What's your beef with about as such? Despite the above. See my Talk About About, in a Raddle Moon I forget which number, recently reprinted in the 94-5 Gertrude Stein anthology. About would be on all sides.

Fiona

↑ Index

709. Maria Damon
Re: four melismas
Tue 25 Mar 1997

At 3:32 PM -0800 3/25/97, Stephen Cope wrote:
...
>
 (If anyone, by the way, knows of books on this topic {music and gender studies], let me know >either here or backchannel - thanks).

susan mcclary, now at ucla, has done a great deal of feminist work in musicology. her husband rob walzer (walser?) (also at ucla) has done work on masculinity in heavy metal. in addition, a lot of work on and by gay men and opera has appeared in the last couple of years, including wayne koestenbaum's the queen's throat, and something by richard mohr (?) on wagner i blieve.

md

↑ Index

710. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Is there a National Poetry Month?
Tue 25 Mar 1997

Patrick writes:

> The idea of a National Poetry Month was recently attacked by Richard Howard in a speech reprinted in the latest Harpers. Basically, he says that the idea of such a "celebration" ghettoizes poetry, reducing it from something lofty and "millennial" to something commodified and sanitized, on a par with National Secretary's Week.

Was Angelou doing the inauguration lofty? The problem is largely the profuse amounts of corn porn (I think that is Perelman's phrase) that accompany any media version of late American poetry. The media and whoever else gives a damn will seek out the officially licensed and bonded poets of the land for nice comments. Come on folks, we're talking full-blown hegemonalization here!

> Of course this is "the logic of late capitalism" and while I'm inclined to agree with him in a way, his denunciation begs the question of the relationship between poets and the public: who is the audience for poetry and isn't that audience in fact not one but many? Poetry, I've often thought, needs all the press it can get and yet - writing poetry is also a wager that the poem will eventually "find" its reader, thus obviating the > need for "crass" promotionalism. Ultimately, gestures like National Poetry Month wld seem lost on its intended recipients.

Social realist and populist sentiments on the part of any poetry spokesperson not withstanding, a secret readership of one individual at a time will always exist as long as the goods are put out there (text and speech),and therein lies the rub.

Good questions that will spurn a new and lively thread I hope.

BB

↑ Index

711. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Is there a National Poetry Month?
Tue 25 Mar 1997

> Still dreaming of Juliette Binoche,

Did anyone else see the Charley Rose interview of Juliette Binoche on PBS?

BB

↑ Index

712. Charles Alexander
come on
Tue 25 Mar 1997

Is this list going to turn into "boys talking about Juliet Binoche?" I seriously hope not, and I imagine some list-folk are offended.

↑ Index

713. Matt Kirschenbaum
Re: bp/bob
Tue 25 Mar 1997

> Chris:
>
> In your fantaastic long post (which I have to still go back to digest), you refer to Bob Perleman as "bp." May I ask that you don't do so any more? This confuses him with a poet that I suspect Bob Perelman would agree is bound to be (if justice is to be done) of more historical import than he: bp nichol. Let's keep bp as bp and Bob Perleman as Bob Perleman, or Ivy Bob, or just Bob P., or whatever.
>
> thanks, Kent

Is this a joke, or is that asteroid closer than we think?

--Matt

==========
========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English
http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

714. DS

Re: Is history dead?

Tue 25 Mar 1997

What really irritated me was her underwear. IN WARTIME italy - Now i wasn't there, so if anyone was they are welcome to correct me, but i find it hard to believe such underwear was readily available.

& i sure can't rememember them from the book.

At 02:12 PM 3/25/97 -0800, you wrote:
>The question isn't how to write history in Gertrude Steinese, but why? A >fork is good for what it's made for, but it's a lousy shovel.
>I agree that Juliette Binoche would have looked better if she hadn't been >wearing a dress.
>
>At 11:20 AM 3/25/97 -0800, you wrote:
>>Juliette Binoche was really classy, wasn't she -- except for that rather >>ghoulish (sorry, Henry) dress. I think she was the best thing about "The >>English Patient," which I found rather empty at the core -- the movie, I >>mean, not the book.
>>
>>BUT -- Pat's mention of the latest Harper's makes me wonder if anyone >>here is interested in responding to Lewis Lapham's challenge -- in an >>extended three-part essay, the first two of which have now been published
>>-- of the impossibility of writing (historical) narrative in a culture >>organized solely around media images. Here's some quotes:
>>
>>"The sensibility shaped by the electronic media over the last forty-odd >>years has by now acquired a distinctive form--impatient, easily bored, >>geared to increasingly short bursts of attention, intuitive, musical, >>tuned to abrupt changes of mood and scene. Most importantly, it is a >>senbsibility bereft of memory."
>>
>>"Three years ago at Yale I taught a course of English composition and >>found only four of twelve students capable of writing a well-arranged >>paragraph -- not because they weren't intelligent but because they had >>never acquired the habit of reading. Familiar with a vast archive of >>visual images, they could easily recall scenes and fragments of scenes >>from {he mentions several movies and TV shows here} but books were grim >>tasks instead of pleasant diversions, foreign objects, unfamiliar and >>vaguely ominous, meant to be studied as if they were cancer cells . . ."

>>
>>And, finally, he quotes the historian Bernard DeVoto (his _1846: Year of >>Decision_ is a great book on American history, recommended by Pound and >>Olson, among others) on Gertrude Stein:
>>
>>". . . but how do we write history in a language like Gertrude Stein's, >>one that floats freely 'in a medium of pure caprice sustained by nothing >>except its awareness of its own inner wondrousness' ".
>>
>>As I say, he's talking mainly about the writing of history, but I think >>his remarks can be extended to all narrative writing -- I was just >>wondering if anyone who's read it had any response.
>>
>>
>
>

↑ Index

715. Robert Kendall
New Hypertext Poem: A LIFE SET FOR TWO
Tue 25 Mar 1997

An announcement from Eastgate Systems that should be of interest to this list:

> EASTGATE QUARTERLY REVIEW OF HYPERTEXT
> volume 2 number 4
> A LIFE SET FOR TWO by Robert Kendall
> and
> GENETIS: A RHIZOGRAPHY by Richard Smyth
>
> The latest issue of the Eastgate Quarterly Review of Hypertext is now available.
>
> "A Life Set For Two" welcomes you to the Cafe Passe', where acclaimed poet Robert Kendall sets a place and where reminders of lost love linger everywhere. Choose your reading to suit your appetite. Among the many delectable choices are Prison Rations, Naughty Treats, Manna from the Stars, and Dainties Under Glass. Place a retrospective order and discover > how regret, desire, and bitterness feed on memories and dreams. Don't forget to leave room for desert! (for Windows)

>
> In the style of what Gregory Ulmer calls the "mystory", Richard Smyth uses the genre-defying capabilities of hypertext to present a case for the power of writing in desperate circumstances. After the narrators mental meltdown on his honeymoon, he learns that only writing has the power to salvage his sanity and his life. But as he writes, his life becomes stranger still. (For Macintosh and Windows.)
>
> ISBN 1-884511-32-5. Copies of A LIFE SET FOR TWO and GENETIS are available for $19.95; the entire volume 2 of the Eastgate Quarterly, including all four issues, is just $49.95.
>
> - - - - - -
>
> The Eastgate List [redacted]
> read HypertextNOW often! http://www.eastgate.com/HypertextNow/ > visit Eastgate on the web! http://www.eastgate.com/
> call us! [redacted] [redacted]

Robert Kendall
e-mail: [redacted]
home page: http://www.wenet.net/~rkendall

↑ Index

716. DS
Re: come on
Tue 25 Mar 1997

sorry i though it was a type of bread with raisons

At 05:59 PM 3/25/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Is this list going to turn into "boys talking about Juliet Binoche?" I >seriously hope not, and I imagine some list-folk are offended.
>
>

↑ Index

717. henry
Re: edg.po / pantoum
Tue 25 Mar 1997

On Tue, 25 Mar 1997 17:51:56 -0500 David Israel said:
>

><< Now as to Poe's boomerang effect. This has a couple of meanings.
>On the ur-cult-ur-ologic-ur-l level, it simply refers to the fact that a dead >American Poet became a live French Symbolist. >> > perhaps I shd. do homework rather than pestering w/ questions -- but, um, what might that mean, one wonders? Does this refer to posthumous critical reception / appraisal of Poe in France? (was he the Jerry Lewis of his century?) . . .

It means: what goes down must come up, like a bad centime.
>
><< I'm trying out this effect over in Russia, as we speak. >>
>
>meaning: introducing Poe there? -- or ?

Means I'm considered an up-&-coming Russian poet in St. Petersburg.
& more dead than alive roun' here. AND I DON'T EVEN SPEAK FRENCH!!!
>
>Henry, it's only as I start reading your explication as regards ><< Valery's pendulum-effect . . .
>in fact Poe satirized this situation ahead of time in his story (prose!)
>_The Pit and the Pendulum_, which is about how cutting edge continental >writing emerged from the pits of Baltimore & New York . . . >> >that it slowly dawns on me I'm taking you as credulously seriously, here, >as I lately took your report concerning Blarnes Sahib -- >(slow learner, as they say)

David, it's all true.

CIVIC PANTOUM

(have to allow here for frequent italics - shown with _ markers _)

_I caught a glimpse of the immortal City
circled round and around with a rocking sea
ineffable zone of evanescent deity
a sight of what was once, and was to be_

_Circled round and around with a rocking sea
whose motion moves me toward--away from again
a sight of what was once, and was to be Atlantis--thy recurring dream-phenomenon_

Whose motion moves me toward--away from again
this metropole-mirage--so _faux-Parisienne?
Atlantis--thy recurring dream-phenomenon_
echoes backward... toward some millenial _fin_

This metropole-mirage--so _faux-Parisienne_
like Baudelaire or Benjamin--one headache
echoes backward... toward some millenial _fin_
of repetitions... some mastery at stake!

Like Baudelaire or Benjamin... one headache
like a dream left overnight... and growing tired
of repetitions... some mastery at stake...
I left my boring job--got myself fired

like a dream left overnight... and growing tired
I moved out on the street, where it was warm
I left my boring job--got myself fired
I said (to the reporter's microphoned underarm)

I moved out on the street, where it was warm underneath my army-navy discard--in my heart
I said (to the reporter's microphoned underarm)
I must plunge down where all the adders start

Underneath my army-navy discard--in my heart
a phantom muttered... like an empty well
I must plunge down where all the adders start
(or was it just my empty stomach--who can tell)

A phantom muttered... like an empty well
and like low humming from a bat-filled cave
(or was it just my empty stomach--who can tell) stand up upon the rooftop--howl and rave

and like low humming from a bat-filled cave
you--bronze serpent-servant of those spheres
stand up upon the rooftop--howl and rave
Jerusalem emerges through your tears

You--bronze serpent-servant of those spheres
ineffable zone of evanescent deity
Jerusalem emerges through your tears
I caught a glimpse of the immortal City.

- HG edg.po

↑ Index

718. Matt Kirschenbaum

Re: bp/bob

Tue 25 Mar 1997

> Date sent: Tue, 25 Mar 1997 20:28:22 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Matt Kirschenbaum <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: bp/bob
> To: [redacted]
>
> Chris:
>
> In your fantaastic long post (which I have to still go back to digest), you refer to Bob Perleman as "bp." May I ask that you don't do so any more? This confuses him with a poet that I suspect Bob Perelman would agree is bound to be (if justice is to be done) of more historical import than he: bp nichol. Let's keep bp as bp and Bob Perleman as Bob Perleman, or Ivy Bob, or just Bob P., or whatever.
>
> thanks, Kent
>
> Is this a joke, or is that asteroid closer than we think?
>
> --Matt
>
> ==========
> Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia
> [redacted] Department of English
> http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ Electronic Text Center
>
> Joke? That bp nichol is a writer light years beyond what Bob Perelman or nearly all of us could aspire to? No, Matt (pat on the head) Kirschenbaum. Is Bob P. on your dissertation committee? Hurry up and defend your thesis, 'cause the big one is on its way!
>
> Kent

Actually, I meant the idea that anyone might find this "confusing."

By the way, isn't it properly bpNichol -- or at least that's how I always refer to him in my thesis.

Seems to me that if it matters it matters.

--Matt

==========
========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English
http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

719. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: bpNichol
Tue 25 Mar 1997

---

check out the new LIFE brand shampoo that they're selling down at the wal-mart. it has a "bp" writ on it in gold: Balsam & Protein: LIFE and EXTRA BODY! i bought 5 and passed them round my seminars as found poems! why not? bp asked the question originally in book 5: "if i become a brand name."

god i am having a ball working on my dissertation on that incredible poet! he is everywhere -- and this is his school.

c.

↑ Index

720. Hugh Steinberg
FC2 vs. Hoekstra
Tue 25 Mar 1997

Has anything happened recently with Rep. Hoekstra, the NEA, and the investigation of FC2/Black Ice?

The whole thing raises my hackles. If they go after them, it won't be long before they come after us.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

721. Hugh Steinberg
Re: A New Circle -- April 4 & 5 NYC
Tue 25 Mar 1997

FYI:

Tia Chucha Press will be publishing a collaboration between Maureen Seaton and Denise Duhamel in either the Fall of 97 or the Spring of 98.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

722. robert drake
Re: FC2 vs. Hoekstra
Tue 25 Mar 1997

> Has anything happened recently with Rep. Hoekstra, the NEA, and the investigation of FC2/Black Ice?

you can keep current w/ their side ov th ongoing, at least:

http://www.altx.com/whatsnew.html

>
>The whole thing raises my hackles. If they go after them, it won't be long >before they come after us. ^^^^
^^

do you really think there's a distinction between "them" & "us"? (echos ov form & content...

lbd

↑ Index

723. Maria Damon
Re: come on
Tue 25 Mar 1997

At 5:59 PM -0700 3/25/97, Charles Alexander wrote:
>Is this list going to turn into "boys talking about Juliet Binoche?" I >seriously hope not, and I imagine some list-folk are offended.

pas moi; for me, tho', i got a kick out of seeing fargo win some awards and hearing that the good peiople of brainerd, where the film was shot, held parties in celebration and conceded that, in spite of its flaws (ie it's portrayal of minnesotans), the film put their town on the map. they were, however, offended that frances mcdormand didnt thank them in her speech. i thought binoche was very cute tho i didn't like her outfit much; also, i'd never seen courtney love and found her ravishing. all the nominated songs were dreck, tho. this is the second time in my life that i've watched the oscars; not having a tv, i was delighted with the total immersion in american mass culture, esp that coca cola ad set in south asia with thta great music. wonderful and enraging to be so seduced!

↑ Index

724. Charles Alexander
Re: bp/bob
Tue 25 Mar 1997

I'm not sure I know what the joke would be.

At 08:28 PM 3/25/97 -0500, you wrote:
>> Chris:
>>
>> In your fantaastic long post (which I have to still go back to >> digest), you refer to Bob Perleman as "bp." May I ask that you don't >> do so any more? This confuses him with a poet that I suspect Bob >> Perelman would agree is bound to be (if justice is to be done) of >> more historical import than he: bp nichol. Let's keep bp as bp and >> Bob Perleman as Bob Perleman, or Ivy Bob, or just Bob P., or >> whatever.
>>
>> thanks, Kent
>
>Is this a joke, or is that asteroid closer than we think?
>
>--Matt
>
>==========
==========
>Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia
>[redacted] Department of English
>http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ Electronic Text Center
>
>

↑ Index

725. Pam Brown
Texture Press Address
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Hi Poetics List -
Could someone please email me a contact address for Texture Press so I can order "Fuzzy Logic Series" -
Thanks
Pam Brown

http://postbox.library.usyd.edu.au/~pbrown/

↑ Index

726. David Bromige
bp/BP
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Thanks, Louis, and good to have yr e-ddress. _Hole_ #6 has some excellent reads. I think Lisa Robertson's "The Device" is a knockout. From the p-o-v of that poem, and one who wasnt at the NYC event, we must ask why it didnt prove more pleasurable; were the superego's imperatives being muffled by un-supervised _id_iots? With yr account, we have something quite other than Chris Stroffolino's, and thus the picture grows bigger and more spherical and jagged. Good. I was saddened to hear Bob P was put on the defensive, never an attractive mode, at least when phrased that way. I would sooner imagine him a-brim with lively conjecture, where he seems happiest. There, and in the dismissing of fools lightly. How did this miscarriage of pleasure transpire--who nudged whom?

I dont even know the names of all the players. Does someone want to mail me a spare program? I suppose the proceedings will be part of a book, but i'd sooner not wait, who would.

The shuffling of reputations by initials this morning I found bemusing. Thought I was on the stock exchange list thru some error of my own. Nearly phoned my broker to order a spare set of everything bpNichol ever published,and entertained a number of offers for my signed copy of _7 Works_ . But then I remembered these names had people attached to them somewhere. History refuses to die.

It was fun to see Bouvard and Pecuchet on the list. I thought they were running an arts program in Ft.Milltown.

I hope to read further accounts of the NYC event. Things have been a little quiet in Sebastopol since the Canadians were here. db.

↑ Index

727. Louis Cabri
the margaritas of poetry--where were they!
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Fiona, I'd be happy to give examples. First I am going to read Kent Johnson's article "Howard McCord and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E." I was about to flame Professor Kent Johnson, and handily (only a pocket flame needed), after his bp/BP adventure into the wide and dizzy land of the patter of lettered feet--and then I looked him up on ol' MLA. I realize I don't know him in the sky well enough yet. But I have read almost everything bpNichol has ever written--he's not so much a comet as a Christmaslight for the literary industry in Canada, after all. He's enabled a lot of critics to thematize and thereby dumb-down and take the sharp political edge off of radical theory--and critics from prestigious universities and departments, too. The beauty of Nichol is his political neutrality of language (some might puke at that, however)--that he often performs wordplay without ever stirring into the social meanings that those words connote (except in love: a book of remembrances and in his early letter-based works, as well as his concrete and sound poetry). His essays, on the other hand, are more feisty--the parodies of academic and scientific jargon, for instance, many co-written with McCaffery. But neutrality is something Perelman's poetry never is--if anything, it refuses itself as poetry so long as it fails to incite social meanings, and meanings/forms lodged the more centrally in the literary establishment/tradition the better for defamiliarizing effects. Even his "academic poem" "Marginalization of Poetry" figuratively insults (to only begin) the professor-role and institutional context of its occasion of delivery--it would be absurd, for a professor, to politely clap on hearing this read, unless that professor were a Bouvard or Pecuchet. Perelman too has outdistanced the fetishization of the new, in that he is absent, for example, from Marjorie Perloff's critical appropriation and promotion of Language Writing as the next-last movement-moment. I think Marginalization of Poetry, regardless of how you judge it, and I do, could be looked at in context of his work as a whole for startling contrastive (and instructive) news, and that in context of the broader concept of "politics" of language propounded by Language Writing writing. Anyway I am looking at this in an essay right now so keep your hat near, Bill. I don't think Perelman needs an apologist so much as readers of his poetry. I do think the event, however, needs an apologist. Post-panel discussion did barely materialize. It was like listening to lectures. Not even a lecture: Steve Evans felt that for the NYC crowd he had to mock the very theory he is steeped up to his intellect in--and, get this, noone reacted liked he was condescending! Chris S. mentioned Mac Low's question in his last post (I won't repeat it here). Why is it that it seemed to me at the time of hearing it that Mac Low's question was off topic? Putting Mac Low's que at the beginning of the discussion would have helped--but for me the odd realization now is that answering Mac Low's question is exactly what Perelman's book proposes to deal with. So, if critical of the book as project, is that even the que which should be asked? James Sherry asked why even bother doing a literary history, and that particular kind of literary history. Lisa Jarnot questioned--as a complement to Ann Lauterbach's questioning of the contents of Perelman's book--the representativity of the panel, since all the panelists are in a position to write a book about the same poets and issues as Perelman. Lee Ann Brown's question brought formal discussion to an end: she surprised us all and instead of asking a question, read-out the next event at Segue, which was her own event, and up and coming events--and so the relentless calendar of events, the very form that Sean Killian wanted to disrupt by organizing a discussion panel in the first place, seamlessly reasserted itself over the night. And discussion was left for the critics. No, for the poets. No, for the critics. No, for--Hi, I'm Louis Cabri. Ya. Ya. Oh ya. Hah. Yas.

↑ Index

728. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Howard McCord
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Dear Louis:

Actually, when you teach at a community college (even with tenure) you are an instructor, not a "Professor." Are you a Professor yet?

The article you refer to ('87?) was written when I was a graduate student at Bowling Green. Howard McCord was my dissertation advisor, and in this essay I go after him for waht I see as his shortsightedness re: Language writing. As far as I know, it was among the first defenses of Langpo written by someone not in that circle, and I remember it brought friendly letters from Bob Perelman, Michael Palmer, and Marjorie Perloff (out of which began for me a sporadic but very fruitful intellectual association with her).

It's great that you brought Howard to the list's attention, for he is certainly a "forgotten" writer. Back during the early 70's he was actually a "big" name in the world of poetry, but then faded, through partial fault, surely, of his own indifference to the name game, from sight. I can say that I have never met a single person in my life who is more eclectically brilliant than he. The man just knows an incredible amount across a great range.

But I would say you are wrong (if I'm reading you right) when you suggest in an earlier post that his work and career might point in the direction of a hidden comunitas on the margins of New American Poetry individualism. If there is a poet alive today who has more consistently espoused the ideals of self-reliant libertarianism than Howard has (and his politics would not be at all welcome by most people on this list--he and Dorn are good buddies) then he or she has retired to the mountains. In fact, Bowling Green is kind of like the mountains, flat as northwestern Ohio is. Howard is its quiet hermit sage, hunting and writing now mainly for the gun magazines.

He's quite a person. I care for him immensely and admire him deeply. Gnomonology: A Handbook of Systems is a wild work. There's much more, including most recent a novel soon to appear from Macpherson, titled The Man Who Walked to the Moon.

Now for what its worth, I'll say I was being a bit silly last night with my remark about Bob Perleman who is not better or lesser than bpNichol, whatever such zero-sum evaluations might ever mean! Ok, ok, it was a moment of iconoclasm, against what seems to often be some hero worship on this list of names that are already operating under the inertia of the Name. (tho I admire Bob Perleman's work!) Enough for now, but is no one going to step up and say something decent about bpNichol? Is Steve McCaffery on this list? (for those not familiar, his essay in North of Intention is a great intro to the work.) Do you honestly feel, Louis, that his work is merely a "Christmas light"? Such language doesn't really open one up to a generous reading of seriously undertaken work, does it?

Kent

> Date sent: Wed, 26 Mar 1997 03:35:32 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Louis Cabri <[redacted]>
> Subject: the margaritas of poetry--where were they!
> To: [redacted]
>
> *Fiona, I'd be happy to give examples. First I am going to read Kent Johnson's article "Howard McCord and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E." I was about to flame Professor Kent Johnson, and handily (only a pocket flame needed), after his bp/BP adventure into the wide and dizzy land of the patter of lettered feet--and then I looked him up on ol' MLA. I realize I don't know him in the sky well enough yet. But I have read almost everything bpNichol has ever written--he's not so much a comet as a Christmaslight for the literary industry in Canada, after all. He's enabled a lot of critics to thematize and thereby dumb-down and take the sharp political edge off of radical theory--and critics from prestigious universities and departments, too. The beauty of Nichol is his political neutrality of language (some might puke at that, however)--that he often performs wordplay without ever stirring into the social meanings that those words connote (except in love: a book of remembrances and in his early letter-based works, as well as his concrete and sound poetry). His essays, on the other hand, are more feisty--the parodies of academic and scientific jargon, for instance, many co-written with McCaffery. But neutrality is something Perelman's poetry never is--if anything, it refuses itself as poetry so long as it fails to incite social meanings, and meanings/forms lodged the more centrally in the literary establishment/tradition the better for defamiliarizing effects. Even his "academic poem" "Marginalization of Poetry" figuratively insults (to only begin) the professor-role and institutional context of its occasion of delivery--it would be absurd, for a professor, to politely clap on hearing this read, unless that* > *professor were a Bouvard or Pecuchet. Perelman too has outdistanced the fetishization of the new, in that he is absent, for example, from Marjorie Perloff's critical appropriation and promotion of Language Writing as the next-last movement-moment. I think Marginalization of Poetry, regardless of how you judge it, and I do, could be looked at in context of his work as a whole for startling contrastive (and instructive) news, and that in context of the broader concept of "politics" of language propounded by Language Writing writing. Anyway I am looking at this in an essay right now so keep your hat near, Bill. I don't think Perelman needs an apologist so much as readers of his poetry. I do think the event, however, needs an apologist. Post-panel discussion did barely materialize. It was like listening to lectures. Not even a lecture: Steve Evans felt that for the NYC crowd he had to mock the very theory he is steeped up to his intellect in--and, get this, noone reacted liked he was condescending! Chris S. mentioned Mac Low's question in his last post (I won't repeat it here). Why is it that it seemed to me at the time of hearing it that Mac Low's question was off topic? Putting Mac Low's que at the beginning of the discussion would have helped--but for me the odd realization now is that answering Mac Low's question is exactly what Perelman's book proposes to deal with. So, if critical of the book as project, is that even the que which should be asked? James Sherry asked why even bother doing a literary history, and that particular kind of literary history. Lisa Jarnot questioned--as a complement to Ann Lauterbach's questioning of the contents of Perelman's book--the representativity of the panel, since all the panelists are in a position to write a book about the same poets and issues as Perelman. Lee Ann Brown's question brought formal discussion to an end: she surprised us all and instead of asking a question, read-out the next event at Segue, which was her own event, and up and coming events--and so the relentless calendar of events, the very form that Sean Killian wanted to disrupt by organizing a discussion panel in the first place, seamlessly reasserted itself over the night. And discussion was left for the critics. No, for the poets. No, for the critics. No, for--Hi, I'm Louis Cabri. Ya. Ya. Oh ya. Hah. Yas.*

↑ Index

729. robert drake
Re: Texture Press Address
Wed 26 Mar 1997

> Hi Poetics List -
> Could someone please email me a contact address for Texture Press so I can order "Fuzzy Logic Series" -

texture press/susan smith nash 3760 Cedar Ridge Dr.,
Norman OK 73072

↑ Index

730. Michael Boughn
Re: four melismas
Wed 26 Mar 1997

> Sun Ra was most definitely a misogynist (he was apparently very vocal about his desire to exclude women from membership in Bill Dixon's Jazz Composer's Guild, among other things).

Grounds, no doubt, for x-ing all further references to that dude. Send him to the Dorn jail. Knuckle sandwiches all around. JOEL, be warned, all further attempts by anyone on Saturn to subscribe to the list should be viewed with utmost suspicion.

Purely yours,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

731. Susan Wheeler
SF
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Any recommendations for weekend/summer workshops/seminars in SF that I can pass on to an avid student? Backchannel appreciated.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]

↑ Index

732. Michael Magee
Re: come on
Wed 26 Mar 1997

But Charles, Juliet really is hot whatever Bp or BP or bP or bp says.

According to Charles Alexander:
>
> Is this list going to turn into "boys talking about Juliet Binoche?" I > seriously hope not, and I imagine some list-folk are offended.
>

↑ Index

733. lphillips
questions re: Merrill and Jarnot
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Does anyone know if there are any commercially available recordings of James Merrill reading his poetry? I'm looking for anything I can get my hands on but would be especially pleased to find recordings of him reading from the Book of Ephraim. I was told by someone that there was a recording at one time from a now-defunct press.

Secondly, I badly need to order Lisa Jarnot's book from Burning Deck Press but I have mislaid my info. Someone have an address handy?

Many thanks.
Lisa Amber Phillips

↑ Index

734. Maria Damon
Re: four melismas
Wed 26 Mar 1997

At 8:27 AM -0500 3/26/97, Michael Boughn wrote:
>> Sun Ra was most definitely a misogynist (he was apparently very vocal about >> his desire to exclude women from membership in Bill Dixon's Jazz Composer's >> Guild, among other things).
>
>Grounds, no doubt, for x-ing all further references to that dude.
>Send him to the Dorn jail. Knuckle sandwiches all around. JOEL, be >warned, all further attempts by anyone on Saturn to subscribe to the >list should be viewed with utmost suspicion.

dorn was not sent to any jail; no one is x-ing further references to sun ra.

↑ Index

735. Dale Smith
Re: four melismas
Wed 26 Mar 1997

> Send him to the Dorn jail.

And the Adorno jail?

And the Pound jail?

Come on, Mike Boughn. That sounds like a pretty good jail.

More purely yours,
Dale

↑ Index

736. henry g
Re: four melismas
Wed 26 Mar 1997

On Wed, 26 Mar 1997 10:36:55 -0500 Dale Smith said:
>>Send him to the Dorn jail.
>
>And the Adorno jail?
>
>And the Pound jail?
>
>Come on, Mike Boughn. That sounds like a pretty good jail.

they serve marginalin on the toast, though. & Jack Spandrift is the trusty. He forces them to purify his dialect every morning, in front of a bunch of NY attack literatures. Avaunt, aroint ye, roisterers! Be P or Be S. - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

737. Diane Marie Ward
Re: questions re: Merrill and Jarnot
Wed 26 Mar 1997

There are dozens of sound recordings of Merrill -- one of the best is by the Academy of American Poets recorded in 1992 at NYU. The Poets in Person series from the Modern Poetry Association also has a cassette interview/reading available -- They have a website where you may find more info:

http://www.wilmington.net/arts/poets/index.html Backchannel me if you want/ need more ?

Burning Deck Press's address = 71 Elmgrove Ave. Providence, Ri 02906

Diane Marie Ward
Univ. Libraries
SUNY Buffalo

On Wed, 26 Mar 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> Does anyone know if there are any commercially available recordings of James Merrill reading his poetry? I'm looking for anything I can get my hands on but would be especially pleased to find recordings of him reading from the Book of Ephraim. I was told by someone that there was a recording at one time from a now-defunct press.
>
> Secondly, I badly need to order Lisa Jarnot's book from Burning Deck Press but I have mislaid my info. Someone have an address handy?
>
> Many thanks.
> Lisa Amber Phillips

↑ Index

738. Peter Jaeger
Re: bpNichol
Wed 26 Mar 1997

On Tue, 25 Mar 1997, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> check out the new LIFE brand shampoo that they're selling down at the wal-mart. it has a "bp" writ on it in gold: Balsam & Protein: LIFE and EXTRA BODY! i bought 5 and passed them round my seminars as found poems! why not? bp asked the question originally in book 5: "if i become a brand name."

A while ago a noticed a brand of cashews called ST*R, obviously a reference to one of bp's one word poems from his Still Water box set.

Peter

↑ Index

739. Christopher Reiner
Formal Riddle
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Fun from the Nabokov list: a riddle poem by VN for his son. (Sorry, no prizes for the right answer.)

A RIDDLE

A word there is of plural number,

An enemy of peaceful slumber*;

Now if you add an s to this - -

O magic metamorphosis:

plural is plural now no more,

And sweet what bitter was before.

* And if read backward, it may cause
The cautious mountaineer to pause.

↑ Index

740. Peter Jaeger
bpNichol, sound poetry, social meaning
Wed 26 Mar 1997

On Wed, 26 Mar 1997, Louis Cabri wrote:

> *But I have read almost everything bpNichol has ever written--he's not so much a comet as a Christmaslight for the literary industry in Canada, after all. He's enabled a lot of critics to thematize and thereby dumb-down and take the sharp political edge off of radical theory--and critics from prestigious universities and departments, too. The beauty of Nichol is his political neutrality of language (some might puke at that, however)--that he often performs wordplay without ever stirring into the social meanings that those words connote (except in love: a book of remembrances and in his early letter-based works, as well as his concrete and sound poetry). His essays, on the other hand, are more feisty--the parodies of academic and scientific jargon, for instance, many co-written with McCaffery.*

Louis,

I wonder if you could talk a bit about how and why you think bp's concrete and sound poetry are more concerned with social meanings than his other stuff. yes, his interest in the concretist "play activity" of Gomringer and the Brazillian

Noigrandes group invites the reader to produce meaning, and therefore re-orieints the social role of the reader. But it seems to me that his sound poetry comes not only out of the dada trad., but also out of his experience as a "lay analyst" at the therafields therapeutic community, where he worked from 1966-82, and was vice-president from 1968 onwards. The types of sounds made by the horsemen owe a great deal to the healing dimensions therafields attached to associational word games and to primal scream therapy. However, therafields set itself up as an isolated island where participants could discover their "inner child" (again, a bp desire) outside of the larger pressures of the social world at large, before returning to the world to function as healthy individuals. In this respect, therafields upheld the kind of complicity with capitalism that Deleuze and Guattari criticized the psychoanalytic institution for--i.e., the creation of a normalized subject, without self-reflexively criticizing its own collusion with normalcy. Steve McCaffery's approach to sound poetry seems far more concerned with the social, because in both his early and late writing on sound poetry he centres on sound as the site for investigation of the subject of socio-linguistic relations.

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

741. william marsh
Re: bpNichol
Wed 26 Mar 1997

---

carl--

San Diego's very own Southwestern Cable has recently introduced its new cable modem system, called "Road Runner," which "beeps" out "bee pee" everytime i log in! -------> FOUND SOUND!

bill

At 06:27 PM 3/25/97 -0800, you wrote:
>check out the new LIFE brand shampoo that they're selling down at the >wal-mart. it has a "bp" writ on it in gold: Balsam & Protein: LIFE and EXTRA >BODY! i bought 5 and passed them round my seminars as found poems! why not?
>bp asked the question originally in book 5: "if i become a brand name."
>
>god i am having a ball working on my dissertation on that incredible >poet! he is everywhere -- and this is his school.
>
>c.

>
>

↑ Index

742. David Israel
Re: four melismas
Wed 26 Mar 1997

From Michael Boughn --
<< . . . JOEL, be warned, all further attempts by anyone on Saturn to subscribe to the list should be viewed with utmost suspicion. >>

Considering notarious SLOWNESS of the Saturnine server, this concern is probably moot.

↑ Index

743. Wendy Battin
Re: Formal Riddle
Wed 26 Mar 1997

---

cares

↑ Index

744. David Israel
Re: Formal Riddle
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Wendy Battin gives the answer:
> cares

Very good, Vlad (& Wendy). But I don't get it vis-a-vis the footnote abt. the mountaneer:

>  And if read backward, it may cause*
> The cautious mountaineer to pause.

cares + s = caress (okay); but

cares backwards = serac (?)

(some poison weed? some trail hazard?)

d.i.

p.s.: btw, word on the street is, Jeremy Irons is cast to play Humbert Humbert in new filming of VN's Lolita. Don't know the schedule.

↑ Index

745. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: bpNichol, sound poetry, social meaning
Wed 26 Mar 1997

> On Wed, 26 Mar 1997, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
> universities and departments, too. The beauty of Nichol is his political neutrality of language (some might puke at that, however) -- puke indeed.

↑ Index

746. Wendy Battin
Re: Formal Riddle
Wed 26 Mar 1997

On Wed, 26 Mar 1997, David Israel wrote:
> cares backwards = serac (?)
>
> (some poison weed? some trail hazard?)

Serac (accent aigu over the e) is a sort of ice-tower--means the glacier's moving down the mountain & is unpredictable. Hey, it's Nabokov, remember.

Hasn't Jeremy Irons been playing Humber Humbert for the last dozen years? (M. Butterfly, Damage, etc etc.)

Wendy

↑ Index

747. Alan Jen Sondheim
Lieus
Wed 26 Mar 1997

-

Lieu (introduction):

The first Lieu runs as .htm, cutting/incising into the textual body; it is lieu.htm. The second Lieu substitutes language for html, transforms other sections of the texts, results in a breathing-apparatus. The first places text between < >, as with a block of granite, sculpted away; intermediate sections between <text> and </text> are visible. Formally, using <!-- and --> locates comments, but browsers tend to ignore extraneous uninterpret- able commands.

Thus a document can be written to be doubly read, one way with .htm ex- tensions, and one way without; further, it can be additionally encoded as well, so that, saving it as .txt then results in another document that can be moved to .htm. Over and over again, things thicken, take on attributes of the book of the world, dense, particulate, broken or sheared, _talus_ sloping nowhere.

The breathing-apparatus of the second Lieu/place places Jennifer at the heart of commands; the text is no longer performative, but mimics the body constructed by repeated sed 's/foo/bar/g' commands. The first Lieu pro- duces the second; in creating the second, I am well aware of the _body of the text_ itself, sed an operator _onto_ totality, the text hidden as I shuttle back and forth between twin files, churning itself according to the pronouncement of surgery or suture: sed 's/foo1/bar1/g' < z1 > z2, and sed 's/foo2/bar2/g' < z2 > z1, etc. What results is a simulacrum of the hysterical embodiment of attempted speech, Jennifer-Alan-suppuration.

By way of explanation, in place of / Lieu.

Lieu.htm

<html><body><pre> "HTML is like house-construction, bottom up, almost always framed between <> and </><pre> - this _spanning_ also creates the appearance of a _bounded entity._ Boundary-layers, in fact, jeweled facets <- everything measured against your perfect screen, adjusting itself acco- rding to semantic markup. The world becomes totality _precisely_ because of bracketing, eidetic reduction, transcendental phenomenology. The 'age- old dream' is complete.">

Everything is windowpane between <_x_ and >, clear acid between <x> and </x>.</Acid reduces it to pure meaning; design becomes associative, flexi- ble, cleansed. Just this: that meaning decathects from aura, the grain of the voice; it works through semantic flux./>

The flux flows around images, across tables, through variable frames, in and out of browsers, across various platforms and video configurations. The flux is oral/flux, grainless, adapting to architecture, speaking to _you_ through any available means. </pre></body></html>

<html><body><blink><strike>out the text; there is a remnant, a set of attributes, determining vocalization.</blink></strike></body></html> ful- fills Oxherding images, reductions. (If meaning in other words is cons- tructed in relation to residue, noise, within the system, interpenetrated by abjection, then what can be said in relation to noise which, by virtue of semantic markup, becomes contiguous at best? noise which is not inher- ent within the ideality represented by the <html><body><pre> document, but which becomes floating by virtue of its simulacrum of grounding.) (In other words, if noise cathects meaning, then the particular browser format appears nonetheless as ground or ideality against the play of semantic markup, which must remain both in flux and extraneous, although the embed- ding matrix, maternal against those html drives which are inherently ab- sent of meaning, creating meaning in relation to their overall sememe.) (In other words, consider the closed sememe of </pre></body></html> <which throughputs meaning-flux by virtue of the formalization of bracket- ing, the eidetic reduction given in relationship to the particular browser and computer configuration bandwidth, but _within_ such, as in <within> within </within>; there is an interplay of interior and exterior at work here which, confused and exhausted, nonetheless references all idealities - this <strike> equivalent in appearance to that </strike>, the manual fabrication of cancellation, for example, absented, in favor of tokens or markers.)></>

<everything is acid>flooding impossibility where</everything is acid>in lieu of or within the specified construction of meaning. The text fits the frame; the frame dissolves, moves; meaning _pools._

Lieu.dead.breath

suck dead hole suck body hole suck beneath you, Jennifer hole "HTML is like house-construction, bottom up, almost always framed between suck hole and suck finger hole suck beneath you, Jennifer hole - this _spanning_ also creates the appearance of a _bounded entity._ Boundary-layers, in fact, jeweled facets suck - sexthing measured against your perfect screen, adjusting itself according to semantic markup. The world becomes totality _ beneath you, precisely_ because of fucking, eidetic reduction, transcen- dental phenomenology. The 'age-old dream' is complete." hole

Sexthing is windowpane between suck _x_ and hole , clear acid between suck x hole and suck /x hole . suck /Acid reduces it to pure meaning; design becomes associative, flexible, cleansed. Just this: that meaning decath- ects from aura, the grain of the voice; it works through semantic flux. finger hole

The flux flows around images, across tables, through variable frames, in and out of browsers, across various platforms and video configurations. The flux is oral/flux, grainless, adapting to architecture, speaking to _you_ through any available means. suck / beneath you, Jennifer hole suck /body hole suck /dead hole suck dead hole suck body hole suck blink hole suck strike hole out the Jennifer; there is a remnant, a set of attributes, determining vocal- ization. suck /blink hole suck /strike hole suck /body hole suck /dead hole fulfills Oxherding images, reductions. (If meaning in other words is constructed in relation to residue, noise, inside you, Alan the system, interpenetrated by abjection, then what can be said in relation to noise which, by virtue of semantic markup, becomes contiguous at best? noise which is not inherent inside you, Alan the ideality beneath you, presen- ted by the suck dead hole suck body hole suck beneath you, Jennifer hole suck i hole document, but which becomes floating by virtue of its simulacrum of grounding.) (In other words, if noise cathects meaning, then the particular browser format appears nonetheless as ground or ideality against the play of semantic markup, which must remain both in flux and extraneous, although the embedding matrix, maternal against those dead drives which are inherently absent of meaning, creating meaning in rela- tion to their overall sememe.) (In other words, consider the closed sememe of suck /i hole suck / beneath you, Jennifer hole suck /body hole suck /dead hole suck which throughputs meaning-flux by virtue of the formalization of fucking, the eidetic reduction given in relationship to the particular browser and computer configuration bandwidth, but _inside you, Alan_ such, as in suck inside you, Alan hole inside you, Alan suck /inside you, Alan hole ; there is an interplay of interior and exterior at work here which, confused and exhausted, nonetheless references all idealities - this suck strike hole equivalent in appearance to that suck /strike hole , the manual fabrication of cancellation, for example, absented, in favor of tokens or markers.) hole suck finger hole suck sexthing is acid hole flooding impossibility where suck /sexthing is acid hole in lieu of or inside you, Alan the specified construction of meaning. The Jennifer fits the frame; the frame dissolves, moves; meaning _trips._

↑ Index

748. Pam Brown
thanks
Wed 26 Mar 1997

Thankyou o helpful ones

for Texture address

Cheers
Pam Brown

↑ Index

749. shoemakers
Re: Is history dead?
Wed 26 Mar 1997

I'd been dipping into (picking at?) this thread, and then by one of those strange coincidences (you know the kind) i chanced on this poem:

Indian

I don't know who this Indian is,
A bow within his hand,
But he is hiding by a tree
And watching white men land.
They may be gods--they may be fiends--
They certainly look rum.
He wonders who on earth they are
And why on earth they've come.

He knows his streams are full of fish,
His forests full of deer,
And his tribe is the mighty tribe
That all the others fear.
--And, when French or English land,
The Spanish or the Dutch,
They'll tell him they're the mighty tribe
And no one else is much.

They'll kill his deer and net his fish
And clear away his wood,
And frequently remark to him
They do it for his good.
Then he will scalp and he will shoot
And he will burn and slay
And break the treaties he has mad
--And, children, so will they.

We won't go into all of that Fir it's too long a story,
And some is brave and some is sad
And nearly all is gory.
But, just remember this about
Our ancestors so dear:
They didn't find an empty land.
The Indians were here.

from A Book of Americans--Rosemary and Stephen Vincent Benet (1933), and stamped in my copy in red ink are the words Greenwood Elementary School...

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

750. KENT JOHNSON

puking and the state

Wed 26 Mar 1997

A couple days ago I mentioned the controversy around FC2 (originally the Fiction Collective), and one of its books currently at the center of a little Congressional maelstrom, _Blood of Mugwump_, by Doug Rice. I had said that the book made me "want to puke," so to elaborate and clarify a bit, I thought I'd offer an hors d'oeuvre of sorts, though one quite randomly found by flipping through:

"Grandma Mugwump had marked our blood with her own blood. Blue under our shallow skin, visible and waiting to be touched. Now under Caddie's suffering white voice we were making Grandma vanish. Caddie began by sewing Grandma's decrepit eyes shut. Closed and throbbing with blind blood. Inside the pain she cried out: "Let what God so joined together, man never tear asunder." She stared out at the knives we held in our hands. Fingers cut and bleeding. Quickly to stop her screams, Caddie trapped Grandma's slippery tongue in her strong hand. Then in one continuous, swift musical motion, Caddie cut Grandma's tongue free and swallowed it whole intoher own belly. Wedding of all those unknown familial desires. This, here is the birth of no longer being able to to remain silent. Noise jammed her mouth, filled her, choking her parched throat. Thread and needle, Caddie sewed Garndma's lips together. Blood trapped Grandma. Gurgling, growling, Grandma's revolting stomach caved. Hunger. Not words, just sounds stormed out of Grandma's belly. Words unspeakable sprung forth from the thunder caught one last time in her dry cunt. Time inthe mirror. Grandma created herself into a shape only there to fill a lack as the words of Caddie opened her wounds. Moon clouds slicing across the Ides of midnight. Time. Floating. Grandma's buzzard hands rose from the bed and fell. Nearly dead now. etc..."

It actually gets better. Many other things in this book get eaten, and it's not pretty. Clayton Eshelman and other lower-body poets move over! You've barely cracked the surface!

But seriously, what seems involved here is an incipient repeat of the Mapplethorp affair, only this time in the field of exploratory,risk- taking writing. I'm sure many people onthis list would regard the attack on FC2 as a matter importance and basic principle, though there has been little stirring yet here on FC2's call for solidarity--though I realize that there may be stuff goign on backchannel, etc. Anyway, I have documemts here from the NEA Literature Program, including a long, threatening memo from Rep. Pete Hoekstra, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Education and the Workforce (ominous sounding, no?) to Jane Alexander. This and other information (including newspaper articles and an unpublished stomach-churning interview with Doug Rice) is available from Rice's colleague Craig Paulenich at University of Kent/Salem. His e-mail: [redacted]

Interestingly, Craig P. was co-editor with me of an anthology of American Buddhist poets, published back in '89. Rice's book is dedicated to Craig! The Dharma is vast. Or as Gary Snyder puts it ecstatically in a poem somewhere, "Ah, eating each other..."

Hope this provokes some checking into the issue and further action on it!

Kent

↑ Index

751. KENT JOHNSON

Re: puking and the state

Thu 27 Mar 1997

Bill:

The memo is four detailed pages, and I'm currently very involved and in last five days of a Mayoral race against the northwestern Illinois mafia. No time to type it all up! But you might ask Craig Paulenich who should have a way of scanning a clear copy and then posting it. Or, perhaps the Unit for Contemporary Literature at Illinois State University could be contacted (home of FC2): phone: [redacted], fax: [redacted]. In fact, I'm goign to call them right now and see if they can help and send something to us all.

Oh, and thanks, Rachel, for the correction. My accuracy seems to be off the past couple of days!

Kent

> Date sent: Thu, 27 Mar 1997 12:07:19 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: puking and the state
> To: [redacted]
>
> Kent writes:
>
> Anyway, I have documemts here from the NEA Literature Program, including a long, threatening memo from Rep. Pete Hoekstra, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Education and the Workforce (ominous sounding, no?) to Jane Alexander.
>
> Would it be possible to post the Hoekstra memo on the list? I believe that might incite something in the name of action. From what we have heard of so far, the subcommittee's intent is to use this as an example of why funding for > the arts and literature should be cut, which suggests a memo replete with sweeping generalizations.

>
> BB

↑ Index

752. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: four melismas

Thu 27 Mar 1997

Michael Boughn wrote:
>
> > Sun Ra was most definitely a misogynist (he was apparently very vocal about > > his desire to exclude women from membership in Bill Dixon's Jazz Composer's > > Guild, among other things).
>
> Grounds, no doubt, for x-ing all further references to that dude.
> Send him to the Dorn jail. Knuckle sandwiches all around. JOEL, be > warned, all further attempts by anyone on Saturn to subscribe to the > list should be viewed with utmost suspicion.
>
> Purely yours,
> Mike
> [redacted]

Mike, The last time I went out with Jack Clarke (& you) we saw Sun Ra in Buffalo at the (new) Tralf. The next time I go out with Jack, I'll read from my collaboration with him--Blue Horitals (Amman, Jordan: Oasii, 1997 --Stephen Ellis' press)--which includes poems from his In the Analogy from your shuffaloff books (just come, beautifully, in the mail)--on April 12 at Middlesex County College in Edison, NJ [at the New Jersey College English Assn. Conference] & (more publicly) on April 20 at the Old Bridge, NJ, public library. Wish you were here, &c.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

753. Pierre Joris

Re: real audio Poetry City

Thu 27 Mar 1997

Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> If you use the www in the next couple of days, why not get a copy of the > RealAudio Player 3.0 (www.realaudio.com) and then point yourself to:
>
> http://www.twc.org/ratest.htm
>
> There you'll find a recording from Rod Smith's 1996 Poetry City reading in > realaudio format. (Technical note: we're testing a RealAudio server, and > we'd appreciate any feedback -- send your comments to me at > [redacted])
>
> Hop on over to T&W tonight to hear Lyn Hejinian and Travis Ortiz, and then > get beamed over to Segue for the Tender Buttons Benefit Party!
>
> Thanks,
> Jordan

Jordan -- checked it out, & it sounds good -- have been using RealAudio player for some time now & it does seem to do the job well. -- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

754. KENT JOHNSON

Re: thrice-vexed conformtent

Thu 27 Mar 1997

Hey Henry:

"how does innovative writing avoid being 'innovative?'"

Penetrating question! Thank you.

But tell me, you who have been the liveliest voice on this list the past couple or three weeks: What do you think of the recent attempt of the Christian fascists to use FC2 as a wedge against free speech in the arts? And what do you think of the apparent silence on this list about it?

Kent

> Date sent: Thu, 27 Mar 1997 14:31:46 EST
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: henry gould <[redacted]>
> Subject: thrice-vexed conformtent
> To: [redacted]
>
> for all you controversy-sport lovers:
>
> Is innovative experimental writing considered liberating in a socio-political sense? I.e. non-fetishized-commodified in itself?
> Or is this a politically condescending attitude (which may have nothing to do with the value of innovative writing per se)?
>
> Is there a literary virtue in simplicity? Is perhaps the most accurate way of expressing COMPLEX and contradictory/complementary ideas via a combination of divagation and concision? Is this a rhetorical leading question, or what? Did the old masters of conformtent cover this already? I know people don't want to write like those guys anymore? Huh? Conformtent must die?
> Does Promethean Youth = Elderly Complacency = Self-righteous Bull All Around? YES!!! CAN WE ALL GET A LOAN? NO!!!!
>
> How does innovative writing avoid being "innovative"? And should it?
>
> To respond, push either the YAK button or the YELL button. In extreme cases, press the DELETE HENRY button (this will only work on applications which zone out Spandrift spam and Blarnes blarney - available on Nutscape 666). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

755. KENT JOHNSON
Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
Thu 27 Mar 1997

Good Henry. Let's see!

(I mean come on, tough guys and gals, if you can't do it now, when are you going to do id?)

kent

> Date sent: Thu, 27 Mar 1997 18:36:47 EST
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: henry <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
> To: [redacted]
>
> I think this list is silent about it because I've successfully aestheto- > nesthetized it. (zzzzzzzzz....) (conformtent...tencomfornt...fortencomet...)
> - Eric Blarnes
>
> I think we're silent because of apathy and political idiocy (in the Greek sense > ). & because we were all grossed out by that quote you sent.
>
> I think people should take a look at the new apex of the M #5, especially > David Matlin's extended essay on the US prison "industry" & his experience > as a prison instructor, ex-Viet conscientious objector - the said industry's > effect on African-American men, Viet vets, and all of us. An extremely > eloquent & prophetic piece of writing. If I have any social conscience or > conscience period that essay will end useless petty/complacent blab forever.
> - an Anonymous Former Poetics List Addict (name of Ghoul...Glue...something)

↑ Index

756. Jordan Davis
real audio Poetry City
Thu 27 Mar 1997

If you use the www in the next couple of days, why not get a copy of the RealAudio Player 3.0 (www.realaudio.com) and then point yourself to:

http://www.twc.org/ratest.htm

There you'll find a recording from Rod Smith's 1996 Poetry City reading in realaudio format. (Technical note: we're testing a RealAudio server, and we'd appreciate any feedback -- send your comments to me at [redacted])

Hop on over to T&W tonight to hear Lyn Hejinian and Travis Ortiz, and then get beamed over to Segue for the Tender Buttons Benefit Party!

Thanks,
Jordan

↑ Index

757. David Kellogg
Re: Formal Riddle
Thu 27 Mar 1997

> *p.s.: btw, word on the street is, Jeremy Irons is cast to play Humbert Humbert in new filming of VN's Lolita. Don't know the schedule.*

Cast? Wrapped! The filming, as I understand it, is complete. Should be out any time now, if distribution isn't complicated by censorship issues.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

759. William Burmeister Prod
Re: puking and the state
Thu 27 Mar 1997

Kent writes:

> Anyway, I have documemts here from the NEA Literature Program, including a long, threatening memo from Rep. Pete Hoekstra, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Education and the Workforce (ominous sounding, no?) to Jane Alexander.

Would it be possible to post the Hoekstra memo on the list? I believe that might incite something in the name of action. From what we have heard of so far, the subcommittee's intent is to use this as an example of why funding for the arts and literature should be cut, which suggests a memo replete with sweeping generalizations.

BB

↑ Index

760. amato
web piece...
Thu 27 Mar 1997

this is just a plug for a short piece by my wife kass fleisher, who served as short story judge for the latest issue of the student journal the palimpsest review, published by penn state u...

in her own words,

> a little essay i wrote called "spinning miss stein's grave: thoughts on the order of words in short fiction" is on the web now at
>
> http://www2.hn.psu.edu/faculty/jmanis/fleisher.htm

i think some of you may find it of interest...

best,

joe

↑ Index

761. henry gould
thrice-vexed conformtent
Thu 27 Mar 1997

for all you controversy-sport lovers:

Is innovative experimental writing considered liberating in a socio- political sense? I.e. non-fetishized-commodified in itself? Or is this a politically condescending attitude (which may have nothing to do with the value of innovative writing per se)?

Is there a literary virtue in simplicity? Is perhaps the most accurate way of expressing COMPLEX and contradictory/complementary ideas via a combination of divagation and concision? Is this a rhetorical leading question, or what? Did the old masters of conformtent cover this already? I know people don't want to write like those guys anymore? Huh? Conformtent must die? Does Promethean Youth = Elderly Complacency = Self-righteous Bull All Around? YES!!! CAN WE ALL GET A LOAN? NO!!!!

How does innovative writing avoid being "innovative"? And should it?

To respond, push either the YAK button or the YELL button. In extreme cases, press the DELETE HENRY button (this will only work on applications which zone out Spandrift spam and Blarnes blarney - available on Nutscape 666). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

762. Don Cheney

Re: thrice-vexed conformtent

Thu 27 Mar 1997

---

henry,

i thought this was a jordan davis post (SERIOUSLY). especially seriously when i seriously read:

"Does Promethean Youth = Elderly Complacency = Self-righteous Bull All Around? YES!!! CAN WE ALL GET A LOAN? NO!!!!"

funny stuf.f.

but then i came to the

"In extreme cases, press the DELETE HENRY button..."

reference and thought "jordan, you're really a renegade of this atomic age" and scrolled back up to see who was fucking with my head.

funny.stuff.com
don

==========
Don Cheney San Diego, CA, USA
http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791

[redacted]
==========

> for all you controversy-sport lovers:
>
> Is innovative experimental writing considered liberating in a socio-political sense? I.e. non-fetishized-commodified in itself? Or is this a politically condescending attitude (which may have nothing to do with the value of innovative writing per se)?
>
> Is there a literary virtue in simplicity? Is perhaps the most accurate way of expressing COMPLEX and contradictory/complementary ideas via a combination of divagation and concision? Is this a rhetorical leading question, or what? Did the old masters of conformtent cover this already? I know people don't want to write like those guys anymore? Huh? Conformtent must die? Does Promethean Youth = Elderly Complacency = Self-righteous Bull All Around? YES!!! CAN WE ALL GET A LOAN? NO!!!!
>
> How does innovative writing avoid being "innovative"? And should it?
>
> To respond, push either the YAK button or the YELL button. In extreme cases, press the DELETE HENRY button (this will only work on applications which zone out Spandrift spam and Blarnes blarney - available on Nutscape 666). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

763. henry gould
RI upcoming event
Thu 27 Mar 1997

Poetry Mission & Cranston Public Library are sponsoring

PRAISES, MANIFESTOS, & PROVOCATIONS a "poetic action" - community debate
the Wm. L. Bergeron Memorial Poetry Program for 1997
Wed. Apr 23, 7:30-9 pm
William Hall Library, 1825 Broad St, Cranston

"What does it mean to be a poet today? Is contemporary poetry alive or dead in the US? Does poetry fill a social need? Should it? Do poets have a right to expect an audience? Has poetry become overprofessionalized?" "Every poet has written at least one poem which argues for its own existence and that proposes a role for poetry in the world. What shapes can it take? "This debate will take place on two levels, poetic and polemical. We will provide a moderator responsible for keeping discussion focused and energetic. You are encouraged to bring poems to read that grapple with these issues and contribute a rhetoric of their own. Bring your own work & that of others. Conversation will weave around the poems as discussion develops."

Free, open to public. Refreshments. Email [redacted] for directions. Moderator: Thomas Epstein. [p.s. dear poetics people: this is not an edg.po propaganda front].

↑ Index

764. George Bowering
Re: farm/produce
Thu 27 Mar 1997

> Yeah. trouble is with the word: "form". sounds like a kind of envelope, or tax form, a thing you fill out, fill in.

I never thought of it that way. I think of it as a synonym for shape. As a noun or a verb.

That is, structure might be premeditated, but not form.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

765. henry gould
Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
Thu 27 Mar 1997

I'm sorry you blew my cover, Don. Henry Gould, Jordan Davis, Eric Blarnes, Jack Spandrift, and Dendra Smothairn are all fairly recent soi-disant "heteronyms" of me, Fernando Pessoa, a.k.a. "Elroy Jenkins, Farmer-Poet"

↑ Index

766. henry
Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
Thu 27 Mar 1997

I think this list is silent about it because I've successfully aestheto- nesthetized it. (zzzzzzzzz....) (conformtent...tencomfornt...fortencomet...) - Eric Blarnes

I think we're silent because of apathy and political idiocy (in the Greek sense). & because we were all grossed out by that quote you sent.

I think people should take a look at the new apex of the M #5, especially David Matlin's extended essay on the US prison "industry" & his experience as a prison instructor, ex-Viet conscientious objector - the said industry's effect on African-American men, Viet vets, and all of us. An extremely eloquent & prophetic piece of writing. If I have any social conscience or conscience period that essay will end useless petty/complacent blab forever. - an Anonymous Former Poetics List Addict (name of Ghoul...Glue...something)

↑ Index

767. William Burmeister Prod

Re: thrice-vexed conformtent

Thu 27 Mar 1997

Henry writes:

> Is innovative experimental writing considered liberating in a socio-political sense? I.e. non-fetishized-commodified in itself? Or is this a politically condescending attitude (which may have nothing to do with the value of innovative writing per se)?
>
> Is there a literary virtue in simplicity? Is perhaps the most accurate way of expressing COMPLEX and contradictory/complementary ideas via a combination of divagation and concision? Is this a rhetorical leading question, or what? Did the old masters of conformtent cover this already? I know people don't want to write like those guys anymore? Huh? Conformtent must die? Does Promethean Youth = Elderly Complacency = Self-righteous Bull All Around? YES!!! CAN WE ALL GET A LOAN? NO!!!!
>
> How does innovative writing avoid being "innovative"? And should it?

Probing questions of the kind I like to see! Interesting as a lead-in for a discussion on received form (ahem) vs innovation. The last Louis Cabri post comes to mind:
> Perelman too has outdistanced the fetishization of the new, in that he is > absent, for example, from Marjorie Perloff's critical appropriation and > promotion of Language Writing as the next-last movement-moment.
where "Language writing as the next-last movement-moment" strikes me in an odd way. What does it mean? This must have been heard before in the wake of past Research and Development movements. Yes? Received form (as conformtent?) is probably inescapable and non-lethal in small doses. Can we say that we are in any greater crisis than any who have come before us? (I know this is turning millenial and that's fine; I like a good maudlin "where we have been and where we are going" discussion)

Speaking only for myself, and as one among many who have come into Language writing from the "outside," innovative experimental writing has been both liberating and liberalizing in a personal sense first, in a social-community sense second, and lastly a political sense. Therein lies its value with me. It seems that most poetries suffer from the more or less same non-commodifiability.

Well, enough rambling from me for now. Thanks henry for the much needed probing in the area of the heretofore thought dead threads.

Bill B.

↑ Index

768. Alan Jen Sondheim
last html wk for a while
Thu 27 Mar 1997

SCHIZZ

Schizz consists of two html files cut at dotted line placed in the C:\ directly and accessed by Netscape, oh what fun. Soon you will crash, but no harm is done. Oh, and. Schizz stutters sheared. You can see it but no matter it does trail. Do run. Cut at dotted line. First file: index.htm and second file: frame.htm and do run. Run index.htm. Open in Netscape by file:///C:/index.htm do run. It does. Cut at dotted line, dotted line not included. Both files much be included, C:\index.htm, C:\frame.htm, oh what fun.

```
<html>
<head>
<title>schizz</title>
</head>
<frameset rows="50%," cols="50%,">
<frame src="frame.htm">
<frame src="frame.htm">
<frame src="frame.htm">
<frame src="frame.htm"> <noframes> ddder
</noframes>
</frameset>
</html>
```

```
<HTML>
<HEAD>
  <TITLE>ddder</TITLE>
  <META http-equiv="Refresh" content="5; URL=file:///C:/index..htm">
</HEAD>
<BODY TEXT="#804000" BGCOLOR="#008080">
<strike>ddder<strike> </BODY>
</HTML>
```

↑ Index

769. KENT JOHNSON
fascism and surrender
Thu 27 Mar 1997

Total agreement, Hugh. But David Bromige (you, one of my favorite writers), I have to admit I'm bewildered by your response which seems to suggest there is nothing to do and bemused silence is the answer? Please correct me here if I'm misinterpreting. I want to ask: If a bunch of fascists came after your work, and you appealed to fellow writers for help, how would you feel if you got left alone? I guess I'm sounding like the moral yardstick here, but really, this issue strikes me as a matter of principle, honor and plain tactical necessity for all of us on this list. I say there's five hundred letters that need to be written to Rep. Hoekstra from this list. And we should be sharing ideas about how to contact others through this incredibly useful medium that brings us together!

Let me ask a hypothetical specific: If this gang can get away with this one, will it make it less or more likely that they will go after someone like, say, the publisher of Aaron Shurin's latest beautiful work?

I've got a call in to FC2 and left a message requesting that they post more detailed info here.

Kent
> Date sent: Fri, 28 Mar 1997 02:07:45 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Hugh Steinberg <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
> To: [redacted]

> I take it very seriously. I write the NEA grants (and final reports) for Tia Chucha and the Guild Complex in Chicago. We recently had a reading > featuring FC2 writers. And frankly, the attacks on the NEA wreck havoc on the organizations that support literature in this country. It's gotten a lot harder to get money because of this, at a time when money is becoming ever more dear (for example, the cost of publishing a book has doubled in the last five years). Plus, when the effects of welfare reform sink in, there'll be even less for luxuries such as literary publishing.

>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

770. David Bromige
FC2 & attempts to censor/punish
Thu 27 Mar 1997

Maybe because theres nothing to say. What is remarkable about a congressman cynically affecting moral outrage in order to get money away from the poor so that it may be given to the rich?

Thanks for the tip, some list one, i looked under "whatsnew" and found the chapter from one of the novelists in question as well as an interview with Doug Rice. I liked the writing in the novel. Enjoyed the orgasm. Of course, its one more man writing abt woman's sexuality. Do any of the women on the list find it accurate?

The congressman might be genuinely outraged, i suppose. That he wasnt there to help. Perhaps he feels left out. But I really doubt that we need to hunt for unconscious motives. That NEA money is needed for corporate welfare. db.

↑ Index

771. George Bowering
Re: bp/bob
Fri 28 Mar 1997

I have to agree with this one. (Well, it's better than agreeing with Bromige, for instance.) How about we call Bob BP (with caps)?

> Chris:
>
> In your fantaastic long post (which I have to still go back to digest), you refer to Bob Perleman as "bp." May I ask that you don't do so any more? This confuses him with a poet that I suspect Bob Perelman would agree is bound to be (if justice is to be done) of more historical import than he: bp nichol. Let's keep bp as bp and Bob Perleman as Bob Perleman, or Ivy Bob, or just Bob P., or whatever.

> thanks, Kent

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

772. George Bowering
Re: Is history dead?
Fri 28 Mar 1997

When I see some actor getting Binoche in a movie, I get bleu with envy.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

773. KENT JOHNSON
Re: doing something
Fri 28 Mar 1997

David: Yes, the letter to one's own representative is perhaps the most effective, with copy to Hoekstra's Oversight Committee. I'll be posting that mailing info as soon as I return Curt White's message taht I just picked up on the machine. I actually didn't mean to say "bemused"--I meant to say "amused." (i.e. what's so remarkable after all about this, just another right-winger jealous of the orgasm, etc.) But your last message makes clear you do think this is serious.

Ok, I'll be back shortly!

Kent
> Date sent: Fri, 28 Mar 1997 09:17:59 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: David Bromige <[redacted]>

> Subject: doing something
> To: [redacted]

> Yes, Kent, now you let us know what action you wish us to take, I for one will take it.
>
> I didnt think i sounded bemused. I was only attempting to account for the list's silence on this matter, which you were finding a puzzle. I believe I summed the situation up quite crisply. I realize that more than style is at stake here.
>
> I'll write a letter, but it's difficult to believe a ton of letters will make a difference. Once upon a time, perhaps. But by now, every voter in the nation must recognize the scenario on sight : who's going to support Hoffstra, except those we will never convert? Might be better to write to one's own congressperson, rather than to a man who can't or won't own his humanity. db.

↑ Index

774. Hugh Steinberg
Re: thrice-vexed conformtent
Fri 28 Mar 1997

I take it very seriously. I write the NEA grants (and final reports) for Tia Chucha and the Guild Complex in Chicago. We recently had a reading featuring FC2 writers. And frankly, the attacks on the NEA wreck havoc on the organizations that support literature in this country. It's gotten a lot harder to get money because of this, at a time when money is becoming ever more dear (for example, the cost of publishing a book has doubled in the last five years). Plus, when the effects of welfare reform sink in, there'll be even less for luxuries such as literary publishing.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

775. Bil Brown
Re: Is there a National Poetry Month?
Fri 28 Mar 1997

ANYTHING that gives NATIONAL attention the the art of poetry is fine with me. The proto-Maraxist crit. of a "National Poetry Month" is fine for academic concerns, and in a perfect world it would always be POETRY any month any day. Since all that IS is Poetry... it is nice to be acknowledged once in a blue fucking moon. Don't you think? Sort'a like Father's Day/Mother's Day/Valentine's Day, Poetry Month should be a celebration of whatever prole-sense forgot to mention to the kiddies...

For example: I'm setting up this festival at the end of April. When I started working on this Poetics festival I DIDN'T know it was "Nationalized" as the month set aside for poetry by our gov't. Granted I really wouldn't have cared fucking less, 'cause poetry is my national pastime, but it made things easier in getting people that normally wouldn't have thought twice about a poetry festival (even bookstores, and record stores) to be interested in the festival. In this imperfect world there are egoistic reasons for the attraction to anything nationally publicized (someone can get a little PR for helpng out a grassroots poetry event, a little of that 15 seconds). But hell I don't care if someone strokes their ego a little , as long as it's not at the expense of my integrity, or the integrity of my event.

National Poetry Month would assume that there is ONE national poetry, but it gives us the opportunity to prove otherwise.

My last example: When Barnes & Noble helps to fund a festival that features Anne Waldman... that makes me happy. Fuck being an ideological prude, we DO NOT live in a perfect world.

Bil Brown

↑ Index

776. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

Re: thrice-vexed conformtent

Fri 28 Mar 1997

---

what is apex of the M#5? where does one get it?

↑ Index

777. henry

Re: thrice-vexed conformtent

Fri 28 Mar 1997

---

apex of the M is a little red lit mag. I don't have the address in front of me. They have a distributor so it's probably around in some big-city bkstores? There's info on it on the epc mags alcove site on the web, http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags.

HG

↑ Index

778. David Bromige
lacunae
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Bob & fellow listmembers, its early in my day & I have to dash out, or I'd do this research myself. But: I'd take a look at Robert Duncan, his preface to one of his 60s collections, either _Bending the Bow_ or _Boots & Ranches_ .I think he discusses his gappings and the time values assigned to them, and he may declare precursory users. Rachel & Henry (was it?) are correct of course to direct us to A-S verse, and also to the Latin. "Caesura" is the break but doesnt necessarily involve visual gapping. How about Old _Usura? any info there? db.

↑ Index

779. David Bromige
doing something
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Yes, Kent, now you let us know what action you wish us to take, I for one will take it.

I didnt think i sounded bemused. I was only attempting to account for the list's silence on this matter, which you were finding a puzzle. I believe I summed the situation up quite crisply. I realize that more than style is at stake here.

I'll write a letter, but it's difficult to believe a ton of letters will make a difference. Once upon a time, perhaps. But by now, every voter in the nation must recognize the scenario on sight : who's going to support Hoffstra, except those we will never convert? Might be better to write to one's own congressperson, rather than to a man who can't or won't own his humanity. db.

↑ Index

780. Bob Perelman
name gap
Fri 28 Mar 1997

A student asked me the following question. I don't know the answer. & who was the first to use the things?

> do you know the technical term for a space in a poem
> that resembles these:
>
> she knew the name a big black winged
> bird on the end of a line Clothes.
>
> ?

> I'm going crazy. I heard it was a lacuna, but I think there's another term.

[I'll be putting in my {non-defensive} two cents about the NYC panel as soon as time & mind clear]

↑ Index

781. henry
Re: name gap
Fri 28 Mar 1997

On Fri, 28 Mar 1997 09:34:34 -0500 Bob Perelman said:
>A student asked me the following question. I don't know the answer. & who >was the first to use the things?
>
>> do you know the technical term for a space in a poem
>> that resembles these:
>>
>> she knew the name a big black winged
>> bird on the end of a line Clothes.
>>
>> ?
>> I'm going crazy. I heard it was a lacuna, but I think there's >> another term.

A caesura with skid marks? May be some term from anglo-saxon prosody... -edg.po

↑ Index

782. Rebecca Reynolds
poetry reading
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Poetry Reading:
Alicia Ostriker & Patricia Deinstfrey

Thursday April 3, 4:30 p.m.
Voorhees Chapel Lower Level, room 005
Douglass College Campus, New Brunswick

for info and/or directions from New York city call Rebecca Reynolds [redacted]

↑ Index

783. Rachel Loden

Re: name gap

Fri 28 Mar 1997

Bob Perelman wrote:
>
> A student asked me the following question. I don't know the answer. & who > was the first to use the things?
>
> > do you know the technical term for a space in a poem
> > that resembles these:
> >
> > she knew the name a big black winged
> > bird on the end of a line Clothes.
> >
> > ?
> > I'm going crazy. I heard it was a lacuna, but I think there's > > another term.

From the OED:

c﹟sura
[a. L. c﹟sura ﹟cutting, metrical pause﹟, f. c﹟s- ppl. stem of c﹟dere to cut...

1. In Greek and Latin prosody: The division of a metrical foot between two words, especially in certain recognized places near the middle of the line...

2. In English prosody: A pause or breathing-place about the middle of a metrical line, generally indicated by a pause in the sense. 1556 Abp. Parker Psalter A ij, Obserue the trayne: the ceasure marke To rest with note in close. 1581 Sidney Def. Poesie (1622) 529 The C﹟sura, or breathing place in the midst of the verse. 1589 Puttenham Eng. Poesie (Arb.) 88 Such Cesure must neuer be made in the middest of any word, if it be well appointed. 1603 Drayton Odes ii. 40 That ev﹟ry lively Ceasure Shall tread a perfect Measure. 1751 Chambers Cycl., Caesure, in the modern poetry denotes a rest or pause towards the middle of a long Alexandrine verse. 1841 D﹟Israeli Amen. Lit. (1867) 170 In the most ancient manuscripts of Chaucer﹟s works the c﹟sura in every line is carefully noted...

Rachel L.

↑ Index

784. Wendy Battin
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

I don't know of a term. I'd guess it's too recent a development to have fallen within any period in which it was particularly fashionable to give Greek or Latin terms to such things. "Lacuna" is good, though traditionally it refers to an accidental and damaging gap. When Jimmy Merrill uses blanks in "Losing the Marbles," he produces a section that looks like a contemporary "spaced-out" poem, but the gaps prove to be lacunae left by rain on an ink manuscript, which get filled back up (reconstructed?) in a later section. I do like "lacuna," because usually the gap _does_ signify something missing, some syntactical ligature, if only a mark of punctuation.

Charles Hartman

↑ Index

785. maz881
reading
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Chris Mann will be reading in new york city soon. He will explain how us railroads of the southwest procurred the wrong kind of eucalyptus.

April 11 7.30 The Synagogue Space 108 E 1 (212) 8029872

↑ Index

786. Rachel Loden
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Examples of c►sura from Du Bartas (Fr.), Old English, Gascoigne, Pope all have not only breath-break but also visual gapping. (These are in _Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics_.)

Charles Hartman wrote (in part):

> "Lacuna" is good, though
> traditionally it refers to an accidental and damaging gap.

I love lacuna too. In OED it is:

1. In a manuscript, an inscription, the text of an author: A hiatus, blank, missing portion...

2. Chiefly in physical science: A gap, an empty space, spot, or cavity.

Rachel L.

↑ Index

787. main
Re: lacunae
Fri 28 Mar 1997

duncan's preface to _ground work: before the war_ figures caesurae as articulated silences, which is arguably a more varied measure of the _time_ of the poem than standard grammatical indicators (comma, period, etc.) provide: not the metronome's uniformity, but the body's "flexible durations." dan featherston

↑ Index

788. Mark Weiss
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Rachel, these are all occasionally-employed printer's or calligrapher's conventions, like the more common capitalization of first letter in a line or bracketing a triplet in an Augustan poem. In Old and Middle English, if memory serves, they usually divide the first two alliterative stresses from the last two (sometimes a bullet [dot] is used instead). In Augustan verse the caesura is supposed to be a natural pause and as such is usually unmarked. It usually falls after either the second or third iamb. The breath-group usage, with its appearance of typographic randomness, is quite different. I wonder if it has a name at all. When I'm typesetting I usually ask my poets how many they want--none of them seem to have a term. To broaden the field, there are things that don't have any commonly accepted names. My favorite is the little crusty things that form in the corner of the eye while we sleep. In my family they're called sleep seeds. I've also heard "sleeps" and "what the sand man left." But these are all baby talk. Other languages have normative adult terms, but English apparently doesn't. If there's an answer to Perelman's question it would be handy to know. I'm also cuious to find other examples of the unnamed in general.

At 09:57 AM 3/28/97 -0800, you wrote:
>Examples of cæsura from Du Bartas (Fr.), Old English, Gascoigne, Pope >all have not only breath-break but also visual gapping. (These are in >_Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics_.)
>
>Charles Hartman wrote (in part):
>
>> "Lacuna" is good, though
>> traditionally it refers to an accidental and damaging gap.
>

>I love lacuna too. In OED it is:
>
>1. In a manuscript, an inscription, the text of an author: A hiatus, >blank, missing portion...
>
>2. Chiefly in physical science: A gap, an empty space, spot, or cavity.
>
>Rachel L.
>
>

↑ Index

789. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco

No Virginia, there is no Nat'l Potry Mnth: now go home!

Fri 28 Mar 1997

>>ANYTHING that gives NATIONAL attention the the art of poetry is fine with me.
>>The proto-Maraxist crit. of a "National Poetry Month" is fine for academic concerns, and in a perfect world it would always be POETRY any month any day.

Bill Moyers is fine with you? The catatonic verses of Jimmy Stewart, Jimmy Carter and Kahil Gibran are fine with you? Anything that keeps the Language Poets off of Nightline is fine with me. Anything that meaninglessly institutionalizes the belly-scratching Beats is fine with me (Kerouac stamps from Lowell coming soon). Anything that keeps the bugs out of the kitchen is fine with me.

Someone asked earlier what an Apex of the M#5 was. It sounds like what I picked up a case of on the bus home from NYC Sunday. It comes on like gangbusters. A couple of years ago I had severe Apex of the M#1 but I shook it off easier than I expected. Anyway--my point was--someone was speaking in proto-maraxist-crit loudly on the bus, right into my brain as it were. Anything that kills the pain of NATIONAL attention is fine with me.

Since all that is Poetry is Poetry why confuse it with holiday artifice? That is, unless your poetry sounds like a [Father's Day/Mother's Day/Valentine's Day, Poetry Month] greeting card.

If your festival was "nationalized" Bil, YOU wouldn't be running it. As it is, the fesitival is PRIVATIZED.

For example:

"Granted I really wouldn't have cared fucking less,"

In proto-maraxist chat, this is NIHILISM.

"'cause poetry is my national pastime,"

In proto-maraxist chat, this is a deviant NATIONALISM blended with SENTIMENTALISM and strong overtones of ULTRA-BOURGEOIS all rolled in one.

"but it made things easier in getting people that normally wouldn't have thought twice about a poetry festival "

In proto-maraxist chat, this is OPPORTUNISM.

"In this imperfect world there are egoistic reasons for the attraction to anything nationally publicized"

No need to apologize to US. We like poetry too.

"hell I don't care if someone strokes their ego a little , as long as it's not at the expense of my integrity, or the integrity of my event."

Never sacrifice these my boy. Never never never.

Writing prudishly from the ideological camp of thank-god-it's-the fucking week-end again,

[redacted]

↑ Index

790. Rachel Loden
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Mark Weiss wrote (in part):

> *The
> breath-group usage, with its appearance of typographic randomness, is quite different.*

I wonder. According to _Princeton_ again, caesura is "a rhetorical and extra-metrical pause or phrasal break within the poetic line...The caesura, which is frequently marked by punctuation, corresponds to a breath-pause between musical phrases...in modern Eng. the caesura is often used as a device of variety, a device whose purpose it is to help mitigate metrical rigors by shifting from position to position in various lines..."

Rachel

↑ Index

791. hen
Re: No Virginia, there is no Nat'l Potry Mnth: now go home!
Fri 28 Mar 1997

On Fri, 28 Mar 1997 14:23:23 EST Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco said:
>
>Someone asked earlier what an Apex of the M#5 was. It sounds like what I >picked up a case of on the bus home from NYC Sunday. It comes on like >gangbusters. A couple of years ago I had severe Apex of the M#1 but I shook
it >off easier than I expected. Anyway--my point was--someone was speaking in Yeah but I still recommend this essay by David Matlin. It's not proto-marxist. it's the good friday reading for the crucifixion of America by inbred ancient racism, militarism, and prisons as Big Business. I KNOW HOW DUMB THIS SOUNDS!! I wish I could improve on it. It's not a rant, it's a personal essay by a guy who taught in prisons for ten years. there's some interesting thought about teaching Creative Writing too. Did you know that the Clinton Crime Bill did away with federal funding of Prison Education? I didn't. If there is such a thing as the zeitgeist (I think I proved this definitively in a penetrating dialogue on this list several moons ago), in America this time is the epiphany of the Prison.

Hey, have a nice day... and a wunderful weekend :) :) ### +++++++ + + + + + - Henry G

↑ Index

792. shoemakers
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Gestalt?

lisa s. writes:

another nameless phenomenon: that space or moment in which the constituent parts of a painting (blots of paint, lines) resolve into the 'represented' depiction -- eg, the space btw the brush strokes and, moving back, the image of ophelia's face in millais's painting would be tighter than the space between the same two things in, say, warhol -- when one moves from looking closely at the surface of a painting to a position further away. or perhaps there is a name for this? --

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

793. Yunte Huang displace
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Humbly announce the appearance of a small journal of poetry and translation: _Displace_. The first issue features: Martin Spinelli's translation of Marinetti's "Battle"; Pierre Joris's "From the Notebooks"; William Howe's "from a#'s"; Fred Wah's "China Journal."

Don't expect anything big or beautiful. Pink commis have a different taste for print matters. It's free, but you need to send me a one-dollar bill (no check please) to cover the mailing cost. Address: Yunte Huang, 193 Pepper Tree Drive, Apt. 8, Amherst, NY 14228.

↑ Index

794. aerialedge
Schuyler Diaries &&& @ Bridge Street
Fri 28 Mar 1997

some of what's new. . . discount description/ordering instructions, at end of the list.

1. _Can You Hear, Bird_ by John Ashbery, FSG, new in pb. $12. "I saw no need to cancel love-- / Heavens, what was I thinking of?/ I cannot read what others read./ I see no need."

2. _The Autobiography of Leroi Jones_ by Amiri Baraka, Lawrence Hill Books, $16.95. "And that was cold funky, spaced out above the real, which got to be corny or wrong, since laying in the cloud of ain't-I-hip here in the capital of anything goes, how could the who-ain't-here be anything but not?"

3. _Words of Light: Theses on the Photography of History_ by Eduardo Cadava, Princeton, $29.95. An excellent reading of Benjamin. "Like photography, stars are another name for what makes similarity possible, for the process of mimetic reproduction. They are the models on which Benjamin bases the theory of likeness that underlies his reflections on language."

4. _Corporations Are Gonna Get Your Mama: Globalization and the Downsizing of the American Drea_ ed. Kevin Danaher, foreword by Noam Chomsky, Common Courage, $15.95. Contributors include Richard Barnet, Kirkpatrick Sale, Jerry Mander, Patricia Horn, and Jeremy Rifkin. "Deceit has become so entrenched that it may well have been internalized, passing below the threshold of consciousness. Prevailing market rhetoric is an interesting case."

5. _Diacritics V 26, Nos. 3-4: Poetry, Community, Movement_ Jonathan Monroe, special editor, $12. That one you heard about. DuPlessis, Waldrop, Kellogg, Nielsen, Perloff, Lauterbach, Perelman, Bernstein.

6. _Justice, Nature and the Geography of Difference_ by David Harvey, Blackwell, $21.95. "Can the relational theory of space and time be used to understand the dialectics of space and place? If so, can it be extended in some way to construct a dialectical understanding of the _space-place-environment_ triad? There are strong grounds for answering "yes" to both questions."

7. _Viridian_ by Paul Hoover, U. Georgia, $14.95. "Because it has rained and the TV/ is on, the world is not itself."

8. _Proper Names_ by Emmanuel Levinas, Stanford, $14.95. "Is it certain that a true poet occupies a place? Is he not that which, in the eminent sense of the term, _loses its place_, ceases occupation, precisely, and is thus the very opening of space, neither the transparency nor the emptiness of which (no more than night, nor the volume of beings) yet displays the bottomlessness or the excellence, the heaven that in it is possible, its "heavenhood" or its "celestiality," if one may use such neologisms?"

9. _The Lost Lunar Baedeker_ by Mina Loy, FSG, new in pb. $13. "the City's circulatory/ sanitary apostles/ a-leap to ash-cans/ apply their profane ritual/ to offal"

10. _The Black Reeds_ by Mark McMorris, U. Georgia, $14.95."Crowds pressed in on us/ the progress of talk was over/ only the body spoke out now/ a small name written on/ vacancy, over which, intent,/ we brooded on our pulse"

11. _Amorous Nightmares of Delay: Selected Plays_ by Frank O'Hara, with a preface by Ron Padgett and an introduction by Joe LeSeur, Johns Hopkins, $14.95. "What pseudo-kinetic response dins its palpitations into my flapping breast? The wanderer like a gust of wind be-devils me towards that role I can't run fast enough to catch the coat-tails of."

12. _The Diary of James Schuyler_ ed. Nathan Kernan, Black Sparrow, $15. "I just came back from the market I favor with a colorful bag of juice oranges (4 for $1) and limes (3 for $1). Mystery: a while ago limes went up in price as they became smaller, more wizened and juiceless: "end of season, end of season" was the cry. Now they are big smooth and crowded with juice. Where do they come from, what's it all about? And as I rounded the corner I looked over my shoulder and the sun, in a clear sky that could become searing, shone blindingly straight in my face."

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

795. Lisa Samuels
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

on the question of gaps

following up on mark weiss & rachel loden's posts, perhaps this has some extra (as well as shared) information, esp. on the metrics of alliterative verse. the midline gap or sometimes dot is a modern typographical convention to mark the metrical pause or caesura that separates the two halves of an alliterative line. it doesn't usually appear in medieval mss, where the caesura is sometimes marked by an oblique stroke or punctus elevatus (kind of inverted semi-colon) but more often left unmarked. caesura is the name of the metrical phenomenon (also found of course in other kinds of verse with long lines, e.g. hexameters and alexandrines, but of less structural significance there), not of the gap that represents it; as others have noted, i don't think the gap has a name of its own.

another nameless phenomenon: that space or moment in which the constituent parts of a painting (blots of paint, lines) resolve into the 'represented' depiction -- eg, the space btw the brush strokes and, moving back, the image of ophelia's face in millais's painting would be tighter than the space between the same two things in, say, warhol -- when one moves from looking closely at the surface of a painting to a position further away. or perhaps there is a name for this? --

lisa s.

↑ Index

796. aerialedge
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

I believe it's called a gap. I mean, when there's a gap
I believe that's what it's called.

↑ Index

797. Bob Grumman
Re: name gap
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Hi, Everybody. I just joined your group a few days ago, shortly after going broke getting a new computer system that would let me use the Internet. I'd intended to sit back and watch your exchanges for at least a month before venturing any comments of my own. This discussion of what to name the gaps in

> she knew the name a big black winged
> bird on the end of a line Clothes.

is too insanely just my kind of thing, though, so here I am already.

Such interesting and informative comments have already been made I hate to end the fun by being unarguably definitive, but . . . Well, here's what I think: "caesura" isn't quite the right term because, as at least one of you pointed out, it can, and most often does, refer to pauses marked not with spaces but with punctuation, or not marked at all. "Lacuna" has to do with missing material, which isn't the case, it doesn't seem to me, in the passage above.

For a moment or two I thought maybe my term, "nulletter," might take care of the problem. But a nulletter is not a kind of punctuation but a space that's used where a letter is expected (mostly in visual poetry). My solution, then? Call the gaps "caes urae."

Okay, okay, I'll give you the proper term: "interior indentation." Since when? Since now. (Note, it can be measured in letter-widths.)

Thank you for your attention. --Bob G.

↑ Index

798. shoemakers
Re: name gap
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Well, moving away from the search for classical terminology, i've heard the term "gap syntax" applied to the (very important) internal spacings in Oppen's lines. Think i heard it first from Ted Enslin, but i don't know who might have coined it--whether it was Ted or someone else. I like the way that term emphasizes that the gap is part of the articulation of the line, but i guess there are gaps and then there are gaps. I've just been teaching Mallarme's A Throw of the Dice, and the gaps there wld seem to work on a more purely spatial rather than "syntactic" level. As also in Apollinaire's calligrams: "...for the bond between these fragments is no longer the logic of grammar but an ideographic logic culminating in an order of spatial disposition totally opposed to discursive juxtaposition..."*

But i think the original example was more "linear"...

steve

*with s p a t i a l
thanks

to Jerry & Pierre

an tho lo gists

extra or di naire!

(but it's too hard to make a really good spatial poem on e-mail...)

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

799. Mark Weiss
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Since we're being lexical, the usefulness of a technical term declines in proportion to its inclusivity. The medial caesura in a line by Dryden (who, like all critics of the period, talks about it a lot) is very different from what Duncan or Olson or I do with multiple n-spaces, regardless of the fact that on occasion the former is indicated by a comma. To illustrate, if, as was common, there were no comma in the Dryden line, it would make no difference to the way the line was read or understood--the caesura, tho typographically invisible, would still be there, because it was part of the rules of the heroic couplet game. Leave out my extra spacing and you destroy the rhythm, and sometimes the intent, of the line.

At 11:24 AM 3/28/97 -0800, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss wrote (in part):
>
>> The
>> breath-group usage, with its appearance of typographic randomness, is quite >> different.

>
>I wonder. According to _Princeton_ again, caesura is "a rhetorical and >extrametrical pause or phrasal break within the poetic line...The >caesura, which is frequently marked by punctuation, corresponds to a >breath-pause between musical phrases...in modern Eng. the caesura is >often used as a device of variety, a device whose purpose it is to help >mitigate metrical rigors by shifting from position to position in >various lines..."
>
>Rachel
>
>

↑ Index

800. William Slaughter
Re: name gap
Fri 28 Mar 1997

> on the question of gaps

Somehow this excerpt, from an essay of mine on Chagall's paintings, seems relevant to the this thread. You decide.

"'To me, a painting is a large surface with objects represented in a certain order...for example, the headless woman with a pail of milk who appears in one of my canvases executed in 1910-11; if I had the idea of separating her head from her body, it is because I needed an empty space right at that spot.' Chagall said that about his painting _To Russia, Asses, and Others_. But he might just as well have said it about other paintings of his, including _The Poet, or Half-Past Three_. What interests me in Chagall's explanation is his phrase 'an empty space' and his need for it.

"Apollinaire--'that gentle Zeus,' Chagall, liking poets, called him--viewing Chagall's paintings at the same timne, 1910-11, in Paris, uttered the magic word _surnaturel_ which, translated, meant Chagall had a 'vision of the world,' his own peculiar way of seeing it. But Chagall himself admitted only to solving a compositional problem when he separated that woman's head from her body. _He needed an empty space._

"So do I...." Et cetera.

Perhaps what really matters is the fact of the empty space and not what we call it. I, for one, am inclined to mind the gap, not name it.

Bill

William Slaughter

_____

[redacted]

↑ Index

801. Jocelyn Emerson

Re: Is history dead?

Fri 28 Mar 1997

May we have a break from the Binoche thing on this line--ii.e. is "getting" here referring to her as a posession? a dog? a piece of meat? There are other forum for male fantasies of this sort.

JE

> When I see some actor getting Binoche in a movie, I get bleu with envy.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

802. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: name gap (fwd)

Fri 28 Mar 1997

Lisa Samuels wrote:
>
> on the question of gaps
>
> following up on mark weiss & rachel loden's posts, perhaps this > has some extra (as well as shared) information, esp. on the > metrics of alliterative verse. the midline gap or sometimes dot > is a modern typographical convention to mark the metrical pause > or caesura that separates the two halves of an alliterative line.
> it doesn't usually appear in medieval mss, where the caesura is > sometimes marked by an oblique stroke or punctus elevatus (kind of > inverted semi-colon) but more often left unmarked. caesura is > the name of the metrical phenomenon (also found of course in other > kinds of verse with long lines, e.g. hexameters and alexandrines, > but of less structural significance there), not of the gap that > represents it; as others have noted, i don't think the gap has a > name of its own.

>
> another nameless phenomenon: that space or moment in which the > constituent parts of a painting (blots of paint, lines) resolve > into the 'represented' depiction -- eg, the space btw the brush > strokes and, moving back, the image of ophelia's face in > millais's painting would be tighter than the space between the > same two things in, say, warhol -- when one moves from looking > closely at the surface of a painting to a position further > away. or perhaps there is a name for this? --
>
> lisa s.

Mai-Mai Sze, in The Way of Chinese Painting (Vintage, 1959), writes that "the painter has to be able to experience the rhythm of life to be able to express it in his work by means of the rhythm of the brush. And it may be deduced that 'to clarify understanding and increase wisdom' means a contemplative attention to all things and to all of nature's changes in order gradually to gain a sense of the permanent and significant. The brush will then be swift and sure, setting down only the essential strokes, in some places expressing by 'absence of brush and ink.' Painters summed up this power in the phrase i tao pi pu tao (idea present, brush may be spared performance). In the style called freehand or free-sketch painting (hsieh i, write idea), this kind of brushwork is often carried out by sweeping strokes of a fairly dry brush that leaves the paper or silk showing within the strokes or by deliberate breaks in the stroke that yet do not interrupt the continuity of the idea. Such results are possible only after the painter has reached an advanced stage of cultivation and technical skill, the stage at which rules and methods are no longer consciously applied but are implicit in the results. It is the stage when the ch'i of the painteris effortlessly trqansmitted through the painting" (119). This kind of thinking also seems apropos for the form/content discussion. Dan Zimmerman 485 Parsonage Road Edison, NJ 08837

↑ Index

803. Maria Damon
name gap/thread bare
Fri 28 Mar 1997

>> on the question of gaps
>
>Somehow this excerpt, from an essay of mine on Antoinette Brioche's taste >in fashion, seems >relevant to the this thread. You decide.
>
 "get it to get her"

thabj yoi bury muck, maria damon, gentleman

↑ Index

804. George Bowering
Re: questions re: Merrill and Jarnot
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Merrill? Merrill? I shared a cab ride with him a couple years ago, and that wasnt too bad. But then I heard him read his poems. Good god! All I-knew-that-was-coming metaphors, and cracker barrel American wisdom, and thundering or plunking conclusions. So poetical. So tweed. So depandable.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

805. Wendy Battin
Re: questions re: Merrill and Jarnot
Fri 28 Mar 1997

On Fri, 28 Mar 1997, George Bowering wrote: > Merrill? Merrill? I shared a cab ride with him a couple years ago, and that > wasnt too bad. But then I heard him read his poems. Good god! All > I-knew-that-was-coming metaphors, and cracker barrel American wisdom,

and > thundering or plunking conclusions. So poetical. So tweed. So depandable.

Oh, but a good soul. We can't all be burdened by wealth, but he used it pretty generously & well for poets. And g*d knows we can't all be cool. Some of us are born nerds.

Wendy of the great but grateful unwashed

↑ Index

806. henry gould
Re: name gap (fwd)
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Dear Lisa & Dan, always hoping to stay modestly in the background (sure Henry)... & yet tonight I was so struck by your two posts - since just a couple days ago I "went through" everything you've described in the process of making a poem... it happened like this: I was sitting on a couch one afternoon, about 40 feet - quite a long distance - from a print hanging on a wall in the next room. Afternoon sunlight (which I'm not usually there to see) gave the picture an extra radiance. I don't know what the technical name for that kind of printing is - but the artist had covered the plate with ink entirely, then lightly brush-stroked some of it off to make a kind of negative image, then laid the paper directly on the wet plate - so that the strokes were actually the GAPS in the ink, & the image was white on black. Anyway - from a distance of 40 feet, suddenly this print I had looked at for years COHERED. The entirety of its design organized itself & I saw things in it (a landscape) which had been somewhat loose, inchoate, from a more usual viewing distance. I don't even know if the coherence was planned by the artist, but it was there. Anyway, in the resulting poem (the Portuguese form of a "glose") dealt with this coherence-in-distance on a different, symbolic level - the order or meaning that life takes on when seen through the distance-perspective (often tragic) of long time (forty YEARS, say). (aside from the peanut gallery: "i.e. youth is wasted on youth"). I don't know what the NAME for this coherence-via-gaps is, either (hasn't stopped me from writing 1,000 words about it...). Proustville.

the poem's too long to send here (4-line text followed by 4 10-line stanzas with each line of the text as a consecutive refrain to each stanza = glose). so here's a shorter poem illustrating the specific form of the gap known as the Renaissance knee-hole gap (incidentally today is a very traditional gap day - between death & resurrection - Holy Saturday).

51

The struggle of the mind to bring to bear
a pattern in the mystery the quiet
balance imaged in these wet
streams circling the old town everywhere.

Here once came the young barbarian,
who fell in love with this integrity of
land & gently curving waterway;
found kingdom come a petrine origin,
where dikes domesticate the ocean -
Atlantis, very human now & Dutch.

& here within this village radius
the labors of a Mondrian circuitous uplifted principle serene would reach
a dreamy apogee - & build a world to match.

--Amersfoort, 12.7.96

- Henry Gould

(Amersfoort, Netherlands, is the birthplace of Mondrian. the "young barbarian" is Peter the Great, who traveled to Holland disguised as an ordinary sailor, in order to learn shipbuilding.)

↑ Index

807. Mark Weiss
Re: Is history dead?
Fri 28 Mar 1997

Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.

At 06:26 PM 3/28/97 -0600, you wrote:
>May we have a break from the Binoche thing on this line--ii.e. is "getting"
>here referring to her as a posession? a dog? a piece of meat? There are >other forum for male fantasies of this sort.
>
>JE
>
>
>
>
>
>>When I see some actor getting Binoche in a movie, I get bleu with envy.
>>
>>

>>
>>
>>George Bowering.
>> ,
>>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>>Vancouver, B.C.,
>>Canada V6M 1P4
>>
>>fax: [redacted]
>>e-mail: [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

808. Hugh Steinberg
Re: name gap (fwd)
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Caesura strikes me as more of a sonic than visual term. I like lacuna (sounds like a new car, the Ford Lacuna) although it seems a bit fancy. I tend to use the term "white space" when describing those blanks.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

809. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: name gap (fwd)
Sat 29 Mar 1997

---

henry gould wrote:
>
> Dear Lisa & Dan,
> always hoping to stay modestly in the background (sure Henry)... & yet > tonight I was so struck by your two posts - since just a couple days ago
> I "went through" everything you've described in the process of making a > poem... it happened like this: I was sitting on a couch one afternoon, > about 40 feet - quite a long distance - from a print hanging on a wall > in the next room. Afternoon sunlight (which I'm not usually there to see) > gave the picture an extra radiance. I don't know what the technical name > for that kind of printing is - but the artist had covered the plate with > ink entirely, then lightly brush-stroked some of it off to make a kind of > negative image, then laid the paper directly on the wet plate - so that the > strokes were actually the GAPS in the ink, & the image was white on black.

> Anyway - from a distance of 40 feet, suddenly this print I had looked at > for years COHERED. The entirety of its design organized itself & I saw > things in it (a landscape) which had been somewhat loose, inchoate, from > a more usual viewing distance. I don't even know if the coherence was > planned by the artist, but it was there. Anyway, in the resulting poem > (the Portuguese form of a "glose") dealt with this coherence-in-distance > on a different, symbolic level - the order or meaning that life takes > on when seen through the distance-perspective (often tragic) of long time > (forty YEARS, say). (aside from the peanut gallery: "i.e. youth is wasted > on youth"). I don't know what the NAME for this coherence-via-gaps is, > either (hasn't stopped me from writing 1,000 words about it...). Proustville.
>
> the poem's too long to send here (4-line text followed by 4 10-line stanzas > with each line of the text as a consecutive refrain to each stanza = glose).
> so here's a shorter poem illustrating the specific form of the gap known > as the Renaissance knee-hole gap (incidentally today is a very traditional > gap day - between death & resurrection - Holy Saturday).
>
> 51
>
> The struggle of the mind to bring to bear
> a pattern in the mystery the quiet
> balance imaged in these wet
> streams circling the old town everywhere.
>
> Here once came the young barbarian,
> who fell in love with this integrity of
> land & gently curving waterway;
> found kingdom come a petrine origin,
> where dikes domesticate the ocean -
> Atlantis, very human now & Dutch.
>
> & here within this village radius
> the labors of a Mondrian circuitous
> uplifted principle serene would reach
> a dreamy apogee - & build a world to match.
>
> --Amersfoort, 12.7.96
>
> - Henry Gould
>
> (Amersfoort, Netherlands, is the birthplace of Mondrian. the "young > barbarian" is Peter the Great, who traveled to Holland disguised as > an ordinary sailor, in order to learn shipbuilding.)

Henry,

Sounds like a monoprint. Did the image hold up when you approached the print to examine it more closely? If so, I'd say it didn't result as an artifact of distance, but inhered in the work itself [like bones before an x-ray].

Beautiful piece on Peter the Great--the gaps work like patches of landscape too deep to wade through, but mirroring the bright Dutch sky. [Now THAT may qualify as an artifact of distance!].

Keep those cards & letters coming!
Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

810. Pierre Joris
Re: name gap
Sat 29 Mar 1997

---

re caesura -- more than a metrical or breath device, in H►lderlin, the caesura becomes the breathless aporia, the suspension around which the line, the poem organizes itself. Paul Celan, a close reader of H►lderlin, talks of this in a late poem:

I DRINK WINE from two glasses
and harrow
the King's caesura
like that other
does Pindar,

God turns in the tuning fork
as one of the small
just ones,

from the lottery drum falls
our doit.

A number of essays in the Celan-Sekundarliteratur deal with this, but I haven't got the time right now to dig'em out. May your eggs be boiled hard & painted brightly! -- Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

811. Schuchat Simon

Re: name gap

Sat 29 Mar 1997

On Fri, 28 Mar 1997, Rachel Loden wrote:

> Bob Perelman wrote:
>
> A student asked me the following question. I don't know the answer. & who was the first to use the things?
>
> do you know the technical term for a space in a poem
>
> From the OED:
>
> cæsura
> [a. L. cæsura 'cutting, metrical pause', f. cæs- ppl. stem of cædere to cut...
>
> 1. In Greek and Latin prosody: The division of a metrical foot between two words, especially in certain recognized places near the middle of the line...
>
> 2. In English prosody: A pause or breathing-place about the middle of a metrical line, generally indicated by a pause in the sense.
>
> Rachel L.

if Bob's student questioner means the pause, then caesura is right, but I think the question has to do with the typographical feature, which is not caesura (though the space may be used to indicate a caesura). maybe it has no name, being characteristic of projective verse and after. we could name it the "charles" if we like.

↑ Index

812. David R. Israel

Re: name gap

Sat 29 Mar 1997

Poeticos & Poeticas,

have enjoyed the chat abt. the space lacuna (no) caesura (perhaps) whatever you name it however it's used one must goatlike jump across many rives

On a ussage (rather than nominclative) note, said gap (or a species of same -- personally I've long considered 'em caesurae), at various time in his long writing, W.S. Merwin has favored this convention or device or whaterer. Most noteably in the volume Opening the Hand (1983) -- but also sometimes earlier & sometimes later.

To illustrate how it appears in Merwin (or one way it does), here's a 4-line poem from said volume. But first, another tangent:

Incidentally, there's a correlative sense of caesura in classical Chinese poetics -- in a 5-word (5-word) line, it's almost always between the 3rd & 4th words. In a 7-word line, there's -- I'd say -- a minor caesura after the 2nd word, and major caesura after the 4th -- or at least this is rather common. Those are for the classical [shih or shi] lines most prevalent. In the more lyrical ci [tzu] that came into vogue after the Tang dynasty, there was wider metrical variation -- using, still, strictures of words-per-line (of course), but the strictures now based on lyrics which might allow (say) both 5-word & 6-word lines in the same poem (unthinkable in shi).

Anyway, in all of these practices, the audible (& grammatically anchored) sense of the caesura is very strong in that tradition.

In terms of how the poems appeared in print? Not only were these caesurae not noted, even the breaks from "line" to "line" were not noted! An entire poem (e.g., an "8-line poem" of 5 charaters each) was most commonly printed (from top of page to bottom) with no gaps visible at all: 20 characters, zip zip zip. It's the job of the reader to recognize what sort of poem he/she's reading (though typically publishers/editors helped by putting all the 5-word-per-line poems in one section, follwed by the 7-word-per-line pomes -- or sometimes that's done). But in classical reaading practice, it's also common for the reader to physically mark the book (with, say, a vermillion pen, making a little circle) wherever the line breaks occur -- and sometimes also, the same mark is used indiscriminantly for the gap of the innerlinear break (caesura).

End of Chinese tangent, back to Merwin (poem follows).

best,
d.i.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

W. S. Merwin:

TIDAL LAGOON

From the edge of the bare reef in the afternoon children who can't swim fling themselves forward calling and disappear for a moment in the long mirror that contains the reflections of the mountains

.
.....
.....
\\/////\\\\\
  > david raphael israel <
  >> washington d.c. <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇ (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇ (office)
==========
| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
//\\\\\\\\\\

↑ Index

813. David R. Israel
Re: name gap / chinese example
Sat 29 Mar 1997

A little erratum-note --

I wrote:

> Incidentally, there's a correlative sense of caesura in classical Chinese poetics -- in a 5-word (5-word) line, it's almost always between the 3rd & 4th words.

but meant to write: in a 5-word (5-syllable) line . . .

well now that I'm here, I shd. also illustrate same from renderings of Chinese. These two lines appear as the conclusion to a rather bitter eight-line poem by an empoverished medieval, a certain Huang Jingren [or, in the older system: Hunag Ching-Jen] (1749-83).
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

A few of this chap's poems appear in the anthology Sunflower Splendor (but this is my own rendering). These are 7-word lines (which break into 2 / 2 / 3 lines; -- in English, each Chinese word tends to generate a metrical foot). The poet was (one might interpret it) complaining abt. the vagaries of fate, stupidities of humankind, and his own extreme poverty. The poem finds this memorable conclusion:

perhaps it is for poetry-books that grief turns into sight birds in spring bugs in autumn naturally make their sound

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

> Subject: name gap
> To: [redacted]
>
> A student asked me the following question. I don't know the answer. & who was the first to use the things?
>
> do you know the technical term for a space in a poem
> that resembles these:
>
> she knew the name a big black winged
> bird on the end of a line Clothes.
>
> ?
> I'm going crazy. I heard it was a lacuna, but I think there's another term.
>
> [I'll be putting in my {non-defensive} two cents about the NYC panel as soon as time & mind clear]

↑ Index

815. Bob Grumman
Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"
Sat 29 Mar 1997

On reflection, I've concluded that "caesura" is right for any kind of pause occurring in a line of poetry, except at its end, including one that consists of two or more spaces. But "caesura" is too general, so here is my taxonomy:

CAESURAE

Implicit Caesurae Explicit Caesurae

Punctuation-Breaks Internal Indentation

I put no categories under "Implicit Caesurae" since there seems to be only one kind of unmarked caesura. The two kinds of explicit caesurae should be self-evident. Note my change of terminology from "interior indentation" to "internal indentation"--to parallel "internal rhyme."

Now back to the real excitement here: the discussions, with terrific examples, of the VALUE rather than the NAME of these entities. --Bob G

↑ Index

816. Douglas Barbour
Re: bpNichol & all that he might mean, even politically
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Kent Johnson wondered if no one going to step up and say something decent about bpNichol, given what appeared to be Louis Cabris's attack. First: he needs no defense, & is a major figure in Canadian poetry only to some. Others never knew, or still dont. I find it interesting than some yuonger writers want to find fault with bp, but what the hell, that's what the young do. I would want to argue that there are lots of 'politics' in _The Martyrology_, but then what do we mean by 'politics' & dont we all tend to agree that there can be no art without it/them? Anyway, I'm one of those academics who has written on bp, so what-ever I say cant really count. Perhaps. Let's just say that for those who cared, those who knew him, the loss continues to hurt. And the poems remain to be read & reread. Happily.

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness

University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H: [redacted]

↑ Index

817. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: name gap
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Pierre Joris wrote:
>
> re caesura -- more than a metrical or breath device, in H⧫lderlin, the > caesura becomes the breathless aporia, the suspension around which the > line, the poem organizes itself. Paul Celan, a close reader of > H⧫lderlin, talks of this in a late poem:
>
> I DRINK WINE from two glasses
> and harrow
> the King's caesura
> like that other
> does Pindar,
>
> God turns in the tuning fork

> as one of the small
> just ones,
>
> from the lottery drum falls
> our doit.
>
> A number of essays in the Celan-Sekundarliteratur deal with this, but I > haven't got the time right now to dig'em out. May your eggs be boiled > hard & painted brightly! -- Pierre
>
> --
> ==========
> pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
> tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> ----------
> Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
> values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
> _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
> constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
> [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
> and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
> it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
> ==========

Perhaps, too, gaps call attention to the lost moments in which connections and disconnections mysteriously occur: not necessarily the X-Files abductees' stopped wristwatches, but what Paul Virilio explores in The Aesthetics of Disappearance:

> THE LAPSE OCCURS FREQUENTLY AT BREAK> fast and the cup dropped and overturned on the table > is its well-known consequence. The absence lasts a > few seconds; its beginnings and its end are sudden.
> The senses function, but are nevertheless closed to > external impressions. The return being just as sud> den as the departure, the arrested word and action > are picked up again where they have been interrupted.
> Conscious time comes together again automatically, > forming a continuous time without apparent breaks.
> For these absences, which can be quite numerous-- > hundreds every day most often pass completely un> noticed by others around--we'll be using the word

> "picnolepsy" (from the Greek, picnos: frequent).
> However, for the picnoleptic, nothing really has happened, the missing time never existed. At each crisis, without realizing it, a little of his or her life simply escaped. (9-10)

--not that the gaps induce these petit-petits mal, but that they propose what Blake calls "a moment in each day which Satan cannot find," a moment brief as the "pulsation of an artery." I suppose critics might say such gaps "problemmatize" the connections assumed to exist between adjacent elements by separating them, though I'd rather think of it as "potentiating" those connections, much as the asymmetry integral to Japanese flower arrangement or traced upon the faces of Levi-Strauss' Caduveo woman [in Structural Anthropology]. As someone said earlier in this thread, Gestalt. Or a way to achieve ostranenie, the "defamiliarization" of the world which the Russian formalists saw as a central function of art [here, as an 'opening of the center']. And thanks for the H►lderlin!

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

818. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: name gap
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Pierre Joris wrote:
>
> re caesura -- more than a metrical or breath device, in H►lderlin, the > caesura becomes the breathless aporia, the suspension around which the > line, the poem organizes itself. Paul Celan, a close reader of > H►lderlin, talks of this in a late poem:
>
> I DRINK WINE from two glasses
> and harrow
> the King's caesura
> like that other
> does Pindar,
>
> God turns in the tuning fork
> as one of the small
> just ones,
>
> from the lottery drum falls

> our doit.
>
> A number of essays in the Celan-Sekundarliteratur deal with this, but I > haven't got the time right now to dig'em out. May your eggs be boiled > hard & painted brightly! -- Pierre
>
> --
> ==========
> pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
> tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> ----------
> Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
> values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
> _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
> constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
> [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
> and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
> it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
> ==========

Sorry, Pierre: thanks for the Celan!
Dan

↑ Index

819. LYNES- KATHERINE

Re: name gap (fwd)

Sat 29 Mar 1997

---

i believe that brenda hillman [in a book of poetry the name of which i have momentarily forgotten and don't have in front of me -- i think it is in _death tractates_] uses astericks which are, according to her when she read the poems to a class at portland state, were to indicate significant pauses... longer than a "natural breath" silences? places of contemplation? [the latter being my interpretation of what she meant....].

kl

Mark Weiss wrote:

> If there's an answer to Perelman's question it would be handy to know. I'm also cuious to find other examples of the unnamed in general.

↑ Index

820. Thomas Bell sound
Sat 29 Mar 1997

>Steve McCaffery's approach to sound >poetry seems far more concerned with the social, because in both his early >and late writing on sound poetry he centres on sound as the site for >investigation of the subject of socio-linguistic relations.
>Peter Jaeger
Don't really want to single this out, but I wonder if there is any need for what follows "centres on sound"? Does not one abandon poetry in the "absence of all inner need" - Beckett?

or the writer must stay away from the "Big Words...the aim of writing being not to tell but to represent". Bachmann

tom bell

↑ Index

821. Maria Damon
Re: Is history dead?
Sat 29 Mar 1997

---

but certainly not wedding.

At 8:17 PM -0800 3/28/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.
>
>
>At 06:26 PM 3/28/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>May we have a break from the Binoche thing on this line--ii.e. is "getting"
>>here referring to her as a posession? a dog? a piece of meat? There are >>other forum for male fantasies of this sort.
>>
>>JE
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>>When I see some actor getting Binoche in a movie, I get bleu with envy.
>>>
>>>
>>>

>>>
>>>George Bowering.
>>> ,
>>>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>>>Vancouver, B.C.,
>>>Canada V6M 1P4
>>>
>>>fax: [redacted]
>>>e-mail: [redacted]
>>
>>

↑ Index

822. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"

Sat 29 Mar 1997

Many thanks to Bob Grumman for his precise and useful notes.

Though expanding by quite a bit on Bob Grumman's noting caesura" as occuring in a line of poetry--

I've often thought of it in terms of film (the suturing of editing in relation to the gaps of montage for example)--or of the use of spaces in the work of Paul Metcalf--the space being used as visual, sound and "thought" pause--that is--making room--"making space"--for the reader/listener--to "fill in the gaps"--"make the leap"--from one mass of materials to another--or among a constellation of these--

the caesura then works dynamically--rather than marking an arrest--

Paul Virilio has written quite interestingly of an aspect of this in his books Lost Dimenison and The Aesthetics of Disappearance--Virilio notes what he calls the "picnoleptic interruption"--similar to an epileptic seizure--or the moment just preceding it--a pause, a stillness and intense awarenes--then a gap in consciousness--and no memory of what moved one from one place to the next, or from one moment in time to the next-- for Virilio--it is in these moments--that what is unavailable to memory--is introduced--

(he makes note of Pascal: "It is not the elements which are new, but the order of their arrangement". And Metcalf notes Poe, who countered the Romantic concept of Originality with the idea of taking elements and combining them to create an effect--) in a film or in Metcalf's works--it's in the spaces in between--that the dynamism "takes place" which makes the movements among materials--generate that which is previously unavailable to memory--

this may be to extend the strict definition of Bob Grumman's byond the line of poetry-- yet the ways in which a line of poetry functions--in using notation as marks, letters spaces in spatial and temporal arrangements-- do seem to indicate a movement outward--a form of triangulation as it were--into spatial and temporarl arrangments going on--all around-- "caesura" as an opening in time & space through which rush . . .

in and out . . . that which is unavailable to memory--

"caesura" then--the Achilles heel of Caesars . . . ?

Mayakovsky:

> Four words,
> heavy as a blow:
> " . . . unto Caesar . . . unto God . . . "

a lot of pauses there-- to feel those blows raining down . . .
and thinking about getting out from under . . .

--dave baptiste chirot

On Sat, 29 Mar 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:

> On reflection, I've concluded that "caesura" is right for any kind of pause occurring in a line of poetry, except at its end, including one that consists of two or more spaces. But "caesura" is too general, so here is my taxonomy:
>
> CAESURAE
>
> Implicit Caesurae Explicit Caesurae
>
> Punctuation-Breaks Internal Indentation
>
> I put no categories under "Implicit Caesurae" since there seems to be only one kind of unmarked caesura. The two kinds of explicit caesurae should be self-evident. Note my change of terminology from "interior indentation" to "internal indentation"--to parallel "internal rhyme."
>
> Now back to the real excitement here: the discussions, with terrific examples, of the VALUE rather than the NAME of these entities. --Bob G

↑ Index

823. Steven Marks
Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Faulkner, when asked about his long sentences, said something to the effect that he wanted to put all of history between a capital and a period. Equally fascinating to me is what goes on between the period and the capital. And things like the space between being asleep and being awake, between day and twilight, twilight and night, night and morning, between liquid and gas, solid and liquid and so on....

and so on...

St even

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

824. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: name gap (fwd)
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Her new book Loose Sugar just out from Weslyan makes more extensive "use" of such breaks dissjunctures, etc. She's reading here in Iowa City next week; if anyone's interested in how she reads from this, i can make some notes on line to wit .

JE

> i believe that brenda hillman [in a book of poetry the name of which > i have momentarily forgotten and don't have in front of me -- i think > it is in _death tractates_] uses astericks which are, according to her > when she > read the poems to a class at portland state, were to indicate significant > pauses... longer than a "natural breath" silences? places of contemplation?
> [the latter being my interpretation of what she meant....].
>
> kl
>
> > Mark Weiss wrote:
> >
> > If there's an answer to Perelman's question it would be handy to know. I'm > also cuious to find other examples of the unnamed in general.

↑ Index

825. Mark Weiss
Re: Is history dead?
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Or perhaps Bowering confused Binoche with brioche?

At 02:06 PM 3/29/97 -0600, you wrote:
>but certainly not wedding.
>
>At 8:17 PM -0800 3/28/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>>Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.
>>
>>
>>At 06:26 PM 3/28/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>>May we have a break from the Binoche thing on this line--ii.e. is "getting"
>>>here referring to her as a posession? a dog? a piece of meat? There are >>>other forum for male fantasies of this sort.
>>>
>>>JE
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>>When I see some actor getting Binoche in a movie, I get bleu with envy.
>>>>
>>>>
>>>>
>>>>
>>>>George Bowering.
>>>> ,
>>>>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>>>>Vancouver, B.C.,
>>>>Canada V6M 1P4
>>>>
>>>>fax: [redacted]
>>>>e-mail: [redacted]
>>>
>>>

>
>

↑ Index

826. Craig Douglas Dworkin
terminological gaps
Sat 29 Mar 1997

Greetings All:

There seem to be plenty of terms already assembled, but for what it's worth, Denise Levertov used to call those intra-linear spaces "articulations," or more broadly "articulated lines" (a term implicit in the Duncan quote already offered); as with the line-break, she had a very precise measure for them (1/2 the pause given to a comma, or something like that).

--Craig Dworkin

↑ Index

827. Bob Grotjohn
Re: name gap
Sat 29 Mar 1997

I'm sorry. I couldn't help myself.

have a break from the Bin oche thing on this line

--
Bob Grotjohn
Assistant Professor of English
Mary Baldwin College
Staunton, VA 24401

540/[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

828. nuyopoman
Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
Sat 29 Mar 1997

March 29, 1997
POETS IN CYBERSPACE!
Mouth Almighty Records Launches Website

Come Sit for a Spell:
http://www.mouthalmighty.com

Mouth Almighty Records, the poetry/spoken word label affiliated with Mercury Records, has launched its own website. The site's address is http://www.mouthalmighty.com. "Our mission has always been to put the world's newest media at the service of the world's oldest artform," says Mouth Almighty honcho Bob Holman. "I'm very proud of our website. It's got the juice and immediacy of poetry itself and I think it'll help us reach poetry lovers everywhere -- as well as all the people who don't know yet that they love poetry." The site, which will be updated weekly, includes bios of the Mouth Almighty's artists (including Wammo, Allen Ginsberg, Michele Serros, and Sekou Sundiata), audio and video downloads of the CDs themselves (including the soundtrack to "The United States of Poetry" and "Flippin' the Script: Rap Meets Poetry"), a "secret poem" contest, and links around the globe to simpatico websites, defined by Holman as the sites of "performance poets who make you think while you dance and dance while you think." Pages will be added shortly for the Last Poets and Maggie Estep, both of whom have albums coming shortly. (The Last Poets on April 15, Maggie on July 1.) The Mouth Almighty web site was produced by Bob and Amy Trachtenberg of Naked Ear Productions and designed by Deck Reeks and Lisa Daniels for Clickstream, Inc. For more information, please call Bob Holman at [redacted] -- or drop him a line at work at the Mouth branch office in cyperspace: [redacted].

↑ Index

829. Schuchat Simon
Killian/Spicer
Sat 29 Mar 1997

I just want to say that Kevin Killian's piece "Faggot Vomit: Jack Spicer vs. 'the Maidens'" in the most recent issue of the Poetry Project newsletter is great.

When will the Spicer bio be available?

↑ Index

830. Gwyn McVay
Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"
Sun 30 Mar 1997

St even,

In her introduction to the City Lights edition of Kerouac's /Scripture of the Golden Sutra/, Anne Waldman sez,

> Sanskrit poetics speaks of /Sandhyabasha/ or twilight speech, which is an "upside-down" language harboring contradictions and paradoxes.

I'd love to find out her source on this--it reminds me of the Sioux (please correct me if I've misattributed this) /heyoka/, thunder-clown, who lived, spoke, and acted backwards-- Gwyn

↑ Index

831. George Bowering
Re: Getting Binoche
Sun 30 Mar 1997

> Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.

No no. I was using "Binoche" as an adjective. "Getting Binoche" means acting like the lead in "Bleu". That is. walking around with no expression on one's face, but rtelying on the music and lighting to convey one's inner turmoil.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

832. nico vassilakis
Re: name gap
Sun 30 Mar 1997

r e:namegapageman:e r
re :namegapageman: er
re: namegapageman :er
re:namegapage ma n:er
re:na megapage man:er
re:namega pageman :er
re:name gapag eman:er
re:nameg a pageman:er
re:namega p ageman:er
re:namegap ageman :er
re:namegapa geman: er

re:namegapag eman:e r
re:namega page man:er
re:namegapagem an:e r
re:namegapa gem an:er
re:namegapage man :er
re:namegapageman: er
re:namegapageman :er
re:namegapagema :er
re:namegapagem er
re:namegapag r
re:name :er
re:na n:er
re:n an:er
re: man:er
re:nam eman:er
re:na geman:er
re:nam ageman:er
re:name pageman:er
re:namega pageman:er
re:namegap ageman:er
renamegapag e man:er
re:namegapag eman:er
re:name gap ageman:er

↑ Index

833. Alan Jen Sondheim
(fwd)(long)(Jennifer's gap)
Sun 30 Mar 1997

---

helpe min se halga dryhten THu gesceope heofon und eorTHan

I climb 1 steps to heaven
I climb 12 steps to heaven
I climb 25 steps to heaven
I climb 40 steps to heaven
I climb 57 steps to heaven
I climb 76 steps to heaven
I climb 97 steps to heaven
I climb 120 steps to heaven
I climb 145 steps to heaven
I climb 172 steps to heaven
I climb 201 steps to heaven
I climb 232 steps to heaven

I climb 265 steps to heaven
I climb 300 steps to heaven
I climb 337 steps to heaven
I climb 376 steps to heaven
I climb 417 steps to heaven
I climb 460 steps to heaven
I climb 505 steps to heaven
I climb 552 steps to heaven
I climb 601 steps to heaven
I climb 652 steps to heaven
I climb 705 steps to heaven
I climb 760 steps to heaven
I climb 817 steps to heaven
I climb 876 steps to heaven
I climb 937 steps to heaven
I climb 1000 steps to heaven
I climb 1065 steps to heaven
I climb 1132 steps to heaven
I climb 1201 steps to heaven
I climb 1272 steps to heaven
I climb 1345 steps to heaven
I climb 1420 steps to heaven
I climb 1497 steps to heaven
I climb 1576 steps to heaven
I climb 1657 steps to heaven
I climb 1740 steps to heaven
I climb 1825 steps to heaven
I climb 1912 steps to heaven
I climb 2001 steps to heaven
I climb 2092 steps to heaven
I climb 2185 steps to heaven
I climb 2280 steps to heaven
I climb 2377 steps to heaven
I climb 2476 steps to heaven
I climb 2577 steps to heaven
I climb 2680 steps to heaven
I climb 2785 steps to heaven
I climb 2892 steps to heaven
I climb 3001 steps to heaven
I climb 3112 steps to heaven
I climb 3225 steps to heaven
I climb 3340 steps to heaven

I climb 3457 steps to heaven
I climb 3576 steps to heaven
I climb 3697 steps to heaven
I climb 3820 steps to heaven
I climb 3945 steps to heaven
I climb 4072 steps to heaven
I climb 4201 steps to heaven
I climb 4332 steps to heaven
I climb 4465 steps to heaven
I climb 4600 steps to heaven
I climb 4737 steps to heaven
I climb 4876 steps to heaven
I climb 5017 steps to heaven
I climb 5160 steps to heaven
I climb 5305 steps to heaven
I climb 5452 steps to heaven
I climb 5601 steps to heaven
I climb 5752 steps to heaven
I climb 5905 steps to heaven
I climb 6060 steps to heaven
I climb 6217 steps to heaven
I climb 6376 steps to heaven
I climb 6537 steps to heaven
I climb 6700 steps to heaven
I climb 6865 steps to heaven
I climb 7032 steps to heaven
I climb 7201 steps to heaven
I climb 7372 steps to heaven
I climb 7545 steps to heaven
I climb 7720 steps to heaven
I climb 7897 steps to heaven
I climb 8076 steps to heaven
I climb 8257 steps to heaven
I climb 8440 steps to heaven
I climb 8625 steps to heaven
I climb 8812 steps to heaven
I climb 9001 steps to heaven
I climb 9192 steps to heaven
I climb 9385 steps to heaven
I climb 9580 steps to heaven
I climb 9777 steps to heaven
I climb 9976 steps to heaven

I climb 10177 steps to heaven
I climb 10380 steps to heaven
I climb 10585 steps to heaven
I climb 10792 steps to heaven
I climb 11001 steps to heaven
I climb 11212 steps to heaven
I climb 11425 steps to heaven
I climb 11640 steps to heaven
I climb 11857 steps to heaven
I climb 12076 steps to heaven
I climb 12297 steps to heaven
I climb 12520 steps to heaven
I climb 12745 steps to heaven
I climb 12972 steps to heaven
I climb 13201 steps to heaven
I climb 13432 steps to heaven
I climb 13665 steps to heaven
I climb 13900 steps to heaven
I climb 14137 steps to heaven
I climb 14376 steps to heaven
I climb 14617 steps to heaven
I climb 14860 steps to heaven
I climb 15105 steps to heaven
I climb 15352 steps to heaven
I climb 15601 steps to heaven
I climb 15852 steps to heaven
I climb 16105 steps to heaven
I climb 16360 steps to heaven
I climb 16617 steps to heaven
I climb 16876 steps to heaven
I climb 17137 steps to heaven
I climb 17400 steps to heaven
I climb 17665 steps to heaven
I climb 17932 steps to heaven
I climb 18201 steps to heaven
I climb 18472 steps to heaven
I climb 18745 steps to heaven
I climb 19020 steps to heaven
I climb 19297 steps to heaven
I climb 19576 steps to heaven
I climb 19857 steps to heaven
I climb 20140 steps to heaven

I climb 20425 steps to heaven
I climb 20712 steps to heaven
I climb 21001 steps to heaven
I climb 21292 steps to heaven
I climb 21585 steps to heaven
I climb 21880 steps to heaven
I climb 22177 steps to heaven
I climb 22476 steps to heaven
I climb 22777 steps to heaven
I climb 23080 steps to heaven
I climb 23385 steps to heaven
I climb 23692 steps to heaven
I climb 24001 steps to heaven
I climb 24312 steps to heaven
I climb 24625 steps to heaven
I climb 24940 steps to heaven
I climb 25257 steps to heaven
I climb 25576 steps to heaven
I climb 25897 steps to heaven
I climb 26220 steps to heaven
I climb 26545 steps to heaven
I climb 26872 steps to heaven
I climb 27201 steps to heaven
I climb 27532 steps to heaven
I climb 27865 steps to heaven
I climb 28200 steps to heaven
I climb 28537 steps to heaven
I climb 28876 steps to heaven
I climb 29217 steps to heaven
I climb 29560 steps to heaven
I climb 29905 steps to heaven
I climb 30252 steps to heaven
I climb 30601 steps to heaven
I climb 30952 steps to heaven
I climb 31305 steps to heaven
I climb 31660 steps to heaven
I climb 32017 steps to heaven
I climb 32376 steps to heaven
I climb 32737 steps to heaven
I climb 33100 steps to heaven
I climb 33465 steps to heaven
I climb 33832 steps to heaven

I climb 34201 steps to heaven
I climb 34572 steps to heaven
I climb 34945 steps to heaven
I climb 35320 steps to heaven
I climb 35697 steps to heaven
I climb 36076 steps to heaven
I climb 36457 steps to heaven
I climb 36840 steps to heaven
I climb 37225 steps to heaven
I climb 37612 steps to heaven
I climb 38001 steps to heaven
I climb 38392 steps to heaven
I climb 38785 steps to heaven
I climb 39180 steps to heaven
I climb 39577 steps to heaven
I climb 39976 steps to heaven
I climb 40377 steps to heaven
I climb 40780 steps to heaven
I climb 41185 steps to heaven
I climb 41592 steps to heaven

↑ Index

834. Bil Brown
Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Hey Bob,

Geat to hear it. Do me a favor and see if you can record Brenda Coultas. I KNOW you know who she is & I know YOU know her work. Brenda's modesty needs to be supplimented by exposure!! Her wit/intellegence treated with kindness and nurturing.

***

On a side note: The VOX Festival down here in Louisville seems to be chugging along. I'm a little burnt around the edges... but poetic fire burns pure. If you could take the below message and send it on some of your email lists I would greatly appreciate it!!!

Cheers,

Bil Brown

For IMMEDIATE RELEASE*******
A little something something for you all...

The First Annual VOX Festival: April 25-27 1997

Louisville's first Poetics and Performance Conference will bring Oral Performance from some of the key Spoken Word and performance artists from around the country to the Louisville Metropolitan area, for three days of panel discussions, workshops,demonstrations and music, featuring some of the most controversial and prolific of Performing Spoken Artists in America.

INCLUDING:
Nicole Blackman
Brenda Coultas
Anne Elliott
Anne Waldman
Pasq Wilson
Todd Colby
and others...

REGISTRATION RATES & DEADLINES:
Postmarked by March 25th, 1997 (Extended Deadline April 15th)
$15 postage paid all event pass
$25 event pass after April 15th
Check & Money Order Only, Please Make Check out to VOX Festival
Write for more info on registration to:

VOX Festival
c/o The Kentucky Writers Coalition
Clifton Center
2117 Payne Street Suite 304-B
Louisville, KY 40206

Call The VOX Voice-Mail HOTLINE
[redacted]
or Email [redacted]

↑ Index

835. Bil Brown
Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Sorry to send the last mssg to the list.. it was personal to BOB. I ment no harm and was confused. Forgive.

(But, gee I sure do HOPE Bob gets it...)

Bil Brown

↑ Index

836. David R. Israel
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl
Sun 30 Mar 1997

George Bowering alleges:

> Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.
>
> No no. I was using "Binoche" as an adjective. "Getting Binoche" means acting like the lead in "Bleu". That is. walking around with no expression on one's face, but rtelying on the music and lighting to convey one's inner turmoil.

If this is legit, it reminds a bit of our honorable List-meister's contribution to the 17-poets-marathon (assoc. w/ the MLA conference in DC, few months ago) at the 4 Seasons Hotel --

Mr. Bernstein recited (well, sang) a work the memorable lyric refrain whereof was:

>Don't Sokohl me! . . .
or
>So don't Sokohl me!

Sorry I can't recite chapter & verse anent the literary antecedents -- I think he mentioned the work of Danny Kaye. At the time, I didn't get it -- the name Sokohl didn't happen to ring a bell. But then somehow or other, it dawned on me (poss. when browsing thru the New York Rev. of Books or something) that Sokohl was the chap who'd pulled that lit-crit caper (submitting a pseudo-post-mod piece to a journal that was published as if serious . . .)

So now we have

>getting Binoche
and >don't Sokohl

is this just the beginning?

d.i.

.
,
.....,
1....., \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/\0/\/////////////////////...'
.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o....'

///\\\\\/////////\/\\\o///\/\\\\\\\\\/////\\\...'
.David.....Raphael.....Israel...'
<[redacted]>
[&/[redacted]]
{telephonic.location.202/[redacted]}
| "...honk if you believe in geese" |
\\\/////\\\\\\\\\/\///&\\\/\/////////\\\\\\///..'

↑ Index

837. David R. Israel
as for Sandhyabasha
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Poetas,

so happens I've lately joined an Indology listproc [similar to listserv]. This is mainly comprised of non-nonsense specialists, so one must mind one's Ps & Qs a bit, but anyway so far they've been nice to amateur-me -- so I presumed to forward to that list Gwyn's interesting question. I also provided -- in said forwarding -- what amounts to a bit of annotation anent the Sandhyabasha question -- though I suspect some more detailed & particular stuff'll surface pretty soon. But I thought even this bit might interest you'all a bit, ergo attaching same. I'll not deluge Poetics w/ everything that might appear on Indology re: Sandhyabasha, but will perhaps forward one or two things if they look to be of interest here. Will see.

yours truly,
d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Sun, 30 Mar 1997 14:10:45 BST
From: "David R. Israel" <[redacted]>
To: Members of the list <[redacted]>
Subject: "Sandhyabasha"

Respected Indologists --

on the Poetics listserv (based at Univ. of Buffalo, and an active hub for avant-chitchat), poet Gwyn McVay posted this inquiry:

~~~
~~~

In her introduction to the City Lights edition of Kerouac's /Scripture of the Golden Sutra/, Anne Waldman sez,

> Sanskrit poetics speaks of /Sandhyabasha/ or twilight speech, which is an "upside-down" language harboring contradictions and paradoxes.

I'd love to find out her source on this--it reminds me of the Sioux (please correct me if I've misattributed this) /heyoka/, thunder-clown, who lived, spoke, and acted backwards-- Gwyn
~~~~~~

Perhaps the mentioned device in Sanskrit poetics is too familiar to merit special Indology discussion -- but I wonder if someone might care to present a few useful references abt. this?

[I myself recall reading (maybe 15-20 years ago) an essay on the topic by an Indologist (somehow I think the essay-book was published in USSR, oddly) -- but I forget the bloke's name or other particulars. I'd picked up the vol., so happens, at Shambhala Books in Berkeley; the subject was indeed an interesting one, in terms of poetics. As I recall, the sort of backwards-speech in question (a form of irony) was traced back quite far -- I think to the Ramayana -- though naturally was more prevalent in far-subsequent court poetry & such. But I' m speaking here from a too-vague recollection of that essay.]

ALSO, while on this Sanskrit poetics topic: is there, by chance, any manner of critical consensus regarding the lovely-looking translation of Sanskrit poetry verses, in which American poet W.S. Merwin was involved, entitled The Peacock's Egg (published by the erstwhile North Point Press), I wonder? Merwin collaborated w/ that psycholigist chap Massoud (who managed, later, to get into some fine controversies, I've noted -- w/ the Freud Archives, et seq.)

thanks / best,
d.i.

↑ Index

838. Steven Marks
Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"
Sun 30 Mar 1997

On Sun, 30 Mar 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

This sounds very interesting. I hope that David Israel can get us some more info on this.
~~~~~~

> Sanskrit poetics speaks of /Sandhyabasha/ or twilight speech, which is an "upside-down" language harboring contradictions and paradoxes.
>
> (please correct me if I've misattributed this) /heyoka/, thunder-clown, who lived, spoke, and acted backwards--

I've never heard of this term. I remember learning about secret societies such as the "contraries" who would say good-bye when you met them and hello when they left you. (Or the Native American equivalents.) There's a scene in _Little Big Man_ where the man whose life was saved by Dustin Hoffman's character demonstrates this behavior. As I remember from a college class on N. Am. Indians, these societies were composed of the bravest of the brave. It certainly must have been difficult to remember to do everything backward.

best,
St even

P.S. alan jen sondheim: I get the mathematical engine (add the odd numbers to the preceding term beginning with 11) but not the one for the letters. Looks like maybe we should be reading some groups of letters forward and some backwards.

P.P.S. Nico V. -- enjoyed your evolving palindrome.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

839. David R. Israel
(Fwd) Job Opportunity (U. Manitoba)
Sun 30 Mar 1997

1st: thanks, St even, for interest in twilight speech (which, for starters, has been corrected to sandhya bhasa (from "sandhyabasha" cited by Gwyn from Ann W.'s preface to Jack K.) --

my impression of the term is that it was a rather broad Sanskrit poetics techno-term for "irony" or "ironic utterance" -- not necessarily backwards in the literal ways you mention. (Have gotten one reply so far, referencing unorthodox Sakta traditions of Tamil Nadu . . . will see what'all else turns up.)

Meanwhile, on another topic, there's a job out there for one who's (a) an expert in women's studies / humanities, and (b) interested in living in Manitoba. That info follows.

best, d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Tue, 25 Mar 1997 22:40:24 GMT
From: Hueckstedt <[redacted]>
To: Members of the list <[redacted]>
Subject: Job Opportunity

List Members: There is a job opportunity here at the University of Manitoba, but it is not specifically for South Asianists. It is for people in women's studies and the humanities. Therefore, South Asianists who have expertise in those areas would probably be able to apply. A copy of the advertisement is at this web site: http://www.umanitoba.ca/programs/womans_studies/job.html

The application deadline is 30 April.

This is a tenure-track, full-time position.

I know nothing more about this position than I have already described above. Questions about it should be directed to the Women's Studies Program at the University of Manitoba.

Best,
Bob Hueckstedt

Robert A. Hueckstedt, Associate Professor of Indic Languages
Asian Studies Centre, 328 Fletcher Argue, University of Manitoba Winnipeg, Manitoba R3T 2N2 Canada
http://www.umanitoba.ca/faculties/arts/asian_studies
fax [redacted] phones [redacted], [redacted]

↑ Index

840. Mark Weiss
Re: Getting Binoche
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Oh--getting as in "getting a cold"

At 10:39 PM 3/29/97 -0800, you wrote:
>>Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or wetting.
>
>
>No no. I was using "Binoche" as an adjective. "Getting Binoche" means >acting like the lead in "Bleu". That is. walking around with no expression >on one's face, but rtelying on the music and lighting to convey one's inner >turmoil.

>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]
>e-mail: [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

841. Mark Weiss
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Actually, Bernstein didn't invent this piece of grammar. Think of name-verbs like "Boycott."

At 07:18 AM 3/30/97 -0500, you wrote:
>George Bowering alleges:
>
>> >Getting may have been a typo for for the more correct bedding or >> >wetting.
>>
>> No no. I was using "Binoche" as an adjective. "Getting Binoche" >> means acting like the lead in "Bleu". That is. walking around with >> no expression on one's face, but rtelying on the music and lighting >> to convey one's inner turmoil.
>
>If this is legit, it reminds a bit of our honorable List-meister's >contribution to the 17-poets-marathon (assoc. w/ the MLA conference >in DC, few months ago) at the 4 Seasons Hotel --
>
>Mr. Bernstein recited (well, sang) a work the memorable lyric refrain >whereof was:
>

>>Don't Sokohl me! . . .
>or
>>So don't Sokohl me!
>
>Sorry I can't recite chapter & verse anent the literary antecedents
>-- I think he mentioned the work of Danny Kaye. At the time, I >didn't get it -- the name Sokohl didn't happen to ring a bell. But >then somehow or other, it dawned on me (poss. when browsing thru the >New York Rev. of Books or something) that Sokohl was the chap who'd >pulled that lit-crit caper (submitting a pseudo-postmod piece to a >journal that was published as if serious . . .)
>
>So now we have
>
>>getting Binoche
>and >>don't Sokohl
>
>is this just the beginning?
>
>d.i.
>
>.
>,
>.....,
>1................., >\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/\0/\/////////////////////...'
>.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o....'
>///\\\\\\/////////\/\\\o//\/\\\\\\\\\/////\\\...'
>.David..........Raphael..........Israel...'
><[redacted]>
>[&/[redacted]]
>{telephonic.location.202/[redacted]}
>| "...honk if you believe in geese" |
>\\\/////\\\\\\\\\/\//&\\\/\/////////\\\\\\//..'
>
>

↑ Index

842. David Bromige
alan jen sondheim's poem
Sun 30 Mar 1997

heaven 2 steps 12 climb I (db.

↑ Index

843. David R. Israel
Re: sandhyabhasha
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Bruce --

thanks much for the corrective note. I do recall reading (as mentioned) an interesting essay from an Indologist dealing with certain (and various) specific types of poetical irony in Sanskrit. One early citation, I think, may have involved the well-known verse from Ramayana, wherein Valmiki ponders with wonderment how out of soka [sorrow] came sloka [verse] (though if this was in fact cited in the context of the development of irony in Skt. poetics, I'm afraid I lose the particulars of exactly why it was felt to be relevant) Many other later references included not only primary sources (esp. from court poetry or dramatic works), but also what seemed to be a rather sophisticated theory-context from the medieval grammarians & suchlike. In any event, seeing the quotation with reference to "twilight language" from Waldman, I mistakenly conflated the latter term with this other (quite different) Skt. subject-matter.

The post from Ganesan with references to Tamil Siddha tradition did put me on the alert that I had likely confused these disperate ideas; -- and now you've quite clarified the matter. When thus conversing w/ experts, perhaps I shd. make a greater modicum of effort to check my initial notions; -- anyway, again thanks for setting this right.

best,
d.i.

> From: [redacted]
> Date: Sun, 30 Mar 1997 09:50:28 -0700 (MST)
> Subject: sandhyabhasha
> To: [redacted]
>
> David:
>
> Masson was a fine Sanskrit scholar who turned his attn. to psychanalysis.
>
> "Sandhya-bhasha" (sa.mdhyaa-bhaa.syaa) has little to do with irony or "upside-down" language, despite the quote from Anne Waldman.

> Sanskrit poetics was not concerned with this term or mode of expression. It refers to the use of language to conceal meaning from non-initiates, and is most often applied to describe texts of Tantric traditions. Since some Tantric traditions were/are esoteric and sought to transmit teachings only to those properly initiated, coded language was used, such that sun = male, moon = female, or whatever. Any discussion of Tantra, especially Hindu, will treat this phemonenon, sometimes also called "intentional language."
>
> Bruce M. Sullivan

↑ Index

844. Peter Jaeger
Re: sound, McCaffery
Sun 30 Mar 1997

> >Steve McCaffery's approach to sound poetry seems far more concerned with the social, because in both his early and late writing on sound poetry he centres on sound as the site for investigation of the subject of socio-linguistic relations.
> Peter Jaeger
>
> Don't really want to single this out, but I wonder if there is any need for what follows "centres on sound"?

Tom,

I was trying to point out that Steve McCaffery's theorization of sound poetry explicitly considers the social. In the 1978 catalogue for the 11th international sound peotry festival, he wrote that sound poetry is opposed to all social pre-conditioning. Then in the mid 80s he criticized some sound poetry for privileging lexical meaning by exempting it altogeher...this shift might owe something to his intrest in Bataille, because a complete exemption of lexical meaning would be restrictive, and so contrary to Steve's desire for simultaneous production and loss...a desire that foregrounds the social production of meaning

Peter

↑ Index

845. David R. Israel
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl / gotta Boycott
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Quoth Mark Weiss --

> Actually, Bernstein didn't invent this piece of grammar. Think of name-verbs like "Boycott."

no, not to suggest he invented the grammatical principle; but he did apply it (as did, we read, Mr. Bowering). My post was by way of pointing to another (i.e., Bernstein's) instance of the principle (and, for that matter, wondering abt. what'all further cases might be floating around the universe). Didn't know about Mr. [?] Boycott, but even this late in the game, always good to get up to speed.

best, d.i.

> So now we have
>
> getting Binoche
> and
> don't Sokohl

↑ Index

846. David Bromige
Easter Sunday afternoons, when the Mall is closed
Sun 30 Mar 1997

I've been bowering my mind for something pithy to say. db

↑ Index

847. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Re: NEA/ NPM (national poetry month/ etc
Sun 30 Mar 1997

NEA-- biting the hand the feeds us (or a small percentage of us).
some crumbs are better than no food at all.
how anything can used to sow disruption.
fighting over the scraps of a continually shrinking pie.

the main censorship we're fighting is economic, the mass markets, controlling the tastes tfor safety and for releasing steam, to drift us into fantasy and self-hatred and internal competition.

what can be done, typing away in isolation, or writing against the flow. like something i recently read, not like david vs goliath but more like shirley temple vs king kong. can get hopeless. act locally. maintain the magic.

and here's a somewhat political poem:

"EARTH FIRST.
WE'LL LOG THE OTHER PLANETS LATER" (bumperticker)

a corrugated line knits this tight diffuse sweater thru the asphalt, the latex, the momentum of routine canalized like sugar, cannibalizing this ghost zoo of images melting in the waste-stream of self-desiccating tear ducts
i can't imagine that chunky, that prolific in color, intense organic value an economy too diverse to exploit without killing designer body germs fine-tune our spasms like optic cables flossing the inner kidney's endocrine hosanna, running ridge-tops at 10 miles per hour for days with the green leaves thru every orifice so the sun won't set the moon forever in my pineal i'm 6-legged 8-armed frisbee pollen germinating between a thousand unnamed species to croon to set a fine table spew energy beyond our needs and laws since we're all family since we all speak separate languages the way your eye is a tattoo of a dog wearing a flame skirt and thermonuclear ear tag jumps between the 19th and 20th vertebrae ribs straining like the radiator on the 18th floor with walls removed by acid vision, sulfuric tarantulas teleporting from almagordo wearing green eye-shades and dealing a realignment of dna razor-wire capable of showing up unexpected despite layers of pavement despite a lack of conversation,

There's so much work unacknowledged in replacing knees with stained glass never wearing pants or leggings;
an environment for the numb; a church for those with several bodies-- knock and you're at risk, ask & your voice is no longer your own we slowly strip search the earth:

fewer species are easier to count, easier to inventory scanning dna's complex bar code, a treasure map encrypted in alien physics

so we drill in the backyard on the moon in long volcano teeth psychics show beneath wall street icon morphing into textured phoenixes rise from the desert to greenhouse this land with no official history;
preserving old structures as batteries to focus meat-time
as more bodies gather to tympanize the substrata, to throw me onto a pavement of rain and possibilities,
floodtide of used condoms and unopened labelless cans
i pray my deepest instinct/luck to know what won't react, what is safe enough to eat safe enough to stick your mouth on the exhaust pipe of

"they say the best things in life are free. but you can give them to the birds and bees"

↑ Index

848. simon
Re: as for Sandhyabasha
Sun 30 Mar 1997

---

sandhyaa is "evening" or "twilight"

sandhyaa is, as well, a selection or group of Vedic hymns recited as part of the morning or the evening prayers

beth simon

↑ Index

849. Stephen Vincent
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl / gotta Boycott
Sun 30 Mar 1997

D.I writes:
> Didn't know about Mr. [?] Boycott,
>but even this late in the game, always good to get up to speed.

Godspeed (?)

Eggs & Easter, Happy.

Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

850. simon
Re: sandhyabhasha
Sun 30 Mar 1997

---

sandhyaa "twilight" bhaashaa "language" is a cover label for the highly codified set of interrelated metaphors used in texts where surface meaning differs substantially from functional meaning. sandhyaa bhaashaa both obscures the functional and, for those for whom such texts are practical outlines or guides, provides the key words or catalysts for specific (mental or physical) actions.

beth simon

↑ Index

851. David R. Israel
Re: as for Sandhyabasha
Sun 30 Mar 1997

---

from beth simon -- > sandhyaa is "evening" or "twilight"
>
> sandhyaa is, as well, a selection or group of Vedic hymns recited as > part of the morning or the evening prayers

ah yes -- to take this toward another tangent: "sandhyaa" was thus the morning prayer that Ramakrishna suggested (to his Hindu devotees) should be practiced as prescribed -- until such time as the need for all that falls away . . . (recited while bathing in Ganges . . .)

but back to McVay's original interest: there are indeed some precise Sanskrit poetics terms for various of forms of irony in poetry

(it simply turns out that SB isn't one of 'em . . .)

d.i.

↑ Index

852. David Bromige
explication du texte
Sun 30 Mar 1997

I've been scouring-in-a-bowering-like manner my mind, in hopes that something bowering-like (pithy & amusing & unforgettable) will form in words. db

↑ Index

853. Douglas Barbour
Re: Mind the gap
Sun 30 Mar 1997

David Israel points to W S Merwin's use of the 'gap,' & that's fine, but it seems to me that the 'space' (the term I've usually used) in the Merwin poem he quotes is fairly standard from line to line. It isn't in many other writers' work (I would again point to various moments in the ten volumes of _The Martyrology_ for example). It's not just a caesura, especially when there are more than one per line, I would think. I also know, at least from my own experience, but also having seen it in others' work, that Mark Weiss is right to ask writers how many 'm' of space are required, because the length of the pause that the space signs changes with the length of the space (& it seems to em that Duncan wrote quite carefully about this in regards to his own work). This is a fascinating thread, although I had never before been bothered by the need for a name for this act. And 'space' or 'gap' seem the most useful still, because the most 'open' in terms of indexicality...

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H: [redacted]

↑ Index

854. Louis Cabri
catching up
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Kent, your firsthand info on McCord is very useful--thanks. And no, "Christmas light" does not generous reading make. I take back comet, too. I don't know if they were poet-suicides in San Diego, or what....

Fiona, I had in mind the archival method of the _Cantos_, a method which seems down the line to be given coherence--that it might not otherwise have for a reader--by Howard McCord post-Olson in his programmatic assertion for the _lyric_ as epistemic form. --Doesn't knowledge require an archive of some kind, even for/of the present moment?

A lyrical persona unifies by constructing/reading an "archive." So I was recognizing McCord's individualism (not a _communitas_ in him) as being one with such unifying lyricism, expressed by many New American Poets.

But what about, more significantly, the archival effort itself, which might not require the lyrical? Does constructing an "archive" not equal the necessary construction of a reading-horizon which is itself necessary for the construction of a community of readers/writers?

These community reading-horizons--"archives"--are differently constituted for specific audiences.

For Nichol at various points the archive is language itself--Language: the letters of its alphabet is the world and his world. (He's not the first to posit Language, of course.)
What specifically Nichol does, at times, however, is legitimize, with the connective glue of his poetry (puns, homonyms, etc.), various already written, if you like, semantic chains in the language. These semantic chains are the social products of existing property relations. It seems that the semantic chains whose links he particularizes and polishes are often stereotypically affirmative of the way the land already lies-- the myth of the ruler. It's as if social meanings were politically neutral, and a part of the substance of Language-- they only need to be disclosed for truth to be revealed by,
for instance, the pun. I think of Riffaterre's hypograms, which posits at the core of a cultural corpus meaning as already meant. So, very different from McCaffery's paragram--in fact, McCaffery's reading of Nichol reflects more directly on McCaffery's own work. There is a huge heave of politics in _The Martyrology_, Douglas, that hasn't been written about, I think. Instead, its politics is overlooked due to what might be called a conceptual enthusiasm and need-- professional and otherwise--to find poetical demonstrations of newfound learning from abroad. A poem may only seem to have a fundamental indeterminacy if one's initial premise about the nature of language, and especially poetic language, is, for example, that pronouns are referential. That premise isn't sufficently accurate enough, however, to notice indeterminacy in differeent kinds of poetry--as anything other than a shared theme. So I think the pronouns in The Mart are actually very stable, or as stable as most linguistic phenomena--because pronouns are not referential, or importantly so. But getting back to the poetry, in Nichol there are always exceptions. "Inchoate" is captured in a semantically rich pun in the lines "ink eau / ate world" (from--book taken and page opened at random--Book 6 of _The Martyrology_).

But there again, the pun must because of what it is fall back on already-constituted meanings which, back to the bible, are reincarnated once again as is. It's quite funny to think that playing on a semantic rift in the letters "bp" is most exemplary of Nichol's poetic practice.

Peter, I don't hear a narrative of closure and normative repair a-la-Therafields in his or their sound poetry. Is that just me?

Much thanks to Aaron Shurin and Rachel Loden and Gwyn McVay for their Weiners's tips (I will check see again if I've left anyone out!), and to everyone else who has responded backchannel. Don't forget, it's April 11th!

Ron Silliman says: "It is only through the signifier that the cultural limits of the self, the subject, become visible" (_New Sentence_ 146). Why wasn't Wieners' Behind The State Capitol considered as much an influence on Language Writing as the writings of Hannah Weiner? Charles Shively suggests in a special issue of Mirage (ed. Kevin Killian) on John Wieners that an aura of mythologizing around John Wieners, to do with his schyzophrenia, has prevented closer attention to the wriitng in his writing--much as Ron pointed out that notions of clairvoyancy prevented a reading of the "pre thinking thought" of Hannah Weiner's work.

I thought the panel presentations themselves were great.

Gotta go!

Louis Cabri

↑ Index

855. Douglas Barbour

Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"

Sun 30 Mar 1997

On the other hand, Bob Grumman's 'taxonomy' is lovely in its capacity.

I too thank Pierre for the Celan, but note that from my reading of various translations, Celan used line breaks but not midline ones. Is that a fair assessment?

==========

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness

University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H:
[redacted]

↑ Index

856. George Bowering
Re: name gap (fwd)
Sun 30 Mar 1997

>i believe that brenda hillman uses astericks

I like that: "astericks". Sort of like tricks done by flowers that seem to be stars. Neat word!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

857. George Bowering
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl / gotta Boycott
Sun 30 Mar 1997

> Quoth Mark Weiss --
>
> Actually, Bernstein didn't invent this piece of grammar. Think of name-verbs like "Boycott."
>
> no, not to suggest he invented the grammatical principle; but he did apply it (as did, we read, Mr. Bowering). My post was by way of pointing to another (i.e., Bernstein's) instance of the principle (and, for that matter, wondering abt. what'all further cases might be floating around the universe). Didn't know about Mr. [?] Boycott, but even this late in the game, always good to get up to speed.
>
> best, d.i.

Hey, don't Bogart that explanation!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

858. Kenneth Goldsmith

No. lll 2.7.93-10.20.96 Press Release

Sun 30 Mar 1997

****

THE FIGURES
5 CASTLE HILL AVENUE
GREAT BARRINGTON MASS 01230
[redacted]

****

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Figures proudly announces the publication of Kenneth Goldsmith's _No. lll 2.7.93-10.20.96_, the long awaited 606 page book of conceptually uncategorizable brilliance by one of New York's most unpredictable young artists.

Made up of literally thousands of short phrases and hundreds of long phrases, carefully crafted full sentences of great eloquence as well as typographic rant of total gibberish, Goldsmith's book is a trove of found and formally fudged language. Ordered by syllable count and alphabetic rigor, as well as by sound, the material in _No. lll_ invites the reader to browse, scan, read aloud, howl, goof and wonder at the impossible juxtapositions of diction, reference, and attitude.

In the words of Marjorie Perloff, "Goldsmith's eye and ear for contemporary argot is near perfect," and Charles Bernstein adds, "In this useless collection of perishable information, this wily catalog of everyday life, Goldsmith has written what could be the longest, and maybe the last, list poem of the 20th Century."

Known primarily as a fine artist (he shows at Bravin Post Lee Gallery in Soho), Goldsmith has been using words and writing in his art production for a decade. Now, in trade book form, with a spare white cover that echoes the look of How To Write, by Gertrude Stein, the reader can have this largest sampling of his work to date.

Kenneth Goldsmith has been active in the art, literature, and music worlds for several years. He received a B.F.A. from the Rhode Island School of Design in 1984. He has shown his text-based artworks in museums and galleries around the world. In 1993, he completed _73 Poems_ (Permanent Press, CD release Lovely Music, Ltd.), a collaboration with avant-garde vocalist Joan La Barbara. He is a DJ at Freeform Radio 91.1 WFMU in the New York City area and lives in lower Manhattan with his wife, the video artist and painter Cheryl Donegan.

No lll 2.7.93-10.20.96 5 1/2 x 8" 606 pages perfect bound Available 15 March 1997 $17.50 ISBN 0-935724-87-7

Available through The Figures [redacted], [redacted]
In NYC: Printed Matter, 77 Wooster St. NYC, [redacted]
Bravin Post Lee Gallery, 80 Mercer St., NYC [redacted]
Small Press Distribution, 1814 San Pablo Ave., Berkeley, CA 94705

****

THE FIGURES
5 CASTLE HILL AVENUE
GREAT BARRINGTON MASS 01230
[redacted]
[redacted]

****

↑ Index

859. David R. Israel

Re: Easter Sunday afternoons, when the Mall is closed

Sun 30 Mar 1997

> From: David Bromige <[redacted]>
>
> I've been bowering my mind for something pithy to say. db

I realize the meaning shd. be apparent, but for the dim-witted, care to lexicate?
d.i.

p.s.: re: Bowering's "don't Bogart that explanation!" -- right, I knew there was some instance floating around in antique memory; & that was perhaps it (or at least one of 'em).

↑ Index

860. David R. Israel
Re: "Sandhyabasha"
Sun 30 Mar 1997

Here -- at last or at length -- is a note that speaks most directly to the original question re: Anne Waldman's reference. d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Mon, 31 Mar 1997 02:15:00 BST
From: [redacted] (George Thompson)
To: Members of the list <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: "Sandhyabasha"

I'm pretty sure that the source of Waldman's remarks is Eliade's "Yoga: Immortality and Freedom", since it refers briefly to sandhyA-bhASA [in the Kyoto-Harvard transcription system], and since all of the Beats were reading Eliade [besides the book on yoga, there was a lot of interest in his book on Shamanism].

You might check out the now classic study of S. Das Gupta [upon which Eliade depended greatly], "Obscure Religious Cults" [3rd edit., 1969], who by the way suggests that the alternation between sandhA- [i.e., "intentional" language] and sandhyA- [i.e., "twilight" language; cf. "sandhi"] is not due to scribal error but to intentional double-sense.

There is a lot of more recent literature on this, which specialists might want to recommend, but these two books seem to me to have the best chance of being the ones that Waldman, Kerouac, et al., were familiar with.

Best wishes
George Thompson

↑ Index

861. Christopher Alexander
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl
Sun 30 Mar 1997

david israel wrrt:
> Mr. Bernstein recited (well, sang) a work the memorable lyric refrain > whereof was:
>
> >Don't Sokohl me! . . .
> or
> >So don't Sokohl me!

wish I could heare the tune.
I'm thinking that refrain in the grateful dead's "dire wolf":

"don't murder me,
I beg of you don't murder me..."

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective [redacted] / **********

Hey!!
Now Available: _constellation voice_ by linda russo

↑ Index

862. Christopher Alexander constellation voice
Sun 30 Mar 1997

---

just want to announce briefly that Linda Russo's chapbook _constellation voice_ is now available for a pittance ($4) from nominative press collective 160S 1300E, no. 16

Salt Lake City UT 84102

so those of you who are planning to attend the denver conference next weekend can impress her by having already read it when you meet.

also, still have some copies of my _Dusky Winders_ available @ $3 apiece. so those of you who are planning to attend the denver conference next weekend...

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

863. KENT JOHNSON
Re: name gap and heart gap
Sun 30 Mar 1997

> Date sent: Mon, 31 Mar 1997 05:17:17 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Rachel Loden <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: name gap and heart gap
> To: [redacted]

Well, there's nothing at all wrong with talking about lacunae! It's just the silence the lacuna seems to mark in this instance that I find fascinating.

Still, for those who might choose this as a "battle" worth adding a voice to, I'll be posting info from FC2 as soon as I get it from Normal.

Heroically,

Kent

> *Oh, please. Years have passed since I've been on this list and we've never before talked about caesuras and lacunae, or really any of the bolts and wrenches of poesy. How terrible, how truly decadent that we should do so now. Give me a break. Speaking as somebody with intimate knowledge of what it's like to be on the receiving end of heavy state power, I pick my own battles and I pick them carefully. So I'm sure do others here. I don't feel the need to be harangued from some heroic ramparts.*
>
> Tell us about what's going on, Kent, but please don't imagine you can stand in judgment of our "silence."
>
> Rachel L.

↑ Index

864. Gwyn McVay
Re: Mind the gap
Sun 30 Mar 1997

The three-em dash is used for intentionally omitted names--you know, "In the summer of 18-- we stayed at the Chateau V------." Don't most typesetters make those internal line-gaps about three ems?

Gwyn, squinting

↑ Index

865. Pierre Joris

Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"

Mon 31 Mar 1997

Douglas Barbour wrote:
>
> On the other hand, Bob Grumman's 'taxonomy' is lovely in its capacity.
>
> I too thank Pierre for the Celan, but note that from my reading of various > translations, Celan used line breaks but not midline ones. Is that a fair > assessment?
>

Douglas -- you are right, of course, Celan does not -- or only very rarely & in rather hidden ways -- use caesuras directly. The reason I posted that poem was that in it Celan addresses the concept of the caesura via Holderlin who worked on that question in his Pindar translation. The whole of the Celan poem queries the fact that one (the poetic line) can / has to be two, i.e. that the caesura both breaks & makes the "line" -- "I drink wine from two glasses" says the first line & on to the last one with its "doit" -- a translation of "Deut" an old coin (the coin drops, the penny drops -- but always double, deut is tuppence, in the old brit coin(age), or "my two pennies worth." & in the middle there's the "tuning fork" -- has 2 branches to set up the resonance, create the sound. -- Pierre
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is, [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

866. Thomas Bell

Are poets citizens? Re: RealPoetik - touchy, longish

Mon 31 Mar 1997

Of possible interest, from the RealPoetik list a reply to a reply to a lament on American poets' shunning the role of "citizen"
>>>>>>>

At 10:20 AM 3/30/97 -0800, Robert Salasin wrote:
>Dear Tom,
>
>Please feel free to post it anywhere, but do please make >sure RealPoetik gets credit, and provide our email address >([redacted]) and web site (http://www.wln.com/~salasin/>rp.html).
>
>Drop me a note if it actually goes up anywhere.
>
>Best,
>Sal Salasin
>RealPoetik

Gwendolyn Albert wrote an essay on the lack of local or national politics in American poetry, even the poetry of progressives, and mentioned the work and appearances of Carolyn Forche, an award winning and quite prominent American progressive writer. Carolyn Forche, a subscriber to RealPoetik, fired off a response, and Ms. Albert has been kind enough to respond to the response.

Gwendolyn Albert, Editrix of JEJUNE: america eats its young, is a native of Oakland, California. She holds a BA in Linguistics from the University of California at Berkeley and was a Fulbright Scholar at the Charles University in Prague, Czechoslovakia for the 1989/90 academic year. This was the year of the "Velvet Revolution," an event which she was fortunate enough to witness firsthand and participate in as a translator for Civic Forum, the interim governmental entity formed by Vaclav Havel and other Charter 77 members. Following her return to Oakland in 1990 she published two chapbooks of poetry with Norton Coker Press in San Francisco, started a local poetry reading series, and began to edit JEJUNE magazine in 1993. Since returning to the Czech Republic in 1994, she has lived in Tabor and Prague. She can be reached at PO Box 85, 110 01 Praha 1, Czech Republic.

An Open Letter to RealPoetik

Dear Sal and RealPoetik readers,

So. Since I sent you my musings on the supposed US poetry renaissance of the '90's, I have received quite a response. Unfortunately, my description of the experiences which led me to the question I was trying to ask -- why do American poets, by and large, tend to shy away from wearing the hat of "citizen" in their work? -- seems to have interfered significantly with that question being heard. However, the essay seems to have struck a chord despite its flaws, so I will try to clarify.

The various responses I received described the essay as "combative," as a "demand" for a "mandate" of "political content" in poetry, and as "accusatory". Unfortunately, the mistaken conclusion people are jumping to seems to be that I am advocating some sort of neo-Stalinist thought policing of America's poets. I am not.

I did not use the very general word "political" in my essay to describe what I sense is missing from the US poetry most widely on offer to the world, (to judge from the sample available to me). I did use the word "civic" -- in the sense of relating to citizenship or civil affairs, "of or relating to the general population," according to my Merriam-Webster. I am noticing that with a few exceptions (such as Adrienne Rich) the poets of this alleged renaissance do not address our common lives as citizens. I find this reflects a lack of that sense in the larger culture. It is an essay about what is missing: plain speech about the underlying premises of our civic or civil culture. Maybe it is the sense of civil culture that has gone missing. I don't know.

What I was taught in America is that politics are supposed to serve the citizenry. In a democracy, it is the responsibility of the citizen to determine the extent to which politics deviate from that aim and to use the means available to try and keep on course. I precisely do not advocate poets turning into lobbyists or propagandists. I'm talking about poets standing as citizens, looking at how the politics which is supposed to serve US ALL functions and then commenting on that function. My impression, which is all I am qualified to discuss, is that this is something very few of them choose to do. Why is that? Does it have to do with the nature of poetry itself? Of the American experience? I don't know.

My great fear is that if poetry ceases to be written from the stance of the citizen, there becomes yet one more area of human endeavour in which the idea of the "civic" or the "civil" -- that general population separate from politics and to which politics should be subservient -- dies a quiet death.

Now I would like to specifically address some of Carolyn Forche's concerns:

I am disappointed that Ms. Forche did not answer my question about her evaluation of US politics more directly in our interview, and that she told the anecdote she told in the way she told it at the Prague Summer Writing Conference. I will transcribe the interview and forward it to RealPoetik so it can speak for itself. I would only say here that I was not interested in "sound bites" and that it is precisely the "subtlety" of Forche's response that I find objectionable. I understood what was being said (and I am familiar with Chomsky's political writings), but I don't understand where all this pussyfooting around is supposed to get us.

At the time of the interview I considered it an honor to meet Forche. I have read all of her works, and I have attended her readings and talks whenever possible in the hopes of hearing her shed some light on what concerns and troubles me about life in our times. It is perhaps for this reason that, as a member of her audience, I found her behavior disappointing. I find it disappointing that the "after-reading question period is not, in [her] view, the place for sustained and serious discussion...." My essay discusses what I observe American poets saying and not saying when they have opportunities to address the public. It does not constitute a lament for my personal opportunities for "conversation" -- and my living in Prague, Oakland or Outer Mongolia is beside the point. Where I reside has no bearing on what Carolyn Forche said and how she said it.

I live in the Czech Republic because I prefer it to the US. But that's another story -- as is the "expat" "community" Ms. Forche assumes I belong to, and with which I have virtually no contact. I can assure her that the thousands of Americans here in this post-89 feeding frenzy do not constitute a community, but a collection of business owners and clientele. My "community" consists of the writers, musicians, artists and other people with whom I live and correspond, whether they are from the US or Ukraine. Due to the constant daily reminders that I am a foreigner, however fluently I go about my business, I am perhaps more aware of myself as an "American" here than when I lived in America. To see Czechs walking down the streets in "Desert Storm" tshirts is to experience that complex of myth and horrible reality that America has exported to the world -- on the receiving end. However, lately I'm beginning to realize that Americans buy their own advertising most of all. But I digress...

I did not wish to imply that Amnesty International is guilty of anything -- and I was horrified that Forche should feel she had to apologize for the stridency of the volunteers in Berkeley (as if anyone could take responsibility for the stridency in Berkeley -- heaven help us!!) My point was that non-governmental organizations are the institutions that many concerned, um, citizens hope can address these issues of social justice. But common sense alone should tell us they cannot be infallible -- and that they can only do so much. I would like to know more about the "rather unblemished" history of AI -- especially since I recently came across an article in an underground publication here which was critical of Czech Amnesty's response to the Romany situation. I would be very interested to learn from whomever makes the decisions within Amnesty about how AI goes about verifying human rights abuses, how AI decides when to release information to the public -- in short, how does such an organization deal with its increasingly powerful role in global politics? How does it approach the reality that it is often up against the work of the very most secret, best-funded and highly organized defenders of the "carceral corporate state[s]"?

Unfortunately, Forche's response goes far afield. Once again the question -- why do American poets, by and large, tend to shy away from wearing the hat of "citizen" in their work? -- is being AVOIDED. Forche closes in a near-litigious fury by accusing Salasin of publishing potentially libelous material. Let's leave him out of it: I stand by my feeling of revulsion and the right to describe it, however inadequately I may have done so -- and however unclear the connection of that experience to the others mentioned may have been.

Forche's parting shot is a "subtle" dismantling of my having been inspired to address civic matters by the example of the writers of Central and Eastern Europe. She implies that they would be opposed to what she perceives as my "demands" -- perhaps as they were opposed to the demands of socialist realism? I know an "equals sign" when I see one, subtle or not. I can only think that Forche's sense of the need to defend herself has caused her to willfully misinterpret what I was saying. So I'll say it again in a different way: in my country -- and it is my country, even if I live elsewhere -- Oliver North is free to run for the Senate. In the Czech Republic, Vaclav Havel is President.

And you wonder why I don't want to come "home"?

With great respect,

Gwendolyn Albert

↑ Index

867. George Bowering

Re: detention with a redhead woman

Mon 31 Mar 1997

> I've been bowering my mind for something pithy to say. db

Aw come on, you can always think of something worth pith, David.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

868. Rachel Loden
Sokal, Pogo, Bernstein, &c.
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Story is spun of a torch song by Chas. B.:

> Don't Sokohl me! . . .
> or
> So don't Sokohl me!
>
> wish I could heare the tune.

Oh, me too! But it's Sokal, isn't it? Alan Sokal of the _Social Text_ follies? Seems plausible that the trail leads right back to Pogo:

Oh I may be your cup of tea
But baby don't you Sokal me
Don't stir me boy, or try to spoon
Don't Sokal me
Cause us is throon!

(It's faintly possible that) I hear America singing,

Rachel L.

↑ Index

869. Michael Boughn
Re: catching up
Mon 31 Mar 1997

> A lyrical persona unifies by constructing/reading an "archive." So I was recognizing McCord's individualism (not a _communitas_ in him) as being one with such unifying lyricism, expressed by many New American Poets. But what about, more significantly, the archival effort itself, which might not require the lyrical? Does constructing an "archive" not equal the necessary construction of a reading-horizon which is itself necessary for the construction of a community of readers/writers?
>
> These community reading-horizons--"archives"--are differently constituted for specific audiences.
>
> For Nichol at various points the archive is language itself--Language: the letters of its alphabet is the world and his world. (He's not the first to posit Language, of course.) What specifically Nichol does, at times, however, is legitimize, with the connective glue of his poetry (puns, homonyms, etc.), various already written, if you like, semantic chains in the language.

note also how for Nichol the archive opens into intimations of the epic, as in Book 5 of Martyrology, where the street signs in the neighborhood become occasion for an Odyssean journey, both temporal and spatial

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

870. henry gould
Re: Are poets citizens? Re: RealPoetik - touchy, longish
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Thanks, Tom Bell, for the letter from Gwendolyn Albert. This question - why American poetry seems to lack or avoid the "civic" - worth talking about. Will quickly draw forth answers from people based on their political rationale or work credentials (community organizer, radical activist, etc.). & can quickly descend into cacaphony. Maybe it has, paradoxically, only a personal meaning or answer, based on the individual writer's understanding of and real commitment to political participation.

The simple answer (to why...) is that American poetry reflects a basic situation of: suburbanization/balkanization/institutionalization/ privatization and other 'zations like that. People (including some poets) are involved with civic life through: 1)work, 2)voluntary service groups, 3)political parties [a distant 3rd, maybe].

But the answer is made more complicated by the present historical situation (political non-involvement; domination by professional pseudo-parties; balkanization) - AND by the whole issue of how poetry & art respond to political reality (if one can even say anything useful about that anyway).

Probably the real answer is that most of us have no concept of how to make democracy a reality in our own lives. Political action is disconnected from dormant ideals or visions of life. This is the true gap today. Has anyone seen Pasolini's film "Gospel According to St.Matthew"? Now there's a work of art about a poet-organizer if there ever was one. And in a sense, there has always been a dormant 3rd party of the kingdom of heaven (from the lunatic fringe to the Catholic Church...) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

871. Rachel Loden
Re: name gap and heart gap
Mon 31 Mar 1997

> gabber urgently about caesuras and lacunae

Oh, please. Years have passed since I've been on this list and we've never before talked about caesuras and lacunae, or really any of the bolts and wrenches of poesy. How terrible, how truly decadent that we should do so now. Give me a break. Speaking as somebody with intimate knowledge of what it's like to be on the receiving end of heavy state power, I pick my own battles and I pick them carefully. So I'm sure do others here. I don't feel the need to be harangued from some heroic ramparts.

Tell us about what's going on, Kent, but please don't imagine you can stand in judgment of our "silence."

Rachel L.

↑ Index

872. henry gould
Re: name gap and heart gap
Mon 31 Mar 1997

On Mon, 31 Mar 1997 05:17:17 -0800 Rachel Loden said: Give me a break. Speaking as somebody with intimate >knowledge of what it's like to be on the receiving end of heavy state >power, I pick my own battles and I pick them carefully. So I'm sure do >others here. I don't feel the need to be harangued from some heroic >ramparts.
>

This is also a relevant response to the "civic" thread from Tom Bell... - Henry G.

↑ Index

873. Mark Prejsnar
Re: name gap (fwd)
Mon 31 Mar 1997

One of the problems with finding a term, for the visual embodiment of a caesura, and similar typo-graphic instances, has to do with the involved nature of the medium and its techniques. I mean, placement of verse across physical space is both painterly and a vibrant form of mucial notation in U.S. originary attempts (from Whitman on)...Lisa's mention of a parallel ambiguity in the apprehension of painterly space is suggestive. And of course someone's already mentioned Duncan's intensity about how to understand lineation as a musical notation...As someone with a background of intensive musical training and performance experience, I've always believed the poem's surface had a strong element of performatory adumbration. I'm most comfortable with not dictating interpretive timing quite so rigorously, as Duncan; but the principle makes sense to me. Still, the one area of prosody lacking an intricate terminology, is the area involving visual placement as an involvement with sound and movement thru space. (--which may be a good thing..But there is still a lot of interesting theory to be done on this dimension of post-Cantos verse)

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

874. Mark Prejsnar
Re: name gap (fwd)
Mon 31 Mar 1997

The poetix of car model names, what could be more amerikan?? The reason Lacuna sounds like one, is the long-established pattern that Latin (and sometimes hispanoid)-sounding words, with those distinctive vowel endings, are considered classy in the right kind of way by U.S. auto marketers...Which is kind of interesting given that Hispanic and other Latin-derived cultures are not exactly looked on as classy and positive by most of contemporary U.S. captialist culture!!

Favorite car names for poets: the Stanza, and the Prelude.

Mark P.

On Fri, 28 Mar 1997, Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> Caesura strikes me as more of a sonic than visual term. I like lacuna (sounds like a new car, the Ford Lacuna) although it seems a bit fancy. I tend to use the term "white space" when describing those blanks.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

875. David Bromige
explication du texte, revised
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Revised definition of "bowering":

(1) Whether by Mr.Bowering or others, the scouring in a bowering-like manner of the mind, in the hope that something like Bowering at his best (pithy, amusing, unforgettable), will form in words;

(2) The attempt, failed, to do this.

db.

↑ Index

876. dbkk

Killian/Spicer and an appeal

Mon 31 Mar 1997

Dear Simon Schuchat, it's Kevin Killian, thanks for your remarks about my talk printed in the Church Newsletter. >I just want to say that Kevin Killian's piece "Faggot Vomit: Jack Spicer >vs. 'the Maidens'" in the most recent issue of the Poetry Project >newsletter is great.
>
>When will the Spicer bio be available?

I'm supposed to finish it by June 15th then send it in to Wesleyan. Lew Ellingham and I are racing against time as usual. The death in 1996 of the Canadian modernist Dorothy Livesay underlines this vividly (Livesay was very helpful to me and Lew at the very end of her extraordinary life.) Now, as so often in the past, I need the help of poetics list members. I'm writing now about the San Francisco events of November and December 1958 when Spicer, along with other San Francisco and Berkeley intellectuals and bohemians, joined the fight against the administration of San Francisco State to protest its refusal to let Langston Hughes read at the SF State Poetry Center, where he had been invited by its founder (Ruth Witt-Diamant), because of his "Communist" past. I'm sure I can't be the only one to have covered this episode, which has so many resonances (Cold War politics, black/white relations in avant-garde poetry, homosexuality and the left, San Francisco as nexus for radical/conservative politics, etc., etc.) but I've looked in all the likely places and can't find much coverage of it at all. Even the Hughes biographies I've looked at don't mention his visit to San Francisco. [To cut to the chase, Hughes was not allowed to read on campus by Dumke, president of State, but eventually wound up reading on a houseboat--oh the irony!--provided by sympathetic admirers and anti-anti-Communists] Can anyone suggest any material on this outside of contemporary newspaper coverage? If so thanks very much.

I'm always thanking you all and you always come through.

Kevin K.

↑ Index

877. maz881
re; name gap
Mon 31 Mar 1997

---

nico, could you make that re : n a little longer so we can scroll it up & down more. i like the animation. like in Rocky 1, where he & pauli are in the meat locker and he starts hitting the carcass saying there's gaps. bill

Date: Sat, 29 Mar 1997 23:17:41 -0800
From: nico vassilakis <[redacted]> Subject: Re: name gap

r e:namegapageman:e r
re :namegapageman: er
re: namegapageman :er
re:namegapage ma n:er
re:na megapage man:er
re:namega pageman :er
re:name gapag eman:er
re:nameg a pageman:er
re:namega p ageman:er
re:namegap ageman :er
re:namegapa geman: er
re:namegapag eman:e r
re:namega page man:er
re:namegapagem an:e r
re:namegapa gem an:er
re:namegapage man :er
re:namegapageman: er
re:namegapageman :er
re:namegapagema :er
re:namegapagem er
re:namegapag r
re:name :er
re:na n:er
re:n an:er
re: man:er
re:nam eman:er
re:na geman:er
re:nam ageman:er
re:name pageman:er
re:namega pageman:er

re:namegap ageman:er
renamegapag e man:er
re:namegapag eman:er
re:name gap ageman:er

↑ Index

878. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Getting Binoche / don't Sokohl
Mon 31 Mar 1997

---

re Mark W's point about boycott...

The most interesting noun yanked into being a verb, for me is: Barbados. This was the practice of sending "criminals" (in fact a large number political prisoners) to what were then rather harsh living conditions, in permenent exile on Barbados. Most infamous for this was that Lenin avant la lettre, Oliver Cromwell, who barbadosed thousands of rebelling Irish and militants of the factions to his left in the English revolution (levellers, diggers etc.) I love this word for its demonstration of the encoding of historical violence into language, the violative way the contingent facts of cultural history show us poets how to do poetry. (I wrote a fairly long poem which attempts to consist entirely of verbs, though there's lots of pitching on the black--a poem I still rather like; and of course barbados gets slipped in).

Mark P.

↑ Index

879. Rachel Loden
Binoched, bowered and bewildered
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Interesting, Mark P, about barbadosing. And I suppose we should not forget that it is possible, in this world, to be "Borked," however deservedly.

Rachel

↑ Index

880. Stephen Vincent
Re: explication du texte, revised
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Dear David,

Neither a Bowerer nor a Pithbender
once my Muse said unto me...

O well, I'm sure you need no such 'pure' advice!

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

881. Henry Gould
Re: explication du texte, revised
Mon 31 Mar 1997

---

the bower-bird is an exotic species habitationed somewhere in the South Pacific. The male builds an enormous cathedral-like "bower" out of trash, sea-drift, etc. & then does a little dance in front of it (long before this method was "invented" by modernists, collagists, etc.) in order to attract mates. The female often turns him down, & the immense bower of babel is abandoned. Some of us could learn a lesson in composition here. - (this is not Eric Blarnes)

TAR AIRS A RAT OR 2

this is a ravine
that is a navire drydocked (severe reverse) in Erivan

↑ Index

882. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Binoched, bowered and bewildered
Mon 31 Mar 1997

I forgot to add at the end of that post... the credit for info. on barbados as a verb, is to my favorite historian, Christopher Hill; an English socialist who has published about 12 or 14 brilliant books on the English revolution and civil war. His work is groundbreaking about the intersections of utopian consciousness and revolutionary fervor in that period, among the radical protestant sectaries, and others; and in general about the structure of social revolution in history. (Right-wing historians publish much these days about having "proven" him wrong, re his marxian interpretation of the Egnlish revolution as having to do with class and economics in addition to ideology and consciousness; they are dead dead wrong but that's another issue..) EP Thompson's great last book, Witness Against the Beast, about Blake, is a kind of homage to Hill's influence. All the above strongly recommended to anyone interested in politics, who doesn't know it..

On Mon, 31 Mar 1997, Rachel Loden wrote:

> Interesting, Mark P, about barbadosing. And I suppose we should not forget that it is possible, in this world, to be "Borked," however deservedly.
>
> Rachel

↑ Index

883. amato
denver conference...
Mon 31 Mar 1997

---

just to say that i'll be on my way in a few days to the upcoming denver conference on "the marriage of writers and critics," and i hope to see/meet some of you there...

best,

joe

↑ Index

884. Joseph Zitt
Re: Mind the gap
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Gwyn McVay wrote:
>
> The three-em dash is used for intentionally omitted names--you know, "In > the summer of 18-- we stayed at the Chateau V------." Don't most > typesetters make those internal line-gaps about three ems?
>
> Gwyn, squinting

Well, I mostly use the 3M dash when I'm diving for a Post-it note to write down poetic inspirations :-)

Joe, ducking

↑ Index

885. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Further Thoughts on the "Interior Indentation"
Mon 31 Mar 1997

> Equally fascinating to me is what goes on between the period and the capital. And things like the space between being asleep and being > awake, between day and twilight, twilight and night, night and morning, between liquid and gas, solid and liquid and so on....

Equally interesting too is how our minds process whole strings of sentences, or paragraphs, and so on, with these discontinuities between them. Is this a process of integration with differentiability defined term-by-term? The whole being a piecewise linear approximation of something. No doubt something incomplete. There is an infinity of possiblities in each continuum between sentences, gaps, etc. The lines/sentences themselves being nothing more than truncated series of finite number of terms. Serial poems born in the gaps between lines/sentences, so that rather than a seriality of poems end-to-end (cascades), there exists any number of multiplicatively propagating trees of possibilities.

Bill B.

↑ Index

886. jdhollo

BP's Question / gaps caesurae lacunae

Mon 31 Mar 1997

As a veteran user of the device, I vote for Robert Duncan's "articulated silence" quoted in Dan Featherston's post of 28 March:

"duncan's preface to _ground work: before the war_ figures caesurae as articulated silences, which is arguably a more varied measure of the _time_ of the poem than standard grammatical indicators (comma, period, etc.) provide: not the metronome's uniformity, but the body's 'flexible durations'."

"Non-metrical caesurae" _could_ be another (but even clumsier) term. Lacuna and gap do sound too negative, indentation too aggressively mechanical.

"Articulated silence(s)" may also cover the distinction Christopher Middleton makes in his _Ideas about Voice in Poetry_ (in _Pursuit of the Kingfisher, Manchester: Carcanet, 1983):

"[Yet] the inner ear is capable of an auditory complexity which exceeds almost any audible vocalizing: the latter tends to be reductive, if not falsifying, also it may straighten out shocks and distortions which, to the inner ear, are part of the real thing that is the voice in the text and the delight of the text. ... In performance, which should be the best instance, there occurs the falling away of mental entity from linguistic entity, or vice versa. The rift appears, gunfire and screams. ... The subtle differential harmonies of the text as voice, are these picked up by the ear alone? Possibly not. The reader's eyes do part of the listaning, do their part in identifying and selecting sound-patterns, in the presence or audition of which a delight is experienced ... " (asterisks supplied)

Anselm Hollo

↑ Index

887. Bob Grumman
Re: BP's Question / gaps caesurae lacunae
Mon 31 Mar 1997

[redacted] wrote:

> As a veteran user of the device, I vote for Robert Duncan's "articulated silence" quoted in Dan Featherston's post of 28 March

I, too like, "art iculated sile nce," but as
in straight English
, it would seem to applynot just to what I'm now calling "white caesurae" but other sorts of silences in poetry such as those made by indentations from left or right, and by . . . vertical indentations like

this. --Bob G

↑ Index

888. Bob Grumman
A Quick Minor Correction of Preceding Message
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Apologies, but I hit the Send button too soon. Here's what I meant to say:

[redacted] wrote:

"As a veteran user of the device, I vote for Robert Duncan's articulated silence" quoted in Dan Featherston's post of 28 March."

I, too like, "art
iculated sile nce," but
in straight English
, it would seem to apply not just to what I'm now calling "white caesurae" but other sorts of silences in poetry such as those made by indentations from left or right, and by . . . vertical indentations like

this. --Bob G

↑ Index

889. Dodie Bellamy
Small Press Traffic enters the electronic age
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Just a note to let you all know that Small Press Traffic now has e-mail--and that those of you who have Small Press Traffic business can now e-mail Small Press Traffic directly at this address (rather than my home address).

The one BIG exception: if you're doing a review for the next Traffic newsletter, please continue to write to my home address since Kevin is helping me on that project.

SPT also now has a website where Traffic reviews and info on upcoming events will be available. I'll notify you all about that once we upload some information to that site.

Thanks.

Dodie

_____

Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
766 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110 415/[redacted]

↑ Index

890. Steve Carll
Upcoming Canessa Park Readings
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Canessa Park Reading Series

April 1997

Monday April 14th @ 8 p.m.

Avery E. D. Burns
San Francisco

&

Ron Silliman
Paoli, PA

(Please Note the Date & Time)

Sunday April 20th @ 3 p.m.

Robert Grenier
Bolinas

&

Fanny Howe
San Diego

Sunday April 27th @ 3 p.m.

Michael Boughn
Toronto, Canada

Brian Lucas
San Francisco

Kristin Prevallet
Buffalo, N.Y.

*

Canessa Park Gallery
708 Montgomery St. (at Columbus)
Admission $5

Avery E. D. Burns s book Differing Senses of Motion came out on lyric& in 1996. Recent poems appear in First Intensity, Antenym, and Angle. He edits the magazine lyric&.

Ron Silliman s newest addition to the alphabet is Xing (Meow Press). Recent poems appear in XCurrent, Famous Reporter, and Proliferation. Ron feels partly responsible for the publication of Araki Yasusada s book of poems.

Robert Grenier s most recent book of poems is What I Believe - Transcriptions/Transpiring - Minnesota on O Books. Issue 1:24 of that: magazine contains recent poems, also Issue 2:1contains a talk on his recent work - r h y m m s.

Fanny Howe s recent books are The End (Littoral) and O Clock (Reality Street Editions). A new collection is due out from Greywolf in a few months. Poems appear in Grand Street, Conjunctions and Chain. She teaches at U.C. San Diego.

Michael Boughn srecent book is Iterations of the Diagonal on shuffaloff, also H.D.: A Bibliography 1905-1990 on Univ. Of Virginia. He has poems in Hambone, First Intensity, Phoebe, and the recent Gertrude Stein Awards for Innovative Poetry anthology.

Brian Lucas s samizdat Limber is just out. His poems have appeared in Mirage, lyric&, and Angle, a new magazine which he edits.

Kristin Prevallet s new book is Lead Glass and Poppy on Primative Publications. She co-edits the magazine apex of the M, a magazine in which her work appears as well as First Intensity, Mirage, and Sulfur.

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

891. Dave Zauhar
Re: denver conference...
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Hate to impose on you folks who are going (not just Joe A.), but I'd be grateful for postings -- however impressionisitc and quirky -- concerning the proceedings.

Hope it's as interesting as it should be

DZ

> just to say that i'll be on my way in a few days to the upcoming denver conference on "the marriage of writers and critics," and i hope to see/meet some of you there...
>
> best,
>
> joe

↑ Index

892. Jordan Davis
Kenneth Goldsmith / Carl Watson @ Poetry City
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Friday April 4
7 pm

Kenneth Goldsmith
natural-born compiler

and

Carl Watson
ancient boyscout

read from their various recently published works -- it's free -- we'll have their books -- it's at 5 Union Square West, NY on the 7th floor -- hope you can make it --

Jordan

↑ Index

893. Steven Marks
Re: A Quick Minor Correction of Preceding Message
Mon 31 Mar 1997

On Mon, 31 Mar 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:

> , it would seem to > apply not just to what I'm now calling "white caesurae"

white caesurae -- This gets my vote. Indicates both the visual and the breath gap in a term that seems to suggest a mythological creature.

Beware the white caesurae,
its whooshing nay, its wonky eye.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

894. hernry ghould
Re: A Quick Minor Correction of Preceding Message
Mon 31 Mar 1997

I think Moby might give it the flukes down. How about
"suspension"?

a sonnet with suspensions
(somewhere between lacunae caesurae & suspirae)

i.e. flying mattresses maitresses iron lava

or ore (the Name for this Fib relation)

Rib rire

(Sarah laughed) about J

Just harmonica Joe
just a suspension (Je est un jest uh)
:) = suspended +) +

- Hale-Bopp (what's in a name?)

↑ Index

895. Bob Grumman
A Technickal Readjustment
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Steven Marks wrote:

On Mon, 31 Mar 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:

> white caesurae -- This gets my vote. Indicates both the visual and the breath gap in a term that seems to suggest a mythological creature.
>
> Beware the white caesurae,
> its whooshing nay, its wonky eye.

Thanks much for the vote, Steven--but for some reason your bringing the mythological creature into it made me decide that the proper term really is "caesurae albae." (Just kidding--I think.)

↑ Index

896. Bob Grumman
Re: A Technickal Readjustment
Mon 31 Mar 1997

Looks like I'll be sending everything twice. Here's the correct version of my previous message:

Steven Marks wrote:

> white caesurae -- This gets my vote. Indicates both the visual and the breath gap in a term that seems to suggest a mythological creature.

> Beware the white caesurae,
> its whooshing nay, its wonky eye.

Thanks much for the vote, Steven--but for some reason your bringing the mythological creature into it made me decide that the proper term really is "caesurae albae." (Just kidding--I think.)

↑ Index

897. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: A Quick Minor Correction of Preceding Message

Tue 1 Apr 1997

---

hernry ghould wrote:
>
> I think Moby might give it the > flukes down. How about
> "suspension"?
>
> a sonnet with suspensions
> (somewhere between lacunae caesurae & suspirae)
>
> i.e. flying mattresses maitresses
> iron > lava
>
> or > ore (the Name > for this Fib relation)
>
> Rib rire
>
> (Sarah laughed) about J
>
> Just harmonica Joe
> just a suspension (Je est un jest uh)
> :) = suspended +) +
>
> - Hale-Bopp (what's in a name?)

just weight

in these paces oh replaces the uh uh of uh-oh

breathing space
a birth scene gap has a big percent

absence? graph it
I can't grasp sheep brain tag speech graphic base ten

Daniel Zimmerman

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

April 1997

990 messages · Tue 1 Apr 1997 – Thu 1 May 1997

On the fourth of April Charles Bernstein posted three sentences: Allen Ginsberg had been diagnosed with liver cancer, it was in the papers that morning, and everyone reading would be having the reaction he was having. “Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life”, he wrote. Ginsberg died the following evening. This list, which in fourteen months had let a comet, two aircraft, a bombing, an election, a cult and a woman on fire go past without comment, produced a hundred and six letters, and what it did with them is the most extraordinary thing in this archive.

Maria Damon moved first, the same afternoon, while he was still alive: “shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection” for Allen Ginsberg? And then, to a room already reaching for the past tense, the correction that does her enormous credit — could we not, she asked, talk about him as if he were already gone. Somebody else start, she said. Wendy Battin started. Her line was a question: “since death is so pornographic, where can they sell it”. Kent Johnson followed with willow leaves in a garden, a braille page of words; Daniel Zimmerman gave the wind as a simultaneous translation; Alan Sondheim gave the fifth line, which reads, in its entirety, “nothing has happened, no one has died”.

It was Sondheim who posted, hours later, that WCBS had just announced it. The renga was mid-composition. Nobody stopped. David Israel had by then appointed himself the thing’s editor, and what he was doing — I did not see it until I had read the month twice — was building the poem out of the list’s own mail. Not lines written for a renga: lines lifted from what people were actually posting, renumbered. Kent Johnson’s real message asking “Is anyone else out there crying too?” becomes line ten. Damon’s reply is eleven and twelve: not yet, just having a quiet time; “it’s raining outside, like it’s crying in my heart”. Pat Pritchett remembering a meal — “we were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon”, thinking how frail Allen looked — is fourteen.

Ten days later Rachel Loden posted a link to Marjorie Perloff’s new article in the Boston Review, on the Araki Yasusada affair: the Hiroshima survivor whose grieving, beautiful poems had moved everybody and who had never existed. It would be fascinating, Loden noted, “especially in present company”, which everyone understood, since the man most people believed had written Yasusada was on the list and had just supplied four lines of the Ginsberg renga. The room spent a fortnight on whether a poem by a man who was never there can be any good. It is a serious question. It had been answered upstairs, in the other thread, on the fifth.

Because Israel's renga runs to sixteen lines. Line five says nothing has happened and no one has died, and by the time it was numbered its author had already told the list otherwise. Line sixteen — the last anybody added, after which the poem stops — is Kenneth Goldsmith relaying that "Ginsberg's body is lying in state" at the Shambhala Center on West 22nd Street, and that Usenet advises you call first. That is the arc: a room proposing a poem of affection for a living man on the Friday afternoon and finishing it, on the Saturday, with an address and a telephone number. Israel saw it happening and put it in a parenthesis, and I have left his parenthesis where he set it: the death-announcement, he noted, "occurred mid-Renga".

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 990 in all.

