68. William Burmeister Prod — Re: language poetry bashing
69. Herb Levy — Periplum CDs: Greinke/Land & Deep Listening Band/Ellen Fullman
70. Alan Jen Sondheim — DEATH
71. R. Gancie — Sokal's Beard
72. Poetics List — Welcome Message
73. Piombino/Simon — Re: language poetry bashing -Reply

4 OCT 1997

74. Maria Damon — Re: Periplum CDs: Greinke/Land & Deep Listening Band/Ellen Fullman
75. Karen and Trevor — Request for Phone Numbers
76. jarnot — delany/phone number
77. LAURA MORIARTY — another attempt
78. aerialedge — Re: another attempt
79. mark weiss — Re: another attempt
80. Aviva Vogel — Re: language poetry bashing
81. aerialedge — Re: another attempt
82. Aviva Vogel — BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction
83. Henry Gould — Re: language poetry bashing
84. Henry Gould — Re: BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction
85. LAURA MORIARTY — Re: another attempt
86. Bob Grumman — Defining Language Poetry
87. rsillima — Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire

5 OCT 1997

88. Tom Orange — another attempt
89. Rachel Loden — Re: Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire
90. Bob Grumman — Re: Defining Language Poetry
91. aerialedge — Re: another attempt
92. Michael Magee — Re: BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction
93. Jacques Debrot — Re: another attempt
94. Franklin Bruno — several current threads addressed serially
95. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: another attempt
96. Harold Rhenisch — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
97. Bob Grumman — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
98. Judy Roitman — Re: Defining Language Poetry
99. Harold Rhenisch — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
100. Mark Wallace — irreducible instants are not "the irreducible"

101. Herb Levy — Re: Klezmatics &
102. Harold Rhenisch — Re: another attempt
103. don wellman — Re: another attempt
104. henry gould — Re: several current threads addressed serially
105. Thomas Bell — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
106. George Bowering — Re: Social Tangles
107. Bob Grumman — Re: Defining Language Poetry
108. David R. Israel — Thomas Rain Crowe
109. David Bromige — social tangles

6 OCT 1997

110. David Bromige — p s to social tangles
111. Aviva Vogel — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
112. Aviva Vogel — Re: p s to social tangles
113. Aviva Vogel — Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
114. Tom Orange — another attempt
115. Tom Beard — Re: Sokal's Beard & Beard's Sokal
116. David R. Israel — Re: another attempt
117. Susan Wheeler — Poetics Digest
118. henry goo — Re: another attempt
119. Michael Magee — Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
120. Maria Damon — Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
121. Mark Prejsnar — Re: language poetry bashing
122. Mark Prejsnar — Re: an attempt
123. Douglas Barbour — Re: social tangles
124. Mark Prejsnar — Re: another attempt
125. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Raworth & Dorn/Fraser Reading
126. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Poetics Digest
127. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
128. Judy Roitman — Re: Defining Language Poetry
129. cris cheek — Re: another attempt
130. Maria Damon — Re: Poetics Digest
131. Bobbie West — readings (HERE)
132. main — call for reviews
133. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Readings/Help
134. Aldon Nielsen — bashing Basho
135. Thomas Bell — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
136. Maria Damon — job info fwd
137. Harold Rhenisch — Re: another attempt
138. Hoa Nguyen — Kind Regards
139. Bob Grumman — Re: Defining Language Poetry
140. Alan Jen Sondheim — charn

7 OCT 1997

141. Kevin Varrone — Ronald Johnson/Ark
142. Schuchat Simon — Re: job info fwd
143. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
144. David W. Clippinger — Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
145. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Defining Language Poetry
146. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Poetics Digest
147. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Kind Regards
148. Maria Damon — Re: job info fwd
149. Judy Roitman — Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
150. LAURA MORIARTY — non announcement
151. William Burmeister Prod — Re: language poetry bashing
152. Michael Coffey — Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply
153. Mark Prejsnar — Expressing and defining

154. henry g — Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply
155. Mark Prejsnar — Charred remains
156. groberts — Char/Creeley
157. Henry Gould — expression, etc.
158. Michael Coffey — Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply -Reply
159. henry g — Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply -Reply
160. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Kind Regards
161. William Marsh — accused (personal ad)
162. Bob Grumman — Re: bashing Basho
163. Jacques Debrot — Re: Defining / Expression
164. Charles Bernstein — Archive at SF State in Jeopardy
165. William Burmeister Prod — Re: expression, etc.
166. Lawrence Upton. — Re Char
167. Laura Moriarty — Re: Archive at SF State in Jeopardy
168. Hugh Steinberg — Re: accused (personal ad)
169. Laura Moriarty — one more on Poetry Center Archives
170. Lawrence Upton. — Re: one more on Poetry Center Archives
171. Laura Moriarty — Re: one more on Poetry Center Archives
172. Aviva Vogel — Re: Defining Language Poetry
173. Alan Jen Sondheim — starving to death in a land of plenty
174. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Defining Language Poetry
175. Charles Bernstein — Poetry Center Archives: Correction

8 OCT 1997

176. Tim Wood — Re: Poetry Center Archives: some ideas
177. Joseph Conte — Re: Ronald Johnson/ARK
178. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Defining Language Poetry
179. Lawrence Upton. — POETRY CENTRE ARCHIVES
180. Susan Wheeler — Poetics Digest
181. Eliza McGrand — call for writing/art/etc.
182. Henry — Re: Defining Language Poetry
183. Mark Wallace — the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
184. Tom Orange — Char in German?
185. Tom Orange — michael speier
186. Aviva Vogel — Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
187. Aviva Vogel — Re: Defining Language Poetry
188. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Defining Language Poetry
189. Pierre Joris — Re: Char in German?
190. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Defining Language Poetry
191. Aldon Nielsen — Re: accused (personal ad); and Mullen Matters
192. Aldon Nielsen — Re: by all means, go there
193. Lawrence Upton. — Re: by all means, go there
194. William Marsh — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
195. Michael Magee — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
196. Layne Russell — Re: Defining Language Poetry
197. Aldon Nielsen — Re: bird on a wireless
198. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — going there...
199. Aviva Vogel — Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
200. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — working class heroes...
201. R. Gancie — SoKalled
202. Susan Wheeler — Marianne Moore

9 OCT 1997

203. R. Gancie — SoKalled
204. George Bowering — Re: Defining Language Poetry
205. Rachel Levitsky — Re: social tangles
206. George Bowering — Re: Defining Language Poetry

207. George Bowering — Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
208. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
209. Tom Beard — Re: SoKalled
210. Tom Beard — Re: Defining Language Poetry
211. henry gould — Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
212. henry gould — defining language
213. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Defining Language Poetry
214. Burt Kimmelman — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
215. Christina Fairbank Chirot — For Che Guevara
216. Gwyn McVay — SoKalled misreading
217. Judy Roitman — Re: SoKalled
218. Mark Prejsnar — Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
219. Judy Roitman — Re: SoKalled
220. groberts — Re: defining language
221. henry g — Re: Defining Language Poetry
222. henry g — Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
223. Maria Damon — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
224. Layne Russell — Re: For Che Guevara
225. Rachel Levitsky — Re: defining language
226. Alan Jen Sondheim — Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
227. Suzanne Burns — unsubscribe?
228. William Marsh — Re: defining language
229. Jordan Davis — B Mayer read
230. Burt Kimmelman — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
231. Judy Roitman — Re: defining language
232. Pritchett,Pat — Re: that time of year again
233. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Defining Language Poetry
234. Harold Rhenisch — Re: SoKalled
235. Harold Rhenisch — Bly/Dorst
236. Jacques Debrot — Re: O'Hara/Orton
237. William Burmeister Prod — Re: defining language
238. cris cheek — Re: that time of year again
239. Rachel Loden — Re: SoKalled
240. Jacques Debrot — O'Hara/Orton
241. Joseph D. Edwards — Re: Marianne Moore
242. Karen and Trevor — For Sheila Murphy
243. Maria Damon — Re: O'Hara/Orton
244. Maria Damon — Re: B Mayer read

10 OCT 1997

245. Thomas Bell — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
246. David R. Israel — the tragedy of limerick
247. Stephen Cope — Re: B Mayer read
248. Susan Schultz — R TINFISH #5 now available
249. Layne Russell — Re: Expression
250. Rachel Loden — postscript
251. Jacques Debrot — Re: Jasper Johns
252. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Defining Language Poetry
253. Mark Prejsnar — Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
254. John Latta — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
255. Rachel Levitsky — Re: eddress?
256. James Finnegan — Re: Defining / Expression
257. Douglas Barbour — Re: SoKalled
258. hen — Re: Defining Language Poetry
259. hen — Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
260. mark weiss — Re: Defining Language Poetry

261. Jordan Davis — world's longest building stopped mid-construction
262. aerialedge — 2 DC & 1 NYC Reading
263. Mark Prejsnar — Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
264. James Finnegan — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
265. Harold Rhenisch — Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
266. Poetics List — not joining but reading (fwd)
267. William Burmeister Prod — Re: defining language
268. Michael Magee — Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
269. Eliza McGrand — defining the definition
270. Aldon Nielsen — "Taylor Brings an Abstract Touch to Piano"
271. Eliza McGrand — that abstract poem/piano thing
272. R. Gancie — SoKalled
273. henry — Re: "Taylor Brings an Abstract Touch to Piano"
274. Patricia Cockram — Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says

11 OCT 1997

275. rob wilson — the sentence as aggression by me
276. James Finnegan — Re: Come On Down...
277. Maria Damon — Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
278. Layne Russell — Contacting David Bromige
279. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
280. Christopher Alexander — nominative press collective announces...
281. Christopher Alexander — nominative press collective nounces...
282. Herb Levy — Re: that abstract poem/piano thing

12 OCT 1997

283. Eliza McGrand — Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
284. Eliza McGrand — Re: that abstract poem/piano thing
285. Bob Grumman — News of Free WebSites
286. Bob Grumman — Announcement of COMPREPOETICA, a Poetry-Data Collection Website
287. robert drake — Re: Announcement of COMPREPOETICA, a Poetry-Data Collection Website
288. Jordan Davis — Tim Davis and Brenda Coultas at Here
289. Ryan Whyte — Amerika

13 OCT 1997

290. Tom Beard — Re: SoKalled
291. Tom Beard — Re: Defining / Expression
292. Layne Russell — John Denver
293. Hugh Steinberg — Re: SoKalled
294. simon — Re: SoKalled
295. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — yet another...
296. Robert Archambeau — Chicago Area Reading
297. mark weiss — Re: SoKalled
298. Carolyn Guertin — Metaphors
299. Ira Lightman — Char/Boulez

14 OCT 1997

300. Tom Beard — SoKalled SF
301. Christopher Reiner — Reading
302. adalaide morris — Re: NEW Davidson, Debord, Fraser, Ginsberg, Levy &&& @ Bridge Street
303. Layne Russell — Re: Reading
304. Steve Evans — ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
305. adalaide morris — misdirected reply
306. Douglas Barbour — Re: sf poetry
307. Brian McHale — Re: SoKalled SF
308. Bob Grumman — Report from Comprepoetica

309. Pritchett,Pat — Re: SoKalled SF
310. Tom Orange — SW Ontario Readings
311. LAURA MORIARTY — Burger, Roitman and Gluck
312. Matthew Stadler — Re: Reading
313. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — sokal etc...
314. groberts — Re: sf poetry
315. Thomas Bell — Re: Defining / Expression /experiential
316. david bromige — reading tour
317. Eliza McGrand — cuisinart computer crash
318. Safdie Joseph — Re: reading tour
319. Harold Rhenisch — Re: SoKalled
320. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Defining / Expression
321. Daniel Zimmerman — Late Capitalism
322. R. Gancie — SoKalled
323. Rachel Loden — reading tour & "no more language-bashing" redux

15 OCT 1997

324. david bromige — scolded & didnt know it
325. mark weiss — Re: SoKalled
326. George Bowering — Re: reading tour
327. George Thompson — Re: Defining / Expression
328. henry g — Re: Defining / Expression
329. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — sci-tech/poetry/etc...
330. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Dorn/Raworth Reading
331. George Thompson — Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
332. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Defining / Expression
333. George Thompson — Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
334. Maria Damon — Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
335. p. durgin — Re: Defining / Expression
336. Joseph Conte — Dictionary of Literary Biography
337. mark weiss — Poetry sites
338. Aldon Nielsen — Re: scolded & didnt know it
339. David Benedetti — Re: "no more language-bashing" bromige post
340. Andrew D Epstein — Creeley reading, NYC
341. Jena Osman — yet another reading in nyc
342. Christopher Alexander — nominative press collective nouns...
343. David Benedetti — Denver
344. Christopher Reiner — Re: Poetry sites
345. Pam Brown — Shameless promotion
346. Bob Grumman — Re: Defining / Expression
347. George Thompson — Re: Defining / Expression
348. groberts — Re: Defining / Expression
349. Bob Grumman — Re: Defining / Expression

16 OCT 1997

350. Tom Beard — Re: SoKalled
351. David R. Israel — Re: Defining / Expression
352. Tom Beard — Re: Defining / Expression
353. Alan /dev/null Sondheim — Dusk, Turning Dawn
354. R. Gancie — SoKalled
355. Steven Marks — Re: Defining / Expression
356. Charles Bernstein — Philadelphia / NYC Readings
357. Judy Roitman — Re: Defining / Expression
358. Judy Roitman — Re: SoKalled
359. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Defining / Expression
360. Ira Lightman — Announcement of a gig
361. Jordan Davis — Poetry City Fall 1997 Schedule print this up and keep it

362. Jordan Davis — Rod Smith / Edwin Torres @ Poetry Project pt 1
363. Ted Berrigan — things to do in cranston
364. Loss Glazier — EPC Enhancements
365. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Other readings
366. Susan Schultz — Re: Tinfish chapbook by Kathy Banggo
367. Thomas Bell — Re: Defining / Expression

17 OCT 1997

368. dbkk — Luisa Futoransky, Sarah Menefee--ASAP at SPT
369. George Bowering — Re: tundra
370. George Bowering — Re: Poetry City
371. david bromige — the great tundras of canada
372. Miekal And — Break out the snack tray
373. david bromige — more eating, sleeping, & timing
374. Harold Rhenisch — Problems with western tradition
375. Bob Grumman — A Comprepoetica Progress Report
376. david bromige — how do i leave the List?
377. mark weiss — Re: how do i leave the List?
378. Burt Kimmelman — Talisman Reading/Party
379. david bromige — Th-th-th-anks f-f-f-folks!
380. Safdie Joseph — Re: Dorn/Raworth Reading
381. Jordan Davis — R Smith / E Torris @ Poetry Project Pt 2
382. Aviva Vogel — Re: Talisman Reading/Party
383. henry gould — gehry

18 OCT 1997

384. George Bowering — Re: the great toe
385. Maria Damon — Re: Break out the snack tray
386. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New at the EPC
387. Miekal And — Re: Break out the snack tray
388. Dan or Orion Dlugonski — (no subject)

19 OCT 1997

389. Maria Damon — News from xcp
390. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Talisman Reading/Party - Mag/Press Addresses
391. robert drake — Re: Break out the snack tray
392. Douglas Barbour — Re: more eating, sleeping, & timing
393. R. Gancie — SoKalled
394. R. Gancie — Sokalled: Typo or Parapraxis-you decide
395. Tosh — :ReMap
396. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Oct 1997 to 16 Oct 1997
397. DIGEST Anselm Hollo — Re: AHOE by AH
398. mark weiss — (no subject)
399. Rachel Levitsky — Flow Chart
400. Alan chown Sondheim — --+-
401. Thomas Bell — hear we go again

20 OCT 1997

402. henry gould — (no subject)
403. Douglas Barbour — Re: hear we go again
404. David Kellogg — Review of XCP
405. LAURA MORIARTY — non and hypernon
406. Miekal And — Re: Review of XCP
407. Mark Prejsnar — Re: hear we go again
408. Christopher Alexander — e'er we go again
409. Aldon Nielsen — Minneapolis is socially constructed
410. simon — weiner book: segue people

411. mark weiss — Re: hear we go again
412. Pritchett,Pat — Re: hear we go again
413. r.drake — Poetrix "reviewed"
414. William Burmeister Prod — Re: hear we go again
415. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: hear we go again
416. mark weiss — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed

21 OCT 1997

417. Jennifer Ashton — math/logic and poetry
418. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: math/logic and poetry
419. Stephen Cope — Re: reading tour
420. Alicia A Cohen — Re: math/logic and poetry
421. henry — Re: hear we go again
422. Michael Magee — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
423. Rachel Loden — Re: math/logic and poetry
424. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
425. Henry Gould — Re: now hear this
426. Douglas Barbour — Re: e'er we go again
427. henry gould — hear we go one more time
428. Joel Kuszai — MONDAY NIGHT POETRY
429. Jordan Davis — what blarnes muttered
430. Safdie Joseph — Poets on Prose
431. Christopher Alexander — Re: hear we go again
432. Layne Russell — Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
433. Thomas Bell — Re: e'er we go again
434. Pritchett,Pat — Re: e'er we go again
435. Jack Foley — Poets on Prose -Reply
436. JDEBROT — Re: ILS 1.8
437. Carolyn Guertin — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
438. Herb Levy — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
439. George Thompson — Re: Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
440. Mark Baker — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply

22 OCT 1997

441. mark weiss — Re: Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
442. lee ann brown — NYC Poetry happenings
443. lee ann brown — Lee Ann Brown reading at Bard College
444. Aviva Vogel — Re: math/logic and poetry
445. mark weiss — (no subject)
446. mark weiss — (no subject)
447. Sylvester Pollet — Elvis poems
448. Rachel Loden — Re: Elvis poems
449. Daniel Zimmerman — (no subject)
450. Michael Magee — Re: Elvis poems
451. robert drake — Re: math/logic and poetry
452. Diederik Wolsak — Re: non and hypernon
453. rob wilson — if UK/US poesy had a wide circulation
454. Jack Foley — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply -Reply
455. Jack Foley — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply -Reply
456. henry — Re: ILS 1.8
457. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Elvis poems
458. David Golumbia — Re: non and hypernon
459. Fred Muratori — Re: Elvis poems
460. Safdie Joseph — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
461. Sylvester Pollet — elvis poems
462. Harold Rhenisch — Re: sonnets and certainty
463. Jordan Davis — Re: sonnets and certainty

464. Christopher Alexander — Re: hear we go again
465. mark weiss — (no subject)
466. mark weiss — Re: hear we go again
467. Harold Rhenisch — the forklift school of verse
468. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
469. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
470. henry gould — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
471. trace s. ruggles — Re: the forklift school of verse
472. Mark Baker — Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
473. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
474. Aviva Vogel — Re: ILS 1.8
475. Pritchett,Pat — Re: ILS 1.8
476. Aldon Nielsen — All Fall Down
477. Bob Grumman — Re: math/logic and poetry
478. R. Gancie — Sokallese

23 OCT 1997

479. Harold Rhenisch — Re: the forklift school of verse
480. Hugh Steinberg — Re: elvis poems
481. mark weiss — Re: elvis poems
482. Ken Edwards — Mathematics and poetry
483. hen — Re: ILS 1.8
484. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Sokallese
485. Henry Gould — Re: Sokallese
486. R. Gancie — Sokallese: Errors in human transmission
487. Sylvester Pollet — Elvis poems
488. Robert Archambeau — Re: Elvis poems
489. Maria Damon — fwd: Asian American Poetry Inquiry
490. Maria Damon — Re: Elvis poems
491. henry — Re: ILS 1.8
492. Maria Damon — address query
493. Maria Damon — south asian women poets
494. Robert Archambeau — Re: sonnets and certainty
495. Franklin Bruno — the forms and the laws
496. Danny Collier — Elvis poems
497. trace s. ruggles — Re: Elvis poems
498. Ira Lightman — Re: math/logic and poetry
499. Steve Evans — Re: ILS 1.8 and then some
500. Aviva Vogel — Re: ILS 1.8
501. Susan Clark — Re: south asian women poets
502. p. durgin — Address request / E. Myles
503. mark weiss — Re: the forms and the laws
504. William Burmeister Prod — (no subject)
505. James Finnegan — Re: Elvis poems
506. Graham W Foust — Re: elvis poems
507. Pam Brown — Re: south asian women poets
508. Aviva Vogel — Re: ILS 1.8 and then some
509. Thomas Bell — Re: the forms and the laws
510. Jordan Davis — Re: sonnets and certainty
511. David Israel — ars po

24 OCT 1997

512. Tom Beard — Re: Sokallese
513. Hugh Steinberg — readings
514. Douglas Barbour — Re: the forms and the laws
515. Pritchett,Pat — Re: sci fi poetry
516. groberts — Z=A.9/?

517. henry — Re: Z=A.9/?
518. henry g' — friday's riddle
519. Thomas Bell — Reenactment of feeling in writing/reading and Nick Piombino quote
520. David R. Israel — Re: Elvis poems

25 OCT 1997

521. simon — Re: Elvis poems
522. jarnot — students of r.duncan, etc.
523. Susan Wheeler — Readings
524. creinervppp — litpress.com
525. robert drake — Re: Hans Ebner (fwd)
526. Susan Schultz — Louis Simpson
527. Susan Schultz — Louis Simpson, ps
528. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Louis Simpson, ps
529. John Tranter — Jacket magazine # 1 and # 2

26 OCT 1997

530. Alan rm -r Sondheim — Reading
531. Rob Hardin — The Films of Henry Hills at the Anthology Film Archives
532. David R. Israel — several absurds
533. Ryan Whyte — and
534. Marcella — Talisman Benefit
535. Jordan Davis — Re: several absurds
536. Douglas Barbour — Re: Louis Simpson
537. Kathleen Crown — Re: Readings
538. Bob Grumman — The Latest on Comprepoetica
539. David R. Israel — Re: several absurds
540. James Brook — ellen ullman, close to the machine
541. Herb Levy — Re: Elvis poems
542. Stacie Slotnick — George Oppen's "A Kind of Garden: A Poem for my Sister"

27 OCT 1997

543. simon — Re: Elvis poems
544. Michael Heller — (no subject)
545. Safdie Joseph — Re: Beyond Baroque Saturday night
546. Jack Foley — SOKAL & LACAN
547. henry gould — Re: SOKAL & LACAN
548. Herb Levy — Re: friday's riddle
549. mark weiss — Re: SOKAL & LACAN
550. henry gould — Re: friday's riddle
551. Peter Ganick — Re: litpress.com
552. Peter Ganick — Re: litpress.com
553. I'm cris cheek — cris cheek seeking urgent forward to british poets list

28 OCT 1997

554. jarnot — Rodefer & Sharma reading
555. Maria Damon — Re: Rodefer & Sharma reading
556. p. durgin — Boxkite
557. Mark Prejsnar — Mass disappearance
558. Brent Long — Frank Stanford Film to be shown in Chicago
559. Bob Grumman — A Minor Item about Comprepoetica
560. Loss Glazier — Announcement re: EPC
561. Carolyn Guertin — Mac Cormack/McCaffery
562. Kenneth Goldsmith — Re: Another Idea
563. Steven Marks — puffs came in lanes
564. Alan Grep Sondheim — poem-message on the moo (fwd)

29 OCT 1997

565. Thomas Bell — address
566. Sylvester Pollet — Re: puffs came in lanes
567. Marcella — FW: Mass disappearance
568. Steven Marks — Re: puffs came in lanes
569. henry gould — Re: puffs came in lanes
570. William Burmeister Prod — Re: puffs came in lanes
571. William Burmeister Prod — Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
572. Harold Rhenisch — Re: puffs came in lanes
573. Alan Grep Sondheim — Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
574. Bob Grumman — A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
575. William Burmeister Prod — Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
576. Rachel Loden — season of the witch

30 OCT 1997

577. cris cheek — Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
578. Douglas Barbour — Re: season of the witch
579. Mark Prejsnar — Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
580. hg — pronounce-ment
581. aerialedge — Nominations please
582. Dean A. Brink — Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
583. p. durgin — Re: Nominations please
584. Carol Mirakove — Re: Nominations please
585. acgold01 — Broms
586. Mark Prejsnar — Re: pronounce-ment
587. Gwyn McVay — Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
588. Gwyn McVay — Re: Nominations please
589. Tom Beard — Re: puffs came in lanes
590. hghghghg — Re: pronounce-ment
591. Safdie Joseph — Re: pronounce-ment
592. hghghghg — Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
593. Bob Grumman — Re: pronounce-ment
594. Brian Carpenter — Re: Nominations please
595. David R. Israel — Re: Nominations please

31 OCT 1997

596. Michael Magee — Re: Nominations please
597. Ed Moran /General Pub. 4th Floor — Re: Nominations please
598. Brent Long — Re: Nominations please
599. p. durgin — Re: Nominations please
600. R. Gancie — SOKAL AND LACAN
601. David Benedetti — Re: Nominations please
602. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Nominations please
603. Bob Grumman — A News Release
604. Henry Gould — SOAK-A-LACAN
605. mark weiss — lacanic statement
606. Juliana Spahr — reading report from Honolulu
607. henry g — friday's riddle
608. Bob Grumman — Re: Nominations please
609. George Bowering — Re: Nominations please
610. R. Gancie — Sokal & Lacan: Correction
611. mark weiss — (no subject)

1. Rachel Levitsky
Re: thanks
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>
> Dear List People--
>
> I will still be receiving mail at this address but I won't be > subscribing to the list anymore, so if you address any questions > to/towards me, you will need to back channel for me to see it or to > garner a response.
>
> Feeling weird but ok,
>
> Hoa
> Dear Hoa,

Your departure will make the list a more lonely place.

take care,
Rachel

↑ Index

2. aerialedge
Re: Lynn Hejinian's essay "Rejection of Closure"
Wed 1 Oct 1997

A revised and expanded version of "Rejection of Closure" appears in _Onward: Contemporary Poetry & Poetics_ ed. Peter Baker, Peter Lang Publishing, 1996. Another essay by Lyn (one n) I'd recommend is "The Quest for Knowledge in the Western Poem" which appears in _Disembodied Poetics_ ed Waldman & Schelling, U. New Mexico Press, 1994.

↑ Index

3. George Bowering
Re: People of Color
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Regarding Richard Wright and "Melanctha"---

I believe I read somewhere about 30 years ago that during the Depression Wright had some job with one of those public works projects (back when his country seemed to be developing into a democracy), in which he was a teacher trying to raise reading skills with poor Blacks. And he used "Melanctha" as a kind of textbook.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4
fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

4. George Bowering

Re: Lynn Hejinian's essay "Rejection of Closure"

Wed 1 Oct 1997

> Hello All,
> Does anyone know how I might obtain a copy of Hejinian's essay "Rejection of Closure," originally in Poetry Journal, sometime in the late 1980's? Web searches have been unsuccessful so far.
> Thanks,
> Pete Balestrieri

A lot of it is in Hoover's Norton Anthology of postmodern poesy

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4
fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

5. Fredrik Hertzberg

Re: Social Tangles

Wed 1 Oct 1997

> What I disagree with is the now accepted fact that art can contain, or represent in some way, the same sense of social urgency as a conversation, say, or discussions like those on this list. Art's power is not in what it addresses, but in what it is capable of reflecting.

Why can't reflection (in Adorno's sense) be socially urgent? Isn't one idea in Adornos' Aesthetic Theory that art's reflection is the best (& only) agent of social critique?

> our social desires. At times, 'experiemental' forms, the ones, perhaps Kevin publishes in Mirage, though he doesn't necessarily like them, appear inhuman to me because they repel any human sympathy I might be capable of lending the poem. I often always agree with the social cause inherent in such poems. But the inhumane disregard for the reader strikes me as an ingenuine gesture on the poet's part. Because, as the poet strives to communicate social injustice, he or she alienates those who might otherwise support it. I realize humanism itself is suspect of

But aren't the forms otherwise available for expressing 'humanist' alienation often alienated/ alienating in themselves? You seem to forget that they're also cultural (not natural) forms. & What wd. it mean for the writer to regard (rather than disregard) the reader? Aren't such regards always fictional?

> 1) This Language-influenced poetry lacks a unified subject of expression, ie, the poem's voice is fragmented, or composed of many voices. It is paratactic and employed as a formal element. I suppose this is due to some mimetic sense of same disunity in the culture at large, and is potentially a valid expression of such.

Why does 'voice' always have to serve as a model for explaining what Language po doesn't do? What I enjoy in much disjunctive poetry is the distraction of not becoming absobed and engaged by a persona (emotional or otherwise)/ several personas/ voices but finding out about language as a medium, when and why and how language controls, lets go of control & etc.

> 4) It distributes a wide range of images throughout a poem, but without an apparent purpose. It is unable to form recognizable patterns and therefore confuses, increases the human distance of which I spoke earlier, and takes the power of interpretation away from the reader by not giving said reader a leg to stand on.

Sometimes humans need distance from the human/ humanist world. & sometimes we need a more distanced control (or non-control) than what 'a leg to stand on' implies.

> I don't see how any of the above benefits social causes in any way. Whereas, lyric poetry, by recognizing suffering, employing language to heighten sensitivity or sympathy, and appealing to the humane impulses of the reader was able to address similar social issues. But it

What's the point of addressing if it only hightens sympathy and recognition?

I'm not just asking to provoke, I'm interested in the relation between Adorno & the language poets & why you (/others) think that they're so incongruent.

Fredrik Hertzberg

↑ Index

6. henry
Re: Social Tangles
Wed 1 Oct 1997

On Wed, 1 Oct 1997 11:21:36 +0300 Fredrik Hertzberg said:
>
>Why does 'voice' always have to serve as a model for explaining what >Language po doesn't do? What I enjoy in much disjunctive poetry is the >distraction of not becoming absobed and engaged by a persona (emotional or >otherwise)/ several personas/ voices but finding out about language as a >medium, when and why and how language controls, lets go of control & etc.

You raise some good points here - I guess my problem with this approach to writing is I have trouble imagining "language" doing ANYTHING by itself. There's always a human agent, selecting, distorting the feedback. It's always a voice, even behind the mask of "pure language". But I see your point about distancing the poem from simply recording the self or selves. It gets boring without the off-beat. Where would I be, in fact, a simplified boring digital-talk-self, without Jack Spandrift there to raise the ante? - Henry Gould

Henry, you "talk" too much. Did you hear Gene Autry died? - Jack Spandrift

Why don't you ever talk about women cowboys, Henry?
- Elliza McGrand

OK, I will. I met one in Wyoming once, when I worked on the Barlow Ranch for a few weeks before hitching west. She was named June, I think, was blonde, always dressed in spangles & such, but could shoe a horse lay fence wire & rodeo with the rest of the crew. I think she was the top rodeo rider in Wyoming for a while. That was about 25 yrs ago. My brother could tell you more about her. He was a regular there for years. - Henry Gould

Don't believe a word of it, Elliza.
- Eric Blarnes

Eric Blarnes is a coyote.
- Coyote

↑ Index

7. David R. Israel
(Fwd) impostures intellectuelles
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Poetas & Poeticos,

the appended item (from the So.Asian Lit listserv) is apt to prove of some interest to several here.

Seems Dr. Sokal will make even more of a name for himself now.

yours,
d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Wed, 1 Oct 1997 10:35:47 +0100
From: Mario Menti <[redacted]>
Subject: impostures intellectuelles
To: Multiple recipients of list SASIALIT <[redacted]>

Re. the current debate about Spivak and over-complicated writing, the following may be of interest (if not strictly topical):

Two scientists, American Alan Sokal and Belgian Jean Bricmont, are causing a stir in Paris with their book "Impostures Intellectuelles", published next week. They attack the writings of, amongst others, Jaques Lacan, Julia Kristeva and Regis Debray. They write: "We want to 'deconstruct' the reputation that these texts have of being difficult because they are deep. We show that if they seem incomprehensible, it is for the very good reason that they have nothing to say." And about the above-mentioned thinkers they say: "They talk abundantly of scientific theories of which they have, at best, a very vague understanding. They display a superficial erudition by throwing words at the reader in a context where they have no relevance. They demonstrate a veritable intoxication with words, combined with a superb indifference to their meaning." Jacques Lacan (a well known psychoanalyst) is criticised for "arbitrarily mixing key words of mathematical theory, without in the least caring about their meaning." The authors take particular exception to one of Mr Lacan's lesser known theories, in which he argues that "the erect male organ, not as itself, not even as image, but as the missing piece of the desired image, is thus equal to the square root of -1 of the highest produced meaning."

According to the Guardian newspaper here in the UK, the book is "already a topic of furious - and unfathomable - debate in the cafes of the Latin Quarter".

There is also a fairly short (French) article about it on the Web, at http://www.yahoo.fr/actualite/970925/culture/875179380-yaho875182886036.html

At the very least, I suppose it shows that this issue is certainly not limited to Indian writers.

Mario.

↑ Index

8. Jordan Davis
Re: (Fwd) impostures intellectuelles
Wed 1 Oct 1997

David --

I was disappointed to hear this might not be true:

> The authors take particular exception to one of Mr Lacan's lesser known theories, in which he argues that "the erect male organ, not as itself, not even as image, but as the missing piece of the desired image, is thus equal to the square root of -1 of the highest produced meaning."

I hope someone at Poetry Headquarters will put Messrs Coleridge Stevens Deleuze and Ashbery on full alert for this so-called Sokal...

or rather I hope Laura Riding is having a good laugh--

Jordan who apologizes for any adornesque rumblings about art and the economy / and or class as more fundamental than race/sex relations .. from now on it's just behaviorism and fresh squeezed grapefruit juice

↑ Index

9. Pierre Joris
Re: (Fwd) impostures intellectuelles
Wed 1 Oct 1997

David -- the link your cited article gives is defunct. But for anybody interested in the French reaction to theSokal/Bricmont book just out in France, check the following web page of the French daily "Libération":

http://www.liberation.fr/sokal/index.html

It's in French, sorry about that, but it also has a link to Sokal's own homepage in NY where he has carefully archived all the "sokal affair" data.

Pierre

David R. Israel wrote:

> Poetas & Poeticos,
>
> the appended item (from the So.Asian Lit listserv) is apt to prove of some interest to several here.
>
> Seems Dr. Sokal will make even more of a name for himself now.
>
> yours,

> d.i.

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"I have never been able to tell a beginning from an end." — Georges Braque
==========

↑ Index

10. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Lynn Hejinian's essay "Rejection of
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Peter,

You can find it in Peter Baker's _Onward_ (I think that's the title), an anthology of contemporary poetics. I recently xeroxed a copy of it. Would be happy to send to you if you are unable to locate it. Backchannel me with your address.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Peter Balestrieri
To: POETICS
Subject: Lynn Hejinian's essay "Rejection of Closure" Date: Tuesday, September 30, 1997 8:43PM

> Hello All,
> Does anyone know how I might obtain a copy of Hejinian's essay "Rejection of Closure," originally in Poetry Journal, sometime in the late 1980's? Web searches have been unsuccessful so far.
> Thanks,
> Pete Balestrieri

↑ Index

11. Holly Crawford
Re: Weapons named after people & military slang
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Flour dust is very combustible. It will and has expoded. A flour mill in Minn. went up late last of early this century. Installation artist recently had conscept piece for the Walker MN that involved conveyor belts and moving flour from room to room. It was built and the fire marshall never let then open. I had mentioned this up to the fire marshall and my father, who has a degree in chemistry and family owed large bakery was horrified. He was headed to the phones before the flipped the switch. It seems it's electrical spark that will cause it to explode.

> I have no knowledge of explosives - why, I wonder, did they mix explosives with flour - were they trying to harness the self-raising power?
>
> ----------
> | From: Kali Tal <[redacted]>
> | Aunt Jemima: explosive mixed with flour (WWII)

Offerings Project
Send me an offer.
URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

12. Alan Jen Sondheim
Ma, A Novel
Wed 1 Oct 1997

(This, all of 20 pp. most likely, unless spread across a book with the proper spacings, is the finished novel. You will see how it relates to Poetics, Jabes for example, Blanchot, Kim Dawn's ( ) perhaps, and as I indicated elsewhere, the text exists between the letters, thus new characters appear, 26 x 26 or 676 of them; likewise, these adjacencies produce 676 x 676 ...

Enjoy, delete, pass on, the text is yours for the asking. Do read from the beginning, since there have been changes. Do read to the end, since there is a future. Alan)

Ma, A Novel

Clara and Travis meet in a foreign city. She returns to Fukuoka-Yr. They correspond by email halfway across the earth. He travels to Fukuoka-Yr to meet her at the airport. As the plane approaches, he's surprised to see herds of animals near the edge of the city. He'd have to ask her later.

Ma, A Novel

Which I do work on: "Her nights, his days. Her days, his nights."

And that he comes to a foreign city and does not understand the language. And that the airport is brown. He's got a sheet of paper, he can't de- cipher. What is it, where is she. He shows it, there's a taxi, a sheroot, he gets in, it's already old, nervous. He goes somewhere, recognizes nothing. Characters in other scripts, cuneiforms for all he knows. Llamas cross his path.

But the city's vacant, her place is vacant. Locked or unlocked - in this novel, it won't make a difference. He goes in, the door opens. There's nothing, no clues. It's clean, no dust, breakins. He doesn't know. This is a man, Travis maybe, who doesn't know a thing.

He can't find her friends because everyone shrugs. He meets people who speak his language, easy now. They know her. They haven't 'seen her around.' She's the kind of person one sees around. She's private. But there are no rumors, nothing. She works in medicine.

Well, she hasn't been at the clinic. Nothing is missing. You can see where this is going, of course. Doors close behind him, before he reaches the knob. The keys are like Berlin keys, they go through the hole, out the other side. That's impor- tant, there are windows through rooms and no one is ever looking.

Now something has to happen for the novel to be a novel, what then? Per- haps a clue, but there are always clues, even clues in the beginning of things, the glance of a dark-haired woman at the airport, a slip of cel- lophane on the floor of her flat. Clues are things that gather meaning, reverse time, reconstitute events. But things are cluttered here; the sook is filled with blood where the an- imals are slaughtered, nomads come in from the countryside, shrines are staffed by garage gong bands. The Genkai Park inexplicably closes down; there are guards, something's hap- pened.

No clues then, but this happening. What could be on the run. Later, two people are captured, he doesn't understand. There's a celebration in the city involving a wheeled boat which capsizes against chains of humans carrying placards of waves. People are really injured and the clinic's on hand.

He finds food, stays in her place. He's ill-at-ease, a woman comes wear- ing a veil and he pays the rent, holding up the currency of his country. He's surprised how little everything costs. He should feel as if he were now a part of her life, the woman who was going to meet him, but he does- n't. He might wear a bracelet or necklace one day. He wears her jumpers, goes out aimlessly. He thinks, it's all come to a halt here.

He finds himself listening to himself finding himself, but he's not lost. Just that there is this constant wonder at the world. He's more in love with her than ever before. One day, he goes to a screening of silent films, Melies. Women are dis- appearing all over the place. He'll make a film about a magician, a woman who brings men back to life. The woman trance-trains, has visions. Then she sets up mechanisms, everyone knows all of this and she's quite successful. She dies. Her extras are out of work, lifeless. They form a secret circle. They keep her corpse, have visions, try to raise the dead. They have visions, but they don't trance- train, in fact they do nothing at all. She comes back to life.

There's a knock at the door of the flat. He's been there for months, un- recognizable. His nights, her days. His days, her nights. Whammo-kazowie, she's at the door. It would be presumption to ask. She talks about vis- ions, what she knows. Beneath the flat, there are missile silos. Next door, enigma code writers are hard at work. Across the way, the buildings are part of the largest ship ever constructed, you can see the alley- gangway down to the sea. The ship begins to move, everything shakes for a minute. The ship stops again, earthquake he says, no she replies.

She's learned everything, signs and symbols. She can't read the cuneiform either, but insists it isn't important. What comes between the letters, she confides, that's it more or less. What comes between the letters, he realizes, is his own alphabet. Everything shudders, they take the Shin- kansen back to the sheroot stand near the roman ruins. The drivers are different and perhaps she departs.

But the novel won't go this way. It will be populated with expatriates, colorful characters named Abdul, Charisma, and Jennifer. They'll drink a lot and expostulate. There will be all sorts of other horizons strat- egically across going-native. Sarongs and turbans, veils for the women, who would and wouldn't. There are fires on the other side of the city - they never come nearer. Guerillas, one opines. They listen to the short- wave, marry local, leave one by one. They fan out across the city.

No, they don't, nothing like that happens. There are clues to the woman's disappearance. The airport appears to be a mechanism of some sort, the runways laid out in shamanic configuration, easy hiragana squared off for the takeoff and approach. The stewards knew he was arriving. The pilots watch him, uneasily, warily, he can't help noticing. Whatever is afoot takes him by surprise. Nausea, fear.

And then, the rest of the novel. Things happen.

Fragmeant

Travis wrote to her. The time and return was .465 seconds on average, not bad when Fukuoka had been considered the center of the world in the four- teenth century, his own hometown unknown, fallow, untended. He was aware of the gaping maw of the sun, violent lunacy of the swinging moon which rarely showed its face - from its night, the radiance of her day showed forth. Mesmeric, he adapted himself to her schedule, his sun-up suppers with his friends were the occasion of back-channel conversations about sanity and the diameter of the earth. He joked he was the only one aware of circumference, of what a sphere was and meant - that he was the only one earth-bound, everyone else walking with stitched eyes and habits formed from childhood. He knew the sphere of stars and its awkwardness, how it shuddered above and below the equator, the rings of luminescent star-clouds and their satellites, give and take of unknown constellations.

But it was his doubling that fascinated him, breakfast as dusk rose, not dawn, sleeping at odd hours reflecting gaps and silences, and his Monday night class that began oddly enough on Tuesday morning at seven - he re- mained surprised that the students were alert, keen on the speed of the Net, which should have been accountably slow and clumsy.

His clocks gained a minute, lost a minute. He tried to meet himself half- way, like a friend. His nights were bright with untoward clarity, unthun- dered days, dark, uncanny, silent. Someone fixed the stars, he thought, they were never when they were supposed to be.

She wrote him about the llamas.

Llamas

The llama glistened, black carapace covered within insistent tortoise plates gleaming in the brown air of noon. It didn't move. Sirens in the distance constantly changing, warding off violent cars close to veering out of control. The head turned. Smoke from the nostrils, soot-nose beneath glowering eyes, body tensed with radiant energy. Shimmered waves of heat rose from the back, the breath, the brow.

She noted this in her brown notebook, ruled with blue lines. She wrote him about the llamas near the Shikuneem, vicinity of Kasuga-Shi. They were llamas, Luria, she was a tracker with a blue felt hat, sorobon and note- book, penning ebb and flow, turbulent streams of animals burrowing into the world. They were moving in from the arroyos south-west of the city, the burning-plains traveled only by the Shinkansen. It was said that bones sparkled as the trains rushed by, straight unbuckled rails held up to the sanded grounds too hot for human touch.

Travis remembered her uneasy witnessing, now the thing before him, as if produced by the cuneiform inscriptions everywhere in his vicinity. It was a one world, transitive, her llama text taking root, hair, and bone; she was nowhere to be found. Had she left him these animals, created by pure description? Was her disappearance contained in the eye of the beast, the vestiges of retinal memory destroyed by the fire next time? For a second he felt the creature recognized him, but that second passed, replaced by the uncertain knowledge that he was losing her trail as the purely exotic began its uneasy hold.

Did she watch from the grey-pink building tiled against the sky? Did she lay harbor-dead, trolled by fish and crustacean, memory lost and tangled in kelp, seed-pods of aquatic plants adapting to stratified pollutions dragged from shore to sea-bottom and back again?

Travis found his language tangled as well, the product of uncertainty, loneliness, and an ignorance so pure he had no name for it.

———————

Parting the Thirty-Fourth

Clara reached over for her box of cigarettes; if Avi didn't leave soon, all hell would break loose. He'd already fallen off the futon three times in the night, what would you expect from a gaijin who faded in and out of the desert weekly.

The Desert Weekly, lead story: Gaijin loses grip on wadi edge, plunges two meters to gravel pitstop, slight remains of moisture lapped by desert frogs. Pictures, page 2.

When he left, she turned on the radio, cd player, computer, called the airport, Fukuoka International. The name for city was 'ir,' Fukuoka-Yr carved in cuneiform on the corner lintels everywhere. They never let you forget. Flight 75, San Francisco, Oregon, Nepal, Catalina Island, Oman, Fukuoka-Yr in that order. It was on time and she imagined the plane poised perfectly in a planetary ring, waiting for the moment to descend. She dressed, left the bet-ie, headed down the street.

The llamas were waiting as she stepped into the troika. She headed out on Number One Highway, south, left on Shogun. She hadn't worn her hat, see, for quite some time now. They stopped by the marshes, approximately five kilometers from the terminal. She watched the plane make perfect descent, dialed Robert immediately, continued on her way.

When Robert answered the phone, Jane was in the other room. They spoke in whispers, aha. She told him all about the recent demographics, head- counts. Later he'd say she was nervous, preoccupied. He was a specialist in cartoucherie, useful where the only secure mode of communication was still clay-based. Lady Sarashina had written

Were it not for river rock and pine
This clay would not have impressed
My name, my love, your _hon_ or book, mnemonics of his mind, to whom she had written, borrowing from Chinese Ch'in-fu, the impress of the reed pen, striations of thought as the seven strings, seventeen vibratos, sounded, then faded into ma. Clay into thought, material into the silence of the word, all this heaven.

Clara was circumscribed by Robert's interest in her demographics, by the movements of llamas across the burning plains, by the distance of the troika (found by the side of the road) from the airport. Her disappearance dissolved into the gaze of Travis, waiting for her, waiting and waiting - a gaze transformed into a glance, then the look-see of astonishment as he began to understand she might never meet him again. Would he remember her voice, enumerating herds, packs, gaggles, schools, flocks, enervated groupings of the awkward black mammals, their armor-plating clacking in the heat of the day?

Every one of these people were breathing, in and out.

Clara turned over lazily, suddenly realizing what had happened. She woke with a start in utter darkness. The worst had happened. "Travis," she said, uncertainly, "Travis."

'Yes,' he replied, as a hand slid along her arm, her face, her hair. "I'm here, darling, I'm here."

On or Off the Mark

He rose early, left her house. After the second week, he had installed a tighter lock on the door, although the thin window-frames were easy enough to puncture. Now he felt he was in her shell, the doubled times between his home city and Fukuoka collapsed into the singularity of her absence.

As he rounded the corner, a young man on a blue bicycle passed, face in- tent on negotiating past the yellow just-ahead-truck. They collided.

Travis felt for his glasses, notebook; young Sven apologized. Clockwork could be heard in the midst of the spilled packages. A woman crossed the street, umbrella in hand. "I'm quite sorry," he stammered. "No damage done," he replied.

"Everything is time here," Sven said. "Their whole lives are planned out for them, even the priesthood. Monotheisms take their toll." What wasn't there to understand.

"Have you seen her, by the way," asked Travis, "the woman who used to live here - I was supposed to meet her weeks ago. She's been missing as far as I can tell."

"I've been missing her."

"You reported her to the police?" He had, with little luck, no results, less comprehension. "Gaijin," they had said, "Avarim," it happens all the time. They have their own customs, come and go, the trade-routes and the like. Sven nodded. He had long blond hair, vacant gaze, thin leather jacket.

"I've seen her," he said, deciding to tell. "She's the one I drove to the airport, we had a spill on the way. She was gone when I came to. I didn't say anything to the police - moonlighting. Mind if I smoke?"

Had a cigarette, continued. "I knew her for several years here, we're a close community. She was aloof, prone to raging in the streets late at night, we got along. Had something to do with the llamas, I couldn't see the point in tracking imports you know. She thought they made patterns in the city - the only patterns here are the runways at Fukuoka-Yr Interna- tional. They're a glyph you might read from the air, a sign for love, odd in this environment."

They looked around at the factories, smoke, grey-pink buildings, men and women speaking incomprehensible tongues, Palawian, Sumerian, Hittite. Everyone was bound by cuneiform, common among them. Everyone, even Travis, could he but read the literal writing on the wall.

"She was involved with something," Sven said. "She talked about a new kind of corporation, I didn't follow her. It didn't make sense, but this was, she insisted, different, it drew a blank where an economy might be."

"Drew a blank?"

"It emptied finance, not engaged, didn't zero out, plus and minus, assets, debits, that sort of thing. It had power in production. It had chains, flows, automations. She was tracking it through the llamas, said they were intelligent, agents of sorts, traffickers."

"I never saw llamas like these before," Travis said. "Carapaces are unus- ual, pangolins or armadillos, yes, but not your typical ungulates. For all I know, they might be wired, plasticine, something of that nature. All those plates. Look there."

Travis loved explanation, it made sense of the world. As a child, he took screws apart. He ordered the world and the world was filled with orders filled and delivered. Now he thought, the city, the city. Now he thought, I'm totally wrong here. He wanted to return to the house.

Suddenly Travis knew that Sven knew something, Sven knew Travis knew nothing at all.

What the World Did and Said

A fierce wind drove across the plains. Tumbleweed blew about, covering the Shinkansen tracks and trains slowed down for the nowhere sight. The sun gloomed red and sullen against the silhouettes of mountain torn from the planet's paper scroll. Lizards scuttled across the pock-marked rocks and earth; centipedes scurried under cover, their legs coated with tiny crys- tals of embed- ded sand. Even the llamas moved slowly, their scales burn- ished by gusts scouring the remnants of the natural world.

Still the stars turned in more-or-less constellations, in a frozen sky above the doomed melee. Below, a lidded eye opened to nothing, closed quickly; above, vacuous light reflected only clouded surfaces for whole races elsewhere intent on penetrating the secrets of the earth.

The moon and sun, tethered, trembled and yawed at the taut cords binding them together in the fugue state of the world drawn down into heat and exhaus- tion.

Clara woke again.

_____

Letter

She sent him a letter in a dusty envelope of clay, impressed with reed charac- ters. It fell into her home through the mailslot, cracked open on the floor.

He couldn't read a thing. Sven could:

darling, darling, darling, darling
darling, darling, darling, darling
darling, darling, darling, darling
darling, darling, darling, darling

"Is that all," Travis asked, is that all. Sven shrugged, look at the repe- tition. Travis felt the current.

The envelope, Travis said, "the envelope." Sven picked up the pieces, the Shearim-Ku address clearly visible. But there was more, long drawn-out lines scrawled, reassembled, recuperated, the ascension of language in Sven's nim- ble hands:

these may secrete glues fixatives across the spine of the wanderers o dar- ling emptied coffers not even coffers not even wood-logs holding shekels o darling not even monies of this world and the next o darling vertebrae of the wanderers o darling in you in this stony you in you heptagon o darling three beauty you un- knowing-travis knowing me

Sven slowed toward the denouement of the powerful message, the twenty-one darlings of the tripled heptagon, Sven noted mesmeric Travis in love, Clara's presence filling her tiny home, welcoming him forever, ghost of Clara, projection-Clara lost on walls and ceilings, Clara-wraithe tip- toeing across tatami floors, whispers everywhere. Sven stopped writing, turned towards door, left quietly, Travis to his own devices.

———————

Engagement Ring

Travis thought, it emptied the economy. What was precious, disappeared - exchange value, all of it. Take the fetish out of Marx, the rare jewel simply doesn't exist, everything is common, free software. Not communism or socialism, simply nothing. Gold unstable, platinum non-existent al- ready. This corporation was _disengaged,_ not there. No chairman of the board, no stocks. No offices, products. Power in absence.

Travis thought, he couldn't conceive the future here, what then? Was it hoarding, llama-plates carefully disguising sheaves of rare metals, dia- dems, high coinages of nations on the way down? Silver was transparent at the edges, diamonds lost their glint, cobalt its eerie luster. Art copied itself, copies shuffled in the commodities market along with salt, oil, corn.

Travis feverish.

Travis thinks Clara-knowledge. Thinks like Clara thinks, llama-gold-and- silver. Thinks traces across the ruffled streets unfurled with absence ignored; there would be no resurrection. Cuneiform strategies and wagers. The political economy of preciousness.

Travis thinks, Clara is precious. Thinks the disappearance of Clara in this incomprehensible land, cries Clara-comfort, calls Sven for help. Travis is wise, the glimmer of idea.

Sven arrives, they're in the house. Sven smokes, Travis drinks. "What's the possibilities here," Travis said, about absent-Clara. Humans don't have exchange value, not since slavery, capitalism's roles, the military. There's always someone else beneath the blue felt hat, always someone, don't mistake the exchange for an individual's history.

"We're bound together," Sven says, but something escapes. Love magnifies it, you were coming for that. "So the corporation takes action. Clara, like uranium, radium, glows. She disappears, you're flattened out here. Her work stops; you can't read the language, hiragana clay-marks. It's over, you're in her house, wear her clothes, breathe her."

"You and the corporation know it's not enough," Sven smoked. "So they'll think you're a danger to them. Don't take any troikas!" Because it may not be me driving.

In an economy of zeros.

"It's not enough," Travis drank. "She's alive, the keikan are in on it." The message had twenty-one. Travis thinks maybe the city is the corpora- tion, Fukuoka-Yr. Or Robert, Sven, or none of them. Travis thinks of llamas. All the Gaijin, Avarim. "Everyone's life is precious to someone."

"But not everyone arrives enhancing the value of the woman or man tethered like sun or moon, crackling the earth's surface, burning plains, forlorn cry of enameled llamas ..."

With one ring, Clara rings him up.

_____

Kudasai

Travis loves Clara. Clara loves Travis. There's an absent corporation. There is helpful Sven. There are questions about power. What a stock response! Travis decides none of it is true.

Directly across the street, the house slides into the water, a nuclear submarine almost ready for action.

_____

Corporate

It didn't know where it was or who it was. It didn't have a name and there was no one around to name it. Like Sartre's anti-semitism, anti-llamaism, if it didn't exist, it would have to be invented. Somewhere in the minds of men and women.

It simply _vacated_ worth from scarcity, building up from economies of plenitude and planetary grace at the end of the twentieth century. A uni- versal drain, it would have been suspicious of life, of movement not its own, of secret exchanges, mining for jewels and gold. It protected itself, circumscription, proscription; it trundled into the real smarts of people destined to see an hour into the future.

It was the enemy of lovers everywhere! Of all that was beautiful on the face of the earth! If it feared, it would have feared love! It knew no fear! It had the beauteous Clara, or did it! It was approaching Travis! There was no end to it! It could afford to wait and wait, Fukuoka-style- of-the-Golden-Seal! It had all the time in the world! Travis was in mor- tal danger! Clara, where was Clara!

She rang him up, "Don't think for a moment, Travis, that anyone has consciousness besides you and me." Knowledge is disseminated between the two of us. We tremble in the jouissance of the selves! Everyone else is stu- pid!

Travis, "Stupid?" blinked an eye. Well, not stupid, perhaps, you know me and my language. Ah, but unthinking, with blinders on. We're too far gone for that, you and me.

Travis, "Far gone?" We're at the limits, darling, looking out, looking in. It's a thin line as it is; we're getting pretty good at tight-rope. There is nothing else, do you understand? It's unthinking, though, in a differ- ent way. Think of it as a value-thief. It's all that left when plenitude and scarcity are overturned, why some of them are worth more than whole countries!

"Where are you," asked Travis, nerves shot, arms stretched to the break- ing point. Truth made him weak.

———————

Lucky Star

"these may secrete glues fixatives across the spine of the wanderers o darling emptied coffers not even coffers not even wood-logs holding shekels o darling not even monies of this world and the next o darling vertebrae of the wanderers o darling in you in this stony you in you heptagon o darling three beauty you un-knowing-travis knowing me"

the letter had read, enclosing sixteen darlings. Sven set to work. The wanderers were llamas surely. "Spine" comes from the back, perhaps a reference to cara-pace? Rogue llamas fetched no prices, the coffers were gone, rotted away - what next but world-wide currency?

Twenty-one was the voting-night-club age in Fukuoka. Everyone who was any-one would be at the Plex that night. Why, it was a holiday. He rang up Travis.

Travis thought, too many phonecalls, hello. Arrangements made, the troika car-ried both of them down Ben Eliezer. Travis saw the building had a tur- ret, watchtower, lookout for llamas and now submarines. I must be imagin- ing things. A beacon revolved on high, spitting out sumptuous code, darl- ing, dar-ling, darling. Maybe a warning or just premonition.

Inside, the chaos witnessed from a thousand movie stills, bodies tuned to 220 heartbeats a second and the local voltage. Because of the mirrors, a thousand people descended into punctuated gloom and infinity. They lost each other al-most immediately; Travis was never to see Sven, dead or a- live, again.

He moved towards what he gathered was the source, equidistant from his im-ages bounced and shattered in the impossible space. He measured himself thereby. Towards the star-chamber where everyone was twenty-one. Towards the heptagon drawn on the floor, like a bad novel where everything fits to-gether, like my life, Travis said. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven. As he rounded the corner, Clara.

———————

Ice

Ice storms whipped the plains into a second frenzy, needles feeding on the rippled ground. In Fukuoka, everything was sheen, the dim sun reflected in a million blunted images, like lost dancers of the heptagon writhing in memories of ecstasy. Bamboo tubes, set among the cacti, howled the proper notes of dead emperors, until they where shattered by blast and rind. The temperature hovered near zero, breathed in and out of it; layer after layer of ice turned streetlamps into hailstone mimicry. The moon shone blue, sun white-green; the stars were pinpricks against the frozen black backdrop of withered weather.

Howling, they danced! Fierce, they danced! Gripping each other, pulling hair by the roots, arms clawed into one another, they danced! Screaming, they danced! Fallen, scraped, bruised, they danced! Laser-blind, eyes for each other, spear-tip eyes, they danced! Travis hungered, Clara hungered, they danced, arms and legs, ripped cloth, fed, feeding, torn! Torn naked against the marrow of the floor, bone-marrow, blood-marrow! Stumbling to their feet, howling! Danced the darling dance! Danced the beauty dance! Danced the dance of death and exile! Danced the Dance of Speech and All Phenomena! Danced Being-Nothing-Time, danced the Scratch-and-Wounding- Dance, faces, arms, legs, breasts marked black-blue, trembling, ecstatic! Travis hungered, Clara hungered, danced the Proper Name! A great shout! A great SHOUT!

A GREAT SHOUT!

———————

THE GREAT SHOUT

They fell.

They fell exhausted to the floor, half-conscious, they fell soaked and blooded from scrape and scratch and bruise, Plex went silent.

Naked in the rubbish of torn clothing. On the floor they did lay there naked in their torn clothing.

Something had occurred in the empire of depletion, someone spread a thin cloth, was it llama-skin, across them. Again, indecipherable writing on the surface, above and below, shadow enumerations of cancelled transac- tions, carrying over from vacancy.

Bodies stirred, threw off their wrappings; intense flesh greeted the dancers who left silently. Lam and Pam approached, gathered Clara-Travis, helped limbs and torsos from the centripuge, now down a corridor, tunnel, backroom.

Elsewhere, Library of Bet Shearim, an unlidded eye continued to count, reticular engravings on microscopic glass slide. Such pane shatters; what was there, visioned, died on the rapidly-evaporating surface. Stentor, rotifera, flattened in agonies of starvation, asphyxiation. Now Clara and Travis are unencumbered in the lobby of a fine hotel on the other side of the city, solitary, guarded by patient llamas.

Now they will begin to speak, tell their woeful tale beneath the watchful eye. What has eye gained, what lost? Corporation trembled in first-time fearful sloth, transfixed heptagon signaled rise in universal perception. Clara said, "In order to see, one must be able to close one's eyes." Great wonders appear in darkness, hypnagogic truths, eidetic imagery close to imaginary sources. "Vision is the half of it."

"Vision is knowing how not to see."

"Vision is blind."

"Vision is knowing deference."

Corporate listening, writing scurried on piles of skins. Begins one where other leave off. "Species aren't forever," thought Travis. It takes some doing. I never knew Sven to thank him. Redolent Clara-Travis wrote and rose from sumptuous couch. Marble disappeared above into the sound of sirens, Plex on fire.

———————

Vision

"We danced," Clara said, slowly, around the couch. This was later, now it was wisdom-dance or ordinary, an ordinary in which we become once more acquainted after these many adventures. Then we knew the couch was for a purpose, half-sleepy llamas in the peaceful kingdom. We returned and slept.

"Our silver souls rose, until we exchanged them for a different color." Dark blue bodies appeared, grown from bone-marrow spine fields on a world marooned, unlike our own. The economy of need shuffled goods along field furrows, bales of raw materials, llama carapaces, bills of lading. Bone- field dark blue bureaucracies invaginated in maroon earth, black-brown commodity trails lettering the landscape.

"What was most apparent was the blindness of it all, the inconsequenti- ality." Nothing seemed to mean or matter; meaning was drained from this uncanny planet of the senses.

"Meaning was drained," Travis added, because meaning comes only with exchange, only with value-added; rob value, and meaning disappears. Pure survival requires only pipelines, jostling, inert strategy; meaning is an investment of an entirely different kind, related to sentience. Here's where the world starts and ends; if lettering is littering, there is, literally, nothing to be said.

"Nothing but the bills of lading." In the vision, souls and trails swirled and if there had been only a singular witness, an eye that closed, whole realms would have shattered. As it was, there were cracks.

Clara continued, "There were cracks where the furrows were; we watched them widen. It was our eyes that did this, our ability to close, turn away, ignore." The more we watched, took our places among the dark blue souls, the more things began, slowly, moving out of kilter, askew, awry, ajar.

"The lid has an effect."

"It was the corporation," Travis said, "the corporation that was closing down through its awakening by our lids retreating the image of the world into occasional darkness." We became aware there were three of us, Clara- Travis, and then, this, inertness stirring, breaking itself apart, per- haps seeping into the real.

"It had to do with the llamas as well, for example, they too had eyes, the necessity of sleep, the moments of turning-aside, leaving us unguarded for a second, a minute, hour, or day. And so we awoke, the two of us leaving the vision-world now splintering, cracking into rubble - we awoke knowing corporation awoke as well, all of this, knowing only llamas."

Locked in infinite embrace, they left hotel for streets unnaturally lum- inescent in the nighttime sky. Travis could just about see the familiar words of his native language interspersed between the incomprehensible symbols - just about, then everything would fade, once more, to a world of unknown wonders.

They went back to their home in silence.

_____

In Hebrew, lama means "why," said Travis.

Exactly, said Clara, a melamid.

Soko de hanashi wa shimai desu.

Sof.

↑ Index

13. megan minka lola camille roy class & "innovative writing"
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Hi all,
I'm mostly a lurker on this list but the very interesting exchanges on race/class of the past few days has provoked me out of my closet.

Two things happened in the past few months that concerned me and made me wonder if it would be possible here in san francisco to have some sort of public forum (perhaps at new langton arts, where I am one of two literary curators) on class and "innovative writing" that would not degenerate into name calling.

One was a discussion I fell into at a party with a "innovative" poet who has been in the community here a long time. We were reflecting on how things have changed over the last fifteen years with the decline in arts funding. When I came to san francisco it was possible to have a literary community that was very stimulating from the streets so to speak. There were for example free workshops taught by Bob Gluck at Small Press Traffic. Anyone could drop in. This provided me and others with an invaluable opportunity to learn and read and talk etc etc. You could find a really smart community. NOW, however, you've got to pay for that, through poetics programs, creative writing programs etc. One of the main reasons people go to those schools is to find a stimulating literary community.

So now, even more than before, the people who are fluent in the terms and theories of "innovative poetics" are people who can afford to go into debt to the tune of tens of thousands of dollars. This is weird, folks. I don't like it at all.

The other thing that happened that concerned me was a performance poet (spoken word stuff) who protested some curatorial decisions at NLA on the basis that we were curating an in group, something she though NLA had always done.

It's true and it's not true. We've perhaps been curating more queer, minority, younger writers than in the past. That's something we're interested in. But what is true is that we curate people who all have sort of the art school type of literary education. It's like you need that to get in the door, which means $$$. That slants and distorts not only the resulting literary community but also impoverishes the relationship of the literary community to the wider community.

I'm wondering how others have dealt with these problems and tensions, specifically with relation to "innovative poetics".

camille.

↑ Index

14. mark weiss

Re: Weapons named after people & military slang

Wed 1 Oct 1997

On a similar note, I'm still haunted by the image (imagined, alas--I never got to see the real thing) of the Madison Wisconsin fire of a few years ago that levelled the world's largest cheese warehouse. Apparently there was a river of molten cheese several feet thick running down one of the streets for days. The mayor told an interviewer that it wasn't funny.

Is this a new thread: Bad things that happen to food?

At 10:22 AM 10/1/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Flour dust is very combustible. It will and has expoded. A flour mill in >Minn. went up late last of early this century. Installation artist >recently had conscept piece for the Walker MN that involved >conveyor belts and moving flour from room to room. It was built and the >fire marshall never let then open. I had mentioned this up to the fire >marshall and my father, who has a degree in chemistry and family owed >large bakery was horrified. He was headed to the phones before >the flipped the switch. It seems it's electrical spark that will >cause it to explode.
>
>
>>I have no knowledge of explosives - why, I wonder, did they mix explosives >>with flour - were they trying to harness the self-raising power?
>>
>>----------
>>| From: Kali Tal <[redacted]>
>>| Aunt Jemima: explosive mixed with flour (WWII)
>
>Offerings Project
>Send me an offer.
>URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html
>
>

↑ Index

15. Lawrence Upton.

Re: Weapons named after people & military slang

Wed 1 Oct 1997

Thank you for that Holly. I did - I think - actually know that but it was in a remote part of my head from which there are very few connections. Much appreciated.

L

| From: Holly Crawford <[redacted]>
| To: [redacted]
| Subject: Re: Weapons named after people & military slang
| Date: 01 October 1997 18:22
|
| Flour dust is very combustible. It will and has expoded. A flour mill in
| Minn. went up late last of early this century. Installation artist
| recently had conscept piece for the Walker MN that involved
| conveyor belts and moving flour from room to room. It was built and the
| fire marshall never let then open. I had mentioned this up to the fire
| marshall and my father, who has a degree in chemistry and family owed
| large bakery was horrified. He was headed to the phones before
| the flipped the switch. It seems it's electrical spark that will
| cause it to explode.
|
|
| >I have no knowledge of explosives - why, I wonder, did they mix explosives
| >with flour - were they trying to harness the self-raising power?
| >
| >----------
| >| From: Kali Tal <[redacted]>
| >| Aunt Jemima: explosive mixed with flour (WWII)
|
| Offerings Project
| Send me an offer.
| URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

16. Aldon Nielsen
Re: That was no gentleman, that was a shrinking violet
Wed 1 Oct 1997

---

would have been in on this Stein conversation earlier, but I now have no access to email from home (hope to change that in the coming months) -- so only see my mail a few times per week --

yes, _Reading Race_ contains a now somewhat outdated discussion of _Melanctha_ -- the publisher is U of Georgia Press,,,,, and I can make a shady postal deal with anybody who can't find the volume nearby --

BUT

among the more recent relevant publications is the Fall 1996 issue of Modern Fiction Studies devoted to Stein ,, which contains, along with much else worthy of note, Lorna Smedman's article on Stein and racialized language

↑ Index

17. Christopher Reiner
New book: The Grouper
Wed 1 Oct 1997

NEW from Avec Books:

The Grouper
Lissa McLaughlin
Poetry * Prose * Photographs

The unexplained coherences intrigue me, the every day exotic, how random abrasive fragments operate as structure. Something succinct and deep is expressed that cannot be said in words. --Mei-mei Berssenbrugge

In Lissa McLaughlin's drive-by America, there is more than just the view passing frame by frame outside your window. Beneath a seemingly still surface, sensory experience cuts deep. Danger lurks in many forms: gun-wielding uncles, hurricanes, nascent sexuality. Here, the sticky stuff of memory is equal parts experience and dreamscape-and what falls in between. Lissa McLaughlin reaches through the boundaries of consciousness to create a richly layered prose. -Kathy Lou Schultz

Lissa McLaughlin knows that narratives based around memories are truest to experience exactly at that moment when they know what can't be said. The pained, angry, yet often slyly humorous collection in The Grouper illustrates that memory must never pretend to understand more than it can. The starkly resonant, but finally resistant, photographs show how language can only navigate edges of the irreducible instants of a life which words cannot finally know. In so doing, The Grouper reminds us that trauma must never be reduced to an excuse for story. -Mark Wallace

Reading The Grouper, we are "listening for the mess to speak, afraid it will." Convincingly, disturbingly, Lissa McLaughlin has "opened her mouth as far as it will go" and given us pictures of language learning "to mark physically the moment speech ruptures." What does writing become when it "refuses to enter the novel memory writes"? Page after page, in brief prose fragments and fragmented anecdotes, in photographs and jaggedly chiseled poems, McLaughlin provides a turbulent sequence of answers to this question, where "the meaning of nothing becomes more and more clear to us [as] bits of the temporal world snag and accumulate." And if the language is a "mess," it is nonetheless well made, offering not chaos but the form chaos takes when we call it writing.
-Stephen-Paul Martin

64 pages * $8.50 * ISBN: 1880713-09-8

Distributed by Small Press Distribution, and Baker & Taylor

Lissa McLaughlin has written film reviews and a children's picture book. Her fiction has appeared in _The Massachusetts Review_ , AVEC and _The Best American Short Stories_. Her previous collections (_Troubled by his Complexion_ and _Seeing the Multitudes Delayed_) were published by Burning Deck. She lives in San Francisco.

↑ Index

18. John Cayley
mute & visible language
Wed 1 Oct 1997

Just two little bits of information. ?Not ?Poetry

1.

The journal, Visible Language, is now online, after their most recent issue, 31.2 on 'Interactivity, Interconnectivity and Media'

http://www.id.iit.edu/visiblelanguage

> Includes: reviews of Boyers' _Cybercities_ and Alberto Manguel's _A History of Reading_. There is a very stimulating paper by Diana J. Gromala on 'Virtual Avatars: Subjectivity in Virtual Environments' and a very good, longer essay by Peter Storkerson and Jannie Wong on 'Hypertext and the Art of Memory' (not as specific as it might appear and a very sound, considered, rhetorically inclined analysis of the current state of the HT/Multimedia engagement).

2.

mute 8
... has.

The digital art critique broadsheet has become a(n over-/highly-designed) glossy; a floppy, leafy storehouse of "critical/information/services"; young, net-jaded, intelligent (mostly) & fashionable Britain's answer to Mondo 2000 -- well worth a peruse by anyone engaged with these matters.

> just onut and on newstands every(w)here
> email: [redacted]
> http://www.metamute.com

- > John Cayley / Wellsweep Press
http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/ 1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK Tel & Fax: ([redacted] Email: [redacted] < - - - - - - - -
- -

↑ Index

19. Safdie Joseph

Re: Race, identity, otherness, us-ness, stereotypes....

Wed 1 Oct 1997

I wanted to come back to the list, after a long absence and a new e-mail address, to wish everyone so inclined a happy (Jewish) New Year. I also recommend Kali's fairly remarkable speculations about race, Judaism, and identity yesterday -- I found them wondrous and provocative (in a good way).

At my new school we had to undergo "diversity training" last week, something akin to what Texaco executives must have had to undergo a few months back. It's much more structuralist than post-, I fear, but for what it's worth, I offer this schema that was in my "diversity packet".

ACCULTURATION
High
/
/
/
/
ETHNIC IDENTITY /
Low _____/_____ High
/
/
/
/

/
Low

(And now you have to imagine -- for lack of me being able to put them there -- an "A" in the upper left quadrant, a "B" in the upper right, a "C" in the lower right, and a "D" in the lower left, which letters correspond to categories of people called "mainstream" "bi-cultural" "traditionalist" and "counter culturist" (oh no, not that!). Anyway, the idea is that some people have high capacities to "acculturate" -- can't we all get along -- and low ethnic identities: they're mainstream. (Other, less sanguine terms, could be substituted here). High ethnicity and high acculturation would be bi-cultural, able to get along in multiple worlds, or "style-flex"; high ethnics and low acculturates would be those unable to compromise, hangers-on to their own traditions, and the last category would be those "alienated from both the ethnic and the majority culture communities." (I always thought those were the poets, but many folks on the list would disagree).

I don't know why I did this -- I hate categories myself -- just wanted to give a glimpse of what passes for official diversity these days. The Giants are tied in the ninth and I gotta go listen . . .

↑ Index

20. Susan Clark
addresses anyone?
Wed 1 Oct 1997

---

hello, does anyone have addresses email and/or snail for :

PAUL KELLEY
CHRIS CORRIGAN
SCOTT BENTLEY
CAROLYN KEMP

thanks
Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON

again, if anyone is missing issues or has moved, please get in touch

↑ Index

21. James Finnegan

Re: Race, identity, otherness, us-ness, stereotypes....

Wed 1 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-01 19:27:45 EDT, you write:

> I wanted to come back to the list, after a long absence and a new e-mail address, to wish everyone so inclined a happy (Jewish) New Year. I also recommend Kali's fairly remarkable speculations about race, Judaism, and identity yesterday -- I found them wondrous and provocative (in a good way).
>
> At my new school we had to undergo "diversity training" last week, something akin to what Texaco executives must have had to undergo a few months back. It's much more structuralist than post-, I fear, but for what it's worth, I offer this > schema that was in my "diversity packet".
>
> ACCULTURATION
> High
> /
> /
> /
> /
> ETHNIC IDENTITY /
> Low _____/_____ High
> /
> /
> /
> /
> /
> Low
>
> (And now you have to imagine -- for lack of me being able to put them there -- an "A" in the upper left quadrant, a "B" in the upper right, a "C" in the lower right, and a "D" in the lower left, which letters correspond to categories of people called "mainstream" "bi-cultural" "traditionalist" and "counter culturist" (oh no, not that!). Anyway, the idea is that some people have high capacities to "acculturate" -- can't we all get along -- and low ethnic identities: they're mainstream. (Other, less sanguine terms, could be substituted here). High ethnicity and high acculturation would be bi-cultural, able to get along in multiple worlds, or "style-flex"; high ethnics and low acculturates would be those unable to compromise, hangers-on to their own traditions, and the last category would be those "alienated from both the ethnic and the majority culture communities." (I always thought those were the poets, but many folks on the list would disagree).

> I don't know why I did this -- I hate categories myself -- just wanted to give a glimpse of what passes for official diversity these days.

Kafka could do no better.

Finnegan

↑ Index

22. Peter Ganick
snailmail address needed
Wed 1 Oct 1997

---

for paul buck, the british poet--- pls backchannel to:
[redacted]
thanks in advance----

↑ Index

23. Mark W Scroggins more addresses needed
Thu 2 Oct 1997

Does anyone have e-mail or snailmail addresses for Robin Purves or Peter Manson, editors of _Object Permanence_? Please backchannel. Thanks, Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

24. Tom Orange
impostures intellectuelles
Thu 2 Oct 1997

---

wow, this argument is so old hat that it's hard to believe it's actually causing a fuss somewhere. esp. in reference to lacan, against whom the argument is at least 30 yrs old, as a quick spin through michael clark's garland press bibliography wd show....t.

---------- They [Sokal and Bircmont] write: "We want to 'deconstruct' the reputation that these texts have of being difficult because they are deep. We show that if they seem incomprehensible, it is for the very good reason that they have nothing to say." And about the above-mentioned thinkers they say: "They talk abundantly of scientific theories of which they have, at best, a very vague understanding. They display a superficial erudition by throwing words at the reader in a context where they have no relevance. They demonstrate a veritable intoxication with words, combined with a superb indifference to their meaning." Jacques Lacan (a well known psychoanalyst) is criticised for "arbitrarily mixing key words of mathematical theory, without in the least caring about their meaning." [etc. etc. etc.]

↑ Index

25. Holly Crawford

Re: Weapons named after people & military slang

Thu 2 Oct 1997

Bad things that happen to food thread: The movies Ghost Busters and Attack of the Killer Tomatoes.
H

> On a similar note, I'm still haunted by the image (imagined, alas--I never got to see the real thing) of the Madison Wisconsin fire of a few years ago that levelled the world's largest cheese warehouse. Apparently there was a river of molten cheese several feet thick running down one of the streets for days. The mayor told an interviewer that it wasn't funny.
>
> Is this a new thread: Bad things that happen to food?
>
> At 10:22 AM 10/1/97 -0700, you wrote:
> Flour dust is very combustible. It will and has expoded. A flour mill in Minn. went up late last of early this century. Installation artist recently had conscept piece for the Walker MN that involved conveyor belts and moving flour from room to room. It was built and the fire marshall never let then open. I had mentioned this up to the fire marshall and my father, who has a degree in chemistry and family owed large bakery was horrified. He was headed to the phones before the flipped the switch. It seems it's electrical spark that will cause it to explode.
>
> I have no knowledge of explosives - why, I wonder, did they mix explosives with flour - were they trying to harness the self-raising power?
>
> ----------
> | From: Kali Tal <[redacted]>
> | Aunt Jemima: explosive mixed with flour (WWII)
>
> Offerings Project
> Send me an offer.
> URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

26. Tom Beard

Re: (Fwd) impostures intellectuelles

Thu 2 Oct 1997

> The authors take particular exception to one of Mr Lacan's lesser known theories, in which he argues that "the erect male organ, not as itself, not even as image, but as the missing piece of the desired image, is thus equal to the square root of -1 of the highest produced meaning."

I actually found some of Lacan's writings quite evocative in this regard (in my extremely limited reading of Lacan). I liked the links between L's use of the terms 'Real' and 'Imaginary', and their use in the mathematics of complex numbers, as well as his formulation of desire as the excess of want over need, and how this simple arithmetic led, through recursion, to what sounded like almost fractal complexity (although I can't recall the passage right now).

While L's use of the language of mathematics might be interesting poetically, I can sympathise with Sokal and Bricmont's fear that L's apparent "intoxication with words, combined with a superb indifference to their meaning" (although that sounds like as good a definition of poetry as I've heard recently) might not be all that helpful in understanding the workings of the human mind. Do the Real and Imaginary axes meet at the origin (zero) in? Does the Symbolic realm provide a third axis, and if so, does this begin to introduce quaternions, and the need for another realm? What do the various arithmetical operations represent within the mind (if i (= square root of -1) is the phallus, what do -1 and 1 become in his scheme? Is there a link between i and the "I", representing unity on the imaginary axis?).

I even vaguely considered linking Mandelbrot and Lacan in a poem to be entitled "The Fractal Geometry of Desire", but choked on the portentous title. Is the boundary between the desired and the undesired a fractal, becoming more complex (and even undecidable) the closer one inspects it?

I'm not sure what Lacan would have made of Mandelbrot. He (Lacan) seems to have displayed an almost arrogant disregard for the possibility that biology might have something to do with the mind, which is one of the reasons why I never persevered in reading Lacan, whereas Mandelbrot seems to have shown a healthy interest in a variety of arts and sciences. Was it Mandelbrot who said "Erudition is good for the soul"?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

27. mark weiss
(no subject)
Thu 2 Oct 1997

Have misplaced Marjorie Perloff's snailmail address, need to send her a book. Backchannel help anyone?

↑ Index

28. henry gould
Re: social tumbles
Thu 2 Oct 1997

On Thu, 2 Oct 1997 10:19:35 -0700 Charles Weigl said:
[quoting Adorno:]
>"In his limitless and and implacable demands the petty-bourgeois sticks >his chest out, identifying himself with a power he does not have, >outdoing it in his arrogance to the point of absolute spirit and >absolute horror. Between the grandiose sublimity embracing the whole of >humanity--a sublimity ever ready to trample inhumanely on anything small >as mere existence--and the coarse ostentation of bourgeois men of >violence, there is an intimate collusion. The dignity of spiritual >giants is prone to hollow booming laughter, exploding, smashing. When >they say Creation, they mean the compulsive will-power with which they >puff themselves up and intimidate all questions: from the primacy of >practical reason it was always only a step to hatred of theory. Such >a dynamic inheres in all idealistic movements of thought...

For the Great Left Theorists, it's always somebody ELSE's ideas that are "idealist illusions", "abstractions", "will to power", etc. Materialism and alienated labor provide the master key with which to lay out these broad-brush cliches. Doesn't seem to occur that perhaps the basic ability to generalize, synthesize, empathize, and communicate might transcend the various blinders of the various political positions - and that these tools of thought might just as well be linked with humility as arrogance. History can always be brought to bear to prove the opposite - but then what is history but the tale of the Great and their Great Deeds? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

29. Douglas
Re: New book: The Grouper
Thu 2 Oct 1997

Christopher,

Could I get four (4) copies for the America Awards, and bill me for a couple of others for the bookstore.
I'll pay upon receipt.

Douglas

Christopher Reiner wrote:
>
> NEW from Avec Books:
>
> The Grouper
> Lissa McLaughlin
> Poetry * Prose * Photographs
>
> The unexplained coherences intrigue me, the every day exotic, how random > abrasive fragments operate as structure. Something succinct and deep is > expressed that cannot be said in words.
> --Mei-mei Berssenbrugge
>
> In Lissa McLaughlin's drive-by America, there is more than just the view > passing frame by frame outside your window. Beneath a seemingly still > surface, sensory experience cuts deep. Danger lurks in many forms:
> gun-wielding uncles, hurricanes, nascent sexuality. Here, the sticky stuff > of memory is equal parts experience and dreamscape-and what falls in > between. Lissa McLaughlin reaches through the boundaries of consciousness > to create a richly layered prose.
> -Kathy Lou Schultz
>
> Lissa McLaughlin knows that narratives based around memories are truest to > experience exactly at that moment when they know what can't be said. The > pained, angry, yet often slyly humorous collection in The Grouper > illustrates that memory must never pretend to understand more than it can.
> The starkly resonant, but finally resistant, photographs show how language > can only navigate edges of the irreducible instants of a life which words > cannot finally know. In so doing, The Grouper reminds us that trauma must > never be reduced to an excuse for story.
> -Mark Wallace
>
> Reading The Grouper, we are "listening for the mess to speak, afraid it > will." Convincingly, disturbingly, Lissa McLaughlin has "opened her mouth > as far as it will go" and given us pictures of language learning "to mark > physically the moment speech ruptures." What does writing become when it > "refuses to enter the novel memory writes"? Page after page, in brief prose > fragments and fragmented anecdotes, in photographs and jaggedly chiseled > poems, McLaughlin provides a turbulent sequence of answers to this > question, where "the meaning of nothing becomes more and more clear to us > [as] bits of the temporal world snag and accumulate." And if the language > is a "mess," it is nonetheless well made, offering not chaos but the form > chaos takes when we call it writing.

> -Stephen-Paul Martin
>
> 64 pages * $8.50 * ISBN: 1880713-09-8
>
> Distributed by Small Press Distribution, and Baker & Taylor
>
> Lissa McLaughlin has written film reviews and a children's picture book.
> Her fiction has appeared in _The Massachusetts Review_ , AVEC and _The Best > American Short Stories_. Her previous collections (_Troubled by his > Complexion_ and _Seeing the Multitudes Delayed_) were published by Burning > Deck. She lives in San Francisco.

↑ Index

30. Mark Prejsnar
Re: class & "innovative writing"
Thu 2 Oct 1997

>
> So now, even more than before, the people who are fluent in the terms > and theories of "innovative > poetics" are people who can afford to go into debt to the tune of > tens of thousands of dollars. This is weird, folks. I don't like it > at all.
>
Camille,

In my experience it has never been that overwhelmingly true, that innovative poetry people "can afford to go into debt to the tune of tens of thousands of dollars." But it sure isn't true right now of most of the poetry folks I work with. My own situation is very much working-class and barely getting by; from what I've encountered and heard, not that atypical.

Mark P.
atlanta

↑ Index

31. Charles Weigl
social tumbles
Thu 2 Oct 1997

seemed kinda strange to me that, in the ongoing (imagined?) debate between the "cold experimentalists with no leg to stand on" and the champions of some sort of warm direct-address aesthitics of "humane impulses," adorno was somehow recruited on the side of humanism and purportedly non-ideological clarity.

could this be the same teddy i know and love? a quick perusal of _minima moralia_ reassured me somewhat and i reproduce the following quote because 1) it made me chuckle and 2) it seems vaguely relevant to any assertion of straight-no-chaser "aesthetic" practices based on "obvious" principles or the idea that there is such an animal as clear communication or direct expression of "emotion."

it's from section 53, entitled "Folly of the wise"

"In his limitless and and implacable demands the petty-bourgeois sticks his chest out, identifying himself with a power he does not have, outdoing it in his arrogance to the point of absolute spirit and absolute horror. Between the grandiose sublimity embracing the whole of humanity--a sublimity ever ready to trample inhumanely on anything small as mere existence--and the coarse ostentation of bourgeois men of violence, there is an intimate collusion. The dignity of spiritual giants is prone to hollow booming laughter, exploding, smashing. When they say Creation, they mean the compulsive will-power with which they puff themselves up and intimidate all questions: from the primacy of practical reason it was always only a step to hatred of theory. Such a dynamic inheres in all idealistic movements of thought...

"The attempt to deduce the world in words from a principle is the behaviour of someone who would like to usurp power instead of resisting it...The rose-scents of Elysium, much too voluble to be credited with the experience of a single rose, smell of the tobacco-smoke in a magistrate's office, and the soulful moon on the backdrop was fashioned after the miserable oil-lamp by whose meagre light the student swots for his exam. Weakness posing as strength betrayed the thought of the allegedly rising bourgeoisie to ideology, even when the class was thundering against tyranny. In the innermost reaches of humanism, as it's very soul, there rages a frantic prisoner who, as a Fascist, turns the world into a prison."

oh that teddy: he'll make ya laugh till you cry.

↑ Index

32. simon
Re: New book: The Grouper
Thu 2 Oct 1997

Not questioning relevancy to _The Grouper_ in particular, but, Mark Wallace (you're on this list, yes?) what do you mean by "language can only navigate edges of the irreducible instans of a life which words cannot finally know"? Or rather, "language can only navigate edges of the irreducible" to take it both out of context and out of constituency.

You mean that? In general?

beth simon

↑ Index

33. Mark Wallace
language poetry bashing
Thu 2 Oct 1997

I just wanted to sound a note of support for Fredrik Hertzberg's post yesterday in response to a new round of language poetry bashing that's been appearing on the list in the last couple days. I wish I had more time to engage in discussion on this subject right now, but thankfully Frderik's post seems a greatly thoughtful response.

A couple of years back I published a piece in POETIC BRIEFS called "On Language Poetry" bashing in which I tried to detail some of the reasons behind the excessive commonness of such bashing among poets younger than the language poets. Certainly it's not common ONLY among such poets, but it takes on certain specific inflections in that context.

Jeff Hansen, editor of POETIC BRIEFS, is lurking around this list somewhere, and may still have copies of that issue available. If I had more sophisticated e-mail equipment, I'd try to append the article here. As it is, I can only suggest that you might be interested in asking Jeff if he still has copies.

Sorry to be cryptic and under the reign of the clock.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

34. Mark Wallace

oops

Thu 2 Oct 1997

I may have confused everyone in my just sent post by giving the wrong title for my own essay, which should read "On Language Poetry Bashing."

A couple of people have pointed out to me that I get titles wrong pretty commonly. I have no defense, except to say that I seem to be following the golden rule here and treating others the way I treat myself...

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

35. David Bromige

no more language-bashing

Thu 2 Oct 1997

The List should know that there is no more Language-writing. Language-writing has been disconnected from the List in the larger sense. When Bob Dylan sang for the Pope, they agreed to excommunicate Language-writing. Language-writing, a local disturbance in NYC, the Bay Area, Vancouver, Seattle, Kent State, Cambridge, and Alabama,in the 1970s and early 80s, is now a memory (and whose?) in history books, & meanwhile a number of individuals who lived thru those times continue to write. But Language-writing has left the planet, the way Imagism left the planet (except for _Poetry (Chicago)_ & various "sunday-painting" clubs) by 1929. That Language-writing parrot is a dead parrot. That parrot has been transformed into its future molecules. And so it follows that, dead & gone, Language-writing cannot exist as an object of bashery. They dont want to go on about "the tensile strength of last winter's icicles". If a poem offend thee in the present, pluck it out. But look to thine own eye, that its mote not be bigger than a beam. In short, people will have to do something else with their Oedipal longings. Sorry to be the bearer of bad tidings. But please address the fact not the messenger. Thanks, David

↑ Index

36. henry g
Re: no more language-bashing
Thu 2 Oct 1997

They dont want to go >on about "the tensile strength of last winter's icicles". If a poem offend >thee in the present, pluck it out. But look to thine own eye, that its mote >not be bigger than a beam. In short, people will have to do something else >with their Oedipal longings. Sorry to be the bearer of bad tidings. But >please address the fact not the messenger. Thanks, David

And where is it written (for i'faith I forgetteth), much-bashed Brother David, "for their works follow after them"? Lo, for they followeth right into yon anthologies & such-like echo-chambers. Forsooth, truly, yon Providence School hath not been bashed so sorely - nor yon NY School. Is it becauseth the materiality of yon signifier hath not been fully macerated & spewed out of yon mouth at the Last Trump? "For by your words shall ye be judged... and whoever says 'you fool!' to his brother shall be liable to the Council". [By-laws of the Poetry Roundtable of the Chickasawga Rotary Club, 1976] - Brother Henry

↑ Index

37. Jack Foley
language poetry bashing -Reply
Thu 2 Oct 1997

For more, see "A=R=T M=E=A=N=S," by Joe Brennan, who is a poet but not younger-than ... at http://webdelsol.com/FLASHPOINT/artmeans.htm

-- JR Foley

>>> Mark Wallace <[redacted]> 10/02/97 02:34pm >>>
I just wanted to sound a note of support for Fredrik Hertzberg's post yesterday in response to a new round of language poetry bashing that's been appearing on the list in the last couple days. I wish I had more time to engage in discussion on this subject right now, but thankfully Frderik's post seems a greatly thoughtful response.

A couple of years back I published a piece in POETIC BRIEFS called "On Language Poetry" bashing in which I tried to detail some of the reasons behind the excessive commonness of such bashing among poets younger than the language poets. Certainly it's not common ONLY among such poets, but it takes on certain specific inflections in that context.

Jeff Hansen, editor of POETIC BRIEFS, is lurking around this list somewhere, and may still have copies of that issue available. If I had more sophisticated e-mail equipment, I'd try to append the article here. As it is, I can only suggest that you might be interested in asking Jeff if he still has copies.

Sorry to be cryptic and under the reign of the clock.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

38. acgold01
Quote of the Day
Thu 2 Oct 1997

My favorite line of the day, addressed to me by my e-mail program at the end of a message:

"Some of the words are too long to format."

As far as I recall, the longest word in the message was "Hejinian."

↑ Index

39. mark weiss
Re: language poetry bashing
Thu 2 Oct 1997

God, I love the sight of wagons being circled! I don't know what it is that gets to me, the dance-like sensuality of the movement into place or the form of the circle itself, the process or the result. I also love parades and brass bands.

At 03:34 PM 10/2/97 -0400, you wrote:
> I just wanted to sound a note of support for Fredrik Hertzberg's >post yesterday in response to a new round of language poetry bashing >that's been appearing on the list in the last couple days. I wish I had >more time to engage in discussion on this subject right now, but >thankfully Frderik's post seems a greatly thoughtful response.
>
> A couple of years back I published a piece in POETIC BRIEFS called >"On Language Poetry" bashing in which I tried to detail some of the >reasons behind the excessive commonness of such bashing among poets >younger than the language poets. Certainly it's not common ONLY among such >poets, but it takes on certain specific inflections in that context.

>
> Jeff Hansen, editor of POETIC BRIEFS, is lurking around this list >somewhere, and may still have copies of that issue available. If I had >more sophisticated e-mail equipment, I'd try to append the article here.
>As it is, I can only suggest that you might be interested in asking Jeff >if he still has copies.
>
> Sorry to be cryptic and under the reign of the clock.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
>
>/----------
--\
>|
 |
>| [redacted]
 |
>| GWU:
 |
>| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw
 |
>| EPC:
 |
>| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace
 |
>|_____
__|
>
>

↑ Index

40. Don Wellman

Re: language poetry bashing

Thu 2 Oct 1997

It seems to me that what is "irreducible" is desire, to echo a phrase in one of Mark Wallace’s recent postings; also that language poetry in its explorations of the constructedness of our (at least in the USA) all too common sense of being used, of our language being used-up, detached desire from it’s language forms —

Now no one can really live with that situation (to my view). I choose the word "desire" not to get preachy about something spiritual, transcendent, or other or "not" —simply in the hopes of addressing an array of palpable emotional facts. Hopefully those new to the excitements and difficulties of poetry, even graying poets and editors like myself, know that desire is irreducible, that desire is not satisfied by making of language itself some fetish object. I also believe that most language writing was perfectly clear concerning this felt dissonance (the difficulties, the limits of language). That agenda for addressing reality and social fact may have in some ways outlived its usefulness. Is language "irreducible"? Is desire "irreducible"? I am loathe to mask the facts of dissonance.I'd like to see the wagons circled around this priciple.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

41. Robin Tremblay-McGaw

Re: class & "innovative writing"

Thu 2 Oct 1997

Camille--

(As you know, I'm also mostly a lurker here.)

Interesting post. Some quick notes in response. Two things here: class as an issue underlying the practice of writing and how to address it, within the context of "innovative writing."

As someone pointed out to me recently (as I'm struggling with how to address class issues in a piece I'm at work on)--while there is a vocabulary for working with gender/sexuality issues in innovative writing, there is no such vocabulary for working with class issues, particularly in poetry.

Also the issue of having an intellectual life outside of the university. I don't have any answers but I'm very interested in the question! I think there is certainly difficulty there. Though I must say personally (and I'm outside of the University) I'm enjoying the intellectual stimulation of the list, of participating in Bob Gluck's workshop (which is inexpensive relative to Univ class), attending readings here at SPT and elsewhere in SF, reading journals etc and talking to some extent with other writers. Of course, this is in between working full time, being a mother, partner, etc. Bits & pieces.

Robin Tremblay-McGaw

At 11:05 AM 10/1/97 -0700, megan minka lola camille roy wrote:
>Hi all,
>I'm mostly a lurker on this list but the very interesting exchanges >on race/class of the past few days has provoked me out of my closet.

>
>Two things happened in the past few months that concerned me >and made me wonder if it would be possible >here in san francisco to have some sort of public forum (perhaps at >new langton arts, where I am one of two literary curators) on class >and "innovative writing" that would not degenerate into name calling.
>
>One was a discussion I fell into at a party with a "innovative" poet >who has been in the community here a long time. We were reflecting on >how things have changed over the last fifteen years with the decline >in arts funding. When I came to san francisco it was possible to have >a literary community that was very stimulating from the streets so to >speak. There were for example free workshops taught by Bob Gluck at >Small Press Traffic. Anyone could drop in. This provided me and others >with an invaluable opportunity to learn and read and talk etc etc.
>You could find a really smart community. NOW, however, you've got to >pay for that, through poetics programs, creative writing programs etc.
>One of the main reasons people go to those schools is to find a >stimulating literary community.
>
>So now, even more than before, the people who are fluent in the terms
>and theories of "innovative >poetics" are people who can afford to go into debt to the tune of >tens of thousands of dollars. This is weird, folks. I don't like it >at all.
>
>The other thing that happened that concerned me was a performance poet >(spoken word stuff) who protested some curatorial decisions at NLA on >the basis that we were curating an in group, something she though NLA >had always done.
>
>It's true and it's not true. We've perhaps been curating more queer, >minority, younger writers than in the past. That's something we're >interested in. But what is true is that we curate people who all have >sort of the art school type of literary education. It's like you >need that to get in the door, which means $$$. That slants and >distorts not only the resulting literary community but also >impoverishes the >relationship of the literary community to the wider community.
>
>

>I'm wondering how others have dealt with these problems and tensions, >specifically with relation to "innovative poetics".
>
>camille.
>
>

↑ Index

42. George Thompson
Re: language poetry bashing
Thu 2 Oct 1997

In response to Don Wellman's recent post:

[snip]

> Now no one can really live with that situation (to my view). I choose the word "desire" not to get preachy about something spiritual, transcendent, or other or "not" simply in the hopes of addressing an array of palpable emotional facts. Hopefully those new to the excitements and difficulties of poetry, even graying poets and editors like myself, know that desire is irreducible, that desire is not satisfied by making of language itself some fetish object.

[more snip]
>
Some people fetishize playboy pinups. Others fetishize the socks of blue-collar guys. Some people fetishize language. Others fetishize "desire". And so forth.

In all cases, the fetish works for you if it works for you.

And, as the Buddha knows, desire is not irreducible.

I think.

George Thompson

↑ Index

43. James Finnegan
Re: language poetry bashing
Thu 2 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-02 15:42:14 EDT, you write:

> A couple of years back I published a piece in POETIC BRIEFS called "On Language Poetry" bashing in which I tried to detail some of the reasons behind the excessive commonness of such bashing among poets younger than the language poets. Certainly it's not common ONLY among such > poets, but it takes on certain specific inflections in that context.

Seems to me over the years the language writers and their adherents have given as good as they got--wheeling out their big guns to bring down the walls of mainstream practice and stolid MFA program verse. When the shelling stops, that's when you should worry. (Sorry about the military metaphor, but it's the List's fault.) Then it's really over--lights out sayonara baby say goodbye--your movement is a footnote like Futurism. As for the youth, it's their biological duty to pull down the old statues.

Finnegan

↑ Index

44. David Bromige
Melissa Wolsak
Thu 2 Oct 1997

Fellow-Listers, I want to welcome to the List Mellisa Wolsak, whose _The Garcia Family Co-Mercy_ (Tsunami Editions, 1995) is one of the boldest & most challenging "first books" it's been my pleasure to encounter. She lives, lurks, & soon I hope, lists, in Vancouver, and is one of those unique light-me-up talents that gather around the Kootenay School of [extraordinary] Writing, a shifting site of poetic interaction (reading venue, workshop locus, social club) but also a mode of being. David

↑ Index

45. R. Gancie
Oh No! Not That Sokal Yokel
Thu 2 Oct 1997

I thought those interested in the Sokal opera might find this posting of interest. This article (partially posted below)first appeared in on-line mag, PostMortem. I also published a lengthy review of Gross' and Levitt's Higher Superstition in British print mag, Science As Culture, late last year. The latter is more pertinent to the current discussion but I can't transmit it because I don't have a copy in any form.---Carlo Parcelli. P.S. Don't count Adorno and the Frankfurt school out as regards the above topic.e.g. Dialectic of Enlightenment.

"Science smiling into its beard, or first full-dress encounter with evil"
by Carlo Parcelli

"[H]ighmindedness is the mark of every professional ideology. Hunters for instance would never dream of calling themselves butchers of the woods; they prefer to call themselves the real friends of animals and Nature, just as business men uphold the principle of fair profit, and the god that thieves also take for their own is the business men's god, that distinguished promoter of international concord, Mercury. So not much importance need be attached to the way an activity is mirrored in the consciousness of those who practice it."(from Robert Musil's The Man Without Qualities, chapter 72)

Robert Musil, in his monumental novel about pre-Anschluss Vienna entitled The Man Without Qualities, addresses often and profoundly social and epistemological questions arising from applications of science and technology acceleratingly evident in pre-World War I Europe.
Chapter 72 contains some of the most succinct expressions of Musil's concerns. The first paragraph of the chapter which is sardonically entitled Science Smiling Into Its Beard, Or First Full-Dress Encounter With Evil reads thus:

A few words must now be said about a smile, a masculine smile at that,
with a beard attached to it, whereby the general activity of smiling in one's sleeve was transposed into the masculine one of smiling into one's beard. It was the smiling men of science and learning who had accepted Diotoma's invitation and were listening to the celebrated men of the arts.

Although they smiled, it must on no account be believed that they did so ironically. On the contrary, it was their way of expressing homage and incompetence, a matter that has already been mentioned. But one must not let oneself be deceived by that either. It was true enough where their conscious mind was concerned; yet in their sub-conscious-to make use of this customary word-or, to put it more exactly, in the sum total of their being, they were people in whom a propensity to Evil crackled like the fire under a cauldron.

I was reminded of this passage in Musil's work when I encountered
Steven Weinberg's piece, Sokal's Hoax, in the August 8 New York Review. In his first paragraph, Weinberg strikes the very tone, smile included, that Musil alludes to:

Like many other scientists, I was amused when I heard about the prank played by NYU mathematical physicist Alan Sokal, who late in 1994 submitted a sham article to the culture studies journal Social Text.

A couple of friends of mine brought me a copy of Weinberg's article cautioning me that it would "get my hackles up." Actually, it did nothing of the sort. Even though Weinberg points up the pitfalls of applying interpretation to mathematically defined phenomena by ridiculing aspects of the writings of culture theorists, his piece contained eight caveats concerning the limits of science which dovetail quite nicely with my own concerns. In fact, I was startled to find Weinberg making a number of the same points which I made in a book review of Higher

Superstition by Paul R. Gross and Norman Levitt published in a recent issue of Science As Culture. It would be delusional of me to think that a scientific eminence like Steven Weinberg would read anything I wrote much less consider cautionary any insights that I might provide. I therefore must conclude that Weinberg's caveats that strip the power from his own piece and form the foundation of mine have a certain pan-cultural quality that transcends educational, economic and doctrinal castes. Following are the eight alarms that Weinberg and I would like to sound:

1) Weinberg dissociates his argument from technological applications. He states:

Those who seek extrascientific messages in what they think they understand about modern physics are digging dry wells, In my view, with two large exceptions, the results of research into physics (as opposed, say, to psychology) have no legitimate implications for culture or politics or philosophy. (I am not talking here about the technological applications of physics, which of course do have a huge effect on our culture,...) (my italics)

I assume that one would exclude science's "extrascientific messages" in which scientists, CEO's and journalists proselytize for the inherently and ineluctably progressive nature of science or the justification of "pure" scientific research on the grounds that often unpredictable yet beneficial technologies accrue as 'spinoffs'. In short, how do "purely scientific discoveries" achieve ahistorical status; in other words how do phenomena, universalized, quantified or otherwise shed their historicity?

2) The second part of Weinberg's quote above contains caveat number two:

...or about [physic's] use as metaphor, but about the direct logical implications of purely scientific discoveries themselves.)

But science writing itself because of the mathematization and quantification of phenomena resorts to metaphor to communicate only contingently the "purely scientific." This is not to fault all science writing but when language as opposed to mathematical expression is used to describe physical phenomena then the limited tools of language including metaphor impose their conditions on expression and communication.
Weinberg's phrase, "logical implications", is an attempt to fuse the ineluctable element perceived in science e.g. its discrete logic with the historical and hermeneutical change that it is often required to undergo leading to the pliable and breachable skin of "implications."

Though I have no beard to smile through, I was amused (and not surprised) to read in Higher Superstition that the authors held the philosophical movement, Logical Positivism, in high regard specifically the work of A.J. Ayer. Although this form of positivism's connection to physics is based primarily on personal temperament one understands Gross' and Levitt's affection for it because it, like mathematical equations in their ideal state, is simple and tidy---actually anal. In this manner, the Vienna Circle even mistook Wittgenstein's anality for their own. But more than that, Gross and Levitt are attracted to Logical Positivism's comprehensibility. It is akin to poetasters who sing the praises of A.E. Houseman, Robert Service, Edgar Lee Masters and Robert Frost while finding Charles Olson, Ezra Pound, David Jones or even T.S. Eliot gratuitously difficult. Often it is difficult for scientists more than other people to see their personal limitations expressed in seemingly objective choices and connections because as Musil puts it:

...[A]fter all [science] dominates us, not even an illiterate being safe from it, because he learns to live together with countless things that are born of science)

The world more and more conforms to the conditions of science so we tend to forget that the world itself is not scientific.

3)Which leads to caveat three. Weinberg admits that science is inherently hegemonic. If we are to accept "purely scientific discoveries" as "objective" and "unbiased" then the implication is that they are also benign in the sense that they are not "discovered" with any agenda in mind. You can see how difficult it is to separate the notion of an aparticular scientific moment from its intention. According to Weinberg and others in the scientific community no generalization can be made about the intention of science nor will members of the scientific community suffer any criticism of sciences special relationship with 'reality.' There is indeed a paternalistic if not a posture of false omniscience behind such insistence upon immunity from criticism that is hard to reconcile with the alleged compelling nature of the argument for "a one-to-one correspondence" between scientific explanation and objective reality and its continuing failure by force of argument to compel conformity rather than contrary interpretation.

4)Weinberg's fourth caveat is related to the first three. He writes:

The other, more important exception to my statement is the profound cultural effect of the discovery, going back to Newton, that nature is strictly governed by impersonal mathematical laws. Of course, it still remains for us to get the laws right, and to understand their range of validity; but as far as culture and philosophy are concerned the difference between Newton's and Einstein's theories of gravitation or between classical and quantum mechanics is immaterial.

Then comes Weinberg's caveat:

There is a good deal of confusion about this, because quantum mechanics can seem eerie if described in ordinary language.

First note, in the first part of the quoted material above that physical theory is provided with ineluctable 'position' because it is expressed through laws and yet outfitted with the 'momentum' of time by the very mutability of these laws as scientists wiggle "to get the laws right." It simply remains for scientists to declare that science is cumulative and that in the "effort to get laws right" they will not broach any fundamental change. In short, five hundred years is apparently enough time to assert the immutability of scientific laws. Science has expanded our conceptions of time to something approximating the Hindus or Mayans. But our idea of the eternal does not rest with our actual experience of time but in our ability to abstract it.

When Weinberg says that "there is a good deal of confusion" as regards quantum theory and western standards of perception and expression, he is minimizing a problem that has engaged physicists, historians of science and philosophers of science since the inception of quantum. Weinberg himself is confined to ordinary language when he endeavors to communicate the tenets of quantum theory to people with a limited or non-existent mathematical background. Weinberg's popular books rely on standard methods of language expression including metaphor to communicate their points. In the realm of language, where quantum finds no adequate expression, the differences "between classical and quantum mechanics "is" not "immaterial." If language is inherently deceptive or insufficient for the task why does Weinberg write books or articles for that matter. The paradox reminds me of a chapter in a book by physicist Frijtof Capra called The Tao of Physics. The chapter is called Beyond Language yet is comprised of several thousand words.

Certainly given the success of his books which popularize various physical phenomena, Weinberg is not recommending that we adopt

Wittgenstein's famous tenet at the end of his Tractatus, "What we cannot speak about we must pass over in silence[?]" If so we can happily and gratefully look forward to no more popularizations of the natural world from Weinberg or his colleagues.

Here allow me to provide a counterpoint to Weinberg's 'pragmatic' position. Physicist and mathematician T. Bergstein in his book Quantum Physics and Ordinary Language came to this conclusion about the "eeriness" of the phenomena and its expression by expanding the "implications" of the physical term 'complementarity':

Through the selection of words and sentences it is possible for the mind to accentuate or weaken the complementary elements of communication in innumerable ways. The wide variety of different forms of knowledge embedded in language cannot ever be comprised by scientific description because the accentuation is necessarily fixed on the subject-object partition. An adequate description of human existence must be sought in the ordinary uses of language, in the humanistic sciences, and in poetry - not in natural science.

Poetry! We could start with Wallace Steven's poem The Pure Good Of Theory which would go far in pointing out to Weinberg many of the contradictions in his thought. Stevens writes:

. . . If we propose

a large-sculptured, platonic person, free from time,

And imagine for him the speech he cannot speak,

A form, then, protected from the battering, may

Mature: A capable being may replace

Dark horse and walker walking rapidly.

Felicity, ah! Time is the hooded enemy,

The inimical music, the enchantered space

in which the enchanted preludes have their place.

Unlike Weinberg (who could be that "large-sculptured, platonic person"), Stevens honestly addresses epistemological conundrums as they manifest themselves in the process of writing and possesses considerable philosophical tools with which to do so.

From the "humanistic sciences", I would propose Edmund Husserl, specifically his book, The Crisis of the European Sciences and Transcendental Phenomenology: Husserl writes:

Where is that huge piece of method subjected to critique and clarification [-that method] that leads from the intuitively given surrounding world to the idealization of mathematics and to the interpretation of these idealizations as objective being? Einstein's revolutionary innovations concern the formulae through which the idealized and naively objectified physis is dealt with. But how formula in general, how mathematical objectification in general, receive meaning on the foundation of life and intuitively given surrounding world-of this we learn nothing; and thus Einstein does not reform the space and time in which our vital life runs its course.

Weinberg might agree with Husserl above regarding the separation of "mathematical objectification" from cultural considerations. But Husserl demonstrates that the interchange between the mathematization of phenomena and the phenomena themselves occurs on a much more fundamental level and yet, in spite of this, only effects the cultural and societal shape of human existence and not its "vital life." People like Weinberg tend to confuse the hegemony of technology and retrograde considerations of its scientific origins with more fundamental changes, when in reality that hegemony is no more than a cultural condition amplified by its present historical currency.

Bergstein's "complementary elements" sound perilously like metaphor where a few elements are drawn together to illuminate the whole which is revealed as the template for metaphor's techne. The inability to describe scientifically e.g. mathematically "the wide variety of different forms of knowledge" e.g. experience presages the failures of the Strong Artificial Intelligence project. (Note the way A.I. advocates like Daniel Dennett have a propensity to set up artificial antagonists, straw adversaries, who are little more than 'thought experiments', whose counterpoints come from Dennett's own mind, which he then proceeds to defeat in argument though often he even fails to accomplish that.)

And lastly Bergstein says that "the illumination of human existence" should be left not to Weinberg, Sokal, Gross and Levitt but to those that they despise-philosophers, social theorists and even poets. Perhaps Bergstein had seen the smiling beard of Musil's "first full-dress encounter with evil" and decided that others with more altruistic impulses should be entrusted with interpreting paradoxes that scientists have heaped up and then largely ignored in favor of those discoveries which yield marketable technological results.

5) Caveat number five (which relates to caveat number four) comprised a major part of my review in Science as Culture. Weinberg's formulation reads thus:

I have to admit that physicists share responsibility for the widespread confusion about such matters. Sokal quotes some dreadful examples of Werner Heisenberg's philosophical wanderings...

Weinberg goes on to make this statement:

(Heisenberg was one the great physicists of the twentieth century, but he could not always be counted on to think carefully, as is shown by his technical mistakes in the German nuclear weapons program.)

But how does it follow that Heisenberg was a poor philosopher because he was a poor experimenter? It would seem that Heisenberg who was a supreme theoretician would likewise make for an imaginative and meticulous philosopher. Heisenberg's discussions with various philosophers, especially Neo-Kantians, rested on a reading and understanding of continental philosophy that is extremely rare among current American physicists. How can Weinberg or Sokal who seem to have no background in philosophy and have contributed far less

to theoretical physics judge Heisenberg's powers in these areas especially when they insist on expertise from people in other fields?

Weinberg goes on to criticize Louis de Broglie in the same vein. This is a bit ironic to this reader because in Higher Superstition, a book that Weinberg praises, its authors Gross and Levitt hold up de Broglie as a sensible extrapolater of physical concepts into philosophical discourse.
The overall subjectivity of the matter renders Weinberg's argument without merit. The hubris that comparative mediocrities like Weinberg and Sokal show toward other physicists and scientists who disagree or whose statements are disagreeable to their position but who demonstrate a superior knowledge and understanding in areas such as philosophy points to extrascientific intent and motive. Weinberg claims he is able to precipitate cultural conditions from the fundamental scientific understanding of phenomena. But again context wins out and Weinberg's caveats in the form of discrete categories blend in ways he seems not to have intended.

Weinberg creates his own paradox. His commonsense form of pseudophilosophical discourse relies heavily on his own pedestrian cultural and epistemological assumptions. He disagrees with Gross and Levitt on the merits of the philosophical arguments of Louis de Broglie precisely because arguments about physical phenomena couched in language, philosophical or otherwise , are wide open to interpretation. If Weinberg were to train for e.g. read with attention texts that would allow him to approach a desired set of discretions, he would run the risk as many of his colleagues have of challenging his own core assumptions.

Recently, I picked up Wolfgang Pauli's The Influence of Archetypal Ideas On the Scientific Theories of Kepler which explains Kepler's discoveries both in their historical perspective and with a Jungian tinge.
We must assume that Weinberg et al would reject and ridicule Wolfgang Pauli as they do Heisenberg, Prigogine and de Broglie and the thousands of other scientists and mathematicians that have endeavored to use language based tools to explicate physical phenomena and its implications. What scientist or mathematician who is more than a technician has not speculated in this manner including John von Neumann who, though as reactionary as the creator makes us, came through the constraints of logical discourse, to a faux Buddhist interpretation concerning the problems surrounding conceptual expression and quantum complementarity.

Actually a more illuminating piece concerning this dimension of alleged scientific culpability appeared in the Book World section of the Washington Post for August, 11. Robert L. Park, a professor of physics at the University of Maryland, reviewed John Horgan's recent book, The End of Science. At the end of the review, in which Horgan caricatures

Weinberg as "a tough minded rationalist", Park writes this:

But Horgan ends with the fuzzy, feel-good silliness of Frank Tipler, who concluded in the Physics of Immortality that at a distant point in time we will be resurrected as computers. It is naive ironic science gone mad.

I pointedly criticized Tipler's book in an earlier PostMortem concerning the Mary Lefkowitz flap as well as in my review in Science as Culture.
Tipler's book is indeed an intellectual cowpie but it is not the exception in science writing.

Park concludes his review with this revelation:

By the time the shuttle got me to my rental car, I realized that ending with Tipler was a metaphor. This, Horgan is warning us, is where science is headed. Everyone will be free to choose the theory that suits them.
Without empiricism to keep the score, one ironic science is as good as another. Science has manned the battlements against the postmodern heresy that there is no objective truth, only to discover postmodernism inside the wall.

This statement would make Frank Tipler jump out of his skin.
Postmodernists would find its naivete amusing possibly responding with a volley of laughs and guffaws through their own beards. Park is asking for the impossible. He wants the logic of mathematical science to again reflect the rational that finds its expression in everyday experience. Park wants quantum to yield to everyday language and not to the inexorable mathematical logic of Frank Tipler's computer extrapolated equations which far from demonstrating theoretical relativism are actually a working paper for those doing research in Strong Artificial Intelligence, fifth generation computers and the like. (The second half of the book is a veritable catechism of the current canon of mathematical physics.)

Empiricism 'keeps score' at present only through its technological application. And if you recall, Weinberg in his review said his argument rejected the "technological applications of physics, which of course do have a huge effect on our culture".

6) Caveat 6. Weinberg admits that he cannot prove the existence of objective reality. Frankly, I don't know why he brings it up. Sokal and Gross and Levitt also do but, even though John von Neumann and certain Buddhist sects have struggled with the question of objective reality, it has never been an issue with the philosophers and social theorists that Weinberg et al attack. If they would read Wittgenstein's Remarks on the Foundations of Mathematics they would understand why they misunderstand deconstructionists and social theorists. But anyway as regards "objective realty" Weinberg writes:

...[T]he languages in which we describe rocks or in which we state physical laws are certainly created socially, so I am making an implicit assumption...that our statements about the laws of physics are in one-to-one correspondence with aspects of objective reality. To put it another way, if we ever discover intelligent creatures on some distant planet and translate their scientific works, we will find that we and they have discovered the same laws.

'We' and 'they' have not even discovered the same laws here on earth.
Many of the 'they', which comprise the majority of humanity, were coerced and brutalized into accepting our laws. Ask 'them.' Many now embrace the technological fruits of western scientific legalism; but few outside of those who have themselves become scientists understand or accept the philosophical catechism of 'objective reality' that has formed around the empirical method. Many people in sciences core culture reject the materialist implications of science. These indeed are cultural questions which cannot be wholly attributed to ignorance of the empirical sciences.
If Weinberg's adolescent fantasy were to come to pass, no doubt "intelligent creatures on some distant planet" will 'discover' our 'objective reality' at the point of whatever state of the art sword human science has forged for their powerful handlers.

But in these matters Weinberg insists on demonstrating his chauvinism and bigotry. He writes:

Sarah Franklin...challenges an argument of Richard Dawkins that in relying on the working of airplanes we show our acceptance of the working of the laws of nature, remarking that some airlines show prayer films during takeoff to invoke the aid of Allah to remain safely airborne.

Does Franklin think that Dawkin's argument does not apply to her? If so would she be willing to give up the use of the laws of physics in designing aircraft, and rely on prayers instead?

First, no Weinberg, Dawkins argument does not apply to Franklin when you take into account the likelihood that Franklin is not Muslim. Secondly, does Weinberg plan to get to the afterlife in an airplane or is an airplane, as Muslims and many of the rest of us percieve, a potential undesirable means to that end?

And translation is not a scientifically objective activity any more than relating our perceptions is. As Pauli, Hansen, Husserl, Adorno and Feyerabend (among many other physicists, philosophers etc.) have pointed out it is the mathematization of the process that has provided the "one-to-one correspondence" that by Weinberg's own admission require his "implicit assumption." (Read comment on Dennett above) Weinberg's argument is circular but that doesn't mean it is wrong. It simply means given the meager abilities of Weinberg to argue his case, he can speak of nothing that would help us know for certain whether he is right or wrong. But is the inability to effectively bring closure to the problem he addresses due to Weinberg's lack of philosophical acumen; or are the epistemological tools at his disposal fundamentally inadequate for the task?

(The remainder of this article can be found at PostMortem http://www.geocities.com/CapitolHill/1848/)

↑ Index

46. Susan Wheeler

Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Sep 1997 to 1 Oct 1997

Thu 2 Oct 1997

>----------
>
>Date: Wed, 1 Oct 1997 12:50:37 -0700
>From: Aldon Nielsen <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: That was no gentleman, that was a shrinking violet
>
>would have been in on this Stein conversation earlier, but I now have no >access to email from home (hope to change that in the coming months) -- so >only see my mail a few times per week --
>
>yes, _Reading Race_ contains a now somewhat outdated discussion of >_Melanctha_ -- the publisher is U of Georgia Press,,,,, and I can make a >shady postal deal with anybody who can't find the volume nearby --
>
>BUT
>
>among the more recent relevant publications is the Fall 1996 issue of >Modern Fiction Studies devoted to Stein ,, which contains, along with much >else worthy of note, Lorna Smedman's article on Stein and racialized language

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

47. Tom Beard

Re: "Yokel"

Fri 3 Oct 1997

So, Weinberg and the other scientists and science writers that the article mentions are, or display the qualities of:

evil anal poetasters paternalistic false omniscience failures hubris mediocrities pedestrian adolescent chauvinism bigotry meager.

Well, I'm glad to see that cultural theorists are, unlike those nasty scientists, above resorting to smug ad hominem arguments.

Tom Beard, BSc DipAppSci (Oh! The shame!)

↑ Index

48. Tom Beard
Yokels
Fri 3 Oct 1997

Now that I've let off some steam, perhaps I should make some more measured replies to the points raised by the article.

> An adequate description of human existence must be > sought in the ordinary uses of language, in the humanistic sciences, and > in poetry - not in natural science.

Why is the author resorting to such binarism? I have certainly found the works of Wallace Stevens, Michele Leggott, Denis Diderot and Milan Kundera to provide vital steps towards forming, for me, an "illumination of human existence", but so have the works of Richard Dawkins, Alan Turing, Sophie Germain and Edward Lorenz. We are human, and thus succumb to desire, acculturation and oppression; but we also succumb to viruses, neurochemical imbalances and gravity.

> And lastly Bergstein says that "the illumination of human > existence" should be left not to Weinberg, Sokal, Gross and Levitt but > to those that they despise - philosophers, social theorists and even poets.

It's not clear to me from the quotes in the article, or from Weinberg's other writings, that they do despise philosophers or poets. Or do Ayer and Popper not count as philosophers, perhaps because they are guilty of comprehensibility?

I think the author misreads Weinberg's statements in the following passage:

> if we ever discover intelligent creatures on some > distant planet and translate their scientific works, we will find that > we and they have discovered the same laws.

Parcelli's response ("'We' and 'they' have not even discovered the same laws here on earth. Many of the 'they', which comprise the majority of humanity, were coerced and brutalized into accepting our laws.") seems to disregard that Weinberg writes specifically of "scientific works", not of belief systems in general. Thus, while many different cultures and religions have widely differing explanations or narratives of the world, Weinberg is saying that any group which follows what might broadly be termed "scientific" principles (such as falsifiability, a combination of analysis and synthesis etc) might be expected to find similar theories. Science is thus regarded as useful because it is consistent.

Finally, the title of the post is strangely consistent with a belief that used to be traditional among the arts and humanities (one that is in opposition to the usual critique of science's relation to socioeconomic structures): that the arts are the proper domain of the aristocrats, whereas science is better left to the "yokels".

Tom "smiling into his" Beard

↑ Index

49. George Bowering

Re: no more language-bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

Oh no! Can Bromige be right that Imagism is gone? Oh no! I just spent the last 12 months writing 3400 Imagist poems. Now what am I going to do? Does anyone want to trade me a Bill Berkson book for 3400 Imagist poems?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

50. Mark Prejsnar

Re: language poetry bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Thu, 2 Oct 1997, Don Wellman wrote:

> felt dissonance (the difficulties, the limits of language). That agenda for addressing reality and social fact may have in some ways outlived its usefulness. Is language "irreducible"? Is desire "irreducible"? I am loathe to mask the facts of dissonance.I'd like to see the wagons circled around this priciple.

> Don Wellman

Very vague, but not bad. Blakean, in fact. In general I have great respect for the work of Bromige, Gould and others on this list; sometimes I wish I could filter 'em out though when the main point of their posts is to trivialize and dismiss issues that are actually about poetix. Their responses to Mark Wallaces small screed being a case in point.

Seems to me that the work done under the LangPo rubric is one of a large number of useful, helpful, pattern-breaking tendencies in poetry in the US in the last 30 years. Defensiveness toward it seems to be mostly (as Perelman and others have suggested) a kind of furious very-US hatred of groups, of the building of collective identities...

Thanx to Don Wellman for at least addressing the issue a bit...I don't agree with him that langpo is an "agenda" that has outlived its usefulness...Actually, to the main actors in the group that is probably what it is..To the poetry scene in general it seems to me to be mostly a helpful example of serious and unafraid attention to writing.

Mark P.
atlanta

↑ Index

51. Maria Damon
Re: Quote of the Day
Fri 3 Oct 1997

At 5:14 PM -0400 10/2/97, [redacted] wrote:
>My favorite line of the day, addressed to me by my e-mail program at the >end of a message:
>
>"Some of the words are too long to format."
>
>As far as I recall, the longest word in the message was "Hejinian."

sounds like the students i used to get (not any more, they've gotten more sophisticated).

↑ Index

52. Miles Champion
Ron Silliman's Ketjak & The Age of Huts
Fri 3 Oct 1997

Dear List--

Apologies in advance for troubling everyone with this query, but if anyone could give me any (back-channel) advice or suggestions as to where I might look for, or be able to get hold of, Ron Silliman's _Ketjak_ &/or _The Age of Huts_, I'd be very grateful. Thanks.

--Miles

↑ Index

53. henryg
Re: language poetry bashing
Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Fri, 3 Oct 1997 09:13:19 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>
>Very vague, but not bad. Blakean, in fact. In general I have great >respect for the work of Bromige, Gould and others on this list; sometimes
>I wish I could filter 'em out though when the main point of their posts is >to trivialize and dismiss issues that are actually about poetix. Their >responses to Mark Wallaces small screed being a case in point.

Mark, you're right, the silly antics often crowd out the direct treatment of the thing, the discussion. But I don't think the main point of either DB's or my recent posts on this subject was to trivialize it. Sometimes you have to read through the flippy parabolicness, but both of us, I think DB will agree regarding his own, were actually saying something in particular about the issue raised. Not trying to make a joke of it or dismiss anything. Mark Wallace's attempt to criticize the critics by referring obliquely to statements made or written elsewhere & muttering "language poetry bashing" is certainly just as parabolic an attempt to steer the conversation - or more so - as DB's or HG's. All power to him, it's certainly a phenomenon, I guess - & we have had this discussion before, about culprits (like that guy Blarnes) spouting "langpo" as a murky shorthand for unexplored "trends". But harping on poor little langpo & its meanies sort of avoids various antagonisms/questions. (probably with good reason - we don't need another mini culture war in the poetwy school swamp, thank you very much Mr. Blarnes). I was going to be quiet today, & I promise, poor blind poetics listers, to shut up for the next three days unless something really important comes up. - Henry Gould the evil keyboard squid

↑ Index

54. David R. Israel
what the Buddha knows
Fri 3 Oct 1997

[was, Re: language poetry bashing]

quoth George Thompson:

> And, as the Buddha knows, desire is not irreducible.

incidentally, a friend connected w/ Shambhala tells me that the word on the street is, both Time & Newsweel magazines are planning big cover-stories about Buddhism -- that Time's should be out next week (and the editors there were trying to decide whether Brad Pitt or the Dalai Lama should appear on the cover); said friend also quoted someone to the effect that "when it's reported in Time & Newsweek, that means it [a movement] is over" albeit news of Buddhism's implied demise is likely exaggerated in the instance . . .

Come to think of it, my (newly printed) copy of Seven Years in Tibet claims (on the 1st page you open to -- what amounts to an eponymous movie advert): "The Adventure Begins October 8"

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

goes...). The few comments since have tended to be of the short and dissing kind. I agree that the LangPo bashing does seem to come from a typically US stance on schools and ideas as such. But to see LangPo merely as a blip on the radar screen of late twentieth century postmodernist politics is to miss exciting work, to wave away with both hands those still writing that way, and to miss still more possibilities. And I don't think that I have missed the point of David's post of yesterday with its, "there is no more language writing." It's nothing more than a name (and a general one at that which a few even extend to include all poetry). This has been a weak discussion of LangPo the movement, and not about "language writing." In that case, perhaps LangPo could be discussed in the context of postmodernism, and whether that exists any longer, or where the hell we are right now (oh no! Not another end-of-century discussion).

Since we are discussing movements and other poetic phenomena, I offer up as an example the French surrealists where the decidedly doctrinaire position of Breton helped that school to an early(?) demise, one that it would have nevertheless had even if not for his overbearing. Consider the surrealism bashing that we have seen over the last four decades in which "neo-surrealism" has been under attack. I don't know about any Oedipal longings (He is dead and gone, Lady), but what has happened appears more phoenix-like than anything else; the non-school of I can improve upon this work (action over and against the longings for originality, or "newness" never realized) referred to as received form by many. For me, the best surrealist writing has been seen after WWII in this country and in others. Just an example.

Best,

BB

↑ Index

56. William Burmeister Prod

Re: language poetry bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Oct 3, 10:17am, henryg wrote:
> Subject: Re: language poetry bashing
> On Fri, 3 Oct 1997 09:13:19 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
> >
> >Very vague, but not bad. Blakean, in fact. In general I have great > >respect for the work of Bromige, Gould and others on this list; sometimes
> >I wish I could filter 'em out though when the main point of their posts is > >to trivialize and dismiss issues that are actually about poetix. Their > >responses to Mark Wallaces small screed being a case in point.
>

> Mark, you're right, the silly antics often crowd out the > direct treatment of the thing, the discussion. But I don't think the main > point of either DB's or my recent posts on this subject was to > trivialize it. Sometimes you have to read through the flippy parabolicness, > but both of us, I think DB will agree regarding his own, were actually > saying something in particular about the issue raised. Not trying > to make a joke of it or dismiss anything. Mark Wallace's > attempt to criticize the critics by referring obliquely to statements > made or written elsewhere & muttering "language poetry bashing" is > certainly just as parabolic an attempt to steer the conversation
> - or more so - as DB's or HG's. All power to him, it's certainly a > phenomenon, I guess - & we have had this discussion before, about > culprits (like that guy Blarnes) spouting "langpo" as a murky shorthand > for unexplored "trends". But harping on poor little langpo & its > meanies sort of avoids various antagonisms/questions. (probably with > good reason - we don't need another mini culture war in the poetwy > school swamp, thank you very much Mr. Blarnes). I was going to be > quiet today, & I promise, poor blind poetics listers, to shut up > for the next three days unless something really important comes up.
> - Henry Gould the evil keyboard squid
>-- End of excerpt from henryg

Sorry Henry, but didn't see this until after I sent my last (the one from thread escalation central you know). My mail server license has been on&off all morning. Did note the attempt to swerve in some of the latest posts on this bashing thing, antics notwithstanding.

Best (go back to sleep now Eric B.),

BB

↑ Index

57. Aldon Nielsen

Re: no more language-bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

If David Bromige thinks we should let the mere matter of the non-existence of a phenomenon interfere with our bashing of same, he's got several more thinks coming. (Was, at it happens, just thinking of him.) Let me adduce here the final sentences of the entry on "nothing" in the Encyclopedia of Philosophy, where Peter heath remarks:

"If nothing whatsoever existed, there would be no problem and no answer, and the anxieties even of existential philosophers would be permanently laid to rest. Since they are not, there is evidently _nothing to worry about_. But that itself should be enough to keep an existentialist happy. Unless the solution be, as some have suspected, that it is not nothing that has been worrying them, but they who have been worrying it."

and, after all, isn't disappearing from the world exactly the kind of thing a language writer would do to attract attention from those theory-ridden critics who would far rather write about a poetry they would never, could never, read?

Or as Mark wallace might put it, that never happened, and besides, I wasn't there.

↑ Index

58. Michael Coffey
Re: language poetry bashing -Reply
Fri 3 Oct 1997

---

this is just a general musing on all that has gone on referenced to language poetry bashing...

it seems to me that this topic has brought to the surface a very recognizable reflex with respect to OUR poetry, a territorialness, a conviction that a certain kind of work, and the authors of that certain kind of work, which and who happen to represent the kind of poetics that [the correspondent] thinks is most worthwhile, are to be championed, and most decidedly at the expense of not only people and work that do not fit into the categories of OUR work, OUR writers, and but (even more dramatically) at the expense of critics who have not appropriately valued the work and workers of OUR poetry.

Now, I ask of us, what is at stake here? Is there some extra-poetical, extra-careerist, extra-ordinary value, social, political, personal, that can accrue in a world where the disposition toward OUR kind of poetry is different? To what extent is the world as constituted the way it is BECAUSE of the position of OUR kind of poetry? Is OUR world of poetry a world of love or of voters or of socialists or of healers or is it the world that we know?

What is being defended, and what attacked here? Again, what is at stake? It seems to me sometimes that we have imagined it all, imagined the enemy, imagined our purity, in order to give meaning to OUR activities. We have demonized those who have not gotten around to OUR kind of work or our kinds of poets (enuf with the upper case), or who have, but don't find it interesting or moving or to be throwing light on something they see as a tradition or a tradition of innovation.

I mean, so what? Sometimes, the list's constant trotting out of loyalty oaths reminds me of a marxist group i was once part of, wherein even the most informal of communiques had to go out of their way to assert so-and-so's working-class parents or mill-town origins or farmhouse life.

I also mean: who is really threatening us? And who are we a threat to? It's just poetry and this list a group of people for the most part interested in poetry. And some see poetry as doing political work and some see it as doing psychological work and some as even social work. We have room for Creeley and Weiner and Palmer and Coolige and younger folks and men and women and people of "color," like there are people of "no color," and that's enough for me.

I think often we doth protest too much, hide behind arcane insults, micturate (I happen to like arcaneness) upon the "enemy" (ted hughes still steaming, wasn't wystan hughes wettted here, jorie graham), rather than talk on occasion about what it is that make Hannah's work work when it does, and what that means, or about lauterbach's new book, or jackson's 75th, etc.

I have this sense, as someone reading on the list most everyday and often too uncertain to reply, that the list is chockablock with people who are absolutely and elegantly in possession of their own moral/political/intellectual inviolability who are then (understandably) offended that bob dylan played for the Pope (and not them).

Or maybe the week has just been too long. But i wonder if anyone else out there senses what i sense and, although very interested in the list as a site of importance, is embarrassed by the frequent mutual valuations that go on, the partisan shots at the unrepresented, the desperate assertions of mattering.

↑ Index

59. aerialedge

an attempt

Fri 3 Oct 1997

Discussing language poetry at times a bit like trying to discuss the middle east. Shit flies, nothing gets said. So-- an attempt to say something. First let's take a chance & say that language poetry does in fact exist. It is not merely, at this time, a historical phenomena but a set of possibilities -- a risk w/ a lot of nouns in the way. A friendly roadblock, a fortunate detour. I.e. & surprise surprise, it is not what it was. The "original practitioners" (geeze) have variously moved into, sometimes on to, new phases of their writing & otherwise lives but the reception of their work, understandably, is still characterized by misunderstanding relative to a volatile (& for many, desparate) emotional/political/intellectual climate. What the hell is he talking about?

Language poetry arose, mainly, on the heals of &/or in the midst of two conflicts: Vietnam & the New American Poetry (no, that's not an equation, dolt).

The media & events convinced everyone "the sixties had failed." Yes, it's becoming a story. Any case, to avoid reducing Grenier's "I Hate Speech" & other "seminal" critiques of previous poetries to an oedipal stance there was in the seventies what Tina Darragh has called "a turning to language." In other words, a search for a structural critique-- & they found it, in Structuralism, the Frankfurt School, & in Post-Structuralism-- all of which were effected by the sixties as well hmm. Bernstein's piece on Baudrillard's _The Mirror of Production_ an excellent exemplar. So I characterized the New American Poetry above as a conflict. The degree to which that is true wld be clear to anyone familiar w/ the truly varied approaches of those writers, & one can, without partaking of jargon, call these differences ideological. Any case, to fast fwd.-- what is lacking in ALL the language poetry bashing I've encountered is a successful attempt to recontextualize the possibilities still inherent in Spicer, Olson, O'Hara, etc. relative to language poetry-- one ground for this might be to question the equation Adorno & others make of humanism w/ fascism. Apollo/Dionysis w/out the clouds? What is at stake is an understanding of human nature right? At this point I don't think that's been acheived, period.

So some of the possibilities still inherent in newamerpo--1. An insistent & unsimplistic valuing of the individual, ala Ginsberg, or, very different, Cage-- warning, you have to be brilliant or you'll be really boring. 2. An understanding of self as performative rather than unified-- repeat above warning. Third, & perhaps most interesting to me, a demonstration of the ways in which language/ new american poetics are a continuum, each implying & partaking of the other.

None of these possibilities exclude another, & certainly there are more, just as there are more possibilities w/in the techniques that are more often identified w/ language poetry. In any case, whatever one does, no jury will come back on these questions any time soon, & actually, it's pretty unlikely one will be appointed.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

60. henry oh oh

Re: an attempt

Fri 3 Oct 1997

---

speaking humbly, remorsefully, mea culpably, & out of linedly (as one who really & truly on the night Bob Dylan played in Baloney for the Pope had a very intense dream I was in NY in a crowd listening to Bob Dylan as an old man playing Times they are a'changin & woke up to find Bob Dylan had not played for me but was on the cover of the Times Baloney section) - to your point about the continuum between nudamurican & langpoo - would you agree that one link between these kinds of poetry is a sort of autonomy or distancing - emphasized by what you say the performative or play aspect of it all - that there is a circle drawn around it, there is not going to be a simple realism - you are going to have to enjoy it for what it is & it's not going to help you with your life or solve the world's problems except as it is - for me this is reflected especially clearly in the "NY school" types - Teddy Bearigan & the St. Marks home away from home - whereas the langpoos were more interested in theory - but there is, as you say, this link, this stretch-of-paw, shall we say, between the Teddy Bears & the Lang Poohs -

& when we're all done telling Henry the history of the late past THEN we can MAYBE talk about current books - goodby all I set you free I'm returning to my igloo for the weekend - - Polar Chicken

↑ Index

61. James Finnegan
Re: language poetry bashing
Fri 3 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-03 13:10:50 EDT, you write:

> For me, the best surrealist writing has been seen after WWII in this country and in others. Just an example.

BB,

Who are thinking of? I know a number of poets who employ surrealist technique or have written, in varying ways, surrealist poems--but none come to mind who are solely surrealist.

Finnegan

↑ Index

62. henry oh oh
Re: language poetry bashing
Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Fri, 3 Oct 1997 14:33:14 -0400 William Burmeister Prod said:
>
>Sorry Henry, but didn't see this until after I sent my last (the one from >morning. Did note the attempt to swerve in some of the latest posts on this >bashing thing, antics notwithstanding.
>
>Best (go back to sleep now Eric B.),
>
>BB

- take it from me, BB (Big Bear?) - NEVER apologize. Especially when you're right.
- Grand Poobah (Grand Poobahs never apologize & they're NEVER right!)

↑ Index

63. William Burmeister Prod

Re: language poetry bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Oct 3, 3:33pm, James Finnegan wrote:
> Subject: Re: language poetry bashing
> In a message dated 97-10-03 13:10:50 EDT, you write:
>
> >For me, the best surrealist writing has been seen after > >WWII in this country and in others. Just an example.
>
> BB,
>
> Who are thinking of? I know a number of poets who employ > surrealist technique or have written, in varying ways, surrealist > poems--but none come to mind who are solely surrealist.
>
> Finnegan
>-- End of excerpt from James Finnegan

No, none come to my mind either (other than maybe Philip Lamantia in the 50s). I'm sure it is intentional that those who employ(-ed) surrealist technique did not wish to be considered Solely surrealist per se. Of course we all know of many who employ(-ed) technique such as Ashberry, Yau, J.Tate, Simic, Char, etc. In this context, I suspect "surrealist" is being used as label for a poet. I meant to label the writing itself as surrealist (shd. be surrealistic).

BB

↑ Index

64. Aviva Vogel

Re: language poetry bashing

Fri 3 Oct 1997

Yes, Mark P. from Atlanta! I like that statement!

↑ Index

65. Aviva Vogel
Re: Quote of the Day
Fri 3 Oct 1997

(He)-he-he! That's funny! (Ji') know what I mean? I(n) my language, that (i)s (an)awfully amusing story.

↑ Index

66. Aviva Vogel
Re: language poetry bashing
Fri 3 Oct 1997

> example the French surrealists where the decidedly doctrinaire position of Breton helped that school to an early(?) demise,

I'd be curious to know what you know about his "doctrinaire" position; I don't have access to info right now, but am very interested.

>For me, the best surrealist writing has been seen after WWII in this country and in >others.

Which poets would you include as having written some of the best surrealist work?

Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

67. Aviva Vogel
Re: language poetry bashing -Reply
Fri 3 Oct 1997

Yes, partisanship is a bore...especially when no new information or alternatives are offerered in the presumptious rejections of that which is "not a part." I'd rather get into some real discussions about langpo, or someone's alternative proposals, on a concrete, illustrative level. Facile judgements really are a bore.

↑ Index

68. William Burmeister Prod
Re: language poetry bashing
Fri 3 Oct 1997

On Oct 3, 6:21pm, Aviva Vogel wrote:
> Subject: Re: language poetry bashing > > example the French surrealists where the decidedly doctrinaire position of > > Breton helped that school to an early(?) demise,
>

> I'd be curious to know what you know about his "doctrinaire" position; I > don't have access to info right now, but am very interested.
>
> >For me, the best surrealist writing has been seen after WWII in this > country and in >others.
>
> Which poets would you include as having written some of the best surrealist > work?
>
> Thanks, Aviva
>-- End of excerpt from Aviva Vogel

In order to do justice to your question, that would be a long reply! In short, Breton had little tolerance for what he considered eccentrics and others whose views differed from his (including political views). People like Robert Desnos, Antonin Artaud, Dali, Aragon, and that's just the beginning. I liked to read him, but had to come to grips with the intolerance of individualism I saw. Respect much of what he tried to do, rather than what he actually did. Doctrinaire the way I use it means school rules (my manifesto or the highway). Rene Char, who was one of the surrealists until '34, wrote interesting poetry and prose upto the eighties having the influence of surrealism. I have already posted before with the others who have been influenced, and that I like.

BB

↑ Index

69. Herb Levy

Periplum CDs: Greinke/Land & Deep Listening Band/Ellen Fullman

Fri 3 Oct 1997

Hi folks,

I'll keep this short.

Periplum has released 2 CDs this year: one is the second release by Jeff Greinke & Land (Dennis Rea, Lesli Dalaba, Ed Pias, George Soler, Bill Moyer and Greg Gilmore), called Archipelago with eight group compositions & Suspended Music, a collaboration between the Deep Listening Band (Pauline Oliveros, Stuart Dempster, David Gamper) & Ellen Fullman & the Long String Instrument featuring both groups playing new compositions by Oliveros & Fullman.

I'm offering these to list members for US$14 including postage for either disc or US$26 including postage for both.

E-mail inquiries to <[redacted]>, checks/money orders to Periplum, POBox 95678, Seattle, WA 98145 USA.

Forthcoming releases, out in early 98, include a CD of interactive computer music pieces by Canadian composer Martin Bartlett & a series of songs for voice and piano by eleven US composers including John Luther Adams, Peter Garland, Robin Holcomb, David Mahler, Maggi Payne, Susan Stenger. Affter that a few surprises, including some things that may be particularly pertinent to this list.

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

70. Alan Jen Sondheim
DEATH
Fri 3 Oct 1997

--+-

DEATH

JENNIFER LAY BACK BORN ON BIER JULU AND HAIR BORN BROWN BORN BLACK CREST-TORN CLOTH COAT CLOTTING BLOOD BORNE JENNIFER
[TH]AES OFEREODE; [TH]ISSES SWA MAEG

IK GEHORTA [TH]AT SEGGEN

FUKUOKA IS A LOVELY CITY WITH WITH MANY SANDY BEACHES CHILDREN ALL DAY PLAY IN SURF AND FROLIC
WHILE SMILING ADULTS WATCH FROM STRIPED CABANAS

JENNIFER SHORN LOCKS LOOKED JULU-LORE LOVE AND LANGUOR LOST ON SEA-FOAM SHARED SONG SO HEARD DROWNED-DRAWN JENNIFER
[TH]AES OFEREODE; [TH]ISSES SWA MAEG

IK GEHORTA [TH]AT SEGGEN

I WILL COME AND PLAY IN FUKUOKA WITH ITS SANDY BEACHES
I WILL SING THE SONG OF THE CHILDREN RUNNING IN THE SURF
I WILL DRINK MEAD WITH MEN AND WOMEN IN FIERCE AND DARK CABANAS

JENNIFER DARK BURNING ASH-BORN JULU-RISEN SKY-BORN JENNIFER THUNDER A PALE PEAKED DAWN DUSK DRAINED OF DREAR DOWN DEATH [TH]AES OFEREODE; [TH]ISSES SWA MAEG

IK GEHORTA [TH]AT SEGGEN

DRUNK WITH SORROWS I EXPLODE UPON THE BEACHES OF FUKUOKA DRUNK WITH LOVE I BURN WHITE UPON THE FUKUOKA SURF
I WILL DRINK AND DRAIN MEAD I WILL BEAR THE DARK CABANAS

[TH]AES OFEREODE; [TH]ISSES SWA MAEG
UPON THE BIER OF JENNIFER UPON THE JULU-BIER

_____ (that was overcome, so might this / i heard say)

_____

↑ Index

71. R. Gancie
Sokal's Beard
Fri 3 Oct 1997

Dear Tom. I'm no cultural theorist. I came into these bad habits on my own. Some of my sources are unknown or of only marginal interest to social theorists. If you had read some of the sources I sight in my piece you would indeed see that the current scientific community demonstrates the qualities that you have catalogued with marvelous concision in your message. "Evil" is Musil's word, though I concur. Musil was a scientist. "Anal" refers to Logical Positivists who were philosophers not scientists. It is widely accepted that their project collapsed some years back yet the Strong Artificial Intelligence community has yet to get the message. Have you read John von Neumann's Self-Reproducing Automata? "Poetasters" just means scientists are people who have not dedicated themselves to the craft of poetry but avail themselves of the opportunity to wax poetic by virtue of the primacy of the sciences not because of any special poetic gift they possess or rigor applied. Popular books of science ARE often sloppy and even ridiculous. Remainder lists are littered with the crap. Read John Casti comparing Tosca to The Prisoners Dilemma Game. "Paternalistic?" Read Gross and Levitt's Higher Superstition.I challenge you to find a more condescending, smug and gratuitous book while making naked appeals to powerful economic and political interests with the sole motive of silencing a relatively powerless and somewhat misguided group of academics. My concern is not for cultural theorists. If I sound smug, Damn right. I give as good as I get. It was physicists themselves that raised the questions that cultural theorists have latched onto through several generations of discussion. Scientists as "Failures?" Go to a hundred and tenth and Broadway and take a deep breath. Its not so much that science has failed as that it has so thoroughly succeeded. What alternatives are left. Certainly, people like you and I have no real stake in the discourse. It is "hubris" to be told by the Grosses and Levitts that outside opinions carry no weight in discussion on matters that effect us. We are allowed a civic consciousness on matters of science as long as it doesn't adversely effect the economic bonanza of science and technology. But we are forbidden philosophical opinions even when it is obvious that in matters that inevitably require epistemoligcal and hermeneutic tools, scientists have many well endowed forums yet no special knowledge or insights. Hence, Weinberg who knows nothing about the vast philosophical and epistemological grounding that his statements would require to make a modicum of sense is given space in the New York Review of Books on the basis of work largely irrelavant to the matters he discusses. What's embarrassing and dangerous about Weinberg's piece is that he seems to be unaware of this. I guess the Dynamite Prize will do that to you. Or that's a result of "hubris". "Adolescent, chauvinism, bigotry?" Let me quote from Barrow and Tipler's Anthropic Cosmological Principle. "...the arguments one hears today against considering intelligent computers to be persons and against giving them human rights have precise parallels in the nineteenth century arguments against giving blacks and women full human rights." Is this the domain of science or is it "false omniscience"? You think B. and T. might be in a little bit over their heads. And of course the authors provide no historical information to back up their statement. They get to shoot from the hip, care of Oxford University Press. I stand by my interpretation of Weinberg that you briefly address. My position in response to your comment would be similar to one Benjamin Whorf might provide. Alan Sokal has turned his original piece into a career with powerful interests supporting his efforts. And career moves are more profitable if they support the status quo rather than attack it. What's getting lost in the attack focused on the Deconstructionists are that concerns about the scientific method have been with us for a long time. A glance around my library indicates the depth and diversity of that concern. Bruno, Blake, Hegel, Husserl, Bohr, Clifford Still, Hansen, Horkheimer and Adorno, Wittgenstein, Pauli etc. etc. Long before I knew of Deconstructionists I became interested in the above material. Sokal shows no interest. Weinberg dismisses Heisenberg's "unfortunate" philosophical efforts. Weinberg should be so "unfortunate."---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

72. Poetics List

Welcome Message

Fri 3 Oct 1997

Rev.10-1-97

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier ([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons
New obstacles for exchange arise
Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently about 500 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. We also encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below).

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge. But we ask that you subscribe with your real name and we reserve the right to request additional information, including address and phone number. All subscription information you supply will remain confidential.

message, with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author.

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to set poetics digest

[redacted]

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

or try:

review POETICS by name

review POETICS by country which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

73. Piombino/Simon
Re: language poetry bashing -Reply
Fri 3 Oct 1997

Allthough I haven't read all of the recent posts on "Language Bashing", Michael Coffey's amazingly interesting discussion of this tired warhorse of a topic happily made mention of the terrific Jackson Mac Low 75th Birthday Celebration which included good things to eat, including a huge birthday cake, and readings and performances by Jackson, Anne Tardos and many others, hosted by New York University. For those who could not be there be advised to quickly go out and console yourself and regale yourself with the premier issue of Crayon edited by Andrew Levy and Bob Harrison. The 304 page tome is packed with good writing honoring, discussing and celebrating Jackson's work, and also includes an excellently produced CD with terrific music by Jackson and Anne Tardos, Andy Levy, Jim Staley and many others. The mag contains a collaboration by Steve Benson and Jackson, poems by Charles Bernstein, Dan Farrell,Rod Smith, Martine Bellen, Joan Retallack, Jeff Derkson, Jena Osman,Beth Anderson,Rosemarie Waldrop and many others, a longish interview,an intelligent and useful discussion of Jackson's anarchism in relation to his poetics by Louis Cabri, a complete bibliography , a witty time-line biography of Jackson by David Bromige, a photo of Jackson taken by Allen Ginsberg, a complete discography,an interesting class presentation of Jackson's work by Ammiel Alcalay-from Jerusalem!- and much much more. It is lushly and conscientiously produced-in short, a steal at the modest price of $20. Write to Andy Levy at 144 Union Street, 2cd Floor, Brooklyn, N.Y 11231.

↑ Index

74. Maria Damon
Re: Periplum CDs: Greinke/Land & Deep Listening Band/Ellen Fullman
Sat 4 Oct 1997

speaking of music and herb, i just came from a bracing klezmatics concert. what fun. they rocked the minneapolis audience, a lot of folkie hippies (cuz of the venue, a nonprofit "cultural center" that specializes in "world music"), some very young gay punkish kids, some recent russian jewish immigrants with big jewelry, some regular jewish folks (but not a lot cuz it was friday night) and lots of non jews. when one of the klezmorim asked how many folks spoke yiddish, i didn't see a single hand go up.

At 4:54 PM -0800 10/3/97, Herb Levy wrote:
>Hi folks,
>

>I'll keep this short.
>
>Periplum has released 2 CDs this year: one is the second release by Jeff >Greinke & Land (Dennis Rea, Lesli Dalaba, Ed Pias, George Soler, Bill Moyer >and Greg Gilmore), called Archipelago with eight group compositions & >Suspended Music, a collaboration between the Deep Listening Band (Pauline >Oliveros, Stuart Dempster, David Gamper) & Ellen Fullman & the Long String >Instrument featuring both groups playing new compositions by Oliveros & >Fullman.
>
>I'm offering these to list members for US$14 including postage for either >disc or US$26 including postage for both.
>
>E-mail inquiries to <[redacted]>, checks/money orders to Periplum, >POBox 95678, Seattle, WA 98145 USA.
>
>Forthcoming releases, out in early 98, include a CD of interactive computer >music pieces by Canadian composer Martin Bartlett & a series of songs for >voice and piano by eleven US composers including John Luther Adams, Peter >Garland, Robin Holcomb, David Mahler, Maggi Payne, Susan Stenger. Affter >that a few surprises, including some things that may be particularly >pertinent to this list.
>
>Bests,
>
>Herb
>
>
>Herb Levy
>[redacted]

↑ Index

75. Karen and Trevor

Request for Phone Numbers

Sat 4 Oct 1997

Can anyone backchannel the following phone numbers or e-mail address?
Gustaf Sobin
Sianne Ngai

This is regarding publication and not any personal use. Thanks in advance.

Karen McKevitt
[redacted]

↑ Index

76. jarnot
delany/phone number
Sat 4 Oct 1997

---

i'm trying to get in touch with samuel delany. i have his number in new york. i need his number in massachusetts. please back channel. thanks. lisa jarnot

[redacted]
box 185/NY, NY 10009

↑ Index

77. LAURA MORIARTY
another attempt
Sat 4 Oct 1997

Thank you Rod for a useful and accurate thumbnail - Still, as one who has been a Fellow Traveller for twenty or so years, I have always resisted the totalizing implicit in arguing or asserting about Language Poets - (This point has often been made here, but I can't help myself.) Whose poetics are being discussed? If it's five main guys, who are they? There is a lot of difference between say Kit Robinson, Bruce Andrews and Steve Benson - all arguably founding fathers. The longstanding influence of women Language Writers such as Lyn Hejinian, Carla Harryman, and Diane Ward not to say major (related) figures like Susan Howe, Beverly Dahlen or Leslie Scalapino seems not to make much sense in the battle of the various father/son generations. (And gender is very much not the only way that influential work becomes excluded from that linear history, as my late husband Jerry Estrin used often to rant.) The point being that the terms, when analyzed, are much more complex and interesting than the bashing or not bashing. It also seems not to reflect reality - as many younger writers have found work by the women mentioned above and others, as well as less easily categorizable men, as just as useful, or more useful in their own writing, than those who one might be imagining when using the term Language Poet.

↑ Index

78. aerialedge
Re: another attempt
Sat 4 Oct 1997

Laura-- Well, it's not 5 main guys I mean when using the term language poetry (tho I think Hartley's book very good it fails in breadth of address)*, nor is it 3 main guys when using the term New York School, nor two when using Black Mountain, altho I suppose it might be 3 main guys if I were to use the term Spicer-Duncan-Blaser circle. I suppose if anything is meant by language poetry it is an insistent interest in disjunction, this seems to me implicit in the use of the term & it doesn't seem to me overly reductive when acknowledged as a kind of shorthand which I hope I did by saying "let's take a chance and say that language poetry exists." & the variety of uses of the disjunctive w/in & outside & by "precursors" & "followers" is something which interests me. Also one of the ways one might see a continuum between new amer & language is a shared interest in disjunctive techniques yes? & the differences among these writers & their readers relative to what they think they're doing is fascinating. & just to clarify again, it seems to me no matter what criteria one is using-- if looking at "the literary field" with a reasonable amount of attention-- there are at least a hundred writers one might identify, contingently, as language poets. & contingently is the only way one might go about it-- no one's gonna pin anything down, because it changes. I'm tempted to muse a bit re disjunctive manners of thinking but it's a bigger subject than I'm willing to take on today. At least I'll say that an understanding of the contingency of any articulation is what is to be gained, or one of the things to be gained from the work-- genuine friendship, for many, is another. Thanks for the feedback Laura & I hope this at least somewhat addresses Henry's post as well.

--Rod Smith

*Refered to above: _Textual Politics and the Language Poets_ by George Hartley, Indiana U Press 1989, focuses mainly on the work of Andrews, Bernstein, McCaffery, Silliman, & Watten.

↑ Index

79. mark weiss
Re: another attempt
Sat 4 Oct 1997

I assume that you're aware that disjunctive poetry has been around since long before your principals were born. One may appropriate who one wishes as precursors. Not all "followers" will appreciate being so appropriated; some may even see that appropriation as cultural imperialism, or at least aggrandisement.

And you don't leave a space for contemporaries who are neither affiliated with nor in dialogue with the group.

I suppose if anything is meant by language >poetry it is an insistent interest in disjunction, this seems to me implicit >in the use of the term & it doesn't seem to me overly reductive when >acknowledged as a kind of shorthand which I hope I did by saying "let's take >a chance and say that language poetry exists." & the variety of uses of the >disjunctive w/in & outside & by "precursors" & "followers" is something which >interests me.

↑ Index

80. Aviva Vogel
Re: language poetry bashing
Sat 4 Oct 1997

Thanks for your answer on "surrealistic" writers after WWII. It was thorough enough to help me understand your post, and I will now be spurred to read/research these writers, and be aware of the issue you've raised concerning their intolerances (doctrinaire attitudes). What do you know about Robert Desnos? I'm tremendously attracted to his "headlong" voice, but know little about his politics, or what informed him.

↑ Index

81. aerialedge
Re: another attempt
Sat 4 Oct 1997

In a message dated 10/5/97 4:06:04 AM, you wrote:

> I assume that you're aware that disjunctive poetry has been around since long before your principals were born. One may appropriate who one wishes as precursors. Not all "followers" will appreciate being so appropriated; some may even see that appropriation as cultural imperialism, or at least aggrandisement. And you don't leave a space for contemporaries who are neither affiliated with nor in dialogue with the group.

I don't believe anything I said implied a lack of awareness of or indifference to the issues you innumerate. Also, I do not believe it's within my power, nor would I choose such power were it available to me, to include or exclude "contemporaries who are neither affiliated with nor in dialogue with" anything currently existent or imagined.

