approach was so unique. He's one of those artists who can't be replaced because to even try to do what he did is impossible.''

Mr. Hopkins is survived by his mother and six siblings. Funeral arrangements were being planned."

↑ Index

20. William Slaughter

Mudlark No. 10

Tue 12 Jan 1999

New and On View: Mudlark No. 10 (1998)

DIANE WALD | IMPROVISATIONS
ON TITLES OF WORKS BY JEAN DUBUFFET

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Diane Wald was born in Paterson, NJ, and has lived in Massachusetts since 1972. She has been publishing in literary magazines since 1966: including, for example, Kayak, Black Warrior Review, American Poetry Review, Salt Hill Journal, Ploughshares, Missouri Review, Boston Literary Review, and College English. She was the recipient of a two-year fellowship in poetry from the Fine Arts Work Center in Provincetown and has been awarded the Grolier Poetry Prize, The Denny Award, and The Open Voice Award. She also received a state grant from the Artists Foundation (Massachusetts Council on the Arts). She has published two chapbooks (MY HAT THAT WAS DREAMING from White Fields Press and DOUBLE MIRROR from Runaway Spoon Press) and won the Green Lake Chapbook Award from Owl Creek Press for THE WHITE HORSE LOVE POEMS. Her full-length collection, LUCID SUITCASE, is due out from Red Hen Press in 1999. She teaches at University College of Northeastern University, and at The Art Institute of Boston, where she is Dean of Faculty. She has also taught autobiography courses for Writers on the Net.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Spread the word. Far and wide.

William Slaughter, Editor

_____
MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
http://www.unf.edu/mudlark
[redacted]

↑ Index

21. Poetics List

Coach House Books

Tue 12 Jan 1999

Coach House Books and the Red Head Gallery invite you to strike a blow against Official Verse Culture by attending the launch of two new books of poetry:

FIT TO PRINT by Alan Halsey and Karen Mac Cormack

dyslexicon by Stephen Cain

19 January 1999
8 pm
The Red Head Gallery
96 Spadina Avenue, 8th floor

Authors Karen Mac Cormack and Stephen Cain will be in attendance. Steve McCaffery will be playing the part of Alan Halsey for the evening. New work by painter Jason Dunda will be on display.

Cash bar. Snacks will be served (but don't make a pig of yourself).

ABOUT THE BOOKS

Hallmark Cards aficionados beware: these are not collections of lyrical verse.

FIT TO PRINT, a first-time collaboration for UK poet Halsey and Toronto poet Mac Cormack, is a tour-de-force work which poeticizes the most quotidian of literary forms: the newspaper column. FIT TO PRINT serves as eloquent proof of Marshall McLuhan's suggestion that to read a newspaper is to experience Cubism in the everyday world.

dyslexicon, small press regular Stephen Cain's first full-length book, is a double-lunged bong hit of mid-Eighties post-punk college rock, Gertrude Stein, art films, and the comedic legacy of Laurel and Hardy (including such great standup teams as Billy the Kid and Pat Garrett, HD and Ezra Pound, Jesus and Judas, and Steve McCaffery and bpNichol).

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Stephen Cain currently resides in Toronto,where he is editor of Kitsch in Ink Press and a member of the (n-1) Collective. Previous chapbooks have appeared from fingerprinting inkorporated and above/ground presses. His visual and concrete poetry has appeared in Rampike, Torque, 1cent (Canada, and Essex (US). Cain is also completing a doctorate in English Literature at York University, specializing in Modern and Contemporary Poetics.

Alan Halsey's books include Perspectives On The Reach (1981), Five Years Out (1989), Reasonable Distance (1992), The Text of Shelley'sDeath (1995) and A Robin Hood Book (1996). He was born in London, England in 1949, and now lives in Sheffield.

Karen Mac Cormack was born in Luanshya, Zambia in 1956. She is the author of seven books of poetry, including Straw Cupid (1987), Quirks & Quillets (1991), Marine Snow (1995), and The Tongue Moves Talk (1997). Of dual British/Canadian citizenship, she lives in Toronto.

Coach House Books * http://www.chbooks.com
e-mail: [redacted]

online and offset poetry, fiction & artist's books

401 Huron St (rear) on bpNichol Lane Toronto, Ontario
M5S 2G5
[redacted] or outside Toronto [redacted]

Coach House Books uses 100% post-consumer pixels in its electronic texts.

↑ Index

22. Poetics List

TROPE

Tue 12 Jan 1999

TROPE Poetry and Graphics

is now online at:
www.erols.com/tsimonds

This issue features the poetry of: Carlo Parcelli, Joe Brennan, Billy Little, Sam Garren, Coppie Green, Steve Roberts, David Blair, Bruce Piephoff, A.L. Quoyne, Jack Waitts, Richard Gess and David Hickman

Photographs and Graphics by: Richard Gess, A .Bruce, David Hickman

↑ Index

23. Harriet Zinnes
reading and performance
Tue 12 Jan 1999

Gathering of the Tribes (Tribes Gallery: 285 EAst Third STreet, between C and D, New York City) in conjunction with INVERTING THE DREAM, an exhibition by Alice Zinnes, presents a reading/performance on Saturday, January l6 from 6-8 pm. Hal Sirowitz will read from his recents books, MOTHER SAID and MY THERAPIST SAID as well as from his recent memoir. David Peterson will read from his novel, I RUN AND FEEL RAIN. Christopher Sippel will perform and read from his recent poetry. Harriet Zinnes will read from her recent colection of poetry, MY, HAVEN'T THE FLOWERS BEEN? and from her just published short story collection, THE RADIANT ABSURDITY OF DESIRE.

Free. All Welcome.

↑ Index

24. Charles Bernstein
My Way & Figuring the Word in New York
Tue 12 Jan 1999

Book Party
Saturday, January 16, 1999
6-8 PM
@ The New Museum of Contemporary Art Bookstore
583 Broadway
This will be a reception for My Way: Speeches and Poems and Johanna Drucker's Figuring the Word: Essays on Books, Writing, and Visual Poetics

For more information on Figuring the Word, including an essay from the book, "The Art of the Written Image" http://www.granarybooks.com/newbooks/drucker3/drucker3.1.html

For more information about My Way: Speeches and Poems http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein/MyWay.html

For more information Log Rhythms, illustrated by Susan Bee, which I will be reading at Bridge Street Books in D.C. on Sunday, January 17
http://www.granarybooks.com/newbooks/bernstein/bernstein1.html

↑ Index

25. Elizabeth Treadwell

Call for work Outlet (4/5) Weathermap--early edition

Tue 12 Jan 1999

Hello friends, Happy New Year

Outlet (3) Ornament will be out in March with work by Laura Moriarty, Brenda Iijima, Jason Nelson, and Malcolm de Chazal translated by Irving Weiss. Along with many more new fashionable and exciting writers and writings, and an interview with Harriet Zinnes on her heady headstrong days as a junior editor at Harper's Bazaar.....Why not order now? $5, 68 pp, saddlestitch, checks or stamps or cash, checks to E. Treadwell, please and thanks.

OUR NEXT CALL
Outlet (4/5) Weathermap Meaning: a.) themeless, for a change, with an inclination toward maps & weather; b.) concerned with the experimental poetics of the now, as well as the then,* with a particular interest in various/variable feminisms thereof.
Deadline: June 15, 1999.
(double issue!!)
*if you have a critical piece to tout/pitch please contact Elizabeth at [redacted]

Hope to hear from you,

Elizabeth Treadwell
Sarah Anne Cox
Grace Lovelace
Carol Treadwell
Editors

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

26. Robert Manery

Norma Cole reading & talk

Tue 12 Jan 1999

The Kootenay School of Writing
112 West Hastings St
Vancouver BC

[redacted]

KSW is pleased to present a reading and talk by Norma Cole

Reading
Saturday January 23, 8 pm
Admission $3/$5

Talk: "The Poetics of Veritgo"
Sunday January 24, 3 pm
Admission $3/$5

Norma Cole is a Canadian poet and long time resident of San Francisco. Her books include Mace Hill Remap, Metamorphopsia, My Bird Book, Mars, and most recently, MOIRA, Contrafact and Desire and its Double. She has done important work in translation, translating works by contemporary French poets such as Anne Portugal, Emmanuel Hocquard and Danielle Collobert. With Stacy Doris she recently edited an issue of Raddle Moon called "Twenty-Two New (to North America) French Writers," which was exciting both for the work translated and for the choice of poet-translators. She and Michael Palmer edited and translated The Surrealists Look at Art. She has been a recipient of the Gertrude Stein Award for Poetry several times, and has also received a Gerbode Award for Poetry and an award from the Fund for Poetry. She currently teaches at San Francisco State University.

Norma Cole recently gave the "George Oppen Memorial Lecture on Twentieth Century Poetics" at The Poetry Center, San Francisco State University. She will present a version of that talk at the KSW.

↑ Index

27. Steven Clay
Johanna Drucker / Figuring the Word & a note on Granary Books
Wed 13 Jan 1999

<fontfamily><param>FFScala</param>Granary's website has been updated and now includes (as well as a listing of recent, new and forthcoming titles) a search engine for browsing our every changing inventory of out-of-print (& rare) poetry books, little mags and artists' books. Have a look:

http://www.granarybooks.com

Granary Books announces a new publication:

Figuring the Word: Essays on Books, Writing and Visual Poetics collects diverse writings by Johanna Drucker previously published in literary and scholarly journals. Topics include: "The Word Made Flesh," "Writing as Artifact," "Visual Poetics," "Artists' Books Past and Future," "The Future of Writing," & "Personal Writing." The book also includes an anecdotal checklist of Drucker's artists's books and an informative introduction by poet Charles Bernstein.

"Figuring the Word is a work of poetics rather than criticism or theory in that these essays are the products of doing as much as thinking, of printing as much as writing, of designing as much as researching, of typography as much as composition, of autobiography as much as theory. The mark of the practitioner-critic is everywhere present in these piecesŠFiguring the Word is a wide-ranging collection of Drucker's essays from the early-80's to the present. Written in a variety of styles and presented in a variety of formats, the book reflects many divergent aspects of her work and thinking, while at the same time demonstrating how cohesive her project has been. Drucker begins with a wonderfully digressive discussion of her work as a book artist in which she gives an account of what lead her not only to her book art, but also to her related scholarly investigations. She then provides a series of close readings of the work of a number of contemporary language artists, providing in other essays overviews of the historical precedents for this work. The book includes not only a perceptive essay about the use of language in the landscape but also a prescient essay about the use of language in the new electronic frontier of cyberspace."

-from the introduction by Charles Bernstein, Poet, Editor and David Gray Professor of Poetry and Poetics at SUNY-Buffalo.

Johanna Drucker has been making books since 1972. She teaches.... Her recent critical publications include The Century of Artists Books (Granary Books, 1995), The Alphabetic Labyrinth (Thames and Hudson, 1995), Theorizing Modernism (Columbia University Press, 1994) and The Visible Word (University of Chicago Press, 1994); creative titles include: Prove Before Laying (Druckwerk, 1997) and Narratology (Druckwerk, 1994).

Paperback original. ISBN 1-887123-23-7 $24.95

Available at better bookstores, our primary distributor D. A. P. (1-800-338-BOOK); Small Press Distribution ([redacted]), or direct >from the publisher: Granary Books 568 Broadway #403 New York, NY 10012 ([redacted]; [redacted])</fontfamily>

There will be a Book Party for

Figuring the Word

&

My Way: Speeches and Poems and Speeches by Charles Bernstein (Univ of Chicago)

Saturday, January 16, 1999

6-8 PM

@ The New Museum of Contemporary Art Bookstore

583 Broadway

(between Houston & Prince in Soho) (NYC)

↑ Index

28. Albert Glover

<No subject>

Wed 13 Jan 1999

Glover Publishing News

1. Relax Yr Face, by Albert Glover. Sonnets, occasional verse, and collaborations. 60 pp. perfect bound. 400 copies in first printing. Covers by Maria Jill Cheval. $10 plus 2.50 p&h. Order directly from Glover Publishing, P.O. Box 633, Canton, NY 13617.

2. Interrogating the Tomb, by Albert Glover. A Rite for the inauguration of Daniel Sullivan as President of St. Lawrence University. 25 copies printed by Mark McMurray at Caliban Press, 14 Jay St., Canton, NY 13617. Fine Arts Book.

3. Interrogating the Tomb, text by Albert Glover - music by Norman Hessert. Tape cassette with Lynn Sarf vocalist. $8 plus 2.50 p&h. Order directly from Glover Publishing, P.O. Box 633, Canton, NY 13617.

4. Michael Boughn to provide fascicle #4 (Mind) for A Curriculum of the Soul. Based on a plan by Charles Olson; general editor John Clarke. This number was originally "assigned" to Robert Creeley who refused participation. Mind will be the 27th fascicle in the projected series of 28. All fascicles are available from the publisher directly or from SPD, 1341 Seventh St., Berkeley, CA 94710. Published for The Institute of Further Studies by Glover Publishing, P.O. Box 633, Canton, NY 13617.

5. Lisa Jarnot to give annual Sandra M. Nelson poetry reading at St. Lawrence University, Wednesday April 7th.

6. Diane di Prima to receive honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree from St. Lawrence University at 1999 commencement ceremony, Sunday, May 23rd, 10 a.m.

↑ Index

29. Mark Wallace

SITUATION #17 and #18 are now available

Wed 13 Jan 1999

After a delay because of new production and related difficulties, two new issues of SITUATION magazine are now availabe.

SITUATION #17 is a Heather Fuller chapbook, BEGGAR, an intense intersection between street level political engagement, avant garde form, and personal immediacy written by one of the most savvy up and coming poets around.

SITUATION #18 features work by BETH JOSELOW, CHRIS ALEXANDER, PATRICK DURGIN, NAVA FADER, BRENT HENDRICKS, MARK PREJSNAR, MICHAEL RUBY, MARK SALERNO, TIMOTHY SHEA, and CATHERINE WAGNER.

SITUATION is edited by Joanne Molina and Mark Wallace. It's published several times a year, whenever there's sufficient time and material. We're continuing our commitment to mixing better known poets with new writers many of you may not have read yet, but will be reading soon. All submissions must be accompanied by an SASE (and remember it's now $.33 for a regular letter). Manuscripts for chapbook issues are handled by solicitation only. Subscriptions are $10 for four issues or $3 for back or single issues. Make checks payable to Mark Wallace. Send submissions or subscriptions to SITUATION, 10402 Ewell Ave., Kensington, MD 20895.

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

30. Matt Kirschenbaum

Blake Archive's January Update

Wed 13 Jan 1999

---

13 January 1999

The editors of the William Blake Archive <http://www.iath.virginia.edu/blake/> are pleased to announce the opening of a major new wing of the site, devoted to documentation and supplementary materials "About the Archive." Available as the first entry on our main table of contents page from the URL above, the "About the Archive" materials consist of:

A brief overview of the Archive for first-time or hurried users, entitled The Archive at a Glance;

A statement of Editorial Principles and Methodology;

A Technical Summary of the Archive's design and implementation;

A Frequently Asked Questions list;

A reference page listing articles by members of the project team, as well as reviews and notices of the Archive by others;

An updated and expanded version of the article-length Plan of the Archive, providing additional detail about our intentions with regard to Blake's non-illuminated works.

Also included is information about the editors, an account of the Archive's collaboration with the Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities, and a link to our extensive Help documentation. In addition, we will shortly be adding a Tour of the Archive to these materials (combining textual narration, graphical screenshots, and suggestions as to how to use the Archive).

We would also like to take this opportunity to announce the Archive's recently convened Advisory Board and to thank those who have agreed to serve:

Ann Bermingham
Professor of the History of Art and Architecture
University of California, Santa Barbara

David Bindman
Durning-Lawrence Professor of the History of Art University College London

Frances Carey
Associate Keeper, Department of Prints and Drawings British Museum, London

Ruth Fine
Curator of Modern Prints and Drawings
National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

Nelson Hilton
Professor of English
University of Georgia

Steven Jones
Associate Professor of English
Loyola University, Chicago

Karl Kroeber
Mellon Professor of the Humanities
Columbia University

Alan Liu
Professor of English
University of California, Santa Barbara

Jerome J. McGann
John Stewart Bryan University Professor of English
University of Virginia

Morton D. Paley
Professor in the Graduate School (English) University of California, Berkeley

Daniel Pitti
Project Director
Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities
University of Virginia

Duncan Robinson
Director
Fitzwilliam Museum
Cambridge, England

G. Thomas Tanselle
Vice-President
John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation

John Unsworth
Director
Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities
University of Virginia

We have an ambitious publication schedule planned for the spring, focused on adding additional copies of the illuminated works already available in the Archive. In the immediate future we plan to publish the _Songs of Innocence and of Experience_ (copies C, F, and L) and _The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_ (copies C and F), followed by multiple copies of _The Book of Urizen_, _America: A Prophecy_, _Europe: A Prophecy_, _The Book of Thel_, and _Visions of the Daughters of Albion_, as well as further copies of the separate and combined _Songs_ and the _Marriage_. We hope to follow these works with _Jerusalem_ copy E by the summer, thus completing the illuminated canon. This spring we will also be releasing the electronic Erdman edition in beta form and publishing detailed lists documenting the complete contents of the various U.S. and U.K. Blake collections (now nine of them) contributing works to the Archive.

Finally, we list below the electronic editions already in the Archive (26 copies of 16 separate illuminated books) for the benefit of those teaching Blake in the spring semester.

All Religions are One, copy A
There is No Natural Religion, copies B, C, G, and L
The Book of Thel, copies F, H, and O
The Marriage of Heaven and Hell, copy D
Visions of the Daughters of Albion, copies C, F, and J America: a Prophecy, copies A and E
Songs of Innocence and of Experience, copy Z
Europe: a Prophecy, copies B and E
The First Book of Urizen, copy G
The Song of Los, copy B
The Book of Los, copy A
The Book of Ahania, copy A
Milton, a Poem, copy C
On Homers Poetry [and] On Virgil, copies B and F
The Ghost of Abel, copy A
Laocoon, copy B

Morris Eaves, Robert N. Essick, Joseph Viscomi, Editors
Matthew Kirschenbaum, Project Manager
The William Blake Archive

↑ Index

31. Peter Quartermain
CALL FOR PAPERS: POETRY AND THE INAUTHENTIC
Thu 14 Jan 1999

The Poetry Division of the MLA will be holding a session, in Chicago, December 1999, on

POETRY AND THE INAUTHENTIC

Notions of inauthenticity, through consideration of plagiarism, forgery, hoax, accident, misattribution, and the like, as exemplified in for example Chatterton, O'Malley, Ossian, Spectrism, Yasusada and/or elsewhere.

Please send 500-word abstracts of proposed papers, to reach me before 10 March 1999.

Email submissions acceptable, but they MUST (please) be followed up with hard copy.

Peter Quartermain
+ +

Peter Quartermain
846 Keefer Street
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V6A 1Y7
Voice : [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

32. dbkk
"The Vegetable Kingdom"
Thu 14 Jan 1999

California College of Arts and Crafts
5212 Broadway @ College
Oakland, CA 94618
For information [redacted]

January 20, 1999
8:00 p.m.
Oliver Art Center, CCAC Institute presents

THE VEGETABLE KINGDOM
A play by Kevin Killian and Rex Ray

In a last-ditch effort to stave off cancellation by the network, two producers of a sagging TV game show (THE VEGETABLE KINGDOM, kind of like JEOPARDY with vegetable questions) decide to switch its format to CELEBRITY VK, and try to enroll Linda McCartney and Yoko Ono as their celebrity contestants. Linda, holed up in her Meatless Mystery Ranch in Tucson, Arizona, dying of cancer, surrounded by her loyal staff of robots and animals, decides to take them up on their offer, believing that America is ready for evangelical vegetarianism. Yoko Ono, brooding over the career of her son, Sean, and the wayward history of the Fluxus movement, flies in from New York to Hollywood to appear on the program. Neither of them knows the other is going to be her opponent. War ensues both off-screen and on. This is a play about forgiveness, redemption, repressed memory, and the age-old question of how can we make this sorry old world a better place.

WORLD PREMIERE with Norma Cole, Kota Ezawa, Cliff Hengst, Scott Hewicker, Kevin Killian, Karla Milosevich, Rex Ray, Larry Rinder, Jocelyn Saidenburg, Mary Margaret Sloan and Wayne Smith. Mary Margaret Sloan makes her acting debut as Lee Meriweather, actress, former Miss America, former Catwoman on Batman, etc., etc. THIS PERFORMANCE FREE!

↑ Index

33. Rebecca Wolff

Fence Volume 1, no. 2

Thu 14 Jan 1999

Hi, I wanted to tell you about Fence, Vol. I, no. 2, which includes, among other things, a new poem by Charles Bernstein, one from Rosmarie Waldrop, two from Jane Miller, several from Elizabeth Robinson, two from Brenda Hillman, a series by Laura Mullen, two from Mary Jo Bang, art from Bruce Conner, poems by Lee Ann Brown, a long section by C.D. Wright, a poem by Chris Stroffolino, and several by Donald Revell.

As you can see from the above list, Fence is interested in publishing work from the experimental mainstream as well as the academic mainstream--mixed metaphors of barriers and water.

Because this is one of the few venues in which a Manifesto might be well-received, I'd like to include our own, which was integral to the conception of the magazine, but which has never been published anywhere due to shyness and fear of jeering.

Please check out our website: www.fencemag.com

What follows is a Manifesto/Press Release:

FENCE

-- the skeleton of a wall, the embodiment of a line...
-- a pause between fields and a conduit for pleasure...
-- a structure at once transparent and definitive..

Fence is a new journal of poetry, fiction, criticism, and art. Its editors are writers, artists, participants in the cultural throng who are dissatisfied with the stratified, self-consuming body of literary journals available. Our contributors are those whose work sits resolutely on the fence, resisting easy definition. We are convinced that mystery, as it is manifested in the subjective voice, is a legitimate and pleasurable by-product of the agency of the author. We have devised a journal with an explicit mission: if not to erase the lines as they are drawn, at least to expose, defy, and recontextualize them for a new readership: the converted reunited with the curious.

...a marker of territory Fence is a response to a percieved need. We wish to provide a reliable home for the fence-sitters: those writers who are intent on following the lead of what they truly hear as opposed to what they have heard before or what they have read about and with which they hope to align themselves.

-- a willful ambiguity, an informed non-commitment Fence is a resting place for work that we recognize by its singularity, its reluctance to take a seat in any established camp, its insistence on the reader's close attention to what is not already understood, digested, judged. Readers will be surprised and refreshed upon encountering in our pages an editorial presence that is unusually self-conscious in its attempts to contextualize, inform, and reciprocally reveal our contributors to our readers -- to expose the skeletal cross-purpose of our document.

-- a shared boundary We intend to be literally didactic, to enclose territory for an unhindered, unburdened encounter with the discussion of theories, styles, histories, movements, and tastes. Fence offers its readers a richesse of literacy, one that is populist not by virtue of condescension, but by its lack of presumptions.

-- a vantage point from which to see, simultaneously, several shades of green in the grass There is nothing radical about this magazine. We do not see the erection of such a fence as a combative or exclusionary measure, but as a gesture of cultivation. Fence stands against the false obfuscation of the fruits of our culture's labor, that which has been framed and sentenced to inaccessability. We seek, above all, to increase the reader's pleasure.

-- a midpoint between the acquisition and distribution of stolen goods There is nothing impenetrable about the work being done today; it is in response to what has come before, that which has been previously allowed; it is now allowed. Within the context of each issue of Fence we reinforce the realm of possibility and contextualize our contributors within it. Fence intentionally blurs the distinction between "difficulty" and "accessibility," preferring instead to address a continuum of utterance.

-- a dashing exercise, a good humoured parry-and-thrust
Our editorial strategy is a balancing act, undertaken in a spirit of inquiry rather than critique. From John Ashbery's poem "Soonest Mended":

> But the fantasy makes it ours, a kind of fence-sitting > Raised to the level of an esthetic ideal

Taken entirely out of context, these lines refer to our own aim and fantasy: to support poetry and fiction that is written without the safety of received theory or streamlined tradition but wholly out of impulse, knowledge, and the experience of necessity.

-- a dissemination point We wish to preach dually to the converted and to the curious. Our criticism is immediate and intimate, attempting an explicit address. We hope to break down the wall which we feel has been interposed between the reading public and the material of our individualities -- our poems, our fiction -- and to build in its place a fence.

↑ Index

34. Ron Silliman
Review of Sally Silvers in NY Times
Thu 14 Jan 1999

Check out a decent review of Sally Silvers' latest work in today's New York Times (including a piece with a score by Bruce Andrews):

http://www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/arts/silver-dance-review.html

↑ Index

35. Lawrence Upton.
Writers Forum announcement
Thu 14 Jan 1999

Writers Forum launched two publications by Peter Jaeger last night when Peter read at SVP.

BLUE HERO ISBN 0 86162 849 7

BIBLIODOPPLER ISBN 0 86162 858 6

Order from New River Project, 89a Petherton Road, London N5 2QT

Each booklet costs £2.00 + postage which of course varies with where you are.

Send enquiries to NRP with sae / irc, not me please

↑ Index

36. Pete Neufeld
Reading
Thu 14 Jan 1999

I was asked to post the following:

The Attic Club in San Francisco will host the following reading events

On Jan. 16 @ 5pm

> Ed Foster
> Leonard Schwartz
> Tod Thilleman

On Feb. 6 @ 5pm

Publication party for the Avec Sampler # 2 featuring:

Charles Borkhuis
Lisa Lubasch
Michael Palmer

The Attic Club can be found at 3336 24th Street between Mission and Valencia, right across the street from BART.

↑ Index

37. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
New @ EPC / Default Home Page
Thu 14 Jan 1999

---

(1) I'm pleased to announce the recent additions to/features at the EPC:
If It Rained Here (Harrison/Elliot) (connect) (also via Ubu)
Figuring the Word (Drucker) (connect)
Log Rhythms (Bee/Bernstein) (connect)
My Way (Bernstein)
[redacted]+ (Spring 1999)
Kenneth Irby bibliography (Smith)
Lipstick Eleven (connect)
Hannah Weiner Notes
The Russian Poetry Festival
As ever, these can be found by clicking "New" on the EPC home page, http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/
(2) Also, I have received questions about how to set the EPC as your browser default home page. To do this in Netscape, click on "Options", then on "General Preferences", then type the EPC home page address http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ in the "Browser starts with" box. This will bring the EPC up when you open your Web browser, a good way to see new announcements and features when the appear. (In Explorer this is "View" then "Internet Options" then you type http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ in the "Address" box.)

↑ Index

38. James Sherry
ROOF Books New Titles
Thu 14 Jan 1999

ROOF Books has just published:

Bob Perelman's <The Future of Memory> 120p, $14.95

&

Kit Robinson's <Democracy Boulevard> 104p, $11.95

As a special offer to the list members only, you may respond to this message with your name and address and Roof will send you both books for the amazing price of $14 including postage. Roof will send you the books and a bill and you will kindly be trusted to send us a check asap.

You may also order our complete line of titles through our website at segue.org or through SPD.

James Sherry

↑ Index

39. Peter Ganick
POTES & POETS CHAPBOOKS
Fri 15 Jan 1999

POTES & POETS PRESS NEW CHAPBOOK SERIES
(ISBN prefix: 0-937013)

Potes & Poets' NEW series of chapbooks feature younger or lesser-published writers who work in an experimental or post-L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetic. The chapbooks are published on 25% cotton paper and have original cover designs, many by the poets themselves. They continue Potes & Poets' 18-year tradition of publishing innovative poetry, now foregrounding newer writers who dare to 'write on the edge' of linguistic and visual experience.

(PLEASE PURCHASE ANY THREE, CHOOSE ONE FREE!)

1st series:

#1 - Jim Leftwich, Improvisations/Transormations, 45pp., (-76-5), $7.00 #2 - Sarah Mangold, Blood Substitutes, 45pp., (-77-3), $7.00 #3 - Ryan Whyte, Studio As History, 39pp., (-78-1), $7.00 #4 - Carrie Etter, Subterfuge of the Unrequitable, 27pp., (-79-X), $6.00 #5 - Katy Lederer, Music, No Staves, 22pp., (-80-3), $6.00 #6 - Jake Berry, Drafts of the Sorcery, 37pp., (-81-1), $7.00 #7 - Barbara Cole, little wives, 35pp., (-82-X), $7.00 #8 - Jack Kimball, Quite Vacation, 27pp., (-83-8), $6.00

2nd series:

#9 - Pattie McCarthy, Choragus, 30pp., (84-6), $6.00
#10 - William Marsh, Making Flutes, 36pp., (-85-4), $7.00
#11 - Linda Russo, not yet available

#12 - Rachel M. Daley and Peter Ganick,
Today It Starts Into Light, 31pp., (87-0), $6.00
#13 - Patrick F. Durgin, Pundits Scribes Pupils, 42pp., (88-9), $7.00
#14 - Melanie Bookout, Complanctus and all, 40pp., (-89-7), $7.00
#15 - Alan Sondheim, The Case of the Real, vol. 1, 44pp., (-90-0), $7.00
#16 - Alan Sondheim, The Case of the Real, vol. 2, 41pp., (-91-9), $7.00
special offer: #16 and #17 together for $13.00
#17 - Dan Featherston, Anatomies, 40pp., (-92-9), $7.00

ORDER FROM:
Potes & Poets Press
181 Edgemont Avenue
Elmwood CT 06110-1005 USA

U. S. fourth class postage postpaid, first class please add $0.50 per chapbook, Foreign (Canada included) surface only please add $0.50 per chapbook. Checks only in U. S. funds to 'Potes & Poets Press'. Thank you.

BOOKSTORES ORDER FROM:
Small Press Distribution
1341 Seventh Avenue
Berkeley CA 94710
tel. [redacted]

Please ask for our submission guidelines before sending texts.
We will be happy to send them in another email message.
For guidelines send your email address to: [redacted].

Peter Ganick, publisher.

peter ganick
potes & poets press / a.bacus
<http://members.home.com/zeropoet>

↑ Index

40. Peter Ganick
A.BACUS 1999
Fri 15 Jan 1999

---

already in progress...

Eight issues of exciting new writing, this year featuring mostly newer writers. Printed on 25% cotton, acid-free paper. Mailed in an envelope by first-class mail approximately every six weeks.

A.BACUS has been continuously published since 1984. Always on time. Never missed a deadline.

Complete sets: #s 1 - 125 for $450.

Now to the 1999 season.

#119	Jan 1	Buck Downs
#120	Feb 15	Norma Cole
#121	Apr 1	Kevin Magee
#122	May 15	Cheryl Burket
#123	July 1	Lisa Adriani
#124	Aug 15	John Noto
#125	Oct 1	Barbara Hocker
#126	Nov 15	John Lowther

Subscriptions: $30/year for the USA.
$35 (US funds only) for all foreign, Canada included, surface mail only.
Individual issues -- $5 each, postpaid -- also available from SPD as they are issued...

Order from:
Potes & Poets Press Inc
181 Edgemont Avenue
Elmwood CT 06110-1005 USA

Not accepting submissions for A.BACUS now.

Peter Ganick, publisher.

↑ Index

41. Ron Silliman
Grotowski obit
Fri 15 Jan 1999

The great director Jerzy Grotowski has died.

www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/national/obit-grotowski.html

↑ Index

42. Michael Boughn
Books
Fri 15 Jan 1999

shuffaloff press
is pleased to announce the publication of

Line of Flight

fictions by Bruce Comens

Robert Creeley writes:

"'There is nothing but thinking makes it so.' It is that persistent fact which displaces the comforting reality of our usual worlds, making that 'otherwhere' a palpable, self-determining presence. The narrators of these various fictions can only tell us that such _other_ is persistently there -- as one turns into a physical tree, as a second watches the shifting patrons at a cafe sketch one another into pinned reflection, as a third tracks through an increasing vagueness of streets until the wind drives 'to careen on up into the bank of gray cloud overhead. And beyond: a pulse of blank white, before wind.'

"Singular, intently articulate, walled in with a boundless emptiness it's determined to enter, this exceptional work attempts to trace its proposals by means of parable, to tell again and again such stories as that of Icarus, who here can fly without his father's laboriously constructed wings, yet wears them nonetheless. Where does he go, then? Even more--from where can one think he has come?"

5.25" x 7.5", 132 pp.
$12.00 US, $17.00 CAN
ISBN 1-880631-13-X

Forthcoming, Spring, 1999:

shuffaloff monograph #2

Tramping the Bulrushes
by John Clarke

With typical generosity and good nature, Clarke probes crucial questions about how we think authority. Initially published in his newsletter, intent., this essay takes on various misprepresentations of the legacy of Clarke's friend and teacher, Charles Olson and his seminal contribution to the poetries of this century.

7.5" x 8.75", 22pp.
$7.50US, $10.00CAN
ISBN 1-880631-15-6

Still available:

shuffaloff mongraph #1

Preface to the Early Poems of Robert Duncan
by
Robin Blaser

Blaser succintly and precisely delivers us into the mind of Robert Duncan's poetry as it participates in the larger mind of America and, as Blaser has it, "the particulars of our relations [to] what may be called soul-making."

7.5" x 8.75", 10pp.
$5.00US, $7.00CAN; $15.00US, $18.00CAN (hand-sewn, signed, numbered 50/500)
ISBN1-880631-08-3

Available from:

Small Press Distribution
1341 Seventh St.
Berkeley CA 94710 USA

shuffaloff press
653 Euclid Ave. Toronto ON M6G 2T6 CAN
260 Plymouth Ave. Buffalo NY 14213 USA

↑ Index

43. aerialedge

New Bernstein, Dipalma, Drama, &&&@ Bridge Street

Fri 15 Jan 1999

It's an abundance. Ordering instructions & discount information at the end of the list. Thanks, Poetics, for your support.

1. _True_, Rae Armantrout, Atelos, $12.95. A memoir. "I was restless."

2. _My Way: Speeches and Poems_, Charles Bernstein, U Chicago, $18. 320 pages of essays, poems, interviews, talks, articles, "from the role of the public intellectual to the poetics of scholarly prose, from vernacular modernism to idiosyncratic postmodernism, from identity politics to the resurgence of the aesthetic, from cultural studies to poetry as performance, from the small press movement to the web. Along the way he provides 'close listening' to such poets as poets as Charles Reznikoff, Laura Riding, Susan Howe, Ezra Pound, Allen Ginsberg, and Gertrude Stein."

3._Log Rhythms_, Charles Bernstein, w/ illustrations by Susan Bee, Granary Books, ltd edition of 500 copies, saddlestitched, $35. "Grilled cheese, grilled cheese / Please don't make me sneeze!"

4. _Big Allis 8_, ed Melanie Neilson w/ Deirdre Kovac, $8. Special feature 14 from Great Britain & Ireland guest ed Fiona Templeton: Catherine Walsh, Drew Milne, Andrea Brady, Caroline Bergvall, Aaron Williamson, David Kinloch, Karlien van den Beukel, Rob McKenzie, Helen Macdonald, John Wilkinson, Sarah Law, Tertia Longmire, Ken Edwards, & Miles Champion. Also in this issue: Juliana Spahr, Noah de Lissovoy, Bruce Andrews, Graham Foust, Stephanie Strickland, Bob Harrison, Lisa Robertson and Christine Stewart, Rodrigo Toscano, H. T., Alison Lune, Heather Ramsdell, & Liz Waldner.

5. _Other: British and Irish Poetry since 1970_, ed Richard Caddel and Peter Quartermain, Wesleyan, $24.95. "This highly focused anthology brings together several important strands of the vibrant, alternative poetry produce in the UK since 1970. It includes work by 55 poets, among them Cris Cheek, Brian Coffey, Fred d'Aguiar, Ken Edwards, Allen Fisher, Veronica Forrest-Thompson, Ulli Freer, Randolph Healy, Linton Kwesi Johnson, Geraldine Monk, Eric Mottram, Wendy Mulford, Douglas Oliver, Maggie O'Sullivan, Tom Raworth, Denise Riley, Gael Turnbull, and Catherine Walsh."

6. _Profit Over People: Neoliberalism and the Global Order_, Noam Chomsky, Seven Stories, $15.95. "Side comment: communications are not the same as uranium."