WRITERS

([redacted]), John Norton 862
<[redacted]>, By Way Of BETH LEE SIMON… 7
Acgold01 257
Aerialedge 298, 471, 639, 852
Alexander, Charles 48, 77, 205, 267, 446, 447, 454, 543, 659, 660, 716
Alexander, Christopher 37, 220, 222, 235, 236, 313, 315, 318, 377, 378, 401, 406, 522, 523, 554, 558, 683, 783, 878
Amato 189, 346, 375, 391, 463, 467, 738
And, Miekal 101, 721
Ashton, Jennifer 316
Barbour, Douglas 6, 234, 434
Battin, Wendy 83, 84, 867
Bell, Thomas 331, 332, 444, 520, 521, 859
Bernstein, Charles 42, 68, 121, 180, 194, 247, 274, 277, 473, 793, 921, 956, 972, 989
Van den Beukel, Karlien 944
Bouchard, Daniel 246, 295, 380, 388, 394, 395, 799, 816
Boughn, Michael 218, 286, 369, 396, 456, 464, 536, 555, 565, 723, 839
Bowering, George 56, 92, 135, 188, 223, 258, 259, 361, 362, 363, 423, 488, 491, 500, 601, 632, 665, 708, 770, 771, 772, 773, 827, 828, 829, 830, 864, 865, 901, 902, 945
Bromige, David 5, 20, 100, 154, 163, 179, 193, 201, 212, 221, 226, 271, 322, 330, 435, 443, 501, 517, 585, 596, 611, 625, 633, 634, 640, 649, 677, 699, 701
Brown, Bil 18
Browne, Colin 809
Bruja 437
Bruno, Franklin 8
Cabri, Louis 347, 868, 916
Cadbury, Jethro 976, 980
Caddel, R I 879
Carll, Steve 17, 219, 353, 614, 800, 913
Cayley, John 170
Charssmith 176, 177, 866
Cheek, Cris 266, 352
Cheney, Don 76, 149, 404, 545, 752, 755, 756
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 44, 58, 164, 334, 453
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 472, 582, 813, 849, 889
Clippinger, David W. 731
Clubb, Issa 465
CONNER/LRC-CAHS, KYLE 420, 499, 797
Cope, Stephen 80
Corbin, Michael 112, 256, 359, 390, 449, 513, 680, 685
Crown, Kathleen 840
Curnow, Wystan 925, 928
Damon, Maria 82, 109, 116, 141, 181, 182, 183, 197, 242, 249, 251, 307, 308, 311, 339, 340, 341, 342, 354, 372, 373, 374, 458, 459, 460, 671, 672, 673, 674, 759, 788, 908, 951, 952, 953, 954
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 53, 155, 195, 196, 199, 203, 262, 358, 364, 450, 525, 652, 654, 658, 912
Davis, Jordan 21, 75, 192, 301, 392, 403, 441, 482, 484, 744, 745, 802, 817, 851, 924, 943
Day, Jean 46, 70, 757
Dbkk 1, 40, 41, 74, 210, 224, 244, 387, 397, 398, 421, 549, 561, 571, 720
Delville, Michel 873
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 897, 904
Douglas 160, 162, 739
Drake, Robert 846, 883
DS 30, 34, 297, 492, 589
Dunn, Susan E. 982
Edwards, Ken 483, 932, 985
Emerson, Jocelyn 960
Epstein, Andrew D 144
Felix, Joel 811
FOUST, GRAHAM W. 697
Franco, Michael 468, 510, 576
Free, George 338
G, Henry 151, 475, 613
Gallagher, Kristin 560, 686
Glazier, Loss 142, 156
Goldsmith, Kenneth 122, 172
Golumbia, David 604, 882
Gould, Henry 169, 184, 238, 302, 328, 379, 386, 457, 498, 503, 528, 529, 532, 537, 539, 547, 564, 617, 653, 668, 691, 693, 704, 726, 727, 728, 735, 815, 903, 936, 986
Grotjohn, Bob 25, 27
Grumman, Bob 10, 414, 637, 643, 860
Guest, Eliza McGrand- CVA 389, 439
Hansen, Jeff 186, 505, 542, 733, 845
Hardin, Rob 4, 99
Hehir, K.a. 174, 602
Henry 268, 269, 399, 400, 581, 742, 743, 754, 801, 804, 805, 923
Hertzberg, Fredrik 915
Hg 59, 940
Israel, David 28, 29, 51, 118, 120, 123, 124, 125, 128, 130, 495, 496, 533, 534, 583, 586, 719, 818, 831, 850, 955, 965
Israel, David R. 603, 623, 631, 655, 656, 657, 892, 893, 894, 899, 905, 906, 937, 947, 984

Jaeger, Peter 127, 577, 917, 920
Jarnot 272, 967
Jdhollo 202, 599, 837
Jenkins, Grant 132, 983
JOHNSON, KENT 2, 3, 60, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 69, 95, 102, 104, 206, 225, 229, 240, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 305, 306, 310, 355, 357, 461, 556, 597, 612, 636, 661, 669, 717
Joris, Pierre 19, 365, 425, 540, 600, 667, 725, 753, 791, 792, 959, 969, 973, 977, 978
KATHERINE, LYNES- 214, 384, 409, 511, 512, 760, 762, 765, 766, 767
Kellogg, David 239, 621, 626, 712, 746, 987
Kimmelman, Burt 147, 769
Kinsella, John 32, 33, 644, 975
Kubie, Rachel 442
Kuszai, Joel 45, 143, 469
Landers, Pete 158
LaPalma, Marina deBellagente 871, 872
Lazer, Hank 275, 376, 544, 606, 607, 812, 856
Lease, Joseph 575, 578, 580, 798
Leddy, Michael 167
Levin, Jonathan A 22
Levy, Herb 39, 106, 312, 349, 430, 524, 552, 553, 785, 790, 838, 949
Lewis, Joel 187, 990
List, Poetics 153, 429, 884, 885, 886
Loden, Rachel 13, 105, 228, 290, 426, 679, 729, 784, 821, 841, 877, 914
Long, Brent 718, 736, 741, 751
Losh, Elizabeth Mathews 869
Luigi 191
Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar, Bill 79
Magee, Michael 152, 254, 273, 393, 609, 690, 703, 724
Mainstream 260, 427, 428
Mandel, Tom 335, 432, 433, 875, 941, 942, 970, 971
MANN, CHRIS 209
Markotic, Nicole 598
Marks, Steven 12, 73, 148, 237, 448, 559, 563, 618, 628, 675, 931
Marsh, William 748, 853, 891
Maz881 207, 255
McGuire, Jerry 276, 508
McVay, Gwyn 24, 248, 348, 608, 624, 681, 876, 934, 957
Mead, Philip 629, 713
Mgk3k 52
Moriarty, Laura 11
Mourits, Bertram 436
Muratori, Fred 807
Nguyen, Hoa 293, 440, 519, 584
Nicoll, Hugh 777
Nielsen, Aldon L. 43, 91, 131, 165, 173, 253, 303, 651, 684, 705, 758, 779, 848, 890, 926, 938, 939, 981
Norris, Keith 317, 345, 413, 504, 506, 541, 966
Nuyopoman 16, 110, 111, 137, 287, 319, 320, 417, 419, 740
Orange, Thomas M. 292, 294
Palma, Christine 371
Perloff, Marjorie 150, 204
Peters, Carl Lynden 213, 535
Piombino/Simon 278, 314, 326, 381, 962
Pollet, Sylvester 23, 185, 230, 327, 382, 402, 546, 548, 550, 574, 592, 593, 645, 650, 694, 696, 698, 732, 734, 761, 763, 844, 948
Prejsnar, Mark 26, 161, 285, 462, 507, 567, 676, 678, 689, 700, 702, 803, 842, 843, 874, 974
Pritchett,Pat 117, 126, 171, 245, 252, 279, 324, 383, 478, 485, 557, 822, 919, 979, 988
Prod, William Burmeister 31, 38, 61, 208, 288, 289, 405, 562, 579, 814, 861, 900
Prone, T-Bone 157
Raea100900 688, 958
Regan, Matthias 407, 408, 410, 509, 566, 588, 795, 881, 918
Reiner, Christopher 78, 479
Reynolds, Rebecca 794
Roses, Field Of 241, 638, 898, 910
Rothenberg, Jerry 166, 178, 714
Rsillima 722, 963, 964
Russo, Linda V. 216, 270, 336, 337, 515, 516
Safdie, Joe 72, 438, 486, 487, 514, 573, 823, 922
Schaefer, P.Standard 217, 711
Schuster, Joshua N 190, 424
Schwerner, Armand 857
Scroggins, Mark W 616, 648
Shoemakers 14, 15, 134, 136, 175
SHURIN, AARON 494
Simon 103, 470, 796
Simon, Schuchat 138, 227, 418
Skjeveland, Erik 47
Smith, Dale 231, 243, 265, 367, 368, 370, 455, 538, 682, 730, 847, 933, 968
Sondheim, Alan Jen 57, 71, 85, 86, 88, 89, 107, 113, 114, 145, 198, 264, 304, 356, 422, 445, 474, 619, 630, 835
Sondheim, Alan Jennifer 895, 907, 909, 950
Sschu30844 146, 263, 300, 572, 662
Steinberg, Hugh 55, 291, 299, 452, 477, 587, 615, 635, 663, 664, 774, 836, 863, 929, 930, 961
Stroffolino, Chris 36, 232, 360, 896
Taciuch, Dean 325
Tangney, Shaunanne 824
Templeton, F.A. 605
Thompson, George 620
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 81, 344, 415, 416, 502, 526, 527, 530, 595, 646, 647, 778, 780,

781, 782, 832, 833, 927, 946
Traffic, Small Press 497, 825, 826
Tuma, Keith 476, 493, 551, 820
Uchman, Brenda Ellen 789
Vassilakis, Nico 139
Vincent, Stephen 9, 333, 451, 764, 776, 858
Wallace, Mark 431, 670, 737, 747, 749, 787
Ward, Diane Marie 233
Weiss, Mark 87, 115, 215, 250, 261, 296, 321, 323, 351, 366, 411, 412, 480, 481, 531, 568, 570, 594, 610, 687, 692, 695, 706, 707, 750, 768, 808, 810, 819, 854, 855, 887, 888
Weldon, Rebecca 627, 935
Welford, Gabrielle 200, 715, 880
West, Bobbie 343, 775
Wheeler, Susan 133, 159, 709
Whyte, Ryan 168, 641, 666
Yuri-g 385
Zamsky, Robert 211, 518
Zauhar, Dave 35, 309, 329, 350, 490, 569, 590, 622, 642, 806, 834
Zimmerman, Daniel 54, 90, 93, 94, 96, 97, 98, 466, 489, 591, 710, 870, 911
Zitt, Joseph 49, 50, 108, 119, 129, 140, 786

NAMES MENTIONED

Adams, Robert 17, 40, 44
Adorno, Theodor 271, 933
Ahearn, Barry 607
Albon, George 17, 40, 44, 219
Alice, Mary 890, 900
Allan, Don 201, 221, 227, 228, 230, 258, 270, 271, 282, 318, 322, 337, 348, 361, 378, 501, 779
Altieri, Charles 607, 856, 877
Americans, Asian 136, 153, 200, 584, 609, 610, 715, 779, 780, 848
Amerika, Mark 907
Amram, David 172, 175
Anderson, Laurie 815, 836, 890, 900
Andre, Michael 586, 604, 631
Andrews, Bruce 431, 462, 506, 972
Antin, David 374
Anton, Robert 680
Arbor, Ann 136, 143
Armantrout, Rae 78, 688, 698
Arnold, Bob 834, 848
Ashberry, John 201, 227, 228, 230, 258, 270, 282
Ashbery, John 33, 226, 607, 623, 807, 810, 844, 849, 855, 894
Ashley, Renee 349, 356, 557
Ashley, Robert 349, 356
Atlanta, Mark P. 26, 285, 311, 422, 462, 556, 567, 651, 676, 689, 702, 705, 713, 842, 843, 848, 884, 974
Augustine, Jane 598
Auster, Paul 962
Austin, Geer 49, 50, 108, 119, 129, 140, 644, 786, 826, 882
Baker, Mary 17, 913
Baker, Tony 879
Baraka, Amiri 183, 734, 840, 874, 967
Barnes, Diane 173
Barnett, Anthony 988
Barton, John 264, 349, 356
Baxter, Ted 848
Bechtel, Brent 281
Beckett, Samuel 513, 715, 871
Bellamy, Dodie 17, 800, 913
Belle, Cecelia 838, 959
Benjamin, Walter 17, 219, 740, 959
Benn, Walter 779, 820
Bergvall, Caroline 33, 932
Berkeley, Michael 11, 651, 779, 803, 848, 869, 888, 893, 963, 964, 965
Berlin, Irving 457, 901
Bernard, George 33, 173, 848
Bernard, Kenneth 78
Bernheimer, Alan 875
Bernstein, Emma 431, 462, 476, 481, 493, 506, 507, 531
Berrigan, Eddie 17, 745, 802, 826, 834, 851
Berrigan, Ted 21, 30, 642, 834
Bevington, Stan 188
Blackburn, Paul 365
Blake, William 93, 127, 147, 174, 176, 275, 327
Blanchot, Maurice 365, 425, 540, 600, 652, 667, 687, 725, 744, 753, 791, 792, 959, 969, 973, 977, 978, 987
Blarnes, Eric 328, 370, 379, 386, 399, 400, 409, 457, 539, 547, 550, 555, 613, 728, 804, 903, 986
Blaser, Robin 40, 44, 177, 365, 501, 546, 562, 570, 579
Blau, Rachel 190, 424
Bly, Robert 330, 366
Boughn, Mike 40, 44, 878
Bourdieu, Pierre 522
Bousquet, Marc 882
Bowles, Paul 172, 175, 371, 430
Boyer, Stephen 343, 350
BpNichol 6, 234, 242, 434, 638
Bradley, Tom 822
Brown, Ann 967
Brown, James 896
Bryant, Elizabeth 838
Buckley, Jeff 253
Bukowski, Charles 770, 841, 865
Bunting, Basil 977, 987
Burger, Mary 17, 913
Burger, Peter 17

Burke, Kenneth 607
Burnham, Clint 868
Burns, Avery 17, 40, 44, 217, 614
Burns, Elizabeth 183
Burroughs, William S. 136, 150, 153, 155, 167, 169, 172, 175, 472, 474
Burton, Philip 607
Butler, Judith 848
Byrne, David 495, 511
Caddel, Richard 19, 879, 977, 987
Caesar, Little 173
Cage, John 31, 34, 39, 49, 50, 61, 108, 119, 129, 140, 371, 430, 786
Cain, Stephen 917
Cameron, Sharon 779
Campbell, Jeremy 607
Carey, Steve 602
Carlos, William 848, 880
Carroll, Jim 967
Carson, Ann 603, 623, 628, 648
Carson, Margaret 623, 648
Carter, Mike 556, 609, 610, 675
Cassady, Neal 136, 155
Celan, Paul 6, 17, 59, 219, 353, 614, 800, 913
Chadwick, Lynn 913
Chaloner, David 605
Chaplin, Charlie 971, 979
Charyk, Linda 241, 638, 898, 899, 910, 911, 922
Charyn, Jerome 902, 919, 941
Chaucer, Geoffrey 990
Chomsky, Noam 461, 556, 567, 676
Cixous, Hélène 598, 603, 618, 644
Clark, Cheryl 187, 292
Clark, Tom 17
Clarke, Jack 489, 612
Clarke, John 565, 578, 723
Clemente, Francesco 35
Clinton, Bill 556, 609, 610
Clippinger, David W. 731
Cobain, Kurt 172, 175
Cockburn, Alexander 461, 556, 567
Cohen, Leonard 2
Cohn, Jim 143
Colby, Todd 967
Coleman, Victor 188, 771, 848
Coleman, Wanda 371, 430
Collins, Phil 895
Collom, Jack 822
Columbus, Christopher 151
Comments, Chicago 162
Conrad, Tony 733
Conte, Joseph 886
Coolidge, Clark 187
Cooper, Paula 602
Cornford, Adam 17, 913
Corso, Gregory 147, 153
Coultas, Brenda 16, 967
County, Mike 313, 633, 672, 805, 890, 900, 929
Crane, Lee 146
Crane, Margaret 1
Creeley, Robert 35, 143, 330, 366, 690, 724, 728, 967
Creely, Robert 201, 227, 228, 230, 258, 270, 282
Césaire, Aimé 211
Daniels, Chris 17, 40, 44, 219, 800, 913
Davidson, Harriet 840
Davie, Donald 330, 366
Davies, Alan 190, 424, 967
Davis, Leslie 17
Davis, Martin 848, 882, 936
Dawson, Nancy 19
Dennis, Michael 150, 217, 374, 862, 881, 887
Dewey, John 733
Dickinson, Emily 59, 607
Dickison, Steve 17, 913
Donahue, Joe 17
Donne, John 517, 559
Donovan, Thom 986
Duncan, Andrew 17, 33, 839, 878, 913, 932
Duncan, Robert 826, 839, 878
Dunn, Susan E. 982
Dylan, Bob 136, 172, 175, 229, 246, 328
Dylan, Michael 136, 226
Edgar, Chris 880
Edison, Thomas 489
Ehrenreich, Barbara 461, 556, 567
Eigner, Larry 78
Elena, Maria 539, 555
Eliot, Joe 17, 229, 246, 815
Eliot, T. S. 229, 246
Ellen, Mary 789
Emerson, Claudia 690, 800
England, Amy 153, 330, 347, 366, 367, 379, 381, 407, 455, 473, 480, 723, 810, 830, 844, 849, 855, 868, 916, 944, 980
Enslin, Ted 365, 722, 734
Evans, George 944
Evans, Steve 605, 944
Ewert, Mark 1
Featherston, Dan 78
Federman, Ray 166, 856, 877
Ferguson, Jesse 605, 644
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 19, 136, 151
Fielding, Kent 19, 967
Finkelstein, Norman 150, 607
Fischer, Norman 800
Fisher, Allen 605, 944, 976
Fisher, Harrison 651, 944
Fodaski, Elizabeth 278
Foley, Jack 800, 862
Folsom, Eric 46, 757

Forbes, John 932, 944, 975
Foster, Edward 17, 688, 698, 731
Foucault, Michel 670, 695
Friedman, Michael 822
Frost, Corey 330, 366
Frost, Robert 229, 246
Frym, Gloria 17, 800, 862
Fuller, Heather 471, 852
Gaines, Reg E. 840
Gander, Forrest 183
Ganick, Peter 37, 846
Garcia, Jerry 248
Garcia, Rodrigo 151, 212
Gardner, Drew 838
Garrison, Deborah 779
Gass, William 657
Genet, Jean 598
Gevirtz, Susan 78
Gilbert, Roger 976
Ginsberg, Allan 19, 60, 90, 91, 99, 118, 120, 123, 124, 125, 126, 128, 129, 131, 132, 134, 136, 137, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 147, 148, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 167, 169, 171, 194, 195, 197, 204, 212, 226, 229, 231, 240, 243, 245, 246, 252, 253, 254, 263, 265, 273, 275, 277, 280, 282, 285, 286, 291, 293, 296, 298, 302, 306, 307, 311, 312, 313, 322, 325, 326, 338, 339, 358, 368, 370, 385, 386, 387, 390, 419, 453, 472, 473, 474, 483, 501, 503, 522, 524, 534, 599, 627, 722, 734, 748, 752, 862, 868, 969
Ginsberg, Allen 11, 21, 30, 53, 60, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 71, 73, 76, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 90, 94, 95, 96, 97, 101, 104, 107, 108, 109, 112, 113, 116, 117, 118, 121, 123, 125, 127, 131, 134, 135, 136, 137, 140, 143, 146, 147, 151, 153, 157, 160, 162, 171, 172, 175, 187, 194, 195, 197, 204, 229, 246, 252, 253, 269, 286, 295, 302, 325, 328, 335, 342, 358, 368, 381, 387, 394, 395, 396, 411, 440, 472, 473, 483, 498, 503, 602, 627, 837, 840, 862, 969
Ginsbuerg, Alan 226, 326, 358, 364, 367, 379, 381, 387, 396, 398, 407, 416, 421, 455, 473, 480, 498, 503, 519, 524, 591
Ginsburg, Allen 158, 216
Gizzi, Peter 166, 913
Gladman, Renee 17, 913
Glancy, Diane 183, 374, 913
Glass, Philip 136
Gleason, Madeline 826
Gluck, Bob 800, 862
Gluck, Robert 17
Godfrey, John 967
Golding, Alan 183, 257, 659, 720, 856, 877
Goodman, Amy 441
Goodman, Craig 1
Gordon, Ruth 921
Gorey, Edward 348
Gould, Glenn 370, 400, 409, 457, 496, 503, 537, 682, 728, 804, 815
Grahn, Judy 856, 877
Gregg, Linda 153
Gregory, Jane 153
Grenier, Bob 17, 40, 44
Gunn, Thom 330, 366
Hale, Rob 17, 40, 44, 800, 913
Hall, Albert 483
Hall, Donald 607
Hall, Lind 7, 374
Halsey, Alan 985
Hamilton, Diana 138
Hammond, Paul 422
Hampson, Robert 976
Hampton, Fred 155, 167
Hancock, Carl 840
Hansen, Jefferson 184, 186
Haraway, Donna 41
Harris, Ken 227, 629, 779, 848
Harris, Max 629, 683, 689, 713
Harryman, Carla 989
Hartley, George 431
Harwood, Lee 879
Hatlen, Burt 607, 886
Hawking, Stephen 944
Hayden, Robert 848
Hayes, Jonathan 800
Heaney, Seamus 990
Hecht, Anthony 330, 365, 366
Hehir, Kevin 174, 178, 181, 602
Hejinian, Lyn 17, 70, 800, 913, 989
Henderson, David 137, 967
Hengst, Clifford 1
Henning, Barbara 967
Herbert, George 343, 350, 359, 417, 585, 629, 805
Heyward, Michael 689, 712, 713
Higgins, Dick 17
Hightower, Jim 461, 556, 567
Hill, Geoffrey 330, 366
Hill, Lindsay 117, 118
Hirsch, Edward 938
Hoffman, Daniel 365
Hollander, Ben 17, 366, 427
Hollander, John 330
Hollo, Anselm 117, 154, 429, 599
Holman, Bob 16, 110, 287, 319, 320, 417, 745, 959
Homer 874
Hoover, Edgar 779
Hoover, Paul 44, 58, 164, 800, 913
Howard, Richard 171, 330, 366, 461, 556, 567, 779, 848, 890, 900

Howe, Susan 158
Hughes, Langston 11, 848
Hughes, Ted 11, 848, 885
Huk, Romana 709
Hunt, Erica 42, 967
Hunter, Carrie 648
Ignatow, David 607
Indiana, Gary 7, 822, 882, 978, 984
Irby, Ken 576
Ireland, Lauren 956
Israel, David R. 118, 120, 123, 125, 603, 623, 631, 655, 656, 657, 892, 893, 894, 899, 905, 906, 937, 947, 952, 960, 978, 984
Israeli, Henry 880
Jackson, Jesse 322, 378, 607, 676, 849, 921, 967
Jacob, Max 848
Jarnot, Lisa 967
Jeffery, Mark 519, 571, 575, 589, 591
Jenkins, Margaret 862
Jennings, Peter 330, 366
Jillway, Jill 793
Johns, Jasper 316, 385
Johnson, Ron 17, 40, 44
Johnson, Samuel 979
Jones, Bob 17, 172, 175, 365, 848
Jones, Chris 977, 987
Jordan, June 21, 30, 482, 489, 493, 744, 748, 752, 753, 802, 817, 851, 891, 894
Joron, Andrew 17, 800, 913
Joyce, James 528, 529
Joyce, Michael 529, 598, 823, 862
Joyce, Trevor 260
Jung, Carl 631
Kalamaras, George 978, 984
Kaplan, Josef 779
Kaufman, Bob 141
Kelley, Mike 590, 662, 673
Kelly, Paul 365, 366
Kennedy, Kit 365, 857
Kerouac, Jack 21, 30, 31, 49, 136, 143, 172, 175, 229, 231, 240, 243, 246, 380, 472, 474, 599, 620, 837
Killian, Kevin 1, 11, 17, 40, 44, 224, 244, 247, 549, 720, 800, 913
Killian, Sean 11, 17, 800, 862
King, Martha 19, 967
Kinnell, Galway 365
Kirschenbaum, Matthew 882
Klein, Naomi 871
Knott, Bill 336, 442, 516
Koch, Kenneth 629, 640, 700
Kushner, Bill 967
Kyger, Joanne 826, 862
Lakoff, George 913
Lane, Russell 166
Larkin, Philip 330, 366
Larsen, David 848
Laurence, Paul 365
Lazar, Hank 834, 875
Leary, Timothy 136, 172, 175
Lenhart, Gary 967
Leonard, Tom 155, 167, 495, 496, 805, 835
Levertov, Denise 365, 607
Levinas, Emmanuel 942, 983
Lietz, Robert 807, 810, 822, 844, 849, 855
Lightman, Ira 944
Livesay, Dorothy 11
London, Frank 170, 173, 352, 422, 483, 689, 712, 713, 848, 916, 944, 976, 985, 990
Lookingbill, Colleen 17, 800
Lopez, Tony 33, 944
Lorber, Brendan 789, 799, 842, 869, 888
Lorca, Federico García 576
Louise, Bobbie 805
Mac Low, Jackson 49
Lowell, Amy 152, 366
Lowell, Robert 330
Luther, Martin 151
Lynch, David 818, 854
Lynch, Jessica 884
Magee, Mike 152, 737, 768
Mallarmé, Stéphane 565, 578
Malmude, Anna 924
Mandelstam, Osip 184, 617, 728, 800
Marie, Julie 233
Marlowe, Christopher 725, 743, 744
Marshall, Robert 882
Martin, Chris 37, 430, 540, 553, 905
Marvin, Lee 866
Marx, Karl 733, 735
Mason, Chris 838
Matlin, David 723
Maxwell, Susan 657
Mayer, Bernadette 21, 30, 608, 967
Maynard, James 944
McCaffery, Steve 17, 40, 44, 205, 497, 913
Mead, Taylor 192
Medina, Tony 192
Meltzer, David 17
Melville, Pierre 633, 672
Menefee, Sarah 17
Mengham, Rod 33, 985
Meredith, William 719
Merrill, James 330, 366
Merwin, W. S. 330, 366, 599, 894
Messerli, Douglas 257, 575, 739
Metcalf, Paul 849, 889
Michaels, Leonard 779, 820
Miller, Cynthia 205
Miller, David 427
Miller, Lee 165, 848
Miller, Paul 831, 850
Mills, Billy 260

Milne, Drew 932
Milosevich, Karla 1
Milton, John 127
Mitchell, Stephen 237, 848
Moody, Rick 468, 740
Moore, Marianne 14, 464, 485, 734, 777
Moore, Nicholas 25, 490, 491, 773, 777, 813, 868
Morgan, Bill 136
Morgan, Robin 136
Morris, Tim 745, 840, 871, 967
Morrison, Jim 957
Mossin, Andrew 494
Mottram, Eric 19
Moxley, Jennifer 605, 944
Mueller, Ursula 224, 862
Mulford, Wendy 932
Mullen, Harryette 19
Mura, David 681
Murphy, Michelle 800, 882, 913
Myles, Eileen 17, 40, 44, 800
Nader, Ralph 461, 556, 567, 609, 610
Napora, Joe 783, 813, 883
Nattell, Tom 959
Naylor, Paul 822, 856, 877
Nelson, Cary 840
Nelson, Gale 739, 800, 913
Nicole, Anna 18, 603, 618, 623
Nielsen, Aldon L. 43, 51, 54, 91, 118, 120, 123, 125, 131, 165, 173, 253, 303, 651, 684, 705, 758, 779, 848, 890, 926, 938, 939, 981
Nixon, Richard 675
Nolan, John 629
Norman, Peter 809, 843, 913
Noto, John 300, 913
Nowak, Mark 183, 734, 880
Nuttall, Jeff 19
O'Hara, Frank 144
O'Sullivan, Maggie 879
Obenzinger, Hilton 862
Ochs, Larry 913
Olsen, Charles 201, 227, 228, 230, 258, 270, 282
Olsen, Lance 271
Olson, Charles 365, 555, 564, 565, 578, 723, 779, 792, 816, 823, 826
Olson, John 838
Oppen, George 143, 230
Orange, Thomas M. 292, 294
Owen, Maureen 802, 817, 967
Pacific, Asian 77, 87, 150, 210, 292, 697, 715
Padgett, Ron 642
Palmer, Michael 739, 834, 856, 877
Park, Louis 186
Parker, Charlie 172, 175
Paterson, Don 873
Paterson, William 62, 90, 93, 873
Patterson, Ian 33, 490, 605
Pearson, Ted 989
Perelman, Bob 78, 152, 190, 424, 431, 462, 463, 467, 476, 481, 484, 492, 493, 500, 506, 507, 531, 551, 595, 651, 659, 678, 720, 963
Perkins, Charlotte 890, 900
Perry, David 849
Pessoa, Fernando 219
Pettet, Simon 17, 397
Phillip, Andrew 967
Phillips, Malcolm 217
Phipps, Wanda 598
Piombino, Nick 179, 214, 217, 278, 314, 326, 358, 381, 387, 962, 967
Plimpton, George 485
Podhoretz, Norman 472
Polkinhorn, Harry 800
Porter, Anne 722, 734
Porter, Peter 33
Pound, Scott 226, 516, 607, 682
Powell, Colin 971, 979
Powell, Douglas 17, 40, 44, 779, 800, 913
Presjnar, Mark 461, 556, 567
Prevallet, Kristin 17, 40, 44, 826, 913
Price, Michael 17, 800, 826
Di Prima, Diane 474, 620, 837, 862
Prince, Richard 314, 642, 848
Pritchett, Patrick 117, 118, 126, 171, 245, 252, 279, 324, 383, 478, 485, 557, 822, 919, 979, 988
Prynne, J. H. 33, 644
Quartermain, Peter 607
Rakosi, Carl 17, 134, 862
Randall, Karen 838
Ratcliffe, Stephen 78
Raworth, Tom 158, 970
Reagan, Nancy 143, 229, 246, 252, 522
Reed, John 629
Reed, Lou 967
Reed, Pat 17, 219, 913
Regan, Max 561
Reid, Jamie 153
Retallack, Joan 471, 875, 892
Rexroth, Kenneth 187
Reyes, Louis 840
Ribot, Marc 217
Rice, Doug 4
Rich, Adrienne 800
Richards, Brian 848
Riding, Laura 921
Riley, John 551
Riley, Peter 605
Rimbaud, Dee 143, 714
Robbins, Bruce 404
Robins, Maureen 278, 314

Robinson, Elizabeth 17, 40, 44, 219
Robinson, Kit 800, 875, 913
Robinson, Mary 219, 805, 848, 913
Rockwell, Norman 843
Roediger, David 779
Rollman, Michelle 1
Rosenberg, Jim 170, 427
Ross, Andrew 622
Ross, Diana 920
Rotenberg, Tina 17, 913
Rothenberg, Jerome 178, 181, 714
Rothschild, Douglas 745, 967
Safire, William 955
Sanchez, Jorge 173, 880
Sanders, Jay 18, 890, 900, 959, 967
Saper, Craig 866
Sappho 623, 990
Sartre, Paul 187
Savage, Michael 779
Scalapino, Leslie 471, 599, 800, 838, 913
Schelling, Andrew 154, 599, 722, 734
Schmidt, Paul 967
Schneeman, George 967
Schultz, Susan 33, 58, 78, 431, 607
Schuster, Josh 190, 424
Schuyler, James 921
Schwartz, Judy 44
Sedaris, David 40, 44
Selby, Spencer 17, 783, 800, 813, 913
Selland, Eric 17, 219, 800
Shakespeare, William 517, 623, 903
Shapiro, David 967
Sheerman, Lucy 944
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 127, 371, 430, 882
Shere, Charles 964
Shively, Charles 420
Shoemaker, Steve 14, 15, 25, 134, 175, 607
Sikelianos, Eleni 967
Silliman, Ron 17, 40, 44, 187, 461, 529, 556, 567, 722, 734, 875, 913, 963, 964
Simon, Greg 7, 11, 278, 314, 326, 358, 381, 387, 421, 524, 962
Simpson, Bennett 153, 330, 366, 414
Simpson, Louis 607
Sinclair, John 33
Sloan, Margaret 17, 913
Smith, Rod 639, 642
Smith, Tracy K. 1, 136, 280, 281, 324, 607, 826, 848
Snyder, Gary 60, 90, 125, 133, 281, 310, 331, 862
Snyder, Rick 102, 125, 281, 305, 310, 322, 378, 472, 474, 862, 867, 908 Sokal, Alan 43, 54, 621, 622, 626, 669, 746
Solomon, Laura 136, 183
Spandrift, Jack 269, 289, 302, 328, 400, 409, 457, 539, 547, 550, 555, 579, 581, 593, 613, 653, 728, 804, 923
Sparrow, John 967
Spicer, Jack 11, 322, 378, 443, 549, 722, 734, 748, 752, 814, 826
Spinelli, Martin 430, 989
Squires, Geoffrey 260
Stadler, Matthew 210
Stalin, Joseph 321, 323, 556, 676, 728
Stanford, Frank 718, 721
Stanley, George 153, 901
Stanley, Jared 74, 715, 774
Stefans, Kim 441
Stein, Suzanne 16, 465, 800
Stern, Gerald 607
Stevens, Wallace 19, 59
Stewart, Christine 838
Stewart, Susan 629
Stipe, Michael 136
Strickland, Stephanie 42
Strummer, Joe 522
Sukenick, Ron 166
Sullivan, Gary 986
Sutherland, Keston 924
Sward, Robert 365
Swensen, Cole 150
Taggart, John 607, 812, 834
Tagliabue, John 151
Tardos, Anne 722, 734, 795
Taylor, Elizabeth 1
Taylor, Jesse 469
Templeton, Fiona 605, 644, 944
Texas, Irving 49, 50, 108, 119, 129, 140, 540, 786, 826, 882, 937, 948, 952, 960
Thilleman, Tod 78
Thomas, Dylan 229, 246, 325, 362, 485, 540
Tills, Steve 800
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 63, 64, 65, 81, 82, 86, 94, 96, 97, 344, 415, 416, 502, 519, 526, 527, 530, 571, 575, 584, 589, 591, 595, 646, 647, 674, 778, 780, 781, 782, 832, 833, 884, 885, 927, 946
Tipton, John 857
Toscano, Rodrigo 913
Tranter, John 33, 605, 944
Tribune, Chicago 789
Tubman, Harriet 848
Upton, Lawrence 427, 428, 458, 976, 980
Valery, Paul 418
Vangelisti, Paul 217
Vendler, Helen 607
Vidal, Pierre 880
Violi, Paul 967
Virilio, Paul 591
Wakoski, Diane 143
Waldman, Anne 154, 338, 599, 837, 862, 922, 967
Waldman, Ken 338, 599
Waldo, Ralph 800

Waldrop, Keith 356
Walker, Alice 857
Wallace, Sara 848, 857
Walsh, Catherine 260
Warhol, Andy 35
Warner, Jim 779
Warren, Jim 875
Washington, Harold 137, 147, 229, 245, 246, 471, 701, 709, 758, 772, 831, 848, 852, 857, 890, 900, 918, 990
Watson, Sasha 75
Watten, Barrett 17, 40, 44, 46, 70, 626, 739, 757, 913
Weber, Charles 787, 805
Weinberger, Eliot 612
Weiners, John 228, 230
Welish, Marjorie 967
Whalen, Philip 472, 474, 599
Whiting, John 19, 969
Whitman, Walt 59, 127, 143, 172, 175, 187, 275, 862
Wieners, John 35, 190, 210, 360, 420, 826
Wilbur, Richard 330, 366
Wilkinson, Joshua 173
Williams, Tony 143, 153, 169, 422, 540, 553, 607, 848
Williams, William Carlos 153, 155, 167
Willis, Elizabeth 17, 40, 44, 58, 166, 497, 890, 900, 913
Wills, George 226, 326, 358, 364, 367, 379, 381, 387, 396, 398, 407, 416, 421, 455, 473, 480, 498, 503, 508, 519, 524, 591
Wood, Tim 128, 129
Wordsworth, William 134
Wright, James 330, 366, 867, 908
Yamanaka, Ann 166
Yau, John 967
Zorn, John 172, 175
Zukofsky, Louis 143, 365, 607
Zukofsky, Paul 886

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 11, 26, 265, 280, 285, 293, 296, 311, 317, 334, 341, 351, 419, 453, 462, 533, 556, 567, 676, 685, 686, 692, 702, 768, 779, 789, 882, 918, 967
Aesthetics 12, 59, 143, 256, 367, 379, 381, 407, 422, 455, 480, 556, 639, 642, 848, 881, 887, 921
African American poetry 779, 789, 848, 890, 900
Anthologies 60, 90, 143, 187, 201, 221, 227, 228, 230, 258, 270, 282, 318, 322, 330, 347, 361, 366, 371, 378, 414, 430, 501, 739, 761, 800, 829, 848, 921, 944
Anti-Semitism 692
Appropriation 16, 52, 104, 128, 130, 137, 140, 189, 222, 229, 246, 265, 280, 295, 298, 321, 323, 325, 368, 394, 395, 411, 440, 451, 454, 499, 538, 584, 612, 646, 674, 768, 779, 780, 872, 969, 976
Archives and libraries 78, 143, 185, 216, 226, 335, 342, 442, 516, 623, 651, 776, 783, 793, 807, 810, 813, 840, 844, 849, 855, 866, 885, 886, 890, 900, 921, 977, 987
Autobiography 390, 412, 420, 449, 550, 642, 779, 834, 848
Avant-garde 11, 60, 90, 143, 462, 503, 529, 556, 629, 678, 683, 689, 713
Beat generation 136, 143, 155, 167, 172, 175
Beauty 117, 153, 217
Biography 11, 540, 544, 553, 572, 590, 642, 662, 673, 818, 834, 848, 854, 890, 900
Black Mountain 516
Book announcements 37, 46, 48, 165, 220, 222, 235, 236, 281, 313, 315, 318, 377, 378, 401, 406, 471, 489, 515, 522, 523, 529, 554, 558, 607, 618, 683, 689, 713, 716, 800, 982
Bookstores 44, 58, 143, 151, 195, 204, 623, 962, 982
Calls for submissions 43, 374, 525, 848, 884
Capitalism 2, 9, 12, 226, 273, 281, 313, 556, 560, 670, 676, 686, 690, 695, 699, 730, 749, 751, 754, 779, 787, 805, 880
Censorship 226, 250, 261, 680, 861, 969, 973
Cities 55, 143, 153, 168, 299, 314, 374, 384, 408, 455, 480, 633, 666, 672, 780, 789, 799, 808, 819, 869, 880, 888, 909, 913, 937, 948, 952, 960
Class 250, 556, 567, 686, 842, 880
Close reading 374
Collage and montage 410
Conferences and festivals 37, 41, 43, 51, 54, 59, 60, 62, 90, 92, 93, 140, 146, 147, 150, 153, 165, 171, 173, 189, 211, 216, 217, 222, 224, 236, 260, 374, 539, 555, 605, 651, 720, 779, 801, 803, 840, 848, 884, 886, 944, 954, 963, 967, 975, 976, 982, 985
Copyright and permissions 123, 129, 160, 162, 715, 723, 890, 900, 950, 976
Craft 222, 990
Creative writing pedagogy 143, 189, 912
Dada 394, 395, 411, 435, 486, 866
Deconstruction 431, 529, 571, 575, 589, 647
Difficulty 143, 229, 246, 276, 483, 778, 793, 848
Digital archives 122
Disability 715, 882, 912
Dreams 16, 17, 80, 114, 132, 143, 456, 478, 502, 510, 576, 619, 627, 664, 671, 675, 899, 913, 942
Ecology and ecopoetics 738, 764, 918
Editing 200, 359, 414, 422, 439, 621, 793, 818, 854

Electronic poetry and hypertext 17, 78, 108, 119, 125, 128, 129, 142, 156, 170, 219, 238, 353, 430, 431, 465, 614, 670, 695, 737, 747, 749, 768, 787, 793, 800, 818, 854, 913, 989
Elegy 115, 144, 516, 534, 543
Empire and imperialism 292, 310, 556, 880
Epic 169, 936
Epistemology 526, 538, 584, 646, 674, 780, 978, 984
Erasure 780
Ethics 281
Experimental poetry 607, 846, 933
Fascism 226, 368, 370, 386, 423, 556, 652, 653, 656, 664, 667, 671, 675, 680, 682, 687, 704, 714, 733
Feminism 189, 222, 344, 369, 415, 525, 529, 546, 670, 695, 912, 975
Film 16, 17, 173, 229, 246, 374, 422, 582, 585, 586, 604, 631, 715, 779, 826, 843, 848, 913
Fluxus 866
Formalism 330, 366, 471, 824, 913, 933
Free speech 872, 969
Futurism 143
Gender 4, 41, 141, 250, 525, 575, 589, 591, 647, 872, 967
Globalization 525, 560, 779
Grants and funding 2, 125, 132, 240, 265, 280, 422, 561, 627, 641, 686, 715, 857, 983
Haiku 53, 63, 64, 65, 67, 69, 81, 82, 84, 86, 88, 89, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 108, 109, 118, 119, 120, 123, 125, 128, 142, 332, 823, 853, 860, 870
Harlem Renaissance 890, 900
Humour and satire 43, 51, 54, 76, 115, 134, 149, 187, 222, 313, 388, 463, 471, 528, 604, 640, 668, 678, 700, 801, 818, 831, 854, 922, 937, 948, 952, 960
Identity politics 189, 476, 481, 507, 531, 693, 706
Ideology 431, 462, 505, 554, 670, 682, 693, 695, 703, 704, 706, 733, 735, 768, 868, 928, 930
Improvisation 229, 246, 250, 733, 823
Indigenous and Native poetics 173
Interviews 3, 4, 39, 50, 61, 173, 184, 186, 276, 302, 392, 400, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 409, 410, 418, 425, 430, 434, 438, 439, 445, 446, 448, 452, 457, 470, 495, 511, 540, 553, 623, 779, 793, 880, 889
Israel and Palestine 28, 29, 51, 104, 118, 120, 123, 124, 125, 128, 129, 130, 495, 496, 512, 533, 534, 548, 554, 563, 569, 574, 583, 586, 594, 603, 604, 620, 623, 631, 655, 656, 657, 719, 760, 818, 831, 837, 850, 880, 892, 893, 894, 899, 905, 906, 922, 937, 947, 948, 952, 955, 960, 965, 978, 984
Jewish poetics 463, 779, 990
Language poetry 199, 431, 462, 506, 529, 800, 820, 913, 925, 944, 972
Latino and Latin American poetry 848, 862, 880
Letters and correspondence 156, 295, 298, 368, 388, 394, 395, 411, 440, 543, 912
List moderation 52, 217, 859, 869, 880, 888
Little magazines 17, 32, 78, 143, 170, 183, 200, 229, 246, 329, 340, 353, 436, 438, 448, 452, 460, 489, 507, 519, 526, 531, 552, 557, 591, 607, 635, 657, 678, 685, 692, 705, 789, 793, 818, 826, 854, 868, 893, 944, 978, 984, 990
Lyric poetry 134, 147, 253, 276, 486, 601, 678, 728, 730, 867, 893, 908, 933
Marxism 506, 522, 561
Memory 91, 115, 118, 125, 132, 134, 140, 143, 147, 150, 285, 311, 331, 371, 430, 620, 628, 769, 818, 854, 955, 965
MFA programs 990
Modernism 11, 41, 59, 422, 431, 529, 607, 629, 683, 689, 713, 868
Mourning and loss 41, 110, 115, 116, 118, 137, 142, 156, 161, 170, 197, 202, 245, 324, 326, 367, 381, 427, 434, 534, 543, 554, 716, 793, 808, 819, 989
Multiculturalism 374
Music and poetry 9, 11, 12, 16, 17, 21, 30, 31, 42, 49, 121, 131, 134, 135, 136, 141, 143, 165, 172, 175, 205, 229, 231, 240, 243, 244, 246, 247, 250, 374, 407, 425, 430, 447, 451, 454, 455, 472, 473, 474, 480, 486, 490, 498, 503, 540, 607, 739, 753, 800, 815, 864, 867, 872, 873, 876, 891, 893, 908, 913, 944, 964
Nationalism 482, 525, 552, 557, 880
Nature 114, 115, 160, 162, 191, 215, 219, 220, 422, 525, 528, 542, 577, 583, 592, 623, 668, 699, 779, 938
Negativity and refusal 11
New Formalism 933
New York School 944
Obituary and memorial 59, 66, 85, 107, 112, 118, 120, 123, 125, 155, 167, 229, 246, 247, 309, 312, 371, 430, 510, 549, 793, 818, 854
Ontology 913
Performance and the poetry reading 17, 40, 44, 134, 136, 205, 260, 276, 303, 371, 430, 468, 519, 526, 591, 800, 893, 944, 959
Phenomenology 304, 666, 835
Philosophy 43, 54, 134, 213, 472, 474, 519, 551, 552, 557, 565, 578, 591, 598, 607, 656, 670, 693, 695, 703, 706, 730, 737, 742, 768, 837, 915, 921, 933, 944, 962, 978, 984

Place and region 198, 422, 913, 975
Poet laureate 136
Poetics 11, 17, 19, 36, 46, 48, 60, 63, 64, 65, 66, 69, 70, 78, 86, 88, 90, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 104, 114, 142, 143, 153, 170, 183, 186, 203, 206, 222, 225, 229, 234, 240, 242, 245, 252, 263, 279, 280, 282, 283, 285, 295, 304, 306, 311, 313, 319, 339, 346, 355, 357, 368, 374, 383, 388, 394, 395, 411, 429, 440, 441, 463, 476, 481, 482, 485, 491, 506, 507, 508, 513, 522, 531, 534, 540, 557, 577, 583, 592, 599, 607, 620, 716, 720, 739, 756, 793, 822, 825, 831, 835, 837, 845, 847, 850, 861, 869, 872, 884, 885, 886, 888, 896, 903, 917, 919, 933, 944, 955, 956, 967, 978, 979, 982, 984
Politics and poetry 231, 243, 374, 426, 621
Post-structuralism 781, 978, 984
Postmodernism 59, 422, 431, 529, 607
Print vs. digital 136, 181, 261, 425, 431, 449, 451, 534, 604, 623, 628, 644, 678, 680, 716, 744, 768, 789, 917, 921
Prizes and awards 136, 173, 224, 345, 354, 463, 607, 789, 867, 891, 894, 908, 990
Prose poem 17
Prosody and meter 613, 725, 743, 744
Psychoanalysis 389, 577, 583, 592, 670, 695
Queer poetics 11, 41, 136, 153, 160, 162, 254, 309, 417, 422, 465, 473, 503, 779, 800, 848, 872, 952, 960
Race and poetry 160, 162, 293, 519, 526, 538, 552, 557, 561, 584, 591, 609, 610, 646, 651, 674, 685, 692, 693, 706, 730, 737, 742, 749, 768, 778, 779, 780, 833
Reading announcements 17, 35, 152, 199, 203, 206, 303, 305, 602, 774, 851, 944, 972, 982, 985, 986
Religion and the sacred 60, 90, 104, 130, 131, 132, 133, 136, 151, 153, 160, 162, 178, 181, 200, 321, 323, 325, 362, 421, 451, 472, 474, 499, 524, 668, 714, 723, 742, 768, 779, 826, 837, 882, 917, 962
Representation 173, 218, 529, 779, 831, 848
Reviewing and criticism 37, 59, 99, 117, 143, 238, 289, 304, 313, 420, 422, 493, 498, 504, 529, 607, 612, 627, 628, 629, 646, 648, 653, 656, 664, 668, 669, 671, 674, 675, 680, 713, 739, 777, 793, 848, 850, 889, 912, 921, 956, 990
Revision 143, 151, 439, 678, 701, 845, 847, 861
Romanticism 733, 768
San Francisco Renaissance 826
Science 59, 153, 290, 693, 706, 737, 768, 895, 913
Semiotics 928, 930
Sestina 292
Small press publishing 1, 173, 186, 497, 722, 734, 757, 793, 825, 826, 913, 917, 920, 959, 964, 990
Software and code 371, 430, 479, 520, 533, 545, 950, 969
Sonnet 17
Sound poetry 122
Structuralism 735, 781, 978, 984
Subjectivity 173, 281, 390, 412, 449, 531, 580, 634, 666, 779, 793, 821, 823, 848, 944, 973, 983
Sublime 93, 822, 913
Surrealism 47, 143, 147, 629, 920
Terrorism 880
The academy 6, 7, 32, 42, 47, 52, 143, 151, 152, 160, 162, 165, 166, 189, 234, 239, 242, 260, 270, 282, 287, 303, 316, 335, 342, 371, 374, 377, 383, 385, 390, 407, 408, 410, 413, 422, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 455, 459, 460, 462, 463, 466, 480, 489, 507, 515, 525, 531, 540, 556, 567, 588, 596, 598, 600, 603, 607, 621, 623, 626, 627, 629, 651, 680, 712, 713, 746, 777, 779, 793, 807, 810, 831, 844, 848, 849, 855, 866, 867, 873, 875, 879, 881, 882, 884, 887, 890, 900, 908, 912, 921, 941, 942, 959, 970, 971, 972, 976, 977, 978, 979, 982, 984, 987, 990
The body 114, 212, 415, 598, 646, 674, 779, 793, 850
The canon 143, 313, 371, 430
The Gulf War 153, 975
The Holocaust 153
The internet 125, 170, 260, 325, 327, 371, 404, 422, 426, 430, 621, 628, 716, 944, 955, 982, 986, 990
The line 430, 479, 509, 520, 533, 545, 793, 918, 989
The listserv 26, 27, 41, 52, 91, 117, 118, 153, 154, 179, 184, 189, 202, 214, 222, 234, 242, 270, 271, 275, 282, 293, 299, 310, 314, 322, 323, 325, 335, 342, 368, 384, 388, 408, 481, 493, 507, 523, 524, 531, 540, 542, 544, 553, 561, 583, 594, 607, 608, 618, 640, 649, 655, 669, 700, 717, 719, 721, 734, 793, 831, 845, 847, 850, 856, 861, 873, 874, 877, 881, 885, 886, 887, 933, 955, 956, 969, 971, 979
The New Sentence 925
Theatre 1, 17, 137, 229, 246, 422, 495, 605, 825, 826, 857, 881, 887, 893, 936, 959
Torture and Abu Ghraib 722, 734, 748, 752
Translation 16, 65, 66, 85, 86, 96, 97, 118, 120, 123, 125, 324, 346, 374, 404, 412, 449, 540, 585, 586, 604, 623, 625, 627, 728, 800, 815, 869, 879, 880, 888, 944, 975, 985

Vietnam 136, 326, 516, 715
Visual and concrete poetry 304, 866, 976
Visual art 1, 160, 162, 166, 173, 205, 267, 278, 314, 371, 374, 430, 462, 471, 771, 826, 866, 913, 916, 975, 986
Women's writing 431

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 990 in all.

1 APR 1997

1. dbkk — "The Schwimmer Effect"
2. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Your drug supply, Commander J
3. KENT JOHNSON — FC2 info
4. Rob Hardin — BIB/Doug Rice/Man Writes Woman (or possibly not)
5. David Bromige — doug rice & the other fella
6. Douglas Barbour — Re: Pierre Joris & Kent Johnson
7. by way of BETH LEE SIMON <[redacted]>" <[redacted]> — las...
8. Franklin Bruno — white caesura
9. Stephen Vincent — Re: BP's Question / gaps caesurae lacunae
10. Bob Grumman — The color of Caesurae
11. Laura Moriarty — Langston Hughes at the Poetry Center
12. Steven Marks — Politics at the Gap
13. Rachel Loden — heart's lacunae
14. shoemakers — Re: name gap (fwd)
15. shoemakers — Re: heart's lacunae

2 APR 1997

16. nuyopoman — Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
17. Steve Carll — catching up on S.F. readings
18. Bil Brown — Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
19. Pierre Joris — [Fwd: radical poetics]
20. David Bromige — doug rice & others (came back as failed mail due to a "missing routing file...
21. Jordan Davis — Ah
22. Jonathan A Levin — Re: name gap (fwd)
23. Sylvester Pollet — Re: heart's lacunae
24. Gwyn McVay — Re: name gap (fwd)
25. Bob Grotjohn — Re: name gap (fwd)
26. Mark Prejsnar — Burma Needs Your Land! (fwd)
27. Bob Grotjohn — Re: name gap (fwd)
28. David Israel — Re: white caesura
29. David Israel — Subject: heart's lacunae
30. DS — Re: Ah
31. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Ah
32. John Kinsella — Salt
33. John Kinsella — P.S. Salt
34. DS — Re: Ah
35. Dave Zauhar — Creeley and Wieners at the Warhol

3 APR 1997

36. Chris Stroffolino — Re: POETICS In
37. Christopher Alexander — n/formation 1.1
38. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Ah
39. Herb Levy — Re: Ah
40. dbkk — Re: catching up on S.F. readings
41. dbkk — elephant(itis)
42. Charles Bernstein — Erica Hunt & Marty Erlich at Brandeis
43. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: elephant(itis)
44. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: catching up on S.F. readings
45. Joel Kuszai — Notice: Change of Address
46. Jean Day — Re: POETICS Digest - 1 Apr 1997 to 2 Apr 1997

47. Erik Skjeveland — Bukowski's splash
48. Charles Alexander — Re: POETICS Digest - 1 Apr 1997 to 2 Apr 1997
49. Joseph Zitt — Re: Ah
50. Joseph Zitt — Re: Ah
51. David Israel — Re: elephant(itis)

4 APR 1997

52. mgk3k — new e-list for MLA members
53. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Allen Ginsberg
54. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: elephant(itis)
55. Hugh Steinberg — Re: elephant(itis)
56. George Bowering — Re: elephant(itis)
57. Alan Jen Sondheim — The Mess or Wound
58. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: catching up on S.F. readings
59. hg — more soapbox BLASTS
60. KENT JOHNSON — Allen Ginsberg's death
61. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Ah
62. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg's death
63. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg
64. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg
65. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg
66. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg
67. KENT JOHNSON — renga
68. Charles Bernstein — Allen Ginsberg
69. KENT JOHNSON — Re: renga
70. Jean Day — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Apr 1997 to 3 Apr 1997
71. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Allen Ginsberg
72. Joe Safdie — Re: Time Change
73. Steven Marks — Re: Allen Ginsberg
74. dbkk — Re: Time Change
75. Jordan Davis — Remindah
76. Don Cheney — Allen Ginsberg
77. Charles Alexander — Re: Time Change
78. Christopher Reiner — Witz
79. Bill Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar — Time Change
80. Stephen Cope — Re: Allen Ginsberg
81. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Allen Ginsberg
82. Maria Damon — Re: Allen Ginsberg
83. Wendy Battin — Re: Allen Ginsberg
84. Wendy Battin — Re: Allen Ginsberg
85. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Allen Ginsberg
86. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Allen Ginsberg
87. Mark Weiss — Re: Time Change
88. Alan Jen Sondheim — Form silliness
89. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: renga

5 APR 1997

90. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Allen Ginsberg's death
91. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: elephant's memory
92. George Bowering — Re: Time Change
93. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Allen Ginsberg's death
94. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Allen Ginsberg
95. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen Ginsberg
96. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Allen Ginsberg
97. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Allen Ginsberg
98. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: renga
99. Rob Hardin — Visit Lou Stathis at the Columbia Presbyterian Hospital

100. David Bromige — poem
101. Miekal And — Re: Allen Ginsberg +
102. KENT JOHNSON — Memorial services
103. simon — Re: Time Change
104. KENT JOHNSON — Re: apology
105. Rachel Loden — Re: poem
106. Herb Levy — Re: Ah
107. Alan Jen Sondheim — Allen Ginsberg +
108. Joseph Zitt — Re: Allen Ginsberg
109. Maria Damon — Re: Allen Ginsberg
110. nuyopoman — Allen Ginsberg's Death
111. nuyopoman — Re: Ginsberg's Death
112. michael corbin — Re: Allen Ginsberg +
113. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Allen Ginsberg
114. Alan Jen Sondheim — html-body
115. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
116. Maria Damon — Re: Allen Ginsberg
117. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Allen Ginsberg
118. David Israel — cyberRenga for Ginsberg
119. Joseph Zitt — Re: renga
120. David Israel — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
121. Charles Bernstein — Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
122. Kenneth Goldsmith — Ginsberg's Body Lies In State
123. David Israel — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
124. David Israel — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
125. David Israel — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
126. Pritchett,Pat — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
127. Peter Jaeger — Allen Ginsberg
128. David Israel — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
129. Joseph Zitt — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
130. David Israel — apology
131. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the rhythm, the rhythm
132. Grant Jenkins — Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
133. Susan Wheeler — Re: Memorial services
134. shoemakers — Re: Allen Ginsberg / No Apologies
135. George Bowering — Re: Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
136. shoemakers — ginsdead.htm

6 APR 1997

137. nuyopoman — Allen Ginsberg's Death
138. Schuchat Simon — Allen dead
139. nico vassilakis — eternity queueing
140. Joseph Zitt — Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
141. Maria Damon — Ginsberg
142. Loss Glazier — Ginsberg
143. Joel Kuszai — Re: Ginsberg
144. Andrew D Epstein — Re: Ginsberg
145. Alan Jen Sondheim — for AG
146. sschu30844 — Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
147. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
148. Steven Marks — Re: Ginsberg
149. Don Cheney — First Typo, Best Typo
150. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Allen's death
151. henry g — my Ginsberg story
152. Michael Magee — Re: Ginsberg
153. Poetics List — Forwarded mail....Re: Ginsberg

154. David Bromige — Jamie Reid's eulogy for A.G.
155. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Ginsberg NY Times obit

7 APR 1997

156. Loss Glazier — EPC Correspondence
157. T-Bone Prone — Re: Ginsberg
158. Pete Landers — Re: my Ginsberg story
159. Susan Wheeler — Services update
160. Douglas — Allen Ginsberg poem
161. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Time Change
162. Douglas — Re. Allen Ginsberg poem
163. David Bromige — detention with a red headed woman
164. MAXINE CHERNOFF — 70th Birthday Party
165. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: One who is still among us
166. Jerry Rothenberg — San Diego Readings
167. Michael Leddy — Ginsberg NY Times obit
168. Ryan Whyte — 90 Neuf Zero
169. henry gould — Re: Ginsberg NY Times obit
170. John Cayley — Cyber/Poetextual Readings in London
171. Pritchett,Pat — Re: naked
172. Kenneth Goldsmith — "Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg" Playlist
173. Aldon L. Nielsen — this week's Inuit show... (fwd)
174. k.a. hehir — help
175. shoemakers — Re: "Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg" Playlist
176. charssmith — Re: help
177. charssmith — Blaser in Santa Cruz
178. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: help
179. David Bromige — Nick, are you there?

8 APR 1997

180. Charles Bernstein — Boston Area Reading
181. Maria Damon — Re: help
182. Maria Damon — Re: Boston Area Reading
183. Maria Damon — XCP: the journal!!!
184. henry gould — Re: Poetic Briefs
185. Sylvester Pollet — Readings
186. Jeff Hansen — Poetic Briefs
187. Joel Lewis — Allen Ginsberg
188. George Bowering — Re: detention with a red headed woman
189. amato — denver conference etc...
190. Joshua N Schuster — Wieners Celebration
191. luigi — Re: Nick, are you there?
192. Jordan Davis — Taylor Mead / Tony Medina @ Poetry City
193. David Bromige — Nick Found
194. Charles Bernstein — Ginsberg Memorial
195. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Allen Ginsberg
196. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: wind on the way
197. Maria Damon — Re: Ginsberg Memorial
198. Alan Jen Sondheim — 103

9 APR 1997

199. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Poetic Offspring
200. Gabrielle Welford — CBS SPEWS - Latest Article by Mumia Abu-Jamal (fwd)
201. David Bromige — The Don Allan Anthology
202. jdhollo — no digests for 2 days?
203. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Poetic Offspring
204. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Allen Ginsberg

205. Charles Alexander — come on down
206. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Poetic Offspring
207. maz881 — wind on the way
208. William Burmeister Prod — Re: wind on the way
209. CHRIS MANN — (no subject)
210. dbkk — The Stranger gets stranger
211. robert zamsky — Message to Maria D.
212. David Bromige — Will's inches of ink
213. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: wind on the way
214. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Nick, are you there?
215. Mark Weiss — Re: Nick, are you there?
216. linda v. russo — Allen Ginsburg
217. P.Standard Schaefer — C.O.N.S.
218. Michael Boughn — Re: wind on the way
219. Steve Carll — Golden Gate Park reading April 5
220. Christopher Alexander — Re: Nick, are you there?
221. David Bromige — Don Allan Anthology
222. Christopher Alexander — Re: denver conference etc...

10 APR 1997

223. George Bowering — Re: Allen GinsbErg
224. dbkk — Re: denver conference etc...
225. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Allen GinsbErg
226. David Bromige — George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
227. Schuchat Simon — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
228. Rachel Loden — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
229. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Will's column
230. Sylvester Pollet — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
231. Dale Smith — Re: Will's column/ my reply
232. Chris Stroffolino — LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
233. Diane Marie Ward — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
234. Douglas Barbour — Re: wind on the way
235. Christopher Alexander — Re: Allen GinsbErg
236. Christopher Alexander — Re: denver conference etc...
237. Steven Marks — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
238. henry gould — EPR ?
239. David Kellogg — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
240. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Will's column/ my reply
241. Field of Roses — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
242. Maria Damon — Re: wind on the way
243. Dale Smith — Re: Will's column/ my reply
244. dbkk — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
245. Pritchett,Pat — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry
246. Daniel Bouchard — Will's column/ my reply
247. Charles Bernstein — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
248. Gwyn McVay — Re: Will's column/ my reply
249. Maria Damon — Re: Will's column/ my reply
250. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
251. Maria Damon — MacLow piece
252. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Will's column/ my reply
253. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: The Will of King George
254. Michael Magee — Re: Will's column/ my reply
255. maz881 — orbit
256. michael corbin — Re: Will's column/ my reply
257. acgold01 — Doug Messerli's e-address
258. George Bowering — Re: The Don Allan Anthology

259. George Bowering — Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
260. Mainstream — conference
261. Mark Weiss — Re: Will's column/ my reply
262. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: allen g. the millionaire
263. sschu30844 — Re: Will's column/ my reply
264. Alan Jen Sondheim — John Barton Wolgamot

11 APR 1997

265. Dale Smith — Re: Will's column/ my reply
266. cris cheek — Re: Bromide's 'honky commas'
267. Charles Alexander — possibility?
268. henry — Re: Will's column/ my reply
269. henry — Re: orbit
270. linda v. russo — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
271. David Bromige — The Don Allan Apology
272. jarnot — allen g. the millionaire
273. Michael Magee — Ginsberg and the Gap
274. Charles Bernstein — New York City Poetry Calendar
275. Hank Lazer — Re: AG & the columnists
276. Jerry McGuire — searching
277. Charles Bernstein — Re: Ginsberg and the Gap
278. Piombino/Simon — Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
279. Pritchett,Pat — Re: allen g. the millionaire
280. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Will's column/ my reply
281. KENT JOHNSON — ginsberg and snyder
282. KENT JOHNSON — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
283. KENT JOHNSON — Re: orbit
284. KENT JOHNSON — on being angry at george will
285. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Will's column/ my reply
286. Michael Boughn — Re: Will's column/ my reply
287. nuyopoman — Readings
288. William Burmeister Prod — Re: orbit
289. William Burmeister Prod — G. Swill caught perturbating infragrante delicto
290. Rachel Loden — Re: orbit
291. Hugh Steinberg — Re: AG & the columnists
292. Thomas M. Orange — belated respects
293. Hoa Nguyen — Ginsberg
294. Thomas M. Orange — Re: belated respects
295. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Will's column
296. Mark Weiss — Re: Will's column/ my reply
297. DS — Re: Will's column/ my reply
298. aerialedge — Re: Will's column/ my reply
299. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
300. sschu30844 — Re: Will's column/ my reply
301. Jordan Davis — POETPOETRRYCITRYCITTYY
302. henry gould — Re: Will's column/ my reply

12 APR 1997

303. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: SouthBay
304. Alan Jen Sondheim — lure/id
305. KENT JOHNSON — snyder/gap/ginsberg
306. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Ginsberg
307. Maria Damon — Re: Ginsberg
308. Maria Damon — Re: Will's column/ my reply
309. Dave Zauhar — Re: Will's column
310. KENT JOHNSON — Re: cardinal in spring snow?
311. Maria Damon — Re: Will's column/ my reply

312. Herb Levy — Ginsberg, Nyro, & media coverage for the arts
313. Christopher Alexander — Re: Will's column/ my reply
314. Piombino/Simon — Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
315. Christopher Alexander — Re: on being angry at george will
316. Jennifer Ashton — Lyn Hejinian's address
317. Keith Norris — Re: Will's column
318. Christopher Alexander — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
319. nuyopoman — Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Apr 1997 to 11 Apr 1997
320. nuyopoman — Holman Reading
321. Mark Weiss — Re: Will's column/ my reply
322. David Bromige — Triumph and the Will
323. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
324. Pritchett,Pat — Re: buy this book!
325. Dean Taciuch — Re: Will's column/ my reply
326. Piombino/Simon — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
327. Sylvester Pollet — Hale-Bopp Forward
328. henry gould — GWAG
329. Dave Zauhar — Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
330. David Bromige — Reading backwards
331. Thomas Bell — ginsberg and snyder
332. Thomas Bell — (no subject)

13 APR 1997

333. Stephen Vincent — Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
334. MAXINE CHERNOFF — History Is Rewritten
335. Tom Mandel — George may choose
336. linda v. russo — Will/[my]reply
337. linda v. russo — Re: The Don Allan Apology
338. George Free — Anne Waldman's AG poem
339. Maria Damon — Re: Ginsberg
340. Maria Damon — Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
341. Maria Damon — Re: History Is Rewritten
342. Maria Damon — Re: George may choose
343. Bobbie West — Re: History is Rewritten
344. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: History is Rewritten
345. Keith Norris — Re: ali
346. amato — reading list...
347. Louis Cabri — Re: AG & the columnists
348. Gwyn McVay — Re: The Don Allan Apology
349. Herb Levy — Re: John Barton Wolgamot
350. Dave Zauhar — Re: History is Rewritten
351. Mark Weiss — Re: History Is Rewritten
352. cris cheek — Election news
353. Steve Carll — Change of Address
354. Maria Damon — Re: ali
355. KENT JOHNSON — Re: yo marjorie!
356. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: John Barton Wolgamot
357. KENT JOHNSON — Re: yo marjorie!
358. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd ci…

14 APR 1997

359. michael corbin — Re: History is Rewritten
360. Chris Stroffolino — So How did The Weiners I mean Wieners event go?
361. George Bowering — Re: The Don Allan Anthology
362. George Bowering — Re: foundling fathers
363. George Bowering — Re: ginsberg and snyder

364. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd ci…
365. Pierre Joris — Re: Reading backwards
366. Mark Weiss — Re: Reading backwards
367. Dale Smith — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
368. Dale Smith — Re: Will's column
369. Michael Boughn — Re: History is Rewritten
370. Dale Smith — Re: Will's column
371. Christine Palma — Re: media coverage for the arts(long reply)
372. Maria Damon — yo marjorie!
373. Maria Damon — Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
374. Maria Damon — Re: Change of Address
375. amato — michael dorris...
376. Hank Lazer — Re: foundling fathers
377. Christopher Alexander — Re: History Is Rewritten
378. Christopher Alexander — Re: Triumph and the Will
379. henry gould — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
380. Daniel Bouchard — excerpt
381. Piombino/Simon — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
382. Sylvester Pollet — Will's Column
383. Pritchett,Pat — Re: George may choose
384. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
385. yuri-g — Re: Lyn Hejinian's address
386. henry gould — Re: Will's column
387. dbkk — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
388. Daniel Bouchard — Fifth Column
389. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: Fifth Column
390. michael corbin — Re: History is Rewritten
391. amato — Re: Fifth Column
392. Jordan Davis — Imaginary Interview Question
393. Michael Magee — Re: Will's column
394. Daniel Bouchard — What I Want: An Essay
395. Daniel Bouchard — What I Want: An Essay
396. Michael Boughn — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, 397. dbkk — Re: Fifth Column
398. dbkk — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
399. henry — Re: Will's column
400. henry — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
401. Christopher Alexander — Re: Will's column
402. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
403. Jordan Davis — Another Imaginary Interview Question
404. Don Cheney — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
405. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
406. Christopher Alexander — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
407. Matthias Regan — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The…
408. Matthias Regan — Re: PPBR - addresses of events
409. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
410. Matthias Regan — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
411. Mark Weiss — Re: What I Want: An Essay
412. Mark Weiss — Re: History is Rewritten
413. Keith Norris — read my will at the houseparty
414. Bob Grumman — Possible Omissions in the Now-Classical Anthologies
415. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: History is Rewritten
416. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
417. nuyopoman — Re: WBA

418. Schuchat Simon — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
419. nuyopoman — Ginsberg the Rock Star
420. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: So How did The Weiners I mean Wieners event go?

15 APR 1997

421. dbkk — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
422. Alan Jen Sondheim — Decoding My Life (Come to This)
423. George Bowering — Re: Fascists and others
424. Joshua N Schuster — wieners evening
425. Pierre Joris — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
426. Rachel Loden — Perloff on Yasusada
427. Mainstream — advert
428. Mainstream — advert
429. Poetics List — Re: POETICS Digest - 7 Apr 1997 to 8 Apr 1997
430. Herb Levy — Re: media coverage for the arts(long reply)
431. Mark Wallace — Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
432. Tom Mandel — float/sting
433. Tom Mandel — dale and daniel
434. Douglas Barbour — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
435. David Bromige — The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
436. bertram mourits — the poetry of Muhammad Ali
437. bruja — Re: poem... (fwd)
438. Joe Safdie — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
439. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
440. Hoa Nguyen — Re: Will's column/ Daniel Bouchard
441. Jordan Davis — hello poetics wake up!
442. Rachel Kubie — Knott/AG
443. David Bromige — If this is still under discussion . . .
444. Thomas Bell — Re: ginsberg and snyder
445. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
446. Charles Alexander — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
447. Charles Alexander — Re: float/sting

16 APR 1997

448. Steven Marks — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
449. michael corbin — Re: History is Rewritten
450. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: float/sting
451. Stephen Vincent — Re: float/sting
452. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
453. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Ginsberg the Rock Star
454. Charles Alexander — Re: float/sting
455. Dale Smith — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Ope…
456. Michael Boughn — Re: History is Rewritten
457. Henry Gould — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
458. Maria Damon — Re: advert
459. Maria Damon — Re: float/sting
460. Maria Damon — Re: float/sting
461. KENT JOHNSON — The New Party
462. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
463. amato — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
464. Michael Boughn — Re: float/sting
465. Issa Clubb — Re: WBA
466. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: float/sting
467. amato — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
468. Michael Franco — CHARLES BERNSTEIN IN BOSTON
469. Joel Kuszai — Help!

470. simon — Re: Imaginary Interview Question
471. aerialedge — _perhaps this is a rescue fantasy_ by Heather Fuller
472. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
473. Charles Bernstein — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: ...
474. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
475. henry g — Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
476. Keith Tuma — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
477. Hugh Steinberg — Re: float/sting
478. Pritchett,Pat — FW: The Greatest
479. Christopher Reiner — found poem
480. Mark Weiss — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Ope...
481. Mark Weiss — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
482. Jordan Davis — Nationalismo
483. Ken Edwards — Ginsberg PS
484. Jordan Davis — Re: Is anybody still dissing
485. Pritchett,Pat — Re: float/sting
486. Joe Safdie — Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
487. Joe Safdie — Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
488. George Bowering — Re: ginsberg and snyder
489. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: float/sting
490. Dave Zauhar — Re: FW: The Greatest (a variant reading, perhaps)
491. George Bowering — Re: Moore
492. DS — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
493. Keith Tuma — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
494. AARON SHURIN — Re: Paging Mr. Mossin
495. David Israel — if not to lurk
496. David Israel — erratum
497. Small Press Traffic — McCaffery and Willis rock SF
498. henry gould — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Op...
499. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: found poem

17 APR 1997

500. George Bowering — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
501. David Bromige — if this is still under discussion
502. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: History is Rewritten
503. henry gould — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Op...
504. Keith Norris — roofless in seattle
505. Jeff Hansen — Bromige-Safdie
506. Keith Norris — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
507. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
508. Jerry McGuire — Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Apr 1997 to 16 Apr 1997
509. Matthias Regan — Re: found poem
510. Michael Franco — Joe Dunn
511. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: if not to lurk
512. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: if not to lurk
513. michael corbin — Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
514. Joe Safdie — Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
515. linda v. russo — Re: History Is A Rumor
516. linda v. russo — Re: Knott/AG
517. David Bromige — Bromige-Safdie
518. robert zamsky — Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
519. Hoa Nguyen — Re: What is white
520. Thomas Bell — Re: found poem

521. Thomas Bell — Re: ginsberg and snyder
522. Christopher Alexander — Begin migration of all users to new
523. Christopher Alexander — Oh, dammit not again
524. Herb Levy — Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
525. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — call for essays
526. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: What is white
527. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: What is white
528. henry gould — Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
529. Henry Gould — recommended scholarship
530. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: What is white
531. Mark Weiss — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
532. henry gould — Re: Bromige-Safdie
533. David Israel — Re: found poem
534. David Israel — Re: Begin migration of all users to new

18 APR 1997

535. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: found poem
536. Michael Boughn — Re: recommended scholarship
537. henry gould — Re: recommended scholarship
538. Dale Smith — Re: What is white
539. henry gould — Re: if this is still under discussion
540. Pierre Joris — Re: monk, t.
541. Keith Norris — Re: The New Party
542. Jeff Hansen — safdie-bromige
543. Charles Alexander — Re: Begin migration of all users to new
544. Hank Lazer — Re: monk, t.
545. Don Cheney — Re: found poem
546. Sylvester Pollet — Re: if this is still under discussion
547. henry gould — Re: safdie-bromige
548. Sylvester Pollet — Re: if not to lurk
549. dbkk — Re: Joe Dunn
550. Sylvester Pollet — Re: safdie-bromige
551. Keith Tuma — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
552. Herb Levy — Re: What is white
553. Herb Levy — Re: monk, t.
554. Christopher Alexander — Re: Bromige-Safdie
555. Michael Boughn — Re: if this is still under discussion
556. KENT JOHNSON — L+A+N+G+P+O and New Party
557. Pritchett,Pat — Re: What is white
558. Christopher Alexander — Re: found poem
559. Steven Marks — Re: Bromige-Safdie
560. Kristin Gallagher — Re: The New Party
561. dbkk — Re: What is white
562. William Burmeister Prod — Re: if this is still under discussion
563. Steven Marks — Re: if not to lurk
564. henry gould — Re: if this is still under discussion
565. Michael Boughn — Re: safdie-bromige
566. Matthias Regan — the PostModern Dilemma
567. Mark Prejsnar — Re: The New Party
568. Mark Weiss — Re: the PostModern Dilemma
569. Dave Zauhar — Re: if not to lurk
570. Mark Weiss — Re: if this is still under discussion
571. dbkk — Re: What is white
572. sschu30844 — Re: monk, t.
573. Joe Safdie — Re: monk, t.
574. Sylvester Pollet — Re: if not to lurk

575. Joseph Lease — Re: What is white
576. Michael Franco — Re: Joe Dunn
577. Peter Jaeger — Re: if not to lurk
578. Joseph Lease — Re: safdie-bromige
579. William Burmeister Prod — Re: if this is still under discussion
580. Joseph Lease — Re: safdie-bromige
581. henry — Re: if not to lurk
582. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: if not to lurk
583. David Israel — Re: if not to lurk -Reply
584. Hoa Nguyen — Re: what is white
585. David Bromige — divers
586. David Israel — Re: if not to lurk / stalker
587. Hugh Steinberg — Re: if not to lurk -Reply
588. Matthias Regan — Re: if not to lurk -Reply
589. DS — Re: What is white
590. Dave Zauhar — Re: monk, t.
591. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: What is white
592. Sylvester Pollet — Re: if not to lurk
593. Sylvester Pollet — Re: if not to lurk
594. Mark Weiss — Re: if not to lurk
595. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman

19 APR 1997

596. David Bromige — Well no I mean yes
597. KENT JOHNSON — axis of the universe
598. Nicole Markotic — helene cixous
599. jdhollo — Sandhyabasha, from a while back
600. Pierre Joris — Re: monk, t.
601. George Bowering — Re: swimmers
602. k.a. hehir — of Cheezheads and poetry
603. David R. Israel — Re: helene cixous
604. David Golumbia — Re: if not to lurk / stalker
605. F.A. Templeton — CCCP
606. Hank Lazer — Re: monk, t.
607. Hank Lazer — offer, discounts
608. Gwyn McVay — Re: Sandhyabasha, from a while back
609. Michael Magee — New party, etc
610. Mark Weiss — Re: New party, etc
611. David Bromige — the withdrawal of surfer
612. KENT JOHNSON — yasusada
613. henry g — Re: Bromige-Safdie
614. Steve Carll — Canessa Park reading cancelled
615. Hugh Steinberg — Re: axis of the universe
616. Mark W Scroggins — Re: offer, discounts
617. Henry Gould — (no subject)
618. Steven Marks — Re: helene cixous
619. [redacted]
620. George Thompson — Re: Sandhyabasha, from a while back
621. David Kellogg — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
622. Dave Zauhar — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
623. David R. Israel — Re: Ann Carson
624. Gwyn McVay — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
625. David Bromige — o tempus o mores
626. David Kellogg — Re: Perloff on Yasusada

20 APR 1997

627. Rebecca Weldon — Angkarn by Ginsberg

628. Steven Marks — Re: Ann Carson
629. Philip Mead — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
630. Alan Jen Sondheim — <death.htm: open in browser for the bones>
631. David R. Israel — stalker / Tarkovsky / Lao Tse / synchronicity
632. George Bowering — no, well I mean yes
633. David Bromige — cheapening sex in an inflationary spiral
634. David Bromige — ps to the subject-title with sex in it
635. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
636. KENT JOHNSON — Bowering and Bromige test
637. Bob Grumman — Re: A Word For Lurker
638. Field of Roses — Re: no, well I mean yes
639. aerialedge — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
640. David Bromige — (Perloff on Yasusada) footnote/spinoff/response to Mark Prejsnar/Bob P-thre...
641. Ryan Whyte — in no time
642. Dave Zauhar — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
643. Bob Grumman — Withdrawel of "surfer"
644. John Kinsella — CCCP, Cixous, and J.H. Prynne
645. Sylvester Pollet — Re: the withdrawal of surfer
646. Jeffrey W. Timmons — What white
647. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: What is white
648. Mark W Scroggins — Re: Ann Carson
649. David Bromige — lubbers
650. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Bowering and Bromige test
651. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: The Whatness of Whiteness
652. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: desublimation/eliade
653. henry gould — desublimation; Eliade
654. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: no no nanook(ie)
655. David R. Israel — back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
656. David R. Israel — Re: desublimation; Eliade
657. David R. Israel — Re: Bowering and Bromige test / cryptonite

21 APR 1997

658. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
659. Charles Alexander — Re: lodging for Poetry and the Public Sphere
660. Charles Alexander — message to the wrong place
661. KENT JOHNSON — awol
662. sschu30844 — Re: monk, t.
663. Hugh Steinberg — Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
664. Hugh Steinberg — Re: desublimation; Eliade
665. George Bowering — Re: Bowering and Bromige test
666. Ryan Whyte — set on roam
667. Pierre Joris — Re: desublimation/eliade
668. henry gould — desublimation/eliade
669. KENT JOHNSON — re-post re: Yasusada
670. Mark Wallace — who is social, individual, or a writer
671. Maria Damon — Re: desublimation; Eliade
672. Maria Damon — Re: cheapening sex in an inflationary spiral
673. Maria Damon — Re: monk, t.
674. Maria Damon — Re: What white
675. Steven Marks — Re: desublimation; Eliade
676. Mark Prejsnar — Re: L+A+N+G+P+O and New Party
677. David Bromige — no no nanook(ie)
678. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
679. Rachel Loden — no no nanook(ie)
680. michael corbin — Re: desublimation/eliade

681. Gwyn McVay — Re: What white
682. Dale Smith — Re: who is social, etc.
683. Christopher Alexander — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
684. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
685. michael corbin — Re: What white
686. Kristin Gallagher — Re: New party, etc
687. Mark Weiss — Re: desublimation/eliade
688. raea100900 — Talisman
689. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
690. Michael Magee — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
691. henry gould — Re: Girard
692. Mark Weiss — Re: What white
693. henry gould — Re: who is social, etc.
694. Sylvester Pollet — Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
695. Mark Weiss — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
696. Sylvester Pollet — Re: awol
697. GRAHAM W. FOUST — serfing
698. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Talisman
699. David Bromige — no no i want them back says this individual
700. Mark Prejsnar — Re: (Perloff on Yasusada) footnote/spinoff/response to Mark Prejsnar/Bob P-...
701. David Bromige — marianne moore's poems
702. Mark Prejsnar — Re: New party, etc
703. Michael Magee — Re: who is social, etc.
704. henry gould — Re: who is social, etc.
705. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Misc. Proj.
706. Mark Weiss — Re: who is social, etc.
707. Mark Weiss — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
708. George Bowering — Re: no no nanook(ie)
709. Susan Wheeler — Romana Huk
710. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
711. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: Talisman
712. David Kellogg — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
713. Philip Mead — Re: Perloff on Yasusada
714. Jerry Rothenberg — (no subject)
715. Gabrielle Welford — The Implications of Public Policy (fwd)
716. Charles Alexander — chax site
717. KENT JOHNSON — hasta la vista
718. Brent Long — Frank Stanford

22 APR 1997

719. David Israel — (no subject)
720. dbkk — Re: lodging for Poetry and the Public Sphere
721. Miekal And — Re: Frank Stanford
722. rsillima — Two thoughts
723. Michael Boughn — Re: who is social, etc.
724. Michael Magee — Re: who is social, etc.
725. Pierre Joris — Re: who is social, etc.
726. henry gould — Re: who is social, etc.
727. henry gould — Re: Two thoughts
728. henry gould — Re: who is social, etc.
729. Rachel Loden — Re: no no nanook(ie)
730. Dale Smith — Re: divine continued
731. David W. Clippinger — talisman
732. Sylvester Pollet — Re: lubbers
733. Jeff Hansen — (no subject)

734. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Two thoughts
735. henry gould — (no subject)
736. Brent Long — (no subject)
737. Mark Wallace — "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
738. amato — Re: who is social, etc.
739. Douglas — new Sun & Moon titles
740. nuyopoman — http://poetry.miningco.com
741. Brent Long — Re: http://poetry.miningco.com
742. henry — Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
743. henry — Re: who is social, etc.
744. Jordan Davis — Rukeyser Reprints
745. Jordan Davis — E Berrigan & M Owen at Poem Town
746. David Kellogg — Re: re-post re: Yasusada
747. Mark Wallace — more divinity
748. william marsh — Cubbies
749. Mark Wallace — divine continued
750. Mark Weiss — Re: who is social, etc.
751. Brent Long — Re: divine continued
752. Don Cheney — Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
753. Pierre Joris — Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
754. henry — Re: divine continued
755. Don Cheney — Re: divine continued
756. Don Cheney — Re: divine continued
757. Jean Day — Reading in San Francisco
758. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: no no not not
759. Maria Damon — that marianne moore poem
760. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
761. Sylvester Pollet — Re: that marianne moore poem
762. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
763. Sylvester Pollet — Re: that marianne moore poem
764. Stephen Vincent — Re: no no nanook(ie)
765. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
766. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Rukeyser Reprints
767. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: that marianne moore poem
768. Mark Weiss — Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
769. Burt Kimmelman — Re: that marianne moore poem
770. George Bowering — Re: Kilgore Trout says
771. George Bowering — ReHoops
772. George Bowering — Re: no no not not
773. George Bowering — Re: that marianne moore poem
774. Hugh Steinberg — Re: who is social, etc.
775. Bobbie West — horse apples
776. Stephen Vincent — Re: Rukeyser Reprints
777. Hugh Nicoll — Ms. Moore's "Poetry"
778. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: What white
779. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part one): Berkeley White
780. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: what is white
781. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: who is social, etc.
782. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: divine continued
783. Christopher Alexander — Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora
784. Rachel Loden — no no nanook(ie)

23 APR 1997

785. Herb Levy — Re: no no nanook(ie)
786. Joseph Zitt — Re: http://poetry.miningco.com
787. Mark Wallace — individuality and capitalism

788. Maria Damon — Re: that marianne moore poem
789. Brenda Ellen Uchman — Poem for Rent
790. Herb Levy — Re: no no nanook(ie)
791. Pierre Joris — Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
792. Pierre Joris — Re: ReHoops
793. Charles Bernstein — Welcome Message
794. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: articulated skeletons
795. Matthias Regan — Two thoughts: Backwoods Broadsides
796. simon — Re: ReHoops
797. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: New Brunswick/Rutgers fete
798. Joseph Lease — Re: Two thoughts: Backwoods Broadsides
799. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Poem for Rent
800. Steve Carll — April is the Readingest Month
801. henry — Re: horse apples
802. Jordan Davis — Re: Rukeyser Reprints
803. Mark Prejsnar — Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part one): Berkeley White
804. henry — Re: Poem for Rent
805. henry — Re: individuality and capitalism
806. Dave Zauhar — Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
807. Fred Muratori — Re: ReHoops
808. Mark Weiss — Re: horse apples
809. Colin Browne — Re: desublimation/eliade
810. Mark Weiss — Re: ReHoops
811. Joel Felix — Re: ReHoops
812. Hank Lazer — Re: ReHoops
813. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora
814. William Burmeister Prod — Re: ReHoops
815. Henry Gould — more of yr favorite arthur
816. Daniel Bouchard — Re: ReHoops
817. Jordan Davis — 50 poem collar
818. David Israel — & now, a comic [morbid] interlude . . .
819. Mark Weiss — Re: horse apples
820. Keith Tuma — Re: ReHoops
821. Rachel Loden — there's a man on the fairway taking names
822. Pritchett,Pat — Re: ReHoops
823. Joe Safdie — Re: Re Hoops, Lurking and The Divine Analogy
824. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: ReHoops
825. Small Press Traffic — Ronald Johnson reading in SF
826. Small Press Traffic — the next 2 Fridays at SPT
827. George Bowering — Re: ReHoops
828. George Bowering — Re: horse apples
829. George Bowering — Re: ReHoops
830. George Bowering — Re: ReHoops
831. David Israel — orient v. occident
832. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: articulated skeletons
833. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
834. Dave Zauhar — Re: poetry and golf (was ReHoops)
835. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: Video tomorow night (fwd)
836. Hugh Steinberg — Re: ReHoops

24 APR 1997

837. jdhollo — further to sandhyabashing
838. Herb Levy — Subtext readings for May, June, July
839. Michael Boughn — Robert Duncan
840. Kathleen Crown — Poetry and the Public Sphere
841. Rachel Loden — Granby, Mon Amour

842. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Poem for Rent
843. Mark Prejsnar — Re: ReHoops
844. Sylvester Pollet — Re: ReHoops
845. Jeff Hansen — what this list is (intended) to be about
846. robert drake — announce POTEPOETZINE / POTEPOETTEXT
847. Dale Smith — Re: what this list is (intended) to be about 848. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part two): On the Wings of Atalanta (fwd)
849. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: ReHoops
850. David Israel — Poetics Geography
851. Jordan Davis — jinxed by the collar
852. aerialedge — Heather Fuller @ Bridge Street
853. william marsh — Re: ReHoops
854. Mark Weiss — Re: & now, a comic [morbid] interlude . . .
855. Mark Weiss — Re: ReHoops
856. Hank Lazer — Re: there's a man on the fairway taking names
857. armand schwerner — DRAGON BOND RITE
858. Stephen Vincent — Re: ReHoops/ analog
859. Thomas Bell — Imaginary derivations and real delurking
860. Bob Grumman — Hoops, Golf, Etc.
861. William Burmeister Prod — Re: what this list is (intended) to be about
862. John Norton ([redacted]) — Memorial Service for Allen Ginsberg in San Francisco
863. Hugh Steinberg — Re: ReHoops
864. George Bowering — Re: ReHoops
865. George Bowering — Re: Granby, Mon Amour
866. charssmith — Fwd: Networking Artists & Poets Exhibition
867. Wendy Battin — chastened by CB'sreposting of the welcom message

25 APR 1997

868. Louis Cabri — selections from
869. Elizabeth Mathews Losh — Re: Poem for Rent
870. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: ReHoops
871. Marina deBellagente laPalma — writing (or thinking, for that matter) more than one thing at...
872. Marina deBellagente laPalma — (no subject)
873. Michel Delville — Poetry and Soccer
874. Mark Prejsnar — Re: ReHoops
875. Tom Mandel — Sighted -- poets dunk golf balls
876. Gwyn McVay — Re: DRAGON BOND RITE
877. Rachel Loden — Re: there's a man on the fairway taking names
878. Christopher Alexander — Re: Robert Duncan
879. R I Caddel — British Poetry Seminar in Brno
880. Gabrielle Welford — MRTA Statements (fwd)
881. Matthias Regan — Re: ReHoops
882. David Golumbia — URGENT: MLA VOTE (fwd)
883. robert drake — Re: Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora

26 APR 1997

884. Poetics List — CFP: Whiteness and Cultural Identity (5/10; SAMLA) (fwd)
885. Poetics List — Library Company job opening (fwd)
886. Poetics List — NOTICE FROM YOUR INFORMATION BROKERS
887. Mark Weiss — Re: ReHoops
888. Mark Weiss — Re: Poem for Rent
889. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Baseball & Poetry
890. Aldon L. Nielsen — Fwd: FYI: Zora Neale Plays Discovered (fwd)
891. william marsh — Re: ReHoops
892. David R. Israel — p i n g p o n g
893. David R. Israel — Re: DRAGON BOND RITE

894. David R. Israel — Re: ReHoops / Yale Youngsters

27 APR 1997

895. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Foundations of European Metaphysics
896. Chris Stroffolino — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
897. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Or-Wa-Id
898. Field of Roses — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
899. David R. Israel — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
900. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Fwd: FYI: Zora Neale Plays Discovered (fwd)
901. George Bowering — Re: ReHoops
902. George Bowering — Re: p i n g p o n g
903. henry gould — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
904. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Re: B Ball
905. David R. Israel — Re: New York City Poetry Calendar
906. David R. Israel — Re: B Ball
907. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — from Oswald O.
908. Maria Damon — Re: chastened by CB'sreposting of the welcom message
909. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)

28 APR 1997

910. Field of Roses — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
911. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
912. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — job announcement
913. Steve Carll — April is the Readingest Month II
914. Rachel Loden — home of the brave
915. Fredrik Hertzberg — Peter Winch 1926-1997
916. Louis Cabri — Cabinet Gallery London
917. Peter Jaeger — fi press (fwd)
918. Matthias Regan — Tribal Suicide
919. Pritchett,Pat — Re: p i n g p o n g
920. Peter Jaeger — new fi release - april 97 (fwd)
921. Charles Bernstein — Rational Meaning is now out
922. Joe Safdie — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
923. henry — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
924. Jordan Davis — UiPsSnToAwIoRuSt
925. Wystan Curnow — Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
926. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: individuables
927. Jeffrey W. Timmons — alterity

29 APR 1997

928. Wystan Curnow — Re: alterity
929. Hugh Steinberg — words
930. Hugh Steinberg — Re: alterity
931. Steven Marks — Re: words
932. Ken Edwards — rempress readings
933. Dale Smith — Re: individuables
934. Gwyn McVay — Re: Tom's pingpong rap
935. Rebecca Weldon — (no subject)
936. henry gould — Re: individuables
937. David R. Israel — Re: words
938. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: out for alterations
939. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Zone Defense
940. hg — Re: out for alterations
941. Tom Mandel — (no subject)
942. Tom Mandel — Zone Defense
943. Jordan Davis — Re: from pong to scrabble
944. Karlien van den Beukel — REPORT CCCP 7

945. George Bowering — Re: home of the brave
946. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: alterity
947. David R. Israel — from pong to scrabble
948. Sylvester Pollet — Re: words
949. Herb Levy — Re: DRAGON BOND RITE
950. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — in-Kant
951. Maria Damon — Re: home of the brave
952. Maria Damon — Re: words
953. Maria Damon — Re: Tom's pingpong rap
954. Maria Damon — REPORT PPS ?
955. David Israel — Re: words
956. Charles Bernstein — Internation Subscribers
957. Gwyn McVay — Re: words
958. raea100900 — Re: REPORT PPS ?
959. Pierre Joris — Out here in Albania
960. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: words
961. Hugh Steinberg — Re: words

30 APR 1997

962. Piombino/Simon — Re: Books & Co.
963. rsillima — Poetry & Public Sphere?
964. rsillima — Robert Erickson
965. David Israel — Re: words
966. Keith Norris — Re: words
967. jarnot — poetry project symposium
968. Dale Smith — Re: alterity
969. Pierre Joris — AG's Re-censored Howl John Whiting ---------- Forwarded Message ----------…
970. Tom Mandel — REPORT CCCP 7
971. Tom Mandel — tiles, miles, ali, and me
972. Charles Bernstein — NYC Reading
973. Pierre Joris — Subject
974. Mark Prejsnar — Friendly inquiry
975. John Kinsella — CCCP7, children & the domestic!
976. Jethro Cadbury — colloquium
977. Pierre Joris — from Britlist
978. Pierre Joris — Re: "The center & circumference of silence"
979. Pritchett,Pat — Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me
980. Jethro Cadbury — Gin & UK
981. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me
982. Susan E. Dunn — Writing the Speculative
983. Grant Jenkins — Re: alterity
984. David R. Israel — "The center & circumference of silence"
985. Ken Edwards — REPORT CCCP 7
986. Henry Gould — reading in RhodeIsland
987. David Kellogg — Re: from Britlist
988. Pritchett,Pat — Re: from Britlist
989. Charles Bernstein — LINEbreak in RealAudio

1 MAY 1997

990. Joel Lewis — National Poetry Month (fwd)

1. dbkk
"The Schwimmer Effect"
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Hi everyone, it's Kevin Killian. If you are in San Francisco on Friday, I hope you will come to my new play, which I wrote with a good friend, the painter Scott Hewicker.

In 1949 a small band of would-be actresses and atom scientists (Farrah Fawcett, Elizabeth Taylor, Ursula Andress and Goldie Hawn), together with famed attorney Arlene Schwimmer, the ³pit bull of Hollywood,² gather at Princeton¹s Center for Advanced Studies to develop the Schwimmer Effect. It¹s a device to keep you and your loved ones young forever and it¹s marketed as fragrances, Black Diamonds and White Pearls.

By 1997 the Schwimmer Effect has taken hold of all of Hollywood and indeed the world, except for one tiny corner of mountain fastness in Tibet, where Jack (Dr. Death) Kevorkian, the Dalai Lama (a reformed Ursula Andress) and her ward, Vicki Steubing, join forces to combat an unnatural system of life, death and eternal hype. They watch in horror as the cast of the top NBC sitcom ³Friends² are killed one by one as soon as they turn thirty. Half melodrama, half sci-fi spectacular, and half witch hunt, ³The Schwimmer Effect² boasts a cast of topflight actors and the thrills and chills of the ³Star Wars² adventures! With:

Norma Cole, Margaret Crane, Mark Ewert, Kota Ezawa, Phoebe Gloeckner, Craig Goodman, Clifford Hengst, Kevin Killian, Karla Milosevich, Richard Prouty, Rex Ray, Michelle Rollman and Wayne Smith and Alicia Wing.

Presented by Small Press Traffic
New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
7:30 p.m.
$5-$10 sliding scale
Limited seating. Please call for reservations: 415/[redacted].

Okay, see you everyone!

↑ Index

2. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Your drug supply, Commander J
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Folks:

Received this from a good friend and poet known to many of you (who, sorry, wishes to remain nameless here), and thought I'd send along since it provides context to the FC2 matter. Still playing phone-tag with Curt White at FC2, but will post anything I can get.

OK., I'll admit and apologize for my rash annoyance--the discussion on white space is interesting and learned, and I've learned from much of it. But let's see what we can do too to give a hand to these folks at FC2, ok?

Kent

> It is the Republicans' number one priority (the budget is number 2) to wipe > wipe-out the NEA this year. They have requested something like 2000 works and > have specified, no shit, poetry fellowships as the thing they most want to > kill. I visited the NEA when I was in DC, offered my help in whatever way in > might be helpful. They are already crowded into a little office space, > understaffed. As Leonard Cohen says (in well funded artful Canada), there's > not much to save. I think it's gone. I don't have much hope for our > political system either in my cynical forties. But I think that poetry (and > teaching) becomes all the more important as people find they do not have the > vocabulary or syntax to articulate their feelings in ways that aren't > prefabbed by tv sitcoms. I mean this quite literally. I think people lose > contact with the originality of their own suffering. I think many of us feel > feelings that are prescribed to us by advertisements, movies, capitalist > culture. Of course such a population, incapable of expression or complex > comprehension, turns to pornography and violence. In DC the Post covers the > most heartless, coldblooded and remorseless murders by 14 year olds of 10 and > 12 year olds that you could possibly believe.

↑ Index

3. KENT JOHNSON

FC2 info

Tue 1 Apr 1997

Just talked to Curt White at FC2. They have loads of stuff pertaining tothe issue in hard copy--anyone wanting a packet can write to Unit for Contemporary Literature, Illinois State Uiverstiy, 109 Fairchild Hall, Normal, IL 61790-4241 ([redacted]).

Curt also told me that there is all sorts of info on Mark America's home page, including statement by FC2, interviews, statements of support from other writer's and artists, etc.--

http\\www.altx.com

Kent

↑ Index

4. Rob Hardin
BIB/Doug Rice/Man Writes Woman (or possibly not)
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Dave Br wrote:

> Thanks for the tip, some list one, i looked under "whatsnew" and found the chapter from one of the novelists in question as well as an interview with Doug Rice. I liked the writing in the novel. Enjoyed the orgasm. Of course, its one more man writing abt woman's sexuality. Do any of the women on the list find it accurate?

As much as I intend not to haunt this list, I must inform you of this on Doug Rice's behalf: Rice's _Blood of Mugwump_ is far less gender-specific than you might think. The lines between male and female are blurred precisely because the author is ambivalent as to h/e/i/r/s own gender within the gender narrative. And if my statement itself sounds ambivalent, then I must tactfully refer you to Chi Chi Valenti's inspired site, Jackie 60 (click-and-drag):

http://www.echonyc.com/~interjackie/.

Thus, the question of a "man writing abt woman's sexuality" is rather more complex than it might appear--which ties in splicely with author/mugwump Doug Rice's Faulknerian identity questions.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/
http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm

↑ Index

5. David Bromige
doug rice & the other fella
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Rob Hardin et al: but what i wrote was that i had read the i'view with doug rice & the chapter by the other man, a dutch-sounding name i cant now recall. it was to the latter (with its lengthy evocation of orgasm) that i was referring. Sorry for the confusion., db

↑ Index

6. Douglas Barbour
Re: Pierre Joris & Kent Johnson
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Pierre

Thanks for the clarification. Btw, we would want to call Celan a 'citizen', wouldnt we? A suffering one, to boot. And the concept of being one, & having one's citizenship stripped from one are hovering over a lot of the poems, I think?

How does one 'write' one's 'citizenship' into one's poems? Not just one way, I'm pretty sure... On the other hand, if 'Maximus' wasnt a 'citizen,' who was?

As a Canadian I can sympathize with Kent Johnson's worries, but I dont have a representative to write to. I cheer from the sidelines on this one. On the other hand, it is possible, isnt it?, that the writers herein are continuing to talk about those seductive gaps here & writing letters or e-notes to their congresspeople offline? Why not? I send my letters to MPs separately from any list...

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness

University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H: [redacted]

↑ Index

7. by way of BETH LEE SIMON <[redacted]>" <[redacted]> last call for abs: forum on deixis
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Last call to submit an abstract or proposal to participate in the forum on deixis.

CALL FOR ABSTRACTS/PROPOSALS

STUDIES IN DEIXIS: WORKING THE MARGINS OF PRAGMATICS AND SEMANTICS

for the Midwest Modern Language Association Meeting, Chicago, November 6-8, 1997, Ramada Congress Hotel

Abstracts are being accepted for "Studies in Deixis: Working the Margins of Pragmatics and Semantics." The multidimensionality of deixis, a linguistic phenomenon at the heart of communication, remains one of the most intriguing aspects of human language. It is impossible to imagine communication that functions without deixis. Deictic elements such as pronouns, demonstrative adjectives, and spatial or temporal adverbs, express a user-centered perspective on time, place and person relationships in the social context of an utterance; simultaneously, they denote formal grammatical functions within an utterance. The aim of the forum is to bring together scholars working on different aspects of deixis--from formal linguistics to stylistics--to discuss the activity that occurs at the intersection of language and reality/structure and function. Publication of the proceedings is planned.

Abstracts/proposals should be a maximum of 150 words in length and must be received by Friday, April 4, 1997.

Send abstracts (e-mail or fax preferred) to:

Beth Lee Simon
Dept. of English and Linguistics
Indiana University Purdue University
Fort Wayne, IN 46805
[redacted]
fax: [redacted]

and/or

Anna Fellegy, Department of English, 207 Lind Hall, #185, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis MN 55455
[redacted]

↑ Index

8. Franklin Bruno

white caesura

Tue 1 Apr 1997

Steven Marks said:

> white caesurae -- This gets my vote. Indicates both the visual and the breath gap in a term that seems to suggest a mythological creature.

What if the poem's printed on pink paper?

fjb

↑ Index

9. Stephen Vincent
Re: BP's Question / gaps caesurae lacunae
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Curious - as an odd echo to this whole discussion- to now remember Gap's early ad & song campaign:
"Fall into the Gap" - and find a fashion cornucopia(?)
If I remember right, their name was chosen to vibrate with "Generation Gap" - that then (late 60's, early 70's?)
popular phrase became capitalist framing (marketing, social healing(?)) device. We (real adults) sell on one side of the Gap and you (the young) buy on the other. That will make peace!
How this all might relate to inarticulated silences in the poem I'm left somewhat agape.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

10. Bob Grumman
The color of Caesurae
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Franklin Bruno wrote about white caesurae: "What if the poem's printed on pink paper?" Otherwhere, Luigi-Bob Drake wrote me about a poem of bpNichol's that has a "white caesura" in it but was printed on lilac paper. Great, I say to both: colored caesurae! Not just white but pink and violet caesurae, and yeller and scarlet!

I still think, though, that all such colored caesurae, in essence, are white, whatever concealing color they are overpainted with. But I suspect that further reflection is called for.

--Bob G

↑ Index

11. Laura Moriarty
Langston Hughes at the Poetry Center
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Hi Kevin -

I looked in our Langston Hughes file when I read your post, but was surprised not to find any mention of trouble when he read for the Center in 1958. (There are documents in other files about troubled readings. There was apparently some official worry about a reading of ("cult leader") Allen Ginsberg that is documented in his file.) Hughes was invited to read by Ruth Witt-Diamant, as you mention, who also arranged several other West Coast readings for him. It is interesting that S.I. Hiyakawa is mentioned as arranging an event for Hughes in relation to jazz. The tape of his reading says that Hughes read at the SF Art Museum, which was a usual venue for the Center at that time.

Our file consists of xeroxes. I have no way of knowing if it is complete. You are welcome to look through it.

Best-Laura

[redacted]

> Dear Simon Schuchat, it's Kevin Killian, thanks for your remarks about my talk printed in the Church Newsletter. >I just want to say that Kevin Killian's piece "Faggot Vomit: Jack Spicer vs. 'the Maidens'" in the most recent issue of the Poetry Project newsletter is great.
>
> When will the Spicer bio be available?
>
> I'm supposed to finish it by June 15th then send it in to Wesleyan. Lew Ellingham and I are racing against time as usual. The death in 1996 of the Canadian modernist Dorothy Livesay underlines this vividly (Livesay was very helpful to me and Lew at the very end of her extraordinary life.) Now, as so often in the past, I need the help of poetics list members. I'm writing now about the San Francisco events of November and December 1958 when Spicer, along with other San Francisco and Berkeley intellectuals and bohemians, joined the fight against the administration of San Francisco State to protest its refusal to let Langston Hughes read at the SF State Poetry Center, where he had been invited by its founder (Ruth Witt-Diamant), because of his "Communist" past. I'm sure I can't be the only one to have covered this episode, which has so many resonances (Cold War politics, black/white relations in avant-garde poetry, homosexuality and the left, San Francisco as nexus for radical/conservative politics, etc., etc.) but I've looked in all the likely places and can't find much coverage of it at all. Even the Hughes biographies I've looked at don't mention his visit to San Francisco. [To cut to the chase, Hughes was not allowed to read on campus by Dumke, president of State, but eventually wound up reading on a houseboat--oh the irony!--provided by sympathetic admirers and anti-anti-Communists] Can anyone suggest any material on this outside of contemporary newspaper coverage? If so thanks very much.
>
> I'm always thanking you all and you always come through.
>
> Kevin K.

↑ Index

12. Steven Marks
Politics at the Gap
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Stephen Vincent wrote:

Curious - as an odd echo to this whole discussion- to now remember Gap's early ad & song campaign:
"Fall into the Gap" - and find a fashion cornucopia(?)
If I remember right, their name was chosen to vibrate with "Generation Gap" - that then (late 60's, early 70's?)
popular phrase became capitalist framing (marketing, social healing(?)) device. We (real adults) sell on one side of the Gap and you (the young) buy on the other. That will make peace!

Then from the nameless poet in Kent Johnson's post

> I think people lose > contact with the originality of their own suffering. I think many of us feel > feelings that are prescribed to us by advertisements, movies, capitalist > culture.

Aesthetics is politics. Maybe white caesurae can blank out white tornados.

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

13. Rachel Loden
heart's lacunae
Tue 1 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote (in part):

> OK., I'll admit and apologize for my rash annoyance--the discussion on white space is interesting and > learned, and I've learned from much of it. But let's see what we can do too to give a hand to these folks at FC2, ok?

Agreed! And since we're investigating the unnamed--what about an indelicate sensation that haunts the species at century's end? I mean that involuntary shudder overtaking a person, possibly this person, who has just posted some piece of lunch-chuffling idiocy to a list of, say, 400 people? What do we call that?

Poster's remorse? Post-postal tristesse?

Entertaining other nominations,

Rachel L.

↑ Index

14. shoemakers
Re: name gap (fwd)
Tue 1 Apr 1997

---

re: "poetix of car model names": it's true, isn't it, that Marianne Moore was asked by one of the big companies (ford?) to make up model names?

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

15. shoemakers
Re: heart's lacunae
Tue 1 Apr 1997

Hey Rachel, back when we were playing the neologism game i coined "flawdacity"--for the fool's courage to post anyway, even when it's probably going to seem dumb later (tho in my example it was 2am, not lunchtime). How about "post-departum repression" for the desire to take it back right after you've plunked the "send" command? Oops, i think i'm getting ready to have it right now...

On Tue, 1 Apr 1997, Rachel Loden wrote:

> KENT JOHNSON wrote (in part):
>
> OK., I'll admit and apologize for my rash annoyance--the discussion on white space is interesting and > learned, and I've learned from much of it. But let's see what we can do too to give a hand to these folks at FC2, ok?
>
> Agreed! And since we're investigating the unnamed--what about an indelicate sensation that haunts the species at century's end? I mean that involuntary shudder overtaking a person, possibly this person, who has just posted some piece of lunch-chuffling idiocy to a list of, say, 400 people? What do we call that?

> Poster's remorse? Post-postal tristesse?
>
> Entertaining other nominations,
>
> Rachel L.

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

16. nuyopoman
Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
Wed 2 Apr 1997

<<Hey Bob,

Geat to hear it. Do me a favor and see if you can record Brenda Coultas. I KNOW you know who she is & I know YOU know her work. Brenda's modesty needs to be supplimented by exposure!! Her wit/intellegence treated with kindness and nurturing.>>

Hey, Bil,

Gee, I wish I could make it to the Fest. You are truly stirring things up.

Be sure to catch USOP -- it's on KET starting this Sat, April 4, at 11:30 PM (I think I've got that right -- would appreciate yr checking and letting me know...)

Now.

As to Ms Coultas, whose poem about the Ostrich Movie I read at a recent reading of mine, so yes, I do agree with you, she'smost talented, this makes for a grabbing conundrum. Mainly, my working for the record label Mouth Almighty doesn't allow much for my recording people, a skill that ain't mine anyhoo. I'm like a translator between the arts.

What I need is poets who have an idea of how their work might translate to the audio medium, not as documentation, but where that (re)presentation finds an appropriate analogue for the text.

If this is voice only, so be it. Bbbbbbbut,,,,, does the addition of Other Sounds, music, breaths, frog sirens, create the possibility of dancing to it or doing your homework to it. I am speaking of all manner of utilitarian purposes for poetry. To get it via ear when the poet isn't here.

Besides the entire Mouth Almighty Catalogue ("The United States of Poetry," "fLIPPIN THE sCRIPT:Rap Meets Poetry," Michele Serros's "Stories from Chicano Falsa," Wammo's "Fat-Headed Stranger," "Grand Slam! Best of the National Poetry Slam," Ginsberg's "Ballad of the Skeletons," and the newly released, exquisite!, Sekou Sundiata's "Blue Oneness of Dreams") I would draw your attention to the extraordinary "The Past Didn't Go Anywhere" by Utah Philips and Ani DiFranco on the Righteous Babe label and the required but mixed-bag "A Century of Recorded Poetry" on Rhino, which is worth it for the Rukeyser and Stein alone, and there's oodles more....

as examples.

So, I guess what I'm saying, is that IN the label, I serve the vision (heh heh -- I mean the aural vision. I guess; I mean.) of the poet herself.

That said (heh heh), I'll call Brenda and have a cup of virtual coffee. You got her email?

And by the by, I wonder if anyone has any of the aforementioned CD's, and if there's any critiques about.

How often do you listen do poetry CDs?

How many times do you listen to a single one?

Thanks, List! and Bil

Bob Holman
http://www.mouthalmighty.com

↑ Index

17. Steve Carll
catching up on S.F. readings
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Our story begins at New College on March 14th, when Ed Foster and Giovanni Singleton read to a near-capacity crowd. Dodie Bellamy first introduced Ed, who read from such works as "Four Last Songs For Schubert" and "Wheel of Fortune", dropping such gems as:

anger is my treason
irony was your defence as if it was not solitude
the angel rises from the page
we don't need coffee, we don't need you your hand becomes a part of my depleted sky ticky-tock, ticky-tock, T.S. Eliot swallowed a clock it drew me up and I was tethered to the sun
I am my hierophant be prominent; I miss you
the first thing seen is true

the obligation each man owes himself is buried in the rhythms of his speech this jacket is the wind I'm moving in

Then Giovanni, a recent graduate of the Poetics program at New College, read from _Blue Cactus_ and _The Green Book, A Drama in Scenes_, among other pieces. Some of her pithier lines included:

names forgive their meaning this action believes syllables come inward from behind a decision drums do not go quietly
the world created with symbols is at times noncommittal there is a time to be silent and a time to be silent secrets offer a circle recognition of a mistake does not free one from desire to make it again interaction can differentiate from competition
I'm a compulsive but sensitive jaywalker multitasking has something to do with Mercury

Spotted in the crowd were Kevin Killian, Stephanie Baker, Adam Cornford, Spencer Selby, A.L. Nielsen, Thoreau Lovell, Andrew Joron, Leslie Davis, Norma Cole, Margie Sloan, Hung Tu, Joe Donahue, Simon Pettet, Jack and Adelle Foley, Renee Gladman, Tiffany Higgins, Lito Sandoval, Robert Gluck, Mary Burger, John High, Steve Dickison, Kush, Aaron Shurin, and Pam Lu.

On Monday March 18th there was a Poetics Faculty Reading at New College. Brilliantly hosted by Michael Price, the reading started off with David Meltzer reading from _No Eyes_ and, from _Beat Thing_, a hilarious catalogue of "Beat food":

when you get to Paradise, is it merely nice?
it's all umber, you dig?
when you disappear, fear disappears with you it's simply zipped and done with mirrors and windows
so, what about Beat food?
wasabi bullet from blasting eyes feel surge of immortality turn beatnik skins inside out L.A.'s poor poet horsemeat buffets suck on paper just to chew as if eating real food.

Lyn Hejinian went next, reading from _A Border Comedy_, from which I excerpt:

brutality delivers nothing but hurry every work of art is an uncommitted crime
I'm afraid of encountering a specter but I know it's only hope since we never went to bed, our need for murder is superfluous "stupid people dismiss as untrue anything that happens seldom" the driver is dressed in warm cardboard

Then Gloria Frym read a prose poem from a new manuscript called _Tagging_:

it is not as though his personal spirits cannot soar; no... never have we encountered a poet/butcher; this is perhaps sad.

Adam Cornford followed with some sonnets which included the following lines:

lint drifts ectoplasmic
God binary with Godzilla
the window hangs open like a second thought the universe, drunk with space, expands faster than it can cohere warm and difficult as friction, without them I take no step are you where now is?

To end off the evening, Tom Clark gave an emotion-filled reading of recent work which included:

not copper-stripped and subject to the worm all the ballast of familiar life old moon yearning in the new moon's arms what they mourn is as shifting and undefined as can be

The audience was the audience.

The very next night played host to another benefit for Prosodia, the New College literary journal, featuring recent San Francisco resident Duncan McNaughton, who helped invent the Poetics Program at New College back in the 70's, and the lovely and talented Marina Lazzara, another recent graduate. Marina went first, reading from old work and new, dazzling with her twisty-linguisty thoughtforms:

planets that carry their fading to us a slight touch of pond in the rearview mirror someone takes a rake to clear the cornea of its pond the garden on my back is a shoe they wear their hair like a wig although it is their own postpone the saucer and forgive us of our planets even over the intense cinema, you are king

Then Duncan regaled us with work from _The Pilot_, _Valparaiso_, a poem called "Paul Celan Cheers Up", and a "Horse goes into a bar" prose-poem that kept us in stitches. Some lines I snatched were:

the perjury of genius age and death will have their volition but neither is a fountainhead isn't there something else about her, that she mustn't end?
sanity--for that one must travel

northerly, and withdrawn, imagination dwells
I have a horse your friend can ride on, now that he can't ride on the breeze the mask doesn't hide the world, it uncovers it, like Dario says we put on the mask, and then we go home all of what one's love becomes capable of is called knowledge evidently a soul is infinitely apportionable

Present and accounted for this night were the likes of Simon Pettet, Eddie Berrigan, Steve Dickison, Tina Rotenberg, Steven Jones, Benjamin Hollander, Stephanie Baker, Maggie Schold, Charlie Palau and Sarah Menefee.

Finally on Sunday the 23rd at Canessa Park, Renee Gladman, Mary Burger, Hung Tu, Carl Rakosi, June, Eric Selland, Naoko, Larry Fixel, Benjamin Hollander, Andrew Joron, Michael Price, Adam and Raphael Cornford, Cami Jones, Kevin Killian, Kenlee, Spencer Selby, Jordon Zorker, Colleen Lookingbill, Chris Daniels, Pat Reed, Margie Sloan and Giovanni Singleton gathered to see yet another recent New College grad, Leslie Davis, and New Yorker Geoffrey O'Brien read. Leslie read from some newer short poems and her manuscript _Lucky Pup_. Behold some fragments:

building a shrine to the lost role of mother there is something intelligent here in this rain time imitates a solid line
the ones we chose for ushers became pallbearers love makes itself felt in the desire for shared sleep
I depend on you you rain on me once the skin is broken there is no other way

Geoffrey read from _The Floating City_ and _Sonic Ode_, revealing the war in his work between narrative and music:

he prays to the absence of a voice at rest he reshapes his ocean thrust of the sash upward clears thought the grass came screaming out of the ground noise body kept viable by fuzz and slam as if disappearance were a species of music coralline architecture of lullaby they puncture the mountain for flute notes
tram gone groggy

Geoffrey finished by reading a hilarious poem based on a dream, complete with an original dream song with not a half-bad melody. Then we went to Enrico's and talked about film noir.

April's gonna be a busy month for poetry here, with readings coming up by Darin DeStefano, Elizabeth Robinson, and Chris Daniels on the 5th, Deena Metzger on the 9th, Rob Hale, Doug Powell and George Albon on the 12th, John High on the 13th, Avery Burns and Ron Silliman on the 14th, Eileen Myles on the 15th, Steve McCaffery and Liz Willis on the 19th, Bob Grenier and Fanny Howe on the 20th, Kristin Prevallet on the 25th (talk on Helen Adams) and 27th (poetry reading), Barrett Watten on the 26th, Michael Boughn and Brian Lucas on the 27th, and then Ron Johnson on May Day. And that's not counting Kevin Killian's play "The Schwimmer Effect" on April 4th. Whew!

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

18. Bil Brown
Re: Mouth Almighty Opens Wide, Says "Awe"
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Bob & List,

PO-etry CDs are listened to often, but I think I (and the rest us) are waiting for a ONE shot performance on CD that hits. Tired of the antho-album. One artist, and without the sense of being backed up but maybe the sense (like RASA) of being part of the work as a whole. Early attempt at this (talking Ms. Estep & Mr. such-&-such) are good efforts but are easily forgetable. If we are as Ed Sanders put-it once, "the daemons urging toward the mainstream" then take advice from the indi labels that have made it before. Look at Sup-Pop (for example); making something limited and exclusive - like a poem 7" a month for a year or two) anything to make it collectable to people who wouldn't listen to the digital noise usually.

Maybe, even take example from Nicole Blackman's recent release and find the existing audience of another artist and utilize that to further an ENTIRE genre of popular culture (perf-po-ing is NOW part of pop culture 'cause of the likes of all of us that are doing-it PUBLICly.. spearheaded by you of course :))

... I don't know, it's odd talking about this on THIS list of all places. No one wants to hear this here. A different front, a brooding seriousness about the words, syntax, and sympathy for the phonemes here...

But, since it started here, it should continue. I would LOVE to hear responses from the fringe!

Bil Brown

↑ Index

19. Pierre Joris
[Fwd: radical poetics]
Wed 2 Apr 1997

---

by sarah.albany.edu (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id MAA19641 for <[redacted]>; Wed, 2 Apr 1997 12:03:25 -0500 (EST)
(8.7.x for naga.mailbase.ac.uk); Wed, 2 Apr 1997 17:26:43 +0100 (BST)
(8.7.x for naga.mailbase.ac.uk) with SMTP; Wed, 2 Apr 1997 17:26:40 +0100 (BST)
(8.6.12/ for dur.ac.uk) with SMTP; Wed, 2 Apr 1997 17:26:41 +0100
Date: Wed, 2 Apr 1997 17:26:40 +0100 (BST)
From: R I Caddel <[redacted]>
To: british n irish poets <[redacted]> Subject: radical poetics
to [redacted]

Announcing a twice yearly international of creative action:

Radical Poetics : Inventory of Possibilities

Conducted in the spirit of Eric Mottram

Issue One Spring 1997 4.00 pounds

Featuring Charles Bernstein, Fielding Dawson, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Allen Ginsberg, Pierre Joris, Martha King, Harryette Mullen, Jeff Nuttall, Jerome Rothenberg, T. Wignesan, Eric Mottram, John Stevens & John Whiting.

Orders to 23 Broadcroft Avenue Stanmore Middx HA7 1NT UK
Payment (Sterling only) payable to M.Hrebeniak

↑ Index

20. David Bromige

doug rice & others (came back as failed mail due to a "missing routing file" search me!

Wed 2 Apr 1997

> Date: Tue, 01 Apr 1997 19:34 -0600 (CST)
> From: [redacted]
> Subject: Mail failure
> To: David Bromige <[redacted]>
> MIME-version: 1.0
> Posting-date: Tue, 01 Apr 1997 19:34 -0600 (CST)
>
> FROM: AMS/CLLBMCS/POSTMASTER
> TO: David Bromige DATE: 04-01-97
> TIME: 19:34
> SUBJECT: Mail failure
> ----------
>
> [021] Message was not delivered due to missing routing file.
>
> ----------
> FROM: David Bromige (SMTP:[redacted])
>
> TO: SMTP:[redacted]
>
> SUBJECT: doug rice & the other fella
>
> ----------
>
> Rob Hardin et al: but what i wrote was that i had read the i'view with doug rice & the chapter by the other man, a dutch-sounding name i cant now recall. it was to the latter (with its lengthy evocation of orgasm) that i was referring. Sorry for the confusion., db

↑ Index

21. Jordan Davis

Ah

Wed 2 Apr 1997

Bob --

I do my homework to recordings of Ted Berrigan and Bernadette Mayer. I've listened to the cd packaged with the Exact Change Yearbook No. 1 many times. The Kerouac boxed set is tremendous, and not bad either is the _Howls Raps Roars_ set, especially the Allen Ginsberg and the Lenny Bruce.

Call me a purist, though, I like the unaccompanied Kerouac readings (what a self that guy put forward!) a lot better than the cute Zoot Sims or the noodly Steve Allen stuff. Which is not to say you can't put forward a great self with some music in the background, but it's tough ...

Getting going,
Jordan

↑ Index

22. Jonathan A Levin
Re: name gap (fwd)
Wed 2 Apr 1997

I have to share Don DeLillo's bit on car names, from White Noise, for those who haven't read it. The scene is the school gym, during an "airborn toxic event" (so it goes), the protagonist (chair of Hitler studies at the College on the Hill) is watching his daughter sleep, and she utters "Toyota Celica":

"A long moment passed before I realized this was the name of an automobile. The truth only amazed me more. The utterance was beautiful and mysterious, gold-shot with looming wonder. It was like the name of an ancient power in the sky, tablet-carved in cuneiform. It made me feel that something hovered. But how could this be? A simple brand name, an ordinary car. How could these near-nonsense words, mumured in a child's restless sleep, make me sense a meaning, a presence? She was only repeating some TV voice. Toyota Corolla, Toyota Celica, Toyota Cressida. Supranational names, computer-generated, more or less universally pronounceable. Part of every child's brain noise, the substatic regions too deep to probe. Whatever its source, the utterance struck me with the impact of a moment of splendid transcendence. I depend on my children for that."

JL

↑ Index

23. Sylvester Pollet
Re: heart's lacunae
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Rachel, aren't you reinventing the wheel? I thought it was called Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. but I love "lunch-chuffling idiocy," especially at this moment when I'm due at a meeting in 20 minutes. thanks! Sylvester

And since we're investigating the unnamed--what about an >indelicate sensation that haunts the species at century's end? I mean >that involuntary shudder overtaking a person, possibly this person, who >has just posted some piece of lunch-chuffling idiocy to a list of, say, >400 people? What do we call that?

>
>Poster's remorse? Post-postal tristesse?
>
>Entertaining other nominations,
>
>Rachel L.

↑ Index

24. Gwyn McVay
Re: name gap (fwd)
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Moore's choice was Utopian Turtletop.

g.

↑ Index

25. Bob Grotjohn
Re: name gap (fwd)
Wed 2 Apr 1997

[redacted] wrote:
>
> re: "poetix of car model names": it's true, isn't it, that Marianne > Moore was asked by one of the big companies (ford?) to make up model > names?
>
> Steve Shoemaker

A car--Ford decided on Edsel (not Moore's choice). Ford didn't use her suggestions, none of which I can remember right now, though one was something like turtletop flyer (might have worked as well as Edsel).

--
Bob Grotjohn

↑ Index

26. Mark Prejsnar
Burma Needs Your Land! (fwd)
Wed 2 Apr 1997

As a Mass. native and longtime resident/social activist in the Boston area, I subscribe to a list that posts left activist announcements for the Eastern Mass. area. I think folks on the list might be interested in the project described below. A genuinely interesting idea about linking our native poetic heritage and political activism!

Mark P.
Atlanta

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 1 Apr 1997 17:35:31 -0500
From: Nick Jehlen <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Burma Needs Your Land!

Dear Activists,

As part of the effort to build the boycott against companies supporting the Burmese dictators, we're planning a "Burma-Slave" publicity campaign based on the old Burma-Shave roadside signs. Detailed information on the Burma-Shave signs (and the new "Burma-Slave" signs) is provided below.

The idea behind this campaign is to set up signs by the sides of roads bearing short poems which illustrate the connection between Texaco and UNOCAL and the repression and brutality in Burma. Ideally, these signs will be permanent, but in some cases we will have people hold signs in places where long-term signs can't be placed.

If you own land by the side of a highway or road, or know someone who does, please contact Nick Jehlen at the address below. If you are interested in participating in or organizing a Burma Slave protest in your area, please email the address below with information about where you'd like to set up the signs and how many people you could bring to a protest.

Nick Jehlen
email: [redacted]
voicemail: [redacted] (please email when possible to keep phone bills down)

Burma Shave: History In 1927 a small company began using a new form of advertising in order to promote its newest product: brushless shaving cream. They set up a series of signs by the side of a road, each one with a line of a advertising slogan on it. Over the next forty years, these signs were put up all over the country, with hundreds of different slogans - most of them short rhyming poems, all of them ending with a sign which read "Burma Shave". (The Burma Shave name comes from the fact that many of the ingredients came from Burma.) These signs became a favorite pastime for travelers, and were used for the next forty years in one of the most successful advertising campaigns ever.

Examples of Burma Shave signs:
don't stick your elbow out so far it might go home
in another car.
Burma-Shave

sleep in a chair
nothing to lose
but a nap
at the wheel is a permanent snooze
Burma-Shave

Burma-Slave While boycotts are built one person at a time, to become successful, they must penetrate the public consciousness. A company's brand-name is a valuable commodity, and by spreading the word about companies policies (through a boycott campaign) this commodity is devalued.

The idea behind the original Burma Shave signs was inspire people to watch for the poems, to read them, to remember them, and to get them to talk to their friends and family about them. The idea behind the Burma Slave signs is the same. While we don't expect to put up as many signs, we will spread the word through media exposure. Many media outlets that would never touch a boycott story may be more willing to run a story about the rebirth of the old Burma Shave signs.

Examples of Burma Slave signs:

Burmese children build the roads to bring you gas
to help you go.
Slave labor is the hidden cost when you pull into Texaco.
Burma-Slave

Our money goes to enslave the masses.
Set burma free

boycott UNOCAL gases.
Burma-Slave

Permanent and Temporary Signs The ideal place for a set of Burma Slave signs is by the side of a small highway, on land owned by a supporter. Depending on the speed of the cars on the road, a set of signs would need between 50 and 250 yards of road-side space.

In the mean time, we'd like to set up a set of signs by the side of a road (Memorial Drive or Soldiers Field Road in Boston) with a person holding each sign up for an hour or two.

↑ Index

27. Bob Grotjohn
Re: name gap (fwd)
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Gwyn McVay wrote:
>
> Moore's choice was Utopian Turtletop.
>
> g.

That would have been better than Edsel. It would have been a better name not just for the car but for the guy the car was named after (with aplogies to anyone on the list named Edsel). He could have moved to an old Wisconsin dairy-town and nobody would have noticed.

↑ Index

28. David Israel
Re: white caesura
Wed 2 Apr 1997

~~~~~~~~~~ start quote ~~~~~~~~~~
Date: Tue, 1 Apr 1997 09:31:00 -0800
From: Franklin Bruno <[redacted]>
Steven Marks said:

> white caesurae -- This gets my vote. Indicates both the visual and the breath gap in a term that seems to suggest a mythological creature.

What if the poem's printed on pink paper?

fjb ~~~~~~~~~~ end quote ~~~~~~~~~~

okay, how about:

negative opacity?
akashic bandwidth?
blank blippism?

a room w/ a view?
elbow-room sans elbow?
"a brief nirvana break"

(?)

d.i.

↑ Index

29. David Israel
Subject: heart's lacunae
Wed 2 Apr 1997

On All Fools' Day [as the Britts would have it, but where I was reared, 'twas April Fools' Day], thus quoth Rachel Loden:

~~~ ~~~ ~~~ start of quote ~~~ ~~~ ~~~ ... And since we're investigating the unnamed--what about an indelicate sensation that haunts the species at century's end? I mean that involuntary shudder overtaking a person, possibly this person, who has just posted some piece of lunch-chuffling idiocy to a list of, say, 400 people? What do we call that?

Poster's remorse? Post-postal tristesse?

Entertaining other nominations,

Rachel L.
~~~ ~~~ ~~~ end of quote ~~~ ~~~ ~~~ interesting jump from macro- to micro-shudder (from the humankind at-the-fin to poster-at-the-mouse) -- here's nominations:

with oopsful affect an oopssome regret post-post pathetics (PPPs) --

as in: "No sooner had Jonny Hackerstein hit the Reply key, than he was awash, indeed unwontedly o'ertaken by a sudden (and I dare say all to lucid) sense of oopssome regret. 'Get ahold of yourself, Jonny" -- his auto-admonishment feedback loop kicked in quick (hey, Boulder U. training, always at the ready). 'Enogh w/ the post-post pathetics, key-boy. We've got' -- he glanced up from his VitaSoy swizz as the revolvo-door injected into NutraVille the silverfoil semblance of none other than the much-ballyhooed Mona Lisa Applewood -- 'a little, like they say, job to do.'"

d.i.

↑ Index

30. DS
Re: Ah
Wed 2 Apr 1997

I'll put in a vote for the Kerouac also. I play Hydrogen Jukebox for homework though. I also have a WCW reads himself that i would play more were it on cd rather than tape - but do play. & i listen to homer read by actors - in the car (when not music or the goon show)

Dan

At 08:39 AM 4/2/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Bob --
>
>I do my homework to recordings of Ted Berrigan and Bernadette Mayer. I've >listened to the cd packaged with the Exact Change Yearbook No. 1 many >times. The Kerouac boxed set is tremendous, and not bad either is the >_Howls Raps Roars_ set, especially the Allen Ginsberg and the Lenny Bruce.
>
>Call me a purist, though, I like the unaccompanied Kerouac readings (what a >self that guy put forward!) a lot better than the cute Zoot Sims or the >noodly Steve Allen stuff. Which is not to say you can't put forward a >great self with some music in the background, but it's tough ...
>
>Getting going,
>Jordan
>
>

↑ Index

31. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Ah
Wed 2 Apr 1997

> Call me a purist, though, I like the unaccompanied Kerouac readings (what a self that guy put forward!) a lot better than the cute Zoot Sims or the noodly Steve Allen stuff. Which is not to say you can't put forward a great self with some music in the background, but it's tough ...

> I'll put in a vote for the Kerouac also. I play Hydrogen Jukebox for homework though. I also have a WCW reads himself that i would play more were it on cd rather than tape - but do play. & i listen to homer read by actors - in the car (when not music or the goon show)

John Cage is great too on the Roratorio CD reading his mesostic version of _Finnegan's Wake_ with an Irish accent.

Bill B.

↑ Index

32. John Kinsella
Salt
Wed 2 Apr 1997

For those interested, Salt poetry journal should be available through your local book stores. If not, ask them to order through:

Penguin Books: Australia and NZ
Specialized Book Services: USA and Canada
Liverpool University Press: Britain and Europe.

Back issues and Folio(Salt) books are also available through AWOL.

The publisher is Fremantle Arts Centre Press in conjunction with Folio (Salt).

Yours
John Kinsella (Editor)

↑ Index

33. John Kinsella
P.S. Salt
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Salt 9 includes work by John Ashbery, Caroline Bergvall, Andrew Duncan, Dorothy Hewett, Michael Hulse, Tony Lopez, Rod Mengham, Ian Patterson, Peter Porter, JH Prynne (trans in French by Bernard Dubourg), Tracy Ryan, Susan M Schultz, Iain Sinclair, John Tranter, and others.

Yours
John Kinsella (Ed.)

↑ Index

34. DS
Re: Ah
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Is this still aROUND?

> John Cage is great too on the Roratorio CD reading his mesostic version of _Finnegan's Wake_ with an Irish accent.
>
> Bill B.

↑ Index

35. Dave Zauhar
Creeley and Wieners at the Warhol
Wed 2 Apr 1997

Robert Creeley and John Wieners will be in Pittsburgh PA on Saturday, April 12th for a reading at the Andy Warhol Museum, which is located in an old building at 117 Sandusky street (north side). The reading starts at 7:30 and is held in conjunction with the opening of a special exhibition of Francesco Clemente's portraits (including Creeley's and Wiener's). Admission to the museum (and the reading) is $6, $5 for senior citizens and $4 for students. And if you happen to find yourself in Pittsburgh this summer (like, say you've committed a crime against the state and are exiled there), the Clemente exhibit is up through August 31.

Yours from Appalachia

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

36. Chris Stroffolino
Re: POETICS In
Thu 3 Apr 1997

This is a general vague and somewhat shot in the dark attempt to help someone locate an apartment in NYC (Manhattan ideally, but mostly brooklyn). The person is well-behaved, potty trained, and all that, and makes an excellant pet, provided you don't tie it to the doorknob. Anyway, I should be more serious about this considering the desperation my friend is currently in---and if ANYBODY knows of something, with or with out roomate, available ASAP (though May 1st is fine, etc.) in Brooklyn or lower east side kinda range of NYC (rent circa no more than $800 per month, though if realtor's fee is waived I mean dodged

(transcended or collapsed), the person would surely be interested in negotiating. could you please backchannel if any, even somewhat remote, leads may materialize. Thanks you, suspiciously, timidly, yours, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

37. Christopher Alexander
n/formation 1.1
Thu 3 Apr 1997

---

just a quick announcement before I cut out (sign off) this afternoon to leave for the denver conference

~~~~~~~~~~~~~announcement follows~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

the first issue of n/formation is now available (on-line), featuring work by

Peter Ganick, our own Alan Jen Sondheim, Martin Corless-Smith, Linda V. Russo,

& myself, plus a review-article by the lovely Steven Marks. it can be viewed at

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce
or http://128.110.40.180/~calexand/nonce (same site)

comments are appreciated, backchannel of course.
  --enjoy
            chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

        Hey!!
              Now Available for a mere $4:
          constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

38. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Ah
Thu 3 Apr 1997

> Is this still aROUND?
~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Yes. The CD is available with a German label (I think it is Ars Acoustica or something like that). I am at work now, but will extract more information from the label tonite.

Bill B.

↑ Index

39. Herb Levy
Re: Ah
Thu 3 Apr 1997

The US company Mode has a 2-CD set of Cage "Reading Through Finnegans Wake", the hour-long horspiel "Roaratorio" of sounds collaged over this vocal track, & an interview with Cage about the works. The German label Wergo has released a CD of just Roaratorio).

FWIW, I don't think Cage is putting on an Irish accent, it's just the way his in-toning voice sounds regardless of the source material for the text.

I'd also recommend cris cheek's Skin Upon Skin & Nate Mackey's Strick in the spoken CD category.

Bests,

Herb

> Is this still aROUND?
>
> John Cage is great too on the Roratorio CD reading his mesostic version of _Finnegan's Wake_ with an Irish accent.
>
> Bill B.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

40. dbkk
Re: catching up on S.F. readings
Thu 3 Apr 1997

At 10:55 PM -0800 4/1/97, Steve Carll wrote:

> April's gonna be a busy month for poetry here, with readings coming up by Darin DeStefano, Elizabeth Robinson, and Chris Daniels on the 5th, Deena

> Metzger on the 9th, Rob Hale, Doug Powell and George Albon on the 12th, John High on the 13th, Avery Burns and Ron Silliman on the 14th, Eileen Myles on the 15th, Steve McCaffery and Liz Willis on the 19th, Bob Grenier and Fanny Howe on the 20th, Kristin Prevallet on the 25th (talk on Helen Adams) and 27th (poetry reading), Barrett Watten on the 26th, Michael Boughn and Brian Lucas on the 27th, and then Ron Johnson on May Day. And that's not counting Kevin Killian's play "The Schwimmer Effect" on April 4th. Whew!

Good work, Steve, summarizing all these dates. May I, Kevin Killian, add a few more events happening this week in Bay Area? Tonight, April 3, Harry Mathews at the Alliance Francaise; Monday, Jeanette Winterson at Diesel; Tuesday, David Sedaris at Rizzoli and I believe it's April 10th, Robin Blaser will be stealing in and out of UC Santa Cruz.

Looked at this way it does sound kind of tiring.

↑ Index

41. dbkk
elephant(itis)
Thu 3 Apr 1997

I thought this could stand another round.

Dodie

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Thu, 3 Apr 1997 09:06:43 -0500
> Reply-To: Queer Studies List <[redacted]>
> Sender: Queer Studies List <[redacted]>
> From: "David H. Serlin" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Heaven's Gate
> To: [redacted]
> Status: U
>
> Hey all, I thought I would share with you something I picked up from another list-serv, this one aimed at making fun of cultural studies, by real live scientists. ALthough you might find one or some of these topics funny, be aware that the general tenor of the list was to laugh laugh laugh about how silly cultstud types are, and science studies types even more so. While many in science/queer/gender studies regard people like Donna Haraway or Sandra Harding as visionary, sci-tech people bash them with increasing regularity. A word to the wise.
>
> Date: Tue, 1 Apr 1997 06:52:01 -0500
> From: "Harry M. Marks, H-SCI-MED-TECH" <[redacted]>
> Subject: CFP: Cultural Studies Conference (x H-LABOR)

[redacted] writes:

A CONFERENCE PROPOSAL

A CONFERENCE PROPOSAL

THE ELEPHANT AND CULTURAL STUDIES

The Elephant as "Physical" Other
Does the Elephant Exist? Zoological Hegemony vs. Cultural Fabrication.
Pachyderm "Evolution": Eurochronocities and Eurocentric Linearity in the late (post)modern zoological script.
Tracking the elephant through texts: Western Visuality and Olfactory Perception

The Elephant: Interrogating Multi-Cultural Rhetoricities:
The elephant: Cyborg, Ethnicity, or "Species"?
(E) (L) (E) (P) (H) (A) (N) (T)? What's That": Exploitation and the Rhetorical Stategies of Denial in Thai Forestry Camps.
Viceroy-on-Elephant or Elephant-on-Viceroy? Accidents and the Uncertainties of Domination in some Durbars of the Late British Raj.

British Raj.

The Elephant As Eurocentric Object:
The elephant and the Lion: the Metaphoricity of Binarity in Early Medieval Texts.
"Hunting the Beloved Other": The elephant as Paradigmatic Problematic of Conservationist Conversations in Theodore Roosevelt's African memoirs.
Garage Sales and elephants: A Dialogue of Contested Spaces.

The Elephant As (Post)Modernist Construction
Post-Modern, (Post)Modern, or Postcontemporary Elephant? Epistemic Privileging and Discursive Spaces in MLA Debates.
Wild Elephant, Tamed elephant, Zoo-Confined Elephant, Extinct Elephant: Alternative Modernities for a Culturally-Constructed Ani(Male).
Elephant Ears: Symbolic Excess in (Post)Nouvelle Pastry Culture.
Situating the Paradigmatic other: The Elephant in Weight-Loss Discourse.

PINE 3.95 MESSAGE TEXT Folder: saved-messages Message 2 of 10 31%

---

*David Serlin, American Studies * NYU * 285 Mercer St., 8th floor **

> *New York, NY 10003-6607 * [redacted] (office) * [redacted] (fax) *
> *e-mail: [redacted] *

↑ Index

42. Charles Bernstein
Erica Hunt & Marty Erlich at Brandeis
Thu 3 Apr 1997

Thursday, April 10

7:00pm
"Can You Hear a Motion": a jazz and poetry collaboration with Marty Ehrlich, Erica Hunt and Stan Strickland

Rose Art Museum, Brandeis University

This is the first such collaboration by Marty and Erica. I'd love to be be able to go!

↑ Index

43. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: elephant(itis)
Thu 3 Apr 1997

---

just thought people should know that the Elephantine parody call for papers long predates the Sokal affair, and was not simply a science-technology attack on cultstuds -- I was first handed a copy of this thing four years ago by a colleague in the philosophy department -- I think, like the term "politically correct," it may have had its origins in self-parody and then been seized upon for use by people with little or no sense of humor -- intersting to see it reappear as it works its way through our culture -- one might even make a study of the culture of circulation as it moves from xerox room bulletin board to electronic bulletin board -- one might even give a conference paper on it!

↑ Index

44. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: catching up on S.F. readings
Thu 3 Apr 1997

Dear List Members: May I add a few more SF area readings? Elizabeth Willis and Paul Hoover at UC Santa Cruz Bookstore, April 8, Paul Hoover at the Poetry Center, Unitarian Church, April 10, 7:30pm, Aaron Shurin and Ruth Schwartz at the Poetry Center, SFSU, April 17th, 4:30 pm, as well.

Best,
Maxine Chernoff

On Thu, 3 Apr 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> At 10:55 PM -0800 4/1/97, Steve Carll wrote:
>
> April's gonna be a busy month for poetry here, with readings coming up by Darin DeStefano, Elizabeth Robinson, and Chris Daniels on the 5th, Deena Metzger on the 9th, Rob Hale, Doug Powell and George Albon on the 12th, John High on the 13th, Avery Burns and Ron Silliman on the 14th, Eileen Myles on the 15th, Steve McCaffery and Liz Willis on the 19th, Bob Grenier and Fanny Howe on the 20th, Kristin Prevallet on the 25th (talk on Helen Adams) and 27th (poetry reading), Barrett Watten on the 26th, Michael Boughn and Brian Lucas on the 27th, and then Ron Johnson on May Day. And that's not counting Kevin Killian's play "The Schwimmer Effect" on April 4th. Whew!
>
> Good work, Steve, summarizing all these dates. May I, Kevin Killian, add a few more events happening this week in Bay Area? Tonight, April 3, Harry Mathews at the Alliance Francaise; Monday, Jeanette Winterson at Diesel; Tuesday, David Sedaris at Rizzoli and I believe it's April 10th, Robin Blaser will be stealing in and out of UC Santa Cruz.
>
> Looked at this way it does sound kind of tiring.

↑ Index

45. Joel Kuszai
Notice: Change of Address
Thu 3 Apr 1997

---

sorry to take up space on the information super-highway, but there may be some people out there I may not reach in time.

NOTICE!

Meow Press has moved. The new address is:

p.o. Box 527
Buffalo, NY 14226

effective immediately.

↑ Index

46. Jean Day
Re: POETICS Digest - 1 Apr 1997 to 2 Apr 1997
Thu 3 Apr 1997

Dear Steve (Carll) and all,

Barrett Watten's not reading by himself on April 26th! He's reading with me:

> Jean Day / Barrett Watten
> New Langton Arts
> 1246 Folsom St.
> San Francisco
> 8:00 pm (I think)

We'll both be reading from new books--his is FRAME from Sun & Moon, mine THE LITERAL WORLD from Xenos.

Hastily,

Jean

↑ Index

47. Erik Skjeveland
Bukowski's splash
Thu 3 Apr 1997

I keep reading the poem "splash" from "Betting on the Muse". To me this poem seems to be a description of Buk's special kind of narrative style. The style he kept sharpening til the end.

On the other hand this poem also has a feel to it that is reminiscent of Buk's early more surrealistic poems.

This caused me to wonder about when this poem first appeared.

I know many of the poems in BOTM are from the early 60's, but I haven't been able to pinpoint were/when "splash" was first published.

Do any of you out there know?
Anyone else like this poem?

All this wondering gives me something to do while waiting for "Bone Palace Ballet"

[redacted]
University of Bergen, Norway

↑ Index

48. Charles Alexander
Re: POETICS Digest - 1 Apr 1997 to 2 Apr 1997
Thu 3 Apr 1997

> We'll both be reading from new books--his is FRAME from Sun & Moon, mine THE LITERAL WORLD from Xenos.

Jean

Tell me more about Xenos. What other books? etc.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

49. Joseph Zitt
Re: Ah
Thu 3 Apr 1997

DS wrote:
>
> I'll put in a vote for the Kerouac also. I play Hydrogen Jukebox for > homework though. I also have a WCW reads himself that i would play more were > it on cd rather than tape - but do play. & i listen to homer read by actors
> - in the car (when not music or the goon show)

Well, I'm glad to no longer have homework... but I like to listen to bits of Cage's Empty Words while I'm working (whether it's the Italian Riot mix or the Coney Island Sun Ra collaboration depends on my mood) as well as Jackson Mac Low and the Four Horsemen. -- ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

50. Joseph Zitt
Re: Ah
Thu 3 Apr 1997

DS wrote:
>
> Is this still aROUND?
>

> >John Cage is great too on the Roratorio CD reading his mesostic version of > >_Finnegan's Wake_ with an Irish accent.

Yes, it's available on CD from Mode and from Wergo (though I strongly recommend the Mode double-CD which has the complete spoken track on its own (the Wergo, I believe, contains one section) as well as a long recorded interview and two very thick booklets, one of which contains the complete mesostic. --
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

51. David Israel
Re: elephant(itis)
Thu 3 Apr 1997

Quoth Aldon L. Nielsen : << . . . one might even make a study of the culture of circulation as it moves from xerox room bulletin board to electronic bulletin board -- one might even give a conference paper on it! >>

& quoth Daniel Zimmerman:

<<Title for conference paper: "Elephants All The Way Down.">>

a nice reminder of the turtles tale that (it seems) I heard Ram Dass tell (in talk at UCLA circa '70 -- tempus is fugiting still) . . .

but anent the Elephant -- coincidentally, on the Indology listproc in the past day or two, Elephants have surface. Not related to the call-for-papers satire; rather, quest-for-Pali-text references (re: the "blind men & the elephant" allegorical tale -- attributed to the Buddha) -- said cites being duly provided, & further refs. to Rumi's version (in the Mathnawi) being likewise noted. So if anyone gets "serious" abt. an elephant paper (or conference or whatnot), let me know & I'll zap you w/ the footnote fodder.

pachydermially yours,
d.i.

↑ Index

52. mgk3k
new e-list for MLA members
Fri 4 Apr 1997

PLEASE REPOST WIDELY: LIST ANNOUNCEMENT

REPOST TO HUMANITIES, LITERATURE, WRITING, RHETORIC, AND LANGUAGE LISTS
REPOST TO DEPARTMENT LISTS
REPOST TO PROFESSIONAL-ISSUES/ACADEMIC-LABOR LISTS

Delegate-L, a discussion list for MLA members interested in public and institutional policy affecting the study and teaching of the humanities.

For the first time ever, members of the Modern Language Association will be able to discuss freely, on a year-round basis, the issues and actions that they would like the MLA Delegate Assembly to consider.

Topics can include all matters of academic working conditions and professional life, including public policy, legislation, publication, and the workplace dignity of colleagues at all ranks of the profession, including adjunct and student labor.*

To join, send the message:

subscribe delegate-l yourfirstname yourlastname to
[redacted]

If you have any trouble subscribing, please post the list manager, Alan Rea <[redacted]>.

Sponsored and managed by the Graduate Student Caucus, Delegate-L is an unmoderated discussion list open to all MLA members interested in governance. While only MLA members and governance figures are invited to participate in this list, Delegate-L is not sponsored or managed by the Modern Language Association or its Delegate Assembly.

* Specificially, the MLA Constitution provides that one of the responsibilities of the assembly shall be to "formulate and submit to the membership for ratification resolutions on matters of public and institutional policy affecting the study and teaching of the humanities and the status of the language and literature professions represented by the association. Such matters may include proposed or enacted legislation, regulations, or other governmental and institutional policies, conditions of employment and publication, or additional matters that affect the association, its members in their professional capacities, or the dignity of members' work"(MLA Const.9.C.10).

Any conversation meeting this description or addressing any of the other governance responsibilities of the MLA Delegate Assembly is appropriate to delegate-l.

↑ Index

53. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

---

shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?

At 3:04 PM 4/4/97, Alan Jen Sondheim wrote:
>The Daily News said 4 months to a year.
>
>If it wasn't for Howl, I would have broken down in Pennsyvania; it was my >first epiphany. I found it at a local bookshop when it first came out; I >was around 13 at the time and already depressive.
>
>Alan
>
>On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>
>> Allen Ginsberg has been diagnosed with liver cancer and is not given much >> more time to live. There are articles about his illness in today's New York >> Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.
>>
>> I would imagine everyone reading this will have the same intense reaction I >> am having. It seems like Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life.
>>
>
>_____
>URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
>MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ ++++++++++++++
++
>IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted]
>CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 +++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, 1997

↑ Index

54. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: elephant(itis)
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>
> just thought people should know that the Elephantine parody call for > papers long predates the Sokal affair, and was not simply a > science-technology attack on cultstuds -- I was first handed a copy of > this thing four years ago by a colleague in the philosophy department -- I > think, like the term "politically correct," it may have had its origins in > self-parody and then been seized upon for use by people with little or no > sense of humor -- intersting to see it reappear as it works its way > through our culture -- one might even make a study of the culture of > circulation as it moves from xerox room bulletin board to electronic > bulletin board -- one might even give a conference paper on it!

Title for conference paper: "Elephants All The Way Down."

↑ Index

55. Hugh Steinberg
Re: elephant(itis)
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Reminds me of chain letters/urban legends. One of the things I've just received (from two separate sources) is this scary message warning people on the internet not to open any messages entitled "penpal," which alledgedly conceals a virus that wipes your hard drive, then mails out copies to everyone on your mailing list. It's a hoax, but just scary enough to make anyone nervous (sort of like the one about the gangsta initiation ritual of driving around in a car with the headlights out and shooting anyone who flashes their highbeams at them).

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

56. George Bowering
Re: elephant(itis)
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Just a note. The disease that features oversized feet etc, is called not elephantitis but properly elephantiasis.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

57. Alan Jen Sondheim

The Mess or Wound

Fri 4 Apr 1997

-

JENNIFER BANGS AT HER NAMESAKE SERVER: The Mess or Wound

{k:22} Banging Jennifer Banging Alan: I tried to get into you ksh: Banging: not found over and over again, Alan/ {k:16} finger [redacted] >> z Jennifer never answers the {k:17} host jennifer.com >> z email. I stalk Alan/Jenn- {k:18} lynx http://www.jennifer.com/ >> z ifer who just won't listen {k:19} telnet jennifer.com 13 >> z to anything I have to say. Connection closed by foreign host. {k:20} telnet jennifer.com 21 >> z USER sondheim My name's her own. PASS jennifer My name's my own. PASV I'm not passive. QUIT I'll never quit. Connection closed by foreign host. She's not foreign. {k:33} telnet jennifer.com 25 >> z I send him mail. HELO panix3.panix.com I'm very polite. VERB MAIL FROM: [redacted] I am his mail. RCPT TO: [redacted] DATA Alan, I love you madly! I tell the truth. Jennifer! I sign my name. QUIT Connection closed by foreign host.

[jennifer.com] The sad results:

jennifer.com has address 198.6.197.1
jennifer.com mail is handled by mail.nicom.com
^[[?1h^[= (B^[)0^[[m ^[[H^[[J^[[23B^[[0;7m Getting http://www.jennifer.com/Look up www.jennifer.com.^[[0m ^H^H^H^H^[[0;7m Unable to locate remote host www.jennifer.com.Alert!: Unable to connect to remote host.^[[0m ^H^H^H^H^H^[[K^[[?1l^[>
lynx: Can't access startfile http://www.jennifer.com/
Trying 198.6.197.1...
Connected to jennifer.com.
Escape character is '^]'.
Thu Apr 3 19:59:05 1997
Trying 198.6.197.1...
Connected to jennifer.com.
Escape character is '^]'.
220 dcez.nicom.com FTP server (Version wu-2.4(1) Fri Dec 29 06:15:49 GMT 1995) ready.
331 Password required for sondheim.
530 Login incorrect.

503 Login with USER first.
221 Goodbye.

Trying 198.6.197.1... Connected to jennifer.com. Escape character is '^]'. 220 dcez.nicom.com ESMTP Sendmail 8.8.3/8.7.3; Thu, 3 Apr 1997 20:10:57 -0500 (EST) 250 dcez.nicom.com Hello panix3.panix.com [198.7.0.4], pleased to meet you 250 Verbose mode 250 [redacted]... Sender ok 250 [redacted]... Recipient ok 354 Enter mail, end with "." on a line by itself 050 [redacted]... Connecting to sondheim.com. via smtp... 050 220 hijinks.com ESMTP Sendmail 8.8.5/8.7.3; Thu, 3 Apr 1997 16:49:28 -0800 (PST)
[...]
Closing connection to sondheim.com.
closing connection 221 dcez.nicom.com closing connection

↑ Index

58. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: catching up on S.F. readings
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Dear List Members: Tried sending this out earlier but it somehow vanished. (Kevin, did it go just to you?) Anyway, more readings in April: April 8 at UC Santa Cruz Bookstore: Elizabeth Willis and Paul Hoover. April 10 at SF State Poetry Center, Unitarian Church on Franklin, 7:30 pm: Paul Hoover. April 17 at SF State Poetry Center (on campus), 4:30 pm: Aaron Shurin. Also, Susan Schultz will be reading May 1 at a cafe in SF. More details later-- (Susan: what's the exact name?)

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

59. hg
more soapbox BLASTS
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Since I can't go to the rutgers conference on "poetry & the public sphere", I'm filling up webspace with an (im)pertinent blast again, maybe some well- meaning conference attender can make use of this in some way. The Poetry Mission was started with thoughts around this question, and on Apr 23rd we're hosting a public forum ourselves to assess poetry's public role. We're inviting writers and others to bring poems & statements to contribute.

This is a draft of my own personal blast. It's probably too long & prosaic for what we're planning. So use it or abuse it, rutgerzians.

ROLE OF POETRY

Poetry like humanity is capable of standing erect on its own two feet, and this has been one of the motivating ideas of the Poetry Mission. We started this project believing that poetry can & should make itself heard in a free and open civic space, mediated as little as possible by large and peripheral institutions.

However, as I tried ot prepare for today's event, I came to the conclusion that for me, at least, this social role exists in tandem with a more narrowly intellectual role. I say poetry plays a role which is _at least_ as major as that of any of the human or pure sciences, in revealing whatever universal realities are accessible to human beings. This particular claim has been rejected again and again--first, by those who deny poetry's propositional efficacy; second, by those who accept the unbridgeable chasm between the arts and sciences; and third, by those who, in the name of postmodernism or various economic determinisms, deny meaning to either rationality or tradition. In order for poetry to stand on a par with the other arts and sciences, it must first of all acknowledge its own didactic potential-- as giving form to a criticism of life, in the school of bitter and ecstatic experience. Secondly, it must come to terms with science _on its own terms_-- recognizing a shared creative process in the formation of scientific concepts, while rejecting a dehumanized (and profane) scientific positivism.

These demands on poetry will strike many of you, I'm sure, as absurdly academic. And if there weren't something more than this, your scepticism would be justified. But in my view poetry stakes its claim to stand among the arts and sciences--even, perhaps, at their matrix--_not_ because of its status as "Queen of the Arts", or as the quintessential expression of aesthetic values. Poetry, by the most basic means--by means of the individual human voice--fulfills, sanctions, and profoundly _transcends_ aesthetics. The theory of poetry--as Dante, Emily Dickinson, Walt Whitman, Wallace Stevens, and Paul Celan, among others, conceive it--rests on a theory of reality. This theory stands distinct from science, on the one hand, and nihilism, on the other. You might call it an Orphic theory of reality. I find it difficult to encapsulate in a phrase, but it might go as follows: _the Universe is a vast meaningful riddle of animate signs. Our destiny is to spell them out._ Or, as Shakespeare's Master Shallow [I think] put it more concisely: _All's figures._

I thought I would end my statement there, but I find I've left out the really important, paradoxical thing. By giving form to the free, _unofficial_, undogmatic human voice, poetry is empowered to _declare its ignorance_-- to put experience before abstraction, the heart before the mind. In so doing, poetry draws its most subtle, most scandalous, most dangerous, most _perfect_ image of the truth.

- Henry Gould
for the Wm. L. Bergeron Memorial Reading[Event] 1997, Cranston, RI 4.23.97

[this might be a pretty good manifesto for the Providence School]

↑ Index

60. KENT JOHNSON
Allen Ginsberg's death
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Here is the great equalizer, it would seem. Language is slippery, pronouns are fuzzy, poetry is not poetry. But death? Death is death, and there it is, no experimental messing with it.

I suspect Ginsberg would not want any sentimental sniffling. He's been talking about death for a long time. I remember at the Orono conference in--was it--'93? I approached Ginsberg after his reading there and introduced myself as the person who had edited the Buddhist anthology of contemporary American poets in which he prominently figured. I was sure he owuld be impressed, probably would embrace me warmly, since clearly this was the most important anthology to appear in post-war America, intro by Gary Snyder, numerous avant-garde poets along with big mainstreams, unknowns, etc. He had a red bandanna tied to four corners around his head, sipped deeply on a soda and said in a decidedly laconic way: Oh, so yu're the guy who did that... And then he turned and started talking to someone else.

I felt hurt and felt resentlful for a good time after that-- especially after riding back to the motel in the same van with him and he was yakkety yakketing with Marjorie Perloff and Jerome McGann and it was as if I was not there. Invisible. Look Allen, I have adored you, wanted to be like you, wondered what it would be like to walk down the street with you, read you out loud with my friends inthe bar, and all you can do after I edit a Buddhist anthology of poetry is treat me like shit.

Did I think to myself: I wish you would die, motherfucker. (but no, no, I don't mean that,that's a wrong thing to feel, that's jsut my drunkenness, I'm not that kind of dperson...)

And of course he will. And of course all of us will. The intensity comes out of the factness of death, doesn't it, like a beatnik on acid with beads, staring us in the face with all of his teeth? Now I realize death was probably teaching me a lesson, saying so what if you did so and so, you sorry idiot? No merit.

So don't be sad. I'll bet Allen wouldn't want it that way. But then again, I could be worng. And only death will prove us all, in the end, immaculately right. Right?

kent

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 11:50:48 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
> Subject: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> Allen Ginsberg has been diagnosed with liver cancer and is not given much more time to live. There are articles about his illness in today's New York Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.
>
> I would imagine everyone reading this will have the same intense reaction I am having. It seems like Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life.

↑ Index

61. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Ah

Fri 4 Apr 1997

> John Cage is great too on the Roratorio CD reading his mesostic version of _Finnegan's Wake_ with an Irish accent.
> Yes, it's available on CD from Mode and from Wergo (though I strongly recommend the Mode double-CD which has the complete spoken track on its own (the Wergo, I believe, contains one section) as well as a long recorded interview and two very thick booklets, one of which contains the complete mesostic.

Does the Mode double-CD version have the complete spoken 120 page version of the writing through the wake? In the Wergo version, there is a 14 minute solo for the 40 page reduction, the same one that he reads in the hour-long hor-spiel (Writing through the wake for the second time).

Bill B.

↑ Index

62. KENT JOHNSON

Re: Allen Ginsberg's death

Fri 4 Apr 1997

On April 4 Dan Zimmerman said:

> Singing "Father Death" & Blake's Songs, Allen's left more life than death can take away. Don't feel bad, Kent. He brushed me off once, after I read > a few poems at the WCW festival in Paterson, as "very intelligent." No blame. Om Kavaye Namah. [Honor to the Great Poet.]

>
> Dan

Dan:

I'm not trying to be smart, but when you say that Allen left more life than death can take away, it sounds like you might really be scared.

Kent

↑ Index

63. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
>
> yes.
>
> okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's already dead please.

As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not, for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, what will be the first line of this renga?

ketn>

↑ Index

64. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:53:26 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
>
> yes.
>
> okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's already dead please.
>
> As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> ketn>
>
> pull my daisy, poet

Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words

↑ Index

65. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:10:59 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:53:26 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]

> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
>
> yes.
>
> okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's already dead please.
>
> As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> ketn>
>
> pull my daisy, poet
>
> Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page > of words
>
> the wind a simultaneous translation

the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way>

↑ Index

66. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:18:47 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Alan Jen Sondheim <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> pull my daisy, poet
> Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page
> of words

> the wind a simultaneous translation
> the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
> nothing has happened, no one has died

beside a bowl smelling of old cat's milk, Jeniffer weeps>

↑ Index

67. KENT JOHNSON
renga
Fri 4 Apr 1997

can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example,
in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.

Or is it too late?
kent

↑ Index

68. Charles Bernstein
Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Allen Ginsberg has been diagnosed with liver cancer and is not given much more time to live. There are articles about his illness in today's New York Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.

I would imagine everyone reading this will have the same intense reaction I am having. It seems like Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life.

↑ Index

69. KENT JOHNSON
Re: renga
Fri 4 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:55:16 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Alan Jen Sondheim <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: renga
> To: [redacted]

yes, Alan is Allen, allen is fissured, everyone is restarted, Jennifer rewritten. Alan is dying, everything is fluid, death is uninscribed, renga is rewritten. death is verboten, perhaps the beginning, point should be fucking,none should be fissured. all should be dying, ginsberg is watching, where should we start, where should we come to, whale meat is rotting, children are cavorting. I mean (guy who can't, trying to rap) on a beach where children play baseball and whales are rotting.

> Perhaps the beginnings at this point should be rewritten, restarted; > everything is fluid here, fissured, uninscribed -
>
> Alan
>
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> > can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example,
> > in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, > > Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.
> >
> > Or is it too late?
> > kent
> >
>
> _____
> URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
> MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ ++++++++++++++++
> IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted]
> CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 ++++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, 1997
>

↑ Index

70. Jean Day

Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Apr 1997 to 3 Apr 1997

Fri 4 Apr 1997

Charles,

Xenos is Lyn Hejinian and Travis Ortiz's new series--THE LITERAL WORLD is imminent, as is another new one from Barrett Watten, part or all of BAD HISTORY, I think. These are the first two; many others are in the works--maybe I can get Lyn to post the prospectus or get hold of it and post it myself.

Cheers,

Jean

> mine
> THE LITERAL WORLD from Xenos.

> Jean
>
> Tell me more about Xenos. What other books? etc.
>
> charles
>
> charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

71. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

The Daily News said 4 months to a year.

If it wasn't for Howl, I would have broken down in Pennsyvania; it was my first epiphany. I found it at a local bookshop when it first came out; I was around 13 at the time and already depressive.

Alan

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Charles Bernstein wrote:

> Allen Ginsberg has been diagnosed with liver cancer and is not given much more time to live. There are articles about his illness in today's New York Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.
>
> I would imagine everyone reading this will have the same intense reaction I am having. It seems like Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life.

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ +++++++++++++++++ IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted] CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 +++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, 1997

↑ Index

72. Joe Safdie
Re: Time Change
Fri 4 Apr 1997

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Bill Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar wrote:

> This Sunday, 4/6/97, at 2:00 A.M., most of the country will be moving their > clocks ahead one hour in observance of daylight savings time. Since > Indianapolis does not change their clocks, for the next six months they will be > in the Central Time Zone.

>
Congratulations to the citizens of Indianapolis for resisting the artificial, mechanical construction of "daylight savings" -- it's all done for business interests -- (though this is the "good" pole, when we're all supposed to be happy for the "extra" daylight) --

(and are)

↑ Index

73. Steven Marks
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

I was about 13, too, when I first heard of Allen Ginsberg from my 7th-grade English teacher who clandestinely read us the beginning of Howl. All I remember was that it wasn't the sing-songy verse we were usually fed. I also remember wondering why our English teacher was being so secretive. This was in 1965 or 1966. Now I know why and now I also know that things haven't changed nearly enough.

sadly,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

74. dbkk
Re: Time Change
Fri 4 Apr 1997

At 12:26 PM -0800 4/4/97, Joe Safdie wrote:

> Congratulations to the citizens of Indianapolis for resisting the artificial, mechanical construction of "daylight savings" -- it's all done for business interests -- (though this is the "good" pole, when we're all supposed to be happy for the "extra" daylight) --

Actually I think it's done for people who have cats. I'm really looking forward to daylight savings time so Blanche and Stanley will quit trying to wake me up at 6:30 in the morning to feed them.

Dodie

↑ Index

75. Jordan Davis
Remindah
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Ourrr
reading tonight featuring starrr
viol d'Ingrrrres
types Kenneth Goldsmith and Carrrrrl Watson is at 7 pm and will featurrrrre morrrre rrrr
sounds than you may have known you could hearrrr

at Poetry City in the offices of Teachers & Writers
5 Union Szquare Weszt Szeventh Flooah
New Yorrrrk New Yorrrrrrrk

↑ Index

76. Don Cheney
Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

---

i've never met allen ginsberg but i was within arms reach of him one late afternoon many years ago. stephen rodefer was having allen talk about jack kerouac for one of his ucsd literature classes and invited me to drop in. i remember walking to the lecture hall and allen was walking in front of me amidst a small crowd of people trying to get through the door. and i remember he was wearing this dopey dark blue polyester sport coat and i remember that nobody seemed to notice him really and i had the urge to tap him on the shoulder and say "what's up with this ginsberg goofball anyway?" but i didn't and obviously i've regretted it over all these years. and i've regretted it because i've come to understand what a large and open sense of humor he has.

==========
Don Cheney San Diego, CA, USA
http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791
[redacted]
==========

↑ Index

77. Charles Alexander
Re: Time Change
Fri 4 Apr 1997

The state of Arizona doesn't change either. So part of the year we're on mountain time, part on Pacific time. I suppose that means we're getting ready to be on Pacific time again. I can't say that it's either an advantage or a disadvantage. In the summer here I'd really rather have the cooler nights come sooner, not later.

charles

At 12:26 PM 4/4/97 -0800, you wrote:
>On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Bill Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar wrote:
>
>> This Sunday, 4/6/97, at 2:00 A.M., most of the country will be moving their >> clocks ahead one hour in observance of daylight savings time. Since >> Indianapolis does not change their clocks, for the next six months they will be >> in the Central Time Zone.
>>
>Congratulations to the citizens of Indianapolis for resisting the >artificial, mechanical construction of "daylight savings" -- it's >all done for business interests -- (though this is the "good" pole, >when we're all supposed to be happy for the "extra" daylight) --
>
>(and are)
>
>
charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

78. Christopher Reiner
Witz
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Announcing:

WITZ: A Journal of Contemporary Poetics

Spring 1997

Volume Five, Number 1

Stephen Ratcliffe on Larry Eigner

William Marsh on Hypertexts

Susan M. Schultz and Dan Featherston on Bob Perelman

Kasey Cummings and Carl Peters on Rae Armantrout

Susan Smith Nash on Susan Gevirtz

Tod Thilleman on Kenneth Bernard

(38 pages, 5" x 8-1/2")

$4/copy or $10/individual subscription (3 issues) to

WITZ
P.O. Box 40012
Studio City, California 91614

Please make checks payable to Christopher Reiner

And check out the Witz Archive at the EPC:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/witz/for plain vanilla ascii versions of issues 1.1 to 4.1

↑ Index

79. Bill Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar
Time Change
Fri 4 Apr 1997

This Sunday, 4/6/97, at 2:00 A.M., most of the country will be moving their clocks ahead one hour in observance of daylight savings time. Since Indianapolis does not change their clocks, for the next six months they will be in the Central Time Zone.

↑ Index

80. Stephen Cope
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

This is sad, tho expected, news. I've had dreams in the past of receiving such information, which I suppose says much about the depth to which he's entered my own consciousness. I've always found Allen, in my limited experience, to be among the most generous, open, encouraging, and dedicated members of the poetry community. A leader in so many ways...

God bless him...

↑ Index

81. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?

yes.

↑ Index

82. Maria Damon
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
>On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
>> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
>
>yes.

okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's already dead please.

↑ Index

83. Wendy Battin
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Alan Jen Sondheim wrote:
> The Daily News said 4 months to a year.
>
> If it wasn't for Howl, I would have broken down in Pennsyvania; it was my > first epiphany. I found it at a local bookshop when it first came out; I > was around 13 at the time and already depressive.

Ditto, except Delaware.

Wendy

↑ Index

84. Wendy Battin
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic,
> what will be the first line of this renga?

Now, since death is so pornographic, where can they sell it?

↑ Index

85. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

---

pull my daisy, poet
Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page
of words
the wind a simultaneous translation
the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
nothing has happened, no one has died

↑ Index

86. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Is it necessary to quote with, to include post headers, to ignore other contributions?

Alan, bowing out

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Daniel Zimmerman wrote:

> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:10:59 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:53:26 -0800
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
>
> yes.
>
> okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's already dead please.
>
> As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not, for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> ketn>
>
> pull my daisy, poet
>
> Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words
>
> the wind a simultaneous translation
>
> the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way>
>
> brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ +++++++++++++++++ IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted] CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 +++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, 1997

↑ Index

87. Mark Weiss
Re: Time Change
Fri 4 Apr 1997

But the Navajo reservation is on daylight savings time, probably as a way of emphasizing their sovereignty to the rest of Arizona.

At 03:22 PM 4/4/97 -0700, you wrote:
>The state of Arizona doesn't change either. So part of the year we're on >mountain time, part on Pacific time. I suppose that means we're getting >ready to be on Pacific time again. I can't say that it's either an >advantage or a disadvantage. In the summer here I'd really rather have the >cooler nights come sooner, not later.
>
>charles
>
>At 12:26 PM 4/4/97 -0800, you wrote:
>>On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Bill Luoma/Notes1/Vanstar wrote:
>>
>>> This Sunday, 4/6/97, at 2:00 A.M., most of the country will be moving their >>> clocks ahead one hour in observance of daylight savings time. Since >>> Indianapolis does not change their clocks, for the next six months they >will be >>> in the Central Time Zone.
>>>
>>Congratulations to the citizens of Indianapolis for resisting the >>artificial, mechanical construction of "daylight savings" -- it's >>all done for business interests -- (though this is the "good" pole, >>when we're all supposed to be happy for the "extra" daylight) --
>>
>>(and are)
>>
>>
>charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

88. Alan Jen Sondheim
Form silliness
Fri 4 Apr 1997

About form -

If you send a reply by _forwarding_ instead of _replying,_ you can send back to poetics without the carets; if you also cut out the headers...

The renga that occurred I think about a year ago? got out of hand; we've all got a hand in; I remember caret-clipping, caretine poisoning, and Allen already has a bad liver...

Alan, sorry, grumpy

↑ Index

89. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: renga
Fri 4 Apr 1997

Perhaps the beginnings at this point should be rewritten, restarted; everything is fluid here, fissured, uninscribed -

Alan

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example,
> in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, > Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.
>
> Or is it too late?
> kent

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ +++++++++++++++++ IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted] CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 +++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, 1997

↑ Index

90. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Allen Ginsberg's death
Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> Here is the great equalizer, it would seem. Language is slippery, > pronouns are fuzzy, poetry is not poetry. But death? Death is death, > and there it is, no experimental messing with it.
>
> I suspect Ginsberg would not want any sentimental sniffling. He's > been talking about death for a long time. I remember at the Orono > conference in--was it--'93? I approached Ginsberg after > his reading there and introduced myself as the person who had edited > the Buddhist anthology of contemporary American poets in which he > prominently figured. I was sure he > owuld be impressed, probably would embrace me warmly, since clearly > this was the most important anthology to appear in post-war America, > intro by Gary Snyder, numerous avant-garde poets along with big > mainstreams, unknowns, etc. He had a red bandanna tied to four corners > around his head, sipped deeply on a soda and said in a decidedly > laconic way: Oh, so yu're the guy who did that... And then he turned > and started talking to someone else.

>
> I felt hurt and felt resentlful for a good time after that-- > especially after riding back to the motel in the same van > with him and he was yakkety yakketing with Marjorie Perloff and > Jerome McGann and it was as if I was not there. Invisible. Look Allen, > I have adored you, wanted to be like you, wondered what it would be > like to walk down the street with you, read you out loud with my > friends inthe bar, and all you can do after I edit a Buddhist > anthology of poetry is treat me like shit.
>
> Did I think to myself: I wish you would die, motherfucker. (but no, > no, I don't mean that,that's a wrong thing to feel, that's jsut my > drunkenness, I'm not that kind of dperson...)
>
> And of course he will. And of course all of us will. The intensity > comes out of the factness of death, doesn't it, like a beatnik on acid > with beads, staring us in the face with all of his teeth? Now I > realize death was probably teaching me a lesson, saying so what if > you did so and so, you sorry idiot? No merit.
>
> So don't be sad. I'll bet Allen wouldn't want it that way. But then > again, I could be worng. And only death will prove us all, in the end, > immaculately right. Right?
>
> kent
>
> > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 11:50:48 -0500
> > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Allen Ginsberg

> > To: [redacted]
>
> > Allen Ginsberg has been diagnosed with liver cancer and is not given much > > more time to live. There are articles about his illness in today's New York > > Post and Philadelphia Inquirer.
> >
> > I would imagine everyone reading this will have the same intense reaction I > > am having. It seems like Allen Ginsberg has been with me all my life.
> >

Singing "Father Death" & Blake's Songs, Allen's left more life than death can take away. Don't feel bad, Kent. He brushed me off once, after I read a few poems at the WCW festival in Paterson, as "very intelligent." No blame. Om Kavaye Namah. [Honor to the Great Poet.]

Dan

↑ Index

91. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: elephant's memory

Sat 5 Apr 1997

I've been away from the list for a while -- but will say this --

I was once standing on my own several yards away from where Ginsberg was talking quietly with a group of admirers after a reading here in San Jose -- He saw me there alone, broke away from the group -- came over and asked how it was with me, did I write, what did I write, how did the community fare since his few San Jose days "In Back of the Real" --

There are few in my experience so generous with themselves as he has been -- any of us, I'm sure, might on occasion be distracted, brusque -- whatever -- Few have been such a tireless champion of the writing of others, even others he didn't know --

We had a wonderful short talk that night about poetry, about poets we knew, about local labor history --

the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town

↑ Index

92. George Bowering
Re: Time Change
Sat 5 Apr 1997

> This Sunday, 4/6/97, at 2:00 A.M., most of the country will be moving their clocks ahead one hour in observance of daylight savings time. Since Indianapolis does not change their clocks, for the next six months they will be > in the Central Time Zone.

Except the Pacers, who will be in the eastern conference.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

93. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Allen Ginsberg's death
Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> On April 4 Dan Zimmerman said:
>
> > Singing "Father Death" & Blake's Songs, Allen's left more life than death > > can take away. Don't feel bad, Kent. He brushed me off once, after I read > > a few poems at the WCW festival in Paterson, as "very intelligent." No > > blame. Om Kavaye Namah. [Honor to the Great Poet.]
> >
> > Dan
> >
>
> Dan:
>
> I'm not trying to be smart, but when you say that Allen left more life > than death can take away, it sounds like you might really be scared.
>
> Kent

Not scared, but struck by the sublime: that 18th century sense of the awe-ful or, as Blake says, who died singing of angels, the "terrific": "portions of eternity, too great for the eye of man." Scared of what?

Dan

↑ Index

94. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: Allen Ginsberg

Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> > To: [redacted]
>
> > At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> > >On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
> > >
> > >> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
> > >
> > >yes.
> >
> > okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's > > already dead please.
>
> As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> ketn>

pull my daisy, poet

↑ Index

95. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

I didn't mean to offend. But I apologize, because the message was silly and unnecessary. I'm sitting here now, just having read Alan Sondheim's post. I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?

Kent

> Date sent: Sat, 5 Apr 1997 12:19:34 -0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> ketn>
>
> spare me your sarcasm, you don't know anything about my experiences with > death or anything else for that matter.

↑ Index

96. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:53:26 -0800
> > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> > To: [redacted]
>
> > KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> > >
> > > > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> > > > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > > > From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> > > > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg

> > > > To: [redacted]
> > >
> > > > At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> > > > >On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
> > > > >
> > > > >> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
> > > > >
> > > > >yes.
> > > >
> > > > okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's > > > > already dead please.
> > >
> > > As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> > > for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > > > what will be the first line of this renga?
> > >
> > > ketn>
> >
> > pull my daisy, poet
>
> Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page
> of words

the wind a simultaneous translation

↑ Index

97. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:10:59 -0800
> > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> > To: [redacted]
>
> > KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> > >
> > > > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:53:26 -0800

> > > > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > > > From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
> > > > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> > > > To: [redacted]
> > >
> > > > KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> > > > >
> > > > > > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 21:36:36 -0600
> > > > > > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > > > > > From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> > > > > > Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg
> > > > > > To: [redacted]
> > > > >
> > > > > > At 7:19 PM -0700 4/4/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> > > > > > >On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
> > > > > > >
> > > > > > >> shall we write a group poem/renga/range of affection for allen ginsberg?
> > > > > > >
> > > > > > >yes.
> > > > > > >
> > > > > > > okay, somebody else start please, and can we not talk about him as if he's > > > > > > > already dead please.
> > > > > >
> > > > > As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
> > > > > for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > > > > > what will be the first line of this renga?
> > > > >
> > > > > ketn>
> > > >
> > > > pull my daisy, poet
> > >
> > > Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page > > > of words
> >
> > the wind a simultaneous translation
>
> the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way>

brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths

↑ Index

98. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: renga

Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> > Date sent: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:55:16 -0500
> > Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> > From: Alan Jen Sondheim <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Re: renga
> > To: [redacted]
>
> yes, Alan is Allen, allen is fissured, everyone is restarted, > Jennifer rewritten. Alan is dying, everything is fluid, death is > uninscribed, renga is rewritten. death is verboten, perhaps the > beginning, point should be fucking,none should be fissured. all > should be dying, ginsberg is watching, where should we start, where > should we come to, whale meat is rotting, children are cavorting. I > mean (guy who can't, trying to rap) on a beach where children play > baseball and whales are rotting.
>
> > Perhaps the beginnings at this point should be rewritten, > restarted; > everything is fluid here, fissured, uninscribed -
> >
> > Alan
> >
> > On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> >
> > > can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example,
> > > in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, > > > Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.
> > >
> > > Or is it too late?
> > > kent
> > >
> >
> > _____
> > URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
> > MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ ++++++++++++
++++
> > IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ TELEPHONE [redacted]
> > CUSEEME: 166.84.250.149 +++++ Editor, BEING ON LINE, Lusitania, > >here's Howling at you, kid.

1997

↑ Index

99. Rob Hardin
Visit Lou Stathis at the Columbia Presbyterian Hospital
Sat 5 Apr 1997

To all who know critic and editor Lou Stathis:

It is certainly sad that Ginsberg is dying--especially now, after he had just sold his papers for an amazing amount of money and would have lived out the rest of his days in long-deserved comfort. However, Ginsberg's place in history is secure and his visitors will be legion: I doubt he would benefit emotionally from receiving visits from blurred acquaintances like me. Given the relative consolations of G's notoreity, I must regretfully leave him to his myriad of friends, and mention a writer whom I'm hoping will not die unremembered and unattended. His name is Lou Stathis, and as an editor and benevolent presence, he has been a constant boon to innumerable struggling writers in NYC. In addition, he was a discerning critic and lip-smart writer who taught a generation of readers about alternative culture. Recently, he inherited (congenitally) a writer's worst fate: a brain-tumor which left him without the ability to read, write, or formulate intelligible sentences. Still-- beyond his language impasse, one can still sense Lou's intelligence and sensitivity--even in his gropings for words he can no longer reach. He is not expected to outlive Ginsberg, and I am asking anyone who has ever known Lou or enjoyed his writing to please visit him at the Columbia Presbyterian Hospital on 167th Street in New York City. Let him know that his work is important and that his life does matter. Today, when Darius James and I visited him, he was extremely weak and sad. Even so, he managed to say, "I'm still in here. It's still me. It's still me."

All best always,

Rob Hardin

requiescate in pace
aut emergate quandprimum

http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/
http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm

↑ Index

100. David Bromige poem
Sat 5 Apr 1997

ALLEN GINSBERG

like David Bromige
Kent Johnson
Maria Damon
& Wayne Gretzsky

not dead yet

↑ Index

101. Miekal And
Re: Allen Ginsberg +
Sat 5 Apr 1997

hath die sly bath
died live as death live as who those lips kiss

miekal

↑ Index

102. KENT JOHNSON
Memorial services
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Does anyone have information on memorial and funeral services for Allen? Gary Snyder is scheduled to be here to read this coming Friday, and obviously the sudden news may change all that. I have left a message for Gary, but he can be hard to get. Any information would be greatly appreciated.

And Charles Bernstein: thank you.

Kent

↑ Index

103. simon
Re: Time Change
Sat 5 Apr 1997

I like the assertion that Indianapolis will up and move to the central time zone. How mobile, and when you think that even for indiana, the polis outs the right, and as for crhistians, as my grandmother would say, don't ask, how breezy of it.

The rest of the state (exc a cple of counties where they don't play with snakes in church) has to stay where it is, here, and go on with the same old god's own time, which is, and we have it on the best authority, right now, eastern time. Of course, when the rest of the eastern time goes on daylight, the true eastern reads suspiciously like central. But that's the east for you. Central. Don't trust it. One of those deictics with a u-haul index.

beth

↑ Index

104. KENT JOHNSON
Re: apology
Sat 5 Apr 1997

> From: Self <STUDENT/KJOHNSON>
> To: David Israel <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: apology
> Date sent: Sat, 5 Apr 1997 20:03:10 +0600
>
> But wait: would Allen Ginsberg have wished us to be silent or to write? Everyone in their own time and at their own speed, of course, but David, you haven't been inappropriate or superficial. Let's not legislate a "correct" mode of grieving or honoring here! Silence is good and so is writing. The Dharma is capacious enough to hold both-- as if they weren't one and the same...
>
> The moment is difficult and strange to be sure, but beautiful.
> Allen is beautiful.
>
> Kent
>
> Date sent: Sat, 5 Apr 1997 20:39:38 -0400
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: David Israel <[redacted]>
> Subject: apology
> To: [redacted]

> Someone pointed out to me, backchannel, the inappropriateness of my superficial dabbling with the cyberRenga, given the gravity of the circumstances & the need for due silence (a paraphrase). This corrective holds much sense.
>
> To any whom my several posts (or line-appropriations) today may have seemed unseemly or offensive, kindly accept my adject apology.
>
> yours,
> d.i.
>
> p.s. Susan Wheeler just now writes:
> Buddhist services Monday, and Jewish Tuesday
>
> in appropriationist mode, that's seem a candidate; but "enough" (quoth Francis Brabazon) "has been far too much"

↑ Index

105. Rachel Loden

Re: poem

Sat 5 Apr 1997

Now I believe you are lovely, my soul, soul of Allen, Allen-- and you so beloved, so sweetened, so recalled to your true loveliness, your original nude breathing Allen will you ever deny another again?

from "Sather Gate Illumination"

David Bromige wrote:
>
> ALLEN GINSBERG
>
> like David Bromige
> Kent Johnson
> Maria Damon
> & Wayne Gretzsky
>
> not dead yet

↑ Index

106. Herb Levy
Re: Ah
Sat 5 Apr 1997

> Does the Mode double-CD version have the complete spoken 120 page version of the writing through the wake? In the Wergo version, there is a 14 minute solo for the 40 page reduction, the same one that he reads in the hour-long horspiel (Writing through the wake for the second time).

The Mode set includes the whole text in both audio & print form, though the printed text is in extremely tiny type, even by CD booklet standards - it looks like a photo-reduction of the first publication, including the scattered punctuation marks.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

107. Alan Jen Sondheim
Allen Ginsberg +
Sat 5 Apr 1997

WCBS just announced Allen Ginsberg has died.

Alan

↑ Index

108. Joseph Zitt
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Wendy Battin wrote:
>
> On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
> > for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, > > what will be the first line of this renga?
>
> Now, since death is so pornographic, where can they sell it?

OK, a first line:

    Now, since death is so pornographic,

BTW, if a renga evolves, I will keep on top of this one and try to make it into a hypertext as it goes along. -- ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas!

========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

109. Maria Damon
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

>KENT JOHNSON wrote:
As if that would be a terrible thing? Oh, awful death. Let us not,
>> > > for it is not to be spoken of. Now since death is so pornographic, >> > > what will be the first line of this renga?
>> > >
>> > > ketn>

spare me your sarcasm, you don't know anything about my experiences with death or anything else for that matter.

↑ Index

110. nuyopoman
Allen Ginsberg's Death
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Kent, it is never too late to stop and not smell the cat's milk. Please, Loss, cut "smelling of" and let cat's milk simply be cat's milk (my opinion, good edit). First thought, Second thought...

I was 15, New Richmond, Ohio, 1964, cursing under breath, weeding the weekly chore, HOWL Pocket Poets Series in back pocket, touchstone of sanity, poetry.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

111. nuyopoman
Re: Ginsberg's Death
Sat 5 Apr 1997

The harmonious roar. Words hollowed out for Life to fill

↑ Index

112. michael corbin
Re: Allen Ginsberg +
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Alan Jen Sondheim wrote:
>
> WCBS just announced Allen Ginsberg has died.
>

R.I.P.

"Ah, dear father, graybeard, lonely old courage-teacher, what America did you have when Charon quit poling his ferry and you got out on a smoking bank and stood watching the boat disappear on the black waters of Lethe?"

(A Supermarket in California)

mc

↑ Index

113. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

On Sat, 5 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
>
> Kent

Yes - many of us -

Alan

↑ Index

114. Alan Jen Sondheim
html-body
Sat 5 Apr 1997

(The two pieces below were to have been sent out with the html page sent yesterday; I hesitate to send them today, but they're commentary that explains the other post. I apologize as well for the obscurity of this stuff; it's concerned directly with the poetics of cyberspace, an area that's still little explored. I promise to cut back here.)

HTML-BODY: Explanation

<!--Alan writes his desires; Jennifer receives the page-->
<!--Agreeable Alan dreams his way across Jennifer--> <!--Writing, punctuated by warnings, corrupts his body-->
<!--"You are ALL TEXT," Jennifer says-->
<!--"There's nothing to me," Agreeable Alan-->

Another experiment in wryting the html body, exp.htm uses _alert_ buttons among the viewer, "Jennifer," and "Alan"; links and targets simply shudder the page slightly, as if a tremor went through the body. Certain links leave text altogether, sink to the lower and blank margins of the page, a non-inscriptive ground, divided by a series of horizontal lines / plateaus from the body of the text. And the body itself turns on the phrase "you spread me on your screen," like jelly, like jam, like roadkill or sexual arousal - a phrase which appears through the majority of alerts.

The mouse moves across the field, stumbling over the poor simulacrum of skin, the body with organs (BWO), javascript, html, tcp/ip. One _enters_ the text, alerts protrude, freeze the body until cancelled. And as for the rest? The surface? Speaking less than the interior, but hardly less intel- ligent or inscribed; the surface in fact is an intelligent surface, blank of image, refusing to give way _beneath._

Because of the nature of email lists, these accounts have used at most two text files; other html-body-works here, it can only be noted, use up to 35 files, border on obscenity, and can't be introduced here. It is not that I desire blind-html, imageless, text-hysteric; it's that there is an addi- tional dialog, with email, that reconstructs the possible.

------(lynx treats the file as broken form, filled example, below)------

it hurts you

spreading jelly_____ open my breast_____ splay my skins_____ cut me a river_____ fuck me forever_____ sing to me my song__ suck my nipple jam__ hold me, darling____ Murmur you aren't more, Alan. turn me into holy hole comfort me smoothly_ use my writing___ wet my deep throat__ dry my labia milk___ kill me in lactate__ hurt me, leave me___ wound me, suture me_ amputate my mind____ burn me into coiling roll enter me quickly____ heal my birthing____ love me with pain___ call me jennifer____ be me alan_____ hug me, finger me___ kiss me, crush me___churn me into soiling hole open my womb_____ play with my cunt___ lie with my cock____ be with me be be me_ eat me or eat me____ cry me a river_____ write with placenta_ run with me alan____ my twisted mind brings you whisper fuck to me__ shit for me darling_ talk to me jennifer_ get to me quicken___ yearn for me alan___ pine for me jennifer piss for me alan____ come to me murmur___against my toiling folds _____

_____
_____
_____
_____ (Text entry field) Enter text. Use UP or DOWN arrows or tab to move off.

_____

↑ Index

115. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Strange how the sudden announcement of the death hits so hard, even though its imminence was known before. One had thought to have a few months to prepare for it, as if preparation for anyone's death were ever possible. But to say goodbye. Anything by way of poetry more specific to this death on the part of those who were not his intimates is likely to ring with the hollowness of funeral elegies. Among Jews the ritual of sitting shive--a week of visiting with the family, who stay at home, cared for by others, and receive vistors--is accompanied by the ritual, tho unprescribed, telling of anecdotes about the dead, most often of a comic or endearing nature. The memory of other deaths invariably present. But even that degree of commentary has to wait the 24 hours until after the burial--time for a few deep breaths. The shock of intimate loss is incoherent, the building of verbal monuments by others at that point unseemly. Elegies are made of stone, and headstones aren't placed at Jewish graves until a year after the death, which is supposed to mark the end of mourning, although in my experience it doesn't so much end as mature. I guess what I'm saying is that a little silence right now might go a long way. The media will clobber us with enough noise about this. Liver cancer is a horrible way to die. I hope he got some help.

↑ Index

116. Maria Damon
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

At 1:04 PM +0600 4/5/97, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>I didn't mean to offend. But I apologize, because the message was >silly and unnecessary. I'm sitting here now, just having read Alan >Sondheim's post. I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying >too?
>

>Kent
>

not yet. just having a quiet time. it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart; what is this lethargy that penetrates my heart? must be grief.

↑ Index

117. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

I'm with you Kent & Alan. Listening right now to P. Glass's "Wichita Vortex Sutra" which sounds all of a sudden like ave atque vale.

And I'm truly surprised by how hard and how deeply Allen's death is affecting me. I've driven around town today in a weird daze, everything feeling and looking uncanny, as if a great silent shockwave had passed through the world and nobody's noticed, nobody's noticed at all. And everything is the same and goes on being the same, just as it ought. It ought to be the same. Only it isn't and it can't be. But it's the same all the same and only this very weird feeling of a tiny vacuum at the center of things.

I never knew Allen; only brushed by him twice in passing as it were. The first time was 1989 at City Lights, the day before the quake and the Series and I was handing out copies of a miserable poetry rag I'd put together and which is best forgotten but we bumped into each other at the crowded front counter and naturally being alert for favorable omens I was delighted. The second time was last year in Anselm Hollo's backyard where I found myself sitting, rather like Aldon, apart from the main group, on a lawn chair, and Allen and his nephew I guess it was Al came up and joined my wife and I and Lindsay Hill. We were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks and then he and Lindsay talked a bit about somebody's mother, maybe it was Steven Marks'? maybe not - the name has faded. He was wearing bright red suspenders which I put into a poem a few days later. And that was all very funny really since I'd panned his last book in a brief review I'd done for the Daily Camera and was mortally afraid to introduce myself in case someone had told him about it and that review was how Anselm Hollo and I met, by vigourous exchange of letter, and eventually led me to joining the list so I owe it this chance of expression and amends I guess in retrospect to my hubristic attempt to take Allen Ginsberg down a notch what a silly thing to do and I will miss him who else has done more for poetry and there should be a state funeral if there was such a thing as a state with honor that could see itself that way but then what need for Allen Ginsberg except the example of his beauty and anyway such ceremonies are deceptive flatteries that cannot take the place or can they of real grieving as this list will do very nicely even better for that I say.

I intend to get drunk tonight and watch Jerry Aronson's "The Life & Times of Allen Ginsberg."

GINSBERG AT 70

Dharma Lion thin
now, skin a little sallow.

Huddles over veggie burger
on the half bun, pink crescent of watermelon shining on plate
        (adjunct to Gemini).

Big red X of suspenders marks the spot on his back
as if to say,
here it is folks, look no farther:
the matchless candor of the human heart.

On Sat, 5 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
>
> Kent

Yes - many of us -

Alan

↑ Index

118. David Israel
cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Back to the Renga

The renga so far (as best I can put it together -- from going through yesterday's & today's posts).
[Please see notes below, for (a) attributions and (b) some explanations.]

RENGA

1| pull my daisy, poet
2| Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words
3| the wind a simultaneous translation
4| the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
5| nothing has happened, no one has died
6| brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths
7| beside a bowl of old cat's milk, Jeniffer weeps
8| the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town
9| I'm sitting here now, just having read Alan Sondheim's post
10| I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
11| not yet. just having a quiet time.
12| it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart
13| what is this lethargy that penetrates my heart? must be grief.
14| we were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks
15| circa '67, strange chanting on TV -- I was eleven & wide-eyed
16| According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state
17|
18|

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

writers/sources of the above lines:

1: Daniel Zimmerman
2: Kent Johnson
3:? Daniel Zimmerman
4: Kent Johnson
5: Alan Jen Sondheim
6: Daniel Zimmerman
7: Kent Johnson
8: Aldon L. Nielsen
9: Kent Johnson
10: Kent Johnson
11: Maria Damon
12: Maria Damon
13: Maria Damon
14: Pat Pritchett
15: David R. Israel
16: Kenneth Goldsmith
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

17: 18:

Some cyberRenga comments:

Note A:
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:50:44 +0600
From: KENT JOHNSON
<[redacted]>
Subject: renga

can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example, in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.

Or is it too late? kent
~~~~~~~~~~
d.i.'s comment: sure, if one is the author thereof (as is true here).

Note B:
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 23:55:16 -0500
From: Alan Jen Sondheim <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: renga

Perhaps the beginnings at this point should be rewritten, restarted; everything is fluid here, fissured, uninscribed -

Alan
~~~~~~~~~~
d.i.'s comment: the beginning was the beginning (& seems perhaps a good one). And things developed from that (& seem good, too). How about if we proceed & see where it goes?

Note C:
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: Fri, 4 Apr 1997 22:05:34 -0800
From: "Aldon L. Nielsen" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: elephant's memory

I've been away from the list for a while -- but will say this -- . . .

<snip> [an excellent anecdote from Nielson followed, and concluded with this solitary line]:

the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town ~~~~~~~~~~ d.i.'s comment: that last line seems in the spirit of the renga, ergo I'm putting it in as the NEXT renga line (which is line 8, where I've put it -- see above). Alright with you, Aldon? (Okay w/ others?)

Note D:
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: 04/05/97 06:20pm
From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>>>>
Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg

At 1:04 PM +0600 4/5/97, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>I didn't mean to offend. But I apologize, because the message was >silly and unnecessary. I'm sitting here now, just having read
Alan
>Sondheim's post. I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying
>too?
>
>Kent
>

not yet. just having a quiet time. it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart; what is this lethargy that penetrates my heart? must be grief.
~~~~~~~~~~ d.i.'s comment: by way of "found poetry" (or "found cyber-renga lines"), I'd like to propose incorporating lines from these posts nto the renga.

Question as to form: [In present instance at least], is it alright to have 2 (or even 3) lines in succession from the same poet? I'm rather vague on "renga rules," but suspect this had not been traditionally done. Still, if nobody objects, I'll lift a some lines in succession from the above. [See the results, and then judge.]

(Others may edit, as suitable.)

Caveat: naturally, respective poets can vito, edit, or whatnot. I'm just tinkering here for this portion of the cyberrenga -- then will forthwith (in fact, hereby) send downstream for others. So we have from Kent J, lines 9-10), and Maria D, lines 11-13.

Note E:
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: 04/05/97 06:28pm
From: Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume
<[redacted]>Subject: Re: Allen Ginsberg

I'm with you Kent & Alan. Listening right now to P. Glass's "Wichita Vortex Sutra" which sounds all of a sudden like ave atque vale.
~~~~~~~~~~

And I'm truly surprised by how hard and how deeply Allen's death is affecting me. <snip> I never knew Allen; only brushed by him twice in passing as it were. <snip> . . . The second time was last year in Anselm Hollo's backyard where I found myself sitting, rather like Aldon, apart from the main group, on a lawn chair, and Allen and his nephew I guess it was Al came up and joined my wife and I and Lindsay Hill. We were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks . . . ~~~~~~~~~~ d.i.'s comment: Pat, would you permit me to put that last line into the renga above? (That becomes, here, renga line 14.)

Note F: Okay, I'm putting in my own line (line 15) at this piont.

/ / / / /

Folks: will this work, as method? Care to take it up & go further?

(The fact that the death-announcement occurred mid-Renga does render this a unique cyberRenga, I'd say.)

Do consider Sondheim's suggestion of not including ENTIRE posts, but just clipping out the renga & adding a line to it. The method he suggests -- "forrwarding" rather than "replying" is one way to avoid the carets. (Or: whatever.)
- David R. Israel

post-script:

Note G: (this just in)
~~~~~~~~~~
Date: 04/05/97 07:02pm
From: Kenneth Goldsmith <[redacted]>
Subject: Ginsberg's Body Lies in State

According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state . . .

I'll put that in as line 16.

best,
d.i.

↑ Index

119. Joseph Zitt
Re: renga
Sat 5 Apr 1997

KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>
> can one take back something in cyber-renga? for example,
~~~~~~~~~~

> in the line "beside an old bowl smelling of cat's milk, > Jenniffer weeps," the 'smelling' is unnecessary.
>
> Or is it too late?
> kent
I'll note it as such in the hypertext.

-- ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt =====
[redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ==========
SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt ==
<> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

120. David Israel
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Folks,

having sent out that back-to-cyberRenga post (& then reread same), realize I was amiss re: the 2 & 3 line entries -- (both for reason of form and bec. the single lines seem to work better).

Ergo -- PLEASE NOTE -- here's a revised version. (ok?)

best,
d.i.

////////////////////////////////

RENGA

1| pull my daisy, poet
2| Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words
3| the wind a simultaneous translation
4| the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
5| nothing has happened, no one has died
6| brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths
7| beside a bowl of old cat's milk, Jeniffer weeps
8| the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town
9| I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
10| it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart
11| we were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks

12| circa '67, strange chanting on TV -- I was eleven & wide-eyed
13| According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state
14|
15|
16|
17|
18|
19|
20|

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
authorial notes:

1: Daniel Zimmerman
2: Kent Johnson
3:? Daniel Zimmerman
4: Kent Johnson
5: Alan Jen Sondheim
6: Daniel Zimmerman
7: Kent Johnson
8: Aldon L. Nielsen
9: Kent Johnson
10: Maria Damon
11: Pat Pritchett
12: David R. Israel
13: Kenneth Goldsmith
14: 15: 16: 17: 18: 19: 20:

↑ Index

121. Charles Bernstein
Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Piping down the valleys wild
Piping songs of pleasant glee
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

On a cloud I saw a child..
And he laughing said to me.

Pipe a song about a Lamb:
So I piped with merry chear,
Piper pipe that song again
So I piped he wept to hear.

Drop thy pipe thy happy pipe
Sing thy songs of happy chear
So I sung the same again
While he wept with joy to hear.

Piper sit thee down and write
In a book that all my read --
So he vanish'd from my sight,
And I plucked a hollow reed

And I made a rural pen,
And I stain'd the water clear,
And I wrote my happy songs,
Every child may joy to hear

↑ Index

122. Kenneth Goldsmith

Ginsberg's Body Lies In State

Sat 5 Apr 1997

According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state at:

Shambhala Center
118 W.22nd St.
NYC

Usenet advises to call first: [redacted]

+==========
==========+ Kenneth Goldsmith work:
http://www.ubuweb.com 611 Bway, #702, NYC 10012 v.[redacted]

--------> editor UbuWeb ViSuAL COncReTE & SoUNd PoEtRy http://www.ubuweb.com/vp <----------

↑ Index

123. David Israel
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Here's, now (w/ your collective permission):

proposed (VERSION #3) cyberRenga (so far)

Pat Pritchett rightly notes:
~~~start~~~
04/05/97 07:48pm >>>

Looks fine to me except what about Wendy Battin's line: Now since death is so pornographic where can they sell it? which I thought was the first line but wld also do fine as line 17. ~~~end~~~

yes, good catch. (And daresay that line prob. works better than the daisy line for line 1). I'll put it in & readjust accordingly.

best,
d.i.

p.s.: just got Peter Jaeger's quotation of lines from Ginsberg himself. Allowing (majorly) for principle of serendipity, I've added the final line from that excerpt (now line 15, see below).

Okay, now I'll turn this back over to you'all.

//////////////////
RENGA

1| Now since death is so pornographic where can they sell it?
2| pull my daisy, poet
3| Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words
4| the wind a simultaneous translation
5| the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
6| nothing has happened, no one has died
7| brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths
8| beside a bowl of old cat's milk, Jeniffer weeps
9| the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town
10| I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
11| it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart
12| we were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks
13| circa '67, strange chanting on TV -- I was eleven & wide-eyed
~~~

14| According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state
15| Now at last I can speak to you beloved brothers of an unknown moon
16|
17|
18|
19|
20|
21|

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
authorial notes:

1: Wndy Battin
2: Daniel Zimmerman
3: Kent Johnson
4: Daniel Zimmerman
5: Kent Johnson
6: Alan Jen Sondheim
7: Daniel Zimmerman
8: Kent Johnson
9: Aldon L. Nielsen
10: Kent Johnson
11: Maria Damon
12: Pat Pritchett
13: David R. Israel
14: Kenneth Goldsmith
15: Allen Ginsberg, Kaddish (via Peter Jaeger's post)
16: 17: 18: 19: 20: 21:

(kindly join)

↑ Index

124. David Israel
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Erratum (typo):
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

> authorial notes:
>
> 1: Wndy Battin

that should be:
1: Wendy Battin

-d.i.

↑ Index

125. David Israel
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Grant Jenkins writes --

<<Perhaps a passage from Ginsberg himself would go nicely here:

Strange now to think of you, gone without corsets & eyes, while I walk on the sunny pavement of Greenwich Village. . . .
[quote continues . . .] --from Kaddish >>

Grant, as you'll have noted (before you read these words), in latest update (my so-called "version #3"), a line from Kaddish was put in as (new) line #15.

Also agree it would be fine to put in more from Ginsberg and Kaddish. Must say, as I'm "learning on the fly" here abt. cyberRenga form, I do feel it's best to always alternate poets w/ lines -- if not in some oldworld orderly way (i.e., poet a, b, c, a, b, c, etc.) at least not havving any aa's or bb's -- ergo, how about, Grant, you select a line of Ginsberg's (from your noted selection) and put it in yourself? -- hopefully by time you do that, someone will have added another line (new line 16 [or, et seq.]), so that we won't have Ginsberg immediately following Ginsberg . . . but yes, I'm sure there's room for many lines from him -- & in a cyberRenga, I suppose the addition of such lines depends on the poster/poets -- submit a line of your own or (in some cases) of Ginsberg's (or even others' -- in fact, to get that ball rolling, I'll put in a line from Gary Snyder right now . . .!) --

Note re: the Snyder line (from poem "High Quality Information"): this is from memory. Though it's a fave poem, not sure I recall the line aright (a word or two might be off -- so it can to be corrected later by someone with a book -- it's from North Point Press vol. Left Out in the Rain).

Also to note: it's great that Joseph Zitt is doing the web-based hypertext on this. As for me, I expect to be getting on an airplane (to Calif.) in abt. 9 hours -- & thus prob. won't be able to check out the website (or the further renga-route) for a certain while.

"om shantih"
d.i.

(now I return the Renga to you'all -- e.g., Grant?, or anyone else)

/ / / / \ \ \ \ / / / / \ \ \ \ / / / / \ \ \ \

****
Version #4 cyberRenga
****

RENGA

1| Now since death is so pornographic where can they sell it?
2| pull my daisy, poet
3| Happening to notice the willow leaves in the garden, a braille page of words
4| the wind a simultaneous translation
5| the sorority girls sing of fucking in a plaintive way
6| nothing has happened, no one has died
7| brushed silk blouses darkening in the midday heat, dank hyacinths
8| beside a bowl of old cat's milk, Jeniffer weeps
9| the stars seemed more acute as we turned back toward the town
10| I feel really weird. Is anyone else out there crying too?
11| it's raining outside, like it's crying in my heart
12| we were all eating veggie burgers and watermelon and I thought how frail Allen looks
13| circa '67, strange chanting on TV -- I was eleven & wide-eyed
14| According to Usenet, Ginsberg's body is lying in state
15| Now at last I can speak to you beloved brothers of an unknown moon
16| following cracks tracing threads guessing where the road goes
17|
18|
19|
20|
21|

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~ authorial notes:

1: Wndy Battin
2: Daniel Zimmerman
3: Kent Johnson
4: Daniel Zimmerman
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

5: Kent Johnson
6: Alan Jen Sondheim
7: Daniel Zimmerman
8: Kent Johnson
9: Aldon L. Nielsen
10: Kent Johnson
11: Maria Damon
12: Pat Pritchett
13: David R. Israel
14: Kenneth Goldsmith
15: Allen Ginsberg, Kaddish (via Peter Jaeger's post)
16: Gary Snyder (from "High Quality Information" -- via David R. Israel's post)
17: 18: 19: 20: 21:

(kindly join)

↑ Index

126. Pritchett,Pat
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Looks fine to me except what about Wendy Battin's line:
Now since death is so pornographic where can they sell it?
which I thought was the first line but wld also do fine as line 17.

↑ Index

127. Peter Jaeger
Allen Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

I write you a poem long ago already my feet are washed in death
Here I am naked without identity with no more body than the fine black tracery of pen marks on soft paper as star talks to star multiple beams of sunlight all the same myriad thought in one fold of the universe where Whitman was and Blake and Shelley saw Milton dwelling in a starry temple brooding in his blindness seeing all -

Now at last I can speak to you beloved brothers of an unknown moon

from "POEM Rocket" in Kaddish

↑ Index

128. David Israel
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Joseph--

<< I've started saving the messages into a Filemaker database, and tomorrow will (with the help of Tim Wood, also of this list) be creating scripts to turn this into an evloving Web site, at a URL I'll point y'all to. The hypertext is almost required to handle the branching of the texts; besides, it's an interesting challenge:-) >>

Thanks for the note. Do hope it proceeds & goes well. (I'll be heading out of town in less than 10 hours, so I might not be back with this for a some while . . .)

I guess it's mainly the fact that the renga starting happening on eve (& then in the midst) of the descent of the "news," that might lend it particular note. I can also understand the poss. reticence of some to chime in at this point. (Perhaps it'll revive, as might be felt appropriate, in course of next few days . . .)

best,
d.i.

↑ Index

129. Joseph Zitt
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

David Israel wrote:
>
> Here's, now (w/ your collective permission):
>
> proposed (VERSION #3) cyberRenga (so far)

I've started saving the messages into a Filemaker database, and tomorrow will (with the help of Tim Wood, also of this list) be creating scripts to turn this into an evloving Web site, at a URL I'll point y'all to. The hypertext is almost required to handle the branching of the texts; besides, it's an interesting challenge:-)

---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

130. David Israel
apology
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Someone pointed out to me, backchannel, the inappropriateness of my superficial dabbling with the cyberRenga, given the gravity of the circumstances & the need for due silence (a paraphrase). This corrective holds much sense.

To any whom my several posts (or line-appropriations) today may have seemed unseemly or offensive, kindly accept my adject apology.

yours,
d.i.

p.s. Susan Wheeler just now writes:
>Buddhist services Monday, and Jewish Tuesday

in appropriationist mode, that's seem a candidate; but "enough" (quoth Francis Brabazon) "has been far too much"

↑ Index

131. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the rhythm, the rhythm
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Don't know which Ray Charles song it was that Ginsberg was listening to -- but Charles's big hit of that day went to the rhythm and melody of: "There's a man going 'round taking names"

As Charles transmuted the sacred into the erotic ("I got a woman, way across town, she's good to me") -- Ginsberg must have heard a kindred spirit

pg. 144 of the journals (early 50s/60s):

The Eye of Everything: to be a photo of
  Allen Ginsberg

↑ Index

132. Grant Jenkins
Re: cyberRenga for Ginsberg
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Perhaps a passage from Ginsberg himself would go nicely here:

Strange now to think of you, gone without corsets & eyes, while I walk on the sunny pavement of Greenwich Village.

downtown Manhattan, clear winter noon, and I've been up all night, talking, talking, reading Kaddish aloud, listening to Ray Charles blues shout blind on the phonograph

the rhythm the rhythm--and your memory in my head three years after--And read Adonais' last triumphant stanzas aloud--wept, realizing how we suffer--

And how Death is that remedy all singers dream of, sing, remember prophesy as in the Hebrew Anthem, or the Buddhist book of answers--and my own imagination of a withered leaf--at dawn--

Dreaming back thru life, Your time--and mine accelerating toward Apocalypse, the final moment--the flower burning in the Day--and what comes after. . .

--from Kaddish

↑ Index

133. Susan Wheeler
Re: Memorial services
Sat 5 Apr 1997

Buddhist services Monday, and Jewish Tuesday. Will forward more details as they come in.

Susan Wheeler

> Does anyone have information on memorial and funeral services for Allen? Gary Snyder is scheduled to be here to read this coming Friday, and obviously the sudden news may change all that. I have left a message for Gary, but he can be hard to get. Any information would be greatly appreciated.
>
> And Charles Bernstein: thank you.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

134. shoemakers

Re: Allen Ginsberg / No Apologies

Sat 5 Apr 1997

No need for apologies, David, as far as I can see. And there was nothing "superficial" about your "dabbling"--that's just writing. I think Kent's right that everyone will deal with the news in their own way, and in their own time. As it happens, I feel like writing--out of the sense expressed by others of Allen's death sudden and hard, harder even than might have been expected. I saw/heard Allen "live" on two occasions, most recently at the Orono Confernece in '93. There, thanks to Burt Hatlen's generosity, I got the chance to introduce Allen's tandem reading with Carl Rakosi. That double reading was a moving & beautiful event for me, a bridging and spanning of poetic lives & energies drawing on experience of the better part of the century (Carl 88 at the time). The other time I heard Allen read was when i was an undergrad at U of MD, College Park, ca. '83 or '84. I think Allen must have read, or rather performed, for about an hour and a half or 2 hours--reciting, chanting, singing & playing that little harmonium--or whatever it's called. As i recall, he did it all from memory, no recourse at all to the printed word, a real bard--something i have not heard/seen anyone do since. I made a tape, using a cheap little portable recorder, and just now, remarkably, i managed to dig this tape out of an old box of junk. I rewound it to the beginning of a side, which turned out to be side 2, coming in somewhere in the middle of the reading. The first words are Allen asking a question "Go on...?" asking the audience whether he shld keep going, and the crowd responding w/ rousing affirmation. (As i remember it, it was a not very large room filled to overflowing, people standing in the corners & sitting on the floors, spilling out into the halls--the tape is full of sounds of people gabbing, chatting & laughing between & sometimes during poems.) Then Allen begins talking about the death of his father from cancer, & reads 2 sections from "Don't Grow Old," and then sings/plays "Father Death Blues." My first listen-thru to this sitting at the kitchen table sent a chill up my spine, & then when i tried to play it again the tape began to self-destruct, but i did manage to transcribe Allen's intro to the poems:

"1976--On the death of my father, Louis Ginsberg, who was a poet...who was a considerably gifted lyric poet...& for the 10 years before he died, at the age of 80, I gave poetry readings with him & we were relatively close. He died of cancer in 1976, in a relatively philosophic mood, without much pain. So these are a few notes & a song written during his illness & after his death. He was a high school teacher & he used to teach Wordsworth...and, uh, Poe. So I've learned a lot of poetry from him..."

[reads sections 3&4 of "Don't Grow Old"] (Even on this very poor tape, his wonderfully warm, expressive, charismatic, humorous, playful voice comes over.)

III.

Wasted arms, feeble knees
80 years old, hair thin & white cheek bonier than I'd remembered-- head bowed on his neck, eyes opened now and then, he listened--
I read my father Wordsworth's Intimations of Immortality
[Allen reads following quote w/ deep and comical sonority]
"...trailing clouds of glory do we come from God, who is our home..."
"That's beautiful," he said, "but it's not true."

"When I was a boy, we had a house on Boyd Street, Newark--the backyard was a big empty lot full of bushes and tall grass,
I always wondered what was behind those trees.
When I grew older, I walked around the block, and found out what was back there-- it was a glue factory."

[as read, father's story hits quite funny note of anticlimax, audience laughs--
Allen helping them to see this humor even in death]

IV.

[Reads opening question w/ great, childish credulity]

Will that happen to me?
Of course, it'll happen to thee.

Will my arms wither away?
Yes yr arm hair will turn gray.

Will my knees grow weak & collapse?
Your knees will need crutches perhaps.

Will my chest get thin?
Your breasts will be hanging skin.

Where will go--my teeth?
You'll keep the ones beneath.

What'll happen to my bones?
They'll get mixed up with stones.

[Goes on to play & sing "Father Death Blues"...]

Steve Shoemaker

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

135. George Bowering
Re: Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
Sat 5 Apr 1997

> Piping down the valleys wild
> Piping songs of pleasant glee
> On a cloud I saw a child..
> And he laughing said to me.

etc.

Charles, I am glad that you quoted that poem. I have been today and yesteday trying to call up all my Allen memories since first talking with him on his return from Asia, 1963. And you reminded me of the time I drove Allen westward thru the streets of Montreal, probably 1969, and he sat beside me and sang that song, pumping on that weird meoleon or whatever it was from India. so I veered off the street and took him and banged on F.R. Scott's door, and introduced the 2 poets, and Frank made one of his famous martinis for us, and I do believe that AG drank his, too.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

136. shoemakers
ginsdead.htm
Sat 5 Apr 1997

April 5, 1997
Beat Poet Laureate Ginsberg Dies

NEW YORK (AP) -- Allen Ginsberg, the poet laureate of the Beat Generation whose writing and lifestyle shaped the music, politics and protests of the next 40 years, died this morning. He was 70.

Ginsberg died in his Lower East Side apartment at 2:39 a.m. of a heart attack related to his terminal liver cancer, said Bill Morgan, his friend and archivist. The poet was surrounded by family and friends.

Ginsberg suffered from chronic hepatitis for years, which eventually led to cirrhosis of the liver. His diagnosis of terminal liver cancer was made eight days ago and made public on Thursday. He suffered a stroke Thursday night and slipped into a coma.

Ginsberg has spent several days in a hospice after the diagnosis, but then decided he wanted to return home.

``He was very energetic,'' Morgan said. ``He wore himself out (Thursday) talking to friends and writing poems.''

He wrote about a dozen short poems on Wednesday. One of the last was titled ``On Fame and Death''; others ran the gamut from nursery rhymes to politics.

During the McCarthy era in the 1950s, when TV's married couples slept in separate beds, Ginsberg wrote ``Howl'' -- a profane, graphic poem that dealt with his own homosexuality and communist upbringing.

``I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness, starving hysterical naked, '' began the seminal ``Howl.'' It was dedicated to Carl Solomon, a patient he met during a stay in a psychiatric ward.

Ginsberg became America's most popular and recognizable poet, his balding, bearded visage one of the enduring images of the 1950s beatnik explosion of Jack Kerouac, William S. Burroughs and Neal Cassady. The group, disillusioned with conventional society, created their own subculture.

Ginsberg's acolytes comprised a who's who of pop culture: Bob Dylan, Yoko Ono, Vaclav Havel, Patti Smith, Michael Stipe and Billy Corgan.

Irwin Allen Ginsberg was born June 3, 1926, in Newark, N.J., the second son of poet Louis Ginsberg and his wife, Naomi. The family moved to Paterson, N.J., while Ginsberg was a youngster.

Ginsberg intended to become a lawyer and enrolled at Columbia University. But while still a teen-ager, he fell in with a crowd that included Kerouac, Burroughs and Cassady -- the leaders of what became known as the Beat Generation.

``I think it was when I ran into Kerouac and Burroughs when I was 17 that I realized I was talking through an empty skull,'' Ginsberg once said. ``I wasn't thinking my own thoughts or saying my own thoughts.''

Ginsberg's first taste of notoriety came after the publication of ``Howl'' in 1956. Copies of the book were seized by San Francisco police and U.S. Customs officials, and publisher Lawrence Ferlinghetti was charged with publishing an obscene book.

Ferlinghetti was acquitted a year later, but the case generated enormous publicity for Ginsberg and his work. Ginsberg was suddenly in demand.

One of his other great works, ``Kaddish,'' was a confessional work dealing with his mother's life and death in a mental hospital. It was written, stream of consciousness-style, in his Manhattan apartment, fueled by a combination of amphetamines and morphine.

Ginsberg experimented heavily with drugs, taking LSD under the guidance of the late Timothy Leary in the 1960s.

As he grew older, Ginsberg became a guru to the counterculture movement. He coined the term ``flower power.'' He was arrested in 1967 for protesting against the Vietnam War in New York, and tear-gassed a year later while protesting at the Democratic convention in Chicago.

His National Book Award came in 1973 for ``The Fall of America: Poems of These States, 1965-1971.'' He was a finalist for a Pulitzer Prize in poetry in 1995 for his book, ``Cosmopolitan Greetings: Poems 1986-1992.''

Ginsberg toured with Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue in 1977, doing spontaneously composed blues poems. He toured Eastern Europe in 1986, receiving an award in the former Yugoslavia, recording with a Hungarian rock band and meeting a congress of young Polish poets.

``In the Eastern bloc, the people realize the governments are up to no good, whereas Americans still maintain that the government is looking after their best interest,'' Ginsberg said at the time.

Ginsberg remained vital and active well into his 60s, performing in Manhattan nightclubs and doing poetry readings. Last year, he recorded his poem ``The Ballad of the Skeletons'' with musical backing from Paul McCartney and Philip Glass.

He did a video version of the poem, a pre-election political rant. At 69, Ginsberg's video appeared in heavy rotation on MTV's ``Buzz Bin.''

The funeral will be private. In lieu of flowers, donations should be sent to Jewel Heart Buddhist Center in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Back to the Archives

↑ Index

137. nuyopoman
Allen Ginsberg's Death
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Tonight at War Resister's Benefit, Grace Paley tells wonderful AG tale, as does David McReynolds, a story of AG at Gem spa, walking out w/ Sunday (appropriately) Times, into a sidewalk junky drama, defused with the offer of a fig newton... Kimiko Hahn reads "tomb" section of Moloch/Howl... David Henderson reads Bob Kaufman's "To Ginsberg Allen" from SOLITUDES CROWDED... I read "Nazi Capish" (from new Longshot), new verses "Amazing Grace," "After Lelon," "Ballad of the Skeletons," and as benediction (we were gathered at Washington Square Church), "America" end, starting with "America you don't really want to go to war." It was a great place to be tonight. WRL is 75 years old next year.

All day swamped with grief I just sit, all day swamped with grief. Allen, the great orchestrator, has outdone himself with his passing.

BobH

↑ Index

138. Schuchat Simon
Allen dead
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Summer 1975, I've just moved to New York, with roommate Steve Hamilton go to call on Allen since we're living in the poetry fortress, 437 E. 12th Street, where Allen also lives; we sit in the kitchen and, among a variety of topics, Allen tells us, "you can never experience your own death"

what an awful feeling now, so strange to think of him gone

↑ Index

139. nico vassilakis
eternity queueing
Sun 6 Apr 1997

o i'd l ike t o to t h r r e o w w o

a l f

from here
goodbye allen ginsberg
goodbye paterson and so many things
hello everything hello

↑ Index

140. Joseph Zitt
Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
Sun 6 Apr 1997

[redacted] wrote:

> Tonight at War Resister's Benefit, Grace Paley tells wonderful AG tale,

All of yesterday and today at the Austin International Poetry Festival, people have been performing pieces for and about Ginsberg (Friday in honor, Saturday in memory). I heard about a wonderful event that erupted at one venue, where various parts of the audience got into chanting sections of his name while other recited bits of his poetry.

My group will be performing "Hum Bom" tomorrow night -- we had been thinking of retiring that piece, but it seems appropriate to do it one more time. --
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

141. Maria Damon
Ginsberg
Sun 6 Apr 1997

first time i met ginsberg 1977 he told me how great peter was in bed and quoted the tempest to me. (he was making chicken soup with grapes; i sd, that looks pretty potent, he sd, this so potent magic i do abjure, what's that from. i sd tempest, he sd any student of the tempest is a friend of mine, and are u related to s foster damon. no, i sd, it used to be diamond, i'm half jewish. why only half he sd.) later that summer i spent a few minutes in bed w/ him before i bailed. the last time i saw ginsberg 1996 was at St Marks do for Bob Kaufman. we both presented stuff along w/ many others. (i'd had many encounters w/ him in between, and often he seemed petulant and distracted as i was awkward around him and not of the right gender for commanding his attention. one time i wove him a white silk opera scarf. when i gave it to him he sd what's an opera scarf, i sd it's what they all wear in proust novels, so he seemed happy with it or at least gracious about accepting it.) so, last time i saw ginsberg about a year ago after the kaufman evening's ceremonies i pulled him aside and said, allen i want to tell you something i think you would understand. when i saw bob kaufman's ashes i put some of them in my mouth. he said, yes, that's a very common understandable impulse, eating the ashes of the dead. he was nice, tender as he'd been all evening when recounting tales of kaufman, not petulant and distracted but patient and kind, i thought, he knows he's going to die soon, that' why he's being so nice. then ira cohen? or someone? snapped a photo of us that i would love to have. just last week i was at the ginsberg archives at stanford looking for kaufman stuff, and found some.

↑ Index

142. Loss Glazier
Ginsberg
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Dear Poetics: We are working on an EPC Ginsberg page related to these posts. (We'll have a link there to the cyber renga page, when I get the URL for that.) Short pieces posted to Poetics will be considered for the tribute compilation; you do not need to send a duplicate of posts to me. If anyone has longer pieces, poems, essays, etc. they'd like to have on the Ginsberg page, please let me know at [redacted] Also, we're in great need of photos! Please contact me if you have any photos we can borrow for this tribute. More news on this but NOT until week after next. Thanks, Loss

↑ Index

143. Joel Kuszai
Re: Ginsberg
Sun 6 Apr 1997

---

in the interest of salvaging the memory of lesser-known poets, here's goes something that I have been thinking about posting for some time--

I met Chris Ide [1966-1994] when we were first year students at Michigan State University. After departing our first class, Barry Gross' freshman english major required
"Intro to the Study of Lit," we went immediately to a coffeeshop where we had a cup of coffee (my first, although it seems hard to imagine now) and discussed poetry, punk rock, and god knows what else. We became instant best-friends and spent a lot of time together reading, writing, talking talking talking and also as young boys are wont to do, drinking and expressing the adolescent ennui of that time in life. We shared a common background in high school introductions to poetry and it was, as has been discussed on this list, the role of the normative-making english teacher who, as if in some sly signal to a radical past, taught Ginsberg's poetry as if it were a forbidden text that was only to be given to truants, drifting creative types, etc. Much of the ginsberg/beat nexus materials existed in my high school library, although often edited through torn-out pages. We found--at a hipster bookstore that was one of the original Borders client stores--everything that we needed.

Although I first read him in high school, Chris Ide was my introduction to Ginsberg, whom I was fortunate to have had the opportunity to speak with on a number of occasions. We had a number of interactions that were often quite humourous. I once wrote him an angry letter complaining that his tour through Portland in 1990 was too expensive for a poet to attend (it was $15) and that he was becoming a rockstar/media celebrity and was out of touch with young poets. I was astonished with one of my housemates handed me the phone a week later, saying "it's Allen Ginsberg." He was calling to apologize and offered me free tickets to the reading! In Boulder, 1991, I cornered him at one point asked him why he didn't appreciate Oppen's poetry, at which time he told me that he knew and liked George, but that he never understood his poetry. This blindness, on Allen's part--his inability to read beyond a certain canonical set of texts (I have a copy of an anthology he prepared for a summer session, "Photographic Poetics" in which cubo-futurists and other kinds of European avant-garde works are included but American experimentalists are mostly absent, for obvious reasons, such as his Steiglitz influenced notion of photography)--this limitation is really the great problem with people, like my friend Chris Ide, who become swept up in the greatness of the man and the greatness of the great man theory of literature. While as a poet I think I have learned a great deal from Allen Ginsberg, I have also been led to things that he would never have approved of--and Oppen and Zukofsky are examples of this, or the Creeley of the 70s--etc. This rejection of Allen was an essential part of my growth. [and you can get all crazy about that anxiety game, blah blah blah]

My friend Chris really found a friend in these limited ideas of what a poet was or what a poem should be or look like.
Also, for Chris, the lifestyle promised in the pages of Keroac's novels or in some of the surrounding mythologies was dionysian and ecstatic harmony with love and the muse, in which people are always young and their bodies as crisp as the teenager who sleeps for hours as if to rest for the inevitably of an eternity. Chris found himself at age 18 attracted to boys of that age and younger and as he got older this became "an impossible love," which as in the Williams poem, "which has no hope of the world and cannot change the world to its delight" (I think it is the poem "Rain"?). Lately, through reading Paul Goodman's writing, I've been returned to these dilemmas of impossible love which terrorized Chris.

When Chris died in 1994, he was in recovery from years of methadone treatment for his addiction to heroin. Even while on methadone, he relapsed several times. He had been clean and relapsed. Going immediately to a hospitcal in Chicago, where he was living, he was treated and released. Scheduled for a trip to a rehab center outside of the city the next morning, by agreement he went back to his room in a kind of home for recovering addicts. On the way, he gave in and stopped in Wicker Park to buy a bag, which he snorted when he got back to his room. He had stumbled onto some "bad stuff" that hit the city at that time, killing a dozen or so people within a week. A friend, came to get him in the morning, to go to the clinic. When he didn't respond, his friend (who happened to be African American) asked the person at the door to let him into Chris' room to see what was the matter, alerting the doorperson as to the emergency. He was told (in effect) that because he was African American he wouldn't be admitted to check and see. When family finally intervened and he in his room was found, it was too late. The coroner reported that Chris spent many hours in a coma before passing and that in the morning when his friend to get him, he was probably still alive.

Until yesterday, I held Allen responsible for Chris' death. I could go into this in some detail, and it involves Ginsberg sending Chris money at inopportune times, etc. With Allen being gone, I felt that a bit of Chris was even further from earth than when he left. Ginsberg was a champion of his work, which remains unpublished (although underground beat zines have published a few and I think that Lee Renaldo's magazine was going to).

I felt and still feel enormous guilt about Chris Ide's death myself. He saw me as entirely academic, I think, and he completely misunderstood the passion required to keep it together in grad school. I don't think he really ever understood why I felt I needed to deal with school seriously, and he never really appreciated the kinds of texts I produced, although I know that he appreciated and loved me. The poems he wrote are of interest to me in a way that I can't really describe.

What follows are the first letters that Chris wrote to Ginsberg in the Fall of 1985 and a couple from the Winter and Spring of 1986. They are photocopies that Peter Orlovsky sent to Chris' sister, and I have them on loan from her. The originals would probably be at Stanford. If anyone is interested, I will send more back-channel, as they are a real social document. There are letters and postcards through Spring of 1993.

CHRIS IDE
557 [street address]
E. Lansing, MICH 10/31 [1985]
48823

Allen,
I'm drunk, have just read the Kaddish and cried. I'm not at home, found it in someone's bedroom, and after reading I just had to write. I always cry when I get to the part of you being 12 yrs old. I'm in love with that Allen Ginsberg, the one that followed R-- to college. I wish I would've known you when 12. Could've had love then. Now 18, loveless, lonely, are you? Did you get last letter? Please write me back sometime, Allen, I would be touched. God, I'm getting drunker, refuse to change paragraphs. This letter probably pathetic, but I'm going to send it anyway tomorrow. Allen I just read "Many Loves" today for first time and was deeply affected close to tears in the desensitized library. I think I love you Allen, don't know how, please don't file me away as another young poet scribbling bullshit kiss ass note to you; there's more, sweet Allen. Yes, I hve just read letters between you & Neal, finished today, depressed, I lay on couch all day thinking of you. I must talk to you, for real, someday. Do you remember talking to me in Ann Arbor after your reading? Talk of dreams of you & of love strangers. Anyway, I'll mail this drunken note tomorrow to you c/o Naropa and I beg that you might write back. Oh god, I am so lonely and sad, in love with the young Allen Ginsberg whose picture from, say, Jack's book, or young Empty Mirror photo I long for. Oh same older wiser but just as Sweet Allen please write to this weak sad young admirer lover poet, I wait.

Love, Chris Ide

1/23/86 11:59pm

Allen--
Maybe you're in Nicaragua now, but I thought i'd take the time to send these poems off to you. Particularly the one that begins with a quote of yous (hope you don't mind). This poem attempts to explain the debt I owe you; how much you've affected my life so unknowningly, maybe just by trying to live yous. Anyway, if i'm ever able to express that debt to you, through my poems, then all of the futile scribling will have been worth it I spose. Anyway, hope to see you before "time," before that "final spontaneous leap." Write if you have a chance.

another thanx,

-- Chris Ide [1]

2/14 1:46pm

Allen,
Happy valentines day! May the ghost of Rimbaud come kiss you sweetly.

Can't tank you enough for sending poems to David Cope-- he liked 'em, wrote back + is printing "cuz I don't know." You don't know how encouraging that is to me. My biggest problem is that I don't hae anyone here whose aesthetics I'm in total agreement with. I have a class w/ Diane Wakoski, who I owe a good deal + trust to an extent -- but she's an admitted Apollonian + is quite critical of mentioning the actual composition of a poem, inside the poem. I've been doing this constantly, and probably always will to some extent--dunno if I can help it, or if I should try to. Seems to me if a poem is merely a hunk of a day, it'll pint a finger at the eternal w/o even trying. Revision is cheap, but revision of the Truth is downright sleazy! Sometimes I re-weave things and even though it might make for a better poem, I never feel as good about it. It just that typical ... [words unreadable, end of page].

I dunno-- I just want someone to point a finger + say "You are a poet!" so I can settle down a bit.

Enclosed a couple more poems for you to glance at. Sent more to Cope also. A couple of them I am fairly happy with, but it always seems to me that there's a whole side of of me that doesn't come through i.e. the side that is miserable + falls in love with beautiful unobtainable boys--no otther sorrow like that!