↑ Index

82. Aviva Vogel

BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction

Sat 4 Oct 1997

John, I just found something that I think's pertinent to your question about Bly's comments on William Carlos Williams' poetry as having no "inward life." I thought I'd share it with you, although you've already heard and considered this before, but -- I was surprised to see my understanding of the issue affirmed so elegantly:

From "Charles Olson and the New Realism," Recreating the World/Word, Lynda D. McNeil, pp.215-216

In his essay, "Olson, Whitehead, and the Objectivists," Robert Von Hallberg contrasts Objectivist poetics (notably that of William Carlos Williams) with Olson's "kinetic" poetic. Von Hallberg maintains that Objectivist poetics were "aesthetic in the sense that the aesthetic object (poem) transcends its maker and gains its value from an independent state of being, not from its origin or effect. In contrast, Olson's poetic is humanistic: making is not less valuable than what is made." Olson's "kinetic" aesthetic grows out of a phenomenological principle that reality is a process, thus taking priority over form, and the poet must enact this process in order to confront reality: "Art does not seek to describe, but to enact" (Poetics, 169). Von Hallberg adds that: "Unlike the Objectivists...Olson's poetry not only relies on the equality of the subject and object, as Whitehead would have it, but more importantly on their reciprocity and symmetry. (VH, 90).

The idea of "reciprocity and symmetry" points back to monistic views of man and world (subject and object), to Williams' "edge to edge" to describe the poet and the world, and ahead to Werner Heisenberg's "Uncertainty Principle."

Olson saw the problem of "partitioned reality" in terms of the opposition of proponents of Mind (Kant, the Symbolists, and T.S. Eliot) and the proponents of the World or Things (the Positivisits, Imagists, Objectivists, and Pound.) In "Projective Verse, Part II," Olson writes: "It is no accident that Pound and Williams both were involved variously in a movement which got called "objectivism." But that word was then used in some sort of a necessary quarrel, I take it, with "subjectivism." It is now too late to be bothered with the latter. It has excellently done itself to death, even though we are all caught up in its dying (Poetics, 155).

Olson believed that it was "too late" to be bothered with the distinction between mind and matter, because science has revealed man's true relationship to things. According to Heisenberg's "Uncertainty Principle," the only way that an individual can know a thing is by interacting with it--subject cannot be divorced from object, or as Olson says in "Human Universe," like Herder, who (interestingly) also used the skin metaphor: "the skin itself, the meeting edge of man and external reality are so involved with one another that, for man's purposes, they had better be taken as one" (Poetics, 168). Heisenberg expresses this idea in the following way: "Natural science does not simply describe and explain nature; it is part of the interplay between nature and ourselves." By interacting with an object, man influences its "behavior," thus thwarting any possibility of a purely objective description...

Olson's statement that "Image, is a vector" ...

[It seems to me to describe WCW's intention in looking so closely at objects, and tangling himself up so much with the issues of perception and apperception. For Robert Bly to see either WCW's poetry, or the contents of his poetry, as static artifact, is simply mistaken, for the subject of WCW's poetry was as much the dynamic between self and object as it was about either self or object. He was certainly embodying his existential process, I would say, even in his most "objectivist" poetry.

Thanks for raising this fruitful question, John.

Aviva

↑ Index

83. Henry Gould

Re: language poetry bashing

Sat 4 Oct 1997

---

re: Desnos.

It is the older man who was mobilized in 1939, captured by the Germans, and returned to Paris. Joining the Resistance network, he was important in the operations of _Editions du Minuit_, the underground press. In 1942, his second collection of poems, _Fortunes_, appeared. Under the name of Valentin Guillois he published several pieces, notably the great _Watchman of the Pont-au-Change_. It is Desnos at his prophetic, optimistic best. Arrested by the Gestapo in 1944, he was sent first to Compeigne, later to Buchenwald. In 1945, with the Allied armies closing in, the Buchenwald prisoners were force-marched by the retreating SS to Terezin. In May, after the Allies had occupied the camp, Desnos was discovered by Josef Stuna. He spent his last days talking with Stuna and a nurse, Alena Teresova, about Paris , poetry, freedom.

Wm. Kulik, 1971

↑ Index

84. Henry Gould

Re: BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction

Sat 4 Oct 1997

---

on the relationship between people & the objective:

Fare forward, travellers! not escaping from the past
Into different lives, or into any future;
You are not the same people who left that station
Or who will arrive at any terminus,
While the narrowing rails slide together behind you;
And on the deck of the drumming liner
Watching the furrow that widens behind you,
You shall not think 'the past is finished'
Or 'the future is before us'.
At nightfall, in the rigging and the aerial,
Is a voice descanting (though not to the ear,
The murmuring shell of time, and not in any language)
'Fare forward, you who think you are voyaging;
You are not those who saw the harbor
Receding, or those who will disembark.
Here between the thither and the farther shore
While time is withdrawn, consider the future
And the past with an equal mind.
At the moment which is not of action or inaction
You can receive this: "on whatever sphere of being
The mind of man may be intent
At the time of death"--this is the one action (And the time of death is every moment)
Which shall fructify in the lives of others:
And do not think of the fruit of action.
Fare forward.

- TS Eliot, _Four Quartets_

(seems like Ashbery, Olson, Williams, Crane, Ginsberg, and all their inheritors run screaming with their hands over their ears) (or listen ever so closely for the faltering) (right behind ol' Ez) (was Liz listening?) (& he DID falter) (better to just play games) (nothing refers to the inside or outside of anything) (words are organized by powers beyond our ken - & they are bad) (language is enslaved) (we are still slaves) (I'm free - who're you?) (I'm a grad student) (poetry = drugs) (monument to a heart of stone) (cool) (fire) (let's go to the reading) (why?) (old guy with feet of clay & an iron stomach) (lips are sealed) (what a drag - his own children were there) (they looked tired) (one of them's in a creative writing program) (shut up - put on the tape again) (technique?) (internet?)

↑ Index

85. LAURA MORIARTY
Re: another attempt
Sat 4 Oct 1997

Rod - I'm not sure disjunction works (fond as I am of it) because the narrative writers whose sensibility is so important to this list (Dodie, Kevin, other New Narrative cohorts) are often not disjunct, word to word, line to line, nor are the essay/poems of some avowed and historically inevitable Language Writers. Lately, with a sense of transgression, I have been linear and liked it.

Of course one needs to generalize to speak of poetics at all. I ask only that it be acknowledged that Modernism becomes Postmoderism staring several key people (or key groups) is not the only story or the only game in town and may not be the critical one in restrospect. There are many way for work to have its effect.

The most interesting disjuction is to disrupt that false historical narrative whenever possible. I say this, btw, very much in support of you and your poetics. A lot of us are more important than we think we are.

↑ Index

86. Bob Grumman
Defining Language Poetry
Sat 4 Oct 1997

I'm a taxonomaniac. Hence, as we go through these discussions of language poetry over and over, I get tired of never knowing what precisely is meant by "language poetry." And I'm with Mark Weiss in being sure that it's more than just disjunctional--or, more exactly, that it is disjunctional in a way that surrealistic and other forms of poetry aren't. My own claim, as mostly an outsider to language poetry, is that it is poetry that significantly breaks the rules of grammar and/or spelling for expressive effect. In my poetics, I rename it "xenolinguistic poetry" because of the confusion as to what language poetry is, but I'd prefer to call it language poetry. For me the identity, politics, philosophical outlook, etc., of those who are called language poets has nothing to do with what language poetry is. Nor is its subject matter, tone, etc. I want to know how we recognize it from words on a page (or spoken).

So, is it more than disrupted syntax, inflection, orthography? If so, how?

Bob G.

↑ Index

87. rsillima
Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire
Sat 4 Oct 1997

O this is all too predictable,

Ron

From: [redacted] (Julia Stein)
Subject: re: Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire

Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire

Labor Alerts/Labor News
a service of Campaign for Labor Rights
1247 "E" Street SE, Washington, DC 20003
[redacted] [redacted] http://www.compugraph.com/clr

Summary:

Segments of the clothing industry are trying to block a planned exhibit on the history of sweatshops, according to the Washington Post and Los Angeles Times. The exhibit, scheduled to open on April 15th, will include a re-creation of the El Monte sweatshop where Thai immigrants worked in near-slavery for years. Curators offered apparel industry representatives a chance to tell their side of the story. Pamela Rucker of the National Retail Federation declined, complaining that "there is no way we could counter the powerful impact of those horrific pictures from El Monte." The California Fashion Association said it is writing to members of Congress urging them to raise questions about the exhibit.

If the exhibit is to survive and tell its story, then supporters must mobilize as well.

Background:

The exhibit is part of a long-term Museum of American History project on 'work and worth." It will be entitled "Between a Rock and a Hard Place: A Dialogue on American Sweatshops, 1820-Present." One section of the exhibit will explain the history of sweatshops from the 1820's to the present. Next will be a re-creation of the El Monte sweatshop which will include the sewing machines and workstations used in the shop which were acquired by the Smithsonian after it was shut down by the California Labor Commission. That will be followed by a look at the global picture which will include a video of modern textile factories and explain that not all apparel is made in sweatshops. Allison Wolf of the American Apparel Manufacturers Association withdrew her offer to produce the video after curator Peter Liebhold told her that "the union role has to be positively portrayed."

The museum asked industry, labor, government and individuals for contributions to fund the exhibit, but so far only UNITE, the garment workers' union, and the Department of Labor have made contributions. Apart from a monetary contribution, UNITE has also donated some items from its archives, including a picture of Eleanor Roosevelt sewing the first union label into a piece of clothing. UNITE spokeswoman Jo Ann Mort said that the 300,000 member union has had no other input into the content of the exhibit.

According to the Washington Post, manufacturers, fashion and apparel industries hope that the controversy will become as heated as the one surrounding the National Air and Space Museum's Enola Gay exhibit. That exhibit was canceled after protests from veterans groups which complained that that it was too sympathetic to the suffering of the Japanese from the atomic bombs.

Action Needed:

Write or fax the Smithsonian Museum expressing your support for this exhibit. In your own words, tell curators there that you believe that the American public has a right to know its own history. Consumers have a right to learn about the conditions under which our clothing and our children's clothing is being produced. This controversy is not just about history. It's about whether sweatshops are to be our future.

According to conversations with Smithsonian staff, letters will be extremely useful to them in showing citizen support for the exhibit in the face of industry protests.

Smithsonian Museum
Office of Public Affairs
National Museum of American History, Room 5104 - MRC623
Washington, DC 20560
Fax: [redacted]

Julia Stein
[redacted]

------End forward message----------

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)

[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/silliman/

↑ Index

88. Tom Orange
another attempt
Sun 5 Oct 1997

---

two or three things strike me, and it's late and i can't give any of them the justice that they deserve, but in the interest of immediacy:

rod's notions of disjunctiveness (reduced as they have been) seem to have created some blips on the radar, and met with some resistances, to wit, it aint all that.

and yet bob grumman seems willing to take the visuality of langwriting on the page, (and) the xenolinguistics (elaborate, pls!), at the expense of the identity, politics, or philosophical outlook of any given langpo.

which makes me want to beg the emergence of a given kind of writing at an historical moment (as rod sez, post-vietnam post-newamerpo) and with a kind of politico-philosophical agenda i.e. decentering disjunctivity for want of a better a(dditionally).k.a poststructuralis...

(and this refiltered thru aviva's very interesting post on wcw and von hallberg on olson...)

so to throw another worm into the can: helen vendler has an essay on periodizing american poetry (heads up bob g.!) in a book edited by lawrence besserman that came out last year -- a whole other thread can come out of this one -- but she makes the point that post the beats and confessionals we have "the poem of the decentered self," of which a jorie graham or john ashberry is the more fruitful practitioner than a charles bernstein or bruce andrews.

disjunction, politics, philosophy, then -- or none all or some of the above?

hesitantly yrs,
t.

↑ Index

89. Rachel Loden
Re: Smithsonian Sweatshop Exhibit Under Fire
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Ron, thanks for posting that. Also interesting in this connection is Julia Stein's piece in _Electronic Book Review_, "Poets Take On Guess Inc.: Poets Win," at http://www.altx.com/ebr/ebr5/stein.htm

Rachel

↑ Index

90. Bob Grumman
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Sun 5 Oct 1997

When Tom Orange says that I seem "willing to take the visuality of langwriting on the page, (and) the xenolinguistics (elaborate, pls!), at the expense of the identity, politics, or philosophical outlook of any given langpo," I think he (in his hurry) misstates my position. I'm not so much concerned with the visuality of langpo as I am with what it is as textual composition. More important, I don't take the textual attributes of langpo (as I see them) "at the expense of the identity, politics, or philosophical outlook" of those who compose langpo but ASIDE from those concerns, in order to get an objective (and I'm not afraid to use such an adjective) definition of what langpo is as poetry. The other things--politics, etc.--are also important and interesting but not useful for defining langpo (for me).

As for Helen Vendler, thanks for the tip. If I can get hold of her essay, it'd be fun to read, but I don't expect it to say much as I think she's at least forty years behind what's going on in poetry now.

As for "xenolinguistics," it's just one more of my taxonomical coinages. It means just "strange linguistic practices," or the significant breaking grammatical or orthographic conventions. "Rose is a rose is a rose," for instance, breaks with normal sentence structure, so is xenolinguistic. For more, you'll have to wait for my 5,000-page monograph, to be published by the Oxford Press sometime in 2073.

Bob G.

↑ Index

91. aerialedge
Re: another attempt
Sun 5 Oct 1997

In a message dated 10/5/97 7:19:27 AM, you wrote:

> The most interesting disjuction is to disrupt that false historical narrative whenever possible.

yes Laura -- makes me think of the Raworth: "The narrative line is only as boring as what is hung on it." So, for me it's not necessarily "a belief" in these historical narratives-- but a realization that these stories are being told-- so we, as poets, need to try to make them interesting. Make them of use. Remake them to include our experience. Sometimes one uses them, sometimes one leaves them in their little box to mildew. But a necessity not to ignore entirely, cause if we do, there are others that won't. Thus some validity to the occasional criticism of this generation for not writing criticism. Tho a number of good things have been done.

--Rod

↑ Index

92. Michael Magee
Re: BlyBashes Williams - Major Disjunction
Sun 5 Oct 1997

From Aviva:
"For Robert Bly to see either WCW's poetry, or the contents of his poetry, as static artifact, is simply mistaken, for the subject of WCW's poetry was as much the dynamic between self and object as it was about either self or object. He was certainly embodying his existential process, I would say, even in his most "objectivist" poetry."

Yes, I think this is precisely what Bly misses (unsurprisingly - the guy is so mistaken, so often, in his published opinions of other writers its almost unbelieveable). Bly is still so enamored with the Romantic notion of the integrity of the individual ("inner life" my foot! he says it as if he invented the idea) that he misses the fact that Williams is operating on a different paradigm altogether, one which begins with the assumption that, as William James said, "Thoughts are things, and vice versa." It's the dynamic (implied by James's casual "vice versa") which Williams seems interested in, as you say, an insistence that self and object (or self and 'other') are determined in and by the act of their evolving dialogue.

-Mike.

↑ Index

93. Jacques Debrot
Re: another attempt
Sun 5 Oct 1997

This is how Hank Lazer finesses the term "language poetry" when writing about someone as difficult to categorize as, say, Rachel Blau DuPlessis: "While DuPlessis's writing manifests certain tenedencies in Language Writing, her writing also helps us to understand the fictitious or reductive nature of such a term -- Language poetry -- as that term seems to imply a fixed or narrowly specified thing. Her at times thematized version of feminism, her myth-orientation . . . and her particular variety of lyricism are somewhat atypical of Language Writing. Her disturbance of syntax, her assimilation of a broad range of theoretical writing, the distribution or multiplication of subjectivity, and the variety of her uses of the page (as a field for innovative layout) -- espcially overwriting and double-writing -- situate her work within an experimentalism for which the term Language poetry, like the term , postmodernism, is becoming a fuzzy but well-entrenched metonym." I've chosen this passage somewhat at random -- the point is in Opposing Poetries Lazer continually works and re-works the term in ways that are relevant I think to many issues broached in recent posts. One other important aspect of Language Writing seems to me to involve its transgression of generic boundaries -- between the visual arts, criticism, etc. and poetry. In this context the relationship between Conceptual and Minimalist art and Language Writing has perhaps been neglected to an even greater extent than its connections to New Am poetry.

↑ Index

94. Franklin Bruno several current threads addressed serially
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Odd that I read Tom Beard's post yesterday and thought that it was brave of him to voice, in this forum, skepticism about critiques of science, but then read R. Gancie's post today and thought he scored some points too (the latter's original post somehow doesn't get to me--sometimes my digest gets cut off at some arbitrary point--if someone would backchannel the original post to which Tom was responding, I'd be grateful). I think I agree w/ Beard (though he might put it that way) that cultural criticism often conflate the ideological biases of the uses to which a methodology is put with those of the methodology itself. I tend to find critiques of the former far more convincing. I'd also like to know if Gancie could explain a bit more about AI researchers not 'getting the news' that logical positivism is dead--I don't understand what specific import the failure of the verificationist project has for this particular empirical project. Perfectly possible that I'm misunderstanding something simple here.

On a not-esp.-related note: Disjunction never struck me as the essential component of langpo--the diffuse 'moment' (is that an oxymoron?) under discussion probably doesn't have an essence, but if it did, wouldn't it have something to do w/ a questioning (or at least a certain kind of awareness) of the conditions of reference--the gap (maybe a disjunction of another sort) between language and the world? And I'd add that 1) 'questioning' of ref. doesn't necessarily mean 'denial,' 2) in general, claiming that X is a feature of historical phenomenon Y doesn't imply that X didn't exist before Y.

And while I'm at it, how come the one poem of Henry Gould's that I've ever seen (in Poetry New York, I think, starting with some material about finding a Scrabble tile) didn't read -anything- like what I would have imagined from the positions he takes on this list?

fjb

↑ Index

95. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: another attempt

Sun 5 Oct 1997

---

just wanted to say that, while i appreciate the attempt being made here to locate formal features of poetry/writing that adequately describe language poetry-writing (and hope you'll all keep hashing this out), i wonder whether in fact it would not be equally propitious to think about the nature of readership (and reader/writer positions and relationships and 'community' and publishing realities) implied by this tag, over and against ?... somebody may already have said this, but i'm operating at the moment on half a brain (tenure time, weeeee!), so if so, please add my name to that list...

best,

joe

↑ Index

96. Harold Rhenisch
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Sun 5 Oct 1997

"One other important aspect of Language Writing seems to me to involve its transgression of generic boundaries -- between the visual arts, criticism, etc. and poetry. In this context the relationship between Conceptual and Minimalist art and Language Writing has perhaps been neglected to an even greater extent than its connections to New Am poetry."

Yes!

Inclusion is important. Cartoons, Advertisements, road signs, T-shirts, doodles, sketches, drawings, collages, essays, scientific notes, newspaper clippings, you name it: anything can and should be used in poetry if poetry is not to be a ghetto. There are many good things out there which are not called poetry but which, all labels aside, are the place we should be working from. In my experience as a poet I've found I often have more in common with visual artists than with novelists. P.K. Page said that if you could write a poem you could paint, because they are the same thing. It worked for her. Hemingway revised by exploiting moments of opportunity in his work from the previous day. Language poetry can't be so different from any other kind of writing that it does not have room for these kinds of joyful approaches.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

97. Bob Grumman
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Harold Rhenisch wrote:
>
> "One other important aspect of Language Writing seems to me to involve its > transgression of generic boundaries -- between the visual arts, criticism, > etc. and poetry. In this context the relationship between Conceptual and > Minimalist art and Language Writing has perhaps been neglected to an even > greater extent than its connections to New Am poetry."
>
> Yes!
>
> Inclusion is important. Cartoons, Advertisements, road signs, T-shirts, > doodles, sketches, drawings, collages, essays, scientific notes, newspaper > clippings, you name it: anything can and should be used in poetry if poetry > is not to be a ghetto. There are many good things out there which are not > called poetry but which, all labels aside, are the place we should be > working from. In my experience as a poet I've found I often have more in > common with visual artists than with novelists. P.K. Page said that if you > could write a poem you could paint, because they are the same thing. It > worked for her. Hemingway revised by exploiting moments of opportunity in > his work from the previous day. Language poetry can't be so different from > any other kind of writing that it does not have room for these kinds of > joyful approaches.

>
> Harold Rhenisch

No, no, no. What you're talking about is INTERMEDIA or, in my taxonomy, PLURAESTHETIC POETRY. Great stuff but NOT LANGUAGE poetry. I continue to regret we lack an agreed-upon definition of what language poetry is, as opposed to what its creators might be trying to do with it.
--Bob G.

↑ Index

98. Judy Roitman
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Bob Grumman writes:

> My own claim, as mostly an outsider to language poetry, > is that it is poetry that significantly breaks the rules of grammar > and/or spelling for expressive effect...

I find this interesting, the notion of "expressive effect." Just what are we supposed to be expressing?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

99. Harold Rhenisch
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Bob G.,

referring to:

"One other important aspect of Language Writing seems to me to involve its transgression of generic boundaries..."

and

"Language poetry can't be so different from any other kind of writing that it does not have room for these kinds of joyful approaches."

and your reply

"No, no, no. What you're talking about is INTERMEDIA or, in my taxonomy, PLURAESTHETIC POETRY. Great stuff but NOT LANGUAGE poetry. I continue to regret we lack an agreed-upon definition of what language poetry is, as opposed to what its creators might be trying to do with it."

Point well taken. Thanks. I take it you mean there is room within language poetry for these kinds of approaches, but only as a method of _using_ language poetry. If that's the case, then the same could be said about many other uses and approaches and many other components of a definition. I take it then that any definition would have to be fairly broad, even general, and inclusive of the specifics of various approaches. Mind you, I'd hate to completely separate use from definition.

Harold

↑ Index

100. Mark Wallace
irreducible instants are not "the irreducible"
Sun 5 Oct 1997

I just wanted to add a further plug for Lissa McLaughlin's fine new book from Avec Books, and in so doing to respond to Beth Simon's query from the other day.

Beth, I think what I would say is that my comments probably CANNOT be taken out of the context of the way I'm responding specifically to Lissa McLaughlin's book. Her work is a complex reflection on the childhood and later experiences of a particular narrator whose life has been greatly affected by several traumatic incidents, though by no means has it ONLY been shaped by such incidents. Whether or not language plays some role in constituting those incidents is perhaps an important question in some ways but in others tangential to the narrator's particular struggle--which, among other things, includes the recognition that language cannot FIX the meaning of those incidents and certainly cannot DESCRIBE the incidents --whether that description has clinical emphasis, political emphasis, pyschotherapeutic emphasis, or any other or combinaton thereof.

Thus, I don't see that anything in my comments suggest that I am saying that "life is irreducible" to language in any kind of generalizable way--I was not generalizing about anything, as far as I can tell. I think it's possible to believe that the world escapes language even as language helps constitute the world, a potential paradox that bothers me not in the slightest, but I'm not sure that this kind of generalizing means anything significant to me, really, because I tend to be more attracted to particularities (I don't say "individualities," which to my mind would miss the interrelation that's also in question) than I am to to authoritative absolutes such as the unassailable conviction, that some might have, about the extent to which language or experience pre-exist or predetermine each other.

In short, I was talking about the specifics of Lissa McLaughlin's book, which I highly recommend, and not only because it might lead to discussion about language and experience, but because of the particularities that are at stake in its use of language and experience.

Thanks for asking!

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

101. Herb Levy

Re: Klezmatics &

Sun 5 Oct 1997

> speaking of music and herb, i just came from a bracing klezmatics concert. what fun. they rocked the minneapolis audience, a lot of folkie hippies (cuz of the venue, a nonprofit "cultural center" that specializes in "world music"), some very young gay punkish kids, some recent russian jewish immigrants with big jewelry, some regular jewish folks (but not a lot cuz it was friday night) and lots of non jews. when one of the klezmorim asked how many folks spoke yiddish, i didn't see a single hand go up.

One of the things I like most about the Klezmatics is that, while they obviously know the field really well & can play the traditional stuff well, they don't simply play copies of it.

Folks interested in traditional musics of the USA might should check out the recently re-issued Anthology of American Folk Music (from Smithsonian Folkways). Compiled by experimental filmmaker, archivist, & mystic Harry Smith in the early 50s, this collection brings together a wide range of music from many traditions, in turn helping to foster the subsequent folk music scare/revival. The last of the six discs also includes some CD-ROM material including audio interviews, texts, and some films by & of Smith. Very wonderful stuff.

Here's a Web site on the collection:
<http://www.si.edu/organiza/offices/folklife/folkways/harry/hsa.htm>

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

102. Harold Rhenisch
Re: another attempt
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Luigi,

you wrote:

"i believe the thread here is on what specific features distinguish the aesthetic movement called "Language Poetry" from other aesthetics/schools/tendencies...."

Thanks for the correction.

A parallel discussion could be on what characteristics "Language Poetry" shares with other aesthetics, just so we don't lose something vital in the process of definition. For instance, if Language Poetry and Intermedia Poetry both work to break boundaries, say, they could be seen as parallel manifestations of a larger project, perhaps as yet undefined. To see them in such terms might help focus the definition of each. Or it might not. But it would be fun trying.

best,

Harold

↑ Index

103. don wellman

Re: another attempt

Sun 5 Oct 1997

Language poetry: A form of tweaking syntax so as to reveal associations that are themselves comments on dominant modes of cultural production, including, notably, but not limited to critiques of the production of left liberal consciousness of self (one of several forms of consciousness that privileges individual empowerment and like those other forms is often highly phallocentric) and critiques of the ideological effects of consumption.

The poetry of left-liberal consciousness in the 1970's (whether taking Lowell, Ginsberg, Olson, or Ashberry; the so called "deep-image" school or ethnopoetics as a model) embraced a wide variety of disjunctive strategies, central to these was some idea of getting naked and discovering the self, of mapping some holistic idea of self on the cosmos (call this self-actualization or "individuation") or confessing to individual fragmentation of holistic consciousness (call this "schizophrenic posturing" if you want). Do not take this last sentence as a way of debunking the psychological realities of either individuation or schizophrenia, please. However, that consciousness rooted in some notion of holism (essentially Emersonian, essentially nostalgic), as a result of Vietnam-era and immediate post-Vietnam era politics (critiques of government, corporations, gender and race inequities) had either proven itself to be synonymous with failed middle-class liberalism or had retrenched to the level of the local community. So, if you started to publish around the time of Regan's election, the old forms of disjunction seemed tired and self-serving.

The thing about language poetry then, the thing that it got to before, widespread academic understanding of deconstruction or post-structuralism, was a use of language (of a language that had been entirely co-opted, shaped for market purposes, for political purposes, etc) against itself; certainly it was a project that did not propose an alternative through disjunction but instead aimed to reveal social facts through tweaking, through setting fragments of received language against one another, sometimes with humor, most significantly in ways that caused practitioners to examine the lexicon itself (not with a Duncan or Emersonian fascination with etymologies and secret knowledge) but with some of that orthographic experimentation on the surface that relates to visual poetry.

Now "tweaking" as I have called it (or "torquing as Silliman calls it) may well be only another surface form of disjunction; but unlike other forms of disjunction, it does not seek to strip off the mask of self-consciousness; instead it seeks to make conscious the ideological effects of language as it is most frequently used or found. ...

DonWellman

↑ Index

104. henry gould
Re: several current threads addressed serially
Sun 5 Oct 1997

On Sun, 5 Oct 1997 11:05:02 -0700 Franklin Bruno said:
>
>On a not-esp.-related note: Disjunction never struck me as the essential >component of langpo--the diffuse 'moment' (is that an oxymoron?) under >discussion probably doesn't have an essence, but if it did, wouldn't it have >something to do w/ a questioning (or at least a certain kind of awareness) >of the conditions of reference--the gap (maybe a disjunction of another >sort) between language and the world? And I'd add that 1) 'questioning' of >ref. doesn't necessarily mean 'denial,' 2) in general, claiming that X is a >feature of historical phenomenon Y doesn't imply that X didn't exist before Y.

This little offhand comment is a very strong defense of what the lang-poohs are up to. Helen Vending-Machine, take note.
Woke up this morning
it was night
you were on my mind
looking for a home for the boll weevil nothing like that in New York City
                it's all in Oklahoma
(- Ted Berrigan)
>
>And while I'm at it, how come the one poem of Henry Gould's that I've ever >seen (in Poetry New York, I think, starting with some material about finding >a Scrabble tile) didn't read -anything- like what I would have imagined from >the positions he takes on this list?

Regarding this rather byzantine puzzle, all I can conclude is that Mr. Gould was circling close to the perihelion of Jack Spandrift's literary influence at the time-of-composition of that particular ejaculation. Spandrift, perhaps I should add, in eclipsum? - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

105. Thomas Bell
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Sun 5 Oct 1997

f/u to Joe as well (he does have a good argument).

As a practitioner of "PLURAESTHETIC POETRY" (pompous name?) I note that some of my PP is LP and some isn't. Some of both is also prose poetry or picture poetry to throw some more p's out. Then distinction I find myself focusing on has to do with how much I try to lay things out for the reader. An LP reader has to work harder (and also need not get the same meaning out of what i write. tom bell

At 04:19 PM 10/5/97 -0400, Bob Grumman wrote: >Harold Rhenisch wrote:
>>
>> "One other important aspect of Language Writing seems to me to involve its >> transgression of generic boundaries -- between the visual arts, criticism, >> etc. and poetry. In this context the relationship between Conceptual and >> Minimalist art and Language Writing has perhaps been neglected to an even >> greater extent than its connections to New Am poetry."
>>
>> Yes!
>>
>> Inclusion is important. Cartoons, Advertisements, road signs, T-shirts, >> doodles, sketches, drawings, collages, essays, scientific notes, newspaper
>> clippings, you name it: anything can and should be used in poetry if poetry >> is not to be a ghetto. There are many good things out there which are not >> called poetry but which, all labels aside, are the place we should be >> working from. In my experience as a poet I've found I often have more in >> common with visual artists than with novelists. P.K. Page said that if you >> could write a poem you could paint, because they are the same thing. It >> worked for her. Hemingway revised by exploiting moments of opportunity
in >> his work from the previous day. Language poetry can't be so different from >> any other kind of writing that it does not have room for these kinds of >> joyful approaches.
>>
>> Harold Rhenisch
>
>No, no, no. What you're talking about is INTERMEDIA or, in my taxonomy, >PLURAESTHETIC POETRY. Great stuff but NOT LANGUAGE poetry. I >continue to regret we lack an agreed-upon definition of what language >poetry is, as opposed to what its creators might be trying to do with >it. --Bob G.

>
>

↑ Index

106. George Bowering
Re: Social Tangles
Sun 5 Oct 1997

> What I disagree with is the now accepted fact that art can contain, or represent in some way, the same sense of social urgency as a conversation, say, or discussions like those on this list.

This must be some kind of metaphysics. I cant figure out how one can disagree with a fact.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

107. Bob Grumman
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Sun 5 Oct 1997

In response to my tentative definition of language poetry as poetry that "significantly breaks the rules of grammar and/or spelling for expressive effect..." Judy Roitman wants to know "Just what are we supposed to be expressing?" Answer: I dunno. Just something.

Frankly, it took me a while to figure out why I used "expressive," but then I remembered that traditional poets broke the rules of prose grammar a lot to get their meter right, and place rhymes, etc., or for purposes secondary to expressing something. I wanted to distinguish the way I think language poets break rules from that. Also I want to distinguish expressive breaking of rules as in Stein's "rose is a rose is a rose" from nonsense, or that which expresses nothing (or anything) to the auditor, however sincerely the auditor tries to get something from it.

For a little more on this, let me refer back to Aram Saroyan's "lighght," even though I use it all the time (and am surely the world's worst one-poem critic-- and the world's FIRST one-WORD critic). This poem, for me, expresses the litheness, expansiveness, silence, ethereality of light, and a metaphor of light as the spelling of "lighght," and much else. The breaking of orthographic rules makes it fresh but also yields the latter (implicit) metaphor, which is central to the poem. The poem no doubt expresses other things to other readers, and to Saroyan, but I think the neutral observer (and/or consensus of careful, sympathetic auditors) would agree that it expresses, at least in part, what I claim it does. "Xchhghghkkkkkk," on the other hand, expresses nothing, or whatever you want to read into it. Ooops, I meant "Xchhghghkkkkkkk," not "Xchhghghkkkkkk." Sorry.

Now to jump to Don Wellman's response which I found quite absorbing and sensible but in the final analysis not too useful for my admittedly narrow purposes, which are entirely taxonomic. I would ask him what he would call a person who tweaks or torques syntax (or some other aspect of grammar), or spelling, without intending to comment "on dominant modes of cultural production," or get involved in ideological concerns, and--in fact--does not, as "lighght" does not. Would they be other than language poets? It seems to me we need a larger category for language poetry that can then be broken down into genres of language poetry dependent on subject-matter. So I still maintain that what is (taxonomically) important about language poetry as I understand it, is that it tweaks syntax, not why it does so, or what the effects of the tweaking are.

Harold Rhenisch, I think, is most concerned with what various poets do as opposed to how to classify the kinds of poetry that are done. I certainly believe in mixing various poetries (and in paring poems down into single effects when that can express or be something moving), but in speaking of them, I want precise terms to be used. It shouldn't be hard to distinguish pure language poems (which focus on grammar or spelling) from pure visual poems (which focus on the interaction between visual and verbal imagery), and agree that many poems can be both visual and language poems (which I would call either compound visual or compound xenolinguistic poem depending on whether they were more visual or language-centered).

Not much to say to Thomas Bell except that I agree that many of my coinages are pretty pompous-sounding, and that I can only hope the pomp will wear off of them--or that I can think of simpler terms, which seems unlikely as I've tried for years to do that. That the accessibility is his main concern in his poetry (if I understand him right) is interesting but I'm not sure how it relates to taxonomy, unless we want to classify things by difficulty--but I don't, because what's difficult is too subjective. Visual poetry can be very difficult, for instance, though in a different way from language poetry. I continue to feel that defining poetry by the techniques it uses makes the most taxonomic sense.

And then there's Jacques Debrot's also interesting post which seems to accuse naming certain kinds of poetry "language poetry" of the old sin of reductionism (and I'm an unapologetic reductionist), based on the variability of one language poet, Rachel Blau DuPlessis's, work, but all her variability means to me is that sometimes she's a language poet, sometimes not.

I suspect I'm not responding to all the ideas that have wafted my way, and am nowtoo worn out to continue. I hope I've given a sufficient gist of where I stand, though.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

108. David R. Israel
Thomas Rain Crowe
Sun 5 Oct 1997

Poetas,

tonight I've been browsing Amazon.com's listings of versions of the Persian poet Hafiz [or Hafez] and came on a new volume done by a certain Thomas Rain Crowe (the 1st item listed below). The 2nd book noted below -- evidently Crowe's own work -- was published by Small Press Distribution. Hence my supposition that perhaps there are some on this list who could say a word or two about who this poet is, or something abt. his work -- esp. abt. either of the initial 2 titles noted below (or whatever). Am curious. (Regarding the Hafez, does Crowe happen to know Persian? From the name, one might infer the possibility that he's a Native American? . . .)

thanks,
d.i.

In Wineseller's Street : Rendering of Hafez
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1997 (Special Order)

The Laugharne Poems
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1997 Our Price: $10.00 + $0.85 special surcharge (Special Order)

New Native
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1993 Our Price: $9.95 + $0.85 special surcharge (Special Order)

Night Sun : An Initiation Trilogy (Boxed Set, 3 Books)
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1993 Our Price: $24.95 (Special Order)

The Personified Street
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1993 Our Price: $8.95 + $0.85 special surcharge (Special Order)

Water Form the Moon
Thomas Rain Crowe / Paperback / Published 1993 Our Price: $8.95 + $0.85 special surcharge (Special Order)

.
.....
.....
\\\

Her hair slicked back standing on the street

One stockinged foot toeing
the sidewalk

Her shoe in her hand. Looking intently into it

She pulls out the paper insole
to find the nail

That has been hurting her

****

A factory
has also another aspect, which we call the financial aspect
It gives people the power to buy (wages, dividends which are power to buy) but it is also the cause of prices
or values, financial, I mean financial values
It pays workers, and pays _for_ material.
What it pays in wages and dividends
stays fluid, as power to buy, and this power is less,
per forza, damn blast your intellex, is less than the total payments made by the factory
(as wages, dividends AND payments for raw material
bank charges etcetera
and all, that is the whole, that is the total of these is added into the total of prices
caused by that factory, any damn factory
and there is and must be therefore a clog
and the power to purchase can never (under the present system) catch up with prices at large,
and the light became so bright and so blindin'
in this layer of paradise
that the mind of man was bewildered.

(excerpted from Pound, Canto XXXVIII)

****

a footnote to another recent thread, re bly & williams (since "Proletarian Portrait" is by williams)--bly's "williams had no inner life" is pretty close to pure in the projection department. Bly, the man who chautauquas around like a rotarian of spirituality, talking and talking about the inner man, accuses williams, the smalltown doctor whose attic-typed poems are revelatory but require some consideration, some quiet time on behalf of both reader and writer, of everything he himself lacks. Williams can only answer him with silence.

↑ Index

110. David Bromige
p s to social tangles
Mon 6 Oct 1997

---

that is, of lacking what in fact he himself lacks.

↑ Index

111. Aviva Vogel
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Tom, a basic question that gnaws at me: what's to be gained for a reader that "works harder," when all the "work" in the world won't reveal to her/him what the "author" of a "text" intended (unless the intention was to offer a tabula rasa for the reader to project self on to)?

↑ Index

112. Aviva Vogel
Re: p s to social tangles
Mon 6 Oct 1997

---

what does he lack? I'm always interested in specifics...Thanks!

↑ Index

113. Aviva Vogel
Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
Mon 6 Oct 1997

What's your take on Bly's work? What has your experience of his poetry been? And why would you, personally, consider Williams' work more "spiritual" (to use a vague, but I hope understandable, term)?

↑ Index

114. Tom Orange
another attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

to take advantage of the time delay the list digest affords by tying together what bob grumman and don wellman are saying as i think there's a niche there for what i'm trying to get at

when i gently accused bob of taking textual xenolinguistics "at the expense" of philosopho-political agendae or lets just call them as don does critiques of production, i was overstating. bob corrects me by saying he takes the former "ASIDE" from the latter in an effort to get at an "objective" definition etc. fair enough. first question then is can you so easily put the latter aside, bracket it if prefer phenomenological parlance.

which takes me to what struck me in don's post as particularly to-my-point. don talks about "revealing social facts through the tweaking...of received language."

so second question. or prhaps an hypothesis. what the vendlers and the rest of those who reject langpo fail to see is precisely the way the tweaking reveals social facts -- as revealed in the language itself or the xenolinguistics. frankly i dont always see it myself. cept thru the narrow chinks of my caverns.

btw bob, the vendler essay's in a book called the challenge of periodization edited by lawrence besserman. agreed, hers is an apporach tres en retard sur son epoque, hence worth checking out.

t.

↑ Index

115. Tom Beard
Re: Sokal's Beard & Beard's Sokal
Mon 6 Oct 1997

I don't want to start a flame war here. If my initial post on this subject appeared aggressive (or defensive), it was because your article had a tone that I interpreted as distinctly unfriendly to anyone who is either a working scientist or who (like myself) grew up in a scientific milieu and still views science as making useful contributions to our undersatanding of the world. I hope my second post had a more measured tone, and approached the points that you made in a cool-headed manner.

We must have read different popular books on science. I haven't read many myself, recently, but in my adolescence I read a lot of Sagan, Hofstadter, Dennett, Dawkins and Mandelbrot. They have helped form my views, not only on science and mathematics, but also on philosophy, politics and (yes) poetics. If some science writers have a tendency "to wax poetic", is it too generous of me to believe that this is not "by virtue of the primacy of the sciences" but out of a genuine love for their subjects, and to convey the awe of natural phenomena that too many people believe is removed by scientific investigation?

I'm not sure that it is "widely accepted" that either Logical Positivism or Strong AI have failed. I hadn't heard that the Strong AI community had either set themselves a deadline to achieve machine consciousness or been shown that such an achievement was a priori impossible.

> "Adolescent, chauvinism, bigotry?" Let me quote from Barrow and Tipler's Anthropic Cosmological Principle. "...the arguments one hears today against considering intelligent computers to be persons and against giving them human rights have precise parallels in the nineteenth century arguments against giving blacks and women full human rights." Is this the domain of science or is it "false omniscience"? You think B. and T. might be in a little bit over their heads. And of course the authors provide no historical information to back up their statement.

I think that B&T might be referring generically to those who argued that blacks or women lacked the intelligence or humanity of white males, and were thus less than human and deserved fewer rights. In this case there is a direct parallel with those who claim that intelligent computers (and I assume that B&T are talking of some hypothetical future development) deserve fewer rights than homo sapiens, and I don't see how a call to extend their rights can be seen as "adolescent, chauvinis(t)" or "bigot(ed)".

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

116. David R. Israel
Re: another attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Po!

(a variant on the urban vocative Yo) -- am getting Poetics in digest now, so it's interesting to read a thread like this one en masse . . .

here's my mite to the myre --

Harold Rhenisch wrote,

> Luigi,
>
> you wrote:
>
> "i believe the thread here is on what specific features distinguish > the aesthetic movement called "Language Poetry" from other aesthetics/schools/tendencies...."

>
> Thanks for the correction.
>
> A parallel discussion could be on what characteristics "Language Poetry" shares with other aesthetics, just so we don't lose something vital in the process of definition. For instance, if Language Poetry and Intermedia Poetry both work to break boundaries, say, they could be seen as parallel manifestations of a larger project, perhaps as yet undefined. To see them in such terms might help focus the definition of each. Or it might not. But it would be fun trying.

At risk of (a) pedestrianism or (b) overbroadness (not to mention other errors et ironies not included in this abecedarian roster), doesn't the word pretty well cover all (or is that both?) of the above?

POSTMODERN(ism)

/ / /

Quip: There are two kinds of poetry schools:

those that posit / admit of [bounded / definable / atomistic?] poetry schools, and those that don't.

yours,
d.i.

p.s. to Joe Amato: good luck w/ elevenyer (give or take)

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

117. Susan Wheeler
Poetics Digest
Mon 6 Oct 1997

I for one think Don Wellman's definition ace, and is what I have always understood as what constitutes (-ed?) language poetry in an historical sense. Work with common strategies that does not share the social underpinning I have always thought of as either satellite work or a later generation's development/"misprision," with no sufficient appellate as of yet.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

118. henry goo
Re: another attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

I 2nd Susan Wheeler's opinion & also applaud Bob G's independent efforts. D. Wellman's post for one thing revealed connections between the work of the lang-poohs & the soc-artists in Russia at the same period. Speaking as a lang-pooh BASHER myself, the bashing seems to come from 2 different directions - one, from Vendors of the Establishment who feel threatened by it (I mean the poetry establishment), and two, from people like me who miss the affirmation ("holism"?) denied by "tweaking", who would like to find the synthesis under the critique. Call me naive, but I think poetry since a while back has something to do with praise. So that's another resource for them's that can find something to sing about in this foxhole... dust & ashes & unclean lips O hallelujah you dog-gone sinner-folk... Wellman said it himself when he said at mid-70s political-social discourse was worn out & co-opted & people had turned to local organizing. Well those people are still there, some of them. (not me, I'm just a coyote) Maybe the affirmation is in the silence. As in "I hate (dead) speech." Silence - whut that? But you begin to see (thanks to Wellman) that language poetry is not a "technique" divorced from a very particular & salt-laden & lemon-scented & methane-chlorox-bleached-calcified historical situation. & we in it. & it ain't a degree program. - Henry gould

↑ Index

119. Michael Magee
Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
Mon 6 Oct 1997

From: Aviva Vogel <[redacted]>

What's your take on Bly's work? What has your experience of his poetry been?
And why would you, personally, consider Williams' work more "spiritual" (to use a vague, but I hope understandable, term)?"

Not sure if this was addressed to me or addressed generally but I figured I'd answer it anyway. I've read plenty of Bly's work, though I haven't followed him as if I was his pollster or anything. As I said in my last post, my main issue with him is that I think his apotheosization of "the inner life" is an intellectual (an poetic) sham. My sense has always been that ultimately he means "Robert Bly's inner life" and not much else. Take this:

"Rising from a bed, where I dreamt
Of long rides past castles and hot coals,
the sun lies happily on my knees;
I have suffered and survived the night
Bathed in dark water, like any blade of grass."

Aside from its containing a bathetic rip-off of Whitman, it operates on what I consider a fatal assumption, nameley the assumption that thr reader should give a shit what Robert Bly dreamt last night, apart from that dreaming having any function as socially mediated communication. Why? Poetry is not speech, not a newspaper, not a telegram, but it is most certainly communication. Whitman may have posed as "any blade of grass" but that pose was one of many in a nexus of insistently social poses. Believe too dreamily in the importance of your inner life and "the sun lies happily on my knees" is exactly what you'll get. Bly says he wants to get away from "the need to think of everything in terms of work," but it strikes me that this need is based on a definition of work which is far too narrow. Williams knew - look at "Proletarian Portrait," "Fine Wrok with Pitch and Copper" - that poetry was work; or at least that it was better imagined as such.

-Mike.

↑ Index

120. Maria Damon
Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
Mon 6 Oct 1997

At 8:31 AM -0400 10/6/97, Michael Magee wrote:
>From: Aviva Vogel <[redacted]>
>
>Take this:
>
>"Rising from a bed, where I dreamt
>Of long rides past castles and hot coals,
>the sun lies happily on my knees;
>I have suffered and survived the night
>Bathed in dark water, like any blade of grass."
>
>Aside from its containing a bathetic rip-off of Whitman, it contains a dangling modifier in the first coupla lines, no? --md

↑ Index

121. Mark Prejsnar
Re: language poetry bashing
Mon 6 Oct 1997

I think Henry's response to my posting is reasonable and well-put. Thanx.

I also like what Bill Burmeister has said....

My main take on broad discussions of LangPo, tends to be different than a lot of peoples: I agree with Perelman and other principles involved with LangPo, that the most useful use of the term is the narrowest: as a label of convenience refering to a loose cluster of poets, numbering two or three dozen maybe, who moved in a certain direction together in the 1970s and 1980s. Rather than using the term as a synonym for, "rather disjunctive writing showing an awareness of the formal conceptions of modernism and uninterested in the suburban politesse of the linguistically inert workshop lyric." The latter, describes my work and that of an awful lot of contemporary poets...To say we're all LangPotes is rather like saying we're all "postmodern american poets" or something....Gets you nowhere. The Language circle made very specific and focused (but also in other ways very broad and polydirectional) interventions in the poetry scene, over 25 years or whatever. To understand where we are (I would argue) it's best to keep clear that we are us, working today, and the Language circle was a specific moment, which has influenced many of us, but from which we are distinguishable. I think Bill's parallel to surrealism is very promising in this regard: Think of someone like (pratically my all-time favorite poet) Rene Char..His involvement with Breton and the official Surrealist International was brief tho intense. After breaking with them he went on to make one of the most vibrant and ambitious bodies of work to derive from the 20th century surrealist stream. Tho he's often called a surrealist by people, it's important to what he did that he didn't see himself as part of that overall label. (Similar things could be said of Vallejo, Huidrobo and others in a number of different countries and languages, as well as poets descending from Char's influence like the fascinating G. Sobin...)

And one other point about why I and my friends are not "Language poets"...one of the main functions of the label in recent years has been to isolate and dismiss poets working in a less conservative vein than the person using the term: more and more it functions (when used to mean "formal innovation" or "nonlinear writing" or something) as a boundry-drawing term and a term of abuse.

All of that said, there's lots about the Language circle's work and theory that is rich and worth discussing. As a left activist I have more than once meditated here about the political connection, for instance, and the concept of unfinished work as inherently radical and democratic (challenging the reader to take part in "finishing" the poem, rather than stonily accepting its "authority" as a great work of art, a sort of intellectual boss..) and the interesting parallels to Brecht's esthetic ideas.

Etc...

Mark P.

↑ Index

122. Mark Prejsnar
Re: an attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Rod,

I thought yours was an excellent post. Yes, insofar as we're looking back at the last 40 years of poetry in this country, to ask ourselves where we are, the single most fruitful exercise is (as you say) to ask how the more austere anti-"voice" LangPo creates synthesis points/interference patterns/eddys/undercurrents against the broad humanisms of the "New American Poetry" currents.

Many of us still feel edgy (pun wasn't intended) about the way soporific academic mainstreamers champion what they feel unthreatened by, in the work of a Ginsberg, say. All the more reason (to bring this thread back to the person who started it) to value work which seems especially to be an extension in contemporary terms of the sharp springy colloquialism of a Ted Berrigan--such as the new Wallace book Aldon has alluded to, Nothing Happened and Beside I Wasn't There, which I strongly recommend to the Listpersons....

Mark P.

↑ Index

123. Douglas Barbour
Re: social tangles
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Bravo David B for that post & the reprints. But especially for such a pithy 'placing' of Bly & his failure of sense, let alone reading.

Yup: those poems are 'containers/containments of "social urgency"' but they also do a lot more. which is also true of many kinds of langpo (& certainly whatever we call Rachel Blau duPlessis's often amazing work). I admire Bob Grumman's passion for taxonomy but remain more intrigued myself by the work that crosses boundaries... taxonomic ones as much as any...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

I have not seen a collected grouping, but I've been reading the "Drafts" sequence in many little magazines, for some years now, and they strike me as maybe about the most exciting poetry project going...BTW..

Mark P.

↑ Index

125. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Raworth & Dorn/Fraser Reading

Mon 6 Oct 1997

For those in the Denver/Boulder area:

Tom Raworth & Ed Dorn (who evidently is feeling pretty well) will be reading at the University of Denver, Tuesday, Oct. 14, at 7:30 PM in the Dupont Room of the Mary Reed Bldg.

Kathleen Fraser will be reading at the Naropa Performing Arts Center in Boulder, Wednesday, Oct. 15 at 7:30 PM.

↑ Index

126. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Poetics Digest

Mon 6 Oct 1997

On Mon, 6 Oct 1997, Susan Wheeler wrote:

> I for one think Don Wellman's definition ace, and is what I have always understood as what constitutes (-ed?) language poetry in an historical sense. Work with common strategies that does not share the social underpinning I have always thought of as either satellite work or a later generation's development/"misprision," with no sufficient appellate as of yet.
>
> Susan Wheeler
> [redacted]

Yes,....I also thought that Don's post was helpful and interesting; and I believe you're right that there are different moments in the flow of poetic tactics...In fact, the eary work of Clark Coolidge and Susan Howe (with Palmer somewhere in the middle??) define two points, one very political the other not (on the surface); and this dual nature can be seen in later developments after 1972...But nonetheless, as you say, the core of work the Language circle did thereafter was highly political; and later poets influenced by them have not always cared about that skein of concerns...

↑ Index

127. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Robert Bly/Wm. Carlos Wms.
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Mike M's reply about Bly's work was good.....

It overlaps considerably in its basic points with a very polemical piece by Eliot Weinberger which is included in his book Written Reaction. I have many, many problems with Weinberger on other specific poetry issues (politically he and I are pretty much marching in the same left wing, and about politix he is often eloquent and passionate); ....But I enjoyed the pissed-off Bly essay a lot, and recommend it as an extension of what Mike says about the many problems in Bly's poetry...

The only thing I would add is about the specific music of Bly's work, the actual verse (and prose) per se..There is a quiet stillness which he wants to derive from the surrealist idiom (and from the hispanic and scandanavian poets he has translated, sometimes not too badly); I understand the attraction of this sort of hushed terseness..(The quintessential example, especially considering how lionized he is by mainstreamers, is of course James Wright) But long, long ago it degenerated in BLy's work into almost complete inertness!

Mark P.

↑ Index

128. Judy Roitman
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Mon 6 Oct 1997

> In response to my tentative definition of language poetry as poetry that "significantly breaks the rules of grammar and/or spelling for expressive effect..." Judy Roitman wants to know "Just what are we supposed to be expressing?" Answer: I dunno. Just something.

But that's an important point. Is there something to be expressed? My vague and not very precise notion of langpo is that the notion of "something to be expressed" just isn't present in this sort of poetry, whether we want to call it language or post-language or proto-post-language or whatever.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----

http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

129. cris cheek
Re: another attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

> Call me naive, but I think poetry
> since a while back has something to do with praise.

i for one wish that your own messages exhibited more.

So much (well, perhaps not so much) thought, time and energy expended on the fins of the carp. Be a priest. All hail!

Who needs enemies.
love and love
cris

↑ Index

130. Maria Damon
Re: Poetics Digest
Mon 6 Oct 1997

At 11:36 AM -0400 10/6/97, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>On Mon, 6 Oct 1997, Susan Wheeler wrote:
>
>> I for one think Don Wellman's definition ace, and is what I have always >> understood as what constitutes (-ed?) language poetry in an historical >> sense. Work with common strategies that does not share the social >> underpinning I have always thought of as either satellite work or a later >> generation's development/"misprision," with no sufficient appellate as >>of yet.
>>
>> Susan Wheeler
>> [redacted]
>
>
>Yes,....I also thought that Don's post was helpful and interesting; and I >believe you're right that there are different moments in the flow of >poetic tactics...In fact, the eary work of Clark Coolidge and Susan Howe >(with Palmer somewhere in the middle??) define two points, one very >political the other not (on the surface); and this dual nature can be seen >in later developments after 1972...But nonetheless, as you say, the core >of work the Language circle did thereafter was highly political; and later >poets influenced by them have not always cared about that skein of >concerns...

i for three found don's post helpful, the kind of thing one can gve to students to help them "get it." after all is said and done, though, and i know we've gone round and round on this, while langpo clearly has a politics, it seems to some-how stand apart from the muck and mire of the everyday, as if that latter huge welter of "stuff" were too hopelessly contaminated to engage (stuff like identity, etc). i can't help but wonder about this, though i myself am an aesthete rather than a politico when all's said and done. i guess one reason i keep yammering on and on about cultural studies is that i'm not sure a poetics can do "it" all on its own. etc. your pal, maria d

↑ Index

131. Bobbie West
readings (HERE)
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Rod Smith wrote:

>makes me think of the Raworth: "The narrative line is only as boring as what is hung on it." <

Speaking of "the Raworth," does anyone care to give a report on the recent readings at HERE in NY?

↑ Index

132. main call for reviews
Mon 6 Oct 1997

---

currently reading short reviews (300-600 wrds)
for new mag of poetry & poetics.
essays will also be considered.

please backchannel w proposal by 17 october.

best,
dan featherston

↑ Index

133. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Readings/Help
Mon 6 Oct 1997

My apologies to all if this shows up twice. I seem to be having a server problem:

_____
For those in the Denver/Boulder area:

Tom Raworth & Ed Dorn (who evidently is feeling pretty well) will be reading at the University of Denver, Tuesday, Oct. 14, at 7:30 PM in the Dupont Room of the Mary Reed Bldg.

Kathleen Fraser will be reading at the Naropa Performing Arts Center in Boulder, Wednesday, Oct. 15 at 7:30 PM. _____ A friend of mine is feverishly preparing for her PhD. comps and asks what, besides _The Pound Era_, offers a good, broad overview of modernist American poetic practice and theory? Please backchannel any suggestions.

Thanks,
Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

134. Aldon Nielsen
bashing Basho
Mon 6 Oct 1997

1) at the risk of repeating myself the risk of repeting myself repeating Ron Silliman, I still think the best definition of a "language poet" is that offered by Ron Silliman some years back, repeated by me here some years later, to the effect that a "language poet" is "anyone who has ever been accused of being a language poet."

2) Not to be outdone by language poets, Senator John Ashcroft, in explaining to his honorable colleagues why the NEA should be cut off, held up a placard his staff had prepared for him to display (this was, after all, on C-Span) -- The placard quoted in its entirety a poem, no doubt recognizable to many on this list, that reads:

LIGHGHT

This poem was Ashcroft's example of wasteful and elitist practices at the NEA -- to quote the Village Voice's coverage of the rare moment of literary history that followed: "Only after Barbara Boxer called him on it did he admit that this grant was awarded back in the 60s. He countered by saying it was one of the few NEA horrors he could hold up on television without offending viewers."

3) One of my colleagues in the sociology department here at Loyola Marymount just published an article on suburban, middle-class drug dealers -- what caught my eye was the periodical in which the journal appears, _The Journal of Deviant Behavior_. Imagine being rejected by the editors of that one!

4) Someone asked here about the Harryette Mullen taklk I quoted from in _Black Chant_. Harryette tells me a version of the essay appeared in a recent _Callaloo_, but she didn't have the citation handy. I'l try to look it up and post the info. here -- my own copies of the mag. are in another part of the state --

↑ Index

135. Thomas Bell
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Mon 6 Oct 1997

While i don't want to push the analogy too hard, it seems to me these two opinions were often in the air in Jackson Pollock's early years. Still in the air in many quarters. But come to think of it lagpo would not want to claim JP as a forefather, would it (theyor he or she)? tom bell

At 12:43 AM 10/6/97 -0400, Aviva Vogel wrote: >Tom, a basic question that gnaws at me: what's to be gained for a reader >that "works harder," when all the "work" in the world won't reveal to her/him >what the "author" of a "text" intended (unless the intention was to offer a >tabula rasa for the reader to project self on to)?
>----------
At 11:34 AM 10/6/97 -0500, Judy Roitman wrote:
>>In response to my tentative definition of language poetry as poetry that >>"significantly breaks the rules of grammar and/or spelling for >>expressive effect..." Judy Roitman wants to know "Just what are >>we supposed to be expressing?" Answer: I dunno. Just something.
>>
>
>But that's an important point. Is there something to be expressed? My >vague and not very precise notion of langpo is that the notion of >"something to be expressed" just isn't present in this sort of poetry, >whether we want to call it language or post-language or proto-post-language >or whatever.
>

↑ Index

136. Maria Damon

job info fwd

Mon 6 Oct 1997

Date: Mon, 6 Oct 1997 10:35:50 -0500 (CDT)
From: Betty L Agee <[redacted]>
To: Adjunct Faculty <[redacted]>,
W John Archer <[redacted]>,
Ayers L Bagley <[redacted]>,
Kent R Bales <[redacted]>,
Hyman Berman <[redacted]>,
William C Beyer <[redacted]>, McKinley Boston Jr <[redacted]>,
Kinley Brauer <[redacted]>,
Rose M Brewer <[redacted]>,
Roger D Clemence <[redacted]>,
Maria Damon <[redacted]>,
David O Born <[redacted]>,
Hazel F Dicken-Garcia <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
Angela D Dillard <[redacted]>,
John M Dolan <[redacted]>,
Arthur I Geffen <[redacted]>,
Philip J Gersmehl <[redacted]>, George D Green <[redacted]>,
Edward Griffin <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
[redacted],
Judith A Martin <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
[redacted],
March L Krotee <[redacted]>,
Barbara Laslett <[redacted]>, Josephine D Lee <[redacted]>,
Richard D Leppert <[redacted]>,
Alex J Lubet <[redacted]>,
Mary Jo Kane <[redacted]>,
Ronald C McCurdy <[redacted]>,
Toni A McNaron <[redacted]>,
Russell R Menard <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
Lisa A Norling <[redacted]>,

Jean M O'Brien-Kehoe <[redacted]>,
Joanna O'Connell <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
Paula Rabinowitz <[redacted]>,
Nancy L Roberts <[redacted]>,
Guillermo Rojas <[redacted]>,
Marty Roth <[redacted]>,
Roger P Miller <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
[redacted],
Sara M Evans <[redacted]>,
Thomas M Scanlan <[redacted]>,
Colleen Sheehy <[redacted]>,
Robert B Silberman <[redacted]>,
Allan H Spear <[redacted]>,
Ellen J Stekert <[redacted]>, Terence W Ball <[redacted]>,
Dennis N Valdes <[redacted]>,
Rudolph J Vecoli <[redacted]>,
John S Wright <[redacted]>,
Jack Zipes <[redacted]>,
Jacquelyn N Zita <[redacted]>
Subject: Job Notice: please forward who might be interested

ASIAN AMERICAN. The American Studies Program at the University of Minnesota invites applications for a tenure-track Assistant Professor in Asian American Studies, to begin September 16, 1998. A Research emphasis in the study of Asian Americans is required as is a Ph.D., evidence of good teaching and productive scholarship. Candidates will teach Asian American courses and in the core American Studies curriculum. This is a full-to,e. 9month position. Candidates should send a letterof application, a c.v., a sample of scholarly work, transcripts and three letters of recommendation by November 15, 1997 to Betty Agee, American Studies Program, 104 Scott Hall, 72 Pleasant Street S.E., Minneapolis, MN 55455-0225.

Betty L. Agee
American Studies, 104 Scott Hall
72 Pleasant Street S.E.
University of Minnesota, Mpls, MN 55455-0225
Tel. [redacted] or [redacted]
Fax. [redacted]

↑ Index

137. Harold Rhenisch
Re: another attempt
Mon 6 Oct 1997

David Israel,

You wrote:

"There are two kinds of poetry schools: those that posit / admit of >[bounded / definable / atomistic?] poetry schools, and those that don't."

To simplify dangerously, would that be similar to two kinds of imagination: the one that led to catholicism and the other to gnosticism? One Apollonean; one Protean?

I confess, I am intrigued by the idea that some literary activities might be wrongly named and that a dialogue between the bounded and unbounded schools might lead down some interesting avenues. Lowell gets placed as a Confessionalist, for instance, but standing back from the times a bit, might it not be fruitful to set up a parallel system, wherein he would belong to the school of doleful irony or some such. He would have a lot of company from all over the map.

Just a thought.

Thanks for the clarity.

Harold

↑ Index

138. Hoa Nguyen
Kind Regards
Mon 6 Oct 1997

Hi. This is Dale Smith. Not Hoa. Nothing I say here should implicate her in any way. In fact, we unsubbed recently, but she has resubbed briefly to access the Poetics Archive.

My reason for writing is that I simply cannot respond to all of the backchannel messages many of you have sent to me the past week. So I thought I would address the list briefly.

Re: my thoughts on Language poetry, please refer to my post, "Social Tangles," of Sept. 29 (or 30th). To simplify that post, let me just say that so-called 'experimental' post-language forms of writing often betray the very issues the writer believes he or she addresses. In fact, formal gestures often confuse and obscure that which should be quite clear. These forms are, quite often, totalitarian in nature, because they demand the reader's servitude in disentangling the work's 'meaning.' Formal gesures often obscure or limit the social impulse for creating poetry in the first place. My problem is not so much with Language Poetry per se. I think that Silliman's impulse was, and has been, mostly honorable. And certainly, Lyn Hejinian has been attentive to the history of the poem for a long time and continues to work through her concerns for its potential. But these writers approached the poem from another side, a so-called 'traditional' side, 'tradition' meaning only that they read through the complex history of poetry in this language and others. But to younger writers I encounter, the 'method' has replaced a deeper search for personal, formal expression. And the confusion of form and impulse is painfully clear all too often. What I look for in poems I publish is a finished work that allows the impulse of the poem's occasion to be integrated into a compatible form. The results of such work often are remarkably effective due to a high regard for the emotional integrity of both the poem and the author. But, I've said more than I intended. My original post, looking back, is more clear and to the point.

On a final note, I do thank every one who has responded to Mike and Dale's. We are currently producing a final run to keep up with the demand from many on this list ranging from Juliana Spahr to Anselm Hollo. Thank you all for your support.

In Absentia,
Dale Smith

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

139. Bob Grumman

Re: Defining Language Poetry

Mon 6 Oct 1997

I have to admit that the number and diversity of the responses I and others have been getting regarding what language poetry is has me pretty befuddled. I probably need to download all pertinent data and go off to my tower for a few weeks to assimilate it. No time for that, though, so here are some answers to some of the questions that have been raised in my direction, first Judy Roitman's about what langpo is expressing. In my first message about that I did go on to show what one possibly language poem was expressing, and say a few things about what I meant when I used the term, "expressing." I should add now that I also use the term to distinguish langpo that uses some kind of broken syntax to express something (a feeling, a philosophical stance, an image, whatever) from poetry that break syntax to break syntax, or to follow some rule (an example would be someone who switched verbs with subjects throughout an appropriated text, which would be a use of langpo technique but not necessarily expressive; an would be example someone switched who verbs with subjects throughout an appropriated text, would which be a use of langpo technique but not necessarily expressive--as this last is not, so far as I can see; I mean, the line is still expressive, but the re-arrangement of words has not increased its expressiveness; or, if it has, I still believe in theory that some langpo technique could be used that didn't increase a text's expressiveness). Just to make sure to confuse everyone else as much as I've been, I'll add that expressiveness for me means the ability to express more than nonsense or nothingness or what-it-is, the latter being what "jshdntuie" might be said to express--that is, "jshdntuie," expresses "jshdntuie." I wouldn't say it does but there are those who would.

I can't understand how a poem could not express something. If "something to be expressed" isn't present in language poetry, what is? I can understand music or sound poetry, or painting or visual poetry, being itself, and not expressing something, but I can't understand poetry's doing that since poetry must contain words (I think) and words must express something, being symbols. I admit to feeling particularly fuddled here. And missing something useful.

David Israel's suggestion that we just call language poetry postmodernist poetry is HORRIBLE!!! The term is too broad and confused. And stupidly time-dependent. The only worse literary term I know of is "New Criticism," which is now, what: 60-years-old? My own taxonomic tactic is to call most of the newest poetry (but also surrealist poetry) "burstnorm poetry," and make language poetry a subclass of that, renamed to avoid confusion, and because the term, "language poetry," is used to many incompatible ways to be of much use. Then I break it down further, based on what techniques are used.

To Tom Orange's question as to whether one can put aside questions of things like Don Wellman's "critiques of production," I say, "Sure." Those things are just subject matter, useless taxonomically because any poem of any kind can be about anything. It is, for me, the least descriptively important thing that can be said about a poem--but it's always available: one can always throw in what a poem is about when describing it. For instance: One can say of a poem that it is a "variant-pronoun poem" (a kind of "xenolinguistic poem") critiquing, say, the commodification of middle initials.

Again, I don't think I've covered everything I ought to have. Apologies to those whose points I've scanted, but I'm already ready for bed.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

140. Alan Jen Sondheim
charn
Mon 6 Oct 1997

-

charn

'They're waiting
foor a new wave oof reasoon'
 I'm boorne new wave oof reasoon durath
A great crawn af fire, spiked acrass Sud-West Nihan Luxuriantly-Integrating Mistress Deity drew Lightning
Acrass Braken Back and Braw
Barne Jennifer-Weird acrass Wired and Naw Naw Naw
 Blooood breast milk breast milk breast bloood breast
'Tell them, thoough 'tis an awful thing too die, ('Twas e'en too thee) yet the dread path oonce trood,
Heaven lifts its everlasting poortals high,
And bids the pure in heart behoold their Good.'
 Ignoorant mind pure mind pure mind ignoorant mind
Barne Jennifer-Weird acrass Wired and Naw Naw Naw
Far flood droor read doa, tourn dour, bier-born Julu caught loost, roored against what? o kaze kita kaze plate of sky wroting the droor remains loosened jennifer-julu dead black pen ashed for less Barne Jennifer-Weird acrass Wired and Naw Naw Naw

↑ Index

141. Kevin Varrone
Ronald Johnson/Ark
Tue 7 Oct 1997

I'm wondering if anyone on the list can point me to criticism on Ronald Johnson's ARK. It's my understanding there is something explanatory written by Johnson himself in a past issue of Chicago Review, but I do not know which issue, or of any other criticism on ARK

If anyone knows of anything, please backchannel.

Thanks,
Kevin

↑ Index

142. Schuchat Simon
Re: job info fwd
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Maria, what would be typical or likely course titles for Asian American Studies?

How would the American studies program deal with works by Asian Americans or Asians in America writing about America in Asian languages?

Is it a new program or already existing?

xiexie & domoo

↑ Index

143. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Kevin--I don't have the Chicago Review citation here--it's at home. Get Sagetrieb 14.3 too--picture of Johnson on the cover, piece by him on Bunting's Briggflatts, long piece on ARK by Peter O'Leary, and a review of ARK by William Benton. Actually, here's the citation: Chicago Review 42.1 (1996), "An Interview With R.J." by Peter O'Leary. There's also a monograph by Dirk Stratton "Ronald Johnson" Boise State U Western Writers Series No. 122 (1996). etc., Sylvester

> *I'm wondering if anyone on the list can point me to criticism on Ronald Johnson's ARK. It's my understanding there is something explanatory written by Johnson himself in a past issue of Chicago Review, but I do not know which issue, or of any other criticism on *ARK
>
> If anyone knows of anything, please backchannel.
>
> Thanks,
> Kevin

↑ Index

144. David W. Clippinger
Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
Tue 7 Oct 1997

You are referring to volume 41 of the Chicago Review. Also, Peter O'Leary wrote a wonderful essay on Johnson, "Ark as Spiritual Phenomenon" in the Winter 1995 issue of _Sagetrieb_. Johnson also has an essay on Bunting in that _SAgetrieb_issue.

All best,
David Clippinger

At 12:27 AM 10/7/97 -0400, you wrote:
> I'm wondering if anyone on the list can point me to criticism on >Ronald Johnson's ARK. It's my understanding there is something >explanatory written by Johnson himself in a past issue of Chicago >Review, but I do not know which issue, or of any other criticism on ARK
>
> If anyone knows of anything, please backchannel.
>
> Thanks,
> Kevin
>
>

↑ Index

145. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Tue 7 Oct 1997

What is expressed in an Ornette Coleman piece? A Merce Cunningham performance? What is expressed in a painting by Picasso or Kline?? A Richard Foreman play?

I strongly recommend to you a sensative poet called Robert Lowell (and come to think of it, another named Robert Bly)...They have lots to "express"...

Mark P.

On Mon, 6 Oct 1997, Judy Roitman wrote:

> In response to my tentative definition of language poetry as poetry that "significantly breaks the rules of grammar and/or spelling for expressive effect..." Judy Roitman wants to know "Just what are we supposed to be expressing?" Answer: I dunno. Just something.
>
> But that's an important point. Is there something to be expressed? My vague and not very precise notion of langpo is that the notion of "something to be expressed" just isn't present in this sort of poetry, whether we want to call it language or post-language or proto-post-language or whatever.
>
> ---

> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ---
> Note new area code
> ---
> http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/
> ---

↑ Index

146. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Poetics Digest

Tue 7 Oct 1997

> i for three found don's post helpful, the kind of thing one can gve to students to help them "get it." after all is said and done, though, and i know we've gone round and round on this, while langpo clearly has a politics, it seems to somehow stand apart from the muck and mire of the everyday, as if that latter huge welter of "stuff" were too hopelessly contaminated to engage (stuff like identity, etc). i can't help but wonder about this, though i myself am an aesthete rather than a politico when all's said and done. i guess one reason i keep yammering on and on about cultural studies is that i'm not sure a poetics can do "it" all on its own.
> etc. your pal, maria d

Speaking as a politico (I always respond to that word by picturing some pot-bellied Democratic ward boss with a big cigar in Boston or Chicago....) I simply respond as differently as is possible. I refer you to a text like Andrews' I Don't Have Any Paper So Shut Up for engaging a huge welter of contaminated stuff; much of Bernstein, and Silliman's Alphabet, for confronting the slippery dynamix of identity and politix and the urban social matrix; to expand very slightly my own narrow construction of the term LangPo, perhaps, (but these are all people I hear called LangPotes all the time) black and woman writers such such as Mackey, Hunt, Harryman and Mullen are really obviously doing some of the most electric and vivd political writing today...

Me, I don't think we have to write badly to engage politix fully....

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

147. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Kind Regards
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Dale,

I certainly find your post confusing...If Silliman and Hejinian are "honorable" then who isn't so honorable? And what exactly does honor have to do with it anyway??

No doubt you have very good reasons for publishing who and what you do...But I'm not especially moved by your line of argument. Poetry should have all sorts of intensities, not all of 'em directly addressing politix and social issues.

All I can do is to say I certainly reject the overall thrust of your post..I think. But it would require more specifics to be sure we disagree and why..Just who is an example of this horrible dishonor you associate with experimental-poetry-in-quotes???

It was nifty of you to reverse the usual formula, and claim that these poet "en-slave" the reader by forcing her to "disentangle" meanings, and that this is to-talitarian....I actually find your whole welter of highly-charged verbiage fairly preposterous..

I continue to think langpo theory has it right (or closer to right) that inert and linear writing is rather more authoritarian. (Using the T-word kinda muddies the waters, it's so over the top and inappropriate...)

Mark P.

↑ Index

148. Maria Damon
Re: job info fwd
Tue 7 Oct 1997

At 3:59 PM +0800 10/7/97, Schuchat Simon wrote:
>Maria, what would be typical or likely course titles for Asian American >Studies?

history, literature and other expressive cultures etc.
>
>How would the American studies program deal with works by Asian Ameri-cans >or Asians in America writing about America in Asian languages?

i think the assumption is that most courses wd be taught in english, though individual works may be recommended in other languages when appropriate.

>
>Is it a new program or already existing?

American Studies is about 50 yrs old at U of M, but they've never had an Asian American hire before. so this person would be designing whatever asian-american components there wd be in the curriculum.
>
>xiexie & domoo

↑ Index

149. Judy Roitman
Re: Ronald Johnson/Ark
Tue 7 Oct 1997

> *I'm wondering if anyone on the list can point me to criticism on Ronald Johnson's ARK. It's my understanding there is something explanatory written by Johnson himself in a past issue of Chicago Review, but I do not know which issue, or of any other criticism on ARK
>
> If anyone knows of anything, please backchannel.
>
> Thanks,
> Kevin

Please don't backchannel. Thanks.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

150. LAURA MORIARTY
non announcement
Tue 7 Oct 1997

---

non is a new poetics Web site. It will be mostly short essays, reviews etc., with some poetry and prose. Each issue will have a theme. The first is emptiness.

Work by Norma Cole, Dodie Bellamy, Charles Bernstein, Leslie Scalapino, Kit Robinson, Norman Fischer and Beverly Dahlen. More work is expected. Updates will be constant.

I will be adding art and a links page ASAP.

http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty

↑ Index

151. William Burmeister Prod
Re: language poetry bashing
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> surrealism is very promising in this regard: Think of someone like (pratically my all-time favorite poet) Rene Char..His involvement with Breton and the official Surrealist International was brief tho intense. After breaking with them he went on to make one of the most vibrant and ambitious bodies of work to derive from the 20th century surrealist stream. Tho he's often called a surrealist by people, it's important to what he did that he didn't see himself as part of that overall label

Mark and others,

What is there available and in print of Rene Char's work nowadays? All I have is this relatively slim New Directions collected works volume. Glad to hear that someone else on the list thinks as much of him as I do.

Bill B.

↑ Index

152. Michael Coffey
Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply
Tue 7 Oct 1997

>>> Mark Prejsnar <[redacted]> 10/07/97 09:28am >>>
What is expressed in an Ornette Coleman piece? A Merce Cunningham performance? What is expressed in a painting by Picasso or Kline??
A Richard Foreman play?

I strongly recommend to you a sensative poet called Robert Lowell (and come to think of it, another named Robert Bly)...They have lots to "express"...

Mark P.

I don't think that "expressiveness" itself is to be maligned; is there anything wrong with people expressing themselves or working out sensations based on their own lives or loves or troubles or concerns? of course not, for that would forbid someone expressing themselves about their relation to language production or to sound or to the tradition of inherited poetics, or to madness or to poetry as politics (see David Bromige's recent claim for "social urgency" for a vignette about someone who happens to a proletarian). It would forbid opinion and desire. expressiveness is, when it comes to cultural activity, all-encompassing. (One can be bored by Lowell's interest in his own family (few proletarians), say, as easily as by Hannah Weiner's fascination with her own delusions, but one can be redeemed by the new ways in which one of these reorganizes language, while the other does not).

But clearly, there is something wonderful and fresh often to be gained by eschewing certain kinds of expressive impulses in order to discover other qualities (of expression perhaps) in the language act. Mac Low is a great example of someone who seemed intent on systematically removing or suppressing certain kinds of expressiveness (personal, autobiographical, topical) in order to find other pleasing and suggestive combinations of language, which could not be found without masking out those other impulses. And recently, Jackson seems to have relaxed that suppression, where a kind of traditinal poet-as-person expressiveness plows into a highly charged and freshened linguistic space, making for both a narrative sensation and a liberated play of sound for sound's sake.

↑ Index

153. Mark Prejsnar
Expressing and defining
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Michael Coffey,

glad to notice you back on the list; I like your poetry and your posts on the List have been good ones in the past..(Of course you were no doubt just lurkin' around, as I do much of the time...)

I have no real disagreement with your post..While I have some uneasiness about the word "express", because of a whole range of things about the baggage it carries, I have no problem with the substance of what you say..

My little bit that you quote was more in reponse to Judy R's use of the idea of "something to express," to suggest that context, in some very flat sense, was fundamental to poetry..Not in my world it ain't! Stein, Zukofsky, Coolidge, Howe, are great examples to me of moving and extraordinarily engaging poets, the very best...and they do it by violating flat, linear expectations about "content." Poetry like any art-practice is a performative set of gestures and actions that uses a shapeable medium to stir thoughts and emotions..And contrary to one of the other posts in this thread, doing so is the mission of poetry, and demonstrates great respect for the audience...It ain't "totalitarian"..

On the bus to work today I was reading Aldon's extraordinary piece on Stephen Jonas, which in the Impercipient Lecture Series, and which I strongly strongly recommend to everyone. He has this great quote from N. Mackey, which says much better than I can what I've meant to say to Jduy and Dale and others:

"Discrepant engagement, rather than supressing resonance, dissonance, noise, seeks to remain open to them. Its admission of resonances contends with resolution. It worries resolute identity and demarcation, resolute boundry lines, resolute definition, obeying a vibrational rather than a corpuscular sense of being..."

That's a pretty good description of the kind of poetry I'm engaged with, I think.....

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

154. henry g
Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply
Tue 7 Oct 1997

On Tue, 7 Oct 1997 12:06:39 -0400 Michael Coffey said:
>(One can be bored by Lowell's interest in his own family (few >proletarians), say, as easily as by Hannah Weiner's fascination with her >own delusions, but one can be redeemed by the new ways in which >one of these reorganizes language, while the other does not).

what I find even more boring is the neverending valorization of the new (is it really new?) for its own sake. In a time of verbal glut and information overkill, I'm for recycling. In a short essay in Nedge #1 I called this "inter-textism". One can be redeemed also by the OLD ways of organizing language. Poetry is a locality. Poetry per se. Poetry is a small place, sort of like Rhode Island, actually. Listen to what's been done & live there for a while, don't just pooh-pooh lang-pooh it. & for those who think I'm too negative - I love a good fight, especially shadow-boxing. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

155. Mark Prejsnar
Charred remains
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Bill-- Char's never been as well-represented in English and in available editions in the US as he ought to be...Not too much else I believe if you're looking to buy. In libraries you can find some other editions...The New Directions is kind of a re-doing of Mary Ann Caws' 1976 Prineton U.P volume, done with Jonathan Griffin...But maybe 30 percent of the poems are different, and the translations are to a large extent different I think. In the 1950s New Directions did its first Char volume (not bi-lingual, I think) called Hypnos Waking, with translations by different hands, including as I recall Levertov, Merwin and Doc Williams. Years ago I was lucky enuff to find a used copy of Cid Corman's very beautiful edition, a translation of the extraordinary prose-poem sequence, Leaves of Hypnos, written while he was leader of a small resistence combat unit in occupied Provence. The Corman Leaves was published in 1973 and is long out of print and that's a true shame, but it's in many libraries..

I've just been reading for the first time Relentir, travaux, in a translation by Keith Waldrop and I strongly recommend it. This is a book of poems written collaboratively by Paul Eluard, Andre Breton and Char in something like 1938. Waldrop handles it very well...It was published in 1990 by Exact Change Press, in Cambridge Mass....I'm afraid it's not listed in the new books in print. (This edition translates the title as "Slow, Under Construction.")

Another person who takes Char as his #1 poet is Gustaf Sobin, the excellent american poet resident in France; there was a section featuring him in Talisman a few years ago, including an interview in which he discusses Char's importance to his own work..

Mark P.

On Tue, 7 Oct 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:

> Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> surrealism is very promising in this regard: Think of someone like (pratically my all-time favorite poet) Rene Char..His involvement with Breton and the official Surrealist International was brief tho intense. After breaking with them he went on to make one of the most vibrant and ambitious bodies of work to derive from the 20th century surrealist stream. Tho he's often called a surrealist by people, it's important to what he did that he didn't see himself as part of that overall label
>
> Mark and others,
>
> What is there available and in print of Rene Char's work nowadays? All I have is this relatively slim New Directions collected works volume. Glad to hear that someone else on the list thinks as much of him as I do.
>
> Bill B.

↑ Index

156. groberts
Char/Creeley
Tue 7 Oct 1997

I too am a big fan of REne Char, and offer a pallid translation and a pale imitation.

Tried and True

My bed is a torrent on top of desiccated beaches. No fern will seek there its territory. O where did you slip, Sweet Love?

I left long ago. I had returned in order to leave.

Farther off, one of the three stones in the cairn over the dried-up source says this single engraved word to the passerby: "Friend."

I had invented a way to sleep and I drank up its green force during the reign of Summer.

--from Le Nu Perdu

Singed Curtains

Ringed by air ducts and water pipes, a small potential fire waits while the dust passes through it unharmed, blithe motes ready to ascend to the asphyxiated attic. Broken chairs, empty armoires, cans of turpentine attend to the preparations. Day is again stoked to a white heat, new tinder added, but the conflagration only sheds its allotted light and still diminishes. The standard equipment has been pushed into place: bellows, window, curtains. An accelerating dispersal blows every fuse. But there never was such a thing as a black flame.

Some line from Yeats that I recently came across seem fitting to Char, even though of course their politics where so utterly different:

Be secret and exult,
Because of all things known
That is most difficult.

On a completely different note, Robert Creeley is scheduled to read at MIT, this Thursday at 7 pm I believe. 20 Ames Street in Cambridge.

Gary R.

↑ Index

157. Henry Gould expression, etc.
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Poem x (time + place) + (poverty/silence) = reusable resource

this formula is supported hypothetically by a converse proposition:

[time - (past + future)] x ambition x literary politics = politics in general

This is just an outline for a recyclable, quiet poetics in an era of information highway roar. I owe it to this list, being an info-highway roadhog myself. DOWN WITH HYPE. UP WITH NO-NAME POETRY. JOB LOT RULES.

- Henry gOuld [note the innovative use of typography here]

↑ Index

158. Michael Coffey
Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply -Reply
Tue 7 Oct 1997

---

what I find even more boring is the neverending valorization of the new (is it really new?) for its own sake.

Henry Gould: yes, you are right, or at least, I agree. I guess "new" isn't the right word. I like the old, too, and some of Pound's arcane phrasings, for example, or his ancient troubador forms, can be very, what can I say, unusual? strange, delightful. But I think something that one can define as "old" is already contextualized by what is not old, so its appearance is new. And so is the 'new' contextualizes against the old, so what the hell are we talking about.

I think i can recognize when a topic has burned itself out.

can't lay a glove on me Henry, not from there

↑ Index

159. henry g
Re: Defining Language Poetry -Reply -Reply
Tue 7 Oct 1997

On Tue, 7 Oct 1997 13:37:08 -0400 Michael Coffey said:
 But I think something that one can >define as "old" is already contextualized by what is not old, so its >appearance is new. And so is the 'new' contextualizes against the old, >so what the hell are we talking about.
>
When you get into what a poet is doing in depth, it's a form of time-translation, seems like the new/old isn't an issue in the same way; and that's only the beginning - soon you start to recycle & reconstruct in your own place, grow a new amalgam - but it's in your own place without erasing the "old" place - that's inter-textism - it's not new - it's "talking" to the old - what does Eliot say - the voices of the dead are so much more distinct than those of the living - only a ghould would know - HG

↑ Index

160. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Kind Regards
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Dale Smith writes:
>In fact, formal gestures often confuse and obscure that which >should be quite clear. These forms are, quite often, totalitarian in nature, because >they demand the reader's servitude in disentangling the work's 'meaning.'

I guess since Dale is "in abstenia" this remark will be addressed "at-large." It seems to me that Dale has got it quite backwards here. "Servitude" to the text, or rather, the author's intention, is precisely what LangPo has sought to undermine, or at the very least, call into question. A poem by Silliman or Hejinian, to use his examples, does not require the reader so much to "disentangle" the meaning since that would imply the meaning is already _there_, present in an unchangeable form, but to interact with the text in such a way as to create a set of (decidedly and inevitably localized) determinates from an indeterminate matrix.

The totalizing impulse in literature Dale refers to is what LangPo, it seems to me, opposes - not just in the various theoretical statements published by LangPoets, but as is actually evinced in the poetic works themselves. Following Levinas's distinction between Totality (the urge to monolithic structures) and Infinity (the open-ended engagement with the Other), LangPo (and related poetic practices), seeks the latter in a spirit of free play, etc. since, as Kevin Killian once remarked, "meaning is one slippery motherfucker."

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

161. William Marsh
accused (personal ad)
Tue 7 Oct 1997

At 12:43 PM 10/6/97 -0700, A. Nielsen wrote:
>1) at the risk of repeating myself the risk of repeting myself repeating >Ron Silliman, I still think the best definition of a "language poet" is >that offered by Ron Silliman some years back, repeated by me here some >years later, to the effect that a "language poet" is "anyone who has ever >been accused of being a language poet."

i've often been charmed by this statement but wonder how people might interpret the nugget of truth here / having been "accused" myself on certain occasions (like others on the list i'm sure) and finding it preposterous and false (gosh, i was barely alive when "these people" started L=A=N=G=etc.), i wonder how/why i might be wrong

branded lang-po seeks same / serious replies only please

bmarsh

↑ Index

162. Bob Grumman
Re: bashing Basho
Tue 7 Oct 1997

What is most amusing to me about the Senator John Ashcroft versus the NEA story reported by Aldon Nielson is not that senators are still too thick to get anything from the one-word poem, "lighght," but that the NEA and its supporters are still too thick to be able to defend its best moment.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

163. Jacques Debrot
Re: Defining / Expression
Tue 7 Oct 1997

While Michael Coffey is extremely persuasive about the virtues of self-expression I have a few reservations -- for instance, doesn't self-expression as a poetic value inevitably bring with it the clap-trap about sincerity, genuiness, etc. all of which obfuscate the ways in which expression is mediated. Hal Foster, of course, is great on this in his essay "The Expressive Fallacy." Also, just read yesterday an extremely interesting article on JM Basquiat in [redacted], somewhat along this line -- the twist is that the essay relates expressionism to multicultural art in that a certain kind of valorization of m.c. art also depends, finally, on an aesthetic of sincerity. But art can be expressive, can't it? -- Cage, Johns, MacLow, Langpo, etc -- without being expressionistic.

↑ Index

164. Charles Bernstein
Archive at SF State in Jeopardy
Tue 7 Oct 1997

One of the crucial resources of our extended poetry communities is under threat. I have just gotten an email from Norma Cole ([redacted]) who asks me to urgently pass on this information to the list:

As of December, Laura Moriarity's job as archivist of The American Poetry Archives at the Poetry Center of San Francisco State University will be lost due to funding cuts. The Archives currently has more than 4,000 video and audio-taped performances by poets and other writers which are available for sale, rent, and loan. SF State Poetry Center will be lost due to funding cuts. To get a sense of the scale of their holding, go to their new web site: http://www.sfsu.edu/~newlit/welcome.htm

Norma writes:

"Needless to say, chaos will ensue, the tapes will drift away, no more archive etc. So we're trying to mount a campaign to let the President of SF State know that people all over the place care about this resource. ... Encourage everyone & their brother, sister & mother to send this letter OR their own letter to President Richard A. Corrigan and also to the Poetry Center Director Jewelle Gomez."

Here are the addresses:

[redacted]

[redacted]

And for anyone who wants to use the postal system:

President Robert A. Corrigan,
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave.
San Francisco CA 94132

&

Jewelle Gomez, Executive Director
Poetry Center
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave.
San Francisco CA 94132

****

Office of the President
San Francisco State University

1600 Holloway Ave.
San Francisco, CA 94132

Dear President Corrigan,

We understand that yet again San Francisco State University has decided not to fund the position of Archivist at the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archive. And so, after 24 years and 6 complete print catalogues, with 3 sixty-minute video anthologies (Archive productions), 20 issues of the Archive News, footage of countless writers placed with many national and international news broadcasters, viewings of Archive tapes at festivals such as the Venice Biennale and other major venues world-wide, and now the entire Archive catalogue on-line (of what is to date the largest literary audio and video collection available to the public), the Archive will sit inert "in state" in its state-of-the-art climate-controlled vault on the top floor of the Humanities Building.

↑ Index

165. William Burmeister Prod

Re: expression, etc.

Tue 7 Oct 1997

On Oct 7, 1:36pm, Henry Gould wrote:
> Subject: expression, etc.
> Poem x (time + place) + (poverty/silence) = reusable resource
>
> this formula is supported hypothetically by a converse proposition:
>
> [time - (past + future)] x ambition x literary politics = politics in general
>
> This is just an outline for a recyclable, quiet poetics in an era > of information highway roar. I owe it to this list, being an > info-highway roadhog myself. DOWN WITH HYPE. UP WITH NO-NAME POETRY.
> JOB LOT RULES.
> - Henry gOuld [note the innovative use of typography here]

Reviewer's remarks for the typography in "Henry gOuld":

I see proclivities, strange proclivities, wierd proclivites,... - Groucho

This is nothing less than roadkill on the information highway. - Eric Blarnes

This is a sham. It's a travesty of a mockery of a sham of a mockery of two travesties of a mockery of a sham.
- The Club Med Continuing Education Division

↑ Index

166. Lawrence Upton.
Re Char
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Advert - Try not to miss a chance

the late Eric Mottram was an admirer of Char and his homage to Char RESISTANCES was published in 91 by RWC - which I run

It is three pounds plus p & p sterling. Big problems with dollar cheques but anyone in n america who wld like it could contact me with proposals - maybe we cld exchange or something - i also take souls, as long as there isnt much life to run on them, as security

L

↑ Index

167. Laura Moriarty
Re: Archive at SF State in Jeopardy
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Thank you Charles for posting Norma's letter. For me personally it is a good time to move on, but it is essential for there to be an Archives Director here at the Poetry Center. There is only one person working full time at the Center (only five of us total, now 4) and she is maxed out already.

I have just finished writing a memo which will be sent to our mailing list and posted on our Web page. It is included here:

Memorandum

To: past, present and future users of the American Poetry Archives From : Laura Moriarty, Archives Director

Subject: ending of the Archives Director position

7 October 1997

"Everything that happens to us is history" is the first line in my introduction to the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archives Videotape Catalogue 1974-1990. It is also the last line in my book L'Archiviste, published in 1991. It has been my pleasure to be involved in preserving a part of this history for the last eleven years as Director of the American Poetry Archives for the Poetry Center at San Francisco State University.

My particular goal in managing the Archives has been to make our video and audio collection, one the largest of its kind in the world, as accessible as possible. My motto has been "Everyone who wants a tape, gets a tape." The fact that many times I was providing images of the friends, colleagues and relatives whose readings are among the thousands in our collection has made this a very personal task.

When a high school student calls and wants to know who the African American writers in the collection are and I can provide a detailed list, waive the membership fee and send a tape for her presentation, the whole thing seems worth it. When Allen Ginsberg dies and I can help put a tape of him reading on the national news, again it seems worth it. However -- worth it or not, my position ends as of 31 December this year. Due to funding cuts at the National Endowment for the Arts and other funding organizations and the inability, so far, of San Francisco State University to come up with financial support for the position, it will remain unfilled indefinitely.

There have been many projects at the Poetry Center in the last decade (and 297 readings) and I have been involved in most of them. Among my accomplishments are the publication of the Poetry Center Catalogue 1974-1990, editing the 13 issues of the Archives News, including catalogue addenda, producing three sixty minute video anthologies (Women Working in Literature, Palabra and Color), overseeing two large video and film preservation projects, working with the San Francisco Arts Commission to have writers' words engraved on Muni bus islands on Market Street, and seeing that the entire catalogue of our videotapes is now available on our Web site.

Archives Video Technician Jiri Veskrna will be continuing to tape the Poetry Center series. He will do what Archives maintenance he is able to do within his half time positon. Other staff will also do all they can. However, Archives functions will necessarily be limited.

I want to thank Executive Director Jewelle Gomez for her great efforts to keep the Archives position going as long as possible. Thanks also to the three other executive directors I have worked with, Frances Phillips, Bob Glück and Rose Catacalos, for their superhuman efforts to raise fund to retain the two unfunded Archives positions, while funding all other Poetry Center programs. Thanks to Associate Directors Dawn Kolokithas, Lisa Bernstein, Aaron Shurin and Toni Mirosevich and to Operations Managers Larry Price, Karen Clark, Zack Rogow and Melissa Martell Black. Each name represents a world of work.

If you would like to support this work and the continuation of the position of Archives Director at the Poetry Center, you can write

President Robert A Corrigan
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco, CA 94132.

Please send a copy of your letter to Jewelle Gomez, at the Poetry Center, at the same address or fax it to us at [redacted].

President Corrigan may be emailed at [redacted]. Please cc your post to [redacted].

Thank you for your help, now and over the years, and thanks in advance for supporting my successor (if there should ever be such a person) in his or her efforts to continue to make your history available to you.

Laura Moriarty
Archives Director

↑ Index

168. Hugh Steinberg
Re: accused (personal ad)
Tue 7 Oct 1997

> At 12:43 PM 10/6/97 -0700, A. Nielsen wrote:
> 1) at the risk of repeating myself the risk of repeting myself repeating Ron Silliman, I still think the best definition of a "language poet" is that offered by Ron Silliman some years back, repeated by me here some years later, to the effect that a "language poet" is "anyone who has ever been accused of being a language poet."
>
> i've often been charmed by this statement but wonder how people might interpret the nugget of truth here / having been "accused" myself on certain occasions (like others on the list i'm sure) and finding it preposterous and false (gosh, i was barely alive when "these people" started L=A=N=G=etc.), i wonder how/why i might be wrong
>
> branded lang-po seeks same / serious replies only please
>
> bmarsh

Bill:

I think lang-po is two things: a specific movement and group of writers bound within the historical context of the 70's and 80's (which has been argued on this list before) and a handle to describe work which is either very disjunctive and/or uses the idea of "language" (whatever that may be) as subject/content material.

The one is a noun, the other is an adjective.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

169. Laura Moriarty
one more on Poetry Center Archives
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Norma noticed (when I forwarded Charles' post) that part of the note she had sent to him was not included in his post. Following is the whole text of her letter.

We have already started receiving cc's from these various posts. THANKS!

BTW - we have recently updated the Poetry Center video catalog - Many fewer errors, many more italics, put in one at a time - Laura

****

To encourage San Francisco State University to fund the postion of Archivist for the American Poetry Archive, please send the following letter, or your letter, both to San Francisco State University President Robert A. Corrigan and to Jewelle Gomez, Executive Director of the Poetry Center. Their addresses are:

President Robert A. Corrigan
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco CA 94132

[redacted]

and

Jewelle Gomez, Executive Director
The Poetry Center
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco CA 94132

[redacted]

Office of the President
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave.
San Francisco, CA 94132

Dear President Corrigan,

We understand that yet again San Francisco State University has decided not to fund the position of Archivist at the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archive. And so, after 24 years and 6 complete print catalogues, with 3 sixty-minute video anthologies (Archive productions), 20 issues of the Archive News, footage of countless writers placed with many national and international news broadcasters, viewings of Archive tapes at festivals such as the Venice Biennale and other major venues world-wide, and now the entire Archive catalogue on-line (of what is to date the largest literary audio and video collection available to the public), the Archive will sit inert "in state" in its state-of-the-art climate-controlled vault on the top floor of the Humanities Building.

There will be no individual whose job it is to be responsible for lending, renting, selling and sending Archive materials to students, faculty, scholars and poets; no one to assist and respond to queries and orders from institutions and independent researchers all over the world; no one to educate interns in archiving, cataloguing, editing and Web page maintenance, and involve them in film and video preservation projects; and, although at the moment there is still a videographer, there will be no one to coordinate the successful videotaping of every Poetry Center event on and off campus (the activity that has resulted in this unique and priceless documentation of the development of American poetry over the last 25 years).

We want to voice and register our profound dismay at such an unnecessary loss. We ask you to reconsider rather than let this treasured and irreplaceable living resource turn to dust.

Sincerely,

↑ Index

170. Lawrence Upton.
Re: one more on Poetry Center Archives
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Dear President Corrigan,

I write to you as an interested person from outside of your country.

I understand that yet again San Francisco State University has decided not to fund the position of Archivist at the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archive. And so, after 24 years and 6 complete print catalogues, with 3 sixty-minute video anthologies (Archive productions), 20 issues of the Archive News, footage of countless writers placed with many national and international news broadcasters, viewings of Archive tapes at festivals such as the Venice Biennale and other major venues world-wide, and now the entire Archive catalogue on-line (of what is to date the largest literary audio and video collection available to the public), the Archive will sit inert "in state" in its state-of-the-art climate-controlled vault on the top floor of the Humanities Building.

There will be no individual whose job it is to be responsible for lending, renting, selling and sending Archive materials to students, faculty, scholars and poets; no one to assist and respond to queries and orders from institutions and independent researchers all over the world; no one to educate interns in archiving, cataloguing, editing and Web page maintenance, and involve them in film and video preservation projects; and, although at the moment there is still a videographer, there will be no one to coordinate the successful videotaping of every Poetry Center event on and off campus (the activity that has resulted in this unique and priceless documentation of the development of American poetry over the last 25 years).

I want to voice and register my profound dismay at such an unnecessary loss. I ask you to reconsider rather than let this treasured and irreplaceable living resource turn to dust.

Such resources are the envy of many poets and critics in countries such as mine. In the last few years, we have destroyed a great deal which cannot be replaced in any meaningful way because so many opportunities have been lost; and what we have destroyed has been in the name of budgetary necessity. The result is a consequent loss of wealth creating expertise and of the development of our cultural lives.

You are in a richer country by far. Do not make the same mistake.

Yours sincerely,

Lawrence Upton
Director, SVP reading series, London UK

↑ Index

171. Laura Moriarty
Re: one more on Poetry Center Archives
Tue 7 Oct 1997

Thanks again for many responses to the Poetry Center situation.

Please remember to reply to [redacted] (with a cc to [redacted]) rather than to the list.

I also wanted to point out that Jewelle Gomez has not made the decision to defund the position. The Poetry Center does not have the funds, which have in the past come from the NEA and many other (now dry) sources. It is now up to San Francisco State University to provide the resources to continue the position.

Your support is very heartening.

Laura Moriarty

↑ Index

172. Aviva Vogel
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Tue 7 Oct 1997

I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?

↑ Index

173. Alan Jen Sondheim
starving to death in a land of plenty
Tue 7 Oct 1997

-

Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.

↑ Index

174. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Tue 7 Oct 1997

"I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?"

Well, there's 'supposed' to be, but does there 'have' to be?

That's a nice idea, the saxophone. But, as I read in your words, it doesn't denote. I can see the thing being played. I can see it being used as a club. Ouch. I can see it mutely trying to speak. Painful to watch. Almost makes you want to paint it with those oil paints to set it free. But I can't see it denote. We see what we set out to see. Set out on a journey with language in our minds, we get language back. Set out with a Saxophone, we get music. Or squawks. Set out with silence, we get silence. Silence shines, and there are ways of structuring an approach to it that operate as language does with words, but, like that Sax it is not language and don't do what words do do. To extrapolate: if we set out to denote, we will denote. There are languages of denotation. If we set out to use language as the object, the subject, and the tool, we'll get that back, like working in the nuclear fires of the sun. Things can explode. Further technologies are required to contain the blast. It can become anything. Radioactive strawberries at Chernobyl. Sun on leaves. Of the times certainly. Then again, all these tools can be structured to lead to another: silence to language, language to strawberries, strawberries to oil paints. Scripts. Where do the scripts lead?

To go further: why use sight? Hearing? Touch?

I too am curious: how to contain the blast? what is useful technology and what is not?

A cryptic night.

I hope this adds.

Harold

↑ Index

175. Charles Bernstein
Poetry Center Archives: Correction
Tue 7 Oct 1997

In my original post on the Archives, I indicated that San Francisco State had cut the archivist position. But as Laura Moriarity made clear in her post, the problem comes from a loss of NEA funds that previously had been available for this type of position. That is one more instance, as if we needed more examples, of the cost of the continuing attacks on public arts funding. Now the university is in the position of having to cover for the cuts, which is a very different circumstance than making them in the first place. I appreciate the efforts of SF State to support such a vital poetry center over so many years and I am sorry to have misrepresented the situation. Maybe when they hear how much so many of us care about this program, they will find a way to increase their support so that the Archives can remain active.

↑ Index

176. Tim Wood
Re: Poetry Center Archives: some ideas
Wed 8 Oct 1997

I'll agree with all the supportive comments from the group. The Archives are an excellent resource that needs support. Instead of laboring the point, I'll just make a couple of suggestion (between some bug and a long day...) on how members of the list might help:

Perhaps the Poetics group (or members...) might donate money to seed an endowment for the position? If the group bites, I'll be happy to pitch in the first check.

Has SF State looked at a part time archivist --perhaps a grad student at the Univ.-- until funding can be restored?

Tim Wood

> From: Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Poetry Center Archives: Correction
> Date: Tuesday, October 07, 1997 10:59 PM
>
> In my original post on the Archives, I indicated that San Francisco State > had cut the archivist position. But as Laura Moriarity made clear in her > post, the problem comes from a loss of NEA funds that previously had been > available for this type of position. That is one more instance, as if we > needed more examples, of the cost of the continuing attacks on public arts > funding. Now the university is in the position of having to cover for the > cuts, which is a very different circumstance than making them in the first > place. I appreciate the efforts of SF State to support such a vital poetry
> center over so many years and I am sorry to have misrepresented the > situation. Maybe when they hear how much so many of us care about this > program, they will find a way to increase their support so that the > Archives can remain active.

↑ Index

177. Joseph Conte
Re: Ronald Johnson/ARK
Wed 8 Oct 1997

For a thorough and compelling essay on Johnson's career, with a complete bibliography of criticism (though not reviews) on ARK, see Eric Selinger's entry on Ronald Johnson in _Dictionary of Literary Biography 169: American Poets Since World War II_ (Fifth Series): 146-56.

Johnson, by the way, wrote the entry on his mentor, Jonathan Williams, for _DLB_ 5 way back in 1980.

Joseph Conte

↑ Index

178. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Wed 8 Oct 1997

At 1:04 PM 10/8/97, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
etc.

on a totally different note, joe, and maybe kali can help out here, i'm somewhat ambivalent about this new "working class studies" stuff. much of what i've seen is not politically engaged, really, but about some kind of nostalgia and ambivalence on the part of academics or writers who come from a working class origin but are no longer strictly speaking leading a working class life. so the real issue seems to be (upward) class mobility and the personal narratives that come out of it. there doesn't seem to be much theory (high or low), what i've seen does not draw on the rich work of marxists or others who deal with class as a fundamental social category. so what's the "shtick," other than personal narratives about loss and gain?

↑ Index

179. Lawrence Upton.
POETRY CENTRE ARCHIVES
Wed 8 Oct 1997

Apologies for misdirection. When I grow up I am going to be sensible

L

↑ Index

180. Susan Wheeler
Poetics Digest
Wed 8 Oct 1997

Rene Char, The Dawnbreakers -- Bloodaxe

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

181. Eliza McGrand
call for writing/art/etc.
Wed 8 Oct 1997

Forwarded from Jordanne:

Hello all, Jordanne here. This is just a reminder that next month THE FREE CUISENART hopes to publish a special issue with the topic of "rites of passage."

We are looking for poems, stories, essays or html poems which deal with a transitional point of life: birth, death, loss of innocence/virginity, marriage, loss, emergence, epiphany, revolutionn, sex change, mind-set change, etc.

Please send your work to our editorial staff at [redacted] by Oct. 23. If you are still unsure of the kind of poetry/fiction/essays we like, you may take a look at our very popular "Identity" issue at http://www.on-net.net/~cca/wowzine/wowzine.html If you still have questions, write me at [redacted]. I'll answer.

Jordanne Holyoak-Kitchel, editor, THE FREE CUISENART

↑ Index

182. Henry

Re: Defining Language Poetry

Wed 8 Oct 1997

On Tue, 7 Oct 1997 21:49:35 -0400 Aviva Vogel said:
>I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there >isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?

Mandelstam, in his essay "Conversation about Dante", has an interesting & complex approach to this question. He compares the words to the instrumentation in a piece of music. Denotation is not the right word for the kind of multidimensional, multidirectional referentiality which the word has in the pattern. And yet he doesn't valorize the "word-as-such" so heavily as he had earlier in his career, or as the futurists did. The word is an arbitrary flowing replaceable phenomenon subject to the "conductor's baton" of the transformational poetic "impulse". It's the impulse, which maybe can be equated with the _telos_ or "end" of the poem as a whole, which is the unifying factor in a constantly metamorphosing situation. I think it would be interesting to relate his thinking to the work of Montale, writing in Italian at about the same time, also deeply involved with Dante. Montale's verse builds on this flowing quality in a very pronounced way. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

183. Mark Wallace
the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Wed 8 Oct 1997

I'm not sure about this, but I think I remember at some point in the past a couple posts on this list speaking about shortcomings in the recent biography about Frank O'Hara. If there's anyone out there who remembers that conversation, or has some things to say about the biography, could you backchannel me, and post to the list if you're so inclined?

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

184. Tom Orange
Char in German?
Wed 8 Oct 1997

thanks to gary roberts for his char translations.

anyone know of existing translations of char into german?

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

185. Tom Orange
michael speier
Wed 8 Oct 1997

was browsing thru issues of the chicago review yesterday and stumbled upon, in addition to the ronald johnson issue, some great translations of michael speier by rosmarie waldrop. i immediately sensed some celan in speier's work and was confirmed in this hunch by the notes in the back which say that speier is editor of the celan-jahrbuch.

does anyone have further info on speier's work? ive found a citation for only one volume of poetry. also wondering if waldrop is planning to continue working on translating speier...

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

186. Aviva Vogel
Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
Wed 8 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-08 05:23:15 EDT, you write:

> Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.
>
>
What???

↑ Index

187. Aviva Vogel
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Wed 8 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-07 23:18:50 EDT, you write:

> "I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there > isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?"
>
> Well, there's 'supposed' to be, but does there 'have' to be?

Actually, I would more accurately say...the power of words resides at least partially in their denotative, transitive qualities. Why waste that power and potential?

I certainly understand the virtues of making language, or words, the focus of a piece of writing. I certainly understand, from the bottom of my heart, the beauty of their sounds, quite apart from any "meaning" which they might point to. And I have a great interest in understanding, and consciously managing, rather than falling victim to, their political powers.

But why waste their ability to signify something beyond themselves, as long as we acknowledge the contingency, the provisionality, the non-absoluteness of the "reality" or "meaning" or "truth" they point to? We're so busy shedding the handcuffs of imposed meaning, habitual thinking, and cultural/political impositions, that we may be rejecting the power of words to bring us inside the "realities" of others, via transitive language.
>

> That's a nice idea, the saxophone. But, as I read in your words, it doesn't > denote. I can see the thing being played. I can see it being used as a > club. Ouch. I can see it mutely trying to speak. Painful to watch. Almost > makes you want to paint it with those oil paints to set it free. But I > can't see it denote.

I'm not sure I understand this passage. How is the saxophone used as a club? Why is it painful to see it "mutely trying to speak." Doesn't the saxophone "speak"?

We see what we set out to see. Set out on a journey > with language in our minds, we get language back. Set out with a Saxophone, > we get music. Or squawks. Set out with silence, we get silence. Silence > shines, and there are ways of structuring an approach to it that operate as > language does with words, but, like that Sax it is not language and don't > do what words do do. To extrapolate: if we set out to denote, we will > denote.

That's my point. Why don't we use both the denotative and connotative powers of language? There doesn't have to be the corresponding assumption that what's "signified" is any kind of absolute truth, although I certainly understand that language has been misused, and turned into a weapon, in just this way.

There are languages of denotation. If we set out to use language as > the object, the subject, and the tool, we'll get that back, like working in > the nuclear fires of the sun. Things can explode. Further technologies are > required to contain the blast. It can become anything. Radioactive > strawberries at Chernobyl. Sun on leaves. Of the times certainly. Then > again, all these tools can be structured to lead to another: silence to > language, language to strawberries, strawberries to oil paints. Scripts.
> Where do the scripts lead?

What??????
>
> To go further: why use sight? Hearing? Touch?

A better question is: why NOT use sight, hearing, touch, and report on our own version of what we're perceiving?
>
> I too am curious: how to contain the blast? what is useful technology and > what is not?

Why think of language as "technology"? I don't deny that it IS technology, but it is so many other things too.
>
> A cryptic night.

The night? Or what's in our minds? Or life in general? Or...are we just choosing to find the state of "cryptic-ness" right now? I mean, it's not really actually "out there," in anything other than a contingent way, is it?

> I hope this adds.

It's been fun to get a response, but I have to admit I don't fully understand what you're saying. I'd love to understand your point better, but your language sometimes makes associations I can't follow in anything other than a vaguely impressionistic way. I'm not knocking either those impressions, or the virtues of using language to create openings, atmospheres, break habitual chains of thought, etc. But I do want to say that some of what you've written here doesn't feel like a "response" that I can apply to my own inquiry on this subject.

On the other hand, I do get a sense of "explosion" coming at me from your words...a demonstration that language, if pointing to itself, can either explode or implode all the old, impacted, crusted-over structures of thought we've trapped ourselves beneath. I have to admit, anything you, or anyone else, contributes to that endeavor "adds!"

So, thank you, Harold!

Aviva

↑ Index

188. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Wed 8 Oct 1997

On Tue, 7 Oct 1997, Aviva Vogel wrote:

> I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?

Aviva,

Apparently where you and I are thinking quite differently, is the question of what makes poetry poetry...where its distinctive character is "located"...

If I understand your post correctly, you feel that it lies in its use of words, which require that a poet be "responsible" and tie herself to linear, denotative sense...

I can't possibly see it that way...If I did I certainly woudln't like a huge amount of the poetry I do...all of Stein and Coolidge, for instance, and about half of Zukofsky.

I believe that poetry is free to be a fully-realized art-practice. The fact that it doesn't use paints or musical notes is irrelevant, because unlike you I don't see the capacity for full use of the medium's range as proceeding from the nature of the medium....I don't feel that I have to be a sax player or work in acrylics to be given permission to use the full possible range of artistic form....That permission comes from the nature of art-practice structures...I may not be able to sound like a Clark Coolidge poem when I go in for an interview for a job as a library cataloger..It's very likely that I wouldn't get it!! (..except maybe at SUNY Buffalo); but the space in which I and other poets work with words, is one where (as Dostoievsky would say with horror) everything is allowed...That's what's very important about poetry. It is a reflection of the tethered human drive for absolute freedom; and this is one reasons so many interesting poets are seriously left (and feminist) at a time when the state and mass media are coldly, implacably hostile to such truths.

Needless to say, "everything is allowed" doesn't mean everything is good. But we are responsible for articulating our critical likes and dislikes in an especially full and careful way...It's easier if you can dismiss a large subgroup of poems as not having "some amount of denotative quality." But if one realizes that all possible poems are indeed poems, and one has to truly make judgments without god-given rules, it becomes more interesting. For the mind. Also for the ear. For instance I don't believe that any single poet has created more disturbingly beautiful sound with words than Coolidge (to take what I feel to be one of the most helpful reference points for discussions like these). Poetry would be impoverished to the point of vanishing, were we to exclude his work because it often doesn't seem to have a linear "amount of denotative quality"!!!!

regards,
Mark

↑ Index

189. Pierre Joris
Re: Char in German?
Wed 8 Oct 1997

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

Tom Orange wrote:

> thanks to gary roberts for his char translations.
>
> anyone know of existing translations of char into german?

> thanks,
> t.

Tom -- attached a quick list of Char in German -- note also volume IV of the Collected Paul celan has Celan's translations from "A La Santé du Serpent," "Feuillets d'Hypnos" & "A une sérénité crispée" -- Pierre

Content-Description: Netscape Communicatorª Document

[VLB] Found Books [Image] [Homepage]
(Short Display)

Title 1 - 13 [13]

[new query] [a_sbadd] [a_sbview]

Blanchot, Maurice: Das Tier von Lascaux
Arbeiten auf Papier, 00009
ISBN 3-930754-08-8, Englisch broschiert, Price 38,- DM
Breton, André;Eluard, Paul;Char, René: Vorsicht Baustelle /Ralentir travaux

ISBN 3-924095-37-X, Broschiert, Price 19,80 DM
Char, Rene: Einen Blitz bewohnen
Fischer Taschenbücher, 12675
ISBN 3-596-12675-4, Kartoniert, Price 18,90 DM (18,90 SFr, 138,- ÖS)
Char, René: Die Bibliothek in Flammen und andere Gedichte
Fischer Taschenbücher, 10803
ISBN 3-596-10803-9, Kartoniert, Price 19,80 DM (20,80 SFr, 145,- ÖS)
Char, René: Die Sonne der Wasser
ISBN 3-7953-0922-0, Leinen, Price 28,- DM (26,70 SFr, 204,- ÖS)
Char, René: Hypnos
Fischer Taschenbücher, 09570
ISBN 3-596-29570-X, Kartoniert, Price 12,80 DM (13,80 SFr, 93,- ÖS)
Char, René: Rückkehr stromauf Edition Akzente
ISBN 3-446-13840-4, Broschiert, Price 34,- DM (33,30 SFr, 248,- ÖS)
Char, René: Schattenharmonie
ISBN 3-921592-68-2, Broschiert, Price 16,80 DM (16,- SFr, 123,- ÖS)
Char, René: Über die Dichtung
ISBN 3-924095-60-4, Broschiert, Price 32,- DM
Char, René: Zorn und Geheimnis /Fureur et mystère
Fischer Taschenbücher, 09571
ISBN 3-596-29571-8, Kartoniert, Price 12,80 DM (13,80 SFr, 93,- ÖS)

Char, René: Lob einer Verdächtigen /Eloge d'une Soupconnée Bibliothek Suhrkamp, 01023
ISBN 3-518-22023-3, Gebunden, Price 14,80 DM (15,80 SFr, 108,- ÖS)
Luftfracht
Die Andere Bibliothek. Erfolgsausgaben
ISBN 3-8218-4423-X, Price 44,- DM (41,- SFr, 321,- ÖS)
Weltei, gepellt
Der Prokurist, 00011
ISBN 3-901118-15-2, Kartoniert, Price 25,- DM (25,- SFr, 180,- ÖS, L 15000,-)

[new query] [a_sbadd] [a_sbview]

Copyright © 1996-97 Buchhändler-Vereinigung GmbH Internet-application created by Harbinger GmbH

----------64C49CD6B7A4ED9CC900943D--

↑ Index

190. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Wed 8 Oct 1997

---

i'm struck by this discussion of the anti/democratic leanings of poetry that refuses to match readers' expectations...

on the one hand, a good case can be made for intelligibility---in context, of course...

on the other, it's important i think to recognize how the status quo of mainstream poetry asserts "voice" and "craft" as measures of "authenticity," and what this itself suggests as to the relationship between language and experience...

in much of my work, i'm prone to talking about my practice in terms of "constructing a readership"... naturally, like many of you, i feel that what i'm asking for is more participation on the part of readers in making meaning of my words, and for that matter, of finding in my words or through my words something evocative...

at the same time, i trust the potential problem here wrt democracy or participatory response-logics is self-evident: it's somewhat presumptuous of me to think that i can actually "construct" a readership, no?---out of living, fully conscious and articulate beings whose predilections are at least as valid, on the surface of things, as are mine?...

this constitutes, as i see it, the push-pull logic of trying to engage with other human beings in ways with which they may not be accustomed... on the one hand, we attempt to pull readers, as it were, into engaging us through our texts (or if you prefer, simply our texts---or simply us!)... at the same time, we're pushy in this gesture---we expect that our readers, whoever they are, will appreciate our (at least partial) 'reneging' of author-ity...

i don't think you can readily resolve this issue... or to put it another way, this question of the value/revaluation of accessibility is itself part of the controversy of writing poetry today, at least in much of north america... and i would expect most poetries to hazard this controversy, somehow...

for those interested, this has all sorts of parallels with teaching, student-centered teaching vs. lecture (or instructor-centered), etc... but i'll leave that alone unless someone else wants to go there...

i suspect that one of the few viable responses as such to this question of democracy in writing is probably some gesture toward pluralism, either at the level of response or in terms of the writing process/aesthetics itself... and i think we all understand just how thorny the politics of pluralism can be...

best,

joe

↑ Index

191. Aldon Nielsen
Re: accused (personal ad); and Mullen Matters
Wed 8 Oct 1997

---

1) here at last the citation -- Harryette Mullen's essay, now titled "African Signs and Spirit Writing," appears in _Callaloo 19.3 (1996): 670-89. This issue also has an interview with Mullen

2)On second L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E accusation -- if you go back and look at issues of _L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E_ and others, you'll find terms such as "language centered writing" etc. -- Among the earliest uses of the term "Language Poet" it was, in fact, made in an accusatory mode in the pages of _Poetry Flash_ by someone who had just read _The Culture of Narcissism_ -- I won't bore you with the results here -- The point is, and this may have been part of Ron's humor in supplying his nonce definition, that the term "language poet" was a label affixed at the beginning as a pejorative -- one which might be ironically reappropriated for other purposes

3) Am working out details for a poetry reading at Loyola Marymount by Harryette Mullen and Giovanni Singleton, probably late November, and will expect ALL LA area poetics listers to try to make it -- watch this space for details

↑ Index

192. Aldon Nielsen
Re: by all means, go there
Wed 8 Oct 1997

I think we need to examine the often-voiced assumption that the lecture is somehow "instructor-oriented," while various other modes (small group discussion etc.) are intrinsically student-centered. My experience has brought me to believe that nearly any form of teaching can be either instructor or student-centered -- Nothing could conceivably be more instrcutor-centered than the putatively more democratic modes of in-the-class organization the teachers thrust upon us in many of my undergraduate classes -- They were nearly always more of a convenience for the instructor ((though the move to journal writing is perhaps the most labor-intensive instructional development in my life time) --

Emerson thought the lecture a wonderful new art form that nobody had yet done well -- I begin to believe he's right on that count --

--- Now that I'm tenured, I even sometimes READ (GOD!) to my students -- or with them -- Though I don't read to them that which they were to have read before the class --

Can't "lecture" be a mode of group investigation?

years ago a speaker quipped, upon following another speaker who made a great show of stepping away from the podium to erase all "that I speak and you listen stuff" that "Only in American do we try to make the revolution by rearranging the furniture -- I happen to think that moving furniture about from time to time may be a good idea -- but it doesn't matter much if our students are herded into small groupuscules if they are herded toward the same old conclusions --

none of which is what Joe was speaking of,,,, but I'd like to hear from him on these issues that we both think about a great deal

↑ Index

193. Lawrence Upton.
Re: by all means, go there
Wed 8 Oct 1997

| I think we need to examine the often-voiced assumption that the lecture is | somehow "instructor-oriented," while various other modes (small group | discussion etc.) are intrinsically student-centered.

| Can't "lecture" be a mode of group investigation?

Aldon Nielsen

This applies also to poetry performances. It is a matter of attitude as much as mode. There are lecturers there are poets who shut out the auditors by their body language, choice of introduction, structure.... and vice versa

L

↑ Index

194. William Marsh
Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Wed 8 Oct 1997

At 08:47 AM 10/8/97 -0400, Mark Wallace wrote:
> I'm not sure about this, but I think I remember at some point in >the past a couple posts on this list speaking about shortcomings in the >recent biography about Frank O'Hara. If there's anyone out there who >remembers that conversation, or has some things to say about the >biography, could you backchannel me, and post to the list if you're so >inclined?
>
Mark

i read the biography a while ago but remember finding it dissapointing on one simple and perhaps predictable count: over-valorization of O'Hara's sexual exploits and other behavior eccentricities / without, that is, suggesting how all of it might have had something to do with his larger experiment in poetry -- living / reminded me of the rather bad (in my opinion) film biography of Charlie Parker (Eastwood's "Bird") that focused almost entirely on his drug addictions and resulting domestic difficulties

↑ Index

195. Michael Magee
Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Wed 8 Oct 1997

There's lots to dislike in Gooch's biography - in addition to its gossipy nature (fun enough as you read along but much of it ultimately pointless), Gooch also reads the poems almost purely as autobiography, that is, as one might read a memoir. So he doesn't have much to say about the development of O'Hara's poetics. I'm glad he took the time to do it of course, b/c there's obviously more primary material there than anywhere else in print, but I sure do wish someone would do a better one.

-Mike.

According to William Marsh: > > At 08:47 AM 10/8/97 -0400, Mark Wallace wrote:
> > I'm not sure about this, but I think I remember at some point in > >the past a couple posts on this list speaking about shortcomings in the > >recent biography about Frank O'Hara. If there's anyone out there who > >remembers that conversation, or has some things to say about the > >biography, could you backchannel me, and post to the list if you're so > >inclined?
> >
> Mark
>
> i read the biography a while ago but remember finding it dissapointing on > one simple and perhaps predictable count: over-valorization of O'Hara's > sexual exploits and other behavior eccentricities / without, that is, > suggesting how all of it might have had something to do with his larger > experiment in poetry -- living / reminded me of the rather bad (in my > opinion) film biography of Charlie Parker (Eastwood's "Bird") that focused > almost entirely on his drug addictions and resulting domestic difficulties
>

↑ Index

196. Layne Russell
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Wed 8 Oct 1997

George Bowering wrote:

> [...] they > are expressing stuff, which implies to me that words are something they USE.
>
> George Bowering.

please elaborate...not on the poets...but on expressing and the USE of words....

thanks

Layne

↑ Index

197. Aldon Nielsen
Re: bird on a wireless
Wed 8 Oct 1997

The movie _BIRD_ also had a habit of starting up a flashback for one character inside of another character's already-in-progress flashback -- Might have been fun if the screenplay'd been written by Sorrentino, but it wasn't --

↑ Index

198. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
going there...
Wed 8 Oct 1997

---

aldon, my sense of the lecture is that it can be used in a classroom in extremely student-centered ways, yes... i advocate as a teacher a combination (again that plural) of modes, whatever else i'm busy advocating... but it's best to pause and examine what is meant by "lecture"... b/c lecture as i've seen it deployed is generally not a participatory mode of teaching (which, to be sure, does not mean it can't be)...

again, i want to be sure we've got a fix on what the status quo is: on the campuses on which i've taught, the status quo (and all's you have to do to figure it out is to stand outside of most classrooms for ten minutes or so) is lecture of the "i am now talking, and will continue to talk w/o interruption for the next 90 minutes" variety... no shit---i've heard instructors go on for well over an hour w/o as much as a burp... and i've seen the glazed over look in students' eyes that results... some get it, some don't---but the real problem is that even the some who do come to learning as a result in a passive way... i'm sure you know what i mean here... dialogue as such is at best reduced to occasional comprehension checks... and this is in fact what much of the sciences and engineering disciplines do when it comes to pedagogy, aside from problem-solving (which is usually handed over to teaching assistants in recitation sections and the like)...

i need to start here when i talk about lecturing, b/c this is the reality of most of the lecture-mode instruction i've seen... and when i try to break a classroom down into groups, and when i try to turn over to a given class its fair share of responsibility in the learning process, i'm often greeted by a "but we're here to know what you think" response... which is to say, they want to sit back and have me tell them what's important re life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness... which i'll do on occasion, but not all the time... still, in their other classes, they can sit back and watch tv... which is why it's so tough for me initially when i complicate the site of teaching, and opt for something a bit more dynamic and (if i may) interactive...

among students, i mean... all three of my current classes have, at this midterm point in the semester, gotten used to me not being there for a part of each period... i get up and walk away, walk right the fuck out of the room in fact, and allow them to work out certain tasks w/o my intervention... in fact, when i try to intervene, i'm sometimes greeted with a "why don't you let us alone" response... after all, they have to deal with me in AND out of class---on-line, in the online lists i use for each class...

btw, much of the problem with most of the "distance learning" i've seen falls under this latter category (we might talk, on the other hand, about how distance learning could be about learning distance)...

well anyway... if it's true that any form or mode of teaching can be student-centered, then i suppose, depending on context, any form or mode of writing can be democratic, no?... or does this parallel not hold?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

199. Aviva Vogel
Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
Wed 8 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-08 14:25:33 EDT, you write:

Joe, I appreciated your message, and addressing the (below) portion of it only for now, I thought you'd appreciate the following excerpt. While it's certainly no answer, it is a curious and pertinent take on your question:

"Why I Write" by Joan Didion

In many ways writing is the act of saying I, of imposing oneself upon other people, of saying listen to me, see it my way, change your mind. It's an aggressive, even a hostile act. You can disguise its aggressiveness all you want with veils of subordinate clauses and qualifiers and tentative subjunctives, with ellipses and evasions--with the whole manner of intimating rather than claiming, of alluding rather than stating--but there's no getting around the fact that setting words on paper is the tactic of a secret bully, an invasion, an imposition of the writer's sensibility on the reader's most private space.

(Of course, I don't entirely agree with her, but there's enough "truth" in her statement to enjoy a startling moment....)
--Aviva Vogel

> it's somewhat presumptuous > of me to think that i can actually "construct" a readership, no?---out of > living, fully conscious and articulate beings whose predilections are at > least as valid, on the surface of things, as are mine?...
>
> this constitutes, as i see it, the push-pull logic of trying to engage with > other human beings in ways with which they may not be accustomed... on the > one hand, we attempt to pull readers, as it were, into engaging us through > our texts (or if you prefer, simply our texts---or simply us!)... at the > same time, we're pushy in this gesture---we expect that our readers, > whoever they are, will appreciate our (at least partial) 'reneging' of > author-ity...

↑ Index

200. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher working class heroes...
Wed 8 Oct 1997

---

maria, that's a difficult question for a lot of reasons, but i'll do my best to give it an initial go... i'm bushed at the moment, so i'll probably digress like a sono-fabitch...

first, once you're made aware of your class, you don't forget that you inhabit a class... and one way to be made aware of your class is to switch classes!... i mean, you can start out working class, end up upper class, or vice versa... un-like gender (for the most part)...

now of course the norm is onward and upward---that is, the normative structure expects this from each of us, in this country... and if you do---move onward and upward i mean---why then there are plenty of opportunities to be reminded of where you used to be... in this sense, yes---being working class can entail narra-tives that deal with loss and gain, as you put it... as do so many other narra-tives, right?... which as you know does not mean that there's nothing therefore "to it," but---

and of course "working class" can be taken then simply as a subset of those other structural-institutional realities and discourses (race/gender/class etc)... this much you already know..

now i tend mself to get very edgy about this term, working class... i see it as a convenience, as lumping together various experiences/behaviors and the like that emerge from a particular way of living and working in the world... probably, as i come to the term, only applicable to this century and part of the prior, in a particular part of the world, in fact... but i get edgy about it b/c, depending on who's using it, i can almost immediately get a sense that the term is actively despised, celebrated, challenged, or plain misunderstood... it's a rare occasion when someone will use it the way i understand it...

one facet of being in the working class, at any point in one's life, is that (depending perhaps on the intersection of your class and ethnicity and of course other factors) you might very well have been exposed to the oft-noted anti-intellectualism of u.s. public life... whereas many in the working class want their sons and daughters to go to college and get an education, they're distrustful of too much "intelligence" (in my view, if you haven't come across this behavior, you've led a relatively sheltered life)... this is the sort of line that leads to a book like richard rodriguez's _hunger of memory_ (with rr it's ethnicity and class---but i find rodriguez too conservative in terms of his politics)...

i must put in a word here, btw, about the relationship between middle and working classes... used to be the word "middle class" spoke primarily, or at least with some urgency, to the term working class... not now---the middle classes seem now to be much more various, "salary hourly professional skilled semi-skilled blue collar white collar pink collar" and so forth... not the run of the mill the word might have evoked during the 50s, when you might have had two or three designations at hand, and when working class folks took pride in being the majority middle class... perhaps what you might call a working mythology...

what the anti-intellectual drift means is that any attempt at theorizing what is meant by "working class," by those in or out of the working class, will sometimes be met with resistance simply B/C it's likely to be taken as an ostentatious display of smarts (recall orwell's problems in this regard)... i can't tell you how many times i've been called a smartass by my old man...

but you ask me what's up with this... and what's up with this is, in part, a matter of what i feel comfortable with...

when i walk into a room and start shooting the shit, and notice that two or three folks are put off by my language, i know immediately that i'm out of my class... i just have to drop a couple of fucking-A's and that's it... and it doesn't matter that i'm now middle class, or that we all hold doctorates---the point is that the response i'm getting can only be accounted for by class differences---from my past, right...

you see?... i mean, i can be here but i'm still there, i'm there but i'm still here---no loss or gain implied or intended...

now generationally, the older working class folks, most i knew, were respectful in public and around children and around folks with money---but swore like troupers among themselves... some of us, the slightly newer generational models, have simply refused to silence this aspect of our upbringing... some of us figure that, if reading four-letter words in literature is ok, why then using such words around others is ok... of course, this isn't to countenance insult or hate speech... but it is to reckon a somewhat different sense of what constitutes "offensive" language...

you can see the problems somebody like me might run into in the classroom, no?---esp. today...

"but swearing isn't professional"

fuck you it's not--- i mean, fuck me---

you see?... i mean, this past of mine has now become a matter of my professional self...

nothing essential here, i hope you'll note... but a set of markers that, all taken, push and pull one this way and that, in sometimes identifiable directions... a marker in fact that you might be interested in: the response of working class folks to books... working class folks, the ones that i knew, might stand in awe of books... depends... books that made you famous, that anybody could read (cf. democracy thread), yes---this is what they stood on awe of, and i hope most of you will not find this too too condescending, b/c it describes my father in many ways... but book learnin, as against other ways of knowing---nother thing entirely... depends... einstein?... fuckin genius... stevenson?...

well---politics-wise, paradox, right...

now i've heard, often enough, the argument as to how anybody who writes these days is generally middle class, ergo it's pointless to appeal to working class values as a key factor in one's writing (and i've heard this argument both in terms of content, and in terms of more nuanced discussions of subject position and the like)... but this wouldn't explain, for example, how a book like ben hamper's _rivethead_ (which i've been teaching for a few years now) comes to be written (whatever you make of it)...

even more: if you pursue this logic---that all writing is middle class b/c you're probably living middle class as a writer---this would suggest that working class urgencies are not to be conveyed/embodied/evoked once one leaves said class (financially speaking).. that one needs actually to "occupy" (and here you can see where the discussion could easily take on ontological proportions---if i let it!) a, say, factory-line subject position in order to write with---i keep using this word---urgency about the factory... and even then---b/c you can't be working on the factory line and writing at the same time... etc etc etc --- clearly, such logic is patently absurd on the face of it... one may as well say that any moment of writing is marked by the relative freedom to write... but this sort of "freedom," i hope we all know, is often a matter of necessities that owe their emergence to---not memories, necessarily (if them too), but ways of behaving and believing and feeling that are in part of a function of one's prior class (among other shifting and not-so-shifting markers)...

having come from working class "stock" (as they used to say), and having spent a good portion of my life at the poverty line, my tendencies are clearly a present danger for me professionally (for example) in an institution that is only now, i think, really beginning to articulate the stresses and strains of folks whose parents do not hold college degrees (oh the history would have to go back to late 19th century anyway, to really dig it all out)... and in fact, when i worked as a salary worker, i often ran into similar problems... i identified in many cases with the hourly workers, the ones who viewed me as "management"...

and if this ain't the long and the short of it, maria: the very fact that i'm telling you stories about mself sez something about "theorizing," about my suspicions re talking about mself in the abstract, as it were, w/o talking turkey too...

best,

joe

↑ Index

201. R. Gancie
SoKalled
Wed 8 Oct 1997

Tom. I have no problem with the notion that science makes useful contributions to the world as long as such sentiments remain a notion. Unfortunately, it has already gone well beyond the benign passiveness of the phrase "making useful contributions to our understanding of the world." For example, science uncritically substitutes the contingent and historically bound "notion" of existence for that of being and the immutability inhering in what Stanley Rosen calls the "ontological copula." What's worse is that science writers make this substitution whenever they damn well please because they are not under any constraints to be more rigorous in their attempts to describe physical phenomena through language. I find that Dennett consistently misinterprets opposing points of view. It appears to me that he does this because he cannot comprehend arguments that arise from concerns about epistemological inconsistencies. His positivism is loaded with assumptions that he cannot acknowledge. He sees individuals who address the efficacy of these assumptions as being inconvenient and irrelevent and he expresses surprise and bewilderment that other people might take them seriously. Hofstader is another guy who consistently says that if he can't get it there must be nothing to it. Read him on aleatoric music. He is just as narrow as Dennett. Michael Dirda caught the essence of Hofstader in his review of Le Ton Beau De Marot in the Washington Post Book World for Sunday, June 29. "The man [Hofstader] hardly considers the moral or humane character of great works of art..." Dirda wrote. Then Dirda instead of following his better nature, says astonishingly that criticizing Hofstader's book "is cavilling before riches." Dirda wants his Shakespeare and to eat it too. Indeed, it is possible to get your poetics from sources such as Dennett and Hofstader---but at what cost? I don't mind scientists waxing poetic until they start forming organizations with other peoples monies to prevent certain other people from waxing poetic about the same phenomena. Primarily, scientists write popular books for the money. If the public is dazzled by science's poetic yawps tax money becomes easier to acquire. If you write a breakthrough book there are royalties. Scientists, for some good reasons and many bad ones, have always felt threatened by the vox populi---witness Cassini. With power occasionally comes consequences no matter how much you are in favor with the prevailing economic forces. I wish science's motives were as pure as you'd like them to be. Then when crunch time arrives they might be more open to others' opinions. See Oppenheimer and the Compton group in Chicago. Logical Positivism has "failed", "collapsed" whatever; but no not Strong A.I. It's just decades behind schedule; and this after taking hundreds of millions of dollars in taxpayer money with pronouncements such as "The mind is a meat machine."--Marvin Minsky. And "My thermostat has three beliefs; It's too hot in here. It's too cold in here. It's just right in here."--John McCarthy. Roger Penrose has shown in his two books, Emperor's New Mind and Shadows of the Mind that Strong A.I. is "a priori impossible." Penrose, however, fails to realize that the more powerful elements control language as well research money. If the definition of intelligence for example is altered and generally accepted to include the capacities of a compass to point north then the compass will become a sentient class of beings. I think it was Thales who thought that lodestones had souls. I know it was John McCarthy who thought thermostats did. If Barrow and Tipler are talking about some future "intelligent computer", they cannot be addressing anyone who has explicitly denied that hypothetical existence its "full human rights." The deniers no more exist than the hypothetical machines. But sorry Tom they intend for existing technology to have full human rights. Think of the legal implications. You may as well think, Barrow and Tipler can't. Don't read the Barrow and Tipler passage to women if you want to have any kind of social life. (Actually, don't read it to anybody except Strong A.I. advocates.)I've shown it to at least fifty women and they unanimously found it offensive. No doubt Sokal would have some insights to offer these women. Finally, to my knowledge no one has ever lynched a CRAY though they are sold in the marketplace. Neither their creators or the hypothetical machines will suffer any of the historical oppression that was and is visited upon women and blacks. So what the fuck are two pampered scientists like Barrow and Tipler talking about? They've never missed a meal in their lives and the machines don't eat. The oppression Barrow and Tipler fabricate reveals at best a juvenile aesthetic and at worst the Self-Reproducing Automata agenda whereby human beings will be replaced by their machine progeny. This wasn't proposed by Ray Bradbury or Dan Quayle but by one of the founding fathers of artificial intelligence, John von Neumann. No, Barrow and Tipler's remark is inane and insulting and reveals that moral lacuna that resides at the heart of the scientific project in general and since time immemorial has been associated with systems of quantification and formalization. I think it is appropriate to wonder why, now at the advent of global ecological events which appear overwhelmingly negative, the scientific community and its corporate sponsors will broach no criticism at the epistemological and hermeneutic level. And this when the same questions were raised 68 years ago by the very physicists and mathematicians that made the present technological circumstances possible. Events like the building of the atomic bomb produced an intolerance that makes all such speculation seem a "diriment to our unific and expanding order..." as David Jones put it in his great poem on conformity, The Fatigue.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

202. Susan Wheeler

Marianne Moore

Wed 8 Oct 1997

Any recos for texts that treat Moore's work's relationship to the self, or her own relationship to tradition (outside of the recent Fenton piece in NYRB) would be greatly appreciated backchannel. Many thanks.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

203. R. Gancie
SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Tom. Minsky quote should read, "The brain is a meat machine." Sorry, writing from memory and in a hurry after a long days work takes its toll.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

204. George Bowering
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Thu 9 Oct 1997

> *I strongly recommend to you a sensative poet called Robert Lowell (and come to think of it, another named Robert Bly)...They have lots to "express"...*
>
> Mark P.

That is exactly why I have always distrusted those two guys, because they are expressing stuff, which implies to me that words are something they USE.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

205. Rachel Levitsky
Re: social tangles
Thu 9 Oct 1997

David--
I've been off for a few days but catching up caught yr post and I thought of this, recently read.

The factory, the factory universe, the one breathing for you. There's no other air but the one it pumps, rejects.

One is on the inside.

All spaces are occupied: everything has become garbage. Skin, teeth, eyes.

One moves around in between shapeless partitions. One comes across people, sandwiches, coke bottles, instruments, paper, crates, screws. One moves in a vague manner, outside time. Neither beginning nor end.
Things exist together, simultaneously.

Inside the factory, things are being made all the time.

One is inside, in the great factory universe, the one breathing for you.

--Leslie Kaplan from _L'Exces-L'usine_--#11, trans. Serge Gavronsky

Also Minnie Bruce Pratt is writing some very wonderful cantos of the real, one I know is one we published,"The A&P" in _Bombay Gin_ 1997.

David Bromige wrote:
>
> "I disagree...that art can contain the same sense of social urgency > as...the discussions on this list"
>
> sorry i dont recall who posted the above....and i dont want to quibble over > vocabularies....but thought i'd post these 2 items & see what response they > get : do people find them containers/containments of "social urgency" ? (I > do).
>
> Proletatian Portrait
>
> A big young bareheaded woman > in an apron
>
> Her hair slicked back standing > on the street
>
> One stockinged foot toeing
> the sidewalk
>
> Her shoe in her hand. Looking > intently into it
>
> She pulls out the paper insole
> to find the nail
>
> That has been hurting her
>

> **********
>
> A factory
> has also another aspect, which we call the financial aspect
> It gives people the power to buy (wages, dividends
> which are power to buy) but it is also the cause of prices
> or values, financial, I mean financial values
> It pays workers, and pays _for_ material.
> What it pays in wages and dividends
> stays fluid, as power to buy, and this power is less,
> per forza, damn blast your intellex, is less > than the total payments made by the factory
> (as wages, dividends AND payments for raw material
> bank charges etcetera
> and all, that is the whole, that is the total > of these is added into the total of prices
> caused by that factory, any damn factory
> and there is and must be therefore a clog
> and the power to purchase can never > (under the present system) catch up with
> prices at large,
> and the light became so bright and so blindin'
> in this layer of paradise
> that the mind of man was bewildered.
>
> (excerpted from Pound, Canto XXXVIII)
>
> *******
>
> a footnote to another recent thread, re bly & williams (since "Proletarian > Portrait" is by williams)--bly's "williams had no inner life" is pretty > close to pure in the projection department. Bly, the man who chautauquas > around like a rotarian of spirituality, talking and talking about the inner > man, accuses williams, the smalltown doctor whose attic-typed poems are > revelatory but require some consideration, some quiet time on behalf of > both reader and writer, of everything he himself lacks. Williams can only > answer him with silence.

↑ Index

206. George Bowering
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Thu 9 Oct 1997

> I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?

I find some words beautiful. Like chicken. I love that word. In fact it is my favourite word. I like it better than a chicken, in fact.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

207. George Bowering
Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
Thu 9 Oct 1997

> In a message dated 97-10-08 05:23:15 EDT, you write:
>
> Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.
>
> What???

What do you mean, what? That sounds about right to me.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

208. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
Thu 9 Oct 1997

On Wed, 8 Oct 1997, George Bowering wrote:

> In a message dated 97-10-08 05:23:15 EDT, you write:
>
> Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.
>
> What???
>
> What do you mean, what? That sounds about right to me.

I agree - below is the followup post I sent to a couple of lists - Alan

---

Lessen / Up (Where's my Jumper?)

"Subject: starving to death in a land of plenty

Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier."

Now please note, _somatic_ knowledge, the field of the body - flows, in- tensifications, inscriptions blurred among moments of affect. Now this is not the signifier of the tattoo, nor is it an n-dimensional representation or substrate. One might consider it a _topography_ not in fact.

Certain an external event, bicycle fall!, can occasion a somatic response, but as Scarry might say, the reports fall short of the event, nor are the reports more than, perhaps, a meandering _among_ descriptors, all of which miss the literal mark.

Here of course I am relating "the signifier" to declarative sentences which purport "true" descriptions of events, states, processes: "I fell off my bike!" Now it is not true that these sentences are the scaffolding of somatic knowledge; they are a residue which creates certain effects within the listener, which are designed to reproduce what might be consid- ered a _shell_ structure in relation to the somatic kernel.

Here, in this space, note carefully now, we are constrained by and large to ascii-text or a text which follows the protocols sufficiently to per- mit transmission - in other words, there is always an etiquette at work. Thus (not that this necessarily follows), we are within a land of plenty, and even ascii-text expands and opens spaces (I write to you - I create packets, message-ids, a space/shift/slot in your inbox) indefinitely - there is little preordained limit on this, besides the practical exig- encies occasioned by various ISPs.

But then, beyond this bot-ulism, this reproduction which may run of its own accord, there is the somatic, starved, ill-served and servicing. The body mumbles, burps, gurgles, pisses, shits, scratches, ahems, argghs, yells, jumps, runs, sings, huddles, stands, sits, or so it might seem, and whatever the report might be, there's always a _senseless_ disjunction.

This is a _test_ of thoughtless language:

What is your body doing _now_?
What are you _thinking_ of doing?
Is what you are _thinking_ of doing, what your body will be doing?
Will you be doing the thinking for your body?
Will your body be doing the thinking for you?
What is your body doing _now_?

Thus starved in a plentiful land, somatic language, translated, becomes one with the flattening of affect and capital, for it is capital that creates protocol, etiquette, permission, for what can only be considered _the passing of signs._

↑ Index

209. Tom Beard
Re: SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

First of all, thanks for pointing out that Barrow and Tipler were referring to current technology: this is indeed stupid and offensive. But I've never heard of anyone claiming that "intelligent computers" currently exist, at least not to the extent that they could remotely compared to human beings.

On the other hand, I don't find Penrose's arguments against strong AI at all convincing. I would side with Minsky, Turing, Hofstadter et al in considering it possible that at some time we may devise systems that are on a par with human intelligence. At that stage, we might wish we had considered the ethical implications, and extended our thoughts of what might constitute life and consciousness outside of the organic realm. I certainly wouldn't claim that turning off my PC constitutes murder, but if it passsed a Turing test and you were unable to distinguish its responses from that of a human being, I would hope that you might think twice about rebooting. At the very least, proponents of strong AI and artificial life force us to rethink our preconception that life and intellect can only exist within flesh.

I can't agree with Dirda that "[Hofstader] hardly considers the moral or humane character of great works of art" - this might apply to Le Ton Beau De Marot (which I haven't read), but certainly not to his essay on Chopin (see Metamagical Themas). And if he does concentrate on the formal aspects of art rather than the "moral or humane" dimension, is this such a crime? Hofstadter recognizes that human beings aren't limited to dealing with humanity as a subject, and can find or create great beauty in abstractions, such as a Bach fugue, an Escher drawing, or a mathematical theorem. People who consider such austere arts to be cold and inhuman have, in my opinion, a very limited view of what it means to be "human". If H. prefers a Beautiful Aperiodic Crystal of Harmony to a Composition of Aleatorically Generated Elements, that is his prerogative. But then, I like Kraftwerk, so what do I know?

I don't quite agree with Minsky that "The mind is a meat machine": I consider mind to be software that is in principle "platform-independent". And while I no longer agree with John McCarthy's statement about even basic cybernetic systems (such as a thermostat) possessing rudimentary beliefs and desires (my conception of consciousness has changed since I read Jaynes), I do find it useful to consider such concepts as intellect and consciousness as part of a continuum. I don't think one can draw a line (somewhere between humans and the other primates? between primates and other mammals? between multi- and single-celled organisms? between bacteria and machines?) and say "here is where intellect ends". And I don't think that McCarthy would have used the word "soul" in the same way that Thales did (I don't think "soul" is a particularly useful word here, laden as it is with religious and mystical overtones).

Please don't think that I'm trying to excuse every excess committed in the name of "science" or "progress". Maybe I am too touchy on the subject, having survived a high school science teacher who was a Creationist. As a former operational meteorologist, I'm only too aware of the fallibility of science and the way that natural phenomena resist all the narratives and theories that we thrust upon them. We make hypotheses every day about how the atmosphere "should" behave, and have these hypotheses disproved more often than we would like. We are much more aware of the tentative, provisional nature of scientific knowledge than most non-scientists acknowledge.

But as a writer, I am glad to have some of that knowledge, contingent as it may be. You write, "Indeed, it is possible to get your poetics from sources such as Dennett and Hofstader---but at what cost?". Well, most of my poetics comes from Creeley, Oppen, Leggott and Manhire, rather than science writers, but I can't ignore what I've read in the realms of neurology, biology, mathematics or cognitive science when I'm writing. Both science and poetry speak to me about what it is to be human, and give me different (though not necessarily incompatible) tools for investigating experience.

Tom Beard.

"Two cheers for reductionism!"

- Stephen J Weinberg

↑ Index

210. Tom Beard
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Thu 9 Oct 1997

> > I'm curious...why use words, rather than a saxophone or oil paints, if there > > isn't supposed to be some amount of denotative quality to them?

I read an interesting quote from William Gass today, which may be of some sidelong relevance to this:

"The elaboration that can be accorded the letter 'r', for example, far outruns its meaning, yet it would receive no elaboration at all if it were not a letter."

The way I read this, when translating from letters to words, is that "the elaboration (or deconstruction/disjunction/torquing/whatever) that can be accorded a word far outruns its meaning, yet it would receive no elaboration (etc) if it were not a word." It is the fact that words unavoidably denote that leads us (well, some of us) to undercut that denotation, to play with the words as if we could ignore their denotation, to pretend that they denoted something else.

The very fact that words are much less suited to non-denotative abstraction than saxophones or oil paints sometimes makes it more interesting to try.

The Gass quote, by the way, I found in "The Alphabet Abecedarium" by Richard J Firmage, which I am finding a delightful read. Another interesting quote from Gass, which I saw in U&lc (why am I always coming across Gass in typographic journals and books? Perhaps I should read the guy!), was along the lines of "Is it possible to write a tragedy in limerick?" This is one of the best summations I've seen of the whole form/content saga.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

211. henry gould
Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
Thu 9 Oct 1997

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 01:15:10 -0400 Alan Jen Sondheim said:
>> >
>> >> Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.

This sentence seems rather self-contradictory. Without that little "signifier" up there, how would we know there was some generality you wished to discuss called "somatic knowledge"? So the 2 are already entangled.

& I would reverse your subsequent elaboration on this sentence. I'd say - the word becomes flesh. Why do you attack words for speaking out of turn, or stones or the body for mumbling now & then? The stones long to sing in the archway. I would agree with the psychologist- philosopher-camp survivor Frankl - our challenge is not to live in a meaningless existentialist disjunct world; our challenge is to come to terms with pervasive cosmic order beyond our comprehension. Frankl & Kafka are maybe 2 sides of a coin. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

212. henry gould
defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

I, too, am tired of pooh-poohing poor langpo, and am not going to babble on about that. Mark Prejsnar & others put up a very good defense of a wide stream of poetry which approaches language as free play and material for art. My position is, that while I admire enjoy & respect much of the work discussed as examples of this stream, if I think about the theoretical or "language" under-pinnings of poetry in general, the idea of turning away strict denotation for free artistic play is fine and stimulating & promising - but insufficient. (ok, Jordan, I remember your complaint about "it's always not enough". ok, you're right, why am I complaining...).

I'm not complaining. It just seems like there's a potential trap with this approach. The trap is that if you're trying to avoid narrow reference or denotation too much, you end up with the reverse : THE WORDS NARROWLY ONLY DENOTE THEMSELVES. THE POEM NARROWLY MEANS ONLY ITSELF. THE ART IS NARROWLY ONLY AUTONOMOUS.

What I miss - and I say in all seriousness, as everybody knows this is my foot of clay, I miss it because I probably haven't looked for it - WHAT I MISS anyway in this whole postmodern stream is two things: a sense of musical continuity and an attention to the SEMANTICS of the poem - the communicative MEANING(S) as a field of play. In order to communicate meaning there has to be a pervasive motive, an impulse, an authorial hand in every dimension; but in order to "play" the meaning must be musical, have some kind of harmony in dis-harmony. So what is required is not a blockade of denotation but a manifold reference, a manifestive manifold. Word as four-fold allegory. Now Ashbery, for example, is an avatar of the postmodern play approach, and he definitely understands musical development. But I find no pith in his work, no stringency; he's like a huge spongy mushroom from the woods in upstate NY transplanted to NY city. Clark Coolidge is great - a rhythmic jazz drummer of language - very stimulating - but I look in vain for the conjunction of music with semantics there. It's all music. I want to be taken someplace in thought as well as sound, not have my thought always dead-ended by ambivalence, discontinuity, and meaninglessness. These are just examples. They can of course be countered with dozens & dozens of examples of well-meanin thoughful overbaked tepid sodden cautious pudgy boney academic prof-poets, their poems full of "meaning", pathos, experience, sensitivity, political correctness, etc. etc. for which the Prejsnar school provides a welcome relief. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

213. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Defining Language Poetry

Thu 9 Oct 1997

Your way of putting it reminds me of the passage from Zukofsky that Peter Quatermain quotes so often (which admittedly is Zuke making a point, using very highly-charged rhetoric): subordinating the writing process to a dogged, four-square "message" is to take a "predatory" attituide toward the poem..

Mark P.

On Wed, 8 Oct 1997, George Bowering wrote:

> *I strongly recommend to you a sensative poet called Robert Lowell (and come to think of it, another named Robert Bly)...They have lots to "express"...*
>
> Mark P.
>
> That is exactly why I have always distrusted those two guys, because they are expressing stuff, which implies to me that words are something they USE.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

214. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Thu 9 Oct 1997

---

yes but i wonder if the "bird" film didn't at least avoid a kind of prurience gooch has been accused of.

↑ Index

215. Christina Fairbank Chirot
For Che Guevara
Thu 9 Oct 1997

(from dave baptiste chirot)

Today is the 30th anniversary of the execution of Che Guevara, 9 October 1967.

A day of respect work and study in honor of his example!

Viva Che!

"And from all the other brother nations of America, and from our land, if it still survived as an examplle, the voicee of the peoples will answer you, from that moment on and for ever: "It shall be so: may liberty be conquered in each corner of America!"

Che Guevara, 28 July 1960

One day the people struck their captive match, prayed with anger and supremely full, circular,
closed their birthday with elective hands;
the despots were already dragging padlock
and in the padlock their dead bacteria . . .

Battles? No! Passions And passions preceded by aches with bars of hopes,
by aches of nations with hopes of men!
Death and passion for peace, of common people!
Death and passion for war among olive trees, let's get it straight!
Thus in your breath the winds change atmospheric needles
and the tombs change key in your chest,
your frontal rising to the first power of martyrdom.

--Cesar Valljo, "Hymn to the Volunteers for the Republic"
Spain Take this Cup From Me (trans. Eshleman)

"How does one reconcile individual effort with the needs of society? We again have to recall what each of our lives was like, what each of us did and thought, as a doctor or in any other other public health function, prior to the revolution. We have to do so with profound critical enthusiasm. And we will conclude that almost everything we thought and felt in that past epoch should be filed away, and that a new type of human being should be created. And if each one of us is his own architect of that type human type, then creating that new type of human being . . . will be that much easier."

--Che Guevara, 28 July 1960

↑ Index

216. Gwyn McVay
SoKalled misreading
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Flipping through a couple of posts quickly, my little meat brain read one phrase as "Pinsky's opposition to AI." I wondered who had interviewed the Poet Laureate on the subject of AI-produced poetry, and why he would feel threatened by what is still a collection of fairly lame attempts...

Gwyn(?)

↑ Index

217. Judy Roitman
Re: SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

I'm not familiar with everyone discussed in R. Gancie's message, but the ones I am familiar with are not universally loved in the science/math community. For example, Penrose's books on the mind got quite negative reviews in the American Mathematical Society's Notices (the AMS is the main math research organization), essentially on the grounds that he doesn't understand Godel. Hofstader is widely regarded as either ignorant or a lightweight, depending on how charitable one feels at the moment. Barrow's attachment to the anthropomorphic principle (= the universe exists so we can) is so obviously ego-serving it's hard to take seriously. As for John von Neumann, yes, he was a great mathematician. That and $1.75 will get you a decaf capuccino in our little town.

The point being that the science/math community is as varied as the literary one, and folks of all sorts tend to spout off about things they don't understand not realizing that they don't understand.

You learn one methodology and apply it to everything, sooner or later you make a fool of yourself, yes? Doesn't matter what that methodology is.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

218. Mark Prejsnar

Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School

Thu 9 Oct 1997

Henry, I think your last post (re: what you find "insufficient" etc.) was excellent, and fair. I guess my various polemical fussilades have been to some extent, about trying to clear space. Space for a lot of different approaches. I often feel that put-downs of LangPo, by collective label, seem to be about wanting to retreat from some of the superb work of the last 30 years, and to retreat from the very large spaces it has opened up. The collective putting-down does another thing, it tends to obscure discussion of the poetry per se, and particularly the work of specific poets. A friend recently found Ariel 8 (the Barrett Watten issue) at a book sale, and since he already owned it, bought it for me. (I haven't had the dough recently to get too many mags..) Norman Fischer's essay on the shape of Watten's career in that issue, seems to me one of the most exciting critical discussions I've happened on in a long time..A great example of the kind of attention I feel we should be giving more poets; some of the really great ones are in danger of disappearing beneath a too-easily-employed collective label. (In the mid-eighties two of Wattens books, which were at that time somewhat rare, Opera-Work and 1-10, were available to me thru a library where I worked, and had a great impact on me; ...I agree with Fischer that his work is special and important, and recommend to everyone the new collection of his stuff to date, "Frame," from Sun & Moon,,)

I guess what I'm saying, is that I value a community of practitioner/readers, who spend more energy sharing and discussing what they like, than dissing what they find less useful, less exciting. It seems harmless and reasonable (I've been second to none in explaining what I find bankrupt in the academic workshop APR-ish poetry establishment) until someone attacks what you consider valuble. Than it becomes clearer A. how any attacks you don't agree with always sound to you like they proceed from careerist envy and spite; and B. how unproductive they can seem. Much better to use our puny available resources to build the things we most value in the way of alternative poetries..

Mark P.
atlanta

↑ Index

219. Judy Roitman
Re: SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

A story not exactly about Minsky.