7. _A Secret Location on the Lower East Side: Adventures in Writing 1960-1980_, Stephen Clay and Rodney Phillips, New York Public Library / Granary Books, $27.95. Based on the NYPL exhibition, this book documents the small press publishing scene of the Beat, Black Mountain, New York School, San Francisco Renaissance, & L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E crowds. With a preface by Jerome Rothenberg, 200 b&w illustrations, contributions from many of the original editors, a timeline, sorry no pop-ups. Definitely qualifies for the term "sourcebook."

8. _postcards_, Barbara Cole, Beautiful Swimmers, $8. "I think my head might fall off from nodding too vigorously."

9. _Letters_, Ray Di Palma, Littoral, $10.95. "But once again / you wait for the translation--"

10. _RENGA : Draft 32_, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Beautiful Swimmers, $8. "o world whirr or were or was // Children, pretending birds, yell CHIRP."

11. _Polemics_, Anselm Hollo, Anne Waldman, & Jack Collom, Autonomedia, $8. The long-time Naropa colleagues under one cover. "inside every Messiah / is a second- hand / exploding frog joke"

12. _Hambone 14_, ed Nathaniel Mackey, $10. Geoffrey O'Brien, Peter Cole, Nathaniel Tarn, Barbara Guest, Ed Roberson, Amiri Baraka, Bradford Graves, an interview w/ Steve Lacy by Irene Aebi, Albert Mobilio, Joseph Noble, Jesse

Glass, Phillip Foss, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Pierre Joris, C S Giscombe, Susan Thackeray, Micahel Davidson, Craig Watson, Harryette Mullen, Lydia Davis, Martha Ronk, George Kalamaras, Clayton Eshleman, Wilson Harris, Brent Edwards on Sun Ra's poetry, Baraba Barrigan on Will Alexander, Andrew Joron on Peter Gizzi.

13. _Mina Loy: Woman & Poet_, ed Maeera Shreiber & Keith Tuma, National Poetry Foundation, $24.95 . Mina Loy interviewed by Paul Blackburn & Robert Vas Dias, essays by Eric Murphy Selinger, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Peter Quartermain, Jeffrey Twichell-Waas, Marjorie Perloff, Elizabeth Frost, Roger Conover, Susan Gilmore, Anita Helle, Tyrus Miller, Ellen Keck Stauder, Janet Lyon, Marisa Jauzzi, Susan E Dunn, Richard Cook, Kathleen Fraser, Norma Cole, Barbara Guest, & Anne Waldman.

14. _From the Other Side of the Century II: A New American Drama, 1960-1995_, ed Douglas Messerli and Mac Wellman, w/ an introduction by Marc Robinson, Sun & Moon, $29.95. Edward Albee, Arnold Weinstein, Jack Richardson, Amiri Baraka, Tennessee Williams, Ed Bullins, Rosalyn Drexler, John Guare, Ronald Tavel, Lee Breuer, Richard Foreman, Sam Shepard, Adrienne Kennedy, Richard Nelson, Jeffrey M Jones, Charles Ludlam, OyamO, Craig Lucas, Pedro Pietri, Eric Overmyer, Constance Congdon, Maria Irene Fornes, Len Jenkin, Erik Ehn, John Steppling, Charles L. Mee Jr., Richard Caliban, Suzan-Lori Parks, Tina Howe, David Greenspan, Lynne Alvarez, Murray Mednick, Mac Wellman, Kier Peters, Naomi Iizuka, & Tony Kushner.

15. _The Future of Memory_, Bob Perelman, Roof, $14.95. "Aren't you the real life of adjectives?"

16. _The Book of Disquiet_, Fernando Pessoa, Exact Change, $15.95. "I have always rejected the idea of being understood."

17. _Raddle Moon 17_, ed Susan Clark, $10. Some Vacouver Writers: Christine Stewart, Peter Culley, Colin Smith, Melissa Wolsak, Catriona Strang & Nancy Shaw, Maxine Gadd, Deanna Ferguson, Robert Manery, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Kevin Davies, Larry Timewell, Jeff Derksen, Lisa Robertson, Meredith Quartermain, Edward Byrne, Dan Farrell, Paul Mutton, Marie Annehart Baker, David Bromige, & Susan Clark. Elsewhere: William Fuller, Jean Day, Katrine Le Gallou, Jackson Mac Low, Gil McElroy, & Rae Armantrout. New Writing from Quebec: Cynthia Girard & Michael Delisle, translated by Robert Majzels & Erin Moure.

18. _Democracy Boulevard_, Kit Robinson, Roof, $11.95. "A sea startles the art."

19. _The Teachers & Writers Guide to William Carlos Williams_, ed Gary Lenhart, T&W, $14.95. Poems & essays by: Julia Alvarez, Kenneth Koch, Mary Edwards Wertsch, Peggy Garrison, Ron Padgett, Charles North, Reed Bye, Barbara Flug Colin, Sally Cobau, Bob Blaisdell, David Surface, Jordan Davis, Christopher Edgar, Penny Harter, Allen Ginsberg, & Bill Zavatsky.

Some bestsellers:
Imagining Language: An Anthology, ed Jed Rasula and Steve McCaffery, MIT, $55.
How To Do Things With Words, Joan Retallack, Sun & Moon, $10.95.
Ron Silliman and the Alphabet, ed Thomas A. Vogler, Quarry West 34, $15.
An Anthology of New Poetics, ed Christopher Beach, U Alabama, $19.95.
Poetics Journal 10: Knowledge, $14.
The Feminist Memoir Project, ed Rachel Blau DuPlessis and Ann Snitow, Three Rivers Press, $20.
Tripwire: A Journal of Poetics #2, ed Yedda Morrison and David Buuck, $8.
Oulipo Compendium, ed Harry Mathews & Alistair Brotchie, Atlas Archive Six, $19.99.
Two Haloed Mourners, Bernadette Mayer, Granary Books, ltd edition of 100 copies, 42 pages, $12.
Ribot 6: over 60 under 30, ed. Paul Vangelisti, $9.95.
Poet Be Like God: Jack Spicer and the San Francisco Renaissance, Lew Ellingham and Kevin Killian, Wesleyan, $35.
Whatsaid Serif, Nathaniel Mackey, City Lights, $12.95.
Mysteries of Small Houses, Alice Notley, Penguin, $14.95.
The Lion Bridge: Selected Poems 1972-1995, Michael Palmer, New Directions, $18.95.
An Anthology of New (American) Poets, Lisa Jarnot, Leonard Schwartz, and Chris Stroffolino ed, Talisman, $21.95.
Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women, ed. Mary Margaret Sloan, Talisman, $27.95.
Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word, Charles Bernstein ed., Oxford, $19.95.
Perhaps this is a rescue fantasy, Heather Fuller, $10.
Nothing Happened and Besides I Wasn't There, Mark Wallace, $9.50.
Collected Prose, Charles Olson, $19.95.

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

44. Poetry Project
this week's readings
Fri 15 Jan 1999

This week at the Poetry Project:

Friday, Jan. 15th at 10:30 pm

Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration with Hettie Jones, David Henderson, Patricia Spears Jones, Sharan Strange & others

NO READING MONDAY

Wednesday, Jan. 20th at 8 pm

Nicole Brossard & Heather Fuller

NO READING FRIDAY

Monday, Jan. 25th at 8 pm

Nava Fader & David Mills

For more information on the January schedule (biographies on readers, etc.) visit our website at http://www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $7, $4 students, and free for members

↑ Index

45. Poetics List
Naropa forward
Fri 15 Jan 1999

Jonathan Skinner asked me to forward this to the list. Chris

> In case any of you are wondering what to do next summer, here1s a > report from last year1s Naropa Summer Writing Institute (May > 15-June12), which I attended for about ten days. If this coming > summer1s events are to be anything like last year1s, I highly > recommend checking Naropa out, if you can make it to Boulder. (A much > abbreviated version of this was published in the October/November > Poetry Project Newsletter.) And if this piques your curiosity, I also > recommend you check out Patrick Pritchett1s phenomenal 3live2 > reportage of the whole month, which you can look up on the Poetics > listserv1s archives for May/June.

>
> Report from ten days (May 15-25) at the 1998 Naropa Institute Summer > Writing Camp:
>
> While the coasts went on vacation, the Big Tent went up once again, > indefatigable, at the foot of the Rockies for an especially exciting > month of Œlandlocked1 writing events. The week1s focus was > experimental writing in the objectivist lane, although many present > were clearly off-road. The Berrigan brothers gave a double-shot > kickoff reading at the Penny Lane cafe (see EPC listserv archives for > report). Tuesday night brought us Heller, Blau DuPlessis, and > Penburthy (w/ slides of Neidecker1s Œcalendar1 poems) opening for > Rakosi.
> The gnomic Karl Rakosi (spry at 90 & the high altitude)-- 3I1m going > to put my cap on to see whether it fits2-- evoked himself as, 3an > early lover of Yeats1 moonshine period,2 before twirling his > comico-satirical one-liners for us, 3tragic satchmo events,2 like so > many helium barbells. Poems which led us through a kind of > Nietzschean inferno, seen from the millenium1s, and a life1s, end:
> 3corporate man... a self-made man/ who loves his creator... sits by > the waters of time/ studying his odds.2 Rakosi1s refreshing mix of > wit and weight upped the tone for the week. During the next day1s > colloquium he spoke easily, of the Œobjectivists:1 3Jeez, they were > all jews!2 Zukovsky? 3He didn1t know how to ride a bicycle.2 > Reznikoff? 3He chirped away like a sparrow... it was impossible to > suspect that Reznikoff was not sincere.2 Oppen? 3We used to picnic > together.2
> Fortunately, little time was wasted on definitions of Œobjectivism.1
> The consensus seemed to be the lack of consensus, and a healthy > circulation of ideas-- from Hollo, Schelling, Blau DuPlessis, Heller, > Penburthy, to a bemused Rakosi: 3It1s a tough business.2 (We got > incidental gems such as Hollo1s paraphrase of the Olson Œfull > saturation job1-- 3quarrying one whatever/ no matter how abstruse/> till it lies limp.2) Some of the younger poets began to wonder if > Œobjectivist1 meant anything more or less than Œthe poets who call > themselves so.1 Niedecker1s presence was strong, and dissenting-- > scholar Jenny Penburthy reminded us of Niedecker1s marginal > relationship to Œobjectivism,1 highlighting her Œsurrealist1 > tendencies (as in 3New Goose Poems2) and engagement with 3poetry as > the folk tale of the mind.2 By the week1s end you couldn1t make it to > the bathroom or the canteen without getting caught in a crossfire of > lively, spin-off conversation.

> Workshops I attended by Schelling (3bio-regional poetics2), Notley > (3miming the mind2) and Oliver (3new poetry styles in the US, France > and Britain2) were unconventional and stimulating. On the trail with > Andrew Schelling1s class-- narrowleaf cottonwood, yucca in white bloom > feeding ants and moths, ladybugs, serviceberry (sour but bears like > Œem), rufous towhee, ponderosas1 bushy tufts, whose needles come in > fours-- stopped on a knoll to read 3Wintergreen Ridge,2 and discuss > Neidecker1s own kind of walk, blending humor with observation & > remembered books. Notley read from a new, long Œautomatic1 poem and > discussed the art of 3tracking the mind2 and dreaming as 3a form of > thought... the I that1s controlling, both watching and letting it > happen, is always there; it1s untruthful to leave it out.2 Oliver led > challenging discussion of many poems from the Talisman House New > (American) Poets anthology, such as Luoma1s 3apparently simple poems > that are actually quite layered.2 These were only a fraction of the > offerings; the week1s faculty also included-- in addition to Naropa > full-timers and the Œobjectivist1 suspects-- Wesley Tanner in the > printshop, Keith Abbot, Chris Baer and Laird Hunt on the prose end, > and the Œoutriders1 Olga Broumas, Maureen Owen, Eleni Sikelianos and > Harryette Mullen. Workshops were supplemented with one-on-one > Œinterviews.1 At the final colloquium, faculty were asked what, if > any, workshop experience had informed their own writing; to which,
> Jack Collom: 3I took a workshop, but I didn1t inhale.2
> There were readings and performances to packed houses every night
of > the week. Oliver on Paris: 3Black yarmulkes pass by me to Beth Din > Shops.2 He read movingly, beautiful poems dedicated to Gisèle > Celan-Lestrange. Sikelianos read her new, long-breath California > canto getting away with the word Œrubiginous.1 Schelling read spare > and haunted poems of the Rockies: 3do not despise this piece of > broken bone/ it1s a piece of Zebulon Pike1s forearm.2 Bye1s rendition > of the famous 3ballad of the bicycling dog2 had us in stitches. Owen, > at bat for the shortest-poem-with-the-longest-title, beat her own > average: WHAT YOU DO WHEN YOU CAN1T FORGET THE ONE YOU DON1T LOVE ANYMORE, > etc. 3I fell in love. I did it by myself. There are some > things/ you shouldn1t do alone.2 She also read from a one-poem > sequence: 3this is #5 and it1s the only one in the series.2 Notley > on Paris: 3Went to a restaurant, once more. Ate a duck. Guilt.2

> She read from Mysteries of Small Houses and from a new, long poem that > frightened us all, confessing, 3I1m too lazy to be anything/ I just > write.2 Hunt read from Thousands and Paris: A Complete Descriptive > Catalogue, giving us the famous picture of Prometheus, 3doing rigorous > calisthenics, completely naked, by open windows.2 Mullen delivered > rhyme riddles-- 3let1s mambo, and be frisky/ your reality check1s in > the escargot2-- and read her movie poem: 3so romantic are the patient > English.2 She reminded us that, 3we1s all prisoners of our/ own > natural anguish.2
> A highlight of the week was Notley1s Steve Carey talk: 3He has been > hurt in his youth-- the result is rampant poetry... you have to be > somehow ravaged by poetry.2 Carey, who 3gave good phone2 and > reportedly referred to tv sitcom episodes as Œworks1-- 3Don1t you know > this work?2 It was a shot of that tough, life-saving humor bred of > the cockroaches, thrift and crowded family conditions of the > Œseventies Berrigan household: 3Men who forge valiant prescriptions > become excellent fathers.2 We were treated to Carey readings-- 3Oh, > Mom, it is so beautiful2-- at once moving and hilarious by the > Berrigan entourage & other friends.
> Chris Baer, one of the 3rare breed that thinks poets and prose > writers can learn from one another,2 who spoke of rewriting as > 3skinning an animal and eating the bone,2 read his story 3The Humors,2 > with lines like, 3she has the eyes of a tormented squirrel2 or, 3he > was a paper torso on the firing range.2 > Beautiful broadsides-- this week, a poem by Duncan-- were rolling off
> the Kavayantraya (3poetry machine2) press, impeccably maintained by > Jennifer Asteris. The Berrigan bros., with Brandon Downing and > Jonathan Skinner, accompanied several students on a Œguerilla1 > reading-- where Eddie Berrigan gave a memorable rendition of the > 3Headless Baby Blues.2 Perhaps best of all was the flurry of > manuscripts, pamphlets, chapbooks and broadsides exchanged, talk > throughout the afternoon under trees along creeks into night1s > backyard parties, writing generated during workshops and eventually > shared-- and the immense quality and interest of the student writing, > as this year1s handsome, perfect-bound Twittering Machine evidences.
> Look for: Sherwin Bitsui, Jared Bland, Josepha Conrad, jeni olin, > Marcus Mennes, ish kundawala, Austin James, Justin James Veach... > among many, many others.
> The next week brought an entirely new wave of faculty-- including

> Bradford Morrow, Cole Swenson, Mei Mei Berssenbrugge, Peter Gizzi, > Elizabeth Willis, Julie Patton. I attended (two days of) > Berssenbrugge1s workshop. 3The character of person who makes the > rules shows in the work in a very mysterious way,2 she stated, > signalling a need to 3get away from the heroic materials of > modernism... back toward a more spontaneous response...2
> At the colloquium on 3Legacies and (Women Writer) Progenitors,2 Cole
> Swenson-- pointing out that most elementary-school teachers of her > generation were women (3women guided my hand around its first crude > letter forms2)-- mentioned the dominant role women poets play in > current incorporations and subversions, into Œsub-languages,1 of > scientific and mathematical language. Swenson defined poetic geometry > as 3negotiating a space between body and page,2 and evoked the > 3geometrical, pre-symbolic2 roots of writing.
> Berverly Dahlen brought Dickenson to the table: 3Nature is a haunted > house/ but art, a house that tries to be haunted.2 Anne Waldman > boldly stated: 3The artists in this secular world are lovers... Not > fucking everything like Zeus-- to create wonderful hybrids of elements > and animals-- but something like that in the realm of imagination.2 > Gizzi, reminding us 3poets think with their poems,2 cited Pound1s > dictum: 3if you want to know your period, edit.2 Willis referred to > Duncan1s 3Often I am permitted to return to a meadow,2 as a poem that > changed her life. As did Creeley1s look of shock when she confessed > she hadn1t (yet) read HD.
> Guest subverted her own Tribute by reading a piece she had written
--
> brandishing a 3white pen with cream in its nostrils2-- for the French > poet Anne-Marie Albiach, on the occasion of her sixtieth birthday last > year; this tribute to Albiach-- one of the century1s most important > Œexperimental1 women writers-- was touching and appropriate. Guest > spoke of a 3pull in the composition that is physical but > phantom-like,2 and of the writer1s need to feel this pull, between > herself and the poem being written... also of an 3essential > destructiveness2 that enters the poem. 3Writing that doesn1t take a > chance is not worth a tinner1s damn.2
> When asked about her reputation as an Œexperimental1 writer, Guest > countered: 3I think we should get rid of the word experimental.2
> Anne Waldman: At 2:10 pm on June 23, 1998, at Naropa, Barbara Guest > got rid of the word 3experimental.2 > Exciting events slated for the coming three weeks included workshops > with the likes of Ed Sanders, Kathy Kuehn and SPD1s Steve Dickison, > Sze, Hollo and Kai Nieminen on translation, a Lawrence Ferlinghetti > Tribute... Thanks to the hard work of coordinators Max Regan and > Julie Kizershot, Naropa proves itself, once again, a vital forum for > the interaction of Œouts1 and Œins,1 names Œnew1 and Œold,1 Œbig1 or > Œsmall,1 tendencies coastal and midland, east or west, traditional as > well as Œexperimental.1 Getting us, in Rakosi1s words, somewhere > close to 3the real real world.2

>
> --Jonathan Skinner (1/14/99)

↑ Index

46. Poetics List
conf. announcement
Fri 15 Jan 1999

Hi, if you wouldn't mind posting this to the poetics list....the anouncement notes an interest in the onging relationship between poetry and music and a number of poets are working in this area these days. many thanks. TS -----

---

CONFERENCE ANN0UNCEMENT/CALL FOR PAPERS

IAPSM-US (International Association for the Study of Popular Music, United States Branch) 1999 National Meeting.

WHEN: Sept. 30-Oct. 2, 1999

WHERE: Middle Tennessee State University (MTSU), Murfreesboro, TN

DON'T STOP TILL YOU GET ENOUGH: POPULAR MUSIC

The 1999 IASPM/U.S. conference welcomes papers on the cultural roles of music and musicians; the means by which music gets to its audiences; and the ways in which music is interpreted and used by listeners in a variety of contexts. In addition, we welcome disciplinary and interdisciplinary examinations of (among other topics):

* poetry/poetics and the influence of popular music
* various histories and traditions in popular music * institutions, politics, and popular music
* race and popular music
* the dominant discourses of popular music/popular music studies
* gender studies and its relation to popular music studies
* technology and new media

* authorship issues in popular music * performance theory and performance styles
* new ways of understanding both "popular" and "music"

GRAD STUDENT AWARDS: IASPM-US will offer three awards of $200 each to the three best papers presented by graduate students.

ABOUT THE LOCATION: Murfreesboro is located approximately 35 miles from Nashville. We will plan several panels, speakers, and recreational activites around music-making activities in the Nashville area.

Deadline for proposals: May 15, 1999

Please send all proposals to (submissions by e-mail are strongly encouraged):

Professor Thomas Swiss
Chair, Program Committee
e-mail: [redacted]
1514 Buresh Ave
Iowa City IA 52245

↑ Index

47. Elizabeth Fodaski

[redacted] Happiness

Fri 15 Jan 1999

SEGUE @ DOUBLE HAPPINESS
FEBRUARY, MARCH, APRIL, & MAY 1999 READINGS
SATURDAYS FROM 4:00 TO 6:00 PM
PLEASE TAKE CAREFUL NOTE OF THE TIME. READINGS BEGIN PUNCTUALLY.
DOUBLE HAPPINESS IS LOCATED AT 173 MOTT STREET, JUST SOUTH OF BROOME.
A 4$ CONTRIBUTION GOES TO THE READERS.

Please support our series.
Readings will begin promptly at 4. Doors will open at 3:30 for those who want to start drinking and schmoozing early.
Coordinators for this series are Dan Machlin, Laird Hunt, Brian Stefans, Andrew Levy, & Liz Fodaski.
Continuing support of this series is provided by the Segue Foundation.
Funding is made possible by support from the Literature Program of the New York State Council on the Arts.

Segue @ Double Happiness DOUBLE HAPPINESS
February & March 173 MOTT STREET
Saturdays @ 4PM [redacted]

FEBRUARY 6: MEI-MEI BERSSENBRUGGE, GENYA TUROVSKY Mei-mei Berssenbrugge is the author of Four Year Old Girl and Empathy, and of The Heat Bird and Random Possession, both American Book Award recipients. Her collaborations with artists include: Hiddenness and Sphericity, both with Richard Tuttle, and Endocrinology, with Kiki Smith, which has received an Asian American Book Award. Genya Turovsky was born in Kiev, in the former Soviet Union, and now lives and writes in New York. A poet and translator, she is currently working on some new translations from the Russian and on her first collection of poetry.

FEBRUARY 13: 3 FROM BUFFALO: MIKE KELLEHER, JONATHAN SKINNER, ELENI STECOPOULOS Mike Kelleher has published two chapbooks: The Necessary Elephant and Three Poems. He is currently completing his MA in poetics at Buffalo. Jonathan Skinner is the author of Political Cactus Poems (Periplum Editions). A selection of his translations from the Provencal is forthcoming from Heart Hammer. Eleni Stecopoulos’s work has appeared in Chain, Rampike and Kiosk. A Poetics PhD student at Buffalo, she's working on a dissertation in which poets supply the theory, religious fanatics the poetry, and literary theorists the fanaticism.

FEBRUARY 20: FIRST ANNUAL TRANSLATION EXTRAVAGANZA Poetry-in-translation/transformation/transit by David Cameron, Eleni Sikelianos, Sianne Ngai, Heather Ramsdell, Zhang Er, Duncan Dobblemann, Brian Kim Stefans, Laird Hunt, Garrett Kalleberg, Dan Machlin, plus other surprise guests.

FEBRUARY 27: ED FOSTER, STEVEN FARMER Ed Foster's most recent book is Boy in the Key of E (Goats & Compasses). He is the editor of the indispensable Talisman: a journal of contemporary poetry and poetics. Steven Farmer is the author of Coracle, Tone Ward, World of Shields and Standing Water. Recent work appears in Lyric &, Tripwire, Crayon and The Poetry Calendar for the Millennium (Sun & Moon). Born in San Diego, he has been in the Bay Area for the last 17 years.

MARCH 6: BOOK PARTY/PERFORMANCE FOR PAULINE OLIVEROS’ THE ROOTS OF THE MOMENT Pauline Oliveros is an internationally known composer, performance artist, theorist, and teacher who has taught and performed all over the world. She is the author of a previous book of essays, Software for People: Essays 1963-1980, and has released numerous CDs of her music. She is currently teaching at Mills College and Oberlin College, and will perform in a retrospective of her work at Carnegie Hall in March.

MARCH 13: BEN FRIEDLANDER, ROBERT KELLY Ben Friedlander, a true guerrilla intellectual now on leave from Chiapas, recently edited The Collected Prose of Charles Olson with Donald Allen. Meow Press will bring out his selected poems in 1999. Robert Kelly is the author of a few gigabytes of poetry and fiction, including most recently Red Actions (selected poems), Queen of Terrors (fiction), and The Time of Voice (poems, 1994-1996).

MARCH 20: JOHN GODFREY, TIM DAVIS John Godfrey, the insider's top pick for unsung pillar of N.Y. poetic conscience, is the author of several books, including Where the Weather Suits my Clothes, Dabble, and Midnight on Your Left. Tim Davis, whose poems are best experienced when fed directly into the pineal gland, is the author of The Analogy Guild and My Life In Politics: a history of N=A=R=R=A=T=I=V=E film. Hard Press is publishing his Dailies in 1999.

MARCH 27: MILES CHAMPION, ANDREA BRADY Miles Champion, besides performing Satie's oboe suites with a buzzsaw in London's choicest metros, is the author of Compositional Bonbons Placate, and the chapbook Sore Models. Presently residing in the U.K, Andrea Brady is the author of several chapbooks, including Of Sere Fold, Cranked Foil, and The White Wish. She is one of the best of the new (American) poets, and we want her back.

APRIL 3 RACHEL ZUCKER, MAGGIE Z Rachel Zucker was born in New York in the middle of a blizzard. She has worked as a photographer, day care teacher, and jeweler and currently teaches writing at NYU and Yale. Her photographs and poems have been published in Volt, 14 Hills, Bridges, and the Iowa Review. She is co-founder and editor of Boomerang! A contributor’s journal. Magdalena Zurawski plays guitar for the rock band The Sleeves. Her poetry has appeared in Crayon, The Germ, and Explosive. A former resident of Berlin, Germany, she presently resides in Brooklyn.

APRIL 10: DREW GARDNER, PRAGEETA SHARMA Drew Gardner’s work has appeared in the anthologies Primary Trouble, An Anthology of New (American) Poets, Writing from the New Coast, and The Gertrude Stein Awards. Recent magazine publications include Object + Torque, No Trees, Hambone, Talisman, and Lingo. He is a jazz drummer and vibraphone player. Prageeta Sharma has a book, Bliss To Fill (subpress books) due Spring '99, and has recent work in Combo, New Orleans Review, The Hat, and Shiny. She plays drums in the rock band The Sleeves.

APRIL 17: CHRIS DANIELS, LULJETA LLESHANAKU Chris Daniels is translating the great Portuguese poet, Fernando Pessoa. His translations will appear in four volumes from Exact Change. He will also be hosting a "Pessoa Salon" ? time and location to be announced ? to share his knowledge of and enthusiasm for Pessoa and Lusophone literature in general. Born in NYC, Daniels makes his home in Oakland, California. Luljeta Lleshanaku, born in Elbasan, Albania, began publishing her work in 1991 after the overthrow of the Stalinist regime. Her critically acclaimed books of poetry are The Sleepwalker’s Eyes (1993), Sunday Bells (1994), and Half-Cubism (1996), for which she won the Eurorilindja Award for Poetry. English translations of her work have appeared in Grand Street, Seneca Review, Fence, Modern Poetry in Translation, and other magazines.

APRIL 24: NICK PIOMBINO, TED PEARSON Nick Piomobino’s recent publications include work in Avec Sampler 2,Aporia, Close Listening (Oxford University Press), and his newest book, Light Street (Zasterle). He also has work on the Electronic Poetry Center at wings. Buffalo.edu/epc. Ted Pearson is the author of fourteen books of poetry, including Evidence, Planetary Gear, Acoustic Masks, and The Devil’s Aria. A seventh-generation Californian, he emigrated to the United States in 1988. He presently lives in Detroit where he teaches part-time at Wayne State University. This is his first reading in NYC in five years.

MAY 1: LESLIE SCALAPINO, MARTINE BELLEN Leslie Scalapino has two new books forthcoming, both from Wesleyan University Press: New Time and The Public World/Syntactically Impermanence (essays and poetry). The author of many books of poetry and critical essays, she is the editor and publisher of O Books in Oakland, California. Martine Bellen’s Tales of Murasaki & Other Poems (Sun & Moon Press) was a winner of the 1997 National Poetry Series. Her other collections include Places People Dare Not Enter and Ten Greek Poems. Bellen is an editor at Conjunctions and at Carroll & Graf Publishers.

MAY 8: MICHAEL GIZZI, SHERRY BRENNAN Michael Gizzi lives in Western Massachusetts where he publishes Hard Press books and edits the journal Lingo. His most recent books are No Both (Hard Press/The Figures, 1998) and Too Much Johnson (The Figures, 1999). Sherry Brennan lives in Centre Hall, PA. She has a chapbook, Taken, from primitive publications in D.C. She has published most recently in Chain, Tripwire, Mass Ave, Situation, No Roses Review and Nedge.

MAY 15: JEFF DERKSEN, ABIGAIL CHILD Jeff Derksen is a member of the Kootenay School of Writing in Vancouver and is currently finishing a Ph.D. in Calgary. He is the author of two books of poetry, Dwell and the award-winning Down Time, both from Talonbooks. Abigail Child is the author of Scatter Matrix, Mob, and A Motive for Mayhem. She is currently completing a new video, The Russian Chronicles, and preparing a manuscript of critical work.

MAY 22: RODRIGO TOSCANO, ANDREW LEVY Originally from San Diego, Rodrigo Toscano lives and works in San Francisco. He has a book, The Disparities, due out soon from Sun & Moon, and another forthcoming from Atelos Press. Andrew Levy's most recent books are Continuous Discontinuous, and Elephant Surveillance To Thought. New work is forthcoming in Conjunctions, CrossConnect, and Philly Talks. He is co-editor with Bob Harrison of CRAYON, and longstanding curator of the Segue sponsored reading series.

↑ Index

48. Poetics List

Notes to Poetry 49 (fwd)

Fri 15 Jan 1999

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 04 Jan 1999 11:51:03 -0500
From: Steve Evans <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Notes to Poetry 49

4-5 December 1998

AN OPEN LETTER: JAKOBSON'S METALANGUAGE
by Lytle Shaw

Dear Steve,

I notice that in David Lehman's new book, Hal Sirowitz, the author of_My Mother Said_ and _My Therapist Said_, gets included as a significant descendant of the New York School. This is strange and untrue. By chance I saw Sirowitz read lately and there was something quite funny and completely limited about his work. I've recently been interested in poetries that chart speech acts--and linguistic practices more broadly--within uneven power dynamics. In Sirowitz's case, the institutional frames of parent/child or therapist/patient relationships are numbingly obvious: enunciation gets contained within an overly literalized setting in which we watch a repertoire of more or less cliche, though at times comic, pathologies. But that more various relations to institutional frames have been a basis for some of the most interesting poetics of the last few years will be my way in, through the question of metalanguage, to a consideration of what has happened to poetics in the forty years since Roman Jakobson's excellent essay, "Linguistics and Poetics." For Jakobson, metalanguage shouldn't be understood only as a scientific tool; instead it "plays also an important role in our everyday language" (69). Now, in part because of him, this seems obvious. But for him there is no social moment to the question:

<c> "The sophomore was plucked." "But what is _plucked_" "_Plucked_ means the same as _flunked_." "And _flunked_?" "_To be flunked is to fail an exam._" "And what is _sophomore?_" persists the interrogator innocent of school vocabulary. "_A sophomore_ is (or means) a _second-year student_." All these equational sentences convey information merely about the lexical code of English;

their function is strictly metalingual. Any process of language learning, in particular child acquisition of the mother tongue, makes wide use of such metalingual operation. (69) <xc>

The forty year gap allows us to feel comfortable asserting, unlike Jakobson, that power inheres in the very form of most metalingual statements: the seeming lack of origin of their "correct" answers; their ability to switch on and off a set of social rules--are we talking to or about? To derail communication--or render it suddenly self-reflexive--is itself an important social act. Metalingual statements of the type Jakobson cites work to naturalize uneven power relations by placing them within secure, seemingly objective, categories--here between student and professor. Moreover, metalanguage's entrance into everyday language provides one of the most basic opportunities to chart the working of social-linguistic codes, what we would now call--in a vast, rough translation of linguistic insights toward the social sciences Jakobson couldn't help but pronounce unrigorous!--power codes. Metalingual statements have the unique ability to render palpable the _social frames_ of a speaking situation or more generally a situation of one's encounter with language. They render perceptible the linguistic basis of coded power relationships. Perhaps we are so comfortable asserting all of this that simply to assert it is no longer enough.

Of course, claiming that one of poetry's main functions is to explore metalanguage flies directly in the face of Jakobson--at least on the surface. He writes: Poetry and metalanguage ... are in diametrical opposition to each other: in metalanguage the sequence is used to build an equation, whereas in poetry the equation is used to build a sequence (71).

It's "build an equation" that is perhaps an overhasty summary of poetry's use of metalanguage and, in fact, of poetry's relation to sound, its would-be poeticness in Jakobson's most famous statements: "the poetic function projects the principle of equivalence from the axis of selection into the axis of combination [and] equivalence is promoted to the constitutive device of the sequence" (71). So to back up we could initially dispute the accuracy of the word "equation" for both poetry and metalanguage. Is equation (of sound, syllables, stress, etc.) in fact poetry's primary device? This view best describes (a) metrical and rhymed poetry generally (b) Russian poetry specifically--and _not_ advanced American poetry of the last 150 years. If phonetic equations are crucial for this later tradition, they are certainly not _the_ primary organizational feature of Whitman, Dickinson, the Objectivists, The New York Schoolers, The Language Writers.

I'd want to say that if we study phonetic equivalence as a device, its effects could be centrifugal as well as centripetal. Connections at a semantic level made through sound can project as well as collapse. They thrust us out into the world as much as they swing us back toward the poem.

Now back to poetry and metalanguage: when poetry deals with metalanguage it does not simply _build_ sequences through equations (this would be old-fashioned narrative poetry, or a poetry of unselfconscious definition) so much as foreground the paradigmatic components of such equations, render them perceptible--in its critical moment--as unnecessary and even destructive habit, and--in its utopian moment--as deformations of linguistic habit that open spaces for thought. This means that in a metalinguistic poetic line or stanza several potential members of a sequential subset coexist, and it is their coexistence that is the point. Simple example: (a) the figure of a normative syntax that gets called to mind through (b) its deformation. Coexistence is the point, then, not out of a naive desire for infinite possibility, but because it allows an energetic charging that can emerge only through a worn, maybe suspect, phrase or syntactic structure undergoing mutating invention.

What I want to suggest is that we can account for Jakobson's effects over the last forty years by charting how his interest in metalanguage gets (a) extended into poetry in ways he won't and (b) socialized in the form of inquiries into the power relationships that connect texts to their institutional and generic frames. To put it sweepingly, a social understanding of metalanguage and an acknowledgment of its relevance to poetry mark points at which Language writers begin to follow Foucault and not Jakobson, though of course only Jakobson could have provided this inventive, concretely formulated linguistic point. I'm emphatically not saying that a poetics of metalanguage is itself "subversive" or even new. Instead, the history I see is that poetry's relation to metalanguage first gets posed in Jakobson, then developed somewhat generally in early Language writing and now begins to take on new relevance as poets work out poetics that explicitly, and often humorously, involve the mostly literary institutional frames of the epic (Lisa Robertson), the fairy tale (Lyn Hejinian), the picaresque novel (Hejinian and Carla Harryman), the bildungsroman (Pamela Lu)--but also the encyclopedia and historiography (Barrett Watten). As I said earlier, exposure through metalanguage of the non-neutrality of linguistic and generic norms is no news: the point is more that the dream of neutrality that Jakobson poses--"merely about the lexical code"--is now so distant as to allow (yet to be fully described and theorized) tonal invention and institutional figure/grounding at the moments when texts appear "merely" to be pointing out facts, defining their terms. Because all good poetry poses ontological questions about its generic status (what is epic? etc.), the question is the kind of dialogue. It was as an attempt to articulate the force of one type of this dialogue that, in an article in _Poetics Journal_, I recently considered the works of Alex Cory, Ann Simon and Pamela Lu within the institutional framework of children's language acquisition. So a project like Ann Simon's _A Biography of My Vocabulary_, a poetry of meta-definition, is only the most literal version of this metalingual question. Three very different ones that come immediately to mind are:

* Lisa Robertson's occupation of epic in _Debbie: An Epic_. She puts it best: "With what suave domesticity Virgil strolls among the deep shelves of the paternal library. The metric pulse of the catalogue or calendar charts his walk. To narrate an origin as lapidary, as irrevocable, is only to have chosen with a styled authority from the ranked aisles of thought. For if Virgil has taught me anything, it's that authority is just a rhetoric or style which has asserted the phantom permanency of a context."

* Adam DeGraff's invention--in "Poetic Statement" (_Shark_ 1)--of a language of authority that modulates among the disembodied voice of the anthology editor, the classic poet ventriloquizing statements about himself that would be structurally impossible for him to make, and the earnest, poet-centered statement of intent.