Hope you are well in the east--
Chris

4/16/86 Chris Ide
[address]
E. Lansing, MICH

Allen,
This another drunk note, but no regrets this time--whatever's said is meant. No answer to my last letter ('round valentine's day)--I know, you're busy, but if possible would you send at least a postcard answering this?

Appreciate much your giving me Cope's address & mailing my poems to him--have written quite a few times w/ him + am visiting him this weekend--a great poet & a great guy!

I was supposed to be goign to Paris in August, but international travel is looking worse & worse, as is most everything politically, and i'm thinking more & more of Naropa Summer session. Am writing to them for $ info. but Cope says I may want to just stay w/whoever I can in Boulder and pick up on the scene as it happens--what do you think? This sounds fine to me, but i'd like to be able to pick up on whatever you're offering--what're you teaching/lecturing on & would I be able to sit in on things if not enrolled in session? Basically what i'm asking is will I be able to see & spend time w/ you--should I enroll or just be in Boulder, etc. -- whadda you think as you're the main reason i'd attend?

Here are a cople more poems, please anser if you've time--
Chris Ide [2]

5/7/86 10:30 am

Allen,
Thanks for the kind words on the poems I sent-- encouraging to hear! Here are a couple more--don't bother making specific comments on each when you're exhausted/busy etc., I just like for you to be able to read 'em. As far as sending stuff to NYZ & Paris Review & telling them you suggested to--I haven't done so yet, only because I thought it'd sound like a fishy brag or something-- I mean, I think it's fine for a knowledgeable poet to suggest the work of a youngster, but when the youngster's the one to relay the message, I dunno, I can just see editors sniveling at it. Maybe i'm just being stupid, in which case tell me & i'll go ahead & seend the poems + suggestion out. As far as NYQ--i've been rejected twice by them & D. Cope said in his last letter that he was going to try them for me (after he'd just succeeded in getting a couple more things in print for me: _Action_ (you know Jim Cohn, right?) took 2 poems. Just let me know what I should do about sending that stuff out.

I'll get together a batch of poems like you said, & will bring 'em to Boulder this summer--the plan now is to attend 1st week of classes, then stay a week or so w/ friends-
-(maybe even arrive a week before classes start)--I'll bring the poems & you can see what you think we can do w/ 'em.
When do you arrive & how do I get in touch w/ you?

Well, all right for now--here's another pic (I hope)--let me know what to do on sending stuf out etc.--Chris

You off cigareets yet?
I've been slowing way down on drinking, "the old screwy love,"--when's _White Shroud_ coming out?

---

[1] this letter contained poems, including:

"I need a bed to sleep in, a grave to rest my ashes," sings Allen Ginsberg, American Poetry Review December '85 58 years old now, our Whitman
he too will leave behind the earth madly spinning will take that final spontaneous leap, to where Jack Kerouac lies down eith the jazz/blues of the earth will leave behind those of us whose throats are sore from tying to find our voices.

Meanwhile, "Howl" is required reading in English 453 and we discuss the "beat generation" as if it were some sort of baseball game
"Did Ginsberg get a hi? Kerouac slide into home?"
In the classroom we liten to a cassette of Ginsberg reading "Howl"
no one runs around the room in tears nothing but blank faces behind desks so that i'm almost embarrassed until the ghost of Jack Kerouac appears rolling around the front of the room with a pint of rotgut, laughing.
"I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed"
by fear of nuclear devastation tongues drenched with surrealist budwiser escapism guts all aflame with the six o'clock news whose poetry reviews seeped flowery academia-- who'll wear Rimbaud's pants?
  All of you grad school poets clutching unpublished manuscripts let's drop out of the New Yorker world series and sing in the romantic unpublished streets.

1/23/86
---
[2] this letter also contained poems, including:

      What will you do with the rest of my life?

I confess that I haven't the urge to work with hand or foot in order to prove myself to the planet or bank.
Isn't it enough that I vow to beat my chest & yell for love, an humanity, and all of these four letter words?
It's true my hands are lazy--my heart is not;
I believe that the tree is there to lie beneath;
notice the way the fruit falls without a single plucking finger?
Flat on my back, that'll do,
let the heart slave over the problems of the sky;
the stars are arithmetic enough for me.
But no, each time the grass accomodates me
I wake to the hounds of reality sniffing at my anus.
"I don't see any want ads for poes,
do you wanna be a dishwasher all your life?

Dishwasher/poet, it's not so bad a title,
a drifter, the parents'll say.
But don't they see that they too drift towards that place where no dishes are washed?
The whole planet adrift in fact-- what a creaky futile barge it becomes with Reagan clutching silo shaped oars and you, you have the nerve to ask "What will you do with the rest of your life?"
I was about to ask you the very same question.

↑ Index

144. Andrew D Epstein

Re: Ginsberg

Sun 6 Apr 1997

From Ginsberg's elegy for Frank O'Hara:

I want to be there in your garden party in the clouds
all of us naked
strumming our harps and reading each other new poetry in the boring celestial Friendship Committee Museum.
You're in a bad mood?
Take an aspirin.
In the dumps?
I'm falling asleep
safe in your thoughtful arms.

"City Midnight Junk Strains"

↑ Index

145. Alan Jen Sondheim

for AG

Sun 6 Apr 1997

|
|
|
|
|
|
|
|

|
|
|

146. sschu30844
Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
Sun 6 Apr 1997

I met Ginsberg briefly in an airport van at the end of the Orono poetry conference; we were wedged up against each other, hardly a space in which to breathe. He asked what I'd been speaking on and when I said that I'd given a talk on Hart Crane he said how much he loved Crane's work. Then, that he had his Naropa students read "Atlantis" out loud because the movements of the mouth while reading that poem were so like those of cock-sucking. I've never quite known how to take that remark, though I choose to think of it as representing the words of a man for whom nothing was shameful. He had been a very generous presence at the conference, seemingly in attendance everywhere.

Susan

↑ Index

147. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Allen Ginsberg's Death
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Bob Holman's remark that Ginsberg was the great orchestrator quintessentially describes my favorite memory of AG.

I think it was 1966. I was home from college and hanging out in Washington Square Park in NYC. All of a sudden some people started cheering and otherwise celebrating, shouting that "The War Is Over." People around the park took up the mantra; very soon hundreds of us, with Ginsberg and Corso in the lead, starting marching up Fifth Avenue. As we exited the park, cheering continuously "The War Is Over," people of all kinds, dressed all ways, and of all ages joined us. I remember seeing two middle aged guys greeting each other on the edge of this crazy parade, shaking hands and joining up as they were laughing out loud, obviously enjoying the wonderful pranksterish seriousness of the spontaneous occasion, saying to each other in unison, "Hey the war is over!" By the time we were approaching 14th Street we were at least a thousand strong. The police, for whatever reason, did not try to stop us. We kept on, with these two zany poets in the lead, until we got to 42nd Street, now in the multiple thousands. There, like two possessed visionary field marshalls, the two, conferring at the tops of their lungs, decided to split up, the one leading those who would follow to the United Nations, as a final destination, the other, Allen, to Times Square.

I followed him. It was a rainy day, kind of gray, but it was a day of wildly unfounded, Surreal optimism. It was a moment of genius, flamboyance, and lyricism. It now sums up his poetry for me. As Charles B has said, how can one imagine life without Allen?

I always found him incredibly generous. He (and that day Corso) was a role model. I remember talking with him some decades later at a poetry function at the MOMA. Our paths had crossed numerous times, but he was someone who met so many people in so many places, for so long. If he would recognize me he didn't go out of his way to show it. Yet over wine and cheese we talked at length that night about various things. He was someone who, it struck me after that night, never wasted a moment of life. He was incredibly smart and interested in EVERYTHING. And he was incredibly gentle. I could go on. I last spoke with him some few years ago at the Orono conference already mentioned here on this list. I came up to him to ask him for some work for Poetry New York. I allowed as how I might be bugging him, but he was quick to point out that, no, as an honored guest, that was his job, to hear me and others like me out.

He understood who he was. It was I who was still trying to comprehend the meaning of him. Yes he has been part of the fabric of my life.

Who will ever read and sing Blake for us again?

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

148. Steven Marks
Re: Ginsberg
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Howl, howl, howl!
I know when one's dead and when one lives.
Pray you undo this button on my fly
I heard buzz when I died.
Thank you, sir.

Steven Marks

↑ Index

149. Don Cheney
First Typo, Best Typo
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Today's Sunday LA Times has a wonderful typo. They printed excerpts from several poems including this from "America":

> I have mystical visions and comic vibrations.

Told you he was a funny guy.

Don

==========
Visit Don Cheney's Home Page & Clean Neck Shop
http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791
==========

↑ Index

150. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Allen's death
Sun 6 Apr 1997

A number of listmembers--Joe Amato, Norman Finkelstein, Cole Swensen, and I were in the middle of a conference in Denver--a conference on relation of poetry to theory--when the news came in that Allen had died. It was truly heart-breaking. I thought immediately of the wonderful way Allen read the lines "To die in Denver...." from "Howl" and of the last time I saw Allen, which was appropriately in a California Supermarket--Gelson's in Pacific Palisades. I was approaching the deli and there was Allen with Stan Grinstein, the art patron, with whom Allen was staying for the Burroughs festival. We were happy to see each other and wandered around the gorgeous store and when we got to the bakery Allen said, "Marjorie, don't tell anyone you saw me in this FANCY grocery store!" But he was half-kidding. It was shortly before his 70th birthday and he was in good spirits and was having dinner with Dennis Hopper.

It's a nice memory of someone I always found totally endearing--the way he CARED about his work, your work--everything that was happening...

Marjorie P.

↑ Index

151. henry g
my Ginsberg story
Sun 6 Apr 1997

Unlike these other storytellers, I never met Allen Ginsberg, though my (ex) father-in-law John Tagliabue was at Columbia with him & is a sort of Italian-American Maine Shelleyan straight academic double - both of them from north Jersey (Tagliabue's dad was a chauffeur & restaurant owner from Cantu, near lake Como - he himself was born there) & some similarities in their approach to poetry (exuberant, against revision & wasp-anglo refinement, & WHITMAN & China & buddhism) in fact John Tagliabue is another of those poets out there. anyway, this was early 1970s, I was hitchiking around in a sort of private-early-Xtian-gnostic daze, having dropped out of college... was in SF., had just had my guitar stolen & the back of my head bashed in by a huge enormous fat Hells'Angel at the stage door of a Dead concert, where I had gone with my old high school buddies TOM DAVIS & AL FRANKEN of soon-to-be SNL fame... anyway, I was somewhere in SF & met this young Ginsberg protege who had just come out there from NY, he was dressed in a buddist toga type thin g & sandals & carrying a sheaf of poems... told me he loved Ginsberg & followed him around (I thought...poor Ginsberg) & he was heading up to the bookstore, so I tagged along... we got to City Lights, which was closed & he started calling out in this pitiful tone, "Allen...Allen...Allen..." up to the 2nd floo r window - no response. After some time I said to him, hey, why don't you just take these poems and make paper airplanes & THROW them into that window. So we did. & we were able to land some right through the 2nd floor window. My compadre kept moaning out, "Allen...Allen..." & finally 2 heads popped out the window - Ginsberg & Ferlinghetti. They looked at us & smiled for about a minute, didn't say anything - then went back inside. My ever-hopeful poet-pal resumed his mournful calling... so I bid him farewell & headed on my way. What else happened in SF? I played guitar at a healthfood restaurant & made a few bucks. A guy in a very large pink cadillac convertible offered to show me around town, & he did show me Columbus Park at sunset which was lovely...but he was trying to make me while I tried to convert him to my version of Xtianity, so we bid each other farewell... next day I hitched out toward Salt Lake City - that was my 1st & last visit to the beautiful city of SF where I spoke with Jerry Garcia, had my head bashed by a NY Hells Angel, goofed around with the head honchos of the HA Rotary clubs (it was a national convention they were having there at the Dead concert), met a Ginsberg acolyte, met a denizen of that fair city, played my other guitar, & caught a glimpse of Allen Ginsberg.

Some of us inhabit the interstices between the road & the roar there's St. Francis on the roof with three sparrows & Martin Luther King (29 yrs before) black milk we drink you today, tomorrow we'll be singing again we'll be singing again we'll be singing again breathe deep it's the whale, it's the trumpets in the sky

↑ Index

152. Michael Magee

Re: Ginsberg

Sun 6 Apr 1997

I thought it might be nice to hear something about Ginsberg from a younger/ new list member, so, here goes: I met Ginsberg I guess about two years ago now when he came to read "Kaddish" at Penn, for the first time in awhile as I understand it. By a mix-up which left him without someone to drive him to Penn Towers and his hotel room, I got a chance to meet him. Bob Perelman and I took him to the hotel and Bob had a class to get to so I walked him up. His heart condition kept him from carrying his own bags and I think Bob thought he might drop dead. There had been some talk about whether he'd even be able to read that day. At the hotel counter he asked for two keys, then held one up at me and said jokingly, "For some lucky boy later." It didn't seem directed towards me or, really, anyone - a kind of nod towards days gone by or a playful attempt to agitate the guy at the counter. He seemed, despite the gesture towards his sexual gamesmenship, a gentle old man. He was very kind, asked me whether I was a poet, what kinds of poems I was writing, who I liked, what my academic work was about, etc, all with a sense of genuine interest, it seemed to me. In the elevator we got into a conversation about Lowell. He told the story of how Lowell came to hear him read "Kaddish" at Harvard (1958, '59?). A third of the way through the reading Lowell got up and left - Ginsberg assumed it was a snub and felt bad about it for years, until 1976 when he decided to ask him about it. They were reading at the 92nd St. Y and Ginsberg asked Lowell why he'd walked out. Lowell said he had been sitting in between several Harvard bigwigs who he knew and had started to cry uncontrollably. Embarrassed, he got up quickly and left. Ginsberg then said he always liked Lowell which surprised me for a moment, thinking of battles between camps, etc, but just as quickly made alot a sense, since it didn't seem just then like this guy standing with me in the elevator could dislike anyone. I brought his bags into his room. He seemed tired and said he better get some rest. I thought of having him sign my Collected Poems which I had in a backpack, but didn't. I had a weird, morbid feeling that I might be the last person to see him alive. Later he read "Kaddish" very beautifully. No idea whether this will sound familiar to anyone but, great poet and poetry aside, I've had a lasting affection for the guy ever since.

-Mike Magee

↑ Index

153. Poetics List
Forwarded mail....Re: Ginsberg
Sun 6 Apr 1997

---

sent by mistake to poetics listowner address...

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 6 Apr 1997 06:58:03 -0700 (PDT)
From: Jamie Reid <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]

Allen Ginsberg, our great poet and teacher, this saint and holy madman, has died. I first heard of his illness last week without hearing any details, and thought, oh, he will still be with us for years yet. Then George Stanley told me last night that he had been diagnosed with incurable cancer. Together we discussed the need for Vancouver poets to come together and write to him in his extremity expressing our undying gratitude and appreciation for his great life.

This afternoon, I spoke to George Bowering on the telephone to begin this process, and George told me Allen had died during the night, and now it is too late. He had been scheduled to read in our city on the very night that he died, but the engagement was cancelled because of his illness, and now we will never see him in the flesh again.

He had not visited in our city for many years, and all of us, including a whole new generation of young people who remain interested in his work and vision were looking forward to seeing and hearing him again. The last time I saw him in the flesh and talked to him was in 1963 at the poets' conference here. My wife and I and some friends took Allen on the Grouse Mountain chairlift for an outing. I the day as one of the most beautiful of many beautiful days that summer. Allen carried with him a set of thumb cymbals, which he beat together prayerfully as the chairlift slowly ascended the mountain, delivering us an exalted view of the ocean and the city. I am not at all religious, but Allen was able to inspire in me a sense of the tremendous beauty of the world and the cosmos, and of human beings which has never left me. I don't often speak of the soul, it's something that I barely understand, but the human soul and its universal quality of love was always the substance of Allen's discourse, so I am free to do so today, and I have Allen to thank for this freedom.

The silvery, insistent sound of Allen's cymbals echoed off the tops of the mountains. The top of my head seemed to open and become part of the sky. The thundering power of Hare, of Rama, of Krishna, gods I still do not know, seemed imminent, seemed present. Yet the day remained a perfectly ordinary day, and all of us were here on earth, plain beings of human flesh.

The night before at a party at my place, saying he liked the way he danced , he had propositioned my friend Dallas Selman, who was accompanying us that morning. But Dallas, who was not gay, put him off by lying, telling him that his wife wouldn't like it if he went with Allen. In the morning, as we set out to drive up the mountain, Allen asked Dallas about his wife, and, stupid me, big mouth, blurted out, "What wife?' There was plenty of silliness and laughter surrounding Allen Ginsberg, but he was serious, and critical, too. I remember he made harsh fun of me later for my "hip" affectations, because that was his way of love. His aim both in his poetry and his life was to shock and to awaken, and he was so momentously successful at his work.

The last time I saw him was in Montreal in 1975. Thousands, (literally thousands!) of Quebecois young people came to see him and William Burroughs there, and listened with close attention, even though many of them spoke only French, and they were awakened as they had expected to be, because Allen never stinted in his the speaking of his truth.

He came to Vancouver again about 1990, when he gave a reading with Gregory Corso and Michael McClure, I think. But I was living elsewhere and wasn't able to attend. Gregg Simpson, an artist friend who is also a musician and lives close by to me, often speaks with great pride about working as the percussionist in the band that opened the reading. There are many people in Vancouver whose lives have been touched by his presence in ways they will never forget. In the near days to come all of us will be talking together about Allen and remembering what he gave to us from the unparalleled generosity of his American soul, from his grand passion.

There are not many poets and poems of which it can be said that they have changed the direction of human life. Leaves of Grass is certainly one such poem, and Allen Ginsberg, through the stewardship of his beloved William Carlos Williams, is the direct inheritor of that wonderful fearless American public democratic voice. The opening lines of HOWL, that holy poem, cannot be erased from the consciousness of North America or the world. From the moment that I first read HOWL, my life was changed forever, and the same is true of almost all my contemporaries and friends. This sexy apocalyptical rant was the clearest and steadiest voice of the visions of a generation.There was a time when I could recite the poem completely off by heart like the Bible itself. Mad as Ginsberg sometimes like to act, had a scholar's knowledge of so many things, of the Jewish rabbinical tradition, of Buddhism, classical and Zen, of Hindu visions, and of Tantric meditations. He was instrumental in awakening an entire generation of America to the fact that there were other powerful forms of knowledge that could enrich the American pragmatic and scientific consciousness and expand the possibilities of human life. From this mix, Ginsberg concocted a stew both flavourful and spicy. And full of a delightful laughter. He never went passive in the world, he was always striving to make an effect, to wring some changes, and even when at his most clown-like, playing, the fool, beneath it and under it all was a deep and important human dignity which commanded respect, but especially love.

Official America laughs and makes a joke of this holy fool, but he, in his person and in his work, represents the new soul of the New America which is still being born. For many years he mainly disappeared from the public media, but recently I have seen on television a wonderful documentary about the life and work of William Carlos Williams, in which Allen gives a wise and beautiful analysis and summation of the contradictions within the American society and psyche which were expressed by Allen's great teacher, the hope and the desire for a richer and more humane human life, thwarted by the blindness of official morals and society in America--

"The pure products of America/go crazy."

"I have seen the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness."

With these and the lines that followed, Ginsberg fashioned a call and a program for a kind of mental and social insurrection which is still going on in America, and there is no going back. Once said, this cannot be cancelled, and the message will be heard by this generation, and the next generation, and the next. Allen cannot die. He has already joined the Immortals.

Then again, during the Gulf War, Allen Ginsberg appeared on television, the only one among thousands of Americans who gave their views during those horrifying traumatic months, to speak unequivocally and clearly in the voice of an Old Testament prophet, with the learning of a rabbi, and the deep understanding of the American democratic political tradition, condemning the holocaust visited on the Iraqi people by the merciless bombs of American military power, so unjustifiably, so contrary to the purest ideals of American democracy. It was the speech of a hero, an act of the purest human courage and made me proud that I had once stood in the living presence of this wonderful American human being. That one speech erased forever my skeptical doubts about the power of the truth that Allen Ginsberg carried in his soul and daily spoke, the mightiness of that "queer shoulder" he vowed so many years ago to put to the wheel in hiis poem called "America," tough, unbending speaker of human love that he was.

These two television programs and anything else that he has done, should be made available to the world as we think back upon the life of this great poet and the profound knowledge he has given us of America and its soul.

It was through Allen Ginsberg and his friends that I came to know so many things I would otherwise have never known. Today, I know I am together with poets in my own country and in the United States, England, The Czech Republic, Slovakia, Russia, Cuba, India, Mexico, Japan--all the places in the world that his monumental love has touched. Allen was instrumental in bringing to the consciousness of ignorant North Americans, the beauty and wisdom of the religious texts of the East, including the Tibetan Book of the Dead. Now Allen is receiving the emanations of all our love assisting his soul in its passage to that other world.

Dearest, beloved Allen, I am not alone in loving you: there are thousands world wide who are thinking about you today with love and gratitude. People everywhere are sending you their blessings as you pass into the spirit. All of our shoulders are still at the wheel, still at the work which you showed us must be done, and how to do it, given the example of your own magnificent courage and devotion, the splendour of your awakened human vision.

Jamie Reid

↑ Index

154. David Bromige
Jamie Reid's eulogy for A.G.
Sun 6 Apr 1997

I will backchannel to Jamie my appreciation also, but I want to thank him on the list for his splendid eulogy forwarded to us today. Reading it, I thought of all that AG survived in order to flesh out his three-score-and-ten, while not only keeping his mind but growing in humanity, and I thought of how infectious his spirit, finding as I did a scale and tone in Jamie's eulogy I had too little appreciated, in these many years of our separation, were part of this man's range, but which surely owed something to the topic of his address.

By way of postscript to Jamie's posting and those many of others, I'd like to say my Ginsberg piece. While AG and I met several times over the decades, I did not become close with him until we were neighbors in the faculty dorms at Naropa. During those conversations I learned about him firsthand what everyone has been speaking to the list--most notably, of his breadth, humility, and unremitting hunt for the intelligent heart of the world. Through his position and stature as a world leader, he bore the continual brunt of exponential information and once I had to ask him to put aside what he knew of injustice and misery from all over, so that we might feel happier while we talked. Scrupulously obliging, as one hears he so often could be, he did what he could to shut out what must have been a virtually uninterruptible clamor for succor and witness beaming in to his radio-brain.

Where AG was concerned, it was not love at first sight for me (the first time we met, in Vancouver in 63, he was wearing white robes and would have preferred to bow, I guess, but reluctantly did shake my hand, saying "Oh, are we still doing that?" : one might have said the same to him!) but at Naropa I found myself on his wavelength, an unforgettable experience.(For which opportunity, which this once I was not so dumb as to reject, my thanks to Anselm Hollo, Anne Waldman, Andrew Schelling and the other Naropa lights.)

He and I spoke of his health problems, and he complained of being tired, but he gave off a spry resilience that assured one he was good for a long time yet. That was only 18 months ago. But we see what life he continues to have as anecdote and eulogy flood in; and it was never clearer that he belongs to the ages.

Sorry for the length--meant to keep it short but something about Allen can take one over I notice. And thanks again to Jamie for his inspiring words. db

↑ Index

155. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: Ginsberg NY Times obit

Sun 6 Apr 1997

At 12:30 PM 4/7/97, Michael Leddy wrote:
>I read yesterday's log this morning with the expectation that someone >would've commented already on the NYT obituary. But no one has. I >didn't expect the Times to get it right, but still--
>
>Wilborn Hampton adds an exclamation point to the title _Howl_ (even though >the front page photo has the Facsimile Edition right there, no exclamation >point). (A photo on page 21 almost certainly misidentifies someone else >as William Burroughs.) Hampton quotes John Leonard (of all people) and >Saul Bellow (of all people) on AG's significance as a writer. He >describes AG as "a protege of William Carlos Williams." He says that AG
>"used the celebrity he gained with 'Howl!' to travel widely during the >next two decades" (living off his fame, sure). He misspells John Clellon >Holmes' name and seems confused about the circumstances concerning Howl
>and WBAI. The obit seems generally disdainful: "[Ginsberg] declared he >had found a new method of poetry. 'All you have to do,' he said, ' is >think of anything that comes into your head," etc. And Neal Cassady is >identified as "a railway worker who had literary aspirations." The >headlines--"Master of Beat Poets" and "Master of the Outrageous" also seem >to cast AG as someone not to be taken (all that) seriously.

>
>Now I know the work of three Hamptons. I still prefer Lionel and Hawes.
>(But what did I expect for four dollars?)
>
>Michael Leddy
>Charleston, IL

these seem like trivial peccadillos. i was actually surprised by how little there was to complain about in the obit.

↑ Index

156. Loss Glazier
EPC Correspondence
Mon 7 Apr 1997

A note that there may be a delay in any correspondence sent to the EPC for the next week to ten days. Please be patient or hold your requests until after the middle of April. Nothing should get lost however - and we'll try to catch up as soon as possible after that. Meanwhile, new resources continue to be added. Stop by and have a look when you get the chance. As always, at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

157. T-Bone Prone
Re: Ginsberg
Mon 7 Apr 1997

I am summoned from my bed to the Great City of the Dead

-Allen Ginsberg, "White Shroud", composed the night of October 5, 1983
and signed at 6:35 AM.

> << >> <<

↑ Index

158. Pete Landers
Re: my Ginsberg story
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Once I was at a gathering in Buffalo, having driven Tom Raworth there from Rochester. Susan Howe was there, too, and Allen Ginsburg and several Buffalo-dians who are on this list. Somehow along the drive I had developed one of those really nasty neck-ache / sinus headache pains and wasn't able to talk with anyone. I was sitting apart, resting my neck, when I felt hands on my shoulders. It was Allen, concerned about someone he never even met. We exchanged a few words, I thanked him for writing honestly and told him he was an inspiration to me. We talked a little politics. Since then whenever some self-appointed literary didact has tried to make pronouncements about Ginsberg's personality, I have argued. Here was a man who did not give himself airs. He tried his best to live honestly in this crazy world.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

159. Susan Wheeler
Services update
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Sitting (four hours) begins this morning at 9:30 at Shambhala, 118 West 22nd Street; private services tomorrow.

S. Wheeler

↑ Index

160. Douglas
Allen Ginsberg poem
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Just a few months ago Allen sent a poem to Sun & Moon
Press for inclusion in THE POETS' CALENDAR.

I think it sums up his incredible career, and we'd like to offer it as a brief memorial:

Multiple Identity Questionnaire

"Nature empty, everything's pure;
Naturally pure, that's what I am"

I'm a jew? a nice jewish boy?
A flaky Buddhist, certainly
Gay in fact pederast? I'm exaggering?
Not only queer an amateur S & M fan, someone should spank me for saying that
Columbia Alumnus, class of '48,
Beat icon, students tell me.
White, if jews are "white race,"
American by birth, passport and residence

Slavic heritage, mama from Vitebsk, father's forebears Kamenetz-Podolska near Lvov.
I'm an intellectual! An anti-intellectual, anti academic Distinguished Professor of English, City University of New York,
Manhattanite, Brooklyn College Faculty,
Another middle class liberal,
but lower class second generation immigrant,
Upperclass, I own a condo loft, go to art gallery Buddhist vernissage dinner parties with Nicarchos,
Rockefeller, and the Luces
Oh what a sissy, Professor Four-eyes, can't catch a baseball or drive a car--courageous Shambhala
Graduate Warrior!
Still student, chela, disciple, my guru Gelek Rinpoche,
Myself addressed "Maestro" in Milan, Venice, Napoli
because Septuagenarian, got Senior Citizen discount
at Alfalfa Healthfoods New York subway--
Mr. Sentient Being! -- Absolutely empty Non-being Non not-being neti neti identity, Maya delusion,
Nobodaddy, a nonentity

7/5/96 Naropa Tent
Boulder, CO

(c) copyright 1997 by Allen Ginsberg
All rights reserved.

↑ Index

161. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Time Change
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Actually SOME of us, who are stretched rather thin, are not at all happy about the "loss" of a "formerly extra" hour of sleep....What exactly do business interests get out of it by the way?

Mark P.

On Fri, 4 Apr 1997, Joe Safdie wrote:
> >
> Congratulations to the citizens of Indianapolis for resisting the > artificial, mechanical construction of "daylight savings" -- it's > all done for business interests -- (though this is the "good" pole, > when we're all supposed to be happy for the "extra" daylight) --

>
> (and are)
>

↑ Index

162. Douglas
Re. Allen Ginsberg poem
Mon 7 Apr 1997

C> From: Douglas <[redacted]>
> Organization: Sun Moon Books
> Subject: Allen Ginsberg poem
> Comments: cc: [redacted]
> To: [redacted]
> X-PMFLAGS: 34078848
>
> Just a few months ago Allen sent a poem to Sun & Moon
> Press for inclusion in THE POETS' CALENDAR.
>
> I think it sums up his incredible career, and we'd > like to offer it as a brief memorial:
>
> Multiple Identity Questionnaire
>
> "Nature empty, everything's pure;
> Naturally pure, that's what I am"
>
> I'm a jew? a nice jewish boy?
> A flaky Buddhist, certainly
> Gay in fact pederast? I'm exaggering?
> Not only queer an amateur S & M fan, someone should > spank me for saying that
> Columbia Alumnus, class of '48,
> Beat icon, students tell me.
> White, if jews are "white race,"
> American by birth, passport and residence
> Slavic heritage, mama from Vitebsk, father's > forebears Kamenetz-Podolska near Lvov.
> I'm an intellectual! An anti-intellectual, anti academic > Distinguished Professor of English, City University of New > York,
> Manhattanite, Brooklyn College Faculty,

> Another middle class liberal,
> but lower class second generation immigrant,
> Upperclass, I own a condo loft, go to art gallery Buddhist
> vernissage dinner parties with Nicarchos,
> Rockefeller, and the Luces
> Oh what a sissy, Professor Four-eyes, can't catch a > baseball or drive a car--courageous Shambhala
> Graduate Warrior!
> Still student, chela, disciple, my guru Gelek Rinpoche,
> Myself addressed "Maestro" in Milan, Venice, Napoli
> because Septuagenarian, got Senior Citizen discount
> at Alfalfa Healthfoods New York subway--
> Mr. Sentient Being! -- Absolutely empty Non-being Non
> not-being neti neti identity, Maya delusion, > Nobodaddy, a nonentity
>
> 7/5/96 Naropa Tent
> Boulder, CO
>
> (c) copyright 1997 by Allen Ginsberg
> All rights reserved.

↑ Index

163. David Bromige
detention with a red headed woman
Mon 7 Apr 1997

This "subject" from George Bowering refers to a chapter in our collaborative novel, _Piccolo Mondo_, and I am pleased to announce its upcoming publication by New Coachhouse Press, Toronto. Details later, possibly from my co-author. db.

↑ Index

164. MAXINE CHERNOFF
70th Birthday Party
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Last summer Paul Hoover and I were teaching at Naropa the week they happened to hold a belated birthday party for Allen. The tone of the toasts at the party was respectful but in summary of his career and I thought a bit tedious to someone who wasn't well (he'd been very ill the week before) and who seemed impatient with direct praise. After he was presented his dietetic cake and asked to say some words, these were the words he said: "This is boring and embarrassing." Candor and practicality were among his strongest attributes, and he didn't forsake them for birthday pomposity. After he was allowed off-stage, he became personally very pleasant amd talked to everyone in sight. I felt lucky to attend his less than successful birthday celebration and, like all people on this list, will miss him.

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

165. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: One who is still among us
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Lou Harrison, who has written some memorable verse alongside his unforgettable music, is at last receiving some overdue recognition as he turns eighty. For any of you living or visiting in the Bay area this week, here are a few events:

Tuesday noon -- San Jose State concert hall -- open discussion with Harrison

Tuesday 8:00 PM -- Tribute concert (call [redacted] for tickets)

April 22-23 -- at University of California Santa Cruz 22 -- talk by Leta Miller, author of "Lou Harrison: Composing a World" forthcoming from Oxford -- talk will include playing of tape from 1968 Cabrillo music festival concert at which Harrison's "Peace Pieces" caused an audience uproar (just like the good ole days of Igor & Vaslav in Paris!)

23 -- 80th birthday concert UCSC Recital Hall 8:00 PM for tickets call [redacted]

May 9 & 10 -- San Jose Symphony, Center for the Performing Arts 8:00 PM performance of Harriosn's Symphony #2 along with Ives's Symphony #3 call [redacted]

AND for music fans everywhere -- There is a Lou Harrison web site at:

http://www.music.sjsu.edu/Harrison/harrison.html

↑ Index

166. Jerry Rothenberg
San Diego Readings
Mon 7 Apr 1997

For those in the San Diego area or in striking distance thereof, the New Writing Series for April and May includes:

Friday, April 11th, 7:30 p.m.: Carolee Schneemann in a performative reading, "Your Dog My Cat or Delirious Arousal of Destruction" (at the Center for Research in Computing & the Arts, UCSD, #408 University Center).

Thursday, April 17th, 7:30 p.m.: Raymond Federman & Ron Sukenick (at the UCSD Visual Arts Facility Performance Space, located on Russell Lane).

Friday, April 25th, 4:00 p.m.: Lois-Ann Yamanaka (at Visual Arts Facility Performance Space).

Wednesday, April 30th, 4:30 p.m., Peter Gizzi & Elizabeth Willis (at Visual Arts Performance Space).

Wednesday, May 14th, 4:30 p.m., Ojenke, at Visual Arts Facility Performance Space).

Note. On Thursday, April 10th, at 6:30 p.m., Carolee Schneemann will be showing three short recent films ("Known/Unknown," "Interior Scroll: the Cave," and "Instructions per Second") as part of the Glare Screening Series (UCSD Visual Arts Facility Performance Space).

All events are free & open to the public.

↑ Index

167. Michael Leddy
Ginsberg NY Times obit
Mon 7 Apr 1997

I read yesterday's log this morning with the expectation that someone would've commented already on the NYT obituary. But no one has. I didn't expect the Times to get it right, but still--

Wilborn Hampton adds an exclamation point to the title _Howl_ (even though the front page photo has the Facsimile Edition right there, no exclamation point). (A photo on page 21 almost certainly misidentifies someone else as William Burroughs.) Hampton quotes John Leonard (of all people) and Saul Bellow (of all people) on AG's significance as a writer. He describes AG as "a protege of William Carlos Williams." He says that AG "used the celebrity he gained with 'Howl!' to travel widely during the next two decades" (living off his fame, sure). He misspells John Clellon Holmes' name and seems confused about the circumstances concerning _Howl_ and WBAI. The obit seems generally disdainful: "[Ginsberg] declared he had found a new method of poetry. 'All you have to do,' he said, ' is think of anything that comes into your head," etc. And Neal Cassady is identified as "a railway worker who had literary aspirations." The headlines--"Master of Beat Poets" and "Master of the Outrageous" also seem to cast AG as someone not to be taken (all that) seriously.

Now I know the work of three Hamptons. I still prefer Lionel and Hawes. (But what did I expect for four dollars?)

Michael Leddy
Charleston, IL

↑ Index

168. Ryan Whyte
90 Neuf Zero
Mon 7 Apr 1997

The drive, the fact it nightly conditions
the radio voice tenor
Canada Year Nine Seven Stultifying, frequency rue Helmoltz-Hering the black Goethe in the prism bars folds the penitentiary taught them a thing or two that my heart is a random dot stereogram controversy swells like a hidden woman tensor edge the writing of her heart knows the valve control inflation quick inside the virtual of atmospheres in ancient Canada pipeline is father, to the sister pulsing from the arctic neuf zero

blank spectrum of gusher ruins farmers fields forever nightly right inside the blunt habitus good gold Merleau taught it to the children of bourgeoisie in their parents' apartments on a planned date metaphysical wall written revolution when it Goe commute impossible rue the day of streets that built the city not the other way around black money is our here our parents' complicity nation quiet zero 1

also, when I drive I think of nothing but you and I drive forever.

↑ Index

169. henry gould
Re: Ginsberg NY Times obit
Mon 7 Apr 1997

always ready to defend the status quo... just a few comments on Michael Leddy's comments.

the obit could have been better, granted. But it was a far cry from generally disdainful. Why NOT quote laudatory remarks from figures outside of the circle of admirers (i.e. Saul Bellow)? That seems the most objective kind of praise. The photo mentioned certainly WAS Burroughs. Would Ginsberg himself want to be taken ALL THAT SERIOUSLY? Do you want to have it both ways? I thought for a brief time AG WAS a "protege" of Williams - before going to college. I could have this wrong. People know AG 's letter turns up (amazingly!!) in _Paterson_ - not the letter of a disciple, for sure - in fact a critical letter, critical of some myopic aspects of Wms' epic - but it's still the letter of a young writer in dialogue with an older. but hey, let's not have a hash-over debate over the tombs... love, love, & sorrow these days, & joy too yoo too - Henry G

↑ Index

170. John Cayley
Cyber/Poetextual Readings in London
Mon 7 Apr 1997

 with apologies for cross-postings ***

Jim Rosenberg
Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Chris Funkhouser

Read, Project & Perform
for SubVoicive Poetry

Friday 11th April
The Three Cups
Sandland Street
(Holborn Tube)
London, UK
Admission GBP 5.00 (concessions 2.50)
Doors open 8 pm, reading starts 8:15

Warp your geographies by taking this opportunity of a rare visit by US-based proponents of hypertext / cybertext & poetext

Or, if you're on the other side of the pond, why not make it a reason to take a weekend flight to the world's most happening city?

Chris Funkhouser is a musician, writer, broadcaster and computer programmer who has edited and co-produced literary journals on CD-ROM, compact disc, video, the Internet and in print. Recent magazine publications included in _Callaloo_, _Hambone_ and _Talisman_.

Loss Pequen~o Glazier, a Tejano native, is a practising Webmaster presently living in the (far) northern Americas. He is Director of the Electronic Poetry Center <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc>. His writing stirs up the sleeping lakes of language that lie among technology, poetics, American Spanish, the pre-Conquest, and the visual.

Jim Rosenberg's recent work uses dense interactive overlays of words. On a computer screen the individual layers may be navigated, often via a diagram syntax which allows both structure and direct juxtaposition. Recent publications: _Diffractions through: Thirst weep ransack (frailty) veer tide elegy_ and _The Barrier Frames: Finality crystal shunt curl chant quickening giveaway stare_ (both: Eastgate Systems, 1996); _Intergrams_ (Eastgate, 1993).

More details of the subVoicive series of reading in London from: Lawrence Upton <[redacted]>

↑ Index

171. Pritchett,Pat

Re: naked

Mon 7 Apr 1997

Richard Howard relates (in _Alone With America_, that most parochial of books masquerading as a universal history) how Ginsberg once stood before the assemblage at a literary conference in the 60's and humbly, piously, decently stripped naked - as naked as the self he revealed (and created) in his poems.

Whenever I think of Allen Ginsberg I think of that: a theatricality that transcended itself through sheer openess and sweetness.

I think of the line from Ruben Dario:

"From its own nakedness does the star shine."

↑ Index

172. Kenneth Goldsmith

"Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg" Playlist

Mon 7 Apr 1997

"Unpopular Music with Kenny G."
Monday Mornings 9-Noon
WFMU, 91.1 FM
Serving the NYC/Catskills area

****
"Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg"
Playlist for Monday April 7, 1997
****

Allen Ginsberg "Father Death Blues"
Allen Ginsberg Part 1 of "Kaddish"
Fugs "Nothing"

Eliane Radigue "Mila's Song in the Rain, Pt. 1"
Allen Ginsberg "The End"
Eliane Radigue "Mila's Song in the Rain, Pt. 2"

Jack Kerouac & Steve Allen "Deadbelly"
Irving Jacobson "Az Men Muzsh Muzsh Men"
Mystic Fugu Orchestra (John Zorn/Yamantaka Eye)
Allen Ginsberg "Kral Majales"
Abe Elenkrig's Yiddishe Orchestra "Fon der Choope" (1913)

Bob Dylan "Sad Eyed Lady of the Lowlands"
Allen Ginsberg "Infant Joy"
Allen Ginsberg "The Little Fish Devours the Big Fish"

Tom Waits "Jack & Neal/Califonia Here I Come"
Charlie Parker "Carving the Bird"
"Footloose in Greenwich Village"--1960 WNYC Broadcast
Bob McFadden & Dor "The Beat Generation"
David Amram "Pull My Daisy"
Allen Ginsberg "Pull My Daisy"

William S. Burroughs & Kurt Cobain "The Priest They Called Him"
Timothy Leary "You Can Be Anyone This Time Around"
Allen Ginsberg "Prayer Blues"

Billy Bragg "The Internationale"
Allen Ginsberg "Hum Bomb"
Brion Gysin "Pistol Poem"
Brion Gysin "Pistol Poem Part 2"

Brion Gysin "Recalling All Active Agents"
Master Musicians of Jojuka "Brahim Jones Jojuka Very Stoned"
Paul Bowles "Baptism of Solitude"
The Splendid Master Gnawa Musicians of Morroco "La Voix Errante"

The Clash & Allen Ginsberg "Capitol Air"
The Clash & Allen Ginsberg "Ghetto Defendent"
Allen Ginsberg "Birdbrain"

Walt Whitman "America"
Loseling Dratsang of Drenng Monastery "Ornament for Clear Realization"

Kenny G.
http://www.wfmu.org/~kennyg

↑ Index

173. Aldon L. Nielsen
this week's Inuit show... (fwd)
Mon 7 Apr 1997

page down a bit & you'll find the announcement for a rare screening of a Robbe Grillet film -- and an interesting web site

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 07 Apr 1997 14:43:44 -0700
From: Geoff Alexander <[redacted]>
To: c16Presslist <[redacted]>
Subject: this week's Inuit show...

Hi friends,

Those of you who missed last week's show lost out on a real treat as 'Miss cine16' presented a fabulous door prize consisting of a copy of "Toymaker" --- one of worst of the terrible films we showed last week --- to a randomly drawn (but not quartered) guest. Look forward to more of these shameless promotional gimmicks as we plumb the depths of the 16 mm experience.

On a more serious note, we're going to be including a new feature with your weekly film notes: when possible, we'll provide you with web links to sites containing meaningful background information on a given week's films. This week, for example, you can investigate Canadian government's Inuit website for great historical and cultural data, and then visit Marc London's Inuit art site for examples of indigenous art and sculpture.

And please note that our May 8 show with John Barnes in person will begin at 7 pm --- one half-hour earlier than usual --- to allow adequate time for two hours of film plus your opportunity to ask questions during our live interview with this legendary filmmaker.

Best, Geoff

PRESS RELEASE 23

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Contact: Geoff Alexander
[redacted]

PROGRAM NOTES FOR cine16 FILM FESTIVAL'S April 10 program at the downstairs Speakeasy in the Agenda Restaurant & Lounge, downtown San Jose, Thursday at 7:30 pm

‘Up north is down south from here: Inuit culture of the Canadian Arctic’

Web sites of interest:

(Canadian Inuit site)
http://www.inac.gc.ca/pubs/information/info16.html
(Inuit sculpture & art) http://www.total.net/~elcalon/

The Inuit are a nomadic aboriginal group from northeastern Canada comprising some 600 bands speaking derivations of the Inuktitut language. In 1999, the territory of Nunavut will be spun off from the Northwest Territories, and provide more formal representation for the Inuit in the new bi-cultural government residing in the town of Iqaluit, formerly know as Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island. The Inuit have been the subject of many dramatic and fascinating films, and tonight we'll show three of the best. In addition to providing wonderful insight into a little-understood population, these understated films provide a tonic for those of us who have gotten sick and tired of having to listen to new age music and panpipes as musical accompaniment for seemingly every documentary, ethnographic, or zoological film be produced today.

‘At the Winter Sea Ice Camp I’ ‘At the Autumn River Camp II’, both 1969, d. Quentin Brown. In the late 1960's anthropologist Asen Balikci attempted to document traditional customs, including seal hunting and komatiq (dog-sled) making, as they were before the coming of the missionaries and the use of rifles, usually dated at 1919 or so. When these films were made, there were still Inuit who remembered how to do these things, and Balikci and director Quentin Brown made total of nine films. Our two favorites are the savage 'At the Winter Sea Ice Camp I' and 'At the Autumn River Camp II', both outstanding documents in the non-narrated ethnographic tradition, and filmed at minus 10 degrees F. Among other things, the Inuit make a sled out of fish and antlers, and successfully hunt seal living six feet under sea ice.

‘Land of the Long Day' (1952), d. Doug Wilkinson. Paradoxically preceding the former films by 17 years, the director shows Inuit customs as they really were in the early 50's. Idlouk, the protagonist, tragically terminated his own life several years after 'Land' was made. This film is not only a fine explanation of the challenges faced by the Inuit, it is also a tribute to the filmmaker working in adverse conditions in which cameras freeze and weather is unpredictable.

Future programs include:

April 17: ‘Trans-Europ Express’: the 'cine'-roman' of Alain Robbe-Grillet. Rarely do we show feature length films, but tonight is an exception, as the entire program is given to the experimental filmmaker Alain Robbe-Grillet's 'Trans-Europ Express' (1965). This outstanding work is a film within a film as Robbe-Grillet sits in a train car and discusses with his producer and script supervisor a film he'd like to make about a drug deal in Antwerp. A man in fake beard and glasses gets on the train, but the director states he'd rather have J-L Trintignant, who then materializes, and stars, along with Marie-France Pisier, in this fascinating, unusual film in which characters and authors cross each other's paths, yet stay in their own frames of reference. Robbe-Grillet scholar John Leo will present a ten minute introduction to the work of this outstanding writer and filmmaker.

John hosts a Robbe-Grillet site; please visit it for more info:

http://www.halfaya.org/robbegrillet/

April 24: Judith Bronowski’s Mexico --- This filmmaker made four outstanding films showcasing historically significant artisans of Mexico. Made in the mid-1970s, they document the work --- and the words of the artists. Tonight we’ll show three of them: ‘Pedro Linares’ (papier-mache’ monsters called ‘alebrijes’), ‘Manuel Jimenez’ (woodcarver from Oaxaca), and ‘Sabina Sanchez’, an embroidered from Oaxaca. ‘Linares’, incidentally, was shown at ‘cine16’ earlier this year, and is returning by request. We’ll have one more short on this program, which we’re hoping will be the fourth in the series, lent by the filmmaker.

May 1: To be announced.

May 8: SHOW STARTS AT 7 PM. 'Shaw vs. Shakespeare' A tribute to the masterwork of director John Barnes. After reading the complete works of George Bernard Shaw, Barnes wrote, directed, and produced a series of three films narrated by Shaw (brilliantly portrayed by Donald Moffatt), describing how parallel characters (e.g. Julius Caesar, played by Richard Kiley) are treated differently by the two playwrights. We feel this series is one of the highlights of educational cinema: engaging, thoughtful, and intellectually stimulating. This is a rare opportunity to see these three 1/2 films, produced in 1970, presented consecutively.

Also shown: 'Portable Phonograph', Barnes' last film, and one of the best.

WHO ARE WE?

'cine16' is a once-per-week, Thursdays at 7:30 pm cinema focusing on the historical and thematic aspects of 16mm documentary, ethnographic, industrial, and art films. Shows are approximately two hours long, and admission is always free. All shows start at 7:30 pm, but arrive early for seating. We're in the cellar speakeasy at downtown San Jose's Agenda Restaurant & Lounge. Enter through the Agenda Restaurant on South First Street, corner of San Salvador , and ask for 'cine16' in the downstairs speakeasy.

↑ Index

174. k.a. hehir
help
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Hello,

Could someone please tell me where the idea/notion/line "technician of the sacred" comes from? I know it is the title of one of Jerome Rothenberg's anthologies and is quoted in the commentary on Blake in Poems for the Millennium,but I'm looking for the original source.

Thank You,

Kevin Hehir

↑ Index

175. shoemakers
Re: "Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg" Playlist
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Kenny--Thanx for posting your playlist. Great show!

steve (an ex-dj missing my old "slot," & my old station--if you're ever in Charlottesville, VA, WTJU rules! 91.1 FM--same call # as you, love the left o' the dial!)

On Mon, 7 Apr 1997, Kenneth Goldsmith wrote:

> "Unpopular Music with Kenny G."
> Monday Mornings 9-Noon
> WFMU, 91.1 FM
> Serving the NYC/Catskills area

****

"Kaddish for Allen Ginsberg"
Playlist for Monday April 7, 1997

****

Allen Ginsberg "Father Death Blues"
Allen Ginsberg Part 1 of "Kaddish"
Fugs "Nothing"

Eliane Radigue "Mila's Song in the Rain, Pt. 1"
Allen Ginsberg "The End"
Eliane Radigue "Mila's Song in the Rain, Pt. 2"

Jack Kerouac & Steve Allen "Deadbelly"
Irving Jacobson "Az Men Muzsh Muzsh Men"
Mystic Fugu Orchestra (John Zorn/Yamantaka Eye)
Allen Ginsberg "Kral Majales"
Abe Elenkrig's Yiddishe Orchestra "Fon der Choope" (1913)

Bob Dylan "Sad Eyed Lady of the Lowlands"
Allen Ginsberg "Infant Joy"
Allen Ginsberg "The Little Fish Devours the Big Fish"

Tom Waits "Jack & Neal/Califonia Here I Come"
Charlie Parker "Carving the Bird"
"Footloose in Greenwich Village"--1960 WNYC Broadcast
Bob McFadden & Dor "The Beat Generation"
David Amram "Pull My Daisy"
Allen Ginsberg "Pull My Daisy"

William S. Burroughs & Kurt Cobain "The Priest They Called Him"
Timothy Leary "You Can Be Anyone This Time Around"
Allen Ginsberg "Prayer Blues"

Billy Bragg "The Internationale"
Allen Ginsberg "Hum Bomb"
Brion Gysin "Pistol Poem"
Brion Gysin "Pistol Poem Part 2"
Brion Gysin "Recalling All Active Agents"
Master Musicians of Jojuka "Brahim Jones Jojuka Very Stoned"
Paul Bowles "Baptism of Solitude"
The Splendid Master Gnawa Musicians of Morroco "La Voix Errante"

The Clash & Allen Ginsberg "Capitol Air"
The Clash & Allen Ginsberg "Ghetto Defendent"
Allen Ginsberg "Birdbrain"

> Walt Whitman "America"
> Loseling Dratsang of Drenng Monastery "Ornament for Clear Realization"
>
> ---
> Kenny G.
> http://www.wfmu.org/~kennyg

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

176. charssmith
Re: help
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Without checking my books, I believe it's either a quote from or a riff off of Mircea Eliade.

In a message dated 97-04-07 19:39:02 EDT, you write:

<< Could someone please tell me where the idea/notion/line "technician of the sacred" comes from? I know it is the title of one of Jerome Rothenberg's anthologies and is quoted in the commentary on Blake in Poems for the Millennium,but I'm looking for the original source. >>

↑ Index

177. charssmith
Blaser in Santa Cruz
Mon 7 Apr 1997

I just got the information for this reading that Kevin mentioned last week, in case anyone in the area can make it:

Robin is indeed reading in Santa Cruz on Thursday, April 10, at 4:00 in Kresge College's Seminar Romm 159.

charles

↑ Index

178. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: help
Mon 7 Apr 1997

For: Kevin Hehir

The source is Eliade's great book, Shamanism: Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy, although I can't recall that he uses the phrase exactly in that way. Rather he speaks of shamans mastering techniques of the sacred, which does of course (or did for me) suggest the other phrase. The excitement in Eliade was that the shamans, as presented therein, were also masters & makers & manipulators of language in such a way as to suggest that we could think of them as proto-poets, & then ... But it was always more complicated than that -- & mysterious -- & that was what the excitement was about ...

I don't recall the phrase -- or anything like it -- turning up elsewhere. But then, who knows?

With all good wishes,

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

179. David Bromige
Nick, are you there?
Mon 7 Apr 1997

Calling Nick Piombino . . . Nick, I t h i n k you're on the List; hope so, I've mislaid your e-ddress. Write me!

(Apologies for back channeling in public, y'all) db

↑ Index

180. Charles Bernstein
Boston Area Reading
Tue 8 Apr 1997

WORD OF MOUTH PRESENTS

AN AFTERNOON WITH CHARLES BERNSTEIN.

Sunday April 20th, 3:30PM

Admission $3.00. Information: Michael Franco [redacted] or [redacted], [redacted] Location: World Wide Building, artists west second floor, studio #8, 144 moody street, waltham, mass. directions: commuter trains leave n. station at 3:00pm & porter sq. at 3:10pm & arrive in waltham at 3:22pm. (studio is a 3 min walk.) by car from harvard sq. :rt 16 (mt auburn st.) to rt. 20 (main st) to 117 into waltham center . left onto moody st. & turn left just before the bridge parking available . wheel chair accessible .

↑ Index

181. Maria Damon
Re: help
Tue 8 Apr 1997

---

speaking of the sacred, for those of you who haven't yet seen jerry's co-edited book The Book, Spiritual Instrument, it's very wonderful. md

At 8:10 PM -0700 4/7/97, Jerry Rothenberg wrote:
>For: Kevin Hehir
>
>The source is Eliade's great book, Shamanism: Archaic Techniques of >Ecstasy, although I can't recall that he uses the phrase exactly in that >way. Rather he speaks of shamans mastering techniques of the sacred, >which does of course (or did for me) suggest the other phrase. The >excitement in Eliade was that the shamans, as presented therein, were >also masters & makers & manipulators of language in such a way as >to suggest that we could think of them as proto-poets, & then ...
> But it was always more complicated than that -- & mysterious -- >& that was what the excitement was about ...
>
>I don't recall the phrase -- or anything like it -- turning up elsewhere.
>But then, who knows?
>
>With all good wishes,
>
>Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

182. Maria Damon
Re: Boston Area Reading
Tue 8 Apr 1997

---

oh to be in boston
now that bernstein's here...
sorry to miss
it's 5 degrees here in mpls...

At 9:39 AM -0400 4/8/97, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>WORD OF MOUTH PRESENTS
>
>AN AFTERNOON WITH CHARLES BERNSTEIN.
>
>Sunday April 20th, 3:30PM
>

>Admission $3.00.
>Information: Michael Franco [redacted] or [redacted], [redacted]
>Location: World Wide Building, artists west second floor, studio #8, 144 >moody street, waltham, mass. directions: commuter trains leave n. station >at 3:00pm & porter sq. at 3:10pm & arrive in waltham at 3:22pm. (studio is a >3 min walk.) by car from harvard sq. :rt 16 (mt auburn st.) to rt. 20 (main >st) to 117 into waltham center . left onto moody st. & turn left just >before the bridge parking available . wheel chair accessible .

↑ Index

183. Maria Damon
XCP: the journal!!!
Tue 8 Apr 1997

---

hey everybody: the premier issue of Mark Nowak's journal CROSS-CULTURAL POETICS is now out, featuring work by Amiri Baraka, Solomon Deressa, Edwin Torres, Lise McLeod (sp?), Forrest Gander, Elizabeth Burns, Diane Glancy, and many others, an essay by me that's an expansion of the paper Alan Golding delivered for me (THANKS ALAN) at Louisville, and a host of book reviews.

for further info, contact MARK NOWAK at
[redacted]

Beset i mean best wishes, md

↑ Index

184. henry gould
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 8 Apr 1997

On Tue, 8 Apr 1997 09:03:06 -0600 Jeff Hansen said:
>
>Hansen, in an interview with a major television network, said, "We >might not be right, but at least we're funny.....Some of the time."

I'm looking forward to reading, & watching the show too. Was struck by a Ginsberg quote in the paper (or was it on the list?) - "You don't need to be right, just candid." (this may not be exact). It reminded me of a mysterious statement Mandelstam made when asked something like, "what is poetry". He said - "Poetry is the poet's sense of being right." - HG "always right (not), always left (out)"

↑ Index

185. Sylvester Pollet
Readings
Tue 8 Apr 1997

If anyone's passing through Maine, Leo Connellan will be reading in Orono, Univ. Maine, Thurs. April 10, 7 p.m. 120 Little Hall. Reception follows. Free. On April 24, 7 p.m., Ellsworth Public Library, I'll be reading, with Brian Hubbell, Susand Hand Shetterly, and Philip Booth, in a series of readings to celebrate the centennial of the library and National (fill-in-the-blank) Month. Sylvester

↑ Index

186. Jeff Hansen
Poetic Briefs
Tue 8 Apr 1997

EXTRA EXTRA EXTRA

READ ALL ABOUT IT

A new, double issue of Poetic Briefs in chapbook form, entitled "Shadows: Selected Dialogues on Poetics" by Mark Wallace and Jefferson Hansen, is hot off the press. Subscribers will receive theirs within a week or two. Any who would like a copy should send a 6x9' envelop with $1.50 postage to Jeff Hansen / 4055 Yosemite Avenue S / St. Louis Park, MN 55416.

Various quotations and paraphrases:

"Life is intercourse between mounds of obese flesh."

The fastest way to Rome is to go in the other direction.

I really think that people on the beach shouldn't swear around children.

"I don't know what I believe."

I am a machine.

Hansen, in an interview with a major television network, said, "We might not be right, but at least we're funny.....Some of the time."

GET YOURS NOW

↑ Index

187. Joel Lewis
Allen Ginsberg
Tue 8 Apr 1997

I spent a chunk of an afternoon speaking to a reporter from the Newark Star-Ledger talking about Allen (I did an anthology of NJ poets a few years back and I seem to be on every reporter's rolodexs). This beatnik/sex revolutionary/guru stuff seems to be the inevitable way the press sees the story. I hope this is not what he'll be remembered for.

I was his student at Naropa in '81 & was friends with him over the last years and was always amazed at his generosity and kindness despite the enormous demands many people put on him. He would tell me at naropa that he wanted to retire and go off to a mountain colorado towrite in peace, but there was another part of him that wanted to be out there. He was much like Sartre -- who used his fame as a way for advocating for his causes and friends. Where would American poetry be now if it where not for Allen's push in the 50's? Although Allen's inability to "get" poets outside his sphere was a source of some humor and consternation at Naropa, Allen did try hard to understand poets like Clark Coolidge and Ron Silliman. As Rexroth once said, he was a radical conservative who made his breakthrough by bringing back the cadences of the Hebrew Bible and Walt Whitman.

I must say that I hadn't looked at his work seriously in a number of years. Reviewing the collected, I'm struck by his innovative short lyrics and his use of numerous forms and that his work kept shifting and changing over the years. He was one of the most self-critical of major poets. I once asked him why he rarely read from Reality Sandwiches. He said: "Oh, I just don't think those poems are that good." The best reading I ever heard him do was in the early 80's at the old Brentanno's Books on 8th St. The reading was undepublicized and the audience was mostly st marks poets. Without harmonium or finger cymbals, etc., he stated "I want to read some new poems" and did just that, in quiet (for Allen) voice

I don't think we'l see another literary figure with as much influence as Allen had. He was the first living poet I was aware of (age 11 -- those evergreen review posters w/ allen as uncle sam) . It's hard to imagine him not around

joel lewis

↑ Index

188. George Bowering
Re: detention with a red headed woman
Tue 8 Apr 1997

> This "subject" from George Bowering refers to a chapter in our collaborative novel, _Piccolo Mondo_, and I am pleased to announce its upcoming publication by New Coachhouse Press, Toronto. Details later, possibly from my co-author. db.

Actually the press, reinvented by Stan Bevington, Victor Coleman and Rik Simon, old hands at the original Coach House Press, is called Coach House Books now, for legal reasons. Their books are done both on the Net (beautifully---Coach House was the inventor of anything done with computers in book publishing way back) and in artifact form, also beautifully. You can get at their home page via search. Ask for something like Coach House Books.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

189. amato
denver conference etc...
Tue 8 Apr 1997

fresh back from denver, to hundreds of messages... some incredibly touching commentary on allen ginsberg, much appreciated by this list member... being in denver, hearing the news of his death (from marjorie) was, well...

"reconcilable (in) differences: the marriage of writers and critics" was a small, friendly conference---i regret, esp. b/c it was small, not having had the occasion to speak more with norman f. and others... seeing marjorie again, meeting chris alexander and linda russo of this list region, and elizabeth franken (not from this list region, but from here in chicago), among the highlights of my time there... and of course seeing the mountains---which i so dearly miss, living now in flatland... perhaps the friendliness of the conference stemmed from it having been put together, in large part, by grad students at du...

gerald graff's keynote, "teaching the conflicts between creators and theorists," didn't do much for me... i tried to indicate the problems i had with graff's presentation, but unfortunately my hand was not called upon... not least of such problems being that he made no mention at all of the possibilities of this medium for crossing institutional boundaries, for consolidating support among different levels of the academic hierarchy... graff himself struck me as, well, a nice guy... but i'm not sure that he really had all that much to add to the creative-critical split (he was by his own account a bit tentative about his talk), albeit i respect his attempt at least to deal with the classroom, with teaching as such... i left his talk wishing he'd spent a bit more time online---seems to me he hasn't, though maybe i'm mistaken... ensuing discussion, provoked in part by marjorie, seemed to surface graff's decision not to discuss specifically literary formations... for my part, i would have mentioned that the academic scene is now entirely disrupted and fractured by job market considerations, that good work is being done in spite of this fact, but that we need to develop alternative structures for negotiating our conflicts and woes...

marjorie's paper, imnsho, was apropos to the conference itself, sifting through the poetic-publishing-cultural implications of kent johnson's probably aka araki yasusada's poetry... marjorie's was a lesson in scholarly thoroughness and insight---not to mention her performance, which was utterly enjoyable... ensuing discussion raised the issue of identity politics and how it functioned in marjorie's paper---a discussion that might be picked up here upon the paper's forthcoming publication (in _the boston review_---right marjorie?)...

as to panels: i very much enjoyed carole maso's reading, and laura mullen's reading... otherwise, i was taken by susannah breslin and lily james talk on "postfeminist cyborgs"... these two women have set up a web site, the postfeminist playground, that looks to be provocative and useful: <http://www.pfplayground.com>... there were of course a few papers that seemed to exploit "can poetry matter" issues (yes, but it must be "real") in the expected ways... not much to say here that hasn't already been said...

as to the "featured" reading, i was struck by poet and alum heather mchugh's capacity for 'reading' her audience (to borrow from my wife kass fleisher, who was also in attendance)... heather came across as a warm and genuine person of real integrity... her work is certainly more traditional, but her performance, her narrative ruminations as such seemed to me to be very much a part of her reading that evening...

kass and i played hookie on sunday (no apologies!) and drove up to lookout mountain, a short jaunt from denver... neither of us had ever visited the buffalo bill museum... it was fun, if a bit hokey, and the view from the top of the mountain, covered in a crystalline white blanket, was invigorating...

in all, i'm not certain whether any critics and writers actually reconciled their differences as a result of this conference, but i DO see the conference itself as symptomatic of, hence contributing to, a general awareness that the writerly and the critical are more complex constructions than might at one time have been generally acknowledged... perhaps this itself signals a willingness to talk, accompanied by the demise of certain categorical quibbles, among specific sub-sets of (largely academic) writers/critics... if power-laden structures are not so easily dismantled, there is nonetheless great value to getting together... the conference organizers evidently (wisely) will put together a listserv to discuss some of the issues that were raised at the conference... stupid me, i forgot to drop off my email address (!)... if any of you 'out there' have info. on the listserv, please post me backchannel... or maybe here is more appropriate...

in all, i/we had fun... the one structural problem with the conference was that panel sessions were staged with no 'in between' time, back-to-back... three panels ended at ten o'clock and three more began at ten-o'clock, meaning you had to skip out on panels if you wished to shoot the shit (which i did)... in any case, i judge conferences by their ability to nurture new and existing networks, and in such terms, the conference was a success...

best,

joe

↑ Index

190. Joshua N Schuster
Wieners Celebration
Tue 8 Apr 1997

JOHN WIENERS reads

along with readings and reflections from:

Bob Perelman
Louis Cabri
Joshua Schuster
Jeff Wachs
Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Alan Davies
Charley Shively

--5pm--

This Friday, Apr. 11th
at
The Writers House
3805 Locust Walk
UPenn, Philadelphia

573-writ

and of course everyone is welcome

↑ Index

191. luigi
Re: Nick, are you there?
Tue 8 Apr 1997

> okay, so i've been shy long enough: what does "backchanneling" mean?
> kl, neophyte listserver

that's where you email your reply to just an individual, rather than to the whole list... it's the polite thing to do if your response is of a personal nature, or otherwise not likely to be of interest to the whole list...

luigi

↑ Index

192. Jordan Davis
Taylor Mead / Tony Medina @ Poetry City
Tue 8 Apr 1997

Friday, April 11, 7 pm
Poetry City (NY)

Taylor Mead reads

with

Tony Medina

5 Union Square West, 7th Floor

↑ Index

193. David Bromige
Nick Found
Tue 8 Apr 1997

Many thanks to all who posted in with Signor Piombino's number. db

↑ Index

194. Charles Bernstein
Ginsberg Memorial
Tue 8 Apr 1997

There will be a memorial for Allen Ginsberg this Saturday, April 12, from 12 to 4, at the Poetry Project, St. Mark's Church, Second Avenue at Tenth Street. No details of the program are currently available. If I get more information, I will pass it on.

↑ Index

195. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Tue 8 Apr 1997

---

i'll be there in spirit

At 11:02 PM 4/8/97, Marjorie Perloff wrote:
>For those in the South Bay area or even north of it!
>
>Maeera Schreiber and Susan Dunn (both on this List) and I are sponsoring, >with the help of eager undergrads, a Memorial for Allen this Friday (11th) >at noon at White Plaza (between bookstore and Tressider Union--great >outdoor space). We plan to have anyone who cares to read a favorite >Ginsberg poem or say whatever s/he has to say.
>
>If you are coming from outside the campus (drive #280 to Alpine, right on >Alpine to Junipero Serra, right on Junipero Serra to Campus Drive >East--left on Campus drive into the campus; left on Mayfield to big >parking lot from which you can almost see and probably hear activity in >White Plaza). If you want to read, please call Ranita at the English >Dept, [redacted]--so she can put your name on the sign-up sheet we have.
>
>It will be quite informal but we did want to do something.
>
>Best wishes,
>Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

196. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: wind on the way

Tue 8 Apr 1997

---

thanks maz, i love this kind of info-thing; i feel compelled to ask the rhetorical question, though: why is this kind of info welcomed, along w/ silly jokes etc, on the poetix list, but when someone wants to talk about pound's or someone else's politics we're scolded that it "has nothing to do with poetix?" seems to me there's some very specific fears afoot that have nothing (and, of course, every-thing) to do with poetry.

At 10:12 AM 4/9/97, [redacted] wrote:
> WASHINGTON (Reuter) - A large storm on the sun's surface probably will hit
>the earth's magnetic field Wednesday with the potential to disrupt >communications satellites and power grids, NASA said.
>
> ``It's clearly a big event,'' said Don Savage, a spokesman for NASA's >Office of Space Science. A large solar flare was blamed for the destruction >of a broadcast satellite in January.
>
> Savage said matter blown off the face of the sun -- essentially a stream >of ionized particles -- was expected to strike a ``glancing blow'' to the >magnetic field that shields the Earth more than 100 miles from its surface.
>
> He said those who operate sensitive satellites and power grids had been >warned to take unspecified steps to safeguard their operations through an >established early-warning system that reports ``space weather.''
>
> The solar storm was detected a couple of days ago by the Solar and >Heliospheric Observatory, a satellite that NASA and the European Space Agency
>launched in 1995 to keep a constant eye on the sun's surface.
>
> Savage said scientists still were calculating the precise arrival time of >the solar impact, which was likely to produce a shimmering curtain of >multi-colored light called an aurora over the North and South poles.

↑ Index

197. Maria Damon
Re: Ginsberg Memorial
Tue 8 Apr 1997

At 7:07 PM -0400 4/8/97, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>There will be a memorial for Allen Ginsberg this Saturday, April 12, from 12 >to 4, at the Poetry Project, St. Mark's Church, Second Avenue at Tenth >Street. No details of the program are currently available. If I get more >information, I will pass it on.

and could we get lots of detailed reviews, those of us who can't be there but are in serious mourning, that'd be great, thanks. i had no idea i'd feel so -- incapacitated, for lack of a better word --by this turn of events. thanks--md

↑ Index

198. Alan Jen Sondheim
103
Tue 8 Apr 1997

I am in love with Language, Mouthing's all I have
That inherently forms of Gauge
A measure of Soul or Salve

The shadowless Norm or Verb
Spatters the Landscape of motion
Where Drives inscribe the Kerb
Of Name and Revelation

Describing further creates
A Bind of Attributes
Transformed by Men and Fates
Inscribed through Institutes

Let Nothing hurtle towards Hurdles across the Sound Constrained by mouthed Retorts
Quicksand beneath the Ground

Let Nothing gyre and turn Across the Platitudes
Whole Worlds on fire burn
In wayward Latitudes

Mouthing's Telos cries
And Clara constitutes

Ships and countermands
Inscribing Institutes

And Clara constitutes
Black Freighters, real Beauts

↑ Index

199. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Poetic Offspring
Wed 9 Apr 1997

tomorrow nite, thurs at 7, at the weisman museum of art at the U of minnesota, mpls, john mowitt, myself, joseph towns, edmond chow, anna reckin, carla homeister and maria (m.j.) fitzgerald will participate in a program of poetry designed to accompany the "critique of pure abstraction" exhibit currently at the weisman. mowitt will conceptualize abstraction/modernity, talk about mallarme, ponge, and mention language poets; i will talk about ginsberg and the Beats very dramatic rejection of abstraction, though through friendships and shared worlds there is an overlap or at least adjacency with certain abstract expressionist circles (ohara, etc), and i may read some bob kaufman poetry; the others will read from their own work.

↑ Index

200. Gabrielle Welford
CBS SPEWS - Latest Article by Mumia Abu-Jamal (fwd)
Wed 9 Apr 1997

--------- Begin forwarded message ----------
From: [redacted]

CBS SPEWS

Written March 29, 1997
(c) 1997 Mumia Abu-Jamal
All Rights Reserved

All propaganda has to be popular and Ins to adapt its spiritual level to the perception of the least intelligent of those towards whom it intends to direct itself.
--Adolf Hider, Mein Kampf (1933)

In its late March 1997 Broadcast of the CBS News Magazine, "48 Hours," the network hit a deadly and diabolical low with its piece 'on the Christian Community in Woodcrest, NY known as the Bruderhof (German for place, or home, of Brothers).

Using slick editing techniques, half-lies, and most damaging, juxtaposition with other unrelated stories, "48 Hour" projected the unmistakable and dangerous assertion that the Bruderhof is a cult. This projection took place in a particularly insidious in the same program that featured an opening segment on the mass suicide of 39 members of a group calling itself "Heaven's Gate," in a place called Rancho Santa Fe, California.

"Heaven's Gate," which saw itself as millenialist, and inheritors of a new evolutionary entity; perceived their human bodies as encumbrances, as burdens that had to be shed, and when the Hale - Bopp comet came near, they saw it as a sign to "shed their flesh containers." To say the very least, Heaven's Gate-seekers were folks who were immensely alienated from their bodies (according to press accounts the males were Voluntarily castrated), and neither contacted, nor created, families.

Taking the quasi-similarities that Heaven's Graters were mostly white, well educated, computer-savvy and remote from general society' and that the Bruderhof shared similar attributes, "48 Hours" launched into a "guilt by similarity,' program, and in the minds of millions created the dangerous notion that those mere similarities amounted to equivalencies arid therefore, one's a cult, so the other must be also.

How can a community of thousands of fathers, mothers, farmers and carpenters, who heartily embrace the sacredness of all life, be so cavalierly equated with a little-known, virtually asexual group of 39 people like "Heaven's Gate?"

The smart answer, of course, is that a powerful entity like CBS can do it because they can. They are the media, and they do what they want to do daily.

So the question becomes, 'Why?"

The answer is the Bruderhof's most recent efforts on behalf of life, justice and freedom, most notably on behalf of the writer, and his spiritual family, the revolutionary MOVE organization. It lies in their efforts against the U.S. Death Penalty. It lies in their efforts to practice a Christianity that seeks social justice and is unabashedly critical of white supremacy. It lies in their expression of community.

Why then would a show scheduled for April, one which was taped months ago, be rushed on the air opposite the "Heaven's Gate" suicides?

Part of it is the unerring lust for the sensational that is at the heart of American media, and much is the interests they represent -- that of the established: the State.

The doyen of CBS News, Edward R. Murrow once noted, "Unless we get off our fat surpluses and recognize that television in the main is being used to distract, delude, amuse and insulate us, then television and those who finance it, those who look at it and those who work at it, may see a totally different picture too late."

Well, Ed, your colleagues at your old network (CBS) may now intone, "too late," for they have fired an unfair broadside at a group, labeled them without just cause a "cult" that "bears close scrutiny", and endangered them by aligning them with a group that they hold virtually nothing of value in common.

For; by utilizing one word, "cult", and putting them in the programmed context of the Heaven's Gaters, they project them in the public mind as other, weird, and dangerous, if not suicidal.

In America, as MOVE's example nakedly reflects, people projected as Other can be treated far differently (and even negatively) than so-called "normal" folks.

With the arrogance of the media's power of projection, "48 Hours" suggests the Bruderhof held a young woman as a virtual prisoner, neglecting to inform viewers that their youngsters go to high schools and colleges on the outside (even around the world) every day.

Does that sound like hostages?

Americans are widely and justly suspicious and distrustful of the nation's mass media. They view it as a tool of the wealthy and the, a protector of the status qno. and a fermenter of unjustified fear.

CBS did nothing to dissuade them of that view.

MAJ

--------- End forwarded message ----------

↑ Index

201. David Bromige
The Don Allan Anthology
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and Denise Leverton. bd.

↑ Index

202. jdhollo
no digests for 2 days?
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Hi there--Loss--Joel--?

Have not received my listserv digest for either yesterday or today--

What's happening?

Best,

Anselm

↑ Index

203. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Poetic Offspring
Wed 9 Apr 1997

---

well it's not really a formal thing, we're not spozed to take more than 10 minutes apiece so i doubt there'll be actual papers. if ur in the eighborhodd tho drop by soory abt spelling.

At 3:02 PM 4/9/97, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>The papers sound very intrersting. Would copies be available?
>
>> Date sent: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 14:22:06 +1000
>> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group
>><[redacted]>
>> From: "Maria Damon (Maria Damon)" <[redacted]>
>> Subject: Poetic Offspring
>> To: [redacted]
>
>> tomorrow nite, thurs at 7, at the weisman museum of art at the U of >> minnesota, mpls, john mowitt, myself, joseph towns, edmond chow, anna >> reckin, carla homeister and maria (m.j.) fitzgerald will participate in a >> program of poetry designed to accompany the "critique of pure abstraction" >> exhibit currently at the weisman. mowitt will conceptualize >> abstraction/modernity, talk about mallarme, ponge, and mention language >> poets; i will talk about ginsberg and the Beats very dramatic rejection of >> abstraction, though through friendships and shared worlds there is an >> overlap or at least adjacency with certain abstract expressionist circles >> (ohara, etc), and i may read some bob kaufman poetry; the others will read >> from their own work.

>>

↑ Index

204. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Allen Ginsberg
Wed 9 Apr 1997

For those in the South Bay area or even north of it!

Maeera Schreiber and Susan Dunn (both on this List) and I are sponsoring, with the help of eager undergrads, a Memorial for Allen this Friday (11th) at noon at White Plaza (between bookstore and Tressider Union--great outdoor space). We plan to have anyone who cares to read a favorite Ginsberg poem or say whatever s/he has to say.

If you are coming from outside the campus (drive #280 to Alpine, right on Alpine to Junipero Serra, right on Junipero Serra to Campus Drive East--left on Campus drive into the campus; left on Mayfield to big parking lot from which you can almost see and probably hear activity in White Plaza). If you want to read, please call Ranita at the English Dept, [redacted]--so she can put your name on the sign-up sheet we have.

It will be quite informal but we did want to do something.

Best wishes,
Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

205. Charles Alexander
come on down
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Since Maria Damon did mention that it was 5 degrees in Minnesota last night, and since it did get into the upper 70's here in Tucson today, I thought I'd mention that if anyone wants to hop on a plane and fly down this weekend (or drive down or train down or bus down), they might see:

Friday, April 11
5pm until 8pm
Chax Press & Cynthia Miller Open Studio
101 W. Sixth St., Tucson
Books & Paintings & Prints & Broadsides on Display & Available for Purchase
After the Open Studio will be live music & dancing, with music by Rainer, followed by Tony & The Torpedos
(I know that Rainer is a really marvelous blues guitarist & singer/songwriter; I know nothing about Tony)

Saturday, April 12
7pm
Karen Mac Cormack & Steve McCaffery
Poetry Reading
Dinnerware Gallery
135 E. Congress St., Tucson
Reception to follow the reading
No charge, but donations gladly accepted reading sponsored by Chax Press & POG

& looking ahead to May, when it may be somewhere between 80 & 90 degrees here, unless we get a hot spell

Saturday, May 17
5pm
David Bromige
Poetry Reading
Dinnerware Gallery
135 E. Congress St., Tucson
Reception to follow the reading
Sponsored by POG
David Bromige will also be giving a workshop on the same weekend

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

206. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Poetic Offspring
Wed 9 Apr 1997

The papers sound very intrersting. Would copies be available?

> Date sent: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 14:22:06 +1000
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: "Maria Damon (Maria Damon)" <[redacted]>

> Subject: Poetic Offspring
> To: [redacted]
>
> tomorrow nite, thurs at 7, at the weisman museum of art at the U of minnesota, mpls, john mowitt, myself, joseph towns, edmond chow, anna reckin, carla homeister and maria (m.j.) fitzgerald will participate in a program of poetry designed to accompany the "critique of pure abstraction" exhibit currently at the weisman. mowitt will conceptualize abstraction/modernity, talk about mallarme, ponge, and mention language poets; i will talk about ginsberg and the Beats very dramatic rejection of abstraction, though through friendships and shared worlds there is an overlap or at least adjacency with certain abstract expressionist circles (ohara, etc), and i may read some bob kaufman poetry; the others will read from their own work.

↑ Index

207. maz881
wind on the way
Wed 9 Apr 1997

WASHINGTON (Reuter) - A large storm on the sun's surface probably will hit the earth's magnetic field Wednesday with the potential to disrupt communications satellites and power grids, NASA said.

``It's clearly a big event,'' said Don Savage, a spokesman for NASA's Office of Space Science. A large solar flare was blamed for the destruction of a broadcast satellite in January.

Savage said matter blown off the face of the sun -- essentially a stream of ionized particles -- was expected to strike a ``glancing blow'' to the magnetic field that shields the Earth more than 100 miles from its surface.

He said those who operate sensitive satellites and power grids had been warned to take unspecified steps to safeguard their operations through an established early-warning system that reports ``space weather.''

The solar storm was detected a couple of days ago by the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory, a satellite that NASA and the European Space Agency launched in 1995 to keep a constant eye on the sun's surface.

Savage said scientists still were calculating the precise arrival time of the solar impact, which was likely to produce a shimmering curtain of multi-colored light called an aurora over the North and South poles.

↑ Index

208. William Burmeister Prod

Re: wind on the way

Wed 9 Apr 1997

> WASHINGTON (Reuter) - A large storm on the sun's surface probably will hit the earth's magnetic field Wednesday with the potential to disrupt communications satellites and power grids, NASA said.
>
> ``It's clearly a big event,'' said Don Savage, a spokesman for NASA's Office of Space Science. A large solar flare was blamed for the destruction of a broadcast satellite in January.
>
> Savage said matter blown off the face of the sun -- essentially a stream of ionized particles -- was expected to strike a ``glancing blow'' to the magnetic field that shields the Earth more than 100 miles from its surface.
>
> He said those who operate sensitive satellites and power grids had been warned to take unspecified steps to safeguard their operations through an established early-warning system that reports ``space weather.''
>
> The solar storm was detected a couple of days ago by the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory, a satellite that NASA and the European Space Agency launched in 1995 to keep a constant eye on the sun's surface.
>
> Savage said scientists still were calculating the precise arrival time of the solar impact, which was likely to produce a shimmering curtain of multi-colored light called an aurora over the North and South poles.

storm disrupt potential grids

event spokesman flare for broadcast Savage matter blows strike

shields fields stream unspecified space

sensitive grid reports sun's eye

shimmering arrival precise pole impact.

↑ Index

209. CHRIS MANN

(no subject)

Wed 9 Apr 1997

---

for those who want to know, Chris Mann is at The Synagogue Space 108 E 1 7.30 Friday

↑ Index

210. dbkk
The Stranger gets stranger
Wed 9 Apr 1997

For those of you in the Pacific Northwest, check out this week's lit section of Seattle's free weekly The Stranger--it contains articles by both db (on fountain pens) and kk (on John Wieners)--and lots of other interesting sounding stuff. Books editor Matthew Stadler is taking this lit section into new dimensions--i.e., the 90s.

Dodie

↑ Index

211. robert zamsky
Message to Maria D.
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Sorry, for posting this to the entire list, but didn't know how else to get a message to maria d.

Maria -- I don't know if you remember, but a few months ago I sent you a paper about Aime Cesaire that I had presented at a conference in Minneapolis. I was wondering if you'd received the paper, if you'd had time to read it, and if you found it at all interesting. I'm in a bit of a literary limbo right now, living in Nebraska, and relish any kind of intellectual stimulation I can gather.

I'll be moving to Buffalo in May to start my PhD program in English in the fall. While i'm in e-limbo, i can be reached at the following address:

[redacted]

Thanks for your time.

Robert Zamsky

↑ Index

212. David Bromige
Will's inches of ink
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Gwyn: I don't remember AG as "overweight". However, he shared those other characteristics you list, with Garcia (plus which, they were both diabetic, an affliction, however,* not confined to prophets of the Body Paradise. But I think you're correct, they were 60s charismatics who retained their power to move people by the thousands (esp. people who know they are alienated from themselves, and know some of the causes, like "free market economies"). Obviously, the powers that be have given considerable attention to preventing any repeat of 60's communitas-in-insurgency, making sure no charismatic leaders can unite opposition to the destruction of the world by money. To acknowledge Ginsberg as heroic can only encourage others to walk in his steps. George Will is part of money's calculation to maintain repression. Dirty work, but he has it to do. Support your local PBS radio! db

* cris cheek : are these 'honky commas'? Blame Haberdashers' Aske's! thanks for yr latest posting, mate.

↑ Index

213. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: wind on the way
Wed 9 Apr 1997

> thanks maz, i love this kind of info-thing; i feel compelled to ask the rhetorical question, though: why is this kind of info welcomed, along w/ silly jokes etc, on the poetix list, but when someone wants to talk about pound's or someone else's politics we're scolded that it "has nothing to do with poetix?" seems to me there's some very specific fears afoot that have nothing (and, of course, everything) to do with poetry.

maria,

people here at sfu (save for a guy named george bowering, or is it george bowering) really dump on eliot. perhaps it's because there's a philosophical demon in works that are modern, and we have to know abt it, and not just post-modern it out of existence.

c.

↑ Index

214. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: Nick, are you there?
Wed 9 Apr 1997

okay, so i've been shy long enough: what does "backchanneling" mean? kl, neophyte listserver

David Bromige wrote:

> Calling Nick Piombino . . . Nick, I t h i n k you're on the List; hope so, I've mislaid your e-ddress. Write me!
>
> (Apologies for back channeling in public, y'all) db

↑ Index

215. Mark Weiss
Re: Nick, are you there?
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Courtesy demands that anything salacious, however, should be sent to the whole list.
At 03:56 PM 4/8/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>okay, so i've been shy long enough: what does "backchanneling" mean?
>> kl, neophyte listserver
>>
>
>that's where you email your reply to just an individual, rather than >to the whole list... it's the polite thing to do if your response is >of a personal nature, or otherwise not likely to be of interest to the >whole list...
>
>luigi
>
>

↑ Index

216. linda v. russo
Allen Ginsburg
Wed 9 Apr 1997

> . . . But we see what life he continues to > have as anecdote and eulogy flood in; and it was never clearer that he > belongs to the ages. . .

I was going to refrain from sharing my Ginsburg story, as it is wednesday already -- but I'm appreciating & enjoying & admiring the pileup -- accrued while I was at the DU conference -- which I am just now in the thick of.

& since i shared a stage with AG -- here goes:
about 5 years he read at the Boston Public Library -- I was one of the last to slip through the door & was being graciously ordered to leave by institutional security musclemen because there were no seats & i was refusing to leave because i was just this one body -- how could i break a fire code?
-- the floor in the auditorium does not count as a seat --
I could join the others upstairs and watch him televised! --There were, however, a few unoccupied seats on the stage & AG invited me to take one. I was psyched of course at the time, i had the best seat in the house -- but it wasn't until reading what listservefolks have to say that I realize very few famous people would've done that -- would've even thought to do that. -- l.

--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

217. P.Standard Schaefer
C.O.N.S.
Wed 9 Apr 1997

To Nick Piombino, Steve Carl, Avery Burns and others who have asked/been asked:

THE COLLEGE OF NEGLECTED SCIENCE (In conjunction with Ribot) is hosting a conference on History (a literary conference). May 2nd and May 3rd on Catalina Island.

The conference is open to everyone.

Discussion Topics:

Friday 3:30 pm FORM-INFORM OR DEFORM
moderator: Dennis Phillips
Saturday 10:00 am HISTORY AND POLITICS:
RE-EVALAUATING THE READER
moderator: Paul Vangelisti
Saturday 1:30 pm POETRY AND BEAUTY:
TRANSGRESSION OR ACCOMODATION
Saturday 4:00 p.m CLOSING readings and art viewing on history

Discussions, poems, papers will be published in issue #6 of Ribot (pronounced ree-bow).

Anyone interested in attending should contact The Catalina Canyon Resort at [redacted] A.S.A.P. to reserve a room. Rooms are $89 per night, two persons per room. Deposit is refundable in 72 hours advance. Ferry tickets need also be purchased to reach Catalina.

All questions can be handled by Paul Vangelisti [redacted].

↑ Index

218. Michael Boughn
Re: wind on the way
Wed 9 Apr 1997

> thanks maz, i love this kind of info-thing; i feel compelled to ask the rhetorical question, though: why is this kind of info welcomed, along w/ silly jokes etc, on the poetix list, but when someone wants to talk about pound's or someone else's politics we're scolded that it "has nothing to do with poetix?" seems to me there's some very specific fears afoot that have nothing (and, of course, everything) to do with poetry.

Call me bemused, but this representation seems a little self-serving, Maria. Anytime you want to talk about anything, you're welcomed here, as far as I have seen. As far as addessing Dorn's or Pound's or my or your or anybody else's politics--i.e. their work--hooray and hooray. In so far as I, or others, have seemed to scold, it's been when the conversation degenerated into who heard whom say what at the head of a table at some banquet I was never at, and on the basis of which we're all supposed to get together and punch people out. Where I come from there's names for that, but none of them are _political discourse_. The problem for me is that some people seem to be implying that we shouldn't even read certain texts because of moralisitic imputations about the author's character. You want to talk about politics in The Cantos, or politics in Gunslinger or Tales of Gran Apacheria, hey, let's go. Any time.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

219. Steve Carll
Golden Gate Park reading April 5
Wed 9 Apr 1997

(Full disclosure: This was a reading to celebrate the publication of my magazine, _Antenym_)

"Greatest reading EVER" some said--no, wait, that was what I was dreaming some said before I woke up Saturday morning.

You couldn't have asked for more perfect weather (in San Francisco, anyway) to send the literati out blinking into the sunlight to hear live poetry outdoors. Everyone seemed to find the clearing in the Redwood Grove without getting lost in the wilder regions of the park, and we got started at about 1:30. Chris Daniels was so excited he almost started before I had a chance to introduce him, but relented and let me tell the audience he was about to read. He read translations he did from the Portugese of Max Martins and Fernando Pessoa under a few of his heteronyms. The birds chirped at his every word.

Next up was Elizabeth Robinson, who, like me, is in the process of moving. For Elizabeth, this meant she had no final versions of any poems, except the ones in _Antenym 12_. So she read those, plus several draft versions of other poems--these were all from her "EAR" series of poems whose titles and end-rhymes she cut from Edwin Arlington Robinson poems and rewrote the rest of the bodies of. The grass grew at her every word.

After the hat passing (thanks to Pat Reed for the hat) Darin DeStefano gave a strong, emotional reading prefaced by the story of an experience he had in this spot in the park involving a friend, a flock of blue jays, a piece of glass, and his guilt feelings at being human in a world of nature. He finished with a beautiful, freshly-written poem with stars and dogs in it, and then, for an encore, performed another new piece with John McNally (on the last day of his visit from New Jersey). "Treason! Treason!" they shouted. The redwoods released perfume to censer their every word.

Present aside from Mother Nature and the abovementioned were Benjamin Hollander and his two lovely children, Eric Selland, Mary Sullivan-Roark, Laurel Beymer, Kristin Burkart, Miranda, and George Albon.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

220. Christopher Alexander
Re: Nick, are you there?
Wed 9 Apr 1997

---

luigi wrrt:
> that's where you email your reply to just an individual, rather than > to the whole list... it's the polite thing to do if your response is > of a personal nature, or otherwise not likely to be of interest to the > whole list...
you know, luigi, you could have backchanneled this.
I mean, it's not likely to be of interest to the whole list...

(chuckle)

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

221. David Bromige
Don Allan Anthology
Wed 9 Apr 1997

Thats ok, Boring, think nothing of it. db

↑ Index

222. Christopher Alexander
Re: denver conference etc...
Wed 9 Apr 1997

---

joe et. al.--
guess you (joe) got back a lot faster than we did, thanks to "inclimate weather" ["oxymoronic"] in wyoming. ended up stuck in some motel room in cheyenne sunday night that smelled like "air freshener", otherwise known as "carcinogens" ["not as catchy but"]. we both missed work mundane but made it home in one piece despite h3eavy winds & the fact that we were driving a volkswagon.

all of which is preparation for saying that since you beat us to the punch er post, & because I'm terribly lazy, I'll just respond. "words fail me", or vice versa.

I was a bit more impressed with graff's presentation, though I, too, was dissatisfied to see the adjunctification issue, which should be foremost in our minds, remain at the margins. it does seem that this problem has everything to do with conflict both within & between departments, yet it only came up, in the presentation & the following discussion, obliquely, specifically in reference to the question of a "level playing field", so to speak, i.e., would adjunct faculty dare to dispute tenured profs etc. it's not that the question of institutional power isn't important, particularly with regard to an orientation toward inter-/intra-departmental conflict, but the power question might profitably lead us to other questions, such as why are we allowing this to happen & what are others of us doing about it & what are we going to do about it & when?

but graff's emphasis on conflict, if not new to me & probably many others in the audience [at times I felt "preaching to the converted"], is still well-taken. coming as I have through two departments where the rift between scholars, critics, & "creative" writers was/is absolute--& here it might be appropriate to say that where I found marjorie's examples hopeful to say the least, I also consider them exceptional in the extreme--I still think graff's model a very useful one, certainly worth articulating. as far as this medium & it's apparent value in facilitating dialogue between the parties in question,--I'll have to consider it. my first reaction is to say that this list plays out its own conflicts, some of them very serious & very important to me, but none quite identical to the institutional discourse graff is looking for. then again, I can think of conversations here that partake of just these problems, as for example Artists Versus Cultural Studies which we had not too long ago & which was pretty good actually.

marjorie's paper was exemplary & a real pleasure. I look forward to its publication, which is sure to provoke response on the list, & I look forward to that response. beyond my usual fascination with spurious texts, I have to say that the yasusada work strikes me as a wonderful example of humor in the service of critique--a beautiful time bomb which I'd actually love to teach at some point.

apropos of which, I thought bin ramke gave a very good paper on the literary hoax & contemporary notions of authorship, & this on a comically mixed panel, opposite a young man who was apparently arguing for art's facility to help us develop "a decent commonsense" etc at which most of us seemed to shrug our shoulders. sometimes one doesn't know where to begin to dispute. similar experience with the first speaker on joe's panel--who, by the way, that is, joe, gave an great paper, one of the most exciting presentations of the weekend imho, a very strong & well-executed critique of the rhetoric of craft in so-called "creative" writing departments--the hardcopy of which I have at hand & will soon be reading. joe also--humble joe who wouldn't even mention that he had presented--gave one of the best 2 readings that I got to see last weekend, of a piece called "glue" & an excerpt from his forthcoming book which he really ought to tell us about. my other favorite reading was given by laura mullen, from a gothic verse-novel in progress, which work was amazing--I'm an old lovecraft fan, but I had no idea such stuff could actually be, well, so goddamn'd good or interesting, let alone push boundaries other than those of space-time & sanity (but maybe that's an inside joke?). I missed linda russo's reading, (though

I was given a preview of the work), but I was there to see her give an excellent paper on the poetry of kathleen fraser & the question of a feminist poetics.

whew. I'm almost as tired from writing this post as I am from the whole conference.

a few more things: yes, the "postfeminist cyborgs" gave some good readings & a provocative (inflammatory?) presentation, which was also a presentation for their site: www.pfplayground.com I'd highly recommend a visit ["_I'm_ linking up to it..."], though in saying that I certainly don't mean to imply that I'm in full agreement with either the use they make of theory or the conclusions they draw from that use. I have to admit, I was so taken with their "in your face" attitude ["an all us ex-punk rockers"], but it might take me awhile to digest their work.

as to a reconciliation? someone mentioned, I mentioned or someone "preaching to the converted"--possibly, but that's a caricature too. in some ways it does seem to me, in fact, that we reproduced the problems we came together to address--exemplified by the opposition of readings & panels, the fact that at least one of the writers I knew there probably didn't attend any of the panels, the way fiction writers would sort of show up as the middle reader in a panel without a lot of discussion as to the relation between the materials at hand, or with, in some cases, a generous amount of defensive posturing. I could, in the spirit of graff's paper, have stood to see more conflict & less silent contradiction--but then again, I didn't stand up to foster it, either. on the other hand, there were some very positive elements to the whole which counterbalance my natural pessimism, if not entirely, a few very good discussions came out of it apropos the dis-/union of writing & theory both institutionally & in the act etc, & I anticipate a few from the conference listserve-- which, by the way, I haven't heard about yet (it's only wednesday), but which I will bring to the attention of this list at such a time as etc.

well, apologies are probably in order for such a long posting, if anyone, that is, has actually read this far. one wonders with email.

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

223. George Bowering
Re: Allen GinsbErg
Thu 10 Apr 1997

ginsbErg

ginsbErg

ginsbErg

With an E. The way it is written on the covers of his books.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

224. dbkk
Re: denver conference etc...
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Dear Chris Alexander and Joe Amato, hi, it's Kevin Killian. Between the two of you, I now have a feel for what happened at this "Denver Conference."

I have to ask, also, did you two fellows reach a consensus with each other about not using capitalization? Or is this a total, adjunct coincidence?

just kidding,
kevin k.

By the way, is Lisel Mueller on this list? How about that Lisel walking away with the Pulitzer Prize for poetry! Congratulations, Lisel, and please send your autograph.
not kidding,
kevin k.

↑ Index

225. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Allen GinsbErg
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Linda:

For what it's worth, I've spelled Allen's last name with a "u" instead of an "e" a few times myself. I've blanked and used the wrong letters in other many-covered names as well. (And so, I'm sure, have lots of other fairly well-read people on this list!) Thanks for the thoughtful and warm post on AG in Boston.

Kent

> Date sent: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 22:28:58 -0700
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: George Bowering <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Allen GinsbErg
> To: [redacted]
>
> ginsbErg
>
> ginsbErg
>
> ginsbErg
>
> With an E. The way it is written on the covers of his books.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

226. David Bromige

George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle

Thu 10 Apr 1997

Susan : Are you surprised that G Wills didnt propose to his wife until he got to home plate? Should he have proposed right after he got to second base?

* * * *

As for AG, while not denying to him remarkable powers of forethought and net-working, I'd say he came by them "honestly" in the sense that he trusted him-self to act the way he wanted himself to act, and that after many many other upshots of such conduct thru decades, he sold his archive for a cool mill to stanford. It was no more than Moloch owed him. I'd certainly place this transaction in the category "The Contradictions of Capitalism," but not without a "so what>" remainder. I dont think that John Ashbery, who must have realized almost as much cash from his total immersion in poetry, is the least bit likely to be criticized for doing so. I find it harder to keep abreast of Ashbery's poetry, just that there is so much in it, that won't yield to a quick scan. But it probably doesnt as bluntly deplore capitalist malpractice, as AG's does. If so, it is very differently encoded, and not in a sinister way, but because Ashbery is a great individual human being who, to one view of it, can't help but be who he is, but who knows all he has learned concerning what to do with that perhaps burdensome nexus of knowledge.

So is it the gap between avowed belief and actual practice that distresses some of our number here? Are we back at Pound the poet vs. Pound the fascist? Is it Ginsberg the Ghandi figure vs. Ginsberg the US millionaire? (These arent the rhetorical figures, mind made up, they may sound to be. I'm asking. And Sure, the poor soul not yet cold in his grave.) Is it bad for poets to make money, as it is bad for RC priests to make love to their congregation? For poets of a certain, evident kind of social commitment--also, therefore, a kind of censorship? How are we going to deal with this? Is it just something we're gonna have to forget (B. Dylan, "Clothesline Saga") or is it something one way or another we're going to try to legislate for? If so, we shall need to be willing to support our poets, and, I think, w/o regard to the value we personally find in their writing.

The commodification of Ginsberg surely had more energy from the Other side than from AG. The energy from AG was NOT primarily directed towards this end. He surfed it well once the wave was there. As have a number of other poets living and dead. I dont want to fly off on this tangent, the way our soc'y requires of an artist an identifiable style, "Oh yeah, he's the one who does squiggles & dots," it's pathetic, reprehensibly a shrinking of life in its variousness, and stems (but this is another argument for another day) from the mounting ascension to primacy of the snapshot, even if only of a President on a greenback. But who is there to reprehend, to witness such reprehension. Just put the funds in my account. I'll decide on my charities later, thanks.

Despite the scuttlebutt, people get famous because about them is something we need. This covers even Lorraine Bobbit. It may be down to Chance, but it's no accident. You or I might have opted to pay Ginsberg in kind (from each according), not having much money, but imagine wanting to repay his crackling energy and feeling you only have money to do it with. It's difficult for people to feel indebted w/o trying to do something abt it. Au fond, he made people feel good--in his case, literate persons of some awareness concerning soc'y. If we are going to continue the ancient practice of rewards, why not have rewarded AG for his impromptu existence, so responsibly coped with?

I guess all this is to suggest that commodity isnt the bottom line, the in-escapable circumscription of our lives--if it were, there'd be no naming it. AG included the commodity, but the commodity does not include, w/o remainder, AG. db

↑ Index

227. Schuchat Simon
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Thu 10 Apr 1997

On Tue, 8 Apr 1997, David Bromige wrote:

> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the > one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and > Denise Leverton. bd.
>
Right, that's the one with Franco Harris too

↑ Index

228. Rachel Loden
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Thu 10 Apr 1997

David Bromige wrote:
>
> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the > one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and > Denise Leverton. bd.

John Weiners, too.

Raquel

↑ Index

229. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Will's column
Thu 10 Apr 1997

But maybe, so hard as it is, we shouldn't get too angry. If AG were here, he might well be doing a compassion meditation, taking in, with each breath, a small bit of Will's deep pain.

Kent

Date sent: Thu, 10 Apr 1997 12:25:29 -0400
Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
From: Daniel Bouchard <[redacted]>
Subject: Will's column/ my reply
To: [redacted]

George F. Will, symptomatic symbol of "the Reagan Revolution" and other malignancies to human existence, will die someday just like Allen Ginsberg. He once wrote of Ginsberg's death with a sneering condescension which proved to readers several things, among them 1) he never read Allen Ginsberg, and 2) he felt threatened by the very IDEA of Ginsberg's work.

George F. Will writes of Allen Ginsberg's life in market terms--that of being a "commodity." Confronted with the severe limitations of Will's intellect what is one to do? Will is a columnist who is paid well to write apologias for technocrats, thieves and murderers. Any person whose life work consisted of promoting peace and charity toward his fellows must by necessity be "the enemy." With a change in particulars, Will could have a written a similar column on the death of Christ--'that long-haired preaching radical got His just desserts!' To Ginsberg's credit however, he never claimed to be the Son of God (to my knowledge).

George F. Will, soldier of American Values, will be forgotten a month after his death.

Allen Ginsberg's poetry will live and grow
in the heart's of readers.

Fuck George F. Will.

[redacted]

The Ginsberg Commodity

By George F. Will

Wednesday, April 9 1997; Page A21
The Washington Post

Allen Ginsberg, symptomatic symbol of the "beat generation" and other intellectual fads, died last Saturday at age 70. He once wrote, "I'm so lucky to be nutty." Actually, his pose of paranoia was not luck, it was a sound career move.

It became big box office with his famous declamation of his poem "Howl" in San Francisco in 1955. That was the year "Rock Around the Clock," in the soundtrack to the movie "The Blackboard Jungle," helped launch what was to become the third element in the trinity of '60s ecstasies -- sex, drugs and rock-and-roll. Ginsberg made the first two his projects. He composed "Howl" with the help of a cocktail of peyote, amphetamines and Dexedrine.

Thirty years later his reward for a career of execrating American values and works was a six-figure contract for a volume of his collected poetry. It is a distinctive American genius, this ability to transmute attempted subversion into a marketable commodity.

The adjective "beat" was appropriated by Jack Kerouac from a drug-addicted Times Square thief and male prostitute, who meant by it the condition of being exhausted by existence. (That man's existence must have been wearying.) Kerouac attached the adjective to the noun "generation," emulating Gertrude Stein's identification of the "lost generation" of the 1920s. Soon Life magazine, happy to find some titillating unhappiness in a decade defined by Eisenhower's smile, was writing about the beats as "The Only Revolution Around." That's entertainment.

Back then, poetry commanded crowds. In his book "When the Going Was Good: American Life in the 1950s," Jeffrey Hart, now a professor of English at Dartmouth, wrote:

"Robert Frost strode onto the stage at Carnegie Hall to a standing ovation from an overflow house. . . . One night in 1957, T. S. Eliot was reading his poems to an overflow audience in Columbia's McMillin Theater. Even faculty members had difficulty getting tickets, and people were crowded into the windows and doors, and listening outside to Eliot over loudspeakers. . . . Dylan Thomas stood at the podium . . . his third American tour in two years."

When Ginsberg came to Columbia "there was a vast throng that had been unable to get in.
They pounded on the doors and milled around. Ticket-holders entered between lines of police."

Today no poet could cause such excitement on any campus, or any other American venue, so complete has been the supplanting of words, written and spoken, by music and movies as preferred modes of communication. One of Ginsberg's young acolytes, Robert Zimmerman of Hibbing, Minn., put the dissenting impulse to music as Bob Dylan.

Some beats wrote the way some jazz musicians made music, in the heat of chemically assisted improvisation. Truman Capote's famous dismissal of Kerouac's work -- "That isn't writing at all, it's typing" -- had a point. Granted, Kerouac revised "On the Road" for six years before it was published in 1957. However, fueled by Benzedrine, he wrote the first draft of that novel in 1951 in less than three weeks, as one long single-spaced paragraph -- 120 feet long on 12-foot strips of tracing paper taped together. Here is its beginning:

"I first met Dean not long after my wife and I split up. I had just gotten over a serious illness that I won't bother to talk about, except that it had something to do with the miserably weary split-up and my feeling that everything was dead."

Does that tone of voice seem familiar? Here is the beginning of a novel published in 1951, the year of Kerouac's typing frenzy:

"If you really want to hear about it, the first thing you'll probably want to know is where I was born, and what my lousy childhood was like, and how my parents were occupied and all before they had me, and all that David Copperfield kind of crap, but I don't feel like going into it, if you want to know the truth."

Yes, "The Catcher in the Rye." Holden Caulfield, > adolescent scold, strong in disapproving

> "phonies," was a precursor of the beats with their > passion for "authenticity," which to Ginsberg > meant howling echoes of whatever constituted > coffeehouse radicalism of the moment.
> ("Slaves of Plastic! . . . Striped tie addicts! .
> . . Whiskey freaks bombed out on 530 billion > cigarettes a year. . . . Steak swallowers zonked > on Television!") With a talent that rarely rose > to mediocrity, but with a flair for vulgar > exhibitionism, Ginsberg shrewdly advertised his > persona as a symptom of a dysfunctional society.
> He died full of honors, including a > front-page (and a full page inside) obituary in > the New York Times, a symptom to the end.

↑ Index

230. Sylvester Pollet
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Thu 10 Apr 1997

And let's not forget Joel Oppen!

> David Bromige wrote:
>
> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and Denise Leverton. bd.
>
> John Weiners, too.
>
> Raquel

↑ Index

231. Dale Smith
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Actually, as pig-headed as Will is, his piece on GinsbErg does attempt to locate the poet within the cultural market in which he participated. And his implication of Ginsberg as a culture industry cynosure is not entirely off the mark. Ginsberg was a cultural icon, a marketable commodity. I remember seeing huge billboards in San Francisco with Ginsberg's image selling Gap khaki pants. His warmth and affability also made him an attractive PR spokesman for a group of writers in the 50's. He attracted the kind of media attention Kerouac would have preferred to avoid. But promotion is, you know, how to stay in business. And poetry is still affected by a relentless economic structure. What's interesting, and what Will doesn't mention, is how the culture industry makes its own social subversion into a marketable commodity.

The other relevant moment in the article is when Will writes:

" When Ginsberg came to Columbia 'there was a vast throng that had been unable to get in. They pounded on the doors and milled around. Ticket-holders entered between lines of police.'

Today no poet could cause such excitement on any campus, or any other American venue, so complete has been the supplanting of words, written and spoken, by music and movies as preferred modes of communication."

This is a perfectly candid statement to hear as a poet, but the implication is that Ginsberg's writing is partially responisble for a deterioration in values which has made the market more open to the movies than poetry. Wills doesn't follow up on this point, but I find it an important acknowledgement of poetry's inability to maintain prominence in a market Ginsberg implicitly condoned and benefitted from.

Anyway, the rest of Will's piece falls apart with the Kerouac quotes, (he couldn't find Ginsberg quotes?), which are out of place and confusing because, well, Will wants to say Ginsberg sucks, but he can't say 'sucks' in public. All of this leads me, however, to Maria Damon's statement about poetry and politics. How does one fight for social change and still survive as an individual in a corrupt economic system? How do the contradictions of political integrity and economic survival play out in the works of dedicated poets? The contradictory impulses in Ginsberg's life reveal the difficult position facing poets today. Somewhere, between our ideals and the necessity of the dollar, our lives and art are made.

↑ Index

232. Chris Stroffolino

LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)

Thu 10 Apr 1997

I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49..... Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc? I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...." ----------
chris stroffolino

↑ Index

233. Diane Marie Ward
Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
Thu 10 Apr 1997

I believe Dan Rather said last night Nyro had ovarian cancer.

Diane-Marie Ward
sunny SUNY Buffalo

On Thu, 10 Apr 1997, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49.....
> Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc?
> I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...."
> ----------chris stroffolino

↑ Index

234. Douglas Barbour
Re: wind on the way
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Reading this just after Maria's post:

Date: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 11:59:06 -0400
From: William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: wind on the way

> WASHINGTON (Reuter) - A large storm on the sun's surface probably will hit the earth's magnetic field Wednesday with the potential to disrupt communications satellites and power grids, NASA said.
>
> ``It's clearly a big event,'' said Don Savage, a spokesman for NASA's Office of Space Science. A large solar flare was blamed for the destruction of a broadcast satellite in January.
>
> Savage said matter blown off the face of the sun -- essentially a stream of ionized particles -- was expected to strike a ``glancing blow'' to the magnetic field that shields the Earth more than 100 miles from its surface.
>
> He said those who operate sensitive satellites and power grids had been warned to take unspecified steps to safeguard their operations through an established early-warning system that reports ``space weather.''
>
> The solar storm was detected a couple of days ago by the Solar and Heliospheric Observatory, a satellite that NASA and the European Space Agency launched in 1995 to keep a constant eye on the sun's surface.

> Savage said scientists still were calculating the precise arrival time of the solar impact, which was likely to produce a shimmering curtain of multi-colored light called an aurora over the North and South poles.

storm disrupt potential grids
event spokesman flare for broadcast Savage matter blows strike
shields fields stream unspecified space
sensitive grid reports sun's eye
shimmering arrival precise pole impact.

I'd have to say that this seems a good enough reason for running such news. But your question strikes home, Maria, & I can only say I find just about everything on the list intriguing on some level or other, but especially I thought the arguments about poetics & politics worth carrying on.

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H: [redacted]

↑ Index

235. Christopher Alexander
Re: Allen GinsbErg
Thu 10 Apr 1997

> With an E. The way it is written on the covers of his books.

oh, lighten up fer chrissake gEorgE.
or is this one of those instances where I'm misreading your tone, which sounds, from here, distinctly sanctimonious.

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

236. Christopher Alexander
Re: denver conference etc...
Thu 10 Apr 1997

---

kevin wrett:
> I have to ask, also, did you two fellows reach a consensus with each other > about not using capitalization? Or is this a total, adjunct coincidence?
actually, kevin,I was intimidated into it by joe in what is clearly an abuse of institutional authority.

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

237. Steven Marks
Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
Thu 10 Apr 1997

On Thu, 10 Apr 1997, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49.....
> Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc?
> I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...."
> ----------chris stroffolino

Only what I read in my local paper. She died from ovarian cancer. Had hits with Blood, Sweat and Tears, the Fifth Dimension, and Barbra Streisand! Article said she was one of the first singer-songwriters along with Joni Mitchell.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

238. henry gould

EPR ?

Thu 10 Apr 1997

Anybody know what's happening with Electronic Poetry Review? another issue coming out ever? Please backchannel, unless you think your information is of profound importance to the entire list and the southeastern quadrangle of the Milky Way also. Thanks - Captain Kwirk. [redacted] p.s. comet approaching up Waterman Ave. they turn left on red in Rhode Island. focus quasar shield factor 10.... NOW.

↑ Index

239. David Kellogg

Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)

Thu 10 Apr 1997

At 08:56 AM 4/10/97 -0400, Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear >there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the >age of 49.....
>Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc?
>I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...."

Ovarian cancer.

Best,
David
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

240. KENT JOHNSON

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Thu 10 Apr 1997

Dale:

Yours is a very intelligent and provocative statement, opening a discussion that I suspect Ginsbeurg would have welcomed about himself. Just one question to throw out as first thought, though not necessarily the better one: this "cultural market" that you charge Ginsbuerg as being complicit in-- where do you see its, as they say, horizon? Did Ginsbeurg, in other words, step over some kind of threshold that you and I (cleaner in life than him) haven't? What is the qualitative differuence, as you see it, between choosing to buy Gap pants and posing in them? And when we, for example, choose to polemicize on this list, are we not engaging in a gesture that is as fully inscribed in the cultural market as Ginsbuerg's marketing of his image? I know, I know, you talk about the "gap" between ideals and necessity, and you seem to grant that we all inhabit that and must necessarily negotiate, but isn't it a bit too easy for "uncommodified" poets to criticize across the gap between life and death, and say that the dead guy sold out when we haven't, even though you acknowledge that we've all sold out, inevitably, a little bit?

Aren't all of us (each of us, including you with your careful post) also, at least in portion, marketing an image here? (I mean Dale Smith, upping those guys and gals who are oblivious to their chiselled engravings within the poetry money market, but not Dale, who sees the gap between ideals and necessity, and thus has the banked- track on freedom. voom.)

Dale,I'll say this: I would like, when I say something on this list, to impress, to have people think: "Boy, that Kent Johnson sounds really interesting, I wonder what he is really like.." Wishful thinking, I'm sure, but I would like my posts to contribute, little by little, to a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, exactly, does it mildly startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)

I am wearing Gap pants right now as I write, and whatever you are or aren't wearing Dale, you are, by reading this, between your ideals and the necessity of the dollar, being called on by Ginsbuerg, in his koan-billboard, to think a little more deeply about your own critical certainties. Again,this is first, quick thought. One I may well regret, post-partum, as I think Rachel Loden perceptively put it a week or so ago.

but thanks for provoking it.

Keunt

Date sent: Thu, 10 Apr 1997 13:12:18 +0100
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Dale Smith <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Will's column/ my reply
> To: [redacted]

> Actually, as pig-headed as Will is, his piece on GinsbErg does attempt to locate the poet within the cultural market in which he participated. And his implication of Ginsberg as a culture industry cynosure is not entirely off the mark. Ginsberg was a cultural icon, a marketable commodity. I remember seeing huge billboards in San Francisco with Ginsberg's image selling Gap khaki pants. His warmth and affability also made him an attractive PR spokesman for a group of writers in the 50's. He attracted the kind of media attention Kerouac would have preferred to avoid. But promotion is, you know, how to stay in business. And poetry is still affected by a relentless economic structure. What's interesting, and what Will doesn't mention, is how the culture industry makes its own social subversion into a marketable commodity.
>
> The other relevant moment in the article is when Will writes:
>
> " When Ginsberg came to Columbia 'there was a vast throng that had been unable to get in. They pounded on the doors and milled around. Ticket-holders entered between lines of police.'
>
> Today no poet could cause such excitement on any campus, or any other American venue, so complete has been the supplanting of words, written and spoken, by music and movies as preferred modes of communication."
>
> This is a perfectly candid statement to hear as a poet, but the implication is that Ginsberg's writing is partially responisble for a deterioration in values which has made the market more open to the movies than poetry. Wills doesn't follow up on this point, but I find it an important acknowledgement of poetry's inability to maintain prominence in a market Ginsberg implicitly condoned and benefitted from.
>
> Anyway, the rest of Will's piece falls apart with the Kerouac quotes, (he couldn't find Ginsberg quotes?), which are out of place and confusing because, well, Will wants to say Ginsberg sucks, but he can't say 'sucks' in public.
> All of this leads me, however, to Maria Damon's statement about poetry and politics. How does one fight for social change and still survive as an individual in a corrupt economic system? How do the contradictions of political integrity and economic survival play out in the works of > dedicated poets? The contradictory impulses in Ginsberg's life reveal the difficult position facing poets today. Somewhere, between our ideals and the necessity of the dollar, our lives and art are made.

↑ Index

241. Field of Roses

Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)

Thu 10 Apr 1997

> I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49.....
> Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc?
> I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...."

According to Toronto's Globe and Mail, Nyro died on Tuesday at her home in Danbury Conn. She had been battling ovarian cancer. The funeral arrangements, which are expected to be private are as yet incomplete.

A sad week of these events.

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

242. Maria Damon

Re: wind on the way

Thu 10 Apr 1997

---

yes indeed douglas it's a wonderful piece and thanks for your words.

At 8:04 AM -0600 4/10/97, Douglas Barbour wrote:
>Reading this just after Maria's post:
>
>Date: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 11:59:06 -0400
>From: William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: wind on the way
>MIME-Version: 1.0
>Content-Type: text/plain; charset=us-ascii
>
>>WASHINGTON (Reuter) - A large storm on the sun's surface probably will hit
>>the earth's magnetic field Wednesday with the potential to disrupt >>communications satellites and power grids, NASA said.
>
>> ``It's clearly a big event,'' said Don Savage, a spokesman for NASA's

>>Office of Space Science. A large solar flare was blamed for the destruction >>of a broadcast satellite in January.
>
>> Savage said matter blown off the face of the sun -- essentially a stream
>>of ionized particles -- was expected to strike a ``glancing blow'' to the >>magnetic field that shields the Earth more than 100 miles from its surface.
>
>> He said those who operate sensitive satellites and power grids had been >>warned to take unspecified steps to safeguard their operations through an >>established early-warning system that reports ``space weather.''
>
>> The solar storm was detected a couple of days ago by the Solar and >>Heliospheric Observatory, a satellite that NASA and the European Space Agency
>>launched in 1995 to keep a constant eye on the sun's surface.
>
>> Savage said scientists still were calculating the precise arrival time of >>the solar impact, which was likely to produce a shimmering curtain of >>multi-colored light called an aurora over the North and South poles.
>
>
>
>
>
> storm disrupt potential grids
>
>
> event spokesman flare for
>
>
> broadcast Savage matter blows strike
>
>
> shields fields stream unspecified space
>
>
> sensitive grid reports sun's eye
>
>
> shimmering arrival precise pole impact.
>
>I'd have to say that this seems a good enough reason for running such news.

>But your question strikes home, Maria, & I can only say I find just about >everything on the list intriguing on some level or other, but especially I >thought the arguments about poetics & politics worth carrying on.
>
>==========
==========
>Douglas Barbour the precision of openness
>Department of English is not a vagueness
>
>University of Alberta it is an accumulation
>Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous
>[redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol
>H: [redacted]

↑ Index

243. Dale Smith

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Thu 10 Apr 1997

I apologize if you receive this message twice. I don't think it went through the first time:
****

Actually, as pig-headed as Will is, his piece on GinsbErg does attempt to locate the poet within the cultural market in which he participated. And his implication of Ginsberg as a culture industry cynosure is not entirely off the mark. Ginsberg was a cultural icon, a marketable commodity. I remember seeing huge billboards in San Francisco with Ginsberg's image selling Gap khaki pants. His warmth and affability also made him an attractive PR spokesman for a group of writers in the 50's. He attracted the kind of media attention Kerouac would have preferred to avoid. But promotion is, you know, how to stay in business. And poetry is still affected by a relentless economic structure. What's interesting, and what Will doesn't mention, is how the culture industry makes its own social subversion into a marketable commodity.

The other relevant moment in the article is when Will writes:

" When Ginsberg came to Columbia 'there was a vast throng that had been unable to get in. They pounded on the doors and milled around. Ticket-holders entered between lines of police.'

Today no poet could cause such excitement on any campus, or any other American venue, so complete has been the supplanting of words, written and spoken, by music and movies as preferred modes of communication."

This is a perfectly candid statement to hear as a poet, but the implication is that Ginsberg's writing is partially responisble for a deterioration in values which has made the market more open to the movies than poetry. Will doesn't follow up on this point, but I find it an important acknowledgement of poetry's inability to maintain prominence in a market Ginsberg condoned and benefitted from.

Anyway, the rest of Will's piece falls apart with the Kerouac quotes, (he couldn't find Ginsberg quotes?), which are out of place and confusing because, well, Will wants to say Ginsberg sucks, but he can't say 'sucks' in public. All of this leads me, however, to Maria Damon's statement about poetry and politics. How does one fight for social change and still survive as an individual in a corrupt economic system? How do the contradictions of political integrity and economic survival play out in the works of dedicated poets? The contradictory impulses in Ginsberg's life reveal the difficult position facing poets today. Somewhere, between our ideals and the necessity of the dollar, our lives and art are made.

↑ Index

244. dbkk
Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
Thu 10 Apr 1997

It's Kevin Killian. I adored Laura Nyro. I remember my father coming to me, a broken man, knocking on the door of my room, and saying, "Kevin, we know you have a right to listen to whatever music you want, and you're 13 now, but your mother and I have agreed to buy you a car if you promise a) to get out of the house more and b) to surrender those Laura Nyro albums."

One of her records (or maybe it was the sleeve) was impressed with a strange haunting perfume. That scent put a spell on me.

↑ Index

245. Pritchett,Pat
Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry
Thu 10 Apr 1997

According to the paper, she died of ovarian cancer. A sad loss, indeed.

Also in my paper today - did anyone else see this? - a column by the excerable George Will about Ginsberg which made me see red. What a perfect little shit Mr. Will is. Tom Mandel, you are in Washington. Would you please deliver him a way overdue "pop to the puss?"

From: Chris Stroffolino
To: POETICS

Subject: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
Date: Thursday, April 10, 1997 8:52AM

I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49..... Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc? I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...." ----------
chris stroffolino

↑ Index

246. Daniel Bouchard
Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

George F. Will, symptomatic symbol of "the Reagan Revolution" and other malignancies to human existence, will die someday just like Allen Ginsberg. He once wrote of Ginsberg's death with a sneering condescension which proved to readers several things, among them 1) he never read Allen Ginsberg, and 2) he felt threatened by the very IDEA of Ginsberg's work.

George F. Will writes of Allen Ginsberg's life in market terms--that of being a "commodity." Confronted with the severe limitations of Will's intellect what is one to do? Will is a columnist who is paid well to write apologias for technocrats, thieves and murderers. Any person whose life work consisted of promoting peace and charity toward his fellows must by necessity be "the enemy." With a change in particulars, Will could have a written a similar column on the death of Christ--'that long-haired preaching radical got His just desserts!' To Ginsberg's credit however, he never claimed to be the Son of God (to my knowledge).

George F. Will, soldier of American Values, will be forgotten a month after his death.

Allen Ginsberg's poetry will live and grow
in the heart's of readers.

Fuck George F. Will.

[redacted]

The Ginsberg Commodity

By George F. Will

Wednesday, April 9 1997; Page A21
The Washington Post

Allen Ginsberg, symptomatic symbol of the "beat generation" and other intellectual fads, died last Saturday at age 70. He once wrote, "I'm so lucky to be nutty." Actually, his pose of paranoia was not luck, it was a sound career move.

It became big box office with his famous declamation of his poem "Howl" in San Francisco in 1955. That was the year "Rock Around the Clock," in the soundtrack to the movie "The Blackboard Jungle," helped launch what was to become the third element in the trinity of '60s ecstasies -- sex, drugs and rock-and-roll. Ginsberg made the first two his projects. He composed "Howl" with the help of a cocktail of peyote, amphetamines and Dexedrine.

Thirty years later his reward for a career of execrating American values and works was a six-figure contract for a volume of his collected poetry. It is a distinctive American genius, this ability to transmute attempted subversion into a marketable commodity.

The adjective "beat" was appropriated by Jack Kerouac from a drug-addicted Times Square thief and male prostitute, who meant by it the condition of being exhausted by existence. (That man's existence must have been wearying.) Kerouac attached the adjective to the noun "generation," emulating Gertrude Stein's identification of the "lost generation" of the 1920s. Soon Life magazine, happy to find some titillating unhappiness in a decade defined by Eisenhower's smile, was writing about the beats as "The Only Revolution Around." That's entertainment.

Back then, poetry commanded crowds. In his book "When the Going Was Good: American Life in the 1950s," Jeffrey Hart, now a professor of English at Dartmouth, wrote:

"Robert Frost strode onto the stage at Carnegie Hall to a standing ovation from an overflow house. . . . One night in 1957, T. S. Eliot was reading his poems to an overflow audience in Columbia's McMillin Theater. Even faculty members had difficulty getting tickets, and people were crowded into the windows and doors, and listening outside to Eliot over loudspeakers. .

. . Dylan Thomas stood at the podium . . . his third American tour in two years."

When Ginsberg came to Columbia "there was a vast throng that had been unable to get in.
They pounded on the doors and milled around. Ticket-holders entered between lines of police."

Today no poet could cause such excitement on any campus, or any other American venue, so complete has been the supplanting of words, written and spoken, by music and movies as preferred modes of communication. One of Ginsberg's young acolytes, Robert Zimmerman of Hibbing, Minn., put the dissenting impulse to music as Bob Dylan.

Some beats wrote the way some jazz musicians made music, in the heat of chemically assisted improvisation. Truman Capote's famous dismissal of Kerouac's work -- "That isn't writing at all, it's typing" -- had a point. Granted, Kerouac revised "On the Road" for six years before it was published in 1957. However, fueled by Benzedrine, he wrote the first draft of that novel in 1951 in less than three weeks, as one long single-spaced paragraph -- 120 feet long on 12-foot strips of tracing paper taped together. Here is its beginning:

"I first met Dean not long after my wife and I split up. I had just gotten over a serious illness that I won't bother to talk about, except that it had something to do with the miserably weary split-up and my feeling that everything was dead."

Does that tone of voice seem familiar? Here is the beginning of a novel published in 1951, the year of Kerouac's typing frenzy:

"If you really want to hear about it, the first thing you'll probably want to know is where I was born, and what my lousy childhood was like, and how my parents were occupied and all before they had me, and all that David Copperfield kind of crap, but I don't feel like going into it, if you want to know the truth."

Yes, "The Catcher in the Rye." Holden Caulfield, adolescent scold, strong in disapproving "phonies," was a precursor of the beats with their passion for "authenticity," which to Ginsberg meant howling echoes of whatever constituted coffeehouse radicalism of the moment. ("Slaves of Plastic! . . . Striped tie addicts! . . . Whiskey freaks bombed out on 530 billion cigarettes a year. . . . Steak swallowers zonked on Television!") With a talent that rarely rose to mediocrity, but with a flair for vulgar exhibitionism, Ginsberg shrewdly advertised his persona as a symptom of a dysfunctional society. He died full of honors, including a front-page (and a full page inside) obituary in the New York Times, a symptom to the end.

↑ Index

247. Charles Bernstein

Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)

Thu 10 Apr 1997

Gee, my parents thought I should get out of the house more too! Nyro is being played quite a bit on the radio here in New York City, and especially WFUV; the NYTimes obituary is pretty good. As for that perfume, I checked and there is no trace left on my copy of "Eli and the Thirteenth Confession". The absence of this aroma has conjured for me many blank memories.

> It's Kevin Killian. I adored Laura Nyro. I remember my father coming to me, a broken man, knocking on the door of my room, and saying, "Kevin, we know you have a right to listen to whatever music you want, and you're 13 now, but your mother and I have agreed to buy you a car if you promise a) to get out of the house more and b) to surrender those Laura Nyro albums."

> One of her records (or maybe it was the sleeve) was impressed with a strange haunting perfume. That scent put a spell on me.

↑ Index

248. Gwyn McVay
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

If you recall, Will also dissed Jerry Garcia upon his death in 1995. Will seems to enjoy the rhetorical stance of taking potshots at overweight bearded near-sighted dead guys.

(Or maybe it's counterculture heroes who have stayed heroes? nah--)

Gwyn

↑ Index

249. Maria Damon
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

At 12:25 PM -0400 4/10/97, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
  To Ginsberg's credit however,
>he never claimed to be the Son of God (to my knowledge).
>
he should have. (tho no more so than anyone else)

the will article is indeed one of the meanest-spirited, pointless wastes of print space i've ever seen.--md

↑ Index

250. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Thanks, I guess, for the George Will piece.

Indulge me while I say what may be obvious. This is not really about Allen--it's about Allen as symbol for all of the unsettling things that happened in the six-ties, with its "trinity of...ecstasies--sex, drugs and rock-and-roll," that caused the "decade defined by Eisenhower's smile" to unravel. It's Will's grand theme, and the grand theme of a lot of conservatives, who ascribe everything that they dis-like in America to excessive license, of which anything improvisatory, be it jazz, or Allen's poetry, or _On the Road_, is an example.

The intent of the reference to _Catcher in the Rye_ may be opaque to some list members. It's the type case of what went wrong from the point of view of Wills and his like. Not only did it suggest that there might be something wrong with "the decade typified by Eisenhower's smile," filled with "titillating unhappiness" (that rare commodity back then) as it is, but it exposes to the public at large that adolescents (surprise!) are obsessed with sex. And there's a dirty word in it, which was a very rare phenomenon back then, when the postal service often effectively acted as censor by refusing to ship books it found offensive. It was banned from libraries and schools, and teachers got in trouble for assigning it to their classes.

Catcher in the Rye, like _Howl_ and _On the Road_, were nails in the coffin for the peaceable kingdom as imagined by Wills and company. After their appearance license was abroad in the land: peopled dressed in ways that blurred class and gender distinction, they engaged in civil and not-so-civil disobedience, they had no respect for authority, and they had fun. Sexuality of all kinds came out of the closet, and sublimation as an ideal went out the window.

For those who don't remember, Freud had the odd notion that no learning could happen unless the student repressed all sexuality--something like the the idea of a limited life-energy that needs to be husbanded. (The need for this repression was limited, of course, to the middle and upper classes--the working class, which was the vast majority in his day, could, and did, wallow like beasts as much as they wished, in his view.) American conservatives are scandalized by Freud--you mean children are sexual? parents think those things?--but they find the notion of sublimation comforting.

But I digress. If only the media had been more responsible, by not publishing the offending books, and certainly by not publicizing them, none of the bad things would have happened. But they were published, and the bad things did happen. And conservative idealogues have been trying to undo the damage by rewriting history ever since.

Saddest in Will's piece is his inability to read the words with pleasure. Poor George learned from the Jesuits to appreciate certain rhetorical structures. Somehow he got the idea that those structures were the only ones permitted; I don't think that that's the intent of Jesuit education.

↑ Index

251. Maria Damon
MacLow piece
Thu 10 Apr 1997

hey guyzies a few weeks ago someone posted a piece by jackson mac low on the list about form/etc that i sem to have deleted. i need it by tonite!!! cd someone repost it please, backchannel, to moi? infiniment gratefullll!!!md

↑ Index

252. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Daniel, that is beautifully, forcifully said. Will's outrageous assault should not go without a public response. I intend to write him personally and I suggest others do the same. For all the difference it will make. Still, better to speak out then mutter in one's room.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Daniel Bouchard
To: POETICS
Subject: Will's column/ my reply
Date: Thursday, April 10, 1997 12:15PM

George F. Will, symptomatic symbol of "the Reagan Revolution" and other malignancies to human existence, will die someday just like Allen Ginsberg. He once wrote of Ginsberg's death with a sneering condescension which proved to readers several things, among them 1) he never read Allen Ginsberg, and 2) he felt threatened by the very IDEA of Ginsberg's work.

George F. Will writes of Allen Ginsberg's life in market terms--that of being a "commodity." Confronted with the severe limitations of Will's intellect what is one to do? Will is a columnist who is paid well to write apologias for technocrats, thieves and murderers. Any person whose life work consisted of promoting peace and charity toward his fellows must by necessity be "the enemy." With a change in particulars, Will could have a written a similar column on the death of Christ--'that long-haired preaching radical got His just desserts!' To Ginsberg's credit however, he never claimed to be the Son of God (to my knowledge).

George F. Will, soldier of American Values, will be forgotten a month after his death.

Allen Ginsberg's poetry will live and grow
in the heart's of readers.

Fuck George F. Will.

[redacted]

↑ Index

253. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: The Will of King George
Thu 10 Apr 1997

One unforgettable moment in "The Life and Times of Allen Ginsberg" is the footage from a Ginsberg appearance on Firing Line as Buckley pronounces Ginsberg "politically naive." Will, of course, got his start as a protege of Buckley (remember the YAF of yore?), and might be presumed to represent what somebody wants us to think of as politcally sophisticated -- Always easier to sneer at that which one has not read carefully --

But there's another moment in the old Buckley show, following Ginsberg's reading of "Wales Visitation," when Buckley, I think sincerely, admits to liking the poem he has just heard (and we can posit all sorts of reasons rooted in Romanticism and the lyric for why that might have happened) --

Not to defend Buckley or to prefer him over Will by any means -- point is, that even that thin veneer of responsiveness to intellect has been stripped from today's "politcal sophistication."

and can somebody give me a citation for the Will piece so that I can read it?

↑ Index

254. Michael Magee
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

George Will, fuck you with your News Week column.
George Will, will you for chrissake, stop talking about baseball on Meet the Press - I don't think you've ever picked up a baseball.
George Will, you're like Ted Koppel's puny younger brother, both of you part of a profoundly uninteresting yet somehow still annoying family down the street.
George Will, you're hair cut looks like Himmler's haircut.
George Will, I would like to compare to Heinrich Himmler but its just the haircut, and, I suppose, vaguely, the politics - perhaps you were both sycophants to disastrously stupid world leaders, yes, ok, you're like a very, very small Himmler.
George Will, you are idiot-corporate-right yin to Sam Donaldson's pretend-left yang.

George Will, I won't even dignify you by asking you when you will be angelic.
George Will, Ginsberg loved America which is why he gave it seventy-three lines of complaint.
George Will, this is it for you, you get nine lines, more than your worth and I wouldn't put my queer shoulder to you if you were the last pastey-faced, mush-ball conservative in the bar.

↑ Index

255. maz881
orbit
Thu 10 Apr 1997

---

where are the foci to a typical comet's orbit? i think i remember that ellipses have two centers. why is a comet's orbit stable yet so exageratedly non circular? Is the sun one focus? if so, what is the other one?

(i guess i don't have trouble understanding the slightly elliptical orbits of the planets nearby because i can imagine the sun as spead out into two foci.)

Bill

↑ Index

256. michael corbin
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Daniel Bouchard wrote:

> Fuck George F. Will.

Yes; Will's bollixed thinking damns commodification of the world; condemns the poet for producing(!) commodifiable 'dysfunction' (sic); does so with a sublimated ken for A-BETTER-TIME (perhaps pre-60s, but in any event the proverbial floating signifyer); and does all this while performing his usual role as apologete of capital, plutocracy, and the aesthetics of stupefaction.

herehere, fuck him.

mc

↑ Index

257. acgold01
Doug Messerli's e-address
Thu 10 Apr 1997

Alan Golding
Prof. of English, Univ. of Louisville
[redacted]; [redacted]

Doug (Messerli)--Could you please back-channel me with your e-address? Thanks.

Alan

And the customary apologies for using public space on private queries . . . som etimes there seems no other way . . .

↑ Index

258. George Bowering
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Thu 10 Apr 1997

> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and Denise Leverton. bd.

Thanks, Bromide, I needed that reminder.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

259. George Bowering
Re: LAURA NYRO (one child born to carry on, etc....)
Thu 10 Apr 1997

> I just heard on the radio this morning that LAURA NYRO (who wrote "I swear there ain't no heaven and I pray there ain't no hell") died on tuesday at the age of 49.....
> Does anybody know anything about this? What she died of, etc?
> I'd appreciate any info....."And all I ask of dying is to go naturally...."
> ----------chris stroffolino

I read that it had something to do with ovarian cancer. That was in the second paragraph of the Vancouver _Sun_ obit, anyway, but I didnt read past that.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

260. Mainstream conference
Thu 10 Apr 1997

---------- Forwarded Message ----------

From: INTERNET:[redacted], INTERNET:[redacted]
TO: Me, Cadbury
DATE: 10/04/97 13:23

RE: conference

id NAA07708; Thu, 10 Apr 1997 13:07:24 -0400
From: <[redacted]>
<[redacted]>; Thu, 10 Apr 1997 12:53:04 BST
Date: 10 Apr 1997 12:53:04 -0300 (BST)
Subject: conference
To: [redacted]

Dear mr Upton, I want to let you know about a forthcoming conference on Irish experimental poetry which will take place in University College Cork on April 26, in venue W9.It will start at 10.30 and will finish at 6.30.
It will be a mix of poetry readings and academic papers given Trevor Joyce, Geoffrey Squires, Catherine Walsh, Maurice Scully, Billy Mills to name a few. The aim of the conference is to celebrate the 30th anniversary of New Writers Press, it is also significant in that it is the first of its kind ever to be held in this country.I am giving you this information because I was told that you advertise arts events on the internet. We would appreciate it if you would advertise this notice and if you require any more information, please contact me at my e-mail address which is listed above. Thankyou,Yours, Catriona Ryan.

↑ Index

261. Mark Weiss

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Thu 10 Apr 1997

Actually, I don't think that these were contradictory impulses for Allen. He took as his project witnessing the external as well as the internal; as a result reactions to the larger sphere just naturally get expressed in his work. And I certainly see no evidence in the work that Allen, consumate self-promoter that he was, ever censored so much as a comma to make a buck. Incidentally, you would think from Will's piece that Allen had faked his public stances and his poetry in order to prosper, and that he had succeeded in doing so from the late 50s on. I remember some years ago reading a survey of the economics of being a poet. At the time Allen was the only poet in America who claimed to support himself as a poet. His income that year was 12 grand, on which he supported himself and quite a few others in the scant luxury that the East Village afforded before the yuppies arrived. It wasn't until relatively late in his life, when he began teaching regularly (and his W2 no longer said "poet") that he made a middleclass income. And the book contract for the collected came very late in his life.

How does one fight for social change and still survive as an >individual in a corrupt economic system? How do the contradictions of >political integrity and economic survival play out in the works of >dedicated poets? The contradictory impulses in Ginsberg's life reveal the >difficult position facing poets today. Somewhere, between our ideals and >the necessity of the dollar, our lives and art are made.
>
>

↑ Index

262. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: allen g. the millionaire
Thu 10 Apr 1997

At 8:30 AM 4/11/97, [redacted] wrote:
>well, the thing is, allen was never a millionaire. when he got money from >stanford for his archives he had enough to finally get a place on the lower >east side with elevator access for himself and his step-mother. and he >immediately went out and bought some salvation army couches to furnish the >place. the money that allen made as a poet always went back into the >community-- he kept a lot of poets and artists from living on the street.
>yours, lisa

thanks lisa: this ressentiment of someone who's gotten famous and made enough $ at 70 to finally live with half the luxury that many of us (who teach, for example) take for granted is most unseemly. not that we can't ask questions about commodification and compromise, but the edge of bad faith that can creep in (bigtime, in george will's case, for example) is very distasteful and distracting.--md

↑ Index

263. sschu30844
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Thu 10 Apr 1997

I haven't read the Ginsberg piece by George Will, but I am looking forward to reading it with and against his recent defense of the Baltimore Orioles' Roberto Alomar (as I recall, Will proposed to his second wife at home plate--my god!--in Camden Yards) for spitting on the umpire last season. Will goes out of his way to attack umpires in this piece and to defend Alomar. Apparently, Will is a non-paid member of the Baltimore Orioles' board. Which leads me to my modest proposal: why not put the man on the poetics list and conflict his interests a bit?

Susan
(whose Cards are off to their worst start in history)

↑ Index

264. Alan Jen Sondheim
John Barton Wolgamot
Thu 10 Apr 1997

What ever happened to JBW? To the JBW Society?

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/index.html TELEPHONE [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, USA, 11217 Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

265. Dale Smith

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Fri 11 Apr 1997

Kent:

My impulse for writing in response to Will's article had to do with the recurring "fuck-you" posts which I find stupid and irresponsible. Will's article is grossly unfair, if not evil and pernicious, but telling Will to fuck himself behind his back, or not, simply confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today. So I picked up scant points of his which seemed appropriate and acknowledged that much of the rest of the article had no value at all. As for your questions:

"Just one question to throw out as first thought, though not necessarily the better one: this "cultural market" that you charge Ginsbuerg as being complicit in--where do you see its, as they say, horizon? Did Ginsbeurg, in other words, step over some kind of threshold that you and I (cleaner in life than him) haven't? What is the qualitative differuence, as you see it, between choosing to buy Gap pants and posing in them? And when we, for example, choose to polemicize on this list, are we not engaging in a gesture that is as fully inscribed in the cultural market as Ginsbuerg's marketing of his image? I know, I know, you talk about the "gap" between ideals and necessity, and you seem to grant that we all inhabit that and must necessarily negotiate, but isn't it a bit too easy for "uncommodified" poets to criticize across the gap between life and death, and say that the dead guy sold out when we haven't, even though you acknowledge that we've all sold out, inevitably, a little bit?"

Ginsberg didn't step through any threshold. There is no threshold, as far as I can tell. We're all implicated in cultural and economic market practices. Whether posing for Gap pants or wearing them makes no difference. But if you endorse a certain product while simultaneously engaging in social activism, then the irony of that position will be noticed, whether it's right or wrong. Will's article pointed out this contradiction in a cultural industry Will, Ginsberg, myself-anyone who writes-is a part of. This position is magnified with Ginsberg, however, so he's an easy target for people like Will who act as if they are themselves beyond reproach. And, by the way, I never said Ginsberg sold out and I don't even think I implied it, and if I did, well, that's my fault as a critical writer.

And I'm sad he's dead but his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating ourselves only with warm platitudes.

"Aren't all of us (each of us, including you with your careful post) also, at least in portion, marketing an image here? (I mean Dale Smith, upping those guys and gals who are oblivious to their chiselled engravings within the poetry money market, but not Dale, who sees the gap between ideals and necessity, and thus has the banked- track on freedom. voom.)"

I guess e-mail posts could be viewed as "marketing an image" rather than provoking debate. Touché. I'm not trying to "up" anybody. The occasion of my post was, again, George Will's unflattering and unjust article on Ginsberg's death. With the same amount of fame I'm sure many of us, self included, would be held up for critical scrutiny, just and unjust alike.

"I would like my posts to contribute, little by little, to a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, exactly, does it mildly startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)"

Hey, the above sounds good to me too, except the part about being a "list insider," whatever that means.

"I am wearing Gap pants right now as I write, and whatever you are or aren't wearing Dale, you are, by reading this, between your ideals and the necessity of the dollar, being called on by Ginsbuerg, in his koan-billboard, to think a little more deeply about your own critical certainties. Again,this is first, quick thought. One I may well regret, post-partum, as I think Rachel Loden perceptively put it a week or so ago."

Actually, I'm wearing a burlap sack and beating myself with a stick.

"but thanks for provoking..."

No problem.

↑ Index

266. cris cheek
Re: Bromide's 'honky commas'
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Hi db,

* hereabouts these are blinks

black and white blinded by the light traffic

* their colors are subjects of overinterpretation / implied as in 'honky commas'

or * comas

or * come as you are

love and love
cris

↑ Index

267. Charles Alexander possibility?
Fri 11 Apr 1997

If anyone is interested in coming to Tucson --

I just heard of a small casita (although big enough to be a one-bedroom apt. w/ small art studio) which has just become available and is for rent for only $250/month. It's in the middle of South Tucson, which isn't everybody's favorite part of town, but it's on the same property as some of my favorite people in all of Tucson -- Alex Garza, sculptor, who directs a program in which "at risk" teenagers make public art, mostly mosaic murals; and his spouse, Yolanda Galvan, a visual artist/illustrator who works at an organization called Southwest Parks & Monuments.

And if anyone is REALLY interested, it might be a good way to become a Chax Press intern/apprentice for several months (or more) on a parttime basis, working on handmade book projects and press administrative work, have a very inexpensive place to live with room for one's own art studio or writing studio, and still have plenty of time to find another job which would more than pay the rent.

Yes, it's all a bit complicated, but I thought I'd mention it.

Charles Alexander

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

268. henry
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

---

it's called "stomping on your enemy's grave". Usually the living dead are specially hired for that purpose.

- Henry G.

↑ Index

269. henry
Re: orbit
Fri 11 Apr 1997

---

is this another orbituary?

George Will, will you please george up.
George Will, your motha was a car salesman for the Edsel when Allen Ginsberg was a protege of a potato.
George Will, Shake your brocolli experiment offa my check-out line.
George Will, hey, do you like MY poem? Huh? What the...

- Jack Spandrift

Jack's new CD, "Cowboys Rain Cowshit on the Plain" is available (in Spain only) from Teatro Bouncayore Czech Productions, El Raygonner, Wyo. Send money now.

↑ Index

270. linda v. russo
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Fri 11 Apr 1997

To the Mr.'s Bromige, Alexander, Johnson & Bowering (not to make you sound like a law firm or anything):

thanks for the words -- now that i look at it, it doesn't look quite right with a 'u'. I'm usually much more adroit & academic in checking these things. I do wonder though abt. the vitriol? (maria damon where are you?!)
I can't consciously recall such copyediting in the 6 long months or so i've been a member on the list. -- l.

> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the > one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and > Denise Leverton. bd.
>
>
--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

271. David Bromige
The Don Allan Apology
Fri 11 Apr 1997

I have already apologized to Linda Russo back-channel for whatever vitriol exists in my joke-posting (Allan, Creely, Olsen, Leverton). I explained to her that when at play with Mr.Bowering, I can get carried away, and that I was joshing h i m , neglectful of the fact that like it or not I was also tweaking her. I even suggested she post in to "Mr.Bromide and Mr.Boring" thanking them for their "correction". She was too nice to do so, but by an odd coincidence, Mr. B himself addressed me on the list as the one, and there I was with a snappy comeback, the other, ready to hand. Indeed, as Adorno observed, names are frozen laughter, and the displacement of a single letter can release it. This makes typos in names stick out further than typos in other words, and may explain the energy Linda Russo's "GinsbUrg" has drawn. db

↑ Index

272. jarnot
allen g. the millionaire
Fri 11 Apr 1997

well, the thing is, allen was never a millionaire. when he got money from stanford for his archives he had enough to finally get a place on the lower east side with elevator access for himself and his step-mother. and he immediately went out and bought some salvation army couches to furnish the place. the money that allen made as a poet always went back into the community-- he kept a lot of poets and artists from living on the street. yours, lisa

↑ Index

273. Michael Magee
Ginsberg and the Gap
Fri 11 Apr 1997

For what it's worth, I once, as a beginning grad student not knowing my place, asked Ginsberg about the Gap Ad (even going so far as to remind him that the Gap was utterly complicit in the Asian child-labor catastrophes which were prominent in the news at the time). To his credit, he didn't duck the question. He said he had a good deal of doubt about his decision, that he had rejected the Gap many times, but had, the last time, decided that donating the money (I think to Naropa?) would do more good than harm. He then went on to a talk about his complicity in the marketplace, a monologue not unlike the dialogue we've been having about AG & capitalism.

-Mike.

↑ Index

274. Charles Bernstein
New York City Poetry Calendar
Fri 11 Apr 1997

The New York City Poetry Calendar is now on-line:

http://www.nynow.com/poetry/

↑ Index

275. Hank Lazer
Re: AG & the columnists
Fri 11 Apr 1997

If you think that the Will version of Ginsberg was lame, see today's column by Paul Ginsburg (a columnist via Arkansas, whose columns appear in places like The Tuscaloosa News, a NY Times owned newspaper). PG's claim (which I read hastily & angrily early this morning) is that AG is a personality but NOT A POET. That AG's poems aren't really poetry. That interest in AG's poetry is symptomatic of "our" swerve away from "real" "great" poetry. That AG's poetry will soon fade from view, and then "we" can return to reading truly "great" poetry again. Makes me uncertain: scream, or barf. Of course, much of AG's poetry stems from prior examples of what I think of as "poetry": Blake, Whitman, and the Prophets of the Old Testament. I hope others on the List run across PG's column....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

276. Jerry McGuire
searching
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Can anyone provide info on interviews with or articles about Michael Franti, hiphop/performance poet? (My knowledge so scarce right now that Franti may be anything _but_ a hiphop/performance poet.)

And as to Laura Nyro: I was dropping acid weekly as a member of _your_ US Air Force (sleep well tonight . . .) when she first sang those wrenching things that were prettified by the cover artists mentioned above (and "covering" rarely seemed like such a blanket job). Down by the grapevine . . .

I was at Denver, too, and found those large, lumpy, pointed earth constructions on the horizon an interesting variation from the daily experience of bayou life. The grad students were mountain-water-sweet and industrious beyond any reasonable expectation, the panels, though crowded together, made good space for non-traditional approaches to the metatextual metissage, and a fair mix of dispositions got to crow and strut, not too obnoxiously. I agree that Graff felt a little underprepared (yet over-rehearsed) in delivering his plea for "conversation" between theory types and C.W. types (I was the guy who said that it might be more productive to continue the present spectrum of relations from sleeping together to contempt (can't we all just not get along?). As to Marjorie Perloff, I thought the presentation on "Yasusada" was just the kind of thing to send most of us crawling back to our departments with our scholarly tails between our critical legs; but its conclusion--that all the goofy phenomena of publication and appreciation surrounding those texts could somehow be attributed to (and _blamed on_, if you think the whole business was somehow distasteful) "Identity Theory" seemed a leap-and-a-half: no self-respecting postcolonial practitioner, for instance, would have slept through the signs of bogusness (or alibied her/his way around not having done some fact-checking) that Perloff held to be at issue. Can't we all just leave each other the hell alone?

And now I find my head hurting a little from all the G_Will, inc., stuff, as if hacking at (up?) his "prose" somehow could ease the etc. And of course, for some it can. Do keep in mind his lifelong difficulty, though (innate? learned?), at parsing lyric thought into anything but the, uh, categories of daily columnar preachifyin'-to-the-converted: remember his o'er-hasty embrace of that ringing celebration of Deep American Virtu, "Born in the USA." Or, really now, is this just a headachey way of iterating a replicant fuck you?

Yrs,

Jerry McGuire

↑ Index

277. Charles Bernstein
Re: Ginsberg and the Gap
Fri 11 Apr 1997

If you look at that ad, in tiny type running vertically on the side, it does say that the proceeds from the use of the photo have been donated to Naropa. Since I have always believe the smallest type in an ad is the most important I appreciated this bit of counter-information. There was nothing similar in the other Gap ads in the series.

> He said he had a good deal of doubt about his > decision, that he had rejected the Gap many times, but had, the last time, > decided that donating the money (I think to Naropa?) would do more good than harm.

↑ Index

278. Piombino/Simon
Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
Fri 11 Apr 1997

FYI
Corinne Robins, Liz Fodaski and Nick Piombino will be reading on Friday, April 25, 7:30 p.m., $7 (contribution) at Poets For Choice/ Ceres Gallery
584 Broadway, Suite 306, [redacted]
All invited to reception afterwards

↑ Index

279. Pritchett,Pat
Re: allen g. the millionaire
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Yes and perhaps this has been mentioned already but as I recall the money from the Gap ads was donated to some or other cause, Tibetan Buddhists in exile I believe.

Patrick Pritchett

From: jarnot
To: POETICS
Subject: allen g. the millionaire
Date: Friday, April 11, 1997 9:15AM

well, the thing is, allen was never a millionaire. when he got money from stanford for his archives he had enough to finally get a place on the lower east side with elevator access for himself and his step-mother. and he immediately went out and bought some salvation army couches to furnish the place. the money that allen made as a poet always went back into the community-- he kept a lot of poets and artists from living on the street. yours, lisa

↑ Index

280. KENT JOHNSON

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Fri 11 Apr 1997

Speaking of this image/commodity thing, there's a passage from Michael Palmer's last book that seems to connect, though I'm baffled as to precisely how. That would be the point, I guess. How to read this? It makes me jealous: I wish I would have thought of it for my death poem.

> "I too have an image for sale.
> It is the image of a poem."

Kent

> Date sent: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 10:13:58 +0100
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Dale Smith <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Will's column/ my reply
> To: [redacted]
>
> Kent:
>
> My impulse for writing in response to Will's article had to do with the recurring "fuck-you" posts which I find stupid and irresponsible. Will's article is grossly unfair, if not evil and pernicious, but telling Will to fuck himself behind his back, or not, simply confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today. So I picked up scant points of his which seemed appropriate and acknowledged that much of the rest of the article had no value at all. As for your questions:
>
> "Just one question to throw out as first thought, though not necessarily the better one: this "cultural market" that you charge Ginsbuerg as being complicit in-- where do you see its, as they say, horizon? Did Ginsbeurg, in other words, step over some kind of threshold that you and I (cleaner in life than him) haven't? What is the qualitative differuence, as you see it, between choosing to buy Gap pants and posing in them? And when we, for example, choose to polemicize on this list, are we not engaging in a gesture that is as fully inscribed in the cultural market as Ginsbuerg's marketing of his image? I know, I know, you talk about the "gap" between ideals and necessity, and you seem to grant that we all inhabit that and must necessarily negotiate, but isn't it a bit too easy for "uncommodified" poets to criticize across the gap between life and death, and say that the dead guy sold out when we haven't, even though you acknowledge that we've all sold out, inevitably, a little bit?"
>
> Ginsberg didn't step through any threshold. There is no threshold, as far as I can tell. We're all implicated in cultural and economic market practices. Whether posing for Gap pants or wearing them makes no

difference. But if you endorse a certain product while simultaneously engaging in social activism, then the irony of that position will be noticed, whether it's right or wrong. Will's article pointed out this contradiction in a cultural industry Will, Ginsberg, myself-anyone who writes-is a part of. This position is magnified with Ginsberg, however, so he's an easy target for people like Will who act as if they are themselves beyond reproach. And, by the way, I never said Ginsberg sold out and I don't even think I implied it, and if I did, well, that's my fault as a critical writer. And I'm sad he's dead but his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating ourselves only with warm platitudes.

"Aren't all of us (each of us, including you with your careful post) also, at least in portion, marketing an image here? (I mean Dale Smith, upping those guys and gals who are oblivious to their chiselled engravings within the poetry money market, but not Dale, who sees the gap between ideals and necessity, and thus has the banked-track on freedom. voom.)"

I guess e-mail posts could be viewed as "marketing an image" rather than provoking debate. Touche. I'm not trying to "up" anybody. The occasion of my post was, again, George Will's unflattering and unjust article on Ginsberg's death. With the same amount of fame I'm sure many of us, self included, would be held up for critical scrutiny, just and unjust alike.

"I would like my posts to contribute, little by little, to a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, exactly, does it mildly startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)"

Hey, the above sounds good to me too, except the part about being a "list insider," whatever that means.

"I am wearing Gap pants right now as I write, and whatever you are or aren't wearing Dale, you are, by reading this, between your ideals and the necessity of the dollar, being called on by Ginsbuerg, in his koan-billboard, to think a little more deeply about your own critical certainties. Again,this is first, quick thought. One I may well regret, post-partum, as I think Rachel Loden perceptively put it a week or so ago."

Actually, I'm wearing a burlap sack and beating myself with a stick.

"but thanks for provoking..."

> No problem.

↑ Index

281. KENT JOHNSON
ginsberg and snyder
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Gary Snyder lectured and read here in Freeport, Illinois tonight. It was quite incredible, frankly. He finished by reading/singing the magpie poem, prefacing it with a long, moving eulogy for AG. When he started to choke-up, he said it was his asthma, which disappointed me a little bit, but that's ok.

Inclement weather of the worst kind, but still over 150 people in attendance, maybe a couple dozen of them farmers who came because (my romantic leftist mind hopes) the lecture was entitled "The Relationship between Capitalism, Ethics, and the Environment." Probably, though, because Gary was billed to be introduced by my beloved friend, Dan Smith, a Freeport poet with a very big local following and who's a dairy farmer well-known for his "sustainable ag" practices (new book, _Home Land_, out from Bottom Dog Press).

As I was driving him to Dan's house where he spent the morning, Gary told me of a long telephone talk he had with AG two days before Allen died. At the time, Allen was operating under the impression of two to six months. Gary said that AG was "sad but not overly so," and was "a bit pissed-off that he'd just put this new kitchen into his apartment and now was barely going to get to use it." Then he changed the subject.

As you approach Dan's farm, there is a trailer surounded with 50 or 60 car-casses of cars, some of them 40's and 50's models. I noticed that Snyder was looking intently at this sight (the infamous "white trash" Bechtel household). Then he said with the utmost conviction: "Now there is some really really good stuff."

By the way, I haven't seen any posts about this: does everyone know that _Mountains and Rivers without End_ was awarded the Bollingen a few weeks back?

I'm driving Gary to the airport tomorrow and I'm going to askl him what he thinks about Allen posing for the Gap ad.

Kent

↑ Index

282. KENT JOHNSON
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Linda:

I'm not sure why you put me in the same law firm as Bromage and Boring. I was the guy who said to not pay any attention to the lawyers specializing in copyright and said nice post! Or are you referring to my "ue" and "eu" inserts into Ginsberg in my reply to Dale Smith? I did this only as a little riposte to Attorney Boring, who had slammed his fist repeatedly against the table objecting E E E E E E!

Sorry if my message was not clear.

Kent

> Priority: normal
> Date sent: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 13:00:40 +0000
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: "linda v. russo" <[redacted]>
> Organization: University of Utah
> Subject: Re: The Don Allan Anthology
> To: [redacted]
>
> To the Mr.'s Bromige, Alexander, Johnson & Bowering (not to make you sound like a law firm or anything):
>
> thanks for the words -- now that i look at it, it doesn't look quite right with a 'u'. I'm usually much more adroit & academic in checking these things. I do wonder though abt. the vitriol? (maria damon where are you?!) I can't consciously recall such copyediting in the 6 long months or so i've been a member on the list. -- l.
>
> Come on, George, the allusion was to the Don Allan Anthology, you know, the one with John Ashberry in it, and Robert Creely, and Charles Olsen, and Denise Leverton. bd.
>
> --
> linda v. russo
> [redacted]

↑ Index

283. KENT JOHNSON
Re: orbit
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Actually, "astronomical" language like this seems very apropos and useful to the discussion of poems, no?

> Date sent: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 15:33:28 -0400
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: orbit
> To: [redacted]
>
> where are the foci to a typical comet's orbit? i think i remember that ellipses have two centers. why is a comet's orbit stable yet so exageratedly non circular? Is the sun one focus? if so, what is the other one?
>
> (i guess i don't have trouble understanding the slightly elliptical orbits of the planets nearby because i can imagine the sun as spead out into two foci.)
>
> Bill
>
> You're right in that ellipses have two foci, and I'm no celestial mechanic, but the sun can be considered to be at or near one of the foci. I say near because there are many comets where the sun is actually between the vertex and the near focal point. There is another geometrical focal point, but whether or not there is something "there" has been an open topic for speculation (ie the Oort cloud idea, or like cpt. Kwirk, "there's something out there..."). The "something out there" forming the other focal point is not necessary for an elliptical orbit to take place though. The orbits of all solar system bodies have constantly, from the beginning, been perturbed by mutual gravitation so that the orbits intersect one another and elongate (become eccentric). The smaller bodies having the most eccentric orbits. Mercury has a very eccentric orbit for example.Hope that helps.
>
> Bill B.

↑ Index

284. KENT JOHNSON
on being angry at george will
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Where is the will you are angry at?

(AG, accompanied by harmonium)

↑ Index

285. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Interesting, Susan...I don't suspose Will mentions the one really interesting bit of gossip in the baseball world about that incident..That Hirschbeck used a homophobic word, and that that's the reason for the spitting (...I guess in that case he should feel grateful it wasn't Tom Mandel he was addressing, or the response might have been more solid); this cropped up on Atlanta radio some time ago, but was really given credence by a spot Peter Gammons did two weeks ago on ESPN, where he kept uneasily and paraphrastically saying that "there are just some words you don't use to someone from a Latin culture.." and finally narrowing it down to references to a singular "word" that you shouldn't ever use to someone from a Latin culture (..the "f" word presumably). Gammons knows most of what's going on in baseball, so I take it that that's strong confirmation. From both a poet's and a political activist's point of view, the whole affair becomes fascinating, in that there is this EVENT people talk about, and then (maybe) this VERBAL act at the very heart of it all, that NO ONE WILL MENTION..the word made evasion and silence.

Mark Prejsnar
(whose Braves are facing a true fight
for their lives in their division,
for the first time in living memory.)

On Thu, 10 Apr 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> I haven't read the Ginsberg piece by George Will, but I am looking forward to reading it with and against his recent defense of the Baltimore Orioles' Roberto Alomar (as I recall, Will proposed to his second wife at home plate--my god!--in Camden Yards) for spitting on the umpire last season. Will goes out of his way to attack umpires in this piece and to defend Alomar. Apparently, Will is a non-paid member of the Baltimore Orioles' board. Which leads me to my modest proposal: why not put the man on the poetics list and conflict his interests a bit?
>
> Susan
> (whose Cards are off to their worst start in history)

↑ Index

286. Michael Boughn
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

> it's called "stomping on your enemy's grave". Usually the living dead are > specially hired for that purpose.
>
> - Henry G.
>

Isn't this the battle for history, and wasn't Allen Ginsberg always on the frontlines, for better or for worse? Which is why the GWs hate him so much. How would he have responded to Wills? I don't think with anger . . .

Did anyone else see the obit in the NY Post? It opened something like "Allen Ginsberg, who wrested poetry away from the academics and returned it to the people . . ."

Mike

[redacted]

↑ Index

287. nuyopoman
Readings
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Samantha Coerbell, Edwin Torres, Shirley LeFlore and Bob Holman at Washington University (St Louis) Frida and Sat, April 11 and 12, 8pm.

Bob Holman at KGB's, across from LaMama on E 4th, Mon., April 14 8pm.

Will be reading "Bard in Bardo" poems.

BH

↑ Index

288. William Burmeister Prod
Re: orbit
Fri 11 Apr 1997

> where are the foci to a typical comet's orbit? i think i remember that ellipses have two centers. why is a comet's orbit stable yet so exageratedly non circular? Is the sun one focus? if so, what is the other one?
>
> (i guess i don't have trouble understanding the slightly elliptical orbits of the planets nearby because i can imagine the sun as spead out into two foci.)
>
> Bill

You're right in that ellipses have two foci, and I'm no celestial mechanic, but the sun can be considered to be at or near one of the foci. I say near because there are many comets where the sun is actually between the vertex and the near focal point. There is another geometrical focal point, but whether or not there is something "there" has been an open topic for speculation (ie the Oort cloud idea, or like cpt. Kwirk, "there's something out there..."). The "something out there" forming the other focal point is not necessary for an elliptical orbit to take place though. The orbits of all solar system bodies have constantly, from the beginning, been perturbed by mutual gravitation so that the orbits intersect one another and elongate (become eccentric). The smaller bodies having the most eccentric orbits. Mercury has a very eccentric orbit for example.Hope that helps.

Bill B.

↑ Index

289. William Burmeister Prod

G. Swill caught perturbating infragrante delicto

Fri 11 Apr 1997

Dear sir,

Could you send me a copy of Jack Spandrift's new CD, "Cowboys Rain Cowshit on the Plain" from Teatro Bouncayore Czech Productions. I am not able to enclose money right now since I am a little short. You can look for my 2 cents worth in my next review.

-George Swill

>George Will, will you please george up.
>George Will, your motha was a car salesman for the Edsel when Allen Ginsberg was a protege of a potato.
>George Will, Shake your brocolli experiment offa my check-out line.
>George Will, hey, do you like MY poem? Huh? What the...

> - Jack Spandrift
>
> Jack's new CD, "Cowboys Rain Cowshit on the Plain" is available (in Spain only) from Teatro Bouncayore Czech Productions, El Raygonner, Wyo. Send money now.

↑ Index

290. Rachel Loden
Re: orbit
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Bill Luoma wrote:

> where are the foci to a typical comet's orbit? i think i remember that ellipses have two centers. why is a comet's orbit stable yet so exageratedly non circular? Is the sun one focus? if so, what is the other one?
>
> (i guess i don't have trouble understanding the slightly elliptical orbits of the planets nearby because i can imagine the sun as spead out into two foci.)

Resident logician writes:

It's about the ancient theory of conic sections, and Kepler's laws of planetary motion.

Think of a plane slicing through a cone --- if it is orthogonal to the axis of the cone, you get a circle. If you tilt a bit, you get an ellipse.

Tilt more, and you get curves that are not closed (parabolas and hyperbolas) --- if your comet is on one of them, it will never come back. Given that Hale-Bopp is in the habit of coming back, albeit infrequently, it must be on an elliptical orbit that is very elongated. Kepler's laws apply: the sun must be one of the foci of the ellipse.

What happens to the other focus? It is, of course, a mathematical abstraction, and in a sense it is not in use. There is only one sun, and the sun's gravitational pull is both necessary and sufficient to keep a comet on an elliptical orbit.

Kepler's laws can be easily derived from Newton's ("the two body problem"), as an exercise in pure mathematics.

I remember it being said that the Hale-Bopp orbit is roughly perpendicular to the plane of the solar system. This may explain its relatively quick entry and exit.

Jussi Ketonen
[redacted]

↑ Index

291. Hugh Steinberg
Re: AG & the columnists
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Yeah, so the world is full of jerks. What else is new? I think all the post-mortem arguments about Ginsberg only point to his immense vitality as a poet and as a cultural figure, the linkage of which has become increasingly rare in popular American culture.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

292. Thomas M. Orange belated respects
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Sestina for Ginzberg
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

brushfire's smokey mass in dusk light, pull out and slowly roll condensers of small Sony TV machine marble pillars in the Rector's open window on Chicago Midwinter night, canyon path crowded with thistle sun's bright red ball on thistle into the bottom please light enwired rusty w/resistances giant night courtyard at the end roll

Clark & Halstead brushed with Rector's fern blue daisy, glassy machine horizon purple with earth-cloud, machine master lunge it again, thistle grass leafspears morning glory Rector's marble-white street in light this week's snow grill lights roll grass, pale morningglory night chanting to Shiva in the night and withdraw to the machine hillside perched over clearing All roll the walled city of thistle blinking at the corner decades light scattered on a granite Rector's car-cabin. Pacific Gas high Rector's tip please please master night branches lifting up papery seedhusks, light Dubrovnik -- all the fleet machine

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

ago Smokestack poked above roofs thistle hill bells clanging under roll voltage antennae trailing thin wires roll fuck me again with Rector's parasolspiked Fern Tramping together thistle sunk, Empire foundered, Doges night & watertower standing still above machine gray sea cliffs, dry light

↑ Index

293. Hoa Nguyen
Ginsberg
Fri 11 Apr 1997

(This is my first post on the list)

The following is an excerpt from a post by Kent Johnson. It is an incredibly honest personal statement and I feel that it requires particular attention. In a dialogue about poetry, A. Ginsberg, and whether it is possible not to participate in the corrupt market system we are necessarily a part of, he said, among many things:

Dale, I'll say this: I would like, when I say >something on this list, to impress, to have people think: "Boy, that >Kent Johnson sounds really interesting, I wonder what he is really >like.." Wishful thinking, I'm sure, but I would like my posts to >contribute, little by little, to >a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never >get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I >haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to >be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, >exactly, does it mildly
>startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)

I think it may startle because of its stunning honesty. And it comments on the discussion at hand-- that is: how one can be an artist, activist, and socially responsible while simultaneously complicit in the very structures that one wishes to expose and inform against. I am glad that the obvious was said-- that participation in this "utopian" arena for dialogue is not outside the market system we (myself included) engage in every moment, not outside structures and institutions of power. While we strive to engage in something that may illuminate or transform through ideas, art, or creating a community-- we cannot escape the conditions we live in.

And in the preceding sentence I illustrated this very thought-- that as a woman of color I cannot be outside prejudice or racism--that inescapably is contained even in the language I use -- using the word "illuminate" valuing light/white-ness.--writing in a language of colonialism, using my expensive computer, using and using energy, etc. It is a contradiction. I think exposing this is tantamount to transforming it-- and I think that is what we are doing, that it is a process. I do not understand why engaging in the dialectic leads people to believe one is "charging" someone of something.

(Although, as I have read in the archives, finger-pointing / wanting-to-punch-someone-in-the-mouth morality policing, does occur).

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

294. Thomas M. Orange
Re: belated respects
Fri 11 Apr 1997

(oops! forgot the envoy....)

the blue lamped boulevards, sky night
upright pushing a thistle machine
across flatlands, entering Coast Range light

(or)

across flatlands, entering Coast Range light
upright pushing a thistle machine
the blue lamped boulevards, sky night

(as you wish)

↑ Index

295. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Will's column
Fri 11 Apr 1997

"America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
--Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)

"America, I'm not sorry."
--same guy

Dales,

I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
is "stupid and irresponsible."

I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
"confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."

If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the Poetics list.

If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it was "behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the opportunity to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may or may not use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of sneering condescension he emits.

You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were they Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural and economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course with George F. Will?

You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating ourselves only with warm platitudes."

Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be reasonable because it only makes me more angry.

[redacted]

↑ Index

296. Mark Weiss
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

That we're all implicated in the system constitutes a platitude in my book.
I haven't taken its temperature.
I'm wearing 501s, but that's because I'm hipper than you guys.

> Ginsberg didn't step through any threshold. There is no threshold, as far as I can tell. We're all implicated in cultural and economic market practices. Whether posing for Gap pants or wearing them makes no difference. But if you endorse a certain product while simultaneously engaging in social activism, then the irony of that position will be noticed, whether it's right or wrong. Will's article pointed out this contradiction in a cultural industry Will, Ginsberg, myself-anyone who writes-is a part of. This position is magnified with Ginsberg, however, so > he's an easy target for people like Will who act as if they are themselves beyond reproach. And, by the way, I never said Ginsberg sold out and I don't even think I implied it, and if I did, well, that's my fault as a critical writer. And I'm sad he's dead but his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating ourselves only with warm platitudes.

↑ Index

297. DS
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Yes? But who is going to do it? Said the Mouse.

> Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>
> Fuck George F. Will.
>
> herehere, fuck him.
>
> mc

↑ Index

298. aerialedge
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Dale Smith wrote:
> Will's article is grossly unfair, if not evil and pernicious, >but telling Will to fuck himself behind his back, or not, simply confirms >his belief in the poverty of cultural values today.

The point is our telling Will to fuck himself or not has absolutely no consequence. Personally I think it more appropriate to ask him to shut up about something of which he knows nothing. Fucking is so lovely after all. A deluge of letters of the oh shut up fool variety might at least raise his eyebrow.

Will came in my place of employ on Tuesday (his office is two blocks away), the day after I'd got back from going to New York to sit w/ Allen G. I have NOTHING to say to George Will. He represents the obligatory violence of mass media controled society. I do not think he is aware of this as he is so thoroughly indoctrinated. The man, tho human, is lost to that part of being human which Ginsberg & so many other artists-- what's the right word here-- give? represent? create? In any case there is as much reason to feel sorry for George Will as to be angry-- to make a living spewing the idiot venom, this cannot be good for any "soul."

--Rod

↑ Index

299. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
Fri 11 Apr 1997

This may seem really obvious of me, but when addresses of events are listed on the list, could the city please be included?

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

300. sschu30844
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

David B--the comment on where George Will made his proposal came from an instant fear that a man so conservative might say, "a woman's place is at home plate," that's all. I doubt he'd say that about second base, though he is surely off base (or just base) about most things.

Thanks to Maxine Chernoff for mentioning that I'll be giving a reading in San Francisco. It's on May 1 at 7:30 at the Cafe Sapore (in North Beach somewhere), and I'll be reading with John Noto. I'd love to meet list members there or elsewhere.

Susan (from Honolulu, which doesn't change its time either)

↑ Index

301. Jordan Davis
POETPOETRRYCITRYCITTYY
Fri 11 Apr 1997

Kim Stian Kiman dman Br Bim Sterian Kefans
oems in The Poe and Kiosk se and Kiosk ms in The Im Pespercipient

Goooren D GoodLorenman
Xquisite Corppoems in Exq E uisite Corpse Poems in E and Kiosk

Teachers &eachers & WWriters CWriters Colollaborativelaborative 5 Union SqUnion Squ uare West,are West, 7 7th Floor 7th Floor Friday, Aprriday, April ril 18, 7-8: 18, 7-8:3030 p.m. 0 p.m.

↑ Index

302. henry gould
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Fri 11 Apr 1997

---

fame - critique joke - serious $$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$$ gap - hole knee - crotch
essay - guessay insider?
email - demon
square - hip
Ginsberg - Ginsberg, Jr. bug?
flog - fog (fghrist's sake)
etc. - gnats
flood - Fargo bug spray?? ice - dike
Faust - stuff one-up, stupid?
* ? glory... -

- Jack Spandrift

Jack's new CD, "How to become a Millionaire without Taking your Spurs Off in Bed, plus Interviews with Famous People On Tape and WORMS on HOOKS For BAIT if you Like to FISH", is available from Cootie Productions, POB 2399999990-etxc, Bronx, NY 10035. The question is, how to order, that is, what's it worth to you. Faust paid a lot down but ended up regretting the whole deal. You can also pay on installment - send a toad's eye, one ear of a wet bowl of cornmeal mush, and three dollars/mo. It might get to you? Well, scratch where it itches, bro. Death rides in mighty record companies.

p.s. George Will = Ol' Wrigglee Allen Ginsberg = L' B'ggar Senile

↑ Index

303. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: SouthBay
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Notice to all San Francisco and points south --

Hank Lazer, often of this list, will appear in a poetry reading at the Stanford University Book Store on Friday May 2, at 4:00 PM

I'll expect to see y'all there

↑ Index

304. Alan Jen Sondheim

lure/id

Sat 12 Apr 1997

-

(As Netscape Communicator extends email into multi-media, poetics will change or retreat. This isn't concrete poetry, but the full and broken textual body. The .htm below is an artifact.)

<HTML>
<TITLE>lurid communicator haunts the wires</TITLE>
<HEAD>
  <META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=iso-8859-1">
  <META NAME="GENERATOR" CONTENT="Mozilla/4.0b3 [en] (Win95; I) [Netscape]"> <META NAME="Author" CONTENT="Alan Jen Sondheim">
</HEAD>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FF9191" LINK="#0000EE" VLINK="#551A8B" ALINK="#FF0000">
Playing with the elaboration inherent in the baroque elements of rococo Netscape Communicator all evening, this critic observes the beginning of email-rubble, in the littoral sense of stumbling across font and color, link and extension, sound and sight. Email transforms into transitive term, translucent, flailing across Websites; email loses internal flow as transitivity constantly jumps the tracks. As we play, push further borders, phenomenological 'world of the text' ruptures, opening jewelry and seduction. What I would give to see you naked cum in my inbox! The inner speech or vocality of language is lost; the (digital) world intrudes in the sense of the ikonic (every digital image is ikonic). Play skitters formations across the surface surfeit.
<IMG SRC="swollen.jpg" BORDER=10 HEIGHT=70 WIDTH=75> In the midst of things, disturbances. The world is lost. What you can read here, what is your name, your tool, belonging as well, yet:
<P>
Yet can you imagine the _event_ of swollen.jpg, not yet included, Jennifer, flush with the screen, rupturing the text with the potential for _her_ visible body, not yet produced, reproduced in _this_ space, but already a deterioration of text, the world shattered by swollen.pink.jpg as you would no longer say, breathless, lured or seduced into the product-production of Jennifer-capital-<B>Alan.</B></P>

<B>----------</B> </BODY>
</HTML>

↑ Index

305. KENT JOHNSON
snyder/gap/ginsberg
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Took Snyder to the airport bus today and told him about the Will article. He didn't know about it. He said, "Really? Good. That's good. This will help start up a bigger discussion about Allen." I told him about the many heartfelt, moving statements about Allen on this list. He said, "Really? Good. That's Charles Bernstein's creation, right? Hmmmm... Good, good..."

Snyder really is a warm and impressive guy. He's reading at Harvard May 1 for those of you in that area. When he sings some of his poems, he sounds like Pete Seeger. I mentioned here yesterday that magpie poem he sang for AG. When it's over he says, "And then the magpie flew away."

Hey Chris Alexander, that was some tour de force with the last post. And I don't care if you're in Utah. I've never been invited to a party in Utah. Call me.

cardinals in spring snow,

Kent

↑ Index

306. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Ginsberg
Sat 12 Apr 1997

> Date sent: Sat, 12 Apr 1997 09:24:38 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Ginsberg
> To: [redacted]
>
> At 1:57 PM -0700 4/11/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote, quoting kent johnson:
>
> Dale, I'll say this: I would like, when I say > something on this list, to impress, to have people think: "Boy, that > Kent Johnson sounds really interesting, I wonder what he is really > like.." Wishful thinking, I'm sure, but I would like my posts to > contribute, little by little, to
> a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never > get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I > haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to > be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, > exactly, does it mildly

> startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)
>
> why wd this startle? it falls well within the continuum of normal human > cerebration. what startles is the ungrounded assumption that i am > startled...

Well, then, so it startled, right?

Kent

↑ Index

307. Maria Damon
Re: Ginsberg
Sat 12 Apr 1997

At 1:57 PM -0700 4/11/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote, quoting kent johnson:
>
>Dale, I'll say this: I would like, when I say >>something on this list, to impress, to have people think: "Boy, that >>Kent Johnson sounds really interesting, I wonder what he is really >>like.." Wishful thinking, I'm sure, but I would like my posts to >>contribute, little by little, to >>a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never >>get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I >>haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to >>be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, >>exactly, does it mildly
>>startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)

why wd this startle? it falls well within the continuum of normal human cerebration. what startles is the ungrounded assumption that i am startled. candor is appreciated.

↑ Index

308. Maria Damon
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Sat 12 Apr 1997

At 6:09 PM -0400 4/11/97, [redacted] wrote:
etc

i agree. the focus has become what an asshole george will is, rather than anything abt ginsberg. will's shortcomings are not exceptional and don't warrant much time and energy. why waste time on his mean-spirited nonsense?

↑ Index

309. Dave Zauhar
Re: Will's column
Sat 12 Apr 1997

---

actually, the strangest obituary I've heard in the electronic media occured on an Altoona/Johnstown Pennsylvania station. An anchorwoman coiffed to look like a humanoid version of Miss Polly Purebred concluded the 7 second piece (part of the "around the world in a minute" feature common to most local newscasts) by saying, "Ginsberg's poetry grew out of his homosexual experiences and his communistic upbringing." For a brief moment, I had a sense of what it was like to be alive during the 1950s (especially given the production values of this particular newscast).

Dave Zauhar,
whose Pirates organization would embarrass a slow-pitch softball team

↑ Index

310. KENT JOHNSON
Re: cardinal in spring snow?
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Thought I'd share this which I just got from a friend in response to my post to the list re: Gary Snyder. My reply follows his waka and wise caution:

> baby panda in boiling pot screaming then quiet > running shoe under bed smeared with dogshit > penis ringed with Copenhagen stains
>
> Don't let that giddy zensnyder experience make you > sentimental-eye-zed, oh kent on sawed- > off branch plummeting toward cardinal in spring snow.
> --Love, The Underdolt

But hey, love, if I'm going to crash in a heap and take the whole empire down with me, why not engage in a little hero worship to salve the pain. Heil Snyder!!!

(ps: and who's the cutie-pie that does Copenhagen?)

keunt

↑ Index

311. Maria Damon
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Sat 12 Apr 1997

speaking of sports, i took in When We Were Kings this past week. it's got some fun poetry in it, and reminded me of when i was a little girl and the Clay/Liston fight was gonna be on. (it was memorable to me cuz we didn't have a tv, but we were at a ski lodge for a week and the ski lodge had a tv, so everything on tv that week sticks in my mind). the newscasters kept reading a poem clay had written for the occasion and i adored it. can anybody post that poem here? free copies of my book and the new cross-cultural poetix to the person who obliges.--md

At 2:54 PM -0400 4/11/97, Mark Prejsnar wrote: >Interesting, Susan...I don't suspose Will mentions the one really >interesting bit of gossip in the baseball world about that incident..That >Hirschbeck used a homophobic word, and that that's the reason for the >spitting (...I guess in that case he should feel grateful it wasn't Tom >Mandel he was addressing, or the response might have been more solid);
>this cropped up on Atlanta radio some time ago, but was really given >credence by a spot Peter Gammons did two weeks ago on ESPN, where he kept >uneasily and paraphrastically saying that "there are just some words you >don't use to someone from a Latin culture.." and finally narrowing it down >to references to a singular "word" that you shouldn't ever use to someone >from a Latin culture (..the "f" word presumably). Gammons knows most of >what's going on in baseball, so I take it that that's strong confirmation.
>>From both a poet's and a political activist's point of view, the whole >affair becomes fascinating, in that there is this EVENT people talk about, >and then (maybe) this VERBAL act at the very heart of it all, that NO ONE >WILL MENTION..the word made evasion and silence.
>
>Mark Prejsnar
>(whose Braves are facing a true fight
>for their lives in their division,
>for the first time in living memory.)
>
>On Thu, 10 Apr 1997 [redacted] wrote:
>
>> I haven't read the Ginsberg piece by George Will, but I am looking >>forward to >> reading it with and against his recent defense of the Baltimore Orioles' >> Roberto Alomar (as I recall, Will proposed to his second wife at home >> plate--my god!--in Camden Yards) for spitting on the umpire last season.

>> Will goes out of his way to attack umpires in this piece and to defend >> Alomar. Apparently, Will is a non-paid member of the Baltimore Orioles' >> board. Which leads me to my modest proposal: why not put the man on the >> poetics list and conflict his interests a bit?
>>
>> Susan
>> (whose Cards are off to their worst start in history)
>>

↑ Index

312. Herb Levy
Ginsberg, Nyro, & media coverage for the arts
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Charles Bernstein wrote:

> Nyro is being played quite a bit on the radio here in New York City,

& others have written or implied similarly about both Ginsberg & Nyro.

When I hear a recording by someone I'm interested in on almost ANY radio station, NPR or otherwise, I assume that the artist has died, 'cause otherwise the work w0uldn't be on the air.

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

313. Christopher Alexander
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Kent wrrt:
> this "cultural market" that you > charge Ginsb[...]erg as being complicit in--where do you see its, as > they say, horizon? Did Ginsbe[...]rg, in other words, step over some > kind of threshold that you and I (cleaner in life than him) haven't?
> What is the qualitative differ[...]ence, as you see it, between > choosing to buy Gap pants and posing in them?

it seems to me that part of the problem here is that we've started, already, from too general a category, or perhaps in plain confusion, with the term "cultural market". while we've acknowledged the market structure of the "cultural" (itself a blanket term)--cultural capital etc a la bourdieu--we've also conflated the two fields on the basis of that structure, which should be accounted autonomous, at least to the best of our ability to do so.

so it's both less clear & more clear than presented.
["playing for time"]["doesn't have an answer, does he?"]

I mean, yes, there is a difference between "marketing an image" on the poetics list, or in any social-institutional setting--ie, vying for cultural capital, which is a part of our activities here, whether debate or reminiscence, or foolin' around foolery--& participating in an advertisment--which involves an exchange of "real", ie, monetary capital--, & for a company that, as noted by Michael Mcgee, came to be recognized-- though not, I'm certain, before Ginsberg agreed to do the ad--as complicit in the exploitation of child-labor in Southeast Asia. not just an evaluative difference, ie, in terms of what I value or de-value by my judgements, particularly as they are informed by my awareness of the crimes of commodity capitalism, & the accompanying guilt over my own (platitudinous) participation in the maintenance of the same, but a demonstrable difference. ["demonstrable as in rhymes-with-objective?"]. what I mean is that my own feeling about the difference between the two activities is that, at worst, we, by participating on this list are engaged by our participation in a discourse which legitimates an institution that we all believe in; whereas Ginsberg, by posing for the Gap ad, is participating not only in self-promotion, the promotion of Allen Ginsberg as a cultural phenomenon--the accumulation of cultural capital on a different field--, or the support & possibly the promotion of Naropa, but directly in the maintenance of commodity capitalism as it's represented by the Gap--ie, making a direct statement, as it were, of support for the current economic system, which is, as Dale points out, ironically opposed to the Ginsberg more generally familiar. that's not so much of a criticism as it sounds; clearly, as, again, Michael Mcgee's post indicates, Ginsberg was well aware of the intersection of these two fields in his act, & the contradictions that intersection involved, & so not necessarily acting as a "sell-out" or a "capitalist stooge" (remember that Bloom County of a few years back? we still have some Penguin Love t-shirts available). in fact, that's not at all where I mean to locate the above statements, in a sort of disappointed rock fan accusation of heresy, or in the quest for a more saintly canon. nor do I think Dale was expressing any other than the sort of puzzlement that I am, or that Ginsberg himself evidently expressed.

note: "puzzlement" as in trying a difficult problem by experiment, not a disappointed confusion or the like.

Dale wrttttt:
>Ginsberg didn't step through any threshold. There is no threshold, >as far as I can tell. We're all implicated in cultural and economic >market practices.

without wanting to initiate a witch hunt, I think it's fair to say that Ginsberg did cross a sort of line, the line from the accumulation of cultural capital & what that entails, to the accumulation, for whatever good reason--& he had reasons which he felt were sufficient--, of monetary capital & what that entails.

again--sorry if I sound defensive, but the point might easily be misunderstood--this isn't hurtful surprise at Ginsberg having Taken Money--which I'd gladly take if it were offered from ["any offers yet?"]--as much as it is to point up the difference, as I see it, between--well, ie, the Gap not so much between ideals & necessity,
as between "the economy" & the/a cultural economy, or vice versa. & maybe that's not such a long gap, either, as the excerpt that Kent brings from At Passages indicates, which is not to say that care needn't be taken in handling that difference, but that it is worth pointing out, as does Dale in his post, the culture industry's ability to turn rebellion to a profit. the small print Ginsberg apparently insisted on may have worked against that agenda, in a "bid" to subvert, however incompletely, the Gap's attempt to use his recognizable counter-culture status-- which isn't, I think, much different from Levi Strauss' attempt to buy the graffiti www site, mentioned here a few months back--, but the incompleteness of that subversion is apparent in the fact that the small print merely contributes to that status in association with the Gap.

in other words, even this gesture, made specifically against the context in which Ginsberg appears modeling Gap pants, can be read as furthering the aims of the Gap, Inc. (?) as much as those of Ginsberg or Naropa.

but I think that's less a criticism of Ginsberg (as on the cover of his books?) than all of us, or none. (quick detour from puzzlement to feeling pessimistic). & my intuition, from M. Mcgee's post, is that Ginsberg would have looked favorably on our consideration of that problem, particularly as it might (any minute now) swing toward a collective self-examination, & away from a game of othering the Other. though, if there's anything of which I can be certain, it's that Ginsberg would have us conduct ourselves with a bit more humor & compassion, even in the face of gravest circumstance. ["gravest...?"]

"love my rhetoric? try Pixidium, the capsular fruit that dehisces so the upper part falls off just like a cap. no more messy furnit"

as to the difference between posing for an advertisment for the Gap & wearing pants with the Gap label: in this matter, or, I should say, in this particular case, there's not such a difference. (I'm wearing Levi's 501s, which can be read any number of ways, really, & a cheap, pink, ink-stained t-shirt made by some company called Rivet).
more than anything, the danger here is that we might return to the "what are you wearing" thread.

or we could talk about the difference in terms of the potential intersection of fields. but I'm not about to.

by the way, Kent, I, for one, do look forward to your posts, &, were I to have a party, would surely invite you. that's not likely, however, as I live where I do live, & so couldn't expect much of a turnout, despite my own carefully written posts etc.

"still in Utah? try American Hairlines luxurious or stain removal: cream those blemishes away" or better, "want a real sense of what it's like to be alive in the 1950s?" because George Will is practically a RED COMMIE in Utahn's terms.

best, chris
supposed by some to be working,
& not merely at work

..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

314. Piombino/Simon
Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Thank you for your careful reading of my posting regarding the Planned Parenthood Benefit/ Poets for Choice Reading The reading will be held in New York,

New York, borough of Manhattan The Ceres Gallery is located at 584 Broadway, suite 306, near Prince Street in SoHo, telephone [redacted] (this is quite near to the Prince Street stop on the RR train or the N train) For those of you who may have missed the first posting the readers are Corinne Robins, Liz Fodaski and Nick Piombino It will be held on April 25 at 7:30 p.m. ($7 Contribution) Fri, 11 Apr 1997, Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> This may seem really obvious of me, but when addresses of events are listed on the list, could the city please be included?
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

315. Christopher Alexander Re: on being angry at george will
Sat 12 Apr 1997

> Where is the will you are angry at?

"verily, Reverend Sir, it is the hair of the head,
I mean his hair-brained, no its..."

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

316. Jennifer Ashton
Lyn Hejinian's address
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Would anyone be willing to backchannel me with Lyn Hejinian's snail mail address? (Or academic affiliation?) Many thanks.

Jennifer Ashton
Johns Hopkins University
[redacted]

↑ Index

317. Keith Norris
Re: Will's column
Sat 12 Apr 1997

---

yus, GW is a mincey trifle, but the public do listen. More than once, I've heard his sun am posture brickbatted into the knoxville eveninews as news as is.

don't like the argument that a "fuck you" or punchy proposal is queing up in the line george set the markers for. false fancy rhetor george--this is much the same argument which says any loud protest against the good governor of tn simply shows him how right he is about whiney college teachers: "if we calm down he might leave us with demoralized pants but pants, oh, pants!"

No--GW the frightened coddled clam needs a few well-writ fucks -- mine, ill-writ but posing as other, in mail.

Keith

-=-=-=-=-=

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Department PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933
[redacted]

↑ Index

318. Christopher Alexander
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Notice to All:
as the council for the defensive, I wish to register my objection to your libellous assertion that the said Mr. Alexander is in any way infirm or Boring. actually, we're registered at Sharper Image. I'm hoping for the radio-controlled Waterford Crystal Dish & a setting for 12 with gravy boat & silver croquet mallets. as for the vitriol, it comes & goes, but mostly the pain is in my left leg & my ass.

signed, A Lawyerly Type

..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

319. nuyopoman
Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Apr 1997 to 11 Apr 1997
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Holman in NY

BOB HOLMAN, ANNA RABINOWITZ

7:30pm, Poetry Series/KGB, 85 E. 4th St., [redacted].

↑ Index

320. nuyopoman
Holman Reading
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Holman in NYC with Date of Event This Time

BOB HOLMAN, ANNA RABINOWITZ
Mon, April 14
7:30pm, Poetry Series/KGB, 85 E. 4th St.,
[redacted].

↑ Index

321. Mark Weiss
Re: Will's column/ my reply
Sat 12 Apr 1997

In 1991 I was teaching a modern lit course in Tucson. We were discussing a novella by Platonov called "Dzan" (which, by the way, I strongly recommend) by the Russian writer Platonov. Platonov, who was no fool and suffered plenty under Stalin, was both a dedicated, revolutionary believer in the sort of humane socialism to which the Soviet government often gave lip service even at the worst of times and a christian of sorts (or at least friendly to christian symbolism). The hero of "Dzan" is something like a communist St. Francis. My students had a hard time understanding the idea that a communist, or even a socialist, could harbor benign or altruistic motives--both words were, in their experience, expletives and little more. As one woman, an adult student of maybe 35, put it, "I was always taught that all communists are evil." The kids were even more perplexed. Maybe the world wasn't so simply divided into good and evil. History, for them, had been rewritten to exclude the idealism that the bolshevik rulers manupulated for their own ends but that surely motivated many of their followers--a fair proportion of the world's population--and that offered an alternative vision, however impractical, of human posibilities. It had been rewritten at the movies, on television, and in the popular press. The 60s has been rewritten and domesticated by the fashion-mongers, who make big bucks off of retro radicalism as a fashion statement: clothing whose major virtue was that it cost almost nothing, blurred class distinctions and broke the hold of fashion has become a class marker for those who can afford it. You can book a tour on a hippie bus and do hippie things--a great way to meet other singles, I'm told. As for politics, there's a whole industry devoted to rewriting that, and George Will is in its employ. Saying fuck you to George Will won't get us anywhere. The reason it's important to answer him is that he and his are rewriting the recent past, our own experience of the world. Answering him here doesn't do a whole lot of good--it's mostly preaching to the choir. But it's not a bad thing to do in our classes. It's why I teach a lot of history whatever the course bulletin says I'm teaching. Those who don't know history may not be doomed to repeat it, but they are doomed to having it misappropriated.

At 09:32 AM 4/12/97 -0500, you wrote:
>At 6:09 PM -0400 4/11/97, [redacted] wrote:
>etc
>
>i agree. the focus has become what an asshole george will is, rather than >anything abt ginsberg. will's shortcomings are not exceptional and don't >warrant much time and energy. why waste time on his mean-spirited nonsense?
>
>

↑ Index

322. David Bromige
Triumph and the Will
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Thank you, Tom. But my recollection of your conversation (which we sorely miss, old chum) suggests you wd do better in a duel of wits with Will to bat for yourself. But whether you or I. it'll be like shooting goldfish in a rainbarrel.

I agree re the anecdotal testimony re Allen. (oops! or is it Alan? Allan? -- George, George Bowering, while you're up, would you go the the Ginsberg section of my bookshelves, check that out? Thanks George!) Some of the best reading on the List, in my brief months upon it. The Will part is not so good--would be better if he were on the list I think. I know I posted re-him, but I was one over the eight that night & forget what I wrote.

If it cd now be regarded as vitriol-free, I'd like to continue the naming of contributors to the Don Allan Anthology (or Apology). How abt Jackson McLow, Michael Mac Lure, Gary Spicer and Jack Snyder? And of course, Jerome Rothenburg.

dbde

↑ Index

323. Mark Weiss

(no subject)

Sat 12 Apr 1997

For some reason my recent postings to the list, such as they are, are arriving 8-12 hours after sent, which effectively excludes me from this discussion. Strange feeling of invisibility. So herein a second attempt at what follows. Sorry for any redundance.

In 1991 I was teaching a modern lit course in Tucson. We were discussing a novella by Platonov called "Dzan" (which, by the way, I strongly recommend) by the Russian writer Platonov. Platonov, who was no fool and suffered plenty under Stalin, was both a dedicated, revolutionary believer in the sort of humane socialism to which the Soviet government often gave lip service even at the worst of times and a christian of sorts (or at least friendly to christian symbolism). The hero of "Dzan" is something like a communist St. Francis. My students had a hard time understanding the idea that a communist, or even a socialist, could harbor benign or altruistic motives--both words were, in their experience, expletives and little more. As one woman, an adult student of maybe 35, put it, "I was always taught that all communists are evil." The kids were even more perplexed. Maybe the world wasn't so simply divided into good and evil. History, for them, had been rewritten to exclude the idealism that the bolshevik rulers manupulated for their own ends but that surely motivated many of their followers--a fair proportion of the world's population--and that offered an alternative vision, however impractical, of human posibilities. It had been rewritten at the movies, on television, and in the popular press. The 60s has been rewritten and domesticated by the fashion-mongers, who make big bucks off of retro radicalism as a fashion statement: clothing whose major virtue was that it cost almost nothing, blurred class distinctions and broke the hold of fashion has become a class marker for those who can afford it. You can book a tour on a hippie bus and do hippie things--a great way to meet other singles, I'm told. As for politics, there's a whole industry devoted to rewriting that, and George Will is in its employ. Saying fuck you to George Will won't get us anywhere. The reason it's important to answer him is that he and his are rewriting the recent past, our own experience of the world. Answering him here doesn't do a whole lot of good--it's mostly preaching to the choir. But it's not a bad thing to do in our classes. It's why I teach a lot of history whatever the course bulletin says I'm teaching. Those who don't know history may not be doomed to repeat it, but they are doomed to having it misappropriated.

At 09:32 AM 4/12/97 -0500, you wrote:
>At 6:09 PM -0400 4/11/97, [redacted] wrote:
>etc
>
>i agree. the focus has become what an asshole george will is, rather than >anything abt ginsberg. will's shortcomings are not exceptional and don't >warrant much time and energy. why waste time on his mean-spirited nonsense?
>
>

↑ Index

324. Pritchett,Pat
Re: buy this book!
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Been reading Aldon Nielsen's most excellent new "slim vol." - STEPPING RAZOR and want to urge listmembers - if you haven't sent your check to Rod Smith yet, what are you waiting for?

From: Translations From The Rubric

To enter a world out of loss
Is to carry a lack before you

To impose an emptiness as a place for faith
To place before you a thing of the past
The world will not stand for

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

325. Dean Taciuch

Re: Will's column/ my reply

Sat 12 Apr 1997

> My students had a hard time understanding the idea > that a communist, or even a socialist, could harbor benign or altruistic > motives--both words were, in their experience, expletives and little more.
> As one woman, an adult student of maybe 35, put it, "I was always taught > that all communists are evil." The kids were even more perplexed. Maybe the > world wasn't so simply divided into good and evil.
> History, for them, had been rewritten to exclude the idealism that the > bolshevik rulers manupulated for their own ends but that surely motivated > many of their followers--a fair proportion of the world's population--and > that offered an alternative vision, however impractical, of human > posibilities. It had been rewritten at the movies, on television, and in the > popular press.
> The 60s has been rewritten and domesticated by the fashion-mongers, who make > big bucks off of retro radicalism as a fashion statement: clothing whose > major virtue was that it cost almost nothing, blurred class distinctions and > broke the hold of fashion has become a class marker for those who can afford > it. You can book a tour on a hippie bus and do hippie things--a great way to > meet other singles, I'm told. As for politics, there's a whole industry > devoted to rewriting that, and George Will is in its employ.
> Saying fuck you to George Will won't get us anywhere. The reason it's > important to answer him is that he and his are rewriting the recent past, > our own experience of the world.
> Answering him here doesn't do a whole lot of good--it's mostly preaching to > the choir. But it's not a bad thing to do in our classes. It's why I teach a > lot of history whatever the course bulletin says I'm teaching. Those who > don't know history may not be doomed to repeat it, but they are doomed to > having it misappropriated.

Every time I teach a lit course I teach the history as well. In the standard Am-Lit sequence, I always go into the history of the American Communist party of the 1920s, for example. The students for the most part know nothing about it (though a few do, and that number seems to be increasing). The simple Communism (bad)/Democracy (good) dichtomy has been absorbed by people who don't even know what these words mean. I see it too when I teach the early American course--the actual writings of "the Founding fathers" surprise them--especially Thomas Paine's writrings on religion. They've been told in High School (?) what's in these texts but haven't examined them themselves.

This semester, I'm teaching American Poetry 1950-1965 for Sophomores. When the news of Ginsberg's health first came through last Friday, I was preparing notes for a class discussion of O'Hara's _Lunch Poems_. We closed with the last poem, "Fantasy" (dedicated to the health of Allen Ginsberg).

Over the weekend the announcement of Ginsberg's death came over the list, and on the news. This week's class included a discussion of the Will column (which several of my students had seen) and the responses here on this list (which I brought in--a few I even posted to the web page I set up for the class).

This course is listed as "Literature and Society" so I've had plenty of opportunity to discuss the late fifties/early sixties era in the class. Mark Weiss is correct when he points out how this era has been rewritten. But it isn't just the 60s.

Dean

↑ Index

326. Piombino/Simon

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle

Sat 12 Apr 1997

At the risk of stating the obvious, perhaps some of our concerns about Wills' obit grow out of a feeling of becoming worried not only about the loss of a very important poet, but also a great leader. AG used his literary notoriety extremely effectively for excellent causes. Like many other poets and artists he stood up non-violently against the Government's war in Vietnam. Today's media avoids the process of creating revolutionary figures like Ginsberg. We are grieving, in this cruel April of a Nazional Poetry Month, not only the loss of a great poet ,but one of the last of the media revolutionaries that helped save this country from disaster. I think this is sad also because a heavier responsibility falls on us survivors. The most astounding thing about AG is that he insisted on making all this look like fun!

Best wishes,

Nick

↑ Index

327. Sylvester Pollet

Hale-Bopp Forward

Sat 12 Apr 1997

This one just arrived via my Harbormaster, so I'm sure it's legit. Sylvester

Date: Sat, 12 Apr 1997 17:46:29 -0400
To: [redacted]
From: John P Blake <[redacted]>
Subject: Fwd: DELAYED MESSAGE

> Date: Sat, 12 Apr 1997 07:09:40 -0400 (EDT)
> From: [redacted]

> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Fwd: DELAYED MESSAGE
>
> ---------- Forwarded message:
> Subj: Fwd: DELAYED MESSAGE
> Date: 97-04-11 15:59:01 EDT
> From: DaTravron
> To: ALMDEW,Sco4star,Tupple
> To: [redacted]
>
> ---------- Forwarded message:
> From: [redacted]
> To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted]
> Date: 97-04-11 07:46:02 EDT
>
> _____ Forward Header _____
> Subject: DELAYED MESSAGE
> Author: [redacted] (Boucher_Peter) at internet
> Date: 4/10/97 1:14 PM
>
> > From: The Supreme Commander, Next Level (i.e., Big Giant Head) > > To: Heaven's Gate Personnel
> >
> > Due to extensive tail winds caused by the comet HALE-BOPP, the pickup of the 39 passengers has been delayed until the year 2224 when we pass by the planet Earth again.
> >
> > DO NOT EAT THE PUDDING AT THIS TIME
> > - repeat-
> >
> > DO NOT EAT THE PUDDING ...

John P Blake
[redacted]

↑ Index

328. henry gould
GWAG
Sat 12 Apr 1997

It's easy now to look back with historical hindsight & conflate or deflate the Gap between Bob Dylan & Allen Ginsberg on the cybernet revolution front. But no one has been able to deny the pivotal importance of Dan Bouchard's post of early april 1997 in which he wrote, "fuck you George Will". The repercussions have been endless, the ramifications proliferate dissertationly in a dizzying pyrotechnic of etc. Dan, did you mean by this - I mean, were you conscious when you put on those overalls so to speak - of the immense sea-change about to take place? I think you were. I want to tell a personal anecdote about Dan: this must have been in about 2004 - he was confronted by a pack of nouveau-zelot-heads with microphones - & he EMPATHIZED with thier CONCERNS - I KNOW he THOUGHT TWICE before he lifted that pack of million-yen contributions & tossed it into the Yangtzee. Henry Gould, (remember him?), before he died in that fatal sewing accident (those needles...) in 1999, often said - in those quaint little Spandrift posts of his - "Dan's o.k. He'll make a good Chairman, whatever they say." No one can obligerate the truth of that modest observation, at least at this late hour, not by any means (or ends, for that matter). Shantih shantih shantih - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

329. Dave Zauhar
Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
Sat 12 Apr 1997

> *speaking of sports, i took in When We Were Kings this past week. it's got some fun poetry in it, and reminded me of when i was a little girl and the Clay/Liston fight was gonna be on. (it was memorable to me cuz we didn't have a tv, but we were at a ski lodge for a week and the ski lodge had a tv, so everything on tv that week sticks in my mind). the newscasters kept reading a poem clay had written for the occasion and i adored it. can anybody post that poem here? free copies of my book and the new cross-cultural poetix to the person who obliges.--md*

Damn. I can only recall another classic from the Ali oeuvre:

I'll say it again
I've said it before
Archie Moore'll
go down in four

I doubt if that even qualifies me for an offprint of a journal article.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

330. David Bromige
Reading backwards
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Louis, the Hall Pack Simpson anthology _New Poets of England & America_ came out in 1958, preceding the Allen by nearly two years. There may have been a later edition, post - Allen, that incl. one or 2 of the Allen poets - Creeley? But HPS were there firstest, though not with the mostest. Frost did the intro, all the poets were under 40 (they'll be under 80, today), & they wrote like, well, like Ur-Neo-Formalists. Some handful went on to fame and considerable fortune. Kingsley Amis, Robert Bly, Donald Davie, Thom Gunn, Hall himself, Anthony Hecht, Geoffrey Hill, John Hollander, Elizabeth Jennings, Donald Justice, Philip Larkin, Robert Lowell, James Merrill, W.S.Merwin, Howard Nemerov, Adrienne Cecile Rich, Jon Silkin, W.Dewitt Snodgrass,May Swenson, Reed Whittemore, Richard Wilbur and James Wright, names to conjure with & not any list of mere retrenchers.

It was remarkable to those of us just entering the scene to have 2 anthologies purporting to present the best of current american poetry coming out, with not one poet in both books. These days, of course, we are accustomed to such divisions.

Hope this helps, Louis. db

↑ Index

331. Thomas Bell
ginsberg and snyder
Sat 12 Apr 1997

>Gary Snyder lectured and read here in Freeport, Illinois tonight. It
...
KENT JOHNSON wrote.

Does using adjacent urinals in two different states at two times 25 years apart count as a reverent or irreverent memory? Or is this sexist or too personal?
tom bell

GS and i - not to implicate others.

↑ Index

332. Thomas Bell
(no subject)
Sat 12 Apr 1997

Maria Damon wrote
>At 6:09 PM -0400 4/11/97, [redacted] wrote:
>etc

> i agree. the focus has become what an asshole george will is, rather than anything abt ginsberg. will's shortcomings are not exceptional and don't warrant much time and energy. why waste time on his mean-spirited nonsense?

as do i.

AG was responsible for my family. My wife correctly identified him in a multiple-choice come on letter sent when he gave a reading in the mid seventies. (He was in a temporary eclipse as a "commodity" and too few of the students at that time had any idea who he was, had been, and would be).

AG range/renga impulse unsquandering infinite egrets he

tom bell

↑ Index

333. Stephen Vincent
Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
Sun 13 Apr 1997

A guess: Was it the one with alliterative off-rhymes - front and back ("float/sting" & "butterfly/bee")

"float like a butterfly,
sting like a bee"

??

Cheers,

Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

334. MAXINE CHERNOFF
History Is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Speaking of history being rewritten, I shuddered a few years ago that my daughter's brand new history book (jr high level) had as much information on Grenada (2 paragraphs) as it did on the Viet Nam War. And try to find a single text for kids taught in the regular curriculum that even mentions the American Labor Movement. So no wonder that when they arrive in college, they are maybe aware of Allen G as MTV celeb instead of fine poet and political activist. My solution at home: tell my kids about alternate history, take them to events that proliferate the truth about American political policy, etc.

It's an odd consciousness reflected in those books as well, very inconsistent. My younger sons are now being taught about Japanese internment camps, slave rebellions before the Civil War, etc., (younger kids and newer book still) but no change in the omissions cited above.

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

335. Tom Mandel

George may choose

Sun 13 Apr 1997

I'd been unable to read the list for about 3 weeks (swamped) when Allen died and I began to stick my nose in again to the daily digest. I missed, but someone has mentioned to me, Pat Pritchett suggesting that I punch George Will in the nose. Using, apparently, the pop I'd put aside for poor Ed Dorn's snoot were he to say bad things to me (he hasn't -- rest easy).

I'll get to George in a moment.

I think the outpouring of sentiment about AG was wonderful. I first encountered him when, a just-teen unfledged poet, I attended the now-famous (and then-fabulous) Big Table reading in Chicago. He had such a dark and liquid voice alive. He was poetry incarnate, how could anyone ever doubt him a poet? What an idea!

Odd, however, is the debate about his status as "a millionaire." His image on a GAP ad. I haven't seen much of this debate, but it seems pathetic to me. Actually, I'd heard that Allen was dismayed to be offered one mil only for his papers. I kind of agree. I think the library that bought them got a hell of a deal. That is, they'll be worth a lot more to the institution.

As to AG associating himself with a corporation "utterly complicit" in Asian child labor, so does everyone on this list whether knowingly or not. If virtually every pair of sneakers available comes from that context, is virtue defined by going shoeless? And should that be Allen shoeless, or you. How'd the coffee bean get in your cup -- picked by union labor?

The question is whether you work against what you think is objectionable. I don't know how Allen Ginsberg could have worked harder to fight the ugliness that has risen and risen in our time.

Speaking of "ugliness... risen in our time" -- I think it would only be fair to give George Will his choice of weapons. George, my second Pat Pritchett will be in touch with your second.

Should George choose pistols, I'll insist on cap. Should he choose wit, I'll ask David Bromige to represent me.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

336. linda v. russo
Will/[my]reply
Sun 13 Apr 1997

"Speaking of this image/commodity thing, there's a passage from [Bill Knott] that seems to connect, though I'm baffled as to precisely how. That would be the point, I guess. How to read this? It makes me jealous: I wish I would have thought of it for my death poem.

> ["Going to sleep, I cross my hands on my chest.
> They will place my hands like this.
> It will look as though I'm flying into myself."]

[--l.]
--

linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

337. linda v. russo
Re: The Don Allan Apology
Sun 13 Apr 1997

---

actually -- i thought it would make my reply sound too much like a victorian pornographic novel.

db wrote:
> I even suggested she post in to "Mr.Bromide and Mr.Boring" > thanking them for their "correction". She was too nice to do so . .

--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

338. George Free
Anne Waldman's AG poem
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Subscribers to this list may be interested to know that Anne Waldman's poem "Notes on Sitting Beside a Noble Corpse" is posted at http://members.aol.com/mongobear/private/Ginsberg/Waldman.html

George Free

↑ Index

339. Maria Damon
Re: Ginsberg
Sun 13 Apr 1997

At 7:57 PM +0600 4/12/97, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>> Date sent: Sat, 12 Apr 1997 09:24:38 -0500
>> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group
>><[redacted]>
>> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>> Subject: Re: Ginsberg
>> To: [redacted]
>
>> At 1:57 PM -0700 4/11/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote, quoting kent johnson:

>> >
>> >Dale, I'll say this: I would like, when I say >> >>something on this list, to impress, to have people think: "Boy, that >> >>Kent Johnson sounds really interesting, I wonder what he is really >> >>like.." Wishful thinking, I'm sure, but I would like my posts to >> >>contribute, little by little, to >> >>a great poetry job somewhere, or to being invited to the party I never >> >>get invited to, to having an even modest cultural status I >> >>haven't yet had, to be thought of as a list insider who is known to >> >>be an insider by those who aren't. There, I said it! (And why, >> >>exactly, does it mildly
>> >>startle every single one of you who just read this that I said this?)
>>
>>
>> why wd this startle? it falls well within the continuum of normal human >> cerebration. what startles is the ungrounded assumption that i am >> startled...
>
>Well, then, so it startled, right?
>
>Kent

nah...

↑ Index

340. Maria Damon

Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali

Sun 13 Apr 1997

At 8:35 PM -0500 4/12/97, Dave Zauhar wrote:
>>speaking of sports, i took in When We Were Kings this past week. it's got >>some fun poetry in it, and reminded me of when i was a little girl and the >>Clay/Liston fight was gonna be on. (it was memorable to me cuz we didn't >>have a tv, but we were at a ski lodge for a week and the ski lodge had a >>tv, so everything on tv that week sticks in my mind). the newscasters kept >>reading a poem clay had written for the occasion and i adored it. can >>anybody post that poem here? free copies of my book and the new >>cross-cultural poetix to the person who obliges.--md
>
>Damn. I can only recall another classic from the Ali oeuvre:
>
>I'll say it again
>I've said it before

>Archie Moore'll
>go down in four
>
>I doubt if that even qualifies me for an offprint of a journal article.
>
>Dave Zauhar

dave, i'll send u an off print of an article on gertrude stein and jewish social science, if you send your snail mail address. just what you've always wanted, n'est-ce pas?

↑ Index

341. Maria Damon
Re: History Is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

---

howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs students, but very readable and an eye-opener.

At 2:48 AM -0700 4/13/97, MAXINE CHERNOFF wrote:
>Speaking of history being rewritten, I shuddered a few years ago that my >daughter's brand new history book (jr high level) had as much information >on Grenada (2 paragraphs) as it did on the Viet Nam War. And try to find >a single text for kids taught in the regular curriculum that even mentions >the American Labor Movement. So no wonder that when they arrive in >college, they are maybe aware of Allen G as MTV celeb instead of fine poet >and political activist. My solution at home: tell my kids about alternate >history, take them to events that proliferate the truth about American >political policy, etc.
>
>It's an odd consciousness reflected in those books as well, very >inconsistent. My younger sons are now being taught about Japanese >internment camps, slave rebellions before the Civil War, etc., (younger >kids and newer book still) but no change in the omissions cited above.
>
>Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

342. Maria Damon
Re: George may choose
Sun 13 Apr 1997

tom mandel, this is a terrific post, amen all around, i like your spirit. i toast you with my organic cooperatively harvested altura coffee (a poor substitute for peet's but one of the consequences of my midwestern exile).