Once a very long time ago I was visiting friends who were being visited by Minsky and his daughter. A man had just awakened from a very long - 10 year? - coma in which he apparently was aware of everything around him (and how could this be a coma one asks? but at the time we didn't) and we were all clucking about the poor man as one does hearing news like this and Minsky's daughter -- about 17 at the time -- said "why are you so sorry for him? think of all the thinking he was able to do!" We all looked at her incredulously.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

220. groberts
Re: defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

"An Optomist"

We tricked-up poets practice to deceive:
Ask of us and Voila! you shall receive.

"A Pessimist"

Delivering all things you can conceive Doesn't sound much like any life I live.

↑ Index

221. henry g
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Thu 9 Oct 1997

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 09:45:28 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>Your way of putting it reminds me of the passage from Zukofsky that Peter >Quatermain quotes so often (which admittedly is Zuke making a point, >using very highly-charged rhetoric): subordinating the writing process to >a dogged, four-square "message" is to take a "predatory" attituide toward >the poem..

this argument assumes the message comes from the poet. see Mandelstam's "Slate Ode" - one of heaviest & most direct of his poems about poetry. the "command" comes from "elsewhere", from the somatic (or semantic) depths, if you like. people get tired of my carping, I know. I get tired of it. but poetry is deeper, weirder, & more global than we think. we've had our teddy bearigans & our lang-pooh bears. now go sit at the feet of those russian bears for a while. that's been my "message" here for a long time. do what I do, not what I say. [to the tune of "Song of the Volga Boatmen"] grrrrrrrr..... - Henry Gould

"the sermon of the plumbline" - O.M.

↑ Index

222. henry g
Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
Thu 9 Oct 1997

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 10:17:38 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>
>I guess what I'm saying, is that I value a community of >practitioner/readers, who spend more energy sharing and discussing what >they like, than dissing what they find less useful, less exciting. It >seems harmless and reasonable (I've been second to none in explaining what >I find bankrupt in the academic workshop APR-ish poetry establishment) >until someone attacks what you consider valuble. Than it becomes >clearer A. how any attacks you don't agree with always sound to you like >they proceed from careerist envy and spite; and B. how unproductive they >can seem. Much better to use our puny available resources to build the >things we most value in the way of alternative poetries..

Mark, you have solid grounds to criticize me & others who spout off endlessly dissing things in general. I confess to being a laughably lazy reader who works across the street from one of THE premier collections of poetry in english (the Harris collection) & hardly ever going in there. Yet your statement above seems to be a confession of the clique mentality. Any attacks on the poetry YOU like are seen as careerist, etc. So I still say, mea culpa, I'm sorry I talk too much, but as somebody who's been writing in a different vein for at least as long as the postmodernists & all their ilk, I still find a productive place for literary spite. If you can't look in a completely different direction once in a while you're gonna get very parochial fast. But yeah, more positive reviews would be good (I HAVE sent a FEW to this list over the yrs...) - Henry G.

↑ Index

223. Maria Damon

Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara

Thu 9 Oct 1997

At 8:59 AM -0500 10/9/97, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:
>yes but i wonder if the "bird" film didn't at least avoid a kind of prurience >gooch has been accused of.

bird wasnt sexually prurient but wallowed in a kind of artist-as-victim, and especially black-artist-as-addict bathos that made it a dismal viewing experience...

↑ Index

224. Layne Russell

Re: For Che Guevara

Thu 9 Oct 1997

(from dave baptiste chirot)
>
> Today is the 30th anniversary of the execution of Che Guevara, 9
> October 1967.
>
> A day of respect work and study in honor of his example!
>
> Viva Che!
>
> "And from all the other brother nations of America, and from our > land, if it still survived as an examplle, the voicee of the peoples will > answer you, from that moment on and for ever: "It shall be so: may liberty > be conquered in each corner of America!"
>
> Che Guevara, 28 July 1960
>
> One day the people struck their captive match, prayed with anger
> and supremely full, circular,

> closed their birthday with elective hands;
> the despots were already dragging padlock
> and in the padlock their dead bacteria . . .
>
> Battles? No! Passions And passions preceded > by aches with bars of hopes,
> by aches of nations with hopes of men!
> Death and passion for peace, of common people!
> Death and passion for war among olive trees, let's get it > straight!
> Thus in your breath the winds change atmospheric needles
> and the tombs change key in your chest,
> your frontal rising to the first power of martyrdom.
>
> --Cesar Valljo, "Hymn to the Volunteers for the Republic"
> Spain Take this Cup From Me (trans. Eshleman)
>
> "How does one reconcile individual effort with the needs of > society? We again have to recall what each of our lives was like, what > each of us did and thought, as a doctor or in any other other public > health function, prior to the revolution. We have to do so with profound > critical enthusiasm. And we will conclude that almost everything we > thought and felt in that past epoch should be filed away, and that a new > type of human being should be created. And if each one of us is his own > architect of that type human type, then creating that new type of human > being . . . will be that much easier."
>
> --Che Guevara, 28 July 1960

thank you dave heard a feature on Che this morning on KPFA while enjoying some quiet moments before my first high school English class

layne

p.s. have polished a couple corners on the Yvonne Rainer/red balls dance poem. I think it's there now.

http://www.sonic.net/layne
"A Quiet Place" -- Poetry

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

↑ Index
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

225. Rachel Levitsky
Re: defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

"once you play a note, it goes into the atmosphere and is gone." --Sun Ra

↑ Index

226. Alan Jen Sondheim
Re: starving to death in a land of plenty
Thu 9 Oct 1997

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997, henry gould wrote:

> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 01:15:10 -0400 Alan Jen Sondheim said:
>
> Somatic knowledge has nothing to do with the signifier.
>
> This sentence seems rather self-contradictory. Without that little "signifier" up there, how would we know there was some generality you wished to discuss called "somatic knowledge"? So the 2 are already entangled.

Only in totality, not in particulars.

>
> & I would reverse your subsequent elaboration on this sentence.
> I'd say - the word becomes flesh. Why do you attack words for speaking > out of turn, or stones or the body for mumbling now & then? The stones > long to sing in the archway. I would agree with the psychologist-> philosopher-camp survivor Frankl - our challenge is not to live > in a meaningless existentialist disjunct world; our challenge is to > come to terms with pervasive cosmic order beyond our comprehension.
> Frankl & Kafka are maybe 2 sides of a coin. - Henry Gould
>

I didn't say anything was either meaningless or existentialist; I was pointing to the specificity of _this_ space in fact. And how the word becomes flesh is beyond me, although I do understand the performativity of words.

Alan

↑ Index

227. Suzanne Burns
unsubscribe?
Thu 9 Oct 1997

I'd like to temporarily unsubscribe-- I'm going away for a few weeks.

How do I do that?

SB

↑ Index

228. William Marsh
Re: defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

At 08:15 AM 10/9/97 EDT, Henry G wrote:
>What I miss - and I say in all seriousness, as everybody knows this >is my foot of clay, I miss it because I probably haven't looked for >it - WHAT I MISS anyway in this whole postmodern stream is two things:
>a sense of musical continuity and an attention to the SEMANTICS of the >poem - the communicative MEANING(S) as a field of play. In order to >communicate meaning there has to be a pervasive motive, an impulse, >an authorial hand in every dimension; but in order to "play" the meaning >must be musical, have some kind of harmony in dis-harmony.
>So what is required is not a blockade of denotation but a manifold >reference, a manifestive manifold. Word as four-fold allegory.
>...
>I want to be taken someplace in thought as well >as sound, not have my thought always dead-ended by ambivalence, >discontinuity, and meaninglessness.
>

this is an excellent post and to me brings this thread to center, to crux / most critiques of the langpo/postmod strain complain that much of this body of writing just doesn't offer the aesthetically pleasing, transportive, evocative reading experience that impassioned readers of poetry generally want / that's a tricky approach, since obviously everyone goes in for different reasons, but Henry's post brings this particular response to the surface / i remember going in to language poetry because it, to appropriate Henry's line, "took me someplace in thought as well as sound," and rather than feeling "dead-ended" by ambivalence and discontinuity i felt drawn in and provoked by same (most of it never seemed meaningless to me)

langpo excited precisely because it demanded new paths, new methodologies, of reading (these are the cliches of the form), which to me meant new ways of thinking, of motivating and mobilising -- all in turn a refreshing departure from the conventionally "accessible" poetries that i'd seen up till then / back in school, i remember this notion of accessibility was the banner cry of the hard-liners generally against langpo: the writings simply were not accessible -- to which i'd counter then as i would now that there are conventions of accessibility (rules of syntax, form, notions of speaker and address, etc.) that can and should be challenged -- today by us, the descendants of langpo, as much as then by the langpo's themselves / accessibility, in other words, seemed to me like a fancy way of talking about rote expectations, habitual reading practices / language poetry was one answer to the "what i miss" in american poetry

"So what is required is not a blockade of denotation but a manifold >reference, a manifestive manifold. Word as four-fold allegory."

this is a lively statement and useful to anyone writing today trying once again to stretch the boundaries of language (the real lesson and legacy of langpo) / but how for example is "a manifold reference, a manifestive manifold" different from a manifold referentiality--terminology in other words that i can see beeing applied in different context to the "postmod stream"?

bill marsh

↑ Index

229. Jordan Davis
B Mayer read
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Got to St Marks after carrying the groceries home (new address: 246 Mott St Apt 24 NYC 10012) to find my wife and Bennett Simpson had saved me a seat in the 120+ crowd, Ed Friedman dimming the lights to encourage the bird flying around the parish hall to calm down and exit, Dug Rothschild climbing the window bay and covering the bird with his coat, catching him, opening the window releasing and applause. Oh causality! Dug sat back down with three feathers and there was Bernadette Mayer sitting in the front of the room at a table. Lisa Jarnot came forward and gave a lovely introduction in which she explained that before she read Bernadette everybody said you have to read Bernadette you have to meet her she'll change your life, and then she did meet her, and Bernadette's poems had changed her (Lisa's) poems, and Bernadette had changed Lisa's life, and it was a lovely introduction. Bernadette read new poems in a calm clear voice and she read some greatest hits ("Corn", "The Complete Introductory Lectures on Poetry") and she read some old fugitive poems from United Artists magazine and from her self-published book _Mutual Aid_, and she read some more new poems and she finished with some poems from her forthcoming collection _Another Smashed Pinecone_, due from United Artists early 1998. It was a terrific reading, and everybody was there. There was an intermission during which I ran around handing everyone present cards for the first Poetry City reading of the season, next Thursday at 6:30, which is half an hour earlier than usual, Anne Porter and David Shapiro. Anne Porter in case you don't know her work was a National Book Award nominee a couple years back for her book _An Altogether Different Language_, which collected her poems from the last 60 years. She is a favorite poet of Bernadette Mayer and countless other great readers. David Shapiro is the author of thousands of beautiful poems, he teaches at Cooper Union and at William Patterson College, and he is a tremendously thoughtful critic of the arts and one of the main secret catalysts of the renewed love for poetry in the world. He is an open secret. I hope that everybody who reads this message will find it in their budgets and their busy hours to come to this free reading October 16 at Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, New York NY. Call me at 1-888-BOOKS-TW if you need directions. Then the intermission concluded and Eleni Sikelianos introduced Barbara Guest, and Barbara Guest read her poems, including pieces from "Quill Solitary Apparition" and from her selected poems. She concluded with works from "Rocks on a Platter", a forthcoming book about poetry. The audience was very pleased with the evening. The following people you may know may be consulted on this assertion: Leonard Schwartz, Anselm Berrigan, Peggy DeCoursey, Bruce Andrews, Eileen Myles, James Sherry, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge (I think it was her), Steve Malmude, Drew Gardner, Judith Goldman, Barbara Henning, Cynthia Nelson, Cliff Fyman, Rob Fitterman, Stephen Rodefer, oh there were many people there.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

230. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Thu 9 Oct 1997

---

sorry, maria, i for one enjoyed the music and ambience of the bird movie, but did feel that finally i was unconnected with the story. just the same i thought there were some fine performances.

↑ Index

231. Judy Roitman
Re: defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Henry Gould writes:

> the idea
> of turning away strict denotation for free artistic play

Not only for free artistic play. For understanding.

For example, the notion of "strict denotation" seldom passes scrutiny if you scrutinize carefully enough.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

232. Pritchett,Pat
Re: that time of year again
Thu 9 Oct 1997

I don't know newly christened Nobel Laureate Dario Fo's work at all, but anybody who pisses off the Vatican as much as he has must be doing something right. Was a little disappointed, all the same, that the Nobel Committee once again kept the Prize in their own backyard. Still, if Fo's work is as radical as his detractors feel it is, then I guess they've indeed exercised a little temerity this time out.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

233. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Thu 9 Oct 1997

"please elaborate...not on the poets...but on expressing and the USE of words...."

—

If I may slip a query in:

What would they be used for?

W.S. Graham played with this thought from the other side (well, almost) of a cognitive mirror, and asked:

What is the language using us for?

What a tease.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

234. Harold Rhenisch
Re: SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

"Tom. I have no problem with the notion that science makes useful contributions to the world as long as such sentiments remain a notion. Unfortunately, it has already gone well beyond the benign passiveness of the phrase "making useful contributions to our understanding of the world." For example, science uncritically substitutes the contingent and historically bound "notion" of existence for that of being and the immutability inhering in what Stanley Rosen calls the "ontological copula." What's worse is that science writers make this substitution whenever they damn well please because they are not under any constraints to be more rigorous in their attempts to describe physical phenomena through language."

**

Another way to approach science writing would be to ask what is the belief system that causes the substitution of science as Being for science as method. Furthermore, _why_ are these writers not under any constraints to be more specific? The method, after all, boasts its specificity. So, back to the first question: why the substitution in the first place? Maybe because there are social and political foundations to the lack of constraints and we are seeing these work their way out through language usage. Now, if that language usage and its social and political foundations could be opened out, so that it was in the foreground and the science was in the background, we would have quite the story.

What is the belief system that causes the unwitting substitution of poetry as Being for poetry as method? I can see doing it on purpose, like shooting particles out of an accelerator, to see what might happen, but doing it by accident suggests a use of language which is going to have other manifestations, consequences, etc., which are going to colour or discolour all other parts of the poetic undertaking. Undertaking the same exercise as with the science, of shifting the point of view so that these manifestations and their underpinnings are in the foreground and the poetic undertaking slips back would, I think, be like Pound's Cantos. Ez kept going on about Joyce, the therapeutic nature of Ulysses, and how his Cantos were doing the same thing. He bogged down with his Paradiso, though. Was this because his method got bogged down, he was confusing terms again, or he was just old and lost in a maze looking for a minotaur which his method prevented him from seeing?

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

235. Harold Rhenisch
Bly/Dorst
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Bly also deconstructed Iron John in a most wooden manner.

I'd take Dorst's Grindkopf anyday. It at least is dramatic.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

236. Jacques Debrot
Re: O'Hara/Orton
Thu 9 Oct 1997

For anyone who may be interested, there is an extremely interesting reading of O'Hara's work from a slightly different angle than the one generally taken by literary critics -- and from Gooch, for that matter -- in Joe Orton's Figuring Jasper Johns Harvard UP, 1994. The first chapter, "Present, the Scene of My Selves, the Occassion of these Ruses," is especially revealing in the way that Orton traces the negative influence in the development of Johns' and O'Hara's somewhat divergent styles of disjunction and euphemism -- as well as the socially-limited artistic culture of the mid-1950s itself - to the paranoid climate of the Cold War period (& much, much more -- a great companion study to Shoptaw's discussion of Ashbery's "homotextuality" in On the Outside Looking Out).

↑ Index

237. William Burmeister Prod
Re: defining language
Thu 9 Oct 1997

I like how the ancient Greeks referred to words as "momentary deities."

↑ Index

238. cris cheek
Re: that time of year again
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Was a little disappointed, all the same, that the Nobel Committee >once again kept the Prize in their own backyard.

What backyard is that? Oh you mean Europe.
Fo is indeed worth seeing. 'Accidental Death of An Anarchist' is a good place to start.
Nobel prize? who gives a damn.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

239. Rachel Loden
Re: SoKalled
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Communique from the resident logician:

This sounds a bit like the classic debate between literal-minded AI devotees and their equally literal-minded critics. It's been going on for at least the past 20 years and shows no signs of producing anything new, other than increasing resentment by its marginalized participants. It's getting a little tiresome.

As a set of metaphors, ways of driving the organization of software systems, AI had its share of successes. Many ideas that are now standard parts of modern operating systems, networking, word processors, etc. had their origins in the infamous AI Labs at MIT and Stanford. As we used to say, AI projects are re-marketed as Computer Science when they become successful. The next wave of AI-derived products will incorporate things like speech recognition (almost a reality, given higher-speed processors), invisible expert systems in electronic commerce etc. On the other hand, there are major flops like Microsoft Bob. Those are usually caused by the regrettable tendency of some implementors to confuse metaphors with reality, the "AI vision" with actual facts.

On the whole, I suspect that the entire debate has reached the point of diminishing returns. The crude device of "Artificial Intelligence" no longer works for those of us who are looking for results. The whole AI/anti-AI era does raise interesting questions around the use of metaphors and mental models in software development. And it is software that will largely control the practical aspects of our lives in the future.

Jussi Ketonen
[redacted]

↑ Index

240. Jacques Debrot
O'Hara/Orton
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Excuse my mistake -- that's FRED, not Joe Orton, of course.

↑ Index

241. Joseph D. Edwards
Re: Marianne Moore
Thu 9 Oct 1997

"Omissions are not Accidents" by Jeanne Heuving (Wayne State U. Press, 1992) gender in the art of Marianne Moore is good. If it helps, maybe you will submit poems to Common Knowledge (I solicited work from you a while back). Thanks, Belle Randall [redacted]

On Wed, 8 Oct 1997, Susan Wheeler wrote:

> Any recos for texts that treat Moore's work's relationship to the self, or her own relationship to tradition (outside of the recent Fenton piece in NYRB) would be greatly appreciated backchannel. Many thanks.
>
> Susan Wheeler
> [redacted]
> voice/fax [redacted]

||| From the keeper of the Wastewater Engineering Virtual Library ||| ||| URL http://www.cleanh2o.com/cleanh2o/ww/welcome.html ||| ||| or the Poetry Editor of Common Knowledge --> ||| ||| http://www.utdallas.edu/research/common_knowledge/index.html ||

↑ Index

242. Karen and Trevor
For Sheila Murphy
Thu 9 Oct 1997

Sorry to have to use the List again...

...but if Sheila Murphy sees this and for some reason can't access her AOL where I left her a message, could she please backchannel?

Karen McKevitt, Editor-in-Chief, _fourteen hills_
[redacted]

↑ Index

243. Maria Damon
Re: O'Hara/Orton
Thu 9 Oct 1997

---

you mean, like, joe orton the british playwright? posthumously?

At 6:18 PM -0400 10/9/97, Jacques Debrot wrote:
>For anyone who may be interested, there is an extremely interesting reading >of O'Hara's work from a slightly different angle than the one generally taken >by literary critics -- and from Gooch, for that matter -- in Joe Orton's >Figuring Jasper Johns Harvard UP, 1994. The first chapter, "Present, the >Scene of My Selves, the Occassion of these Ruses," is especially revealing in >the way that Orton traces the negative influence in the development of Johns' >and O'Hara's somewhat divergent styles of disjunction and euphemism -- as >well as the socially-limited artistic culture of the mid-1950s itself - to >the paranoid climate of the Cold War period (& much, much more -- a great >companion study to Shoptaw's discussion of Ashbery's "homotextuality" in On >the Outside Looking Out).

↑ Index

244. Maria Damon
Re: B Mayer read
Thu 9 Oct 1997

---

yum yum.

At 1:41 PM -0400 10/9/97, Jordan Davis wrote:
>Got to St Marks after carrying the groceries home (new address: 246 Mott >St Apt 24 NYC 10012) to find my wife and Bennett Simpson had saved me a >seat in the 120+ crowd, Ed Friedman dimming the lights to encourage the >bird flying around the parish hall to calm down and exit, Dug Rothschild >climbing the window bay and covering the bird with his coat, catching him, >opening the window releasing and applause. Oh causality! Dug sat back down >with three feathers and there was Bernadette Mayer sitting in the front of >the room at a table. Lisa Jarnot came forward and gave a lovely >introduction in which she explained that before she read Bernadette >everybody said you have to read Bernadette you have to meet her she'll >change your life, and then she did meet her, and Bernadette's poems had >changed her (Lisa's) poems, and Bernadette had changed Lisa's life, and it >was a lovely introduction. Bernadette read new poems in a calm clear voice >and she read some greatest hits ("Corn", "The Complete Introductory >Lectures on Poetry") and she read some old fugitive poems from United >Artists magazine and from her self-published book _Mutual Aid_, and she >read some more new poems and she finished with some poems from her >forthcoming collection _Another Smashed Pinecone_, due from United Artists >early 1998. It was a terrific reading, and everybody was there. There was >an intermission during which I ran around handing everyone present cards >for the first Poetry City reading of the season, next Thursday at 6:30, >which is half an hour earlier than usual, Anne Porter and David Shapiro.

>Anne Porter in case you don't know her work was a National Book Award >nominee a couple years back for her book _An Altogether Different >Language_, which collected her poems from the last 60 years. She is a >favorite poet of Bernadette Mayer and countless other great readers. David >Shapiro is the author of thousands of beautiful poems, he teaches at >Cooper Union and at William Patterson College, and he is a tremendously >thoughtful critic of the arts and one of the main secret catalysts of the >renewed love for poetry in the world. He is an open secret. I hope that >everybody who reads this message will find it in their budgets and their >busy hours to come to this free reading October 16 at Teachers & Writers >Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, New York NY. Call me at 1-888-BOOKS-TW
>if you need directions. Then the intermission concluded and Eleni >Sikelianos introduced Barbara Guest, and Barbara Guest read her poems, >including pieces from "Quill Solitary Apparition" and from her selected >poems. She concluded with works from "Rocks on a Platter", a forthcoming >book about poetry. The audience was very pleased with the evening. The >following people you may know may be consulted on this assertion: Leonard >Schwartz, Anselm Berrigan, Peggy DeCoursey, Bruce Andrews, Eileen Myles, >James Sherry, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge (I think it was her), Steve Malmude, >Drew Gardner, Judith Goldman, Barbara Henning, Cynthia Nelson, Cliff
>Fyman, Rob Fitterman, Stephen Rodefer, oh there were many people there.
>
>Jordan Davis

↑ Index

245. Thomas Bell

Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara

Fri 10 Oct 1997

---

purience is a fun word. I've been on working on a series of prurience poems (poetry written on a background drawing or image). I will not the list by attaching the graphics, but will send the graphics. They also are at http://www.public.usit.net/trbell

.At 08:59 AM 10/9/97 EST, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:
>yes but i wonder if the "bird" film didn't at least avoid a kind of prurience
>gooch has been accused of.
>
> Missing in Action Alpha

pruient muddles of life
we make prudish puddles prudish puddles down the alley not too far from home after the torrential thaw of strife-free zones

paucity of words
the rupture does not quite heal rasp of her voiced concern was at odds with the melancholy wings of lithe gossamer with the melancholy we felt at the end of the route downward spiral

of the the end of the world in melons

Talking to my body? It talks back.

Pain and pressure out of control. Uncontrollable.
Over and over why have I done this to myself over and over over the years?

Condemnation is constricting, forgiveness devine angel of the knight of the round table. Why not act.

Lightness of being The Laughing Policeman "For Kundera the weight of living consists chiefly in constriction, in the dense net of public and private constrictions that enfolds us more and more closely." Calvino

METAMORPHOSIS

In his ceaseless discourses on the unbearable weight of living, Leopardi bestows many images of lightness on the happiness he thinks we can never attain: birds, the voice of a girl singing at a window, the clarity of the air - and, above all, the moon.

cobalt in the blue vault coaxed in the blues' head howling wolf one too many times myna bird caws

The falcon is me

fault in the red shoes
where do we go round?

When you physically write the connections become we are not able to see the color and spirit of what is there unless we change the way we look at it

Missing in Action Beta

as pruience cuts both ways so prudence is in the proof distant sterile words don't say

a brush of the shadow whispers unrelenting sorrow and melancholy

I live in the midst, in the mixt but can't speak it

I am the spin doctor
I write the score

where do we go round?

I am not the doctor.
I am me.
but there are the things we do

Beyond my grasp
the balloons are

Beyond my grasp the balloons are right now

Menace lurks beyond the curtins and lace decimates her face

Honkytonk Rambles didn't know how to say .
Got a Hallmark

but there are the things we do

The curve of my mind loops back again
.

↑ Index

246. David R. Israel
the tragedy of limerick
Fri 10 Oct 1997

[was, Re: Defining Language Poetry]

quoth Tom Beard,

> The Gass quote, by the way, I found in "The Alphabet Abecedarium" by Richard J Firmage, which I am finding a delightful read. Another interesting quote from Gass, which I saw in U&lc (why am I always coming across Gass in typographic journals and books? Perhaps I should read the guy!), was along the lines of "Is it possible to write a tragedy in limerick?" This is one of the best summations I've seen of the whole form/content saga.

I've likewise much enjoyed Gass's essays at the essay (mainly a couple in Harper's Magazine -- to which he contributes some pithy item every couple years or something). Your quote begs for answer.

Thre once was a man who decided he'd take any chance that provided a gleam of a hint to uncover the glint that life so completely elided

he knew there was gold in the distance he smelt it with melting insistance he traveled far miles with taciturn smiles spurred on by uncommon persistance

he learned all the methods of charm the soft & the strong of the arm his manners so polished his glance could demolish untoward inticements toward harm

he even grew wide in perception while fully adept at deception his "how do you do?"
  could ward off the flu his "betcha" afforded protection

suave leaders became his confreres fond lasses enjoyed his affairs he never spoke rudely (not naked but nudely)
e'en angels stood rapt at his prayers

as age lent its frost to his everest bright socialites whispered "the cleverest!
  and jolliest sport
  to ever covort
in patios -- what a 'whatever'ist!"

it's strange that his fall came so swift who'd think that his compass would drift?
  some blip on the screen unknown & unseen effected so fell of a shift

he started down sarcasm's cliff supposing -- but merely -- to riff his jokes grew pedantic then frazled then frantic till darkness swirled deep in each "if . . . "

he dnagled his tales o'er naught ere long he was cornered & caught he mumbled & halted
  now humbled -- assaulted by everthing (id est, by aught)

that last that I saw of that bloke
he was babbling -- rambling -- broke he tried to connect in a manner correct
but the wheel was bereft of the spoke

[etc.?]

d.i.

↑ Index

247. Stephen Cope
Re: B Mayer read
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Very good news about the Mayer/Guest reading. For those who don't yet know, Bernadette's papers (which I have the singular luxury of processing) have recently been purchased by UCSD, and should be available to the public in the not too distant future. If what I've gone through so far is any indication, their transformative effect is in league with that of the poetry...

Stephen Cope

> At 1:41 PM -0400 10/9/97, Jordan Davis wrote:
> Got to St Marks after carrying the groceries home (new address: 246 Mott St Apt 24 NYC 10012) to find my wife and Bennett Simpson had saved me a seat in the 120+ crowd, Ed Friedman dimming the lights to encourage the bird flying around the parish hall to calm down and exit, Dug Rothschild climbing the window bay and covering the bird with his coat, catching him, opening the window releasing and applause. Oh causality! Dug sat back down with three feathers and there was Bernadette Mayer sitting in the front of the room at a table. Lisa Jarnot came forward and gave a lovely introduction in which she explained that before she read Bernadette everybody said you have to read Bernadette you have to meet her she'll change your life, and then she did meet her, and Bernadette's poems had changed her (Lisa's) poems, and Bernadette had changed Lisa's life, and it was a lovely introduction. Bernadette read new poems in a calm clear voice and she read some greatest hits ("Corn", "The Complete Introductory Lectures on Poetry") and she read some old fugitive poems from United Artists magazine and from her self-published book _Mutual Aid_, and she read some more new poems and she finished with some poems from her forthcoming collection _Another Smashed Pinecone_, due from United Artists early 1998. It was a terrific reading, and everybody was there. There was an intermission during which I ran around handing everyone present cards for the first Poetry City reading of the season, next Thursday at 6:30, which is half an hour earlier than usual, Anne Porter and David Shapiro. Anne Porter in case you don't know her work was a National Book Award nominee a couple years back for her book _An Altogether Different Language_, which collected her poems from the last 60 years. She is a favorite poet of Bernadette Mayer and countless other great readers. David Shapiro is the author of thousands of beautiful poems, he teaches at Cooper Union and at William Patterson College, and he is a tremendously thoughtful critic of the arts and one of the main secret catalysts of the renewed love for poetry in the world. He is an open secret. I hope that everybody who reads this message will find it in their budgets and their busy hours to come to this free reading October 16 at Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, New York NY. Call me at 1-888-BOOKS-TW if you need directions. Then the intermission concluded and Eleni > Sikelianos introduced Barbara Guest, and Barbara Guest read her poems, including pieces from "Quill Solitary Apparition" and from her selected poems. She concluded with works from "Rocks on a Platter", a forthcoming book about poetry. The audience was very pleased with the evening. The following people you may know may be consulted on this assertion: Leonard Schwartz, Anselm Berrigan, Peggy DeCoursey, Bruce Andrews, Eileen Myles, James Sherry, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge (I think it was her), Steve Malmude, Drew Gardner, Judith Goldman, Barbara Henning, Cynthia Nelson, Cliff Fyman, Rob Fitterman, Stephen Rodefer, oh there were many people there.

>
> Jordan Davis

↑ Index

248. Susan Schultz

R TINFISH #5 now available

Fri 10 Oct 1997

TINFISH #5 is now available ($5 each, or $13 for a subscription of three issues) from Susan Schultz (47-391 Hui Iwa St., #3, Kaneohe, Hawai'i 96744--please make checks out to me). This issue includes work by Kathy Dee Kale-okealoha Kaloloahiliani Banggo, Ida Yoshinaga, Faye Kicknosway, Beth Murray, Tracy Ryan, Eileen Myles, Brian Henry, Kevin Killian, H.T., Mary Burger, David Bromige, Susan Gevirtz, Stephen Oliver, Randolph Healy, Chris Vitiello, David Fox, A.L.Nielsen, Tony Quagliano, Todd Baron, Joe Balaz, Bruce Andrews, John Mateer, Standard Schaefer, Joanne Burns, Rachel Loden, John Tranter, Michelle Murphy, and a review by Jonathan Morse. In other words, lots of good work from the USA and Australia and that other island nation, Ireland.

Stay tuned: Tinfish Network will soon be offering a chapbook of poems by Kathy (etc.) Banggo, _Forevaz, Anna_.

Susan

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

249. Layne Russell
Re: Expression
Fri 10 Oct 1997

James Finnegan wrote:

> It's old news that language mediates. It seems too many critics rush to devalue the author's intent. A writer may want to be expressive, may want to "move" the reader emotionally. That language is an imperfect tool for such intent should not invalidate the attempt itself. To be sincere or to be genuine--are these inherently bad characteristics in a human being or in a writer?--when a writer writes, does one leave one's anger, humility, fear, pride, ecstasy and other human traits & emotions on a hook by the door?
>
> Finnegan

yes

and if that hook was filled with such humannesses what would remain? remember, we're talking poetry, art....

Layne

~~~
~~~

↑ Index

251. Jacques Debrot
Re: Jasper Johns
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Apropos of John Yau's plug for his Jasper Johns' book, which I haven't seen but will look for now, I'd also strongly recommend another book of his, this one about Warhol called In the Realm of Appearances. If I remember correctly (though I'm the one who padded Joe Orton's bibliography after all) Yau gives a very persuasive brief there for an experiential art of which Duchamp is a prime example -- Yau's argument being that Duchamp's work had moved towards overcoming the temptation to aestheticize, or codify, occurring, as it does, within the realm of experience -- the during, while Warhol's appropriation of the ready-mades, in a way, always comes "after." I'm not sure I entirely agree with him, but the book is terrific. Yau also has lots of interesting things to say about Cage & the 60s art scene. However I do think that the term academic used in a derogatory way is, in many of the posts on this list, too often only a cheap/easy shot. Artists and poets shouldn't take instructions from academics certainly, and the most important creative work, it seems to me, always takes place in a space for which critical terms have not yet been conceived -- however I'm also convinced that people like Orton, de Duve, and Krauss have made very significant contributions to our understanding of contemporary art. When, in fact, does skepticism about critical theory, etc. cross the line over into the kind of anti-intellectualism for which Langpo was such an important corrective? (this last remark, of course, is not directed at Yau, who I'm certain is much better informed than I am).

↑ Index

252. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Maybe for you the message somes from elsewhere (..from Spicer's martians??) --but not for a lot of us! However, in general, if like the sainted Jack you feel the message is coming from someplace else...Well, that often makes (as in his case) for fairly interesting writing! So go for it.

Mark

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997, henry g wrote:

> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 09:45:28 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
> Your way of putting it reminds me of the passage from Zukofsky that Peter Quatermain quotes so often (which admittedly is Zuke making a point, > using very highly-charged rhetoric): subordinating the writing process to a dogged, four-square "message" is to take a "predatory" attituide toward the poem..

>
> this argument assumes the message comes from the poet. see Mandelstam's "Slate Ode" - one of heaviest & most direct of his poems about poetry. the "command" comes from "elsewhere", from the somatic (or semantic) depths, if you like. people get tired of my carping, I know. I get tired of it. but poetry is deeper, weirder, & more global than we think. we've had our teddy bearigans & our lang-pooh bears. now go sit at the feet of those russian bears for a while. that's been my "message" here for a long time. do what I do, not what I say. [to the tune of "Song of the Volga Boatmen"] grrrrrrrr.....
> - Henry Gould
>
> "the sermon of the plumbline" - O.M.

↑ Index

253. Mark Prejsnar

Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School

Fri 10 Oct 1997

If you like spite fine...

I don't, much..

You seem to be deliberately misreading what I said, or else you just wanna get my goat....Thinking that it's not productive to attack and dis poets all the time, that's clique mentality??????? Hmmmmmmmmm...

Gonna take me the whole weekend to work that one out!

Mark

On Thu, 9 Oct 1997, henry g wrote:

> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 10:17:38 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>
> *I guess what I'm saying, is that I value a community of practitioner/readers, who spend more energy sharing and discussing what they like, than dissing what they find less useful, less exciting. It seems harmless and reasonable (I've been second to none in explaining what I find bankrupt in the academic workshop APR-ish poetry establishment) until someone attacks what you consider valuble. Than it becomes clearer A. how any attacks you don't agree with always sound to you like they proceed from careerist envy and spite; and B. how unproductive they can seem. Much better to use our puny available resources to build the things we most value in the way of alternative poetries..*

> Mark, you have solid grounds to criticize me & others who spout off endlessly dissing things in general. I confess to being a laughably lazy reader who works across the street from one of THE premier collections of poetry in english (the Harris collection) & hardly ever going in there.
>
> Yet your statement above seems to be a confession of the clique mentality. Any attacks on the poetry YOU like are seen as careerist, etc. So I still say, mea culpa, I'm sorry I talk too much, but as somebody who's been writing in a different vein for at least as long as the postmodernists & all their ilk, I still find a productive place for literary spite. If you can't look in a completely different direction once in a while you're gonna get very parochial fast. But yeah, more positive reviews would be good (I HAVE sent a FEW to this list over the yrs...) - Henry G.

↑ Index

254. John Latta

Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara

Fri 10 Oct 1997

Two questions late on the heels of talk about the chat-stricken Gooch bio. I recall some years back seeing notice that Peter Schjeldahl was at work on a biography of O'Hara. Does anyone know what became of it?

Also, recently, in flipping through a 1980 entry on Ron Padgett in the Dictionary of Literary Biography, I spotted reference to Padgett's "currently editing The Selected Letters of Frank O'Hara for 1981 publication" or something of the like. Perhaps understandably premature, this.

Anyone know more?

↑ Index

255. Rachel Levitsky

Re: eddress?

Fri 10 Oct 1997

Hullo--
anyone got an email address or if not, then a snailmail, for Beverley Dahlen?

thanks,
Rachel

↑ Index

256. James Finnegan
Re: Defining / Expression
Fri 10 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-07 14:46:23 EDT, you write:

> about the virtues of > self-expression* I have a few reservations -- for instance, doesn't* > self-expression as a poetic value inevitably bring with it the clap-trap > about sincerity, genuiness, etc. all of which obfuscate the ways in which > *expression is mediated. Hal Foster, of course, is great on this in his* > essay "The Expressive Fallacy."

It's old news that language mediates. It seems too many critics rush to devalue the author's intent. A writer may want to be expressive, may want to "move" the reader emotionally. That language is an imperfect tool for such intent should not invalidate the attempt itself. To be sincere or to be genuine--are these inherently bad characteristics in a human being or in a writer?--when a writer writes, does one leave one's anger, humility, fear, pride, ecstasy and other human traits & emotions on a hook by the door?

Finnegan
Finnegan

↑ Index

257. Douglas Barbour
Re: SoKalled
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Tom Beard's latest response is most interesting. But I wonder why no one seems aware that there is another artistic forum in which these questions are explored: sf. I recommend Iain M Banks, especially his 'Culture' novels, especially.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

I want only the wild and tender phrasing of 'Nighthawk,'
its air groaned out
like the beath of a lover.
Rashomon by saxophone.
Michael Ondaatje

↑ Index

258. hen
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Fri 10 Oct 1997

On Fri, 10 Oct 1997 09:04:43 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>Maybe for you the message somes from elsewhere (..from Spicer's >martians??) --but not for a lot of us! However, in general, if like the >sainted Jack you feel the message is coming from someplace else...Well, >that often makes (as in his case) for fairly interesting writing! So go >for it.

Franco Ferucci has a wonderful short book, sort of on this subject, called POETICS OF DISGUISE. The idea of "elsewhere" is nothing new - it's WHERE or WHO the elsewhere or elsewho is that gets all the gab. Ferucci talks about the "autobiography of the work" & those places where the author consciously or unconsciously disguises crises or cruxes in the writing process.

Ferucci offers a modified form of the concept of "inspiration" in which the author is a kind of conduit or gardener for something growing from a deeper level. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

259. hen
Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
Fri 10 Oct 1997

On Fri, 10 Oct 1997 09:08:48 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>If you like spite fine...
>
>I don't, much..
>
>You seem to be deliberately misreading what I said, or else you just wanna >get my goat....Thinking that it's not productive to attack and dis poets >all the time, that's clique mentality??????? Hmmmmmmmmm...
>
>

>> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 10:17:38 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>> >
>> >I guess what I'm saying, is that I value a community of >> >practitioner/readers, who spend more energy sharing and discussing what >> >they like, than dissing what they find less useful, less exciting. It >> >seems harmless and reasonable (I've been second to none in explaining what >> >I find bankrupt in the academic workshop APR-ish poetry establishment) >> >until someone attacks what you consider valuble. Than it becomes >> >clearer A. how any attacks you don't agree with always sound to you like >> >they proceed from careerist envy and spite; and B. how unproductive they >> >can seem. Much better to use our puny available resources to build the >> >things we most value in the way of alternative poetries..

Mark, I'm sorry if I misread what you said. I agree with your general argument & have said so before. I just don't get the last statement above. It's seems you are saying that, since you will intepret any attacks on the stuff you like as only careerist spite, you want only to hear the good news. That attitude is what I called tending toward the parochial. I happen to enjoy the debate & arguments on all these poetics issues, though I do agree there are problems with it (boredom, ignorant generalizations & misunderstandings, abstraction-burnout, hypertrophy of the "critical", Poetics-list addictions...) - Henry

↑ Index

260. mark weiss
Re: Defining Language Poetry
Fri 10 Oct 1997

The sense of an outside source, which predates Spicer by a bit, has to do with a sense of loss of control--that one is saying what one couldn't have predicted when one started, that whatever the game plan, formal or intellectual, of the poem, has created an environment in which something unexpected, terrifying, or enlightening (or all three) has ben discovered, and the poet finds himself for the moment without a map, having discovered a new place not accessible to mere intelligence. Call it meditation on the social role of poetry, call it the intervention of the muse, call it making it new, those are strategies. Now you must change your life.

At 09:04 AM 10/10/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Maybe for you the message somes from elsewhere (..from Spicer's >martians??) --but not for a lot of us! However, in general, if like the >sainted Jack you feel the message is coming from someplace else...Well, >that often makes (as in his case) for fairly interesting writing! So go >for it.

>
>Mark
>
>
>
>On Thu, 9 Oct 1997, henry g wrote:
>
>> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 09:45:28 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>> >Your way of putting it reminds me of the passage from Zukofsky that Peter >> >Quatermain quotes so often (which admittedly is Zuke making a point, >> >using very highly-charged rhetoric): subordinating the writing process to >> >a dogged, four-square "message" is to take a "predatory" attituide toward >> >the poem..
>>
>> this argument assumes the message comes from the poet. see Mandelstam's
>> "Slate Ode" - one of heaviest & most direct of his poems about poetry.
>> the "command" comes from "elsewhere", from the somatic (or semantic) >> depths, if you like. people get tired of my carping, I know. I get >> tired of it. but poetry is deeper, weirder, & more global than we think.
>> we've had our teddy bearigans & our lang-pooh bears. now go sit at the >> feet of those russian bears for a while. that's been my "message" here >> for a long time. do what I do, not what I say. [to the tune of >> "Song of the Volga Boatmen"] grrrrrrrr.....
>> - Henry Gould
>>
>> "the sermon of the plumbline" - O.M.
>>
>
>

↑ Index

261. Jordan Davis
world's longest building stopped mid-construction
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Re: Schjeldahl O'Hara bio -- it looks to be permanently on hold.

Re: the letters of FO'H -- I believe this is a question better directed to the estate than to Ron Padgett --

Jordan

↑ Index

262. aerialedge
2 DC & 1 NYC Reading
Fri 10 Oct 1997

---

in DC -- Sat. Oct 11 @ 7:30
Heather Fuller & Bill Howe
Ruthless Grip Art Project near 15th & U Streets NW

in NY --Wed. Oct 15 @ 8 PM
Edwin Torres & Rod Smith
The Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church
131 East 10th St (at 2nd Ave)

in DC-- Thurs. Oct 16 @ 8 PM
Leslie Scalapino
Georgetown University Auditorium at the Intercultural Center
([redacted] for information)

↑ Index

263. Mark Prejsnar
Re: defining lang and the Prejsnar School
Fri 10 Oct 1997

I thought I was just being self-aware and somewhat self-critical, and heck even a little bit dry and ironic and amusing....

Guess I haven't got this internet "tone" thing down yet, at all...

And I only used the word spite 'cause you did...."careerist spite" etc....that was all supposed to be me explaining that I realize some people (associated with what I call the "mainstream" poetry scene) may sometimes feel that way about me...And it helps me to realize that because sometimes put-downs of what I consider good poetry sound a little that way to my ears (not you, but some folks I've spoken with) and so now I was trying to be a tad self-critical and.....

Anyway, maybe you get the general idea...And maybe not...in the words of Arthur Dent I seem to having terrible difficulty with my (internet) life style...

I will now attempt to drop this (not thread but) tangle..

Mark P.

On Fri, 10 Oct 1997, hen wrote:

> On Fri, 10 Oct 1997 09:08:48 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
> If you like spite fine...
>
> I don't, much..
>
> You seem to be deliberately misreading what I said, or else you just wanna get my goat....Thinking that it's not productive to attack and dis poets all the time, that's clique mentality??????? Hmmmmmmmmm...
>
> On Thu, 9 Oct 1997 10:17:38 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>
> *I guess what I'm saying, is that I value a community of practitioner/readers, who spend more energy sharing and discussing what they like, than dissing what they find less useful, less exciting. It seems harmless and reasonable (I've been second to none in explaining what I find bankrupt in the academic workshop APR-ish poetry establishment) until someone attacks what you consider valuble. Than it becomes clearer A. how any attacks you don't agree with always sound to you like they proceed from careerist envy and spite; and B. how unproductive they can seem. Much better to use our puny available resources to build the things we most value in the way of alternative poetries..*
>
> Mark, I'm sorry if I misread what you said. I agree with your general argument & have said so before. I just don't get the last statement above. It's seems you are saying that, since you will intepret any attacks on the stuff you like as only careerist spite, you want only to hear the good news. That attitude is what I called tending toward the parochial. I happen to enjoy the debate & arguments on all these poetics issues, though I do agree there are problems with it (boredom, ignorant generalizations & misunderstandings, abstraction-burnout, hypertrophy of the "critical", Poetics-list addictions...) - Henry

↑ Index

264. James Finnegan
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Fri 10 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-05 16:10:17 EDT, you write:

> Inclusion is important. Cartoons, Advertisements, road signs, T-shirts, doodles, sketches, drawings, collages, essays, scientific notes, newspaper clippings, you name it: anything can and should be used in poetry if poetry is not to be a ghetto.

I often go to poetry for refuge from many of the things on this list.

Finnegan

↑ Index

265. Harold Rhenisch
Re: ANOTHER ATTEMPT
Fri 10 Oct 1997

In my view, poetry is not this list and is not the same as the things on this list. Poetry can be joyful, of course, and in its joy it can use this stuff as raw material, subject matter, reference, icons, or just fellow travellers (this is not a complete list): poetry is of this world and is a vital mode of perception and cognition. It should be able to handle everything. I don't want to say 'This is poetry here' and 'this here is not'. I like the fluidity and the naming and renaming of things more than that.

Best,

Harold

***

In a message dated 97-10-05 16:10:17 EDT, you write:

>Inclusion is important. Cartoons, Advertisements, road signs, T-shirts,
>doodles, sketches, drawings, collages, essays, scientific notes, newspaper >clippings, you name it: anything can and should be used in poetry if poetry
>is not to be a ghetto.

I often go to poetry for refuge from many of the things on this list.

Finnegan

↑ Index

266. Poetics List not joining but reading (fwd)
Fri 10 Oct 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 10 Oct 1997 15:25:19 -0700
From: hkhfound <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: not joining but reading

Dear poetics list:

I would like to post a message concerning some upcoming readings at the ZINC Bar in NYC. How might I do this (I'm not looking to join the list, I only have internet access through a part-time job)? If it's possible to plug in the information off of this message then....

Sunday, Oct. 12 - Alan Halsey, Geraldine Monk, Jean Portante, & Peter Laugeson. Start time is 6:15 pm.

Sunday, Oct. 19 - Heather Ramsdell & Donna Cartelli. 6:30 pm.

Sunday, Oct. 26 - A benefit for TALISMAN magazine featuring Eileen Myles, Sean Killian, Lisa Jarnot, Michael Heller & others.

ZINC Bar is located at 90 W. Houston St, near the corner of LaGuardia & W. Houston.

$3 donation is usual. There will be a $5 cover for the TALISMAN reading.

Sincerely, Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

267. William Burmeister Prod
Re: defining language
Fri 10 Oct 1997

---

what is interesting is a multiplicity of voices voice as it becomes it not autobiographical

a fictional personality a voice in the machine meaning in language outside of language

other than linguistic is realist realism is still mimesis

Pointless as experience on the edge of pointlessness silence is reminiscent of something more opaque

what difference do words make?

to focus on the paradoxical to denote the other as ex-center

"i have nothing to say"
as another way to say it fashioned language as tension an oscillation between language limitations implications of experience between text and context

Intertextuality appeals to function flattening out sense

a confluence of identities to mime it this is full-blown language retouching itself to avoid becoming another meaning

the inability of language where a thought comes from silence rather than absense identifies otherness as imponderable understanding apt to be enshrined as fiction

entrapped in a rectory kit

self as a foreign country misplaced a diary of secret destinations we sell ourselves for oneself as an obscure metaphor a repository of language

artifice a hybrid personality sometimes barely perceptible contemporary less absense and presense constructs an identity of contradictions

a breakdown in the melodrama the narrative used to comic effect with someone elses experiences.

- Bill Burmeister

↑ Index

268. Michael Magee
Re: the Gooch biography of Frank O'Hara
Fri 10 Oct 1997

To my knowledge, O'Hara's letters languish at UCONN without a publisher, though I wouldn't necessarily know if something was in the works. There quite wonderful - 600 pages of them! - and its a crime that they haven't been published. Everyone too lazy? Family resistance? Copyright probs? Beats me. But go enjoy them if you get the chance.

-Mike.

According to John Latta: >
> Two questions late on the heels of talk about the chat-stricken Gooch bio.
> I recall some years back seeing notice that Peter Schjeldahl was at work > on a biography of O'Hara. Does anyone know what became of it?
>
> Also, recently, in flipping through a 1980 entry on Ron Padgett in the > Dictionary of Literary Biography, I spotted reference to Padgett's
> "currently editing The Selected Letters of Frank O'Hara for 1981 > publication" or something of the like. Perhaps understandably premature, > this.
>
> Anyone know more?
>

↑ Index

269. Eliza McGrand
defining the definition
Fri 10 Oct 1997

---

well, this is an amalgamum of henry gould and someone pretending to be david bromige but is in fact probably a canadian and probably not bromige (though that is never quite CERTAIN)...

occam's razor. classifying the inherently complex and unclassifiable because source is unclassified and unclassifiable. you do it. ok, you have to do it because we are humans and our brains have only so many boxes and they work better with categories and so forth.

but all they are is categories, classifications, i.e. constructs hammered together in someone's brainbox backyard.

think of all those cowboys -- what is a cowboy? if you ride around in a suit and the ubiquitous phallic hat but you are moving sheep along, or keeping a herd of horses in check, are you still a cowboy? if not, what if same person was walking on street and all you had to go on was outfit and hat -- are they, sui generis, almost cowboy cowboy? tentative cowboy? cowboy till proven otherwise but then, what constitutes proof? what if they rope steers alternate sundays? "cow" "boy" -- do you have to be involved with cows? do you have to be a boy? what if you're one of those things but not other?

language poet. you are a poet with something else? maybe a sushi poet? then, if we are using it in conjunction with someone, it is a classification, a chimera, a construct. just that. useful in getting a quick feel of someone. useful, if they claim membership, in knowing how they think of their work. useful in tracing possible influences.

but even the most "language poet"-y of "languge poets" had days when they were, no doubt, a sushi poet, or a language typist, or a sonnet-writer, or a formal neo-Donne-ist post Romantic lover, or non-lover, or a day when they said "geez, let's put on hats and rope steers for a day"...

like many of the writers who've answered, i write what i write on a given day led by the idea and using the form best used to make idea/germ/image/shape'o'day come out the way it wants to come out or in closest approximation to way i am experiencing it in my head at that particular moment. sometimes it's formal, sometimes it's fractured, sometimes it's formally fractured, sometimes i sound just like bob fucking-barker on let' s make a deal and then i go to the bathroom and swear off poetry for a few days... e

↑ Index

270. Aldon Nielsen
"Taylor Brings an Abstract Touch to Piano"
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Today's Los Angeles Times has an amusing review, under the above title, of Cecil Taylor's performances at the Jazz Bakery. (Amusing for all the usual touches: Taylor "hovering over the piano," "all the action converging through his hands" etc.)

but this line I had to pass along -- written, by the way, by Don Heckman:

"At one point, he suddenly removed his hands from the keyboard, picked up a piece of paper from the top of the piano and read what appeared to be an abstract poem. That concluded, he resumed his attack upon the keys."

I suppose there may be poems in the language that do not appear to be abstract, but perhaps they are less likely to appear at the top of a piano.

↑ Index

271. Eliza McGrand that abstract poem/piano thing
Fri 10 Oct 1997

so, did he READ the poem ALOUD? did he read it silently, sneering occasionally and beating in beat syncopation? did he ATTACK the poem, or just read it aloud, or just read it, or read it with the same performative inflection he was giving his performance?

my god. if anyone, ever, does something like that with anything i've written, poem, prose, or clumpish blurt, and it gets a review of this level of trite buckskin-hip, i will personally impale and disem-kidney/sexual organ/nose the performer (for exposing me to this) and the critic (twice. just for being a critic AND for writing the thing).

i will. i swear it.
e

↑ Index

272. R. Gancie
SoKalled
Fri 10 Oct 1997

Tom. Thanks for your sentiments on "what it is to be human." You utterly misrepresent Penrose's position. But no matter. Your treatise on the harmony between poetry and the sciences would be better directed to Sokal, Gross and Levitt. I'm not taking big bucks to stamp out one side of your harmonious equation. The insecurities, limitations and venality of the scientific community as exemplified by Sokal have currently fueled this debate. It is demonstrable that science's metaphors can be as specious as anyone elses. I've been laughing my ass off at their ignorance and inconsistencies now for thirty years. Any poet who has been hired to teach composition to engineering students can attest to the rigor that even the humblest rhymster brings to language compared to the people who now want to redefine what language is if not tell us flat out what it cannot be. Science "speaks to me" too. But science has always told me never to sentimentalize it or to mistake its aesthetic for anything but incidental.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

273. henry
Re: "Taylor Brings an Abstract Touch to Piano"
Fri 10 Oct 1997

---

it's all in the hands.
palm pomme poem royal [pinko]
palm

- Eric "Dolphy" Blarnes a.k.a. "Feathers" McCrane

↑ Index

274. Patricia Cockram
Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
Fri 10 Oct 1997

At 08:06 PM 10/8/97 -0400, Aviva Vogel wrote:
<snip>
>"Why I Write" by Joan Didion
>
>In many ways writing is the act of saying I, of imposing oneself upon other >people, of saying listen to me, see it my way, change your mind. It's an >aggressive, even a hostile act. You can disguise its aggressiveness all you >want with veils of subordinate clauses and qualifiers and tentative >subjunctives, with ellipses and evasions--with the whole manner of intimating >rather than claiming, of alluding rather than stating--but there's no getting >around the fact that setting words on paper is the tactic of a secret bully, >an invasion, an imposition of the writer's sensibility on the reader's most >private space.
>
Speak for yourself, Joan Didion.
Patricia

↑ Index

275. rob wilson
the sentence as aggression by me
Sat 11 Oct 1997

Re writing as a act of verbal aggression displacing the reader's specific head and frame of reference (as in Joan Didion writing travelogues for the state department in places like El Salvador and Miami as pits of Latin vice), Ron Silliman's "Sunset Debris" dismantles this quasi-pornographic violationg (of otherness) by AMPING IT UP, turning the whole process into a stream of a million crazed questions that question the very act of displacement. A grim and funny poem, actually, at the outset of Age of Huts, but one that I for one would like to put in Joan Didion's Gucci Bags on her next trib to work up the third world into a site of Wheeler Hall ooze. I could question the whole process as an act of poetic warfare, like here, enframing "Joan Didion" into my own nasty post- and anti-liberal set of language aggressions. But it happens all the time in those murderous little Hemingway sentences, SVO machinery of misyogyny and war against the trout and Indians at the Big Two-Hearted River. Hey, it comes with the US territory, placing a mean little jar in the wilderness of tennessee to take the dump over: "and round it was and aof a certain port in air" like an insurance lawyer wiping up the bloodshed with a Grecian urn. And "Jokerman" is my Jeremiah 5 to get out of this dump, question mark.

↑ Index

276. James Finnegan

Re: Come On Down...

Sat 11 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-10 17:43:30 EDT, you write:

> In my view, poetry is not this list and is not the same as the things on this list. Poetry can be joyful, of course, and in its joy it can use this stuff as raw material, subject matter, reference, icons, or just fellow travellers (this is not a complete list): poetry is of this world and is a vital mode of perception and cognition. It should be able to handle everything. I don't want to say 'This is poetry here' and 'this here is not'. I like the fluidity and the naming and renaming of things more than that.

Harold,

You are of course right. Poetry should be a portmanteau that can accommodate anything and everything. A skillful writer will be able to integrate these diverse & sundry elements into the poem.

Though it's somewhat unfashionable to bemoan the encroachment of popculture upon literature, I do resist it. Popculture is a sales vehicle, the grease for the wheels of commerce--people make it, just as people make poems, so I guess we must live with it. I just don't want to open a book of poems and feel like I've got a remote control in my hand surfing 140 channels and nothing on.

Finnegan

↑ Index

277. Maria Damon
Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
Sat 11 Oct 1997

---

i have always found joan didion's writing thoroughly obnoxious and self-serving. maybe it's just her archness and nothing more, but it turns me off

At 11:33 PM -0400 10/10/97, Patricia Cockram wrote:
>At 08:06 PM 10/8/97 -0400, Aviva Vogel wrote:
><snip>
>>"Why I Write" by Joan Didion
>>
>>In many ways writing is the act of saying I, of imposing oneself upon other >>people, of saying listen to me, see it my way, change your mind. It's an >>aggressive, even a hostile act. You can disguise its aggressiveness all you >>want with veils of subordinate clauses and qualifiers and tentative >>subjunctives, with ellipses and evasions--with the whole manner of intimating
>>rather than claiming, of alluding rather than stating--but there's no getting >>around the fact that setting words on paper is the tactic of a secret bully,
>>an invasion, an imposition of the writer's sensibility on the reader's most >>private space.
>>
>Speak for yourself, Joan Didion.
>Patricia

↑ Index

278. Layne Russell
Contacting David Bromige
Sat 11 Oct 1997

Hi poets and poetics pros,

David Bromige called me today and asked me to post this info to the list:

David's outgoing email not functioning, so if anyone needs to contact him, please email him (his incoming email is fine) at giving him your phone number and he will call you. He will be around until Saturday (10/18) when he leaves for the east coast for his reading tour.

[redacted]

Thanks all,

Layne for David

↑ Index

279. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
Sat 11 Oct 1997

Maria Damon writes

> i have always found joan didion's writing thoroughly obnoxious and self-serving. maybe it's just her archness and nothing more, but it turns me off

I'm probably in the minority here, but I just finished reading "Slouching Towards Bethlehem," and while I thought it was arch in places, her description of the transformations that were occuring in the American West to be dead on accurate. The other thing that struck me about the book is how "old" she thinks she is, although most of the essays were written in her late twenties, early thirties.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

280. Christopher Alexander nominative press collective announces...
Sat 11 Oct 1997

---

announcing the publication of 2 new chapbooks from nominative press collective!

--

by postcard: beloved series Rachel Daley

edition of 40. 5.5 x 6.5", hand-sewn, heavy coverstock
w. mylar endpapers; 20 printed pp.; illustration by Rachel Daley & Christopher Alexander.

$4 / $7 institutional

--

-ocracy 8 & 9 Peter Ganick & Sheila Murphy

2 parts of the ongoing collaborative project

edition of 120. 5.5 x 8.5", saddle stapled, heavy coverstock; 16 printed pp.; available in 5 different covers! cover art by CT artist Cherie Mittenthal.

$3 / $5 institutional

--

!! samples may be viewed via the www @
http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/
(please come check out the newly revamped site!)

thanks! Chris

Christopher Alexander [redacted] Marriott Library Instruction
[redacted] (lv. msg.)

↑ Index

281. Christopher Alexander nominative press collective nounces...
Sat 11 Oct 1997

---

announcing the publication of 2 new chapbooks from nominative press collective! (& this time without the invasive work-related .sig!)

--

by postcard: beloved series Rachel Daley

edition of 40. 5.5 x 6.5", hand-sewn, heavy coverstock
w. mylar endpapers; 20 printed pp.; illustration by Rachel Daley & Christopher Alexander.

$4 / $7 institutional

--

-ocracy 8 & 9 Peter Ganick & Sheila Murphy

2 parts of the ongoing collaborative project

edition of 120. 5.5 x 8.5", saddle stapled, heavy coverstock; 16 printed pp.; available in 5 different
covers! cover art by CT artist Cherie Mittenthal.

$3 / $5 institutional

--

!! samples may be viewed via the www @
http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/
(please come check out the newly revamped site!)

thanks! Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
www: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

282. Herb Levy
Re: that abstract poem/piano thing
Sat 11 Oct 1997

Calm down, Eliza, Taylor writes poetry & often (especially in the last 10 years or so) recites it in performance.

I don't know of an instance in which he read anyone else's work in performance, though most of the times I've seen him perform he's seemed to be reciting from memory rather than reading from a written text.

> so, did he READ the poem ALOUD? did he read it silently, sneering occasionally > and beating in beat syncopation? did he ATTACK the poem, or just read it aloud, > or just read it, or read it with the same performative inflection he was giving > his performance?
>
> my god. if anyone, ever, does something like that with anything i've written, > poem, prose, or clumpish blurt, and it gets a review of this level of trite > buckskin-hip, i will personally impale and disem-kidney/sexual organ/nose > the performer (for exposing me to this) and the critic (twice. just for > being a critic AND for writing the thing).
>
> i will. i swear it.
> e

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

283. Eliza McGrand
Re: Writing is an Aggressive Act, Didion Says
Sun 12 Oct 1997

i'll read joan didion's writing, and i'm often informed by it. but yes, maria, "archness" is certainly one way to describe an obnoxious aspect to it.

i think it struck me more, though, as a sort of assumed, snobbish privilege, in the sense of "well _i'm_ writing as a thin, gorgeous, rich, important white woman and really, isn't _any_ worthwhile white woman just like me?" reading

marge piercy, iris murdoch, margaret atwood, nadine gordimer -- all of whom write sort of "reportorial" accounts of other cultures [Good GOD! add doris lessing to this list of writers!] from a "white woman"-eyed view, often an academic eyed view (though marge piercy also writes from indian view in some of her work), the narrators are more human and fallible. they're not all gorgeous, brilliant, upper-washington-circle type protagonists. that is to say the anchoring narrators and their friends are sometimes heavy, have moments of foolishness, warmth, fun -- they are not always wearing their armor. this is, of course, a gros generalization. but the writer joan didion sometimes reminds me of is really nora ephron.

and of course, i am not in a position to talk -- god knows the sexism and dismissals joan didion has encountered, and she might well feel she needs to write from an armored, seamless position. and i've learned things from reading her work. but when i went to look for what i have of her, i found the books i have in my "modern literature" section, the "books i respect and might need to know about/quote, but not the books i love" section. she wasn't in my "women's literature/feminist" section, where the say-it-sister! books are -- where doris lessing, nadine gordimer, margaret atwood, marge piercy, are all cornerstones.

e

↑ Index

284. Eliza McGrand
Re: that abstract poem/piano thing
Sun 12 Oct 1997

---

thus we see the power of the critic/reviewer. you're quite right in implication herb -- taylor might be a swell guy, and the poems he reads and way he reads them might be wonderful. but that insufferable review!

blecchchhchhhh!!!

i MEAN it -- if i'm ever placed in surroundings of such a trite wanna-be-hip review i'm going to be out for blood! grrhhhhh!

i was amazed there was no mention of berets. was there and it just got cut out? -- i have to believe latter was the case.
e

↑ Index

285. Bob Grumman
News of Free WebSites
Sun 12 Oct 1997

Hi, Everybody!

About a month ago I happened into a system of websites called GeoCities.

http:/www.geocities.com

Go there and you'll see FREE WEBSITES advertised! It seems not to be any kind of rip-off. In any event, I got one, which my next message will announce the official opening of. You ALL should get your own websites at geocities! It's tricky getting one going, but instructions are supplied, and addresses to go to for help. Go to mine at http://www/geocities/SoHo/Cafe/1492

just to see what someone who doesn't know what he can do has put up. Nothing fancy, but it includes a graphic, and the graphic could have been a photograph or painting.

The only drawback is that you aren't given a lot of space--two megabytes--but that's plenty for my purposes. And if you want more, you can get it for only $5 a month, which seems pretty cheap.

No, I'm not an employee of GeoCities, nor is this an advertisement; I just think it's information well worth passing on. Have fun! --Bob G.

↑ Index

286. Bob Grumman
Announcement of COMPREPOETICA, a Poetry-Data Collection Website
Sun 12 Oct 1997

Today I have decided to announce the Official Opening of COMPREPOETICA, a website devoted (as much as possible) to the WHOLE RANGE of contemporary American Poetry. And of World Poetry eventually, but I can only start so big. If you think, like I, that no reference has come close to doing justice to the current poetry scene as a whole, then you should see the value of Comprepoetica.

At the heart of my site is a survey form for poets, critics, editors, publishers and readers of poetry. Its main use will be to provide data for the biographical entries in the Comprepoetica Dictionary of Contemporary American Poetry, Poetics, Poets Etc., which will eventually by published by my own Runaway Spoon Press, a micro-publishing operation now ten-years-old. These entries will also be available to the public at Comprepoetica (or elsewhere on the Net if I run out of room at Comprepoetica).

Definitions of various poetics terms (supplied not only by me but by anyone who wants to send me any) will eventually be available for comment at Comprepoetica, as well--plus discussions of schools of contemporary poetry, and other aspects of the scene, such as significant magazines being published, and anthologies, and what's been on radio, the Internet, and even television. Anything that seems pertinent to an understanding of Contemporary Poetry--all of it--in America.

And for BIG FUN, I have a section where votes can be cast for one's favorite poets and poems! (yow)

I hope you'll ALL visit my site soon--and contribute to it! And tell your friends! Help get my visitor-counter into triple figures!

--Bob G

↑ Index

287. robert drake

Re: Announcement of COMPREPOETICA, a Poetry-Data Collection Website

Sun 12 Oct 1997

---

praps bob's too shy to mention it, or just excited about his new foray; but the address is:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492/

> Today I have decided to announce the Official Opening of COMPREPOETICA, a website devoted (as much as possible) to the WHOLE RANGE of contemporary American Poetry. And of World Poetry eventually, but I can only start so big. If you think, like I, that no reference has come close to doing justice to the current poetry scene as a whole, then you should see the value of Comprepoetica.
>
> At the heart of my site is a survey form for poets, critics, editors, publishers and readers of poetry. Its main use will be to provide data for the biographical entries in the Comprepoetica Dictionary of Contemporary American Poetry, Poetics, Poets Etc., which will eventually by published by my own Runaway Spoon Press, a micro-publishing operation now ten-years-old. These entries will also be available to the public at Comprepoetica (or elsewhere on the Net if I run out of room at Comprepoetica).
>
> Definitions of various poetics terms (supplied not only by me but by anyone who wants to send me any) will eventually be available for comment at Comprepoetica, as well--plus discussions of schools of contemporary poetry, and other aspects of the scene, such as significant magazines being published, and anthologies, and what's been on radio, > the Internet, and even television. Anything that seems pertinent to an understanding of Contemporary Poetry--all of it--in America.

>
> And for BIG FUN, I have a section where votes can be cast for one's favorite poets and poems! (yow)
>
> I hope you'll ALL visit my site soon--and contribute to it! And tell your friends! Help get my visitor-counter into triple figures!
>
> --Bob G

↑ Index

288. Jordan Davis
Tim Davis and Brenda Coultas at Here
Sun 12 Oct 1997

Not the opening reading (that was Tom Raworth and Ann Lauterbach) but the second, Tim Davis and Brenda Coultas at the shiny hospitable cafe at Here, 145 Avenue of the Americas, great glass windows looking out at the happy stragglers, looking in at one attentive group. Any fear that the vibe might get trampled in a not-for-profit zone is quelched by couches and a staff that not only acquiesces but acts apologetic when ambient irritations must be removed. Now on the other hand, the food is maybe only above decent, and the sense of being _at sea_ (unless you count the bateau-moucheness of the new digs) is just gone. And the beer is too much.

Brenda Coultas is too much. After a fine introduction by Rob Fitterman she read work from her first (totally great) collection, _Early Films_, and she read some new work which takes her early themes of meat, sex, animals, body parts, depravity and tenderness to a new pleasant intensity. She has a light touch. It represents Indiana. (Random comparison to Andy Levy?) There is something waldmanische (naturally, she danced and wrote at Naropa) about Coultas's work, but enough names. Tim Davis got up after a decent break during which host R Fitterman, D Rountree, B Andrews, K Davies, D Kovac, M Harb, R Smith, J Mac Low, D Gardner, M Highfill, J-A Wasserman, A Davies, S Rodefer, and many others milled. Rob gave a good and very friendly introduction. Tim got up, and read poems from his lunch poem series (resumed after a several-month hiatus), letters from artists to artists (e.g. Antonin Artaud to Jasper Johns -- "jam a roman candle up yr ass!" -- or Sally Mann to The Author (TD) -- "play the image card"), new poems, poems on the subject of a community of poets (which poems were written directly after readings and then dedicated to those poets namely Rod Smith, Brian Kim Stefans, Lisa Jarnot), and poems from his second chapbook, _My Life in Politics, A History of N=A=R=R=A=T=I=V=E Film_. Tim is transforming his post-Andrews superchunky vocabulary into a device to generate plausible news, as if Hopkins quit the church and got a gig with Reuters, or ArtForum. But where Hopkins would stick around the same three sounds, Tim _plays the changes_, modulating from one cluster of phonemes to another, another. Too much too.

--(hours pass)--

Party at Tim's! Got there after waking from a splendid nap to Xena Warrior Princess's remake of Groundhog Day, then a beefalo dinner, angel hair and artichoke paste. Up the stairs and champagne! and he's moved the futon so the coats go into the front room, only a little music, mainly the same crowd from the reading (nice crowd), I had a nice conversation with my wife and Barbara Henning and then I want to say his name is Shim, he brought out his musical saw and someone else got their guitar, Tim found his banjo, there was a harmonica player and Drew Gardner, thwarted in his search for bongo improvised on a ceramic pasta pot. Lee Ann showed up and they did a happy birthday number of Amazing Grace.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

289. Ryan Whyte
Amerika
Sun 12 Oct 1997

Crystal occurs to him, inhales shards
Song of the pure cut Sang d'un po e t
S un
Ash-stone never given to a woman
Sleep shakes off drunk words
This conceals itself within the tightening Morning, oriflamme then hard around

Liberty raised sword curtain so the deck swelled, sweaty expectants under her dress, French beacon la myrrhe gaie en ses bouteilles closes you left your papers you say? Nothing I can do for you. Stand in the line, there, snaking expectants, snaking, then pooling, sinking, unslaked. Oil prismatic, bugs, tugs.

To get inside the mirror he bit down on a piece of it, spat blood. After carefully dressing the lacerations in his mouth, he drew a bath, undressed, and submerged himself to his nose. Day's sweat glowed on the steaming surface, slicking across a tiny triangle which made its way ever so slowly from one side of his belly to the other, carefully right to left. The shard traced his intestine in a time lapse photo; further, upon closing his eyes his consciousness was immediately contained by it, so that he was on the inside, looking out at his own insides. Thankfully, the shard's glow lit his interior passageways fairly well, grey falling across red and blue stalactites and liquid crystal strings for 10 or 20 feet in both directions -- that is, 10 or 20 feet on this inner scale. With the mirror's sharp edges he made small incisions on the colon wall; markers, so as to find his way out again. Another him shuddered with each cut, but he, the shard, was in the angel's dress now, ever climbing.

s/hard isn't it inflection English a diamond,

```
                c-c
                I I
                c-c or is it c
```

```
or c-c
  I\ \
  c c-c
   \I I
    c-c
```

fails to, in this case, mirror, stumble, chide maid Yes, says c, angel, this Yesp-resence I mean Yes non presence. in the stomach acid etches the mirror and his view is frosted, steamed, soon veins are blurred bloodways, blue fringed, how myopia happens, stomach kisses the eye wake/s. yes. ok.

↑ Index

290. Tom Beard
Re: SoKalled
Mon 13 Oct 1997

Carlo -

I'm not sure where I "utterly misrepresent Penrose's position", but I don't really want to get too far into a debate about AI on a poetics list (although there are interesting overlaps between the subjects). And it's true that there are many in the scientific community who are as ignorant of (and hostile to) the arts as some of those in the arts and humanities are of science.

Metaphor, in its various forms, seems to be central to science as well as poetry (and, if you take Jaynes seriously, to consciousness itself). To recognize that two things which are different are in some sense the same is the beginning of abstract thought, pattern recognition, poetic imagery and metaphysical conceits. As such, it is powerful, and that power can mislead as strongly as it can guide.

The "clockwork" metaphor that dominated nineteenth century science (and, of course, much of the twentieth) has shown itself to be incredibly misleading, perhaps more so to the opponents of science (e.g. creationists who argue that a watch implies a watchmaker) than to working scientists. So too the "telephone exchange" metaphor of the brain that has influenced much of neuropsychology and AI - it is useful within its limitations, but neglects such things as brain chemistry. Actually, I much prefer Diderot's metaphor (in Rameau's Nephew) of the brain as a harpsichord, with thoughts on one string striking up resonances in others.

You say that "science has always told me never to sentimentalize it or to mistake its aesthetic for anything but incidental", and I certainly agree with the first part. But I'm not sure what you mean by mistaking science's aesthetic "for anything but incidental". Do you mean the commonly held feeling among scientists and mathematicians that simplicity/elegance/beauty is a sign of truth? Keats fell for that, too. Or do you mean that scientists aestheticize their own "quest for truth" and make this a central (rather than incidental) part of (how they represent) their lives? Well, there certainly have been science writers who have been guilty of this, although I'd hope that, post-Popper, we'd all be on a quest for that-which-is-yet-to-be-falsified.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

291. Tom Beard

Re: Defining / Expression

Mon 13 Oct 1997

> It's old news that language mediates. It seems too many critics rush to devalue the author's intent. A writer may want to be expressive, may want to "move" the reader emotionally. That language is an imperfect tool for such intent should not invalidate the attempt itself.

what matters is not that language fails to touch the world

but that we try, and try, and keep on trying to reach each other with our soft and fallible tongues

My trouble with the term "expressive", though, is that it implies a pre-existing thought/emotion/experience that one expresses, imperfectly or otherwise, through the conduit of the poem. It's why I cringe when some people define the lyric as "an expression of personal emotion": I prefer the phrase "an exploration of ...". The poem is a trace of this exploration (construction?), and I certainly prefer it when this trace is a tangle of lines, some fragmented, some half-erased, rather than a thick line of black felt pen.

Perhaps this is one reason why I have chosen poetry rather than a form that aspires more to 'clarity' or 'directness' of thought. I'd rather not pin down thoughts/emotions/experiences, I like to let them flutter about rather messily (and if the reader wants to watch a different set of flutterers, fine). Or, to risk a rather dodgy use of a scientific metaphor, I want to leave the poem in a "superposition of states", rather than "collapsing the wave function". That's why I don't see the use of ambiguity, wordplay or ellipsis in a poem as mere trickery, but simply as honesty.

the film starts panned across glassy faces (liberals, libertarians), city structured like a language / flashy signs, a concrete garden libertines, liberti sans egaliti, WALK NOW, bodies spin & flow, maintain an airy buffer, safety

between such days
we might navigate, our digits tracing the maps, streets we turn into fading as _the film ends_

(For those of you not afraid of a little pop culture infiltrating poetry, the words in italics (okay, alright, underscores) at the beginning and end are from Leftfield.)

↑ Index

292. Layne Russell
John Denver
Mon 13 Oct 1997

---

from "Flying for Me," 1986:

I wanted to wish on the Milky Way and dance upon a falling star
I wanted to give myself and free myself and join myself with it all

-- John Denver

into the light, John....

Layne

http://www.sonic.net/layne
"A Quiet Place" -- Poetry

↑ Index

293. Hugh Steinberg
Re: SoKalled
Mon 13 Oct 1997

Tom writes:
>
>Metaphor, in its various forms, seems to be central to science as well as >poetry (and, if you take Jaynes seriously, to consciousness itself). To >recognize that two things which are different are in some sense the same is >the beginning of abstract thought, pattern recognition, poetic imagery and >metaphysical conceits. As such, it is powerful, and that power can mislead >as strongly as it can guide.
>
I just finished reading a great book by Evelyn Fox Keller titled "Refiguring Life: Metaphors of Twentieth Century Biology." It's short, but quite illuminating in the way it describes the way metaphor can shape directions of scientific inquiry.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

294. simon
Re: SoKalled
Mon 13 Oct 1997

I'd just like to mention here, on the heels of T. Beard's summary remark that "[m]etaphor, in its various forms, seems to be central to science as well as poetry (and, if you take Jaynes seriously, to consciousness itself)", which, i'd also like to suggest, is something to take literally, concretely, i.e. as literal cognitive function, and refer, again to Aviva Vogel's query "I'm curious...why use words..." and Henry Gould's reply, that "[t] word is an arbitrary flowing replaceable phenomenon subject to the "conductor's baton" of the transformational poetic impulse" (although these last two were not talking on this subject)

I'd like to mention Damasio's claim (a well based claim, or so it seems to me if you consider what we know, and what we don't know, about language acquisition, storage, and domain locations in the brain): that meaning of words with concrete referents [italics mine] is represented in a way that is linked to the individual's sensory experience of those referents, and hence, language independent. [itals mine again]

beth simon

↑ Index

295. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
yet another...
Mon 13 Oct 1997

"sometimes i feel like a sad song"

john denver

↑ Index

296. Robert Archambeau
Chicago Area Reading
Mon 13 Oct 1997

Those of you in and around Chicago might be interested in a reading by Stephanie Strickland, set for Thursday October 16th at 7:30 pm, in the Glen Rowan House on the Campus of Lake Forest College (555 N. Sheridan Rd., Lake Forest IL)

Stephanie Strickland has published three books of poetry, Give the Body Back (1991), The Red Virgin: A Poem of Simone Weil (1993), and True North (1997). She has recently become interested in the potential of computer as a medium for poetry, and True North will be available in a hypertext version from Eastgate Systems next year.

Her essay “Poetry in the Electronic Environment is, appropriately, available on the internet, as part of the EBR at:

http://www.altx.com/ebr/ebr5/strick.htm

Backchannel for more information.

R.A.
--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College

Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

Only irony is eternal
--Andrei Codrescu

↑ Index

297. mark weiss
Re: SoKalled
Mon 13 Oct 1997

How can the meaning of words be independent of language? Does he mean independent of syntax?

> *I'd like to mention Damasio's claim (a well based claim, or so it seems to me if you consider what we know, and what we don't know, about language acquisition, storage, and domain locations in the brain): that meaning of words with concrete referents [italics mine] is represented in a way that is linked to the individual's sensory experience of those referents, and hence, language independent. [itals mine again]*
>
> beth simon

↑ Index

298. Carolyn Guertin
Metaphors
Mon 13 Oct 1997

> Tom writes:
>
> Metaphor, in its various forms, seems to be central to science as well as poetry (and, if you take Jaynes seriously, to consciousness itself). To recognize that two things which are different are in some sense the same is the beginning of abstract thought, pattern recognition, poetic imagery and metaphysical conceits. As such, it is powerful, and that power can mislead as strongly as it can guide.
>
> Hugh Steinberg writes:
> I just finished reading a great book by Evelyn Fox Keller titled "Refiguring Life: Metaphors of Twentieth Century Biology." It's short, but quite illuminating in the way it describes the way metaphor can shape directions of scientific inquiry.

And there's a new book out from MIT called "Internet Dreams: Archetypes, Myths, and Metaphors," edited by Mark Stefik, which looks at how metaphors have, can and might shape the internet and our interactions with it.

Cheers, Carolyn

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm See the 3D Woman! http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/laser/enter.htm "Memory is a capricious seamstress." -- Virginia Woolf

↑ Index

299. Ira Lightman
Char/Boulez
Mon 13 Oct 1997

Pierre Boulez's "setting" of Char (often without the words!) "Le Marteau sans Maitre", is amazing!

↑ Index

300. Tom Beard
SoKalled SF
Tue 14 Oct 1997

First of all, a correction on the source of Diderot's harpsichord metaphor: it's from d'Alembert's Dream, not Rameau's Nephew. And thanks for the Evelyn Fox Keller and Mark Stefik references: I'll look these up.

Douglas brought up the matter of SF, and asked why no-one has mentioned it. Given that such thought experiments as speculating about the scientific theories of alien intelligences or the rights of intelligent machines might be dismissed as "adolescent fantasy", I'm not surprised that the topic hasn't been broached.

I haven't read much SF since childhood, having grown sick of the cardboard cutouts that pass for people in much of the genre (& I guess this is good fuel for those who would dismiss SF as quintessentially geeky and adolescent). Phillip Mann is one writer who I would reccommend, however: especially "Wulfsyarn", which is a fascinating experiment in narrative with interesting speculations on future religions (the worship of St Francis Dionysus). William Gibson is very good at times, and important culturally as the inventor of the dominant metaphor for the space in which these discussions take place.

In films, I'd consider "La Jetee" a masterpiece (does anyone have any impressions of "Level 5"?), and its semi-remake "12 Monkeys" was surprisingly good. I'd need to see "Alphaville" again before I made anything approaching a cogent comment about it, and I still haven't seen "Solaris", despite raves from everyone I know who has seen it. "Blade Runner" astonishes me more every time I watch it.

About the only SF poems that I have read and enjoyed have been by Edwin Morgan, especially "In Sobieski's Shield", "Memories of Earth" and "Thoughts of a Module" (I'm not 100% sure of the titles). Does anyone else know of any interesting SF poems?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

301. Christopher Reiner
Reading
Tue 14 Oct 1997

A READING OCTOBER 18TH IN NEW YORK CITY:

Cydney Chadwick
&
Lisa Robertson

3 P.M.

HERE CENTER FOR INDEPENDENT ART
145 6TH AVE. (BETWEEN SPRING AND BROOME) [redacted]

Cydney Chadwick is the author of one full-length collection and five chapbooks. Her work is currently being translated into Portuguese for anthology of innovative American prose, forthcoming out of Sao Paolo, Brazil. She has recently edited _An Avec Sampler, 1997_, and is the publisher of Avec Books.

Lisa Robertson lives and writes in Vancouver. She is the author of _Xeclogue_ (Tsunami Editions), and her work has appeared in several anthologies. She is a founding member of the Kootenay School of Writing in Vancouver.

↑ Index

302. adalaide morris
Re: NEW Davidson, Debord, Fraser, Ginsberg, Levy &&& @ Bridge Street
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Dear Bridge Street Books:

Thanks for your listing of September 15th. Here's an order for which I will be happy to be billed, in the process listed below, and pay by return check. I look forward to getting the books:

Adalaide Morris
431 Brown Street
Iowa City, IA 52245

The Collected Poems of Charles Olson_, ed. George Butterick, U Cal, $38.
> New in pb.

> _Hambone 13_, ed Nathaniel Mackey, $10.
>
> _Forms of Expansion: Recent Long Poems by Women_, Lynne Keller, U. Chicago, $16.95.
>
> _Another Language: Selected Poems_, Rosmarie Waldrop, Talisman, $10.50.
>
> Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books.

With best wishes--

Dee

↑ Index

303. Layne Russell
Re: Reading
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Christopher Reiner wrote:
>
> A READING OCTOBER 18TH IN NEW YORK CITY:
>
> Cydney Chadwick
> &
> Lisa Robertson
>
> 3 P.M.
>
> HERE CENTER FOR INDEPENDENT ART
> 145 6TH AVE. (BETWEEN SPRING AND BROOME) [redacted]
>
> Cydney Chadwick is the author of one full-length collection and five > chapbooks. Her work is currently being translated into Portuguese for > anthology of innovative American prose, forthcoming out of Sao Paolo, > Brazil. She has recently edited _An Avec Sampler, 1997_, and is the > publisher of Avec Books.

>
> Lisa Robertson lives and writes in Vancouver. She is the author of > _Xeclogue_ (Tsunami Editions), and her work has appeared in several > anthologies. She is a founding member of the Kootenay School of Writing in > Vancouver.

This promises to be a good night! I saw Cydney last night at David Bromige and Aaron Shurin's reading in Petaluma, CA. She's excited about reading again in NY.... Both Cydney and Lisa are excellent readers.

Layne in sunny California

p.s. David and Aaron were great! what a night!

http://www.sonic.net/layne
"A Quiet Place" -- Poetry
http://www.sonic.net/layne/calendar.html
"Poets Leave Their Prints" -- Poetry Calendar

↑ Index

304. Steve Evans
ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Eighth in the Impercipient Lecture Series is Barrett Watten's "The Bride of the Assembly Line: From Material Text to Cultural Poetics" (October 1997; 36pp). Nothing's automatic as Watten settles into a Detroit frame of mind, rethinking language writing as a mode of production and THIS magazine as an assembly line. Utopian proposals, pitched critiques, "thick descriptions of gonzo culturalism," and terrific readings of Clark Coolidge's "Made Thought" and _The Maintains_ all roll off the analogical belt, as do those "geniuses" of American organization, Gertrude Stein, Henry Ford, and Noah Webster.

Subcriptions to the ILS are US$25 for ten issues (no additional charge for overseas subcribers); US$40 for institutions. Single copies go for US$5 when available. A handful of imperfectly bound copies in the present batch will be distributed free upon request. Please make checks out to one of the editors, NOT the magazine.

ILS First Series/1997 (* indicates still available): 1.7 Five Years in the Life of Jack Spicer by Lewis Ellingham & Kevin Killian 1.6 No Saints in Three Acts: On Steven Jonas by Aldon L. Nielsen 1.5 'Imperturbable Things': On Still-Life Poetics by Beth Anderson 1.4 Responses to Bob Perelman's _The Marginalization of Poetry_ by Silliman, Lauterbach, Spahr, and Evans; with counter-response by Perelman* 1.3 The Ground Is the Only Figure by Rosmarie Waldrop 1.2 Radical Dogberry and Society Sketches: Two Essays by Chris Stroffolino 1.1 The Dynamics of Literary Change by Steve Evans (*in rpt)

Steve Evans & Jennifer Moxley
61 E. Manning Street
Providence RI 02906-4008
ILS at the EPC
<http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/presses/impercipient_lecture.html>

r i a t n m u ? a t s u
o o o s

↑ Index

305. adalaide morris misdirected reply
Tue 14 Oct 1997

apologies to the list for listing a shopping list . . .

Dee

↑ Index

306. Douglas Barbour
Re: sf poetry
Tue 14 Oct 1997

I sent a bit of this to Tom Beard, but here's the info on one anthology of sf poetry, so to speak:

There was an interesting anthology a few years ago of sf-ey poetry, which included a lot of the sf poets but also some surrealists,etc, all brought together by an approach of sorts...? Well, it's hard to say, but when it includes poets like -- well, I rean upstairs to find it & -- Michael Hamburger, Peter Redgrove, Tristan Tzara, Hans Arp, Georg Trakl, David Gascoyne, among others, it does stretch sf (but then its title is _POLY New Speculative Writing_ [Ocean View Books {Box 4148 Mountain View CA 94040} for those who might be intrigued]); of course Ray Bradbury etc are in there too.

I think the idea that language is inherently metaphorical still useful (it sure is damned hard to write something that eludes metaphor all together [see]).

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

I hope to start having a subsite containing bios of all who fill out the survey (and want their bios listed, which will be assumed unless I'm told otherwise). I don't have space for photographs but hope eventually to.

So, thanks to all who've visited. The address for Comprepoetica for those who missed my first announcements is:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

If you visit, remember to look into getting a free site yourself from GeoCities.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

309. Pritchett,Pat
Re: SoKalled SF
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Possibly add Craig Raine's "Martian" series - really more an anthropological conceit - but then, aren't they (SF aliens) all? Also, Andrew Joron has a book of poems called, I think, _Science Fiction_? Not sure on this last.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

310. Tom Orange
SW Ontario Readings
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Upcoming readings in London and Southwestern Ontario:
~~~
~~~

Lectureship in Literature, The Tamblyn Lecture Series, Department of English, Department of French, Centre for Study of Theory & Criticism, and Foundation Western

Oct. 17 Fr "Women Travellers." Nancy Holmes (author of "Valancy and the New World", Kalamalka New Writers Series, 1988; "Down to the Golden Chersonese: Victorian Lady Travellers", Sono Nis, 1991) and Cornelia Hoogland ("The Wire-Thin Bride). 8.00pm, Art Gallery St. Thomas-Elgin, 301 Talbot St, St. Thomas.

Oct. 18 Sa Nancy Holmes and Julie Berry, St. Thomas Poet of "Worn Thresholds." Forest City Gallery, 795 Dundas St., London.

Oct. 23 Th Julia Kristeva, "Proust: Issues of Identity" (third and last lecture: see Oct. 16 for details)

Oct. 24 F Bonnie Burnard (Writer-in-Residence and author of The Old Dance, Women of Influence, Casino and Other Stories) presents a reading, 12 noon, University College 225 (Faculty Lounge) Department of English Literature & Film Series

Oct. 24 F poets from canada, u.s.a., u.k., "Reading," including Taylor Brady, cris cheek, Bill Howe, and Scott Pound.
8:00 pm, Forest City Gallery, 795 Dundas Street
Supported by the Faculty of Arts

↑ Index

311. LAURA MORIARTY
Burger, Roitman and Gluck
Tue 14 Oct 1997

More non:

Mary Burger, Judith Roitman and Robert Gluck.

http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty

With more in the works.

↑ Index

312. Matthew Stadler
Re: Reading
Tue 14 Oct 1997

READING NOVEMBER 18, SEATTLE, WA

The Rendezvous Reading Series will present:

LISA ROBERTSON, poet from Vancouver BC, author of Xeclogues and Debbie

and

ROBERT GLUCK, from San Francisco, author of Jack the Modernist, Reader, etc.

Tuesday November 18, 8:00 pm, $4 at Richard Hugo House, 1634 11the Ave.
(the old New City Theater building), on Capitol Hill, [redacted]

↑ Index

313. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
sokal etc...
Tue 14 Oct 1997

---

you folks who are interested might wanna check out the (in my view, solid) refutation of sokal, gross & levitt (re derrida in particular) in

"'But It Is Above All Not True': Derrida, Relativity, and the 'Science Wars'"

by Arkady Plotnitsky

in the journal _postmodern culture_, at http://jefferson.village.Virginia.EDU/pmc/text-only/issue.197/plotnitsky.197

best,

joe

↑ Index

314. groberts
Re: sf poetry
Tue 14 Oct 1997

See also an old anthology, 1970, called Inside Outer Space: New Poems of the Space Age, edited by Robert Vas Dias. Not much science fiction really, but mostly a collection of poems responding to space travel and technology, and including Antin, Blackburn, Blaser, Bowering, Corman,Enslin, Kelly, Mac Low, Zukofsky among poets of interest to the Poetics list.

Gary R.

↑ Index

315. Thomas Bell
Re: Defining / Expression /experiential
Tue 14 Oct 1997

At 05:49 PM 10/13/97 +1300, Tom Beard wrote:

> My trouble with the term "expressive", though, is that it implies a pre-existing thought/emotion/experience that one expresses, imperfectly or otherwise, through the conduit of the poem. It's why I cringe when some people define the lyric as "an expression of personal emotion": I prefer the phrase "an exploration of ...". The poem is a trace of this exploration (construction?), and I certainly prefer it when this trace is a tangle of lines, some fragmented, some half-erased, rather than a thick line of black felt pen.

Your comments started me thinking of the therapeutic parallels (for better or worse I am such by trade). Words such as expressive (i wrote sexpressive even though i am not a freudian) tend to put people off and are really not adequate to explain what happens. It is more of an experiencing of feeling through the action of expressing or experiential/construction. Both experiential and construction are valid and lively forms of therapy. I have not really seen much on the topic of experiential and/or constructive poetry even though i am aware of it's description by individual poets. If anyone is still with me through my jargon here, I would appreciate information on sources. tom bell

↑ Index

316. david bromige
reading tour
Tue 14 Oct 1997

I am now once again able to send messages (my thanks to Layne Russell for posting to the List in my behalf, that my "Send" function was down) and would like to take the opportunity to post the sked of my upcoming tour, Last week when I read in San francisco, Hugh Steinberg came up afterwards and intro'd himself : I like meeting people who hitherto were just names on the net.

Hamilton Ontario, eve of sunday oct 19 : read with Lisa Robertson in the Live Lit" series run by Kerry Schooley, who has the details at [redacted]

Buffalo, eve of monday oct 20 : read at :"Talking Leaves" books, 7 pm. Details from John Walsh, [redacted].

Toronto, eve of Wednesday, Oct 22 : read at the Arts Bar with Lisa Robertson. Details from "Pierre L'Abbe"<[redacted]> .

Toronto, eve of Sunday, Oct 26 : read at "The Idler", 255 Davenport (just N of Bloor, @ just W of Yonge), 8 pm, with Gregg Orr Robertson & Mark Fitkin. Further details from Peter McFee, [redacted].

SUNY Albany, eve of Wednesday, Oct 29 : reading, the details of which are with Pierre Joris, [redacted] .

NYC,Thursday oct 30, at Teachers & Writers, 5 Union Sq W, curator Jordan Davis ([redacted]) : read with Alan Jennifer Sondheim, 7 pm.

Philadelphia, Friday oct 31, at the Writers House, U Penn, at 4pm: a reading, followed by a panel discussion with Laura Moriarty (who will have read at this location the previous evening). 3805 Locust Walk. Contact persons include Louis Cabri of this List ([redacted]) and Kerry Sherin ([redacted]) .

NYC, Saturday, Nov 1, at CAFE HERE, 145 Sixth Ave, bet. Spring & Broome ([redacted]), curator Liz Fodaski, at 3 pm, with Brian Kim Stefans.

Sunday Nov 2, I fly home to SF.

I hope to meet some of my fellow-listopolitans during these 2 weeks. Overnight accomodations are still soft for two nites in NYC, and a couple of nites in Toronto. I am a past winner (1993) of the James & Debbie Sherry Award for Perfect House-Guest.

I will of necessity unsubscribe from the List before I leave, probably for 3 weeks (after I return to Calif, I go to UC San Diego for a couple of days). My last full day onList will likely be Thursday.

Excuse the shameful self-promotion? Thanks, David

↑ Index

317. Eliza McGrand

cuisinart computer crash

Tue 14 Oct 1997

Hi folks,

Recently I sent out an invitation for Submissions to THE FREE CUISENART on the topic of "rites of passage." I was luck enough to receive many pieces of work to read. Unfortunately, before I could back up the files, my computer crashed, and I do mean CRASHED! It took everything with it.

I do apologize for the inconvenience. But if you sent any work to THE FREE CUISENART either for "rites of passage" or anything else in the last eight weeks, I would appreciate it if you would send again to [redacted] instead of [redacted]

You cooperation will be most helpful in putting the issue together again. You may yell and throw tomatoes if you wish.

Thanks,

Jordanne Holyoak-Kitchel, editor, THE FREE CUISENART

↑ Index

318. Safdie Joseph
Re: reading tour
Tue 14 Oct 1997

God -- three weeks without Bromige on the list. The wit, the sometimes-pointed but never overly harsh rejoinders, the sexual by-play, the clear and balanced perceptions . . . gone. A void, an absence. A hole at the heart of things. Someone might even quote Blanchot pretty soon. What to do? Perhaps we could explore creating the linguistic equivalent of a wake . . .

Just kidding, David. As another who actually did have the pleasure of meeting Mr. Bromige at one of his recent readings (this one in Seattle with Robin Blaser, a truly astonishing event) I can second his self-promotion by suggesting everyone within range of the list attend these next scheduled events. They give one hope for poetry.

A new Florida Marlins fan,

Joe Safdie

David Bromige wrote (in part):

> I will of necessity unsubscribe from the List before I leave, probably for > 3 weeks (after I return to Calif, I go to UC San Diego for a couple of days). My last full day onList will likely be Thursday.
>
> Excuse the shameful self-promotion? Thanks, David

↑ Index

319. Harold Rhenisch
Re: SoKalled
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Maybe he means that perceived meanings of words are individual, based upon the accretions of individual experience, and that language is more strongly linked to sensory experience than to syntactical knowledge?

> How can the meaning of words be independent of language? Does he mean independent of syntax?
>
> *I'd like to mention Damasio's claim (a well based claim, or so it seems to me if you consider what we know, and what we don't know, about language acquisition, storage, and domain locations in the brain): that meaning of words with concrete referents [italics mine] is represented in a way that is linked to the individual's sensory experience of those referents, and hence, language independent. [itals mine again]*
>
> beth simon

↑ Index

320. Harold Rhenisch

Re: Defining / Expression

Tue 14 Oct 1997

"I cringe when somepeople define the lyric as "an expression of personal emotion": I prefer the phrase "an exploration of ...". The poem is a trace of this exploration (construction?), and I certainly prefer it when this trace is a tangle of lines, some fragmented, some half-erased, rather than a thick line of black felt pen"

I'm right with you here, but "an exploration of personal emotion"? I have always been uneasy about that term, too. I have an image of a guy in a pith helmet hacking at the creepers with a machete will a bunch of pigmies follow behind with his cases of champagne and his tents and his gramophone.

I think there are enough cases where poems work from such a strong sense of unity that there is no practical distinction between "exploration" and "emotion", that it might be fruitful to suggest that something (or things) entirely different is (or are) going on.

Re-wiring of metaphoric sets?
Creation of the world through the agency of personal engagement and its re-creation through an engagement with language?
Creation (or adjustment) of the 'self' across the gap of an emotional break?

Those are pretty lousy definitions. I do suspect, however, that there is a lot going on which "an exploration of personal emotion" misses, because it still puts the act of writing outside of the emotion, the self, the perception, or whatever tools we are using at the time.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

321. Daniel Zimmerman
Late Capitalism
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Joe Duemer wrote:

So Dan, why did you backchannel me this post? I think it is quite the most intelligent thing any of us have said on the subject, and it certainly serves to advance the conversation. Consider going public, please.

So: with an invitation like that, how can I resist? [Thanks, Joe.] Here's my backchannel:

Joe, It strikes me that the discussion of the "exchange value" of Late Capitalism more bitingly underscores the "non-exchange" [i.e., acquisitive, period] "value" persistent at least since Luca Pacioli's invention of double-entry bookkeeping & the valorization of usury [for Christians]. The West seems never to have understood Lao Tze: "The scholar [read: banker, a la Paolo Friere] gains every day; the Taoist loses every day." Hey: I sure have. How this relates to poetry I find myself loath to speculate, dwelling as I do remote from the world of prizes, grants, garlands "brief as a girl's," SA_S!_Es, honoraria, plaques, collectable pubic hairs, Litt.Ds, &c. Better, it seems to me, not to relate it _at all_ to what I like to call "the teeth machine" -- basically, Dylan's "heart attack machine" _with a smile_. Keep hope alive! Best, Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

322. R. Gancie
SoKalled
Tue 14 Oct 1997

Tom. What I mean by science's "aesthetic is incidental", is simply that it is not a primary or even teriary concern of science to create beauty. Others such as poets create the conditons and criteria for beauty. Science, often many light years behind us (note the borrowed exaggeration for effect) apply our aesthetics to the various representational forms that their phenomena take. Like Gregory Corso once said, "Everyone wants to be a poet. Everyone aspires to poetry." Hofstader's piece on Chopin is a good example. Hofstader repeatedly refers to Chopin's hands through ornithological metaphors reminscent of poems published in high school lit mags of the 1890's when Darwinian bird prints filled popular magazines and subscription publications. I practically had a stroke when you compared Keat's "Negative Capability" (?) to the scientific method. Didn't Keats say "Beauty is Difficult." I know he didn't say "Beauty is Simple" or "Elegant." Society matrons are "elegant" and that indeed is a minor aesthetic in the service of power. Your apparent admiration of Sir Karl indicates to me just how far apart we are on these matters. Hugh. Keller's "Refiguring Life" is a damn fine book. This autodidact finds her tracing of Claude Shannon's Information Theory into metaphors that inform and in some ways determine theories in Genetics impeccable. Of course, Claude Shannon himself was not adverse to taking the easy way out when it came to difficult determinations involving language. When Shannon was to deliver his seminal paper on Information Theory he still did not have a term to describe some of his phenomena. So he approached John von Neumann about his problem. Von Neumann suggested that he use the word 'entropy' because as von Neumann put it "nobody knows what it means." So the term entropy was stuffed with yet anothr set of phenomna and the term in Information Theory has caused sporadic and unnecessary debate ever since. A friend of mine who studied under one of Shannon's proteges and is an electrical engineer who has worked on top secret military projects all of his life, cringes when I tell (no repeat ad nauseam) this story. He once arranged for me to have dinner with his mentor/Shannnon prot(o)ge and the protege didn't like it.I didn't care much for it myself. Joe. Plotnitsky? I think I've read it and used some for piece in Science as Culture.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

323. Rachel Loden

reading tour & "no more language-bashing" redux

Tue 14 Oct 1997

Joe Safdie wrote:

> God -- three weeks without Bromige on the list.

Yes, what a sad prospect, and even sadder what with Bowering off celebrating Canadian Thanksgiving or whatever he's doing. And weeks after Mark Prejsnar scolded Bromridge for "trivializ[ing] and dismiss[ing] issues that are actually about poetix," I continue to think that DB's "no more language-bashing" post, excerpted just below, which so offended Mark P. for whatever mysterious reason:

. . . But Language-writing has left the planet, the way Imagism left the planet (except for _Poetry (Chicago)_ & various "sunday-painting" clubs) by 1929. That Language-writing parrot is a dead parrot. That parrot has been transformed into its future molecules. And so it follows that, dead & gone, Language-writing cannot exist as an object of bashery. They dont want to go on about "the tensile strength of last winter's icicles". If a poem offend thee in the present, pluck it out. But look to thine own eye, that its mote not be bigger than a beam. In short, people will have to do something else with their Oedipal longings . . .

--contained more poetic thought per square pixel than any number of obtuse ramblings, and lived another nine lives as language. It baffles me that anyone who claims to value innovation in poetry, and no firewall between poetry and criticism, can turn around and demand paint-by-number, stay-on-the-so-called-subject "meaning" on a list devoted to poetic discussion.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

324. david bromige
scolded & didnt know it
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Until Rachel Loden's post today, "reading tour & 'No more language-bashing'", I wasnt aware I had been scolded by Mark Presjnar. I must have missed his post on that day, although I usually read him & find myself agreeing. But I wont agree to his characterization of my "No more L-B" post as "trivializing". Perhaps the humor in it was misleading. Humor often is. For years, I thought George Bowering was someone else. Then one day I discovered I was right.

I meant to be saying (but less ploddingly) that I saw LangPo as an historical moment, & that I perceive that moment as having passed. And that I really dont see the sense of trying to fit new poets into that historical moment--dont see the sense of trying to e-lon-gate that moment--simply on the basis of _formal_ similarities; because those formal moves that were LangPo _had another meaning then_ .

And I hold to my estimate that the moment of Imagism was over before 1929, except as certain techniques were perpetuated in the poetry of however many successors. In the poetry of founding members HD & EP to be sure, & the later recruit WCW; but it was no longer Imagism, Mark, do you follow me?

So one can certainly discuss LangPo, & one can address whatever present poetries, but to go on adding new recruits to LangPo now looks like making a big ball of rubber bands just to see it grow bigger, or to have something to do with one's rubber bands. And as for bashing LangPo, it's been done. And done and done and done. And LangPo wont go away. It happened.

But thats all I meant. I guess I thought, if I were young, I'd find something new to name. But it is hard for generations to speak to one another. That Rachel "heard" me astonishes, for she is half a generation away. _We_ (not nec incl Rachel) certainly went on & on about the New American Poetry, were still doing so 20 years after it had begun. Perhaps best to consider my remarks the squeaks & groans of aged curmudgeonhood, & go about one's business as if nothing had happened. Excuse the intrusion. David

↑ Index

325. mark weiss
Re: SoKalled
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Isn't it a pity that we have to guess at his meaning.

At 03:21 PM 10/14/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Maybe he means that perceived meanings of words are individual, based upon >the accretions of individual experience, and that language is more strongly >linked to sensory experience than to syntactical knowledge?
>
>>How can the meaning of words be independent of language? Does he mean >>independent of syntax?
>
>>I'd like to mention Damasio's claim (a well based claim, or so it >>seems to me if you consider what we know, and what we don't know, >>about language acquisition, storage, and domain locations in >>the brain): that meaning of words with concrete referents [italics >>mine] is represented in a way that is linked to the individual's >>sensory experience of those referents, and hence, language >>independent. [itals mine again]
>>
>>beth simon
>>
>>
>
>

↑ Index

326. George Bowering
Re: reading tour
Wed 15 Oct 1997

I would like to second what Bromige said. He IS a good house guest. Well, except for that thing he has about house pets. Ifd you havent got a dog or cat or say, turtle, David is greeat to have stay over. He doesnt bother goldfish.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

327. George Thompson
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

I have used expressive language:

scene 1:

2 o'clock in the morning. No one in sight. I walk through the ratty parking lot looking for my car. I find it, reach for my keys. They're not there. They are locked in the car.

I kick the tire, I slam my fist on the hood. I curse the car, I curse myself, I curse God. I use exuberant obscenities throughout. I am utterly without company.

But what does this have to do with poetry?

scene 2:

My nerdy neighbor with lots of disposable income considers me a poet, and commissions me to write a love poem directed to his beloved. I go get my book of 500 favorite love poems and do a little research. Then I sit down to work, and in a couple of hours I produce a hallmark-lovely little poem. Let's say $500 US [maybe less].

The language used in this poem is not expressive, since I had no feelings to vent whatsover as I wrote them down. I was paid to evoke these feelings in my target [victim], not to express myself. I call this evocative language [and writers and politicians are fond of this sort of language too].

Now Henry Gould is going to deny that my hallmark-lovely little poem is a poem, because something or other is missing in it. Henry, I'll admit that it is a bad little poem [not worth $500 US, really, at least to the members of this list], but it's still a poem in my view.

You find all sorts of things in poems, most of them predictable, some startling, but what is essential?

Self-expression? the expression of anything? evocation? feelings of fellowship with all things great and small? a political or a social conscience? metaphor? meaning? message?

I can think of poems in which each and every one of these things is absent. So what after all is essential?

Well, never mind. But I think all poetry fetishizes language, by definition.

But I'm willing to negotiate.

George Thompson

↑ Index

328. henry g
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

On Wed, 15 Oct 1997 08:21:01 -0400 George Thompson said:
>
>scene 2:
>
>My nerdy neighbor with lots of disposable income considers me a poet, and >commissions me to write a love poem directed to his beloved. I go get my >book of 500 favorite love poems and do a little research. Then I sit down >to work, and in a couple of hours I produce a hallmark-lovely little poem.
>Let's say $500 US [maybe less].
>
>The language used in this poem is not expressive, since I had no feelings >to vent whatsover as I wrote them down. I was paid to evoke these feelings >in my target [victim], not to express myself. I call this evocative >language [and writers and politicians are fond of this sort of language >too].
>
>Now Henry Gould is going to deny that my hallmark-lovely little poem is a >poem, because something or other is missing in it. Henry, I'll admit that >it is a bad little poem [not worth $500 US, really, at least to the members >of this list], but it's still a poem in my view.

Well, George, now that you've dragged me kicking & screaming into another posting to the list - you're right. I don't think it is a poem, because you LEFT THE CAR OUT OF IT from scene #1.

This also relates to Rachel & David B's last messages. Language Poetry seems to be still alive, at least in the realm of revisionism & re-interp- retation, in the minds of some of its founders. See Barrett Watten's recent essay, the latest in the Impercipient Lecture Series. It's all about cars, among other things. How Language Poetry was-is no part of any modernist global virtual art-autonomy project, but is implicated, and implicates itself [via the function of ANALOGY in writing, following the way Gertrude Stein "organized" writing in analogy to Ford Motor mass production] in the world politico-economic system [alienated labor].

Thus meaning(s) can be found in the sound poems of Clark Coolidge in ANALOGY to large cultural phenomena. The way any art responds to/ is involved in what's going on.

I have no problem with this. Rachel, when you go after the call for "meaning" in poetry you kind of stereotype what interests me (I don't know about M. Prejsnar) in this regard. Watten quotes an early poem of his in which he rewrites an old english riddle from the Exeter Book & makes the unspoken key word to the riddle, "automobile". Now this is what interests me about meaning : layered, encrypted meaning which depends upon a dialogue with what's been done before. Poems in necessary dialogue.

But this is where I would also step aside from the langpos as I understand them from Watten's rewrite. How you respond to "the tradition" is both political & artistic. In my mind it's analogous to the battle between futurism & acmeism in early soviet Russia. I would characterize art as essentially critical in a transcendent/uncanny sense, rather than a revolutionary sense. I would gravitate toward modernism as a conservative or "classical" movement rather than a "modern"/technical movement. & I would analogize poetry more in terms of "natural" labor (labor-pangs) than industrial production. "Material conditions" and their political ramifications are only partially explained by Marxism. o.k.? get that solar car in there, George.

Watten talks about how Stein related mass auto production & her "modern" ability to travel to the capital & sit down with Eleanor Roosevelt. It occurred to me that the book I just came out with, CYCLOBIOGRAPHY, has its own roots in PRE-LANGPO 60s experience (my own initial learning from Ted Berrigan & the NY school) & charts a divergence in diametric opposition to langpo. It's about a (metaphoric) journey to the capital - by tricycle. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

329. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

sci-tech/poetry/etc...

Wed 15 Oct 1997

---

there are obvious overlaps twixt this thread on b. watten's impercipient piece (run right out and get yourself a copy!) and the question of science wars, the relation of science, and technology, to the arts, etc...

i found carlo's discussion of the roots of shannon's "entropy" absolutely fascinating... capricious or not, though (and what came 'off the top' of von neumann's head, regardless his naysaying, may in fact have been the result of his peculiar talents), i'd still say that the parallels drawn twixt info. theory and thermo. are fascinating and worth plumbing (and i STILL like jeremy campbell's _grammatical man_, which is to say that i find much of value in some popular science writing)... still, i've always felt that this overlap of terms worked to obscure the energy basis of information processing... that is, energy, though not what most think it is, has at least the value of being assigned a (human and social) cost as such... whereas information, even as a word, often seems to invoke floating signifiers and the like...

but this development in information theory takes place post-wwii... and many of the poets discussed on this list were writing then... so one question becomes something like, 'what are the relations between info. theory, cybernetics, and poetry?'... and the answer then turns on how one conceives of the relations, broadly, between the arts and the sciences (nothing academically restrictive implied or intended), which of course includes poetry...

my own work (PLUG: forthcoming early next year in the journal _nineteenth century studies_, for those interested---on whitman and the concept of "energy") suggests (at least to me!) that this is an incredibly difficult thing to get at, finally... that it does not reduce to clearcut metaphorical translation (the work of metaphor overestimated in this regard---or at least, metaphor can actually obscure more structural considerations), nor is it bound by the mathematical basis of so much science (which of course can become---and i say this as a former math major!---a dodge for discussing the good & bad and in-between things that science and technology presumably 'bring to life')... i'm blurring all sortsa issues and distinctions as i write, please allow me this elbow room!...

i'll still hold to the necessity of the scientific and technological as viable social-professional categories, forms of inquiry, and so forth, with all of my critical and professional reservations intact... at the same time, i don't quite believe that science, for example, should be understood entirely on their own terms---with all due respect, i see these enterprises as bound by social/cultural/historically determinate value(s)... hence i think one needs simply to respect the claims made by these ways of knowing with due regard for their limits---and this goes for scientists and technologists too!... it's like poetry---poets make claims that are pertinent to poetry, and should be understood as viable in such terms... when you step outside of poetry, as it were (and these latter three words, for you close readers, are obviously doing a LOT of work here), your claims are susceptible to analysis and pie-throwing by, for example, sociologists... which is not to deny their legitimacy, or to condone pie-throwing... only to suggest the pragmatic basis of claims, and the (not incommensurability, no), but the (let's be technicist for a moment) incompatibilities that surface when the possibilities of competing discourses impinge upon one another...

now i wish i'd have said alla that AND sounded a bit more speculative... b/c i really do mean to be... but i'm in a hurry!...

so hey, hope to see some of you in minneapolis, at the xcultural poetix shindig!...

DRESS WARM!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

330. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Dorn/Raworth Reading

Wed 15 Oct 1997

Several of us Boulderites overcame our customary aversion for Denver and environs and made the trip down to DU last night to hear Ed Dorn and Tom Raworth read. The Dupont Room of the august Mary Reed Bldg is tricked out, as Ed put it, in "Gothic fakery." It's also painted a horrible puke green color, but enough about that.

Ed, who's been "battling" pancreatic cancer as many of you know, was looking, I thought, pretty damned good - quite gaunt - he'd evidently lost some weight - but he was clear, in good humor, and read with real panache excerpts from two long poems: "Lost Dog Variorum," and another about "the Cheyenne axis," (title escapes me - I didn't make notes), and several shorter pieces.

A ruddy-faced Tom Raworth followed Ed. Tom read a few poems from his new Roof edition of Selected Poems, _Clean & Well-Lit_, and from a long, unfinished work titled "Meadow," which was something of a tour de force, even for Tom. My only complaint was that he didn't read long enough.

Present in the audience: Cole Swensen, who emceed the evening, Jack Collom, Rachel Levitsky, Peter Michelson (who seemed to laugh throughout most of Ed's reading), Lindsay Hill, Michael Friedman, Anne Waldman, Tom Peters, Bin Ramke, and Mark Irwin, whom I succeeded in ignoring/avoiding all night and it was a very small room, too.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

331. George Thompson

Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line

Wed 15 Oct 1997

Hi,

I've just written a check for a subscription to ILS. Just one little question. Is the subscription for the first ten issues, or for the next ten? I want to subscribe in either case. But I'd like to be able to catch up on the earlier issues that I missed.

It is a very attractive series!

Thanks

George Thompson

> Eighth in the Impercipient Lecture Series is Barrett Watten's "The Bride of the Assembly Line: From Material Text to Cultural Poetics" (October 1997; 36pp). Nothing's automatic as Watten settles into a Detroit frame of mind, rethinking language writing as a mode of production and THIS magazine as an assembly line. Utopian proposals, pitched critiques, "thick descriptions of gonzo culturalism," and terrific readings of Clark Coolidge's "Made Thought" and _The Maintains_ all roll off the analogical belt, as do those "geniuses" of American organization, Gertrude Stein, Henry Ford, and Noah Webster.
>
> Subcriptions to the ILS are US$25 for ten issues (no additional charge for overseas subcribers); US$40 for institutions. Single copies go for US$5 when available. A handful of imperfectly bound copies in the present batch will be distributed free upon request. Please make checks out to one of the editors, NOT the magazine.
>
> ILS First Series/1997 ( indicates still available):*
> 1.7 Five Years in the Life of Jack Spicer by Lewis Ellingham & Kevin Killian
> 1.6 No Saints in Three Acts: On Steven Jonas by Aldon L. Nielsen
> 1.5 'Imperturbable Things': On Still-Life Poetics by Beth Anderson
> *1.4 Responses to Bob Perelman's _The Marginalization of Poetry_ by Silliman, Lauterbach, Spahr, and Evans; with counter-response by Perelman
> 1.3 The Ground Is the Only Figure by Rosmarie Waldrop
> 1.2 Radical Dogberry and Society Sketches: Two Essays by Chris Stroffolino
> *1.1 The Dynamics of Literary Change by Steve Evans (in rpt)
>
> Steve Evans & Jennifer Moxley
> 61 E. Manning Street
> Providence RI 02906-4008
> ILS at the EPC <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/presses/impercipient_lecture.html>
>
> r i a t n m u

> ?
> a t s u o o o s

↑ Index

332. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

#1 was a poem, #2 was verse. I like to think of it as a train--sometimes I express, sometimes I local.

> I have used expressive language:
>
> scene 1:
>
> 2 o'clock in the morning. No one in sight. I walk through the ratty parking lot looking for my car. I find it, reach for my keys. They're not there. They are locked in the car.
>
> I kick the tire, I slam my fist on the hood. I curse the car, I curse myself, I curse God. I use exuberant obscenities throughout. I am utterly without company.
>
> But what does this have to do with poetry?
>
> scene 2:
>
> My nerdy neighbor with lots of disposable income considers me a poet, and commissions me to write a love poem directed to his beloved. I go get my book of 500 favorite love poems and do a little research. Then I sit down to work, and in a couple of hours I produce a hallmark-lovely little poem. Let's say $500 US [maybe less].
>
> The language used in this poem is not expressive, since I had no feelings to vent whatsover as I wrote them down. I was paid to evoke these feelings in my target [victim], not to express myself. I call this evocative language [and writers and politicians are fond of this sort of language too].
>
> Now Henry Gould is going to deny that my hallmark-lovely little poem is a poem, because something or other is missing in it. Henry, I'll admit that it is a bad little poem [not worth $500 US, really, at least to the members of this list], but it's still a poem in my view.
>
> You find all sorts of things in poems, most of them predictable, some startling, but what is essential?
>
> Self-expression? the expression of anything? evocation? feelings of > fellowship with all things great and small? a political or a social conscience? metaphor? meaning? message?

>
> I can think of poems in which each and every one of these things is absent. So what after all is essential?
>
> Well, never mind. But I think all poetry fetishizes language, by definition.
>
> But I'm willing to negotiate.
>
> George Thompson

↑ Index

333. George Thompson
Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Sorry,

Of course, that last post from me was meant for Steve Evans.

Well, it could have been worse. It could have been a snapshot of Bromige messing around with Bowering's house pets.

GT

↑ Index

334. Maria Damon
Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
Wed 15 Oct 1997

---

as a former house pet of george bowering, i appreciate your fine sense of discretion. what bowering is omitting, of course, are his own predilections for the more untamed species that dwell on the great tundras and wildernesses. hence his deep attraction to canada.

At 10:38 AM -0400 10/15/97, George Thompson wrote: >Sorry,
>
>Of course, that last post from me was meant for Steve Evans.
>
>Well, it could have been worse. It could have been a snapshot of Bromige >messing around with Bowering's house pets.
>
>GT

↑ Index

335. p. durgin
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

No negotiations nec. This pinpoints it absolutely. Content schmontent and expression schexpression. Poetry, as a literary genre, must have as its overriding focus, the utilization of the language, which is not to be confused with the "tounge" from which it was sprung.

|||[redacted]|||

_____

On Wed, 15 Oct 1997, George Thompson wrote:

> Well, never mind. But I think all poetry fetishizes language, by definition.

↑ Index

336. Joseph Conte
Dictionary of Literary Biography
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Dear Poetics Listmembers:

I'm in the home stretch of editing a three-volume series of the _Dictionary of Literary Biography_ on American Poets Since World War II. (That rubric includes all of North America and its native inhabitants, for our Canadian friends on the list).

Because a few of the entries for this volume have not been forthcoming, I'm looking for two or three new contributors who would be willing to write a 5000 word entry on a contemporary (N.) American poet (who has not already been treated in recent _DLB_ volumes). Rewards are modest: a $100 honorarium and a copy of the hardcover volume that sells to libraries and institutions for about $150.

Also, time is short. Production on the volume will probably begin in December, so anyone interested will have to produce their entry by no later than December 15, 1997.

A sampling of the entries currently already included in this volume (some by or about Poetics Listmembers, I might add):

John Cage, by Rod Smith
Anne Carson, by Steven Marks
Robert Duncan, by George Butterick and revised by Robert Bertholf
Ann Lauterbach, by James McCorkle

Jackson MacLow, by Bruce Campbell
Bob Perelman, by Steven Evans
Leslie Scalapino, by Elisabeth Frost
Barrett Watten, by Jacques Debrot

If you're interested in contributing, and can work within the deadline, please contact me backchannel:

[redacted]

Thanks.

Joseph Conte

↑ Index

337. mark weiss
Poetry sites
Wed 15 Oct 1997

A plea for help--I need suggestions of other poetry sites on the web that would be amenable to announcements of new books.

↑ Index

338. Aldon Nielsen
Re: scolded & didnt know it
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Glad to see this early sign of "el nino" signed DB

↑ Index

339. David Benedetti
Re: "no more language-bashing" bromige post
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Bromige's statement on "no more language-bashing":

> . . . But Language-writing has left the planet, the way Imagism left the planet (except for _Poetry (Chicago)_ & various "sunday-painting" clubs) by 1929. That Language-writing parrot is a dead parrot. That parrot has been transformed into its future molecules. And so it follows that, dead & gone, Language-writing cannot exist as an object of bashery. They dont want to go on about "the tensile strength of last winter's icicles". If a poem offend thee in the present, pluck it out. But look to thine own eye, that its mote not be bigger than a beam. In short, people will have to do something else with their Oedipal longings . . .

struck me as insightful, especially as he mentioned the "Oedipal longings" connected with LangPo bashing. The first chapter of my dissertation took on the issue of why people (in general) dislike poetry--and bash LangPo especially--and I drew parallels to (or commented on) the Oedipal rivalry as being a significant part of that bashing. I argue that part of the threat presented by LangPo to some readers comes from LangPo's refusal (or neglect) of participation in the usual Oedipal rivalries set up in the "understanding" or "meaning production" of (the reading of) the poem.

This chapter of my dissertation has also been reworked and will appear in Poetics Journal as "Fear of Poetic Knowledge," hopefully late this year (according to my last comunication with Barrett Watten). So, to extend the discussion....
--David Benedetti

↑ Index

340. Andrew D Epstein Creeley reading, NYC
Wed 15 Oct 1997

For those of you in the New York area, here's an announcement:

THE F. W. DUPEE POETRY READING SERIES PRESENTS

ROBERT CREELEY

Introduced by Kenneth Koch
Thursday, October 23
8 PM
Maison Francaise
Columbia University
116th & Broadway (1 or 9 subway)

Admission Free

Please contact me if you have any questions ... Hope to see you there!

Andrew Epstein

↑ Index

341. Jena Osman
yet another reading in nyc
Wed 15 Oct 1997

I'll be reading with Fiona Templeton at St. Marks Church
Wed., Oct. 22, 8:00.
I hope some of you can make it.

Jena Osman
[redacted]

↑ Index

342. Christopher Alexander nominative press collective nouns...
Wed 15 Oct 1997

---

announcing the publication of 2 new chapbooks from nominative press collective!

--

by postcard: beloved series Rachel Daley

edition of 40. 5.5 x 6.5", hand-sewn, heavy coverstock
w. mylar endpapers; 20 printed pp.; illustration by Rachel Daley & Christopher Alexander.

$4 / $7 institutional

--

-ocracy 8 & 9 Peter Ganick & Sheila Murphy

2 parts of the ongoing collaborative project

edition of 120. 5.5 x 8.5", saddle stapled, heavy coverstock; 16 printed pp.; available in 5 different
covers! cover art by CT artist Cherie Mittenthal.

$3 / $5 institutional

--

!! samples may be viewed via the www @
http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/
(please come check out the newly revamped site!)

thanks! Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
www: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

343. David Benedetti
Denver
Wed 15 Oct 1997

On Mon, 13 Oct 1997, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> "sometimes i feel like a sad song"
>
> john denver
>

I prefer

"I'm leaving on a jet plane..."

--John Denver

↑ Index

344. Christopher Reiner
Re: Poetry sites
Wed 15 Oct 1997

This is probably as good a time as any to announce an upcoming web page that will be designed especially for announcements of new books from literary presses. It's still under construction, so I don't want to give out the address, but if anyone wants to announce a book published in the last two months, please email me at

[redacted]

Literary mags also welcome.

I haven't worked out the particulars yet, but please try to keep announcements to 100 words or less. If there's a web site link or an email address for more info, please include it.

More details in the next week or so.

--Chris Reiner

[redacted]

On Wed, 15 Oct 1997, mark weiss wrote:

> A plea for help--I need suggestions of other poetry sites on the web that would be amenable to announcements of new books.

↑ Index

345. Pam Brown

Shameless promotion

Wed 15 Oct 1997

Announcing (shamelessly) my latest book (on behalf of the distributor AWOL):-

>
>50 - 50
>Pam Brown
>Published by Little Esther Books
>
>Pam Brown is a leading and longstanding member of that disorganised band - >the radical opposition in Australian poetry.
>
>Her work has been much anthologized, her Selected Poems has gone into a >number of editions - all without the ignominy of school syllabus status
>- and her writing is a touchstone amongst our best poets
>
>Astringent, abrasive, lyrical, aphoristic, insouciant, elegiac, critical, >clear-eyed, hard-bitten, relaxed, discomforting, amused & amusing, louche & >grave.
>
>Her many books include Cafe Sport (Sea Cruise), Keep It Quiet, prose >(Redress/Wild & Woolley), and many others now out of print - as was her >Selected Poems, updated and reissued by Wild & Woolley as New and Selected.
>More recently a further poetry collection, This World, This Place, was >published by UQP.
>
>'50-50' isbn 0 646 32225 7 available through the AWOL Virtual >Bookshop for Australian $15.95 plus $1.00 handling >and postage.
>

http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/

> '50-50' is available through the AWOL Virtual Bookshop. To order your copy simply print out this message and send it, together with your payment ($15.95 plus $1.00 postage and handling total $16.95), to AWOL, PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137.
>
> Your name:.....
>
> Your address: .....

> Note. Overseas orders please contact us by email for overseas rates.
> [redacted]
> **********
>
> **********
>
> AWOL
> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 015063970
> Fax 61 2 97472802

↑ Index

346. Bob Grumman

Re: Defining / Expression

Wed 15 Oct 1997

Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> #1 was a poem, #2 was verse. I like to think of it as a train--sometimes I > express, sometimes I local.
>
> >I have used expressive language:
> >
> >scene 1:
> >
> >2 o'clock in the morning. No one in sight. I walk through the ratty parking > >lot looking for my car. I find it, reach for my keys. They're not there.
> >They are locked in the car.
> >
> >I kick the tire, I slam my fist on the hood. I curse the car, I curse > >myself, I curse God. I use exuberant obscenities throughout. I am utterly > >without company.

> >
> >But what does this have to do with poetry?
> >
> >scene 2:
> >
> >My nerdy neighbor with lots of disposable income considers me a poet, and > >commissions me to write a love poem directed to his beloved. I go get my > >book of 500 favorite love poems and do a little research. Then I sit down > >to work, and in a couple of hours I produce a hallmark-lovely little poem.
> >Let's say $500 US [maybe less].
> >
> >The language used in this poem is not expressive, since I had no feelings > >to vent whatsover as I wrote them down. I was paid to evoke these feelings > >in my target [victim], not to express myself. I call this evocative > >language [and writers and politicians are fond of this sort of language > >too].
> >
> >Now Henry Gould is going to deny that my hallmark-lovely little poem is a > >poem, because something or other is missing in it. Henry, I'll admit that > >it is a bad little poem [not worth $500 US, really, at least to the members > >of this list], but it's still a poem in my view.
> >
> >You find all sorts of things in poems, most of them predictable, some > >startling, but what is essential?
> >
> >Self-expression? the expression of anything? evocation? feelings of > >fellowship with all things great and small? a political or a social > >conscience? metaphor? meaning? message?
> >
> >I can think of poems in which each and every one of these things is absent.
> >So what after all is essential?
> >
> >Well, never mind. But I think all poetry fetishizes language, by definition.
> >
> >But I'm willing to negotiate.
> >
> >George Thompson

I don't know what any of your are talking about when you use the word "expression." And I mean all the many posts on this subject. For me text #1 is a prose expression of what happened to someone regarding his car, #2 is the expression in poetry of sentiments concerning love--which don't happen to be shared by the writer of the poem, which is irrelevant. My Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary gives DEPICT, DELINEATE, to represent in words: STATE, to give or convey a true impression of: SHOW, REFLECT. I feel benighted. Where iz I off?

--Bob G.

↑ Index

347. George Thompson
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

Bob Grumann said:
>
>I don't know what any of your are talking about when you use the word >"expression." And I mean all the many posts on this subject. For me >text #1 is a prose expression of what happened to someone regarding his >car, #2 is the expression in poetry of sentiments concerning love--which >don't happen to be shared by the writer of the poem, which is >irrelevant. My Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary gives DEPICT, >DELINEATE, to represent in words: STATE, to give or convey a true >impression of: SHOW, REFLECT. I feel benighted. Where iz I off?
>
> --Bob G.

Bob,

I'm benighted too. That's why my post. That ain't poetry in # 1. That's naked wrath, and a car. Whereas # 2 is poetry, bad poetry, to be sure, but poetry nevertheless. I think that some of us tend to confuse what poetry is with what it should be. Like you [and P. Durgin, et al.], I 'm looking for a little clarity here. Not sermons or manifestos.

As for EXPRESS, I think I know that verb, and as far as I'm concerned its territory is not the same as poetry's.

George

↑ Index

348. groberts
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

"Idling"

Elbows propped upon knees.

    Like a two-door sedan pulled up on the lawn.

One good hit
from the peace pipe.

    Like a warm car cooling off inside its own garage.

Hands behind head,
head back, feet up.

    Like an original paint job renewed by a fresh coat of rain.

No one else
at home for hours.

    Like the only vehicle left overnight in the plaza parking lot.

Gary R.

↑ Index

349. Bob Grumman
Re: Defining / Expression
Wed 15 Oct 1997

George T:

I'd agree with you that "EXPRESS's . . . territory is not the same as poetry's" if you changed "the same as" to "coterminous with." But surely the territories overlap? --Bob G.

↑ Index

350. Tom Beard
Re: SoKalled
Thu 16 Oct 1997

> I practically had a stroke when you compared Keat's "Negative Capability" (?) to the scientific method. Didn't Keats say "Beauty is Difficult." I know he didn't say "Beauty is Simple" or "Elegant."

Well, I suppose it wasn't Keats, but his Grecian Urn that said "Beauty is Truth, Truth Beauty!". He was probably criticizing that aesthetic, not falling for it as I claimed, so you're entitled to your stroke.

I'd agree that "it is not a primary or even tertiary concern of science to create beauty", but I think that science can and does "create the conditons and criteria for beauty" from time to time. What used to be a tacit understanding among scientists that beauty=simplicity=truth is now fading, in part because of new studies in chaos theory and fractal geometry (self-similar figures are no longer seen as "monsters"). We could argue forever about whether the transition from Euclidean to Mandelbrotian geometry as an aesthetic touchstone is driven by similar changes in architecture, typography and other arts, or whether the studies by scientists, mathematicians and algorithmic artists (for want of a better phrase) have helped shift the aesthetic themselves.

> Your apparent admiration of Sir Karl indicates to me just how far apart we are on these matters.

Well, we'll just have to leave it there, then. But for me, Popper has been an important influence, and his concept of falsification provides a much more accurate reflection of how scientists actually work than other theories I've read. It captures the tentative, provisional nature of scientific knowledge, in a way that accords much better with postmodern viewpoints than most would realise.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

351. David R. Israel
Re: Defining / Expression
Thu 16 Oct 1997

---

yo,

quoth George Thompson:

> You find all sorts of things in poems, most of them predictable, some startling, but what is essential?
>
> Self-expression? the expression of anything? evocation? feelings of fellowship with all things great and small? a political or a social conscience? metaphor? meaning? message?
>
> I can think of poems in which each and every one of these things is absent. So what after all is essential?

This was addressed by a Sung dynasty poet -- I think it was Yang Wan-li, but wouldn't swear by it (poss trans. by Jonathan Chaves, among others, but ditto) -- sorry my recollections not as clear as the poem merits, but it goes something like this --

If you say that poetry [shi] resides in words [yan, expression] take away the words -- & the meaning [yi, idea] yet remains if you say that poetry resides in meaning take away the meaning -- & the poetry still remains

the relationship between word / expression [yan]
meaning / idea [yi]
and poetry [shi]
is thus indeed quizzical & elusive, -- if I follow Mr. Yang aright.

This little poem also suggests a layers-of-the-onion aspect:

If you say that the poem is what you find as an onion take away the outer layer -- there's still an inner layer if you say that the poem is that inner layer, then (Yang says) take away even that -- and lo! -- poetry is still with us

This is certainly a mystical & wistical definition of poetry. Not the most useful for cobbling forth techno-criteria. But still suggestive, eh?

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

> follow behind with his cases of champagne and his tents and his gramophone.

Hmm, if only it were that easy! "Exploration" certainly is a loaded term, as is "experimental" (and I don't want to get into that again). Leaving aside (if we can) the image of the Colonialist White Male in lab coat and pith helmet, I think of the words "explore" and "experiment" (in this context) more in terms of a newborn, trying out his/her emotional limbs, thinking "What the heck is this? It feels kind of squishy. Ouch! It doesn't bend that way, does it?". The writing is a trace of the writhing.

> I do suspect, however, that there is a > lot going on which "an exploration of personal emotion" misses, because it > still puts the act of writing outside of the emotion, the self, the > perception, or whatever tools we are using at the time.

I don't see it this way. If the writing is the exploration, then the writing occurs "within" that which is explored. Expression, however, sounds to me like something is being squeezed through the writing, and hence the writing encompasses and controls it.

tom bell wrote:

> Your comments started me thinking of the therapeutic parallels (for better or > worse I am such by trade). Words such as expressive (i wrote sexpressive even > though i am not a freudian) tend to put people off and are really not adequate > to explain what happens. It is more of an experiencing of feeling through the > action of expressing or experiential/construction. Both experiential and > construction are valid and lively forms of therapy. I have not really seen > much on the topic of experiential and/or constructive poetry even though i am > aware of it's description by individual poets. If anyone is still with me >through my jargon here, I would appreciate information on sources.

Though some people are allergic to the idea of poetry as therapy, you are obviously looking at it from a much more serious perspective than your average open mike "I suffered so it must be a poem" type. It comes close to the reasons why I've chosen poetry rather than linear, denotative prose. I've found that giving a name to an experience ("Oh, that was betrayal/anger/joy/desire/whatever") tends to nail down what had been a nebulous set of impressions, solidify that which had been fluid. From then on, when I think back to the original events, all I get is a memory of my memories, or the narrative that I had constructed out of them. Subsequent experience cannot help to reform the experiences, since they have already been petrified by denotation.

Some of my friends have accused me, when I use deliberate ambiguity in a poem, of toying with words for their own sake, but it is my way of remaining honest. Not only does it make the poem (I hope) a more open experience for the reader, but also for myself. When readers can find something in my poems that I hadn't noticed myself, I am delighted and intrigued, not only because it means that the field of meanings is expanding beyond my intentions, but also because it can send me back to a re-consideration of my self and the events in my life. Sometimes this has been an enlightening experience; sometimes chastening.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

353. Alan /dev/null Sondheim

Dusk, Turning Dawn

Thu 16 Oct 1997

-

Dusk, Turning Dawn

Jennifer and Julu, their accounts open on my machine, remain silent, no longer locked within the interstices of the linux operating system. There has been no updating of files, no checkpointing for the system as a whole, no logs sent by cron over to the mail; linux is emptied, dark corridors, remaining for the return.

To return to a system awaiting, to enter the portal of the system, to log in, to challenge and enter the password, to _pass._

To pass against all tests, to continue past all fiery tests, to look for the files subtlely moved, ownerships maintained or transformed. But linux sleeps for now, games unplayed, Jennifer and Julu no longer present, ex- cept by proxy, the forms of speechlessness. I quietly walked through the dark forest, in search of Indian Pipe pale and translucent near the bur- nished ground:

my-skin-for-you...
my-skin-for-you...
calls forth contrary womb,
calls forth contrary womb,
eating, excreting memory.

eating, excreting memory.
confusing the protruding, my-skin-for-you... is pure, protruding, yes, my beautiful flower? ... womb is eyelid here, it's womb?

Are you becoming close to Jennifer's my-skin-for-you...?
yes...
yes...
yes...
You melt into Julu's skin forever...

For 4 giving days, I have been catatonic Julu ... and it has taken you just 1.183 minutes turning Jennifer ... and it has taken you, just ...

my-skin-for-you...:yes, my beautiful flower:belonging:skin: Would belonging mind you partying, my-skin-for-you..., with us? Your contrary pale is in my protruding eyelid Ah, womb eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed

But I have walked through the forest and the shadow. And I have known that, verily, shadows have shadows themselves, thinned, drawn like absent lamina around the coloration of the earth turned dark. And I have seen the arches of proper names collapsed, redundant upon the moist ground, tender. And I have known the earth, inchoate, slowly brought to its knees of roots and flowers, toes of branches and leaves, mouths like tendrils, tendrils

But I have shadowed myself, dark eyes narrowed by kohl, henna zagged across forehead and cheek, eyeglass silvered slivered with fine lines portending the reach of light unto me. For I have looked with open mouth, waiting for the descent of angels. For the earth rings like a great chime, dust and sand, red desert earth moving into platelets of mysterious patterns whispering your name. For Jennifer-and-Julu-for- saken are but names picked from a pretty penny, drawn from a rabbit, placed on a hat. For I say unto you, the skull is a universe, the brain an especial resonance, your eyes suns and moons, branches and toes. For the machine cools, disks spinning to a halt, fan already stilled in the nighttime sky

And for but I am a webbed creature, turned to pure light

↑ Index

354. R. Gancie
SoKalled
Thu 16 Oct 1997

Tom: Sorry, but a couple of things that have been nagging at me. Weinberg should listen to himself---"Two cheers for reductionism!" does not comport with his statement concerning sciences "one to one correspondence with reality." Apropo Sokal. None of us geniuses has mentioned that Hubert Dreyfus pulled a Sokal on the A.I. community in the early eighties and the A.I. community didn't like it. Trace the history of that situation with the current debacle and you can see the role that economic and political clout makes in these confrontations. Finally, Joe, Tom, anyone. I don't want to make too much of the 'Metaphor' metaphor. But systems of quantification and formalization are in a sense metaphorical. They illuminate by addressing a limited part of an ontology. Technologies are created from numerical metaphors that approximate the actual conditions they address. Reductionism is only the most obvious condition and result of this process. Also, the historical mutability of technology and theory alike, though most often given a positivist/progressive slant through advertising phrases such as technological change, mask the fact that this mutability is fundamentally unpredictable except in some closed systems (and this includes advances in chaos theory---see Penrose or myself). Unpredictability is the consequence of the discretions and reductions necessary to imagine Weinberg's "one to one correspondence" and to produce technologies. Technologies are the historically fundamental reasons for having these imaginings. The mutability of science itself is fundamentally unpredictable because of the contingent necessity of its own imposed limitations of discretions and reductions. This is the way all metaphor operates. The mutability of science is fundamental not its alleged progressiveness. Poets know more about metaphor and other attendant aesthetic criteria than anybody else. In the history of mankind, technologies have always had these negative and banal consequences. Its just now because of huge technological demands by unprecedented populations spurred on by the greed of a few people who are wealthy beyond obscenity, that the inherently negative attributes of systems of quantification/formalization/mathematization/scientific methods become globally obvious. That's why attempts to squash even weak, ineffectual criticisms pisses me off.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

355. Steven Marks
Re: Defining / Expression
Thu 16 Oct 1997

Or consider what Ryokan had to say:

Who says my poems are poems?
My poems aren't poems!
Once you get that my poems aren't poems,
then we can start talking about poems.

I love this Mobius strip of a poem.
cheers,
Steven

On Thu, 16 Oct 1997, David R. Israel wrote:

> If you say that poetry [shi] resides in words [yan, expression] > take away the words -- & the meaning [yi, idea] yet remains > if you say that poetry resides in meaning > take away the meaning -- & the poetry still remains
>
> the relationship between
> word / expression [yan]
> meaning / idea [yi]
> and poetry [shi]
> is thus indeed quizzical & elusive, -- if I follow Mr. Yang aright.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

356. Charles Bernstein
Philadelphia / NYC Readings
Thu 16 Oct 1997

I will be reading at
The Temple Gallery
45 North 2nd Street Philadelphia
at 8pm
Thursday, Oct. 23

and at

Here with Melanie Neilson
at 3pm
Saturday, Oct. 25

145 Sixth Avenue (between Spring and Broome)
Manhattan

↑ Index

357. Judy Roitman
Re: Defining / Expression
Thu 16 Oct 1997

> Or consider what Ryokan had to say:
>
> Who says my poems are poems?
> My poems aren't poems!
> Once you get that my poems aren't poems,
> then we can start talking about poems.
>
> I love this Mobius strip of a poem.
> cheers,
> Steven

"Tao called Tao is not Tao" (Addis/Lombardo translation of Tao Te Ching, but done from memory so the "is" may be extra).

(Near-)contradiction as rhetorical ploy.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

358. Judy Roitman
Re: SoKalled
Thu 16 Oct 1997

> In the history of mankind, technologies have always had these negative and banal consequences.

Fire. Weaving. Pottery. Writing.

We're human so whatever we do has negative and banal consequences, but surely there are technologies (see above) that have also had other sorts of consequences.

> the inherently negative > attributes of systems of > quantification/formalization/mathematization/scientific methods become > globally obvious.
>
> Carlo Parcelli

We're human so all of our systems have inherently negative attributes, especially when taken out of the realm where they work. To take a very overworked example, I hope we would not rely on close literary analysis as our main methodology when building a bridge.

Back when I was in high school people made much of C.P. Snow's two culture stuff. There are a lot more than two cultures --- hell, there must be hundreds of cultures within what is commonly lumped together as "science" -- and there's no point dissing any of them.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

359. Harold Rhenisch

Re: Defining / Expression

Thu 16 Oct 1997

Tom,

I agree. Let's leave the Colonialist White Male in lab coat and pith helmet to expressions of his malaria.

As for "exploration", I don't share your confidence in the term. If it needs explanation and elaboration, it's probably not the right term.

You wrote
If the writing is the exploration, then the writing occurs "within" that which is explored.

Sure. Still, I have a nagging doubt that "exploration" suggests that "to explore an emotion" in writing requires a pre-existing emotion which can yield treasures if we move into its space and start describing its characteristics, and that these characteristics exist before the exploration. It misses the sense that the world, or the perception of it, is being remade. It misses the sense that an emotion is not an emotion until we name it; before that act of naming it appears as the world.

Then again, maybe it is "emotion" that is the limiting factor in this equation. If the poetry does not start from the boundaries set by "emotion" and "exploration", then should the criticism necessarily?

Harold

↑ Index

360. Ira Lightman
Announcement of a gig
Thu 16 Oct 1997

Just to say that my band, "Come Flying" - acoustic-folk-pop, chords out of Stravinsky, lyrics out of experimental poetry, are playing:

12 Bar Club
Denmark St
off Charing Cross Road (opp. Foyles)
London

Sunday, Oct 19th, 10pm

Reduced entry with flyer (phone me - too late for e-mail - on 01603 616708) and I'll mail one or give it to you in person on the night

All welcome

Ira Lightman

↑ Index

361. Jordan Davis
Poetry City Fall 1997 Schedule print this up and keep it
Thu 16 Oct 1997

POETRY CITY Fall 1997 schedule
Fall 1997 Schedule 5 Union Square West NYC
5 Union Square West NYC Thursdays at 7
Thursdays at 7 except 10/16 at 6:30 free free poetry food and wine hosted by Anna Malmude hosted by Anna Malmude and Jordan Davis

10/16* 6:30
David Shapiro
Anne Porter

10/23
R. Zamora Linmark
Jorge Clar

10/30
Alan Sondheim
David Bromige

11/13
Andrea Brady
Jennifer Moxley

11/20
Barbara Henning

12/4
John Kinsella
Keston Sutherland

12/11
Mark Statman
Michael Morse

12/18
Edwin Torres
Baron Ashanti

---

print this up and keep it in your notebook

↑ Index

362. Jordan Davis
Rod Smith / Edwin Torres @ Poetry Project pt 1
Thu 16 Oct 1997

Rod Smith and Edwin Torres read to a 50+ crowd at the Poetry Project at St. Marks Church-in-the-Bouwerie last night.

Lisa Jarnot introduced Smith, citing his playful intelligence, and comparing him to the two poetic figures of the century most dear to her, Robert Duncan and Allen Ginsberg. Jarnot mentioned Duncan and Smith's autodidact-status, and noted that Ginsberg and Smith shared an indefatigable urge to archive and to make opportunities for other poets.

Smith began his reading with a work by Heather Fuller, an author published by his Aerial/Edge Press, "because," he said, "it defeats the heebie jeebies and because I like it." He then dedicated the reading to his son, Joshua, who was killed in a car crash earlier this year.

It would be a mistake to refer to Rod Smith's work as "high discontinuity"--the overwhelming parataxis of it all has something to do with Barrett Watten's _Progress_, and the underlying agenda seems to be something like Charles Bernstein's hope to "[return] us to our senses", but there are significant differences between Smith's work and that of his predecessors. (Would that I could delineate those differences! Ask Kevin Davies, he could tell you.) I'm going to have to jump _arenas_ to find a working artist with similar acuity, namely Stephen Malkmus of Pavement. "Camera-ready, my ass!"

Smith read poems from his books _The Boy Poems_ (Buck Downs Books), _In Memory of My Theories_ (O Books), _A Grammar Manikin_ (Object magazine special number), _Protective Immediacy_ (Potes & Poets), and _The Lack, love poems, targets, flags_ (Abacus magazine). He closed with his terrific poem, "Nothing at all Jerry G."

Eleni Sikelianos introduced Edwin Torres by means of an itinerary -- to travel from Tristram Shandy to Khlebnikov via the Himalayas, was one route.

↑ Index

363. Ted Berrigan things to do in cranston
Thu 16 Oct 1997

---

now that I've got your attention finally:

Susan Grant & Peter Johnson read
Thurs. November 13, 7:30 pm
Hall Public Library, 1825 Broad St, Cranston
(call [redacted] for directions)

Susan Grant edits THE NEWPORT REVIEW. Peter Johnson edits PROSE POEM; his new book PRETTY HAPPY! will be available at the reading, with other stuff.

Free.
sponsored by The Poetry Mission.
Henry Gould will be there to offer a play-by-play reduction, if he's not in Minneapolis looking for dead poems to resuscitate. [grrrrr]
- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

364. Loss Glazier
EPC Enhancements
Thu 16 Oct 1997

----- New at the EPC ---------- Recent new developments at the EPC include a Carolyn Bergvall page and recently renovated Hannah Weiner pages. If you have any reviews or related documents you'd like to contribute for these authors, please let me know. Coming soon: the "metalist" of EPC links, soon to be available from "Connects" and other locations within the EPC. Thanks!

↑ Index

365. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Other readings
Thu 16 Oct 1997

On Tuesday, October 21, at 7:30 pm, CD Wright and Paul Hoover will be reading in the Grolier Series, Cambridge MA, intro. by Caroline Knox.

↑ Index

366. Susan Schultz
Re: Tinfish chapbook by Kathy Banggo
Thu 16 Oct 1997

Dear all--Tinfish Network is proud to announce the publication of _4-evaz, Anna_, by Kathy Dee Kaleokealoha Kaloloahilani Banggo, a poet who lives in Wahiawa, on O'ahu, Hawai'i. The chapbook is $4 each, or $3 with a subscription to _Tinfish_ ($13 for three issues). Please write checks to Susan Schultz, 47-391 Hui Iwa Street, #3, Kaneohe, HI 96744.

"How Fo Smoke Like One B-Bat Room Bebe" pack em firs, den open da wrappa. no foget fo take out one turn em ovah, butt up.

az da one fo good luck.
az da one fo make one wish.
save em fo las.

fo make rings
drop your jaws
an open your mout like you stay sucking allahs
o sumtin.
snap em out slow

das how dy do in Koolau.

fo make harts
do da same ting like
I j'wen tell you.
but put your index fingah da tip
in front your uppa lip
so your fingah nail
hang down small kine.

if somebody ask fo drag, make shuah
you tell em no lip em
bumbye come back wet.
if dey weah da kine planny make-up da kine cholo lipstick
no need den.

fo see if da boy you like like you too, when pau puff one turn em upside down
an squeeze da butt.
see da initial?
if match his firs name
get chance. if no mo
try light up two mo times.

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

367. Thomas Bell
Re: Defining / Expression
Thu 16 Oct 1997

At 06:02 PM 10/16/97 +1300, Tom Beard wrote:

> tom bell wrote:
>
> Your comments started me thinking of the therapeutic parallels (for better or > the reasons why I've chosen poetry rather than linear, denotative prose. I've found that giving a name to an experience ("Oh, that was betrayal/anger/joy/desire/whatever") tends to nail down what had been a nebulous set of impressions, solidify that which had been fluid. From then on, when I think back to the original events, all I get is a memory of my memories, or the narrative that I had constructed out of them. Subsequent experience cannot help to reform the experiences, since they have already been petrified by denotation.
>
> Some of my friends have accused me, when I use deliberate ambiguity in a poem, of toying with words for their own sake, but it is my way of remaining honest. Not only does it make the poem (I hope) a more open experience for the reader, but also for myself. When readers can find something in my poems that I hadn't noticed myself, I am delighted and intrigued, not only because it means that the field of meanings is expanding beyond my intentions, but also because it can send me back to a re-consideration of my self and the events in my life. Sometimes this has been an enlightening experience; sometimes chastening.
>
> Tom Beard.

I suspect you are onto something here as this describes resolution in therapy as opposed to perpetuation of a problem. In therapy also it seems to be related to the _way_ the experience is processed. I'm not sure that denotation and ambiguity are adequate to descrobe it, but they are leads along the way.

thanks. tom bell

↑ Index

368. dbkk
Luisa Futoransky, Sarah Menefee--ASAP at SPT
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Small Press Traffic presents

Luisa Futoransky
Sarah Menefee

Friday, October 17, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Luisa Futoransky, currently Regents Lecturer at UC Berkeley, lives now in Paris, where she works for the Pompidou Center. Futoransky was born in Buenos Aires in 1939. As a young woman, she left the study of law to study instead with Borges, and became an active member of the literary circle organized around the Argentine magazine _Sur_. With the dictatorship in 1976, she left her native land for the National Music Academy of Japan, and then to Radio Beijing. Then on to Paris, Berkeley, and eventually, of course, Small Press Traffic. Her work is vivid, humorous, informed by her thinking on exile, translation, and the visual arts and music. This will be a bilingual (Spanish and English) reading to launch Futoransky¹s new book of selected poems, _The Duration of the Voyage_ (Junction Press).

I¹ve been a fan of Sarah Menefee¹s work since she was a student at New College, back in the ancient Duncan days. Since then she has taken her place as one of the _living treasures of San Francisco_, and now Italy, where her poems have been translated, published and disseminated, like petals in the Tuscan wind. ³all the organs that supported it have liquefied/ to know it is so without knowing what it is/ has entered the pupa with its golden nails.² Her careful, moving work dissolves the barrier between lyric gesture and political action. Sarah Menefee, poet and homeless activist, is the author of _I¹m Not Thousandfurs_ (Curbstone Press), _The Blood About the Heart_ (Curbstone Press), and the new _The Reamed Heart (Deliriodendron Press).

↑ Index

369. George Bowering
Re: tundra
Fri 17 Oct 1997

> as a former house pet of george bowering, i appreciate your fine sense of discretion. what bowering is omitting, of course, are his own predilections for the more untamed species that dwell on the great tundras and wildernesses. hence his deep attraction to canada.

Yeah? Well I know a US poet who grew up in Chicago, told me years ago he had a try-out with the Chicago Cubs. Didnt make the team, eh? I asked. He said he made half the infield.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

370. George Bowering
Re: Poetry City
Fri 17 Oct 1997

I'll be reading Saturday night in Fort Saint John. If you're in the area, drop in. On Sunday I am going to get a helicopter ride. I will express myself on Sunday.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

371. david bromige
the great tundras of canada
Fri 17 Oct 1997

When I was staying with the Bowerings (it was that, or 265 hours of community service), they served up some great tundras! We'd have tundra with fried egg in the mornings (c. noon-two), tundra casserole for lunch (c.6-7), and steak-&-tundra pie for dinner (c. midnite). We'd wash the pie down with huge mugs of Tundra Ale, after which the master of the house would mount several more wildlife heads in the draughty hallways of Bowering Manor, while I read his book of geography & cooking, _The Gift of Tundra_ ,until I fell asleep in the arms of Morpheus, George's highly challenged cousin & bodyguard &, despite Bowering's slurs, my sole sexual indulgence during my time there. Then the whole thing would start all over again next morning, with George demanding that I return his nail-clipper. It was during this time I wrote _my_ book, _Habits & How to Get Used to Them_ . There are 265 references to "Tundra" in the index. D(e)b(bie).

↑ Index

372. Miekal And Break out the snack tray
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Miekal delurking for a moment:

I'll be presenting a workshop on hypermedia/computer poetry at the University of Minnesota next week (courtesy of the lovely Maria Damon) & it just so happens that I'll have an internet link & a computer projector. So if there are any sites out there that exemplify the unpredictable spirit of experimentation & cyberfunkiness, drop me a url backchannel & I'll check them out for possible inclusion in my scene cruise at next week's workshop.

Miekal

who wonders if david b is becoming alan s

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

373. david bromige
more eating, sleeping, & timing
Fri 17 Oct 1997

No 92, "Vulnerable Bundles"

I no

I can't write this poem. Too disturbed.

If you think "Sane", the behavior is very bizarre. If you think "Insane", this person is maintaining.

I can't evoke many-colored lotuses & elephant-men when I'm being worried like a rat by a whippet.I don't like ANY of this stuff getting into the work. It comes in, I let it enter, but I don 't have to like it that it does or I do., To me the poem is refuge from the personal life. This day is like the floodplain between here and the next, bigger, thoroughly ruinous town.....littered with puddles & rural blight, the chevvies on cinder blocks, the tire-piles, dirty gray light, yellow in it, the houses with bits falling off them & the people to a dis-ordered mind likewise. The era is like that. The whole fucken future could be that way.

It's that kind of a day.

On the refrigerator I long since pinned a news item concerning the burying of Carrie Derryberry. Her husband's name was Gerry. What sort of people could they have been, one wonders, growing up -- him, leastwise -- with names that insistently try to eradicate diagreement. I've had it with disagreement. Fuck disagreement.

Jesus, it's a relief not to be writing a poem.! It's a high but it knocks the stuffing outa ya.

That woman who put her hand on my back at the soup-cafe in Prince George -- she liked me and me likewise her. But that's easy to remember unspoiled since we exchanged no further words or gestures. What is a paragraph?

Like a shy model in the Life class, most occasions tremble at the glimpse they have of them selves as inadequate, standing there naked with naked feet & pubic hair & nipples lifting & all.
And shoulderknobs & clavicles & ribcage & knees -- Magnificent! I severely dislike this prose.
Why go on, or do anything? It's time for Letterman. I watch & pretend he's Bob Grenier hosting a late nite talk show that uses only poets & that his first guest is going to be Lyn Hejinian -- on comes Lyn in short, tight skirt, tan cleavage, & shoes to die for, says the sitter. Bob hugs her, kisses her hand. She has a great smile! The bandleader is Paul -- Paul deBarros. Most engaging on camera, intense & handsome, those dark blue eyes, big Portuguese smile, forearms like bowling pins. Barry Gifford's next. He & Bob joke about having the same initials, pretending to lower the level to Letterman.
Larry Eigner wheels into camera range & he & Bob joke about having ana-grams for names, "for eight years on the same mailbox" says Bob. Then it's my turn. I recall the twilight when I drove up & parked & got out & saw what I thought was likely Larry, working out on the porch rail. How as I got close to him I said "Larry I thought that was you" & how he responded "Oh yeah so did I'" Pan to audience: they love it. Then again, they all look like me, Terence Dactyl, or my doppelganger, Professor Quincy Quatrain. I recline, pray for sleep & nonetheless eventually sleep comes.

In my sleep, I am indefatigible. I dream nonstop for six hours. Then I wake up & it's prose. Bowls of it for breakfast, prose sandwich with peanut butter for lunch, eaten in the car en route to some errand I can't recall, so it certainly will be of no interest to the future. But on the way home I scribble something that looks like "I was only lying for your convenience/ You flushed my tongue down the toilet/ The first time I saw you I thought 'one of us is at a loss for words'".

Bumper-sticker : VISUALIZE USING YOUR TURN SIGNALS. I've always been something of a social activisit. That's why I write in pedestrian prose. Few people know that 'accessible' is my middle name. Now you are one of those few. It might be on the test! Spell it? -Can't even pronounce it! It's in the Platonic Dictionary. One free with any five zines of your choice. I used to do this from door to door. Then one day, one of them opened. It was the Door to Poetry. And this side of me went to sleep.

↑ Index

374. Harold Rhenisch

Problems with western tradition

Fri 17 Oct 1997

Not knowing anything about unjamming hydraulic quick couplers, Descartes could write, ³I think, therefore I am.² He was a clever guy, but he wasn¹t a twentieth century man: he was in the middle point of our lives on the earth. If he lived today, he¹d have to write: ³I am, therefore I am.², or ³I am, therefore I am bewildered.², and then, in keeping with the spirit of his inspiration, ³I am bewildered, therefore am I.², and after crossing that out, ³Am I bewildered? I am. Therefore....² Scratch. Scratch. ³Am I bewildered? I am.² Scratch. ³I am bewildered. Am I?² Damn, go get a drink.