<c> Shortly after I completed this poem, I suffered from recurring attacks of insanity, brought on by the feeling that my work was not appreciated at court. The age of chivalry has almost passed. I am trying to revive its spirit by this poem, written 'to fashion a noble person in virtuous and gentle discipline.' In this poem the simple worker leads the company to truth after he has finished his plowing. I advise people to do their work honestly instead of going on pilgrimages. Posterity will decide that this poem is far overrated by my contemporaries. It contains too much theory and too little action. Yet my patriotic odes mark me as the forerunner of the nationalist movement. <xc>

* Lyn Hejinian's _The Traveler and the Hill and the Hill_ in which, as each fairy tale goes bad, the spaces among its 3 part syllogistic structure open themselves up to an investigation of the social logic that would bind short illustrative narratives designed for children, so that knowledge for a child might suddenly become the knowledge of a child:

<c>
There was once a parson who was so arrogant that whenever he saw anyone driving toward him on the road he would roar from a distance, 'Off the road! Off the road! Here I come!'
He glanced at all the maidens with his fiery red eyes and cried, 're you going to pass by without offering to help me?'
But God's existence is doubtful and even if God does exist it hardly matters.
<xc>

One might be tempted to say that the consideration of metalanguage within institutional frames is less a constitutive feature of recent poetry than a basic transhistorical poetic concern: historicisms of all types can't help but claim a metalingual aspect, even a project, for the poets they "contextualize." Rather than pursue this I'll give one final example. Here's Langston Hughes in 1949 arguing against a common syntax of substantive/preposition that would make one's relation to coded black locations (Harlem, Railroad tracks, South Side) a matter of essential distance and voyeurism and thereby efface life and culture inside or across these lines:

<c>

Visitors to the Black Belt

You can talk about
Across the railroad tracks-
To me it's _here_
On this side of the tracks.

You can talk about
_Up_ in Harlem-
To me it's _here_
In Harlem

You can say
Jazz on the South Side
To me it's hell
On the South Side:

Kitchenettes
With no heat
And garbage
In the halls

Who're you, outsider?

Ask me who am I.

<xc>

So one function of poetry might be the organization of metalingual questions to create energizing displacements and reflexive commentary on normative operations of language. But I would of course be reluctant to call this _the_ poetic function. For metalanguage to be a fresh question it can't be just about a grid of normal language that gets continually deformed and overcharged (this myopia replays a version of the structuralists' emphasis on phonetic equation). This also valorizes a poetry of non-integrated small semantic units, say a string of puns at the level of the line-a practice which we are all familiar with by now. Instead, there must be interpenetration of scales: from clause to genre; from word to speaking situation, from phoneme to institutional frame.

=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-= Lytle Shaw is the co-editor of _Shark_. With the artist Emilie Clark he has published _The Rough Voice_ (Berkeley: Idiom, 1998) and _Flexagon_ (Berkeley: Ghos-ti-, 1998). His criticism appears in _Poetics Journal_ 10, _Tripwire_ 2, and in the pages of _Shark_. He can be e-mailed at <[redacted]>.

These Notes to Poetry are edited by Steve Evans and circulated among friends as they accumulate. The numbers in the heading refer not to consecutive issues but to the week in 1998 when the works were read and commented on. Installments exist in the following discrete series: 1, 2, 3, 5, 12, 14, 15, 17, 18, 22, 25, 34, 40, and 45. A collectively authored mid-year installment (26) also contains a table of contents for weeks 1-26. Corrections, criticism, contrary judgments, updates, and news from afar are always received with gratitude.

Roman Jakobson's "Linguistics and Poetics" is perhaps most readily available in _Language in Literature_, edited by Krystyna Pomorska and Stephen Rudy (Cambridge: Harvard-Belknap, 1987). My own brief remarks on the fortieth anniversary of this essay can be found in Notes to Poetry 45.

Contact and ordering information: Doubleday (for David Lehman's _The Last Avant-Garde: the Making of the New York School of Poets_) * Reality Street Editions (for _Debbie: An Epic_), 4 Howard Court, Peckham Rye, London SE15 3PH  Small Press Distribution [redacted] or [redacted] <http://www.spdbooks.org>  Bridge Street Books (Rod Smith) [redacted] <[redacted]>.

A word of welcome to L A G N I A P P E, Graham Foust and Benjamin Friedlander's new web-site devoted to reviews of poetry and poetics <http://writing.upenn.edu/~foust/lagniappe.html>.

And, finally, please consider contributing to the year-end installment of the Notes by sending, before 31 December, a brief list of the works that have occupied and interested you in 1998. As a rule, the more publication details--including prices and publisher's addresses for the more fugitive presses--the better. Commentaries of up to 1000 words are also welcome.

r i a t n m u
a t s u o o o s

↑ Index

49. James Sherry
Roof Books New Titles
Fri 15 Jan 1999

Thanks to all of you who have responded to Roof's offer on the Perelman and Robinson titles. I will get to them soon, but will be out of town for two weeks and will start to send out the books the first week of February. Sorry for the delay, but as Michael Gottlieb says "There's no such thing as an emergency in the poetry world." Keep those orders coming folks. Thanks again. James

↑ Index

50. Jessica Pompeii
Beyond Baroque
Fri 15 Jan 1999

Literary Arts Center requests that you send submissions to there small press archive and chap book collection. If you have questions please call, [redacted], or just mail your contributions to our library at:

Beyond Baroque Literary Arts
Attn.: Ellyn Maybe
681 Venice Blvd.
Venice, CA 90291

Also, we are calling for poems and short stories, for our web page. Send no more than five submissions to: [redacted]/

↑ Index

51. Burt Hatlen
Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Jan 1999 to 14 Jan 1999 (#1999-4)
Sat 16 Jan 1999

I would like to post this job notice on the poetics list. The successful candidate will assume significant editorial responsibilities with Sagetrieb.

Burt Hatlen

Anticipated opening for Assistant Professor of English, tenure track, with specialization in Postmodernist American Poetry, beginning September 1, 1999. Additional teaching strengths in American literature preferred. Experience in teaching writing preferred. The successful candidate will be expected to participate actively in the research, outreach, and editorial work of the National Poetry Foundation, which is an integral part of the English Department. Requirements for the Ph. D. must be completed by September, 1999. Send letter of application, full CV, and the names and contact information of at least three references to Chair, Search Committee, Postmodernist American Poetry, Room 304, 5752 Neville Hall, University of Maine, Orono, ME 04469-5752. Review of applications will begin on March 15, 1999 and will continue until the position is filled. The University of Maine is an equal opportunity employer. Position subject to administrative approval.

↑ Index

52. dbkk
"The Kink of Chris Komater"
Sat 16 Jan 1999

If you know the work of the photographer Chris Komater, who lives here in San Francisco, you'll want to visit his new site http://www.chriskomater.com which gives a retrospective of his whole career. He has a new show coming next month and I wrote a catalogue type essay for the exhibition which to my surprise is also featured on the website, so if you are not interested in the visual arts and only want to know my take on Komater's work, you can skip everything else and read it at http://www.chriskomater.com/projkinktext_left.html

What an announcement, but how to make it sound more inviting and exciting, you must check this one out for yourself! Thanks, everyone . . .

Kevin Killian

↑ Index

53. Elizabeth Treadwell
San Francisco-January 31-AVEC SAMPLER READING @ CANESSA
Sat 16 Jan 1999

A READING FOR AVEC SAMPLER #2

Andrew Joron
Christopher Reiner
Joe Ross
Elizabeth Treadwell

SUNDAY, JANUARY 31, 1999
3 PM
Canessa Gallery
708 Montgomery Street
(at Columbus Ave)
SAN FRANCISCO

[redacted]

$5

↑ Index

54. Elizabeth Treadwell
Los Angeles--January 29--Double Lucy @ Beyond Baroque
Sat 16 Jan 1999

DOUBLE LUCY BOOKS @ BEYOND BAROQUE

Friday, January 29, 1999

SARAH ANNE COX
YEDDA MORRISON
ELIZABETH TREADWELL

reading.

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

55. Lewis Warsh

(no subject)

Sat 16 Jan 1999

In an attempt to liberate our back list, UNITED ARTISTS BOOKS is offering all titles at a 50% discount. (Prices listed are the original ones -- just cut them in half.)

PERSONAL EFFECTS by Charlotte Carter. 93 pages, paperback. Cover by Angela Fremont. $6.00. "Like the music her characters listen to or sing, Charlotte Carter's writing may be lyrical or funky, or melancholic and bittersweet. She's always wry and economical. Her touch is delicate and tough, as she explores issues around race and sexuality, as she wittily cajoles the reader to notice how much bitter and more complicated the picture really is." Lynne Tillman

SOMETHING TO HOLD ON TO by Dennis Moritz. 126 pages, paperback. Cover by Pamela Lawton. $8.00.

Nine theater pieces by the Philadelphia-based playwright whose works have been performed at Joseph Papp Public Theater, BACA Downtown, Nuyorican Poet's Cafe and The St. Mark's Poetry Project.

"His plays are square in the face of society, which is where Dennis Moritz is, full of humor, elbows and mesmerizing love of language." Bob Holman

LIQUID AFFAIRS by Mitch Highfill. 64 pages, paperback. Cover by Mimi Fronczak. $7.00.

"When I read Mitch Highfill's poems my heart beats faster and my hands get all sweaty. It's the closest I've come to weightlessness since I was an astronaut." Todd Colby ECHOLALIA by George Tysh. 75 pages, paperback. Cover photograph by the author. $7.00.

"Writing at sexual pitch is my favorite ace of the impossible deals and George Tysh takes this gamble to its most serious extremes. This book arrives at the perfect angle of deviance." Clark Coolidge

BLUE MOSQUE by Anne Waldman. 64 pages, paperback. Cover by Louise Hamlin. $6.00.

"Anne Waldman is a poet orator, her body is an instrument for vocalization, her voice a trembling flame rising out of a strong body, her texts the accurate energetic fine notations of words with spoken music latent in mindful arrangement on the page." Allen Ginsberg

POLITICAL CONDITIONS / PHYSICAL STATE by Tom Savage. 60 pages, paperback. Cover by George Schneemsn.

"I've been reading Tom Savage's poems for a long time and have come to realize that I need each new book. He's a particularly honest and tough-minded poet; his voice is one I count on to register change--social and individual, to tell me what's going on. He's good--poet, person." Alice Notley

LOVE UNCUT: POEMS 1986. 85 pages, paperback. Cover by Louise Hamlin. $7.00.

"Bill Kushner's streetwise joie de vivre observations charm the hardest of macho hearts. Frank O'Hara would surely approve. These energetic "songs of a goof" are sheer gravy heaven." Anne Waldman

ALONG THE RAILS by Elio Schneeman. 76 pages, paperback. Cover by Pamela Lawton. $6.00.

"I like Elio Schneeman's first major collection very much. It reminds me of the big-city angularity of Edwin Denby, the graceful weightlessness of Paul Eluard, the childlike amazement of Joseph Ceravolo, and the mysterious displacements of Pierre Reverdy, but what is better is that it reminds me of Elio Schneeman." Ron Padgett

THE FAST by Hannah Weiner. 43 pages, paperback. Cover by Anne Tardos. $6.00.

"Hannah Weiner is the only clairvoyant I know, or that I've ever known. Her achievement--& it is a considerable one--lies in her having developed a specific literary form through which to convey her remarkable experiences." Jackson MacLow

LOVE MAKES THINKING DARK, by Barbara Henning. 85 pages, paperback. Cover by Miranda Maher. $7.00.

"Barbara Henning's deep and quirky knowledge of the human soul--especially woman's soul --brings us to a simultaneous exploration of the outside and the inside, Self and Other: the macrocosm and microcosm of the alchemist. She takes us far, and so skillfully that we are glad to let her do it." Diane di Prima POEMS FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY by Daniel Krakauer 86 pages, paperback. Cover by Dave Barkin. $7.00.

"Krakauer's stye is somewhere between automatic writing and crafted satire. What he is about is alertness and knowing. It is astonishing how contemporary his poetry continues to be, especially those poems written before 1960." John Godfrey

INFORMATION FROM THE SURFACE OF VENUS by Lewis Warsh. 93 pages, paperback. Cover by Louise Hamlin. $7.00.

"Lewis Warsh's thought is not circular, but spiral, in fact--and is, in this way, totally appropriate for the times. All propositions turn back on themsealves, the image of truth is uncertainty; and all that we know about a thing is limited to our knowledge of its limits. The sense that this isn't quite fair, or right, is what gives his thought, his work, its moral power, and humor." Fanny Howe

Also available:

JUDYISM by Jim Brodey. 86 pages. Cover by Martha Diamond. $10.00

THE CALIFORNIA PAPERS by Steve Carey. 52 pages. Cover by Peter Kanter. $8.00.

COLUMBUS SQUARE JOURNAL by William Corbett. Cover by Philip Guston. $7.00.

SMOKING IN THE TWILIGHT BAR by Barbara Henning. 88 pages. Cover by Hariette Hartigan. $7.00.

HEAD by Bill Kushner. 80 pages. Cover photograph by Bernadette Mayer. $8.00.

ONE AT A TIME by Gary Lenhart. 76 pages. Cover by Louise Hamlin. $7.00.

FOOL CONSCIOUSNESS by Liam O'Gallagher. 102 pages. $8.00.

CLEANING UP NEW YORK by Bob Rosenthal. 48 pages. Cover by Rochelle Kraut. $8.00.

SELECTED POEMS by Charlie Vermont. 64 pages. Cover by Alice Notley. $7.00.

THE MAHARAJAH'S SON by Lewis Warsh. 110 pages. Cover by Rosemary Mayer. $8.00.

You can order directly from UNITED ARTISTS:

UNITED ARTISTS BOOKS
112 Milton St., #3
Brooklyn, N.Y. 11222

or from [redacted]

↑ Index

56. Bob Grumman
Comprepoetica Annoucement
Sat 16 Jan 1999

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

In hopes of reviving Comprepoetica, which has been getting only a little more than one visit a day for some time, I've decided to start regularly using it to showcase reviews of poetry collections, and individual poems--as well as poetics/poetry-related essays of the sort already at my site. I hope to have the first one up sometime in February. So, if you have anything you want me to consider--about ANY KIND OF POETRY, e.mail it to me--with, please, a return address, so I can get back to you about it. Snail-mail submissions will be okay, too. My intention is have a series of weekly posts containing only posts I like (which will depend mainly on their skill at close-reading) or my own (since I doubt that I'll be getting submissions from too many others for a while). But I will also archive unused submissions--so long as I have space to do so. I plan to have two feedback files available, too--one for what I consider sensible & coherent responses to posted essays, and one for the rest. I hope also to start posting more of my own published essays by themselves--with essays from others, published or unpublished, if anyone will send them to me.

Bob Grumman

[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site

----------17DD6D06D97--

↑ Index

57. Douglas Oliver
Re : London readings
Mon 18 Jan 1999

I've been asked to post the following:

If you're in London in March, a couple of special readings lined up:

Sunday 14th March

Bob Cobbing
Nicholas Johnson

Monday 15th March

Helen Macdonald
Douglas Oliver
Iain Sinclair

7.30 p.m.

The Diorama
34 Osnasburgh Street
 London NW1

Two minutes from Great Portland Street underground stop. Phone 0[redacted].

Doug

↑ Index

58. Joe Ross
Re: San Diego-January 24-Beyond The Page READING
Mon 18 Jan 1999

Beyond The Page is proud to continue its monthly series of arts-related events with this reading. Beyond The Page is an independent arts group dedicated to the promotion of experimental and explorative work in contemporary arts.

READING

Beyond The Page

Stephen Cope
Standard Schaefer

Sunday, January 24th, 4 PM
The Fault Line Theater Space
3152 5th Ave.(5th and Spruce
San Diego,CA

Stephen Cope was born in Houston, but has spent most of his life in the San Francisco Bay Area. From 1989-1995, he was co-editor, with Christopher Funkhouser, of We Magazine/We Press, and in 1989 the two co-founded _Thelemenade_, a roving improvisational music, poetry, and arts collective that performed across the United States, releasing and/or producing three cassettes (_Awftershawk_, _Thelemonade Retrospective_, and _Antonio_), a compact disc (_We Magazine XIV_), and a video (_We Magazine XVIII_). The group included, at various times, such poets and/or musicians as Lee Ann Brown, Andy Clausen, Allen Ginsberg, Steven Taylor, and Katie Yates (among over 60 others). Cope currently lives in San Diego. _Versiones Vertiges_, his third chapbook, is forthcoming from Meow Press.

Standard Schaefer was born in Houston, Texas and currently teaches at East L.A. College as well as Otis College of Art and Design. He is the co-editor of Rhizome and a founding member of L.A. Books. His work has appeared in New American Writing, Ribot, Chain, Talisman, Columbia Poetry Review, Combo and several other magazines. He has chapbooks forthcoming from Texture and Minium. He is a recipient of a 1997 Gertrude Stein Award from Sun & Moon Press.

↑ Index

59. Herb Levy

Subtext Readings: Winter/Spring 1999 (Seattle)

Mon 18 Jan 1999

Say, I forgot to send this out earlier to the all-new sleek & svelte Poetics List, hope you out of towners can still get flights at the last minute for this week's readings. Laynie Browne curated through April; May is curated by Jeanne Heuving, summer into fall readings are being curated by Ezra Mark & Bryant Mason.

January 21: Norma Cole & Maya Sonnenberg

February 18: Rebecca Brown & Juliana Spahr

March 18: Kenji Yuda & Lee Ann Brown (with a workshop by Lee Ann Brown that weekend)

April 22 (please note this is the FOURTH Thursday of the month), in conjunction with the Rendezvous Reading Series: Alice Notley & Douglas Oliver

May 20: Harryette Mullen with local reader still to be determined

All readings at 7:30 pm in the back room of the Speakeasy in Seattle's Belltown district. Stop by & say hi.

Also, check out the Subtext Web site: <http://www.speakeasy.org/subtext/>. Hoo-hah.

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

60. Marcella Durand
Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Jan 1999 to 17 Jan 1999 (#1999-6)
Mon 18 Jan 1999

Nicole Brossard will not be reading at the Poetry Project this Wednesday. Hopefully, she'll be reading in April instead.

But Heather Fuller is still on! And with an exciting surprise co-reader to be announced. Wed at 8.

↑ Index

61. Pritchett,Patrick
FW: U. of Denver Reading Series
Mon 18 Jan 1999

> The University of Denver Spring Reading Series > begins with
>
> PATRICIA POWELL
> FRIDAY JANUARY 22
>
> a vibrant young novelist from the Caribbean > reading from her new book "The Pagoda" (Knopf, 1998)
>
> "a lush, historical work that opens a door onto an exotic imaginary world > where sex roles and racial tensions are tossed aside in the struggle to > belong" --Publishers' Weekly--
>
> "Lyrical, sensative, seductive and compassionat....she has established > herself as a major voice in Caribbean liteature." --World > Literature Today--
>
> She will give a public TALK at 4 PM > and a READING at 7:30
>
> in RENAISSANCE ROOM SOUTH, 2nd floor
> MARY REED BUILDING
> UNIVERSITY OF DENVER CAMPUS
>
> We hope you can come join us.
> Other events upcoming in the series include:
>
> STEVE MC CAFFERY FEBRUARY 5
> JOHN YAU MARCH 5
> JOAN RETALLACK APRIL 16

> If you have any questions or need more explicit directions, please do not hesitate to call Cole Swensen at [redacted]

↑ Index

62. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
New Creeley Book
Mon 18 Jan 1999

Announcing Robert Creeley's So There Info about the book is available at http://www.wwnorton.com/nd/fall98/Creeley.html or from the EPC home page
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/

↑ Index

63. Katie Degentesh
9X9 INDUSTRIES PRESENTS
Tue 19 Jan 1999

Melissa Stein, poet whose works have appeared in American Poetry Review, Faultline, The Chattahoochee Review, and Amelia, as well as several poetry anthologies. She has been awarded residency fellowships by the MacDowell Colony and the Villa Montalvo Center for the Arts, and is currently a freelance editor and writer in San Francisco.

and

Alix Olsen from New York City, member of the 1998 National Poetry Slam Champion Team from the NuYorican Poets Cafe, winner of the"In Our Own Write" Poetry Competition and the 1998 Barbara Deming Memorial Women in the Arts Award. She has been featured in over 50 different East Coast and Southern venues, including Harlem's Apollo Theater, La Resistencia Bookstore (TX), the NYC Gay and Lesbian Community Center, A Different Light Bookstore (NYC), and many colleges and universities.

Poetry reading and performance
9x9 Industries
Adobe Bookshop, Thursday, January 21, 1999
3166 16th St. (at Guerrero)
8 PM, FREE

9X9 INDUSTRIES http://www.paraffin.org/nine/
[redacted]

WE DON'T LIKE POEMS
THAT ARE LIKE POEMS!

↑ Index

64. Ron Silliman
Fred Hopkins has died
Tue 19 Jan 1999

http://www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/national/obit-hopkins.html

↑ Index

65. Robert Archambeau
SAMIZDAT #2/Free Offer
Tue 19 Jan 1999

SAMIZDAT #2 has just rolled steaming hot off the presses!

Included in this broadsheet issue:

Masha Zavialova -- an essay on the St.Petersburg poetry conference (a brief review had been posted on the list, now read a full report, along with translations of new experimental Russian poetry)

Michael Barrett -- the conclusion of his long series "Babylons," begun in Samzdat #1

Poems by Michael Anania, John Matthias, Catherine Kasper, Orlando Ricardo Menes, Jeffrey Roessner and Joe Francis Doer

Reviews of Janet Holmes and Stephanie Strickland

A LIMITED NUMBER OF COPIES ARE AVAILABLE FREE TO LIST MEMBERS

Just send me a message with the subject line "Samizdat"

Copies of issue #1 are still available for three dollars. One year subscriptions (three issues) are ten dollars, checks made out to me.

Robert Archambeau
Lake Forest College, Illinois/Lund University, Sweden

↑ Index

66. Burt Kimmelman
Re: New Creeley Book
Tue 19 Jan 1999

Another new Creeley book: "Day Book of a Virtual Poet" available from Spuyten Duyvil (http://www.freeyellow.com/members/spuytenduyvil/), just out.

↑ Index

67. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Tue 19 Jan 1999

 Man starting Christian tattoo group

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) - Randy Mastre is a tattoo artist of Christian themes. He inks Jesus into his customers. His tattooed Biblical inscriptions and portraits of Christ provide startling contrast to more typical flaming skulls and "Born to Raise Hell" markings adorning the leather-clad bikers he rubs elbows with at national tattoo conventions. It was at one of those convention that he met the Rev. Daniel Ostrowski, a born-again Christian and Word of Faith pastor who runs a tattoo parlor in Wassau, Wis. Last year, the two decided to unite other Christian tattooers. Since then, almost 100 tattoo parlors across the nation have heard the call of the Christian Tattoo Association. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2558085777-4dc

↑ Index

68. Burt Kimmelman
Job Opening (see description way below)
Wed 20 Jan 1999

From: MX%"[redacted]" 19-JAN-1999 17:41:55.43
To: MX%"[redacted]"
CC:
Subj: Job Opening

Tue, 19 Jan 1999 17:41:53 EST
mail-gw2.njit.edu (8.8.7/8.8.7) with ESMTP id RAA01195 for <[redacted]>; Tue, 19 Jan 1999 17:47:33 -0500
Tue, 19 Jan 1999 17:41:51 -0500 (EST)
Date: Tue, 19 Jan 1999 17:41:51 -0500 (EST)
To: [redacted]
From: "Burt J. Kimmelman (14979)" <[redacted]>
Subject: Job Opening

Date: 9 Jan 1999 17:41:50 -0500
Lines: 6

M 19189 Burt J. Kimmelman (Burt,14979) 1/19/99 5:41 PM 6 lines

TO: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" Subject: Job Opening

A search is underway to fill the following tenure-track position.

Assistant Professor of Professional and Technical Communication (PTC); requires PhD in English, Communication, or Rhetoric; record of publications in field with potential to achieve national reputation in field. Description: Assistant Professor in Dept. of Humanities and Social Sciences at New Jersey Institute of Technology; teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in PTC, pursuing scholarly research, and contributing to goals of department and university.

Skills: Effective teacher, productive scholar, collegial member of faculty. Possible areas of specialization might include health care informatics, environmental rhetoric, hypertext and hypermedia. Must be internet-proficient. ..

↑ Index

69. lee ann brown
NYC SUBLET
Wed 20 Jan 1999

NYC SUBLET:

Poet/Listers: I'm looking for NYC subletter Jan 29-March 31
(2 months)
$700 per month, Central Downtown location, 1 bedroom.
Call me ASAP if you're interested.

Lee Ann Brown
[redacted]

Z Y X W V U T S R Q P O N M L K J I H G F E D C B A

Lee Ann Brown
Tender Buttons
PO Box 13, Cooper Station
New York, NY 10276

[redacted]

↑ Index

70. lee ann brown
Barbara Guest receives Frost Medal
Wed 20 Jan 1999

Barbara Guest has been awarded the Frost Medal for Distinguished Lifetime Achievement by the Poetry Society of America.

She will be delivering the Frost Lecture at the Celeste Bartos Forum,
New York City Public Library (Main Branch)
6pm, Friday April 23, 1999.

Admission $12/ $8 PSA members and Friends of Public Library
Mark your calenders!

The medal has been given in the past to the like of Gwendolyn Brooks, John Ashbery, Marianne Moore, Robert Frost, Edgar Lee Masters, Wallace Stevens and other luminaries. For more information call Poetry Society of America at [redacted].

Z Y X W V U T S R Q P O N M L K J I H G F E D C B A

Lee Ann Brown
Tender Buttons
PO Box 13, Cooper Station
New York, NY 10276

[redacted]

↑ Index

71. Hank Lazer

Beach, announcement & discount

Wed 20 Jan 1999

Announcing the Inaugural Volume in the New Series Modern and Contemporary Poetics, edited by Charles Bernstein and Hank Lazer

Artifice and Indeterminacy: An Anthology of New Poetics

Edited by Christopher Beach

This volume brings together the most important writings on contemporary poetics by poets and critics who have shaped and defined the contemporary literary avant-garde. Beach gathers the strongest and most representative writings of the past two decades and shows more clearly than ever before the depth and breadth of contemporary American poetics. Collectively, these essays break with conventional interpretive frameworks and traditional generic boundaries of poetry to give fresh voice to the poetics of our time. Neither dismissive of the aesthetic value(s) of poetry, nor reluctant to articulate the ways in which aesthetic evaluation is complicated by the mediating influences of history, culture, class, gender, race, and academic status, the writers presented in this anthology celebrate the "artifice" of the poetic text while also accepting as a given the "indeterminacy" of its inception and reception. Individual pieces range in style and approach from theoretical writings to discussions of individual poets such as Emily Dickinson, Louis Zukofsky, and Bob Kaufman. The authors consider such critical issues as gender and the possibilities of a "feminist poetics," the textual politics of race and class, and the broader implications of an avant-garde practice.

CONTENTS

Preface

Section 1: Form/Syntax/Speech
1. Artifice of Absorption, Charles Bernstein
2. Parataxis and Narrative: The New Sentence in Theory and Practice, Bob Perelman
3. Total Syntax: The Work in the World, Barrett Watten
4. "Skewed by Design": From Act to Speech Act in Language Writing, Michael Davidson
5. The Changing Face of Common Intercourse: Talk Poetry, Talk Show, and the Scene of Writing, Marjorie Perloff

Section 2: Pattern/Experience/Song
6. What it means to be avant-garde, David Antin
7. Pattern -- and the "Simulacral," Leslie Scalapino
8. Strangeness, Lyn Hejinian
9. Come Shadow Come and Pick This Shadow Up, John Taggart

Section 3: Institutions and Ideology
10. The Boundaries of Poetry, James Sherry
11. The Political Economy of Poetry, Ron Silliman
12. Writing as a General Economy, Steve McCaffery
13. The Politics of Form and Poetry's Other Subjects: Reading Contemporary American Poetry, Hank Lazer
14. On Edge, Nathaniel Mackey
15. "Unmeaning Jargon"/Uncanonized Beatitude: Bob Kaufman, Poet, Maria Damon

Section 4: Poetics and Gender
16. Feminist Poetics and the Meaning of Clarity, Rae Armantrout
17. The Pink Guitar, Rachel Blau DuPlessis
18. These Flames and Generosities of the Heart: Emily Dickinson and the Illogic of Sumptuary Values, Susan Howe

392 pages

ISBN 0-8173-0946-2
$44.95 unjacketed cloth

ISBN 0-8173-0954-3
$19.95 paper

SPECIAL OFFER TO POETICS LISTSERV

20% DISCOUNT WHEN YOU MENTION THAT YOU ARE ON THE POETICS LISTSERV

OFFER EXPIRES 1 March 1999

To order contact Michelle Sellers:

E-mail [redacted]
Phone [redacted]
Fax [redacted] or mail to:

The University of Alabama Press
Marketing Department
Box 870380
Tuscaloosa, AL 35487-0380

Attn: Michelle Sellers

www.uapress.ua.edu

Beach, cloth discounted price $35.96
Beach, paper discounted price $15.96

Subtotal _____
Illinois residents add 8.75% sales tax _____ USA orders: add $3.50 postage for the first book and $.75 for each additional book _____
Canada residents add 7% sales tax _____ International orders: add $4.00 postage for the first book and $1.00 for each additional book _____

Enclosed as payment in full _____

(Make checks payable to The University of Alabama Press) Bill my:
_____Visa _____MasterCard

Account number _____

Daytime phone_____

Expiration date _____

Full name_____

Signature _____

Address_____

City _____

State_____ Zip _____

Michelle Sellers
Marketing Manager
University of Alabama Press
[redacted]

↑ Index

72. Brian N Clements
Firewheel Chapbook Competition
Wed 20 Jan 1999

The deadline for the second annual Firewheel Chapbook Competition is Feb. 28, 1999. The competition is open to all genres, including cross-genre and experimental writing. The winning manuscript in 1998 was a collection of poems entitled "The Future Called Something O'Clock" by Daniel Luevano of Lubbock, TX.

Manuscripts of up to 20 pages are eligible, and there is a $10 entry fee. ALL entry fees in the competition go towards the publication of the competition winner and of other Firewheel titles, including the anthology series _Best Texas Writing_ and Joe Ahearn's forthcoming chapbook (untitled).

Send entries and SASE or email address to Firewheel Editions, 1133 Melissa Ln., Garland, TSX 75040. Questions? Send them to [redacted]

~~~
~~~

Correspondence to:

Samizdat
14 Campus Circle
Lake Forest, IL 60045

SAMIZDAT #3 will be out this spring, with a selection of new European work in translation.

Robert Archambeau

↑ Index

74. Herb Levy
Catriona Strang/Francois Houle CD & Vancouver performance
Thu 21 Jan 1999

Hi all,

Announcing the publication of The Clamourous Alphabet, a CD by poet Catriona Strang and composer/clarinetist Francois Houle. The nearly one-hour long disk presents solos and duets by these two Vancouver artists.

On January 29, 1999, Houle & Strang will be performing with two jazz groups (Francois in a trio with bassist Chris Tatty & percussionist Dylan van der Schyff; and guitarist Ken Aldtraff's trio with Brian Harding trombone & drummer Nick Gaffaney) @ Performance Works, Granville Island, VANCOUVER, B.C., 8 pm, $15/12. CDs will be available for sale at the performance.

The disk is also available by mail to Poeticsa list members for $14, including postage or any two Periplum disks (including two copies of Clamourous Alphabet) for $25. Please send checks to Periplum, P O Box 95678, Seattle, WA 98145 USA. The Clamourous Alphabet CD will be available in stores and through SPD for $16.95.

Other Periplum discs include:

Suspended Music - Deep Listening Band/Long String Instrument; works by Pauline Oliveros & Ellen Fullman. inventor of the 100-foot long Long String Instrument

Burning Water - Martin Bartlett; three interactive computer pieces (with Peter Hannan, George Lewis, & Frances-Marie Uitti) & a solo by Bartlett using homebrew & early Buchla modules

Catacombs of Yucatan - Dan Senn; compositions & improvisations for homemade electro-acoustic instruments, with a horspiel based on oral history of a 1930s dance hall in Minnesota

Archipelago - LAND; collaborative dark ambient/improv band with Jeff Greinke, Lesli Dalaba, Dennis Rea & others

The following is taken from the pr for the January 29th performance:

Poet Catriona Strang and clarinetist Franois Houle have been working together for many years on collaborations that explore the complex and sometimes antagonistic relationship between music and language; their combinations of words and sound weave a richly bracing aural terrain. They have performed together across North America and in England at such festivals as the "Recovery of the Public World Festival" in honour of poet Robin Blaser and the Tic-Toc festival of New Music. They have recorded for the BBC, and their new CD, "The Clamourous Alphabet", is available now on the Periplum label.

The product of many years of intense collaboration on everything from composition to diaper changing, "The Clamourous Alphabet" is an amorphous work that inhabits and interrogates systems of notation, both linguistic and musical. It is not words set to music, or music with text, but a piece that weaves between and beyond musical and linguistic terrains, always shifting, never predictable.

Catriona Strang is the author of Steep, Low Fancy, Familiar, and TEM, and a scout for the poetry magazine Raddle Moon. Her compact, textured poetry has appeared in numerous magazines and anthologies, including The Gertrude Stein Awards for Innovative Poetry (Sun and Moon) and Out of Anywhere: Linguistically Innovative Writing by Women (Reality Street Editions). In addition to working on "The Clamourous Alphabet" with Franois and caring for their daughter Nina, she is currently writing a song cycle with composer Jacqui Leggatt.

Franois Houle is a noted performer on the crest of new directions in the improvisational world; familiar with the classical vocabulary as well as the worlds of jazz and contemporary music, he pairs the intensity and urgency of free jazz with complex compositional processes to create subtle, innovative, and passionate music. He has collaborated on numerous projects with some of the world's finest improvisers, including Marilyn Crispell, Jolle Landre, Georg Graewe, Dylan van der Schyff, Peggy Lee, Tony Wilson, Dave Douglas, Evan Parker, Myra Melford, Carlos Zingaro, Phil Haynes, Mark Dresser, Lisle Ellis, and Paul Plimley.

Herb Levy

↑ Index

75. Safdie Joseph
SEATTLE SUBLET
Thu 21 Jan 1999

Didn't know this was allowed under the new rules, but .. .
SEATTLE SUBLET:
Poet/Listers: I'm looking for Seattle subletter August 5-September 16 (6 weeks) (no rain) $700 (or so) total, West Seattle home, 3 bedrooms.
Call me (not ASAP) if you're interested.
Joe Safdie
[redacted]

↑ Index

76. George Bowering
Re: Other
Tue 20 Jan 1998

I have a copy of this anthology at last, the new British and irish poets, a kind of Allen anthology of those ginks over there, lots of them, of course on the Buffnet. Peter Quartermain, he of incredible energy, it seems, and Richard caddel the editors. A nice thick book from Wesleyan, who have turned into a brain-filled publisher of late.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

77. Jessica Pompeii
I'll trade ya maybe.
Thu 21 Jan 1999

I live in Santa Monica. And need to get the fuck out of here. But still keep working. Anyone with a Mac, preferably not in LALA, want to trade for a while? Must like 3 cats. 1 bedroom. New YOrk? Just thought I would fly fish that one out there. Maybe a month or something??????????????
Bali?
thanks,
Jessica

↑ Index

78. Don Byrd
Paul Metcalf
Thu 21 Jan 1999

Paul Metcalf died today (1-21-99). Paul was born on the day and year of the Russian Revolution (November 7, 1917). He was an actor, a school-bus driver, and a real estate broker. He was the author of twenty-four books, most of them in a genre that he invented. His best known books are _Genoa_ (1965), _Patagoni_ (1971), _Appalache_ (1976), and _The Middle Passage_ (1976). Twenty-two of the books are published in the three-volume _Collected Works_ (Coffee House Press, 1996, 1997, 1998).