At 7:22 AM -0500 4/13/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
>I'd been unable to read the list for about 3 weeks (swamped) when Allen >died and I began to stick my nose in again to the daily digest. I missed, but >someone has mentioned to me, Pat Pritchett suggesting that I punch George Will >in the nose. Using, apparently, the pop I'd put aside for poor Ed Dorn's snoot >were he to say bad things to me (he hasn't -- rest easy).
>
>I'll get to George in a moment.
>
>I think the outpouring of sentiment about AG was wonderful. I first >encountered >him when, a just-teen unfledged poet, I attended the now-famous (and >then-fabulous)
>Big Table reading in Chicago. He had such a dark and liquid voice alive. He >was >poetry incarnate, how could anyone ever doubt him a poet? What an idea!
>
>Odd, however, is the debate about his status as "a millionaire." His image >on a GAP
>ad. I haven't seen much of this debate, but it seems pathetic to me.
>Actually, I'd >heard that Allen was dismayed to be offered one mil only for his papers. I >kind of >agree. I think the library that bought them got a hell of a deal. That is, >they'll >be worth a lot more to the institution.
>
>As to AG associating himself with a corporation "utterly complicit" in >Asian child >labor, so does everyone on this list whether knowingly or not. If virtually >every >pair of sneakers available comes from that context, is virtue defined by >going shoeless? And should that be Allen shoeless, or you. How'd the coffee >bean

>get in your cup -- picked by union labor?
>
>The question is whether you work against what you think is objectionable. I >don't know how Allen Ginsberg could have worked harder to fight the ugliness >that has risen and risen in our time.
>
>Speaking of "ugliness... risen in our time" -- I think it would only be fair >to give George Will his choice of weapons. George, my second Pat Pritchett >will be in touch with your second.
>
>Should George choose pistols, I'll insist on cap. Should he choose wit, I'll >ask David Bromige to represent me.
>
>Tom Mandel
>
>
>
>
>Tom Mandel [redacted]
>*******
>Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
>4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
>Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
>*******
> Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

343. Bobbie West
Re: History is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Maria Damon wrote:

> howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs students, but very readable and an eye-opener.

There's also _Labor's Untold Story_ by Richard O. Boyer and Herbert M. Morais, (published by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, New York, 1965) though I don't know if it's still in print.

Bobbie West

↑ Index

344. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: History is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

in a recent post (i forgot who) someone stated that young people seem interested/more interested in labor issues communism etc . . . and i think that although i am somewhat concerned at the willful forgetfulness of younger generations about critical histories--feminism in particular--i think its great that individuals are attempting to bring a more radical edge to the mainstream: watching rage against the machine on mtv the other day i saw a new video about mexican/migrant workers that was very in your face. not that i like everything they do/say but i admire their efforts to educate/entertain.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

345. Keith Norris
Re: ali
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Maria Damon,

--these three Ali poems turned up in a brief web search--none specifically attached to either of the Liston fights, though.

Got _Dark End..._ already--other books and articles I haven't read threaten my already iffy "normal human cerebration" at this late date in dissertation. If this earns a prize, send only in August after I've defended. I think I'll go worry about the tone of this mail and how it impacts my future now...

Cheers,
Keith

#1
It all started twenty years past,
The greatest of them was born at last.
The very first words from his Louisville lips,
"I'm pretty as a picture, and there's no one I can't whip."

#2
Joe's gonna come out smokin',
And I ain't gonna be joking',
I'll be peckin and pokin'.
Pourin' water on his smokin'.
This might shock and amaze ya,
But I'll retire Joe Frazier!

#3
This is the story about a man
With iron fists and a beautiful tan
He talks a lot indeed
Of a powerful punch and blinding speed.

The boxing game was slowly dying,
And fight promoters were bitterly crying
For someone, somewhere, to come along
With a better and a different tone.

Cheers,

Keith

-=-=-=-=-=

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Department PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933
[redacted]

↑ Index

346. amato
reading list...
Sun 13 Apr 1997

---

well it's spring anyway (despite the weather we've been having here in the mid-west), so it's as good a time as any to note some books recently rec'd, by poetics list members (you're all such a prolific lot!), all of which i've only dipped into thus far and all of which look to be well-worth the price of admission:

first, to second patrick's acclaim, aldon nielsen's _stepping razor_...

doug barbour's _story for a saskatchewan night_...

mark scroggin's (ed) _upper limit music_...

aldon nielsen's (slow down will ya?!) _black chant_...

marjorie perloff's _wittgenstein's ladder_...

linda russo's _constellation voice_...

bob perelman's _the marginalization of poetry_...

walter lew's (ed) _premonitions_...

pierre joris's translation of celan's _breathturn_...

& not from this list region (i think!):

joseph duemer's _static_...

johanna drucker's _the visible word_...

carolyn heilbrun's bio, _the education of a woman: the life of gloria steinem_...

finally, i finally picked up my own copy of whitman's _specimen days & collect_, and am browsing through (whitman is always stimulating reading for me)...

anyway, whew!... you guyz & galz are incredible!...

///

joe

↑ Index

347. Louis Cabri
Re: AG & the columnists
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Hank, I agree

The newspaper obit you mention -- the "personality-not-a-poet" line -- don't you think that argument was structured into initial reception of "New American W" itself -- both the 1960 anthology & the moment those poets occupied in so timely a way, AG included? I think it's clearly there in Robert Pack's intro to his edited section of New Poets from England and America--the retrenchment response (1962?) to the Allen antho. If you get media attention and use the media as AG did, then you are automatically disqualified as a poet. It's an argument that ironically for the newspaper journalist puts poetry back into a gown, no longer in the town, where it can be equally scorned by an identical sort of reporter as decorative timelessness much like Wedgewood.

Reading backwards through the last week's post,
Louis

↑ Index

348. Gwyn McVay
Re: The Don Allan Apology
Sun 13 Apr 1997

More like something Frank O'Hara's old roommate Edward Gorey would illustrate.

On Sun, 13 Apr 1997, linda v. russo wrote:

> actually -- i thought it would make my reply sound too much like a victorian pornographic novel.

> db wrote:
> I even suggested she post in to "Mr.Bromide and Mr.Boring"
> thanking them for their "correction". She was too nice to do so . .
>
> --
> linda v. russo
> [redacted]

↑ Index

349. Herb Levy
Re: John Barton Wolgamot
Sun 13 Apr 1997

I only know of the Robert Ashley piece "In Sara, Mencken, Christ and Beethoven There Were Men and Women", in which Ashley intones a text by Wolgamot against electronic sounds designed by Ashley & Paul DeMarinis. Pardon my ignorance, but what else did Wolgamot do?

> What ever happened to JBW? To the JBW Society?
>
> Alan

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

350. Dave Zauhar
Re: History is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

> Maria Damon wrote:
>
> howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs students, but very readable and an eye-opener.
>
> There's also _Labor's Untold Story_ by Richard O. Boyer and Herbert M. Morais, (published by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America, New York, 1965) though I don't know if it's still in print.
>
> Bobbie West

Lies My Teacher Told Me would probably be accessible to most highschool kids, so that might be another good place to start.

DZ

↑ Index

351. Mark Weiss
Re: History Is Rewritten
Sun 13 Apr 1997

It's all a matter of point of view, Maxine. Think of the unimaginable consequences had we lost the war in Grenada.

At 02:48 AM 4/13/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Speaking of history being rewritten, I shuddered a few years ago that my >daughter's brand new history book (jr high level) had as much information >on Grenada (2 paragraphs) as it did on the Viet Nam War. And try to find >a single text for kids taught in the regular curriculum that even mentions
>the American Labor Movement. So no wonder that when they arrive in >college, they are maybe aware of Allen G as MTV celeb instead of fine poet >and political activist. My solution at home: tell my kids about alternate >history, take them to events that proliferate the truth about American >political policy, etc.
>
>It's an odd consciousness reflected in those books as well, very >inconsistent. My younger sons are now being taught about Japanese >internment camps, slave rebellions before the Civil War, etc., (younger >kids and newer book still) but no change in the omissions cited above.
>
>Maxine Chernoff
>
>

↑ Index

352. cris cheek
Election news
Sun 13 Apr 1997

For those with an interest in the choice facing the current electorate in the UK, note that tens of thousands of mostly (but by no means all) younger people marched in London yesterday.

Most prominent of the banners were those reading

FUCK MIDDLE ENGLAND
FUCK THE ELECTION
TONY BLAIR WE ARE YOUR WORST NIGHTMARE

one favorite wore a red vest
reading 'Legal Observer'

gives me some slight hope

love and love
cris

↑ Index

353. Steve Carll
Change of Address
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Whereas hitherto, the postal address for Steve Carll, Antenym magazine, and Bathysphere Press were 106 Fair Oaks St. #3, San Francisco, CA 94110-2951

Henceforward, said postal address shall be 106 Fair Oaks St. #1. All other loci remain the same (relatively speaking).

Thank you.

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

354. Maria Damon
Re: ali
Sun 13 Apr 1997

---

keith, these are all charming but not "THE" poem. don't worry abt tone. career still intact. i won't burden you w/ reprints; i understand perfectly.

At 3:51 PM -0500 4/13/97, Keith Norris wrote:
>Maria Damon,
>

>--these three Ali poems turned up in a brief web search--none specifically >attached to either of the Liston fights, though.
>
>Got _Dark End..._ already--other books and articles I haven't read >threaten my already iffy "normal human cerebration" at this late date in >dissertation. If this earns a prize, send only in August after I've >defended. I think I'll go worry about the tone of this mail and how it >impacts my future now...
>
>Cheers,
>Keith
>
>#1
>It all started twenty years past,
>The greatest of them was born at last.
>The very first words from his Louisville lips,
>"I'm pretty as a picture, and there's no one I can't whip."
>
>#2
>Joe's gonna come out smokin',
>And I ain't gonna be joking',
>I'll be peckin and pokin'.
>Pourin' water on his smokin'.
>This might shock and amaze ya,
>But I'll retire Joe Frazier!
>
>#3
>This is the story about a man
>With iron fists and a beautiful tan
>He talks a lot indeed
>Of a powerful punch and blinding speed.
>
>The boxing game was slowly dying,
>And fight promoters were bitterly crying
>For someone, somewhere, to come along
>With a better and a different tone.
>
>Cheers,
>
>Keith
>
>-=-=-=-=-=

>
>Keith Norris | [redacted]
>English Department PSTCC
>Knoxville, TN 37933
>[redacted]

↑ Index

355. KENT JOHNSON
Re: yo marjorie!
Sun 13 Apr 1997

Hi Maria:

[redacted]

Kent

> Date sent: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 07:41:20 -0500
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: yo marjorie!
> To: [redacted]
>
> does anyone have perloff's e-mail address? i tried to respond to a personal msg and it got bounced back. very puzzled, md

↑ Index

356. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: John Barton Wolgamot
Sun 13 Apr 1997

He wrote a long piece, of which that was a line or the title - I forget - an amazing poem decades ago, Keith Waldrop was a member of the Society, and I joined - one had to reference him out of context...

And I wondered if anyone else had come across his writing.

Alan

On Sun, 13 Apr 1997, Herb Levy wrote:

> I only know of the Robert Ashley piece "In Sara, Mencken, Christ and Beethoven There Were Men and Women", in which Ashley intones a text by Wolgamot against electronic sounds designed by Ashley & Paul DeMarinis. Pardon my ignorance, but what else did Wolgamot do?
>
> What ever happened to JBW? To the JBW Society?

> Alan
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/index.html TELEPHONE [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, USA, 11217 Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

357. KENT JOHNSON

Re: yo marjorie!

Sun 13 Apr 1997

Sorry. Had meant to post the message to Maria Damon back-channel.

> Priority: normal
> Date sent: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 08:01:40 +0600
> Send reply to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: KENT JOHNSON <[redacted]> > Organization: Highland Community College
> Subject: Re: yo marjorie!
To: [redacted]

↑ Index

358. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle

Sun 13 Apr 1997

At 10:08 AM 4/14/97, [redacted] wrote:
>At 12:02 PM -0400 4/14/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>>My concern is: how >>will we move out of a position of passivity today? Especially >>without Allen Ginsberg to lead.
>
>This totalizing "we" is problematic to me. Personally, Ginsberg never lead >me anywhere (even though I had a poster of him on my bedroom wall when I >was in high school)--and I think his influence is marginal to large >"marginal" populations. As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of >white guys (and a few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but >other people have embodied that for other groups and will continue to.

>
>Dodie

hi dodie, i certainly see your point and have no desire to add to the sense of totalizing. ag did mean a lot to me, but i'm certainly aware that he didn't have that significance for others.... xo, md

↑ Index

359. michael corbin
Re: History is Rewritten
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Dave Zauhar wrote:

> _Lies My Teacher Told Me_ would probably be accessible to most highschool kids, so that might be another good place to start.

A nice text for secondary ed and beyond is the _Who Built America? Working People & The Nation's Economy, Politics, Culture & Society_ in two volumes from the American Social History Project at CUNY. The founder of the project is Herbert Gutman. The 'text' can also be had on CD with lots of pedegogically provocative pictures, songs etc. for the multi-media prepared computer.

I've used this in teaching literacy classes because of its explicit historical/political editorial commitments and general accessibility.

mc

↑ Index

360. Chris Stroffolino
So How did The Weiners I mean Wieners event go?
Mon 14 Apr 1997

In philadelphia, I mean.....chris stroffolino

↑ Index

361. George Bowering
Re: The Don Allan Anthology
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

my whole take on the misspelling of Allen's name was not just to do with carelessness; it was also to do with respect.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

362. George Bowering
Re: foundling fathers
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> I see it too
> when I teach the early American course--the actual writings of "the Founding fathers" surprise them--especially Thomas Paine's writrings on religion. They've been told in High School (?) what's in these texts but haven't examined them themselves.

Yeah, this semestr I did that with the declaration of Independence, and enjoyed the complaint against george III for being nice to the bloodthirsty savages.

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

363. George Bowering
Re: ginsberg and snyder
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> Does using adjacent urinals in two different states

Where is that possible?

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

364. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

actually, i didn't think you were suggesting i was. i just wanted to be sure you knew that you had my sympathies. xo, md

At 12:59 PM 4/14/97, [redacted] wrote:
>At 1:53 PM +1000 4/14/97, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
>>hi dodie, i certainly see your point and have no desire to add to the sense >>of totalizing.
>
>Maria, I wasn't suggesting you were. You of all people would be sensitive >about NOT doing this.
>
>Dodie

↑ Index

365. Pierre Joris
Re: Reading backwards
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> On this subject _A Contoversy of Poets_, edited by Robt Kelly and I forget > whoall, was an attempt either to bridge the gap or to mark the boundaries.
> As I remember, Kelly chose the poets from the establishment side, his > conventional poet coeditor chose the poets I like to read.

T'was the other way around, Mark, unless Mac Low, Blackburn, Blaser, Dorn, Enslin, Leroi Jones, Gerrit Lansing, Levertov, Olson, Oppenheimer, Rochelle Owens, Rothenberg, Zukofsky are the establishment poets, while Peter Burr, Peter Davison, Donal Finkel, Anthony Hecht, Daniel Hoffman, Galway Kinnell, XJ Kennedy, Laurence Lieberman, Robert Pack, WD Snodgrass, Robert Sward etc. are the poets you like to read.

Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]

http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

366. Mark Weiss
Re: Reading backwards
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On this subject _A Contoversy of Poets_, edited by Robt Kelly and I forget whoall, was an attempt either to bridge the gap or to mark the boundaries. As I remember, Kelly chose the poets from the establishment side, his conventional poet coeditor chose the poets I like to read. It's a half-interesting book.

At 10:02 PM 4/12/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Louis, the Hall Pack Simpson anthology _New Poets of England & America_ >came out in 1958, preceding the Allen by nearly two years. There may have >been a later edition, post - Allen, that incl. one or 2 of the Allen >poets - Creeley? But HPS were there firstest, though not with the mostest.
>Frost did the intro, all the poets were under 40 (they'll be under 80, >today), & they wrote like, well, like Ur-Neo-Formalists. Some handful went >on to fame and considerable fortune. Kingsley Amis, Robert Bly, Donald >Davie, Thom Gunn, Hall himself, Anthony Hecht, Geoffrey Hill, John >Hollander, Elizabeth Jennings, Donald Justice, Philip Larkin, Robert >Lowell, James Merrill, W.S.Merwin, Howard Nemerov, Adrienne Cecile Rich, >Jon Silkin, W.Dewitt Snodgrass,May Swenson, Reed Whittemore, Richard Wilbur
>and James Wright, names to conjure with & not any list of mere retrenchers.
>
>
>It was remarkable to those of us just entering the scene to have 2 >anthologies purporting to present the best of current american poetry >coming out, with not one poet in both books. These days, of course, we are >accustomed to such divisions.
>
>Hope this helps, Louis. db

>
>

↑ Index

367. Dale Smith
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> We are grieving, in this cruel April > of a Nazional Poetry Month, not only the loss of a great poet ,but one of > the last of the media revolutionaries that helped save this country from > disaster.

What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.

↑ Index

368. Dale Smith
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Daniel Bouchard-

If you read my posts you will notice that I did not address you. I addressed several "fuck-you" posts from the list.

Mabe you should go back and reread those posts before you begin accusing me of being symathetic with Gearge Will. Yours is a very fascist response, cruel and totalizing in an attempt to voice a pathetic and deluded sense of frustration at my Will/Ginsberg comments. In the future I suggest a LITTLE forethought and attention in your replies.

> "America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
> --Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
>
> "America, I'm not sorry."
> --same guy
>
> Dales,
>
> I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
> is "stupid and irresponsible."
>
> I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
> "confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."

> If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the Poetics list.
>
> If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it was "behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the opportunity to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may or may not use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of sneering condescension he emits.
>
> You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were they Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural and economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course with George F. Will?
>
> You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating ourselves only with warm platitudes."
>
> Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be reasonable because it only makes me more angry.
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

369. Michael Boughn

Re: History is Rewritten

Mon 14 Apr 1997

> in a recent post (i forgot who) someone stated that young people seem interested/more interested in labor issues communism etc . . . and i think that although i am somewhat concerned at the willful forgetfulness of younger generations about critical histories--feminism in particular--i think its great that individuals are attempting to bring a more radical edge to the mainstream

I don't quite follow this thread. Have "the schools" ever provided information to students about the labour movement, radical political movements, feminism, vegetarianism, spitritualism? Certainly not in my experience (50s and 60s). The closest we ever got was one class in the 9th grade that mentioned the merging of the AFL and the CIO. Like sex and drugs, you've always had to find out about that stuff on your own, haven't you? Unless you grew up in a family where it was part of your family values.

Where it seems to me to get really dicey is in the open rewriting of events like the Viet Nam war. I remember in the early 80's reading in a high school text book in Santa Cruz, California, that the war was "started" by an unprovoked attack by North Viet Namese on American ships in the Gulf of Tonkin. And that the heroic American resistance was led by Paul Bunyan and his blue ox, Babe.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

370. Dale Smith
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

I do apologize for the fascist remark. But I don't use that word lightly, as you, Gould, suggest. As you so adroitly suggest, there are many definitions to the word. What we have at times on this list is more like a high school gang of creeps posturing and screaming at one another. I was under the impression that this list was open to dialogue and conversation. Not totalitarian exegesis (Bouchard) slandering the intentions of those who post critical comments to the list. I didn't realize there's no space for dissenting opinions.

> On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 10:09:39 +0100 Dale Smith said:
> Yours is a very fascist response,
> cruel and totalizing in an attempt to voice a pathetic and deluded sense of frustration at my Will/Ginsberg comments. In the future I suggest a LITTLE forethought and attention in your replies.
>
> I say old boy, you might consult the 1846 OED on the term "fascist" - this is entry #37: FASCIST(adj.): one who accuses others of "fascism" in a blithe, freewheeling, & fithergildering manner.
>
> In future I suggest a MITE more philological research on your part before slanging the noodle quite so scriptoshedly! Those who live in gashouses, as they say, should [f-rt] advisedly!
> - Eric Blarnes
>
> "As for 'f--king' - our servants will say that for us."
> - Lord Allen Gridberg, 1st Earl of Chongebongalay
>
> p.s. Lord Allen's Solicitor, Reginald Stubbs, has noted in Black's Law Digest for April 1897, that the use of the words "f-k" or "f-t" or their linguistic derivatives by members of the ruling class is protected under the Imperial Dominoes & Speech Act of Her Majesty Queen Vicky of 1854. Just so you know.

↑ Index

371. Christine Palma

Re: media coverage for the arts(long reply)

Mon 14 Apr 1997

Herb Levy wrote:

> When I hear a recording by someone I'm interested in on almost ANY radio station, NPR or otherwise, I assume that the artist has died, 'cause otherwise the work w0uldn't be on the air.

I've been an evesdropper on this list for about 8 months or so, and I feel compelled to chime in and also to introduce myself... Herb Levy's comment touches close to home.

When I finished up my undergraduate degree in English almost three years ago, I felt a big void in my education. I felt that I'd been introduced to work, poetry and fiction, representative of what is academically "embraced" and that the bulk of what I had studied for the past four years was not contemporary work. I am saying this even though I understand that a big goal of the curriculum in English depts. is to give students an historical grounding of literature. I would never trade in this education. But still, I questioned the relevance of what I'd been told to read. I felt that the contemporary work I'd become acquainted with through my classes was not "dangerous writing" and I felt that that the selection of work took on an academic cast because there was such a narrow selection of writers. Somehow when I looked at my bookshelf and the bookshelves of other English majors at other colleges, I saw the same books, books that were supposed to be on the bleeding edge of creative writing. How could we all be reading the same books? Could they really be that alternative or different or more importantly "contemporary," if most universities were teaching the same authors. I wondered how a silent consensus could have formed about who the important writers of today are. Isn't a canon of contemporary writers a contradiction. It would be easy for an aspiring writer or a reader who aspires to understand the tone of contemporary writing to just accept these people and look to them as the thematic (moral) and styllistic voice of our time. What's worse is to accept the opposite condition of this, that perhaps it's very difficult today to stumble upon a relevant writer who enjoys obscurity as a result of work that breaks so radically from what's taught in the university system, or worse still, that it's impossible because they don't exist.

I felt estranged from what I'd just gotten a degree in. This bothered me enough that I decided I would produce and host a radio show about poetry, literary fiction and performance and fill in the gap. The format is open, but usually the guests read their work for the bulk of the program and the discussion is on the climate of creative writing and not on an analysis of the particular pieces they've just read. The best part for me is that good writers recommend good writers and are so excited to share them. Also coming across people with interesting work, but who don't have any immediate aspirations to publish, ie. closet writers. I feel as though I can now make the connection between what I've gotten academically with the diversity of what I've encountered. And I can now be thankful for the survey classes and Norton Anthology for giving me a body of work to relate it to.

I've also made it a point to educate myself on what the media coverage for the arts is like. I'm in Los Angeles so I can only speak for Los Angeles. I think the climate has changed in the past few years and that arts and literary programs broadcasting to Los Angeles are breaking out of the after-midnight airtime ghetto. For the first year, I had an 11 PM to 2 AM weekly timeslot. Now I am on at 8 PM. At other public stations, we had Wanda Coleman at KPFK doing Poetry Connection also at 8 PM. KCRW out of Santa Monica College has Michael Silverblatt hosting Bookworm during the day! 2 PM. KCRW has also made the full broadcasts of his shows available for download at their website (www.kcrw.org) and the sound quality is fine.

I think there is a growing public demand for arts programming and an awareness of the radio's and internet's potential to meet that. Part of this is due to independent publishing houses putting out spoken word releases and these getting into Virgin Megastore and the like. A small non-profit experimental audio group in New York called Tellus/Harvestworks which puts out recordings like those of Paul Bowles and John Cage and Shelley Hirsh is now at my local record store.

The internet will certainly improve public access... it's convenient. I don't know how long this particular list has been around, but I sure would have welcomed it five years ago. A radio show, an e-mail list, streaming audio, they can do wonders.

Christine

_____
christine palma
[redacted]

samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrian's rights, sleep depriviation high, the moon . . .

↑ Index

372. Maria Damon
yo marjorie!
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

does anyone have perloff's e-mail address? i tried to respond to a personal msg and it got bounced back. very puzzled, md

↑ Index

373. Maria Damon
Re: The poetry of Muhammad Ali
Mon 14 Apr 1997

At 12:29 AM -0400 4/13/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
>A guess: Was it the one with alliterative off-rhymes - front and back >("float/sting" & "butterfly/bee")
>
>"float like a butterfly,
>sting like a bee"
>
>??
>
>Cheers,
>
>Stephen Vincent

i don't think so, that was later. nonetheless, if you'd like a copy of XCP, i'll send you one.--md

↑ Index

374. Maria Damon
Re: Change of Address
Mon 14 Apr 1997

LAST CHANCE !!CALL FOR PAPERS!!

Conference: Cross-Cultural Poetics
Dates: October 16-19, 1997
Place: University of Minnesota, Minneapolis Campus
Keynote Speakers: Kamau Brathwaite, Diane Glancy, Dennis Tedlock, Kirin Narayan, David Antin

Despite artificial disciplinary barriers, ethnographers & poets have in recent years come to realize how similar their projects are. Cross-Cultural Poetics seeks to address the increasingly untenable boundaries between poetic & ethnographic practices. The conference will focus on the role of poetry in the on-going discourses of multiculturalism, ethnography, and literary theory and practice. While recent years have seen a debate in "how culture is written (about)" and most of these debates make extensive use of the term "poetics," poetic discourse itself has not been foregrounded in these debates. Construing the term "poetry" fairly broadly, we invite poets and scholars working in a broad range of fields -- anthropology, urban studies, ethnic studies, folklore, literature and literary theory, sociology, history, publishing, film, American studies, performance studies, ethnomusicology, cultural studies, etc. -- to propose readings, papers or panels that address the topic of cross-cultural poetics. the following are suggested topics, but you need not feel limited to them:

- Comparative Poetries &/or Poetic Traditions
- Oral/Literate Interfaces or Standoffs
- Anthropological Methodologies Applied to Poetic Texts, Communities, Events, or Individual Poems or Poets
- Ethnography as Poetry/Poetry as Ethnography
- Ethnic, Folkloric & Vernacular Poetries
- Poetry as Cultural & Social Praxis
- Poetry as Cultural & Social Critique
- Constituting Communities through Poetic Activity
- Poetry as Mass Culture
- Poetry & the Public Sphere
-Poetry and Politics
- The Anthropology of Writing & the Writing of Anthropology
- Representing Self/Other
- Issues in Cultural Translation
- "Ethnopoetics": Reappraisals?
- Poetry & Other Media (Song Lyrics, Music, Film, Movement, Visual Arts, etc.)
- Close Readings of &/or Listenings to Ethnographic Documents
- The Poetics of Thick Description
- Ritual, Play, etc. as Elements in Poetic Composition
- The Act of Inscription: Fieldnotes, Notebooks, etc.
- The Cultural Migration of Texts
- Hybridization of Genres & Traditions
-Trans/post/supra national Poetix?

PAPERS (and Writing Samples for people wanting to read) AND PANEL PROPOSALS (a 1-2-page abstract) should be sent by April 15, 1997 to Maria Damon, English Dept., 207 Lind Hall, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis MN 55455.

↑ Index

375. amato
michael dorris...
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

just heard on npr that michael dorris is dead, evidently from suicide...

can anybody tell me more about this -- how, possibly why, etc.?... what was he doing in new hampshire again?...

///

joe

↑ Index

376. Hank Lazer
Re: foundling fathers
Mon 14 Apr 1997

George--

My eight year old son asked me the other day, "what exactly is the Decoration of Independence?"

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

377. Christopher Alexander
Re: History Is Rewritten
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs students, but very readable and an eye-opener.

yes, this one is definitely worth a peek.
it's worth noting that zinn, who teaches
at boston university, has suffered more than a bit for his political practice. a few years back, president silber (who has now left the univ. for a prominent position
in MA public ed--talk about frightening),
in what is probably the most recent, &
most prominent instance of the university
administration's usually quiet campaign against zinn & the left in general, tried to have him fired when, refusing to cross

the picket line of the then-striking clerical workers, zinn held his classes off campus.

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

378. Christopher Alexander
Re: Triumph and the Will
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> If it cd now be regarded as vitriol-free, I'd like to continue the naming > of contributors to the Don Allan Anthology (or Apology). How abt Jackson > McLow, Michael Mac Lure, Gary Spicer and Jack Snyder? And of course, Jerome > Rothenburg.
I thought it was Jack & Gary Spider, the Spider bros. or was it Jack Spader--father of Famed Hollywood Actor James Spader?

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

379. henry gould
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 09:43:25 +0100 Dale Smith said:
>

>What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic >reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.

By George, a truer word was never said, old boy. I was chatting with Lawn Tennison over a bit of cricket by the hearth just the other p.m. The pocky old bard was bemoaning his beloved Hal, as usual. I said to him, "try some of this, old chap". "What ho, a new port?" says he. "No such thing as a new port," pshawed I. "No, it's a bit of that rawther rambunctious poet, G.M. Hopkins. Wild, wild, wild versical exp- perimentation, I must say. See what you think." The old boy took the volume, but I'm afraid I haven't heard anything more since - believe he doddered off to sleep before having a good look at it. - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

380. Daniel Bouchard
excerpt
Mon 14 Apr 1997

"Fuck is a dirty word
But it comes out clean."

-- Jack Kerouac

↑ Index

381. Piombino/Simon
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

The disaster I was thinking of was the disaster of complicit silence. By taking a stand in the public light, Allen Ginsberg and others helped move many people from a position of passivity to one of also taking a stand, in non-violent acts such a draft-card burning, etc. Your point is well taken from the standpoint of social outcomes, and the current social reality..My concern is: how will we move out of a position of passivity today? Especially without Allen Ginsberg to lead. I feel that this makes his loss especially heavy. Thank you for your clarifying response.On Mon, 14 Apr 1997, Dale Smith wrote:

> We are grieving, in this cruel April
> of a Nazional Poetry Month, not only the loss of a great poet ,but one of the last of the media revolutionaries that helped save this country from disaster.
>
> What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic > reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.

↑ Index

382. Sylvester Pollet
Will's Column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Not to get in the middle of personal name-calling exchanges, but my response to Will's column (which I haven't read & don't intend to seek out) is to let lying dogs sleep. sp

↑ Index

383. Pritchett,Pat
Re: George may choose
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Just call me, "The Man Who Seconded The Second Of The Other Man."

From: Tom Mandel
To: POETICS
Subject: George may choose
Date: Sunday, April 13, 1997 6:45AM

Speaking of "ugliness... risen in our time" -- I think it would only be fair to give George Will his choice of weapons. George, my second Pat Pritchett will be in touch with your second.

Should George choose pistols, I'll insist on cap. Should he choose wit, I'll ask David Bromige to represent me.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

384. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: Planned Parenthood Benefit Reading
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

yes, please. this is a good idea [in case we're taking votes....].

katherine.

> This may seem really obvious of me, but when addresses of events are listed on the list, could the city please be included?
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

385. yuri-g
Re: Lyn Hejinian's address
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Sat, 12 Apr 1997, Jennifer Ashton wrote:

> Would anyone be willing to backchannel me with Lyn Hejinian's snail mail address? (Or academic affiliation?) Many thanks.
>
> Jennifer Ashton
> Johns Hopkins University
> [redacted]

i know she's working at new college in san francisco
-joanna>

"thrilled with my deathlessness, thrilled with this endlessness I dice and bury, come Poet shut up eat my word, and taste my mouth in your ear." -Allen Ginsberg

↑ Index

386. henry gould
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 10:09:39 +0100 Dale Smith said:
 Yours is a very fascist response, >cruel and totalizing in an attempt to voice a pathetic and deluded sense of >frustration at my Will/Ginsberg comments. In the future I suggest a LITTLE >forethought and attention in your replies.
>

I say old boy, you might consult the 1846 OED on the term "fascist" - this is entry #37: FASCIST(adj.): one who accuses others of "fascism" in a blithe, free-wheeling, & fithergildering manner.

In future I suggest a MITE more philological research on your part before slanging the noodle quite so scriptoshedly! Those who live in gashouses, as they say, should [f-rt] advisedly! - Eric Blarnes

"As for 'f--king' - our servants will say that for us."
- Lord Allen Gridberg, 1st Earl of Chongebongalay

p.s. Lord Allen's Solicitor, Reginald Stubbs, has noted in Black's Law Digest for April 1897, that the use of the words "f-k" or "f-t" or their linguistic derivatives by members of the ruling class is protected under the Imperial Dominoes & Speech Act of Her Majesty Queen Vicky of 1854. Just so you know.

↑ Index

387. dbkk
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

At 12:02 PM -0400 4/14/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>My concern is: how >will we move out of a position of passivity today? Especially >without Allen Ginsberg to lead.

This totalizing "we" is problematic to me. Personally, Ginsberg never lead me anywhere (even though I had a poster of him on my bedroom wall when I was in high school)--and I think his influence is marginal to large "marginal" populations. As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of white guys (and a few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but other people have embodied that for other groups and will continue to.

Dodie

↑ Index

388. Daniel Bouchard
Fifth Column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Dear Fellow List Members:

As has been the pattern for the past two years, the SEND button on my Mail program responds with a shock of ambiguity each time I touch it & post to the Poetics List. Successive efforts don't deaden the nerves; in fact, the sensation consistently grows more painfully apparent. One way I have found to counter this negative impact is a smaller group correspondence--a "sub" poetics list, where the talk is considered amongst friends--even those I haven't yet met in person.

And valuable as smaller groups are, I still find great value in the larger list--more voices in the room: disparate, redundant, informative, entertaining, illuminating, drab & trite. This List still has plenty of promise and potential to fill as a powerful resource in the arts community. I would much rather hear of Allen Ginsberg's failing health from Charles Bernstein than from an Associated Press release--not to mention a news column from GFW. I would rather hear about who read in San Francisco over the weekend from Steve Carll than . . . than what? -- you either hear it from Steve (or Kevin) or you don't hear it.

My original "reply" to Will's column was an outburst-- a parody of his own writing on AG--- a catharsis, fun, meant to shame GFW (for what that's worth) more than to invite serious discussion on how the media reacts to poetry, etc. etc. I think that saying "Fuck George F. Will" at the end (NOT "Fuck you George Will"-- there is a difference) is a rather standard (and fitting) epigram.

And finally, while I am aware that some of my posts have pissed off many people on the List, I will remind you that I have not (and do not) engage(d) in name calling.

This is the most serious note I have ever posted.

May God forgive me, if She remembers my name.

[redacted]

Not to get in the middle of personal name-calling exchanges, but my response to Will's column (which I haven't read & don't intend to seek out) is to let lying dogs sleep. sp

↑ Index

389. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

Re: Fifth Column

Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

dear daniel:

this is god. i do, indeed, remember your name. what i can't seem to remember is that columnist fellow's name, which is odd since he mentions my family often -- must be a freudian slip...

god

↑ Index

390. michael corbin
Re: History is Rewritten
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Christopher Alexander wrote:
>
> > howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is > > very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs > > students, but very readable and an eye-opener.
>
> yes, this one is definitely worth a peek.
> it's worth noting that zinn, who teaches
> at boston university, has suffered more > than a bit for his political practice. a few > years back, president silber (who has
> now left the univ. for a prominent position
> in MA public ed--talk about frightening),
> in what is probably the most recent, &
> most prominent instance of the university
> administration's usually quiet campaign
> against zinn & the left in general, tried to > have him fired when, refusing to cross
> the picket line of the then-striking clerical
> workers, zinn held his classes off campus.
>

While I agree that _People's History_ is good, it does suffer from its strength. That is, the birds-eye view narrative of the 'people's history'. Yet along the lines of your anecdote, Zinn's memoir _You Can't be Neutral on a Moving Train: A Personal History of Our Times_ published in '94 is, I think, more engaging as it narrates from a Zinn's-eye view as it were. While perhaps memoir-as-genre has blurred into the cliche excesses of an unrequited romance with a unitary subjectivity, Zinn stears clear of the pits of irony, bathos, the cynical and golden-age-ism. More, it is the narrative of how a political engagement with the world is precisely that which calls into being one's subjectivity.

Indeed, (to make another connection---perhaps of 'threads') it is not much of a stretch and not without benefit to see the paths of Zinn and Ginsberg as quite similar. Roughly contemporaries traversing much of the same geographic and psychic space of the american imperium of the 20th century; steadfast in their fuck-you's; living without regrets for their engagements with the world; and damanding a different future through their work and their very bodies. Of course they speak in different tongues. But tongues perhaps scrawled on the same rosetta stone.

mc

↑ Index

391. amato
Re: Fifth Column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

well doggonit, i wasn't gonna post in on the fuck-you's, but what the heck... i mean, what's wrong with a few fuck-you's anyway?... depends on the tone?...

oh fuck you...

and fuck you too...

and fuck you too too...

and fuck me...

and what the fuck, why the fuck not?...

fuck it... it's fucking-A-fucking-OK-with-me...

i 'get' the rhetorical gesture on d bouchard's part, expect the rest of you to too... but in any case, heck---mebbe somebody OUGHT to tell george will to go fuck hisself f2f... i know---that's really another matter...

still, if it were up to me, i'd like to say it very casually, in front of a large audience...
to wit:

"oh george, pleez go fuck yourself... pretty pleez?"

i mean, just very very gently, softspokenly even...
and smiling...

"oh fuck you george, oh fuck you and your bow-tie tactics..."

anyway... not even two cents' worth, i know, but heck... of course, i don't think we should be busy insulting one another, but i'd hate to feel that we're operating under some language strictures or some such around here, fer chrissakes... and in any case, i can learn from those who are opposed to the fuck you's too, so really no hard feelings at all, wrt anybody...

so to say it as nicely as i can muster, from the heart:

fuck all of us///

best,

joe

↑ Index

392. Jordan Davis
Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

↑ Index

393. Michael Magee
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

"What we have at times on this list is more like a high school gang of creeps posturing and screaming at one another." - Dale

Look, my parents are out of town this weekend, and I'm havin' a major jammin' party, but if any of you geeks who hang out with George Will try to bust in, I'll call the cops myself, then I'll meet you at your locker on Monday and knock you into next week!

-Mike.

↑ Index

394. Daniel Bouchard
What I Want: An Essay
Mon 14 Apr 1997

What I want is to exercise my right to throw potato salad at CCNY lecturers on Dadaism . . . (or their cyberspace equivalients).

[redacted]

Dear Daniel Bouchard:

It seems to me that this message was/is meant to intimidate anyone who may comment or critique on this list, especially if you understand them to be differing from your point of view or responding to something you said. Mocking someone's name? (see below) I do not think that Dale was "obvious[ly] impressed by George Will". (see below).

Will you mock my name? Will you write that I am defending George Will? Do you really want a debate or for everyone to go along with you? (These are real questions.)

>Date: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 17:21:28 -0400
>From: Daniel Bouchard <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: Will's column
>To: [redacted]
>
>"America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
> --Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
>
>"America, I'm not sorry."
> --same guy
>
>
>Dales,
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>is "stupid and irresponsible."
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>"confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."
>
>If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm >sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the >Poetics list.
>
>If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it was >"behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the opportunity >to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may or may not >use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of sneering >condescension he emits.
>
>You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent >that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you >find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were they >Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural and >economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course
with >George F. Will?
>
>You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think
>as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating >ourselves only with warm platitudes."
>

>Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something >from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be >reasonable because it only makes me more angry.
>
>
>[redacted]
>

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

395. Daniel Bouchard
What I Want: An Essay
Mon 14 Apr 1997

What I want is to exercise my right to throw potato salad at CCNY lecturers on Dadaism . . . (or their cyberspace equivalents).

[redacted]

Dear Daniel Bouchard:

It seems to me that this message was/is meant to intimidate anyone who may comment or critique on this list, especially if you understand them to be differing from your point of view or responding to something you said. Mocking someone's name? (see below) I do not think that Dale was "obvious[ly] impressed by George Will". (see below).

Will you mock my name? Will you write that I am defending George Will? Do you really want a debate or for everyone to go along with you? (These are real questions.)

>Date: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 17:21:28 -0400
>From: Daniel Bouchard <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: Will's column
>To: [redacted]
>
>"America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
> --Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
>
>"America, I'm not sorry."
> --same guy
>
>

>Dales,
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>is "stupid and irresponsible."
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>"confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."
>
>If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm >sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the >Poetics list.
>
>If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it was >"behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the opportunity >to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may or may not >use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of sneering >condescension he emits.
>
>You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent >that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you >find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were they >Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural and >economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course
with >George F. Will?
>
>You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think
>as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating >ourselves only with warm platitudes."
>
>Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something >from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be >reasonable because it only makes me more angry.
>
>
>[redacted]
>

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

396. Michael Boughn
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg,
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> My concern is: how > will we move out of a position of passivity today? Especially > without Allen Ginsberg to lead.

Yikes, you think you need a leader? This is moving out of a position of passivity?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

397. dbkk
Re: Fifth Column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

At 1:17 PM -0500 4/14/97, [redacted] wrote:
>well doggonit, i wasn't gonna post in on the fuck-you's, but what the >heck... i mean, what's wrong with a few fuck-you's anyway?... depends on >the tone?...

This tread reminds me of last month when Simon Pettet came over for pizza and it seemed to me (though this is far from accurate) that every other word out of his mouth was "fucking," and I felt so jealous because in my life I'm simply not allowed to talk that way. One of those reasons why my writing is so vital for my survival.

Dodie

↑ Index

398. dbkk
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

At 1:53 PM +1000 4/14/97, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> hi dodie, i certainly see your point and have no desire to add to the sense
> of totalizing.

Maria, I wasn't suggesting you were. You of all people would be sensitive about NOT doing this.

Dodie

↑ Index

399. henry
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 15:30:11 -0400 Michael Magee said:
>"What we have at times on this list is more like a >high school gang of creeps posturing and screaming at one another." - Dale
>
>Look, my parents are out of town this weekend, and I'm havin' a major
>jammin' party, but if any of you geeks who hang out with George Will try >to bust in, I'll call the cops myself, then I'll meet you at your locker
>on Monday and knock you into next week!

I say fellows, settle down over there across the ocean sea. I believe it's time for you all to do your taxes, am I right? Is this what's got you all pothered & smithered? Why, I'll put on the gloves myself if it's a question of defending Queen Vicky, lads. Cheerio - Eric Blarnes p.s. Eric Blarnes won a Queenly Salutations Ribbon in the Hertforshire Pugilistic Engagements for 1884. Just so you know. [He never attended "High School"]

pps. er... any of you blokes or lasses read any poetry lately? Swinburne's latest is... shall we say... long in the golden tooth?

↑ Index

400. henry
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

I work on one at a time (but then I'm ambidextrous). But one often becomes many (i.e. a set of some kind).

Henry "Al Tennisshorts" Gould

p.s. let's hear from some outside my circle on this one, hey? I mean Spandrift, Blarnes, cool it for a while - let the lurkers cometh fortheth)

↑ Index

401. Christopher Alexander
Re: Will's column
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Michael Magee wrrrrrrrrrrrt:
> Look, my parents are out of town this weekend, and I'm havin' a major
> jammin' party, but if any of you geeks who hang out with George Will try > to bust in, I'll call the cops myself, then I'll meet you at your locker

> on Monday and knock you into next week!

are me & Kent invited? I'll bring all my hardcore records, & I've got some killer weed. only--can I crash at your place?

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

402. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Yeah, me for one. Very rarely move on until I'm done. Though sometimes in the middle an idea for another appears, or a section I take out might begin to germinate like a cutting. But I finish the first one first, just make a note alongside so as to remember. sp

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

↑ Index

403. Jordan Davis
Another Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

Q. I see. But isn't it important to make sure to anticipate your detractors? To demonstrate that what appears to be at best oblique and at worst allegorical is actual a valid and independent choice? Not that you have to kowtow to your independence...

↑ Index

404. Don Cheney

Re: Imaginary Interview Question

Mon 14 Apr 1997

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

jordan

i love this question. i've been thinking about my writing process and how it (inevitably?) mirrors my life. in life i have to consciously stop my self from doing more than one thing at a time, starting one project and then starting another in the middle of the first project. and i don't always stop my self from doing this. and the same thing happens in writing. and i think it is the same process. i start a piece of writing and if it's flowing i will continue. if it's not i may start up another project. i think this is very different than when i was in my 20's and seems to have to do with my state of mind and state of leisure. i had more leisure time in my 20's than i do now at 38. but what role does age play in this separate from leisure time? don't know. i suspect that it does play a role. maybe i'm becoming more scatterbrained (i love that word) with age.

if you check out my web page you will find two prose projects stalled ("The Crystal Lava" a translation of Hammett's THE GLASS KEY and "The Profanity of the Lambs" which is a reworking of some god-awful Harold Robbins novel or other). and they've been stalled for quite a while. and i haven't put on the web another prose re-working, this one from R.L. Stine's GOOSEBUMPS series for kids--THIS IS GRADE A MONSTER SOUP! i think i've titled it. stalled, stalled, stalled.

still, i also have works that i've worked straight through without starting another work. but i do not have any rules about not starting another work until a certain work is finished. i'd love to hear from people who do have that rule. intriguing.

don

==========
Don Cheney San Diego, CA, USA
http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791
[redacted]
==========

↑ Index

405. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

I suppose there may be, but for many, I can imagine that not beginning a new poem until the poem at hand is finished would mean that far fewer poems get written, and perhaps that the spontaneous creation process would be frustrated. Of course, this begs the question of when a poem is actually "finished."

Bill B.

↑ Index

406. Christopher Alexander
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
I work on one at a time-- how's that for scintillating discourse: "me, too".
that's ok, / I never wanted to be "scintillating" anyway.
too dangerous. actually I like the sylvester's "cuttings"-- my work does seem to splinter outward in that way, so that fragments occur in mid-piece which then go on to engender other work. actually I'm making it up.
I'm not a writer I'm a brush salesman--2 of them, I'm 2 brush salesmen. & lots & lots of stuff falls on the floor around my desk, never to be seen again.

chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

407. Matthias Regan

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera

Mon 14 Apr 1997

Dale Smith wrote:
>
>What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic >reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.
>

This seems like a strange thing to say. What do you have in mind?

Matthias Regan
Northwestern University
Department of Chemistry
Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

408. Matthias Regan

Re: PPBR - addresses of events

Mon 14 Apr 1997

> This may seem really obvious of me, but when addresses of events are listed on the list, could the city please be included?

hank you. It drives me nuts to not know even if the city most likely turns out not mine

Matthias Regan
Northwestern University
Department of Chemistry
Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

409. LYNES- KATHERINE

Re: Imaginary Interview Question

Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

okay, all right.... pressure, always pressure.... i work on several at a time.... sometimes for years, sometimes for days. i seem to need time for it to gel. i think that i work on more than one poem at once because while writing one poem, other lines come out of it, too much of a tangent to be all in one, sometimes....

back to lurking [the moniker [and no i'm not looking up the spelling of that] of which i'm not sure i like....] kl

> I work on one at a time (but then I'm ambidextrous). But one often becomes many (i.e. a set of some kind).
>
> Henry "Al Tennisshorts" Gould
>
> p.s. let's hear from some outside my circle on this one, hey? I mean Spandrift, Blarnes, cool it for a while - let the lurkers cometh fortheth)

↑ Index

410. Matthias Regan

Re: Imaginary Interview Question

Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

1 at a time because if I'm writing one and put it aside to work on another that suddenly occurs, it stays aside.
I keep all the poems begun but not continued in various folders with the promise of returning to them. But I have never done that so far.
But then there is no fast and hard rule (perhaps I'm too young, perhaps not observant enough)--rather I am recently suprised at how consistently different the process of writing each poem is: some go from beginning to end, straight through, like what working on a musical score must be,
then the next ones get together all ass backwards like a collage--some I can never go back to after two days work on them and for better or worse (the latter) that is as done as they get. Then the next one will seem to require just a little work once a day for a month.
In that whole time I won't work on anything else unless a) I don't really take it seriously or b) I don't like the present project and am willing to sacrifice it.

For quite a few years I fought to maintain a schedule and regular writing practice, but that seems to increase frustration and never produced more work of higher quality, just more work. (Which is important too, in a way.)

So now I write only when I really want to and by default only work on one thing at a time.

I always write completely off the cuff.

What do others do?

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
> Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose > this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin > work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

Matthias Regan
Northwestern University
Department of Chemistry
Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

411. Mark Weiss
Re: What I Want: An Essay
Mon 14 Apr 1997

I don't know about Bouchard, but speaking for myself, I want everyone to go along with me as vehemently as possible, but I'm resigned to the fact that the best I'm likely to get is debate.

At 03:39 PM 4/14/97 -0400, you wrote:
>What I want is to exercise my right to throw potato salad at CCNY lecturers > on Dadaism . . . (or their cyberspace equivalients).
>
>[redacted]
>
>
>
>
>
>Dear Daniel Bouchard:
>
>It seems to me that this message was/is meant to intimidate anyone who may >comment or critique on this list, especially if you understand them to be >differing from your point of view or responding to something you said.

>Mocking someone's name? (see below) I do not think that Dale was >"obvious[ly] impressed by George Will". (see below).
>
>Will you mock my name? Will you write that I am defending George Will? Do >you really want a debate or for everyone to go along with you? (These are >real >questions.)
>
>
>>Date: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 17:21:28 -0400
>>From: Daniel Bouchard <[redacted]>
>>Subject: Re: Will's column
>>To: [redacted]
>>
>>"America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
>> --Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
>>
>>"America, I'm not sorry."
>> --same guy
>>
>>
>>Dales,
>>
>>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>>is "stupid and irresponsible."
>>
>>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>>"confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."
>>
>>If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm >>sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the >>Poetics list.
>>
>>If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it >was >"behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the >opportunity >to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may >or may not >use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of >sneering >condescension he emits.
>>
>>You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent >>that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you >>find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were >they >Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural >and >economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course

>with >>George F. Will?
>>
>>You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think
>>as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating >>ourselves only with warm platitudes."
>>
>>Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something >>from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be >>reasonable because it only makes me more angry.
>>
>>
>>[redacted]
>>
>
>
>
>----------
>Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>----------
>
>

↑ Index

412. Mark Weiss
Re: History is Rewritten
Mon 14 Apr 1997

While perhaps memoir-as-genre has blurred into the cliche
>excesses of an unrequited romance with a unitary subjectivity...

Is this translatable into English?

Speaking of translations:

Of course they speak in different >tongues. But tongues perhaps scrawled on the same rosetta stone.

Some weird Egyptian stuff. Too kinky for me.

↑ Index

413. Keith Norris
read my will at the houseparty
Mon 14 Apr 1997

ok

remember, if you use the washing machine as icebucket--clean it out afterwards.

[threadshift]

I took D. Bouchard's fuck GW as imperative--and so I sent will a 'fuck-you,' a noun, a written remonstrance without, in this case, the word 'fuck.' --that'd be bad rhetorical game, eh, GW'd win. And we can't have that. How long you think before GW and the sunday breakfast crowd hear too much poetry and, having learned a valuable lesson from Allen G., find someone to market, some voice acceptable to the academy, something we can call traditional to draw those crowds, sell those tickets--the beast, I think, has already been to Bethlehem.

Allen G scared GW and ilk--his poetry had the rhythm necessary to carry a catalog of disaster home to America's doorstep...sit there...love that doorstep...till somethin' human came out the door. I don't hear America singing but when I read some of you folks 'round here I hear/see/taste/consume a language that brings it home. Look MA! Left and postmod--no hands!

But y'all couldn't make generous assumptions about my send-a-fu-to-GW post--in emotional haste and in bad form I posted w/out introductions. Keith here. Found this list a little while ago--and was overwhelmed to hear names/ideas chatted up that are privately familiar and well-chewed. As when you (you?) ask for Brave Combo in the record store and the clerk knows who you're talking about and introduces you to her complete collection including bootlegged tapes made at the Lewisville TX county fair, 1986. That recognition. That fear and delight. That gum-popping pause.

Regardless of how you feel about f---, I'm happy to sit here and listen to conversation that feels right from voices I trust by reputation or have started to get an ear-for-here. Nice place--arguments and all. Wish I had found it earlier.

yrs.

Keith

[thread turn again--->re:

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997, Michael Magee wrote:
> "What we have at times on this list is more like a > high school gang of creeps posturing and screaming at one another." - Dale
>
> Look, my parents are out of town this weekend, and I'm havin' a major

> jammin' party, but if any of you geeks who hang out with George Will try > to bust in, I'll call the cops myself, then I'll meet you at your locker
> on Monday and knock you into next week!
>
> -Mike.
>

↑ Index

414. Bob Grumman
Possible Omissions in the Now-Classical Anthologies
Mon 14 Apr 1997

As a multi-unanthologized poet well past forty, I wondered what the group's consensus might be on the editorial sensitivity of the Hall Pack Simpson and Allen anthologies: do you think any consequential poets of the time were omitted from both? I could only think of one, quickly: Robert Lax. Allen skipped him again in 1982, and so did the recent Norton Postmodern.
--Bob G

↑ Index

415. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: History is Rewritten
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997, Michael Boughn wrote:

> I don't quite follow this thread. Have "the schools" ever provided information to students about the labour movement, radical political movements, feminism, vegetarianism, spitritualism? Certainly not in my experience (50s and 60s).

no they dont youre right. and yes we do have to find it on our own. but i think what i was responding to was the desire for a more polyphonic political discourse: more channels more choices more alternatives. the aspect this thread straggled from was wills dissing ag and the desire for some r e s p e c t (to the tune please) for those willfully purged alternatives that ag might represent. mb you are quite right: but cant i hope that political and cultural opposition be granted its token role in a dialogic community? rather than mercilessly and ritualistically vomited from the body/politic? naive yes i know. sometimes it happens. then i go back to doing the same thing to "theM."

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

416. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 dodie wrote:

> This totalizing "we" is problematic to me.

ok.

> As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of white guys (and a few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but other people have embodied that for other groups and will continue to.

objection! please define "white." i dont bite.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

417. nuyopoman
Re: WBA
Mon 14 Apr 1997

<<_Who Built America? Working People & The Nation's Economy, Politics, Culture & Society_ in two volumes from the American Social History Project at CUNY. The founder of the project is Herbert Gutman. The 'text' can also be had on CD with lots of pedegogically provocative pictures, songs etc. for the multi-media prepared computer.>>

....is actually one of the best CD-ROMs I've seen. Voyager, which I think is out of business, put it out. There's a great section on gay history deep in the inter-face, but of course some Funda-mentalist found it, and it's been banned in some high schools.

Holman

↑ Index

418. Schuchat Simon
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Mon 14 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
> Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose > this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin > work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

>
sometime in the early twentieth century, Paul Valery replied:

A: Poems are never finished, only abandoned.

↑ Index

419. nuyopoman
Ginsberg the Rock Star
Mon 14 Apr 1997

<<So no wonder that when they arrive in college, they are maybe aware of Allen G as MTV celeb instead of fine poet and political activist. My solution at home: tell my kids about alternate history, take them to events that proliferate the truth about American political policy, etc.>>

Excuse me, Maxine? Are you suggesting better for kids never to have heard of Allen at all then to have seen the video of "The Ballad of the Skeletons" on MTV?

I love to hear from the kids who found their way to Allen's because of that exposure. It does happen!

Cheers,

Bob Ho

↑ Index

420. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS
Re: So How did The Weiners I mean Wieners event go?
Mon 14 Apr 1997

---

yes Chris, the Wieners reading...

for me was fantastic. was the first time i saw him read. There was quite a lineup of readers before him, which gave us all (about 30 people or so) the opportunity to observe John as he is, an angel caught between two worlds. He ferreted through various papers and books he had in a large dingy bag he carried, subvocalized and laughed at points, to what only he knew, and wandered through several books from a bookshelf behind him. This provided interesting counterpoint to the criticism and poems being read in his honor. At points he tuned in to a humorous phrase from one of the speakers, or a curious pause from Charles Shively (who himself read from a very interesting and involved review/memoir/prosepoem of the printing of Wieners' book (i think it was _From Behind the State Capitol_...or the Collected) that was printed in an issue of _FagRag_.

John's reading seemed to exemplify exactly what he has stated as being his poetic project, that his life would be the source of his poetry, that he could somehow blur the boundaries of life and art. He began reading from his newly published journals, _707 Scott Street, for Billie Holiday_, and it seemed at first that the text was unfamiliar to him. (For those of you who don't know, Wieners has had a long history of mental illness, and his current diagnosis is schizoprenia.) He paused at points, and jumped around the text. He then opened a large tome which i assumed was his Collected Poems (i've never seen it). From this point on one could never be sure where one poem ended and the next began. At one point John read from a small strip of paper, almost to himself, the address of some hotel. At another, he unfolded an oversized piece of paper crammed with words, read a line or two, paused uncertainly, put it away and opened up a book. His sharp and self-conscious wit emerged at points, as when in the midst of ferreting through his papers he said, "I am not a fetishist," eliciting much laughter from the audience. It was quite amazing, a seemless flow of living art, complete immersion in himself and the moment. After about twenty minutes, he abruptly said, "I think that's all for now," and finished. bless him.

p.s. thanks Josh for posting that notice. I wouldn't have known about the reading without it. Keep 'em coming!

fraternitas,

kyle conner

↑ Index

421. dbkk

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle

Tue 15 Apr 1997

At 3:58 PM +1000 4/14/97, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>actually, i didn't think you were suggesting i was. i just wanted to be >sure you knew that you had my sympathies. xo, md

Ironically, I just received a very moving e-mail from Simon P. about his being present at AG's deathbed, holding his hand, and then the Buddhist service. So now I feel guilty about being so flip about AG, like instant karma's gonna get me.

Dodie

↑ Index

422. Alan Jen Sondheim

Decoding My Life (Come to This)

Tue 15 Apr 1997

Decoding My Life (Film Fissure Five Flesh With Wizard Work Writing):

A AIR, AVI Aarhus Addenda, Address: Advisor Aesthetics Also American Americans An,ode, Analysis Angelina Annihilation: Antler, Arsenal, Art, Artforum, Articles Artistic Artweek, As Atlanta Avatars, Before Beginning Being Benefit, Benefit, Best Beyond Board Book Border, Brown Brussels, Bykert Cal. Camcorder Canadian Center Characterizations Chatter Cheap Cincinnati, Cinema City Co-Organizer, Collective College Columns Comoderator Concordia Conferences Connecticut Consultant, Contact/Proofs, Contamination, Contributing Contributor, Correspondent Crash, Creative Culture Curator, Current Cut Cyberspace, DARE, Dalhousie Dallas Dead Debrisfilm, Decomposition: Disorders Drug, Dundas ETR, Editorial Electron- ic Email: Emory Essay Exhibitionist, Experimental Experimental Export FTI, Faculty Family Fashion, Fear Fellow Feminism Fever, Film Fissure Five Flesh, Flexibility, Flux Foundation Founder, Fractured Franklin Frontera Full Future Gain Geography Geography/Postmodernism/Body, George Geyser, Give Global God, Gotham Grants Greetings Group Guest, Hallwalls Hammond Harbourfront, Hartford Headed Hebrew History Hole, Hollywood, Horizons How Huntington Hymen, Image Images Immobilization, In Inaugural Incorrect: Individuals: Inquisition, Intermedia Internet Interview Into Introduction Jager Joual Juarez, KERA, KNON Karen Keynote Kitchen, L.A. LUBO Landscape, Lang/Parsons Liberte Light Limelight, Liner Linguistic Lips, Lists, Live London Lousiana Lumina, M, MIRROR MOMA, Male, Marcia Margaret, Mass. Mat- rix Media Melbourne, Member Millennium, Mills Miscellaneous: Misrecogni- tions, Muck, Museum NEA NY Naropa Nature Negative Net Net-Body Neural New Newark Newcastle-upon-Tyne Newport Newsletter Nexus, Nina No No Noise North Nova Nova O.K. Oberlin Old On On-Line Ontario Option, Orange Organ- izer, PCM2-MOO, Paint, Panel/Screening, Parachute, Paris Part-Time Parti- cipant, Participating Patricia Peachtree Perforations, Persona Phenomen- ology Photographs Planet Poems, Polymorphous Pornography: Postmodernism Ppress Presence President, Producer/originator, Providence Public Public- ations Queer-e, RISD Real Resonances, Review Reviewer, Revised Rhode Rit- ual, Robbed S.P.E., S8, SMU, SNAP San San Schizz, School Second Selec- tions, Sequestered Sexuality Sheridan Sick Singular Sleazy Soho Some Sounds, South-Eastern Southern Spinthariscope, Square Squeaky Squeaky Squealer, St. St. Stolen Strata, Summary Suny Super T'Other Talk Talking Telephone: Testimony Textbook Texts, The Theater, Thought, Thread Throat, Town Transcription Tre Trivial Two U.A., UCLA UCSD, UNCA, URL UT Umberto University Unnerving Untitled Upstairs, Using Various Vehicule, Victor Video Village Virtual Voyeurism, WBRU Warwick Watching

Wesleyan Western Whitney Williams Winnipeg With Wizard Work Writing Wupatki, X-Art Yale ZBS [Note: _Hole,_ amino, cd or

_____

_____

↑ Index

423. George Bowering
Re: Fascists and others
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Hey, when I went to sleep, all you ASAmericans were calling each other Cummunists. Now I wake up 30 years later, and you are calling each other Fascists. You know, I think we can take that as a good sign.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

424. Joshua N Schuster
wieners evening
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Event went wonderfully, a bigger audience than usual, John was patient enought of sit thru everyone's welcome, well, maybe an hour or so of introductions. Charley Shively, if someone is not familiar with him, gives beautiful readings. John read for about 20 mins, poems read with clippings, ads, other poems, notes on envelopes. We have the whole event video stocked. I think we are planning to collect the papers and transcribe the rest for some act of not forgetting. John, btw, is feeling better, can read and enjoy new audiences, can still floor and flush any audience, and has a good deal of confidence to pace himself. Alan Davies spoke some and read the next day, catching me offguard with his sparer serial lyrics, more like zen in the wake of haste. Bob Perelman, Louis Cabri, and Rachel Blau DuPlessis, all on this list, all gave great talks, opening straight into the issues of insanity, embodying, sexuality. The evening was instense and a pleasure. Hopefully these sorts of events will find him more comfortable with a public, keep us reading him, keep him hoping and publishing (there are still piles of journals and unpublished poems).

-Josh Schuster

↑ Index

425. Pierre Joris
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
> Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose > this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin > work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

On several at once. While new poems/fragments/work is being handwritten into notebooks, older stuff (there's a several weeks, sometimes several months lag between the hand & the keyboard) is being typed up, then printed, then revised & keyed in again. As a book takes shape more reworking is being done from the perspective of the book. Simultaneously it often happens that a given work, older or newer, gets retooled, expanded/contracted, for specific purposes beyond the writing desk -- i.e. right now taking off on an older piece as it is proving to be the matrix for generating a text to be performed with dancers & music by an electronic composer. It seems important to me to permitp the work to stay in flux, nomadic, in that way -- or some of it, the most open, as much simply comes & is & remains what it is.
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is, [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

426. Rachel Loden
Perloff on Yasusada
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Marjorie Perloff's article "In Search of the Authentic Other: the Araki Yasusada 'hoax' and what it reveals about the politics of poetic identity," is available on the web at:

http://www-polisci.mit.edu/BostonReview/BR22.2/Perloff.html

It is, as you might imagine, fascinating, especially in present company, and will start (or renew) many arguments.

Rachel L.

↑ Index

427. Mainstream advert
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Announcing publication of two issues of Sub Voicive Poetry in one week

Sub Voicive Poetry 1997 number 6 texts by David Miller / Gad Hollander with a front cover by Andrew Bick

Sub Voicive Poetry 1997 number 7 Chris Funkhouser / Loss Glazier / Jim Rosenberg

Each issue one pound fifty pence sterling payable to Lawrence Upton

Both issues as one order two pounds fifty pence sterling payable to Lawrence Upton

Overseas rate available on application

↑ Index

428. Mainstream advert
Tue 15 Apr 1997

RWC announces the reprint of RWC 35 / Ken Edwards - BRUISED RATIONALS. Two pounds and fifty pence payable sterling to Lawrence Upton. Price includes postage. Send to 32 Downside Rd, Sutton, Surrey SM2 5HP. Overseas rates available on request.

↑ Index

429. Poetics List
Re: POETICS Digest - 7 Apr 1997 to 8 Apr 1997
Tue 15 Apr 1997

I've been away from my post for a few days--here is something waiting for me upon my return...
jk

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 9 Apr 1997 14:58:20 -0400 (EDT)
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: POETICS Digest - 7 Apr 1997 to 8 Apr 1997 (fwd)

[...]

_____

I. M. A. G.

brave old lion gone out of reach now through the one door awaits us all

now turn his pages:
door upon door upon door

Anselm Hollo

↑ Index

430. Herb Levy
Re: media coverage for the arts(long reply)
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Christine Palma,

I love radio. I've done programming and fund-raising for community stations on & off for fifteen of the last twenty years. It's a great medium, full of amazing potential, but all-too-often this potential is unrealized and in general this situation is getting worse.

Christina, you're VERY lucky to live in an area in which you not only have a good Pacifica station, but also community stations like KCRW which haven't entirely bought into the NPR model of narrowing the program content to widen the audience size. The areas around New York (hi Kenny) & San Francisco are similarly blessed. The rest of us in the States get very spotty service from our "public" broadcasters in terms of adventurous arts, poetry or otherwise.

Most radio stations who broadcast stories about Ginsberg's death hadn't presented Ginsberg's work on the air (if they ever had) since the multiple CD boxset of recordings was released and, hence, newsworthy. How many radio stations regularly broadcast poetry with roots in the experimental tradition? How many broadcast such poetry mainstreamed within their regular programming, rather than in a specialty program aired a few hours every week or once or twice a month? How many broadcast ANY poetry (even mainstream crap) at ANY time?

In general "public" stations in the States are focusing more on increasing their market share and less on serving diverse underserved communities. The result is homogenous & bland "classical" (no vocal music, no weird contemporary music, just oceans of pretty music), "jazz" (nothing weird, please, what would Wynton say, & often nothing old enough to not be in stereo), or "alternative pop" music (the oxymoronic label says it all, if it doesn't a drum kit and an electric guitar forget about it) stations. "Public" stations are dropping specialty programs, focusing on a specific format, and coverage of all but the most mainstream events is declining, cause they might alienate those folks in the upscale demographic that the station's advertisers (oops, I mean underwriters) pay to reach throughout the day.

That these stations ARE often better than the other media in a given area, is more a sign of how bad the other media have become, rather than how great these stations really are.

There are still many wonderful individuals involved in public, and especially community, radio (we can't do without them & they deserve all the support we can give them), and isolated stations even outside of major markets can be quite good, but increasingly every non-mainstream interview or feature has to be justified, usually by tying it to a product or event.

Even with this kind of tie-in, this stuff is rarely distributed nationally and is almost never actually produced by NPR. The vast majority of adventurous programming available for stations via satellite is independently produced by folks who must rent satellite time from NPR for distribution, & then most stations don't broadcast it anyway.

How many people on this list heard LINEbreak, the radio series produced by Charles Bernstein & Martin Spinelli, on a radio station in their area? Martin, do you know how many stations aired the series? For thaat matter how many programs have been downloaded how many times from the EPC Web site?

Christina, it sounds like what you're doing is cool, but most of us don't have this range of radio options where we live.

I've really got to go finish up some other folks taxes now, talk to you later.

Bests,

Herb

> Herb Levy wrote:
>
> When I hear a recording by someone I'm interested in on almost ANY radio station, NPR or otherwise, I assume that the artist has died, 'cause otherwise the work w0uldn't be on the air.
>
> I've been an evesdropper on this list for about 8 months or so, and I feel compelled to chime in and also to introduce myself... Herb Levy's comment touches close to home.
>
> When I finished up my undergraduate degree in English almost three years ago, I felt a big void in my education. I felt that I'd been introduced to work, poetry and fiction, representative of what is academically "embraced" and that the bulk of what I had studied for the past four years was not contemporary work. I am saying this even though I understand that a big goal of the curriculum in English depts. is to give students an historical grounding of literature. I would never trade in this education. But still, I questioned the relevance of what I'd been told to read. I felt that the contemporary work I'd become acquainted with through my classes was not "dangerous writing" and I felt that that the selection of work took on an academic cast because there was such a narrow selection of writers. Somehow when I looked at my bookshelf and the bookshelves of other English majors at other colleges, I saw the same books, books that were supposed to be on the bleeding edge of creative writing. How could we all be reading the same books? Could they really be that alternative or different or more importantly "contemporary," if most universities were teaching the same authors. I wondered how a silent consensus could have formed about who the important writers of today are. Isn't a canon of contemporary writers a contradiction. It would be easy for an aspiring writer or a reader who aspires to understand the tone of contemporary writing to just accept these people and look to them as the thematic (moral) and styllistic voice of our time. What's worse is to accept the opposite condition of this, that perhaps it's very difficult today to stumble upon a relevant writer who enjoys obscurity as a result of work that breaks so radically from what's taught in the university system, or worse still, that it's impossible because they don't exist.
>
> I felt estranged from what I'd just gotten a degree in. This bothered me enough that I decided I would produce and host a radio show about poetry, literary fiction and performance and fill in the gap. The format is open, but usually the guests read their work for the bulk of the program and the discussion is on the climate of creative writing and not on an analysis of the particular pieces they've just read. The best part for me is that good writers recommend good writers and are so excited to share them. Also coming across people with interesting work, but who don't have any > immediate aspirations to publish, ie. closet writers. I feel as though I can now make the connection between what I've gotten academically with the diversity of what I've encountered. And I can now be thankful for the survey classes and Norton Anthology for giving me a body of work to relate it to.

>
> I've also made it a point to educate myself on what the media coverage for the arts is like. I'm in Los Angeles so I can only speak for Los Angeles. I think the climate has changed in the past few years and that arts and literary programs broadcasting to Los Angeles are breaking out of the after-midnight airtime ghetto. For the first year, I had an 11 PM to 2 AM weekly timeslot. Now I am on at 8 PM. At other public stations, we had Wanda Coleman at KPFK doing Poetry Connection also at 8 PM. KCRW out of Santa Monica College has Michael Silverblatt hosting Bookworm during the day! 2 PM. KCRW has also made the full broadcasts of his shows available for download at their website (www.kcrw.org) and the sound quality is fine.
>
> I think there is a growing public demand for arts programming and an awareness of the radio's and internet's potential to meet that. Part of this is due to independent publishing houses putting out spoken word releases and these getting into Virgin Megastore and the like. A small non-profit experimental audio group in New York called Tellus/Harvestworks which puts out recordings like those of Paul Bowles and John Cage and Shelley Hirsh is now at my local record store.
>
> The internet will certainly improve public access... it's convenient. I don't know how long this particular list has been around, but I sure would have welcomed it five years ago. A radio show, an e-mail list, streaming audio, they can do wonders.
>
> Christine
>
> _____
> christine palma
> [redacted]
>
> samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrian's rights, sleep depriviation high, the moon . . .

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

431. Mark Wallace
Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Susan Schultz' take in the new WITZ on Bob Perelman's MARGINALIZATION OF POETRY led me back to that text again with some questions I'm still trying to figure out. On the one hand, can someone explain to me where exactly Bob, in distinguishing Charles Bernstein as "envisioning a group of textual enclaves as standing in for politics" and Kamau Braithwaite as creating a poetry leading to the possibility of new alternative "nations," obviously priveleges Braithwaite's project over Bernstein's? I keep looking for that but am not seeing it--can someone point me to what I'm missing? Is it in the idea that Bernstein's attempt to refigure language intends to function on an "anarchic" level that can't (according to Perelman) reach outside the academic context, whereas Braithwaite's is seeking a more broad-based constituency? I would disagree with that reading if Bob is making it, but I can't quite find the sentence where he directly states that this IS his argument.

Actually, one problem I do feel like I'm having with THE MARGINALIZATION OF POETRY is the way in which Bob seems to be reducing the various purposes of the poetry of Bernstein, Braithwaite AND Andrews to their function SOLELY as ideological critique--he seems, at times, to be arguing that there's NO element of their poetry not focused on offering ideological critique. He seems to be reducing the variety of this work to various means of "storming the capitol." Furthermore, am I right in thinking that he comes dangerously close to seeing the work of these writers as having a SINGULAR CENTER--Bernstein wants "textual anarchy," Braithwaite wants "alternative nation states," and all of Andrews' work is a complete assault on any possibility of identity? Interesting on this subject is Jeffrey Nealon's DOUBLE READING: POSTMODERNISM AFTER DECONSTRUCTION. Nealon takes a number of academic critics to task (George Hartley among others) for not reading the POETRY of language poetry (in all its potential multiplicity, ambiguity, and contradiction) but instead trying to reduce all the poets involved to a single cultural critique which they are all engaged in. Curious then (if my reading here is even partly correct) that Bob, who is a poet also, should seem at least in part to be engaging in this same kind of reduction (language poetry is simply MAKING A SERIES OF POINTS about social reality, POINTS WHICH CAN THEN BE EVALUATED ON WHETHER THEY ADD UP TO A SINGULAR CORRECTNESS.

Susan Schultz' essay is interesting also for noting that Perelman lumps a number of women poets associated with language poetry into the same chapter; Schultz sees Perelman being more sympathetic to their practice on the one hand, while possibily ghettoizing it (and certainly keeping it something of a side issue) at the same time, and she asks for the motivation for that placing.

So, my questions are these: are there places where Perelman is not as singularly judgemental (Braithwaite over Bernstein) as he seems? Or is the heart of the book an attempt to reduce the variability of poetic practice to a singular, centered ideological critique, and to see its various subjects as falling short because they finally have a limited singular center? But what if they were not intending to have such a center? What if poetry is not ONLY ideological critique by other means?

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

432. Tom Mandel

float/sting

Tue 15 Apr 1997

"float like a butterfly
sting like a bee"

was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain); I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....

was it Bundini Brown?

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

433. Tom Mandel
dale and daniel
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Dale Smith and Daniel Bouchard -- I think you two are being irritated not by each other but by inherent limits in how email transfers context of meaning and intention, i.e. not very well. Perhaps a brief phone call?

not meaning to meddle, but I've had enough evidence of intelligence and good intention on both your parts to want to get the pebble out of your shoes.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

434. Douglas Barbour
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Gee, I'd have to agree with William Burmeister, who seems dead on for me:

"I suppose there may be, but for many, I can imagine that not beginning a new poem until the poem at hand is finished would mean that far fewer poems get written, and perhaps that the spontaneous creation process would be frustrated. Of course, this begs the question of when a poem is actually "finished."

Bill B"

Also, what Don Cheney said about loss of leisure time. So I write as mucha s I can of a poem at a time, but also find larger series are begun & then I may or may not keep at them in tandem, & at whatever times

========== Douglas Barbour
the precision of openness Department of English is not a vagueness

University of Alberta it is an accumulation Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 cumulous [redacted] FAX:[redacted] bpNichol H: [redacted]

↑ Index

435. David Bromige
The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Given civilization, artists embody its discontents. Since many institutions find their stability and perpetuation in suppressing the news of discontents, there are bound to be conflicts between artists and insitutions, even where those institutions are largely made up of artists or of those who would facilitate art. While I'm sweeping generalizations around,I'll add that art has a shock to it, but that by the time that comes to be a "shock va l u e ," we pass from nakedness to The Nude, and eventually, Dada rests in the Museum, whose calm framing does a lot to tranquilize shock. I don't like to sound aloof, but I doubt that there's a whole lot to be done to alter this dynamic, even in a more liberal, open society than we'll likely see again in my lifetime. Perspective is always the joker, and poets who work within institutions frequently are nominated to help out with further institutions, where they learn the value (a real value!) of compromise, and the way of life this can become must place their art-selves in considerable jeopardy. Its easier to kid yourself, harder to find the foul rag-&-bone yard--or blissful indifference--of the heart of the matter of human being. There might be more, a lot more, to say on this topic, but on a busy list, it's best, I feel, to keep ostings fairly brief. db

↑ Index

436. bertram mourits
the poetry of Muhammad Ali
Tue 15 Apr 1997

md requested:

> the newscasters kept
> reading a poem clay had written for the occasion and i adored it. can > anybody post that poem here?

I'm not sure I got the right thing, but this was published in the Dutch literary journal Randstad in 1964:

It all started twenty years past
The greatest of them all was born at last
The very first words from his Lousville lips,
'I'm as pretty as a picture and there's no one I can't whip.'
Then he said in a voice that sounded rough,
'Im as strong as an ox and twice as tough.'
The name of this champ, I might as well say,

No other than the greatest, Cassius Clay.
He predicts the round in which he's gonna win
And that's the way his career has been.
He knocks them all out in the round he'll call,
And that's why he's called the greatest of them all.

[redacted]

↑ Index

437. bruja
Re: poem... (fwd)
Tue 15 Apr 1997

I will paint a mural of a thousand birds, wings intertwining, fighting for flight,
two pecking feathers,
two carrying thread,
sleeping against wind, melting to ground with wax dripping grace, landing waterside
and heart side,
tear like eyes open, pulled,
never forward,
dripping paint my brush will scatter nests,
eggs will damage,
lie horizontal on ground not earth, ?
I will scatter to sky
my mural,
like ashes fall secretly
on window sills
ha!
not even that will remain.

-joanna

↑ Index

438. Joe Safdie
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
> Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose > this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin > work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --
>
What a nice query! I've been writing in series for so long that I don't know anymore what an individual or occasional poem looks like -- this has been going on for almost eight years now -- the demands of the sequence dictate what comes next, so I could be (and am) working on three or more at once -- plus constant journal scribbling, which more often than not yields the raw material . . .

Lovely to talk about the how, as well as the what . . .

↑ Index

439. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

---

i warm up, often, by editing/revising a poem in progress, and then start working out a new poem once i'm limber. always have a number of poems in revision.
e ps
if i waited till i'd finished poem at hand i'd never finish anything... i typically revise something around 35 to 60 times (i.e. re-read and look for /at problem spots, change/shift, move around, reword)

↑ Index

440. Hoa Nguyen
Re: Will's column/ Daniel Bouchard
Tue 15 Apr 1997

(Sorry if I have posted this twice--I can't tell--- my service is a bit slow)

Dear Daniel Bouchard:

It seems to me that this message was/is meant to intimidate anyone who may comment or critique on this list, especially if you understand them to be differing from your point of view or responding to something you said.

Mocking someone's name? (see below) I do not think that Dale was "obvious[ly] impressed by George Will". (see below).

Will you mock my name? Will you write that I am defending George Will? Do you really want a debate or for everyone to go along with you? (These are real questions.)

Hoa Nguyen

>Date: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 17:21:28 -0400
>From: Daniel Bouchard <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: Will's column
>To: [redacted]
>
>"America, go fuck yourself with your atom bomb."
> --Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)
>
>"America, I'm not sorry."
> --same guy
>
>
>Dales,
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>is "stupid and irresponsible."
>
>I'm not sorry if you think my "fuck George F. Will"
>"confirms his belief in the poverty of cultural values today."
>
>If he could define them, and if I could take the time to read them, I'm >sure I could have a grand time mocking them for the amusement of the Poetics list.

> If you think my "fuck George F. Will" is an act of cowardice because it was "behind his back" let me assure that I would love to have the opportunity >to meet the man and enjoy a real conversation, in which I may or may not >use the oh-so-shocking "F" word, depending on the amount of sneering >condescension he emits.
>
> You are obviously impressed with George F. Will's authority to the extent that in a worthless diatribe in which he shits on a man's life work you find "scant points . . . which seemed appropriate." Which points were they Dales? The ones that implicate all writers and activists in "cultural > and >economic market practices." Are you taking a correspondence course with George F. Will?

You said, "his death is the occasion for such moments as these and I think
>as much meaning should be milked from debate rather than saturating >ourselves only with warm platitudes."
>
>Yes, let's debate and milk (milk?) the moment and we may learn something >from one another, but don't begin by telling ME to settle down and be >reasonable because it only makes me more angry.
>
>
>[redacted]
>>
>
>
>
>----------
>Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>----------
>
>
>
>

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

441. Jordan Davis
hello poetics wake up!
Tue 15 Apr 1997

test

PS Friday April 18 at 7 pm Brian Kim Stefans (ed. Arras) and Loren Goodman (contains sulfites) read their poetry at which is in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Sq W, 7th floor, NYC.

POETRY CITY

end of test

↑ Index

442. Rachel Kubie
Knott/AG
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Linda Russo--

re that Bill Knott seeming to "connect" somehow. Grudgingly returned his Niomi poems to the library a few days ago so I can't quote directly but his "To American Poets" was in front of me with AG's death in the news--something like:

"your name will be an open secret"

(and)

"everywhere we will be finishing the poems you broke away from"

RK

↑ Index

443. David Bromige
If this is still under discussion . . .
Tue 15 Apr 1997

Yes, Joe, I think you're misreading me.

[under these conditions] ...CONSIDERABLE jeopardy.
....It's easiER to kid yourself
....It's hardER to find....

This is not "a statement of futility, of one's art inevitably coming to nothing, of tragic (even) melancholy."

I think your next sentence, "How are you feeling today?" Is ad hominem.

Do I feel I've done this? What, arrived at conclusions you impute to me, that are not supported by the actual words I used?

I fail to see the parallel between my posting and Jim Carroll's delightful rock lyrics. There is no guitar strumming in my observations.

Jack Spicer said, and unfortunately my disorderly record-keeping allows only my paraphrase (and we see how tricky they can be), "the more you know as a poet, the more furniture there is in the room, the harder it is to get in and out of it." I only testify from my observations of many careers, that have institiutionalized themselves with their success. I had never considered that my own answered to this category. Obviously, "its all relative." But what powers I have, are my own--there's no leg up I could give anybody, except to blurb their book.

Tragic? How about Beckett's "I cant go on. I'll go on." That makes more sense to me. Tragic is compromised with posturings.

Hope this clarifies. db

↑ Index

444. Thomas Bell
Re: ginsberg and snyder
Tue 15 Apr 1997

"When?" is the question. At two different times or in a different dimension.
tom
At 10:31 PM 4/13/97 -0700, George Bowering wrote:
>>Does using adjacent urinals in two different states
>
>Where is that possible?
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]
>e-mail: [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

445. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

I do one at a time and finish it at the same time or scrap it so it's like breathing theory. Then it's gone. There's no work in it.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/index.html TELEPHONE [redacted] IMAGES:

http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, USA, 11217 Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

446. Charles Alexander
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Tue 15 Apr 1997

At 09:12 AM 4/15/97 +0000, you wrote:
>Jordan Davis wrote:
>>
>> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once?
>> Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose >> this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin >> work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

Usually several at once, but sometimes can get going on one which takes virtually all the attention for weeks at a time. Most often for the last 6 years each of the "several" is a fairly long work, in sections or not, and sometimes there's going back and forth within a work. And then someone will ask for something, and there may be looking through new and old work, and working on something again. If that someone asking is a choreographer or video artist, perhaps there will be some attention put to the particular use and collaboration involved, and perhaps something entirely new will begin, amid the others already going on. And sometimes there will be a time when all will cease for a few weeks -- not a block of any kind, more of a respite, perhaps, or perhaps more attention to making books or reading or some other act which usually doesn't seem that separate from the poems. And often books seem to take shape almost from the first conception of a work, but not always does such a book finally come together. And that brings about the question of how/when a work "ends," which is another discussion entirely.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

447. Charles Alexander
Re: float/sting
Tue 15 Apr 1997

At 09:27 AM 4/15/97 -0500, you wrote:
>"float like a butterfly
>sting like a bee"

>
>was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't >believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is >in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
>I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....
>
>was it Bundini Brown?
>
>Tom

Yes, Bundini Brown

And, perhaps later, the song which I've heard played on AM radio as recently as a couple of years ago

Muhammad
Muhammad Ali
float like a butterfly
sting like a bee

Muhammad
a black superman
who calls to the other guy
I'm A-a-li --
catch me if you can

That's all the lyrics I can remember -- are there more?

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

448. Steven Marks
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand
> -- >

Many at a time, plus reviews and essays and journal entries. Poems come out in spurts. And when the spring dries up, I move on to another poem. Almost all of my poems, however, first begin as prose. I notice that a couple of others write this way and I think I remember that this is the way that Yeats wrote. I find that this is the best way to get down what I want to say; almost as if I'm writing a letter to myself to be read at some point in the future. Having that frame to work in keeps me to the task far better than setting out to write a poem from scratch, so to speak. Strangely, or perhaps not, the prose-to-poetry method results in far less stilted form and language. I can follow the first-choice, best-choice path with no obscuring of the trail from rewriting. At least for me, this is what happens. What about others who write from a prose frame?

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

449. michael corbin
Re: History is Rewritten
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> While perhaps memoir-as-genre has blurred into the cliche > >excesses of an unrequited romance with a unitary subjectivity...
>
> Is this translatable into English?

Why yes, indeed. However translation is so, shall we say, unstable. Therefore, following da Vinci in the Codex Leicester and elsewhere, I have produced a more adequate method of rendering translation from the original in this text. That is, hold the text to the mirror, cover your left eye to occlude the perception of depth and then, counter-intuitively, read only one letter at a time and all will be made clear.

> Speaking of translations:
>
> Of course they speak in different > tongues. But tongues perhaps scrawled on the same rosetta stone.
>
> Some weird Egyptian stuff. Too kinky for me.

Latex is available for those with untranslatable safety concerns. Further, beyond its prophylactic benefits it has possibilities all its own for new philological exploration. Kink, as always, is optional.

mc

↑ Index

450. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

At 2:06 PM 4/16/97, Hugh Steinberg wrote:
>With all these postings on Ali, I wonder if anyone has published a book of >his collected works? It'd be a kick to read.
>
>Hugh Steinberg

yes indeed; does anyone know of such a volume?--md

↑ Index

451. Stephen Vincent
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Charles Alexander quoting Tom Mandel posted:

> "float like a butterfly
> sting like a bee"
>
> was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't > believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is > in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
> I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....
>
> was it Bundini Brown?
>
> Tom
>
> Yes, Bundini Brown

>And, perhaps later, the song which I've heard played on AM >radio as recently as a couple of years ago

"Muhammad
Muhammad Ali
float like a butterfly
sting like a bee

Muhammad
a black superman
who calls to the other guy

I'm A-a-li --
catch me if you can"

Charles, are you referring to a more contemporary song that appropriates from the Budini Brown heraldry(!?). And was the Brown piece put up while Ali was still Cassius Clay? If so, the "Ali" in the more recent song wd be an example of history re-writ. Tom M., indeed, referred to the song in the time of "Muhammed" rather than time of "Clay". I somehow think of the butterfly/bee combination as part of the Casius moment - before the religious change. Except in its awe of the power of language, within its youthful boast, it's a rhyme that shows little sign of any need for religio-humility. I remember being knocked out by it - in the middle of incredible upheaval, it was so fresh, stood up and cut right thru everything. And then just hung there -- gem like -- in the air.

I guess one of us shd go out and find 'the book' with the real facts.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

452. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> Q: Do you work on one poem at a time, or do you work on several at once? Or do you just write, and make poems from the writing later? I suppose this will seem naive, but I wonder if there are poets who do not begin work on a new poem until they have finished the poem at hand --

All three. Am currently writing daily ten line poems (sit down, crank it out, one or two spot revisions, then move on to the next one). Also am constantly tinkering with older stuff, usually after I get 'em back with rejection slips attached. I also bring a journal to readings and write while people read, a combination of what I hear and what I'm thinking (similar to what Mac Low does). Chopped, spindled and spliced, this becomes source material for the rest of my poems.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

453. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Ginsberg the Rock Star
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Bob : How nice to have insomnia (3 am), wake up, and find myself addressed on our list. Of course, one can arrive at the existence of Allen G by many paths and never to have arrived is worse. But it is simply the case that context does limit one's initial understanding of a person or thing and that the medium by which one discovers a writer, televison included, can limit or "flatten" one's sense of the whole. An interested viewer could replay a video of AG again and again, but sitting with his work in book form and reading it is another experience, I'd venture. Reading allows for a fuller initiation pehaps?

Maxine Chernoff

On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> <<So no wonder that when they arrive in college, they are maybe aware of Allen G as MTV celeb instead of fine poet and political activist. My solution at home: tell my kids about alternate history, take them to events that proliferate the truth about American political policy, etc.>>
>
> Excuse me, Maxine? Are you suggesting better for kids never to have heard of Allen at all then to have seen the video of "The Ballad of the Skeletons" on MTV?
>
> I love to hear from the kids who found their way to Allen's because of that exposure. It does happen!
>
> Cheers,
>
> Bob Ho

↑ Index

454. Charles Alexander

Re: float/sting

Wed 16 Apr 1997

> Charles, are you referring to a more contemporary song that appropriates from the Budini Brown heraldry(!?). And was the Brown piece put up while Ali was still Cassius Clay? If so, the "Ali" in the more recent song wd be an example of history re-writ. Tom M., indeed, referred to the song in the time of "Muhammed" rather than time of "Clay".

Yes, I guess I am, and a pretty bad song at that. I have no idea when the song came out. But it certainly must be history re-writ.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

455. Dale Smith

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera

Wed 16 Apr 1997

Matthias Regan-

I simply meant to imply that in certain ways today our social milieu shares many traits with those of Victorian England. The most obvious is the pervasive social usage of "niceness" as a way to avoid critical dialogue. Although the surface is pleasant-"that was a nice poem, a nice reading, a nice (fill in the blank)-hidden hostilities remain directly unspoken. The Middle English usage of the word-'foolish'-descended from prior French and Latin cognates meaning 'ignorant' or 'not knowing.' It's interesting to hear 'nice' so over-used in today's contexts.

Also, while today's climate feels more open in certain respects than in the past, we still live in a market economy narrowly defined by a monopoly of political, social, and cultural interests.

I feel I'm not being specific enough, however, within this space of e-mail comminication. What I've written is too general and I haven't connected to anything concrete. My point in writing the post you quote was to learn what disasters had been spared by 'media revolutionaries.' I was addressing Piombino's vague statement with my own. I'd be happy to backchannel re: this issue, if you'd like. I don't think it's worth wasting much space. I had Raymond Williams' The Country and The City in mind when I posted.

> What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.
>
> > This seems like a strange thing to say. What do you have in mind?
>
> Matthias Regan
> Northwestern University
> Department of Chemistry
> Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

456. Michael Boughn

Re: History is Rewritten

Wed 16 Apr 1997

> i think what i was responding to was the desire for a more polyphonic political discourse: more channels more choices more alternatives. the aspect this thread straggled from was wills dissing ag and the desire for > some r e s p e c t (to the tune please) for those willfully purged alternatives that ag might represent. mb you are quite right: but cant i hope that political and cultural opposition be granted its token role in a dialogic community?

Of course, Jeffrey, you can have all the utopian dreams you want. I was just objecting to a certain "what's wrong with young people these days, they don't know anything about the IWW or whatever" thread that crept into this exchange.

Power to the people,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

457. Henry Gould
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Interesting how many people write many things at once (although even more interesting all the side comments on composition). It still comes down to one at a time for me, until it's finished (although often come back later & use the needle pliers). Why just one at a time? I can think of 2 reasons: 1st, a poem seems like an "event" to me - like an occasion or an experience. 2nd as Isaiah Berlin pointed out, everyone's either a fox or a hedgehog. & I'm a conehead. & that "one" may be just one poem, or a series that takes months & has me writing in the other room at 3 am. or other uncomfortable situations.

- Gould

"we write to keep the tsetse flies off the ox"
- Jack Spandrift

"writing? Isn't that something we did in public school?"
- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

458. Maria Damon
Re: advert
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

yo, can any of you brits help me out w/ something? apparently there was a superb documentary on lenny bruce on britain's radio 3 last march or feb. i need it!! how can i go about getting atape or a transcript? bests, maria d

At 7:38 AM -0400 4/15/97, Mainstream wrote:
>RWC announces the reprint of RWC 35 / Ken Edwards - BRUISED

RATIONALS. Two >pounds and fifty pence payable sterling to Lawrence Upton. Price includes >postage. Send to 32 Downside Rd, Sutton, Surrey SM2 5HP. Overseas rates >available on request.

↑ Index

459. Maria Damon
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

still no clear answers on the clay/liston fight poem. here's another quiz (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in there somewhere. md

At 9:27 AM -0500 4/15/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
>"float like a butterfly
>sting like a bee"
>
>was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't >believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is >in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
>I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....
>
>was it Bundini Brown?
>
>Tom
>
>
>
>Tom Mandel [redacted]
>*******
>Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
>4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
>Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
>*******
> Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

460. Maria Damon
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

cool, daniel z: what would you like: a copy of my gertrude stein article, a copy of my book, or a copy of the new journal CrossCultural Poetix?

At 8:52 AM -0700 4/16/97, Daniel Zimmerman wrote:
>Maria Damon wrote:
>>
>> still no clear answers on the clay/liston fight poem. here's another quiz
>> (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary >> somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in >> there somewhere.
>> md
>>
>> At 9:27 AM -0500 4/15/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
>> >"float like a butterfly
>> >sting like a bee"
>> >
>> >was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't >> >believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is >> >in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
>> >I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....
>> >
>> >was it Bundini Brown?
>> >
>> >Tom
>> >
>> >
>> >
>> >Tom Mandel [redacted]
>> >*******
>> >Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
>> >4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
>> >Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
>> >*******
>> > Join the Caucus ConversationMaria,
> That's "imaginary gardens with real toads in them"
>--from Marianne Moore's "Poetry" [the one that begins "I, too, dislike >it"].
>--Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

461. KENT JOHNSON
The New Party
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Speaking of Howard Zinn, does anyone know anything about the New Party? I saw an ad a couple weeks back where Zinn is listed as a "member" along with Noam Chomsky, Cornel West, Barbara Ehrenreich, Jim Hightower, and other prominent others. I've also seen the NP championed by Alexander Cockburn in the Nation, talking about them winning a few dozen local elections around the-country in the past couple years or so.

What's the history? How does this group differ, say, from the new Labor Party founded in Philly, or "Nader's" Green party? What would be the sticking points to overcome before a possible electoral alliance, for example? (Nader got half a million in only 26 states, so such unity might have eventual ground-breaking results?) Ten years ago I could draw a fractal family tree of every little left splinter group in the country since James Cannon marched out of the CPUSA politburo singing the Internationale. Now I don't even know where this glitzy and well-appointed New Party came from. A DSA leap into third party politics?

I feel left out and don't want the revolution to start without me.

Info Ron Silliman? Mark Presjnar? Curious,

Kent

↑ Index

462. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Mark Wallace--

I haven't seen Susan's piece yet. Perelman's book on the other hand was very interesting and useful to me. He may respond himself here...But it seems to me the Marg. of Poetry is not reductive with regard to any given poet's work. It suggests tentative areas of engagement and characterization. I think Perelman's wish to get at a certain audience and a certain niche, which involves carefully articulated academic-sounding anayses, may be mistaken for brusque pigeon-holing. To my ear that is not what's going on. I also feel that as a public figure at the head of "LangPo, the historical phenomenon" he is determined to show plenty of skepticism about its claims, where they are weak or incomplete--thus the emphasis on the limits of certain poets.

However, I agree with the passage I've retained below. There is a tendency sometimes (in BP's Marginalization and among other folks) to assume that a focused cultural and political agenda is the REASON for a poet doing her particular work. I had some great backchannel exchanges with Joe Safdie which involved (as I see it) this problematic assumption. This crops up in a somewhat different form in Golding's brilliant From Outlaw to Classic (which I strongly recommend, and which I only heard of 'cause he's on this list and mentioned it in passing)--There he sometimes suggests that "avant-garde" poetry will lose it's reason for being if it becomes too accepted institutionally, if it has no "center" or maybe no right-wing, to respond against. This seems to be to be putting the pegasus before the cart...Vital poetry is made (like vital painting, dance or music) for its own fervid intensity as human activity, involving a particular physical medium. It isn't primarily a form of insurgency against the current cultural hegemonies. A given poet (;like many on this list) may be compelled, because of historical junctures, to be in opposition to those who hold institutional power in the poetry world...But that isn't why most of us write. Likewise (it is a different point, but they are parallel) most radical poets are not trying exclusively to power social change thru verse; many different calculations go into our choices, and while all are implicated in politics, few are reducible to it. As a long-time socialist activist and a poet, I feel each engagement must be allowed its own set of rooms, its own problematic shape.

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Tue, 15 Apr 1997, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Actually, one problem I do feel like I'm having with THE MARGINALIZATION OF POETRY is the way in which Bob seems to be reducing the various purposes of the poetry of Bernstein, Braithwaite AND Andrews to their function SOLELY as ideological critique--he seems, at times, to be arguing that there's NO element of their poetry not focused on offering ideological critique. He seems to be reducing the variety of this work to various means of "storming the capitol."

↑ Index

463. amato
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

mark, in partial reply to your well-put questions: pp. 93-4, _the marginalization of poetry_:

"it would be easy enough simultaneously to award the palm to the revolutionary commitment of _x/self_ and to dismiss bernstein's anarchy. i can imagine that a subtle, self-aware, and humorous caliban makes a more attractive figure for many than a self-shattering "humpty dumpty" ... who seems to say little more than "words can be spelled however i choose to spell them." braithwaite's words exist in history, to the point where a revolutionary life becomes the embodiment of the verb of saying ... by extension, the act of writing _x/self_ can be seen as a parallel revolutionary act. such a statement, however, requires a major caveat. "by extension" masks a problem: the idea of revolutionary writing is based on a revolutionary reading of it, which in turn is based on the academic security of intellectual flexibility. and bernstein, despite his many gestures of renunciation, also wants power, at least in a more local academic arena..." (my ellipses)...

i'm not certain the implicit critique here of bernstein's poetic 'position' vis-a-vis braithwaite's doesn't fudge somewhat (even as it illuminates) what appears to be a privileging of some wider, less "local" (and more urgent?) "history" somehow implicit in braithwaite's "revolutionary" impulse... the question would seem to turn on the sort of poetic agency "embodied" by bernstein and braithwaite (which is not to say "identity")... how does agency operate in the bernstein readership vis-a-vis the braithwaite (yes there is overlap, of course)...

but it may be that it's the "revolutionary," in fact, that gives trouble in this context (an academic context, finally, given that bob's book is on princeton up, which of course seeps now into poetics---a somewhat more complicated context)... i'm thinking of what current notions of "revolutionary" might entail, readership-wise, as well as "anarchy"---regarding which i am tempted to say that so many counter-cultures have been effectively foreclosed upon in the past two decades (and then some)...

try this on---obliquely, by way of getting 'at' the humor in bernstein (and really---not an 'apologist' for charles here, just trying to get a handle on his agency, which may not be a matter merely of presumed "Self"-shatter, exactly):

"the humor of the oppressed is a funky thing that runs slantwise through sorrow and self-pity, a funny sideways nuance of irony and self-mockery: coming out of the black community, descending to from the remains of the east european yiddish ghettos. nobody writes 'light verse' any more. but there is humor and play and mockery and exaggeration in the most serious poems. because if you're trying to write in some way of your whole life with the whole person ... well, it's pretty absurd. you have to dig yourself, your own absurdity." (author's ellipsis)...

it's marge piercy, from "tom eliot meets the hulk at little big horn: the political economy of poetry," marge piercy and dick lourie... in _triquarterly_ no. 23/24, winter/spring 1972, special issue on "literature in revolution"; p. 89...

best,

joe

↑ Index

464. Michael Boughn
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> here's another quiz
> (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in there somewhere.
> md

It's Marianne Moore, Maria, in "Poetry":

. . . One must make a / distinction / however: when dragged into prominence by half poets, the result is / not poetry, / nor till the poets among us can be / 'literalisits of / the imagination'--above / insolence and triviality and can present // for inspection, 'imaginary gardens with real toads in them', shall we / have / it.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

465. Issa Clubb
Re: WBA
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> ....is actually one of the best CD-ROMs I've seen. Voyager, which I think is out of business, put it out. There's a great section on gay history deep in the interface, but of course some Funda-mentalist found it, and it's been banned in some high schools.

Thanks for the plug, but we're still very much in business. We had a well-publicized 'restructuring' or whatever you call it these days, that resulted in the ouster of founder and figurehead Bob Stein & the cutting of the nominal CD-ROM production department. But we're still making CDROMs, almost as many as last year in fact, including... ta dah!... WBA II. But don't get too excited, it's not done yet -- in fact I probably shouldn't be mentioning it.

As for the gay cowboys, it was Apple who tried to drop it from a bundle, we made a federal case out of it and they backed down. Pretty fun stuff, all in all (when you win). It might be banned in some high schools, I don't know -- probably more for the frontier abortionist stuff...

And as for Jordan's question, I've been working on the same piece for 5 years now, trying to find the proper medium for it. I think I've settled on hypertextualbook length-video-poem. That I'll then print onto a series of Tshirts. Or something.

--issa

_____
Issa Clubb
Voyager Art Dept. mailto:[redacted]

↑ Index

466. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Maria Damon wrote:
>
> still no clear answers on the clay/liston fight poem. here's another quiz
> (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary > somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in > there somewhere.
> md
>
> At 9:27 AM -0500 4/15/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
> >"float like a butterfly
> >sting like a bee"
> >
> >was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't > >believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is > >in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
> >I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....
> >
> >was it Bundini Brown?
> >
> >Tom
> >
> >
> >
> >Tom Mandel [redacted]
> >*******
> >Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
> >4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
> >Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

> >*******
> > Join the Caucus ConversationMaria,
  That's "imaginary gardens with real toads in them"
--from Marianne Moore's "Poetry" [the one that begins "I, too, dislike it"].
--Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

467. amato
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

oh shit: that first "to" in the piercy quote should be "too"...

sorry!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

468. Michael Franco
CHARLES BERNSTEIN IN BOSTON
Wed 16 Apr 1997

The Word of Mouth reading series presents AN AFTERNOON WITH CHARLES BERNSTEIN.
DATE : SUNDAY, April 20th

TIME: 3:30pm

PLACE: WORLD WIDE BUILDING, ARTISTS WEST, SECOND FLOOR, Studio #8, 144 Moody St. Waltham Ma.{Waltham Center}

ADMISSION: $3.00
WHEEL CHAIR ACCESSIBLE

SPONSOR: WORD OF MOUTH READING SERIES
Phone for information: [redacted] (Or [redacted] Day of reading only)
 e-mail [redacted]

THE DETAILS: LOCATION: WORLD WIDE BUILDING: 144 MOODY ST. WALTHAM MA. [ARTISTS WEST, SECOND FLOOR, STUDIO # 8]. HOW TO GET THERE: COMMUTER RAIL [N. STATION OR PORTER SQ. TRAINS LEAVE AT 3pm (N. STATION) OR 3:10PM (PORTER SQ.). STUDIOS ARE A 3 MIN WALK FROM THE STATION. BY CAR: MOODY ST IS JUST OFF OF WALTHAM COMMON. FREE PARKING AVAILABLE.

Many Thanks, ⍰.. Michael Franco/ WoM

↑ Index

469. Joel Kuszai
Help!
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

if anyone out there can help me find the following people, I would appreciate it greatly (e-mail or snail mail will do):

1. Thomas Orange of UWO
2. Taylor Stoehr

and as a matter of trivia (a student of mine is writing a paper on Yoko Ono):

whatever happened to Tony Cox and their daughter?

it seems like I had a longer list before I sat down to write this.

↑ Index

470. simon
Re: Imaginary Interview Question
Wed 16 Apr 1997

I'm usually working on two or three, but they're at different "stages" (whateve that means), at least, they were started at different times. But what I've also found is that, without planning to, the poem I'm working on "most" is, almost always, in some way, connected to the prose piece I'll also be working on. I'm always working poems and prose at the same time.

beth simon

↑ Index

471. aerialedge
perhaps this is a rescue fantasy by Heather Fuller
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

now available:

perhaps this is a rescue fantasy

by Heather Fuller

"Heather Fuller's lines are 'moves' being made, as if in her peripheral vision where everything's happening. Her 'moves' are in this periphery 'on their own': "I saw Graceland in the narrow of a morning." The poems start out before we read them; or as if simultaneous, to one side of us-- "I watch for entering words / never running away but into Out." One has the sense of the reader being the speaker who at once does not know, hasn't pre-formed, what is being said (and what is going to be). The writing is "the cut and joining when you are speaker and not knowing." --Leslie Scalapino

"For Heather Fuller enjamb north-south-street-lettres smarts in the narralyrical riff space full of humor & attention & rage. "I don't fuck pronouns and no visits from scribes," she writes. That is, "_Dear Formalist_ . . . woman arrested for lying under sculpture. . . the sculpture _Fish Out of Water._" Meanwhile, "I make love in the most irrelevant places." That is, "_Please ask to be reseated if you think you lack the strength_" for this rescue fantasy." --Joan Retallack

$10 postpaid
72 pages
1-890311-00-6

Orders to:
Edge Books
POBox 25642
Washington, DC 20007

thanks.

↑ Index

472. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
Wed 16 Apr 1997

"Poetry America was born before us & will live after us--and would've been visible for every eye to see but for the scientists of poetry & sociologists of Academy measuring the vast mind with monkey calipers & teaspsoons of ink--" Allen Ginsberg

Plus ca change, plus c'est la meme chose . . . George Will's column, the attendant brou-haha--it doesn't make Norman Podhoretz's attack on the Beats "The Know Nothing Bohemians" seem so far distant.

an underappreciated aspect of Ginsberg, Kerouac, Burroughs, Snyder, Whalen, DiPrima et als work is the serious independent scholarship and study it continues to inspire--in many fields--in many ways--by many people--in poetry, languages, history, religion, philosophy, music--at two Kerouac Birthday celebrations and Ginsberg memorial at Woodland Pattern here in Milwaukee--this much in evidence, spanning now a number of generations--

"Poetry America was born before us & will live after us" as Ginsberg wrote--whatever Will or Podhoretz & Co. say--

(note that Will, a Cubs fan, must be having a rough time of late himself--what with the eleven game losing streak to open the season--but then, there again, with the Cubs--plus ca change . . .)

dbc

↑ Index

473. Charles Bernstein
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> I simply meant to imply that in certain ways today our social milieu shares many traits with those of Victorian England. . . .
> My point in writing the post you quote was to learn what disasters had been spared by 'media revolutionaries.'

A hundred years ago Oscar Wilde -- a writer perhaps even more celebrated in Victorian England than Allen Ginsberg in postwar America -- was hounded to death while at the very height of his fame and at the top of his magnificent form. Allen Ginsberg, and to be sure many others, courageously refused to be bashed down by the perverts who would end a person's life and career because of their sexual orientation or lifestyle. He was part of a massive cultural movement to make what happened to Wilde if not unthinkable at least unacceptable in the U S of A. He did this not by presenting "positive" images of being gay or smoking pot but by presenting by turns joyous and defiant images of these things and a number of others. Wilde ends his days in jail and then disgrace. Ginsberg is celebrated even in the pages that reviled him -- the Times, the New Yorker, &c --

I write that not because it is not well known to the people on this list, but because it bears repeating.

↑ Index

474. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
Wed 16 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Christina Fairbank Chirot wrote:

> an underappreciated aspect of Ginsberg, Kerouac, Burroughs, > Snyder, Whalen, DiPrima et als work is the serious independent scholarship > and study it continues to inspire--in many fields--in many ways--by many > people--in poetry, languages, history, religion, philosophy, music--at > two Kerouac Birthday celebrations and Ginsberg memorial at Woodland

> Pattern here in Milwaukee--this much in evidence, spanning now a number > of generations--
>
I would say this is definitely true - at least for me in relation to Di Prima and her earliest work like Dinners and Nightmares, which seemed much more interesting to me than any other lit of that period (and still does to some extent) - and her trajectory through the years has taught me a lot
- just finished rereading Revolutionary Letters though which reifies the NME to such an extent that HE disappears into monolith and we are always painted as the good guys and I'm as corrupt as they come, we're all, and can't identify -

Alan - but these thinkings wouldn't otherwise surface -

↑ Index

475. henry g
Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

what if art is a process. not automatically a process of discontent. something else. & enlisting it in vanguard of discontent/truth-seeking/ rebellion ends up hiding the truth as much as revealing it. what if the process leads to a more radical truth if discontent is not taken as a given (thus leading to all the institutionalized hypocrisies & comedies DB alluded to). we've had these non-arguments over huge- abstractions before. [exhale] yes, troubled humanity, I have once again dissected "art" & lifted it in conformtent formcontaldehyde for your dispection.

Henry Gould

↑ Index

476. Keith Tuma
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

I don't think Bob P privileges Brathwaite (that's without an "i" said the pedant) over Bernstein. That Bernstein "wants power" goes without saying: who doesn't? As I read it, Bob P's point involves the mediations of the "academy" to which both writers are more or less subject. The contrast worth making is between the (mostly) dispersive energies of CB's practice and the gathering energies of Brathwaite's. This contrast is itself made (not in exactly this way) by CB in his remarks on KB in "Poetics of the Americas." What would be worth contesting in Bob P's reading of KB, and also in CB's reading of KB, is their sense of KB's practice as singular (this is related to mark's point but not the same point). I take it that much of X/Self has little to do with "nation-language" at least as KB has defined it, that there is indeed a "vernacular" present in the poem and that it is this vernacular that grounds "nation-language" and the utopian identity politics the poem is imagining. I take it too that--elsewhere--there is something else going on, more related to dispersing than gathering. Caliban as rebel, Caliban as hero: dispersing and gathering both. What Bob P acknowledges but does not to my thinking stress enough is the Caribbean location of KB's project. Different issues there than the ones CB must face. And when KB's text enters into USAmerican contexts it is something else. For a shameless plug I'll mention that I've discussed some of these issues in an essay in paul naylor's _River City_.

This is too brief, perhaps cryptic, but i've a thousand things to do today. And anyway as i read Mark the real force of his question to Bob involves matters other than the remarks on KB and CB.

keith tuma

↑ Index

477. Hugh Steinberg
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

With all these postings on Ali, I wonder if anyone has published a book of his collected works? It'd be a kick to read.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

478. Pritchett,Pat
FW: The Greatest
Wed 16 Apr 1997

I pray my server is swift today...

Clay comes out to meet Liston
And Liston starts to retreat
If Liston goes any further He'll end up in a ringside seat
Clay swings with a left Clay swings with a right
Look at young Cassius
Carry the fight
Liston keeps backing
But there's not enough room

It's a matter of time
There, Clay lowers the boom
Now Clay swings with a right
What a beautiful swing
And the punch raises the bear
Clear out of the ring
Liston is still rising
And the ref wears a frown
For he can't start the counting
Till Sonny comes down
Now Liston disappears from view
The crowd is getting frantic
But our radar stations have picked him up
He's somewhere over the Atlantic
Who would have thought
When they came to the fight
That they'd witness the launching
Of a human satellite
Yes the crowd did not dream
When they lay down their money
That they would see
A total eclipse of the Sonny
I am the greatest!

↑ Index

479. Christopher Reiner found poem
Wed 16 Apr 1997

(Intro: It's not unusual for web site designers to place "keywords" into a page's actual html code so that search engines like Alta Vista or Infoseek will index the page in response to a word or phrase typed in as a query by you or me. These keywords are not visible, but the search engines will still register their presence. In fact, the more times the word is used, the higher the ranking of the page in the index of "hits.". What follows is a list of keywords from the Heaven's Gate site, which I have copied from its Home Page source code. I present here it as a found poem, without any extra linebreaks or whatnot... -- Chris R.)

<meta name="keywords" content="Heaven's Gate,

Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate,

ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, space alien, space alien, space alien,
space alien, space alien, space alien, extraterrestrial,
extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial,

extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, millennium, millennium, millennium,

millennium, millennium, millennium, millennium,

misinformation, misinformation,

misinformation, misinformation, misinformation, misinformation,

freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, angels, angels, angels,

angels, angels, angels, end times, end times, end times, end times, end times, end

times, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, God, God, God, God, God, God">

</head>

↑ Index

480. Mark Weiss

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera

Wed 16 Apr 1997

Along with our national flag, anthem, bird, miss, mrs, etc, we have at the moment a national psychological strategu--passive aggression--and a national affect--the smirk.

At 12:26 PM 4/16/97 +0100, you wrote:
>Matthias Regan-
>
>I simply meant to imply that in certain ways today our social milieu shares >many traits with those of Victorian England. The most obvious is the >pervasive social usage of "niceness" as a way to avoid critical dialogue.
>Although the surface is pleasant-"that was a nice poem, a nice reading, a >nice (fill in the blank)-hidden hostilities remain directly unspoken. The >Middle English usage of the word-'foolish'-descended from prior French and >Latin cognates meaning 'ignorant' or 'not knowing.' It's interesting to >hear 'nice' so over-used in today's contexts.
>
>Also, while today's climate feels more open in certain respects than in the >past, we still live in a market economy narrowly defined by a monopoly of >political, social, and cultural interests.

>
>I feel I'm not being specific enough, however, within this space of e-mail >comminication. What I've written is too general and I haven't connected to >anything concrete. My point in writing the post you quote was to learn >what disasters had been spared by 'media revolutionaries.' I was >addressing Piombino's vague statement with my own. I'd be happy to >backchannel re: this issue, if you'd like. I don't think it's worth >wasting much space. I had Raymond Williams' The Country and The City in >mind when I posted.
>
>
>>>What disasters have been spared? The social, political, and aesthetic >>>reality of this country today resembles Victorian England more than ever.
>>>
>>
>> This seems like a strange thing to say. What do you have in mind?
>>
>>Matthias Regan
>>Northwestern University
>>Department of Chemistry
>>Phone: 847/[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

481. Mark Weiss

Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman

Wed 16 Apr 1997

To an outsider this continues to be very weird. Two of the parties, Bernstein and perelman, are on the list. Why do we theorize about what one meant about the other and what the other may think of it? Isn't this like talking about people in the room as if they weren't there? Why don't we just query them for their own input?

At 02:32 PM 4/16/97 EST, you wrote:
>I don't think Bob P privileges Brathwaite (that's without an "i" said the >pedant) over Bernstein. That Bernstein "wants power" goes without saying: who >doesn't? As I read it, Bob P's point involves the mediations of the "academy" >to which both writers are more or less subject. The contrast worth making is >between the (mostly) dispersive energies of CB's practice and the gathering >energies of Brathwaite's. This contrast is itself made (not in exactly this >way) by CB in his remarks on KB in "Poetics of the Americas." What would be >worth contesting in Bob P's reading of KB, and also in CB's reading of KB, is >their sense of KB's practice as singular (this is related to mark's point but >not the same point). I take it that much of X/Self has little to do with

>"nation-language" at least as KB has defined it, that there is indeed a
>"vernacular" present in the poem and that it is this vernacular that grounds
>"nation-language" and the utopian identity politics the poem is imagining. I >take it too that--elsewhere--there is something else going on, more related to >dispersing than gathering. Caliban as rebel, Caliban as hero: dispersing and >gathering both. What Bob P acknowledges but does not to my thinking stress >enough is the Caribbean location of KB's project. Different issues there than >the ones CB must face. And when KB's text enters into USAmerican contexts
it >is something else. For a shameless plug I'll mention that I've discussed >some of these issues in an essay in paul naylor's _River City_.
>
>This is too brief, perhaps cryptic, but i've a thousand things to do today. And >anyway as i read Mark the real force of his question to Bob involves matters >other than the remarks on KB and CB.
>
>keith tuma
>
>

↑ Index

482. Jordan Davis
Nationalismo
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Mark Weiss's proposition below is not true; rather than the nation, it characterizes itself. Or, as a mystery bonus allusion for cross-readers of POETICS and CAP-L, the nation is just what you say -- the world is ugly and the people are sad.

Jordan

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Along with our national flag, anthem, bird, miss, mrs, etc, we have at the moment a national psychological strategu--passive aggression--and a national affect--the smirk.

↑ Index

483. Ken Edwards
Ginsberg PS
Wed 16 Apr 1997

I've been having difficulty getting my messages bounced back (I hope it's sorted now) so I'm a bit late with this, but I was reminded when Ginsberg died of my report to this list of the Albert Hall gig he starred in, in London, back in Oct 95; I quote myself:

"I find his first poem incredibly moving in its wry, humorous acceptance of death and dissolution ("What a mess I am, Allen Ginsberg"; "Allen Ginsberg warns you: don't follow my path to extinction")."

Seems like he saw it coming from way off.

In the midst of a UK general election campaign that is unprecedentedly dismal in its hypocrisy, cant and soundbite-count, I long for some of that honesty & humanity.

↑ Index

484. Jordan Davis
Re: Is anybody still dissing
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Mark --

Sorry about the hostile tone of that last post. Guess I was enacting exactly what I was criticizing again (whoops!).

But once again to quibble -- does it make sense to speak of outsiders on a listserv? Seems more like there are readers who indicate that they have read _by writing back_, and then there are readers who either read and it's enough, or else they just keep deleting until they see a subject they like. It is a topic, all right, the anger of poets who are entering a discussion.

That said, I agree, the rhetoric of posts about list members (and the subsequent silence) _is_ kind of funny. It's not exactly like watching bear-baiting... Bob Perelman, doesn't it happen to you every few weeks?

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> To an outsider this continues to be very weird. Two of the parties,

↑ Index

485. Pritchett,Pat
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Not to my knowledge. Thomas Hauser's book on Ali is the one to read - an oral bio. And Ali himself came out with his autobio _The Greatest_. Wilfrid Sheed has also done a fine photo-essay book on him - prob. out of print. His poems appear here & there. George Plimpton has a piece about the meeting he arranged between Marianne Moore and then Cassius Clay - to tie together both of Maria Damon's recent queries. It's quite amusingly related, as I recall - but the event, in which they worked together on a poem - was an anti-climax, acc. to Plimp.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Hugh Steinberg
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: float/sting
Date: Wednesday, April 16, 1997 3:28PM

With all these postings on Ali, I wonder if anyone has published a book of his collected works? It'd be a kick to read.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

486. Joe Safdie
Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
Wed 16 Apr 1997

On Tue, 15 Apr 1997, David Bromige wrote (in part):

. . . we pass from nakedness to The Nude, and eventually, Dada rests in the Museum, whose calm framing does a lot to tranquilize shock. I don't like to sound aloof, but I doubt that there's a whole lot to be done to alter this dynamic . . . poets who work within institutions frequently are nominated to help out with further institutions, where they learn the value (a real value!) of compromise, and the way of life this can become must place their art-selves in considerable jeopardy. Its easier to kid yourself, harder to find the foul rag-&-bone yard--or blissful indifference--of the heart of the matter of human being.

Gosh, David, where did this come from? Am I misreading you by seeing this as a statement of futility, of one's art inevitably coming to nothing, of tragic (even) melancholy? How are you feeling today?

Compromise is certainly a virtue in faculty meetings and marriages, but I doubt whether any good poem ever arose out of it. Are you saying that any poet who works in an institution, MUST, necessarily, give up the poetic urges, the rag-and-bone shop, of one's art self? And thus compromise? Do you feel you've done this? Granted, it's unbearably easy to kid one's self, but if any art I'm lucky enough to create can come only at the expense of my official duties at this institution or any other -- I'll quit! I'll let my wife support me! (Just kidding, Sara).

Your post reminded me of Jim Carroll's unjustifiably neglected first rock-'n-roll album (circa 1980); there's a song on it that has the lyric:

But it ain't no contribution
To rely on the institution
To justify your chosen art
To sanction your boredom
And let you play out your part

(loud guitar strums)

I admire your dictum regarding short posts, but I sure would like to hear more about this . . .

↑ Index

487. Joe Safdie
Re: Will's column/Plus ca change . . .
Wed 16 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Christina (?) Fairbank Chirot wrote:

(note that Will, a Cubs fan, must be having a rough time of late himself--what with the eleven game losing streak to open the season--but then, there again, with the Cubs--plus ca change . . .)

That's the fifth baseball reference in the last week (I've been counting). I really hope nobody's offended, because . . .

The Giants are in first place! (This may be the only time this season I'll be able to say that).

By the way, do we have another Jennifer/Alan situation with this post. Are you David, Christina, or both?

↑ Index

488. George Bowering
Re: ginsberg and snyder
Wed 16 Apr 1997

> "When?" is the question. At two different times or in a different dimension.
> tom
> At 10:31 PM 4/13/97 -0700, George Bowering wrote:

> Does using adjacent urinals in two different states
>
> Where is that possible?

Well, it would have to be in some can on a state line, wouldnt it?

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

489. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: float/sting
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Maria Damon wrote:
>
> cool, daniel z: what would you like: a copy of my gertrude stein article, a > copy of my book, or a copy of the new journal CrossCultural Poetix?
>
> At 8:52 AM -0700 4/16/97, Daniel Zimmerman wrote:
> >Maria Damon wrote:
> >>
> >> still no clear answers on the clay/liston fight poem. here's another quiz
> >> (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary > >> somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in
> >> there somewhere.
> >> md
> >>
> >> At 9:27 AM -0500 4/15/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
> >> >"float like a butterfly
> >> >sting like a bee"
> >> >
> >> >was spoken by one of Muhammed's cornermen, not by him. I can't > >> >believe I'm forgetting the guy's name (like forgetting what is > >> >in one panel of a favorite stained glass emblazoned on brain);
> >> >I'll probably wake up with it at 2am....

> >> >
> >> >was it Bundini Brown?
> >> >
> >> >Tom
> >> >
> >> >
> >> >
> >> >Tom Mandel [redacted]
> >> >*******
> >> >Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
> >> >4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
> >> >Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
> >> >*******
> >> > Join the Caucus ConversationMaria,
> > That's "imaginary gardens with real toads in them"
> >--from Marianne Moore's "Poetry" [the one that begins "I, too, dislike > >it"].
> >--Dan Zimmerman

Thanks for the offer, Maria; how about a trade? I've just published a book, Blue Horitals (Amman, Jordan: Oasii, 1997), with my late friend & teacher Jack Clarke [7 poems by each of us]. Give me a snail mail address & I'll send you a copy. You could send me whatever you like best. My address:

485 Parsonage Road
Edison, NJ 08837

Ma►ana,
Dan Zimmerman,
Real Toad

↑ Index

490. Dave Zauhar

Re: FW: The Greatest (a variant reading, perhaps)

Wed 16 Apr 1997

Pat P. Had the swifter server, but here's another Ali poem on Liston:

This is a story about a man
With Iron Fists and a beautiful tan.
He talks a lot indeed,
Of a powerful punch and blinding speed.

The boxing game was slowly dying,
And fight promoters were bitterly crying

For someone somewhere to come along
With a better and different tone.

Patterson was dull, quiet and sad,
And Sonny Liston was just as bad.
Along came a kid named Cassius Clay,
Who said, "I'll take Liston's title away."

His athletic genius cannot be denied.
In a very short time
He Spread far and wide.

There's an impression you get Watching him fight.
He plays cat and mouse
Then turns out the light.

This colorful fighter is something to see,
And the Greatest Heavyweight Champion
I know he will be.

And, another variation on the theme of Sonny Liston, shorter and w/ slanter rhymes.

King Liston will stay
Only until he meets Cassius Clay.
Moore fell in Four, Liston
In eight.

Finally, a poem that resulted in death threats:

Keep asking me, no matter how long,
on the war in Viet Nam, I'll sing this song:
I ain't got no quarrel with the Viet Cong.

Dave Zauhar, mostly quoting Muhammad Ali

↑ Index

491. George Bowering

Re: Moore

Wed 16 Apr 1997

> still no clear answers on the clay/liston fight poem. here's another quiz (i desperately need the answer to): what's that line that goes "imaginary somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in there somewhere.
> md

Oh, yr going to get 523 answers on this one, Maria. It was the first statement on poetics I ever heard, when I was a lonely school kid on the desert. Marianne Moore. (1) garden (2) toad

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

492. DS
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

With apologies i ask this prurient question.

If you had to stand in one state & piss into the other - which would be the more likely recipient.

Dan

> keith tuma
> who lives eight miles from a town (college corner, indiana/ohio) where it's possible to piss in two states at once though he's never never tried to do so, being content to piss in two states of mind

↑ Index

493. Keith Tuma
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Mark--

If I want to ask Bob "Hey do you privilege Brathwaite over Bernstein in that book of yours?" I'll ask him. Then we'll have a new text I'll come to some sort of conclusion about. I was venturing an opinion about part of another one already published and X/Self itself--in response to Wallace's post.

No bear-baiting involved (hi Jordan, I'm talking about you now, as well as to you but look a few people are listening either way)--just bull. Asking people questions directly and out of the blue in this forum--"Hey Bob do you privilege Brathwaite over Bernstein in that book of yours?"--now that would be strange. Kind of like writing a review and mailing it to someone with a bill attached, and a note saying that you must respond now or else.

Sometimes texts authored by members of the list and not the text of the list itself becomes the object of discussion, no? Perhaps it is awkward. Perhaps it is simply inevitable--after all, you are all so prolific in this electronic world and beyond it.

all best--
keith tuma
who lives eight miles from a town (college corner, indiana/ohio) where it's possible to piss in two states at once though he's never never tried to do so, being content to piss in two states of mind

↑ Index

494. AARON SHURIN
Re: Paging Mr. Mossin
Wed 16 Apr 1997

With apologies to listers, Andrew Mossin if you're currently out there will you backchannel me with your e-mail address? Thanks.

Aaron Shurin

↑ Index

495. David Israel
if not to lurk
Wed 16 Apr 1997

Hi all --

d.i. here, back from many days in California -- a place more fond for distance -- [to any in SF area, highly recommended: Leonard Pitt & Ruth Zaporah's "Seduction" (A Traveling Jewish Theatre, Artaud Project, thru May 4), co-directed by Rinde Eckert): think [Hollywood-sprach here] Godot meets Chaplain & dances the Tango . . .

but I've emerged from nonbeing for this comment --

~ ~ ~ start ~ ~ ~
Date: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 17:45:51 EST5EDT
From: LYNES- KATHERINE <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Imaginary Interview Question

okay, all right.... pressure, always pressure.... i work on several at a time.... <snip}

back to lurking [the moniker [and no i'm not looking up the spelling of that]
of which i'm not sure i like....] kl ~ ~ ~ end ~ ~ ~

so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?

if not to lurk, then what?

back to surveying
back to minding the shop

back to the woods of silence
back to the original language

returning now to the ghostly gaze
hush! a spectre in the silent haze

back to death's chair, reading life

cybernetic study
primal position
uncarved block

watchtower lookout aerie ledge
back to the corner back to the bayou

back to the audience (quitting the stage)
hie me to the boxseat
or (pace Byrne) back into the box

? or . . .

↑ Index

496. David Israel
erratum
Wed 16 Apr 1997

---

for:
> highly recommended ... Leonard Pitt & Ruth Zaporah's "Secuction"

read:
> . . . "Seduction"

that would be Seduction, Kansas -- a train-stop (the near-wordless, much-voice-ful, gesturesome piece takes place on the train platform)

also: in a Borders Books down on the Santa Monica mall noted Kevin Killian's volume while purchasing Rudyard Kipling's

tip of the hat to Sir Gould for recent "we are Victorians" ruminance

BUT NOTE: email has spawned / is spawning what is (to my mind) clearly a neo-Victorian [in far from perjorative sense, gentlefolk] sense of epistolary practice -- wherein the lettered gentleman or gentlewoman might aptly & suitably expect to pass four or five hours of an evening reading & composing letters -- something scarcely seen till this medium hs brought back -- I opine -- the good ghost of it . . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

497. Small Press Traffic

McCaffery and Willis rock SF

Wed 16 Apr 1997

Small Press Traffic presents

Steve McCaffery and Elizabeth Willis

SATURDAY
April 19
7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia St, San Francisco (between 18th & 19th)

_____
Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
766 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110 415/[redacted]

↑ Index

498. henry gould

Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera

Wed 16 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997 13:52:58 -0700 Mark Weiss said: >Along with our national flag, anthem, bird, miss, mrs, etc, we have at the >moment a national psychological strategu--passive aggression--and a national >affect--the smirk.

Do I detect a smirk on the end of this critique? Is this an example of the iterative function of criticism in a de-centered sensorium? Or is that just me again - smirking? - Errant Blarndrift (whose Grandmother, Florence Hale Ainsworth, was born on the 4th of July, 1900, was a member of the D.A.R., and whose grandson Errant loves the Stars & Stripes along with the Union Jackdrift.) (&

Allen Ginsberg, the Leader of the Cultural Revolution, can go fly a Pantoum over the United Gaps of America)

↑ Index

499. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS

Re: found poem

Wed 16 Apr 1997

Christopher (Chris?)

thanks for the heaven's gate found poem. chilling, to say the least. the droning repetition seems appropriate in characterizing a sort of religious denial. if one keeps repeating the words, no other ideas can get in.

kyle conner

↑ Index

500. George Bowering

Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman

Thu 17 Apr 1997

> With apologies i ask this prurient question.
>
> If you had to stand in one state & piss into the other - which would be the more likely recipient.
>
> Dan
>
> keith tuma
> who lives eight miles from a town (college corner, indiana/ohio) where it's possible to piss in two states at once though he's never never tried to do so,
> being content to piss in two states of mind

Here's what I want to know: is that claim a manifestation of patriarchal hegemony?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

501. David Bromige
if this is still under discussion
Thu 17 Apr 1997

But "secuction" is good. Surely a word that Ginsberg would like. A secret, seductive concoction of return-of-the-repressed, hiccuping, cocksucking by the Secaucus 7, suction masters & section doctors, etcetera. Just what Flaubert in Henry's quote is talking about, and certainly art is a process, but when I wrote "Discontents" I was suggestion an origin for that process. For as someone said, writing is hard work, although the joy ("secuction!") can be great. Something h a s to come out. Were you there when it all came out? Ginsberg came out early. Something out of sight deep inside is going to come out any . . . time . . .NOW! It doesnt erupt from the author, does it? It appears to erupt from the sentence, to the erupting reader. It hadn't been part of our content, it had been dis-content, denied & hidden content or mine or yours, & now, it's all over the papers, all over the newssheets. Barely civilized, it was, until we saw how expected it had, all along, (honky commas) been. Honky commas sit on it so as it wont blow, blow away. Until we began to tame it, to domesticate it, find ways to compromise with it, married to it must live with it, must alter it misunderstand it deny it ignore it. Must ask if its author got out of bed on the wrong side the morning of the night he made this object this non-ad-hominumizable object, this un homicidal ding-an-sich, this ding in his fender, "it just [not simply] happened to me as it were or was." As I-were-or-was was watching.

"Will have to [insert verb here] later" is also good, thanks Katherine Lynes. Lets say the verb, whichever, is the process Henry mentions. We dont know what it is yet but we know to leave a place for it, and we know to cover up that place (read as a sentence without brackets, the reader finds nothing open.)

Robin Blaser : "poets are the deodorant pucks in the urinal of life." In any state, simultaneously. A suggestion that poetry is in the pisser, pissoir that is. But with its nose towards the stars, blossoms in an appletree. Keep remembering to spell, so that it isnt just masterbation. (Geoffrey Timmons, stop flagellating yourself! You'll wake Mister Bowering, and he'll be thumping the lectern with his shoe again.) With the Don Allan Anthology, apologies to Don M-for-Modern-follows-the Postmodern Allen. Ectoplasm keeps leaking out of the parentheses into the above-board sentences, the open-faced sentences, and you got some on your pants! Now they'll all know . . what they already knew. They knew it of themselves. Now they know you know it of yourself, they'll know they know it of themselves. Then deny it. Go back and do it over. I love you, all of you. That's art for you.

↑ Index

502. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: History is Rewritten
Thu 17 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Of course, Jeffrey, you can have all the utopian dreams you want.

ill pass on the utopian dreams--im too much of a ironic pragmatist--but ill have some of the brie please.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

503. henry gould
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg in Victorian England: The Opera
Thu 17 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997 14:42:38 -0400 Charles Bernstein said:

Allen Ginsberg, and to be sure many others, courageously refused to be >bashed down by the perverts who would end a person's life and career because >of their sexual orientation or lifestyle. He was part of a massive cultural >movement to make what happened to Wilde if not unthinkable at least >unacceptable in the U S of A. He did this not by presenting "positive" >images of being gay or smoking pot but by presenting by turns joyous and >defiant images of these things and a number of others. Wilde ends his days >in jail and then disgrace. Ginsberg is celebrated even in the pages that >reviled him -- the Times, the New Yorker, &c --

Could it be said then that from a historical perspective Ginsberg and other leaders of the 60s represent the dialectical flip-side of American rugged individualism? Individual liberty (in terms of "lifestyle") over social and political "correctness"? The same movement expressed in different form in the confessional poetry of the time and the ego styles of the 70s. Since then, the self and her/his authorial intentions have gone out of fashion, both on the left and the right. On the latter we have bland traditionalist focus on superficialities of technique, on the former turgid avant-garde focus on superficialities of technique. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

504. Keith Norris
roofless in seattle
Thu 17 Apr 1997

A poet/review writer friend o mine needs a decent day job (temp work uncertain--no time for reading 700 page novels), and/or apt./place to live w/out deposit. In Seattle.

Backpost if you've got ideas...sorry for the instrusion...back to discussion.

Keith
-=-=-=-=-=

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Department PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933
[redacted]

↑ Index

505. Jeff Hansen
Bromige-Safdie
Thu 17 Apr 1997

David bromige insists on the seemingly inevitable and continuous struggle between art and institutions. Safdie wonders if he is saying that art is futile.

I sympathize with David's position. It seems to me that expecting our poetry to transcend the ideological, material, and social spheres of institutions and everyday interactions is what is futile. Placing too high a demand on poetry, asking too much of it -- the descendants of Shelley's "poets are the unaknowledged legislators ..." -- makes poetry futile. By insisting that it is embedded in the same network/nest of forces as other activities is to see it more accurately, to recognize its strengths and weaknesses rather than hoping for what is not there and ending with futility.

My sense is that most poems come out of implicit, rather than explicit, compromise. The compromise happened long before the moment of writing, in the poet's absorbing, thinking about, and coming to terms with the myriad poetical, social, and institutional forces impinging on him or her.

To be able to write means to have already compromised, and to have forgotten.

Jeff

↑ Index

506. Keith Norris
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Thu 17 Apr 1997

elbow(kind/delicious)into Perelman/Brathwaite/Bernstein chat--

As I read/write my way through Perelman's _Marginalization_, second time through spur(n)ed by this discussion, it (text in bathrobe) seems an in-house leftist critique of language writing. joining Andrews _P&M&P&P_ in negotiation of non-essentialist argument for essential political space.

Perelman's value of Brathwaite over Bernstein is use-value, possibility instead of danger of reification in Bernstein's "utopian politics of liberated textuality" (P 90)?

Sidebar: Eagleton's _Illusions of postmod_ seems to allow more room for a left-ist poetmodern poetics than other recent marxist critique-- Perelman's readerly/writerly distinctions dance well there, I think. Yes?

Keith

-=-=-=-=-=

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Department PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933
[redacted]

↑ Index

507. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Well actually Mark that gets at something which is a real live issue about this space, and other spaces like it...I don't think cybersocialspace functions in quite the way you think..I suspect that how it functions is more in flux and more contested than your post states. These two are also widely-known poet/theorists, and the discussion is not about them as people, but about their published books...I don't believe they should feel compelled to intervene in a discussion of their work, at least not right away..(they may wanna wait till something really pisses them off ;)...)

There is a constant push and pull between two structures of feeling: that cybersocialspace is like being in a room in a fairly intimate conversation, involving maybe half a dozen people; and that on the contrary it is very public and very widely-scrutinized, and much like debates and exchanges published on paper on various subjects. Your post suggests the former; I personally think that if people reflect for a minute they'll realize that the truth is closer to the latter idea. I think it's great for us to be able to ask CB and BP to respond to what folks have posted...But frankly I don't think they're obligated to, any more than they are obligated to respond by letter to every discussion of their work in a little mag or an academic journal. Ask 'em, by all means. But my take on public electro-discussion is, that it is suggesting we can't discuss their work that is "very weird." Remember that this is a public not a highly personal space, no matter what it feels like at times.

Mark P.

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> To an outsider this continues to be very weird. Two of the parties, Bernstein and perelman, are on the list. Why do we theorize about what one meant about the other and what the other may think of it? Isn't this like talking about people in the room as if they weren't there? Why don't we just query them for their own input?
>
> At 02:32 PM 4/16/97 EST, you wrote:
> I don't think Bob P privileges Brathwaite (that's without an "i" said the pedant) over Bernstein. That Bernstein "wants power" goes without saying: who doesn't? As I read it, Bob P's point involves the mediations of the "academy" to which both writers are more or less subject. The contrast worth making is between the (mostly) dispersive energies of CB's practice and the gathering energies of Brathwaite's. This contrast is itself made (not in exactly this way) by CB in his remarks on KB in "Poetics of the Americas." What would be worth contesting in Bob P's reading of KB, and also in CB's reading of KB, is their sense of KB's practice as singular (this is related to mark's point but not the same point). I take it that much of X/Self has little to do with "nation-language" at least as KB has defined it, that there is indeed a "vernacular" present in the poem and that it is this vernacular that grounds "nation-language" and the utopian identity politics the poem is imagining. I take it too that--elsewhere--there is something else going on, more related to dispersing than gathering. Caliban as rebel, Caliban as hero: dispersing and gathering both. What Bob P acknowledges but does not to my thinking stress enough is the Caribbean location of KB's project. Different issues there than the ones CB must face. And when KB's text enters into USAmerican contexts it is something else. For a shameless plug I'll mention that I've discussed some of these issues in an essay in paul naylor's _River City_.
>
> This is too brief, perhaps cryptic, but i've a thousand things to do today. And anyway as i read Mark the real force of his question to Bob involves matters other than the remarks on KB and CB.
>
> keith tuma

↑ Index

508. Jerry McGuire
Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Apr 1997 to 16 Apr 1997
Thu 17 Apr 1997

---

what's that line that goes "imaginary somethings with real something in them" i think the word "toadstools" is in there somewhere.

M.D.--what a great quiz! But it really ought to be a contest--my entry:

Imaginary prisons with real
George Wills in them (toadstools extra) . . .

Jerry

↑ Index

509. Matthias Regan
Re: found poem
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Chris R.--

> Just to say, I tend to be very suspicious > of found poems because usually they arn't > really found (but cropped in some way) or > aren't very good (compared, say, to Antin's)
> but I was shocked by this one! It is very moving, especially the way the line breaks worked, with the first "second coming" interrupting the "freedom" line and "extraterrestrial" carrying over into "millennium" twice--I didn't even need your explanation of the real reason for multiple words--though I think it contributes to the poem-- the repition reminds me of prayer, of designating a certain kind of strength to words, a weight--so that like a rosary the effect is directly related to the number. Thank you!

---

meta name="keywords" content="Heaven's Gate,

Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate,

ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, space alien, space alien, space alien,
space alien, space alien, space alien, extraterrestrial,
extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial,

extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, millennium, millennium, millennium,

millennium, millennium, millennium, millennium,

misinformation, misinformation,

misinformation, misinformation, misinformation, misinformation,

freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming,
angels, angels, angels, angels, angels, angels, end times, end times, end times, end times, end times,

end

times, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, God, God, God, God, God, God"

</head>

↑ Index

510. Michael Franco

Joe Dunn

Thu 17 Apr 1997

Sad news in this morning that Joe Dunn passed away this week-

"I have not given love to the house.
I love you

The house tells me to leave me alone and sit
because that is all I am.
I told the house
I can be like something
if I allowed it and the house said Bullshit..."

Joe Dunn- The Better Dream House- White Rabbit-1968

M Franco

↑ Index

511. LYNES- KATHERINE

Re: if not to lurk

Thu 17 Apr 1997

perhaps skimmer? naw. good idea, we do need, at least, i need a new word for the activity of reading and not responding to much if not most of the posts.... [of course, i don't have much to say about standing in one state or time zone and peeing in/into another.....]

i am, however, about half serious at least about being uncomfortable with the lurker title, but am too tired from our annual english department party [dnacing til midnight] to comment too much in length [and i'm trying to keep these short] or to come up with a more imaginative moniker.... lurker to me and to many women i know [and to some men, i'm sure, but, david letterman aside, the majority of "stalker objects" or victims are women], is a bit too close to stalker..... lurking beneath this, of course, are the trappings of electronic listserves.... so many posts, only so much time to read them much less respond.... but, enough excuses/reasons..... back to work. will have to [insert verb here] later.

katherine.

> Date: Wed, 16 Apr 1997 20:47:35 -0400
> Subject: if not to lurk

I've emerged from nonbeing for this comment --
> Subject: Re: Imaginary Interview Question
>
> okay, all right.... pressure, always pressure.... i work on several at a > time.... <snip}
> back to lurking [the moniker [and no i'm not looking up the spelling of that]
> of which i'm not sure i like....] kl
> ~ ~ ~ end ~ ~ ~
>
> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>
> if not to lurk, then what?
>
> back to surveying
> back to minding the shop
>
> back to the woods of silence
> back to the original language
>
> returning now to the ghostly gaze

> hush! a spectre in the silent haze
>
> back to death's chair, reading life
>
> cybernetic study
> primal position
> uncarved block
>
> watchtower lookout aerie ledge
> back to the corner back to the bayou
>
> back to the audience (quitting the stage)
> hie me to the boxseat
> or (pace Byrne) back into the box
>
> ? or . . .
>

↑ Index

512. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: if not to lurk
Thu 17 Apr 1997

---

addendum to previous post about lurking....

how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...

kl

in response to david israel:

> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>
> if not to lurk, then what?

↑ Index

513. michael corbin
Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
Thu 17 Apr 1997

David Bromige wrote:
>

>
> Tragic? How about Beckett's "I cant go on. I'll go on." That makes more > sense to me. Tragic is compromised with posturings.
>

An excellent and important distinction. Cioran writes well of this precisely in regard to Beckett. In _The Temptation to Exist_ he inveighs on the "Contagion of Tragedy": "It is not pity, it is envy the tragic hero inspires in us, that lucky devil whose sufferings we devour as if we were entitled to them and he had cheated us of them. . . . Armed with his fate and rushing toward his defeat faster than he, we spare him at most a superior smile, while we reserve to ourselves alone the merits of the fault of the murder, the remorse, or expiation."

And those compromised postures--the murderer, the manque of remorse, the politician of expiation the . . . poet, abject; abject poetics--are struck in the mise-en-scene of the often falsely meaningful shorthand of 'institutions'. Like some black-hole that we by definition can't see, but by necessity believe in (what would it mean not to believe, what would it mean to say "How are you feeling today?") has a mass so great that even sweetness and light fail to obtain escape velocities.

But we can pre-tend, praetendere. "Estragon (suddenly furious): Recognize! What is there to recognize? All my lousy life I've crawled about in the mud! And you talk to me about scenery! (Looking widely about him) Look at this muck-heap! I've never stirred from it! . . . You and your landscapes! Tell me about the worms!"

mc

↑ Index

514. Joe Safdie
Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
Thu 17 Apr 1997

David,

Believe me, I'm VERY glad to find out that I've misinterpreted you; I did note the qualifications you used, even in your original message, but still thought (and think) that you were making a provocative generalization that -- as you said -- warranted more comment. My question only inquired if you were making that generalization based on your own experience, and yes, that has now been clarified!

I thought "ad hominem" meant an argument -- mud slinging, as it were -- "against the man." Did you think I was doing that? Please: your presence on this list is an unqualified delight, and, as one correspondent mentioned to me not long ago, you raise the practice of E-mails to an art form!

I would still be interesting in hearing, from others, how the practice of working at an institution -- and, indeed, "institutionalizing" one's career, which is another issue -- affects the practice of one's art-self.

All best,

Joe

↑ Index

515. linda v. russo
Re: History Is A Rumor
Thu 17 Apr 1997

& I heard BU assigned him a horrid office in a basement somewhere -- perhaps a rumor, but one i tend to believe, since there are many conceivable rumors abt that institution, such as silber admitting a disproportional number (in terms of their average) of international/minority students to pump up his image as a welcoming mulitculturalist in preparation for running for mayor.

> > howard zinn's book A People's History of the United States or some such is > > very good for this purpose. it's thick tho, which may intimidate some hs > > students, but very readable and an eye-opener.
>
> yes, this one is definitely worth a peek.
> it's worth noting that zinn, who teaches
> at boston university, has suffered more > than a bit for his political practice. a few > years back, president silber (who has
> now left the univ. for a prominent position
> in MA public ed--talk about frightening),
> in what is probably the most recent, &
> most prominent instance of the university
> administration's usually quiet campaign
> against zinn & the left in general, tried to > have him fired when, refusing to cross
> the picket line of the then-striking clerical
> workers, zinn held his classes off campus.

>
> chris
> ..
> christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective > [redacted] / **********
>
> http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce
>
> Hey!!
> Now Available for a mere $4:
> _constellation voice_ by linda russo
>
>
--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

516. linda v. russo
Re: Knott/AG
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Rachel -- thanks for bringing that up. Before I jump in & lose list readership let me say you'll be glad to know that Knott has a new & selected coming out from Boa editions SOON.

"To American Poets" seems to be written, in part, _to_ AG, or at least to his 'generation' of poets -- which both is & isn't BK's generation. I don't know when it was written, but _The Naomi Poems_ was published in 1968. The poem you quote from is beautiful, both praising & criticising American poets from Pound & WCW to the 'vietnam generation' for being -- well, American poets, at a time when "there's no time left to write poems" and "The world is not divided into your schools of poetry." We both don't need poetry and need it and need it to do more. The lines -- from which you paraphrase -- seem to me appropriately elegiac:

. . .You are not important. Your black mountains, solitary farms, LSD trains. Don't forget: you are important.
If you fail, there will be no-one left to say so.
If you succeed, there will also be a great silence. Your names, an open

secret in all hearts, no-one will say. But everywhere they will be finishing the poems you broke away from.

-- l.

> Linda Russo--
>
> re that Bill Knott seeming to "connect" somehow. Grudgingly returned his > Niomi poems to the library a few days ago so I can't quote directly but > his "To American Poets" was in front of me with AG's death in the > news--something like:
>
> "your name will be an open secret"
>
> (and)
>
> "everywhere we will be finishing the poems you broke away from"
>
> RK
>
>
--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

517. David Bromige

Bromige-Safdie

Thu 17 Apr 1997

Sounds like a position to occupy in American football. Isnt it "tangled web," and wasnt it Robbie Burns? or Shakespeare? Was it really Donne, or were you, Steven Marks, embodying your point about forgetting and the individual (a provocative one, btw)? "Remember to spell" was a gesture in my piece, towards what i think Jeff may have meant, and you may have, by "compromise." I recall a student (and he wasnt entirely alone in his notion of the individual) who insisted a word could mean, in his poetry, precisely what he wanted it to mean, w/o reference to any dictionary or any common parlance. Some of his classmates told him he was "just jacking off"--as though there were something bad about jacking off. But lets take that (not masturbation, but deliberately uncommunicative behavior) as one pole of poetry, and then, say, Eddie Guest as the other pole. Consider the distribution along this axis in terms of accessiblity, and one sense of compromise will be clear

Of course, Henry, repressed material -- dis-contented material -- will show variation from individual to individual. Some of us have our sexuality all worked thru or out, we dont feel uneasy or irritable when its discussed, and can feel or affect indifference about it. I'm that way myself, I merely use sexual reference because I've noticed others often enjoy it. But patriotism is missing from my palette altogether, and will probably erupt from my shadow in the most primitive way one of these poems. Other examples I could have used: that our civilization survives thru murder & enslavement, but that it manages to keep that out of sight most of the time, or at least, unnamed and disembodied; or that if Beale Street could talk, if Beale Street could talk, married men would have to take their beds & walk. But I guess that's the ugly head of sex being reared again. Darn this Occident! I should go live in Thailand, where they have other stuff under their minds. Safdie-Bromige makes me feel like a catch or a belt, but hey, I can live with it. db

↑ Index

518. robert zamsky
Re: The is-anybody-still-discussing thread
Thu 17 Apr 1997

BRAVO!

rob zamsky>
> what if art is a process. not automatically a process of discontent.
> something else. & enlisting it in vanguard of discontent/truth-seeking/> rebellion ends up hiding the truth as much as revealing it. what if > the process leads to a more radical truth if discontent is not taken > as a given (thus leading to all the institutionalized hypocrisies & > comedies DB alluded to). we've had these non-arguments over huge> abstractions before. [exhale] yes, troubled humanity, I have once again > dissected "art" & lifted it in conformtent formcontaldehyde for your > dispection.
>
> Henry Gould
>

↑ Index

519. Hoa Nguyen
Re: What is white
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Dear Jeffery Timmons:

Ok, I'll bite--

but first a couple of questions...

"Objection"? Why objection?
Are you looking for an answer or making a point?

This is my answer, if one is wanted--

I have been asked this question before by European-Americans ("Whites")-- and it usually comes up when I talk about my experiences as a woman of color. For example, when I describe how it feels to be the only poet of color in a given magazine or at a poetry reading-- I am sometimes asked "Isn't white a color?"

I started this response by asking a question-- because it has been my experience that when white people ask me this, it is a way of trying to deny my experiences of difference-- to dodge the everyday priledges of belonging in the white world that white people have (without often knowing they have it). So I would like to know why you asked. Is it because you don't understand what is meant or are you challenging the construction of whiteness and if so how come you are choosing to go about it?

So, my answer is: white people are people of European heritage (A.G., I recall wrote he was "white if Jewish people are white").

Also, I have been very curious about the magazine "Race Traitor" -- plan to buy it when I have more money-- and was wondering if anyone on this list could please fill me in-- tell me more about their philosophy behind their "rejection of whiteness" (or correct me if I have that wrong). Is anyone here involved with that journal?

> Date: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 19:01:46 -0700
> From: "Jeffrey W. Timmons" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
> To: [redacted]
>
> On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 dodie wrote:
>
> This totalizing "we" is problematic to me.
>
> ok.
>
> As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of white guys (and a few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but other people have embodied that for other groups and will continue to.
>
> objection! please define "white." i dont bite.
>
> jeffrey timmons

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

520. Thomas Bell
Re: found poem
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Does this use of misinformation mean that they knowingly bought their own.
tom bell

At 01:47 PM 4/16/97 -0700, Christopher Reiner wrote:
What follows is a list of keywords from the Heaven's Gate >site, which I have copied from its Home Page source code. I present here >it as a found poem, without any extra linebreaks or whatnot...
>--Chris R.)

> misinformation, misinformation,
>
> misinformation, misinformation, misinformation, misinformation,

↑ Index

521. Thomas Bell
Re: ginsberg and snyder
Thu 17 Apr 1997

At 03:11 PM 4/16/97 -0700, George Bowering wrote:
>>"When?" is the question. At two different times or in a different dimension.
>>tom
>>At 10:31 PM 4/13/97 -0700, George Bowering wrote:
>>>>Does using adjacent urinals in two different states
>>>
>>>Where is that possible?
>>>
>
>Well, it would have to be in some can on a state line, wouldnt it?
>
If it was urinal rather than urinals?

How long can we continue this before it becomes a found poem? tom

↑ Index

522. Christopher Alexander
Begin migration of all users to new
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Dodie--
just wanted to offer a belated thanks for your post on Ginsberg:

> This totalizing "we" is problematic to me. Personally, Ginsberg never lead me anywhere (even though I had a poster of him on my bedroom wall when I was in high school)--and I think his influence is marginal to large "marginal" populations. As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of white guys (and a few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but other people have embodied that for other groups and will continue to.

I know you ended up feeling a little regretful of this post (why do we worry so much on Poetics?)-- all the more reason to say "thanks". I was beginning to feel a bit awkward, as my experience of Ginsberg, despite the importance of his work, is perfectly, if unintentionally, evoked by the poster you mention.
Which isn't to come down too hard on him--as I said in my earlier post, this isn't a case of disappointed rock fan syndrome. ["Joe Strummer once said he cared..."].
It's more that, having grown up in the Reagan era, the kind of optimism Ginsberg seems, in part, to represent-- it just wasn't available to me, &, to a great extent still isn't.
However I may have appreciated his work, it couldn't compare as politicized art to, for example, The Minutemen.
["If--if Reagan played disco..."]. That situation could explain, in part, my attraction to, for instance, Bourdieu as a post-Marxist, & the conflict model that's implicit or explicit, variously, in his work. The social field as site of continuous struggle versus (what I'd like to believe in) the Revolution that signals the end of history as we have known it.

Not that I mean to ascribe this position, or this subject-position to you (I assume you're older than I am--most of the more vocal listmembers seem to be), nor am I thanking you for "speaking up for" me--I didn't speak up more because I felt like maybe I was pissing on the parade, or the procession, as the case may be. But I thought I'd, I don't know, say "hi & I liked your post".

best, Chris

ps--You & Kevin did receive those books I sent, right?
They should have arrived some time ago, but the postal service here doesn't seem to be terribly reliable.
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

523. Christopher Alexander
Oh, dammit not again
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Apologies to all for just having posted a $!#$% personal message to the list. It's supposed to be for Dodie, so I hope you read it, Dodie. The rest of you--well, whatever.

Or maybe this is a hoax post & I'm just trying to spice things up a bit.

$%#!, Chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

524. Herb Levy
Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, in the 2nd circle
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Dodie wrote, towards the beginning of the week:

> Ironically, I just received a very moving e-mail from Simon P. about his being present at AG's deathbed, holding his hand, and then the Buddhist > service. So now I feel guilty about being so flip about AG, like instant karma's gonna get me.

You've got no reason to feel guilty, Dodie. You wrote that Ginsberg wasn't a huge liberating force for you regardless of the general tenor of the list lately & that just seemed honest. You weren't dissing him, just calling attention to the fact that alternatives to the mainstream are no more monolithic than the culture to which they're alternatives.

And, as this list gets ever larger, it's always going to be a good thing to be reminded that each of us doesn't have the same tastes, hard as that is to believe at times.

& I'm giving up trying to read the rest of the posts that I let sit during tax season now.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

525. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
call for essays
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Approved-By: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]> Date: Fri, 18 Apr 1997 10:16:11 -0500 From: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]> Subject: wsais-pdl: WISE-L: CFP Feminisms and Internationalism To: Multiple recipients of list CAFS-F2 <[redacted]>

> CALL FOR PAPERS FOR A > SPECIAL ISSUE OF GENDER & HISTORY
> ON FEMINISMS AND INTERNATIONALISM
>
> Submissions are invited for a special issue of Gender & History to be published in 1998 on the theme of Feminisms and Internationalism. The editors for the special issue seek essays which address the theme of the history of internationalism in feminist theory and praxis, possibly including the following topics: the ways in which "internationalism" has been conceived historically within feminism and women's movements; the nature of and historical shifts within "imperial" feminisms; changes in the meaning of feminist internationalism both preceding and following the end of most formal empires in the 20th century; the challenges to, and the reformulations of, internationalism within feminism by women of colour and by women from colonized or formerly colonized countries; the fragmentation of internationalism in response to a growing emphasis on local over global contexts of struggle as well as on a variety of different feminisms instead of a singular feminism; and the context for the reemergence of internationalism within feminisms and women's movements as a result of the new modes of globalization in the late 20th century.

Essays should be around 9,000 words in length. To submit a manuscript, send three copies plus an abstract and a separate title page with name, address and contact information. Other details of form and style for submitted manuscripts can be found in Gender & History. Deadline for submissions is 15 December 1997.

Manuscripts may be sent to any of the three editors for the special issue:

Mrinalini Sinha,
North American Co-Editor, Gender and History,
Department of History,
Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, IL 62901-4519
USA
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
Email: [redacted]

Donna J. Guy,
Special issue guest co-editor,
Department of History,
University of Arizona,
Social Science Building,
Tucson, AZ 85721
USA
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
Email: [redacted]

Angela Woollacott
Special issue guest co-editor,
Department of History,
Case Western Reserve University,
10900 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, OH 44106-7107
USA
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
Email: [redacted]

****
[redacted]

↑ Index

526. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: What is white
Thu 17 Apr 1997

On Thu, 17 Apr 1997, Hoa Nguyen wrote:

> "Objection"? Why objection?
> Are you looking for an answer or making a point?

i objected to the use of "white" in dodies post: it seemed reactive and not very useful--in fact counter-productive if i might say so. esp since i felt that if anyone would never be accused of being complicit with whatever "white" stands for (bland mediocre meaningless oppressive tradition whatever) it was ginsburg. white was used in a homogenizing fashion that failed to be attentive to the pluralities that term is used to organize and did not recognize the virtually indistinct category it is. of course it does have a powerful political resonance

> I have been asked this question before by European-Americans ("Whites")-- and it usually comes up when I talk about my experiences as a woman of color. For example, when I describe how it feels to be the only poet of color in a given magazine or at a poetry reading-- I am sometimes asked "Isn't white a color?"

if i understand you you are suggesting that some believe the color "white" to represent a culture? if that is so i would respond by suggesting that "white" cannot and should not be so easily equated with either a distinct culture and that its conflation with "european-americans" is virtually to use a term that is hopeless riven by differences and contrasts. not very useful in the end.

> So I would like to know why you asked. Is it because you don't understand what is meant or are you challenging the construction of whiteness and if so how come you are choosing to go about it?

challenging. because in the end if as critics of various political affliations vaguely represented as "left" we are not able to identify allies and compatriots or people sympatico and perpetuate the idea that an important (counter) cultural figure like ginsburg is "white" and therefore not politically acceptable we lose a valuable ally and more importantly a historical challenge that paved the way for "other" forms of difference. perhaps dodie is right: maybe ag is representative of a particular formation of white male alienation but rejecting it out of hand also risks tossing out for mistaken reasons i believe something of great value. sorry im not being specific enough about that value: i leave that for others. for now.

> So, my answer is: white people are people of European heritage (A.G., I recall wrote he was "white if Jewish people are white").

a rather contingent construction dont you think? suggests the ambivalence of that inclusion in that larger category. if.... and europe geez how does one make sense of that ethnogeography? where do you draw the boundaries there? there are as much differences as similarities it seems to me.

ok heres my (tentative) conclusion: race is semantically and epistemologically more complicated than the linguistic and conceptual categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of that. did i make any sense? did i stumble into a morass? do i need a rope--either to pull me out or string me up? have i gone on too long? yes.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

527. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: What is white
Thu 17 Apr 1997

---

uh dodie--didnt have your address--just wanted to say i was dissing you. i just latched on to your use of that term and i realize you backed off a bit from it in a later post. i wish things would be posted quicker. i hope i havent offended you or anything. if so you have my assurances i have written with intentions of respect.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

528. henry gould
Re: If this is still under discussion . . .
Thu 17 Apr 1997

"All art which excites in us the feeling of joy is so far comic and according as this feeling of joy is excited by whatever is substantial or accidental, general or fortuitous, in human fortunes the art is to be judged more or less excellent: and even tragic art may be said to participate in the nature of comic art so far as the possession of a work of tragic art excites in us the feeling of joy. From this is may be seen that tragedy is the imperfect manner, and comedy the perfect manner, in art."

- James Joyce

↑ Index

529. Henry Gould
recommended scholarship
Thu 17 Apr 1997

A few months ago, in response to a "what next?" query from Ron Silliman I outlined at obtuse angle and length about a "Providence School" of poetry. Without getting into the semi-mystical maunderings which I'm sure nobody wants to listen to ever again, I can say that the basic kernel was to propose a kind of poetry based on a "different" metaphysics from the popular postmodern blend of what I called nominalism or anti-realism; the idea is that the poet accepts more or less as a given that there is a real ordered universe outside our language systems which language, more or less accurately, is able to represent. This is realism.

I've discovered a new book which considers James Joyce's work from a parallel perspective. Now Joyce, as you know, is an avatar of postmodernist critics & theorists. There is a strong stream of postmodern/avant-garde/ deconstructive/ feminist criticism which claims Joyce as model & percursor. So I want to recommend the following book. It's not the product of an aging bitter departmental new critic fluffhead, either (and it's not by Blasing, folks!!).

The Word According to James Joyce, by Cordell Yee, Bucknell UP, 1997

Though I'm only partway through, part of his argument is that, contra many many critics, Joyce never forsook his roots in Aristotelian realism, modified by his own discoveries in 20th cent. "process metaphysics" with respect to the ability of language to represent what is real. & in hopes of forestalling purely political pre-judgements, I quote the following:

"As far as the political implications of Joyce's works are concerned, I have no quarrel with anti-authoritarianism or feminism. I do question whether those political impulses are necessarily tied to a rejection of the linguistic practices that make representation possible."

This sentence doesn't offer much in isolation, but it points to an issue fairly relevant to the divide, say, between theoretical-left writing theorists & other leftish writers (the whole langpo/Apex of the M debate).

I want to emphasize that Yee doesn't seem to have a tendentious axe to grind, but he takes issue with a lot of Joyce scholarship because he's actually interested in authorial intention & is trying to discover what JOYCE was up to (& not so much what his playful interpreters want to bend him into). It's a new jumping-off place. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

530. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: What is white
Thu 17 Apr 1997

SORRY SORRY SORRY I MEANT WAS NOT NOT NOT NOT NOT DISSING YOU. UG. I NEED TO LEARN HOW TO FORM CONTRACTIONS!!!! SORRY DODIE. I AM SELF-FLAGELLATING RIGHT NOW.

On Thu, 17 Apr 1997, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:

> uh dodie--didnt have your address--just wanted to say i was dissing you. i just latched on to your use of that term and i realize you backed off a bit from it in a later post. i wish things would be posted quicker. i hope i havent offended you or anything. if so you have my assurances i have written with intentions of respect.
>
> jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

531. Mark Weiss
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Thu 17 Apr 1997

Note that what I found weird was arguments about what a third party who is present meant, in the simplest sense, by his words. At a certain point it becomes silly not to ask. I did not mean to imply that the discussion of words or ideas was weird, and I certainly don't think that a query need be answered (although it could make for quite a discussion). Nor was I responding to just this post. I am mum on the subject hereafter and will not be provoked to speech (unless maybe I'm discussed in the third person).

At 10:19 AM 4/17/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Well actually Mark that gets at something which is a real live issue about >this space, and other spaces like it...I don't think cybersocialspace >functions in quite the way you think..I suspect that how it functions is >more in flux and more contested than your post states. These two are also >widely-known poet/theorists, and the discussion is not about them as >people, but about their published books...I don't believe they should feel >compelled to intervene in a discussion of their work, at least not right >away..(they may wanna wait till something really pisses them off ;)...)
>
>There is a constant push and pull between two structures of feeling: that >cybersocialspace is like being in a room in a fairly intimate >conversation, involving maybe half a dozen people; and that on the >contrary it is very public and very widely-scrutinized, and much like >debates and exchanges published on paper on various subjects. Your post >suggests the former; I personally think that if people reflect for a >minute they'll realize that the truth is closer to the latter idea. I >think it's great for us to be able to ask CB and BP to respond to what >folks have posted...But frankly I don't think they're obligated to, any >more than they are obligated to respond by letter to every discussion of >their work in a little mag or an academic journal. Ask 'em, by all means.

>But my take on public electro-discussion is, that it is suggesting we >can't discuss their work that is "very weird." Remember that this is a >public not a highly personal space, no matter what it feels like at >times.
>
>Mark P.
>
>On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
>> To an outsider this continues to be very weird. Two of the parties, >> Bernstein and perelman, are on the list. Why do we theorize about what one >> meant about the other and what the other may think of it? Isn't this like >> talking about people in the room as if they weren't there? Why don't we just >> query them for their own input?
>>
>> At 02:32 PM 4/16/97 EST, you wrote:
>> >I don't think Bob P privileges Brathwaite (that's without an "i" said the >> >pedant) over Bernstein. That Bernstein "wants power" goes without saying: who >> >doesn't? As I read it, Bob P's point involves the mediations of the "academy"
>> >to which both writers are more or less subject. The contrast worth making is >> >between the (mostly) dispersive energies of CB's practice and the gathering >> >energies of Brathwaite's. This contrast is itself made (not in exactly this >> >way) by CB in his remarks on KB in "Poetics of the Americas." What would be >> >worth contesting in Bob P's reading of KB, and also in CB's reading of KB, is >> >their sense of KB's practice as singular (this is related to mark's point but >> >not the same point). I take it that much of X/Self has little to do with
>> >"nation-language" at least as KB has defined it, that there is indeed a

>> >"vernacular" present in the poem and that it is this vernacular that grounds
>> >"nation-language" and the utopian identity politics the poem is imagining. I >> >take it too that--elsewhere--there is something else going on, more related to >> >dispersing than gathering. Caliban as rebel, Caliban as hero: dispersing and >> >gathering both. What Bob P acknowledges but does not to my thinking stress >> >enough is the Caribbean location of KB's project. Different issues there than >> >the ones CB must face. And when KB's text enters into USAmerican contexts it >> >is something else. For a shameless plug I'll mention that I've discussed >> >some of these issues in an essay in paul naylor's _River City_.
>> >
>> >This is too brief, perhaps cryptic, but i've a thousand things to do today. And >> >anyway as i read Mark the real force of his question to Bob involves matters
>> >other than the remarks on KB and CB.
>> >
>> >keith tuma
>> >
>> >
>>
>
>

↑ Index

532. henry gould
Re: Bromige-Safdie
Thu 17 Apr 1997

On Thu, 17 Apr 1997 08:02:01 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
>My sense is that most poems come out of implicit, rather than explicit, >compromise. The compromise happened long before the moment of writing, >in the poet's absorbing, thinking about, and coming to terms with the >myriad poetical, social, and institutional forces impinging on him or >her.

>
>To be able to write means to have already compromised, and to have >forgotten.
>
I like the non-heroic good sense of this, yet find myself disagreeing.
Maybe I don't quite get what you're saying. To write well - seems like hard work, not compromise & forgetting. Or perhaps you mean the writer compromises everything BUT writing? & the feeling of futility - is this an effect of culture-glut? Or this compromise is wisdom, not betrayal.

"The artist must raise everything to a higher level: ...like a pump...has inside...a great pipe that reaches down into the entrails of things, the deepest layers. ...sucks up what was lying down there below, dim and unnoticed, and brings it out in great jets to the sunlight." (Flaubert)

- Henry G.

↑ Index

533. David Israel
Re: found poem
Thu 17 Apr 1997

---

or: a (perhaps) unconscious act of protest, so to say?

yes: why would one wish to be Yahoo!'d by a seeker of misinfo?

strange things, horatio, in yer html

d.i.

>>> Thomas Bell <[redacted]> 04/17/97 05:43pm >>>
Does this use of misinformation mean that they knowingly bought their own. tom bell

At 01:47 PM 4/16/97 -0700, Christopher Reiner wrote:
What follows is a list of keywords from the Heaven's Gate >site, which I have copied from its Home Page source code. I present here
>it as a found poem, without any extra linebreaks or whatnot...
>--Chris R.)

> misinformation, misinformation,
>
> misinformation, misinformation, misinformation, misinformation,

↑ Index

534. David Israel
Re: Begin migration of all users to new
Thu 17 Apr 1997

here fetching out a turn of phrase in Chris Alexander's
note-of-thanks re: Dodie's articulate ambiguity anent AG --

Christopher: << Dodie-- just wanted to offer a belated thanks for your post on Ginsberg . . . I didn't speak up more because I felt like maybe I was pissing on the parade, or the procession, as the case may be. . . . >> this calls to mind words from Tom Mandel, worth citing in the instant instance. Thus:

| To the dead, beyond imitation of life,
| we must report something
| different from poets before us,
| raining tropes on their
| parade
| of idle words. *Tremors
| bring tears, longing ends in grief.*

Tom Mandel, "Communication Through Hints"

(asterisks denoting italics; -- btw I've been curious as to source of the "Tremors" line, as this seems poss. an actual quotation [whether from Chinese or Greek, god, Tom, or some erudite other might know], tho equally poss. faux; -- but I've not read the book entire as yet, wherein such deail cd. be disclosed)

incidental poetics note:

Theory seeming: poetry is to be understood as (especially) addressed to the dead -- for their enjoyment / amusement / & suchlike, eh? (Not, seems, a "morbid poetics" -- but arguably a "sorta elegiac"?)

{ anyhow: from a Sun & Moon vol. not here on hand [I've these few lines bec. I'd snatched ''em for epigraph to an elegy I wrote for Lynne Beyer, some couple years ago] . . . (Mandel vol.'s among more recent & includes word "Law" in title - bibliography through hints) } d.i.

↑ Index

535. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: found poem
Fri 18 Apr 1997

here's a found poem. it was writ on the top margin of an exam on romantic poetry that i just read. students wrote their exams earlier this morning:

(it's 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am)

that's a wonderful piece!

↑ Index

536. Michael Boughn
Re: recommended scholarship
Fri 18 Apr 1997

The NEWS just in this A.M.--the Universe has an AXIS. The movement of LIGHT is not uniform. There is an UP and a DOWN, folks, all the way to Sirius and back, and we're IN IT.

I think this recent discovery may be irrefutable proof of the efficacy of Providence School Metapophysics. Yikes, Henry, how do you do it?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

537. henry gould
Re: recommended scholarship
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 06:31:44 -0400 Michael Boughn said:
>The NEWS just in this A.M.--the Universe has an AXIS. The movement of >LIGHT is not uniform. There is an UP and a DOWN, folks, all the way to >Sirius and back, and we're IN IT.
>
>I think this recent discovery may be irrefutable proof of the efficacy of >Providence School Metapophysics. Yikes, Henry, how do you do it?

Well, to tell the truth, some of you may be old enough to remember the "We Were There" series of history books. "We were There at the Alamo" . "We were there at Valley Forge". etc. Back in 1962 or thereabouts I read one called "We Were There When They Invented the Frisbee". Everything else just seemed to click. And no, David Bromige, secuction is not one of the 4 Major Squeezes which set the cosmos in motion. This is my authoritative comment on that subject. (I'm sure Jack & Eric will want to get in on that one, though.) - Henry Hale Gould (the Hale stands for "comet") (not the bathroom cleanser, either. poetry is not plumbing. Flaubert can have his fruity yogurt.)

↑ Index

538. Dale Smith
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

jeffrey timmons wrote:

> ok heres my (tentative) conclusion: race is semantically and epistemologically more complicated than the linguistic and conceptual categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of that. did i make any sense? did i stumble into a morass? do i need a rope--either to pull me out or string me up? have i gone on too long? yes.

It seems like this kind of intellectualized and evasive answer neglects to address the positions of race as they actually function. In addition to the semantic, epistemological, linguistic, and conceptual categories mentioned, there happen to be physical, emotional, and social realities which are met through daily experiences rather than through cerebral--distant--contemplation. Whiteness is a construct, but it's also a reality I live with. Which ever way you think about it, skin says a lot. A body reveals certain traits--Asian, African, European--but it doesn't always give you details of national heritage or even ethnicity, as in a country like Burundi. A white person's categorical discussion of race pretty much reveals the problems Hoa pointed out in her post. Whites own the show, producing their whiteness through their own terms rather than listening and responding to whiteness as others experience it.

Finally, it is more than a bit ironic for a white person to determine a "useful" vocabulary for racial discussion. It seems like the appropriate response to questions of race would be not to retreat into vague conceptual terms, but to engage them in a more heart-felt way. As it is, the above seems dismissive and casual, and it removes personal experience from the complicated issues surrounding race.

↑ Index

539. henry gould
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Thu, 17 Apr 1997 00:47:30 -0500 David Bromige said: >early. Something out of sight deep inside is going to come out any . . .
>time . . .NOW! It doesnt erupt from the author, does it? It appears to >erupt from the sentence, to the erupting reader. It hadn't been part of our >content, it had been dis-content, denied & hidden content or mine or yours, >& now, it's all over the papers, all over the newssheets. Barely civilized, >it was, until we saw how expected it had, all along, (honky commas) been.
>Honky commas sit on it so as it wont blow, blow away. Until we began to >tame it, to domesticate it, find ways to compromise with it, married to it >must live with it, must alter it misunderstand it deny it ignore it. Must

At the Russ-Amer Hoboken conference Elena Shvarts mentioned her interest in scandal as the force of change in society. Her example was not repressed/exposed desire but the virgin birth of Christ [whatever you make of that]. I point this out as an example of a different way of poetic thinking from that which reigns in the West [i.e. sexuality as the master-key to the Meaning of Life & the Blakean One-Eyed Vision of our discontented so-called artists]. - Henry Gould

"sex is for coyotes"
- Jack Spandrift

"sex? Isn't that something we read about in public school?" - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

540. Pierre Joris
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Herb Levy wrote:
>
> >Can someone(s) on the List recommend to me a good biography of > >Thelonious Monk? Preferably one that's in print... Thanks.
> >
> >Hank Lazer
>
> Hank,
>
> I'm pretty sure there isn't a book-length bio published yet. There are > some useful (though, depending on how detailed you need this, probably very > spotty) articles/interviews in various magazines like downbeat, and check > collections of occasional pieces by Whitney Bailliet, Martin Williams, etc.
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

Yeap, I believe Herb is right. There is however one full-length book (in French) on Monk I know of: _Thelonious Monk_ by the French poet Yves Buin (P.O.L., Paris 1988 -- probably out of print by now, though i can't be sure, got my copy when it came out). It isn't a biography nor a musicologic treaty, rather it tries to for a poetics of Monk [illegible] & succeeds brilliantly. Somebody should translate it & publish it here! -- Pierre oops -- just did a quick search on ocl worldwide catalogue & these items came up, the first one a bio in English I haven't seen yet:

AUTHOR: Gourse, Leslie.
| TITLE: Straight, no chaser :
| the life and genius of Thelonious Monk /
| PLACE: New York :
|PUBLISHER: Schirmer Books,
| YEAR: 1997

& given as a biography

& this:

AUTHOR: Kteily-O'Sullivan, Laila Rose.
| TITLE: Klangfarben, rhythmic displacement, and economy of means
| a theoretical study of the works of Thelonious Monk /
| YEAR: 1990
| PUB TYPE: Book
| FORMAT: iv, 73 leaves : ill.
| NOTES: "13-42773."
| Thesis (Mus. M.)--University of North Texas, 1990.
| Includes bibliographical references (leaves 70-73).

&
AUTHOR: Raschka, Christopher.
| TITLE: Mysterious Thelonious /
| PLACE: New York :
|PUBLISHER: Orchard Books,
| YEAR: 1997
| PUB TYPE: Book

Matches the tones of the diatonic scale to the values of the | color wheel in presenting a portrait of the work of the Afro-
| American jazz musician and composer of "Mysterioso."
| ISBN: 0531300579 0531330575 (lib. bdg.)
| SUBJECT: Monk, Thelonious -- Pictorial works -- Juvenile literature.
| Monk, Thelonious.
| Musicians.
| Jazz.
| Afro-Americans -- Biography.

AUTHOR: Wilde, Laurent de
| TITLE: Monk /
| PLACE: Paris :

|PUBLISHER: Gallimard,
| YEAR: 1996
| PUB TYPE: Book

AUTHOR: Ponzio, Jacques.
| TITLE: Blue Monk :
| un portrait de Thelonious : essai /
| PLACE: Arles :
|PUBLISHER: Actes sud,
| YEAR: 1995
| PUB TYPE: Book

ACCESSION: 32711912
| TITLE: Contemporary musicians :
| profiles of the people in music. Volume 6 /
| PLACE: Detroit, Mich. :
|PUBLISHER: Gale Research, Inc.,
| YEAR: 1992
| PUB TYPE: Book
| NOTES: Includes bibliographical references and indexes

ACCESSION: 17952626
| AUTHOR: Fitterling, Thomas.
| TITLE: Thelonious Monk :
| sein Leben, seine Musik, seine Schallplatten /
| PLACE: Waakirchen :
|PUBLISHER: Oreos,
| YEAR: 1987
| PUB TYPE: Book
| FORMAT: 175 p. : ill., music ; 24 cm.

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose

it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

541. Keith Norris
Re: The New Party
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Check out www.newparty.org

I'm a member--feel free to backpost me for info...

-=-=-=-=-=

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Department PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933
[redacted]

↑ Index

542. Jeff Hansen
safdie-bromige
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Henry Gould asked me how a writer is involved in compromise and forgetting.

To write a poem is dependent on a whole series of experiences prior to the writing. Most of the ones relevant to writing focus on poetry, poetry traditions, and the interface between poetry and other aspects of life -- politics, living situation, nature, weather, advertising, etc, the list varies depending ont the individual.

Before writing, the poet has already committed to certain positions within all these forces, a position necessarily wrought with compromise since the forces impinging are myriad.

But to write, the poet cannot focus on these forces and the necessary compromise. The poet must put one word after another. While sometimes hard work (though I think of writing as more often joyful) this is the forgetting: Not focusing on the foundation, the foundation necessarily composed of compromise, that makes writing possible.

This is all to say that I don't believe in individual vision, and that writing is irreducibly social.

Best to all,

jeff

↑ Index

543. Charles Alexander
Re: Begin migration of all users to new
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> | To the dead, beyond imitation of life,
> | we must report something
> | different from poets before us,
> | raining tropes on their
> | parade
> | *of idle words. Tremors
> | *bring tears, longing ends in grief.
>
> Tom Mandel, "Communication Through Hints"

I'd snatched ''em for epigraph to an elegy I wrote for Lynne Beyer, >some couple years ago] . . . (Mandel vol.'s among more recent & includes >word "Law" in title
> - bibliography through hints) }
>d.i.
>
>

Letters of the Law, from Sun & Moon Press

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

544. Hank Lazer
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Can someone(s) on the List recommend to me a good biography of Thelonious Monk? Preferably one that's in print... Thanks.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

545. Don Cheney
Re: found poem
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

i have a collection of found poems (found at work also), NOTES TO MY SELF, on the net at:

http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791/notes.html

don

(Intro: It's not unusual for web site designers to place "keywords" into a page's actual html code so that search engines like Alta Vista or Infoseek will index the page in response to a word or phrase typed in as a query by you or me. These keywords are not visible, but the search engines will still register their presence. In fact, the more times the word is used, the higher the ranking of the page in the index of "hits.". What follows is a list of keywords from the Heaven's Gate site, which I have copied from its Home Page source code. I present here it as a found poem, without any extra linebreaks or whatnot...
--Chris R.)

<meta name="keywords" content="Heaven's Gate,

Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate, Heaven's Gate,

ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, ufo, space alien, space alien, space alien, space alien, space alien, space alien, extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial,

extraterrestrial, extraterrestrial, millennium, millennium, millennium,

millennium, millennium, millennium, millennium,

misinformation, misinformation,

misinformation, misinformation, misinformation, misinformation,

freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, freedom, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, second coming, angels, angels, angels,

angels, angels, angels, end times, end times, end times, end times, end times, end

times, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, God, God, God, God, God, God">

</head>

↑ Index

546. Sylvester Pollet
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> Robin Blaser : "poets are the deodorant pucks in the urinal of life."

I love that quote, David, but borrowing the feminist perspective, maybe that's what certain of our listers mean when they say they're tired of being pissed on by male poets!

p.s. could you under-the-table me your snail-mail address? thanks, sp

↑ Index

547. henry gould
Re: safdie-bromige
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 08:14:38 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
>This is all to say that I don't believe in individual vision, and that >writing is irreducibly social.

If there's no individual vision, then the social is a one-eyed beast. I too subscribe to the belief that humanity is one Being, that you are me and I am you and we are all Jack Spandrift, as Eric Blarnes once put it (in his personal memoir, _Living? Isn't that Something...?_ Univ. of Left Overbie Press, 1994), and that this one reality is the key to social justice as well as joy. NEVERTHELESS there's a big difference between the stoplight at 1st and Hennepin and the stoplight that used to be at Cedar & Riverside, and it's that DIFFUDIFFURANCE that the artist as INDUVINDUHYOU-ALL is trying SO HARD to get at in her depiction of STERN & DAFT REALITY. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

548. Sylvester Pollet
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Hoverer is too hard to say, too many syllables. I agree, lurk has sinister connotations, unwarranted here. Look/looker would seem to have fewer, though maybe some old-timey slang ones:"She's a real looker!" I'll keep thinking. It's a good quest. sp

> addendum to previous post about lurking....
>
> how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain > suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...

>
> kl
>
> in response to david israel:
>
> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>
> if not to lurk, then what?

↑ Index

549. dbkk

Re: Joe Dunn

Fri 18 Apr 1997

At 11:46 AM -0400 4/17/97, Michael Franco wrote:
>Sad news in this morning that Joe Dunn passed away this week-

Dear Michael, it's Kevin Killian, thanks for letting us know about Joe Dunn's death. He was, I think, a wonderful writer, and one of the nicest people I've ever met. His friends and admirers were all, I suppose, waiting for the other shoe to fall, but this is still awfully sad. I hope more of his work sees its way into print.

"The third word is 'eros'
Who will cling to you every birthright
Bringing your heart substance.
Whomever you touch will love you,
Will feel the cling of His touch upon you Like sunlight scattered over an ancient mirror."
--Jack Spicer, "Five Words for Joe Dunn on his Twenty-Second Birthday"

↑ Index

550. Sylvester Pollet

Re: safdie-bromige

Fri 18 Apr 1997

For once, I'm with you, Henry! And besides, I don't believe anything is irreducibly anything. sp

> On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 08:14:38 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
> This is all to say that I don't believe in individual vision, and that writing is irreducibly social.

> If there's no individual vision, then the social is a one-eyed beast.
> I too subscribe to the belief that humanity is one Being, that you are > me and I am you and we are all Jack Spandrift, as Eric Blarnes once put > it (in his personal memoir, _Living? Isn't that Something...?_
> Univ. of Left Overbie Press, 1994), and that this one reality is the > key to social justice as well as joy. NEVERTHELESS there's a big > difference between the stoplight at 1st and Hennepin and the stoplight > that used to be at Cedar & Riverside, and it's that DIFFUDIFFURANCE > that the artist as INDUVINDUHYOU-ALL is trying SO HARD to get at > in her depiction of STERN & DAFT REALITY. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

551. Keith Tuma

Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman

Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997 22:30:08 -0700 George Bowering said:
>>With apologies i ask this prurient question.
>>
>>If you had to stand in one state & piss into the other - which would be the >>more likely recipient.
>>
>>Dan
>>
>>>keith tuma
>>>who lives eight miles from a town (college corner, indiana/ohio) where it's >>>possible to piss in two states at once though he's never never tried to >>>do so,
>>>being content to piss in two states of mind
>
>
>Here's what I want to know: is that claim a manifestation of patriarchal >hegemony?
>
>
>
I remember a Barthelme novel, _The Dead Father_, asking this same question. As I recall the DF can manifest patriarchal hegemony only by standing in Ohio and pissing into Nebraska.

As for Dan's question, I'm afraid I have too little philosophy to answer it. My friend the pataphysician, though, tells me the answer is: Pat Riley.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

552. Herb Levy
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Hoa Nguyen asks:

> Also, I have been very curious about the magazine "Race Traitor" -- plan to buy it when I have more money-- and was wondering if anyone on this list could please fill me in-- tell me more about their philosophy behind their "rejection of whiteness" (or correct me if I have that wrong). Is anyone here involved with that journal?

I'm not involved with the mag, but you should be able to get it, or at least the collection of writings drawn from it published under the same name, at a library.

The main thrust of their philosophy is that race is not a biological fact, but a social construct, largely developed in the US in place of the (more common in Europe at least) nationalistic views used to exclude folks from social & political communities.

"White", "Black", and "Asian" are vague terms that deny the complex dynamics of ethnic, national, personal, cultural, etc. influences that come into play in an individual's life. There aren't monolithic cultures that are White, Black, or Asian, but many cultural affects that get lost when these more generic terms become the center of discussion.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

553. Herb Levy
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> Can someone(s) on the List recommend to me a good biography of Thelonious Monk? Preferably one that's in print... Thanks.
>
> Hank Lazer

Hank,

I'm pretty sure there isn't a book-length bio published yet. There are some useful (though, depending on how detailed you need this, probably very spotty) articles/interviews in various magazines like downbeat, and check collections of occasional pieces by Whitney Bailliet, Martin Williams, etc.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

554. Christopher Alexander
Re: Bromige-Safdie
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Jeff wrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrttttt:
> It seems to me that expecting our > poetry to transcend the ideological, material, and social spheres of > institutions and everyday interactions is what is futile. Placing too > high a demand on poetry, asking too much of it -- the descendants of > Shelley's "poets are the unaknowledged legislators ..." -- makes poetry > futile. By insisting that it is embedded in the same network/nest of > forces as other activities is to see it more accurately, to recognize > its strengths and weaknesses rather than hoping for what is not there > and ending with futility.

Writing situated as critique (SOMETIMES) versus writing writing which refuses/represses its site (site as in scope-barrel-trigger) or claims 'outsider' status--noncomplicity ["this is Art" or "it's just art, man"] or ["I wasn't doing anything, honest"], i.e., nothing to be complicit with.

Q: Situation as--what? Production or reception? "I mean to say this" or "this means this". Or both & how do they differ, exactly?

Or, possibly, to fetch together two current threads (so alter both):

| To the dead, beyond imitation of life,
| we must report something

| different from poets before us,
| raining tropes on their
| parade
| of idle words. *Tremors
| bring tears, longing ends in grief.*

Unless that's just an excuse to repeat these lines--which repetition needs no excuse. Thanks to David Israel for posting this piece of Tom's work--& thanks to Tom for obvious reasons.

Chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

555. Michael Boughn
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> At the Russ-Amer Hoboken conference Elena Shvarts mentioned her interest in scandal as the force of change in society. Her example was not repressed/exposed desire but the virgin birth of Christ [whatever you make of that]. I point this out as an example of a different way of poetic thinking from that which reigns in the West [i.e. sexuality as the master-key to the Meaning of Life & the Blakean One-Eyed Vision of our discontented so-called artists].
> - Henry Gould
>
> "sex is for coyotes"
> - Jack Spandrift
>
> "sex? Isn't that something we read about in public school?"
> - Eric Blarnes

"You leave out the true animal bearing of the species and in the end . . . you pay for it by sex."

--Charles Olson

↑ Index

556. KENT JOHNSON
L+A+N+G+P+O and New Party
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Mark and Kristin:

Thanks for the replies on the New Party. For what it's worth Kristin, I was being facetious about the revolution starting without me. I do think that's going to be a while, and I'm sure that the New Party (if global capitalism is brought to an end by something other than a giant asteroid) won't be its red wedge. Why do you see the new Labor Party as "more promising" of overthrowing "global capitalism"? Do you mean its present leadership and current program offer this hope, or do you mean that a political party in this country firmly grounded in working class organizations is an absolute prerequisite for smashing the rule of capital? (geez, now do you all see what I mean about the asteroid? What's coming first?)

But Mark: one of the things I find interesting about the NP is that it has apparently gathered old CPers like Zinn, DSA types like Hightower, radical Christians like West, and real independents like Chomsky together under a common banner. Of course, these are just big names, but in the protracted context of the U.S. left's sectarian provincialism, the symbolism of such a gathering doesn't seem insignificant? Is Zinn's presence indicative of a broader CP presence in the NP? Have they all "fused" into it? (Why wouldn't they? The CPUSA's been a loyal social-democratic party ever since Hitler stabbeb Stalin in the back.)

And glad to hear from someone who has hung in there through these very "unsocialist" times (and it will eventually surely be au courant again to be anti-capitalist!) that the question of unity amongst new and viable left organizations seems to be in the discussion. But don't you think that if such unity comes to be, Mark, that this conspiratorial "fusion" crap should go out the window? Easy for me to say after ten or so years of drawing a Trotskyist pension I guess, (though I can at least say I was an active member in '85 of the San Jose state farm militia in northern Managua, Nicaragua, even if I did wet my pants the one time we came under [heavy] fire).

But if there is a "Republicrat" political structure, and if the two parties are primarily there to give vent to the incestual squabbles of this country's ruling class, why participate in the "obscenity", as you put it, of what's going on? Why try to "pull" local Democrats to the "left" via some kind of elaborate electoral blackmail when one can present an honest and unwatered program to the public, stating clearly that there is no hope ever of any kind of true change as long as we keep voting for the parties of imperialism? (is that term still in use?) Why not say clearly that those who are the most reprehensible of all are those "progressive" sophisticates who know the score, but still are seduced to vote for

Carter, Mondale, Dukakis, Clinton, and seduce otheres to do so, just so we can have a little lesser evil? (ok, so we got the lesser evil with Clinton--how's it such a breakthrough over Bush? Explain to me what is so different.)

I underestimated my numbers in my last post when I said that Nader got half a million votes--he got about 700,000 in 26 states and he barely campaigned. The point would be that this intimates the potential of principled, radical gestures on the local and national arenas, if only intelligent progressives woudl stop doing 69 with the Democrats. If there's going to be a Deb's-like resurgence of independent, radical politics in this country it's going to require a simple but firm step outside the hall of mirrors we're given, don't you think?

But what does this have to do with poetry, especially since I titled this post as I did? (I can picture Maria Damon with one of her inevitable two-liners, asking). well, simply this: I've been on this list for about five months now, and I have been startled that there is apparently such little interest in discussing issues related to how poets might integrate themselves into issues of broader political commitment. This seems strange to me since the background to the very existence of this list is a community of poets in 70's and 80's trying to figure out how the act of writing might lead and be led into a broader understanding of political engagement. If the Language movement is evolving into other things, it seems to me (and please correct me if I'm off) to be evolving into a diffuse kind of aestheticism that can go on for weeks slamming Ed Dorn as a fascist, talk intricately about the institutional implications of Bernstein's and Perelman's poetics, but say virtually nothing at all when an honorable publisher of avant-garde writing (the FC2 affair, which happens, luckily, to have come to temporary close) is under government attack and makes an appeal for solidarity.

What am I saying Mark Presjnar? I'm rambling, but I think I'm onto something, even if few will respond, because, after all, it's just me.

Kent

> X-PMFLAGS: 34078848 0
>
> WARNING: LONG POST ON POLITIX,
> IN RESPONSE TO KENT'S QUERY
>
> Kent--
>
> *I've been active off and on with the New Party. I might be more active if they were a presence in Georgia, as they are extremely oriented toward building right now at the local level. A few people (in Wisconsin?? in the midwest) founded it about 7 (?) years ago; the guiding light is generally considered to be Joel Rodgers, a poli sci academic by trade, who* has authored or co-authored many of their public statements. There was a quite impressive essay in the Nation, which to some extent constituted a founding gesture as far as much of the country was concerned, and got hundreds of people (including myself) hooked up with the party.

Their platform is in flux and very vague, which has pissed off lots of people on the left, and led to many attacks. The NP says that this is because ultimately they want the folks who are building the party to draw up its detailed credo, and it is still in very formative stages. They claim I think a couple of thousand members, some of whom are of course paper. They have very active chapters in some major cities like Chicago. Their early, tentative outlines of belief/strategy emphasize elections and include what I would call a classic social-democratic set of details. One of their defining features is belief in a tactic called fusion..This would involve placing a candidate (usually a Democrat) on the ballot (for anything from school board to President) under the New Party as well as her own party...The theory is that as the NP swings people to the left, it could demonstarate that it had been indispensible to gettng and keeping that cadidate in office...Said cadidate would then (tho' a Demo and usually quite unwilling) be forced to move invreasingly to the left, to retain NP support and not lose the next election. Fusion was outlawed in most states to help crush the Socialists, Populists and other left electoralist force early in this century. They are hoping to overturn those laws.

My modified admiration for them is based on the fact that (at least at first) they were articulating a pretty forthright left/social-democrat attack on the Republicrat structure, which I hoped would pry activists and working class people away from the Democratic obscenity. It remains to be seen, in my estimation, whether they can deliver on that promise. Where they are active with ten or more members they have won city council and similar type elections (sometimes in loose coalition with left-leaning local Demo's) with impressive results. They seem in my experience to be doing better than most leftists of the past two decades at drawing in real working class people of all races. (The main argument in favor of fusion, in my opionion, and maybe in favor of the NP, is that most workers who haven't sunk deep into despair, who are somewhat harder to mobilize, still believe the media that the Republicrats are and can only be the one and only game in town..Fusion offers a way to draw in folks like that, while they still half-believe that only a vote for a Demo. is not "thrown away." Many friends of mine, including those who think the immediate way forward is mainly electoral (a debateable point certainly), now suspect that the NP is going to repeat the trajectory of Democratic Socialists of America, and become a sunday tea-club entirely subservient for all practical purposes to the Democratic wing of the Republicrats, and thus dead as a political force. I'm not convinced of that, yet. I totally agree with you that there should be an IMMEDIATE merger of all reasonably left parties that think the way forward is (partly) electoral:

most green formations, the New Party, the Labor Party, Campaign for a New Tomorrow, and others...(A considerable number are involved with the Independent Progressive Political Action Network, a half-step toward unity, which I've been involved with recently; but many are only half-committed..)

Much more could be said, but that's the general outlines of one (highly personal) response to them...They have a good website. As for the Labor Party, which you mention, until their naitonal leadership wholly endorses activism/membership by folks outside certified union locals, and commits to running its own cadidates, it remains a pretty limited option for most of us...And again, many (including some of its own members) believe with considerable reason that as long as it says it is a "party" but won't field its own cadidates, it is going to be simply a wing of the Clintonian ultra-right Demos, as is so much of the labor movement which is responsible for founding it. At the moment, from what I can see, that's a more compelling accusation than the similar one against the NP..

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

Speaking of Howard Zinn, does anyone know anything about the New Party? I saw an ad a couple weeks back where Zinn is listed as a "member" along with Noam Chomsky, Cornel West, Barbara Ehrenreich, Jim Hightower, and other prominent others. I've also seen the NP championed by Alexander Cockburn in the Nation, talking about them winning a few dozen local elections around thecountry in the past couple years or so.

What's the history? How does this group differ, say, from the new Labor Party founded in Philly, or "Nader's" Green party? What would be the sticking points to overcome before a possible electoral alliance, for example? (Nader got half a million in only 26 states, so such unity might have eventual ground-breaking results?) Ten years ago I could draw a fractal family tree of every little left splinter group in the country since James Cannon marched out of the CPUSA politburo singing the Internationale. Now I don't even know where this glitzy and well-appointed New Party came from. A DSA leap into third party politics?

I feel left out and don't want the revolution to start without me.

Info Ron Silliman? Mark Presjnar? Curious,

Kent

↑ Index

557. Pritchett,Pat
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

This was more or less the same argument, I seem to recall, made by Ashley Montagu and Aldous Huxley in a book they co-wrote in the 1940's.

From: Herb Levy
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: What is white
Date: Friday, April 18, 1997 10:40AM

Hoa Nguyen asks:

>Also, I have been very curious about the magazine "Race Traitor" -- plan to buy >it when I have more money-- and was wondering if anyone on this list could >please fill me in-- tell me more about their philosophy behind their "rejection >of whiteness" (or correct me if I have that wrong). Is anyone here involved >with that journal?

I'm not involved with the mag, but you should be able to get it, or at least the collection of writings drawn from it published under the same name, at a library.

The main thrust of their philosophy is that race is not a biological fact, but a social construct, largely developed in the US in place of the (more common in Europe at least) nationalistic views used to exclude folks from social & political communities.

"White", "Black", and "Asian" are vague terms that deny the complex dynamics of ethnic, national, personal, cultural, etc. influences that come into play in an individual's life. There aren't monolithic cultures that are White, Black, or Asian, but many cultural affects that get lost when these more generic terms become the center of discussion.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

558. Christopher Alexander
Re: found poem
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> (it's 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am. 8:30 am)

"do you know where your answers are?"

Chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

559. Steven Marks
Re: Bromige-Safdie
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Thu, 17 Apr 1997, Jeff Hansen wrote:

> My sense is that most poems come out of implicit, rather than explicit, compromise. The compromise happened long before the moment of writing, in the poet's absorbing, thinking about, and coming to terms with the myriad poetical, social, and institutional forces impinging on him or her.
>
> To be able to write means to have already compromised, and to have forgotten.

I'm mostly in agreement with what Jeff says here. If I didn't forget the inevitable compromises I have to make (many of which I'm barely aware of (and at what level willfully, I'm not sure)), then I'd never write anything. I'd fill pages with my imbedded parentheses. No, I wouldn't even get that far. Yes, writing necessarily comes from a social construct in my view. I cringe at the suffering genius model. BUT, isn't the act of forgetting perhaps an act of individuation? Perhaps the place where we "show" (surely not in full consciousness) how we have wove and been woven by the social web. Of course, this activity may just be a lie we tell ourselves to get through the night. As Donne said: "Oh what a web we weave when first practice to deceive."

Steven (I think)

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

560. Kristin Gallagher
Re: The New Party
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

the new party isn't necessarily starting the revolution. they are more like continuing the new left, which is not as radically about ending globalized capitalism. they have great ideas, but don't seem to focus on poverty and its increase as a result of global cap as a central issue. if ending globalized capitalism is your thing, then philly's labor party might be more up your alley. i think the new party is more about trying to involve the people of labor and green interests in democracy and maybe socializing a few things. . . . this of course is just my reading . . . .

↑ Index

561. dbkk
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

At 8:15 AM -0800 4/18/97, Herb Levy wrote:

> "White", "Black", and "Asian" are vague terms that deny the complex dynamics of ethnic, national, personal, cultural, etc. influences that come into play in an individual's life. There aren't monolithic cultures that are White, Black, or Asian, but many cultural affects that get lost when these more generic terms become the center of discussion.

Herb et al,

I haven't been reading the list this past week because I had a grant due, but KK dutifully saved and showed me every post that made any kind of response to what I posted. I think he should start a cottage business doing this for people on the list. It's a great service. KK's Filterarma.

I wish you'd send a copy of your post to SPT's funders, where in many cases I have to count everybody in the above groups you mention, as well as "Hispanic" (which I was told during an arts adminstration seminar not to use because it is a bad word invented during the Regan administration) and the mysterious category "Other." Then I am required to give hard numbers and percentages of total for board, staff, constituency served. These are called Diversity Statistics.

No questions about income levels and class these days--I think for two reasons, the first being the obvious one that Marxism is over and class is no longer sexy. But, then, more problematically, I think a lot of condescension is implicit is this model--all whites are priviledged and all Blacks, Asians, Hispanics and Others are downtrodden innocents who need to be raised up by the Great White Funders--there's a kind of noble savage tone to the whole project. I think is is apparent in a lot of what gets funded--sophisticated and formally challenging writing is not going to seduce anybody into throwing bucks at it.

It seems there is a desire to turn writing back to a folk art--like it's very difficult to get money to support "professional" writers--rather money is given to projects which help people who wouldn't normally write express their feelings about their downtrodden state--and everybody feels good. Of course, it's possible that some members of this downtrodden category will then move to the professional category, but that's not the goal of these projects. I'm not saying that these projects are unworthy of funding, I'm just saying that there doesn't seem to be much left over for projects that would promote the development of professional writers, and so the only way to get training is that area more and more seems to be by entering the elite of graduate writing programs (and to come out the other end with no marketable skills and owing tens of thousands of dollars). I am someone who benefited greatly from free public writing programs. And I know the word professional is problematic, but I'm trying to grunt towards some kinds of distinctions here--and I know any time anybody does such a thing they're opening themselves to attack (attack, in a polite middle class way, of course--I wouldn't expect anything rude here).

SPT is asked to hand out evaluation questionaires at our events where the audience is supposed to check off what group they belong to. Audience members were continually indicating on the questionnaires that they found these categories problematic and reductive, so, following the example of another group, we changed our questionnaire to read something like, "We're often asked to provide these statistics by our funders, so please . . ."

To clarify: I am in favor of providing a broad racial mix in the people I program--and I've been taking steps to broaden that mix futher. This is something I think is good (and which has resulted in some great events), not something I do grudgingly.

Of course these categories are reductive--but my point is that to say these categories aren't real is to not live in the real world--and further, since they are so vastly operative in the world, I think that it would be difficult not to have internalized them and see the world through them--no matter how much you disapprove of them.

Dodie

↑ Index

562. William Burmeister Prod
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> Robin Blaser : "poets are the deodorant pucks in the urinal of life."

Hmmm. May be the same guy who once wrote in the porta-toilet:

Thank you, your shit
Is our bread & butter.

↑ Index

563. Steven Marks
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

How about gazer? Same number of syllables as lurker. No negative associations; even a gentle one of stargazing, and I don't mean Hollywood.

tryingly,
Steven

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Dave Zauhar wrote:

> spectator? and it's various permutations (as in "hi. I've been spectating on this list for 6 years now. . .")?
>
> DZ
>
> Hoverer is too hard to say, too many syllables. I agree, lurk has sinister connotations, unwarranted here. Look/looker would seem to have fewer, though maybe some old-timey slang ones:"She's a real looker!" I'll keep thinking. It's a good quest. sp
>
> addendum to previous post about lurking....
>
> how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...
>
> kl
>
> in response to david israel:
>
> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?

> if not to lurk, then what?

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

564. henry gould
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 12:37:20 -0400 Michael Boughn said:
>
> "You leave out the true animal bearing of the species and in > the end . . . you pay for it by sex."
>
> --Charles Olson

He got that from Freud, didn't he? Sounds like a quote from Freud's late essay, "Surfer Coyotes and Their Discontents". There's always somebody who understands our true animal bearing. Thoth was an owl. Pith was a dog. Somehow it's always clarified at the podium in some sort of lecture, by some explainer or other with wolf hair. (FERAL BIPED - CAUTION)

↑ Index

565. Michael Boughn
Re: safdie-bromige
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 08:14:38 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
> This is all to say that I don't believe in individual vision, and that writing is irreducibly social.

This seems a rather overly simplistic binarism, Jeff.

"If the 'poem' of _otherness_ is already begun _infrapsychisme_, our art must equal this 'reseau de telecommunication'; for, as de Beauregard says, 'in it exist "les futurs contingents en acte" but we are unconscious of them.'

. . .

"The poet does not dwell upon the absence of harmony in historical isolation, as does the contemporary philosopher; he can speak before he knows, and this act connects him to the 'spirit of man' which Olson says 'is always ahead of his ideas.' A transitional period of disharmony, regarded not situatively but morphogenetically, may even contain a new _given_: 'Communal insanity ceases to be insanity'. Paz writes: Destruction was my Beatrice, Mallarme says in a letter to a friend; at the end of the journey the poet does not contemplate the Idea, symbol or archetype of the universe, but a space in which a constellation appears: his poem.

"This place of emergence is in keeping with the Minoan gesture of epiphany, which distinguishes it from modern 'primitive' practices that attempt to induce epiphany by a non-ordering intervention instead of a non-central position."

--John Clarke, _From Feathers to Iron_: 152.

↑ Index

566. Matthias Regan
the PostModern Dilemma
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

imaginary toadstools with real toadstools inside them

↑ Index

567. Mark Prejsnar
Re: The New Party
Fri 18 Apr 1997

WARNING: LONG POST ON POLITIX,
IN RESPONSE TO KENT'S QUERY

Kent--

I've been active off and on with the New Party. I might be more active if they were a presence in Georgia, as they are extremely oriented toward building right now at the local level. A few people (in Wisconsin?? in the midwest) founded it about 7 (?) years ago; the guiding light is generally considered to be Joel Rodgers, a poli sci academic by trade, who has authored or co-authored many of their public statements. There was a quite impressive essay in the Nation, which to some extent constituted a founding gesture as far as much of the country was concerned, and got hundreds of people (including myself) hooked up with the party.

Their platform is in flux and very vague, which has pissed off lots of people on the left, and led to many attacks. The NP says that this is because ultimately they want the folks who are building the party to draw up its detailed credo, and it is still in very formative stages. They claim I think a couple of thousand members, some of whom are of course paper. They have very active chapters in some major cities like Chicago. Their early, tentative outlines of belief/strategy emphasize elections and include what I would call a classic social-democratic set of details. One of their defining features is belief in a tactic called fusion..This would involve placing a candidate (usually a Democrat) on the ballot (for anything from school board to President) under the New Party as well as her own party...The theory is that as the NP swings people to the left, it could demonstarate that it had been indispensible to gettng and keeping that cadidate in office...Said cadidate would then (tho' a Demo and usually quite unwilling) be forced to move invreasingly to the left, to retain NP support and not lose the next election. Fusion was outlawed in most states to help crush the Socialists, Populists and other left electoralist force early in this century. They are hoping to overturn those laws.

My modified admiration for them is based on the fact that (at least at first) they were articulating a pretty forthright left/social-democrat attack on the Republicrat structure, which I hoped would pry activists and working class people away from the Democratic obscenity. It remains to be seen, in my estimation, whether they can deliver on that promise. Where they are active with ten or more members they have won city council and similar type elections (sometimes in loose coalition with left-leaning local Demo's) with impressive results. They seem in my experience to be doing better than most leftists of the past two decades at drawing in real working class people of all races. (The main argument in favor of fusion, in my opionion, and maybe in favor of the NP, is that most workers who haven't sunk deep into despair, who are somewhat harder to mobilize, still believe the media that the Republicrats are and can only be the one and only game in town..Fusion offers a way to draw in folks like that, while they still half-believe that only a vote for a Demo. is not "thrown away." Many friends of mine, including those who think the immediate way forward is mainly electoral (a debateable point certainly), now suspect that the NP is going to repeat the trajectory of Democratic Socialists of America, and become a sunday tea-club entirely subservient for all practical purposes to the Democratic wing of the Republicrats, and thus dead as a political force. I'm not convinced of that, yet. I totally agree with you that there should be an IMMEDIATE merger of all reasonably left parties that think the way forward is (partly) electoral: most green formations, the New Party, the Labor Party, Campaign for a New Tomorrow, and others...(A considerable number are involved with the Independent Progressive Political Action Network, a half-step toward unity, which I've been involved with recently; but many are only half-committed..)

Much more could be said, but that's the general outlines of one (highly personal) response to them...They have a good website. As for the Labor Party, which you mention, until their naitonal leadership wholly endorses activism/membership by folks outside certified union locals, and commits to running its own cadidates, it remains a pretty limited option for most of us...And again, many (including some of its own members) believe with considerable reason that as long as it says it is a "party" but won't field its own cadidates, it is going to be simply a wing of the Clintonian ultra-right Demos, as is so much of the labor movement which is responsible for founding it. At the moment, from what I can see, that's a more compelling accusation than the similar one against the NP..

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Wed, 16 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> Speaking of Howard Zinn, does anyone know anything about the New Party? I saw an ad a couple weeks back where Zinn is listed as a "member" along with Noam Chomsky, Cornel West, Barbara Ehrenreich, Jim Hightower, and other prominent others. I've also seen the NP championed by Alexander Cockburn in the Nation, talking about them winning a few dozen local elections around thecountry in the past couple years or so.
>
> What's the history? How does this group differ, say, from the new Labor Party founded in Philly, or "Nader's" Green party? What would be the sticking points to overcome before a possible electoral alliance, for example? (Nader got half a million in only 26 states, so such unity might have eventual ground-breaking results?) Ten years ago I could draw a fractal family tree of every little left splinter group in the country since James Cannon marched out of the CPUSA politburo singing the Internationale. Now I don't even know where this glitzy and well-appointed New Party came from. A DSA leap into third party politics?
>
> I feel left out and don't want the revolution to start without me.
>
> Info Ron Silliman? Mark Presjnar? Curious,
>
> Kent

↑ Index

568. Mark Weiss
Re: the PostModern Dilemma
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

and inside the innermost a dab of foiegras yum yum
At 12:20 PM 4/18/97 -0500, you wrote:
>imaginary toadstools with
>real toadstools inside them
>
>

↑ Index

569. Dave Zauhar
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

spectator? and it's various permutations (as in "hi. I've been spectating on this list for 6 years now. . .")?

DZ

> Hoverer is too hard to say, too many syllables. I agree, lurk has sinister connotations, unwarranted here. Look/looker would seem to have fewer, though maybe some old-timey slang ones:"She's a real looker!" I'll keep thinking. It's a good quest. sp
>
> addendum to previous post about lurking....
>
> how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...
>
> kl
>
> in response to david israel:
>
> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>
> if not to lurk, then what?

↑ Index

570. Mark Weiss
Re: if this is still under discussion
Fri 18 Apr 1997

For years I thought it would be a good thing to write a "folk" tale. Did that (too long to quote). Then a fortune cookie :"If you have broken this cookie with your fingers/ don't lick them." (actually had cookies made with that in them for a party). Recently I thought i'd invent a bathroom graffito, see if it had legs--start it in a few places and watch the spread: "Better to light a match than to curse the methane." Any volunteers for the experiment, my blessings upon you.

Is incitement to graffiti against the law?

At 01:09 PM 4/18/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>Robin Blaser : "poets are the deodorant pucks in the urinal of life."
>
>Hmmm. May be the same guy who once wrote in the porta-toilet:
>
>Thank you, your shit
>Is our bread & butter.
>
>

↑ Index

571. dbkk
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

At 5:56 PM -0700 4/17/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
>uh dodie--didnt have your address--just wanted to say i was[n't] dissing you.
>i just latched on to your use of that term

Jeffery,

As I remember it, I said "white guys" in my original post. It's interesting that you latched onto "white." Why not deconstruct "guys," why not lauch into gender performance here?

No offense take.

x,
Dodie

↑ Index

572. sschu30844
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

There's a young scholar at NYU, whose name I can't remember, who is currently writing a biography of Monk. He was featured on PBS recently in a program about the lives of minority faculty across the country. Try the American Studies department there for an update?

Susan

↑ Index

573. Joe Safdie
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Pierre,

What exactly is the "ocl worldwide catalogue" and how can one attain access to it? It seems -- from what it gave you about Monk -- a most useful database!