↑ Index

375. Bob Grumman
A Comprepoetica Progress Report
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Comprepoetica has now gotten close to a hundred visits since I announced it here last Sunday. I continue working on it and just now got the biographical section viewable, if not very spiffy. Seven entries so far.

IMPORTANT NOTE FOR THOSE WHO HAVE FILLED OUT SURVEY FORMS: Please go to the subsite at Comprepoetica containing biographical entries and check the entry on yourself for errors, omissions and egregious stylistic blunders. Let me know of them and I'll fix them. I've basically just thrown the data out there but hope to improve. Check your poems, too-- they are linked to the biographical entries.

You can find the biographical entries by going to the Table of Contents, newly operational.

Comprepoetica is still located at http:/www/geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Not enough votes in for favorite poets and poems to bother counting yet.

WARNING TO THOSE WHO HAVEN'T FILL OUT FORMS YET: I plan to start letting Bromige and Bowering fill them out for you soon!

↑ Index

376. david bromige
how do i leave the List?
Fri 17 Oct 1997

I keep this info on my InBox and my InBox was recently destroyed & rebuilt. Anyone? Thanks, DB

↑ Index

377. mark weiss
Re: how do i leave the List?
Fri 17 Oct 1997

You are not allowed to leave the list until you answer three questions:

1.

At 01:27 PM 10/17/97 -0700, you wrote:
>I keep this info on my InBox and my InBox was recently destroyed & rebuilt.
>Anyone? Thanks, DB
>
>

↑ Index

378. Burt Kimmelman
Talisman Reading/Party
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Ed Foster has asked me to pass on to you the following invitation.

And I quote:

Weird, wild, wonderful, and ABSOLUTELY TERRIFIC!!!

Come and hear:

Charles Borkhius
Michael Heller
Lisa Jarnot
Sean Killian
Eileen Myles
Leonard Schwartz
Chris Stroffolino

Zinc Bar
90 West Houston Street
New York City
6:15-8:15 PM
Sunday, October 26th

Celebrating Talisman #17 (the Eileen Myles issue), now at your newsstand, and the publication soon of _An Anthology of New (American) Poets_.

A Benefit reading for Talisman. All proceeds go to keep us out of debtor's prison. No joke. Please come.

↑ Index

379. david bromige
Th-th-th-anks f-f-f-folks!
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Thanbks for such prompt responses...please noone else trouble yourself, now I know.

Off for 3 weeks, & I'm going to miss you. Retirement sounds great, but I was wanting the debates with students & colleagues....& peers, since so many poets I hung out with, left the Bay Area in recent years. This List is great & a big thanks to Charles et co. And all of you, really, scold me or stroke me, the engagement is such a boon, I love listening to your interventions & (dis) agreements. Never did I expect it to be this much fun, or I'd have signed on years earlier.

But as for you, George Bowering, you'd better say a few things behind my back to keep my memory alive.

David

↑ Index

380. Safdie Joseph
Re: Dorn/Raworth Reading
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Pat -- just saw Tom last night in Seattle, fresh from DU and your review. Was it the same gig with the music box and the breathless delivery? Fastest mouth in the west! But great, nonetheless. I realized I hadn't seen him in about ten years, so it was good to catch up. Glad to hear that Peter's still laughing through readings -- some things never change! Give him my regards if you ever hang out with him.

Glad to hear also that Ed impressed you as strong, though gaunt. Actual news I'm afraid not so good. Can send you copies of the works you mentioned if you want.

Always good to hear your perceptions -- though I think Jordan Davis has taken over as the poetry reviewer par excellence! At least this week . . .

Best,

Joe

> ----------
> From: Pritchett,Pat > @Silverplume[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Thursday, October 16, 1997 3:24 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Dorn/Raworth Reading
>
> Several of us Boulderites overcame our customary aversion for Denver and > environs and made the trip down to DU last night to hear Ed Dorn and Tom > Raworth read. The Dupont Room of the august Mary Reed Bldg is tricked out, > as Ed put it, in "Gothic fakery." It's also painted a horrible puke green > color, but enough about that.
>
> Ed, who's been "battling" pancreatic cancer as many of you know, was > looking, I thought, pretty damned good - quite gaunt - he'd evidently lost > some weight - but he was clear, in good humor, and read with real panache > excerpts from two long poems: "Lost Dog Variorum," and another about "the > Cheyenne axis," (title escapes me - I didn't make notes), and several shorter pieces.

>
> A ruddy-faced Tom Raworth followed Ed. Tom read a few poems from his new > Roof edition of Selected Poems, _Clean & Well-Lit_, and from a long, > unfinished work titled "Meadow," which was something of a tour de force, > even for Tom. My only complaint was that he didn't read long enough.
>
> Present in the audience: Cole Swensen, who emceed the evening, Jack Collom, > Rachel Levitsky, Peter Michelson (who seemed to laugh throughout most of > Ed's reading), Lindsay Hill, Michael Friedman, Anne Waldman, Tom Peters, > Bin Ramke, and Mark Irwin, whom I succeeded in ignoring/avoiding all night > and it was a very small room, too.
>
> Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

381. Jordan Davis

R Smith / E Torris @ Poetry Project Pt 2

Fri 17 Oct 1997

Edwin Torres read second. By comparison with his reading last year at the Ear Inn, the work he read Wednesday night had less to do with the Khlebnikov in him than with Tristram Shandy or the Himalayas. Mentioning that he had been described in a magazine article as "resolutely anti-drug", he corrected the magazine and launched into a poem entitled "Auntie Drug."

It is a truism that performers coming out of the Nuyorican scene perform with their voices -- that they're 'spoken word artists.' OK, it's not a truism, it's a categorization. Torres has no truck with the category, though. It would not be out of the range of reference of a large circulation publication to characterize his performance as borrowing from sprechstimme and vaudeville (or the Muppet Show, anyway).

Torres' next publication is a cd from Kill Rock Stars, the alternative label that carries the work of Bikini Kill and Sleater-Kinney. Torres will be reading at Poetry City on December 18.

Wednesday's reading, the second in Lisa Jarnot and Eleni Sikelianos's series at the Church, was attended by the following writers: Barrett Watten, Jackson Mac Low, Bruce Andrews, Sally Silvers, Fiona Templeton, Rob Fitterman, Tim Davis, Issa Clubb, Bennett Simpson, Merry Fortune, Liz Castagna, David Cameron, Anselm Berrigan, Kim Rosenfield, Larry Fagin, Dug Rothschild, Lewis Warsh, Leonard Schwartz, Kevin Davies, Deirdre Kovac, Marcella Durand, Greg Masters, Elinor Nauen, Ed Friedman, and others.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

382. Aviva Vogel
Re: Talisman Reading/Party
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Speaking of Talisman, I live near Dartmouth College, and a 3-story, 15-room bookstore...but it doesn't carry Talisman!!! I don't know where to find the journal, and have no address to subscribe. Can someone steer me to this great journal? Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

383. henry gould
gehry
Fri 17 Oct 1997

Frank Gehry's museum in Bilboa opens today, I think.

"I guess i was interested in the unfinished - or the quality that you find in paintings by Jackson Pollock, for instance, of de Kooning, or Cezanne, that look like the paint was just applied. The very finished, polished, every-detai l-perfect kind of architecture seemed to me not to have this quality. I wanted to try that out in a building. The obvious way to go about it was the unfinished wall studs. We all like the buildings in construction better than we do finished - I think most of us agree on that. The structure is alway s so much more poetic than the finished thing." (1980)

there's that word again.

"Gehry designs with a sharp, double-edged scalpel that penetrates and splits op en, slices and separates, probes and carves its way to the heart of spatial phenomena..." - Germano Celant

Blind mouths! That scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learned aught else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs!
What recks it them? What need they? They are sped;
And when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But swoln with wind and the rank mist they draw,
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said;
But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more.
- Milton, _Lycidas_

the most prophetic work yet written in the U.S. of A. is not Leaves of Grass, Moby Dick, poems of E.D., Emerson, Thoreau, Pound, Stein, Zukofsky, O'Hara, Eliot, any of the writers attending readings, etc...

It's _The Wizard of Oz_.- Henry Gould

↑ Index

384. George Bowering

Re: the great toe

Sat 18 Oct 1997

Well, a lot of what Bromide said is true, at least in his manner. But I did not ask for my clippers back. After watching him use them on his famous toes, I never wanted to touch those clippers again.

Word has it that he still has them, and that among other things he does with them, he revises poems--his own and others. A lot of Creeley's poems, for example, were once much longer, and expressed lots of feelings and so on. Bromide is responsible, it is said, for the clipped nature of a typical Creeley poem.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

385. Maria Damon
Re: Break out the snack tray
Sat 18 Oct 1997

miekal and other twin citians, tomorrow night a party at mark nowak's and carolyn erler's house. call [redacted] for details. m, hope to see you there and to get you together w/ cris cheek et al. hi everyone, the conference is fun...more later...md

At 10:15 AM +0100 10/17/97, Miekal And wrote:
>Miekal delurking for a moment:
>
>I'll be presenting a workshop on hypermedia/computer poetry at the >University of Minnesota next week (courtesy of the lovely Maria Damon) &
>it just so happens that I'll have an internet link & a computer >projector. So if there are any sites out there that exemplify the >unpredictable spirit of experimentation & cyberfunkiness, drop me a url
>backchannel & I'll check them out for possible inclusion in my scene >cruise at next week's workshop.
>
>Miekal
>
>who wonders if david b is becoming alan s
>
>
>--
>@#
>Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
>QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
>http://net22.com/qazingulaza
>e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

386. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
New at the EPC
Sat 18 Oct 1997

----- New at the EPC ---------- Newly up is CRAYON the new Jackson Mac Low fetschrift page, available from the EPC main page:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

387. Miekal And Re: Break out the snack tray
Sat 18 Oct 1997

Miekal And wrote:
>
> Miekal delurking for a moment:
>
> I'll be presenting a workshop on hypermedia/computer poetry at the > University of Minnesota next week (courtesy of the lovely Maria Damon) &
> it just so happens that I'll have an internet link & a computer > projector. So if there are any sites out there that exemplify the > unpredictable spirit of experimentation & cyberfunkiness, drop me a url
> backchannel & I'll check them out for possible inclusion in my scene > cruise at next week's workshop.
>
> Miekal

John Cayley, I lost the url to your site, can you or somabody out there backchannel me with it. thanks to those that have responded, to my query....

mr and

> --
> @#
> Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
> QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
> http://net22.com/qazingulaza
> e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

388. Dan or Orion Dlugonski
(no subject)
Sat 18 Oct 1997

For anyone in the Portland (OR) area--
Here’s an invitation to a night of the finest, energizing poetry in performance.

Thursday, October 23, at the Mark Woolley Gallery (120 NW 9th, 2nd floor)
26 books presents 26 WOMEN.

Leanne Grabel
Flora Durham
margareta waterman
Laura Winter
Leuth Bartells
Rob Blakeslee and dan raphael.

↑ Index

389. Maria Damon

News from xcp

Sun 19 Oct 1997

---

brathwaite last night was amazing, more to follow...

↑ Index

390. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

Talisman Reading/Party - Mag/Press Addresses

Sun 19 Oct 1997

For those of you not familiar with it, the Electronic Poetry Center (EPC) has numerous press and magazine listings under "Mags" and "Presses" at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
This area is of course under continual development and expansion. If your press or magazine is not listed, please send in one of the forms available in the Mags or Presses area. L.

At 10:18 PM 10/17/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Speaking of Talisman, I live near Dartmouth College, and a 3-story, 15-room >bookstore...but it doesn't carry Talisman!!! I don't know where to find the >journal, and have no address to subscribe. Can someone steer me to this >great journal? Thanks, Aviva
>
>

↑ Index

391. robert drake
Re: Break out the snack tray
Sun 19 Oct 1997

> Miekal And wrote:
>
> I'll be presenting a workshop on hypermedia/computer poetry at the University of Minnesota next week (courtesy of the lovely Maria Damon) & it just so happens that I'll have an internet link & a computer projector. So if there are any sites out there that exemplify the unpredictable spirit of experimentation & cyberfunkiness, drop me a url backchannel & I'll check them out for possible inclusion in my scene cruise at next week's workshop.

m--

just to make sure:

http://www.ims.csuohio.edu/VA/VAintro.html -->CybpherAnthology of Discontiguous Literatures

http://www.ims.csuohio.edu/gallery.html -->Machine Made of Words online gallery

http://www.ims.csuohio.edu/wreyeting/index.html -->WrEyeTings Scratchpad intermedia laboratory

& more in the cooker...

asever luigi

↑ Index

392. Douglas Barbour
Re: more eating, sleeping, & timing
Sun 19 Oct 1997

Too bad Bromige is gone, as I just wanted to say that this one did the job. Oh, and did i laugh too...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]

H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

cut my teeth on it). You do indeed have hundreds of scientific cultures AND all involved with "fungible-universal changeability." So 'scuse me if I lump them together. I find that American scientists and mathematicians often have the attitude that Hegel implies of European mathematicians in his quote. Maybe World War I kicked some of those delusions out of them. And maybe the Manhattan project pumped up the American scientific community. Or maybe its unfair to put such weight on single (though complex) historical events when complexity indeed "holds so much information." But I do find American scientists bewildered and ignorant about the fundamental and long standing nature of this argument. They inevtiably see it as a challenge to their authority. This is what Sokal and Gross and Levitt are all about. It is why Weinberg can embarrass himself by dismissing Heisenberg on philosophical points that Weinberg clearly has no knowledge of. I don't think its too much to ask that the scientific community accord these arguments the consideration they deserve, especially with the advent of so many world summits on global ecology that will rely on "quantitative methodolgies" for their solutions because all other alternatives have been discredited and dismantled or will be unless they serve the interests of international capital.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

394. R. Gancie
Sokalled: Typo or Parapraxis-you decide
Sun 19 Oct 1997

Judy. Second instance of "universal interchangeability" should read like that and not 'universal changeability.'---C.P.

↑ Index

395. Tosh
:ReMap
Sun 19 Oct 1997

I have just received this post, and it may be of interest to the people on this list:

REMAP
RE: subscriptions

RE: "on emore barricade"

REMAP needs to continue to ask fopr subscriptions in the hope that we will continue to be able to publish.

10$ per two editions

#6 The Politic
Spencer Selby
Norma Cole
Ray Di Palma
Laura Morriarity
Arron Shurin
Noah De Lissovoy
Martin Nakell

---

printed completed without politically based funds as such

Edited by Carolyn Kemp & Todd Baron

since 1990

Make checks payable to Todd Baron

2860 exposition blvd
Apt A
Santa Monica Ca 90404

---

thank-you

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

396. Susan Wheeler
Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Oct 1997 to 16 Oct 1997
Sun 19 Oct 1997

>Date: Thu, 16 Oct 1997 13:51:04 EDT
>From: Ted Berrigan <[redacted]>
>Subject: things to do in cranston
>

>Susan Grant edits THE NEWPORT REVIEW. Peter Johnson edits PROSE POEM; >his new book PRETTY HAPPY! will be available at the reading, with other >stuff.
>
Peter Johnson's poem "Pretty Happy!" is an all-time favorite here. Enjoy, Cranstonites!
>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

397. DIGEST Anselm Hollo
Re: AHOE by AH
Sun 19 Oct 1997

Announcing the publication (to whom it may be of interest)
of:

AHOE / AND HOW ON EARTH. A book of poems by Anselm Hollo

from Smokeproof Press (Brad O'Sullivan), Erie, Colorado

with a frontispiece drawing by Jane Dalrymple-Hollo

ISBN 0-9658877-0-7

60 pp / $8.95

"Hollo's poetry, with its huge field of reference, is one possible model for the future. It doesn't list what it knows and consists of: the references are built in. That is, it isn't itself a computerized conglomerate, doesn't spout facts as possession, but it's equal to all that. It could probably handle the future." -- Alice Notley, "Hollo's Corvus," Sulfur 40.

Available from:

SPD
1341 Seventh Street
Berkeley CA 94710-1403
[redacted]

↑ Index

398. mark weiss
(no subject)
Sun 19 Oct 1997

I hate to weigh in where I'm clearly not knowledgeable, and I know I'm asking to be the focus of a turd-fight (remember that thread?), but here, as they say, goes nothing. I read the Weinberg piece when it came out. Whether or not there are misstatements/misunderstandings in it, his main point seemed to be that you're far more likely to be hit by an apple if you sleep under the tree than if you fly over it (although it's fun to imagine how the latter could happen), regardless of what belief systems you carry with you, and that some theorists in the humanities and social sciences seemed to him to be saying otherwise.

Why is this an issue for us? It's an issue for us when some of my best students, senior writing majors at an elite university, tell me that they have been taught to deny the constancy of any fact, any reality. Perhaps they have misunderstood their teachers for four years, but that could indicate that there's something wrong with the teaching. We don't need naive relativists any more than we need naive positivists.

It may also be an issue for some of us that Sokal managed to get his piece published in the heart of what he defined as the enemy's camp merely by slinging some jargon.

> Judy. I thought "pottery, weaving etc." distinction was implied in my original message. "In history of mankind etc." was simply to serve as general distinction between what we define and impose as technology on other times, other cultures and other languages and the way that we claim that we actually practice science and technology now which I think Adorno and Horkheimer, among hundreds, capture in their Dialectic of Enlightenment. Illuminating some of the the differences, they point out that now, "Representation is exchanged for the fungible---universal interchangeability ." This ain't no occult and hermetic insight. I wrote a poem in which I quoted hundreds of instances in which the conditions fostered by systems of mathematization and quantification beginning with the conflation of Late Renaissance and Enlightenment science and the Age of Discovery are discussed for their historical uniqueness yet universal imperatives as well as their inherent limitations. The quotes come from physicists, mathematicians, philosophers, poets, economists, biologists, book store owners, the homeless, the checker at the Safeway, auto mechanics, retire CIA analysts etc. etc. In other words it is fundamental to our dialectic and people come at it from all sides of the argument. Hegel, among many, many others, often puts his two cents (sense) in: "The evidence peculiar to this defective way of knowing-an evidence on the strength of which mathematics plumes itself and proudly struts before philosophy-rests solely on the poverty of its purpose and the defectiveness of its material, and is on that account of a kind that > philosophy must scorn to have anything to do with. Its purpose or principle is quantity. This is precisely the relationship that is non-essential, alien to the character of the notion. The process of knowledge goes on, therefore, on the surface, does not effect the concrete fact itself, does not touch its inner nature or notion, and hence is not a conceptual way of comprehending."(Baillie's Trans. in some ways not good but I cut my teeth on it).

> You do indeed have hundreds of scientific cultures AND all involved with "fungible-universal changeability." So 'scuse me if I lump them together. I find that American scientists and mathematicians often have the attitude that Hegel implies of European mathematicians in his quote. Maybe World War I kicked some of those delusions out of them. And maybe the Manhattan project pumped up the American scientific community. Or maybe its unfair to put such weight on single (though complex) historical events when complexity indeed "holds so much information." But I do find American scientists bewildered and ignorant about the fundamental and long standing nature of this argument. They inevtiably see it as a challenge to their authority. This is what Sokal and Gross and Levitt are all about. It is why Weinberg can embarrass himself by dismissing Heisenberg on philosophical points that Weinberg clearly has no knowledge of. I don't think its too much to ask that the scientific community accord these arguments the consideration they deserve, especially with the advent of so many world summits on global ecology that will rely on "quantitative methodolgies" for their solutions because all other alternatives have been discredited and dismantled or will be unless they serve the interests of international capital.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

399. Rachel Levitsky
Flow Chart
Sun 19 Oct 1997

Hey there--

Thanks to the Toms for the disc about where writing comes from.

Query:

Any suggestions for critical essay or creative response to Ashbery's _Flow Chart_?

Backchannel if you know of anything. Please, thank you.
Rachel

↑ Index

400. Alan chown Sondheim

--+-

Sun 19 Oct 1997

--+-

No. 110 -- The Vanishing Glass of Whiskey

Startling! Astounding! Is what our customers say when they see us vanish a whiskey glass filled with liquid. Yes! that is what happens. Imagine the fun at a gathering. Your friend is about to take a drink. You tap her on the shoulder and ask her if she would like to see a trick. She would. That's fine. All you do is take the glass of liquid and place it on your left hand, place right hand over glass. PRESS . . . and it vanishes. The apparatus is small and convenient to carry around. $1.50

No. 213 -- Squirting Jennifer

A million dollars worth of fun for a buck! The face on this Jennifer just ain't polite at all. When the "victim" looks at it closely the face squirts a good healthy stream of water right smack in the spectator's eye. Easily filled and has a large capacity. Price $1.50

No. 1529 -- The Julu without a Middle

A startling illusion of extraordinary proportions. This has been used with great success in many illusion shows. A feature presentation of the Travis show.

A lovely girl assistant is fastened securely to the inside of a cabinet shaped for a human figure. There are individual doors for the head, legs, and body so that any part or all of the body can be shown.

Enormous metal plates like guillotine blades are pushed entirely through the cabinet from side to side. One at the neck position, another at the waist. The doors are opened and although the legs and head remain the same, upon opening the center doors both front and rear, the entire center of the assistant's body has vanished! Magician can be seen through the cabinet from the rear! There are no mirrors used! The doors are closed and reopened. The assistant upon being released steps out unharmed! This is terrific. No stage traps, glass or dummy legs used. Do it even in the living room.

Workshop plans $5.00

No. 1531 -- The Elastic Stretching Jennifer Illusion

The very latest in illusions. An idea imported from Europe where it has been creating a sensation whatever shown.

The audience sees a beautifully decorated screen resting on a very thin platform.

The front doors are opened to allow the audience to see the entire interior.

The front section is shown to contain four sections in which an assistant can be locked. These sections can be moved at oblique and vertical angles by pull cords from the sides.

Magicians assistant enters the cabinet and her head, hands, and feet are locked in the movable stock sections where they remain visible at all times. Slowly the magician draws the sections apart by means of the pull cords, causing the girl's head, hands and feet to assume absolutely im- possible positions. The hands and feet are drawn five or six FEET away from the body. A mind baffling effect that leaves the audience with no explanation. A truly wonderful illusion.

Workshop Plans $5.00

No. 1540 -- The Artist's Dream Model

Magician fastens a sheet of paper to a large picture frame which is then placed on an easel at center stage. He quickly paints a sketch of a girl and then breaking through the paper at various points he produces a variety of articles such as silks, pigeons, rabbits or even a large duck. Then the entire piece of paper is ripped asunder and a beautiful girl steps out of the frame, an artist's (magician's) dream come to life. Unusual and wonderfully different this illusion will find instant favor with you and your audiences.

Workshop Plans $2.00

↑ Index

401. Thomas Bell

hear we go again

Sun 19 Oct 1997

Have been reading Lake's The Shape of Poetry (http://home.earthlink.net/~arthur505/lake1.html)
and I can't resist raising the old form vs. free issue, mischievious me that I am. i think his argument misses the point but I could be wrong.
tom bell

↑ Index

402. henry gould
(no subject)
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Responding also to Carlo Parcelli's remarks: I thought the Sokal flap- debate was not about science's ability or inability to represent truth or reality. No one will argue with you if you say that the tools & procedures of science are imperfect & subject to change.

I thought the argument was not about the philosophy of science, but about underlying philosophical principles which allow science to take place or not.

Sokal et al. were basically saying that science requires a fundamentally "realist" approach, i.e., there is some kind of apprehendible reality out there beyond our formulations about it. He accused his opponents of imposing their own nominalist or relativist concepts on a thereby distorted characterization of science & the history of science.

Carlo P. seems to be taking a different tack - simply defending the relativist approach & accusing (American) scientists of blind positivism.

What interested me in the previous incarnation of this mud-slanging on the list were the implications of a "realist" grounding, as opposed to a postmodern/deconstructive approach, to current poetry experiments. The theories of the pragmatists, American scientist-philosophers like Peirce, seem far more complex on the issue of truth and reality than the straw-scientists Carlo is attacking. And what ARE the implications for writing, if, as Mark Weiss, says, lit students are being trained to regard words as disconnected from any testable truth? If they exist in their own magic realm of self-constructed or zeitgeist-formed or capital-generated chaos flow? Poetry must reside someplace in the middle... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

403. Douglas Barbour
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

At one point in his essay, Lake argues thus:

Thirty years have passed since Ammons published "Corson's Inlet," and in that time, discoveries in science and mathematics have shed new light on the problems discussed in his poem--discoveries with immense significance for our understanding of form and content, nature and art, organic and mechanical form. In retrospect, Ammons' use of the phrase "not chaos" in his description of the swallows' behavior is startlingly prescient because, in fact, a whole new science of chaos--or "anti-chaos," as it's sometimes called--has come into being precisely to explain such phenomena. Surprisingly, though, what the new sciences of chaos and complexity have shown is that Ammons is wrong in his conclusions about art and nature: that the "rule" of nature is not the sum of "rulelessness," as he proposes, but is clearly derived from formal rules and principles, which can be described and even imitated by a new form of mathematics called fractal geometry. Thanks to these new discoveries, we now know that the "order tight with shape" he observes in a tiny snail shell is the same order seen in "the large view": in coastlines, weather systems, sand dunes, mountain ranges, and galaxies. That the laws governing the growth of trees--as well as of leaves, ferns, pine cones, and sunflowers--is the same law that governs the growth of human organs, snowflakes, tornadoes, bird wings--and, I will argue, the elegant, broken symmetries of formal verse.

It turns out that writing formal poetry is not at all like pouring water into a vase, but, rather, like the growth of a tree--far more so than writing free verse, which, except in special cases, is too ruleless, arbitrary, and mechanical to produce the organic integrity of a good sonnet.

So: I'd agree with Tom Bell that he may be missing the point. Not that he isnt raising an intriguing 'defence' of trad forms, but that he seems to be insisting that there isnt any form in 'open form'. Perhaps it just takes longer to perceive it? Perhaps he cant 'see' the formal qualities of, well, here, say, Ammons's verse? Why does he have to dismiss open form in order to salvage conventional forms? And why can he not recognize any of the ways by which what Perloff calls 'radical artifice' is achieved? And why this insistence that what is for him 'the other side' is 'too ruleless, arbitrary, and mechanical to produce the organic integrity of a good sonnet'? O, why?

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]

~~~
~~~

Rashomon by saxophone.
Michael Ondaatje

↑ Index

404. David Kellogg
Review of XCP
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Back last night from the XCP conference, and thought I'd give my response. First thing to note is that I was sick the first night (migraine) and generally depressed, lonely, and irritable until after I gave my paper on Saturday. Thanks to Maria (my audience), Martin Spinelli (other audience member, tho late), and my co-panelist Rod Hernandez, who gave a stirring talk on the Poco-Che Literary & Publishing Collective, which was a total revelation.

I originally wrote this starting with the high points, but then it ended on a depressing note. So now I start with the bad news.

LOW POINTS:

the controversy that wouldn't die, i.e., translation, for the continued life of which I primarily blame Dennis Tedlock, who probably is a nice guy but who could not seem to let this go, and who (inadvertently?) took the opportunity of a question on disproportionate power relations to use his own prominent place at the conference to humiliate a graduate student,

the roundtable on Ethnopoetics: What's the Use?, bravely but futilely chaired by maria damon: It's hard to tell which was worse: Maurice Kenny's "I am not a scholar" mantra, Dennis Tedlock's continued magnification of an initial misunderstanding, or Barbara Tedlock's gushing enthusiasm over new forms of ethnographic writing that seemed never to wonder EVEN FOR A MOMENT whether there might not be some kind of loss in the transition to such forms. It's too bad, because this roundtable began with a great moment, i.e., Juliana Chang SINGING a Tupac Shakur song. Her presence at this roundtable, and that of Maria -- I don't envy her role! -- brought welcome relief to an otherwise depressing and demoralizing event, the final low point, for me, was all the conversations that didn't take place, especially between cult-studies people and poetry folks with primarily aesthetic allegiances. I plead guilty in this regard; how much more productive the conference could have been if we had taken more personal risks.

HIGH POINTS:

Brathwaite reading, long, but not as long as I'd heard he could be, still mezmerizing for me who've never seen him before (a little bird told me he did the same performance not long previous),

Schwerner reading (with flutes a plenty),

the intensely cheery chris cheek (who brought me out of my funk even when I thought he was david antin),

David Antin,

panel with Aldon Nielson on "Can Cultural Studies Speak Poetry," Sw. Anand Prahlad on new genres, and Hilton Obenzinger and his fortune cookies on writing history, maria d. (of course!) enthusing about my co-panelist rod's book collection -- she's like a kid, isn't she?,

Ira Livingston calling Lacan "a sort of Berryman with a bungee"

the herd of (suny) buffalo and their tales of how they made the pilgramage to snowy upstate new york, julie suk's paper on negritude, difficult to believe she's in her first year of grad school,

U Sam Oeur's poems from the killing fields, chantings that broke your heart (though I found the translations weak), joe amato, his alter-ego jodi (last name I forget) & joe's wife kass, who put up with my bad-mouthing Duke through an entire lunch (after joe & I sung the praises of one on this list), the care & concern of Alan Golding, Aldon Nielson, Susan Wheeler, maria d., chris cheek, and others who seemed to recognize my funk, or if they did not, alleviated it by their presence and conversation anyway. Thanks to all of you.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

405. LAURA MORIARTY
non and hypernon
Mon 20 Oct 1997

More emptiness:

Michael McElligott, Standard Schaefer, Louis Cabri and Jean Day

at http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty.htm

↑ Index

406. Miekal And Re: Review of XCP
Mon 20 Oct 1997

David Kellogg wrote:
>
> Back last night from the XCP conference, and thought I'd give my response.

> the intensely cheery chris cheek (who brought me out of my funk > even when I thought he was david antin),

what exactly did chris do?

miekal

↑ Index

407. Mark Prejsnar
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

On Mon, 20 Oct 1997, Douglas Barbour wrote:

> So: I'd agree with Tom Bell that he may be missing the point. Not that he > isnt raising an intriguing 'defence' of trad forms, but that he seems to be > insisting that there isnt any form in 'open form'. Perhaps it just takes > longer to perceive it? Perhaps he cant 'see' the formal qualities of, well, > here, say, Ammons's verse? Why does he have to dismiss open form in order > to salvage conventional forms? And why can he not recognize any of the ways > by which what Perloff calls 'radical artifice' is achieved? And why this > insistence that what is for him 'the other side' is 'too ruleless,
> arbitrary, and > mechanical to produce the organic integrity of a good sonnet'? O, why?

There is no possible reason why, that can be defended. Hidden agendas abound. There's basically no way to turn back the clock and convince any but a teeny handful of readers and practitioners, that meter, rhyme and trad forms are obligatory and should dominate poetry. It would be rather like announcing that all countries must return to monarchy and disassemble their republican and electoral states. So nostalgists take on a rather hectic, bullying tone, trying to achieve a formulation that will convince people that old concepts of poetic form are necessary and ineluctable. My favorite appeared in 1983...I remember because I was briefly living in Florida on the way to spending a year in Brazil...It was an essay in Poetry magazine by god-knows-who; two men as I remember, don't recall their names. They had scientific data showing that the neurological set-up of the brain required poetry to be in verse and rhyme...And had a futher "line of argument" (to grant it the dignity of that name...) which demonstrated that fascists and communists (these guys were pretty far right) always wrote "free verse" because these terrible totalitarian ideologies were trying to bend true human nature (which requires meter). Inspired nuttiness....

Mark P.
atlanta

↑ Index

408. Christopher Alexander e'er we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

I agree with Doug (how's that for a bold stance!).
one of the major problems with Lake's article is that it's structured by what I consider a rather pernicious version of the "free" vs "formal" binary, one that takes those words @ face value in alternately assuming that only work in received forms has form, & that all other work exists as a sort of nebulous, unstructured mass of Stuff, or that work in received forms is necessarily rigid & dead, & that only work that is free to "discover"
or devise its own, "organic" form, is worthwhile.
all Lake is really able to do is accept & invert this binary to replace received form as the True Poetry - which seems to happen in part by a slippage in his use of the word "organic", by which he loses track of the metaphoricity of his "chaos theory / received form" comparison.

I'd so like it if we cld get past this. it doesn't seem to get us anything but a familiar see-sawing motion, & it doesn't amount to a very good defense of received form, either. we've had this thread before, & not so long ago as I recall, but, for the sake of argument (& maybe engendering the same kind of repetition I was just disparaging), how can we better understand "form"? I wldn't be the first to say so, but nevertheless I'd like to put forth tentatively that "form" can be understood as the particular complex of visual, sound, temporal, ideolectical, propositional, & ["your name here"]
other elements that comprise the poem - so that "sonnet"
can be one element in the form of a poem, but isn't sufficient to formally define (or casually dismiss) the poem.

my saying this is at least partly to elicit or maintain an openness to un-/familiar forms. but of course what I'm really trying to avoid, & with very limited success, is the form-content binary, on which most of Lake's assumptions, & many of his chosen adversaries', are predicated. no one is "released from form" (Ammons), because meaning arises from the relation of the complex to its context. to paraphrase the big M, poems are made of words & phrases, not propositions. (end paraphrase). in this sense, all poems are referential, but differently so.

or maybe I'm missing the boat here as well. (oops).

best, Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

409. Aldon Nielsen
Minneapolis is socially constructed
Mon 20 Oct 1997

O.K. -- whos's the wise guy who actually told Bromige how to get off the list -- I turn my back for a couple days to hang out with the poetry posse in Minneapolis and come back to find that someone has actually aided and abetted Bromige in escaping with his wit to environs unreachable by my virtual self --

_____
and on that other boy we've been beating -- could somebody PLEASE cite for me ANY place in the writing of any scholar (other than SOKAL himself) where it is claimed that the force we call by the name "gravity" is itself culturally determined, as opposed to possible claims that someone's socio-linguistic/cultural experience of gravity might be culturally inflected -- so far, to judge from what I see on my screen -- we know that Weinberger says somebody said so, and we know that some college students say that somebody said so -- which says a lot to me already --

↑ Index

410. simon
weiner book: segue people
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Dear Segue,

would you contact me please?
(sorry to bother the list with this)

thanks

beth simon
[redacted]

↑ Index

411. mark weiss
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Inspired nuttiness, for sure, but it nonetheless got some play, beyond support from whatever prestige _Poetry_ affords. I think it was Peter Viereck who picked up on this train of thought and went beyond it by claiming that iambic pentameter was "natural" because it mimics the heartbeat. Mine is more of a cha cha cha, but perhaps I have a cardiac problem. Although one wonders about those entire nations, like the French and the Greeks, who have traditionally danced to a different drummer. I've always wondered why writers in traditional forms are called "formalists," as their adherence to the given would seem to betray a lack of interest in form. What's always interested me is the form discoverable, fractal-like, in the apparently formless, however generated. By that criterion, most of us on this list are the true formalists.

My favorite appeared in 1983...I remember because I was >briefly living in Florida on the way to spending a year in Brazil...It was >an essay in Poetry magazine by god-knows-who; two men as I remember, don't >recall their names. They had scientific data showing that the >neurological set-up of the brain required poetry to be in verse and >rhyme...And had a futher "line of argument" (to grant it the dignity of >that name...) which demonstrated that fascists and communists (these guys >were pretty far right) always wrote "free verse" because these terrible >totalitarian ideologies were trying to bend true human nature (which >requires meter). Inspired nuttiness....

>
>Mark P.
>atlanta
>
>

↑ Index

412. Pritchett,Pat
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Mark -

sounds like that scene in "Dead Poets Society" in which Robin Williams parodies such attempts by dissecting a poem using a graph in which X represents meaning and Y the music of the poem or some such nonsense. It struck me at the time as a jibe against the Warren/Brooks anthology - and its imaginary author's last name was Pritchett! Otherwise, though, I hated the film.

What's interesting about the formal prosody vs. open form debate is that the defenders of traditional metrics, as you relate, seem to think that form is in some magical way non-arbitrary, when it's really a case of its having been a convention for so long that it only appears to be natural and somehow "pre-ordained."

Patrick Pritchett

From: Mark Prejsnar
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: hear we go again
Date: Monday, October 20, 1997 4:15PM

  So nostalgists take on a rather hectic, bullying tone, trying to achieve a formulation that will convince people that old concepts of poetic form are necessary and ineluctable. My favorite appeared in 1983... It was an essay in Poetry magazine by god-knows-who; two men as I remember, don't recall their names. They had scientific data showing that the neurological set-up of the brain required poetry to be in verse and rhyme...And had a futher "line of argument" (to grant it the dignity of that name...) which demonstrated that fascists and communists (these guys were pretty far right) always wrote "free verse" because these terrible totalitarian ideologies were trying to bend true human nature (which requires meter). Inspired nuttiness....

Mark P.
atlanta

↑ Index

413. r.drake
Poetrix "reviewed"
Mon 20 Oct 1997

---

selfconcious Poetics List members might be interested in this, in the latest jrnl ov postmodern culture:

http://jefferson.village.Virginia.EDU/pmc/issue.997/review-7.997.html

if nothing else, a reminder of the public nature of our performances here on thee list...

lbd

↑ Index

414. William Burmeister Prod
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

On Oct 20, 1:39pm, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
> Subject: Re: hear we go again
> On Mon, 20 Oct 1997, Douglas Barbour wrote:
>
> >
> > So: I'd agree with Tom Bell that he may be missing the point. Not that he
> > isnt raising an intriguing 'defence' of trad forms, but that he seems to be > > insisting that there isnt any form in 'open form'. Perhaps it just takes > > longer to perceive it? Perhaps he cant 'see' the formal qualities of, well, > > here, say, Ammons's verse? Why does he have to dismiss open form in order > > to salvage conventional forms? And why can he not recognize any of the ways > > by which what Perloff calls 'radical artifice' is achieved? And why this > > insistence that what is for him 'the other side' is 'too ruleless,
> > arbitrary, and > > mechanical to produce the organic integrity of a good sonnet'? O, why?
> >
>

>
> There is no possible reason why, that can be defended. Hidden agendas > abound. There's basically no way to turn back the clock and convince any > but a teeny handful of readers and practitioners, that meter, rhyme and > trad forms are obligatory and should dominate poetry. It would be rather > like announcing that all countries must return to monarchy and > disassemble their republican and electoral states. So nostalgists take on > a rather hectic, bullying tone, trying to achieve a formulation that will > convince people that old concepts of poetic form are necessary and > ineluctable. My favorite appeared in 1983...I remember because I was > briefly living in Florida on the way to spending a year in Brazil...It was > an essay in Poetry magazine by god-knows-who; two men as I remember, don't > recall their names. They had scientific data showing that the > neurological set-up of the brain required poetry to be in verse and > rhyme...And had a futher "line of argument" (to grant it the dignity of > that name...) which demonstrated that fascists and communists (these guys
> were pretty far right) always wrote "free verse" because these terrible > totalitarian ideologies were trying to bend true human nature (which > requires meter). Inspired nuttiness....
>
> Mark P.
> atlanta
>-- End of excerpt from Mark Prejsnar

Hidden agendas do abound indeed and Paul Lake's essay is another, albeit scientifically ambitious and enthusiastic, instance of formalist apologetics. Far be it from me to fault him for his enthusiasm (sincerity assumed), but I reject the implication that a poem of traditional rhyme and meter can literally write itself as if it were an organic process, one of coalescence, attraction, or whatever. This late fad of tying poetic form and content into a scientific/mathematical framework/justification is reminiscent of the Grand Unified Theory, which followed on the heels of all of the quantum theory discoveries earlier this century.

Bill B.

↑ Index

415. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: hear we go again
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>

> On Mon, 20 Oct 1997, Douglas Barbour wrote:
>
> >
> > So: I'd agree with Tom Bell that he may be missing the point. Not that he
> > isnt raising an intriguing 'defence' of trad forms, but that he seems to be > > insisting that there isnt any form in 'open form'. Perhaps it just takes > > longer to perceive it? Perhaps he cant 'see' the formal qualities of, well, > > here, say, Ammons's verse? Why does he have to dismiss open form in order > > to salvage conventional forms? And why can he not recognize any of the ways > > by which what Perloff calls 'radical artifice' is achieved? And why this > > insistence that what is for him 'the other side' is 'too ruleless,
> > arbitrary, and > > mechanical to produce the organic integrity of a good sonnet'? O, why?
> >
>
> There is no possible reason why, that can be defended. Hidden agendas > abound. There's basically no way to turn back the clock and convince any > but a teeny handful of readers and practitioners, that meter, rhyme and > trad forms are obligatory and should dominate poetry. It would be rather > like announcing that all countries must return to monarchy and > disassemble their republican and electoral states. So nostalgists take on > a rather hectic, bullying tone, trying to achieve a formulation that will > convince people that old concepts of poetic form are necessary and > ineluctable. My favorite appeared in 1983...I remember because I was > briefly living in Florida on the way to spending a year in Brazil...It was > an essay in Poetry magazine by god-knows-who; two men as I remember, don't > recall their names. They had scientific data showing that the > neurological set-up of the brain required poetry to be in verse and > rhyme...And had a futher "line of argument" (to grant it the dignity of > that name...) which demonstrated that fascists and communists (these guys
> were pretty far right) always wrote "free verse" because these terrible > totalitarian ideologies were trying to bend true human nature (which > requires meter). Inspired nuttiness....
>
> Mark P.
> atlanta

Mark, if I find the following reference as a link, I'll post it [I looked in my bookmarks, then browsed, but it may have vanished, as much on the net one wanted to cite does]. This genuflection before the altar of formality and its concomitant strawmannerism about the spectre of Bolshevist withering away of the strophe sounds eerily like a Lyndon LaRouche "essay" on the virtues of classical music versus the Protocols of the Youngsters of Metal. Hey: why must form lie belly-up on the surface and catchable-- sans pole, sans net, sans fight? Who'd eat a fish like that? The argument strikes me as a universalization of the "Mozart effect"--i.e., that because Mozart's [admittedly 'formal'] music raises IQ [&, I have little doubt, does much more], all formal music must possess similar virtues, or [LaRouche's point] all music ought to embody formal [i.e., immediately apparent] structures. Yeah, but: Mozart's genius engaged the formal in a special way which other classical composers evidently did not, since only his music appears to have the magical "Mozart effect." Been there, done that. So what about non-traditional exfoliations of form such as those you refer to? [I think here of D'Arcy Thompson's book on Growth & Form]. Mozart ain't Mandelbrot! Form ain't no coattail! Most of us literary types love to discover unanticipated forms and coherences in our reading, so why not in our writing? The exhortation to form for form's sake on a reader's part bespeaks a lassitude of the imagination--or at least a superfluous addiction to the metronome [superfluous because, from what I've observed of most of the proponents of Iambic-Only, they seem a rather sharp & fluent cadre, just the kind of folks one might think, after all those finger exercises, would itch to improvise, to boogie, to wail]. Can't one like both Bach & Rahsaan Roland Kirk, both Mozart and Monk? Can't we all just get along? If Einstein had stuck to Newton as his dancing master, we might not have avoided the Macarena, but forget about the Jitterbug, the Twist, and [lest we forget] the Chicken!

Best,
Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

416. mark weiss
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Mon 20 Oct 1997

Weinberg's article and his subsequent answers to critical letters are too closely-reasoned to bear easy summary, but he does in fact cite quite a few who maintain to one degree or another that the laws of physics are social constructs and as such culturally determined. He also cites a few whose statements seem only comprehensible if viewed as expressions of the above idea but who elsewhere deny that that's what they believe. In most cases the issue may boil down to clarity and carefulness of expression rather than ideology. But that is or ought to be one of our primary concerns as writers teachers and scholars. Weinberg, by the way, in the last two paragraphs of his answers (NYR 10/3/96, p. 56), deconstructs a hilarious compounded example of lack of clarity on the part of Derrida.

> could somebody PLEASE cite for me ANY place in the writing of any scholar (other than SOKAL himself) where it is claimed that the force we call by the name "gravity" is itself culturally determined, as opposed to possible claims that someone's socio-linguistic/cultural experience of gravity might be culturally inflected -- so far, to judge from what I see on my screen -- we know that Weinberger says somebody said so, and we know that some college students say that somebody said so -- which says a lot to me already --

↑ Index

417. Jennifer Ashton math/logic and poetry
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Dear list members,

I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition. Of course texts like Ashbery's _Flow Chart_ come immediately to mind, but I'm sure there are may other obvious choices that I'm just not coming up with. I am especially interested in women writers incorporating mathematical/logical systems into their work. I'll be thankful for all suggestions, obvious and obscure.

Please copy any posts to me via backchannel.

Many thanks in advance,

Jennifer Ashton
Johns Hopkins University
[redacted]

↑ Index

418. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: math/logic and poetry
Tue 21 Oct 1997

---

bpNichol!
bpNichol!
bpNichol! x all that u can read! of bp!

i luv this list; the only time i know what's happening is when th answer is bpNichol!

Mad for Bliss,

carl

> Dear list members,
>
> I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition. Of course texts like Ashbery's _Flow Chart_ come immediately to mind, but I'm sure there are may other obvious choices that I'm just not coming up with. I am especially interested in women writers incorporating mathematical/logical systems into their work. I'll be thankful for all suggestions, obvious and obscure.
>
> Please copy any posts to me via backchannel.
>
> Many thanks in advance,
>
> Jennifer Ashton
> Johns Hopkins University
> [redacted]

↑ Index

419. Stephen Cope
Re: reading tour
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Although likely not part of his tour per se, David Bromige forgot to mention his reading in San Diego on November 5th, to which those within earshot whould either listen or attend...

* Wednesday, November 5: David Bromige

The author of 30 books of poetry, fiction, and song, and likened by Rochelle Owens to "a congenial terrorist equipped with a smart bomb," David Bromige has been the recipient of numerous awards, including a Gertrude Stein Award for Innovative Writing and the Poet Laureate Award from the University of California.

4:30pm at the Performing Arts Space, Visual Arts Department, on the University of California, San Diego.

[redacted] for more info.

> I am now once again able to send messages (my thanks to Layne Russell for posting to the List in my behalf, that my "Send" function was down) and would like to take the opportunity to post the sked of my upcoming tour, Last week when I read in San francisco, Hugh Steinberg came up afterwards

and intro'd himself : I like meeting people who hitherto were just names on the net.

Hamilton Ontario, eve of sunday oct 19 : read with Lisa Robertson in the Live Lit" series run by Kerry Schooley, who has the details at [redacted]

Buffalo, eve of monday oct 20 : read at :"Talking Leaves" books, 7 pm. Details from John Walsh, [redacted].

Toronto, eve of Wednesday, Oct 22 : read at the Arts Bar with Lisa Robertson. Details from "Pierre L'Abbe"< [redacted]> .

Toronto, eve of Sunday, Oct 26 : read at "The Idler", 255 Davenport (just N of Bloor, @ just W of Yonge), 8 pm, with Gregg Orr Robertson & Mark Fitkin. Further details from Peter McFee, [redacted].

SUNY Albany, eve of Wednesday, Oct 29 : reading, the details of which are with Pierre Joris, [redacted] .

NYC,Thursday oct 30, at Teachers & Writers, 5 Union Sq W, curator Jordan Davis ([redacted]) : read with Alan Jennifer Sondheim, 7 pm.

Philadelphia, Friday oct 31, at the Writers House, U Penn, at 4pm: a reading, followed by a panel discussion with Laura Moriarty (who will have read at this location the previous evening). 3805 Locust Walk. Contact persons include Louis Cabri of this List ([redacted]) and Kerry Sherin ([redacted]) .

NYC, Saturday, Nov 1, at CAFE HERE, 145 Sixth Ave, bet. Spring & Broome ([redacted]), curator Liz Fodaski, at 3 pm, with Brian Kim Stefans.

Sunday Nov 2, I fly home to SF.

I hope to meet some of my fellow-listopolitans during these 2 weeks. Overnight accomodations are still soft for two nites in NYC, and a couple of nites in Toronto. I am a past winner (1993) of the James & Debbie Sherry Award for Perfect House-Guest.

I will of necessity unsubscribe from the List before I leave, probably for 3 weeks (after I return to Calif, I go to UC San Diego for a couple of days). My last full day onList will likely be Thursday.

Excuse the shameful self-promotion? Thanks, David

↑ Index

420. Alicia A Cohen
Re: math/logic and poetry
Tue 21 Oct 1997

On Tue, 21 Oct 1997, Jennifer Ashton wrote:

> Dear list members,
>
> I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition.

Reading _Catastrophe Theoretic Semantics:An Elaboration and Application of Rene Thom's Thoery_ one finds the vocabulary turns with singularities and frame structures both used as titles by Susan Howe.

↑ Index

421. henry
Re: hear we go again
Tue 21 Oct 1997

the "formality" issue is so complicated it's better not to scoff at anybody's contribution. (I'm not suggesting anybody HAS scoffed here on this thread.) But the form/free debate - it gets very stuffy & pedantic. Is it because the mechanics of form are generated by more subtle formalities - like the poet's relation to an audience, to an occasion, to a tradition, to a situation, to the psychology of singing anything? Hearing. What is hearing? Who hear who what hey hear here? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

422. Michael Magee
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Tue 21 Oct 1997

On Gravity & Aldon's comments: wasn't the Social Text spoof article by that physics professor an article on the non-existent - which is to say made-up - theory of "quantum gravity"? I believe the professors joke was based on exactly this - forcing gravity itself into the post-Kuhn belief in science-as-social-construction. As I understood it, this professor thought the idea was so stupid and scientifically bogus that ST couldn't possibly accept it, but then....

-Mike.

According to Aldon Nielsen: >
> O.K. -- whos's the wise guy who actually told Bromige how to get off the > list -- I turn my back for a couple days to hang out with the poetry posse > in Minneapolis and come back to find that someone has actually aided and > abetted Bromige in escaping with his wit to environs unreachable by my > virtual self --

>
> _____
> and on that other boy we've been beating --
>
> could somebody PLEASE cite for me ANY place in the writing of any scholar > (other than SOKAL himself) where it is claimed that the force we call by > the name "gravity" is itself culturally determined, as opposed to possible > claims that someone's socio-linguistic/cultural experience of gravity might > be culturally inflected -- so far, to judge from what I see on my screen -- > we know that Weinberger says somebody said so, and we know that some > college students say that somebody said so -- which says a lot to me > already --
>

↑ Index

423. Rachel Loden
Re: math/logic and poetry
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Dear Jennifer Ashton,

Mathematics is the core (and the scaffolding) for Stephanie Strickland's _True North_, print version from Notre Dame, hypertext (soon) from Eastgate Systems.

In selecting _True North_ for the di Castagnola Award, Barbara Guest wrote that Strickland "possesses those virtues of the poet I find most desirable and endurable: imagination, intelligence, and what can only be viewed as a passion for the subject matter; this together with a firm respect for the independent structure of the poem."

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

424. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Aldon, Mark et al.,

I can't point out anything of interest specific to the Sokal thing, but (and here I run the risk of not knowing that someone else might have already pointed out the following, and also the risk of stating the obvious) feminist philosophers of science such as marion namenwirth and evelyn fox keller, to name only two of many, advance the premise that, of course, there is a SOMEONE who evaluates data, and that someone is in part a cultural construct as well as a gender construct; thus two different people will interpret data in different ways. And so we approach the world according to our respective proclivities. Someone who sees the world as a virgin to be exploited and penetrated, who sees the world as "out there," will read data differently then someone who sees the world as a Gaia that is enveloping or whatever.

I'm sure this has been of no help whatsoever.

Burt

↑ Index

425. Henry Gould
Re: now hear this
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Another problem with being a "formalist" is that it's like defending the existence of air or the continuing value of drinking water. But it would be too bad if the noisy defenders of tradition (like that guy Blarnes) turned people off. All Poets (listening, All Poets?) should bow down & do humble obeisance to those jongleurs, troubadours, bards, hymnists, vates, fine ladies & gents all, of times past who invented strict metrics, paranomasia, formal forms, triple-somersault sonnets, ceremonial circumcisional cantonics, and so on. Without them, lads & lassies, we would be nowhere, there would be no art of poesie. you can talk all you want about natural, discovered, hermetic, found, fractal forms - you can also go live in the woods & crawl around on all fours like Nebuchadnezzar & find spirals under mushrooms. but it's hard to dance if your beard's too long. even Ezekiel shaved now & then.

moreover, this "debate" is the usual people talking past each other. Poets have to accept the fact that unless they've tried received forms themselves, then strictly speaking they don't know what they're talking about. And torqueing metal & lifting struts & planning how to stretch the titanium over 1100 wrapped charitable organizations is at least as good exercise for poets as wandering around the tree farm absorbing epiphanies, or doing the dog pound in different voices. You have to discover just how difficult it all is before you discover how easy it is - & then if you're any good you discover how difficult it really is. Besides which, it's all still undiscovered territory. Think what spaces of hearing there are between those poets & readers who really HEAR metrics; and those who really HEAR tone of voice or social idioms & dialects; and those who really HEAR allusions & references & blending of echoes; and those who really are ATTUNED to an overall emotional coloring set to music... & are there really poets who can handle all dis? (Blarnes was in his cups the other day over at the Zinc Bar & muttered something like he was giving away something!... I think he said "rhyme helps" or "gin gulps" or something...)

- Henry gould

↑ Index

426. Douglas Barbour

Re: e'er we go again

Tue 21 Oct 1997

Nah, I'd agree with chris alexander: let's get by the binaries, especially the form/content one. But, even if it's impossible to fully do so, it is worth the try.

Of course we have had this conversation before (even in the time Ive been here), & I quoted yon George Bowering then so wont do it again. But for me, any poem that gets through to me definitely has interesting formal qualities (& [therefore?] says something interesting too). I like what you 'put forth tentatively', Chris, 'that "form" can be understood as the particular complex of visual, sound, temporal, ideolectical, propositional, & ["your name here"] other elements that comprise the poem - so that "sonnet" can be one element in the form of a poem, but isn't sufficient to formally define (or casually dismiss) the poem.'

Hey, that's a start...

Doug

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

427. henry gould
hear we go one more time
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Finding form after the fact is a little like playing tennis with the net down and keeping score by comparing your strokes to a formula based on an ideal tennis match inverted 180 degrees and under-the-ping-pong-tabling some loose turf to the judge. Finding form in process is a little like playing tennis with your hands blindfolded and discovering you can see little squares in a fish-like pattern through the imaginary net. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

428. Joel Kuszai
MONDAY NIGHT POETRY
Tue 21 Oct 1997

MONDAY NIGHT POETRY

(from Bromige, man or urban myth--the Tour 97)

David Bromige read last night to a small but enthusiastic crowd at Buffalo's own Talking Leaves Bookstore. Reading from mostly new work, the reading was highlighted by his reading from the new three-part serial poem--a variously-driven work (driven in the sense of "driver" as in printer driver) as the poem's various mechanical means serve up the gamut--a range which didn't seem to over-bear. A curiously un-vacate.

Afterward he remarked that he hadn't ever written a serial poem. That surprised me. I'd like to read it. I think the three sections were the title of the poem: "initialization" "etc.etc." (three steps of "logging in" although he had modified one of them--I forget the title ex-actly) Some of it was "disjunctive" as he said at the gathering afterward (trying to shout over the big-screen tee-vee blasting the buffalo bill's monday night football game gainst the dreaded colts of indy) as if somehow the disjunctive qualities of contemporary poetry were somehow going to be more to my liking. whippersnapper.

But I don't think it is necessary to assume that a thirty-year old poet is going to automatically "dig" disjunction as a method of poetry behavior. Seems that disjunction used throughout the ages has produced a number of effects--and that disjunctive syntax would be something that would characterize (most generally) what is often thought of as "poetic." That it is marked-off as being a "device" automatically signalls its literariness. The use of devices is what makes works literary and also usually a point of conflict in on-going literary debates. (i.e. the terms of "disjunction" are contested points) And disjunction does not mean a work is untintelligible or asyntactical (which is the most common mistake, I suppose, made about the work of JML). As Mac Hammond wrote in "Poetics Syntax":

When we are dealing with fragmentary syntax, I think we must recall this pertinent observation by Leonard Bloomfield: "a linguistic form, as actually uttered, always contains a grammatical form. No matter how simple a form we take and how we utter it, we have already made some selection by virtue of which the utterance conveys a grammatical meaning in addition to its lexical content" [L. Bloomfield, Language. New York, 1933. p.1689-69] [for full Mac Hammond text, see http://writing.upenn.edu/~kuszai/vortex/4.html]

Bromige's disjunction seemed epiphanic as opposed to administrative. And while I like a lot of administrative verse, it was really great to hear him read. He gave a terrific reading and it was great to meet him afterward. It's too bad that so many people had things to do as it was one of the best readings of the year so far here in Buffalo.

Driving home, after the reading, listening to the Bill's hold tight to their 3pt lead, I noticed that the streets were deserted, everything quiet. It was as if a bomb had nestled itself in the city, smothering like a wall-size lakefront fog rolling in off the dark. Quiet and still, only the blue-flicker of the tube electric in every household to show for the lack of touchdowns produced by a rebuilding offense. I wonder, where have the poetry audiences gone in this town? Why do so many things happen if so few people show? Why? Does everyone hate poetry that much? David was lovely and angelic--it seems that is what has been called for here by the murmuring mob of the quotidian poetix haunts of beefalo. Why no attendee?

I propose a one year moritorium on all readings--all self-congratulatory local productions, all visitors, everything--

↑ Index

429. Jordan Davis what blarnes muttered
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Blarnes muttered the entire preface to paradise lost, henry... I prescribe two seltzers -- great report from beefalo, Joel, but please no moratorium --

Jordan

↑ Index

430. Safdie Joseph
Poets on Prose
Tue 21 Oct 1997

As one of my favorite novelists, Joan Didion, got trashed on the list a few weeks back, I was curious to see if another contemporary I revere highly, Don DeLillo, would share the same fate. I saw him last night at a rare public appearance (in Seattle) and he was fascinating -- talking more like a poet, actually, than a novelist (please . . . I know the standard objections to that division), concentrating on the language being the primal force, antecedent to history, but also opining that "history" (which he called a three-dimensional construct of enormous power) would always be in antagonism with the writer's imagination, and that those different forces were always battling while he composed his works. A lucid, supremely intelligent evening. Anyone else see him, or start Underworld yet?

↑ Index

431. Christopher Alexander
Re: hear we go again
Tue 21 Oct 1997

henry ghould wrts:
> Is it because the mechanics of form are generated by more subtle > formalities - like the poet's relation to an audience, to an occasion, > to a tradition, to a situation, to the psychology of singing anything?
> Hearing. What is hearing? Who hear who what hey hear here?

on that note, I'd like to open up to the list what I was just writing to Aviva, viz., that while--as Wm. Burmeister notes-- Lake's article certainly endeavors to fully naturalize a de-historicized received form with reference to organic processes (that same slippage I mentioned: "by the same law" or some such garbage), I'm intrigued by the idea of form -- any form -- as a "strange attractor" that organizes discourse to itself, though, I'd say, on the basis of localized pressures that have to do with the writing subject (my slightly other version of henry's "poet's relation to..."). form as "found" -- "discovered" in or possibly invented in the grappling with language ("process"). & one doesn't have to accept Lake's ridiculous absolutizing gesture (received form as "archetypal") to see the interest in this. certainly, writing for me, when it's working, occurs a series of incremental discoveries or in(ter)ventions -- I become aware of a tiny recurrence, or note the significance of something in a piece, & then use that awareness as a tool to further the process, & so forth, making or finding tools to modify the work, which then yields further tools with which to modify the work. an inward-turning of sorts, introspection, though not as in our standard use of the term, not synonymous with confessionalism -- an archeology of one or a series of relations to the medium, & the relations it itself carries by virtue of its (my) social situation.

that's form as "found", or, better, as negotiated. but henry's right, there is a virtue, too, to the de-formative quality of received form, just as there is to any restraining procedure. I've never worked in received form -- I wasn't even present at the time, Officer Boundary (that's for Maria) --, but I've used other such devices as a way of dis-placing or distorting the archeology outlined above. & what do you know, they work. not all sonnets, presumably, have to be written for to go a-courting.

best, Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

432. Layne Russell
Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
Tue 21 Oct 1997

The Bruce Cockburn photos I took at the June 1, 1997, Luther Burbank Center concert in Santa Rosa, California, are now up on one of the Bruce Cockburn sites.

If anyone wants to see them (they are very fast-loading jpgs), fly over to:

http://www.page-designs.com/broooce/santa_rosa.htm

On September 5 Bruce was awarded an honorary Doctorate in Music by Berklee School of Music, Boston, MA. You can see a transcription of his heartfelt speech (third entry down the page) at this url:

http://users.aol.com/fxbrusca/dr_bruce.htm

Much of what he says about music goes for writing/poetry and all the arts. Very moving.

"never let anyone convince you that music is an expendable thing - that what you do is not important. Without music there's no culture and without culture life is impossible." -- Bruce Cockburn

Layne

http://www.sonic.net/layne
A Quiet Place

↑ Index

433. Thomas Bell
Re: e'er we go again
Tue 21 Oct 1997

I tend to think that all poetry takes on some form as it grows in my [the] mind. This form might be or become organic or inorganic. Some poetry is written in order to meet requisites (be they good or bad) of given form(s). tom bell

p.s. also posted same message on cap-l and there has been _no_ response.

At 08:15 AM 10/21/97 -0600, Douglas Barbour wrote: >Nah, I'd agree with chris alexander: let's get by the binaries, especially >the form/content one. But, even if it's impossible to fully do so, it is >worth the try.
>
>Of course we have had this conversation before (even in the time Ive been >here), & I quoted yon George Bowering then so wont do it again. But for me, >any poem that gets through to me definitely has interesting formal >qualities (& [therefore?] says something interesting too). I like what you >'put forth tentatively', Chris, 'that "form" can be >understood as the particular complex of visual, sound,
>temporal, ideolectical, propositional, & ["your name here"]
>other elements that comprise the poem - so that "sonnet"
>can be one element in the form of a poem, but isn't sufficient >to formally define (or casually dismiss) the poem.'
>
>Hey, that's a start...
>
>Doug
>
>==========
==========
>Douglas Barbour
>Department of English
>University of Alberta
>Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
>[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
>H: [redacted]
>~~~

~~~~~~~~~
> Nowadays
>I want only the wild and tender
>phrasing of 'Nighthawk,'
>its air groaned out
>like the beath of a lover.
>Rashomon by saxophone.
> Michael Ondaatje
>
>

↑ Index

434. Pritchett,Pat
Re: e'er we go again
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Guy Davenport: "every force evolves a form."

From: Thomas Bell
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: e'er we go again
Date: Tuesday, October 21, 1997 1:50PM

I tend to think that all poetry takes on some form as it grows in my [the] mind. This form might be or become organic or inorganic. Some poetry is written in order to meet requisites (be they good or bad) of given form(s). tom bell

↑ Index

435. Jack Foley
Poets on Prose -Reply
Tue 21 Oct 1997

I've barely started Underworld, out of impatient curiosity; but won't get to read it for another week or two, because of other things I'm reading now. I have read six other DeLillo novels -- Great Jones Street and White Noise are my favorites. But even his less effective books, like Numbers, Running Dog, Libra, and Mao II are well worth reading. A miss by DeLillo is better than many a hit by many another novelist. -- JR Foley

>>> Safdie Joseph <[redacted]> 10/21/97 10:38am >>>
As one of my favorite novelists, Joan Didion, got trashed on the list a few weeks back, I was curious to see if another contemporary I revere highly, Don DeLillo, would share the same fate. I saw him last night at a rare public appearance (in Seattle) and he was fascinating -- talking more like a poet, actually, than a novelist (please . . . I know the standard objections to that division), concentrating on the language being the primal force, antecedent to history, but also opining that "history" (which he called a three-dimensional construct of enormous power) would always be in antagonism with the writer's imagination, and that those different forces were always battling while he composed his works. A lucid, supremely intelligent evening. Anyone else see him, or start Underworld yet?
~~~~~~~~~

↑ Index

436. JDEBROT
Re: ILS 1.8
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Barrett Watten's recent contribution to the Impercipient Lecture Series, "The Bride of the Assembly Line," belies any suggestion that the Language School is monolithic in its ideology or that the provocations it incited in the 70s and 80s have been exhausted. If the critical language for engaging with experimentalist poetry has begun to seem somewhat automatic & routinized, Watten's essay strikes me as an extremely important corrective. In "The Bride . . . " he challenges the, by now too easy, assumption that the material text is politically effective either because 1. the reader is "empowered" by his/her collaboration in making meaning, or 2. in Watten's words, "what writing wants to accomplish as politics is the same as to do it; that to describe literary possibility is to represent a form of agency, in a circular fashion, as a critique of representation." In place of these alternatives Watten proposes a cultural poetics with "a more socially reflexive perspective." Just what this might mean is suggested by George Hartley in his account of Watten's pivotal essay "Total Syntax," where Watten calls for a focused "attention to both the internal, formal, temporal construction of a work and its external, contextual, spatial dimension" The two, as Watten sees it, are coextensive. Therefore the work's external frames ("aesthetic value systems, economic constraints, and ideological structures") mediate, but may also be affected by, its internal syntax. It is through the writer's exploitation of this "total syntax" that is, for Watten, key to the work's eventual political efficacy; what in Watten's book Progress is said to be "a form compelling events."

Possibly someone else might want to elaborate on this to a greater extent -- or more articulately -- than I have done here. In any case, I found it somewhat intriguing that Watten cites both Duchamp's "allegories" & Benjamin's arcades project as working towards "releasing the social forces held in check by the norm." That there can also be a nonstandard norm is another of the essay's crucial insights. Watten writes: "Norms are products, not deductive schema of oppressive rationality, although they can be used for oppressive ends. Nonstandard norms are also produced; they are not simply defined against the abstraction of normativity. The work of the language School, if produced within a system of social feedback necessary for meaning and comprehension, may in turn end up producing itself as a new norm. If this were to happen, a nonstandard mode of expression might simply be inserted into the space of a vacated norm of the expressive lyric."

The history of Language writing is being written and contested today. Watten's essay provides an intriguing perspective on this history. But wherever one's sympathies lie, I think it's an extremely good sign that Watten & Bernstein, the West & East Coast Language Schools, etc. disagree on matters of crucial importance. Perhaps the issues raised in ILS 1.8 or, contrastingly, by Bernstein -- as for example, in "Poetics of the Americas," Modernism?Modernity 3.3 (1996) -- can be taken up & debated on this List.

↑ Index

437. Carolyn Guertin
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
Tue 21 Oct 1997

> I've barely started Underworld, out of impatient curiosity; but won't get to read > it for another week or two, because of other things I'm reading now. I have read six other DeLillo novels -- Great Jones Street and White Noise are my favorites. But even his less effective books, like Numbers, Running Dog, Libra, and Mao II are well worth reading. A miss by DeLillo is better than many a hit by many another novelist.
> -- JR Foley

What??? No mention of The Names and its fascination with language!?

Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
Website: http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm
"Memory is a capricious seamstress." -- Virginia Woolf

↑ Index

438. Herb Levy
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Is Numbers a typo for the Names or for Ratner's Star?, either of which I like better than Great Jones Street. But hey, what do I know.

I'm about 2/3 through Underworld, which I do like, but I'm continually reminded of Joseph McElroy's Women & Men, which I (so far) like better.

Joe makes me wish I'd had time to go to hear DeLillo, but this was the wrong week for me, oh well.

> I've barely started Underworld, out of impatient curiosity; but won't get to read
> it for another week or two, because of other things I'm reading now. I have read six other DeLillo novels -- Great Jones Street and White Noise are my favorites. But even his less effective books, like Numbers, Running Dog, Libra, and Mao II are well worth reading. A miss by DeLillo is better than many a hit by many another novelist.
> -- JR Foley
>
> Safdie Joseph <[redacted]> 10/21/97 10:38am >>>
> As one of my favorite novelists, Joan Didion, got trashed on the list a few weeks back, I was curious to see if another contemporary I revere highly, Don DeLillo, would share the same fate. I saw him last night at a rare public appearance (in Seattle) and he was fascinating -- talking more like a poet, actually, than a novelist (please . . . I know the standard objections to that division), concentrating on the language being the primal force, antecedent to history, but also opining that "history" (which he called a three-dimensional construct of enormous power) would always be in antagonism with the writer's imagination, and that those different forces were always battling while he composed his works. A lucid, supremely intelligent evening. Anyone else see him, or start Underworld yet?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

439. George Thompson
Re: Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
Tue 21 Oct 1997

Off-topic? I don't know.

I found myself, earlier today, talking about poetry with one of my lit classes [we're racing through a sequence on English Romantic poets, after dealing with Voltaire, Swift, Rousseau, and Truffaut's "L'enfant sauvage"].

I asked them "Do you read poetry, do you write poetry, what is poetry?" You know, the typical questions, before pouncing on Blake, the lamb and the tyger, heaven & hell, and all those angels, and so forth.

They were all very lethargic, it was early in the morning, and in the absence of a response, I unpremeditatedly took off in pursuit of poetry for them. I found myself saying that poetry was language as it approaches the state, the exquisite condition, of becoming music. I drew out of them, painfully slowly, the recognition that they all had that it was all a matter of rhythm and repetition, the building up of expectations, and the exploitation of expectations. The virtues of rhyme and the exhilaration that we find in varying it, doing unexpected things to it, so that ultimately everything in the poem, right down to the least syllable, steered us to the one true thing: the poem's message.

I don't know. I got excited. They got excited. I think it was one of those moments why I like teaching. We all seemed for a moment to see it [or so it seemed, at least].

It was just a momentary high.

Somebody a few weeks ago referred to those momentary deities that used to be a regular part of the general landscape. What were they called? In German they they call them "Sondergoetter." I don't know the English name for them. Well, I guess 'momentary deities' is what they were.

George Thompson

> The Bruce Cockburn photos I took at the June 1, 1997, Luther Burbank Center concert in Santa Rosa, California, are now up on one of the Bruce Cockburn sites.
>
> If anyone wants to see them (they are very fast-loading jpgs), fly over to:
>
> http://www.page-designs.com/broooce/santa_rosa.htm
>
> On September 5 Bruce was awarded an honorary Doctorate in Music by Berklee School of Music, Boston, MA. You can see a transcription of his heartfelt speech (third entry down the page) at this url:
>
> http://users.aol.com/fxbrusca/dr_bruce.htm
>
> Much of what he says about music goes for writing/poetry and all the arts. Very moving.
>
> "never let anyone convince you that music is an expendable thing - that what you do is not important. Without music there's no culture and without culture life is impossible." -- Bruce Cockburn
>
> Layne

> http://www.sonic.net/layne
> A Quiet Place

↑ Index

440. Mark Baker
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
Tue 21 Oct 1997

> What??? No mention of The Names and its fascination with language!?>

In The Names, Paul Lake appears among the "zealots of the alphabet," the worshippers of natural form and deniers of the arbitrariness of signs. They match the initials of a person's name with the initials of a place name. Then they naturally kill the person. Once belittled as lunatic, this practice has now been shown to fit the latest discoveries of ananarchic non-chaos physics.

But, in the epilogue, a Language poet appears, and convinces us of the unrelation between the Parthenon and our syntax. The form moves us deeply, though we have no feelings to be moved.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

441. mark weiss
Re: Slightly-Off-Topic/Bruce Cockburn
Wed 22 Oct 1997

In the standard translation of Cassirer they're rendered as "momentary gods."

> Somebody a few weeks ago referred to those momentary deities that used to be a regular part of the general landscape. What were they called? In German they they call them "Sondergoetter." I don't know the English name for them. Well, I guess 'momentary deities' is what they were.

↑ Index

442. lee ann brown
NYC Poetry happenings
Wed 22 Oct 1997

---

happenings at Segue Performance Space
303 E. 8th St between Aves B & C

Sunday, October 26 8:30pm reading for Explosive Magazine hosted by Katy Lederer with:

    Brett Evans
    Elinor Nauen
    Anselm Berigan
    Lee Ann Brown
    and more...

Tuesday, November 4 th 7:30pm

readings by:
    George Albon
    Shelley F. Marlow
    Caroline Bergvall

Tuesday, November 18th 8:00pm

Cinemaki: Lives of the Poets movies by Larry Fagin
    Lee Ann Brown
    Nick Dorsky

Sunday, November 23rd 8:00pm

films and poetry by Euphrosyne Bloom

↑ Index

443. lee ann brown

Lee Ann Brown reading at Bard College

Wed 22 Oct 1997

Lee Ann Brown reads her poetry at Bard College Thursday October 23, 6:00pm

Olin 120
Bard College
Annandale-on-Hudson, New York

↑ Index

444. Aviva Vogel
Re: math/logic and poetry
Wed 22 Oct 1997

I, too, would be interested in hearing of poets using mathematics/logic as a schematic in their work. Very very interested. Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

445. mark weiss
(no subject)
Wed 22 Oct 1997

"here is a virtue, too, to the de-formative quality of received form"
"not all sonnets, presumably, have to be written for to go a-courting."

Of course, it's possible to try to subvert a form, but the form is in itself anything but "de-formative." The sonnet, for example, which I tried to subvert for about seven years of apprenticeship, is not just a love poem in any casual pattern of 14 rhymed lines. It contains within itself a logical constraint: an if/then pattern (in Shakespeare an if/if/if/then pattern). A variant on the syllogism. This is true whether one looks at Donne, or Keats, or Wordsworth, or Spencer or Milton. I have nothing against syllogisms, I just don't find them particularly useful for me as a mode of inquiry. Put another way, for me to write a sonnet I'd have to experience life and language as governed by an apparent logic. The logic, the coherence, would be a given. In the secular world in which I live whatever logic may be available takes a bit more exploration to discover.

At 10:50 AM 10/21/97 MST7MDT, you wrote:
>henry ghould wrts:
>> Is it because the mechanics of form are generated by more subtle >> formalities - like the poet's relation to an audience, to an occasion,
>> to a tradition, to a situation, to the psychology of singing anything?
>> Hearing. What is hearing? Who hear who what hey hear here?
>
>on that note, I'd like to open up to the list what I was just >writing to Aviva, viz., that while--as Wm. Burmeister notes-- >Lake's article certainly endeavors to fully naturalize a >de-historicized received form with reference to organic >processes (that same slippage I mentioned: "by the same >law" or some such garbage), I'm intrigued by the idea of form -- >any form -- as a "strange attractor" that organizes discourse >to itself, though, I'd say, on the basis of localized pressures >that have to do with the writing subject (my slightly other >version of henry's "poet's relation to..."). form as "found" -- >"discovered" in or possibly invented in the grappling with >language ("process"). & one doesn't have to accept Lake's >ridiculous absolutizing gesture (received form as "archetypal") >to see the interest in this. certainly, writing for me, when it's >working, occurs a series of incremental discoveries or >in(ter)ventions -- I become aware of a tiny recurrence, or >note the significance of something in a piece, & then use >that awareness as a tool to further the process, & so forth, >making or finding tools to modify the work, which then yields >further tools with which to modify the work. an inward-turning >of sorts, introspection, though not as in our standard use of the >term, not synonymous with confessionalism -- an archeology >of one or a series of relations to the medium, & the relations it >itself carries by virtue of its (my) social situation.

>
>that's form as "found", or, better, as negotiated. but henry's >right, there is a virtue, too, to the de-formative quality of >received form, just as there is to any restraining procedure.
>I've never worked in received form -- I wasn't even present at >the time, Officer Boundary (that's for Maria) --, but I've used >other such devices as a way of dis-placing or distorting the >archeology outlined above. & what do you know, they work.
>not all sonnets, presumably, have to be written for to go a-courting.
>
>best, Chris
>
>..
>Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective
>
>email: [redacted]
>snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
>press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/
>
>

↑ Index

446. mark weiss
(no subject)
Wed 22 Oct 1997

I know this is a side issue, but I really would like to be enlightened on this point. I have always assumed that Mozart was good for me, but not that he made me smarter. Who says this? Do they also say (and on what basis), as you seem to imply, that Haydn or Beethoven offer less of an IQ boost? My guess is that the answer might be a hoot.

The argument
>strikes me as a universalization of the "Mozart effect"--i.e., that >because Mozart's [admittedly 'formal'] music raises IQ [&, I have little >doubt, does much more], all formal music must possess similar virtues, >or [LaRouche's point] all music ought to embody formal [i.e., >immediately apparent] structures. Yeah, but: Mozart's genius engaged the >formal in a special way which other classical composers evidently did >not, since only his music appears to have the magical "Mozart effect."
>

↑ Index

447. Sylvester Pollet
Elvis poems
Wed 22 Oct 1997

A good friend of mine, just back from a Utopian Conference in Memphis & a visit to Graceland, asked me whether I knew of any good poems about Elvis. I said I'd ask. Any suggestions? Thanks, Sylvester

↑ Index

448. Rachel Loden
Re: Elvis poems
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> A good friend of mine, just back from a Utopian Conference in Memphis & a > visit to Graceland, asked me whether I knew of any good poems about Elvis.
> I said I'd ask. Any suggestions? Thanks, Sylvester

Sylvester, I don't know whether you'll think this is good, or even a poem . . .

DCEASE

There are two Elvis Presleys in the Social Security Death Master File (DCEASE). The King's social security number is 409-52-2002. His death benefits zip code is 38116, aka Memphis, TN (so little Lisa Marie won't be forced to sell matchsticks on Elvis Presley Boulevard in that city, or marry Michael Jackson for anything but Love). EP #1 was born 1/8/35 and died 8/00/77. No matter how many mourners come to Graceland on August 16, the Social Security Death Master File will remain benignly ignorant and democratic. It will always record that EP #1 died on the 00 day of the month, just like everybody else.

Just like his namesake, Elvis Presley #2. Who was this guy? We can confabulate something of his mother's state of mind from his date of birth, 10/24/57, after EP #1 left for Hollywood but before he went into the army. Other than that all we know is that 425-11-0453 died 4/00/87, not quite thirty, in Nettleton, MS. No death benefits zip code is listed. Ten years after EP #1 was buried, EP #2 apparently died without heirs.

I am stumbling around in the electronic graveyard for another reason, actually. I am looking for a missing uncle, my grandfather's first son from a marriage he wished forgotten. The only picture I have of him is photocopied from a book in the Newberry Library in Chicago. I have the same book at home, but the page with my uncle's photograph is torn out, missing.

I can't find him, though, under any of his six possible names. I do kick over another stone, and immediately wish I hadn't: the very daft and ravishing Christina Montemora, born 12/12/48, died 11/00/87, zip code of last residence 12401. Somehow I did know that I would find you, obvious Ophelia of my derelict years, though still hoping that this search would bring up NO DOCUMENTS. Your name, the few clues you leave behind, float like a reproach in the amber-colored letters on the black screen.

--Rachel Loden
first published in _New American Writing_ 13

↑ Index

449. Daniel Zimmerman
(no subject)
Wed 22 Oct 1997

---

mark weiss wrote:
>
> I know this is a side issue, but I really would like to be enlightened on > this point. I have always assumed that Mozart was good for me, but not that > he made me smarter. Who says this? Do they also say (and on what basis), as > you seem to imply, that Haydn or Beethoven offer less of an IQ boost? My > guess is that the answer might be a hoot.

>
> The argument
> >strikes me as a universalization of the "Mozart effect"--i.e., that > >because Mozart's [admittedly 'formal'] music raises IQ [&, I have little > >doubt, does much more], all formal music must possess similar virtues,
> >or [LaRouche's point] all music ought to embody formal [i.e., > >immediately apparent] structures. Yeah, but: Mozart's genius engaged the > >formal in a special way which other classical composers evidently did > >not, since only his music appears to have the magical "Mozart effect."
> >
Mark,

Don G. Campbell just published a book about this on Oct. 1: _The Mozart Effect: Tapping ther Power of Music to Heal the Body, Strengthen the Mind, and Unlock the Creative Spirit_. Avon. ISBN: 0380974185, 352pp. [OK: the subtitle makes me queasy, but look at the publisher]

I haven't read it yet, but have heard Campbell interviewed a few times [as well as others on the same matter]. An experiment with rats, for example, who listened to Mozart showed they learned to run a maze several times faster if they listened to Mozart , whereas those who listened to Heavy Metal took several times longer to learn. Does this surprise anyone?

I suspect the experimental psychologists have already done a chunk of work on this for Campbell to use [he also wrote some other books on music, evidently also for a mass audience], and that we can find much of that work easily on the net. These days, though, I just don't have the time.

Hope that helps.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

450. Michael Magee

Re: Elvis poems

Wed 22 Oct 1997

Ok, you asked for it. Here's one that I wrote about a year ago. Whether its good, or about Elvis, is anyone's guess. I'm using asterisks to indicate italicized sections:

HE CATCHES A TRAIN AND RIDE

down Glenwood exhausted and ornery rowhouses run in place alongside a junkyard that could and couldn't be a misplaced MOMA exhibit.
a billbaord says

*The Virgin Mary Speaks
To America.* true. she sings
"Ain't Nothin but a Houndog" over & over.

it is really, really stupid of her.
in Clambake Elvis plays a misfit trying to get the girl away from - who? - Chad Everett? or Tad something?

anyway, things culminate in a clambake
and Elvis croons a song called "Clambake"

not heard in these parts since breakfast or much earlier.
as they run, the rowhouses shout out what could be a dissonant, splintered version of "John Henry" over samples of

The Average White Band,
Grand Funk Railroad, & Sinatra's "Lady is a Tramp." echoes of Blue Hawaii undetectable.
clambakes?

for god's sake, Mary,
we're knee-deep in junk here. if you're on a train, passing the yard heading north eventually you'll get to a lake.

lake rhymes with bake, but I don't have to tell you that. ain't nothin but a houndog

-Mike.

According
to Sylvester Pollet:
>

> A good friend of mine, just back from a Utopian Conference in Memphis & a > visit to Graceland, asked me whether I knew of any good poems about Elvis.
> I said I'd ask. Any suggestions? Thanks, Sylvester
>

↑ Index

451. robert drake
Re: math/logic and poetry
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Bob Grumman is apparently reluctant to toot his own sackbut, but i'll suggest for him that you check out his Mathemaku, one ov which (w/ comments) is up at his website:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492/expla1.html

(altho, actually, i don't think its the best one...)

lbd

> Dear list members,
>
> I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition. Of course texts like Ashbery's _Flow Chart_ come immediately to mind, but I'm sure there are may other obvious choices that I'm just not coming up with. I am especially interested in women writers incorporating mathematical/logical systems into their work. I'll be thankful for all suggestions, obvious and obscure.
>
> Please copy any posts to me via backchannel.
>
> Many thanks in advance,
>
> Jennifer Ashton
> Johns Hopkins University
> [redacted]

↑ Index

452. Diederik Wolsak
Re: non and hypernon
Wed 22 Oct 1997

LAURA MORIARTY wrote:
>
> More emptiness:
>

> Michael McElligott, Standard Schaefer, Louis Cabri and Jean Day
>
> at http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty.htm

Dear Laura,

Tried in vain to receive "more emptiness". Computer claims "not found, doesnt exist on this server, outdated, inaccurate". Any snags from where you sit? Thoroughly enjoyed the first set. Thank you!

Best,
Melissa Wolsak

↑ Index

453. rob wilson
if UK/US poesy had a wide circulation
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Punning on EP's gloomy modernist thought-- "the thought of what America would be like if the classics had a wide circulation"-- we might update this to read: the thought of what the US would be like if language poetries had a wide circulation troubles my media-encrusted head. This all has to do with Elton John's "Candle in the Wind 97" which has become the biggest selling song lyric (I take this as a poem genre) in the history of the world (31.8 million so far, and it is not even Christmas). Now Julian Barnes churlishly pointed out that that Princess Di lived her life less "like a candle in the wind" and "more like a bloody great chandelier surrounded by flunkies and screens," by why argue over the banality of such metaphors (mutter-fors) or bash John (as I and Keith Richards have done) as (in that work) a royalist flunky mistranslating his own stronger, earlier work (the endictment of media celebbrity porno in Marilyn Monroe song)? So a "fit audience but few" comes to hear the devious poetic wit of David Bromidge read in Buffalo on a Monday night when the Bills seemingly dominate public consciousness in the wintry city. Does this mean we should declare a "moratorium" on such readings, on such counter-events and counter-creations. I think not. Poesy lives on, and poetry too, and it is up to us to nurture and even aggravate that difference. If Charles Bernstein became the poet laureate and talked about nature poesy on Mcneil Lehrer, I would think that that Emersonian spirt of the land was dead and I would weap. But now I know that the spirit of great poetry (yes, I will get gnostic and mystical here) lives on in Buffalo and Honolulu and santa Cruz in its own remote circulation patterns, and the thought of what American would be like if Ron Silliman or Juliana Spahr's poetry had a wide circulation troubles my sleep not a bit. Maybe we should send Bill Clinton a copy of Gregory Corso's Gasoline (City Lights Books, 196?) for Xmas, so that he can put it in Chelsea's stanford stocking (the latter, we should hope, will take a poetry class with M Perloff) or one on devious ethnic literature with David Palumbo Liu). Someday I will learn to practice "mah" and letting go, but not just yet. Rob Wilson

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 10 Sep 1997 09:34:00 -1000
From: "Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume" <[redacted]> To: POETICS <[redacted]>, rob wilson <[redacted]>
Subject: RE: Elton John translates Elton John/Ber

Rob: I certainly agree with your comments on the sublimation process at work in John's new version - it smacks of the kind of defensive revision/repression Wordsworth performed in _The Prelude_ for instance and which Yeats was known for as well. And, too, one can't fail to notice the Blakean allusion in John's line about "England's green hills," equating Diana with Christ himself! In the unwieldy effort to conflate these two disparate icons, a certain necessary elision must take place I suppose. I marvelled not only at how swiftly D's apotheosis took place, but also at where it occured: at the intersection of royal tradition and pop fetishization.

Appended is a poem re: the media event of Diana (rather than D. herself). I happened to be studying ballads that day. Some of the quotes are from the Norton Anthology, including its footnotes; some from _On Signs_, edited by Marshall Blonsky, which contains a detailed critique of the royal wedding.

ELEGAIC PASTICHE

Narrative details might form a ballad about a princess or any handsome young woman
"who would fain lie down."
But to classify the subject by meters, focussing on a catastrophic moment, would also signal the typical betrayal and elevation of a TV loneliness as attested to by the attendance of crowds and the spectacle of roses and signatures, which are all we have really, when you come down to it.
        Of a loveliness that daily

fed us nothing is certain but the crisis of its aftermath.
It involves images of dearness, replicated many times.
Kissing "the wounds that were so red."
"A species of deer distinguished" by a supernal color
so that its gawky movements, fabricated as they are,
give us a sense that an increase in the amount of available light is what lends consumerism its tragic tone, the lieux de memoire of the "lost participatory dimension."

↑ Index

454. Jack Foley

Re: Poets on Prose -Reply -Reply

Wed 22 Oct 1997

The Names and Ratner's Star are both on my shelf, waiting ... waiting ... Their day will come. -- JRF

>>> Carolyn Guertin <[redacted]> 10/21/97
05:22pm >>>
>I've barely started Underworld, out of impatient curiosity; but won't get >to read >it for another week or two, because of other things I'm reading now. I have >read six other DeLillo novels -- Great Jones Street and White Noise are my >favorites. But even his less effective books, like Numbers, Running Dog, >Libra, and Mao II are well worth reading. A miss by DeLillo is better than >many a hit by many another novelist.
>-- JR Foley

What??? No mention of The Names and its fascination with language!?

Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
Website: http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm
"Memory is a capricious seamstress." -- Virginia Woolf

↑ Index

455. Jack Foley
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply -Reply
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Actually, Numbers is a typo for Players, with an obvious confusion with The Names. I can never remember the title Players, I always think Numbers. But Players it is. -- JRF

>>> Herb Levy <[redacted]> 10/21/97 08:28pm >>>
Is Numbers a typo for the Names or for Ratner's Star?, either of which I like better than Great Jones Street. But hey, what do I know.

I'm about 2/3 through Underworld, which I do like, but I'm continually reminded of Joseph McElroy's Women & Men, which I (so far) like better.

Joe makes me wish I'd had time to go to hear DeLillo, but this was the wrong week for me, oh well.

> I've barely started Underworld, out of impatient curiosity; but won't get to read
> it for another week or two, because of other things I'm reading now. I have read six other DeLillo novels -- Great Jones Street and White Noise are my favorites. But even his less effective books, like Numbers, Running Dog, Libra, and Mao II are well worth reading. A miss by DeLillo is better than many a hit by many another novelist.
> -- JR Foley
>
> Safdie Joseph <[redacted]> 10/21/97 10:38am >>>
> As one of my favorite novelists, Joan Didion, got trashed on the list a few weeks back, I was curious to see if another contemporary I revere highly, Don DeLillo, would share the same fate. I saw him last night at a rare public appearance (in Seattle) and he was fascinating -- talking more like a poet, actually, than a novelist (please . . . I know the standard objections to that division), concentrating on the language being the primal force, antecedent to history, but also opining that "history" (which he called a three-dimensional construct of enormous power) would always be in antagonism with the writer's imagination, and that those different forces were always battling while he composed his works. A lucid, supremely intelligent evening. Anyone else see him, or start Underworld yet?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

456. henry
Re: ILS 1.8
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Jacques's idea of a discussion around the Watten ILS essay sounds good. I was surprised to find how different his take on it was from mine. I will not get into that because it's time for me to listen for a while. [Spandrift, could you please sharpen your poignard OUTSIDE? That grating noise is getting to me...]

But I wonder if the essay could go online? a lot of people will be left out otherwise. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

457. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Elvis poems
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Thanks Rachel, I'll forward your piece. "Good" was my friend's word--don't know what she meant by it--I suspect something like "not painted on velvet," but I'm not sure. But on another issue--I spent last weekend at zip 12409, & environs, so that Ophelia caught my eye. Let me know if you want to pursue that. 12498 was my home turf, from the days before zipcodes. Sylvester

> Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> A good friend of mine, just back from a Utopian Conference in Memphis & a visit to Graceland, asked me whether I knew of any good poems about Elvis. I said I'd ask. Any suggestions? Thanks, Sylvester
>
> Sylvester, I don't know whether you'll think this is good, or even a poem . . .
>
> DCEASE
>
> There are two Elvis Presleys in the Social Security Death Master File (DCEASE). The King's social security number is 409-52-2002. His death benefits zip code is 38116, aka Memphis, TN (so little Lisa Marie won't be forced to sell matchsticks on Elvis Presley Boulevard in that city, or marry Michael Jackson for anything but Love). EP #1 was born 1/8/35 and died 8/00/77. No matter how many mourners come to Graceland on August 16, the Social Security Death Master File will remain benignly ignorant and democratic. It will always record that EP #1 died on the 00 day of the month, just like everybody else.

> Just like his namesake, Elvis Presley #2. Who was this guy? We can confabulate something of his mother's state of mind from his date of birth, 10/24/57, after EP #1 left for Hollywood but before he went into the army. Other than that all we know is that 425-11-0453 died 4/00/87, not quite thirty, in Nettleton, MS. No death benefits zip code is listed. Ten years after EP #1 was buried, EP #2 apparently died without heirs.
>
> I am stumbling around in the electronic graveyard for another reason, actually. I am looking for a missing uncle, my grandfather's first son from a marriage he wished forgotten. The only picture I have of him is photocopied from a book in the Newberry Library in Chicago. I have the same book at home, but the page with my uncle's photograph is torn out, missing.
>
> I can't find him, though, under any of his six possible names. I do kick over another stone, and immediately wish I hadn't: the very daft and ravishing Christina Montemora, born 12/12/48, died 11/00/87, zip code of last residence 12401. Somehow I did know that I would find you, obvious Ophelia of my derelict years, though still hoping that this search would bring up NO DOCUMENTS. Your name, the few clues you leave behind, float like a reproach in the amber-colored letters on the black screen.
>
> --Rachel Loden
> first published in _New American Writing_ 13

↑ Index

458. David Golumbia
Re: non and hypernon
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Laura typed the URL slightly incorrectly.

http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/index.html

works fine.

-- David with fractional T3 access.

Diederik Wolsak wrote:
>
> LAURA MORIARTY wrote:
> >

> > More emptiness:
> >
> > Michael McElligott, Standard Schaefer, Louis Cabri and Jean Day
> >
> > at http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty.htm
>
>
> Dear Laura,
>
> Tried in vain to receive "more emptiness". Computer claims "not found, > doesnt exist on this server, outdated, inaccurate". Any snags from > where you sit? Thoroughly enjoyed the first set. Thank you!
>
> Best,
> Melissa Wolsak
>

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

459. Fred Muratori
Re: Elvis poems
Wed 22 Oct 1997

> A good friend of mine, just back from a Utopian Conference in Memphis & a visit to Graceland, asked me whether I knew of any good poems about Elvis. I said I'd ask. Any suggestions? Thanks, Sylvester

Well, Evis-ish perhaps..

ELVIS & THE BIBLE

What God there is sews faces on a quilt in twilight.
He/She doesn't know a nose from earlobes, so what becomes is what we get, like Pollock or Picasso: fistfights over how we see, lawsuits, world wars. Discrepancies increase and make for garish life. Consider Loch Ness, Bigfoot, Buddha, and the Twist, our mothers' tinted hair in hives sprayed stiff with gases that erode the ozone.
Our children will grow up sunburned but happy, and will join us with our alien captors in Atlantis.
Until then, there is meaning stubborn as a six-inch leech,
an interpretation worth dying for, real estate, home shopping. How can we beg for death when everywhere belief abounds, spatters wild as mercury flung down on asphalt? Our youth is sprinkled through our lives: Elvis and the Bible, Charlemagne, Roy Orbison in tears.

(originally appeared in _Late Knocking_)

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

460. Safdie Joseph

Re: Poets on Prose -Reply

Wed 22 Oct 1997

This was a pretty hilarious summary of the last few weeks or so on the List by Mark Baker. Nice work.

(But, if anyone hasn't read it, The Names is haunting and mysterious).

> What??? No mention of The Names and its fascination with language!?>
>
> In The Names, Paul Lake appears among the "zealots of the alphabet," the > worshippers of natural form and deniers of the arbitrariness of signs.
> They match the initials of a person's name with the initials of a place > name. Then they naturally kill the person. Once belittled as lunatic, > this practice has now been shown to fit the latest discoveries of ananarchic > non-chaos physics.
>
> But, in the epilogue, a Language poet appears, and convinces us of the > unrelation between the Parthenon and our syntax. The form moves us deeply, > though we have no feelings to be moved.

> Mark Baker

↑ Index

461. Sylvester Pollet
elvis poems
Wed 22 Oct 1997

This one came backchannel, but it's such fun I thought it should be shared--got permission. Sylvester
>
>On Wed, 22 Oct 1997, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
>> Thanks! It's great, & you should have sent it to the list, I think. I'm >> sure this is the one she'll post on her office door, along with the picture >> of The Colonel in a Santa suit giving Elvis a present.
>
>i thought about it but it was simpler to just post it to you--yeah, yeah:
>email address whimp, i know!
>repost it to the list if you want-
>--shaunanne

> Date: Wed, 22 Oct 1997 08:24:52 [redacted] (CDT)
> From: ShaunAnne Tangney Humanities 8-13-1997 <[redacted]>
> Subject: elvis/coincidences? (fwd) :) (fwd)
> To: [redacted]
> MIME-Version: 1.0
>
> re: yr request on POETICS for elvis poetry
>
> sylvester--not exactly a poem, but couldn't resist passing it along.
>
> TWO KINGS
> ---------
>
> Jesus said, "Love thy neighbor" (Matthew 22:39)
> Elvis said, "Don't Be Cruel" (RCA, 1956)
>
> Jesus H. Christ has 12 letters.
> Elvis Presley has 12 letters
>
> Jesus is the Lord's shepherd.
> Elvis dated Cybill Shepherd.

Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone" (Matthew 4:4).
Elvis loved his sandwiches with peanut butter and bananas.

"Then they took up stones to cast at [Jesus]" (John 8:59)
Elvis was often stoned.

Jesus was the Lamb of God.
Elvis had mutton chops.

Jesus was part of a Trinity.
Elvis' first band was a trio.

Jesus walked on water (Matthew 14:25)
Elvis surfed (Blue Hawaii, Paramount, 1965)

Jesus was a carpenter.
Elvis majored in woodshop/industrial arts in high school.

Jesus lived in a state of grace in a Near Eastern land.
Elvis lived in Graceland in a nearly eastern state.

Jesus wore the crown of thorns.
Elvis wore Royal Crown hair styler.

Jesus' entourage, the Apostles, had 12 members.
Elvis' entourage, the Memphis Mafia, had 12 members.

Jesus as wine (sacramental wine).
Elvis as wine (Always Elvis wine by Frantenac.)

A major woman in Jesus' life (Mary) had an immaculate conception.
A major woman in Elvis' life (Priscilla) went to Immaculate Conception

Jesus was resurrected.
Elvis had the famous comeback special in 1968.

Son of God.
Sun Studios.

Jesus said, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink" (John 7:37)
Elvis said, "Drinks on me!" (Jailhouse Rock, MGM 1957)

Jesus fasted for 40 days and nights.
Elvis had irregular eating habits (e.g., five banana splits for breakfast).

Jesus is a Capricorn (Dec 25).
Elvis is a Capricorn (Jan. 8).

> Jesus biography by Matthew (Gospel according to Matthew).
> Elvis biography by Neal Matthews (Elvis: A Golden Tribute).
>
> "[Jesus'] countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow" (Matthew 28:3).
> Elvis' trademarks were a lightning bolt and snow-white jumpsuits.
>
> Jesus was Jewish.
> Elvis was part Jewish (from his maternal great-grandmother, Martha Tackett Mansell).
>
> Jesus' purple robe.
> Elvis' pink Cadillac.
>
> Jesus' father is everywhere
> Elvis' father, Vernon, was a drifter and moved around quite a bit.
>
> Doubting Thomas.
> Suspicious Minds.
>
> There is much confusion about Jesus' middle name - what does the "H" stand for?
> There is much confusion about Elvis' middle name - was it Aron or Aaron?
>
> Jesus made rocks roll away from his tomb.
> Elvis made rock and roll.
>
> ==========
>
> -------- End of Forwarded Message

↑ Index

462. Harold Rhenisch

Re: sonnets and certainty

Wed 22 Oct 1997

Mark,

It seems to me that to subvert a sonnet requires a parallel certainty to the one you require for the writing of a sonnet. It is the certainty of an approach (even if the approach is uncertain), rather than the certainty of syllogisms.

By the way, Shakespeare's sonnets don't give me a feeling of certainty. Desperation would be more like it. A man beating his head against a wall, of form perhaps, perhaps of underlying logic. Berryman, who subverted, found the same wall. The pattern is anything but casual, alright.

The wall is important, and it should be possible to move past it or to reconsider it. If that means attempting to subvert the sonnet, so that the sonnet becomes the wall and the previous wall vanishes so we can move out into the space it hid, why not.

But it should be possible to play with the form by opening it up wide, making it into pages, if need be, following (or subverting) the underlying logic instead of the outward form, using 14 rhymed stanzas instead of rhymed lines, subverting the language, subverting the syllogisms, anything we can drag in (or out). I'm not saying it would or would not be worthwhile or advisable, but it is possible.

****
>Of course, it's possible to try to subvert a form, but the form is in >itself anything but "de-formative." The sonnet, for example, which I tried >to subvert for about seven years of apprenticeship, is not just a love poem
>in any casual pattern of 14 rhymed lines. It contains within itself a >logical constraint: an if/then pattern (in Shakespeare an if/if/if/then >pattern). A variant on the syllogism. This is true whether one looks at >Donne, or Keats, or Wordsworth, or Spencer or Milton.
>I have nothing against syllogisms, I just don't find them particularly >useful for me as a mode of inquiry. Put another way, for me to write a >sonnet I'd have to experience life and language as governed by an apparent >logic. The logic, the coherence, would be a given. In the secular world in >which I live whatever logic may be available takes a bit more exploration >to discover.

↑ Index

463. Jordan Davis
Re: sonnets and certainty
Wed 22 Oct 1997

It is absurd to discuss form with formalists. Formalists by definition know nothing about form, and if they should happen to produce a beautiful poem, it is barely less amazing than the discovery of a giant pumpkin in the shape of Mt Rushmore in a patch on Long Island. It belongs to the same category of experience.

I will repeat myself, because harrassment seems to be the only thing that gets across in email. "A cynic is one who knows the price of everything but the value of nothing." (wallace stevens)

L:o:v:e, Jordan

↑ Index

464. Christopher Alexander
Re: hear we go again
Wed 22 Oct 1997

---

sent this backchannel in response to a backchannel from Mark, then sent an explanation that I'd mistakenly written as if to the list, only to notice a reply to Mark on the list (!)—that explains why I had 2 copies in my box. anyway, here 'tis. (hi, Mark!)

to quote Alan Sondheim, <<much confusion prevails>>

--

Mark Weiss wrote:
> Of course, it's possible to try to subvert a form, but the form is > in itself anything but "de-formative."

hmm. not sure we're connecting on this one. I'd say that the logical structure of the sonnet, which you indicate having struggled with, wld have profoundly deformed the manner of yr work. (btw—the ambiguity of "work"—I mean to indicate the process of working, & not so much the product here, b/c it seems odd to me that we wld think we cld compare the poem as sonnet with—what? the poem if it weren't a sonnet? but there isn't any such poem.).

I'm just not sure I follow yr objection. I meant to indicate that restrictions we impose on our work operate as supplementary formative pressures—something else to kick against, maybe— & certainly some more than others. & that the addition of such a pressure can, by changing the constellation of forces that informs the work (which is, I take it, not constant, but has abiding elements & approaches constancy over the short term), knock us out of our usual pattern of "response", or however you'd like to formulate it. that the sonnet didn't take you where you wanted to be is precisely the point; that, in this case, it took you somewhere you assuredly didn't want to be is disappointing.

I haven't worked with the sonnet form but once, & some time ago (can you see it receding?), but I can't help offering this speculation to the list, based on experience with other formal procedures: cheat at this game. or not so much cheat as—. "genre" indicates a set of more or less definite characteristics that establish permeable boundaries at the approach to zero, nope, not a sonnet (or whatever) thank you for playing. now, having read one somewhere, I'm pretty much aware of what those conventions are in the case of the sonnet; &, yes, if what you want is to end up with a sonnet, well, I guess you're stuck with such as are deemed necessary to sonnethood (Robin's cousin; he was the one got poison oak in issue #3), including the syllogistic structure. but then again, I wasn't really talking about producing sonnets, & I figured folks wld pick up on that from my talk of displacement & use & so forth; I guess the flippancy of my last line was too much for youse. how bout this, then: I don't really care if what I end up with is a sonnet. but I think the sonnet form cld be used in the way I just outlined, & so it wld be unfortunate to issue any blanket condemnations. as a reader, I'd like to encourage tolerance at least; as a writer, I don't think one can provide an argument that wld convince me any form is dead or useless.

best, Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

465. mark weiss
(no subject)
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Well, since the structure of rock music is a lot more readily apparent than the structure of mozart's music, there must be another explanation. Maybe the Heavy Metal rats were stoned. Or maybe it depends on which Mozart the other rats listened to. If it was the Marriage of Figaro, say, they obviously weren't following the libretto, maze-like as its is.

At 08:40 AM 10/22/97 -0400, you wrote:
>mark weiss wrote:
>>
>> I know this is a side issue, but I really would like to be enlightened on >> this point. I have always assumed that Mozart was good for me, but not that >> he made me smarter. Who says this? Do they also say (and on what basis), as
>> you seem to imply, that Haydn or Beethoven offer less of an IQ boost? My >> guess is that the answer might be a hoot.
>>
>> The argument
>> >strikes me as a universalization of the "Mozart effect"--i.e., that >> >because Mozart's [admittedly 'formal'] music raises IQ [&, I have little >> >doubt, does much more], all formal music must possess similar virtues,
>> >or [LaRouche's point] all music ought to embody formal [i.e., >> >immediately apparent] structures. Yeah, but: Mozart's genius engaged the >> >formal in a special way which other classical composers evidently did >> >not, since only his music appears to have the magical "Mozart effect."

>> >
>Mark,
> Don G. Campbell just published a book about this on Oct. 1: _The Mozart >Effect: Tapping ther Power of Music to Heal the Body, Strengthen the >Mind, and Unlock the Creative Spirit_. Avon. ISBN: 0380974185, 352pp.
>[OK: the subtitle makes me queasy, but look at the publisher]
> I haven't read it yet, but have heard Campbell interviewed a few times >[as well as others on the same matter]. An experiment with rats, for >example, who listened to Mozart showed they learned to run a maze >several times faster if they listened to Mozart , whereas those who >listened to Heavy Metal took several times longer to learn. Does this >surprise anyone?
> I suspect the experimental psychologists have already done a chunk of >work on this for Campbell to use [he also wrote some other books on >music, evidently also for a mass audience], and that we can find much of >that work easily on the net. These days, though, I just don't have the >time.
> Hope that helps.
>Dan Zimmerman
>
>

↑ Index

466. mark weiss
Re: hear we go again
Wed 22 Oct 1997

No real objection to what you say--actually, I just tagged my reply to your post for the sake of continuity of thread and to take the opportunity to make clear what some of the consequences of form may be. And I quite agree that others may find the form useful, instructive, etc. Milton et al certainly did (not to mention a host of French and Italians). I don't for me now, for the reasons stated.

At 10:35 AM 10/22/97 MST7MDT, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss wrote:
>> Of course, it's possible to try to subvert a form, but the form is >> in itself anything but "de-formative."
>
>hmm. not sure we're connecting on this one. I'd say that the >logical structure of the sonnet, which you indicate having >struggled with, wld have profoundly de-formed the manner >of yr work. (btw—the ambiguity of "work"—I mean to indicate >the process of working, & not so much the product here, b/c >it seems odd to me that we wld think we cld compare the poem >as sonnet with—what? the poem if it weren't a sonnet? but >there isn't any such poem.).

>
>I'm just not sure I follow yr objection. I meant to indicate >that restrictions we impose on our work operate as supplementary >formative pressures—something else to kick against, maybe— & >certainly some more than others. & that the addition of such a >pressure can, by changing the constellation of forces that informs >the work (which is, I take it, not constant, but has abiding elements >& approaches constancy over the short term), knock us out of our >usual pattern of "response", or however you'd like to formulate it.
>that the sonnet didn't take you where you wanted to be is precisely >the point; that, in this case, it took you somewhere you assuredly >didn't want to be is disappointing.
>
>I haven't worked with the sonnet form but once, & some time >ago (can you see it receding?), but I can't help offering this >speculation to the list, based on experience with other formal >procedures: cheat at this game. or not so much cheat as—.
>"genre" indicates a set of more or less definite characteristics >that establish permeable boundaries at the approach to zero, nope, >not a sonnet (or whatever) thank you for playing. now, having read >one somewhere, I'm pretty much aware of what those conventions >are in the case of the sonnet; &, yes, if what you want is to end up >with a sonnet, well, I guess you're stuck with such as are deemed >necessary to sonnethood (Robin's cousin; he was the one got >poison oak in issue #3), including the syllogistic structure. but >then again, I wasn't really talking about producing sonnets, & I >figured folks wld pick up on that from my talk of displacement & >use & so forth; I guess the flippancy of my last line was too much >for youse. how bout this, then: I don't really care if what I end up >with is a sonnet. but I think the sonnet form cld be used in the way
>I just outlined, & so it wld be unfortunate to issue any blanket >condemnations. as a reader, I'd like to encourage tolerance at least;
>as a writer, I don't think you can provide an argument that wld >convince me any form is dead or useless.
>
>best, Chris

>
>..
>Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective
>
>email: [redacted]
>snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
>press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/
>
>

↑ Index

467. Harold Rhenisch
the forklift school of verse
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Seems to me Coleridge said that he wrote rhymed verse by writing the rhymes first and then backing the poem into the rhymes.

You could do that with any other technique of a poem, traditional or otherwise.

↑ Index

468. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Wed 22 Oct 1997

I'll have to look into the Weinberger sources now -- Last time I checked anything he'd cited in this regard I found that the author had quite clearly not said what Weinberger attributed --

This appears to be one of the most difficult points for Sokal to get hold of, even though it seems quite simple, if not simple-minded --

LAWS do not occur in nature, whether we mean the laws of physics or the law of the land --

There are phenomena that we attempt to describe,,, the description gets called a law of physics --

Again, I know of nobody who has claimed that what we term gravity functions differently in different cultures -- though I will now certainly look into EW's citations in case somebody has made such a claim (again, excepting Sokal himself) and I've missed it -- not at all impossible --

On the other hand, I still don't understand why anyone would get upset by the assertion that, prior to Newton say, people's subjective experience of gravity differed from my own -- In the same, perhaps trivial ways, that even though the sun beat down everywhere following the same laws of physics, it was no doubt experienced differently by folk who thought they inhabited a heliocentric universe

↑ Index

469. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
Wed 22 Oct 1997

> What??? No mention of The Names and its fascination with language!?

What??? No mention of _Ratner's Star_ and its fascination with language!?

↑ Index

470. henry gould
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Wed 22 Oct 1997

the issue is not between those who emphasize the relativity and historicity of science and those who emphasize the universal applicability of its laws. most scientists, including Sokal I would assume & Weinberg (it's Weinberg, isn't it, not Weinberger?) are very aware of subjective, local & cultural factors in designing experiments & in the broader history of science.

the debate hinges on a point of philosophy. is there something called objective truth? or is all truth relative, a matter of human naming using arbitrary human signs called words? I would guess most scientists are more comfortable with the former ("realist") position - it supports the universality of their "laws".

I'm not suggesting we take this up for debate. but I think Sokal et al. are aiming at philosophical positions they find inimical - not debating the (granted) relativity of science. it's the relativity of truth that's at issue, and the characterizations of science that stem from a "nominalist" position. - Henry G.

↑ Index

471. trace s. ruggles
Re: the forklift school of verse
Wed 22 Oct 1997

At 11:11 AM -0700 10/22/97, Harold Rhenisch <[redacted]> wrote:
>Seems to me Coleridge said that he wrote rhymed verse by writing the rhymes >first and then backing the poem into the rhymes.
>

>You could do that with any other technique of a poem, traditional or >otherwise.

isn't this part of the whole "form directing content" aspect of lang po?

trace

↑ Index

472. Mark Baker
Re: Poets on Prose -Reply
Wed 22 Oct 1997

> What??? No mention of _Ratner's Star_ and its fascination with language!? >

In Ratner's Star, the pubescent language poet writes her first manifesto:

"To express what is expressible isn't why you write if you're in this class of writers. To be understood is faintly embarrassing. What you want to express is the violence of your desire not to be read. The friction of an audience is what drives writers crazy. These people are going to read what you write. The more they understand, the crazier you get. You can't let them know what you're writing about. Once they know, you're finished. If you're in this class, what you have to do is either not publish or make absolutely sure your work leaves readers strewn along the margins. This not only causes literature to happen but is indispensable to your mental health as well."

Mark Baker

↑ Index

473. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Minneapolis is socially constructed
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Aldon Nielson wrote:

"On the other hand, I still don't understand why anyone would get upset by the assertion that, prior to Newton say, people's subjective experience of gravity differed from my own -- In the same, perhaps trivial ways, that even though the sun beat down everywhere following the same laws of physics, it was no doubt experienced differently by folk who thought they inhabited a heliocentric universe"

Not trivial. We make our metaphors and then we live in them. Science is a metaphor. If 'metaphor' is a sticky term, how about 'screen'. Those heliocentric folks experienced a different subjective universe, but it was as capable of describing the universe as the scientific universe in fashion these days. I'd prefer to bring stuff back to perception, even logic, rather than to science, given that science too can be brought back to perception and logic (although it is not the same as they are)

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

474. Aviva Vogel
Re: ILS 1.8
Wed 22 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-22 10:59:02 EDT, you write:

<< Watten ILS essay >>
I like Henry's idea that this essay might be posted for discussion.

↑ Index

475. Pritchett,Pat
Re: ILS 1.8
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Yes- great idea - I'm partway though it myself - BUT - it's obviously far too long to post to the List. I think this impracticality was brought up before in a discussion of Steve Evans's wonderful essay in the same series, "Dynamics of Literary Change." So...

From: Aviva Vogel
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: ILS 1.8
Date: Wednesday, October 22, 1997 4:57PM

In a message dated 97-10-22 10:59:02 EDT, you write:

<< Watten ILS essay >>
I like Henry's idea that this essay might be posted for discussion.

↑ Index

476. Aldon Nielsen
All Fall Down
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Apologies to several -- In catching up on the amassed email that came in while I was sunning myself in Minneapolis, I mistakenly thought we were discussing some new essay -- but now I see it is, again, S. Weinberg's '96 review and reply -- neither of which contains any citations of scholars who think that gravity exerts itself differently against the Aleutians from the way it messes with me here at the trembling edge of the nation's attention span.

I would, as has already been done here, advise a read of Arkady Plotnitsky's "'But It Is Above All Not True': Derrida, Relativity, and the 'Science Wars'" in PMC-- I suspect it's not the last word . . . but it at least spells most of the names correctly, which I seldom can manage here

↑ Index

477. Bob Grumman
Re: math/logic and poetry
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Thanks for the toot, Luigi! Yeah, I didn't really want to do the toot myself, though I toot my own horn a lot elsewhere. Also, I wasn't sure my kind of mathematical poetry was what the listees were looking for.

Oh, I agree with you that the poem at my site isn't my best mathemaku-- but I do like it (when I like any of my poems), and I think it the best of my mathemaku for use at my site. Incidentally, I don't think I'll leave it there. I think it'd be better to rotate poems every three months or so, so am considering soliciting poems of any kind--but they have to be explicitly about poetry. Do you have any, or know of any good ones? I'd probably use the Marianne Moore (can you believe it, I don't know how to spell her first name, unless by accident I got it right) if I didn't figure it'd be copyright infringement.

By the way, what's the latest with Taproots?

all bestest, Bob

↑ Index

478. R. Gancie
Sokallese
Wed 22 Oct 1997

Henry and Tom: What I mean Henry is that statements like "science requires a fundamentally 'realist' approach" is like Weinberg's notion of "one to one correspondence;" you can talk about it but you can never get there. The key is that somewhere, even if its just in your head, you have to talk. Just reflect on how intuitive the phrase "fundamentally 'realist' approach" is. Think about your personal intellectual (and non-intellectual) history; the one that leads to such phrases having any force of expression for you. Then think of the inherently relativist nature of that history and then begin to pin the tail on phrases like "some kind of apprehensible reality out there." You guys are so immersed in the lay context of the scientific method that you've forgotten that YOU DON'T NEED

SCIENCE TO HAVE REGARD FOR THE REAL.---(Note Mark's apple image and see if it contradicts me. And Henry "testable truth" is not necessarily scientific truth.) But valuing the real is not the same as knowing it. Science as many, many commentaters have observed (Pierce included) relies on processes of mathematization, quantification, formalization, reduction what have you to achieve its interface with the 'real.' Henry, not only the "tools and procedures" of science change but its relationship to the 'real' changes constantly too. The some total of necessarily iterative or experimentally repeatable properties of any entity described by science does not equal the "ding an sich."(excuse short cut mongrel philosphy here) This is revealed by the contingent nature of science itself. A muon never IS; it is defined as, dare I say, much like a word is not the object that it describes. The 'real' of science is the claim that its contingencies are determined by its interface with the phenomena itself and not in what would amount to a new Scholasticism. But unfortunately, the sciences themselves have not been equal to the task and as I have tried to point out on this list and elsewhere, its not so much an atmosphere of relativist vs. positivists but of an utter disregard for the importance and responsibilies of language on the part of those who would now criticize certain deconstructionists. (Henry, I don't understand some of your energized phrases. If there is anybody that is not "residing someplace in the middle" its got to be you. Otherwise I would have drawn a bead on you by now and knocked you right out of your saddle.) Example: At the end of my piece, Science Smiling into its Beard, I point out that Weinberg translates Heisenberg's phrase Die Unbestimmtheitsrelation, as the Uncertainty Principle, and then berates Heisenberg for inroducing such an unfortunate phrase as "Uncertainty Principle." Well, if Heisenberg had introduced the unfortunate phrase perhaps Weinberg would have a point. But Heisenberg never said Uncertainty Principle; his English translaters did. A more accurate translation wopuld have been 'indeterminacy relation' which was closer to Heisenberg's meaning and which if you reflect a little, you will see has none of the "unfortunate" either/or of a "principle" that Weinberg, actually rather snottily, and quite wrongfully attributes to Heisenberg's lack of regard for the implications of language. I'm just a schmo down here on the killing floor, and I might be oughtta line, but Weinberg's stupidity is unconscionable. Example. Mark, as for Sokal's methods. On the op-ed page here in Washington recently, James Glassman, writes about the Dihydrogen Monoxide: Hidden Killer story. You know the kid who got his class to vote to ban water by describing its dangers (statistically) and referring to it by only its chemical makeup. Well, Glassman inflates this little tale to claim that the American public in general is being duped by the EPA and the like and that environmental dangers are not only often exaggerated but are even fabricated. Sokal serves the same function as as the kid in his science class incidentally wants to be a nuclear engineer just like his dad. Its not Sokal who worries me. The way he did what he did speaks for itself. And apparently he can't distinguish between the literal and the metaphorical even in the work of his heroes. Its the people who feel the necessity to support Sokal institutionally, politically and financially, that concern me. Your students swim in the scientific paradigm, a paradigm in which they will never have even a hoarse whisper of a democratic say. They can stand a little of what you call relativism. Everyone grows up in the shadow of their nuclear engineer dad anyway. Its meaningless to say American's in general are illiterate in the sciences or that their children are. For the vast majority of us scientific literacy would be a meaningless waste of productive time anyway because if our conclusions wouldn't matter in any case. A relatively small number of people will suffice to keep the scientific paradigm rolling quite possibly toward oblivion. My concern is that there are a few within that community that can see the to maintain alternatives. You can be damn sure that the ones who control funding for science and technology don't give a friar's fart about the less fungible discplines on our campuses. I repeat. I not a supporter of Hayles, Aronowitz, Harding et al. I also recieve no funding. I've come to my critque of tyhe sciences through years of reading, writing, reflection and conversation outside of any academic setting. Therefore my approach may seem ideosyncratic but it is also in my estimation more comprehensive. I like to think that I bring to it the best tools and understanding of the modernist poetic tradition and not the post-modernist if such discretions really have any meaning. I use sources that I've never heard the Sokal flap people refer to; and that's folks on both side of the argument.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

479. Harold Rhenisch

Re: the forklift school of verse

Thu 23 Oct 1997

---

in regards to

>Seems to me Coleridge said that he wrote rhymed verse by writing the rhymes >first and then backing the poem into the rhymes.
>
>You could do that with any other technique of a poem, traditional or >otherwise.

trace s. ruggles wrote:

> isn't this part of the whole "form directing content" aspect of lang po?

I meant to suggest that Coleridge was lang po. Or would have been if lang po were not bound so tightly to a time, a sensibility, and a place.

Harold

↑ Index

480. Hugh Steinberg
Re: elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

David Wojohn's book _Mystery Train_ has a great Elvis poem, can't remember the specific title, about Elvis and his pals going out into the Nevada desert, where Elvis demonstrates his psychic powers by making clouds move.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

481. mark weiss
Re: elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Check out Susie Mee, "The Gospel According to Elvis," in Grand Street #55. She's also published a novel, _The Girl Who Loved Elvis,_ about 4 years ago from Peachtree Press.

At 11:53 PM 10/22/97 -0600, you wrote:
>David Wojohn's book _Mystery Train_ has a great Elvis poem, can't remember >the specific title, about Elvis and his pals going out into the Nevada >desert, where Elvis demonstrates his psychic powers by making clouds move.
>
>Hugh Steinberg
>
>

↑ Index

482. Ken Edwards
Mathematics and poetry
Thu 23 Oct 1997

On Tue, 21 Oct 1997, Jennifer Ashton wrote:

> Dear list members,
>
> I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets > who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition.

Try Allen Fisher's oeuvre, _passim_. His books are too various and too fugitive to list, but Small Press Distribution should have some. His current project, not due for completion for some years, and manifesting itself as a series of books from (mainly) British small presses, has the overall title _Gravity as a consequence of shape_.

Ken

↑ Index

483. hen
Re: ILS 1.8
Thu 23 Oct 1997

On Wed, 22 Oct 1997 17:04:00 -0500 Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume said:
>Yes- great idea - I'm partway though it myself - BUT - it's obviously far >too long to post to the List. I think this impracticality was brought up >before in a discussion of Steve Evans's wonderful essay in the same series, >"Dynamics of Literary Change." So...

I should have been more clear : I meant maybe it could be posted on the web, at the EPC - not directly to the list. I think Jacques may be following up on that possibility, if it is one. - Henry G.

↑ Index

484. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Sokallese
Thu 23 Oct 1997

---

carlo, while much of what you say re the abuses of "science" are true, i need to ask you whether you mean to throw out everything that might properly be termed "science," or simply the last century... or the last fifty years... or---

i mean, "science" can stand for such a myriad of social and cultural practices that i have to admit---NO, i don't want to throw all that away!... i detest the way "science and technology" as Big Business has permeated (e.g.) campuses such as mine (e.g.)... at the same time, we're going to need something like "science"---AND something like "humanities"---however altered/modified/radicalized (choose your terms) if we're going to provide for billions of people, if we're going even to have something like an 'ecology' in 40 years (with due regard for "science's" complicity---and "humanities" too as a cluster for disciplines---for fucking it up... and believe me, i AM sweating that "we're")...

so i'd like to know, now: are you drawing any lines here?... or are you suggesting---seriously carlo---that we simply shit-can every theoretical insight that one might currently associate with "science"... i think it's this blurring of distinctions, as it were, that's coming off as provocative hereabouts... so i guess i'm trying to provide some space here for you to articulate an alternative... and no, i'm not just being cagey---i know you can't 'undo' so many decades of Big Science (new term, ok)... but how about some leads?...

b/c for me, i've found some leads in the literature-science work going on... though in fact this work itself is in some ways reverent (ok, my term) of science (mea culpa)... talking about the obvious blindnesses, and political motivations, of self-proclaimed 'public defenders' like sokal and gross & levitt and weinberg is one thing... but you know, i know, what most of us know: that it's damned hard to offer up constructive alternatives in a world that seems more and more built upon the premises of "science and technology" (and if you wish to separate these two, why hey---that's ok too!)... and that, for example, "science" has a better take on "life" a la evolution than do the fundamentalist-creationists, yes?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

485. Henry Gould
Re: Sokallese
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Carlo, you covered a lot of territory there, & you're obviously more up on the science literature. The arrogance of science in various manifestations, the struggle between science & humanities on campus, the struggle for an alternative to the positivist post-Newton anti-intellectualism, etc... all important. But Sokal gave left humanities a kick in the pants, and as I see it, again, it's a philosophical issue. You're not going to resolve the subjective/ objective question re: truth by simply miming how "subjective" phrases like these sound in action. Nor does it do to stereotype the concept of a stable truth "out there" as a simplistic notion. It's not so simple on either side of the fence. & I would say the strain of postmodernism Sokal had in his sights - post-Nietszschean, post- Heidegerrian Derridean relativity - i.e. the "logos" or order of nature is a time-bound patriarchal illusion masking the free play of non-identity [A does not = A] - really is anti-science based on pretty straightforward "nominalism". & these can also be seen as the false friends of poetry & the humanities. Friends AND false friends: I don't deny the amazing subtlety & interest in Derrida and related writers - there IS real discovery there, too. But science and poetry need not be rivals for human allegiance. - Henry gould

↑ Index

486. R. Gancie
Sokallese: Errors in human transmission
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Mark and Henry: Please excuse the many errors in my previous transmission, the most egregious being the initial address to Tom when I meant Mark. No matter how many other committments I have, I want to communicate my meaning as consistently and thoroughly as possible. Mark, in particular, I owe you a more thoughtful and comprehensive reply. Its impossible to address each individual point especially when there are so many uncritical assumptions in your remarks. On the one hand Tom wants to separate the way Thales would think of souls from the way John McCarthy might (actually I was trying to be tongue in cheek and thought no one would interpret the remark so literally); but then Judy wants to ad hoc consider weaving as an historical/technological continuum, Burlington and the Jacquard loom existing in the same spirit as the practice of hand weaving. Actually, this would make a fascinating and relevant, but lengthy, discussion in itself. It got me looking at Annie Albers fabric art yesterday. For example, if we imply, as Tom does, that the word 'soul' has natural recourse to the taxonomy we call religion, is it then discussible in the same manner as Judy's implied taxonomy, technology? Do the two taxonomies then form a hermeneutic equivalence? What is the language like that drives the discussions? Are their quantifiable standards of critique and illumination? Which taxonomy appears more valid and do the standards of criticism favor one over the other? Mark, let me just say that acceptance of fraudulent texts is not limited to the Sokal affair. Even with peer revues it has occurred many times within the sciences themselves. There's a book called Fraud in Science. Joe Brennan makes the point that the level of metaphor is valid and must be recognized on its own terms and that Sokal insists on a disembodied and literal interpretation to advance his own agenda and that of his powerful handlers. Tom, through Jaynes' Origins of Consciousness and the Breakdown of the Bicameral Mind, insists that metaphor is unavoidable. I would agree even unto methods of mathematization and quantification. That's where the quotes from Hegel and Adorno and Horkheimer come in.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

487. Sylvester Pollet
Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Thanks, all, for the Elvis poems & citations. I expect it's easier to start a thread than to stop one, but the immediate crisis has passed, so back to Sokal et al.

↑ Index

488. Robert Archambeau
Re: Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Jere Odell, a young poet who opened for Stephanie Strickland at her reading in Lake Forest last week, told me that wheras all aspiring poets used to feel an obligation to write a sonnet, now they all feel the need to write a poem about Elvis. I thought he was joking, but now I'm not so sure.

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

Only irony is eternal
--Andrei Codrescu

↑ Index

489. Maria Damon
fwd: Asian American Poetry Inquiry
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Date: Wed, 22 Oct 1997 20:17:46 -0800
To: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
From: [redacted] (Juliana Chang)
Subject: Asian American Poetry

(Please forward to Poetics List and/or other lists--thanks!)

I am writing on behalf of the Poetry Award Committee for the Association of Asian American Studies. We will be reviewing books of poetry by Asian American writers and presenting an award at the 1998 AAAS Conference. If you know of poetry books published in 1997 that we should review, please send a message with title, author, and publisher to me at <[redacted]>. Below are some books currently under consideration:

Chin, Justin. -Bite Hard-. manic d press
Inada, Lawson. -Drawing the Line-. Coffee House Press.
Kim, Myung Mi. -Dura-. Sun and Moon Press. (if it's out)
Mitsui, James Masao. -From a Three-Cornered World-. University of Washington Press.
Pwu, Jean Lee. -East Wind, West Rain-.
Saijo, Albert. -Outspeaks a Rhapsody-. Bamboo Ridge Press.

Thank you,

Juliana Chang
Chair
1997 AAAS Poetry Award Committee

↑ Index

490. Maria Damon
Re: Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

---

check out also El Vez, Chicano activist and Elvis impersonator, there's a nice section about him in Jose Saldivar's forthcoming book "Border Matters."

At 12:01 PM -0400 10/23/97, Danny Collier wrote: >Sylvester,
>
>You might point your friend toward the proprietor of the Java >Cabana Coffee House, First Chuch of the Elvis Impersonator >and Elvis Wedding Chapel in Memphis, TN. Since he has many >fine Elvis-oriented artworks in his shop (including a wonderous >series of Velvet Elvis-style Life-of-the-King portraits with captions >worked into the paintings) he probably could point you at >Elvis-oriented poets and their works. (He does amazing >coin-operated interactive animated Elvis impersonator >installations.)
>
>They have (or had) a web site with links to his e-mail. I'd give you >the reference, but I got busted for subversively using the law >firm's international link to its diary/billing system to gain web >access, so I am
>
>unlinked in Moscow,
>Danny Collier, Native Memphian, Thrice Remarried in the First >Church of the Elvis Impersonator

↑ Index

491. henry
Re: ILS 1.8
Thu 23 Oct 1997

On Tue, 21 Oct 1997 16:13:15 EDT JDEBROT said:
>Watten's essay strikes me as an extremely important corrective. In "The Bride

>. . . " he challenges the, by now too easy, assumption that the material text >is politically effective either because 1. the reader is "empowered" by >his/her collaboration in making meaning, or 2. in Watten's words, "what >writing wants to accomplish as politics is the same as to do it; that to >describe literary possibility is to represent a form of agency, in a circular >fashion, as a critique of representation." In place of these alternatives >Watten proposes a cultural poetics with "a more socially reflexive >perspective." Just what this might mean is suggested by George Hartley in his >account of Watten's pivotal essay "Total Syntax," where Watten calls for a >focused "attention to both the internal, formal, temporal construction of a >work and its external, contextual, spatial dimension" The two, as Watten sees >it, are coextensive. Therefore the work's external frames ("aesthetic value >systems, economic constraints, and ideological structures") mediate, but may >also be affected by, its internal syntax. It is through the writer's >exploitation of this "total syntax" that is, for Watten, key to the work's >eventual political efficacy; what in Watten's book Progress is said to be "a >form compelling events."

Jacques, I'm going to break my own promise since nobody else is speaking up. But I don't want to turn this discussion into the usual Henry polemics. So I want to suggest to all ye listers out there, that we follow up on Jacques' call by responding to the ILS essay in a VARIETY of directions. There's a lot of ways to get into an argument.

With that said, here's my question - how does Watten's characterization of reading poetry differ from any mainstream approach of reading for inner dynamics & general context? How can this be offered as something new, except in the parochial context of Language Poetry positioning? Parochial, because aesthetically hobbled by a simplistic correspondence between poetic experiment and political progress, if I read your "call" aright. Art by committee of the will to power. "Critiques of representation". The idea of a "form compelling events" gives it away: in Watten's view an "event" equals a political event. I have a permanently fixed bias toward what goes on in the unmapped wastelands - what is not yet political or left out of the political. That's where nature and art are interesting mutually-reflective events in their own right. This is a fundamentally midwestern left-out feeling. It can also be read politically, and for some people that's the only kind of reading, I guess. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

492. Maria Damon
address query
Thu 23 Oct 1997

---

anyone got an e-address for tandy sturgeon, or know who's doing the niedecker sagetrieb? please backchannel. thanks, md

↑ Index

493. Maria Damon
south asian women poets
Thu 23 Oct 1997

---

on behalf of one of my students, a query: can any of you suggest how to get hold of the work of south asian women (or of south asian descent) "experimental" (or whatever) poets? names, websites, journal articles or unpublished material all appreciated.

↑ Index

494. Robert Archambeau
Re: sonnets and certainty
Thu 23 Oct 1997

As I looked up over the gilt-edged pages of my leather bound copy of "A" from where I sat in the wingback chair in my oak-panelled library, I was astonished to see a giant pumpkin in the shape of Mt Rushmore rolling down the hillside, about to crash through the glassed-in screen of my hothouse of biases. Barely survived that one, but mmmm, the pumpkin pie I made . . .

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

Only irony is eternal
--Andrei Codrescu

↑ Index

495. Franklin Bruno
the forms and the laws
Thu 23 Oct 1997

H. Rhenisch wrote:

>Seems to me Coleridge said that he wrote rhymed verse by writing the rhymes >first and then backing the poem into the rhymes.
>
>You could do that with any other technique of a poem, traditional or >otherwise.
>
This was Ashbery's device in the sestinas and canzone in -Some Trees-. And what's more formal, in this sense, Cage's mesostics (sp?) or Roussel's novels?

M. Weiss wrote:

> I have nothing against syllogisms, I just don't find them particularly useful for me as a mode of inquiry. Put another way, for me to write a sonnet I'd have to experience life and language as governed by an apparent logic. The logic, the coherence, would be a given. In the secular world in which I live whatever logic may be available takes a bit more exploration to discover.

Hard for me to swallow this as an argument against writing in forms. Why would you 'have to' experience life a certain way to use a (received, he sd, sotto voce) form, unless you suppose that art must be mimetic in certain respects. Why could one not create order, or to use a shadier term, impose it on the 'secular' world? Isn't this what we do w/ our perceptions all the time. Of course, one might have the poetic aim of shaking off the shackles of knee-jerk everyday 'ordering' or 'forming,' but then one is just trying to be truer to the 'actual' perceiver-indepdent forms of life, on some level. And speaking of perceiver-independence...

A. Nielson wrote:

>This appears to be one of the most difficult points for Sokal to get hold >of, even though it seems quite simple, if not simple-minded --
>
>LAWS do not occur in nature, whether we mean the laws of physics or the law >of the land --
>
>There are phenomena that we attempt to describe,,, the description gets >called a law of physics --
>
This is a pretty open question in philosophy of science circles, even narrowly analytic one. There are those (David Armstrong comes to mind) who hold that LAWS really do exist--i.e., are abstract but objective entities ala numbers, properties, etc. Obviously, this is a species of Platonism. BUT, such a view need not suppose that we have actually unearthed any of the real laws, only useful but somewhat deceptive approximations of them. Somewhere on the other end of the range is the view that there are just law-statements (though the ontological status of these might depend on your philosophy of language) which cover, more or less effectively, a range of particular phenomena. There's also the very important question of whether clauses in law-statements that say things like 'under normal conditions' or 'all other things being equal' (which very few proposed laws lack) make the statements empty of content, or whether these phrases can be given a determinate application. This last ? is key to the issue of whether there are any laws of behavioral science (psychology), which brings us right back to AI.

fjb

↑ Index

496. Danny Collier
Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Sylvester,

You might point your friend toward the proprietor of the Java Cabana Coffee House, First Chuch of the Elvis Impersonator and Elvis Wedding Chapel in Memphis, TN. Since he has many fine Elvis-oriented artworks in his shop (including a wonderous series of Velvet Elvis-style Life-of-the-King portraits with captions worked into the paintings) he probably could point you at Elvis-oriented poets and their works. (He does amazing coin-operated interactive animated Elvis impersonator installations.)

They have (or had) a web site with links to his e-mail. I'd give you the reference, but I got busted for subversively using the law firm's international link to its diary/billing system to gain web access, so I am

unlinked in Moscow,
Danny Collier, Native Memphian, Thrice Remarried in the First Church of the Elvis Impersonator

↑ Index

497. trace s. ruggles
Re: Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

There's a bona fide Church of Elvis a couple of blocks from where I work (in Portland, OR). One of our employees is leaving the company for good next week to move to New York, and we all decided to get married to her at the Church. They offer 25 cent weddings that only take a couple of minutes. I'll see if they have any good poetry about the King...

At 9:01 AM -0700 10/23/97, you wrote:
>Sylvester,
>
>You might point your friend toward the proprietor of the Java >Cabana Coffee House, First Chuch of the Elvis Impersonator
>and Elvis Wedding Chapel in Memphis, TN. Since he has many >fine Elvis-oriented artworks in his shop (including a wonderous
>series of Velvet Elvis-style Life-of-the-King portraits with captions >worked into the paintings) he probably could point you at >Elvis-oriented poets and their works. (He does amazing >coin-operated interactive animated Elvis impersonator >installations.)
>
>They have (or had) a web site with links to his e-mail. I'd give you >the reference, but I got busted for subversively using the law >firm's international link to its diary/billing system to gain web >access, so I am
>
>unlinked in Moscow,
>Danny Collier, Native Memphian, Thrice Remarried in the First >Church of the Elvis Impersonator

↑ Index

498. Ira Lightman
Re: math/logic and poetry
Thu 23 Oct 1997

And of course Ron Silliman's use of fibonacci; my own "Loving Phase Transitions" (Sound & Language, 1996) is 3 eleven page sections of 2 one page pieces followed by a nine page piece; the final nine page piece is 9 pages, each of 9 lines, each line with 9 words, from 1 to 9 letters long. Maths or numerology? A friend of mine is writing an unpublished piece written through Wittgenstein's Tractatus, and there is Marjorie Perloff's book on Wittgenstein and poetry. And there's Oulipo, especially Jacques Roubaud (a mathematician).

Ira

On Mon, 20 Oct 1997 22:54:01 -0700 Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> From: Carl Lynden Peters <[redacted]>
> Date: Mon, 20 Oct 1997 22:54:01 -0700
> Subject: Re: math/logic and poetry
> To: [redacted]
>
> bpNichol!
> bpNichol!
> bpNichol! x all that u can read! of bp!
>
> i luv this list; the only time i know what's happening is when th answer > is bpNichol!
>
> Mad for Bliss,
>
> carl
>
> > Dear list members,
> >
> > I would be grateful for any reading suggestions of contemporary poets > > who have used mathematical or logical models as occasions for composition.
> > Of course texts like Ashbery's _Flow Chart_ come immediately to mind, but > > I'm sure there are may other obvious choices that I'm just not coming up > > with. I am especially interested in women writers incorporating > > mathematical/logical systems into their work. I'll be thankful for all > > suggestions, obvious and obscure.
> >
> > Please copy any posts to me via backchannel.
> >
> > Many thanks in advance,
> >
> > Jennifer Ashton
> > Johns Hopkins University
> > [redacted]
> >

↑ Index

499. Steve Evans
Re: ILS 1.8 and then some
Thu 23 Oct 1997

I apologize for the delay in responding to members of the List who have inquired about the possibility of making Barrett Watten's "Bride of the Assembly Line" available on-line. The interest is certainly welcome and only successive nights of great poetry readings in Providence--Damon Krukowski and Joe Torra on Tuesday, then last night Michael Gizzi--have kept me from responding.

At this time the best I can do is offer to make the piece available, in all its slow-paced physicality, to those who are interested. There are still copies with imperfect binding (i.e. sloppy mechanical stapling that I had to re-staple) that I will mail, free, to anyone who asks. Watten does not yet have an author's page at EPC and doesn't foresee having the time to establish one in the immediate future. Jen and I are reasonably breathless from our monthly publishing schedule and don't easily contemplate adding another level of manifestation and maintenance to the project just now.

I admit to being a puzzled at the idea that a text cannot be discussed without reproducing it in its entirety. I thought metonymy, and the chain of distortions and corrections it unleashes, was half the fun of such discussions.

On the other hand, do read cover to cover and as soon as possible Michael Gizzi's _No Both_, just out in a joint venture from The Figures & Hard Press. Long the hardguy laureate (if you've not heard him read, imagine Mitchum doing a voice over of _Visions of Cody_) Gizzi's work since _Interferon_ (Great Barrington: The Figures, 1995) laces the vast Kerouacian periods with the kind of hard-won humanity one hears in O'Hara and Monk, in Coolidge, Luoma, and Mayer. It's very daring, very moving work. And while I'm in talk-it-up mode, why not mention also Joe Torra's _Keep Watching the Sky_ (Cambridge: Zoland, 1996), also a document of bop prosody and toughly sentimental long-hard-looks at what's become of us. Damon Krukowski's _5000 Musical Terms_ (Providence: Burning Deck, 1995) is literally that: five thousand words looking for a register, floating somewhere between rhetoric and music. His _Vexations_ are part Kafka-parable, part Cage-anecdote, part Borgesian-conceit, and all available as the next ILS, 1.9 in November. How's that for coming back to the pitch: schwew.... Hard Press, by the way, has a webpage at: http://hardpress.com/ (or you can cut right to _No Both_'s page at http://hardpress.com/newhp/catalog/gizzi.html).

Steve Evans

Impercipient Lecture Series
61 East Manning Stree

Providence RI 02906-4008
[redacted]

r i a t n m u

a t s u o o o s

↑ Index

500. Aviva Vogel
Re: ILS 1.8
Thu 23 Oct 1997

In a message dated 97-10-23 09:40:35 EDT, you write:

<< So I want to suggest to all ye listers out there, that we follow up on Jacques' call by responding to the ILS essay in a VARIETY of directions. >>

Henry, how does one FIND this essay???? Thanks! --Aviva

↑ Index

501. Susan Clark
Re: south asian women poets
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Maria,

Ashok Mathur and others have the HYPEN-NATION issue of their ABSINTHE mag up at http://www.ucalgary.ca/~amathur/hyphenation.html

There, you will see work by Sonia Chakrabarti and Minelle Mahtani's essay Sketching beyond the site-lines: a geographer's topography of the politics of negotiation for mixed "race" women and an installation "Modern Bride Burning' by Rina Banerjee

Also, try Yasmin Ladha in Calgary. She writes prose but teaches and has a special interest in women writers and active links to India [Delhi & Kashmir]. Absinthe should have an address for her. Or someone could backchannel me. My info may be old. She has a piece ["Samaan-luggage of a bride of a mujahideen of a nomad"] in RADDLE MOON 14.

best,
Susan RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

502. p. durgin
Address request / E. Myles
Thu 23 Oct 1997

List folk,

Has anyone got an e-mail address for Eileen Myles? Please back-channel if you would. Thanks.

Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

_____

↑ Index

503. mark weiss
Re: the forms and the laws
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Seems to me that if I write in a form that contains within it a certain idea of order that predates my choice to write in it I am either accepting that ordering or playing a game of "as if." Fine with me if others find this useful for their work. I don't. What I do find useful is the unfolding of process in a world I perhaps imprecisely call secular, meaning that it doesn't come with a set of maps or operating instructions, unlike the world inhabited by, say, Milton. The perceiver and his process are a big hunk of same. Put another way, I try to write/perceive as if the perceivable were inherently without information, the structures I bring with me seen as tentative at best. I'm not arguing against writing in forms, I just don't find it useful for myself in this project, and I rarely find the efforts of others in this vein useful.

> M. Weiss wrote:
>
> I have nothing against syllogisms, I just don't find them particularly useful for me as a mode of inquiry. Put another way, for me to write a sonnet I'd have to experience life and language as governed by an apparent logic. The logic, the coherence, would be a given. In the secular world in which I live whatever logic may be available takes a bit more exploration to discover.
>
> Hard for me to swallow this as an argument against writing in forms. Why would you 'have to' experience life a certain way to use a (received, he sd, sotto voce) form, unless you suppose that art must be mimetic in certain respects. Why could one not create order, or to use a shadier term, impose it on the 'secular' world? Isn't this what we do w/ our perceptions all the time. Of course, one might have the poetic aim of shaking off the shackles of knee-jerk everyday 'ordering' or 'forming,' but then one is just trying > to be truer to the 'actual' perceiver-indepdent forms of life, on some level. And speaking of perceiver-independence...

↑ Index

504. William Burmeister Prod
(no subject)
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Announcement for anyone who may be in the South Florida/Miami area today(I know this is late):

Andrei Codrescu

in

WHOSE WOODS ARE THESE ANYWAY?

will lecture on the immigration experience

Oct 23 @ 7:00 pm

at the Miami Museum of Art, 101 W. Flagler, downtown Miami

($5.00 for museum non-members)

↑ Index

505. James Finnegan
Re: Elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Back a few years, there was anthology of Elvis poems published entitled Mondo Elvis, I believe.
Probably still in print. Also, a Mondo Marilyn anthology was put out by the same editors. Never read either, so I can't say what the poetry was like.

Finnegan

↑ Index

506. Graham W Foust
Re: elvis poems
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Sylvester--

Joe Wenderoth's "Wallace Stevens Describing the Need For And Then The Consequences Of Elvis Presley" is an excellent poem about the King (it's in his book _Disfortune_ from Wesleyan U. Press, 1995).

Graham

↑ Index

507. Pam Brown

Re: south asian women poets

Thu 23 Oct 1997

Hello Maria Damon -
Tonight in Sydney I will be attending a reading by a Vietnamese writer - Pham Thi Hoai - whose books, whilst not literally poetry, are "poetic" in that she experiments with time/space within a narrative form.The book "Thien Su" has been translated into French as "Le Messager Crystal" and, now, apparently into English - "The Crystal Messenger" - which I intend to buy tonight. I could email you the publisher's details if you like.
Another more well-known Vietnamese writer is Duong Thu Huong - her books are available in the US- try "Novel Without A Name"- she is not as "experimental" as Hoai but is always in trouble with the authorities for writing explicit & non-romantic stories critical of VN society.
Best wishes,
Pam Brown
6 AM 23/10/97 -0500, you wrote: >on behalf of one of my students, a query:
>can any of you suggest how to get hold of the work of south asian women (or >of south asian descent) "experimental" (or whatever) poets? names, >websites, journal articles or unpublished material all appreciated.
>
>

↑ Index

508. Aviva Vogel

Re: ILS 1.8 and then some

Thu 23 Oct 1997

Steve, would you be willing to send a copy of ILS 1.8, postage due, to me?

Aviva Vogel
P.O. Box 1085
Norwich, VT 05055-1085

And thanks for poe-tips. I'll return the favor by offering some responses someday. I know it's a hassle to mail this essay, but I'd be much obliged. Gracias, Aviva

↑ Index

509. Thomas Bell
Re: the forms and the laws
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Mark, Yes. This might be a useful (in the sense of leading or getting somewhere) rule-of-thumb for what I've started to see as action or process poetry. I've generally come to always do the same but without articulating it as well as you do. For me it has a lot to do with the idea that if you know how you are going to get to a certain before you leave the journey is not as compelling. It also has to do with my perception that existing forms and language have gotten us into our current muddle and maybe the maps are part of the problem. I guess this is my langpoey coming out - does however go back at least as far as Olson and Gestalt therapy, tho and is echoed today by Mihali Csikszentimihalyi "In the past, things evolved essentially on the basis of external forces that pushed us in a certain direction and we went along with them. Religion and other philosophical systems, such as nationalism, communism, or other ideologies, supplied the meaning that integrated a person's life. At this moment, there isn't much that apeals to the hearts and minds of people with the strength and conviction that those earlier idea systems had. At this point, there is the possiblity of doing things differently." tom bell

At 10:54 AM 10/23/97 -0700, mark weiss wrote: >Seems to me that if I write in a form that contains within it a certain >idea of order that predates my choice to write in it I am either accepting >that ordering or playing a game of "as if." Fine with me if others find >this useful for their work. I don't.
>What I do find useful is the unfolding of process in a world I perhaps >imprecisely call secular, meaning that it doesn't come with a set of maps >or operating instructions, unlike the world inhabited by, say, Milton. The >perceiver and his process are a big hunk of same. Put another way, I try to >write/perceive as if the perceivable were inherently without information, >the structures I bring with me seen as tentative at best.
>I'm not arguing against writing in forms, I just don't find it useful for >myself in this project, and I rarely find the efforts of others in this >vein useful.
>
>>M. Weiss wrote:
>>

>>>I have nothing against syllogisms, I just don't find them particularly >>>useful for me as a mode of inquiry. Put another way, for me to write a >>>sonnet I'd have to experience life and language as governed by an apparent >>>logic. The logic, the coherence, would be a given. In the secular world in >>>which I live whatever logic may be available takes a bit more exploration >>>to discover.
>>>
>>
>>Hard for me to swallow this as an argument against writing in forms. Why >>would you 'have to' experience life a certain way to use a (received, he sd, >>sotto voce) form, unless you suppose that art must be mimetic in certain >>respects. Why could one not create order, or to use a shadier term, impose >>it on the 'secular' world? Isn't this what we do w/ our perceptions all the >>time. Of course, one might have the poetic aim of shaking off the shackles >>of knee-jerk everyday 'ordering' or 'forming,' but then one is just trying >>to be truer to the 'actual' perceiver-indepdent forms of life, on some >>level. And speaking of perceiver-independence...
>>
>
>

↑ Index

510. Jordan Davis
Re: sonnets and certainty
Thu 23 Oct 1997

Case in point, Robert!

And what an array. Creeley at Columbia (at 8 or so), Rudy Burckhardt's paintings and Joe Brainard's Small collages at Tibor de Nagy (724 5th Ave, 5-7 pm opening), Brendan Lorber & Anselm Berrigan at Biblios (Church & Walker at 6:30), and at Poetry City, postcolonial night with R. Zamora Linmark & Jorge Clar (5 Union Sq W, 7 pm). So if you're in New York...

Sincerely,
Linus

↑ Index

511. David Israel ars po
Thu 23 Oct 1997

| question (why literature) rub
|
| The life as consciously imagined
| shows the life blooming in semblance
| of the real (not so much a dissembling
| as a resembling? -- reality as end toward
| which the unreal (imgination) would reach?
|
| to be or to seem that's the
|
| aye that's the
|
| so that here imagination follows consciously
| an else unconscious road of construc-
| tion: the brick-on-brick tree o'er tree
| method that builds everything al-
| ways? place upon such a built
| thing a new building to gain
| glimpse of the uncreated?
|
|
| d.i. 10/23/97

↑ Index

512. Tom Beard
Re: Sokallese
Fri 24 Oct 1997

> On the one hand Tom wants > to separate the way Thales would think of souls from the way John > McCarthy might (actually I was trying to be tongue in cheek and thought > no one would interpret the remark so literally);

I had to assume that you were being literal, because I wasn't sure whether John McCarthy had used the word 'soul'. There was an active discussion some years back here about the use of the word soul, and my position was that one should be wary when using such a word, since it drags with it so many connotations. One person might be using it to refer to an immortal, transferable soul; another might mean a conscious entity with subjectivity; someone else might be talking about Ray Charles.

I don't think that this can be considered a continuum of meaning in the way that "technology" might ("Judy wants to ad hoc consider weaving as an historical/technological continuum, Burlington and the Jacquard loom existing in the same spirit as the practice of hand weaving"). If we think of any "technique" as being "technological", then we don't even need to invoke a continuum. In fact, I imagine (and others with a better knowledge of history might be able to confirm or otherwise) that hand weaving may have had at least as radical an effect upon the society of the time as the Jacquard loom in its time.

> Tom, through Jaynes' Origins of Consciousness and the Breakdown of the Bicameral Mind, insists that metaphor is unavoidable. I would agree even unto methods of mathematization and quantification. That's where the quotes from Hegel and Adorno and Horkheimer come in.

I think more of "metaphor" (in the linguistic sense) as a subset of the process (abstraction? pattern recognition? taxonomy? symbolism?) that makes consciousness possible.

> YOU DON'T NEED SCIENCE TO HAVE REGARD FOR THE REAL

Agreed. But once one has "regard for the real", I find that the other processes that you mention ("mathematization, quantification, formalization, reduction") come in very useful when making statements about "the real". The problem lies in recognising the cases where they cease to be useful.

Many of the problems that people have with reductionism is that they think of only the first part of a process, analysis, and forget about synthesis. We can learn a lot about a stone, for example, by looking at its chemical composition. But one cannot ignore how it's put together, or you'll just get a pile of Silicon and Iron atoms.

The statement "the whole is equal to the sum of its parts" is a parody of reductionism, if you take the word "sum" literally. I prefer to say that "the whole is a function of its parts", or "the whole can be usefully understood in terms of its parts". In fact, "the whole = the sum of its parts" is the very definition of linearity (f(sum(x)) = sum(f(x))), so in any non-linear system we have to take a more subtle approach to synthesis and be aware that an analytic solution might not be possible.

> For the vast majority of us scientific literacy would be a meaningless waste > of productive time anyway because if our conclusions wouldn't matter in > any case.

Maybe I'm just not as cynical about the democratic process as you. People are voting all the time on fluoridated water, carbon emissions, drug laws and other issues in which good science would be informative. I do find scientific illiteracy frightening, in the way that I find geographical ignorance frightening. It frightened me that many Americans during the Falklands war thought that the Falklands were somewhere near the Shetlands, because it gave them the appearance that the Argentines were just about invading Britain. Similarly, the "Dihydrogen Monoxide" story is a source of worry, because it shows how many people can be swayed by hype (from any side of the argument) and the fear of admitting ignorance. It's just a pity that it's been co-opted for the purposes you mention.

The funniest of this kind of hoax that I've come across is Chris Morris' "Brass Eye" series, especially the "cake" and "heavy electricity" episodes. The willingness of so many politicians to publicly denounce a "metabolically bisturbile amphetamoid" without first checking the sources of the pressure group shows not only how much the War on Some Drugs is fuelled by ignorance, but also how allegedly educated people will parrot any prepared statement rather than admit that they don't know what they're talking about.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

513. Hugh Steinberg
readings
Fri 24 Oct 1997

I'll be in New Jersey from November 22 through December 2. I know that floats around Thanksgiving, but are there any readings going on in New York or Philadelphia during that time?

Thanks!

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

514. Douglas Barbour
Re: the forms and the laws
Fri 24 Oct 1997

I respect both Mark & Tom's holding out for form-in-process, but I'm not sure that absolutely has to signal no use of imposed 'rules.' Even the Coleridge example of chosen rhyme words, somewhat like a 'form' my colleague Stephen Scobie & I like to call 'word/line acrostics,' or many another 'arbitrary' imposition of language, can leave lots of room for improvisation. I think having some words already 'there' may be a way of allowing language to work with the writer writing -- into what is to be found there. And the 'play' --off & toward those words already there -- can lead to discoveries of possibilities sometimes beyond what one is aware one is aware of, so to speak. The arbitrary opens:

Sometimes it's a way of getting started too...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

516. groberts
Z=A.9/?
Fri 24 Oct 1997

The recent query re mathematical poetics reminded me that I have yet to find a good explanation of how Zukofsky's use of the formula for a conic section governs the distribution of "n" and "r" in the canzone of "A". The hints in Z:Man and Poet are not enough, for me anyway. Does anyone know of a good "close reading" of this section, or better yet, is anyone willing to try it here for those of us who cannot understand the formula or its application?

Gary R.

↑ Index

517. henry
Re: Z=A.9/?
Fri 24 Oct 1997

On Fri, 24 Oct 1997 10:48:16 -0500 <[redacted]> said:
>The recent query re mathematical poetics reminded me that I have >yet to find a good explanation of how Zukofsky's use of the formula for a conic >section governs the distribution of "n" and "r" in the >canzone of "A". The hints in Z:Man and Poet are not enough, for me >anyway. Does anyone know of a good "close reading" of this section, >or better yet, is anyone willing to try it here for those of us who >cannot understand the formula or its application?

Barry Ahearn's book _Zukofsky's "A" : an introduction_ has an appendix which gets into the math background in A-8 & -9, including how to read the n's & r's. I don't know how accurate it is. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

518. henry g'
friday's riddle
Fri 24 Oct 1997

Since everybody's being very quiet...

has anybody else noticed that the late Hannah Wiener is (in a certain sense) a character in Istanbul author Orphan Pamuk's novel THE BLACK BOOK?

I've been saying we've been getting more byzantine for a long time...

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

519. Thomas Bell
Reenactment of feeling in writing/reading and Nick Piombino quote
Fri 24 Oct 1997

This quote struck me as true for the most part. But for me I find that I am more likely to reenact an emotion when I am writing than when I am reading. I also feel I can have some control over the quantity of feeling I invest. Is this true in others' experience? Anyone else written about this? Might be anoth rule-of-thumb for action or process poetry. tom bell

"We can get an approzimation of experience through words in that memories, because of their subjective character, reenact the meanings we apply to experiences, just as when we read we reenact the meanings we apply to a sequence of words. When we say to ourselves, when reading, "That's how I feel" or "That's how I see myself," we are often tempted to underline the words we were reading when we experienced the feeling of comprehension. Yet then, strangely, when we reread the underlined passage, often it no longer contains the meaning we imagined it held. Nick Piombino, _The Boundary of Blur_, New York, Roof Books, 1993, p. 25.