The dolphin lives cleanly
Because it is said
The dolphin
Eats only darkness
And rain that falls on the sea.
--Paul Metcalf

↑ Index

79. Poetics List
TELEPOETICS VANCOUVER
Fri 22 Jan 1999

I had to re-format this message a bit; inquiries should be directed to CL Hamshaw at the address below. Chris

---------- Forwarded message ----------

Date: Thu, 21 Jan 1999 18:08:10 -0800
From: CL Hamshaw <[redacted]>
To: [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted]
Subject: TELEPOETICS VANCOUVER

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
DATE: Sunday, January 31st
PLACE: Liliget Feasthouse,
1724 Davie Street
Vancouver, BC
TIME: 12pm -3pm
COST: By Donation (proceeds to the Native Youth Mentorship Program)

TELEPOETICS ©

a virtual poetry reading between First Nations writers in Vancouver and The U'mista Cultural Centre in Alert Bay

Featuring...
David Campbell
Mahara Albrecht
Marilyn Dumont
Vanessa Engel
and other Native youths.

What is Telepoetics©?

It's a simple concept. People gather in two distant places for a shared poetry performance. Computer, Internet, and videophone technologies link the venues in real time. People see and hear each other, directly engaging each other's cultures without any intervention by mass media. Their four walls are thousands of miles apart but they form a common venue in the moment. So while many people come to these live events for the poetry, they go home with a little bit of the distant culture they witnessed.

This event is produced with the co-operation of the Native Youth Mentorship Program and the Edgewise ElectroLit Centre. Supported by Canada Council, BC Arts Council and the City of Vancouver.

For more information contact Carol Hamshaw at [redacted], [redacted] or visit our website at http://www.edgewisecafe.org

--
Carol L. Hamshaw
Administrator
Edgewise ElectroLit Centre
http://www.edgewisecafe.org

↑ Index

80. Ron Silliman
John Frederick Nims
Fri 22 Jan 1999

Seems like I've been posting obits a lot lately. Now it's John Frederick Nims:

http://www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/national/obit-jnims.html

↑ Index

81. Lawrence Upton.
Re: Other
Fri 22 Jan 1999

-----Original Message-----
From: George Bowering <[redacted]>
Date: 20 January 1998 08:32
Subject: Re: Other

|I have a copy of this anthology at last, the new British and irish poets, a |kind of Allen anthology of those ginks over there, lots of them, of course |on the Buffnet. Peter Quartermain, he of incredible energy, it seems, and |Richard caddel the editors. A nice thick book from Wesleyan, who have |turned into a brain-filled publisher of late.

And in case anyone over there is going to be over here on 29th Jan 99, us ginks are going launch it at the third sub voicive colloquium - Mr Caddel will be speaking amongst others - details at the conference section of epc

L

THIRD SUB VOICIVE COLLOQUIUM 29th January 1999
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/conferences/

"house" a visual text by lawrence upton.
handbound with acrylic painted cardstock covers.
$3.00 Canadian ISBN: 1-894174-08-9
published by housepress ([redacted])

↑ Index

82. Lawrence Upton.
(no subject)
Fri 22 Jan 1999

13th January 1999. Canadian Peter Jaeger helped SVP in London kick off its winter/spring season, reading a substantial amount of recent work to a reasonably-sized audience on a less than pleasant germ-laden London winter evening . Your correspondent, attempting to chair, was high on the symptoms of a heavy cold and the effects of anti-symptom substances; so his memory is more than flawed.

However, having been asked to, I can make some observations. Firstly, of the wide range of procedures and forms that Jaeger exhibited, and all apparently from the same writing period - seeking to appropriately match form and procedure to material; and also, whatever procedures were applied and forms developed, the appropriation of linguistic material from his / our environment and its reuse, both towards the making of the texts he uttered and towards exposing the procedures and assumptions of that material in its original context, and the creative clash of the two. I hope that's clear enough - I still have the cold.

Secondly, or is it thirdly, or higher, I was impressed with his ability to modulate tempo and tone of voice according to the demands of the texts so that each piece had its own shape and pace and tone, while the different registers of the combining fragments and the fragmenting registers went flying by in their own spaces at their own pace. Clear reading, confident reading, strong and appropriate.

I became aware of Peter's work first through his visually-oriented texts. He didn't perform any of those on 13th, but one can't have everything. Yet, in a way, we did, because Writers Forum launched two publications by Peter Jaeger, both visually very exciting: BLUE HERO ISBN 0 86162 849 7 BIBLIODOPPLER ISBN 0 86162 858 6 I look forward to hearing them performed, in person or in recording, at some future date. There are copies in North America, with Peter, and more are on their way. Or else order from New River Project, 89a Petherton Road, London N5 2QT Each booklet costs £2.00 + postage which of course varies with where you are. Sterling only, I'm afraid.

NB SVP magazine will be publishing a batch of work by Peter Jaeger - this was deferred from 13th Jan due to the bugs. Likely date of publication of 9th Feb, which will be SVP 1999 # 3. An announcement will be posted, List Willing. And Peter also features in WORD SCORE UTTERANCE CHOREOGRAPHY edited by Cobbing and Upton and also published by WF, last year Send enquiries regarding the 3 WF books to NRP with sae / irc, not me please...

L

THIRD SUB VOICIVE COLLOQUIUM 29th January 1999
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/conferences/

"house" a visual text by lawrence upton.
handbound with acrylic painted cardstock covers.
$3.00 Canadian ISBN: 1-894174-08-9
published by housepress ([redacted])

↑ Index

83. Poetry Project
readings at the Poetry Project
Fri 22 Jan 1999

This week at the Poetry Project:

Monday, Jan. 25, 8 pm

Nava Fader & David Mills

Wednesday, Jan. 27, 8 pm

Cole Swenson & Linh Dinh

Friday, Jan. 29th, 10:30 pm

Fall Workshop Readings
Workshop Leaders: Frank Lima, Maureen Owen, & Stephen Rodefer

Admission: $7, $4 for students, free for members.

UPCOMING:

On Saturday, Feb. 6th at 1 pm

A celebration of the publication of Word Virus: The William S. Burroughs Reader with readings by Bruce Andrews, Penny Arcade, Barbara Barg, Jim Carroll, Larry Clark, Todd Colby, Anne Douglas, Maggie Estep, Ed Friedman, John Giorno, Brad Gooch, James Grauerholz, Richard Hell, Lenny Kaye, Jackson Mac Low, Taylor Mead, Bob Mould, Eileen Myles, Ron Padgett, Wanda Phipps, Barney Rosset, Ira Silverberg, Lynne Tillman, Edwin Torres, Paul Violi, Anne Waldman, John Yau, and many others!

Call [redacted] for more information. Volunteers welcome.

↑ Index

84. david bromige
Our own Rachel
Fri 22 Jan 1999

Listmates, let us delight in the news that Rachel Loden's book, HOTEL IMPERIUM, is a winner in the Contemporary Poetry Series competition! It will be published this year by the University of Georgia Press. Cogratulations, Rachel! David Bromige

↑ Index

85. Poetry Project
Laserprinter
Fri 22 Jan 1999

To in-need literary organizations/presses:

The Poetry Project has an Apple Laserwriter NT to donate.

It needs some fixing--one of the toner gears or the "face-down delivery system" needs replacement. But otherwise, it's been a very good & loyal printer.

If you pick it up from our office (in St. Mark's Church, 2nd Ave & 10th St.), it's yours.

Call [redacted] if it is to be so.

↑ Index

86. Karen McKevitt
Last Call for Submissions
Fri 22 Jan 1999

Fourteen Hills: The SFSU Review is accepting submissions until February 1. Several of our contributors have won O. Henry Awards as well as been published in Best American Poetry, Best American Short Stories, Best American Gay Fiction, and been nominated for Pushcart Prizes.
Please send one piece of prose (3 if short) or up to 5 poems to:
Linda Jarkesy
Editor-in-Chief
Fourteen Hills
Creative Writing Dept
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave
San Francisco, CA 94132

We do not read email submissions. Please include a SASE and phone number or email address.

Karen McKevitt

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

87. acgold01
20C Lit. Conference Chairs
Fri 22 Jan 1999

I'm looking for folks to chair various 20C. American (and one Irish) poetry panels at the 20C. Literature Conference here in Louisville Feb. 25-27--an event that a number of you on the list have attended before and are, I'm pleased to see, attending again in some cases this year. Guest speakers / readers this year are Robert Creeley, Jane Marcus, Marilyn Nelson and Steve Weisenburger (pomo fiction scholar). People coming as "regular" panelists include Barrett Watten, Margy Sloan, Alaric Sumner, Lynn Keller. If you're interested, drop me an e-note and let me know your interests so that I can adapt expertise to panel topic as much as possible.

My other address would work best: [redacted]

Oh yeah, and you get to come to a good party on the saturday night.

Alan Golding

↑ Index

88. charles alexander
POG readings
Fri 22 Jan 1999

One reading last night, too late, but I'll mention it anyway:

Charles Alexander at Univ. of Arizona Extended University reception 6 pm Jan. 21 at St. Phillips in the Hills Church, NE corner Campbell & River Tucson, Arizona and upcoming POG readings/presentations in the Poets & Artists Series

Jan. 23
7pm
dinnerware artists' cooperative 135 E. Congress St., Tucson
JACK FOLEY & ADELLE FOLEY

Feb. 6
7pm
Las Artes Studio
South Tucson
Norman Fischer & Maurice Grossman
(call chax press at [redacted] for studio address & directions to get there)

Feb. 13
7pm dinnerware
135 E. Congress St., Tucson
ERICA HUNT
& a Tucson poet to be named later

More readings to come in March, featuring Maggie Jaffe, Juan Felipe Herrera, Peter Ganick, Sheila Murphy, David Shapiro, and more. And in April featuring Dan Featherston, Rodrigo Toscano, and Hung Q. Tu. I'll post details on those later.

come to tucson if you can call chax press, [redacted], for more information on these events

↑ Index

89. Peter Quartermain
Re: Paul Metcalf
Fri 22 Jan 1999

This is thoroughly dismaying news. I'd say that Metcalf is (like Ronald Johnson) one of the most severly under-read inventors of our time / language / thought / art / seeing. I guess I feel more than a little guilty that I spent so ;little time furthering his work. Oh how I wish otherwise. Damn damn damn. And who will notice, outside this list? Hardly anyone, I'm afeard. But yes, as Don Byrd reminds us, there are (thank what goodness there might be) the three volumes of the collected works. We should go (re)read them..

Peter

At 10:31 PM 1/21/99 -0500, Don Byrd wrote: > Paul Metcalf died today (1-21-99). Paul was born on the day and year of >the Russian Revolution (November 7, 1917). He was an actor, a school-bus driver, >and a real estate broker. He was the author of twenty-four books, most of them >in a genre that he invented. His best known books are _Genoa_ (1965), >_Patagoni_ (1971), _Appalache_ (1976), and _The Middle Passage_ (1976).
>Twenty-two of the books are published in the three-volume _Collected Works_ >(Coffee House Press, 1996, 1997, 1998).
>
> The dolphin lives cleanly
> Because it is said

> The dolphin
> Eats only darkness
> And rain that falls on the sea.
> --Paul Metcalf
>

+ + + +

flim: a free page is always scanning the neighbordhood looking for submissions. Any original piece of writing (in paragraphs, not verse) from 50-600 words will be considered, the quirkier the better. Previous issues have included jokes, recipes, prose poems, reviews, parodies, rewritings of older texts, randomly splayed bits of punctuation, and translations of articles from previous issues. flim is edited by Chris Piuma [[redacted]]. It is available in both print and online editions.

--
Chris [Steve] Piuma, etc. http://www.flim.com
"Wait, nevermind. They want someone who uses WordPerfect 5.1, not Word."

↑ Index

91. BETSY ANDREWS questions for prurient interests
Sat 23 Jan 1999

Dear Listees:

I'm writing an article for Salon Magazine on graduate students and masturbation, basically exploring a casual theory about the strong relationship between grad studies and self pleasuring.

I've gathered many touching comments thus far. I'm interested in reaching out to as many informants as possible. I'd use first names only. I'm looking for people who are currently grad students, are recently finished grad school or are now profs.

If you are willing to answer a few interesting questions in whatever manner you desire, please backchannel a message to me and let me know, and I will email questions to you.

Thanks in advance, Betsy Andrews

↑ Index

92. A. Jenn Sondheim
ANNOUNCEMENTS: TWO POETRY LISTS OF INTEREST TO YOU
Sat 23 Jan 1999

Hi -

I'm writing to suggest that there are two excellent lists for presentation and discussion of poetry, since Poetics will remain by and large a modera- ted list for announcements. Both lists have a number of Poetics subscrib- ers already.

Fiction-of-philosophy is an unmoderated e-mail list for writing - most of which is poetry or poetics. There is some discussion as well. We are inviting all of you to sub to it; it will remain unmoderated and open to any literatures. To sub, write to [redacted] and say in the body of the email, subscribe fop-l <firstname> <lastname>

That's all (fill in the names without the carets).

There is also available: SUBSUBPOETICS an e-mail discussion list for news, games, and conversation about poetry

Point yourself to http://subsubpoetics.listbot.com or if you can't have java and cookies send a note to [redacted]

Thank you!

(Alan Sondheim)

↑ Index

93. Poetics List
note to re-welcome
Sun 24 Jan 1999

---

dear Listees, subscribers, poetics personalia -

Since re-beginning distribution of the Poetics List a short while ago, I've received a number of concerned messages, queries, and suggestions as to the status of the list, mostly with regard to what the new format might be. Principally, I agree with those of you who've expressed a desire that the list might be open to a bit more than just announcements and news; or, as a friend of mine put it, "I don't know how much more of this I can take."

The initial restriction to the latter was in place to give me time to catch up on (and to learn the mechanics of) the administrative duties 'behind' the list. I appreciate everybody's patience with this period (even everybody's impatience!). Now that I'm somewhat more comfortable with my role as moderator/editor, and have figured out what I =can= handle, I want to invite more extensive participation from list subscribers.

However, we're still restricted at this point to what I can handle. As list moderator, all of the messages come to me to be OK'd before being passed on to the list; part of my job is to shape the course of the list, keeping it predominantly, though with occasional detours, to the topics for which it was set up (i.e., poetry and poetics); and part of my job is to keep the volume of the list to a manageable level - say, around 15 messages per day, including announcements (more or less on any given day, of course). News and announcements are still considered to be a primary function of the list.

Other sorts of posts are very welcome, and an important component of the list. As to what other sorts of posts, I can offer some suggestions; however I'm not necessarily going to restrict the list to those suggestions, and I hope that what is sent will shape the list in ways I wouldn't expect. Above all, I don't want the list to be seized with too much formality any more than I want it to be taken for granted; so, when for example I say "book reviews," what I really mean is something closer to "I just read The Auto- biography of Groany McGee, and here's what I think" for a few paragraphs. Most of the suggestions I'll offer here are also to be found in the "submissions" section of the Welcome Message:

- information on publications and reading series
- event reports, book reviews, and short articles
- thoughts on or statements of poetics
- reading lists (annotated or not)
- occasional poems (or poems, occasionally)
- occasional political or organizing news
- obituaries
- responses to any of the foregoing
- queries on poetry/poetics topics

With regard to queries, I would ask that responses be sent to the person querying; and that this person would assemble and send a post of edited "highlights" from responses. Please feel free to write me a note and ask about something you plan to send, if you are unsure as to whether it's right for the list.

I should add that there are a few things I don't want, mostly in the interest of keeping list traffic down. These would be messages to other subscribers, for example "thanks for posting x" or "can you post x?" - things that can best be handled backchannel. One- line responses expressing agreement or disagreement with a post aren't too welcome; if you agree or disagree with someone, please at leasttake the time to explain your position. I don't have any particular objection to announcements of job openings or apartment swaps, etc., so long as we're not inundated with them.

I hope this message clears up or preempts some confusion about the list format, as well as serves invitation to participate. I've been tuned in to this list for a long time, often with my finger on the delete key, but often with great interest. Good things have happened here, and I don't intend to be an obstacle to their continuance.

best, Chris

Christopher W. Alexander
poetics list moderator

p.s., Alan Sondheim has asked me to announce that the Fiction of Philosophy list, or FOP-L, is open as a forum for discussion of, among other things, poetry and poetics. (Officially, FOP-L "is devoted to issues and presentations of philosophical fiction and fictional philosophy"). Since FOP-L is a co-moderated list, they are prepared to handle more traffic than I can at present. with the message

subscribe FOP-L

followed by your real name. (E.g. "subscribe FOP-L Immanuel Kant.") For more information, contact Alan at <[redacted]>.

↑ Index

94. Poetics List

Playing with a Full Deck

Sun 24 Jan 1999

This one seems to have been lost in the shuffle. Apologies to dan, who notified me of the oversight, and to the readers for posting belatedly. Chris

--

From: dan raphael <[redacted]>
To: poetics <[redacted]>
Date: Wednesday, January 20, 1999 11:29 PM
Subject: Playing with a Full Deck

Just out from 26 Books-- Playing with a Full Deck, 27 Oregon and Washington (mostly Portland) poets, shwoing hteir best cards. Poets include Nico Vasillakis, Laura Feldman, Steve Sundin, Mark Sargent and Noemie Maxwell. Cost is 8$ and can be ordered through me, dan raphael.

Full Deck authors will be reading in Portland tonight, 1/21, at the Mark Woolley Gallery (120 nw 9th)-- 8 poets and the Gone Orchestra. Also 2/8 at the downtown Portland Borders and 2/15 at Powells downtown. (Upcoming readings in March in Seattle and Eugene.)

↑ Index

95. Tom Beckett

a poem and a note

Sun 24 Jan 1999

A WITNESS RHYTHM

We have these big brains and excrete the same pathogens.

* I attended only one poetry class during my college career. It was pretty horrible and, being the brash undergraduate that I was , one afternoon took the prof. aside and asked him if he even liked poetry. He said, "No." "Why then teach it?" I responded. "It's a job."

Robert Creeley's new book, DAY BOOK OF A VIRTUAL POET, is a moving example of how lively and compassionate the profession of poetry can be. DAY BOOK is the record of Creeley's participation in an on-line poetry course for students at City Honors in Buffalo, NY. I recommend it as antidote to the sort of disinterested teaching of poetry that many of us have grown up with.

DAY BOOK OF A VIRTUAL POET
$12.00
Spuyten Duyvil, Publisher
PO Box 1852
Cathedral Station, NYC 10025

--Tom Beckett

↑ Index

96. Bob Grumman
Valuable Info for Self-Publishers Plus an Announcement
Sun 24 Jan 1999

The valuable info for self-publishers is that you can get short-run editions of self-published books, chaps, zines, anything (perfect- bound in 4-color laminated covers) very reasonably at an "on-demand" publisher I've found in Atlanta. The cost isn't super-low but the great thing is that the initial cost can be as low as $40 or so. Sprout is the name of the company (and this is an unsolicited plug from a satisfied customer--I have no financial interest in the company, nor do I know anyone involved with it except commercially).

Here's how it works: you send them $25 plus 25 cents for each page of your manuscript (for scanning) plus a camera-ready copy of your manuscript. They then print however many copies you want, even just one. You pay an additional one to three dollars for each copy of your book depending on its size and cover price. I had 10 copies of the third, revised edition of my Of Manywhere-at-Once (210 pages) printed for what would have been $100 (except I got a special-offer discount of $50). That's not cheap, but from now on I can get copies of the book for $3 apiece. The big plus is that I didn't have to come up with $500 or more to get my book published. And I didn't have to make room in my house for a minimum of 100 copies. Ashley Gordon, the person I worked with via e.-mail, was very patient and helpful, too. Go to http://www.sproutinfo.com for more information. As for my announcement, I've already made it, pretty much. My Of Manywhere-at-Once is now available from the Runaway Spoon Press, 3621 for $10, ppd. It's part memoir, part discussion of what poetry is that covers pretty much the whole spectrum from Shakespeare through Keat, Cummings, Steven, Yeats, Pound, and Roethke to contemporaries like Karl Kempton, G. Huth, Liz Was, John M. Bennett . . . The terminology is updated and made other revisions here and there. The information in it, mostly about visual poetry, is now nearly ten-years-old, but it's more than you'll find on its esoteric subjects than you'll find in any other book I know of. (It doesn't have a 4-color laminated cover, though--I don't like the way they curl.)

--Bob G.

↑ Index

97. charles alexander
Re: Paul Metcalf
Sun 24 Jan 1999

I just returned to poetics list a couple of days ago. this is the first I have heard. I had the pleasure of publishing Golden Delicious and Firebird by Paul, and of visiting him a couple of times in Massachusetts and hosting him, in Wisconsin in the early 80's, and twice later, in Tucson, where he read, we performed a play of his, and more. Paul will be missed. blessings to all his friends, and particularly to Nancy.

charles

At 06:34 PM 1/22/99 -0800, you wrote:
>This is thoroughly dismaying news. I'd say that Metcalf is (like Ronald >Johnson) one of the most severly under-read inventors of our time / language >/ thought / art / seeing. I guess I feel more than a little guilty that I >spent so ;little time furthering his work. Oh how I wish otherwise. Damn >damn damn. And who will notice, outside this list? Hardly anyone, I'm >afeard. But yes, as Don Byrd reminds us, there are (thank what goodness >there might be) the three volumes of the collected works. We should go >(re)read them..
>
>Peter
>
>
>
>At 10:31 PM 1/21/99 -0500, Don Byrd wrote: >> Paul Metcalf died today (1-21-99). Paul was born on the day and >year of >>the Russian Revolution (November 7, 1917). He was an actor, a school-bus >driver,

>>and a real estate broker. He was the author of twenty-four books, most of them >>in a genre that he invented. His best known books are _Genoa_ (1965), >>_Patagoni_ (1971), _Appalache_ (1976), and _The Middle Passage_ (1976).
>>Twenty-two of the books are published in the three-volume _Collected Works_ >>(Coffee House Press, 1996, 1997, 1998).
>>
>> The dolphin lives cleanly
>> Because it is said
>> The dolphin
>> Eats only darkness
>> And rain that falls on the sea.
>> --Paul Metcalf
>>
> + + +

↑ Index

99. Harold Teichman
Bunting Noticed in LRB
Sun 24 Jan 1999

Some list members may enjoy reading August Kleinzahler's entertaining and properly appreciative (of Bunting) review of Keith Alldritt's unfortunately titled book "The Poet as Spy: The Life and Wild Times of Basil Bunting" in the perhaps unlikely venue of the London Review of Books, Vol. 21 No. 2, 21 Jan 1999.

Harold Teichman
[redacted]

↑ Index

100. Daniel Kane
Sam Abrams / Andrei Codrescu
Sun 24 Jan 1999

I'm working on a dissertation at NYU covering the history of reading series in the Lower East Side during the 1960's. I need to get in touch with Sam Abrams (his role in organizing early events at the Poetry Project) and Andrei Codrescu (his role in a fake "assassination" of Kenneth Koch and a drug-bust release fundraiser held for him at the Poetry Project in 1968). If either of those poets are on this list, or if anyone feels o.k. about sending me phone #'s / e-mails for these fellows, I'd appreciate it ever so much.

Daniel Kane

↑ Index

101. Bob Grumman
Address for Of Manywhere-at-Once
Sun 24 Jan 1999

My brain just isn't working anymore: in my announcement about my book I got down the box number you need to write to to order it (AFTER HAVING TO LOOK IT UP--though I've had it for 11 years), but forgot such details as the town and state. So here they are:

My Of Manywhere-at-Once is available from the Runaway Spoon Press, Box 3621, Port Charlotte FL 33949 (or e.mail me) for $10, ppd. Please make out checks to me, Bob Grumman.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

102. A. Jenn Sondheim

ANNOUNCEMENT: NEBULOUS AWARDS: PLEASE TRY AND READ!!! (fwd)

Sun 24 Jan 1999

-

ANNOUNCEMENT:

SOME OF THE NEBULOUS AWARDS MIGHT BE COMING YOUR WAY, IF NOT OURS!

I think my friends Ryan Whyte and Tom Zummer and myself are possibly going to give the First Annual Nebulous Awards sometime this year or the next, if not earlier. These Awards are given to some of those people who might deserve it for things they probably have done sometime within the recent past, although to be honest, it might be within a more distant past, also probably if not earlier. There is almost no discrimination in regard to class, race, gender, religion, sexual preferance, or age, or other things. We're not sure which direction the discrimination might have taken, in regard to the group of people we're possibly considering for starting the cycle of Annual Awards, beginning with the First, although we might hold out long enough for the Second or a bit later, if not much later. It depends on who's running, who's counting, who's interested, if not interesting. We decided to offer these rewards because there's a lack, we think, of certainty in regard to these or other rewards, in various categories. We might have further announcements about this, so try and stay tuned; the whole thing could be rather exciting, if not altogether exciting.

Please contact one or all of us sometime!

Alan Sondheim

↑ Index

103. John Tranter

Cambridge UK poetry conference

Mon 25 Jan 1999

Those listees who will be or who would like to be in England on Shakespeare's birthday listening to modern poetry, check out the announcement for the The Ninth Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry, Friday 23th to Sunday 25th April, 1999, at at Trinity College, Cambridge, England

in

Jacket magazine, Issue # 6 (preview) at this URL:

http://www.jacket.zip.com.au/jacket06/cccp1999.html

The one I went to in 1997 was great fun.

JT
from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au/welcome.html Homepage: five megabytes of glittering literature, free, at http://www.alm.aust.com/~tranterj/index.html

↑ Index

104. William Marsh
murphy/ganick chap from PaperBrain
Mon 25 Jan 1999

PaperBrainPress is pleased to announce the publication of a new chapbook by Sheila Murphy and Peter Ganick numens from centrality (an Email collaboration)

from the authors' afterward:

"Email collaboration fuses creation and relating in a way that makes composition resemble conversation. At the same time, it's a better conversation, one that has already trimmed the weeds, yet not fastidiously or obsessively."

40pp.
$5

for other titles and more info on the press, please visit the website at http://bmarsh.dtai.com/PBrain/pbrain.html

checks payable to:
PBrain Productions
1022 Emerald Street
San Diego, CA 92109

↑ Index

105. Poetry Project
a reading
Mon 25 Jan 1999

This Sunday,

January 31

at 3 pm

a reading by Dan Machlin & Marcella Durand

at the Fall Cafe, in Carroll Gardens, Brooklyn on Smith Street between Union & President Sts.

Take the F train to Carroll St. Walk 5 or so blocks down Smith back toward Manhattan.

Dan Machlin is the author of In Rem and has poems in the Winter 98/99 issue of Talisman, in Murmur, and forthcoming in Explosive. His text-photo collaboration is part of the December 98 issue of The Transcendental Friend. He is one of the 1998/99 curators of the Double Happiness reading series in New York.

Marcella Durand is the author of Lapsus Linguae and City of Ports (forthcoming from Situations this spring). She is presently co-editing Venice (the invisible city), a fine-arts and letterpress publication from Erato Press. Her work has appeared or is going to appear in Talisman, Angle, Chain, Monster Trucks & the World. She is currently the program coordinator of the Poetry Project at St. Mark's.

↑ Index

106. Elizabeth Treadwell

Los Angeles--January 29--Double Lucy @ Beyond Baroque (Reminder & Details)

Mon 25 Jan 1999

& here are the real details, like the time:

DOUBLE LUCY BOOKS @ BEYOND BAROQUE

7:30 PM
Friday, January 29, 1999

SARAH ANNE COX
YEDDA MORRISON
ELIZABETH TREADWELL

reading.

Beyond Baroque:
681 Venice Bl, Venice
[redacted]

Double Lucy Chapbooks and catalogs will be available.
See you there!

Outlet Magazine -&- Double Lucy Books
P.O. Box 9013, Berkeley, California 94709 U.S.A.
http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy

↑ Index

107. nuyopoman
rEAL liVE pOETRY in NC
Mon 25 Jan 1999

Edwin Torres, Samantha Coerbell, Brenda Coultas -- part of the Real Live Poetry gang -- will be on the road in Winston-Salem Feb. 11 and Davidson College Feb 12-13, details forthcoming.

Looking for gigs in the neighborhood, price negotiable. More info on RLP:
http://www.washingtonsquarearts.com/rlp.html

Bob Holman
http://poetry.miningco.com

↑ Index

108. Jordan Davis
Hat going fast
Mon 25 Jan 1999

Last chance for copies of The Hat #1!

$7 for a single issue

$12 for a two-issue subscription

$1000 for a lifetime subscription

In the first Hat: Greta Goetz Catherine Barnett
Brenda Coultas Tonya Foster Lisa Jarnot Janice Lowe
Kim Lyons Carol Mirakove Ange Mlinko Cynthia Nelson Hoa Nguyen Alice Notley Prageeta Sharma Juliana Spahr

What is under Hat number two? Hmm should I say? Due before The Phantom Menace M.....l G.....n M.....l G...i F.....n B...o E...i S.....s C...l S.....z a.d m..y m..e

Make checks payable to: Jordan Davis and send to: The Hat c/o Edgar 331 E 9th St Apt 1

New York NY 10003
USA

ole!
J

↑ Index

109. Christopher Reiner
Poetry on Billboards
Mon 25 Jan 1999

News from the west coast...

Around the first of January, I started noticing something new on some billboards here in L.A. Instead of the usual ads, there were short (really short) excerpts from poems -- not even excerpts, really, but one, two or four lines removed from their original context and left to hold their own alongside the Marlboro man and whatever. The first one I saw was from Emily Dickinson, then I saw one from Charles Bukowski, and I thought, what the hell is this? Then the L.A. Times ran a story on it ("A Turn for the Verse," Jan. 13, page E1), saying that there were a total of 60 billboards, with carefully clipped quotes from T.S. Eliot, Helene Johnson, Pablo Neruda, Wallace Stevens and Mark Strand...along with Dickinson and Bukowski (it's like one of those old Steve Allen "Meeting of the Minds" shows). The boards are being paid for by an anonymous group, "Poets Anonymous," and they've hired a major publicist, Susan Martin, "a poetry lover herself" (who showed up for the Times interview in a Lone Ranger mask "to dramatize the spirit of anonymity").

The idea behind the whole thing, according to Martin, is to provide "a kind of instant window for reflection," and to raise awareness of poetry. The sponsors did a lot of legwork, she says. "They did all the research to make sure the billboards covered every part of the city and bought the space. It was a huge, huge task."

NPR also did a report on this, and it's on their web site (http://www.npr.org/programs/morning/archives/1999/990119.me.html). They figure that it probably cost $10,000 per billboard. I did the math...it's $600,000.

Maybe I'm just too damn paranoid, but I think something really strange is going on here. 600K is a lot of money, and, according to the publicist, the group is not a non profit or a foundation. So it's got to be a business, right? And it's got to be a big business. Because they didn't just get the billboards, they got an expensive PR person to go with them.

Anyway, one more thing. Today I found an article from the San Francisco Chronicle (http://www.sfgate.com) about how a poet named Martin Espada was offered $2,500 by Nike to use one of his poems in a TV commercial. Nike is sponsoring something called the Nike Poetry Slam -- to along with a series of four commercials about women athletes for the Winter Olympics (?) (!). Espada said no (on the basis on Nike's wretched labor policies, etc.) and wrote a letter to Nike (also published in the January issue of the Progressive). Needless to say, a lot of other people wrote poems and got the money.

Now, I don't know if Nike is behind these L.A. billboards (tho it could be). But it does seem that corporations are starting to see that there's money to be made in being associated with poetry (even anonymously). So my question is, is this what it's like not to be marginalized?

--Chris Reiner

Witz: A Journal of Contemporary Poetics www.litpress.com/witz/

↑ Index

110. Jessica Pompeii
love
Mon 25 Jan 1999

---

silver bullet fireworks beer and gat his moon lit ass on the roof
he shoots up pussy roulette rounds flares of a gambling man / exhibitionist sometime artist
when his crazy jealous girl isn't checking up on him

(the last party
he dummied up a work schedule just for her a kool-aide valentine punch card)

J. Pompei

↑ Index

111. Daniel Kane
sikelianos talks sappho
Mon 25 Jan 1999

for those of you who may be interested, Teachers and Writers Collaborative has put a new page up on the writenet web site called "Featured Writer-in-Residence." this month, we're featuring poet Eleni Sikelianos -- Eleni discusses ways to teach Sappho to high-school students. Why not have a gander -- point your browser to http://www.writenet.org/fwir_esikelianos.html

links to Eleni's poems are also on the site -- for those of you who haven't checked out her new book, this link may prove to be an "appetizer" and so on. -- daniel

↑ Index

112. Peter Quartermain
Re: ANNOUNCEMENT: NEBULOUS AWARDS: PLEASE TRY AND READ!!! (fwd)
Tue 26 Jan 1999

Well, the real trouble is that I can't figure out if an award of this kind is the sort of thing one ought to avoid or ought to lust for, but then what does that ought mean. I mean, I think, that maybe there's no need for a duty or even a desire to be attached to either the receipt or the donation, and there might possibly be a slight doubt as to what an award of this sort might be for, motivationally thinking or socially if you get what I think I think Imean, and does any of us out there which might be here know or even have an inkling what an award is anyway and would any of us want to know why? (who's us, by the way?)

But yeah, if getting it -- one of it I mean -- is a good (?) thing, then would I like one; but otherwise perhaps, well gee, what do YOU think, hunh? But I'm not sure I want you (or anyone) to tell me. Even if I don't / do get one. (What IS it, to "get" one?)

Sounds, hmmm, thrilling. Is more possible to be told?

P

At 11:55 PM 1/24/99 -0500, you wrote:
>-
>
> ANNOUNCEMENT:
>
>

> SOME OF THE NEBULOUS AWARDS MIGHT BE COMING YOUR WAY, IF NOT OURS!
>
>
>
>I think my friends Ryan Whyte and Tom Zummer and myself are possibly going >to give the First Annual Nebulous Awards sometime this year or the next, >if not earlier. These Awards are given to some of those people who might >deserve it for things they probably have done sometime within the recent >past, although to be honest, it might be within a more distant past, also >probably if not earlier. There is almost no discrimination in regard to >class, race, gender, religion, sexual preferance, or age, or other things.
>We're not sure which direction the discrimination might have taken, in >regard to the group of people we're possibly considering for starting the >cycle of Annual Awards, beginning with the First, although we might hold >out long enough for the Second or a bit later, if not much later. It >depends on who's running, who's counting, who's interested, if not >interesting. We decided to offer these rewards because there's a lack, we >think, of certainty in regard to these or other rewards, in various >categories. We might have further announcements about this, so try and >stay tuned; the whole thing could be rather exciting, if not altogether >exciting.
>
>Please contact one or all of us sometime!
>
>Alan Sondheim
>

+ + + +

113. Ron Silliman
Holbrook Teter
Tue 26 Jan 1999

Holbrook Teter, a book-maker and friend of poets whom I first met through Ed Dorn many moons ago (Nixon was president), died suddenly of a heart attack the other day. He also did a ton of community organizing in his day, a great combination of impulses for a life.

URL:
http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/chronicle/archive/1999/01/26/MN52739.DTL

Ron

↑ Index

114. Rebecca Wolff
Re: NYC Readings?
Tue 26 Jan 1999

In response to Mr. Peter Manson's query regarding readings for the weekend of February 5-7, now seems an appropriate moment to announce:

Fence is having a reading
Poetry and Fiction:

Anne Carson and Jeffrey Eugenides

Saturday, February 6th, 7 p.m. at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, 346 W. 20th Street, between 8th and 9th Aves.

Admission is $7/or $12 gets you a year's subscription to Fence

RECEPTION TO FOLLOW (wine in a church)

Please come!

↑ Index

115. Joanne Molina
Announcing Propjet Chapbook Series
Tue 26 Jan 1999

Dear Poetics:

I am pleased to (quite belatedly) announce the new chapbook series: Propjet. The first issue, Jefferson Hansen's "Spinning Doctors," is still available and Heather Fuller's piece, "Eyeshot," will be available by March. The last issue will be a piece by Sherry Brennan.

This small chapbook series is published three times a year by Joanne Molina using solicited manuscripts. Subscriptions are $10 a year and $3 per issue. Thanks to those who have already subscribed and I encourage everyone else to check it out-- this is really super stuff!

Thanks for all your support!

Please send all information to:

Joanne Molina
530 W. Diversey #312
Chicago, IL 60614

any questions, comments? please e-mail at [redacted]

↑ Index

116. dbkk

Myung Mi Kim residency at SPT

Tue 26 Jan 1999

Small Press Traffic presents

Life/Forms: New Ways to See It, New Ways to Say It

A weekend "residency with Myung Mi Kim

Reading
Friday, January 29, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Salon
Saturday, January 30
1:00-3:00 p.m.
Lunch with Myung at Espresso Bravo Cafe
663 Valencia (between 17th and 18th), San Francisco
Stop by for great coffee, conversation, cheap food.