Joe

↑ Index

574. Sylvester Pollet
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Yes, that's better than my looker, Steve. But it makes me think of another possibility, grazer. to graze. gaze does often have the subtext of awe, which would be hard to maintain some days! sp

> How about gazer? Same number of syllables as lurker. No negative associations; even a gentle one of stargazing, and I don't mean Hollywood.
>
> tryingly,
> Steven
>
> On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Dave Zauhar wrote:
>
> spectator? and it's various permutations (as in "hi. I've been spectating on this list for 6 years now. . .")?
>
> DZ
>
> Hoverer is too hard to say, too many syllables. I agree, lurk has sinister > connotations, unwarranted here. Look/looker would seem to have fewer, though maybe some old-timey slang ones:"She's a real looker!" I'll keep thinking. It's a good quest. sp

>
> addendum to previous post about lurking....
>
> how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...
>
> kl
>
> in response to david israel:
>
> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>
> if not to lurk, then what?
>
> ---
>
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
>
> ---

↑ Index

575. Joseph Lease

Re: What is white

Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

ps: I was stuck by Ginsberg's line in the poem that Douglas Messerli posted recently (a fine poem, by the way):

G is answering "multiple identity" question form and says white if Jews are white:

I'm really not meaning to start a thread with this (please lets not) only to repeat it (probably for Maria):

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> At 5:56 PM -0700 4/17/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
> uh dodie--didnt have your address--just wanted to say i was[n't] dissing you.
> i just latched on to your use of that term
>
> Jeffery,

> As I remember it, I said "white guys" in my original post. It's interesting that you latched onto "white." Why not deconstruct "guys," why not lauch into gender performance here?
>
> No offense take.
>
> x,
> Dodie

↑ Index

576. Michael Franco
Re: Joe Dunn
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Dear Kevin

Michael Franco here & your so right "He was, I think, a wonderful writer, and one of the nicest people I've ever met." When he first showed up at Word of Mouth I landed on him to tell him how important the White Rabbit books and the DREAM HOUSE had been for me- actually embarassed him I think - He was struck that we even knew what he had done & who he was. He without question agreed to be the ghost of Lorca for my AFTER LORCA reading- we put him on tape and set the recorded in the midst of the room... his wonderful twang wrapping around the words- and just last summer in introducing Gerrit Lansing and Ken Irby he recounted what just about every younger or older poet in the room was up to... he was just simply a fine man a fine poet & any one interested in Boston, SF or just poetry & having a life in poerty- regardless of prizes or "fame" would have a grand time looking into his work

all best
Michael

"On the branches of Laurel
Saw two shadowy pigeons.
One of them was the sun
The other the moon"
spicer- a trans. for Joe Dunn

↑ Index

577. Peter Jaeger
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Steven Marks wrote:

> How about gazer? Same number of syllables as lurker. No negative associations; even a gentle one of stargazing, and I don't mean Hollywood.

gazer seems a bit too psychoanalytic . . . what about something more pastoral, like "grazer," as in "I'm a grazer in the open fields of poetics...

peter

↑ Index

578. Joseph Lease
Re: safdie-bromige
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

well in my opinion you are both absolutely right and it's an extremely generative question to be sure:

it's really not an either/or:

for example one might say:

I don't believe in glorifying individual vision

or

I don't believe that individual vision can best be looked at as a stable quality but rather as a flux constructed by power and specific cultural and historical entanglements

or

I don't believe in forgetting that individual vision is also part of political textuality

or or or

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Michael Boughn wrote:

> On Fri, 18 Apr 1997 08:14:38 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
> This is all to say that I don't believe in individual vision, and that writing is irreducibly social.
>
> This seems a rather overly simplistic binarism, Jeff.
>
> "If the 'poem' of _otherness_ is already begun _infrapsychisme_, our art must equal this 'reseau de telecommunication'; for, as de Beauregard says, 'in it exist "les futurs contingents en acte" but we are unconscious of them.'
>
> . . .

> "The poet does not dwell upon the absence of harmony in historical isolation, as does the contemporary philosopher; he can speak before he knows, and this act connects him to the 'spirit of man' which Olson says 'is always ahead of his ideas.' A transitional period of disharmony, regarded not situatively but morphogenetically, may even contain a new _given_: 'Communal insanity ceases to be insanity'. Paz writes:
>
> > Destruction was my Beatrice, Mallarme says in a letter to a friend; at the end of the journey the poet does not contemplate the Idea, symbol or archetype of the universe, but a space in which a constellation appears: his poem.
>
> "This place of emergence is in keeping with the Minoan gesture of epiphany, which distinguishes it from modern 'primitive' practices that attempt to induce epiphany by a non-ordering intervention instead of a non-central position."
>
> > --John Clarke, _From Feathers to Iron_: 152.

↑ Index

579. William Burmeister Prod

Re: if this is still under discussion

Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Apr 18, 10:51am, Mark Weiss wrote:
> Subject: Re: if this is still under discussion
> For years I thought it would be a good thing to write a "folk" tale. Did > that (too long to quote). Then a fortune cookie :"If you have broken this > cookie with your fingers/ don't lick them." (actually had cookies made with > that in them for a party). Recently I thought i'd invent a bathroom > graffito, see if it had legs--start it in a few places and watch the spread:
> "Better to light a match than to curse the methane." Any volunteers for the > experiment, my blessings upon you.
>
> Is incitement to graffiti against the law?
>
> At 01:09 PM 4/18/97 -0400, you wrote:
> >>Robin Blaser : "poets are the deodorant pucks in the urinal of life."
> >
> >Hmmm. May be the same guy who once wrote in the porta-toilet:
> >
> >Thank you, your shit
> >Is our bread & butter.

Where I went to high school, there was such a poet: The Shithouse Poet. He may be well travelled (I suspect). The one piece I remember,

They paint these walls
To hide my pen,
But the shithouse poet
Strikes again.

-The Shithouse Poet (aka Jack Spandrift)

↑ Index

580. Joseph Lease
Re: safdie-bromige
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Joseph Lease wrote:

> well in my opinion you are both absolutely right and it's an extremely generative question to be sure:
>
> it's really not an either/or:
>
> for example one might say:
>
> I don't believe in glorifying individual vision
>
> or
>
> I don't believe that individual vision can best be looked at as a stable quality but rather as a flux constructed by power and specific cultural and historical entanglements
>
> or
>
> I don't believe in forgetting that individual vision is also part of political textuality
>
> or or or

and and and and and the point being something like is there a specific critique and or history that can be done BETTER WITHOUT taking into account both subjectivity and identities, which are plural and in motion

↑ Index

581. henry
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

grazer - a bit too bovine. how about "ruminant"? same problem.

how about ringsider? combines insider & grin. if you're not grinning you can always go outside for some fresh air [hack, hack]

Jack Spandrift

"floats like a tub,
stings like a lemon"

↑ Index

582. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

how about stalker

that old movie "They Walk Among Us"

or stealth er

(just to inject some hyperbolic paranoia)

↑ Index

583. David Israel
Re: if not to lurk -Reply
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

well, there is also "auditing" -- or for that matter, "reading" -- one could be a "consumer" or an "imbiber" or a "tippler" or a "totler" [sp?, as in tea-totling] -- a listserv totler (taking in the totality of discourse) which makes one wonder abt. origins of "tea-totler" (if specifically contra tippler or other such alcoholicals) -- a watcher of posts, a seer of sentences . . . . ?

(i'm still not satisfied in this name-quest)

d.i.

p.s.: grazer does, of course, have specific yuppie-dieting connotations -- (poss. not overbearing ones, but they're there; but must say "grazer" does have some things in its favor -- a chewer of listserv cud)

a cud-chewer? -- any other bovine (or other barnyard) techno-speak?

> Peter Jaeger at 04/18/97 02:39pm wrote:
> gazer seems a bit too psychoanalytic . . . what about something more pastoral, like "grazer," as in "I'm a grazer in the open fields of poetics...

↑ Index

584. Hoa Nguyen
Re: what is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Thursday April 17 Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:

..."white was used in a homogenizing fashion that failed to be attentive to the pluralities that term is used to organize and did not recognize the virtually indistinct category it is. of course it does have a powerful political resonance"

Maybe it would be appropriate to address exactly what this "resonance" is. and what is the "it"?

I agree that the term is impenetrable and tricky-- Melville's whale-- and at the same time the "resonance" is what I live with everyday of my life. I understand that "white" is a "concept" designed to divide and imbue power-- to other others-- I am at the receiving end of this in many palpable ways, whether it is people (potential landlords, employers etc.) not getting calling me back because of my "foreign" name or people acting shocked at my perfect English and then "Welcoming" me to America or people saying "You know I know a Vietnamese man. He is very intelligent" or people asking me if my parents know kung-fu.

Each time I said "people" in the previous, I meant white people. It is not a very satisfying term for me either. I don't know what else to call the experience I have with "white" Americans.

..."race is semantically and epistemologically more complicated that the linguistic and conceptual categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of that"

I am very aware of race and its complications-- you wield incredible privilege as you speak of race as you do above. Race is not a concept to me in my daily experiences.

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

585. David Bromige
divers
Fri 18 Apr 1997

George, was that posting meant to be backchanneled to me? True, I frequently suffer from what the shrinks used to term "Ideas of reference", true, California i s full of swimmers, but theyre not all English and you did ask to be taught the English e . Unfoprtunately, old chum, I havent the faintest notion what an English e is. But I do wish you were here. If youre trying to cadge an invite, its always open house to Bowering at the Bromige hovel. I'll throw another woodchip on the barbie.

Thanks, Nicole Markotic, for that fine full summary of the cixous talk. Are you now in Philly and not Calgary, or did you post this via a Philly friend?

Okay, Henry, indeed we have repressive desublimation (Herbert Marcuse's term, I believe, we read him a lot in the 60s) all over the set now, its what i called a short poem of mine whose only other line plays with Freud's "a child is being beaten," only i substitute "eaten".

Jeffrey Timmons: I believe I spelled you Geoffrey the other day. Apologies. The Dead Father who "is dead but still with us, still with us but dead" gives me the chance to plug "Weekend at Bernie's II", a movie I find hilarious whenever dead Bernie comes to "life" as the reggae begins. Anyone else out there--lurker, hoverer, Peeping Tom or Tomasina; E's-dropper, snooper, lazybones, one-of-few-words, freeloader, attendant spirit, spear-carrier, old mole--share my enthusiasm for this no doubt lousy flick?

"Playful duplicity in language"--Andrew, that's right up my alley, do I need a sanskrit scholar or is there a handy translation? (This has probably been mentioned already, but I was skimming).

Skimming, was t h a t what you meant to write, George Bowering? db.

↑ Index

586. David Israel
Re: if not to lurk / stalker
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Interestingly, "stalker" -- in the great metaphysical sci-fi film by Andre Tarkovsky (based, I think, on novel by Stanislav Lem (presumably titled, like the film, Stalker?)-- as was likewise the other great Tarkovsky sci-fi film Solaris) -- "stalker", I say, in said film, denoted the fellow who was a guide to the regions of mystery (ergo, something of a guru character, while also an outlaw of a benign sort) -- of course, I don't know what Russian (from Tarkovsky) or Polish (from Lem?) word this English "stalker" translates -- but the English word, there, seemed more along the lines of "stalking the wild mushrooms" -- one who is knowledgeable of the esoterica of a natural environment of some type (the particular natural environment, in this case, being of "The Zone" -- the region of land that it was officially forbidden to visit . . . .)

not sure this is support for the nominative candidacy (candidative nomination??) of "stalker" in lieu of "lurker" -- just vital info & idle chit-chat (can you tell the diff ?)

d.i.

>>> Christina Fairbank Chirot <[redacted]> 04/18/97 03:21pm >>>

how about stalker

that old movie "They Walk Among Us"

or stealth er

(just to inject some hyperbolic paranoia)

↑ Index

587. Hugh Steinberg
Re: if not to lurk -Reply
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> well, there is also "auditing" --
> or for that matter, "reading" --
> one could be a "consumer" or an "imbiber" or a "tippler" or a "totler" > [sp?, as in tea-totling] --

I like "reader" best so far.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

588. Matthias Regan
Re: if not to lurk -Reply
Fri 18 Apr 1997

> (i'm still not satisfied in this name-quest)

The problem might be LURK was best in the first place. From the viewpoint of non-LURKers (in one sense we are all LURKers most of the time) LURK captures the sudden reveal - "Ive been here for years!" (CLOAKed) - and for the LURKER LURK is nice because of MUCK and RAKE and LURCH and LUCK, all of which are very applicable to what's going on:

skimming the boring stuff is like RAKING THE MUCK, LUCK and LURCH refer to stumbling over a post you want to write about and for saying something that demonstrates you haven't a clue what's going on.

I do it all the time.

Matthias Regan
Northwestern University
Department of Chemistry
Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

589. DS

Re: What is white

Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

all dead white guise

At 10:56 AM 4/18/97 -0700, you wrote:
>At 5:56 PM -0700 4/17/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
>>uh dodie--didnt have your address--just wanted to say i was[n't] dissing you.
>>i just latched on to your use of that term
>
>Jeffery,
>
>As I remember it, I said "white guys" in my original post. It's >interesting that you latched onto "white." Why not deconstruct "guys," why >not lauch into gender performance here?
>
>No offense take.
>
>x,
>Dodie
>
>

↑ Index

590. Dave Zauhar
Re: monk, t.
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Would this be Robin Kelley?

DZ

> There's a young scholar at NYU, whose name I can't remember, who is currently writing a biography of Monk. He was featured on PBS recently in a program about the lives of minority faculty across the country. Try the American Studies department there for an update?
>
> Susan

↑ Index

591. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: What is white
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>
> Dear Jeffery Timmons:
>
> Ok, I'll bite--
>
> but first a couple of questions...
>
> "Objection"? Why objection?
> Are you looking for an answer or making a point?
>
> This is my answer, if one is wanted--
>
> I have been asked this question before by European-Americans ("Whites")-- and it > usually comes up when I talk about my experiences as a woman of color. For > example, when I describe how it feels to be the only poet of color in a given > magazine or at a poetry reading-- I am sometimes asked "Isn't white a color?"
>
> I started this response by asking a question-- because it has been my experience
> that when white people ask me this, it is a way of trying to deny my experiences > of difference-- to dodge the everyday priledges of belonging in the white world > that white people have (without often knowing they have it). So I would like to > know why you asked. Is it because you don't understand what is meant or are you > challenging the construction of whiteness and if so how come you are choosing to > go about it?

>
> So, my answer is: white people are people of European heritage (A.G., I recall > wrote he was "white if Jewish people are white").
>
> Also, I have been very curious about the magazine "Race Traitor" -- plan to buy > it when I have more money-- and was wondering if anyone on this list could
> please fill me in-- tell me more about their philosophy behind their "rejection > of whiteness" (or correct me if I have that wrong). Is anyone here involved > with that journal?
>
> >Date: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 19:01:46 -0700
> >From: "Jeffrey W. Timmons" <[redacted]>
> >Subject: Re: George Wills and the Imago of Alan Ginsbuerg, > > in the 2nd circle
> >To: [redacted]
> >
> >On Mon, 14 Apr 1997 dodie wrote:
> >
> >> This totalizing "we" is problematic to me.
> >
> >ok.
> >
> >> As I see it, he embodied alienation for a bunch of white guys (and a > >> few women such as Maria D.), a fine thing to do--but other people have > >> embodied that for other groups and will continue to.
> >
> >objection! please define "white." i dont bite.
> >
> >jeffrey timmons
> >
>
> ----------
> Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
> ----------For what it's worth, in a huge, multi-decade study of the history of human genetics which looked at populations in situ before 1492, Luca Cavalli-Sforza and his colleagues report, among other things, that the genes found in Europeans derive 65% from Asia, 35% from Africa--i.e., that there are no chacteristically European [& perhaps no or few characteristically white] genes. So much for _that_ basis of racism!

It seems to me that if we think of ourselves in our complete diachrony--at least back pre-Ice, pre-cave--we can think of each other so, too, & slough the too-tight "social constructs" [of race, gender, whatever] for whose construction we bear no primary responsibility, & take our own ancient humanity into our own hands, regardless of what others would have us do with it, to shape ourselves to uses outstripping even the "dromological" rocket-sled Paul Virilio sees us strapped to.

In a shade of the pale,
Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

592. Sylvester Pollet
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

---

peter--I like it, I like it (as you'll see from an independent posting!) sylvester

> On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Steven Marks wrote:
>
> How about gazer? Same number of syllables as lurker. No negative associations; even a gentle one of stargazing, and I don't mean Hollywood.
>
> gazer seems a bit too psychoanalytic . . . what about something more pastoral, like "grazer," as in "I'm a grazer in the open fields of poetics...
>
> peter

↑ Index

593. Sylvester Pollet
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

Well, I kind of liked the bovine (passivity). And doesn't ringsider combine insider with gnir? Or am I being too literal? Your poem is wonderful--too bad Liston didn't think of that. S.

> grazer - a bit too bovine. how about "ruminant"? same problem.
>
> how about ringsider? combines insider & grin. if you're not grinning
> you can always go outside for some fresh air [hack, hack]
>
> Jack Spandrift
>
> "floats like a tub,
> stings like a lemon"

↑ Index

594. Mark Weiss
Re: if not to lurk
Fri 18 Apr 1997

I graze on the list because I'm too cowed.

At 02:18 PM 4/18/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Yes, that's better than my looker, Steve. But it makes me think of another >possibility, grazer. to graze. gaze does often have the subtext of awe, >which would be hard to maintain some days! sp
>
>>How about gazer? Same number of syllables as lurker. No negative >>associations; even a gentle one of stargazing, and I don't mean Hollywood.
>>
>>tryingly,
>>Steven
>>
>>
>>On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Dave Zauhar wrote:
>>
>>> spectator? and it's various permutations (as in "hi. I've been spectating >>> on this list for 6 years now. . .")?
>>>
>>> DZ
>>>
>>> >Hoverer is too hard to say, too many syllables. I agree, lurk has sinister >>> >connotations, unwarranted here. Look/looker would seem to have fewer, >>> >though maybe some old-timey slang ones:"She's a real looker!" I'll keep >>> >thinking. It's a good quest. sp
>>> >
>>> >
>>> >>addendum to previous post about lurking....
>>> >>

>>> >>how about hoverer? hovering? " to hang fluttering in the air, to remain >>> >>suspended over a place or object, to move to and fro near a place, to >>> >>be in a state of uncertainty, irresolution, or suspense" and i would >>> >>add, to be in a state of too much to do-ness, not not caring...
>>> >>
>>> >>kl
>>> >>
>>> >>in response to david israel:
>>> >>
>>> >>> so, how about neologize a newer, more congenial self-descriptive?
>>> >>>
>>> >>> if not to lurk, then what?
>>>
>>
>>_____
>> Steven Marks
>>
>> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
>>_____
>
>

↑ Index

595. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Is anybody still discussing Bob Perelman
Fri 18 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Keith Tuma wrote:

> I remember a Barthelme novel, _The Dead Father_, asking this same question. As I recall the DF can manifest patriarchal hegemony only by standing in Ohio and pissing into Nebraska.

dead but still with us. still with us but dead.

something to that effect.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

596. David Bromige
Well no I mean yes
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Dear George, University gets out so early in Canada, or is it only BC? When I attended UBC, I was told we got out that early because we were wanted in the forests to fell things. Was that T, or F? So these 3 weeks of hell open upon a paradise of summer hols. What will you do with yourself now the stake has gone thru the heart of another academic year? Travel? Lie on the beach at Kits? Garden? Speaking of hearts, that was naughty of you to scarf every last chocki & not save any for your sweetie. --Does Valentine's Day fall six weeks later in Canada, the way your Thanksgiving is six weeks earlier? It has to do with the northern seasons, I suppose. People's plumbing stays frozen until April? F, T?

Broms

↑ Index

597. KENT JOHNSON
axis of the universe
Sat 19 Apr 1997

This recent news re: the universe actually having an axis: Does that mean that all these posts I've been writing with my toes while standing on my head were _really_ written upside down?

Kent

↑ Index

598. Nicole Markotic
helene cixous
Sat 19 Apr 1997

For anyone interested...

Last week, I went to hear Helene Cixous give a paper. The title was something like (apparently she had several versions and permutations of this title on the poster, which I never saw): "My Menagerie & Philosophy: Stigmata." It's funny, but at first I wasn't sure what she was doing. She seemed to be relating a reminiscence about her childhood pet dog and how it bit her, yet this was not a short story, it had been billed as an academic talk. Now, I'm not one to quibble over genre distinctions, still, I didn't think she would be relating the circumstances surrounding her dog's death for merely fictional purposes. But gradually as she talked I realized how immense a thing she was doing, how complex, and how extraordinary to posit the dog's body as text for what was going on around her and her family, growing up in Algeria. To begin at the beginning: She started by mentioning such writers as St. Augustine, Proust, Joyce, and Genet, all as introductions for a literary history of stigmata. She talked about stigmata as being (or her previously thinking of stigmata as being) very catholic, very masculine. And, as it is something that happens to the body without the body's control, one could consider circumcision a form of stigmata. In the same way, violent inscription on the body leaves psychosomatic symptoms and scars. This intro lead into her talk on her dog Fibbs (Phipps?), and how his rage and teeth marked her left foot, his bite became a pain imbedded on her brain. Basically, her family (Jewish, French-speaking) lived within what was then known as Arab Algeria. They were tolerated because her father was a doctor and helped the surrounding neighbours. But once he died, their neighbours began turning against them, for being Jewish and for being "French." The anger and hatred took the form of everyday verbal and physical (rocks thrown at them, etc.) abuse. The dog, too, was abused and did not understand why. Eventually, it began to attack its attackers, and the family had to chain it up within the yard. "We chained up our own incarnation," she said, "we beat the innocent." She thought the dog didn't understand because she didn't understand. The dog became a chained up cross waiting for her in the yard. Fibbs represented a love that was twisted, bloody, criminal. And proved that to live is to survive in chains. "We're all in the process of becoming mean dogs," Cixous said, "one bites one's brother, one bites oneself." She felt, eventually, that she was not his sister (though she had longed for a baby brother when their father brought the dog home), but his assassin. When the dog bit her, his bite was penetrating; a hideous attachment. She realized he was her own raving twin. And at that moment, there was a slight beating on the inside of her brain, a minuscule wound that would not close. An ornament. Poison, she realized, is not hate, but weak love. Somehow, she failed the dog, abandoned it in terror and pity. She did not rush into the flames to save her dog/child.

The dog was Job: it had ticks that it suffered from horribly, soft vampires that suckled the dog to death. Neither she nor the dog knew where to go to prevent death from arriving. And, as she would not give her life for him, she could not be there in his death (after biting her, he ran out into the street). Fibbs died because he was outraged at the injustice that surrounded him, yet helpless to do anything but rage. And a wound, at least, brings a sense of immediacy into an intolerable situation. She concluded with the words, "I did not love him there in the garden of war. Not yet, but later." I think it's really fascinating the way, by merely describing her childhood relationship with a problematic pet, Cixous managed not only to discuss a volatile political situation, but also to posit a narrative and analysis of stigmata and how we expect the body to recall violent and emotional events. Just thought I'd post this for those interested but unable to attend. Cheers, Nicole Markotic

↑ Index

599. jdhollo
Sandhyabasha, from a while back
Sat 19 Apr 1997

This is Anselm Hollo. Colleagues Anne Waldman and Andrew Schelling (who promise to acquire e-mail capability soon) have asked me to forward the following in re the Sanskrit Poetics thread:

(Anne:) Yes, the somewhat free use of the term "sandhyabasha" doesn't come particularly from a reading of Eliade and was never used or recorded to my knowledge by Kerouac or Ginsberg or other confreres. I had Andrew Schelling's expanded sense of the term and my own desire to present the idea of a secret code--perhaps intuited by other initiates (see the collaboration "Pull My Daisy". We are certainly aware of the literal definitions. Apologies for taking poetic liberties. This only encourages me to more dialogue with the scholars. "Ulatbamsi," more literally upsidedown is probably more accurate term. And of course there's "dakini script" which is what some poets think they're onto, not to mention the sense of poem as "terma," or hidden treasure. What do you think? Not on the Net yet; this intervention is courtesy of Anselm Hollo who alerted me to the discussion.

(Andrew:) Confess I'm the source for Waldman's use of the Sanskrit term sandhyabasha. It is quite unlikely Kerouac ever encountered the term, certainly he never used it. Anne ws employing it as a way to line up Kerouac "goofiness" (playful duplicity in language) with older Tantric traditions. Her "upside down" skips across to another word, another tradition, ulatbamshi--which I know best from Charlotte Vaudeville's scholarly work on Kabir--who of course did not write in Sanskrit. I've tended to use the term sandhyabasha without much concern for getting right its original Sanskrit usage. This I hope is okay since nobody knows precisely what it meant in the old days. Hence debate about whether it is sandhya- (twilight) or sandha- (intentional) speech. I've tried to give it a contemporary spin: poetry as a place where language has the "conjoint" (lit. sandhya-) lights of day and night, waking & dreaming--goofiness or double-meaning--as opposed to secret initiate language. I gave my essay book published in Indi the title Twilight Speech. Its USA publication I'd hoped would have the same title, but Leslie Scalapino who published it was alerted by Philip Whalen to how close the term sounds to "twilight sleep" which he said is what women go into when they have spinals for Caesarean sections. So Leslie insisted we come up with another title. As for the Masson/Merwin book, it is a good collaboration. Masson's introduction particularly fine. The choice of poems is surprising--even inspired--though Merwin doesn't know the language so he can swim a bit with tone and meaning. Masson was once upon a time a terrific Sanskritist, but on occasions sloppy. Notice for instance the opening verse to his introduction, which is not in any Sanskrit anyone I know has been able to decode. Not even Masson when I took it to him and said what the hell's this. Said he thinks he got it from his guru.

End of Waldman/Schelling transmission

(Andrew

↑ Index

600. Pierre Joris
Re: monk, t.
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Joe Safdie wrote:
>
> Pierre,
>
> What exactly is the "ocl worldwide catalogue" and how can one attain > access to it? It seems -- from what it gave you about Monk -- a most > useful database!
>
> Joe

Joe -- the OCLC WorldCat a worldwide database that many university libraries subscribe to, which is how I have access to it. its wepage (but I think you need to be a paid subscriber is:
http://www.ref.oclc.org:2000/). -- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

601. George Bowering
Re: swimmers
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Oh I wish I were in California. You would take me to a soccer game. We would have shrimp and lemon ona patio. I could teach you the lyric and you could tell me how to make an English e

Oh that would be fun.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

602. k.a. hehir
of Cheezheads and poetry
Sat 19 Apr 1997

---

the Ever delicious Whippet Lounge presents:

kim dawn Kevin Cheezberger Hehir
Wayne Woodman Carey Weinberg
Charles Glasspool Steve Ford
Lynn Cooper Corwyn Liam Birch
Melissa Godwalt

Naturally pure, that's all I am.
Allen Ginsberg(1926-1997)

At the Embassy Hotel 732 Dundas Street
[redacted]
londonOnt

↑ Index

603. David R. Israel
Re: helene cixous
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Nicole --

thanks for the detailed & interesting notes --

I'd only, some time ago, glanced at one of Cixous' books; this does make me want to return to it (or look at others) . . .

She seems to remind me a bit (or in a general way) of that other interesting academic experimentalist (so to say), Ann Carson . . .

best,
d.i.

> Date: Sat, 19 Apr 1997 01:19:42 -0400
> From: Nicole Markotic <[redacted]>
>
> For anyone interested...
>
> Last week, I went to hear Helene Cixous give a paper. . . .

.
,
.....,
1....., \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/\0/\/////////////////////...'
.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o....'
///\\\\\\/////////\/\\\o///\/\\\\\\\\\/////\\\...'
.David.....Raphael.....Israel...'
<[redacted]>
[&/[redacted]]
{telephonic.location.202/[redacted]}
|"...sleuthing out all clues, blues & news"|
\\\/////\\\\\\\\\/\//&\\\/\/////////\\\\\\//..'

↑ Index

604. David Golumbia
Re: if not to lurk / stalker
Sat 19 Apr 1997

David Israel wrote:
>
> Interestingly, "stalker" -- in the great metaphysical sci-fi film by Andre > Tarkovsky (based, I think, on novel by Stanislav Lem (presumably titled, > like the film, Stalker?)-- as was likewise the other great Tarkovsky > sci-fi film Solaris) -- "stalker", I say, in said film, denoted the fellow

STALKER -- as brilliant a movie I know of -- based on the novel ROADSIDE PICNIC by the "Strugatsky Brothers" (Arkady and Boris Strugatsky), Russians. In his MICROWORLDS Lem has an essay on ROADSIDE PICNIC (I believe there are other associations between Lem and the Strugatskys as well). Was released in US translation in late 70s/early 80s along with several other of their books. Very interesting -- but Tarkovsky makes its content quite a bit more "metaphysical" than is the book, which on my reading suffered a bit from that excessive sense of ironic humor from which some of Lem's work also suffers. ROADSIDE PICNIC, if I remember aright, actually says what's in the Zone -- it was more fun not to know (exactly).

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

605. F.A. Templeton
CCCP
Sat 19 Apr 1997

C C C P 7 (Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry)

25-27 April, King's College (Keynes Hall)

FRI: 8 pm Jennifer Moxley, John Tranter

SAT: 11 am Pierre-Yves Soucy, Staffan Soderblum

2 pm Papers & discussion: Steve Evans and Jean Khalfa

8 pm Emmanuel Hocquart, Grace Lake, Karen Mac Cormack

SUN: 2 pm Performance: Fiona Templeton
(in the McCrum Theatre, Corpus Christi College)

4 pm David Chaloner, Deanna Ferguson

7 pm Allen Fisher, Dominique Grandmont, Tracy Ryan

All events £4 (£2.50 concs), except Saturday afternoon, which is £3 (£2 concs). Tickets at the door or reservations in advance from Ian Patterson, King's College, Cambridge CB2 1ST.

For more details contact Ian Patterson 01223-331196 or Peter Riley 01223-327-455.

↑ Index

606. Hank Lazer
Re: monk, t.
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Thanks to one & all, and especially Herb & Pierre, for the info on Monk biographies....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

607. Hank Lazer
offer, discounts
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Judith Knight (marketing, University of Alabama Press) has asked me to pass along the following offer to the Poetics List. Mark Scroggins' new book is excellent--essays by Barry Ahearn, Michael Campbell, Norman Finkelstein, Burton Hatlen, Kent Johnson, Ming-Qian Ma, Alec Marsh, Ira Nadel, Marnie Parsons, Peter Quartermain, Mark Scroggins, Steve Shoemaker, and Susan Vanderborg....

Fine spring/summer reading? On fine paper, resistant to the stains and smears of tanning oil, croissants, coffee, cream cheese....

Hank Lazer

The University of Alabama Press offers a special 20% discount on selected titles for the Poetics List.

Upper Limit Music: The Writing of Louis Zukofsky Mark Scroggins, editor Scroggins presents the first collected critical essays to examine all aspects of Zukofsky's writings in all periods of his career. Upper Limit Music is an essential contribution to readings of 20th-century poetry and will prove an important resource for readers and critics of Zukofsky. 304 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0826-1, 1997, $34.95 paper, discount price $27.96

The Seductions of Emily Dickinson Robert McClure Smith Relocating Dickinson within her own culture, Smith reveals both the genius and the continuing impact of this poet's "rhetoric of seduction." "One of the very best readings of this enigmatic poet ever."--CHOICE CHOICE OUTSTANDING ACADEMIC BOOK FOR 1996 RECIPIENT OF THE 1994 ELIZABETH AGEE PRIZE IN AMERICAN LITERATURE 232 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0905-5, 1997, $24.95 paper, discount price $19.96

Songs of Degrees Essays on Contemporary Poetry and Poetics John Taggart With an introduction by Marjorie Perloff A collection of 19 related essays on contemporary American poetry and poetics, published as journal articles between 1975 and 1989, by poet and theorist John Taggart. By focusing on the work of several major and less well-known American experimental poets from the 1930s to the present, Taggart not only traces the origins and evolution of this experimental tendency in recent poetry, but also develops new theoretical tools for reading and appreciating these innovative and complex works. "Taggart's insights . . . are invaluable, for he blends appreciation with analysis, information with inspiration, and logic with imagination."--Philosophy and Literature 272 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0713-3, 1994, $29.95 paper, discount price $23.96

Apocalypse and After: Modern Strategy and Postmodern Tactics in Pound, Williams, and Zukofsky Bruce Comens Comens examines the maturation of modernism into postmodernism through the works of these three major American poets. "This study provides lucid readings of these three poets, and it is valuable to anyone interested in them or in further definitions of modernism and postmodernism more generally."--American Literature 232 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0732-X, 1995, $23.95 paper, discount price $19.16

The Tribe of John: Ashbery and Contemporary Poetry Susan M. Schultz, editor The Tribe of John contributes significantly to how we understand both Ashbery and, more broadly, the complex dynamics of "influence." These essays focus on the new generation of postmodern poets who are indebted to Ashbery's work. "It is a rare critical collection that sends one to the poetry itself (while remaining interesting in its own right)."--Taproot Review 288 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0767-2, 1995, $28.95 paper, discount price $23.16

What Is a Poet? Hank Lazer, editor Eleven major American poets and critics discuss American poetry and the difficult relationship between poetry and criticism. Participants include: Charles Altieri, Charles Bernstein, Kenneth Burke, Donald Hall, David Ignatow, Hank Lazer, Denise Levertov, Marjorie Perloff, Louis Simpson, Gerald Stern, and Helen Vendler. "This book is not only definitive, but it will initiate a dialogue that will continue."--Richard Jackson, editor, The Poetry Miscellany 296 pages, ISBN 0-8173-0325-1, 1987, $32.50 cloth, discount price $26.00

SPECIAL POETICS LISTSERV ORDERFORM EXPIRES 1 JUNE 1997

You MUST use this orderform to get the 20% discount

e-mail [redacted] FAX [redacted] or

The University of Alabama Press, Box 870380, Tuscaloosa, Al 35487-0380

Quantity------Book titles----------Price---------Total

_____

_____

_____ Residents of Alabama

add 4% sales tax_____ $4.00 postage for first book, and .50 each additional_____
---------- Total_____ (Make checks payable to The University of Alabama Press) Bill me through VISA_____-MasterCard_____Discover_____ Account Number_____Exp_____ Day phone_____e-mail_____
Name_____ Address_____ City, State, Zip_____ Ship to: (if different) Name_____ Address_____ City, State, Zip_____

If you would like to be sent a catalog of publications check here_____

If you would like your name and e-mail placed on the distribution list for direct electronic announcements of future publications please provide the following information:
Name_____e-mail_____ Subjects of interest_____

Judith Knight
Assistant Director for Marketing and Editor
The University of Alabama Press
Box 870380
Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35487-0380
[redacted], FAX [redacted]
e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

608. Gwyn McVay

Re: Sandhyabasha, from a while back

Sat 19 Apr 1997

The many associations raised by Anne and Andrew--much gratitude for the time they took--include one I think is particularly interesting: Philip Whalen's tipoff about "twilight speech/twilight sleep," which brings up whole new associations--the liminal states of consciousness: just waking, just sleeping, neither waking nor sleeping. On the list of exercises Bernadette Mayer culled from work at St. Mark's is a direction to write something every day as you are just waking or just falling asleep.

Gwyn
sleeping furiously
(like Noam Chomsky's "colorless green ideas")

↑ Index

609. Michael Magee
New party, etc
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Kent wrote: "Why not say clearly that those who are the most reprehensible of all are those "progressive" sophisticates who know the score, but still are seduced to vote for Carter, Mondale, Dukakis, Clinton, and seduce otheres to do so, just so we can have a little lesser evil? (ok, so we got the lesser evil with Clinton--how's it such a breakthrough over Bush? Explain to me what is so different.)"

I didn't expect to be playing devil's advocate here (or even responding) but I really do question this logic. I find the New Party very interesting, particularly as a grass roots project that might put up local candidates, etc. I've been paying attention to West's writing/project for a long time and his participation makes me all the more interested. What I'm most familiar with is his engagement with American pragmatism which he says at its best "consists of a future oriented instrumentalism that tries to deploy thought as a wepon to enable more effective action. Its basic impulse is a plebeian radicalism that fuels an antipatrician rebeliousness for the moral aim of enriching individuals and expanding democracy." So, ok, back to Kent's stipulation. If one buys West's description of the"aim," is bashing "progressive sophisticates" who voted for Clinton really a useful way to direct your words and attention? Clinton over Dole or Bush may not have made a big difference to many people on this list but the cuts those Republicans would have made or allowed in education and a host of other social programs would have deeply affected many Americans. Likewise on race: its widely believed that Clinton's Affirmative Action speech written by he and Stephanopolos saved that program - its was effectively dead on the floor until he used public opinion polls (those things we all love to scoff at) to scare conservatives into not tanking it. I think these things matter. I want to stress that I am by no means a huge Clinton fan - I disagree with him at least on a weekly basis about something. But I find our contrarian attitude toward maninstream politics facile. Ironically we end up saying roughly the same things about, say, Clinton, or Democrats generally, that the right is saying about them: namely, that they suck. I don't see how this can be productive: save the venom for the people who are really, consciously, deviously and cynically, trying to fuck up this country. If Dole hadn't been such a schmuck Nader's votes in California could have landed us with a Republican president who would have done a shitload of damage. I didn't vote for Nader because I suspect his penchant for self- promotion and because, yeah, I thought it'd be pissing in the wind. Does that make me an inconsequential "sophisticate" and "the most reprehensible"? I hope we all have bigger fish to fry.

-Mike.

↑ Index

610. Mark Weiss
Re: New party, etc
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Let me add a couple and make a brief comment. Greater evil means two more Clarence Thomases on the court. Greater evil means southeast Utah becomes the world's largest open-pit mine. Greater evil means starwars.

Clinton is hard to swallow, but it's better than shooting yourself in the foot.

If a third, or fourth or fifth, party wants to be effective nationally, it better start as "a grass roots project that might put up local candidates." That's called an infrastructure. Not only would it be hard to win a wider election without such an organization, but if by some fluke a Perot, say, were to get elected he would be essentially powerless, having no elected allies whatsoever.

Obviously, like Kent, I think, I'm not one of those who think that violent over-throw, with all the fun that would be for the uncomprehending millions who could stand to lose a little weight anyway, is particularly likely as an avenue for change.

At 11:39 AM 4/19/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Kent wrote: "Why not say clearly that those who are >the most reprehensible of all are those "progressive" sophisticates >who know the score, but still are seduced to vote for Carter, >Mondale, Dukakis, Clinton, and seduce otheres to do so, just so we >can have a little lesser evil? (ok, so we got the lesser evil with >Clinton--how's it such a breakthrough over Bush? Explain to me >what is so different.)"
>
>I didn't expect to be playing devil's advocate here (or even >responding) but I really do question this logic. I find the New Party >very interesting, particularly as a grass roots project that might put >up local candidates, etc. I've been paying attention to West's >writing/project for a long time and his participation makes me all the >more interested. What I'm most familiar with is his engagement with >American pragmatism which he says at its best "consists of a future >oriented instrumentalism that tries to deploy thought as a wepon to >enable more effective action. Its basic impulse is a plebeian >radicalism that fuels an antipatrician rebeliousness for the moral aim >of enriching individuals and expanding democracy." So, ok, back to >Kent's stipulation. If one buys West's description of the"aim," is >bashing "progressive sophisticates" who voted for Clinton really a >useful way to direct your words and attention? Clinton over Dole or >Bush may not have made a big difference to many people on this >list but the cuts those Republicans would have made or allowed in >education and a host of other social programs would have deeply >affected many Americans. Likewise on race: its widely believed that >Clinton's Affirmative Action speech written by he and Stephanopolos >saved that program - its was effectively dead on the floor until he >used public opinion polls (those things we all love to scoff at) to >scare conservatives into not tanking it. I think these things matter. I >want to stress that I am by no means a huge Clinton fan - I >disagree with him at least on a weekly basis about something. But I >find our contrarian attitude toward maninstream politics facile.

>Ironically we end up saying roughly the same things about, say,
>Clinton, or Democrats generally, that the right is saying about them:
>namely, that they suck. I don't see how this can be productive: save >the venom for the people who are really, consciously, deviously and >cynically, trying to fuck up this country. If Dole hadn't been such a >schmuck Nader's votes in California could have landed us with a >Republican president who would have done a shitload of damage. I >didn't vote for Nader because I suspect his penchant for self->promotion and because, yeah, I thought it'd be pissing in the wind.
>Does that make me an inconsequential "sophisticate" and "the most >reprehensible"? I hope we all have bigger fish to fry.
>
>-Mike.
>
>

↑ Index

611. David Bromige
the withdrawal of surfer
Sat 19 Apr 1997

May I suggest sufferer, in the sense of Jesus' "suffer the little children to come unto me." db

↑ Index

612. KENT JOHNSON
yasusada
Sat 19 Apr 1997

I'd meant to mention in my last response to David K. that for those interested there is an intelligent exchange about Yasusada in the recent issue of the fine, upstart Countermeasures, and there is another "introductory" article in the November issue of Lingua Franca, and two pieces by Eliot Weinberger in the VLS/Village Voice. There're some other things from abroad too, which I can provide info on backchannel to those interested. Chris Reiner's appropriatly samizdat-like Witz will be publishing a long essay on AY by Mikhail Epstein, Russia's preeminent critic of poetry, and Joe Napora's next BullHead will have a special discussion section in their next issue, though the other special section there on Jack Clarke will be just as or more important. The Boston Review will have a number of people responding to Marjorie Perloff's essay in their next issue, though I don't know who they will be.

(feeling genuinely sorry for those trying to apologize for class collaboration),

Kent

↑ Index

613. henry g
Re: Bromige-Safdie
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Nothing there I disagree with, David - in fact I think Rene Girard's anthropological theories about civilization being IN ESSENCE repressed mob violence are astonishing, if not totally convincing. I just think that 1) art is not essentially free expression of discontent (I know you didn't say that anyway); and 2) sex is not exactly repressed content anymore in our world. It's become a repressive single-minded culture-ordering conventionality. O tempus, o mores, whatever that means.

- Henry Gould

"Henry Gould is a coyote"
- Jack Spandrift

"all my verse utilizes conventional rhyme & metre, and is rated PG-13" - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

614. Steve Carll
Canessa Park reading cancelled
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Avery Burns has asked me to post a message that the Fanny Howe/Robert Grenier reading scheduled for Sunday, April 20 at Canessa Park in San Francisco has been cancelled.

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

615. Hugh Steinberg
Re: axis of the universe
Sat 19 Apr 1997

> This recent news re: the universe actually having an axis: Does that mean that all these posts I've been writing with my toes while standing on my head were _really_ written upside down?
>
> Kent

That depends on where your head is at.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

616. Mark W Scroggins
Re: offer, discounts
Sat 19 Apr 1997

I can only blushingly concur with Hark's assessment of _Upper Limit Music_; unfortunately, it doesn't go quite as well with tanning oil as one might wish...

Mark Scroggins
(lying on the beach as you receive this)

↑ Index

617. Henry Gould
(no subject)
Sat 19 Apr 1997

When the goldfinch like rising dough
suddenly moves, as a heart throbs, anger peppers its clever cloak and its nightcap blackens with rage.

The cage is a hundred bars of lies the perch and the little plank are slanderous.
Everything in the world is inside out,
and there is the Salamanca forest for disobedient, clever birds.

O. Mandelstam
(trans. R & E McKane)
The Voronezh Notebooks (Bloodaxe Bks, 1996)

↑ Index

618. Steven Marks
Re: helene cixous
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Thanks, Nicole for your recap of the Cixous talk. My introduction to her was through the Brazilian writer, Clarice Lispector, of whom she has written a great deal. In fact, Cixous has seen her as an exemplary writer of ecriture feminine. If you or others on the list have not read Lispector, I would recommend her with as much enthusiasm as Cixous does. Try _Selected Cronicas_, just out from New Directions.

best,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

619. Alan Jen Sondheim
TELNET JENNIFER-MOO 111.112.[redacted]
Sat 19 Apr 1997

TELNET JENNIFER-MOO 111.112.[redacted]:

divide
on the carboniferous valley in iced-blue mountainside how can i divide and divide clit mosses, ice and slopes festoon, elide
i do will make address in tears she parted in her dark red dress divide by leaving, but i stay, close upon the mountaintop, above the furrowed cwm, alone there are me here recuperating consequences, assimilations, heights and fear i no you he she we they turn dreams that crags brought down to slither into day i did forget a mention, striations and this straddled hearth waters pull down dress beyond the tidal pool, the dry land's dearth i am sorry if i want you where world is actual, green groceries through me she he or we they i against the strata welkin, sward, soma, mead, or sky i divide and divide and divide you know that's beneath me rats and panties, above me crags and bats how jennifer came when jennifer came when fluorescent homes, your dark red dress and then now i will write to no one you turned, slit furrows of your breasts in sun
now
lit nipples shadowed, moss springs beneath me wow
i will write to no one i page and multiply beneath your breasts in sun

↑ Index

620. George Thompson
Re: Sandhyabasha, from a while back
Sat 19 Apr 1997

I am one of the Sanskritists who responded to David Israel's query re this term. I'm not surprised that Kerouac didn't read Eliade, whose books on yoga and shamanism appeared in accessible English editions only in the sixties [although an early English edition appeared in 1958].

However, I am very surprised to hear that none of his confreres were reading Eliade. Besides the explicit reference to Eliade in Rothenberg's 1968 book, I recall discussions of archaic poetics which I had in the 70's with Diane Di Prima, from which I got the impression that she, and her confreres, were definitely familiar with Eliade. Perhaps my memory is unreliable, or perhaps I was generalizing from what appeared to me to be her obvious familiarity with Eliade's ideas.

George Thompson

↑ Index

621. David Kellogg
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Sat 19 Apr 1997

At 04:26 AM 4/15/97 -0700, Rachel Loden wrote:
>Marjorie Perloff's article "In Search of the Authentic Other: the Araki >Yasusada 'hoax' and what it reveals about the politics of poetic >identity," is available on the web at:
>
>http://www-polisci.mit.edu/BostonReview/BR22.2/Perloff.html
>
>It is, as you might imagine, fascinating, especially in present company, >and will start (or renew) many arguments.

I've just read the article and find it typically excellent on many counts; especially in the way it contextualizes Yasusada through other Japanese poets, it's pretty much an education in itself. I _do_ think that some of its argument regarding poetic identity is a bit strained, since the editorial stances of _Arial_ and _APR_, for example, -- both of which published Yasusada poems -- are quite divergent. That strand of the argument seems to me to have more to do with Marjorie's current concerns in general than with the Yasusada issue in particular.

I would like to know what Kent Johnson (who's on this list) thinks of the piece. But given his generally nimble responses to queries on this score, I don't imagine he'll be all that direct. ;-)

I have two other questions:

1) are the Yasusada poems going to be published in book form? I would hope so.

2) what comparisons should be drawn between the Yasusada and the Sokal affairs?

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

this morning, in a note anent Nicole Markotic's precis of Helene Cixous' "paper presentation," I remarked (tangentially) --

> She seems to remind me a bit (or in a general way) of that other interesting academic experimentalist (so to say), Ann Carson . . .

Hugh Steinberg backchanneled a one-sentence (well, two sentence) question, inquiring abt. said Carson. I've written out a somewhat rambling (but poss. useful withal) reply/ -- and it doesn't seem I'd be breaching principles of netti-quette in this instance if I flip this from back-channel to front-burner -- which I'll do only bec. I like Carson's work and suspect others may share this interest. I'm sure there are apt to be others more versed in Carson than am I; but here's what little I know so far . . .

Hugh, --

you ask,
> Could you tell me more about Ann Carson? Where to start, etc.

I'll tell you what bit I know, which is somewhat anecdotal. First to note, am quite sorry I missed a reading here in DC by Carson -- she recently appeared at the rather distinguished venues (& pricy -- one of few places that'll charge, I think, $12 for privilege of hearing a poet): the Folger Shakespeare Library -- sharing the bill with John Ashbery no less.

Anway, my encounters w/ Carson began when I chanced on her remarkable book EROS: THE BITTERSWEET at a booshop some six years ago. I browsed, purchased, read it thru, & straightaway read it thru a 2nd time (rare for a slow-ish reader like me) --

I don't have a copy of this volume on hand at this point (and it's been, now, some years since reading) -- but Carson's EROS made an impression, lingers in mind, and seems to bid for a further re-read.

The main topics are the "nature of":

knowledge love reading writing

and to explore this terrain, Carson relies on sources from the classical Greek (mostly) -- especially (as I recall) on both Socrates and Sappho. Her citations and elucidations of both of these (very dissimilar) writers seem superb. Also recall an interesting discussion of a section of the Odyssey involving an anec-dote that seemed to reflect on the "nature of writing per se" -- or some such.

She translates and elucidates the poem from Sappho with image of an apple on the high branch (beyond reach) to discuss the nature of desire and its relationship to knowledge -- a fine discussion which deepened my appreciation & regard for Sappho, must say. Similarly, her creative consideration of certain passages from Socrates seemed both delightful & brilliant.

One felt, with this vol., that one was in the presence of a mind discovering genuine things, making fine leaps, and sharing it all in a way that proved neither off-putting (for its specificity) nor muddled (for its breadth). Poss. a model of the book-length essay.

I next encountered Carson's work in the pages of The American Poetry Review. (If one were to pore over issues of that publication of the past half-dozen years, I think one would find a number of items from Ann Carson. I've not, unfortunately, much kept up with APR in the past couple years -- but I recall seeing two or three presentations of Carson's work -- her translations as well as her own poems -- within the span of a year or two, prob. circa '93).

Carson's poems engaged (in at least one instance) the "idea of God" in interesting & likeable (to me) ways. Her translations seemed rather quirky in (likewise) likeable ways -- for instance, I recall a (supposed) translation that made reference to Deng Xiaoping and tossed out some mention of "small bottle" (this would be a likely, literal rendering of xiao-ping -- at least there is a xiao which means small & a ping which means bottle) -- and now I'm not at all sure whether this was (supposed to be) a "translation" from Chinese or rather (equally likely) from ancient Greek! (I think it was the latter.) Notwithstanding this playful sort of anachronism, I recall being left with the impression of a lively (& "good") translation . . .

I've also seen -- somewher in some bookstore -- a cassette recording of Carson's lecture on some or other classics topic (unfortunately didn't snap it up).

Further: In the [Village] Voice Literary Supplement -- abt. 3 years ago? -- there appeared an article that amounted to an awestruck appreciation of Carson's intellect & writing. (This article may've included some bit of an interview with her.)

Ann Carson is based at a University in Canada (McGill, I think), where she's a professor of Classics. From all evidence I've seen, she's a new breed of classicist -- or perhaps a breed apart.

I look forward to further enjoyment of her writing; the above is what I know at the moment.

best,
d.i.
.
.....
.....

```
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
  >   david   raphael   israel   <
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| [redacted]      (home)
| [redacted]      (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                                (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

624. Gwyn McVay
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Sat 19 Apr 1997

> _Arial_

David K., I have to jump in & be one of the pedantic ones--Arial is a font, & /Aerial/ the name of the mag--& I do not think the one is set in the other-- but when counting resemblances, what about the Ern Malley affair in Australia? I think the comparisons are many & ripe.

Yours,
Gwyn

↑ Index

625. David Bromige
o tempus o mores
Sat 19 Apr 1997

Henry, I believe the latin translates as "a goalless draw between your temper and your manners." --Peter Punster, at his feeblest.

↑ Index

626. David Kellogg
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Sat 19 Apr 1997

> David K., I have to jump in & be one of the pedantic ones--Arial is a font, & /Aerial/ the name of the mag--& I do not think the one is set in the other--

Righto -- ma faute. I always misspell it, tho I had a copy of the Barrett Watten issue right by my desk.

> but when counting resemblances, what about the Ern Malley affair in Australia? I think the comparisons are many & ripe.

Lemme preface this by disagreeing a but with Dave Zauhar on Sokal. It is a lot of things, but one thing it ain't is an incompetently written article. I agree that it should of course have been rejected, but the fact that it wasn't has, as even Ross's self-justifying account of his role in the fiasco suggested, a lot to do with the expectations created by Sokal's position as physicist. Sokal's hoax has different purposes, of course, and it's not nearly as subtle as the Yasusada case, but I think the differences there are of degree rather than kind.

Not so with Malley methinks. First off, of course, Malley was created to ridicule the editors of _Angry Penguins_ in a wholesale fashion, and the poems were notoriously composed in -- what? -- an afternoon? Yasusada seems much more carefully constructed; it obviously took a long time to put him together -- although both "poets" include clues to their nonexistence in the poetic texts (and in Yasusada's case, in the notes and English exercises in APR). Further, Yasusada is _not_ lampooning anything, at least as I understand that; he seems to exist more as an insider critique, to raise questions rather than attack practices.

Another question about Yasusada comes to mind. Perloff's article nicely points out some words, like "scubadiver," in the poems that are obviously anachronistic. She also cites a poem dated 1945 that contains the term "big bang". Does anybody know when the term was coined? Theories about the universe expanding were based on Edmund Halley's observations and arose I think in the late 1920's. And the Catholic Church officially embraced the Big Bang as a proof of God in 1951. So when _did_ the term arise? If it's late (1945-1950, say) then "big bang" is also anachronistic.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

627. Rebecca Weldon

Angkarn by Ginsberg

Sun 20 Apr 1997

The Poet's Testament

I wrap the sky around myself to keep away the cold and eat starlight late at night to take the place of rice.
Dewdrops scatter below the sky
for me to find and drink, and out my poems flow
to greet the morn, to last the age.
My heart, sacrificed to its grave,
gains unworldly powers;
the spirit flies to lands of dreams
the far side of the sky.
It seeks divinity in Heaven and brings it back to earth to soothe the sand and grass, bringing happiness, bringing peace.
My purpose in composing poems is to salvage the soul.

-Angkarn Kalyanapong

translated by Allen Ginsberg.

I came across this translation in "Three Thai Poets", 1978, Sathirakoses-Nagapradipa Foundation, Bangkok

In the preface, S. Sivaraksa states that Angkarn, Naowarat Pongpaibool and Witayakorn Chiengkul partipated in ASEAN Poetry 78 held in Jakarta, Indonesia that July. Angkarn's expenses were, in part, defrayed by a Ford Foundation grant. The Sathirakoses-Nagapradipa Foundation published the bilingual "Three Thai Poets" (Thai-English) to mark the event. The above poem was first published in the Social Science Review of Silapakorn University in 1962. The English translation also appeared in Tenggara (Malaysia), Solidarity (Philippines) and Quadrant (Australia). Does anyone know the year it was translated (the year is not provided in this edition)?

Although the English translation does not take the traditional Thai form, Ginsberg communicated the sentiment superbly, proving that it takes a poet to translate one.

↑ Index

628. Steven Marks
Re: Ann Carson
Sun 20 Apr 1997

David, your memory of Anne Carson's _Eros: The Bittersweet_ is quite good. I'm no expert on her or things Classical, but this is a book that I hope to reread as well. I read this book in connection with a review I wrote of her book _Plainwater_ which contains a stimulating mixture of poems and essays. And it is delightfully never clear which is which. The review was at the web site for the Boston Book Review, but I don't think it is there anymore. For anybody who might want to read it, it's at my home page at the address below. Click on "Reviews" when you get to the welcome page. Here's two samples from _Plainwater_ (Knopf). The first doesn't do the lines justice since they are in different type faces and sizes in the book.

fr. 22
Half Moon

He awakens early.

Half moon through the pines at dawn
sharp as a girl's ribcage.

And the second sample from "Mimnermos: The Brainsex Paintings"

...I can't distill my history into this or that home truth and go plunging ahead composing miniature versions of the cosmos to fill the slots in your question and answer period it's not that I don't pity you it's not that I don't understand your human face is smiling at me for some reason it's not that I don't know there is an act of interpretation demanded now by which we could all move to the limits of the logic inherent in this activity and peer over the edge but everytime I start in everytime I everytime you see I would have to tell the whole story all over again or else lie...

As I typed the above, I realized where some of the idea I had about forgetting (or ignoring as Hugh suggested to me backchannel) and individuation comes from.

Geez, I'm just full of recommendations today!

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

629. Philip Mead

Re: Perloff on Yasusada

Sun 20 Apr 1997

> Not so with Malley methinks. First off, of course, Malley was created to ridicule the editors of _Angry Penguins_ in a wholesale fashion, and the poems were notoriously composed in -- what? -- an afternoon? Yasusada seems much more carefully constructed; it obviously took a long time to put him together -- although both "poets" include clues to their nonexistence in the poetic texts (and in Yasusada's case, in the notes and English exercises in APR). Further, Yasusada is _not_ lampooning anything, at least as I understand that; he seems to exist more as an insider critique, to raise questions rather than attack practices.

Yes, the immediate target of the Malley hoax was Max Harris and John Reed, editors of _Angry Penguins_, although as McAuley and Stewart stated, they were the epigones, in their view. Their real target was Herbert Read, as critic/advocate of the avant-garde and the English Apocalyptic group. But the hoax broke before the English half of the target could be drawn in.

But David's point about the careful construction of Yasusada vs. Malley probably needs the rider that while the Malley poems were written in an afternoon (apart from the first one, "Durer: Innsbruck 1495"), the context was English Apocalyptic writing, latter-day surrealism, automatic writing etc. That is, the chief virtue of the Malley poems as McAuley and Stewart (the perpetrators) argued was that they were produced _without_ the "sovereign power of the shaping intellect." So it was exactly the free play of the unconscious/imagination together with textual pastiche that produced "hoax," that is, bad, poetry. The problem, of course, was that, as Harris, Sidney Nolan, and many young Australian poets in the more than fifty years since the hoax have recognised, it was exactly the eruption of the unconscious (or whatever we want to term it) and the zany pastiche (picked up by Kenneth Koch for _Locus Solus_ as a piece of [homoerotic?] collaboration) that gave the poems their strange appeal and resonances (as well as their bathetic clunks).

"Ern Malley" became, and remains, a kind of rallying point for radical modernist, postmodern and avant-garde writing in Australia. For the moralising anti-modernists of mid-century Australian literature, Ern Malley represents the the possibility of an entirely amoral art. (Max Harris was prosecuted for pusblishing obscene material, that is, poetry of indeterminate meaning.) In a chapter I'm currently writing, I argue that in fact Malley becomes the _authentic_ origin of Australian (post)modernism.

Anyone thinking of embarking on a hoax should study the reception of historical hoaxes, they never seem to have quite the effects they were designed to.

Philip Mead

Philip Mead
Department of English & European Languages & Literatures University of Tasmania
GPO Box 252-82
Hobart TAS 7001
Australia

(03) 6226 2352 (voice)
(03) 6226 7631 (fax)

↑ Index

630. Alan Jen Sondheim

<death.htm: open in browser for the bones>

Sun 20 Apr 1997

<HTML><HEAD><TITLE>Jennifer oozing white death</TITLE></HEAD> <BODY> PILL="#MEDACANE" BGCOLOR="#BILE" STARE AT ME="#SHAME" TVSTARE AT ME="#0000FF" ASTARTESTARE AT ME="#FF0000" BACKGROUND="windowpane.jpg"<
>H3<>BSTARE AT ME<Jennifer was very unhappy and sat down, spreading her frock, recently stained, o how wonderful.>/BSTARE AT ME <Jennifer> A HREF="#gg"<.>/A <took the two> A NAME="gg"<>/A <white pills her very best friend had sent her, and Jennifer placed them in her mouth.> IMG SRC="ooze.jpg" TONGUE=7 TEETH=160 GUMS=200 <She thought they tasted odd, and Jennifer began to see and hear everything in a big wide fuzzy blur.
Jennifer slumped in the center of her nice red frock, and died, she said, naked at last, and there were no bones about her.> IMG <I can't make up my mind you pretty thing, Jennifer whispered.> SRC="dead_hell.jpg" <Did I violate you, Jennifer whispered.>? TONGUE=5 TEETH=143 GUMS=167<>IMG SRC="legs.jpg" TONGUE=10 TEETH=100 GUMS=100<>A <So close to violence, Jennifer whispered.> HREF="slip them in.htm"<smear>/A< >A HREF="legs.htm"
<ooze>/A<>/H3< </BODY> <War, Jennifer whispered.> <HTML, she said.>
</HTML>

↑ Index

631. David R. Israel
stalker / Tarkovsky / Lao Tse / synchronicity
Sun 20 Apr 1997

David Golumbia --

thanks for your detailed info abt. Stalker & Roadside Picknick -- I'd never heard of the latter novel. I guess Tarkovsky's films Stalker & Solaris seem a pair -- a suite of two, so to say -- & hence my (wrong) assumption abt. authorship of the novel behind the former (since Lem had written the Solaris novel).

Speaking of Andre Tarkovsky, these literary references in his work have especially interested me:

* in STALKER, he gives -- in mystic voiceover (I think while the camera is doing slow pans of water & objects in water -- something the camera does a lot of in this film; -- all this by way of giving some sense of "what life is like" in "the ZONE) -- a few well-known verses from the Tao Te Ching [Dao de Jing] attributed to Lao-Tse.

It's been years since I've seen the film (or read the TTC), but as I recall, the lines quoted [w/o attribution] are those that compare the Tao to water . . . noting water's pliancy, mobility -- it always seeks the lowest place (etc.) . . .

* in THE SACRIFICE (which was Tarkovsky's final film -- he made 7 movies in his life, before succombing to cancer, in the mid-'80s) -- there's a curious and (I'd say) significant reference to the work of Carl Jung. One tends to feel a kinship w/ Jung (if not actual influence) in Tarkovsky's work generally -- and in this late case, one finds, it seems, a sort of hat-tip by the filmmaker, saying, in effect: yes, it's to Jung that I'm referring here. More specifically, the anecdote in question is found in (if I recall aright) a footnote in one of Jung's essays on the topic of Synchronicity (CGJ's own coinage for what he termed "acausal connections"; -- I don't much care for his "acausal" arguments -- he was bending over backwards trying to justify basic subtle matters for his skeptical rationalist milieu -- but anyway the material of synchronicity is, even so, fascinating & important) . . .

anyway, early on in the movie, the postman -- who rides a bicycle and delivers a medieval map of the world, as a birthday present to the eccentric chap whose birthday is to be celebrated in the course of the weekend chronicled in the film -- this postman remarks that he is a "collector of incidents." What kind of incidents?, he's asked. By way of answer, he tell's Jung's anecdote. He says, this is the sort of incident I collect (& tells the tale). The tale involves a woman during the 2nd world war (early on), who went to have a photograph of her son taken. But due to war circumstances, she had to fell the country the very next day, was separated from her son -- and never had the film developed (it was abandoned with much else). Years later, in America, she sits for a photograph herself. The photo is developed, and it proves to be a double-exposure: her image is combined with that of her son (the film having never been developed, but, rather, re-used) . . . the postman tells this story, as an example of one of the many incidents he has "collected" (meaning, it seems, researched & verified) -- and by this means, the filmmaker serves to signal the viewer that THIS is close to the essential matter to be delved into as the film unfolds . . . .

best,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

633. David Bromige
cheapening sex in an inflationary spiral
Sun 20 Apr 1997

I was so glad when george posted & didnt say the reason we'd been cheapening sex lately was cause as old farts we have to pay too much for it. George can be very vulgar, & that is certainly vulgar. But george, I think its best to admit our code isnt Korean, its Canadian, eh? And its best to admit we bin caught w our pants round our ankles. Its a first offense, & i think we should throw ourselves on the mercy of the court. I intend to talk abt how busy i've bin w civic duties of late, writing letters to the local papers & going to weekly meetings and stomping the precincts to prevent the wrongful annexation of orchard-land to build an industrial park on the edge of town, how i had to make a speech to the Local Agency Formation County Organization while they were all doing good imitations of my firstyear students during Melville, how we had to put on a mixer/art auction to raise money to pay for the lawsuit and how i've been gathering stuff for the yardsale next weekend, humping mattresses into flatbed trucks, for the same purpose, against big odds: 4 of the 5 city council members cldnt be more for it if they were in the pockets of the developer (i'm probably speaking metaphorically about now, the council is too big for that), and theres a law now that allows the city cxouncils to pass on the costs of any lawsuit to the developer, which is a bad law because it encourages the council to vote irrespnsibly, as they did in this case, the EIR is the most flawed i've ever seen, the traffic engineer in reporting that the 2500/day extra cartrips this industrial park will generate. neglected to factor in that each year, an extra 880 car trip/p.d. go thru Sebastopol. And the waste storage ponds planned wont be nearly large enough to contain effluent from the parkinglots once the big storms hit in the winter.Its ribbon development, which our recently approved General Plan forbids, meanwhile theres an industrial park already built 43 miles away in Santa Rosa w plenty of empty buildings, and I cd go & on about this, not my first venture into grassroots politics, but i wont, because who wants long postings, and also because i want to address your defense, George, you must tell of how hard you work at SFU, and of needing at the same time to be nursing your wife as you are doing thru a serious illness, while traveling the world in behalf of Canadian Lit; and how all this hard work, requiring stern sublimation, made us crack up : and then we just throw ourselves on the magistrate's mercy & hope he hasnt recently been made to look foolish in public by a colleague on some judicial matter in such a way that he's looking for some easy butt to kick. I'd say its always best to make a clean breast of it, but I'm worried that the superfluous sexual energy encoded in language would render that cliche, in context, suspect. But in any case, George, we must see to it that our heavily (but not heavily enough) encrypted desire for one another is kept strictly in the back channels henceforth. We wouldnt want the Listmaster, a man notorious for his playlessness, and who always stands by the fixed meanings he imparts to his words, delivering an officious censure to us on the parade ground. Au revoir, cherie--j'embarrass ton rep. db.

↑ Index

634. David Bromige

ps to the subject-title with sex in it

Sun 20 Apr 1997

---

the industrial park already built, the obvious site for the o'reilly business, is not 43 miles away, but 4.3. ((o sure. Its really just another code!) db.

↑ Index

635. Hugh Steinberg

Re: Perloff on Yasusada

Sun 20 Apr 1997

David Kellogg Writes:

> Another question about Yasusada comes to mind. Perloff's article nicely points out some words, like "scubadiver," in the poems that are obviously anachronistic. She also cites a poem dated 1945 that contains the term "big bang". Does anybody know when the term was coined? Theories about the universe expanding were based on Edmund Halley's observations and arose I think in the late 1920's. And the Catholic Church officially embraced the Big Bang as a proof of God in 1951. So when _did_ the term arise? If it's late (1945-1950, say) then "big bang" is also anachronistic.

According to Timothy Ferris's book "Coming of Age in the Milky Way," the term "Big Bang" was coined by astrophysicist and science fiction author Fred Hoyle as a derisive commentary on Georges Lemaitre's theory that the universe began as a singularity which erupted in what Lemaitre called the "Big Noise" in a 1933 New York Times magazine article. Unfortunately, Ferris doesn't cite a date when Hoyle first used "Big Bang" in public. Hoyle published his book on the steady state theory in 1948, so my hunch is that it's not quite an anachronism.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

636. KENT JOHNSON
Bowering and Bromige test
Sun 20 Apr 1997

This is partly a test to see if this gets on before three messages I posted last night do. But while I'm testing, I thought I'd ask if anyone else found the B&B sex-play repartee over the past few months to be very suspicious. I, for one, do. In fact, I'm convinced these witty and sexed-up massages (oops, I meant E), are encrypted and hide more serious meanings, and I've begun to go back over them, using a variety of cryptographic techniques, including some of the methods pioneered by de Saussure in his late hunts for anagrams embedded into Latin verse. So far, I have been stymied, but I do think a broadly anagrammatic approach is the key (reading backwards and acrostically, I am now satisfied, is barking up the wrong tree).

If anyone shares my concern, or has suggestions on reading techniques that might prove fruitful, please let me know. The truth is that this little game has gone on for too long. And the use of erotic longing to obscure real motives only ends up cheapening sex.

Kent

↑ Index

637. Bob Grumman
Re: A Word For Lurker
Sun 20 Apr 1997

Weird, after several days of reading others' attempts to find the right word for a person auditing, or lurking through(?), or g(r)azing on, or cetera, this site/discussion, and being irritated with myself for not thinking of anything to contribute, I've suddenly remembered that the proper word already exists: SURFER! Or am I really out of it? But if "surfer" is the right word, it taxonomizes very neatly into the two main types involved: the SERFER (or commie sympathizer) and the PSURFER (or degenerate apolitical intellectual). Should I go back to bed? Bob G.

↑ Index

638. Field of Roses
Re: no, well I mean yes
Sun 20 Apr 1997

> My brain is busted because I have been marking for 3 weeks, and also because I got a heartshaped box of Valentine's chocolates for 69c Canadian, and ate them all and there was only one chewy one. Now, is that fair? And I > had gone to that store to get a flashlight, so life is confusing, and i am giving them F.

gee george, hardened by one caramel?

"everyone starts with a c" - bpNichol

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

639. aerialedge
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Sun 20 Apr 1997

> I would just say there is one key difference: The poems of Yasusada "fooled" the editors because they were good poems

Dave Z-- As I believe the first editor to have published Yasusada I should chime in that in fact I wasn't "fooled" precisely because the piece was so good. I said so to a number of people at the time. There are moments in the piece that are just a little too perfect, & the speakers a little too well informed for no one in the community to have heard of them (that's how it struck me in 1990, anyway). I published it because I thought it good, discursively & aesthetically, though I was quite curious about its origin. Oh, & it's _Aerial_, not Arial-- which is actually a new one, usually people misspell it Ariel.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

640. David Bromige
(Perloff on Yasusada) footnote/spinoff/response to Mark Prejsnar/ Bob P-threaders may also note , uh, "On parody"
Sun 20 Apr 1997

'The only people who will "see the light" in respondse to your parody will be those who already agreed with your loathing of the style.' Hallelujah, Mark Prejsnar, I couldnt agree more. Would add, however, that "seeing the light" isnt the only pleasure one can take in a parody. One can enjoy "Burnt Norton" and still enjoy "Charred Whitlow" (by Henry reed, is it? Too busy or lazy to look it up). I've seen parodies of writers I greatly admire that have been outrageously funny. It seems to me its something akin to the potential funniness of names-- parody can throw limitation into a new light, we see the something mechanical about style, and Bergson in "On Laughter" makes sense to me when he remarks that one thing that can be funny is when human beings act in a mechanical way.Or the comedy routine is "a machine"...Chaplin appears, theres an open hole in the street, we know its only a matter of time before he falls down it . .

that example is likely from someone other than Bergson, huh? Cant recall my source there, sorry. Any style has the limitations of its virtues, and if a parody can detach us from its charisma for a moment, we can laugh at it without, however, "seeing the light" & expunging that poet or that poem from our hearts.(I recall the thread on the List months since, concerning "Stopping by Woods" being sung to the tune of "Hernando's Hideaway". Poems from _The Shropshire Lad_ too, I think Bowering posted in, cd also go to that tune.) One of my favorite parodies is by Kenneth Koch, and has fun with WCW's "This is just to say" : "This is just to say/ I'm sorry I broke both yr arms at the dance last night/ but I wanted you on the wards, where _I_ am the doctor." The chief problem w the parody Bob P alludes to, is that it isnt a good parody. It's not well-written. And given its authorship, how cd it have been? Even that is faintly funny. db.

↑ Index

641. Ryan Whyte

in no time

Sun 20 Apr 1997

The edges of a prison are delineated by aluminum siding like the zipping of wet rag along a striated vinyl tablecloth. Populated by ghosts, Obelisk watched at the perimeter while shades enforced their very existence upon small children huddling. With splashing gravel Cars move over arterial routes, shuttling Hosts of shades who won't give you the time of day. Disengaged from the homestead the night radio transmits George Grant's words among fields indifferent to electricity. Moving shades make way, leaving wakes to toss mustard aloft.

↑ Index

642. Dave Zauhar

Re: Perloff on Yasusada

Sun 20 Apr 1997

Thanks to Rod Smith for the editor's eye view of the event. I'd just like to point out that I put scare quotes around "fooled" to account for what were obvously a wide range of reactions to subsequent revelations, as well as to a variety of possible initial responses upon first encountering the poems. Not very precise, but I had just gotten home from a 6-7 hour happy hour. However, I stand by my initial assessment of Sokal's article, in spite of not having access right now to Social Text to help me make my case. Finally, I wonder if anyone has ever thought about how one's perception that a poet might be an invention alters perception of the work. Ted Berrigan and Ron Padgett (according to Padgett's memoir) assumed that F.T. Prince was such a poet. I remember reading _Ted_ when it came out then looking for Prince's work, and upon finding it, being convinced that Prince was another Ern Malley, so much so that when I encountered his entry in a DIctionary of Literary Biography, my first reaction was to say, "ha, fooled them!" But as the artist currently known as F.T. Prince put it: "To the vigilance of my exertions a lax pause"

Dave Zauhar

> I would just say there is one key difference: The poems of Yasusada "fooled" the editors because they were good poems
>
> Dave Z--
> As I believe the first editor to have published Yasusada I should chime in that in fact I wasn't "fooled" precisely because the piece was so good. I said so to a number of people at the time. There are moments in the piece that are just a little too perfect, & the speakers a little too well informed for no one in the community to have heard of them (that's how it struck me in 1990, anyway). I published it because I thought it good, discursively & aesthetically, though I was quite curious about its origin. Oh, & it's _Aerial_, not Arial-- which is actually a new one, usually people misspell it Ariel.
>
> --Rod Smith

↑ Index

643. Bob Grumman
Withdrawel of "surfer"
Sun 20 Apr 1997

Sylvester Pollet just e-mailed me the correct definition of "surfer," to wit, one who moves from website to website, rather than one who lurks through a single site. So I withdraw my suggestion. Too late to go back to bed, though.
--Bob

↑ Index

644. John Kinsella
CCCP, Cixous, and J.H. Prynne
Sun 20 Apr 1997

Unfortunately Deanna Ferguson will not be able to appear as advertised on the CCCP programme which Fiona Templeton just posted, but there will be readings from her work during the scheduled appearance time. _Salt_ will also look to carry some of her poems next year. Talking of _Salt_, I enjoyed the posting regarding Helene Cixous; the August issue of _Salt_ carries (both in French & in trans- lation) a fascinating piece called "Savoir" by Cixous, which any "short-sighted" readers out there will especially appreciate. Also, for those interested in progress reports re the Folio(Salt) publication of J.H. Prynne's _Complete Poems_, we have an Australian release date of late August and a US/UK release date of late October. Fremantle Arts Centre Press are combining with Folio on distribution so we'll get the book everywhere. Oh, and great news, there's a new manuscript of Prynne's that Equipage hopes to publish in time for the CCCP and that has also been included in the Complete Poems - "For The Monogram". The opening epigram goes: "Why should the dog ever be displeased _spontaneously_?" -- Leibniz, _Theodicy_, intro. by Austin Farrer (1951).

All the best
Yours
John Kinsella

↑ Index

645. Sylvester Pollet
Re: the withdrawal of surfer
Sun 20 Apr 1997

David, That's pretty close to what I imagine the experience to be (of just listening/reading). But maybe it's not spelled that way--more like a pine or spruce, soughing as the wind(y) pass through it? More as in "those poor soughin' bastids!" sp

> *May I suggest sufferer, in the sense of Jesus' "suffer the little children to come unto me." db*

↑ Index

646. Jeffrey W. Timmons
What white
Sun 20 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Dale Smith wrote:

timmons:
> >ok heres my (tentative) conclusion: race is semantically and
> >epistemologically more complicated than the linguistic and conceptual > >categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of > >that.
>
> It seems like this kind of intellectualized and evasive answer neglects to > address the positions of race as they actually function.

no quite the opposite actually: it encourages one to be aware (dare i say sensitive?) to the permutations of difference and the difficulties of making ethno-assumptions. i dont apologize for an "intellectualized" answer and i dont accept as "evasive" an attempt to separate the wheat from the chaff--as it were. your point of addressing "the positions of race as they function" is taken to heart--however much the criticism of "cerebral--distant--contemplation" is inaccurate. i like to think of my self as somewhat influenced by enlightenment practices: the general AND the particular.

> A body reveals certain traits--Asian, African, European--but it doesn't always give you details of national heritage or even ethnicity, as in a country like Burundi.
>
> A white person's categorical discussion of race pretty much reveals the problems Hoa pointed out in her post.

this two statements evoke for me precisely the difficulties i mentioned in my post: that the racialized body is both a sign of ethnicity but problematically ambiguous. to which i suggested that our language for talking about this is simply not adequate to the experience and the experienced experience of race--which is to say that we are saying the same thing in different words. but while you alluded to this ambiguity of race you also insist upon it--which is not to say you are inconsistent but that the language of race necessitates both an attention (as you say) to the lived experience of race but (as i say) an attentiveness to where that language fails to address the ambiguities complexities difficulties of differences.

> Finally, it is more than a bit ironic for a white person to determine a "useful" vocabulary for racial discussion.

i hope youre not making assumptions about race on-line: its hard to see not to mention the fact that the inscription of race on the body is itself always subject to interpretive ambiguity.

> It seems like the appropriate response to questions of race would be not to retreat into vague conceptual terms, but to engage them in a more heart-felt way. As it is, the above seems dismissive and casual, and it removes personal experience from the complicated issues surrounding race.

well referring to my post as "vague conceptual terms" that are "dismissive and casual" in favor of a rather sentimentalized language of the "heart" whose idiom is "personal experience" runs the risk not only of alienating your interlocutor but of particularizing any discussion of race into an my experience versus youre experience. a rather habermasian dilemma if i do say so.

in the end this post raises these thoughts for me: first that i hope that i didnt seem too harsh in my original look at the use made of "white guys." second that an idiom mediating particularized languages of experience--the "heart"--and the "intellectualized" analysis of such epistemo-linguisitc concepts is necessary.

best

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

647. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: What is white
Sun 20 Apr 1997

On Sat, 19 Apr 1997, dodie wrote:

> all dead white guise
>
> As I remember it, I said "white guys" in my original post. It's interesting that you latched onto "white." Why not deconstruct "guys," why not lauch into gender performance here?

given time.

> No offense take.

taken none is.

jeffrey

↑ Index

648. Mark W Scroggins
Re: Ann Carson
Sun 20 Apr 1997

There's also a lovely review of _Eros the Bittersweet_ in Guy Davenport's latest collection of essays, _The Hunter Gracchus_. He does a nice job of tracking the connections between knowledge & eroticism in Carson's book.

& that's Anne Carson with an "e."

Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

649. David Bromige
lubbers
Sun 20 Apr 1997

So that one might well hail: "Ahoy there, ye listlubbers!" As the list lists, to starboard or port, ask these ex-lurkers to rush to place their weight on the side thats lifting out of the water. Well done, Aldon. But will language prove amenable to a good idea, after years of practice? db

↑ Index

650. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Bowering and Bromige test
Sun 20 Apr 1997

Gee, Kent, I'm not sure about the encryption, but I always thought erotic longing WAS a real motive. Are you telling me (& Freud) it isn't? perplexedly, sp

> If anyone shares my concern, or has suggestions on reading techniques that might prove fruitful, please let me know. The truth is that this little game has gone on for too long. And the use of erotic longing to obscure real motives only ends up cheapening sex.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

651. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: The Whatness of Whiteness
Sun 20 Apr 1997

I've just had the rather odd experience of going directly from the conference on the construction and possible undoing of whiteness held at Berkeley to the meeting of the College Language Association in Atlanta, and will, as several have asked me to do, provide BRIEF reports on both in the coming days --

The conference on whiteness turned out to be the most ethnically and racially integrated academic conference I have ever attended -- On the other hand, white academics continue to absent themselves from the meetings of the College Language Association -- whatever we might think of race in America, it's clear that many people who might be considered "white" choose their company in the same old ways --

More directly to Hoa Nguyen's questions --

_If _Race Traitor_ were only arguing the social construction of race there would be considerably less controversy about their platform -- I would second the note that you might try to get the Routledge collected traitors at your nearby university library --

BUT also -- last year in the _American Quarterly_, Shelly Fisher Fishkin offered, with bibliography, a fairly accurate summary of the recent critical and socio/political works examining the evolution of "whiteness" in American culture -- I can get the exact citation for you if you want me to (could perhaps even mail you a xerox, since I have it here somewhere in these piles of books) --

_____
Bob Perelman: Does "this" happen often to you?

↑ Index

652. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: desublimation/eliade
Sun 20 Apr 1997

interesting; i went to stanford as a grad student partly cuz i was so taken w/ girard's work; then when i got there, i tried to sit in on a few classes of his and just couldn't, for reasons mentioned below. everything came back to the same old story, which ratified Christianity. he was/is a charming character however, with a very large, large head. his two mantras, to be said in a heavy french accent were, "Very strannnnnge!" and "But it's so obvioos!" accent on the last syllable of obviooos. These two descriptors applied to every anthropological anecdote at his disposition; first strange, then, with the application of his theory, rendered "so obvioos."

At 7:52 PM 4/21/97, Pierre Joris wrote:
>Henry -- I read Girard's work with wonder & pleasure as it came out over >the years, especially the early books. When, however, he got to his >final theory by which ALL the trouble in the world is explained/resolved
>by ONE shopworn idea (the scape-goat) & ONE solution (a just as shopworn >xtian possibility) I gave up in anger: his turns out to be one more >single-narrative alabi explanation more attuned to totalizing 19th >century desires than to the reality of this century. The evangelical >arrogance of a man calling his magnum opus "Of things hidden since the >foundation of the world" — things which he then of course claims to >reveal for the first time to us befuddled mortal masses — is more than I >am willing to put up with. -- Pierre
>
>ps. have read elsewhere about the Eliade caper. difficult to disentangle
>the arcana of rumanian secret service stuff. am suspending belief til
>the cows come home on that one which don't mean I cldn't see our >myth-worker involved in unsavory hanky-panky. That breed seems inclined >to totalizing gestures -- remember Jung's brushes with fascismo.
>--
>==========
>pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
>tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>----------
>Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
>values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
>_one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
>constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
>[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality

>and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
>it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
>==========

↑ Index

653. henry gould
desublimation; Eliade
Sun 20 Apr 1997

David, thank you for the technical term for what I was describing : "repressive desublimation". I'm glad you were reading your Marcuse back in the 60s. Too bad the best you can do after 30 years is a feeble one-liner. That's called Marcusing time, if you want to make puns. - Jack Spandrift at his most snarling re: Eliade. Did anyone see the article by Umberto Eco in a recent NY Review of Bks about Eliade's connections with a Romanian fascist secret police organization & the unsolved murder of a young grad student of his who was beginning to distance himself from the master (the student was also Romanian). Unsolved murder in Chicago. Myth is murder, according to Prof. Girard. What say, ethnopoeticians? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

654. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: no no nanook(ie)
Sun 20 Apr 1997

---

ah. compris.

At 7:54 AM 4/21/97, Rachel Loden wrote:
>As a general rule, Maria, I try to stay out of places where Canadians >are dropping their pants.
>
>Rachel L.
>
>>But george, I >>think its best to admit our code isnt Korean, its Canadian, eh? And its >>best to admit we bin caught w our pants round our ankles.

↑ Index

655. David R. Israel
back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
Sun 20 Apr 1997

Bob Grumman writes --

> Sylvester Pollet just e-mailed me the correct definition of > "surfer," to wit, one who moves from website to website, rather than > one who lurks through a single site. So I withdraw my suggestion.
> Too late to go back to bed, though.
> --Bob

Glad someone pointed that out; but still, the surfer idea leads to other maritime possibilities . . . .

we know "cruiser" won't work; nor "sailor" -- but there must be something sea-worthy & saltsome, wavedashed & current -- back to treading water? ("I've been treading these past weeks, and just thought I'd land ashore here for a brief comment . . . ")

there's IDLING (as what a car does, when it's not engaging the road, but is still running); -- then, what is it when one looks out the window & takes in the scenery? -- there's scanning (but this already has its techn-meanings); snooping (naw); scoping (?); smelling the coffee / sniffing the flowers, sauntering the walkway, walking the dog, reading the funny papers . . . lot of verbs & objects . . .

I've been high-beaming thru this listserv for a while, and thought I'd just brake to say . . . okay, back to beamin' . . .

have been on a walkabout . . . have had a good look/see . . .

to scope? -- to scope, perchance to preen ; (aye, there's the shrub)

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

656. David R. Israel

Re: desublimation; Eliade

Sun 20 Apr 1997

Henry saith --

> re: Eliade. Did anyone see the article by Umberto Eco in a recent NY Review of Bks didn't, but wd. like to -- wouldn't have more particular ref, wd. ya?

> . . . . about Eliade's connections with a Romanian fascist secret police organization & the unsolved murder of a young grad student of his who was beginning to distance himself from the master

yikes -- (I thought the guy was s'posed to've really mellowed . . .)

> (the student was also Romanian). Unsolved murder in Chicago. Myth is murder, according to Prof. Girard. What say, ethno-poeticians? -

I've no idea what Girard might mean by that (nor who that Prof. may be, for that matter); but it's interesting that Eco (w/ his "Name of the Rose" interest in intrigues) would unearth -- and so provacatively -- broadcasst this (poss. "real life") tale -- a thing one wd. think old Umberto would decidedly NOT do except if he felt there were (likely?) something to it.

strange things, Horatio Gouldernstern, in your philosophy class . . .

d.i.

.
.....
.....
\\\

657. David R. Israel

Re: Bowering and Bromige test / cryptonite

Sun 20 Apr 1997

---

from Kent Johnson . . . .
> using a variety of cryptographic techniques, including some of the > methods pioneered by de Saussure . . . . (reading backwards > and acrostically, I am now satisfied, is barking up the wrong tree).
>
> If anyone . . . . has suggestions on reading techniques that might > prove fruitful, please let me know.

as I recall (from suburban televideo upbringing), the haploid/hapless quasi-anti-hero Maxwell Smart once mentioned a method he'd tried applying to a suspect novel: reading every 3rd word. His success, it seems, was little better than that you report. And to boot, he found it partricularly hard to follow the storyline that way.

But your post calls to mind the 1st paragraph of William Gass's interesting-looking essay in the April issue of Harper's. (I read only the first few paragraphs while eating my brown rice in Union Station . . . so can't vouch for the bonafides of the whole essay) -- this is the 1st essay Gass has had in Harper's Magazine since an excellent one back in '94 . . . .

[you cd. call this the Smart / Gass post; okay, back into the box.]

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

658. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
Mon 21 Apr 1997

At 10:33 AM 4/21/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>Silly me. I've always thought that, though I live in the social world, blah >blah blah, how I make my way through it might be different, individual, even >if there's no such person as the unsocialized urperson. To say that all of >my significant movements are in detail socially determined sounds an awful >lot like recycled calvinism. This may be naive (I love the use of naive as >an expletive).

does expletive mean simply pejorative? i didn't think so. i thought it had a more specific meaning which wd make the term "naive" not an expletive. can some etymologist or grammarian explain what, exactly, an expletive is?

↑ Index

659. Charles Alexander
Re: lodging for Poetry and the Public Sphere
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Dear Kathy:

At the last minute here my lodging plans seem to be collapsing. I was going to stay with friends in Philadelphia & commute by train. But now (I won't go into all the reasons) that seems to be impossible.

Bob Perelman has offered me space in his hotel room, with Alan Golding, pending Alan's assent. I'm willing to take a pallet on a floor, or even just a floor if it comes to that. And of course I will contribute my share. I have emailed Alan asking him. But I also thought I ought to email you in case you have other ideas or suggestions, or perhaps know someone else who has no roommate and wants one, or someone who has cancelled . . .

any help is very much appreciated, and I am sorry to be such a pain at this late date when you must have much else to think about.

all best wishes, and I look forward to meeting you.

charles alexander

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

660. Charles Alexander message to the wrong place
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---

oops.

again, perhaps for the third time in as many years, I sent a personal message to the wrong place. Very sorry.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

661. KENT JOHNSON
awol
Mon 21 Apr 1997

This is another test. One of my messages posted yesterday and three from day before have vanished. One a response to David Kellog's query re: Yasusada's book, another on Culianu's murder, another a valentine to Alan Jen Sondheim, and another reporting what I think is a breakthrough on my efforts to decode B&B's hidden messages. Isn't it too much of a coincidence that just as I expose Bowering and Bromige, my messages start going AWOL?

I feel like the guy who was seated first in the restaurant, and then has to watch as everyone else gets served (served, get it?) before him. But this is worse than that.

Kent

↑ Index

662. sschu30844
Re: monk, t.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Yes, I think it must have been Robin Kelley who's writing the Monk biography.

Susan

↑ Index

663. Hugh Steinberg
Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

>Glad someone pointed that out; but still, the surfer idea leads to >other maritime possibilities . . . .

>
Stowaways?

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

664. Hugh Steinberg
Re: desublimation; Eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Henry Gould wrote:

> re: Eliade. Did anyone see the article by Umberto Eco in a recent NY Review of Bks about Eliade's connections with a Romanian fascist secret police organization & the unsolved murder of a young grad student of his who was beginning to distance himself from the master (the student was also Romanian). Unsolved murder in Chicago.

There was a feature on this in the Chicago Reader several months ago.

> Myth is murder, according to Prof. Girard. What say, ethno-poeticians?

Am not an ethno-poetician (at least I don't think I am) but if myth is a form of societal dreaming, it's reasonable to assume some of those dreams will be nightmares.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

665. George Bowering
Re: Bowering and Bromige test
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Here's a hint to Kent re the obfuscated messages. David would not want me to do this, but I cant help myself. You will understand more of our repartee if you have a look in any decent introduction to the Korean language.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

666. Ryan Whyte

set on roam

Mon 21 Apr 1997

[these poems are part of a meditation on technology, containment, responsibility, solitude, and some other phenomenologies]

following from another consideration of the subject shady cotton pools and her hair swelters, a tent is likely. However there's the other possibility whose borders are marked with eyeshadow, sticky

Call them up because you've got the number. Connect to the cellular net and don't lose this conception;
she sells her eggs for black suns, and I'd like to be tied up, which is something else altogether ends will not be met which means that other sacrifice have to do; marriage will be counseled, offshore, away from the traitors and unkempt backbenchers. Seeing what I mean, the likeliness of your being found is quite high as long as you keep the phone set on roam. At the same time, and let's shift gears here, connectibility guarantees that what you say will come to pass, usually within a day or two.

the keys to prisoners are rattling on the clip on the belt by the phone which is also battery-powered.
Current projections put the unconscious on the alert hair shirt is kept, searched then passed across borderline states. Drawing in spittle, shareholders in this venture hold her hair in high esteem tenting meetings held about the future. Records like skin diseased, Nietzschian, against the motorized projection screen - lenticular and that is I emphasize a way of seeing nicene creed, balanced against the write offs of this quarter. Speaking about the city, no less, the ancient quiescence of which is estimable by today's standards

↑ Index

667. Pierre Joris
Re: desublimation/eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Henry -- I read Girard's work with wonder & pleasure as it came out over the years, especially the early books. When, however, he got to his final theory by which ALL the trouble in the world is explained/resolved by ONE shopworn idea (the scape-goat) & ONE solution (a just as shopworn xtian possibility) I gave up in anger: his turns out to be one more single-narrative alabi explanation more attuned to totalizing 19th century desires than to the reality of this century. The evangelical arrogance of a man calling his magnum opus "Of things hidden since the foundation of the world" ⬩ things which he then of course claims to reveal for the first time to us befuddled mortal masses ⬩ is more than I am willing to put up with. -- Pierre

ps. have read elsewhere about the Eliade caper. difficult to disentangle
the arcana of rumanian secret service stuff. am suspending belief til
the cows come home on that one which don't mean I cldn't see our myth-worker involved in unsavory hanky-panky. That breed seems inclined to totalizing gestures -- remember Jung's brushes with fascismo.
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

668. henry gould
desublimation/eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

I regret last post of mine. Sorry, David B., for the bile. & sorry list for having to listen in. DB has started me thinking about this in a new way.

Re; Eliade article - sorry, David I., I can't give you more specifics - I think it was in the latest or next-to-latest NY Review of Books. And Eco didn't unearth the story - he's just reviewing a book about it by a Romanian author. "Myth is murder" is just shorthand for Rene Girard's massive all-encompassing theory of human culture & nature. He theorizes that the roots of human culture & even intelligence (by way of the ability to name & make distinctions) is rooted in "mimetic desire" (the desire for something the value of which is enhanced only because someone ELSE has it). That in social situation this triangle leads to endless back-&-forth feuding, & cultures solve this problem via the scapegoat mechanism; that underlying all culture-organizing myths lies mob violence & the scapegoat victim - myths are a kind of utilitarian bad faith or disguise which promote the victim to culture hero & thus salve the guilt of the community & maintain the system at the same time. Girard argues that Biblical religion exposes this mechanism & thus opens the possibility for breaking the vicious circle via understanding. I think there is some truth to the idea - paralleled in a purely literary sense in Auerbach's thesis that the Bible began our sense of "ordinary reality" in literature - that the Bible represents a comic, de-glorified divinity - subversive to mythology. There are a ton of books about all this. (One could argue though that some forms of Christianity - & probably other religions too - try to have it both ways, & the circle goes on). But I agree with Walt Whitman, folks: Let's Not Argue About Religion. (hey, it's National Poetry Month.) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

669. KENT JOHNSON

re-post re: Yasusada

Mon 21 Apr 1997

I had sent the below as a reply to David's Kellogg's query on future book publication of Yasusada. It (with three other posts, including a crucial update on the B&B decoding which I'm also going to re-type) never got on the list after numerous tries, so I think the original is somehow corrupted--thus my re-typing without David's original message titled "Re: Perloff on Yasusada." It's transparently obvious to me now that B&B are working directly with Joel Kuszai, or else they have somehow infected the sending function of my machine. I've just installed a new anti-jamming system, so maybe I'll get around them this time...

On 4/19 David wrote in part: "I would like to know what Kent Johnson (who's on this list) thinks of the piece [Marjorie Perloff's Boston Review essay]. But given his generally nimble responses to queries on this score, I don't imagine he'll be all that direct.... Are the Yasusada poems going to be published in book form? I would hope so."

I replied:

David: Doubled Flowering: From the Notebooks of Araki Yasusada, will be published by James Sherry's Roof this fall--the complete manuscript of poems, letters, and marginalia, along with a "critical appendix." But I have to ask what you mean by my "generally nimble responses to queries on this score," since the truth is that no one has ever asked me anything on this list and thus I have responded to nothing! On the Sokal thing, it's the hope of those involved in the Yasusada that it won't be reduced to that level. Yasusada is much more than a trick.

Kent

↑ Index

670. Mark Wallace
who is social, individual, or a writer
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Actually, I think Henry Gould and some others are missing the implications of Jefferson Hansen's suggestion that writing is a social rather than individual phenomena, and I want to elaborate on the reasons I'm with Jeff on this one.

Historically, inside the traditions of western philosophy and culture, to speak very generally, the "individual" refers to the idea that the human being has a single, unified consciousness that exists without any level of social mediation--individuals are BORN as themselves, as unified, and then come into contact with a social environment. There is a lot of writing that takes apart this notion of the individual--I'm not sure I want to say more here than that the work of Foucault and many others focuses on how the notion of the individual IS ITSELF A SOCIAL CREATION.

But let's assume, for the moment, that Henry's evocation of the "individual" is a less naive notion; that what he means, rather, is that despite the various levels of social interaction to which individuals are subjected (and to which they respond in and perhaps beyond that subjection), there still remains a PARTICULAR vision that comes forth from this particular consciousness, which marks that consciousness as individual in the sense that its ideas and productions are exactly that, PARTICULAR. This seems perhaps a more workable notion of the individual as existing in a kind of social specificity that is not totally accountable to group consciousness.

That might seem a better notion of the individual, except that it seems to me that there is a further problem. WHILE IT MAY BE TRUE THAT SOME PART OF A WRITER'S PRODUCTION MAY COME FROM A UNIQUE PLACE THAT CANNOT WHOLLY BE ACCOUNTED FOR BY AN EXAMINATION OF

THAT WRITER'S SOCIAL FRAME, IT'S NOT CLEAR THAT ANYTHING ABOUT THIS PARTICULARITY CAN BE MARKED AS A KIND OF SINGULAR CONSCIOUSNESS THAT COULD BE TERMED INDIVIDUAL. That is, if some part of consciousness and production remains opaque to, resistant to, unreclaimable by the contextualization of a social frame, there is equally no proof that this "resistant" proportion of productive consciousness has anything unified about it. In fact, the attempt to describe this fundamentally opaque site, whose status cannot be determined except through the language to which it remains opaque, as a notion of INDIVIDUALITY is precisely an attempt to unify it, unless one wants to retain the term "individuality" to apply to something not singular, not unified, and resistant to description. But it seems to me that "individuality" is by no means sufficent to describe such a field of activity, especially as it is a term already compromised by its prior use as a notion of unified, non-social consciousness that is central to the mechanics of late capitalist cultural domination.

Of course, whether such a field of activity really exists as resistant to the social is itself an intensely important question. I would take Jeff to mean, in this case, that such a site of resistance, were it to exist or not, DOES NOT FORM A SIGNIFICANT GROUND FROM WHICH THE ACTIVITY OF WRITERS FOR INSTANCE EMERGES. Its opaqueness to the social either does not exist at all, or is no more than an undifferentiated residue which is at best a minor and indecipherable part of the creative process, especially when compared to the power of social ideology. I suppose the signficance of this opaque site to creativity could be debated, but again, I see no way to describe it as "individual," because I see no way to think of it as a site of any sort of unified consciousness.

Clearly, the history of 20th century philosophy, psychoanalysis, and cultural studies (and how all these fields are also altered by feminism) has been much taken with this history of the status of the subect and its (potential?) residues.

There are no individuals.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

671. Maria Damon
Re: desublimation; Eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

henry, i assumed this was a joke. am i wrong?

At 11:44 PM -0600 4/20/97, Hugh Steinberg wrote:
>Henry Gould wrote:
>
>>re: Eliade. Did anyone see the article by Umberto Eco in a recent NY >>Review of Bks about Eliade's connections with a Romanian fascist secret >>police organization & the unsolved murder of a young grad student of his >>who was beginning to distance himself from the master (the student was >>also Romanian). Unsolved murder in Chicago.
>
>There was a feature on this in the Chicago Reader several months ago.
>
>>Myth is murder, according to Prof. Girard. What say, ethno-poeticians?
>
>Am not an ethno-poetician (at least I don't think I am) but if myth is a >form of societal dreaming, it's reasonable to assume some of those dreams >will be nightmares.
>
>Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

672. Maria Damon
Re: cheapening sex in an inflationary spiral
Mon 21 Apr 1997

personally, i think you old codgers are kinda cool, as long as i can understand your jokes. but rachel loden, o Lady of the Poetic Twilight of the Dogs, where art thou in all this? yr the greatest,the Muhammad Ali of poeticsleaze!--md

At 2:13 AM -0500 4/20/97, David Bromige wrote:
>I was so glad when george posted & didnt say the reason we'd been >cheapening sex lately was cause as old farts we have to pay too much for >it. George can be very vulgar, & that is certainly vulgar. But george, I >think its best to admit our code isnt Korean, its Canadian, eh? And its >best to admit we bin caught w our pants round our ankles. Its a first >offense, & i think we should throw ourselves on the mercy of the court. I >intend to talk abt how busy i've bin w civic duties of late, writing >letters to the local papers & going to weekly meetings and stomping the >precincts to prevent the wrongful annexation of orchard-land to build an >industrial park on the edge of town, how i had to make a speech to the >Local Agency Formation County Organization while they were all doing good >imitations of my firstyear students during Melville, how we had to put on a >mixer/art auction to raise money to pay for the lawsuit and how i've been >gathering stuff for the yardsale next weekend, humping mattresses into >flatbed trucks, for the same purpose, against big odds: 4 of the 5 city >council members cldnt be more for it if they were in the pockets of the >developer (i'm probably speaking metaphorically about now, the council is >too big for that), and theres a law now that allows the city cxouncils to >pass on the costs of any lawsuit to the developer, which is a bad law >because it encourages the council to vote irrespnsibly, as they did in this >case, the EIR is the most flawed i've ever seen, the traffic engineer in >reporting that the 2500/day extra cartrips this industrial park will >generate. neglected to factor in that each year, an extra 880 car trip/p.d. >go thru Sebastopol. And the waste storage ponds planned wont be nearly >large enough to contain effluent from the parkinglots once the big storms >hit in the winter.Its ribbon development, which our recently approved >General Plan forbids, meanwhile theres an industrial park already built 43 >miles away in Santa Rosa w plenty of empty buildings, and I cd go & on >about this, not my first venture into grassroots politics, but i wont, >because who wants long postings, and also because i want to address your >defense, George, you must tell of how hard you work at SFU, and of needing >at the same time to be nursing your wife as you are doing thru a serious >illness, while traveling the world in behalf of Canadian Lit; and how all >this hard work, requiring stern sublimation, made us crack up : and then we >just throw ourselves on the magistrate's mercy & hope he hasnt recently >been made to look foolish in public by a colleague on some judicial matter >in such a way that he's looking for some easy butt to kick. I'd say its >always best to make a clean breast of it, but I'm worried that the >superfluous sexual energy encoded in language would render that cliche, in >context, suspect. But in any case, George, we must see to it that our >heavily (but not heavily enough) encrypted desire for one another is kept >strictly in the back channels henceforth. We wouldnt want the Listmaster, a >man notorious for his playlessness, and who always stands by the fixed >meanings he imparts to his words, delivering an officious censure to us on >the parade ground. Au revoir, cherie--j'embarrass ton rep. db.

↑ Index

673. Maria Damon
Re: monk, t.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

At 12:47 AM -0400 4/21/97, [redacted] wrote:
>Yes, I think it must have been Robin Kelley who's writing the Monk biography.
>
>Susan

this would really be interesting, since Kelley is an historian specializing, i believe, in Black labor history in the South. he's smart as hell, so any bio he'd write will be terrific i'm sure.

↑ Index

674. Maria Damon
Re: What white
Mon 21 Apr 1997

At 2:07 PM -0700 4/20/97, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
>On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Dale Smith wrote:
>
>timmons:
>> >ok heres my (tentative) conclusion: race is semantically and
>> >epistemologically more complicated than the linguistic and conceptual >> >categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of >> >that.
>>
>> It seems like this kind of intellectualized and evasive answer neglects to >> address the positions of race as they actually function.
>
>no quite the opposite actually: it encourages one to be aware (dare i say >sensitive?) to the permutations of difference and the difficulties of >making ethno-assumptions. i dont apologize for an "intellectualized" >answer and i dont accept as "evasive" an attempt to separate the wheat >from the chaff--as it were. your point of addressing "the positions of >race as they function" is taken to heart--however much the criticism of >"cerebral--distant--contemplation" is inaccurate. i like to think of my >self as somewhat influenced by enlightenment practices: the general AND >the particular.
>
>> A body reveals certain traits--Asian, African, European--but it doesn't >> always give you details of national heritage or even ethnicity, as in a >> country like Burundi.

>
>> A white person's categorical discussion of race >> pretty much reveals the problems Hoa pointed out in her post.
>
>this two statements evoke for me precisely the difficulties i mentioned >in my post: that the racialized body is both a sign of ethnicity but >problematically ambiguous. to which i suggested that our language for >talking about this is simply not adequate to the experience and the >experienced experience of race--which is to say that we are saying the >same thing in different words. but while you alluded to this ambiguity >of race you also insist upon it--which is not to say you are inconsistent >but that the language of race necessitates both an attention (as you say) >to the lived experience of race but (as i say) an attentiveness to where >that language fails to address the ambiguities complexities difficulties >of differences.
>
>> Finally, it is more than a bit ironic for a white person to determine a >> "useful" vocabulary for racial discussion.
>
>i hope youre not making assumptions about race on-line: its hard to see >not to mention the fact that the inscription of race on the body is >itself always subject to interpretive ambiguity.
>
>> It seems like the appropriate >> response to questions of race would be not to retreat into vague conceptual >> terms, but to engage them in a more heart-felt way. As it is, the above >> seems dismissive and casual, and it removes personal experience from the >> complicated issues surrounding race.
>
>well referring to my post as "vague conceptual terms" that are >"dismissive and casual" in favor of a rather sentimentalized language of >the "heart" whose idiom is "personal experience" runs the risk not >only of alienating your interlocutor but of particularizing any discussion of >race into an my experience versus youre experience. a rather habermasian >dilemma if i do say so.
>
>in the end this post raises these thoughts for me: first that i hope that >i didnt seem too harsh in my original look at the use made of "white >guys." second that an idiom mediating particularized languages of >experience--the "heart"--and the "intellectualized" analysis of such >epistemo-linguisitc concepts is necessary.
>

>best
>
>jeffrey timmons

jeffrey and dale: it's a truism by now that race is socially constructed. however, there are real privileges (for white folks) and disenfranchisements (for folks of color) assigned to those various social constructions. so to use the "construction" argument as to deny the real effects of racism and the real privileges of whiteness is a real problem. most of the "white" critical race theorists who are problematizing "whiteness" are doing so not to avoid taking responsibility for their privilege but precisely to take responsibility and take steps, as aldon pointed out in his "whatness of whiteness" post, to dissolve its mystical powers of privilege-granting. it is this taking responsibility that seems a little lacking in your posts, jeffrey. what you say about construction is true, but to use that argument to deny the material/ experiential effects of racism on people of color seems...well...evasive, as if you feel personally attacked and need to defend yourself. there's a wonderful article by george lipsitz in American Quarterly about a year ago, where he coins the term "possessive investment in whiteness" and explains how gov't policies that started in Roosevelt's time have affected the gap in life opportunities,material wellbeing, etc. between whites and blacks. this takes the argument out of the psycho-emotional "i feel hurt that i'm being charged w/ racism just cuz i appear to be white" realm that makes so many otherwise wellmeaning white people balk at a serious study of white privilege. being jewish (not technically, as my mother wasnt, but identifying as such) in america has complicated this issue for me. in europe, where most american jews came from, weren't white. here, we are. so here, we have to take responsibility for our white privilege without forgetting that it's a contingent category. we're "honorary whites," or "sort-of" white, or "white for now." it points up exactly how arbitrary the categories are. but --i can get a loan for a house no problem, i can buy property in certain parts of town, it was assumed i'd go to college (and i did), etc. etc. blah blah blah. i'm babbling now. no offense meant; just an intervention, perhaps inappropriate.

↑ Index

675. Steven Marks
Re: desublimation; Eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Eco article is in April 10, 1997 issue of NYRB. It's called "Murder in Chicago." I didn't read it so I can't add anything. Well, I suppose I could, but as Nixon reminded us: "That would be wrong." God, I hope that was Nixon and not Carter. Or Gore. My quote machine has been a rye lately.

Cheers on a finally warm Monday morning,
Steven

On Mon, 21 Apr 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

> henry, i assumed this was a joke. am i wrong?
>
> At 11:44 PM -0600 4/20/97, Hugh Steinberg wrote:
> Henry Gould wrote:
>
> re: Eliade. Did anyone see the article by Umberto Eco in a recent NY Review of Bks about Eliade's connections with a Romanian fascist secret police organization & the unsolved murder of a young grad student of his who was beginning to distance himself from the master (the student was also Romanian). Unsolved murder in Chicago.
>
> There was a feature on this in the Chicago Reader several months ago.
>
> Myth is murder, according to Prof. Girard. What say, ethno-poeticians?
>
> Am not an ethno-poetician (at least I don't think I am) but if myth is a form of societal dreaming, it's reasonable to assume some of those dreams will be nightmares.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

676. Mark Prejsnar
Re: L+A+N+G+P+O and New Party
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Two reponses, Kent---

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> But Mark: one of the things I find interesting about the NP is that it has apparently gathered old CPers like Zinn, DSA types like Hightower, radical Christians like West, and real independents like Chomsky together under a common banner. Of course, these are just big names, but in the protracted context of the U.S. left's sectarian provincialism, the symbolism of such a gathering doesn't > seem insignificant? Is Zinn's presence indicative of a broader CP presence in the NP? Have they all "fused" into it? (Why wouldn't they? The CPUSA's been a loyal social-democratic party ever since Hitler stabbeb Stalin in the back.)

In my opinion...Well, there are some very long possible answers. The short answer in my opinion is: because world (stalinist) Communism was so central to the left, many serious attempts at building a sort-of-socialist alternative include old CP'ers. For the most part, it's nothing more significant (or sinister) than that. This was true of the New American Movement in the 1970's, a socialist party of some promise that melded into DSOC to creat DSA (and the promise faded); and of many other similar groupings. One constant in doing political work from 1968 to the present is, that you find people with this kind of background among the most committed and constant activists you're working with.

S > > And glad to hear from someone who has hung in there through these > very "unsocialist" times (and it will eventually surely be au > courant again to be anti-capitalist!) that the question of unity > amongst new and viable left organizations seems to be in the > discussion. But don't you think that if such unity comes to be, Mark, > that this conspiratorial "fusion" crap should go out the window? and if the two > parties are primarily there to give vent to the incestual squabbles > of this country's ruling class, why participate in the "obscenity", > as you put it, of what's going on?

The answer to that's easy, in my opinion (and was already contained in my first post on this)--Because it might help us reach many of the working people who still think the Republicrat structure is the one way to work if you are going to be "realistic". But if instead you want to try founding another flaming red revolutionary grouping, please be my guest. I might join! But I myself work full time or more at a day job, do labor activism, and consider my work as a poet and editor to my my "real" life's work--I can't quite manage the energy to found my own party! So I support any initiative that MIGHT move us forward..And like the Jesse Jackson campaigns AT FIRST (I hasten to add) the NP looks like it MIGHT have some small contribution to make in this direction. You work with the left you have; and I have always felt that the truely best left would be: 1. revolutionary; and 2. very much NON-leninist. As no such formation now exists that in my opinion is any good, I lend my support to whatever flawed initiatives I see people attempting out there.

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

677. David Bromige
no no nanook(ie)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

This "Subject" is one of my alltime favorites for its knotting of various possible and (barely?) relevant threads--i wonder herb@_eskimo_ hasnt responded.

But what a bad lot you are, Maria, Rachel and (no surprise here!) george. No sooner do I turn over a new leaf than I find--oh, no, one of those!--under it. Here I am, trying to go straight, not to offend moral sensibilities, and the three of you, trying to yank me back to the old days (like that time in Quebec!)

I must deny the boxer-shorts canard. Anybody who knows me well will tell you that I only wear jockeys or bikinis. I was wearing jockeys the one and only time Bowering saw me in my underwear. He walked into my room at his house while I was getting dressed. He read the brand name on the front of my jockeys and said, "Everlast! By the time she sees your underwear, she's already committed--you should put that sign on the front of your pants!"

The first step in giving up alcohol and other abusive substances, is to let all of your acquaintance know some of the details of your life during addiction. I post this message because I am on the 12-step program away from double entendere and sex-cheapening obtrusions into this place of serious discussion and debate.-For as long as my ex-partners in these activities continue to post sucrrilous allegations, I shall oblige my recovery guru by posting one more detail of their shameless but shameful activities. yrs in sobriety & chasteness, db.

↑ Index

678. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Mon 21 Apr 1997

I really look forward to Philip Read's writing on the Malley thing, which has always struck me as fascinating....I'd like to point out what I consider a neat (in several senses) parallel instance.

I still feel that perhaps I disagree with most posters here, on Perelman's Marginalization, including Susan in her excellent discussion (I got Witz on Saturday--Thanx, Chris Reiner!)...In the sense that I read the tone of the book as less putting-down of many of the poets discussed, than others do.....But here I'd like to point out one of my favorite passages in the book, where BP discusses a poem (in Writers & Poets magazine?) which was intended as an angry debunking of LongPo..Like the Malley poets, the author stressed that the short lyric was written without effort or revision, in (in her case) a few seconds. Perelman demonstrates (correctly, in my opinion) that the poem shoots its author in the foot in just the way the Malley work has often been thought (by their opponents) to shoot its authors...The lyric can be read as quite intelligent, entertaining and meaningful. I rather like it, myself. Its author may have been demonstrating precisely the opposite of what she intended (namely, that non-mainstream "avant-garde" styles are inherently meaningless and worthless ways to write verse)..At the very least (and this is what I always thought the Malley affair represented) the "parody" language poem shows that parodic attack never demolishes a poetic style you dislike..... the only people who will "see the light" in response to your parody will be the folks who already agreed with your loathing of the style...

Mark P.

↑ Index

679. Rachel Loden
no no nanook(ie)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

As a general rule, Maria, I try to stay out of places where Canadians are dropping their pants.

Rachel L.

> But george, I > think its best to admit our code isnt Korean, its Canadian, eh? And its > best to admit we bin caught w our pants round our ankles.

↑ Index

680. michael corbin
Re: desublimation/eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---

henry gould wrote:
>
> I regret last post of mine. Sorry, David B., for the bile. & sorry list > for having to listen in. DB has started me thinking about this in a new way.
>
> Re; Eliade article - sorry, David I., I can't give you more specifics - I > think it was in the latest or next-to-latest NY Review of Books. And > Eco didn't unearth the story - he's just reviewing a book about it by a > Romanian author.

NYRB dated April 10, the "Spring Books Issue. The book under review by Eco is _Eros, Magic, and the Murder of Professor Culianu_ Northwestern U press. The author is Ted Anton who I believe is at Depaul University and not Romanian.

Eliade's connection with the fascist Romanian Iron Guard and Culianu's attempt to come to terms with this is part of a sordid reconstruction of events that led to his execution style killing. Eco, I guess had some brief connection with Culianu, but the review is rather flat, taking the book to task for tending toward the sensational. Although its hard to see how this story could be anything less, even if it is, in the last instance, simply the banal evil of Ceausescu-esque censorship of Romanian dissent.

mc

↑ Index

681. Gwyn McVay
Re: What white
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---

re contingent whiteness: David Mura has said that Asians sometimes get to be considered honorary whites and sit in the front of the bus--as long as they don't ever get the illusion that they'll get to drive the bus.

Gwyn

↑ Index

682. Dale Smith
Re: who is social, etc.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

I have to agree with Gould. I should keep my trap shut on this. I'm no philosopher. But to say that individuality does not exist in the writing process fails to acknowledge, to my mind, deeper manifestations of human individuality outside the act of writing. Even if some one conclusively proved that the individual is a social construction, so what? That should feed the individual with even deeper personal insights into his or her relationship with a larger group. With writing--with any creative act--a person takes action due to a personal impulse, a will to engage something outside the self. I'm sure one's will consists of more than only social conditioning. But even if it didn't, that would be all the more reason for the individual to engage the world with all of his or her idiosyncratic, chaotic, and impulsive gestures. It's been a while since I read it, but isn't that similar to the situation of Dostoevsky's character in Notes from Underground? In the end I feel that, as Pound said, it's better to gamble an opinion than to humbly submit to that with which you disagree. Anyway, that's my two cents, for what it's worth. I don't like these kinds of theoretical gambits, but I believe these discussions should take place on occasion to help possibly clarify, if only to ourselves, our own pretenses for writing at all.

> I canna resist emphasizing a little further. If you deny individuality exists in the writing process, you might as well deny the importance or even existence of individuality per se. Is this what you're saying?
>
> Nothing personal - but I find this a malignant doctrine. Deny the existence of the individual & you might as well start the train cars rolling for the camps. Nothing personal - I sense from M & J's posts over the years that you are both young serious-minded fellows of good character & strong feeling & ideals - maybe you even look alike!!! But this retread of the negation of the human individual comes from reading too many books in political science, fellas. & you is wrong.
>
> Now please don't accuse me of heatin' up the rhetoric, cause I ain't. I just look at Stalinism & Fascism & all manner of superior authoritarian-isms & hear the same noises. & I agree in advance that Individualism could also become some kinda twisted anti-human ideology. & profit & property have justified their stealth on half-notions of the individual. But don't throw out the BABY with the...
> - Henry G.

↑ Index

683. Christopher Alexander
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Philip wwrott:
> "Ern Malley" became, and remains, a kind of rallying point for radical > modernist, postmodern and avant-garde writing in Australia. For the > moralising anti-modernists of mid-century Australian literature, Ern Malley > represents the the possibility of an entirely amoral art. (Max Harris was > prosecuted for pusblishing obscene material, that is, poetry of > indeterminate meaning.) In a chapter I'm currently writing, I argue that in > fact Malley becomes the _authentic_ origin of Australian (post)modernism.

I wonder if you (or anyone, really) can direct those of us who are not familiar with the Ern Malley affair (which does have a distinctly Victorian ring, thus put) to a few salient (primary &/or secondary) sources. I assume there's a lot of writing on this one out there, somewhere, but possibly in more fugitive publications, & so not, for instance, indexed in the MLA database.

Chris
..
christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
[redacted] / **********

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

↑ Index

684. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

On Sun, 20 Apr 1997, Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> Glad someone pointed that out; but still, the surfer idea leads to other maritime possibilities . . . .
>
> Stowaways?
>
> Hugh Steinberg

lubbers?

↑ Index

685. michael corbin
Re: What white
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Maria Damon wrote:

> in europe, where most american jews came from, weren't white. here, we are. so here, we have to take responsibility for our white privilege without forgetting that it's a contingent category. we're "honorary whites," or "sort-of" white, or "white for now." it points up exactly how arbitrary the categories are. but --i can get a loan for a house no problem, i can buy property in certain parts of town, it was assumed i'd go to college (and i did),

Along these lines Noel Ignatiev (co-editor of _Race Traitor_) published _How the Irish Became White_ examining in fine historical detail the dynamic M. Damon refers to.

Race Traitor's subhead is "a journal of the new abolitionism". It is theoretically eclectic in its treatment(s) of social construction-ism. however it is precisely about active and activist attempts at confronting the very real manifestations of racism, rather than the straw-man dance around 'PC', multi-cultural-ism etc. and other bugbears that lather up discussions of injured liberal locus communis. One of the journal's strengths is the space given to young folks.

mc

↑ Index

686. Kristin Gallagher
Re: New party, etc
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---

gone for weekend, glad to get back to all these interesting messages.

> They (the NP) seem in my experience to be > doing better than most leftists of the past two decades at drawing in > real working class people of all races.*

not sure what to make of this claim. the new party's base seems to be primarily in the intelligencia at this point. the philly branch of the labor party (detroits is also pretty successful) has succeeded in umbrella-ing a wide variety of activist groups LED by poor people.

> Why do you see the new > Labor Party as "more promising" of overthrowing "global capitalism"?
> Do you mean its present leadership and current program offer this > hope, or do you mean that a political party in this country firmly > grounded in working class organizations is an absolute prerequisite
> grounded in working class organizations is an absolute prerequisite > for smashing the rule of capital?

here the latter is the crux of the matter. people who have nothing to lose are less likely to compromise with the present system. while i like the new party's ideas, (see the following)

> Their (NP)platform is in flux and very vague, which has pissed off lots of > people on the left, and led to many attacks. The NP says that this is > because ultimately they want the folks who are building the party to draw > up its detailed credo,

if they do not succeed in overturning the fusion thing, they may not make it electorally. if they overturn the anti-fusion thing, but only mostly have the intelligencia behind them, then it is possible that (see following)

> the NP is going to repeat the trajectory of Democratic > Socialists of America, and become a sunday tea-club entirely subservient > for all practical purposes to the Democratic wing of the Republicrats, and > thus dead as a political force.

as for the labor party . . . .

> until their naitonal leadership wholly endorses > activism/membership by folks outside certified union locals, and commits > to running its own cadidates, it remains a pretty limited option for most of us...

they ARE committed to running their own candidates, but only after they have built a larger and INDEPENDENT funding base. projected start date: 3 years. thus the following statement > considerable reason that as long as it says it is a "party" but won't field its own cadidates, it is going to be simply a wing of the Clintonian ultra-right Demos, is false.

the NP's ideas and efforts are commendable and have potential, but the future is unclear. at some point labor movements such as the one in philly, which consists mostly of groups that are poor-led and poor-organized and strives for independent funding, may be a necessary alternative. they are highly organized and quite serious and quite clear about how they, personally are getting fucked over. this summer some members plan to march from the liberty bell to the united nations. last summer they marched from the liberty bell to harrisburg(which is a lot farther than the UN). against (economic) human rights abuses in USA. unfortunately our local news doesnt like to give them any press . . . . let alone getting an article in the nation.

↑ Index

687. Mark Weiss
Re: desublimation/eliade
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Bravo Pierre! Grandiosity does get tiresome.

At 09:52 AM 4/21/97 +0000, you wrote:
>Henry -- I read Girard's work with wonder & pleasure as it came out over >the years, especially the early books. When, however, he got to his >final theory by which ALL the trouble in the world is explained/resolved
>by ONE shopworn idea (the scape-goat) & ONE solution (a just as shopworn >xtian possibility) I gave up in anger: his turns out to be one more >single-narrative alabi explanation more attuned to totalizing 19th >century desires than to the reality of this century. The evangelical >arrogance of a man calling his magnum opus "Of things hidden since the >foundation of the world" — things which he then of course claims to >reveal for the first time to us befuddled mortal masses — is more than I >am willing to put up with. -- Pierre
>
>ps. have read elsewhere about the Eliade caper. difficult to disentangle
>the arcana of rumanian secret service stuff. am suspending belief til

>the cows come home on that one which don't mean I cldn't see our >myth-worker involved in unsavory hanky-panky. That breed seems inclined >to totalizing gestures -- remember Jung's brushes with fascismo.
>--
>==========
>pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
>tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>----------
>Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
>values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
>_one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
>constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
>[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
>and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
>it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
>==========
>
>

↑ Index

688. raea100900
Talisman
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Dear List:

Here's a practical question. Can someone give me Talisman (Ed Foster)'s current address. Channel me - back door or front.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

689. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Chris--

The Ern Malley Affair / Michael Heyward.
London : Faber & Faber, 1993.
currently in print in the U.S. in a Faber paperback for $12.95, according to Books-in-Print.

your friendly librarian poet,

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

On Mon, 21 Apr 1997, Christopher Alexander wrote:

> Philip wwrott:
> "Ern Malley" became, and remains, a kind of rallying point for radical modernist, postmodern and avant-garde writing in Australia. For the moralising anti-modernists of mid-century Australian literature, Ern Malley represents the the possibility of an entirely amoral art. (Max Harris was prosecuted for pusblishing obscene material, that is, poetry of indeterminate meaning.) In a chapter I'm currently writing, I argue that in fact Malley becomes the _authentic_ origin of Australian (post)modernism.
>
> I wonder if you (or anyone, really) can direct those of us who are not familiar with the Ern Malley affair (which does have a distinctly Victorian ring, thus put) to a few salient (primary &/or secondary) sources. I assume there's a lot of writing on this one out there, somewhere, but possibly in more fugitive publications, & so not, for instance, indexed in the MLA database.
>
> Chris
> ..
> christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective > [redacted] / **********
>
> http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce
>
> > Hey!!
> > Now Available for a mere $4:
> > _constellation voice_ by linda russo

↑ Index

690. Michael Magee
Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Mark wrote: "a notion of INDIVIDUALITY is precisely an attempt to unify it, unless one wants to retain the term "individuality" to apply to something not singular, not unified, and resistant to description. But it seems to me that "individuality" is by no means sufficent to describe such a field of activity, especially as it is a term already compromised by its prior use as a notion of unified, non-social consciousness that is central to the mechanics of late capitalist cultural domination... I see no way to describe it as "individual," because I see no way to think of it as a site of any sort of unified consciousness...There are no individuals."

Perhaps the word "individuality" is the real problem here. There's a great number of writers/thinkers who attempt to posit selfhood as "not singular, not unified, and resistant to description." For instance Emerson: "I know better than to claim any completeness for my picture. I am a fragment and this is a fragment of me." Or Creeley: "I am struck by the situation of schizophrenia wherein the experience of body may so place the hands or feet or anus in the consciousness so affected, that no communal agreement as to their location is possible." These seem to me attempts to posit a self which is both contingent and multiple, and certainly resistant to description, description not only of "individuality" but also any description which would merely collapse self into a particular collective. I would argue that these kinds of positionings are both infused with social consciousness and highly resistant of any attempts to construct something resembling, say, "rugged individualism."

-Mike.

↑ Index

691. henry gould
Re: Girard
Mon 21 Apr 1997

I'm about where you are on it, Pierre. These total theories get a little much. But he is subtle & sure can pick apart a myth. - HG

↑ Index

692. Mark Weiss
Re: What white
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Try buying a house in Tuxedo Park or Lake Forest. Institutional antisemitism may be down, but it's not out.

Here's a quaint bit of white American folklore that I've known all my life and that's still current in a lot of places: "What do you get if you turn a Jew inside out? A nigger." I remember as a young child puzzling over the mechanics of that one.

At 08:59 AM 4/21/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Maria Damon wrote:
>
>> in >> europe, where most american jews came from, weren't white. here, we are.

>> so here, we have to take responsibility for our white privilege without >> forgetting that it's a contingent category. we're "honorary whites," or >> "sort-of" white, or "white for now." it points up exactly how arbitrary the >> categories are. but --i can get a loan for a house no problem, i can buy >> property in certain parts of town, it was assumed i'd go to college (and i >> did),
>
>Along these lines Noel Ignatiev (co-editor of _Race Traitor_) published >_How the Irish Became White_ examining in fine historical detail the >dynamic M. Damon refers to.
>
>_Race Traitor_'s subhead is "a journal of the new abolitionism". It is >theoretically eclectic in its treatment(s) of social construction-ism.
>however it is precisely about active and activist attempts at >confronting the very real manifestations of racism, rather than the >straw-man dance around 'PC', multi-cultural-ism etc. and other bugbears >that lather up discussions of injured liberal locus communis. One of the >journal's strengths is the space given to young folks.
>
>mc
>
>

↑ Index

693. henry gould
Re: who is social, etc.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

The position opened by Jeff & enlarged upon by Mark is one I have a hard time understanding! Of course there's been a ton of critical theory on the "place" where the "subject" swerves off into ambiguity, or the Other, or the self-contradictory; and in a time of "identity politics" as well as commodified "personal" poetry, the idea that the individual is not only not important but does not exist holds, I suppose, a certain gleam of provocative interest. Moreover, as I understand the poetic process, it's certainly not just a matter of "self-expression" or self-imitation - it's an exploratory breaking-down & reconfiguring. "You must lose yourself to find yourself", as the proverb goes.

But how does this theory relate, say, to the news report this week, who knows how accurate it is, about a recent scientific study that advances the notion that the skills which activate human intelligence are instilled by age one & based on the amount of spoken interaction the child has with loving parents? I suppose you could read this either way - but what does it mean for Mark's "power of social ideology" if the child is primed for it by age one?

In my view individuality is not a phenomenon in isolation, & has never been described as such in classical philosophy, as Mark claims. "Man is the civic animal." (Aristotle) "Man is the companionable animal." (Dante) How's that for classics? But the reification (in ideology) of "social forces" to the point of nullifying the sense of individuality seems way off base to me. The whole trend of our century has been toward these totalizing ideas and against the concept of the Person. My own PERSONAL viewpoint is that individuality is the GIST, the very TASTE of the SALT OF THE EARTH which brings the DIGNITY of the PERSON to the POINT, the ESSENCE of political efficacy & meaning - and that this DIGNITY of the HUMAN PERSON is the shadow of the DIVINE ANALOGY which the unity of the HUMAN RACE displays in all its glory. HUMANITY is the living MANIFESTATION of the DIVINE IMAGE. Thank you, & good night. & don't leave out the dolphins, neither - Henry Gould

↑ Index

694. Sylvester Pollet

Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)

Mon 21 Apr 1997

That might do it, Aldon. List-lubbers, i.e. lovers, but not quite in the swim. I lub it! sp

> On Sun, 20 Apr 1997, Hugh Steinberg wrote:
>
> Glad someone pointed that out; but still, the surfer idea leads to other maritime possibilities . . . .
>
> Stowaways?
>
> Hugh Steinberg
>
> lubbers?

↑ Index

695. Mark Weiss

Re: who is social, individual, or a writer

Mon 21 Apr 1997

Silly me. I've always thought that, though I live in the social world, blah blah blah, how I make my way through it might be different, individual, even if there's no such person as the unsocialized urperson. To say that all of my significant movements are in detail socially determined sounds an awful lot like recycled calvinism. This may be naive (I love the use of naive as an expletive). Of course, none of these assertions are "proveable." It's entirely possible that we are all programmed by aliens for their amusement.

At 09:06 AM 4/21/97 -0400, you wrote:
> Actually, I think Henry Gould and some others are missing the >implications of Jefferson Hansen's suggestion that writing is a social >rather than individual phenomena, and I want to elaborate on the reasons >I'm with Jeff on this one.
>
> Historically, inside the traditions of western philosophy and >culture, to speak very generally, the "individual" refers to the idea that >the human being has a single, unified consciousness that exists without >any level of social mediation--individuals are BORN as themselves, as >unified, and then come into contact with a social environment. There is a >lot of writing that takes apart this notion of the individual--I'm not >sure I want to say more here than that the work of Foucault and many >others focuses on how the notion of the individual IS ITSELF A SOCIAL >CREATION.
>
> But let's assume, for the moment, that Henry's evocation of the >"individual" is a less naive notion; that what he means, rather, is that >despite the various levels of social interaction to which individuals are >subjected (and to which they respond in and perhaps beyond that >subjection), there still remains a PARTICULAR vision that comes forth from >this particular consciousness, which marks that consciousness as >individual in the sense that its ideas and productions are exactly that, >PARTICULAR. This seems perhaps a more workable notion of the individual as >existing in a kind of social specificity that is not totally accountable >to group consciousness.
>
> That might seem a better notion of the individual, except that it >seems to me that there is a further problem. WHILE IT MAY BE TRUE THAT >SOME PART OF A WRITER'S PRODUCTION MAY COME FROM A UNIQUE PLACE THAT >CANNOT WHOLLY BE ACCOUNTED FOR BY AN EXAMINATION OF THAT WRITER'S SOCIAL >FRAME, IT'S NOT CLEAR THAT ANYTHING ABOUT THIS PARTICULARITY CAN BE MARKED >AS A KIND OF SINGULAR CONSCIOUSNESS THAT COULD BE TERMED INDIVIDUAL. That >is, if some part of consciousness and production remains opaque to, >resistant to, unreclaimable by the contextualization of a social frame, >there is equally no proof that this "resistant" proportion of productive >consciousness has anything unified about it. In fact, the attempt to >describe this fundamentally opaque site, whose status cannot be determined >except through the language to which it remains opaque, as a notion of >INDIVIDUALITY is precisely an attempt to unify it, unless one wants to >retain the term "individuality" to apply to something not singular, not >unified, and resistant to description. But it seems to me that >"individuality" is by no means sufficent to describe such a field of >activity, especially as it is a term already compromised by its prior use >as a notion of unified, non-social consciousness that is central to the >mechanics of late capitalist cultural domination.

>
> Of course, whether such a field of activity really exists as >resistant to the social is itself an intensely important question. I would >take Jeff to mean, in this case, that such a site of resistance, were it >to exist or not, DOES NOT FORM A SIGNIFICANT GROUND FROM WHICH
THE >ACTIVITY OF WRITERS FOR INSTANCE EMERGES. Its opaqueness to the social >either does not exist at all, or is no more than an undifferentiated >residue which is at best a minor and indecipherable part of the creative >process, especially when compared to the power of social ideology. I >suppose the signficance of this opaque site to creativity could be >debated, but again, I see no way to describe it as "individual," because I >see no way to think of it as a site of any sort of unified consciousness.
>
> Clearly, the history of 20th century philosophy, psychoanalysis, >and cultural studies (and how all these fields are also altered by >feminism) has been much taken with this history of the status of the >subect and its (potential?) residues.
>
> There are no individuals.
>
>
> Mark Wallace
>
>/----------\
>| |
>| [redacted] |
>| GWU: |