↑ Index

520. David R. Israel
Re: Elvis poems
Fri 24 Oct 1997

From Sylvester Pollet

> Thanks, all, for the Elvis poems & citations. I expect it's easier to start a thread than to stop one . . .

yep, probably. To illustrate (or confirm), here's an Elvis tidbit (though incomplete). The Kronos Quartet, performing maybe two years ago (? - in this case at the Kennedy Center) included a sound-collage-based work by a youngish composer whose name, alas, has not lingered in mind. The piece might've been called "Elvis has left the building." If memory serves, much of the text (recorded stuff) was taken from a conference of Elvis impersonators.

I'm not much of a fan of Elvis chic, but did enjoy that piece. Perhaps the method used was a bit like things that (say) Scott Johnson / Gavin Bryers / et al. have done -- at least sharing some of that likeable decontextualize / recontextualize a voice approach ...

do poets here know of Scott Johnson's work of this type, I wonder? No doubt Herb Levy could do it better justice than I.

d.i.
.
.....
.....
\\\

523. Susan Wheeler
Readings
Sat 25 Oct 1997

Armand Schwerner is reading at Posman Books in NYC next Sunday, the 2nd, at 3pm. His reading at the XCP conference in Minneapolis was EXTRAORDINARY, and I would urge any proximate listites to run not walk. He read (and played, a caseful of flutes being intrinsic to the work aloud) from the tablets in Minneapolis with a focus and intensity that was riveting -- and very, darkly, funny.

Susan

PS As for other events there that have stayed with me lo this past week, I was grateful for Yunte Huang's discussion of Charlie Chan & Ezra Pound, a thoughtful reading by Roy Miki, Juliana Chang's talk on the generational shift of influence modes, the elevated oratory of cris cheek's amazing performance, ace readings by Jeff Derksen and Aldon Nielsen, Alan Golding's latticed "Po-Biz, Cult. Stud., and Avant-Gardes?" back-to-back with post-Derridean stream by Kangmi Kim, and both Michael Bibby's and Elizabeth Frost's papers on a panel on "Post-War African American Poetry" -- both of which complicated our notions of inclusions and exclusions from canons as well as from canonical "interpretations." An event at the Walker was a treat primarily for a terrific Beuys show there now. I was grateful for hearing much else (and also not hearing but reading -- ie a paper by Joe Amato I overslept). There was much I regretted missing, and joy in many affinities found. Thanks to Mark Nowak and Maria Damon for a problematic, genial, and sometimes thrilling, few days.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

524. creinervppp
litpress.com
Sat 25 Oct 1997

Dear Listfolks:

LITPRESS.COM is now up and running with announcments of new publications. The address is, simply:

http://www.litpress.com

LITPRESS.COM is a place where publishers, authors, editors or anyone can announce new publications (books or magazines) or poetry, prose or criticism.

The focus is on innovative or experimental or avant garde (or any of those problematic words) work.

These announcements will be updated every Monday (starting November 3, 1997).

LITPRESS.COM is hosted by L.A. Books, a coalition of publishers in Los Angeles: the book presses Littoral Books and Seeing Eye Books, and the magazines Rhizome, Ribot and Witz.

I'd appreciate any comments or suggestions about the site.

--Chris Reiner (LITPRESS.COM curator)

[redacted]

Christopher Reiner
[redacted]

↑ Index

525. robert drake
Re: Hans Ebner (fwd)
Sat 25 Oct 1997

> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Sat, 25 Oct 1997 12:03:39 -0400
> From: Kurt Nimmo <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Hans Ebner
>
> This morning I received the sad news from Virgil Hervey that the poet Hans Ebner has died from cancer. Hans was sick for a long time, underwent therapy, his cancer was in remission, but he ultimately lost the battle. Virgil has asked me to write a few words about Hans, a friend since the late seventies.
>
> I met Hans while editing THE SMUDGE REVIEW with Doug Mumm in the late seventies. Hans was connected to the Detroit literary scene, which at the time was mostly academic. Ebner, however, was not an academic poet -- while connected to the academic scene, he was distinctly apart from it, due mostly from his experiences in Vietnam, where he served a tour of duty as a grunt and had experienced the tribulation of combat. Hans was the only veteran I have known to open up about his experiences. I will never forget his story about the night his compound came under attack and he lost several friends. Hans did not hold back -- the hallmark of a true poet -- and I will never forget his vivid and nightmarish descriptions of combat and the anguish he felt not only at the loss of his fellow soldiers, but also over his own participation in the killing of Vietnamese in that insane and completely unnecessary war. All of this came out in his poetry -- and also in a novel that never saw the light of publication.

Ebner, along with Detroit poet Hank Malone and Christine Lahey-Dolega, became a cornerstone of THE SMUDGE REVIEW in the late seventies. Through his affiliation with THE SMUDGE, Ebner met and entered a short relationship with the San Francisco poet Joanie Whitebird, a woman best remembered for a fling with Bukowski in the early seventies. Hans was divorced at the time and the affair was short and emotional.

It was the political and factional nature of the Detroit literary scene that eventually put a strain on our friendship. I lost contact with Hans as the seventies came to an end and THE SMUDGE REVIEW ceased publication. And while I continued to publish literary magazines through the eighties, I did not hear from Hans. As it turned out, he left the Detroit area and eventually settled in Nevada. It was the Internet that finally brought us back in contact with each other, nearly twenty years after our last communication. Hans had found my website, and thus my email address, and we began sending each other messages. He was working for the government in Las Vegas, beginning to write poetry again after a long hiatus, and I urged him to subscribe to this listserv, which he did. Thanks to GB&G, Hans made many new friends and began publishing his poetry again.

I will miss Hans Ebner, a sincere and compassionate friend. It is my intention to dedicate a section of the upcoming PNG POETRY ONLINE to his poetry.. If any members of the list have comments -- or poems from Hans -- that they would like to send, please feel free to do so. My email address is: [redacted]. If possible, as well, I would like to publish personal information about Hans. Regrettably, I do not know the date of his birth, or do I have a recent photo of him before his illness. If any list recipients have this, please contact me. I would like to make the page as inclusive as possible.

Hans Ebner deserves it.

Kurt Nimmo
October 25, 1997

Kurt Nimmo: [redacted]
Web Backlash: http://members.tripod.com/~knimmo

> PDFs of Kurt Nimmo: http://ic.net/~knimmo/png.htm
> resume: http://ic.net/~knimmo/resume
>
> The Net is nothing but an inert mass of metal, > plastic and sand. We are the only living beings > in cyberspace. --Richard Barbrook
> ---

↑ Index

526. Susan Schultz
Louis Simpson
Sat 25 Oct 1997

This is probably not the place to vent about the _American Poetry Review_, or Louis Simpson, but I feel compelled to comment on his "747 poem" in the new issue. (A 747 poem is one written by someone who comes to Hawai'i on a plane, stays for a few days, and then writes with great authority about the place.) The poem, "Kaimana Beach," is riddled with errors and cliches, so I'll quote parts. The beach in question is in Honolulu, on O'ahu.

> The moon with a ring > colored like a rainbow > above the ocean (Makai).

Well, makai doesn't mean ocean, it means "in the direction of the ocean."

> To the north (Mauka)

Mauka means "towards the mountains," so wherever you are, north or south of them, mauka would indicate their direction. OK, so Kaimana Beach is south of the mountains. . . Simpson then drops another marker, "Ewa," which means toward the Ewa side of the island. Of course one can learn these things five minutes after arriving here.

> So every day would begin.
> They [these are definitely tourists] would go for a drive > inland, across the mountains [actually you go through them], > or east around the shore [around the shore?]
> and look at the Chinese Hat.

There is no place called Chinese Hat, but there is a small offshore island called "Chinaman's Hat."

> But in a fortnight
> one coconut looks much like another, > and now they pass the mornings > sitting or lying on the sand

> at the Outrigger Canoe Club, > listening to the waves,
> and the names of children > being called . . . "Joy!" and "Milo!"

How sweet. Of course coconuts are cut down so early and often here (they are dangerous to one's health, if they fall), that no one could get sick of them.

The poem concludes with a long passage about how this woman misses her work; there's simply nothing to do in Hawai'i except listen for the sounds of "Joy!" and drive around. No help anywhere, save perhaps from the good Lord:

> Lord, let us have something > to read. For there is no one > to talk to: only the sand > and a clatter of dishes,
> the flapping of umbrellas,
> and shadows of the afternoon.

I'd better cut this message short. I have three classes to prepare for, need to read a 500 page novel this weekend for the personnel committee that I'm on, have to ship out more issues of my journal of Pacific poetry, which includes a lot of work by people from H, need to recover from a week that saw a Tinfish reading and a thesis defense by a graduate student who works with me. awai'i. And what the hell, I may even take a walk. The weather really is lovely today over those mountains that are to the south of me...

Susan
Kane'ohe, Hawai'i

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

527. Susan Schultz
Louis Simpson, ps
Sat 25 Oct 1997

There were a couple of glitches in my message, due to the tendency of my telnet account to make word salad. I trust that the sense survives, however.

sms

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

528. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Louis Simpson, ps
Sat 25 Oct 1997

delighted to be one of the tinfish swimming in the aquarium -- a good issue all around -- thanks again

↑ Index

529. John Tranter
Jacket magazine # 1 and # 2
Sat 25 Oct 1997

Announcement: The first issue of John Tranter's Jacket magazine is complete and has been posted to the Internet at > http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

It's free, international, full of stylish writing, and user-friendly.

Jacket # 1 contains a look at the 1943 hoax poet Ern Malley with rare photos, writing by Charles Bernstein, Elaine Equi, Pamela Brown, Alfred Corn, Joanne Burns, Tracy Ryan, Carl Rakosi, Peter Minter, Susan Schultz, Ron Koertge, Beth Spencer, and Paul Hoover, interviews with English poet Roy Fisher and Australian aboriginal poet Lionel Fogarty, reviews of John Berger and Les Murray, and the poetry and prose of the late Martin Johnston.

Jacket # 2 will mainly feature the work of John Ashbery, who turns 70 this year, but there will be lots of other material as well. It will be finalised by January 1998, but right now you can preview the following:

... a new poem by John Ashbery, "The Burden of the Park" ... Marjorie Perloff on "Normalizing John Ashbery" ... John Tranter's "Three John Ashberys" (an Introduction to Ashbery's work) ... Steve Evans's meditation of Bob Perelman's "The Marginalization of Poetry", an article on type, and poems by Eileen Myles, August Kleinzahler, Robert Adamson, S.K.Kelen, John Kinsella and Michael Heller, together with sparkling photos of the usual suspects.

Jacket also features a LITERARY LINKS page with annotated connections to print and electronic magazines, and an international BOOKSTORE page with a host of useful information and live links. Also a page of tips on Internet DESIGN (how to avoid rendering your visitors unconscious with boredom), with a few secret passageways to the Caves of the Webmeisters.

I'm sorry to have to say that I am not yet able to handle or accept unsolicited submissions -- I simply don't have the time. Maybe by 1998.

And please excuse the following flagrant and desperate attempt to attract extra audience members for three poetry-reading appearances in the Northern Hemisphere by John Tranter:

Saturday 2 November, 9 p.m., Club Room, Churchill College, Cambridge University (ENGLAND) with Tracy Ryan, Michael Hulse, and Michael Schmidt. Contact Tim Cribb Tel. 01223 336 194 or John Kinsella e-mail [redacted]

Monday 24 November, 7:30 pm, at KGB, 85 East 4th Street, East Village, NEW YORK. Reading with Geoffrey O’Brien. Organisers David Lehman and Star Black.

Saturday 29 November, 7:30 pm, New College Cultural Center, 776 Valencia Street, SAN FRANCISCO. Reading with New York poet Tim Davis. Organiser: Dodie Bellamy, Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center.

Please tell your friends about Jacket, whose motto is "bop till you drop!"

from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

530. Alan rm -r Sondheim
Reading
Sun 26 Oct 1997

This Thursday, October 30th, at 7:00, I'm doing a reading with David Bromige as part of the Poetry City series at Teachers and Writers, 5 Union Square West, 7th Floor. You can call for information at 212- [redacted]. Union Square West is around 14th Street and University. There are many subway and bus stops nearby.

Now, I may be fairly inarticulate because I am doing Jennifer and Julu and they are not there and I have to use a Mac with voices which are not theirs either, you see? And I am afraid they might not like that, but they are buried at the moment deep in my linux box which I am putting into storage because I am going to Fukuoka the next morning, so I will not be around to revive them.

So this will be an odd experiment on the hinge of time and avatar, which will most certainly succeed where it will fail, and fail where it will succeed. In any case, you could come and see what I look like, on the virge.

Alan

↑ Index

531. Rob Hardin
The Films of Henry Hills at the Anthology Film Archives
Sun 26 Oct 1997

Just saw a few of the films of Henry Hills after having watched W. Has's _The Saragossa Manuscript_. I am still absorbing the grotesque beauty of Has's films as we speak; but I thought it perhaps more germaine to this list to speak of Hills's films.

I particularly enjoyed Hills's collaborations with Sally Silvers. Even in Hills's other films, virtuosic editing and humor were everywhere present. Still, the other films seemed to exist in a kind of post-narrrative purgatory--in a realm between Abigail Child and, say, Aram Avakian's _The End of the Road_.

"Insufficiently synthetic" is a phrase I seem to remember from Charles Bernstein. This phrase accurately describes Hills's film, _Money_ (1985), which included hocket-staccatoed performances by Bernstein and other members of LP's sporadic cast. The editing was riveting, of course, but the content seemed mere static documentary--whereas in Hills's collaborations with Silver, such as Mysteries of the Brain (1997) and _Little Lieutenant_ (1993), both macrostructure and microstructure felt consistently rich and engaging.

Some elements of conventional narrative seem to survive in Hills's films and, oddly, these elements would seem to detract from Hill's many virtues. So long as the abstract grid of dance is present, he does not falter, and feels some overriding rhythm, some pan-narrative, that is capable of propelling several correlates through measured time. But when Hill's material is merely cumulative, and the task at hand becomes merely technical, as it seems to do in Money, then the work seems reduced to pyrotechnics, and cries for the semantic resonance of an Abigail Child.

I don't mean to put down Hills here--his films were consistently witty and entertaining. But the viewer who is concerned with questions of form might find more fecund innovations in Hills's collaborations, and in the work of his contemporaries, than in Hills's minor works.

All the best,

Scrypt

↑ Index

532. David R. Israel
several absurds
Sun 26 Oct 1997

[was, Re: sonnets and certainty]

Playing a bit of list catchup here, wayback on Wed, 22 Oct 1997

quoth Jordan Davis --

> It is absurd to discuss form with formalists. Formalists by definition know nothing about form . . .

following this model:

It is absurd to discuss biology with biologists. Biologists by definition know nothing about biology.

It is absurd to discuss agriculture with agriculturalists. Agriculturalists by definition know nothing about agricultur[al].

It is absurd to discuss method with Methodists. Methodists by definition know nothing about method.

It is absurd to discuss reduction with reductionists. Reductionists by definition know nothing about reduction.

It is absurd to discuss Marx with Marxists. Marxists by definition know nothing about Marx.

It is absurd to discuss minimal with minimalists. Minimalists by definition know nothing about minimal.

It is absurd to discuss postmodernism with postmodernists. Postmodernists by definition know nothing about postmodernism.

(Well, must admit I wasn't reading in sequence nor (hence) did I quite follow the antecedent diologue, so am uncertain just what Jordan was wishing to say or -- indeed -- clarify. Hey, found language is found language.)

absurdly yours truly,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
   >    david   raphael   israel    <
   >>      washington  d.c.      <<
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇   (home)
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
 ==========================
 |   thy centuries follow each other
 |   perfecting a small wild flower
 |                                (Tagore)
 ////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

533. Ryan Whyte
and
Sun 26 Oct 1997

---

silence works at the walls mazes marked in, in the same sourceless echo across pediment, architrave walls cover the face when it opens open depressed body turns inward great hand

to the unwanted silence works in the sheets

gold no longer an economy, and, and

↑ Index

534. Marcella
Talisman Benefit
Sun 26 Oct 1997

I just wanted to announce the Talisman Benefit (for those in NYC) at the Zinc Bar tonight, Sunday 10/26, at 6:15 pm. Readers: Eileen Myles, Michael Heller, Sean Killian, Lisa Jarnot, Charles Borkhuis, Chris Stroffolino, & Leonard Schwartz. The Zinc Bar is at 90 West Houston St. in a basement, so watch your feet.

↑ Index

535. Jordan Davis
Re: several absurds
Sun 26 Oct 1997

David --

Quite good, but for full credit you would have had to spot that the following citation was not, as stated, from Wallace Stevens, but from Oscar Wilde.

Historians of prosody are one thing, and demagogues of form are another. I think I was just going for parody. I am more aware now that I ought not do that.

Thanks,
Jordan

↑ Index

536. Douglas Barbour
Re: Louis Simpson
Sun 26 Oct 1997

Well, those quotes certainly make as strong a case as I've recently seen against 'travel poems.' It's always the attitude -- that 'I' am not like other tourists -- that gets me. All that anger, Susan: sad to have to waste it on such a stupid little poem...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English

University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

is in the lead for All-Time Favorite American Poet with 4 votes, and a bunch of people, including Ron Silliman and Charles Bernstein, are tied for favorite living poet with two votes, each.

I continue to make little improvements to the site. The voting process, for instance, is easier now. And the voting slots are on the home page so you don't have to click anything to get to it. I stole the alphabet from the Poetry Center page for small presses and alphabetized the biographical entries, too. And incorporated a few suggestions into the survey, like a question on sexual orientation (which, of course, needn't be answered). I want people to have a chance to say everything they want to about themselves, and nothing they don't want to.

Six poems are on display, too.

I figure there have been about 100 visits to the site excluding mine over the past two weeks. I expect it to be a near-invisible attraction but interest to increase in it as more poets fill out survey forms. Anyhow, I hope for more survey responses.

Also, corrections and comments from those who have already sent me responses to the survey.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

539. David R. Israel
Re: several absurds
Sun 26 Oct 1997

Hey, I'm lately reading Poetics in digest, so am currently blind as to what reply (if any) my brief remarks under the above-rubric'd rubric may've elicited in lo these past X number of hours. However, it occurs to me -- in re-glancing at Jordan Davis's sentence -- that -- Egads! -- the locus classicus syntactically underlying same is obviously those crazy (that is, irrational) sentences of Mahayana Buddhist fame, wherein a whole bevy of metaphysical realities are defined in exactly that manner. In fact, weren't some of said, involved w/ matters of "form"? Hmmmm . . .

> It is absurd to discuss form with formalists. Formalists by definition know nothing about form . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

540. James Brook
ellen ullman, close to the machine
Sun 26 Oct 1997

Ellen Ullman, alumna of my anthology of a couple of years ago, Resisting the Virtual Life, has just published Close to the Machine: Technophilia and Its Discontents (City Lights), her memoir of a literate, political software engineer's life.

Andrei Codrescu's blurb is accurate: "This book is a little masterpiece, an exquisitely melancholy cry from a body disappearing into the machine. It is a wrenching swan-song for human beings. I have never read anything like it because nothing like it could have been written before. Here is the perfect way to say goodbye to the millenium."

You can see Ellen Ullman read aloud and gesticulate at the following locations:

San Francisco
Tues, Oct 28, 7:30 - 9PM: Modern Times
888 Valencia, SF, [redacted]

Palo Alto
Wed, Oct 29, 8 - 9:30 PM: Printer's Inc.
310 California Ave, Palo Alto
[redacted]

Mill Valley
Thurs, Oct 30, 7:30 - 9PM: Depot Bookstore and Cafe
87 Throckmorton Ave, Mill Valley [redacted]

Capitola
Mon, Nov 3, 7:30 - 9PM: Capitola Book Cafe
1475 41st Street, Capitola [redacted]

Minneapolis
Fri, Nov 7, 8PM: Hungry Mind Bookstore
1648 Grand Avenue, Minneapolis [redacted]

Iowa City
Tues, Nov 11, 8PM: Prairie Lights Book Shop
15 South Dubuque St. [redacted]

Seattle
Thurs, Nov 13, time?: Elliott Bay Book Store
101 South Main Street, [redacted]

Portland
Fri, Nov 14, 7:30 - 9PM: Powell's Books
1005 West Burnside, Portland [redacted]

LA (Santa Monica)
Wed, Nov 19, 7:30: Midnight Special 1318 Third St., Santa Monica [redacted]

NY
Tues, Dec 2, 7PM: Tower Books
383 Layfayette St, NY [redacted]

↑ Index

541. Herb Levy
Re: Elvis poems
Sun 26 Oct 1997

David Israel wrote:

> I'm not much of a fan of Elvis chic, but did enjoy that piece. Perhaps the method used was a bit like things that (say) Scott Johnson / Gavin Bryers / et al. have done -- at least sharing some of that likeable decontextualize / recontextualize a voice approach ...
>
> do poets here know of Scott Johnson's work of this type, I wonder? No doubt Herb Levy could do it better justice than I.

I don't think I've heard the Kronos piece you mentioned, but iI'd guess it's by Michael Daugherty (whose name may be spelled with an "o" instead of that "a"). He's done many pieces based on pop culture figures.

There are at least two or three pieces based on Elvis' oeuvre. The earliest may be the best: Jim Tenney's Collage #1 (Blue Suede); though David Mahler's King of Angels is also very good. Both of these cut up, loop, slowdown, and otherwise alter Elvis' work through classic tape manipulation techniques (they were made well before digital sampling was developed). Mahler's piece ends with "the King" singing his own name through the wonders of technology. They're both available on CDs from the Artifact label: The Tenney disc is called Selected Works 1961-69; the Mahler disc is called Voice of the Poet (after another piece based on an interview with composer Ingram Marshall). These Web sites should have more information:

<http://www.artifact.com/>

<http://www.emf.org/>

Another, somewhat different approach to altering Elvis' sound can be heard on the John Oswald (no longer in print, never commercially available) Plunderphonics CD. On this disc Oswald used all manner of tape and digital technology to create new music from old. The Elvis track is called Don't & involves a bunch of overdubbed tracks on top of the original recordings. While the press run of this CD was ultimately destroyed (supposedly due to copyright infringement, but rumor has it that Michael Jackson's dislike of the cover collage placing his head on the body of a scantily clad woman had more ot do with it), the entire contents of the disc can be downloaded from the Internet. Here's the URL for an FTP site with these audio tracks. (Note that some of these files are very large and even on speedy university connections may take quite a while to download.)

<ftp://vorlon.mit.edu/pub/plunderphonic/>

This site has a lot of Oswald related material, including detailed information on his various Plunderphonics projects:

http://www.io.org/~vacuvox/x/plunder.html

I imagine there's other new music related to Elvis out there, that's all I can think of now.

> d.i.
> .
> .....

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

542. Stacie Slotnick
George Oppen's "A Kind of Garden: A Poem for my Sister"
Sun 26 Oct 1997

Fellow listmembers,

For a class presentation on the above poem, can anyone point me to any writing specifically on this poem? My research hasn't turned anything up. Thanks in advance.

Stacie Slotnick
[redacted]

↑ Index

543. simon
Re: Elvis poems
Mon 27 Oct 1997

Just to finish the reference,

The short story collection with the lead story about Elvis is Janice Eidus' _The Celibacy Club_.

beth simon
assistant professor, linguistics and english indiana university purdue university
[redacted]

↑ Index

544. Michael Heller
(no subject)
Mon 27 Oct 1997

READING AT POSMAN BOOKS,
1 University Place,
New York, NY

MICHAEL HELLER & ARMAND SCHWERNER

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 2ND @ 3PM

↑ Index

545. Safdie Joseph
Re: Beyond Baroque Saturday night
Mon 27 Oct 1997

Would greatly appreciate, back-channel, any reports of scheduled Ed Dorn reading at Beyond Baroque in L.A. last Saturday -- including whether it happened or not!

Thanks in advance,

Joe Safdie

↑ Index

546. Jack Foley
SOKAL & LACAN
Mon 27 Oct 1997

I have obtained the following comment by Joe Brennan on the Sokal affair, which I offer to interested list members:

goliath again

"Flesh composed of suns! How can this be?"

`Do Crossword Puzzles'

Why is it when the officially sanctioned experts of the world step outside the cover of their specialties they tend to behave like sophomoric fops brandishing digital stilettos as if wielding death rays? It's an ignorance of some magnitude to think of Postmodernists, as Alan Sokal apparently does, as a monolithic lot; one can find within the collective body of their theoretical poetics a unity in word only; one finds innumerable divergent and/or opposed theoretical constructs and definitions. But it's as pointless to expect Postmodernists to produce a coherent manifesto as it was to have expected the Futurists, either the Russian or the Italian version, to have produced one. That colonies of critical scholars continue to find ever more elusive connections and nuances is due principally to the nature of the demands of scholarship, and reflects proofs presupposed by the rigor and the questions that produce them. It's within this closed space that strategies of scholastic determinism are played out, and for this reason theory can never do more than be subsumed by art. It should be perfectly clear by now that rational processes aren't necessary for the creation of art. Art arises from more heterogeneous sources, whether in an illiterate wood carver from Blowing Rock, N.C. or a depressed postmodern poet from Back Bay Boston. No one can predict in advance whence art will appear, fully grown, as a tear in the real.

The creative force that drives art isn't measured in speed, as that huckster Filippo Marinetti puts it, nor in Sokal's literary B.T.U.s; this force arises in the truth of the creation which captures it and causes it to be re-experienced over time. One needn't follow prescribed practices for this metamorphosis to occur; whether the first principles of a movement arise heuristically from the collective work or are logically deduced and imposed as practice has no lasting determining influence. It's for this reason that whenever particular ideas or techniques become formalized, the voices of those demanding recognition grow more and more insistent until they too take their place in the chorus line, destined one day to be similar objects of derision for the coming generations whose sensibilities refute the established order, either from outright defiance or from a general inability to follow. In this manner the force of art is continually renewed in the radical rediscovery of its iron truths. And by truth I don't mean that which exists within the true, but that which exists outside of it, unencumbered with contexts and proofs. There are truths revealed in art that dwarf even the loftiest of scientific discoveries; there's no rift between art and science that needs stitching up, a la Snow, they have nothing to do with each other. What's more absurd than the specter of a physicist like Sokal crawling haphazardly among his equations searching for the ethereal substratum of his primordial soul?

The truth that art reveals has nothing to do with beginnings or ends, nor can it be contained within a series, or sets of series. Literary neophytes like Sokal can't begin to imagine the unshakable power of art as it regenerates itself in the very actions which annihilate it, and to understand that art can't be robbed of its tradition, or stand to have tradition stuffed down its throat. Apart from the ugly political implications inherent in Sokal's actions--who can deny his posture as that of a political operative?--his attacks on Postmodernism in whatever area are of no intellectual importance; he operates at the most vulgar level of metaphor, that of counting, and he is therefore defined by the blinders of his discretionary field. It doesn't occur to him there could be truths other than scientific proofs, and to which scientific methods can't provide access; his bias is that of a scientist and his demands for proofs are correspondent to that level. Thus he is able to impulsively seize upon literary or psychological references to science and denounce them as contrary to scientific understanding and application, and therefore worthless. Whether or not Stanley Fish & Company were taken in by his ruse is valid only at the level of "got'cha". Sokal's intent is not to point out inconsistencies or mistakes from a scientific viewpoint, but to discredit the postmodern movement as a viable area of literary study--hence the covert nature of his act. If he genuinely intends to make serious contributions to the development of postmodern criticism, he would simply point out the errors he detects and offer alternative strategies; instead he resorts to methods designed to humiliate and defrock those he perceives as leaders in the movement. There can be no sensible opposition to this conclusion except to claim that such tactics have a rich history in the long tradition of literature--a conclusion that falls somewhat short of a justification when one considers that book burning, ignorance, error, plagiarism, and outright lying also have rich histories in this same tradition. Still, his methods provide insights into his motives. It would be a coup of unimaginable proportions for intellectual yokels like Sokal to extend their narrow, hegemonic proofs into a field of truth in which they are both subordinate and unrecognized. Art and concepts of art are not reducible to specific scientific paradigms; although art's truths are momentary and elusive, they are also eternal and concrete, an accomplishment scientists can only dream of.

Expect the usual stale denials and pious outrage from Sokal and his cohorts, who drape themselves in appeals to integrity and character --as if such translucent qualities could hide their blatant toadyism. They may have integrity and character, but one would have to use the poetic equivalent of an electron microscope to see them. The chutzpa of such intellectual dilettantes throwing their weight around in this arena is surpassed only by the crude indifference their masters display toward the work they produce; it's not necessary that Sokal ever get anything right, it's important that he exist as quotable opposition with which to bludgeon undesirable elements into submission and literally drive them underground. Anyone who fails to see in this tactic a basic characteristic of the Big Lie isn't paying attention. Sokal and kind are not engaging in sincere intellectual pursuits, they're out here as marauding night riders intent on burning out huge segments of our intellectual and artistic landscape. This isn't intended as a defense of postmodern thinkers of the Fish & Company school; they epitomize career academicians who are overly aggressive in both their professional and personal ambitions, and a fair amount of what they promote is silly. So what? Most theoretical thought in any field is laughable. No, this is a defense of artistic freedom against the increasing onslaught of right-wing financed whackos. And although it's the little fish of the universities currently on the hook, Sokal's real snag is that band of copernican thinkers that includes Freud, Lacan, Heidegger, Derrida and Foucault, authors whose works breathe dynamic change into modern epistemology. Those unfruitful to the whip of the scientific underpinning of so-called democratic capitalism must be purged from the universities and from scholarship. But literature isn't Sokal's only area of interest; I understand his latest target is none other than that freudian pariah of orthodox psychology, M. Jacques Lacan, himself. Well, not quite himself. I predict Sokal will discover that Lacan, although deceased, is a long way from dead.

The weakness in Sokal's critique of Lacan's psychoanalytic metaphor of the erect male organ is his demand that it conform to the laws of mathematics when in reality it can only be confirmed within the praxis defined by psychoanalysis, which Freud in his wisdom always insists on. Sokal's criticisms of the Lacanian metaphor are hilarious, for they have absolutely nothing to do with Lacan's meaning; the emperor may have new clothes, but one has to be able to see the emperor to know that. Sokal can't grasp the the significance of the Lacanian metaphor of the erect male organ because he doesn't have access to the theoretical framework that makes its truth manifest; it's a simple case of using numbers metaphorically. He doesn't realize that it's the metaphorical form of the equation, that of an imaginary number, that provides the context in which to locate the missing square root of minus one. This metaphor is entirely consistent within Lacan's formulations of the imaginary, which is where the subject of the unconscious is imprisoned. Should Sokal ever take the ten or fifteen years necessary to master Lacanian concepts, he might come to appreciate the level of humor that Lacan normally operates at, and should he attain this heady level, he'll have absolutely no problem pinpointing that missing piece, and his role in its loss. It never occurs to Sokal that although in mathematics one and one always makes two, in psychoanalysis, as in art, one and one might make a blooming neon penis, with or without a socket to plug into.

Psychoanalysis has absolutely no business submitting its constructs for verification from a field which is not of its blood. The proofs of psychoanalysis result from an attention to speech as language, and not from measurement. Scientific parameters exist at the limits of science, not at the limits of knowledge--known or potential--or of metaphor. And these remarks only apply to science at its paradigmatic ideal; the slavish way scientists now submit to corporate and governmental institutional control is dangerously skewing the intellectual playing field as never before. It's absolutely essential that one have read and understood Freud before one undertakes to read Lacan and have any chance whatsoever of making sense of what his thought portends; the richness of the Lacanian metaphor is to be found in the unique ways in which he combines meaningful elements from other disciplines to form a rebus, the solving of which lets one in on the discussion. Lacan, sensitive to the dangers inherent in any discussions of his subject, speaks in tongues so that those who do get it are those who should; if Sokal doesn't get it, it's because he wasn't meant to. To say something doesn't weigh what one's calculations say it should while not having the slightest notion of what one is weighing is considered in most circles to be idiotic. However, admonitions such as mine don't seem to register with Sokal, who's frequently seen in various combative postures of self-righteous confusion trying to explain away another crass stupidity, such as saying we show that if [Lacan] seems incomprehensible, it is for the very good reason that [he] has nothing to say. Not wrong, mind you, not even confused, but having no meaning at all! What intellectual arrogance. Not even Lacan's most ardent critics have accused him of having nothing to say. As someone who has taken the necessary preparation to read Lacan, I can say that in every instance of textual confusion, and there were an embarrassing number of such instances, I never once thought it was Lacan who didn't know what he was talking about, and indeed, when the scales of ignorance finally fell, they fell from my eyes and not Lacan's. You may appreciate the zeal with which I look forward to the full text of Sokal's latest sortie, whose potential for self-disaster is exponential to its length. The problem of not having sufficient command of the areas of expertise into which one is venturing turns out to be no problem at all, since Sokal's function is not one of honest intellectual research, but rather to prowl around and destroy all vestiges of opposition to the hegemonic authority of science to define the real.

Had Sokal made the effort to understand Lacan he might realize that when Lacan says he intends to raise psychoanalysis to the level of science, he doesn't intend to reduce it to a series of mathematical equations. He means he wants psychoanalysis to be as rigorous a discipline as mathematics, but not mathematics. It's critical that Lacan's equations find confirmation within the structure of psychoanalysis; it's within this space that the mathematics must add up. Lacanian equations aren't constructed, as Sokal so arrogantly assumes, to allow journeymen mathematicians to see immediately the ephemeral structures of psychoanalysis; they're constructed to guide psychoanalysts through the conflicted unconscious of a human psyche. Sokal's tactics and conclusions exemplify the drone-like brutality of those who attempt to impose one field over another in an attempt to smother it into submission. At the theoretical level that positivists like Sokal operate, the only psychology that's possible is a general psychology faithful to the numbers that they support, a psychology more like obedience school than the lonely and often terrifying search for one's hidden identity that is the sole purview of psychoanalysis. It's all the difference between one who is spooning for metaphors in his soup dining with another who keeps shoving the check in his face. There's no benefit of the doubt in Sokal's approach, there's no search for the legitimacy of other points of view, there's not a milligram of honest scholarship; it is shot through with the same anti-intellectual bias that one finds at a suburban mixer. Sokal's attacks on Postmodernism reflect a neurotic overcompensation of a premonitory angst, which he shares with authors such as Norman Levitt, Paul Gross, Alan Bloom, Dinesh D'Souza and Francis Fukiyama, that if science is the most exact form of measurement and observation, it is at the same time the least. It's this fear that lurks behind a pedantic posture that's both reactionary and cranky. It's no accident that Lacan's formulation of an erect penis evokes such a blind denunciation; there's absolutely no justification to point the finger at Lacan for reducing the psyche to the phallic level when one can plainly see that schmeckles like Sokal do it to themselves.

October 14, 1997

↑ Index

547. henry gould
Re: SOKAL & LACAN
Mon 27 Oct 1997

---

yeah. in these troubled times, it's a good thing those measly craven scientists for the most part ignore what POSTMODERN ARTISTS are accomplishing way over their heads with their special languages & metaphors. & it's a good thing all POSTMODERN ARTISTS are MODERN LEONARDOS who UNDERSTAND puny science & can appropriate its language(s) at will. dare ya to cross that line, Sokal!! get back there in your lab & shut it in your philistine imagination!! - Henry Gould actually, it seems to me the trend for a while has been dependence by both "artists" and "scientists" on technology, for better & worse. I'm for the handmade. leave the mind out of it, whether natural or artificial. intelligence just causes a ruckus. think with your hands. better yet, don't think at all.

"silence is golden"
- King Midas

E. Montale gave a short talk on this subject in 1952 called "Solitude and the Artist" or something like that. still quite relevant. can be found in an appendix to MONTALE AND DANTE by Pipa.

↑ Index

548. Herb Levy
Re: friday's riddle
Mon 27 Oct 1997

If anyone's going to rush out to get the book, they'll have better luck looking for something Orhan Pamuk (who may or may not be an orphan).

As to the writing on bodies in the Black Book, it seems more of a confirmation of Weiner's methodology than use of her as a character.

Does any one know if Pamuk's prose is as formal in Turkish as the English translations? It's good, just kind of awkward reading.

Bests,

Herb

> Since everybody's being very quiet...
>
> has anybody else noticed that the late Hannah Wiener is (in a certain sense)
> a character in Istanbul author Orphan Pamuk's novel THE BLACK BOOK?
>
> I've been saying we've been getting more byzantine for a long time...
>
> - Henry Gould

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

549. mark weiss
Re: SOKAL & LACAN
Mon 27 Oct 1997

I guess he's angry.

At 12:58 PM 10/27/97 -0500, you wrote:
>I have obtained the following comment by Joe Brennan on the Sokal affair, >which I offer to interested list members:
>

>   goliath again
>
>
>   "Flesh composed of suns! How can this be?"
>
>   `Do Crossword Puzzles'
>
>
>Why is it when the officially sanctioned experts of the world step outside the >cover of their specialties they tend to behave like sophomoric fops brandishing >digital stilettos as if wielding death rays? It's an ignorance of some magnitude >to think of Postmodernists, as Alan Sokal apparently does, as a monolithic >lot; one can find within the collective body of their theoretical poetics a unity in >word only; one finds innumerable divergent and/or opposed theoretical >constructs and definitions. But it's as pointless to expect Postmodernists to >produce a coherent manifesto as it was to have expected the Futurists, either >the Russian or the Italian version, to have produced one. That colonies of >critical scholars continue to find ever more elusive connections and nuances is >due principally to the nature of the demands of scholarship, and reflects proofs >presupposed by the rigor and the questions that produce them. It's within this >closed space that strategies of scholastic determinism are played out, and for >this reason theory can never do more than be subsumed by art. It should be >perfectly clear by now that rational processes aren't necessary for the creation >of art. Art arises from more heterogeneous sources, whether in an illiterate >wood carver from Blowing Rock, N.C. or a depressed postmodern poet from >Back Bay Boston. No one can predict in advance whence art will appear, fully >grown, as a tear in the real.
>
>The creative force that drives art isn't measured in speed, as that huckster >Filippo Marinetti puts it, nor in Sokal's literary B.T.U.s; this force arises in the >truth of the creation which captures it and causes it to be re-experienced over >time. One needn't follow prescribed practices for this metamorphosis to >occur; whether the first principles of a movement arise heuristically from

the >collective work or are logically deduced and imposed as practice has no >lasting determining influence. It's for this reason that whenever particular >ideas or techniques become formalized, the voices of those demanding >recognition grow more and more insistent until they too take their place in the >chorus line, destined one day to be similar objects of derision for the coming >generations whose sensibilities refute the established order, either from >outright defiance or from a general inability to follow. In this manner the force >of art is continually renewed in the radical rediscovery of its iron truths. And >by truth I don't mean that which exists within the true, but that which exists >outside of it, unencumbered with contexts and proofs. There are truths >revealed in art that dwarf even the loftiest of scientific discoveries;
there's no
>rift between art and science that needs stitching up, a la Snow, they have >nothing to do with each other. What's more absurd than the specter of a >physicist like Sokal crawling haphazardly among his equations searching for >the ethereal substratum of his primordial soul?
>
>The truth that art reveals has nothing to do with beginnings or ends, nor can it >be contained within a series, or sets of series. Literary neophytes like Sokal
>can't begin to imagine the unshakable power of art as it regenerates itself in >the very actions which annihilate it, and to understand that art can't be robbed
>of its tradition, or stand to have tradition stuffed down its throat.
Apart from >the ugly political implications inherent in Sokal's actions--who can deny his >posture as that of a political operative?--his attacks on Postmodernism in >whatever area are of no intellectual importance; he operates at the most vulgar >level of metaphor, that of counting, and he is therefore defined by the blinders

>of his discretionary field. It doesn't occur to him there could be truths other >than scientific proofs, and to which scientific methods can't provide access; >his bias is that of a scientist and his demands for proofs are correspondent to >that level. Thus he is able to impulsively seize upon literary or psychological >references to science and denounce them as contrary to scientific >understanding and application, and therefore worthless. Whether or not >Stanley Fish & Company were taken in by his ruse is valid only at the level of >"got'cha". Sokal's intent is not to point out inconsistencies or mistakes from a >scientific viewpoint, but to discredit the postmodern movement as a viable area >of literary study--hence the covert nature of his act. If he genuinely intends to >make serious contributions to the development of postmodern criticism, he >would simply point out the errors he detects and offer alternative strategies; >instead he resorts to methods designed to humiliate and defrock those he >perceives as leaders in the movement. There can be no sensible opposition to >this conclusion except to claim that such tactics have a rich history in the >long tradition of literature--a conclusion that falls somewhat short of a >justification when one considers that book burning, ignorance, error, >plagiarism, and outright lying also have rich histories in this same tradition.
>Still, his methods provide insights into his motives. It would be a coup of >unimaginable proportions for intellectual yokels like Sokal to extend their >narrow, hegemonic proofs into a field of truth in which they are both >subordinate and unrecognized. Art and concepts of art are not reducible to >specific scientific paradigms; although art's truths are momentary and elusive, >they are also eternal and concrete, an accomplishment scientists can only >dream of.
>
>Expect the usual stale denials and pious outrage from Sokal and his cohorts, >who drape themselves in appeals to integrity and character --as if such >translucent qualities could hide their blatant toadyism. They may have >integrity and character, but one would have to use the poetic equivalent of an >electron microscope to see them. The chutzpa of such intellectual dilettantes >throwing their weight around in this arena is surpassed only by the crude >indifference their masters display toward the work they produce; it's not >necessary that Sokal ever get anything right, it's important that he exist as >quotable opposition with which to bludgeon undesirable elements into >submission and literally drive them underground. Anyone who fails to see in >this tactic a basic characteristic of the Big Lie isn't paying attention.

Sokal
>and kind are not engaging in sincere intellectual pursuits, they're out here as >marauding night riders intent on burning out huge segments of our intellectual >and artistic landscape. This isn't intended as a defense of postmodern >thinkers of the Fish & Company school; they epitomize career academicians >who are overly aggressive in both their professional and personal ambitions, >and a fair amount of what they promote is silly. So what? Most theoretical >thought in any field is laughable. No, this is a defense of artistic freedom >against the increasing onslaught of right-wing financed whackos. And >although it's the little fish of the universities currently on the hook, Sokal's real >snag is that band of copernican thinkers that includes Freud, Lacan, >Heidegger, Derrida and Foucault, authors whose works breathe dynamic >change into modern epistemology. Those unfruitful to the whip of the scientific >underpinning of so-called democratic capitalism must be purged from the >universities and from scholarship. But literature isn't Sokal's only area of >interest; I understand his latest target is none other than that freudian pariah of >orthodox psychology, M. Jacques Lacan, himself. Well, not quite himself. I >predict Sokal will discover that Lacan, although deceased, is a long way from >dead.
>
>The weakness in Sokal's critique of Lacan's psychoanalytic metaphor of the >erect male organ is his demand that it conform to the laws of mathematics >when in reality it can only be confirmed within the praxis defined by >psychoanalysis, which Freud in his wisdom always insists on. Sokal's >criticisms of the Lacanian metaphor are hilarious, for they have absolutely >nothing to do with Lacan's meaning; the emperor may have new clothes, but >one has to be able to see the emperor to know that. Sokal can't grasp the
the >significance of the Lacanian metaphor of the erect male organ because he >doesn't have access to the theoretical framework that makes its truth >manifest; it's a simple case of using numbers metaphorically. He doesn't >realize that it's the metaphorical form of the equation, that of an imaginary >number, that provides the context in which to locate the missing square root >of minus one. This metaphor is entirely consistent within Lacan's formulations >of the imaginary, which is where the subject of the unconscious is imprisoned.

> Should Sokal ever take the ten or fifteen years necessary to master Lacanian >concepts, he might come to appreciate the level of humor that Lacan normally >operates at, and should he attain this heady level, he'll have absolutely no >problem pinpointing that missing piece, and his role in its loss. It never >occurs to Sokal that although in mathematics one and one always makes >two, in psychoanalysis, as in art, one and one might make a blooming neon >penis, with or without a socket to plug into.
>
>Psychoanalysis has absolutely no business submitting its constructs for >verification from a field which is not of its blood. The proofs of psychoanalysis >result from an attention to speech as language, and not from measurement.
>Scientific parameters exist at the limits of science, not at the limits of >knowledge--known or potential--or of metaphor. And these remarks only apply >to science at its paradigmatic ideal; the slavish way scientists now submit to >corporate and governmental institutional control is dangerously skewing the >intellectual playing field as never before. It's absolutely essential that one >have read and understood Freud before one undertakes to read Lacan and >have any chance whatsoever of making sense of what his thought portends;
>the richness of the Lacanian metaphor is to be found in the unique ways in >which he combines meaningful elements from other disciplines to form a >rebus, the solving of which lets one in on the discussion. Lacan, sensitive to >the dangers inherent in any discussions of his subject, speaks in tongues so >that those who do get it are those who should; if Sokal doesn't get it, it's >because he wasn't meant to. To say something doesn't weigh what one's >calculations say it should while not having the slightest notion of what one is >weighing is considered in most circles to be idiotic. However, admonitions >such as mine don't seem to register with Sokal, who's frequently seen in >various combative postures of self-righteous confusion trying to explain away >another crass stupidity, such as saying we show that if [Lacan] seems >incomprehensible, it is for the very good reason that [he] has nothing to say.

>Not wrong, mind you, not even confused, but having no meaning at all! What >intellectual arrogance. Not even Lacan's most ardent critics have accused >him of having nothing to say. As someone who has taken the necessary >preparation to read Lacan, I can say that in every instance of textual >confusion, and there were an embarrassing number of such instances, I never >once thought it was Lacan who didn't know what he was talking about, and >indeed, when the scales of ignorance finally fell, they fell from my eyes and >not Lacan's. You may appreciate the zeal with which I look forward to the full >text of Sokal's latest sortie, whose potential for self-disaster is exponential to >its length. The problem of not having sufficient command of the areas of >expertise into which one is venturing turns out to be no problem at all, since >Sokal's function is not one of honest intellectual research, but rather to prowl >around and destroy all vestiges of opposition to the hegemonic authority of >science to define the real.
>
>Had Sokal made the effort to understand Lacan he might realize that when >Lacan says he intends to raise psychoanalysis to the level of science, he >doesn't intend to reduce it to a series of mathematical equations. He means >he wants psychoanalysis to be as rigorous a discipline as mathematics, but >not mathematics. It's critical that Lacan's equations find confirmation within >the structure of psychoanalysis; it's within this space that the mathematics >must add up. Lacanian equations aren't constructed, as Sokal so arrogantly >assumes, to allow journeymen mathematicians to see immediately the >ephemeral structures of psychoanalysis; they're constructed to guide >psychoanalysts through the conflicted unconscious of a human psyche.
>Sokal's tactics and conclusions exemplify the drone-like brutality of those who >attempt to impose one field over another in an attempt to smother it into >submission. At the theoretical level that positivists like Sokal operate, the >only psychology that's possible is a general psychology faithful to the >numbers that they support, a psychology more like obedience school than the >lonely and often terrifying search for one's hidden identity that is the sole >purview of psychoanalysis. It's all the difference between one who is spooning >for metaphors in his soup dining with another who keeps shoving the check in >his face. There's no benefit of the doubt in Sokal's approach, there's no >search for the legitimacy of other points of view, there's not a milligram of >honest scholarship; it is shot through with the same anti-intellectual bias that >one finds at a suburban mixer. Sokal's attacks on Postmodernism reflect a >neurotic overcompensation of a premonitory angst, which he shares with >authors such as Norman Levitt, Paul Gross, Alan Bloom, Dinesh D'Souza and >Francis Fukiyama, that if science is the most exact form of measurement and >observation, it is at the same time the least. It's this fear that lurks behind a >pedantic posture that's both reactionary and cranky. It's no accident that >Lacan's formulation of an erect penis evokes such a blind denunciation; there's >absolutely no justification to point the finger at Lacan for reducing the psyche >to the phallic level when one can plainly see that schmeckles like Sokal do it >to themselves.

>
>
>October 14, 1997
>
>

↑ Index

550. henry gould
Re: friday's riddle
Mon 27 Oct 1997

On Mon, 27 Oct 1997 13:21:50 -0800 Herb Levy said:
>If anyone's going to rush out to get the book, they'll have better luck >looking for something Orhan Pamuk (who may or may not be an orphan).
>
>As to the writing on bodies in the Black Book, it seems more of a >confirmation of Weiner's methodology than use of her as a character.

Pamuk doesn't "use" HW as a character. If the Book of Istanbul is really the story of the West (cf. the Mt. Athos story in NY Times today, along with its obverse, the Stalin photobook) then HW strangely appears there. I wouldn't characterize Pamuk's ambiguous novel as a confirmation of anything in particular, unless it's what many novelists confirm: memory, ordinary life, writing. It's just that several main characters, including the protagonist, the protagonistnarrator, and the alter-ego-protagonist, all read letters on people's faces as a sign/key to Mystery. (You might say this is the obverse of the "methodology" of the icon.)

Sorry for the typo. Yes, there's certainly no "p" on Pamuk's face. - Henry G.

↑ Index

551. Peter Ganick
Re: litpress.com
Mon 27 Oct 1997

---

hi chris--- thanks for including potes & poets
and a.bacus---- looks good--- out-- peter

↑ Index

552. Peter Ganick
Re: litpress.com
Mon 27 Oct 1997

---

sorry should have gone backchannel----

Peter Ganick wrote:
>
> hi chris--- > thanks for including potes & poets
> and a.bacus---- > looks good--- > out-- > peter

↑ Index

553. I'm cris cheek
cris cheek seeking urgent forward to british poets list
Mon 27 Oct 1997

Hi, I'm in Buffalo (after terrific weekend in London, Ontario with Mike Kelleher, Eleni Stecopoulos, Scott Pound, Taylor Brady and Bill Howe at the Forest City Gallery - and shared guerilla gallery show at the Cornershop with Steve Mc-Caffery, performing Carnival panel 2 for the first time, you should have been there) and in tracking back to London to cap it with a reading tomorrow night at SubVoicive have just been turned over at the airport by NorthWest Airlines mess. The NorthWest connection has blown out because of a flight delay and I've been forced to re-schedule - i'll miss the gig by about 12 hours.

Can anyone also signed onto British Poets please forward this message to that list asap. thanks

---
Huge apologies for urgent advisory note:

cris cheek will not be able to read at SubVoicive tonite (28/10) circumstances beyond his control, caused by Northwest Airlines scheduling sphagetti (they couldn't even get information from their own terminals in Detroit). Their complete failure to notify me of emerging problems their end. Sorry. I'll be rowing with them in the mornin, no doubt.

I'll contacting Sianed as soon as the hour is wakeable and advising her to cancel also. It seems too stupid for her to make the drive to London and back alone (child sitters and all such already arranged). Doesn't make sense.

Suggest wake or seance. Or collective exegesic oration of 'Double Sky Hope's Locker' text with howlings of interjection
- for Diana.

Again - massive apologies, and re-channeling of not inconsiderable frustration.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

554. jarnot
Rodefer & Sharma reading
Tue 28 Oct 1997

For all in the New York City area,
don't forget to come out to the Poetry Project
on Wednesday night at 8:00
to see

Stephen Rodefer & Prageeta Sharma

that's 8:00
October 29th
at the Poetry Project
2nd Avenue & 10th Street
New York City

↑ Index

555. Maria Damon
Re: Rodefer & Sharma reading
Tue 28 Oct 1997

---

does anyone have a backchannel address or bibliography for prageeta sharma? thanks--md

At 11:24 AM -0500 10/28/97, [redacted] wrote:
>For all in the New York City area,
>don't forget to come out to the Poetry Project
>on Wednesday night at 8:00
>to see
>
>Stephen Rodefer & Prageeta Sharma
>
>that's 8:00
>October 29th
>at the Poetry Project
>2nd Avenue & 10th Street
>New York City

↑ Index

556. p. durgin
Boxkite
Tue 28 Oct 1997

Sorry to clog up the list with this, but I've a message for James Taylor of Boxkite in Australia --

James, your Clark book is going off today. Boxkite looks wonderful. And thanks. Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

_____

↑ Index

557. Mark Prejsnar
Mass disappearance
Tue 28 Oct 1997

Message from (to?) the twilight zone....

Both snail and e-mail to D. Bouchard and Mass. Ave. seem to be bouncing...For me at least.

Dan, you out there? Info anyone?

Mark Prejsnar
atlanta

↑ Index

558. Brent Long
Frank Stanford Film to be shown in Chicago
Tue 28 Oct 1997

A film by the late poet Frank Stanford entitled, "It Wasn't A Dream, It Was A Flood", will be screened in Chicago, IL during the second week of November. This film was shot in 1975 and won the 1975 West Coast Film Festival Best Experimental Film award. It is also the only existing archive which has the late poet reading his own work. This is a rare opportunity and anyone interested can contact Jean Howard at the Chicago Council for the Arts or e-mail me at [redacted] for more information.

Brent Long

↑ Index

559. Bob Grumman
A Minor Item about Comprepoetica
Tue 28 Oct 1997

After a good, candid letter about Comprepoetica's survey form from Aviva, I made a change in it, splitting it into a main survey that is literary only, and a supplement you can go to from the main survey if you want to. It has all the personal questions, including the WORST one of all! (How much money do you make a year?) I hope this keeps the personal questions from making anyone uneasy while keeping them available for those who enjoy those kind of questions.

Since I last posted, I've gotten two more responses to the main survey. But now I have the flu so probably won't be able to tend to them for a while.

Here's the address again, mainly because I seem not to have gotten it right every time I've posted it:

http://www.geocities.com/soho/cafe/1492

Cheers, Bob G.

↑ Index

560. Loss Glazier
Announcement re: EPC
Tue 28 Oct 1997

Announcement re: Electronic Poetry Center
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
Dear Poetics:
Re any EPC items, this is a message to let you know that it will be difficult for me to get to my e-mail from now until November 15th. Therefore, please hold any EPC business until then. For urgent or time-sensitive matters you can check with Charles Bernstein [redacted] who I'm sure will be glad to help.
Thanks!
Loss Glazier for the EPC

↑ Index

561. Carolyn Guertin
Mac Cormack/McCaffery
Tue 28 Oct 1997

Does anyone have a current e-mail address for Karen or Steve? Please backchannel.

Thanks,
Carolyn

_____
Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
Website: http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm
"Memory is a capricious seamstress." -- Virginia Woolf

↑ Index

562. Kenneth Goldsmith
Re: Another Idea
Tue 28 Oct 1997

Mark--

I got your poems yesterday and loved what I saw!! Really, it's some of the freshest stuff I've come across. And this is really important because so much Language-based writing has become so cliched. I feel (as do you) that we can use the tremendous breakthroughs that an earlier generation made to address writing today--content today. It never seemed to occur to anybody that language intact and appropriated could be just as skewed as formally fudged language. As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is. It doesn't take much. And there's so damn much of it. John Cage talked about McLuhan's idea of "brushing" back in the 60s as being the ideal way to create art--it's effortless and the results are shocking. However, Cage (and most of the Language Poets for that matter) had such a high resolution edit and purity lens on the world that they they missed most of the good stuff. Perhaps it's partly due to plunderphonic tendencies in music and appropriation strategies in art over the last decade that we can finally dirty our hands with words, eh?

Best,
Kenny

↑ Index

563. Steven Marks
puffs came in lanes
Tue 28 Oct 1997

I was going to post this a few days ago when I first came across it at a boating magazine where I do some freelance copy editing. The following remark in K. Goldsmith's seemingly indavertent post pushed me to do it:

> As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around > out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is.

Here's the interesting combination of words I came across. They were spoken by a winning sailor right after his race (lineation supplied by me):

The puffs came in lanes,
so we sheeted tighter to keep the bow
up to stay in the puff
                longer.
We sailed to the puffs
and there was an overall persistent shift
                to the right.
I noticed that the back of the fleet had their jib leads too far
forward
and their mains were sheeted too l o o s e.
We moved our jib leads
forward
from light to medium

and forward again
when the chop picked up
in the afternoon.

(For you boating enthusiasts, the boat being sailed was a Snipe at the US Nationals.)

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

564. Alan Grep Sondheim

poem-message on the moo (fwd)

Tue 28 Oct 1997

-

(the following was sent to a moo email list, on the suggestion that staff be signifiers, or so i think - anyway, where are signifieds, signifiers, significance, here, there, everywhere in the top-to-bottom space?)

signified

would rather you be signified
we're all signifiers here, we can't start
or speed the hard-drive, assign sectors, fuck up the mbr
and maybe you can't either, but you can be closer to the source and the way that the language gets formed spit out of the mouth of the database, shoved back in taking its place, well, we're all numbers here
and elsewhere in our dark history, carrying them uselessly,
but you can expand or contract us, maybe
you can issue shutdown as well, checkpoint charlie,
cross the river under the bridge,
MOOs are always honest Berlin
before there was Berlin, and always honest difference
before anyone begged pardon,
said excuse me to anyone else, lowered the eyes, brushed the hair back,
ready to invent the sign

[sector - part of hard-drive disk accessed by an operating system. mbr - master boot record, a small section of the disk which boots the entire computer when it's turned on.]

↑ Index

565. Thomas Bell
address
Wed 29 Oct 1997

Does anyone have snail mail or email address for Mark Ducharme. backchannel. Thank you.
tom bell
[redacted]

↑ Index

566. Sylvester Pollet
Re: puffs came in lanes
Wed 29 Oct 1997

But isn't that just clear writing of the "old" school? Nothing unclear there for anyone with some sailing experience/vocabulary, just plain narrative of the type one might read in any captain's log of the 1800s. Is it odd because it's now in cyberspace? Lineation doesn't make it odd, really. (I should add that I do add a found poem to a reading from time to time, so I'm not attacking the practice).

> I was going to post this a few days ago when I first came across it at a boating magazine where I do some freelance copy editing. The following remark in K. Goldsmith's seemingly indavertent post pushed me to do it:
>
> As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around
> out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is.
>
> Here's the interesting combination of words I came across. They were spoken by a winning sailor right after his race (lineation supplied by me):
>
> The puffs came in lanes,
> so we sheeted tighter to keep the bow
> up
> to stay in the puff
> longer.
> We sailed to the puffs
> and there was an overall persistent
> shift
> to the right.
> I noticed that the back
> of the fleet had their jib leads
> too far

> forward
> and their mains were sheeted too l o o s e.
> We moved our jib leads
> forward
> from light to medium
> and forward again
> when the chop picked up
> in the afternoon.
>
> (For you boating enthusiasts, the boat being sailed was a Snipe at the US Nationals.)
>
> ---
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> ---

↑ Index

567. Marcella
FW: Mass disappearance
Wed 29 Oct 1997

Dan Bouchard is alive--he was in NYC last weekend; however, I found e-mail bounced too (I think he changed his e-mail), and he's apparently travelling for a couple of weeks, so that may be reason for the snail mail. The third issue of Mass Ave is out & looks great.

From: Mark Prejsnar
Sent: Tuesday, October 28, 1997 2:40 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Mass disappearance

Message from (to?) the twilight zone....

Both snail and e-mail to D. Bouchard and Mass. Ave. seem to be bouncing...For me at least.

Dan, you out there? Info anyone?

Mark Prejsnar
atlanta

↑ Index

568. Steven Marks
Re: puffs came in lanes
Wed 29 Oct 1997

You're right. It is very clear writing to some people. And even though I work for a boating magazine and know next to nothing about sailing, I eventually found it to be very clear as well. But still somewhat strange. If you read the description literally (that is, with the meanings commonly associated with the words), you come up with either something surrealistic or humorous, or both.

I agree, too, that the lineation doesn't necessarily make it odd. I debated whether to do this or not, but decided what the hell, it was midnight, the list was quiet and I had never tried anything like this before.

cheers and may the wind stiffen your main,
Steven

On Wed, 29 Oct 1997, Sylvester Pollet wrote:

> But isn't that just clear writing of the "old" school? Nothing unclear there for anyone with some sailing experience/vocabulary, just plain narrative of the type one might read in any captain's log of the 1800s. Is it odd because it's now in cyberspace? Lineation doesn't make it odd, really. (I should add that I do add a found poem to a reading from time to time, so I'm not attacking the practice).
>
> I was going to post this a few days ago when I first came across it at a boating magazine where I do some freelance copy editing. The following remark in K. Goldsmith's seemingly indavertent post pushed me to do it:
>
> As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around
> out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is.
>
> Here's the interesting combination of words I came across. They were spoken by a winning sailor right after his race (lineation supplied by me):
>
> The puffs came in lanes,
> so we sheeted tighter to keep the bow
> up
> to stay in the puff
> longer.
> We sailed to the puffs
> and there was an overall persistent
> shift
> to the right.
> I noticed that the back
> of the fleet had their jib leads
> too far

> forward
> and their mains were sheeted too l o o s e.
> We moved our jib leads
> forward
> from light to medium
> and forward again
> when the chop picked up
> in the afternoon.
>
> (For you boating enthusiasts, the boat being sailed was a Snipe at the US Nationals.)
>
> ---
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> ---

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

569. henry gould
Re: puffs came in lanes
Wed 29 Oct 1997

I'm sure Uncle Herman would approve, and he's captain of the ship.
Moby-Dick was first published in the US on Nov. 14, 1851.
Now quit your sniping & get below.
- Master "Keel-Haul-My-Ass" Spandrift

↑ Index

570. William Burmeister Prod
Re: puffs came in lanes
Wed 29 Oct 1997

On Oct 28, 11:19pm, Steven Marks wrote:
> Subject: puffs came in lanes
> I was going to post this a few days ago when I first came across it at a > boating magazine where I do some freelance copy editing. The following > remark in K. Goldsmith's seemingly indavertent post pushed me to do it:

>
> > As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around > > out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is.
>
> Here's the interesting combination of words I came across. They were > spoken by a winning sailor right after his race (lineation supplied by > me):
>
> The puffs came in lanes,
> so we sheeted tighter to keep the bow
> up
> to stay in the puff
> longer.
> We sailed to the puffs
> and there was an overall persistent
> shift
> to the right.
> I noticed that the back > of the fleet had their jib leads
> too far
> forward
> and their mains were sheeted too l o o s e.
> We moved our jib leads
> forward
> from light to medium
> and forward again
> when the chop picked up
> in the afternoon.
>
>
> (For you boating enthusiasts, the boat being sailed was a Snipe at the US > Nationals.)
>
>
> _____
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> _____
>-- End of excerpt from Steven Marks

Nice for midnight is a good time for this sort of thing. The possibilities still abound it's content reminds of Olson's _Maximus_.

Bill B.

↑ Index

571. William Burmeister Prod

Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)

Wed 29 Oct 1997

On Oct 28, 11:35pm, Alan Grep Sondheim wrote:
> Subject: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
> -
>
>
> (the following was sent to a moo email list, on the suggestion that staff > be signifiers, or so i think - anyway, where are signifieds, signifiers, > significance, here, there, everywhere in the top-to-bottom space?)
>
>
>
> signified
>
> would rather you be signified
> we're all signifiers here, we can't start
> or speed the hard-drive, assign sectors, fuck up the mbr
> and maybe you can't either, but you can be closer > to the source and the way that the language gets formed > spit out of the mouth of the database, shoved back in > taking its place, well, we're all numbers here
> and elsewhere in our dark history, carrying them uselessly,
> but you can expand or contract us, maybe
> you can issue shutdown as well, checkpoint charlie,
> cross the river under the bridge,
> MOOs are always honest Berlin
> before there was Berlin, and always honest difference
> before anyone begged pardon,
> said excuse me to anyone else, lowered the eyes, brushed the hair back,
> ready to invent the sign
>
>
> [sector - part of hard-drive disk accessed by an operating system. mbr - > master boot record, a small section of the disk which boots the entire > computer when it's turned on.]

>
> _____
>-- End of excerpt from Alan Grep Sondheim

we've all done it needed to find a nugget of data couldn't remember stored where we couldn't remember

in this instance we had grep search for a single word

to have grep search to have grepped
a wildcard to have grep

as we can see grep returns grep searches grep looks grep uses grep and rules

if you don't want grep egrep
but do so

-Bill B.

↑ Index

572. Harold Rhenisch
Re: puffs came in lanes
Wed 29 Oct 1997

Well,

I don't think found poems serve to show the oddities of language. Rather, they abstract language from its original context to force the meaning to shift. That shift is the interesting part. Tame stuff, sure, and not a huge shift, but it is still more than just clear writing of the "old" school.

Harold

On Wed, 29 Oct 1997, Sylvester Pollet wrote:

> But isn't that just clear writing of the "old" school? Nothing unclear > there for anyone with some sailing experience/vocabulary, just plain > narrative of the type one might read in any captain's log of the 1800s.
Is
> it odd because it's now in cyberspace? Lineation doesn't make it odd, > really. (I should add that I do add a found poem to a reading from time
to > time, so I'm not attacking the practice).
>
> >I was going to post this a few days ago when I first came across it at a > >boating magazine where I do some freelance copy editing. The following > >remark in K. Goldsmith's seemingly indavertent post pushed me to do it:
> >
> >> As a matter of fact, most of the language floating around > >> out there is so trippy and experimental just the way it is.
> >
> >Here's the interesting combination of words I came across. They were > >spoken by a winning sailor right after his race (lineation supplied by > >me):
> >
> >The puffs came in lanes,
> >so we sheeted tighter to keep the bow
> >up
> >to stay in the puff
> >   longer.
> >We sailed to the puffs
> >and there was an overall persistent
> >shift
> >   to the right.
> >I noticed that the back > >of the fleet had their jib leads
> >too far
> >forward
> >and their mains were sheeted too l o o s e.
> >We moved our jib leads
> >forward
> >from light to medium
> >and forward again
> >when the chop picked up
> >in the afternoon.
> >
> >

> >(For you boating enthusiasts, the boat being sailed was a Snipe at the US > >Nationals.)
> >
> >
> >_____
> > Steven Marks
> >
> > http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> >_____
>

_____
  Steven Marks

  http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

_____

↑ Index

573. Alan Grep Sondheim
Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
Wed 29 Oct 1997

"Although I find my post awk-word, your reply greps me," Biff sed.

Echo, cat Alan :-)

(sorry for the in-jokes)

↑ Index

574. Bob Grumman
A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
Wed 29 Oct 1997

Mark Prejsnar just sent in a completed survey form (thanks, Mark!) and I suddenly realized for some reason that I didn't know how to pronounce his last name, so I now have a slot in my survey for the pronunciation of a respondent's name. This, I think, is possibly the BEST THING I've introduced to my site! (I still don't know the correct pronunciation of Roethke's name, for people claiming to have known him have given me different pronunciations--which brings me to a question: is there a reference one can use to find out how names of poets or other writers, artists, scientist, whatever, are pronounced? On the web, I mean.)

The comprepoetical bio-base has now expanded to 17, by the way. Hurry and fill out a survey before we run out of room!

--Bob G.

↑ Index

575. William Burmeister Prod
Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
Wed 29 Oct 1997

On Oct 29, 12:45pm, Alan Grep Sondheim wrote:
> Subject: Re: poem-message on the moo (fwd)
> "Although I find my post awk-word, your reply greps me," Biff sed.
>
> Echo, cat Alan :-)
>
> (sorry for the in-jokes)
>-- End of excerpt from Alan Grep Sondheim

Interesting word grep (that is, it is interesting as a word). It has such a Dr.Seuss quality about it. The grep poem was written on the spur of the moment as a found language poem (from a "Teach yourself... UNIX" manual!) after I saw your newly acquired middle name. This process keeps reminding me that it is about chance, about spontaneity,and so rather than trying to do too much with a text, one is often better off letting it take you where it will (that is, go with it, go to the opposite field).

Bill B.

↑ Index

576. Rachel Loden
season of the witch
Wed 29 Oct 1997

My husband, a radio listener, claims that he heard (Chinese President) Jiang Zemin singing "Love Me Tender."

Jiang, then in Manila, also performed "Swanee River," calling it his "favorite tune."

~ ~

Is it not delightful to have friends coming from distant quarters?

--Confucius

~ ~

Adventures with Mike and Dale: among the good stuff in _Mike and Dale's Younger Poets_ is an interview with Edward Dorn. After a few warm-up insults, he calls Gertrude Stein "a slug that should have had salt poured on her."

Michael Gold, meet Ed Dorn!

~ ~

Apparently there is a "David Bromwich" in the English Dept. at Yale. Am I the only one who finds this frightening?

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

577. cris cheek
Re: ILS 1.8/Watten on the (Assembly) Line
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Hi Steve,

just back from stateside.

Extremely eager to get copy of Barrett's paper and others in the series if possible.

What's best way of doing so?

Am happy to swap, but you may well need the dosh.
Advisory note please.

I'm at : 85 London Road South. Lowestoft. Suffolk NR33 OAS. UK

hope you're dandy
love and love
cris

↑ Index

578. Douglas Barbour
Re: season of the witch
Thu 30 Oct 1997

But is the possibility that "there is a "David Bromwich" in the English Dept. at Yale" frightening to yaleys or to the world (the poetic world) at large?

As for Ed Dorn insults, are they not a given now (at least according to what the list heard much earlier this year)? Meaning the targets achieve a kind of apotheosis through being insulted by Ed Dorn (if anyone was paying attention). Sad: I want to remember the writer (& the writing) in the early books & _Slinger_...

Doug

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]

~~~
~~~

monk, from Poland." (There is indeed a big house owned by the HK's near my neighborhood..) I showed him my name on my driver's license, and he said he would say the name like my father, which I realize now does correspond to what I know about slavic phonetics. (Both my parents were born in this country but grew up bi-lingual and have fluent Polish; however my mother has always been much more assimilationist, and this may account for her americanizing the name; her own name was Trepczencski.) Although I've always encountered a certain number of people who say Prejsnar is slightly unusual for a Polish name, including my Hare Krishna friend, (others deny that) it has never been changed in this country. I recently got confimation of that: one distant kinsman of ours emigrated to Norway from Poland, and I recently got an e-mail message from a descendant of that branch, a Norwegian (who has good english, which I understand is pretty common) in Oslo named Jan Prejsnar; he was looking for a cousin of his named Marek Prejsnar, whose whereabouts in the world he's not certain of..

So, here's the big answer (it's charming of Bob to imply that anyone much cares....): these days, thanx to my Hari Krishna encounter, I tend to say PRAISE-ner or PRAISE-nahr most frequently;...it's in to go back to your ethnic roots, nicht wahr??? But PREZH-ner and PREZ-ner (which I used to favor 'cause it makes it easy for people) are used all the time, including by many of us in the family, so they seem pretty acceptable to me. Hopefully this instability makes me fashionably post-modern....

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Wed, 29 Oct 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:

> Mark Prejsnar just sent in a completed survey form (thanks, Mark!) and I suddenly realized for some reason that I didn't know how to pronounce his last name, so I now have a slot in my survey for the pronunciation of a respondent's name. This, I think, is possibly the BEST THING I've introduced to my site! (I still don't know the correct pronunciation of Roethke's name, for people claiming to have known him have given me different pronunciations--which brings me to a question: is there a reference one can use to find out how names of poets or other writers, artists, scientist, whatever, are pronounced? On the web, I mean.)
>
> The comprepoetical bio-base has now expanded to 17, by the way. Hurry and fill out a survey before we run out of room!
>
> --Bob G.

↑ Index

580. hg
pronounce-ment
Thu 30 Oct 1997

ok, lemme jump in here on this important thread of name-pronouncing which along with cuneiform is one of the essential things in poetics. Mark, from now on I'm gonna call you "Prez", if you don't mind. now MY name shd alwuhs be pronounced like this: HIN-rahhhh... with a long gutteral slide at the end. "Gould" shd be emitted like you got somethin stuck in your throat when you started to cry & started laughing instead. As uncle Herman wrote somewhere [to paraphrase]: "Life - ha - ah - that about covers it, huh?" - Hinrah Gugglued

↑ Index

581. aerialedge
Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

for best poetics catch phrase of the year
(10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

"I do not this I do not that"
--Jordan Davis, "Poem on a Train"

"I write for myself and strangeness"
--Tim Davis, recent Here reading

↑ Index

582. Dean A. Brink
Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> I've generally heard and said RETH-kah; I've certainly also heard RETH-kee; this is typical of the ways german names come into american.....You also hear NEECH-ah and NEECH-ee; kind of a part of the equipment our speech has. (It would be mildly interesting I agree to know how Big Ted himself prefered it...) (Big Fred of course didn't give much of a hoot about americans...)

Going by the pronunciation of one of Roethke's student/colleagues, Nelson Bentley, he must have gone by RET-kee. But, in Roethke's family, being German, they may have said it according to a German dialect (similar to what Mark suggested).

dean brink
abd EALC UChicago

[redacted]
interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

583. p. durgin
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

"Want my advice; Hijack the hearse"
-- Charles Bernstein

|||[redacted]|||

_____

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>
> "I do not this I do not that"
> --Jordan Davis, "Poem on a Train"
>
> "I write for myself and strangeness"
> --Tim Davis, recent Here reading

↑ Index

584. Carol Mirakove
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

"Go ahead and blow us up, just spare me the warnings."

"To hell with this social angst, let's make beads."

both from Mark Wallace's _Nothing Happened and Besides I Wasn't There_

↑ Index

585. acgold01
Broms
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Not only that, Rachel, but there are circles in which he is the "David Bromwich," whereas the other one ("ours") is simply a "David Bromige."

On the other hand, poet and critic Norman Finkelstein is Norman Finkelstein, not the Norman Finkelstein with whom he's often confused.

↑ Index

586. Mark Prejsnar
Re: pronounce-ment
Thu 30 Oct 1997

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997, hg wrote:

> Mark,
> from now on I'm gonna call you "Prez", if you don't mind.

Does that mean I get veto power over posts to the List?

↑ Index

587. Gwyn McVay
Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
Thu 30 Oct 1997

O for pete's sake, I thought everybody knew it was pronounced "Throatwobbler-Mangrove."--g.

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:

> Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> I've generally heard and said RETH-kah; I've certainly also heard RETH-kee; this is typical of the ways german names come into american.....You also hear NEECH-ah and NEECH-ee; kind of a part of the equipment our speech has. (It would be mildly interesting I agree to know how Big Ted himself prefered it...) (Big Fred of course didn't give much of a hoot about americans...)
>
> Going by the pronunciation of one of Roethke's student/colleagues, Nelson Bentley, he must have gone by RET-kee.
> But, in Roethke's family, being German, they may have said it according to a German dialect (similar to what Mark suggested).
>
> dean brink
> abd EALC UChicago
> [redacted]
> interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
> www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

588. Gwyn McVay
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Charles Bernstein, a poem I don't know but one he read at Bridge Street, and he still owes me a book:

"Form should never be more than an expression of malcontent."

↑ Index

589. Tom Beard
Re: puffs came in lanes
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Another marine/meteorological found poem. The words are taken from text descriptions of Beaufort wind strengths, and re-arranged at the sentence/phrase/word level.

Admiral Beaufort's Final Log

> Smoke rises; sea
> like a mirror.
> Do not break.
>
> A glassy appearance fills > the sails. Crests, white horses > begin to careen.
>
> Whistling, those at sea break > into the spindrift.
>
> Damage the wind and roll > over, uprooted. The sea becomes > heavy, lost to view.
>
> Ships might be blown > into froth: for a time
> the air is filled.
>
> Tom Beard.

↑ Index

590. hghghghg
Re: pronounce-ment
Thu 30 Oct 1997

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997 15:34:38 -0500 Mark Prejsnar said:
>On Thu, 30 Oct 1997, hg wrote:

>
>> Mark,
>> from now on I'm gonna call you "Prez", if you don't mind.
>
>
>Does that mean I get veto power over posts to the List?

No, only votive mana & the lingo-lingam atom-aten aquavita, if Moby sez it's o.k. - your friend, Queequeg

↑ Index

591. Safdie Joseph
Re: pronounce-ment
Thu 30 Oct 1997

> On Thu, 30 Oct 1997, hg wrote:
>
> > Mark,
> > from now on I'm gonna call you "Prez", if you don't mind.
>

And Mark replied:

> Does that mean I get veto power over posts to the List?
>

Yes, but it's only a line item veto, so all you can do is blot out an offending line, not the whole post.

It's either that or learn how to play tenor sax . . .

↑ Index

592. hghghghg
Re: A Big Innovation at Comprepoetica
Thu 30 Oct 1997

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997 16:10:57 -0500 Gwyn McVay said:
>O for pete's sake, I thought everybody knew it was pronounced
>"Throatwobbler-Mangrove."--g.

yeah, but in northern Michigan it's just "Mangrove ROOT-key swamp". - Stubb

↑ Index

593. Bob Grumman
Re: pronounce-ment
Thu 30 Oct 1997

Watch out, Hinrah: all you've just said about your name will be going into the unauthorized bio that will be prepared for you at Comprepoetica if you don't soon fill out a survey.

Bob G., 20th-Cent. Aubrey

↑ Index

594. Brian Carpenter
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

"Suddenly it occurred to me, why not write sentences?"
--Ezra Mark at a recent Subtext reading

On Thu, 30 Oct 1997, p. durgin wrote:

> "Want my advice; Hijack the hearse"
> -- Charles Bernstein
>
> |||[redacted]|||
>
> ---
>
> On Thu, 30 Oct 1997 [redacted] wrote:
>
> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>
> "I do not this I do not that"
> --Jordan Davis, "Poem on a Train"
>
> "I write for myself and strangeness"
> --Tim Davis, recent Here reading

↑ Index

595. David R. Israel
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

going a tad afirld -- how about:

* * * * * * * *

"Everything she said sounded both true and false."

* * * * * * * *

 - Anatole Broyard, *Kafka Was All the Rage:
   A Greenwich Village Memoir* (1993; Vintage: 1997), p. 5

* * * * * * * *

it's a rather fun book I'm just getting into (thanks for selling it to me at Bridge Street, Rod). Other than having seen his name periodically blazoned across the cover of the New York Review of Books, can't say I know anything much about this guy Broyard, -- but his sentences in Kafka Was are very smooth & . . . enjoyable (or many of 'em).

The only other volume they credit to Anatole Broyard is one entitled Intoxicated By My Illness which is a heck of a title. Says here he died in Cambridge, Mass. in '90 -- so this (Kafka) would appear to be a posthumous memoir

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

597. Ed Moran /General Pub. 4th Floor
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>
"You lack half wit"
--Marianne Moore, "To A Steamroller"

↑ Index

598. Brent Long
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Is there a site where all nominations are or will be listed?

Thanks,

Brent

At 11:17 AM 10/31/97 EST, you wrote:
>> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
>> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>>
>"You lack half wit"
> --Marianne Moore, "To A Steamroller"
>
>

↑ Index

599. p. durgin
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Sounds like a job for Coprepoetica.

|||[redacted]|||

On Fri, 31 Oct 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> Is there a site where all nominations are or will be listed?
>
> Thanks,
>
> Brent

> At 11:17 AM 10/31/97 EST, you wrote:
> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>
> "You lack half wit"
> --Marianne Moore, "To A Steamroller"

↑ Index

600. R. Gancie

SOKAL AND LACAN

Fri 31 Oct 1997

Henry: You miss the point. Lacan as a medical doctor WAS a scientist. Many of the people that Sokal, Gross and Levitt choose to attack ARE scientists. They ARE attacking science. Weinberg attacks Heisenberg as readily as anyone else. The Post-Modernists merely serve as a conduit for theses attacks. Gross and Levitt attack environmentalists, philosphers of science, physicists, biologists---in short anyone that does not agree with their corporate friendly position. Sokal, Gross, Levitt and by association Weinberg do not want to partake in a discussion of the efficacy or weakness of their position. They want it accepted by fiat. Why do you think Sokal chose the route of publication he chose? In my neighborhood, we used to beat the crap out of sneaks like Sokal whether they had a point or not. Sokal's way would simply not be considered an honest way to handle your differences. The Post-Modernists have provided Sokal's handlers an opportunity to wage a much wider attack. On this measily little E-Mail we have engaged in philosophical banter far more profound than that engaged in by Gross and Levitt, Sokal and Weinberg and that ain't sain' much. (For someone on the list to have said that Weinberg's piece in the N.Y.Times Review was closely argued is nonsense.) At least, Gross and Levitt seem to realize that they are attempting to discard serious concerns that the founding fathers of physics in particular addressed earlier in the century. In their book, they gingerly tried to create a PostModernist intellectual discretion where none exists.

POSTMODERNISTS DID NOT INITIATE THE CONCERNS THAT SOKAL, GROSS, LEVITT AND WEINBERG RIDICULE---SCIENTISTS DID, INCLUDING SOME OF THE GIANTS OF PHYSICS. That's where I learned about them not through PostModernism. I'm assuming I still retain the right to ruminate on these supposed lunacies as postulated by apparent lightweights as Heisenberg, Bohr, Bohm, Penrose, Hansen, Feyerabend, Wittgenstein, Husserl etc. At risk of distracting you from the above consideration, I'd like to elaborate on Brennan's "goliath." In the nineteen seventies, there was a conscious decision on the part of corporate entities to create a new public relations network of think tanks and institutionally connected organizations that sole purpose was to produce intellectual product to counter what they perceived as dangerous egalitarian trends in society. Some of the authors of this reactionary product are well known such as Murray and Herrnstein, Theodore Shockley, Dinesh D'Souza, Francis Fukiyama, Allan Bloom and Gross and Levitt. I would suspect that the liberal and/or obscure Marxist leanings of some of the Deconstructionists and their PostModern adherents has more to do with the attack on them than their positions vis a vis the sciences. You seem to realize with much enthusiasm that PostModernist thought can have no effect on the juggernaut of science because of technologies fundamental relation to what is currently society's most profound truth--money. But when voters in Texas rejected a huge particle accelerator to be built in their home state, alarms went off among jilted corporate contractors and they want answers from the egg heads on their payrolls. The chance to have the biggest particle accelerator in the world was rejected by Texans after all! Sokal's piece arrived at one of the right places at the right time and now if he can stomach what he's doing, he'll reap his reward. Ask yourself this Henry, if as you say, the accomplishments of POSTMODERN ARTISTS are confined to "special languages and metaphors" why are the powers that be expending so much time and money to refute them? Why not just ignore them? One doesn't have to look too far to see that the war is among environmantal scientists and corporate scientists, between scientific racism and its close association with emerging genetic technologies and scientists that take a more egalitarian position, between a world run on market logic and corporate science's technological rationalism and the health and social requirements of our species and all the others we have created the discretion of species for. PostModernism because of its interest in physics and mathematics in the years between the introduction of Planck's Constant and Heisenberg's and Bohr's mathematical expressions for quantum phenomena, finds itself caught up in the larger struggle. I envy them. Its always better to be attacked by "goliath" than be attacked by a goliath wannabee like you.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

601. David Benedetti
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

"I'm not averse to poetry"

--overheard at a reading, and I can't remember which

↑ Index

602. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

"Poetry is like a movie star without any fans."

This is from Jack Collom's new collection of children's poetry, _A Slow Flash of Light_, to be released soon by Teachers & Writers. There are many other equally delicious and very funny poems in it. I don't recall the author's name.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

603. Bob Grumman
A News Release
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Geof Huth passed the following on to me and I thought it might amuse the group:

A reorganization we can all support:

Microsoft Addresses Justice Department Accusations REDMOND, Wash. - Oct. 21, 1997 -- In direct response to accusations made by the Department of Justice, the Microsoft Corp. announced today that it will be acquiring the federal government of the United States of America for an undisclosed sum.

"It's actually a logical extension of our planned growth", said Microsoft chairman Bill Gates, "It really is going to be a positive arrangement for everyone".

Microsoft representatives held a briefing in the oval office of the White House with U.S. President Bill Clinton, and assured members of the press that changes will be "minimal." The United States will be managed as a wholly owned division of Microsoft. An initial public offering is planned for July of next year, and the federal government is expected to be profitable by "Q4 1999 at latest," according to Microsoft vice president Steve Ballmer.

In a related announcement, Bill Clinton stated that he had "willingly and enthusiastically" accepted a position as a vice president with Microsoft, and will continue to manage the United States government, reporting directly to Bill Gates. When asked how it felt to give up the mantle of executive authority to Gates, Clinton smiled and referred to it as "a relief." He went on to say that Gates has a "proven track record," and that U.S. citizens should offer Gates their "full support and confidence." Clinton will reportedly be earning several times the $200,000 annually he has earned as U.S. president, in his new role at Microsoft.

Gates dismissed a suggestion that the U.S. Capitol be moved to Redmond as "silly", though did say that he would make executive decisions for the U.S. government from his existing office at Microsoft headquarters. Gates went on to say that the House and Senate would "of course" be abolished. "Microsoft isn't a democracy," he observed, "and look how well we're doing".

When asked if the rumored attendant acquisition of Canada was proceeding, Gates said, "We don't deny that discussions are taking place."

Microsoft representatives closed the conference by stating that United States citizens will be able to expect lower taxes, increases in government services, and discounts on all Microsoft products.

About Microsoft

Founded in 1975, Microsoft (NASDAQ "MSFT") is the worldwide leader in software for personal computers and democratic government. The company offers a wide range of products and services for public, business, and personal use, each designed with the mission of making it easier and more enjoyable for people to take advantage of the full power of personal computing and of the free society every day.

About the United States

Founded in 1789, the United States of America is the most successful nation in the history of the world, and has been a beacon of democracy and opportunity for over 200 years. Headquartered in Washington, D.C., the United States is a wholly owned subsidiary of Microsoft Corporation.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

604. Henry Gould
SOAK-A-LACAN
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Well, Carlo, it's probably pointless to get into a debate with me on this one. I probably never should have opened me mouth. I don't know much about the war between one kind of scientist and another, or the cabals of techno-bureaucrats out to stamp out any subversive (wo)manifest(ive)ations of differance & all that. I says it as I sees it, & maybe I missed the big picture. But from where I sit in my triple goliath goulash chair, I still say Sokey was hittin on a PARTICULAR STRAIN o' postmodernism, i.e. the philosophical anti-realism of Lacan & Derrida. Now I agree that Western Science is Marked with the Doom of Ahab & Moloch & all that; but I think that nihilism is just the flip side of the coin, another sort of one-eyed "explanation" that really doesn't CONNECT with science in any way, and that's what Sokal was making fun of. Laugh on, ye laughsters... - Henry the Gigantic Master of the Universe, Jr.

↑ Index

605. mark weiss
lacanic statement
Fri 31 Oct 1997

It's a waste of time to argue against logohrreia and paranoid fantasies, so I'll restrict myself to one point. Almost no m.d.s consider themselves scientists, and for good reason. I don't know about Lacan in this respect, but Freud, his master, did, and he was wrong, and fewer and fewer of even his adherents seriously claim that he was a scientist, despite his virtues. Dr. Frankenstein, however, was a scientist. Happy Halloween, Dia de los muertes, etc.

At 02:00 PM 10/31/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Henry: You miss the point. Lacan as a medical doctor WAS a scientist.
>Many of the people that Sokal, Gross and Levitt choose to attack ARE >scientists. They ARE attacking science. Weinberg attacks Heisenberg as >readily as anyone else. The Post-Modernists merely serve as a conduit >for theses attacks. Gross and Levitt attack environmentalists, >philosphers of science, physicists, biologists---in short anyone that >does not agree with their corporate friendly position. Sokal, Gross, >Levitt and by association Weinberg do not want to partake in a >discussion of the efficacy or weakness of their position. They want it >accepted by fiat. Why do you think Sokal chose the route of publication >he chose? In my neighborhood, we used to beat the crap out of sneaks >like Sokal whether they had a point or not. Sokal's way would simply not >be considered an honest way to handle your differences.

>The Post-Modernists have provided Sokal's handlers an opportunity to >wage a much wider attack. On this measily little E-Mail we have engaged >in philosophical banter far more profound than that engaged in by Gross >and Levitt, Sokal and Weinberg and that ain't sain' much. (For someone >on the list to have said that Weinberg's piece in the N.Y.Times Review >was closely argued is nonsense.) At least, Gross and Levitt seem to >realize that they are attempting to discard serious concerns that the >founding fathers of physics in particular addressed earlier in the >century. In their book, they gingerly tried to create a PostModernist >intellectual discretion where none exists. POSTMODERNISTS DID NOT >INITIATE THE CONCERNS THAT SOKAL, GROSS, LEVITT AND WEINBERG >RIDICULE---SCIENTISTS DID, INCLUDING SOME OF THE GIANTS OF PHYSICS.
>That's where I learned about them not through PostModernism. I'm >assuming I still retain the right to ruminate on these supposed lunacies >as postulated by apparent lightweights as Heisenberg, Bohr, Bohm, >Penrose, Hansen, Feyerabend, Wittgenstein, Husserl etc.
>At risk of distracting you from the above consideration, I'd like to >elaborate on Brennan's "goliath." In the nineteen seventies, there was a >conscious decision on the part of corporate entities to create a new >public relations network of think tanks and institutionally connected >organizations that sole purpose was to produce intellectual product to >counter what they perceived as dangerous egalitarian trends in society.
>Some of the authors of this reactionary product are well known such as >Murray and Herrnstein, Theodore Shockley, Dinesh D'Souza, Francis >Fukiyama, Allan Bloom and Gross and Levitt. I would suspect that the >liberal and/or obscure Marxist leanings of some of the >Deconstructionists and their PostModern adherents has more to do with >the attack on them than their positions vis a vis the sciences. You seem >to realize with much enthusiasm that PostModernist thought can have no >effect on the juggernaut of science because of technologies fundamental >relation to what is currently society's most profound truth--money. But >when voters in Texas rejected a huge particle accelerator to be built in >their home state, alarms went off among jilted corporate contractors and >they want answers from the egg heads on their payrolls. The chance to >have the biggest particle accelerator in the world was rejected by >Texans after all!
>Sokal's piece arrived at one of the right places at the right time and >now if he can stomach what he's doing, he'll reap his reward. Ask >yourself this Henry, if as you say, the accomplishments of POSTMODERN >ARTISTS are confined to "special languages and metaphors" why are the >powers that be expending so much time and money to refute them? Why not >just ignore them? One doesn't have to look too far to see that the war >is among environmantal scientists and corporate scientists, between >scientific racism and its close association with emerging genetic >technologies and scientists that take a more egalitarian position, >between a world run on market logic and corporate science's >technological rationalism and the health and social requirements of our >species and all the others we have created the discretion of species >for. PostModernism because of its interest in physics and mathematics in >the years between the introduction of Planck's Constant and Heisenberg's >and Bohr's mathematical expressions for quantum phenomena, finds itself >caught up in the larger struggle. I envy them. Its always better to be >attacked by "goliath" than be attacked by >a goliath wannabee like you.---Carlo Parcelli

>
>

↑ Index

606. Juliana Spahr
reading report from Honolulu
Fri 31 Oct 1997

I wrote this for someone and then they pointed out that it was way too long but since I had written it I didn’t want to just abandon it so I thought why not just send it to the poetics list where length doesn’t really matter. Then I tacked on today the two things at the end.

--Juliana Spahr

Reading report from Honolulu...

I feel like I have to begin everything I say here with I’ve only been here in Honolulu for three months but it seems to me like . . . Because the one thing I can say definitively is that the local matters here. Those in the know wear the slogan “local” engraved on their slippers (flip flops to you in the contiguous 48). And some days it feels that everyone but me owns a pair of them. I’ve been to some readings and one lecture since I arrived.

In August there was a reading for Frederick Wichman’s collection of Kauai legends. The tale he read was about bananas and there being special ones that women couldn’t eat. The reading was in an airless, windowless room. I’ve only been here three months but it seems to me that the windowless, airless room is an important Hawaii poetry reading tradition. I wonder if it is because it is so beautiful outside, people just want some ugliness when they come to their readings.

In September, San Franciscan Steve Carll read with local Angela Nishimoto in a different airless, windowless room. Steve read some new stuff and his drug poems, these last are old favorites. Angela Nishimoto read a story about the difficulties of living life in a multicultural environment. After the reading someone said it was good because it said things like the words haole and asshole were meant to be together.

I've only been here for three months but it seemed like the event of the season, or the one that was willing to make that claim, was probably the Hawaii Fall Celebration of Writers and Writing held in late September. It was two days long and its theme was Literature of Place. It felt very literary. It began with a book fair on the lanai, drinks, and a band. Lots of people wore leis. I've only been here for three months, but I've already noticed that someone always wears a lei at a reading. This someone is usually the reader. But here there were leis for those who were to ask questions, those who were to introduce, those who were honored with a prize, those who were to give a prize, those who were honored because they were old, those who had written a grant, and, of course, the readers. The first night Marilyn Chin, of San Diego, read some poems about Asian-American identity, Lee Grue, of New Orleans, read some poems about New Orleans, Mahealani Dudoit, of Honolulu, read an essay about water rights on Oahu, Ron Carlson, of Phoenix, read a piece about Salt Lake City, Pio Manoa, of Fiji, read some poems about the sea, and Pualani Kanaka'ole Kanahele, of Hilo, read a chant about Molokai. These last two were the highlight of the evening for me. Pio Manoa's poems were straight up new critical verse untainted by new formalism's casualness. I had not heard stuff like this live ever in my lifetime and it made me very excited. Pualani Kanahele's chant was also amazing. She chanted it in Hawaiian and the audience was awed. Then she read it in English and the audience remained awed. She had presence. There was lots of discussion after the reading. One man spoke of how he traveled the earth right now as a white male but he had a secret identity that he wished we all would recognize. The second night began with a incisive introduction by local writer/hero Eric Chock. He said that when he first heard that the university was doing something on the literature of place that he thought oh good, they are finally doing something on local writers. But then he good humoredly tempered his comments by noticing that people were from many different places. I've only been here for three months, but it seems to me that Eric Chock was pointing to some sort of antagonism between the university scene and the vibrant local scene. Pamela Ball, of Tallahassee, began her reading by asking the audience to forgive her for leaving Hawaii, David Collins, I don't know where he is from, read a long piece about eating in Paris, it was very saucy and I think I can say it was not well received, Alison Deming, of Tucson, read some poems about the migrating monarchs, the butterfly kind, Bruce Fulton, of Seattle, read a translation he had done of a Korean story, Michelle Cruz Skinner read a story about being in grade school. Lois-Ann Yamanaka finished the evening by wowing everyone with an especially funny reading from Blu's Hanging. It was worth the wait but I have to confess it had been a long evening.

In October African novelist and playwright Ngugi wa Thiong'o came to talk. The talk was packed. They had to move rooms. Then they had to add chairs. He was an hour late but the audience didn't complain. They sang chants in Hawaiian while waiting. Then he arrived. A woman walked down the aisle, carrying a lei for him and chanting. Then a man, also chanting, escorted him down the aisle. Then Ngugi wa Thiong'o chanted. Then he received the lei. Then he gave a talk called "Native Languages and the Politics of De-Colonization." He said "one area of decolonization that needs the most attention is the decolonization of language." It was a great talk although it had that distinguished lecture series feel which doesn't allow enough specificity. The rhetoric was right on though.

Also in October was the reading to celebrate the new issue of Tinfish (go buy!--available from the editor, Susan Schultz 47-391 Hui Iwa St No. 3 Kaneohe, Hawaii 96744 for $13 for 3 issues). The reading was packed and lots of young people were there. This reading was held in a coffee shop. Joe Balaz read a long rambling Balaz poem in pidgin (it should be a genre). The poem was pure narration with little point. I liked it. Kathy Dee Kaleokealoha Kaloloahilani Banggo read. She also has a chapbook out from Tinfish which you should buy immediately. It grooves. Her poem "Try Listen" which she read at the reading and which is published in both Tinfish and the chapbook begins like this: "While da res of us stay fry hamburgahs o drive truck go pick up opala--stink ah?--some sistahs stay in wrap aroun telling any kine stuff j'like who "da people" stay, la dat. Eh, what da diff if I weah one wrap aroun fo go work luau take pitacha wit da yobos an da haoles--eh, 10 dahllas one hour--o if I weah one wrap aroun fo go rally make any kine noise? I no mo one PhD, tita, but I can tink fo myself. You know aht, I get one termometer get plenny degrees--I stick em up my ass when I staht fo tink I know wassup fo somebody else." Tony Quagliano read some poems about nature. And Marie Hara read a poem about her daughter. All in all a good evening.

Last night Albert Saijo read. When he said, "I AM AN ANIMAL IN A CAGE AND I'M BARKING TO BE LET OUT" (that is from my notes; I don't have the book with me right now so don't quote me on it), a woman in the audience said "you go girl." Albert Saijo is old and he hung out with the beats and he lives in Volcano now. He doesn't like computers and he likes the muse. His book shows he is clearly a new Blake--kooky, visual, emphasis on the rhapsodic. At his reading people were laughing really hard. Especially when he read his poem that called for the eradication of pain. His poems are written with different colored pencils in a distinct scrawl (think Grenier here?). Bamboo Ridge, which just published his book, has reproduced pages from the poems and then transcribed the poems in all capitals. I think you should read this book also because it is a good time.

↑ Index

607. henry g
friday's riddle
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Has anyone else noticed that in CD Bowen's book, MIRACLE AT PHILADELPHIA about the constitutional convention (phila(d'e)(lphia)) the frontispiece photo of a bust of George Washington by the sculptor Houdon looks a lot like Joseph Brodsky? [the farther from his country]

BEAR with me [grrrr....]
- Hen Goulchik

↑ Index

608. Bob Grumman
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

---

p. durgin wrote:
>
> Sounds like a job for Comprepoetica.
>
by which he means a site where all nominations are or will be listed.

Compropoetica: actually, I like it BUT NOT YET!! Too much going on at my site right now. Anyway, I'm sure the people gathering nominations will come up with something. But my thanks to p. durgin for suggesting my site.

Bob G.

↑ Index

609. George Bowering
Re: Nominations please
Fri 31 Oct 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

> "I do not this I do not that"
> --Jordan Davis, "Poem on a Train"

Sounds like Dr. Seuss to me!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

610. R. Gancie
Sokal & Lacan: Correction
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Theodore Shockley should be William Shockley. Theodore Shackley is a long time CIA operative. Mark: MD's are trained in the scientific method and as Elder Olson points out "Agreement on method [in a science] is such that, in any subject, method is spoken of in the singular rather than in the plural." F.A Hayek, one of the intellectual gurus of neocon thought, in his Counter-Revolutions of Science comes out strongly against the mathematization and quantification of culture. He exempts two elements, the hard sciences as opposed to the social sciences and capitalism. Your position is in perfect alignment with Hayek's and Sokal's and the intentions and actions of the heirs of Hayek's agenda are well publicized. Congratulations. ---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

611. mark weiss
(no subject)
Fri 31 Oct 1997

Wow! Perfect alignment! Better check my horoscope.

It's odd how little anguish I feel about incomprehensible accusations. I, myself, I should warn you, was a CIA elder before they detribalized the agency. Ted was our shaman, but some of us thought even then that he was a bit of a neocon man. In those days we hadn't learned to count our toes, and some of the estimates were pretty wild. We hadn't discovered metric feet. It was a confusing time, but we had great parties. Sometimes we went around beating up satirists. Hell, when we were on the street even a little irony was dangerous. Now that we've decided to take over the world, however, excessive earnestness and claims of purity draw our attention. Might pay to lock your door.

At 08:32 PM 10/31/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Theodore Shockley should be William Shockley. Theodore Shackley is a >long time CIA operative. Mark: MD's are trained in the scientific method >and as Elder Olson points out "Agreement on method [in a science] is >such that, in any subject, method is spoken of in the singular rather >than in the plural." F.A Hayek, one of the intellectual gurus of neocon >thought, in his Counter-Revolutions of Science comes out strongly >against the mathematization and quantification of culture. He exempts >two elements, the hard sciences as opposed to the social sciences and >capitalism. Your position is in perfect alignment with Hayek's and >Sokal's and the intentions and actions of the heirs of Hayek's agenda >are well publicized. Congratulations. ---Carlo Parcelli
>
>

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

November 1997

576 messages · Thu 30 Oct 1997 – Sun 30 Nov 1997

November 1997 took the publisher and the poet five days apart. On the twelfth James Laughlin died at Norfolk, Connecticut, aged eighty-three, and Marjorie Perloff got it to the list that night from a residency in Indiana, apologising for not writing at her normal speed: “One of the great literary men/women of our time” had died today, many here had been published by him, it was a sad, sad day, and she was sure Weinberger or Rothenberg would send something better — she just wanted people to know. On the seventeenth David Ignatow died, and Charles Bernstein had it from Wednesday’s Times. Five hundred and seventy-five letters. Laughlin is named in them a hundred and ninety-five times; Ezra Pound a hundred and ninety-six.

The second thing that happened is why I have given this volume the room I have. On the morning of the thirteenth Joseph Zitt asked whether somebody could fill in “those of us who didn’t know of him” as to who Laughlin was and what he had done. On a poetry list. I want to be plain that this is not a stupid question and Zitt was not ashamed to ask it — it is the question Joe Amato asked about the inaugural poet in January — and the answer it got is the finest hour in this archive.

They told him. Maxine Chernoff, briskly: “the distinguised publisher of New Directions”, started in the thirties and run for sixty years. Pat Pritchett supplied the money, an immense Pennsylvania steel fortune, and then the fact the month turns on — “Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry” and start a publishing house instead. William Burmeister posted Octavio Paz’s account entire: the disappointing Harvard professors, the months at Rapallo in what Pound called the Ezraversity, the pact the two men made, the house that came of it and never sold itself. Burmeister added he could not honestly say “if I would be in poetry right now” but for Laughlin. Tosh, who is “starting up my own press”, said he looked up to him. Somebody posted Technical Notes.

For Ignatow, Bernstein did the other thing he does, and it is the better one. He posted the man’s own words — from All Else is Prelude, where Ignatow writes that “If language could save me from death” he would be immortal already; that he had thought writing an elixir until he began to notice his hair going grey; and that if immortality exists it is in the writing as an art, “not as an elixir of the body’s survival”. Hank Lazer wrote a short eulogy for a man he had spent the week “thinking about my friend”, and Douglas Barbour thanked him for “that small but so complete eulogy”, and Joseph Safdie said he had been about to thank him for the same thing.

Set the two side by side, because November did. Ignatow says language will not save your body and might save your art. Laughlin was told as a young man, by the most consequential critic of the age, that he should stop writing poems — and took the advice, and gave the century Williams and Rexroth and Levertov and Snyder and Borges and Paz and Dylan Thomas, and Pound himself, who had told him to stop. I have set Zitt’s question and the answers to it exactly where they fell, because a room that has argued about Ezra Pound in every month I have read spent one day in November burying the only person Pound ever did an unambiguous good to, and had to be told, by six people at once, who he was.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 576 in all.

WRITERS

Acgold01 144, 377, 464
Administration, Poetics List 23, 160
Aerialedge 96, 126, 307
Alexander, Charles 291, 292
Alexander, Christopher 13, 59, 404, 459, 492, 541, 542
And, Miekal 183, 337, 344, 419, 529, 530
Archambeau, Robert 298
Baker, Mark 383
Barbour, Douglas 128, 129, 176, 224, 261, 520, 554
Beard, Tom 10, 233
Bell, Thomas 150
Benedetti, David 68, 428
Bernstein, Charles 21, 469, 475
Bertram 3
Blarnes, Eric 186, 219, 453
Blevins, Jo Ann 384
Bowering, George 105, 108, 172, 205, 392, 393, 443, 461
Brink, Dean A. 379, 440, 442
Bromige, David 250, 360, 386, 398, 411, 413, 421, 444, 467, 506, 533, 546, 560, 562
Brown, Pam 45
Burger, Mary 288
Cabri, Louis 84, 512
Carpenter, Brian 548
Cayley, John 480
Cheek, Cris 2
Cheney, Don 27
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 287
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 462
Clark, Susan 67, 116, 202, 381
Cloward 123, 162
Clubb, Issa 24
Cockram, Patricia 115, 327
Coffey, Michael 279
Cope, Stephen 151
Daley, R M 293
Daly, Catherine 286, 376
Damon, Maria 169, 175, 197, 198, 199, 260, 301, 302, 303, 317, 332, 333, 347, 348, 369, 387, 388, 422, 449, 458, 468
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 208, 247
Davis, Jordan 81, 139, 363, 405, 454, 460, 490, 503, 550
Day, Jean 20
Dbkk 471, 486, 519
Debrot, Jacques 252, 258, 259
Delville, Michel 153
Dicey, Chauncy 141
Douglas 574, 575
Drake, Robert 140, 210, 346
Durgin, P. 15, 64, 66, 125, 272, 370, 414, 416, 430, 434
Evans, Steve 190, 382, 432
Finch, Annie 227, 338, 339, 482, 572
Finnegan, James 50, 142, 284, 433, 484, 491
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 167, 170, 297
Fletcher, Jerry E. 341, 342, 359, 362, 394, 395, 396, 410, 445, 446, 470, 487, 494, 507, 510, 511, 536, 543, 552
Foley, Jack 49, 57, 71, 498
Foutu, Markus 221
G, Henry 135, 209, 253, 255, 256, 463
Gancie, R. 9
Gould, Henry 29, 80, 94, 174, 217, 274, 296, 306, 325, 356, 374, 412, 447, 500, 516, 517, 537
Groberts 178, 277, 372
Grumman, Bob 282, 314, 551, 558, 561, 564
Guertin, Carolyn 531
Hansen, Jeff 179
Hardin, Rob 350, 399, 403
Hart, Matthew 158, 308
Hen 400, 540
Henry 230, 270, 295
Hg 111, 236
Hill, Laurie Schneider/Crag 78
IMBURGIA 535, 545
Israel, David 231
Israel, David R. 156, 157, 201, 203, 204, 245, 268, 280, 289, 305, 335, 336, 366, 456, 472, 477, 508, 509, 563, 569
Jarnot 489
JforJames 138
JOHNSON, KENT 437, 448, 452, 567, 568
Joris, Pierre 22, 117, 211, 390, 565
Joseph, Safdie 79, 226, 318, 320, 389, 522
KATHERINE, LYNES- 93
Kellogg, David 48, 75, 137, 285, 304, 309, 311, 329, 455, 502
Kimmelman, Burt 328, 331, 357, 364
Lazer, Hank 220, 299, 496
Lefthandb 85
Levy, Herb 61, 526, 527, 534
Lewis, Joel 334
Loden, Rachel 218, 450
Long, Brent 16, 17, 52, 53, 54, 63, 95, 97, 120, 121, 132, 171, 184, 195, 313, 316, 322, 501
Magee, Michael 19, 155, 161, 181, 185, 187, 191, 424, 431, 457

Marcella 47, 110, 391, 518
Marks, Steven 136, 244, 418, 532, 566
Marsh, William 429
Materer, Timothy 34, 60, 69, 465
Maz881 310, 385, 497, 514
McGuire, Jerry 476
McHale, Brian 90, 214
McVay, Gwyn 39, 122, 571
Moriarty, Laura 130, 194, 436
Nielsen, Aldon 18, 193, 235, 239, 240, 439, 499
Nimmo, Kurt 7
Nuyopoman 55, 165
Orange, Tom 114, 212
Osman, Jena 257
Perloff, Marjorie 248
Peters, Carl Lynden 4, 44, 200, 273
Pollet, Sylvester 51, 98, 312, 483
Pound, Scott 352, 367, 466
Prejsnar, Mark 14, 56, 87, 88, 99, 119, 177, 213, 215, 228, 368
Pritchett,Pat 28, 86, 102, 103, 127, 271, 315, 380, 407, 409
Prod, William Burmeister 1, 30, 32, 89, 124, 145, 229, 234, 241, 266, 267, 275, 276, 278, 300, 319, 425, 426, 427, 473, 493, 495
Program, UB Poetics 435
R.drake 192, 281, 375
Raea100900 573
Reiner, Christopher 100, 479
Rhenisch, Harold 25, 36, 37, 38, 72, 73, 76, 77, 92, 131, 146, 232, 237, 238, 283, 349, 354, 355, 485, 523, 524, 528, 538, 555, 556, 557, 559, 570
Roitman, Judy 539
Rougenez, Rudolph 408
Rsillima 294, 343, 515, 576
Ruggles, Trace S. 525
Russell, Layne 6, 26, 222, 249, 263, 324, 513
Saldana, Tristan 243, 246
Schaefer, P.Standard 323
Schultz, Susan 351
Schwartz, Jay 415
Scroggins, Mark W 330
Simon 481
Simon, Schuchat 42, 82
Slotnick, Stacie 104
Sondheim, Alan Grep 345
Sondheim, Alan Myouka 423
Stadler, Matthew 168
Steinberg, Hugh 378
T.R.Healy, L.MacMahon And 196, 547
Taciuch, Dean 106, 504
Tal, Kali 5, 358
Tate, J. 35, 58, 107, 109, 180, 402
Taylor, B. 353
Tosh 262, 340, 361, 474
Trevor, Karen And 182
Tuma, Keith 189, 269, 290, 326, 365
Upton., Lawrence 118, 143, 251
Varrone, Kevin 154
Vogel, Aviva 40, 43, 46, 74, 112, 152, 159, 188, 206, 225, 264, 321, 521
Vogler, Tom 406
Wallace, Mark 223
Watts, Charles 65
Weigl, Charles 553
Weiss, Mark 11, 31, 33, 41, 70, 83, 101, 113, 133, 134, 147, 148, 149, 163, 164, 207, 371, 373, 397, 417, 549
Wheeler, Susan 12, 173, 254
Whyte, Ryan 8
Wilkinson, John 166
Wilson, Rob 91
Zauhar, David 216, 401, 420, 438, 441, 451
Zimmerman, Daniel 242, 478, 488, 505, 544
Zitt, Joseph 265
Zukowski, Peter 62

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 96, 350, 362, 399, 415, 519, 553, 573
Adams, John 128, 133
Adorno, Theodor 96, 290
Agee, James 279
Albon, George 96
Alexander, Christopher W. 13, 59, 459
Alexander, Elizabeth 489
Alferi, Pierre 153, 166
Allan, Edgar 55
Allison, Dorothy 182
Altieri, Charles 326
Ambrose, Joe 86, 476
Americans, Asian 28, 86, 108, 113, 145, 155, 158, 161, 163, 442, 451, 458, 535, 537
Amram, David 489
Anderson, Beth 288, 318
Andrews, Bruce 96, 117, 406
Andrews, Jim 96, 189, 199, 284, 462, 464
Antin, David 22, 519, 553, 574
Arbor, Ann 107
Armantrout, Rae 148, 284, 461
Ashbery, John 42, 54, 93, 96, 126, 204, 213
Atlanta, Mark P. 88, 99, 177, 215
Auden, W. H. 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 80, 82, 89, 93, 96, 159, 256, 266, 465
Award, Poets 159
Baraka, Amiri 182, 220
Barbour, Doug 533
Barker, Andrew 182
Barnard, Mary 330, 339, 347, 349
Barnes, Diane 487, 488
Basinski, Michael 352

Battin, Wendy 174, 203, 209, 566
Baudelaire, Charles 55, 270, 278
Baudrillard, Jean 489
Beckett, Tom 96, 555
Belgum, Erik 2
Benjamin, Walter 96, 279, 417, 429
Bennett, Bill 65, 352
Bergvall, Caroline 2
Berkeley, Michael 20, 85, 175, 194, 220, 222, 225, 227, 533, 546, 572
Berlin, Irving 38, 41
Berman, Tosh 262, 340, 348, 361, 474
Bernard, George 417, 429
Bernard, Kenneth 166
Bernhard, Thomas 175
Bernstein, Emma 284, 285, 290, 296, 305, 311, 326, 363, 414
Berrigan, Anselm 82, 96, 117, 160
Berrigan, Ted 205, 207, 380, 489
Berry, Jake 299
Berryman, John 159
Blackburn, Paul 293
Blake, William 505
Blaser, Robin 144, 377
Boer, Charles 426
Bok, Christian 352
Borges, Millicent 96
Bouchard, Dan 23, 288, 318
Bourdieu, Pierre 75, 109
Bove, Paul 91, 94, 95, 97, 98, 102, 103
BpNichol 352
Brady, Taylor 2
Brecht, Bertolt 131, 279
Brennan, Joe 476
Brink, Dean A. 379, 440, 441, 442, 449, 451, 455, 458
Brodsky, Joseph 229
Brodsky, Nicole 217, 229, 230, 234, 236, 251, 254, 255, 256, 266, 270, 278
Brooks, Gwendolyn 365
Browne, Colin 96, 182
Browning, Robert 205, 207
Bruno, Franklin 178
Bryan, John 85
Bryant, Dana 175, 385, 388
Buckley, Jeff 55
Bukowski, Charles 533
Bunting, Basil 329
Burke, Edmund 67, 424, 457
Burmeister, Bill 267, 275
Burns, Elizabeth 2
Burns, Ken 79, 86
Burroughs, William S. 22, 350, 362
Byrne, Edward 55
Byron, Philip 533
Caesar, Little 417, 429
Cage, John 96, 336
Cain, Stephen 352
Carey, Peter 279
Carey, Tom 489
Carroll, John 96
Carter, Angela 86, 133
Cather, Willa 476
Catullus 277
Celan, Paul 135, 146
Cendrars, Blaise 340, 348
Ceravolo, Joseph 39
Cervantes, James 417, 429
Chadwick, Lynn 96
Chang, Iris 2
Chaucer, Geoffrey 99, 417, 429
Chester, Jeff 476
Chomsky, Noam 124
Clark, Emilie 79, 82, 86
Clifford, Pat 275
Clinton, Bill 108, 113, 145, 370, 373, 379, 416
Coalition, Christian 113, 145, 155
Cobbing, Bob 143
Coleman, Jen 489
Collins, Martha 2
Collom, Jack 81, 86
Columbus, Christopher 194, 417, 429
Comments, Poets 338
Cook, Albert 476
Coolidge, Clark 126, 285, 290, 363
Corbett, Bill 432
Coultas, Brenda 117
County, Madison 324, 544
Crane, Lee 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 89, 93, 465
Creeley, Robert 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 102, 103, 129, 132, 144, 156, 176, 177, 204, 205, 207, 213, 291, 343, 377, 380
Crosson, Robert 323, 368
Culley, Peter 160, 382
Curtis, Dana 279, 417, 429
Darragh, Tina 190, 191, 195, 198
Darwin, Charles 417, 429
Davenport, Steve 574
Davidson, Daniel 96
Davies, Kevin 117, 519, 553
Davis, Martin 408, 471
Davis, Tim 117, 471
Delany, Samuel R. 96
Deleuze, Gilles 96
Dennis, Carl 22, 24
Derksen, Jeff 352
Derkson, Jeff 2
Derrida, Jacques 96
Dewey, John 457
Doris, Stacy 116, 117, 194, 381
Downing, David 299
Dubois, Caroline 116, 381

Dugan, Alan 322, 433
Duncan, Robert 213, 574
Durgin, Patrick F. 15, 125, 370, 373, 414
Dylan, Michael 574
Edgar, Chris 14, 16, 22, 55
Edison, Thomas 544
Eigner, Larry 78, 539, 544
Eliot, Joe 26, 34, 35, 39, 40, 42, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 89, 117, 248, 283, 319, 349, 354, 377, 437, 555
Eliot, T. S. 34, 49, 51, 52, 57, 61, 89, 465
Elliott, George 338, 489
Ellis, Stephen 489
Emerson, Claudia 330, 339, 347, 349
England, Amy 136, 147, 159, 166, 397, 417, 429, 489, 536
Epstein, Thomas 437, 463
Eugene, Brett 338, 546, 572
Evans, Bill 309, 489
Faithfull, Marianne 55
Farrell, Dan 117, 382
Federman, Ray 2
Felix, Joel 80
Ferguson, Jesse 352
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 574
Finnegan, Jim 50, 138, 142, 149, 284, 433, 484, 485, 491, 494
Fitterman, Rob 117
Fletcher, Jerry E. 341, 342, 344, 346, 359, 362, 394, 395, 396, 400, 410, 445, 446, 470, 487, 488, 492, 494, 507, 510, 511, 536, 543, 552
Fletcher, Sasha 341, 360, 369, 445, 510
Foley, Patrick 49, 51, 60, 71, 299, 498
Forbes, John 437
Ford, Henry 363
Foust, Graham 96
Fox, Hugh 216
France, Peter 9, 11, 22, 122, 159, 417, 425, 429
Frances, Mary 2
Fraser, Kathleen 96, 475
Fraser, Simon 65
Friedlander, Ben 489
Friedman, David M. 117
Frost, Corey 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 89, 93, 131, 138, 159
Frost, Robert 279, 465
Fuller, Heather 96
Gallagher, Kevin 316
Gallagher, Kristen 19
Gander, Forrest 120, 287
Gardner, Drew 117
Genet, Jean 193
Gevirtz, Susan 288, 318
Giles, Samantha 476
Ginsberg, Allen 96, 362, 363, 380, 489
Giorno, John 15, 519, 553
Gizzi, Peter 182
Gladman, Renee 288, 318
Glass, Jesse 96
Golding, Alan 2, 144
Goodall, Jane 145
Gordon, David 338
Gordon, Robert 182, 338
Gould, Glenn 137
Graham, Lea 480
Grangaud, Michelle 381
Graves, Robert 159
Green, Paul 194
Grenier, Bob 363, 464
Griffin, Tim 19, 476
Grosjean, Jean 489
Hall, Donald 159
Hall, Wheeler 20
Halpern, Daniel 334
Hamill, Janet 489
Hamill, Meg 489
Hansen, Jefferson 566
Harris, Kaplan 65
Hart, Matt 158, 161, 308, 309
Hartman, Charles 174, 203, 209
Harvey, James 515, 522
Healy, Randolph 196, 547
Heath, Jennifer 86, 220, 243, 246, 284, 290, 311, 326, 358, 364, 371
Hehir, Kevin 2
Heidegger, Martin 96, 423
Hejinian, Lynn 284
Henwood, Doug 96
Herbert, George 325, 447
Herman, Rachel 287
Hershon, Bob 383, 405, 408
Hofer, Jen 2
Hoffman, Cara 487, 488
Hollo, Anselm 380, 386, 489
Holloway, Rob 182
Holman, Bob 55, 121, 165, 452, 454
Holmes, Michael 316
Homer 417, 429, 489, 555
Hoover, Edgar 22, 182, 287
Hoover, Paul 120, 284
Howard, Scott 96, 564
Howe, Bill 2, 352
Howe, Susan 476, 574
Howe, William R. 352
Huang, Yunte 2
Hughes, Langston 54, 82, 316, 465
Hughes, Peter 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 45, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 57, 60, 71, 89, 93, 159
Hunter, Robert 163
Ignatow, David 469, 473, 474, 496, 510, 516, 520, 521
Indiana, Robert 248, 260, 267

Inman, Peter 191, 193, 195, 198
Ireland, Lauren 163, 338, 547
Israel, David R. 156, 157, 201, 203, 204, 209, 245, 268, 276, 280, 289, 301, 305, 313, 315, 317, 327, 330, 332, 335, 336, 339, 347, 349, 366, 456, 472, 477, 478, 490, 508, 509, 525, 563, 569
Israeli, Henry 489
Jackson, Jesse 96, 457, 476
Jacob, Max 417, 429
Jacobs, Ken 433
Jaeger, Peter 2, 352
Jameson, Fred 161, 424, 447
Jarmusch, Jim 24
Jarnot, Lisa 96, 117, 154, 432
Jefferson, Thomas 417, 429
Jeffery, Mark 489
Johns, Jasper 326
Jonas, Steve 189, 199
Jones, Brian 59, 489
Jordan, June 86, 363, 378, 437, 452, 454, 460, 490, 503, 550
Joselow, Beth 96
Joyce, Trevor 555
Kafka, Franz 279
Katz, Alex 133
Kelleher, Mike 2
Kelly, Patrick 84
Kelsey, Karla 96
Kennedy, David 306
Kenner, Hugh 538, 548, 554, 555
Kerouac, Jack 96
Khlebnikov, Velimir 462, 463, 530
Killian, Sean 117
Kim, Myung Mi 486
Kinsella, Thomas 48, 285, 290, 304, 309, 329, 502
Kiyooka, Roy 520, 554
Koch, Kenneth 42, 54, 93, 438, 452, 454
Koller, Jim 546, 572
Kramer, Wendy 352
Kraus, Chris 489
Kushner, Bill 463
Kuszai, Joel 13
Kyger, Joanne 144, 377
Laughlin, James 248, 260, 262, 263, 265, 267, 269, 271, 272, 275, 277, 279, 287, 289, 294, 301, 313, 315, 317, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 339, 340, 341, 343, 347, 348, 349, 350, 353, 355, 356, 357, 359, 361, 362, 380, 393, 574, 575
Lauter, Paul 220, 358, 364, 371
Lauterbach, Ann 116, 381
Lavender, Bill 288, 318
Lazar, Hank 520
Levertov, Denise 63, 88, 110, 176
Levy, Andrew 84, 96, 382
Levy, Andy 117
Lew, Walter 2
Lewis, Bernard 79, 82, 86, 456
London, Frank 2, 143, 194, 405, 408, 462, 480, 489, 519, 553
Lookingbill, Colleen 436
Lorca, Federico García 574
Mac Low, Jackson 84, 117, 382
Lowell, Amy 555
Lowell, Robert 159
Luoma, Bill 503
Luther, Martin 210, 417, 429
Lynch, David 472
Lyons, Kim 117
Mackey, Nate 189, 190, 191, 195, 198, 199
Mackey, Nathaniel 96, 181, 184, 185, 189, 190, 191, 193, 195, 198, 199, 221
Madrid, Anthony 408
Mandelstam, Osip 135, 236, 253, 261, 266, 463
Manning, Nicholas 309, 476
Marley, Bob 489
Marlowe, Philip 76, 83
Marsh, Bill 476
Marshall, Robert 329, 355
Martin, Camille 21, 338
Martin, Paul 96
Marvin, Lee 192
Marx, Karl 417, 429
Mason, Janet 471, 489
Massey, Karen 554, 555
Mathews, Harry 96
Matthews, Harry 334, 335
Matthews, William 294, 334, 335
Mayer, Bernadette 574
Mayer, Jane 287
McCaffery, Steve 2, 154, 216, 352
Mead, Philip 471
Medal, Frost 279
Melville, Nicky 70, 96
Mengham, Rod 166
Merrill, James 34, 49, 51, 52, 57, 60, 89
Merwin, W. S. 63, 88, 91, 95, 103, 105, 110, 112, 126, 129, 131, 132, 139, 141, 156, 157, 159, 176, 177, 204, 213, 224, 231, 232, 289, 301, 313, 317, 327, 332, 476
Mesmer, Sharon 489
Messerli, Douglas 574
Metcalf, Paul 2
Michaels, Leonard 476
Miller, Cynthia 291
Miller, Henry 271, 574
Miller, Paul D. 476
Milton, John 96, 417, 429
Mirakove, Carol 1
Mitchell, Joan 28
Moore, Allison 26, 28, 34, 35, 39, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 60, 89, 93, 353, 357, 359,

393, 555
Moore, Marianne 353, 465
Morris, Dee 291, 489
Morse, Jesse 417, 429
Moses, Robert 417, 429
Mosley, Walter 334, 335
Mottram, Eric 211
Moxley, Jennifer 125, 309, 432
Mudede, Charles 168
Mueller, Ursula 38, 41
Mullen, Harryette 18, 19, 20, 439, 489
Murphy, Paul 96
Murphy, Sheila E. 13, 96, 182
Myles, Eileen 96, 370, 373, 414
Nagahata, Akitoshi 437
Nathanson, Tenney 182
Neilson, Melanie 116, 381
Nelson, Paul 285, 290, 323, 368
Nolan, Pat 166
Norman, Peter 96, 291
Norton, John 279, 284
Notley, Alice 42, 54, 93
Nowak, Mark 2, 175
Oliver, John 456
Olsen, Lance 476
Olson, Charles 96, 380
Olson, Kirby 96, 175, 213, 329, 574
Oppen, George 91, 95, 515, 522, 574
Oppenheimer, Joel 331
Pacific, Asian 159, 291, 440, 448
Padgett, Ron 82, 438, 452, 454
Palmer, Michael 182, 204, 213, 284, 287, 533, 574
Patchen, Kenneth 271
Patterson, Ian 338, 489
Patton, Julie 2
Perse, John 574
Persky, Stan 65
Phillip, Andrew 194
Phillips, Beth 192, 214
Phillips, Tom 192, 214
Pinker, Steven 137
Pinsky, Robert 464
Pinto, Regina 186
Piombino, Nick 116, 381
Pitt, Brad 509, 525
Plath, Sylvia 42, 45, 50, 54, 60, 93, 159
Poe, Allan 55
Portugal, Anne 159
Pound, Ezra 2, 26, 34, 35, 39, 40, 42, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 60, 61, 71, 89, 96, 133, 271, 275, 279, 287, 289, 301, 313, 315, 317, 327, 329, 330, 332, 339, 340, 341, 343, 347, 348, 349, 353, 355, 356, 357, 359, 380, 393, 398, 407, 465, 499, 502, 555, 574
Powell, Douglas 533
Presjnar, Mark 226, 228, 244
Prevallet, Kristen 566
Prince, Richard 546, 572
Pritchett, Patrick 28, 86, 127, 129, 150, 156, 177, 271, 289, 301, 313, 315, 317, 327, 330, 332, 339, 347, 349, 380, 407, 409, 422
Prynne, J. H. 290
Queneau, Raymond 574
Rakosi, Carl 574
Ranaldo, Lee 489
Randall, Karen 138
Ratcliffe, Stephen 318, 324
Raven, Francis 55
Raworth, Tom 298
Reagan, Nancy 78
Reiner, Chris 100, 479
Retallack, Joan 96
Rexroth, Kenneth 574
Reznikoff, Charles 96, 220
Ribot, Marc 100
Rich, Adrienne 159, 420, 427
Ridge, Cedar 75, 163
Rilke, Rainer Maria 456
Rimbaud, Dee 16
Robertson, Lisa 65, 352
Rodefer, Stephen 127, 150
Rorty, Richard 547
Rosenfeld, Kim 117
Ross, Andrew 285, 290, 363, 365
Rothenberg, Jerome 248, 260, 267, 574
Rothenberg, Jerry 287
Roubaud, Jacques 47, 110
Rubin, Michael 487, 488
Sanders, Jay 55, 489
Sappho 503
Saroyan, William 279
Sartre, Paul 234, 266, 268, 270, 276, 278
Sayers, Thomas 489
Scalapino, Leslie 182, 204, 213, 284, 288, 318
Schelling, Andrew 380, 386
Schneeman, George 380
Scholder, Amy 519, 553
Schultz, Susan M. 351
Schuster, Josh 382, 384, 390, 391, 489
Schuyler, James 126, 476
Sebastian, Nic 279
Selwyn, Hugh 315, 330, 339, 347, 349
Shakespeare, William 99, 538, 548
Shapiro, David 515, 522
Shapiro, Karl 279
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 91, 95, 99, 205, 207, 547
Sherman, Cindy 182
Sherry, James 437, 452, 454
Shurin, Aaron 182
Sieburth, Richard 116, 381
Sikelianos, Eleni 116, 381

Silliman, Ron 284, 291, 294, 343, 506, 515, 546, 572, 576
Simon, Greg 20, 45, 50, 382, 384, 390, 391, 489
Smith, Harry 9, 11, 75, 96, 109, 338, 352, 489
Smith, John 417, 429, 535, 537
Smith, Rod 96, 117
Smith, Susan 96
Smithson, Robert 85
Snyder, Gary 316, 480, 574
Sokal, Alan 9, 11, 363, 378
Solomon, Carl 2, 417, 429
Spahr, Juliana 96, 489, 553
Spandrift, Jack 186, 325, 408, 453
Sparrow, John 96
Spicer, John 336
Stafford, William 156
Stanford, Frank 171, 316
Stanley, Jared 9, 11
Stanton, Rob 160
Steadman, Ralph 55
Stecopoulos, Eleni 2
Stefans, Kim 117
Stein, Gertrude 117, 279, 285, 290
Stevens, Wallace 26, 34, 35, 39, 40, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 60, 70, 89, 91, 93, 95, 96, 103, 465
Stewart, Jon 194
Stroffolino, Chris 96
Sullivan, Andrew 18, 19, 439
Sullivan, Gary 117
Talarico, Ross 420, 427
Tarkos, Christophe 116, 381
Tarn, Nathaniel 547
Templeton, Fiona 96, 116, 381
Terry, Philip 280
Texas, Irving 46, 123, 127, 137, 150, 437, 440, 441, 442, 448, 449, 451, 455, 458, 459, 484, 485, 487, 488, 491, 492, 494
Thomas, Dylan 22, 117, 175, 211, 216, 279, 574
Thompson, George 14, 16, 55
Torra, Joseph 288, 318
Tranter, John 471
Trevor, Jesse 182
Tribune, Chicago 549
Trujillo, Dorothy 526, 534
Tsvetaeva, Marina 453
Turner, Victor 46, 48, 75, 107, 109, 123, 127, 134, 137, 150, 162, 167, 169, 176, 451, 458
Tyler, Richard 437
Valery, Paul 390, 565
Vangelisti, Paul 323, 368
Vermont, Charlie 40, 53
Veronica, Angela 20
Viegener, Matias 519, 553
Viereck, Peter 142, 149
Vitiello, Chris 288, 318
Waldman, Anne 380
Waldman, Ken 386
Waldrop, Keith 306, 489
Waldrop, Rosemary 47, 88
Waldrop, Rosmarie 47, 88, 96, 412, 424, 489
Walker, Laura 2
Wallace, Nicole 96, 438, 452, 454, 503
Walsh, Catherine 85, 399
Warhol, Andy 452, 454
Warsh, Lewis 82
Washington, George 28, 35, 39, 58, 59, 62, 89, 96, 107, 109, 115, 163, 180, 192, 291, 338, 402, 417, 420, 428, 429
Watson, Scott 22, 117, 211, 216
Watten, Barry 96, 284, 285, 290, 296, 305, 307, 308, 309, 311, 326, 363, 365, 366, 378, 437, 489, 546, 572
Wayne, John 24
Webster, Noah 364, 371
Weinberger, Eliot 260, 267
Weiner, Hannah 380
Weiss, Jason 66, 70
Welch, Jen 462
Wendt, Larry 140
Whalen, Philip 546, 572
Whitehead, Ron 433
Whitman, Walt 96, 489
Wiener, Hannah 116, 117, 381
Wieners, John 42, 54, 93
Wilcox, Dan 67
Wilder, Kimberly 325
Wilkes, John 417
Williams, Paul O. 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 76, 83, 89, 93, 271, 279, 287, 515, 522, 555, 574
Williams, Roger 412, 424
Williams, William Carlos 40, 53, 267, 275, 279, 465, 574
Wilson, Warren 164
Woolf, Virginia 547
Wordsworth, William 92, 101
Wright, C. D. 120, 132, 152, 173, 179, 182, 187, 188, 197, 489
Yates, Katie 2
Zauhar, Dave 438, 452, 454, 459
Zimmerman, Dan 117, 488, 505, 506, 544
Zukofsky, Louis 96, 220, 285, 290, 329, 476
Zweig, Janet 96

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 67, 338, 414
Aesthetics 38, 41, 76, 82, 83, 96, 167, 169, 175, 183, 220, 230, 234, 238, 241, 283, 290, 303, 307, 319, 346, 402, 420, 428, 438, 452, 454, 512, 517, 522

Affect 442, 451, 458
African American poetry 423, 435, 476, 489
Anthologies 2, 159, 210, 215, 220, 246, 279, 284, 287, 290, 340, 348, 358, 364, 371, 406, 429, 463, 471, 476, 477, 478, 480, 489, 490, 522, 524, 531
Anti-Semitism 353
Appropriation 59, 91, 95, 103, 108, 113, 145, 338, 458, 533
Archives and libraries 11, 14, 16, 55, 65, 86, 96, 99, 106, 151, 156, 157, 174, 192, 203, 209, 210, 213, 215, 287, 306, 313, 317, 327, 332, 367, 404, 492, 531, 541, 542
Autobiography 65, 85, 159, 489, 533
Avant-garde 2, 46, 96, 247, 285, 290, 517
Beauty 46, 165, 167, 169, 421, 423
Biography 22, 96, 210, 477, 478, 490
Book announcements 65, 120, 166, 214, 288, 318, 437, 462, 476, 489
Bookstores 9, 11, 30, 36, 288, 318, 401, 555
Calls for submissions 175, 456
Capitalism 175, 559
Censorship 266, 489
Cities 9, 11, 29, 30, 385, 388, 420, 423, 427, 480
Collage and montage 60
Conferences and festivals 2, 12, 28, 117, 152, 175, 192, 216, 291, 388, 456, 462, 546, 572
Copyright and permissions 96, 144, 159, 550
Craft 70, 120, 152, 277, 522
Creative writing pedagogy 38, 41, 42, 54, 78, 93, 108, 113, 145, 158, 161, 456
Deconstruction 9, 11, 456
Difficulty 319, 354, 503, 512
Digital archives 257, 273, 281, 337
Dreams 60, 208, 218, 219, 423, 496
Ecology and ecopoetics 159, 338, 418, 426
Editing 67, 176, 210, 215
Electronic poetry and hypertext 140, 223, 294, 306, 343, 351, 419, 422, 566
Elegy 380
Empire and imperialism 86, 108, 113, 145, 159, 217, 229, 242, 280, 284, 417, 429, 453
Epic 48, 65, 137, 380, 382, 384, 390, 391
Erasure 496
Ethics 303, 442, 451, 452, 455, 458, 459
Experimental poetry 198
Fascism 286, 301, 313, 315, 317, 327, 328, 329, 330, 332, 333, 339, 347, 349, 389
Feminism 46, 175, 451, 458
Film 1, 22, 24, 287, 356, 426, 480, 489, 527, 574
Formalism 75, 109, 137, 149, 150, 177, 204, 462, 463, 517
Free speech 9
Free verse 75, 109
Futurism 286, 296, 305, 462, 463, 517, 530
Gender 175, 301, 313, 315, 317, 327, 330, 332, 339, 347, 349
Ghazal 156, 204, 206, 227, 231, 233
Grants and funding 9, 11, 29, 30, 33, 36, 38, 41, 56, 76, 78, 81, 83, 266, 306, 489
Haiku 81, 82, 86, 204, 206, 227, 231, 380, 421, 505, 513
Harlem Renaissance 61
Homophonic translation 2
Humour and satire 426
Identity politics 285, 290, 326
Ideology 135, 158, 161, 230, 234, 266, 414, 424, 456, 567
Imagism 517
Improvisation 161
Indigenous and Native poetics 86, 477, 478, 490
Interviews 2, 171, 222, 293, 414, 448
Israel and Palestine 156, 157, 158, 161, 201, 203, 204, 209, 231, 245, 268, 276, 280, 289, 301, 305, 313, 315, 317, 325, 327, 330, 332, 335, 336, 339, 347, 349, 366, 417, 429, 456, 472, 477, 478, 489, 490, 508, 509, 525, 563, 569
Jewish poetics 496
Language poetry 96, 189, 199, 220, 246, 284, 285, 290, 296, 311, 326, 340, 348, 383, 405, 463, 546, 572
Letters and correspondence 96, 279, 330, 339, 347, 349, 437
Little magazines 2, 30, 67, 75, 91, 95, 96, 109, 159, 175, 176, 182, 194, 258, 275, 305, 316, 318, 324, 352, 363, 365, 367, 380, 405, 442, 451, 458, 462, 480, 489, 546, 572
Lyric poetry 213, 272, 326, 330, 339, 347, 349
Marxism 46, 285, 290, 424, 462
Materiality of the text 285, 290, 309, 326
Memory 2, 7, 38, 41, 196, 204, 213, 216, 231, 285, 290, 356, 399, 476, 544
MFA programs 40, 53, 183, 334
Modernism 26, 34, 35, 39, 42, 46, 49, 51, 52, 54, 57, 61, 62, 89, 96, 115, 213, 223, 225, 227, 241, 285, 287, 290, 303, 326, 343, 442, 451, 455, 458, 465, 476, 512, 517
Mourning and loss 24, 36, 271, 328, 333, 349, 350, 362, 399, 403, 413, 415, 423, 546, 570, 572
Multiculturalism 2, 46, 290
Music and poetry 2, 33, 38, 41, 46, 80, 96, 109, 115, 133, 135, 164, 190, 191, 195, 198, 261, 264, 274, 300, 336, 342, 344, 346, 380, 385, 388, 390, 414, 417, 419, 429, 484, 485, 489, 496, 565
Nationalism 290
Nature 9, 11, 46, 56, 105, 142, 149, 231, 456, 517, 567, 569

New Formalism 75, 109, 137, 150
Obituary and memorial 263, 279, 386, 469, 473
Objectivism 220, 285, 290, 515, 522
Ontology 477, 478, 490, 567
Oulipo 116, 381
Performance and the poetry reading 18, 19, 30, 36, 80, 81, 140, 222, 223, 225, 227, 231, 252, 291, 385, 489
Phenomenology 562
Philosophy 75, 108, 109, 113, 145, 335, 385, 388, 457, 477, 478, 489, 490
Place and region 83, 85, 159, 277, 290, 489
Poet laureate 45, 50, 217, 229, 234
Poetics 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, 12, 13, 17, 23, 26, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 39, 40, 42, 44, 49, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 57, 59, 61, 64, 66, 72, 73, 77, 86, 87, 89, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 101, 102, 103, 105, 112, 122, 127, 150, 156, 158, 160, 161, 166, 175, 220, 245, 271, 285, 290, 292, 294, 302, 309, 315, 323, 326, 330, 331, 334, 339, 347, 349, 358, 368, 390, 399, 407, 408, 409, 414, 422, 435, 465, 472, 501, 503, 505, 511, 517, 518, 529, 533, 538, 548, 571
Politics and poetry 311, 326
Postmodernism 46, 96, 213, 225, 227, 241, 303, 451, 455, 458
Print vs. digital 28, 59, 67, 136, 147, 156, 192, 194, 213, 215, 226, 228, 244, 286, 289, 291, 301, 313, 317, 327, 332, 437, 442, 448, 449, 451, 455, 458, 462, 484, 487, 488, 492, 494, 517
Prizes and awards 2, 69, 159, 279, 385, 388, 539, 544, 546, 550, 568, 572
Prose poem 306
Prosody and meter 75, 91, 95, 109, 137, 142, 149, 150, 231, 310, 330, 339, 347, 349, 477, 478, 490, 568, 572
Psychoanalysis 9, 11, 25, 31, 226, 228, 244, 325
Queer poetics 175, 266, 489
Race and poetry 22, 338, 417, 429, 442, 451, 458, 459, 559
Reading announcements 80, 181, 184, 185, 189, 190, 191, 193, 195, 198, 199, 221, 471, 474, 475, 489
Religion and the sacred 108, 113, 145, 155, 158, 161, 163, 266, 338, 352, 453, 477, 478, 490, 566
Representation 290, 354, 414
Reviewing and criticism 13, 46, 91, 95, 137, 175, 176, 181, 184, 185, 210, 229, 266, 291, 306, 314, 328, 329, 333, 335, 353, 447, 459, 464, 471, 476, 489, 566
Revision 235
Romanticism 135, 169, 264, 405, 408
School of Quietude 187, 197
Science 9, 11, 25, 31, 46, 75, 123, 127, 134, 135, 137, 142, 146, 149, 150, 162, 167, 169, 230, 234, 304, 310, 497, 501, 505, 514, 518
Serial poem 157, 162, 318
Small press publishing 13, 65, 116, 175, 194, 215, 288, 291, 318, 330, 338, 339, 347, 349, 381, 471, 486, 489, 524, 531, 566
Software and code 37, 106
Sonnet 336, 380, 538, 548
Sound poetry 2
Subjectivity 61, 91, 95, 108, 113, 145, 175, 208, 218, 219, 338, 429, 465, 504, 507
Sublime 91, 95, 103, 559
Surrealism 177, 213, 258
The academy 2, 18, 19, 27, 34, 35, 39, 48, 49, 51, 52, 57, 60, 62, 65, 69, 71, 75, 80, 84, 89, 99, 104, 108, 113, 115, 119, 121, 123, 124, 127, 128, 129, 133, 136, 137, 145, 147, 150, 153, 158, 159, 161, 175, 176, 177, 182, 184, 185, 189, 190, 191, 192, 195, 197, 198, 199, 208, 210, 216, 218, 219, 224, 227, 261, 275, 279, 285, 290, 291, 298, 299, 304, 309, 311, 326, 329, 338, 339, 347, 349, 351, 358, 399, 401, 420, 435, 439, 455, 456, 463, 465, 472, 476, 482, 489, 502, 520, 531, 539, 544, 546, 554, 572
The body 62, 91, 95, 115, 175, 196, 423, 457, 465, 469, 473
The canon 92, 101, 131, 364, 371
The Gulf War 113, 145
The Holocaust 440, 441, 442, 448, 449, 451, 458, 459, 484
The internet 75, 81, 171, 202, 257, 273, 281, 282, 337, 338, 342, 344, 346, 417, 425, 429, 462, 471, 480, 497, 501, 505, 533
The line 131, 174, 189, 199, 277, 401
The listserv 11, 20, 23, 29, 30, 33, 59, 60, 61, 62, 65, 71, 82, 88, 89, 99, 115, 151, 158, 161, 176, 177, 202, 212, 252, 271, 273, 279, 281, 285, 287, 330, 338, 339, 347, 349, 358, 363, 365, 386, 414, 437, 465, 477, 478, 490, 522, 533, 546, 572
The New Sentence 285, 290, 311, 326
Theatre 38, 41, 182, 299, 417, 429, 432, 486, 489, 509, 525, 574
Torture and Abu Ghraib 399, 417, 429
Translation 2, 83, 92, 101, 116, 120, 129, 156, 159, 177, 192, 194, 231, 279, 326, 380, 381, 403, 423, 426, 462, 480, 489, 546, 572, 574
Vietnam 9, 11
Visual and concrete poetry 2, 192, 257, 258, 259, 273, 281, 282, 337, 342, 344, 346, 462
Visual art 2, 38, 41, 83, 85, 194, 204, 261, 264, 273, 281, 291, 299, 324, 417, 429,

462, 489, 493

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 576 in all.

30 OCT 1997

1. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Nominations please

1 NOV 1997

2. cris cheek — (no subject)
3. bertram — Re: Nominations please
4. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: Nominations please
5. Kali Tal — Re: Nominations please
6. Layne Russell — Ebner
7. Kurt Nimmo — In Memory of Hans Ebner

2 NOV 1997

8. Ryan Whyte — oza
9. R. Gancie — Sokal Juke
10. Tom Beard — Re: Nominations please
11. mark weiss — Re: Sokal Juke

3 NOV 1997

12. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 31 Oct 1997 to 1 Nov 1997
13. Christopher Alexander — n/formation 2
14. Mark Prejsnar — Who is this POE guy anyway? (fwd)
15. p. durgin — Request for Giorno
16. Brent Long — Re: Who is this POE guy anyway? (fwd)
17. Brent Long — Other Poetics Lists
18. Aldon Nielsen — Poetry reading by Mullen and Singleton
19. Michael Magee — Re: Poetry reading by Mullen and Singleton
20. Jean Day — Harryette Mullen, Jean Day, Ann Veronica Simon reading
21. Charles Bernstein — Wordrobe
22. Pierre Joris — mi muertos

4 NOV 1997

23. Poetics List Administration — Bouchard's new address (fwd)
24. Issa Clubb — Re: mi muertos
25. Harold Rhenisch — Soko Loco
26. Layne Russell — Re: Other Poetics Lists
27. Don Cheney — What? Isabel Ringing wasn't available for a quote?
28. Pritchett,Pat — FW: Codex Alimentarius
29. henry gould — sleep of poetics
30. William Burmeister Prod — Re: sleep of poetics
31. mark weiss — Re: Soko Loco
32. William Burmeister Prod — Re: sleep of poetics
33. mark weiss — Sleep of poetics
34. Timothy Materer — Re: Other Poetics Lists
35. J. Tate — Re: Other Poetics Lists
36. Harold Rhenisch — Re: sleep of poetics
37. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Soko Loco
38. Harold Rhenisch — Wupperthal awake!
39. Gwyn McVay — Re: Other Poetics Lists
40. Aviva Vogel — Re: Other Poetics Lists
41. mark weiss — Re: Wupperthal awake!

5 NOV 1997

42. Schuchat Simon — Re: Other Poetics Lists

43. Aviva Vogel — Re: Soko Loco
44. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: Other Poetics Lists
45. Pam Brown — POet Laureate UK
46. Aviva Vogel — Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
47. Marcella — FW: Waldrop & Roubaud reading
48. David Kellogg — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
49. Jack Foley — Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply
50. James Finnegan — Re: POet Laureate UK
51. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply
52. Brent Long — Re: Other Poetics Lists
53. Brent Long — Re: Other Poetics Lists
54. Brent Long — Re: Other Poetics Lists
55. nuyopoman — POE's Grammy
56. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Sleep of poetics
57. Jack Foley — Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply
58. J. Tate — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
59. Christopher Alexander — Re: FW: Codex Alimentarius
60. Timothy Materer — 1. not _that_ Hughes 2. Still other lists 3. EPOUND-L
61. Herb Levy — Re: Other Poetics Lists
62. Peter Zukowski — Modernism discussion list
63. Brent Long — Other poetry discussions
64. p. durgin — Re: Sleep of poetics
65. Charles Watts — Debbie's adventures now available
66. p. durgin — Re: Sleep of poetics
67. Susan Clark — CODEX for Canadian listees
68. David Benedetti — Re: computer program for syntactic structures
69. Timothy Materer — The scope of CAP-L
70. mark weiss — (no subject)
71. Jack Foley — 1. not _that_ Hughes 2. Still other lists 3. EPOUND-L -Reply
72. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Sleep of poetics
73. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Sleep of poetics
74. Aviva Vogel — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
75. David Kellogg — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
76. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Wupperthal awake!
77. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Sleep of poetics
78. Laurie Schneider/Crag Hill — NEA and Poetry in the schools
79. Safdie Joseph — Re: Lewis and Clark
80. henry gould — another Providence reading
81. Jordan Davis — Re: NEA and Poetry in the schools
82. Schuchat Simon — Re: Lewis and Clark

6 NOV 1997

83. mark weiss — Re: Wupperthal awake!
84. Louis Cabri — Philly Talks
85. lefthandb — (no subject)
86. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Lewis and Clark
87. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Sleep of poetics
88. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Other poetry discussions
89. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply
90. Brian McHale — Re: computer program for syntactic structures
91. rob wilson — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
92. Harold Rhenisch — Ludwig von Glass
93. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Other Poetics Lists
94. henry gould — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
95. Brent Long — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
96. aerialedge — New Deleuze, Coll Olson Prose, &&& @ Bridge Street

97. Brent Long — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
98. Sylvester Pollet — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
99. Mark Prejsnar — audiopoesis
100. Christopher Reiner — New Pubs
101. mark weiss — Re: Ludwig von Glass
102. Pritchett,Pat — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov
103. Pritchett,Pat — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov
104. Stacie Slotnick — Re: audiopoesis
105. George Bowering — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
106. Dean Taciuch — Re: computer program for syntactic structures
107. J. Tate — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
108. George Bowering — Speaking American
109. J. Tate — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
110. Marcella — Re: Other poetry discussions
111. hg — computer-generated poetry
112. Aviva Vogel — Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov

7 NOV 1997

113. mark weiss — Re: Speaking American
114. Tom Orange — recent french poetry
115. Patricia Cockram — Re: Modernism discussion list
116. Susan Clark — FRENCH POETS b. after 1950 -- aka RADDLE MOON 16 launch at EAR at HERE]
117. Pierre Joris — a noun-cement
118. Lawrence Upton. — mainstream website
119. Mark Prejsnar — Re: audiopoesis
120. Brent Long — C.D. Wright/Other poets for discussion
121. Brent Long — Re: audiopoesis
122. Gwyn McVay — Re: recent french poetry
123. cloward — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
124. William Burmeister Prod — Re: audiopoesis
125. p. durgin — Jennifer Moxley
126. aerialedge — Re: audiopoesis
127. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
128. Douglas Barbour — Re: Ludwig von Glass
129. Douglas Barbour — Re: Merwin
130. LAURA MORIARTY — Re: audiopoesis
131. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Merwin
132. Brent Long — Merwin
133. mark weiss — Re: Ludwig von Glass
134. mark weiss — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
135. henry g — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
136. Steven Marks — MacProse
137. David Kellogg — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
138. JforJames — Re: Frost
139. Jordan Davis — Re: Merwin
140. robert drake — Re: audiopoesis
141. Chauncy Dicey — Re: Merwin
142. James Finnegan — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
143. Lawrence Upton. — Writers Forum publications
144. acgold01 — Contact info
145. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Speaking American
146. Harold Rhenisch — EP, poet, raw and cooked
147. mark weiss — Re: MacProse
148. mark weiss — (no subject)
149. mark weiss — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope

150. Thomas Bell — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
151. Stephen Cope — Re: audiopoesis
152. Aviva Vogel — Re: C.D. Wright/Other poets for discussion

8 NOV 1997

153. Michel Delville — French poets born after 1950
154. Kevin Varrone — addresses
155. Michael Magee — Re: Speaking American
156. David R. Israel — Re: Merwin
157. David R. Israel — Re: Merwin, p.s.
158. Matthew Hart — Re: Speaking American
159. Aviva Vogel — Re: Merwin
160. Poetics List Administration — NYC readings/ZINC Bar (fwd)
161. Michael Magee — Re: Speaking American
162. cloward — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
163. mark weiss — Spe3aking American
164. mark weiss — (no subject)
165. nuyopoman — Zimbabwe Links

9 NOV 1997

166. John Wilkinson — Re: French Poets born after 1950
167. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
168. Matthew Stadler — Re: Zimbabwe Links
169. Maria Damon — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
170. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
171. Brent Long — Call for entry

10 NOV 1997

172. George Bowering — Re: Speaking American
173. Susan Wheeler — Nancarrow
174. Henry Gould — Honig online
175. Maria Damon — 2 fwded announcements
176. Douglas Barbour — Re: Turner is there still but where's Merwin?
177. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Merwin
178. groberts — Re: French poets after 1950
179. Jeff Hansen — Quirkiness
180. J. Tate — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
181. Michael Magee — Mackey reading at Penn
182. Karen and Trevor — request for submissions
183. Miekal And — to spank your curiosity
184. Brent Long — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
185. Michael Magee — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
186. Eric Blarnes — Re: Quirkiness
187. Michael Magee — Re: Quirkiness
188. Aviva Vogel — Re: Quirkiness
189. Keith Tuma — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
190. Steve Evans — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
191. Michael Magee — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
192. r.drake — Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno
193. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
194. Laura Moriarty — French poets
195. Brent Long — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
196. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Re: Other poetry discussions
197. Maria Damon — Re: Quirkiness
198. Maria Damon — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
199. Maria Damon — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
200. Carl Lynden Peters — d.a. levy

201. David R. Israel — (Fwd) Re: Talk by Spivak
202. Susan Clark — Re: French poets
203. David R. Israel — Re: Honig online

11 NOV 1997

204. David R. Israel — Re: Merwin
205. George Bowering — Re: Other poetry discussions
206. Aviva Vogel — Merwin's Ghazal & Haiku Thing
207. mark weiss — Re: Other poetry discussions
208. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: 2 fwded announcements
209. henry g — Re: Honig online
210. robert drake — Re: d.a. levy
211. Pierre Joris — Re: d.a. levy
212. Tom Orange — French poets
213. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Merwin
214. Brian McHale — Re: Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno
215. Mark Prejsnar — Puritan librarians NOT
216. David Zauhar — Re: d.a. levy
217. henry gould — quote for the day
218. Rachel Loden — Re: 2 fwded announcements
219. Eric Blarnes — Re: 2 fwded announcements
220. Hank Lazer — Re: Heath 3, help?!

12 NOV 1997

221. Markus Foutu — Re: Mackey reading at Penn
222. Layne Russell — Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?
223. Mark Wallace — poetry reading series in San Francisco?
224. Douglas Barbour — Re: Perloff on Merwin
225. Aviva Vogel — Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?
226. Safdie Joseph — Re: Puritan librarians NOT
227. Annie Finch — Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?
228. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Puritan librarians NOT
229. William Burmeister Prod — Re: quote for the day
230. henry — Re: quote for the day
231. David Israel — Finding the Islands
232. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Finding the Islands
233. Tom Beard — Re: Finding the Islands
234. William Burmeister Prod — Re: quote for the day
235. Aldon Nielsen — revising the MLA
236. hg — Re: quote for the day
237. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Acmeists
238. Harold Rhenisch — Re: quote for the day
239. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Acmeists
240. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Acmeists
241. William Burmeister Prod — Re: quote for the day
242. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Soko Loco
243. tristan saldana — Re: Heath 3, help?!
244. Steven Marks — Re: Puritan librarians NOT
245. David R. Israel — Re: Acmeists
246. tristan saldana — Re: Heath 3, help?!
247. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — watten barrage

13 NOV 1997

248. Marjorie Perloff — Re: James Laughlin
249. Layne Russell — Re: acme
250. david bromige — acme
251. Lawrence Upton. — democracy

252. Jacques Debrot — Re: Reading series in Boston?
253. henry g — Re: Acmeists
254. Susan Wheeler — DIGEST re Brodsky
255. henry g — Re: democracy
256. henry g — Re: DIGEST re Brodsky
257. Jena Osman — visual poetry on the internet
258. Jacques Debrot — Re: Visual poetry
259. Jacques Debrot — Re: Visual poetry typo
260. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
261. Douglas Barbour — Re: thought for the day
262. Tosh — Re: James Laughlin
263. Layne Russell — Re: James Laughlin
264. Aviva Vogel — Re: thought for the day
265. Joseph Zitt — Re: James Laughlin
266. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Acmeists
267. William Burmeister Prod — Re: James Laughlin
268. David R. Israel — JPSartre's classics
269. Keith Tuma — Re: James Laughlin
270. henry — Re: Acmeists
271. Pritchett,Pat — Re: James Laughlin
272. p. durgin — Re: James Laughlin
273. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: visual poetry on the internet
274. henry gould — a little JB for today
275. William Burmeister Prod — Re: James Laughlin
276. William Burmeister Prod — Re: JPSartre's classics
277. groberts — Re: Laughlin
278. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Acmeists
279. Michael Coffey — Re: James Laughlin -Reply
280. David R. Israel — Re: Soko Loco
281. r.drake — Re: visual poetry on the internet
282. Bob Grumman — Re: visual poetry on the internet
283. Harold Rhenisch — Re: quote for the day
284. James Finnegan — Re: Heath 3, help?!
285. David Kellogg — watten barrage
286. Catherine Daly — Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?
287. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: James Laughlin
288. Mary Burger — Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
289. David R. Israel — Re: James Laughlin
290. Keith Tuma — Re: watten barrage
291. Charles Alexander — bio for you

14 NOV 1997

292. Charles Alexander — oh oh oh
293. R M Daley — loy lovers
294. rsillima — William Matthews
295. henry — Re: Acmeists
296. henry gould — Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?
297. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: watten barrage
298. Robert Archambeau — What's Up in Sweden
299. Hank Lazer — Re: Reading
300. William Burmeister Prod — Re: a little JB for today
301. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
302. Maria Damon — Re: oh oh oh
303. Maria Damon — Re: watten barrage
304. David Kellogg — Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
305. David R. Israel — Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?