Talk
Saturday, January 30, 7:30 p.m.
The Speculative Poem: Laboratory & Industry
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

The second residency in our new "Life/Forms" series is with San Francisco's own Myung Mi Kim, the widely acclaimed poet, editor and teacher. In her creative thought, she has examined through social and political exigency the process of inducing inner-and outer-chaos to achieve a higher level of equilibrium. This rigorously calibrated poetry, so polyglot in execution, fairly drips with life, anxiety and multiple voices, and carves an opening towards a new kind of human community. Myung Mi Kim's books of poems are Dura (Sun & Moon, 1998), The Bounty (Chax Press, 1996), and Under Flag (Kelsey St., 1991). The winner of numerous awards, she is Associate Professor of Creative Writing at San Francisco State University.

↑ Index

117. Pritchett,Patrick

Elvis= Enlil?

Tue 26 Jan 1999

This ought to appeal to readers of Neal Stephenson's _Snow Crash_: Elvis songs to be recorded -- in ancient Sumerian January 21, 1999 Web posted at: 12:34 PM EST (1734 GMT) HELSINKI, Finland (Reuters) -- A Finnish academic known for recording Elvis Presley songs in Latin is planning a new record of eternal hits-- this time in the ancient Sumerian language. Jukka Ammondt told Reuters on Thursday he intends to bring out a Sumerian single in the next few months and an album in the autumn. He has been practising with "Blue Suede Shoes"--translated into the cuneiform language of Babylonia that died out around 2000 BC. "Elvis would have liked the idea because the ancient Sumerians had big parties and drums and rattles, and the roots of rock may go back to man's earliest efforts to get a grip on life," said Ammondt, who has produced two records of Elvis songs in Latin.

↑ Index

118. CL Hamshaw

Art and History Lectures-Vancouver

Tue 26 Jan 1999

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
EVENT DATES: Friday, February 19, 1999, 8pm
Sunday, March 7, 1999, 1pm
Friday, March 19, 1999, 8pm
LOCATION: Room 148, Cedar Building, Capilano College, 2055 Purcell Way, North Vancouver
CONTACT: Carol L. Hamshaw, [redacted]/[redacted]

The Koerner Lecture Series: Art, Politics, & History
Michael Turner, Nettie Wild, and Duncan McNaughton
Sponsored by The Capilano Review and the Capilano College Foundation

This spring The Capilano Review presents its first annual Koerner Lecture Series on Art, Politics, and History. Vancouver poet Michael Turner (Hard Core Logo, American Whiskey Bar), Vancouver documentary filmmaker Nettie Wild (A Place Called Chiapas), and San Francisco poet Duncan McNaughton (Valparaiso, another set / of circumstance.) will present selections from their work, and will discuss the impact of art and history on that work and on the formation of contemporary culture in a highly politicized world.

Friday, February 19, 8:00 pm <The Tyranny of Genre, or Why Listen to Peter Gzowski When You Can Talk About Contemporary Writing?> In this lecture Michael Turner will address issues of genre, modernism, experimentation, recent trends in Can Lit in relation to "our" international profile, and will explain "how Peter Gzowski has ruined writing in this country." He will also relate these issues to selections from his own work, from the documentary poems of Company Town (Arsenal Pulp Press) to his forthcoming book, The Pornographer's Poem (Doubleday Canada). Michael Turner is the author of four books, including the novel-in-verse Hard Core Logo, which was made into an award-winning motion picture. American Whiskey Bar, Turner's latest book, was recently made into a short film by City TV.

Sunday, March 7, 1:00 pm <Outside Eyes: Art, Politics, Contradictions> In this lecture Nettie Wild will show selections from her recent documentary, A Place Called Chiapas , and will discuss the relationships she sees between the politics of Mexico and Canada. She will also speak about "the role an artist plays in relation to political movements where the stakes are high." Wild's other award-winning films include A Rustling of Leaves: Inside the Philippine Revolution (1989) and Blockade (1993). She is travelling North America and Europe to attend screenings of A Place Called Chiapas, which was also broadcast as a two hour prime time special on CBC TV this last fall.

Friday, March 19, 8:00 pm <another set / of circumstance.: Poetry & Historical Geography> In this lecture Duncan McNaughton will discuss the relationship between poetry, history, and geography, arguing there is no history without geography, and that poetry as a form is central to contemporary thought. He will read from and speak to the work in his most recent book, another set / of circumstance. (hawkhaven). He has published over eleven volumes of poetry, including the wrapped church (Blue Millennium/AIOU), Kicking the Feather (First Intensity), and Valparaiso (Listening Chamber).

Admission is $5 adults, $3 students, and free for members of The Capilano Press Society, the publisher of The Capilano Review. Advance passes for all three lectures in the series are available for $12 by calling [redacted] or [redacted], or they can be bought at the door. Proceeds go to The Capilano Review Endowment Fund. Support for the series has been graciously provided by The Leon & Thea Koerner Foundation, The Capilano College Foundation, and the Humanities Division of Capilano College. The Capilano Review has been publishing innovative poetry, fiction, drama, and work in visual media for over 25 years. It has received several National Magazine Awards, Western Magazine Awards, and has been included in The Journey Prize Anthology.

Carol L. Hamshaw
Managing Editor
The Capilano Review
[redacted]

www.capcollege.bc.ca/dept/TCR

--
Carol L. Hamshaw
Administrator
Edgewise ElectroLit Centre
http://www.edgewisecafe.org

↑ Index

119. Ron Silliman
Position available (must know Yiddish & Russian)
Wed 27 Jan 1999

Date: Thu, 21 Jan 1999 15:23:40 -0500 (EST)

From: Feigl I Glaser <[redacted]>

Subject: Russian Forverts position

Der redactor fun Rusishn FORVERTS zukht a mentsh vos ken gut Yidish un an ershtklasishn literarishn Rusish -- tsu helfn redagirn di tsaytung un zikh tsugreytn ibertsunemen di arbet vi redaktor fun der tsaytung. Kvalifitsirte mentshn vern gebetn tsu shraybna a briv direkt tsum redaktor, V. Yedydovitsh, oyfn adres fun Rusishn FORWARD, 45 East 33rd Street, New York, NY,10016, oder zikh tsu farbindn durkh e-post oyf mayn adres: [redacted].

The Editor of the Russian Weekly FORWARD is looking for a competent person who knows Yiddish well and has the knowledgable of literary Russian -- to assist him and train to become the future editor of that Russian newspaper. Qualifying persons are encouraged to send a letter directly to Mr. Yedydovitsh, Editor of theRussian weekly FORWARD, 45 East 33rd Street, New York, NY 10016, or send E-MAIL at my address: [redacted]. Mit frayndlekhe grusn, Feygl Infeld Glaser

↑ Index

120. james perez
Fwd: poetry and sound in philly
Wed 27 Jan 1999

I just returned to the list after a two-month abscence, apologies if this has already been posted...also, I forwarded this so I can't afford much more info, sorry

jamie.p

>anyone interested in the below?
>
>Sonic Logos 1999
>Sunday, February 7th, 1pm-10pm
>The Coffeehouse of the First Unitarian Church, 2125 Chestnut St., >Philadelphia
>
>Here's the rundown. The day has been divided up into two parts and two >rooms. Those staying for the whole show or who come after 5pm will be >asked for a mere $5 dollar cover. Those coming for the poetry or until >5pm will only have to pay a $2 charge. The main room will feature stereo
>
>sound donated by Philly Space Enthusiast Andy Wing. (For those of you >who were at last year's Ambient Fest, Stupid Robot, you may remember >Andy as the man behind the excellent sound system). However there will >also be non-stereo performances in the Little Miracles Kindergarten >room, downstairs from the main room. This entire gig has been the result
>
>of a very special collaboration of local Philly fringe music organizers:
>
>the Philadelphia Ambient Consortium, IMP!, City of Improvizational

Zeal,
>
>and help from the NotCoffehouse Poetry Series organizers.
>
>Here's the schedule:
>
>[Main Room]
>
> 1:00-1:15 : Mytili Jagannathan - poetry
> 1:15-2:15 : Azusa Plane, Chris Rice, Ian Nagoski - Minimalism >and abstract films
> 2:15-2:45 : Jeff Loo - poetry
> 2:45-3:15 : Brenda McMillan - poetry
> 3:00-3:45 : Dave Champion
> 3:45-4:15 : Dave Moolten - poetry
> 4:15-4:45 : Lisa Sewell - poetry
> 4:45-5:00 : break
> 5:00-6:15 : Paul Woznicki
> 6:15-7:30 : Fingernail
> 7:30-8:45 : Flowchart
> 8:45-10:00 : Transient Waves
>
>[Small Room: Little Miracles Kindergarten]
>
> 1:15-2:15 : Unsound
> 2:30-3:00 : Mike Benedetti - Performance Art
> 3:00-4:00 : John Philips
> 4:00-5:00 : Charles Cohen & Elliott Levin
> 5:00-6:00 : Jeff Waring
>
>There are still a good number of ambienteers and experimentalists who >are not yet on-line so please help spread the word offline. Thank you so
>
>much. See you at Sonic Logos 99!
>
>Regards,
>Aharon N. Varady
>dj spaceling
>
>Check out the poster at:

>The Philadelphia Ambient Consortium (Music and Noise)
>http://members.xoom.com/spaceling/

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

121. Charles Alexander fischer & grossman in tucson
Wed 27 Jan 1999

All the events below are in Tucson, Arizona

POG Poets & Artists Series announces

A Poetry Reading and Visual Art Talk

Norman Fischer (poet and Zen teacher and abbott) Maurice Grossman (artist and teacher)
7pm Saturday, Feb. 6
Las Artes Studio
23 West 27th Street
(one block west of South 6th Avenue)

> This event is sponsored by POG (Poetry Group).
> For information contact Chax Press at [redacted], [redacted]

*

There are also other norman fischer events in Tucson on February 7 and February 8 1. university talk:

Norman Fischer
"do you want to make something out of it? zen meditation and art making."
Student Union room 285
Monday, Feb 8, 11 am also looks like Jen B is gonna read/present along w Erica Hunt on the 13th.
good deal.

> This event is sponsored by the Univ. of Arizona Department of English.
> Contact Tenney Nathanson for information — [redacted] or [redacted] [redacted]

2.
A public talk at the Unitarian Universalist Church

4831 E 22nd St
Sunday, Feb 7 -- 10:30am
Norman Fischer will give the sermon at the regular UU Service.

For further information please contact the UU Church ([redacted])

3.
A public Dharma talk at the Zendo
Sunday, Feb 7, 7-9pm
At the Zen Desert Sangha Zendo
3226 N Martin Ave
Topic - "Not Knowing is Most Intimate: A Talk On Zen Practice."
This talk will be in an informal setting, and you are encouraged to bring family, friends and guests. There will be a question-and-answer period following the talk. A donation of $7 is being requested, although as always, nobody will be turned away for lack of funds.

Sponsored by Zen Desert Sangha.
For information, contact Richard J Laue ([redacted]; [redacted])

ZOKETSU NORMAN FISCHER - a short bio

Zoketsu Norman Fischer is a poet and Zen Buddhist priest who is currently serving as Co-Abbot of the San Francisco Zen Center. A man of wide-ranging interests, his Zen teaching is known for its eclecticism, openness, warmth, and common sense, and for his willingness to let go of everything, including Zen. He was ordained a Zen priest at Zen Center in 1980, and completed Dharma Transmission there in 1988. He was installed as an Abbot of Zen Center in 1996.

Norman has been particularly interested in the application of Zen to issues of Western culture and everyday life in the world. He's taught extensively, with his old friend Rabbi Alan Lew, on the relationship between Buddhist and Jewish practice (work which has been discussed in Judith Linzer's book, "Dharma and Torah"); he teaches Buddhist precepts to business people, Buddhist compassion-in-action to school teachers, and poetry writing and appreciation to children and adults. He's led workshops at Esalen Institute in California and the Open Center in New York City, as well as at Zen Center, and teaches Zen regularly in Canada and Mexico. He has been for many years board chair of the Zen Hospice Project, and has taught extensively on the relation of Buddhism to death and the dying process. In recent years he's participated with His Holiness the Dalai Lama in conferences on Buddhist Christian dialog and non-violence.

MAURICE GROSSMAN, ARTIST -- a short bio

Professor Emeritus of Art, University of Arizona Award winning artist/teacher
Educated at Wayne State University, Ohio State University and Alfred University Fulbright Scholar to Japan
NEA Craft Award
Creative Teaching Award, University of Arizona Foundation
Fifty years producing and exhibiting clay art Work in many national and international collections
Major contributor to the Arizona Art scene since 1955 World traveler and lover of clay

"My current work is part of a continuing adventure into vessel making. The ceremonial objects of many cultures have been of interest to me throughout my art career. The containers that people are buried in, the ritual vessels we appease the Gods with or the reliquaries we store holy objects in, these all have a certain magic about them that I enjoy."

---

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

122. Elizabeth Treadwell

Avec Sampler Readings in SF

Wed 27 Jan 1999

Hi folks-- I've been asked to post these 2, one is a reminder, one I don't think has been posted yet.....

1. A READING FOR AVEC SAMPLER #2

Andrew Joron
Christopher Reiner
Joe Ross
Elizabeth Treadwell

SUNDAY, JANUARY 31, 1999
3 PM
Canessa Gallery
708 Montgomery Street
(at Columbus Ave)
SAN FRANCISCO

[redacted]

$5

2. The Second Bay Area Reading for _An Avec Sampler #2_:
>
>MICHAEL PALMER
>
>Lisa Lubasch
>(flying in from New York City)
>
>Charles Borkhuis
>(flying in from New York City)
>
>Saturday, Feb. 6th; 5 p.m. at The Attic, 3336 24th Street, near Mission, >across from the 24th Street Bart Station.
>Phone:[redacted]. Free.

--Elizabeth Treadwell

↑ Index

123. Karen McKevitt
New Fourteen Hills!
Thu 28 Jan 1999

The Fall 1998 issue of Fourteen Hills:The SFSU Review is now available! Published by graduate students of San Francisco State University's Creative Writing Dept. 171 pages. Contributors include: Alissa Blackman, David Breskin, Marianna Cherry, Matthew Coooperman, Daniel Coshnear, Stuart Feinhor, Do Gentry, Bill Gordon, Sonia Greenfield, Stephen D. Guiterrez, Edward Hardy, Otis Haschemeyer, Jen Hofer, Pierre Joris, James Kass, Philip Kobylarz, Daniel Langton, John Latta, Edward Moyer, Fred Muratori, Alejandro Murguia, Sabina Piersol, Kevin Prufer, Bill Roorbach, Sarah Rosenthal, Lauren Schiffman, Glori Simmons, Dean Taciuch, David Trinidad, and Rachel Zucker. Great mixed media collage cover art by Parsons School of Design graduate Andrea Nelson.

Whew! All this for only $7!!

Check payable to Fourteen Hills, send to:
Fourteen Hills
Creative Writing Dept
San Francisco State Univ
1600 Holloway
San Francisco, CA 94132

Questions? Email us! [redacted]
http://mercury.sfsu.edu/~hills/14hills.html

Also available from Small Press Distribution.

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

124. David Baratier
Will Alexander's Above The Human Nerve Domain is out
Thu 28 Jan 1999

Above The Human Nerve Domain by Will Alexander his newest collection of poems is now available from Pavement Saw Press

Samples of the work can be found on:

http://www.poetryproject.com/poets.html

Poetry, 72pp, Perfect bound.
ISBN 1-886350-81-7
Trade Soft-Cover edition. Price: $12.00 for individuals in US Add $2 for Canada, $4.50 for points overseas. If you cannot afford this, ask your local library to buy it for you. Distributed by Pavement Saw Press, Brodart & SPD.

ISBN 1-886350-82-5
Hardcover limited edition. $75.00
50 or less copies made. Homemade & handbound.

Please send checks payable to:
Pavement Saw Press
7 James Street
Scotia, NY 12302
Attn: David Baratier

Previously placed orders are forthcoming!

↑ Index

125. Linda V Russo
Editing Modernism
Thu 28 Jan 1999

---

or to be more specific, _Women Editing Modernism : 'Little' Magazines & Literary History_ :

can anyone provide contact information for Jayne E. Marek, the author of the above-mentioned book?

It is, by the way, a great book, especially the chapter on Marianne Moore & The Dial, "The Ironic 'Editorial We'" which resituates Moore's own 'self-effacement'/absorption into the editorial collaboration (such as it was or wasn't is discussed thoroughly) as it arises out of her sense of institutional/personal/self - respect rather than as a result of a self-marginalizing lack of self confidence.

Which is not to say "it all depends on how you look at it" but a lot depends on how _long_ you look at it and at what point you are willing to dismiss 'the rest' as 'inconsequential' to the annals of literary history. (Raymond Williams' notion of a 'selective tradition')

thanks & a warm hello to the list

Linda Russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

126. Mike Kelleher
a l y r i c 9
Thu 28 Jan 1999

Hello poets and friends,

Here, finally, is a l y r i c m a i l e r #9 at http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/alyric/index.html

"notes from the place(less Place)" gathering of poets in June 98.

Featuring talks on place(less)ness by

Taylor Brady, Nick Lawrence, Tom Orange, Scott Pound, and Eleni Stecopoulos and poems by

Michelle Citron

Ben Friedlander

Graham Foust

Kevin Hehir

Mike Kelleher

Nick Lawrence

Karen Mac Cormack

Tom Orange

Scott Pound

Aaron Skomra

Eleni Stecopoulos

Enjoy!

Next up a special double author issue featuring Anselm Berrigan and Lisa Jarnot.

See ya,

Mike

↑ Index

127. David Baratier
billboards
Thu 28 Jan 1999

Non coastal news...

Martin Espada's book _City of Coughing & dead radiators_ or _Rebellion_ give many reasons as to why it would make no sense for Nike to solicit him for a poem. Another person I know was offered the same gig & declined. Unlike Marteen (I can't use the stress mark, so...) he does look good playing basketball, face probably will sell shoes, & only has one similarity: (merely coincidence? I doubt it) being a minority.

So Chris, is this what it's like not to be marginalized?

The marginalization comes in when a poet is chosen as spokesperson because they fit a particular stereotype the media wishes to uphold. The media says: We need an angry latino male. What non-LA poet was dolled up to fit the image of a Rodney King race rioter? How were all those early 90's MTV poets chosen? We need a timid white guy whose ass can sell jeans. How else is there to explain why self published poet extraordinaire Hank Rollins who covered "Just do it" by the Pink Fairies hasn't done a commercial for Nike?

Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

128. A. Jenn Sondheim
(no subject)
Fri 29 Jan 1999

-

< a wild man lives here >

< he dwells in spaces of inscription >

< he has no name here >

< he dwells here and not up there >

< he lives here and has left his other dwellings>

< a wild man lives here >

< a girl lives here and she doesn't know any language >

< a girl lives here > < a girl lives here >

< some girls >

< the wild man is taught language by some girls >

< his name is alan >

< he lives here and has left his other dwellings >

< some girls leave their dwellings >

< they like talking when he's not around >

< a girl >

< he's so stupid >

< some other people live here >

↑ Index

129. Douglas Oliver
Re: Locker & Steerer
Fri 29 Jan 1999

Nicholas Johnson has asked me to post this revised version of an earlier posting.

FOR THE LOCKER & THE STEERER

a two day event at Diorama Arts, 34 Osnaburgh Street, London, NW1, featuring artists whose poetry & performance negotiates the territory of location, site & the body.

Sunday 14th March 2.30 pm

David Gascoyne.

(First London reading since 1990. The great British surrealist of the 1930s, who enjoyed a tremendous revival of attention during the 1960s and has now become Britain's most loved elder statesperson of poetry.)

Sunday 14th March 7.30 pm

Aaron Williamson & Craig Athill.

(Astill plays the deaf drum (bodhran) creating a sound which vibrates through an especially constructed stage, animating the balletic voice-body performance of Williamson, who is deaf.)

Bob Cobbing.

(The celebrated sound/concrete poet/bookmaker, who has influenced generations of other poets across the world.)

Nicholas Johnson

(performing The Lard Book, a gargantuan Visual Book in a silver case, a found text utilising a multitude of voices: neologism, German, concrete. "The performance encompasses determinacy of chance & will solder into a short collaborative debut of 'Hassell' (writers forum, 1999) with Bob Cobbing.")

Monday 15th March 7.30 pm

Helen Macdonald

(whose debut collection Safety Catch drew widespread acclaim on both sides of the Atlantic. She works with falcons and hawks -- poems full of bird flight but mysteriously and musically so.)

Iain Sinclair

(poet, 'intellectual best-seller' prose writer and film maker of renown and cult followings. His work in progress is a sequel to the 12 walks that became Lights Out for the Territory, and his poetry also acts as a reading of the city of London, "locations of the immediate and the unexpected".)

Douglas Oliver

("a rare London reading for this poet-explorer", says the flier, plus some, but excuse me, I'm off to do some exploring.)

Doug Oliver

↑ Index

130. Jamie Ferguson
Steiner, Venuti, Polish Baroque verse
Fri 29 Jan 1999

I'm looking for listmembers interested in literary translation.

In terms of theory, I'd be very interested to exchange opinions on George Steiner's AFTER BABEL, Lawrence Venuti's THE TRANSLATOR'S INVISIBILITY, Willis Barnstone's THE POETICS OF TRANSLATION.

And one corner of the field: archaizing translation, taken as a response to links between the poets and literary traditions of source- and target-languages. As an example: a sixteenth-century Polish poet, Mikolaj Sep-Szarzynski (meekowhy semp shajinski), who has a good deal in common with English proto-baroque religious poetry - Fulk Greville, among others. Both of these poets thrive on spiritual conflict, without indulging in intellectual paradox (as does Donne). The idea is that a poet like Greville would make little sense in contemporary English and that, in fact, his impact is inseparable from his language, style, form, etc. As Sep-Szarzynski expresses many of the same associations and cultural currents, the English of the one seems to me to make for an appropriate vehicle for translating the Polish of the other. On the basis of these kinds of parallels, I have translated a number of Sep's sonnets (as well as other early Polish poetry) into what some will no doubt call pastiche, but which I hope conveys a more organic sense of the period whose writings provide its linguistic bearings. I know that a proper explanation of this method would require a good deal more specific information and argument; for the moment, I am only curious to know if there are others on the list who either have already done some thinking about these matters or would like to begin thinking about them.

Thanks for your attention.

Jamie Harmon Ferguson

Here, then, is the sonnet, followed by my translation.

SONET V

O NIETRWALEJ MILOSCI RZECZY SWIATA TEGO

I nie milowac ciezko, i milowac
Nedzna pociecha, gdy zadza zwiedzione
Mysli cukruja nazbyt rzeczy one,
Które i mienic, i musza sie psowac.

Komu tak bedzie dostatkiem smakowac
Zloto, sceptr, slawa, rozkosz, i stworzone

Piekne oblicze, by tym nasycone
I mógl miec serce, i trwóg sie warowac.

Milosc jest wlasny bieg bycia naszego:
Ale z zywiolów utworzone cialo
To chwalac, co zna poczatku równego,
Zawodzi dusze, której wszystko malo,

Gdy ciebie, wiecznej i prawej pieknosci,
Samej nie widzi, celu swej milosci.

SONNET V

OF THE UNCONSTANT LOVE FOR THE THINGS OF THIS WORLD

And not to love is hard, and for to love
Meagre solace when thoughts astray in lust Sweeten to excess those things which must
And change their hues, and still t'ward ruin move.

Who so well will it suffice to taste
Of gold, the sceptre, fame, delight, and beauty's Created face, e'en that he might in these Have sated heart, and 'gainst his dread resist?

Love is the very course of this our life:
And yet the flesh, of elementals wrought,
Praising what knows beginning like itself,
Forsaketh sprite, that findeth all but nought,

When Thee, ever during truest fair,
Thyself it seeth not, object of its care.

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

131. Maria Damon
alchemy bibliography
Fri 29 Jan 1999

---

the same student, an architect, who last quarter was interested in poetry or literary texts having to with metallurgy, is now interested in a bibliography on the poetics of alchemy. i know there are many links between alchemy and poetry, but i don't know any basic helpful texts, or poetry that is the result of alchemical experiment (other than, perhaps, gerrit lansing's). could ye out there e me some suggestions to pass on to him? thanks

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

February 1999

346 messages · Fri 29 Jan 1999 – Sat 27 Feb 1999

February 1999 unfolded against a Washington spectacle the poets could not quite be bothered to attend: on the twelfth the Senate acquitted a president, and the impeachment that had gripped the nation for a year simply evaporated, leaving behind — on this list, at least — little more than a wry thread passing around Gabriel García Márquez's opinion of Mr. Clinton. The wider world sent its own sombre news, King Hussein of Jordan dead on the seventh; but the room, as ever, kept mostly to its own weather, which that month turned elegiac and generous by turns.

The month's largest labour was a card-catalogue built in common. Jennifer Rosenthal, at work on the American long poem of 1945 to 1960 and particularly interested in "issues of place," asked the list for what she had overlooked, and the list, which loves nothing so much as a bibliography, answered for weeks — Michael Boughn adding H.D.'s War Trilogy and Ronald Johnson's Ark, John Lowther pressing the claims of David Antin's talk poems — until the thread had become a small anthology of the century's longest ambitions. A parallel list took shape beside it when Maria Damon canvassed the room for an alchemy syllabus, and the citations came back in a torrent, Jung and Eliade and Robert Kelly, as though the members kept their libraries permanently open to one another.

Not every exchange was so collegial. Under the deliberately incendiary heading BATTLE OF THE SEXES, Chris Stroffolino wondered aloud whether the received wisdom that the women of his generation simply wrote better had gone too long unchallenged, and the room answered with force. Katherine Lederer supplied a roll-call of forthcoming titles — "The females are on their way" — while Aldon Nielsen turned the premise inside out with a single question about the very writers under discussion: "how do you think they seem to others?" It is a Poetics specialty, the quarrel that begins in provocation and ends, some forty posts later, having actually thought about something.

Death, though, kept pressing at the edges. When the translator Paul Schmidt died, Mark Prejsnar noticed the New York Times obituary describing Velimir Khlebnikov as "the little-known Russian poet," and the phrase touched off a small, exact fury over how the paper of record disappears the very artists it pretends to bury with honour. The thread is, in miniature, the list's abiding anxiety: that the difficult and the essential are forever being filed under little-known, and that someone had better keep the record straight.

And then, on the fourth, the record itself lost one of its keepers. Charles Bernstein wrote to say that Armand Schwerner — poet of The Tablets, that great invented archaeology of a broken, half-legible ancient tongue — had died that morning at 9:06, and closed the notice with the poet's own instruction to "go into all the places you're frightened of." The list did as it was told. Maria Damon, confessing herself devastated by a difficult, cranky, beloved man, signed off with the truest elegy the month produced — a pun that was also a prayer, three words long: "dissolve the tablets." I have set the arguments and the bibliographies on either side of that loss exactly as they came, because that is how February arrived: a company of poets building their endless shared library in one room while, in the next, one of its authors quietly closed his book.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 346 in all.

WRITERS

Acgold01 280
Alexander, Charles 18, 228
Alexander, Christopher W 268
And, Miekal 2
ANDREWS, BETSY 22, 128
Baratier, D 299, 342
Baratier, David 34, 137, 171, 192, 214
Beckett, Tom 11, 169
Bennett, Jim 231
Bernstein, Charles 63, 80, 95, 152, 238, 318, 346
Bouchard, Daniel 56
Boughn, Michael 144, 266, 285, 286
Bourbeau, Lisa 263
Bratton, Benjamin 49
Brennan, Joe 12
Brink, Leonard 313
Bromige, David 50, 142, 220, 335
Brown, Lee Ann 243
Brown, Pamela 193
Buuck, David 191
Byrd, Don 9
Byrne, Mairead 305, 343
Cabri, Louis 89, 219
Carfagna, Richard 55, 254
Casey, Sean 194
Cayley), Ric Allsopp (By Way Of John 120
Chambers, Matthew J 212, 222
Charssmith 39, 68
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 277
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 74
Crown, Kathleen 85
Cwa 79
Daly, Catherine 135, 139
Damon, Maria 4, 145, 278, 326
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 65, 66, 116, 203, 292, 297, 300
Davis, Alex 17
Davis, Jordan 44, 127, 133, 235
Dbkk 143, 207, 319
Debrot, Jacques 119
Degentesh, Katie 47, 48, 166
Delville, Michel 129
Douglas 57, 72
Dworkin, Craig 16
Ellis, Stephen 35
Farr, Roger 167
Ferguson, Jamie 61, 91, 154
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 76, 209
Foster, Edward 41, 125, 208, 262, 304
Franco, Michael 198, 240
Gancie/C.Parcelli, R. 101
Ganick, Peter 87, 111, 113, 118, 165, 296
GARREN, SAMUEL 25, 26
Gjfarrah 28
Glass, Jesse 88
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 196, 236, 341
Grossman, Emily 269
Grumman, Bob 151
Hatlen, Burt 131, 315
Heller, Michael 62, 317
Hess, David 149
Humanities, ShaunAnne Tangney 115, 288
Izak 331
Jasfoley 93, 94
Joris, Pierre 114, 282, 283
Joseph, Safdie 122, 227
Kaipa, Summi 187
Kalleberg, Garrett 86
Kane, Daniel 99, 328
Kelleher, Mike 13, 100
Kelley, Karen 40, 146
Kellogg, David 267
Kimball, J 338
Kimball, John 97
Kimmelman, Burt 259
Kozaitis, Anastasios 51, 52, 153, 291, 294
Lazer, Hank 58
Lederer, Katherine 84, 105, 204
Levitsky, Rachel 242
Levy, Herb 14, 15, 161
Lewis, Joel 29, 46
List, Poetics 38, 77, 78, 102, 103, 140, 141, 157, 158, 159, 160, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 197, 199, 201, 202, 216, 221, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 264, 272, 273, 274, 275, 289, 290, 298, 322, 323, 324, 325
Little, Billy 10, 112, 301, 310, 311, 334
Lowther,John 270, 276, 293, 295, 306
Magee, Michael 31, 200, 210
Materer, Timothy 32
MAYHEW 320
McCreary, Chris 69
McDonough, Judy Smith 163
McKevitt, Karen 43
Neufeld, Pete 134
Nielsen, Aldon 3, 64, 106, 107, 136, 190, 271
Nuyopoman 5, 195, 321, 336
Oliver, Douglas 70
Perloff, Marjorie 332

Pollet, Sylvester 117, 156, 234
Pompeii, Jessica 109
Prejsnar, Mark 253
Pritchett,Patrick 19, 21, 59, 170, 185
Project, Poetry 27, 155, 225, 256, 344
Prunty, Randy 218
Raea100900 54, 206
Reiner, Christopher 60, 213, 333
ReMap, Todd Baron /*/ 226, 281
Roitman, Judy 73, 164, 223, 307
Rosenthal, Jennifer 205
Rotenberg, Tina 284
Russo, Linda V 132
Salerno, Mark 1
Scharf, Michael 229, 340
Scheindlin, Noam 6, 24, 244
Schuchat 265
Schultz, Kathy Lou 110, 123, 124, 279
Schultz, Susan M. 42
Schwartz, Gerald 329
Sherry, James 36
Shoemaker, Steven 20, 53, 150, 255, 303
Silliman, Ron 8, 33, 162, 257, 314
Smith, Dale 75
Sondheim, A. Jenn 30, 45, 90, 126, 130, 233, 239, 312, 337
Spahr, Juliana 138, 188
Spence, Pete 260
Stroffolino, Louis 67, 92, 241, 287
Sumner, Alaric 37, 82, 83, 104
Sweet, Erik 121, 330
Teichman, Harold 232
Thomas, Heather H 98
Treadwell, Elizabeth 96, 237, 258
Tuma, Keith 217
Upton., Lawrence 23, 211
Voices, Other 215
Weiss, Mark 108, 189, 261, 327
Wolff, Rebecca 7, 71, 81, 168, 230, 316, 339
Zauhar, David 148
Zervos, Komninos 308, 309
Zilberman, Rita 302
Zurawski, Magdalena 147, 224, 345

NAMES MENTIONED

Adams, Robert 52
Adamson, Robert 201
Adorno, Theodor 165
Ahearn, Joe 98
Aimone, Joe 275
Alexander, Christopher W. 172, 268, 290
Alice, Mary 101, 149, 238, 253, 344
Americans, Asian 12, 52
Amerika, Mark 236
Amnasan, Mike 123
Amram, David 153
Anderson, Beth 313
Andrews, Bruce 16, 27, 89, 92, 105, 110
Anne, Sarah 191
Antin, David 276, 292, 295, 300, 332
Armand, Louis 62, 64, 67, 70, 139, 174, 179, 182, 189, 208
Armantrout, Rae 92, 105, 110, 122, 143, 187, 206
Armstrong, Aaron 13, 236
Arnold, Bob 61, 91, 108, 120, 234, 247
Ashbery, John 67, 97, 116, 149
Ashley, Renee 161
Ashley, Robert 161
Atkins, Tim 143
Auden, W. H. 264, 282
Aurelius, Marcus 52
Auster, Paul 186
Austin, Geer 75, 238, 253, 319
Baker, Mary 333
Balestrieri, Peter 236
Baraka, Amiri 310
Baratier, Dave 299, 305, 342
Barg, Barbara 27
Barnard, Mary 243
Barnes, Diane 34, 43
Barnett, Anthony 313
Barney, Matthew 27
Basinski, Michael 236
Bataille, George 72
Baude, Michelle 155
Baudelaire, Charles 41, 86, 134, 199
Beatty, Paul 146
Beckman, Joshua 218
Beckman, Paul 236
Bellamy, Dodie 79, 123, 143, 187, 191, 207
Benjamin, Walter 61, 134
Bennett, John M. 171, 236, 238, 253
Bergvall, Caroline 120, 247
Berkeley, Michael 96, 111, 118, 161, 183, 227, 237, 258, 284, 296, 333
Berkson, Bill 75, 181, 216
Berlin, Irving 209
Berman, Tosh 91, 108
Bernard, George 74, 148, 323
Bernhard, Thomas 34, 43
Bernstein, Emma 217
Berrigan, Anselm 27, 121, 132, 191, 345
Berrigan, Eddie 132, 330
Berry, Jake 111, 118, 151
Berryman, John 299, 305
Blackburn, Paul 61, 91, 108, 114
Blanchot, Maurice 114, 186, 282, 283, 302
Blaser, Robin 74, 301
Blau, Rachel 264, 282
Blevins, Richard 78
Bookout, Melanie 111, 118
Borkhuis, Charles 60
Bowering, George 274, 283, 322