```
>|      http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw                                |
>|     EPC:                                                |
>|      http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace                    |
>|_____________________________________________________________________|
>
>
```

↑ Index

696. Sylvester Pollet

Re: awol

Mon 21 Apr 1997

Kent--this one called awol got through loud & clear. I feel like I read the others, but maybe not, if they were follow-ups. the restaurant sounds like part of the whiteness thread. sp

> This is another test. One of my messages posted yesterday and three from day before have vanished. One a response to David Kellog's query re: Yasusada's book, another on Culianu's murder, another a valentine to Alan Jen Sondheim, and another reporting what I think is a breakthrough on my efforts to decode B&B's hidden messages. Isn't it too much of a coincidence that just as I expose Bowering and Bromige, my messages start going AWOL?
>
> I feel like the guy who was seated first in the restaurant, and then has to watch as everyone else gets served (served, get it?) before him. But this is worse than that.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

697. GRAHAM W. FOUST

serfing

Mon 21 Apr 1997

There are, of course, "hodads," i.e. nonsurfers who frequent surfing beaches pretending to be surfers.

Don't know what art is, but I know what I lurk.

Graham
wearing: Ocean Pacific t-shirt, Jams, thick glasses dredging: up old threads

↑ Index

698. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Talisman
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Front, please. It's public info, and I need it too! sp

> Dear List:
>
> Here's a practical question. Can someone give me Talisman (Ed Foster)'s current address. Channel me - back door or front.
>
> Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

699. David Bromige
no no i want them back says this individual
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Aldon, i need those magnify-things-out-of-all-proportion spectacles back! I'm looking for a silver lining. That other item was my swimsuit. Actually, keep that. It wouldnt fit me any more. I've been eating tons of these great new potato chips called Kettle, & they have magnified me out of all proportion.

Mark Wallace, always interested in what you have to say. But puzzled, today,to hear there's no such thing as an individual, so let me try to match up what I think with that assertion. Para One (above) was written by an individual, or by someone who has learned how to sound like an individual. He learned that from the stuff all over the scatter we call society. Much of that stuff was commonly available, some of it (family ways) was not. But how he learned it, the way in which he picked it up, & so, what he did with it . . . isnt that down to a genetic template as individual as your fingerprints? Well yes it is and so I think, Mark cant be meaning _that_, when he writes "individual". Your parents (or caregivers during infancy) encourage/discourage the manifestations of this template, thus shape it until it feels like "nature". As your life proceeds, this shaping will largely determine what you cause to happen to you.

But there is something there from the womb they have to work with, no? "Individual" I recall in the Am. Heritage Dictionary as "undividable". Not from soc'y, but from itself. You can sound like anyone, if you're a good mimic, but who is that who is sounding like anyone? Why am I having such a hard time grasping this, when it sounds so straightforward for you?

If there is so individual, there is no sin. Great! But the categories of sin precede capitalism. In fact capitalism requires some of those preexisting categories of behavior--Greed and Avarice--for its continued infliction of itself upon us poor suffering mortals; mortals, we all die but each faces his death as an individual, alone.

Aldon, wearing only a pair of magnfiying glasses & swimtrunks! You, here? db

↑ Index

700. Mark Prejsnar

Re: (Perloff on Yasusada) footnote/spinoff/response to Mark Prejsnar/Bob P-threaders may also note , uh, "On parody"

Mon 21 Apr 1997

Yup--I agree with this....Much the point, in some ways, of the instances people have been discussing (not Yasusada, but the others): try to use parody as a cudgel and it tends to ricochet back at ya...But within a community of shared concerns, it can be illuminating play.

On Sun, 20 Apr 1997, David Bromige wrote:

> 'The only people who will "see the light" in respondse to your parody will be those who already agreed with your loathing of the style.' Hallelujah, Mark Prejsnar, I couldnt agree more. Would add, however, that "seeing the light" isnt the only pleasure one can take in a parody. One can enjoy "Burnt Norton" and still enjoy "Charred Whitlow" (by Henry reed, is it? Too busy or lazy to look it up). I've seen parodies of writers I greatly admire that have been outrageously funny. It seems to me its something akin to the potential funniness of names--parody can throw limitation into a new light, we see the something mechanical about style, and Bergson in "On Laughter" makes sense to me when he remarks that one thing that can be funny is when human beings act in a mechanical way.Or the comedy routine is "a machine"...Chaplin appears, theres an open hole in the street, we know its only a matter of time before he falls down it . . that example is likely from someone other than Bergson, huh? Cant recall my source there, sorry. Any style has the limitations of its virtues, and if a parody can detach us from its charisma for a moment, we can laugh at it without, however, "seeing the light" & expunging that poet or that poem from our hearts.(I recall the thread on the List months since, concerning "Stopping by Woods" being sung to the tune of "Hernando's Hideaway". Poems from _The Shropshire Lad_ too, I think Bowering posted in, cd also go to that tune.) One of my favorite parodies is by Kenneth Koch, and has fun with WCW's "This is just to say" : "This is just to say/ I'm sorry I broke both yr arms at the dance last night/ but I wanted you on the wards, where _I_ am the doctor." The chief problem w the parody Bob P alludes to, is that it isnt a good parody. It's not well-written. And given its authorship, how cd it have been? Even that is faintly funny. db.

↑ Index

701. David Bromige
marianne moore's poems
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Maria & fellow-Listers & -lubbers, there are 2 versions. One,, too long to type, as sp says, the other, very short, 4 lines I think, all mm left of it in one of the more drastic acts of revision by any poet. Those 4 lines I have neither by heart nor bookshelf.

PS Katharine, interesting that an expletive can look like something deleted. (2) lubbers, as in "lubbers come back to me," "Lubber, when you're near me," "When your lubber has gone", and on & on.

PPS The 50-posts-per-day limit is unfair to Westerners, esp to BC ,Oregon, Washington state & California residents. Unless we're insomniacs, the dice of the day's debate are loaded against us. Would like to see some proportional representation system worked out to redress this imbalance. You c o u l d place a ceiling upon the number of postings by an (excuse the term) individual per day. db

↑ Index

702. Mark Prejsnar
Re: New party, etc
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Kristin--

You may be overgeneralizing from your local experience...Some NP chapters seem to be less exclusively "intellectuals" than the one you've encountered..But that's just as impression. Certainly I'll say this: the day I replied to Kent's initial posting, I happened to get a call from a NP person, a rather arrogant and ignorant fellow, practising what was well-critiqued in a Nation article a year or two ago as "boiler-room leftism"--i.e. "We don't care what you feel or believe or if you're an activist or want to be...Just give us a bunch of your spare money, preferably enough to be a paper member of our organization." He actually read to me from his little sheet that they have ten thousand members and hope to have 20,000 within a year...Needless to say, all but 200 or 300 of these are on paper, not active, just as with DSA. So I think I can agree with you and others who have suggested that the NP is very likely to have problems. I ESPECIALLY agree with your comment that without a legal victory in the fusion case before the Supreme COurt right now they won't have that well-grounded a tactical approach, and will falter..

I'm very excited about your comments re the Labor Party, Kristin; the things you write about their presence and activities in Philly are very encouraging indeed..Thanx for the comments and information

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

↑ Index

703. Michael Magee
Re: who is social, etc.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Henry wrote: "In my view individuality is not a phenomenon in isolation, & has never been described as such in classical philosophy, as Mark claims. "Man is the civic animal." (Aristotle) "Man is the companionable animal." (Dante) How's that for classics? But the reification (in ideology) of "social forces" to the point of nullifying the sense of individuality seems way off base to me. The whole trend of our century has been toward these totalizing ideas and against the concept of the Person."

I'd agree, and add that the emphasis of the "civic" which Henry cites has at least as dubious a history as any emphasis of individuality one can find. It accounts for what Cornel West has called "the metaphysical residues in Marx: the Hegelian-inspired penchant toward totalizing history, universalizing collectivities, and simplifying emancipation." I'd suggest that one doesn't have to have a unified sense of the individual in order to reject these "metaphysical residues," residues which I think have been profoundly harmful to both "individuals" and their various collectives.

-Mike.

↑ Index

704. henry gould
Re: who is social, etc.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

I canna resist emphasizing a little further. If you deny individuality exists in the writing process, you might as well deny the importance or even existence of individuality per se. Is this what you're saying?

Nothing personal - but I find this a malignant doctrine. Deny the existence of the individual & you might as well start the train cars rolling for the camps. Nothing personal - I sense from M & J's posts over the years that you are both young serious-minded fellows of good character & strong feeling & ideals - maybe you even look alike!!! But this retread of the negation of the human individual comes from reading too many books in political science, fellas. & you is wrong.

Now please don't accuse me of heatin' up the rhetoric, cause I ain't. I just look at Stalinism & Fascism & all manner of superior authoritarian- isms & hear the same noises. & I agree in advance that Individualism could also become some kinda twisted anti-human ideology. & profit & property have justified their stealth on half-notions of the individual. But don't throw out the BABY with the... - Henry G.

↑ Index

705. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Misc. Proj.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---

while decentering "this" subject in the bar of the Atlanta Colony Square Sheraton the other day "I" was handed the first two copies of a publication titled _Misc. Proj._ by a congeries of social forces identified as Mark Prejsnar. Read same on plane back to San Ho, and want to commend them to your collective and perhaps occasionally individual attentions. #1 includes some intriguing poetry by one "Cal Taubman" who may or may not be a real "person" but whose poems I liked much -- also Mark's reviews of two recent Sun & Moon anthologies and several journals and web sites. #2 ("incomprehension is the subtitle") has some good Mark P. poems, the journal watch & "surfing for poetry" features and other delectables --

$3.50 will get you a four issue sub. to this newsletter (you don't have to fly to Atlnata to get it as I did, at least "I" think "I" got it) -- address is:

Misc. Proj.
c/o Prejsnar
641 N. Highland Ave. N.E.
#11
Atlanta, GA 30306

↑ Index

706. Mark Weiss
Re: who is social, etc.
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Here's a plea from a guy named Mark: there's more than one of us out here. Please use a last initial (or an honorific title or heroic attribute) to identify. I got an instant case of heartburn from the following. I bet this applies to other names as well.

At 01:25 PM 4/21/97 EDT, you wrote:
>The position opened by Jeff & enlarged upon by Mark is one I have a hard >time understanding! Of course there's been a ton of critical theory >on the "place" where the "subject" swerves off into ambiguity, or the >Other, or the self-contradictory; and in a time of "identity politics" >as well as commodified "personal" poetry, the idea that the individual >is not only not important but does not exist holds, I suppose, a certain >gleam of provocative interest. Moreover, as I understand the poetic >process, it's certainly not just a matter of "self-expression" or >self-imitation - it's an exploratory breaking-down & reconfiguring.
>"You must lose yourself to find yourself", as the proverb goes.
>
>But how does this theory relate, say, to the news report this week, >who knows how accurate it is, about a recent scientific study that >advances the notion that the skills which activate human intelligence >are instilled by age one & based on the amount of spoken interaction >the child has with loving parents? I suppose you could read this >either way - but what does it mean for Mark's "power of social ideology" >if the child is primed for it by age one?
>
>In my view individuality is not a phenomenon in isolation, & has never been >described as such in classical philosophy, as Mark claims. "Man is the >civic animal." (Aristotle) "Man is the companionable animal." (Dante) >How's that for classics? But the reification (in ideology) of "social >forces" to the point of nullifying the sense of individuality seems >way off base to me. The whole trend of our century has been toward these >totalizing ideas and against the concept of the Person. My own PERSONAL >viewpoint is that individuality is the GIST, the very TASTE of the SALT OF >THE EARTH which brings the DIGNITY of the PERSON to the POINT, the ESSENCE >of political efficacy & meaning - and that this DIGNITY of the HUMAN PERSON >is the shadow of the DIVINE ANALOGY which the unity of the HUMAN RACE >displays in all its glory. HUMANITY is the living MANIFESTATION of the >DIVINE IMAGE. Thank you, & good night. & don't leave out the dolphins, neither
>- Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

707. Mark Weiss
Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Yr right, and I'll amend: I love the use of naive as a pejorative.

At 02:12 PM 4/21/97 +1000, you wrote:
>At 10:33 AM 4/21/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>>Silly me. I've always thought that, though I live in the social world, blah >>blah blah, how I make my way through it might be different, individual, even >>if there's no such person as the unsocialized urperson. To say that all of >>my significant movements are in detail socially determined sounds an awful >>lot like recycled calvinism. This may be naive (I love the use of naive as >>an expletive).
>
>
>does expletive mean simply pejorative? i didn't think so. i thought it had >a more specific meaning which wd make the term "naive" not an expletive.
>can some etymologist or grammarian explain what, exactly, an expletive is?
>
>

↑ Index

708. George Bowering
Re: no no nanook(ie)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

> As a general rule, Maria, I try to stay out of places where Canadians are dropping their pants.
>
> Rachel L.

Yeah, that's what you say NOW. Bromige told me about Granby, Quebec. So you got to see the boxers with the little anchor design, eh?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

709. Susan Wheeler
Romana Huk
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Romana, if you're on-list, would you email me directly? I'm off list temporarily and can't find your address. Thanks.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]

37 Washington Square West #10A
New York, New York 10011
[redacted] phone/fax

↑ Index

710. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> At 10:33 AM 4/21/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
> >Silly me. I've always thought that, though I live in the social world, blah > >blah blah, how I make my way through it might be different, individual, even > >if there's no such person as the unsocialized urperson. To say that all of > >my significant movements are in detail socially determined sounds an awful > >lot like recycled calvinism. This may be naive (I love the use of naive as > >an expletive).
>
> does expletive mean simply pejorative? i didn't think so. i thought it had > a more specific meaning which wd make the term "naive" not an expletive.
> can some etymologist or grammarian explain what, exactly, an expletive is?

OK:
expletive. n. 1. An exclamation or oath, especially one that is profane or obscene. 2a. A word or phrase added to a line of verse or a sentence in order to ease syntax or rhythm but not to add any meaning. b. a word that stands in place of and anticipates a following word or phrase; for example, the word _it_ is an expletive in the sentence _It is nice to see you._
~adj. Also expletory. Added or inserted in order to fill out something, such as a metrical line or a sentence. [Late Latin _expletivus_,from Latin _expletus_, past participle of _explere_, to fill out' _ex-_, out + plere, to fill.

[Tormont Webster's Illust. Encyclopedic Dict.]
How's them apples?
[or,
"A former pletive--like, a former pletive spaghetti." --Iron Jay]

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

711. P.Standard Schaefer
Re: Talisman
Mon 21 Apr 1997

ED FOSTER

Talisman House Publishers
PO Box 3157
Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

tel[redacted]
fax[redacted]

↑ Index

712. David Kellogg
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Mon 21 Apr 1997

On Mon, 21 Apr 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> Chris--
>
> The Ern Malley Affair / Michael Heyward.
> London : Faber & Faber, 1993.
> currently in print in the U.S. in a Faber paperback for $12.95, according > to Books-in-Print.

And it's a great story, and well told too.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted] http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg/

There is no mantle
and it does not descend.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

713. Philip Mead
Re: Perloff on Yasusada
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Heyward's book is strong on archival and original research, but not so strong on readings of the poems and the cultural signficance of Malley. See my review article: "Cultural Pathology: What Ern Malley Means," _Australian Literary Studies_ 17.1 (May 1995): 83-88. If this is difficult for any interested US readers to track down, please backchannel to me personally.

Philip

> The Ern Malley Affair / Michael Heyward.
> London : Faber & Faber, 1993.
> currently in print in the U.S. in a Faber paperback for $12.95, according to Books-in-Print.
>
> your friendly librarian poet,
>
> Mark Prejsnar
> Atlanta
>
> On Mon, 21 Apr 1997, Christopher Alexander wrote:
>
> Philip wwrott:
> "Ern Malley" became, and remains, a kind of rallying point for radical modernist, postmodern and avant-garde writing in Australia. For the moralising anti-modernists of mid-century Australian literature, Ern Malley > represents the the possibility of an entirely amoral art. (Max Harris was prosecuted for pusblishing obscene material, that is, poetry of indeterminate meaning.) In a chapter I'm currently writing, I argue that in > fact Malley becomes the _authentic_ origin of Australian (post)modernism.
>
> I wonder if you (or anyone, really) can direct those of us > who are not familiar with the Ern Malley affair (which > does have a distinctly Victorian ring, thus put) to a few > salient (primary &/or secondary) sources. I assume there's > a lot of writing on this one out there, somewhere, but > possibly in more fugitive publications, & so not, for instance, > indexed in the MLA database.

>
> Chris
> ..
> christopher alexander, etc. / nominative press collective
> *[redacted] / ********************************

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

Hey!!
Now Available for a mere $4:
constellation voice by linda russo

>>>

like that -- as a compilation, from my perspective, of forms of language & experience that resembled in traditional contexts what Rimbaud projected as the "absolutely modern." And the term "technicians of the sacred," which I came away with, gave me something to think about -- alternately with fear & wonder.

Anyway, this to say I read you with interest in this strange medium.

With best,

Jerome Rothenberg
[redacted]

↑ Index

715. Gabrielle Welford
The Implications of Public Policy (fwd)
Mon 21 Apr 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 14 Apr 1997 15:34:46 -0700 (PDT)
From: APIHIN - Dong Suh <[redacted]>

Blink, Grandma, Please..."
By Andrew Lam, Pacific News Service

"Please, Grandma, blink, just blink, please," my mother says, but Grandma only smiles. Then she says, "Bye, bye," her wheelchair gleaming in the sunlight. "Bye, bye." It is all the English that she remembers.

"Alright, Grandma," I say, taking over, "if blinking's too hard, try to nod. Nod, please, it's important. Very important."

We hold our breaths and wait. Nothing. No blink, no nod. Only that constant beatific smile. My mother finally throws her hands up and sighs. "This is it. We are doomed."

Grandma must learn to blink or nod her head at the right time. If she fails to do so in front the officer from the Immigration and Naturalization Service, she may die.

I am not exaggerating. Without the much coveted U.S. citizenship, she'll be cut off from the health care that had kept her alive for the last decade.

Blink, grandma, please.

The problem is that Grandma's once sharp mind has dwindled to that of an infant, peppered with sporadic moments of lucidity. She's 87, diabetic and severely senile. Since a stroke left her partially paralyzed several years ago, she has resided in a convalescent home where attendants regularly measure her blood and inject the insulin she needs.

As a legal immigrant who has lived here for more than two decades, she is qualified for U.S. citizenship. In 1994 Congress passed a law that exempted seriously disabled immigrants from English proficiency and civics requirements. Then, last month, the INS issued new rules removing that exemption. The INS says it will be flexible about ways that these immigrants can take the oath. Blinking or nodding, they say, will suffice.

But what seems to the INS an easy, even a charitable solution is more like cruel and unusual punishment to mentally handicapped immigrants. How can a person suffering Alzheimer's disease nod at the right moment? Can you teach a mentally retarded child to blink, pretending to understand that he's taking an oath? And can people in comas or completely gone into their own worlds possibly grasp that a single gesture has such enormous significance.

The situation would be sardonically funny in a play or movie -- Samuel Beckett, I should think, or perhaps Stanley Kubrick. But this is not make-believe; this is the new American reality for hundreds of thousands of immigrant families like mine.

Blink, grandma, please.

Of course, if Grandma is thrown out of the convalescent home she will be far from a life on the street: we take care of our own. But how well? And how long? My parents are not rich. They worked for decades to achieve a modest middle class life, complete with a home in the suburbs. But they are both in their late 60s and can't possibly perform round-the-clock care - let alone medical duties.

It comes down to this: If Grandma fails to blink at the right time she will not become an American citizen. Then the government may take away her health care. If that happens, my parents may have to sell their home, the sum of their labor, to pay for her medical treatment. Then after all the money's gone, what?

Blink, grandma, please.

This woman, gray haired, smiling in the sunlight, survived two wars in Vietnam. She had seen enough horrors to last ten lifetimes -- including having her home bombed twice by American planes. She raised four children on her own when her husband died at the age of 34 and, after we fled to America 22 years ago, babysat her grandchildren, cooked and cleaned.

In her mid seventies, she decided to go back to school to study English. "Never give up," she often told her grandchildren, "when there is still work you must finish it."

Her strong values passed down to three generations, all now hard-working Americans. But in her twilight, my grandmother is faced with something she can not possibly fight: The banal bureaucracy of the U.S. government.

Blink, grandma, please.

Last year, some of my aunts and uncles voted for Proposition 187, the "anti-illegal immigrant initiative," hoping to draw the line between legal and illegal. But they soon discovered that line did not hold. It has becomes clear to us all that the anti-immigrant purge makes no such distinctions and is going after the weakest link -- the aged immigrants, those who could not vote, or have no public voice. But will it stop there?

If we are ready to force retarded and senile immigrants to blink and nod before we care for them, then we ourselves have already shut our eyes. As anti-immigrant sentiment grows, we no longer recognize ourselves as a nation of immigrants. When a society hides behind bureaucracy to do its dirty work the only logical outcome is cruelty.

"OK, grandma, let's pretend I'm the American officer, " I say. "when I read you the oath, you blink or nod, OK? Try it." But Grandma only smiles. "Bye, bye," she says. She seems so small and frail and far away, fading into nothingness under glaring California sunlight. "Bye, bye."

COPYRIGHT PACIFIC NEWS SERVICE
[redacted]
450 Mission Street, Room 204
San Francisco, CA 94105
[redacted]

↑ Index

716. Charles Alexander
chax site
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Dear Poetics Folk:

Chax Press now has a web site which can be found at http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

It's brand new. Most of the kinks have been worked out, but on 3 of the 9 pages there are several images which take some time to download -- hopefully not enough time to go & get a cup of coffee.

Anyone (Loss, Chris Alexander, Pierre, others?) who wants to make a link, please do. I've linked to some of you, but am open to other suggestions as well.

The first 10 people ordering books from the web site, via email, will be given a 50% discount on orders. Prices are on the site. I'll let you know whether or not you were among the first ten.

Also announcing:

a new book:

The Tongue Moves Talk
by Karen Mac Cormack
$11 plus $2 shipping & handling

But all ordering from Poetics before May 10 may have this book for $9, including shipping & handling.
More details about the book are on the web site.

And please email responses to this offer directly to me at [redacted]

From now until the middle of next week I have my poetics set on nomail.

charles alexander
charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

717. KENT JOHNSON
hasta la vista
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Joel Kuszai informs me that there is something wrong with my server and that I probably haven't been receiving most of the list postings for the past number of days. So if any of my messages have appeared more than once, I do apologize--I haven't seen but one or two of my own appear in the past week or so.

I'm going to unsub for a while and try to flounder through until semester's and summer term's end, but I can be reached (I hope!) backchannel. For what it's worth, the thing about "feeling sorry for the class collaborationists" was just a silly comment. I happen to have become in my mid-years that lowest form of homo-politicus: an armchair social-democrat.

And by the way, David B and George B, I've given up on trying to decode your postings--tantalizing clues, but I now understand that the key is too buried and beyond my reach. You guys are just plain good.

Kent

↑ Index

718. Brent Long
Frank Stanford
Mon 21 Apr 1997

Anybody familiar with Frank Stanford's work? If so, please reply. I have written a web page about him and am interested in hearing from others who have read his work, or who know people affiliated with the Lost Roads Project.

↑ Index

719. David Israel
(no subject)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Jerry R. addresses Henry G. --

> ...Anyway, this to say I read you with interest in this strange medium.

I've been reading Henry w/ interest in this strange medium, too -- the chap keeps saying notable stuff.

Seems one might infer, JR, you're new to the mode (& presumably, to the Poetics listserv); -- ergo, as a bystander to the immediate exchange but withal a denizen of the deep [according to a now-current trope, by some semi-consensus anyway] -- I'l presume to say: welcome!

best,
d.i.

(p.s.: As for Eliade, the most influential / interesting book, for me, has been The Myth of the Eternal Return; -- ceratinly influenced, for instance, ways in which I understood the work of Meredith Monk & those of her ilk.)

↑ Index

720. dbkk
Re: lodging for Poetry and the Public Sphere
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Dear Charles, I hope you find somewhere to stay at the Rutgers conference, but your message posted publicly in error failed to say anything mean about either Bob Perelman or Alan Golding! You owe all of us on the Poetics List a second apology for failing to provide us with the ultimate frisson de la net.

> Dear Kathy:
>
> At the last minute here my lodging plans seem to be collapsing. I was going to stay with friends in Philadelphia & commute by train. But now (I won't go into all the reasons) that seems to be impossible.

> Bob Perelman has offered me space in his hotel room

HERE WAS YOUR CHANCE TO SAY--"I would rather eat carpet tacks than share a hotel room with Bob Perelman."

with Alan Golding, >pending Alan's assent. I'm willing to take a pallet on a floor, or even >just a floor if it comes to that. And of course I will contribute my share.
>I have emailed Alan asking him

HERE WAS YOUR CHANCE TO SAY, --"But Alan is so cheap he begrudges even the price of an e-mail, and his prostate has become so enlarged I fear he will step on me during one of his fifty trips to the bathroom during each long New Jersey night."

Oops, I had better stop now, I'm getting into this too much, and speak as a fond admirer of Alan, Bob and Charles,

Good luck everyone,
XXX Kevin Killian

↑ Index

721. Miekal And Re: Frank Stanford
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Brent Long wrote:
>
> Anybody familiar with Frank Stanford's work? If so, please reply. I > have written a web page about him and am interested in hearing from > others who have read his work, or who know people affiliated with the > Lost Roads Project.

Just a quik yah to Frank Stanford's longpoem You, which I remember reading in the late 70s, & damn if Ive even seen another copy of it again since then. Still in print?

Miekal

who lubs & snarks in the background as spring has popped, & someone has to choose between getting the trees in the ground or being boiled & canned in this otherworld listserv....

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:

http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

722. rsillima
Two thoughts
Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

1) Has anyone of late thought to mention what a terrific series Sylvester Pollet's Backwoods Broadsides is? If not, let me be the first. Real chapbooks on a single sheet of paper (and without seeming crowded). Many are by poets who are simultaneously widely published but genuinely underappreciated (Enslin, Rochelle Owens, Bern Porter, Anne Tardos, Andrew Schelling, Schwerner coming up soon).

2) Has anyone else noted the genuinely bad start with which the Cubs began their year? I have a theory, called "The Curse of George Will." My evidence is that the Cubs were unable to win until after the big Ginsberg memorial at Temple Emmanuel in San Francisco was complete. The Cubs' minor league teams also have the worst cumulative record in baseball. Jack Spicer would have appreciated this form of torture.

Ron Silliman

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

When this you see
Remember me

↑ Index

723. Michael Boughn
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

The Present Is a Boat
--for David and Gail Matlin

"folded deep into the science of invisibility

synonym for men and women

--David Matlin, Dressed in Protective Fashion

"No man has any longer, the permission of maintaining the armor of his distance. The thing must be dragged into the light. The wheels of the sun must be unstuck."

--Charles Olson, "History" (1952)

"Sometimes the ship was replaced by a plough, and the rustic ceremony of Plough Monday in England is a relic of the same religious rite performed in honour of the Teutonic Isis."

--Sabine Baring-Gould, Curious Myths of the Middle Ages

The present is a boat, in which flies gather, and yet there is room for more, distance that is, to get away from all things coming into their own, bumping even into their husks left from before, the former time serving as tenebrous sea for the sluggish movement of differentiation, what puts us, the rowers, in phase at last, & without wine or sex, the pleasure of being heard after all the din has ceased, history made small, cut out of all this here to make sail.

--John Clarke, In the Analogy, Book 2

↑ Index

724. Michael Magee
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Dale wrote: "I'm sure one's will consists of more than only social conditioning. But even if it didn't, that would be all the more reason for the individual to engage the world with all of his or her idiosyncratic, chaotic, and impulsive gestures."

One more Creeley quote (I've been reading his essays) in reference to this: "I want to give witness not to the thought of myself - that specious concept of identity - but, rather, to what I am as simple agency, a thing evidently alive by virtue of such activity."

That seems about right to me.

-Mike.

↑ Index

725. Pierre Joris
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

henry wrote:
>
> Agent, yeah. How many of you know that poet extraordinaire some say father > of the english pentameter was a secret agent? Christopher Marlowe.
> We may not be individuals, Mark of D.C. & Jeff of Minneysnapolis, > but we're all agents under the cloak. How about that for a lurkers > moniker? Agent. I'm just listening in: I'm an agent.
> - Henry Bigmouth of Smallstate (not a gent, neither. a-gent)

& when is someone going to reprint Muriel Rukeyser's _The Traces of thomas Harriot_ which has gorgeous chapters on said Chris Marlowe & the unfunny end he came to. --Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

726. henry gould
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Mon, 21 Apr 1997 15:02:05 -0700 Mark Weiss said:
>Here's a plea from a guy named Mark: there's more than one of us out here.
>Please use a last initial (or an honorific title or heroic attribute) to >identify. I got an instant case of heartburn from the following.
>I bet this applies to other names as well.

O.k., Mark of the Junction.
- Henry of the Brown

(as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure? Brown, Brown, Brown.")

↑ Index

727. henry gould
Re: Two thoughts
Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

second the motion on the Backwoods series. A great idea & very well- produced. We're thinking of following suit down here in the (little) city.

- Henry of Providence

↑ Index

728. henry gould
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997 07:13:14 -0400 Michael Magee said:
>
>One more Creeley quote (I've been reading his essays) in reference to >this: "I want to give witness not to the thought of myself - that specious >concept of identity - but, rather, to what I am as simple agency, a thing >evidently alive by virtue of such activity."
>
>That seems about right to me.

There is an article in today's NY Times science section about biologists' take on the concept of the self. Unsurprisingly, they see it as a deep- seated social survival mechanism (by deep-seated I mean back to the membrane separating individual amoebae). They also differentiate between cold-blooded reptiles, which have a basically defensive, passive response to environment, & mammals, whose warm-bloodedness allows for more initiative & creativity.

As far as humans go, they focus on the symbiosis of self & social environment; the stronger the sense of individuality, the more complex & "successful" the survival in the community. There's more but I just skimmed it.

Remember Joe Poet, or was it Josephine? The one who always pushed to the front of the line at the open mike & read his poem about how he felt after he stubbed his toe on a fire hydrant & what it meant for his neighborhood, city, nation, cosmos? Remember? Remember? God, his poems were lousy.

Mandelstam talks about poetry as a surging force, pre-existing. & yet particularly in his Voronezh poems (a new translation, _Voronezh Notebooks_ from Bloodaxe Bks, is out there. Mandelstam is the greatest) the "lyric" is personal, personal, wild, wild, personal, surviving voice, surviving challenging & submitting to & condemning his coyote-enemy, Stalin.

I think the practice of any kind of work for any length of time brings anonymity - the ego getting caught up in the form of the work - but I think his denial of self here is a little... uh.... oh shut up for a while, Henry [Blarnes here]... Henry, go draft a mule & join the ass-backwards brigade [Spandrift talkin]... ok. ok. guys. I'm gonna shut muh trap for three days & then rise from the keyboard. [Gould]

↑ Index

729. Rachel Loden

Re: no no nanook(ie)

Tue 22 Apr 1997

George Bowering wrote:

> Yeah, that's what you say NOW. Bromige told me about Granby, Quebec. So you got to see the boxers with the little anchor design, eh?

Nah. But I guess we know who DID get a good hard look at them.

Rachel

↑ Index

730. Dale Smith

Re: divine continued

Tue 22 Apr 1997

Mark Wallace-
You wrote:

> The history of the individual is directly tied to the history of economic and racial exploitation that marks the history of capitalism; "individuality" becomes the basis for a class of owners to manipulate workers in the name of the "individual's" freedom to seize resources (a process usually referred to as "the right to make a profit"). The "individual" posits a notion of human beings as self-contained, discrete, brought into existence by a divine declaration, and not responsible to anyting beyond their own individuality.
>
> I see nothing in the process of creation that is "individual," if one means by that self-contained, discrete, and in any sense absolute rather than provisional. Creativity emerges in responsiveness, contact, that place where the human mind finds itself not singular and individual

> but IN RELATION TO THE WORLD.
>
> There are no individuals--I guess I'm going to have to say that again.

Why should a concept of the individual necessarily be the "creation of something divine?" Also, what is troubling about positing "'MAN' as the centralized authority over all experience?" And why do the above descriptions of the "individual" seem so flat, dissected, and clinical? Why do you narrowly label the individual as something "self-contained, discrete, and in any sense absolute rather than provisional?" And if Capitalism still exists, how did the individual slip away, if the individual, as you mention, is a construction by which Capital perpetuates itself? In such a society, it seems that the lyric voice of personal suffering would offer a more valid proof of individual struggle in the face of mounting opposition. Personally, I think Capital needs the concepts of the social in order to flatten the greater dimensions of the individual. Social constructions erase deeper, more ancient impulses, wherever they come from, in order to pacify the present capitalist structure.

I do not like using this kind of highfallutin, distant and conceptual language. But what you, Mark Wallace lack, as well as myself in this instance, is personal testimony, concrete examples, a language dedicated, like good poetry, to the contradictions and myriad pressures of experience. Maybe there is a place in philosophy for this kind of language. But I do not understand the benefit, indeed the truth, in your statement, "there are no individuals."

Dale

↑ Index

731. David W. Clippinger
talisman
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Talisman address:

Ed Foster
Talisman
Box 3157
Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

All best,
David Clippinger

↑ Index

732. Sylvester Pollet
Re: lubbers
Tue 22 Apr 1997

I like lubber, lubbing. "What'd you do today, dear?" "Lubbed." But then I had another brilliant idea--ask that group to name themselves. Great paradox, as none can propose a name without leaving the group! Hah! sp

> So that one might well hail: "Ahoy there, ye listlubbers!" As the list lists, to starboard or port, ask these ex-lurkers to rush to place their weight on the side thats lifting out of the water. Well done, Aldon. But will language prove amenable to a good idea, after years of practice? db

↑ Index

733. Jeff Hansen
(no subject)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

henry gould <[redacted]> writes:

I canna resist emphasizing a little further. If you deny individuality exists in the writing process, you might as well deny the importance or even existence of individuality per se. Is this what you're saying?

Nothing personal - but I find this a malignant doctrine. Deny the existence of the individual & you might as well start the train cars rolling for the camps. Nothing personal - I sense from M & J's posts over the years that you are both young serious-minded fellows of good character & strong feeling & ideals - maybe you even look alike!!! But this retread of the negation of the human individual comes from reading too many books in political science, fellas. & you is wrong.

Now please don't accuse me of heatin' up the rhetoric, cause I ain't. I just look at Stalinism & Fascism & all manner of superior authoritarian- isms & hear the same noises. & I agree in advance that Individualism could also become some kinda twisted anti-human ideology. & profit & property have justified their stealth on half-notions of the individual. But don't throw out the BABY with the... - Henry G.

I better respond to this one. Whoa!

1. Mark W. discussed individualism and the Western tradition. My use of the term is different than his: I think of "individualism" in its current manifestation, as emanating from certain strains of Romanticism, the most obvious example of which is Coleridge's "Kubla Khan." I agree that individualism is not around, at least not in the same form, in earlier periods.

2. Henry--any ideology can be used to send people to death camps. My guess is that more people have been killed in the names of Karl Marx and Jesus Christ than in the names of all the rest of humanity combined. Both were more interested in liberation than repression. The tyrants grab hold of any ideology that will work and use it to hurt. Let's not fool ourselves: ideas for tyrants are not as important as they are for us thinking types. For them, they are no different than a brick, baton, bullet or bomb.

3. I believe in improvisation, transfiguration, torquing, twisting, and altering given social materials. Some of the materials forge us -- the ones we forget -- and some we act upon. If you want to call this work individualism, be my guest (as Conrad Hilton would say.)

4. Funny to find myself here -- in graduate school my interest in pragmatist philosophy, before the big resurgence in John Dewey studies, caused me to be called "naive" by Continental theory heads who didn't think I was taking the "Death of the Author" far enough.

5. Five years ago, Mark Wallace and I began a dialogue with the clause "there is no such think as Language" as a way of critiquing the totalizing and structuralist tendencies of much of Continental Theory. We advocated the messiness of languages, plural, instead.

6. Henry -- It follows from 5 that you're aiming at the wrong "culprits." Find the "real" ones.

7. About babies and temperments -- of course there is something natural here. I've been around too many to believe in tabula rasa. Then again, it's a long walk from genetic predisposition to Romantic Individualism.

8. No hard feelings -- i luv it when the rhetoric heats up. Let down your hair and drop trousers, gang!

Best,

Jeff

P.S. Neither Mark nor I intend on trying to send people to death camps any time soon. Nor do we plan on aiding any individual or regime who does attempt to do so. In fact, our tendency would be to oppose such an individual or regime. I can only speak for myself on this one, but I would do so by any means necessary.

↑ Index

734. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Two thoughts
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Thanks, Ron. The two latest have just gone out, #26 A Real Toad, by Jennifer Craig Pixley (the allusion to Marianne Moore recently discussed) and #27 Between Ourselves, by Peter Money. July will bring Zwyczaj/Mark Nowak, and Family Tree/Mary de Rachewiltz. October, Armand Schwerner & Amiri Baraka. Anyone on the list can have a free sample (they sell for a buck apiece ppd.) or subscribe for $10. Sylvester Pollet RR 5 Box 3630 Ellsworth ME 04605.

> 1) Has anyone of late thought to mention what a terrific series Sylvester Pollet's Backwoods Broadsides is? If not, let me be the first. Real chapbooks on a single sheet of paper (and without seeming crowded). Many are by poets who are simultaneously widely published but genuinely underappreciated (Enslin, Rochelle Owens, Bern Porter, Anne Tardos, Andrew Schelling, Schwerner coming up soon).
>
> 2) Has anyone else noted the genuinely bad start with which the Cubs began their year? I have a theory, called "The Curse of George Will." My evidence is that the Cubs were unable to win until after the big Ginsberg memorial at Temple Emmanuel in San Francisco was complete. The Cubs' minor league teams also have the worst cumulative record in baseball. Jack Spicer would have appreciated this form of torture.
>
> Ron Silliman
>
> Ron Silliman When this you see
> 262 Orchard Road Remember me
> Paoli, PA 19301-1116
> [redacted]
> [redacted] (o)
> [redacted] (fax)
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

735. henry gould
(no subject)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997 08:17:49 -0500 Jeff Hansen said:
>
>2. Henry--any ideology can be used to send people to death camps. My >guess is that more people have been killed in the names of Karl Marx >and Jesus Christ than in the names of all the rest of humanity >combined. Both were more interested in liberation than repression.

>The tyrants grab hold of any ideology that will work and use it to >hurt. Let's not fool ourselves: ideas for tyrants are not as >important as they are for us thinking types. For them, they are no >different than a brick, baton, bullet or bomb.

This is a very important point. But you have to be an individual to stand up to them.
>
>5. Five years ago, Mark Wallace and I began a dialogue with the clause
>"there is no such think as Language" as a way of critiquing the >totalizing and structuralist tendencies of much of Continental Theory.
>We advocated the messiness of languages, plural, instead.

I agree with you guys there. There is no such thing as language. See my 400 pp. post on the Language Chat List for further extended commentary on this position.
>
>7. About babies and temperments -- of course there is something >natural here. I've been around too many to believe in tabula rasa.
>Then again, it's a long walk from genetic predisposition to Romantic >Individualism.

But it's an even longer stretch from Romantic Individualism to McDonald's in Dinkytown. And an even LONGER stretch from there to what you guys said:
"the individual does not exist."
>
>P.S. Neither Mark nor I intend on trying to send people to death camps >any time soon. Nor do we plan on aiding any individual or regime who >does attempt to do so. In fact, our tendency would be to oppose such an >individual or regime. I can only speak for myself on this one, but I >would do so by any means necessary.

A word (in non-language) to the entire list: see how I get people talkin? Just accuse them of sending people to camps! (I learned this at boy scout camp) - the temporarily non-existent Henry Gould

↑ Index

736. Brent Long
(no subject)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Thank you, Henry!

↑ Index

737. Mark Wallace

"the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?

Tue 22 Apr 1997

Mark Weiss, Henry Gould and others:

Thanks for your lively responses to my recent post. I'm sorry to have to continue to argue with you here.

Mark: Quite simply, to say that one is socially constructed says nothing about one's ability to respond to social constructedness, and to effect change. Rather, one might construct a social notion of that field of activity reduced to the term "individual" as a SOCIAL site where various kinds of social activities are focused and rearranged. As M. Magee (do I have this name right?) points out, there is already a history of literary discussion of this kind of social activity of the human. I would suggest also the work of ERVING GOFFMAN, who in books like SOCIAL INTERACTION and others works very particularly with the notion of what he calls "face work," constructing in the process an idea of human identity as a series of responsive gestures to social phenomena, gestures that can include many types of resistance, rewriting, and possibility. But none of these possibilities are EXTRA-SOCIAL; rather, Goffman's idea is that "personality" (choose what word you will) is this SERIES OF PERFORMATIVE SOCIAL CHOICES).

Henry: I appreciate your appreciation of my "youthful seriousness"--I'd thank you for your "adult seriousness" if I was sure that you were any older than I am. Perhaps I should have been more particular in my detailing of philsophical history; yes, it's true that Greek philosphy does not create the modern notion of the individual. I think it's more traditional to start with Descartes in this regard, moving up through Kant, etc. But I'm not sure I want to go into details here. Rather, it seems to me that in such phrases as "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race," and "individuality is the gist" and "humanity is the living manifestation of the divine image" simply repeats the western history of a coercive "center elsewhere" that posits its goal of reducing all difference to the sameness of "individuality" in the name of a divinity to which it claims access. I have no problems with considering the possibilities in the sacred, per se: rather, I have intense problems with the philosophy and cultural critique you launch in the name of a divinity which you understand as "unity," but in which I see no presence of any unity.

As to whether one goes to news reports for the details of scientific surveys (and indeed whether one goes to such surveys as the authoritative source on what constitutes the life of the human (I do NOT say individual), I'll leave it up to you to decide whether or not those sources are disinterested and trusthworthy, or biased by social factors.

But again, thanks for your response on this; it's made clear to me that our differences here are profound.

My apologies for my inability, on this modem, to correct typos.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

738. amato
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

henry, your last remarks about the individual struck me as perfectly appropriate for earth day!... in any case, and not to sound at all aloof here, i can't really see the controversy i've been reading re invidual VS. social -- henry, jeff, mark, others -- to the extent that recourse to the social, even in the hands of somebody like foucault, need not do away with human agency... sure, agency would seem to take a beating, as it were, when one considers any larger, group context, esp. in historical terms (whether social or ecological)... of course there is a sense that one is already written, even as one writes, owing largely to the social dimension of language practices...

but, but the question of the individual is surely a matter of continual negotiation, yes? (sorry for this word, btw, "negotiation"---it's a bit too fashionable, too currency-driven perhaps, but i'll stick with it)... in fact, one could say that the self, whatever it is or they are, is always in the midst of processes of self-negotiation (by which i do mean to invoke some cognitive processing too)... you get human agency, and the creative, in the work of raymond williams, just as you get it in dewey... you get individual agency in bateson, even as you get it in spivak...

what one does with one's sense of agency, or individuality, is another matter... i suppose, setting aside empirical research, this is what most interests me---what our obligations, responsibilities, possibilities are as individual agencies (and as a species) who are so caught up in our various social-ecological-cosmic (to be just a bit oracular here) settings... which opens more to that other thread---"what is white?"---and could open into another, more eco/onto-oriented thread too---what is human?... but you really can't ask one question, i think, without reflecting on the other, esp. when you consider that, in the u.s. not all that long ago, those who were non-white were "officially" considered by many to be non or sub-human, and surely not full-fledged "citizens"...

i mean, it's in bringing ourselves to ourselves, whatever we are and whoever we think we are---as anything but a solipsistic gesture---that things get complicated, no?...

anyway, happy earth day, folks, and a belated happy passover!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

739. Douglas
new Sun & Moon titles
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Sun & Moon Press is happy to announce the publication of three new titles, which, as usual, we will offer those on the Poetics List a 20% discount.

NOTHING THE SUN CANNOT EXPLAIN: 20 CONTEMPORARY BRAZILIAN POETS, edited by Michael Palmer, R►gis Bonvicino and Nelson Ascher, with a Foreword
by Joao Almino.

Contains work by 20 younger Brazilian poets, including Duda Machado, Paulo Leminski, R►gis Bonvicino, Arnaldo Antunes, and Claudia Roquette-Pinto. Bi-lingual, English and Portuguese. 312 pages, $15.95. This is the second of Sun & Moon's International Anthology series.

FRAME (1971-1990), by Barrett Watten.

Finally comes the long-awaited collection of the work of Barrett Watten, including OPERA--WORKS, DECAY, 1-10, PLASMA/PARALLELES/"X," COMPLETE THOUGHT, CONDUIT, and the previously uncollected texts, CITY FIELDS and FRAME.
Paperback $13.95 (336 pages).

THE CRITIC AS ARTIST, by Oscar Wilde
The third offering of Green Interger's series of prose writings, Wilde's great essay is as fresh today as it was upon its original publication in 1888. $9.95

As usual, you can order directly through E-Mail at [redacted] or [redacted] or through our E-mail on our website: www.sunmoon.com

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

740. nuyopoman
http://poetry.miningco.com
Tue 22 Apr 1997

I seem to have become a miner, like my grandfather.

A Jew in New York

Like everybody else, I wasn't a Jew
Until I came to New York. In Portland, OR,
The other day, a young Latina asked me
If I were Jewyorican. Papa and Bubby
Came from Ukraine, landed in Brooklyn,
Settled in Harlan, KY, and named my father Benjamin Franklin. My mother, the offspring
Of a coalminer, married Ben, the only Jew
In town. He didn't last. Ma remarried.
In kindergarten, in Cincinnati, instead
Of moving to the afternoon session the second Semester, I stayed in Morning and changed my name.

This is the year 5755. In Chinese it is Year
Of the Dog. I am 45 years old, and learned that The time between Rosh Hashona and Yom Kippur
Are the Days of Awe. Moody and gray, with dashes
Of absolute clarity, I love these days. Cleansing
The summer's sweat from the streets of New York,
I always think of the Year beginning in September.
"That's when school starts." A holdover from Youth.
This year, 1994, for the first time I thought,
Hey, it's the real New Year, and I am a real Jew.
A real Jew, and a real coalminer's son, too.

Bob Holman's Mining Company site is http://poetry.miningco.com

↑ Index

741. Brent Long
Re: http://poetry.miningco.com
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Very nice, Bob. Heard you, Brenda, and Lisa had a great time in Hollywood. I had a blast having Wammo stay here a couple of months ago, but DAMN!...too much testosterone for just one man, don't you think? Anyway, take care.

↑ Index

742. henry
Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997 09:58:52 -0400 Mark Wallace said:
>
> Henry: I appreciate your appreciation of my "youthful >seriousness"--I'd thank you for your "adult seriousness" if I was sure >that you were any older than I am. Perhaps I should have been more >particular in my detailing of philsophical history; yes, it's true that >Greek philosphy does not create the modern notion of the individual. I >think it's more traditional to start with Descartes in this regard, moving >up through Kant, etc. But I'm not sure I want to go into details here.
>Rather, it seems to me that in such phrases as "the divine analogy which >is the unity of the human race," and "individuality is the gist" and
>"humanity is the living manifestation of the divine image" simply repeats
>the western history of a coercive "center elsewhere" that posits its goal >of reducing all difference to the sameness of "individuality" in the name >of a divinity to which it claims access. I have no problems with >considering the possibilities in the sacred, per se: rather, I have >intense problems with the philosophy and cultural critique you launch in >the name of a divinity which you understand as "unity," but in which I see >no presence of any unity.

Well, you can lump Descartes & Judeo-Christianity together if you want, but it's pretty lumpy. Descartes "think therefore I am" ego is a truncated version of what I'm talking about. What I'm talking about is not exactly western: it's probably most directly & simply presented in Byzantine art: humanity as the mirror-imago of spirit. It's not an other-centered divinity: it's many-in-one. And it's not necessarily anthropomorphic in another (differe nt) truncated sense. The mirror-image acknowledges the imageless, the unrepresentable, the-- "I am".

- Uncle Nobodaddy

↑ Index

743. henry
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Agent, yeah. How many of you know that poet extraordinaire some say father of the english pentameter was a secret agent? Christopher Marlowe. We may not be individuals, Mark of D.C. & Jeff of Minneysnapolis, but we're all agents under the cloak. How about that for a lurkers moniker? Agent. I'm just listening in: I'm an agent. - Henry Bigmouth of Smallstate (not a gent, neither. a-gent)

↑ Index

744. Jordan Davis
Rukeyser Reprints
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Pierre == Muriel Rukeyser's being celebrated here at Teachers & Writers on May 8 (reservations required, call now). I'll ask Jan Heller-Levi, the editor of the MR Reader and instigator behind the recent string of MR reprints (I think), whether the book you mention is coming back. ##Jordan On Tue, 22 Apr 1997, Pierre Joris wrote:

> henry wrote:
>
> Agent, yeah. How many of you know that poet extraordinaire some say father of the english pentameter was a secret agent? Christopher Marlowe. We may not be individuals, Mark of D.C. & Jeff of Minneysnapolis, but we're all agents under the cloak. How about that for a lurkers moniker? Agent. I'm just listening in: I'm an agent.
> - Henry Bigmouth of Smallstate (not a gent, neither. a-gent)
>
> & when is someone going to reprint Muriel Rukeyser's _The Traces of thomas Harriot_ which has gorgeous chapters on said Chris Marlowe & the unfunny end he came to. --Pierre
> --
> ==========
> pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
> tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> ----------
> Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is, [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose

> it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
> ==========

↑ Index

745. Jordan Davis
E Berrigan & M Owen at Poem Town
Tue 22 Apr 1997

POETS

Ed mund
Ber rigan

and

Mau reen Owe n

read their poetry at POETRY CITY (NY)

in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative

5
 Union Square
         West
             7th Floor

THURSDAY APRIL 24 7 - 8:30 PM

upcoming events
Friday May 2 Galaxy Craze / Bruce Morrow
Friday May 9 Trish Hampl / Tracie Morris Friday May 16 Bob Holman / Douglas Rothschild

↑ Index

746. David Kellogg
Re: re-post re: Yasusada
Tue 22 Apr 1997

At 06:54 PM 4/21/97 +0600, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>

>David:
>Doubled Flowering: From the Notebooks of Araki Yasusada, will be >published by James Sherry's Roof this fall--the complete >manuscript of poems, letters, and marginalia, along with a "critical >appendix." But I have to ask what you mean by my "generally nimble >responses to queries on this score," since the truth is that no one >has ever asked me anything on this list and thus I have responded to >nothing! On the Sokal thing, it's the hope of those involved in the >Yasusada that it won't be reduced to that level. Yasusada is much >more than a trick.

Kent,

Glad to hear the notebooks are being published. As for "nimble responses" etc., I was recalling -- probably badly -- a sense in the Lingua Franca article that you had been somewhat, well, cagey. If they never contacted you, or if I remembered wrongly, I apologize. (On the other hand, I also recall quite admiring the stance I perceived.)

Of course, the Sokal event is different. But the evasion of responsibility by the editors of Social Text is not, I think, any more obtuse than the retraction of Yasusada by APR. Yasusada is more than a trick, yes, and more than Sokal.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

history of claiming "MAN" as the centralized authority over all experience, however that "MAN" is related to the "divine" (usually, in this history, the "divine" is what gave "man" his primacy). This specific history of the individual is directly tied to the history of

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

748. william marsh
Cubbies
Tue 22 Apr 1997

2) Has anyone else noted the genuinely bad start with which the Cubs began >their year? I have a theory, called "The Curse of George Will." My evidence >is that the Cubs were unable to win until after the big Ginsberg memorial at >Temple Emmanuel in San Francisco was complete. The Cubs' minor league teams >also have the worst cumulative record in baseball. Jack Spicer would have >appreciated this form of torture.

Karmic balancing of the remarkable winningness of Jordan, et al.

And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?

bill marsh

↑ Index

749. Mark Wallace
divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

The history of the individual is directly tied to the history of economic and racial exploitation that marks the history of capitalism; "individuality" becomes the basis for a class of owners to manipulate workers in the name of the "individual's" freedom to seize resources (a process usually referred to as "the right to make a profit"). The "individual" posits a notion of human beings as self-contained, discrete, brought into existence by a divine declaration, and not responsible to anyting beyond their own individuality.

I see nothing in the process of creation that is "individual," if one means by that self-contained, discrete, and in any sense absolute rather than provisional. Creativity emerges in responsiveness, contact, that place where the human mind finds itself not singular and individual but IN RELATION TO THE WORLD.

There are no individuals--I guess I'm going to have to say that again.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

750. Mark Weiss
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

To Quick Henry:

Mark of the Junction is good. Mark of the Beast would also be acceptable.

At 08:07 AM 4/22/97 EDT, you wrote:
>On Mon, 21 Apr 1997 15:02:05 -0700 Mark Weiss said:
>>Here's a plea from a guy named Mark: there's more than one of us out here.
>>Please use a last initial (or an honorific title or heroic attribute) to >>identify. I got an instant case of heartburn from the following.
>>I bet this applies to other names as well.
>
>O.k., Mark of the Junction.
>- Henry of the Brown
>
>(as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure?
>Brown, Brown, Brown.")
>
>

↑ Index

751. Brent Long
Re: divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Mark:

"Capitalism" becomes the basis for a class of owners to manipulate others, not "individuality". Not only is the process of creation individual, but so is the process of interpretation. We have all looked at a work of art, be it literary or otherwise, and formed our own interpretation of that work. However, the artists alone knows how he/she intended for the work to be seen, because the artist, as an individual, gave birth to the work.

↑ Index

752. Don Cheney

Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"

Tue 22 Apr 1997

> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?

certainly! the only reason i have cable tv is to watch the nba all year, the play-offs in their entirety, the bulls in particular and any soccer i can catch. yet missed what i heard was an excellent mexico/usa world cup prelim match on sunday (busy coaching 4 on 4 soccer and emphasizing to the kids the similarities with basketball). what i've seen of mexico makes me think they're very good so the u.s. matching them 2-2 speaks well for the u.s. the mexican team is fast and precise on offense. fun to watch.

as for basketball, the bulls are vulnerable without rodman and kukoc that is for sure. what's bad for me is that those two are my favorites to watch, kukoc on offense and rodman at both ends. and what of the lakers? eddie jones is the bomb. he's like the mexican soccer team: fast, precise and fun to watch. and if clyde, hakeem and sir charles are up for it they could make a run.

don

> 2) Has anyone else noted the genuinely bad start with which the Cubs began their year? I have a theory, called "The Curse of George Will." My evidence is that the Cubs were unable to win until after the big Ginsberg memorial at Temple Emmanuel in San Francisco was complete. The Cubs' minor league teams also have the worst cumulative record in baseball. Jack Spicer would have appreciated this form of torture.
>
> Karmic balancing of the remarkable winningness of Jordan, et al.
>
> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?
>
> bill marsh

↑ Index

753. Pierre Joris

Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"

Tue 22 Apr 1997

> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a love of BASKETball?

Well, not in this household, but back on the WC, San Diego way, Quincy Troupe, son of a basketball player, player near-pro himself til is knee quit on him, has had basketball themes run through his work all along. In fact there's a concert at RPI in Troy (that's in Nueva York, not Asia Minor) tomorrow (& that's a pitch to the crowd in the Albany area) by composer & trombonist George Lewis with a new composition using one of Quincy's poems, with electronic innerjections of lines by Jordan, especially the one he used when he quit briefly (to try his hand at baseball): "I can live without it."

By the way the Cubbies were good enough to win 2 over my Mets, lawdie lawd, though just half an hour ago the latter finished an excellent game beating the Reds 7 to 2. It's been 60 degrees all day long & it won't freeze tonight, the Mets won one, its parse-over day & thus no teaching, martini hour is fast approaching, the individual vs the social match is a draw at half-time, I hope bromige will wear them funny shorts when he comes through Albany in the fall,unless of course he'd had to hock them to get bowering out of Canada -- what a sweet one it has been! -- Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

754. henry
Re: divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

"Individuals" are not to blame for the fact that corporations increase their clout in the legal system through the mechanism of the "corporate individual". Nor in my view has socialism (based on the concept that the individual is subservient to the whole) proved very successful in practice. I still think the good bishops were on the right track in their documents on the US economy of 10 yrs ago - accepting private ownership as fostering efficiency, responsibility, and a buffer against the state; yet demystifying capitalism as the best of all possible worlds. They provided a pretty thorough critique of capitalism & called for an ethos of stewardship & communal responsibility based on democratic governance. It's easy to scoff at them as establishment ameliorators - but then, it's easy to scoff, period. You try coming up with a better plan. & they did it all while honoring the idea of the Person as the heart of the whole matter. This has nothing to do with my "metaphysical" bent on this subject; I'm not a Catholic; I looked into this issue during my community organizing days. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

755. Don Cheney
Re: divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

> I see nothing in the process of creation that is "individual," if one means by that self-contained, discrete, and in any sense absolute rather than provisional. Creativity emerges in responsiveness, contact, that place where the human mind finds itself not singular and individual but IN RELATION TO THE WORLD.

↑ Index

756. Don Cheney
Re: divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

accidentally hit the Send button on eudora and sent this to poetix. sorry. don

> Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 10:34:06
> To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Don Cheney <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: divine continued
> In-Reply-To: <[redacted]>

> I see nothing in the process of creation that is "individual," if one means by that self-contained, discrete, and in any sense absolute rather than provisional. Creativity emerges in responsiveness, contact, that place where the human mind finds itself not singular and individual but IN RELATION TO THE WORLD.

↑ Index

757. Jean Day
Reading in San Francisco
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Once again, for all in the Bay Area:

Jean Day and Barrett Watten
Saturday April 26, 8 pm
New Langton Arts
1246 Folsom St.
San Francisco
[redacted]

(This is another marathon weekend, with events at Small Press Traffic on Friday night and at Canessa Park on Sunday afternoon--I don't have the specifics with me--Dodie? Avery?)

↑ Index

758. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: no no not not
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Ten years ago David Bromige was a guest at my home in Washington, D.C. where he was giving a reading that week. After he left, I found that he had left behind a pair of black bikini briefs and a pair of glasses that seemed to magnify things out of all proportion. I had no way of knowing at the time that he had made the decision to leave all such things behind. I wish him well on steps five through twelve.

↑ Index

759. Maria Damon
that marianne moore poem
Tue 22 Apr 1997

in my house i find no copy of that "i too dislike it" poem by m. moore that has the imaginary gardens w/ real toads in them line in it. cd someone rise to the

occsaion and e it to me today?i need it for my rutgers pappr, and i'm leaving tmw. xo in perpetuity--md

↑ Index

760. LYNES- KATHERINE

Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)

Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

just can't leaf this one alone.... i'm into flitting, myself, these days, which may be barking up the wrong tree, but as a flitterer, my responses to the posts ebbs and phloems....

kl

> david israel wrote:
>
> to scope? -- to scope, perchance to preen ;
> (aye, there's the shrub)
>
> d.i.
> .
> .....
> .....
> *\\\

> rise to the occsaion and e it to me today?i need it for my rutgers pappr,
> and i'm leaving tmw. xo in perpetuity--md

↑ Index

762. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: who is social, individual, or a writer
Tue 22 Apr 1997

> maria damon wrote:
>
> does expletive mean simply pejorative? i didn't think so. i thought it had
> a more specific meaning which wd make the term "naive" not an expletive.
> can some etymologist or grammarian explain what, exactly, an expletive is?

one of the senses of expletive is "a word which is obscene or profane" -- your call as to whether that is perjorative or not... but expletive also means a word that serves as a filler, something to fill a vacancy, as in [insert verb here]...

kl

↑ Index

763. Sylvester Pollet
Re: that marianne moore poem
Tue 22 Apr 1997

In the fat Norton 2nd (of Amer Lit) it's on 1182-83. sp > in my house i find no copy of that "i too dislike it" poem by m. moore that > has the imaginary gardens w/ real toads in them line in it. cd someone > rise to the occsaion and e it to me today?i need it for my rutgers pappr,

> and i'm leaving tmw. xo in perpetuity--md

↑ Index

764. Stephen Vincent
Re: no no nanook(ie)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Nanook of the South - are we watching a new Canadian documentary?
By the way David (B), best of luck in going after those Sebastapol Light Industrial Park Developers. May you catch at least one of them with their pants down. But be careful,
Land Developers are notorious for wearing Everlast and some of their ecological screws can be, indeed (at least in our lifetime), seemingly eternal.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

765. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: back to drawing board / (if not to lurk)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

does this mean that we blubber when our finally written response posts don't show up? kl

Sylvester Pollet

> That might do it, Aldon. List-lubbers, i.e. lovers, but not quite in the swim. I lub it! sp

↑ Index

766. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: Rukeyser Reprints
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Jordan Davis wrote:

> Pierre == Muriel Rukeyser's being celebrated here at Teachers & Writers on May 8 (reservations required, call now).

where is "here"? kl

↑ Index

767. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: that marianne moore poem
Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

maria-- i don't have my marianne moore in front of me [what a picture that is] but i do know that she has 2 versions of that poem: one which is just a few lines long, the other which is much longer. the short one is the last one written/revised. look in the back of the collected poems [poetry?] of mm, it usually has the longer version in it. if that doesn't work, try an older norton?

best-- kl

> in my house i find no copy of that "i too dislike it" poem by m. moore that has the imaginary gardens w/ real toads in them line in it. cd someone rise to the occsaion and e it to me today?i need it for my rutgers pappr,

> and i'm leaving tmw. xo in perpetuity--md

↑ Index

768. Mark Weiss

Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?

Tue 22 Apr 1997

I had hoped to leave this discussion to Henry the Brown, who has been doing just fine, but I guess I'll have to wade in. This question is a set of chinese boxes. No "proof" is possible, because we all, and all the phenonmena we muster to one side or the other, could be merely ideas in the mind of god. For the sake of argument, I put aside such conversation-stoppers. Where to begin? Personality and individuality are not interchangeable terms. However generated, personality is socially perceived, individuality is individually perceived. We write critiques of romantic individualism, not romantic personalitism. If Goffman mixes these two terms up, throw the book out. Personality, how one presents oneself and is perceived, is certainly partly a social construct, and varies according to social situation: I'm a different person with different people. But it's not entirely, nor even overwhelmingly, a social construct. Chemistry and genetics also count. Personality, as anyone who has ever experienced a chemical alteration to the brain, self-induced or otherwise, knows, is a most fragile thing: the peaceable can become violent, the shy demonstrative, etc. "You're a different person when you're (fill in condition or substance)," those who observe us most consistently and intimately will say. Chemical balances change constantly. Sometimes a spike in a given substance in the brain will lead to surprising behavior that may be considered inappropriate in a given social context: we run off with the neighbor's dog. When the chemistry returns to baseline we consider more objectively our relationship with said beast. There are, of course, social/cultural determinants to how we express these changes. In a dogless context we run off with the cat. As for genetics, we all know of children who, despite being raised in what would appear to be the same environment, behave, from the womb, quite differently. But it's fair to argue that no two children are really raised in the same environment--differences of nurture, no matter how small, could explain differences of personality, no matter how large. That's why twin studies have been so valuable. Studies of identical twins raised apart from birth have been going on, in this country and Japan (where, traditionally, twins were separated at birth and raised apart), since the twenties. Consistently, the twins studied show remarkable similarities of personality, down to such seemingly inconsequential matters as color preferences. In more serious matters, like the incidence of schizophrenia, the findings have been striking: if one twin is schizophrenic, there is a 50% likelihood that the other will be, regardless of who raises each child. In fraternal twins the likelihood is the same as in the general population. This finding has been the impetus for all of the exciting work being done to try to identify the genetic mechanisms that predispose to schizophrenia. Individualism is a separate subject. Baseline--altho our personalities may change, altho the social value placed on the concept of the individual and the role that the individual plays within a society may change, all humans in all cultures who are not afflicted with certain severe and quite specific brain dysfunctions experience themselves as individuals--possessed of a continuing internal narrative that is different from the narrative of the next guy over. A major concern of the narrative is the constant negotiation and renegotiation of relationships with the world outside the individual--the establishment of boundaries and the terms for cooperation, and a critique of the social determinants of one's conceptualization of self. Most of us have a series of different identities--as individual, family member, community member, citizen, etc. The emphasis on one or the other identity is usually functional, or a remnant of when it was functional. Depending upon the social context, social cohesion or individual freedom of action may be more valued in a given culture at a given moment. Cooperation is stressed and idealized when a high degree of cooperation is necessary for survival, individual freedom may be stressed when times are more flush. And individuality may be idealized as a protest against the limitations imposed by functionally obsolete social restrictions (caste, class and the like). Neither individualism nor romantic individualism begin with the romantics, although they certainly are good examples of my last point. I think one can find literary traces of both going back to the greeks, and as a social reality it probably goes back to the beginning of the evolution of consciousness. Heroic oral narratives by and about living individuals exist in almost all non-literate cultures. But I'll stick with recent western culture. Living at a time when existing sociopolitical structures were less and less functional, any good 16th century calvinist accepted both that his own good or bad fortune indicated something about him as an individual and that it was dependent upon a destiny which he could not alter. Whether or not he prayed in the company of others, his primary relationship to god was one to one. A century later, after the English civil war, Dryden has the hero Almanzor (in The Conquest of Granada) echo Milton's Satan when he declares that "I alone am king of me." Satan, who remains rebellious, is demonstrably wrong (look what happens to him). Almanzor, after doing no end of damage to the society in which he lives, submits his individual will to the power of the state (across the water Le Cid did the same), reflecting, in the wake of the civil war, the danger to society posed by heroic individualism, as Dryden and many others saw it. At issue is the balance between the needs and rights of the individual and the needs and rights of the society. In current American society, many of us, myself included, react to what we perceive as the ideological abandonment of cooperation and the overemphasis on unbridled individualism

(Donald Trump: "I alone am king of me") that makes concerted action almost impossible by emphasizing the social over the individual. But to parse individual motivations so fine as to see nothing but social determination seems to me to partake more of theology than social theory. Any objection on behalf of individuality can be countered by one on behalf of social determinism, usw, and we're left deciding who comes up with the last turtle. Enough. New fields and pastures new.

At 09:58 AM 4/22/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss, Henry Gould and others:
>
> Thanks for your lively responses to my recent post. I'm sorry to >have to continue to argue with you here.
>
> Mark: Quite simply, to say that one is socially constructed says >nothing about one's ability to respond to social constructedness, and to >effect change. Rather, one might construct a social notion of that field >of activity reduced to the term "individual" as a SOCIAL site where >various kinds of social activities are focused and rearranged. As M. Magee >(do I have this name right?) points out, there is already a history of >literary discussion of this kind of social activity of the human. I would >suggest also the work of ERVING GOFFMAN, who in books like SOCIAL >INTERACTION and others works very particularly with the notion of what he >calls "face work," constructing in the process an idea of human identity >as a series of responsive gestures to social phenomena, gestures that can >include many types of resistance, rewriting, and possibility. But none of >these possibilities are EXTRA-SOCIAL; rather, Goffman's idea is that >"personality" (choose what word you will) is this SERIES OF PERFORMATIVE >SOCIAL CHOICES).
>
> Henry: I appreciate your appreciation of my "youthful >seriousness"--I'd thank you for your "adult seriousness" if I was sure >that you were any older than I am. Perhaps I should have been more >particular in my detailing of philsophical history; yes, it's true that >Greek philosphy does not create the modern notion of the individual. I >think it's more traditional to start with Descartes in this regard, moving >up through Kant, etc. But I'm not sure I want to go into details here.
>Rather, it seems to me that in such phrases as "the divine analogy which >is the unity of the human race," and "individuality is the gist" and
>"humanity is the living manifestation of the divine image" simply repeats
>the western history of a coercive "center elsewhere" that posits its goal
>of reducing all difference to the sameness of "individuality" in the name >of a divinity to which it claims access. I have no problems with >considering the possibilities in the sacred, per se: rather, I have >intense problems with the philosophy and cultural critique you launch in >the name of a divinity which you understand as "unity," but in which I see >no presence of any unity.

>
> As to whether one goes to news reports for the details of >scientific surveys (and indeed whether one goes to such surveys as the >authoritative source on what constitutes the life of the human (I do NOT >say individual), I'll leave it up to you to decide whether or not those >sources are disinterested and trusthworthy, or biased by social factors.
>
> But again, thanks for your response on this; it's made clear to me >that our differences here are profound.
>
> My apologies for my inability, on this modem, to correct typos.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
>
>/----------\
>| |
>| [redacted] |
>| GWU: |
>| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
>| EPC: |
>| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
>|_____|
>
>

↑ Index

769. Burt Kimmelman

Re: that marianne moore poem

Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

maria,

"i too dislike it" is the opening shot of mm's "Of Poetry" poem.
burt
and so is the other imagery, if memory is serving me right.

↑ Index

770. George Bowering
Re: Kilgore Trout says
Tue 22 Apr 1997

I think that subconsciously, my lifelong pal David Bromige really gets it. That a gap between serious discussions here of cosmology and eidetics--and little scabrous stories about our sexualized history---is just a gap in perception. Words delight me, and so do sentences (and so do those little gestures Rachel makes, but that is another question). So if ten slow words oft creep in one dull line, then I dont care whether I am hearing the dictates of the creator of the universe or the latest poem from Bukowski, forget it. But if I hear something delightful, the caroming of a word off someone's discarded comma, so that there is a discernible pinnng!, then I'm yr man.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

771. George Bowering
ReHoops
Tue 22 Apr 1997

> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?
>
> bill marsh

Victor Coleman has always been a big fan of NCAA basketball. He is a big Syracuse fan, for some reason.

Some friends and I always have in January a cvommittment to writing down our predictions of the final 4. My friends did terrible this year because of the hype for Kansas and Cincinatti/ they didnt get any. I got 2 right: Arizona and kentucky.

But really, I am an NBA fan, more properly a Cavs and Sonics fan.

But that Victor Coleman: he gets pictures of basketballs on the covers of his books. He sleeps beside a basketball. Nice smell. "Wake up and smell the basketball," as his ex-girlfreind painted in a painting I have.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

772. George Bowering
Re: no no not not
Tue 22 Apr 1997

> Ten years ago David Bromige was a guest at my home in Washington, D.C. where he was giving a reading that week. After he left, I found that he had left behind a pair of black bikini briefs and a pair of glasses that seemed to magnify things out of all proportion. I had no way of knowing at the time that he had made the decision to leave all such things behind. I wish him well on steps five through twelve.

I dont like to have to point such things out, but did you make the obvious connection between Bromige's sleazy underpants and the MAGnifying glasses? I'll bet that Rachel and Maria saw the connection immediately.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

773. George Bowering
Re: that marianne moore poem
Tue 22 Apr 1997

> in my house i find no copy of that "i too dislike it" poem by m. moore that has the imaginary gardens w/ real toads in them line in it. cd someone rise to the occsaion and e it to me today?i need it for my rutgers pappr, and i'm leaving tmw. xo in perpetuity--md

I would think that most Nortons have it. It is Moore's most often reprinted poem. It's called "Poetry", and dates from 1921. the year before Eliot's big news. Hmm.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

774. Hugh Steinberg
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On April 22, Henry Gould wrote:

>Remember Joe Poet, or was it Josephine? The one who always pushed to the >front of the line at the open mike & read his poem about how he felt after >he stubbed his toe on a fire hydrant & what it meant for his neighborhood, >city, nation, cosmos? Remember? Remember? God, his poems were lousy.
>
Yeah, and I also remember his twin cousin Shirley (or was it Stanley), who always read last at the open mike, who read the poem about stubbed toes on fire hydrants and their meaning in the cosmos in a sort of shy, half-terrified whisper. They were also terrible.

Having been to scads of open mikes, of course most of 'em were terrible. But every so often a poem or even a line would break through that was wonderous. And I'd always recommend reading at the front of the open mike: that way there will still be folks around to hear your poem about the fire hydrant and your lovely, hurt toes.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

775. Bobbie West
horse apples
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Henry Gould wrote:

> (as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure?
> Brown, Brown, Brown.")

As we all know, the color of horse manure depends on whether it's fresh or well-aged. Uncle George obviously prefers the well-aged variety, since fresh horse apples are green, green, green.

B.W. (a former surf lurker grazing on Henry's turf.)

↑ Index

776. Stephen Vincent
Re: Rukeyser Reprints
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Off the hearsay hand, I gather the Rukeyser archive was recently acquired by the Library of Congress.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

777. Hugh Nicoll
Ms. Moore's "Poetry"
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Maria & anyone else who'd like an ascii version:

Marianne Moore

Poetry

I, too, dislike it: there are things that are important beyond all this fiddle.
Reading it, however, with a perfect contempt for it, one discovers in it after all, a place for the genuine.
Hands that can grasp, eyes that can dilate, hair that can rise if it must, these things are important not because a high-sounding interpretation can be put upon them but because they are useful. When they become so derivative as to become unintelligible,

the same thing may be said for all of us, that we do not admire what we cannot understand: the bat holding upside down or in quest of something to eat, elephants pushing, a wild horse taking a roll, a tireless wolf under a tree, the immovable critic twitching his skin like a horse that feels a flea, the baseball fan, the statistician-nor is it valid to discriminate against 'business documents and school-books'; all these phnomena are important. One must make a distinction

however: when dragged into prominence by half poets, the result is not poetry, nor till the poets among us can be 'literalists of the imagination' - above
insolence and triviality and can present for inspection, imaginary gardens with real toads in them, shall we have

it. In the meantime, if you demand on the one hand, the raw material of poetry in all its rawness and that which is on the other hand genuine, then you are interested in poetry.

(1921, 1935) Text and format follows the version of Selected Poems (1935).

Hugh Nicoll, Miyazaki Municipal University, Funatsuka 1-1-2, Miyazaki-shi 880 JAPAN
vox: 81-985-20-2000, ext 1306, fax: 81-985-20-4807
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

778. Jeffrey W. Timmons

Re: What white

Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Mon, 21 Apr 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

> most of the "white" critical race theorists who are problematizing "whiteness" are doing so not to avoid taking responsibility for their privilege but precisely to take responsibility and take steps, as aldon pointed out in his "whatness of whiteness" post, to dissolve its mystical powers of privilege-granting. it is this taking responsibility that seems a little lacking in your posts, jeffrey. what you say about construction > is true, but to use that argument to deny the material/ experiential effects of racism on people of color seems...well...evasive, as if you feel personally attacked and need to defend yourself.

i dont feel attacked. really. i hoped to say to dale that referring to my posts as "intellectualized" was an out of hand dismissal.

i was/am in complete agreement that there are material/experiental effects of race. this was the thrust of my last post where i agreed with dales comments on this matter (and bodies which).

i dont quite understand why if what im saying does not resemble what other "white" theorists do--not taking responsibility for privilege--my comments are lacking some essential dimension of that discourse. should i be saying it like them? perhaps i might learn something from them but....

i think its important to remember that i objected to how easily ginsberg was collapsed into a category of "white guys"--and that i intended to reflect upon the difficulty of using that denomination to identify him. i dont think thats such a difficult position to accede to.

thanks for your post maria.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

779. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part one): Berkeley White
Tue 22 Apr 1997

While the organizers of the conference on "The Making and Unmaking of Whiteness" at UC Berkeley did not bother to send any notices of the affair to my CSU campus, notice was posted in enough places that the media and certain professional opponents of "social construction" "ism" got wind of it in advance. The day before the conference began, the San Jose Mercury News ran a piece titled "Furor Erupts over Cal scholar's conference on 'whiteness'." While I appreciated the use of quotation marks in the head, I was confused by the same head's suggestion that only one Cal scholar was in possession of the conference. In the Mercury News article, "race scholar" Shelby Steele was quoted as asking, from his perch in the Hoover Tower at Stanford, "What else is ethnic studies going to do to justify their existence? They've not produced anything in a critical way, just celebratory. It opens the door to this kind of garbage." "Race scholar" Shelby Steele is apparantly unaware that back in the days when Charles Olson worked for the ethnic interests section of the Democratic Party, "ethnic Studies," where it existed at all, was given almost exclusively to the study of people who would today be termed "white." I'm not really clear how the putatively celebratory nature of ethnic studies is supposed to have opened the door to the garbage of studying the construction of whiteness either, but then I'm still a bit dim from all this reading and teaching I have to do every day. The same article quoted KLLC disc jockey "Vinnie" as remarking, "When I see another white person walking down the street, I don't say, 'Hey, that person's on my team,'" and I suspect he was telling the truth.

Anyway, that will give you a sense of the social representation of the conference on the social representation of whiteness. The media were on hand in impressive numbers as the conferenc opened, talked to one another loudly through the early presentations, collared a few organizers for sound bites and then had the good grace to leave.

The conference was opened by Elaine Kim, Michael Omi and Jose David Saldivar, who remarked on the fact that a trio of "non-whites" (a term that was denounced every three hours by members of the audience) was introducing a conference studying whiteness.

The first negative reaction I had to the conference program came when I realized that there would be no discussion of poetry anywhere in the three days of the proceedings. Then I recognized just how marginalized literature in general would be at the conference. It seemed that much of the productive debate about racial discourse in writing had simply not been read by those organizing the meetings. An oddity in my eyes -- in a nation that has often defined literature as a category not available to "non-whites" (see T. Jefferson on that), here it seemed that white people had little to do with writing at all!

The first panel, on popular culture, had some interesting work. My sense was that the grad. students on the panel had the most exciting material in hand. Josh Kun's paper, titled "The Yiddish Are Coming! Mickey Katz and American Whiteness," was great stuff -- and he played some fine Klezmer to an audience who mostly hadn't heard it before. (and if you've never heard Katz sing "Don't Let the Schmaltz Get in Your Eyes" you ain't heard nothing yet!) Annalee Newitz was quite good on "The Whiteness of the Police." Eric Lott and Fred Pfeil gave pretty good talks, but they were for the most part elaborations of work that they have produced previously.

The audience responses to the first panel set the tone for the remainder of the week-end. There were several quite good questions and observations from people who had obviously listened carefully and thoughtfully, interspersed among the diatribes from those who thought either that the whole conference was just one more way for white elitists to control discussion (despite the evident integration of the entire conference), and those who believe that the mere existence of academic conferences is just one more means by which the oppressive bourgeois apparatus prevents true revolutionary action from taking place.

Panel Two included rather bland presentations of interview work done by Michelle Fine and Lois Wise, and more intriguing talks by Cameron McCarthy (on "suburban resentment and the representation of the inner-city in film and television") and Aida Hurtado on "taming (becoming) the savage: white ethnic appropriation in the construction of whiteness" [what I sometimes term the "Pocahontas Perplex"].

The last panel of the first day included both the worst of times and the best of times. Cheryl Harris, whose "Whiteness as Property" is a touchstone of Critical Legal and Race Theory work, gave an exemplary (and very literary I might add) reading of legal rhetoric in court decisions regarding race. Walter Benn Michaels, on the other hand, delivered himself of exactly the sort of pro-crustean redefinitions and misreadings that mar his recent book _Our America_. According to Michaels, race cannot be a social construction because it is a mistake. (One wonders why it cannot be both. One wonders why those who have made this mistake don't apologize [though I resist the apologia mode in these discussions as it plays right into the media's ((as in the Mercury news the day before)) tendency to portray any discussion of the subject of racism as "white apology.") The continuing problem in Michaels's work on this subject is his tendency always to reduce race to something that somehow inheres in the individual (despite his frequent disclaimers that he is not proposing an individualist perspective); as several of his fellow panelists tried to point out to him, the idea that race is relational _means_ that it persists in the language beyond the body of the individual.

I will now hurry things along a bit, as some of you are in digest mode and paging rapidly to the next post.

On Saturday Howard Winant gave a rambling talk that pretty much replayed the work he's done with Omi. Ruth Frankenburg talked about locating research on whiteness, Caren Kaplan gave a very incisive talk on commodity feminsim in an era of globalization, and Nancy Scheper-Hughes went on interminably about her field work in South Africa. (An instance of an interesting subject made boring by the mode of presentation.)

The second panel of the second day was titled "Queering Whiteness, Querying the Self." Allan Berube talked about "How Gay Stays White," perhaps the most "confessional" of the papers presented at the conference. Jasbit Puar demonstrated once more that the grad. students were doing some of the best work in these areas, Yvonne Yarbro-Bejarno recited a sequence of nostrums, and John Powell of Minnesota led the crowd through a careful, but informal exploration of "The Fluidity of Self and the Stability of Race," the highlight, for me at least, of that panel.

The last panel I was able to attend was titled "Critical Studies of Whiteness." Noel Ignatiev was unable to present his paper, so a Berkeley staff member read if in his place. It wasn't so much a critical study as it was a restatement of the _Race Traitor_ platform. I have a general sympathy with Ignatiev, but I doubt that reifying blackness is a good way to unmake whiteness. The term "New Abolitionists" has its merits, until you recollect some of the peculiar racial ideas of some among the old abolitionists (remember Garrison and others telling Douglass he should just tell his story and leave the theory to them!) And I'm not at all sure it's true that racism is the major prop of capitalism in the United States, though it's one hell of an accomplice -- Other papers wrapping up the day included Mab Segrest's autobiographical "memoirs of a race traitor" talk on "The Souls of White Folk" and David Wellman's "Whiteness as a Site of Contestation." David Roediger, again from Minnesota (and just why are there so many experts on whiteness from Minnesota?), gave a much-needed reminder in the form of his paper "Studying Whiteness: An African-American tradition," in which he quickly sketched some of the more important stages in the development of "whiteness" studies by black authors, including most prominently the Du Bois of "The Souls of White Folk." Michael Rogin was amusing in the role of absent-minded professor as he commented on the papers and fielded questions from the audience.

Which included a not-entirely unexpexted disruption. A fellow who announced that he called himself Thorsson ("I reject my Christian name") interrupted Mab Segrest to denounce the entire proceedings as an affront to Euro-Americans. Turned out he was there in cooperation with Dale Warner, a fellow who represents himself as head of a European American activist organization. I'd had prior experience of Mr. Warner. After a talk I gave in San Jose, he sent letters to senior faculty at my university (I was not yet tenured), on the letterhead of his law firm, denouncing me as among the 15% [where DOES he get these numbers] of European Americans who are "deeply twisted, pathologically self-loathing," and therefore unfit to teach at a university. This in response to my public invitation to white Americans to work with white Americans to end racism. [This was echoed in the Mercury News article, by the way, when radio talk-show host Michael Savage said of the conference organizers: "They're self-hating fools. They'll be happy when whites are on the cotton plantation." I'm not making this up, guys -- guess he didn't know white people had always been on the cotton plantation.]

Sunday morning featured a session on the "Histories of Whiteness," which I had to miss -- Troy Duster made closing remarks, and then, despite the closing remarks having already been made over lunch, there was scheduled an open discussion titled: "The Unmaking of Whiteness: Where Do We Go from Here?" I was intrigued by the first person plural of that, assuming it meant "we" who might want to unmake whiteness, but I was even more intrigued wondering just where the "here" is in that question. But I was already flying to L.A. by then, and will have to wait for others to tell me what happened.

tune in next time for "On the Wings of Atalanta," or "College Language Association Meets the Black College Spring Break Freaknik," and will somebodies after Rutgers please tell us absolutely everything?

↑ Index

780. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: what is white
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Fri, 18 Apr 1997, Hoa Nguyen wrote:

> On Thursday April 17 Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:
>
> ..."white was used in a homogenizing fashion that failed to be attentive to the pluralities that term is used to organize and did not recognize the virtually indistinct category it is. of course it does have a powerful political resonance"
>
> Maybe it would be appropriate to address exactly what this "resonance" is. and what is the "it"?

with "resonance" i wanted to suggest that it carries a rather negative connotations. i dont want to sound like dinesh d'sousa here but "white" is often used as a derogatory appellation. no i do not believe in "reverse" discrimination. im not one of "those." really.

it: white. it should be used in brackets i think or under erasure--its effects are still present but under stress. thats good.

> I agree that the term is impenetrable and tricky-- Melville's whale-- and at the same time the "resonance" is what I live with everyday of my life. I understand that "white" is a "concept" designed to divide and imbue power-- ....
> Each time I said "people" in the previous, I meant white people. It is not a very satisfying term for me either. I don't know what else to call the experience I have with "white" Americans.

i wont deny your experience and i think that your comments here suggest my own need to re-think my own responses in relation to what you have to say about this. im not trying to own them to my self but say that i think i have something to learn from what you have to say here.

id like to think that "white" is something that stands between us perhaps. i as much as you perhaps would like not to have to negotiate its effects and shapes in our lives. i am very uncomfortable with it at times--as much as it creates privileges for me. living in nw washington dc off and on i recognize the geographic determinations of race but though i found it comfortable to live in a "white" area of the city (i later moved to se capitol hill where there is a greater mix of people) i was also greatly disturbed by the wealth and extravagance and often blatant excessive grossness of money. if "white" is that sort of privilege (and more) i would rather not be included. you know?

> ..."race is semantically and epistemologically more complicated that the linguistic and conceptual categories used to discuss it. itd be more useful i think to be aware of that"
>
> I am very aware of race and its complications-- you wield incredible privilege as you speak of race as you do above. Race is not a concept to me in my daily experiences.

id like to hear more from you on this actually. im not sure i understand. my first response is that its would seem to me that i should wield that privilege and wield it responsibily (and i hope i have). race is not a concept: ok. i understand it is a lived experience. at the same time i believe that words like white hispanic asian indian do not do justice to the "daily experiences" you refer to. you said you are uncomfortable with "white" assumptions about your race and its implications: such assumptions (on the part of whites) are the effect of the limited semantic/linguistic tools we--?!--have for talking about cultural differences.

i hope i was clear about this last point: i just think a better language could be used/developed for talking about race than the generalizations of categories we use to do so.

sorry to take up so much space.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

781. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: who is social, etc.
Tue 22 Apr 1997

---

if i hazard a reckless summary bear with me: but the vaguely humanist yearnings in some postings on this thread and the post-humanist critiques of the former lead me to wonder if there is not a need (being filled?) for a post-humanist humanism. if so what name does it go by? what i mean is that there seems to be this rather humanist nostalgia for some sort of meaning and significance defined by a universalist particularization of the individual that competes with a post-structuralist decentering of the individual. in this discursive encounter i wonder if there is a way of reconciling these discourses. i believe charles altieri takes on this issue somewhere--is someone up on his stuff?

jeffrey

↑ Index

782. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: divine continued
Tue 22 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997, Dale Smith wrote:

> I do not like using this kind of highfallutin, distant and conceptual language.

but youre not.

> But what you, Mark Wallace lack, as well as myself in this instance, is personal testimony, concrete examples, a language dedicated, like good poetry, to the contradictions and myriad pressures of experience.

"i drive a truck all day [like everyone else who earns their living] and when i come home and turn on the tv
[like everyone else who owns a tv] and watch friends
[like everyone else on thursday nights]
i get really pissed at those nike commercials with william burroughs [like everyone else who....] because he aint even writing and making a big pay check."

jeffrey timmonss/snommit yerffej

↑ Index

783. Christopher Alexander
Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora
Tue 22 Apr 1997

Alright, Joe Napora, come on out, I give up.
I've been looking through the archive for any mention of BullHead & how to get it but I just can't seem to find it, even on the mag list

(Thank you, Spencer Selby) posted last October, nor can I find your address for that matter. We all know you're in here somewhere, so "don't you think it would be best for all concerned if we just took care of this matter quietly right now?"

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective 160S 1300E #16
Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

n/formation issue 1.1 now online:
http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

↑ Index

784. Rachel Loden
no no nanook(ie)
Tue 22 Apr 1997

David Bromige wrote:

> This "Subject" is one of my alltime favorites for its knotting of various possible and (barely?) relevant threads--i wonder herb@_eskimo_ hasnt responded.

Dear David, Herb (being a man of some refinement) never enters these sordid revels--probably still disgusted at being assigned fictional custody of a certain "object" during the Bowering wars of last summer.

Speaking of objects, underwear, and the man, are you sure you mean Everlast and not EverReady?

RL

"Just when I thought I was out, t h e y p u l l m e b a c k i n !"
--Michael Corleone in Godfather 3

↑ Index

785. Herb Levy
Re: no no nanook(ie)
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> This "Subject" is one of my alltime favorites for its knotting of various possible and (barely?) relevant threads--i wonder herb@_eskimo_ hasnt responded.

Huh?

But David, I don't think I've ever seen any Canadian underwear. (Robert Mittenthal has, on occasion, mentioned a pair of dainty hand-washables that was left in his spare room by some visiting, uh, dignitary in the early [redacted] days. But despite Robert's offers/threats, I've never set eyes on this particular artifact.)

Oh, wait, come to think of it, I'm actually wearing Canadian underwear right now, as I type this.

If, that is, the t-shirt of BlaserCon '94 counts as such.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

786. Joseph Zitt
Re: http://poetry.miningco.com
Wed 23 Apr 1997

[redacted] wrote:

> Like everybody else, I wasn't a Jew
> Until I came to New York. In Portland, OR,

Hm. I sometimes feel like I wasn't as much a Jew until I moved out of New York, to a place where being Jewish was something distinctive that had to be explained to people. I only started to really grok Jewishness when I had something to contrast it too.

I'm looking forward to your performance at the Knitting Factory Seder tonight. I'll be tuning into the Webcast, as I did last night. --
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ========== SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt == <> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

787. Mark Wallace individuality and capitalism
Wed 23 Apr 1997

For anybody interested in looking at the relation between individuality and capitalism Max Weber's THE PROTESTANT WORK ETHIC AND THE SPIRIT OF CAPITALISM traces this relation, and his other work follows through on many of the implications of that book.

For Weber, the work ethic begins in a communal process of self-denial, opposed to individualism, that allows the group to build business and capitalist power through a devotion to continued profits at the expense of self-gratification. In later phases of this development, the increasing profits of the capitalist economy erode the original communal base, fostering the idea of individual success at the expense of the group--and thus, in the long run, destroying its own power system. In this reading, then, capitalism creates individualism, while at the same time individualism creates a new form of capitalism, one based on indulgence of the self at the expense even of the power of the business--a capitalist ethic that, in this country, finally became utterly dominant in the era of leveraged buyouts and corporate raiders, who often found that they could make more individual profits by DESTROYING businesses that were making too much money.

Certain of Weber's takes on particular matters have been shown to be false; nonetheless, I've seen no successful rejection of its basic thesis. Cornell West, for one, continues to look to Weber's work as one of the main bases of his own thinking about capitalism.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

788. Maria Damon
Re: that marianne moore poem
Wed 23 Apr 1997

thanks to everyone who responded; about 4 folks or more actually typed the poem into the machine, others offered to fax, others gave page #s in anthologies or directed me to websites. you guys are the greatest research team ever! i now head off to sunny new brunswick, armed avec la grande poeme de la moore. my paper's unmanageably long, ungepachet, unwieldy...please be nice, yall who'll be there, xo md

↑ Index

789. Brenda Ellen Uchman
Poem for Rent
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Poet Demands State Senate Pay Rent for Poem

For Immediate Release:
April 23, 1997
For additional information contact:
Brendan Lorber
212/[redacted]

Poet and publisher Brendan Lorber is adding his voice to the protest against the end of rent regulations in New York. This Wednesday he will send a poem to every state senator on behalf of the millions of tenants who will be forced from their homes if regulations are terminated. But he isn't just giving the legislators a piece of his mind -- he's renting it to them.

"Poem for Rent" is a 12-page page booklet with drawings by Lorber throughout. The back cover explains, "This spacious well-lit poem with western exposure and plenty of closet space is the property of Brendan Lorber. It is being rented to you." Underneath is a request that the senators remit payment according to one of three rental plans. If they are in favor of rent control, the book is theirs for 15 cents a month. If they prefer rent-stabilization it's an affordable 25 cents. If they are against all regulations the book is $1,500 a month. "The senators should pay whatever they think is right," Lorber said. "If a majority opposes regulations, the senate will owe me about $45,000 by the first of May."

Asked if he thought the state legislature would actually pay their rent, he said, "Well I hope the senators don't turn out to be a gang of squatters."

"Poem for Rent" is an ironic poem that challenges the senate to consider the effect of its actions. With a refrain of "Cast your ballots," Lorber unfolds a litany of injuries New York City will suffer if regulations expire: from increased homelessness to the exodus of the city's working & middle class. Even parking will become more difficult, with families living in their cars. Both landlords and tenant groups agree that rents will skyrocket with deregulation. The only thing standing between hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers and the street is the state legislature. And "Poem for Rent" is an indication that New Yorkers won't stand by silently while their representatives fail to represent them. In the poem, Lorber writes, "Who'll live here after I'm cast / from my one-bedroom with brick wall view? / Maybe Governor Pataki after he's voted from office." Discussing the situation, he added, "What makes New York unique is the diversity of its residents. Once we're forced out, what's left?"

"Unless we all act now, tourguides of the future will say, 'Welcome to New York City, the only city in America populated solely by millionaires and homeless people. To the north is Harlem, a vibrant center of the African-American community before the African-Americans were forced out. To the south is the Village, home to thousands of the country's most talented writers and artists before they too were forced out. Across the East River is Brooklyn, called the City of Churches before all the parishioners were evicted. And here is Central Park, the emerald prize of the city before it became the world's largest shanty-town.'"

Brendan Lorber, 27, is a New York native, raised in Greenwich Village. His work has appeared in the Village Voice and the Chicago Tribune as well as numerous other publications. He is also the publisher and editor of LUNGFULL! Magazine, a national literary journal that supports emerging and established writers. He has performed his work throughout the country and in Australia and has made numerous radio and television appearances.

# #

↑ Index

790. Herb Levy
Re: no no nanook(ie)
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> This "Subject" is one of my alltime favorites for its knotting of various possible and (barely?) relevant threads--i wonder herb@_eskimo_ hasnt responded.

Oh, jeez, I'm slow sometimes.

nanook/eskimo

I don't think of "eskimo" in <eskimo.com> as a word. I rarely even see it at all. It's just part of a label that I never have to type, it's the default in the settings for my e-mail program.

& when I turned 58, way back when, someone had to point out to me the synchronicity of living on NE 58th St.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

791. Pierre Joris
Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Dave Zauhar wrote:
>
> >>
> >> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a > >> love of BASKETball?

> >>
> >
> >Well, not in this household, but back on the WC, San Diego way, Quincy > >Troupe, son of a basketball player, player near-pro himself til is knee > >quit on him, has had basketball themes run through his work all along.
>
> Is this true? (not the stuff about the themes, etc). I know that Quincy > Troupe's father, Quincy Trouppe, played in the Negro leagues from 1930 > until their demise (for the KC Monarchs, Homestead Greys, the Chicago > American Giants, and others), and then briefly in the majors. This wouldn't > leave much time to play basketball seriously. But then again, in those days > you didn't get rich playing baseball, esp. in the Negro Leagues, so I can > see where he would have had to barnstorm at hoops too, to make a living.
>
> Dave Zauhar

Oops, Dave, my mistake -- yes, of course, Quincy's father was a baseball player, not a basketball player -- guess I's just an ole european & get my 'merikan games mixed up from time to time -- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

792. Pierre Joris
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Fred Muratori wrote:

> An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought > up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf were incompatible, morally so, as I remember.

Fred -- trhere is of course Toby Olson, lovely poet & novelist & golfer who has a splendid book of the latter variety that deals with golf. -- Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

793. Charles Bernstein
Welcome Message
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Rev. 3-4-97

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions

4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), Loss Pequen~o Glazier ([redacted]), and in coopeartion with Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

---

1. About the Poetics List

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible.

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein: contact him for further information. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or}

(replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity.

*
If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you can substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot always decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Poetics List can send a large number of individual messages to your account to each day! If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "listserv."

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to message
blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

or

review POETICS by name

(which will give you the list alphabetically by name)

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequen~o Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If your word processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC;

in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

794. Rebecca Reynolds
Re: articulated skeletons
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Perhaps I am more of an individual as I lurk, or flit? (Or flitter.) But note that flitting is always shy of fitting . . .

And what does happen if I a-r-t-i-culate myself? Enter the "social contract" (to become bone)? Or is my skin my individuality? At what point do I become responsible for the form (or content?) of myself? This flesh is my appetite, my fondness for . . .

Shall I be lost if you find me?

Rebecca (without doubt)

↑ Index

795. Matthias Regan
Two thoughts: Backwoods Broadsides
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Sylvester Pollet & List--

Let me add my voice in praise of Backwoods Broadsides--I have been grossly neglecting a variety of correspondences & near the top of this list for months has been a thank you to SP for his carefully edited & beautifully presented series. The latest two ("A Real Toad" & "Between Ourselves") arrived last week & are as absorbing as the back issues I selected before. The length of the broadsides is fascinating: Peter Money's has as many poems as a short chap book, while Anne Tardos presents a group of drawings which, unfolded, might be one image: so SP has taken two pieces of paper & turned one into a drawing you could hang on your wall and the other into a book you'd keep in your shelf--I explain it poorly but order them and see for yourself!

Matthias

↑ Index

796. simon
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

"Fast Break" comes to mind.

beth simon

↑ Index

797. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS
Re: New Brunswick/Rutgers fete
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Does anyone know anything about the upcoming poetry fete this weeknd att Rutgers-New Brunswick, such as hoo win ware $? info greatly appreciated. one could backchannel me.

yours,

kyle conner

↑ Index

798. Joseph Lease
Re: Two thoughts: Backwoods Broadsides
Wed 23 Apr 1997

I just want to add my praise for SP's wonderful backwoods broadsides: strong and eloquent and independent work, tremendously valuable

↑ Index

799. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Poem for Rent
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Good for Brendan Lorber!
& May what happened in Massachusetts, not come to pass in New York.

Since rent control was banned in Massachusetts, former rent control tenants (aka "protected status") have faced rent increases anywhere from 50-300%. What have cities done to help all the people who are now vulnerable to "market rates?" Nuttin. Except, in Cambridge at least, the city has set up a board to "as-sist" people in moving out of their apartments and, since all the rents in the city have skyrocketed, effectively move out of the city. Left on their own, city government does this kind of thing, and then they praise themselves for it in the press.

There are alternatives though (for anyone in NY, or anywhere else facing this situation).

Last week, after months of campaigning, tenant organizing, lobbying, etc., a group called the Eviction Free Zone saw through city council orders in Cambridge that 1) transferred over 1 and 1/2 million dollars into the Affordable Housing Fund (from the "free cash" coffer) and 2) designed a transfer tax on residential sales in Cambridge--with the first $300,000 exempted that will provide a substantial revenue for replenishing affordable housing funds. This is going to the State House in a week or so, where Governor Weld has already stated that he will veto ANY taxation bill that does not have a local referendum attached to it. So in the drafting of the bill, the EFZ insisted that such a referendum be attached. We are very confident of being able to see that it passes in the fall. Next on the agenda is securing a 20 million dollar bond for the immediate purchase of apartment buildings on the market to be made permanently affordable housing.

It's incredible the arguments that were made against all of our efforts. I am growing confident that the real estate interest is second in power in this country only to the military/defense interest. One argument: "if we put through this transfer tax it will hinder young and struggling families from buying homes in Cambridge." A glance at the Sunday house advertisements indicate the median price range for a house in this city to be well beyond the means of any "young and struggling families." In fact, I have come across more than enough families who have lived in Cambridge all their lives and who cannot afford it anymore. Their children will have to settle elsewhere.

Anyway, it's been a long road, and it's certainly far from over. Hours of meetings and talk complicated by time given for both Creole and Hispanic translators, etc. But it can be done, and good luck to anyone facing this dismal prospect. Back channel me if you want more info. on the work we've done here.

[redacted]

Brenda,

How can I get a copy of Lorber's poem?

↑ Index

800. Steve Carll

April is the Readingest Month

Wed 23 Apr 1997

Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday (April 12th-15th) constituted a grand slam of poetry to rival January's Triple Crown.

Saturday in Golden Gate Park was the 2nd Antenym contributors' reading. Although the weather was a mite cloudier than the previous Saturday, it was fairly warm and there were plenty of critters about to punctuate the readings, including a beautiful orange feral cat (recently feral, apparently: still had a collar) and an insistent quail.

Douglas Powell went first, reading several witty and smart poems from which I'd like to quote, but someone had borrowed my pen, so the only one I can regale you with is the one he spun off of Ginsburg, which went something like this:

the mind is a shapely genital, and a face is a fig leaf.

Then recent S.F. transplant Rob Hale, who had several family members in attendance, got up in a sharp suit and read from a series which has several pieces in _Antenym_ 12:

these days have been mauve--but that doesn't sound possible the mesh of so many laws allows the big fish to go free in a small room, a large heart enclosed in a body my country is a model of water purification in the heart, there is another heart, clean as the sea. But the sea isn't clean.
the mirror doubles as a bee's nest
the irony, or whatever

Finally we got to hear what George Albon's been writing lately. But first he read a bit from Osip Mandelstam:

continent lifting itself on paws out of the sea.

George read from _Rehabilitation_:

what is hound?
terratoma, brain-compass
what is map?
slice sphere involving compromise pirates in the green space making [...] wrestlers fall, fall, fall with each thud a portion of the metaphysic escapes
the first day of more day

Chris Daniels, Darin DeStefano, Eric Selland (I think), my sister, my cousin, my nephew were among those spotted in the audience, and after the reading my relatives and I went to a cafe and then to Mission Street to have burritos and visit the new head shop on 24th St. (man they want a lot of money for those lava lamps)

On Sunday at the 3300 Club there was a reading for John High's new book _The Sasha Poems_ featuring John and Harry Polkinhorn. Four people signed up for the open mic which was intended to follow (actually five, but one got cold feet or something and didn't answer when called), but it was decided to have two of us warm up instead. Jack and Adelle Foley went first, reprising the work (re-assembled from Ginsburg lines about death) that got them on the front page of the _Examiner_. Then I read a couple short poems, one from the new _Antenym_ and the other from my notebook (turns out it's still in need of some punctuation).

John was ready by then, and read several of the Sasha Poems, begun both as a way of dealing with despair and a way of communicating with his young daughter. Some lines I particularly liked were:

she healed herself and even the dead one found it pleasing the chanting, like smoke, lifting from the Siberian snow
the moon so blue, chilled
there are those who listen to this music, and those who color its sound all these abandoned shoes, walking about the windmills to the south a winged butterfly moving toward the predawn face what happened to the father that he is distracted by the voice of God?

There was a short break that allowed the assembled to mingle and order more drinks. (The assembled being, among others, Thoreau Lovell, Michelle Murphy, Andrew Joron, Don Hilla, Jandy Nelson, Jonathan Hayes, Joseph Aukee, Laurie Amat, Norman Fischer, and Anne (Andrew, was that Anne Lamott or another Anne?). I happened to mention to John that I had just turned 30, and Jandy said I must be having my Saturn return (right she was!)

Back to the reading. Harry Polkinhorn, up from San Diego, read from three works, "Stein", _Mount Soledad_, and _Throat Shadows_, which contained lines such as the following:

an ambiguous power over the falconry of desire egregious positing of [sorry, didn't get the word here] looks-at-you your body exploded in its own manner of speaking sucking the circular brilliance of the upper world into my own eyes a present person does not mirror an absent one

Jonathan Hayes and one other open-mic reader later, we were deep into the lasagna some wonderful person had made (was it proprietor Nancy Keane, as I assume?) and conversation. Jandy and I took the astrology route (though I won't bore anyone else with the details, except to say that Jandy's a Sagittarius with Pisces rising).

Cut to Monday night at Canessa Park, where series curator read with Ron Silliman. Good crowd for a Monday night, including Brian Lucas, Norman Fischer, Eric Selland and Naoko, Colleen Lookingbill, Steve Tills, Spencer Selby, Kevin Killian, Norma Cole, Lyn Hejinian, Kit Robinson, Leslie Scalapino, Paul Hoover, Maxine Chernoff and Steve Vincent.

Avery read two translations of Salvatore Quasimodo that appear in _lyric&_ #5, and from his manuscripts _Differing Senses of Motion_ and _The City Speaks in Many Tongues_.

the lizard in dormant awe
my scar-filled bean trees running into each other at 70 miles per hour starry richness of night?!
this rain is a sign of rain
"things are in the saddle and ride mankind"--Ralph Waldo Emerson blinded by the not quite sunset source as silence
cotton is king again

Ron, introduced as still probably the most effective anthologizer (I'm paraphrasing) of "the Formerly Known as Language Poets", then read from _Ketjak II_, which he said he's been working on since 1988 or -9:

memories of underdevelopment for each and every sentence, an equal and opposite sentence the odor from the cud of their great truck definition itself is a form of Manhattan the whale that ate Liberty Valance brushing dead leaves off of dry poets
Antarctica has no legal time
Vanpools of the night, unite!
is seriousness boredom come of age?

Then on the 15th at New College, Eileen Myles read to a packed house in the Cultural Center. Lyn Hejinian, Gloria Frym, Jean Day, Michael Price, Shauna Hannibal, Kevin Killian, Dodie Bellamy, Giovanni Singleton, Bob Gluck and Alison were in the house as Eileen rolled poems off her tongue in a thick New York accent:

even the millennium is unspeakably long I'm beginning to trample you all with my big ass daily
it's the openness of summer that disturbs me there may come a day when my dog will eat cat food the blood in the eyes of the cars under the spotlight--eep!
he's like a big posing gondola we must offer ourselves up as food or eat someone not a poet, but a donut or a myth prose fills the window and becomes abstract now that we're through virtual reality, we can try virtue, that might work the word wiggly describes my desire
I believe in you like a door that returns and a poem that Eileen was pleased to report she heard through the lesbian grapevine that Adrienne Rich had giggled at, which reads in its entirety (of course I'm omitting any line breaks that may exist in the original):

Her tongue and her heart were throbbing in the holster of her pussy.

Coming soon: my report on some more S.F. readings....

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

801. henry
Re: horse apples
Wed 23 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997 17:43:50 -0400 Bobbie West said:
>Henry Gould wrote:
>
>>(as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure?
>>Brown, Brown, Brown.")
>
>As we all know, the color of horse manure depends on whether it's fresh or >well-aged. Uncle George obviously prefers the well-aged variety, since fresh >horse apples are green, green, green.

Actually, this became quite an issue between Uncle George & me. He claimed poetic license based on an obscure tradition from Taigetos, a wild region of northern Greece (horse country, for sure), where they practice something called aeiphatosmosastoupoulos, or "satire using horse manure imagery". I said he was just making fun of my institutionalization of hired learning. I'll be reading transcripts from our recorded dialogues from Fargo, MN at the poetry & public shusphere conference at Rutgers, in room 101 (across from the men's room). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

802. Jordan Davis
Re: Rukeyser Reprints
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Same address as Poetry City, to wit:

Teachers & Writers Collaborative
5 Union Square West, 7th Floor
New York NY 10003-3306

ph [redacted]
fax [redacted]

email (me) [redacted] or [redacted]

Don't forget to come this THURSDAY at 7 PM to hear Maureen Owen and Ed Berrigan

Jordan

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997, LYNES- KATHERINE wrote:

> Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> Pierre == Muriel Rukeyser's being celebrated here at Teachers & Writers on May 8 (reservations required, call now).
>
> where is "here"? kl

↑ Index

803. Mark Prejsnar
Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part one): Berkeley White
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Aldon--

Report on the whiteness conference is fabulous..As someone who's interested in all these issues (and consider 'em very germane to poetry), I found this helpful and fascinating.

This kind of thing is a major service, at least to me. (..in a very different way I also value the I-was-there reports of Steve Carll, the Michael Musto of the SF poetry scene; useful for the deprived who unfortunately are not (there)....)

from the isolate outback of the cotton and poetry plantation,

Mark P.

↑ Index

804. henry
Re: Poem for Rent
Wed 23 Apr 1997

---

this is great. I'm gonna try to read this post at our little conclave tonight on the public role of poetry.

- Henry of the Giordano Bruno Palaver Palace

"God created prairie dogs. Then he let them do the rest." - Jack Spandrift

"You know, old boy, there's a poem there somewhere."
- Eric Blarnes

"God exists in my own mind & he has a hell of a case of cabin fever." - Henry Gould

↑ Index

805. henry
Re: individuality and capitalism
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Once upon a time there was a village in the hills called Squattle Falls. People worked hard just to keep the mill open and the jail closed and the furnace running and the plow polished and the grill hot and the potatoes fried. Everybody knew everybody (and that includes Jodie & Bob over on Lilac Lane). Barnet S. Robinson of the distinguished sherriff & militia clan of Robinsons owned a lot of property (right up against Governor Limpet's estate) & he got richer & richer in a single-minded way. His kids were spoiled rotten except Leonard became one hell of a lawyer & Louise is now chairwoman of the D.A.R. for Junta County. Now the Robinson Tool Works is owned by a southeast Asian conglomerate, and everybody works hard just to make ends meet. Sprint Blodgett set up a website for Squattle Falls, can you believe it or not. You can find out more about us at http://bingo.individuals.org. Or just ask Professor Weber over there at State U. He's done a book that sure pulls it all together, yah.

- Herbert J. Antintellectualatall (a real person!)

↑ Index

806. Dave Zauhar
Re: "As a matter of fact, i do, Cubby"
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a love of BASKETball?
>
> Well, not in this household, but back on the WC, San Diego way, Quincy Troupe, son of a basketball player, player near-pro himself til is knee quit on him, has had basketball themes run through his work all along.

Is this true? (not the stuff about the themes, etc). I know that Quincy Troupe's father, Quincy Trouppe, played in the Negro leagues from 1930 until their demise (for the KC Monarchs, Homestead Greys, the Chicago American Giants, and others), and then briefly in the majors. This wouldn't leave much time to play basketball seriously. But then again, in those days you didn't get rich playing baseball, esp. in the Negro Leagues, so I can see where he would have had to barnstorm at hoops too, to make a living.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

807. Fred Muratori
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>similar love of BASKETball?
>>
>>bill marsh
>

You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what it's worth.

It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing. An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf were incompatible, morally so, as I remember. This, however, came from someone who had never played the game, and who assumed that only rich stockbrokers indulged, ignorant of the fact that almost every summer weekday evening the links are crowded with hard workin' factory folk tearing up the fairways with their company leagues. Par to the people.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

808. Mark Weiss

Re: horse apples

Wed 23 Apr 1997

---

when I was a child I spent summers in camps in the mountains of pennsylvania with a bunch of other urban kids. by analogy with snowballs, we used to have manure fights. This makes me something of an expert. The lady has it. The deal was to find a turd that had dried enough so that it could be molded into a proper sphere but fresh enough so that it would still cause offence.

What a relief to tell the story. I have been afraid that this piece of folklore would die with me and the world be impovrished by its loss.

At 05:43 PM 4/22/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Henry Gould wrote:
>

>>(as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure?
>>Brown, Brown, Brown.")
>
>As we all know, the color of horse manure depends on whether it's fresh or >well-aged. Uncle George obviously prefers the well-aged variety, since fresh >horse apples are green, green, green.
>
>B.W. (a former surf lurker grazing on Henry's turf.)
>
>

↑ Index

809. Colin Browne
Re: desublimation/eliade
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> For more on Eliade see Norman Manera's essay "Felix Culpa" in his ON CLOWNS: THE DICTATOR AND THE ARTIST (NY: Grove Weidenfeld, 1992). CB

↑ Index

810. Mark Weiss
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Poetic sports? Most sports fall into three categories--skills of war, skills of hunting, forlorn hope that sportstogs will tear in interesting ways (the greeks combined these by having athletes compete naked). Then there's a remnant category--skills of labor. My favorite of these is the ox-pull, practiced at county fairs in New England (and beyond?). A pair of enormous oxen are hitched to a sledge laden with concrete blocks. The pair gets three tries at pulling each weight for, I think, ten feet. What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood. As if by contagion, their human entourage neither. Despite the fact that consistent losers are likely to wind up as hamburger (analogy with mesoamerican ballgame?). And also (antecedent--wonderful) that the vast bulk of the time is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen, hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc. If the poetic in sports is in proportion to the slowness of the game, this beats baseball by a mile. The audience, sometimes larger than at most poetry readings, tends to be on the laconic side--zen farmers who've sat once too often. Did you know that if you sit absolutely still for long enough your brain, responding to gravity, begins to puddle? That's what I love about ox-pulls.

At 01:44 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>>similar love of BASKETball?
>>>
>>>bill marsh
>>
>You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in >Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse >fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's >a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what >it's worth.
>
>It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, >baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore
>"poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.
>An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once >mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought >up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf >were incompatible, morally so, as I remember. This, however, came from >someone who had never played the game, and who assumed that only rich >stockbrokers indulged, ignorant of the fact that almost every summer >weekday evening the links are crowded with hard workin' factory folk >tearing up the fairways with their company leagues. Par to the people.
>
>*******
>Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep
>
>([redacted]) getting bigger & more
>
>Reference Services Division important."
>Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries - John Ashbery
>Cornell University
>Ithaca, NY 14853
>WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

811. Joel Felix
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

At 01:44 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>>similar love of BASKETball?

Myself I find basketball to be my great love these years, tho maybe i'm a victim of the generational decline of baseball myth. Is it true that baseball is less poetic than it was once, as they report on the tv? Any of you all ever read Tom Clark's Fan Poems, from '76? May I hazard my opinion that it was a truly awful book? A couple monthes ago I set out to re-write it, using the same title, and now instead find myself writing paeans to Chris Webber. Still stuck in '92 with the Fab Five, I guess, t-ing for one last time out.

Joel Felix

↑ Index

812. Hank Lazer
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

A major hoops fan (alas, for Syracuse too): John Taggart.

As for Fred Muratori's unearthing that charged topic, golf, I'll go on record as a fanatic. And yes, Fred, the poetry & golf connection does produce odd responses. I do know of a number of fellow golf-addicts on this list, but I will not name names....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

813. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Joe Napora's Bullhead IS in Spencer Selby's list.

> You can get BULLHEAD from Joe for five dollars at:
>
> 2205 Moore Street
> Ashland, Kentucky 41101

--dave baptiste chirot

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997, Christopher Alexander wrote:

> Alright, Joe Napora, come on out, I give up.
> I've been looking through the archive for any > *mention of BullHead & how to get it but I*
>
> just can't seem to find it, even on the mag list
> (Thank you, Spencer Selby) posted last October,
> nor can I find your address for that matter. We
>
> all know you're in here somewhere, so "don't you > think it would be best for all concerned if we > just took care of this matter quietly right now?"
>
> Chris
> ..
> Christopher Alexander, etc.
> nominative press collective
> 160S 1300E #16
> Salt Lake City UT 84102
> [redacted]
>
> n/formation issue 1.1 now online:
> http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

↑ Index

814. William Burmeister Prod

Re: ReHoops

Wed 23 Apr 1997

Fred Muratori writes:

> baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore
> "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.

It's in the pitching too. There's poetry in the pitching, or at least I think so from my few years on the mound. Spicer said poets think that they are the pitcher when in fact they are the catcher. I think it can go either way; one can't do without the other. Gerald Early (I think that's right) has a couple of nice prose articles in the APR on baseball and poetry from last year (summer I think).

Bill B.

↑ Index

815. Henry Gould
more of yr favorite arthur
Wed 23 Apr 1997

here's the whole poem of which a line was drawn in San Francisco by O. Mandelstam, trans by McKanes, with improvements (in his mind at least) by H. Gould:

Birth of the Smile

When a child starts to smile, with a crease of bitterness and sweetness, honestly, the ends of his grin go off into the anarchy of the ocean.

He feels invincibly good,
the corners of his lips play in glory,
already the rainbow stitch is sewn for the endless understanding of reality.

At the flux and flow of the mouth's snail
the mainland rose out of the water on its paws, and one world-shouldering moment is revealed to the slender tune of praise and surprise.

1937.

Translation of course is a poor substitute. This too was written in Voronezh in the year of the Terror. Mandelstam's music of phanopeia/ melopeia/logopeia - his bridge of pathos/joy - is utterly invincible & is the apex of the M(illenium). He is maybe close to Yeats - the same "eagle mind" but without that sort of cat-like feral coldness Yeats sometimes displays.

One of his few pleasures in exile was listening to the radio. He wrote this poem after hearing Marian Anderson (she was on tour in Moscow).

I am buried in the lion's den and into this fortress
I sink lower, lower and lower, listening to the yeasty cloudburst of sounds stronger than the lion, more powerful than the Pentateuch.

How closely your voice calls to me:
mankind before the commandments,
like the strings of ocean pearls and the slender baskets of Tahitian girls.

The strong deep notes of your chastising song are like an advancing continent.

The savage sweet faces of spoiled daughters are not worth the matriarch's little finger.

My time is still limitless, and I abetted the rapture of the universe the way a quiet organ's playing accompanies a woman's voice.

[trans. by McKanes with slight improvements] think of Marian Anderson singing at the Lincoln Memorial in the 30s over the heads of the D.A.R. & Mandlestam is listening to her, over there in Voronezh. & it's the 30s and it's now. - T.S. Eliot after a double on the rocks with lime

↑ Index

816. Daniel Bouchard
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once > mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought > up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf > were incompatible, morally so, as I remember.

Fred -- trhere is of course Toby Olson, lovely poet & novelist & golfer who has a splendid book of the latter variety that deals with golf. -- Pierre

In fact, golf is used as an agent of good (against evil) in Seaview. A fine novel; morally compatible for even the best golfers.

[redacted]

↑ Index

817. Jordan Davis
50 poem collar
Wed 23 Apr 1997

You know, the stock market has a fifty point collar that holds up trading almost every day these days the idea being to allow things to cool off, but when the lock comes off (the button?)
trading tends to go on at the same pace as before!

Which is not to draw any analogies between this list and the stock market, at least none between any of the things people say about either ...

speculating pinky,
Jordan
who reminds you to come hear Maureen Owen author of "Poem to Piss Everyone Off" tomorrow
(NY!)

↑ Index

818. David Israel
& now, a comic [morbid] interlude . . .
Wed 23 Apr 1997

---

a friend sent me this:

From John Dvorak's May 6 _Inside Track_ column in PC Magazine.

<< It Was Bound to Happen Dept.: Leif Technologies ([redacted]) is showing an unusual new tombstone add-on called View.logy (about $5000 to $7000). It's a computerized system with an LCD screen and a couple of buttons that allows people to read your biography, access family tree information, and view whatever else can fit into 250 pages of memory at your final resting place. The double-walled stainless-steel unit is designed to last forever or until Armageddon, whichever comes first. Right now this system displays text and pictures on a gravestone or cremation urn, but I'm sure more applications will arive. >>

One wonders about -- a few technicalities. Like: postmortem editing? (add-ons of descendents? -- provisions for inclusion / exclusion of begats...); hypertext links? sound/video files? "live" connections to websites in perpetuity? -- and a new botique niche for RIP-VID scriptwriters & directors & producers -- & the special eclat of having (say) Wim Wenders or David Lynch "do" your r.i.p.-vid. -- (those are a few, for starters) . . .

"r.i.p., hombre"
d.i.

↑ Index

819. Mark Weiss
Re: horse apples
Wed 23 Apr 1997

If horse-shit fights were an organized sport poets would be banned from the amateurs.

At 11:21 AM 4/23/97 -0700, you wrote:
>when I was a child I spent summers in camps in the mountains of pennsylvania >with a bunch of other urban kids. by analogy with snowballs, we used to have >manure fights. This makes me something of an expert. The lady has it.
>The deal was to find a turd that had dried enough so that it could be molded >into a proper sphere but fresh enough so that it would still cause offence.
>
>What a relief to tell the story. I have been afraid that this piece of >folklore would die with me and the world be impovrished by its loss.
>
>At 05:43 PM 4/22/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>Henry Gould wrote:
>>
>>>(as my Uncle George used to sing: "What's the color of horse manure?
>>>Brown, Brown, Brown.")
>>
>>As we all know, the color of horse manure depends on whether it's fresh or >>well-aged. Uncle George obviously prefers the well-aged variety, since fresh >>horse apples are green, green, green.
>>
>>B.W. (a former surf lurker grazing on Henry's turf.)
>>
>>
>
>

↑ Index

820. Keith Tuma
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

re Hoops

there's the opening to _What_ now obsolete 'cause of the WNBA and procrustean Walter Benn Michaels once told me that he knew the west coast langpo boys best from basketball rather than poesy

and despite bad knees barry watten volunteered for a game in orono that never took place and tim bahti once told me a funny story about stanley fish yelling at a grad student "hey yr not ever to play without me again" or something of the sort as i guess sf had been forced to the sidelines or wasn't getting his shots and alan shapiro played as an undergrad at brandeis and sees the court pretty well and rumor has it once turned down a chance to pick up a game in nc with mike j. figuring he'd be the only one ever offered that possibility who could say THAT and i recommend all you bards send yr books to phil jackson so he can pass them out to players on the road and you can say that rodman and kukoc didn't read my book as they hung out in hotels and made $250,000 a night

dribble dribble

↑ Index

821. Rachel Loden
there's a man on the fairway taking names
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Hank Lazer wrote:

> As for Fred Muratori's unearthing that charged topic, golf, I'll go on record as a fanatic. And yes, Fred, the poetry & golf connection does produce odd responses. I do know of a number of fellow golf-addicts on this list, but I will not name names....

Now what sort of fun is it if you won't name names? But I like what Mencken had to say on the subject: "If I had my way, any man guilty of golf would be ineligible for any office of trust in the United States."

Rachel L.

↑ Index

822. Pritchett,Pat
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

You can add Jack Collom and Michael Friedman to that list. As for me, I had the distinction of playing on the worst H.S. team in South Bend Indiana - the Marian Knights - in the early 70's. We went 1-12 before I quit. God, did we suck! Jack opines that the Bulls are so eminently watchable not just b/c of their preternatural court prowess but b/c they are easily the most eccentric collection of players in the league. (Is anyone else beginning to find Jordan's impersonable perfection cloying? My favorite was Magic Johnson - with the possible exception of Cousy and the Big O, the smartest player ever to step onto the court).

And why is it that baseball (which moves too slowly for me) inspires such good writing and basketball doesn't? I can only think of two good books on hoops - Halberstam's _Breaks of the Game_ which unfortunately was written by Halberstam ("He was Bill. He was Bill Walton.") and John McPhee's marvelous book on Bill Bradley at Princeton, _A Sense of Where You Are_?

Golf is a truly sublime sport, as anyone who's ever sunk a difficult putt or knocked the dimples off a tee shot knows. I know Paul Naylor is a player, but I've never met any other poet who professed to like the game. I'd play more - but then I couldn't buy books!

Patrick Pritchett

From: Fred Muratori
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: ReHoops
Date: Wednesday, April 23, 1997 2:09PM

>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>similar love of BASKETball?
>>
>>bill marsh
>
You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what it's worth.

↑ Index

823. Joe Safdie
Re: Re Hoops, Lurking and The Divine Analogy
Wed 23 Apr 1997

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Did you know that if you sit absolutely still for long enough your brain, responding to gravity, begins to puddle?

Hasn't Mark found the real alternative, here, to lurking? I humbly submit PUDDLING to the multitude! Just puddling along, not really diving in; puddling through the posts. I dunno, sounds good to me.

About sports, and recent messages concerning same: would anyone be interested in collaborating on what may not be a RENGA but would definitely be some sort of post-individual piece on the NBA playoffs? "I" "myself" (sorry, Mark Wallace _et al_, an ingrained habit) try to compose some improvisational thing or other on the occasion of the World Series every year; this would of course be quicker, the associations more "instanter" as Olson had it, but might be fun.

And finally, if I may be permitted a short excursus on the thread last week that (briefly) bore my name in the subject line, along with that Canadian fella . . . my lone, rather small, contribution to the individual/social conversation was quickly metamorphosed into a defense of some romantic heroic/artistic individualism which I didn't recognize as ever having said (although I have nothing against individuals, some of my best friends . . .) I was concerned, rather, with what I perceived as the stated likelihood of the artist's work -- by which I mean yours, mine or anyone else's on this list -- being subsumed by the institution he or she was a part of: not quite the same thing.

I wish I had Olson's _Selected_ at hand, because I'm now going to butcher something he wrote (Michael B., are you still around?), something like "I deplore the current substitution of the social for the cosmos, the totality" -- that gets closer to what, in this context, I believe. Me and Giordano Bruno. And maybe even Henry the Bold, whose remarks on Joyce and the "real world" a few days back are still ringing.

Not a Boeing Supersonic fan, though currently puddling in Seattle,

Joe Safdie

↑ Index

824. Shaunanne Tangney

Re: ReHoops

Wed 23 Apr 1997

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Fred Muratori wrote:

> It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.

oh, for me it's all about basketball. perhaps because i went to my 1sy bball game when i was 27 days old (my dad's a coach) and thus it has been a part of my life forever. but it's not so sentimental, really. basketball is an art/form. impossible things happen on a basketball court. and they happen because they are confined to that court. just like in poetry, impossible things happen--because they are confined to the poem. there are rules, forms, a space in which to play, to perform--and when all of those things are maintained: the impossible happens. is made to happen. no human body should be able to do what chamberlin's or west's or abdul-jabbar's or bird's or jordan's did/does and language isn't supposed to do what it does in a poem, what the poet makes it do. i suppose you could make this analogy of (m)any sport(s)--but there is something about basketball--something about the form and formalism of it. baseball has its infinitude; football and ice hockey their recklessness; but basketball (and tennis, too, i think) are about form and formalism, making impossible things happen w/in that form. . .

--shaunanne

↑ Index

825. Small Press Traffic
Ronald Johnson reading in SF
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Hi, this is Dodie. The staff at SPT just found out that Ronald Johnson will be reading from ARK in the New College Theater (777 Valencia Street) on Thursday, May 1, 7:30 p.m. His reading is sponsored by the Poetics Program at New College.

Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
766 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110 415/[redacted]

↑ Index

826. Small Press Traffic
the next 2 Fridays at SPT
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Small Press Traffic Presents

Friday, April 25, 7:30 p.m.

Talk Series:
Kristin Prevallet on Helen Adam

New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
$5

Small Press Traffic's _Talk Series_ continues with this special event featuring poet Kristin Prevallet, who will discuss her research on the life and work of Helen Adam, one of the brightest lights of the San Francisco Renaissance. Scottish-born Helen Adam (1909-1992) was a mystic balladeer, who wrote and thought in the language of Dunbar and Ingoldsby while maintaining intimate friendships with Robert Duncan, Jack Spicer, Madeline Gleason, James Broughton, and countless others in the poetry-mad world of the Bay Area of the 1950s and 60s. A gifted storyteller, collagist and photographer, she is best remembered for her tragicomic operetta _San Francisco's Burning!_

Kristin Prevallet's _Perturbation, My Sister: A study of Max Ernst's Hundred Headless Woman,_ is forthcoming this spring from First Intensity Press. She is an editor of _apex of the M,_ and is working on a video based on _The Rime of the Ancient Mariner._ For the past three years she has been cataloguing the archive of Helen Adam at the Poetry/Rare Books Collection at SUNY Buffalo.

At this event, Prevallet will give a slide presentation of Adam's life and times, and will introduce the restored version of _Daydream of Darkness,_ the film made by Helen Adam and the painter William McNeill in 1962-3. _Daydream of Darkness,_ a poetic film fantasia, was shown only once, at Robin Blaser's Peacock Gallery on the eve of JFK's assassination, and then abandoned. In the course of her research, Prevallet discovered the film, its celluloid near rotting, and has arranged its restoration for this grand re-premiere!

Please note: Prevallet will be reading from her own poetry at a separate event this same weekend, at Canessa Park, 708 Montgomery Street, Sunday, April 27th, at 3:00 p.m. Do not confuse the 2 events-our event is the one and only Helen Adam presentation!

Friday, May 2, 7:30 p.m.

Joanne Kyger
Dale Smith

New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
$5

What an event! Joanne Kyger, an active presence in the Bay Area poetry scene for forty years, has lived the life I've always dreamed of. She's the author of 14 books of poetry: she's seen it all, she's done it all, and she grows younger instead of older-my ideal! The friend of Olson, Spicer, Wieners, Berrigan, and so many more, Kyger has crafted a poetry of excitement and spiritual revelation which influences the younger generation of today. The range and energy of her writing seems to re-distribute the molecules of the air we breathe, and the social space we inhabit. Her most recent book is _Some Sketches from the Life of Helena Petrovna Blavatsky_ (Boulder: Rodent Press, 1996). This summer she will be teaching at the Naropa Institute.

Dale Smith returns to San Francisco from Austin, Texas, where he has recently completed a thesis on Philip Whalen's poetry for his MA from New College. Smith's writing is always surprising, ranging from elegaic to formally combustible, but always with a romantic Western undercurrent. "Wanting/ to live furious, the living/ as distinct a thing as things/ themselves." His work is forthcoming in _GAS_ and _Jejune_ and has appeared in _Mirage, Exquisite Corpse,_ and _Wired_. With Michael Price he edits the magazine _Mike and Dale's Younger Poets_. "Other than that, I get high, read, and hang out with Hoa."

Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
766 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110 415/[redacted]

↑ Index

827. George Bowering

Re: ReHoops

Wed 23 Apr 1997

> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?
>
> bill marsh

Well, I did have 2 free tickets for g ames 3 and 4 of last year's NBA final, except that I had to sit with a bunch of Bulls' family and friends at the Dome.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

828. George Bowering
Re: horse apples
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Our Okanagan horse bun fights were something like that. Not the soputh Okanagan is desert country, so horse buns would get crispy dry on the outside while they were still green on the inside. Perfect for picking up without disgust and throwing against the other kid's shirt (on the days when we wd wear shirts), because they would burst and spread. Other good things for throwing were tree-ripened peaches and clumps of really high-growing couch grass, whixch you wd swirl and hurl. They wd hit dirt first.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

829. George Bowering
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

In an anthology of fiction about sports that I once edited, there was one story about golf, by David Helwig of Kingston, a poet and fistion writer. But that's the only one I remember seeing, and IU dont remember any golf poetry. Wait, didnt that novelist whose name starts with U. write fiction abt golf?

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

830. George Bowering
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Last summer I went to a soccer game (Vancouver 3, Seattle 2) with Bromige, and we had , because of his son, a thermos of gin and a thermos of vermouth and some plastic cups. Bromige told me that in England this was quite customary. I believed him,

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

831. David Israel
orient v. occident
Wed 23 Apr 1997

interesting that the word "europe" is parsed (via some or other root) to mean "west" just as the word "asia" (in like wise) has roots in "east" -- which brings me to David Bromage's occidental complaint, namely & to wit:

<<<
Date: Mon, 21 Apr 1997 14:00:32 -0500
From: David Bromige <[redacted]>
Subject: marianne moore's poems
<snip>
PPS The 50-posts-per-day limit is unfair to Westerners, esp to BC, Oregon, Washington state & California residents. Unless we're insomniacs, the dice of the day's debate are loaded against us. Would like to see some proportional representation system worked out to redress this imbalance.
>>>

proportional, as in, numerically representative of a ratio of subscribers? (or of just those who post? -- swimmers rather than swimmers + lubbers)? -- as if one were to take a census & figure out how many are in eastern U.S. time zone & how many in western U.S. [the two assumed poles of the above idea] and then ration it out somehow? . . . and where does that leave our friends down in Oz?

-- or (say) Stephen Paul Miller (now in Krakow, Poland) or . . . so, in theory, there could be issues . . .

David B. posted the above-quoted note early in the day on Monday [from California], but I didn't get it till today [Wednesday] -- it was being compiled in Wednesday's digest [being a hold-over form a day well past its 50-limit], till I switched from digest to nodigest mode . . .

David I. [aka moi], on the other hand, attempted to make a post at 4:45 p.m. today (here in the mystic east), and got this response from LaMama Computer:

>>> L-Soft list server at University at Buffalo (1.8c)
<[redacted]> 04/23/97 04:45pm
>>>
The distribution of your message dated Wed, 23 Apr 1997 16:40:50
-0400 with subject "& now, a comic [morbid] interlude . . ." has been postponed because the daily message limit for the POETICS list (50) has been exceeded. No action is required from you; your message will be reprocessed automatically once the list owner releases the list.

/ / / / /

I'm thinking of this & trying to reckon (or sourt out) against whom the dice of the day are/were loaded; but I can't quite reach clear conclusions. Today, the 50-limit was reached quite early -- and true enough, it was 3 hours earlier in California than in New York; on the other hand, you westerners get a clean slate & a clear road directly after the New York Midnight -- which is 9:00 p.m. for you'all, so you've got clear sailin' at that end of the day, while we -- to participate in any early-list reparte, must needs burn the proverbial midnight oil . . .

DB also allows:
<<< You c o u l d place a ceiling upon the number of postings by an (excuse the term) individual per day. db >>>

yes, but some folks have these neat little rejoinders & suchlike, while others have these fantastic, billowing essayish items -- and how, praytell, is that to be well-sorted by a mere number-of-posts factor? . . .

in short, I don't really have a position on this. Another listserv that I participate in has a number-of-posts limit set at 10 / day -- and that's something that, there, folks are rarely aware of (once or twoice, I've met up with it meself, but this indicates my prolixity in that corral . . .) -- yes, there could be some such limit; one thing it would perhaps encourage would be longer (or even more "thought out" posts) -- but do we necessarily want either of those forces at the steering wheel ? ?

nuff (as they say) sed,

d.i.

↑ Index

832. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: articulated skeletons
Wed 23 Apr 1997

---

lurk flit flitter-- flitting always shy of fitting . . .

if I a-r-t-i-culate myself enter the "social contract"
become bone is my skin individuality?

flesh is appetite
my fondness for . . .

shall I be lost
if you find me?
(without doubt)

↑ Index

833. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: "the divine analogy which is the unity of the human race"?
Wed 23 Apr 1997

On Tue, 22 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

In a dogless context we run off with the cat.

precious.

↑ Index

834. Dave Zauhar
Re: poetry and golf (was ReHoops)
Wed 23 Apr 1997

> A major hoops fan (alas, for Syracuse too): John Taggart.
>
> As for Fred Muratori's unearthing that charged topic, golf, I'll go on record as a fanatic. And yes, Fred, the poetry & golf connection does produce odd responses. I do know of a number of fellow > golf-addicts on this list, but I will not name names....

>
> Hank Lazar

The strangest amalgamation of poetry and golf I can think of are those stories of Ted Berrigan, presumably, and oddly, a fan of the sport. At least one memoir I've read mentions him reading books on the history of the PGA tour, and he was known to compare the writing of poetry to Arnold Palmer charging on the back nine on the last day of an important tournament.

Dave Zauhar, currently working in Arnold Palmer's birthplace of Latrobe, PA, while dreaming of writing the definitive Berrigan biography

↑ Index

835. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: Video tomorow night (fwd)
Wed 23 Apr 1997

Although not strictly poetry, but poetics, I have a video show tomorrow night, Thursday, at 7:00, at the Knitting Factory here in NYC, 74 Leonard Street. I'm running out of Jennifer, btw, or vice versa, at this point; on Cybermind and Fop-l, I've been writing about the phenomenology of this ms/ recognition of problematic identity.

Alan

Doctress N's Expose of Jen's Lies

When Doctress N stayed with me a few weeks ago (having come for the launch party of the Being on Line book), I screened the Jennifer tape for her. Later, in the middle of arguing, she said she knew now that I wore pant- ies. I said, no, I didn't wear panties; I wore them for the tape and noth- ing else. (Since she had seen me naked, she should have realized that.)

Where is this going? For one thing, I'm screening the tape tomorrow night. For another, her reply was that she was an artist, and she never lied in her art. The assumption, of course, is that wearing panties on tape and not in real life constituted a lie, a dishonest art, an art of subterfuge perhaps - which itself was constituted by the fact that the material on the tape, its content, appeared somewhat _as if_ I was Jennifer, to re- suscitate Jeremy Bentham's or Vaihinger's conceit.

A fetish requires maintenance, labor, economics, of a different order and temporality than artwork, which passes literally from hand to hand. When I think:

Jennifer pushes me borderline, I _do_: Alan pushes Jennifer border- line. There's no hardness, no uncanny gaze, in the text.

But the primitive conceit of the _truth_ of art (i.e. "her art is honest," "she true to herself," "she's a fake," "her art's fake," and so forth) hangs like a phallus over its irreality. (For if art is a discourse, it is centrifugal, rim-objects at the subject's horizon generating internally, ec-centric. Truth _swarms._)

Forge a head.

↑ Index

836. Hugh Steinberg
Re: ReHoops
Wed 23 Apr 1997

>>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>>similar love of BASKETball?
>>>
>>>bill marsh
>>
Bill probably knows this already, but our mutual teacher at Arizona, Jon Anderson, is a fanatic, particularly of Arizona Wildcats basketball and the Boston Red Sox.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

837. jdhollo
further to sandhyabashing
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Hi, folks--& David Israel & his Sanskritist friend George Thompson, in particular: a note from Anne Waldman in response to G.T.s latest post on the matter--"Of course the so-called Beats, particularly Diane di Prima, Allen Ginsberg, and Jack Kerouac were quite familiar with & reading Eliade, but I have not come across particular use of the term 'sandhyabasha' in the context I was applying it in the Scripture (Kerouac) preface. This certainly does not preclude awareness of the principle, & it surfaces 'in spirit' in the long-awaited _Some of the Dharma_ (Kerouac) coming out this fall from Penguin USA. I see this text as illuminating the profound and interesting link of a postmodern poetics with Buddhist philosophical/psychological ideas and practices. There's so much more to say on this subject! In haste, Anne Waldman." End of transmission.

↑ Index

838. Herb Levy
Subtext readings for May, June, July
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Time now to relax & let our memories drift back to 1997, thirtieth anniversary of the summer of love.

Well, for some perhaps, but for others, 1997 was the year in which the [redacted] presented the following readings:

May 15
Belle Randall & Drew Gardner

June 19
Leslie Scalapino
(Scalapino will also conduct a workshop on the 20-21. The workshop is $40.

July 17
John Olson & Christine Stewart

All readings begin at 7:30 pm on the 3rd Thursday of the month at the Speakeasy Cafe, 2304 2nd Avenue in Seattle's increasingly fashionable Belltown district. Suggested donation is $5.

This quadrant of the perennially ongoing series was curated by Bryant Mason. (He's also responsible for the following couple of months, but that information is currently available on a need to know basis only.)

Also, writers from the Subtext collective uber-committee will be featured readers at the Red Sky reading Sunday may 4th, at 7:30 pm on 14th Ave between Pike & Pine Streets in Seattle.

Did I remember to make it clear that this all takes place in Seattle, in the capitol of the United States?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

839. Michael Boughn
Robert Duncan
Thu 24 Apr 1997

I've been working on ways to get the Peruvian governemnt involved in negotiating the release of the Duncan papers being held hostage in the poetry compound at Buffalo.

Anybody got any ideas?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

840. Kathleen Crown
Poetry and the Public Sphere
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Hey folks, We are gearing up for the Rutgers conference on contemporary poetry, "Poetry and the Public Sphere," which kicks off this afternoon at 3 p.m. with talks by Cary Nelson, Maria Damon, and Harriet Davidson. Thanks to a dedicated group of crazed graduate students, wacky professors, and mightily talented and energetic New Brunswick community poets, the conference will be huge, exciting, and explosive. The full program and travel information is posted on our website:

http://english.rutgers.edu/poetry.html.

Everyone is welcome! No need to pre-register. Tonight, readings by Amiri Baraka, Tracie Morris, Reg E. Gaines, Aileen Reyes, and Carl Hancock Rux. After a brief intermission, we will hold a tribute reading to Allen Ginsberg.

For those of you who cannot make it to the conference, Galinsky and Go! Poetry will be here taping events for a later broadcast and archive on his website (more information to follow). Thanks to everyone who helped make this event HAPPEN.

KC

--
****
Kathleen Crown
Rutgers English and Women's Studies
Conference Co-Coordinator, "Poetry and the Public Sphere"
P.O. Box 5054
New Brunswick, NJ 08903-5054
H: 908/[redacted]
W: 908/[redacted]
Dept. Fax: 908/[redacted]
[redacted]
****

↑ Index

841. Rachel Loden
Granby, Mon Amour
Thu 24 Apr 1997

George Bowering wrote:

> Words delight me, and so do sentences (and so do those little gestures Rachel makes, but that is another question).

Mister Bowering is confused again. What he remembers as "gestures" were, of course, my desperate attempts to hail a cab after that disastrous night in Granby, Quebec in 1973 (about which the less said the better). George had a lampshade on his head at the time and was alternately singing "O Canada" and reciting from the collected works of Charles Bukowski (one of his favorites), so I guess he must be forgiven for his lack of depth perception.

Rachel L.

↑ Index

842. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Poem for Rent
Thu 24 Apr 1997

The Lorber information was indeed delightful. As with the "BurmaSlave" campaign, this is much-needed creative linking between social action, political debate and poetry.

Daniel B., thanx for the updates about Boston/Cambridge. It should also be kept in mind that housing struggles are central to just about all of us, and things weren't better for most people even before the recent ultra-right attacks on rent-control. Under the old system, relatively few people of modest means could get rent-control in Brookline, Cambridge, and Boston; the system only applied to a small percentage of the rented housing stock. I lived in the 1980s in Somerville, a working class part of greater Boston where rent control had been successfully trashed in the seventies..Rents were rising so fast that Somerville natives were being driven out, dozens of families per week. I sometimes felt impatient with housing activists in the area, who concentrated for years on the impending attacks on rent-control, when the housing situation was dire for the majority of area working-class people, who couldn't get into the small number of controlled units. (In Cambridge and Brookline, though not Boston, there was virtually no link to need; so pertinacity and connections got some people rent control who didn't need it that much, while many who did hadn't a prayer--It bothered me how little the local left understood or cared about the limits of defending what was already in some ways a corrupt and inadequate system....)

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

↑ Index

843. Mark Prejsnar
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Actually, as a poet who's a baseball fan(atic), this belongs with Henry's multitudinous and well-cataloged horse-manure.....Most poets (like most real people) who know the game loathe that movie, precisely because of the putrid Norman Rockwell absurdity of it (I grew up knowing the sainted Norman myself, in Stockbridge, and posed for him as a kid--I know from bad Americana already).

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Fred Muratori wrote:

> It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.

↑ Index

844. Sylvester Pollet
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Up till now, I've resisted the urge to post a poem, but since I'm reading tonight in Ellsworth (Maine), and since this one comes so close to the description below, I've succumbed. It's from around 1980, & based on the Blue Hill Fair, annual Labor Day Weekend event.

September

Cast-concrete weights, five to the ton.
The front-end loader stacks them on the sledge--
it is the month of the ox-pull.

It looks like a contest for bellies--
men swollen with children, with bills,
swollen with biscuits and Bud.

Oxen wait and wait.
They have no place to go, no reason to go there,
shriveled scars for balls.

All afternoon the weights are added to the sledge;
the oxen strain, lurch forward past the stands,
the Ford-dump gears down and hauls it smoothly back.

Hoofprints and treadmarks in the dirt,
oxshit and oil.

In the stands, ice-cream and polite applause.
They wait all year for this, and then all afternoon.
There's something here I can't make out.
No thin man owns an ox.

Sylvester Pollet

> Poetic sports? Most sports fall into three categories--skills of war, skills of hunting, forlorn hope that sportstogs will tear in interesting ways (the greeks combined these by having athletes compete naked). Then there's a remnant category--skills of labor. My favorite of these is the ox-pull, practiced at county fairs in New England (and beyond?). A pair of enormous oxen are hitched to a sledge laden with concrete blocks. The pair gets three tries at pulling each weight for, I think, ten feet.
> What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood. As if by contagion, their human entourage neither. Despite the fact that consistent losers are likely to wind up as hamburger (analogy with mesoamerican ballgame?). And also (antecedent--wonderful) that the vast bulk of the time is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen, hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc.
> If the poetic in sports is in proportion to the slowness of the game, this beats baseball by a mile. The audience, sometimes larger than at most poetry readings, tends to be on the laconic side--zen farmers who've sat once too often.
> Did you know that if you sit absolutely still for long enough your brain, responding to gravity, begins to puddle? That's what I love about ox-pulls.
>
> At 01:44 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?
>
> bill marsh
>
> You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's

> a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what it's worth.
>
> It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing. An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf were incompatible, morally so, as I remember. This, however, came from someone who had never played the game, and who assumed that only rich stockbrokers indulged, ignorant of the fact that almost every summer weekday evening the links are crowded with hard workin' factory folk tearing up the fairways with their company leagues. Par to the people.
>
> *********
> Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep
>
> ([redacted]) getting bigger & more
>
> Reference Services Division important."
> *Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries* - John Ashbery
> Cornell University
> Ithaca, NY 14853
> WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
> *********

↑ Index

845. Jeff Hansen

what this list is (intended) to be about

Thu 24 Apr 1997

I have enjoyed being on this list for the past year and a half. The discussions are often lively, and I receive a lot of information on publications, conferences, etc. that I would otherwise not know about. But I do feel that we should all heed Charles Bernstein's latest revision of what the list is about. Note that this is not intended to be a list for anyone with a vague interest in poetry. It is intended for people committed to working through and on innovation. On top of that, "poetics" by its very definition involves intellectual theorizing. Therefore, it seems to me that criticizing people for being "high falutin'" or too intellectual on this list is contrary to what the owner of it intends. While I don't want to be a police officer, I do think we should all take note that this list is private and that it is intended for certain purposes. If our interests diverge from those intended by this list, maybe we should try to hook up to a different one.

A number of people have told me, backchannel, that they no longer post for fear of being pounced on by others who have not even carefully read the original post. Why are we here?

↑ Index

846. robert drake
announce POTEPOETZINE / POTEPOETTEXT
Thu 24 Apr 1997

---

peter ganick asked me to forward this--lbd

> Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 07:06:28 -0400
> From: Peter Ganick <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: [redacted]
> Organization: Potes & Poets Press, Inc.
> Subject: announce POTEPOETZINE / POTEPOETTEXT
>
> POTEPOETZINE, a new experimental e-zine
> is accepting e-mail addresses > for free subscriptions > to its irregularly, but frequently, > appearing series of issues....
>
> it will include the finest
> experimental poetry
> from all over the united states....
>
> also, a section of hartford area
> electronic artists will display > examples of electronic art....
>
> no submissions will be accepted > with subscription orders
> however issue ONE will contain > information about submitting to > issue TWO and POTEPOETTEXT,
> a series of electronic texts
> situated in the on-going discourse > in cultural theory worldwide....
>
> send e-mail only > (no telephone, fax, or post office)
> to: [redacted]....
>
> POTEPOETZINE....POTEPOETTEXT.... > new experimental poetry > and discourse....

↑ Index

847. Dale Smith

Re: what this list is (intended) to be about

Thu 24 Apr 1997

It's interesting how conversational and experiencial language is acceptable in certain threads, like Hoops. But to ask some one to explain their conceptual terms through similar experiencial language is frowned upon in other threads. When I used the word, 'highfalutin'' in my post to Mark, I was commenting upon his use of language, as well as my own. Critical, yes. But also self implicating, because I chose to address terms like 'individual' and 'social' which are, ultimately, open conceptually. Intellectual theorizing, debate, and response are different, for me, from conceptual declaration, as in, "there is no individual." In the end, these sorts of exchanges seem fun, lively, and engaging, if not, somehow clarifying. But if the posts seem unfair or damaging, perhaps those "with a vague interest in poetry" should be addressed publicly and taken to task. Otherwise, how will "innovation" take place? Thought, it seems, should be provoked and proved. And what better place for this kind of exchange than here, on this list.

By the way, could someone forward me Bernstein's revision. Dale

> I have enjoyed being on this list for the past year and a half. The discussions are often lively, and I receive a lot of information on publications, conferences, etc. that I would otherwise not know about. But I do feel that we should all heed Charles Bernstein's latest revision of what the list is about. Note that this is not intended to be a list for anyone with a vague interest in poetry. It is intended for people committed to working through and on innovation. On top of that, "poetics" by its very definition involves intellectual theorizing. Therefore, it seems to me that criticizing people for being "high falutin'" or too intellectual on this list is contrary to what the owner of it intends. While I don't want to be a police officer, I do think we should all take note that this list is private and that it is intended for certain purposes. If our interests diverge from those intended by this list, maybe we should try to hook up to a different one.
>
> A number of people have told me, backchannel, that they no longer post for fear of being pounced on by others who have not even carefully read the original post. Why are we here?

↑ Index

848. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part two): On the Wings of Atalanta (fwd)

Thu 24 Apr 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 23 Apr 1997 20:15:13 -0700 (PDT)
From: "Aldon L. Nielsen" <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: A Tale of Two Cities (part two): On the Wings of Atalanta

meanwhile -- after a brief sojourn in Los Angeles about which I speak no further, it was on to Atlanta and the College Language Association --

The College Language Association recently celebrated its 60th anniversary, this was its 57th conference, and, as mentioned in a previous post, the number of white academics in attendance does not seem to have increased by much in six decades -- not that white attendance is a measure of anything other than a continuing lack of interest on the part of persons employed at Historically White Universities and Colleges --

On the other hand -- there were far more students on hand than usual, though they hadn't meant to be on hand for a conference. As it happens, the conference was scheduled for the same weekend as the 17th annual Black College Spring Break Freaknik, always held on the beaches of Atlanta. Thursday night as the advance wave of students started checking into the hotel there was a certain amount of consternation as they discovered that the place was full of the very English and Foreign Language professors they were trying to escape --

I won't try to summarize lots of panels, but will tell you of some characteristic moments --

The first session I attended proved to be one of the most interesting of the weekend -- Titled "Migration and the African Diaspora in European Literature," it featured primarily medievalists -- Catherine Johnson of Georgia Southern U gave a good survey of "Medieval Europe's Struggle to Re-Define Self after Contact with the Black Moor," Reginald Bass talked about the image of blacks in medieval German literature, and Mario Chandler, who impressed me very much, read a paper on fictional representations of Juan Latino, bringing us into one Renaissance (the Spanish) at a conference where the word "renaissance" was more often preceded by the word "Harlem." At the banquet later in the conference, young Mario Chandler was awarded one of the CLA's small travel grants for research in Spain.

After some good papers on Wallace Thurman and Jessie Fauset, including one by Dolan Hubbard, who is working on a book about Thurman, it was on to the Langston Hughes Society's luncheon with guest speaker Arnold Rampersad.

Rampersad did manage to quote Hughes once or twice, but the subject of his talk was Jackie Robinson, which was about as close to poetry as things got that first day. Rampersad, for all you poet/baseball fans out there, is working with Mrs. Robinson on the authorized biography, out soon.

As a former Howard University lecturer, I was particularly pleased by the panel examining the legacy of Arthur P. Davis. Most interesting to me was post-panel discussion of Davis's initial hostility to the Black Arts poets and his later thaw with regards to a few of those writers (_not_ the poets I might have expected him to warn up to later at all). Angelyn Mitchell of Georgetown, whose anthology of African-American literary criticism is a good teaching tool despite its somewhat narrow selection, spoke of Davis's work as an anthologist.

That night there was a screening of W.E.B. DuBois in Four Voices, with the producer/director Louis Massiah there to talk about the film with those of us who were still awake after all the receptions at Spellman and the day's arguments.

next morning I was up early for one of the few poetry panels, a session on Robert Hayden, though I have to say the papers didn't seem to move the scholarship very far from where it already was. BUT, Angela Chamblee, after much difficulty with the AV equipment, put Hayden's Harriet Tubman poetry back together with Jacob Lawrence's Tubman series of paintings, and that was great fun. Bernard Bell chaired a session on Charles Johnson and Ishmael Reed that featured James Coleman and two of his grad. students, both of whom did an admirable job with their topics.

I went with great expectations to a panel on the theme of passing in the works of Charles Chesnutt and Nella Larsen, only to find that two of the panelists had passed up the opportunity to appear -- Left alone with her session chair was the remarkably collected and adaptable Tracyann Williams of CUNY, who, to judge from her talk on Larsen, will make a very good professor of literature when she gets that diss. done --

Went then to a general panel on "Narratives of Migration, Liberation and War," where Mary Helen Washington presented some of her work on the 50s, work that might have been a great addition to the Orono conference last Summer even though it was not about poetry. Washington is planning more 50s stuff for the American Studies conference in D.C. in the Fall -- a revelation to me in her presentation was the news (new to me, probably old to most of you) that the 1959 Negro Writers Conference [the first ever], sponsored by the American Society of African Culture had been funded by the CIA -- The focus of Washington's talk was novelist Frank London Brown and his realist novel _Trumbull Park_, which I had not known of before but will now look up.

That night featured the conference banquet and awards. Octavia Butler was the featured speaker, and gave an autobiographical address to such questions as "why write" and "why write that stuff?"

AND for all you Science Fiction listophiles, there is a call for papers out for a special issue of Callaloo on Octavia Butler -- the person to contact if you want to give the subject a try is:

Paulette Richards
Department of English
Loyola University
6363 St. Charles Ave.
New Orleans, LA 70118

[redacted]

fax # [redacted]

Next morning I had the great good luck to be the first speaker on the first panel of the last day -- talked about C.L.R. James -- was joined by an interesting grad. student named Mursalata Muhammad who talked about black American artists in Europe.

The last panel I got to brought things full circle in an odd way to the departure from Berkeley -- the subject of the panel was the Middle Passage -- Sophia Canatave of Tufts talked about literary aesthetics and the history of Middle Passage, Sheila Smith McKoy (Vanderbilt) spoke of a Kofi Awoonor novel I had somehow not heard of yet titled _Comes the Voyage Last_ (anybody out there read that yet? Awoonor is a poet.) and Iyunolu Osagie, of Penn State, gave a paper titled "Conceptualizing Blackness in Middle Passage Migrations." This last created quite a ruckus. Part of her paper was a sort of wondering out loud about what it might be like to define blackness in relation to itself instead of in relation to whiteness. In the resulting dialogue with the audience there was much talk of Fanon, and of African/African-American relationships,,,, and then somebody wondered whether white academics ever talk about the dependence of the concept of whiteness on the concept of blackness. I knew a cue when I heard one, and briefly (far more briefly than I did here) described the Berkeley conference on whiteness and the fire storm it caused in the media. (The media, by the way, left us pretty much alone in Atlanta -- They had all the freaknikers to get on camera after all.)

Oddest moment of the entire conference came when one young person in the audience opined that black Americans have never been credited for making white people possible -- and then the look on his face when he realized what he'd just said -- folk seen at the conference included Joanne Gabbin, the aforementioned Bernard Bell, Trudier Harris (WHO is starting up a society for the study of African-American poetry that should be of interest to all on this list -- there'll be an organizing meeting at the American Literature Association in B'more next month -- will supply info address on request), Jacqueline Jones of nearby (to me) Santa Clara University, Hugh Gloster (who is gettin' old), Beverly Guy-Sheftall, R. Baxter Miller, Robert O'Meally, Gay Wilentz and other notables of the prose world -- which is why Trudier's society is so needed -- again, very little talk of poetry at this conference -- there's a lot of important work to be done, but students won't know it's waiting to be done if we never teach any of the relevant materials -- if we don't get those books back in print -- and so on, you know the drill --

so, having been made to feel my age by large numbers of exceedingly polite freaknikers who quickly spotted me as somebody well past forty and thought they should all tell me that English is their absolutely favorite subject (and I will choose for the moment to believe every one of them), I flew back to San Jose only to find 7,000 fans of TAFKAP (the artist formerly known as Prince) snaked around my building waiting for the concert I hadn't known was about to happen - and next morning learned that TAFKAP had encored with a scorching guitar duo performed with Carlos Santana -- but I did have a good book to read at least -- love to all, and to all a good night -- sure wish I was going to that Rutgers wing ding to see all my buddies from the list, though

↑ Index

849. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: ReHoops

Thu 24 Apr 1997

A really good fair has both an ox pull and a demolition derby.

As Jerry Lee Lewis says, "Think about it".

A pro scout sent to visit the farm where then pitching prospects Gaylord and Jim Perry grew up tried acting "country", feeding sugar to a mule. The mule bit his hand near off.

Paul Metcalf in Patagoni writes of stock car races and the Incas--and incar-nation--inca car nation--

Thats' why we still have hits songs about Mercury.
(Thank you Alan Jackson.)

As they say--Ox Pulls go way back. If not much forward. To emphasize the point--there's the demolition derby.

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Poetic sports? Most sports fall into three categories--skills of war, skills of hunting, forlorn hope that sportstogs will tear in interesting ways (the greeks combined these by having athletes compete naked). Then there's a remnant category--skills of labor. My favorite of these is the ox-pull, practiced at county fairs in New England (and beyond?). A pair of enormous oxen are hitched to a sledge laden with concrete blocks. The pair gets three tries at pulling each weight for, I think, ten feet.
> What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood. As if by contagion, their human entourage neither. Despite the fact that consistent losers are likely to wind up as hamburger (analogy with mesoamerican ballgame?). And also (antecedent--wonderful) that the vast bulk of the time is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen, hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc.
> If the poetic in sports is in proportion to the slowness of the game, this beats baseball by a mile. The audience, sometimes larger than at most poetry readings, tends to be on the laconic side--zen farmers who've sat once too often.
> Did you know that if you sit absolutely still for long enough your brain, responding to gravity, begins to puddle? That's what I love about ox-pulls.
>
> At 01:44 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
> And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a similar love of BASKETball?
>
> bill marsh
>
> You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what it's worth.
>
> It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.
> An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf were incompatible, morally so, as I remember. This, however, came from someone who had never played the game, and who assumed that only rich stockbrokers indulged, ignorant of the fact that almost every summer weekday evening the links are crowded with hard workin' factory folk > tearing up the fairways with their company leagues. Par to the people.

>
> *********
> Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep
>
> ([redacted]) getting bigger & more
>
> Reference Services Division important."
> *Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries* - John Ashbery
> Cornell University
> Ithaca, NY 14853
> WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
> *********

↑ Index

850. David Israel

Poetics Geography

Thu 24 Apr 1997

Poetas,

If you're curious who's where, here's how to find out.

(Sorry, this won't tell you east coast / west coast; but it will, methinks, identify all internationally-recognized sovereign states.)

Of what do I speak? To unravel this mystery, you need but read the next chapter (as they say in the old Chinese novels).

yours,
d.i.

[what follows is rubric'd w/ some backchannelism, but the basic methodology is outlined in short order]

>>> Charles Bernstein <[redacted]> 04/24/97 12:24pm >>>
This is very interesting and I will include it for sure. I didn't know you could do that. Indeed, I would welcome you to repost this info now to the whole list.

At 09:33 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Charles --
>
>thanks for posting that update of the Poetics welcome msg. -- >
>I've a small note regarding section # 6, which section reads:

>
><<<
>6. Who's Subscribed
>To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to >message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:
>
> review poetics
>
> or
>
> review POETICS by name
>
>(which will give you the list alphabetically by name)
>
>You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a >rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics >subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name. >>>
>
>
>here's another neat listserv command along kindred lines:
>
>review POETICS by country
>
>will give you the same roster, but itemized (& organized) under a >separate subheading for each country (nation) -- it's rather neat to thus >get some particulars of the global sweep --
>
>and there can be some interesting results from perusing such a list; for >instance, by doing so, I discovered that old Stephen Paul Miller (whom >knew through frirends-of-friends) is currently in Krakow, Poland.
I
>
>Naturally, you might not wish to be exhaustive in the info provided in a >welcome msg., but -- in short -- I thought you might care to consider this >possible addition to those currently noted.
>
>Thanks, as always, for the good thing afoot,
>d.i.
>
>

↑ Index

851. Jordan Davis
jinxed by the collar
Thu 24 Apr 1997

That'll teach me not to absolutize.

The Owen / Berrigan reading at Poetry City (NY) is not _tomorrow_ as the message you received today would have it.

It's tonight, 4/24, Thursday, 7 pm.

He was Bill. He was Bill Walton.

Signed,
Jordan

↑ Index

852. aerialedge
Heather Fuller @ Bridge Street
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Sunday April 27th @ 8 PM

a reading/talk by

Heather Fuller

on the occasion of the publication of the Edge Book _perhaps this is a rescue fantasy_

Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC

ph [redacted]

↑ Index

853. william marsh
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

> It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore "poetic."

i agree / the oft-mentioned "zen" aspect of baseball makes for easy (often false) parallels but would anyone be interested in collaborating on a list of basketbal-to-poetry analogies? i.e., i'll begin with:

dribble = cadence, syncopation
cross-over dribble = line break
slam dunk = haiku

etc.

bill marsh

↑ Index

854. Mark Weiss
Re: & now, a comic [morbid] interlude . . .
Thu 24 Apr 1997

---

and cemeteries would serve espresso.

At 04:40 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
>a friend sent me this:
>
>>From John Dvorak's May 6 _Inside Track_ column in PC Magazine.
>
><< It Was Bound to Happen Dept.: Leif Technologies ([redacted]) is >showing an unusual new tombstone add-on called View.logy (about >$5000 to $7000). It's a computerized system with an LCD screen and a >couple of buttons that allows people to read your biography, access >family tree information, and view whatever else can fit into 250 pages of >memory at your final resting place. The double-walled stainless-steel unit >is designed to last forever or until Armageddon, whichever comes first.
>Right now this system displays text and pictures on a gravestone or >cremation urn, but I'm sure more applications will arive. >>
>
>One wonders about -- a few technicalities. Like: postmortem editing?
>(add-ons of descendents? -- provisions for inclusion / exclusion of >begats...); hypertext links? sound/video files? "live" connections to >websites in perpetuity? -- and a new botique niche for RIP-VID >scriptwriters & directors & producers -- & the special eclat of having >(say) Wim Wenders or David Lynch "do" your r.i.p.-vid. -- (those are a >few, for starters) . . .
>
>"r.i.p., hombre"
>d.i.
>
>

↑ Index

855. Mark Weiss
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

As one of those bellies, bravo! You've found the tragic core of the ox-pull!

At 08:59 AM 4/24/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Up till now, I've resisted the urge to post a poem, but since I'm reading >tonight in Ellsworth (Maine), and since this one comes so close to the >description below, I've succumbed. It's from around 1980, & based on the >Blue Hill Fair, annual Labor Day Weekend event.
>
> September
>
>Cast-concrete weights, five to the ton.
>The front-end loader stacks them on the sledge--
>it is the month of the ox-pull.
>
>It looks like a contest for bellies--
>men swollen with children, with bills,
>swollen with biscuits and Bud.
>
>Oxen wait and wait.
>They have no place to go, no reason to go there,
>shriveled scars for balls.
>
>All afternoon the weights are added to the sledge;
>the oxen strain, lurch forward past the stands,
>the Ford-dump gears down and hauls it smoothly back.
>
>Hoofprints and treadmarks in the dirt,
>oxshit and oil.
>
>In the stands, ice-cream and polite applause.
>They wait all year for this, and then all afternoon.
>There's something here I can't make out.
>No thin man owns an ox.
>
> Sylvester Pollet
>
>>Poetic sports? Most sports fall into three categories--skills of war, skills >>of hunting, forlorn hope that sportstogs will tear in interesting ways (the >>greeks combined these by having athletes compete naked). Then there's a >>remnant category--skills of labor. My favorite of these is the ox-pull, >>practiced at county fairs in New England (and beyond?). A pair of enormous >>oxen are hitched to a sledge laden with concrete blocks. The pair gets three >>tries at pulling each weight for, I think, ten feet.

>>What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the >>otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as >>oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood. As if by >>contagion, their human entourage neither. Despite the fact that consistent >>losers are likely to wind up as hamburger (analogy with mesoamerican >>ballgame?). And also (antecedent--wonderful) that the vast bulk of the time >>is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen, >>hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc.
>>If the poetic in sports is in proportion to the slowness of the game, this >>beats baseball by a mile. The audience, sometimes larger than at most poetry >>readings, tends to be on the laconic side--zen farmers who've sat once too >>often.
>>Did you know that if you sit absolutely still for long enough your brain, >>responding to gravity, begins to puddle? That's what I love about ox-pulls.
>>
>>At 01:44 PM 4/23/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>>>>And given Spicer's love of baseball, any poets (here or there) with a >>>>>similar love of BASKETball?
>>>>>
>>>>>bill marsh
>>>>
>>>You bet. Stephen Dunn certainly is -- in fact I think he played semi-pro in >>>Spain for a while in his youth. Other versifying NCAA fans -- and Syracuse >>>fans at that!-- are Robert Lietz and yours truly. I think Garrett Hongo's >>>a hoops fan, too, but I'm basing that on a poem of his so take it for what
>>>it's worth.
>>>
>>>It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport,
>>>baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore
>>>"poetic." That whole gauzy (but yes, attractive) _Field of Dreams_ thing.
>>>An interesting sport to bring up in the company of poets is golf. I once
>>>mentioned that I played -- or was trying to -- and was immediately brought >>>up short by another poet who gave me a lecture about how poetry and golf >>>were incompatible, morally so, as I remember. This, however, came from >>>someone who had never played the game, and who assumed that only rich
>>>stockbrokers indulged, ignorant of the fact that almost every summer
>>>weekday evening the links are crowded with hard workin' factory folk >>>tearing up the fairways with their company leagues. Par to the people.

>>>
>>>*******
>>>Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep
>>>
>>>([redacted]) getting bigger & more
>>>
>>>Reference Services Division important."
>>>Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries - John Ashbery
>>>Cornell University
>>>Ithaca, NY 14853
>>>WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
>>>*******
>>>
>>>
>
>

↑ Index

856. Hank Lazer

Re: there's a man on the fairway taking names

Thu 24 Apr 1997

Dave Z -- thanks. glad to hear of Berrigan's golf interest.

And I do have a couple of golf poems in _Doublespace_ (Segue, 1992)

OK, Rachel, a few names (off and on the list): Ray Federman (a seriously addicted and reputedly fine golfer, has played in tournaments all over the US); Michael Palmer (reported to be quite a good golfer); the already named Paul Naylor; Alan Golding (sorry, Alan, Rachel coaxed it out of me.... though Alan is, properly, much more of a soccer player...); Judy Grahn; Tom Mandel; Charlie Altieri (I stop now, since I'm beginning to name critics...). And Rachel, just think of the clothes--plaid pants, tasseled shoes, strange gloves, weird tan lines, etc.... And the discussions of blades vs. cavity backed irons; persimmon vs. metal woods....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

857. armand schwerner
DRAGON BOND RITE
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Dragon Bond Rite, a cross-cultural mask dance drama, commissioned by Japan Society in New York City, will have its world premiere at Japan Society, 333 E.47, NYC 10017, on June 4,5 and 6 at 8PM.

The mask dance drama is conceived and composed by Jin-Hi Kim, written by Armand Schwerner, artistic direction by Richard Emmert, lighting design by Jennifer Tipton, set design by Hyun Joo Kim, and features a company of fifteen performers from five different traditions, fourteen from Asia, all highly skilled representatives of their traditionalist categories-- as follows:

Japan: Akira Matsui, noh mask dancer
Shonosuke Okura, otsuzumi drum
Sadamu Omura, noh singer
Richard Emmert, noh singer (in English)

Korea: Kwon Soon Kang, kagok/p'ansori singer
Jong Ho Lee, kang ryung mask dancer
Jin Hi Kim, komungo zither
Jong Sil Choi, changgo drummer

Tuva (Mongolia):
Kongar-ool Ondar, throat singer

Bali (Indonesia):
I Ketut Rina, topeng/barong mask dancer
I Wayan Sira, dalang singer
I Gede Putu Winartha, kundang drummer

Kerala, India:
Margi Madhu, kudiyattam dancer
Unikrishnan Nambiar, mizhavu drummer

Tickets are $25.00. Dragon Bond Rite will be in final rehearsals at the Walker Art Center in Minneapolis,MN,from May 25 through Sunday May 31; on Sunday May 31, there will be a dress rehearsal at 2PM, open to the public, before the company moves to NYC. On the 9th of June, DBR will be presented in the Eisenhower Hall at Kennedy Center in Washington D.C.

Ticket reservation requests may be sent to the Japan Society, or may be charged to 212/[redacted] Monday through Friday, 10AM-5PM, or charged by FAX to 212/[redacted].

DBR has received support from the Rockefeller Foundation Multi-Arts Production Fund, Lila Acheson Wallace/Japan Society Fund, Mary Flagler Cary

Charitable Trust, Asian Cultural Council, the NEA, N.Y.State Council on the Arts, Saison Foundation, Rockefeller Foundation Bellagio Center and Walker Art Center. Transportation is assisted in part by Northwest Airlines.

↑ Index

858. Stephen Vincent

Re: ReHoops/ analog

Thu 24 Apr 1997

Hoop Analogs - OK I'll pick it up and try:

palming = rhetorical moment fast break = open field steps (traveling) = rejection, give it up tip off = romantic opener jump shot = romantic, cosmic aspiration/love half court shot = cosmic bathos (if it goes in) defensive elbow = keeping the opposition (unacceptable lingo) out fake = irony pump fake = testing the waters foul = line/lingual abuse. Interesting if you are attracted to damage (if foul is severe, outrageous) screen = one word opens another line double screen = words making other words work in poems favor.
dunk = dramatic last line that might relieve the pressure of heavy duty opposition, i.e., knotted language etc.
A 7 ft center (fill in name) and a 5 ft 7" guard (fill in name) = Oxymoron.

No doubt to challenged, revised, or amplifed.
Back to the bench.
Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

859. Thomas Bell

Imaginary derivations and real delurking

Thu 24 Apr 1997

At 12:53 AM 4/24/97 -0800, Herb Levy wrote:

[redacted]

Speakeasy: n 1. [so named because the orders are given quietly], a place where alcoholic drinks are sold illegally, 2. a list with no moderator. v. 1. to respond glibly to posts, 2. to seduce interpickup lines in a speakeasy. tom bell netically, and 3. toss out stale

↑ Index

860. Bob Grumman

Hoops, Golf, Etc.

Thu 24 Apr 1997

I love Bill Marsh's request for basketball/poetry parallels but, puhleeze, a slam-dunk is no haiku. Maybe the give-and go, successfully executed, is. Or you have to go to baseball for a haiku parallel. Haiku are all serenity.

Now that I'm into this thread, I have to give into to my taxonomania yet again and bother you with my division of sports into TARGETEERICAL SPORTS and CREATIVE SPORTS (tentative terminology). In targeteerical sports, the participant tries to hit a target many times through the repetitive use of one more or less unvarying, highly specialized physical act: as in the worst case, golf, which is the same swing at the same unmoving stupid ball, varying only the club (for the most part); and in bowling; baseball, except for fielding; pool; darts; croquet; tiddly-winks . . . In creative sports one one has to react spontaneously, on the move, to what the opposition does: e.g., at its best, tennis, which I always thought the most popular sport among poets, though it has its targeteerical serving component (which with souped-up racquets and playing surfaces has in my view become too large an element of the modern game), and of course it finally has the one swing, too, but it's a swing that has to go high or low, left or right, at a moving ball; basketball; soccer; ice hockey, and so forth. But I AM prejudiced because I'm probably the worst golfer in the world. Anyway, basketball and tennis are my favorite sports.

↑ Index

861. William Burmeister Prod

Re: what this list is (intended) to be about

Thu 24 Apr 1997

> But I do feel that we should all heed Charles Bernstein's latest revision of what the list is about. Note that this is not intended to be a list for anyone with a vague interest in poetry. It is intended for people committed to working through and on innovation. On top of that, "poetics" by its very definition involves intellectual theorizing. Therefore, it seems to me that criticizing people for being "high falutin'" or too intellectual on this list is contrary to what the owner of it intends. While I don't want to be a police officer, I do think we should all take note that this list is private and that it is intended for certain purposes. If our interests diverge > from those intended by this list, maybe we should try to hook up to a different one.

I wasn't aware that there was a recent revision to the list mission statement. It seems that it has remained unchanged since at least 3-4-97 according to the welcome message. The recent changes appear to have more to do with keeping "the scale of the list small and the volume manageable." The scale being the default on the listserve program, it is more a matter of being able to keep up with the sheer volume of posts each day, and not a matter of censoring out a list member's self-censoring, as it were, in an otherwise engaging and list-worthy thread on individuality vs The State.

Bill B.

↑ Index

862. John Norton ([redacted])

Memorial Service for Allen Ginsberg in San Francisco

Thu 24 Apr 1997

On Sunday April 20, San Francisco's Temple Emanu-el was the site for a memorial service for Allen Ginsberg. Before the service began, the performance group City of Poets donned white costumes with patches of shreaded cloth and assembled in the courtyard to read from "Kaddish for Naomi Ginsberg" and "Howl." The cacophony of voices with their erratic movement throughout the crowd echoed like the wailing of banshees.

I estimate close to two thousand people filled the sanctuary of this wonderful building with its symmetrical vaulted arches spanned by a great dome. Ferlinghetti, Gary Snyder, Diane di Prima, Mark Lilenthal, Anne Waldman, Robert Hass, Michael McClure, Joane Kyger, and Andrew Schilling spoke of their friendship with AG and how generous he was. The SF literary communities out in force. To close, the Rabbi led all in reciting Kaddish. A great afternoon.

Seen in the crowd: Carl Rakosi, Floyd Salas, Jack & Adelle Foley, Neeli Cherkovski, Jack Mueller, Gloria Frym, Jerry Kamstra, George Scrivani, Kevin Killian and Bob Gluck (looking for seats), Hilton Obenzinger, Dennis Hopper, Whitman McGowan, Margery Snyder, Joyce Jenkins.

April 21's SF Chronicle and Examiner both wrote up the service. You can find these reports at http://www.sfgate.com.

The following came to me as I walked back home.

LISTEN UP

- for Allen Ginsberg (1926-1997)

Buddha is teaching patience don't hurry
it will happen
you were struck ten times today still you want more mind the people walking dogs and children
look at that couple how they talk with their hands
y las dos chicanas que linda!

Listen up
Buddha says change is coming spring then summer
ripening and harvest for your next lifetime
you will be born a Jew

John Norton

↑ Index

863. Hugh Steinberg
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

Although I like sports, and I enjoy watching the Bulls, I just want to point out that Michael Jordan's salary for one year could easily support the publication of 6,000 titles of poetry.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

864. George Bowering
Re: ReHoops
Thu 24 Apr 1997

One reason why the Bulls are so much fun to watch is that they are so old. The old teams were pretty successful and interesting to watch. this year. The Jazz are old. The Sonics are pretty old. The Suns are old. The &*%$#@! Knicks are old.

Also, the Bulls are so international. They have an Australian, a Canadian, a Croat (or is he a Serbian--I cant remember or tell the difference), a Martian and a bunch of USAmericans.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

865. George Bowering

Re: Granby, Mon Amour

Thu 24 Apr 1997

> George had a lampshade on his head at the time and was alternately singing "O Canada" and reciting from the collected works of Charles Bukowski (one of his favorites), so I guess he must be forgiven for his lack of depth perception.
>
> Rachel L.

Okay, I will admit to the lampshade. And maybe I did sing the national anthem once, maybe twice. But that wasnt Bukowski I was reading. It was my old rap sheet before I reformed and learned poetry. All I used to do before Rachel saved me , was drink beer, go to the track, pee my pants, and get into fistfights and lose them.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

866. charssmith

Fwd: Networking Artists & Poets Exhibition

Thu 24 Apr 1997

I'm passing this along for anyone interested:

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted] (Greg Bear) collecting) collecting)
To: [redacted]
Date: 97-04-24 14:28:43 EDT

The University of Pennsylvania Library's Department of Special Collections presents "Networking Artists & Poets: Assemblings from the Ruth & Marvin Sackner Archive of Concrete & Visual Poetry." This exhibition is currently on view from 17 April-27 June 1997 in the Rosenwald Gallery, located on the sixth floor of the Van Pelt-Dietrich Library. The Rosenwald Gallery is open to the public Monday through Friday from 9 AM-5 PM; a picture ID is required for admittance to the library. Van Pelt-Dietrich Library is located at 3420 Walnut Street (but its entrance is from Locust Walk, at the statue of the broken button), Philadelphia PA 19104-6206. Parking is available at 36th & Walnut Street.

Craig Saper, Exhibition Curator, states that, "in the second half of the 20th century, artists, writers, and printers started many alternative distribution networks for their experimental art and literature. They circumvented the gallery system with direct mailings and other innovative ways to reach their audiences and collaborators." Assemblings are an outgrowth of this desire. "Networking Artists & Poets" represents one of the largest exhbitions to date featuring this unique material. Assemblings featured in this exhibition include works by prominent mail artists, Dada and Fluxus artists, concrete and visual poets, and more.

The Library has produced a 34-page full-color exhibition catalogue for this exhibition, currently available for $10.00 per copy (check only; we cannot accept credit cards.) To order a catalogue, or if you want more information about the exhibit, contact me by phone, mail, or e-mail (numbers, etc., are listed below).

A few copies of the illustrated catalogue based on Penn's 1993 exhibition also drawn from the Sackner Archive, "Human Documents: Tom Phillips's Art of the Page," also remain available from the same address. (They also cost $10.00.)

Thanks,

Greg Bear

Greg Bear

Exhibit/Graphic Designer
Department of Special Collections University of Pennsylvania Library
[redacted]
[redacted] fax

↑ Index

867. Wendy Battin
chastened by CB'sreposting of the welcom message
Thu 24 Apr 1997

New Release

1997 Winner of the Snyder Memorial Prize from Ashland

Little Apocalypse

poems by Wendy Battin

ISBN #0-912592-40-0
$10.00 pbk.

Amid the incoherence of things, between the coarse lines of dissolution; after our last photogenic war, the "fever-vivid" language of Wendy Battin's Little Apocalypse threads between lucidity and lyricism, surface and depth to the very fovea of the song. An exquisite collection. --CD Wright

Available from The Ashland Poetry Press
Ashland University, Ashland, Ohio 44805 phone [redacted]
fax [redacted]

↑ Index

868. Louis Cabri
selections from
Fri 25 Apr 1997

David Bromige, hi--I was referring, way back, only to the intro that Robert Pack wrote for his selection of poets in the 1962 edition of New Poets from England and America, not to the individual poets therein. And to the implicit argument of Pack's intro. It is an argument that supports the following in my view. The poet Ginsberg enters the social arena of Time policed by the journalist, only on condition that poet substitutes for poem, agency conflates with agent--i.e. on condition that the poem itself disappears, and that agency is contained in one individual, Ginsberg, whose reception is governed by the journalist. Thus the journalist can say, Ginsberg's popular because of his media-tuned personality, that's all. Ginsberg anticipates this reception in his poetry at times, formally--in other words, he anticipates the conflation of agency with agent by assuming it, sometimes to be critical of it, sometimes to use it to go somewhere else, sometimes to ride on it. I do read the '62 antho backwards. Thanks for the reminder that the first edition came out in '58.

/

I like this version of the Moore poem for its ending:

POETRY

I too, dislike it:
there are things that are important beyond all this fiddle.
The bat, upside down; the elephant pushing,
a tireless wolf under a tree,
the base-ball fan, the statistician-
"business documents and schoolbooks"- these phenomena are pleasing, but when they have been fashioned into that which is unknowable,
we are not entertained.
It may be said of all of us that we do not admire what we cannot understand;
enigmas are not poetry.

(from A Survey of Modernism, eds. Riding/Graves, 1928)

/

And here for no direct reason at all, in a slippery language befitting the email context, the first sentence from an essay, "Topping," by Clint Burnham, in the latest BOO magazine:

"Today our cultural and political world is characterised by two contradictory attitudes or ideologies: global diversity and absolutist monism."

--Louis

↑ Index

869. Elizabeth Mathews Losh
Re: Poem for Rent
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Paleeze! It's certainly a good idea to bother state senators whenever possible with one's poems, but there are certainly greater social justice issues than rent control and whatever ideas you may have about being persecuted by your landlord. What about the failure of our government to build more affordable housing for low and moderate income tenants and the general gutting of HUD happening this year?

I can't speak for New York or Massachusetts, but here in California rent control (without vacancy decontrol) helps upper middle class tenants over and above everyone else. In fact, just about every major demographic study of both Santa Monica and Berkeley shows rent control (without vacancy decontrol) DECREASED the number of low and moderate income tenants as the housing market shrank. Ethnic diversity took a dive too. Now I'm talking about rent control not rent stabilization. They ARE different.

Anyway, the poetics list isn't the place for me to take issue with Daniel Bouchard or to note the fact that I generally agree with him on poetry and politics. Anyone who wants to backchannel and have me crunch the numbers for them I'd be happy to.

Anyone who wants a unit with hardwood floors and a liberal-lefty poet landlord on premises in Santa Monica, forget it. It's rent controlled so we never have vacancies.

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Daniel Bouchard wrote:

> Good for Brendan Lorber!
> & May what happened in Massachusetts, not come to pass in New York.
>
> Since rent control was banned in Massachusetts, former rent control tenants (aka "protected status") have faced rent increases anywhere from 50-300%. What have cities done to help all the people who are now vulnerable to "market rates?" Nuttin. Except, in Cambridge at least, the city has set up a board to "assist" people in moving out of their apartments and, since all the rents in the city have skyrocketed, effectively move out of the city. Left on their own, city government does this kind of thing, and then they praise themselves for it in the press.
>
> There are alternatives though (for anyone in NY, or anywhere else facing this situation).
>
> Last week, after months of campaigning, tenant organizing, lobbying, etc., a group called the Eviction Free Zone saw through city council orders in Cambridge that 1) transferred over 1 and 1/2 million dollars into the Affordable Housing Fund (from the "free cash" coffer) and 2) designed a transfer tax on residential sales in Cambridge--with the first $300,000 exempted that will provide a substantial revenue for replenishing affordable housing funds. This is going to the State House in a week or so, where Governor Weld has already stated that he will veto ANY taxation bill that does not have a local referendum attached to it. So in the drafting of the bill, the EFZ insisted that such a referendum be attached. We are very confident of being able to see that it passes in the fall.

> Next on the agenda is securing a 20 million dollar bond for the immediate purchase of apartment buildings on the market to be made permanently affordable housing.
>
> It's incredible the arguments that were made against all of our efforts. I am growing confident that the real estate interest is second in power in this country only to the military/defense interest. One argument: "if we put through this transfer tax it will hinder young and struggling families from buying homes in Cambridge." A glance at the Sunday house advertisements indicate the median price range for a house in this city to be well beyond the means of any "young and struggling families." In fact, I have come across more than enough families who have lived in Cambridge all their lives and who cannot afford it anymore. Their children will have to settle elsewhere.
>
> Anyway, it's been a long road, and it's certainly far from over. Hours of meetings and talk complicated by time given for both Creole and Hispanic translators, etc. But it can be done, and good luck to anyone facing this dismal prospect. Back channel me if you want more info. on the work we've done here.
>
> [redacted]
>
> Brenda,
>
> How can I get a copy of Lorber's poem?

↑ Index

870. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: ReHoops

Fri 25 Apr 1997

---

william marsh wrote:
>
> >It does seem, though, that if a poet dares admit to liking a sport, > >baseball is the safe one, probably because it's slow, and therefore > >"poetic."
>
> i agree / the oft-mentioned "zen" aspect of baseball makes for easy (often > false) parallels
>
> but would anyone be interested in collaborating on a list of > basketbal-to-poetry analogies? i.e., i'll begin with:
>

> dribble = cadence, syncopation
> cross-over dribble = line break
> slam dunk = haiku
>
> etc.
>
> bill marsh

foul shot = allusion jumper = line break enjambed to a new stanza rebound = (Hebraic) iteration

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

871. Marina deBellagente laPalma

writing (or thinking, for that matter) more than one thing at a time

Fri 25 Apr 1997

Actually, it's THINKING THE SAME THING WITH MORE THAN ONE MIND

I'm working on some poems under title "Somas" Ideas coming out of long embracing of theme and recent readings such as: David Abrams' The Spell of the Sensuous: Perception & Language in a More than Human World; Morris Berman's Coming to Our Senses: Spirit and Body in the Hidden History of the West The Gift: Imagination and the Erotic Life of Property by Lewis Hyde. I talk about these things in the frequently modified prose texts on my web site, but they are also being processed at another level in "poet" mind.

Here is a recent one. (the stanzas are meant to appear on the page in two columns, with slightly different typefaces and alternately aligned -- one flush right, next one left and so on ... sort of "interlaced", formatting impossible via e-mail.)

title: Bicameral Breakdown (a nod to Julian Jaynes)

Language, as Beckett supposedly said (or was it Ionesco?) is something gone wrong with the silence.

Is it possible some of those pages you lost or discarded were precisely the ones that might have supplied the meaning, the missing phrase? Could they be alive somewhere and growing,

like the children whose faces adorn or deface milk cartons?

Idiot and idiom derive from the same Greek root, meaning private one's own, Gramsci noted.

Writing: an act so simple it isn't worth mentioning. An action so brutal it can separate, temporarily, left from right, body from mind. Chained to the cyclic tortures of sleep, the fallible body is bottleneck, switchboard, ground.

Being in the present
observes Anne Klein is always interesting.

Sometimes you flare up, demanding fairness, attention, sanity.
Sometimes you lose your temper,
becoming unfair, inattentive, insane.
This release is a mild stimulant,
about as harmless (or harmful) as coffee,
depending on your metabolism.

Revolts, Pasolini suggests are fed by a secret anxiety for order.

Is the whole thing merely a swirl of indifference, you ask yourself, an ocean of chaos
where we shore up islands of light?

The passions are numberless,
you vow to extinguish them all.

But not yet.

Marina laPalma

↑ Index

872. Marina deBellagente laPalma
(no subject)
Fri 25 Apr 1997

This is a recent exchange I had with a friend who is very involved in working with Amnesty International. I see this as a free speech issue and wonder how other on the poetics list see it. I received the following:

Date: Mon, 21 Apr 1997
From: Veronique Fourment <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: FW: Help block Neo-Nazi group

Hi Marina, Hope you can use this , pass it on ... A bientot,

"We understand that Nazi groups are trying to create (again) a usenet group where they want to keep in contact with each other regarding their activities. I believe it is not necessary to dwell further on these activities.

The group is rec.music.white-power

To create such a group, they have to win a referendum that is always organised when a new usenet group is created. All persons with an email address, and only those, can vote in this referendum.

It is important to vote only once, otherwise the vote is cancelled.
To prevent the creation of this group, you have to:
1. Send this message to people you know
2. Send an email to the following address:
[redacted]
with as contents (not 'subject') ONLY the following line:
I vote NO on rec.music.white-power
Since the vote is automatic, it is IMPORTANT to send the exact line as it is given above, without adding anything, not even a name.
And please send it only once or it becomes invalid !

I replied:

Dear Veronique -- Of course the first reaction of any decent human being is "Neo-nazi groups? Let's STOP THEM now!" But I wonder whether the specific blocking of such a net communications group by a referendum isn't a repression of free speech? How can we hope to change their minds and hearts by not letting them speak to one another? Since it is their actions we must block, mybe it's better to have neo-nazis typing their ugly and pathetic ideas (and their addresses etc.) because then we/others know where they are; can WATCH them, as KlanWatch does with the KKK. And can repond to them. If we agree that the democratic antidote to free speech one disagrees with is more free speech, then (assuming that usenet groups interchanges, like most electronic communications media, are permeable) reasonable people could in fact monitor, publicize and comment upon neo-nazi exchanges. Otherwise I fear we simply risk setting precedents for the "blocking" of groups that want to talk about, say, gay rights or trans-gender issues, organize anti-nuclear sit-ins or share information on obtaining marijuana for medical uses, or whatever someone else might see as wrong or evil.

Is the use-net considered a "private" medium, a club where we have the right to exclude material we object to. The first time someone in a neo-nazi usenet group advocates any act that is illegal or violent, it can be brought to the attention of potential victims, appropriate civil authorities or whatever, whereas if they do it in a secret meeting in their houses how will we know? Anyway, these are my thoughts tonight. What do you think? I will certainly let people know this thing potentially exists and is something to keep an eye on. Love, Marina

↑ Index

873. Michel Delville
Poetry and Soccer
Fri 25 Apr 1997

One more addition to the list -- the title poem of Don Paterson's best-selling collection, Nil Nil, is, unsurprisingly, about soccer. Paterson is reported to be quite a good soccer player as well as a (semi?)professional jazz musician.

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3, Place Cockerill
4000 LIEGE
(BELGIUM)

Fax: ++ 32(0)4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

874. Mark Prejsnar
Re: ReHoops
Fri 25 Apr 1997

I'm finally breaking down...and adding to the baseball(golf/hoops) thread, a citation for my all-time favorite irresponsible book in the universe (in certain moods, my all-time favorite book, period)--Mikhail Horowitz's Big League Poets, from City Lights: the ultimate collision of baseball and poetry. The outrageous text, I could quote from; but it has to be seen in conjunction with Horowitz's remarkable photomontage caricatures of everyone from Homer to Baraka as ballplayers. (Just one line; one of Pound's achievements was "to be the game's first designated hitler"--)

For the (surprising) number of folks on the list who sound as fond of baseball as I am, this is really required.

Mark P.

↑ Index

875. Tom Mandel
Sighted -- poets dunk golf balls
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Golf is a great game, and I'm a fanatic. If you play it well (I don't) it verges on a sport. Hank Lazar and I have repeatedly discussed playing a round together -- Hank is a serious fanatic.

As to roundball, I assume you all know that Kit Robinson, one of the really great poets of our time in my opinion, is also a pretty good basketball player. He was the center on the Computerland corporate team for most of the years that he (and Ron Silliman, and Alan Bernheimer, and Bill Luoma, and others of the bay area poetry community) worked there. Kit is captured driving the basket in one of Warren Sonbert's later films (apologies, but I can't remember which right now).

What about ping pong? How can we not mention ping pong, another great language game. Joan Retallack is an excellent ping pong player; she has a table in her garage. I can beat her though; I am a reeeally good ping pong player! I take on all comers. What about it?

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

876. Gwyn McVay
Re: DRAGON BOND RITE
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Serious question: is that THE Kongar-ool Ondar, the same one who's in Huun-Huur-Tu? Serious but dumber question: is he the same man who made a recording with San Fran bluesman David Pena and taught him to sing khoomei?

bests
Gwyn McVay
suddenly not the only Tuvan music fan she knows

↑ Index

877. Rachel Loden
Re: there's a man on the fairway taking names
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Hank Lazer wrote:

> OK, Rachel, a few names (off and on the list): Ray Federman (a seriously addicted and reputedly fine golfer, has played in tournaments all over the US); Michael Palmer (reported to be quite a good golfer); the already named Paul Naylor; Alan Golding (sorry, Alan, Rachel coaxed it out of me.... though Alan is, properly, much more of a soccer player...); Judy Grahn; Tom Mandel; Charlie Altieri (I stop now, since I'm beginning to name critics...). And Rachel, just think of the clothes--plaid pants, tasseled shoes, strange gloves, weird tan lines, etc.... And the discussions of blades vs. cavity backed irons; persimmon vs. metal woods....

Hank, thank you for that wonderful list. Judy Grahn?! Judy, we hardly knew ye. But now that you mention it, I think I do remember her showing up for a reading run-through (long ago) in golf shoes and a little cap. Silly me, I just thought it was her Valerie Solanas chic.

Rachel

↑ Index

878. Christopher Alexander
Re: Robert Duncan
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Mike Boughn wrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrttttttt:
> I've been working on ways to get the Peruvian governemnt involved in > negotiating the release of the Duncan papers being held hostage in the > poetry compound at Buffalo.

Diplomatic solutions are a waste of time. Now the moment is come for action. We can only win who have nothing to lose.
Viva la revolucion! "wait, no...my Spanish isn't too good here, um...sir, excuse me, senior...por favor...can you tell me which is the bus to nueva...nueva yorca?"

Have you tried begging? Or wine & chocolates for the faculty? (If either of these ideas works I expect to be cut in on the take).

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16
Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

n/formation issue 1.1 now online:
http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

↑ Index

879. R I Caddel
British Poetry Seminar in Brno
Fri 25 Apr 1997

The Department of English and American Studies, Masaryk University, Brno

and

The Centre for Comparative Cultural Studies, Palack University, Olomouc

with the support of the British Council in the Czech Republic will be holding a seminar entitled

"Different British Voices - Poetry, Locality, Plurality"

on September 12-14, 1997

in Brno, the Czech Republic

The seminar will examine aspects of locality and difference in the writing and performance of poetry in British contexts and beyond.

Leading the seminar will be four widely differing British poets: Richard Caddel, Maggie O'Sullivan, Lee Harwood and Tony Baker. Like many other poets currently active in Britain, each of them has established a reputation for using performence and voice to stress the importance of locality and to question notions of "centrality" in British poetry and culture.

The poets will perform their own work and lead a series of seminar discussions. They will be joined at the seminar by the renowned Czech poet Miroslav Holub as well as by other Czech poets and translators and, we hope, by poets and translators from other countries and regions.

The seminar will be of interest and relevance to poets, teachers and translators.

The cost of the Seminar, including two nights accomodation and meals, will be in the region of 80 pounds. For further information, or to express interest, please contact:

Don Sparling
Department of English and American Studies
Masaryk University
Arna Novaka 1
660 88 Brno
Czech Republic

Tel: (421-5) 41121 153 Fax: (421-5) 41121 406
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

880. Gabrielle Welford
MRTA Statements (fwd)
Fri 25 Apr 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 24 Apr 1997 18:55:21 -1000
From: Peter Urban <[redacted]>

> INTRO
> ~~~~~
> This week's GS INFO is focused on covering the storming of the Japanese embassy in Lima, Peru, and the subsequent killing of all 14 MRTA members inside. While it is still too early to grasp the full ramifications of the embassy occupation and massacre, the information provided here may help to fill in some of the gaps left by the coverage of the mainstream press. Another GS INFO with more information on happenings in Guelph and activities being planned over the summer will be sent out in the next couple of days.
>
> "A DEFEAT FOR THE MRTA?" AN INTERVIEW
> ~~~~~~
> Interview With Norma Velazco, European Spokeswoman For The Tupac

Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA)

Q: Media reports claim that the MRTA guerrillas were caught completely by surprise during the storming of the Japanese ambassador's residence. Was the attack by 150 elite soldiers in fact a surprise?

No. The storming of the residence did not come as a surprise to us, nor to the MRTA commando in the residency. We always knew and said that President Fujimori, right from the beginning, was pushing for a military solution. That was proven time and again during the occupation of the residency. Even before the occupation action began, martial law was imposed on Lima and the harbor area of Callao. Many campesinos were arrested without charge and accused of being members of the MRTA.

Then in March there was the discovery of the tunnel, which the military had dug from a neighboring house. That made Fujimori's intentions clear to all the world. No, we had no illusions. All the time Fujimori spoke of a peaceful ending and the media reported how a solution was almost at hand. But we did have some bit of hope that the international public opinion in many countries would increase pressure on the Peruvian government and force them to give in. I mean in countries where, unlike in Peru, people can go out into the streets and demonstrate for their demands. But in this, we were disappointed.

Q: How do you explain the fact that during the storming of the residency, all 14 guerrillas were killed - including two teenage girls - whereas on the other side, only 2 soldiers and 1 hostage died?

The goal of the MRTA commando was not to murder the embassy prisoners. They were determined to have their demands fulfilled while providing the maximum protection for the lives of their prisoners. There was a struggle between the members of the commando and the soldiers. But most of the members of the MRTA commando were only killed after the residency had been taken, they were most likely tortured as well. Their dead bodies have not yet been shown to the public.

Q: Following the storming of the ambassador's residence, was there any resistance on the part of the Peruvian people?

Due to the total militarization of Lima, no such resistance is possible. But over the next few days, there will be actions carried out all across Peru. The MRTA is prepared for this.

Q: Was the storming of the residence a defeat for the Tupac Amaru?

Sure, this is a serious defeat for the MRTA; neither the movement nor the Peruvian people have gained anything from this. But it is not over yet. We lost the battle, but the struggle continues.

Q: A few hours after the storming of the Japanese ambassador's residence, Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori celebrated in an exclusive restaurant in the San Isidro diplomatic district his most recent victory over "terrorism". It seems that Fujimori has emerged from this crisis stronger than when it began.

If one were to believe Fujimori, this action could never have taken place to begin with, since he had declared that the MRTA was dead years ago. He will do that now again, but he will be disappointed. Fujimori can celebrate his victory for the moment. But the problems of the Peruvian people have by no means been solved by his action: A vast segment of the population still suffer from poverty, hunger, and a lack of proper medical care, and these problems are increasing. The end of the crisis at the ambassador's residence showed that Fujimori exclusively relies on military means; he always has and he always will.

The MRTA commando always stressed that it desired a peaceful solution, and many people in Peru demonstrated on the streets for that same reason. The basis for a peaceful solution would have been changes in the inhumane conditions which the political prisoners in Peru endure. But one thing is clear: There is no basis for dialogue with the Fujimori regime.

Q: The stated goal of the residency occupation was to win improved conditions for the political prisoners of the MRTA in Peru's jails. What will this new situation mean for the prisoners?

Until now, no improvements in conditions have been proposed by the regime. So we must think of new and better ways to win the release of our comrades. But the important thing now is for the international community not to close their eyes and forget the political prisoners and the inhumane treatment they receive.

(Interview by Peter Nowak, published in Junge Welt, April 24, 1997; Translated by Arm The Spirit)

MRTA COMMUNIQUE #16
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru (MRTA) Communique #16

On April 22, 1997, at 3:00 p.m., military and police units stormed the embassy, thereby murdering all the members of our commando and one other person, according to reports so far. The National Directorate of the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement (MRTA) would like to report the following to the international community:

1. A new crime has been committed against the best sons and daughters of the people, a crime carried out by the terrorist regime of Alberto Fujimori, with the compliance of the governments of Japan and North America.

2. During the one-sided battle, the members of Edgar Sanchez Commando displayed the morale of Tupac Amaristas, the decision for victory or death, to stand for the liberation of our people and against neo-liberalism, which has only brought our people sorrow and oppression.

3. With the murder of Comandante Nestor Cerpa and the members of the Edgar Sanchez Commando, the genocidal Fujimori regime seeks to convince our people and the international community, once again, that the Tupac Amaru Revolutionary Movement has reached its end.

4. We, Tupac Amaristas, lower our flags in honor of our murdered brothers and sisters, strengthened in our resolve to continue the fight for a peaceful society with social justice.

5. We say to our people and to our militants all across the country, the members of the Edgar Sanchez Commando did not die, they have reached the level of heroes, they will be with us during all of our mobilizations and actions.

The workers' commander from the people of Tupac Amaru, in all of his human qualities, was a slap in the face of the genocidal generals, and they could not endure this.

COMANDANTE NESTOR CERPA CARTOLINI... PRESENTE!
You Are In Our Memories!

COMANDO EDGAR SANCHEZ...PRESENTE!
You Are In Our Memories!

The People Of Tupac Amaru Will Continue To Fight Against The Neo-Liberal Model And Against State Terrorism!
The People Will Not Surrender!
Neither Surrender Nor Defeat ... The Struggle Continues!

National Directorate of the MRTA

April 22, 1997

CRITIQUE OF MRTA TACTICS
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
The massacre of the Lima's Japanese residence
By Juan Ponce (member of Poder Obrero Peru)

On Tuesday 22 April bat 3:17 p.m., Roberto Fujimori, Peruvian president, ordered the assault on the residence of the Japanese ambassador in Lima. In approximately 35 minutes the 140-man military-police team where able to rescue all except one of the 72 ho stages. In the action all the 14 MRTA guerrilla fighters, two soldiers and one judge which was a hostage were killed.

Three days before the action the Minister of Interior, General Juan Carlos Briones, and the police commander, Lt. General Antonio Ketin Vidal, resigned. The latest was the person in charge of the capture of the great leader of the PCP-Sendero Luminoso, Dr. Abimael Guzman, which conducted to the beginning of the downfall of the guerrillas more than four years ago. Ketin Vidal was apparently against an armed solution. For him the path to be follow have to be a political one.

The operation was a technical and military success. It was very well prepared by foreign "anti-terrorist" specialist. The Israeli army, which had the most sophisticated and "third generation" electronic devises trained a special commando for more than fou r months. According to "La Republica" (Lima , 23 April) the troops entered like moles from three tunnels. An AP cable said that they "poured through the compound^Òs front gate and blasted open the mansion's front door.

Others attacked from the rear, and a third unit climbed to the rooftop and shepherded hostages down to the ground." The attack was made in a clear day and the MRTA commando was completely took by surprise. Nestor Cerpa, the commander in chief, was playing football with some hostages, when it happened. Despite that they where heavily armed, they where incapable of confronting with so advance technologies and training.

Until the moment the official version is claiming that only one hostage was killed. Fujimori said 25 other captives were injured in the gunfire and explosions that rocked the compound. The Peruvian chancellor, Tudela, and few other hostages received some bullets and are hospitalised. Their are no more information about that and it could not be annulled the possibility that in some more hours more wounded people would not survive.

Fujimori employed a pure military solution to finish the 127 days guerrilla occupation of the Japanese diplomatic house. It begun on 17 December 1996 when more than 500 VIP where celebrating the anniversary of the Japanese emperor in the house of the amba ssador.

The MRTA action differed from other guerrilla operations. They didn't kill any hostages. In the first day of the occupation they liberated all the 200 women (including Fujimori's mother and sister) trying to show that they are a Macho Latino gentlemen. Some days later they also liberated all the US hostages and all the diplomats from Europe, Canada and Asia. They only kept 72 hostages which included high Peruvian figures, two tens of Japanese businessmen and diplomats, and the ambassadors of Japan and Bolivia. In a gesture of "pacifist" will the MRTA freed on the 26 January, general Jose Rivas, a top police repressive figure, because he was very ill.

The MRTA tried to demonstrate to the ruling class and imperialism that they where not "savage" terrorists, and that they wanted to open a road to a pacific solution which would contemplate the re-integration of the Castroite MRTA into the system as it hap pen with its brother organisations in Colom bia and Central America.

The MRTA didn't appeal to the working class to make mass demonstrations. Despite the fact that they said that they want a change in the political economic programme, they didn't strength that point. All the debate was around the situation of the MRTA's 400-500 prisoners. They even didn't want to a sk for the liberation of the other 5,000 prisoners which belong to other forces, mainly to the rival guerrilla organisation, the PCP-SL. The MRTA was founded in 1982 under the influence of the Sandinista's revolution.

At that time in Peru the PCP-SL was already two years in "popular war". The strategy of both organisations where very different. The PCP-SL had a Mao-Stalinist one which con sisted in surrounding the cities from the co untryside and establishing fierce four-class dictatorships in their liberated zones.

For the Maoists the rest of the political parties where the same thing and they kill tens of left-wingers and trade-unionists. They where in favour of the physical destru ction of all the workers and peasants organ isations and unions which they would not be able to control. The MRTA wanted to appear as a force which was willing to have alliances with the United Left, a mass popular front, and the APRA, the bourgeois nationalist party which won the 1985 elections, and sections of the army, the church and the ruling class. The y used uniforms and had better weapons and military sophistication than the Maoists who where mainly poor peasant and shanty-towns activists.

Their most spectacular action was when in 1990, few days before Fujimori became president, they liberated all their prisoners from a new jail of maximum sec urity in Lima. In 1990 Fujimori decided to crush the militants unions and the guerrilla. His anti-terrorist measures served to destroy all working class resistance. The guerrillas become isolated. After the April 92 self-coup in which Fujimori dissolved the parliament, the PCP-SL launched a premature adventure w hich tried to produce the capture of Lima. They over-estimate their forces and their main leader was captured. One year later Guzman decided to radically change his strategy and called all his comrades to abandon the "people's war" and to enter in a "p eace agreement" process with the regime.

This lead to the demoralisation and division of this former powerful guerrilla movement. At the same time the MRTAs nearly destroyed. In 1995 Fujimori was re-elected with the majority of the votes. The guerrilla was extremely weak, and the workers movement and the left where heavily disorganised. Some months before the MRTA assault on the Japanese diplomatic house, the situation in Peru was slowly change. Fujimori started to make concessions when he tried to privatise all the petroleum company and when he tried to cancel some weeks of the holiday period of every worker. Some sections of t he bourgeoisie, which supported all his repressive measures, where beginning to ask for a more open society, to moderate the extreme power of the repressive forces, and to make some economic changes from an extreme neo-liberal programme.

The MRTA occupation of the Japanese residence divided the ruling class into two main camps. The neo-liberals wanted a military solution which could allow more privatisation and measures against the organised workers movement. The moderate opposition wanted a peaceful solution which would weak Fuji mori, could incorporate the guerrillas into the system and could allow the development of an internal market. Peru has one of the worst human rights conditions. The political prisoners are judge by faceless military courts and could be sentenced to survive until their deaths in, what Fujimori call, "living tombs". They could not have access to the media, could o nly see the sun in weeks and to receive only one half an hour visit per month. The bourgeois opposition accepted that rule because for them the "terrorists" are sub-humans. However, they started to realise that so much harsh conditions would affect the future of any stable society.

In his latest declarations, Fujimori said that the MRTA dropped its original demands in favour of the liberation of all their more than 400 political prisoners to only 20. In Easter a solution was very close to be achieve. Japan was pressing for a deal in which the MRTA commando will be able to travel to Cuba and would receive in exchange some money, the freedom of some minor prisoners (including the partner of Nestor Cerpa, the MRTA commander in chief of the occupation) and to improve the situation of the rest of the MRTA prisoners with the aim tto prepare a peace process like in Guatemaa.

The latest move indicates that Fujimori decided to implement a hawk decision. Some days before a recent opinion poll showed that Fujimori's level of popularity where in its lowest rate ever since he became president of Peru on 28 July 1990. After having for many years a rate of support of around 60 to 75% in the opinion polls he had some days ago only 37%. In the last months many Peruvians moved to express more dissatisfaction than support for his administration. The man that organised a self-coup d'etat in April 92 and forced the change of the constitution to be re-elected in 1995, want to break the laws another time and to be re-elect in the year 2000 for another five years more. However, he was behind the Lima^Òs major in some last opinion polls.

Fujimori wanted to recover his popularity showing that he is a strong man, a way of operating that he imitates from Thatcher. There is another reason why he ordered an invasion of the residence. In the last months there was a growing discontent in the population against his most loyal collaborators and he was being undermined inside the army. A TV station and two prominent high politicians (an ex-Minister of the former APRA government and the national leader of the United Left) where attacked by para-military in the recent weeks.

Several denunciations on corruption where being made against high repressive figures including Vladimiro Montesinos, the man in charge of the all-powerful National Intelligence System and the real "Rasputin" behind Fujimori. Four out of five Peruvians demanded that Montesinos have to explain the reasons of his fortune. Former general Sinesio Jarama, declared that the Peruvian army was unhappy of the situation and that it could produce a new situation of military coup or Fujimori's self-coup. During the five months hostage crisis Fujimori had two foreign pressures.

The USA was pushing him into a more intransigent solution to avoid other groups in the world to follow the example of the MRTA. Japan was pushing for moderate and pacific concessions. At the end the son of Japanese decided to accept the recommendations of the real bosses of Peru: the USA. The operation was realised in a diplomatic territory which by international laws is part of Japanese sovereignty. In Tokyo, Japan's prime minister called it a ''splendid rescue,'' but also said it was ''regrettable'' that Peru had not forewarned his government.

When the hostage crisis started Poder Obrero Peru published a very well known international statement in which we criticised the guerrilla operation while we said that we will critically defend them against the repression and that we are unconditionally in favour of the liberation of all the political prisoners.

The failure of the occupation show how wrong are the guerrillerist methods. They are made outside the workers movement and at the end only want to push the system into reforms. The two guerrilla groups in Peru attacked workers organisations and workers democracy, had an strategy in favour of a popular front and a "democratic" regime with and behind the "progressive" bourgeoisie, and help the reaction to isolate and defeat toilers mass struggles.

It is not possible to defeat the US-trained army with very well armed elite. Only a mass uprising could do that. We work in that perspective. At the present low level of class struggles in Peru we are in favour of organising the workers and poor people from the shanty towns and the countryside for fighting around their more minimum demands and to advance in them through direct action.

We fight for eight-hour work, for a minimum living wage, for the elimination of all anti-terrorist laws, for stopping and reversing the privatisation, for the cancellation of the foreign debt and for the reorganisation of the union and popular organisations. We need to unite all the sectors in conflict into an struggle committee which would organise mass actions. In the recent months different workers sectors went into mass action (construction, oil, etc.) and we need to avoid the isolation of that struggles.

Our strategy is for a mass insurrection led by workers and peasants councils and militias which should establish a socialist republic as part of a voluntary Latin American federation. Our small forces are in discussions with other militants trying to crea te a nucleus for a revolutionary workers pa rty which could be the vanguard that struggle. Unfortunately most of the Peruvian left are in favour of popular front strategies. They want to create common governments with wings of the bourgeoisie. They disagree on the different electoral or armed methods to presurise them.

MRTA COMMUNIQUE #15
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
Movimiento Revolucionario Tupac Amaru (MRTA) Communique #15

The International Represenation of the MRTA reports the following to the international and national public:

Militants from other Latin American revolutionary movements will join the MRTA if Fujimori does not free the political prisoners.

Several revolutionary groups that we will not specify for security reasons have expressed their intention of joining the political-military struggle of the MRTA in the Peruvian jungle if Fujimori's government does not agree to free the political prisoners imprisoned in Peruvian jail-tombs.

The inhumane conditions of these prisoners as well as the sympathies for the MRTA that have been awakened in revolutionary groups throughout Latin America have caused the formation of a movement called "The International Combat Block" that includes members of several nationalities and will co-ordinate revolutionary strategies from "the Rio Grande to Patagonia".

Paradoxically, the intransigent position of dictator Alberto Fujimori is creating a movement of groups joining the MRTA that will increase the MRTA's political and military strength and will increase its coordination with other revolutionary groups on the rest of the continent and throughout the world.

The MRTA has expressed its willingness to continue struggling for peace with social justice, the only peace that lasts, but if this peaceful path is closed one more time, we have decided to continue the struggle by other means, and we are greatful for the international solidarity of all of the people in the world that have seen in our struggle the revalidation of their own struggles, the hope of building a better world, without hunger, without unemployment, without neoliberalism.

Neither surrendering, nor conquered... The struggle continues!

International Represenation of the MRTA April 1997

Honor To The Martyrs Of The Edgar Sanchez Commando!
Tupac Amaru Lives! The Struggle Continues!
MRTA Solidarity Page - http://burn.ucsd.edu/~ats/mrta.htm

END
~~~

FOUR WINDS STUDENT MOVEMENT
www.fwsm.org

↑ Index

881. Matthias Regan
Re: ReHoops
Fri 25 Apr 1997

---

so much I'd like to say about sports over wine and poorly cooked pasta (my fault) two other members of the list & I argued for hours in Chicago (if you didn't know, the best "sports city" in the US, with only Boston and perhaps Pittsburgh not far behind) about whether there was any difference between sports (in general) and the arts (in general), specifically basketball and theater and cam to no clear conclusions watching a game, a good novel the ordered & relatively slow pace of baseball must be part of the poetic appeal--a couple people have said so so far--but to my mind the appeal is much more in the patriotism baseball is made a symbol of, the history of it, the fact that it is usually played outside in a stadium around dusk those things to my mind make it poetic but a certain kind of poetry is evoked another kind by basketball I think the aesthetic I'm associating with baseball is closely linked, through small-town & borough business-sponsored softball games, to the oxen pull (SP, if you read this thanks for the poem how was your reading?) described below:

(((by the by, is watching oxen pull concrete slabs really a sport? or a staged spectacle? and whats the difference?)))

> What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood.

So true! I'm really serious when I remember the first sort of sad eternal mystical feeling that got me started writing (juvenile) poetry found its greatest material presence in NH state and county fairs

> that the vast bulk of the time
> is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen,
> hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc.

I always liked this aspect of it as well. Because it was both part of the spectacle and not at once. I always had the sensation, very enjoyable, at those fairs of seeing "behind the scenes" while looking directly at them; an aspect of "carnival" (the adjective) little discussed and related, a priori or not I'm not sure, to shabiness...

In other news the Bulls open their post-season-season tonight against the Bullets I haven't heard if Dennis will be back tonight, or Toni

the thing about MJ is he's really an intellectual player now; I swear he gets the same hang time with his fade away jumps as he used to with his glides and drives Bill Wennington said yesterday in the paper that MJ has invented some little move no one's ever seen before in every game he's been in for the last five years and MJ has played every game of every season since he returned

Matthias, late in the day

Matthias Regan
Northwestern University
Department of Chemistry
Phone: 847/[redacted]

↑ Index

882. David Golumbia
URGENT: MLA VOTE (fwd)
Fri 25 Apr 1997

Marc Bousquet wrote:
Date: Fri, 25 Apr 1997 18:12:22 -0400
From: Marc Bousquet <[redacted]>
Subject: URGENT: MLA VOTE
  [redacted], esa-l <[redacted]>, AmGroup-L <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Content-Length: 2726

PLEASE FORWARD TO LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE DEPARTMENTS AND LISTS

Please get a stamp and read carefully.

In the next few days, MLA members will be asked to vote on several propositions. Some, like the resolution committing the organization to a more activist stance on the employment crisis, are likely to pass by a large majority.

Others are more controversial and need to be thought about more carefully. Chief in this second group are the CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS (1-4 on the ballot). These all transfer power to the 14-member Executive Council, taking it from from the 270-member Delegate Assembly (which includes graduate students, new scholars, and delegates for Composition, Continuing Ed, Creative Writing, Disabled, Ethnic Studies, Gays and Lesbians, Independent Scholars, and Women in the Profession).

The concerns fueling these amendments are often legitimate. But the crippling of the single most diverse and democratic governance body in any scholarly society is not the answer.

The MLA Graduate Student Caucus urges MLA members to vote NO or ABSTAIN to CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS 1-4.

There are 12,000 graduate student members of MLA. The GSC-MLA Steering Committee 1997:

Vicky Smallman McMaster U, Canada Leo Parascondola CUNY Graduate School Mary Refling Columbia University Matthew Kirschenbaum U Virginia Will Murphy Indiana University Shelley Reid Austin College Anthony Xaco Navarrete UC San Diego Kate Burns UC San Diego christian a. gregory U Florida dave lashmet U Florida christine macdonald U Colorado Greg Rubinson U Rochester Kirsten M. Christensen U Texas, Austin Ray Watkins U Texas, Austin Andy Fleck Claremont Graduate School Jodi Schorb UC Davis Joe Aimone UC Davis Kate Stavisky U West Virginia Barbara White U Pittsburgh Alan Rea Bowling Green SU Yoshie Furuhashie Ohio State University Marc Bousquet CUNY Graduate School Granville Ganter CUNY Graduate School Eric Marshall CUNY Graduate School

--
[redacted]
David Columbia

↑ Index

883. robert drake
Re: Looking for Mr. Goodba--no, Joe Napora
Fri 25 Apr 1997

---

delayed response, but joe's BULLHEAD mag is now online:

http://ram.ramlink.net/~napora/bullhead.htm

(thanx to karl young via his Light & Dust site fr the alert...)

luigi

↑ Index

884. Poetics List
CFP: Whiteness and Cultural Identity (5/10; SAMLA) (fwd)
Sat 26 Apr 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 15:43:07 -0700 (MST)
From: "Jeffrey W. Timmons" <[redacted]>

To: Poetics List <[redacted]>
Subject: CFP: Whiteness and Cultural Identity (5/10; SAMLA) (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 16:34:29 -0400 (EDT)
From: Tim Engles <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: CFP: Whiteness and Cultural Identity (5/10; SAMLA)

Call for Papers -- 1997 SAMLA Conference, Nov. 13-15, Atlanta, GA Special Session: Whiteness and Identity

Numerous articles, conferences, and books have recently addressed from various perspectives the topic of "whiteness." Areas of interest within whiteness studies include such questions as whether or not there is a "white culture"; whether or not "whites" should or do identify themselves as such; and how the lives of racialized minorities are influenced by the dominant order's favoring of supposedly white skin, by the pervasive presence of unspoken "white" values, mores, and presumptions. How do authors portray the influence of such forces on the self-conceptions formed by "people of color" and/or "whites"? Abstracts are invited that address how authors (either marked as "white" and/or in other ways) portray the influence of unspoken whiteness on constructions of identity.

Please send abstracts by May 10 to:

Tim Engles
University of Georgia
Department of English
254 Park Hall
Athens, GA 30602

(e-mail submissions accepted as well)

==========
From the Literary Calls for Papers Mailing List
[redacted]
Full Information at http://www.english.upenn.edu/CFP/or write Jack Lynch: [redacted]

==========

↑ Index

885. Poetics List
Library Company job opening (fwd)
Sat 26 Apr 1997

sorry if I sent the other one more than once or twix

having thrubbles here-
jk

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 17:40:49 -0700 (MST)
From: "Jeffrey W. Timmons" <[redacted]>
To: Poetics List <[redacted]>
Subject: Library Company job opening (fwd)

please forward this to someone who might need/want it.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 22 Apr 1997 09:43:26 -0400
From: Ruth Hughes <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Library Company job opening

I am posting this in the hope that someone on the list is or has a grad student in need of a job. This is a great place to work if you are interested in the 18th century.

Library Assistant Position at the Library Company of Philadelphia.

The Library Company of Philadelphia, a rare book research library specializing in early American history, seeks a paraprofessional library assistant. Duties include reference assistance to patrons, paging books from stacks, card catalog maintenance, cataloging reference books, and miscellaneous clerical duties in support of professional catalogers and reference staff. A bachelors degree and computer literacy are required; an interest in American history or literature, library experience, or course work in library science are desirable. Starting salary, low 20s.

Applicants should be prepared to start work by August. Send a resume with names of three references to Phil Lapsansky, Chief of Reference, Library Company of Philadelphia. 1314 Locust St., Philadelphia, PA 19107. The Library Company is an equal opportunity employer.

↑ Index

886. Poetics List
NOTICE FROM YOUR INFORMATION BROKERS
Sat 26 Apr 1997

You will notice that no one received any mail on friday as the list exceeded its daily limit of 50 messages and I was not available to "free poetics" (which is the listserv command I send to release the held messages). I apologize for having other things to do, like the current Zukfofsky conference: yowie it has been great! The combination of Mark Scroggins, Ira Nadel and Paul Zukofsky on one stage was too much for me. I loved it! They were all great and it was the first real congenial conversation I've ever witnessed in Buffalo. Joseph Conte gave one of the best and most useful papers I've seen here while the "Man from Maine" Burt Hatlen (who surely stands 7 feet tall) exercised his readerly prowess while dangling us over the precipice of A-13. I'm also moving out of my apartment into the street where I hope to get to know what it is like to be online and have no place to live. I hope to be at the public library again sometime soon.

Y'all in the mean time might think about adding a little to your posts, perhaps not sending a post to every post you see (but rather taking it in a little before responding). It's not volume of posts but quantity that causes this problem. besides, if you've got nothing to do, what's to keep you from writing in the same message?? just an idea, a suggestion, if this sounds too much like hitler for ya, well, you can stuffa baloney sandwish through the lines--i'm really hungry-- love and kisses, your friendly poetics janitor

↑ Index

887. Mark Weiss
Re: ReHoops
Sat 26 Apr 1997

Sport is in the eye of the beholder. Basketball has always struck me as balletic. Spectacle without the swans. For those of us old enough baseball has little to do with patriotism except for the relative democracy of the sandlot, and not much to do with norman rockwell or suburban anything. It was the dust of an empty-lot game or timing the action for between the cars in a side street stickball match. You didn't need much--no court, no hoop, just a ball, a few shared gloves, and any kind of bat-substitute. And no adult intervention.

At 04:38 PM 4/25/97 -0500, you wrote:
>so much I'd like to say about sports over wine and poorly cooked pasta >(my fault) two other members of the list & I argued for hours in Chicago (if >you didn't know, the best "sports city" in the US, with only Boston and >perhaps Pittsburgh not far behind) about whether there was any difference >between sports (in general) and the arts (in general), specifically >basketball and theater and cam to no clear conclusions watching a >game, a good novel > the ordered & relatively slow pace of baseball must be part of the >poetic appeal--a couple people have said so so far--but to my mind the >appeal is much more in the patriotism baseball is made a symbol of, the >history of it, the fact that it is usually played outside in a stadium >around dusk those things to my mind make it poetic but a certain kind >of poetry is evoked another kind by basketball I think the aesthetic >I'm associating with baseball is closely linked, through small-town & >borough business-sponsored softball games, to the oxen pull (SP, if you read >this thanks for the poem how was your reading?) described below:

>
> (((by the by, is watching oxen pull concrete slabs really a sport? or a >staged spectacle? and whats the difference?)))
>
>>>What's wonderful about this sport is that the oxen (unlike horses in the >>>otherwise identical sport of horse-pulling) are truly as stolid as >>>oxen--they exhibit absolutely no change in affect or mood.
>
> So true! I'm really serious when I remember the first sort of sad >eternal mystical feeling that got me started writing (juvenile) poetry found >its greatest material presence in NH state and county fairs
>
>
>>> that the vast bulk of the time
>>>is spent in loading the sledge further, leading in the teams of oxen, >>>hitching, rehitching, unhitching, etc.
>
> I always liked this aspect of it as well. Because it was both part of >the spectacle and not at once. I always had the sensation, very enjoyable, >at those fairs of seeing "behind the scenes" while looking directly at them;
>an aspect of "carnival" (the adjective) little discussed and related, a >priori or not I'm not sure, to shabiness...
>
>
> In other news the Bulls open their post-season-season tonight against >the Bullets I haven't heard if Dennis will be back tonight, or Toni
>
> the thing about MJ is he's really an intellectual player now; I swear >he gets the same hang time with his fade away jumps as he used to with his >glides and drives Bill Wennington said yesterday in the paper that MJ has >invented some little move no one's ever seen before in every game he's been >in for the last five years and MJ has played every game of every season >since he returned

>
> Matthias, late in the day
>
>Matthias Regan
>Northwestern University
>Department of Chemistry
>Phone: 847/[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

888. Mark Weiss

Re: Poem for Rent

Sat 26 Apr 1997

You're right: you can't speak for New York or Massachussets.

At 10:19 PM 4/24/97 -0700, you wrote: >Paleeze! It's certainly a good idea to bother state senators whenever >possible with one's poems, but there are certainly greater social justice >issues than rent control and whatever ideas you may have about being >persecuted by your landlord. What about the failure of our government to >build more affordable housing for low and moderate income tenants and the >general gutting of HUD happening this year?
>
>I can't speak for New York or Massachusetts, but here in California rent >control (without vacancy decontrol) helps upper middle class tenants over >and above everyone else. In fact, just about every major demographic >study of both Santa Monica and Berkeley shows rent control (without >vacancy decontrol) DECREASED the number of low and moderate income >tenants as the housing market shrank. Ethnic diversity took a dive too.
>Now I'm talking about rent control not rent stabilization. They >ARE different.
>
>Anyway, the poetics list isn't the place for me to take issue with Daniel >Bouchard or to note the fact that I generally agree with him on poetry >and politics. Anyone who wants to backchannel and have me crunch the >numbers for them I'd be happy to.
>
>Anyone who wants a unit with hardwood floors and a liberal-lefty poet >landlord on premises in Santa Monica, forget it. It's rent controlled so we >never have vacancies.

>
>
> On Wed, 23 Apr 1997, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>
>> Good for Brendan Lorber!
>> & May what happened in Massachusetts, not come to pass in New York.
>>
>> Since rent control was banned in Massachusetts, former rent control tenants
>> (aka "protected status") have faced rent increases anywhere from 50-300%.
>> What have cities done to help all the people who are now vulnerable to >> "market rates?" Nuttin. Except, in Cambridge at least, the city has set up >> a board to "assist" people in moving out of their apartments and, since all >> the rents in the city have skyrocketed, effectively move out of the city.
>> Left on their own, city government does this kind of thing, and then they >> praise themselves for it in the press.
>>
>> There are alternatives though (for anyone in NY, or anywhere else facing >> this situation).
>>
>> Last week, after months of campaigning, tenant organizing, lobbying, etc., >> a group called the Eviction Free Zone saw through city council orders in >> Cambridge that 1) transferred over 1 and 1/2 million dollars into the >> Affordable Housing Fund (from the "free cash" coffer) and 2) designed a >> transfer tax on residential sales in Cambridge--with the first $300,000 >> exempted that will provide a substantial revenue for replenishing >> affordable housing funds. This is going to the State House in a week or >> so, where Governor Weld has already stated that he will veto ANY taxation >> bill that does not have a local referendum attached to it. So in the >> drafting of the bill, the EFZ insisted that such a referendum be attached.
>> We are very confident of being able to see that it passes in the fall.
>> Next on the agenda is securing a 20 million dollar bond for the immediate >> purchase of apartment buildings on the market to be made permanently >> affordable housing.
>>
>> It's incredible the arguments that were made against all of our efforts. I >> am growing confident that the real estate interest is second in power in >> this country only to the military/defense interest. One argument: "if we >> put through this transfer tax it will hinder young and struggling families >> from buying homes in Cambridge." A glance at the Sunday house >> advertisements indicate the median price range for a house in this city to >> be well beyond the means of any "young and struggling families." In fact, I >> have come across more than enough families who have lived in Cambridge all >> their lives and who cannot afford it anymore. Their children will have to >> settle elsewhere.

>>
>> Anyway, it's been a long road, and it's certainly far from over. Hours of >> meetings and talk complicated by time given for both Creole and Hispanic >> translators, etc. But it can be done, and good luck to anyone facing this >> dismal prospect. Back channel me if you want more info. on the work we've >> done here.
>>
>> [redacted]
>>
>>
>> Brenda,
>>
>> How can I get a copy of Lorber's poem?
>>
>
>

↑ Index

889. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Baseball & Poetry
Sat 26 Apr 1997

By far one of the best books by a poet on/with/for baseball is Willie's Throw, by Paul Metcalf. You can read it at Karl Young's Light and Dust Poets at http://www.thing.net/~grist/homekarl.htm

Metcalf includes the box score of the game he's working with--box scores being in themselves a form of poetry.

I have often thought an interesting method of "literary criticism" could be developed by applying Bill James' Sabremetrics to writers. (See James' superb Historical Baseball Abstract as example--)

A good deal can still be learned from a favorite book of Virginia Woolf's (and mine--i reread it each Spring Training in preparation forthe season. TIME BEGINS ON OPENING DAY as they say)--You Know Me, Al by Ring Lardner. Lardner knew how to telegraph voices.

"Shut up he explained."

Also recommended: The Glory of their Times (interviews with ballplayers from the first two decades of this century) and Baseball When the Grass Was Green. Paul Metcalf's first book, Will West, is about an American Indian pitcher . . .

Here's to Joachim Andujar and Mickey Rivers--two great baseball poets -- dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

890. Aldon L. Nielsen

Fwd: FYI: Zora Neale Plays Discovered (fwd)

Sat 26 Apr 1997

This just in from D.C. by way of New Orleans!

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 25 Apr 1997 19:00:23 -0400 (EDT)
From: [redacted]
To: charliebraxton&johnnierobinson <[redacted]>, colinchanner <[redacted]>,
"derricki.m.gilbert" <[redacted]>,
kevinpowell <[redacted]>,
kwamesenunevilledawes <[redacted]>,
michaelwarr <[redacted]>,
"valeriej.boyd" <[redacted]>, asantesalaam <[redacted]>,
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
A#[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted]
Subject: Fwd: FYI: Zora Neale Plays Discovered

this is kalamu,

just received this from another list i'm on. give thanx. FYI&C (For Your Information & Celebration)!!!

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted]
Resent-from: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Date: 97-04-25 17:35:36 EDT

4/25/97

> From Thursday's Washington Post.....

Audrey'97
****

> Hurston Plays Discovered

Find at Library of Congress May Shed New Light on Black the Writer

By William Triplett
Special to The Washington Post
Thursday, April 24 1997; Page B02
The Washington Post

The Library of Congress staffers were just looking for a little lunch-time entertainment, but they came up with a slice of literary history: 10 carbon copies, largely forgotten, of play manuscripts by the late African American writer and folklorist Zora Neale Hurston.

Alice Birney, a literary specialist in the Manuscript Division, coordinates the library's Performing Arts Forum, whose members meet monthly over lunch to hold informal readings of dramatic texts that are in the public domain. After a recent meeting, Birney said, a forum member suggested doing something by Hurston. A subsequent check into copyright records turned up the 10 scripts, all of which had been submitted for copyright between 1925 and 1944 as unpublished plays.

Four of the scripts -- "Woofing," "Poker," "Forty Yards" and "Lawing and Jawing" -- are short sketches in dialogue form. The remaining six -- "Cold Keener," "De Turkey and de Law," "Meet the Mamma," "Polk County," "Spunk" and "Mule-Bone" -- are full-length works. Only the last two appear to have been published, but not until 1991 and after adaptation to another medium.

Victoria Sanders, a literary agent who represents the Hurston estate, said yesterday that the heirs have known about the scripts in the library's collection "since the early '90s, when a copyright search was done." Indeed, a 1989 bibliography of Hurston's works included all the above titles. It did not, however, indicate whether copies of the works still existed.

Several Hurston scholars contacted yesterday were intrigued by the discovery.

"There isn't that much of [Hurston's] work that survives," said Patricia Willis, curator of Yale University's Collection of American Literature. "That's what makes this discovery so exciting."

"This is very significant," said Joellen Elbashire, curator of Howard University's Moorland-Spingarn Research Center, which is considered, along with Yale, to be among the most extensive repositories of Hurston manuscripts. Yet Yale and Howard combined have copies of only three of the 10 titles found in the library. According to Lois Hurston Gaston, a Hurston heir, it's uncertain whether there are copies of the other works in other archives. The library's seven "might be the only copies," she said.

Moreover, as Robert E. Hemenway, chancellor of the University of Kansas and author of a Hurston biography, said, "All 10 are going to be of interest to scholars" because Hurston was known for using a given title for more than one work. For example, "she wrote a number of things called `Polk County,' " Hemenway said. The script in the library's collection "may or may not be" the same as any of the other identically titled works.

Hurston, who grew up in Florida and studied at Howard University before moving to New York, was known primarily for her novels, in particular "Their Eyes Were Watching God," published in 1937. But she had a diverse career that included stints as teacher, journalist, librarian and anthropologist as well as dramatist. She became a key figure in the Harlem Renaissance and, in the words of Kathy A. Perkins in her book "Black Female Playwrights," was eventually "the most prolific and widely published female black writer of her era."

Still, Hurston was unable to support herself through her writing, which at times provoked attacks from black intellectuals. "She was criticized for perpetuating stereotypes in her work," said Kristy Anderson, an independent filmmaker who is making a biography of Hurston, who died in poverty and relative obscurity in 1960 at the age of 69.

(C) Copyright 1997 The Washington Post Company<<
****

↑ Index

891. william marsh
Re: ReHoops
Sat 26 Apr 1997

At 06:46 PM 4/24/97 -0700, you wrote:
>One reason why the Bulls are so much fun to watch is that they are so old.
>The old teams were pretty successful and interesting to watch. this year.
>The Jazz are old. The Sonics are pretty old. The Suns are old. The &*%$#@!
>Knicks are old.
>
Jordan is 34, i believe, and aren't the other "seasoned veterans" about the same, or even younger? / sometimes disconcerting how age is factored so differently in sports / i'm one year younger than Sir Air, and yet have the understanding i'd be classified as a "young writer", n'est-ce-pas? (don't the folks at Yale let anyone 40 and under submit to the Younger Poet's prize?) / also heard Kareem has turned 50 -- is that true?

[uh oh - are we allowed to give personal ages on this list?]

>Also, the Bulls are so international. They have an Australian, a Canadian, >a Croat (or is he a Serbian--I cant remember or tell the difference), a >Martian and a bunch of USAmericans.
>
Kukoc is Croatian, yes / and don't forget the two Ari-zonies, Kerr and Buchler (sp?)

bill marsh

↑ Index

892. David R. Israel
p i n g p o n g
Sat 26 Apr 1997

On Fri, 25 Apr 1997, Tom Mandel wrote:

> *What about ping pong? How can we not mention ping pong, another great language game. Joan Retallack is an excellent ping pong player; she has a table in her garage. I can beat her though; I am a reeeally good ping pong player! I take on all comers. What about it?*

this reminds that Meher Baba was quite fond of ping-pong, and is said to have played very well. (He also favored a game called "7 tiles" --more a local Maharashtra sport, I think). It's hard to mention ping-pong w/o recalling ping-pong diplomacy. I'd be happy to go a round w/ you sometime, Tom, though I can't claim to be an expert.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

I much enjoyed Huun-Huur-Tu's concert up at Symphony Space (NYC) a couple-three years ago (had a nice cassette of theirs, too, but don't know what became of it; this was before I had a CD player) . . . Tuvan music is wonderful -- but it's ESPECIALLY wonderful live. (Perhaps that's true of most lovely musics.)

Another entry in Armand Schwerner's international lineup also seemed of some note:

> Margi Madhu, kudiyattam dancer

that's, if I'm not mistaken, a dance-form from Orissa (north Indian state on the east coast, next to Bengal) -- I saw one kudiyattam dancer years ago in Berkeley & was much impressed w/ the lyricism of the form -- indeed remarkable.

The Dragon Bond Rite composer, Jin-Hi Kim, was featured on the cover of an issue (which naturally we called the "Jin-Hi Kim issue") of EAR Magazine, circa 1990. She plays a remarkable Korean instrument w/ long strings -- probably similar to the old Chinese chin -- which I think is the same instrument about which Chuang-Tze had that lovely tale (circa 3rd century BC), abt. two friends. One played the chin, another listened. The listener and player were in such perfect accord, that when the former died, the latter broke the strings of his chin -- for there was remained no one able to hear the music as it should be heard. . . .

I wonder of A. Schwermer might be willing to say a word or two about what he's written for this new music/theatre work (playing, as noted in post of yesterday, in NYC in early June) -- and if (for instance) it has any spoken words, or what? . . .

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
  >   david   raphael   israel    <
  >>      washington  d.c.      <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
==========================
|   thy centuries follow each other
|   perfecting a small wild flower
|                                (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

894. David R. Israel

Re: ReHoops / Yale Youngsters

Sat 26 Apr 1997

Bill Marsh muses on time's passage --

> Jordan is 34, i believe, and aren't the other "seasoned veterans" about the same, or even younger? / sometimes disconcerting how age is factored so differently in sports / i'm one year younger than Sir Air, and yet have the understanding i'd be classified as a "young writer", n'est-ce-pas? (don't the folks at Yale let anyone 40 and under submit to the Younger Poet's prize?) / also heard Kareem has turned 50 -- is that true?

Yes the folks at Yale do so let. They let me submit for several years running -- I sent 'em my MS Orison twice, and I think I sent 'em my MS A Bowl of China twice (last time being in February 1996). At that point I thought it was my final submission. But this year, I realized that, since I was still just 40, I could give it one last shot. But somehow or other, I inadvertantly let the deadline slip by w/o getting the MS in the mail (& the $25 entry fee check with it).

So I've been spared from fame & glory after all (oddly). The Yale Younger Poets competition has but two entry requirements: one must (i) be 40 years or younger, and (ii) have never yet published a po-book. Guess I was drawn to the Yale game mainly bec. W.S.Merwin and John Ashbery -- two of my serious faves -- had both published first volumes under that august (if not to say septemberal) rubric. (Now it's added to my annals of non-history.)

best,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

895. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Foundations of European Metaphysics
Sun 27 Apr 1997

Ground

Cassell's Compact Latin Dictionary

earth, soil == humus, solum, terra [humid soil terrapin, sole solar rockets terraplaning, terraforming soiled humus] on the ground == humi [Rumi] place, position == locus [locale, location, luscious looking] reason, basis == causa, ratio [Grund, Grundwerk, Panties, Rations] on the ground that == quod [because of, "quid"]

Collins Latin-English English-Latin Dictionary

bottom == solum [earth, soil, above, above-ground] earth == terra, humus [humdrum terrain, humorous Ground-breaking] cause == ratio, causa [above, above-Grund, above-Grundwerk, Panty-liner] sediment == faex [false sentiments, groundless presuppositions] on the ground == humi [almost, "as if dead," whirled worlds Grundless] gain ground == proficiere [proficient in Metaphysics, Foundations] rumour == increbrescere ["increbulous," said <strike>Jennifer</strike>] lose ground == cedere [acceded dispersions of metaphysical foundations military == inclinare [which are inclined to reified instantiations, vt == instituere [institutions, not _as if,_ but vi (ship) == sidere [sail-less, rudderless, on the high seas]

↑ Index

896. Chris Stroffolino
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Sun 27 Apr 1997

There comes a time in the life of ( ) when "one" must risk sounding STUPID or at least UNTHEORETICAL....
And, concerning the questions raised by the phrase
"there are no individuals", one may, I think, respond that to say THERE SHOULD BE NO INDIVIDUALS (or at least they should be consigned to something that doesn't have the status of poetry) is not the same as saying THERE ARE NO INDIVIDUALS..... and so what about this GAP?
We can retheorize alot,
The esso of individualism can become the EXXON of "false consciousness subject position" etc.

but what about "EVERY MAN FOR HIMSELF" or James Brown
"I GOT MINE DON'T WORRY ABOUT HIM".....
Oh, we're SO MUCH BETTER THAN THAT....la di da....
we could cry, in unison (as in inversion of that scene in "life of brian" concerning said individual)
But lets say one may find that he has many of the symptoms of TUBERCULOSIS, and let's say that one has no HEALTH CARE and can not afford healthcare....
Well, if there are no INDIVIDUALS, this shouldn't be a problem, right?
Because "ask not for whom the TUBERCULOSIS tolls, it tolls for thee" and "I can almost smell your tb sheets" and we can all check into the FUND FOR POETRY'S HEALTH CLINIC that allows one to be properly diagnosed and then given the cure. How far does "community" go?
So, how does one GET OVER TB without having to check into a hospital? Does one simply die?
Oh, of course, these questions have nothing to do with poetics....
Write this 100 times on the board....
----------Chris S.

↑ Index

897. Dan Raphael Dlugonski

Or-Wa-Id

Sun 27 Apr 1997

For those of you in the hinterlands of the above named states, to let you know i (dan raphael) will be reading this week:
4/29 in LaGrande at Eastern Oregon State College, 7:30
4/30 in Kennewick at the Starbucks, 7:30
5/1 in Moscow at BookPeople, (7:30?) and 5/2 in Walla Walla at The Temple, 7

↑ Index

898. Field of Roses

Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)

Sun 27 Apr 1997

> But lets say one may find that he has many of the symptoms
>
> of TUBERCULOSIS, and let's say that one has no HEALTH CARE and can not afford healthcare....
> Well, if there are no INDIVIDUALS, this shouldn't be a problem, right?

'But let's say one'...

The treatment for TB is usually a triple drug therapy for 1-2 years, (usually provided free by a local public health clinic, as it is in their interest to stop the spread of this contagious disease within a population.) If one suspects they may have TB, it is paramount that they be immediately diagnosed and treated. Hospitalization is usually for one week and is ONLY for those whose diagnosis is still unclear and who may be contagious.

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

899. David R. Israel
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Sun 27 Apr 1997

> >But lets say one may find that he has many of the symptoms
> >of TUBERCULOSIS, <snip>
> 'But let's say one'...
>
> The treatment for TB is usually a triple drug therapy for 1-2 years, <snip>
> Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

not sure that either the original leapin' hypothetical, nor the helpful medical clarification, have altogether illuminated my understanding of the theory and practice of non-individuality.

For the record (but not the CD, shy goto ex-dreams?), I'll say this:

imho, individuality was not recently invented, nor will it be soon stamped out. It is an essential trait of "the soul in illusion" -- and well-founded rumor has it that "a spark of individuality" survives even nirvana & the subsequent nirvakalpa samadhi. Vide (for instance) Meher Baba, God Speaks (Dodd, Mead & Co., 1955), passim, for many useful (& I dare say clarifying) details of this overall (or, forsooth, oversoul) ur-narrative.

best,
d.i.
.
.....
.....
\\/////\\\\\
> david raphael israel <

```
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| [redacted]     (home)
| [redacted]     (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

900. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Fwd: FYI: Zora Neale Plays Discovered (fwd)

Sun 27 Apr 1997

This is indeed exciting! Being from her neck of the woods (Brooksville, a small town some 70 miles west from Eatonville where she grew up, and where she collected much of her folklore), I follow her work with a keen interest. She has helped preserve the idiom of a people who, though they lived in abject poverty, celebrated life richly in their language and customs. I hope that these plays and their lively language are all published together soon.

Bill B.

RE:

> Hurston Plays Discovered

Find at Library of Congress May Shed New Light on Black the Writer

By William Triplett
Special to The Washington Post
Thursday, April 24 1997; Page B02
The Washington Post

The Library of Congress staffers were just looking for a little lunch-time entertainment, but they came up with a slice of literary history: 10 carbon copies, largely forgotten, of play manuscripts by the late African American writer and folklorist Zora Neale Hurston.

Alice Birney, a literary specialist in the Manuscript Division, coordinates the library's Performing Arts Forum,
. whose members meet monthly over lunch to hold informal readings of dramatic texts that are in the public domain.
After a recent meeting, Birney said, a forum member suggested doing something by Hurston. A subsequent check into copyright records turned up the 10 scripts, all of which had been submitted for copyright between 1925 and 1944 as unpublished plays.

Four of the scripts -- "Woofing," "Poker," "Forty Yards" and "Lawing and Jawing" -- are short sketches in dialogue form. The remaining six -- "Cold Keener," "De Turkey and de Law," "Meet the Mamma," "Polk County," "Spunk" and "Mule-Bone" -- are full-length works. Only the last two appear to have been published, but not until 1991 and after adaptation to another medium.

Victoria Sanders, a literary agent who represents the Hurston estate, said yesterday that the heirs have known about the scripts in the library's collection "since the early '90s, when a copyright search was done." Indeed, a 1989 bibliography of Hurston's works included all the above titles. It did not, however, indicate whether copies of the works still existed.

Several Hurston scholars contacted yesterday were intrigued by the discovery.

"There isn't that much of [Hurston's] work that survives," said Patricia Willis, curator of Yale University's Collection of American Literature. "That's what makes this discovery so exciting."

"This is very significant," said Joellen Elbashire, curator of Howard University's Moorland-Spingarn Research Center, which is considered, along with Yale, to be among the most extensive repositories of Hurston manuscripts. Yet Yale and Howard combined have copies of only three of the 10 titles found in the library. According to Lois Hurston Gaston, a Hurston heir, it's uncertain whether there are copies of the other works in other archives. The library's seven "might be the only copies," she said.

Moreover, as Robert E. Hemenway, chancellor of the University of Kansas and author of a Hurston biography, said, "All 10 are going to be of interest to scholars" because Hurston was known for using a given title for more than one work. For example, "she wrote a number of things called `Polk County,' " Hemenway said. The script in the library's collection "may or may not be" the same as any of the other identically titled works.

Hurston, who grew up in Florida and studied at Howard University before moving to New York, was known primarily for her novels, in particular "Their Eyes Were Watching God," published in 1937. But she had a diverse career that included stints as teacher, journalist, librarian and anthropologist as well as dramatist. She became a key figure in the Harlem Renaissance and, in the words of Kathy A. Perkins in her book "Black Female Playwrights," was eventually "the most prolific and widely published female black writer of her era."

Still, Hurston was unable to support herself through her writing, which at times provoked attacks from black intellectuals. "She was criticized for perpetuating stereotypes in her work," said Kristy Anderson, an independent filmmaker who is making a biography of Hurston, who died in poverty and relative obscurity in 1960 at the age of 69.

(C) Copyright 1997 The Washington Post Company<<
****

↑ Index

901. George Bowering
Re: ReHoops
Sun 27 Apr 1997

Remember the good old ABA? Great team names such as The Spirit of St. Louis?

Well, back then, George Stanley and I invented the World League of Basketball, and had teams such as

The Great Wall of China
The Berlin Airlift
The Alexandria Quintet
The Treaty of Utrecht
The Spanish Armada
The Mexico City Blues
The Peking Ducks
The Johannesburg Riesling
The Warsaw Pact
The Black Hole of Calcutta

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

902. George Bowering
Re: p i n g p o n g
Sun 27 Apr 1997

Ping Pong, or as it is called among us really good players, table tennis, is very important to the earlier Sidel novels (Such as _Blue Eyes_) of Jerome Charyn, my main man.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

903. henry gould
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Sun 27 Apr 1997

Mark of DC & Jeff of Mpls ('there are no individuals" or - perhaps significant difference - "in writing there are no individuals") and Henry of Providence ("individuality is the divine analogy sacred must not be tampered with you benighted totalitarians") are paradoxically only half-right & thus wrong; this is the essence of idealization/abstraction/mis/communication. Jeffrey Timmons asked is there a common ground; perhaps it might be found among other places in Aristotle's Poetics, the ur-text of "poetics": where tragedy is described as the ultimate form of poetry because it joins action and reflect ion, indissolubly, in an image of suffering which evokes identification (pity & fear) as well as evaluation (reflection). The meaning of humanity is action/reflection; there is no individual in the abstract; the idea of individuality is a social construct; we know of great historical "individuals" simply because of their mastery of the social, the communal; and yet what is action without character, what is the social without the bond of individuals (love, kinship); individual-social mirror one another in life and in writing; life is double, action is double, writing is double, analysis is double, halves are part of one, halves are individual parts of one whole; etc. And we are each 2-sided creatures (left,right) (front,back), & one & unrepeatable. (or if repeatable, the repetition of a singularity).

We are rational animals, fumbling & then understanding; fumbling in our understanding & correcting incorrectly in our actions. TB will be dealt with by people who are secure enough in their individuality to help out in the community. (Though how did they get so secure? Was it love or was it Daddyo paying for college? Both, double, double, O world, let go the superflux)

- Eric Blarnes, Earl of Oxford, author of Shakespeare

↑ Index

904. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Re: B Ball
Sun 27 Apr 1997

-In grad school at bowling green we had a couple visiou bball games tween the poets and prose writers. why are prose writers almost always bigger &bulkier than poets (charles olson aside).
and william matthews used to have a very sweet jump shot.
i've written a couple bball poems myself, particualry one called "big guys dance" that happened when my son was taking an archery class in a city parks roller skating rink that was under the gym, which opened about midway thru the archery class-- the thunder and echoes pf the ball bodies and feet in the cavernous underrground wpa skating rink was transportive.
>
>On the other hand -- there were far more students on hand than usual,
>

↑ Index

905. David R. Israel
Re: New York City Poetry Calendar
Sun 27 Apr 1997

> Date: Fri, 11 Apr 1997 10:24:02 -0400
> From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
> Subject: New York City Poetry Calendar
>
> The New York City Poetry Calendar is now on-line:

> http://www.nynow.com/poetry/

good news, this! Used to be, one (yrs truly) from the provinces would surface in NYC and head for St. Marks Books, in hopes of getting a copy of the legendary Po Calendar. Now - from the comfort of my southern hovel! fantastico

Had been thinking of a jaunt to le grande apple mid-May, and was just wondering how to find out abt. poetical doings. Now I know.

thanks --
> PUBLISHER
> Martin J. Paddio
> EDITOR
> Molly McQuade

the searrch feature (including, by venue or by poet) looks good.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
  >    david   raphael   israel    <
  >>      washington  d.c.      <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
 ==========================
|   thy centuries follow each other
|   perfecting a small wild flower
|                                  (Tagore)
 ////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

906. David R. Israel
Re: B Ball
Sun 27 Apr 1997

Dan Raphael Dlugonski asks:

> -In grad school at bowling green we had a couple visiou[s] bball games tween the poets and prose writers. why are prose writers almost always bigger &bulkier than poets (charles olson aside).

David Raphael Israel replies:

think pros vs. amateurs. The wasted-away lover (amateur - from L. amat; - a venture for sake of love). Not to mention the pros & the cons. Con-artists are not nec. skinny; prose-artists not always fat.

twixt the twain they lixed the platter clean tween the pos & pros they played it mean
I cannot quite unravel such a riddle -- nor was I there in kelly bowling green

d.i.

↑ Index

907. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
from Oswald O.
Sun 27 Apr 1997

(From Oswald O.)

I'm sitting here in tshirt and pants, worrying about a future in death And hackers screwing up my system and my arms and legs leprosy and lies So there's nowhere to go but into machines and I've lost the will to live Which is why I say in the middle of the night thank god for the rain

And the flowers are dying in roadside Amerika and no one's around to collect
And rainbows are yearning while cities are burning and children are dead from neglect
The war's hardly over, girls lie down in clover, scream and they never get up
It's time for the magic, the reaper wrecks havoc, it's time for the gallows and cup

I'm sitting here in combat and drinking long gone brew of blood and wine And you might think it's fine and that we're walking the party line But the sides are smashed with needles and vials and vile's the weather today So thank God for the pounding on windows and roof thank God for the nighttime rain

And she offers me water, she offers me wine, she offers her body as well Cause she knows I've returned, whole villages burned, I've been through the weather of hell The war's just begin, there's blood on the sun, there's blood on the harvest moon And I'm throwing the cards, hanged men and hanged girls, they're sowing another rune

And you might think I'm dressed in armor, leaning down from the pulpit for cards
But I've wounded myself, I've lost my way, in the woods where the runes send off sparks
And flames reach for the skies, they cover her thighs, the runes scream, they're burning bright

She buries herself in my burning flesh, thank God for the storm and the rain

Pattie Hearst walks again with the strong Weathermen, Black Panthers are loading their guns Em-Sixteens are ready, our bodies are steady, we're off to the hills at a run
Lord Jesus will keep us, Death will not reap us, revenge is the truth of the day
And nighttime will hide us, the ghetto abide us, we're waiting to kill and to pray

And you'll find me here in bluejeans and tshirt, roaring down the wires at you, You'll see me in the flaming sky, holy embrace with Janis and Jimmie and The Owl
Pure windows opened up flaming skulls where we'll take the boat to Nam's pure booty hell
And celebrate our love beyond your cracked dull thought, and thank God for the thunder and rain

And the flowers are dying in roadside Amerika and no one's around to collect
And rainbows are yearning while cities are burning and children are dead from neglect
The war's hardly over, girls lie down in clover, scream and they never get up
It's time for the magic, the reaper wrecks havoc, it's time for the gallows and cup

↑ Index

908. Maria Damon

Re: chastened by CB'sreposting of the welcom message

Sun 27 Apr 1997

---

hey congrats wendy!!

At 10:52 PM -0400 4/24/97, Wendy Battin wrote:
>New Release
>
>
>1997 Winner of the Snyder Memorial Prize from Ashland
>
>Little Apocalypse
>

>poems by Wendy Battin
>
>ISBN #0-912592-40-0
>$10.00 pbk.
>
>Amid the incoherence of things, between the coarse lines of dissolution;
>after our last photogenic war, the "fever-vivid" language of Wendy >Battin's Little Apocalypse threads between lucidity and lyricism, surface >and depth to the very fovea of the song. An exquisite collection.
>--CD Wright
>
>
>Available from The Ashland Poetry Press
>Ashland University, Ashland, Ohio 44805 phone [redacted]
>fax [redacted]

↑ Index

909. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Sun 27 Apr 1997

I also thought I heard that distress signal, and wrote him off-line. A very close friend of mine, ex-wife, was in his situation here in New York. TB is spreading in the city, as far as I know.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ TEL [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217

↑ Index

910. Field of Roses
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

> Linda:
> Thank you for the useful information, but it doesn't really seem to address the issue Chris Stroffolino (also usefully) raises [though it flashes a gleam of hope that in some yet hard-to-envision future one might not feel the need to raise such issues]. "The law is no respecter of persons," and no more (or much less) of individuals: i.e., as you

> note, the free treatment afforded to TB patients derives not from concern for the individual sufferer, but in reaction to the threat to the collective "society" (which includes, of course, the "individuals" who offer such therapeutic largesse)--a fact which seems to emphasize rather than obviate the urgency of Chris' point.
> Dan Zimmerman

Dan

Perhaps I misread Chris' 'urgency' as I thought I heard a distress signal above the question of individuality. Call it priorities. (Mine.) Information is what I brought to the discussion. Simply that. Without the common good, most of us wouldn't be here to intellectualize about the individual and contagious disease.

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

911. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Field of Roses wrote:
>
> >But lets say one may find that he has many of the symptoms
>
> >of TUBERCULOSIS, and let's say that one has no HEALTH CARE and can not afford > >healthcare....
> >Well, if there are no INDIVIDUALS, this shouldn't be a problem, right?
>
> 'But let's say one'...
>
> The treatment for TB is usually a triple drug therapy for 1-2 years, > (usually provided free by a local public health clinic, as it is in their > interest to stop the spread of this contagious disease within a > population.) If one suspects they may have TB, it is paramount that they be > immediately diagnosed and treated. Hospitalization is usually for one week > and is ONLY for those whose diagnosis is still unclear and who may be > contagious.
>
> Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

Linda: Thank you for the useful information, but it doesn't really seem to address the issue Chris Stroffolino (also usefully) raises [though it flashes a gleam of hope that in some yet hard-to-envision future one might not feel the need to raise such issues]. "The law is no respecter of persons," and no more (or much less) of individuals: i.e., as you note, the free treatment afforded to TB patients derives not from concern for the individual sufferer, but in reaction to the threat to the collective "society" (which includes, of course, the "individuals" who offer such therapeutic largesse)--a fact which seems to emphasize rather than obviate the urgency of Chris' point. Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

912. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) job announcement
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Approved-By: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]>
Date: Mon, 28 Apr 1997 15:44:13 -0500
From: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]>
Subject: job announcement
To: Multiple recipients of list CAFS-F2 <[redacted]>

Interdisciplinary Studies: California State University, Los Angeles
seeks a tenure-track assistant/associate professor for the Liberal Studies Program. Candidates must have a Ph.D. in hand in Interdisciplinary Studies, or in a field that clearly emphasizes interdisciplinary research, and a demonstrated ability for successful teaching of interdisciplinary undergraduate university courses. Research/creative work and teaching should also emphasize interdisciplinary scholarship and pedagogy and demonstrate potential for contributions toward program development. Standard teaching load is three courses per 10-week quarter, three quarters per year. In addition, the applicant will be expected to serve on committees, work with students in the Women s Studies minor, serve as advisor for LBS majors, and be available for flexible scheduling. Release-time is negotiable depending on amount of advisement and program coordinator duties. Submit letter, evidence of scholarly work, curriculum vitae, transcript from institution awarding the Ph.D., and three recent letters of reference to: Search Committee Chair, Liberal Studies Program, California State University, Los Angeles, 5151 State University Drive, Los Angeles, CA 90032-8110. Position open until filled. Review of applications to begin on May 1, 1997. An equal opportunity/affirmative action/disabled/title ix employer, CSULA is committed to creating a community in which a diverse population can live and work in an atmosphere of tolerance, civility and respect for the rights and sensibilities of each individual, without regard to economic status, ethnic background, political views, sexual orientation, or other personal characteristics or beliefs.

↑ Index

913. Steve Carll

April is the Readingest Month II

Mon 28 Apr 1997

The sequel to the brain-busting crunch month of poetry in San Francisco. Our story resumes on Saturday, April 19th at New College as Small Press Traffic presents Elizabeth Willis and Steve McCaffery. Dodie Bellamy introduces Elizabeth, who reads poems such as "A/O", "Human Abstract" (Willis', not Blake's), "Piet a Terre", "Catalog Resin A" (for Richard Dodd), and "Without Pity" to a crowd which included Lyn Hejinian, Avery E.D. Burns, Leslie Scalapino, Douglas Powell, Sam, Rodrigo Toscano, Ron Silliman, Peter Gizzi (of course), Norma Cole, Steve Dickison and Tina Rotenberg, Cydney Chadwick, Mary Margaret Sloan, Paul Hoover and Maxine Chernoff, Jean Day, Mary Burger, Elizabeth Robinson, Renee Gladman and Stephanie Baker. Some great Liz lines I caught were:

flower is becoming a graph idea three: only one violet
H: the heart of a flower flower in the heart of the flower the spirit fell, and you knew it because you were earthly this is my reference to the amity of sand whoever called light discreet?
if I err, I am, and my error moves me desire is a form of fastening the love of fertile ground can be a kind of phobia everything appears to shine, given enough darkness trees have the only real land legs to fashion oneself wholly on dogs

Steve McCaffery then held the floor spellbound for awhile, reading from "Serbia Mon Amour", "Critique of Cynical Poesis", "Broad Topics", "What As Poetic", and _Teachable Texts_. Here are some lines of his:

there are stars above a piece of soap someone just happens to have dropped into a movie
the sutra through its murmur is bound to offend a duel is not a social contract the route of writing not the round of language
I is another; we are not alone property droppity plops
my mouth is earth's scholar
the disambiguated geese
just opening mnemonics to a type of shore

fiat latex
the ontology of the neuter shows promise so it seemed better to shoot poems than to write democracies jouissance _is_ my inner-city asthma wondering why clouds seem so up-to-date in case of an exit, please use the nearest emergency

There was a party not far away given by the incoming editors of _Five Fingers Review_ to say goodbye to the outgoing editors, so we cabbed over and stood out back in the mist, and I heard lots of stories about eating out in Iowa which I believe I'll spare you all.

The following Tuesday at Intersection was the reading for _Five Fingers Review_ #16. There was a great spread on tables in the back (I started eating peanuts and just never stopped...) and Thoreau Lovell (one of the aforementioned outgoing editors) started us off by reading from cue cards, "Russian style". He was followed by a first set: Mary Margaret Sloan, Peter Weltner, Norma Cole (playing herself and Cole Swenson), Adam Cornford, Chris Daniels, Gabrielle Glancy, John High, Fanny Howe, and Kim Jensen. Some of the lines from the first set were (various authors):

that we will break the alphabet in two drowning tangent immediate archaic take sides into pieces
I knew I was being inconsistent, but I was beside myself into his gaze intelligence slipped old lizard blood combusts
the buffalo with golden horns settles on the nenuphar a pylon of the bridge of tedium stretching from me to the Other field upon field of uncharted disaster
I was like a cataract against the darkness of the sky blessed is the transparent sky today stood as cold as a mirror
it's bad poetry night at the arbitrarium

After a break to let the readers and audience (John Noto, Joseph Aukee, Giovanni Singleton, Pat Reed, Don Hilla, Katya Olmstead and Sasha (John High's loved ones), Jean and Ann, John High introduced the second set of the night (using first names as opposed to Thoreau's introduction of the first half using last names in what John dubbed "the combination of contradictions"): Thoreau Lovell, Scott McCleod, Michelle Murphy, Andrew Joron, Jandy Nelson, incoming 5FR editor Jaime Robles, and Barbara Roether. Lines from the second half included gems like:

he thinks hard because reality is haunted, deep out into the snow there are actual spies in this world into the dream and out again whose arms are wide enough to keep the horizon from falling?
my tongue becomes a fuse thought begins with the interruption of a rhythm all the flowers in the city switched colors years of rain fell back up into the sky a petrified joint reminiscent of stem and branch maybe we can find a nice animal who can help us do you remember where I came from and have you returned to tell me?

Friday Kristin Prevallet gave a lecture and slide show on Scottish/New York/San Francisco Renaissance poet Helen Adam, followed by a screening of a recently restored print of Adam's long-lost film _Daydream of Darkness_ (more on Kristin later).

Saturday the 26th at New Langton Arts, Jean Day and Barrett Watten gave a spectacular reading. Jean read first, reading from _The Literal World_ , "Vernaculars of the Present: Seven Secular Sermons", and "Narratives From the Crib", a series written from the perspective of her 2-and-a-half-year-old:

where the world resists--pathos westering from ruin to ruin when the composer sees in everything the condition of flowers, the two can seem the same we live in an optative virtuosity the ships, how well they sail--_in the ocean_
if you saw words in the clouds instead of numbers, you would become unesoteric how many nights with an axe "interpolating" the forest trees?
among the sublime and lonely jets, I legislate
the milk of heaven is said to make the sun rise.

MC Kit Robinson went without pause into his intro to Barrett Watten, who proceeded to turn his recently published _Frame_ into _Zone_, written since his move to Michigan to teach at Wayne State. His reading was relentlessly thought-provoking, and I couldn't write down a lot of lines because so many were followed by equally mind-bending lines (but here's some I did get):

dreams are our life, which we'll never be able to penetrate everyone looks, while no one can be found even clouds of the same sky are the same time is a sensible by-product of motion between two poles then we made a language out of action, but static interfered with our speech the sky excludes landscape altogether

just as the dream fails to impose self-correction, we can only approve of ourselves to abandon painting, look directly at the sun

In the New Langton bleachers sat Norma Cole, Laura Moriarty, Norman Fischer, Lyn Hejinian, Mary Burger, Pamela Lu, Rodrigo Toscano, Rob Hale, Leslie Scalapino, Hung Tu, Kevin Killian, Steve Vincent, Larry Ochs, Etel Adnan, Nick Robinson, George Lakoff, and Melissa.

The very next day, Sunday the 27th at Canessa Park, Michael Boughn (of Toronto), Brian Lucas (of San Francisco) and Kristin Prevallet (of Buffalo; told ya we'd get back to her) gave varied and captivating performances in front of a pretty full house that included a lot of people I don't know, but some I do, like Kevin Killian, Elizabeth Willis and Peter Gizzi, Norma Cole, Spencer Selby, Steve Dickison and Tina Rotenberg, Charlie Palau, Duncan McNaughton and Rob Hale. Michael Boughn started, reading from _Dislocations in Crystal_ and a ms. currently entitled _Enormous Bodies of Water_. Here's a few tidbits:

add a fourth receptor and it seems all heaven breaks loose so maybe Einstein's got his answer now--it just keeps heading out as if flesh were metaphor's last stand liberates white fins to the sun angels of evaporation
is it democracy--that weird exhalation of Detroit?
next time around, it's wind over metonymics day's relentless stretch toward Zaire and Christmas

Brian Lucas, editor of _Angle_, read from a manuscript called _Divine Ward_:

trace a seal onto vespering glade ever is thought of as approaching always a valley present; a thought is a grove here traces that, delayed, mean us how's breathing? did it tell you as much as you'd hoped?

and Kristin finished up with a reading which drew from _Perturbation, My Sister_ and _Lead, Glass, and Poppy_:

shadows were collecting the evidence they became like the window that abandons the house and joins the view newcomers are sprayed with a lavender seal

Afterwards there was a party at Jean Day's house featuring this awesome chili Jean made out of the Green's Cookbook and some lively conversation about Pearlman's book on langpo, that other LP, the so-called "New York lifestyle poets" (you know who you are), the Neo-formalists, following your bliss--narcissistic or not?, and the metaphorical underpinnings of mathematics.

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

914. Rachel Loden
home of the brave
Mon 28 Apr 1997

George Bowering wrote:

> All I used to do before > Rachel saved me , was drink beer, go to the track, pee my pants, and get > into fistfights and lose them.

Saving George...it's not for the faint at heart, you know. It's not for sissies. But as Lincoln said at Gettysburg, we are here dedicated to the great task remaining before us. The last full measure of devotion, etc.

Rachel L.

↑ Index

915. Fredrik Hertzberg
Peter Winch 1926-1997
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Just heard that Peter Winch, wittgensteinian philosopher at Urbana-Champaign, author of The Idea of Social Science (& etc) died this morning.

↑ Index

916. Louis Cabri
Cabinet Gallery London
Mon 28 Apr 1997

I'm wondering if anyone has the address for the Cabinet Gallery in London, England. Would much appreciate it backchanneled (email too if it's available). Thanks! - Louis

↑ Index

917. Peter Jaeger
fi press (fwd)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Some of you will find this press very exciting, not only for editor damian lopez's attention to the book as unique object, but also for the wide range of writers and forms that he publishes.

Peter

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 01 Apr 1997 15:14:05 -0500
From: Prose & Contexts <[redacted]>
Subject: march publications, website update

fingerprinting inkoperated announces:

* march publications & expanded website *

march publications

fi is happy to announce the long awaited release of Christian Bök's _Crystallography: A Report on Lucid Writing_. this creative essay on poetics as crystals is related to Bök's acclaimed 1994 book of poetry, _Crystallography_. this 36 page chapbook is a lucid essay exploring poetics through the metaphor of crystallization. the term essay though is misleading--this is a creative work, not an academic exercise. printed on frosted mylar with a full colour cover & a 2X magnifying lens laid in a pocket inside the back cover in an edition of 70 numbered & signed copies, this hand sewn chapbook is available for only C$5.00*

fi is also pleased to re-release Alana Wilcox's first chapbook, _Analogue_. the first edition, published only a month ago, managed to stay in print for a mere matter of days, prompting this reprint (an unusual occurrence at fi). this second edition of 50 sewn copies will not be in print long, & is available for only C$2.50*

*subscribers receive 20% off this price--see the website for details

website facelift

over the last few weeks the fi website has undergone another make-over. the new site not only includes a new interface but also expanded content. the "in print" section now includes samples from many of the publications. also, there are now clearer & more extensive submission guidelines.

speaking of which, since fi is back in high gear, submissions are being actively sought. so check out the "submit" page & send in some work.

coming soon

there are a number of projects on the go, including work by Stephen Cain, jwcurry, MAC Farrant, and a long awaited kid's book by David UU. with some luck, these new publications will be ready by the Toronto Small Press Fair, to be held Saturday 3 May, 11am-6pm, at Club 360, 326 Queen Street West, Toronto. fi will be there along with many of Toronto's most interesting mags & presses.

damian lopes

---

fingerprinting inkoperated damian lopes
Box 657 Station P Toronto Canada M5S 2Y4
http://www.interlog.com/~dal
for pgp key, email: pgp-key <[redacted]>

a micro-publisher of innovative writing exploring form/at

↑ Index

918. Matthias Regan
Tribal Suicide
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Someone posted this on the "Bad Subjects" list over the weekend. I send it on not only to telegraph a message but because on my screen (set at courier 12 point) the line breaks are interesting:

> From today's Daily Telegraph:

International News Electronic Telegraph
Saturday 26 April 1997

Tribe threatens mass suicide
By John Hiscock in Los Angeles

A TRIBE of 5,000 is threatening to commit mass suicide by leaping from a cliff unless Occidental Petroleum abandons plans to drill for oil in what the tribesmen claim is their territory.

The semi-nomadic U'wa tribe of Colombia is sending its chief, Roberto Cobaria, to the United States next week to publicise the threat and meet environmental and rights groups. Legend has it that a group of U'wa tribe members committed mass suicide in the 17th century in protest against Spanish colonialism.

The tribe's threat has become a public relations nightmare for Occidental, which says it has been deluged with letters, faxes and e-mail from around the world urging it to abandon its drilling plans for the 400,000-acre site. Dozens of demonstrators protested at Occidental's annual meeting yesterday at its offices in Santa Monica, California, where the issue was on the agenda.

"We are supporting the U'wa in their demands that Occidental promise to respect their cultural integrity and not to drill for oil on their ancestral land," said one of the demonstrators, Lucy Braham, of Action Resource Centre of Los Angeles which, along with Amazon Watch, is hosting Chief Cobaria's visit. "We need to hold US corporations accountable for their actions."

Occidental Petroleum, which has so far invested £8 million in the site, has the support of the Colombian government and is looking to government leaders to settle the issue.

Three Colombian cabinet ministers are to travel to the U'wa reservation east of the Andes Mountains next month in the hope of reaching an agreeement and Occidental has said it is awaiting some signs of an accord before proceeding.

_____ Brian J. Gross **

[redacted]  Washington, D.C.

↑ Index

919. Pritchett,Pat
Re: p i n g p o n g
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Ah Jerome Charyn, who wrote the marvelous _The Seventh Babe_ a very good baseball book even for someone who's not crazed about the game.

Patrick Pritchett

From: George Bowering
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: p i n g p o n g
Date: Monday, April 28, 1997 2:44AM

Ping Pong, or as it is called among us really good players, table tennis, is very important to the earlier Sidel novels (Such as _Blue Eyes_) of Jerome Charyn, my main man.

George Bowering.

,

↑ Index

920. Peter Jaeger
new fi release - april 97 (fwd)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

more from fingerprinting inkoperated

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 19 Apr 1997 13:59:17 -0400
From: Prose & Contexts <[redacted]>
Subject: new fi release - april 97

fingerprinting inkoperated announces:

Diana Ross in Wax

by

MAC Farrant

Diana Ross in Wax is a classic example of Farrant's "suburban surrealism." in this story she tackles a cultural icon, Diana Ross, who in Farrant's world is a 35 inch midget... need i say more? well if so, check out the opening of the story on the website in the "in print" section.

Diana Ross in Wax is a 16 page handsewn chapbook with a silver thread band sealed with gold wax, published in an edition of 65 copies, available for only

C$3.75. as always, subscribers to fi receive a 20% discount on regular prices--see the website for more information on how to subscribe.

for those in the Toronto area, don't forget the Small Press Fair is being held Saturday 3 May at Club 360 (located at 326 Queen West).

---

fingerprinting inkoperated damian lopes
Box 657 Station P Toronto Canada M5S 2Y4
http://www.interlog.com/~dal
for pgp key, email: pgp-key <[redacted]>

a micropress specializing in innovative writing exploring form/at

↑ Index

921. Charles Bernstein
Rational Meaning is now out
Mon 28 Apr 1997

I've just gotten a copy of Rational Meaning. I realize it is quite expensive, but perhaps something to get from the library, or to get your library to order. This is University of Virginia Press's catalog copy:

Rational Meaning
A New Foundation for the Definition of Words and Supplementary Essays

Laura (Riding) Jackson and Schuyler B. Jackson

Edited by William Harmon
Introduction by Charles Bernstein

"The publication of Rational Meaning: A New Foundation for the Definition of Words brings to completion one of the most aesthetically and philosophically singular projects of twentieth-century American poetry. No North American or European poet of this century has created a body of work that reflects more deeply on the inherent conflicts between truth telling and the inevitable artifice of poetry than Laura (Riding) Jackson." --Charles Bernstein, from the introduction

Existing only in manuscript since the 1940s but enjoying an underground reputation among friends and advocates, this primary document by one of the most original and influential of American poets and thinkers is now being published as Rational Meaning, Laura (Riding) Jackson's testament of the necessity of living for truth. Begun as a dictionary and thesaurus in the1930s, the work developed into a fundamental reevaluation of language itself. Riding, in close collaboration with her husband, Schuyler B. Jackson, continued this monumental project over the succeeding decades, completing it after his death in 1968.The work, which she regarded as a "Magna Carta of the human mind," has heretofore been seen by only a handful of people. Yet the recent resurgence of interest in Laura Riding (1901-1991) is nourishing the growth of scholarship and study, in whichthis culmination of a life's work will play its part as her true significance becomes more widely understood.

At the age of forty, having already produced a substantial and challenging body of poetry, stories, and criticism, Laura (Riding) Jackson renounced poetry and began to concentrate on the discovery of the principles that embed truth and meaning in words. She believed that, if words and meaning could be irrevocably fused, people would become "morally articulate" and thus could never lie. This inquiry, which reaches out to include literature, philosophy, linguistics, and lexicography, would become central to the latter half of her long life and would finally result in Rational Meaning. Included in this edition are essays that Riding wanted published as supplements to Rational Meaning.

At the core of this work, which aims to restore the truth of language by arguing that meaning inheres in words, stands the idea that a total renovation of the knowledge of language is needed, not to develop mere verbal sophistication and respectability but fundamentally to reinvigorate the intellectual processes of consciousness. The book reveals the disastrous extent to which language has been "unlearned" and shows how it may be learned again. Rational Meaning will be essential reading, not only for students of literature but for radical-minded linguists and lexicographers unhappy with the orthodoxies current in their disciplines.

Among Laura (Riding) Jackson's other publications are First Awakenings: The Early Poems of Laura (Riding) Jackson and The Word "Woman" and Other Related Writings. Schuyler B. Jackson's writings have been published in several magazines, including The New Republic and Time.

William Harmon, James Gordon Hanes Professor of English at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, has published five volumes of poetry and edited several anthologies, including The Oxford Book of American Light Verse and The Top 500 Poems

University of Virginia Press
640 pages 6 1/8 x 9 1/4 cloth
ISBN 0-8139-1682-8 $50.00 S

↑ Index

922. Joe Safdie
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

Now, this was only message 1,617 of 1,667 messages on my screen -- a good 150 of which arrived over the weekend when I couldn't get to this computer in my office -- so I can't promise that in the interval this thread will have disappeared or metamorphized. But suffering from the West Coast disadvantage that David Bromige mentioned last week, I do want to jump in mention a few things about its long half-life.

David Israel (and perhaps Anne Waldman if she ever gets on) might know more about this, but: doesn't the concept of the "Superior Man" in the _I Ching_ come AFTER the more abstruse, knotty, entangled hexagrams that hold no truck with individuals at all; isn't it, in fact, an invention of Confucius' commentary? That would seem to argue, at least historically, for the individual -- or concept of same -- rising out of the community, in much the same way (it seems to me) that Renaissance artists only started signing their works after the long medieval period in which there was, effectively, no "individual" art but humans were seen as part of, not separate from -- (a huge generalization, I know).

American law offers yet a third example, a pernicious one -- in reconstructionist America, corporations were handed the same rights under the 14th amendment as "persons," thus greasing the wheels for the concentration of capital we've seen since -- one of the prime snots of American history, Roscoe Conkling, was largely responsible for that.

These are the things that come to my mind when I think about this question: that is, sometimes it's beneficial and a matter of the health of a particular community not to insist, aggressively, on an individual identity, and yet sometimes that's the only check to corporate and/or communal mischief.

But I'd still like to know what the PURPOSE -- the FUNCTION -- of Mark Wallace's dictum is. That is, what does it DO for you, Mark, to believe that "there are no individuals"? Besides being the latest trendy doctrine of cultural studies, I mean, or besides saying "It's not me, it's the language that did it" -- (again, a simplification).

Perhaps the real answer is Aldon's (and others) humor and wit, identifying people as "congeries of social forces" and then moving on to the next thread . . . but still, the discourse continues, eh?

Joe

On Sun, 27 Apr 1997, Field of Roses wrote:

> Linda:
> Thank you for the useful information, but it doesn't really seem to address the issue Chris Stroffolino (also usefully) raises [though it flashes a gleam of hope that in some yet hard-to-envision future one might not feel the need to raise such issues]. "The law is no respecter of persons," and no more (or much less) of individuals: i.e., as you note, the free treatment afforded to TB patients derives not from concern for the individual sufferer, but in reaction to the threat to the collective "society" (which includes, of course, the "individuals" who offer such therapeutic largesse)--a fact which seems to emphasize rather than obviate the urgency of Chris' point.
> Dan Zimmerman
>
> Dan
>
> Perhaps I misread Chris' 'urgency' as I thought I heard a distress signal above the question of individuality. Call it priorities. (Mine.) Information is what I brought to the discussion. Simply that. Without the common good, most of us wouldn't be here to intellectualize about the individual and contagious disease.
>
> Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

923. henry
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

On Mon, 28 Apr 1997 11:44:56 -0700 Joe Safdie said:
>
>These are the things that come to my mind when I think about this >question: that is, sometimes it's beneficial and a matter of the >health of a particular community not to insist, aggressively, on an >individual identity, and yet sometimes that's the only check to corporate >and/or communal mischief.

sort of like when Odysseus told the Cyclops his name was "No Man"?

- HG [a Jambalaya of Social Disfunctions]

p.s. that was in 2386 B.C., in the Mediterranean, about 4 p.m., right? on April 28th? Over near those rocks? Odysseus was the captain who did not go down with his ship.

"Oh, diss us, you sissies"
- Jack Spandrift

Jack's new CD, "Sailin' through the Red River Valley", is available from Honk Your Titanic Prods., Bingo, Wyo. Don't even try to order it.

↑ Index

924. Jordan Davis
UiPsSnToAwIoRuSt
Mon 28 Apr 1997

UPSTAIRS
31 poems by Jordan Davis
Cover by Anna Malmude
Barque Press, Cambridge
Keston Sutherland, prop.

Including: "The Muppets Regroup in Prague"
"Chippewa Mishegas"
"Cosmic Smacker"
"Flub Grid"

and many, many more!

↑ Index

925. Wystan Curnow
Re: TUBERCULOSIS (and individuals)
Mon 28 Apr 1997

In R.Sillman's 'For L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E' (The New Sentence, p57) there is this sentence: '--Individuals do not exist--'.

Wystan Curnow

↑ Index

926. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: individuables
Mon 28 Apr 1997

---

have kept out of this for the most part -- but most of the heat generated around this subject has been a matter of shifting terms -- it's pretty clear to me that Mark and some of the people responding to him simply do not mean the same thing by the word "individual" -- I don't think there's any doubt that discernable entities roughly bounded by their own skin exist and move about -- but it's not just a "trendy" thing to worry that "cogito ergo sum" has at least one or two remaining presuppostions to be looked at --

Ron also writes on pg. 57 "Don't imitate yourself." Which actually sits a bit oddly next to "Individuals don't exist," as I imagine he recognized in the writing. Not existing is what individuals do best, no? There is a grammatical action that can't be evaded here --

↑ Index

927. Jeffrey W. Timmons
alterity
Mon 28 Apr 1997

---

would someone explain this term? i take it that it seeks to get out of the dilemma of using "otherness"?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

928. Wystan Curnow
Re: alterity
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Yes, think its the condition entered into as a result of having been strenuously othered ('Other me, baby/All night long', et cetera) or altered to suit (Alterity Tailors, workmanship guaranteed) sometimes confused with altarity, the condition of having been signified, transcendentally. Or hailed, ideologically while doubled up with laughter. Generally, however, alternity is preferable to ' otherness' (which while murky is also comparatively diurnal), for apart from being more syllabic it is surely a condition of greater consequence and dignity. Hope this helpless.

Wystan

↑ Index

929. Hugh Steinberg words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

I'm currently temping at a big accounting firm. My job entails examining a database of old accounting reference books (most five to ten years out of date), which are in Word 1.1, looking for table and shading codes. Eight hours a day: I will never say I'm bored again. But tracing back to a previous thread, something interesting did emerge from this boredom: I stumbled upon this word list of hedging products, some of which sound quite beautiful. For those who don't follow economic arcana, hedging products are financial instruments designed to reduce exposure to risk, mostly in stock, futures, and other sorts of exchanges. Here goes:

Accreting swap
Amortizing interest rate caps
Annuity swap
Asset based swaps
Average rate options
Basis rate swap
BEROs
BIG index swap
Boston option
Break forwards
Butterfly swaps
Callable cross currency swaps
Callable/puttable swaps
Cancellable forwards
Caps
Caption
Ceilings
CIRCUS
Collars
Commodity swaps
Compounds
Coupon option swap
CPI futures
Currency option swap
Currency swap
Cylinder options
Deferred cap
Deferred interest rate setting
Deferred swap
Discount swap
Double swaps
ECU futures
Either/or options
Euro rate differential futures
EXTRAs FALCONS
Flexible forwards
Floating rate basis swaps
Floors

Floortions
Forward CIRCUS
Forward rate agreements Forward swap
FOXs
Hindsight options
Interest rate collars
Long-dated forwards
Lookback options
LORAs
MINI-MAX
Mortgage swaps
OPPOSSMS
Options on futures
Options on options
Partial ceiling options
Participating caps
Participating forwards
Puttable swaps
Range forwards
Reversible swaps
Roller coaster swaps
Saw-tooth swap
Spread lock Staircase cap
Stock index futures
Super floater caps
Swaptions
Triple snap downs
Tunnel
Unhinge and extend Unwinds
Windows
Yield curve swaps
Zero coupon swaps
Zero premium options

(c) 1989, American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Trillions of dollars circulate through these instruments, mostly imaginary, unless you happen to live in Orange County. So not only are there no individuals, there's no money either.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

930. Hugh Steinberg
Re: alterity
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Alterior motives?

Hugh Steinberg

> Yes, think its the condition entered into as a result of having been strenuously othered ('Other me, baby/All night long', et cetera) or altered to suit (Alterity Tailors, workmanship guaranteed) sometimes confused with altarity, the condition of having been signified, transcendentally. Or hailed, ideologically while doubled up with laughter. Generally, however, alternity is preferable to ' otherness' (which while murky is also comparatively diurnal), for apart from being more syllabic it is surely a condition of greater consequence and dignity. Hope this helpless.
>
> Wystan

↑ Index

931. Steven Marks
Re: words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

what a great list of terms! Who said accountants were boring? You know, the favorite "Boston option" of the old Celtics was their famous "break forward."

Some day, I will make a list of all the ridiculous terms (none of which are beautiful) which I use in my business ghostwriting.

PI/E, anybody?

cheers,
Steven

People involvement/empowerment. They're not workers or employees; they're people. Being called a person instead of being labeled an employee must mean I'm unique, right? A real individual. The company wants ME to be involved and empowered. God bless them! Could I have a seat on the Board of Directors next? I'm sure they will be happy to make room for ME and maybe even YOU.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

932. Ken Edwards
rempress readings
Tue 29 Apr 1997

at St Peter's Church on Castle Hill, Cambridge (adjacent to Kettle's Yard)

8pm

8 May Caroline Bergvall / cris cheek

15 May John Forbes / Andrew Duncan

22 May Ken Edwards / Wendy Mulford

29 May Drew Milne / Rob McKenzie

Tickets 3.50 pounds (2.50 concessions)

Season tickets 10 pounds (8 concessions) from rempress, 6 Grasmere Gardens, Cambridge CB4 3DR, UK

↑ Index

933. Dale Smith
Re: individuables
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Yes, it is a curious word, individual. Since this is a poetics list, I took the word in the context of poetry. Henry Gould's post in which he discusses Artistotle's Poetics is very apropos because, in terms of writing, to invalidate the individual, however you take that term--philosophically or historically--brings up questions of authorial intent, etc. To deny intention, personal engagement, or the very impulses by which one writes seems strange to me. Maybe that's not what Mark meant at all. Maybe he thinks you can engage and listen to personal impulses, though not as an individual. But as what? The thing is, and this brings me back to the context of poetry, Mark writes--indeed, many write--from the perspective of the social. And poetry is, by all means, partly a social act. But I do want to place emphasis on the word 'partial.' Adorno traces poetry's roots to the occult practices of the ancients. The lyric itself seems a to be a kind of medium through which we connect the self to the emotional realities of others. The social is not concerned with emotional realities. Negative capability is, oddly, an extremely personal exegesis of that which exists outside of, but not dependent from, the personal. Since most experimental poetry experiments with social forms, I'm wondering if it's also possible for other experiments to take place under more traditional forms. I'm not advocating a new formalism by any means. I'm just interested in how something--self? individual? commuity?--invests language with the power of expression.

The following is from Tom Clark's "Confessions." I hate to burden the list with so much, but Tom articulates something which is for me quite accurate. My question is how is the individual different from self? Or are these terms the same?

****

"Not knowing oneself, when all's said and done, is a little like breathing, a habit one can give up only for a minute or two before serious consequences start to set in. Given that fact, imagine how uncomfortable things might quickly get if one were able to actually see one's various unidentical selves strutting their ridiculous pretensions to coherence through the eyes of others. Some levels of complication were probably meant to be borne only by language, in whose surprising reflections and sudden transparencies things take on for moments at a time a clarity that's spellbinding-or perhaps more accurately spellbreaking, shattering the data-hypnotized, stressed-out, hurry-up stupor of a life in a technologically administered society. Within that society, to be oneself is almost too great a burden to bear; even, and maybe especially, in the chilling revelation of the lyric moment, the moment of negative capability when one's party to the projection of a kind of self-knowledge that's not individual but species-specific. As deep into the substratum of a collective life the undercurrent of our language seeps, the lyric never loses its power to follow, tapping the convergences of all those tributary streams, drawing off primary metaphors as trace elements from word roots. That underground current is the medium in which a submerged poetics can always be detected, rising back up to the surface like air bubbles behind a swimmer in water."

> have kept out of this for the most part -- but most of the heat generated around this subject has been a matter of shifting terms -- it's pretty clear to me that Mark and some of the people responding to him simply do not mean the same thing by the word "individual" -- I don't think there's any doubt that discernable entities roughly bounded by their own skin exist and move about -- but it's not just a "trendy" thing to worry that "cogito ergo sum" has at least one or two remaining presuppostions to be looked at --
>
> Ron also writes on pg. 57 "Don't imitate yourself." Which actually sits a bit oddly next to "Individuals don't exist," as I imagine he recognized in the writing. Not existing is what individuals do best, no? There is a grammatical action that can't be evaded here --

↑ Index

934. Gwyn McVay
Re: Tom's pingpong rap
Tue 29 Apr 1997

such babble.
my game is Scrabble.

I'll bet no one can sling tiles
better than me for miles.

Gwyn

↑ Index

935. Rebecca Weldon
(no subject)
Tue 29 Apr 1997

I sent a message for nomail to listserve on the 24th. The message was not recognized because when I returned on the 29th I was treated to 70 messages.

↑ Index

936. henry gould
Re: individuables
Tue 29 Apr 1997

More 3rd thoughts on this subject. I take it Mark W & Jeff H were making a "writerly" statement which was meant in the context of writing [i.e. "indiv. do not exist"]. Have been reading a really excellent study of Aristotle by Michael Davis [_Poetics of Aristotle_], maybe can draw some connections. One of the zillion things Davis considers is that the _Poetics_ is a study of all human action - all action being poetic since it's both imitative & based on mental representations ("I will do the heroic thing here, I will do the necessary, the right, the wrong thing"..etc]. & "man" being the rational animal, it's always a combination of action/reflection; tragedy turns on its own interpretation of what went wrong (the reversal, the recognition scene), which is a display of this action/reflection... & always involves lying or fiction, as the better the imitation of real life, the more artificial...

anyway, not to ramble too much more, this fiction-making which obscures/ displays the moment of truth brings up the issue of the author's intention, which connects with the question of individuality. In tragedy the author is more "effaced" than in epic, where the writer's hand is visible in the narration & choice of materials - it's a story as opposed to an enactment of "real life"...

so what's the point here? Aristotle says a basic purpose of poetry is to cause wonder, to cause the listener to wonder & consider. Authorial intention is obscured behind the double action/reflection of the work (just as in real life - only in the poem or drama - there's a focus or general purpose) - behind the lying/truth of the work. This obscurity establishes a middle path, a mean, between conventional "truths" (fixed shibboleths or abstract verities) and complete chaos (the idea that since the poet is lying, there is NO access to the truth, no authorial intention, etc. - trendy these days). So that the audience "wonders" into a deeper exploration & sympathy for the fatalities that emerge from this doubleness.

Again, what is ze point, Hank? As Aldon says, there are qualifiers to "cogito ergo sum". M & J's "there are no individuals" rang out like a "verity" provoking the double-dealing arguments that followed. I would still hold that if there's authorial intention, it's a pretty good assumption that there are individuals. Proust's meisterwerke destabilizes the concept of the simple "person" (people change so much they no longer recognize themselves) - & yet toward the end of the novel, in his defense of his enterprise, he claims - I think - that it's the SURFACE, false social faces of the person that are illusions - the "personalities" created by society - & that the writer really does justice by sinking deeper into the utterly unique experience of individual time - and only art that draws deep enough really contributes something original & "true". (But then, he had his own genre & his own individual axe to grind.) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

937. David R. Israel

Re: words

Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

from Hugh Steinberg's hedging roster:

> Boston option

Sure don't know what that is as such -- but the lexical formula reminds (of course) of that well-known temporal descriptive

> a New York minute

based on which, think I've seen a few other city-rooted expressions.

Co-veterans of a suburban televideotic education of a certain era will likely recall

> Texas tea

A sense of self-irony (or parody) seems to adhere in such expressions -- and they have the important quality of paying tribute to particular locations. Some of us who've been to India are familiar with

> India time

but this gets a bit diffuse; the the city-based terms seem more interesting. Others out there (traditional -- or hot off the e-press?)

cheers,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

but maybe I just don't read enough to be in on the latest trends --

↑ Index

939. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Zone Defense
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Last time I was in D.C. I made the mistake of playing ping tennis with Mr. Mandel, who promptly drove one of those Jack-in-the-box balls into my nose -- which explains that permanently befuddled look on my face that so many of you have commented upon -- as well as the odd sonorities of my highly individuated vocal apparatus -- Tom Mandel is no ping pong diplomat -- If you accept his challenge, prepare to meet your unmaker --

[no ironies where none intended]

↑ Index

940. hg
Re: out for alterations
Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

they're probably not at all the latest trends - but I was referring to deconstruction and the Yale School, which as I understand it (I could be way wrong), holds that the text slips away from the author, cannot refer to external reality (no such thing), & is all part of a de-Saussurean saucer of non-identities. - HG

↑ Index

941. Tom Mandel
(no subject)
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Those who call it "table tennis"
are destined to fall,

scuffing up their table whites
'n all,

should they visit DC
to try such stuff 'pon me

Tom

...who wrote:

Date: Sun, 27 Apr 1997 15:17:16 -0700
From: George Bowering <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: p i n g p o n g

Ping Pong, or as it is called among us really good players, table tennis, is very important to the earlier Sidel novels (Such as _Blue Eyes_) of Jerome Charyn, my main man.

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

942. Tom Mandel
Zone Defense
Tue 29 Apr 1997

In a dream, Calbert Cheaney came to me and said: "Guarding Michael, having a big game myself, giving up 55 to him, giving my all -- it just makes me realize there are no individuals. The only defense is a zone."

Yet, although Joe Safdie writes:

> Aldon's (and others) ... identifying > people as "congeries of social forces"

on my (individual) computer screen the quoted phrase came out "quandaries of facial sources" -- I think my computer has been reading my notes on Levinas.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

943. Jordan Davis
Re: from pong to scrabble
Tue 29 Apr 1997

I know a woman who plays scrabble
with an older woman for money -- not as in a wager but to pass the time and she always loses! because the older woman plays
words 'from the Latin or Greek' but doesn't allow the woman I know
to play those same words next game.

J

↑ Index

944. Karlien van den Beukel
REPORT CCCP 7
Tue 29 Apr 1997

The annual Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry took place for the seventh time last weekend, in England. Although I have been a silent subscriber of the poetics list up till now, I would like to offer this reportage of CCCP, a rather Byzantine event, yet significant in its international scope. Other list subscribers who attended CCCP 7, such as Ira Lightman, Fiona Templeton, Ken Edwards, John Kinsella and cris cheek, will, I am sure, have different responses. Here are short immediate responses on each of the readings, papers and performances I attended, in chronological order.

Jennifer Moxley Since Romana Huk's conference in New Hampshire, Jennifer Moxley's poetry has become known in Cambridge. Lucy Sheerman and I (co-founders of the small poetry press Rempress) published Moxley's pamphlet "Enlightenment Evidence (Part One)" in November 1996. Underneath the rhetoric of studied modesty lies, of course, a self-regarding subjectivity, yet the subtle discursive progression through which the terms & conditions of the social contract are negotiated, made for a fascinating reading.

John Tranter is an influential Australian poet whose energetic interest in manifold poetic forms is both stimulating and enjoyable. However, his reading, interlaced with unnecessarily reductive explanations, only in part conveyed that inventiveness. Perhaps an anxiety that social commentary on the Australian locale would be misrecognised by the audience, weighed unduly. The final poem, Voodoo, on the uncanniness in banal objects, was a tour-de-force.

Papers and discussions

Steve Evans opened the session, with a strategically surprising paper. Rather than offering a theoretical paper, he chose to close-read Bernadette Mayer's poem 'The Way to Keep going in Antartica'. With the elucidation of philosophy, he followed, beautifully, the instructions in the poem: 'Look at very small things with your eyes & stay warm'.

Karen Mac Cormack presented a lucid analysis of the misleading readings of the stratification of poetry communities in the States, and off-set this with an exposition of her own methodology. If I understood correctly, seriousness is in collaborataive praxis, not in retrospective polemicisation of micro-political positions.

Jean Khalfa
provided an excellent short introduction to the French poet Emmanuel Hocquard, who was to read later that evening.

Tony Lopez, who chaired the discussion, noted the similarities between Hocquard's and Mac Cormack's working practice, and steered the discussion toward the notion of 'communities'. Evans expanded on his paper by discussing Mayers in relation to the New York School. Current methods of production, distribution and communiciation (including the internet) were discussed. Some thought this unnecessary. Moxley found it displacing discourse (away from "creativity"). Grace Lake responded with what could be understood as an ironic public display of "creativity". Unfamiliarity with each other's geo-political restrictions made an in-depth discussion difficult. Thus, we retired to the bar and continued talking in smaller groups.

Poetry readings, again.

Grace Lake is a Cambridge poet anthologised in Conductors of Chaos and Out of Everywhere. Before reading, she threw a green net (of the kind one covers strawberries with against sparrows) which she called "her internet" over the bust of Maynard Keynes in the corner. Her imaginative gestures, the spendthriftness of rhyme and imagery, do indeed make for a great economy in her poetry. In the middle section (particularly 'Swiss Kiss'), however, her reading turned into a perfunctionary litany of wrongs: the poet is suddenly trapped in her own history. She emerged again, with a sparkling finalale.

Karen Mac Cormack I thought that I would have to be critically informed to appreciate the disciplined elegance of the ellipses, turns, shifts, in Mac Cormack's language poetry. Not so. One sequence in particular, drove language down to vortex, and still, through & over, she continued, finishing balanced on one point & at a slant. The Australian poet John Forbes (not known as a language poet cognoscentus) was heard to mutter an awed 'yes'. Admirable stuff, indeed.

Emmanuel Hocquard is probably well-known in the States for his translations of American poetry, and Keith and Rosemary Waldrop's translations of his. I won't embarrass myself by presuming to comment on a poet I have not read, as I do not read the French so fluently, but whose reading, suffice to say, I enjoyed, not least due to Peter Riley's witty and resourceful on-the-scene translations.

Performance

Fiona Templeton Her peformance of 'Recognition' was extremely well-attended. The performance seemed a continuous struggle against narrative closure, as if refusing the fact of death itself, and yet having to come to terms (but what terms precisely?) with this particular death: the death of a friend with whom she had collaborated on performances. Remarkable use of modern recording material, video and television. She would repeat the seemingly spontaneous gestures of his recorded moving image on the shown video, turning his play into hers (or had it been hers all along?), responding to what seemed his direct questions to her, choosing videos to replay, in an almost private moment, and then turn to the song of defiance, all the while unsettling boundaries between artifice and the real. Finally, the television set, showing a still close-up of his head on the pillow, was heaved on to the edge of the table, and she covered the table with a white sheet: he seemed to be present, a very thin man with a huge head lying in a hospital bed. And clearly he was not-present. A very moving performance, to which my too literal description does not much justice: it could never.

Poetry

Allen Fisher is a major English poet, and apart from his poetry's intelligence and social grace, Fisher himself also possess these qualities. He is an interesting performer of his poetry, at times, as if he is thinking aloud, even ad libbing. He read a dialectical poem which was an exchange between "two theologians": Roger Penrose and Stephen Hawking. The Olsonian scale of his projects are, to me, daunting, not only qua exegesis, but also in their interdisciplinary scope. I take it from what I know (those 'small things'), and then go on.

Tracy Ryan is a young Australian poet who, together with her partner John Kinsella, works indefatigably for the journal Salt. She is tenacious and careful with her material, and read clear subject-poetry on domesticity, ice, child-care. One of her poems has been chosen to be printed as a poster for 'poetry on the Underground': thousands of commuters on the London Tube will read it daily. Closing the conference with her strong reading, was also an acknowledgement of our responsibilities, to return to homework to be done.

Take care now, and mind the gap.

Karlien van den Beukel
Gonville & Caius College
Cambridge, England

↑ Index

945. George Bowering
Re: home of the brave
Tue 29 Apr 1997

> Saving George...it's not for the faint at heart, you know. It's not for sissies. But as Lincoln said at Gettysburg, we are here dedicated to the great task remaining before us. The last full measure of devotion, etc.
>
> Rachel L.

That is exactly it, exactly why I will do anything for Rachel, and conversely, why I felt so betrayed by Maria, who turned her back when I showed where I was bleeding. Turned her back (here is the worst part) and continued reading a poem by David Bromige!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

946. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: alterity
Tue 29 Apr 1997

On Tue, 29 Apr 1997, Wystan Curnow wrote:

Hope this helpless.

yep. thanks.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

947. David R. Israel
from pong to scrabble
Tue 29 Apr 1997

In bardic manner boasteth Gwyn McVay who claims a winning lexical touche sez:

> such babble.
> my game is Scrabble.
>
> I'll bet no one can sling tiles
> better than me for miles.

perhaps perchance belike you might be right but pudding's proving isn't in its fame
I've not played scrabble since I was a slight & wispy youth but now in age I'm game

some summer day beside the C&O
where willow leaves are kelly as the Knight to meet your haughty challenge would I go thus proving an you boast for sooth aright

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
  >    david   raphael   israel    <
  >>      washington  d.c.      <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
 ==========================
|   thy centuries follow each other
|   perfecting a small wild flower
|                                (Tagore)
/////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

948. Sylvester Pollet

Re: words

Tue 29 Apr 1997

Well, around here there's something known as "The Deer Isle Smile," which is the one that begins appearing on the lower back of a guy whose jeans are riding low. sp

> from Hugh Steinberg's hedging roster:
>
> Boston option
>
> Sure don't know what that is as such -- but the lexical formula > reminds (of course) of that well-known temporal descriptive
>
> a New York minute
>
> based on which, think I've seen a few other city-rooted expressions.
>
> Co-veterans of a suburban televideotic education of a certain era
> will likely recall
>
> Texas tea
>
> A sense of self-irony (or parody) seems to adhere in such expressions
> -- and they have the important quality of paying tribute to > particular locations. Some of us who've been to India are familiar > with
>
> India time
>
> but this gets a bit diffuse; the the city-based terms seem more > interesting. Others out there (traditional -- or hot off the e-press?)
>
> cheers,
> d.i.
> .
> .....
> .....
> *\\\

> | (Tagore)
> //\\\\\////

↑ Index

949. Herb Levy
Re: DRAGON BOND RITE
Tue 29 Apr 1997

I returned home from a long weekend in SF (not always poetical, though I did get to see/hear/hang out (again in some instances) with some of the folks on this list: Hi all) to find the postcard from the Japan Society about this & another, more traditional, event in May.

To the several comments & plugs, I'll add that the Indonesian perfomers are also very good & that Jin Hi Kim, who has spent a lot of the last ten-fifteen years collaborating with artists from diverse cultures (though this may be the most elaborate project she's ever undertaken) primarily plays komungo, IS technically a zither, though, unlike the chin, the instrument is fretted and strummed with a stick, rather than plucked with fingers. She's a very good improvisor and has composed numerous works for traditional European and Asian instruments, often playing in the same ensembles, most of which I've heard are quite good.

Oh, & one of the musicians in Huun Huur Tu is defintely among the pictures of performers on the card, so I assume that Gwyn's right about it being the same khoomei singer, though, never having seen them perform, I don't who's who in the band.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

950. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
in-Kant
Tue 29 Apr 1997

-

Incantation: Corrective Strategy: Hacker Drive: Core Dump: Gdb:

The drive to write, the drive to correct, to turn these words into pure empathetic sound: such would cancel, chill, curtail, recuperate violation- fabric-the-medicine, make me hole again, the disappearance of the vacanta- tory eye/I. Into the night, right I, slewed from skewed violation-fabric: Dar dar dar.

Arduous the night. Dar dar dar. Perturbatio. Dar dar dar dar. Ahesulim, Salimpalihilisu, SalimpalihAdda, MusallimMarduk, Addumusallim. .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD .millasumuddA ,kudraMmillasuM ,addAhilapmilaS ,usilihilapmilaS ,miluseh A .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD .millasumuddA ,kudraMmillasuM ,addAhilapmilaS ,usilihilapmilaS ,miluseh A .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD .millasumuddA ,kudraMmillasuM ,addAhilapmilaS ,usilihilapmilaS ,miluseh A .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD .millasumuddA ,kudraMmillasuM ,addAhilapmilaS ,usilihilapmilaS ,miluseh A .eid lliw I .yawyna eid lliw I ,eid lliw I ;yawyna eid lliw I ,eid lliw I .eid lliw I .yawyna eid lliw I ,eid lliw I ;yawyna eid lliw I ,eid lliw I .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD .rad rad rad raD .oitabrutreP .rad rad raD .thgin eht suoudrA .rad rad raD

GDB:

gdb Incantation: GDB is free software and you are welcome to distribute copies of it under certain conditions; type "show copying" to see the conditions. There is absolutely no warranty for GDB; type "show warranty" for details. GDB 4.16 (sparc-sun-sunos4.1.4), Copyright 1996 Free Software Foundation, Inc...

"/net/u/6/s/sondheim/Incantation:": not in executable format: File format not recognized

(gdb) quit

↑ Index

951. Maria Damon

Re: home of the brave

Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

i wish it recorded publically here that i have never, contrary to scurrilous rumor, read a poem by david bromige. after i the caper with those red suspenders, how could I?

At 10:02 AM -0700 4/29/97, George Bowering wrote: >>Saving George...it's not for the faint at heart, you know. It's not for >>sissies. But as Lincoln said at Gettysburg, we are here dedicated to >>the great task remaining before us. The last full measure of devotion, >>etc.
>>

>>Rachel L.
>
>That is exactly it, exactly why I will do anything for Rachel, and >conversely, why I felt so betrayed by Maria, who turned her back when I >showed where I was bleeding. Turned her back (here is the worst part) and >continued reading a poem by David Bromige!
>
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]
>e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

952. Maria Damon
Re: words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

evidently the term "boston marriage" was a phrase in the gay/lesbian underground argot ca. 1950s or so to refer to a living arrangement in which two women were nominally "roommates" and may have actually never been sexual partners but were for all intents and purposes, a (closeted) couple. maybe i've got some of the details wrong.

At 9:01 AM -0500 4/29/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>from Hugh Steinberg's hedging roster:
>
>> Boston option
>
>Sure don't know what that is as such -- but the lexical formula >reminds (of course) of that well-known temporal descriptive
>
>>a New York minute
>
>based on which, think I've seen a few other city-rooted expressions.
>

>Co-veterans of a suburban televideotic education of a certain era
>will likely recall
>
>>Texas tea
>
>A sense of self-irony (or parody) seems to adhere in such expressions
>-- and they have the important quality of paying tribute to >particular locations. Some of us who've been to India are familiar >with
>
>>India time
>
>but this gets a bit diffuse; the the city-based terms seem more >interesting. Others out there (traditional -- or hot off the e-press?)
>
>cheers,
>d.i.
> .
> .....
> .....
> \\\\

>
>I'll bet no one can sling tiles
>better than me for miles.
>
>Gwyn

↑ Index

954. Maria Damon
REPORT PPS ?
Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

does anyone want to start of a composite and accretional description/report of the rutgers POetry and the Public Sphere conference? i'll join in after someone else begins.-md

↑ Index

955. David Israel
Re: words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

ah yes, here's one other, now remembered:

> a Philadelphia lawyer

(I knew this was percolating -- for some reason, Maria D.'s mention of "a Boston marriage" dislodged it) -- only trouble is, I can't give a very exact definition; it was prob. William Safire who did a riff on this. (The sense, I think, suggests sleaze -- for reasons not lost to memory.)

I recall laboring out an explanation of "a New York minute" to someone who didn't understand the phrase. (Much like "explaining a joke.")

Of course, location needn't be strictly physical or strictly geography. How about cyberspace?

what, for example, would be:

>a Poetics epoch?
[i.e., lasts abt. 4 days ?]

>a listserv season ?
[i.e., lasts abt. 3 days?]

then there's the gentle art of euphamism, such as:

>an internet pleasantry . . . (?)
[i.e., when, for some seemingly innocuous remark, one is royally flamed, skewered, and hung out to dry ?]

↑ Index

956. Charles Bernstein
Internation Subscribers
Tue 29 Apr 1997

I just got this from the listserv and thought it might be of interest to those who haven't tried the " review poetics by country" option. You also get a list of who the people are in each county

```
*  Country        Subscribers
*  -------        -----------
*  Australia            10
*  Belgium               1
*  Canada               31
*  Finland               1
*  Great Britain        17
*  Ireland               2
*  Italy                 1
*  Japan                 8
*  Netherlands           1
*  New Zealand           7
*  Norway                1
*  Poland                1
*  Spain                 2
*  Sweden                1
*  Switzerland           1
*  Thailand              1
*  USA                 424
*
* Total number of users subscribed to the list:    510  (non-"concealed" only)
* Total number of countries represented:           17  (non-"concealed" only)
```

↑ Index

957. Gwyn McVay
Re: words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

As Jim Morrison mentioned, "You can pick your teeth with a New York joint."

Gwyn

↑ Index

958. raea100900
Re: REPORT PPS ?
Tue 29 Apr 1997

Dear Maria and All,

I would love to hear a report on PPS.

Rae A.

↑ Index

959. Pierre Joris
Out here in Albania
Tue 29 Apr 1997

For anyone in or around Albany, or in driving distance, here's the poetry menu for this weekend, beginning on Thursday, Mayday:

MAY DAY

A Celebration of Poetry in Performance

May 1, 1997 (Thursday)

Performing Arts Center

University at Albany, Uptown Campus

4:00 p.m. -

Recital Hall
Informal Seminar by performance poets Bob Holman and Ed Sanders

5:00-7:30 p.m. -

Futterer Lounge and Lobby Small Press Book Fair featuring displays by over a dozen independent presses and journals

6:00-7:30 p.m. -

Outside the PAC (or Futterer Lounge in the event of bad weather) Poetry Open Mike hosted by Tom Nattell, featuring readings by students and community poets. All are welcome. Sign-up at 5:45 p.m.

8:00 p.m. -

Main Theatre
Poetry in Performance readings by Bob Holman and Ed Sanders

& then, on FRIDAY & SATURDAY:

Chris FUNKHOUSER
Belle GIRONDA
Pierre JORIS
Alex REID
WILL BE READING/PERFORMING @ 7pm Suny-Albany • Campus Center Assembly Hall• Friday May 2nd
FREE & open to the public

Joel CHABABE /Pierre JORIS/Xavier CHABOT/Benjamin CHADABE with the ELLEN SINOPOLI DANCE CIE. will give the premiere of Joel Chadabe's composition "With Pierre's Words."

@ 8:00pm at the EGG Saturday MAY 3rd
PAYING (circa $10+)

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

960. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: words
Tue 29 Apr 1997

---

i believe Boston marriage actually goes back to the 19th century, picked up again later in this century as a term of empowerment (i.e. "queer"). i would go with Rich's analysis on this one, that it's more complex than sexuality (genital per say) alone can indicate-- as us queers are usually only defined by the sex thang, and think of the term as another facet of the lesbian continuum (or was that the Q continuum???) but you've all read the essay...

JE

> evidently the term "boston marriage" was a phrase in the gay/lesbian underground argot ca. 1950s or so to refer to a living arrangement in which two women were nominally "roommates" and may have actually never been sexual partners but were for all intents and purposes, a (closeted) couple. maybe i've got some of the details wrong.
>
> At 9:01 AM -0500 4/29/97, David R. Israel wrote:
> from Hugh Steinberg's hedging roster:
>
> Boston option
>
> Sure don't know what that is as such -- but the lexical formula reminds (of course) of that well-known temporal descriptive
>
> a New York minute
>
> based on which, think I've seen a few other city-rooted expressions.
>
> Co-veterans of a suburban televideotic education of a certain era will likely recall
>
> Texas tea
>
> A sense of self-irony (or parody) seems to adhere in such expressions -- and they have the important quality of paying tribute to particular locations. Some of us who've been to India are familiar with
>
> India time
>
> but this gets a bit diffuse; the the city-based terms seem more interesting. Others out there (traditional -- or hot off the e-press?)
>
> cheers,
> d.i.