306. henry gould — things happened in Providence
307. aerialedge — Re: watten barrage
308. Matthew Hart — Re: watten barrage
309. David Kellogg — Re: watten barrage
310. maz881 — whistlers
311. David Kellogg — Re: watten barrage
312. Sylvester Pollet — Re: whistlers
313. Brent Long — Re: James Laughlin
314. Bob Grumman — Comprepoetica Warning
315. Pritchett,Pat — Re: James Laughlin
316. Brent Long — Portable Plateau
317. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
318. Safdie Joseph — Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
319. William Burmeister Prod — Re: quote for the day
320. Safdie Joseph — Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
321. Aviva Vogel — Re: watten barrage
322. Brent Long — Dugan/out of print books
323. P.Standard Schaefer — Border's Books/Union Petition
324. Layne Russell — Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
325. Henry Gould — friday's riddle
326. Keith Tuma — Re: watten barrage

15 NOV 1997

327. Patricia Cockram — Re: James Laughlin
328. Burt Kimmelman — Re: James Laughlin
329. David Kellogg — Re: James Laughlin
330. Mark W Scroggins — Re: James Laughlin
331. Burt Kimmelman — Re: James Laughlin
332. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
333. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
334. joel lewis — Re: William Matthews
335. David R. Israel — Mosley's poesy
336. David R. Israel — Re: Soko Loco
337. Miekal And — Re: visual poetry on the internet
338. Annie Finch — Shareholder Activism
339. Annie Finch — Re: James Laughlin

16 NOV 1997

340. Tosh — Re: James Laughlin
341. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: James Laughlin
342. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: visual poetry on the internet
343. rsillima — Laughlin/Pound
344. Miekal And — Re: visual poetry on the internet
345. Alan Grep Sondheim — Stupid Jennifer's Exercises! (fwd)
346. robert drake — Re: visual poetry on the internet
347. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
348. Maria Damon — Re: James Laughlin
349. Harold Rhenisch — Re: James Laughlin
350. Rob Hardin — Grief to come
351. Susan Schultz — RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
352. Scott Pound — ANNOUNCING ESSEX MAGAZINE
353. B. Taylor — Pound, Moore, Laughlin
354. Harold Rhenisch — Re: quote for the day
355. Harold Rhenisch — Re: James Laughlin
356. Henry Gould — Re: Laughlin/Pound
357. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin
358. Kali Tal — Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...

17 NOV 1997

359. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin
360. david bromige — tragedy
361. Tosh — Re: James Laughlin
362. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Grief to come
363. Jordan Davis — Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
364. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...
365. Keith Tuma — Re: Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
366. David R. Israel — social
367. Scott Pound — ESSEX
368. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Border's Books/Union Petition
369. Maria Damon — Re: tragedy
370. p. durgin — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
371. mark weiss — Re: Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...
372. groberts — R. Buckminster Fuller
373. mark weiss — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
374. henry gould — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
375. r.drake — Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
376. Catherine Daly — Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
377. acgold01 — Thanks
378. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
379. Dean A. Brink — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
380. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Naropa Triple A
381. Susan Clark — reminder of Nov22 RADDLE MOON 16 launch at HERE
382. Steve Evans — Farrell's Fuller
383. Mark Baker — Hershon and Chatterton
384. Jo Ann Blevins — R. Bucky Fuller
385. maz881 — Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
386. david bromige — naropa triple A report
387. Maria Damon — Re: Naropa Triple A
388. Maria Damon — Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
389. Safdie Joseph — Re: buzzwords of the moment
390. Pierre Joris — Re: R. Bucky Fuller
391. Marcella — Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
392. George Bowering — Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
393. George Bowering — Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin

18 NOV 1997

394. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: buzzwords of the moment
395. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
396. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: social (was texas)
397. mark weiss — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
398. david bromige — pound more laughlin
399. Rob Hardin — grief to come/tragedy et al
400. hen — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
401. David Zauhar — Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
402. J. Tate — Literacy
403. Rob Hardin — grief not merely mine, nor conclusions personal--
404. Christopher Alexander — Re: to spank your curiosity
405. Jordan Davis — Re: Hershon and Chatterton
406. Tom Vogler — Bananas?
407. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Naropa Triple A
408. Rudolph Rougenez — Re: Hershon and Chatterton
409. Pritchett,Pat — Re: to spank your curiosity
410. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
411. david bromige — Not only my curiosity

412. henry gould — Re: democracy
413. david bromige — rob hardin's grief
414. p. durgin — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
415. Jay Schwartz — Re: Grief to come
416. p. durgin — Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
417. mark weiss — (no subject)
418. Steven Marks — more comedy tonight
419. Miekal And — hEar wRave
420. David Zauhar — Re: Literacy
421. david bromige — gratitude for the comedies tonight
422. Maria Damon — Re: to spank your curiosity

19 NOV 1997

423. Alan Myouka Sondheim — origins of language (fwd)
424. Michael Magee — Re: democracy
425. William Burmeister Prod — (no subject)
426. William Burmeister Prod — Re: more comedy tonight
427. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Literacy
428. David Benedetti — Re: Literacy
429. William Marsh — bloopers
430. p. durgin — Re: democracy
431. Michael Magee — Re: democracy
432. Steve Evans — Jarnot & Moxley at MIT
433. James Finnegan — Re: Dugan/out of print books
434. p. durgin — Re: democracy
435. UB Poetics Program — Job Listing for SUNY-Buffalo
436. Laura Moriarty — Grim, Harrison and Lookingbill
437. KENT JOHNSON — Yasusada in Texas
438. David Zauhar — Re: Literacy
439. Aldon Nielsen — Los Angeles reading
440. Dean A. Brink — Re: Yasusada in Texas
441. David Zauhar — Re: Yasusada in Texas
442. Dean A. Brink — Re: Yasusada in Texas

20 NOV 1997

443. George Bowering — (no subject)
444. david bromige — lingo
445. Jerry E. Fletcher — (no subject)
446. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: lingo
447. henry gould — Re: democracy
448. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Yasusada in Texas
449. Maria Damon — Re: Yasusada in Texas
450. Rachel Loden — alot(ta) lingo
451. David Zauhar — Re: Yasusada in Texas
452. KENT JOHNSON — Re: discontented graduate students send for catalogues
453. Eric Blarnes — religion
454. Jordan Davis — discontented graduate students send for catalogues
455. David Kellogg — Fw: Re: Yasusada in Texas
456. David R. Israel — Parsing praise in Thunder Bay
457. Michael Magee — Re: democracy
458. Maria Damon — Re: Yasusada in Texas
459. Christopher Alexander — Re: Yasusada in Texas
460. Jordan Davis — rediscovered contentiousness
461. George Bowering — Re: lingo
462. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Futurists, Formalists, Acmeists
463. Henry G — Re: Futurists, Formalists, Acmeists
464. acgold01 — Andrews poem

465. Timothy Materer — MODERN_POETS-L
466. Scott Pound — Mail Strike in Canada
467. david bromige — latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county
468. Maria Damon — Re: latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county

21 NOV 1997

469. Charles Bernstein — David Ignatow (1914-1997)
470. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county
471. dbkk — Davis and in SF
472. David R. Israel — (Fwd) Cheap Print & Pop Culture (CFP)
473. William Burmeister Prod — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
474. Tosh — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
475. Charles Bernstein — Dia Reading / NYC
476. Jerry McGuire — special issue
477. David R. Israel — quadrosyllabics
478. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: quadrosyllabics

22 NOV 1997

479. Christopher Reiner — litpress.com
480. John Cayley — Chinese New Year comes early
481. simon — syllabic stress/quadrosyllabics
482. Annie Finch — Re: syllabic stress/quadrosyllabics
483. Sylvester Pollet — Post Office Caveat Emptor
484. James Finnegan — Re: Yasusada in Texas
485. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Yasusada in Texas
486. dbkk — Carole Maso in San Francisco

23 NOV 1997

487. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Yasusada in Texas
488. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Yasusada in Texas
489. jarnot — readings at the poetry project
490. Jordan Davis — Re: quadrosyllabics

24 NOV 1997

491. James Finnegan — Re: Yasusada in Texas
492. Christopher Alexander — Re: Yasusada in Texas
493. William Burmeister Prod — Re: readings at the poetry project
494. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Yasusada in Texas
495. William Burmeister Prod — FlashPoint URL
496. Hank Lazer — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
497. maz881 — Hubble's influence
498. Jack Foley — FlashPoint URL -Reply
499. Aldon Nielsen — Ann Petry
500. henry gould — Re: Hubble's influence
501. Brent Long — Re: Hubble's influence
502. David Kellogg — Re: Ann Petry
503. Jordan Davis — Re: Hubble's influence
504. Dean Taciuch — Re: Hubble's influence
505. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Hubble's influence
506. david bromige — who wrote that Fibonacci poem
507. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Hubble's influence

25 NOV 1997

508. David R. Israel — Re: readings at the poetry project
509. David R. Israel — oops
510. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
511. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Hubble's influence

512. Louis Cabri — borsht of longing
513. Layne Russell — Re: Hubble's influence
514. maz881 — Re: Hubble's influence
515. rsillima — Ignatow & Objectivism
516. Henry Gould — D. Ignatow
517. henry gould — acmeism / futurism
518. Marcella — Re: Hubble's influence
519. dbkk — Friends of Kathy Acker
520. Douglas Barbour — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
521. Aviva Vogel — Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
522. Safdie Joseph — Re: Ignatow & Objectivism
523. Harold Rhenisch — Re: literacy
524. Harold Rhenisch — Used Dog Urine
525. trace s. ruggles — Re: oops
526. Herb Levy — forthcoming Subtext readings
527. Herb Levy — Eustache's The Mother & the Whore
528. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Hubble's influence
529. Miekal And — bad poetics
530. Miekal And — zaum + Re: acmeism / futurism = explodity
531. Carolyn Guertin — Re: Used Dog Urine
532. Steven Marks — Re: oops
533. david bromige — krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine

26 NOV 1997

534. Herb Levy — Re: forthcoming Subtext readings
535. IMBURGIA — Re: bad thanksgiving poem
536. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
537. henry gould — bad thanksgiving poem
538. Harold Rhenisch — Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
539. Judy Roitman — Re: literacy
540. hen — Re: bad thanksgiving poem
541. Christopher Alexander — Buy Nothing Day 1997
542. Christopher Alexander — bad thinksgiving pome
543. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: bad thanksgiving poem
544. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: literacy
545. IMBURGIA — Re: bad thanksgiving poem
546. david bromige — one more entry for the Turkey Award
547. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Wild Honey Ad.
548. Brian Carpenter — Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
549. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
550. Jordan Davis — Re: one more entry for the Turkey Award
551. Bob Grumman — Re: literacy

27 NOV 1997

552. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Buy Nothing Day 1997
553. Charles Weigl — [Fwd: [Fwd: friends of Kathy Acker]]
554. Douglas Barbour — Re: Hugh Kenner on CBC
555. Harold Rhenisch — Kenner on the CBC
556. Harold Rhenisch — Re: literacy
557. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Buy Nothing Day 1997
558. Bob Grumman — Re: literacy
559. Harold Rhenisch — Re: literacy
560. david bromige — literacy
561. Bob Grumman — Re: literacy

28 NOV 1997

562. david bromige — literacy/concept/phenom/thread

563. David R. Israel — Re: literacy
564. Bob Grumman — Re: literacy/concept/phenom/thread
565. Pierre Joris — for your amusement
566. Steven Marks — "gang" review
567. KENT JOHNSON — phenomena
568. KENT JOHNSON — Bromige and Tennyson

29 NOV 1997

569. David R. Israel — Re: phenomena
570. Harold Rhenisch — Re: literacy/concept/phenom/thread

30 NOV 1997

571. Gwyn McVay — Guest festschrift at Brown
572. Annie Finch — Re: Bromige and Tennyson
573. raea100900 — Re: Kathy Acker
574. Douglas — James Laughlin
575. Douglas — errors in Laughlin
576. rsillima — Natacha Lallemand

1. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Nominations please
Thu 30 Oct 1997

On Oct 30, 2:12pm, Carol Mirakove wrote:
> Subject: Re: Nominations please
> "Go ahead and blow us up, just spare me the warnings."
>
> "To hell with this social angst, let's make beads."
>
> both from Mark Wallace's _Nothing Happened and Besides I Wasn't There_
>-- End of excerpt from Carol Mirakove

> "Go ahead and blow us up, just spare me the warnings."

- The last words of Joseph K.in Orson Well's film version of Kafka's _The Trial_ after his executioners opted out of the kosher approach.

↑ Index

2. cris cheek
(no subject)
Sat 1 Nov 1997

Hi,

The Cross-Cultural Poetics Conference in Minneapolis felt like a strong friends and allies gathering in search of a shareable agenda. That agenda remained largely illusive.

Still, I enjoyed it, but then i liked Minneapolis very much as a friendly and relaxed city. Lots of decent cafes, coffee houses, book stores, extraordinary music stores, good museum collections (Walker collection plus Beuys' 'Multiples' show, Wiseman's Pop in Gehry's extraordinary sardine cans buffeting the Mississippi - reflecting river, bridge and sky, with a very funny show of Indian Humour, and the Minneapolis Institue of Art showing much else besides a decent whack of Minor White photographs), cheap, enticing Ethiopian and Vietnamese foods.

Lucky to be there just before the weather turned.

Maria Damon, Mark Novak and Leslie Denney (among others) put a strong, sometimes too decision-racked schedule together.
Delegates were enabled to elect for all papers, less poets / or more poets, less papers. A split that bears healing.

Still, it was a place to meet and exchange even though important issues were neutralised for the duration.

Prize for most referenced works goes jointly to:

Theresa Hak-Kyung Cha's 'Dictee' (I'd add Walter Lew's equally extraordinary response) and Nathaniel Mackay (whose CD of 'Strick:Song of the Andoumboulou 16-25' deserves wide appreciation)

Along with David Kellogg's report on Poetics (and an otherwise curious silence on that list) I valued the presence and contributions of:

- Fred Wah, Jeff Derkson and Roy Miki's papers under Canadian 'multiculturalism' (from which many salutary lessons can be brought into the UK context, particularly with regards imminent developments in official policy here) and their 'readings' from which a bevy of book recommendations:

Fred's 'Diamond Grill' and 'Alley Alley Home Free' Jeff's 'Dwell'
Roy's 3 recent issues of West Coast Line magazine, of which I'd stronglyly recommend 'Transporting the Emporium' (Hong Kong Art & Writing Through The Ends of Time). An indespensible collection.

- readings by Julie Patton, Susan Wheeler and Jen Hofer:

Susan's 'Bag 'O' Diamonds' is from University of Georgia and worth tracking down.

- Kamau Brathwaite's talk / reading was worth the trip alone. His current layout work employing full range of computer typographies is a great pleasure - and a great weaseling body of work to bridge bigotted divides between tendencies. Check out Hambone (no.10) to see what i mean. From, 134 Hunolt Stree, Santa Cruz, California 95060

- presentation by Erik Belgum and Brian West of VOYS (CD mag). first issue is Ray Federman (i'm slow to catch up with Federman, but am now thick into the excellent 'Take It Or Leave It' which has a revised edition out from the Fiction Collective) reading 'Voice In The Closet' a must buy full reading of signal text and upcoming issues are equally strong. 'Exploring the dimensions of speech . . . of sign in sound.' High production values. Sub Rates (2 CDs / year) $32 from uk. Suscribe to Voys, PO Box 580547. Minneapolis. MN 55458. USA

- papers by Alan Golding 'Po-Biz, Cult.Stud., and Avant-Gardes?' (including a prolonged meditation on 'X' in post-war US writing) + Loretta Collins 'Trouble It: Rebel/Revel Soundspace in the Caribbean Diaspora' + Yunte Huang 'Charlie Chang vs Ezra Pound: Modern Conceptions of the Chinese Language' all helped to assuage pangs left by reprehensible muffins and a chronic milk shortage for the stewed coffee port.

- finally a book that came my way out of a meal with the author (whose everythig else i'd missed - that's often the irritating way with conferences) that i've not seen mentioned before but which i'd recommend is:

Hilton Obenzinger's 'New York on Fire', a delightfully assembled chronicle of fires that have ravaged New York ever since. Somehow reminded me of Paul Metcalf who was another ghost presence at XCP

- to whit the new journal XCP (cross cultural poetics) edited by Mark Nowak with work by Amiri Barak, Maria Damon, Lise McCloud, Solomon Deressa, Walter Lew, Ofelia Zepreda, Elizabeth Burns, Edwin Torres and others. Contact Mark via [redacted],edu to subscribe. It's worth subscribing to now. And considering contributing to.

Over the top home Halloween installations (ghosts crossing and re-crossing the porch, blooming luminous from cupboards like cuckoos, chair-size pumpkins), the Snoopy theme park that forms the centrepiece of the Mall of America, cross street raised glass walkways, inner city reservations (with some of the highest infant mortality levels in the world).

After all that I arrived in Buffalo just in time to preface a reading from Caroline Bergvall with the first outing for 'Double Sky Hope's Locker' (out now from SVP). Caroline read a strong set featuring 'In Situ', 'Don't Push It', from the work she's been calling 'Greek Myth Since Freud' and a pithy sequence on bilingualism she's been writing 'on the road'.

Next day we picked our hangovers to hear Steve McCaffery's bravura lecture on 'Text, Lay-out and Memory' during which he took Derrida's logo-centrism to task, set out to reclaim so-called illuminated manuscripts from art historians by dint of proving that the 'illustrations' instead formed part of a working grammatalogy - were writing 'in other words' - that letters were highly motivated and that Mary Carruthers takes what Frances Yates opened on memory to fresh heights. All eyes out for the MIT anthology from Steve in the New Year. I'm paraphrasing a rangey and procative talk wildly here.

London, Ontario has its own Oxford Steet and River Thames. Also some fine neon signage in sans-serif fonts 'Live Lobsters - Now Hiring', that sort of thing. Five (exluding myself, although i got an honourary form of membership) of the now infamous Buffalo School of Homophonic Translation read in the Forest City Gallery - organised by Peter Jaeger, Tom Orange and Kevin Hehir.

There was a full house, including members of the aging but very much still active Nihilist Spasm Band. Taylor Brady, Scott Pound, Bill Howe, Eleni Stecopoulos and Mike Kelleher are all strong readers with distinctive work. A younger grouping and 'on the move'. Eleni, Taylor, and myself all joined Bill in a preview of the overture from his opera, bringing the evening to a rebarbitive finale. We gave local radio interviews to a fresh-faced dictaphone low on batteries and the event will be marked by a selection from all in Rampike.

Finally McCaffery and myself (realising it was almost 20 years to the day since the 11th Sound Poetry Festival in Toronto) opened a joint show of visual work in the Cornershop gallery, Buffalo (a guerilla show put on by Bill Howe - who with Scott Pound edits the also excellent Essex Magazine of visual poetics, 2 issues available to date - and who paid homage to boxes of Alphabits [best language trauma Marlon Brando as The Godfather image of the decade award], read a longish poem and performed a piece we'd put together that week on his letterpress).

Steve's work was effectively a thirty year retrospective showing the diversity and sustained attack of hisvisual / spatial poetics practices. He performed the whole of Carnival panel 2, for the first time. A solo tear de fierce, major. I read some 'f o gs', did some punch & judy Beefheart on the megaphone and a solo version of 'you see the sights but you don't see the struggle it's a struggle to see it's kept out of sight' with rusty metal thumb clickers. Wine floored. There was bird chitter. Carnivalesque revelry broke out until late, followed by a champagne, dry martini and bloody mary brunch. Touring could certainly put paid to me!

then - as you know by now, hurrying for the London double 'things' went 'orribly 'wrong'. My additional thanks to everyone involved in these events. Wishing there was more corporeal cross-pond traffic.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

3. bertram

Re: Nominations please

Sat 1 Nov 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

"Objects in the mirror are exactly as they appear", Fred Eaglesmith

bertram mourits

↑ Index

4. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: Nominations please
Sat 1 Nov 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)
>
> "Objects in the mirror are exactly as they appear", Fred Eaglesmith

"I got a rock." (Charlie Brown)

c.

↑ Index

5. Kali Tal
Re: Nominations please
Sat 1 Nov 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

Yo mo fo no mo po mo!

--Rappers For a Unified Self

↑ Index

6. Layne Russell
Ebner
Sat 1 Nov 1997

Copied from the Zero City poetry list:

~~~~~~

PNG POETY ONLINE has published:

A TRIBUTE TO HANS EBNER: 1945 - 1997

http://ic.net/~knimmo/ebner/

~~~~~~

Layne

↑ Index

7. Kurt Nimmo
In Memory of Hans Ebner
Sat 1 Nov 1997

PNG POETY ONLINE has published:

A TRIBUTE TO HANS EBNER: 1945 - 1997

http://ic.net/~knimmo/ebner/

↑ Index

8. Ryan Whyte

oza

Sun 2 Nov 1997

---

with gratitude I stand before you wall.
with wind two bottles can't for a moment help but window speech:
with gratitude stands forth:
tearful stage set held in helpless splay gaze.
withness enthralled under simple weather.
without unfolds into with in, father uncle inside gone way.

↑ Index

9. R. Gancie

Sokal Juke

Sun 2 Nov 1997

Mark: Being a book dealer, on Wednesday I purchased a fairly large group (26 boxes) of psychoanalytic titles from a retiring psychoanalyst. I had told a number of my customers who are psychoanalysts that I would likely have some of the material available for sale on Saturday. So as they trickled in and we talked I mentioned that you had insisted that medical doctors and psychoanalysts were not scientists. To a person they protested your characterization. They cited their long medical training and its obvious adherence to the scientific method. Some also mentioned diagnostic and pharmacological functions as requiring their skills as scientists. My store is just two miles from the National Institutes of Health where many M.D.s some of them psychoanalysts take part in 'scientific' research, including epidemiology. Not far from my house at Fort Detrick scientists have spent decades fabricating plagues in a laboratory. On the matter of my paranoia at least one of my customers, good naturedly, suggested that you had a point but hastened to add that his was not a professional diagnosis and that you had not defined your term. On the specific nature of my paranoia concerning corporate funding for reactionary intellectual agendas, I am indeed in suspect comapny, for example Stanley Fish and his book, There's No Such Thing As Free Speech--remaindered $6.98. Another inmate however is James A. Smith, the author of the Idea Brokers, Free Press, $24.95, a study of the history and development of think tanks and foundations and their sources for funding. Here in D.C. I am surrounded by these corporate funded think tanks and foundations which are predominately conservative and many downright reactionary. They DO serve as financial and publishing conduits for everyone I mentioned in my earlier E-mail. Smith's is one of a number of excellent books on this subject and their authors are not generally considered paranoid. Neither is Fish for that matter; he has suffered many attacks from the same sources Smith sites. I guess by association I could claim that I'm not paranoid; but if I am I came by it honestly and as the doctor said it's not clinical.---Carlo Parcelli P.S. The Smith book really is useful. His work on game theory, systems analysis, operations research et al and its connection with big defense oriented budgets is particularly good. For the consequences of the mating of game theory et al with the military try the Perfect War: Technowar in Vietnam. This book of course has particular import for people of my generation. I think that it is important to remember that the Deconstruction movement got a great deal of impetus from the student strikes of 1968, a time in France of tremendous political and social repression. PPS: My bookstore is considered one of the best stores in the city for scientific books especially physics and math. Scientists who venture into my used book shop are often stunned by the quality of the books that I carry on the sciences especially if I've been fortunate enough to recently have purchased a good library. Some of the people on this list have shopped at my store and I'm certain that they will attest to the excellent nature of the selection in all areas. I acquired the ability to buy at this level by reading the product.

↑ Index

10. Tom Beard

Re: Nominations please

Sun 2 Nov 1997

> for best poetics catch phrase of the year
> (10 words or less, easily printed on banners)

"There is so much violence yet to be done."

-- Kapka Kassabova

↑ Index

11. mark weiss
Re: Sokal Juke
Sun 2 Nov 1997

Psychoanalysts think that psychoanalysis is scientific. Astrologers feel that way about astrology. No one except psychoanalysts and their patients think it's a science, which doesn't mean that it's never helpful. Some doctors, even psychiatrists, are also scientists. Many diagnose and apply treatment as if reading from a cookbook, many practice herbal medicine and homeopathy as well as what they've learned in med school (this is becoming more common as the profession feels the insurance squeeze, and it's being sold to doctors as a cure for their economic woes. Apparently the many doctors who succumb to temptation didn't have very secure scientific training).

People outside the profession often don't realize that most psychiatrists are not psychoanalysts. Your psychoanalytically-inclined customers defended their claim to science by citing non-psychoanalytic psychiatric procedures.

I was a psychiatric social worker in agency and private practice for 15 years. I knew lots of psychoanalysts, and I diagnosed hundreds of patients. Here's a diagnostic story. An MD sent a diabetic woman to a clinic where I worked because she refused to give herself her insulin shots. She complained that they made her feel bad, reporting symptoms which he interpreted as psychosomatic. The visiting nurse managed to talk her into letting her administer the shot at home every day, but that was getting expensive and the woman still complained. The visiting nurse thought she was after attention. The usually sensible psychiatrists on our staff had all kinds of theories about the symbolic meaning of needles. I got the case. The woman appeared slightly bizarre, but not so's you'd cross the street to avoid her. I asked her what she meant when she said that the shots made her feel bad. She described hypoglycemia. I called her doctor, he lowered her insulin dose, and she started giving herself her own injections. Her bizarreness, a product of her hypoglycemia, also disappeared. A ten minute cure. We spent a fruitful 6 months working through the fallout of her recent divorce for her and her children.

It's nice talking about triumphs, and I wish it were always that easy. In this case a lot of folks trained in the scientific method had failed to apply Occam's Razor. Given a little more time they would have succeeded in killing the patient.

Here's another one. My wife's leg was exposed to toxic chemicals at work. Lesions formed and began to suppurate. Our doctor insisted it couldn't be a burn, treated her with antibiotics, when she got worse hospitalized her and treated her with IV antibiotics. These didn't help. He had her seen by a rheumatologist who immediately diagnosed her with Lupus. When the tests came back it was clear she didn't have lupus, so he diagnosed her with another form of immune system deficit based on an elevated protease inhibitor. I went to the books, and also to another doctor. Depressed amounts of that protease inhibitor are the indication for the condition he had diagnosed; an elevated amount is typical in cases of chemical burns. My wife did eventually get better because we took case management into our own hands. All those doctors were trained in the scientific method.

This was not a particularly subtle case. The chemical exposure was known. And it looked like a burn. When we finally got her to a dermatologist he asked where she'd gotten the burn.

Everybody has had run-ins with careless or seriously inept doctors. This was a whole medical class-worth. They would all claim they were scientists.

As it happens, I am qualified to diagnose paranoia, but I would never make a serious diagnosis of anything beyond tendencies in that direction without more information and preferably at least one face-to-face meeting. Of course, I'd never ask someone on a shopping trip to diagnose me, either, whatever his qualifications.

It's important to distinguish between the awareness that there are bad things in the world (and people, even classes, with bad motives doing them) and the construction of systems based on conspiracies that would seem so elaborate that they would fall of their own weight. (Your appeal to the zeitgeist is more convincing, but would need to be fleshed out a bit to make a serious claim to explaining the historical context of deconstructivism.)

Paranoia is not a series of ideas, it's a thought pattern.

I'm real fond of Occam's Razor.

That's it for me. I shouldn't call you crazy, and you shouldn't defend your sanity, in public. And I think we may have taken enough of the list's time. I look forward to browsing your bookstore when I have the chance. Of course, I'll use an assumed name.

At 10:59 AM 11/2/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Mark: Being a book dealer, on Wednesday I purchased a fairly large group >(26 boxes) of psychoanalytic titles from a retiring psychoanalyst. I had >told a number of my customers who are psychoanalysts that I would likely >have some of the material available for sale on Saturday. So as they >trickled in and we talked I mentioned that you had insisted that medical >doctors and psychoanalysts were not scientists. To a person they >protested your characterization. They cited their long medical training >and its obvious adherence to the scientific method. Some also mentioned >diagnostic and pharmacological functions as requiring their skills as >scientists. My store is just two miles from the National Institutes of >Health where many M.D.s some of them psychoanalysts take part in >'scientific' research, including epidemiology. Not far from my house at >Fort Detrick scientists have spent decades fabricating plagues in a >laboratory.

>On the matter of my paranoia at least one of my customers, good >naturedly, suggested that you had a point but hastened to add that his >was not a professional diagnosis and that you had not defined your term.
>On the specific nature of my paranoia concerning corporate funding for >reactionary intellectual agendas, I am indeed in suspect comapny, for >example Stanley Fish and his book, There's No Such Thing As Free >Speech--remaindered $6.98. Another inmate however is James A. Smith, the >author of the Idea Brokers, Free Press, $24.95, a study of the history >and development of think tanks and foundations and their sources for >funding. Here in D.C. I am surrounded by these corporate funded think >tanks and foundations which are predominately conservative and many >downright reactionary. They DO serve as financial and publishing >conduits for everyone I mentioned in my earlier E-mail. Smith's is one >of a number of excellent books on this subject and their authors are not >generally considered paranoid. Neither is Fish for that matter; he has >suffered many attacks from the same sources Smith sites. I guess by >association I could claim that I'm not paranoid; but if I am I came by >it honestly and as the doctor said it's not clinical.---Carlo Parcelli >P.S. The Smith book really is useful. His work on game theory, systems >analysis, operations research et al and its connection with big defense >oriented budgets is particularly good. For the consequences of the >mating of game theory et al with the military try the Perfect War:
>Technowar in Vietnam. This book of course has particular import for >people of my generation. I think that it is important to remember that >the Deconstruction movement got a great deal of impetus from the student >strikes of 1968, a time in France of tremendous political and social >repression.
>PPS: My bookstore is considered one of the best stores in the city for >scientific books especially physics and math. Scientists who venture >into my used book shop are often stunned by the quality of the books >that I carry on the sciences especially if I've been fortunate enough to >recently have purchased a good library. Some of the people on this list >have shopped at my store and I'm certain that they will attest to the >excellent nature of the selection in all areas. I acquired the ability >to buy at this level by reading the product.
>
>

↑ Index

12. Susan Wheeler

Re: POETICS Digest - 31 Oct 1997 to 1 Nov 1997

Mon 3 Nov 1997

Re:

> Hi,
>
> The Cross-Cultural Poetics Conference in Minneapolis

cris, your travelogue is exemplary.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

13. Christopher Alexander

n/formation 2

Mon 3 Nov 1997

---

announcing the 2nd issue of n/formation, an online zine of "innovative" poetry/poetics.
work this time around from Joe Amato
Sheila Murphy
Joel Kuszai
Rachel Daley
plus a "featured chapbook" from Charles Alexander & Steven Marks' review of Clarice Lispector's Selected Cronicas. follow the "current" link @

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

best, Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

14. Mark Prejsnar
Who is this POE guy anyway? (fwd)
Mon 3 Nov 1997

One of my other secret identities is as a library type. On one of the library listservs, I found the post quoted below...

Mark P.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 31 Oct 1997 13:17:49 -0800
From: Troy Farnham <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Who is this POE guy anyway?

This can be considered a weird and scary reference question.

Yesterday I had a student ask me if I could help her find information on Edgar Allen Poe.

She told me that "I don't know much about him except that he won a Grammy or something."

I'm happy to say that she was better informed when she left our library.

Troy Farnham
Library Technician II
Alan Thompson Library
Lower Columbia College
1600 Maple
PO BOX 3010
Longview, WA 98362

↑ Index

15. p. durgin
Request for Giorno
Mon 3 Nov 1997

Is anyone able to supply me with a URL or, better yet, an e-mail address for John Giorno Poetry Systems? I'm researching a project and any info is helpful. Thanks... Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

↑ Index

16. Brent Long

Re: Who is this POE guy anyway? (fwd)

Mon 3 Nov 1997

---

wasn't that the same year that Rimbaud won a Fulbright?

Laughing,

Brent

At 10:45 AM 11/3/97 -0500, you wrote:
>One of my other secret identities is as a library type. On one of the >library listservs, I found the post quoted below...
>
>Mark P.
>
>---------- Forwarded message ----------
>Date: Fri, 31 Oct 1997 13:17:49 -0800
>From: Troy Farnham <[redacted]>
>Reply-To: [redacted]
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: Who is this POE guy anyway?
>
>This can be considered a weird and scary reference question.
>
>Yesterday I had a student ask me if I could help her find information on >Edgar Allen Poe.
>
>She told me that "I don't know much about him except that he won a Grammy
or >something."
>
>I'm happy to say that she was better informed when she left our library.
>
>Troy Farnham
>Library Technician II
>Alan Thompson Library
>Lower Columbia College
>1600 Maple
>PO BOX 3010
>Longview, WA 98362
>
>

↑ Index

17. Brent Long
Other Poetics Lists
Mon 3 Nov 1997

Anyone aware of any other poetics lists that may be out there?

Thanks,
Brent Long

↑ Index

18. Aldon Nielsen
Poetry reading by Mullen and Singleton
Mon 3 Nov 1997

On Monday, Nov. 24, at 7:30 PM, there will be a poetry reading by Harryette Mullen and giovanni singleton at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles (over by LAX). The reading will be held at the McIntosh Center in Sullivan Hall. Wanted to give early notice to all LA folk on this list -- will post fuller info with directions when the date nears --

↑ Index

19. Michael Magee
Re: Poetry reading by Mullen and Singleton
Mon 3 Nov 1997

Just a plug for Harryette - the reading she did at Temple was wonderful. An interview that Farah Griffin, Kristen Gallagher and I did with her while she was in Philly will be available somewhere soon at which point I'll let y'all know. -Mike.

According to Aldon Nielsen: >
> On Monday, Nov. 24, at 7:30 PM, there will be a poetry reading by Harryette
> Mullen and giovanni singleton at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles > (over by LAX). The reading will be held at the McIntosh Center in Sullivan > Hall. Wanted to give early notice to all LA folk on this list -- will post > fuller info with directions when the date nears --
>

↑ Index

20. Jean Day
Harryette Mullen, Jean Day, Ann Veronica Simon reading
Mon 3 Nov 1997

For SF Bay Area folks--

I've been off the list for several months for lack of time, so apologies if this reading's already been announced:

Harryette Mullen, Jean Day, and Ann Veronica Simon at UC Berkeley, Nov. 4, 8 pm, in the Maude Fife Room, 315 Wheeler Hall, UCB, reception following.

Cheers,

Jean Day

↑ Index

21. Charles Bernstein
Wordrobe
Mon 3 Nov 1997

Highly recommended:

WORDROBE

a show of clothes with words curated by Richard Martin at the
The Costume Institute
Metropolitan Museum of Art NYC
through Nov. 23

 worth a detour

↑ Index

22. Pierre Joris
mi muertos
Mon 3 Nov 1997

What a drag -- so many gone this year, among those who taught & delighted me, & now, after Ginsie & Burroughs, it's doing his final cut.

SAM FULLER

Sam was one of the funniest, most gloriously impish & irreverent, best & fastest talking (probably the only person I know able to outjaw David Antin), most generous & honest persons it was my pleasure to have known.

& the movies & the books! The only guy who made successful B-movies in Hollywood with politics like no one else dared to do in the fifties &

when he had to leave settled in Paris, wrote scripts & stories & novels, undaunted, undauntable, pounding away on an old mechanical typewriter all day long, then went back to Hollywood when given a chance, made WHITE DOG which Paramount was so freaked out about (it dealt head-on with racism) that they kept it shelved for twelve years. He had started by making 2 of the finest, strangest westerns -- the first one from the p-o-v of the killer of Jessie James (& he always wanted to do another one on the James gang, their sexualities, especially) & later made CRIMSON KOMONO (2 detectives in L.A. -- one white, one Japanese American -- looking for the bad guy, meeting the blond bombshell & it is the japanese-american who walks away with the lady at the end -- an unheard of thing for a middle fifties movie), & then there is SHOCK CORRIDOR & a dozen others, with the best war movies, so profoundly accurate that they are anti-war movies & he was only allowed to do them by leaning heavy on the fact that he had been there & seen it & that they were accurate. And PICK UP ON SOUTH STREET, which freaked J Edgar Hoover out because of the American anti-hero's total disdain for FBI pressure re patriotism, so much so that J Edgar called Fuller & tried to get him to change the dialogue or else... That same movie was felt to be so "anti-communist" by the French (whose stalinist Communist Party controlled the film distribution system in France in those days) that the dialogue of the French version was totally rewritten, turning a political spy/pick-pocket story into a pure gangster movie, which didn't make any sense anymore. 'Nuff said.

I cld go on for hours -- did, some ten years ago, an oral (auto)biography of Sam for French radio (still have the original reel-to-reel tapes & will some day put together an English version if a station over here is interested).

One anecdote before closing: one night -- in fact it was the night of the day Orson Welles died, we found out driving home -- Fuller & I had dinner in a Chinese restaurant (the only kind he liked, even in Paris) & he tried to convince me that besides writing poetry I should make films. I told him I didn't have a clue. So he said: "You don't need one, you're a writer; to make a good movie all you need is a good story -- the rest is easy -- directors, actors are a dime a dozen, all of 'em -- nothing to it -- but without a good story you're dead. It's the writers who are the important ones.." Then there was the story of how, the day of the Cuban embargo, Yul Brynner bribed his (Sam's) tobacconist & sneaked into Sam's humidor & made away with all his Cuban cigars, and then there are the 1000 other stories I can still hear him telling.

Go out & rent one of his flicks -- or get Godard's "Pierrot le Fou" in which he plays himself (briefly) or Wenders' 'The American Friend" where he plays a mafioso (& which also stars Nicholas Ray & Dennis Hopper).

Hope they have a good supply of Cuban cee-gars wherever he's off to.

Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"I think there is a world market for about five computers.'

-Thomas J. Watson
Chairman of the Board-IBM, 1943
==========

↑ Index

23. Poetics List Administration

Bouchard's new address (fwd)

Tue 4 Nov 1997

I meant to send this out last week but it slipped by already slippery mind.

Perhaps I already did so-- jk

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 30 Oct 1997 08:24:03 -0500
From: Marcella <[redacted]>
To: "'[redacted]'" <[redacted]>
Subject: Bouchard's new address

I just heard from Dan that yes he has moved & as he can't rejoin the list right now has given me the definitive address for anyone who wants to contact him:

Dan Bouchard
P.O. Box 390408
Cambridge, MA 02139
[redacted]

↑ Index

24. Issa Clubb

Re: mi muertos

Tue 4 Nov 1997

>SAM FULLER
This is a giant loss; really a great, weird filmmaker.

> Go out & rent one of his flicks -- or get Godard's "Pierrot le Fou" in which he plays himself (briefly) or Wenders' 'The American Friend" where he plays a mafioso (& which also stars Nicholas Ray & Dennis Hopper).

Also, if you can find it (I know it's at Kim's, for those of you in NYC), there's a fantastic movie called "Tigrero: A Film That Was Never Made" that you have to see. It's a documentary Jim Jarmusch made in 1994, accompanying Sam Fuller to the same tiny village in the Amazon rainforest where he had tried to make a movie (Tigrero, natch) some 50 years before -- I believe it failed because they couldn't get insurance. All the villagers remember him, he gets this big smile around his cigar and tells stories about John Wayne, Hollywood in the forties & fifties, studio politics, etc. -- it's totally great. The scene where Fuller screens the footage he did shoot, and the villagers see relatives long since gone, is very emotionally powerful and is maybe now, sadly, parallel to the act of watching Fuller tell dirty jokes in his lovely, raspy voice.

--issa

Issa Clubb
Criterion Collection Art Dept. mailto:[redacted]

↑ Index

25. Harold Rhenisch

Soko Loco

Tue 4 Nov 1997

---

mark weiss wrote:

Psychoanalysts
think that psychoanalysis
is scientific.

Astrologers feel that way about astrology.

No one except psychoanalysts and their patients
think it's a science, which doesn't mean that it's never helpful. Some doctors,

even psychiatrists,

are also scientists. Many diagnose and apply

treatment as if reading
from a cookbook,

many practice herbal medicine and homeopathy as well as

what they've learned in med school (this is becoming more common

as the profession feels the insurance
squeeze,
and it's being sold

to doctors
as a cure for their economic woes. Apparently the many

doctors who succumb
to temptation didn't have very secure scientific training.

which is to say that

Poets think that poetry
is metamorphic.
Novelists feel

that way about novels.
No one except poets

and their readers
think it's a metaphor,
which doesn't mean

that it's never helpful. Some writers,
even poets,
are also metamorphists. Many diagnose

and apply images as if reading

from a cookbook, many practice
lurid imagery and

metaphysics as well as what they've learned in grad school

(this is becoming more common as the profession feels the electronic

squeeze,
and it's being sold
to poets

as a cure for their economic woes.
Apparently the many poets who succumb

to temptation didn't have very secure metamorphic training.

↑ Index

26. Layne Russell
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Tue 4 Nov 1997

Timothy Materer wrote:

> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who don't have a list > of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
> Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?
>
> Timothy Materer

I am very interested.

Layne

socopoet list-owner
http://www.sonic.net/layne
A Quiet Place

↑ Index

27. Don Cheney
What? Isabel Ringing wasn't available for a quote?
Tue 4 Nov 1997

This from an article about the East Bay's Hayward Fault in the San Francisco Chronicle October 14, page A8

The "right here" in the quote refers to "the University of California's 1923-vintage Memorial Stadium":

"'I hope I'm right here when it happens, man. I want to see the carnage,' grinned Ben Dover, 32, as he sat in the stands with four buddies late one afternoon, cooling down after a bicycle ride. 'Just imagine - with about 70,000 capacity seats here, you'd see flames, you'd see bodies, the whole nine yards. I like stuff like that'

"His friends rolled their eyes and chuckled."

↑ Index

28. Pritchett,Pat
FW: Codex Alimentarius
Tue 4 Nov 1997

Dear Listopolitans - a heads up from Ralph Metzner re: yet another insidious new bill being rushed thru Congress which will further curtail our liberties, to wit, regulating our access to vitamins, herbal supplements, etc.

Thanks,
Patrick Pritchett

_____

Dear All -- "Health-minded Americans are presently facing the greatest threat to the freedom of health choice ever before encountered, through an organization known as the UN/WHO CODEX... The Codex is in reality an underhanded, politically motivated, weakly disguised attempt by the international pharmaceutical cartel to limit access to many popular, safe and cost-effective nutritional and herbal supplements in order to take control of the alternative healthcare industry." (from a letter by Mitchell Fleischer, MD, Univ. of Virginia) It's part of the more general take-over of the global economy by the multinationals through WTO, courtesy of GATT and NAFTA. Read On....

>YOU MAY LOSE THE RIGHT TO YOUR VITAMINS, HERBS, AND OTHER SUPPLEMENTS IN >LESS THAN TWO WEEKS!!!

>
>An insidious bill, called the CODEX LAW or CODEX ALIMENTARIUS, has already >been sneaked through both the Senate and the House of Representatives in >record time. It has been passed by both houses. The Codex is a nutrition >code to set worldwide standards for foods, drugs, pesticides and their >trade. The latest German proposal includes the following provisions:
>
>1. No vitamin, mineral, herb or food supplement can be sold for >preventative or therapeutic use.
>2. None sold as a food can exceed dosage levels set by the Commission.
>For example, 50 mg of vitamin C is the top dosage sold in Germany today.
>3. CODEX regulations for dietary supplements would become legally binding >in the USA through the GATT Treaty, which would involve enormous fines in >America if we did not comply.
>4. All new dietary supplements will be banned unless they pass the CODEX >approval process. You can imagine what that means.
>
>The wording in the Congressional Bill uses the term "harmonization" which >means that most senators and congresspersons are likely not aware of the >implications.
>
>The delegates that make up and decide on the CODEX mandates are made up
of >90% of the giant Multi-national Pharmaceutical corporations. The drug >companies want to monopolize and create pharmaceutical versions of the >Natural healthfood and nutrient business throughout the world. An example of >the consequences: possession of DHEA is now a felony in Canada with >the same penalty as that for possession of drugs. You could go to jail for >having DHEA in your house.
>
>You have LESS THAN 10 DAYS to save your vitamins!
>
>The latest development as of 10/18/97 is that the House and Senate are now >voting on a 3rd merged version of the Codex Bill. (The House Companion >Bill).
>
>What you need to do now is very simple.
>
>1. First, pick up your phone and call [redacted]. This is the >Congressional switchboard. Leave a message for your Senators AND your >Representatives. Request that the Harmonization Language in the FDA Reform >Bill be amended when it goes to the Conference Committee. State that you >oppose to Codex Bill and any attempt to regulate nutritional supplements as >drugs. This committee, as far as we know, will be meeting THIS WEEK, the >week of 10/21. Also state that you request a public comments period >concerning the harmonization agreements.

>
>2. Please telephone, fax, and email everyone you can think of. Make a >phone tree. Email everyone on your list. Send them this information and >ask them to make calls as well. To stay updated on what to do, email >[redacted] and request to be put in his distribution list. Or, >call John Hammel at [redacted] for a recorded message.

Additional numbers to call, fax or write are: Dr. Robert Moore and/or Dr. Elizabeth Yetley, FDA Office of Specific Nutritionals; HFS-456, US FDA; 200 C Str., SW; Washington, DC 20204. Tel:[redacted]; Fax: [redacted].

This is an extremely dangeours development, and the time is urgent. Please do what you can.
Ralph Metzner

Ralph Metzner, Ph.D.
[redacted]
Tel: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
Green Earth Foundation, P.O. Box 327, El Verano, CA 95433.
Check out our new website: http://www.rmetzner-greenearth.org

↑ Index

29. henry gould
sleep of poetics
Tue 4 Nov 1997

---

the list seems really dead lately. I guess it goes through these phases. people are busy with school, etc. But it's down to a few bleeps, queries, notices. People are backchanneling, now cut that out! I wonder if it's dead for good? I'm sure everybody has their own opinion.

Here's a topic(s) for discussion, maybe?

POETRY, ART & SOCIAL JUSTICE

The NEA debate is just one element of what seems to have been a de-funding of the arts over a long period now. I live in a semi-rundown urban school district where the arts are simply not even near a priority. If we think that social equity should include some access to the tools & traditions of re-imagining reality through art, we are in sad shape. There was a big op-ed piece in the Times a few weeks ago by I-forget-who saying the defunding of NEA is probably a good idea because art is fundamentally based on extraordinary individual talent & subjecting it to the democratic levelling process only hurts the art. This seems like a sad attitude. There should be some sensible middle ground which recognizes the value of the arts & provides some means to pursuing it from primary school up.

So I'm interested in hearing from people out there who deal with poetry and dramatic arts in the school systems as a way of providing some of this foundation AND ALSO providing tools for young people to counteract mass media commercial stereotyping of reality. Anybody out there doing anything like that? Might be something to talk about in relation to a "poetics"... [I know this is a career for some people...] anybody feel like gabbing a little? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

30. William Burmeister Prod

Re: sleep of poetics

Tue 4 Nov 1997

On Nov 4, 4:05pm, henry gould wrote:
> Subject: sleep of poetics
> the list seems really dead lately. I guess it goes through these phases.
> people are busy with school, etc. But it's down to a few bleeps, queries, > notices. People are backchanneling, now cut that out! I wonder if it's > dead for good? I'm sure everybody has their own opinion.
>
> Here's a topic(s) for discussion, maybe?
>
> POETRY, ART & SOCIAL JUSTICE
>
> The NEA debate is just one element of what seems to have been a de-funding > of the arts over a long period now. I live in a semi-rundown urban school > district where the arts are simply not even near a priority. If we think > that social equity should include some access to the tools & traditions of > re-imagining reality through art, we are in sad shape. There was a big op-ed > piece in the Times a few weeks ago by I-forget-who saying the defunding of > NEA is probably a good idea because art is fundamentally based on extraordinary > individual talent & subjecting it to the democratic levelling process only > hurts the art. This seems like a sad attitude. There should be some sensible > middle ground which recognizes the value of the arts & provides some means > to pursuing it from primary school up.

>
> So I'm interested in hearing from people out there who deal with poetry > and dramatic arts in the school systems as a way of providing some of > this foundation AND ALSO providing tools for young people to counteract > mass media commercial stereotyping of reality. Anybody out there doing > anything like that? Might be something to talk about in relation to > a "poetics"... [I know this is a career for some people...]
> anybody feel like gabbing a little? - Henry Gould
>-- End of excerpt from henry gould

Henry,

Know how you feel right now. I have been a very active lurker of late. Does that count for anything? The list server has been a little slow, especially late last week when i had some posts temporarily held up in the server.

>the defunding of >NEA is probably a good idea because art is fundamentally based on extraordinary >individual talent & subjecting it to the democratic levelling process only >hurts the art.

This is a lame epitaph isn't it? I say epitaph since one is implied by the journalist (probably best remembered as I-forget-who) who wrote the thing. But the feds are hell-bent on wrecking funding for the arts and arts education, and so the only viable alternative (regarding your angle in this discussion) is volunteerism. Where I work, they regularly ask for volunteers to tutor local kids, but always it is in math or science since this is an engineering design/manufacturing facility in South Florida. I would be a good idea to ask those who oversee this program to expand our role to include the arts and literature. Ironically enough, it was a retired volunteer at my high school who tutored me in electronics in auto repair shop! I suppose involvement in the local poetry readings in bookstores, or wherever, is another way to support youth poetry.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

31. mark weiss
Re: Soko Loco
Tue 4 Nov 1997

I think I get it. 1) I write cadenced prose. Thank you!
2) Any noun can be substituted for any other noun and the sentence will still appear to make sense, or at least express an opinion. A true revelation!

At 10:25 AM 11/4/97 -0700, you wrote:
>mark weiss wrote:
>
>Psychoanalysts
>think that psychoanalysis
>is scientific.
>
>Astrologers feel
>that way about > astrology.
>
>No one except
>psychoanalysts and their patients
>think it's a science, which doesn't mean
>
>that it's never helpful. Some >doctors,
> even psychiatrists,
>
are also scientists. Many >diagnose >and apply
>
> treatment
> as if reading
>from a cookbook,
>
> many
>practice herbal medicine and >homeopathy as well as
>
>what they've learned in med school >(this is becoming > more common

>
>as the profession feels the insurance
> squeeze,
> and it's being sold
>
>
>to doctors
>as a cure for their economic woes. Apparently >the many
>
> doctors who succumb
>to temptation didn't >have very secure scientific training.
>
>
>which is to say that
>
>
>Poets think that poetry
>is metamorphic.
> Novelists feel
>
>that way about > novels.
>No one except poets
>
> and their readers
>think it's a metaphor,
>which doesn't mean
>
>that it's never helpful. Some writers,
> even poets,
>are also metamorphists. Many
>
>diagnose
>and apply
> images as if reading
>
>from a cookbook, many >practice
> lurid imagery and
>

>metaphysics as well as
>what > they've learned in grad school
>
> (this is becoming > more common
>as the profession feels the electronic
>
> squeeze,
>and it's being sold
>to poets
>
>as a cure for their economic woes.
>Apparently the many >poets who succumb
>

  to temptation didn't >have very secure
>metamorphic training.
>
>

↑ Index

32. William Burmeister Prod

Re: sleep of poetics

Tue 4 Nov 1997

Be careful what you say. Your post may be cannibalized and converted into a poem.

- signed William Burmeister with mushrooms in a red wine sauce

↑ Index

33. mark weiss

Sleep of poetics

Tue 4 Nov 1997

It's a poser: I'm more active on the list when I'm most busy, because it's a useful break if I'm chained to the computer anyway.

Anything that puts food in the mouths of poets and other artists or affords them some recognition is to the good. On the other hand, I think that the NEA's tack has not been the most effective way to help the arts find an audience. I remember the poor benighted teachers who were forced to teach poetry or art or music and had no love for their subject. What they taught was that poetry is a stupid kind of riddle, museums are boring storage houses for the best depictions of reality our ancestors could come by before the centerfold, and music other than rock sucks. In other words, they conveyed what they really felt, whatever the words might be that came out of their mouths. What if the NEA spent its money teaching people to love the arts or recruiting teachers who do? While that might force some belt-tightening for the present, wouldn't it help seed the future? I am haunted by the idea of the German coal and steel town of Wupperthalthat funds with its taxes the Wupperthaler danzteater, surely one of the most challenging and best performance companies around. I'm told the locals take a pride in it that we tend to reserve for basketball teams. Somehow these workers got the idea that it was alright to like these extremely strange and sometimes painful events.

↑ Index

34. Timothy Materer

Re: Other Poetics Lists

Tue 4 Nov 1997

>>Anyone aware of any other poetics lists that may be out there?
>>Thanks, >Brent Long
>
There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a very small
James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.

What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who don't have a list of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.

Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

35. J. Tate
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Tue 4 Nov 1997

On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, Timothy Materer wrote:

> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who don't have a list > of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
> Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?

YES, Yes, yes.

I'd be VERY interested in a list that discusses Auden, Crane, Stevens, Moore, H.D., Frost and so on.

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
Department of English
University of Washington

↑ Index

36. Harold Rhenisch
Re: sleep of poetics
Tue 4 Nov 1997

As a parent, a poet, and an arts volunteer, I haven't found volunteerism a viable answer to loss of arts funding. There's no long term in it, and it tends to go against the grain of the whole school project. Rather, I have begun to ask: Why is poetry being taught in school? I have come to suspect that the way it is taught precludes any sort of success. Here in Canada at least it is taught as a means of expressing emotions, and moreso (almost entirely) as a means of teaching students rhetoric. Until we get to the point where poetry is taught for poetry's sake, where poetry is used as a rigorous and independent means of ordering or disordering the world, we will all continue to lose funding, because the funding will go to rhetoric (for example) and not to poetry (as it already is). There's just no future in that. As for readings in bookstores or wherever, there's a thought: get the students out of the school and into a community. That is not volunteerism, though. Rather, it is an interesting project.

***

William Burmeister wrote:

"the feds are hell-bent on wrecking funding for the arts and arts education, and so the only viable alternative (regarding your angle in this discussion) is volunteerism. Where I work, they regularly ask for volunteers to tutor local kids, but always it is in math or science since this is an engineering design/manufacturing facility in South Florida. I would be a good idea to ask those who oversee this program to expand our role to include the arts and literature. Ironically enough, it was a retired volunteer at my high school who tutored me in electronics in auto repair shop! I suppose involvement in the local poetry readings in bookstores, or wherever, is another way to support youth poetry.

↑ Index

37. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Soko Loco
Tue 4 Nov 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:

>I think I get it. 1) I write cadenced prose. Thank you!
>2) Any noun can be substituted for any other noun and the sentence will >still appear to make sense, or at least express an opinion. A true revelation!

Well, not a revelation maybe, but reading your piece I was struck by the notion that you had written a little poetry generating machine, such a balanced piece of syntax that it could hold most any noun and process it. For what, though, I don't know. I shall ponder that.

Language is, I think, having its fun with us.

Someone who knew more about programming than I do could set up such a little machine to chug away through the dictionary, like a prayerwheel in Nepal.

Harold

↑ Index

38. Harold Rhenisch
Wupperthal awake!
Tue 4 Nov 1997

Mark,

If memory serves me right, Wupperthal is not exactly a coal and steel town pure and simple. The example is good, and there are lots of examples of support for the arts in Germany in general (Bochum is renowned for doing Heiner Mueller's plays, and that's no small or easily accessible feat), but Wupperthal (and Bochum) are quite gentrified, or, rather, there is enough of a class mix as to put into question whether it is actually the steelworkers who are going to the Danztheater or the Opel assembly workers who are watching Brecht's legacy (Mueller) onstage.

I agree about the problem of messages in classrooms. I like your positive approach. How, though, would the NEA spend its funds teaching people to appreciate the arts? Wouldn't that be through access and relevence? That could be either inside or outside of the classroom. As for recruiting teachers who are inspired and thus inspire, why not hire artists and poets, or train them to be teachers. There's the rub: can the school system bend enough to accomodate them? Note, I didn't say "should" it, of course it should.

Mind you, is that the issue: teaching people to appreciate the arts? Don't they already? Whether it is painting their favourite subway car or listening to sweet zounds of Nashville, there is an aesthetic and a response of sorts. Could the issue be better rephrased as: "teaching people a tradition of art" or "teaching people to use a method of art"? The art, in other words, cannot be separate from the approach, or that darned hidden message, the teacher who taught that museums are old meat lockers, etc., will sneak in there and defeat the whole project.

I read something about the German State Theatre in Berlin getting awfully radical and dragging in some rough street culture into its productions and in that most conservative of institutions (a national theatre, after all) turning things on their head and making it work. Anybody can turn things on their head, of course, but making it work aesthetically and financially is the challenge.

Harold Rhenisch

******

Mark Weiss wrote: Anything that puts food in the mouths of poets and other artists or affords them some recognition is to the good. On the other hand, I think that the NEA's tack has not been the most effective way to help the arts find an audience. I remember the poor benighted teachers who were forced to teach poetry or art or music and had no love for their subject. What they taught was that poetry is a stupid kind of riddle, museums are boring storage houses for the best depictions of reality our ancestors could come by before the centerfold, and music other than rock sucks. In other words, they conveyed what they really felt, whatever the words might be that came out of their mouths. What if the NEA spent its money teaching people to love the arts or recruiting teachers who do? While that might force some belt-tightening for the present, wouldn't it help seed the future?

I am haunted by the idea of the German coal and steel town of Wupperthalthat funds with its taxes the Wupperthaler danzteater, surely one of the most challenging and best performance companies around. I'm told the locals take a pride in it that we tend to reserve for basketball teams. Somehow these workers got the idea that it was alright to like these extremely strange and sometimes painful events.

↑ Index

39. Gwyn McVay
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Tue 4 Nov 1997

I'm very interested in WHY that generation doesn't get discussed on CAP-L; maybe they've been dead so long--the famous poets, I mean--that they're no longer considered "c." But I like it when dead poets are discussed on lists. I met Joseph Ceravolo here, for example, and have been smitten ever since. ---Gwyn

On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, J. Tate wrote:

> On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, Timothy Materer wrote:
>
> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who don't have a list > of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
> Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?
>
> YES, Yes, yes.
>
> I'd be VERY interested in a list that discusses Auden, Crane, Stevens, Moore, H.D., Frost and so on.
>
> Joseph Tate
> Graduate Student
> Department of English
> University of Washington

↑ Index

40. Aviva Vogel
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Tue 4 Nov 1997

I'm especially interested in Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams, but yes, I'd be interested in such a list. I wonder if it would be productive to base the conversation around topics (broad or narrow), or particular authors/poems, at least in the beginning. That way, unlike so many of the postings I've seen on the Pound and Eliot lists, folks would be having truly collaborative discussions, rather than tons of disparate, parallel conversations that are annoying to sample.

Aviva Vogel
MFA in Writing, Vermont College

↑ Index

41. mark weiss
Re: Wupperthal awake!
Tue 4 Nov 1997

Yup, Wupperthal has a middle class, but it's pretty solidly rust belt. My understanding is that Pina Bausch and her commandos really do get the workers in their audience, and that even those who don't attend are willing to spend their tax dollars and have civic pride about the result.

I don't have a program in mind, but I don't think there'll ever be enough willing artists to stock the elementary schools. There may be enough, however, to teach the teachers, and enough (not necessarily a majority) of those teachers may become enough enthralled to change the culture of the teacher's lounge.

As to what kind of art, what aesthetic experience is opened, I'd be content to define it as whatever they have no access to now, and that means those arts that require a vocabulary, verbal, visual or musical, and some history. And I'm pretty unashamedly elitist about this. I don't think it reactionary to want more people to be capable of experiencing some of the more powerful experiences that human culture has generated.

t 07:16 PM 11/4/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Mark,
>
>If memory serves me right, Wupperthal is not exactly a coal and steel town >pure and simple. The example is good, and there are lots of examples of >support for the arts in Germany in general (Bochum is renowned for doing >Heiner Mueller's plays, and that's no small or easily accessible feat), but >Wupperthal (and Bochum) are quite gentrified, or, rather, there is enough >of a class mix as to put into question whether it is actually the >steelworkers who are going to the Danztheater or the Opel assembly workers >who are watching Brecht's legacy (Mueller) onstage.

>
>I agree about the problem of messages in classrooms. I like your positive >approach. How, though, would the NEA spend its funds teaching people to >appreciate the arts? Wouldn't that be through access and relevence? That >could be either inside or outside of the classroom. As for recruiting >teachers who are inspired and thus inspire, why not hire artists and poets, >or train them to be teachers. There's the rub: can the school system bend >enough to accomodate them? Note, I didn't say "should" it, of course it >should.
>
>Mind you, is that the issue: teaching people to appreciate the arts? Don't >they already? Whether it is painting their favourite subway car or >listening to sweet zounds of Nashville, there is an aesthetic and a >response of sorts. Could the issue be better rephrased as: "teaching people >a tradition of art" or "teaching people to use a method of art"? The art, >in other words, cannot be separate from the approach, or that darned hidden >message, the teacher who taught that museums are old meat lockers, etc., >will sneak in there and defeat the whole project.
>
>I read something about the German State Theatre in Berlin getting awfully >radical and dragging in some rough street culture into its productions and >in that most conservative of institutions (a national theatre, after all) >turning things on their head and making it work. Anybody can turn things on >their head, of course, but making it work aesthetically and financially is >the challenge.
>
>Harold Rhenisch
>
>***
>
>Mark Weiss wrote:
>Anything that puts food in the mouths of poets and other artists or affords >them some recognition is to the good. On the other hand, I think that the >NEA's tack has not been the most effective way to help the arts find an >audience. I remember the poor benighted teachers who were forced to teach >poetry or art or music and had no love for their subject. What they taught >was that poetry is a stupid kind of riddle, museums are boring storage >houses for the best depictions of reality our ancestors could come by >before the centerfold, and music other than rock sucks. In other words, >they conveyed what they really felt, whatever the words might be that came >out of their mouths. What if the NEA spent its money teaching people to >love the arts or recruiting teachers who do? While that might force some >belt-tightening for the present, wouldn't it help seed the future?

>
>I am haunted by the idea of the German coal and steel town of >Wupperthalthat funds with its taxes the Wupperthaler danzteater, surely one >of the most challenging and best performance companies around. I'm told the >locals take a pride in it that we tend to reserve for basketball teams.
>Somehow these workers got the idea that it was alright to like these >extremely strange and sometimes painful events.
>
>

↑ Index

42. Schuchat Simon
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Wed 5 Nov 1997

On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, Timothy Materer wrote:
snip
> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for > example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, > Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who > don't have a list
> of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.

don't get me wrong, I like the work of some of these (Stevens, Crane, though which Crane? Hart or Steven, Loy, Williams, Auden, and one of the Moore but not the other) but aren't they well enough discussed? Aren't there already mounds and mounds of discussion of them? I mean, a third rate versifier like Frost is discussed constantly and ubiquitiously from 2nd or 3rd grade until post-doc. Only Mina Loy, of that list, was not included in my junior high school poetry syllabus. (Who is this Hughes person, though? Do you mean Sylvia Plath's ex husband?) It was a public school, too, though things may have changed in the intervening three hundred years, but on the other hand, some of those poets were still alive back then.

anyway: Stevens = cornbread-heavy Ashbery
Moore = obscure precursor of Alice Notley
Crane = obscure precursor of John Wieners
Frost = I prefer Kenneth Koch
Loy = wonderful

Williams = not Oscar, I hope
Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath
Auden = absolutely
Moore = Robert Lowell's psychiatrist, supposedly had affair with Lowell's mother, a rather impressive feat.

I will now return to lurking

↑ Index

43. Aviva Vogel
Re: Soko Loco
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Oh, Harold! Oh yes! A computer program that would chug away like a Nepalese prayer wheel through the dictionary, slotting words into various syntactical structures! Of course, we can do that endlessly ourselves, without our laptops and CD-Rom drives, but hey! Like an anagram generator, it could be a useful tool (or toy) to jump-start a poetry-writing session (or week or month or year) that's faltering a bit (or a lot). Clever! Enticing! I'll be the first customer! -Aviva

↑ Index

44. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Wed 5 Nov 1997

> don't get me wrong, I like the work of some of these (Stevens, Crane, though which Crane? Hart or Steven, Loy, Williams, Auden, and one of the Moore but not the other) but aren't they well enough discussed? Aren't there already mounds and mounds of discussion of them?

i don't understand this point of view at all. are you saying one not discuss these poets because they are too much discussed?

carl

↑ Index

45. Pam Brown
POet Laureate UK
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath" -said Simon & lately for writing a dreadful eulogy to Lady Diana Spencer...

I too will return to lurking

Pam

↑ Index

46. Aviva Vogel
Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Has anyone on this list read the following book, and if so, do you have any comments? Thanks, Aviva

The Culture of Hope : A New Birth of the Classical Spirit
by Frederick TurnerList: $23.00
Our Price: $16.10
You Save: $6.90 (30%)

Availability: This title usually ships within 24 hours.

Hardcover, 298 pages
Published by Free Pr
Publication date: February 1, 1995
Dimensions (in inches): 9.57 x 6.43 x 1.14
ISBN: 002932792X

(You can always remove it later...)

OR

Order faster with 1-Click!

Aviva Vogel (Post Office)
(You can always cancel it later...)

Learn about 1-Click ordering Change 1-Click delivery settings

Browse other Arts & Music titles.

Reviews and Commentary for The Culture of Hope : A New Birth of the Classical Spirit

Have you read this book? Write an online review and share your thoughts with other readers.

Synopsis: Conservatives complain that much contemporary art is obscene, while liberals reply that art always subverts the social and political orthodoxy. Both are wrong, says Frederick Turner. In this first book to take the "third side" in the culture war, Frederick Turner offers a radically hopeful new vision, based on a cosmology which views nature as intelligent, creative, and self-ordering.

From Kirkus Reviews, 03/01/95: Turner recycles some material from earlier university press books for this, his grand synthesis that promises to overcome the stalemate in the culture wars. Proponent of a ``third way'' or ``centrist'' position, Turner (Arts and Humanities/Univ. of Texas, Dallas) rehearses the standard complaints about our culture in crisis. Unlike traditional conservatives, though, he ventures a prescription that goes beyond nostalgia for faith and values. A sober critic of the so-called avant-garde, Turner posits a ``radical center''--``a return to classical forms, genres and techniques in the arts'' that is grounded in the latest research in anthropology and science. Turner fancies his ``reconstructive postmodernism'' a new paradigm on the intellectual horizon, and it's hard to imagine anyone familiar with all the disciplines he brings together in this fascinating, if exhausting, book. A cogent critic of anti-foundationalist thought (be it feminist, Marxist, or linguistic), Turner reaffirms the need for hierarchy in the arts, for logic over force, and for beauty over relativism. His multiculturalism is truly pan-cultural, discovering the transcendent in all cultures. Turner's idea of a ``natural classicism'' is remarkably transparent--he locates classical forms in nature itself. Some of his other ideas are a bit obscure, and his tendency toward unrelieved abstraction will turn off sympathetic readers. Turner's immediate cure for cultural malaise is nothing less than a four-page manifesto that is certain to provoke debate, and his discussion of biology is sure to be used against him, despite his distinctly un-``bell curvish'' ideas. Turner's fictional ``fable for the future''--a brave new world that resembles the utopian cyberspace of the Tofflers--flirts with kookiness. A superb critic of trendy feminist and multicultural ideas, Turner deserves a hearing in the ongoing debate: He's Apollo to Camille Paglia's Dionysus. -

↑ Index

47. Marcella

FW: Waldrop & Roubaud reading

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Oops, still getting ahold of tricky things like correct addresses & stuff like that, anyway:

From: Marcella
Sent: Wednesday, November 05, 1997 7:45 AM
To: '[redacted]'
Subject: Waldrop & Roubaud reading

Just wanted to announce for those in the NY area:

Rosmarie Waldrop & Jacques Roubaud
The Poetry Project

St. Mark's Church corner of 2nd ave. & 10th St.

It starts at 8 pm; $7, free for members

↑ Index

48. David Kellogg
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Wed 5 Nov 1997

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, Aviva Vogel wrote:
>
> Has anyone on this list read the following book, and if so, do you have any > comments? Thanks, Aviva
>
> The Culture of Hope : A New Birth of the Classical Spirit
> by Frederick TurnerList: $23.00
> Our Price: $16.10
> You Save: $6.90 (30%)

I haven't read it. However, if this is the same Frederick Turner who wrote a piece called "The Neural Lyre," then I'm hostilely disposed. "The Neural Lyre" was a defense of metered poetry using neurobiology and was, bar none, the single stupidest essay to have speculated about the relations of science and literature of recent years. I've read some other things of his in which he seems to know something about chaos theory, but it's not enough to redeem him in my eyes. Also, he's written some "epic" poems ("Genesis" and "The New World" I think) which I only read enough of to find repulsive.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

49. Jack Foley
Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Please let me know, if you know it, the address for the Pound list at Maine. -- JR Foley

>>> Timothy Materer <[redacted]> 11/04/97
06:59pm >>>
>
There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a very small
James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.

What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who don't have a list of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.

Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

50. James Finnegan
Re: POet Laureate UK
Wed 5 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-05 02:23:06 EST, you write:

> Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath" -said Simon & lately for writing a dreadful eulogy to Lady Diana Spencer...
>
> I too will return to lurking
>
> Pam

Simon & Pam need to dig a little deeper. I believe it was Langston being referred to.

Finnegan

↑ Index

51. Sylvester Pollet

Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Foley/Materer: Info for getting on the Pound list can be found on the National Poetry Foundation website Bulletin Board <http://www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/> and I list there some other Pound sites, plus a Loy site, and there's also a Marianne Moore list around somewhere. Maybe gopher isn't doing its homework. I maintain the NPF site, & am willing to list or link other sites (primary focus Modernism). Sylvester Pollet, Assoc. Ed. NPF

> Please let me know, if you know it, the address for the Pound list at Maine. --
> JR Foley
>
> Timothy Materer <[redacted]> 11/04/97
> 06:59pm >>>
>
> There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
> Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), > modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, > which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, > for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a > discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a > very small
> James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.
>
> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for
> example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, > Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who
> don't have a list
> of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
> Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?
>
> Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
> University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
> http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

52. Brent Long
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Wed 5 Nov 1997

I think a modernist discussion list is a great idea, but how to go about it?

Brent

At 05:59 PM 11/4/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>>Anyone aware of any other poetics lists that may be out there?
>>>Thanks, >Brent Long
>>
>There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
>Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), >modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, >which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, >for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a >discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a >very small
>James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.
>
>What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for >example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, >Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who >don't have a list
>of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
>Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?
>
>
>
>Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
>University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
>http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim
>
>

↑ Index

53. Brent Long
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Aviva,

I agree completely about basing the conversation around broader topics at first. Good call....does anyone know how such a list might be started?

Brent

At 11:14 PM 11/4/97 -0500, you wrote:
>I'm especially interested in Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams, but >yes, I'd be interested in such a list. I wonder if it would be productive to >base the conversation around topics (broad or narrow), or particular >authors/poems, at least in the beginning. That way, unlike so many of the >postings I've seen on the Pound and Eliot lists, folks would be having truly >collaborative discussions, rather than tons of disparate, parallel >conversations that are annoying to sample.
>
>Aviva Vogel
>MFA in Writing, Vermont College
>
>

↑ Index

54. Brent Long
Re: Other Poetics Lists
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Try Langston Hughes. Ever heard of him? Kind of an important figure in American poetry.
You might enjoy it...if you aren't too busy lurking.

At 01:05 PM 11/5/97 +0800, you wrote:
>On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, Timothy Materer wrote:
>snip
>> What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for >> example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, >> Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who >> don't have a list
>> of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
>don't get me wrong, I like the work of some of these (Stevens, Crane, >though which Crane? Hart or Steven, Loy, Williams, Auden, and one of the >Moore but not the other) but aren't they well enough discussed? Aren't >there already mounds and mounds of discussion of them? I mean, a third >rate versifier like Frost is discussed constantly and ubiquitiously from >2nd or 3rd grade until post-doc. Only Mina Loy, of that list, was not >included in my junior high school poetry syllabus. (Who is this Hughes >person, though? Do you mean Sylvia Plath's ex husband?) It was a public >school, too, though things may have changed in the intervening three >hundred years, but on the other hand, some of those poets were still >alive back then.

>
>anyway: Stevens = cornbread-heavy Ashbery
>Moore = obscure precursor of Alice Notley
>Crane = obscure precursor of John Wieners
>Frost = I prefer Kenneth Koch
>Loy = wonderful
>Williams = not Oscar, I hope
>Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath
>Auden = absolutely
>Moore = Robert Lowell's psychiatrist, supposedly had affair with Lowell's >mother, a rather impressive feat.
>
>I will now return to lurking
>
>

↑ Index

55. nuyopoman
POE's Grammy
Wed 5 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-04 11:21:02 EST, you write:

<< ---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 31 Oct 1997 13:17:49 -0800
From: Troy Farnham <[redacted]>
Reply-To: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: Who is this POE guy anyway?

This can be considered a weird and scary reference question.

Yesterday I had a student ask me if I could help her find information on Edgar Allen Poe.

She told me that "I don't know much about him except that he won a Grammy or something."

I'm happy to say that she was better informed when she left our library.

Troy Farnham
Library Technician II
Alan Thompson Library
Lower Columbia College
1600 Maple
PO BOX 3010
Longview, WA 98362 >>

Not so fast there, Young Feller!

Mouth Almighty will indeed be releasing "Closed on Account of Rabies: Poems and Tales of Edgar Allan Poe" on December 9, just in time to answer your Holiday giftgiving ache. Produced by the mighty Hal Willner, audacious cover art by Ralph Steadman, and liner notes by Charles Baudelaire ("Each morning I pray to God and Poe"), some of the highlights include: Dr. John rumbling through French/Latin/Creole-limned English to bring to life the unstable narrtaor of the little-known Bereneice; Diamanda Gallas cackling through "The Black Cat"; Ed Sanders singing two poems with full band; Christopher Walken spookifying "The Raven" only to be sent up by a crazed Abel Ferrar trying to do the same thing; Gabriel Byrne between the thunderclaps of "Masque of Red Death"; Jeff Buckley, Marianne Faithfull, and others.

This will be MA's first entry into the audio book zone. Also available as a double CD. Orders via website (Poe page will go up end of Nov) http://www.mouthalmighty.com or via the guerrilla distribution system Gary Glazner has set up, Words on Wheels, [redacted].

If you'd like to be on mail list, nail impale snail to:
[redacted]

Bob Holman

↑ Index

56. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, mark weiss wrote:

> I am haunted by the idea of the German coal and steel town of Wupperthalthat funds with its taxes the Wupperthaler danzteater, surely one of the most challenging and best performance companies around. I'm told the locals take a pride in it that we tend to reserve for basketball teams. Somehow these workers got the idea that it was alright to like these extremely strange and sometimes painful events.

Yes...I was thinking of some of the same examples as Mark W....I often do when public funding for the arts comes up. I'm really not well-informed on this subject, but from what I remember I have read about a number of striking instances like the one Mark describes...All from Germany (which is to say West Germany)..There is a national cultural element going on there, but as house commie I'm gong to suggest that there's something more specifically political: much of western Europe never engaged in as ruthless a demolition of public space as did the U.S. throughout the mid-twentieth century. This often had a lot to do with a more militant labor movement (not so unusual if the comparison is with this country, where the entire trade union structure sold out to management and became its servents and lackeys, as they still are) and its expression in a Social Democratic party, which puts greater pressure on societal decision-making, bending it in the direction of greater, more open public social culture. The republicrat state machine in the U.S. has never been about opening up public space. That's a task only the majority of people, organizing around a left program, can do. There's lots of other things we poet types can do to help open up more social cultural space; certainly speaking out and organizing around NEA and similar structures is one (tho' to my mind somewhat limited, because of the constricted and unevenly-distributed nature of NEA pie); Henry is very right to suggest that involvement in education is another--that's not my area by temperment nor by choice, so I haven't much substantive to add there. But a total (dare I say it, radical) change in the very shape of our national culture is what we need, and what examples like the the one Mark cites point toward. And that (like they say in book titles) is "why I'm a socialist." The idea of socialism is less about governmental power or even the economic system, than it is about the flowering of culture.

Mark P.

↑ Index

57. Jack Foley

Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Try the National Poetry Foundation at http://www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/

>>> Brent Long <[redacted]> 11/05/97 10:06am >>>
I think a modernist discussion list is a great idea, but how to go about it?

Brent

At 05:59 PM 11/4/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>>Anyone aware of any other poetics lists that may be out there?
>>>Thanks, >Brent Long
>>

>There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
>Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), >modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, >which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, >for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a >discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a >very small
>James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.
>
>What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for >example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, >Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who >don't have a list
>of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
>Brent or anyone else, would you be interested in such a list?
>
>
>
>Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
>University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
>http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim
>
>

↑ Index

58. J. Tate

Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope

Wed 5 Nov 1997

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, David Kellogg wrote:

> "The > Neural Lyre" was a defense of metered poetry using neurobiology and was, > bar none, the single stupidest essay to have speculated about the > relations of science and literature of recent years.

I'm not sure I would call "The Neural Lyre" stupid. It was not terribly well supported with solid evidence, say for the three minute line buffer in our brains, but it was at least an attempt to address what too few people do: why we like rhythm. Neurobiology is not altogether the wrong place to start as rhythm is a biological phenomenon as well as a cognitive one, and why not allow neurobiology a say so in the matter?

Best,

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

59. Christopher Alexander

Re: FW: Codex Alimentarius

Wed 5 Nov 1997

---

thanks Patrick for that message on the CODEX.
I've heard enough about this often enough to be concerned, so I just did a bit of checking up on the www, & I might as well share it with the list.
then I'll be quiet & we can talk about poetics again.
the short form is:

1) the CODEX is an internat'l body seeking to establish standards re food quality & handling, which, according to them, includes vitamins & homeopathic medicines;
2) the CODEX operates under the joint auspices of the United Nations World Health Organization (WHO) &
Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO);
3) it has been repeatedly alleged by local & int'l consumer & health advocacy groups that "vested interests of Northern industrialized countries, & representatives of transnational food industries have come to dominate the Codex process of setting nutrition and safety standards";
4) the CODEX has not yet adapted the German standards,
& there is some opposition to them, but no guarantees;
5) the FDA is considering the amendment of its regulations
"to promote international harmonization", i.e., adopting the standards set forth in the CODEX;
6) there seem to be strong penalties for nations who don't comply, e.g., heavily sanctions (fines) by the World Trade Organization (WTO).

it looks like it might be time to make some phone calls, write letters, & whatnot, for those of us interested in homeopathic medicine & vitamins. in addition to Patrick's suggestions, I noted that the FDA seems to be seeking input on this consideration:

Dockets Management Branch (HFA-305)
Food and Drug Administration
12420 Parklawn Dr., rm. 1-23, Rockville, MD 20857

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT:
John W. Jones, Office of Constituent Operations (HFS-550)
Food and Drug Administration
200 C St. SW., Washington, DC 20204
[redacted].

best, Chris

--

suggested sites:

general info from John Hammell,
Canadian "health freedom" advocate <http://www.pnc.com.au/~cafmr/hammell/index.html#codex>

info specific to the FDA issue <http://www.pnc.com.au/~cafmr/hammell/codx-fda.txt> report from The Infant Feeding Action Coalition Canada (INFACT Canada), "a non-profit, non-governmental voluntary organization that promotes better infant and maternal health by protecting breastfeeding and fostering appropriate infant feeding practices in Canada and internationally.

<http://www.infactcanada.ca/newsletters/fall96/codex.htm>

general info from Foodnet: "a business tool for the food industry provided by the Food Institute of Canada" <http://foodnet.fic.ca/regulat/codex.html>

excerpt re vitamins from the most recent CODEX report, as given by the FAO (<http://www.fao.org/>) <http://www.fao.org/waicent/faoinfo/economic/esn/codex/vitamin.htm> full text of the most recent report (23-28 June 1997); unfortunately, the list of participants is being withheld until the final draft.

<http://www.fao.org/waicent/faoinfo/economic/esn/codex/cac22e/ httoc.htm>
(see under "Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses")

the U.S. "contact" for info on the CODEX is Executive Officer for Codex

U.S. Codex Contact Point
Food Safety and Inspection Service
US Department of Agriculture

Room 311, West End Court
Washington D.C. 20250-3700

Tel: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
Email: [redacted]

--

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

60. Timothy Materer

1. not _that_ Hughes 2. Still other lists 3. EPOUND-L

Wed 5 Nov 1997

---

1. Schuchat Simon's post very amusing (I guess...) As to: "Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath; Moore = Robert Lowell's psychiatrist, supposedly had affair with Lowell's mother, a rather impressive feat"

--I meant Langston, author of Montage of a Dream Deferred not the ode to Princess Di (which suffers by comparison with" Pavement to a Dead Princess") and definitely Marianne not Merrill Moore!

2. Someone kindly informed me of: "a very quiet Yeats List (subscribe yeats <first name, last name> to [redacted].) and a very small Stevens List (subscribe Wallace_Stevens to [redacted])."

3. "Please let me knowthe address for the Pound list at Maine. --JR Foley"

[redacted] The list is called EPOUND-L

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

61. Herb Levy

Re: Other Poetics Lists

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Timothy Materer wrote:

> There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/ Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine.

Not so oddly, given this statement from the welcome message to Poetics:

> Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or >directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to >keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

But then, who bothers to read (or save) the welcome messages for e-mail lists?

As for starting a modernist poetry list, given the problems of administering this list; the number of complaints folks make from time to time about gettin gtoo much e-mail; & the general range of non-contemporary, non-American poetry discussed from time to time on CAP-L (Plath's husband is mentioned far more than any figures of the Harlem Renaissance for instance) - it may make more sense to start discussing 20th century American poets on CAP-L rather than to start a new list for the subject. Though people should probably raise the issue there first.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

62. Peter Zukowski
Modernism discussion list
Wed 5 Nov 1997

A modernism discussion list already exists--at the University of Washington.

Just send an e-mail note--no subject--to:

[redacted]

and just type as the body of the message:

subscribe modernism <your name>

After a little while you'll get an e-mail note asking you to confirm your request. Just reply and you're on!

I've been on the list for a couple of weeks now and haven't gotten very much mail. . . . so I don't know how lively, long, and involved the threads get.

Maybe we can perk it up a bit.

Hope this is helpful.

Peter Zukowski
[redacted]

↑ Index

63. Brent Long
Other poetry discussions
Wed 5 Nov 1997

I have been thinking about the idea of other discussion lists this morning, and am wondering why there are no discussions on some of the other contemporary poets that are around these days. I never hear anything on Merwin (a personal favorite of mine) or Levertov or other writers like that. I saw a posting today announcing Rosmarie Waldrop's upcoming reading tonight, but she and her work are never discussed here, either, and that is a shame. She and her husband are both amazing poets. I certainly don't see myself as being attracted to only one or two "styles" of poetry, and would really like to see a broad range of writers and styles addressed. What do some of you think? Is there a call to pursue this?

Brent

↑ Index

64. p. durgin
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Mark,
"the flowering of culture" -- "public space"
poet-types can set the example for what I believe is a lost notion to most non-poet-types (non-artists, I should say), but it's foggy, by what means they can but may they?
and if the notion of a public space is actually known to and held sacred by all, why do we not dare to inhabit it?

|||[redacted]|||

_____

↑ Index

65. Charles Watts

Debbie's adventures now available

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Folks, Lisa Robertson's Debbie: an Epic is now published and available from New Star Books, Vancouver, B.C. and (shortly) from Small Press Distribution. And for Stan Persky fans, his new book, Autobiography of a Tattoo is also just out from New Star. Plus a new book from John Harris, a fine writer little known outside B.C. See the publisher's fall list which follows.

For people in the Vancouver, B.C. area, Lisa and New Star will be launching Debbie at the Western Front, 303 East 8th Ave., on Saturday, November 15, at 8 p.m.

Herewith follows the necessary data.

Eager readers please note: DO NOT TRY TO ORDER THESE BOOKS BY REPLYING TO THE LIST, BECAUSE IT WON'T WORK. AND PLEASE DON'T BACKCHANNEL ME, CHARLES WATTS, WITH ORDERS. I'm just the messenger. DO BACKCHANNEL NEWSTAR BOOKS AT THEIR E-MAIL ADDRESS, [redacted]

Forwarded message:

> From: "New Star Books" <[redacted]>
>
> The information people need is:
>
> Debbie: An Epic costs $11 US/$14 Cdn. It is available (or will be shortly; a box of books is on its way there) from SPD: tel. (510) [redacted]; fax [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted], or direct from New Star: tel. [redacted]; fax [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]. New Star requires prepayment ($11 per book plus $4 shipping), either by cheque, or by Visa.
>
> New Star's mailing address is 2504 York Avenue, Vancouver, BC V6K 1E3.
>
> **********
> * FALL BOOKS FROM NEW STAR **********
>
> AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A TATTOO
> by Stan Persky
> 240 pages, $19 paper
>
> DEBBIE: AN EPIC
> by Lisa Robertson

> 96 pages, $14 paperback
>
> OTHER ART
> by John Harris
> 224 pages, $16 paper
>
> THE KLUANE NATIONAL PARK HIKING GUIDE
> by Vivien Lougheed
> 256 pages, maps, photos; $20 paperback
>
> AFTER THE WELFARE STATE
> by Ken Collier
> 200 pages, $20 paperback
>
> * E-MAIL US FOR A FREE CATALOGUE *******
> **********

--
Charles Watts
Theses and Special Collections
Special Collections & Rare Books
Room 7100, Bennett Library
Simon Fraser University
Burnaby, B.C. V5A 1S6
Tel: [redacted]; Fax: [redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

66. p. durgin
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

And another Mark (Weiss this time), Teach one to "love the arts"? Help "the arts find an audience"? This just doesn't make sense if one presumes that the arts are essential to humankind. Haughty belief? Rash? I don't think so. Loving the arts is like hating medicine. It's an irrational fetishizing. The arts are as much an audience as an artist.

|||[redacted]|||

_____

↑ Index

67. Susan Clark

CODEX for Canadian listees

Wed 5 Nov 1997

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

dear list,

Yes, this is v. important and is already having repercussions in Canada.
What to do is all below. Watch out for typos.
I sent [hard] copies to both Burke and Dingwall in June and never heard back.
This seems to be the new style of government here in Branchplantland.

best and apologies for unpoetic content,
Susan

Anti-Codex Letter for Health Freedom
Stats

(all links on the word "Codex" take you to the World Health Organization)

Send to David Dingwall, Minister of Health, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0A6 (FAX [redacted]), and to Ron Burke, Room 200, Health Protection Branch, Tunneys Pasture, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0L2 (FAX [redacted]):

Name:_____Date:_____

Address:_____City:_____Prov:_____

Dear Mr. Dingwall/Mr. Burke:

I am writing to inform you that I totally oppose the German delegations proposal to the World Health Organization's Codex Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses.

The proposal to set worldwide dosage limits on nutritional supplement would effectively end my access to the benefits of safe dietary nutrients. My vitamins, minerals and other nutritional supplements I have used for years will no longer be available to me above RDA levels without a medical prescription, as the major pharmaceutical companies take over the dietary supplement industry.

Since no supplement will be available for therapeutic or preventative uses, and all new products would be automatically banned until passing Codex approval, my health and my RIGHTS would be dangerously ignored. The cost of supplements would skyrocket, prohibiting their use by those who often need them the most--seniors and the chronically ill.

Two steps have already been taken by the Codex Committee with very little public awareness. Step three is near the final ratification in the Codex process. Once ratified, Canada will be bound to comply under GATT regulations.

I am strongly urging you, to do everything in your power to oppose the Codex Commission's proposal. Canadian health consumers and business people are counting on you to personally voice your objection, and to make sure the Canadian Codex delegates show their disapproval. I also request that you write to tell me exactly what you intend to do to rectify this problem.

Signed,

_____

This letter prepared for my convenience by "alive" Canadian Journal of Health and Nutrition, Box 80055, Burnaby, BC, V5H 3X1

FAX THE FEDS-this service provided by NetEffect
CANADIAN COALITION FOR HEALTH FREEDOM-more information
GO TO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION INFO ON CODEX
GO TO HEALTHCARE ALERT
GO TO LETTER OF PROTEST, HERBS AND MEDICINAL PLANTS
RETURN TO TOP OF PERSONAL PROFILE
RETURN TO TOP OF sLINKy HOMOPAGE
GO TO INDEX
http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/~at739/anticodex.html

Anti-Codex Letter for Health Freedom

Stats

(all links on the word "Codex" take you to the World Health Organization)

Send to David Dingwall, Minister of Health, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0A6 (FAX [redacted]), and to Ron Burke, Room 200, Health Protection Branch, Tunneys Pasture, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0L2 (FAX [redacted]):

*Name:*_____*Date:*_____

*Address:*_____*City:*_____*Prov:*_____

Dear Mr. Dingwall/Mr. Burke:

I am writing to inform you that I totally oppose the German > delegations proposal to the World Health Organization's Codex Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses.

>
> The proposal to set worldwide dosage limits on nutritional supplement would effectively end my access to the benefits of safe dietary nutrients. My vitamins, minerals and other nutritional supplements I have used for years will no longer be available to me above RDA levels without a medical prescription, as the major pharmaceutical companies take over the dietary supplement industry.
>
> Since no supplement will be available for therapeutic or preventative uses, and all new products would be automatically banned until passing Codex approval, my health and my RIGHTS would be dangerously ignored. The cost of supplements would skyrocket, prohibiting their use by those who often need them the most--seniors and the chronically ill.
>
> Two steps have already been taken by the Codex Committee with very little public awareness. Step three is near the final ratification in the Codex process. Once ratified, Canada will be bound to comply under GATT regulations.
>
> I am strongly urging you, to do everything in your power to oppose the Codex Commission's proposal. Canadian health consumers and business people are counting on you to personally voice your objection, and to make sure the Canadian Codex delegates show their disapproval. I also request that you write to tell me exactly what you intend to do to rectify this problem.
>
> Signed,
>
> ---
>
> This letter prepared for my convenience by "alive" Canadian Journal of Health and Nutrition, Box 80055, Burnaby, BC, V5H 3X1
>
> FAX THE FEDS-this service provided by NetEffect
> CANADIAN COALITION FOR HEALTH FREEDOM-more information
> GO TO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION INFO ON CODEX
> GO TO HEALTHCARE ALERT
> GO TO LETTER OF PROTEST, HERBS AND MEDICINAL PLANTS
> RETURN TO TOP OF PERSONAL PROFILE
> RETURN TO TOP OF sLINKy HOMOPAGE
> GO TO INDEX

Date: Thu, 19 Jun 1997 00:14:31 -0700
From: Susan Clark <[redacted]>
Organization: A Use for Poets Editing Company

To: Merrie-Ellen Wilcox <[redacted]>
Subject: Codex Letter

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

MEW: badly written and with typos, dragged this off the net to save time. Faxed Dingwall last week.

hope you're well.
sx

> Anti-Codex Letter for Health Freedom
>
> Stats
>
> (all links on the word "Codex" take you to the World Health > Organization)
>
> Send to David Dingwall, Minister of Health, House of Commons, Ottawa, > Ontario, K1A 0A6 (FAX [redacted]), and to Ron Burke, Room 200, > Health Protection Branch, Tunneys Pasture, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0L2
> (FAX [redacted]):
>
> Name:_____Date:_____
>
> Address:_____City:_____Prov:_____
>
> Dear Mr. Dingwall/Mr. Burke:
>
> I am writing to inform you that I totally oppose the German > delegations proposal to the World Health Organization's Codex > Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses.
>
> The proposal to set worldwide dosage limits on nutritional supplement > would effectively end my access to the benefits of safe dietary > nutrients. My vitamins, minerals and other nutritional supplements I > have uses for years will no longer be available to me above RDA levels > without a medical prescription, as the major pharmaceutical companies > take over the dietary supplement industry.
>
> Since no supplement will be available for therapeutic or preventative > uses, and all new products would be automatically banned until passing > Codex approval, my health and my RIGHTS would be dangerously ignored.
> The cost of supplements would skyrocket, prohibiting their use by > those who often need them the most--seniors and the chronically ill.

>
> Two steps have already been taken by the Codex Committee with very > little public awareness. Step three is near the final ratification in > the Codex process. Once ratified, Canada will be bound to comply under > GATT regulations.
>
> I am strongly urging you, to do everything in your power to oppose the > Codex Commission's proposal. Canadian health consumers and business > people are counting on you to personally voice your objection, and to > make sure the Canadian Codex delegates show their disapproval. I also > request that you write to tell me exactly what you intend to do to > rectify this problem.
>
> Signed,
>
> _____
>
> This letter prepared for my convenience by "alive" Canadian Journal of > Health and Nutrition, Box 80055, Burnaby, BC, V5H 3X1
>
> FAX THE FEDS-this service provided by NetEffect
> CANADIAN COALITION FOR HEALTH FREEDOM-more information
> GO TO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION INFO ON CODEX
> GO TO HEALTHCARE ALERT
> GO TO LETTER OF PROTEST, HERBS AND MEDICINAL PLANTS
> RETURN TO TOP OF PERSONAL PROFILE
> RETURN TO TOP OF sLINKy HOMOPAGE
> GO TO INDEX
http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/~at739/anticodex.html

Content-Base: "http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/~at739/antic odex.html"

<BASE HREF="http://www.chebucto.ns.ca/~at739/anticodex.html">

<html>
<head>
<title>Codex Letter</title> </head> <body> <h3>Anti-Cod
ex

Letter for Health Freedom</h3> Stat s
(all links on the word "Cod
ex"
take you to the World Health Organization)
Send to David Dingwall, Minister of Health, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0A6 (FAX [redacted]), and to Ron Burke, Room 200, Health Protection Branch, Tunneys Pasture, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0L2 (FAX [redacted]):

Name:_____Date:_____</
p>

Address:_____City:_____Prov:_____

Dear Mr. Dingwall/Mr. Burke:

I am writing to inform you that I totally oppose the German delegations proposal to the Wor ld
Health Organization's Codex Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses.

The proposal to set worldwide dosage limits on nutritional supplement would effectively end my access to the benefits of safe dietary nutrients. My vitamins, minerals and other nutritional supplements I have uses for years will no longer be available to me above RDA levels without a medical prescription, as the major pharmaceutical companies take over the dietary supplement industry.

Since no supplement will be available for therapeutic or preventative uses, and all new products would be automatically banned until passing Codex approval, my health and my RIGHTS would be dangerously ignored. The cost of supplements would skyrocket, prohibiting their use by those who often need them the most--seniors and the chronically ill.

Two steps have already been taken by the Cod
ex Committee with very little public awareness. Step three is near the final ratification in the Codex process.

Once ratified, Canada will be bound to comply under GATT regulations.

I am strongly urging you, to do everything in your power to oppose the Codex Commission's proposal. Canadian health consumers and business people are counting on you to personally voice your objection, and to make sure the Canadian Codex delegates show their disapproval. I also request that you write to tell me exactly what you intend to do to rectify this problem.

Signed,

_____

This letter prepared for my convenience by "alive" Canadian Journal of Health and Nutrition, Box 80055, Burnaby, BC, V5H 3X1

<pre>FAX THE FEDS-this service provided by NetEffect CANADIAN COALITION FOR HEALTH FREEDOM-more information GO TO WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION INFO ON CODEX GO TO HEALTHCARE ALERT GO TO LETTER OF PROTEST, HERBS AND MEDICINAL PLANTS RETURN TO TOP OF PERSONAL PROFILE RETURN TO TOP OF sLINKy HOMOPAGE GO TO INDEX</pre> </body> </html>

----------47C228A15437--

----------1E6D4B0F12A0--

↑ Index

68. David Benedetti

Re: computer program for syntactic structures

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Responding to a post by Haroldf Rhenisch,
On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, Aviva Vogel wrote:

> Oh, Harold! Oh yes! A computer program that would chug away like a Nepalese prayer wheel through the dictionary, slotting words into various syntactical structures! Of course, we can do that endlessly ourselves, without our laptops and CD-Rom drives, but hey! Like an anagram generator, it could be a useful tool (or toy) to jump-start a poetry-writing session (or week or month or year) that's faltering a bit (or a lot). Clever! Enticing! I'll be the first customer! -Aviva

Just wanted to mention that I wrote a computer program to do something like that--although without the Nepalese prayer wheel idea.

I wrote a program that generated syntactic structures that were correct grammatically and then took words from a list that showed the part of speech of the word but nothing else. So the program generated randomly varying sentence structures without reference to any word meaning.

The results were quite interesting, in that the resulting poems (or prose) made connections of words and phrases that I think would otherwise never occur. The underlying syntactic "sense" made the poems seem meaningful, while still random and quite unusual in terms of combining particular words.

I showed a few copies of the computer-generated work around San Francisco in 1974-75, entitled "Social Climax Text" and "Ideas Imagine Passion."

I'm also thinking about trying to publish the results along with an explanatory essay (although previous efforts didn't work).

Backchannel me for an example, if you anyone is interested.

David Benedetti
Albuquerque, New Mexico

↑ Index

69. Timothy Materer

The scope of CAP-L

Wed 5 Nov 1997

> it may make more sense to start discussing 20th century American poets on CAP-L rather than to start a new list for the subject. Though people should probably raise the issue there first.

It seems to me that CAP-L is specifically devoted to Contemporary American Poets and not to that earlier group of English and American originators and experimenters.

Also, one of the strengths of CAP-L (again, just a personal opinion) is that it discusses creative writing: for example, exercises to use in CW classes, the recent failure to award a Yale Younger Poets prize, and the length of time journals take to accept or reject poems.

With apologies for not reading Welcome Messages with sufficient attention,

TM

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate Hall, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

70. mark weiss
(no subject)
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Let me define more precisely my irrational fetish (is there a rational one?). People express themselves, people are receptive. Some of that expression and reception we call art, and some we don't. A Cheerios box is advertizing, not art. It's possible for an impulse to advertize the product of a multinational grain cionsortium to produce art, but if that happens it's a secondary purpose. Otherwise the box is a piece of cultural curiosa and someone will collect it for a museum of cereal. Some of what's expressed can only be received by an audience that has gone through a process of education, formally or informally. That's either because the given expression assumes the knowledge of the language, visual, verbal or aural, in which it's produced, or because it's built on the history of similar expressions, or because it requires an extended attention span. But the reception doesn't end with the acquisition of the language, history or sitzfleisch. One listens to Mozart, or Melville, or Stevens, or Rothko, differently, and receives different, perhaps more complete, information, with repeated listenings. In fact, for some expressions there is never a point where one is finished hearing it anew or hearing new things in it. This continuous meditation on a given expression is a profoundly moving experience. It seems a shame that the vast bulk of the population is denied the experience because they lack the education. Out of that experience come the willingness to fund art institutions that make the experience possible, and also the formation of more artists who are invested in the evolving history and practice of their craft and their culture.

Beyond that, I don't understand your simile. Loving arts=hating medicine. Does that make sense if reversed: hating medicine=loving arts? how about hating arts=loving medicine? Is this some sort of stinkbomb or is it meant to be a more subtle communication?

At 01:00 PM 11/5/97 -0600, you wrote:
>
> And another Mark (Weiss this time),
> Teach one to "love the arts"? Help "the arts find an audience"?
>This just doesn't make sense if one presumes that the arts are essential >to humankind. Haughty belief? Rash? I don't think so. Loving the arts >is like hating medicine. It's an irrational fetishizing. The arts are as >much an audience as an artist.
>
>
> |||[redacted]|||
> _____
>
>
>

↑ Index

71. Jack Foley
1. not _that_ Hughes 2. Still other lists 3. EPOUND-L -Reply
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Thanks. I'll try it out. -- JR Foley

>>> Timothy Materer <[redacted]> 11/05/97
11:58am >>>

3. "Please let me knowthe address for the Pound list at Maine. --JR Foley"

[redacted] The list is called EPOUND-L

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

72. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

---

regarding...

"much of western Europe never engaged in as ruthless a demolition of public space as did the U.S. throughout the mid-twentieth century."

No, that would have been 1939-45.

Lessons were learned.

Harold

↑ Index

73. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

> if the notion of a public space is actually known to and held sacred by all, why do we not dare to inhabit it?

Ah, we do. Contemporary culture has succeeded in making the public private and the private public.

The reasons are, in other words, political.

Harold

↑ Index

74. Aviva Vogel
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Joseph, as a hand-drummer (African/Cuban/Haitian folkloric styles, etc.), that book might just be the answer to a previously unfulfilled quest to understand better our affinities with rhythm. Thanks for that comment. As to how applicable his theories are to poetry, or how well-supported they are, I guess I'm gonna have to find out for myself. I'm not (currently) super-interested in formal poetry, and never have been, but I leave no stone unturned in my investigations to understand all I can.

Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

75. David Kellogg
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Wed 5 Nov 1997

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

charset="iso-8859-1"

-----Original Message-----
From: J. Tate <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Wednesday, November 05, 1997 1:35 PM
Subject: Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope

> On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, David Kellogg wrote:
>
> "The Neural Lyre" was a defense of metered poetry using neurobiology and was, bar none, the single stupidest essay to have speculated about the relations of science and literature of recent years.
>
> I'm not sure I would call "The Neural Lyre" stupid. It was not terribly well supported with solid evidence, say for the three minute line buffer in our brains, but it was at least an attempt to address what too few people do: why we like rhythm. Neurobiology is not altogether the wrong place to start as rhythm is a biological phenomenon as well as a cognitive one, and why not allow neurobiology a say so in the matter?

I think it's a three second, not three minute, line buffer. That'd be a long line.

I don't doubt the usefulness of neurobiology for studying rhythm or any other aspect of poetry or poetic form. (I used to be managing editor of _The Journal of Neuroscience_ and I currently teach in an special program combining neurobiology, philosophy of mind, cognitive anthropology, clinical psychology, and cognitive linguistics; so I'm a pretty big fan of the neurosciences.)

Rhythm is biological, cognitive, cultural, and sociopolitical, yes: but the stupidity of Turner's essay is in its prescriptive project, an a priori description of rhythm in terms that lead directly to the New Formalism. How handy. It is a perfect example of what B. H. Smith, following Pierre Bourdieu, has called "the Others' Poison Effect": what is bad for you must be bad for others. Subsuming meter to neural firings (and secondarily to breath and heartbeat, in a bizarre anti-Olson riff) for Turner means in the end that metered poetry is healthy and free verse neither healthy nor, as he says in a footnote somewhere, even really poetry. But if so, how come what would give Turner a heart attack really makes me groove? Good Doc Turner wants to give me a poetic pacemaker; says I've got me a baaaad ticker.

name="David Kellogg.vcf" filename="David Kellogg.vcf"

BEGIN:VCARD
N:Kellogg;David
FN:David Kellogg
ORG:Duke University;University Program in Writing and Rhetoric

TITLE:Senior Lecturing Fellow
TEL;WORK;VOICE:[redacted]
TEL;HOME;VOICE:[redacted]
TEL;WORK;FAX:[redacted]
TEL;HOME;FAX:[redacted]
ADR;WORK;ENCODING=3DQUOTED-PRINTABLE:;;Box 90023=3D0D=3D0A-
Bell Tower =
One;Durham;NC;27708
LABEL;WORK;ENCODING=3DQUOTED-PRINTABLE:Box 90023=3D0D=3D0A-
Bell Tower =
One=3D0D=3D0ADurham, NC 27708
ADR;HOME:;;5500-68D Fortunes Ridge Drive;Durham;NC;27713 LABEL;HOME;ENCODING=3DQUOTED-PRINTABLE:5500-68D Fortunes Ridge
=
Drive=3D0D=3D0ADurham, NC 27713
URL:http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg
URL:http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg
EMAIL;PREF;INTERNET:[redacted]
END:VCARD

↑ Index

76. Harold Rhenisch

Re: Wupperthal awake!

Wed 5 Nov 1997

Mark,

> My understanding is that Pina Bausch and her commandos really do get the workers in their audience

Great. There must be a shared idea of culture there, however, and of its value. Not a universal situation. Building that might be the first step.

>I don't think there'll ever be enough willing artists to stock the elementary >schools.

Too bad.

> There may be enough, however, to teach the teachers, and enough (not necessarily a majority) of those teachers may become enough enthralled to change the culture of the teacher's lounge.

Teach them what?

Change the culture of the teacher's lounge? Only, I suspect, if art becomes a project rather than a history. Otherwise it will be swallowed.

>As to what kind of art, what aesthetic experience is opened, I'd be content >to define it as whatever they have no access to now, and that means those >arts that require a vocabulary, verbal, visual or musical, and some >history.

Teaching arts as languages is valuable. But isn't the first step one of connections? Beethoven is valuable today because Glass (for example) is carrying on the tradition. The traditions and histories exist, no matter where you enter them. Is it possible to change a culture without first changing the culture of delivery?

> And I'm pretty unashamedly elitist about this. I don't think it reactionary to want more people to be capable of experiencing some of the more powerful experiences that human culture has generated.

But what are those experiences? Creation or education? I'd want to teach that the tradition is alive, here, now, in all the mundane and glorious parts of everyday life and perception. That's where history has brought us, that's where history _is._ Then we can talk about individual instances of creation, Brueghel or Bach or Williams or Marlowe.

The alternative is to fall into pc land, where Plato is dismissed as a dead white male, end of story, because the connections of history to life are not brought to life by any form of education that is not essentially creative. Plato is dead, white, and male, but that is not the end of the story.

Is it really elitism you want, or excellence? Access you mentioned.

I think you must mean excellence.

Which do they mean in Wupperthal? Why are the Wupperthalers trudging off to the Tanztheater? Is it because Art is a social project in Germany? Is it because they want to be educated? Is it because they recognize excellence in art and want to support it? I ask, because if we are going to translate this success into a North American context, and committing our meagre arts funding to it, we had better be very sure just what it is we are bringing across the Atlantic. We had better be very sure that we are bringing all the pieces along. I don't have any answers here. Maybe your sources do. I'd love to hear them.

Whatcha think?

Cheers,

Harold

↑ Index

77. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Sleep of poetics
Wed 5 Nov 1997

The arts are as much an audience as an artist.

|||[redacted]|||

Well said

↑ Index

78. Laurie Schneider/Crag Hill
NEA and Poetry in the schools
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Henry: I've taught at three secondary schools over the last ten years. I have yet to cross paths with any NEA money or with anyone who has been rewarded NEA money. Does this mean those who receive do not also give? I'm out here wondering wherefore they art be. I get poets into the classroom as often as I can -- I've had Jack Foley, Larry Eigner, and others -- but they have been funded by scant school monies. Is/Was poets-in-the-schools active? Are/Were they NEA funded? As I began teaching at the end of the Reagan debacle, I heard good things about this program but I couldn't catch the ghost. In any case, my experience tells me the best way to show students age 13-18 that poetry is alive is to bring living poets to their classroom doorstep to read and talk. Anyone coming through Moscow, ID in the the next ten years? Give me a call.

Best, Crag Hill [redacted]

↑ Index

79. Safdie Joseph
Re: Lewis and Clark
Wed 5 Nov 1997

(No, not Lewis McAdams and Tom Clark -- though I doubt many will know of their collaborations of the early 70s)

"The Corps of Discovery"

"The Real Unknown"

Come home Ken Burns

all is forgiven

(the shlocky Civil War)

(the maudlin Baseball)

THIS was True Romance

(Part II tonight, PBS)

the unmediated language

the Rockies, the Plains

geography's smell, history's taste

(it ain't lang-po)

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED!

↑ Index

80. henry gould
another Providence reading
Wed 5 Nov 1997

Dear Listfreaks,
before the synapses mufflerize for the night, here's a miniscule report on Susan Wheeler's poetry reading at Brown Univ. s'evening:

Susan Wheeler's poetry is a kind of pure poetry. For Me this doesn't Imply Political Purity or Experimental Sainthood; rather the ironic double of the one and the opposite of the other. She caroms harmonious otherness of traditional poetry (Auden, Poe, Heine, Shakespea, Felix the cat) - in all its MILTONIC ORGAN-MUSIC of rhyme, assonance, diction, vastness, virginal limnation - honing that framing marrow - without any academic fat. There's a razor (ironic, platinum) wobbling between Art & Life; and the goats will be left bad-breathin in the Wheelesque-Miltonic outer darkness - the great Wheel of Heel of EloHim - while Sheep & Sheepdog enjoy the Rewording. Got that, everybody? Make a lot of sense? Good. If the Wheeler Circus come to town (book due this spring) I recommend be there if you can. - Henry in an UnExceptionally InArticulate State p.s. I is makin sophumeric remarks about a poet who branches into strange redemptive glories of adverse occasions

(if you know what I mean). Commentary, midrashim, corrections, anybody.

↑ Index

81. Jordan Davis
Re: NEA and Poetry in the schools
Wed 5 Nov 1997

There are a number of poets-in-the schools programs active in the US. I work for Teachers & Writers Collaborative, the main writers-in-residence program in New York. Coincidentally, we sponsored a project a few years back in Salmon, Idaho; NEA recipients Jack Collom and Sheryl Noethe were the poet-teachers. They taught the whole town. They wrote a book about it, _Poetry Everywhere_, which you can order from me by calling 1-888-BOOKS-TW. T&W gets money from the NEA (in fact, the Poetry City reading series was subsidized by the NEA up through this past June). The restructuring of the NEA set up a funding category for Arts-in-Education. I don't know whether groups like California Poets-in-the-Schools, JustBuffalo, Houston Writers-in-the-Schools, COMPAS (a writers-in-residence program based in Minneapolis) or WritersCorps (a national writers-in-residence initiative, I think they call it) get funding from the NEA. You might be interested in the information at our website (http://www.twc.org/), particularly the part about WriteNet, a national writers-in-residence _something_.

Jordan Davis

PS Can anybody confirm or deny Jack Collom's authorship of the spam haiku that are circling the internet chain? "Angioplasty" was the word that made me think I was certain he wrote them (and that they were the poems the Star or the Enquirer went after in their 'Poet Receives $40,000 of your Tax Dollars to Pen Ditties About Spam' article, the source of most of the last congressional mooting of the NEA's right-to-life). Seems like he ought to get credit, if not royalties.

↑ Index

82. Schuchat Simon
Re: Lewis and Clark
Wed 5 Nov 1997

about those Lewis MacAdams/Tom Clark collaborations, as well as the Lewis-Lewis (MacAdams/Warsh) and their ursprung in the Berrigan/Padgett Bean Spasms, what does the list think

after 25-30 years

about the aesthetic value of these efforts, and whether they have now stood the test of time?

Or collaborations in general, e.g., I consider A Nest of Ninnies to be entirely successful, but when I turn to Journey to A War, I seem to be reading prose by

Isherwood with interspersed poems by Auden, i.e., not a genuinely compositional collaboration. (But lets not get into renga.)

And my profound apologies for mis-identifying Langston Hughes, a far better poet than Sylvia Plath's ex-husband for sure.

Zip ity doo dah

↑ Index

83. mark weiss

Re: Wupperthal awake!

Thu 6 Nov 1997

No, Glass does not inform the appreciation of nor influence the survival of Beethoven. The late quartets, the last three piano sonatas and the diabelli variations have a lot more to do with it, and I'd guess that the vast majority of those who learn from Beethoven are only dimly aware of Glass. But that's rather beside the point. I think you're contending that only those who make art can teach it, and only teaching the making can imbue the love of same. If that were true there'd be a very small audience. Myself, I barely whistle, and barely scribble, but I think I've managed to turn on more than a few to musical and visual thought--and the examplary passion is a large part of the persuasion. Some of those so persuaded, given the luck and talent, will make new things themselves. Others will value what's made and lead richer lives for the time given. Here's an experience. I left a museum where I had just spent some time with Breughel's Hunters in the Snow. Outside it was late afternoon. The ground was covered with snow and the bare trees were black against it. Suddenly the landscape was collapsed into Breughel's perspective and resolved into the complex ordering of the painting, but at the same time I was aware of the palpable world. I was understanding the way that Breughel had perceived and ordered without relinquishing my habitual perception and ordering, the one informing the other. It was an electrifying moment, another possibility for how to navigate in the world that had been presented. This was an ecstatic moment, and such moments do change one's life. And the ability to experience such moments, to increase the capacity for conceiving and perceiving in a more complex manner is what I try to teach. I think there are political consequences. Such moments release one from preconceptions. And that makes change possible. This is a neutral fact--the capacity for change is amoral. But it can lead to more fully experienced life, and to the making of art.

The Pina Bausch company (the Wupperthaler crowd) tour. They play New York and I think several other American cities and all major cities in Europe I think every year. If you saw their work I think your questions about why people attend would be answered. It's a pretty amazing experience.

At 03:54 PM 11/5/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Mark,
>
>>My understanding is that Pina Bausch and her commandos really do get the >>workers in their audience
>
> Great. There must be a shared idea of culture there, however, and of > its value. Not a universal situation. Building that might be the first > step.
>
>>I don't think there'll ever be enough willing artists to stock the >elementary >>schools.
>
> Too bad.
>
>>There may be enough, however, to teach the teachers, and enough (not >>necessarily a majority) of those teachers may become enough enthralled to >>change the culture of the teacher's lounge.
>
> Teach them what?
>
> Change the culture of the teacher's lounge? Only, I suspect, if art > becomes a project rather than a history. Otherwise it will be swallowed.
>
>>As to what kind of art, what aesthetic experience is opened, I'd be >content
>>to define it as whatever they have no access to now, and that means those >>arts that require a vocabulary, verbal, visual or musical, and some >>history.
>
> Teaching arts as languages is valuable. But isn't the first step one of >connections? Beethoven is valuable today because Glass (for example) is >carrying on the tradition. The traditions and histories exist, no matter > where you enter them. Is it possible to change a culture without first > changing the culture of delivery?
>

>>And I'm pretty unashamedly elitist about this. I don't think it >>reactionary to want more people to be capable of experiencing some of the >>more powerful experiences that human culture has generated.
>
> But what are those experiences? Creation or education? I'd want to teach > that the tradition is alive, here, now, in all the mundane and glorious > parts of everyday life and perception. That's where history has brought > us, that's where history _is._ Then we can talk about individual > instances of creation, Brueghel or Bach or Williams or Marlowe.
>
> The alternative is to fall into pc land, where Plato is dismissed as a > dead white male, end of story, because the connections of history to life > are not brought to life by any form of education that is not essentially > creative. Plato is dead, white, and male, but that is not the end of the > story.
>
> Is it really elitism you want, or excellence? Access you mentioned.
>
> I think you must mean excellence.
>
> Which do they mean in Wupperthal? Why are the Wupperthalers trudging > off to the Tanztheater? Is it because Art is a social project in Germany?
> Is it because they want to be educated? Is it because they recognize > excellence in art and want to support it? I ask, because if we are going > to translate this success into a North American context, and committing > our meagre arts funding to it, we had better be very sure just what it is
>
> we are bringing across the Atlantic. We had better be very sure that we > are bringing all the pieces along. I don't have any answers here.

Maybe
> your sources do. I'd love to hear them.
>
>Whatcha think?
>
>Cheers,
>
>Harold
>
>

↑ Index

84. Louis Cabri

Philly Talks

Thu 6 Nov 1997

Philly Talks is both an event & a web/hard copy newsletter. The newsletter presents brief written responses by two poets, each to the other's work/context. The event extends those responses in dialogue, after readings by the poets. Available so far:

Philly Talks #1 (Oct. 30 & 31, 1997):
David Bromige (response to Moriarty's Symmetry [Avec Books])
Laura Moriarty (response to Bromige's A Cast of Tens [Avec Books])

Philly Talks #2 (Nov. 4 & 5, 1997):
Andrew Levy (response to Mac Low's Barnesbook [Sun & Moon])
Jackson Mac Low (response to Continuous/Discontinuous [Potes & Poets])

Philly Talks #1 is temporarily lodged at:
http://dept.english.upenn.edu/~wh/events/phillytalks1.html
#2 will be up shortly.

Hard copies of both newsletters are available for the grand total of $US 1 by emailing your request to [redacted]

The series is curated/edited by Louis Cabri and made possible thanks to Kelly Writers House and University of Pennsylvania.

↑ Index

85. lefthandb
(no subject)
Thu 6 Nov 1997

LEFT HAND BOOKS announces the publication of FOUNDATIONS by James Walsh. 128 pages + four-color insert; paper; $15.00

FOUNDATIONS documents James Walsh's wall-hung and site/non-site specific sculptures executed in various materials: mud, seed cones, leaves, plastic tubes, chalk, mason's line, bricks and stones. These rectangular forms evoke building foundations and what Robert Smithson termed "ruins in reverse, that is-all the new construction that would eventually be built." Each foundation Walsh made "is a simple rearranging of the site." His text mirrors his off-hand style of sculpting and calls for the same "diffuse attention." The writing's open framework corresponds to the notions of containment and dispersal embodied by the foundations. Walsh scatters passages from different writers and artists across the reader's field of attention, interspersing them with autobiographical passages, proposals for new sculptures-Foundation on the Surface of the Moon, for example-and commentary on his own and other artists' work. He writes: "My interests are diffuse and can be drawn out and elaborated, but not at the expense of their sometimes fragile, tenuous connections." This copiously illustrated book contains maps to most of the foundations Walsh made. Walsh's text is itself a map, siting his foundations both within his personal history and the history of culture. Walsh links his work to both ancient and modern contexts, revealing how his minimalist work connects to the Nazca lines and 20th century land art. His sculpture's flatness aligns it to drawing; and he describes Walter de Maria's Half Mile Long Drawing in the Mohave Desert as having "the relationship to landscape I've been thinking of: minimal marking, defining and condensing interior space, drawing in and focusing exterior space, a way of organizing the landscape."

Available through SPD
1341 Seventh Street
Berkeley CA 94710

DAP
636 Broadway, 12th Floor
New York, New York 10012

or direct from the publisher

write for our FREE CATALOG at:

LEFT HAND BOOKS
Station Hill Rd.
Barrytown, New York 12507

or visit our website at <http://www.lefthandbooks.com/lhb>

Bryan McHugh, Director
LEFT HAND BOOKS
Station Hill Road
Barrytown, NY 12507
Fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

86. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Lewis and Clark
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Well, Joe, I only walked in on the last 15 minutes of the latest Burns paean to American mythology, but I found it rather treacly and distasteful. But then, I'd just spent the previous two hours reading Said's _Culture and Imperialism_, so that's understandable.

Several things occured to me though - if I see/hear Stephen Ambrose and his gravel mixer voice trotted out one more time in defense of Ike, Lewis & Clark or any other icons or shibboleths of American identity formation/essentialism I'm going to puke. And where were the possibly dissenting or at least more critical voices among Western historians - Patty Limerick, Don Worster or Richard Slotkin - didn't see their names in the title crawl.

A few years back someone (Hodding Carter?) wrote an amusing little book about retracing L & C's path - impossible now of course. You can't even sail a small boat up the Mississippi thanks to all the commerce and the regulatory devices installed by the Army Corps of Engineers. The Missouri itself is dammed in so many places - for recreational lakes and power supply - that it's also unnavigable.

And as for Thom. Jefferson's "vision" of the West: one can do some very instructive reading about that vision in his letters (in the Library of America edition) where he outlines his policy for divesting Native Americans of their land holdings via unscrupulous lending practices and foreclosure. Oh yeah - he was all over that vision thing baby. _____ Jordan - to my knowledge, Jack Collom doesn't dabble on the Net. But his partner Jennifer Heath may have done so. Those haiku _do_ have a Collomesque touch, don't they? I think I saw can of Spam in Jack's kitchen once. Coincidence - or something else?

Patrick Pritchett

From: Safdie Joseph
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Lewis and Clark
Date: Wednesday, November 05, 1997 7:30PM

(No, not Lewis McAdams and Tom Clark -- though I doubt many will know of their collaborations of the early 70s)

"The Corps of Discovery"

"The Real Unknown"

Come home Ken Burns

all is forgiven

(the shlocky Civil War)

(the maudlin Baseball)

THIS was True Romance

(Part II tonight, PBS)

the unmediated language

the Rockies, the Plains

geography's smell, history's taste

(it ain't lang-po)

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED!

↑ Index

87. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Sleep of poetics
Thu 6 Nov 1997

In my opinion, it ain't held sacred by all.....that's why we need a radical over-haul of the values and perceptions our society is founded on. (I refer to it "the old fashioned way"--as revolution.)

Mark p.

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, p. durgin wrote:

> Mark,
> "the flowering of culture" -- "public space"
> poet-types can set the example for what I believe is a lost notion to most non-poet-types (non-artists, I should say), but it's foggy, by what means

> they can but may they?
> and if the notion of a public space is actually known to and held sacred by all, why do we not dare to inhabit it?
>
> |||[redacted]|||
>
> ———————————————

↑ Index

88. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Other poetry discussions
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Brent--

If you've got somethin' to say about Merwin or the Waldrops, why not post it (even if it's not as thoroughly worked-out as an essay you'd publish...even if it's somewhat off the top of yer head??)

The best way to get things going in the direction you want, on the list (as I've discovered from experience) is to just start yattering along the lines you'd like people to pursue...I dare say you'll find more Waldrop fans than Merwin fans on this list (??but I may be guessing wrong) and that a substantial number of folks who like one don't like the other.

But it's opinion that make the poet-races....

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> I have been thinking about the idea of other discussion lists this morning, and am wondering why there are no discussions on some of the other contemporary poets that are around these days. I never hear anything on Merwin (a personal favorite of mine) or Levertov or other writers like that. I saw a posting today announcing Rosmarie Waldrop's upcoming reading tonight, but she and her work are never discussed here, either, and that is a shame. She and her husband are both amazing poets. I certainly don't see myself as being attracted to only one or two "styles" of poetry, and would really like to see a broad range of writers and styles addressed.
> What do some of you think? Is there a call to pursue this?
>
> Brent

↑ Index

89. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Other Poetics Lists -Reply

Thu 6 Nov 1997

There is also a poetics discussion list at

[redacted]

(the erstwhile space for backdoor revival announcements)

> A modernism discussion list already exists--at the University of Washington.
>
> I've been on the list for a couple of weeks now and haven't gotten very much mail. . . . so I don't know how lively, long, and involved the threads get.
>
> Maybe we can perk it up a bit.
>
> I think a modernist discussion list is a great idea, but how to go about it?

>>>Anyone aware of any other poetics lists that may be out there?
>>>Thanks,
>There's a list of lists at gopher://gopher.english.upenn.edu/11/Lists/
>Their listings includes beat-l, cap-l (contemporary American poetry), >modbrits (might include some poetics, but not much), and tse (T. S. Eliot, >which we run here at Missouri). They don't seem to have an entry, oddly, >for Poetics--nor for the Pound list at Maine. And I'm sure there is a >discussion list for Irish poetry and literature somewhere. I also run a >very small
>James Merrill list--discussing JM's symbolist poetics of late.
>
>What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for >example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, >Moore. In other words, poets in the first generation of modernists who >don't have a list
>of their own (Pound, Eliot) and who wouldn't be discussed on cap-l or poetics.
>
> would you be interested in such a list?
>

↑ Index

90. Brian McHale
Re: computer program for syntactic structures
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Re: David Benedetti poem-making program -- check out Charles O Hartman's book "Vitual Muse," from last year (Wesleyan UP), where various such programs are described & some of their texts displayed. The poems are not all that strong, frankly, but they do belong to recognizable types of contemporary poetry, which I think is interesting. Hartman's reflections on his experience with these pro grams are also interesting -- not profound, but a place to start. Brian

↑ Index

91. rob wilson
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Somebody asked, why not discuss W. S. Merwin. A contributor's note on him in Hawaii Review once said, "W. S. Merwin is W. S. Merwin." Period. So everybody as it were recognizes the style, stance, voice. Oppen called this, caustically, "the Merwin," meaning that Merwin's poetry had at some point reified into a market position, a period style magazine diction, all experimentation and risk-- at some point-- over. I believe sadly this is so. The voice is desiccated, burnt out, having written the subjectivity/self out as a source of wisdom or anything else. His turning belatedly to Hawaiian materials only reeks of his latest imperial gesture, sad, appropriative, it does belong in there with the furniture ads of the New Yorker or the perfumes of a US selfhood converted to Shelley pose. Sad. Invidious comparison number two: Robert Creeley gave a reading in Santa Cruz yesterday to a packed house of 300 at Kresgee Town Hall, UCSC. Peter Gizz introduced him elegantly, referring to his life project of language invention, the new englandy economy of phrasing, the recoding via new contexts of words like 'hello' until even these became odd, perverse. Creeley read and talked around the body of his life work. The last poem he read was a long one and on the border-of-death masterpiece, called "Histoire de Florida" in which the tropes and twists of his whole life's writing project is recall as la "Ashphodel that Greeny Flower," but oddly the voice and figure of sublime influence that returns to haunt the pome is Wallace Stevens. Creely talked for about fifteen mintues afterwards about what Stevens meant tohim, how hw was his first love as a poet but that the WS long line was not rright for him so he turned to the taut economy of WSW and weirded that out into the necessary prosody of his life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all points of exactitude.

Rob Wilson

↑ Index

92. Harold Rhenisch
Ludwig von Glass
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Mark,

What I had in mind was not the integrity of either Beethoven or Glass, and the same follows for Pope or Wordsworth or cummings. I find a vast difference between listening to Beethoven out of his cultural context and Glass within his. Beethoven is meaningful to me because his work is still being carried on. There are (at least!) two ways of approaching the tradition of art or poetics: 1) there is a canon of achievement which we can celebrate and learn from, and 2) there is a tradition of creation which gave rise to that canon and which is ongoing. We can approach the act of art through 1 or 2, but there is a cost to both. My bias is with 2. Yours appears to be with 1. I think if students are going to some day be true writers or readers, we need to incorporate both approaches. At the very least, whatever approach we choose contains its own hidden biases. They may be the strongest of all. This goes for Pina Bausch's company, too. Whatever the attractions of her art, it is still created in a context. I'd like to be clear on that context before I re-created the art, or we will actually be re-creating something entirely different, perhaps merely our own biases. Some translation is probably necessary. The whole point was that we should be clear what we are doing when we spend our meagre resources so that we can get the most from the least. If money is really tight, then I feel we need to spend it wherever it can start a momentum of its own. Ah, heck, that's probably what you meant, too.

Best,

Harold Rhenisch

****
Mark Weiss wrote:

No, Glass does not inform the appreciation of nor influence the survival of Beethoven. The late quartets, the last three piano sonatas and the diabelli variations have a lot more to do with it, and I'd guess that the vast majority of those who learn from Beethoven are only dimly aware of Glass. But that's rather beside the point. I think you're contending that only those who make art can teach it, and only teaching the making can imbue the love of same. If that were true there'd be a very small audience. Myself, I barely whistle, and barely scribble, but I think I've managed to turn on more than a few to musical and visual thought--and the examplary passion is a large part of the persuasion. Some of those so persuaded, given the luck and talent, will make new things themselves. Others will value what's made and lead richer lives for the time given.

↑ Index

93. LYNES- KATHERINE

Re: Other Poetics Lists

Thu 6 Nov 1997

---

uh, wouldn't that be langston?

> On Tue, 4 Nov 1997, Timothy Materer wrote:
> snip
> > What I'd like to see is a list that would discuss modern poets: for > > example, Stevens, Moore, Crane, Frost, Loy, Williams, Hughes, Auden, > > Moore.
schuchat simon wrote:
> don't get me wrong, I like the work of some of these (Stevens, Crane, > though which Crane? Hart or Steven, Loy, Williams, Auden, and one of the > Moore but not the other) but aren't they well enough discussed? Aren't > there already mounds and mounds of discussion of them? I mean, a third > rate versifier like Frost is discussed constantly and ubiquitiously from > 2nd or 3rd grade until post-doc. Only Mina Loy, of that list, was not > included in my junior high school poetry syllabus. (Who is this Hughes > person, though? Do you mean Sylvia Plath's ex husband?) It was a public > school, too, though things may have changed in the intervening three > hundred years, but on the other hand, some of those poets were still > alive back then.
>
> anyway: Stevens = cornbread-heavy Ashbery
> Moore = obscure precursor of Alice Notley
> Crane = obscure precursor of John Wieners
> Frost = I prefer Kenneth Koch
> Loy = wonderful
> Williams = not Oscar, I hope
> Hughes = place in literary history for abandoning Sylvia Plath
> Auden = absolutely
> Moore = Robert Lowell's psychiatrist, supposedly had affair with Lowell's > mother, a rather impressive feat.
>
> I will now return to lurking
>

↑ Index

94. henry gould
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

On Thu, 6 Nov 1997 06:56:16 -1000 rob wilson said:
>life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for >his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the >earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor >is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all >points of exactitude. Rob Wilson

The National Enquirer reported recently that Creeley (or "HM RC") was born of a Virgin by syllabic conception & that his one eye is actually a perfect heptapodromic crystal from the planet Jupiter; unknown to many, he's also the inventor of a method of syntactic swimming called "the Creeley". - Henry Gould

↑ Index

95. Brent Long
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

How you can group Merwin into a place along with the "perfume ads of the New Yorker" is beyond me. I for one am grateful for Merwin's approach and style, and feel it is still a valid and much-needed break from the typical mental-masturbation approach that many "contemporary" poets seem to fall in to, especially after being embraced by academia. A vague use of language does not a poet make, and Merwin has avoided this since the appearance of "The Carrier of Ladders" in 1973.

And please explain the connection you were trying to make between your comments on Merwin and your praise of Creeley. Creeley is an excellent writer, but I fail to see the point in bringing him into the conversation, especially since I see no corrolation between his style of writing and Merwin's.

Brent

At 06:56 AM 11/6/97 -1000, you wrote:
>Somebody asked, why not discuss W. S. Merwin. A contributor's note on him >in Hawaii Review once said, "W. S. Merwin is W. S. Merwin." Period. So >everybody as it were recognizes the style, stance, voice. Oppen called >this, caustically, "the Merwin," meaning that Merwin's poetry had at some >point reified into a market position, a period style magazine diction, all >experimentation and risk-- at some point-- over. I believe sadly this is >so. The voice is desiccated, burnt out, having written the >subjectivity/self out as a source of wisdom or anything else. His turning >belatedly to Hawaiian materials only reeks of his latest imperial gesture, >sad, appropriative, it does belong in there with the furniture ads of the >New Yorker or the perfumes of a US selfhood converted to Shelley pose.

>Sad.
>Invidious comparison number two: Robert Creeley gave a reading in Santa >Cruz yesterday to a packed house of 300 at Kresgee Town Hall, UCSC. Peter >Gizz introduced him elegantly, referring to his life project of language >invention, the new englandy economy of phrasing, the recoding via new >contexts of words like 'hello' until even these became odd, perverse.
>Creeley read and talked around the body of his life work. The last poem >he read was a long one and on the border-of-death masterpiece, called >"Histoire de Florida" in which the tropes and twists of his whole life's >writing project is recall as la "Ashphodel that Greeny Flower," but oddly >the voice and figure of sublime influence that returns to haunt the pome >is Wallace Stevens. Creely talked for about fifteen mintues afterwards >about what Stevens meant tohim, how hw was his first love as a poet but >that the WS long line was not rright for him so he turned to the taut >economy of WSW and weirded that out into the necessary prosody of his >life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for >his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the >earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor >is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all >points of exactitude. Rob Wilson
>
>

↑ Index

96. aerialedge

New Deleuze, Coll Olson Prose, &&& @ Bridge Street

Thu 6 Nov 1997

Look here it's a whole mess o' fab books. Thanks Poetics. Ordering/discount information at end of the post.

1. _Bodies of Work: Essays_, Kathy Acker, Serpent's Tail, $16.00. Burroghs, Postmodernism, Greenaway, Delany, de Sade, Copyright, Constructivism, Boxcar Bertha, Colette, etc.

2. _Bookend: Anatomies of a Virtual Self_, Joe Amato, SUNY, $14.95. "We who liplock the collective lines of transmission are we as well whose uvular reality is a function of say ah and ha. . ."

3. _Endocrinology_, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge & Kiki Smith, Kelsey St Press, $17.
"Because she's in a body, it makes decisions."

4. _The Potlatch Papers: A Colonial Case History_, Christopher Bracken, U Chicago, $16.95. Variously described as an exchange of gifts, a destruction of property, a system of banking, and a struggle for prestige, the potlatch is one of the founding concepts of anthropology. However, the potlatch was in fact invented by the nineteenth-century Canadian law which sought to destroy it.

5. _Strike!_ Revised & Updated Edition, Jeremy Brecher, South End, $22. No book has done as much as _Strike!_ to bring US labor history to a wide audience.

6. _I-VI_, John Cage, Wesleyan, $24.95. New in paperback. Includes 15 track CD of Cage reading section four. "someThing / mAy here / Type / socIety / tO die / aNd / capItal / coMposed of / tIme is / abouT / A dozen people' / i was aroused by having To / to devise a fOrm of events' / there Is no / phenoMenon / Increased / and souTh"

7. _MUSICAGE: Cage muses on words, art, music_, John Cage & Joan Retallack, Wesleyan, $19.95. New in paperback. "Yes, or I often use the word useful then."

8. _An Avec Sampler_, ed. Cydney Chadwick, $8.50. New writing by Laura Moriarty, Chris Stroffolino, Laynie Browne, George Albon, Stephen-Paul Martin, Lissa McLaughlin, & Susan Smith Nash.

9. _Chain 4_, ed. Jena Osman, Juliana Spahr, & Janet Zweig, $10. The "procedures" issue. Absolutely good.

10. _Crayon Premier Issue: Festshrift for Jackson Mac Low's 75th Birthday_, edited by Andrew Levy and Bob Harrison, $20. Over 80 contributors, 313 pages, fabulous CD, hurray!

11. _Essays Critical and Clinical_, Gilles Deleuze, U Minnesota, $17.95. His last book. Addresses Melville, Whitman, Lawrence, Beckett, Jarry, Carroll, Plato, Spinoza, Nietzsche, Heidegger, & friends. The first essay is is called "Literature and Life," the last, "The Exhausted." "There is no literature without fabulation. . ."

12. _Wall Street_, Doug Henwood, Verso, $25. "You are scum. . . it's tragic that you exist." -- Norman Pearlstine, former executive editor, Wall Street Journal

13. _The Conversions_, Harry Mathews, Dalkey Archive, $11.95. Reprint of 1962 novel. "It so happened that the national hockey championships were to be played in Paris on the evening picked for the Panarchist outbreak."

14. _The Journalist_, Harry Mathews, Dalkey Archive, $12.95. Previously published by Godine in '94. As an aid to recovering from a nervous breakdown, the narrator of _The Journalist_ begins to keep daily records of almost everything that goes on in his life. . .

15. _The Grouper_, Lissa McLaughlin, Avec Books, $8.50. "Something god-awful that you bought at a yard sale. You'll take it home. Maybe it talks to you."

16. _Membrane 2_, ed. Nigel Hinshelwood, $10. William Marsh, Jodi Bloom, Mike Hammer, Jesse Glass, Heather Fuller, Buck Downs, Beth Joselow, Bruce Andrews, Sheila E Murphy, W B Keckeler, Graham Foust, Mary Leader, Mark Wallace, Catherine Scherer, many others.

17. _Falling in Love Falling in Love With You Syntax: Selected and New Poems, Sheila E. Murphy, Potes & Poets, $16.50. From "A Pint of Training Wheels": "Easter comes to life all by itself. The niche market we are, crumb weary though accustomed. Who performs the teaching task associated with survival. Thinking does not constitute real work."

17. _catfishes & jackals_, plays by Susan Smith Nash, Potes & Poets, $12. Collects seven plays including "Clan Caliban," "Rose Lear," & "The Setting Face-to-Face in the clear light." "My. What a loud roar." "Squeaking is a kind of music. Right?"

18. _Collected Prose_, Charles Olson, ed. Donald Allen and Benjamin Friedlander with introduction by Creeley, Robert, U Cal Press, $19.95. Here it all is right here wow. The sections, each containing several pieces: "Call Me Ishmael" (yes, it's all of it), "On Melville, Dostoevsky, Lawrence, and Pound," "Human Universe," "The Present Is Prologue," "Poetry and Poets," "Space and Time," and "Other Essays, Notes, and Reviews." ". . .form is _before_ ideas, Grover Boy. . ."

19. _Selected Poems_, Charles Olson, edited by Robert Creeley, U. Cal., $14.95. From the introduction: "It is to the point that in the exceptional scale and range of Olson's work a place of intimate order abides. Thus 'the fundament stays as put as the firmament.' Each of us must find our own way. 'By ear, he sd . . .' "

20. _Selected Letters of Charles Reznikoff 1917-1976_, ed. ed. Milton Hindus, Black Sparrow, $17.50. "By the way, I never said a word to Zukofsky about you: so don't worry about Oscar."

21. _Protective Immediacy_, Rod Smith, Potes & Poets ltd edition (30 copies), $25 (sorry no discount on this one). "You're always suspicious / that you may not be doing / what you think you're doing"

22. _Collected Poetry & Prose_, Wallace Stevens, Library of America, $35.

23. _The Poetic Avant-Garde: The Groups of Borges, Auden, & Breton_, Beret E. Strong, Northwestern U Press, $24.95. "There were other firsts as well."

24. _The Zinn Reader: Writings on Disobedience and Democracy_, Howard Zinn, Seven Stories Press, Howard Zinn, $19.95.

25. Selected Poetics List bestsellas from previous Bridge St posts:
Aesthetic Theory, Theodor W. Adorno, $39.95 cl.
The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book ed. Bruce Andrews & Charles Bernstein, Southern Illonois, $18.95.
The Mooring of Starting Out: The First Five Books of Poetry, John Ashbery, Ecco, $25.
On the Level Everyday: Selected Takes on Poetry and the Art of Living, Ted Berrigan, Talisman, $12.95.
Rebecca Letters, Laynie Browne, Kelsey St., $10.
Ghostlier Demarcations: Modern Poetry and the Material Word, Michael Davidson, U. Cal., $35
_Guy Debord--Revolutionary: A Critical Biography, Len Bracken, Feral House, $14.95.
Politics of Friendship, Jacques Derrida, Verso, $20.
il cuore : the heart : selected poems 1970--1995, Kathleen Fraser, Wesleyan, $16.95.
Luminous Dreams, Allen Ginsberg, Zasterle, $10.
Hambone 13, ed Nathaniel Mackey, $10.
Some Other Kind of Mission, Lisa Jarnot, Burning Deck, $11.
Some of the Dharma, Jack Kerouac, Viking, $32.50.
Continuous Discontinuous, Andrew Levy, Potes & Poets, $13.50.
School of Fish, Eileen Myles, Black Sparrow, $14.
Cells of Release, Fiona Templeton, Roof, $13.95.
Another Language: Selected Poems, Rosmarie Waldrop, Talisman, $10.50.
Frame (1971-1991), Barrett Watten, Sun & Moon, $13.95.

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, card # w/ exp date & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

97. Brent Long
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

---

hahahahahahahahahahaha!

At 01:25 PM 11/6/97 EST, you wrote:
>On Thu, 6 Nov 1997 06:56:16 -1000 rob wilson said:
>>life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for >>his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the >>earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor >>is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all >>points of exactitude. Rob Wilson
>
>The National Enquirer reported recently that Creeley (or "HM RC") was born
>of a Virgin by syllabic conception & that his one eye is actually a >perfect heptapodromic crystal from the planet Jupiter; unknown to many,
>he's also the inventor of a method of syntactic swimming called "the >Creeley". - Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

98. Sylvester Pollet
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Yeah, and hg stands for Holy Ghost, too.

> On Thu, 6 Nov 1997 06:56:16 -1000 rob wilson said:
> life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for > his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the > earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor > is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all > points of exactitude. Rob Wilson
>
> The National Enquirer reported recently that Creeley (or "HM RC") was born
> of a Virgin by syllabic conception & that his one eye is actually a > perfect heptapodromic crystal from the planet Jupiter; unknown to many,
> he's also the inventor of a method of syntactic swimming called "the > Creeley". - Henry Gould

↑ Index

99. Mark Prejsnar
audiopoesis
Thu 6 Nov 1997

A general query to the list...

What is/are the best sources for purchasing poetry on tape and CD??

For many years I was on the mailing list of a company called Poets Audio Center, whose catalog rounded up everything they handled, whic h was a reasonable range of stuff..Mostly contemporary but also people reading Shakespeare, Chaucer, Shelley etc. If there were never too many items radically outside the academic mainstream, I figured that was because there weren't that many available--certainly not as well-distributed as things by Caedmon and the like...

What I'm trying to track down is a source that (like the PAC to some extent did) can be a source for finding out what's commercially available, in the first place, as well as for ordering. As a library acquisitions person, my skills and tools are all about traking down this kind of info...And at the moment I can't find much. I would guess that the Poets Audio Center is kaput, as I can find so little trace of 'em.

thanx,
Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

100. Christopher Reiner
New Pubs
Thu 6 Nov 1997

A quick reminder that there are five new publication listings at

http://www.litpress.com

including Tinfish, Ribot, Gas and others.

--Chris Reiner

↑ Index

101. mark weiss
Re: Ludwig von Glass
Thu 6 Nov 1997

I think except for the valuation of Glass we're in agreement. Cats is probably better art than glass. There. I've waved a red flag.

At 10:34 AM 11/6/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Mark,
>
>What I had in mind was not the integrity of either Beethoven or Glass, and >the same follows for Pope or Wordsworth or cummings. I find a vast >difference between listening to Beethoven out of his cultural context and >Glass within his. Beethoven is meaningful to me because his work is still >being carried on. There are (at least!) two ways of approaching the >tradition of art or poetics: 1) there is a canon of achievement which we >can celebrate and learn from, and 2) there is a tradition of creation which >gave rise to that canon and which is ongoing. We can approach the act of >art through 1 or 2, but there is a cost to both. My bias is with 2. Yours >appears to be with 1. I think if students are going to some day be true >writers or readers, we need to incorporate both approaches. At the very >least, whatever approach we choose contains its own hidden biases. They may >be the strongest of all. This goes for Pina Bausch's company, too. Whatever >the attractions of her art, it is still created in a context. I'd like to >be clear on that context before I re-created the art, or we will actually >be re-creating something entirely different, perhaps merely our own biases.
>Some translation is probably necessary. The whole point was that we should >be clear what we are doing when we spend our meagre resources so that we >can get the most from the least. If money is really tight, then I feel we >need to spend it wherever it can start a momentum of its own. Ah, heck, >that's probably what you meant, too.
>
>Best,
>
>Harold Rhenisch
>
>******
>Mark Weiss wrote:
>
>No, Glass does not inform the appreciation of nor influence the survival of >Beethoven. The late quartets, the last three piano sonatas and the diabelli >variations have a lot more to do with it, and I'd guess that the vast >majority of those who learn from Beethoven are only dimly aware of Glass.
>But that's rather beside the point. I think you're contending that only >those who make art can teach it, and only teaching the making can imbue the >love of same. If that were true there'd be a very small audience. Myself, I >barely whistle, and barely scribble, but I think I've managed to turn on >more than a few to musical and visual thought--and the examplary passion is >a large part of the persuasion. Some of those so persuaded, given the luck >and talent, will make new things themselves. Others will value what's made >and lead richer lives for the time given.

>
>

↑ Index

102. Pritchett,Pat
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov
Thu 6 Nov 1997

From: Brent Long
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Date: Thursday, November 06, 1997 4:35PM

hahahahahahahahahahaha!

At 01:25 PM 11/6/97 EST, you wrote:
>On Thu, 6 Nov 1997 06:56:16 -1000 rob wilson said:
>>life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for >>his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the >>earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor >>is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all >>points of exactitude. Rob Wilson
>
>The National Enquirer reported recently that Creeley (or "HM RC") was born
>of a Virgin by syllabic conception & that his one eye is actually a >perfect heptapodromic crystal from the planet Jupiter; unknown to many,
>he's also the inventor of a method of syntactic swimming called "the >Creeley". - Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

103. Pritchett,Pat
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov
Thu 6 Nov 1997

When I think of Merwin, the word "attentuated" comes to mind. It seems to me his work once inhabited a fairly vital sphere of language - but he staked everything, as it were, on a longing for the sublime - a sublime that required no real sacrifice on his part, a sublime that was mostly notable for the pretty clothes and miming of transcendence he decked it out in ala a cut rate Wallace Stevens - and it seems to me he's lost that wager.

Rob cites Merwin's appropriation of Hawaii as a trope of rejuvenation and this too feels like a move borne from desperation. Appropriation of course is fine all of itself. But in Merwin's more recent work it feels all very thin and transparent, all very achey-breaky with sincerity, with a jesting about wounds that never felt the scars. I can no longer read either _The Lice_ nor _Carriers_ with any enjoyment - works which 10 years ago animated me. There was one poem in _Vixen_ - "Substance" I think it was - which I thought was pretty good - that is, I thought he'd managed for once not to box himself in with Merwinisms - his ardent dying falls and metaphysical nostalgias. Or rather, he gathered these concerns up very tightly and overcame their specific limitations.

I'd also second Rob's contention that Creeley's "Histoire du Florida" (not the correct "Floride" as RC defiantly noted last spring here in Boulder) is a bloody wonderful poem.

From: Brent Long
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Date: Thursday, November 06, 1997 4:35PM

hahahahahahahahahahaha!

At 01:25 PM 11/6/97 EST, you wrote:
>On Thu, 6 Nov 1997 06:56:16 -1000 rob wilson said:
>>life. Pretty amazing event. Many who left the audience were grateful for >>his work, for him, as Paul Bove was said "this is a great man on the >>earth." There is no such thing as "the Creeley" and never will be. Honor >>is indeed due. The amazing coming to terms with his body and vision at all >>points of exactitude. Rob Wilson
>
>The National Enquirer reported recently that Creeley (or "HM RC") was born
>of a Virgin by syllabic conception & that his one eye is actually a >perfect heptapodromic crystal from the planet Jupiter; unknown to many,
>he's also the inventor of a method of syntactic swimming called "the >Creeley". - Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

104. Stacie Slotnick
Re: audiopoesis
Thu 6 Nov 1997

I remember seeing once in the newsletter of the Academy of American Poets that they sell copies of their recordings.

↑ Index

105. George Bowering
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov 1997
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Merwin?

I tried reading a little of Merwin along with other anecdotal poets about 35 years ago, and could not see any reason for going on. It seemed to be all here I am, there nature is, here's a neat conclusion.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

106. Dean Taciuch
Re: computer program for syntactic structures
Thu 6 Nov 1997

> Re: David Benedetti poem-making program -- check out Charles O Hartman's book "Vitual Muse," from last year (Wesleyan UP), where various such programs are described & some of their texts displayed. The poems are not all that strong, frankly, but they do belong to recognizable types of contemporary poetry, which > I think is interesting. Hartman's reflections on his experience with these pro > grams are also interesting -- not profound, but a place to start.
> Brian

You can go to Hartman's web page (http://www.conncoll.edu/ccother/cohar/) and download one of his programs (MacProse, a text generator for Macintosh). It'll generate things like this: "Where we were theories, the equation--ice--was the library." It'll generate one at a time, or continuously (very quickly in fact, until you click). An interesting and useful tool, with some obvious limitations if you use for awhile (certain grammatical constructions tend to recur with peculiar frequency . . .the source code is included, so I suppose one could edit it)

Dean

↑ Index

107. J. Tate
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Another book if interest might be Amittai Aviram's Telling Rhythm: Body and Meaning in Poetry (Ann Arbor: U of Mich Press, 1994). Very different from Turner, and very readable.

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
Department of English
U. of Washington, Seattle

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, Aviva Vogel wrote:

> Joseph, as a hand-drummer (African/Cuban/Haitian folkloric styles, etc.), that book might just be the answer to a previously unfulfilled quest to understand better our affinities with rhythm. Thanks for that comment. As to how applicable his theories are to poetry, or how well-supported they are, I guess I'm gonna have to find out for myself. I'm not (currently) super-interested in formal poetry, and never have been, but I leave no stone unturned in my investigations to understand all I can.
>
> Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

108. George Bowering
Speaking American
Thu 6 Nov 1997

> Date: Sun, 26 Oct 1997 14:15:18 -0600 (CST)
> From: Michael Quilty <[redacted]>
> X-Sender: [redacted]
>
> Speaking American
>
> Sometimes you forget that you're in an Alien land in which you can never expect to be comfortable. Then, fortunately, you're reminded.
>
> It was in the last half-decade of the twentieth centuy that I arrived in that odd country called 'The United States'. When I lived in Canada I confessed to one day wanting to visit four American cities--Boston, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans. I ended up in a paint fleck of a town called Fayetteville, Arkansas, a fleck whose main significance at the time was that it was where former President Bill Clinton and his wife Hilary bought their first house.

That first year was largely one of observation, since [though I had met Americans before] I had never been in such close proximity to so many of these peculiar creatures at once. As I was an Anglophone Canadian [a species of North American prone to identity crises], the observation was punctuated by long spells of morose introspection, with which I will not burden you. I was able to protect myself from the full force of America that first year because, by happy accident, I ended up in a dorm that was peopled mostly by foreign students. I was thus able to bond with a community which saw the natives to be as unusual as I did.

It was around the beginning of my second year there that I realised that, backwater that it is, Arkansas was a microcosm of all that was happening in the United States at the time. I was able to reach this conclusion because, starting in the second year, my expereince with the people of the Arkansas was intensified, and diffracted, through the lens of the classroom. I was associated with one of the departments of the University of Arkansas, a department which believed that its graduate students should work as qualified professors while being paid as if they were teaching assistants, which was my official title.

My last stop in the academic transhumance of 'teaching assistantship' was on the West coast of Canada, in Vancouver, and it was there that I had had my most recent classroom experiences. On the surface the students seemed not so different from the kids I had encountered in Vancouver--innocent types, tarty types, crunchy types, jocks, well-educated and intelligent Europeans (both young women as it happens), a mature student who knew more about the subject than I did, but who refrained from speaking up in class for fear of dominating it, a smattering of American imports, and the odd hard-working intelligent local young person. Odd, I must stress odd.

Sometimes, though, there are strong currents running 'neath the surface of the seemingly most stagnant of pools. By about the mid-point of the semester I was dragging my increasingly bored charges through the late Roman Empire and interregnum. Time, then, for Christianity to rear its ugly head as a topic of discussion. I remember now receiving warnings about how dangerous this would be from a former colleague of mine [she had since fled the sinking ship of the King Fahd Centre for UCLA] but in that hectic semester the warnings had obviously remained neglected under some pile of papers or dirty laundry somewhere.

My students weren't doing particularly well on my weekly quizzes, designed to allow them to show me that they'd read and understood the textbook [which was pitched, I believe, to a tenth-grade reading level]. But, I reasoned, History is really about sources and biases, so I allowed them to make up extra credit by eye-balling one of the documents in the textbook and putting it in the context of that week's chronology [I laughingly refered to this exercise in summary as 'primary source analysis']. They hadn't been doing very well with these either, which led me to believe that tenth grade is no longer what it used to be, or perhaps no longer what it used to be in the United States.

When Christianity reared itself up out of the frothy waters of the Roman Imperial period, there was a sudden overwhelming demand from students to prepare an analysis of a particular document--a snippit from the Sermon on the Mount. The students who won the lottery were, both of them, soft-spoken and not terribly bright older women. When the time came for them to present their 'analyses' they [independently] gave me the least historical treatment of a document that I have ever seen. The problem didn't rest with the presenters' intellectual short-comings, but in the rest of the class. Though willing to pour their scepticism over the documents dealing with the [up to that point pagan] political figures in the text, this scepticism was now replaced by vacuous smiles, head-nodding, and (to my dismay) scramblings to THEIR BIBLES to answer a question I asked about whether or not the evangelist Matthew was one of the Apostles.

Around the centre of the classroom there were a clot of two or three guys, all sharing a bible. When they came to the passage that they were looking for [a confirmation (I assume) that Matthew was, in fact, one of the apostles] they all made made fists with their right hands and punched the air in celebration. It was much the same gesture that I have seen on the part of men watching baseball on television. After an ad-long debate on some fine statistical point or other [number of errors or Rs-B-I on the part of a particular player, etc.], the colour commentator returns to verify the claims of one beer-drinking statistician or the other. Thence the air-punching.

'My god,' I said to one of my skater-boys, a pair of silver lame glasses adorning his bleached hair, 'you're packin' a Bible?'

'Of course,' he smiled.

Turns out most of them were carrying Bibles. And most of them worked very hard to turn the rest of the period into a revivalist 'Let us declare our faith unto HIM' session. My increasingly frazzled [I'd been up since two in the morning working on a presentation] efforts to coax them back to an 'analytical' frame of mind were met by stares of incomprehension. Clearly Christianity was not an appropriate subject for historical analysis.

> This should not have surprised me, since Arkansas is an integral part of the post-consumerist paunch fettered beneath the Bible Belt. But I was surprised, and deceived, by the apparent normalcy of my students. The following week when I attempted to discuss the role of syncretism in the rise of Chistianity in the West--the way the early Christians placed certain feasts on the same days as older pagan festivals as a way of improving sales in those communities--the vacuous smiles turned to brow-furrowed hostility.
>
> 'You mean to tell me,' demanded one young fellow who insisted upon calling himself a History major, 'that all our feast days are MAN-MADE?'
>
> I blinked back at him, wondering what he could be asking.
>
> 'Of course they're man-made. Who else do you think made them?'
>
> More disturbing to me was the students' readiness to resume their cynicism about the material as soon as the early Christianity of the martyrs became 'Catholic Christianity,' since Catholicism is 'Worldly Anti-Christianity', the Whore of Babylon, and all that. It is not so much their intimate association with the early Christian church that bothers me--that's what Protestantism is all about, isn't it. It is their self-separation from the long continuity of History [and for that matter Christianity after the consolidation of the Roman church] that is so worrisome. It is as if these people are reacting against the worldly excesses of late imperial America by removing themselves from the world, just like the Hellenistic philosophies and religions--the early Epicurians and Mystery Religions--tried to do. 'Epicurians.' 'Mystery religions.' Subjects described in this textbook that my students swear they read but which they do not understand.
>
> These the citizens of the mightiest military-and-democratic power in the world.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

109. J. Tate
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Thu 6 Nov 1997

On Wed, 5 Nov 1997, David Kellogg wrote:

> I think it's a three second, not three minute, line buffer. That'd be a long line.

Yes, my mistake. I'm glad you caught that.

> I don't doubt the usefulness of neurobiology for studying rhythm or any other aspect of poetry or poetic form. (I used to be managing editor of _The Journal of Neuroscience_ and I currently teach in an special program combining neurobiology, philosophy of mind, cognitive anthropology, clinical psychology, and cognitive linguistics; so I'm a pretty big fan of the neurosciences.)
>
> Rhythm is biological, cognitive, cultural, and sociopolitical, yes: but the stupidity of Turner's essay is in its prescriptive project, an a priori description of rhythm in terms that lead directly to the New Formalism. How handy. It is a perfect example of what B. H. Smith, following Pierre Bourdieu, has called "the Others' Poison Effect": what is bad for you must be bad for others. Subsuming meter to neural firings (and secondarily to breath and heartbeat, in a bizarre anti-Olson riff) for Turner means in the end that metered poetry is healthy and free verse neither healthy nor, as he says in a footnote somewhere, even really poetry. But if so, how come what would give Turner a heart attack really makes me groove? Good Doc Turner wants to give me a poetic pacemaker; says I've got me a baaaad ticker.

I heartily agree with this assessment. Turner tends to uncomplicate, for instance, the political implications of rhythm. Rhythm for him seems perfectly liberatory, necessarily democratic and therefore "Good." But, as I'm sure you can speak to better than I can, different paced rhythms tend to have different physical effects. Slower rhythms can lull us to sleep, and, if paced too fast, a rhythm can lead to anarchic madness. Sleep and madness ain't too liberatory to me.

Yet, while I agree with you, I seem to have found few others who even try to join the discussion of poetic meter and psychobiology at all. Do you have any suggestions on where to find more adequate discussions of the intersection of the two, poetic rhythm and neuroscience? I've turned up interesting research on music and neuroscience, but little on poetry.