Boyer, Stephen 49
BpNichol 274, 283, 322
Brady, Andrea 97, 116, 143, 201
Brady, Taylor 13
Brakhage, Stan 149
Brannen, Jonathan 98
Brashear, Jim 123
Brazil, David 52, 153
Brecht, Bertolt 153, 238, 253
Bronk, Bill 261
Bronk, William 259, 262, 268, 281, 298, 311, 318, 320, 338
Brown, Pam 193
Browne, Colin 313, 333
Bruno, Franklin 258
Buckley, Jeff 319
Budd, Billy 15, 25
Burger, Mary 79
Burket, Cheryl 258
Burnham, Clint 89
Burns, Avery 143
Burroughs, William S. 5, 27
Buscemi, Steve 27
Butler, Judith 165, 227
Bök, Christian 341
Caddel, Richard 216
Cage, John 72
Cameron, David 86, 199
Carey, Steve 99, 236
Carey, Tom 99
Carll, Steve 236
Carlos, William 52, 57, 328
Carroll, Jim 27
Carson, Anne 291, 316
Cartelli, Donna 98
Carter, Angela 319
Celan, Paul 61, 114
Celona, Tina 84
Chadwick, Lynn 258
Chandler, Raymond 226
Chen, Chris 191
Cheney, Don 64
Chester, Jeff 15, 25
Cigale, Alex 69
Clar, Jorge 121, 330
Clark, Cheryl 319
Clark, Emilie 79
Clark, Jeff 258, 319
Clarke, John 266
Clifford, Pat 150
Clinton, Bill 52, 56, 296, 323
Cobbing, Bob 82, 211
Cohen, David 101
Colby, Todd 27
Cole, Barbara 111, 118
Cole, Sean 97, 116
Collins, Phil 231
Coltrane, John 341
Columbus, Christopher 171, 214
Conte, Joseph M. 58
Coolidge, Clark 330
Cooper, Paula 243
Cope, Stephen 187, 243
Corman, Roger 338
Cornell, Katherine 212
Corso, Gregory 88, 153, 197
Cory, Alex 79
Coultas, Brenda 121, 330
Creeley, Robert 58, 152, 156, 160, 318, 336
Curtis, Dana 161
Daley, Ryan 111, 118, 177, 187
Darragh, Tina 89
Darwin, Charles 57
Davenport, Steve 15, 25
Davidson, Michael 187
Davies, Alan 164
Davis, Martin 186, 330
Day, Jean 79
Deguy, Michel 201
Deleuze, Gilles 184, 215
Dennis, Michael 91, 108, 125
Dentz, Shira 98
Derksen, Jeff 89, 319
Derrida, Jacques 215
Devaney, Thomas 227
Dickinson, Emily 150, 318
Dickison, Steve 284
Dienstfrey, Patricia 187
Doyle, Erica 325
Duncan, Andrew 78, 284, 310
Duncan, Robert 32, 74, 160, 234, 301, 324
Durgin, Patrick F. 111, 118, 191
Dutton, Paul 227
Eigner, Larry 73, 164, 223, 307
Eisenstein, Sergei 209
Elena, Maria 243
Eliot, Joe 32, 149
Emerson, Claudia 31
England, Amy 15, 25, 52, 216, 231
Enslin, Ted 131, 249
Erickson, Ann 69
Eshleman, Clayton 74
Esther, Little 232
Etter, Carrie 111, 118
Eugene, Brett 72
Evans, Steve 79, 129, 180
Everson, William 291
Farmer, Steven 191
Faulkner, Andrew 52
Faulkner, William 52
Featherston, Dan 111, 118
Federman, Ray 236
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 153
Fitterman, Rob 191

Fodaski, Elizabeth 143
Foley, Jack 151
Ford, Francis 153
Foreman, Richard 57, 346
Foucault, Michel 165
France, Peter 19, 149, 153, 186, 201
Frances, Mary 8, 19
Fraser, Kathleen 187
Frazer, Vernon 296
Freind, Bill 258
Friedlander, Lee 13, 191, 280
Friedman, Thomas 27, 344
Fuller, Heather 89, 128
Fuller, William 201
Galassi, Jonathan 340
Gallagher, Kristen 22
Gander, Forrest 314
Garcia, Gabriel 52, 56
Garcia, Rodrigo 120, 247
Garrison, Deborah 340
Gass, William 149
Genet, Jean 72
Gilbert, Roger 10, 89, 244
Giles, Samantha 49
Ginsberg, Allan 5, 16, 88, 197
Ginsberg, Allen 10, 153, 160, 264, 282
Giorno, John 27
Gizzi, Michael 219
Gladman, Renee 187
Gluck, Robert 123
Van Gogh 109, 241
Goldsmith, Kenneth 16, 341
Gooch, Brad 27
Goodman, Amy 64
Gordon, Nada 97, 116
Gordon, Ruth 49, 318
Graham, Susan 52, 133
Greenberg, Arielle 234, 344
Gregg, Linda 79
Gregory, Jane 153
Griffin, Tim 27, 133
Griffiths, Bill 88, 197, 216
Guest, Barbara 243
Guthrie, Annie 86, 199, 238, 253
Hale, Robert 79
Hall, John S. 27
Halsey, Alan 231
Hamill, Sam 141
Harper, Michael 5
Harris, Ken 97, 116
Harryman, Carla 92, 105, 110, 123, 187
Hart, Matt 214
Harvey, George 35, 334
Hawthorne, Alison 52
Hayden, Robert 329
Hayles, Katherine 49
Haynes, Bob 200
Healy, Randolph 17
Heaney, Seamus 325
Hecht, Anthony 49
Heidegger, Martin 232
Hejinian, Lyn 79, 84, 149, 187, 206
Heller, Jan 339
Herman, Rachel 15, 25, 133
Higgins, Dick 75, 189
Hill, Geoffrey 340
Hill, Leslie 120, 247
Hillman, Brenda 187
Hirschman, Jack 88, 191, 197
Hogue, Cynthia 98
Hollander, Benjamin 284
Hollo, Anselm 103, 185
Holman, Bob 5, 141, 195, 336
Homer 61
Hoover, Paul 129, 180, 216
House, White 52
Howard, Peter 104, 252
Howe, Susan 148
Hughes, Langston 264, 282
Hughes, Ted 32, 57, 340
Huk, Romana 17
Hunter, Carrie 149
Ignatow, David 137
Iijima, Brenda 121, 191, 237, 258, 330
Indiana, Gary 61
Ireland, Lauren 52, 153, 201
Jackson, Jesse 70, 236
Jameson, Fredric 53, 59, 122, 149, 227
Jarnot, Lisa 132, 216
Jeanne, Sarah 147
Johns, Jasper 82, 217
Johnson, Thomas 58, 185, 201, 266, 273
Jonas, Stephen 35, 52
Jonas, Steve 35
Jones, Bob 120, 161, 238, 247, 253
Jordan, June 127, 328, 330
Joyce, Michael 149, 215, 255, 257
Joyce, Trevor 17
Kathryn, Mary 238, 253
Kay, Mary 238, 253
Keller, Lynn 187, 206
Kelly, Paul 3, 35, 133, 161, 219
Kelly, Robert 3, 32, 216, 310
Kelsey, Karla 187
Kempton, Karl 151
Kennedy, Kit 57
Kenner, Hugh 58
Kerouac, Jack 88, 153, 197
Kerry, John 22
Kesey, Ken 72
Khlebnikov, Velimir 238, 253, 255, 260, 265, 291, 303, 327
Killian, Kevin 79, 123, 143
Killian, Sean 121, 125, 330

Kim, Myung Mi 187, 206, 258
Kimball, Cynthia 97, 116, 338
Kimball, Jack 111, 118
Kinsella, John 216
Kizer, Carolyn 160
Klein, Michael 128
Klein, Naomi 5, 209
Koch, Kenneth 149, 264, 282, 301
Kramer, Scott 257
Kuzsai, Joel 92, 105, 110
Kyger, Joanne 344
Lacan, Jacques 59, 215
Lakoff, George 215
Lamborn, Peter 19
Larkin, Peter 313
Lauterbach, Ann 316
Lazar, Hank 131, 249
Lederer, Katy 79, 84, 111, 118
Leftwich, Jim 111, 118
Levertov, Denise 160
Levine, Jeffrey 122, 227
Levy, Andrew 97, 116, 333
Ley, Jennifer 82
Lifson, Beth 48
Lightman, Ira 23, 232
London, Frank 12, 52, 143, 211, 216
Long, Brent 263
Mac Low, Jackson 27
Lubasch, Lisa 60, 84, 105
Luoma, Bill 79
Lynch, Jessica 215
Mackey, Nate 210
Mackey, Nathaniel 210
Madison, James 114, 282, 283, 302
Malcolm, Janet 258
Mallarmé, Stéphane 78, 149
Mangold, Sarah 111, 118
Mapplethorpe, Robert 238, 253
Marsh, William 111, 118
Martin, Chris 12, 84
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 253, 260
Mayer, Bernadette 187, 206, 243, 264, 282, 333
Mayer, Jane 49, 206, 238, 243, 253, 282
Mayhew, Jonathan 164, 320
McCaffery, Steve 21, 236
Mead, Taylor 27
Meltzer, David 88, 197
Melville, Pierre 15, 25
Menard, Pierre 61
Mengham, Rod 201, 313
Merrill, Stuart 32, 170
Mesmer, Sharon 27
Messerli, Douglas 72
Metcalf, Paul 15, 25, 117, 330
Meyer, Tom 27, 78
Middleton, Peter 129, 180
Miki, Roy 10
Miller, Henry 72
Miller, Lee 48, 101, 187
Mills, Billy 17
Mills, Susan 6, 24
Milne, Drew 17
Milton, John 15, 25, 97, 116
Moore, Marianne 58
Moore, Nicholas 243
Moore, Rebecca 344
Moriarty, Laura 79, 187, 258
Morrison, Rusty 191, 225, 258
Morrison, Toni 52
Morrow, Charles 63, 65, 66, 67, 179
Morse, Jesse 318
Mossin, Andrew 98
Moure, Erin 201
Moxley, Jennifer 129, 180, 216
Muldoon, Paul 16
Mullen, Harryette 149, 187, 206
Murphy, Michelle 98
Murphy, Sheila 97, 116, 216
Murray, Elizabeth 57, 238, 253
Myles, Eileen 236
Myouka, Alan 236
Napora, Joe 78
Neilson, Melanie 89
Nelson, Jason 258
Nguyen, Hoa 75, 97, 116
Nicholls, Peter 129, 180
Niedecker, Lorine 264, 282
Nolan, Kevin 201, 313
Norman, Peter 48, 143, 157, 181, 209
Norton, John 143
Notely, Alice 264, 282
Notley, Alice 185, 282, 328, 330
O'Hara, Frank 75, 181, 216, 264, 282
Oliver, Laura 321
Olson, Charles 91, 108, 160, 264, 282, 318
Oppen, George 117
Ortiz, Travis 143
Osman, Jena 89
Ostashevsky, Eugene 47, 48, 79
Owen, Maureen 187, 206
Pacific, Asian 143
Padgett, Ron 27, 236
Palma, Christine 161
Palmer, Michael 58, 60, 201
Parks, Lori 57
Patchen, Kenneth 117, 299, 305
Paterson, William 264, 282
Patterson, Ian 49, 231
Peirce, Kathleen 306
Perelman, Bob 53, 59, 122
Perkoff, Stuart Z. 88, 197, 202
Peters, Mark 57, 153, 227, 236
Peterson, Katie 49

Pettet, Simon 27
Phillip, Andrew 122, 324
Phipps, Wanda 27
Plath, Sylvia 32
Pound, Ezra 58, 264, 282
Pound, Scott 32, 33, 39, 42, 54, 58, 61, 255, 257
Prevallet, Kristin 191
Prigent, Christian 201
Di Prima, Diane 284
Pruitt, Patricia 125
Prynne, J. H. 52, 216, 313
Quasha, George 186
Quasha, Susan 186
Quillen, Lori 121
Quixote, Don 52, 235
Ramsdell, Heather 86, 199
Ranaldo, Lee 153
Rasula, Jed 21
Raworth, Tom 313
Rehm, Pam 86, 199
Reid, Jamie 10
Retallack, Joan 57, 120, 149, 247
Rexroth, Kenneth 26, 264, 282
Reznikoff, Charles 264, 282
Ribot, Marc 213, 319
Richards, Brian 243
Riding, Laura 241
Riley, Peter 201
Rimbaud, Dee 134, 142, 156, 238, 253
Risset, Jacqueline 258
Robertson, Lisa 310
Robinson, Elizabeth 98, 258
Robinson, Kit 155
Robinson, Mary 275, 299, 305
Rodin, Renee 10
Rohrer, Matt 147
Ronk, Martha 124, 175, 187
Roosevelt, Franklin 238
Rosenthal, Chuck 205, 228, 264, 266, 267, 270, 273, 274, 277, 279, 282, 283, 288, 289, 293, 299, 301, 302, 304, 305, 310, 322, 324, 326, 329, 334, 339, 342
Rothenberg, Jerry 114, 276, 292, 332
Rothenberg, Michael 216
Roubaud, Jacques 149
Roy, Camille 123, 155
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 123, 258
Sanders, Jay 153
Sappho 153
Scalapino, Leslie 27, 79, 84, 187, 206, 243
Schelling, Andrew 170
Schmidt, Paul 238, 253, 265, 291
Schneider, Dan 215, 313
Schultz, Susan M. 42, 236
Schuyler, James 15, 25
Schwerner, Armand 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 103, 174, 179, 182, 189, 208
Scroggins, Mark 58
Selby, Spencer 82, 98
Shakespeare, William 144, 251
Sharma, Prageeta 84, 105, 147
Shaw, Lytle 79, 191
Shelley, Mary 20
Shepard, Matthew 79
Shepard, Sam 57
Sigler, Jeremy 133
Sikelianos, Eleni 330
Simon, Greg 27, 83, 137, 176, 201
Simone, Frank 187
Simpson, Bennett 83, 176
Skinner, Jonathan 100
Sloan, Margaret 187, 206
Smith, Rod 191
Smith, Tracy K. 48, 78, 89, 123, 155, 161
Snyder, Gary 160, 264, 282
Snyder, Rick 324
Sondheim, Alan 111, 118
Spahr, Boyd 191
Sparrow, John 68, 179
Spicer, Jack 35, 253, 264, 282, 310
Stalin, Joseph 209, 238, 253
Stanley, George 10
Stanley, Jared 73, 144, 251
Starr, Kenneth 52
Stecopoulos, Eleni 13, 100
Stefans, Kim 89, 97, 116, 191, 236
Stein, Charles 186
Stein, Gertrude 149, 213, 333
Stein, Suzanne 149, 255, 257, 265, 271, 291
Steinbeck, John 52
Steiner, George 61, 91, 108, 114, 154, 232
Stevens, Wallace 58, 61, 179, 318
Stewart, Susan 27, 227
Strand, Mark 340
Strang, Brian 123
Styron, William 52
Sullivan, Gary 97, 116, 121, 330
Sumner, Graham 161
Swensen, Cole 21
Taggart, John 58
Tarkos, Christophe 201
Tarn, Nathaniel 216
Tate, James 137
Taussig, Michael 49
Taylor, Jesse 29, 333
Terry, Philip 83, 176
Texas, Irving 34, 43, 61, 238, 253
Thackrey, Susan 284
Thomas, Dylan 15, 25, 26, 49, 98, 238, 253, 264, 282, 289, 321
Thompson, Jon 141, 149
Thomson, Stephen 255, 257
Tills, Steve 307
Toscano, Rodrigo 89, 123, 191

Tranter, John 216
Treadwell, Carol 258
Trinidad, David 27
Truitt, Sam 155
Turner, Brian 215
Twain, Mark 52, 153
Vaughan, Sarah 26, 49
Verlaine, Paul 41
Violi, Paul 27, 97, 116
Virgil 255, 257
Waldman, Anne 153
Waldrop, Keith 129, 180
Waldrop, Rosmarie 129, 180
Walker, Alice 10, 201, 238, 253
Wallace, Edgar 149
Wallace, Sara 166
Walsh, Catherine 17
Warner, Jim 325
Warren, Jim 21, 227
Warsh, Lewis 6, 24, 27, 79, 97, 98, 116
Washington, Harold 12, 52, 101, 149
Watson, Sasha 115
Watson, Scott 97, 116
Weatherly, Tom 136, 248
Weinberger, Eliot 216
Weiner, Hannah 143
Weiss, Irving 258
Weldon, Rebecca 299, 305
Wellman, Don 57, 225
Whalen, Philip 324
Wheeler, Susan 139, 213
Whitehead, Helen 153
Whitehead, Ron 153
Whyte, Ryan 111, 118
Wieners, John 35
Wilkinson, John 313
Williams, Diane 225
Williams, Roger 15, 25
Williams, Tony 25, 57, 225, 328, 342
Williams, William Carlos 58, 264, 282, 301
Williamson, Aaron 120, 247
Wilson, Robert 238, 253
Wilson, Steve 19, 245
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 232
Wordsworth, William 61
Wright, James 241, 314, 333
Yates, Katie 19
Yau, John 27, 181
Zedd, Nick 27
Zimmerman, Daniel 78
Zinnes, Harriet 258
Zukofsky, Louis 58, 117

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 12, 64, 90, 191, 257
Aesthetics 61, 69, 79, 145, 149, 191, 241
Afghanistan 12, 157
African American poetry 19, 149
Anthologies 41, 61, 122, 143, 148, 153, 185, 227
Appropriation 182, 191, 231, 263
Archives and libraries 3, 8, 19, 83, 96, 113, 149, 153, 161, 187, 206, 209, 227
Autobiography 143, 149, 153, 257, 291
Avant-garde 122, 149, 153, 209, 216, 238, 253
Beat generation 153
Beauty 329
Biography 79, 88, 104, 153, 182, 186, 197, 216, 227, 252, 305, 339
Book announcements 36, 49, 80, 125, 143, 153, 186, 213, 215, 216, 219, 255, 313, 314
Bookstores 29, 34, 43, 81, 111, 118, 153, 318, 339
Calls for submissions 82, 87, 104, 191, 252, 275
Capitalism 5, 59, 310
Censorship 61, 149, 275
Cities 153
Collage and montage 117, 194, 203, 209, 210, 264, 282
Conferences and festivals 17, 46, 49, 61, 64, 65, 120, 129, 142, 149, 153, 156, 164, 177, 178, 180, 187, 188, 190, 201, 216, 238, 243, 247, 253, 269, 318
Copyright and permissions 15, 25, 136, 248
Creative writing pedagogy 188
Deconstruction 275
Difficulty 233
Disability 77
Dreams 10, 45, 63, 65, 66, 67, 79, 182, 209, 264, 282, 299, 305
Editing 12, 13, 41, 104, 153, 174, 206, 208, 252, 290, 340
Electronic poetry and hypertext 61, 66, 80, 91, 95, 108, 120, 203, 236, 247, 318
Elegy 185, 264, 282, 299, 305
Empire and imperialism 153
Epic 15, 25, 155, 216, 266, 285, 335
Epistemology 58, 79, 160
Erasure 284
Ethics 149, 241
Experimental poetry 17, 21, 167, 219
Fascism 132
Feminism 157, 185, 191, 241, 275
Film 52, 149, 153, 209, 215
Fluxus 209
Formalism 132, 216, 232
Gender 92, 105, 110, 132, 145, 149, 165, 191, 275
Globalization 149
Grants and funding 115, 166, 209, 227, 245, 333
Haiku 97, 116, 231

Harlem Renaissance 149
Hermeneutics 45, 61, 91, 108
Homophonic translation 232
Humour and satire 34, 43, 52, 153, 227, 318
Ideology 149, 253, 255
Improvisation 111, 118, 194, 203, 210, 296
Indigenous and Native poetics 323
Interviews 80, 88, 99, 117, 153, 182, 191, 197, 215, 216, 258, 298
Jewish poetics 58, 184, 292
Language poetry 53, 59, 111, 118, 122, 149, 243, 275
Latino and Latin American poetry 52
Letters and correspondence 61, 117, 182, 290
List moderation 92, 105, 110, 153, 172, 182, 290
Little magazines 1, 5, 34, 35, 43, 48, 49, 52, 61, 79, 81, 82, 84, 91, 96, 108, 121, 123, 143, 149, 153, 171, 189, 191, 209, 215, 216, 217, 227, 231, 234, 237, 241, 258, 276, 292, 318, 319, 330
Lyric poetry 74, 84, 143, 185, 238, 243, 253, 275, 284, 307
Marxism 58, 184
Memory 36, 52, 64, 73, 120, 149, 150, 164, 223, 247, 264, 282, 284, 307
MFA programs 138, 170, 325
Modernism 32, 58, 59, 91, 108, 149, 217, 257, 271, 275, 296
Mourning and loss 149, 182, 196, 211, 221, 236, 261, 284, 312, 335, 341
Multiculturalism 275
Music and poetry 10, 18, 21, 40, 63, 65, 66, 67, 82, 83, 85, 91, 108, 109, 111, 112, 115, 118, 126, 141, 148, 149, 153, 176, 190, 194, 200, 201, 203, 210, 215, 226, 238, 241, 250, 253, 256, 257, 262, 298, 301, 310, 311, 320, 334, 341, 344
Nature 31, 61, 82, 143, 149, 198, 217, 227, 240, 275, 296, 298
Negativity and refusal 275
New York School 216
Obituary and memorial 8, 181, 238, 253, 265, 291, 318
Ontology 346
Performance and the poetry reading 6, 16, 24, 48, 83, 143, 149, 166, 170, 176, 187, 201, 213, 244, 307, 319, 328, 344
Phenomenology 4, 19, 26, 35, 183, 227
Philosophy 19, 20, 87, 149, 166, 183, 186, 215, 227, 275, 296
Place and region 228, 275, 293
Poet laureate 153, 190
Poetics 35, 38, 55, 58, 61, 77, 78, 79, 87, 95, 102, 103, 120, 122, 132, 138, 140, 141, 149, 151, 152, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 164, 167, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 191, 197, 199, 201, 202, 203, 208, 210, 216, 221, 227, 241, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 264, 272, 273, 274, 275, 282, 283, 284, 289, 290, 296, 298, 315, 319, 322, 323, 324, 325, 343
Postmodernism 58, 59, 149, 296
Print vs. digital 10, 15, 25, 61, 74, 91, 108, 109, 114, 137, 153, 241, 299, 305, 325, 341, 343
Prizes and awards 49, 52, 57, 85, 152, 153, 160, 166, 170, 213, 227, 257, 259, 325, 333
Procedural and constraint writing 143
Prose poem 333
Prosody and meter 160, 285
Psychoanalysis 209, 215, 227, 275
Queer poetics 126, 165, 257, 275
Race and poetry 149, 310
Reading announcements 6, 24, 100, 115, 139, 166, 168, 212, 223, 244, 344
Religion and the sacred 12, 19, 26, 49, 52, 164, 201, 216, 296, 341
Representation 149, 191, 215, 241
Reviewing and criticism 5, 21, 58, 74, 84, 91, 108, 128, 138, 144, 148, 149, 150, 151, 153, 154, 215, 216, 217, 231, 251, 255, 257, 271, 275, 340
Romanticism 144, 251
Science 20, 126, 149, 227
Semiotics 31, 149, 209, 231, 232
Serial poem 153, 205, 220, 228, 264, 266, 267, 270, 272, 273, 274, 277, 279, 282, 283, 285, 288, 289, 293, 299, 301, 302, 304, 305, 310, 314, 315, 317, 322, 324, 326, 329, 334, 335, 339, 342, 343
Small press publishing 34, 43, 75, 79, 84, 96, 111, 118, 143, 166, 183, 191, 213, 231, 241, 243, 284, 296, 307, 313, 319, 333
Software and code 30, 49, 157, 184
Sonnet 74, 126, 299, 305
Structuralism 227
Subjectivity 61, 134, 138, 183, 210, 215
Sublime 153
Surrealism 153, 314
Terrorism 48
The academy 2, 16, 19, 21, 32, 49, 52, 58, 61, 73, 83, 84, 85, 122, 129, 135, 148, 149, 153, 157, 164, 166, 170, 176, 180, 187, 190, 209, 213, 215, 217, 223, 227, 238, 253, 267, 275, 307, 320, 332, 333, 340
The body 10, 104, 173, 225, 227, 252
The canon 109, 187, 241, 275
The Holocaust 12
The internet 1, 49, 82, 120, 161, 165, 186, 216, 236, 247
The line 149, 232
The listserv 1, 31, 35, 38, 58, 79, 87, 91, 95, 102, 108, 131, 159, 161, 188, 194, 196,

203, 210, 217, 221, 245, 246, 249, 258, 275, 290, 306, 324, 325
Theatre 17, 52, 57, 83, 117, 120, 126, 143, 153, 155, 176, 212, 238, 247, 253, 319, 341, 346
Torture and Abu Ghraib 138
Translation 12, 50, 52, 57, 58, 61, 63, 65, 66, 67, 73, 74, 86, 91, 96, 97, 103, 108, 114, 116, 134, 142, 149, 153, 154, 156, 170, 174, 186, 189, 191, 199, 208, 215, 216, 232, 238, 253, 258, 265, 291, 340
Vietnam 10, 52
Visual and concrete poetry 82, 143
Visual art 21, 79, 82, 83, 120, 149, 176, 181, 191, 209, 215, 247, 319, 333
Voice 101
Women's writing 92, 105, 110, 115, 132

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 346 in all.

29 JAN 1999

1. Mark Salerno — Writers & Poets Must Support Magazines
2. miekal and — Re: alchemy bibliography
3. Aldon Nielsen — Re: alchemy bibliography
4. Maria Damon — Re: alchemy bibliography
5. nuyopoman — Billboards
6. Noam Scheindlin — Warsh, Mlinko, Mills Reading

30 JAN 1999

7. Rebecca Wolff — Re: alchemy bibliography
8. Ron Silliman — Frances Jaffer
9. Don Byrd — Alchemy
10. Billy Little — Goh Poh Seng at Havana
11. Tom Beckett — Location Is Everything

31 JAN 1999

12. Joe Brennan — Petition: Mistreatment of Women
13. Mike Kelleher — new improved alyric 9
14. Herb Levy — Poetry on radio shows?
15. Herb Levy — Paul Metcalf
16. Craig Dworkin — Spring Reading Series

1 FEB 1999

17. Alex Davis — Cork Poetry Festival
18. Charles Alexander — query
19. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: alchemy bibliography
20. Steven Shoemaker — Re: alchemy bibliography
21. Pritchett,Patrick — FW: Steve McCaffery reading
22. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: Poetry on radio shows?
23. Lawrence Upton. — RWC
24. Noam Scheindlin — Mills, Mlinko, Warsh Reading
25. SAMUEL GARREN — Re: Paul Metcalf
26. SAMUEL GARREN — Re: alchemy bibliography
27. Poetry Project — this week at the Project
28. gjfarrah — No subject was specified.
29. joel lewis — f.y.i.

2 FEB 1999

30. A. Jenn Sondheim — REQUEST
31. Michael Magee — Re: Location Is Everything
32. Timothy Materer — Poets and Alchemy
33. Ron Silliman — Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
34. David Baratier — Distribution
35. Stephen Ellis — Re: alchemy bibliography
36. James Sherry — Roof Books: New Titles
37. Alaric Sumner — robert lax
38. Poetics List — queries
39. charssmith — Re: Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
40. Karen Kelley — Re: query
41. Edward Foster — American Symbolists
42. Susan M. Schultz — Re: Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
43. Karen McKevitt — Re: Distribution
44. Jordan Davis — Re: definitions

3 FEB 1999

45. A. Jenn Sondheim — jennifer
46. joel lewis — f.y.i.
47. Katie Degentesh — NINE BE MINE
48. Katie Degentesh — SF POETRY THIS WEEKEND
49. benjamin bratton — Cultural Turn Electronic Conferences
50. david bromige — a footnote to poets & alchemy
51. Anastasios Kozaitis — Coincidence?
52. Anastasios Kozaitis — Clinton according to Gabriel Garcia Marquez
53. Steven Shoemaker — Jameson ref
54. raea100900 — Re: Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
55. Richard Carfagna — Re: robert lax

4 FEB 1999

56. daniel bouchard — Re: Clinton according to Gabriel Garcia Marquez
57. Douglas — New Sun & Moon titles
58. Hank Lazer — Discount Offer: Louis Zukofsky and the Poetry of Knowledge
59. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Jameson ref
60. Christopher Reiner — Avec Reading
61. Jamie Ferguson — Re: Steiner, Venuti, Polish Baroque verse
62. Michael Heller — (no subject)
63. Charles Bernstein — Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
64. Aldon Nielsen — Armand Schwerner
65. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
66. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
67. louis stroffolino — Re: Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
68. charssmith — Re: Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
69. Chris McCreary — address requests-- Synaesthetic, tight

5 FEB 1999

70. Douglas Oliver — Re: Schwerner
71. Rebecca Wolff — Re: two ann(e)s are better
72. Douglas — another death
73. Judy Roitman — A Chicago reading
74. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: alchemy bibliography
75. Dale Smith — What's With Modern Art?
76. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — stein online...
77. Poetics List — Note to Poetics
78. Poetics List — Oasis Press publications
79. cwa — Shark Call
80. Charles Bernstein — Seminary Co-Op Interview

7 FEB 1999

81. Rebecca Wolff — apropos of distribution
82. Alaric Sumner — Perihelion (soundtextimage section) Call For Submissions
83. Alaric Sumner — The Flea Theatre Reading Series, New York, Feb 17
84. Katherine Lederer — New/ PERMANENT address for Explosive/ Spectacular Books
85. Kathleen Crown — Ed Roberson -- Seton Hall Reading
86. Garrett Kalleberg — TF8 - 2/99 - Coffins
87. Peter Ganick — POTEPOETZINE / POTEPOETTEXT
88. jesse glass — Stuart Z. Perkoff and the Temple of Man
89. Louis Cabri — PhillyTalks 9

8 FEB 1999

90. A. Jenn Sondheim — (from Nikuko) (please forward to her friends)
91. Jamie Ferguson — (no subject)
92. louis stroffolino — BATTLE OF THE SEXES

93. jasfoley — Re: (Fwd) Coincidence?
94. jasfoley — correction
95. Charles Bernstein — UB MAIL / Poetics List DOWN
96. Elizabeth Treadwell — Clean Laundry Times Fashion Week - OR - Double Lucy's New Improved ...
97. John Kimball — Haiku and misdemeanors

9 FEB 1999

98. Heather H Thomas — get your 6ix
99. Daniel Kane — Tom Carey on WriteNet
100. Mike Kelleher — Reading
101. R. Gancie/C.Parcelli — readings and contests
102. Poetics List — More trouble...
103. Poetics List — Armand Schwerner 1927-1999
104. Alaric Sumner — MAY
105. Katherine Lederer — BATTLE OF THE SEXES
106. Aldon Nielsen — Re: BATTLE OF THE SEXES
107. Aldon Nielsen — reply to sender
108. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
109. Jessica Pompeii — ASIDE / FROM THE BATTLE
110. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: BATTLE OF THE SEXES
111. Peter Ganick — POTES & POETS CHAPBOOKS
112. Billy Little — you

10 FEB 1999

113. Peter Ganick — archive for POTEPOETZINE/TEXT
114. Pierre Joris — [Fwd: Steiner, Venuti, Polish Baroque verse]
115. ShaunAnne Tangney Humanities — readings in the middle of nowhere--
116. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Haiku and misdemeanors
117. sylvester pollet — Metcalf special offer
118. Peter Ganick — POTES & POETS CHAPBOOKS
119. Jacques Debrot — Re: BATTLE OF THE SEXES
120. Ric Allsopp (by way of John Cayley) — IET Symposium, Utrecht, 1999: Details + Registration ...
121. Erik Sweet — "Tool a Magazine Issue Party"
122. Safdie Joseph — FW: Jameson ref
123. Kathy Lou Schultz — Lipstick Eleven
124. Kathy Lou Schultz — Martha Ronk
125. Edward Foster — Friday in New York
126. A. Jenn Sondheim — some recent things
127. Jordan Davis — Re: BATTLE OF THE SEXES
128. BETSY ANDREWS — address queries

11 FEB 1999

129. Michel Delville — Post-war American Poetry: An International Conference (University of Lieg...
130. A. Jenn Sondheim — Moment on Media MOO
131. Burt Hatlen — Ted Enslin
132. Linda V Russo — Berrigan, Jarnot & BATTLE OF THE SEXES
133. Jordan Davis — Meters 1
134. Pete Neufeld — Translation
135. Catherine Daly — Cool Hong Kong job
136. Aldon Nielsen — Weatherly Whereabouts
137. David Baratier — Introduction
138. juliana spahr — [Fwd: literary criticism]

12 FEB 1999

139. Catherine Daly — Wheeler Hammer Reading
140. Poetics List — misc.
141. Poetics List — Mirror Man
142. david bromige — re translation
143. dbkk — Burns, Fodaski, Armantrout, Ortiz, in San Francisco
144. Michael Boughn — Re: [Fwd: literary criticism]
145. Maria Damon — Re: BATTLE OF THE SEXES
146. Karen Kelley — Paul Beatty
147. Magdalena Zurawski — Poets who want attention
148. David Zauhar — Re: [Fwd: literary criticism]
149. david hess — Dave's Adventures in Steinland
150. Steven Shoemaker — Re: [Fwd: literary criticism]
151. Bob Grumman — The Latest fromComprepoetica
152. Charles Bernstein — Bollingen Prize in Poetry
153. Anastasios Kozaitis — Whitehead interviews Ferlinghetti
154. Jamie Ferguson — Joris and Venuti
155. Poetry Project — this week at the Project
156. sylvester pollet — Re: re translation
157. Poetics List — Fwd: Taliban's war on women / hoax
158. Poetics List — Re: reply to sender
159. Poetics List — unfortunately a delay
160. Poetics List — Robert Creeley

13 FEB 1999

161. Herb Levy — poetry/radio
162. Ron Silliman — (no subject)

14 FEB 1999

163. Judy Smith McDonough — poetrynow
164. Judy Roitman — KS poetics
165. Peter Ganick — interesting new cultural website

15 FEB 1999

166. Katie Degentesh — 9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9x9
167. Roger Farr — EWL1 (fwd)
168. Rebecca Wolff — my reading at the Ear Inn

16 FEB 1999

169. Tom Beckett — Nothing Is Indivisible
170. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Left Hand Reading Series - Feb.99
171. David Baratier — Invitorium
172. Poetics List — list status
173. Poetics List — another note
174. Poetics List — Armand Schwerner
175. Poetics List — Martha Ronk
176. Poetics List — The Flea Theatre Reading Series, New York, Feb 17
177. Poetics List — pagemothers inquiry
178. Poetics List — armand schwerner...
179. Poetics List — Re: Armand Schwerner
180. Poetics List — Post-war American Poetry: An International Conference
181. Poetics List — Norman Bluhm
182. Poetics List — Armand Schwerner (1927-1999)
183. Poetics List — Alan Sondheim's 'The Case of the Real'
184. Poetics List — Sliding
185. Pritchett,Patrick — Notley Talk
186. Poetics List — Station Hill Blanchot Reader
187. Summi Kaipa — Re: pagemothers inquiry

188. Juliana Spahr — conference on poetry and pedagogy
189. Mark Weiss — Re: Armand Schwerner
190. Aldon Nielsen — Re: a number of matters
191. David Buuck — Tripwire: a journal of poetics
192. David Baratier — Reinvitorium
193. Pamela Brown — web site address change

17 FEB 1999

194. Sean Casey — poetry & sound
195. nuyopoman — poetry/radio
196. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Mail Loss
197. Poetics List — Stuart Z. Perkoff and the Temple of Man
198. Michael Franco — CAMBRIDGE / BOSTON READINGS
199. Poetics List — TF8 - 2/99 - Coffins
200. Michael Magee — Re: Jaki Byard
201. Poetics List — THE CAMBRIDGE CONFERENCE OF CONTEMPORARY POETRY
202. Poetics List — Re: Stuart Z. Perkoff and the Temple of Man
203. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: poetry & sound
204. Katherine Lederer — New Vegas Web Zine
205. Jennifer Rosenthal — long poem
206. raea100900 — Re: pagemothers inquiry
207. dbkk — prose: definitions
208. Edward Foster — Re: Armand Schwerner
209. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — for fun...
210. Michael Magee — Re: poetry & sound
211. Lawrence Upton. — (no subject)
212. Matthew J Chambers — (no subject)
213. Christopher Reiner — Wheeler/de Lissovoy Reading
214. David Baratier — Readings

18 FEB 1999

215. Other Voices — Other Voices 1.3 now available online
216. Poetics List — Announcement: Issue # 6 of Jacket magazine is now stitched up and ready to ...
217. Keith Tuma — advert

19 FEB 1999

218. Randy Prunty — Joshua Beckman
219. Louis Cabri — PhillyTalks 10
220. david bromige — re long poem
221. Poetics List — promised update
222. Matthew J Chambers — apology & announcement
223. Judy Roitman — Chicago
224. Magdalena Zurawski — SHOW UP!
225. Poetry Project — this week at the poproj
226. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap — Re: prose: definitions
227. Safdie Joseph — FW: the envelope please...
228. Charles Alexander — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
229. Michael Scharf — Page Mothers

20 FEB 1999

230. Rebecca Wolff — Re: po
231. Jim Bennett — Chapbooks
232. Harold Teichman — Re: Steiner... (misc remarks on translation)
233. A. Jenn Sondheim — MM (testing)
234. sylvester pollet — Sunday reading
235. Jordan Davis — Hymn to Substitution

236. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Deluxe Rubber Chicken #2

21 FEB 1999

237. Elizabeth Treadwell — prose: definitions
238. Charles Bernstein — Goodbye, Paul (Paul Schmidt 1934-1999)
239. A. Jenn Sondheim — Tha Hermit

22 FEB 1999

240. Michael Franco — BOSTON READINGS
241. louis stroffolino — Re: ASIDE / FROM THE BATTLE
242. Rachel Levitsky — Jeff Oppenheim
243. lee ann brown — Lee Ann's Polyverse Reading Tour
244. Noam Scheindlin — Gilbert/ La Roe / Moritz Reading
245. Poetics List — CAC Funding Bill
246. Poetics List — promised update
247. Poetics List — IET Symposium, Utrecht, 1999: Details + Registration Form
248. Poetics List — Weatherly Whereabouts
249. Poetics List — Ted Enslin
250. Poetics List — you
251. Poetics List — Re: [Fwd: literary criticism]
252. Poetics List — MAY
253. Mark Prejsnar — Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
254. Richard Carfagna — david jones
255. Steven Shoemaker — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
256. Poetry Project — this week at poproj: addendum
257. Ron Silliman — Disappearing Stein (stupid modernism)
258. Elizabeth Treadwell — Outlet (3) is here
259. Burt Kimmelman — William Bronk, 1918-1999 (please see way
260. pete spence — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov

23 FEB 1999

261. Mark Weiss — Bill Bronk
262. Edward Foster — William Bronk
263. Lisa Bourbeau — missing person
264. Poetics List — long poem / Rosenthal
265. schuchat — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
266. Michael Boughn — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
267. David Kellogg — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
268. Christopher W Alexander — William Bronk (1918-1999)
269. Emily Grossman — Page Mother Transport
270. Lowther,John — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
271. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Disappearing Stein (stupid modernism)
272. Poetics List — Re: long poem
273. Poetics List — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
274. Poetics List — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
275. Poetics List — CFP: Robinson Jeffers (3/25; MLA 1999)
276. Lowther,John — David Antin
277. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
278. Maria Damon — lorenzo thomas
279. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
280. acgold01 — Addresses
281. Todd Baron /*/ ReMap — Re: William Bronk
282. Pierre Joris — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
283. Pierre Joris — Re: long poem / Rosenthal

24 FEB 1999

284. Tina Rotenberg — please post -- thank you!

285. Michael Boughn — Re: long poem
286. Michael Boughn — question
287. louis stroffolino — RONK AND/OR RATCLIFFE REQUEST...
288. ShaunAnne Tangney Humanities — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
289. Poetics List — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
290. Poetics List — three reminders
291. Anastasios Kozaitis — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
292. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: David Antin
293. Lowther,John — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
294. Anastasios Kozaitis — Re: question
295. Lowther,John — David Antin - audio addendum +
296. Peter Ganick — 3 NEW Potes & Poets chapbooks
297. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: lorenzo thomas
298. Poetics List — William Bronk (1918-1999)
299. D Baratier — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
300. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: David Antin - audio addendum +
301. Billy Little — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
302. Rita Zilberman — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
303. Steven Shoemaker — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
304. Edward Foster — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
305. Mairead Byrne — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
306. Lowther,John — Buchler's THE MAIN OF LIGHT
307. Judy Roitman — Another KS event
308. komninos zervos — Re: question
309. komninos zervos — Re: question

25 FEB 1999

310. Billy Little — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
311. Billy Little — Re: William Bronk, 1918-1999 (please see way
312. A. Jenn Sondheim — Y2K: NET:
313. Leonard Brink — Instress Spring Chapbooks
314. Ron Silliman — long poems
315. Burt Hatlen — Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Feb 1999 to 24 Feb 1999 (#1999-32)
316. Rebecca Wolff — Anne Carson Re-Scheduled
317. Michael Heller — (no subject)
318. Charles Bernstein — Creeley on Bronk
319. dbkk — Two Guys Named Jeff: Clark and Derksen at SPT
320. MAYHEW — (no subject)
321. nuyopoman — Belly of the Beast
322. Poetics List — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
323. Poetics List — Fw: [CHOMSKY] Ten Worst Corporations of 1998
324. Poetics List — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
325. Poetics List — Portable Creative Writing Workshop
326. Maria Damon — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
327. Mark Weiss — Re: Goodbye Paul, Goodby Khlebnikov
328. Daniel Kane — Events at Teachers & Writers Collaborative
329. Gerald Schwartz — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
330. Erik Sweet — "Tool A Magazine" party in NYC Friday night
331. izak — greek for teacher
332. Marjorie Perloff — David Antin
333. Christopher Reiner — New from AVEC BOOKS
334. Billy Little — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
335. david bromige — the longer poem
336. nuyopoman — Creeley on MiningCo

26 FEB 1999

337. A. Jenn Sondheim — i-iii existence meshine

338. J Kimball — Another word on / for William Bronk
339. Rebecca Wolff — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
340. Michael Scharf — Montale in NYTBR
341. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Kenneth Goldsmith: Live at Hallwall's
342. D Baratier — Re: long poem / Rosenthal
343. Mairead Byrne — Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Feb 1999 to 24 Feb 1999 (#1999-32)
344. Poetry Project — This week at the Poetry Project
345. Magdalena Zurawski — WKCR 89.9

27 FEB 1999

346. Charles Bernstein — Richard Foreman

1. Mark Salerno
Writers & Poets Must Support Magazines
Fri 29 Jan 1999

Dear Colleagues:

I hope this message is not out of standard with the new guidelines for the List.