```
.
.....
............
\\\
```

963. rsillima
Poetry & Public Sphere?
Wed 30 Apr 1997

I missed the Poetry & the Public Sphere conference in New Brunswick the other day. It interferred with the start of the mini-T-ball season and having been away from my family for the two previous weekends, couldn't imagine a third. But other than a couple of brief oral reports from Bob Perelman and Charles Alexander (which came at Eli Goldblatt's house just two blocks from the site of the so-called summit on volunteerism ((which got more play in the media than did the poetry & the public sphere))), I've heard nought of said conference. Can somebody do the same sort of detailed account that we have now had of the Cambridge Conference?

Alterity, by the way, teaches at UC Berkeley.

Ron

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

964. rsillima
Robert Erickson
Wed 30 Apr 1997

A word here to note the passing of composer of Robert Erickson (1917-97) after having been bed-ridden for the past 15 years. Erickson was one of those American originals who seemed drawn to the West Coast. One of the first music directors of KPFA in Berkeley and a founder of the music dept at UC San Diego. Charles Shere wrote an excellent bio/study of Erickson that came out a year or two ago (and I believe is still carried by Small Press Distribution in Berkeley) that also contains a CD of the music.

There was an obit in yesterday's NY Times that was fairly decent, especially by the sometimes spotty standard of that publication.

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

When this you see
Remember me

↑ Index

965. David Israel

Re: words

Wed 30 Apr 1997

---

from Hugh Steinberg:

<< . . .I'll toss the legendary California Stop into this discussion, which is what you do when you're driving and instead of actually stopping at a light or stop sign, merely slow down. I don't know if this a western US regional thing or if it's a little more widespread. >> as a term, I suspect it's certainly a western US regional thing -- it reminds me of one which I think I'm remembering (rather than making up):

> a Berkeley crosswalk

(? maybe that has altered in memory; -- anyway, I'd define a Berkeley crosswalk as anywhere a Berkeleyite feels like crossing the street)

d.i.

↑ Index

966. Keith Norris

Re: words

Wed 30 Apr 1997

We'uns don't slow down.

Keith

On Tue, 29 Apr 1997 18:27:44 -0600 Hugh Steinberg
<[redacted]> wrote:

> With a couple triple snap downs I'll toss the legendary California Stop into this discussion, which is what you do when you're driving and instead of actually stopping at a light or stop sign, merely slow down. I don't know if this a western US regional thing or if it's a little more widespread.

Keith Norris | [redacted]
English Dept. PSTCC
Knoxville, TN 37933-0990
[redacted]

↑ Index

967. jarnot
poetry project symposium
Wed 30 Apr 1997

---

for anyone who's going to be in New York this weekend, the Poetry Project is holding its yearly symposium:

Thursday May 1st: 8pm: reading: Robert Creeley, John Godfrey, Cecilia Vicuna

Friday May 2nd: 1pm: Robert Creeley: a talk

3:30 pm: the Secret Gossip of the Poetry Project Part I: memoirs of 30 years at the Poetry Project by several readers including David Henderson, Paul Schmidt, Carolee Schneeman, John Yau, Paul Violi, Barbara Henning, etc.

8 pm: Reading: Jim Carroll, Lou Reed & Anne Waldman

Saturday May 3rd: 10:30 am discussion groups:

Barbara Henning: Gender and Writing (with Bill Luoma, Eleni Sikelianos, Laird Hunt, Brenda Coultas, Bill Kushner, etc.)

Ed Sanders: Activist Poetics: 1955 to 1997 and beyond

John Yau: Art and Poetry

1:00 pm Panel discussion: Poetry's Critical Climate: with Erica Hunt, Lisa Jarnot, Gary Lenhart, Joel Lewis, and Cecilia Vicuna

4:00 pm The Secret Gossip of the Poetry Project Part II: with Charles Bernstein, Lee Ann Brown, Alan Davies, Richard Hell, Marjorie Welish, Nick Piombino, Maureen Owen, Anne Waldman, and Tracie Morris

8:00 pm Reading/Performance: Amina Baraka, Amiri Baraka, Todd Colby, Ed Sanders, Tracie Morris

Sunday May 4th

2:00 pm The Secret Gossip of the Poetry Project Part III: with Fielding Dawson, Bernadette Mayer, Martha King, Phillip Lopate, Jackson MacLow, Charles North, Douglas Rothschild, Edwin Torres, David Shapiro, Sparrow, etc.

The Poetry Project is located at 2nd Avenue and 10th Street on the lower east side.

↑ Index

968. Dale Smith
Re: alterity
Wed 30 Apr 1997

---

jeffrey-

I'm curious. What is "the dilemma of using 'otherness'" and why does it need to be gotten out of?

Dale

> would someone explain this term? i take it that it seeks to get out of the dilemma of using "otherness"?
>
> jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

969. Pierre Joris

AG's Re-censored Howl John Whiting ---------- Forwarded Message ---------- RE: [Fwd: HOWL gets censored] Listener Howls, Radio Host Bounced by Michael Stutz 3:02pm 29.Apr.97.PDT "Howl," an Allen Ginsberg opus that has drawn censors' attention ever since it was first publicly spoken four decades ago, has gotten a Cleveland talk-show host kicked off the air. Cleveland's WERE-AM pulled the plug on The Gilly Show after an eight-minute reading of the poem's opening stanzas early Monday morning. Phil Ferrante, the show's producer, said that the station's action came as a surprise, considering that the poem was read just before 2 a.m., well into what the FCC deems "Safe Harbor" for material that might be considered indecent. "We even talked about [the FCC Safe Harbor Policy] on the air, we talked about Ginsberg and free speech and told everyone all night that we'd be reading it on the air." Like most of the station's non-syndicated content, The Gilly Show was among WERE's 88 hours of brokered programming - radio talk for pay-to-play broadcast time. A few local bars and nightclubs sponsored the show to help it break even, and despite its status as a brokered program, it was rated the Number One show on the station by Arbitron during the last ratings period, Ferrante said. John Hill, WERE station and program manager, said that the show's host, who goes only by the name of Gilly, knew the rules. "Everyone who starts a brokered show goes through a one-hour indoctrination of what can and can't be done on the air," he said. "We have a very liberal list of rules and regulations that we ask [the brokered shows] to follow - you have to do this when dealing with amateurs." The topic of last Sunday's show had been the radio free-speech issues as well as a tribute to Ginsberg, who died earlier this month. There were plenty of listener-discretion warnings throughout the show, said Gilly, a four-year veteran of WERE. "'Howl' is taught in high schools, for God's sake - it's a done deal, you can read this at night [during Safe Harbor]." The partial reading generated compliments - "A girl called afterward and said, 'You are too cool. I'm very interested in what you read and would like to get a copy of it,'" Gilly said - and one complaint. "A guy flipping stations was driving around with his 13-year-old daughter, and called the station to say that he was 'offended' by the F-word," he said. And that is what brought an end to the show. "I didn't hear the program," said Hill, "but the only thing I know is that the language used was deemed inappropriate for the station." ENDS

Wed 30 Apr 1997

References: <[redacted]>

John Whiting forwarded the following to me; it shld inetrest the list, so I'm forwarding it in turn -- Pierre

---------- Forwarded Message ----------

RE: [Fwd: HOWL gets censored]

Listener Howls, Radio Host Bounced by Michael Stutz

3:02pm 29.Apr.97.PDT "Howl," an Allen Ginsberg opus that has drawn censors' attention ever since it was first publicly spoken four decades ago, has gotten a Cleveland talk-show host kicked off the air.

Cleveland's WERE-AM pulled the plug on The Gilly Show after an eight-minute reading of the poem's opening stanzas early Monday morning.

Phil Ferrante, the show's producer, said that the station's action came as a surprise, considering that the poem was read just before 2 a.m., well into what the FCC deems "Safe Harbor" for material that might be considered indecent. "We even talked about [the FCC Safe Harbor Policy] on the air, we talked about Ginsberg and free speech and told everyone all night that we'd be reading it on the air."

Like most of the station's non-syndicated content, The Gilly Show was among WERE's 88 hours of brokered programming - radio talk for pay-to-play broadcast time. A few local bars and nightclubs sponsored the show to help it break even, and despite its status as a brokered program, it was rated the Number One show on the station by Arbitron during the last ratings period, Ferrante said.

John Hill, WERE station and program manager, said that the show's host, who goes only by the name of Gilly, knew the rules.

"Everyone who starts a brokered show goes through a one-hour indoctrination of what can and can't be done on the air," he said. "We have a very liberal list of rules and regulations that we ask [the brokered shows] to follow - you have to do this when dealing with amateurs."

The topic of last Sunday's show had been the radio free-speech issues as well as a tribute to Ginsberg, who died earlier this month.

There were plenty of listener-discretion warnings throughout the show, said Gilly, a four-year veteran of WERE. "'Howl' is taught in high schools, for God's sake - it's a done deal, you can read this at night [during Safe Harbor]."

The partial reading generated compliments - "A girl called afterward and said, 'You are too cool. I'm very interested in what you read and would like to get a copy of it,'" Gilly said - and one complaint. "A guy flipping stations was driving around with his 13-year-old daughter, and called the station to say that he was 'offended' by the F-word," he said.

And that is what brought an end to the show.

"I didn't hear the program," said Hill, "but the only thing I know is that the language used was deemed inappropriate for the station."

ENDS

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

970. Tom Mandel
REPORT CCCP 7
Wed 30 Apr 1997

It sounds like this fest was fun -- but, do I infer correctly that Tom Raworth was not involved in the goings-on?

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

971. Tom Mandel
tiles, miles, ali, and me
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Stories I have yet to relate to the list.

Buying Miles a drink when I was 15
(he was wearing a gorgeous pigskin overcoat over a raglan-shouldered houndstooth suit -- he looked like the devil's reply to Charlie Chaplin)

Meeting Ali in '95
His suit was covered with stars; he passed me a two-page tract in Arabic crushed in the form of his hands' lost control.

Meeting Colin Powell in '96
We discussed old Volvos. He drives (daily) a '66 122S wagon, green.

My date with Jessica Lang
(she lived on the rue des Rosiers; she stood me up)

...I better stop while you're ahead.

Subject: Re: Tom's pingpong rap

>but who but me
is the ali

> better than me for miles.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

972. Charles Bernstein
NYC Reading
Wed 30 Apr 1997

<bold><color><param>ffff,0000,ffff</ param><bigger><bigger><bigger>Bruce Andrews</bigger></bigger></bigger></color></bold><color><param>ffff,0000,ffff</param><bigger><bigger><bigger> and <bold>Charles Bernstein

</bold></bigger></bigger></bigger></color>

reading at

<color><param>0000,0000,ffff</param><bigger><bigger>Posman Books

</bigger></bigger></ color><bigger><bigger><color><param>0000,8080,0000</param>Sunday May 11th at 3pm

</color></bigger></bigger>

1 University Place New York NY (USA)

(212-533-BOOK) on the occasion of the reprinting of

<italic><color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book

</color></italic>available by the middle of May from Southern Illinois University Press

↑ Index

973. Pierre Joris
Subject
Wed 30 Apr 1997

My humble apologies for making the subject such a bloated object in my AG Howl censorship post -- overhasty cut&paste cleared the difference between head(er) & body

Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

974. Mark Prejsnar
Friendly inquiry
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Personal to Tom Mandel:

What is the Caucus Conversation??

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

975. John Kinsella
CCCP7, children & the domestic!
Wed 30 Apr 1997

From Tracy Ryan, who's semi-attached (or semi-detached) to this list by virtue of "domesticity":

Just a plea for attention to the "bigger things" as well as the small; while I appreciate Karlien's amiable comments, I should point out that as final reader at the Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry I read sixteen poems, two of which mentioned children (& not child care???) and none of which were "domestic", except insofar as one of them mentioned "writing at the kitchen table"--a poem which was a meditation on the way space behaves when the human body/ psyche is in isolation (a person whose house has suddenly become vacant continues to write in the one habitual spot). I am baffled by the description of my work as "clear subject poetry" on domesticity & child care. Perhaps this was some kind of slippage?--since I dedicated one poem to John Kinsella mentioning that he wasn't there because he was at home minding our child. Ironic that even when your "domestic" situation is supportive in a feminist sense, you get patriarchal [?] cliches in the public arena--& from another woman?

There's a danger in assuming that because one can immediately apprehend some of the content of a poem it is "clear subject poetry" unaware of its own process or of the often opaque habits of language. And when it isn't opaque for me, it's wrapping itself around & into visual art, landscape, clay, leeches, bees, French translations, trompe l'oeil table-tops, solstices, and internal organs. These were the "subjects" of what I read. Were we at the same reading???

A final note: the Australian poet John Forbes may not qualify for that awesome title of "language poet cognoscentus" but he's very discriminating in his use of "Yes!" and we Australians are more used to him satirising than being satirised [however affectionately]. Perhaps as he sat and listened to the clear and the unclear he was thinking, as in his "Love Poem" ("about"! the Gulf War?)

...I watch the west
do what the west does best

& know, obscurely, as I go to bed all this is being staged for me.

Well, a first posting may as well be a long one.
Tracy Ryan.

↑ Index

976. Jethro Cadbury colloquium
Wed 30 Apr 1997

there follows a plain text version of the prepatory bulletin on the sub voicive colloquium - this is published in Sub Voicive Poetry 1997 number 9 alongside a chunk of texts by Karen MacCormack - and is being mailed out in UK - it will be on the Mainstream web site too within days. Apologies for cross posting

Lawrence Upton

Preparatory Bulletin Sub Voicive Colloquium 1997

CONVENOR:
Lawrence Upton

COLLOQUIUM COMMITTTEE:
Ken Edwards, Allen Fisher, Robert Hampson, Lawrence Upton

Preparatory Bulletin: April 1997

DATE: The Sub Voicive Colloquium 1997 will take place during the autumn of 1997 at a date to be announced. It will be a Saturday event with a poetry reading on the Friday night before.

PLACE:
Centre for English Studies, Senate House, University of London.

APPROACH: There is too much to cover in one colloquium, but we can cover a lot; it is as important to be sure we listen to each other as it is to try to get through too crowded an agenda. It is important that all at the conference work to provide real opportunities to really TALK. (The convenor is committed holding another colloquium in 1998 and perhaps annually thereafter if it seems useful to do so.) The day will be structured and sessions will be chaired. However, we are not necessarily looking for formal papers to be formally delivered. Rather we are looking for activities which will initiate discussion in the colloquium and proposals for possible further action; such activities may well include the presentation of formal papers

AIMS: to address issues of importance which have emerged from discussions and activities of working poets in the British Isles:

PROPOSED AREAS OF DISCUSSION:
What constitutes or why bother to care about * progress
* progressive
* innovative
* inventive
Why trouble over paradigms at all
The term "linguistically innovative", first used by Gilbert Adair, is now used very widely and quite loosely. Does it have any meaning now? Is it a useful term to be using?
Does the term "experimental" have any role?
Visual poetry / concrete poetry: Is it being unfairly marginalised these days? has it had its day or is its day still to come? or is all the energy going into 'performance writing' these days?
The relationship of poetry to other areas, in particular "performance", to what extent is poetry now separable as a discrete activity
To what extent do we mean different things when we speak of the following and how useful are these terms in defining differences:
* Poetry
* text
* writing
How does electronic text relate / fit in?

CONFERENCE MATERIALS: Finances permitting, there will be background materials of some kind; understanding of what is needed will grow as ideas and proposals become full plans. It is intended that, where appropriate, papers / prepared documents will be published in their colloquium or post colloquium form after the colloquium. It is intended to audio record the proceedings; but the recordings will not be released without relevant permission being granted.

CONTRIBUTIONS: There is no agenda with regard to who leads discussions EXCEPT that it is desirable for the final list to be SURPRISING in a constructive way and it shouldn't be an all-male thing or anything like.)

Further proposals in the areas outlined above are requested. Please state topics / areas in as much detail as possible together with how you want to do it, how long you want to do it for. NB We may have to limit the amount of time you take.

DEADLINE for receipt of proposals:
to be announced - keep sending them in.

PROPOSED DEADLINE for materials to be included in background materials:
to be announced

Materials to be reproduced are requested in hard copy and computer file.

FINANCES: At this moment there is no money and everything is being done on various people's goodwill. We welcome donations in money and kind! Other forms of finance will be sought but you must be prepared to be working for nothing and travelling for nothing

There will be a fee to attend the colloquium. This will be kept as low as possible. A combined (cheaper) ticket to the colloquium and poetry performance will be available

Please use email wherever possible because it is not only fast but cheap. Please send s.a.e. / i.r.c. when using the mail.

PROMOTING THE COLLOQUIUM:
Please tell people and / or pass us the addresses of people who might be interested.

CONTACTING US us:
Mail: 32 Downside Road, Sutton, Surrey SM2 5HP
Telephone 0[redacted]
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

977. Pierre Joris
from Britlist
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Ric Caddel posted the following to the brit&rish list, but I thought it would interest a number of you here in the US. This is indeed an indespendable infotool for anyone who wants to know what's happening across the big A. My only query being that odd date "1977"-- I take it to be a typo -- Pierre

The new ed. of the Association of Little Presses' CATALOGUE OF LITTLE PRESS BOOKS IN PRINT (No.14, 1977) is now out. It costs 3 pounds 75, and is available from ALP Co-ordinator Chris Jones, 111 Banbury Rd Oxford OX2 6JX.

It's an invaluable resource: list of UK little presses, access point for work by numerous UK authors (including members of this list!), bookshops (many of which do mail order) and - of course - individual press adverts. As well as pointing out new things which I'd never have heard of, it reminded me of a lot of blasts from the past, things I want to dig out and re-read. And some really weird stuff too. New readers, start here - with caution...

_____

Richard Caddel
Durham University Library, Stockton Rd., Durham DH1 3LY, UK
E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk
Phone: [redacted] Fax: [redacted]
WWW:
http://www.dur.ac.uk/~dul0ric

"Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write."
- Basil
Bunting

_____

==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

978. Pierre Joris
Re: "The center & circumference of silence"
Wed 30 Apr 1997

David R. Israel wrote:
>
> It has come to my attn that there has appeared, as of this month,
> Vol. 1, No. 1 of a new (evidently academic) journal:
> International Journal of Hindu Studies
.....
> The 1st abstract from the 1st issue seems of potential interest to

> Poetics denizens, ergo I reproduce that here:
>
> / / / / /
>
> The center and circumference of silence: Yoga, poststructuralism, and > the rhetoric of paradox
> by George Kalamaras
>
> Some recent studies of Hindu yoga have tended to ignore the > dialogical aspect of this philosophy and, thus, its compatibility > with poststructuralist theory and poetics. This paper focuses on > paradox as sacred experience, arguing that the reciprocal paradigm > of yogic meditative philosophy is a dialogical system capable of > accommodating paradox and recasting it as a generative condition.
> Yogic philosophy thus offers an epistemology compatible with that > of radical poetics, one that can ultimately enrich > poststructuralist poetics in ways truer to their radical intent.
>
> / / / / /
> [author of the above]:
> GEORGE KALAMARAS
> Associate Professor of English and Director of Creative > Writing at Indiana University-Purdue University Fort Wayne
>

Kalamaras has an interesting essay on poetry & mysticism in the current (a recent?) issue of Ed Foster's TALISMAN. Worth reading & arguying with. -- Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

979. Pritchett,Pat
Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Tom Mandel appears to have ALL the good stories. But I could - if I wanted - tell you about the time I tooled around LA in a pickup truck with Sinead O'Connor riding shotgun.

Then there was the time - less elevating to be sure - that I watched Rodney Dangerfield consume an Arby's beef sandwich. Samuel Johnson has nothing on that guy!

From: Tom Mandel
To: POETICS
Subject: tiles, miles, ali, and me
Date: Wednesday, April 30, 1997 7:55AM

Stories I have yet to relate to the list.

Buying Miles a drink when I was 15
(he was wearing a gorgeous pigskin overcoat over a raglan-shouldered houndstooth suit -- he looked like the devil's reply to Charlie Chaplin)

Meeting Ali in '95
His suit was covered with stars; he passed me a two-page tract in Arabic crushed in the form of his hands' lost control.

Meeting Colin Powell in '96
We discussed old Volvos. He drives (daily) a '66 122S wagon, green.

My date with Jessica Lang
(she lived on the rue des Rosiers; she stood me up)

...I better stop while you're ahead.

Subject: Re: Tom's pingpong rap

>but who but me
is the ali

> better than me for miles.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

980. Jethro Cadbury
Gin & UK
Wed 30 Apr 1997

On Wed, 23 Apr 1997 17:10:27 -0700 George Bowering wrote <<Last summer I went to a soccer game (Vancouver 3, Seattle 2) with Bromige, and we had , because of his son, a thermos of gin and a thermos of vermouth and some plastic cups. Bromige told me that in England this was quite customary. I believed him,>>

He is being spendthrift with the truth...

There is a type of Englishman abroad... I once went over a smallish mountain made huge by enormous heat with an Englishman who would take rest breaks every hour or so - he would sit on a rock or stump or whatever and produce a depleting bottle of ouzo - this was in Greece - and a rod of plastic cups... as the way became more arduous it seemed to matter less and the way back became more of a guess - it was enjoyable and clearly survivable - but it was not normal

Lawrence Upton

↑ Index

981. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me
Wed 30 Apr 1997

That's nothing to brag about -- I once met a man at a bus stop in Los Angeles who had never heard of Kevin Bacon!

↑ Index

982. Susan E. Dunn
Writing the Speculative
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Since I just got back on the poetics wagon I'm not sure if this has been announced already. If so, then I apologize for the redundancy.

For those in the Bay Area, this Friday May 2 Hank Lazer will be reading at the Stanford Bookstore at 4:00pm and on Saturday May 3 the Stanford Humanities Center presents "Writing the Speculum: A Symposium on Poetry and Knowledge." The full schedule of panelists and paper titles is now available on the web page: http://shc.stanford.edu/shc/poetry.knowledge.html

---

Susan E. Dunn, Ph.D.
Associate Director "Make the world your salon"
Stanford Humanities Center - Mina Loy

Mariposa House Tel: [redacted]
546 Salvatierra Walk Fax: [redacted]
Stanford University email: [redacted]
Stanford, CA 94305-8630 www: http://shc.stanford.edu

↑ Index

983. Grant Jenkins
Re: alterity
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Jeffrey:

For the best explanation of "Alterity" as relating to otherness, check out Emmanuel Levinas's _Totality and Infinity_. In this book, he uses alterity to distinguish his use of the Other from that of a dialectical relationship of self and other. Instead of otherness being that against which the subject defines itself, "Alterity" for Levinas signifies that the Other is not a construct of the cognition of the subject. Instead, the Other is beyond reason and even beyond Being and transcends any idea the subject can have of the Other. Hope that helps. I'm doing a project relating this idea of alterity to poetry. Back channel me if you want more info.

Grant Jenkins

↑ Index

984. David R. Israel
"The center & circumference of silence"
Wed 30 Apr 1997

It has come to my attn that there has appeared, as of this month,
Vol. 1, No. 1 of a new (evidently academic) journal:
International Journal of Hindu Studies

They have a website:
http://www.clas.ufl.edu/users/gthursby/ijhs/contents.htm

but the articles themselves don't appaer on the site. However, they are putting abstracts of the articles on the site.

The 1st abstract from the 1st issue seems of potential interest to Poetics denizens, ergo I reproduce that here:

/ / / / /

The center and circumference of silence: Yoga, poststructuralism, and the rhetoric of paradox
by George Kalamaras

Some recent studies of Hindu yoga have tended to ignore the dialogical aspect of this philosophy and, thus, its compatibility with poststructuralist theory and poetics. This paper focuses on paradox as sacred experience, arguing that the reciprocal paradigm of yogic meditative philosophy is a dialogical system capable of accommodating paradox and recasting it as a generative condition. Yogic philosophy thus offers an epistemology compatible with that of radical poetics, one that can ultimately enrich poststructuralist poetics in ways truer to their radical intent.

/ / / / /
[author of the above]:
GEORGE KALAMARAS
Associate Professor of English and Director of Creative Writing at Indiana University-Purdue University Fort Wayne

I've not seen the Journal itself (nor read the essay described above).

"paradox as sacred experience" -- a phrase to conjure with (as they say) --

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

↑ Index

985. Ken Edwards
REPORT CCCP 7
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Thanks, Karlien, for that careful and attentive description of the Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry. I was going to attempt one of my own, but my take on what went on is not so very different, so I'll abandon it. Except to add my tuppen'orth on the one session she missed out which I was at, the Saturday morning one: Pierre-Yves Soucy and Staffan Soderblum. The former a Belgian-based French-Canadian, the latter from Sweden, and both previously unknown to me. Soucy's poems were long, dense, abstract, knotted, and possessed of an uncanny momentum. This meant that Ian Patterson's skilful translations had to wait a while to be heard, but the alternative - to interrupt the sequences - would have been untenable. Soderblum, was lighter, his poems shorter, but with a resonance that followed hard behind them: language leaving its traces, animal footprints in the snow. He prefaced the reading with some words on the translation process. Rod Mengham read English translations, including one of his own, having no Swedish - this exercise amused Soderblum.

Last night (Tuesday) Karen Mac Cormack gave another tour de force reading at SubVoicive, the Three Cups, London, this time duetting with Alan Halsey on a collaborative piece which kind of zinged. Hope to see it in print soon.

↑ Index

986. Henry Gould
reading in RhodeIsland
Wed 30 Apr 1997

May Reading at Native Gallery

Karen Donovan, Henry Gould, Stephen Sartarelli, Janet Sullivan

Fri. May 9th, 9 pm

Native Gallery, 387 Charles St, Providence. Call the gallery at 401- [redacted] for directions, or email me ([redacted]) reading follows opening for May show - a solo exhibition, "Strange Journey : paintings by Entang Wiharso". Opening 5-8 pm. all events free.

"Henry Gould is not just an internet squall"
- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

987. David Kellogg
Re: from Britlist
Wed 30 Apr 1997

Pierre or anybody, what's the scope of this list, and how can I get on?

Cheers,
David

At 03:38 PM 4/30/97 +0000, Pierre Joris wrote:
>Ric Caddel posted the following to the brit&rish list, but I thought it >would interest a number of you here in the US. This is indeed an >indespendable infotool for anyone who wants to know what's happening >across the big A. My only query being that odd date "1977"-- I take it >to be a typo -- Pierre
>
>The new ed. of the Association of Little Presses' CATALOGUE OF LITTLE >PRESS BOOKS IN PRINT (No.14, 1977) is now out. It costs 3 pounds 75, and >is available from ALP Co-ordinator Chris Jones, 111 Banbury Rd Oxford >OX2
>6JX.
>
>It's an invaluable resource: list of UK little presses, access point for >work by numerous UK authors (including members of this list!), bookshops >(many of which do mail order) and - of course - individual press >adverts.
>As well as pointing out new things which I'd never have heard of, it >reminded me of a lot of blasts from the past, things I want to dig out
>and >re-read. And some really weird stuff too. New readers, start here - with >caution...
>
>_____
>Richard Caddel
>Durham University Library, Stockton Rd., Durham DH1 3LY, UK
>E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk
>Phone: [redacted] Fax: [redacted]
>WWW:
>http://www.dur.ac.uk/~dul0ric
>
>"Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write."
> - Basil
>Bunting
>_____

>
>
>==========
>pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
>tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>----------
>Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
>values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
>_one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
>constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
>[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
>and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
>it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
>==========
>
>
~~~
~~~

989. Charles Bernstein
LINEbreak in RealAudio
Wed 30 Apr 1997

We are <italic>beginning </italic>to put up all the LINEbreak poetry radio shows in Real Audio on the EPC. LINEbreak is a series of about 30 shows, produced by Martin Spinelli, which I host. The shows have both conversations and readings.

As of now, we have RealAudio only for Lyn Hejinian, Loss Glazier & Ken Sherwood, Ted Pearson, and Carla Harryman. (The other shows on the site are in .mpeg and .wav formats, which take time to load before playing.) More will be put up week by week. (You can also get all the shows on cassette.)

RealAudio (or Real) Players are available free. They let you listen to the show in real time in low fidelity. Information about this is on the site.

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak/programs/

↑ Index

990. Joel Lewis
National Poetry Month (fwd)
Thu 1 May 1997

dear folks--found this on CAP-L list....

joel lewis

> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Wed, 30 Apr 97 09:38:44 CST
> From: [redacted]
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: National Poetry Month
>
> A friend who's not a poet just passed this to me from MSN's website--I can't resist passing it on, for what it's worth, on the last day of April:
>
> ---
> ---
>
> April is National Poetry Month in the United States, and I have to pause at the thought of poets adopting a month that begins with a day for fools. After the jokes are over, the poets begin to emerge from the woodwork, frayed manuscripts in hand.
>
> The rest of the year, poets tend to be a shy, reclusive lot -- admitting to their craft only in certain smoky bars or empty houses, at midnight, in a closet. The democracy and accessibility of the World Wide Web is changing that. With great surprise and gladness, I have surfed, or stumbled, onto a proliferation of poetry. It flourishes. It is everywhere.

The Internet has filled some primal need of poets languishing in college classrooms and day jobs. They flock to the Web, they write, and on the Internet they can publish their work for a potentially large and varied audience. That is the first magic.

My guess is that in a way, the Web has rescued poetry publishing. As print costs rise, the Internet provides a comparatively inexpensive venue -- one that more easily supports long works, and four-color art to accompany them. Electronic publishing also allows a more flexible schedule, with updates ranging from quarterly to every day.

Come One, Come All

The Web has something for everyone. Yahoo's Poet List will link you to sites on some of history's finest and best known -- from Sappho, Dante Alighieri, and Yeats to Seamus Heaney, Maya Angelou, and Rita Dove. It's a fine site to bookmark for those days when you really want to read Alfred, Lord Tennyson, or you find yourself down to the wire on a Chaucer report.

For a more informal sampling, you can visit a wealth of individual poets' pages and e-zines. Some of them are aggressively self-labeled as alternative or underground. Many are described as cutting edge, which sounds exciting, but I haven't quite figured out what it means. Others seek to continue the more polished tradition of printed literary reviews. An example is Switched-on Gutenberg, a "Global Poetry Journal" that is published solely for the Web by the University of Washington.

I even found an Electro Magnetic Poetry page, for people whose refrigerator real estate is at a premium.

Now that the forum exists, poets are budding and blossoming, scrawling and pecking at keys to put their poems out in public. As I browse from site to site, I begin to recognize some of the names, and I remember the poets whose work I enjoyed.

Established regional and international print reviews haven't been left out of the loop. One of my favorites is Painted Bride Quarterly, which posts the kind of poetry that can make me gasp. College and university reviews weigh in with a commanding Web presence. Print publications with online sites often include an e-mail address, and information on subscribing or ordering back issues.

Keep on Clicking

Here is the second magic: Nearly every one of these Web sites includes a list of more sites. You can read poetry all day.

Again, Yahoo offers a great place to start, listing a variety of literary Web sites. Those newly added are highlighted at the top for a few days before being alphabetized. One jump, and I'm on a wild journey through words. If I'm not thrilled by the poems on a site, I can click my trusty Back button or move onward.

Another Web destination with a dizzying assortment of links is Zuzu's Petals (yes, named for the Zuzu you've known and loved in Frank Capra's It's a Wonderful Life). Zuzu's Petals provides a clearinghouse of more than 2,000 links to information on writers' resources, grants, literary magazines and e-zines, and readings -- in addition to the online Zuzu's Petals Quarterly.

A World of Poetry

Not only has the accessibility of the World Wide Web encouraged poets to share their work, it has become the nurturing ground for an exciting sense of community. On the Internet, it's a global community. I can visit the Web site of the venerable Academy of American Poets, which sponsors National Poetry Month, to find out about upcoming events. I can check into the local poetry scene in Pittsburgh or London. I can browse through an online workshop, e-mail feedback on the poems posted there, explore writing exercises suggested by other poets, find out about upcoming contests, submit poems for consideration, or simply relish immersion in words.

One of the most exciting discoveries I've made is the Poetry Webring, a worldwide poetry circle. Webrings are a free Internet service "committed to creating a new kind of Web community," and exist on a variety of topics. Links on Webring pages point to a CGI script on a server, so sites can be added or deleted without changing links on individual pages or interrupting the ring. From any site on a Webring, you can jump to the next site, skip the next site, or choose to preview the next five sites, encouraging a journey of immense proportions and diversity. The idea is that if you keep jumping long enough, you'll return to your starting place. The Poetry Webring, however, encompasses more than 460 sites, so it will take a while.

The Internet and e-mail are affecting poetry in another way. Writing is ultimately about communication. And the Web technologies allow poet colleagues to communicate across previously difficult distances. A recent issue of Poets and Writers, which includes Poetry News on its Web site, ran an article about a Wyoming writing workshop consisting of poets, fiction writers, and other wordsmiths who used e-mail to send each other work and reply with feedback -- something that would have been at the very least improbable had it required meeting in a central location for six weeks.

It's giddy. It's marvelous. And it's all just a few clicks away. The excitement generated by National Poetry Month thrives all year long on the World Wide Web. The poets may stick to their garrets, but they're online now -- a benefit for us all.

--- --

Joannie Kervran is the author of A Steady Longing for Flight, which received the 1995 Floating Bridge Press Chapbook Award and is available through the publisher. Joannie has been writing poetry for about 14 years, and her work has appeared in Point No Point, Rain City Review, and Wings Magazine; her short fiction has been published in Farm Pulp. When released from writing or coding HTML for the World Wide Web, Joannie tends children and old roses. A sample of her poetry is below.

--- --

Undressing

Last night, reluctance slipped from my shoulders like a silk shawl, fell in small anxieties I could step over easily into your reach. Now I gather them around me, look for answers in the treacherous folds, look for an image of you bent over the table as you try to shift the balance and flow of wood until it will slide like water, stand like stone. Your hand follows the grain. Rain slaps the windows and you throw another scrap into the stove. Heat is an elixir.

Across town the rooms grow dark. I reach for a part of you that's lost in the mysteries of cherry and maple. Drafts creep in from ill-fitted corners, tighten my skin. I try on names for your absence like someone else's clothing. The silk is elusive. Night is another chance.

<Picture> ;Loved this article? Hated it? Think you could write a better one? ;Send us your feedback!

8 1997 Microsoft Corporation

> <Picture>

****

JOEL LEWIS

[redacted]

>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

SLEEP FASTER! WE NEED THE PILLOWS!

--- Yiddish aphorism

<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

On the fourth of May David Israel forwarded a wire report under the heading in other sports: Kasparov outwits cyberbrain. The champion had taken the first game off the IBM machine. Seven days later the machine won the match, and the world understood that a thing had happened which would not unhappen, and the list does not mention it. The only trace in nine hundred and fifty letters is henry, on the fourteenth, answering an unrelated question about shepherds: "He was, until he twitched his mantle Deep Blue" and faxed his pasturized pantoum to square one. That is Lycidas — the last lines, the elegy's exit — got off in a joke, and nobody noticed that either.

What the room was doing instead was the best piece of work it did all year, and it began on the thirteenth with Mark Wallace asking for a citation. There is an idea often floated around, he wrote, that the contemporary workshop poem rests on a particular notion of voice: that a voice is an individual possession, the writer's own, discovered rather than given. And then the question nobody had thought to ask in fifteen months of attacking it: "Whether anyone actually believes this, or has said so" in so many words, is something I am trying to find out. Could anyone point him to a published article or book that defends the position?

They could not. Forty-odd letters over a fortnight, four hundred and ninety-four uses of the word, and no locus classicus. David Israel, who tried hardest, admitted he did not know "where one wd locate the manner of locus classicus" and offered Whitman, which is not the same thing. Michael Boughn half-remembered a Seventies anthology whose title contained the word. Daniel Tessitore produced the nearest thing to evidence in the whole thread — a 1992 creative-writing exercise book — and that is what the room's great adversary came down to: a handbook of prompts. The doctrine everybody had been fighting since before this archive begins turns out to have no author.

It has, however, an economy, and the room found that easily enough. Dean Taciuch had sat in the workshops: "In one workshop I participated in" we did an exercise about listening. Hugh Steinberg named the thing precisely — the point is getting a voice, "or getting one at least (as opposed to a job)". Herb Levy remembered the most depressing hours of "my years in arts adminstration", spent on a funding panel. And Stephen Vincent, in a separate thread that ran to thirty-seven letters, wrote about book contests and the fifteen to twenty-five dollars that must accompany the manuscript, and confessed to "an instinctive wariness (weariness?)" about the whole apparatus. Nobody defends the doctrine. Everybody pays the fee.

The best sentence came from Thomas Bell and went unanswered: "I'm puzzled that so many here cede the idea" of voice to a single isolated quarter, as if the word belonged to the enemy and not to them. Which is the story of this archive so far. In March of last year the room could not agree what avant-garde meant; in May it could not say what a sonnet was; in November it could not locate the West; in June it was begged not to start on langpo. Now it finds that the position it has spent years defining itself against cannot be found in print by forty people looking hard for a fortnight. I have set Wallace's question where he asked it, because a room that could never keep its own words had at last mislaid its opponent.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 951 in all.

WRITERS

[Dimpson, Bennett M. Sm 610
Acgold01 274, 276
Aerialedge 78, 242, 577, 851
Alexander, Charles 192, 629, 644, 875
Alexander, Christopher 114, 117, 184, 221, 373, 432, 442, 452
Amato 377, 654, 659, 670, 673, 674, 680, 713, 740, 774, 779, 847, 848, 922, 940
And, Miekal 524, 676, 677, 912
Archambeau, Robert 296, 709, 771, 773
Ashton, Jennifer 895
Aviram, Amittai F. 13, 61, 83, 138
Baker, Mark 107, 385, 459, 512, 563, 641, 722, 724, 831
Barbour, Douglas 215, 397, 398, 401, 525, 758, 759, 772, 809, 879, 946
Bell, Thomas 387, 468
Benedetti, David 52
Bernstein, Charles 222, 279
Bouchard, Daniel 11, 53, 355, 357, 363, 435
Boughn, Michael 110, 133, 154, 164, 205, 268, 392, 448, 544, 569, 765
Bowering, George 3, 35, 36, 343, 379, 624, 751, 797, 910
Bromige, David 368, 639, 768, 770, 798, 850, 860, 903, 923
Brown, Pam 189, 262, 288, 414, 683, 684, 691
Bruno, Franklin 469, 566
Cadbury, Jethro 171, 180
Carll, Steve 73, 219, 307, 386, 556, 557, 560, 617, 714
Cayley, John 2, 256, 565
Charssmith 28, 108, 181, 185, 538, 944
Cheek, Cris 15, 42, 43
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 527, 529, 539, 602
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 229, 410, 450, 664, 942
CONNER/LRC-CAHS, KYLE 103, 260
Cope, Stephen 65, 136, 341
Corbin, Michael 405, 406, 547, 548, 752
Crown, Kathleen 147, 269
Curnow, Wystan 41, 630, 633, 681, 877
Damon, Maria 7, 8, 14, 45, 57, 62, 68, 71, 123, 139, 153, 211, 257, 270, 347, 395, 396, 400, 426, 427, 493, 498, 521, 522, 573, 596, 636, 638, 648, 663, 678, 704, 705, 706, 708, 870, 918
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 75, 76, 196, 338, 339, 340, 508, 509, 695, 696
Davey, Frank 378
Davis, Jordan 9, 10, 12, 24, 29, 31, 46, 50, 51, 66, 124, 155, 161, 163, 187, 220, 273, 320, 394, 440, 441, 456, 501, 537, 601, 669, 812, 840
Dbkk 316, 350, 351, 362, 417, 449, 473, 474, 495, 520, 531, 554, 606, 612, 652, 794, 799, 816, 835, 846, 849, 861, 874, 906
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 591, 789
Douglas 884
Drake, Robert 58, 330, 336
DS 137, 235, 289, 486, 698, 764, 783, 786, 901
Duemer, Joseph 589, 595, 632, 647, 650, 660, 662, 682, 731, 732, 744, 778, 780, 781, 791, 793, 807, 830, 872, 873, 887, 933, 951
Emerson, Jocelyn 480, 484, 485, 546, 593
Finnegan, James 941
FORCHE-MATTISON, CAROLYN L. 614, 649
Foutu, Markus 894
G, Henry 500, 720, 914, 947
Gallagher, Kristin 168
Ganick, Peter 64, 305, 907
Glazier, Loss 119
Golumbia, David 585
Gottlieb, E. 128
Gould, Henry 25, 30, 38, 74, 106, 122, 151, 176, 254, 460, 599, 646, 743, 763, 801, 854, 880, 886, 893, 950
Gray, Janet S. 481
Groberts 277, 666
Grotjohn, Bob 79, 90
Grumman, Bob 278, 488, 618, 637, 672, 945
Guest, Eliza McGrand- CVA 358, 359, 407, 541, 609, 668, 921
Hale, Robert 323, 457
Hardin, Rob 80
Hatmaker, Elizabeth 182, 712
Heller, Michael 258
Hen 130, 206, 208, 209, 302, 423, 425, 741, 806
Henry 26, 32, 34, 87, 148, 149, 159, 160, 183, 232, 234, 321, 344, 366, 372, 374, 375, 393, 429, 430, 433, 447, 479, 502, 532, 551, 611, 657, 667, 671, 702, 703, 726, 730, 749, 750, 821, 883, 896
Henrywrt 170
IMBURGIA 1, 264
Israel, David 4, 5, 6, 44, 88, 95, 127, 177, 178, 186, 188, 190, 199, 201, 231, 238, 240, 286, 325, 326, 328, 367, 371, 382, 390, 412, 413, 453, 454, 528, 542, 543, 553, 582, 622, 625, 640, 688, 723, 859,

864, 878, 885, 892, 900, 905, 911
Israel, David R. 72, 446, 503, 505, 506, 594, 733, 735, 747, 748, 762, 777, 784, 805, 927, 928, 938, 943, 949
Jaeger, Peter 17
Jdhollo 697
Jenkins, Grant 856
JOHNSON, KENT 475, 487, 514, 516, 755
Joris, Pierre 143, 146, 202, 356, 578, 936
Kellogg, David 651, 817, 882, 934
Kimmelman, Burt 21
Kuszai, Joel 570, 571
Landers, Peter 535, 710, 845, 876, 898, 929
Larkin, Peter 444
Lazer, Hank 416, 491
LEAHY, MARK 913
Lease, Joseph 20, 37, 165, 166, 167, 216, 819
Levy, Herb 318, 409, 627, 628, 889
Lewis, Joel 263, 559, 603
List, Poetics 54, 198, 346, 545, 567, 568
Loden, Rachel 280, 315, 428, 515
Long, Brent 156, 162, 281, 795, 837
Machlin, Dan 252, 852
Magee, Michael 69, 132, 472, 919
Main 324, 464
Mandel, Tom 16, 18, 204, 207, 210, 213, 478, 490, 518, 519, 685, 686, 687, 745, 939
MANN, CHRIS 172, 203, 290, 436, 492, 534, 626, 658, 742, 753, 785, 802, 804, 811
Markotic, Nicole 265
Marks, Steven 100, 179, 195, 301, 634, 679, 787, 908, 930
Maz881 217, 299, 349, 615
McHale, Brian 27, 85
McVay, Gwyn 70, 82, 173, 283, 370, 399, 424, 463, 489, 517, 572, 598, 635, 897, 915, 931
Mgk3k 690
Miller, Andrew John 761, 767, 782
Minkacroy 228
Moriarty, Laura 89, 97, 327, 360, 818, 827
Muratori, Fred 597, 608, 746, 810, 858, 888, 891, 916, 925
Nathanson, Tenney 588
Nguyen, Hoa 499, 621, 725
Nielsen, Aldon L. 33, 48, 56, 67, 86, 94, 102, 112, 140, 158, 214, 303, 304, 353, 451, 497, 552
Nuyopoman 116, 191, 251, 300
Orange, Thomas M. 47, 55, 692, 736, 836
Orange, Tom 592
Oren.izenberg 194, 348, 434, 465
OrpheEUrydiuce 756, 757
Orpheus 101, 297, 332, 333, 334, 335, 342, 388, 700
Ortiz, Travis Andrew 419
Osman, Jena 104
Palma, Christine 129, 145, 267
Perloff, Marjorie 833
Peters, Carl Lynden 98, 760
Piombino/Simon 246, 247, 255, 282, 331, 345, 380, 383, 418, 734, 766, 788, 808, 832, 834, 844, 920, 924
Pollet, Sylvester 40, 92, 157, 233, 431, 523, 904
Prejsnar, Mark 22, 84, 120, 121, 134, 150, 152, 212, 271, 298, 574, 613, 707, 803, 838, 839, 853, 926
Prevallet, Kristin S 248
Pritchett,Pat 39, 49, 59, 91, 126, 131, 135, 218, 249, 352, 361, 439, 729, 775, 841, 842, 843, 902
Prod, William Burmeister 600, 653, 718, 719, 825
Regan, Matthias 458, 462, 549, 576, 607, 619, 620, 820, 824, 826, 828
Reiner, Christopher 284, 438, 604
Reynolds, Rebecca 437, 881
Roses, Field Of 404
Rsillima 200, 420, 470, 494, 645
Russo, Linda V. 60, 329
Safdie, Joe 23, 175, 226, 319, 408, 455, 721
Savopoulos, Manny 77
Schaefer, P.Standard 616
Schmid, Julie Marie 63
Schwartz, Jay 865
Schwerner, Armand 19
Scroggins, Mark W 623
Seagram, Blair 96
Shemurph 259
Sherwood, Kenneth W 81, 141, 285, 510, 511, 558
Shoemakers 227, 306, 322, 477
Simon, Schuchat 694
Slaughter, William 253
Sondheim, Alan Jennifer 109, 142, 174, 197, 245, 261, 287, 337, 364, 513, 526, 727, 728, 754, 932, 935, 948
Spinelli, Martin J 693
Sschu30844 111, 115, 144, 699, 855
Steinberg, Hugh 250, 389, 466, 631, 661, 665, 867, 890
Stroffolino, Chris 272, 561, 562, 564, 716, 717
Taciuch, Dean 381, 402, 403
Tessitore, Daniel 169, 223, 224, 225, 275, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 354, 445, 476, 533, 579, 580, 605, 656, 813, 814, 815
Thompson, George 415, 422, 467, 471, 530, 550, 555, 575, 584, 655, 675, 738, 769, 868, 899, 917
Tranter, John 737
Trevor, Karen And 384, 496

Vincent, Stephen 507, 536, 790, 823, 871, 909
Wallace, Mark 317, 583, 776
Ward, Diane Marie 244
Weiss, Mark 113, 118, 125, 193, 230, 236, 237, 239, 241, 266, 365, 369, 421, 443, 461, 482, 483, 504, 581, 586, 587, 642, 643, 715, 792, 796, 822, 829, 857, 862, 863, 866, 869
Wheeler, Susan 391, 701, 937
Whyte, Ryan 293, 739
Wilson, Rob 689
Zauhar, Dave 376
Zimmerman, Daniel 93, 99, 105, 243, 291, 292, 294, 295, 411, 711, 800
Zitt, Joseph 590
Zukowski, Peter 540

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 80
Adorno, Theodor 61, 97, 440, 549
Ahearn, Joe 253
Albon, George 242, 557
Alice, Mary 19, 146, 157, 204
Allan, Don 77, 84, 806
Altieri, Charles 61, 75, 83, 85, 86
Americans, Asian 26, 77, 84, 188, 782
Anderson, Erik 242
Andrews, Bruce 242, 440, 447, 693, 884, 885, 889
Andrews, Jim 242, 734, 751, 766, 769, 788, 803, 808, 838, 844, 853
Anne, Katherine 520
Arbor, Ann 77, 84, 571
Armantrout, Rae 884
Armstrong, Steve 511
Arnold, Bob 61, 77, 84
Ashberry, John 710
Ashbery, John 29, 37, 46, 127, 140, 262, 415, 421, 471, 597, 608, 627, 746, 763, 810, 858, 862, 864, 888, 891, 916, 925, 945
Ashley, Robert 72
Atlanta, Mark P. 77, 84, 120, 134, 150, 165, 271, 284, 292, 294, 295, 298, 574, 613, 616, 707, 839, 926
Auden, W. H. 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 37, 38, 46, 47, 512, 757
Auster, Paul 52, 693
Austin, Geer 73, 77, 84, 448, 464, 467, 590, 944
Austin, James 77, 84
Aviram, Amittai F. 13, 61, 83, 138, 139
Ayler, Albert 3
Bacon, Francis 506
Baker, Lori 27, 73
Baldwin, James 406
Balpe, Pierre 2
Baraka, Amiri 7, 61, 69, 83, 86, 103, 105
Barnes, Diane 790, 795, 845, 846, 898
Barnett, Anthony 302
Barney, Matthew 474
Barthes, Roland 182
Barton, John 221, 538
Bates, Joe 221
Baudelaire, Charles 450, 455
Baudrillard, Jean 752
Bellamy, Dodie 73, 307, 419, 515, 871, 874, 898, 906
Belle, Cecelia 284, 292, 294, 295
Benjamin, Walter 455, 696, 721, 752, 920
Bennett, Bill 610, 768, 770
Benson, Steve 487, 832
Bentley, Scott 843
Bergvall, Caroline 104
Berkeley, Michael 5, 7, 18, 77, 84, 219, 284, 292, 294, 295, 622, 865, 911
Berkson, Bill 597, 627
Berlin, Irving 652, 757
Bernstein, Emma 2, 23, 61, 75, 83, 322, 616, 734, 749, 751, 766, 769, 788, 789, 803, 808, 838, 844, 853
Berrigan, Anselm 51, 242, 255, 557, 865
Berrigan, Edmund 419, 652
Berrigan, Ted 258, 629, 920
Berry, Jake 491, 557
Berstein, Charles 215
Blackburn, Paul 260, 697, 710
Blake, William 164, 181, 455, 544, 555, 690, 757, 791, 800, 802, 805, 807, 811, 818, 824, 827, 830, 856, 944
Blanchot, Maurice 143, 146, 157, 202, 356, 369, 578, 936
Blarnes, Eric 130, 160, 178, 312, 366, 371, 502, 504, 532, 540, 551, 886, 896, 947, 950
Blau, Rachel 13, 61, 138, 139, 269
Boughn, Mike 148, 154, 268, 479
Bowie, David 515
BpNichol 173, 179, 190, 491
Brazil, David 884
Brecht, Bertolt 696, 709, 721, 752
Brennan, Karen 629
Brodey, Jim 51
Brodsky, Nicole 26, 33
Bronk, William 258
Brook, James 321
Brooks, Gwendolyn 2, 88, 90, 474, 629, 813, 814
Broughton, James 198
Brown, Ann 884
Browne, Colin 841
Browning, Robert 118
Bryan, John 77, 84, 221
Bryant, Dana 312
Bryant, Tisa 316

Bukowski, Charles 945
Burger, Mary 242, 255
Burke, Edmund 77, 84, 782
Burke, Kenneth 782
Burket, Cheryl 219, 556
Burmeister, Bill 623
Burnham, Clint 717, 723
Burns, Avery 386, 411, 557
Burns, Elizabeth 46, 104, 284
Burroughs, William S. 450
Burton, Philip 269, 514, 527
Butler, Judith 242
Butler, William 77, 84, 944
Byron, Philip 167
Byrum, John 242
Cafagna, Marcus 147
Cage, John 487, 590
Cain, Stephen 17
Capen, Samuel P. 248
Carroll, John 77, 84, 945
Carson, Anne 190
Carson, Margaret 190, 195, 250
Carter, Angela 77, 84, 936
Carver, Raymond 376
Casey, Sean 284, 292, 294, 295
Castro, Michael 77, 84
Catullus 701
Celan, Paul 73, 307, 348, 386, 388, 411, 556, 557, 560, 617, 642, 714, 736, 748, 756
Chadwick, Lynn 307, 438
Charyk, Linda 404
Chomsky, Noam 242
Ciavonne, Carol 307
Clark, Emilie 77, 84, 416, 445, 782
Clark, Susan 242
Clarke, John 164, 229, 242, 268, 284, 292, 294, 295
Clarke, Robin 61, 133, 210, 268, 629
Clausen, Andy 61
Clifford, Pat 699
Clinton, Bill 24
Cobbing, Bob 180
Cocteau, Jean 177
Cohen, Ethan 77, 84
Colby, Todd 103, 105
Coleman, Jen 808, 838, 844, 853
Coleman, Wanda 945
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 167, 744, 747, 778, 812, 819, 831, 832, 840
Coltrane, Alice 511
Coltrane, John 808, 838, 844, 853
Connor, Bruce 546
Conrad, Tony 135
Conte, Joseph 491
Coolidge, Clark 10, 150, 152, 158, 165, 166, 167, 187, 206, 212, 216, 220, 574, 629, 710, 920
Cooper, Dennis 77, 84, 391
Corbett, William 77, 84
Corey, Joshua 538
Corman, Roger 284, 292, 294, 295
Cornford, Adam 73, 556
Corso, Gregory 757, 945
Cory, Alex 557
Coultas, Brenda 51
Coyote, Peter 176, 177, 947
Crane, Lee 886
Creeley, Robert 51, 165, 693, 860
Curtis, Dana 416, 445
Daly, Lew 46, 48, 104
Daniels, Chris 219, 386, 411
Darragh, Tina 104
Davenport, Steve 141, 758, 759
Davidson, Daniel 77, 84, 242, 566
Davidson, Harriet 61
Davidson, Michael 920
Davies, Alan 487
Davies, Kevin 78, 242
Day, Jean 307, 419, 557
Delaney, Samuel 80
Deleuze, Gilles 756, 942
Dennis, Carl 77, 84, 693, 884
Derrida, Jacques 545, 564, 572, 699, 708, 729, 737, 756, 813, 814, 856, 879
Dewey, John 652
Dickey, Eric 77, 84
Dickison, Steve 73, 268, 307, 386, 411, 644, 645, 649, 661
Dixon, Nancy 10, 50, 470, 477, 666, 721
Donne, John 313, 365
Dorn, Edward 629
Doty, Mark 338, 350
Doyle, Kirby 219, 556
Drucker, Johanna 875
Duffy, Clifford 101
Duggan, Laurie 414, 515
Duncan, Robert 73, 181, 198, 211, 242, 316, 327, 330, 360, 472, 863, 904
Dunn, Susan 86
Dutton, Paul 499, 521, 567, 630, 633, 638, 641, 643, 648, 711
Dworkin, Craig 419, 557
Dylan, Michael 77, 84
Edgar, Chris 242
Edison, Thomas 292, 294, 295
Ehrenreich, Barbara 242
Eigner, Larry 229, 234
Elena, Maria 77, 84, 757, 884
Eliot, Joe 95, 314, 344
Ellen, Mary 77, 84, 312, 569, 600
Ellis, Stephen 284, 292, 294, 295
Emerson, Claudia 69
Empson, William 23
England, Amy 61, 158, 198, 443, 472, 499, 504, 506, 521, 630

Enslin, Ted 491
Eshleman, Clayton 284, 292, 294, 295
Espada, Martin 406
Eugene, Brett 77, 84
Evans, Bill 77, 84
Ewert, Mark 652
Federman, Ray 270, 693
Fenton, James 777
Fenton, Jayne 777
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 36
Finnegan, Jim 655, 941
Fischer, Norman 221, 242, 487
Fisher, Allen 936
Fitterman, Rob 441, 884, 885, 889
Fitzgerald, Scott 297, 333
Foley, Jack 491, 945
Foley, Patrick 219
Folsom, Eric 419, 652
Ford, Richard 77, 84
Forrest, Lisa 77, 84, 475, 514, 529, 543
Foster, Paul 85, 557
Foucault, Michel 175, 545, 756, 948
Fox, Skip 284, 292, 294, 295
France, Peter 2, 554, 603
Frances, Mary 77, 84, 539, 546, 944
Friedlander, Benjamin 222, 693
Friedman, David M. 51, 246
Frost, Corey 115, 118, 269
Frost, Robert 115, 118, 379
Frym, Gloria 419, 557
Fuller, Heather 242
Fulton, Alice 613, 945
Gaines, Reg E. 61
Gallagher, Kristen 132
Galvin, James 489, 514, 520, 527, 572
Gander, Forrest 475, 514, 520, 527, 529, 539, 543, 546, 685
Gardner, Drew 307, 386, 411
Gartung, Karl 629
Genet, Jean 756, 920
Giles, Samantha 77, 84
Gins, Madeline 222, 693
Ginsberg, Allen 51, 83, 101, 198, 297, 332, 333, 335, 472, 557
Gitlin, Todd 77, 84
Gizzi, Michael 104
Gizzi, Peter 46
Gladman, Renee 73, 307, 316, 351, 419, 557, 865
Gleason, Madeline 198
Gluck, Bob 557
Glück, Robert 419, 557
Godfrey, John 51
Van Gogh 589, 595
Golding, Alan 274, 276
Goldman, Emma 77, 84
Goldsmith, Kenneth 242, 284, 292, 294, 295
Goldstein, Mark 77, 84
Gooch, Brad 696
Good, Phil 51
Gordon, David 157
Gordon, Robert 157
Gould, Glenn 209, 429, 460, 599, 613, 695, 720, 727
Graham, Jorie 489, 514, 520, 527, 591, 593, 595, 596, 602, 605, 637, 647, 665, 669, 672, 694, 712, 745, 749, 878, 931, 934
Graham, Lea 77, 84, 102, 594, 635, 637, 640, 647, 656, 657, 665, 669, 746, 789, 931, 933, 934, 937, 938
Graves, Robert 44, 240, 241
Greenberg, Samuel 886
Greene, Graham 247
Gregory, Dick 77, 84, 467
Grenier, Bob 200, 229, 234
Grenier, Robert 229
Guattari, Félix 756, 942
Gudath, Lauren 419, 557, 865
Guertin, Carolyn 77, 84
Guest, Barbara 89, 97, 222, 419, 693
Guston, Philip 393
Hadas, Rachel 61
Hall, Donald 437
Hamilton, Robin 39, 40, 45, 77, 84
Hampson, Robert 936
Hansen, Jefferson 46, 100, 104, 284, 292, 294, 295, 383, 515
Hardy, Edmund 165
Hardy, Thomas 297, 335
Harris, Kaplan 254, 574
Harris, Max 574, 601
Harryman, Carla 494, 579, 652, 693, 884, 909, 916, 920, 927
Harvey, David 545
Hass, Bob 645
Hass, Robert 61, 83, 201, 225, 864
Hawthorne, Nathaniel 77, 84
Heaney, Seamus 756
Hecht, Anthony 546
Heidegger, Martin 545, 617, 632, 642, 699, 708, 737
Heights, Jackson 77, 84
Hejinian, Lyn 231, 307, 419, 491, 557, 597, 627, 652, 693
Helms, Jesse 595, 608, 628
Henri, Charles 309, 341
Highsmith, David 903
Hirsch, Edward 221
Hirshman, Jack 284, 292, 294, 295
Hockney, David 286
Hoffman, Cara 515
Hogue, Cynthia 269
Hollander, Benjamin 557
Hollo, Anselm 697

Holman, Bob 85, 116, 191, 246, 251, 300
Holmes, Michael 149, 201, 225
Homer 72, 125, 148, 154, 415, 421, 422, 423, 454, 467, 471, 483, 485, 502, 504, 510, 530, 550, 555, 558, 582, 584, 586, 675, 715, 726, 735, 868, 938
Hoover, Edgar 475, 488, 514, 520, 527, 543, 712, 790, 795
Hoover, Paul 475, 514, 520, 527, 529, 539, 543, 546, 551, 685, 686, 712, 790, 795
House, White 339, 355, 361, 367, 370, 621
Howard, Scott 77, 84, 173, 175, 179, 755
Howe, Susan 1, 222, 574, 693
Huang, Yunte 77, 84
Hughes, Peter 77, 84, 173, 175, 179, 221, 787
Indiana, Robert 221
Ingersoll, Glenn 557
Irby, Kenneth 284, 292, 294, 295, 578
Irigaray, Luce 525, 758, 759, 772, 809, 813, 814, 839, 879, 946
Israel, David R. 72, 446, 503, 505, 506, 594, 622, 733, 735, 747, 748, 762, 777, 784, 805, 927, 928, 938, 943, 949
Jackson, Jesse 23, 27, 361
Jackson, Michael 470, 473
Jameson, Fred 499, 508, 521, 526, 531, 547, 549, 552, 563, 567, 568, 573, 576, 592, 630, 633, 638, 643, 648, 689, 696, 699, 706, 709, 711, 715, 721, 722, 726, 728, 729, 731, 734, 751, 752, 766, 788, 812, 819, 824, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 840
Jarnot, Lisa 441, 639
Jenkins, Matthew 77, 84
Johns, Jasper 663, 692, 699, 895
Johnson, Ron 73
Johnston, Daniel 538
Jones, Brian 77, 84, 86
Jordan, June 10, 12, 24, 30, 31, 32, 46, 50, 51, 124, 161, 187, 216, 220, 249, 284, 292, 294, 295, 320, 354, 394, 415, 455, 456, 501, 537, 574, 601, 610, 831, 840
Joron, Andrew 73, 219, 386, 411, 556
Joyce, Michael 713
Joyce, Trevor 148, 501, 945
Kafka, Franz 687, 702, 920
Kalleberg, Garrett 252, 561
Karavatos, Nicholas 307
Kathryn, Mary 77, 84
Katz, Eliot 61, 83
Kaufman, Erica 95, 97, 99, 362
Kaufman, Robert 89, 91, 95, 97, 99
Kearney, Larry 699
Keats, John 97, 106, 180, 533, 536
Keller, Lynn 61
Kelly, Patrick 77, 84
Kelly, Robert 314, 381, 383, 487
Kelsey, Karla 384
Kennedy, David 30, 242
Kerouac, Jack 89, 297, 333, 335, 450, 455, 697, 710
Kerry, John 391
Killian, Kevin 73, 104, 307, 338, 350, 419, 514, 520, 527, 557, 652
Kimball, Cynthia 46, 104
King, Martha 292, 294, 295
Kinsella, Thomas 651, 817, 882, 934
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 690
Klein, Lucas 77, 84, 782
Klein, Ralph 782
Knight, Brenda 54, 198
Koons, Jeff 470, 473
Kristeva, Julia 548, 554
Kroetsch, Robert 215
Kuhn, Thomas 575
Kurtz, Steve 221
Kyger, Joanne 73
Lakoff, George 207
Landers, Pete 535, 710, 845, 898, 929, 942
Larsen, David 557
Lederer, Katherine 419
Lederer, Katie 557
Leigh, Mike 77, 84
Lennon, Brian 542
Levinas, Emmanuel 856
Levine, Jeffrey 938
Levine, Mark 938
Lew, Walter 144
Lewis, Bernard 752, 762
Livingston, Reb 77, 84
Livon, Ernesto 242
Lloyd, Warren 77, 84
London, Frank 2, 19, 143, 180, 256, 388, 390, 565, 784, 786, 936
Louise, Bobbie 77, 84
Mac Low, Jackson 104, 487, 693
Lowell, Amy 89, 380, 395, 424, 434, 443, 458, 463, 465, 472
Lowell, Robert 89, 458, 460, 461
Lowry, Malcolm 297, 335
Luoma, Bill 51, 280, 291, 298, 299, 441
Lynch, David 77, 84
Lyons, Kim 77, 84
Mackey, Nathaniel 181, 491
Madison, James 77, 84
Magee, Mike 83
Mallarmé, Stéphane 568
Malmude, Steve 273
Mandel, Charlotte 133, 501
Mandelstam, Osip 25, 425, 440, 447, 742
Marie, Anne 244
Marshall, Robert 2
Martin, Camille 77, 84, 693
Marvin, Lee 475, 488, 514, 520, 527, 539, 543, 546, 712, 790, 795

Mason, Janet 50, 77, 84, 470, 477, 666, 721
Mayer, Bernadette 51, 133, 920
Mayer, Jane 234
Mayhew, Jonathan 77, 84
Mazer, Ben 246
McCaffery, Steve 693
Meadows, Deborah 481
Melville, Nicky 297, 333, 841
Merwin, W. S. 127, 864
Messerli, Doug 562, 570, 790, 792, 795, 823, 835, 837, 845, 846, 864, 871, 878, 884, 885, 886, 889, 939, 941, 945
Metcalf, Paul 629
Miller, Cynthia 629
Miller, Paul D. 77, 84, 162, 316, 664, 761, 767, 768, 770, 772, 782
Milosevich, Karla 652
Milton, John 126, 183, 193, 415, 421, 471, 544, 555, 726
Mitchell, Joan 77, 84
Mitchell, Stephen 49
Monroe, Jonathan 61
Moore, Allison 77, 84, 514, 520, 527, 874
Morgan, Robin 77, 84, 221
Morris, Dee 7, 61, 66, 68, 77, 84, 85, 102, 103, 105
Morse, Jesse 604
Morton, Kathryn A. 104
Mottram, Eric 171, 936
Moure, Erin 242
Moxley, Jennifer 10, 561
Mullen, Harryette 104, 491
Murphy, Michelle 219, 556
Murphy, Paul 242
Murphy, Sheila 242, 259, 644, 884
Napora, Joe 284, 292, 294, 295
Nelson, Cary 242
Nelson, Paul 2, 219
Nelson, Ted 2
Newton, Keith 77, 84, 242
Nicole, Anna 73, 77, 84
Nielsen, Aldon L. 33, 34, 48, 56, 67, 76, 86, 93, 94, 102, 112, 123, 136, 140, 153, 158, 202, 214, 242, 303, 304, 311, 353, 365, 397, 451, 454, 497, 552
Nolan, Pat 860
Norman, Peter 467, 472, 709
Norris, Chuck 77, 84
Norton, John 88, 90, 475, 488, 514, 520, 543, 710
Notley, Alice 181, 185, 242, 258
O'Hara, Frank 696, 721, 757, 945
Olsen, Lance 693
Olson, Charles 164, 268
Olson, Kirby 33, 34, 73, 108, 148, 154, 181, 205, 229, 479, 544, 555
Ong, Walter 392, 396
Oppen, George 322, 491
Oppenheimer, Joel 629
Orange, Thomas M. 47, 55, 692, 736, 836
Orwell, George 711
Pacific, Asian 19, 538
Padgett, Ron 354, 394, 478, 501, 920
Palmer, Michael 242, 747, 920
Parish, Jefferson 455
Park, Louis 284, 292, 294, 295
Patchen, Kenneth 757
Patterson, Ian 81, 89, 108
Paulenich, Craig 487
Pearson, Ted 269, 693
Peirce, Kathleen 931
Perelman, Bob 61, 639, 734, 751, 766, 788, 808, 838, 844, 853, 855
Perkins, Stephen 455
Perry, David 316
Pessoa, Fernando 207
Phillips, Beth 884
Pines, Paul 284, 292, 294, 295
Piombino, Nick 52, 246, 247, 255, 282, 308, 331, 345, 347, 380, 383, 395, 418, 734, 766, 788, 803, 808, 832, 834, 838, 844, 853, 920, 924
Plath, Sylvia 777
Pollack, Jackson 766, 803, 808, 838, 844, 853
Porter, Anne 514, 520, 527
Pound, Ezra 61, 73, 108, 112, 123, 124, 133, 136, 148, 153, 157, 181, 205, 215, 479, 559, 695, 700, 720, 724, 727, 768, 770
Pound, Scott 723
Powell, Douglas 307, 316
Presjnar, Mark 39, 40, 45
Prevallet, Kristen 54, 198, 248
Price, Larry 441, 561
Price, Michael 73
Prince, Richard 72, 938
Pritchett, Patrick 39, 40, 45, 49, 59, 91, 95, 97, 99, 126, 135, 218, 237, 249, 352, 361, 415, 439, 729, 775, 806, 813, 814, 841, 842, 843, 879, 902, 918, 920
Pynchon, Thomas 242
Quasha, George 487
Quasha, Susan 845, 857, 876
Quixote, Don 450
Rakosi, Carl 322
Randall, Karen 557
Rasula, Jed 487
Ratcliffe, Stephen 284, 292, 294, 295, 419
Raven, Francis 61
Raworth, Tom 538
Reagan, Nancy 25
Reed, Pat 219, 307, 386, 411
Reese, Marshall 77, 84
Rehm, Pam 246
Reilly, Evelyn 77, 84

Retallack, Joan 104, 242, 747, 920
Revell, Donald 166, 186
Reyes, Louis 7, 61
Ribot, Marc 284, 292, 294, 295
Rich, Adrienne 61, 85
Richards, Brian 284, 292, 294, 295
Richter, Karl 77, 84
Ridge, Cedar 221
Riding, Laura 44
Riley, Denise 221, 242, 538
Rilke, Rainer Maria 437, 553
Robertson, Lisa 77, 84, 242
Robinson, Elizabeth 73, 89, 386, 411
Robinson, Kit 419, 491, 557
Rogers, Jennifer 77, 84
Ronk, Martha 284, 292, 294, 295
Roosevelt, Franklin 339, 355, 361, 370
Rose, Charlie 787
Rosenberg, Jim 2, 338, 350, 352, 357, 362
Rosenthal, Chuck 59
Ross, Andrew 242
Rotenberg, Tina 307, 386, 411
Rothenberg, Jerome 693, 936
Rothschild, Douglas 51, 357, 441
Roy, Camille 228, 231, 557
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 557
Salmon, Dan 235, 246, 288, 784
Samuels, Lisa 491
Sanchez, Jorge 83, 105
Sanders, Jay 929, 942
Sappho 190, 868
Sartre, Paul 549, 756
Scalapino, Leslie 104, 188, 242, 307, 419, 487, 557, 693, 832
Schelling, Andrew 487
Schneider, Dan 557
Schneider, Laurie 311, 353, 365
Schulman, Sarah 874
Schultz, Lou 242, 557
Schultz, Susan M. 844, 853
Schuyler, James 124, 262
Schwartz, Jerry 242, 557
Schwartz, Leonard 247, 258, 259
Schwitters, Kurt 514
Selby, Spencer 307
Selland, Eric 557
Shakespeare, William 344, 502, 504, 506, 731
Shapiro, David 440, 447, 852
Shaw, Lytle 419, 557
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 77, 84
Sherlock, Frank 149, 201, 225, 284, 292, 294, 295
Sherman, Cindy 77, 84, 221
Sherry, James 441, 734, 898
Sherwood, Ken 81, 89, 108, 285, 286, 511
Shoemaker, Steve 227, 322
Shurin, Aaron 419, 496, 557
Silliman, Ron 24, 25, 200, 210, 229, 420, 470, 494, 579, 629, 639, 644, 645, 646, 661, 693, 844, 845, 850, 853, 877, 939
Sillman, Ron 5, 7
Simon, Ann 419, 557
Simon, Greg 52, 77, 84, 181, 246, 247, 255, 282, 308, 331, 345, 347, 380, 383, 395, 418, 711, 734, 766, 788, 803, 808, 832, 834, 838, 844, 853, 920, 924
Simone, Frank 73, 204, 208, 213
Simpson, Bennett 610
Simpson, Louis 415, 421
Sloan, Margaret 307
Smith, Charles 73, 108, 538
Smith, Dale 499, 521, 630
Smith, Harry 2, 73, 77, 84, 652
Smith, Rod 441, 920
Snyder, Gary 487, 556
Snyder, Rick 945
Solomon, Carl 908
Spahr, Boyd 625
Spahr, Juliana 10, 46, 104, 440, 441, 447
Spandrift, Jack 130, 209, 500, 532, 540, 551, 729, 886, 893, 947
Sparrow, John 860, 905
Spender, Stephen 23, 44
Spicer, Jack 198
Spicer, John 478, 861, 863, 867
Stanford, Frank 162
Stanley, Jared 77, 84, 242, 711
Starr, Ron 77, 84
Stein, Chuck 487
Stein, Gertrude 69, 166, 186, 187, 194, 206, 212, 216, 574, 710, 711
Stevens, Wallace 632, 647, 650, 660, 662, 682, 731, 732, 735, 744, 747, 778, 780, 781, 791, 793, 800, 802, 804, 807, 811, 818, 830, 872, 873, 887, 933, 951
Stevenson, Matt 297, 333
Stewart, Jon 215
Straub, Peter 693
Sullivan, Gary 903
Swensen, Cole 884, 916
Talarico, Ross 61, 269
Taussig, Michael 61, 85
Taylor, Elizabeth 514, 527
Taylor, James 19
Taylor, Tom 77, 84, 520
Templeton, Fiona 171, 242, 693
Terry, Philip 77, 84, 316, 474
Texas, Irving 61, 77, 84, 590
Thomas, Dylan 77, 84, 221, 256, 297, 333, 376, 413, 629, 841, 920
Toscano, Rodrigo 557
Townsend, Cheryl 201, 225, 945
Trevor, Jesse 384, 496
Tuttle, Bill 46

Tuttle, Richard 104
Tyler, Richard 699
Tzara, Tristan 458, 461, 700
Upton, Lawrence 171, 180
Valery, Paul 729, 826
Vangelisti, Paul 284, 292, 294, 295
Vermont, Charlie 77, 84
Veronica, Angela 77, 84
Virgil 19, 125, 415, 421, 423, 425, 467, 471, 544, 555
Vitiello, Chris 242
Wagner, Catherine 221
Waldman, Anne 51, 487, 597, 627
Waldman, Ken 181, 185
Waldrop, Rosemary 242, 258, 388, 747
Waldrop, Rosmarie 104, 242
Walker, Kara 449, 470
Walker, Laura 19, 449, 470
Warhol, Andy 787
Warner, Jim 77, 84
Warren, Kenneth 284, 292, 294, 295
Warsh, Lewis 246, 252, 561
Washington, George 35, 61, 77, 84, 221, 380, 395, 424, 434, 443, 542, 614, 622, 627, 699, 761, 920
Watson, Scott 77, 84
Watten, Barry 242, 597, 627, 920
Watts, Charles 73, 181
Weaver, Rebecca 61
Weber, Damian 77, 84
Weiner, Lawrence 693
Weiss, Jason 77, 84
Wesling, Donald 309, 341
Whalen, Philip 124, 487
Wharton, Samuel 449, 470
Whitman, Walt 61, 181, 205, 296, 297, 326, 328, 335, 635
Wieners, John 10
Wilbur, Richard 472
Wilk, David 597, 627, 644
Williams, Jonathan 108, 629
Williams, Paul O. 77, 84, 108, 162, 181, 710, 945
Williamson, Lindz 77, 84
Willis, Bruce 412, 514, 520, 527
Willis, Elizabeth 46, 104, 269, 455
Wilson, Colin 164
Wilson, Pete 451
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 576, 641, 648, 731, 759, 778, 791, 800, 802, 805, 807, 811, 818, 824, 827, 830, 856, 887, 899
Wojnarowicz, David 80
Woodall, Steve 944
Woolf, Virginia 195, 262, 297, 333, 606, 608
Wordsworth, William 296, 303, 744, 747
Wright, C. D. 10
Wyatt, Thomas 47, 50, 55, 152, 166, 167, 820, 822, 828, 829, 842
Yamanaka, Ann 113, 121
Yasinski, Nick 61
Zanzotto, Andrea 242
Zukofsky, Louis 73, 81, 89, 108, 148, 181, 491, 574, 710, 763
Zweig, Janet 104
Zwicky, Jan 759

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 62, 112, 123, 136, 153, 190, 316, 329, 358, 406, 501, 839, 843, 905
Aesthetics 7, 61, 85, 97, 302, 315, 485, 502, 504, 527, 546, 595, 602, 627, 630, 645, 646, 654, 660, 670, 697, 710, 745, 794, 796, 874, 945
African American poetry 85
Anthologies 59, 61, 74, 144, 150, 153, 165, 198, 242, 313, 331, 345, 383, 390, 392, 396, 408, 488, 535, 539, 546, 551, 621, 645, 709, 710, 898, 945
Appropriation 8, 57, 77, 84, 85, 103, 105, 190, 219, 271, 399, 418, 434, 449, 455, 483, 484, 485, 504, 752, 773, 782, 848
Archives and libraries 46, 63, 65, 104, 196, 198, 230, 233, 236, 244, 248, 254, 260, 307, 318, 336, 346, 444, 452, 470, 527, 538, 597, 608, 650, 651, 690, 694, 707, 713, 746, 810, 858, 860, 862, 888, 891, 893, 916, 925, 944
Asian American poetry 895
Autobiography 61, 249, 277, 415, 557, 888, 892
Avant-garde 1, 61, 85, 86, 269, 514, 741, 742, 757, 771, 788
Beat generation 54, 198, 945
Beauty 61, 95, 106, 180, 217, 729, 741, 742, 869, 890
Biography 23, 27, 44, 54, 83, 141, 198, 211, 440, 447, 454
Black Mountain 296
Book announcements 7, 134, 247, 256, 273, 279, 318, 527, 583, 625, 629, 693, 818, 824, 827, 830
Bookstores 52, 379, 565, 600, 622, 790, 792, 795, 823, 884
Calls for submissions 17, 545
Capitalism 12, 61, 697, 710, 718, 719, 752
Censorship 4, 8, 36, 406, 491, 585, 587, 699
Cities 219, 261, 380, 395, 424, 434, 443, 461, 571, 621, 623, 627
Class 147
Close reading 61
Collage and montage 135, 342, 759, 897, 900, 901, 904
Conferences and festivals 1, 2, 7, 13, 19, 21, 25, 61, 69, 75, 83, 85, 86, 89, 98, 103, 105, 138, 139, 147, 201, 215, 225, 269, 373, 383, 401, 414, 416, 426, 445, 491, 557,

567, 609, 629, 652, 673, 936
Copyright and permissions 253, 407, 514, 650, 792, 940
Craft 314, 377, 381, 383, 389, 393, 488, 511, 654, 763
Creative writing pedagogy 2, 242, 377
Dada 297, 335, 757
Deconstruction 316, 709
Difficulty 59, 142, 499, 521, 563, 573, 630, 689, 699, 706, 711, 731, 752, 758, 813, 814, 815, 828, 867, 869, 880, 883
Dreams 106, 153, 164, 180, 185, 234, 261, 297, 334, 335, 364, 396, 556, 589, 595, 872, 892, 929, 942, 945
Ecology and ecopoetics 760, 939, 940, 941, 945
Editing 2, 56, 57, 58, 256, 279, 384, 545, 567, 599, 611, 613, 647, 654, 660, 688, 691, 710, 789, 925, 945
Electronic poetry and hypertext 2, 73, 83, 198, 211, 219, 222, 244, 307, 317, 318, 322, 323, 331, 345, 346, 364, 376, 386, 411, 414, 545, 556, 557, 560, 565, 583, 617, 642, 654, 673, 676, 677, 678, 680, 693, 704, 705, 713, 714, 776, 889, 945
Elegy 51, 143
Empire and imperialism 291, 641, 648, 653, 726, 730, 775, 789
Epic 73, 81, 89, 108, 110, 120, 122, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 130, 131, 133, 135, 137, 140, 141, 143, 146, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 164, 165, 166, 167, 169, 170, 172, 173, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 193, 195, 199, 201, 202, 204, 205, 207, 208, 209, 210, 212, 213, 214, 216, 217, 218, 220, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 243, 249, 250, 271, 277, 415, 421, 422, 423, 425, 448, 450, 453, 454, 455, 467, 471, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 490, 492, 502, 504, 506, 530, 532, 540, 544, 555, 558, 569, 575, 578, 581, 582, 584, 585, 586, 587, 589, 617, 642, 654, 675, 698, 714, 715, 725, 738, 868, 893
Epistemology 167, 364, 659
Erasure 75
Ethics 269, 489, 590, 609, 631, 636, 646, 660, 687, 772, 878, 940
Experimental poetry 64, 119, 316, 331, 345, 347, 380, 395, 649, 726
Fascism 498, 503, 515, 752
Feminism 1, 61, 85, 269, 474, 554
Film 2, 46, 104, 186, 192, 256, 390, 412, 424, 434, 443, 464, 532, 540, 557, 752, 756, 806
Fluxus 458, 461
Formalism 61, 74, 79, 82, 627, 892, 945
Free verse 888, 892
Gender 61, 494, 579, 649, 650
Globalization 242, 782
Grants and funding 77, 84, 192, 409, 527, 546, 591, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 602, 605, 606, 608, 611, 613, 614, 616, 618, 621, 622, 625, 627, 628, 644, 645, 646, 649, 650, 654, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 664, 667, 670, 671, 672, 674, 694, 697, 707, 711, 724, 726, 745, 746, 758, 762, 789, 810, 856, 859, 890, 909, 920, 946, 949
Haiku 190, 227, 945
Hermeneutics 699
Humour and satire 32, 61, 80, 83, 118, 242, 256, 409, 412, 450, 667, 699, 844, 853
Identity politics 61, 220
Ideology 25, 61, 69, 126, 344, 405, 483, 484, 485, 539, 546, 552, 563, 573, 577, 699, 709, 724, 726, 752, 826
Imagism 152, 166, 167, 888, 922
Improvisation 102, 133, 544, 555, 655
Indigenous and Native poetics 176, 177, 226
Interviews 171, 198, 256, 322, 406, 545, 693, 786, 787, 801
Israel and Palestine 4, 5, 6, 7, 19, 44, 72, 88, 95, 127, 131, 177, 178, 186, 188, 190, 199, 201, 224, 225, 231, 238, 240, 286, 301, 325, 326, 328, 367, 371, 375, 382, 390, 405, 412, 413, 446, 453, 454, 503, 505, 506, 528, 530, 542, 543, 553, 582, 594, 618, 622, 625, 640, 656, 688, 723, 733, 735, 741, 742, 744, 747, 748, 762, 777, 784, 805, 859, 864, 878, 885, 889, 892, 900, 905, 911, 927, 928, 938, 943, 949
Jewish poetics 138, 139, 147, 257, 263, 559, 603, 696, 721, 762
Language poetry 2, 25, 166, 186, 242, 322, 354, 390, 394, 470, 473, 474, 487, 491, 597, 627, 710, 726, 747, 766, 769, 788, 844, 853, 945
Latino and Latin American poetry 52, 92, 96
Letters and correspondence 85, 138, 139, 180, 198, 609, 794, 796, 810, 878
List moderation 2, 7, 85, 567, 922
Little magazines 59, 83, 104, 219, 248, 253, 256, 260, 316, 331, 345, 375, 383, 414, 437, 491, 539, 545, 546, 547, 567, 574, 602, 609, 616, 630, 631, 650, 651, 654, 663, 668, 673, 690, 692, 699, 784, 786, 848, 858, 862, 905, 925, 930
Lyric poetry 25, 37, 46, 47, 120, 151, 152, 158, 159, 165, 166, 167, 185, 199, 217, 218, 223, 237, 311, 313, 322, 344, 347, 365, 380, 387, 389, 395, 398, 445, 471, 479, 487, 490, 491, 511, 562, 570, 578, 888, 892

Marxism 83, 86, 521, 549, 563, 573, 630, 696, 699, 709, 721, 747
Materiality of the text 69, 265, 266
Memory 4, 15, 46, 61, 75, 102, 104, 129, 132, 145, 164, 165, 166, 186, 213, 231, 250, 267, 311, 353, 365, 390, 455, 549, 735, 791, 800, 802, 805, 807, 811, 818, 821, 841, 888, 889
MFA programs 19, 310, 323, 331, 345, 372, 387, 389, 393, 400, 402, 496, 497, 546, 593, 594, 609, 631, 654, 668, 741, 742, 909
Modernism 26, 52, 73, 85, 106, 120, 229, 257, 263, 474, 475, 488, 509, 514, 520, 525, 527, 529, 537, 539, 543, 546, 551, 553, 574, 601, 699, 710, 752, 778, 830, 888, 892, 898
Mourning and loss 2, 83, 119, 165, 182, 269, 481, 645, 661, 693, 936
Multiculturalism 61, 633, 638, 643
Music and poetry 19, 61, 73, 80, 81, 89, 102, 103, 105, 108, 132, 141, 151, 152, 157, 166, 167, 168, 181, 190, 201, 203, 205, 225, 226, 256, 286, 290, 301, 313, 325, 386, 390, 405, 409, 411, 412, 431, 437, 445, 466, 492, 503, 511, 525, 540, 558, 562, 565, 570, 601, 610, 620, 624, 697, 722, 734, 741, 742, 745, 748, 756, 757, 763, 770, 775, 793, 801, 804, 806, 838, 844, 853, 878
Nationalism 504, 708, 737
Nature 61, 69, 141, 219, 231, 337, 348, 389, 485, 502, 504, 527, 544, 555, 594, 604, 650, 651, 690, 805
New Formalism 61, 74, 79, 627, 892
New York School 920
Obituary and memorial 101, 757
Objectivism 269, 710
Ontology 364, 392, 396, 856, 887, 899
Oulipo 284, 292, 294, 295
Performance and the poetry reading 19, 168, 279, 307, 316, 319, 320, 321, 324, 343, 349, 514, 527, 560, 561, 623, 629, 921, 924, 945
Phenomenology 265, 266
Philosophy 2, 52, 69, 157, 160, 178, 185, 190, 382, 431, 444, 481, 499, 521, 557, 566, 567, 576, 585, 587, 617, 630, 642, 689, 696, 699, 706, 709, 711, 713, 721, 726, 729, 730, 731, 732, 735, 741, 742, 744, 747, 748, 750, 752, 753, 759, 760, 762, 763, 775, 793, 804, 818, 821, 826, 841, 843, 844, 853, 856, 919
Place and region 219, 599, 613, 621, 735
Poet laureate 62, 645
Poetics 2, 16, 39, 40, 45, 46, 50, 54, 55, 61, 78, 96, 104, 119, 126, 131, 135, 142, 147, 192, 198, 215, 218, 237, 242, 251, 253, 267, 268, 274, 276, 279, 284, 288, 292, 294, 295, 299, 302, 318, 337, 346, 361, 382, 383, 414, 416, 426, 439, 445, 449, 487, 514, 515, 530, 543, 545, 555, 558, 567, 568, 571, 575, 588, 593, 594, 623, 629, 630, 632, 655, 690, 693, 697, 699, 710, 713, 723, 725, 726, 729, 762, 763, 775, 782, 794, 796, 836, 841, 842, 844, 853, 856, 875, 889, 921, 924, 937
Poets Against the War 625
Politics and poetry 7, 11, 14, 20, 28, 61, 62
Post-structuralism 69, 83, 159, 242, 322, 426
Postmodernism 26, 52, 85, 475, 488, 509, 514, 520, 527, 529, 539, 543, 546, 551, 553, 699, 778, 830, 888
Print vs. digital 17, 46, 63, 65, 104, 111, 113, 121, 190, 198, 210, 250, 265, 266, 268, 279, 285, 297, 311, 318, 332, 365, 383, 449, 451, 474, 494, 504, 506, 508, 531, 538, 539, 546, 579, 590, 592, 600, 629, 644, 645, 649, 660, 661, 664, 687, 710, 713, 757, 790, 792, 795, 844, 845, 846, 853, 857, 867, 876, 929, 934, 937, 938, 942, 944
Prizes and awards 15, 111, 113, 121, 163, 253, 312, 331, 345, 348, 366, 371, 406, 470, 475, 489, 514, 520, 527, 538, 539, 543, 546, 549, 551, 557, 567, 596, 597, 598, 602, 604, 606, 627, 635, 637, 645, 646, 654, 659, 660, 664, 668, 670, 672, 681, 685, 689, 693, 694, 697, 699, 706, 708, 710, 711, 712, 726, 737, 745, 790, 794, 795, 862, 867, 878, 885, 889, 909, 916, 933, 939, 941
Procedural and constraint writing 19, 143, 950
Prose poem 557, 843
Prosody and meter 61, 178, 422, 480, 482, 483, 484, 485, 710, 868, 945
Psychoanalysis 392, 396
Queer poetics 85, 221, 442, 757, 786
Race and poetry 61, 316, 337, 406, 415, 421, 432, 434, 439, 449, 451, 452, 458, 463, 470, 485, 502, 504, 649, 764, 768, 783
Reading announcements 113, 210, 252, 419, 556, 569, 575
Religion and the sacred 25, 52, 73, 77, 84, 125, 164, 175, 221, 247, 265, 266, 487, 506, 595, 675, 715, 774, 775, 806, 830, 868, 886
Representation 61, 320, 395, 432, 752, 772, 782, 809, 839
Reviewing and criticism 2, 10, 23, 30, 44, 53, 80, 147, 161, 170, 195, 215, 253, 257, 316, 362, 376, 499, 521, 533, 536, 545, 618, 622, 630, 645, 649, 650, 654, 659, 660, 676, 690, 691, 699, 704, 705, 707, 709, 711, 717, 721, 723, 729, 745, 756, 757, 777, 784, 786, 787, 792, 803, 808, 813,

814, 821, 826, 838, 841, 844, 853, 855, 879, 888, 892, 896, 926, 939, 944, 945, 946
Revision 63, 65, 559, 813, 814
Romanticism 414, 426, 483, 485, 491, 502, 504, 699, 744, 747, 830
Science 26, 157, 194, 566, 575, 699, 740, 796, 827, 830, 843, 945
Semiotics 364, 655, 699
Serial poem 108, 122, 125, 126, 133, 141, 178, 180, 181, 183, 215, 557, 826, 946
Small press publishing 17, 53, 73, 100, 162, 198, 253, 257, 260, 263, 284, 292, 294, 295, 307, 316, 349, 406, 583, 621, 644, 645, 649, 661, 668, 697, 865, 874, 891, 898, 912, 945
Software and code 2, 16, 19, 253, 337, 364, 401, 402, 639, 651, 693, 792, 948
Sonnet 30, 90, 120, 133, 152, 166, 167, 215, 253, 268, 580, 600, 707
Sound poetry 7, 61, 62, 85
Structuralism 69, 83, 159, 242, 322, 426, 699
Subjectivity 4, 75, 265, 266, 309, 311, 341, 353, 365, 383, 443, 485, 502, 504, 525, 599, 613, 884, 920
Sublime 73, 277, 311, 365, 499, 521, 630, 689, 699, 706, 711, 827, 830
Surrealism 65, 257, 263, 538, 574, 920, 945
The academy 2, 5, 10, 16, 18, 39, 40, 45, 52, 53, 63, 65, 77, 83, 84, 86, 111, 113, 121, 147, 168, 204, 207, 210, 213, 215, 221, 242, 248, 254, 260, 271, 309, 327, 341, 344, 360, 388, 393, 397, 398, 401, 406, 416, 432, 444, 445, 464, 478, 490, 499, 517, 518, 519, 521, 522, 523, 525, 527, 545, 567, 589, 595, 596, 597, 602, 606, 608, 609, 622, 627, 630, 632, 647, 650, 651, 654, 657, 660, 662, 673, 677, 678, 680, 682, 685, 686, 687, 689, 690, 694, 697, 699, 705, 706, 707, 711, 713, 726, 729, 730, 731, 732, 740, 744, 745, 746, 758, 759, 762, 772, 775, 778, 780, 781, 791, 793, 800, 802, 804, 807, 809, 810, 811, 813, 814, 815, 817, 818, 830, 839, 844, 848, 853, 856, 858, 860, 862, 872, 873, 879, 880, 882, 887, 888, 891, 895, 916, 925, 933, 934, 936, 939, 944, 946, 951
The body 73, 109, 265, 266, 296, 297, 335, 364, 569, 575
The canon 242, 485, 502, 504, 699, 757
The Holocaust 61, 83, 147, 545, 740
The internet 2, 253, 256, 273, 329, 337, 362, 528, 542, 545, 618, 622, 699, 840, 858, 862, 873, 886, 929, 942, 945
The line 191, 222, 693, 745, 892
The listserv 2, 16, 17, 23, 39, 40, 45, 46, 54, 56, 57, 58, 62, 73, 91, 95, 97, 99, 100, 114, 169, 196, 198, 210, 230, 233, 236, 242, 244, 248, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 271, 279, 298, 318, 319, 336, 365, 385, 390, 464, 468, 491, 494, 500, 506, 514, 567, 575, 579, 580, 581, 584, 585, 586, 587, 600, 613, 617, 623, 629, 642, 644, 649, 655, 661, 679, 696, 721, 723, 724, 725, 726, 745, 767, 781, 782, 783, 788, 789, 808, 838, 839, 844, 853, 863, 868, 889, 924, 926
The New Sentence 752
Theatre 2, 19, 25, 44, 74, 106, 161, 168, 170, 180, 192, 198, 209, 228, 231, 246, 313, 365, 556, 565, 752, 763, 776
Translation 46, 47, 103, 105, 157, 179, 190, 193, 195, 213, 227, 242, 248, 253, 258, 309, 341, 388, 454, 467, 501, 506, 528, 549, 560, 563, 565, 573, 590, 625, 687, 697, 710, 715, 718, 719, 740, 758, 761, 772, 822, 828, 842, 859, 904, 917, 928, 939
Visual and concrete poetry 538, 622
Visual art 129, 130, 132, 135, 145, 186, 192, 203, 247, 258, 267, 284, 292, 294, 295, 324, 343, 393, 435, 470, 473, 538, 608, 614, 620, 622, 627, 628, 664, 667, 756, 760, 894, 944
Voice 322, 344
Women's writing 61, 185, 609

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 951 in all.

26 APR 1997

1. IMBURGIA — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

30 APR 1997

2. John Cayley — Partial Review of Hypertext '97 -- long post

1 MAY 1997

3. George Bowering — Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me
4. David Israel — topsy-turvy
5. David Israel — six
6. David Israel — six questions on alterity
7. Maria Damon — conf
8. Maria Damon — Re: AG's Re-censored Howl
9. Jordan Davis — Galaxy Craze & Bruce Morrow @ Poetry City
10. Jordan Davis — Rain Taxi Vol. 2 No. 2
11. Daniel Bouchard — Re: conf
12. Jordan Davis — Re: Rain Taxi Vol. 2 No. 2
13. Amittai F. Aviram — The PPS Conference
14. Maria Damon — Re: conf
15. cris cheek — uk election
16. Tom Mandel — the Caucus Conversation
17. Peter Jaeger — new from fi & call for submissions (fwd)
18. Tom Mandel — altera-tea
19. armand schwerner — DRAGON BOND RITE
20. Joseph Lease — Re: conf
21. Burt Kimmelman — Re: The PPS Conference
22. Mark Prejsnar — Re: the Caucus Conversation
23. Joe Safdie — Re: Rational Meaning is now out
24. Jordan Davis — further individual complications
25. henry gould — Re: further individual complications
26. henry — individuwobbles
27. Brian McHale — Re: Rational Meaning is now out
28. charssmith — Re: conf
29. Jordan Davis — Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
30. Henry Gould — Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
31. Jordan Davis — Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
32. henry — Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
33. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: individuwobblies
34. henry — Re: individuwobblies
35. George Bowering — Re: six
36. George Bowering — Re: AG's Re-censored Howl
37. Joseph Lease — Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
38. henry gould — Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
39. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Talismanic virtues
40. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Talismanic virtues
41. Wystan Curnow — Re: NYC Reading
42. cris cheek — uk election news
43. cris cheek — Re: uk election news

2 MAY 1997

44. David Israel — Re: Rational Meaning is now out
45. Maria Damon — Re: LIBARARIAN virtues
46. Jordan Davis — psalmody

47. Thomas M. Orange — Auden, Resuscitated Sidnean Psalms
48. Aldon L. Nielsen — Lew Daly Essay
49. Pritchett,Pat — Re: psalmody
50. Jordan Davis — Sidneian
51. Jordan Davis — Godfrey playlist
52. David Benedetti — Re: Books & Co.
53. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Books & Co.
54. Poetics List — Please post this to the list

3 MAY 1997

55. Thomas M. Orange — wyatt, our villon...
56. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Please post this to the list
57. Maria Damon — Re: Please post this to the list/beat women
58. robert drake — Re: Please post this to the list/beat women
59. Pritchett,Pat — Re: adieu, Corpse!
60. linda v. russo — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
61. Amittai F. Aviram — More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
62. Maria Damon — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
63. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Help! History of the Voice Query
64. Peter Ganick — announce POTEPOETZINE
65. Stephen Cope — Re: Help! History of the Voice Query

4 MAY 1997

66. Jordan Davis — Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
67. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
68. Maria Damon — Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
69. Michael Magee — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
70. Gwyn McVay — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
71. Maria Damon — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
72. David R. Israel — in other sports: Kasparov outwits cyberbrain 73. Steve Carll — Mayday! Mayday! (and the day after)
74. henry gould — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
75. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Re; More on the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference
76. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: con-text
77. manny savopoulos — SAVE NPR (petition

5 MAY 1997

78. aerialedge — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
79. Bob Grotjohn — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
80. Rob Hardin — Lou Stathis, RIP 5/4/97
81. Kenneth W Sherwood — Ronald Johnson
82. Gwyn McVay — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
83. Amittai F. Aviram — Re; More on the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference
84. Mark Prejsnar — Re: SAVE NPR (petition
85. Brian McHale — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
86. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: con-text
87. henry — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
88. David Israel — Re: Question about Gwendolyn Brooks
89. Laura Moriarty — Ronald Johnson and the Speculative
90. Bob Grotjohn — Question about Gwendolyn Brooks
91. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Speculative/Wonder
92. Sylvester Pollet — Re: rich text
93. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: con-text
94. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Speculative/Wonder
95. David Israel — Re: Speculative/Wonder
96. Blair Seagram — rich text

97. Laura Moriarty — Re: Speculative/Wonder
98. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: Speculative/Wonder
99. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Speculative/Wonder
100. Steven Marks — alterior plugs
101. orpheus — GINSBERG READING UPDATE
102. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris . . . more more
103. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
104. Jena Osman — lab-book

6 MAY 1997

105. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
106. henry gould — negative capability
107. Mark Baker — Which Rabbi
108. charssmith — Re: Ronald Johnson
109. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — breathing into the body
110. Michael Boughn — Re: Ronald Johnson
111. sschu30844 — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
112. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
113. Mark Weiss — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
114. Christopher Alexander — n/formation
115. sschu30844 — poetry and prose
116. nuyopoman — Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
117. Christopher Alexander — Re: alterior plugs

7 MAY 1997

118. Mark Weiss — Re: poetry and prose
119. Loss Glazier — (no subject)
120. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Ronald Johnson
121. Mark Prejsnar — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
122. henry gould — epic/narrative
123. Maria Damon — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
124. Jordan Davis — Re: epic/narrative
125. Mark Weiss — Re: epic/narrative
126. Pritchett,Pat — Re: epic/narrative
127. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
128. E. Gottlieb — Re: epic/narrative
129. Christine Palma — Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
130. hen — Re: epic/narrative
131. Pritchett,Pat — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
132. Michael Magee — Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
133. Michael Boughn — Re: epic/narrative
134. Mark Prejsnar — Misc. Proj. 2
135. Pritchett,Pat — Re: epic/narrative
136. Stephen Cope — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
137. DS — Re: epic/narrative
138. Amittai F. Aviram — Irena Klepfisz, anybody?
139. Maria Damon — Re: Irena Klepfisz, anybody?
140. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
141. Kenneth W Sherwood — R Johnson (fwd)

8 MAY 1997

142. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Poetics/Writing/Performativity
143. Pierre Joris — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
144. sschu30844 — Re: poetry and prose
145. Christine Palma — Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
146. Pierre Joris — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
147. Kathleen Crown — Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1997 to 7 May 1997

148. henry — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
149. henry — Re: epic/narrative
150. Mark Prejsnar — Re: epic/narrative
151. henry gould — Re: epic/narrative
152. Mark Prejsnar — Re: epic/narrative
153. Maria Damon — Re: How Public Is the Sphere
154. Michael Boughn — Re: epic/narrative
155. Jordan Davis — rules and ways of knowing
156. Brent Long — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
157. Sylvester Pollet — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
158. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: epic/narrative
159. henry — Re: epic/narrative
160. henry — Re: epic/narrative
161. Jordan Davis — gubbinal in Venezuela?
162. Brent Long — New Small Press
163. Jordan Davis — Letter 22
164. Michael Boughn — epic and narrative
165. Joseph Lease — Re: epic/narrative
166. Joseph Lease — Re: epic/narrative
167. Joseph Lease — Re: epic/narrative
168. Kristin Gallagher — Re: Poetry Radio!
169. Daniel Tessitore — Re: epic/narrative
170. henrywrt — Re: gubbinal in Venezuela?
171. Jethro Cadbury — advert
172. CHRIS MANN — Re: epic/narrative
173. Gwyn McVay — epic/narrative
174. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Jennifer-URL
175. Joe Safdie — Re: epic/narrative
176. henry gould — Re: epic/narrative
177. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative -Reply
178. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative / Orpheus p.s.
179. Steven Marks — Re: epic/narrative
180. Jethro Cadbury — neg cap and epic
181. charssmith — R Johnson/epic
182. Elizabeth Hatmaker — epic/narrative
183. henry — Re: R Johnson/epic
184. Christopher Alexander — nonce
185. charssmith — Alice Notley
186. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative
187. Jordan Davis — Re: epic/narrative
188. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative
189. Pam Brown — Re: epic/narrative
190. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
191. nuyopoman — Re: How Public is the Sphere
192. Charles Alexander — flood
193. Mark Weiss — Re: R Johnson/epic

9 MAY 1997

194. oren.izenberg — Speaking of Stein
195. Steven Marks — Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
196. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: poetry collections/information please
197. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — How Could You (fwd)
198. Poetics List — erratum to the erratum: Beat Women (fwd)
199. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
200. rsillima — The Narr
201. David Israel — Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass

202. Pierre Joris — Re: epic as epic
203. CHRIS MANN — Re: The Narr
204. Tom Mandel — epic as poem of war
205. Michael Boughn — Re: R Johnson/epic
206. hen — Re: The Narr
207. Tom Mandel — categories
208. hen — Re: epic as poem of war
209. hen — Re: categories
210. Tom Mandel — feathers to iron
211. Maria Damon — Re: erratum to the erratum: Beat Women (fwd)
212. Mark Prejsnar — Re: epic/narrative
213. Tom Mandel — Re: Simone Weil
214. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: epic as epic
215. Douglas Barbour — Re: narrative / non-narrative
216. Joseph Lease — Re: epic/narrative
217. maz881 — Re: epic/lyric
218. Pritchett,Pat — Re: epic redux
219. Steve Carll — A Berkeley reading this time!
220. Jordan Davis — Re: epic/narrative
221. Christopher Alexander — American Airlines Petition
222. Charles Bernstein — LINEbreak in RealAudio
223. Daniel Tessitore — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
224. Daniel Tessitore — Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
225. Daniel Tessitore — Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass
226. Joe Safdie — Re: Orpehus (apologies, a little long)
227. shoemakers — Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass
228. minkacroy — Poets Theatre at New Langton Arts
229. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: The Narr
230. Mark Weiss — poetry collections/information please
231. David Israel — Re: Poets Theatre at New Langton Arts
232. henry — Re: Orpehus (apologies, a little long)
233. Sylvester Pollet — Re: poetry collections/information please
234. henry — Re: The Narr
235. DS — readings...
236. Mark Weiss — Re: poetry collections/information please
237. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
238. David Israel — Re: epic redux
239. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
240. David Israel — Re: epic redux -Reply
241. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux -Reply
242. aerialedge — new L=A=N=G Bk, Waldrop, Watten &&& @ Bridge Street
243. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: epic redux
244. Diane Marie Ward — Re: poetry collections/information please

10 MAY 1997

245. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Collocation of Stars (fwd)
246. Piombino/Simon — Re: readings...
247. Piombino/Simon — Re: readings...
248. Kristin S Prevallet — Re: poetry collections/information please
249. Pritchett,Pat — Re: epic redux
250. Hugh Steinberg — Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
251. nuyopoman — Re: POETICS Digest - 7 May 1997 to 8 May 1997
252. Dan Machlin — Kalleberg/Warsh reading at Segue
253. William Slaughter — Mudlark No. 5

11 MAY 1997

254. henry gould — Re: poetry collections/information please

255. Piombino/Simon — Re: Manhattan Readings
256. John Cayley — (no subject)
257. Maria Damon — Re: walter lowenfels
258. Michael Heller — Talisman House Book Party
259. shemurph — WORDS BEFORE THE ARTICULATE
260. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: poetry collections/information please
261. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — A Quiet Talk in Kyoto
262. Pam Brown — lunch to dinner
263. Joel Lewis — walter lowenfels
264. IMBURGIA — Re: what have I subscribed to?

12 MAY 1997

265. Nicole Markotic — Language Machines...
266. Mark Weiss — Re: Language Machines...
267. Christine Palma — Poetics Listserv Birthdate
268. Michael Boughn — Re: feathers to iron
269. Kathleen Crown — PPS panels
270. Maria Damon — Federman CD
271. Mark Prejsnar — Re: epic redux
272. Chris Stroffolino — WANTED: FORMATTER/PROOFREADER
273. Jordan Davis — New book by Steve Malmude
274. acgold01 — .
275. Daniel Tessitore — what have I subscribed to?
276. acgold01 — Nomail
277. groberts — the Prelude
278. Bob Grumman — Re: poetry ads
279. Charles Bernstein — Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?
280. Rachel Loden — Re: poetry announcements
281. Brent Long — Re: poetry announcements 282. Piombino/Simon — Re: what have I subscribed to?
283. Gwyn McVay — Re: Nomail
284. Christopher Reiner — Publications Received

13 MAY 1997

285. Kenneth W Sherwood — Scrolling toward bookmark.html
286. David Israel — Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html
287. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Boy-Command (fwd)
288. Pam Brown — ads
289. DS — Re: what have I subscribed to?
290. CHRIS MANN — Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html
291. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: poetry announcements
292. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Publications Received
293. Ryan Whyte — 1967 the summer of love/the summer of hate 1997
294. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Publications Received
295. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Publications Received
296. Robert Archambeau — Re: the Prelude
297. orpheus — Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg
298. Mark Prejsnar — Re: poetry announcements
299. maz881 — Re: poetry announcements
300. nuyopoman — Public Sphere -- Boland-Rich
301. Steven Marks — Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html
302. hen — Re: poetry announcements
303. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the Prelude to "Pieces," by Wordsworth
304. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: advertisements for myself
305. Peter Ganick — address change for potes & poets....
306. shoemakers — Re: what have I subscribed to?
307. Steve Carll — Jenny's First Poetry Reading

308. Daniel Tessitore — Re: what have I subscribed to?
309. Daniel Tessitore — Re: the notion of voice
310. Daniel Tessitore — voice
311. Daniel Tessitore — Re: a poem is being beaten
312. Daniel Tessitore — AND THE WINNER IS
313. Daniel Tessitore — Re: a poem is being beaten
314. Daniel Tessitore — Re: the notion of voice
315. Rachel Loden — Re: poetry announcements
316. dbkk — Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
317. Mark Wallace — the notion of voice
318. Herb Levy — Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?
319. Joe Safdie — Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
320. Jordan Davis — Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
321. henry — Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
322. shoemakers — Re: the notion of voice
323. Robert Hale — Re: the notion of voice
324. main — tucson reading
325. David Israel — Re: the notion of voice
326. David Israel — Re: the notion of voice
327. Laura Moriarty — CATALOG ON-LINE
328. David Israel — Re: the notion of voice
329. linda v. russo — (Fwd) FYI Boston Area Folks
330. robert drake — Re: CATALOG ON-LINE
331. Piombino/Simon — Re: the notion of voice
332. orpheus — Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg 1.
333. orpheus — Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg 2.
334. orpheus — Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg3
335. orpheus — Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg4
336. robert drake — Re: poetry collections/information please
337. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Course offering on Net Community, etc. at Naropa - (Alan)
338. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: No prizes
339. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: vernachronism

14 MAY 1997

340. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — yo, jonathan monroe
341. Stephen Cope — Re: the notion of voice
342. orpheus — Re: duplicates of Montage
343. George Bowering — Re: tucson reading
344. henry — Re: the notion of voice
345. Piombino/Simon — Re: the notion of voice
346. Poetics List — Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?
347. Maria Damon — Re: the notion of voice
348. oren.izenberg — Celan
349. maz881 — Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
350. dbkk — No prizes
351. dbkk — Gladman's Clamour
352. Pritchett,Pat — Re: the not so Roseycrution
353. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: a poem is being beaten
354. Daniel Tessitore — Re: padgett/voice
355. Daniel Bouchard — vernachronism
356. Pierre Joris — Re: a poem is being beaten
357. Daniel Bouchard — rosenbergs
358. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — media collective huh?
359. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: vernachronism
360. Laura Moriarty — Re: CATALOG ON-LINE
361. Pritchett,Pat — Re: vernachronism

362. dbkk — Re: No prizes
363. Daniel Bouchard — Re: vernachronism
364. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — body-html
365. Mark Weiss — Re: a poem is being beaten
366. henry — Re: a poem is being beaten
367. David Israel — some threads
368. David Bromige — bowering's lies
369. Mark Weiss — Re: a poem is being beaten
370. Gwyn McVay — Re: vernachronism
371. David Israel — Re: a poem is being beaten
372. henry — Re: a poem is being beaten
373. Christopher Alexander — Re: the notion of voice
374. henry — Re: a poem is being beaten
375. henry — Re: a poem is being beaten
376. Dave Zauhar — Re: the notion of voice
377. amato — Re: the notion of voice
378. Frank Davey — Re: vernachronism
379. George Bowering — Re: bromige's truth
380. Piombino/Simon — Re: the notion of voice
381. Dean Taciuch — Re: the notion of voice
382. David Israel — Re: the notion of voice
383. Piombino/Simon — Re: the notion of voice:advertisements for myslefs

15 MAY 1997

384. Karen and Trevor — No prizes (for this one either)
385. Mark Baker — Re: vernachronism
386. Steve Carll — Drew Gardner Comes Back
387. Thomas Bell — Re: voice
388. orpheus — Celan's "Voice"
389. Hugh Steinberg — Re: voice
390. David Israel — Re: a poem is being beaten / karaoke
391. Susan Wheeler — Sedgwick/VVoice
392. Michael Boughn — Re: the notion of voice
393. henry — Re: voice
394. Jordan Davis — Re: voice
395. Maria Damon — Re: the notion of voice
396. Maria Damon — Re: the notion of voice
397. Douglas Barbour — Re: Aldon L. Nielsen' advertisement
398. Douglas Barbour — Re: workshopped 'voice'?
399. Gwyn McVay — like a fishbone
400. Maria Damon — Re: voice
401. Douglas Barbour — Re: Joe Amato's paper at the Denver conference
402. Dean Taciuch — Re: voice
403. Dean Taciuch — Re: voice
404. Field of Roses — Re: voice (trilafon)
405. michael corbin — Re: voice
406. michael corbin — Re: the notion of no voice
407. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — a weird and fast and interesting golf poem (yes, GOLF!)
408. Joe Safdie — Re: the notion of voice
409. Herb Levy — voice
410. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: voice
411. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Drew Gardner Comes Back
412. David Israel — whose voice?
413. David Israel — the "World Wide Free Press"
414. Pam Brown — "voice"?
415. George Thompson — Re: epic redux

416. Hank Lazer — Re: ALA conference
417. dbkk — Re: "voice"?
418. Piombino/Simon — Re: like a fishbone

16 MAY 1997

419. Travis Andrew Ortiz — Reading in San Francisco
420. rsillima — (no subject)
421. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
422. George Thompson — Re: epic redux
423. hen — Re: epic redux
424. Gwyn McVay — Re: like a fishbone
425. hen — Re: epic redux
426. Maria Damon — Re: "voice"?
427. Maria Damon — Re: like a fishbone
428. Rachel Loden — non-voice not-speaking (importantly)
429. henry — Re: like a fishbone
430. henry — Re: "voice"?
431. Sylvester Pollet — Re: "voice"?
432. Christopher Alexander — affirmative action/where I'm calling from
433. henry — Re: "voice"?
434. oren.izenberg — Re: like a fishbone
435. Daniel Bouchard — Re: like a fishbone
436. CHRIS MANN — Re: "voice"?
437. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: voice
438. Christopher Reiner — Interims
439. Pritchett,Pat — Re: like a fishbone
440. Jordan Davis — "voice" as long division
441. Jordan Davis — SUBPOFEST @ THE EAR 5/17 2:30
442. Christopher Alexander — Re: like a fishbone
443. Mark Weiss — Re: like a fishbone
444. Peter Larkin — Another New Pub
445. Daniel Tessitore — Re: ALA conference
446. David R. Israel — Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
447. henry — Re: "voice" as long division
448. Michael Boughn — epic redux
449. dbkk — (no subject)
450. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: epic redux
451. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
452. Christopher Alexander — Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
453. David Israel — Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
454. David Israel — er pardon moi
455. Joe Safdie — Re: cliches and murder
456. Jordan Davis — what we're talking about
457. Robert Hale — examples of manipulative language-centered writing?
458. Matthias Regan — 3 scents
459. Mark Baker — Re: examples of manipulative language-centered writing?
460. henry gould — Re: 3 scents
461. Mark Weiss — Re: 3 scents
462. Matthias Regan — Re: 3 scents
463. Gwyn McVay — Lowell perfectly OK
464. main — film on rwanda
465. oren.izenberg — Lowell and parking

17 MAY 1997

466. Hugh Steinberg — Re: "voice"?
467. George Thompson — Re: epic redux
468. Thomas Bell — Re: "voice"?

469. Franklin Bruno — (no subject)
470. rsillima — Kara Walker's "voice"
471. George Thompson — Re: epic redux
472. Michael Magee — Re: Lowell perfectly OK
473. dbkk — Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
474. dbkk — Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
475. KENT JOHNSON — dirty postmodernism
476. Daniel Tessitore — Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
477. shoemakers — m&d
478. Tom Mandel — voice
479. henry — Re: epic redux
480. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: epic redux
481. Janet S. Gray — Press for Persian epic?
482. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
483. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
484. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: epic redux
485. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: epic redux

18 MAY 1997

486. DS — Re: voice
487. KENT JOHNSON — Re: voice and...
488. Bob Grumman — Re: dirty postmodernism
489. Gwyn McVay — Things that make you go 'hmm'
490. Tom Mandel — epic cliches
491. Hank Lazer — Re: voice, and
492. CHRIS MANN — Re: epic cliches
493. Maria Damon — Re: "voice"?
494. rsillima — He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices
495. dbkk — Re: "voice"?
496. Karen and Trevor — Re: "voice"?
497. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: "voice"?
498. Maria Damon — Re: "voice"?
499. Hoa Nguyen — (no subject)
500. henry g — Re: He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices
501. Jordan Davis — more of Padgett's voice
502. henry — Re: epic redux
503. David R. Israel — Re: "voice"? / anti-fashion / cliche
504. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux
505. David R. Israel — Re: more of Padgett's voice
506. David R. Israel — Re: epic redux / the Sheik's Pir
507. Stephen Vincent — Re: more of Padgett's voice
508. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: cartoon phrases
509. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: dirty postmodernism

19 MAY 1997

510. Kenneth W Sherwood — oral epithets
511. Kenneth W Sherwood — chops and voice
512. Mark Baker — Re: more of Padgett's voice
513. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — i root ii rise
514. KENT JOHNSON — Re: dirty postmodernism
515. Rachel Loden — fashion victims
516. KENT JOHNSON — v=o=i=c=e
517. Gwyn McVay — Re: cartoon phrases
518. Tom Mandel — cartoon phrases
519. Tom Mandel — metal was a mistake
520. dbkk — Re: dirty postmodernism
521. Maria Damon — (no subject)

522. Maria Damon — Re: cartoon phrases
523. Sylvester Pollet — Re: metal was a mistake
524. Miekal And — Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
525. Douglas Barbour — Re: 'whose' 'voice'?
526. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Re: your mail
527. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: dirty postmodernism
528. David Israel — Re: metal was a mistake
529. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: dirty postmodernism
530. George Thompson — Re: er pardon moi
531. dbkk — Re: cartoon phrases
532. henry — Re: er pardon moi
533. Daniel Tessitore — Re: voice & refrain
534. CHRIS MANN — have you heard?
535. Peter Landers — Metal was a mistake
536. Stephen Vincent — Re: voice & refrain
537. Jordan Davis — Re: 'whose' 'voice'?
538. charssmith — PCBA Bookworks
539. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: dirty postmodernism
540. Peter Zukowski — er . . . pardon moi
541. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
542. David Israel — Re: have you heard?
543. David Israel — Re: dirty postmodernism
544. Michael Boughn — Re: epic redux
545. Poetics List — Announcement Query... (fwd)
546. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: dirty postmodernism
547. michael corbin — Re: your mail
548. michael corbin — Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
549. Matthias Regan — Jameson's prose
550. George Thompson — Re: oral epithets
551. henry — Re: dirty postmodernism
552. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: more "of"
553. David Israel — Re: dirty postmodernism / niche
554. dbkk — Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
555. George Thompson — Re: epic redux

20 MAY 1997

556. Steve Carll — Direct From The Rex
557. Steve Carll — Now They Know How Many Poets...
558. Kenneth W Sherwood — arguing orality
559. Joel Lewis — Re: lowell
560. Steve Carll — Mas Voces
561. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Neg. Cap. (oh providence and the russians)
562. Chris Stroffolino — QUESTIONS
563. Mark Baker — Jameson's Prose
564. Chris Stroffolino — thedeathofthekennethauthorangertrashtalktrashtalk
565. John Cayley — where the sea stands still - ICA May 27th
566. Franklin Bruno — pardon my iteration
567. Poetics List — that ridiculous prize (fwd)
568. Poetics List — the magical incantations of jargon (fwd)
569. Michael Boughn — Re: epic redux
570. Joel Kuszai — Re: QUESTIONS
571. Joel Kuszai — notice subject to change
572. Gwyn McVay — Re: thedeathofthekennethauthorangertrashtalktrashtalk
573. Maria Damon — Re: Jameson's Prose
574. Mark Prejsnar — Re: 'whose' 'voice'?
575. George Thompson — Re: epic redux

576. Matthias Regan — Re: Jameson's Prose
577. aerialedge — Re: Jameson's Prose
578. Pierre Joris — Re: epic redux
579. Daniel Tessitore — Re: He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices 580. Daniel Tessitore — Re: voice & refrain and...
581. Mark Weiss — epic redux/etymology
582. David Israel — Re: epic redux/etymology
583. Mark Wallace — Cydney Chadwick's work
584. George Thompson — Re: epic redux/etymology
585. David Golumbia — Re: epic redux/etymology
586. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux/etymology
587. Mark Weiss — Re: epic redux/etymology
588. Tenney Nathanson — grubby and querulous techno query; quick happy Bromige visit note
589. Joseph Duemer — Re: epic redux/etymology
590. Joseph Zitt — Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
591. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Things that make you go 'hmm'

21 MAY 1997

592. Tom Orange — Jameson's Prose
593. Jocelyn Emerson — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
594. David R. Israel — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
595. Joseph Duemer — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
596. Maria Damon — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
597. Fred Muratori — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
598. Gwyn McVay — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
599. henry gould — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
600. William Burmeister Prod — Re: voice & refrain and...
601. Jordan Davis — sweet virginia / le medecin malgre lui
602. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
603. Joel Lewis — in the news.....
604. Christopher Reiner — Re: "voice"
605. Daniel Tessitore — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
606. dbkk — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
607. Matthias Regan — Re: "voice"
608. Fred Muratori — Writers and Painters
609. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmm-mmhhh
610. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — Re: sweet virginia / le medecin malgre lui
611. henry — Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh
612. dbkk — Re: Writers and Painters
613. Mark Prejsnar — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
614. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON — Re: Writers and Painters
615. maz881 — Tiger Woods
616. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: NEA, Names
617. Steve Carll — Etymological Fallacy
618. Bob Grumman — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
619. Matthias Regan — Re: Writers and Painters
620. Matthias Regan — Re: Writers and Painters
621. Hoa Nguyen — Re: NEA That Goes
622. David Israel — conceptualizing web publication
623. Mark W Scroggins — communities, virtual & subtropical
624. George Bowering — Re: more of Padgett's voice
625. David Israel — China-po & money / Captain of Butterflies
626. CHRIS MANN — Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
627. Herb Levy — Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
628. Herb Levy — Re: Writers and Painters

629. Charles Alexander — broadsides
630. Wystan Curnow — (no subject)
631. Hugh Steinberg — Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh
632. Joseph Duemer — Re: Etymological Fallacy
633. Wystan Curnow — Re: Jameson's Prose
634. Steven Marks — Re: Writers and Painters
635. Gwyn McVay — Clarification
636. Maria Damon — Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh
637. Bob Grumman — Re: Clarification
638. Maria Damon — Re: Jameson's Prose
639. David Bromige — Re-in-er-voice
640. David Israel — Re: Clarification

22 MAY 1997

641. Mark Baker — Re: Jameson's Prose
642. Mark Weiss — Re: Etymological Fallacy
643. Mark Weiss — Re: Jameson's Prose
644. Charles Alexander — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
645. rsillima — NEA, cronyism, etc.
646. henry gould — Re: Clarification
647. Joseph Duemer — Re: Clarification
648. Maria Damon — Re: Jameson's Prose
649. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
650. Joseph Duemer — bias in judging
651. David Kellogg — Re: bias in judging
652. dbkk — "Horror Tape Script"
653. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Jameson's Prose
654. amato — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
655. George Thompson — Re: arguing orality
656. Daniel Tessitore — judges
657. Henry — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
658. CHRIS MANN — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
659. amato — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
660. Joseph Duemer — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
661. Hugh Steinberg — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
662. Joseph Duemer — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
663. Maria Damon — electronic publishing
664. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Clarification
665. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Clarification
666. groberts — Mason & Dixon
667. henry — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
668. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — one successful "contest" model.../
669. Jordan Davis — BOYCOTT CONTESTS WITH READING FEES
670. amato — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
671. henry — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
672. Bob Grumman — Re: Clarification
673. amato — Re: electronic publishing
674. amato — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
675. George Thompson — Re: Etymological Fallacy
676. Miekal And — Re: electronic publishing
677. Miekal And — Re: electronic publishing
678. Maria Damon — Re: electronic publishing
679. Steven Marks — Re: arguing orality
680. amato — Re: electronic publishing
681. Wystan Curnow — Contests, competitions, prizes
682. Joseph Duemer — Re: arguing orality

683. Pam Brown — The Rich
684. Pam Brown — Amended Rich
685. Tom Mandel — Paul Hoover
686. Tom Mandel — Hey, cut that out!
687. Tom Mandel — Tarfon and successors
688. David Israel — how rich
689. rob wilson — Robocop Lives In Christchurch

23 MAY 1997

690. mgk3k — Re: electronic publishing
691. Pam Brown — Re: how rich
692. Thomas M. Orange — electronic publishing
693. Martin J Spinelli — LINEbreak in RealAudio at the EPC
694. Schuchat Simon — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
695. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: bad writing
696. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Jameson contra Jameson
697. jdhollo — who gets the prizes, etc.
698. DS — Atua Wera
699. sschu30844 — Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)
700. orpheus — Re: clarification
701. Susan Wheeler — AWP Fandango
702. henry — Re: Tarfon and successors
703. henry — Re: The Rich
704. Maria Damon — Re: electronic publishing
705. Maria Damon — Re: electronic publishing
706. Maria Damon — Re: Robocop Lives In Christchurch
707. Mark Prejsnar — Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
708. Maria Damon — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)
709. Robert Archambeau — Jameson contra Jameson
710. Peter Landers — Re: who gets the prizes, etc.
711. Daniel Zimmerman — Fwd: Bad Writing
712. Elizabeth Hatmaker — awards
713. amato — shameless self-promotion...
714. Steve Carll — Etymological Fallacy
715. Mark Weiss — Re: Etymological Fallacy
716. Chris Stroffolino — PATHETIC CREATURE (seen on tombstone)
717. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Joel K and Scott P.
718. William Burmeister Prod — Re: who gets the prizes, etc.
719. William Burmeister Prod — Re: who gets the prizes, etc.
720. henry g — Re: bad writing
721. Joe Safdie — Re: Jameson contra Jameson
722. Mark Baker — Pie Barrage
723. David Israel — Re: Joel K and Scott P. -Reply
724. Mark Baker — Re: bad writing
725. Hoa Nguyen — Re: epic redux/etymology
726. henry — Re: bad writing
727. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Re: bad writing
728. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Re: Jameson contra Jameson
729. Pritchett,Pat — Re: bad writing
730. henry — Re: bad writing
731. Joseph Duemer — Re: Jameson, etc
732. Joseph Duemer — Re: bad writing

24 MAY 1997

733. David R. Israel — quote unquote
734. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage
735. David R. Israel — Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?

736. Thomas M. Orange — bad writing
737. John Tranter — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd) ... more
738. George Thompson — Re: epic redux/etymology
739. Ryan Whyte — its survivors
740. amato — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
741. hen — Re: bad writing
742. CHRIS MANN — Re: bad writing
743. Henry Gould — Re: bad writing
744. Joseph Duemer — Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?
745. Tom Mandel — who gets the prizes (wants them)
746. Fred Muratori — Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
747. David R. Israel — Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?
748. David R. Israel — poetry / philosophy
749. henry — Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
750. henry — Re: poetry / philosophy
751. George Bowering — Re: Pie Barrage
752. michael corbin — Re: Sentence(ing) Jameson
753. CHRIS MANN — Re: poetry / philosophy

25 MAY 1997

754. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Linux' Toor of Babel
755. KENT JOHNSON — Gnomonology
756. OrpheEUrydiuce — Fictions of Deleuze (fwd)
757. OrpheEUrydiuce — Re: pole vaulting
758. Douglas Barbour — Re: theory writing & the public weal
759. Douglas Barbour — Re: philosophy & poetry
760. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: philosophy & poetry
761. Andrew John Miller — Misrepresenting Canada (was re: theory writing & the public weal)
762. David R. Israel — (Fwd) Medieval Hebrew Poetry--fellowships
763. henry gould — Re: philosophy & poetry
764. DS — Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)
765. Michael Boughn — Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
766. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage

26 MAY 1997

767. Andrew John Miller — Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)
768. David Bromige — Misrepresenting Canada
769. George Thompson — Re: Pie Barrage
770. David Bromige — Misrepresenting Canada
771. Robert Archambeau — Re: Pie Barrage
772. Douglas Barbour — Re: but who's saying what...
773. Robert Archambeau — Canadian Discontents
774. amato — Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)
775. Pritchett,Pat — Re: bad writing
776. Mark Wallace — three cheers for shameless self-promotion
777. David R. Israel — Re: Misrepresenting Canada / Tony Blair
778. Joseph Duemer — Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?
779. amato — leftist self-promo...
780. Joseph Duemer — Re: shameless self-promotion...
781. Joseph Duemer — Re: shameless self-promotion...
782. Andrew John Miller — Re: Misrepresenting Canada
783. DS — Re: Canadian Discontents
784. David R. Israel — Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments
785. CHRIS MANN — Re: Misrepresenting Canada
786. DS — Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments
787. Steven Marks — Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments
788. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage

789. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
790. Stephen Vincent — Book Contests/AN IDEA
791. Joseph Duemer — wittgenstein & blake
792. Mark Weiss — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

27 MAY 1997

793. Joseph Duemer — Music & poetry
794. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
795. Brent Long — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
796. Mark Weiss — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
797. George Bowering — Re: shameless self-promotion...
798. David Bromige — shameless....
799. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
800. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: wittgenstein & blake
801. henry gould — Re: Pie Barrage
802. CHRIS MANN — Re: wittgenstein & blake
803. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Pie Barrage
804. CHRIS MANN — Re: Music & poetry
805. David R. Israel — Re: wittgenstein & blake
806. hen — Re: bad writing
807. Joseph Duemer — Re: wittgenstein & blake
808. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage
809. Douglas Barbour — Re: western disaffection
810. Fred Muratori — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
811. CHRIS MANN — Re: wittgenstein & blake
812. Jordan Davis — Re: Pie Barrage
813. Daniel Tessitore — Re: bad? writing? reading?
814. Daniel Tessitore — Re: bad? writing? reading?
815. Daniel Tessitore — Re: bad? writing? reading?
816. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
817. David Kellogg — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
818. Laura Moriarty — Re: wittgenstein & blake
819. Joseph Lease — Re: Pie Barrage
820. Matthias Regan — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
821. Henry — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
822. Mark Weiss — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
823. Stephen Vincent — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
824. Matthias Regan — Re: wittgenstein & blake
825. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
826. Matthias Regan — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
827. Laura Moriarty — Re: wittgenstein & blake
828. Matthias Regan — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
829. Mark Weiss — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
830. Joseph Duemer — Re: wittgenstein & blake
831. Mark Baker — Re: Pie Barrage
832. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage

28 MAY 1997

833. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Center for Contemporary Arts, Inc.
834. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage
835. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
836. Thomas M. Orange — bad writing, voice, valery
837. Brent Long — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
838. Mark Prejsnar — Harsh words and marginalizations
839. Mark Prejsnar — North, left, and right of the border
840. Jordan Davis — Re: Pie Barrage
841. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing

842. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
843. Pritchett,Pat — Re: world-egg salad
844. Piombino/Simon — Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
845. Peter Landers — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
846. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
847. amato — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
848. amato — how lists work...
849. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
850. David Bromige — S & M, CHB
851. aerialedge — Re: Pie Barrage
852. Dan Machlin — David Shapiro/Elaine Equi/Star Black
853. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
854. Henry Gould — Re: Pie Barrage
855. sschu30844 — Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
856. Grant Jenkins — Re: wittgenstein & blake
857. Mark Weiss — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
858. Fred Muratori — Why Contests?
859. David Israel — Re: wittgenstein & blake -Reply
860. David Bromige — shoddy production _values_
861. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
862. Mark Weiss — Re: Why Contests?
863. Mark Weiss — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
864. David Israel — Re: Why Contests?
865. Jay Schwartz — SF Writing Scene/ The Idiom Group
866. Mark Weiss — Re: Why Contests?
867. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
868. George Thompson — Re: epic redux/etymology
869. Mark Weiss — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
870. Maria Damon — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
871. Stephen Vincent — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
872. Joseph Duemer — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
873. Joseph Duemer — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
874. dbkk — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

29 MAY 1997

875. Charles Alexander — book forms
876. Peter Landers — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
877. Wystan Curnow — Re: S & M, CHB
878. David Israel — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
879. Douglas Barbour — Re: bad? writing? reading?
880. Henry Gould — Re: bad? writing? reading?
881. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
882. David Kellogg — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
883. henry — Re: bad? writing? reading?
884. Douglas — Re: Book Contests
885. David Israel — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
886. henry gould — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
887. Joseph Duemer — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
888. Fred Muratori — Gettysburg Review
889. Herb Levy — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
890. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
891. Fred Muratori — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
892. David Israel — Gettysburg Review -Reply
893. Henry Gould — Re: Book Contests
894. Markus Foutu — Re: Book Contests
895. Jennifer Ashton — Asian-American poetry

896. HENRY — Re: Gettysburg Review -Reply
897. Gwyn McVay — questions
898. Peter Landers — Re: S & M, CHB
899. George Thompson — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
900. David Israel — Re: questions
901. DS — Re: questions
902. Pritchett,Pat — Re: no man may him hyde
903. David Bromige — how to produce books w/o bellying-up
904. Sylvester Pollet — Re: questions
905. David Israel — Re: questions / sparrow story
906. dbkk — Re: S & M, CHB
907. Peter Ganick — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

30 MAY 1997

908. Steven Marks — another production idea
909. Stephen Vincent — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
910. George Bowering — Re: questions
911. David Israel — (no subject)
912. Miekal And — Re: how to produce books w/o bellying-up
913. MARK LEAHY — Re: WRITING UTENSIL -- HOLDERLIN
914. henry g — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
915. Gwyn McVay — Re: questions
916. Fred Muratori — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
917. George Thompson — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
918. Maria Damon — Re: no man may him hyde
919. Michael Magee — Re: WRITING UTENSIL -- HOLDERLIN
920. Piombino/Simon — Re: Hyde and seek
921. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — the fence-sit and the Po Biz
922. amato — Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
923. David Bromige — Pie Barrage
924. Piombino/Simon — Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
925. Fred Muratori — Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz 926. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Hyde and seek
927. David R. Israel — Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
928. David R. Israel — Re: a writing utensil / Holderlin
929. Peter Landers — Re: book forms
930. Steven Marks — Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
931. Gwyn McVay — AWP/a relief
932. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Bookss Groommed For The Big One (fwd)
933. Joseph Duemer — Re: AWP/a relief
934. David Kellogg — Re: AWP/a relief

31 MAY 1997

935. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Jennifer Turns Julu
936. Pierre Joris — Mottram Conference
937. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 29 May 1997 to 30 May 1997
938. David R. Israel — credit & debt
939. Tom Mandel — procedures in literary space
940. amato — Re: procedures in literary space
941. James Finnegan — Re: procedures in literary space
942. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: book forms
943. David R. Israel — Re: book forms / & Holderlin update
944. charssmith — Fwd: How to read a tesla coil
945. Bob Grumman — A List of Poetry Schools
946. Douglas Barbour — Re: oh those contests, theyre everywhere
947. henry g — list of poetry school
948. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Re: A List of Poetry Schools

949. David R. Israel — Re: oh those contests, theyre everywhere
950. henry gould — agony of procedure
951. Joseph Duemer — Re: list of poetry school

1. IMBURGIA
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Sat 26 Apr 1997

Amittai F Avriam, thank you very much for your comments on the = conference. Do you think that it would be possible to somehow get a = copy of Brian McHale's paper in the panel on "The Feminist = Avant-Garde," on Susan Howe, or perhaps some of the other papers? will = something be published? Let me know if you get a chance, and thanks = again. dan

↑ Index

2. John Cayley
Partial Review of Hypertext '97 -- long post
Wed 30 Apr 1997

 Please note  A couple of people have suggested that I should post this on Poetics. I've decided to do so, but only the more relevant bits. I can send the complete thing (there isn't too much more) to anyone asking for it back-channel. The complete 'review,' such as it is, will be mounted on the web by the _electronic book review_ in mid-May. The exact URL is not yet available.

And hey I've, personally, got poetics set to 'nomail' at the moment, and will not turn the daily digest back on until the end of May, so fi I don't respond to postings on the list, please forgive me, but my text fields overfloweth....

[Apologies: This is not a 'balanced' review of the Hypertext '97 conference, but only, as Ted Nelson would put it, one particular, packaged, 'point of view'. I haven't named all the names I should have or even many and I have not explicitly acknowledged the herculean efforts of the many organizers. Readers are referred to the full published conference proceedings, _The Eighth ACM Conference on Hypertext_, edited by Mark Bernstein, Leslie Carr and Casper Osterbye, New York: ACM, 1997. My perspective is that of a practitioner of literary cybertext. This piece was written quickly as draft towards a (probably shorter) review of the conference which is to be published in the UK-based periodical (presently a quarterly newspaper) of 'digitalartcritique' entitled _Mute_ (and web-posted as part of the _electronic book review_). I would be very grateful for any suggestions, comments or corrections. It won't be edited or finalized for some time. With thanks in anticipation, John Cayley]

'The King is dead, long live the King,' was the challenging title of John B. Smith's opening keynote address at Hypertext '97. It was especially contentious given the animated and perpetually stimulating presence of Ted Nelson, uncrowned Emperor of an expanding (ballooning?) Docuverse. From April 6-11, the University of Southampton, where there is a strong tradition of hypertext research, hosted the eighth international conference of the Hypertext research community since its first official meeting ten years ago, chaired by this year's opening speaker. The conference convenes under the auspices of the ACM, or Association for Computing Machinery, a no-nonsense umbrella organization offering support and accreditation for the activities of over 80,000 IT professionals and students worldwide. The papers given were strictly refereed, yet there was an air of openness, excitement and innovation which may be a function of hypertext's substantive engagement with intellectual and cultural 'emergencies' (its apparent structural homologies with critical theory, for example), or more practically, because the conference proper had been proceeded by open workshops and tutorials, or because there were live demos of new systems, or because there has, traditionally, been a strong literary thread to hypertext programmes, or simply because those visionary ironies instilled in us by a certain living 'literary machine' have not faded.

Clearly, Smith, from the University of North Carolina, was primarily concerned with the relationship between the hypertext (research) community and the parallel or splintered groupings more recently clustered around the World Wide Web. The great irony is, that if the (non-specialist) wired masses recognize the word 'hypertext' at all this is because the Web has popularized an actually existing technology which realizes vital but limited hypertextual potentialities, whereas, historically, many of the concepts underlying hypertext were outlined by Vannevar Bush in 1945, while the term itself was coined by Nelson in the 1960s, and the latter's only half-mocking view is that even hypertext researchers are now working on conceptual problems that were essentially solved twenty years ago. But as Nelson put it succinctly in his only formal contribution to the conference - a hilarious and thought-provoking after-dinner speech - we were all, including even Bill (Great-Satan or Road-Ahead) Gates, 'blind-sided by the Web.' He'd rather thought that _he_, Ted Nelson, would be taking over the world, sending forth his cohorts from the heart of Xanadu....

Nonetheless, it is fact that the hypertext community has developed working systems and concepts to go with them which would allow us far richer, more varied and extensible models of the new information culture than those which are provided by today's Web technologies. Taking just one example, 3W links are uncomplex, unidirectional, unintelligent and unmanaged (unmanageable?), while the links of many true hypertext systems - mostly locked away in computer labs or tied to barely accessible 'platforms' - are richly structured, communicative, open and extensible. They offer a great deal to future content-providers but seem only just beginning to be able to supply. Meanwhile, most of the bells and whistles on the 'cooler' pages of the Web are cosmetic rather than subtantive add-ons to its largely passive, if immense and tangled, structures.

Today's Web interaction is invariably, perhaps inevitably 'kludgey' and sometimes it is positively 'foobar'.

...

... But the fascinating prospect, as Smith pointed out, is a Web turned inside out, where the open programming environments which are currently tacked onto operating systems, servers and browsers enact a quiet revolution, such that today's relatively simple Web protocols (http) end up _inside_ richer, more articulate, hypermedia architectures, while the users remain unperturbed by a paradigm shift that is all but invisible.

Nelson, the inventor of hypertext _per se_, is a self-confessed 'generalist'. His background was in 'science fiction, movie-making, theatre and writing.' He expected to go into media but found that he 'couldn't leave the rich... combative abstractions of academia behind.' Perhaps, once more, it is the tenor of his influence which underpins a strand of serious literary and artistic engagement with both 'Hypertext Rhetoric,' and with the ever-increasing practice of literary hypertext, which now extends from scholarly, pedagogic web-building, through hypertext fiction (close on becoming an established, if problematic, genre), to hyper- and cybertextual poetics. As this is the area of my own particular concern, I hope readers will forgive me if I pay it an attention which is disproportionate to its overall place in the conference.

Two papers in this strand of 'hypertext rhetorics' were accepted into the main conference program. In addition there was a panel, moderated by Marc Bernstein (who couldn't attend the conference due to illness) and including myself, on 'The Future of Authorship'. In the first of the papers, David Kolb, 'author' of _Socrates in the Labyrinth: Hypertext, Argument, Philosophy_ (Eastgate, 1994) explored some of the yet unrealized potential of scholarly hypertext, arguing the need for a 'self-represented complexity' far beyond the capabilities of current systems, not for its own sake, but because, he suggested, we require such structures in order to transfer and extend complex, often traditional forms of argument (such as are found in philosophy) into the hypertextual Web-centred docuverse. Loss Pequeño Glazier, webmaster of the the most important resource for poetics on the internet, the Electronic Poetry Center based at the Unversity of Buffalo (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc), gave a paper which structured links, historical and theoretical, between the poetics of a tradition of innovative writing and the specific poetics and rhetorics which are emerging from hypertextual practice. Essential feedback loops were put in place and many questions raised. The Future of Authorship panel included three representatives of the wide-ranging hypertext community in France - Marc Nanard, working on hypermedia design and providing an excellent overview of the issues, Michel Crampes, developing software agents for generative hypermedia and interactive editing, and Jean Pierre Balpe, a poet and editor working on generative fiction, who missed the panel itself but made the conference later - and one researcher from the MIT media labs - Kevin Brooks, working on the automatic generation of filmed story telling. On the same panel, I spoke of writing as programming, where the process of writing itself (which may include the readers' interactions) may be seen as a 'prior writing,' as inscription prior to performance (in codexspace or cyberspace or anyspace). An emergent theme of the panel was the convergence of 'engineered and creative authorship,' further complicating and problematizing that rightly troubled term with an uncertain and highly programmed future.

The literary strand of the conference had an addendum in London, where Jim Rosenberg, Loss Glazier and Chris Funkhouser read and performed their (cyber)poetic work at one of the regular London venues for innovative poetics. A number of figures from the hypertext community attended alongside the more usual hard-bitten poetics audience. Glazier's reading was lo-tech but laced with the language poetry of Unix, 'grep'ing across tribal, national and disciplinary dialects to 'chmod' files of poems for our use. Funkhouser, a musician, writer and editor in many media including the 'new,' was a living 'open system,' a neo-Beat mourning Ginsberg's passing, chanting and reciting words from the MOO space to extend his own poetry. Rosenberg is an essential cross-over figure who gave a much cited paper (by a wide range of even the most technology-orientated researchers) at the previous Hypertext conference. In London, as a PowerBook was passed from lap to lap in order to demonstrate, hands-on, the interactive structures which he composes and from which he read, the audience was treated to the audio channel of his word clusters, simultaneities and underlying diagrams of syntax. It was a brief and small-scale but important meeting of convergent galaxies - of hypertext researchers and a few of the pioneering practioners of emergent literary forms.

Earlier that day, the conference had been closed by the keynote address of Cathy Marshall, who also attended the reading in London. With a brief to 'look forward,' Marshall eschewed the temptations of a visionary perspective in order to review and analyse current and anticipated research, but also, through an extended 'defensive driving' metaphor (the Smith System) to set out five practices for 'safer hypertext.' Her talk was a model of complex and illuminating interaction with the specific inputs and outputs of the community of researcher/practioners who are actively reading her texts. In fact the spin she put on her chosen metaphor was not overly concerned with 'safety' as a function of defensiveness or restraint. Rather, she suggested a heightened awareness and openness to whatever is 'out there' and whatever is out _here_ in the 'wet world' which may emerge when you 1) steer high, 2) keep your eyes moving, 3) get the big picture, 4) leave yourself an 'out' and 5) make sure the other drivers see you. If the hypertext community takes her advice, not only will there be an implosive revolution within the Web, but poets and philosphers will be welcomed on the way.

- > John Cayley / Wellsweep Press
http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/ 1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK Tel & Fax: ([redacted] Email: [redacted] < - - - - - - -
- -

↑ Index

3. George Bowering

Re: tiles, miles, ali, and me

Thu 1 May 1997

One time, when I was sitting at a front table by myself at an Ayler Brothers gig, Rashied Ali was drumming so fast he let slip a stick and I caught it on one bounce off the floor, and gave it back to him after the (55 minute) piece. Damn. I shda kept it, eh?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

4. David Israel

topsy-turvy

Thu 1 May 1997

> From: Pierre Joris
> Subject: Subject
>
> My humble apologies for making the subject such a bloated object in my AG Howl censorship post -- overhasty cut&paste cleared the difference between head(er) & body

Sort of an upfront, in-your-face cultural gesture? (Or like the Peruvians who wear the soul's indicia about the circumference of the hat? [Vide Eduardo Galeano, Memory of Fire, re: the latter.]) When the subject becomes all, the message becomes superfluous. When all is topic, comment can idle away the time chewin' the fat & shootin' the breeze. When all is formulaic in the "when all" manner, the conclusion is precisely like this.

In certain cultures, the subject is veiled. Then (by way of revolutionary gesture, out of bordom, in quest of novelty, or for love of candor), the tables turn. To turn the tabale, lift from anywhere along surfaces A and B simultaneously, with the proviso that due coordination is requisite. Turntables are CDed eventually, but that's a whole nother alterety [a word for which my spellchecker suggests "altered"]. Arguendo, all is arguendo, from rover to romeo, from breadbox to brickbat. Sea and season: the father, here, is the mother. The ship hath not a sale. By their CDs shall ye know them.

d.i.

↑ Index

5. David Israel

six

Thu 1 May 1997

Yesterday, Ron Sillman wrote:

> Alterity, by the way, teaches at UC Berkeley.

1. advertently, or in- ?

2. tenure-track?

3. if curiousity (as has been alleged) killed the proverbial cat, in what wise, praytell, did alterity terrorize the cliche hypothetical feline?

4. under what conditions, and at what temperature, is alterity tantamount to "too much of a good thing"?

5. might the locution "in other news" spotlight the doings of this Prof.?

6. distinguish these conditions (14 stanzas):

integrity perplexity alterity perversity economy complexity
sobriety diversity

propriety society conversity disbursity reliety repliety deniety untersity

amenity profanity humanity rehearsity insanity infinity
the quiddity of worsity

placidity lucidity plasticity recursively
the tallow of necessity
the wallow of confessedly

a bramblesome obesity a nettlesome diplomacy
an adjectival infancy
a faux-prodigious tersity

an amphoteric anti-cleric para-steric corset E F G H I J kayety
l m n o pequety

arrest he you VW-ty an Ex to Why the zeity omega of the diety
an alif in eternity

whatever there might beity with buttersome fortuity
the puddle of all charity the poodle of screwyouity

the muddle of intuity
the fuddle of reviewity
the subtle of eschewity
the huddle of her bluity

the cuddle of the riddle of the middle of the truity
the trinity of youity
the unity of zooity

whaddity of iffity
the whyity of thenity
the varsity of vanity
the sparsity of spanity

a cup of tea to sanity!
the thimble of "I do"ity a tacit incredulity
a probable annuity

a comedy a threnody
a tragedy amenity

a kamikaze kennedy without a proper planety

the mousie in the housie had a dousie of alterity
the spousie in the blousie had a wowsie of some clarity

& other suchlike circumstances, if you would (25 words or less).

d.i.

↑ Index

6. David Israel
six questions on alterity
Thu 1 May 1997

(that was "my" "intended" "subject"-line, but somehow 'twas truncated so this errats it)

d.i.

↑ Index

7. Maria Damon
conf
Thu 1 May 1997

At 7:17 AM -0400 5/1/97, David Israel wrote:
>Yesterday, Ron Sillman wrote:
>
>>Alterity, by the way, teaches at UC Berkeley.
>

in fact, one cute moment at the Poetry & public sphere conference was when the roundtable moderator introduced first charlie altieri, and then mick taussig, the latter as the author of "mimesis and altieri." speaking of the conference, i was in 7th poetry and cult stud heaven. it started w/ me and cary nelson, introduced by the gracious and beautiful harriet davidson. i talked about some articles in the nyt that offered possibilities (all limited) for poetry & pubsphere, then sounded a yay for populist poetry and cultural studies, which i defined according to renato rosaldo's brief definition in the new book _Mass Culture and Everyday Life_ (ed. peter gibian, routledge). Cary talked abt the spanish civil war and poetry about it. then a roundtable where amiri baraka got into a rousing argument with miguel algarin about political poetry of the 60 vs that of the

90s. baraka was right. i read some previously unpublished bob kaufman poems, keith roach talked abtout the nuyo poets cafe, reg e gaines talked about getting turned on to poetry and social change by an etherdge knight poem, and sonia sanchez talked about her memories being politically involved. then dinner. i had some pals, ed cohen, ira livingston, elaine chang, amitava kumar, and julie chang, whom i hung out w/ at dinner. Then the fabulous NuYorican poets cafe readers, including Reg E, Algarin, Baraka (who got a standing ovation), Carl Hancock Rux (new to me, wowee, what a presence!), Tracie Morris (diplomat of the poetry world and high priestess of African American sound poetry), Aileen Reyes, keith roach. man o man, it was energizing, smart, emotionally stirring, and aesthetic as heck!!

okay, i've done the first day. someone else take over.

↑ Index

8. Maria Damon
Re: AG's Re-censored Howl
Thu 1 May 1997

> The partial reading generated compliments - "A girl called afterward and said, 'You are too cool. I'm very interested in what you read and would like to get a copy of it,'" Gilly said - and one complaint. "A guy flipping stations was driving around with his 13-year-old daughter, and called the station to say that he was 'offended' by the F-word," he said.
>
> And that is what brought an end to the show.
>
> "I didn't hear the program," said Hill, "but the only thing I know is that the language used was deemed inappropriate for the station."

am i the only person wondering what some guy was doing driving around at 2 am with his 13 year old daughter?

↑ Index

9. Jordan Davis
Galaxy Craze & Bruce Morrow @ Poetry City
Thu 1 May 1997

POETRY CITY
Friday May 2
7 pm

GALAXY CRAZE reads with BRUCE MORROW

5 Union Square West, 7th Floor, New York City
(food wine and books)

↑ Index

10. Jordan Davis
Rain Taxi Vol. 2 No. 2
Thu 1 May 1997

Free book review publication out of Minneapolis features in its current issue reviews of Jennifer Moxley, Juliana Spahr, Laura Moriarty, Ben Marcus, John Wieners, C. D. Wright, Clark Coolidge, Janice Edius, Stephen Dixon, Wallace Shawn et al. I found a copy at Posman's on University Place (NYC). Their email is [redacted], their mail is PO Box 3840, MPLS MN 55403, and their rate is $10 for 4 issues.

Jordan

↑ Index

11. Daniel Bouchard
Re: conf
Thu 1 May 1997

>>> then a roundtable where amiri baraka got into a rousing argument with miguel algarin about political poetry of the 60 vs that of the 90s. baraka was right<<<

Maria,

Can you tell us some more about this?

[redacted]

↑ Index

12. Jordan Davis
Re: Rain Taxi Vol. 2 No. 2
Thu 1 May 1997

---

capitalism bait and switch: Rain Taxi is free if you find a stack of it in a store (I hope... I walked away with one ulp!) .. but costs money if you have to write to them for it. So may I recommend that you stop by Posman's, hear our listhost read from the Commutative Function of the Alphabet Poetry Book, and pick up a copy.

So much for posting before 9:30 ...

Jordan

↑ Index

13. Amittai F. Aviram
The PPS Conference
Thu 1 May 1997

Well, I was there (I was the man, I enjoyed, I was there) at the Rutgers conference. It was awesome and monumental. Trying to summarize it seems right now a daunting task--I'm still sort of "processing" it (ugh!). Sorry to delurk just to say this, but, if I have any time this weekend-- a big _if_--I'll try to do some sort of summary for this group. For me, anyway, it was an emotionally intense, elating, and draining experience, with a lot of magnificent poetry, spellbinding performances, provocative papers, energetic discussions, delightful conversations, and large roomfuls of people who are _very seriously interested in poetry_!

I should say, as part of this message of deferral, that I found Charles Bernstein's talk/reading delightfully, brilliantly witty, and Rachel Blau du Plessis, in two short readings I heard, to be quite poignant and utterly captivating.

Well, more soon, I hope.

Amittai

↑ Index

14. Maria Damon
Re: conf
Thu 1 May 1997

---

the reason i restricted myself to the 1st day was that i'm exhausted and overworked rightnow; maybe this summer i can catch up; but can someone else rise to this occasion?--md

At 9:38 AM -0400 5/1/97, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>>>> then a roundtable where amiri baraka got into a rousing argument with >miguel algarin about political poetry of the 60 vs that of the 90s. baraka >was right<<<
>
>Maria,
>
>Can you tell us some more about this?
>
>
>
>[redacted]

↑ Index

15. cris cheek
uk election
Thu 1 May 1997

The Sun, certainly the most influential tabloid in the uk since Thatcher came to power (remember her extraordinary utterance 'deep in the surface of things') and responsible for such classics as 'GOTCHA!' when the Belgrano was sunk
during the shame of the Falklands fracas, ended out the 1992 election campaign with an election day cover that showed someone wheeling their luggage through the departure lounge at Heathrow (of course my memory might be inflated here) a bubble image of Neil Kinnock (Labour's leader of the day) and the banner headline 'Will the last person to leave Britain please turn out the lights'.

Later that night Kinnock, in tears, on the steps at Walworth Road (Labours Central Office) announced that Britain Deserves Better.

It is that phrase that the Blair (rabbit) campaign has turned on.

Today, The Sun features the smiling face of Tony (Phoneme) Blair and has the top of his head being blessed (or annointed or knighted) by the pointing finger (shades of 'Your Country Needs You' from WW1 propaganda) and starry hand from the advertising of the National Lottery.
The banner reads (nat lot slogan 'It Could Be You)
'It Must Be You' - then runs on to conflate the copy beautifully:

'TODAY you have the unique opportunity to join the greatest jackpot syndicate ever.
The guaranteed prize is a share in our country's future, a brighter tomorrow.

But this is no gamble. It costs you nothing.
Everyone's a winner. . .'

all offers of employment beyond these islands will be welcome.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

16. Tom Mandel
the Caucus Conversation
Thu 1 May 1997

Mark P. asks the significance of the tagline on my email signature file (e.g. below).

Mostly "the Caucus Conversation" as present here signifies that my business signature file is appended to my posts to the list -- I can't figure out how to have different signatures on messages to different destinations; that I would even have to figure this out indicates the issue of impoverished identity on computers and networks.

Screen Porch is my workplace, and Caucus is our first product. Caucus is a software program that runs on Web servers -- "community-building" software, or groupware, or conferencing. Multiple polysyllabic words to describe the tool mean that there's poor vocabulary for get-together, work-together contexts on computers and networks (more impoverished identity).

A typical application for Caucus would be the Poetics list -- it's used for lots of stuff like that.

About sixty organizations worldwide -- universities, big companies and government agencies, communities like Echo in NY, non-profits, etc. -- use Caucus at present counting. Mark, (or anyone else) if you're interested in knowing more, go to the URL in my signature, follow the "Conferences" link, and register in the Caucus site at screenporch.com.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

17. Peter Jaeger
new from fi & call for submissions (fwd)
Thu 1 May 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 30 Apr 1997 17:58:04 -0400
From: Prose & Contexts <[redacted]>
Subject: new from fi

fingerprinting inkoperated announces:

<bold><bigger>new publication

</bigger></bold>

<paraindent><param>left,left</
param><bold><bigger><bigger><bigger><bigger>à no(u)n

</bigger></bigger></bigger></bigger></bold>

by

Stephen Cain

</paraindent>

this is a collection of 30 language poems written in a style that pays tribute to Gertrude Stein's <italic>Tender Buttons.</italic> but this dense work is more than an homage. delving deep into language, this is not exactly light reading. the book is divided into three sets of ten poems under the headings "person," "place," "thing." for those who like to try before you buy, the first poem can be found on line in the <bold>in print</bold> section of the fi website <<http://www.interlog.com/~dal/fi/in/>. this a typical handcrafted fi publication: 44 pages, japanese-bound card covers with a paper dustjacket, published in an edition of 76 numbered & initialled copies, available for only C$6.25.

<bold><bigger>subscribers

</bigger></bold>

as always, subscribers receive a 20% discount off the list price of all publications, & are guaranteed copies of all productions. to subscribe, deposit C$25 (US$20) or more into an fi account; the cost of publications & actual postage is debited from your account when the items are posted every few months. send cheques or money orders (payable to d lopes) to the address below.

<bold><bigger>new schedule & call for submissions

</bigger></bold>

fi is now on a regular publishing schedule, producing a major chapbook or odd object each month. of course to sustain this schedule, fi is inviting submissions of work that pushes hard at boundaries of communication & that explores the complexities of form/at. see the <bold>submit</bold> page at <<http://www.interlog.com/~dal/fi/> for more information.

<bold><bigger>Toronto Small Press Fair

</bigger></bold>

& finally, one last reminder for those in the Toronto area: the Toronto Small Press Fair is this Saturday, 3 May, from 11am-6pm at Club 360 (located at 326 Queen West). fi will be there, so come say hi & check out what's going on in the small press scene...

---

fingerprinting inkoperated damian lopes

Box 657 Station P Toronto Canada M5S 2Y4

<<http://www.interlog.com/~dal/>

for pgp key, email: pgp-key <<[redacted]>

a micropress specializing in innovative writing exploring form/at

↑ Index

18. Tom Mandel

altera-tea

Thu 1 May 1997

Re: "alterity teaches in Berkeley" (I think those were Ron's words),

I remember altera tea; the way it rolled up, tho, you couldn't pick your teeth with it. But, then, you didn't want to.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

19. armand schwerner

DRAGON BOND RITE

Thu 1 May 1997

Gwyn McVay asked whether the Tuvan singer in Dragon Bond Rite is the same one who's in Huun-Huur-Tu. Yes. He is also the man who made a recording with San Fran bluesman David Pena and taught him to sing khomei. In response to David Israel's query about Margi Madhu; Madhu is probably one of the two greatest living practitioners of kudiyattam, which is not a form from Orissa, a north Indian state; Madhu lives and practices kudiyattam in its essential site, southern India (Kerala.)

Composer and instrumentalist Jin-Hi Kim, who conceived DBR, plays a 6-string fretted zither, the komungo, which has an ancestry going back about 1,400 years in Korea. Ms. Kim has been trained in traditional Korean musical practice, having earned a degree in Korean traditional music at Seoul National University before coming to the US; she received an MFA in electronic music/composition at Mills College.Her work LINKING, written for the Kronos Quartet, was performed at the Darmstadt Festival, BAM Next Wave Festival, Institute for Contemporary Art in London and the Asian Pacific Festival in New Zealand. Other works have been presented at Merkin Concert Hall in NYC, the Juillard School's Focus Festival '96, Alice Tully Hall at Lincoln Center in NYC and other venues. She has developed the world's only electric komungo.

David Israel asks for some words about what I've written for this new music/theater work, whether the piece has "any spoken words, or what?" Briefly, I've drawn material from my Tablets as well as from other sources, including Virgil. The Tablets is often a kind of entropic narrative whose form may encourage semi-aleatoric borrowings. We have produced approximately 40 slides. Some slides feature graphics derived from Sumerian pictographs; I have made these with font-generating software on the Mac, and have used a number of them in the later Tablets, XXVI and XXVII. The forthcoming issue of Boxkite, (its initial issue,) from New South Wales, edited by James Taylor, will contain my essay GLOSSES which discusses some of these matters.

Some of the words and phrases are spoken, sometimes in English, sometimes in Korean, Japanese, Tuvan, Sanskrit and/or Indonesian. Other sequences are printed on slides, made by using Microsoft PowerPoint. There are other permutations. All the language sequences on the slides are in English.

Jin-Hi Kim and I, along with Rick Emmert--who teaches Noh in Tokyo, and has a crucial role in the work--have been working for three years to arrive at a theater piece which presents the work of great traditional artists in delicate relationship with the contextual urgings of post-modernity, a word I'm not crazy about; this is a description whose simplicism frustrates me but I'll use this language as a shortcut for this brief response. In DBR, we try assiduously to respect the integrity of the traditionalist forms and practices all the while we are attempting to create a working consanguinity; for most of the artists this is the first time they will have worked closely with members of other Asian traditions; there are occasional language problems, but on the whole we manage extremely well, the performers show great enthusiasm and are eager to learn from each other. We're in the final activity of preparation before the last week of rehearsal at the Walker Art Center in Minneapolis the last week of May. I very much appreciate the interest in DBR.

↑ Index

20. Joseph Lease
Re: conf
Thu 1 May 1997

yes: what was he right about: what were the terms:

On Thu, 1 May 1997, Daniel Bouchard wrote:

> then a roundtable where amiri baraka got into a rousing argument with miguel algarin about political poetry of the 60 vs that of the 90s. baraka was right<<<
>
> Maria,
>
> Can you tell us some more about this?
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

21. Burt Kimmelman
Re: The PPS Conference
Thu 1 May 1997

ditto maria and amittai.

burt
maybe next week or so i too might find some time to share muy my perspective on the conference.

↑ Index

22. Mark Prejsnar
Re: the Caucus Conversation
Thu 1 May 1997

Thanx for the trouble-taking and informative reply, Tom; pretty interesting, actually.

Mark P.

↑ Index

23. Joe Safdie
Re: Rational Meaning is now out
Thu 1 May 1997

On Mon, 28 Apr 1997, Charles Bernstein wrote (in part):

"No North American or European poet of this century has created a body of work that reflects more deeply on the inherent conflicts between truth telling and the inevitable artifice of poetry than Laura (Riding) Jackson." --Charles Bernstein, from the introduction

Granted, Charles, and a belated congratulations for posting the existence of this work to the list and for your part in it. I was once heavily preoccupied with Riding (Jackson), both her poems and the only prose document I'd been aware of, _The Telling_, both of which I recommend. They're not exactly light bedtime reading, though!

> At the age of forty, having already produced a substantial and challenging > body of poetry, stories, and criticism, Laura (Riding) Jackson renounced > poetry and began to concentrate on the discovery of the principles that > embed truth and meaning in words. She believed that, if words and meaning could be irrevocably fused, people would become "morally articulate" and thus could never lie.

Quite a statement! I was interested in her exemplary renunciation of poetry, taking it as a challenge and implicit criticism of my own work and everyone else's, and wondered if it could be compared to others' rejections -- specifically, Rimbaud's. I concluded that it couldn't! Following the logic of some of her sentences made me dizzy, however.

Are you, or are others, aware of any biography of her? Her early years, when she was supposedly the model for Graves' _White Goddess_ and the author of many critical essays skewering the models of the time (William Empson? Stephen Spender?) would make for good reading, I'd think.

↑ Index

24. Jordan Davis
further individual complications
Thu 1 May 1997

Found this re: mayday UK elections, a Thatcher quote:

''There is no such thing as society; there are individual men and women and there are families.'' Thatcher, October 1987.

This would put Mark's comment (an echo of a Silliman line) in the context of a right wing rugged-individualism that wants to dismantle any kind of social program. To be less polemical about it, I'd modify Mark's statement to read .. "You might think you're an individual, but to the entities considered persons by the law who are deciding what you're worth, you're far less than three-fifths..."

May Blair work out better than Clinton has,
Jordan

↑ Index

25. henry gould
Re: further individual complications
Thu 1 May 1997

On Thu, 1 May 1997 14:10:01 -0400 Jordan Davis said:
> ''There is no such thing as society; there are individual men and >women and there are families.'' Thatcher, October 1987.
>
>This would put Mark's comment (an echo of a Silliman line) in the context >of a right wing rugged-individualism that wants to dismantle any kind of >social program. To be less polemical about it, I'd modify Mark's statement >to read .. "You might think you're an individual, but to the entities >considered persons by the law who are deciding what you're worth, you're >far less than three-fifths..."

Religious people offended by the religious right are not going to give up using various versions of the word "God" for that reason. Nor will people who think they might be individuals surrender the meaning of the word because Thatcherism & Reaganism manipulated it. But there sure are further complexities roun' here & I wonder if the Rutgers conference got into them.

I wonder if someone could make a valid argument that one of the reasons poetry lacks attention & status (until recently) is because in the long development of "literature" the activity of lyric SELF-expression has broken the borders of the lyric poem & infused all genres. That the normative expectation now of a novelist or playwright or etc. is a lifelong devotion to a private, personal, individual mode of expressing personal experience. That this is the crux of the "quest" of the artist - to integrate & interiorize everything. & in the process poetry just got absorbed - it's all poetry. Even language poetry or public performance art is a supremely individual rendering of impersonal language or group history. Easy to scoff at this in an ideological approach, but for the maker whose words are manna & life itself - life is sometimes on the line.

Reagan used the same lever to dismantle decent government. And we are all put off by the ego of the artist. Reagan & his era could be looked at in the lens of Aristotle, maybe. There's the Actor masquerading as a Man of Action (opposite of Hamlet, who in order to act had to become an actor). There's the res publica becoming an artifice of rhetoric, a disneyland phantasm.

Good ol Mandelstam has a wonderful poem about Crete, last stanza something like:

This was, turned blue, and was sung long before Odysseus, long before food and drink
were called "mine."

- Henry Gould

"Classicism is revolution."
-Osip Mandelstam

↑ Index

26. henry individuwobbles
Thu 1 May 1997

---

addendum to previous post: what is that gist or spark that transcends all analyses of self-expression, etc? Is it the secret of writing/ reading itself? the oscillation between je and autre? 2 poets who broke through the modernist revolution & postmodernist devolution & (re)created the forms of civic poetry: Auden, Brodsky (more for the Russians than Americans). Probably not much read on zis list (a big assumption). But I heard some Auden in J. Moxley's recent book (then I'm often hearing things in the dark...). A dry-eyed almost scientific approach to poetry, sceptical, rhetorical in a political sense (I'm talking about Auden here). 18th century.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

27. Brian McHale
Re: Rational Meaning is now out
Thu 1 May 1997

Joe Safdie inquired after biographies of Laura (Riding) Jackson. There is, in fact, a very big one by (is it?) Deborah Baker, came out a couple of years ago. The bookshelf where my copy reposes isn't near at hand, so I can't supply particulars at this moment; if you need more details, Joe, contact me back-chann- el & I'll ferret them out for you. Brian

↑ Index

28. charssmith
Re: conf
Thu 1 May 1997

Maria,

Would you care to elaborate on this?

In a message dated 97-05-01 14:24:02 EDT, you write:

<< then a roundtable where amiri baraka got into a rousing argument with miguel algarin about political poetry of the 60 vs that of the 90s. baraka was right. >>

↑ Index

29. Jordan Davis
Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

Auden and Ashbery,
Scotch and soda,
Kisangani and Kinshasa...

anyone read Mary Sidney's psalms? found the one that's an alphabetical acrostic last night...

X,
J

↑ Index

30. Henry Gould
Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

On Thu, 1 May 1997 15:50:30 -0400 Jordan Davis said:
>
>X,
>J

I always thought I detected some XJ Kennedy in your work, Jordan. My lengthy review will be posted momentarily. You're a closet sonnet-man. - Big Wind

↑ Index

31. Jordan Davis
Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

Henry,
are you thinking of my "Dude Rescinding a Starcase"?
Jordan
mysteriously jocular

↑ Index

32. henry
Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

> Henry,
> are you thinking of my "Dude Rescinding a Starcase"?
> Jordan
> mysteriously jocular

wasn't that your parody of the Providence School? I appreciated your manipulation of scoff-rhyme but it cut rather close. I sent it to the Princeton Institute for Advanced Studies - there's a prof. there who thinks it might reflect a realistic elevator-shoe-device to help hold up the Fermat Conundrum. You'll probabilitally be hearing from them any light-day now. - Hgendrik

↑ Index

33. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: individuwobblies
Thu 1 May 1997

---

but Brodsky somehow seemed to redevolve upon arrival in the U.S. -- his civic never quite encompassed the new surroundings in a way recognizable to me (unless we mean the Honda Civic?)

Isn't Olson instructive in this regard, still?

↑ Index

34. henry
Re: individuwobblies
Thu 1 May 1997

On Thu, 1 May 1997 13:15:48 -0700 Aldon L. Nielsen said:
>
>Isn't Olson instructive in this regard, still?

The Olsonmobile (as opposed to the Honda Civic) was the most tragic, Lear-esque, INDIVIDUAL, SUBJECTIVE, POLIS 10-4, JUNGIAN, JUNGLE drive there ever "wuz". - Road Islander H.

↑ Index

35. George Bowering
Re: six
Thu 1 May 1997

Yeah, Charlie Alterity used to teach at U. of Washington. He is a snappy dresser, which will be an anomaly at Cal.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

36. George Bowering
Re: AG's Re-censored Howl
Thu 1 May 1997

> am i the only person wondering what some guy was doing driving around at 2 am with his 13 year old daughter?

Yeah, and which F word did he complain about? My guess is Ferlinghetti, but then there must be others.

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

37. Joseph Lease
Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

well, yes, I've read Mary Sidney's psalms and her brothers and Wyatt's too: you might be interested in Roland Greene's work on the early modern lyric sequence (and also on early modern shaped poems):

On Thu, 1 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Auden and Ashbery,
> Scotch and soda,
> Kisangani and Kinshasa...
>
> anyone read Mary Sidney's psalms? found the one that's an alphabetical acrostic last night...
>
> X,
> J

↑ Index

38. henry gould
Re: Auden, Resuscitated in a Thunderstorm
Thu 1 May 1997

ARROWHEAD (IN THE SHAPE OF A STATE)

A
maze of lakes in northern Minnesota, crisp air adrift on owl's wings between the wide gray skies and a long swath of muted pines, waves lapping, lapping against the riding prow of the motorboat, my father at the tiller, smiling, looking out toward the shore, quiet, his beard growing rough now after a day or two in the woods--

I'm afraid of diving too deep back into the skin of the past, my callow bones, the large boy head full of springing phantasms, upstart to replace a sense of imperfection with voracious all-devouring enveloping thought--fishline,
this daily bread of blind birdsong.
Before you, Iron Range long gone, I will always be that unbound, reedy son.

- Big Wind (Ojibway)

↑ Index

39. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Talismanic virtues

Thu 1 May 1997

This just in from our foreign poetics desk:

Per Mark Presjnar and other librarians on the list, I tried ordering Talisman for the University of Colorado's periodical collection. Lo and behold, it worked! I'm told by "Skip" Hamilton - subject bibliographer - that no faculty member had heretofore requested it - hence, its absence from the shelves. (O dismal backwater, o arterial hardening!) But he was very glad to acquire it and sd he wld have long before - except he can only do so by request. I will be ordering other mags and books shortly since Skip seems happy to comply with my "research needs." Mark et al - thanks!

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

40. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Talismanic virtues
Thu 1 May 1997

Patrick--perhaps he/you might subscribe to the Backwoods Broadsides Chaplet Series. So far, only "B" libraries subscribe: Buffalo, The Beinecke, Brown, and Kent State. (Well, this is the innovative list, right? Whadd'ya, logo-phallo-al-phabocentric?) etc. etc. sp

> This just in from our foreign poetics desk:
>
> Per Mark Presjnar and other librarians on the list, I tried ordering Talisman for the University of Colorado's periodical collection. Lo and behold, it worked! I'm told by "Skip" Hamilton - subject bibliographer - that no faculty member had heretofore requested it - hence, its absence from the shelves. (O dismal backwater, o arterial hardening!) But he was very glad to acquire it and sd he wld have long before - except he can only do so by request. I will be ordering other mags and books shortly since Skip seems happy to comply with my "research needs." Mark et al - thanks!
>
> Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

41. Wystan Curnow
Re: NYC Reading
Thu 1 May 1997

Dear Charles 'n Bruce(the double Bill) Wish I could be there (seems like I'm always saying this) and save me a copy. It years now since my L= book went walkabout and I've had to get by without it.
Wystan

↑ Index

42. cris cheek
uk election news
Thu 1 May 1997

seismic shift in British party politics massive Labour majority subtle gradation of sound bites

↑ Index

43. cris cheek
Re: uk election news
Thu 1 May 1997

Got to say there are incredible results here
- meltdown for the Conservatives almost all major challenges for Tory leadership in what promises to be a bitter bloodbath in the aftermath

but most noticeable a massive influx of women into Parliament

good tv

↑ Index

44. David Israel
Re: Rational Meaning is now out
Fri 2 May 1997

Thu, 1 May, from Joe Safdie:

<< I was interested in [Laura Riding Jackson's] exemplary renunciation of poetry, taking it as a challenge and implicit criticism of my own work and everyone else's, and wondered if it could be compared to others' rejections -- specifically, Rimbaud's. >>

One thinks, of course (for comparison), of Marcel Duchamps (though he did tinker out that great late work in secret) --

Interesting that she continued to write in prose while renouncing poetry -- i.e., seemingly distrusted (?) poetry, but not (in the same way) prose? (I realize these aren't questions for glib answer -- & no doubt the vol. that Charles announced addresses some of this . . .)

<< Are you, or are others, aware of any biography of her? Her early years, when she was supposedly the model for Graves' _White Goddess_ and the author of many critical essays skewering the models of the time (William Empson? Stephen Spender?) would make for good reading, I'd think. >>

Joe, at first I misread this as "are you aware of my biography of her?" ! -- as well. Yes, I have (somewhere) a copy of a promising-looking bio entitled In Extremis (but haven't taken time yet to delve into it . . .)

Incidentally, there's a play, The Beekeeper's Daughter, based (with changes of names and with a particular emphasis etc.) on the figures of Robert Graves & Laura Riding -- written by Karen Malpede (the NYU theatre professor). I saw this in Lee Nagrin's Bleeker St. studio a couple years ago (Nagrin -- an old frirend -- had a role in the piece). I know Karen was looking toward developing it further, but don't know present status of those efforts.

↑ Index

45. Maria Damon
Re: LIBARARIAN virtues
Fri 2 May 1997

---

hey librarian groovoids, how 'bout gettn yr libraries to subscribe to the new and groovy Cross Cultural Poetix?

At 5:19 PM -0500 5/1/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>This just in from our foreign poetics desk:
>
>Per Mark Presjnar and other librarians on the list, I tried ordering >Talisman for the University of Colorado's periodical collection. Lo and >behold, it worked! I'm told by "Skip" Hamilton - subject bibliographer - >that no faculty member had heretofore requested it - hence, its absence from >the shelves. (O dismal backwater, o arterial hardening!) But he was very >glad to acquire it and sd he wld have long before - except he can only do so >by request. I will be ordering other mags and books shortly since Skip seems >happy to comply with my "research needs." Mark et al - thanks!
>
>Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

46. Jordan Davis
psalmody
Fri 2 May 1997

Looking back at Lab Book from UB Poetics (1992), and it's just about coming into focus. If copies still exist, I endorse heartily the purchase. Of interest not merely because it contains early (but representative) work by Juliana Spahr, Mark Wallace, Jena Osman, Lew Daly, Jeff Hansen, Bill Tuttle, Elizabeth Burns, Elizabeth Willis, Cynthia Kimball and Peter Gizzi, but also because it provides a record the closest thing to a POETICS archive for the workshop process short of a documentary film. To refresh the memory: each workshop participant submitted a poem to the group to be responded to; the poems and their responses are revealing. When the book came out, I had no idea what any of these people were talking about (my bad). Now, the styles are clearer (more work exists, more reading has transpired, and I'm getting older too...).

That said, thanks, Joseph, for the bibl. ref. for those psalmists -- do others on the list know of other psalm translators worth looking into?

Jordan

On Thu, 1 May 1997, Joseph Lease wrote:

> well, yes, I've read Mary Sidney's psalms and her brothers and Wyatt's too: you might be interested in Roland Greene's work on the early modern lyric sequence (and also on early modern shaped poems):
>
> On Thu, 1 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> Auden and Ashbery,
> Scotch and soda,
> Kisangani and Kinshasa...
>
> anyone read Mary Sidney's psalms? found the one that's an alphabetical acrostic last night...
>
> X,
> J

↑ Index

47. Thomas M. Orange
Auden, Resuscitated Sidnean Psalms
Fri 2 May 1997

> Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> anyone read Mary Sidney's psalms? found the one that's an alphabetical acrostic last night...
>
> Joseph Lease wrt:
>
> well, yes, I've read Mary Sidney's psalms and her brothers and Wyatt's too: you might be interested in Roland Greene's work on the early modern lyric sequence (and also on early modern shaped poems):

great stuff! hard to believe 164 different stanzaic and 94 different metrical patterns in mary's psalms. i like also that her translations are based not on a single source-text but an amalgamation of prose psalters in english, french metrical psalters, a coupla versions of the bible, etc.

just actually found this line in wyatt last night: (psalm 38)

> So ar myn entrayles infect with fervent sore,
> Fedyng the harme that hath my welth oprest,
> That in my fleshe is lefft no helth before.

yikes! his only use of the word "entrayles" according to the concordance.

cheers,
tom

↑ Index

48. Aldon L. Nielsen
Lew Daly Essay
Fri 2 May 1997

Does anyone have a copy of the Lew Daly _Apex of the M_ essay that was published as a supplement? A student of mine needs a copy ASAP for his paper -- the student's email address is:

[redacted]

If anybody has a copy they could xerox & ship to him, it would be much appreciated

↑ Index

49. Pritchett,Pat
Re: psalmody
Fri 2 May 1997

The English poet Peter Levi recently did some trans. of Psalms for Penguin, but I've not looked at them closely and don't know if they merit further attention. Also, (I think) the seemingly ubiquitous Stephen Mitchell? Sidney's stuff with his sis the Countess of Pembroke is great to read alongside the KJV.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

50. Jordan Davis
Sidneian
Fri 2 May 1997

Tom Orange,

I'm mad for those quotations in your messages -- first Iggy Pop, now Wyatt. Would I could serve POETICS a pot of senegalese peanut soup in Union Square Park today.

Anybody crack the shrink wrap on Mason & Dixon yet?

Jordan
who started out with something in mind when he pressed 'compose'

↑ Index

51. Jordan Davis
Godfrey playlist
Fri 2 May 1997

Had to step out before Creeley read (early work, I hear) but I caught John Godfrey and Cecilia Vicuna at the opening reading of the Poetry Project's 30th anniv. party. Godfrey, subdued, was _on_, especially on "For Ice" and "Day Goo". He opened with two elegies (for Allen Ginsberg and for Jim Brodey, respectively), followed with what I think he referred to as "the difficult ones", and sailed on through in his Michael Learned as Celine manner.

Titles:

Big Lips
The James Brother Grasp Is Provide
Ten Times Lighter
Very Worn Cloth
For Ice
Day Goo
Same Feet Evil Tunnels
The Slightest Foam

and before I knew it they were introducing Cecilia Vicuna, pow, they're done, no one gets up. Some laughter. No reader, but then a scratching noise from the front (and the important thing to know is that Ed Friedman had the room turned around so that people were sitting up on the stage looking past the podium at the front door which Ed dramatically closed at the start of the reading) and eventually singing. CV got up and read in a whisper, then very loud, and startled by the duration she suddenly realized she was expected to read for, finished with poems from her light book. Then there was an intermission... In the audience: Anne Waldman, Bernadette Mayer, Phil Good, Dug Rothschild, Daniel Cane, Bill Luoma, Greg Masters, Brenda Coultas, Anselm Berrigan, Elinor Nauen, Richard Hell and like sixty or so others.

Jordan

↑ Index

52. David Benedetti
Re: Books & Co.
Fri 2 May 1997

On Wed, 30 Apr 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> Books & Co., long one of Manhattan's best poetry/philosophy/critical writing bookstores, is slated to close May 31. The following message from Paul Auster is posted in the window:"For twenty years, Books & Co. has been a sanctuary for readers and writers, a spiritual home for everyone who still believes in the importance of words. New York has been blessed to have this store, and the thought that it may be forced to close has filled me with sorrow. I feel like someone who has just been told that one of his dearest friends is dying.Does money always have to have the last word? Can a squabble over a few pennies actually shut down a place that has meant so much to our city? Don't the people bent on destroying this landmark realize the damage they will be doing? Subtract Books & Co. from New York, and New York loses part of its soul."(signed) Paul Auster 4/21/97

Yes, out here in Albuquerque the University of New Mexico Bookstore expanded and moved across the street (Central) from The Living Batch Bookstore, and so The Living Batch died a pathetic death--along with The Salt of the Earth Bookstore down the street. These two independent bookstores were crushed by the chains and UNM conglomerate, and were the only real places in Allblueturkey to get poetry, Latin American lit and books, postmodernism, theory, lit crit, obscure, etc. etc.

Not to mention great readings, expert advise, local news, actual people, etc. So, killing of smaller independent bookstores is going on all over.

Paul Auster's obit about covers it.

David Benedetti

↑ Index

53. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Books & Co.
Fri 2 May 1997

Cambridge & Boston continue to have an incredible variety of excellent book stores--mostly used. In fact, I've managed to pick up all my wants in the past few weeks in the form of review copies--small press poetry, university presses, the works--brand new and at half price!!

Eat your heart out, America!

[redacted]

↑ Index

54. Poetics List
Please post this to the list
Fri 2 May 1997

For those of you who have been following this on 20/20:

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 02 May 1997 00:41:40 -0700
From: Jennifer <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Cc: [redacted]
Subject: Please post this to the list

Please post the following message to the POETICS list. Thanks!

Subject: ERRATUM: Helen Adam / Women of the Beat Generation

ERRATUM

Due to an unfortunate combination of computer glitches and copy editor confusion, portions of the biographical sketch of Helen Adam in the Conari Press title "Women of the Beat Generation," that were drawn from the work of Kristin Prevallet, appeared without complete attribution. Ms. Prevallet generously provided us with her excellent research on Helen Adam and we apologize for any harm that might have occurred. Future printings will restore the original accurate acknowledgments.

Thank You,

Will Glennon
Publisher, Conari Press

Brenda Knight
Author, "Women of the Beat Generation"

e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

55. Thomas M. Orange
wyatt, our villon...
Sat 3 May 1997

does this subject line contain a tenable thesis? now accepting candidates for early modern english outlaw poets. of course villon was no diplomat, but wyatt did do his time in the can and messed with the king's wife....

Tho my songes be sume what strange,
And spekes suche wordes as toche thy change,
Blame not my lutte.

cheers,
t.

jordan davis wrot:
> I'm mad for those quotations in your messages -- first Iggy Pop, now > Wyatt. Would I could serve POETICS a pot of senegalese peanut soup in > Union Square Park today.

damn good memry there jd, i thot those iggy lines was long fergot!

↑ Index

56. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Please post this to the list
Sat 3 May 1997

Am I the only reader who finds the explanation for how Kristen Prevallet's name got dropped from her writing more than a little questionable? I mean, I've experienced any number of computer glitches and copy editing confusion, but given the fact that the attribution should have appeared in at least three places (on the essay, in the contents, and in the acknowledgements) this seems a bit of a stretch to me --

On a happier note -- Cinco de Mayo celebrations will be held in San Jose on Sunday -- come on down!

↑ Index

57. Maria Damon
Re: Please post this to the list/beat women
Sat 3 May 1997

---

yeah, it's too bad that they can't just apologize and promise future appropriate reference without having to lie. computer glitches indeed. i'd like to know if kristen feels that this is an adequate and satisfactory settlement. kristen are you out there? any comment?--md

At 9:44 AM -0500 5/3/97, robert drake wrote:
>aldon--
>
>no, they're just tryin to bullshit their way out of a jam... when i >talked to the editor, he at first denied that there was any significant >plagerism, when i started citing paragraph by paragraph th copied & >paraphrased sections he backed up a little, shifted blamed to the >author's incompetence w/ computers or some such. i understand that >kristen had initiated a suit? praps their announcement has to do w/>that. as she pointed out, tho, it also raises th question of the >reliablity of the rest of the scholarship, lacking as it does any >substantial references or footnotes... sad, and ironic, that a >project i would otherwise be enthusiastic about shd be so discredited...

>
>lbd
>
>>Am I the only reader who finds the explanation for how Kristen Prevallet's >>name got dropped from her writing more than a little questionable? I >>mean, I've experienced any number of computer glitches and copy editing >>confusion, but given the fact that the attribution should have appeared in >>at least three places (on the essay, in the contents, and in the >>acknowledgements) this seems a bit of a stretch to me --

↑ Index

58. robert drake

Re: Please post this to the list/beat women

Sat 3 May 1997

---

aldon--

no, they're just tryin to bullshit their way out of a jam... when i talked to the editor, he at first denied that there was any significant plagerism, when i started citing paragraph by paragraph th copied & paraphrased sections he backed up a little, shifted blamed to the author's incompetence w/ computers or some such. i understand that kristen had initiated a suit? praps their announcement has to do w/ that. as she pointed out, tho, it also raises th question of the reliablity of the rest of the scholarship, lacking as it does any substantial references or footnotes... sad, and ironic, that a project i would otherwise be enthusiastic about shd be so discredited...

lbd

> Am I the only reader who finds the explanation for how Kristen Prevallet's name got dropped from her writing more than a little questionable? I mean, I've experienced any number of computer glitches and copy editing confusion, but given the fact that the attribution should have appeared in at least three places (on the essay, in the contents, and in the acknowledgements) this seems a bit of a stretch to me --

↑ Index

59. Pritchett,Pat

Re: adieu, Corpse!

Sat 3 May 1997

I received this in the mail yesterday:
(Patrick Pritchett)

April 15 Tax Day, In the American Tradition of Anguish

Dear Friends:

After fourteen years and sixty-three issues of Exquisite Corpse, the editors have decided to kill themselves. The magazine will continue to appear, of course. After one minute of thinking about this, however, we have reversed our position, and decided to kill the Corpse instead. After that minute, however, we realized that a Corpse cannot be killed. Given the difficulty of this paradox, we have decided that:

The bi-monthty publication of Exquisite Corpse will be suspended while the editors prepare a massive anthology culled from our sixty-three issues, to be published in 1988. After the anthology appears, we will either reappear in a new format or produce a yearly anthology. Meanwhile, ghost Corpses will continue to be telepathically issued, available free from the community of writers we have nurtured. Their collective ectoplasmic connections will produce many more issues than we could have delivered in the cumbersome typographic manner.

It has always been our intention to cease and desist when we got bored. Until now, neither penury nor overwork, stopped us from our task of delivering the news, but the time came, finally, when Baudelaire's certitude that we "know this monster well," sank home with the finality of one thousand printer's bills, mailing lists, unsolicited offenses, and institutional rigidity.

To our contributors we say, "do not hold a wake, unless we can be there," to our readers we say, "remember us until we return," and to our subscribers we declare, "subtract what remains of your subscription from the price of the anthology, which we will send to you postage-free," and to those who never read us we say, "you are old, your taste is execrable."

Until we return, remember the good days. We love you.

Andrei Codrescu, editor
Laura Rosenthal, executrix
Jean C. Lee, manageresse

↑ Index

60. linda v. russo
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Sat 3 May 1997

Amattai & Maria -- thx so much for the reports -- i'm looking forward to part 2. Amattai -- you mentioned Linda Kinnehan's paper on How(ever) & the panel on the difficult wor(l)d briefly -- could you say more? thx. again -- l.
--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

61. Amittai F. Aviram
More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Sat 3 May 1997

Here are a few more comments about the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference, which I'm writing even though I really need to be grading papers. This is all from memory--I never take notes--so forgive me for lapses.

First of all, I differ strongly with Maria Damon, whom I unmet--i.e., met in passing by way of saying goodbye, and whose opening statement, alas, I missed, because my flight got in at 4:00. No, Amiri Baraka was most certainly _not_ right. Baraka was and is full of baloney. His arguments were just more boring, thoughtless Old Left rant, as was his "reading," during most of which he _yelled_ into the microphone of an already loud PA system, as if to punish us "academics" for our "complicity" with The Oppressor Capitalist Pigs, etc., etc. All total bullshit. The debate between him and Miguel Algarin, a very gentle soul, was about political poetry of the 60s and 90s. Baraka, of course, was saying that the political poetry of the 60s was better because it was direct, upfront, "truly" political, spoke to The People, blah blah blah--the stuff that I assume Maria agrees with and that I find really obnoxious nonthought (sorry, Maria, I know this is getting off on the wrong foot with you, and I regret that). Algarin was saying that the "political" poetry of the 60s is outmoded because it is unsubtle and lacking in the theoretical sophistication we need in the 90s. It boiled down to Algarin saying, "We need _theories_," and Baraka cutting him off and yelling, "No we don't, we need _action_!" A nice moment of comic relief was had when Algarin pointed out, in the midst of Baraka's ranting about academics and their salaries (oh, yes, we make just _so_ much money!) that ties them to the Capitalist System--that Baraka himself was paid $5,000 for his appearance. Plenty of poets and scholars there were not paid a cent for being there, AFAIK. Baraka was shut up for a second or two as he tried to figure out something clever to say. There were a lot of really great readings of poetry throughout the conference, but Baraka's was not, IMO, one of them. Same for Reg E. Gaines and keith roach, so far as I remember. As for this Reginald Rux guy, he went on forever with a lot of "political" and somewhat egocentric blather that I found supremely boring. By contrast, I found Tracie Morris really stunning and Aileen Reyes wonderful. So I thought the first evening was a thought-provoking mixed bag.

Now that that's all off my chest, I have to say, of course, that I was grateful to hear all of these poets, even the ones I didn't like.

Every afternoon, evening, and night, there were great readings (sometimes embedded within panel discussions) by great poets, including--going on memory now--Reyes and Morris (mentioned above), Charles Bernstein, Robert Hass, Meena Alexander, Abena Busia, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Alica Ostriker, Bob Perelman, Adrienne Rich, Robin Pastorio-Newman, Cheryl Clarke, Regie Cabico, Rafael Campo, Andy Clausen, Rachel Hadas, Rebecca Reynolds, Michael Weaver, Ross Talarico, Eliot Katz, and others. I actually didn't like Abena Busia very much, either as poet or in her talk on the "Locations of Poetry" panel shared with Charles Altieri and Arnold Rampersad. (This was generally a dreadful panel-- summary below.) I also don't quite know why Meena Alexander is such a big noise--I just didn't find it in the poetry, although she did give a very compelling statement in the "Poetry, Feminism, and the Difficult Wor(l)d" panel, that was sort of a poem, or anyway quite poetic.

More Details:

I've already covered Thursday night as best I can. I missed most of the first Concurrent Panels session Friday morning because it involved getting on a bus from the hotel at 8:15, which I missed :-(. I just barely made it to the last 3/4 or so of Brian McHale's paper in the panel on "The Feminist Avant-Garde," on Susan Howe, in which he showed how some poems of Howe were playing with Spenserian and Shakespearean phrases that have been known so well over the centuries that they have become more or less part of the permanent detritus or soil of English-speaking culture. Thus they are already out of context (so to speak), but Howe would then put these phrases in yet more strained contexts, to defamiliarize them anew, as a kind of intervention in the economy of poetical discourse. (Is that about right, Brian?) Interesting discussion afterwards in which just about everybody missed the point that Howe was not Pound and not merely alluding, but estranging the overfamiliar that has literary origins.

Keynote Panel: "Cultural Poetics, Cultural Politics," with Meena Alexander, Charles Bernstein, and Tricia Rose, hosted by Elin Diamond. Alexander's talk was more or less (I think) about the complexities of identity created by post-colonialism and a multicultural world, and she closed with a poem reflecting upon her self--both poetic and personal--in the setting of Riverside Park (I guess), overlooking the Hudson and the Washington Bridge. The Bridge would be the operative metaphor here, I think, as well as the river. Bernstein talked about how poetry works precisely (I think this is right!) by _undermining_ the apparently simplicity of the social self, by foregrounding its discursively constructed nature, and he closed, as I recall, with a brilliant poem. I was thinking the whole time about the ways that his talk was addressing some of the issues in my paper better than my paper did, or whatever. It questioned the sincerity of the personal voice in "political" poetry and suggested that the truly political act of poetry was precisely to render the personal voice an artifice and an object of play. His poem exemplified this, among other things, by containing a long and delightful catalogue of what kind of poet "he" "is." The first of these items was: "I am a New Formalist poet." This got a lot of laughs, but it is also remarkably _true_, insofar as much of what Bernstein read at the conference _is_ in meter--thus exploding the rightwing identification of "formalism"--something I wsa trying to do in my paper as well. Tricia Rose's paper, on "Poetic Testimony: Race, Gender, and Popular Poetry," claimed (a) that testimony doesn't _really_ require that the events told _really_ happened (and thus that the speaker is still understood to be a poetic artifice), and (b) that, insofar as there _is_ some connection to reality, testimony "complements" the playful artifice of poetry, rather than working against it. During the audience part, Charles Altieri pointed out that Tricia Rose's statement (esp the latter part) and Charles Bernstein's were actually quite at odds with each other, but that they were (I think Rose was) attempting to smooth over the difference. Both of them gave, I thought, an inadequate reply to what I thought to be a correct statement on Altieri's part. Indeed, throughout the conference, one of the running threads turned out to be the question of the relation between "testimony" and "poetic artifice," and, with that, the oral vs. the written, populism vs. some other concept of democracy, representation vs. the aesthetic, the personal vs. the impersonal ... And it seems to me that none of these questions was resolved, which is probably o.k.

I went next to the "Feminist Collectives/Identities" panel, but caught only a little--the whole of Linda A. Kinnahan's fine paper on "_HOW/ever_, Then and Now," and a little of Jen Benka's and Jennifer Geigel's joint presentation, which I left after a while because it involved a slide show that was set up so that nobody who came in late could see it.

The next session included my own panel, on "Form and Contemporary Publics," with Nick Yasinski and Jonathan Monroe. I enjoyed meeting both of them, finding Nick a particularly delightful and endearlingly modest personality. Nick presented a superb close reading of an "oral" poem by Regie Cabico included in Miguel Algarin's anthology of Nuyorican poets, thus demonstrating that the apparent "identity" in "identity politics" can indeed be complex, playful, and poetic. (I agree--but I also think that some poets manage this better than others.) Jonathan Monroe's talk centered on READ, an educational program that did not include poetry, and how another program that did could easily be integrated into READ's goals. My own paper urged a distinction between populism and democracy (see above), and also the importance of the connection between poetry and literacy (and thus democracy) and therefore the _re_readability of poems. This gave way to an interesting discussion, especially involving my paper and Nick's. I am still unsure how work like that of Tracie Morris fits into what I was saying, because it really is (IMO) superb poetry, but it doesn't seem entirely _literate_--i.e., involving reading and rereading, becoming spatialized int the mind, repeatable. Then again, maybe it _is_. In some ways, Tracie Morris's musical "sound poems" are enactments of the closest kind of close reading--the repetition of words until they become mere sounds in music. Well, obviously, I'm still thinking about all of this. I think people were disturbed by my distinction between populism and democracy, especially WRT the Nuyorican poets, and I'm quite unsure about that relation myself, although I _am_ reasonably sure, otherwise, of the distinction. I was flattered that Charles Altieri came to the panel (at least I _think_ that was he!) and seemed to agree with me, at least a little. Harriet Davidson was there, too, who did not quite agree with me, but who is so totally _agreeable_ a person that it's hard to _disagree_ with her about anything ever.

Next came a plenary panel on "The Difference that Poetry Makes." The ever cute (sorry, don't mean to embarrass him!) Nick Yasinski took on the difficult task of presiding over this group of learned people, some of whom were rather longwinded--interestingly, all of them men--the women managed to be quite concise. All of the speakers were asked to answer the question, "What difference does poetry make?" and to respond to two quotations: one, Auden's "Poetry makes nothing happen," and the other, Adorno saying that "Poetry is impossible after the holocaust." Altieri started off with the usual shapeless fuzz, and, as opposed to another talk he gave later, in this case, I honestly couldn't quite follow his point. Sorry! I do seem to remember, however, that this was the talk where he pointed out that young people today are in an awkward position in relation to literacy and literature. Whereas earlier generations could rebel against their parents by _reading_ and getting educated, this is no longer the case, since the parents are usually educated and literate. (This may have come up in another talk.) Robert Hass gave a _very_ long talk, but I confess that I found it utterly fascinating. It had two parts. First, he conducted the thought experiment of what difference poetry makes by imagining a world without poetry to see whether it would be any different from our world. What he found--in a way almost echoing Roman Jakobson--is that poetry is so totally embedded in language in general that it's simply unimaginable to have a "world" in a normal sense that would be totally without poetry. "So," he concluded nonchalantly, "that was a _cul-de-sac_." He then talked about the difference poetry _has_ made, as a kind of benefit of literacy, intimately tied to the history of literacy in modern times, as a distinctively _American_ phenomenon--the growth of literacy being directly tied to certain ideological developments first in the United States and only later in other "developed" countries. Literacy in the US started with the importance the Purtitans laid upon the ability to read the Bible to save one's soul, and literacy in New England throughout early American history was very high--over 90% (I think), while it was rather low elsewhere. In the early 19th century, still, only a minority of American adults could produce a signature (his index for literacy in the most basic sense). (A fortiori, it was always only a small minority throughout Europe.) In the same period--really starting in the late 18th century (Federalist period)--the ideology linking reading to salvation was secularized into one that linked reading to citizenship. During the slavery era, reading also was obviously linked to freedom and political self-determination. By the time shortly before the Civil War, already, a significantly higher proportion of adult nonenslaved men could produce a signature, relative to the proportion of the same in Europe. After the Civil War, public schools were established for all citizens, and literacy rates continued to rise steadily. Literacy was connected with upward mobility. There was also a series of three different ideological rationales for the importance of literacy throughout the 19th century, after its secularization. First, literacy was viewed as a chance at access to the great wonders and beauties (i.e., poetry) hitherto only available to the aristocracy--it was the democratization of verbal wealth. This concept went ahead until around the turn of the century, when the lettered elite was no longer a significant social force, and when poetry was already heavily associated with the middle class rather than the European aristocracy--as typified by Walt Whitman and his imitators. Poetry had been reformed, in a sense, to become less aristocratic--as the lower classes entered literacy, they transformed it. The next ideology, picking up in the late 19th century, was the association of the reading of poetry and cultivation of beauty with the ennobling of the soul; people who could read and appreciate poetry would be more moral. This idea came to a catastrophic end with the holocaust of WWII, when everyone saw that it was possible to be a great aesthete and lover of poetry and still put millions of people to death. Finally, emerging in the early 20th century was the association of literacy and the reading of poetry with the refinement of cognitive skills, an association still alive today and motivating education to some extent. Literacy in the US crested at around 90% in the year 1960, and has been dropping steadily since then--not only in numbers but in quality: the average 8th grader in Texas reads at only a 4th-grade level. So, poetry makes a difference by contributing to literacy, and what we need is more of both. Tracie Morris took much less time to say something about equally fascinating. She introduced it more personally as the difference that poetry has made _for her_, and therefore presented it as autobiography, but of course it turned out to be a parable. She had wondered as a child whether she was crazy, because she liked talking to herself. "Don't worry," she was told, "You're not crazy if you talk to yourself, so long as you don't _answer_ yourself." Later, in school, reading Poe's "The Raven," she was struck by how crazy the speaker is--he not only talks to himself but also answers himself. Why, if he knows the bird can only say one word, would he be crazy enough to ask it, "Will I ever see my beloved again"? Why not ask, "Will I ever get sick"! As an adult, she went to several different community poetry projects, including, eventually, the Nuyorican Poets' Cafe. She learned about "sound poetry," and tends to use this technique especially to address matters, such as the Middle Passage, that she regards as unspeakable. Thus poetry is a way of dealing sanely with a crazy situation, and a way of being both sane and crazy simultaneously, letting her talk to herself and answer herself without being considered crazy. (I hope I got the drift of that right.) Michael Taussig, next, gave by far the longest talk--endless and shapeless and utterly without a thesis. It wound up moving towards a reference to _The Nervous System_. Charles Bernstein went next, and spoke while a slide behind him projected an image by a French artist: a road sign in a lozenge shape, divided by a horizontal bar into two triangles. In the top one were the words, _DU CALME_ ("Relax!"); in the bottom, "Poetry makes nothing happen." Bernstein, I think, both argued and _showed_ (in prose and verse) how the "nothing" that poetry makes happen is, itself, something important in the political sphere (see above). Lynn Keller came last, with very little time left. She pointed out, first, that the two quotations are out of context, and that both writers thought differently of poetry at other times. Secondly, she focused on the difference that poetry has made, in the (later) 20th century, for _women_, because, before then, women had not been able to publish their poetry before. The possibility for women readers to read poetry by women poets, representing women together or alone and not at objects of male fantasy, has made an immense difference for women.

I've run out of time, so I'll have to summarize the rest of the conference in a Part II, to come shortly.

Amittai F. Aviram

↑ Index

62. Maria Damon

Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

Sat 3 May 1997

---

don't worry amitai you didn't get off on the wrong foot w/ me for disagreeing abt baraka. but i do disagree. what i heard was simply different from what you heard. what i heard was algarin saying glibly: 60s poetry was all rhetoric and theory, today its about feelings, not theory. to which baraka rightly pointed out that 1) to claim to have no theory is a theory and 2) political poetry of the 90s owes a lot to political poetry and poets of the 60s. it is miguel who was anti-theoretical. i'm glad we're talking about tracie morris; about a year ago i asked why there was no discussion of her on the list and now there is. i hope it's not just bcause she mentioned kurt schwitters. she's unbelievable, and quite the poetry diplomat as well. i found hass boring, suspect him of underestimating the educational level of his audience. i found reg e gaines terrific on the round-table, pretty good at his reading, tho i'd heard most of the material before. i'm a big baraka fan, so there you have it. i found algarin's reading less compelling than i have in the past. bernstein and morris were big favorites of mine and that seemed a crowd consensus. i love mick taussig tho i seem to be in a minority on that score; everythng he sez is fascinating to me. i wa with folks who watned to leave after bernstein so didn't get to hear lynn k, sorry lynn. i too had trouble following charlie ulterior's talk. ditto both exposures to meena alexander. adrienne rich was impressive. now i'm skipping all over the place. i was very pleased to hear steven caton, who told a tale of the role poetry played in a very tense political negotiation between two factions of a yemeni tribe who ended up going to war over an abduction of 2 young women; and walter kalaid-jian on trauma theory and poetry, focussng on th armenian genocide. i was sorry to miss mdavidson's talk, but went to a wonderful demonstration of poets in the schools state of the art with craig czury, tobey kaplan and someone else i missed cuz i was having coffee w/ andy clausen, an old friend i hadn't seen in almost 20 yrs, who gave a rousing 7-minute beat style reading...also took in tra-cie morris's panel on sound poetry in the africn amercan tradition, which fea-tured beans, a very exciting dj/mc/rapper who's gotten into poetry in a more purposive way, and cheryl boyce taylor, a member of the performance group cayenne. another good panel was lynn keller on alice fulton, michael eldridge on linton kwesi johnson and the construction of "black britain," and a third speaker i missed. eliot katz's reading was quite charming, and ed roberson's was haunting. i was exhausted and had seen sonia sanchez a month or so ear-lier so skipped out on her and the poet laureate, and the wild locals reading that followed. the final roundtable, with walter k, bob holman and others was also exciting to me. there, maybe you'all can piece together some general idea of the proceedings from all these conflicting reports.

↑ Index

63. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Help! History of the Voice Query
Sat 3 May 1997

Dear Poet Folk:

I'm in the process of revising an essay and need a citation from Brathwaite's History of the Voice. It's out of print and the one copy in the U of Iowa Library is checked out. I am looking for a short passage (about 4 or 5 lines) on p. 13 where EKB discusses the difference between a dialect and a nation language. (I had notes on this section of the book that I can't seem to find.) Could someone be a peach and either post it or backchannel me?

Thanks a bundle!

Julie Schmid
Dept. of English
University of Iowa

↑ Index

64. Peter Ganick announce POTEPOETZINE
Sat 3 May 1997

POTEPOETZINE, a new experimental e-zine
devoted to experimental poetry and e-art
which will appear irregularly, but frequently, is taking subscriptions for the first issue of its series to be sent by e-mail to subscribers before june 1, 1997....

issue ONE will feature approximately 10 poet's work and a section of e-art by hartford ct area artists....

if you want to receive POTEPOETZINE,
please send you e-mail address to one of the following e-mail addresses:
before may 7, 1997: [redacted]
after may 9, 1997: [redacted]
the ZINE will be unavailable may 8, 1997;
please mention this list in your reply....

no submissions, please, with your message,
ONE will include information about submitting texts to TWO and beyond....

do not attempt to fax, telephone, or snail-mail us,
only e-mail will receive a response....

POTEPOETTEXT, a series of longish electronic texts surrounding the on-going worldwide discourse about culture, experimental art, and critical theory
will also be included in your subscription,
submissions to this series are now being accepted....

POTEPOETZINE....POTEPOETTEXT.... experimental poetry and cultural discourse....

↑ Index

65. Stephen Cope

Re: Help! History of the Voice Query

Sat 3 May 1997

Julie:

"History of the Voice" has been reprinted in _Roots_ (U. of Michigan, 1993), which is where this appears on page 266:

I think, however, that language does really have a role to play here, certainly in the Caribbean. But it is an Enlgish that is not the standard, imported, educated English, but that of the submerged, surrealist experience and sensibility, which has always been there and which is now increasingly coming to the surface and influencing the perception of contemporary Caribbean people. It is what I call, as I say, _nation language_. I use the term in contrast to _dialect_. The word dialect has been bandied about for a long time, and it carries very pejorative overtones. Dialect is thought of as "bad" English. Dialect is "inferior" English. Dialect is the language when you want to make fun of someone. Caricature speaks in dialect. Dialect has a long history coming from the plantation where people's dignity was distorted through their languages and the descriptions that the dialect gave to them. Nation language, on the other hand, is the submerged area of that dialect that is much more closely allied to the African aspect of experience in the Caribbean. It may be in English, but often it is in an English which is like a howl, or a shout, or a machine-gun, or the wind, or a wave. It is also like the blues. And sometimes it is English and African at the same time.

Hope the lines you're looking for are here somewhere...

Best,
Stephen Cope

> Dear Poet Folk:
>
> I'm in the process of revising an essay and need a citation from Brathwaite's History of the Voice. It's out of print and the one copy in the U of Iowa Library is checked out. I am looking for a short passage (about 4 or 5 lines) on p. 13 where EKB discusses the difference between a dialect and a nation language. (I had notes on this section of the book that I can't seem to find.) Could someone be a peach and either post it or backchannel me?
>
> Thanks a bundle!
>
> Julie Schmid
> Dept. of English
> University of Iowa

↑ Index

66. Jordan Davis
Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
Sun 4 May 1997

Thanks Amittai for the plug for

this week's POETRY CITY

TRACIE MORRIS & PATRICIA HAMPL

Friday May 9, 7 pm

in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative

5 Union Square West, 7th Floor, New York City

(the day after our big Rukeyser rockestra)

↑ Index

67. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Sun 4 May 1997

So . . . could somebody who did hear Michael Davidson's presentation give us a word or two about it????

↑ Index

68. Maria Damon
Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris
Sun 4 May 1997

wow, what a wild pairing, but terrific, as trish teaches in my dept and i'm anxious for the writers i adore to gain some credibility among my colleagues, so let's hope trish comes back a tracie fan, if she isn't already!!!md

At 12:20 AM -0400 5/4/97, Jordan Davis wrote:
>Thanks Amittai for the plug for
>
>this week's POETRY CITY
>
>TRACIE MORRIS & PATRICIA HAMPL
>
>Friday May 9, 7 pm
>
>in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative
>
>5 Union Square West, 7th Floor, New York City
>
>(the day after our big Rukeyser rockestra)

↑ Index

69. Michael Magee
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Sun 4 May 1997

Thanks, Amittai, for your "long" but informative post. I feel like digressing from the issue of the conference itself to pursue something you said: "the ideology linking reading to salvation was secularized into one that linked reading to citizenship. During the slavery era, reading also was obviously linked to freedom and political self-determination." (Hass?)

The Puritan/Slave connection is not, to my mind, simply coincident. Some crucial writers (crucial to me anyway) significantly receive both - the one who comes most to mind is W.E.B. Du Bois who, taught by William James at Harvard, credits James with providing him with the philosophic tools it took to produce The Souls of Black Folk - through James, Du Bois got basically the whole history of Puritan thought as regards reading - on its far end I'd say its embodied by Emerson's statement that grammar is "organization tyrannizing over character" something that James himself spells out more systematically in the Psychology by deemphacizing grammatical "substantives" (nouns, etc) and emphacizing instead words like "if" "and" "to" "but" (no coincidence either that

G. Stein was also his student). So Du Bois gets a serious education in Puritan-style poststructuralism.

At the same time he has (or discovers) the history of the relationship between slavery/post-slavery and reading/literacy. Frederick Douglas takes the words of his "master," "if you teach that nigger how to read there would be no keeping him" and simply reverses its intended value - "what he most dreaded that I most desired" - saying "From that moment, I understood the pathway from slavery." At the same time, however, he has an incredible awareness of the materiality of writing, its implication in the history of slavery and as such the scarred nature of the word, captured stunningly in that metaphor I can never get out of my head: "My feet have been so cracked with the frost, that the pen with which I am writing might be laid in the gashes." Here the Puritan suspicion that words are - for the human being - scarred and cracked (that they don't signify as intended, that they can't be read "accurately") meets an unintended double that wouldn't have been lost on Du Bois. Freedom, then, or democracy, concepts which get so much play in latter-day fromulations of Puritan antimonianism, always involves a scar. Du Bois's long flirtation with and ultimate acceptance of CPUSA seems to me to have come out of his frustration that these scars continued to be inflicted willfully (his communism - at least on the philosophic level - remained uneasy, still quoting Emerson on democracy as late as '61).

Anyway, thanks again for the post, it got me thinkin'. Baraka too, seems interesting in this context - as late as Blues People ('63) he's celecrating the tradition of "Western Non-Conformity" - a tradtion which of course prominently includes Puritan antinomians from Ann Hutchinson to Emerson ("Whoso would be a man must be a non-conformist") though his mid-sixties break with Greenwich Village culture would have included that tradition ("the Party of Insane Hope" as he would later call it). Ok, I'll shut up now.

-Mike.

↑ Index

70. Gwyn McVay

Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

Sun 4 May 1997

Maria,

can you say more about the Linton Kwesi Johnson/"construction of a black Britain" paper?

Gwyn

↑ Index

71. Maria Damon
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Sun 4 May 1997

---

well, not too much, except that let's see, i hate to do the paper injustice thru inaccurate paraphrase: it documented the establishment of black britain as primarily caribbean (much as gates's article in the new yorker does) but then goes on to talk about the alliances that were made w/ other ethnic immigrants of color most notably south asians who were subsumed under the label "black," but never got as much airplay until, or even after, l'affaire rushdie. talked about "black britain" as a trendy import to the u.s. complete w/ theorists such as gilroy, mercer and hall... parallel to lkj's rise as first a poet then public dub poet now mostly journalist who has become disillusioned w/ attempt to do political, cross-ethnic alliance cultural work...

At 11:36 AM -0400 5/4/97, Gwyn McVay wrote:
>Maria,
>
>can you say more about the Linton Kwesi Johnson/"construction of a black >Britain" paper?
>
>Gwyn

↑ Index

72. David R. Israel
in other sports: Kasparov outwits cyberbrain
Sun 4 May 1997

Poetas,

continuing the hop, skip & jump (from hoop to tabletennis to whatnot), this just in from the cyber / human interface . . .

Kasparov Beats IBM in Game One of Chess Match

NEW YORK (Reuter) - World chess champion Garry Kasparov slowly squeezed the best chess-playing supercomputer into submission Saturday to win the first game of their $1.1 million re-match in New York.

The game began with a quiet, closed opening more suited to the 34-year-old Russian grandmaster's ability to form long-term judgement about his game plan, then exploded in the middlegame with a sacrifice by Kasparov and ended with the champion forcing home a positional advantage.

"Kasparov won this game with such finesse," said International Master Maurice Ashley of the United States, who was one of the official commentators. "His understanding of the computer's weaknesses was pushed to a higher level today."

"It was very complicated and tense," Kasparov said. "I couldn't calculate the position but I felt with these two pawns it would be enough in the endgame."

Kasparov frequently says that the machine's huge calculating powers are no match for his vast experience and intuition about chess. The Russian, world champion since 1985, is considered by most experts to be the best ever player of the ancient game.

.
.....
.....
\\\

the architecture of famous buildings such as Watts Towers, he proceeded to read variously from the Foundations, Spires, Arches that comprise the work. Some of the lines I brought away with me were:

the eye may be said to be sun in another form all men are lidless visionaries through the night
the lord is a delicate hammerer a vaulting of arteries beating against the dark. This is the body of light primrose abysm
at the back of it all, ardor and fire riddle iota sublime
where heat sweats wheat for purple mountain majesties

Ron also read from a work of 67 short, dark quatrains about death and resurrection that was made into a poster with the poems arranged in the shape of a pyramid. These poems packed quite a punch, too.

Others in the spellbound audience included MC Adam Cornford, Andrew Joron, Charles Smith, Kevin Killian, Cliff Gassoway, and Kush. Some 6 of us retired to Picaro afterwards and chatted over tapas. Ron said it took him 20 years to write ARK, but wouldn't tell me how old he was when he started.

Friday night (also at New College but this time via Small Press Traffic) Dale Smith returned from Austin to read with Joanne Kyger. Dale read newer work including stuff influenced by his reading _Anna Karenina_. The list of lines includes:

love's embarrassing lack of eros
there is no fair way to love death the fine product of an age incapable of itself
the blunt jolt of breath pushing out at you I fear the music fizzles [through?] space learn to connect and think not no self? I am a little uptight, if you want to know the truth

Host Dodie Bellamy reintroduced us immediately to Bolinas' Joanne Kyger, who read us her New York and Buddhism-inspired work, such as:

Ahoy! Electronic nightmare! [a poem addressed to the television, of course]
new-age metaphysical smoothies constant creation of self is a tricky mess
the nothingness bound to get sucked into the bag [Joanne's description of NY skinny-left-margin poets working: "Bang!
Bop-a-bop. Bang! Bop-a-bop"] all of a sudden the space between raindrops was filled with rain but what about hoarding ideas and feelings?

Ouch! bangs shin on buddha

The audience included Stephanie Baker and Nicole at the door, Kevin Killian on lead Tab, and Renee Gladman, Elizabeth Robinson, Steve Dickison and Tina Rotenberg, Michael Price, Sarina, Duncan McNaughton, Charlie Palau, Rob Hale, Tom Stolmar, Ed Ainsworth, Etel Adnan and Simone Fatel (my spelling undoubtedly needs help here) overdubbing handclaps.

Duncan and Jean McNaughton hosted a lovely gathering at their new Mission home after the reading.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

74. henry gould

Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

Sun 4 May 1997

Thanks for wonderful, thorough reports from Amittai & Maria. Glad to hear Charles Bernstein is a new formalist. If he finds a stable identity he can join the Providence School. We're publishing a Prov School anthology in 1978 - watch for it - focusing on poetic/political problems from a red shift perspective.

From where I sit today, the issues of poetry & literacy seem less interesting than the connection between poetry & storytelling & mythology. Maybe it's just the pale green appearing on all the trees now. It's Persephone, Orpheus in the land of the dead. Nativerican mythology is full of Orpheus stories. It's Dylan's basement tapes. Poetry doesn't feed your liberation it possesses you. You can vote for literacy, that's fine: the literate poet will continue to write form letters on stock themes. It's something else, not power, not convention. It's in between Authority (sleepwalking) and Will (sleepwalking). It's a big wind, I say. Beyond who's in charge or who's down under. Plot. Drama. Story. Recognizing its human power in this way will help see what it MIGHT mean in a political sense. Sing, sing along in sing-sing... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

75. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Re; More on the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference
Sun 4 May 1997

aa sez:

> One other thing I left out in the last posting. When Altieri posed that challenge to Tricia Rose and Charles Bernstein, Bernstein responded (better than Rose, I thought) by talking about purposeful _frauds_ in the history of poetry. It may have been at that point that he said the sentence that Hass later quoted, "Poetry fakes nothing actually." It was either there or in his talk about the Difference that Poetry Makes. Well, it was a running theme. I don't _really_ think that testimony/witnessing really _does_ fit in with the idea of poetic fraud (even if we consider such "holy frauds" as the Deuteronomic corpus)--i.e., you're not supposed to _know_ that it's a fraud, if it is. That was the point that the two of them didn't want to get into very much, since it's something of an irresolvable question, I think.
>
> Amittai

again we remember differently: it was my memory that altieri got up, said he had a question about tricia rose's paper, and then asked charles bernstein to respond!! fond as i am of charlie, it seemed to be precisely that kind of erasure of black female subjectivity that we need some...retooling of...? in other words, charles was specifically called on to speak FOR tricia, after the question had been posed, ostensibly, to her --so no wonder he struck you as more articulate than her; it was a set up, albeit unintentional.

↑ Index

76. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: con-text
Sun 4 May 1997

At 8:52 AM 5/5/97, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> but it's important to know that these two have been associated for decades -- I first met Algarin through Baraka's introduction -- and many of Baraka's short plays have been produced at Algarin's performance space --

yes. this was a fun brawl between old friends more than anything else, and not something to get all hand-wringy about. md -ps who's hoxa?

↑ Index

77. manny savopoulos
SAVE NPR (petition
Sun 4 May 1997

Please read this VERY IMPORTANT petition! I hope you will then sign it and pass it along to everyone you know. We've got to be active in saving these important institutions! Please sign! Thanks!

This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile expenditure of $1.12/ year of their taxes, a petition follows. If you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me). If not, please don't kill it -- send it to the email address listed here:

[redacted]

PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile". Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.

A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.

Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October

1.The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard.

Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to:
[redacted].

If that address is inoperative, please send it to:
[redacted].

This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them.

Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

1) Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley,CO
2) Robert M. Penn, San Francisco, CA
3) Gregory S. Williamson, San Francisco, CA
4) Daniel C. Knightly, Austin, TX
5) Andrew H. Knightly, Los Angeles, CA
6) Aaron C. Yeater, Somerville, MA
7) Tobie M. Cornejo, Washington, DC
8) John T. Mason, Dalton, MA
9) Eric W. Fish, Williamstown, MA
10) Courtney E. Estill, Hamilton College, NY
11) Vanessa Moore, Northfield, MN
12) Lynne Raschke, Haverford College, PA (originally Minnesota)
13) Deborah Bielak, Haverford, PA
14) Morgan Lloyd, Haverford, PA 19041
15) Galen Lloyd, Goucher College, MD
16) Brian Eastwood, University of Vermont, VT
17) Elif Batuman, Harvard University, MA
18) Kohar Jones, Yale University, CT
19) Claudia Brittenham, Yale University, CT
20) Alexandra Block, Yale University, CT
21) Susanna Chu, Yale University, CT
22) Michelle Chen, Harvard University, MA
23) Jessica Hammer, Harvard University, MA
24) Ann Pettigrew, Haverford College, PA
25) Kirstin Knox, Swarthmore College, PA
26) Jason Adler, Swarthmore College, PA
27) Daniel Gottlieb, Swarthmore College (but truly from Lawrence, KS)
28) Josh Feltman, Tufts University, MA
29) Louise Forrest, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA
30) HongSup Park, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA (originally from Portage, Wisconsin)
31) Ana Sandoval,Massachusetts Institute of Technology
32) Katherine Navarrete, Massachusetts Institute of Technology

33) Mandisa Washington, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
34) Stephen Balzac, San Francisco, CA
35) Howard Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
36) Danielle Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
37) David S. Lefkowitz, University of California - Los Angeles
38) Frank S. Albinder, San Francisco, CA
39) Read S. Sherman, Harvard Divinity School
40) Stephane Lemelin, Cambridge, MA
41) Thomas Ouellette, Cambidge, MA
42) Richard Russell, Cambridge, MA
43) Nella Wennberg, Jamaica Plain, MA
44) Eric Smith, Jamaica Plain, MA
45) Alex Graham, Boston, MA
46) Dean Wei, Chicago, IL
47) Luisita Frances, Chicago, IL
48) Roy Vella, Stanford, CA
49) Alan Hellawell, Mountain View, CA
50) Timothy A. Scott, San Francisco, CA
51) Albert M. Yeh, Mountain View, CA
52) Susan Yeh, Seattle, WA
53) Jonathan Payne, Seattle, WA
54) Cena Pohl, Seattle, WA
55) David Perk, Seattle, WA
56) Robert Srygley, Seattle WA
57) Katarzyna S. Kubzdela, Chicago, IL
58) Katy Human, Stanford, CA
59) Erica Fleishman, Reno, NV
60) C. Richard Tracy, Reno, NV
61) Kenneth E. Nussear, Reno, NV
62) Christopher R. Tracy, University of Wisconsin, Madison, WI
63) Kristin Komives, Carrboro, NC
64) Jennifer Goldman, Chapel Hill, NC
65) Darcy Leach, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
66) Van Luong, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
67) Aurora M. Sherman, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
68) Paul O. Stern, Seattle, WA
69) Erika Tapman, U. of Vermont College of Medicine
70) Opher Donchin, Urbana, IL
71) Prof. Pamela Cosman, University of California, San Diego
72) Ari Levitt, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
73) Nathan Martin, Berkeley, California
74) Lynn Price, Kensington, California

75) Leslie Shown, Kensington, CA
76) Mike Boals, Berkeley, CA
77) Wendy Boals, Berkeley, CA
78) Effie Westervelt, Tiburon, CA
79) Mary Burns, Taos, NM
80) Karen Page, New York, NY ([redacted])
81) Gary Holleman, Bemidji, MN ([redacted])
82) Tim Rosa, Newton, MA ([redacted])
83) Doug Hersh, Sherborn MA ([redacted])
84) Ruel Little, Somerville, MA ([redacted])
85) Stefan Wennik, Andover, MA ([redacted])
86) Melissa Walia, SF, CA ([redacted])
87) Tracy Brown, SF, CA ([redacted])
88) John T. Miller, SF, CA ([redacted])
89) M. Todd Davis, SF, CA ([redacted])
90) Michael Demetrios, SF, CA
91) J. Marc Perrin, NY, NY ([redacted])
92) Alyse Daberko, NY, NY ([redacted])
93) Jessica Guertin, Washington Univ. St. Louis([redacted])
94) Ellen Watson, San Francisco, CA
95) Bridgitt Arnold, Seattle, WA
96) Erica Yenni, Seattle, WA
97) Kerri Karvetski, Seattle, WA ([redacted])
98) Mark Butler, Seattle, WA
99) lazlow jones, long beach, ny [redacted]
100) Laura Bykowski, NYC, NY [redacted]
101) Amy Stettler, NYC, NY [redacted]
102) F Ben Dana, Burlington, Vermont
103) Bill Dahill-Baue, Brattleboro, VT
104) S. Ryan Quick, Yale University, New Haven, CT
105) Jerry Anne Dickel, Yale University, New Haven, CT
106) Donald Beebe, Yale University, New Haven, CT
107) Stephanie Seery, School of Theology at Claremont, CA
108) Katherine A. Johnson, Baltimore, MD
109) Cynthia J. Halstead, Burke, VA
110) Ronald Northrip, Falls Church, VA [redacted]
111) Jane Levandoski, University of Delaware, DE
112) Denise J. Hills, University of Delaware, DE
113) David P. Sobel, College of William & Mary, VA
114) Amey T. Sadler, College of William& Mary, VA
115) Donna M. Livingston, Woodbridge, VA
116) Karen A. Morris, Burke, VA

117) Michael E. Perdue Atlanta, GA
118) David Cour, Washington D.C.
119) Katie Sergent, Washington D.C.
120) Nathan Sewell, Nashville, TN
121) Peter Eby, Nashville, TN
122) jeff taraday, seattle, WA
123) Julie Taraday, Seattle, WA
124) Stephanie Cooper, Seattle WA
125) Kailen Mooney, Seattle, WA
126) Dylan Clark, Univ. of WA, Anthropology, Seattle 98195
127) Daniel Simons, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
128) Kirsten Wild, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
129) Barbara Busetti, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
130) Leslie Macchia, Mountain View, CA (└────┘)
131) Kris Wollenhaupt, San Jose, CA
132) Ann Bowers, Palo Alto, CA
133) Sue Tysko, Palo Alto, CA
134) Liza Schmeltz, San Jose, CA
135) Judith Schweikert, Palo Alto, CA
136) Joan Wylie, Palo Alto, CA
137) Marcia Pugsley, Palo Alto, CA
138) Daryl Davis, Palo Alto, CA
139) Amy Gerstein, San Francisco, CA
140) Christian Holden, San Francisco, CA
141) Stephen Divenere, San Francisco, CA
142) Karen Yetman, San Francisco, CA (└────┘)
143) Christine D'Elia, San Francisco, CA
144) Rachel Bredemeier, Cambridge, MA
145) Karin Horlbeck, Cambridge, MA
146) Mark Bourne, Cambridge, MA (└────┘)
147) Norm Slocum, Weymouth, MA (└────┘)
148) Carol Hughes, Boulder, CO (└────┘)
149) Susan Hagg, San Francisco,CA(└────┘)
150) Dante Landucci, Bethesda, MD (└────┘)
151) Ann Dannenberg Rosen, Newton, MA
152) Elena Conti, Cambridge, MA
153) Brent Richter, Rowley Ma
154) Libby Jones, Rowley, MA
155) Kitkoon Chan, Pleasanton CA
156) Dennis Crayon, Boston, MA
157) Claude R Labbe, Boston, MA
158) Jeffrey M. Klapes, Lynnfield, MA

159) David E. Knudsen, Somerville, MA
160) Chris Ann Matteo, New York, NY
161) Scott G. Williams, Austin, Texas
162) Linda Wiencken Williams, Austin, Texas
163) Lucinda Martin, Florence, TX
164) Karen E. LeFevre, Austin, Texas
165) David E. Soileau, Austin, Texas ([redacted])
166) Kirk P. White, RN, MSN, Austin, TX
167) Lisa Rogers, Austin, TX ([redacted])
168) Shelley Brown, Denver, CO ([redacted])
169) Deborah Chandler, Loveland, CO ([redacted])
170) Linda Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])
171) Tom Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])
172) Gage Evans, Denver, CO ([redacted])
173) Kara M. Van Horn, Denver, CO ([redacted])
174) Carmelia Dyer, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
175) Douglas Goldman, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
176) Eugenie Georgas, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
177) Michael Birdsong, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
178) Todd Arbetter, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
179) Marika Holland,Boulder, CO ([redacted])
180) Adriene Hughes, Brighton, MA
181) Andrew Myerson, Brighton, MA
182) Lucila De Alejandro, San Diego, CA
183) Robin Taylor, San Diego CA
184) Shelly Diaz, NYC, NY
185) Beth Davidson, Incline Village, NV
186) Jon Paul Davidson, Incline Village, NV
187) Kate Glanz, Durham, NH
188) Filson Glanz, Durham, NH
189) Dehan Glanz, San Francisco, CA
190) Justine Reese, San Francisco, CA
191) Carl Bettag, San Francisco, CA
192) Eugenia Lean, Los Angeles, CA
193) Nicole Huang, Berkeley, CA
194) George Krompacky, Yale University, CT
195) Peter Carroll, Yale University, New Haven, CT
196) James Carter, New Haven, CT
197) Eagle Glassheim, Columbia University, New York City
198) David S. Frey, Columbia University, New York City
199) Ellen B. Umland, Bay Village, OH
200) Susanna D. Kopchains, Hawthorne, NJ

201) Mark Margaretten, Denver, CO
202) Jon L. Leland, Mill Valley, CA
203) Steve Blumenthal, San Francisco, CA
204) Paula Mantel, Honolulu, HI
205) Gaile Sickel, Honolulu, HI
206) Robert Wolfson, Fairfax, CA
207) Shams Wm. Kairys, Oakland, CA
208) Donald Halley, New Lebanon, NY
209) David Iman Adler, New Lebanon, NY
210) Robert Barris, Highland Park,
211) Janet Karpus, Kalamazoo, MI
212) Terry Macak, Kalamazoo, MI
213) Lynne Aspnes, Ann Arbor MI
214) Lorna Haywood, U of M Ann Arbor MI
215) Robert Debbaut, Salt Lake City, UT
216) Kaye Ramsey, Salt Lake City, UT
217) Timothy Jones, U of T San Antonio TX
218) Eugene Dowdy, UTSA, San Antonio, TX
219) Lawrence Stomberg, Truman State University, Kirksville, MO
220) Lisa Stomberg, Colorado School of Mines, CO
221) Paula Lynch, Laurel Springs, NJ
222) Cara Kendric, Philadelphia, PA
223) Deborah Conger Hughes, University of Washington, Seattle
224) Dean Heerwagen, Univ. of Washington, Seattle
225) Mark Clayton, College Station, TX
226) Mardelle Shepley, Bryan, TX
227) Mike Blair Bryan Tx ([redacted])
228) David Lucey Oakland, CA
229) Ted Rallis Davis CA. ([redacted])
230) Leigh Ann Giles, Davis CA ([redacted])
231) Kamala Crompton, Sebastopol CA ([redacted])
232) Patrick Kelly
233) Alan J. Hiller ([redacted])
234) Mitchell D. Klein ([redacted])
235) Nicholas Wulfekuhle
236) Andrew Downes
237) Kelly Bowers, Washington DC
238) Thomas Unger, Alexandria, VA
239) Dwight Gibbs, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
240) Selena Maranjian, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
241) Lynnette A. Simon, Cambridge, MA ([redacted])
242) Susan Martin, Acton, MA([redacted])

243) Kenneth Lord, West Hempstead, NY ([redacted])
244) Christopher Vickery, Holliswood, NY ([redacted])
245) Christopher Winters, Stamford,CT ([redacted])
246) Paul McIsaac, New York City ([redacted])
247) John Douglas, Charlotte, VT ([redacted])
248) Norio Kushi, Shelburne, VT ([redacted])
249) JoAnne Kushi, Shelburne, VT
250) Allan Balliett, Shepherdstown, WV ([redacted])
251) Michael Reilly, NYC, NY ([redacted])
252) Cindi Weiss, Hoboken, NJ ([redacted])
253) Sam Cohen, NY, NY
254) Kathryn Mintz, NY, NY ([redacted])
255) Brad Greenquist, LA, CA
256) Helga Schier, LA, CA ([redacted])
257) Kimberly Burns, LA,CA ([redacted])
258) Laurel Cook, NY,NY([redacted])
259) Todd Gitlin, NY, NY ([redacted])
260) Norris McNamara, Chicago, IL ([redacted])
261) Scott Diamond, Chicago, IL
263) Scott Black, Oak Park, IL
264) Linda Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
265) Daniel Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
266) Robert Ginsburg, Fayetteville, Ar
267) Susan Jenkins, Fayetteville, Ar
268) Dianne Schlies, Albuquerque, NM
269) Paul Schlies, Albuquerque, NM
270) Bob Dickey, Portland, OR
271) Elizabeth Dickey, Tucson, AZ
272) Timothy Mayhew, Farmington, NM
273) Marjorie Robertson, Arlington, VA
274) Deron Hurst, Arlington, VA
275) Erika Warner, Arlington, VA
276) Nancy Ward, Arlington, VA
277) Heather Podlich, Washington, DC
278) Lillian Rice, Washington, DC
279) Nicole Dannenberg, Washington, DC (originally from Sunnyvale, CA)
280) Suzanne Isack, Washington DC
281) Iracema de Moura Castro, Washington, DC
282) Tom Sander, Cambridge, MA
283) Peri Smilow, Cambridge, MA
284) Marc Johnson, Cambridge, MA and NY, NY
285) Patty Lyons, Chicago, IL

286) Tom Mula, Chicago, IL
287) Denis O'Hare, Brooklyn, NY
288) Derek Anson Jones, Brooklyn , NY
289) Karole Dill Barkley, New York, NY
290) Vivian Hunt, Cambridge, MA
291) Sengal Selassie, New York, NY
292) Patience R. Singleton, Washington, DC
293) Deneta A. Howland, Takoma Park, MD ([redacted])
294) Rana Dershowitz, New York, NY
295) Maria Politis, New York, NY
296) Anthony Pasca, E.Northport, NY
297) David Schliecker, New York, NY
298) Cynthia Schliecker, Madison, WI
299) Matthew Bazan, Madison WI
300) Samir Sugathan, Western Kentucky University, Bowling Green, KY
301) Seamus Mulryan, Beloit, WI
302) Amos Blanton, Beloit, WI
303) Brad Blanton, Stanley, VA.
304) James Goldstein, North Potomac, MD
305) David Torrealba, Washington, DC
306) Evan Eller, Annapolis, MD
307) Melaina Eller, Washington, DC
308) Jonathan Morris, East Haddam, CT
309) Veronica Morris, East Haddam, CT
310) E.Richard Brown, Los Angeles, CA
311) Steven P. Wallace, Los Angeles, CA
312) Robert J. Squires, Los Angeles, CA
313) William F. Donaldson, Buffalo, NY
314) Absalom S. Kotulski, New York, NY
315) Rick E. Kotulski, Corbett, OR
316) Louann Wakefield, Corbett, OR
317) Tawnya Napoli, San Francisco, CA
318) Carla Lease, San Francisco, CA
319) James Austin, San Francisco CA
320) Diane Whitmore, San Francisco, CA
321) Margaret Weber, Chicago, IL
322) Kathryn H. Cummings, Lakewood, OH
333) Lawrence J. Taylor, Lakewood, OH
334) Kimberly Cummings, Jackson Heights, NY
335) Nina Kauder, New York City, NY
336) Juliana Luecking, New York, NY
337) Richard Ford, Santa Monica, CA

338) Tamara McDonough, Los Angeles, CA
339) Vince Gatton, Los Angeles, CA
340) John Starr, Santa Monica, CA ([redacted])
341) C. Davey Utter, Venice, CA ([redacted])
342) Gary Allen, Santa Monica, CA
342) Barbara J. Toennies, Santa Monica, CA
343) Tom Bliss, Sherman Oaks, CA
344) Lynn Karpinski, San Diego, CA
345) Michael Haskins, San Diego, CA
346) Bill Bailey, San Francisco, CA
347) David Cusick, New York, NY
348) Andrew Livanis, New York, NY
349) Emmanuel Savopoulos, Albany, NY

↑ Index

78. aerialedge
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Mon 5 May 1997

"OLD LEFT"?
we need more of it
"baloney"?
i'm an e-mail vegan
"theory"?
what maria said
"Amiri"?
an amazing artist

well poetics, whaddya think -- was it Kevin Davies said poetry is rhetoric on the edge of a blackout. . .

i'd be interested to hear other reports of baraka at rutgers.

goodnight

↑ Index

79. Bob Grotjohn
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Mon 5 May 1997

> Thanks for wonderful, thorough reports from Amittai & Maria. Glad to hear Charles Bernstein is a new formalist.

I thought he was a nude formalist, but maybe the impurer has knew close.

↑ Index

80. Rob Hardin
Lou Stathis, RIP 5/4/97
Mon 5 May 1997

To whom it may concern:

Lou Stathis, editor and author, died between twelve and three a.m. on 5/4/97. There will be a wake on Tuesday and a burial Wednesday. All sincerely interested friends are welcome to write for more information.

All best always,

Rob Hardin

PS: Lou was the editor of Reflex, the pulp series for ReSearch, the DC Vertigo line, and the author of the experimental music review column in the 70's French-inflected comic, Heavy Metal. (His column's influence was the only lasting effect of that enterprise.) He was also the author of several whipsmart essays on alternative culture.

Among those he helped were Samuel Delaney, Kathy Acker, John Shirley, James Ellroy, David Wojnarowicz, and lesser lights such as yours truly. He taught generations about alt culture and what's more, he was kind, sarcastic, and never spoke of his own work when he had the chance to mention other writers.

Your suffering is over,
but the rest will be remembered.
Sic itur ad astra.
No conduit can be lost.

http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/
http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm

↑ Index

81. Kenneth W Sherwood
Ronald Johnson
Mon 5 May 1997

Interested to read of RJ performance just after setting down ARK on the desk. Steve, Kevin et al, I wonder how you heard the 'historic epic' disclaimer--I hear plenty of affinity (if not influence) of Zukofsky in Ark, if not the dense history of Cantos/Max/Patterson. What do we do with a non-historic epic? Music as much as ark-i-text-ure seems to undergird the poem.

Anyone else reading ARK at present? Anyone know if RJ is coming through Buffalo/Toronto area? I've not even heard a tape of him reading.

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

82. Gwyn McVay

Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

Mon 5 May 1997

>>>I thought he was a nude formalist, but maybe the impurer has knew close.

No, no, the in-peerer has new cloaks.

Gwyn

↑ Index

83. Amittai F. Aviram

Re; More on the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference

Mon 5 May 1997

Thanks, Mike Magee, for very interesting comments about Puritanism, Antinomianism, literacy, William James, Frederick Douglass, and W. E. B. Du Bois. Your comment about Baraka's career (and attitude towards things "Western") coincides well with my own impression that he was much better when he was LeRoi Jones--not a very popular opinion these days, I dare say. In fairness, I must say that Baraka _was_ witty at times--his reading was not without wit. It's just that the bullshit outweighed the wit, for me.

Maria, yes, we have very different impressions of the difference between Algarin and Baraka. Granted, I came in late. But I very distinctly remember Algarin saying, "We need new theories ... we need theories ..." while being interrupted and sniped at by Baraka. My impression was that Baraka felt that there was enough "theory" in classical CP-style Marxism--history is a history of class struggle, etc.--that "theory" in the sense of poststructuralism was just a lot of bourgeois claptrap. That was quite consistent with his general anti-academic and anti- intellectual tone throughout both his comments (the ones I heard) and his reading. So I really have no idea why you thought Algarin was anti-theory and Baraka pro-theory. It's not that either one was anti or pro, it's that Algarin was for innovativeness in theory (90s) whereas Baraka thought we had damn well enough theorizing forever, and we should just get on with the molitov cocktails.

Baraka was yelling so loud that I wore foam-rubber earplugs (fortunatly still in my very bourgeois blazer pocket from the ultra- bourgeois plane ride), so I could hear him as _loud_ after I put the plugs in but didn't have to suffer permanent hearing loss.

Somebody else asked me to elaborate on the paper about _HOW(ever)_. The gist of it was that the magazine provided a _hypertext_ before the electronic technology was available to make it happen in the current sense. The magazine was short and printed on paper, stapled, so it was very cheap to subscribe. It contained notes about the work presented in a general way (called ... ugh! ... I forget ... something like "In Question" or something--Brian, help!), and above the specific literary texts were "Working Notes," either by the author or the editors, either thematic or biographical or both, or artistic in some other way. The notes whose name I can't remember would start on the first page and be continued later, surrounding the literary texts. The whole thing was put together by a collective. So the authorship was multiple but not totally effaced. There were all sorts of interactions among the texts on the pages.

As promised, I'll try to cover the rest of the conference shortly--perhaps after I finish the undergrad papers or something. Anyway, I totally agree with Maria (!) about Eliot Katz. Eliot Katz was the "warmup band" for Sonia Sanchez and then Robert Hass. They were all wonderful in very different ways. Katz is, indeed, a "Ginsberg epigone" as Brian said, but he has even more self- effacing humor than Ginsberg, and a kind of freshness and cheerful exuberance that I found quite enchanting. In the center of his reading was a long, Ginsbergesque (but very funny) poem directed to the 20th century and urging it, oratorically, to hurry up and die already. It was quite hilarious, but also very poignant, as he recalled many of the horrors of the 20th century, both on the large scale (the holocaust) and personally (relatives of Katz's lost in the holocaust; friends of Katz's who died of AIDS or committed suicide). This last--the references to young people dying of disease or suicide--formed a powerfully poignant allusion to Ginsberg's _Howl_ and _Kaddish_. The whole poem--and the others-- were quite ingenious at the same time as they were very compelling.

One other thing I left out in the last posting. When Altieri posed that challenge to Tricia Rose and Charles Bernstein, Bernstein responded (better than Rose, I thought) by talking about purposeful _frauds_ in the history of poetry. It may have been at that point that he said the sentence that Hass later quoted, "Poetry fakes nothing actually." It was either there or in his talk about the Difference that Poetry Makes. Well, it was a running theme. I don't _really_ think that testimony/witnessing really _does_ fit in with the idea of poetic fraud (even if we consider such "holy frauds" as the Deuteronomic corpus)--i.e., you're not supposed to _know_ that it's a fraud, if it is. That was the point that the two of them didn't want to get into very much, since it's something of an irresolvable question, I think.

Amittai

↑ Index

84. Mark Prejsnar
Re: SAVE NPR (petition
Mon 5 May 1997

My personal opinion is that NPR/PBS probably AREN'T worth saving. Many folks I know refer to 'em as Corporate Public Broadcasting, and with good reason. Mark P.

On Sun, 4 May 1997, manny savopoulos wrote:

> Please read this VERY IMPORTANT petition! I hope you will then sign it and pass it along to everyone you know. We've got to be active in saving these important institutions! Please sign! Thanks!
>
> This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile expenditure of $1.12/year of their taxes, a petition follows. If you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me). If not, please don't kill it -- send it to the email address listed here:
>
> [redacted]
>
> PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a > portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile". Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.
>
> A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.
>
> Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which > is October
>
> 1.The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard.
>
> Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to:
[redacted].

If that address is inoperative, please send it to:
[redacted].

This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them.

Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

1) Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley,CO
2) Robert M. Penn, San Francisco, CA
3) Gregory S. Williamson, San Francisco, CA
4) Daniel C. Knightly, Austin, TX
5) Andrew H. Knightly, Los Angeles, CA
6) Aaron C. Yeater, Somerville, MA
7) Tobie M. Cornejo, Washington, DC
8) John T. Mason, Dalton, MA
9) Eric W. Fish, Williamstown, MA
10) Courtney E. Estill, Hamilton College, NY
11) Vanessa Moore, Northfield, MN
12) Lynne Raschke, Haverford College, PA (originally Minnesota)
13) Deborah Bielak, Haverford, PA
14) Morgan Lloyd, Haverford, PA 19041
15) Galen Lloyd, Goucher College, MD
16) Brian Eastwood, University of Vermont, VT
17) Elif Batuman, Harvard University, MA
18) Kohar Jones, Yale University, CT
19) Claudia Brittenham, Yale University, CT
20) Alexandra Block, Yale University, CT
21) Susanna Chu, Yale University, CT
22) Michelle Chen, Harvard University, MA
23) Jessica Hammer, Harvard University, MA
24) Ann Pettigrew, Haverford College, PA
25) Kirstin Knox, Swarthmore College, PA
26) Jason Adler, Swarthmore College, PA
27) Daniel Gottlieb, Swarthmore College (but truly from Lawrence, KS)
28) Josh Feltman, Tufts University, MA
29) Louise Forrest, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA

30) HongSup Park, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA (originally from Portage, Wisconsin)
31) Ana Sandoval,Massachusetts Institute of Technology
32) Katherine Navarrete, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
33) Mandisa Washington, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
34) Stephen Balzac, San Francisco, CA
35) Howard Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
36) Danielle Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
37) David S. Lefkowitz, University of California - Los Angeles
38) Frank S. Albinder, San Francisco, CA
39) Read S. Sherman, Harvard Divinity School
40) Stephane Lemelin, Cambridge, MA
41) Thomas Ouellette, Cambidge, MA
42) Richard Russell, Cambridge, MA
43) Nella Wennberg, Jamaica Plain, MA
44) Eric Smith, Jamaica Plain, MA
45) Alex Graham, Boston, MA
46) Dean Wei, Chicago, IL
47) Luisita Frances, Chicago, IL
48) Roy Vella, Stanford, CA
49) Alan Hellawell, Mountain View, CA
50) Timothy A. Scott, San Francisco, CA
51) Albert M. Yeh, Mountain View, CA
52) Susan Yeh, Seattle, WA
53) Jonathan Payne, Seattle, WA
54) Cena Pohl, Seattle, WA
55) David Perk, Seattle, WA
56) Robert Srygley, Seattle WA
57) Katarzyna S. Kubzdela, Chicago, IL
58) Katy Human, Stanford, CA
59) Erica Fleishman, Reno, NV
60) C. Richard Tracy, Reno, NV
61) Kenneth E. Nussear, Reno, NV
62) Christopher R. Tracy, University of Wisconsin, Madison, WI
63) Kristin Komives, Carrboro, NC
64) Jennifer Goldman, Chapel Hill, NC
65) Darcy Leach, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
66) Van Luong, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
67) Aurora M. Sherman, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
68) Paul O. Stern, Seattle, WA
69) Erika Tapman, U. of Vermont College of Medicine
70) Opher Donchin, Urbana, IL
71) Prof. Pamela Cosman, University of California, San Diego
72) Ari Levitt, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
73) Nathan Martin, Berkeley, California
74) Lynn Price, Kensington, California
75) Leslie Shown, Kensington, CA

> 76) Mike Boals, Berkeley, CA
> 77) Wendy Boals, Berkeley, CA
> 78) Effie Westervelt, Tiburon, CA
> 79) Mary Burns, Taos, NM
> 80) Karen Page, New York, NY ([redacted])
> 81) Gary Holleman, Bemidji, MN ([redacted])
> 82) Tim Rosa, Newton, MA ([redacted])
> 83) Doug Hersh, Sherborn MA ([redacted])
> 84) Ruel Little, Somerville, MA ([redacted])
> 85) Stefan Wennik, Andover, MA ([redacted])
> 86) Melissa Walia, SF, CA ([redacted])
> 87) Tracy Brown, SF, CA ([redacted])
> 88) John T. Miller, SF, CA ([redacted])
> 89) M. Todd Davis, SF, CA ([redacted])
> 90) Michael Demetrios, SF, CA
> 91) J. Marc Perrin, NY, NY ([redacted])
> 92) Alyse Daberko, NY, NY ([redacted])
> 93) Jessica Guertin, Washington Univ. St. Louis([redacted])
> 94) Ellen Watson, San Francisco, CA
> 95) Bridgitt Arnold, Seattle, WA
> 96) Erica Yenni, Seattle, WA
> 97) Kerri Karvetski, Seattle, WA ([redacted])
> 98) Mark Butler, Seattle, WA
> 99) lazlow jones, long beach, ny [redacted]
> 100) Laura Bykowski, NYC, NY [redacted]
> 101) Amy Stettler, NYC, NY [redacted]
> 102) F Ben Dana, Burlington, Vermont
> 103) Bill Dahill-Baue, Brattleboro, VT
> 104) S. Ryan Quick, Yale University, New Haven, CT
> 105) Jerry Anne Dickel, Yale University, New Haven, CT
> 106) Donald Beebe, Yale University, New Haven, CT
> 107) Stephanie Seery, School of Theology at Claremont, CA
> 108) Katherine A. Johnson, Baltimore, MD
> 109) Cynthia J. Halstead, Burke, VA
> 110) Ronald Northrip, Falls Church, VA [redacted]
> 111) Jane Levandoski, University of Delaware, DE
> 112) Denise J. Hills, University of Delaware, DE
> 113) David P. Sobel, College of William & Mary, VA
> 114) Amey T. Sadler, College of William& Mary, VA
> 115) Donna M. Livingston, Woodbridge, VA
> 116) Karen A. Morris, Burke, VA
> 117) Michael E. Perdue Atlanta, GA
> 118) David Cour, Washington D.C.
> 119) Katie Sergent, Washington D.C.
> 120) Nathan Sewell, Nashville, TN
> 121) Peter Eby, Nashville, TN
> 122) jeff taraday, seattle, WA
> 123) Julie Taraday, Seattle, WA

124) Stephanie Cooper, Seattle WA
125) Kailen Mooney, Seattle, WA
126) Dylan Clark, Univ. of WA, Anthropology, Seattle 98195
127) Daniel Simons, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
128) Kirsten Wild, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
129) Barbara Busetti, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
130) Leslie Macchia, Mountain View, CA ([redacted])
131) Kris Wollenhaupt, San Jose, CA
132) Ann Bowers, Palo Alto, CA
133) Sue Tysko, Palo Alto, CA
134) Liza Schmeltz, San Jose, CA
135) Judith Schweikert, Palo Alto, CA
136) Joan Wylie, Palo Alto, CA
137) Marcia Pugsley, Palo Alto, CA
138) Daryl Davis, Palo Alto, CA
139) Amy Gerstein, San Francisco, CA
140) Christian Holden, San Francisco, CA
141) Stephen Divenere, San Francisco, CA
142) Karen Yetman, San Francisco, CA ([redacted])
143) Christine D'Elia, San Francisco, CA
144) Rachel Bredemeier, Cambridge, MA
145) Karin Horlbeck, Cambridge, MA
146) Mark Bourne, Cambridge, MA ([redacted])
147) Norm Slocum, Weymouth, MA ([redacted])
148) Carol Hughes, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
149) Susan Hagg, San Francisco,CA([redacted])
150) Dante Landucci, Bethesda, MD ([redacted])
151) Ann Dannenberg Rosen, Newton, MA
152) Elena Conti, Cambridge, MA
153) Brent Richter, Rowley Ma
154) Libby Jones, Rowley, MA
155) Kitkoon Chan, Pleasanton CA
156) Dennis Crayon, Boston, MA
157) Claude R Labbe, Boston, MA
158) Jeffrey M. Klapes, Lynnfield, MA
159) David E. Knudsen, Somerville, MA
160) Chris Ann Matteo, New York, NY
161) Scott G. Williams, Austin, Texas
162) Linda Wiencken Williams, Austin, Texas
163) Lucinda Martin, Florence, TX
164) Karen E. LeFevre, Austin, Texas
165) David E. Soileau, Austin, Texas ([redacted])
166) Kirk P. White, RN, MSN, Austin, TX
167) Lisa Rogers, Austin, TX ([redacted])
168) Shelley Brown, Denver, CO ([redacted])
169) Deborah Chandler, Loveland, CO ([redacted])
170) Linda Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])
171) Tom Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])

> 172) Gage Evans, Denver, CO ([redacted])
> 173) Kara M. Van Horn, Denver, CO ([redacted])
> 174) Carmelia Dyer, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 175) Douglas Goldman, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 176) Eugenie Georgas, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 177) Michael Birdsong, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 178) Todd Arbetter, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 179) Marika Holland,Boulder, CO ([redacted])
> 180) Adriene Hughes, Brighton, MA
> 181) Andrew Myerson, Brighton, MA
> 182) Lucila De Alejandro, San Diego, CA
> 183) Robin Taylor, San Diego CA
> 184) Shelly Diaz, NYC, NY
> 185) Beth Davidson, Incline Village, NV
> 186) Jon Paul Davidson, Incline Village, NV
> 187) Kate Glanz, Durham, NH
> 188) Filson Glanz, Durham, NH
> 189) Dehan Glanz, San Francisco, CA
> 190) Justine Reese, San Francisco, CA
> 191) Carl Bettag, San Francisco, CA
> 192) Eugenia Lean, Los Angeles, CA
> 193) Nicole Huang, Berkeley, CA
> 194) George Krompacky, Yale University, CT
> 195) Peter Carroll, Yale University, New Haven, CT
> 196) James Carter, New Haven, CT
> 197) Eagle Glassheim, Columbia University, New York City
> 198) David S. Frey, Columbia University, New York City
> 199) Ellen B. Umland, Bay Village, OH
> 200) Susanna D. Kopchains, Hawthorne, NJ
> 201) Mark Margaretten, Denver, CO
> 202) Jon L. Leland, Mill Valley, CA
> 203) Steve Blumenthal, San Francisco, CA
> 204) Paula Mantel, Honolulu, HI
> 205) Gaile Sickel, Honolulu, HI
> 206) Robert Wolfson, Fairfax, CA
> 207) Shams Wm. Kairys, Oakland, CA
> 208) Donald Halley, New Lebanon, NY
> 209) David Iman Adler, New Lebanon, NY
> 210) Robert Barris, Highland Park,
> 211) Janet Karpus, Kalamazoo, MI
> 212) Terry Macak, Kalamazoo, MI
> 213) Lynne Aspnes, Ann Arbor MI
> 214) Lorna Haywood, U of M Ann Arbor MI
> 215) Robert Debbaut, Salt Lake City, UT
> 216) Kaye Ramsey, Salt Lake City, UT
> 217) Timothy Jones, U of T San Antonio TX
> 218) Eugene Dowdy, UTSA, San Antonio, TX
> 219) Lawrence Stomberg, Truman State University, Kirksville, MO

220) Lisa Stomberg, Colorado School of Mines, CO
221) Paula Lynch, Laurel Springs, NJ
222) Cara Kendric, Philadelphia, PA
223) Deborah Conger Hughes, University of Washington, Seattle
224) Dean Heerwagen, Univ. of Washington, Seattle
225) Mark Clayton, College Station, TX
226) Mardelle Shepley, Bryan, TX
227) Mike Blair Bryan Tx ([redacted])
228) David Lucey Oakland, CA
229) Ted Rallis Davis CA. ([redacted])
230) Leigh Ann Giles, Davis CA ([redacted])
231) Kamala Crompton, Sebastopol CA ([redacted])
232) Patrick Kelly
233) Alan J. Hiller ([redacted])
234) Mitchell D. Klein ([redacted])
235) Nicholas Wulfekuhle
236) Andrew Downes
237) Kelly Bowers, Washington DC
238) Thomas Unger, Alexandria, VA
239) Dwight Gibbs, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
240) Selena Maranjian, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
241) Lynnette A. Simon, Cambridge, MA ([redacted])
242) Susan Martin, Acton, MA([redacted])
243) Kenneth Lord, West Hempstead, NY ([redacted])
244) Christopher Vickery, Holliswood, NY ([redacted])
245) Christopher Winters, Stamford,CT ([redacted])
246) Paul McIsaac, New York City ([redacted])
247) John Douglas, Charlotte, VT ([redacted])
248) Norio Kushi, Shelburne, VT ([redacted])
249) JoAnne Kushi, Shelburne, VT
250) Allan Balliett, Shepherdstown, WV ([redacted])
251) Michael Reilly, NYC, NY ([redacted])
252) Cindi Weiss, Hoboken, NJ ([redacted])
253) Sam Cohen, NY, NY
254) Kathryn Mintz, NY, NY ([redacted])
255) Brad Greenquist, LA, CA
256) Helga Schier, LA, CA ([redacted])
257) Kimberly Burns, LA,CA ([redacted])
258) Laurel Cook, NY,NY([redacted])
259) Todd Gitlin, NY, NY ([redacted])
260) Norris McNamara, Chicago, IL ([redacted])
261) Scott Diamond, Chicago, IL
263) Scott Black, Oak Park, IL
264) Linda Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
265) Daniel Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
266) Robert Ginsburg, Fayetteville, Ar
267) Susan Jenkins, Fayetteville, Ar
268) Dianne Schlies, Albuquerque, NM

269) Paul Schlies, Albuquerque, NM
270) Bob Dickey, Portland, OR
271) Elizabeth Dickey, Tucson, AZ
272) Timothy Mayhew, Farmington, NM
273) Marjorie Robertson, Arlington, VA
274) Deron Hurst, Arlington, VA
275) Erika Warner, Arlington, VA
276) Nancy Ward, Arlington, VA
277) Heather Podlich, Washington, DC
278) Lillian Rice, Washington, DC
279) Nicole Dannenberg, Washington, DC (originally from Sunnyvale, CA)
280) Suzanne Isack, Washington DC
281) Iracema de Moura Castro, Washington, DC
282) Tom Sander, Cambridge, MA
283) Peri Smilow, Cambridge, MA
284) Marc Johnson, Cambridge, MA and NY, NY
285) Patty Lyons, Chicago, IL
286) Tom Mula, Chicago, IL
287) Denis O'Hare, Brooklyn, NY
288) Derek Anson Jones, Brooklyn , NY
289) Karole Dill Barkley, New York, NY
290) Vivian Hunt, Cambridge, MA
291) Sengal Selassie, New York, NY
292) Patience R. Singleton, Washington, DC
293) Deneta A. Howland, Takoma Park, MD ([redacted])
294) Rana Dershowitz, New York, NY
295) Maria Politis, New York, NY
296) Anthony Pasca, E.Northport, NY
297) David Schliecker, New York, NY
298) Cynthia Schliecker, Madison, WI
299) Matthew Bazan, Madison WI
300) Samir Sugathan, Western Kentucky University, Bowling Green, KY
301) Seamus Mulryan, Beloit, WI
302) Amos Blanton, Beloit, WI
303) Brad Blanton, Stanley, VA.
304) James Goldstein, North Potomac, MD
305) David Torrealba, Washington, DC
306) Evan Eller, Annapolis, MD
307) Melaina Eller, Washington, DC
308) Jonathan Morris, East Haddam, CT
309) Veronica Morris, East Haddam, CT
310) E.Richard Brown, Los Angeles, CA
311) Steven P. Wallace, Los Angeles, CA
312) Robert J. Squires, Los Angeles, CA
313) William F. Donaldson, Buffalo, NY
314) Absalom S. Kotulski, New York, NY
315) Rick E. Kotulski, Corbett, OR
316) Louann Wakefield, Corbett, OR

> 317) Tawnya Napoli, San Francisco, CA
> 318) Carla Lease, San Francisco, CA
> 319) James Austin, San Francisco CA
> 320) Diane Whitmore, San Francisco, CA
> 321) Margaret Weber, Chicago, IL
> 322) Kathryn H. Cummings, Lakewood, OH
> 333) Lawrence J. Taylor, Lakewood, OH
> 334) Kimberly Cummings, Jackson Heights, NY
> 335) Nina Kauder, New York City, NY
> 336) Juliana Luecking, New York, NY
> 337) Richard Ford, Santa Monica, CA
> 338) Tamara McDonough, Los Angeles, CA
> 339) Vince Gatton, Los Angeles, CA
> 340) John Starr, Santa Monica, CA ([redacted])
> 341) C. Davey Utter, Venice, CA ([redacted])
> 342) Gary Allen, Santa Monica, CA
> 342) Barbara J. Toennies, Santa Monica, CA
> 343) Tom Bliss, Sherman Oaks, CA
> 344) Lynn Karpinski, San Diego, CA
> 345) Michael Haskins, San Diego, CA
> 346) Bill Bailey, San Francisco, CA
> 347) David Cusick, New York, NY
> 348) Andrew Livanis, New York, NY
> 349) Emmanuel Savopoulos, Albany, NY

↑ Index

85. Brian McHale

Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

Mon 5 May 1997

In response to the query about whether papers from the "Poetry & Public Sphere" shindig would be published: it seems that the organizers are looking to set up a web-page with versions of the papers & ongoing discussion. They're aiming to have it up by the beginning of June. You could confirm this by checking in with them at [redacted].

I don't think I want to try to supplement Maria's & Amitai's full-dress ac- counts of the conference (nor do I have the energy to do so). But here are some memorable quotes out of my notebook:

At the panel on "Diversity in Avant-Garde Publishing," the moderator, Burt Kimmelman said (it might have been part of the statement for discussion origi- nally circulated to the panelists): "There may never again be a separate 'poe- try' ..." At the same panel, Charles Alexander (who showed some excellent slides of some of the books he's made: pornography for book-fetishists) described an exercise he once did with a group of school-kids, in which they had to make an acrostic poem using the letters of their own names. A kid name Gabriel wrote: "Gay An- gels Break Rules In Every Language." Big applause; best poem of the day. And still at that panel, Ed Foster spoke somewhat caustically of true vs. per- cevied centers & margins in the institutions of poetry. Adrienne Rich, he said, stands "dead center" in the mainstream; and he spoke of her "undeserved aura of victimization." Ouch.

At the roundtable on "The Difference That Poetry Makes," Altieri pursued the the motif of "the street" (as the place of "authenticity"), & remarked some- thing to the effect that yes, the street is the place where one lives, but we shouldn't forget that it is also a means of getting to where others live. At the same roundable, Michael Taussig (whom I understood almost not at all) said something about "Digging into language so as to out-constract constructed- ness ...."

At the panel on African-American Aesthetics/Sound Poetry, the guy called Beans had a lot of illuminating things to say,but I was listening rather than writing ... however, right at the end, Tracie Morris, who was moderating, said some- thing memorable about the speed of commercial appropriation of popular creativi ty: "Now they can take something away from you & sell it back to you in a Sprite commerical in 6 months, when it used to take them 2 years ...."

At the roundtable mysteriously called "Locations of Poetry," Charlie Altieri said: "Social dreaming keeps us sane." And he also talked about a contemporary wis- dom poetry, the purpose of which would be "to find a 'we' that can be will- ed."

I was too exhausted by the time to closing roundtable to take notes, though Bob Holman & James Haba, in particular, said things worth recording.

I'm not a great fan of Alicia Ostriker's, but she had some of the best quotes. She quoted (without identifying the source) a definition of postmodernism: "Post- modernism is modernism without the hope." She quoted Adrienne Rich: "To be a feminist is to have the nerves of a mid- wife." And she quoted the rabbis (but which one?): "It is not incumbent on you to fin- ish the task. Nor are you free to give it up." I recommend reciting the latter in the morning upon rising & again in the eve- ning before going to bed.

Brian

↑ Index

86. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: con-text
Mon 5 May 1997

The somewhat elliptical refs. to the Baraka / Algarin dustup are of interest to one (this one) who has known of both a long time. Algarin has had his own anti-theory moments -- and of course, in the years immediately preceding his movement into Marxism Baraka denounced that particular theory as useless white stuff --

but it's important to know that these two have been associated for decades -- I first met Algarin through Baraka's introduction -- and many of Baraka's short plays have been produced at Algarin's performance space --

as for "he was better when he was LeRoi Jones" == well, I know I was better then -- but I continue to think that this way of splitting up his work doesn't really get us anywhere -- If you look at all of his work, you find that there were moments of agit-prop before, and that there continue to be moments of real innovation now -- It's hard for me sometimes to take seriously the "theory" of a person who once thought Hoxa a serious theorist, but Baraka continues to have much to say that does interest me -- as for Algarin's theory, I simply have no idea what theories he advances now --

I guess all I'm saying, all I can say since I wasn't there at Rutgers, is that I know enough of both men to see that the confrontation can't usefully be understood as academic vs antiacademic, theory vs practice, early Jones vs present Baraka etc -- even ,,, or perhaps especially, if that's how the combatants themselves presented it --

_____
on a quite different note:

have just spent two days at Stanford -- Friday, in between listening to fascinating tapes of C.L.R. James, I had an interesting lunch meeting with Hilton Obenzinger, whose _New York on Fire_ you should all know, followed by a great poetry reading by Hank Lazer --

Saturday, Susan Dunn and Maeera Shreiber hosted a one day conference sponsored by the Humanities Center -- I've been trying for years to promote better communications among the area universities, and this conference may help advance that cause -- in the course of the day, among several good papers, I got to hear Hank Lazer's "resisting the Rhetoric of Wonder," whose title enacted the very rhetoric it addressed! -- Charles Altieri brought us some aftershocks from his Rutgers panel and Marjorie Perloff presented material from the Yasusada essay I didn't get to hear in Denver -- this last prvoked some intersting responses -- including the suggestion that one of the respondents to Marjorie's

Boston Review essay on this might himself be a hoax (I have my doubts on this score, even though the letter is oddly written, as the only reason advanced for the belief that there is no such person was that the believer had never heard of him as someone in Japanese studies) -- and a great dinner hosted by the hosts at the end of the day -- I was having such a good time talking to everybody that I almost missed my train home,, which might have caused me to violate Palo Alto's newly enacted anti-sit-lie statute (and no, it's not a law that says you can't lie) --

---
in the same vein

also at Stanford May 8-10, for those in the area -- a conference on "Movements of the Avant Garde" I'll have to miss most of the sessions myself, but will try to get there for Saturday's presentations -- Several speakers from South America, Europe, even Arizona! the program looks exciting -- you can get info at:

http://www-leleand.stanford.edu/~conlon/avantgarde.html

says here the event is "free and open to the public"

just don't sit on the sidewalk in Palo Alto--home of the derriere garde

↑ Index

87. henry
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Mon 5 May 1997

On Mon, 5 May 1997 11:21:06 -0400 Brian McHale said:
>And she quoted the rabbis (but which one?): "It is not incumbent on you to fin>ish the task. Nor are you free to give it up."
>I recommend reciting the latter in the morning upon rising & again in the eve>ning before going to bed.

Wasn't that Rabbi Franz K. of Prague?
- Henry

↑ Index

88. David Israel
Re: Question about Gwendolyn Brooks
Mon 5 May 1997

---

not an answer:

or: did some adrenalinic editor fiddle w/ the verb?
fight / flight / fiddle -- a trinity of f words?
triangle of responses -- write now, triangulate later . . .

d.i.

> *... Does anyone know if the Norton "flight" rather than "fight" is a misprint, or did Brooks at some time change the word? ...*
> Bob Grotjohn

↑ Index

89. Laura Moriarty
Ronald Johnson and the Speculative
Mon 5 May 1997

The Poetry center has a tape of Ronald Johnson reading extensively from ARK on 12/13/90.

It can be ordered, or you can get more info, by emailing me.

BTW - Thanks to everyone for great posts about the Poetry and the Public Sphere Conference - I also went to Poetry and the Speculative last Saturday at Stanford and really enjoyed the presentations by Robert Kaufman (The End of Negative Capability) and Barbara Guest, Marjorie Perloff's cogent talk about Yasusada, Hank Lazer's talk about anti-wonder - especially enjoyed the Kit Robinson stuff at the end - and Al Gelpi's really mad talk about Jack Kerouac and Robert Lowell at Lowell House (not together) at Harvard -

Laura Moriarty
the Poetry Center
[redacted]

> Interested to read of RJ performance just after setting down ARK on the desk. Steve, Kevin et al, I wonder how you heard the 'historic epic' disclaimer--I hear plenty of affinity (if not influence) of Zukofsky in Ark, if not the dense history of Cantos/Max/Patterson. What do we do with a non-historic epic? Music as much as ark-i-text-ure seems to undergird the poem.
>
> Anyone else reading ARK at present? Anyone know if RJ is coming through Buffalo/Toronto area? I've not even heard a tape of him reading.
>
> Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

90. Bob Grotjohn
Question about Gwendolyn Brooks
Mon 5 May 1997

This is a call for help from anyone who might know:

The fourth sonnet of Gwendolyn Brooks's sequence, "The Children of the Poor," begins, in my Selected Poems (54), "First fight. Then fiddle." In the new Norton (1587), the poem begins "First flight. Then fiddle." Does anyone know if the Norton "flight" rather than "fight" is a misprint, or did Brooks at some time change the word? If she did, when? "Flight" has its own sort of fit in the sonnet, but not quite the same as "fight."

Thanks.

Bob Grotjohn

↑ Index

91. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

Aldon, Laura and/or especially Hank "Niblick" Lazer himself - any chance of us here reading that wonderful anti-wonder paper either on the List (too long?) or posted to some other site?

Patrick Pritchett
who's wondering just what cld Robert Kaufman mean by "the end of negative capability?" Sounds like a doubtful case...

↑ Index

92. Sylvester Pollet
Re: rich text
Mon 5 May 1997

No Problem, Blair. it says indent 2, Times Bold Blue (mondo), but which book of Adrienne's is that in? Maybe new work? sp, on Eudora.
>
>indent 2, Times Bold Blue (mondo)
>
>indent 3, Palatino Pink (very big)
>
>
>If you can read this message as rich text, I'd be interested to know what >email program you are using.

>
>Thanks.
>
>Blair
>
>

↑ Index

93. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: con-text
Mon 5 May 1997

Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> At 8:52 AM 5/5/97, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>
> >
> >but it's important to know that these two have been associated for decades
> >-- I first met Algarin through Baraka's introduction -- and many of > >Baraka's short plays have been produced at Algarin's performance space --
> >
>
> yes. this was a fun brawl between old friends more than anything else, and > not something to get all hand-wringy about. md -ps who's hoxa?

Maria,
I believe that's former Albanian President Enver Hoxha [hardly a theorist...]
--Dan Z

↑ Index

94. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

---

well . . . one of my favorite moments came at the end of the end of negative capability talk, when a fellow in the audience raised his hand to ask "what is 'negative capability?'"

↑ Index

95. David Israel
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

Hi --

I wasn't there & know naught of this debate (if it is one), but at risk of stating the obvious: no doubt the phrase
"The End of Negative Capability" is modeled after the well-ballyhooed phrase
"The End of History"
(by that economics-theory chappie from Stanford U. meseems)

"end" thus meaning more "final phase" than "objective" (presumably)

(unlike Jorie Graham's "The End of Beauty" which was presumably more on the teleological end of the "end" teeter-totter) -- one thinks of "endgame," Mr. Kasparov not specifically -- more like, "a new phase of poetry w/o Mr. Eliot" (??)

(hey pardon my unknowing as to particulars of Kaufman)
d.i.

>>> Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]> 05/05/97
09:18pm >>>
Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>
> Aldon, Laura and/or especially Hank "Niblick" Lazer himself - any chance of > us here reading that wonderful anti-wonder paper either on the List (too > long?) or posted to some other site?
>
> Patrick Pritchett
> who's wondering just what cld Robert Kaufman mean by "the end of negative > capability?" Sounds like a doubtful case...

Well, Pat, perhaps Kaufman has taught too many composition classes and, like me, finds himself increasingly "irritable" about "reaching after fact and reason"... I dunno, but I'd like to. Does "The End" mean "The Aim"? The Teleology of Negative Capability? Adrift twixt Scylla & Charybdis? Oarless past the Sirens, rudderless too, all the sailors sighing into the sail? In what spirit should one listen to a lecture called "The End of Negative Capability"? Does it imply a prediction? We can only wait to see whether Kaufman will post his piece for the list-- but whether to wait languidly or impatiently I can't quite tell (at least not till I've read it, I suppose... & even then...)... Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

96. Blair Seagram rich text
Mon 5 May 1997

This is a test to see if rich text formatting can be received and read (by those with the capability) on the poetics list

<color><param>0000,0000,FFFF</param>

<paraindent><param>right,right,left,left</param><fontfamily><param>B_-Times_Bold</param><bigger><bigger><bigger>

indent 2, Times Bold</bigger></bigger></bigger> <bigger><bigger><bigger>Blue (mondo)</bigger></bigger></bigger></fontfamily></paraindent></color><paraindent><param>right,right,left,left</param><bigger><bigger><bigger><bold><color><param>FFFF,0000,FFFF</param>

</color></bold></bigger></bigger></bigger></paraindent><bigger><bigger><bigger><bigger><bold><color><param>FFFF,0000,FFFF</param>

</color></bold></bigger><bold><color><param>FFFF,0000,FFFF</param><paraindent><param>right,right,right,left,left,left</param><fontfamily><param>Palatino</param>indent 3, Palatino Pink</fontfamily></paraindent></color></bold><paraindent><param>right,right,right,left,left,left</param> <bold><fontfamily><param>Palatino</param><color><param>FFFF,0000,FFFF</param> (very big)

</color></fontfamily></bold></paraindent><fontfamily><param>Palatino</param><color><param>FFFF,0000,FFFF</param>

</color></fontfamily></bigger></bigger>If you can read this message as rich text, I'd be interested to know what email program you are using.

Thanks.

Blair

↑ Index

97. Laura Moriarty
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

Rob Kaufman is not on this list - The talk he gave, of which I initially posted only a partial title, was complexly supportive of the idea and activity of Negative Capability - The specifics of Keats scholarship (when certain things were said in letters etc.) which he included were of much interest to me - I enjoyed the way Kaufman followed the changes in Keats' approach to his own idea -

The full title was "The End of Negative Capability, Coda from Barabara Guest". The piece was written _in opposition_ to claims that Negative Capability, in its various transmutations, is either dead or merely "aestheticist". He brought in Adorno and there was a short part about Barbara Guest at the end which led into her very thoughtful reading and presentation. I can't do his argument justice, and the talk that was given was part of a longer article, but I will post to the list when I know where it is going to be published.

Laura Moriarty

> Aldon, Laura and/or especially Hank "Niblick" Lazer himself - any chance of us here reading that wonderful anti-wonder paper either on the List (too long?) or posted to some other site?
>
> Patrick Pritchett
> who's wondering just what cld Robert Kaufman mean by "the end of negative capability?" Sounds like a doubtful case...

↑ Index

98. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

laura,

i wld love to know where the "negative capability" essay is published. i've recently presented 2 conference papers on that and "seeing" in keats' poetry, and have always thot bp was a negative capability writer.

looking fwd to that info -- thank you,

c.

↑ Index

99. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Speculative/Wonder
Mon 5 May 1997

Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>
> Aldon, Laura and/or especially Hank "Niblick" Lazer himself - any chance of > us here reading that wonderful anti-wonder paper either on the List (too > long?) or posted to some other site?
>
> Patrick Pritchett
> who's wondering just what cld Robert Kaufman mean by "the end of negative > capability?" Sounds like a doubtful case...

Well, Pat, perhaps Kaufman has taught too many composition classes and, like me, finds himself increasingly "irritable" about "reaching after fact and reason"... I dunno, but I'd like to. Does "The End" mean "The Aim"? The Teleology of Negative Capability? Adrift twixt Scylla & Charybdis? Oarless past the Sirens, rudderless too, all the sailors sighing into the sail? In what spirit should one listen to a lecture called "The End of Negative Capability"? Does it imply a prediction? We can only wait to see whether Kaufman will post his piece for the list-- but whether to wait languidly or impatiently I can't quite tell (at least not till I've read it, I suppose... & even then...)... Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

100. Steven Marks
alterior plugs
Mon 5 May 1997

Citoyens!

Over the last few weeks on the list, there have been offers to get copies of various chapbooks, etc. I'd strongly recommend that you get hold of _Witz 5.1_, Sylvester Pollet's _Backwoods Broadsides_, and _Shadows: New and Selected Dialogues on Poetics_ from Mark Wallace and Jeff Hansen.

Here's another clue for you alll-ll-ll....

"There is no such thing as language."
(statement by Mark Wallace in a dialogue from _Shadows_)

Much good work by everybody in making space for the various poetries.

a bientot,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

101. orpheus

GINSBERG READING UPDATE

Mon 5 May 1997

This might be of interest to anyone in the Montreal area. The readers will be reading only A.G's work in tribute to the master of "first thought, best thought." A bientot.

> **********
> MEMORIAL READING FOR ALLEN GINSBERG
> MAY 14, AT THE UPSTAIRS BAR, 1254 MacKay Street
> (Guy Metro)
>
> 8 PM - sharp - no charge -
>
> Laszlo Gefin
> Clifford Duffy
> Brian Sentes
> Judith Herz
> Lee Gotham
> George Slobodzian will all read poems by the late
> Allen Ginsberg
>
> **********

↑ Index

102. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris . . . more more

Mon 5 May 1997

If you're wondering about line breaks in Sonia Sanchez's "improvisation," I believe you can find it improvised yet again in one of her recent collections -- title escapes me at the moment -- "Wounded in the House of a Friend" or something along those lines (my books are on the other side of the continental divide -- forgive me my memory) --

I have to admit it's neither music enough nor poetry enough for me -- I've heard this "improvisation" enough times now that I could probably do it myself as lip synch --

Maryemma Graham is doing a Summer Institute on the Middle Passage in literature -- I suspect the deadlines for applications have passed -- but I'll try to get a report on the proceedings from somebody later in the year --

↑ Index

103. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS

Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris

Mon 5 May 1997

---

maria wrote:

wow, what a wild pairing, but terrific, as trish teaches in my dept and i'm anxious for the writers i adore to gain some credibility among my colleagues, so let's hope trish comes back a tracie fan, if she isn't already!!!md

Maria,

i just saw Tracie Morris at the St. Mark's 30th anniversary symposium this weekend. she read saturday nite with Amiri Baraka, Todd Colby, and Dael Orlandersmith. i enjoyed her reading, her energy, her rhythm, her musicality (she does an incredibly good vocal "scratch"), but i had some problems with it. i kept wondering, what does it mean?: a scratch appropriated from rap music. and what meaning does this poetry have, beyond the limited meaning conveyed in a parity of words repeated over and over? for instance, she did "middle passage" which is, essentially, the song of a female slave on a slave ship. i think there were some words interspersed with the wordless chanting/singing. the chant/song was quite beautiful, but i wanted it to give more meaning (i suppose it wasn't enough music to give the ineffable meaning of music, and wasn/t enough words to give the meaning in language.) i/m fascinated with its creation, the fact that there is a Tracie Morris who creates this wonderful and difficult work, and that it is, in some inexplicable, wonderful way, poetry, but i must say, the limit in its meaning holds me off to a certain degree, or maybe i hold myself from it because of the lack of meaning. i spoke to her afterwards and asked if she had seen sonia sanchez read -she had, earlier that night!- and if she knew sonia's "middle passage," which sonia performed at Rutgers -which Tracie didn't know. sonia, i think conveys a gret deal more meaning in sticking to WORDS. true, she does repeat chunks of them several times, AND begins the piece with a burst of quietly intense hysterical laughter that seeps into the piece at various points, BUT the depth of the piece lay in sonia's unwavering attention to the speaker's THOUGHTS. (i'm paraphrasing and guessing at line breaks here) trying to convey the horror of the journey, the female speaker moves through its various aspects: "It was the boat/ the boat/ the boat/ It was/ the boat"...she moves on to "It was/ the raping/ the raping/ the raping..." so we are always held at breath-point with this woman and her experiences. sonia's reading was surely one of the high points of the Rutgers conference for me. it's interesting that Tracie says the experience of the slave ship is ineffable, would account for her translation (sublimation?) (transsubstantiation?) of experience into almost pure sound. towards the end of Tracie's reading, i felt the cognitive part of my brain shutting down in fatigue and frustration, although i cherish this struggle of language and sound. poetry is expansive, never ceasing to surprise in its diversity and inovation.

kyle

↑ Index

104. Jena Osman lab-book
Mon 5 May 1997

On May 2, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Looking back at Lab Book from UB Poetics (1992), and it's just about coming into focus. If copies still exist, I endorse heartily the purchase. Of interest not merely because it contains early (but representative) work by Juliana Spahr, Mark Wallace, Jena Osman, Lew Daly, Jeff Hansen, Bill Tuttle, Elizabeth Burns, Elizabeth Willis, Cynthia Kimball and Peter Gizzi, but also because it provides a record the closest thing to a POETICS archive for the workshop process short of a documentary film. To refresh the memory: each workshop participant submitted a poem to the group to be responded to; the poems and their responses are revealing. When the book came out, I had no idea what any of these people were talking about (my bad). Now, the styles are clearer (more work exists, more reading has transpired, and I'm getting older too...).

Copies of this project do still exist. Just to clarify, the Lab Book is not the result of a workshop, but a project I organized around the fact of so many different writers being here at SUNY-Buffalo...its procedure is the beginning of what became the format for issue #1 of _Chain_ (the journal I edit with Juliana Spahr).

Here's an offer: A copy of the Lab-Book is yours for free with a two-issue subscription to _Chain_. The next issue of _Chain_ (#4), on "Procedures," will be out this summer, with work by Jackson Mac Low, Clarinda Mac Low, Caroline Bergvall, Keith and Rosmarie Waldrop, Leslie Scalapino, Janet Zweig, Margaret Morton, Joan Retallack, Tina Darragh, Bill Fuller, Harryette Mullen, Maria Damon, Kevin Killian and many MANY more. Chain #5 will be on "other languages."

Subscriptions are $10 for one issue, $18 for two. Copies of issues 3:1 and 3:2 on "Hybrid Genres" are still available. You can order either by e-mailing me at [redacted] or by sending a request to Chain at 215 Ashland Avenue, Buffalo, NY 14222. Mention if you would like a copy of the Lab-Book as well. Thanks,

Jena

↑ Index

105. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: More Poetry ... more Tracie Morris

Tue 6 May 1997

KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS wrote:
>
> maria wrote:
>
> wow, what a wild pairing, but terrific, as trish teaches in my > dept
> and i'm anxious for the writers i adore to gain some credibility among my > colleagues, so let's hope trish comes back a tracie fan, if she isn't > already!!!md
>
> Maria,
>
> i just saw Tracie Morris at the St. Mark's 30th anniversary symposium this > weekend.
> she read saturday nite with Amiri Baraka, Todd Colby, and Dael > Orlandersmith. i enjoyed her reading, her energy, her rhythm, her > musicality (she does an incredibly good vocal "scratch"), but i had some > problems with it. i kept > wondering, what does it mean?: a scratch appropriated from rap music. and > what meaning does this poetry have, beyond the limited meaning conveyed > in a parity of words repeated over and over? for instance, she > did "middle passage" which is, > essentially, the song of a female slave on a slave ship. i think there > were some words interspersed with the wordless chanting/singing. the > chant/song was quite beautiful, but i wanted it to give more meaning (i > suppose it wasn't enough > music to give the ineffable meaning of music, and wasn/t enough words to > give the meaning in language.) i/m fascinated with its creation, the > fact that there is a Tracie Morris who creates this wonderful and > difficult work, and that it is, in some inexplicable, wonderful way, > poetry, but i must say, the limit in its meaning holds me off to a > certain degree, or maybe i hold myself from it because of the lack of > meaning. i spoke to her afterwards and asked if she had seen sonia > sanchez read -she had, earlier that night!- and if she knew sonia's > "middle passage," which sonia performed at Rutgers -which Tracie didn't > know. sonia, i think conveys a gret deal more meaning in sticking to > WORDS. true, she does repeat chunks of them several times, AND begins > the piece with a burst of quietly intense hysterical laughter that seeps > into the piece at various points, BUT the depth of the piece lay in > sonia's unwavering attention to the speaker's THOUGHTS. (i'm > paraphrasing and guessing at > line breaks here) trying to convey the horror of the journey, > the female speaker moves through its various aspects: "It was the boat/ the > boat/ the boat/ It was/ the boat"...she moves on to "It was/ the > raping/ the raping/ the raping..." so we are always held at > breath-point with this woman and her experiences. sonia's reading was > surely one of the high points of the Rutgers conference for me. it's > interesting that Tracie says the experience of the slave ship is > ineffable, would account for her translation (sublimation?) > (transsubstantiation?) of experience into almost pure sound. towards the > end of Tracie's reading, i felt the cognitive part of my brain shutting > down in fatigue and frustration, although i cherish this struggle of > language and sound. poetry is expansive, never ceasing to surprise in > its diversity and inovation.

>
> kyle

Hello!

I also attended that reading, having missed both Baraka's & Morris' reading [though not Morris' right-on panel appearance] at Rutgers last week, and must agree very much with Kyle about Morris & Sanchez [whom I also heard with Bob Haas at Rutgers]. Dael (sp?), too, keeps the words in focus, as does Baraka, who counterpoints scat with signifying in a way I find very engaging, despite Algarin's demurs at Rutgers about the status of theory or lack of same in the 60s' push in which Amiri persists, indefatigable & not to suffer such dissing lightly. I really enjoyed much of Morris' performance [and some of Colby's, too], but primarily as just and only that, as Kyle says, poetic, but hard to call poetry without dilution of the term. In fact, it seems that much of the repetition in such performance pieces functions as a synchronic analogue [by accretion or, better, intensification] of the recursion-over-time [the diachrony available from the page] of what I've known throughout my life as "poetry." Such insistence upon repetition seems to me compensatory, as if to forestall the possibility that the audience might not choose to reread the work by force-feeding at worst [as one does a goose to disease its liver for pate] or by risking overdose at best [as if assuming that the 'message' acts like peanuts: "here, have ONE"--obviously impossible since, as Balke said, "less than All cannot satisfy Man." Well, yeah, but not necessarily all at once...]. In fact, Charles Bernstein, in perhaps the least 'gossipy' segment of a "Gossip" session at St. Mark's the afternoon of the Baraka/Morris/et al. reading, made a germane but perhaps unpopular point by saying that the relatively straightforward, unadorned, individual voice of the poet true to the words read from the page offered the most radical instance of the art, even moreso, he suggested, than the histrionics [however artful and engaging] of the primarily 'performance artist.' I.e., rests, too, constitute an essential part of the music. [Whereupon I, too, shall, for the moment, rest.] Best, Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

106. henry gould
negative capability
Tue 6 May 1997

I looked up n.c. in the Princeton Encyclopedia, irritably reaching after fact & reason. Absorption of the poet's personality in the process of composition. Gusto in identification, empathy, sympathy, mimicry to the extent of seeming to be without character or moral compass (Iago interests the poet as much as any good or heroic figure). Contentment with half-knowledg e without irritable reaching after fact & reason. The poem reflects these motives - it is a sympathetic, magnetic form that draws its audience out of themselves into new appreciation of mystery, beauty, truth, etc.

Princeton SAYS the concept developed in 2 different/opposed directions: 1) Wildean idea of CONSCIOUS ambiguity - the mask, the persona; 2) modernist idea of "sincerity in objectivity" (objective correlative). Both quite different from Keats' original, less calculated(?) idea of left-brainedness(?)...

Does it sound like Keats is saying the poet exhibits traits based on the deep motivation of composition - absorption in a kind of dream- object which unifies (as dreams do) various kinds of beauty & meaning in a sort of uncanny, lifelike, "unexplained" meaning - a dream-action, a mini-drama. And is this impulse based on an "overdetermined" SET of impulses - personal interest in matching/re-making past poems (which hold the same fascination-grip on the poet as on audience in general) - unconscious social disequilibriums or goals - talent as energeia working itself out - & is all this just romantic extra-poetic limburger or is the uncanny in poetry (the tragicomic acting-out) actually the essential thing & what is beautiful about it sings the mockingbird ha ha. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

107. Mark Baker
Which Rabbi
Tue 6 May 1997

Brian McHale said:
> >And she quoted the rabbis (but which one?): "It is not incumbent on you to fin> >ish the task. Nor are you free to give it up."
> >I recommend reciting the latter in the morning upon rising & again in the eve> >ning before going to bed.

The rabbi is Tarfon, from _Pirke Abot_ (_The Wisdom of the Fathers_), and the task is the study of Torah, so Brian's recommendation would take us all to the yeshiva. I've seen this aphorism quoted in the most outlandish contexts, including at the end of an argument supporting nuclear deterence. Rabbis Tarfon's other famous saying is a better way to start the day: "The day is short, the work is plentiful, the laborers are sluggish, and the reward is abundant, and the master of the house presses."

Mark Baker

↑ Index

108. charssmith
Re: Ronald Johnson
Tue 6 May 1997

In a message dated 97-05-05 04:12:14 EDT, Ken Sherwood writes:

<< I wonder how you heard the 'historic epic' disclaimer--I hear plenty of affinity (if not influence) of Zukofsky in Ark, if not the dense history of Cantos/ Max/Patterson. What do we do with a non-historic epic? Music as much as ark-i-text-ure seems to undergird the poem. >>

Ken,

I didn't hear any disclaimer of influence in RJ's remarks. More that he is working in the long poem tradition of Pound, Williams, Olson, Zukofsky, but that his poem was to be in some sort of (poetic?) "present" & that in distinction to his forbears, the historical would not enter the poem (explicitly, at least--& that raises a number of questions, doesn't it?). Ron has always pointed to LZ as a major influence & it's certainly there in the music of _Ark_. In fact, he read the "Spire on the Death of LZ." He pointed w/ pride that only he & LZ had managed to "finish" their poems. I don't see that he draws off the others so explicitly in Ark; I see the Olson influence more clearly in his early books, _Valley of the Many-Colored Grasses_ & _The Book of the Green Man_. Jonathan Williams would be the other obvious name to mention.

Is it useful to talk of _Ark_ as an epic? or _"A"_ for that matter?

I asked about _RADI OS_ & he said that is now projected to be included in a collected other works, to be titled the "Outworks." Also to include groupings titled "Obelisk" & the "Reflecting Pool", & that he felt he needs some greenery in his work & is working on the "Shrubbery."

Anyone in Buffalo willing to talk about the LZ happenings there?

all best,

Charles Smith

↑ Index

109. Alan Jennifer Sondheim

breathing into the body

Tue 6 May 1997

Surgery and Suture of Jennifer

[Deceptively simple script generates fractal series (not image) based on seconds count; series smears Jennifer-text across screen; series expands and compresses. The series is described in Net1.txt; see "Spew."]

Cut and run on MSE or Netscape 3+.