Best,

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

110. Marcella
Re: Other poetry discussions
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Just to let you know--not only was Rosmarie Waldrop's reading last night = wonderful, but Jacques Roubaud was quite a kick too! Hopefully one is = able to find his books in print here in the US. Discussion of more = contemporary poets is always welcome to me.

From: Brent Long
Sent: Wednesday, November 05, 1997 1:30 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Other poetry discussions

I have been thinking about the idea of other discussion lists this = morning, and am wondering why there are no discussions on some of the other contemporary poets that are around these days. I never hear anything on Merwin (a personal favorite of mine) or Levertov or other writers like that. I saw a posting today announcing Rosmarie Waldrop's upcoming = reading tonight, but she and her work are never discussed here, either, and that = is a shame. She and her husband are both amazing poets. I certainly don't = see myself as being attracted to only one or two "styles" of poetry, and = would really like to see a broad range of writers and styles addressed. What do some of you think? Is there a call to pursue this?

Brent

↑ Index

111. hg
computer-generated poetry
Thu 6 Nov 1997

---

bleep-bleep
bleep
bleep -- bleep
bleep?
bleep, bleep, bleep; bleep.
bleep!
!bleep
bleep. bleep; bleep, bleep
?bleep
bleep -- bleep

bleep
bleep-bleep

- hey, this looks a lot like THE ILIAD. - hg, a.k.a. Hominy Grits

↑ Index

112. Aviva Vogel
Re: POETICS Digest - 2 Nov 1997 to 3 Nov
Thu 6 Nov 1997

Brent, interesting and well-articulated comments on Merwin. Haven't read enough to have an opinion myself, or respond to your critique, but I'm challenged to go and check out your points. Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

113. mark weiss
Re: Speaking American
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Here's a couple of stories from two classes that I taught in Tucson. Call them extensions of and partial correctives to your data.

I arrived in Tucson on the eve of the Gulf War. In all that patriotic frenzy I decided to ask my Freshman Comp students to write about the crisis from Saddam Hussein's point of view. None of them would do it--they thought that even entertaining the fantasy was unpatriotic. Half of them transferred out of my class, which wasn't such a bad thing--it actually made it possible for me to teach the remnant.

Of those left about a third were hispanic, and all professed to be Christians. Before Easter I suggested that some of them might like to go to Old Pascua, a tiny Yaqui reservation surrounded by Tucson, to see the half-pagan ceremonies, at which point my brightest student raised his hand and asked, "Mark, what's Easter about?"

When I was able to get my mouth working again I determined that he wasn't putting me on, and I asked the class which of them knew that Easter was a celebration of the crucifiction and resurrection of Christ. Only the hispanic kids raised their hands. In the ensuing discussion I learned that for the other kids Easter had always been a secular holiday for Christian children, involving bunnies and chocolate.

During my second year in Tucson I taught an American lit course. I had the kids read a rather floridly Calvinist captivity narrative. What they found most exotic about it was the brand of Christianity. To a man or woman they professed membership in radical Protestant sects, but they didn't recognize the protagonist as a coreligionist. They all believed in god, virgin birth, baby Jesus and heaven, but they didn't believe in hell and had never heard of original sin.

This same group, when I polled them when we were reading Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (it was an interesting, not to say eccentric, syllabus), admitted, with two exceptions, to smoking pot, and with three exceptions, to snorting coke.

So maybe the defensiveness about their religion, and the bigotry, remain, but not much else. Those kids who carried their bibles nonetheless had to check before answering even the simplest questions, after all. And maybe all those surveys that purport to tell us that Americans are the most religious people on earth, greatly comforting the Christian Coalition, ask the wrong questions. Apparently it's the Disney version, not the King James, that the kids and their elders are reading.

Is that a hopeful thought?

At 06:05 PM 11/6/97 -0700, you wrote:
>>Date: Sun, 26 Oct 1997 14:15:18 -0600 (CST)
>>From: Michael Quilty <[redacted]>
>>X-Sender: [redacted]
>
>>Speaking American
>>
>>
>>Sometimes you forget that you're in an Alien land in which you can never >>expect to be comfortable. Then, fortunately, you're reminded.
>>
>>It was in the last half-decade of the twentieth centuy that I arrived in >>that odd country called 'The United States'. When I lived in Canada I >>confessed to one day wanting to visit four American cities--Boston, New >>York, San Francisco, and New Orleans. I ended up in a paint fleck of a >>town called Fayetteville, Arkansas, a fleck whose main significance at the >>time was that it was where former President Bill Clinton and his wife >>Hilary bought their first house.
>>
>>That first year was largely one of observation, since [though I had met >>Americans before] I had never been in such close proximity to so many of >>these peculiar creatures at once. As I was an Anglophone Canadian [a >>species of North American prone to identity crises], the observation was >>punctuated by long spells of morose introspection, with which I will not >>burden you. I was able to protect myself from the full force of America >>that first year because, by happy accident, I ended up in a dorm that was >>peopled mostly by foreign students. I was thus able to bond with a >>community which saw the natives to be as unusual as I did.

>>
>>It was around the beginning of my second year there that I realised that, >>backwater that it is, Arkansas was a microcosm of all that was happening >>in the United States at the time. I was able to reach this conclusion >>because, starting in the second year, my expereince with the people of the >>Arkansas was intensified, and diffracted, through the lens of the >>classroom. I was associated with one of the departments of the University >>of Arkansas, a department which believed that its graduate students should >>work as qualified professors while being paid as if they were teaching >>assistants, which was my official title.
>>
>>My last stop in the academic transhumance of 'teaching assistantship' was >>on the West coast of Canada, in Vancouver, and it was there that I had had >>my most recent classroom experiences. On the surface the students seemed >>not so different from the kids I had encountered in Vancouver--innocent >>types, tarty types, crunchy types, jocks, well-educated and intelligent >>Europeans (both young women as it happens), a mature student who knew more >>about the subject than I did, but who refrained from speaking up in class >>for fear of dominating it, a smattering of American imports, and the odd >>hard-working intelligent local young person. Odd, I must stress odd.
>>
>>Sometimes, though, there are strong currents running 'neath the surface of >>the seemingly most stagnant of pools. By about the mid-point of the >>semester I was dragging my increasingly bored charges through the late >>Roman Empire and interregnum. Time, then, for Christianity to rear its >>ugly head as a topic of discussion. I remember now receiving warnings >>about how dangerous this would be from a former colleague of mine [she had >>since fled the sinking ship of the King Fahd Centre for UCLA] but in that >>hectic semester the warnings had obviously remained neglected under some >>pile of papers or dirty laundry somewhere.
>>
>>My students weren't doing particularly well on my weekly quizzes, designed >>to allow them to show me that they'd read and understood the textbook >>[which was pitched, I believe, to a tenth-grade reading level]. But, I >>reasoned, History is really about sources and biases, so I allowed them to >>make up extra credit by eye-balling one of the documents in the textbook >>and putting it in the context of that week's chronology [I laughingly >>refered to this exercise in summary as 'primary source analysis']. They >>hadn't been doing very well with these either, which led me to believe >>that tenth grade is no longer what it used to be, or perhaps no longer >>what it used to be in the United States.

>>
>>When Christianity reared itself up out of the frothy waters of the Roman >>Imperial period, there was a sudden overwhelming demand from students to >>prepare an analysis of a particular document--a snippit from the Sermon on >>the Mount. The students who won the lottery were, both of them, >>soft-spoken and not terribly bright older women. When the time came for >>them to present their 'analyses' they [independently] gave me the least >>historical treatment of a document that I have ever seen. The problem >>didn't rest with the presenters' intellectual short-comings, but >>in the rest of the class. Though willing to pour their scepticism over >>the documents dealing with the [up to that point pagan] political figures >>in the text, this scepticism was now replaced by vacuous smiles, >>head-nodding, and (to my dismay) scramblings to THEIR BIBLES to answer
a >>question I asked about whether or not the evangelist Matthew was one of >>the Apostles.
>>
>>Around the centre of the classroom there were a clot of two or three guys, >>all sharing a bible. When they came to the passage that they were looking >>for [a confirmation (I assume) that Matthew was, in fact, one of the >>apostles] they all made made fists with their right hands and punched the >>air in celebration. It was much the same gesture that I have seen on the >>part of men watching baseball on television. After an ad-long debate on >>some fine statistical point or other [number of errors or Rs-B-I on the >>part of a particular player, etc.], the colour commentator returns to >>verify the claims of one beer-drinking statistician or the other. Thence >>the air-punching.
>>
>>'My god,' I said to one of my skater-boys, a pair of silver lame glasses >>adorning his bleached hair, 'you're packin' a Bible?'
>>
>>'Of course,' he smiled.
>>
>>Turns out most of them were carrying Bibles. And most of them worked very >>hard to turn the rest of the period into a revivalist 'Let us declare our >>faith unto HIM' session. My increasingly frazzled [I'd been up since two >>in the morning working on a presentation] efforts to coax them back to an >>'analytical' frame of mind were met by stares of incomprehension. Clearly >>Christianity was not an appropriate subject for historical analysis.

>>
>>This should not have surprised me, since Arkansas is an integral part of >>the post-consumerist paunch fettered beneath the Bible Belt. But I was >>surprised, and deceived, by the apparent normalcy of my students. The >>following week when I attempted to discuss the role of syncretism in the >>rise of Chistianity in the West--the way the early Christians placed >>certain feasts on the same days as older pagan festivals as a way of >>improving sales in those communities--the vacuous smiles turned to >>brow-furrowed hostility.
>>
>>'You mean to tell me,' demanded one young fellow who insisted upon >>calling himself a History major, 'that all our feast days are MAN-MADE?'
>>
>>I blinked back at him, wondering what he could be asking.
>>
>>'Of course they're man-made. Who else do you think made them?'
>>
>>More disturbing to me was the students' readiness to resume their cynicism >>about the material as soon as the early Christianity of the martyrs became >>'Catholic Christianity,' since Catholicism is 'Worldly Anti-Christianity', >>the Whore of Babylon, and all that. It is not so much their intimate >>association with the early Christian church that bothers me--that's what >>Protestantism is all about, isn't it. It is their self-separation from >>the long continuity of History [and for that matter Christianity after the >>consolidation of the Roman church] that is so worrisome. It is as if >>these people are reacting against the worldly excesses of late imperial >>America by removing themselves from the world, just like the Hellenistic >>philosophies and religions--the early Epicurians and Mystery >>Religions--tried to do. 'Epicurians.' 'Mystery religions.' Subjects >>described in this textbook that my students swear they read but which they >>do not understand.
>>
>>These the citizens of the mightiest military-and-democratic power in the >>world.
>>
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.

> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

114. Tom Orange recent french poetry
Fri 7 Nov 1997

---

speaking of roubaud, i've been reading around a lot in the likes of michel deguy, jacques dupin, anne-marie albiach, claude royet-journoud, emmanuel hocquard, jean davie, claire malroux, et al. any other names i should be checking out, esp., say, folks born after 1950?

thanks bunches,
t.

↑ Index

115. Patricia Cockram
Re: Modernism discussion list
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Modernism is often a very lively list, but it is not all poetry. It is useful for those of us interested in interdisciplinary issues, as it often includes art, music, politics, etc.
Patricia
At 11:59 AM 11/5/97 -0600, you wrote:
>A modernism discussion list already exists--at the >University of Washington.
>
>Just send an e-mail note--no subject--to:
>
>[redacted]
>
>and just type as the body of the message:
>
>subscribe modernism <your name>
>

>After a little while you'll get an e-mail note asking you to confirm >your request. Just reply and you're on!
>
>I've been on the list for a couple of weeks now and haven't gotten very >much mail. . . . so I don't know how lively, long, and involved the threads >get.
>
>Maybe we can perk it up a bit.
>
>Hope this is helpful.
>
>Peter Zukowski
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

116. Susan Clark
FRENCH POETS b. after 1950 -- aka RADDLE MOON 16 launch at EAR at HERE]
Fri 7 Nov 1997

---

dear Tom Orange, dear List,

RE: [very] recent French poetry, previously unavailable in English translation, here's a reposting of the announcement of the RADDLE MOON 16 launch in the Ear at HERE series later this month.

On Novenmber 22, there will be a book party/benefit launch for RADDLE MOON 16 : * 22 New [to North America] French Writers * guest-edited by Norma Cole and Stacy Doris

New York area contributors to this issue -- Ann Lauterbach, Sianne Ngai, Serge Gavronsky, Melanie Neilson, Lee Ann Brown, Nick Piombino, Richard Sieburth, Fiona Templeton, Chet Wiener, Jena Osman, Eleni Sikelianos and Stacy Doris -- are invited to read from their translations of Hubert Lucot, le Lievre de Mars, Albane Provoust, Sandra Moussempes, [OULIPO- associated] Michelle Grangaud, Kati Molnar, Christophe Tarkos, Isabelle Garo, Annie Zadek, Josee Lapeyriere, Veronique Vassiliou, and Christophe Marchand-Kiss [please fill in accents, Netscape won't]

The 200-page issue also includes the work of : Elisabeth Jacquet, Manuel Joseph,
Sabine Macher, Sebastien Smirou, Huguette Champroux, Caroline Dubois, Cecile Gaudin, and Oscarine Bosquet translated by other Canadian and US poets as well one untranslated work [a "poeme-installation," 19 Jours de Chant] and an image/text piece, "7 Adieux" both by Frederique Guetat-Liviani

It's the last event in the Ear at HERE series before Thanksgiving, so drop by Saturday at 3 pm, Nov. 22 at HERE, 145 6th Ave (between Spring and Broome) NYC

!refreshments!

RADDLE MOON is also available by subscription [$15] or single copy [$10] from RADDLE MOON, MainSpace, 518-350 East Second Avenue, Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8 Canada.
[US people please pay in US dollars; cheques/checks and money orders to RADDLE MOON ok], or through Small Press Distribution [San Francisco].

Hope to see you there,
Susan Clark
[redacted]

↑ Index

117. Pierre Joris
a noun-cement
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Was asked by no-cyborgians to pass the following messages along, like stuff's happening in nueva york -- here goes, Pierre:

URGENT ANNOUNCEMENT of vital importance to the poetry community !!! Communique from Tony Dohr:

"Here & forth with, let it be known to all that a SPONTANEOUS & AUTONOMOUS Poetry Conference has been declaired."

Where: NEW YOURK CITY
When: November 12th through November 16th
What:

Wednsday November 12th at st. marks church (2nd ave. & 10th street--8pm) PETER GIZZI & LORENZO THOMAS
"Two reader's spelled with three Z's, how exciting!" --Vladimir Klebnikov

Thursday November 13th poetry city (5 union sqare west, 7th floor--7pm) ANDREA BRADY & JENNIFER MOXLEY "Cecil = Yes" --Konrad Adenaour

Friday November 14th st. marks church (2nd ave. & 10th st--10:30 pm) Book party for CHRIS STROPHOLINO, MITCH HIGHFIL, YUKI HARTMAN, & DGLS ROTHSCHILD "I am a Transparent Eye-Ball" --Rod Smith

Saturday November 15th here (6th ave. & Dominic st.--3pm) JUDITH GOLDMAN & JOHANNA DRUCKER "Think of me when this you see" --Gertrude Stein

Sunday November 16th zinc bar (90 West Houston 630 pm) VOLE with PETER CULLEY & Special Guests "The greatest Rock-&-Roll band in the history of western civilization" --Bob Zimmerman

Besides the readers, other people who will be in town, though i cannot guarentee that they will talk to you--Bruce Andrews, Anselm Berrigan, Leanne Brown, Brenda Coultas, Kevin Davies, Jordan Davis, Tim Davis, Stacy Doris, Joe Eliot, Steve Evans, Dan Farrell, Ed Friedman, Rob Fitterman, Drew Gardner, Lisa Jarnot, Garrett Kalenburg, Sean Killian, Deirdre Kovaks, Andy Levy, Kim Lyons, Jackson Mac Low, Sianne Ngai, Heather Ramsdale, Kim Rosenfeld, Elanie Siklianous, Brian Kim Stefans, Gary Sullivan, Chet Wiener & many more !!!!! (P.S. By saying that i wasn't guarenteeing that they will speak with you i was just stating the obvious, not implying that these people are snooty or anything.)

EVERY ONE IS WELCOME !!

YOU DON'T NEED CREDENTIALS !!

Just come & hang out, there will be people standing around talking about poetry--get to know them. & though you "Don't need no stinking badges" if you happen to have one that identifies you as an AUTONOMOUS SPONTANEOUS Conferee, you will be easier to pick out of a crowd.

Badges (for those without magic markers & access to label paper) will be available (of a kind) at the door on opening night (wed.) {however we encourage you to make your own.

All are welcome!

Passs the word arround, this is a real conference, only people willing to crash are invited.

Please help get the word out. KEEP POETRY ALIVE !!

-T.Dohr
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"I think there is a world market for about five computers.'

-Thomas J. Watson
Chairman of the Board-IBM, 1943
==========

↑ Index

118. Lawrence Upton.
mainstream website
Fri 7 Nov 1997

---

mainstream website effectively does not exist at present

relaunch has been delayed

you can still reach my old site on Compuserve but that is because compuserve will not close it despite having had money taken back from them by visa

apologies for confusion and still more for non availability - it will be launched againas soon as it is possible to do so probably on a _global_ server

↑ Index

119. Mark Prejsnar
Re: audiopoesis
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Right.... I'm precisely looking for an operation that can provide info about recordings from a wide range of sources. Most easily-contacted outfits like the AAP offer only one very narrow definition of poetry (and it ain't, to put it mildly, mine!!)

On Thu, 6 Nov 1997, Stacie Slotnick wrote:

> I remember seeing once in the newsletter of the Academy of American Poets that they sell copies of their recordings.

↑ Index

120. Brent Long
C.D. Wright/Other poets for discussion
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Ok, so how about discussing C.D. Wright's most recent book of poetry, "Tremble". For those of you who have read it, I must say that it is one of the most well-crafted and beautiful collections i have read in quite a while. Far different from some of her other books (i.e. String Light, Translation of the Gospels Back Into Tongues, etc.), she really paid attention to the details of craft and cadence. I saw her read in Cambridge with Paul Hoover a few weeks ago, and it was delightful. She also read from a new work which will be published by New Directions in 1998. Also, her husband, Forrest Gander, has a new book coming out in April, and he, too, is a fine writer.

↑ Index

121. Brent Long
Re: audiopoesis
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Might also check with Bob Holman from Mouth Almighty Records. As you will recall, Bob is the genius who did the United States of Poetry and probably would have some good info. for you.

Brent

At 09:33 AM 11/7/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Right....
>I'm precisely looking for an operation that can provide info about >recordings from a wide range of sources. Most easily-contacted outfits >like the AAP offer only one very narrow definition of poetry (and it >ain't, to put it mildly, mine!!)
>
>On Thu, 6 Nov 1997, Stacie Slotnick wrote:
>
>> I remember seeing once in the newsletter of the Academy of American Poets >> that they sell copies of their recordings.
>>
>
>

↑ Index

122. Gwyn McVay
Re: recent french poetry
Fri 7 Nov 1997

/Toward a New Poetics: Contemporary Writing in France/, edited by Serge Gavronsky, no mean word-slinger hisself, has a whole mess of these cool folks between two purple covers--U. of California Press, 0-520-08793-3.

On Fri, 7 Nov 1997, Tom Orange wrote:

> speaking of roubaud, i've been reading around a lot in the likes of michel deguy, jacques dupin, anne-marie albiach, claude royet-journoud, emmanuel hocquard, jean davie, claire malroux, et al. any other names i should be checking out, esp., say, folks born after 1950?
>
> thanks bunches,
> t.

↑ Index

123. cloward

Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope

Fri 7 Nov 1997

To simply reject Frederick Turner's work as stupid is to dismiss some of the most important thinking being done today concerning the place of poetry in the world. While I agree that in the essay "The Neural Lyre" Turner can justifiably be accused of a certain amount of scientific reductionism, his work overall is perhaps the most interesting contemporary attempt to understand poetry as a universal human endeavor. I'm with Joseph Tate here, neurobiology does have some vital things to say about "what poetry is for." Turner's stance, at its heart is quite simple (see his book Natural Classicism for its most straight-forward elucidation): the roots of literature are in ritual performance and that, in turn, is rooted in our biological, evolutionary inheritance. Turner (incidentally, the son of the anthropologist Victor Turner) is the leading light of the New Formalist movement, with their evil agenda--defending narrative, rhyme and meter--and his poetic work, I think, will not appeal to many on this list, but I think it unwise to cursorily dismiss his writing. Turner is dealing with some vital and elementary questions in some surprisingly synthetic ways and, agree or disagree, some familiarity with his work is bound to deepen one's attempts to place the poetic impulse within the larger human endeavor. While I don't necessarily agree with Turner on his conclusions that current research justifies the type of closed structure he advocates, I have found his work, at the very least, a healthful corrective to some of the deadening and dysfunctional theory that currently bogs down contemporary work.

Best,
Tim Cloward

Graduate Student
University of Texas at Dallas

↑ Index

124. William Burmeister Prod
Re: audiopoesis
Fri 7 Nov 1997

On Nov 7, 9:33am, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
> Subject: Re: audiopoesis
> Right....
> I'm precisely looking for an operation that can provide info about > recordings from a wide range of sources. Most easily-contacted outfits
> like the AAP offer only one very narrow definition of poetry (and it > ain't, to put it mildly, mine!!)
>
> On Thu, 6 Nov 1997, Stacie Slotnick wrote:
>
> > I remember seeing once in the newsletter of the Academy of American Poets
> > that they sell copies of their recordings.
> >
>-- End of excerpt from Mark Prejsnar

Mark, There is a source of tape recordings of various poets, writers, and others (Noam Chomsky for example) with an outfit called Audio Forum. They claim to have 4,000 titles. They may also be able to point to other sources or listings. Hope this helps.

William B.

Audio Forum
Room K609, 96 Broad St., Guilford, CT 06437
[redacted]
FAX: [redacted]

↑ Index

125. p. durgin
Jennifer Moxley
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Anyone got an e-mail address for Jennifer Moxley?
Would be appreciated.
Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

↑ Index

126. aerialedge
Re: audiopoesis
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Mark P & others-- You might contact The Writer's Center in Bethesda MD re Watershed Tapes-- they've done Opeen, Schuyler, Ashbery, more of course along the Rich, Merwin, line-- but anycase, only place I've seen that has Watershed Tapes (Poet's Audio Center) in last few years. Also, doesn't Naropa sell tapes? I have a Coolidge & a Cage tape from there.

--Rod

↑ Index

127. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Interesting post, Tim. I'm by no means convinced however that poetry is _for_ anything, as you put it. For as soon as it's for something, it's also not for something else. In a word, this description smacks of the utilitarian. As Stephen Rodefer put it (quoted from Mark Prejsnar's latest ish of Misc. Proj) "It's not the business of poetry to be anything."

I haven't read "The Neural Lyre," but from your account Turner appears to be falling into the old nostalgia of the arts to locate its roots in the empirical. I don't why people still fall prey to this anxiety - this desire to locate roots as though the biological of itself can confer legitimacy, can alleviate the angst which poetry suffers whenever it compares itself to the sciences. Isn't it enough to say that poetry is a cultural product? That whatever dim primeval impulse first stimulated its rudimentary expressions that by now - several millennia later - poetry is a cultural construction and requires no further justification than that? As if it needed any in the first place.

Patrick Pritchett

From: cloward
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Date: Friday, November 07, 1997 9:51AM

To simply reject Frederick Turner's work as stupid is to dismiss some of the most important thinking being done today concerning the place of poetry in the world. While I agree that in the essay "The Neural Lyre" Turner can justifiably be accused of a certain amount of scientific reductionism, his work overall is perhaps the most interesting contemporary attempt to understand poetry as a universal human endeavor. I'm with Joseph Tate here, neurobiology does have some vital things to say about "what poetry is for." Turner's stance, at its heart is quite simple (see his book Natural Classicism for its most straight-forward elucidation): the roots of literature are in ritual performance and that, in turn, is rooted in our biological, evolutionary inheritance. Turner (incidentally, the son of the anthropologist Victor Turner) is the leading light of the New Formalist movement, with their evil agenda--defending narrative, rhyme and meter--and his poetic work, I think, will not appeal to many on this list, but I think it unwise to cursorily dismiss his writing. Turner is dealing with some vital and elementary questions in some surprisingly synthetic ways and, agree or disagree, some familiarity with his work is bound to deepen one's attempts to place the poetic impulse within the larger human endeavor. While I don't necessarily agree with Turner on his conclusions that current research justifies the type of closed structure he advocates, I have found his work, at the very least, a healthful corrective to some of the deadening and dysfunctional theory that currently bogs down contemporary work.

Best,
Tim Cloward

Graduate Student
University of Texas at Dallas

↑ Index

128. Douglas Barbour
Re: Ludwig von Glass
Fri 7 Nov 1997

---

mark weiss said:

<I think except for the valuation of Glass we're in agreement. Cats is probably better art than glass. There. I've waved a red flag.>

And I'd say yes you have. I am not a great fan of Glass, preferring Adams, Bryars, Nyman, Riech, Tower, for example. But Cats? Jeez, it was bad enough, & everything since even worse. Come on, Mark, someone who appreciates the late Beethoven quartets can do better than this...

But I rather like hearing them in the context of contemporary quartets as mucyh as hearing those recent works in the context of B's amazing work, just as I find it interesting to view some late Degas as contextualized by Rothko. There are lines of flight & connection between the great moments of art...hmm?

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

130. LAURA MORIARTY

Re: audiopoesis

Fri 7 Nov 1997

A few other sources for audio (and video)

The Annenberg/CPB Project
[redacted]
(They did Voices & Visions)

HarperCollins (Caedmon)
[redacted]
(This is an old source, not so contemporary.)

Ladyslipper
[redacted]
[redacted]
(Specializes in women. Catalogue lists tapes from various producers.)

Not sure if this is still current. It is an old listing from the Poetry Center catslogue.

There is a list of other audio and video sources at the back of the Poetry Center Catalogue published in 1990.

Pacifica Foundation
[redacted]
(KPFA, KPFK, WBAI etc) I'm not sure they are still around to sell tapes.

Poet's House

[redacted]

Were going to sell the tapes of 92nd St Y and Academy readings as of 1990 -

The Roland Collection (British)

[redacted] (US #)

011-44-79721421

Video - very large collection of weel-known writers

Watershed has been mentioned
[redacted]

I find that doing a Hotbot or other search can result in finding new sources Of course the Poetry Center at SFSU has a large collection - for anyone new to the list.

http://www.sfsu.edu/~newlit

Laura Moriarty

↑ Index

131. Harold Rhenisch

Re: Merwin

Fri 7 Nov 1997

I agree with Douglas Barbour about _Finding the Islands_. I also suspect there are formal possibilities there still untapped, a kind of sliding scale of consciousness, as in Riley's "In C", but gentler, less ecstatic. I still read books like _The Carrier of Ladders_ and _Writings to an Unfinished Accompaniment_ for the carved interaction between title and poem. The later books of poems and that prose book on Provence I wish I hadn't bought and which I never finished, though, are flat for me. I read _The Vixen_ a while back. The whole time, I found I was not reading the poems Merwin had set down, but different possibilities for the poems, reading completely against his lineation and rhythms, which seem horribly botched, as if he had just started the poems and then quit, forgetting to make any kind of shape or terseness. Curiously, I still can't make myself read them as he set them down. Something could be made out of that stuff. Maybe with a knife and a pot of glue.

Someone else said that Frost was a second-rate versifier, too. That's a little harsh, isn't it? My take is that he wrote about nine solid poems. As for the rest of them, well, there are very few poets who've written more good ones than that. There are only a half dozen Brecht pieces that seem worth returning to. Same for Merwin, perhaps. Let's not beat the guy up too much for that. This gets back to something I harped upon a while back: the need for a new assessment of twentieth century literature. What we have at the moment is a canon consisting of poems and movements defined as they arose. Exciting, sure, but now that we have a little distance we should be able to do a little cross-border shopping, placing things in larger perspectives, stuffing _Finding the Islands_ in with Pound's ballads, for instance, just to see if they can get along for an afternoon coffee.

Probably have to carry passports and pay some kind of duty, though. Rough.

Probably wind up drinking tea out of tuna tins behind the piano.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

132. Brent Long
Merwin
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Douglas Barbour was correct in stating that _Finding the Islands_ was a formal move for Merwin, but I only brought him up in the first place to celebrate some of his less-formal ventures. In _The Carrier of Ladders_ two poems in particular come to mind: "Little Horse", and "When You Go Away", which are both fine examples of an individual being in touch with emotion without it being so flowery or formal as to be boring. My main complaint with "contemporary" poetry these days is it can be very detached, especially when dealing with matters of human emotion. Although Merwin could indeed be seen as guilty of playing on the same theme from time to time, it is a theme he has (in my humble opinion) mastered.... and if it ain't broken, don't fix it.

I also feel (as I stated in an earlier post) that C.D. Wright is another fine poet whose work goes too often unnoticed or unmentioned on this list. I read lots of posts about Robert Creeley (whom I admire greatly), but there are other greats besides him. I can't just return to him and say, "Well, obviously everything this man says is a pearl, so this is who I am going to give my focus to". My idea of poetry is not that narrow. I would really like to see this list encompass a broader range of poets and their work to discuss. We owe that to ourselves and to people who turn to this fine list as a source for keeping up with what is going on in poetry these days.

↑ Index

133. mark weiss
Re: Ludwig von Glass
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Natch to context. Try Boulez or, for quartets, Carter. And the first half of this century is incredibly rich in string quartets--better known than those since because they've had time to enter the repertory. Schoenberg, Webern, Volpe, Ives, Sibelius, Bartok, Debussy, Ravel, Shostakovich, to name a few of several different persuasions in no particular order. A listen in order to all the Bartok quartets or all the Carters after the first is a rewarding, exhausting experience.

I probably meant Alex Katz. (Alley Cats?)

Here's a thought: Because the language of music has changed so much across time I probably need something more by way of preparation to listen to, say, the opus 111 sonata or the Art of the Fugue than just my availability. That given, I'd usually like to hear them in as deep a solitude as possible, which recordings makes possible. Hearing the lines of dialogue between different compositions is one way to listen (like hearing the echoes in Pound?), but the work also exists as a dialogue between me as listener and the achieved thought of the maker, and that's also a good way to listen. Fortunately, one doesn't have to choose.

At 09:16 AM 11/7/97 -0700, you wrote:
>mark weiss said:
>
><I think except for the valuation of Glass we're in agreement. Cats is >probably better art than glass. There. I've waved a red flag.>
>
>And I'd say yes you have. I am not a great fan of Glass, preferring Adams, >Bryars, Nyman, Riech, Tower, for example. But Cats? Jeez, it was bad >enough, & everything since even worse. Come on, Mark, someone who >appreciates the late Beethoven quartets can do better than this...
>
>But I rather like hearing them in the context of contemporary quartets as >mucyh as hearing those recent works in the context of B's amazing work, >just as I find it interesting to view some late Degas as contextualized by >Rothko. There are lines of flight & connection between the great moments of >art...hmm?
>
>==========
==========
===
>Douglas Barbour
>Department of English
>University of Alberta
>Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
>[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
>H: [redacted]
>~~~

134. mark weiss
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Fri 7 Nov 1997

I myself have often danced around a fire with the other members of my tribe reciting Pope's Epistle to Arbuthnot during puberty rites.

At 09:17 AM 11/7/97 -0600, you wrote:
>To simply reject Frederick Turner's work as stupid is to dismiss some of >the most important thinking being done today concerning the place of >poetry in the world. While I agree that in the essay "The Neural Lyre"
>Turner can justifiably be accused of a certain amount of scientific >reductionism, his work overall is perhaps the most interesting >contemporary attempt to understand poetry as a universal human endeavor.
>I'm with Joseph Tate here, neurobiology does have some vital things to say >about "what poetry is for." Turner's stance, at its heart is quite simple >(see his book Natural Classicism for its most straight-forward >elucidation): the roots of literature are in ritual performance and that,
>in turn, is rooted in our biological, evolutionary inheritance.

↑ Index

135. henry g
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Maybe the reason some poets & critics turn to science in thinking about poetry is that it's a way to finesse the raw/cooked or wild/cultured dichotomies. As usual, I'm thinking of Mandelstam & his fascination with biology, mineralogy, & mathematics (which goes for Celan, for another). M's use of biological vocabulary to describe the metamorphoses of imagery in Dante, for example; or his poem about Lamarck the evolutionist in scientific/Dantesque combination. What scientific frameworks does is create a space in which the genuine novelty of the "wild" [i.e., as Mandelstam wrote somewhere, "Poetry is language in a state infinitely more raw than prose or everyday speech"] can be "boxed" in a highly refined intellectual-cultural framework (science) - and at the same time, science in turn is "framed" by the wildness of poetry. Another major motive for Mandelstam here was his connection with romanticism & 19th-century Russian poetry. His friendship with professional naturalists was both an acmeist "kinship with the earth" & earthly things and also a sphere of personal & intellectual freedom (relatively speaking) from ideology. That's my Mandelstam lecture for this week. Science (pace Sokal-haters) like music is a stab at a universal language. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

136. Steven Marks
MacProse
Fri 7 Nov 1997

To anybody interested in program that generates sentences or fragments, you may want to download this program at Charles Hartman's home page:

Virtual Muse: Experiments in Computer Poetry, Wesleyan University Press/University Press of New England (1996), has an attachment here: a downloadable Macintosh version of the PROSE program described in the book: download MacProse.

His URL is: http://camel.conncoll.edu/ccother/cohar/

It's fun and it's free!

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

137. David Kellogg
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Tim, read my post: I didn't dismiss all of Turner's work as stupid; I only dismissed "The Neural Lyre," called his epic poems "repulsive" to my taste, and complimented his understanding of chaos theory.

Nor do I mind defenses of rhyme and meter, although I do object to dismissals of unmetered forms as NOT POETRY (as Turner essentially did in a footnote to "Neural Lyre").

And as I said, I don't dismiss a neurobiological framework by any means.

I'm in agreement with Patrick Pritchett's view that to say poetry is "for" something is deeply problematic. However, I wouldn't call it utilitarian; I'd call it adaptationist, or, to use Stephen J. Gould's phrase, a variant of "Darwinian fundamentalism." Tim, your description of Turner's project seems to align Turner with evolutionary psychology, a speculative collection of 'just-so' stories exemplified by the likes of Steven Pinker, who was throttled by Gould in a recent exchange in the New York Review of Books.

Explanations of poetry in evolutionary terms, in addition to being likely composed of fantasy and confabulation, can tell us nothing about contemporary possibilities even if they're completely accurate. And they certainly cannot prescribe what is good or bad in current poetry, since the conditions under which poetry is presently composed have little to do with the ritual performances of furry forbears.

On another note, somebody else on this thread plugged Amittai Aviram's work: I would also recommend it. _Telling Rhythm_ is a different kind of account, one that defends the universality of rhythmic structures in different (primarily Nietzschean) terms.

Cheers,
David
-----Original Message-----
From: [redacted] <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Friday, November 07, 1997 10:55 AM
Subject: Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope

> To simply reject Frederick Turner's work as stupid is to dismiss some of the most important thinking being done today concerning the place of poetry in the world. While I agree that in the essay "The Neural Lyre" Turner can justifiably be accused of a certain amount of scientific reductionism, his work overall is perhaps the most interesting contemporary attempt to understand poetry as a universal human endeavor. I'm with Joseph Tate here, neurobiology does have some vital things to say about "what poetry is for." Turner's stance, at its heart is quite simple (see his book Natural Classicism for its most straight-forward elucidation): the roots of literature are in ritual performance and that, in turn, is rooted in our biological, evolutionary inheritance.
>
> Turner (incidentally, the son of the anthropologist Victor Turner) is the leading light of the New Formalist movement, with their evil agenda--defending narrative, rhyme and meter--and his poetic work, I think, will not appeal to many on this list, but I think it unwise to cursorily dismiss his writing. Turner is dealing with some vital and elementary questions in some surprisingly synthetic ways and, agree or disagree, some familiarity with his work is bound to deepen one's attempts to place the poetic impulse within the larger human endeavor. While I don't necessarily agree with Turner on his conclusions that current research justifies the type of closed structure he advocates, I have found his work, at the very least, a healthful corrective to some of the deadening and dysfunctional theory that currently bogs down contemporary work.
>
> Best,
> Tim Cloward

> Graduate Student
> University of Texas at Dallas

↑ Index

138. JforJames
Re: Frost
Fri 7 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-07 13:23:00 EST, you write:

> Someone else said that Frost was a second-rate versifier, too. That's a little harsh, isn't it?

Yes, even if one has diverged from road taken by Frost in American poetry, one would have to give him his due as a first-rate versifier--or better said, highly-accomplished within formal constraints. Also, as Randall Jarrell ably pointed out in his essay "The other Frost," there is a very different poet behind poems like Directive, Neither Out Far Nor In Deep, An Old Man's Winter Night, etc --different from The Road Not Taken, (a swinger of) Birches, etc. To quote Jarrell, "These views of Frost come either from not knowing the poems well enough or knowing the wrong poems too well."

Finnegan

↑ Index

139. Jordan Davis
Re: Merwin
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Asked and answered -- if there's something you want "this list" to talk about, you talk about it. Proceed, counsel.

Signed,
Right Honorable Bumfuck Toothdecay

On Fri, 7 Nov 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> going to give my focus to". My idea of poetry is not that narrow. I would really like to see this list encompass a broader range of poets and their work to discuss. We owe that to ourselves and to people who turn to this fine list as a source for keeping up with what is going on in poetry these days.

↑ Index

140. robert drake
Re: audiopoesis
Fri 7 Nov 1997

> A few other sources for audio

Brazen Oralities:

http://www.infobahnos.com/~brazen/

is a newsletter w/ origins in a radio show, i believe that specializes in micro-press spoken word. the print version (2 issues that i know ov) have more complete info than th website; overall an excellent source fr the fugitive & sub-terrain.

Larry Wendt's "Narrative as Genealogy: Sound Sense in an Era of Hypertext"; in a back issue of Switch:

http://cadre.sjsu.edu/switch/sound/articles/wendt/nghome.htm

has a useful discography:

http://cadre.sjsu.edu/switch/sound/articles/wendt/folder5/ng512.htm

Underwich Audiographics series carried some of the best sound-poetry frm Canada; may be available frm damian lopes at Afterwords:

http://www.interlog.com/~dal/after/index.html

mineown _TapRoot Reviews_ has covered a number of audio releases, w/ features in issues #4, #7/8, and #9/10. backchannel fr info.

↑ Index

141. Chauncy Dicey
Re: Merwin
Fri 7 Nov 1997

On Fri, 7 Nov 1997 14:02:23 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>Asked and answered -- if there's something you want "this list" to talk >about, you talk about it. Proceed, counsel.
>
>Signed,
>Right Honorable Bumfuck Toothdecay

I say Bummy, old boy, I never kniew that was how you spelled the ultimate cognomen - any chance you're related to the Toothdecays over on Spivey-By-the-Spam? The Wrewnchy-Toothdeckies? Or is it Runcie? Biffun' good lot of em up that way, I'll say. Must be 300 Uncle Buckies! All horsey as can! - Chauncy

Dicey oh blither it, I should've backchunneled - tods it then. I'll buy you all a dry oonch, what?

↑ Index

142. James Finnegan
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Fri 7 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-07 02:45:50 EST, you write:

> Yet, while I agree with you, I seem to have found few others who even try to join the discussion of poetic meter and psychobiology at all.

I remember about 10 years ago Peter Viereck, in an piece published in Poets & Writers (maybe CODA then), posited that iambic (and trochaic) meters were often employed by poets because they were "in sync" with such biological rhythms as the heart’s systole/diastole, breathing, human locomotion and copulation. (The subtext of the essay was that regular meter was inherently good because it was natural.) I didn't think much of his argument since even a casual investigation of the world’s poetries would show many, many different patterns prevailing in other countries/cultures outside of the English-speaking world’s dominant ta-tum, ta-tum, ta-tum…Yet, humans, wherever they might live on this earth, are quite similar physiologically. Meter, it seems, must be enculturated or language-bound, and not a matter of biology—nurture, not nature.

Finnegan (Not a Biology Major)

↑ Index

143. Lawrence Upton.
Writers Forum publications
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Writers Forum have published 2 folders

FUMING by Bob Cobbing and Lawrence Upton - 12 polychrome text _total_ collaborations, spin off from / related to Domestic Ambient Noise, edition of 10 copies

+

THE COLOUR OF SOUND - THE SOUND OF COLOUR by Bob Cobbing - 12 polychrome texts, edition of 12

each L45 forty five pounds plus L5 p & p i am sorry I did say forty five pounds from Writers Forum cheques payable to New River Project - contact WF if you cannot pay sterling cheques

Writers Forum, 89a Petherton Rd, London N5 8QT, UK

↑ Index

144. acgold01
Contact info
Fri 7 Nov 1997

To: POETI --CMS

Alan Golding
Prof. of English, Univ. of Louisville
[redacted]; [redacted]
Subject: Contact info

Does anyone have the quickest way to contact--by e- or snail mail--Robin Blaser, Robert Creeley, and Joanne Kyger? I know I can write Robin and Bob c/o their departments, but thought some of the respective locals might know if they're actually around or not. (I know RC's been on the West coast recently.) Joanne I don't have any kind of address for--still in Bolinas? Anyway, I need to write them regarding some copyright permissions pronto.

Backchannel please? And thanks for your help.

Alan G.

↑ Index

145. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Speaking American
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Perhaps I have missed the point implicit in the first post in this thread, but I'd say that the author of this piece (Michael Quilty) is a card carrying member of the explorers club who has taken to some old fashioned rural American and Christian bashing. (I'm glad you find those peculiar creatures so tarty and crunchy!) I will wait for the next National Geographic where we can expect to see Michael Quilty like a Jane Goodall afield in the Ozarks in his kahaki and pith helmut taking notes on barnyard mating habits and woodsy puberty rites. I don't have to subscribe to a revisionist, maudlin Burnsian view of Americana to find this piece with its presumptuous style putrid. I realize that many have arrived here only to find that this country can be a cruel and injust place, a big joke. But I can't see how Mr.Quilty's harrowing experiences in Arkansas qualify him for pity. He's just trashing a place (and hell, he still lives there). Someone elses home and lifestyle.

An easy assumption or expectation of universal agreement (at least in cosmopolitan company) permeates this cheap shot. I mean, why not look for an easier target to take out! It is indeed sad that these youngins aren't yet up to their Christian apologetics. At least Mark Weiss intelligently points up to the lack somewhat with his reply.

William Burmeister

> Here's a couple of stories from two classes that I taught in Tucson. Call them extensions of and partial correctives to your data.
>
> I arrived in Tucson on the eve of the Gulf War. In all that patriotic frenzy I decided to ask my Freshman Comp students to write about the crisis from Saddam Hussein's point of view. None of them would do it--they thought that even entertaining the fantasy was unpatriotic. Half of them transferred out of my class, which wasn't such a bad thing--it actually made it possible for me to teach the remnant.
>
> Of those left about a third were hispanic, and all professed to be Christians. Before Easter I suggested that some of them might like to go to Old Pascua, a tiny Yaqui reservation surrounded by Tucson, to see the half-pagan ceremonies, at which point my brightest student raised his hand and asked, "Mark, what's Easter about?"
>
> When I was able to get my mouth working again I determined that he wasn't putting me on, and I asked the class which of them knew that Easter was a celebration of the crucifiction and resurrection of Christ. Only the hispanic kids raised their hands. In the ensuing discussion I learned that for the other kids Easter had always been a secular holiday for Christian children, involving bunnies and chocolate.
>
> During my second year in Tucson I taught an American lit course. I had the kids read a rather floridly Calvinist captivity narrative. What they found most exotic about it was the brand of Christianity. To a man or woman they professed membership in radical Protestant sects, but they didn't recognize the protagonist as a coreligionist. They all believed in god, virgin birth, baby Jesus and heaven, but they didn't believe in hell and had never heard of original sin.
>
> This same group, when I polled them when we were reading Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas (it was an interesting, not to say eccentric, syllabus), admitted, with two exceptions, to smoking pot, and with three exceptions, to snorting coke.
>
> So maybe the defensiveness about their religion, and the bigotry, remain, but not much else. Those kids who carried their bibles nonetheless had to check before answering even the simplest questions, after all. And maybe all those surveys that purport to tell us that Americans are the most religious people on earth, greatly comforting the Christian Coalition, ask the wrong questions. Apparently it's the Disney version, not the King James, that the kids and their elders are reading.

Is that a hopeful thought?

Subject: Speaking American
Date: Sun, 26 Oct 1997 14:15:18 -0600 (CST)
From: Michael Quilty <[redacted]>
X-Sender: [redacted]

Speaking American

Sometimes you forget that you're in an Alien land in which you can never expect to be comfortable. Then, fortunately, you're reminded.

It was in the last half-decade of the twentieth centuy that I arrived in that odd country called 'The United States'. When I lived in Canada I confessed to one day wanting to visit four American cities--Boston, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans. I ended up in a paint fleck of a town called Fayetteville, Arkansas, a fleck whose main significance at the time was that it was where former President Bill Clinton and his wife Hilary bought their first house.

That first year was largely one of observation, since [though I had met Americans before] I had never been in such close proximity to so many of these peculiar creatures at once. As I was an Anglophone Canadian [a species of North American prone to identity crises], the observation was punctuated by long spells of morose introspection, with which I will not burden you. I was able to protect myself from the full force of America that first year because, by happy accident, I ended up in a dorm that was peopled mostly by foreign students. I was thus able to bond with a community which saw the natives to be as unusual as I did.

It was around the beginning of my second year there that I realised that, backwater that it is, Arkansas was a microcosm of all that was happening in the United States at the time. I was able to reach this conclusion because, starting in the second year, my expereince with the people of the Arkansas was intensified, and diffracted, through the lens of the classroom. I was associated with one of the departments of the University of Arkansas, a department which believed that its graduate students should work as qualified professors while being paid as if they were teaching assistants, which was my official title.

My last stop in the academic transhumance of 'teaching assistantship' was on the West coast of Canada, in Vancouver, and it was there that I had had my most recent classroom experiences. On the surface the students seemed not so different from the kids I had encountered in Vancouver--innocent types, tarty types, crunchy types, jocks, well-educated and intelligent Europeans (both young women as it happens), a mature student who knew more about the subject than I did, but who refrained from speaking up in class for fear of dominating it, a smattering of American imports, and the odd hard-working intelligent local young person. Odd, I must stress odd.

Sometimes, though, there are strong currents running 'neath the surface of the seemingly most stagnant of pools. By about the mid-point of the semester I was dragging my increasingly bored charges through the late Roman Empire and interregnum. Time, then, for Christianity to rear its ugly head as a topic of discussion. I remember now receiving warnings about how dangerous this would be from a former colleague of mine [she had since fled the sinking ship of the King Fahd Centre for UCLA] but in that hectic semester the warnings had obviously remained neglected under some pile of papers or dirty laundry somewhere.

My students weren't doing particularly well on my weekly quizzes, designed to allow them to show me that they'd read and understood the textbook [which was pitched, I believe, to a tenth-grade reading level]. But, I reasoned, History is really about sources and biases, so I allowed them to make up extra credit by eye-balling one of the documents in the textbook and putting it in the context of that week's chronology [I laughingly refered to this exercise in summary as 'primary source analysis']. They hadn't been doing very well with these either, which led me to believe that tenth grade is no longer what it used to be, or perhaps no longer what it used to be in the United States.

When Christianity reared itself up out of the frothy waters of the Roman Imperial period, there was a sudden overwhelming demand from students to prepare an analysis of a particular document--a snippit from the Sermon on the Mount. The students who won the lottery were, both of them, soft-spoken and not terribly bright older women. When the time came for them to present their 'analyses' they [independently] gave me the least historical treatment of a document that I have ever seen. The problem didn't rest with the presenters' intellectual short-comings, but in the rest of the class. Though willing to pour their scepticism over the documents dealing with the [up to that point pagan] political figures in the text, this scepticism was now replaced by vacuous smiles, head-nodding, and (to my dismay) scramblings to THEIR BIBLES to answer a question I asked about whether or not the evangelist Matthew was one of the Apostles.

Around the centre of the classroom there were a clot of two or three guys, all sharing a bible. When they came to the passage that they were looking for [a confirmation (I assume) that Matthew was, in fact, one of the apostles] they all made made fists with their right hands and punched the air in celebration. It was much the same gesture that I have seen on the part of men watching baseball on television. After an ad-long debate on some fine statistical point or other [number of errors or Rs-B-I on the part of a particular player, etc.], the colour commentator returns to verify the claims of one beer-drinking statistician or the other. Thence the air-punching.

'My god,' I said to one of my skater-boys, a pair of silver lame glasses adorning his bleached hair, 'you're packin' a Bible?'

'Of course,' he smiled.

Turns out most of them were carrying Bibles. And most of them worked very hard to turn the rest of the period into a revivalist 'Let us declare our faith unto HIM' session. My increasingly frazzled [I'd been up since two in the morning working on a presentation] efforts to coax them back to an 'analytical' frame of mind were met by stares of incomprehension. Clearly Christianity was not an appropriate subject for historical analysis.

This should not have surprised me, since Arkansas is an integral part of the post-consumerist paunch fettered beneath the Bible Belt. But I was surprised, and deceived, by the apparent normalcy of my students. The following week when I attempted to discuss the role of syncretism in the rise of Chistianity in the West--the way the early Christians placed certain feasts on the same days as older pagan festivals as a way of improving sales in those communities--the vacuous smiles turned to brow-furrowed hostility.

'You mean to tell me,' demanded one young fellow who insisted upon calling himself a History major, 'that all our feast days are MAN-MADE?'

I blinked back at him, wondering what he could be asking.

'Of course they're man-made. Who else do you think made them?'

More disturbing to me was the students' readiness to resume their cynicism about the material as soon as the early Christianity of the martyrs became 'Catholic Christianity,' since Catholicism is 'Worldly Anti-Christianity', the Whore of Babylon, and all that. It is not so much their intimate association with the early Christian church that bothers me--that's what Protestantism is all about, isn't it. It is their self-separation from the long continuity of History [and for that matter Christianity after the consolidation of the Roman church] that is so worrisome. It is as if these people are reacting against the worldly excesses of late imperial America by removing themselves from the world, just like the Hellenistic philosophies and religions--the early Epicurians and Mystery Religions--tried to do. 'Epicurians.' 'Mystery religions.' Subjects described in this textbook that my students swear they read but which they do not understand.

These the citizens of the mightiest military-and-democratic power in the world.

> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> -- End of excerpt from George Bowering

↑ Index

146. Harold Rhenisch
EP, poet, raw and cooked
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Henry Gould wrote:

Maybe the reason some poets & critics turn to science in thinking about poetry is that it's a way to finesse the raw/cooked or wild/cultured dichotomies.

I like that.

It made me think, tho':

wot about dear ol' uncle Ez, who came up with his Thee or re. that mythology came about as an attempt to explain experiences in scientific terms. Not a lot of finesse there.

Give me Celan over that any day.

Geez, wot if sigh ants is a sub dis zeppelin of poet, re.?

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

147. mark weiss
Re: MacProse
Fri 7 Nov 1997

I have a program that generates meaningful silence. It has no URL, but hey, you save the phone call.

At 01:18 PM 11/7/97 -0500, you wrote:
>To anybody interested in program that generates sentences or fragments, >you may want to download this program at Charles Hartman's home page:
>

>Virtual Muse: Experiments in Computer Poetry, Wesleyan University >Press/University Press of New England (1996), has an >attachment here: a downloadable Macintosh version of the PROSE program >described in the book: download MacProse.
>
>His URL is: http://camel.conncoll.edu/ccother/cohar/
>
>It's fun and it's free!
>
>cheers,
>Steven
>
>_____
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
>_____
>
>

↑ Index

148. mark weiss
(no subject)
Fri 7 Nov 1997

This is urgent. Does anybody have a fix on where to reach Rae Armantrout today in San Francisco? Please backchannel.

↑ Index

149. mark weiss
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Fri 7 Nov 1997

What you remember as a subtext was, in fact, quite explicit, and is, on the face of it, as you point out, absurd. It also misunderstands formal English metrics, which is stress-, not quantity-, based, so that all iambs are not created equal. The febrile poet is perhaps the fibrillating poet. We can infer other things about Mr. Viereck: he never skips, and he's not very imaginative in bed.

Is this true of all neo-formalists?

Iamb, therefore iamb.

At 03:26 PM 11/7/97 -0500, you wrote:
>In a message dated 97-11-07 02:45:50 EST, you write:
>
>>Yet, while I agree with you, I seem to have found few others who even try >>to join the discussion of poetic meter and psychobiology at all.
>
>I remember about 10 years ago Peter Viereck, in an piece published >in Poets & Writers (maybe CODA then), posited that iambic (and >trochaic) meters were often employed by poets because they were
>"in sync" with such biological rhythms as the heart's systole/diastole, >breathing, human locomotion and copulation. (The subtext of the essay >was that regular meter was inherently good because it was natural.)
>I didn't think much of his argument since even a casual investigation >of the world's poetries would show many, many different patterns >prevailing in other countries/cultures outside of the English-speaking >world's dominant ta-tum, ta-tum, ta-tum…Yet, humans, wherever >they might live on this earth, are quite similar physiologically.
>Meter, it seems, must be enculturated or language-bound, and not >a matter of biology—nurture, not nature.
>
>Finnegan (Not a Biology Major)
>
>

↑ Index

150. Thomas Bell
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
Fri 7 Nov 1997

Yes, people respond to rhythm and probably there is a biological basis for this. However, this is irrelevant to the assertion that one type of rhythym is preferrable in any sense, whether that preference is based scientifically or aesthetically. Aviram's argument is more sophisticated, as someone else pointed out.
tom bell

At 11:06 AM 11/7/97 -0500, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote: >Interesting post, Tim. I'm by no means convinced however that poetry is >_for_ anything, as you put it. For as soon as it's for something, it's also >not for something else. In a word, this description smacks of the >utilitarian. As Stephen Rodefer put it (quoted from Mark Prejsnar's latest >ish of Misc. Proj) "It's not the business of poetry to be anything."
>
>I haven't read "The Neural Lyre," but from your account Turner appears to be >falling into the old nostalgia of the arts to locate its roots in the >empirical. I don't why people still fall prey to this anxiety - this desire >to locate roots as though the biological of itself can confer legitimacy, >can alleviate the angst which poetry suffers whenever it compares itself to >the sciences. Isn't it enough to say that poetry is a cultural product? That >whatever dim primeval impulse first stimulated its rudimentary expressions >that by now - several millennia later - poetry is a cultural construction >and requires no further justification than that? As if it needed any in the >first place.

>
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------
>From: cloward
>To: POETICS
>Subject: Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
>Date: Friday, November 07, 1997 9:51AM
>
>
>To simply reject Frederick Turner's work as stupid is to dismiss some of >the most important thinking being done today concerning the place of >poetry in the world. While I agree that in the essay "The Neural Lyre"
>Turner can justifiably be accused of a certain amount of scientific >reductionism, his work overall is perhaps the most interesting >contemporary attempt to understand poetry as a universal human endeavor.
>I'm with Joseph Tate here, neurobiology does have some vital things to say >about "what poetry is for." Turner's stance, at its heart is quite simple >(see his book Natural Classicism for its most straight-forward >elucidation): the roots of literature are in ritual performance and that,
>in turn, is rooted in our biological, evolutionary inheritance.
> Turner (incidentally, the son of the anthropologist Victor Turner) >is the leading light of the New Formalist movement, with their evil >agenda--defending narrative, rhyme and meter--and his poetic work, I >think, will not appeal to many on this list, but I think it unwise to >cursorily dismiss his writing. Turner is dealing with some vital and >elementary questions in some surprisingly synthetic ways and, agree or >disagree, some familiarity with his work is bound to deepen one's attempts >to place the poetic impulse within the larger human endeavor. While I >don't necessarily agree with Turner on his conclusions that current >research justifies the type of closed structure he advocates, I have found >his work, at the very least, a healthful corrective to some of the >deadening and dysfunctional theory that currently bogs down contemporary >work.

>
>Best,
>Tim Cloward
>
>Graduate Student
>University of Texas at Dallas
>
>

↑ Index

151. Stephen Cope

Re: audiopoesis

Fri 7 Nov 1997

The Archive for New Poetry at UCSD has numerous cassettes, although I'd have to check regarding sales, availability, etc. Let me know backchannel if you're interested...

Stephen Cope

> A few other sources for audio (and video)
>
> The Annenberg/CPB Project
> [redacted]
> (They did Voices & Visions)
>
> HarperCollins (Caedmon)
> [redacted]
> (This is an old source, not so contemporary.)
>
> Ladyslipper
> [redacted]
> [redacted]
> (Specializes in women. Catalogue lists tapes from various producers.)
>
> Not sure if this is still current. It is an old listing from the Poetry Center catslogue.
>
> There is a list of other audio and video sources at the back of the Poetry Center Catalogue published in 1990.
>
> Pacifica Foundation
> [redacted]
> (KPFA, KPFK, WBAI etc) I'm not sure they are still around to sell tapes.
>
> Poet's House

> [redacted]
>
> Were going to sell the tapes of 92nd St Y and Academy readings as of 1990
> -
>
> The Roland Collection (British)
>
> [redacted] (US #)
>
> 011-44-79721421
>
> Video - very large collection of weel-known writers
>
> Watershed has been mentioned
> [redacted]
>
> I find that doing a Hotbot or other search can result in finding new sources
> Of course the Poetry Center at SFSU has a large collection - for anyone new to the list.
>
> http://www.sfsu.edu/~newlit
>
> Laura Moriarty

↑ Index

152. Aviva Vogel

Re: C.D. Wright/Other poets for discussion

Fri 7 Nov 1997

Brent, I just met C.D. at Bread Loaf in August. Fascinating woman; handled some interesting political challenges with great acumen, gave a fascinating reading and quirky but brilliant lecture, and was very accessible, too. Volunteered to give me a half hour conference, in spite of having a regular load of students to handle.

Anyway, I think your point about the contrast between "Tremble" and earlier books in regard to C.D.'s attention to "craft and cadence" (if I remember your phrase correctly) is worthy of further research! I haven't yet read her work, but will, with an eye toward looking at her evolution. I'll be back tomorrow night with some comments.

Aviva

↑ Index

153. Michel Delville
French poets born after 1950
Sat 8 Nov 1997

Try Pierre Alferi, Michelle Grandgaud, Alain Veinstein and Olivier Cadiot. I'm not sure Danielle Collobert qualifies since she was born in 1940 (died in the late 1970s, I think), but you might want to check her out anyway.

<Tom Orange wrote: <speaking of roubaud, i've been reading around a lot in the likes of <michel deguy, jacques dupin, anne-marie albiach, claude royet-journoud, <emmanuel hocquard, jean davie, claire malroux, et al. any other names i <should be checking out, esp., say, folks born after 1950?

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3 Place Cockerill
4000 Liège
BELGIUM
fax: ++ 32 4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

154. Kevin Varrone
addresses
Sat 8 Nov 1997

> anyone have a current email address for Steve McCaffery?
>
> and Lisa Jarnot?
>
> please backchannel.
>
> thanks,
>
> kevin v

↑ Index

155. Michael Magee
Re: Speaking American
Sat 8 Nov 1997

"And maybe >all those surveys that purport to tell us that Americans are the most >religious people on earth, greatly comforting the Christian Coalition,

ask >the wrong questions. Apparently it's the Disney version, not the King >James, that the kids and their elders are reading."

This is picked up from the strain on "American-ness" and I can't quite figure out who wrote it but I'm in total agreement. The idea that Americans are the most religious people in the world (you hear it on the nightly news at least weekly in one form or another) is just plain stupid. For the huge majority of Americans, including - and perhaps especially - the "very religious" ones, religion is like the key chain that you can get "personalized" at the mall by having your name engraved on it. And, as far as I'm concerned, that's a damn good thing. So much easier to debunk rigid collective belief systems, which are always dangerous as such. If this means we have to encounter a lot of dopes saying "Jesus loves me, this I know, 'cause the Bible tells me so," so be it. I can live with that. In fact th basic stance that religion is finally absurdly personal, has a long and serious intellectual history - it's the history of Puritan non-conformists like Ann Hutchinson who used the Covenant of Grace to call into question the communities right to dictate her behavior. This is the same history which leads William James to write the brilliant Varieties of Religious Experience (emphasis squarely on variety). So, as I said, if this means you have to teach a few adolescent knuckleheads in Arkansas well, hey, that's the breaks. Is there any teacher on this list who doesn't have to teach knuckleheads. Penn, where I'm teaching Freshman at the moment, is full of 'em. I feel like part of my job is to destablize whatever belief system(s) they happen to bring to the table and I don't mind doing it. In fact, most of the time its fairly easy, what with those systems being houses of cards. When the beliefs are more firmly held and more thought out, so much the better - then you're into a discussion with some intellectual teeth.

-Mike.

↑ Index

156. David R. Israel
Re: Merwin
Sat 8 Nov 1997

Ah Merwin.

Poet Barbour wrote,

> Generally, I'd have to side with Patrick Pritchett on this one, although I do like a lot of his translations. But I went after a lot of the early poetry, read it, & then put it away. In regard to Creeley, whose work I return to all the time, I just am not called back to the Merwin. Except for one book, published outside his usual > venues, by the late lamented North Point, _Finding the Islands_, which was something of a formal move for him as well. Not 'great' but certainly of interest to this reader...

Finding the Islands was my door into Merwin's work -- after acquainting his name from his renderings of Ghalib (in Ghazals of Ghalib, which also included versions by Rich, Stafford & others).

Regrettably, Merwin himself has seemingly somewhat disowned the book -- evidently as it was from a phase of love-life that he wants to put behind him (new woman, new esthetic, so to say) -- he didn't include any of the Islands poems in his Selected poetry, but I note that lately he has included some of that material in Flower & Hand.

Anyway, here's the thing: Merwin's work at each phase has differed from prior phases -- there's been a gradual progression from decade to decade, and someone who acquainted his work only in one period would be discussing only one section of the broader picture.

As for "the Merwin" or "the Creeley" -- certainly if the first phrase is meaningful, the 2nd may be equally so.

I was WSM read at the Library of Congress a few weeks ago, first from material ranging through earlier years, and 2nd from new work yet to be published. I enjoyed all of it tremendously -- as I have every time I've heard this fine man read over the years.

Sorry to see many have not found what I find there.
c'est la vie

To what extent is the response a response to the writing as such, & to what extent is it a reaction to the 'success story' phenomenon of a poet who happens to attract a lot of accolades? --

but I've not been reading Poetics thoroughly of late, and so have missed, I think, some of the Merwin commentary . . . will try to backtrack --

W.S. Merwin is my favorite poet, I dare say. What he seeks in the endeavor of writing is not necessarily different from what others may seek -- but his manner of approach, and how far it's managed to go with it, are, for me, in some respects singular. I don't know that this is a vew I could cogently defend (at least not today), but it's nonetheless a response that might interest (if not to say surprise) some here.

best,
d.i.
.
.....

.....
\\\

| [redacted] (office)
==========
| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////

↑ Index

158. Matthew Hart
Re: Speaking American
Sat 8 Nov 1997

Hello all:

I'm going to announce myself on the list (stepping out from lurker-land) by arguing with Mike, which is a safe thing to do, given that I can throw bottles at his windows from here.

Actually, I'm in general agreement with Mike's post, especially when he's talking about the classroom. But this extract below strikes me as needing some modulation:

> *This is picked up from the strain on "American-ness" and I can't quite figure out who wrote it but I'm in total agreement. The idea that Americans are the most religious people in the world (you hear it on the nightly news at least weekly in one form or another) is just plain stupid. For the huge majority of Americans, including - and perhaps especially - the "very religious" ones, religion is like the key chain that you can get "personalized" at the mall by having your name engraved on it. And, as*

From my British perspective, the statement "Americans are the most religious people in the world" may not seem absolutely true (ie, vs. Israel or Iran, or another theocracy) but it has a certain truth value that's sociologically important. What struck me the first time I lived in Philly was the number of young people I knew who, although they professed no real, evangelical belief, would attend major religious festivals or services, and were extremely loath to commit to any kind of atheism. Amongst university students in Britain, this kind of middle-class religiosity just doesn't occur.

So what, though?

Well, a couple of things. Firstly, these "key-chain" Christians (or whatever) aren't dolts, although we might want to see them as ideologically interpellated/disciplined/constructed (add your fave theoretical term here). Secondly, it seems to me that it's exactly the personalization of religion that goes on in the U.S. that allows it to survive here in the way it doesn't/hasn't/won't elsewhere. Mike's aside on the Puritan tradition seems key here, although I'd go more with Irving Howe's comments from _Politics and the Novel_ on American individualism and its relations to politics. Howe notes that this individualist strain provokes a paradox between America(n)'s ability to situate themselves on a micro-political level and their/its corresponding inability to utilise the macro-political field:

"Personalizing everything, they could not quite do justice to the life of politics in its own right.... Personalizing everything, they could brilliantly observe how social and individual experience melt into one another so that the deformations of the one soon become the deformations the other."

In a poetics context, the relevant comparison would seem to be between this religiosity and the spectre of Eng. Lit. departments whihc, despite their theoretical sophistication, resist writing practices (creative or critical) which enact this sophistication.

But this is enough for now . . .

Matt Hart

↑ Index

159. Aviva Vogel
Re: Merwin
Sat 8 Nov 1997

The Atlantic's poetry editor reflects on the career of W. S. Merwin, whose long association with the magazine spans great distances of geography and art

by Peter Davison

August 28, 1997

Over the past twenty-five years the poems of W. S. Merwin have appeared in The Atlantic Monthly's pages more frequently than those of any other poet. The editors have been deeply attracted to the vivid movement and activity of his poetry, which seem to flow up from an underground river that lies beneath mere speech, as though written in some pre-verbal language of which all later languages have proved to be a mere translation. Here's a sample from a 1970s poem called "The Dreamers":

a man with his eyes shut swam upward through dark water and came to air it was the horizon
he felt his way along it and it opened and let the sun out

<Picture: Merwin>Merwin's work has followed his life. Born seventy years ago in Union City, New Jersey, he was raised first in a Presbyterian rectory looking across the Hudson toward the towers of New York and then later in Scranton, Pennsylvania. He graduated in 1947 from Princeton University, where he learned from John Berryman, and set out for Europe to encounter the Romance languages. During the early 1950s he lived as a translator of Latin, French, Spanish, and Portuguese on Majorca (where he tutored the children of the poet Robert Graves) and in Spain, Portugal, and England. He eventually settled in the south of France and headquartered there during most of the 1960s, though after a time he spent parts of nearly every year in New York. Later he wandered into Mexico for several years. Since 1975 he has resided in Hawaii, where he maintains a miniature forest of trees and plants of species that are threatened elsewhere in the world.

Return to:

• Atlantic Unbound's Poetry Pages

• An Audible Anthology

Discuss this article in the Arts & Literature forum of Post & Riposte.

---------- W. S. Merwin Recent poems from The Atlantic Monthly, with readings by the author recorded specially for Atlantic Unbound:

Three French Poems:
"Vehicles," "The Speed of Light," and "End of a Day" (September 1994)

"Green Fields"
(February 1995)

Three Poems:
"Another River," "Echoing Light," and "Remembering" (April 1997)

---------- Merwin's early poetry was formal and medieval in its overtones, shaded by the influence of Robert Graves and of the medieval poetry Merwin was translating. He was awarded the Yale Series of Younger Poets Award in 1952 by W. H. Auden. In his fourth book, The Drunk in the Furnace (1960), he turned toward American themes, after spending two years in Boston, where he got to know Robert Lowell, Sylvia Plath, Ted Hughes, Adrienne Rich, Donald Hall, and other poets who were breaking out of the rhetoric of the 1950s. With The Moving Target (1963), The Lice (1967), and The Carrier of Ladders (which won him the Pulitzer Prize in 1970), he began exploring the hazy and animate forms of poetry for which he is famous. Merwin's poems from here on tend to escape from punctuation; they search beneath the surfaces of incident and feeling to the depths of our understanding, a territory of comprehension that anticipates language, that catches perception at the point where it has not yet wholly located words, encountering thought and feeling as they hesitate in the process of formation. In The Carrier of Ladders, for example, the character of a ladder is taken to reside not only in its rails and rungs but in the spaces between them, and the poet carrying it takes responsibility for all the dimensions of a ladder, not only for its character as a climbing contraption.

<Picture: The Vixen>Merwin's recent poetry, to borrow the words of Robert Frost, may be thought of as "the tribute of the current to the source." During the 1980s and 1990s Merwin has gradually allowed his mind and language (which in a poet are especially hard to separate) to range across the wide regions of his own reading and travelling, while also plumbing the feelings and reasonings that arise from his deeply held beliefs. He is not only profoundly anti-imperialist, pacifist, and environmentalist, but also possessed by an intimate feeling for landscape and language and the ways in which land and language interflow. The Rain in the Trees (1988), Travels (1993), and The Vixen (1996) take the reader inside the implacable intentions of conquistadors, naturalists, and explorers, across the Pacific to the ravaged jungles of the Philippines, into the gentle tilt of a Pennsylvania pasture, to the flicker of health in a New York hospital or the business of a weasel in the wall of an old French farmhouse. Increasingly he has been arrested by an intensely sensuous involvement with place. His beautiful prose work, The Lost Upland (1992), and The Vixen are both book-length eulogies to the ancient farming country above the Dordogne River that Merwin left thirty years earlier -- written in Hawaii about France, a tremendous expedition through time and space to encounter the remnants of our medieval past. And listen to this recollection in another prose work, Unframed Originals (1982):

The smell of barns drifted even through the market towns that were themselves not much larger than villages, and in the evenings cows swayed through the streets guided by peasants with the same long sticks. Pigs grunted behind arched cellar doors, and were butchered in back alleys, with groups of experts standing around, and the cobbles running blood. The farm dogs appeared to be a random mix, but many of them had one pale and one dark eye. They knew their jobs. They ate soup. The language on the farms was a patois descended from a Languedoc tongue older than the French of Tours and Paris.

The intentions of Merwin's poetry are as broad as the biosphere yet as intimate as a whisper. He conveys in the sweet simplicity of grounded language a sense of the self where it belongs, floating between heaven, earth, and underground. The tone and directness of his intentions are clearly declared at the outset of Travels in a poem called "Cover Note":

...reader I do not know that anyone else is waiting for these words that I hoped might seem as though they had occurred to you and you would take them with you as your own

It's that ingratiating tone that Merwin's poems take -- confiding, in the most private way, the most generous of concerns -- that has made him so welcome and frequent a visitor to The Atlantic Monthly's poetry pages.

---------- Peter Davison is the poetry editor of The Atlantic Monthly. His books include the memoir The Fading Smile: Poets in Boston, 1955-1960 (1994) and The Poems of Peter Davison 1957-1995, recently published in paperback.

Discuss this article in the Arts & Literature forum of Post & Riposte.

---------- Copyright © 1997 by The Atlantic Monthly Company. All rights reserved.

↑ Index

160. Poetics List Administration

NYC readings/ZINC Bar (fwd)

Sat 8 Nov 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 07 Nov 1997 16:35:57 -0800
From: hkhfound <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: NYC readings/ZINC Bar

Liking to pass on some information about upcoming readings at the ZINC Bar (90 West Houston St., NYC):

Sunday, Nov. 9 - Mark DuCharme/John Arrizza

Sunday, Nov. 16 - Peter Culley/Vole (the greatest rock 'n roll band....)

Sunday, Nov. 23 - Maggie DuBris/Johnny Stanton

Readings start at 6:30. $3 donation suggested.

Yrs., Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

161. Michael Magee
Re: Speaking American
Sat 8 Nov 1997

Just keeping this going a bit by saying thanks to Matt for his modification of my last post. He's right of course to call into question these constructions of American "individualism," what with their dubious histories past and present. I guess my main point which I'll try to state w/ a bit less hyperbole this time around is that I see American religiosity as sort of(I hate and hesitate to use this term but here goes...) always already reactionary - which is to say it is in perpetual response to the anxiety that the prime mover in American culture is actually the will to believe in nothing in particular or, worse even, the will to, in Ralph Ellison's words, "make chaos out of no longer tenable order." Utopian to be sure but as Jameson argues so deftly in The Political Unconscious, utopian gestures are never autonomous, they're socially symbolic acts. In a way (and here surely is my own "American-ness" coming to the fore) I'm more hopeful about American prospects for secularization b/c the culture doesn't really offer up an accepatble substitute for God - "The State," for instance. So maybe there's a secular, improvisational collective at the end of this road. That's the utopia I'd like to gesture toward in any case.

-Mike.

According to Matthew Hart: > > Hello all: >
> I'm going to announce myself on the list (stepping out from lurker-land) > by arguing with Mike, which is a safe thing to do, given that I can throw > bottles at his windows from here.
>
> Actually, I'm in general agreement with Mike's post, especially when he's > talking about the classroom. But this extract below strikes me as needing > some modulation:
>
> > This is picked up from the strain on "American-ness" and I can't quite > > figure out who wrote it but I'm in total agreement. The idea that > > Americans are the most religious people in the world (you hear it on the > > nightly news at least weekly in one form or another) is just plain stupid.
> > For the huge majority of Americans, including - and perhaps especially - > > the "very religious" ones, religion is like the key chain that you can get > > "personalized" at the mall by having your name engraved on it. And, as
>
> >From my British perspective, the statement "Americans are the most > religious people in the world" may not seem absolutely true (ie, vs.
> Israel or Iran, or another theocracy) but it has a certain truth value > that's sociologically important. What struck me the first time I lived in > Philly was the number of young people I knew who, although they professed > no real, evangelical belief, would attend major religious festivals or > services, and were extremely loath to commit to any kind of atheism.

> Amongst university students in Britain, this kind of middle-class > religiosity just doesn't occur.
>
> So what, though?
>
> Well, a couple of things. Firstly, these "key-chain" Christians (or > whatever) aren't dolts, although we might want to see them as > ideologically interpellated/disciplined/constructed (add your fave > theoretical term here). Secondly, it seems to me that it's exactly the > personalization of religion that goes on in the U.S. that allows it to > survive here in the way it doesn't/hasn't/won't elsewhere. Mike's aside > on the Puritan tradition seems key here, although I'd go more with Irving > Howe's comments from _Politics and the Novel_ on American individualism > and its relations to politics. Howe notes that this individualist strain > provokes a paradox between America(n)'s ability to situate themselves on a > micro-political level and their/its corresponding inability to utilise the > macro-political field:
>
> "Personalizing everything, they could not quite do justice to the life of > politics in its own right.... Personalizing everything, they could > brilliantly observe how social and individual experience melt into one > another so that the deformations of the one soon become the deformations > the other."
>
> In a poetics context, the relevant comparison would seem to be between > this religiosity and the spectre of Eng. Lit. departments whihc, despite > their theoretical sophistication, resist writing practices (creative > or critical) which enact this sophistication.
>
> But this is enough for now . . .
>
> Matt Hart
>

↑ Index

162. cloward
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Sat 8 Nov 1997

David, excuse any heavy-handedness in my response to your post. I think we are essentially in agreement about the dangers of any scientific reductionism (Darwinian fundamentalism, nostalgic empiricism, utilitarianism, what have you) that prescribes a specific type of poetry, but I heartily disagree with your assertion that informed speculation concerning poetry in evolutionary terms cannot tell us anything useful about contemporary possibilities.

As Henry Gould points out, there is the possibility in this type of discussion of not simply boxing poetry in a scientific framework but of a reciprocal reframing of science in the wildness of poetry. This, I think, is the best prescription for reading Frederick Turner's work and understanding his take on the neurobiological roots of poetry. I think Turner's theoretical work stands up much better when read in conjunction with the poetic work that deals most directly with the subject (I would recommend the aphorisms in his early book The Garden and the long poem Field Notes in his upcoming collection, Hadean Eclogues, as the best points of entry). This work is, indeed, deeply speculative, "fantasy and confabulation" if you will, but he does make some fascinating connections (between verbal play, the performative roots of literature and the biological roots of ritual, for instance) which I find immensely useful.

And beneath all the jargon Turner offers a simple explanation of "what poetry is for" which I find profoundly attractive: Joy!

↑ Index

163. mark weiss
Spe3aking American
Sat 8 Nov 1997

Here's a lot of generalizations to chew on:

America (The US version) is such an odd beast that American writers spend an inordinate amount of time wondering at it, some of us almost to the exclusion of all else. And religion, broadly defined, is, I think, at the heart of it. Us white folks, anyway, have always been messianic, often millenarian and utopian. This is equally true of the lot that landed in Boston in 1630, which already saw this savage shore as the last chance to demonstrate the right ordering of human society, the Adventists, the Mormons, the socialists, the hippies, and all the believers in various forms of manifest destiny. We still talk about extending the American Way to all corners. This has had all kind of results--the elevation of the individual to such an extent that coherent group action becomes difficult

(one strain of our utopianism actually posits that the collective is unnecessary--a mere hampering of the individual's possibilities that can be doffed like an old coat), on the one hand, and the despair in almost all corners at the failure of the political or theological millenium to arrive. But let me stick with individualism, the weed sowed here not just by radical protestantism, but by the fact that America has been the great escape hatch for individuals and eccentric groups that had a hard time with the limitations imposed by the collectivities they left. Those most committed to the old place didn't leave, regardless of circumstance, which is why there are still Irish in Ireland and Jews and Gypsies in Western Europe. Those most disaffiliated left most easily, others required the imposition of more stress, and others decided that the stress of leaving was more difficult to contemplate than whatever awaited them if they remained at home. So we have a populace selected and self-selected from those least skilled at the maintenance of society, and arriving, often, with an individualist theology in a place where that theology was a dominant strain. American Exceptionalism is that individualism writ large. So the hostility toward organized society becomes intense to the point of manichianism, and you get, as extreme manifestations of widespread sentiments, anti-flag burning amendments, HUAC, Ruby Ridge, and Oklahoma City. Now throw in religion. Not all theists are Disney theists, but the Disney theists, because of their vague religious identification, in an environment where fine analysis is not exactly a given, are particularly easy for their more committed brethren to lead astray, into creationism and other antiscientific mind-sets. We not only have the largest percentage of self-proclaimed religious believers (and church-goers) in the industrialized world, we have the largest collection of believers in astrology, UFO's, etc. What the collective tries to teach to the contrary is suspect, because the collective may by the very fact of its collectivity be the enemy. Which leaves a lot of people pretty vulnerable to persuasion from the collectives that masquerade as the promoters of the individual. Given the right shepherd the Ramboys become sheep. An aside to the correspondent from across the water: students at Penn are not the same as students in Arkansas and Arizona. Large Northeastern cities teach relativism as a necessary survival skill, which may be why there is a more liberal political environment. And of course the kids at Penn are selected largely from more-affluent, better-educated homes, and come from a wide variety of environments. When I began teaching in Arizona after years teaching in New York the contrast was immediate and shocking. The kids at Columbia, but also at Hunter, were a lot easier to shake out of whatever preconceptions. This is also true, by the way, of the mostly affluent but educationally-deprived kids who arrive at UC San Diego. I loved teaching in Arizona, but I was very aware that I was starting at a different point. It's good to remember that, while enormous numbers of Americans live in the more challenging environments of the Northeast and the San Francisco to Seattle littoral, they have disproportionately few votes in Washington. North Dakota has two senators, New York City has none. What those whose Americanism is most unquestioned do with their beliefs and their votes matters a lot.

↑ Index

164. mark weiss
(no subject)
Sat 8 Nov 1997

A addendum, perhaps corrective, to the former.

Recently my father-in-law died. He was a life-long Presbytarian, raised by his minister father in a branch of one of the southern synods whose orthodoxy would have made John Knox blush. what differentiated them from their already rather austere bretheren was their disallowance of the vanity of music and singing in church. His own trajectory had been towards a much more liberal church and a profound questioning, but at the end he was still a firm theist. His funeral was at the church at Warren Wilson College, and he is buried at their cemetery, which blends easily with the pasture across the fence downhill because there are no headstones, only barely-visible markers flush to the ground. The cemetery is a few rural miles from his home. Before, during and after the funeral there was an outpouring of kindness and support from the community-defined-as-church that was an extraordinary contrast with the circumstances of my own father's funeral. My father's death was marked only by a brief gathering conducted by a rabbi who didn't know him in a commercial funeral parlor, followed by burial in an industrial-scale cemetery too uncomfortable and too far from anyone's home to be easily visited. Some of the church-members who came to the aid of my wife's family I am told are real sons-of-bitches in their daily lives. But that only makes their behavior around a major lifechange more impressive. In the crisis the community was a source of comfort that I can only envy, as the cost of entry is a belief system that I find at best childish. I had thought that this kind of event only happened in movies dripping with treacly nostalgia. Of course, these little communities have seen themselves as corporate individuals standing against the larger society since Christ invited the gang out for passover dinner, and their stated devotion, whatever the concerns of the individuals within them in their secular lives, is not to the future of the larger society or the environment but to the salvation of individual, individually chosen souls, the chosen people elected one by one.

↑ Index

165. nuyopoman
Zimbabwe Links
Sat 8 Nov 1997

While at Frankfurt Book Fair (which I urge you go to -- the biggest anything I've ever been to! filled with booklovers! plus headspinning "deals" oy) I met Zimbabwean poet, Chirikure Chirikure. He read sweet beauty in Shona; his sister accompanied on mbira. I'll be posting (English trans) poem on http://poetry.miningco.com Tuesday. Would love to link any Zimbabwean poetry sites. Help?

Thankew,

Bob Holman

↑ Index

166. John Wilkinson
Re: French Poets born after 1950
Sun 9 Nov 1997

Re Pierre Alferi, Equipage in Cambridge (England) has just published the bilingual text of the erotic table-tennis sequence "Personal Pong", English by Kevin Nolan with Alferi's approval, and with a two-page Note de Traducteur which is as pithy an essay on poetics as you will see in many a long day. Equipage plans a Bernard Dubourg work with the involvement of several hands.

Equipage c/o Rod Mengham, Jesus College, Cambridge CB5 8BL

↑ Index

167. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Sun 9 Nov 1997

---

ok, i just have to pull out of my own shit for a moment here, and chime in on the "turner" thread...

weird----there's a mark turner who's written imnsho a profoundly misguided book, _reading minds: the study of english in the age of cognitive science_ (princeton up, of all places, 1991) that presumes to speak directly to the "poetry of connections" at the neural level, through the emerging field of "cognitive rhetoric" (we might want to ask what part of the 'brain' contributed to said field 'emerging,' but that might be asking for too much)...

if you want to understand what's wrong with notions of chaos theory and the like applied in more direct ways---let's say "evolutionary" ways---to poetic production, or to culture in general, you need first, i think, consider the process of poetic production as, among other things, having something to do with the ways we think...

which of course surfaces issues of mind-brain... which is precisely where most such... descriptions?---falter... and interestingly, they seem in their faltering to be prone to resurrecting a rather dated notion of poetic "form" (yeah---vs. content)... i've 'argued' elsewhere that this is b/c mind itself is now thought, in many circles, a technology...

so the politics---politics in the broadest sense, but politics nonetheless---of such conceptual maneuvers is all too clear... just starting with cognitive science, for example: have a good long look at _the embodied mind: cognitive science and human experience_, by francisco varela, even thompson, and eleanor rosch (mit, 1991), just to see where cognitive scientists began to resist their own disciplinary reductions even as the "decade of the brain" got started... it's not without its problems, but then, neither is cogsci...

i hope i don't sound jaded here---although i am, b/c i'm tired of making this point, which i've been making since i don't know when... i find it aggravating as hell that both turners, paul lake, whoever others, can continue to mount arguments predicated on a so-so grasp of the new sciences... and that they seem in their excursions far less sophisticated than, say, n. katherine hayles in her work on the "isomorphic" relations between the new sciences of complexity and other forms of cultural production... and that these chaps do so in order ultimately to propose either (1) a hierarchy simply of poetic value or (2) an explanation, e.g., for how "metaphor" works, i.e., at the cognitive level, which generally leads to a social or disciplinary hierarchy of value... which seems to suggest a gesellschaft of sorts, for those so inclined... which is right in line with scientifically absurd, or absurdly scientific, treatments of value such as roger w. sperry's _science and moral piority: merging mind, brain, and human values_(columbia up, 1983)... in fact it's well and good to try to work out correspondences twixt the sciences, so to speak, and the arts---but every damn time this happens it seems to be the arts that are to be "explained" by the sciences... typically with a concluding aesthetic appeal for the intrinsic beauty or some such of the science so informed, and the art so 'described'...

anyway... that's my two cents' worth... should be clear i'm with david kellogg on this one... i say you need to read beneath the signs...

apologies for my impatience...

best,

joe

↑ Index

168. Matthew Stadler
Re: Zimbabwe Links
Sun 9 Nov 1997

I would also like to know of any Zimbabwe links. An excellent writer in Seattle named Charles Mudede told me of "zim-net" or something like that, but I don't have any details. You could try Charles at [redacted]

Matthew Stadler

↑ Index

169. Maria Damon
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Sun 9 Nov 1997

---

what do you all make of ira livingston's book Arrow of Chaos: Romanticism and Postmodernity, along these lines? i'm a big fan of ira's.--md

At 8:18 AM -0600 11/9/97, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>ok, i just have to pull out of my own shit for a moment here, and chime in >on the "turner" thread...
>
>weird----there's a mark turner who's written imnsho a profoundly misguided >book, _reading minds: the study of english in the age of cognitive >science_ (princeton up, of all places, 1991) that presumes to speak >directly to the "poetry of connections" at the neural level, through the >emerging field of "cognitive rhetoric" (we might want to ask what part of >the 'brain' contributed to said field 'emerging,' but that might be asking >for too much)...
>
>if you want to understand what's wrong with notions of chaos theory and the >like applied in more direct ways---let's say "evolutionary" ways---to >poetic production, or to culture in general, you need first, i think, >consider the process of poetic production as, among other things, having >something to do with the ways we think...
>
>which of course surfaces issues of mind-brain... which is precisely where >most such... descriptions?---falter... and interestingly, they seem in >their faltering to be prone to resurrecting a rather dated notion of poetic >"form" (yeah---vs. content)... i've 'argued' elsewhere that this is b/c >mind itself is now thought, in many circles, a technology...
>
>so the politics---politics in the broadest sense, but politics >nonetheless---of such conceptual maneuvers is all too clear... just >starting with cognitive science, for example: have a good long look at >_the embodied mind: cognitive science and human experience_, by francisco >varela, even thompson, and eleanor rosch (mit, 1991), just to see where >cognitive scientists began to resist their own disciplinary reductions even >as the "decade of the brain" got started... it's not without its problems, >but then, neither is cogsci...

>
>i hope i don't sound jaded here---although i am, b/c i'm tired of making >this point, which i've been making since i don't know when... i find it >aggravating as hell that both turners, paul lake, whoever others, can >continue to mount arguments predicated on a so-so grasp of the new >sciences... and that they seem in their excursions far less sophisticated >than, say, n. katherine hayles in her work on the "isomorphic" relations >between the new sciences of complexity and other forms of cultural >production... and that these chaps do so in order ultimately to propose >either (1) a hierarchy simply of poetic value or (2) an explanation, e.g., >for how "metaphor" works, i.e., at the cognitive level, which generally >leads to a social or disciplinary hierarchy of value... which seems to >suggest a gesellschaft of sorts, for those so inclined... which is right in >line with scientifically absurd, or absurdly scientific, treatments of >value such as roger w. sperry's _science and moral piority: merging mind, >brain, and human values_(columbia up, 1983)... in fact it's well and good >to try to work out correspondences twixt the sciences, so to speak, and the >arts---but every damn time this happens it seems to be the arts that are to >be "explained" by the sciences... typically with a concluding aesthetic >appeal for the intrinsic beauty or some such of the science so informed, >and the art so 'described'...
>
>anyway... that's my two cents' worth... should be clear i'm with david >kellogg on this one... i say you need to read beneath the signs...
>
>apologies for my impatience...
>
>best,
>
>joe

↑ Index

170. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Sun 9 Nov 1997

don't know that one, maria... can you post a quick summary?///basic vectors of thought?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

171. Brent Long
Call for entry
Sun 9 Nov 1997

Dear List members,

As some of you know I wrote a Web Page about the late poet Frank Stanford several months ago (it is currently being updated with new photos, interviews, sound clips, etc., and will be back up in the next few weeks). I would like to invite any of you familiar with his work to write a critical essay for publication on the Web Page. Length is unimportant, as I have access to plenty of server space. Any of you interested can e-mail me at [redacted]

Brent

↑ Index

172. George Bowering
Re: Speaking American
Mon 10 Nov 1997

> If
> this means we have to encounter a lot of dopes saying "Jesus loves me, > this I know, 'cause the Bible tells me so," so be it. I can live with > that.

I get yr point. But it seems to me that Quilty's point was that these dolts were symptomatic of the folks who have taken it upon themselves to invade as many smaller countries all over the world as they can, for thinking otherwise about things.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

173. Susan Wheeler
Nancarrow
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Remembering Nancarrow fans, a piece in yesterday's New York Times on him. And re Tremble, it's a stupendous book, but I do not see it as a phenomenal departure for Wright -- clues?

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

174. Henry Gould
Honig online
Mon 10 Nov 1997

For people interested in Edwin Honig's poetry, a large portion of his collected poems, titled TIME & AGAIN - POEMS 1940 - 1995, is now online at the Contemporary American Poetry Archive. The site is still under construction and there are some problems with lineation & spacing, particularly in the section of Early Poems; also parts 2,4 and 13 are missing, hopefully soon to be added. There is a table of contents for the complete collection as well as a bibliography.

Honig has been struggling to find a publisher for this massive collection, but in the meantime Wendy Battin, Charles Hartman, & their helpers at CAPA are providing a very heartening service. CAPA address: http://capa.conncoll.edu.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

175. Maria Damon
2 fwded announcements
Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

1. To: [redacted]
cc: (bcc: Mark A Nowak/St. Catherine) Subject: Xcp/Ads

Dear Alison Aten,

Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics has decided, at a recent staff meeting, to begin accepting select advertisements in our upcoming issues. Prices for 5 1/2" x 8 1/2" camera ready ads will be as follows:

1.) one time ad: $100

2.) one ad in 3 consecutive issues (can be different in each issue): $250

Since University of Minnesota Press books are often featured in our review section (_Fictions of Feminist Ethnography_ in issue no. 1, _Modernity at Large_ in issue no. 2), we wanted to invite you to participate in this opportunity in time to get your ad into issue no. 2 (deadline: 20 December 1997).

Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics is a semi-annual journal of poetry, poetics, ethnography, and cultural & ethnic studies based in Minneapolis, MN. One thousand copies of each issue are printed and distributed via Bernhard De Boer, Inc. (Nutley, NJ), Small Press Distribution (Berkeley, CA) and Don Olson Distribution (Minneapolis, MN) as well as directly to our subscribers. In addition, 100 copies of _Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics_ are sent to the most distinguished professors, poets, scholars, and university departments and libraries in the United States and Canada.

If you would like more info. on this introductory opportunity, please feel free to e-mail or call me ([redacted]) for more information.

Sincerely,

Mark Nowak, ed.
Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics

2. Subject: Call for papers--Queer Theory conference at the UofM

Greetings!

I received your name from the University of Minnesota's GLBT Programs Office, and wanted to forward you the following information. QGPA, a graduate and professional association at the U of M, will be co-sponsoring a conference on April 24-26, 1998, concerning the efficacy of queer theory. Please review the call for papers I have attached tto the bottom of this e-mail and feel free to forward it to any listservs, students, or colleagues who may be interested.

I appreciate your time, and hope you will be as excited about this upcoming event as I am.

Best wishes,
Thomas O. Haakenson

Comparative Studies in Discourse & Society Program
Department of Cultural Studies and Comparative Literature
University of Minnesota - Twin Cities

****

Offices: GLBT GAPSA Co-Chairperson
COGS Representative for the CSDS Program
E-Mail: [redacted]
Phone: [redacted]
S-Mail:

3424 Bryant Avenue South CSDS Program Minneapolis, Minnesota 55408-4110 University of Minnesota [redacted]
350 Folwell Hall 9 Pleasant Street S.E.
Minneapolis, MN 55455
********** :

****

"HOW QUEER ARE WE HERE?"
INTERROGATING THE EFFICACY OF QUEER THEORY AND POLITICS

APRIL 24-26, 1998
University of Minnesota, Twin Cities

*CALL FOR PAPERS

QGPA, the Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender Graduate and Professional Association of the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, Announces an Interdisciplinary Graduate Student Conference:

Recent critical and political theory has attempted to formulate the notion of "Queer" identity as a radical response to various institutions of power and domination; critics have posited this queer identity as both a disruption of traditional subject positions as well as an opportunity for the creation of alternative, destabilized configurations of subjectivity. Increasingly, however, queer identity seems in danger of "assimilation" by the very institutions that it ostensibly challenges. Can queer theory and politics continue to offer effective resistance to these normalizing regimes of power, and if so what tactics of deployment will allow them to retain their subversive edge? Our conference will explore the current situation by posing questions including, though certainly not limited to, the following:

How--if at all--has the development of a "queer" culture problematized the earlier "gay" and "lesbian" cultures that came before it?

To what extent do the devotees of queer or other resistant sexual styles (S&M, Drag, etc.) illustrate the precepts of academic theory by recognizng their deployment of these styles as actually formative, rather than merely expressive, of their identities?

How do notions of queer identity intersect with the discourse of political action? How does queer theory "resist" or "subvert" hegemony? And can one speak of a "queer revolution?"

Have the strategies of radical organizations like Queer Nation enabled the creation of a quepractices merely reinforced the identity categories already in place?

Has the recent popularization of the "camp" aesthetic negated its subversive power to re-signify cultural products, thereby reducing camp's resistance of the market economy to the commodified lure of "kitsch?"

Does the current trend toward sexual ambiguity in popular advertising signal the emergence of a new "queer" target audience? If so, what is the relation of queer identity to contemporary capitalism?

Has the surge of interest in "drag" performance created "queer" cabaret spaces in which variously sexed subjects can re-negotiate their own identity positions? Or do these performances simply repeat and thus replicate the common conventions of a male/female gender dichotomy?

What are the implications of genetic research for "queering" our notions of biological "sex?" Will the "encoding" of the body effected by the Human Genome Project reconfigure our definitions of gender, or further fix the criteria employed in the binary division of sex?

How will the increasing institutionalization of Queer Studies within the Academy affect its ability to challenge the dictums of power and authority?

Please send a one page single-spaced abstract by December 15, 1997 to:

Thomas Haakenson
Department of Cultural Studies & Comparative Literature
350 Folwell Hall, 9 Pleasant Street Southeast
University of Minnesota-Twin Cities
Minneapolis, MN 55455

For further Information, please send inquiries to the above address, or by e-mail to:

[redacted]

or

[redacted]

****

↑ Index

176. Douglas Barbour

Re: Turner is there still but where's Merwin?

Mon 10 Nov 1997

Thanks Joe for that summary of the problems inherent in the Turners' etc approach to science & hierarchy.

Interesting to see the huge silence that greeted Aviva's posting of:

<<The Atlantic's poetry editor reflects on the career of W. S. Merwin, whose long association with the magazine spans great distances of geography and art

by Peter Davison>>

& why was that? I found it interesting from a number of perspectives. One, of course, is the cultural economy, & Davison's neat build-up of his own editing via praise of Merwin. Another was the bland assumtions carried by a nifty metaphorical argument for Merwin's growth etc over the years. I also found intriguing the bio of Davison at the end: two books I probabaly wont be reading, but does that not simply reveal my biases as against his? Well, yes, but.

I'm called back to the query as to why I would 'choose' Creeley over Merwin, which isnt quite what I was doing, although I do admit that given the choice...

What I suspect I (& many others here) do do is 'choose' a particular open poetics that Creeley also chooses over one less so that Merwin seem much of the time to belong to or with. For example that means that I'm a big fan of Levertov too, but still not of Merwin. But I admit that I dont know Merwin's work all that well, for the reasons given earlier,that I can only read so much, have not been called back by his work to his work the way I am by, well, so many others (in Canada, we have a number of poets many on the list may not have even heard of, whose work I will continue to read with great joy: Phyllis Webb, to name just one of Merwin's generation, for example).

Anyway: what is also fascinating about that Davison article is that it does represent a particular, & perhaps quite large, 'audience,' as well as a particular politics, for which his kind of rhetoric of criticism is meaningful, carries weight. That's the fragmented world of poetry today, however small, neh?

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]

H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

drop the word when I'm having so much fun?) I agree with most of her specific analytic points, as to what M's weaknesses are. But just don't see them as ruining the work quite as much a she does..

Mark P.

On Fri, 7 Nov 1997, Douglas Barbou

r wrote:

> Generally, I'd have to side with Patrick Pritchett on this one, although I do like a lot of his translations. But I went after a lot of the early poetry, read it, & then put it away. In regard to Creeley, whose work I return to all the time, I just am not called back to the Merwin. Except for one book, published outside his usual venues, by the late lamented North Point, _Finding the Islands_, which was something of a formal move for him as well. Not 'great' but certainly of interest to this reader...
>
> ==========
> Douglas Barbour
> Department of English
> University of Alberta
> Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
> [redacted] FAX:[redacted]
> H: [redacted]
> *~~~

Gary R.

↑ Index

179. Jeff Hansen
Quirkiness
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Aviva Yogel describes a C.D. Wright lecture as "quirky but brilliant." Why the "but"? Aviva seems to be saying quirky and brilliant. Yet the but remains. The word is supposed to join contrasting elements, such as "not bagels, but doughnuts." Here, it is joining seemingly contrasting elements that are in fact not so. A synonymous phrase would be, I think, "while quirky, neverless brillant."

Funny, I don't dissassociate quirkiness from brilliance at all. I think the former is a component of the latter. I'd be startled at a brilliant lecture that was not quiky.

What do you'll think?

↑ Index

180. J. Tate
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Ho
Mon 10 Nov 1997

On Fri, 7 Nov 1997, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:

> Isn't it enough to say that poetry is a cultural product? That whatever dim primeval impulse first stimulated its rudimentary expressions that by now - several millennia later - poetry is a cultural construction and requires no further justification than that? As if it needed any in the first place.

It doesn't seem enough to say "poetry is a cultural product." It doesn't explain how children are lulled to sleep by lullabies or why a spine might tingle listening to a recording of Yeats.

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

181. Michael Magee
Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Just letting everyone know that, if you happen to be in Philly on thursday, Nathaniel Mackey will be reading at The Writers House on the Penn campus (3805 Locust Walk). As I'm guessing many of you know, Mackey is a brilliant writer of poetry, novels and literary criticism. He's also recently released of CD of poetry to musical accompaniment. The reading begins at 8. Anyone who wants more info feel free to e-mail me.

-Mike.

↑ Index

182. Karen and Trevor request for submissions
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Fourteen Hills: The SFSU Review the nationally distributed magazine from San Francisco State University will be accepting submissions for the Spring/Summer 1998 issue until February 6.

Fourteen Hills publishes poetry, fiction and drama, including creative nonfiction and cross genre work. Past contributors include: Po Bronson, CD Wright, Sherman Alexie, Amiri Baraka, Peter Gizzi, Aaron Shurin, Leslie Scalapino, Paul Hoover and Michael Palmer.

The Fall/Winter 1997 issue, available toward the end of December 1997 includes: a conversation with Dorothy Allison; poetry by Laynie Browne, Gustaf Sobin, Sianne Ngai, Sheila E. Murphy, and many others; fiction includes: Marianne Villanueva, Gordon Lish, and Laura Moriarty among others. It also features two pieces of drama by emerging playwrights Robert Barker and Daniele Nathanson.

Please send your submission with SASE to:
Fourteen Hills
Creative Writing Department
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave
San Francisco, CA 94132

↑ Index

183. Miekal And to spank your curiosity
Mon 10 Nov 1997

You are invited to encounter JOGLARS

:
cross media broadcast
:

a webspace devoted to the possibilities of online collaboration

:

2 projects served up to date

:

Literature Nation
interwriting by Miekal And & Maria Damon

:

spidertangle wordround an online hyperwriting workshop open to collaborations & interventions

...

html conjured by Miekal And point your browser at:

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/index.html

Please no crank phonecalls or arbitary aesthetics.

↑ Index

184. Brent Long
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown University, and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I have ever been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with "language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no method to the madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.

Brent

At 12:24 PM 11/10/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Just letting everyone know that, if you happen to be in Philly on >thursday, Nathaniel Mackey will be reading at The Writers House on the >Penn campus (3805 Locust Walk). As I'm guessing many of you know, Mackey >is a brilliant writer of poetry, novels and literary criticism. He's also >recently released of CD of poetry to musical accompaniment. The reading >begins at 8. Anyone who wants more info feel free to e-mail me.
>
>-Mike.
>
>

↑ Index

185. Michael Magee
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Brent's detraction aside, I still think most of you would enjoy it; others I've heard from have told me he's a wonderful reader. Though I haven't heard him read yet his work knocks me out. Those of you who feeling like taking the gamble probably know who you are. -m.

According to Brent Long:
>
> I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown University, > and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I have ever > been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with > "language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no method to the > madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.
>
> Brent
>
>
> At 12:24 PM 11/10/97 -0500, you wrote:
> >Just letting everyone know that, if you happen to be in Philly on > >thursday, Nathaniel Mackey will be reading at The Writers House on the > >Penn campus (3805 Locust Walk). As I'm guessing many of you know, Mackey > >is a brilliant writer of poetry, novels and literary criticism. He's also > >recently released of CD of poetry to musical accompaniment. The reading > >begins at 8. Anyone who wants more info feel free to e-mail me.
> >
> >-Mike.

> >
> >
>

↑ Index

186. Eric Blarnes
Re: Quirkiness
Mon 10 Nov 1997

On a rather sunny but bleak and overcast but brilliant afternoon, the irascible but gentle Jack Spandrift was resting his butt in the leather but naugahyde saddle but saddless horse but horseless carriage he called Ford Pinto just before it wouldn't start but exploded!! And Jack, flying but falling into but out of the air would have splattered but landed safely but for his stirrups which snagged but slipped but eventually snagged on a flimsy but brilliant cloud in a twister over a large but puny Butte called Montana but also called Idaho! But lucky, Jack!

A Tall but Rather Small Cowboy But Story by Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

187. Michael Magee
Re: Quirkiness
Mon 10 Nov 1997

I'd say "quirkiness" and "brilliance" go pretty much hand and hand for me, so I'm w/ Jeff. In fact, quirk is one of those great words which the OED lists as "of obscure origin," which makes it all the more quirky, as lots of Q words are, "quibble" for example, which is generally assumed to be a hybrid of "quip" and "gibe," but who knows. I spent an afternoon in the Q section of my dictionary, along with some forays into the a's and i's for more Q-associated words. The result was the following piece of writing:

> Q: A MANY FACED O
>
> inquisitiveness is acquisitiveness
> without acquisitions a > quest without questionable acquest
> a quake or quaver in the > aquiclude makes it acquit > what it''s acquired > aquiclude become an aquifer
> of inferences querying inquests
> and inquisitions qualifying > a quote''s quality in a quota of queered quirks

acquiring inquietude
acquisitive become a quiz
it if to acquiesce unquietly
to questioning acquaintances
getting acquainted with how a fella like Attilla
could kill Aquileia
never quell quill quibble
questions qua actions
aqui aqui aqui

-Mike.

According to Jeff Hansen: >
> Aviva Yogel describes a C.D. Wright lecture as "quirky but brilliant."
> Why the "but"? Aviva seems to be saying quirky and brilliant. Yet the > but remains. The word is supposed to join contrasting elements, such as
> "not bagels, but doughnuts." Here, it is joining seemingly contrasting > elements that are in fact not so. A synonymous phrase would be, I > think, "while quirky, neverless brillant."
>
> Funny, I don't dissassociate quirkiness from brilliance at all. I > think the former is a component of the latter. I'd be startled at a > brilliant lecture that was not quiky.
>
> What do you'll think?
>

↑ Index

188. Aviva Vogel
Re: Quirkiness
Mon 10 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-10 14:10:27 EST, you write:

<< Aviva Vogel describes a C.D. Wright lecture as "quirky but brilliant." Why the "but"? Aviva seems to be saying quirky and brilliant. Yet the but remains. The word is supposed to join contrasting elements, such as "not bagels, but doughnuts." Here, it is joining seemingly contrasting elements that are in fact not so. A synonymous phrase would be, I think, "while quirky, neverless brillant."

 Funny, I don't dissassociate quirkiness from brilliance at all. >>

I suppose the "but" occurred because I was initially disappointed or frustrated with a lecture that was delivered with some of the same associative leaps and syntactical experiments (on a very mild scale, relatively speaking) that C.D. tends to use with her poetry. Having at first hoped for a more prosaically-expressed lecture, as I'm used to, I felt myself having trouble engaging fully...until about midway through, I'd become accustomed to her delivery, and could hear with more flexible ears. Suddenly, I was engaged on several levels; the usual "listening to a good lecture" level which is quite analytical, and the unusual "listening to a poem" level which is more intuitive. The first kind of listening is generally a more linear experience, while the second kind is generally a more global experience. Part of C.D.'s brilliance, I have concluded, comes from her ability to offer a lecture that stimulated and occupied both kinds of listening processes.

--Aviva

↑ Index

189. Keith Tuma
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

On Mon, 10 Nov 1997 13:21:08 -0500 you said:

> I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown University, and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I have ever been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with "language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no method to the madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.
>
> Brent

I know that "language" poetry or "language poetry" or language poe"try" covers just about everything from Hans Jonas to Rin Tin-Tin these days, but you'll have to explain to me how it covers these gnostic riffs from Nate Mackey's "Songs of the Andoumboulou: 12":

Weathered raft I saw myself
adrift on.

Battered wood I dreamt I drummed on, driven.

Scissored rose, newly braided light, slack hoped-for rope
groped at, unraveled.

Braided star
we no longer saw but remembered,

threads overlapping the rim
of a sunken world, rocks we no longer saw by extinguished, Namoratunga's long-tethered light.

That's the opening anyway--apologies for lineation inexactitude resulting from the program.

The point is that you'll read all day and all night in the "lan"guage poets I know, from Andrews to Tin-Tin, without finding anything much looking like this.

"Decay thrusts the blade" but only frustration delurks,
Keith

↑ Index

190. Steve Evans
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Just for the record, Nate Mackey read solo (no wife) at Brown on 16th October 1997, doing a set entirely drawn from the Song of the Andoumboulou cycle (no particular affiliation with "language" poetry). Of the fifty or more people there, few that I spoke with shared Brent's opinion. The Song chronicles the wanderings of a spectral collective, a sort of rough sketch for a possible humanity, through mishaps sexual, musical, and unusual. It'd be poetry in most books.

Come to think of it, Brent probably means to point the polemical finger at P. Inman, who on 8 October read his work, often rhythmed out of sub-lexical morphemes, with Tina Darragh. While I would heartily dispute Brent's dismissive take on the event, the response seems more likely directed there than at Mackey.

Steve Evans

Brent Long writes:
>I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown University,
>and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I have ever >been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with >"language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no method to the >madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.

↑ Index

191. Michael Magee
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Thanks, Steve, for the clarification. Hope to see some of you at the event.
-Mike.

According to Steve Evans:
>
> Just for the record, Nate Mackey read solo (no wife) at Brown on 16th
> October 1997, doing a set entirely drawn from the Song of the > Andoumboulou cycle (no particular affiliation with "language" poetry). Of > the fifty or more people there, few that I spoke with shared Brent's > opinion. The Song chronicles the wanderings of a spectral collective, a > sort of rough sketch for a possible humanity, through mishaps sexual, > musical, and unusual. It'd be poetry in most books.
>
> Come to think of it, Brent probably means to point the polemical finger at > P. Inman, who on 8 October read his work, often rhythmed out of sub-lexical > morphemes, with Tina Darragh. While I would heartily dispute Brent's > dismissive take on the event, the response seems more likely directed there > than at Mackey.
>
> Steve Evans
>
> Brent Long writes:
> >I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown > University,
> >and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I > have ever
> >been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with > >"language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no > method to the > >madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.
>

↑ Index

192. r.drake
Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno
Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

fans of _A Humument_ might find this ov interest...

Date: Mon, 10 Nov 1997 12:53:54 -0600
From: Kevin Ray <[redacted]> Subject: Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno
To: [redacted]

Washington University's Department of Special Collections presents "Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno." This exhibition will be on view from 3 November 1997 through 5 January 1998 in Olin Library. This exhibition is part of Washington University's conference "The Dual Muse: The Writer as Artist, The Artist as Writer," 7-9 November, 1997.

In the late 1970s, Tom Phillips began a project to both illustrate and translate Dante's _Inferno_. If translation is always a doubled process, shifting and transforming the language into which a work is translated, Phillips's doubled transit would be of a far greater complexity. It was to be, truly, a dual translation, from Dante's Italian into contemporary English, but also from one language of the page, the chiefly verbal, into another, the verbal-visual combined glyph of the illustrated book.

"Una Selva Oscura" will show the process of the Phillips _Inferno_, from the surviving proofs of the first, fire-destroyed version, through the notebooks and manuscripts in which Phillips works out not only text and illustrations but also the physical structure and arrangement of the book itself, to the final edition, produced at Phillips's own Talfourd Press.

Drawing on the magnificent resources of the Ruth and Marvin Sackner Archive of Concrete and Visual Poetry, the exhibition concludes with a single page, the spectral, shroudlike image of ink on the carbon-paper backing Phillips used in typing out his translation. Though no word is clear or legible, the whole of it faintly suggestive of a face, like Veronica's napkin or the ghost images revealed in x-rays, this page, a summation, bears the impression of every word of Dante's text, as the word itself, repeating and echoing, becomes an image, an icon.

Special Collections has produced a 26-page, full-color exhibition catalog for this exhibit, available for $10.00. To order a catalog, or for more information, contact:
Special Collections -- email: [redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

193. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

last I saw Mackey and his wife, she was working on a promising book about Genet -- As far as I know, they've never "read" together, though I've seen them reading at the same time --

On the other hand, it would be pretty hard to mistake Pete Inman and Tina Darragh for Nataniel & Pascal Mackey -- so . . . what DID happen at the reading????????

↑ Index

194. Laura Moriarty
French poets
Mon 10 Nov 1997

When Danielle Collobert was mentioned a few days ago I asked Norma Cole to email me the details of her translation of Collobert. The book is called It Then and was published by O Books in 1989.

http://www.OBooks.com/

Another source of contemporary French writing, including more Collobert, (I can't remember whether this was already posted) is Violence of the White Page/Contemporary French Writing edited by Stacey Doris, Emmanuel Hocquard and Phillip Foss and published by Foss as an issue of Tyuonyi.

Norma also provided the following info about the upcoming translation issue of Raddle Moon about which Susan Clark has also posted:

Raddle Moon 16: TWENTY-TWO NEW (to North America) FRENCH WRITERS!!!! Probably all born after 1950, some even after 1960. Or younger!!!! Edited by Norma Cole & Stacy Doris, with translations by 22 American writers, this new issue should be out sometime in the next week or two. Check out RM website.

http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/publicat/raddle/rm.htm

To celebrate the new issue:
New York reading 3 p.m. Saturday November 22 at the Center for Independent Art, 145 6th Ave. (bet. Spring & Broome) NYC.
San Francisco reading 7:30 p.m. Thursday December 11 at Canessa Park Gallery, 708 Montgomery St. (at Columbus).

Distributors:-- CANADA: The Canadian Magazine Publishers Assn., 2 Stewart St., Toronto Ontario M5A 1H6 and by Raddle Moon, #518-350 East 2nd

Avenue, Vancouver B.C. V5T 4R8 USA: SMALL PRESS DISTRIBUTION, 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley CA 94710-1403 [redacted] phone [redacted]; fax [redacted]; outside Bay Area phone [redacted] UK: Paul Green, Spectacular Diseases, 83b London Road, Peterborough, Cambs. AUSTRALIA: Collected Works Bookshop, 1st Floor, 238 Flinders Lane, Melbourne 3000, Victoria

↑ Index

195. Brent Long

Re: Mackey reading at Penn

Mon 10 Nov 1997

I stand corrected...it was indeed P. Inman that I was thinking of...my apologies.

Brent

At 03:24 PM 11/10/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Just for the record, Nate Mackey read solo (no wife) at Brown on 16th
>October 1997, doing a set entirely drawn from the Song of the >Andoumboulou cycle (no particular affiliation with "language" poetry). Of >the fifty or more people there, few that I spoke with shared Brent's >opinion. The Song chronicles the wanderings of a spectral collective, a >sort of rough sketch for a possible humanity, through mishaps sexual, >musical, and unusual. It'd be poetry in most books.
>
>Come to think of it, Brent probably means to point the polemical finger at >P. Inman, who on 8 October read his work, often rhythmed out of sub-lexical >morphemes, with Tina Darragh. While I would heartily dispute Brent's >dismissive take on the event, the response seems more likely directed there >than at Mackey.
>
>Steve Evans
>
>Brent Long writes:
> >I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown >University,
> >and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I >have ever
> >been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with > >"language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no
>method to the > >madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.
>
>

↑ Index

196. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy

Re: Other poetry discussions

Mon 10 Nov 1997

At 13:30 05/11/97 -0500, you wrote:
 I saw a posting today announcing Rosmarie Waldrop's upcoming reading >tonight, but she and her work are never discussed here, either, and that is >a shame. She and her husband are both amazing poets.
>
>Brent
>
Couldn't agree more. I've just finished reading Keith Waldrop's _The Silhouette of the Bridge_ a wonderfully rich exploration/celebration of memory, its products and processes. Some quotes:

A singer's death is more affecting than that of a writer, since a poem or a story stands at more of a distance from the body that has produced it.

The theme of the body is returned to later in a section featuring Keith's dentist.
e.g.

"Poetry," he once murmured, his hand in my mouth, "can you live off of poetry? I mean now," he goes on, since I can't answer, "everybody has teeth."

The dental meditations are interspersed with pieces dealing with desert hermits and Sister Josefa, a victim-saint who willingly went to hell taking on the sins of others. Satan didn't get much change out of her however because of her invincible innocence.

Think how Satan must have scrutinized every fiber, every synapse, for an entrance - eternal he may be, but his space is limited - and he could not find one.

One could go on an on. Wonderful characters sketched, ideas great and small held up and looked at, the unique minutiae, vast systems, a real sense of a rich and nimble mind. A mind too that is not so particularly impressed with itself thus a style that is endlessly engaging and oh just read. Do.

Randolph Healy.

↑ Index

197. Maria Damon

Re: Quirkiness

Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

i used to think quirky and brilliant went together, but then i got an academic job where i have met many people who are very smart but have never had an original thought in their lives. it threw me for a loop initially, but now i see it more and more. i used to just not consider these people brilliant or even smart, but maybe my standards have relaxed, faute de mieux.

At 2:17 PM -0500 11/10/97, Michael Magee wrote:
>I'd say "quirkiness" and "brilliance" go pretty much hand and hand for me, >so I'm w/ Jeff. In fact, quirk is one of those great words which the OED >lists as "of obscure origin," which makes it all the more quirky, as lots >of Q words are, "quibble" for example, which is generally assumed to be a >hybrid of "quip" and "gibe," but who knows. I spent an afternoon in the Q >section of my dictionary, along with some forays into the a's and i's for >more Q-associated words. The result was the following piece of writing:
>
>
> Q: A MANY FACED O
>
> inquisitiveness is acquisitiveness
> without acquisitions a
> quest without questionable acquest
> a quake or quaver in the > aquiclude makes it acquit
> what it'ís acquired > aquiclude become an aquifer
> of inferences querying inquests
> and inquisitions qualifying > a quote'ís quality in a > quota of queered quirks
> acquiring inquietude
> acquisitive become a quiz
> it if to acquiesce unquietly
> to questioning acquaintances
> getting acquainted
> with how a fella like Attilla
> could kill Aquileia
> never quell quill quibble
> questions qua actions
> aqui aqui aqui

>
>
>-Mike.
>
>
>According to Jeff Hansen: >
>> Aviva Yogel describes a C.D. Wright lecture as "quirky but brilliant."
>> Why the "but"? Aviva seems to be saying quirky and brilliant. Yet the >> but remains. The word is supposed to join contrasting elements, such as
>> "not bagels, but doughnuts." Here, it is joining seemingly contrasting >> elements that are in fact not so. A synonymous phrase would be, I >> think, "while quirky, neverless brillant."
>>
>> Funny, I don't dissassociate quirkiness from brilliance at all. I >> think the former is a component of the latter. I'd be startled at a >> brilliant lecture that was not quiky.
>>
>> What do you'll think?
>>

↑ Index

198. Maria Damon

Re: Mackey reading at Penn

Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

just a mackey side-note: i taught his work to my "experimental poetry" class for the first time last week. their response: "why is this experimental? this seems just like --poetry." it was a compliment, or their way of saying that content seemed really important.

At 3:24 PM -0500 11/10/97, Steve Evans wrote:
>Just for the record, Nate Mackey read solo (no wife) at Brown on 16th
>October 1997, doing a set entirely drawn from the Song of the >Andoumboulou cycle (no particular affiliation with "language" poetry). Of >the fifty or more people there, few that I spoke with shared Brent's >opinion. The Song chronicles the wanderings of a spectral collective, a >sort of rough sketch for a possible humanity, through mishaps sexual, >musical, and unusual. It'd be poetry in most books.
>
>Come to think of it, Brent probably means to point the polemical finger at >P. Inman, who on 8 October read his work, often rhythmed out of sub-lexical >morphemes, with Tina Darragh. While I would heartily dispute Brent's >dismissive take on the event, the response seems more likely directed there

>than at Mackey.
>
>Steve Evans
>
>Brent Long writes:
> >I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown >University,
> >and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I >have ever
> >been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with > >"language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no
>method to the > >madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.

↑ Index

199. Maria Damon
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Mon 10 Nov 1997

---

ps nate's wife is a wonderful jean genet scholar so i'd be interested to know what she read.

At 3:22 PM -0500 11/10/97, Keith Tuma wrote:
>On Mon, 10 Nov 1997 13:21:08 -0500 you said:
>
>>> I just saw a reading that Mackey gave with his wife at Brown University,
>>> and I have to say that it was one of the most boring readings I have ever >>> been to. Of course, maybe that is because I have a hard time with >>> "language" poetry, but he seemed exceptionally vague, with no method to
the >>> madness at all...sorry, but that just ain't poetry in my book.
>
> > Brent
>
>I know that "language" poetry or "language poetry" or language poe"try" covers
>just about everything from Hans Jonas to Rin Tin-Tin these days, but you'll >have to explain to me how it covers these gnostic riffs from Nate Mackey's >"Songs of the Andoumboulou: 12":
>
> Weathered raft I saw myself
> adrift on.
>

> Battered wood I dreamt I
> drummed on, driven.
>
>Scissored rose, newly braided
> light, slack hoped-for rope
> groped at, unraveled.
>
> Braided star
> we no longer saw but remembered,
> threads overlapping the rim
> of a sunken world, rocks we
> no longer saw by extinguished, > Namoratunga's long-tethered > light.
>
>That's the opening anyway--apologies for lineation inexactitude resulting from >the program.
>
>The point is that you'll read all day and all night in the "lan"guage poets
>I know, from Andrews to Tin-Tin, without finding anything much looking like >this.
>
>"Decay thrusts the blade" but only frustration delurks, >Keith

↑ Index

200. Carl Lynden Peters
d.a. levy
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Dear Poets,

does anyone know of any critical work out there on _d.a. levy_?
i wld appreciate any info. and thanx in advance.
please call me back door if u wish.

carl

↑ Index

201. David R. Israel
(Fwd) Re: Talk by Spivak
Mon 10 Nov 1997

(Has this been reported here already?) -- just in case not,

> Gayathri Spivak is to give a lecture "Theory - Remains"
> in Manhattan (at the Drawing Center - Wooster St.)
> When-and-where: Friday, Nov 21, 7 pm. $10.
> The Drawing Center is located at 35 Wooster, betn Broome and Grand.

d.i.

↑ Index

202. Susan Clark
Re: French poets
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Unfortunately, the web site that Laura posted

http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/publicat/raddle/rm.htm

which appears on the masthead of our recent issue is no longer functional as its provider [wimsey.com] is defunct. We are re-building it and getting a new ISP. It should be ready in a couple of weeks and will have ordering information and full tables of contents for past and forthcoming issues and -- probably later -- a small portfolio of work from recent and forthcoming issues. I'll post to the list as soon as it's up.

Everything else Laura says is true!

Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

203. David R. Israel
Re: Honig online
Mon 10 Nov 1997

Henry Gould wrote,

> For people interested in Edwin Honig's poetry, a large portion of his collected poems, titled TIME & AGAIN - POEMS 1940 - 1995, is now online at the Contemporary American Poetry Archive. The site is still under construction . . .
>
> Honig has been struggling to find a publisher for this massive collection, but in the meantime Wendy Battin, Charles Hartman, & their helpers at CAPA are providing a very heartening service. CAPA address:
> http://capa.conncoll.edu.

I looked at that address and searched around varous pages, but found nor hide nor hair of Honig. (nor of a contemp. po archive)

Can you give a more particular URL?

d.i.

↑ Index

204. David R. Israel
Re: Merwin
Tue 11 Nov 1997

Mark P., --

as one much drawn to Mewin & having considerable respect for Marjorie Perloff's tremendous critical chops (and sharing interest in much that she celebrates), your mention of an essay (scathing or otherwise) by her re: him, makes me curious. Do you happen to know where that's located?

The turns you mention in Merwin's work seem right, but would I'd add that he has taken further turns After the 70s material. The work in Travels exemplifies one such, and what's found in The Vixen seems a further development, in a rather different stride from anything before -- in which the "concerns" of the 60s work is layered within a new mode of formalism quite different from his original (50s) formalism, but maybe echoing it (very distantly, or somehow) -- with a few exceptions, where formalism (in old sense) is explicit, as in the remarkable poem "Search Party" (based on Villon) . . .

a few old poems, such as "The Way to the River" and one called (if memory serves) "A Hymn to the Eyes" (both prob. from the Carrier of Ladders / Drunk in the Furnace period more or less) -- or one entitled "Route with No Number", are among those that occasioned repeated readings (in recent few years). My involvement with the evocations of Finding the Islands was partly related to painting, as some of the Jungianisms therein (and the way in which a melding of ghazal with haiku seemed to occur) found place in my colored notebooks; -- anyone interested to have some sense of where WSM is at these latter days could do worse than to peruse the title poem of The Vixen -- a summary poem, seems . . .

well, I know I'm in a minority here, n'est pa? I started reading Merwin when I started reading Scalapino & Palmer (& thence Creeley & Ashbery & whatnot, circa some mere decade & half ago -- and carry all these motley strands along still . . . , w/ delight) -- maugre the hubub of schools, I loves 'em

d.i.

↑ Index

205. George Bowering
Re: Other poetry discussions
Tue 11 Nov 1997

You might also mention Ted Berrigan and his widow. Both excellent poets. Not to mention Creeley and his ex-wife. I thought that Browning was a better poet than his wife, but Shelley wasnt as good a novelist as HIS wife.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

206. Aviva Vogel
Merwin's Ghazal & Haiku Thing
Tue 11 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-11 01:23:06 EST, you write:

<< melding of ghazal with haiku >>

I had sensed this kind of syncretism in Merwin's work (what little I've read of it). Thanks for pointing it out. I hadn't put words to it. --Aviva

↑ Index

207. mark weiss
Re: Other poetry discussions
Tue 11 Nov 1997

Nor as good a swimmer.

At 10:41 PM 11/10/97 -0700, you wrote:
>You might also mention Ted Berrigan and his widow. Both excellent poets.
>Not to mention Creeley and his ex-wife. I thought that Browning was a >better poet than his wife, but Shelley wasnt as good a novelist as HIS wife.
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,

>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

208. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: 2 fwded announcements
Tue 11 Nov 1997

At 3:31 PM 11/11/97, Rachel Loden wrote:
>> In addition, 100 copies of _Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics_ >> are sent to the most distinguished professors, poets, scholars, and >> university departments and libraries in the United States and Canada.
>
>God knows it's not like me to problematize, nor (on a good day) would I >even dream of destabilizing anyone's configuration of subjectivity. But >this list of the "hundred most distinguished" is intriguing. Are >nominations debated by tenured revolutionary committee?
>
>Rachel, waiting by the mailbox

geez, i missed that part of the msg. you'll have to ask mark nowak, at [redacted] for a clarification. that'll learn me to forward stuff i haven't read through: i have no idea what that means. markie?

↑ Index

209. henry g
Re: Honig online
Tue 11 Nov 1997

On Tue, 11 Nov 1997 00:37:34 -0400 David R. Israel said:
>Henry Gould wrote,
>
>> For people interested in Edwin Honig's poetry, a large portion of >> his collected poems, titled TIME & AGAIN - POEMS 1940 - 1995, is now >> online at the Contemporary American Poetry Archive. The site is >> still under construction . . .
>
>> Honig has been struggling to find a publisher for this massive >> collection, but in the meantime Wendy Battin, Charles Hartman, & >> their helpers at CAPA are providing a very heartening service. CAPA >> address:

>> http://capa.conncoll.edu.
>
>I looked at that address and searched around varous pages, but found >nor hide nor hair of Honig. (nor of a contemp. po archive)
>
>Can you give a more particular URL?

Sorry! Here's the correct url : http://capa.conncoll.edu/

I left off the final slash. - HG

↑ Index

210. robert drake
Re: d.a. levy
Tue 11 Nov 1997

---

carl--

i'm current at work on the levy pages fr the Burning Press website; a number of sites online have sum work (best is at karl young's Light & Dust site...) will tag on what i have in process to this message.

Ingrid Swanberg's _zen concrete & etc._ is th easily available source, the texts are flawed by editing. the ghost press anthology _ukanhavyrfuckincitybak_ is great (usually cataloged by puritan librarians as "d.a. levy, a tribute to the man, an anthology of his poetry" or somesuch), most ov the text ok'd by levy... th druid books _collected poems_ has no criticism & plenty of errors but contains some work thats hard to get elsewhere. jw curry has a onepage visual essay, in his book frm runaway spoon, that totally changed my percept of levy's work--check w/ grumman fr th title...

best publicly available archive is at kent state, i think... why dont you stop by some time & we'll make a run down there together? i gotta do some checking m'self...

more later
lbd

> Dear Poets,
>
> does anyone know of any critical work out there on _d.a. levy_?
> i wld appreciate any info. and thanx in advance.
> please call me back door if u wish.

> carl

<HTML><HEAD> <TITLE>da levy</TITLE> </HEAD> <BODY BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF">

<CENTER><TABLE BORDER=0 CELLSPACING=2 CELLPADDING=10> <TR ALIGN=Center>
<TD><IMG SRC="levy.gif" WIDTH="138" HEIGHT="190"></TD>
<TD><H1>   da levy   </H1></TD>
<TD><IMG SRC="levy1.jpg" WIDTH="159" HEIGHT="235"></TD>
</TR>
</TABLE></CENTER> <P> <HR> <P> da levy (1944-1968)
<UL>

<LI>Bio notes...
<LI>Bibliography of Renegade Press/7 Flowers/etc. publications
<LI>Burning Press Levy texts
<UL>

<LI><A HREF="levy_charm.html">Tombstone as a Lonely Charm</A> <LI><A HREF="levy_suburb1.html">Suburban Monastery Death Poem</A>

</UL> <LI>Links:
<UL>

<LI>Kurt Nimmo/Download Levy--<A HREF="http://ic.net/~knimmo/png.htm">praps 1-7</A>

<LI>Karl Young's<A HREF="http://www.thing.net/~grist/PAGE1.htm">Light&Dust</A> site:
<UL>
<LI><A HREF="http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/dalm00.htm">miniatures</A> <LI><A HREF="http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/dalevy/dal-ts00.htm">The Tibetan Stroboscope</A>
</UL>
<LI><A HREF="http://www.csuohio.edu/tagar/levy.htm">"New Year"</A>, a

poem
courtesy of Cleveland State University's Jewish student organization.

<LI>A short <A HREF="http://www.charm.net/~brooklyn/People/DALevy.html">biographic sketch</A> by W. Luther Jett, at the <A HREF="http://www.charm.net/~brooklyn/LitKicks.html">Literary Kicks</A> Beat site.

</UL>
</UL>
<CENTER><IMG SRC="levy2.jpg" WIDTH="211" HEIGHT="302"></CENTER> </BODY>
</HTML>

↑ Index

211. Pierre Joris
Re: d.a. levy
Tue 11 Nov 1997

There is some writing by Eric Mottram on d.a. levy -- but can't for the life of me remember off hand where that was published -- & no time to look right now, though if I come across it I'll post -- Pierre

> Dear Poets,
>
> does anyone know of any critical work out there on _d.a. levy_?
> i wld appreciate any info. and thanx in advance.
> please call me back door if u wish.
>
> carl

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"I think there is a world market for about five computers.'

-Thomas J. Watson
Chairman of the Board-IBM, 1943
==========

↑ Index

212. Tom Orange
French poets
Tue 11 Nov 1997

---

susan clark writes in reference to raddle moon and its website:

<<We are re-building it and getting a new ISP. It should be ready in a couple of weeks and will have ordering information and full tables of contents for past and forthcoming issues and -- probably later -- a small portfolio of work from recent and forthcoming issues. I'll post to the list as soon as it's up.>> please keep us posted susan.

to laura moriarity: any suggestions on how to locate tyuonyi -- spd?

and thanks to all those who offered suggestions re contemp frenchpo.

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

213. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Merwin
Tue 11 Nov 1997

David,

That was a really interesting and useful post. I'm quite tickled by your bracketting Palmer, Scalapino, Creeley and Ashbery together with Merwin. It certainly does help to shake up the seige-mentality sense of "schools" we all fall into. Your mention of time-frame is very important, I think. When one encounters a poet, and in what time-relation to encountering various other poets, always ends up having a lot to do with how they think about them. I in contrast encountered Merwin first around 1969 or 1970. At that time (and for some years thereafter) I thought of Duncan and Olson as the basis for what should be done in U.S. poetry, but saw no one who seemed to agree with me (I was about 15, mind you, and there was lots I didn't know about going on..But for that moment in time I wasn't that far off!!) So I turned to exploring work from other national and linguistic cultures, as sustenance, and that meant surrealist-derived, image-based work, very often. So that's the frame in which Merwin always recurs in my memory. But as I say, don't much like his stuff after 1970, which seems to me to lack urgency, and to be by virtually a different poet, despite the superficial similarity of technique.

Anyway discussions like this are useful because we all give lip service to an open field of different poetries, but we still tend to have a ghettoized approach, intuitively, to thinking about conemporary work. So I think we owe (Brent, I think it was) who started the thread, some thanks. (Also I agree with him that we ought to have more discussions of recent work; ones that like this one go a bit beyond expressions of preference.)

As for Perloff's essay. I don't own the book, and I recently returned all of her books to the library (had far too many things checked out!) but the poet with whom I'm discussing it says that the essay occurs in Poetic License : essays on modernist and postmodernist lyric.

Regards,
Mark

↑ Index

214. Brian McHale
Re: Una Selva Oscura: Tom Phillips's Inferno
Tue 11 Nov 1997

More info for Tom Phillips aficionados: The videos he made with Peter Greenaway of the first VIII cantos of"Inferno" for British Channel Four (before the money dried up) are now available in the States. I saw them the other night, & they' re highly recommended. Phillips himself is featured, delivering wry commen- tary. The visuals are striking of course: evidently his input in the collabora- tion had a lot to do with the shifts in Greenaway's style that you can see in "Prospero's Books" & "The Pillow Book."

Brian

↑ Index

215. Mark Prejsnar
Puritan librarians NOT
Tue 11 Nov 1997

On Tue, 11 Nov 1997, robert drake wrote:

> source, the texts are flawed by editing. the ghost press anthology _ukanhavyrfuckincitybak_ is great (usually cataloged by puritan librarians as "d.a. levy, a tribute to the man, an anthology of his poetry" or somesuch), most ov the text ok'd by levy... th more later

> lbd

Okay foks....Here is your friendly librarian poet, with a few defensive quibbles, by way of reply to lbd, aka Robert Drake.

These days things ain't as interesting and loose and goosey here in the library world as once upon a time. You can find the cataloging used by most libraries in shared databases like OCLC (and the one most widely used IS, in fact, OCLC). Librarians don't do as much original cataloging as in the past. So you can find what is "usually" done by librarians in cataloging a given title, by checking OCLC. There are two records there for the book. Both very happily include the world fuck, and the compound word it's embedded in, in several fields of the record. Searchable fields. What lbd was thrown by is a simple cataloging rule, one that's fairly reasonable, but which derives from mainstream trade publishing, and not the more varied kind of formats often used in complexly-designed small-press poetry books and chapbooks. The rule is, that the main title (245 field in the MARC format) is what appears on the title page. According to all the records,D.A. Levy : a tribute to the man, etc. appears on the title page. The long compound word with fuck in it appears on the cover, and all cataloging practice for a very long time has considered that the cover title...But it is given in the records, quite clearly. Honestly, what lbd noticed has nothing to do with the four-letter word...Go look in OCLC and you'll find dozens of books with that word in the title. Nothin' to do with puritans. (Anyway, as a huge fan of Christopher Hill and the radicals who made the English Revolution and chopped off the king's head, I resent the comment on behalf of BOTH librarians AND puritans!!)

Huffily in Atlanta
Mark P.

↑ Index

216. David Zauhar
Re: d.a. levy
Tue 11 Nov 1997

Carl:

I don't know if it's been mentioned yet, but Hugh Fox has some early preliminary stuff on Levy that, if memory serves, isn't bad, in a book called something like _The Living Underground_. From the early 70s, I think. Also, I attended an academic conference this past weekend at which a graduate student presented a paper on levy. There was more Lyotard and co. than d.a. levy in it, but if you're interested, contact me backchannel and I'll give you her name and address so you can write for the paper.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"WHEREVER A BOOK CLOSES A WRITING BEGINS"
--Steve McCaffery.
> >
> > >Dear Poets,
> > >
> > >does anyone know of any critical work out there on _d.a. levy_?
> > >i wld appreciate any info. and thanx in advance.
> > >please call me back door if u wish.
> > >
> > >carl
> >
>
>
> --
> ==========
> pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
> tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
> http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
> ---
> "I think there is a world market for about five computers.'
>
> -Thomas J. Watson
> Chairman of the Board-IBM, 1943
> ==========
>

↑ Index

217. henry gould
quote for the day
Tue 11 Nov 1997

"The suggestion that the artist's perception of the world is more complex and intricate than that of the audience (NOT TO MENTION THAT OF HIS CREATIVE FOREBEARS) [note: "bears" - ed.] is ultimately undemocratic and unconvincing.. . The proposition that the artist feels, comprehends and expresses something unattainable by the ordinary person is no more convincing than the suggestion that the artist's physical pain, hunger, and sexual satisfaction are more intense than those of a commoner. [He's been reading his elizabethans - ed.] True art is always democratic precisely because there is no denominator more common, whether in society or history, than the sense that reality is imperfect and that a better alternative should be sought." - Joseph Brodsky, Poet Laureate of the US [ret.], veteran of soviet politics, Everybody's Favorite Reactionary, and the Farther from his Country [p.s. happy Veteran's Day]

This little paragraph, beautifully round and perfect, should convince every listreader of the particular glory of Russian vodka-conversation culture and its superiority to every other discourse. For me this paragraph is only equalled by the sentence in Brodsky's essay "Flight from Byzantium" in which he says [to paraphrase] "Constantine was, in a sense, the first Crusader." [ed. note: historians generally agree it was the Crusades that finally destroyed the Byzantine empire]. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

218. Rachel Loden

Re: 2 fwded announcements

Tue 11 Nov 1997

> In addition, 100 copies of _Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics_
> are sent to the most distinguished professors, poets, scholars, and > university departments and libraries in the United States and Canada.

God knows it's not like me to problematize, nor (on a good day) would I even dream of destabilizing anyone's configuration of subjectivity. But this list of the "hundred most distinguished" is intriguing. Are nominations debated by tenured revolutionary committee?

Rachel, waiting by the mailbox

↑ Index

219. Eric Blarnes

Re: 2 fwded announcements

Tue 11 Nov 1997

On Tue, 11 Nov 1997 15:31:11 -0800 Rachel Loden said:
>> In addition, 100 copies of _Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics_
>> are sent to the most distinguished professors, poets, scholars, and >> university departments and libraries in the United States and Canada.
>
>God knows it's not like me to problematize, nor (on a good day) would I >even dream of destabilizing anyone's configuration of subjectivity. But >this list of the "hundred most distinguished" is intriguing. Are >nominations debated by tenured revolutionary committee?
>
>Rachel, waiting by the mailbox

Rachel, for a complete list of the 100 Most Distinguished online (you ARE on it!) proceed without delay to: http://www.Creme.de.la.Creme.edu, a website maintained by the Societe des Plus Puissants et Distingues Professeurs du Monde Entiere et Europeene Declasses et Decrivees et Decouvertes par le Table Ronde des Chapeaux de Neuf-Chateaux-Chapelles-Blancs Avec Buerre Moutarde et Beaucoup de Creme, Inc. I used to belong but excuse-my-french les jeux sont faits and they like full-bearded tenured and so forth. - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

220. Hank Lazer

Re: Heath 3, help?!

Tue 11 Nov 1997

I've just received a copy of the new (1998) 3rd edition, Volume 2, of the Heath Anthology of American Literature, Paul Lauter, General Editor. I served as a consultant, reviewed the 2nd edition, and suggested a number revisions in the modern and contemporary poetry selections. As might be expected, most of my suggestions were not accepted. Many of my arguments appear in _Opposing Poetries_ where I take the Heath to task for a narrow aesthetic range. For this 3rd edition, I suggested many changes, including a CD-ROM or an audiotape selection, an expanded range of selections by Baraka and Lorde, inclusion of a range of oral poetries including Rothenberg's work (particularly the Navajo Horse Songs) and Jack Foley's work, AND some attention to a range of Language writings.

What's weird is that in the Preface to the 3rd edition, I find myself thanked for my suggestions as a reviewer. And then:

"Though we considered these commentaries [those of a number of reviewers] very carefully, we were not always able to follow the advice of our reviewers. For example, Hank Lazer argued eloquently for a selection of the "Language Poets," but we were not persuaded that they would be taught by most users of the anthology. We could be wrong, and we would certainly like to hear from others on that subject, among others." (xlvii)

Well, there are some noteworthy and pleasing additions to the 3rd edition of the Heath. For example, there is now a new section, "Louis Zukofsky, Charles Reznikoff, and Objectivist Poetry." Though the blurb in the latest Heath Newsletter makes this claim: "The offerings of language poets has been enriched by a new section, 'Louis Zukofsky, Charles Reznikoff, and Objectivist Poetry." There is also a new selection from Theresa Hak Kyung Cha's _DICTEE_ and selections from Gloria Anzaldua's Borderlands/La Frontera.

I would encourage Poetics persons who wish to dispute the decision to exclude the "Language Poets" to write to any or all of the following:

Paul Lauter
Department of English
Trinity College
300 Summmit St.
Hartford, CT 06106-3100

Houghton Mifflin Company College Division
222 Berkeley Street
Boston, MA 02116

Heath also operates a discussion group on American Literature at

[redacted]
with the message subscribe T-AMLIT your name

I hate to see the range of my recommendations reduced to "Language Poetry," but that does make for an interesting flashpoint in the institutionalization of contemporary poetry. I realize that for many of you, the entire issue of anthologies is of little interest. I also would point out that I have often taught from the Heath anthology, and I consider Paul Lauter a friend, though a friend with whom I have some substantial disagreements. I think that the Heath has been an important American Literature anthology, particularly the first edition. But the situation for poetry, particularly 20th century poetry in the Heath, pisses me off. Or at least that's a response after a quick glance at the "new" Heath.... Thought various ones of you might be interested.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

221. Markus Foutu
Re: Mackey reading at Penn
Wed 12 Nov 1997

---

that you would think of Mackeys poetry as ""Language""poetry tells us everything we might need know about the grounding of your opinion. what are they teaching you all at brown?

markus

↑ Index

222. Layne Russell
Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?
Wed 12 Nov 1997

> Poetry Flash (out of Berkeley) publishes a newsletter bi-monthly with reading and events around the entire Bay Area.....I don't have the address right off, but I think it's in Poets Market
>
> Bob

Poetry Flash
1450 Fourth Street #4
Berkeley, CA 94710

Subscription $16 one year, bimonthly

PACKED with poetry events info for Bay Area and other parts
Also poet interviews and articles
44 pages/newsprint

Layne

http://www.sonic.net/layne
A Quiet Place

↑ Index

223. Mark Wallace
poetry reading series in San Francisco?
Wed 12 Nov 1997

Could someone backchannel me information about addresses, locations, and times for poetry reading series in S.F. with a "modernist and postmodernist" bent. I have a friend who just moved out there from D.C. and is still looking for information on how to find readings.

Thanks.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

224. Douglas Barbour
Re: Perloff on Merwin
Wed 12 Nov 1997

Perloff's Merwin essay in is _Poetic License_ (Northwestern 1990). A fine book all the way through, natch.

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

226. Safdie Joseph
Re: Puritan librarians NOT
Wed 12 Nov 1997

Mark Presjnar wrote (in part):

> There are two records there for the book. Both very happily include > the world fuck, and the compound word it's embedded in, in several > fields of the record. Searchable fields.
>
Now THAT's a record I'd like to search! (Have wondered lately if Freudian slips now apply to e-mail typos as well as, uh, speech).

↑ Index

227. Annie Finch
Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?
Wed 12 Nov 1997

The Flash's address is PO Box 4172, Berkeley, CA 94702.

By the way, I'd be very interested to see one of those ghazal/haiku hybrids of Merwin's. Would someone please post one?

Annie

> Poetry Flash (out of Berkeley) publishes a newsletter bi-monthly with reading and events around the entire Bay Area.....I don't have the address right off, but I think it's in Poets Market
>
> Bob
>
> In a message dated 97-11-12 09:59:32 EST, you write:
>
> <<information about addresses, > locations, and times for poetry reading series in S.F. with a "modernist and postmodernist" bent. I have a friend who just moved out there from D.C. and is still looking for information on how to find readings.>>

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

228. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Puritan librarians NOT
Wed 12 Nov 1997

What's the freudian slip??

"searchable field"? that's cataloger lingo....

I remain puzzled..

Mark P.

On Wed, 12 Nov 1997, Safdie Joseph wrote:

> Mark Presjnar wrote (in part):
>
> There are two records there for the book. Both very happily include the world fuck, and the compound word it's embedded in, in several fields of the record. Searchable fields.
>
> Now THAT's a record I'd like to search! (Have wondered lately if Freudian slips now apply to e-mail typos as well as, uh, speech).

↑ Index

229. William Burmeister Prod
Re: quote for the day
Wed 12 Nov 1997

On Nov 11, 5:47pm, henry gould wrote:
> Subject: quote for the day
> "The suggestion that the artist's perception of the world is more complex and > intricate than that of the audience (NOT TO MENTION THAT OF HIS CREATIVE > FOREBEARS) [note: "bears" - ed.] is ultimately undemocratic and unconvincing..
> . The proposition that the artist feels, comprehends and expresses something > unattainable by the ordinary person is no more convincing than the suggestion > that the artist's physical pain, hunger, and sexual satisfaction are more > intense than those of a commoner. [He's been reading his elizabethans - ed.]

> True art is always democratic precisely because there is no denominator more > common, whether in society or history, than the sense that reality is > imperfect and that a better alternative should be sought."
> - Joseph Brodsky, Poet Laureate of the US [ret.], veteran of soviet politics, > Everybody's Favorite Reactionary, and the Farther from his Country
> [p.s. happy Veteran's Day]
>
> This little paragraph, beautifully round and perfect, should convince every > listreader of the particular glory of Russian vodka-conversation culture > and its superiority to every other discourse. For me this > paragraph is only equalled by the sentence in Brodsky's essay "Flight from > Byzantium" in which he says [to paraphrase] "Constantine was, in a sense, > the first Crusader." [ed. note: historians generally agree it was the > Crusades that finally destroyed the Byzantine empire]. - Henry Gould
>-- End of excerpt from henry gould

Fine egalitarian sentiments those are from Joseph Brodsky. Fine versifier though he was, but I wonder if he meant this with every person he met, every baby he kissed. As much as I hate elitism, I tend to be skeptical of populism, which leads to (or is) just another manifestation of social realism. The problem here is his "true art is always democratic." Problematic in a democracy(?) where ideas and criticism are shunned at large, and where there has been a systematic dumbing-down of it's citizenry for decades now. For him to say undemocratic is paramount to saying unpopular. The suggestion that the artist's perception of the world is more complex and intricate than that of the audience may well be true and convincing, but only because it happens to be more developed at that time. More accurately, the artist is more narrowly focused or tuned in to a particular idea than is most of the audience (depending on the audience). Like it or not, look at how unavoidable and essential specialization is today. I do agree though with Brodsky when he speaks against what is thought to be unattainable or incomprehensible by the "ordinary person." The question is where each of us is NOW; a sober, self-assay is required by the individual here.

Henry, as much as I would like to partake right now in Russian vodka-conversation, I'm not convinced of its superiority to EVERY other discourse except theory. Allow me to add that there is no denominator more common, whether in society or history, than the sense of death, and that a better alternative should be sought. Death is a subset of reality sure, but a small space in time exists for a reality/non-reality called poetry and science :-).

Regards,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

230. henry
Re: quote for the day
Wed 12 Nov 1997

I don't think you can fault Brodsky's statement because at the present time the U.S. is not fulfilling its own democratic principles. Democracy is not simply a U.S. product or token in an ideological-historical (i.e. east/west or cold war) game. Also I'm confused where you say Brodsky suggests that the artist's vision is inherently more complex, etc. I thought Brodsky was saying the opposite. I think Brodsky is linking art & democracy because they are both active assertions of shared freedom, one predominantly political, the other aesthetic. The fact that forces in the US & the west use the term "freedom" to support forms of economic slavery & inequality, again, doesn't belie his statement. You raise the question, though - what happens to the "democratic" character of art in an age of very spongy political democracy? (or is that an accurate characterization of the political climate?) Does the following equation apply: art/entertainment = citizenship/idiocy? Only in a dangerously simplified mathematical State, probably. But doesn't art offer, if not clarification, the democratic invitation to participate in complexity? Moral & aesthetic? Along with the freedom to turn down the invitation or even turn it upside down. That's the power in the artist's hand.

I was just kiddin' about the vodka-superiority argument. (or half-kidding).
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

231. David Israel
Finding the Islands
Wed 12 Nov 1997

[was, Re: poetry reading series in San Francisco?]

Annie Finch writes,

<< By the way, I'd be very interested to see one of those ghazal/haiku hybrids of Merwin's. Would someone please post one? >>

Here are a scant couple verses, fetched from memory --

_____

The earth is bleeding into the sea far out
we look away

one side of the heart is dark

As the ant knows where the honey is
I know the way to you

In referring to a (sort of) melding of haiku and ghazal in Merwin's work, I was speaking specifically of the form he developed for himself in or around the 70s -- issued in Finding the Islands (North Point Press).

Someone w/ *Finding the Islands" on hand might care to share a complete poem (I mean, one of the shorter ones) -- so that the sense of the individual verses within the whole might be more apparent.

Biblio-note: Not sure if that volume is still being kept in print (by Random House, which picked up some of the North Point books after the latter press folded), -- but there are some of those poems included (under title "Feathers From the Hill") in the newly issued Flower & Hand (Copper Canyon Press). This book follows up Copper Canyon's re-publishing effort for Merwin's work (as the out-of-print books selected from in F&H are a few vols that appeared subsequent to those included in Merwin's The Second Four Books, also from Copper Canyon).

To chut to the case, till I get my bookshelves assembled, it's uncertain if I'll be able to find either Finding the Islands or get my hands on Flower & Hand -- meanwhile, those 2 stanzas seem to be the only ones I'm able to dredge from memory.

All stanzas are in three lines. The poems consist of a string of such, of indeterminate (or not-predetermined) number, -- the length for a particular poem varying considerably.

As you might know, one characteristic of the ghazal form (in Persian and Urdu) is the fragmentary nature of the peom -- that is, not only is there no requirement that there be an explicit line of continuity from couplet to couplet (all ghazals being written as strings of couplets), but there is (to generalize) an anticipation that each couplet will stand on its own, in terms of subject & image etc. -- that is, the norm is somewhat away from overt continuity. Still, there's a strong link in the prosody (and thematics) -- including the rrequisite repetition of a key phrase at the end of the 2nd line (and with a feminine rhyme including said phrase). That sort of thing is not done in Merwin's verses (nor by many translators of ghazals); Merwin's FTI poems do, though, typically have a manner of loosened continuity (stanaza to stanza) that reminds me of the freedom

(in that regard) typical of the ghazal, and also reminds of a somewhat similar ranginess in Japanese "linked" verse forms.

My notion of an influence of the ghazal on the FTI poems is partly based on a comment Merwin makes (as quoted in the intro to Aijaz Ahmad's volume (published I think around the early 70s? by Columbia U. Press, and long out of print, sorry to say) Ghazals of Ghalib) to the effect that he was particularly happy to discover the approach of the ghazal (as I've tried to describe above) -- the way in which each verse has a kind of autonomy and yet some sense of connection with the whole -- the pearls-in-a-strand manner of that poetic tradition & form.

Merwin remarked that this seemed in line with (or helpful egarding) experiments he was working with at that point -- said work being, it seems clear, the FTI poems.

More than his comment, the work itself strikes me as interestingly reminiscent of east asian poetries as well as ghazal poetry. (I'm not aware that anyone has heretofore broached such comparison per se.)

lotta talk for 2 verses, sorry I don't remember more (or have book at beck) --

d.i.

↑ Index

232. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Finding the Islands
Wed 12 Nov 1997

Here's one.

***

Dark Side

If I were to talk of you how would anyone know what the words meant

_____

you walk on a black road
brown water running beside you eyes staring and the night coming with dark clouds

_____

you smile standing in the green waves in the sunlight with your hands in your dark wet hair

_____

some of what you say to me I forget
but I remember you saying it in the dark

_____

always I want you to say more

_____

I see the back of the mirror
you hold up to the light

_____

I watch you open your eyes wider and wider into the mirror

_____

you stand beside me
when we havejust dried each other

_____

you breathe above my ear
you call out to me from that close

_____

I hear your bare step on the bare floor when I hold your dark feet in my hands

_____

the earth is bleeding into the sea far out
we look away
one side of the heart is dark

W.S. Merwin. from _Finding_the_Islands_

↑ Index

233. Tom Beard
Re: Finding the Islands
Wed 12 Nov 1997

> Aijaz Ahmad's volume > (published I think around the early 70s? by Columbia U. Press, and long out > of print, sorry to say) Ghazals of Ghalib)

A collection of 41 of Ghalib's Ghazals can be found at "http://handel.pacific.net.sg/~loudon/ghalib.htm". How's your Urdu?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

234. William Burmeister Prod
Re: quote for the day
Wed 12 Nov 1997

On Nov 12, 1:06pm, henry wrote:
> Subject: Re: quote for the day
> I don't think you can fault Brodsky's statement because at the present > time the U.S. is not fulfilling its own democratic principles. Democracy > is not simply a U.S. product or token in an ideological-historical > (i.e. east/west or cold war) game.

I don't fault Brodsky for saying these things (they are wonderful IDEAS), rather I simply remain somewhat skeptical regarding their implications in the present. I may have sounded a bit reactionary (which shouldn't surprise), but I see myself somewhere in the middle here. That democracy is not a U.S. product is certain. However, one could understandably take the democratic system in which these statements were made as his audience, and given his poet laureate position (though I don't know if this was written when he held that chair), that would make it all the more plausible. And given human behavior such as it is in this imperfect reality, I believe that I would still take exception to the implications in his statements knowing what could be publicly made of them in anyone's democracy. This even though I understand and respect him when he speaks of the hope that "a better alternative should be sought" for our imperfect reality.

> Also I'm confused where you say > Brodsky suggests that the artist's vision is inherently more complex, > etc. I thought Brodsky was saying the opposite.

I thought so too, but didn't perhaps make it clear. I did not mean to say that Brodsky suggested that, but that I suggest that. I was suggesting that it may actually be true for a given audience and the myriad of specific cases that can arise in the present moment whenever that is.

> I think Brodsky is > linking art & democracy because they are both active assertions of > shared freedom, one predominantly political, the other aesthetic.
> The fact that forces in the US & the west use the term "freedom" > to support forms of economic slavery & inequality, again, doesn't > belie his statement. You raise the question, though - what happens > to the "democratic" character of art in an age of very spongy > political democracy? (or is that an accurate characterization > of the political climate?)

Although the question of democratic character of art in an age of very spongy political democracy is interesting and applicable here, it is not really where I wanted to be in this. This is an old battleground really: art and the public, and it is unpopular to say it, but the masses may be spongy. Sartre speaks a good deal about this in _Literature and Existentialism_. The disappearing Bourgeois and all that. Jose Ortega y Gasset does a great job on it in _Man and Crisis_.

> Does the following equation apply:
> art/entertainment = citizenship/idiocy? Only in a dangerously > simplified mathematical State, probably. But doesn't art offer, > if not clarification, the democratic invitation to participate > in complexity? Moral & aesthetic? Along with the freedom to > turn down the invitation or even turn it upside down. That's the > power in the artist's hand.

I agree completely with you that art offers the democratic invitation to participate in complexity, in obscurity, and whatever else the artist cooks up. This kind of interaction could be be ideal if the artist is also free, and fatal if he is not. Surely then it must follow that art offers the freedom (to the public I assume) to turn down the invitation or turn it upside down. I believe this is where the problem is (for me anyway) since the public has largely rejected complexity in this century with its accusations of obscurity, hermeticism, etc. The obscurity isn't there necessarily for its own sake. I don't buy the excuses that a reasonably well educated public gives for rejecting or condemning the art and literature of whichever part of this century simply because they have opted out in favor of other pastimes and forms of entertainment without giving it some time. The populist solution is to make the work palatable and easy for whomever and then it will be acceptable. That is the part of the equation that I cannot abide by.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

235. Aldon Nielsen
revising the MLA
Wed 12 Nov 1997

I've just discovered that the MLA program has left out two of the three papers on the first of the panels titled "Does Modernity Have A Future?" -- I am not the only speaker on that panel -- the other papers are as follows:

Jani Scandura -- U of Michigan
"A Geography of Depression"

Damon Marcel DeCoste -- U of Regina
"When Our Future Is Our Past"

so . . . any of you heading for Toronto at MLA time, please note this -- It should be a fun discussion

↑ Index

236. hg
Re: quote for the day
Wed 12 Nov 1997

You raise some issues that have been around awhile(!) & can't be wished away. But I think you're melding together "democracy - masses - public opinion", and assuming too much in the process. Again, I think Brodsky was connecting the process of democracy - whereby some individuals get together & decide they will govern themselves, rather than be governed - and the process of art, whereby some individuals get together & share creative works. It happens on a field of free equality; that's it. He's not saying "good art can be evaluated democratically" (by a process of compromise & consensus?), or "good art must be popular". He's saying art expresses human experience, rather than enlightening it or reforming it or refining it "from above". In this he is going back to Mandelstam, and Akhmatova, as he does constantly in essay after essay. He is one of the Petersburg poets, a close stream. & one of the standards of their Acmeism (as against Symbolism) is that the artist is like everybody else. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

237. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Acmeists
Wed 12 Nov 1997

---

re:

> The poet is just like everybody else, only more so

I think this discussion has emigrated to a strange, attenuated country.