Let me encourage you all to support little magazines, and to support them with your dollars as well as your submissions. I am moved to say this because I recently had yet another desperate conversation with yet another desperate magazine distributor. These conduits for magazine distribution are experiencing hard times, thanks to the changing market place (chain stores) and changing technologies (Internet). If things continue as they are, magazine distribution as it is known today will very likely die off, because it is too labor intensive and no longer cost effective to run such a business.

This is all by way of saying that the market and the target consumer for writing is writers. If we do not buy the books that our colleagues write, and the magazines that they appear in, no one else will.

I hope this gentle reminder makes sense.

With good wishes,

Mark Salerno
Poet & Editor

↑ Index

2. miekal and
Re: alchemy bibliography
Fri 29 Jan 1999

University of WI-Madison rare books room has a good collection of 16th century alchemy books & mss, a friend spent several days poring thru them some years ago.

Miekal

↑ Index

3. Aldon Nielsen
Re: alchemy bibliography
Fri 29 Jan 1999

---

there were several "alchemical" texts during the "deep image" era -- One of the best places for your bibliography to start might be in the earlier works of Robert Kelly

(am away from my poetry library -- maybe somebody out there can recall the specific titles -- I think Kelly's collection of previously uncollected early poems had alchemy in the title)

↑ Index

4. Maria Damon
Re: alchemy bibliography
Fri 29 Jan 1999

---

thanks to all who have posted; any suggestions about books that introduce the basics of alchemy? or that riff on the metaphysical aspects of alchemy? handbooks in elementary magic or a bachelardian phenomenology? i think this is what my student wants to learn about, as well as reading examples of poetry that is alchemically inflected. thanks again all!

↑ Index

5. nuyopoman
Billboards
Fri 29 Jan 1999

The Triumph of Capitalism has not made it any easier to pay the rent.

Last month's Harpers (who published Marteen's letter in toto a year ago), had an intriguing piece on ads becoming art and artists making ads (like Beatles, like Rolling Stones, like Burroughs, like Ginsberg) that dissed Emily XYZ for her poem that "ran" as Nike ad. Emily ok'ed her response being posted here.

<<15 January 1999

Editor,
Harper’s Magazine
666 Broadway
New York NY 10012

Dear Sir:

In his article, “But Is It Advertising?” (January 1999), Jonathan Dee says that I am an example of a writer whose work “has no content -- which is to say, no connection between the language you use and your actual conviction.” Mr. Dee claims that because I wrote a poem for use in a Nike commercial, “millions” know me as “the poet from the Nike commercial,” therefore nullifying everything else I’ve done or will do. “[A]s for what her work concerns, the question is moot,” writes Mr. Dee, “since she has demonstrated that the content of that work is arbitrary; that is, it’s up for sale.” This is wrong on so many levels I hardly know where to begin responding.

Maybe the Pope was Michelangelo's Nike: The content of my writing is no more arbitrary than that of Mr. Dee or any other writer who may profit from his or her skill. Does he think that in order to be valid, a thing has to be created into the void? Can I assume, then, that he donated his article to Harper's magazine? Or that he would turn down a story assignment if the topic wasn't his idea?

I considered the Nike ad no different from any other commission or freelance job. Along with about 100 other poets, I was asked to submit poems in tribute to certain female Olympic athletes. I saw it as a challenge or a contest. It was not done in the same spirit as I usually write poetry, that is, without expectation of material gain. This was for a different purpose, just as I'm sure Mr. Dee has writings he considers different from those he would pitch to a magazine, or even different pieces for different magazines.

Which is not to say I didn't try to do a good job, even though I knew it might end up in a commercial. I found the stories of the women athletes inspiring. There was a certain transcendence in what some of them had gone through in their careers, and so I concentrated on making that point. Michelangelo might not have cared one way or the other whether a particular pope was remembered well, but he still did the best job he could.

However, the cloth coat is democratic: Mr. Dee seems to think that doing a commercial for Nike took me from obscurity to a terrible fame. Wrong! I am just as obscure as ever, only I'm a little less in debt and my grad-student husband and I own our first car -- an '86 Toyota Tercel. Not to sound too Republican-cloth-coat about this, but I got my BA as an adult, work full time, and am paying back mega-college loans. For me, that Nike ad was a godsend. But it did not make me rich, it did not make me famous, and it does not mean my work is up for sale.

You coulda called first: As for "what my work concerns," the question is really moot because Mr. Dee never bothered to find out what it concerns. He knows nothing whatsoever about me or what I do. Had he done a little research instead of just making assumptions, he would have found out that I was on the PBS series _The United States of Poetry_ a full two years before the Nike ad aired. To the extent that my work is known at all, it's largely for my participation in USOP, not in the commercial. He criticizes me in some pretty harsh terms for never having so much as picked up the phone to talk to me, or anyone who knows me, about what I do.

Calvin Klein's no friend of mine: Mr. Dee is also much more squeamish about the relationship between art and commerce than most people in 1999. Look at hip-hop, for example. Hip-hop artists use brand names and bits of commercials and TV shows constantly, not to break their power over us, but to tap into it -- to bring an audience closer via these familiar, shared references -- and by doing so, to consolidate their own power as artists and entertainers.

Saul, Saul!: What really bothered me, though, was Mr. Dee's sanctimonious criticism of other artists, like the late William Burroughs, who also did a Nike ad. Despite creating some of the greatest American literature of the 20th century and being acclaimed as one of the most influential writers ever, William Burroughs had money problems all his life. At some point he gets offered a chance for what we all want, a little security, a little comfort. Should he have turned it down, Mr. Dee, so that people like you, who are probably far more comfortable than he ever was, could have your hero? For what he did for his country, William Burroughs should have gotten a house by the sea and a pension for life. And in another country, he might have.

But the United States has always been hard on its artists, and never more so than right now. Right now, our society consists of people who expect artists to inspire them, but who don't know what inspiration is. They think it's what happens when you put a bindhi on your forehead or listen to Celine Dion. In fact, this society doesn't really want artists around at all (except for moneymakers like Celine Dion) because they think we're a drain on The Economy, which people nowadays tend to confuse with their personal money. Most people think of art as either a luxury or an expense. Either way, they wish it would just go away, and are only too happy to make its survival nearly impossible.

All of which just makes Mr. Dee's ire against artists and advertising even more superfluous than it might otherwise be. It's like he's a witness to Kristallnacht, but his big complaint is all the broken glass in the street.

Instead of worrying about the culture of advertising taking over, Mr. Dee, worry about our society's profound ignorance of the arts and artists. It is the end result of bigotry against and contempt for those who make art. Artists in the United States today are caught between a right-wing rock and a hard marketplace. Those are our choices. At least with the marketplace, you stand a chance of paying your bills.

Emily XYZ
[redacted]>>

Bob Holman

↑ Index

6. Noam Scheindlin
Warsh, Mlinko, Mills Reading
Fri 29 Jan 1999

Susan Mills, Ange Mlinko, and Lewis Warsh will be reading at the Rising Cafe reading series.

Rising Cafe is at 186 Fifth Avenue, (Park Slope) Brooklyn. To get there from Manhattan, take the downtown N or R (make sure its a local train) and get off at the Union Street Station. Walk one block up to 5th Avenue.

Reading begins at 7:30.

_____
DO YOU YAHOO!?
Get your free @yahoo.com address at http://mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

7. Rebecca Wolff
Re: alchemy bibliography
Sat 30 Jan 1999

Brenda Hillman's recent work (in Loose Sugar) alludes to the idea of alchemy a lot, with words down at the bottom of the page that are the "result" of various mixtures above.

↑ Index

8. Ron Silliman
Frances Jaffer
Sat 30 Jan 1999

Rae tells me that I'm turning into the angel of death by posting obit notices, but I think somebody should be doing this.

Frances Jaffer, a friend to many on this list and one of the editors of HOW(ever), passed away the other day. I've known her & Mark Linenthal for over 30 years and feel for him.

There's an obit by Steve Schwartz at http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/chronicle/archive/1999/01/30/MN81680.DTL

↑ Index

9. Don Byrd
Alchemy
Sat 30 Jan 1999

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>
> i know there are many links > between alchemy and poetry, but i don't know any basic helpful texts, or > poetry that is the result of alchemical experiment (other than, perhaps, > gerrit lansing's). could ye out there e me some suggestions to pass on to > him? thanks

You are right about Lansing, and his book in the Curriculum of the Soul (Institute of Further Studies) would be essential stuff. Charles Stein's book on Olson--The Secret of the Black Chrysanthemum-- is a major text and has a good bibliography. It might be a little hard to find but the Alchemy issue of _Io_ (about 1970) would lead to a wealth of poetry, relevant texts, etc.

db

↑ Index

10. Billy Little
Goh Poh Seng at Havana
Sat 30 Jan 1999

Amazingly, at the height of the santa claus frenzy, on dec. 17 over one hundred people showed up at the Havana Restaurant on Commercial Drive to hear Goh Poh Seng read at the launch of his first substantial collection of poems in North America, The Girl from Ermita & Selected Poems 1961-1998 published by Nightwood . Everybody knows Vancouver is paved with poets but i haven't seen this many people turn out for a reading since Allen Ginsberg came to town. Perce Groves was there, Barbara Webb, Renee Rodin, Scott Harker, Roy Miki, George Stanley, Jenn Lamm, Jamie Reid, Jerry and Margaret Pethick, Mina Mina, the sufi poet Muhammad, Gerry Gilbert was taping it for broadcast on Coop radio, the future prime minister Jim and Rojeanne Allworth were there, Victoria Walker, Pearl Hunt, (maybe you could add a few names here Jim, i'm just trying to plant a few seeds for future literary historians and give a hint of the broad range of the audience) all of the hundred seats were filled, people stood in the back, others sat along the side and they sat there for nearly two hours. Poh Seng can be a real charmer, he put the audience at ease starting off with laughter some funny poems among the earliest poems he'd written as a teenager in Dublin; pretty soon, he was back in Southeast Asia, he read Vietnam 1967 and you could hear a pin drop so vivid stirs strong emotion like many of his poems, you can see what he says, half singer half storyteller, he read poems he wrote in Manila, Singapore, New Zealand, Tahiti, Vancouver, Newfoundland, Hornby Island, San Miguel poems of friendship, poems of encounter, poems of outrage, domestic poems, poems of celebration. He read for an hour, had a ten minute break during which copies of the book so beautifully designed by his son Goh Kajin seemed to leap from the boxes, and cash flew from the pockets of the clamoring fans, people bought two and three(christmas, hanukah, ramadan after all). By the time he'd finished nearly an hour later, he'd read a sampling from each of his earlier books, Eyewitness, Lines from Batu Ferringhi, Bird With One Wing, and the most recent poems Spring Moon Blues which includes Gate of Heavenly Peace, the incredible Tian An Men Square poem that he'd written in Cowhead, Newfoundland, which marks his flowering as a canadian poet.. During the course of his reading he spoke of his emigration, his denunciation in the Singapore parliament, his adaptation to canada, and he closed the reading in his back garden on Victoria Drive. _____

WAKE FOR CHARLES WATTS

Summer's beginning to end
Beethoven's Fifth on CBC Radio Two pours out of the kitchen onto the back deck
where I've been idling washing me down onto our small back garden which Margaret, the boys and I started creating some four years back, when we tried to make the house a home Actually, the garden was more Margaret's passion than the rest of us.

Come to think of it,
it was about the same time you told me you had cancer when we met strolling down Commercial Drive,
the main thoroughfare
       in our neighborhood.

Now, leaves are already yellowing, wilted flowers waiting to be dead-headed,

plants and trees cut back for the Fall for Winter
the small ceremonies of living and dying.

And this, one of the last golden afternoons
when the other world seems far away
or perhaps very close by.

Vancouver
August, 1998

Our Back Garden
Victoria Drive

So brief, really are these weeks of summer
conjured out of our back garden that i should not hold on to them simply let go.

There,
one sigh
and they're gone forever.

Vietnam 1967

Beginning another vigil
he regards the tentative sun through a fragmented sky;
otherwise there is only greenness.
In the still quiet dawn
he downs a mug of tea,
leans his rifle against a tree and now and then recalls his home unearths another day.
He is far from his hamlet.

It was an unquestioning life, tilling the stubborn land that defies the controlling hand of man.

There was consolation, now he knows tha laughter of his child, the softness of his wife who yielded to him at night
So what if kingdoms topple?

His dream shakes the silent air.

He sees his home gutted in the sun,
he sees his wife, head blown off,
the body of his child strewn among young stubble of padi.

For days he prowled that waste unable to quell his hate.
How to mobilize that precise pain?

Time passes.
Now and then a recall of home:
she chants at night to their child who smiles, remembering small mischiefs.
After losing them,
their absence remains.

He makes his fists into a power fierce as one whose sinews could manage the sun.

In the glare of the sun
the planes beautiful like silver spears
come in an eddy of air.

Amongst battered tree trunks his blood splatter
into uncanny flowers.

Over the gentle contour of hills and the sea,
the happy young crew from afar returns to the air.

forbidden plateau fallen body dojo
4 song st.
nowhere, b.c. V0R1Z0
canadaddy

↑ Index

11. Tom Beckett
Location Is Everything
Sat 30 Jan 1999

The Inside
is the Outside doubled

Where are our folds?

Fuck me
if I know

↑ Index

12. Joe Brennan
Petition: Mistreatment of Women
Sun 31 Jan 1999

In a message dated 1/31/99 10:04:36 AM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<<
> * Martin Dufresne
> * Montreal Men Against Sexism
>
> **
>
> The government of Afghanistan is waging a war upon women. The situation is > getting so bad that one person in an editorial of the times compared the > treatment of women there to the treatment of jews in pre-holocaust poland.
> Since the Taliban took power in 1996, women have had to wear burqua and > have been beaten and stoned in public for not having the proper attire, > even if this means simply not having the mesh covering in front of their > eyes.
>
> One woman was beaten to DEATH by an angry mob of fundamentalists for > accidentally exposing her arm while she was driving.
>
> Another was stoned to death for trying to leave the country with a man that > was not a relative. Women are not allowed to work or even go out in public > without a male relative; professional women such as professors, > translators, doctors, lawyers, artists and writers have been forced from > their jobs and stuffed into their homes, so that depression is becoming so > widespread that it has reached emergency levels.

>
> There is no way in such an extreme islamic society to know the suicide rate > with certainty, but relief workers are estimating that the suicide rate > among women, who cannot find proper medication and treatment for severe > depression and would rather take their lives than live in such conditions, > has increased significantly. Homes where a woman is present must have their > windows painted so that she can never be seen by outsiders. They must wear > silent shoes so that they are never heard. Women live in fear of their > lives for the slightest misbehavior. Because they cannot work, those > without male relatives or husbands are either starving to death or begging > on the street, even if they hold Ph.D.'s.
>
> There are almost no medical facilities available for women, and relief > workers, in protest, have mostly left the country, taking medicine and > psychologists and other things necessary to treat the skyrocketing level of > depression among women.
>
> At one of the rare hospitals for women, a reporter found still, nearly > lifeless bodies lying motionless on top of beds, wrapped in their burqua, > unwilling to speak, eat or do anything, but are slowly wasting away. Others > have gone mad and were seen crouched in corners perpetually rocking or > crying, most of them in fear. One doctor is considering, when what little > medication that is left finally runs out, leaving these women in front of > the president's residence as a form of peaceful protest. It is at the point > where the term 'human rights violations' have become an understatement.
>
> Husbands have the power of life and death over their women relatives, > especially their wives, but an angry mob has just as much right to stone or > beat a woman, often to death, for exposing an inch of flesh or offending > them in the slightest way.
>
> David Cornwell has told me that we in the United States should not judge > the Afghan people for such treatment because it is a 'cultural thing', but > this is not even true. Women enjoyed relative freedom, to work, dress > generally as they wanted, and drive and appear in public alone until only > 1996 -- the rapidity of this transition is the main reason for the > depression and suicide; women who were once educators or doctors or simply > used to basic human freedoms are now severely restricted and treated as > subhuman in the name of right-wing fundamentalist Islam. It is not their > tradition or 'culture', but is alien to them, and it is extreme even for > those cultures where fundamentalism is the rule. Besides, if we could > excuse everything on cultural grounds, then we should not be appalled that > the Carthaginians sacrificed their infant children, that little girls are > circumcised in parts of Africa, that blacks in the deep south in the 1930's > were lynched, prohibited from voting and forced to submit to unjust jim > crow laws.

>
> Everyone has a right to a tolerable human existence, even if they are women > in a muslim country in a part of the world that Americans do not understand.
>
> If we can threaten military force in Kosovo in the name of human rights for > the sake of ethnic Albanians, Americans can certainly express peaceful > outrage at the oppression, murder and injustice committed against women by > the Taliban.
>
> **********
>
> STATEMENT:
>
> In signing this, we agree that the current treatment of women in > Afghanistan is completely UNACCEPTABLE and deserves support and action by > the people of the United States and the U.S. Government and that the > current situation overseas will not be tolerated. Women's Rights is not a > small issue anywhere and it is UNACCEPTABLE for women in 1998 to be treated > as subhuman and so much as property. Equality and human decency is a RIGHT, > not a freedom, whether one lives in Afghanistan or the United States.

>
> **********
>
> 1) Leslie London, Cape Town, South Africa
> [.....]
> 37) Melita Lykiardopoulou, Baltimore, MD > 38) Dian Fetter, Washington, DC > 39) Ioanna Tzioumi, Washington, DC
> **********
> 1)
>
>
> Ioanna Tzioumi
> [redacted]
>
>
>
>

↑ Index

13. Mike Kelleher
new improved alyric 9
Sun 31 Jan 1999

Dear Listers and friends,

Please, if you have not done so already, but especially if you have, return to alyricamailer #9.

There were some egregious formatting errors which disfigured many of the poems. Further, there were some egergious editing errors (on talks by Nick Lawrence, Taylor Brady, Eleni Stecopoulos and Poems by Nick, Eleni, Ben Friedlander, Aaron Armstrong Skomra and Myself) which may have causde problems with the reading of certain of the texts. And last, Michelle Citrin is now spelled correctly and the poems (this was my fault and apologies to Michelle) she wanted included originally are now included as well. I can only say sorry to those whose work got skewed and hope in the future my html skills improve. Thanks again.

Mike

the mag is at

http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/alyric/alyric9.html

↑ Index

14. Herb Levy
Poetry on radio shows?
Sun 31 Jan 1999

Hi all,

I'd be interested in any leads people have to radio shows that present contemporary poetry. So if you do such a show, or know of one, please respond to me at the e-mail address below.

Thanks a lot.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

15. Herb Levy
Paul Metcalf
Sun 31 Jan 1999

From Sunday's NY Times

<http://www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/national/obit-metcalf.html>

Paul Metcalf, Who Wrote Experimental Tales, Dies at 81

By DINITIA SMITH

Paul Metcalf, who made his mark as an experimental writer of prose, poetry and plays, died on Jan. 21 near Pittsfield, Mass. He was 81 and lived in Chester, Mass.

His wife, Nancy, said Metcalf had a heart attack after buying apples at a farmers market not far from Arrowhead, the Berkshire home of Herman Melville, his great-grandfather.

"Like a medieval chronicler with the eye of a poet and the heart of a taleteller, he fits together radiant fragments into a wholly new kind of construct," the author Guy Davenport once wrote of Metcalf. His more than 20 books were often collages of first-person historical narratives, science writing, newspaper clips and his own words, woven together in a single fabric. "It was like a symphony, with sources like old diaries and botanical descriptions as the different instruments," said his daughter Adrienne.

Nonetheless, the words had a cumulative effect. In his 1976 book "Apalache," an epic about the settlement of the New World, he mixed native and settler chronicles with his own musings: "The fragrance drifts seaward/we smelled the land a hundred leagues, and farther when they burned the cedars/before we come in sight of it thirty leagues, we smell a sweet savour/we had now fair sunshine weather, and so pleasant a sweet as did much refresh us, and there came a smell off the shore like the smell of a garden."

Metcalf came from a distinguished New England family. His mother was Eleanor Thomas Metcalf, a granddaughter of Herman Melville and his literary executor. His father, Henry Knight Metcalf, who worked for an insurance company, was a descendant of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island.

Metcalf was born in East Milton, Mass., and was educated at private schools. He attended Harvard but disliked it and left after only three months. In 1942 he married Nancy Harman Blackford of Charleston, S.C., and during the next 20 years the couple spent long periods in the South. In addition to his wife, he is survived by a brother, David, of Topsham, Me.; two daughters, Anne Westmoreland of Schuyler, Va., and Adrienne, of Becket, Mass., and two granddaughters.

Early in his life, Metcalf thought little about his famous ancestor and his writings. His first book, "Will West," published in 1956, was a short novel about murder with a Cherokee as the protagonist.

But in the early 60s Metcalf returned to the Berkshires, and in his 1965 book, "Genoa," acknowledged the relationship to Melville. "Genoa" was one of his best-known works, a blend of references to Melville, other sources and his own language.

In the book, a man called Michael Mills muses about his own history, and his brother, Carl, who is a monster: "Herman would harangue his wife and two daughters (this was after the sons were gone) on matters that had no interest for them, and they would roll their eyes, and sigh, and wait, or there would be outbursts of temper, sarcasm."

Metcalf told his hometown newspaper, The Berkshire Eagle, that the book "was a way of getting the Melville monkey off my back."

William H. Gass, reviewing "Genoa" in The New York Times, said that the book "invites us to pass our minds down a new but ancient track, to become, ourselves, both fact and fiction, and to discover something true about the geography of time."

Metcalf was a tall man with a powerful physical presence. In recent years, with his hair nearly shoulder length and his pipe in his mouth, he was a colorful figure. His home in Becket became a center for artists and writers in the area. As a writer he remained a cult figure, although in 1987 he was honored by the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters. Beginning in 1996, the Coffee House Press of Minneapolis published a three-volume edition of his collected works.

He also supported efforts to increase the collection of Melville's papers at Arrowhead and at the Berkshire Athenaeum in Pittsfield. In 1921, the manuscript of Melville's novel "Billy Budd" was discovered in a tin box in his family's home.

Several months ago, as Metcalf was moving out of his Becket house, he found two more boxes of family papers and memorabilia that he had long forgotten. He donated the papers to the Melville Room of the Berkshire Athenaeum.

Copyright 1999 The New York Times Company

:

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

16. Craig Dworkin
Spring Reading Series
Sun 31 Jan 1999

Those of you in the area (that is: "nowhere Zen New Jersey" as Ginsberg put it) might want to mark your calendars and take a few long lunch breaks this Spring to come to a new series of readings I've put together:

24 February: Edwin Torres

31 March: Paul Muldoon

7 April: Sianne Ngai

14 April: Yusef Komunyakaa

21 April: Bruce Andrews

28 April: Kenny Goldsmith

Readings will be followed by open discussions on each poet's work. All readings are Wednesdays, at 12: 30, on the Princeton University campus, McCosh Hall, Room 4.

Driving directions, train schedules to Princeton, and a campus map can all be found at: http://www.princeton.edu/Siteware/WeatherTravel.shtml.

The series, held in conjunction with a course on contemporary poetry, is made possible by The Princeton University Department of English and the 250th Anniversary Fund for Innovation in Undergraduate Education.

Hope to see (some of) you there!
--Craig Dworkin

↑ Index

17. Alex Davis
Cork Poetry Festival
Mon 1 Feb 1999

Please announce:

Listees may be interested to know that the Third Cork Conference on Innovative/Experimental Poetry, MAKE IT NEW (AGAIN) will take place from 23rd to 25 April, 1999, at The Granary Theatre, Mardyke Parade, Cork.
There will be readings, performances and papers from: cris cheek, Alex Davis, John Goodby, Randolph Healy, Fanny Howe, Romana Huk, Trevor Joyce, Karen Mac Cormack, Billy Mills, Drew Milne, Maurice Scully, Michael Smith, Geoffrey Squires, Keith Tuma and Catherine Walsh. Further details can be found at:

http://indigo.ie/~tjac/cork_poetry_conference.htm

As things fall into place, the webpage will be updated.

Please contact Alex Davis for further details.

↑ Index

18. Charles Alexander
query
Mon 1 Feb 1999

Please send me names/performers of your favorite blues songs that make a conjunction of sacred and profane love. At this time, just blues, not gospel or r&b or soul songs. I don't exactly know where I'm going with this. I was just struck listening to "When Love Came to Town" (not even sure if that's the title) this morning, and while most of its verses have to do with denial of physical/emotional love between humans (but that was "before love came to town"), it has one verse where the protagonist "throws the dice" while soldiers are piercing the Lord in the side, but that too was "before love came to town," a happening that then transforms everything -- so all of a sudden there's this marvelous transformation of a fairly down & dirty song into a somewhat sacred song. I know this happens in some Renaissance poetry and other poetry of various periods, and I know I've heard it in the blues before, but I can't think of where right now. If you know any such songs, please send, if you can, song name, performer, and even what recording it appears on.

thanks,

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

19. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: alchemy bibliography
Mon 1 Feb 1999

Here are a few texts that offer an excellent intro to alchemy, Maria:

Psychology & Alchemy - CG Jung - Princeton UP Alchemy - Titus Burkhardt - Penguin Books The Forge & The Crucible - Mircea Eliade - The Elements of Alchemy - Cherry Gilchrest - Element Books Claire-Voss, Karen. "Spiritual Alchemy: Interpreting Representative Texts and Images" Gnosis and Hermeticism from Antiquity to Modern Times. Edited by Roelof van den Broek & Wouter J. Hanegraaff. NY: SUNY Press, 1998. Alchemy of the word :

cabala of the Renaissance / Philip Beitchman, Albany : State University of New York Press, 1998 The essay by Karen Claire-Voss, which I used recently for a paper on Gaddis's _The Recognitions_, is especially recommended as it gives a succinct overview of the theory and praxis of alchemists. Peter Lamborn Wilson has also written at length about alchemy. The title that comes to mind is _Shower of Stars_ - can't recall the publisher off hand, but most likely it's Autonomedia in NYC. And for an intro to magic, try Richard Cavendish's _The Black Arts_. Your student might also be interested in works on or by the Elizabethan magus John Dee. There are several excellent works on him, most notably by Frances Yates (The Occult Philosophy In The Elizabethan Age) and Peter France (_John Dee_). Adam McLean has compiled a fascinating and beautiful work based on Dee's and Edward Kelly's scrying method called A Treatise On Angel Magic : Being A Complete Transcription Of Ms. Harley 6482 In The British Library And of course, there's always Henry Cornelius Agrippa, the 16th Century granddaddy of the mantic arts and the Golden Dawn material (Crowley, Mathers, AE Waite, et al) which derives directly from this tradition. Patrick Pritchett

> -----Original Message-----
> From: Maria Damon [SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, January 29, 1999 10:52 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: alchemy bibliography
>
> thanks to all who have posted; any suggestions about books that introduce > the basics of alchemy? or that riff on the metaphysical aspects of > alchemy? handbooks in elementary magic or a bachelardian phenomenology?
> i > think this is what my student wants to learn about, as well as reading > examples of poetry that is alchemically inflected. thanks again all!

↑ Index

20. Steven Shoemaker

Re: alchemy bibliography

Mon 1 Feb 1999

Maria--Don't know if this will be useful, but if I recall correctly Victor Frankenstein begins his idiosyncractic "home-schooling" by delving into alchemy. When he later goes off to college, he at first resists the modern scientific approach because it seems so unappealing on philosophical & metaphysical grounds. I also seem to remember that the alcehemical books Mary Shelley has Victor read were all books that Percy really did read.

↑ Index

21. Pritchett,Patrick
FW: Steve McCaffery reading
Mon 1 Feb 1999

The next reader in the University of Denver Leo Block Series will be

Steve McCaffery

A rather zany, very dynamic thinker and performer, he will give a talk on Friday afternoon
Feb. 5
4PM

and a reading
Friday evening
Feb. 5
7:30pm

both in the Renaissance Room South in the Mary Reed Building reception to follow

All events are free

Both events are open to the public. He will also be giving a short workshop from 2 to 4 pm on Saturday. The enrollment is limited, but if you're interested, please call; I'm sure something can be arranged.

A bit of a bio:
Steve McCaffery has, for the past twenty years, been an important member of the Canadian experimental writing community. He has published numerous books of poetry and criticism as well as hybrids of the two, often with dashes of other things thrown in. He also operates a bit as a literary historian and has edited collections such as "Rational Geomancy: The Collected Reports of the Toronto Research Group," a group he co-founded, andthe just-released "Imagining Language," a volume that he co-edited with Jed Rasula that traces concrete and visually-based poetries from the 16th onward. He has also written theoretical work--collected in a volume, "North of Intention"--that examines the role and relevance of experimental language practices in contemporary society/popular culture.

In his own creative work, he has collaborated with artists in several disciplines including music, dance, painting, book arts and performance art, and was for many years a member of a sound-poetry ensemble, "The Four Horsemen." He's a person who constantly tests and extends borders--not > only > linguistic and artistic ones, but of all those--social, physical, > etc.--that he encounters. He's also very fun.

>
> Brief directions to the Mary Reed Building: I25 South to University Blvd.
> South.
> Univ. Blvd. to Warren (4th light) turn right--there's a very big, very > institutional building staring at you (bell tower, etc.) that's it. If > you're driving, you'll want to follow the circle around to a parking lot > on > the south (left) side of the building. Enter by the south door and go up > one floor. There will also be posters to direct you.
>
> Hope you can join us! If you have any questions, please just call.
> Cole Swensen [redacted]

↑ Index

22. BETSY ANDREWS

Re: Poetry on radio shows?

Mon 1 Feb 1999

WXPEN does a really exciting live weekly poetry show with an audience, hosted by Kerry Sherin of the Writer's House. Kristen Gallagher was the coordinator. She might still be. Kerry's email: [redacted]

> From: Herb Levy <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Poetry on radio shows?
> Date: Sunday, January 31, 1999 11:27 AM
>
> Hi all,
>
> I'd be interested in any leads people have to radio shows that present > contemporary poetry. So if you do such a show, or know of one, please > respond to me at the e-mail address below.
>
> Thanks a lot.
>
>
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

↑ Index

23. Lawrence Upton.
RWC
Mon 1 Feb 1999

RWC announces the publication of RWC # 42 - two sequences by Scott Thurston

£2.00 + 50p p & p in UK. sterling payments only, to Lawrence Upton

Overseas - talk by email first is probably the best advice

The next RWC will be Ira Lightman - & soon

32 Downside Road, Sutton, Surrey SM2 5HP UK

↑ Index

24. Noam Scheindlin
Mills, Mlinko, Warsh Reading
Mon 1 Feb 1999

ON TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2
Susan Mills, Ange Mlinko, and Lewis Warsh will be reading at the Rising Cafe reading series (I forgot date in my initial post)

Rising Cafe is at 186 Fifth Avenue, (Park Slope) Brooklyn.
To get there from Manhattan, take the downtown N or R (make sure its a local train) and get off at the Union Street Station.
Walk one block up to 5th Avenue.

Reading begins at 7:30.

_____
DO YOU YAHOO!?
Get your free @yahoo.com address at http://mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

25. SAMUEL GARREN
Re: Paul Metcalf
Mon 1 Feb 1999

There is an excellent photograph and short commentary about Metcalf in Jonathon Williams' great book of snaps of writers and musicians pub. by Jargon Press. It is a book well worth seeing. On Sun, 31 Jan 1999, Herb Levy wrote:

From Sunday's NY Times

<http://www.nytimes.com/yr/mo/day/news/national/obit-metcalf.html>

Paul Metcalf, Who Wrote Experimental Tales, Dies at 81

By DINITIA SMITH

Paul Metcalf, who made his mark as an experimental writer of prose, poetry and plays, died on Jan. 21 near Pittsfield, Mass. He was 81 and lived in Chester, Mass.