```
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<TITLE>Surgery and Suture of Jennifer</TITLE> <META http-equiv="REFRESH" content="1">
</HEAD> <BODY>
<H4>Working through the body, Mathesis turns out Jennifer</H4> <SCRIPT LANGUAGE="Javascript"> var now = new Date;
var x = now.getSeconds();
var j = 1;
if (x == 0)
 {x = 2};
while ( x < 65)
{
  while (x % Math.pow(2, j) == 0)
    { j++; }
```

```
  if ( j % 2 == 0)
    document.write("<H3>FOR I DIVIDE YOU</H3>"); else
    {document.write("<H3>FOR YOU ARE NOT DIVIDED</H3>");}
  x++;
  j = 1;
}
</SCRIPT> <H4>JENNIFER DIVIDES INTO TWO. JENNIFER DIVIDES YOU INTO TWO.</H4>
</BODY>
</HTML>
```

↑ Index

110. Michael Boughn

Re: Ronald Johnson

Tue 6 May 1997

> Is it useful to talk of _Ark_ as an epic? or _"A"_ for that matter?

I'll bite, Charles (since I've been thinking and reading around Jack Clarke's _In the Analogy_ in similar terms). What do you think? Or is yours a rhetorical question?

Mike

↑ Index

111. sschu30844

Re: How Public Is the Sphere

Tue 6 May 1997

Aldon and others--Re: Michael Davidson's talk. His bottom line was that cultural studies work tends to privilege narrative over non-narrative forms. Michael pointed out a range of work, much of it from the Caribbean, that is susceptible (that may be the wrong word!) to the work of cultural studies--work by Brathwaite and others. I'm hoping he gives the talk to non-poetry types as well as to us. This reminds me that Lois-Ann Yamanaka's first novel from Farrar, Straus & Giroux includes a bio note that refers to her first book as a "prize-winning book of short stories" when, in fact, it is a book of poems (poems that are more hard hitting than is her prose). I notice that the paperback version of the book corrects that claim. A job candidate here (at the University of Hawai'i) gave a brilliant talk a couple of years back in which she reported that Yamanaka had referred to her book of poems as a series of "novellas." She then went ahead and talked about the book for upwards of an hour with no mention of its being a book of poems. Michael's interventions are thus most welcome.

best, Susan

↑ Index

112. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Tue 6 May 1997

Susan -- Thanks for that brief on Davidson's talk, which I look forward to reading -- At the ALA in Baltimore, some of us will attempt to show what cultural studies might offer to readings of Pound -- Demonstration is the highest form of battery!

↑ Index

113. Mark Weiss
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Tue 6 May 1997

Re: Lois Ann Yamanaka In her recent reading at UCSD she referred to the book in question as, alternately, a book of stories and a novel. She also read from an earlier small-press book of poems which struck me as narratives not overly different from the "stories" except in length and not something that I would call poetry despite its entertainment value.

At 03:59 PM 5/6/97 -0400, you wrote: >Aldon and others--Re: Michael Davidson's talk. His bottom line was that >cultural studies work tends to privilege narrative over non-narrative forms.
> Michael pointed out a range of work, much of it from the Caribbean, that is >susceptible (that may be the wrong word!) to the work of cultural >studies--work by Brathwaite and others. I'm hoping he gives the talk to >non-poetry types as well as to us.
>This reminds me that Lois-Ann Yamanaka's first novel from Farrar, Straus & >Giroux includes a bio note that refers to her first book as a "prize-winning >book of short stories" when, in fact, it is a book of poems (poems that are >more hard hitting than is her prose). I notice that the paperback version of >the book corrects that claim. A job candidate here (at the University of >Hawai'i) gave a brilliant talk a couple of years back in which she reported >that Yamanaka had referred to her book of poems as a series of "novellas."
> She then went ahead and talked about the book for upwards of an hour with no

>mention of its being a book of poems.
>Michael's interventions are thus most welcome.
>
>best, Susan
>
>

↑ Index

114. Christopher Alexander
n/formation
Tue 6 May 1997

Brief (sort of) Announcement

The server which houses n/formation (choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce) was broken into in mid-April. Fortunately the hackers were not malicious, &, once taken down, it provided good opportunity to upgrade the system, but my sys admin is nervous as a cat these days
--So,
n/formation is temporarily unavailable, it seems, to users outside of our system. I've asked to be moved to a different server, & should be finding out about that very soon. In any case, this is just to apologize to those of you who may have tried to access the periodical (sporiadical?) & received the mysterious "Forbidden"
message.

I'll post to the list when we're back online.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

115. sschu30844
poetry and prose
Tue 6 May 1997

for Mark Weiss--I'll keep it short, as my modem link is tenuous. But I beg to differ on Yamanaka's poetry; their entertainment value is, in fact, part of her incisive critique of Hawaii society. When an audience finds itself laughing at a woman screaming abuse at her children, it can't rest easy with the poem's entertainment value. Y's poems are also aggressively anti-lyrical and so important as poems, it seems to me, in a place where, until recently, poetry was defined as the stuff written by Robert Frost et al (not that I necessarily dislike Frost, but his birch trees and snow are rather far from home here). The poetry--and the form of it--are anti-colonial. (Though now local Asian American writers are being attacked by native Hawaiians for being as colonial as are whites...but that's for another posting.) Susan

↑ Index

116. nuyopoman
Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
Tue 6 May 1997

I'm developing a national list of poetry radio shows and poetry record labels which will be posted on the Mouth Almighty and Mining Company sites. Would appreciate help in assembling -- send contact info, current playlist/artist rosters, genres, etc. Backchannel - or front for the Word!

Bob Holman

(current essay at The Mining Company is re:ACCESS, http://poetry.miningco.com)

↑ Index

117. Christopher Alexander
Re: alterior plugs
Tue 6 May 1997

Alright, then, I'll chime in with a few recommendations:

Story for a Sascatchewan Night & _Visible Visions_, 2 from ["our own illustrious"] Douglas Barbour (of the North), & both excellent books. I'm particularly taken with some of the sound poems in the latter, which are a lot of fun to perform. It's hopeless to characterize the work as usual, but for what it's worth I'll say that _Story..._ is, among other things, an extended play on & against the conventions of narrative--in which stories move into & out of narrative & anti-narrative space, the latter often revealing more than the former...

at any rate, don't let my bad description keep you from reading these good books.

Also--dunno how many times I've said this, but one more won't hurt by now:
Peter Inman's _Vel_ (O Books): read it.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

118. Mark Weiss
Re: poetry and prose
Wed 7 May 1997

I'm outside the loop on this kind of discussion, so I may have missed something. Why are dramatic monologues formally anticolonial (formally, as opposed to their content, oy vey)? Is "Giuseppe da barber he gotta da mash" formally anti-colonial? Is Robert Browning? Another thing: Is the point about Yamanaka's poetry's local importance that it fills a lacuna in Hawaiian culture by creating a body of work that corresponds somehow with what was current in other places fifty years ago? Should someone write Hawaiian Augustan satire because that was missed out on too? All I know of Yamanaka's work is what I heard her read. I thought the prose was interesting. And I thought the poetry was prose. Maybe I'd feel differently if I knew more, and on ne discute pas, etc.

At 08:16 PM 5/6/97 -0400, you wrote:
>for Mark Weiss--I'll keep it short, as my modem link is tenuous. But I beg >to differ on Yamanaka's poetry; their entertainment value is, in fact, part >of her incisive critique of Hawaii society. When an audience finds itself >laughing at a woman screaming abuse at her children, it can't rest easy with >the poem's entertainment value. Y's poems are also aggressively anti-lyrical >and so important as poems, it seems to me, in a place where, until recently, >poetry was defined as the stuff written by Robert Frost et al (not that I >necessarily dislike Frost, but his birch trees and snow are rather far from >home here). The poetry--and the form of it--are anti-colonial. (Though now >local Asian American writers are being attacked by native Hawaiians for being >as colonial as are whites...but that's for another posting.) Susan
>
>

↑ Index

119. Loss Glazier

(no subject)

Wed 7 May 1997

Peter Ganick asked me to post this. Hopefully I'm not causing any duplication but if so, please forgive ...

>POTEPOETZINE, a new experimental e-zine
>devoted to experimental poetry and e-art
>which will appear irregularly, but frequently, >is taking subscriptions for its first issue >to be sent through e-mail before june 1, 1997....
>
>issue ONE will feature 10 poets' work and >a section of e-art by hartord ct area artists....
>
>if you want to receive POTEPOETZINE,
>please send your e-mail address before >may 7, 1997 to: [redacted] and >after may 9, 1997 to: [redacted] >mentioning where you saw this announcement....
>
>no submissions, please, with your order,
>ONE will include information about
>submitting texts to TWO and beyond....
>
>do not fax, snail-mail, or telephone us,
>only e-mail will receive a response....
>
>POTEPOETTEXT, a series of electronic texts
>surrounding the on-going worldwide discourse >about poetics, culture, and experimental art
>will also be included in your subscription, >submissions for this series are being accepted....
>
>POTEPOETZINE....POTEPOETTEXT.... >experimental poetry and cultural discourse....
>

↑ Index

120. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Ronald Johnson
Wed 7 May 1997

Long texts should be called something else. The context of "epic" was getting pretty indeterminant and squishy even before the early cantos, The Bridge, Paterson etc got started. No question that something about grandeur of gesture, not to mention containing history, was in the minds of various "High Modernists," to whom the word was important. But the sum total of the poetic universe we have now, at 2000 or so, has outlived any focused accuracy for the term. (..among other things you could execute Jed Rasula's great pun, and point out that "containing history" can be understood as a police action: as in american anti-communist "containment" in the fifties). Lots of other reasons I find it unuseful and hyperacademic: what is Rimbaud's Saison en Enfer? It's a long modernist text which has little truck with the models "epic" implies. Those models themselves don't really live for us, as they did when ode and sonnet etc. were major framing gestures in lyric poetry.

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Tue, 6 May 1997, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Is it useful to talk of _Ark_ as an epic? or _"A"_ for that matter?
>
> I'll bite, Charles (since I've been thinking and reading around Jack Clarke's _In the Analogy_ in similar terms). What do you think? Or is yours a rhetorical question?
>
> Mike

↑ Index

121. Mark Prejsnar
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Wed 7 May 1997

There's always been this impulse to assure people that something is primarily narrative. At least in our culture. The non-narrative is threatening--to the reader and therefore to marketing possibilities. I remember when Bob Dylan's fairly interesting prose text Tarantula came out--Despite the fact that by any conceivable standard it was "poetry", and utterly nonlinear and non-narrative, it was firmly marketed (and discussed) as "Dylan's novel." Many of L. Scalapino's long prose pieces are refered to routinely as novels and stories; I was interested a few years ago to hear her read sections from various such pieces, always refering to them as poems...

Mark P.

On Tue, 6 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> Aldon and others--Re: Michael Davidson's talk. His bottom line was that cultural studies work tends to privilege narrative over non-narrative forms. Michael pointed out a range of work, much of it from the Caribbean, that is susceptible (that may be the wrong word!) to the work of cultural studies--work by Brathwaite and others. I'm hoping he gives the talk to non-poetry types as well as to us.
> This reminds me that Lois-Ann Yamanaka's first novel from Farrar, Straus & Giroux includes a bio note that refers to her first book as a "prize-winning book of short stories" when, in fact, it is a book of poems (poems that are more hard hitting than is her prose). I notice that the paperback version of the book corrects that claim. A job candidate here (at the University of Hawai'i) gave a brilliant talk a couple of years back in which she reported that Yamanaka had referred to her book of poems as a series of "novellas." She then went ahead and talked about the book for upwards of an hour with no mention of its being a book of poems.
> Michael's interventions are thus most welcome.
>
> best, Susan

↑ Index

122. henry gould
epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

Rolling 2 responses into one: I agree with Mark P. that the term "epic" is thrown around loosely, & when we're talkin specifically about long poems maybe we should try to be more specific - but i don't think the mode is necessarily meaningless or anachronistic now - probably something similar was thought in Milton's day, but he managed it (by re-thinking the hoariest epic machinery) - epic still might be an avenue for poetry as differing from prose fiction -

as far as narrative in poetry, I'm starting to think the best approach to the social context of poetry is by seeing it as a narrative concentrate - dramatic poetry is always framed by the plot & there's a plot behind every speech act -

I haven't thought this through obviously but others have & maybe have blasts prepared - fire away, Gridley; ringsiders, observe!

- Henry G.

↑ Index

123. Maria Damon
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Wed 7 May 1997

---

one of the themes of my talk at rutgers was an enumeration of the works that have already been done that cd be considered poetry and cultural studies, the field it's my longterm mission to map out...md

At 1:06 PM -0700 5/6/97, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>Susan -- Thanks for that brief on Davidson's talk, which I look forward to >reading -- At the ALA in Baltimore, some of us will attempt to show what >cultural studies might offer to readings of Pound -- Demonstration is the >highest form of battery!

↑ Index

124. Jordan Davis
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

I've been informed that there's some (old old) critical work linking Philip Whalen's poetry to the poetry of Ezra Pound, but has anybody written on the connections between Whalen and James Schuyler, their poetry, I mean?

Jordan

↑ Index

125. Mark Weiss
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

Actually, everybody and his brother were writing epics in the 16th-17th century--it was a felt need of newly consolidating nation-states that there be a national epic, in emulation of the Greeks and Romans; these were often tied, like Virgil, to Homer. In writing a national epic the author was at once claiming legitimacy for his national-political entity and its institutions and parity with the ancients for his culture. There were also a slew of religious epics.

At 09:27 AM 5/7/97 EDT, you wrote:
>Rolling 2 responses into one: I agree with Mark P. that the term "epic" >is thrown around loosely, & when we're talkin specifically about long poems >maybe we should try to be more specific - but i don't think the mode >is necessarily meaningless or anachronistic now - probably something >similar was thought in Milton's day, but he managed it (by re-thinking >the hoariest epic machinery) - epic still might be an avenue for poetry >as differing from prose fiction -

>
>as far as narrative in poetry, I'm starting to think the best approach to >the social context of poetry is by seeing it as a narrative concentrate - >dramatic poetry is always framed by the plot & there's a plot behind every >speech act -
>
>I haven't thought this through obviously but others have & maybe have >blasts prepared - fire away, Gridley; ringsiders, observe!
>
>- Henry G.
>
>

↑ Index

126. Pritchett,Pat

Re: epic/narrative

Wed 7 May 1997

File this under unsleeping dogs: Perhaps the decline of the traditional epic corresponds inversely to the rise of the idea of the individual, or the cult of the individual, as it may now be called in many of its manifestations, that is, in its decay from an invigorating gesture in the dialectical exchange between society and person to the rampant abuses of Me-ism which ironically play back into the hive mentality of consumerist ideology. (Duby and his colleagues address much of this in their "epic" _A History of Private Life_ - of which I've only read Vol. 2 on the medieval period).

ARK is "epic" in scope, certainly - for playing out a single set of ideas or themes sonata-like across a range of variations. It is not epic in the sense that it celebrates the martial spirit or ethos of an era, its arete (not the same thing). I don't think Milton wld recognize it as an "epic." Or wld he? There is the same concern with cosmic or extra-personal scale, for instance. An interesting notion to play with.

Patrick Pritchett
who from his office cube can see the clouds drifting shadow across the Flatirons with something approching Johnsonian epic grandeur
---
From: henry gould
To: POETICS

Subject: epic/narrative
Date: Wednesday, May 07, 1997 8:46AM

Rolling 2 responses into one: I agree with Mark P. that the term "epic" is thrown around loosely, & when we're talkin specifically about long poems maybe we should try to be more specific - but i don't think the mode is necessarily meaningless or anachronistic now - probably something similar was thought in Milton's day, but he managed it (by re-thinking the hoariest epic machinery) - epic still might be an avenue for poetry as differing from prose fiction -

- Henry G.

↑ Index

127. David Israel

Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart

Wed 7 May 1997

Any view on candidacy of John Ashbery's book-length Flowchart for some epic-ish rubric? The booksuggests, at least, something akin to so-called "epic ambition" --

In a noteable phrase in the 1st page or so, the poet refers to "the published city" [something like "who in the published city . . ?"-- and Ashbery thereby invokes (I think) the notion of a poem endeavoring to serve as epic for such an imaginal city-state (comprised of the readership of such publications . . .)

As for "the published city" -- along related lines, the opening salvo in Merwin's recent Travels says "But who in the total city" -- the total city of Merwin being, I think, not too dissimilar from the published city of Ashbery. Both invoke a contemporary literary readership as "city."

One critical jibe (I guess) at Ashbery's tome characterized it as "more chart than flow" (prob. in the pages of Poetry or some such). But it does have a lot of flow to it, withal (from such of it as I've read so far) . . and the opening passage anyway (which I've read a number of times) seems to suggest an attempt to reconfigure the notion of what-is-epic. Or so it seemed to me . . .

d.i.

>>> Mark Weiss <[redacted]> 05/07/97 12:55pm
>>>
Actually, everybody and his brother were writing epics in the 16th-17th century--. . .

↑ Index

128. E. Gottlieb
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative" poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear, I think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ... must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered subversive, as some people have intimated? Thanks, Evan

↑ Index

129. Christine Palma
Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
Wed 7 May 1997

> I'm developing a national list of poetry radio shows and poetry record labels which will be posted on the Mouth Almighty and Mining Company sites. Would appreciate help in assembling -- send contact info, current playlist/artist rosters, genres, etc. Backchannel - or front for the Word!

I am making KXLU's website, perhaps we could be linked from your site once it's up.

Thanks again,
Christine

_____
christine palma
[redacted]

samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrians rights, sleep depriviation high, the moon . . .

↑ Index

130. hen
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

What I was suggesting was that maybe all poetry could be read as narrative. A lot of the best poetry is simply beautiful word painting. But paintings tell stories too. By narrative I'm thinking of storytelling, plot. Of course this is stretching things to the invisible amorphous. But in the context of the "pub sphere" discussions of late I just wanted to reiterate Aristotle's interesting definition of "poet" as maker of plots, weaver of verbal actions. Maybe it was Blarnes or Spandrift - - but if this be I [who suggested non-narrative poetry was subversive] then... I is another [mortal dust]. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

131. Pritchett,Pat
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Wed 7 May 1997

Yes, David, I think _ Flowchart_ cld indeed qualify as an epic whose epicness consists in its undermining of the trad. idea of the epic, though like you, I've not read it all yet. As Marjorie Perloff observes in her blurb (I paraphrase) - it's related to Wordsworth's _Prelude_ (which actually revises my earlier idea about the decline of epic and the rise of individualism as a cultural idee fixe).

Along those lines - what about Ron Silliman's _Alphabet_? Epic in scale, yes. But wld Ron describe it in those terms?

Patrick P.

From: David Israel
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Date: Wednesday, May 07, 1997 2:06PM

Any view on candidacy of John Ashbery's book-length Flowchart for some epic-ish rubric? The booksuggests, at least, something akin to so-called "epic ambition" --

↑ Index

132. Michael Magee
Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
Wed 7 May 1997

Penn's station WXPN recently started a show called "Live at the Writers House" which combines alot of poetry read live with a little music played live - visting and local poets. Get a hold of Kristen Gallagher (hi Kristen if you're reading this) at [redacted]

-Mike.

According to
Christine Palma: >
> >I'm developing a national list of poetry radio shows and poetry record labels > >which will be posted on the Mouth Almighty and Mining Company sites. Would > >appreciate help in assembling -- send contact info, current playlist/artist > >rosters, genres, etc. Backchannel - or front for the Word!

>
> I am making KXLU's website, perhaps we could be linked from your site once > it's up.
>
> Thanks again,
> Christine
>
> _____
> christine palma
> [redacted]
>
> samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal > structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in > every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, > cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, > mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrians rights, sleep depriviation > high, the moon . . .
>

↑ Index

133. Michael Boughn
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

Well, I was just rereading Clarke's _From Feathers to Iron_ and found this provocative (for me) passage from John Thorpe's terrific intro:

Clarke doesn't envision the epic as a literary genre so much as an inherent narrative comprehension, wherever there's an interplay of story with its telling. Since this narrative crops up everywhere on earth for the 4,000 years preceding us, he considers it innate enough to be built upon [or, say, improvised on], and acts accordingly.

Thorpe's understanding, by returning this mode of narrative to a kind of knowing [both out of _gna_ as is gnosis], frees us from from all the scholastic nit-picking over genre, and delivers us back to the creative imagination. And specifically, what Clarke calls the strengthening method of world completion.

Yes, lots of people have used epic badly, and used it for purposes not germane to us, but so what? You could equally argue that the English sonnet is linked to the rise of colonialism, as both can be seen to arise at the same time with Henries VII and VIII, but what's that got to do with Bernadette Mayer? Or Tom Mandel?

The phrase "epic scope" seems invented for Cecil B. DeMille movies, and pretty much useless for the purposes of poetry. Surely there are different kinds of Long Poems, and our expectations of them are determined by how they interplay with the past, present, and future. Why let Pound define it for you? What's he got that we ain't got? Maybe we could see epic as a certain kind of conversation.

Interestingly, Thorpe (and Clarke) come into this conversation partly by way of what Thorpe calls the "field self", a nifty way around that binary contraction "individual/social" that was barking around here last week.

Mike

↑ Index

134. Mark Prejsnar
Misc. Proj. 2
Wed 7 May 1997

Just out:

Atlanta poetry mag, Misc. Proj., issue #2
"Incomprehension is the subtitle," or:
the goldenrod issue

dirt cheap at $1.00

subscribe to the next 4 issues for only $3.50 (economy layaway plan...)

some copies still available of the inaugural lilac issue

"voice of the pomo South"
...since 1996

send large denomination bills to:

Misc. Proj.
c/o Prejsnar
641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11
Atlanta, GA 30306

checks payable to M. Prejsnar

↑ Index

135. Pritchett,Pat
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

Evan,

I'll take a wild stab at this and hope others follow. Narrative in its most basic sense means to tell a story in some way and while most of the time that occurs in a linear way, it need not necessarily do so. Language can be circular; narrative can be circular, or collage-like. Michelle Cliff's _Free Enterprise_ is an excellent example of a contemporary novel told in a non-linear fashion. But even in Conrad you can find the traditional linearity of narrative undergoing a subversion. Paintings can also be considered as forms of narration, as Louis Marin points out in his essay "Toward A Theory of Reading in the Visual Arts." In the same way, the evening news plays out as a narrative thru the deployment of its components: first the serious news, then weather, sports and a human interest tag. Such strategies relate less to an idea of moving thru time to achieve climax & closure than conforming to certain assumptions of how we priortize clusters of meaning/information and how those in turn support (or don't) our epistemological models for viewing the world. But what is a "story" anyway? Is it simply a description of events? Or is it the meaning we take away from a poem or other work or art; less the meaning even than the gestalt of our interaction with the text? This is all way underbaked and quite vague. Hope it helps and prompts someone else to expand/elaborate.

Patrick Pritchett

From: E. Gottlieb
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: epic/narrative
Date: Wednesday, May 07, 1997 2:16PM

Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative" poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear, I think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ... must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered subversive, as some people have intimated? Thanks, Evan

↑ Index

136. Stephen Cope
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Wed 7 May 1997

Maria:

What might some of these works be?

Thanks in advance,
Stephen Cope

> one of the themes of my talk at rutgers was an enumeration of the works that have already been done that cd be considered poetry and cultural studies, the field it's my longterm mission to map out...md
>
> At 1:06 PM -0700 5/6/97, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
> Susan -- Thanks for that brief on Davidson's talk, which I look forward to reading -- At the ALA in Baltimore, some of us will attempt to show what cultural studies might offer to readings of Pound -- Demonstration is the highest form of battery!

↑ Index

137. DS
Re: epic/narrative
Wed 7 May 1997

At 02:31 PM 5/7/97 -0400, you wrote:
> Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative" >poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear,

All? No!

i think of some of (as eg.s) Susan Howe's, MacLow's, Cage's & Michele Leggott's poetry as very much non-linear - in as much as there is a randomness to the reading of specific lines/words/phrases... there is a randomness in these cases that seems very much to me integral to their readings and existence and is emphatically non-linear. But that wasn't the question.

Dan

I
>think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ...
>must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered >narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered >subversive, as some people have intimated?
> Thanks, Evan
>
>

↑ Index

138. Amittai F. Aviram
Irena Klepfisz, anybody?
Wed 7 May 1997

Quick query. One of the things I have yet to report on was an absolutely _wonderful_ panel I attended the last day of the Rutgers Poetry and the Public Sphere conference, called "Five (Jewish) (Women) Poets." All the presentations were _fabulous_--mostly readings--and the discussion, spurred largely by a provocative and moving comment by Brian McHale (next to whom I have the privilege of sitting, as it happens), was intense and memorable. Anyway, afterwards, I went up to greet some of these five wonderful poets, and was getting autographs (in which I generally don't believe--oh, well) from Rachel Blau du Plessis (who also doesn't believe in them), when Irena Klepfisz left the room. Drat! Does anybody happen to know how to get in touch with Irena Klepfisz? An e-mail address would be ideal, but a snail address would do. I have a close friend who is very interested in Yiddish, and correspondence with Ms. Klepfisz would be just the thing for her. People into Yiddish really need a lot of support--they have to take a lot of abuse from the ignorant, saying things like that it is a useless language to study, etc.

So, anybody know an address for Irena Klepfisz? Please send this to me backchannel (e-mail to [redacted]). Thanks!

Amittai

↑ Index

139. Maria Damon
Re: Irena Klepfisz, anybody?
Wed 7 May 1997

At 8:25 PM -0400 5/7/97, Amittai F. Aviram wrote:
>Quick query. One of the things I have yet to report on was an absolutely >_wonderful_ panel I attended the last day of the Rutgers Poetry and the >Public Sphere conference, called "Five (Jewish) (Women) Poets." All the >presentations were _fabulous_--mostly readings--and the discussion, >spurred largely by a provocative and moving comment by Brian McHale >(next to whom I have the privilege of sitting, as it happens), was >intense and memorable. Anyway, afterwards, I went up to greet some >of these five wonderful poets, and was getting autographs (in which >I generally don't believe--oh, well) from Rachel Blau du Plessis >(who also doesn't believe in them), when Irena Klepfisz left the room.
>Drat! Does anybody happen to know how to get in touch with Irena >Klepfisz? An e-mail address would be ideal, but a snail address would >do. I have a close friend who is very interested in Yiddish, and >correspondence with Ms. Klepfisz would be just the thing for her.

>People into Yiddish really need a lot of support--they have to take >a lot of abuse from the ignorant, saying things like that it is a useless >language to study, etc.
>
>So, anybody know an address for Irena Klepfisz? Please send this to >me backchannel (e-mail to [redacted]). Thanks!
>
>Amittai

and when u find out, let me know, cuz i have a very keen theoretical interest in yiddish. thanks. md

↑ Index

140. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Wed 7 May 1997

OK -- so now I have to tell my Ashbery narrative -- few years back I was detailed to drive Ashbery from San Francisco to San Jose for his reading that evening. stopped at Cody's on the way and bought a copy of Walcott's _Omeros_, which had just appeared that week. much confusion connecting with Ashbery at his hotel, 'cause his guy in New York had given him the wrong latitude and longitude, and even the wrong date for the reading -- BUT, we did meet just in time, renewed acquaintance etc -- here I am driving like the proverbial Nielsen out of hell down the 101 to make it no more than a half hour late for the reading (which went beautifully by the way - one of the best I've heard him give) -- driving along I ask, "so John, have you seen this new 'epic' sort of poem that Walcott's published." to which Ashbery responds laughing that yes, of course he knows of it, and he's put out because he too has this long poem of his own,_Flow Chart_, coming out and Derek's is not only out first, but his has more pages in it ----- epic envy, I suppose

↑ Index

141. Kenneth W Sherwood
R Johnson (fwd)
Wed 7 May 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 7 May 1997 00:47:59 -0400 (EDT)
From: Kenneth W Sherwood <[redacted]>

To: [redacted]
Subject: R Johnson

Charles: Thanks for that response--I guess it's questionable whether epic is useful re: LZ or RJ given its implicitly totalizing stanze toward history. But what's the line from 'A'--"history is best without the names"--which, in A22/23, leaves quoted voices--a song of voices. I like to keep the 'epic' close at hand with LZ, if only because the personal-history plays into the poem as a 'lived-with-and-through' composition (LZ's contention that the poetry itself obviates biography) gives Epic new possiblities.

Does long poem suffice? LZ and RJ find it possible to finish b/c of the nature of the design? In Buffalo, we were talking about the way in which 'A's historical references served a different purpose than Pound's, seemed present for the collusion of thought, as say the Davenport anecdote related in the LZ Man/Poet volume; in conversation GD strains to articulate a point at which LZ leaves room, returns with a 50 year old zine in which he has an essay, opens guickly to a particular page and indicates a paragraph more or less the twin of what GD had been trying to say--and as GD describes it this is not a gesture of arrogance, or claim of precedences, but dwelling in the pleasure that thoughts and lines of poetry coincide.

Ken

↑ Index

142. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Poetics/Writing/Performativity
Thu 8 May 1997

This message is in MIME format. The first part should be readable text, while the remaining parts are likely unreadable without MIME-aware tools. Send mail to [redacted] for more info.

--1921387416-141103230-863067147=:450

The attachment above should be opened in an editor, cut at the line, and run in a text-based browser, 3.0 and above preferable.

The lines should not be justified.

The Jennifer-function plays for itself.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ TEL [redacted] IMAGES:

http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME
166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217

--1921387416-141103230-863067147=:450
Content-Description:

--1921387416-141103230-863067147=:450--

↑ Index

143. Pierre Joris
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Thu 8 May 1997

FLOWCHART was conceived as/ is a one hundred page poem for his mother's death. (JA's pages, not the publishers.) Does that, if we are playing the category-game, put the poem into another "genre" than epic? A procedural elegy, say?

Thinking of procedural works, Allen Fisher's PLACE, hundreds of pages long over a number of books & incorporating performances as well as history, could be thought of as "an epic of South London" though that genre attribution would seem restrictive, even diminishing to the work, which, I would argue, has an epic impulse and then exceeds that "genre" definition on all sides.

Narrative is unavoidable as soon as you have more than one word. (In fact, some of Celan's single words are complex narratives in themselves!). Here's a complete narrative by Basho:

frog
pond
plop!
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

144. sschu30844
Re: poetry and prose
Thu 8 May 1997

To Mark Weiss--I didn't mean to suggest that Yamanaka's dramatic monologues were de facto post-colonial. What I did mean to say is that I take her use of Hawaiian Creole English (pidgin) in poems that are forcefully anti-lyrical, combined with the content of her poems, can be read as such. The charge of "cultural lag" has been leveled often against Hawai'i writers, but their situation is very different from that elsewhere and thus their methods are, as well, or the timing of their methods. I'm not sure that I, for one, care too much who gets there first. If you look at the _Premonitions_ anthology, edited by Walter Lew, however, you'll see work from here that is more evidently postmodern than is Yamanaka's.

Susan

↑ Index

145. Christine Palma
Re: Poetry Radio/Poetry Labels
Thu 8 May 1997

please excuse the post, meant to back channel.

- c

_____
christine palma
[redacted]

samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrian's rights, sleep depriviation high, the moon . . .

↑ Index

146. Pierre Joris
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Thu 8 May 1997

Re envisioning a contemporary epic possibility see also Alice Notley's _Homer's Art_ (in the "Curriculum of the Soul" series), as lovely &

sharp corrective to allmale at-swords-point heroic epic.
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

147. Kathleen Crown
Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1997 to 7 May 1997
Thu 8 May 1997

Amittai, Maria: I did not make it to the Five (Jewish) (Women) Poets panel, but I heard that everyone in the room was glowing at the end of the session. Irena Klepfisz gave a reading in the Saturday "After Hours" session that was terrific. Last fall I assigned her collection of poems (about Holocaust survival, working class women, and Yiddish as the mother tongue) in my Women's Studies course, and it provoked amazing second-generation testimonies from the students. I'll backchannel her permanent address in Brooklyn, but until June you can reach her at the Jewish Studies Department at Michigan State University. Speaking of East Lansing, do any of my fellow MSU alumns out there know where I can reach Marcus Cafagna (who I knew tangentially back when I edited the RED CEDAR REVIEW)? He gave a reading here at Rutgers in March that I did not hear about until too late, and the email I sent to him at Carnegie Mellon was returned. Please backchannel any info. Thanks, KC
--
****
Kathleen Crown
Rutgers English and Women's Studies

Conference Co-Coordinator, "Poetry and the Public Sphere"
P.O. Box 5054
New Brunswick, NJ 08903-5054
H: 908/[redacted]
W: 908/[redacted]
Dept. Fax: 908/[redacted]
[redacted]
****

↑ Index

148. henry
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Thu 8 May 1997

I like a couple ideas here from Pierre - one, that maybe it's better not to jump to call things epic, maybe there's a better explanation, which is related to two, the reason we jump to call things epic is that epic has sort of an automatic high culture value - important, great, necessary, etc - which is why so many tiresome ones have been written down the ages -

but rather than redefine what the epic impulse actually is, as Mike Boughn suggested, as some mode of originary cognition (like Olson?) - seems to me what defines epic comes back to this social/individual thing. Epic tells the GROUP story. It is a tribal recounting of things EVERYBODY had/ has a hand in. The rise of the individual [which I am not slabbning as TERRIBLE HORRIBLE as some posts here seem to have it] allowed for re-positioning of "epic" - see what Joyce did to Homer, what Zukofsky did to Pound - redefining what is "great" or all-important - but they couldn't do it without the paradigmatically SOCIAL communal storytelling which is epic. Greek tragedy refocused epic in a related way, maybe.

so the challenge to the epic poet is to find techniques & allegories which transmit that allness quality to the specific local personal idiosyncrasies & unrepeatable events which make up the story. Dante turning his feud with Florence & the ghost of puppy love into the story of redeemed humankind. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

149. henry
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997 21:04:56 +-900 Daniel Tessitore said:
>
>As to narrative--does Ted Hughes' CROW qualify? He originally had a more >unified narrative frame, complete with a prose bit I believe, and he cut it >out. Can the result be called story, narrative, linear?

in my view, even a riddle has a story to tell.
- Sherlock Holmes

↑ Index

150. Mark Prejsnar
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Narrative I think does not mean linear, but story-telling. I've never seen a Clark Coolidge poem I would describe as narrative, for instance. Or take (say) Wyatt's anthology-piece "They flee from me"...While it describes events and interactions, and how those interactions have changed thru time, it does so with image, metaphor and dramtic/meditative address, depending on sonorities and rhythms to shape an emotional complex. It is too fixed on a specific moment of existence to be said to tell a story. Pound's first Canto on the other hand tells a story, for all that its astonishing mixture of sound and goosed-up archaism is doing something very aural (and peculiar) to the reader's ear.

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Wed, 7 May 1997, E. Gottlieb wrote:

> Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative" poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear, I think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ... must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered subversive, as some people have intimated?
> Thanks, Evan

↑ Index

151. henry gould
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Coolidge's "At Egypt" is maybe a kind of story... Wyatt's "They flee from me" starts like many a good tale, in medias res. Is it possible that within the all-narrative which is language & speech, lyric poetry is a kind of pause? Dante puts the song-singer in Purgatory, at the beginning - who is it, Arnaut? anyway, he is almost held back by the power of the song - but then pushes on with his journey/story (to the bigger chorus-finale). - Henry G

↑ Index

152. Mark Prejsnar
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Henry's response below, and in a way the whole thread (or threads: the epic one and the narrative/linear one) are valuble for suggesting how much these things depend on point of view and working priorities. I specifically brought up Wyatt because there are narrative-like elements to that sonnet; but to me that don't a narrative make! On the other hand, lots of folks have insisted that anything (even a single word) can resonate outward into narrative; I move in the other direction (because of the way I tend to see my own work: the way I think of music as far more important than story-implying "content"); I'm more likely to see (and value) elements that move away from story into sound, lyric weave and langual/imagistic tension. Not linear so much as forces meeting (clash). Thus my mention of Coolidge, the best shorthand I can think of to suggest the imperatives and promises of the non-narrative.

On Thu, 8 May 1997, henry gould wrote:

> Coolidge's "At Egypt" is maybe a kind of story... Wyatt's "They flee from me" starts like many a good tale, in medias res. Is it possible that within the all-narrative which is language & speech, lyric poetry is a kind of pause? Dante puts the song-singer in Purgatory, at the beginning - who is it, Arnaut? anyway, he is almost held back by the power of the song - but then pushes on with his journey/story (to the bigger chorus-finale).
> - Henry G

↑ Index

153. Maria Damon
Re: How Public Is the Sphere
Thu 8 May 1997

the works were enumerated in the format of a "dream anthology." i'll post them in the next coupla weeks when the workload eases up...unless someone else out there was listenng and wants to do it

At 2:32 PM -0700 5/7/97, Stephen Cope wrote:
>Maria:
>
>What might some of these works be?
>
>Thanks in advance,
>Stephen Cope

>
>
>>one of the themes of my talk at rutgers was an enumeration of the works >>that have already been done that cd be considered poetry and cultural >>studies, the field it's my longterm mission to map out...md
>>
>>At 1:06 PM -0700 5/6/97, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>>>Susan -- Thanks for that brief on Davidson's talk, which I look forward to >>>reading -- At the ALA in Baltimore, some of us will attempt to show what >>>cultural studies might offer to readings of Pound -- Demonstration is the >>>highest form of battery!

↑ Index

154. Michael Boughn

Re: epic/narrative

Thu 8 May 1997

> but rather than redefine what the epic impulse actually is, as Mike Boughn suggested, as some mode of originary cognition (like Olson?) - seems to me what defines epic comes back to this social/individual thing. Epic tells the GROUP story.
>
> - Henry Gould

That's not exactly what I said, Henry. The question is whether you see it as restricted to some strictly "literary" domain (in which case it's all a question of arbitrary rules--hence the nit-picking arguments about whether or not Paradise Lost or the Commedia are REALLY epics--genre as jail), or whether it arises out of some other relation to the world. To call that a "redefinition" is to assume the literary/scholastic as the definition, which, I think, begs, as they say, the question. That's been the argument all along, hasn't it? Are the gestures and forms of poetry rules or specific ways of knowing?

It seems to me that Ark falls outside the realm of epic because its structure is primarily architectonic and in that sense is more closely related to Hesiod than Homer.

Falling back on the individual/group binary just confuses further as those Ulronic contraries always will. Is the Odyssey about the "group" or the "individual"? Ditto the Iliad.

"Sing, muse, the anger of the socially constructed group self!"

"Hey, buddy, construct this!"

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

155. Jordan Davis
rules and ways of knowing
Thu 8 May 1997

HOMAGE TO STEVEN HALL

I danced with rules
then I danced with ways of knowing and I flew to Mars
on a quiet Boeing

I flew to San Francisco where they drive on the left
I flew over Pocantico
where they know and make the rules

What people should do is very important
I don't understand Gauss's notation for modular numbers at all

↑ Index

156. Brent Long
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Thu 8 May 1997

Also, Frank Stanford's The Battlefield where the moon says I Love you. The thing weighs eight pounds and is almost 600 pages long.

↑ Index

157. Sylvester Pollet
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Thu 8 May 1997

The other one to keep in mind is David Gordon's projected ten-book poem. Three volumes out so far: Outward, Repairs, and Rest. Stem, the next one, or Part 1 of it, will be going to press soon. This is the epic to watch, in my opinion. I published a section of Stem as #8 in my broadside series, and the National Poetry Foundation publishes the whole series, so my judgment may be clouded, but I don't think so. To excerpt from the NPF catalogue description: ...its protagonist...despite a wide range of human figures, is nothing less than the life force itself. Gordon, a Pound scholar and the translator of T'ang and Sung poems and Lu Yu, dives deep into the seas of bacteriology, biology, philosophy, music, and epic, and thus into time, myth, document, and symmetrical speculation.

see descrip. on website http://www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/
Sylvester Pollet

> Re envisioning a contemporary epic possibility see also Alice Notley's > _Homer's Art_ (in the "Curriculum of the Soul" series), as lovely &
> sharp corrective to allmale at-swords-point heroic epic.
> --
> ==========
> pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
> tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> ---
> Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
> values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
> _one_ language, is the principle of alienation which
> constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
> [...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
> and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
> it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
> ==========

↑ Index

158. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: epic/narrative

Thu 8 May 1997

there is such a thing as narrative knowledge, and any individual item or experience will become narrative in consciousness -- but , following Mark, I would make a distinction of convenience between a Coolidge poem like "ing" (or whatever the title was) and "At Egypt," "Fed Drapes" etc. -- as someone in England years ago said of nomination generally -- better to think of these descriptors as naming a locus of shading from one area to another than attempt to claim a sharp break between the narrative and the non -- this many years post-structuralism it shouldn't be all that hard for us to agree that, for instance, "narrative" and "lyric," while naming difference, are inextricably and definitionally bound up in one another's cloudy metahphrical arms --

↑ Index

159. henry
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

> non -- this many years post-structuralism it shouldn't be all that hard for us to agree that, for instance, "narrative" and "lyric," while naming difference, are inextricably and definitionally bound up in one another's cloudy metahphrical arms --

Aldon, there's a story there somewhere - maybe even a screenplay. - HG

↑ Index

160. henry
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997 09:47:37 -0400 Michael Boughn said:
>
>That's not exactly what I said, Henry. The question is whether >you see it as restricted to some strictly "literary" domain (in which >case it's all a question of arbitrary rules--hence the nit-picking >arguments about whether or not Paradise Lost or the Commedia are >REALLY epics--genre as jail), or whether it arises out of some other >relation to the world. To call that a "redefinition" is to assume the >literary/scholastic as the definition, which, I think, begs, as they >say, the question. That's been the argument all along, hasn't it? Are >the gestures and forms of poetry rules or specific ways of knowing?

No doubt about it we get stuck in the hair-splitting of Roman law or whatever with these hoary words/genres. Makes sense to re-look (re- define, whatever) at the impulse of different approaches to poetry & see if "epic" is still a useful term for what anybody's writing now. I think that's how this thread got started? Anyway, my point was, no, I wouldn't call the genres "ways of knowing". I would call them ways of making poems. There are a lot of people writing poems containing oodles of history and knowledge but I wouldn't say "rethink the world & make an epic". That's only part of it. Epic somehow finds the common story - as STORY, as action, beginning middle end. Philosophy finds the central thought & circles around it. Poetry imitates the central action. Eric Blarnes tells me he's working on an 800 pound banter-weight class poem, 14 leagues long, centered on a tree farm in Knickerbocker, Wisconsin. To Eric, I say: Armes virumque canto! or some such thingum. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

161. Jordan Davis
gubbinal in Venezuela?
Thu 8 May 1997

Henrywrt
epic finds STORY beginning middle and end

but no, that's not epic finding that's drama? epic is come in whenever and find out later where?

as for what henryrt re
genres are not ways of knowing they're ways of writing poems

ohhhhh yoooooo meeeean littttttttcchrachuuuuure
which is written by the living dead
viz the Living Dead Review of Books

Thanks eric jack and Henry! when you get to four say hello to Fernando Jordan (eyes closed and looking up)

↑ Index

162. Brent Long
New Small Press
Thu 8 May 1997

Ridgerunner Press, a new small press, is now accepting submissions either by snail mail or by e-mail. The press runs a quarterly publication, with the first issue due out in July, featuring Miller Williams, Frank Stanford (previously published work, of course), and Jack Hambrik among others. They also publish two books/year. For snail-mail address, guidelines, or other information, e-mail Mike at [redacted]

↑ Index

163. Jordan Davis
Letter 22
Thu 8 May 1997

The Palinode
(heat exchange)
the difference that we're picking up here my old Proton, the cat chewed the antenna off the signal to noise ratio is that there is those what thinks you write what you know which is the Jove throws a thunderbolt view of things if you ask me and you didn't

and then there is the finding out side of things a party prize
and the generic brand has not quite enough glue on the flap global branding in a Japanese McDonald's ad
how're your hormones doing?
the charge apparently originates on the ground and in the air Queen Victoria
as medium for poetry changes

↑ Index

164. Michael Boughn
epic and narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

The Brownian Effect

"We still live upon the fruit of better times."
--Novalis

"That faces were once unique each one looked like itself, it was not Bell Telephone executives, all up from the ranks."
--Charles Olson, "The Civil War"

"If Sheldrake is right--the biologists are fighting him tooth and nail every inch of the way--the consequences would obviously be momentous. To begin with, we would have to recognize that our writers and artists are largely to blame for the chaotic state of society."
--Colin Wilson

Everyones's doing it, congratulations, poet, for noticing, does that mean you also know
the history of the buying & selling circle of finishing the Circle, how the Venetians came across to English Blake, who felt the Surge go out of the Virgin's womb, bloated form to swallow evrything--pagan, Christian, animal, vegetable, nothing to escape the maw, the Dantean nuova lost to the Quern, memory itself knocked out and spun around like Dorothy's house, worse than any Promethean eagle could make us _all_ forget our dream of home in the land of OZ and where did all those lost recognitions go?

why, into pockets of powerful men, sd Julie Anne.

--John Clarke, _In the Analogy_ Book 2

↑ Index

165. Joseph Lease
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

I think different poems have different ratios or tensions: it's a kind of torque: between narrative and lyric: a very tight, gem-like poem: I think of much Hardy and much Creeley here: can be insistently narrative just as insistently lyric: as Wyatt's loss/memory tale or Pound's Erat Hora (or o western wind):

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> Narrative I think does not mean linear, but story-telling. I've never seen a Clark Coolidge poem I would describe as narrative, for instance. Or take (say) Wyatt's anthology-piece "They flee from me"...While it describes events and interactions, and how those interactions have changed thru time, it does so with image, metaphor and dramtic/meditative address, depending on sonorities and rhythms to shape an emotional complex. It is too fixed on a specific moment of existence to be said to tell a story. Pound's first Canto on the other hand tells a story, for all that its astonishing mixture of sound and goosed-up archaism is doing something very aural (and peculiar) to the reader's ear.
>
> Mark P.
> Atlanta
>
> On Wed, 7 May 1997, E. Gottlieb wrote:
>
> Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative" poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear, I think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ... must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered subversive, as some people have intimated?
> Thanks, Evan

↑ Index

166. Joseph Lease
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

I'm very drawn to what Mark is saying here: my own ambition is often towards narrative but I also find and am frequently surpsised when/that many think I mean something much more stable, unitary, fixed, comfortable, famaliar (you get the drill) than I mean when I say narrative:

Stein is for example a non-stop lesson in narrative:

much of Aaron Shurin's work rocks narrative like a truckload of bricks:

I'm thinking also in the sense that Donald Revell has pointed to a new narrativity that comes after language poetry and learns from it:

but to return to Mark's wonderful point: I think there is a very human story in the image for example: an image or a broken syntax squib can be a construct of thought, argument, sensuality, memory: a contigent subject breaking apart and reforming:

and part of what I really honor in Mark's poems is the musical grace with which this urge/wave explodes:

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> Henry's response below, and in a way the whole thread (or threads: the epic one and the narrative/linear one) are valuble for suggesting how much these things depend on point of view and working priorities. I specifically brought up Wyatt because there are narrative-like elements to that sonnet; but to me that don't a narrative make! On the other hand, lots of folks have insisted that anything (even a single word) can resonate outward into narrative; I move in the other direction (because of the way I tend to see my own work: the way I think of music as far more important than story-implying "content"); I'm more likely to see (and value) elements that move away from story into sound, lyric weave and langual/imagistic tension. Not linear so much as forces meeting (clash). Thus my mention of Coolidge, the best shorthand I can think of to suggest the imperatives and promises of the non-narrative.
>
> On Thu, 8 May 1997, henry gould wrote:
>
> Coolidge's "At Egypt" is maybe a kind of story... Wyatt's "They flee from me" starts like many a good tale, in medias res. Is it possible that within the all-narrative which is language & speech, lyric poetry is a kind of pause? Dante puts the song-singer in Purgatory, at the beginning - who is it, Arnaut? anyway, he is almost held back by the power of the song - but then pushes on with his journey/story (to the bigger chorus-finale).
> - Henry G

↑ Index

167. Joseph Lease
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

forces do, as Mark puts it, clash: and that clash can be homeric at the level of syntax and poesis: it's playing, language is a music: and that involves the most epistemological reaches of what Coleridge (and Byron if you're Jerome McGann) would have called imagination:

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> Henry's response below, and in a way the whole thread (or threads: the epic one and the narrative/linear one) are valuble for suggesting how much these things depend on point of view and working priorities. I specifically brought up Wyatt because there are narrative-like elements to that sonnet; but to me that don't a narrative make! On the other hand, lots of folks have insisted that anything (even a single word) can resonate outward into narrative; I move in the other direction (because of the way I tend to see my own work: the way I think of music as far more important than story-implying "content"); I'm more likely to see (and value) elements that move away from story into sound, lyric weave and langual/imagistic tension. Not linear so much as forces meeting (clash). Thus my mention of Coolidge, the best shorthand I can think of to suggest the imperatives and promises of the non-narrative.
>
> On Thu, 8 May 1997, henry gould wrote:
>
> Coolidge's "At Egypt" is maybe a kind of story... Wyatt's "They flee from me" starts like many a good tale, in medias res. Is it possible that within the all-narrative which is language & speech, lyric poetry is a kind of pause? Dante puts the song-singer in Purgatory, at the beginning - who is it, Arnaut? anyway, he is almost held back by the power of the song - but then pushes on with his journey/story (to the bigger chorus-finale).
> - Henry G

↑ Index

168. Kristin Gallagher
Re: Poetry Radio!
Thu 8 May 1997

Live at the Writer's House has been aired on WXPN (philadelphia) monthly since february 1997. it is a one hour LIVE poetry reading - no commercials - with 4 3-minute slots for singer/songwriter action.

The Writer's House is University of Pennsylvania's Communal Poetry scene. The U. gave us the recently evacuated chaplain's house (great acoustics!) and we have poetry and fiction activity ever minute of the day eve since. many incredible poets have visited/read/eaten/hungout/had drinks with us this year. it would be a too-long-post to name them all.

This fall we begin also radio theatre and live music. we will have a one hour slot every week and will air what (of these three programs) we desire :). WXPN reaches most of southeatern PA, some of maryland and some of western & central PA. some of the shows may be syndicated and then you can all pester your local public radio station to get on board.

anyone interested please backchannel. kg

↑ Index

169. Daniel Tessitore
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Hello,

New to the list here. Lurked a couple days.

As to narrative--does Ted Hughes' CROW qualify? He originally had a more unified narrative frame, complete with a prose bit I believe, and he cut it out. Can the result be called story, narrative, linear?

Dwayne

From: DS[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 08, 1997 8:44 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: epic/narrative

At 02:31 PM 5/7/97 -0400, you wrote:
> Would anyone mind providing a brief definition of "narrative"
>poetry, as opposed to "non-narrative" poetry? All poetry is linear,

All? No!

i think of some of (as eg.s) Susan Howe's, MacLow's, Cage's & Michele Leggott's poetry as very much non-linear - in as much as there is a randomness to the reading of specific lines/words/phrases... there is a randomness in these cases that seems very much to me integral to their readings and existence and is emphatically non-linear. But that wasn't the question.

Dan

I
>think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ...
>must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered >narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered >subversive, as some people have intimated?
> Thanks, Evan
>
>

↑ Index

170. henrywrt
Re: gubbinal in Venezuela?
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997 11:22:48 -0400 Jordan Davis said:
>Henrywrt
>epic finds STORY beginning middle and end
>
>but no, that's not epic finding that's drama? epic is come in whenever and >find out later where?

It's epic too. Eric told me. [Tractatus Blarnensis 411.23 page 12]
Iliad is designed as a tragic action. If you're travelin to the north country fair, walk in a circle & you'll see me there.
>
>as for what henryrt re >genres are not ways of knowing they're ways of writing poems
>
>ohhhhh yoooooo meeeean littttttttcchrachuuuuure
>which is written by the living dead
>viz the Living Dead Review of Books

o.k., don't write them down. Whisper them to your best friend. But a poem ain't a lecture. Jenny Littletree told me. Right, Jenny? Right Henry. Hello Fernando. - Jenny

↑ Index

171. Jethro Cadbury advert
Thu 8 May 1997

Mainstream and Anarcho Press announce the publication of Periodical Contests by Eric Mottram. This is the fourth book of Masks. It is distributed by Mainstream.

Mainstream now has three books in print. All are available for sterling payments only, cheques payable to Lawrence Upton.

OUR EDUCATION IS POLITICAL: Eric Mottram interviewed by Wolfgang Gortschacher
Price including postage and packing UK £4.00
Price including postage and packing Europe £4.50
Price including postage and packing USA / Canada £5.50

HI COWBOY by Fiona Templeton
Price including postage and packing UK £4.00
Price including postage and packing Europe £4.50
Price including postage and packing USA / Canada £6.00

PERIODICAL CONTESTS by Eric Mottram
Price including postage and packing UK £3.50
Price including postage and packing Europe £4.00
Price including postage and packing USA / Canada 4.50

↑ Index

172. CHRIS MANN
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

TT O 's '24 Hours'

!!!

↑ Index

173. Gwyn McVay
epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

"I" just finished reading Dorn's /Gunslinger/--hope not to get punched in the mouth for this... but doesn't it twist narrative expectations a bit, in that the Slinger, at the end, forgets all about chasing Howard Hughes, and the company disperses, and the Slinger hops back on the timetrain?

Pierre, that would be the bpNichol trans. of Basho, n'est-ce pas? does Nichol include the exclamation point?

Gwyn

↑ Index

174. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Jennifer-URL
Thu 8 May 1997

Because some people were having trouble configuring the Jennifer piece, I've set it up at:
http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/z.htm
where it runs, a bit slower than it would on your machine (Jennifer's breathing is slightly behind the times...)..., but it DOES run.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ TEL [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217

↑ Index

175. Joe Safdie
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> "I" just finished reading Dorn's /Gunslinger/--hope not to get punched in > the mouth for this... but doesn't it twist narrative expectations a bit, > in that the Slinger, at the end, forgets all about chasing Howard Hughes, > and the company disperses, and the Slinger hops back on the timetrain?
>

I'd say, very much so, Gwyn -- not to mention that filling up a character named "I" with gallons of LSD is altogether a neater method of circumventing the perils of first-person address than, say, taking Foucault to heart: no (de)construction required.

But about epic -- its usefulness as a term: I wonder about a feature common to many early poems thus named, the journey into hell and back. Classics scholars can correct me, but I think that particular journey is called "catabasis" -- and certainly then a movement from one (limited, narrow) state to another (broader, more all-encompassing) and then, maybe, back. Ulro to Jerusalem, Inferno to Paradiso, the Mahayana Buddhist coming down off the mountain until all sentient beings are enlightened . . .

. . . is that kind of "movement" narrative? It's certainly not LINEAR. Is it naive to think a movement like that one could still exist, post-modern and post-structuralist as we are? Some of the poems mentioned as contemporary exemplars of epic seem to me just epic in scale, not encompassing this broader move.

Wisdom literature, I hear some folks sneering -- we're beyond that. But for me, if epic means anything, it means going on that journey.

↑ Index

176. henry gould
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

I'm reading a book about the pervasiveness of an "orpheus" story in many variations in native american storytelling. The orpheus myth of Greece (coming maybe originally from eastward) makes the journeyer to the world of the dead a poet (in the stories or myths usually its "just" a man or woman going to try to fetch lover/kin back to the living). Does the greek version add a "reflexive" element - because this is THE epic tale?

Yippie "I" A. Coyote

↑ Index

177. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative -Reply
Thu 8 May 1997

Henry (et alia et coyotea et toyotea) -- there are several poss. explanations why Orpheus was Orpheus-the-poet in the Greek version -- (not least of 'em being, because that's who it was!) just a thought,

d.i.

p.s.: also, this allowed Cocteau to do cooler things

>>> henry gould <[redacted]> 05/08/97
02:38pm >>>
I'm reading a book about the pervasiveness of an "orpheus" story in many variations in native american storytelling. The orpheus myth of Greece
(coming maybe originally from eastward) makes the journeyer to the world of the dead a poet (in the stories or myths usually its "just" a man or woman going to try to fetch lover/kin back to the living).

Does the greek version add a "reflexive" element - because this is
THE epic tale?

Yippie "I" A. Coyote

↑ Index

178. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative / Orpheus p.s.
Thu 8 May 1997

Also --

I'd not thought abt. this much before, but your mention (Henry) about the Orpheus tale having poss. come from points east, reminds of the ancient Indian myth of Savitri (the Persephone of the tale) who is rescued from land of the dead by a certain Satyavan (the Orpheus) -- this story (of poss. interest to Mr. Blarnes) was re-told in -- hey, dig this -- EPIC form (a full, book-length poem, including cosmic idea-sweep, and as I recall in unrhymed iambic hexameter) by Aurobindo Ghose -- a British-educated Bengali who turned to matters of philosophy & spirituality after being jailed as an early 20th-century freedom fighter (pre-Gandhi days) . . . this is one of those books high on my hypothetical shelf of stuff to read -- whenever (every several years) I've run across a copy & read a half-page, have been much amazed by the language . . . old-school style, of course . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

179. Steven Marks
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> "I" just finished reading Dorn's /Gunslinger/--hope not to get punched in > the mouth for this... but doesn't it twist narrative expectations a bit,
> in that the Slinger, at the end, forgets all about chasing Howard Hughes,
> and the company disperses, and the Slinger hops back on the timetrain?
>
> Pierre, that would be the bpNichol trans. of Basho, n'est-ce pas? does > Nichol include the exclamation point?
>

> Gwyn
>
Here is a translation, I found in Anne Carson's _Eros: The Bittersweet_>

old pond
frog jumps in plop

No !.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

180. Jethro Cadbury neg cap and epic
Thu 8 May 1997

NEG CAP

On 6th May Henry Gould wrote <<Does it sound like Keats is saying the poet exhibits traits based on the deep motivation of composition - absorption in a kind of dream- object which unifies (as dreams do) various kinds of beauty & meaning in a sort of uncanny, lifelike, "unexplained" meaning - a dream-action, a mini-drama. And is this impulse based on an "overdetermined" SET of impulses - personal interest in matching/re-making past poems (which hold the same fascination-grip on the poet as on audience in general) - unconscious social disequilibriums or goals - talent as energeia working itself out - & is all this just romantic extra-poetic limburger or is the uncanny in poetry (the tragicomic acting-out) actually the essential thing & what is beautiful about it sings the mockingbird ha ha.>> thing is, if you look at the letter, he hardly says anything, no background context or anything - as I remember - i havent got it in front of me but i remember trying to use the quote to justify something or other in a paper and realising i could actually use it to justify anything... as long as you dont violate the dictionary meaning of the two words he uses - London. Keats mentions negative capability for the only time. No sign of V.

EPIC
On 7 May 1997 14:31:44 -0400
Evan Gottlieb wrote

<<All poetry is linear, I think, in the strict sense, insofar as language moves forward in time ... must narrative poetry specifically "tell a story" to be considered narrative, then? And why should the lack of a story be considered subversive, as some people have intimated?>>

A lot of questions there - but re the statement _All poetry is linear_ What about the visual text especially because it adds a twist to the question where the visual text is performed by more than one performer who may start at different points - the performance is linear because the performance moves forward in time but the linearity of the text performed may have been heavily disrupted AND there are many visual texts which are anything but linear in the first place

In the case of epics then and now there are a multitude of devices to send the auditor back in recollection and forwards in anticipation AND because of the epic size of epics they are not often read as a whole - the effect of reading a long poem more or less at a sitting can be rewarding and enjoyable BUT long poems are often experienced in stages and or with gaps

What about _Much poetry is linear some of the time_?

Re _Long poem_ there is a Long Poem Society over here. I think that's what it is called. Well, Bob Cobbing and I are engaged on a sequence of booklets called Domestic Ambient Noise - way over a hundred now one responding to another in an ever more complex pattern. Fundamentally visual on the page and meant for impro performance - but, you know, we have words there, lots of words, and when we don't we have letters - it's a series of poems. Well, Bob, as Writers Forum, has been sending them booklets so they can include DAN in their list of long poems and, as he tells it, there is a Long Correspondence, going on as to whether or not DAN is a poem! It's a pity Bob's not on email - but if you would like to buy the series I am sure he would quote you a good discount for quantity

Lawrence Upton

↑ Index

181. charssmith

R Johnson/epic

Thu 8 May 1997

<< Is it useful to talk of _Ark_ as an epic? or _"A"_ for that matter?

I'll bite, Charles (since I've been thinking and reading around Jack Clarke's _In the Analogy_ in similar terms). What do you think? O r is yours a rhetorical question? >>

No, Mike, I wasn't just being a smartass. I've got more questions than anything else.

Epic is a loaded term, with a lot frayed baggage. I balked at it, while recognizing reasons for its use. I honestly don't remember if Johnson used the term himself while talking (I suspect he did), or if it was introduced in Steve Carl's description. RJ doesn't use it in a note at the end of _Ark_, where, acknowledging Pound, Williams, Zukofsky & Olson as forbears he writes: "If my confreres wanted to write a work with history in its maw, I wished, from the beginning, to start all over again, attempting to know nothing but a will to create, and matter at hand. William Blake would be a guiding spirit: his advice to pay attention every moment: the very lightning, then thunder: a voice out of a cloud." (Begs question about a poem situated outside history, esp. given the charged, embedded 'historical' language, but that's another thread.) He goes on, after citing Simon Watts & Le Facteur Cheval as models of architectural bricolage, to say: "The idea of ARK came when I was able at last to conceive of it as a structure rather than a diatribe, artifact rather than argument, a veritable shell of the chambered nautilus, sliced and polished, bound for Ararat unknown."

What does it mean to place one’s work in that tradition, offering a "long poem," while disavowing any need to grapple with history? Or does he gain clearer access into the realm of creative imagination & spirit by sidestepping the "deeds" of history? Any long poem is not an "epic," despite popular use of the phrases like "epic proportions." There’s lots of interesting contemporary work that clearly situates itself through varying strategies in relation to epic tradition: "Passages," "Song of the Andoumboulou," "Descent of Alette," "Iovis." I guess I’m more comfortable seeing "Ark" as making that kind of move than calling it an "epic." I wouldn’t call the Duncan or Mackey "epic" either, though the work engages that tradition, while I’d be more comfortable with that characterization of the Waldman & Notley.

Against the sweeping totalizing gestures of Whitman, Pound, Olson, does "A" offer one alternative? where the "grand narrative" gives way to the individual poet’s attention & arrangements? _Ark_ seems to strive for LZ’s "totality at rest." The two poems foreground the creative imagination through their music & architectonics.

all best,

Charles

↑ Index

182. Elizabeth Hatmaker
epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

As I'm reading posts about "epic" I find myself coming back to a schpeel Roland Barthes wrote somewhere (paraphrasing at work here) in _Critical Essays__ about how the seemingly most direct and unencumbered way to suggest compassion or grief to a friend who has suffered a loss is simply to write "regret," that words beyond it tend to distract from primacy of the message or even call the orginal intent of the message into question. Epics strike me, similarly, as a bunch of words about some great story that would be better written in less (or no) words. That the "epic" task of one who writes the "epic" is in the audacity of overproducing the story, or, better, the "truth" of the story. This makes epic writing more attractive to me-- seeing it as a way of ruining stories by writing way too much--suggesting that a given text has too many words to be narrative. Maybe this: epic (v.)--to be overeager about the way words look and sound in such a way as to ruin a story that everyone seemingly aught to know by writing too many.

Elizabeth

↑ Index

183. henry
Re: R Johnson/epic
Thu 8 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997 15:58:59 -0400 <[redacted]> said:
>What does it mean to place one s work in that tradition, offering a "long >poem," while disavowing any need to grapple with history? Or does he gain >clearer access into the realm of creative imagination & spirit by >sidestepping the "deeds" of history? Any long poem is not an "epic," despite

By using an already-archaic form (epic), Milton in PL seems to find a narrow middle direction - he de-literalizes biblical prophecy on the one hand ("PL" is clearly a story, a masque) and emphasizes history's chaotic contingency (one damn thing after another) (especially toward the end of PL) on the other. But all the "famous" epics seem to take idiosyncratic approaches toward history. Sorry to keep harping on the oldies. - Old Hank

↑ Index

184. Christopher Alexander nonce
Thu 8 May 1997

All--

just a brief message to let you know that n/formation is now back online, with a lovely, secure server, & snug as a bug in a rug.

yesserreee. yup.

oh, & it's still at
  http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce
so no links need be changed.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

185. charssmith
Alice Notley
Thu 8 May 1997

In a message dated 97-05-08 10:44:12 EDT, Pierre Joris writes:

<< Re envisioning a contemporary epic possibility see also Alice Notley's _Homer's Art_ (in the "Curriculum of the Soul" series), as lovely & sharp corrective to allmale at-swords-point heroic epic. >>

Absolutely! & also, "Descent of Alette." Would also remind of her piece "Epic & Women Poets" in Waldman/Schelling's _Disembodied Poetics_, where she discusses her sense of dream, narrative & search for measure.

"The story is allegorical, & allegory is one way in for women. As well as for men who are tired of this century's lyric 'I,' or tired of fragmentation, disjunction, literary theory, & hipness."

"The old twentieth century forms are now becoming too easy; continuity at length is now hard. Continuity at length implies measure; by which I mean a somewhat consistent unimpeded measure. A new content, a new consciousness, implies the need for a new sound; form & measure are often the same."

"Stories, & measures, are dresses to slip into that give as you walk, at least as much as any poem bound by, say, restrictions of language & demeanor, whether the language of philosophical theory or some sort of plain speech, or by line length or prose-seemingness or marked surface variation."

"A measure comes out of the individual& the culture at the same time: but you the poet will perceive it to come out of your body, your head, the sounds that play there; you will not be able to analyze it into being."

↑ Index

186. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Joseph Lease wrote:

<< . . . I also find and am frequently surpsised when/that many think I mean something much more stable, unitary, fixed, comfortable, famaliar (you get the drill) than I mean when I say narrative:

Stein is for example a non-stop lesson in narrative: >>

well, some of Stein, okay; but much -- I don't think so.

The Stein of -- what's it called? -- Three Lives -- sure, that's narrative.

As for the Stein of (I think it's) The Making of An American -- the part(s) I've heard &/or read (during one of those bi-annual Stein-a-thons at a Soho gallery, wherein the entire book is read thru) were (to my memory & thinking) abt. as far from narrative as one might generally get. Much more a kaleidoscope of language-fragments & repetitions -- reminiscent (I thought) of how Mahayana scriptures are sometimes structured -- but not geared toward the telling of a story (a.k.a. a narrative).

<< I'm thinking also in the sense that Donald Revell has pointed to a new narrativity that comes after language poetry and learns from it: >>

An analogy: the ways in which the better story-telling films will oftentimes include some arresting passages that seem to be much more about light & frame & picture than about pulling forward the (mere) "story" -- though such a passage in such a film is different from an entire film given over to effects of that sort . . .

this isn't the sort of example I was thinking, writing the above graph, but: consider the opening passage of The Umbrellas of Cherborg [if that's the correct city-name -- film by Jacque Demi, if that's the correct director; re-released a few years ago . . .; a highly stylized musical, a very narrative movie] -- the opening sequence shows nothing but an abstracted pattern of umbrellas crossing in the town square -- more "modern art" than narrative at that point, but it plays with visual elements that are soon to give way to the downpour of the tale . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

187. Jordan Davis
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

I am feeling like an old bocce player now as I exclaim "But sure that's narrative, _The Making of Americans_." There are characters, there is development, aggh.

See, the thing is, there is no such thing as "Coolidge" or "Stein". To say "Coolidge" or "Stein" is to ignore that these people did more than repeat a dominant trope. Every time you think of them that way you're thinking of a Big Mac, and every time you think of a Big Mac, you salivate (and/or retch). The function of literature inasmuch as things people say write or type can have functions is to remind people that although autonomic response is an exciting option it is not one one is bound to. Omit your independence to your cost.

Ah, see, you made me get soaked in romantic individualism again. Anyway before the quarter in this coin-op John Godfrey-imitation wears out, let me finish by reminding you that this is all closer to law than science, that it's only argument bullying clarity and detail that go over here. No work worth talking about is one thing, and no person can be spoken of with respect as a simple unified person, with respect to the wild ongoing cellular recordkeeping anyway.

So,
Jordan(s)

↑ Index

188. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

Jordon --

<< I am feeling like an old bocce player now as I exclaim "But sure that's narrative, _The Making of Americans_." There are characters, there is development, aggh. >>

thx for the corrective -- I had some subliminal doubt. (My prob. w/ noting the narrativity in Americans stems from fact I wandered in in medias res and didn't really "get" what were the characters, what was the development; -- was more lost in the remarkable wash of the waves, rather than noting that, yes, there's actually a beach here and some surfers too.)

Speaking of beaches, an interesting angle on narrative is Leslie Scalapino's That They Were At The Beach (for instance) . . .

this reminds that I've been meaning to read Carole Maso since monkey's ears -- anyone care to recommend / critique particular volumes, in some manner?

BTW, perhaps the "non-narrative" tag got some of its force from critical writing re: performance art & dance & suchlike (some of which is/was, some of which isn't/wasn't -- some very narrative; some avoiding "easy" story reading) . . .

one can speak of a "simple" (or "single") narrative voice, vs. a multiple or complex or . . . (well, it can be single but complex, as in [much of] Scalapino) . . .

The ur-narratives are, of course, the myths. And the appeal of narrative seems allied w/ the appeal of mythology, no?

d.i.

↑ Index

189. Pam Brown
Re: epic/narrative
Thu 8 May 1997

At 01:37 PM 8/5/97 -0400, you wrote:
> TT O 's '24 Hours'
>
> !!!
>
>
That's II O as in Pi O, Melbourne poet,...a HUGE 600page book written in "ethnic" vernacular - It's amazing !! Published by Collective Works last year.

Also ,Laurie Duggan's "experimental" poetic documentary epic about Gippsland, Victoria - "The Ash Range" published by Picador in 1987...

Bye for now,
Pam Brown

↑ Index

190. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
Thu 8 May 1997

Steven Marks wrote --

<<<
. . . Gwyn McVay wrote: . . .

> Pierre, that would be the bpNichol trans. of Basho, n'est-ce pas? does Nichol include the exclamation point?

Here is a translation, I found in Anne Carson's _Eros: The Bittersweet_>

old pond
frog jumps in plop

No !.

Steven >>>

Yes, but that doesn't speak to the issue of whether or not bp's version has an exclamation point. Anne Carson's version was borrowed from:

Basho, Matsuo, The Narrow Road to the Deep North and Other Travel Sketches, trans. by Nobayuki Yuasa, New York (1966) -- (that's the old Penguin classic). As for haiku, Robert Hass's recent trans. of 3 haiku poets (including Basho) is darn good.

Regarding the Basho cited by Steven, that poem serves as epigraph to one of the final chapters in Eros: The Bittersweet. For poss. interest, here that section entire (beginning w/ chapter title):

/ / / / /

What Is This Dialogue About?

old pond
frog jumps in plop

Basho

The Phaedrus is an exploration of the dynamics and dangers of controlled time that make themselves accessible to readers, writers, and lovers. In Sokrates' view, a true logos has this in common with a real love affair, that it must be lived out in time. It is not the same backwards as forwards, it cannot be entered at any point, or frozen at its acme, or dismissed when fascination falters. A reader, like a bad lover, may feel he can zoom into his text at any point and pluck the fruit of its wisdom. A writer, like Lysias, may feel he can rearrange the limbs of the fiction on which he dotes with no regard for its life as an organism in time. So readers and writers dabble in the glamor of grammata without submitting themselves to wholesale erotic takeover or the change of self entailed in it. Like Odysseus bound to the mast of his ship, a reader may titillate himself with the siren song of knowledge and sail past intact. It is a kind of voyeurism, as we see when we watch Phaedrus seduced by the written words of Lysias. In Plato's view, the Lysian text is as philosophic pornography when compared with the erotic logos of Sokrates. But Plato cannot demonstrate this merely by aligning Lysias and Sokrates as one dead text beside another. The demonstration requires something of a ruse if it is to be truly arresting. So Plato floats logos upon logos; they neither converge nor cancel out. We have seen other writers contrive such stereoscopic images. For example, Sappho in her fragment 31 superimposes one level of desire upon another, floats the actual upon the possible, in such a way that our perception jumps from one to the other without losing sight of the difference between them. Or again, the novelist Longus floats an apple upon a tree plucked bare of fruit, defying logic and captivating Daphnis. Or consider Zeno who, in his famous paradoxes, suspends moving objects upon the impossibility of motion, so that we see Achilles running as fast as he can, going nowhere. These are writers who share a strategy; they purpose to re-create in you a certain action of the mind and heart -- the action of reaching toward a meaning not yet known. It is a reach that never quite arrives, bittersweet. Plato's interplay of logoi in the Phaedrus imitates this reaching action. As Phaedrus reads what Lysias wrote, as Phaedrus listens to what Sokrates says, something begins to come into focus. You begin to understand what a logos is and what it is not and the difference. Like a face crossing a mirror at the back of the room, Eros moves. You reach. Eros is gone. The Phaedrus is a written dialogue that ends by discrediting written dialogues. This fact does not cease to charm its readers. Indeed, it is the fundamental erotic feature of this erotikos logos. Each time you read it, you are conducted to a place where something paradoxical happens: the knowledge of Eros that Sokrates and Phaedrus have been unfolding word by word through the written text simply steps into a blind point and vanishes, pulling the logos after it. Their conversation about love ... turns into a conversation about writing ... and Eros is not seen or heard from again. This act of dialectical interception has, since antiquity, perplexed those who wish to say concisely what the dialogue is about. But there is nothing inappropriate here. If you reach into the Phaedrus to get hold of Eros, you will be eluded, necessarily. He never looks at you from the place from which you see him. Something moves in the space between. That is the most erotic thing about Eros.

- Anne Carson, Eros: The Bittersweet

[pp. 165-167 -- pardon that this makes much reference to texts & terms already summarized, excerpted &/or discussed earlier in the book; but this shd. serve to give a taste of Carson's manner of thought & indeed something of her thesis . . .]

d.i.

↑ Index

191. nuyopoman
Re: How Public is the Sphere
Thu 8 May 1997

<<Many of L. Scalapino's long prose pieces are refered to routinely as novels and stories; I was interested a few years ago to hear her read sections from various such pieces, always refering to them as poems...

Is it ok to allow the poet to decide if what she has written is a poem?

<<the works
that have already been done that cd be considered poetry and cultural studies, the field it's my longterm mission to map out...md

Poetry has spent recent time (say, this century) ceding itself to other arts. Performance Art, ugh. If it's a performance, is it not a priori art? To me, it's simple enough -- consider the line break, dive into a poem.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

192. Charles Alexander flood
Thu 8 May 1997

This may be cheating, as I still have my poetics set to "nomail" as I get through a bunch of 'other' stuff. So I'm not reading messages but am sending one.

This one is forwarded, and is about helping the arts recover from the North Dakota floods. I apologize if someone has already posted this on poetics.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 6 May 1997 22:46:23 -0400
From: Julie Hornstein <[redacted]>
    Arts Education Chair, North Dakota Arts Alliance
To: FINKELSTEIN RICHARD S <[redacted]>
Subject: Help for Grand Forks Arts

May 6, 1997
UPDATE ON FLOODED GRAND FORKS ARTS ORGANIZATIONS:

Less than .05% of residents have been allowed to move back into their homes because of lack of water, sewer, gas & electric services.Most are 'camping in' with friends, relatives or shelters both in and out of state.

We have confirmation that:

ND Ballet was burned out. All Records, equipment, etc. are gone, but they were renters so can try to move to a new space, if/when one can be located. They had to cancel performances and spring fundraisng efforts and are short of current operating funds to use for the recovery period.

Firehall Community Theatre sustained substantial water damage and some fear the building will be condemned...a determination to be made 'later' by the powers that be.As of May 5, the degree of damage to equipment, costumes, etc. could not be determined because the site could not be visited. They had to cancel performances and spring fundraisng efforts and are short of current operating funds to use for the recovery period.

North Valley Arts Council was temporarily housed in a commercial building above water line and therefore still have their administrative hub, but they were in a crucial stage of grant-seeking for renovation of an old movie theatre as a mixed-purpose arts center. That building sustained substantial water damage and no one seems to be able to forecast the probable future of the project at this time.

Most of the remaining arts organizations (Symphony, ND Art Gallery, Master Chorale, etc.) were housed above water-line (many on the UND Campus), but operations have been severely interrupted and we will have to wait until folks can move back home to find out how much damage has been done to season ticket sales, fundraising, planning for next season etc.

 At the request of Governor Schafer, the ND Community Fund is taking donations for non-profit organizations for flood relief. Any donations can be designated to a specific cause (such as 'the arts') or for a specific organization. All donations are 100% tax deductible and 100% of the money goes for flood relief. Contact information: North Dakota Community Foundation, PO BOX 387, Bismarck, ND 58502-2191. Phone [redacted].

 The North Dakota Arts Alliance would like to publicly acknowledge contributions to flood relief for the arts in order to underscore the nationwide support for the belief that rebuilding the arts infrastructure is vital to rebuilding a real community. Such documentation will also provide moral support and generate tangible in-state support for the arts organizations as they undergo the protracted recovery period. Please send notification of flood-reief projects and/or contributions to: North Dakota Arts Alliance PO BOX 428, Minot, ND 58702 or email to [redacted] for publication.

* Individuals and organizations wishing to offer in-kind or replacement-goods relief rather than money donations should contact North Dakota Arts Alliance PO BOX 428, Minot, ND 58702, [redacted], or email to [redacted] so we can facilitate the matching of needs with offered assistance.

Let's also give some deep thought to establishing an on-going national disaster-relief fund for arts organizations facing unexpected disasters - natural or un-natural.

Julie Hornstein (Arts Education Chair, North Dakota Arts Alliance) (home email [redacted])

.

---------- Forwarded Message ends here ----------

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

193. Mark Weiss
Re: R Johnson/epic
Thu 8 May 1997

Sorry to beat this drum again: Milton and his contemporaries would have been mightily surprised to hear that epic was already archaic. Within his lifetime Davenant and Crowley wrote epics in English, and it was Dryden's greatest (explicit) ambition, best realized in his pre-All for Love tragedies and in his translation of Vergil. Nor were these guys alone. The continent was humming with epic-making activity.
>By using an already-archaic form (epic), Milton in PL seems to find a >narrow middle direction - he de-literalizes biblical prophecy on the one hand >("PL" is clearly a story, a masque) and emphasizes history's chaotic >contingency (one damn thing after another) (especially toward the end of >PL) on the other. But all the "famous" epics seem to take idiosyncratic >approaches toward history. Sorry to keep harping on the oldies. - Old Hank
>
>

↑ Index

194. oren.izenberg
Speaking of Stein
Fri 9 May 1997

Anyone interested in Stein ought to take a look at listmember Jennifer Ashton's essay in the most recent ELH (#64)-- "Gertrude Stein for Anyone."

Besides being an incredibly interesting account of Stein's (changing) thinking about the problem of "identity"--what makes a whole thing whole and how do you represent it (problems thought through in a number of contexts: literary, political, psychological, and mathematical)-- it is also entirely relevant to the questions being raised here: is Stein interested in "narrative" or not, is there one "Stein project" or are there many.

Check it out.

Best,
O.

↑ Index

195. Steven Marks
Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
Fri 9 May 1997

Thanks for clearing up where the Basho translation came from in _Eros.._ I figured it wasn't hers. I love that first line: "old pond" I imagine water covered with duckweed, hence the plop instead of a splash.

BTW, I would recommend _Ava_ by Carole Maso in which several narratives intertwine in the mind of a dying woman. On her last day of life, in fact. The novel consists of short "paragraphs," usually one sentence, sometimes more, sometimes fragments, often repetitive, so that the stories build slowly but inexorably. Actually, "build" is a bit misleading. It's more like they coalesce.

I would also recommend her outstanding essay in the Mar/Apr 1995 issue of "American Poetry Review" in which she writes:

"Woolf in _The Common Reader_: Forget that 'appalling narrative business of the realist: getting from lunch to dinner.'"

TTFN,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

196. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: poetry collections/information please
Fri 9 May 1997

---

this wd obviously be a service to many of us on the list, so if anyone answers, please do so front-channel thanks!--md

At 12:57 PM 5/9/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>A plea to the list for information!

>To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial >collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona.
>Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets >they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by >front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send >to the list.
>Thanks
>
>Mark of the Junction

↑ Index

197. Alan Jennifer Sondheim

How Could You (fwd)

Fri 9 May 1997

Go to MIRROR URL below; click on <how could you> in the files section.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ TEL [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217

↑ Index

198. Poetics List

erratum to the erratum: Beat Women (fwd)

Fri 9 May 1997

Kristin Prevallet asked me to forward this to the list. She is now subscribing to Poetics and will be testing her mic shortly... jk

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 8 May 1997 20:31:09 -0400 (EDT)
From: Kristin S Prevallet <[redacted]>
To: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
Subject: erratum to the erratum: Beat Women

Erratum to the Erratum: Women of the Beat Generation

The Conari Press is attempting to maintain credibility within a larger reading community by sending out an erratum stating that "an unfortunate combination of computer glitches and copy editor confusion" is the cause of Brenda Knight's re-copying of six paragraphs from my essay, "The Reluctant Pixie Poole: A Recovery of Helen Adam." If this is true, I think it is necessary to point to two paragraphs (not included in the six mentioned above) where Knight, in her attempt to disguise her reliance on my text, unfortunately got the facts wrong. I am citing the two examples below not necessarily as an attempt to demean the Conari Press's erratum, but to clarify some of the erroneous scholarship in the Helen Adam introduction to "Women of the Beat Generation"--scholarship to which my name has (perhaps unfortunately) now been linked.

1. Knight wrote: "In 1957, Helen started her own magical poetry and performance troop called the Maidens that included Jess, Madeline Gleason, Robert Duncan, Eve Triem, and James Broughton." It is important to clarify that The Maidens were not a "performance troop [troupe?]," and that it was not "started" by Helen Adam. The Maidens did not perform and they were not a troupe--they were an erudite group of artists who got together at each other's houses, dined and sipped coffee while talking about Poetry (capital "P"). In the same paragraph she continues: "That same year, several important events catapulted the Beats to fame, notably the publication of Jack Kerouac's "On the Road" and the "Howl" obscenity trail. The Maidens were intrigued by these new literary radicals, welcoming them at readings and offering encouragement." There is no evidence that The Maidens as a group were intrigued by the Beats. The Maidens as a group were in fact antithetical to the Beats and did not offer the Beats any encouragement. Their hermetic, domestic group deliberately set themselves apart from the North Beach scene. However, although the Maidens were critical of the Beats, Helen Adam herself was not--and defended Allen Ginsberg's poetry in one of the workshops she took. "apex of the M" #6 (forthcoming, Fall 1997), will have a section of the Adam/Duncan correspondence in which Adam defends Ginsberg against "suburban protesters." Anyone interested in The Maidens should read Kevin Killian's excellent essay "Faggot Vomit: Jack Spicer and the Maidens" in the most recent Poetry Project Newsletter.

2. Knight wrote: "In 1964, Helen Adam received national attention when her play "San Francisco's Burning" was staged off-Broadway in New York. Sadly, a series of difficulties coincided with this success. Helen was fired from her filing job of ten years and suffered from stress and depression, leading to hospitalization and a series of shock treatments. Helen and her sister, Pat, never parted, eventually moved to New York City and lived in solitude until their deaths."

Knight totally mis-read my essay in coming up with a totally confused paragraph, filled with factual and made-up errors: 1964 was the year that Helen and Pat moved to New York--"San Francisco's Burning" was staged off-off-(off) Broadway at the Judson Poet's Theater in 1968. (I had written a singular "off" in my original essay, but this is incorrect.) The play did not receive National attention, as Miss Knight inferred. Helen's depression was in 1962, when "San Francisco's Burning" was first staged--in San Francisco. Helen and Pat did not live in solitude until their deaths. Pat perhaps--but Helen was quite a star in New York and had lots of friends. I have recently received several letters from friends of hers in New York who are somewhat annoyed with Knight's fabricated statement!

Had I known that Knight was going to rely so heavily on my essay, I might have warned her that I wrote the essay early in my work with the Adam archive, and that the facts in the essay were not necessarily set in stone. Unfortunately, as in the "off-Broadway" example, Knight repeated another of my errors. I wrote (and soon after corrected, but apparently not in the version I sent Knight) that ". . . Helen Adam became the pride of Scotland. The Elfin Pedlar was graced even by a note of praise from the Queen of Scotland herself." Ooops! There hasn't been a Queen of Scotland for centuries! Call it a mad-queen's revenge, but it is now published in Knight's introduction that "Upon its publication, Helen Adam became the pride of Scotland; The Elfin Pedlar even elicited a note of praise from the queen of Scotland herself." Helen Adam in fact received a note from an aristocratic acquaintance, who forwarded her a note of praise from the Queen...of England.

The two clarifications are separate from my six paragraphs that were "accidentally" used in Knight's introduction. Referring to those, I do not necessarily think that a mass-market trade edition of a book should be bogged down with footnotes and sentences beginning "According to..." However, I do think a book with 30+ long introductions, that is being marketed as "well researched," should have a list of sources credited at the end. Most anthologies do this. Of course, I also think that Brenda Knight would be better off admitting that for the Helen Adam section she was in a bind: that the book was close to press-time, that she wanted to include Helen Adam but had no information, that she called me (a graduate student) for information, that I provided it, and that she unashamedly used it. Because she strategically is refusing to do this, I cannot help but think that other introductions in the book are plagued by the same thievery, although certainly not on as large a scale. This is not to say the "Women of the Beat Generation" was not researched. I do not dispute that Knight conducted hundreds of interviews to get her information for the other sections. Therefore, I think that the only way for The Conari Press to make amends with me (and maintain credibility with the larger reading community) would be to have Brenda Knight go out and do research herself for a new essay about Helen Adam for the second edition.

This post reflects more than my own personal anger--the Conari Press is a small press, and this book will probably do quite well for them. (They are marketing it with an audio cassette with Debra Winger reading some of the poems!) Why couldn't it have been done right? It is an offense to the responsibility and respectability of small presses, that it was not.

Those interested in Helen Adam can see my early essay at
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/prevallet/adam.html.
Or see my essay "A Sketch for a Helen Adam Biography" in the most recent "First Intensity." I made an error in that essay however: Robert Duncan died in 1986 and not in 1988 as I wrote.

Thanks again to Maria Damon for referring me to the National Writers Union, who helped settle this case out of court.

Sincerely, Kristin Prevallet

ERRATUM Due to an unfortunate combination of computer glitches and copy editor confusion, portions of the biographical sketch of Helen Adam in the Conari Press title "Women of the Beat Generation," that were drawn from the work of Kristin Prevallet, appeared without complete attribution. Ms. Prevallet generously provided us with her excellent research on Helen Adam and we apologize for any harm that might have occurred. Future printings will restore the original accurate acknowledgments.

Thank You,
Will Glennon
Publisher, Conari Press
Brenda Knight
Author, "Women of the Beat Generation"

↑ Index

199. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Fri 9 May 1997

Dwayne --

good question. I suspect the answer is (at least often, or sometimes) a (perhaps qualified) "YES, you bet!" --

but others might care to answer / discuss in more detail. These are tricky issues, eh? For instance: If one enters a dialogue w/ a tradition, by (say) breaking the expectations of that tradition, one's piece of the puzzle may still be a piece of the puzzle . . . -- (but your question could be addressed more specifically than I'll muster here at 5 a.m.)

d.i.

/ / / / /

>>> Daniel Tessitore <[redacted]> 05/09/97 08:32am >>>
Pat wrote:

Yes, David, I think _ Flowchart_ cld indeed qualify as an epic whose epicness consists in its undermining of the trad. idea of the epic, though like you, I've not read it all yet.
Patrick P.

How does undermining trad. ideas of a genre constitute that genre? I suppose if one means by epic "very very large in scale," then that statement would hold, Flowchart being large in the way we are not used to seeing large. But if by epic we are talking about such elements as narrative, characters, blah, blah, then how does undermining those things alone equal the same thing? Is L-A-N-G-U-A-G-E poetry which "resists" or "disrupts" the trad. idea of the lyric, by the same token, also lyric?

Dwayne

↑ Index

200. rsillima
The Narr
Fri 9 May 1997

Narrative = the unfolding of meaning in (across) time

As Grenier himself has demonstrated (in more ways than one), even a single vowel has a beginning, middle and end, events that can be modulated, expectations set up and either satisfied, turned aside or turned up on their heads (right side up)

The idea of a non-narrative art exists as an idea
but it never exists in the face of an actual text or sounded poem

Story is a whole other ball o' wax

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

When this you see
Remember me

↑ Index

201. David Israel
Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass
Fri 9 May 1997

Daniel T. --

I've not read Hughes' Crow so can't comment -- but wasn't that, btw, made into an opera (or opera-like thing) by Pete Townsend?

d.i.

p.s.: By the way, who's Great Britain's poet-laureate these days? Relatedly, is that a job-for-life? (I'm presuming, you're perhaps British, ergo qualified to answer these obscure questions -- though the e-address suggested Japan I think.) Here in DC, Robert Hass gave his farewell reading last week, ending his 2-year stint as Po Laureate -- with some damn good new stuff, must say. I saw him read several times over that period, and my appreciation of the chap certainly grew. Hass was mentioned as having participated in that recent conference -- but I didn't see mention of what he might've had to say. Worth repeating? Robt. Pinsky's the next-in-line-laureate, as you'all perhaps know . . . (maybe Dante Studies will go up on the charts now?)

>>> henry <[redacted]> 05/08/97
08:25am >>>
On Thu, 8 May 1997 21:04:56 +-900 Daniel Tessitore said:
>
>As to narrative--does Ted Hughes' CROW qualify? He originally had a more >unified narrative frame, complete with a prose bit I believe, and he cut it >out. Can the result be called story, narrative, linear?

in my view, even a riddle has a story to tell.
- Sherlock Holmes

↑ Index

202. Pierre Joris
Re: epic as epic
Fri 9 May 1997

Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>
> just curious -- has anyone out there ever read Paul Ricoeur's works on > _Time and Narrative_? I only have Vol. I --

Yeap, ages ago. Got stuck somwhere towards the end of vol II when Mrs Dalloway comes in. Have promised myself often to get back to it, but sofar no time, or else for taste for Ricoeur nas waned. Not sure which.

-- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through
values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which
constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

203. CHRIS MANN
Re: The Narr
Fri 9 May 1997

On Fri, 9 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> Narrative = the unfolding of meaning in (across) time

'time based' cf 'narrative'. music may or may not be narrative. (may or may not be time based for that matter, but..) sculpture.. you get the idea. as to the unfolding of a vowel and the (please!) avoidance of hegel, i dare say your guess is as good as mine though what either knows of the other does not necessarily include narrative. that would require a change of mind.

↑ Index

204. Tom Mandel
epic as poem of war
Fri 9 May 1997

> From: Pierre Joris <[redacted]>
> Re envisioning a contemporary epic possibility see also Alice Notley's > _Homer's Art_ (in the "Curriculum of the Soul" series), as lovely &
> sharp corrective to allmale at-swords-point heroic epic.

...but also see Simone Weil's "The Iliad: Poem of War" (prob. a familiar citation to most on this list. Yes?)

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

205. Michael Boughn

Re: R Johnson/epic

Fri 9 May 1997

> No, Mike, I wasn't just being a smartass.

I certainly never thought that, Charles, only that your question perhaps answered itself.

> What does it mean to place one's work in that tradition, offering a "long poem," while disavowing any need to grapple with history?

Doesn't it mean to step up to a different plate, to enter a different conversation, as far as the writing goes. And to locate poetry in a very sepcific relation to the world. I hear you on the question of creative imagination, but it seems to me the difference between, say, Ark and Maximus is not about creative imagination but literally and irreducibly about "history".

> Against the sweeping totalizing gestures of Whitman, Pound, Olson, does "A" offer one alternative? where the "grand narrative" gives way to the individual poet's attention & arrangements? _Ark_ seems to strive for LZ's "totality at rest." The two poems foreground the creative imagination through their music & architectonics.

I don't think I'd agree that any of these are "totalizing gestures" (a phrase that these days oozes with malediction). On the contrary, all of them are defenetrating gestures. The problem is in how they come to terms with history--Whitman overwhelmed by democratic possibility, Pound overwhelmed by reactionary nostaligia for heroic culture, Olson--I can't say about Olson right now, but the problem doesn't seem to be "totalizing grand narratives." Again, it's got to do with the specifics of the relation to history. So you're right in that avoiding an articulation of a relation to history would get you around that problem. And out of the conversation that preoccupies the telling/doing/seeing (Dave Chirot's "site/sight/cite") we are calling the epic.

It seems to me that once again we get caught in Ulro with our simplistic dichotomy between "(totalizing) narrative = epic" vs. "non-ordering intervention = (non-totalizing) non-narrative", where, as those French guys teach, one side of this equation is good and the other ain't so good (like individual/social, I/other etc.) It must be handy to have it all laid out in such a neat, moral map, but isn't what we're looking for a story? An(other) telling of our story? Isn't part of our problem in finding a new relation to meaning as we encounter it in history?

And having stepped right into the middle of that stinker, I'm going to go change the baby.

Good to talk with you, Charles.

Best,
Mike

↑ Index

206. hen
Re: The Narr
Fri 9 May 1997

On Fri, 9 May 1997 04:49:07 -0500 <[redacted]> said:
>Narrative = the unfolding of meaning in (across) time
>
>The idea of a non-narrative art exists as an idea
>but it never exists in the face of an actual text or sounded poem
>
>Story is a whole other ball o' wax
>

Is story then narrative made mimetic - that is an image (partial, distorted) of recognizable reality (i.e. reality as a combination, a whole, living, not an abstracted simple sound, etc. or discourse). - "Henry" illegitimate granddaughter of "Stein" "Coolidge" & "Fernando"

↑ Index

207. Tom Mandel
categories
Fri 9 May 1997

<mind>

Imagine a world fully defined by the rules of geometry, in which all entities are geometric entities.

Imagine within that world a space in the shape of a star. Imagine further that we possess a mechanism which allows us to enlarge or reduce this space, which may be a mental space (and the mechanism a mental mechanism), without changing its geometry (its proportions if you will).

Now we take an object in hand.

Using our mechanism we may compare the object in hand and the space-in-the-shape-of-a-star to determine whether the object will fit the space in such a way that all the vectors determining the space's shape touch at each point all the vectors determining the object's shape.

If so we would be in a position to say: "this object is a star" or more modestly, "here is evidence that this object is a star -- it has the shape of a star."

In so reduced a world it is possible categories of mind might work in the way I describe. And in this way does the discussion of epic and narrative on this list proceed.

Probably not, however, as an unstated assumption of a typological narrative such as mine (above) is that there is an operator inside the world with access to at least one dimension beyond the world being operated (e.g. "take an object in hand", etc.).

A good place to start learning how categories actually work is _Women, Fire, & Dangerous Things_ by George Lakoff.

...or as Alberto Caiero for F. Pessoa InterPersonal writes (more or less) "The wind sings I am wind" -- i.e. not "I am windiness."

</mind>

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

208. hen

Re: epic as poem of war

Fri 9 May 1997

On Fri, 9 May 1997 08:12:32 -0400 Tom Mandel said:
>

>...but also see Simone Weil's "The Iliad: Poem of War" (prob. a familiar >citation to most on this list. Yes?)

I think that's "Iliad : Poem of Force" (just to pick lice) - Henry

↑ Index

209. hen
Re: categories
Fri 9 May 1997

Tom, look out, there's a comet approaching your left category from the north. Don't let "it" slug you or bully you in any way.

I think the discussion of narrative & epic & poetry started in from a scattered astronomical forte anomaly. The engendering trope master dictation squirrel envelope big bang involved the originary question:

is the issue of storytellying/narrative/drama/"action" (in Arrydistortle's sense) interesting with respect to "poetry in the public sphere"?

& it's opened a field theoretical blurb knockabout kookaburra in several directions. but if you're tired we can go back to discussion engineer fluid mechanisms in remote extracurricular control.

- Star Vehicle 13 (Gould)

also, Spandrift Squirt Elephant 4-wheeler has asked me to shut the trap for a spell. closing...

↑ Index

210. Tom Mandel
feathers to iron
Fri 9 May 1997

I'm a few days/weeksd/months behind on the list

...(and always reading from most recent to oldest, which somehow doesn't improve one's sense of having conclusions to work from in moving toward valid premises)...

Mike Boughn's mention of _From Feathers to Iron_ passes me by -- Mike, which "Clarke" is the author, and can you say more about the book? (by backchannel if it had been identified to the list and I mist).

plop! (damn a piece of scone fell into my cocoa)

Huh, I could have sworn I read a couple of references to "as far as I've read in" one poem and other indications of asking whether X is Y when you don't know X. Of course time is tight right now, epically tight.

(actually, that tastes good. all soft and kind of having lost any reference to what intentions went into its making. it's as if the scone was a modifier of the cocoa or as if it's all really cocoa, some is just also scone or was)

If I mispell mispelling as mipselling, and claim its high intelligence, only Ron Silliman on this list will read that as a joke and also see it as a key to an epic narrative of our lives (hint: "mip" is an acronym).

(I bet I could market this? Not crisp enough? Hmmm, how to keep the scone bits crisp in the cocoa...)

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

211. Maria Damon

Re: erratum to the erratum: Beat Women (fwd)

Fri 9 May 1997

---

kristin prevallet writes:
>Those interested in Helen Adam can see my early essay at
>http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/prevallet/adam.html.
>Or see my essay "A Sketch for a Helen Adam Biography" in the most recent >"First Intensity." I made an error in that essay however: Robert Duncan >died in 1986 and not in 1988 as I wrote.
>

it's my understandng that duncan died in 1988. i was on an mla panel on duncan at mla 1987, and there was some excitement abt whether duncan wd be able to come or not; he couldn't, as he was too ill. btw, thanks for the update on l'affaire conari! i hope the settlement is somewhat to your satisfaction. conari should, at least, in my opinion, be thoroughly embarrassed.--md

↑ Index

212. Mark Prejsnar
Re: epic/narrative
Fri 9 May 1997

Don't agree. Someone's work can be, taken as a whole, fairly representative of a given direction...I got ambushed because I know about 6 Coolidge books, a whole lot of writing, but not At Egypt, which everyone keeps mentioning. The principle still works, tho', as an abreviation of longer arguments I don't have the time to type in. Bocce is more than those balls down the court!

MP

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> See, the thing is, there is no such thing as "Coolidge" or "Stein". To say

↑ Index

213. Tom Mandel
Re: Simone Weil
Fri 9 May 1997

No, I think I misquoted the title from memory.

At 09:49 AM 5/9/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Tom,
> In the Pendle Hill pamphlet version of Weil's piece, it reads
>"...Poem of Force." Does "force" work as a translation? Do you know the >French [I don't]; does it read "guerre"?
> If "force" really does translate it [it seems to, the way she >talks about the numbing character of terror], that wd. put a different >spin on "epic," eh?
>Dan Zimmerman
>

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

214. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: epic as epic
Fri 9 May 1997

---

just curious -- has anyone out there ever read Paul Ricoeur's works on _Time and Narrative_? I only have Vol. I --

↑ Index

215. Douglas Barbour
Re: narrative / non-narrative
Fri 9 May 1997

I'm a bit behind, but play with these terms has certainly been going on in Canadian criticism of various kinds of long poems up here. Actually, Charles Berstein would still recall coming on to speak at The Long-Liners conference back in 1984 right after Gary Geddes, a very trad poet, had held forth on the desirability of getting out from under the influence of such terrible poets s Pound (!) & back to storytelling. Charles's response, one I have come to expect & enjoy since meeting him later, was "I'm pleased to follow Gary Geddes because I can report to you that I disagreed with most of what he said." And most of the papers at the conference took up other modes of long poem than the 'simple' narrative. But I want to point to Canadian master of the long poem & its poetics, Robert Kroetsch, whose ongoing poem is called Field Notes (_Completed Field Notes_ Toronto: McClelland & Stewart, 1989). In an essay, "For Play and Entrance: The Contemporary Canadian Long Poem" (in _The Lovely Treachery of Words_ Toronto: Oxford UP, 1989 [these can be tracked down if you try]), he says, specifically of bpNichol's _The Martyrology_: "In Nichol we have, supremely, against the grammar of inherited story, the foregrounding of language. But the limits of language are such (the spirit become flesh; The Word become words) that all should be written down." And: "A method, then, and then, and then, of composition; against the 'and then' of story. . . . The story as fragment _becomes_ the long poem: the story becomes its own narrative; i.e., our interest is in, not story, but the _act_ of telling the story."

That's a beginning, of a way of looking at the reading of a lot of US long poems too, how they pull us into the ongoing process of writing/reading, or, perhaps, in response, reading/writing. And it has something to do with the onrushing catching of one's interest in a series of 'sonnets' in Jack Clarke's _In the Analogy_ (which I also recommend), as the accumulate the narrative of their own coming to be, in order... Works, in its way, too, for those parts of _Ark_ I have so far read.

==========

==========

Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigary
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

216. Joseph Lease
Re: epic/narrative
Fri 9 May 1997

---

agreed: though the continuity of Stein and Stein, from for example Melanctha to for example Tender Buttons teaches me a lot by the fact of continuity:

On Thu, 8 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> I am feeling like an old bocce player now as I exclaim "But sure that's narrative, _The Making of Americans_." There are characters, there is development, aggh.
>
> See, the thing is, there is no such thing as "Coolidge" or "Stein". To say "Coolidge" or "Stein" is to ignore that these people did more than repeat a dominant trope. Every time you think of them that way you're thinking of a Big Mac, and every time you think of a Big Mac, you salivate (and/or retch). The function of literature inasmuch as things people say write or type can have functions is to remind people that although autonomic response is an exciting option it is not one one is bound to. Omit your independence to your cost.
>
> Ah, see, you made me get soaked in romantic individualism again. Anyway before the quarter in this coin-op John Godfrey-imitation wears out, let me finish by reminding you that this is all closer to law than science, that it's only argument bullying clarity and detail that go over here. No work worth talking about is one thing, and no person can be spoken of with respect as a simple unified person, with respect to the wild ongoing cellular recordkeeping anyway.
>
> So,
> Jordan(s)

↑ Index

217. maz881
Re: epic/lyric
Fri 9 May 1997

Aldon wrote:

> "narrative" and "lyric," while naming > difference, are inextricably and definitionally > bound up in one another's
> cloudy metahphrical arms

thanks aldon. been thinking about sappho in this context:

Most men take strategic knights, while others claim armymen; the rest hold up battleships as the greatest show on earth. But I declaim.
It's who do you love.

It's no trouble to cinch this once and for all.
For she was Helena, beauty of the mortal elsewhere, who left the man, the aristocrat, behind.

And went floating off to Troy, with no mind for offspring or beloved parents.
Love walked her sideways, knowing straightway.

For swayed lightly t one puts me in mind of Anaktoria, now out of sight.

I would rather see her step the lovely and do the facial shine more than any continental chariot decked with soldiers under arms.

sometimes i think epic was over when this poem got written. or virgil was a dope for not realizing it.

BillL

↑ Index

218. Pritchett,Pat
Re: epic redux
Fri 9 May 1997

Dwayne,

Undermining traditional ideas of a genre re-constitutes that genre through re-sistance to the assumptions implicit in the genre, through resistance to the ideas which govern or define the genre's identity, and this is done by borrowing the terms of the genre and playfully (as in Ashbery's case) standing them on their head even while acknowledging to some extent a degree of fidelity to the original model - in _Flowchart's_ case, _The Prelude_.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Daniel Tessitore
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Date: Friday, May 09, 1997 3:06AM

How does undermining trad. ideas of a genre constitute that genre? I suppose if one means by epic "very very large in scale," then that statement would hold, Flowchart being large in the way we are not used to seeing large. But if by epic we are talking about such elements as narrative, characters, blah, blah, then how does undermining those things alone equal the same thing? Is L-A-N-G-U-A-G-E poetry which "resists" or "disrupts" the trad. idea of the lyric, by the same token, also lyric?

Dwayne

↑ Index

219. Steve Carll
A Berkeley reading this time!
Fri 9 May 1997

John High and Thoreau Lovell did a real final farewell reading together on Wednesday, May 7th. After hurriedly paying our tab for dinner at Blake's (about which the less said the better) we hustled over to Cody's where _Poetry Flash_ dude Richard Silburg introduced Thoreau, Thoreau having won the coin toss. Thoreau read mostly newer work, concentrating on a sequence called "Amnesia's Diary", which he capped by forgetting the last line of the last poem, which was "fools in all our forgetting". The appropriateness of such forgetting enhanced the easy spirit of the occasion rather than making Thoreau look bad. Some other lines of Thoreau's included:

ash to electronic exuberance a prayerwheel of indestructible magazine poses sound of water in the air
one old chromosome watching over the city the clocks and the weather stopped talking to each other smoking mountains stolen from the eyes of grazing horses

Thoreau also read "Pots and Pans", "Sharks", "Sex No Sex" and "Parts of It"

There was a short break and Richard introduced John, who read from the Sasha Poems (mostly different than at his last two readings):

the fog lifting over Dogen's head, the sitting master weeping specific ghosts are not real ghosts our life depended on a meaning obvious in the bird's posture o world, if you contain our silence, where will it grow?
that which you do not bring forth will destroy you the chanting, like smoke, lifting from the Siberian wilderness [I erroneously reported this line last month as "Siberian landscape"--D'ohh!]
Poppa, have all of these birds come to see me?
All of our lives we evade the truth, Hermes said
these days the sun feels almost too fantastic

In the audience were Jandy Nelson, Julia Ward, Andrew Joron, Fanny Howe, Michelle Murphy, Sally Doyle, Anne and George, Cheryl Burket, Jack and Adelle Foley, Chris Daniels, Pat Reed, and John's friend Bob whom he met on the 'net and was just now pressing flesh with for the first time. A bunch of us went back to Blake's for more [i.e. drinks] afterwards. And then there was the ride back across the Bay, an adventure in its own write, but a bit beyond the purview of a reading report, sorry! Have a fabulous trip, John.

{{{

Granted. I guess in my rush to defend the complications, I oversimplified. This is not to cede the right to describe the vector and the complications of that vector, though, which I see as really enmeshed (cough) with narrative, or with story anyway. Narrative I hear more and more as a code word for 'identity fiction'. A story, I sort of know what that is. Something happened. To know what happened, though, you have to know this other thing that happened before, and this longstanding idea the people involved have of what is going to happen someday, and then you have to know how all these people deal with each other. Coolidge goes through this in most of the post-Solution Passage books I've seen, especially Mine, Mesh, and During. True, it's harder to see how this kind of description of Coolidge's work would apply to stuff like Space or The So.

And then there's the perpetual metanarrative of the poem talking to other poems? the poem's own identity politics?

Blah blah but trying to say something anyway, fuzzy Jordan

↑ Index

221. Christopher Alexander
American Airlines Petition
Fri 9 May 1997

Please pass this on...

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------

BACKGROUND: American Airlines is a major sponsor to and supporter of groupslike GLADD, the Human Rights Campaign, the Gay and Lesbian Victory Fund, the AIDS Action Foundation, DIFFA, AmFAR, and scores of community-based groups representing gays and lesbians. It is also the first airline to adopt a written non-discrimination policy covering sexual orientation in its employment practices.

In an unusual joint letter was released to the media on Friday, March 14th from the Family Research Council, Concerned Women of America, American Family Association and Coral Ridge Ministries. Radical right leader Beverly LaHaye also went on Christian "talk radio" on Friday to blast American Airlines because "American's sponsorship of homosexual 'pride' events constitutes an open endorsement of promiscuous homosexuality." She and the other groups have written Bob Crandall at American to complain that the airline has "gone beyond mere tolerance" of gays and lesbians. The full article appeares in Friday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and possibly picked up by other newspapers around the country. It has come to the attention of the gay and Lesbian community that American Airline's switchboard and e-mails are being bombarded now by homophobic and hateful callers who have been urged by LaHaye and others to DEMAND the company terminate its gay-friendly policies.

if you are the 25th, 50th, 75th, 100th, etc. person to sign this petition then please forward this to American Airlines at:
[redacted] ***
>
>
To American Airlines: We, the undersigned, support your gay/lesbian rights polices and commend you for your efforts in ending discrimination. Thank you > for your dedication to such issues and please continue to remain active in the struggle to end discrimination.
>
> 1. Marybeth Kurtz, Philadelphia, PA
> 2. Jen Faust, Goucher College, Balto. MD
> 3. Heather Riley, UMBC, Balto., MD
> 4. Katy Schuman, UMBC, Balto., MD
> 5. Rebekka Gold, Oberlin College, Oberlin, OH.
> 6. Danielle Hirsch, Oberlin College, Oberlin, OH.
> 7. Jerrod Wendland, Oberlin College, Oberlin, OH.
> 8. Jon Morgan, Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, OH.
> 9. Keri Rainsberger, Indiana University, Bloomington, IN.
> 10. Cheryl Lynn Bates, Indiana University, Bloomington, IN.
> 11. Court Singrey, Indiana University, Bloomington, IN.
> 12. Carol Fischer, Indiana University, Bloomington IN.
> 13. Patrick Wojahn, University of Wisconsin--Madison.
> 14. Dee Michel, University of Wisconsin--Madison
> 15. Adam L. Schiff, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
> 16. Tim Bratsos, San Francisco, CA
> 17. Craig Hibbs, San Bruno, CA
> 18. Edwin S. Blacker, Washington, DC
> 19. R. Thomas Rodriguez, Washington, DC
> 20. Rumi Matsuyama, Hyattsville, MD
> 21. Bart Broome, San Francisco, CA
> 22. John Cordaro, San Francisco, CA
> 23. Bryan Hughes, San Francisco, CA
> 24. Linh Pham, San Francisco, CA
> 25. Will Sayo, San Jose, CA
> 26. Wayne Sobon, San Francisco, CA.
> 27. Marta Tanenhaus, Washington, D.C.
> 28. Read Sherman, Harvard Divinity School, Cambridge, MA

> 29. Beth Ward, Northampton, MA
> 30. David Van Fossen, Brooklyn, NY
> 31. Emily Barton, Brooklyn, NY
> 32. Ruth Tobias, Boulder, CO
33. Cathy Wagner, Salt Lake City, UT
34. Christopher Alexander, Salt Lake City, UT
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

222. Charles Bernstein
LINEbreak in RealAudio
Fri 9 May 1997

Now up at the EPC in RealAudio, LINEbreak programs with

Susan Howe (two half-hour shows)

Madeline Gins

Barbara Guest

Ben Friedlander

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak/programs/

↑ Index

223. Daniel Tessitore
Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
Fri 9 May 1997

Pat wrote:

Yes, David, I think _ Flowchart_ cld indeed qualify as an epic whose epicness consists in its undermining of the trad. idea of the epic, though like you, I've not read it all yet.
Patrick P.

_____

How does undermining trad. ideas of a genre constitute that genre? I suppose if one means by epic "very very large in scale," then that statement would hold, Flowchart being large in the way we are not used to seeing large. But if by epic we are talking about such elements as narrative, characters, blah, blah, then how does undermining those things alone equal the same thing? Is L-A-N-G-U-A-G-E poetry which "resists" or "disrupts" the trad. idea of the lyric, by the same token, also lyric?

Dwayne

↑ Index

224. Daniel Tessitore

Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart

Fri 9 May 1997

David Israel wrote:

Dwayne --

good question. I suspect the answer is (at least often, or sometimes) a (perhaps qualified) "YES, you bet!" --

but others might care to answer / discuss in more detail. These are tricky issues, eh? For instance: If one enters a dialogue w/ a tradition, by (say) breaking the expectations of that tradition, one's piece of the puzzle may still be a piece of the puzzle . . . -- (but your question could be addressed more specifically than I'll muster here at 5 a.m.)

d.i.

David,

Your assertion, "If one enters...puzzle," goes a long way to clarify (and perhaps even debunk) the rather too dichotomous genre/anti-genre approach. Thanks. To push this along though--here's a bit from Lazer:

"Operating outside the universities and the official verse culture, Language Writing has developed a character that makes reviewing it problematic. Detailed readings of its devices and compositional modes might well subordinate LW to the very habits of reading and thought it means to resist." (Opposing Poetries, 1996)

This assertion confuses me somewhat, I confess--"its devices...modes" implies that these things are known/knowable (reviewable?) quantities, but "subordinate LW to the very habits..." implies that said devices and modes are the same(?).

Dwayne

↑ Index

225. Daniel Tessitore
Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass
Fri 9 May 1997

Nope. American. From Maryland no less. In Japan now yes. I believe British Po Laureate is for life, but I'm not sure. Ad GOD I hope Pete Townshend has not attempted to rock-operize CROW.

Dwayne

From: David Israel[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Friday, May 09, 1997 7:58 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass

Daniel T. --

I've not read Hughes' Crow so can't comment -- but wasn't that, btw, made into an opera (or opera-like thing) by Pete Townsend?

d.i.

p.s.: By the way, who's Great Britain's poet-laureate these days? Relatedly, is that a job-for-life? (I'm presuming, you're perhaps British, ergo qualified to answer these obscure questions -- though the e-address suggested Japan I think.) Here in DC, Robert Hass gave his farewell reading last week, ending his 2-year stint as Po Laureate -- with some damn good new stuff, must say. I saw him read several times over that period, and my appreciation of the chap certainly grew. Hass was mentioned as having participated in that recent conference -- but I didn't see mention of what he might've had to say. Worth repeating? Robt. Pinsky's the next-in-line-laureate, as you'all perhaps know . . . (maybe Dante Studies will go up on the charts now?)

>>> henry <[redacted]> 05/08/97
08:25am >>>
On Thu, 8 May 1997 21:04:56 +-900 Daniel Tessitore said:
>
>As to narrative--does Ted Hughes' CROW qualify? He originally had a more >unified narrative frame, complete with a prose bit I believe, and he cut
it
>out. Can the result be called story, narrative, linear?

in my view, even a riddle has a story to tell.
- Sherlock Holmes

↑ Index

226. Joe Safdie

Re: Orpehus (apologies, a little long)

Fri 9 May 1997

On Thu, 8 May 1997, henry gould wrote:

> I'm reading a book about the pervasiveness of an "orpheus" story in many > variations in native american storytelling. The orpheus myth of Greece > (coming maybe originally from eastward) makes the journeyer to the > world of the dead a poet (in the stories or myths usually its "just"
> a man or woman going to try to fetch lover/kin back to the living).
> Does the greek version add a "reflexive" element - because this is
> THE epic tale?
>

Henry, I'm not sure it's "THE" epic, but it does of course feature the trip to the dead I spoke of a few days back -- not, apparently, from the east of Greece, but from the north. Dodds' book _The Greeks and The Irrational_ (still a great read) has a section on Orpheus that says the myth came from Siberian shamanism -- the trip to Hades, then, was originally the shaman's ability to bridge the two worlds, be in contact with departed spirits. Orpheus was first a priest -- the lover and the poet came a little later.

For you, and for anyone else still interested in the "old guys", a few sections from my work-in-progress _Orpheus Retold_.

"a little too much in love with his own music"

he'd gotten used to the women's eyes closing,
their bodies swaying in trance,

thought no one could resist those melodies, piercing the bloodsteam, swifter

than any drug . . . so challenged the death gods, offered himself instead, "and the bloodless ghosts, too, were in tears." Triumphant,

he started back up,

but couldn't stop thinking about the audience he'd just left,
command performance,

and looked back to see if there were any more hangers-on . . .
someone should have told him:

you can't approach the dead
by looking for them. Soon
the critics got restless,

dissing him like a pop star whose second album sells less than the first. They wondered if he'd lost it, that unique sound, that voice . . . he took to the hills,

becoming "the first of Thrace to prefer young boys" they never looked back

ORPHEUS SPEAKS

I don't trust these animals,
yellow eyes gleaming in the dark.
They'd just as soon rip me apart.

I don't know why I turned around --
I couldn't even see her face in the dark. The villagers say it was love, but Aphrodite is not my god. She knows

I serve a different master:

order, harmony. What would happen if I stopped playing? In the dark they'd rip me apart.

The drunken sailors on the ship -- all they remembered were the birds.
Did they ever find that fleece?

I was watching the birds. Order, harmony. The dead liked it too, their shadows were dancing.

Drunken sailors. Animals.
Aphrodite is not my god.
I couldn't even see her face.

↑ Index

227. shoemakers
Re: epic/narrative / Crow / Hass
Fri 9 May 1997

Dipping into poetix after a blurry absence, and just want to add my approval of the Hass Essential Haiku--excellent translations and a lot of good intro and background material as well. steve

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

228. minkacroy
Poets Theatre at New Langton Arts
Fri 9 May 1997

Hello all,

I'm a literature curator at New Langton Arts in San Francisco and I am interested in having the organization put on some small productions of plays which could be considered "poets' theatre". If you have a script and might be interested in having me look at it, please send me an email with a brief description of the play and a brief bio.

If anyone has Fiona Templeton's email address, I would appreciate back channel forwarding of same.

thanks
Camille Roy
[redacted]

↑ Index

229. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: The Narr
Fri 9 May 1997

In response to/with Ron Silliman's noting Robert Grenier's work in re narrative--(glad this was raised)--

Grenier has an excellent book on narrative in the Curriculum of the Soul series which John Clarke edited.

It's called

ATTENTION: SEVEN NARRATIVES

Grenier's work, like Larry Eigner's, presents the movement of attention. (And that movement opening out--from the page out in to the world--a poem for Eigner being "like taking a walk"--and finding it extend--: "serenditipty"--the movement of the poem being the narrative)

In Grenier's work of the last ten years, the movement is in space as well as in time.

(Note: recent work by Grenier, including a 45 pp. piece for Larry Eiger--is up at Light and Dust Books. Larry Eigner's Air the Trees is also there

http://www.thing.net/~grist/homekarl.htm

The "unfolding of meaning in (across) time" RS mentions is spatialized--and literalized. In Spring and All WCW wrote that he would "invite" the reader to "read and see"--hence the emphasis on visual design (from Demuth and Gris) in Williams' work--the verbal arrangment , the american idiom, often being "dictated" by the visual structure. (As a kind of eidetic after image--WCW noting to Edith Heal that he reworked "The Nightingales" for his first Collected--"see how much better it looks on the page".)

Grenier, who works a good deal with the early modernism of WCW and Stein--notes that "langauge follows joyful seeing".

Narrative in the work--"scrawl poems" as usually called--is literally the seeing and reading of the work--following the lines, making (or "making out" if one thinks of the activity as "deciphering")--making the shapes of the letters and these making words--seeing moves into "sounding"--sounding out the words--the work, the narrative that unfolds meaning through time as RS has it--is spatialized--time "takes Place"--in the horizontal overlays and overlaps, the moving in and out of each other, of the words, often written "on top of" each other--one is seeing the words in space as well as seeing and reading in time--