His wife, Nancy, said Metcalf had a heart attack after buying apples at a farmers market not far from Arrowhead, the Berkshire home of Herman Melville, his great-grandfather.

"Like a medieval chronicler with the eye of a poet and the heart of a taleteller, he fits together radiant fragments into a wholly new kind of construct," the author Guy Davenport once wrote of Metcalf. His more than 20 books were often collages of first-person historical narratives, science writing, newspaper clips and his own words, woven together in a single fabric. "It was like a symphony, with sources like old diaries and botanical descriptions as the different instruments," said his daughter Adrienne.

Nonetheless, the words had a cumulative effect. In his 1976 book "Apalache," an epic about the settlement of the New World, he mixed native and settler chronicles with his own musings: "The fragrance drifts seaward/we smelled the land a hundred leagues, and farther when they burned the cedars/before we come in sight of it thirty leagues, we smell a sweet savour/we had now fair sunshine weather, and so pleasant a sweet as did much refresh us, and there came a smell off the shore like the smell of a garden."

Metcalf came from a distinguished New England family. His mother was Eleanor Thomas Metcalf, a granddaughter of Herman Melville and his literary executor. His father, Henry Knight Metcalf, who worked for an insurance company, was a descendant of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island.

Metcalf was born in East Milton, Mass., and was educated at private schools. He attended Harvard but disliked it and left after only three months. In 1942 he married Nancy Harman Blackford of Charleston, S.C., and during the next 20 years the couple spent long periods in the South. In addition to his wife, he is survived by a brother, David, of Topsham, Me.; two daughters, Anne Westmoreland of Schuyler, Va., and Adrienne, of Becket, Mass., and two granddaughters.

Early in his life, Metcalf thought little about his famous ancestor and his writings. His first book, "Will West," published in 1956, was a short novel about murder with a Cherokee as the protagonist.

But in the early 60s Metcalf returned to the Berkshires, and in his 1965 book, "Genoa," acknowledged the relationship to Melville. "Genoa" was one of his best-known works, a blend of references to Melville, other sources and his own language.

In the book, a man called Michael Mills muses about his own history, and his brother, Carl, who is a monster: "Herman would harangue his wife and two daughters (this was after the sons were gone) on matters that had no interest for them, and they would roll their eyes, and sigh, and wait, or there would be outbursts of temper, sarcasm."

Metcalf told his hometown newspaper, The Berkshire Eagle, that the book "was a way of getting the Melville monkey off my back."

William H. Gass, reviewing "Genoa" in The New York Times, said that the book "invites us to pass our minds down a new but ancient track, to become, ourselves, both fact and fiction, and to discover something true about the geography of time."

Metcalf was a tall man with a powerful physical presence. In recent years, with his hair nearly shoulder length and his pipe in his mouth, he was a colorful figure. His home in Becket became a center for artists and writers in the area. As a writer he remained a cult figure, although in 1987 he was honored by the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters. Beginning in > 1996, the Coffee House Press of Minneapolis published a three-volume edition of his collected works.

>
> He also supported efforts to increase the collection of Melville's papers at Arrowhead and at the Berkshire Athenaeum in Pittsfield. In 1921, the manuscript of Melville's novel "Billy Budd" was discovered in a tin box in his family's home.
>
> Several months ago, as Metcalf was moving out of his Becket house, he found two more boxes of family papers and memorabilia that he had long forgotten. He donated the papers to the Melville Room of the Berkshire Athenaeum.
>
> Copyright 1999 The New York Times Company
>
> :
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

↑ Index

26. SAMUEL GARREN
Re: alchemy bibliography
Mon 1 Feb 1999

Something about alchemy and poetry that I find helpful is an essay, not a book, by Kenneth Rexroth, "The Spiritual Alchemy of Thomas Vaughan." It appeared in With Eye & Ear, a collection of essays by Rexroth, Herder and Herder, An Azimuth Book, 1970, pp.1-10, and is ,more conveniently included in the paperback collection, World Outside the Window: The Selected Essays of KRexroth, ed. B.Morrow, New Directions, 1987, pp. 243-51. The essay ncluded the fascinating inference that T. Vaughan died with his wife in an alchemically related mystical-sexual position trying to manipulate micorcosm-macrocosm, with fatal effects.On Fri, 29 Jan 1999, Maria Damon wrote:

> thanks to all who have posted; any suggestions about books that introduce the basics of alchemy? or that riff on the metaphysical aspects of alchemy? handbooks in elementary magic or a bachelardian phenomenology? i think this is what my student wants to learn about, as well as reading examples of poetry that is alchemically inflected. thanks again all!

↑ Index

27. Poetry Project
this week at the Project
Mon 1 Feb 1999

This week at the Poetry Project:

Monday, February 1st

OPEN MIKE

sign up at 7:30; readings begin at 8 pm

Wednesday, Feb. 3rd

Leslie Scalapino & Zhang Er

at 8 pm

Friday, Feb. 5th

Pre-Valentine's Day Erotic Reading with Anselm Berrigan, Laurie Stone, Thaddeus Rutkowski, Tsaurah Litsky & others

at 10:30 pm

AND

* SPECIAL EVENT *

WORD VIRUS: THE WILLIAM S. BURROUGHS READER

SATURDAY, FEB. 6th at 1 pm

A celebration of the publication of Word Virus: The William S. Burroughs Reader, edited by Ira Silverberg & James Grauerholz, published by Grove Atlantic Press. Readings by Bruce Andrews, Penny Arcade, Barbara Barg, Bruce Benderson, Victor Bockris, Steve Buscemi, Jim Carroll, Todd Colby, Ann Douglas, Maggie Estep, Ed Friedman, John Giorno, Brad Gooch, Tim Griffin, John S. Hall, Richard Hell, Lenny Kaye, Jackson Mac Low, Gillian McCain, Taylor Mead, Sharon Mesmer, Stewart Meyer, Bob Mould, Ron Padgett, Simon Pettet, Wanda Phipps, Bob Rosenthal, Barney Rosset, Richard Seaver, Ira Silverberg, Laurie Stone, Lynne Tillman, Edwin Torres, David Trinidad, Paul Violi, Lewis Warsh, Hal Willner, Emily XYZ, John Yau, Nick Zedd and others.

Tickets for all events (including Word Virus) are $7, $4 for students, and free for members.

Call [redacted] for more information

↑ Index

28. gjfarrah
No subject was specified.
Mon 1 Feb 1999

---

are you breath? i hope^ can not when you will i dance it believe hive of eye let containe head lift gently back ache not hear it now (ed) tip as arial knee full sun in can not lope through rim leap hand feet

cadance pretend mull belly dark swirl pinched lax spark gutter up solvent silence injure arrant limb appendage prosthesis

i waite your walk semblance bread enough flint innerbellywater shirtfull tuck run to warm impliments bound hug ball rifled climb to long earth kite cad orange

i left he said got back when on route domed fulling blue pulled tight over eyeshirt

no bud manufacture thigh tremmor stage of forsaking slash look unverified

cannotcannotcannotcannotcannotcannotcannotcannotca (nenoble) slit silt edge of cup light enfolded sliver of vessal piece mouth

lakestar carbonboil cutical

↑ Index

29. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Mon 1 Feb 1999

 Book excerpts sold with Diet Coke

NEW YORK (AP) - In an era of mega-bookstores and mega-marketing, many complain the written word is being peddled like a soft drink. The Coca-Cola Co. and several publishers have decided to do just that. Starting Monday, purchasers of 12 and 24-packs of Diet Coke and caffeine-free Diet Coke will find colorful booklets enclosed, affixed like a straw on a juice box. Each will contain excerpts from a new work by a popular writer - among them Elmore Leonard, Barbara Taylor Bradford and Lisa Scottoline. With 40-45 million such packages planned, that means an enormous potential readership. Diet Coke drinkers also will have the chance to submit 500-word essays, fact or fiction, on "Living Life to the Fullest." The contest, which ends March 12, offers an all-expense paid trip for two to New York City. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2558282574-951

↑ Index

30. A. Jenn Sondheim

REQUEST

Tue 2 Feb 1999

=== === === === === ===

REQUEST

That all the files of the following individuals be saved through the interval 10/99 - 4/00 - on independent floppies or other mag- netic or magneto-optical media _not attached_ to any electrical device, including CPU or hard or other drives:

Jennifer	Tiffany	Timmy	Kon
Travis	Alan	Jenn	Big Al
Clara	Honey	Al	Jenny
Nikuko	Julu	Daishin	Nikuko

That these files be saved with the following information:

Sender	Address of Sender, Recipient, Email software if relevant
Recipient	Email list name
Date	Message ID if relevant
Subject	Ostensible Sender if relevant

That each such file be triplicated across independent media (separate floppies, hard drives, zip disks, and so forth), and, if possible, re- produced in non-electronic media such as paper, stone, vellum, or in- scribed metal plaques suitably protected against water damage.

That such triplicated files be compared, one against another, in order to ensure absolute accuracy, such as found in Torah Scrolls or the Ar- chives of Tibet.

That such triplicated files be stored in places widely separated, with- out electronic locking devices, and in widely-varying atmospheric con- ditions, such as humidity, pressure, and chemical content. Further, that such places be in permanent shadow, without any possibility of water or other chemical spillage; and further, that such places be permanently held within a centigrade temperature bandwidth of zero to twenty degrees.

That each such file be placed with proper identification upon a series of identical maps, such that an X marks its location. That these maps be duplicated in triplicate, and placed in other strongholds than those of the files themselves, with master/mistress maps held in triplicate elsewhere by the owner or proprietor of said files. That at least one of the three identical master/misstress maps be held at the domicile of said proprietor, well hidden, and in sanguine conditions.

That a secondary map be issued with the location of the primary map, such that the secondary map provide a system of indirect addressing, in rela- ton to the master/mistress maps and their varied locations, as well as the varied locations of the files in triplicate.

That the secondary map be issued in triplicate, pursuant to proper care and treatment of the metals or parchments, papers or vellums, granites or plastics, upon which it is inscribed. That similar proper care or treat- ment be applied to the master/mistress maps, which shall be held as well in proper shadow.

Finally: That after the Y2K Disturbance, henceforth known as the Distur- bance, all such files be reassembled, for the purposes of reconstruction, resurrection, and reconstitution of the following:

Jennifer	Tiffany	Timmy	Kon
Travis	Alan	Jenn	Big Al
Clara	Honey	Al	Jenny
Nikuko	Julu	Daishin	Nikuko

We wish to thank you, now and after the Disturbance, for such service rendered as you are competent and willing to fulfill, to the best of your capabilities.

↑ Index

31. Michael Magee

Re: Location Is Everything

Tue 2 Feb 1999

According to Tom Beckett:
>
> The Inside
> is the Outside > doubled
>
> Where are > our folds?
>

> Fuck me
> if I know
>

Tom, this reminded me of a very good and neglected short poem by Emerson, which serves as epigraph to his essay, "Circles." Here it is for the list:

Nature centres into balls,
And her proud ephemerals,
Fast to surface and outside,
Scan the profile and the sphere;
Knew they what that signified,
A new gensis were here.

The complexity of his sense of the inside outside relationship ("where are the folds?" as you say) is suggested by two contradictory statements of his, from "Circles" and "Experience" respectively:

1) "There is no outside, no inclosing wall, no circumference to us."

2) "The world is all outside: it has no inside."

Anyway, thought I'd share on the heals of your funny and provocative post.

-Mike.

↑ Index

32. Timothy Materer Poets and Alchemy
Tue 2 Feb 1999

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: alchemy bibliography
> thanks to all who have posted; any suggestions about books that introduce the basics of alchemy? i think this is what my student wants to learn about, as well as >reading examples of poetry that is alchemically inflected. thanks again all!

The above is exactly what my book is about: Modernist Alchemy, Poetry and the Occult (Cornell 1995), which concentrates on Yeats, Pound, Eliot (tho E. is not particularly alchemical), H.D., Robert Duncan, Plath, Hughes, and Merrill. The name of the Robert Kelly volume, by the way, is The Alchemist to Mercury (1981).

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
Fax: [redacted]
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

33. Ron Silliman
Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
Tue 2 Feb 1999

I know that Pound got "dichtung = condensare" out of Bunting's German-Italian Dictionary, but where exactly does Ez write about this idea?

Ron

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

DO NOT RESPOND to
[redacted]
It is for listservs only.

_____
Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

34. David Baratier
Distribution
Tue 2 Feb 1999

Mark Salerno & confidantes:

I wish I had the ability to condense the state of American magazine & book distribution down to the convenient statement "the market and the target consumer for writing is writers. If we do not buy the books that our colleagues write, and the magazines that they appear in, no one else will." People _are_ buying the books, on the rare instance they can find them on a shelf in a store.

Journal distribution as it is known today will die off. Few literary journals use literary specific distribution. In fact many are riding on large magazine titles (for instance, the Baffler always appears with the New Yorker) or comic book distibutors because Bernhard & DeBoer aren't taking new journals or are paying way too slow. Quite often these alternates pay faster & don't always rip the covers off the issues. Many of us were burned by Fine Press in Texas, we don't take to having our money witheld kindly.

Conduits for magazine and book distribution are experiencing hard times, thanks to chain stores shifting to a supermarket mentality where space has to be bought for the title to be carried. And the lack of middle ground distibution for books. If I publish a run of 1000 I can have Consortium take half the press run or SPD take 25-50 titles of a 2-300 copy press run. I rarely run 500 to 750 copies because there is no adequate distributor. And, unfortunately, this range is ideal for breaking even because the % paid back to me is higher. While I have published books in the 1000's I am just starting to hit the 500 press run size for the aforementioned reason. This doesn't even touch having a choice of more than one distributor for our matter.

While Barnes & Noble has cleared their act up as a result of a collective in WI, and through some bullying on our half has given in to our collective as well, Border's are the big problem now. Pay at 120 or more days. Multiple phone calls. No specific contact. Different name each time shell game.

I have no concern about the recent acquisition of the third distributor. Since 80% of their distribution is to independent bookstores, they are, in effect, a useless shell if the indy's decide not to use them.

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

↑ Index

35. Stephen Ellis
Re: alchemy bibliography
Tue 2 Feb 1999

Alchemically inflected poetry: Steve Jonas, esp. series called Orgasms/Dominations (Talisman House Press, 1994)

Idries Shah's book SUFISM relates various Sufic practices of codification, wch have significance for someone's with those interests you mention.

There's also a late 70s recapitulative number of Io (ed. Richard Grossinger) that repeats or extends propositions & info from earlier Alchemy issue of the magazine.

To establish a context for alchemy in this century, there're magi Gurdjieff, Blavatsky & Crowley; also, of a slightly different order, there's Wilhelm Reich, still - easily, I think - identifiably an alchemist.

The whole School of Boston in the mid- to late fifties was an alchemical school, comprised variously of Jonas, Lansing, Dunn, Wieners, Blaster & Spicer for a time, among others (R. Kelly & Mister Harvey Brown were known to have stopped by & dropped in a while. Read their works; go from there.

- Stephen Ellis

>From [redacted] Mon Feb 01 06:33:04 1999
>Received: from [128.205.7.58] by hotmail.com (1.1) with SMTP id MHotMailB87F061F137F4D101707D80CD073AB0CE0; Mon Feb 01 06:33:04

1999 >Received: (qmail 29619 invoked from network); 1 Feb 1999 14:32:56 -0000 >Received: from listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu (128.205.7.35) > by defer.acsu.buffalo.edu with SMTP; 1 Feb 1999 14:32:56 -0000 >Received: from LISTSERV.ACSU.BUFFALO.EDU by LISTSERV.ACSU.BUFFALO.EDU
> (LISTSERV-TCP/IP release 1.8d) with spool id 939227 for > [redacted]; Mon, 1 Feb 1999 09:32:52
-0500
>Approved-By: [redacted]
>Received: (qmail 11525 invoked from network); 29 Jan 1999 17:50:03
-0000 >Received: from mhub1.tc.umn.edu (@160.94.5.41) by listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu
> with SMTP; 29 Jan 1999 17:50:03 -0000 >Received: from [160.94.26.157] by mhub1.tc.umn.edu with ESMTP; Fri, 29
Jan 1999
> 11:50:01 -0600
>References: <[redacted]>
>Mime-Version: 1.0
>Content-Type: text/plain; charset="us-ascii"
>Message-ID: <l03102802b2d7a5543d03@[160.94.62.147]>
>Date: Fri, 29 Jan 1999 11:52:18 -0600
>Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group
<[redacted]>
>Sender: UB Poetics discussion group
<[redacted]>
>From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: alchemy bibliography
>To: [redacted]
>In-Reply-To: <l03102801b2d783c82bd1@[160.94.25.49]>
>
>thanks to all who have posted; any suggestions about books that introduce >the basics of alchemy? or that riff on the metaphysical aspects of >alchemy? handbooks in elementary magic or a bachelardian phenomenology? i >think this is what my student wants to learn about, as well as reading >examples of poetry that is alchemically inflected. thanks again all!

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

36. James Sherry
Roof Books: New Titles
Tue 2 Feb 1999

The response the the Roof Books offer was gratifying. Thank you all for your orders. We will be sending them out to you next week via the various methods you specified. Thanks again.

For those who did not see the offer and may wish to take advantage of it:
Roof Books is offering two new titles:
Kit Robinson's <Democracy Boulevard> cover price $11.95 & Bob Perelman's <The Future of Memory> cover price $14.95 for a combined price of...
$14 including postage.
To receive these new books, please reply to this mail: [redacted]
We will send you the books if you promise to reply with a check.

Thanks again.
James Sherry

↑ Index

37. Alaric Sumner robert lax
Tue 2 Feb 1999

I am urgently trying to find either the complete (or an historically-broad selection from the) works of Robert Lax. Any suggestions? (Ideally with a UK distributor!) Backchannel - mailto:[redacted]

↑ Index

38. Poetics List queries
Tue 2 Feb 1999

Just a reminder that query responses should generally go to the person querying, and not the list as a whole.
Exceptions would be longer, detailed messages that might be of interest to all. I've forwarded most of those that came in re Maria's alchemy query; the few that were one line or so I sent to her directly.

cf. the new Welcome Message for further details

thanks, Chris

↑ Index

39. charssmith
Re: Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
Tue 2 Feb 1999

ABC's, Ch. 4

↑ Index

40. Karen Kelley
Re: query
Tue 2 Feb 1999

Charles Alexander wrote:

it has one verse where the protagonist "throws > the dice" while soldiers are piercing the Lord in the side, but that too > was "before love came to town," a happening that then transforms everything
> -- so all of a sudden there's this marvelous transformation of a fairly > down & dirty song into a somewhat sacred song. I know this happens in some > Renaissance poetry and other poetry of various periods,

Can we get a list of some of these poems, Charles? Anyone else?

Thanks!

↑ Index

41. Edward Foster
American Symbolists
Tue 2 Feb 1999

I am currently editing an anthology of American Symbolists and Aesthetes and am currently identifying totally obscure but rather wonderful American fin-de-siecle disciples of Baudelaire, Wilde, Verlaine, etc.). I would be interested in hearing from anyone who shares an interest in this bizarre and abnormal subject. The best email address would be [redacted].

↑ Index

42. Susan M. Schultz
Re: Pound Q: Dichtung equals...
Tue 2 Feb 1999

Pound writes about Dichtung and condensare in _ABC of Reading_, page 92 (New Directions).

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

43. Karen McKevitt
Re: Distribution
Tue 2 Feb 1999

So does that mean that everyone here is buying the magazines and books that fellow listees announce? We (or at least I) announce them here because we (I) know that state of distribution. Karen McKevitt

>Date: Tue, 2 Feb 1999 18:38:52 +0000
>Reply-To: [redacted]
>From: David Baratier <[redacted]>
>Subject: Distribution
>To: [redacted]
>
>Mark Salerno & confidantes:
>
>I wish I had the ability to condense the state of American magazine & >book distribution down to the convenient statement "the market and the >target consumer for writing is writers. If we do not buy the books that >our colleagues write, and the magazines that they appear in, no one else >will." People _are_ buying the books, on the rare instance they can find >them on a shelf in a store.
>
>Journal distribution as it is known today will die off. Few literary >journals use literary specific distribution. In fact many are riding on >large magazine titles (for instance, the Baffler always appears with the
>New Yorker) or comic book distibutors because Bernhard & DeBoer aren't >taking new journals or are paying way too slow. Quite often these >alternates pay faster & don't always rip the covers off the issues.
Many >of us were burned by Fine Press in Texas, we don't take to having our >money witheld kindly.

>
>Conduits for magazine and book distribution are experiencing hard times,
>thanks to chain stores shifting to a supermarket mentality where space >has to be bought for the title to be carried. And the lack of middle >ground distibution for books. If I publish a run of 1000 I can have >Consortium take half the press run or SPD take 25-50 titles of a 2-300 >copy press run. I rarely run 500 to 750 copies because there is no >adequate distributor. And, unfortunately, this range is ideal for >breaking even because the % paid back to me is higher. While I have >published books in the 1000's I am just starting to hit the 500 press >run size for the aforementioned reason. This doesn't even touch having a >choice of more than one distributor for our matter.
>
>While Barnes & Noble has cleared their act up as a result of a >collective in WI, and through some bullying on our half has given in to >our collective as well, Border's are the big problem now. Pay at 120 or >more days. Multiple phone calls. No specific contact. Different name >each time shell game.
>
>I have no concern about the recent acquisition of the third distributor.
>Since 80% of their distribution is to independent bookstores, they are,
>in effect, a useless shell if the indy's decide not to use them.
>
>Be well
>
>David Baratier, Editor
>

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

44. Jordan Davis

Re: definitions

Tue 2 Feb 1999

---

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz

cdefgh lm lm nop
stuvw defgh

mnop mnop mnop nop
o bcdef
a fghij mnop
qrs vwxyz cdef mnop
o bcdef

klm vwxyz klmnopqrst stuv stuv stuvwy
efgh a defgh
opq a nopqr

o qrs i hijk a jkl
o vwx o def vwx

i mnop a vwxyz

↑ Index

45. A. Jenn Sondheim

jennifer

Wed 3 Feb 1999

====== ===== ==== === ==

jennifer

clone me, you'll never have to see my swollen open body clone me, perfect clean room, surgeon hermeneutic you won't have to fuck me, won't have to touch my holes you won't have to run the bypass of the tongue or the finger you won't have to run the techne of the rope or the clothespin clone me, there won't be any detours the sounds will be repetitive, murmured hydraulics, valves no stains around the bed of brilliant birth no scents hovered in heated murmured air you already know this

'you already know this'

cloning's useful for my survival
i am my genes, my genes, my texts and images my texts and images, my bits and bytes

where i am, dream of my 'swollen open body' there's nothing to say, 'you already know this'

you've already seen the original you've already dreamed it
there's no difference!
'there's no difference!'

↑ Index

46. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Wed 3 Feb 1999

 Canada groundhog dies before event

WIARTON, Ontario (AP) - The crowd at Canada's top Groundhog Day festival got worse news Tuesday than a bad weather forecast: They learned that star groundhog Wiarton Willie had died. Some children among the 200 people burst into tears. Willie died of natural causes Sunday night, but his death was not disclosed until Tuesday's ceremony. "We didn't really know what to do," said Sam Brouwer, Willie's caretaker for the past 10 years. "We were absolutely devastated." Willie was lying in a pine coffin for a public viewing Tuesday morning. His paws were crossed, pennies were placed over his eyelids and he was clutching a carrot. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2558300299-a79

↑ Index

47. Katie Degentesh
NINE BE MINE
Wed 3 Feb 1999

VAINGLORIOUS & 9 x 9 INDUSTRIES

present

CUPIDITY

radix omnium malorum est cupiditas

****

featuring

5 sweettalking poets on loan from 9 x 9 industries & 1 heartstrung quartet (aka the ariel quartet) & numerous nostalgic projections & various soothing tunes

reading

Katie Degentesh
Abie Hadjitarkhani
The Mysterious Mr. Clam
Eugene Ostashevsky
Tarin Towers

plucking

Michael Rodinv Violin #1
Charles Montague Violin #2
Elana Tabachnikoff Viola
Joan Hadeishi Cello

spinning

dj gentle ben

Cafe Royale, San Francisco
(corner of Post & Leavenworth)
Thursday, Feb. 11th, 1999
8 - midnight

Donations received with a kiss!

##################

VAINGLORIOUS is a devilish duo of perpetual producers known for appearing out of nowhere and vanishing just as quickly...

9x9 INDUSTRIES is a San Francisco writers' cartel whose group readings are noted for "combining Dionysian performative skills with Apollonian literary sophistication."

"desire is the root of all evil" is in some mysterious language apparently called latin

↑ Index

48. Katie Degentesh
SF POETRY THIS WEEKEND
Wed 3 Feb 1999

1999 is OUT OF ORDER
Saturday February 6th

it's a poetry reading/performance brought to you by DL from 10 to 11:30 poetry line-up:
Natalie Y.
Beth Lifson

Symplx
Eugene Ostashevsky
Adam DeGraff

and two rooms of DJ's takin' you into the night brought to you by Bug'n Out & The Terrorist Society jungle room: Push, Game Kat, and Arc Angel Gabe Real experimental lounge: Markus Miller and Professor Smith

Art by SKRIBLZ

Saturday February 6th
20 Annie Street (New Montgomery/3rd)

Come early for the poetry and get in for $3, otherwise it's $7.

for party info call [redacted] poetry info [redacted]

AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND&AND

POETRY FOR THE SOUL
FEBRUARY 7TH, 6 PM
992 VALENCIA (at 21st St., Artist's Television Access)

a benefit for TRIBES MAGAZINE
$5 suggested donation, no one turned away for lack of $5

****

A Nuyorican Poet Meets
The West Siiiide!
21 and over Drinks available

****

MC: Norman Z
POETS: DON FLORES, CHUY "CHEWBACCA", DANIEL SANCHEZ, ARIEL VARGAS, TORY S.
AND MORE

↑ Index

49. benjamin bratton
Cultural Turn Electronic Conferences
Wed 3 Feb 1999

CULTURAL TURN 2: POWER AND MEANING ELECTRONIC CONFERENCES
February 2-8, 1999

WWW.CULTURALTURN.COM

-Produced by The Cultural Turn, SPEED and University of California, Santa Barbara.

-The Cultural Turn conferences are bi-annual meetings seeking to explore and expand the analytic zone shared and contested between the social sciences and the humanities.

-The Electronic Conferences will extend the reach of interdisciplinary cultural analysis by incorporating the perspectives of intellectual communities spread across the globe. Please join us.

FEATURED PARTICIPANTS:

-Christine Boyer (Architecture, Princeton)
-Katherine Hayles (English, U.C.L.A.)
-Bruce Lincoln (History of Religions, Chicago)
-Orlando Patterson (Sociology, Harvard)
-James Scott (Political Science, Yale)
-Michael Taussig (Anthropology, Columbia)

OTHER PARTICIPANTS INCLUDE:

-Jeffrey Alexander, Charles Bazerman, David Brain, Ronald Breiger, Craig Calhoun, Thomas Carlson, Swati Chattopadhyay, Jon Cruz, Avery Gordon, Giles Gunn, Dick Hebdige, Richard Hecht, Wolf Kittler, Chandra Mukerji, Charles Perrow, Richard A. Peterson, Maria Pia Lara, Michael Schudson, Margaret Somers, John Sutton, Ann Swidler, Diane Vaughan, Robin Wagner-Pacifici and Mayer Zald

JOIN THE ELECTRONIC CONFERENCE:

-Those who can't make it to Santa Barbara for the second Cultural Turn conference are invited to participate in the electronic version of the conference at www.culturalturn.com

-Authors' texts are now available at the web site.
Linked to each is an electronic web forum where conferencees from around the world will engage each other and the problematics of culture signaled by each text.

-There is no charge for joining the Electronic Conferences, and no special software or internet expertise is required.

-Many new texts are available exclusively to Conferencees. Video and audio archives of main talks, book seminars, discussion groups and e-panels will be made available to conferencees.

-The full proceedings, including the electronic conferences, will be published by SPEED, the award-winning electronic journal of media technology and social culture.

****

↑ Index

50. david bromige
a footnote to poets & alchemy
Wed 3 Feb 1999

August Strindberg, who translated everyday dross into dramatic gold on many occasions, suffered a lapse into literal-mindedness for some months during his Paris residence; he burned his hands badly trying to turn lead into gold.

↑ Index

51. Anastasios Kozaitis Coincidence?
Wed 3 Feb 1999

For those interested in Politics and the English Language --

PRESIDENT CLINTON OF THE USA

Can be rearranged (with no letters left over, and using each letter only once) into:

TO COPULATE HE FINDS INTERNS

↑ Index

52. Anastasios Kozaitis
Clinton according to Gabriel Garcia Marquez
Wed 3 Feb 1999

Marquez's observations are very insightful and interesting. I have to pass this along. -AK

The mysteries of Bill Clinton

Nobel Prize-winning author Gabriel García Márquez compares the president's fate to that of Hester Prynne.
- -

BY GABRIEL GARCíA MÁRQUEZ | The first thing you notice about William Jefferson Clinton is how tall he is. The second is the seductive power he has of making you feel, from the first moment of meeting, that he is someone you know well. The third is his sharp intelligence, which allows you to speak to him about anything at all, even the prickliest topics, provided you know when to bring it up.

Even so, someone not enamored of him forewarned me: "The dangerous thing about these gifts is that Clinton uses them to make you feel that nothing could interest him more than what you are saying to him."

I met him first at a dinner given by William Styron in his summer house on Martha's Vineyard in August 1995. During his first campaign, Clinton had mentioned that his favorite book was "One Hundred Years of Solitude." I said at the time -- and I was quoted in print -- that I thought he had said it simply to pull in the Latin vote. He had not forgotten -- after greeting me on Martha's Vineyard, he at once assured me that what he said had been quite sincere.

Carlos Fuentes and I have good reason for considering that evening as a whole chapter in our memoirs. From the beginning, we were disarmed by the interest, respect and humor with which he listened to us, treating our words as if they were gold dust.

His mood corresponded with his appearance. His hair was short, like a scrubbing brush, his skin tanned -- he had the healthy and almost insolent look of a sailor ashore, and he was wearing a college sweat shirt with some logo on the chest. At 49, he looked like an exuberant survivor of the generation of '68, who had smoked marijuana, knew the Beatles by heart and had demonstrated against the Vietnam War.

Dinner began at 8, with some 14 guests around the table, and lasted until midnight. Bit by bit, the conversation came down to a kind of literary round table involving the president and the three writers. The first topic to come up was the forthcoming Summit of the Americas. Clinton had wanted it held in Miami, where it did take place. Carlos Fuentes considered that New Orleans or Los Angeles had stronger historical claims, and he and I argued strongly for them until it became clear that the president had no intention of changing his plans because he was counting on reelection support from Miami.

"Forget the votes, Mr. President," Carlos said to him. "Lose Florida and make history."

That phrase set the tone. When we spoke of the problems of narco-traffic, the president heard me out generously. "Thirty million drug addicts in the U.S. go to show that the North American mafia are more powerful than those in Colombia, and the authorities much more corrupt." When I spoke to him about relations with Cuba, he seemed even more receptive. "If Fidel and you could sit and talk face to face, all problems would completely disappear."

When we talked about Latin America in general, we realized that he was much more interested than we had supposed, although he lacked some essential background. When the conversation seemed to stiffen a bit, we asked him what his favorite movie was, and he answered "High Noon," by Fred Zinneman, whom he had recently honored in London. When we asked him what he was reading, he sighed and mentioned a book on the economic wars of the future, author and title unknown to me.

"Better to read 'Don Quixote,'" I said to him. "Everything's in there." Now, the 'Quixote' is a book that is not read nearly as much as is claimed, although very few will admit to not having read it. With two or three quotes, Clinton showed that he knew it very well indeed. Responding, he asked us what our favorite books were. Styron said his was "Huckleberry Finn."

I would have said "Oedipus Rex," which has been my bed table book for the last 20 years, but I named "The Count of Monte Cristo," mainly for reasons of technique, which I had some trouble explaining.

Clinton said his was the "Meditations of Marcus Aurelius," and Carlos Fuentes stuck loyally to "Absalom, Absalom," Faulkner's stellar novel, no question, although others would choose "Light in August" for purely personal reasons. Clinton, in homage to Faulkner, got to his feet and, pacing around the table, recited from memory Benji's monologue, the most thrilling passage, and perhaps the most hermetic, from "The Sound and the Fury."

Faulkner got us to talking about the affinities between Caribbean writers and the cluster of great Southern novelists in the United States. It made much more sense to us to think of the Caribbean not as a geographical region surrounded by its sea but as a much wider historical and cultural belt stretching from the north of Brazil to the Mississippi Basin.

Mark Twain, William Faulkner, John Steinbeck and so many others would then be just as Caribbean as Jorge Amado and Derek Walcott. Clinton, born and raised in Arkansas, a Southern state, applauded the notion and professed himself happy to be a Caribbean.

It was close to midnight, and he had to break off the conversation to take an urgent call from Gerry Adams, to whom at that moment he gave the authority to campaign and raise funds in the United States for peace in Northern Ireland. That should have been the ending to an unforgettable evening, but Carlos Fuentes took it further by asking the president who he thought of as his enemies.

His reply was immediate and abrupt: "My only enemy is right-wing religious fundamentalism." That pronouncement ended the evening. The other times I saw him, in public or in private, I had the same impression as I had that first time. Bill Clinton was the complete opposite of the idea Latin Americans have of presidents of the United States.

Given all that, does it seem right that this exceptional human being should be prevented from fulfilling his historical destiny simply because he was unable to find a private place to make love? That is just what happened. The most powerful man in the world was kept from consummating his secret passions by the invisible presence of a Secret Service that served as much to restrain as to protect.

There are no curtains on the Oval Office windows, no bolt on the door of the president's private bathroom. The vase of flowers that appears behind the president in photographs of him at his desk has been claimed by the press to be a hiding-place for microphones to consecrate the mysteries of presidential audiences.

Even sadder, however, is the fact that the president only wanted to do what the run of men have done in private with their women from the beginning of the world, and a Puritan stolidity not only impeded him, but even denied him the right to deny it.

Jonas invented the literature of fiction when he convinced his wife that his homecoming was three days late because a whale had swallowed him. Sheltering behind that ancient argument, Clinton denied having any sexual relations with Monica Lewinsky, and denied it with his head held high, like any self-respecting unfaithful husband. In the end, his personal drama is a purely domestic matter, between himself and Hillary, and she has stood by him in the eyes of the world with Homeric dignity.

It is one thing to lie in order to deceive; but it is quite another to conceal truths in order to protect that mythical dimension of human existence that is private life. Quite rightly, no one is obliged to give evidence against himself. For having persisted in his first denials, Clinton would have been prosecuted in any case -- that's what it was about -- but it is much more dignified to perjure oneself defending the privacy of the heart than to be absolved at the expense of love.

Disastrously, with the same insistence with which he had denied blame, he later admitted it and went on admitting it over all the media, written, visual and spoken, to the point of humiliation -- a fatal error in an uncertain lover, whose secret life will go into the history books not for having made love badly but for having made it a lot less glorious than it should be.

Ludicrously, he submitted to oral sex while he talked on the telephone with a senator. He supplanted himself with a frigid cigar. He naturally used all kinds of tricks of avoidance, but the more he tried the more his inquisitors came up with evidence against him, for Puritanism is insatiable and feeds on its own excrement.

It has been a vast and sinister conspiracy of fanatics aimed at the personal destruction of a political adversary whose stature they could not abide. The method was the criminal use of justice by a fundamentalist prosecutor called Kenneth Starr, whose fierce and salacious questioning seemed to excite these fanatics to the point of orgasm.

The Bill Clinton we met some four months ago, at a gala dinner in the White House for Andres Pastrana, president of Colombia, seemed quite different -- no longer the open-minded academic of Martha's Vineyard, but someone under sentence, thinner and uncertain, who could not conceal with a professional smile an organic weariness like the metal fatigue that destroys planes.

Some days before, at a press dinner with Katharine Graham, the golden woman of the Washington Post, someone had remarked that, judging by the trials of Clinton, the United States still seemed to be the country of Nathaniel Hawthorne. That night in the White House, I realized just what that meant.