I thought poetry had something to do with language.

The above statement seems to suggest that it is concerned with an intensified everybodyness. Even if we stretched that out to cover everybody's use of language, we'd be stretching.

We could just as easily say "The engineer is just like everybody else, only more so" or "The tobacco company executive is just like everybody else, only more so". See, it pretty well fits everybody, and in each case it takes on its own slant.

Am I missing something?

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

238. Harold Rhenisch
Re: quote for the day
Wed 12 Nov 1997

William Burmeister wrote:

>the public has largely rejected complexity in this century with its >accusations of obscurity, hermeticism, etc. The obscurity isn't there >necessarily for its own sake. I don't buy the excuses that a reasonably well >educated public gives for rejecting or condemning the art and literature
of >whichever part of this century simply because they have opted out in favor > of other pastimes and forms of entertainment without giving it some time.

> The populist solution is to make the work palatable and easy for whomever >and then it will be acceptable. That is the part of the equation that I cannot >abide by.

Is it the obscurity that people object to or that the material is based upon cultural assumptions they do not ascribe to? The audience's feeling of obscurity would be the same, but the causes and solutions would vary, would they not?

As a clarification: artists might create so-called obscure texts out of a deep reading of democracy, but the audience might not be interested in deep readings of democracy, and might be reading something quite different than democracy when democracy is mentioned. Furthermore, the aesthetic that led to the so-called obscure text might be justifiable, but will not be read properly by people living in the strange land of secondary readings, where democracy does not mean democracy, and so forth. Pop culture is a code, too, as is art.

As a digression: would it be possible to sidestep this problem by using a sophisticated aesthetic to manipulate the icons of pop culture, but not for the purposes of pop culture?

Regards,

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

239. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Acmeists
Wed 12 Nov 1997

The poet is just like everybody else, only more so

↑ Index

240. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Acmeists
Wed 12 Nov 1997

At 02:30 PM 11/12/97 -0700, you wrote:
>re:
>
>>The poet is just like everybody else, only more so
>
>I think this discussion has emigrated to a strange, attenuated country.
>
>I thought poetry had something to do with language.
>
>The above statement seems to suggest that it is concerned with an >intensified everybodyness. Even if we stretched that out to cover >everybody's use of language, we'd be stretching.
>
>We could just as easily say "The engineer is just like everybody else, only >more so" or "The tobacco company executive is just like everybody else, >only more so". See, it pretty well fits everybody, and in each case it >takes on its own slant.
>
>Am I missing something?
>

>Harold Rhenisch
>[redacted]
>

Harold:

If you missed something, it was the quote to which I was responding --

"I thought poetry had something to do with language."

--so did everybody else

"I think that I shall never see a poem more lovely than a tree."

Couldn't we substitute "house" for "poem"?

Couldn't we substitute "sea" for "tree"

yours from that attenuated, far country,

El Haj

↑ Index

241. William Burmeister Prod

Re: quote for the day

Wed 12 Nov 1997

> Is it the obscurity that people object to or that the material is based upon cultural assumptions they do not ascribe to? The audience's feeling of obscurity would be the same, but the causes and solutions would vary, would they not?
>
> As a clarification: artists might create so-called obscure texts out of a deep reading of democracy, but the audience might not be interested in deep readings of democracy, and might be reading something quite different than democracy when democracy is mentioned. Furthermore, the aesthetic that led to the so-called obscure text might be justifiable, but will not be read properly by people living in the strange land of secondary readings, where democracy does not mean democracy, and so forth. Pop culture is a code, too, as is art.
>
> As a digression: would it be possible to sidestep this problem by using a sophisticated aesthetic to manipulate the icons of pop culture, but not for the purposes of pop culture?
>
> Regards,
>
> Harold Rhenisch
> [redacted]
> -- End of excerpt from Harold Rhenisch

My guess would be that people object to what they see as obscurity for its own sake on the first order, or if they belong a different cultural group than the artist that might be the first order objection. Some may receive so-called obscure work for similar reasons.

> Furthermore, the aesthetic that led > to the so-called obscure text might be justifiable, but will not be read > properly by people living in the strange land of secondary readings, where > democracy does not mean democracy, and so forth.

This adds to the discussion I think, but what is meant by being read properly in the context of poetry vs say prose?

> As a digression: would it be possible to sidestep this problem by using a > sophisticated aesthetic to manipulate the icons of pop culture, but not for > the purposes of pop culture?

I think (if I understand you) this is postmodernism.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

242. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Soko Loco
Wed 12 Nov 1997

Aviva Vogel wrote:
>
> Oh, Harold! Oh yes! A computer program that would chug away like a Nepalese > prayer wheel through the dictionary, slotting words into various syntactical > structures! Of course, we can do that endlessly ourselves, without our > laptops and CD-Rom drives, but hey! Like an anagram generator, it could be a > useful tool (or toy) to jump-start a poetry-writing session (or week or month > or year) that's faltering a bit (or a lot). Clever! Enticing! I'll be the > first customer! -Aviva

Hi, Aviva.

For the past few months, I've worked on a series of poems based on four-fold word squares run through an anagram generator which produces c. 500K of lines employing the 16 letters in words. I sift through them, identify the most likely, & let them mull about until they find an order I also recognize. For example [I hope this comes through the email intact!]:

WORD
ALOE

RISE POEM

I wore a prose model
or a sole weird poem,
a woe period morsel.
I seldom wore a rope.
I led a morose power,
a wide remorse loop,
or I rose, a lewd poem,
a poem idle or worse.
we lose a prior dome,
a slow ode or empire;
we despoil a Rome, or deplore a wise room.
more power is a dole.
desire me, a poor owl.

Daniel Zimmerman

↑ Index

243. tristan saldana
Re: Heath 3, help?!
Wed 12 Nov 1997

On Tue, 11 Nov 1997, Hank Lazer wrote:

> But the situation for poetry, particularly 20th century poetry in the Heath, pisses me off.

Amen. The situation for poetry pisses me off too, Heath or no Heath.

Tristan

↑ Index

244. Steven Marks
Re: Puritan librarians NOT
Wed 12 Nov 1997

I think he is referring to the "world fuck."
Which is a fuck to beckon with.

On Wed, 12 Nov 1997, Mark
Prejsnar wrote:

> What's the freudian slip??

> "searchable field"? that's cataloger lingo....
>
> I remain puzzled..
>
> Mark P.
>
> On Wed, 12 Nov 1997, Safdie Joseph wrote:
>
> Mark Presjnar wrote (in part):
>
> There are two records there for the book. Both very happily include the world fuck, and the compound word it's embedded in, in several fields of the record. Searchable fields.
>
> Now THAT's a record I'd like to search! (Have wondered lately if Freudian slips now apply to e-mail typos as well as, uh, speech).

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

245. David R. Israel

Re: Acmeists

Wed 12 Nov 1997

Harold Rhenisch writes,

> re:
>
> The poet is just like everybody else, only more so
>
> I think this discussion has emigrated to a strange, attenuated country.
>
> I thought poetry had something to do with language.

> The above statement seems to suggest that it is concerned with an intensified everybodyness. Even if we stretched that out to cover everybody's use of language, we'd be stretching.

yes & no --

how's this for one poss. interpretive reading of the sentence:

[What] the poet [expresses] is just like [what] everybody else [expresses], only more so the relationship between what is, and what is said, is arguably relevant to just about any poetics worth its seasalt -- poets being in the biz of exploring that, they may sometimes give it voice more acutely -- to the extent that what-one-is is (so far as writing goes) evidenced by the written, ergo, the poet may well evidence it more so, eh?

whether the poet really IS more so, or whether the being more so is simply more evident, is a worthy enough question, maybe -- but sometimes, in some circumstances, it might be that the focus on & attention to these problematics may acutize [new word?] the being, or at least seem to so do, hmm?

. . . a few thoughts on that

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

246. tristan saldana
Re: Heath 3, help?!
Wed 12 Nov 1997

On Tue, 11 Nov 1997, Hank Lazer wrote:

> Hank Lazer argued eloquently for a selection of the "Language Poets," > but we were not persuaded that they would be taught by most users of the anthology.

While the Heath anthologists may not have been persuaded that the "Language Poets" _would_ be taught by most "users" of the anthology, they just _gauranteed_ that they would not be taught by excluding them.

Tristan

↑ Index

247. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
watten barrage
Wed 12 Nov 1997

---

just read watten's bride of the assembly line, magnifique/ i don't have such a stake in the grenier/coolidge discussion, but very taken with initial discussion of context and the avantgarde. refreshing, true, and yay!

↑ Index

248. Marjorie Perloff
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

One of the great literary men/women of our time died today: James Laughlin. Many on this list whose work he published and who cherished his own poetry, memoirs, and essays, this is a sad, sad, day.

I'm in Indiana doing a residency (Patten Lectures) and can't write at normal speed, but I'm sure there will be more material coming in from Eliot Weinberger or Jerome Rothenberg etc. etc. I just wanted people to know.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

249. Layne Russell
Re: acme
Thu 13 Nov 1997

---

david bromige wrote:
>
> each night is dark, but tonight is darker
>
> as if the word essence had meaning
>
> a lucky sentence might intensify
>
> then again, each night is dark
>
> how tell one from the next
>
> none is so capable

love that last line

L

↑ Index

250. david bromige
acme
Thu 13 Nov 1997

---

each night is dark, but tonight is darker

as if the word essence had meaning

a lucky sentence might intensify

then again, each night is dark

how tell one from the next

none is so capable

↑ Index

251. Lawrence Upton.
democracy
Thu 13 Nov 1997

---

hg wrote

| Again, I think Brodsky | was connecting the process of democracy - whereby some individuals | get together & decide they will govern themselves, rather than be | governed -

- that's *anarchy - wch we are not allowed rather than *democracy - wch we have not got

↑ Index

252. Jacques Debrot
Re: Reading series in Boston?
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Have yet to see on the List any announcements for exp. poetry readings in Boston. Does anyone know of any that are upcoming?

↑ Index

253. henry g
Re: Acmeists
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Wed, 12 Nov 1997 14:15:12 -0800 Aldon Nielsen said:
>The poet is just like everybody else, only more so

A true Acmeist position. I should have qualified previous post by noting that the Acmeist polemic with the Symbolists, in which Gumilov, Mandelstam & others took the approach that the artist was not an exalted priestly personage but an ordinary earthbound creature, was tempered on both sides of the debate by the Petersburgian hauteur, the respect for cultural tradition, the aristocracy of the intelligentsia... a very different animal from what we understand to be "populism". - Henry G.

↑ Index

254. Susan Wheeler
DIGEST re Brodsky
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Wasn't Brodsky simply countering the Romantic and post-R notion of poet-as-seer/shaman/bodhisattva/O Great One?

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

255. henry g
Re: democracy
Thu 13 Nov 1997

> hg wrote
>
> | Again, I think Brodsky
> | was connecting the process of democracy - whereby some individuals
> | get together & decide they will govern themselves, rather than be > | governed -
>
> *- that's anarchy - wch we are not allowed
> *rather than democracy - wch we have not got

I was implying that the individuals so inclined would establish a representative government of not particularly un-venal well-meaning buddy-system cousins such as we have here in Grand Fenwick, otherwise known as Little Rhody. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

256. henry g
Re: DIGEST re Brodsky
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997 08:03:51 -0500 Susan Wheeler said: >Wasn't Brodsky simply countering the Romantic and post-R notion of >poet-as-seer/shaman/bodhisattva/O Great One?
>
Yes - this is part of what the Acmeist "program" involved. But it's sloppy of me to keep calling Brodsky an "acmeist", a tenuous "movement" back at the turn of the other century. He may have found a closer model for the style he was after in Auden: the anti-heroic, the everyday human-humane. - Henry G.

↑ Index

257. Jena Osman
visual poetry on the internet
Thu 13 Nov 1997

For a workshop in visual poetry: I'm looking for good examples of visual poetry on the internet. I'm already familiar with the amazing ubuweb site. Please send URL's of other favorites. Thanks,

Jena Osman
[redacted]

↑ Index

258. Jacques Debrot
Re: Visual poetry
Thu 13 Nov 1997

You might want to check out:
1. Po'Fly Electro-MATIC language~arts at:
http://members.aol.com/poflye/pofly.htm
2. Postypographika at:
http://postypogaphika.com
3. Grist-On-Line at:
http://www.thing.net?/~grist

Also, while it is often not exactly visual poetry, Artforum magazine often lists relevant websites in Mark van de Walle's column; check out the Jan '97 issue -- particularly interesting are:
1. 100CC at:
http://www.jodi.org/100cc/index.html
2. The Surrealism Server at: http://pharmdec.wustl.edu/juju/surr/

↑ Index

259. Jacques Debrot
Re: Visual poetry typo
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Just caught a typo in my previous message; the correct web address for Po'Fly is:

http:// members.aol.com/poflye/poflye.htm

↑ Index

260. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

At 9:36 PM -0800 11/12/97, Marjorie Perloff wrote:
>One of the great literary men/women of our time died today: James >Laughlin. Many on this list whose work he published and who cherished his >own poetry, memoirs, and essays, this is a sad, sad, day.
>
>I'm in Indiana doing a residency (Patten Lectures) and can't write at >normal speed, but I'm sure there will be more material coming in from

>Eliot Weinberger or Jerome Rothenberg etc. etc. I just wanted people to >know.
>
>Marjorie Perloff

thanks for the news marjorie; an era is in transformation; what will happen now?

↑ Index

261. Douglas Barbour
Re: thought for the day
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Henry Gould suggests of Brodky: " It happens on a field of free equality; that's it. He's not saying "good art can be evaluated democratically" (by a process of compromise & consensus?), or "good art must be popular". He's saying art expresses human experience, rather than enlightening it or reforming it or refining it "from above". In this he is going back to Mandelstam, and Akhmatova, as he does constantly in essay after essay. He is one of the Petersburg poets, a close stream. & one of the standards of their Acmeism (as against Symbolism) is that the artist is like everybody else."

It's the end of this that I agree with. The necessary recognition, contra Romanticism, that the artist is not superior as a human being but only in so far as s/he is able to create within an art. The artist is not a better person, just capable of _art_iculating the humanity, etc. s/he shares with everyone.

Makes sense to me.

Sometimes, of course, the complexity of that articulation (in music, painting, poetry, whatever) takes the art beyond what a great many people want to bother learning to comprehend. I guess them's the breaks...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

i am not, a tongue to lick alight the dark your images project, eyes looking out of darkness in that head...

Daphne Marlatt

↑ Index

262. Tosh
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

As I am starting up my own press, I really look up to him. He will be missed, and for sure, remembered for his vision.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

263. Layne Russell
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Michael Coffey wrote:

> here is small obituary running in pubishers weekly of james laughlin. surely, more expansive notices will be running in newspapers tomorrow:
>
> Obituary James Laughlin, founder of New Directions, author, poet and a literary visionary who published the bulk of this century's most distinguished experimental writers, died at his home in Norfolk, Ct. of complications from a stroke Nov. 12. He was 83. [snip]

thank you Michael for finding and posting this. I posted this to the Socopoet list...didn't think you would mind.

Layne

↑ Index

264. Aviva Vogel
Re: thought for the day
Thu 13 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-13 10:58:14 EST, you write:

This is well put. Clear. I like it. Thanks, Aviva.

<< The necessary recognition, contra Romanticism, that the artist is not superior as a human being but only in so far as s/he is able to create within an art. The artist is not a better person, just capable of _art_iculating the humanity, etc. s/he shares with everyone.

Makes sense to me.

Sometimes, of course, the complexity of that articulation (in music, painting, poetry, whatever) takes the art beyond what a great many people want to bother learning to comprehend. I guess them's the breaks... >>

↑ Index

265. Joseph Zitt
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those listers who have posted.

↑ Index

266. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Acmeists
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Nov 13, 8:00am, henry g wrote:
> Subject: Re: Acmeists
> On Wed, 12 Nov 1997 14:15:12 -0800 Aldon Nielsen said:
>You raise some issues that have been around awhile(!) & can't be wished >away. But I think you're melding together "democracy - masses - public >opinion", and assuming too much in the process. Again, I think Brodsky >was connecting the process of democracy -

> The poet is just like everybody else, only more so
>
> A true Acmeist position. I should have qualified previous post by noting that the Acmeist polemic with the Symbolists, in which Gumilov, Mandelstam & others took the approach that the artist was not an exalted priestly personage but an ordinary earthbound creature, was tempered on both sides of the debate by the Petersburgian hauteur, the respect for cultural tradition, the aristocracy of the intelligentsia... a very different animal from what we understand to be "populism". - Henry G.
> -- End of excerpt from henry g

> Yes - this is part of what the Acmeist "program" involved. But it's sloppy of me to keep calling Brodsky an "acmeist", a tenuous "movement" back at the turn of the other century. He may have found a closer model for the style he was after in Auden: the anti-heroic, the everyday human-humane. - Henry G.

Yes. It is more desirable to consider Brodsky the exile here in the Etat Unis and his declarations in the context of this end-of-century rather than the last.

I don't know what is meant by the "melding together of democracy - masses - public opinion," other than perhaps an attempt on my part to discuss openly some thoughts that I had after the reading of the Brodsky quote (and in a broader, yet proper context - no assumptions necessary). It is easy to speak of ideas which are heretofore fleshless.

Some quotes from Jean-Paul Sartre do a much better job than I at saying what needs to be said:

"There is classicism when a society has taken on a relatively stable form and when it has been permeated with the myth of its perenniality, that is, when it confounds the present with the eternal and historicity with traditionalism, when the hierarchy of classes is such that the virtual public never exceeds the real public and when each reader is for the writer a qualified critic and a censor, when the power of the religious and political ideology is so strong and the interdictions so rigorous that in no case is there any question of discovering new countries of the mind, but only of putting into shape the commonplaces adopted by the elite in such a way that reading -- which, as we have seen, is the concrete relation between the writer and his public -- is a ceremony of recognition analogous to the bow of salutation, that is, the ceremonious affirmation that author and reader are of the same world and have the same opinions about everything."

"The political triumph of the bourgeoisie which writers had so eagerly desired convulsed their condition from top to bottom and put the very essence of literature into question...There is no doubt that by identifying the cause of belles-lettres with that of political democracy they helped the bourgeoisie come to power, but by the same token they ran the risk of seeing the disappearance of the object of their demands, that is, the constant and almost the only subject of their writing."

"Bourgeois art would either be a means or would not be...Its public feared nothing so much as talent, that gay and menacing madness which uncovers the disturbing roots of things by unforseeable words and which, by repeated appeals to freedom, stirs the still more disturbing roots of men. Facility sold better; it was talent in leash, turned against itself, the art of reassuring readers by harmonious and expected discourse, in a tone of good fellowship, that man and the world were quite ordinary, transparent, without surprises, without threats, and without interest."

William Burmeister

↑ Index

267. William Burmeister Prod
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Nov 13, 8:46am, Maria Damon wrote:
> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
> At 9:36 PM -0800 11/12/97, Marjorie Perloff wrote:
> >One of the great literary men/women of our time died today: James > >Laughlin. Many on this list whose work he published and who cherished his > >own poetry, memoirs, and essays, this is a sad, sad, day.
> >
> >I'm in Indiana doing a residency (Patten Lectures) and can't write at > >normal speed, but I'm sure there will be more material coming in from > >Eliot Weinberger or Jerome Rothenberg etc. etc. I just wanted people to > >know.
> >
> >Marjorie Perloff
>
> thanks for the news marjorie; an era is in transformation; what will happen > now?
>-- End of excerpt from Maria Damon

James Laughlin has been a champion of literature in this century against the publishing juggernauts, and will most certainly be missed. His extremely sensitive portrayal of the late years of William Carlos Williams is indicative of his humanity, his generosity of which enough cannot be said.

Sadly,

William J. Burmeister

↑ Index

268. David R. Israel
JPSartre's classics
Thu 13 Nov 1997

[was, Re: Acmeists]

from William Burmeister --

> Some quotes from Jean-Paul Sartre do a much better job than I at saying what needs to be said:
>
> "There is classicism when a society has taken on a relatively stable form and when it has been permeated with the myth of its perenniality, that is, when it confounds the present with the eternal and historicity with traditionalism . . . >>

ah, the demimonde position (the establishing gesture of an anti-establishment establishment), so classically [mot juste] expressed . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

269. Keith Tuma
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997 10:16:31 -0600 Joseph Zitt said:
>Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was
>and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those >listers who have posted.

New Directions--for starters.

↑ Index

270. henry
Re: Acmeists
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997 11:29:40 -0500 William Burmeister Prod said:
>On Nov 13, 8:00am, henry g wrote:
>> Subject: Re: Acmeists
>> On Wed, 12 Nov 1997 14:15:12 -0800 Aldon Nielsen said:
>>You raise some issues that have been around awhile(!) & can't be wished >>away. But I think you're melding together "democracy - masses - public >>opinion", and assuming too much in the process. Again, I think Brodsky >>was connecting the process of democracy -
>
>
>I don't know what is meant by the "melding together of democracy - masses - >public opinion," other than perhaps an attempt on my part to discuss openly >some thoughts that I had after the reading of the Brodsky quote (and in a >broader, yet proper context - no assumptions necessary). It is easy to speak of >ideas which are heretofore fleshless.

I should have written more clearly when I accused WB of assumptions. The assumptions I was referring to involved the idea that when Brodsky connected "good art" and "democracy" he was historicizing or commenting on the relations between elite, aristocrat, or bourgois interests & the mass public. And I tried to relate the function of art & the function of democracy (self-governance) on an abstract level, which I think is what Brodsky was doing. I have no problem with WB or anyone else commenting on the realities of art, politics & the public with the advent of "bourgois democracy". The fact that the bourgois doesn't appreciate fine art or the fact that the aristocrat concieves literature as part of a fixed ritual of social hierarchy, however, undermines neither art nor democracy, despite whatever complaints both Baudelaire & Sartre may raise. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

271. Pritchett,Pat
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

James Laughlin was heir to an immense Pennsylvania steel fortune. He was also a poet and lover of literature. It's fair to say he did as much for American poetry in this century as anyone - publishing, and keeping in print, Pound, Williams, HD, Henry Miller, Kenneth Patchen - the list goes on forever.

The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals. The rest is history, as they say. And fortunately, Laughlin disregarded Pound's advice about poetry. He kept at it, producing several books of spare, lyrically direct poems that were delicate without being precious. His death is indeed a great loss. American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by keeping faith with his committment to making it new.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Keith Tuma
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: James Laughlin
Date: Thursday, November 13, 1997 1:08PM

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997 10:16:31 -0600 Joseph Zitt said:
>Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was
>and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those >listers who have posted.

New Directions--for starters.

↑ Index

272. p. durgin
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Joseph, Not only publishing New Directions, James Laughlin is an important American lyric poet. His "Collected Poems" is about the last word in economy, as far as romance goes.

|||[redacted]|||

_____

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those listers who have posted.

↑ Index

273. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Thu 13 Nov 1997

---

perhaps i cld make mention of the _wr-eye-tings_ scratchpad. i don't have the address for you, but i will post ASAP for the list -- unless, luigi -- you have it on hand (?)

there are some amazing things happening on that scratchpad, a kind of temporal visual poetry gallery and workshop, to paraphrase luigi.

on the scratchpad, pomes move, jump around, make noices make voices!

all best, and happy seeing reading !

carl

> For a workshop in visual poetry: I'm looking for good examples of visual poetry on the internet. I'm already familiar with the amazing ubuweb site. Please send URL's of other favorites. Thanks,
>
> Jena Osman
> [redacted]

↑ Index

274. henry gould
a little JB for today
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Poetry is stronger than the subtle fussing of french litterateurs.

"I schyegol razlivatsia v tsyentre provalochnoii Ravenni."

[And the goldfinch burst into song in the center of its wire Ravenna.]

- J. Brodksy

↑ Index

275. William Burmeister Prod
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Nov 13, 10:16am, Joseph Zitt wrote:
> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
> Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was
> and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those > listers who have posted.
>-- End of excerpt from Joseph Zitt

I honestly can't say if I would be in poetry right now if not for James Laughlin and New Directions Books. I like the story Octavio Paz has in _The Other Voice_ about him, and would like to share it.

"The case of American Publishing house New Directions is a notable example. James Laughlin, the son of a well-to-do family, studied at HArvard some fifty years ago. A poetry lover despite his disappointment at the professors he had, he decided to spend some time in Rapallo, where Ezra Pound was the focal point of a small group devoted to the study of poetry--the "Ezraversity," as Pound himself called his circle. After six months of sharing their experiences, Pound and Laughlin made a pact: Laughlin would become a publisher and devote himself to bringing out books by Pound, William Carlos Williams, and other poets of that time. Thus New Directions came into being. It is a house that has lasted more than half a century and accomplished two equally difficult things: refusing to become a gigantic multinational corporation, while publishing not only many valuable North American poets but also the corpus of modern European and Latin Literature.

In his recent volume of delightful and intelligent prose (Recollections of a publisher, 1989), Laughlin notes that Pound recommended what books he should publish but gave no advice about how to sell them. He adds: "perhaps he didn't know or didn't care. I can't remember his exact phrase but he seemed quite content if something he had written and given to some obscure magazine reached the eyes and beans of twenty-seven readers, if they were the righr readers, the ones who would diffuse his ideas." Laughlin had the good sense not to follow all of Pound's advice: he did not publish, for instance, the eccentric economic theories of Major Clifford Hugh Douglas. But he quickly understood that the new literature, unanimously scorned by university professors and well-entrenched critics, could win a small but fervent public. It was an undertaking that went against current tastes and deliberately appealed to a minority. In a letter, Pound wrote to his young friend: "For Christs sake meditate on something I once told you: Nothing written for pay is worth anything; only what has been written against the market. There is nothing so inebriating as earning money. Big check and you think you have done something and two years later there is nothing bloody well to show for it." These lines were written in 1940. Nine years later, Pound renewed the charge: "The death of all the old staid American publishing houses would be a sign of God's favor to humanity. There are no known acts on the part of these firms that ever favored living writers or literature."

William J. Burmeister

↑ Index

276. William Burmeister Prod

Re: JPSartre's classics

Thu 13 Nov 1997

On Nov 13, 1:06pm, David R. Israel wrote:
> Subject: JPSartre's classics
> [was, Re: Acmeists]
>
> from William Burmeister --
>
> > Some quotes from Jean-Paul Sartre do a much better job than I at > > saying what needs to be said:
> >
> > "There is classicism when a society has taken on a relatively stable > > form and when it has been permeated with the myth of its > > perenniality, that is, when it confounds the present with the > > eternal and historicity with traditionalism . . . >>
>
> ah, the demimonde position (the establishing gesture of an > anti-establishment establishment), so classically [mot juste] > expressed . . .
>

> d.i.
>-- End of excerpt from David R. Israel

ah, the everything eventually becomes gesture gesture. I suppose his writing is classic now: God knows how old it is.

Wilhelm

↑ Index

277. groberts
Re: Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

"Catullus is my master" begins the poem "Technical Notes" placed in the opening section of Laughlin's Collected Poems. For me, Laughlin is a rare master of that daily ceremony in which our vulgarity is wedded to the austerity of hope. Laughlin would probably want to be remembered as a love poet, which is an honorable simplification, but a simplification nonetheless. He also wrote much about other aspirations, and the facts which check them. And in all manner of lines: short, long, American, French, careful, carefree. And his line-breaks across words is a lasting example of deft construction, in his hands a blatant affirmation of craft that is neither precious nor crass. As in these poems about death:

"Write on My Tomb"

that all I learned in books and from the muses I've taken with me but my rich possessions I have left behind

***

"I Have Heard"

the misuse of the word hopefully spread through the linguistic landscape with the steady relentless thrust of lava from a volcano on here one there at first but now everywhere even senators & professors hopefully post mortem meam I'll not end up in a hell where undoubtfully

everyone will be saying it.

***

Through the black and the white may the brown and the green and the pink always break.

Gary R.

↑ Index

278. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Acmeists
Thu 13 Nov 1997

> I should have written more clearly when I accused WB of assumptions. The assumptions I was referring to involved the idea that when Brodsky connected "good art" and "democracy" he was historicizing or commenting on the relations between elite, aristocrat, or bourgois interests & the mass public. And I tried to relate the function of art & the function of democracy (self-governance) on an abstract level, which I think is what Brodsky was doing. I have no problem with WB or anyone else commenting on the realities of art, politics & the public with the advent of "bourgois democracy". The fact that the bourgois doesn't appreciate fine art or the fact that the aristocrat concieves literature as part of a fixed ritual of social hierarchy, however, undermines neither art nor democracy, despite whatever complaints both Baudelaire & Sartre may raise. - Henry Gould
> -- End of excerpt from henry

Fair enough Henry and well taken. And so fare thee well, thou never shall hear from herald again.

- Master William Sheakespearemeister

↑ Index

279. Michael Coffey
Re: James Laughlin -Reply
Thu 13 Nov 1997

>>> William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
11/13/97 02:19pm >>>
On Nov 13, 10:16am, Joseph Zitt wrote:
> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
> Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was

> and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those > listers who have posted.
>-- End of excerpt from Joseph Zitt

here is small obituary running in pubishers weekly of james laughlin. surely, more expansive notices will be running in newspapers tomorrow:

ObituaryJames Laughlin, founder of New Directions, author, poet and a literary visionary who published the bulk of this century's most distinguished experimental writers, died at his home in Norfolk, Ct. of complications from a stroke Nov. 12. He was 83.By the time Laughlin graduated from Harvard University in 1939, he had already begun publishing the first of his New Directions anthologies in 1936 introducing the early work of such writers as William Saroyan, Delmore Schwartz, Celine, James Agee, Bertolt Brecht and Denise levertov and many others. By the age of 18 he had published his own short stories and poetry in the Atlantic Monthly. Not long after the New Direction anthology series was launched Laughlin began publishing novels, plays and poetry collections by authors of similar stature. The poetry of Tennessee Williams and Karl Shapiro first appeared in these volumes and later the poems of William Carlos Williams and Ezra Pound. During the late 1930s and 1940s Laughlin published unprecendented translations of older, influential European writers and is credited with reviving interest in E.M. Forster and Kafka. The list goes on: He published Henry Miller's idiosyncratic essays and travel books and was the first to print James Joyce's Stephen Hero; brought Gertrude Stein; Nathanael West and Herman Hesse back into print; and published Vladimir's Nabokov's second novel, The Real Life of Sebastian Knight in 1941. None of this has gone unnoticed and Laughlin's vision has been well honored. Besides numeous honory degrees he has received commendations by PEN, the American Academy of Arts and letters , The Carey Thomas Award, The French Jean Malrieu prize for poetry in translation, The Robert Frost Medal, the Curtis Benjamin Award for Creative Publishing and many, many other honors. Laughlin has published numerous volumes of his own poetry, essays and stories and New Directions will publish The Love Poems this fall and he has three forthcoming books due from Zoland Books, Aperture and Turkey press. W.W. Norton will also publish a series of scholarly volumes of his correspondence with various New Directions authors.

↑ Index

280. David R. Israel
Re: Soko Loco
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Daniel Zimmerman wrote,

> For the past few months, I've worked on a series of poems based on four-fold word squares run through an anagram generator which produces c. 500K of lines employing the 16 letters in words. I sift through them, identify the most likely, & let them mull about until they find an order I also recognize. For example [I hope this comes through the email intact!]:
>
> WORD
> ALOE
> RISE
> POEM
>
> I wore a prose model
> or a sole weird poem,
> a woe period morsel.
> I seldom wore a rope.
> I led a morose power,
> a wide remorse loop,
> or I rose, a lewd poem,
> a poem idle or worse.
> we lose a prior dome,
> a slow ode or empire;
> we despoil a Rome, or
> deplore a wise room.
> more power is a dole.
> desire me, a poor owl.

yep, it came thru fine -- (& proves more interesting in the instance than I might've expected lacking the exempli).

Thinking of Terry Riley's composition In C, I find myself wondering about computer-generated textual-composition possibilities of adding letters incrementally -- (i.e., rather than always 16, if it were to ascend -- e.g., from 4 to 6 to 8 etc.) -- a cumulative procedure of growing complexity -- so you get circa 500,000 sentences (or lines) out of every run of four 4-letter words, hmm -- have you ever started with words that themselves comprise a "found phrase" of some sort? -- it would then seem a scramble from the immediate-observed to every possible recombination of same -- these but passing thoughts, occasioned by novel procedure of a sort I'd not considered -- look forward to seeing some more, whenever --

d.i.

↑ Index

281. r.drake
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Thu 13 Nov 1997

> perhaps i cld make mention of the _wr-eye-tings_ scratchpad. i don't have the address for you, but i will post ASAP for the list -- unless, luigi -- you have it on hand (?)

http://www.burningpress.org/wreyeting/

> there are some amazing things happening on that scratchpad, a kind of temporal visual poetry gallery and workshop...
>
> For a workshop in visual poetry: I'm looking for good examples of visual poetry on the internet. I'm already familiar with the amazing ubuweb site. Please send URL's of other favorites. Thanks,
>
> Jena Osman
> [redacted]

↑ Index

282. Bob Grumman
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Karl Young's Light & Dust site is amazinger.

http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/lighthom.htm

And his links will get you to other excellent sites, like Luigi-Bob Drake's, whose URL I can't find.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

283. Harold Rhenisch
Re: quote for the day
Thu 13 Nov 1997

William Burmeister wrote:

>My guess would be that people object to what they see as obscurity for its >own sake on the first order, or if they belong a different cultural group than >the artist that might be the first order objection. Some may receive so->called obscure work for similar reasons.

My concern was that we have such a split between aesthetic culture (of varying kinds) and pop culture (of varying kinds) that the two are not speaking to each other and people react to that. Hence my second comment:

> Furthermore, the aesthetic that led > to the so-called obscure text might be justifiable, but will not be read > properly by people living in the strange land of secondary readings, where > democracy does not mean democracy, and so forth.

to which William responded:

>This adds to the discussion I think, but what is meant by being read properly >in the context of poetry vs say prose?

I was trying to work out the idea that if people were responding to the trace of a foreign aesthetic, or the way in which it manifested itself within the parameters of their receiving technology (or culture), very little communication is going to take place: what will be communicated will be only a series of traces, which seem to me to be terribly short-lived and unstable isotopes. Conservative poetry is a foreign aesthetic to most people. Obscure poetry or avante-garde poetry might as well be a line of binary code. It goes farther: even conservative poets, a sympathetic audience (I would hope), are going to have a hard time reading avante-garde poetry, because they will have to re-tool to do so. I think as readers we tend to set up a receiving matrix and then are able to read texts (within certain parameters) automatically. When we shift to a different type of text (from conservative poetry to lang-po, for instance, or from Disneyland sound-bites to T.S. Eliot) we will get messed up, because we will process the signal automatically, but we will be processing it incorrectly. It will be unreadable. A reader willing to do the work will correct this, by switching to manual processing, then building up a new and more sophisticated processing system, which can eventually process the material correctly. A reader unwilling to do the work will walk away. Interesting is the idea of an aesthetic willing to work with the traces themselves. Probably need a lead suit, though.

Best,

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

284. James Finnegan
Re: Heath 3, help?!
Thu 13 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-13 00:28:45 EST, you write:

> While the Heath anthologists may not have been persuaded that the "Language Poets" _would_ be taught by most "users" of the anthology, they just _gauranteed_ that they would not be taught by excluding them.

I'm not certain it's all so dire. The Heath is direct competitor of the venerable Norton anthology, is it not? The Norton (4th Ed) has Michael Palmer (not really a Language poet) and Edward Kamau Braithwaite (who broadens the political & multi-cultural look of the Norton contents page). But little else in the Norton could be classified as language, alternative, EXP, neoBeat, postmod, etc.

Fortunately there are other anthologies that a widely-read teacher could press into service side-by-side or as alternative to the Health/Norton "evil empire." Like Sun & Moon's Other Side of the Century, or Potes & Poets' Art of Practice, and Norton's other anthology Post Modern Am. Poetry edited by Paul Hoover.

I applaud Hank Lazer for trying to bring down the leather-bound walls of the Heath, but success would mean assimilation and thus brings with it other problems: Namely the names. Who would get in and who wouldn't? Silliman, Hejinian, Bernstein, Armantrout, Watten, Scalapino, Andrews, et al. And since Language (however it is defined & explained) continues to be a dynamic force, a wave that hasn't yet crashed and dissipated upon the beach of literary history, would not such recognition by the Heath in some way break the movement's natural course?

Finnegan

↑ Index

285. David Kellogg
watten barrage
Thu 13 Nov 1997

I want to continue the (aborted) conversation on Watten's ILS lecture, "The Bride of the Assembly Line," which I think is one of the most important recent interventions in the debate about social possibilities of innovative writing. If Watten is right that "the avant-garde tradition of the material text -- from Gertrude Stein and Luis Zukofsky to Clark Coolidge and Lee Ann Brown -- has been misread in a way that is impoverished in terms of both language and culture" (p. 3), then a lot of commentary on language poetry and other types of innovative interventions need to be rethought.

The nub of Watten's argument is a critique of unspecified "possibility":

"It is, thus, claims for the possibility of form rather than the specificity of form; or the possibility of language rather than a specific use of langauge; or the possibility of critique instead of a specific politics; or the possibility of difference rather tahn a specific difference, that characterizes the current aporia of our collectively dialogic, site-specific and time-valued, manifold poetics." (p.4)

It's obvious, I think, what is being talked about here. I am reminded of critical moments such as Andrew Ross's essay "The New Sentence and Commodity Form" in Nelson and Grossman's _Marxism and the Interpretation of Culture_. Somewhere in that essay (I may have the title wrong, as my copy is at home), Ross quotes a poem (his examples are almost arbitrary) and says something like (from memory now) "Finally, we get the sense that a fair deal has been struck; the labor of reading is equal to the labor of writing." This kind of claim fits well into one of the things Watten is critiquing, namely "a defunct politics satisfied to claim that the reader is 'empowered' to make meaning from material texts" (p. 3) The thing is, Ross's is a pretty sophisticated argument, with a range of reference that runs back in Marxism at least to Gramsci and in poetry to the Objectivist attention to texts as "intellectual labor." Watten and Ross share a lot of allegiances as well, and are allied in the Watten issue of _Aerial_. Still, Watten seems to be aiming at some things that are present both in the Ross essay and by extension, all over the place, especially in some academic treatments of language writing such as Linda Renfield's, and and in the prose of our own Charles Bernstein.

I am especially sympathetic to Watten's critique of Bernstein's sometimes dismissive take on identity politics, which of course implicates lots of discussions that have taken place on this list: "In Bernstein's tendency toward a universalist, multinational politics of ideolectical writing, such a blindspot of collective nonidentity seems motivated in a regional politics of literary identity as much as it evidences a survival of the politics of modernist form" (Watten p. 10). There are other arguments and other wonders in Watten's essay too (the discussion of Coolidge is great, as is [from my limited knowledge] the whole riff on Stein and cars), but I thought I'd highlight these moments in the essay to maybe light a fire under the list.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

David Kellogg Duke University
[redacted] Program in Writing and Rhetoric
[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted] http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg/

There is no mantle
and it does not descend.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

286. Catherine Daly
Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Poet: Artist: Intellectual ???

This is from an essay entitled "Surveillance and Spectacle in Fascist Ferrara" by Diane Yvonne Ghirardo in the book of essays, "The Education of the Architect: Historiography, Urbanism, and the Growth of Architectural Knowledge" edited by Martha Pollak. I was reading it when this thread started, and I think the thread has definitely come this way: social/political movements at the beginning of the century, the role of culture in, the role of art in....

"[Antonio] Gramsci proposed a somewhat confused distinction between what he referred to as organic intellectuals and traditional intellectuals, although they were always linked to class distinctions. The former, created by social groups in the world of economic production, have the double function of constructing homogenity and of developing awareness of the groups' social and political functions beyond the specific economic ones. Traditional intellectuals already exist in a given society, and represent historical continuity, while presenting themselves as autonomous of the dominant social group. Gramsci's important point is that both types of intellectual are defined by their activities _within_ the system of social and class relations. The traditional intellectual operates within historically formed categories which become more complex and elaborate in connection with the dominant socal group. In Gramsci's view, a new social group advancing toward dominance, such as Fascism, makes one of its chief aims the assimilation of traditional intellectuals, but also speeds up the process by producing its own organic intellectuals. In general, intellectuals serve as deputies with the function of allowing the dominant social group to maintain hegemony through the spontaneous consent of the masses. ... in the case of Fascist Italy most of the cultural activities helped sustain Fascism's power. ... "

I think that the strategies of the Russian Revolutionaries vis a vis artists and intellectuals can be usefully compared and contrasted with the strategies of Italian Fascists, and the experiences of artists as well as their actual work under both regimes usefully analysed as part of this discussion.

Ahkmatova reported she said, "Yes, I believe I can [describe this]."

Catherine Daly

[redacted]

↑ Index

287. MAXINE CHERNOFF

Re: James Laughlin

Thu 13 Nov 1997

JamesLaughlion was the distinguised publisher of New Directions,which he started as young man from his family's fortune in steel. He went on to publish most of the great modernists (Pound, Williams, etc) and to champion progressive literature in general. I knew J fairly well in the 1980s (after he got stranded in a snowstorm and spent a weekend in Chicago with me, Paul Hoover, and a menagerie of our small children) and found him to be a very generous and witty man. The press itself was a real labor of love, as are all presses that start small. He himself would travel from town to town to sell books out of his car,and it wasn't until much later when Tennessee Williams and Herman Hesse became well-known that New Directions actually stabilized as a publishing house in terms of monetary success. But if he never made a dime, he would be remembered for championing writers before they were well-known, including WCW who was working in relative obscurity for many years. Those on the list or related to the list whom he published--Creeley, Rothenberg, McClure, Howe, Mayer, Hoover, Gander, Palmer, etc., and many poets through the small anthology "Language Poetries" can add far more. We saw the movie Gandhi with him and fed him his first bagel during that Chicago stay. We later stayed with him and his wife Anne, now also deceased,one summer in CT and enjoyed his wonderful library of ND Books and 1st editions. I'll miss him. --Maxine Chernoff On Thu, 13 Nov 1997, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> Could someone fill in those of us who didn't know of him as to who he was and what he did? He does seem to have had quite an impact on those listers who have posted.

↑ Index

288. Mary Burger
Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Proliferation #4 is now available, with work by Susan Gevirtz, Stephen Ratcliffe, Pamela Lu, Renee Gladman, Dan Bouchard, Beth Anderson, Joseph Torra, Tan Lin, Bill Lavender, Laura Moriarty, Leslie Scalapino, and more.

BAY AREA CONTRIBUTORS' READING:
Friday, Nov. 14, 7:30 p.m.
Modern Times Bookstore
Valencia St. & 20th St.
San Francisco

ISSUE available from:
* Modern Times Bookstore

* The Editors: (send check for $9.50 including postage, payable to M. Burger or C. Vitiello)
Mary Burger, 1253 Hampshire St., San Francisco CA 94110
or
Chris Vitiello, 2707 Farthing St., Durham NC 27704

*Small Press Distribution - coming soon!
[redacted]

↑ Index

289. David R. Israel
Re: James Laughlin
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Patrick Pritchett writes --

> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals. The rest is history, as they say. . . .

though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note, this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was, one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].

> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by keeping faith with his committment to making it new.

here here

btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect) . . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .

hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive presences on whom "so much depends" . . .

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

>langauge; or the possibility of critique instead of a specific politics; or >the possibility of difference rather tahn a specific difference, that >characterizes the current aporia of our collectively dialogic, site-specific >and time-valued, manifold poetics." (p.4)
>

I've only skimmed Watten's essay, find it provocative, but want more time to think about it. For starters though I'm tempted to ask that these "specific" politics be named. One target here is Charles Bernstein's Emersonianism. When Barry read an early version of this paper in New Hampshire, as I recall, he spontaneously added something like "No, I am not George Lukacs." But I wonder.

> It's obvious, I think, what is being talked about here. I am reminded of critical moments such as Andrew Ross's essay "The New Sentence and Commodity Form" in Nelson and Grossman's _Marxism and the Interpretation of Culture_. Somewhere in that essay (I may have the title wrong, as my copy is at home), Ross quotes a poem (his examples are almost arbitrary) and says something like (from memory now) "Finally, we get the sense that a fair deal has been struck; the labor of reading is equal to the labor of writing." This kind of claim fits well into one of the things Watten is critiquing, namely "a defunct politics satisfied to claim that the reader is 'empowered' to make meaning from material texts" (p. 3) The thing is, Ross's is a pretty sophisticated argument, with a range of reference that runs back in Marxism at least to Gramsci and in poetry to the Objectivist attention to texts as "intellectual labor." Watten and Ross share a lot of allegiances as well, and are allied in the Watten issue of _Aerial_. Still, Watten seems to be aiming at some things that are present both in the Ross essay and by extension, all over the place, especially in some academic treatments of language writing such as Linda Renfield's, and and in the prose of our own Charles Bernstein.

The critique of a discourse of a specially empowered reader in materialist poetics has been offered before and for good reason, as for instance by J. H. Prynne. But this is a critique of critical frames and rationales more than of poetic practice.

> I am especially sympathetic to Watten's critique of Bernstein's sometimes dismissive take on identity politics, which of course implicates lots of discussions that have taken place on this list: "In Bernstein's tendency toward a universalist, multinational politics of ideolectical writing, such a blindspot of collective nonidentity seems motivated in a regional politics of literary identity as much as it evidences a survival of the politics of modernist form" (Watten p. 10). There are other arguments and other wonders

Watten's essay responds primarily to Bernstein's "Poetics of the Americas." I wonder about this claim, which seems to acknowledge its fragility in its idiom. I don't know that I'd want to talk about "motivations" in the first place, but I'm a little skeptical of the purported "universalism" located in the essay. There IS an effort to find common ground where it is rarely sought. That seems a worthwhile project to me. But "universalism" is a strong claim in reading an essay that wants to "navigate between the universalizing humanisms of internationalism and the parochialism of regionalism and nationalism" while acknowledging that "our different national and cultural circumstances are . . .marked in our poems" (3). In my cursory first gallop through Watten's essay I note that "identity politics" is called a "red herring," but here is what the CB essay says about his Emersonian poetics and "identity": "So I hope it will be apparent that while I welcome the challenge of multiculturalism as it has entered U.S. arts and education in the past decade, I continue to find many of its proponents more interested in reinforcing traditional modes of representation than allowing the heterogeneity of forms and peoples that make up the cultural diversity of the Americas to transform poetic styles and personal and group identities. Yet it is hardly surprising that static conceptions of group identity represented by authentic spokespersons continue to ride roughshod over works and individuals whose identities are complex, multiple, mixed, confused, hyperactivated, miscegenated, synthetic, mutant, forming, or virtual" (3). I leave it to you to decide whether this critique of identity politics--or more exactly a version of it--is baited with a red herring. Hank Lazer has recently mentioned the example of the Heath anthology. Now it might very well be the case that an opportunity for linking the progressive purposes of specific discourses of identity politics and the politics of difference with materialist poetics has been (so far) missed or obfuscated. But in what sense is the CB claim above demonstrably "motivated in a regional politics of literary identity"? It's the word "regional" in particular that I get stuck on. The subtext, perhaps, is that CB is ONLY competing in an aesthetic game for space in the Heath. In the end that may be, sadly, true of all of us--even those who made it in--but that would be a pretty bleak way of looking at things and it certainly reads against the program articulated by CB in the essay at hand, as if hunting an Adorno there. Thus the remark about "modernist form" perhaps--though I'll want to look again at Watten's essay before standing by that connection.

One thing I am sure about--the Watten essay is an important provocation and deserving of discussion. David and Maria are right about that. I wish I had the time to do it justice, but I don't now. Maybe others will, but if it is to be discussed in its relation to the Bernstein essay it is partly a response to, I hope that folks will try to represent fairly both sides of the argument, if an argument is what we've got.

Keith Tuma

> There is no mantle
> and it does not descend.
>
> -- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

291. Charles Alexander bio for you
Thu 13 Nov 1997

Dodie:

Here's a bio for you. Anything Kevin can do to make it snappy, is fine.

And, sometime after you and Kevin send those agreements back for your readings here, also send bios we can use for press releases and a flyer.

thanks,

charles

CHARLES ALEXANDER

Charles Alexander’s books of poetry include Hopeful Buildings (Chax Press, Tucson, 1990) and arc of light / dark matter (Segue Books, New York, 1992). Two chapbooks are forthcoming in winter 1998: Four Ninety Eight to Seven from Meow Press (Buffalo, New York) and Pushing Water from Standing Stones Press (Morris, Minnesota). He has also published reviews and critical essays on contemporary literature and culture. He is the founder and director of Chax Press, which was begun in Tucson, Arizona in 1984; Chax moved to Minneapolis from 1993 through 1996, and returned to Tucson in the summer of 1996. Chax is a publisher of handmade letterpress books and trade literary editions, both of which explore innovative writing and its conjunction with book forms. Through Chax Press, from 1986 to the present Alexander has organized literary readings, talks, workshops and presentations by artists. From 1993 through 1995 Alexander was executive director of Minnesota Center for Book Arts, the nation’s most comprehensive center for the arts of the book, both in terms of programs and artists’ studio facilities. As its director, Alexander completed the production of the visual/literary artists’ book Winter Book in 1995 with visual artist Tom Rose. In addition he directed educational programs and a variety of artists’ residencies, creative productions, and other works. He was the organizer and director of the 1994 symposium Art and Language: Re-Reading the Boundless Book, one of the foundational symposiums in the recent history of the book arts. From this symposium, he edited the formative collection of essays, Talking The Boundless Book: Art, Language, and the Book Arts (Minnesota Center for Book Arts, Minneapolis, 1996).

Alexander has given poetry readings, lectures, and workshops throughout the country at colleges, universities, art centers, and other locations, including at the University of Alabama, the University of Arizona, the State University of New York at Buffalo, Painted Bride Arts Center in Philadelphia, Small Press Traffic in San Francisco, Canessa Gallery in San Francisco, the University of Washington, Pacific Lutheran University in Tacoma, Scottsdale Center for the Arts, and many more. Alexander has also performed poetry in galleries and art centers, has collaborated with musicians and dancers, and in general brings to poetry a broad sense of artistic and collaborative possibility.

Poet Robert Creeley writes that Alexander's work "hears a complex literacy of literalizing words. By means of a fencing of statements, sense is found rather than determined. The real is as thought." And, concerning his 1992 book, arc of light/dark matter, the poet and critic Ron Silliman writes, "Now Charles Alexander pushes the envelope of what is possible in writing even further, to the ends of the universe. And beyond. . . This is the most sensuous, intelligent, rewarding writing I've read in ages."

Alexander was born in Honolulu, grew up mostly in Norman, Oklahoma, was educated at Stanford University and the University of Wisconsin-Madison, and has lived in Tucson for most of the last 14 years, including at present, with his wife Cynthia Miller, one of the premier visual artists of the American Southwest.

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

292. Charles Alexander
oh oh oh
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Very sorry that through quirks of email address-keeping and personal error, I sent a message with my bio to the entire poetics list, and not just to its intended recipient

in utter embarrassment,

charles alexander

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

293. R M Daley
loy lovers
Fri 14 Nov 1997

--- writing to wonder if anyone has any suggestions for getting a copy of a Mina Loy interview by Paul Blackburn in i think 1966, aspen, colorado- ive heard it throuhg once but no longer have access and no libraries around here can help- or any other hints towards other interesting materials - recordings of loy, eg- are greatly appreciated

thanks, rachel d.

↑ Index

294. rsillima
William Matthews
Fri 14 Nov 1997

The poet William Matthews died of a heart attack the same day as Laughlin. While his poetics were not mine, he seemed like a nice enough fellow back when he was living next door to David McAleavey's Ithaca home in 1970.

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/silliman/

↑ Index

295. henry
Re: Acmeists
Fri 14 Nov 1997

On Thu, 13 Nov 1997 15:12:26 -0500 William Burmeister Prod said:
>Fair enough Henry and well taken. And so fare thee well, thou never shall hear >from herald again.

>
>- Master William Sheakespearemeister

Be not confounded nor dismayed, Willy; perhaps e'en thou hast won ye "argument" , and far be it from me to tether round chit-chat wi' snappish rebukes. Thou hast thy right angles, I mine, & there be room in yon cyberfields here'bout for gabble far & wee. E'en so, I bid thee hasten with thy seconds to Mistress Bull's Tavern 3 past the hour of noon & we shall decide with steel.
Go'w'b'j'etc.'it please thee. - Sir Henry

↑ Index

296. henry gould
Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?
Fri 14 Nov 1997

The example of Montale could be investigated (& has been) in relation to the issues you raise (not to mention in connection with the renewed fire under the Watten/Bernstein tango). Montale was under attack for several decades variously from left and right for "hermeticism"; in his poem "Piccolo Testamente" (sp?) he renounces allegiance to either camp; in an essay he criticizes the eagerness (the professional duty) of intellectuals to take sides - or rather, he doesn't question their eagerness, but questions their claim to being what he calls "free men". I think he means in this case "free artists".

David Kellogg says the Watten discussion was "aborted", and he's right: my opening salvo was never answered (because out of the frame of this discourse?). I said the provocation Watten provides (between "soft" and "hard" language poetry?) was vitiated by the apparent politicization of art on both sides; the "return to context and authorial (political) motivation" is simply a rehash in intellectually sexy terms of the PERENNIAL dilemma of poetry - an autonomous activity - in a tangled web of interests. Poetry is BOTH "poetry per se" and steeped in motivation and context, and this is absolutely nothing new. Watten has done a signal service, though, in POINTING OUT THE OBVIOUS. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

297. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

---

me, i'll stay out of the argument, if that's what it is, suggested by the watten and bernstein pieces... i find both essays to coincide in many ways, even if the emphases differ...

but to say that i found watten's discussion of norms valuable, and that i think he's on target when he identifies norms as products as opposed to "deductive schema," incl. his riff on "nonstandard norms"... this is helpful specifically b/c it suggests that something can be done about norms (e.g., do it y/ourselves), and that doing something about them may itself become, if one isn't careful and as watten indicates, oppressive...

best,

joe

↑ Index

298. Robert Archambeau
What's Up in Sweden
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Does anyone out there know anything about what's happening in Swedish poetry? I'll be at Lund University next year and would like to connect with the poetry community, about which I know almost nothing (though I did once read the old Swallow Press book _Contemporary Swedish Poetry_).

Bob Archambeau

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

the user experiences
no need of acting
  -Tom Raworth

↑ Index

299. Hank Lazer
Re: Reading
Fri 14 Nov 1997

If you're in or near Tuscaloosa today, there will be a free reading/book-event of some interest:

7:30 p.m., AB Theater, University of Alabama campus poet-musician-painter Jake Berry will perform sections from BRAMBU DREZI, Book 2. Assisting in the evening's events: poets Jack & Adelle Foley (Oakland, CA), Jon Berry, and Hank Lazer, 3 video monitors, photographer-musician Wayne Sides, dancers Amy Downing and Buffy Barfoot, and Rodney Thomaston and Kevin Humphrey on percussion.

Y'all come down.

↑ Index

300. William Burmeister Prod
Re: a little JB for today
Fri 14 Nov 1997

On Nov 13, 1:50pm, henry gould wrote:
> Subject: a little JB for today

> Poetry is stronger than the subtle fussing of french litterateurs.

Always true!

> "I schyegol razlivatsia v tsyentre provalochnoii Ravenni."
>
> [And the goldfinch burst into song in the center of its wire Ravenna.]
>
> - J. Brodksy
> -- End of excerpt from henry gould

Ya yishoo nye ochin horosho govariyu rooski
(I still don't speak Russian very well)

WB

↑ Index

301. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Fri 14 Nov 1997

---

a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not so explicitly...

At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>Patrick Pritchett writes --
>
>> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>> The rest is history, as they say. . . .

>
>though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note, >this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was,
>one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].
>
>> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by >> keeping faith with his committment to making it new.
>
>here here
>
>btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question >is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient >Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study >root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect)
>. . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .
>
>hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive >presences on whom "so much depends" . . .
>
>d.i.
> .
> .....
> .....
> \\\/////\\\\\
> > david raphael israel <
> >> washington d.c. <<
> | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇ (home)
> | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇ (office)
> ==========
> | thy centuries follow each other
> | perfecting a small wild flower
> | (Tagore)
> //\\\\\/////

↑ Index

302. Maria Damon

Re: oh oh oh

Fri 14 Nov 1997

At 10:44 PM -0700 11/13/97, Charles Alexander wrote:
>Very sorry that through quirks of email address-keeping and personal error,
>I sent a message with my bio to the entire poetics list, and not just to >its intended recipient

>
>in utter embarrassment,
>
>charles alexander
>
>
>charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] >chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing >books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision >http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ :: http://alexwritdespub.com

now charles, don't be embarrassed; the more we know about you the more we love you

↑ Index

303. Maria Damon
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

At 8:05 AM -0600 11/14/97, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote: >me, i'll stay out of the argument, if that's what it is, suggested by the >watten and bernstein pieces... i find both essays to coincide in many ways, >even if the emphases differ...
>
>but to say that i found watten's discussion of norms valuable, and that i >think he's on target when he identifies norms as products as opposed to >"deductive schema," incl. his riff on "nonstandard norms"... this is >helpful specifically b/c it suggests that something can be done about norms >(e.g., do it y/ourselves), and that doing something about them may itself >become, if one isn't careful and as watten indicates, oppressive...
>
>best,
>
>joe

one thing i like about watten's critique not of charles but of aesthetic universalism of any kind (and of course i adore charles so this is not about personalities but about ideas, lest anyone jump all over me for being disloyal to my listmaster) is precisely that; i value the eclecticism and wide embrace of, say, "ethnopoetics" but have deep problems with the ethics and politics of subsuming certain artifacts from "other cultures" under an umbrella of "good poetry" to the exclusion of others, because of some presumed norm (western-modernistpostmodernist) of what "good poetry" is, without any regard for what is considered powerful utterance/good poetry in the context that gave rise to that artifact or even, aesthetic considerations aside altogether, why this artifact exists in the first place, what were the circumstances of its production and how that affects our access to it, reception of it, understanding of it.

↑ Index

304. David Kellogg
Re: Frederick Turner's The Culture of Hope
Fri 14 Nov 1997

On Sat, 8 Nov 1997 [redacted] wrote:
>
> David, excuse any heavy-handedness in my response to your post. I think > we are essentially in agreement about the dangers of any scientific > reductionism (Darwinian fundamentalism, nostalgic empiricism, > utilitarianism, what have you) that prescribes a specific type of poetry, > but I heartily disagree with your assertion that informed speculation > concerning poetry in evolutionary terms cannot tell us anything useful > about contemporary possibilities.

Thanks. We may indeed be closer than it first appeared.

Let me clarify. I could imagine all sorts of investigations (evolutionary and other) that might provide points of entry into various poetic imaginings. What I _don't_ think such investigations can do is provide before-the-fact pre- or proscriptions as to what poetry might do in this or that instance. I don't think evolutionary psychology can do this in any area of cultural activity (from war to lovemaking), because it is impossible to separate the biological from the cultural. Further, separating biological from cultural materials always seems to end up repeating a wheat/chaff sort of opposition that privileges the biological. Example: suppose I "discover" the biological roots of poetry, and I write material that wilfully disengages from those roots, resists them even, and call it poetry. Would that resistance disqualify calling my engagements "poetry"?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

There is no mantle
and it does not descend.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

305. David R. Israel
Re: Acmeists, now ... Futurists?
Fri 14 Nov 1997

ladies & gentlemen,

could I trouble someone to identify the source (book? journal?) of the articles being discussed here -- one by B. Watten, one by Ch.
Bernstein, evidently -- somehow I missed that info (if it were stated) -- thanks,
d.i.

↑ Index

306. henry gould
things happened in Providence
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Last night Peter Johnson and Susan Grant read at Hall Library in Cranston. Peter Johnson is an independent character from Buffalo no less (he just heard about the EPC in his home town) who edits PROSE POEM, is an example of someone with a very clear focus who manages to solicit, read & select from over 5000 prose poems a year for his mag. He gave a very tight entertaining reading of his own & others' work.

Susan Grant edits an annual called the NEWPORT REVIEW; this may have been her first reading. Poetry is great as a vehicle for FREE EXPRESSION, in this it's like medicine. Among other more serious things she read a poetic epistle to one of our Rhode Island state senators, Patrick Kennedy, from a woman sitting in a "clean" laundry basket, asking why oral sex was against the law in RI.

The Hall Library has just agreed to catalog Poetry Mission materials for permanent housing there, a good sign, so thank you all again who made donations to the seed collection, they will be in good hands! We hope it becomes a good resource here.

Keith Waldrop also read in Providence last night, but for obvious reasons I couldn't be there. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

307. aerialedge
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

In a message dated 11/15/97 1:48:17 AM, you wrote:

> without any regard for what is considered powerful utterance/good poetry in the context that gave rise to that artifact or even, aesthetic considerations aside altogether, why this artifact exists in the first place, what were the circumstances of its production and how that affects our access to it, reception of it, understanding of it.

is it possible?

i.e. is it possible to understand that 'sufficiently'?

that word contingent again again.

in any case. or even if in one case how many more than one can one. it seems information coagulates/constellates but implicit in the questioning is the possibility of a knowledge one can attain yes?

rather say, perhaps this is close to Watten-- the form is the knowledge, in its _movement_, one's experience of that movement.

from XYZ of Reading: "We question a question in order to fill in its form."

tho of course in bureaucratise that is exactly what one must not do, you just fill out the form, _their_ form.

so perhaps looking at seriality, questioning its form, of utmost these days.

↑ Index

308. Matthew Hart
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Sorry to insert such a mundane point into what's a very interesting argument to lurk in, but could someone either post or backchannel the full bibliographical details of the Watten essay? I have some investment in this argument, but am loath to step forward having not read the main occasion, so to speak . . .

Thank you,

Matt Hart

↑ Index

309. David Kellogg
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Watten's essay is "The Bride of the Assembly Line: From Material Text to Cultural Poetics," Impercipient Lecture Series 1.8, available from Steve Evans & Jennifer Moxley, 61 East Manning Street, Providence, RI, 02906-4008. $5 for single issue, $25 for ten issues.
~~~
~~~

here's a description of the end of omega by one of those long wave nerds.

Bill L . . . . . .

Omega shut down! Here's a copy of my report e-mailed to a few other people and also a spectrogram made of the tape:

Well, I got a nice recording of Omega's last beeps and also two nights of nice whistlers too, especially this morning, 01 October, between 1100-1330 UT. There was also some intermittant dawn chorus starting at about 1230 UT and going until after 1500 UT - I had not yet caught chorus this summer or fall until now, so I was really glad to hear some chorus even though it was not very strong, and overall a really nice 2 days of whistler listening. Many whistlers this morning (October 01) had echoes too! The whistlers seemed to be generated by fairly nearby lightning - not too local but within 1000 miles.

I have found that indeed (and this is shown in a more recent book on magnetospheric physics), whistlers don't follow exact paths and congugate points AT ALL(!!!). Often, loud whistlers at any locale may be generated by lightning somewhat far away (1000-2000 miles perhaps) while more closeby lightning is NOT generating the loudest whistlers (which may be loud 1000 miles away somewhere ELSE!) Listening since mid-august has given me quite a bit of observation in this regard and countless examples on tape. I mentioned this somewhat subjectively in my VLF STORY I wrote a few years back and I'm even more sure of this. Sooo, Mexican or Montanan lightning may make LOUD California whistlers, and at the same time California lightning may make for loud whistlers in Colorado or even Kansas (to use a scenario). Certainly, there are times when nearby lightning does make for the loudest whistlers, but this is more infrequent in my observations than the scenario above.

Anyway back to Omega's shutdown--I started recording at 0257 UT 9/30. I made a WWV time check at 0259 on the tape and then let it run with the WR-4b whistler receiver set to high-pass--lots of Omega into the tape recorder. At about 0259:30, Omega D (North Dakota) shut down, leaving Omega-C Hawaii going for about 2-3 more of its cycles. About 0300 (or within a few seconds) and after its two 11.8 kHz beeps, Omega C went off. Both D and C did not shut off abruptly, but did a sort of 'fade-out' over a 1-2 second period. Interestingly, going over the tape in slow motion revealed a third, very weak Omega station running on until a minute or so later - the 10.2 kHz beep was noticed. Probably H-Japan, the next strongest station here in Califirnia usually.

By 0301 UT, all that was left was the Russian Alpha system - short beeps in clusters of three beeps, a pause, then three beeps again in downward frequency steps. Russian Alpha is much weaker and higher up in frequency (up to 14.1 kHz) then Omega was and has a far lower duty-cycle, and so the natural radio band is really MUCH cleaner sounding suddenly! It's also fun to observe Alpha propagation - I guess the strongest one I get is from Siberia--it is stronger toward sunrise than at any other time of the day by 3-6 dB or so.

The spectrogram above shows Omega Station "D" North Dakota, and Omega Station "C" Oahu, Hawaii with their last beeps. Recorded on my van-based WR-4b VLF receiver with 2 meter whip antenna up 3 meters high. The tape was made on a Marantz PMD-212 with cromium tape and the WR-4b in high-pass/emphasis mode.

The tape was copied into a sound file at 44.1 kHz/16 bit. Then it was FFT filtered in Coolwave 1.5 and 9 to 14 kHz was emphasised by 15 dB. Then I ran a spectrogram on it and then edited the spectrogram adding the labels.

Notice that there is a weak short-beep station transmitting - that is Russian Alpha.

There are supposedly three(?) stations in the Alpha chain. Does any reader know of info on the Russian Alpha system - locations, frequencies and format? Certainly, Alpha is going to continue for a while and it is going to be noticed by some listeners even though it is fairly weak. I'd like to put Alpha information into the WR-3/3E VLF Listening Guide and the VLF Listener's Handbook replacing the Omega info.

More about the defunct Omega Radio Navigation System is in the WR- 3/3E LISTENING GUIDE Under the Omega section. This will not remain in the Guide for too much longer.

Stephen P. McGreevy
P.O. Box 928
Lone Pine, CA 93545-0928 USA

http://www.triax.com/vlfradio/omega.htm

↑ Index

311. David Kellogg
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Keith, you're right to point out the need to bring Bernstein's piece directly into the conversation, instead of peripherally. I'll do that when I have it on hand (don't right now).

Joe Amato is also right to point out that there are lots of convergences between the approaches. Watten's take-no-prisoners style has always, to me, stressed differences that assume a ground of agreement which some might not recognize. It's part of his way of making conversation.

As to the "red herring" issue. It might or might not be accurate to charge Bernstein's essay in this way; however, I think it's not off the mark to suggest a certain visible tendency in the way arguments are carrried out over issues such as the Heath turf wars. Way back as far as Ron Silliman's _The New Sentence_, the point about competition among excluded poetries for "slots in the metanetwork" was being made by writers associated with the language movement; while Ron is about as pluralist a poet as I know, and has emphasized the specificity of his approach in more recent essays (like the one in _The Politics of Poetic Form_), identifying the institutional issue as important is both right and problematic. What Watten is trying to do here, I think, is intervene in a way that prevents the politics of poetry from being reduced to a merely literary politics. In that sense, he reads Bernstein as symptomatic, even though, as we all know, they have more in common than many other poets.

Watten's piece and Bob Perelman's Marginalization have this in common: they represent a continuation of some debates that took place in the seventies, but in a new context: now that language writing is being academically recognized, that continuing debate is -- can't help but be -- (mis)recognized as fragmentation.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

large part to Laughlin that you can pick up much of Hermann Hesse's work at your local library.

Brent

At 09:23 AM 11/14/97 -0600, you wrote:
>a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing >company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma >and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not >so explicitly...
>
>At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>>Patrick Pritchett writes --
>>
>>> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>>> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >>> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >>> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>>> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>>
>>though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note,
>>this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was,
>>one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].
>>
>>> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by >>> keeping faith with his committment to making it new.
>>
>>here here
>>
>>btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question
>>is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient >>Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study >>root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect)
>>. . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .
>>
>>hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive >>presences on whom "so much depends" . . .
>>
>>d.i.
>> .
>> .....

```
>> ............
>> \\\\
```

↑ Index

315. Pritchett,Pat
Re: James Laughlin
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Interesting observation, Maria. Pound was, I suppose, nothing if not patronizing. This tendency to lord it over "lesser mortals" seems over to time to have become magnified into his psychosis. Funny thing is though, I can't think of a better word to describe the institutionalized sexism you allude to. And this remark from Pound to JL by the same poet who satirized such patronizing attitudes in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberly": "... and give up poetry, my boy, there's no money in it."

Patrick Pritchett

From: Maria Damon
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: James Laughlin
Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:06PM

a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not so explicitly...

At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>Patrick Pritchett writes --
>
>> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>

↑ Index

316. Brent Long
Portable Plateau
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Micheal Hoerman's new literary magazine, _The Portable Plateau_, is getting ready for its second issue. As some of you know, the first issue contained work by Tess Gallagher, some previously unpublished Langston Hughes, Betsy Robin

Schwarts, Frank Stanford, and others. Next issue has Gary Snyder, Al Young, John Clelland Holmes (possibly previously unpublished, though I am unsure), and some others. Anyone interested in submitting or subscribing should contact Mike at [redacted] or call him at [redacted]. Also, for those of you who love snail mail, P.O. Box 755 Joplin, MO 64801

Best,
Brent

↑ Index

317. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Fri 14 Nov 1997

At 5:14 PM -0500 11/14/97, Brent Long wrote:
>maria,
>Whether or not you agree with who he published, Laughlin's contributions to >20th Century literature are immense. Keep in mind that it is due in large >part to Laughlin that you can pick up much of Hermann Hesse's work at your >local library.
>
>Brent

brent: you seem to have missed my point, which was not to chide laughlin for being a publisher (you may have noticed i was among the first to respond to marjorie's post), but to chide pound for (if the anecdote is accurate) suggesting laughlin give up his own writing in order to devote his considerable talent and resources to publish --surprise surprise --pound himself. i said it sounded like the same old, though usually gendered, story: "honey, don't do your own writing, give up everything to support ME and MY writing." it is good to hear from others that laughlin did not entirely abandon his own writing after all.
>
>
>
>At 09:23 AM 11/14/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing >>company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma
>>and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>>me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >>certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not >>so explicitly...
>>

>>At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>>>Patrick Pritchett writes --
>>>
>>>> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>>>> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >>>> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >>>> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>>>> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>>>
>>>though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note,
>>>this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was,
>>>one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].
>>>
>>>> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by >>>> keeping faith with his committment to making it new.
>>>
>>>here here
>>>
>>>btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question
>>>is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient >>>Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study >>>root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect)
>>>. . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .
>>>
>>>hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive >>>presences on whom "so much depends" . . .
>>>
>>>d.i.
>>> .
>>> .....
>>> .....
>>> \\\\

>>
>>

↑ Index

318. Safdie Joseph

Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading

Fri 14 Nov 1997

Mary,

If this gets to you in time, perhaps you can send my regards to Stephen Ratcliffe, who I published several times in a magazine I did in the late eighties, _Peninsula_. Tell me to send me an e-mail or two!

I didn't know about your magazine. Are you accepting stuff these days? Just finished a new long poem that I think might feel comfortable in your pages.

Anyway, hope tonight's a success!

Best,

Joe Safdie

> ----------
> From: Mary Burger[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:42 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
>
> Proliferation #4 is now available, with work by Susan Gevirtz, Stephen Ratcliffe, Pamela Lu, Renee Gladman, Dan Bouchard, Beth Anderson, Joseph > Torra, Tan Lin, Bill Lavender, Laura Moriarty, Leslie Scalapino, and more.
>
> BAY AREA CONTRIBUTORS' READING:
> Friday, Nov. 14, 7:30 p.m.
> Modern Times Bookstore
> Valencia St. & 20th St.
> San Francisco
>
> ISSUE available from:
>  Modern Times Bookstore*
>
>  The Editors: (send check for $9.50 including postage, payable to M. Burger or C. Vitiello)*
> Mary Burger, 1253 Hampshire St., San Francisco CA 94110
> or

> Chris Vitiello, 2707 Farthing St., Durham NC 27704
>
> Small Press Distribution - coming soon!*
> [redacted]

↑ Index

319. William Burmeister Prod
Re: quote for the day
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Harold Rhenisch wrote:

> I was trying to work out the idea that if people were responding to the trace of a foreign aesthetic, or the way in which it manifested itself within the parameters of their receiving technology (or culture), very little communication is going to take place: what will be communicated will be only a series of traces, which seem to me to be terribly short-lived and unstable isotopes.

The short time traces have always been unavoidable in poetry (even desirable I might think; a lot more than we can quantify gets communicated in short spaces). This is subtlety and something for poets of the now and the future to develop.

> When we shift to a different type of text (from conservative poetry to lang-po, for instance, or from Disneyland sound-bites to T.S. Eliot) we will get messed up, because we will process the signal automatically, but we will be processing it incorrectly. It will be unreadable. A reader willing to do the work will correct this, by switching to manual processing, then building up a new and more sophisticated processing system, which can eventually process the material correctly.

And a quiet revolution has taken place.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

320. Safdie Joseph
Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Sorry sorry sorry . . . but glad to report that the old expression "my ears are burning" has some exact neuro-physical referents!

↑ Index

321. Aviva Vogel
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-14 18:50:37 EST, you write:

<< Keith, you're right to point out the need to bring Bernstein's piece directly into the conversation, instead of peripherally. I'll do that when I have it on hand (don't right now).
>>

YES! I would love that. I'm having a hard time without it. While I'm fascinated with this discussion, it's fragmented to such a degree that part of the fascination is puzzling out the missing content. I'd like to have a more complete understanding!

Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

322. Brent Long
Dugan/out of print books
Fri 14 Nov 1997

After a varied string of posts on another list, I heard that Alan Dugan's poems are now all completely out of print. I assume this is true since a friend of mine who knows him told me so, but I am wondering where I might get copies of Poems 1, 2, and 4. Any help would be greatly appreciated.

Best,

Brent

↑ Index

323. P.Standard Schaefer
Border's Books/Union Petition
Fri 14 Nov 1997

To the Poetics List:

I got the petition e-mailed to me so I thought I'd post it so people could know about what's going on with Border's Books. Essentially, they're bullying the workers and threatening to fire them, ect., should they try to organize. I'm under the impression health benefits are part of the concern.

Send mail/signed copies to Mr. Lichenstein.

Nelson Lichenstein
Department of History

U. of Virginia
Charlottesville, VA 22903

We hereby demand that Border's, Inc. bargain in good faith and negotiate a fair and equitable contract with their employees who exercised their legal right by voting to be represented by the United Food and Commercial Workers, AFL-CIO.

Further we demand that Borders, Inc. cease and desist from all actions intended to intimidate, or demean its employees; that Borders, Inc. affirm the employees' legal right to form and join a Union, and remain neutral in employees' efforts to organize.

Paul Vangelisti
Writer & teacher
Los Angeles

Robert Crosson
Writer
Los Angeles

Standard Schaefer
Writer
Pasadena

Evan Calbi
Writer/Editor
Los Angeles

↑ Index

324. Layne Russell

Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading

Fri 14 Nov 1997

Safdie Joseph wrote:
>
> Mary,
>
> If this gets to you in time, perhaps you can send my regards to Stephen > Ratcliffe, who I published several times in a magazine I did in the late > eighties, _Peninsula_. Tell me to send me an e-mail or two!

Safdie,

just heard Stephen read at a Russian River Writers Guild reading here in Sonoma County. he was excellent. he read from new works, then all talked with him about his writing. I see he has at least 15 books...and I came home with one of them (Sculpture), kindly signed. He also asked me to subscribe him to our poetry email list Socopoet. nice.

Layne

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

http://www.sonic.net/layne
A Quiet Place

↑ Index

325. Henry Gould
friday's riddle
Fri 14 Nov 1997

Quotes from Herbet Schneidau, SACRED DISCONTENT:

Myth...is a kind of cultural glue; in this aspect, perhaps, it is to men what mutual grooming is to apes.

Christianity attacks human life at so deep a level that it disallows all existing culture. (Amos N. Wilder)

God deliberately gave Israel bad laws "which was to punish them, so that they would learn that I am the Lord." (Jeremiah)

There are no great Hebrew culture heroes who found cities: in fact it is questionable whether there are "Hebrew" cities at all. (Herbert Schneidau, a.k.a. Jack Spandrift)

Though I count myself innocent, it may declare me a hypocrite. (Job)

Now the ordinary man in society - and Hebrew society was no exception - cannot live comfortably with the suspicion that his acts are meaningless; therefore, as Isaiah says, he hears but does not hear.

As Hosea notes, many of the utterances sound like "raving" to the ordinary man. But Ezekiel, who had long periods of trance and aphasia, seems the most likely target for long-distance psychoanalysis.

Recently many studies have stressed the usefulness of aggression in stabilizing social structures; hen's pecking orders and baboons' dominance patterns furnish provocative analogies to such groups as the Eddystone Islanders, whose mythology served to order and control the aggression which, when suppressed, may rot the cultural fiber. No doubt similar relations between mythology and violence were widespread in man's early millenia... (Burnwatt Charstein)

...in spite of all the tomes that have been written on So-and-so's "use of the Bible", the point is how the Bible uses authors, not vice versa.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

The significant lack of myth in the Bible may have much to do with its unsettling effect. (Herbert Schneidau)
- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

326. Keith Tuma
Re: watten barrage
Fri 14 Nov 1997

On Fri, 14 Nov 1997 16:19:51 -0500 David Kellogg said:
>Keith, you're right to point out the need to bring Bernstein's piece >directly into the conversation, instead of peripherally. I'll do that >when I have it on hand (don't right now).
>
>Joe Amato is also right to point out that there are lots of convergences >between the approaches. Watten's take-no-prisoners style has always, to >me, stressed differences that assume a ground of agreement which some >might not recognize. It's part of his way of making conversation.
>
>As to the "red herring" issue. It might or might not be accurate to >charge Bernstein's essay in this way; however, I think it's not off the >mark to suggest a certain visible tendency in the way arguments are >carrried out over issues such as the Heath turf wars. Way back as far as >Ron Silliman's _The New Sentence_, the point about competition among >excluded poetries for "slots in the metanetwork" was being made by writers >associated with the language movement; while Ron is about as pluralist a >poet as I know, and has emphasized the specificity of his approach in more >recent essays (like the one in _The Politics of Poetic Form_), identifying >the institutional issue as important is both right and problematic. What >Watten is trying to do here, I think, is intervene in a way that prevents >the politics of poetry from being reduced to a merely literary politics.
>In that sense, he reads Bernstein as symptomatic, even though, as we all >know, they have more in common than many other poets.
>

Hi David,

Yes on the "merely literary politics" business, but a cynic might say that insofar as the first agenda in BW's essay is arguing the necessity of a "cultural poetics" BW is "merely" caught up in a methodological "turf war" and one primarily situated in the academy. Though by the terms of the essay there would be no such thing as "merely" as the victorious and vanquished discourses and tastes, the standard/hegemonic and non-, would both be products within the social totality and not necessarily opposed or in a binary formation. Or so he seems to be saying tho I'm cryptic here. And yes too of course on BW and CB having more in common than others but the target is not so much CB's practice or even for that matter his poetics so much as the modernism/modernity distinction BW sees perpetuated in Altieri especially but also in CB. BW's "social reflexivity" as against Altieri's "reflexive consciousness" comes clear, as does the contingency and non- translatibility (god what a word if it is one) of BOTH the normative/ non- normative distinction AND "identity politics." (Once saw a french scholar shake his head befuddled when I tried to explain how that phrase usually means in the US, and by the way I was a little unfair to BW yesterday as there's a discussion in his essay of CB's reading of McKay that acknowledges that CB is grappling with these issues.)

I think that down the road it's likely that BW means to "argue" with Greenblatt and the fact that that's just a footnote here is just a little frustrating. Though the point of disagreement is clear: BW believes the author returns in Greenblatt's cultural poetics in less-than-useful ways, even while he sides with Greenblatt's project in other ways.

I take it that the most useful provocations here turn on several sentences I'll now quote for those who don't have the essay--you'll have read them. No time to comment on them now. Maybe later. In the event that I can't find the time I'll go on record as saying that when BW writes that "seeing the material text as cultural production may lead to new vistas of comprehension, and to new and as yet unanticipated forms of participation" I want to agree with the first proposition while noting that the last is both hortatory and hopeful, dare I say "impossibly" utopian. It may be true that the most political thing that langpo did was not disrupt the norms of poetic practice or hybridize genre or whatever but build institutions, networks of exchange, and etc. which acknowledged the collectivity and "social reflexivity" of poetic practice, and it may be that we need to be reminded that "there's no outside" as the cliche goes, but the idea that a "cultural poetics" will produce new forms of participation--well that's hopeful. And there's more to say. Now for those who ask for more text & w/ the reminder that one can dial up Steve Evans and get the whole thing here's a few passages. [Oh and the CB is _Modernism/Modernity 3.3 (September 1996), from Johns Hopkins UP.]

"The trouble with self-reflexivity as the value of form, in this sense, is that it insists on imagining itself as apart from the world that constitutes it. One can only read oneself out of the world" (34). [One might italicize "read"]

"Norms are products, not deductive schema of oppressive rationality, although they can be used for oppressive ends. Nonstandard norms are also produced; they are not simply defined against the abstraction of normativity. The work of the language School, if produced within a system of social feedback necessary for meaning and comprehension, may in turn end up reproducing itself as a new norm. If this were to happen, a nonstandard mode of expression might simply be inserted into the space of a vacated norm of the expressive lyric" (33). [Big word here would be "if"?]

"The assembly line is a form of modernity that was never 'invented.' Likewise the Language School had no authorial origins, but began as a sequence of 'improvements' within the form of organization that developed between writers in _This_" (19).

> Watten's piece and Bob Perelman's Marginalization have this in common: they represent a continuation of some debates that took place in the seventies, but in a new context: now that language writing is being academically recognized, that continuing debate is -- can't help but be -- (mis)recognized as fragmentation.

I'd like to hear more on this, David.
>
>Cheers,
>David

best,
Keith

> *~~~

I would say that there have been few poets as generous with other artists. Patricia

On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

> At 5:14 PM -0500 11/14/97, Brent Long wrote:
> maria,
> Whether or not you agree with who he published, Laughlin's contributions to 20th Century literature are immense. Keep in mind that it is due in large part to Laughlin that you can pick up much of Hermann Hesse's work at your local library.
>
> Brent
>
> brent: you seem to have missed my point, which was not to chide laughlin for being a publisher (you may have noticed i was among the first to respond to marjorie's post), but to chide pound for (if the anecdote is accurate) suggesting laughlin give up his own writing in order to devote his considerable talent and resources to publish --surprise surprise --pound himself. i said it sounded like the same old, though usually gendered, story: "honey, don't do your own writing, give up everything to support ME and MY writing." it is good to hear from others that laughlin did not entirely abandon his own writing after all.
>
> At 09:23 AM 11/14/97 -0600, you wrote:
> a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not so explicitly...
>
> At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
> Patrick Pritchett writes --
>
> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals. The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>
> *though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note, this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was, one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].*
>
> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by keeping faith with his committment to making it new.

here here

btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect) . . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .

hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive presences on whom "so much depends" . . .

d.i.

```
.
.....
............
\\\
```

329. David Kellogg
Re: James Laughlin
Sat 15 Nov 1997

On Sat, 15 Nov 1997, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:
>
> i can't help but express my dismay at the perhaps utterly blind reductivism
> of summing up laughlin's life in terms of his connection with pound only > and further summing up pound as "an aging fascist."

I don't think maria meant to reduce JL's life this way, but the post _did_ have that effect. (Sorry md: gotta call 'em as I see 'em.)

Besides, when Laughlin met Pound, Pound was neither old nor demonstrably a fascist (yet).

I wouldn't want to reduce Zukofsky, or Olson, or Bunting, in this way -- those who have done so mainly want to dismiss those writers from literary history.

Why is it easier with a person labelled "publisher" than simply "poet"? What about "critic"? Will Hugh Kenner's life and work, when he dies, be similarly reduced to his visiting Pound at the urging of Marshall McLuhan? I hope the hell not.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

living at it, but because he believed that Laughlin simply didn't have the talent or sensibility ever to be very good at it. (I think he was more or less right--I've read a lot of Laughlin's poetry, and I can't recall a single one of the poems that sticks in my mind as particularly good. I suppose it would be way uncool for me to characterize his work as relentlessly _minor_, but most of it falls right into the category of personal, voice-based lyric that most of us on the list seem to dislike and find retrograde. What I _do_ find intermittently interesting is his typewriter-space based prosody--each line determined by the number of spaces, rather than syllables or words. But that doesn't keep me reading the poems.) You draw a fascinating parallel, Maria, but what's the significance? Pound tells Laughlin not to write; Emerson leaves Emma Lazarus out of Parnassus. So what? The latter may well be a case of sexism, the former certainly isn't. Does his treatment of Laughlin mean we should discount Pound's immense aid and sponsorship of younger poets? Go back and reread the letters to Mary Barnard and Iris Barry in Pound's _Selected Letters_ if you want to say something about the gendered basis of Pound's mentorship practices. (Of course, it may be a class thing--Pound dismissing Laughlin's work as a rich boy's dilletantism--but I suspect that we're much less willing to rush to the defence of the well-endowed minority.) Sorry, but I find it odd that, in a moment when everyone is striving to say nicenesses about Laughlin's position in 20th-century poetry publishing, you want to bend over backwards to make Pound's dismissal of his work somehow symbolic of male poets' squashing female poets' talents. Sadly, it happens all the time--but it didn't happen here, and Laughlin's publishing track record shows that, of small press publishers in the US, he wasn't particularly guilty of that sin. best, Mark Scroggins

On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:

> Interesting observation, Maria. Pound was, I suppose, nothing if not patronizing. This tendency to lord it over "lesser mortals" seems over to time to have become magnified into his psychosis. Funny thing is though, I can't think of a better word to describe the institutionalized sexism you allude to. And this remark from Pound to JL by the same poet who satirized such patronizing attitudes in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberly": "... and give up poetry, my boy, there's no money in it."
>
> Patrick Pritchett
> ---
> From: Maria Damon
> To: POETICS
> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
> Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:06PM
>
> a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing > company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not so explicitly...

>
> At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
> Patrick Pritchett writes --
>
> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals. The rest is history, as they say. . . .

↑ Index

331. Burt Kimmelman
Re: James Laughlin
Sat 15 Nov 1997

My apologies to Maria if I took a remark of hers that was quoted by someone else out of context. I'm afraid I may have been hasty and I guess I ought to resist wading in with off the top of my head opinions when I am busy enough with other things so that I am not carefully sifting through the Poetics posting. But I still think Joel Oppenheimer was right (even though I myself at times pose as one of those "professionals").

Burt

↑ Index

332. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Sat 15 Nov 1997

okay; thanks for reminding me that people are complex. both of our "takes" can be true i guess.

At 2:17 AM -0500 11/15/97, Patricia Cockram wrote:
>Maria,
>Ordinarily I would agree with your assessment. But Pound was famous for >helping any and all poets whose work he thought was serious (that includes >women, by the way), and he often did so before promoting his own work.
>For all his faults, he was hugely generous, even to those who were not >his friends or with whom he did not agree politically. Laughlin would say >so himself.

>
>Pound was not always right, but my guess is that he sincerely >felt that Laughlin didn't have it in him to be a poet. Sometimes he >didn't think he had it in him to be a publisher either, judging from some >of his letters to Jay complaining about the amount of time he spent on the >ski slopes instead of getting the books out.
>
>I would say that there have been few poets as generous with other artists.
>Patricia
>
>On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Maria Damon wrote:
>
>> At 5:14 PM -0500 11/14/97, Brent Long wrote:
>> >maria,
>> >Whether or not you agree with who he published, Laughlin's contributions
to >> >20th Century literature are immense. Keep in mind that it is due in large >> >part to Laughlin that you can pick up much of Hermann Hesse's work at your >> >local library.
>> >
>> >Brent
>>
>> brent: you seem to have missed my point, which was not to chide laughlin >> for being a publisher (you may have noticed i was among the first to >> respond to marjorie's post), but to chide pound for (if the anecdote is >> accurate) suggesting laughlin give up his own writing in order to devote >> his considerable talent and resources to publish --surprise surprise >> --pound himself. i said it sounded like the same old, though usually >> gendered, story: "honey, don't do your own writing, give up everything to >> support ME and MY writing." it is good to hear from others that laughlin >> did not entirely abandon his own writing after all.
>> >
>> >
>> >
>> >At 09:23 AM 11/14/97 -0600, you wrote:
>> >>a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing >> >>company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma
>> >>and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>> >>me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >> >>certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at >>least not >> >>so explicitly...

>> >>
>> >>At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>> >>>Patrick Pritchett writes --
>> >>>
>> >>>> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>> >>>> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >> >>>> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >> >>>> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>> >>>> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>> >>>
>> >>>though I don't have the book, am pretty sure -- a small biblio note,
>> >>>this -- that the title is Ez as Wuz [meaning, Ezra as he the was,
>> >>>one supposes -- "Ez" evidently being the familial nickname].
>> >>>
>> >>>> . . . American poetry owes him a debt which can only be repaid by >> >>>> keeping faith with his committment to making it new.
>> >>>
>> >>>here here
>> >>>
>> >>>btw, re: the Poundian dictum "make it new," seems the "it" in question >> >>>is antiquity's language / content -- Pound seeking to promote an Ancient >> >>>Future, so to say (as when he admonished young W.S. Merwin "study >> >>>root language, don't study branch language" or words to that effect)
>> >>>. . . so that being steeped in the old, one can then make it new . . .
>> >>>
>> >>>hat-tips to James Laughlin -- one of those sturdy, rugged, supportive >> >>>presences on whom "so much depends" . . .
>> >>>
>> >>>d.i.
>> >>> .
>> >>> .....
>> >>> .....
>> >>> \\\\

>> >>> | thy centuries follow each other
>> >>> | perfecting a small wild flower
>> >>> | (Tagore)
>> >>> //\\\\\/////
>> >>
>> >>
>>

↑ Index

333. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Sat 15 Nov 1997

again, i take this as a serious misreading of my intention and my words themselves. i admire laughlin's contributions tremendously and did not belittle him thru association w/ pound, as anyone reading the words on the screen might have realized. my objections were leveled at pound. if the anecdote is accurate, i stand by my observation. if it is not, i will reconsider.

At 10:08 AM -0500 11/15/97, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:
>i can't help but express my dismay at the perhaps utterly blind reductivism
>of summing up laughlin's life in terms of his connection with pound only >and further summing up pound as "an aging fascist." To mirror people >like marianne moore and more recently alfred kazin, let me say that i >too dislike pound--but i also recognize his genius, and as a literary >historian of a sort his huge influence on 20th century poetry and criticism.
>i recall a wonderful closing line of a poem by joel oppenheimer's called >"for the barbers": "oh the / professionals what we / should fear."
>also, i can't help but tentatively advance the idea that some at least >period of dignified mourning should perhaps be observed before we start >on the really cutthroat postmortems.
>burt kimmelman

↑ Index

334. joel lewis
Re: William Matthews
Sat 15 Nov 1997

Bill Matthews was my writing teacher at CCNY's MA Creative writing program. I thought I had entered the netherworld when, in the first class, he made reference t"to my good friend Daniel Halpern" well, it wasn't hades--though it was my first encounter with nondowntown poetics & (gasp) folks like matthews loved poetry as much as ted berrigan did except the heroes tended more to be robertfrost than frank o'hara.

ebven though our senses of poetry were miles apart, he treated my work with respect as he did with everyone in the workshop -- the one "star" to emerge from my time was Walter Mosley, who found his calling in the mystery novel genre.

joel lewis

↑ Index

335. David R. Israel
Mosley's poesy
Sat 15 Nov 1997

[was, Re: William Matthews]

Joel Lewis recollects --

> Bill Matthews was my writing teacher at CCNY's MA Creative writing program. . . . -- the one "star" to emerge from my time was Walter Mosley, who found his calling in the mystery novel genre.

hmm, interesting.

I rapped my knuckles on the front door. It was fabricated from many layers of wood. So many layers that I couldn't get a sure knock. The sound I did make was nothing more than the rustling of kisses in a close hallway at night.

- Easy Rawlins (Mosley's privite eye character), in Black Betty

Other than Chandler and Hammett, Walter Mosley happens to be the only mystery writer I've taken an interest in reading in recent years. So I appreciate getting this little, unexpected anecdotal backgrounder, Joel.

Haven't kept up with Mosley's work, but recent reviews indicate some branching out from mystery genre (& from Easy Rawlins). As noted in the NYT Book Review by Sven Birkerts (Nov. 9 '97) (at: http://search.nytimes.com/books/search/bin/fastweb?getdoc+book-rev+boo k-r+22253+6++%27Walter%20Mosley%27) --

> Assigning his protagonist, Socrates Fortlow, the name of the father of Western philosophy, Walter Mosley has, in ''Always Outnumbered, Always Outgunned,'' set out to explore the implications of moral action in a society that has lost all purchase on the spirit of the law. This, Mosley's eighth work of fiction, makes a striking departure from the familiar event-driven world of Easy Rawlins. The 14 loosely > linked vignettes and tales incorporate the Platonic dialogues as a kind of ghost melody; signature strains of the classic are vamped up in the rough demotic of present-day Watts.

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

There are so many ways in which both chance & choice can have scope, it seems -- and their combination (with, as you say, constraint) seems, to me, eminently human (even when, as here, drawing on the potential of the latest gizmotry).

Thanks much for the offer of y our recent publication (will send snail address under separate e).

d.i.

↑ Index

337. Miekal And

Re: visual poetry on the internet

Sat 15 Nov 1997

Jena Osman wrote:
>
> For a workshop in visual poetry: I'm looking for good examples of visual > poetry on the internet. I'm already familiar with the amazing ubuweb site.
> Please send URL's of other favorites. Thanks,
>
> Jena Osman
> [redacted]

jena:

reading yr request last week reminded me that I hadnt put any visual work up for awhile so I sat down & put this piece together.

one hundred villages
by miekal and

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/logokon.html

...village life at its most binary...

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

338. Annie Finch
Shareholder Activism
Sat 15 Nov 1997

If any of you contribute to TIAA-CREF retirement accounts, when you get a ballot in the mail, I urge you to vote yes on shareholder proposal 4, which seeks to widen the impact of the Social Choice account by investing in companies that make a positive social and environmental impact rather than just screening out negatives. (On the ballot itself, TIAA-CREF actually recommends voting no, which I fine unconscionable.) Relevant info below.

Annie

> X-Incognito-SN: 1019
> Date: Thu, 06 Nov 1997 11:26:13 -0500 (EST)
> From: [redacted]
> Subject: Shareholder Activism
> To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
> [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
> [redacted], [redacted],
> [redacted]
> Reply-to: [redacted]
> MIME-version: 1.0
> X-Incognito-Version: 4.10.130
> X-Priority: 3 (Normal)
>
> We apologize for contacting you again so soon after our last message, but wanted to pass on this urgent request from a colleague regarding SEC regulations on shareholder resolutions (third item below) that requires action by November 10 (to influence TIAA-CREF) or by November 24 (to comment to the SEC).
>
> The first and second items below we were planning on sending in a few weeks, but thought we'd just send them all together.
>
> Abby and Neil
> ---
>
> SOCIAL CHOICE FOR SOCIAL CHANGE: > CAMPAIGN FOR A NEW TIAA-CREF
>
> A call to invest 5-10% of Social Choice Account assets > in companies that are models of > social and environmental responsibility
>
> Box 135, Manchester College, North Manchester, IN 46962
> [redacted]/5009, [redacted], [redacted]
> http://www.manchester.edu/departmt/peace/njw/disclaim.html

Neil Wollman and Abigail Fuller, Co-Chairs

Dear Colleague,

We are writing to ask your help in spreading word of the campaign to faculty in your discipline. Any or all of the following would be most helpful. If all you have time to do is send us the names and addresses of your professional organizations, we'll do the legwork.

1. Post the notice about the campaign (sent to you previously) to email discussion lists to which you subscribe.
- or, tell us how to contact the list and we will do it

2. Ask your professional association(s), and or divisions/sections within them, to publish the notice in their newsletter.
- or, give us the name/address of the publications and we will do it

3. Ask your professional association(s), and/or divisions/sections with them, to endorse the campaign. This would include groups concerned with social and environmental responsibility. (See endorsement request letter below.)
- or, give us the name/address of the appropriate people to contact and we can do it

If you prefer, we can send you hard copies of the campaign notice or endorsement request letter. These materials, and others relevant to the campaign, are accessible at our web site--see address above.

If possible, let us know which tasks you can undertake--though that's not a necessity. Thanks for your contribution to socially responsible investing.

Sincerely,

Neil and Abby

SAMPLE LETTER REQUESTING GROUP ENDORSEMENT

Dear Colleague,

We are writing to ask your organization to endorse and/or publicize the campaign described below. Formal endorsement roughly entails the following:

- Sending a letter noting your endorsement to us, and to Chairman and CEO John Biggs, Vice Chairman and CIO Martin L. Leibowitz, and Corporate Secretary Albert J.
Wilson, and the other CREF trustees: TIAA-CREF, 730 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017-3206.

- Publicizing the endorsement in your newsletter, on your e-mail lists or website, at conferences, or other ways.

- Requesting that your members contact TIAA-CREF individually. (Letters from individuals with and without TIAA-CREF accounts are welcome.) Besides postal letters, e-mail can be sent to [redacted], with a request to forward copies to the officers and trustees noted above.

Whether or not you can endorse the campaign, any efforts to publicize it are most appreciated.

Sincerely,

SOCIAL CHOICE FOR SOCIAL CHANGE:
CAMPAIGN FOR A NEW TIAA-CREF

TELL TIAA-CREF, THE PENSION FUND FOR COLLEGE FACULTY, THAT YOU SUPPORT "POSITIVE INVESTING" FOR THE SOCIAL CHOICE ACCOUNT! SEND EMAIL TO [redacted], PHONE [redacted], OR WRITE TO 730 THIRD AVE., NY, NY 10017-3206.
(To circulate a petition, contact the campaign at the address below.)

Despite the fact that over 80 percent of TIAA-CREF's Social Choice Account participants favor "seeking out for investment companies [that] have an outstanding record of good performance on social issues, rather than rely on negative screens," the company has refused to do just that. This was revealed in a survey conducted by TIAA-CREF--the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund--which also found that only 3 percent oppose this investment strategy.

In response, college faculty have launched a nationwide campaign to persuade TIAA-CREF to begin "positive investing" of their pension funds. We are calling for 5-10% of assets in the Social Choice Account, a socially responsible fund, to be invested in companies that are models of social and environmental responsibility. This would mean $100-200 million invested in companies with, for instance, exemplary relations with employees or local communities.

TIAA-CREF is the nation's largest private pension system. In 1989, we successfully lobbied the group for the creation of the Social Choice Account, which screens out companies that do business in tobacco, alcohol, nuclear energy or weapons, or the military; pollute the environment; or operate in Northern Ireland without endorsing the McBride Principles against religious discrimination in employment. It is now the largest socially responsible account in the country.

For a brochure and other campaign materials, contact Social Choice for Social Change: Campaign for a New TIAA-CREF, Box 135, Manchester College, North Manchester, IN 46062, [redacted]/5009, or e-mail Neil Wollman at [redacted] or Abigail Fuller at [redacted]. Visit the web site at http:/www.manchester.edu (click on "index," then "Social Choice for Social Change"). If you do contact TIAA-CREF or take other actions, please let us know so we can monitor campaign activities. Thank you.

To: Eugene Finegold, Gordon Rands, David Gordon, Neil Wollman:

I understand that each of you has been involved in some way with social issues and TIAA. This is to solicit your assistance if that is possible, and in the hope that you have a network of some sort to get the word out.

Background: The SEC has recently proposed rules for comment that would effectively limit the possibilities of shareholder activity on social and environmental issues. I won't go into detail, but more information can be gotten by going to www.socialinvest.org/sec. To underline the magnitude of the problem, research soon to be released will show that much of the activity around South Africa might never have been able to happen. So too with many of the environmental resolutions, such as corporate action on the CERES Principles.

The SEC is asking for comments by November 25.

It appears that TIAA is planning not to respond. As we understand it, TIAA feels that they are big enough that the proposed rules, if enacted, will not restrict anything they might want to do. This suggests a certain optimism on their part, and totally disregards the importance of shareholder activity to smaller shareholders.

I am planning to attend the TIAA meeting on November 10 in New York and make a statement asking TIAA to respond to SEC, supporting the rights of small shareholders. It would be very useful if they were to hear from their shareholders--us-- letting them know that we want them to hold the line, supporting the present arrangements.

The following press release gives some background:

Social Investment Forum
NEWS RELEASE

CONTACT: Erin Mantz or Scott Stapf, 703/[redacted]

COALITION WARNS SEC PLAN CREATES IMPOSSIBLE 'OBSTACLE
COURSE' FOR SHAREHOLDER RIGHTS

SEC Proposal Slams Smaller Investors; Corporations Get Handed a Variety of New Tools to Block Shareholder Actions

WASHINGTON, D.C. / OCTOBER 23, 1997 -
If it had been in place over the last two decades, the insidious effects of a package of proposed rules now pending before the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) would have made it virtually impossible to sustain critical shareholder advocacy campaigns on issues such as apartheid in South Africa, the sale of tobacco to American youths, environmental degradation, and the use of slave labor abroad, according to a warning issued today by a new coalition opposed to the pending SEC rules now out for public comment until November 24, 1997.

Social Investment Forum President, Steve Schueth said:

> "We call on SEC Chairman Arthur Levitt, who is universally regarded as the leading friend of the small investor, to reject these anti-shareholder rules. The SEC staff has cobbled together an obstacle course of impediments that, when taken together, would give big business the ability to wear down, sidetrack or derail virtually any shareholder resolution. The result is a situation very similar to building a bomb: take the elements that go into the explosive device in isolation and they don't raise a lot of alarm, but put them together in the hands of someone who intends to use it and you've got a devastating combination that can do real harm."

PRESERVING SHAREHOLDER RIGHTS: A BOTTOMLINE ISSUE

Coalition members emphasized that their fight to preserve shareholder rights is ultimately about the bottom line. With recent multi-million dollar judgements against Denny's, Home Deport, Texaco and many others illustrating the danger of unchecked corporate misconduct, the need for major oversight by concerned shareholders is stronger now than ever.

"This has nothing to do with whether you are a liberal or a conservative," said Timothy Smith, Executive Director of the Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility (ICCR). "Any investor who believes that shareholder resolutions are important tools for promoting corporate accountability and good corporate governance will oppose the SEC's proposal. CEOs never would have acted so quickly on such diverse issues as responsible corporate governance, Northern Ireland, sweatshops, China, tobacco, violence in the media, workplace discrimination, pollution and corruption without the outside pressure of shareholder resolutions. Corporate mismanagement of such key issues can seriously effect both a company's reputation and profitability."

In a letter submitted September 18, 1997 commenting on the SEC staff's proposals, out-going Commissioner Steven M. Wallman noted: "_ the practical impact of what can be accomplished through shareholders appropriately engaged in their corporation's affairs is enormous. Part of what makes our economy strong and our corporations successful is our system of active shareholders engaged in debate over matters of concern. And those matters consistently have included issues relating to corporate governance, workplace practices and social issues."

HOW THE SEC STAFF PROPOSAL WOULD GUT SHAREHOLDER RIGHTS

Members of the coalition have serious concerns that the various provisions of the SEC staff plan would be exploited in a systematic fashion by corporate America to shut down shareholder actions. For example, key coalition members warned about the following provisions:

Wide-open loophole for corporate misconduct. Currently, companies can exclude shareholder resolutions if the operations in question account for less than 5 percent of a company's assets and earnings ... unless the issue at stake is "otherwise significantly related to the company." In proposing to switch to a purely economic standard of $10 million of annual revenue for large companies and 3 percent of revenues or assets for smaller companies, the SEC staff proposes to create a loophole under which a company could kill shareholder resolutions which cannot be quantified in hard, cold economic terms. If such a provision had been in effect in recent years, the anti-apartheid divestment movement, opposition to tobacco sales to children, and proposals concerning child labor and fair employment in Northern Ireland almost certainly would have been ruled out as topics for shareholder resolutions, particularly early on before hard economic data were available. Further, the new provision would likely create a perverse incentive to "outsource" corporate misconduct, such as exploiting slave labor in other nations. Corporations could position themselves beyond the reach of shareholder resolutions, so long as they carried out their misconduct through vendors, subcontractors and other supposedly arm's-length relationships. As the recent problems at Denny's, Home Depot and Texaco illustrate, even a small amount of corporate misconduct can have enormous ramifications in terms of reputation and the financial bottom line.

"Judge, jury and executioner" status granted to big business. For shareholder rights proponents, there is a great deal of concern about a SEC-proposed rule change that would allow resolutions to be excluded if the corporation claims it is intended to advance a personal claim or "grievance." Under current rules, that decision is in the somewhat objective hands of the SEC.

Under the proposal, the SEC has the option to bounce the most complicated claims back to the company, allowing the company to unilaterally omit the shareholder resolution in question. This dramatic and unwarranted increase in corporate ability to erase shareholder resolutions is able to function as a death sentence for resolutions submitted by unions, religious groups, socially concerned investor groups and other individuals. Companies already invoke the existing "grievance" provision in their efforts to block legitimate shareholder resolutions they don't want presented for public debate. Under the Commission's proposal, big business would be emboldened to do so more freely. Shareholders would be forced to take their concerns to court and engage in a fight that would involve entirely uneven legal resources.

Pulling the plug on most shareholder resolutions after their first year. The period of time over which a shareholder advocacy campaign builds up a head of steam often takes several years.
During this shareholder education interval, shareholder votes for the proposals may initially be modest, as was the case with American companies doing business with the racist apartheid regime in South Africa and those peddling tobacco products to children. Under the SEC proposal, the current percentage of votes required for resubmission would be boosted dramatically doubled in the first two years and tripled by year three (from 3, 6 and 10 percent over three years to 6, 15 and 30 percent). In practical terms, the pernicious effect of this SEC-proposed change would be to kill most shareholder resolution campaigns in the cradle after their first year, before the process has had time to germinate.

In addition to three key provisions outlined above, coalition members also expressed concerns about other sections of the SEC proposal. For example, one portion of the package would create a virtually impossible "override" provision under which a resolution could be put in front of shareholders if the owners of 3 percent of all outstanding shares agree to support it. While coalition members are intrigued by the concept of an automatic override provision, a substantially lower threshold for automatic consideration would be necessary to make it practically useful. They noted that the 3 percent level would be virtually impossible to achieve with any Fortune 500 company. Even a threshold of just one-quarter of 1 percent (1/4%) would require an average of $80 million to put a resolution on the ballot of one of these large firms; 3 percent would require lining up about $1 billion in shares.

Bill Patterson, Director, Office of Investments, AFL-CIO said: "This is apparently the SEC staff's idea of Christmas in October for managers who don't want to deal with the nagging conscience of their shareholders. The SEC has proposed a complicated package of provisions that individually may seem innocuous, but, when combined and put in the hands of big business, would work to seal the vault on meaningful shareholder advocacy. Personally, I cannot believe that Chairman Levitt and the other commissioners want their legacy to be a lethal blow to shareholder rights in America."

TO SUBMIT COMMENTS / GET MORE INFORMATION

Comments on the SEC rule proposal should be submitted by November 24, 1997 to the following address: Jonathan G. Katz, Secretary, US Securities and Exchange Commission, 450 5th Street, NW, Washington, DC, 20549. Three copies of each comment letter should be sent and should refer to File No. S7-25-97. Electronically filed comments may be submitted and the following e-mail address [redacted] and should include the file number in the subject line. Comments already filed electronically may be read at the SEC Web site at www.sec.gov/rules/proposed/34-39093.htm

> Organizations wishing to join the coalition may contact Elizabeth Elliott McGeveran, Social Investment Forum, [redacted].
> Updated information on coalition activities and statements will be available at www.socialinvest.org/sec
>
> FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL: Erin Mantz or Scott Stapf, 703/[redacted]
>
> For more information visit the Forum's SEC News & Alert site
>
> # # #
>
> Stephen Viederman,President
> Jessie Smith Noyes Foundation
> 6 East 39th Street
> New York, NY 10016
> [redacted]
> [redacted] fax
> [redacted]

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

339. Annie Finch
Re: James Laughlin
Sat 15 Nov 1997

If I am reading Maria's response right, the part that's hard to swallow has nothing to do with whether Pound's assessment of Laughlin's talent was accurate or not. The annoying thing is the hierarchically-based arrogance that made Pound feel entitled to attempt to coopt someone else's life that way. And the really annoying thing is that this is the kind of move that has gotten so many male poets published, no matter what the gender of the coopted ones; this is. I had the exact same visceral reaction to the anecdote that Maria reported. And no amount of rationalization about Laughlin's talent--or the eventual size of his impact on the current state of literary affairs--will change the truth that gives rise to such visceral reactions.

Annie

nd hierPound'sassessment Maybe what Maria is responding to is not the fact that Pound told s>Hi Maria & Pat--
>Of course, the "Mauberley" comment is directed by a publisher at a poet, >and relates, not to the quality of the poet's work, but the very >desirability of pursuing poetry as a genre--it's simply not economically >rewarding. Pound never told Jay Laughlin not to write cuz he wouldn't get >rich or make a living at it, but because he believed that Laughlin simply >didn't have the talent or sensibility ever to be very good at it. (I >think he was more or less right--I've read a lot of Laughlin's poetry, and >I can't recall a single one of the poems that sticks in my mind as >particularly >good. I suppose it would be way uncool for me to characterize his work as >relentlessly _minor_, but most of it falls right into the category of >personal, voice-based lyric that most of us on the list seem to dislike >and find retrograde. What I _do_ find intermittently interesting is his >typewriter-space based prosody--each line determined by the number of >spaces, rather than syllables or words. But that doesn't keep me reading >the poems.)
> You draw a fascinating parallel, Maria, but what's the >significance? Pound tells Laughlin not to write; Emerson leaves Emma >Lazarus out of Parnassus. So what? The latter may well be a case of >sexism, the former certainly isn't. Does his treatment of Laughlin mean
>we should discount
>Pound's immense aid and sponsorship of younger poets? Go back and reread >the letters to Mary Barnard and Iris Barry in Pound's _Selected Letters_
>if you want to say something about the gendered basis of Pound's >mentorship practices. (Of course, it may be a class thing--Pound >dismissing Laughlin's work as a rich boy's dilletantism--but I suspect >that we're much less willing to rush to the defence of the well-endowed >minority.) Sorry, but I find it odd that, in a moment when everyone is >striving to say nicenesses about Laughlin's position in 20th-century >poetry publishing, you want to bend over backwards to make Pound's >dismissal of his work somehow symbolic of male poets' squashing female >poets' talents. Sadly, it happens all the time--but it didn't happen >here, and Laughlin's publishing track record shows that, of small press >publishers in the US, he wasn't particularly guilty of that sin.
>best,
>Mark Scroggins
>
>On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>
>> Interesting observation, Maria. Pound was, I suppose, nothing if not >> patronizing. This tendency to lord it over "lesser mortals" seems over to >> time to have become magnified into his psychosis. Funny thing is though, I >> can't think of a better word to describe the institutionalized sexism you >> allude to. And this remark from Pound to JL by the same poet who satirized >> such patronizing attitudes in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberly": "... and give up >> poetry, my boy, there's no money in it."

>>
>> Patrick Pritchett
>> ----------
>> From: Maria Damon
>> To: POETICS
>> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
>> Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:06PM
>>
>>
>> a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing >> company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma
>> and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>> me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >> certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not >> so explicitly...
>>
>> At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>> >Patrick Pritchett writes --
>> >
>> >> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>> >> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >> >> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >> >> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>> >> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>> >
>>

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

340. Tosh
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Overall I think Pound was an amazing artist who was also a creep. Laughlin's range of artists - from Osamu Dazai to Blaise Cendrars to H.D. to Mishima to an early anthology of language poetry is simply amazing. New Directions is great, and I shutter to think that such a publishing house wouldn't exist. So whatever it was Pound or Laughlin (and I would think Laughlin was simply a genius of an editor) we should all just pause for a second and give thanks to the spirit of Laughlin. And really, I don't think we should give Pound too much credit in regards to Laughlin, New Directions, etc.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

341. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Re: Pound and Laughlin,

Pond has never been a favorite of mine and I must plead ignorance of Lauglin, but would say that if Laughlin had followed Pound's advice and stuck just with just publishing, then it would mean that Laughlin would have either realized his heart wasn't in writing or he was a weak willed individual easily swayed by Pound and others. In any event, if he had chosen only to publishe, would the literary world have missed his written work?

Jerry Fletcher

↑ Index

342. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Miekal,

I visited your visual poem and found it most interesting. The tying together of the visual and moving images with the written offers a powerful means of expressing. Unfortunately, I was unable to stay connected long enough to load all the images, my service provider's local dial access is having problems and keeps dropping me.

Have you, or anyone you are aware of, integrated sound (either music, noises, or reading of the poetry, even a combination) together? Unfortunately, visual and/or sound integrated poetry awaits faster connection speeds before it will work well, I'm afraid. Also, we all need more bandwidth.

Jerry.

↑ Index

343. rsillima
Laughlin/Pound
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Laughlin surely does raise the spectre of Pound once again, if only to remind us of how much of Pound's work was simply putting people in touch with one another. Listening to the Laughlin obit on All Things Considered the other night, who do I hear but ol' Ez hisself, reading "Mauberly," which the narrator stated "could have been written about Laughlin."

While I tend to think of New Directions as a publisher who ran out of gas by the early 1960s (the recent additions to its list of writers, even including Creeley nearly a quarter of a century ago, have for the most part been already established figures), its impact in carrying modernism into the 1940s and 50s cannot be underestimated.

Good to know that he provided for the continuation of the press.

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/silliman/

↑ Index

344. Miekal And
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Jerry E. Fletcher wrote:
>
> Miekal,

> Have you, or anyone you are aware of, integrated sound (either music, noises, or reading of the poetry, even a combination) together? Unfortunately, visual and/or sound integrated poetry awaits faster connection speeds before it will work well, I'm afraid. Also, we all need more bandwidth.

jerry visit 100 villages

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/logokon.html

again & thus it will squeak

m and

↑ Index

345. Alan Grep Sondheim
Stupid Jennifer's Exercises! (fwd)
Sun 16 Nov 1997

-

Style Exercises (As I jain a lacal writing graup in Fukuoka)

"mare velcra" binds kanji ta the page, arrange radicals, rage acrass ar kill katakana in stage
ane, ar twa, unbind, ar rearrange: the plague af language gauges spiked ar pierced imaginary:
Hakusai wauld say ghasts,
unreading, blaated
killed acrass the gaad exercise af style

"parachute"
I fell ah ah ah
paar me.
It wrapped everywhere
araund my eyes
tawards the graund, tawards that clath
I refuse ta name.
Braken air Cracked claud milled ar lathed caught in the thraat -
I wan't name yau!
I wan't!

"umbilical chards," tethered ta the mather, Heiner Muller blahblah tethered ta the ather mather in same cultures, I'd swallaw them hale

I need ta exercise my rights. I need ta make the canstitutian.
I need ta write the fareign tangue.
Gaijin repraduce at an absurd rate, I hear they fuck like anyane else, but I dan't believe it.
What can be dane with the animals that cangregate an a paetics af exchange and incanceivable denauement? There's a bar, Rumaurs.
There's a barrier. I learn ta write again! Sure, I'll take aut my a's!

↑ Index

346. robert drake
Re: visual poetry on the internet
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Jerry E. Fletcher <[redacted]> writ:
>Have you, or anyone you are aware of, integrated sound (either music, >noises, or reading of the poetry, even a combination) together?
>Unfortunately, visual and/or sound integrated poetry awaits faster >connection speeds before it will work well, I'm afraid. Also, we all >need more bandwidth.

there are a couple ov recent pieces on th WrEyeTings Scratchpad site

http://www.burningpress.org/wreyeting/index.html

that have sound components: Bill Marsh's "the oo if" and my own "radioz". th pad is exactly a kind of workshop/laboratory fr addressing technical (speed/ bandwidth) problems, as well aesthetic; if you have any time to check out the pieces, the authors wd appreciate reports of yr results...

luigi

↑ Index

347. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

---

yes this is pretty much on target annie, a visceral response to a scenario that was oh so familiar and painful, questions of "talent" aside.

At 10:35 PM -0500 11/15/97, Annie Finch wrote:
>If I am reading Maria's response right, the part that's hard to swallow >has nothing to do with whether Pound's assessment of Laughlin's talent was >accurate or not. The annoying thing is the hierarchically-based arrogance >that made Pound feel entitled to attempt to coopt someone else's life that >way. And the really annoying thing is that this is the kind of move that >has gotten so many male poets published, no matter what the gender of the >coopted ones; this is. I had the exact same visceral reaction to the >anecdote that Maria reported. And no amount of rationalization about >Laughlin's talent--or the eventual size of his impact on the current state >of literary affairs--will change the truth that gives rise to such visceral >reactions.
>
>Annie
>
>
>nd hierPound'sassessment Maybe what Maria is responding to is not the fact >that Pound told s>Hi Maria & Pat--
>>Of course, the "Mauberley" comment is directed by a publisher at a poet,
>>and relates, not to the quality of the poet's work, but the very >>desirability of pursuing poetry as a genre--it's simply not economically >>rewarding. Pound never told Jay Laughlin not to write cuz he wouldn't get >>rich or make a living at it, but because he believed that Laughlin simply >>didn't have the talent or sensibility ever to be very good at it. (I >>think he was more or less right--I've read a lot of Laughlin's poetry, and >>I can't recall a single one of the poems that sticks in my mind as >>particularly >>good. I suppose it would be way uncool for me to characterize his work as >>relentlessly _minor_, but most of it falls right into the category of >>personal, voice-based lyric that most of us on the list seem to dislike >>and find retrograde. What I _do_ find intermittently interesting is his >>typewriter-space based prosody--each line determined by the number of >>spaces, rather than syllables or words. But that doesn't keep me reading

>>the poems.)
>> You draw a fascinating parallel, Maria, but what's the >>significance? Pound tells Laughlin not to write; Emerson leaves Emma >>Lazarus out of Parnassus. So what? The latter may well be a case of >>sexism, the former certainly isn't. Does his treatment of Laughlin mean
>>we should discount
>>Pound's immense aid and sponsorship of younger poets? Go back and reread
>>the letters to Mary Barnard and Iris Barry in Pound's _Selected Letters_
>>if you want to say something about the gendered basis of Pound's >>mentorship practices. (Of course, it may be a class thing--Pound >>dismissing Laughlin's work as a rich boy's dilletantism--but I suspect >>that we're much less willing to rush to the defence of the well-endowed >>minority.) Sorry, but I find it odd that, in a moment when everyone is >>striving to say nicenesses about Laughlin's position in 20th-century >>poetry publishing, you want to bend over backwards to make Pound's >>dismissal of his work somehow symbolic of male poets' squashing female >>poets' talents. Sadly, it happens all the time--but it didn't happen
>>here, and Laughlin's publishing track record shows that, of small press >>publishers in the US, he wasn't particularly guilty of that sin.
>>best,
>>Mark Scroggins
>>
>>On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>>
>>> Interesting observation, Maria. Pound was, I suppose, nothing if not >>> patronizing. This tendency to lord it over "lesser mortals" seems over to >>> time to have become magnified into his psychosis. Funny thing is though, I >>> can't think of a better word to describe the institutionalized sexism you >>> allude to. And this remark from Pound to JL by the same poet who satirized
>>> such patronizing attitudes in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberly": "... and give up >>> poetry, my boy, there's no money in it."
>>>
>>> Patrick Pritchett
>>> ----------

>>> From: Maria Damon
>>> To: POETICS
>>> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
>>> Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:06PM
>>>
>>>
>>> a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing >>> company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma
>>> and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>>> me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >>> certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not >>> so explicitly...
>>>
>>> At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>>> >Patrick Pritchett writes --
>>> >
>>> >> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>>> >> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >>> >> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >>> >> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.
>>> >> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>>> >
>>>
>
>Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
>Department of English
>Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

348. Maria Damon
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

At 10:56 PM -0800 11/15/97, Tosh wrote:
>Overall I think Pound was an amazing artist who was also a creep.
>Laughlin's range of artists - from Osamu Dazai to Blaise Cendrars to H.D.
>to Mishima to an early anthology of language poetry is simply amazing. New >Directions is great, and I shutter to think that such a publishing house >wouldn't exist. So whatever it was Pound or Laughlin (and I would think >Laughlin was simply a genius of an editor) we should all just pause for a >second and give thanks to the spirit of Laughlin. And really, I don't >think we should give Pound too much credit in regards to Laughlin, New >Directions, etc.

yes indeed, tosh. yr assessments seem pretty right on to me. how 'bout an update on tamtam?
>
>----------
>Tosh Berman
>TamTam Books
>----------

↑ Index

349. Harold Rhenisch
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Just to insert something into the discussion, peripherally. Eliot had a different take on manipulative mentor mania.

As I remember it, he once said that whenever a young writer asked him whether he or she should become a writer he responded "No." His explanation was that if someone was going to be a writer then he or she would discount what he (Eliot) said as being stupid and go on writing anyway, and if that person was not committed to the task then he had saved them a lot of grief.

Makes me wonder what didn't get written because of that.

Harold

(At 10:35 PM -0500 11/15/97, Annie Finch wrote:
>If I am reading Maria's response right, the part that's hard to swallow
>has nothing to do with whether Pound's assessment of Laughlin's talent was >accurate or not. The annoying thing is the hierarchically-based arrogance >that made Pound feel entitled to attempt to coopt someone else's life that >way. And the really annoying thing is that this is the kind of move that >has gotten so many male poets published, no matter what the gender of the >coopted ones; this is. I had the exact same visceral reaction to the >anecdote that Maria reported. And no amount of rationalization about >Laughlin's talent--or the eventual size of his impact on the current state >of literary affairs--will change the truth that gives rise to such visceral >reactions.
>
>Annie
>

>
>nd hierPound'sassessment Maybe what Maria is responding to is not the fact >that Pound told s>Hi Maria & Pat--
>>Of course, the "Mauberley" comment is directed by a publisher at a poet,
>>and relates, not to the quality of the poet's work, but the very >>desirability of pursuing poetry as a genre--it's simply not economically >>rewarding. Pound never told Jay Laughlin not to write cuz he wouldn't get >>rich or make a living at it, but because he believed that Laughlin simply >>didn't have the talent or sensibility ever to be very good at it. (I >>think he was more or less right--I've read a lot of Laughlin's poetry,
and
>>I can't recall a single one of the poems that sticks in my mind as >>particularly >>good. I suppose it would be way uncool for me to characterize his work as >>relentlessly _minor_, but most of it falls right into the category of >>personal, voice-based lyric that most of us on the list seem to dislike >>and find retrograde. What I _do_ find intermittently interesting is his >>typewriter-space based prosody--each line determined by the number of >>spaces, rather than syllables or words. But that doesn't keep me reading
>>the poems.)
>> You draw a fascinating parallel, Maria, but what's the >>significance? Pound tells Laughlin not to write; Emerson leaves Emma >>Lazarus out of Parnassus. So what? The latter may well be a case of >>sexism, the former certainly isn't. Does his treatment of Laughlin mean
>>we should discount
>>Pound's immense aid and sponsorship of younger poets? Go back and reread
>>the letters to Mary Barnard and Iris Barry in Pound's _Selected Letters_
>>if you want to say something about the gendered basis of Pound's >>mentorship practices. (Of course, it may be a class thing--Pound >>dismissing Laughlin's work as a rich boy's dilletantism--but I suspect >>that we're much less willing to rush to the defence of the well-endowed >>minority.) Sorry, but I find it odd that, in a moment when everyone is >>striving to say nicenesses about Laughlin's position in 20th-century >>poetry publishing, you want to bend over backwards to make Pound's >>dismissal of his work somehow symbolic of male poets' squashing female >>poets' talents. Sadly, it happens all the time--but it didn't happen
>>here, and Laughlin's publishing track record shows that, of small press >>publishers in the US, he wasn't particularly guilty of that sin.
>>best,

>>Mark Scroggins
>>
>>On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>>
>>> Interesting observation, Maria. Pound was, I suppose, nothing if not >>> patronizing. This tendency to lord it over "lesser mortals" seems over
to >>> time to have become magnified into his psychosis. Funny thing is though,
I >>> can't think of a better word to describe the institutionalized sexism you >>> allude to. And this remark from Pound to JL by the same poet who satirized
>>> such patronizing attitudes in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberly": "... and give up >>> poetry, my boy, there's no money in it."
>>>
>>> Patrick Pritchett
>>> ----------
>>> From: Maria Damon
>>> To: POETICS
>>> Subject: Re: James Laughlin
>>> Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 12:06PM
>>>
>>>
>>> a very informative post, and one that makes me think twice. a publishing
>>> company that was started because an aging fascist with enormous charisma
>>> and clout said, you should quit writing and devote yourself to publishing
>>> me and my friends???? sounds uncomfortably familiar, only usually a >>> certain gender difference plays a role, which it doesn't here, at least not >>> so explicitly...
>>>
>>> At 8:23 PM -0400 11/13/97, David R. Israel wrote:
>>> >Patrick Pritchett writes --
>>> >
>>> >> The story goes, as Laughlin himself relates in his marvelous _Pound
>>> >> As Wuz_, that he went to sit at the feet of the master in Rapallo in >>> >> the late 30's. Pound, however, advised him to give up poetry and >>> >> start a publishing company that would print Pound and Pound's pals.

>>> >> The rest is history, as they say. . . .
>>> >
>>>
>
>Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
>Department of English
>Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

350. Rob Hardin
Grief to come
Sun 16 Nov 1997

RIP, 1997: Burroughs, Laughlin, and now, barring a miracle, Kathy Acker (b. April 18, 1948).
This is truly a sad and plangent year.

Emergate quandprimum, amici in ars morbi,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

351. Susan Schultz
RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
Sun 16 Nov 1997

Last night at the winter league game between the Honolulu Sharks and the Maui Stingrays, the former Philly Phanatic (now sporting the rather dull moniker of "Sport") was spotted buffing list member Bill Luoma's bolohead not once, but twice. On the second go-round, he applied squeegee and a tiny plunger to help him in his task. Bill was then presented with an autographed card of Sport, but not the one showing the mascot pinching a base coach's bum--that one was strangely reserved for the under 10 crowd. But by far the best venue for baseball on this island (Juliana, Bill, and I will attest to this) is the choicely named Hans L'Orange Park in Waipahu, where the West Oahu Cane Fires play their home games. At that park, a collection is taken up from the crowd for the private use of any Cane Fires player who hits one home run, lidat!

Susan

No poetry but in baseball.

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

352. Scott Pound
ANNOUNCING ESSEX MAGAZINE
Sun 16 Nov 1997

ESSEX SSEXE
SEXES EXESS
XESSE
ESSEX

is an international journal of poetry and word art (reviews too)

named after a local pub in Buffalo

it's everything a small magazine can be.

ESSEX 1/1 ("Isomorphically Yours"): 7 X 7 inch folded and stapled (4 tip-ins)

Christian Bok, Rose Withers, cris cheek, Scott Pound, William R. Howe, John M. Bennett, Michael Basinski, Wendy Kramer, Owen F. Smith, and Darren Wershler-Henry.

ESSEX 1/2: 18 pages let loose in a 9 X 12 envelope and a lunch bag full of tip-ins

Jeff Derksen, Steve McCaffery, Karen Mac Cormack, Tara Azzopardi, Deanna Ferguson, Lisa Robertson, Stephen Cain, Peter Jaeger, Jarl Jirgins, William R. Howe, and Scott Pound.

ESSEX 1/3: INTERNATIONAL CONCRETE ISSUE (forthcoming) 7 X 7 with fold-out pages

bpNichol (previously unpublished early works)

Ferdinand Aguar

Steve McCaffery (never before published material from Carnival: Panel Three in colour)

Christian Bok

AND MUCH MORE!

Please send inquiries, submissions of recent work, and subscription requests to:

Scott Pound or Bill Howe
83 Macdonell Ave. 42 Essex Street
Toronto, ON M6R 2A4 Buffalo, NY 14213
CANADA USA
[redacted]

Individual Issues..... $ 5.00 US
5-Issue Subscription..... $20.00 US

↑ Index

353. B. Taylor
Pound, Moore, Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

---

an odd crossing of Marianne Moore's famous opener of "Poetry," as the review in todays NYT Book Review of her letters reveals that despite her lifelong opposition to antisemitism and her deploring of his positions, she did in fact personally like Pound.

on 11/15 Burt Kimmelman writes > To mirror people
>like marianne moore and more recently alfred kazin, let me say that i >too dislike pound--but i also recognize his genius, and as a literary >historian of a sort his huge influence on 20th century poetry and criticism.

↑ Index

354. Harold Rhenisch
Re: quote for the day
Sun 16 Nov 1997

William Burmeister wrote:

> The short time traces have always been unavoidable in poetry (even desirable I might think; a lot more than we can quantify gets communicated >in short spaces). This is subtlety and something for poets of the now and the >future to develop.

No, I did not mean subtlety. I meant that the discrepancy between traditions of culture (and also of poetic cultures) can be so great that when work moves from one to the other it is completely misread, and that this mis-reading then becomes the code by which the piece is discussed. An intended revolution is not going to take place this way. There will be a revolution, but it will be through the traces, and moreso, and this is what concerns me, through the cultural biases which led to the misrepresentation in the first place. The piece is not being read, in other words, only the response to the piece is being read, and that response consists only in the way in which the piece fits into established cultural criteria. Now, this seems to me to be the way things work, and it also seems to me that problems can occur when we insist on reading an unreasoned response as if it is a reasoned one.

William was also responding to:

>When we shift to a different type of >text (from conservative poetry to lang-po, for instance, or from Disneyland >sound-bites to T.S. Eliot) we will get messed up, because we will process >the signal automatically, but we will be processing it incorrectly. It will >be unreadable. A reader willing to do the work will correct this, by >switching to manual processing, then building up a new and more >sophisticated processing system, which can eventually process the material correctly.

William, you said:

> And a quiet revolution has taken place.

Yes, but only if we have a reader willing to do the work, and my point was that it is easy to have a reader not willing to do the work, because the work has already been dismissed, not out of malice, but because of contrasting languages.

When I suggested there could be a poetry of the traces, I was thinking of a way of getting around this problem of mis-reading (or, rather non-reading) by using the material of that non-reading as the basis of the poem.

Then again, maybe that's what you meant, too.

Best,

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

355. Harold Rhenisch
Re: James Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

>Will Hugh Kenner's life and work, when he dies, be similarly reduced to his >visiting Pound at the urging of Marshall McLuhan?

Na, just as Pound's wasn't reduced to the visit he made to honour Owen Scawen Blunt, or the way he visited Yeats The Great on a quick Grand Tour of Europe that kind of s t r e t c h e d out.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

356. Henry Gould
Re: Laughlin/Pound
Sun 16 Nov 1997

I also happened to hear the voice of Pound reciting on the J. Laughlin piece on NPR. & the strange thing was, later that night I watched an early Satyajit Ray film called "Devi", which includes a brief scene in which the senile, goddess-obsessed patriarch recites from memory some sacred Sanskrit verse to his upstart son - & he sounds like Ol' Ez. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

357. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin
Sun 16 Nov 1997

B Taylor et al.:
I did not mean to imply that M Moore did not like Pound, just for the record.

↑ Index

358. Kali Tal
Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...
Sun 16 Nov 1997

POETICS folk... I'm forwarding this to the list for Paul Lauter, who has been following the discussion second-hand. He asked me to post the following response to the list. Please send your answers to him directly or remember to cc the post to Paul if you send it to POETICS because Paul isn't a POETICS subscriber.

Kali

> Date: Sun, 16 Nov 1997 22:40:17 -0500 (EST)
> From: Paul Lauter <[redacted]>
>
> Kali Tal forwarded Hank Lazer's post regarding contemporary poetry. I think Hank's description of what is in the Heath, and what is not, is reasonably accurate, though I might disagree with how he characterizes it.
> However that might be, I surely do want to second his suggestion that people write to me about their sense of what the anthology should contain. It's important, however, to recognize that--whatever else it is--the Heath is a teaching text. So it's important from my perspective to know how people actually teach work that falls outside the range we have included.
> The best address for me is e-mail: <[redacted]>
> I'll certainly forward posts to other editors. And I should add that while the 3rd edition has just come out, we are (believe it or. . .) already thinking about the 4th. paul

Kali Tal
Lecturer, University of Arizona
new WORD order
PO Box 13746, Tucson AZ 85732-3746 http://www.new-word.com
[redacted] (phone & fax) "Web Design For Smart People"

Sixties Project [redacted]
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/sixties http://www.kalital.com

↑ Index

359. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Insofar as Pound goes, though I would not be one to support his facism, I do think the 13 years he spent locked in the hospital after the war was more than a bit excessive punishiment. As to his poetry...its punctuated with greatness, but also often dissolves in nothingness.

Jerry.

↑ Index

360. david bromige
tragedy
Mon 17 Nov 1997

---

a tragedy is a child prodigy dead of rosin poisoning in Carnegie Hall on New Years Eve. A premature death is terribly sad, terribly disturbing, unspeakably factual, perhaps a catastrophe, and surely for those most intimately concerned, a catastrophe, a disaster; but it is not a tragedy. In the presence of death, let us be true to our words. I myself find this news incredible, which is perhaps what makes Jerry Fletcher utter the term "tragedy". Certainly to me she is so much younger, that I find her condition dizzying. It feels like "only the other day" that her home-published "Tales of the Black Tarantula" began slipping thru my mail-slot. Little did we suspect then what fame & notoriety she would happily achieve. She "went for broke" in a big way, an utterly american way, & people loved her for it. And still do. And who knows, maybe she will pull thru. The word I heard last week, in San Diego, was that she is in a clinic in Tiajuana, where the less-stringent laws of Mexico permit more venturesome treatments than one can obtain here. She has metastisized cancer, I heard; a tough prognosis, but where there's life, who can surrender possibility? I surely hope she isn't on this List!

David

↑ Index

361. Tosh
Re: James Laughlin
Mon 17 Nov 1997

.
>
>yes indeed, tosh. yr assessments seem pretty right on to me. how 'bout an >update on tamtam?
>>

Well, now that you ask... TamTam is just waiting for designs, etc. The first book will be Serge Gainsbourg's Evguénie Sokolov, and then Boris Vian's I Shall Spit on Your Graves, and Guy Debord's Considerations on the Assassination of Gérard Lebovici will follow shortly. After that more fun stuff!

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

362. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Grief to come
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Rob Hardin wrote:
>
> RIP, 1997: Burroughs, Laughlin, and now, barring a miracle, Kathy Acker (b.
> April 18, 1948).
> This is truly a sad and plangent year.
>
> Emergate quandprimum, amici in ars morbi,
>
> Rob Hardin

What, no requiem for Allen Ginsberg? Burroughs, tho, had pretty much lost it. If Acker is on death's bed, that is a tragedy at only 49...

Jerry

↑ Index

363. Jordan Davis
Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
Mon 17 Nov 1997

A catalog of literary hoaxes covers the front page of the second section of this past weekend's Financial Times, and list-subjects Yasusada, Ern Malley and Alan Sokal make up the bulk of the second half of the article. Way to go team! Demidenko, Paul Theroux and Ossian, hoaxers not yet broached here are touched on, and Chatterton and Bob Hershon's public school students are left out. Just thought I'd mention it, since Kent Johnson seems to have taken a vacation from the Yasusada updates.

Rather than pick apart where Watten claims to diverge from Bernstein (and by swerving out of that collision path, to avoid assessing the accuracy of his paraphrase and the validity of either set of remarks, more work than a Tuesday-after-holiday) I'll just register my amusement at the Grenier / Coolidge split, which Watten predicates on a reading of Grenier's "hate speech" as requiring a description of some instantaneous burst of thought (apparently very close to what Ginsberg late in his teaching described 'first thought best thought' as meaning), and also on a comparison of Coolidge to Henry Ford. Leaving aside Watten's remark that Ford's development of the assembly line was "idiot simple", and letting sit like a heap of dung the perpetuation of that sort of academic ad hominem moronism, I'd like to ask the list what distinction Watten is making when he refers to some texts as "social texts". I'm aware that this is the name of a (recently hoaxed) journal edited by Andrew Ross. Then what do I do. Is this listserv a social text? Then are anonymous or unpublished works anti-social texts? ooooooooo baby baby. It was pleasant to put together words and think there was something post-industrialist about it.

Kyrgystan,
Jordan

↑ Index

364. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...
Mon 17 Nov 1997

To Paul Lauter,

First of all thank you for allowing this discussion of the Heath to include you as its editor. Now, that said, allow me to submit the idea that, perhaps today more than ever, an anthology is a powerful influence on the literary canon, given the logistics college instructors usually face--much in the way that dictionaries legitimize usages (a recent student of mine pointed out to me that he very well COULD spell "through" as "thru" inasmuch as his dictionaryy, a Webster if I recall, albeit maybe not a direct descendent of Noah Webster, had "thru" as an alternative spelling of the word). I can't count how many times i've had to exclude important poets from courses because I couldn't really ask my students to buy these poets' books AND an anthology.

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

365. Keith Tuma
Re: Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
Mon 17 Nov 1997

On Mon, 17 Nov 1997 09:03:16 -0500 Jordan Davis said:

> moronism, I'd like to ask the list what distinction Watten is making when he refers to some texts as "social texts". I'm aware that this is the name of a (recently hoaxed) journal edited by Andrew Ross. Then what do I do. Is this listserv a social text? Then are anonymous or unpublished works anti-social texts? ooooooooo baby baby. It was pleasant to put together words and think there was something post-industrialist about it.

If the social is a text, is the text a social? Can we meet with the Methodists on Saturday afternoon and not talk about literature?

nostalgically,
Cleanth Brooks

↑ Index

366. David R. Israel
social
Mon 17 Nov 1997

[was, Re: Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas]

> Then are anonymous or unpublished works anti-social texts? ooooooooo baby baby. It was pleasant to put together words and think there was something post-industrialist about it.
>
> If the social is a text, is the text a social? . . .

okay, here's an essay at aphorismism -- perhaps all texts are social, but not all are sociable

d.i.

↑ Index

367. Scott Pound
ESSEX
Mon 17 Nov 1997

In the 20 or so hours since i posted notice of ESSEX magazine the response has been overwhelming, and I very quickly realized that i forgot to outline payment details.

cheque or money-order in US funds payable to either Scott Pound or William R. Howe. In lieu of payment we will also accept trades (of whatever you have) and/or items for the ESSEX Studios archive at 42 Essex Street.

Many Thanks!

Scott

↑ Index

368. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Border's Books/Union Petition
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Bravo to the poets involved with supporting this effort.

In essence, Standard, the situation began just because of a basic organizing effort. As always with labor struggle these days, health benefits have a lot to do with with why the workers want a union...But so do wages, dignity, basic control of their own lives, basic rights. The issue is essentially the right to organize: the most basic right there is.

laboriously,
Mark P.
atlanta

On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, P.Standard Schaefer wrote:

> To the Poetics List:
>
> I got the petition e-mailed to me so I thought I'd post it so people could know about what's going on with Border's Books. Essentially, they're bullying the workers and threatening to fire them, ect., should they try to organize. I'm under the impression health benefits are part of the concern.
>
> Send mail/signed copies to Mr. Lichenstein.
>
> Nelson Lichenstein
> Department of History
> U. of Virginia
> Charlottesville, VA 22903
>
> We hereby demand that Border's, Inc. bargain in good faith and negotiate a fair and equitable contract with their employees who exercised their legal right by voting to be represented by the United Food and Commercial Workers, AFL-CIO.
>
> Further we demand that Borders, Inc. cease and desist from all actions intended to intimidate, or demean its employees; that Borders, Inc. affirm the employees' legal right to form and join a Union, and remain neutral in employees' efforts to organize.
>
> Paul Vangelisti
> Writer & teacher
> Los Angeles
>
> Robert Crosson
> Writer
> Los Angeles
>
> Standard Schaefer
> Writer
> Pasadena
>
> Evan Calbi
> Writer/Editor
> Los Angeles

↑ Index

369. Maria Damon
Re: tragedy
Mon 17 Nov 1997

now wait a minute. kathy's still among us. can we hold off on the eulogies until it's time?

At 12:38 AM -0800 11/17/97, david bromige wrote:
>a tragedy is a child prodigy dead of rosin poisoning in Carnegie Hall on >New Years Eve. A premature death is terribly sad, terribly disturbing, >unspeakably factual, perhaps a catastrophe, and surely for those most >intimately concerned, a catastrophe, a disaster; but it is not a tragedy.
>In the presence of death, let us be true to our words. I myself find this >news incredible, which is perhaps what makes Jerry Fletcher utter the term >"tragedy". Certainly to me she is so much younger, that I find her >condition dizzying. It feels like "only the other day" that her >home-published "Tales of the Black Tarantula" began slipping thru my >mailslot. Little did we suspect then what fame & notoriety she would >happily achieve. She "went for broke" in a big way, an utterly american >way, & people loved her for it. And still do. And who knows, maybe she will >pull thru. The word I heard last week, in San Diego, was that she is in a >clinic in Tiajuana, where the less-stringent laws of Mexico permit more >venturesome treatments than one can obtain here. She has metastisized >cancer, I heard; a tough prognosis, but where there's life, who can >surrender possibility? I surely hope she isn't on this List!
>
>David

↑ Index

370. p. durgin
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Hearing Clinton addressing gays & lesbians at the Hyatt, at least one man was (something) enough to stand up and question the flaccid rhetoric being lauded there. A democracy is cruxed on the ideal that WE know what's best for US. Agreed? Then let's move on. A representitive democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know that someone ELSE knows what's best for us. Agreed? Then let's move on. A social democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know that we DO NOT know what's best for anyone else except US. Agreed? Then let's move on. Write in Myles -- Again.

Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:

.....---->
> And a quiet revolution has taken place.
>
>
> William Burmeister
>

↑ Index

371. mark weiss
Re: Heath anthology, Lazer, Lauter...
Mon 17 Nov 1997

This isn't really a reply to Burt's post--I'm attaching because I like his tack and wish to extend it for Paul Lauter's consideration. Every time I teach a poetry course I create my own xerox anthology. I don't think I'm alone in this. That enriches Kinko's, but not Heath. It also makes my life a lot more difficult. Anthologies influence the canon as perceived by teachers as well as students, not only because they legitimize but because they give access to material that might otherwise be unfamiliar. Even the unconverted prof might be prone to select an anthology that offers some novelty to teacher and student. I think this is a case where virtue need not be its own reward--a more inclusive anthology makes bottom-line sense.

At 09:38 AM 11/17/97 EST, you wrote: >To Paul Lauter,
>
>First of all thank you for allowing this discussion of the Heath to include you >as its editor. Now, that said, allow me to submit the idea that, perhaps >today more than ever, an anthology is a powerful influence on the literary >canon, given the logistics college instructors usually face--much in the way >that dictionaries legitimize usages (a recent student of mine pointed out to >me that he very well COULD spell "through" as "thru" inasmuch as his dictionaryy, a Webster if I recall, albeit maybe not a direct descendent of Noah Webster, >had "thru" as an alternative spelling of the word). I can't count how many times
>i've had to exclude important poets from courses because I couldn't really
ask

>my students to buy these poets' books AND an anthology.
>
>Burt Kimmelman
>
>

↑ Index

372. groberts
R. Buckminster Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

A friend tells me that Fuller wrote a book-length open-form poem about the Industrial Revolution. Anyone know about it? Is it worth tracking down?

Gary R.

↑ Index

373. mark weiss
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Mon 17 Nov 1997

And in this democracy any group is invisible at best until it's recognized as a voting bloc, which is what Clinton was up to. Whether his speech was flaccid or had a hard-on it's difficult for me to see it as anything but a good thing, although one could certainly ask for more.

At 10:58 AM 11/17/97 -0600, you wrote: > Hearing Clinton addressing gays & lesbians at the Hyatt, at least >one man was (something) enough to stand up and question the flaccid >rhetoric
>being lauded there.
> A democracy is cruxed on the ideal that WE know what's best for >US. Agreed? Then let's move on.
> A representitive democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know >that someone ELSE knows what's best for us. Agreed? Then let's move on.
> A social democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know that we DO >NOT know what's best for anyone else except US. Agreed? Then let's move >on.
> Write in Myles -- Again.
>
> Patrick F. Durgin
>
> |||[redacted]|||
> _____

>
>On Fri, 14 Nov 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:
>
>.....---->
>> And a quiet revolution has taken place.
>>
>>
>> William Burmeister
>>
>
>

↑ Index

374. henry gould
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Mon 17 Nov 1997

On Mon, 17 Nov 1997 10:58:51 -0600 p. durgin said:
> A democracy is cruxed on the ideal that WE know what's best for >US. Agreed? Then let's move on.
> A representitive democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know >that someone ELSE knows what's best for us. Agreed? Then let's move on.
> A social democracy is cruxed on the ideal that we know that we DO >NOT know what's best for anyone else except US. Agreed? Then let's move >on.

A democracy is based on the idea that since none of us knows what's best for us, we had better decide together about it. A representative democracy is based on the idea of trust - i.e., we will delegate authority because too many cooks spoil the Water Supply Board. A social democracy, I thought, was based on the idea that private property doesn't know what's good for us any more than we do. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

375. r.drake
Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

I Seem To Be A Verb; 1970. i enjoyed it quite a bit when i read it, i was building geodesic domes on a commune at th time...

lbd

> A friend tells me that Fuller wrote a book-length open-form poem about the Industrial Revolution. Anyone know about it? Is it worth tracking down?
>
> Gary R.

↑ Index

376. Catherine Daly
Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

---

not in my opinion, although I did attempt to read it

Catherine Daly

↑ Index

377. acgold01
Thanks
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Belatedly, thanks to everyone who relayed contact information for Robin Blaser, Joanne Kyger, and Robert Creeley.

As part of the Laughlin-Pound conversation, someone mentioned Eliot on "mentorship." It put me in mind of what allegedly happened when Spender met Eliot for the first time: Eliot said he could understand why Spender would want to write poetry, but that he didn't understand what it meant to want to (as Spender apparently put it) "be a poet."

Alan

↑ Index

378. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Yasusada ... Watten ... Social texas
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Jordan writes:

> A catalog of literary hoaxes covers the front page of the second section of this past weekend's Financial Times, and list-subjects Yasusada, Ern Malley and Alan Sokal make up the bulk of the second half of the article. Way to go team! Demidenko, Paul Theroux and Ossian, hoaxers not yet broached here are touched on, and Chatterton and Bob Hershon's public school students are left out. Just thought I'd mention it, since Kent Johnson seems to have taken a vacation from the Yasusada updates.

Could somebody fill me in on Chatterton and Bob Hershon's public school students?

Thanks!

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

379. Dean A. Brink

Re: not worth quoting, a tangent

Mon 17 Nov 1997

Hearing Clinton address gays lesbians at the Hyatt at least one man stood up,
the President, and questioned an America without rights for all, turned back a time blacks took a back seat to what was correct democratically broke the spell of false priests would-be poets with miles to go before they rollover lauded there, cruxed (sic) on dead ideals that WE know what's best for the U.S. Let's move on.

Dean "Thessolonius" Brink
[redacted]

↑ Index

380. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Naropa Triple A

Mon 17 Nov 1997

Sunday night at Naropa the annual Fall faculty reading was finally held, an earlier date having been called on account of blizzard.

Andrew Schelling read first. He began with an extract from the forthcoming travel journal _The Road to Ocassino: A Chiapas Journal_, which gave a fluid account of an old Nahuatl treatise on flowers & song, hallucinogens and poesis, and their convergence in "the luminous sphere of poetry." "But ah, when the mushroom wears off, one returns to daily life - restless, disconsolate." Next he read from a delightful series of Haibuns - a hybrid form of prose and haiku. These crisp meditations on Coloradan geological and natural features moved by way of sharp, immediate, precise and bright details and included a playful and very effective section that dwelt on the odd conventions of place-naming - "A town called Rifle. A gulch called Skeleton." The section ended with a haiku for Ginsberg:

Old masters depart, spring flowers return, haze hangs blue by high peaks.

(Not an exact syllable count - either I missed a beat, or it's intentional).

Schelling closed with a selection of droll, piquant translations from Sanskrit love poems.

Anne Waldman began her reading by observing somewhat mordantly that "everyday seems like Memorial Day around here." In honor of what would have been Ted Berrigan's 63rd birthday, she then read his "Sonnet 23," and "In Anselm Hollo's Poems." Next in the marche funebre came "Lines for Elio Schneeman," followed by a truly wonderful elegy for Hannah Weiner entitled "Hannah Where" - "You are coded in between all the lines... I love you because you are the one who says I see, I see, I see..."

Following, Anne read from new work: "Marriage: A Sentence" - a funny, bittersweet chronology of two marriages and a third common law arrangement - "When you are married chances are there will be food in the house when you come in the door." Next, sections from _Iovis 2 & 3_: the first a continuation of her critique on the American obsession with guns, then a powerful blast on the turf battle over the idea of "women's epic" - featuring a very pointed, very right-on letter from a former list subscriber (no names, please!) and co-starring Charles Olson and Robt. Creeley.

Anne closed her set in a duet with Steven Taylor on harmonium - lines from Allen's "Mind Breaths" - "no plot, no plot, embrace the stars you are made of..."

The remainder of the evening was then remanded to the trusty custody of Anselm Hollo. Who is acquainted with the night, the blight, the cross-hair sight and a species of chimpanzees whose conflict resolution technique eschews war in favor of group orgies. Began AH: "not to belabor lugubrium, but..." and then read three poems by the late James Laughlin. He then read from his own recent _Hills Like Purple Pachyderms_ and _AHOE: And How On Earth_. Following are brief snatches: "benign evening come down... this is not the sea, just a big puddle of hopeless desire for a new brain." "So listen to some Locatelli adrift in history's drunken boat." "How many years does it take to shut up, to learn to shut up? Down the toliet with insight stew." (Pound: "tempus loquendi, tempus tacendi"). "wintry note floats in reason's mind shaft..." And for Ted Berrigan a poem, presented here in its entirety: "The Other is the Same." And from a poem for Allen Ginsberg - "don't shelve that book yet, I want to remember him a little longer." Underneath the bright, bristling wit, the marvelous, impish wordplay, the impeccable sense of rhythm, the sharp pitch and stress of diction, me thought I detected a darker note in Hollo's work than had been heard previously. Or was it only the sound of twilight drawing its ravenous wing over all of us?

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

381. Susan Clark

reminder of Nov22 RADDLE MOON 16 launch at HERE

Mon 17 Nov 1997

One last reminder for NYC-and-area beings about the RADDLE MOON 16 launch at the HERE Inn, NYC, this Saturday November 22nd at 3pm in the afternoon.... all welcome.
Hope to see you there.

Susan Clark ed.RADDLE MOON
New York contact tel# Sat Nov22 - Tues Nov25: [redacted] [Stacy Doris]

> [very] recent French poetry, previously unavailable in English translation,
>
> > On Novenmber 22, there will be a book party/benefit launch > > *for RADDLE MOON 16 : * 22 New [to North America] French Writers  > > guest-edited by Norma Cole and Stacy Doris
>
> New York area contributors to this issue --
> Ann Lauterbach, Sianne Ngai, Serge Gavronsky, Melanie Neilson, > Lee Ann Brown, Nick Piombino, Richard Sieburth, Fiona Templeton, > Chet Wiener, Jena Osman, Eleni Sikelianos and Stacy Doris -- > are invited to read from their translations of Hubert Lucot, > le Lievre de Mars, Albane Provoust, Sandra Moussempes, [OULIPO- > associated] Michelle Grangaud, Kati Molnar, Christophe Tarkos, > Isabelle Garo, Annie Zadek, Josee Lapeyriere, Veronique Vassiliou, > and Christophe Marchand-Kiss [please fill in accents, Netscape won't]
>
> The 200-page issue also includes the work of : Elisabeth Jacquet, Manuel Joseph,
> Sabine Macher, Sebastien Smirou, Huguette Champroux, Caroline Dubois, Cecile Gaudin, > and Oscarine Bosquet translated by other Canadian and US poets as well
> one

> untranslated work [a "poeme-installation," 19 Jours de Chant] and an image/text piece, "7 Adieux" both by Frederique Guetat-Liviani
>
> It's the last event in the Ear at HERE series before Thanksgiving, so drop by > Saturday at 3 pm, Nov. 22 at HERE, 145 6th Ave (between Spring and Broome) NYC
>
> !refreshments!
>
> RADDLE MOON is also available by subscription [$15] or single copy [$10] from
> RADDLE MOON, MainSpace, 518-350 East Second Avenue, Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8 Canada.
> [US people please pay in US dollars; cheques/checks and money orders to RADDLE MOON ok], or > through Small Press Distribution [San Francisco].

↑ Index

382. Steve Evans
Farrell's Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

In Andrew Levy and Bob Harrison's dazzling inaugural volume of CRAYON, a census of the great ideas people have when Jackson Mac Low is in the vicinity, Dan Farrell, formerly of Vancouver and now residing in poet-thick Brooklyn, excerpts his "(Untitled Epic Poem on the History of Industrialization by R. Buckminster Fuller) GRID." Each stanza is gridded out of the words on a page of the 1962 Simon and Schuster edition of Fuller's poem.

Grid #27, shorter than most, goes like this:

uneuphonious paralysis
rosy hands omnipotence lowering big feet blue me acromegaly much do

The work, like its topic still in progress, is on-line at http://www.erols.com/dfar/index.html. Dan voiced a batch in Providence two Saturdays ago in an informal set with Peter Culley, whose lovely, smart, and sometimes startlingly Olsonic THE CLIMAX FOREST (Vancouver: Leech, 1995; available from SPD) is a book I greatly admire.

Crayon, complete with a soundtrack, goes for $20 at booksellers or via SPD (ISSN [redacted]).

Steve Evans

art isa uto nom ous isa uto nom ous art uto nom ous art isa nom ous art isa uto ous art isa uto nom

wha tsy our exc use

↑ Index

383. Mark Baker
Hershon and Chatterton
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Chatterton, who Bob Hershon used to call one of his marvellous boys, began in gladness to read LANGUAGE poetry while in the bath, then for his first assignment in Bob's class handed in one of Bernstein's poems. Bob, stunned by the archaic calligraphy, passed Chatterton's ms onto Sun and Moon, which _did not recognize the original voice_! How this amused Chatterton, who nevertheless ended in despondency and madness.

> Could somebody fill me in on Chatterton and Bob Hershon's public school students?
>
> Thanks!

You're welcome,

Mark Baker

↑ Index

384. Jo Ann Blevins
R. Bucky Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Fuller's text is _Untitled Epic Poem on the History of Industrialization_ (Touchstone/Simon & Schuster, 1962).

↑ Index

385. maz881
Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
Mon 17 Nov 1997

There kept being a crow noise from the speaker. Sometimes Sit down in your seat would come out. And breaking glass sounds on something fouled. We listen to these and other noises as the West Oahu CaneFires become super victorious over the Hilo Stars at Hans L'Orange Park in Waipahu.

Getting tickets was easy from the District Manager where I work because he has season tickets. Four grandstands that cost $6 each were free for me. Also, I can Option games at Rainbow Stadium to see the Mud Sharks, or on Maui to see the Stingrays or even the big island to see the stars. This reminds me that I like listening to the am news station KHNR when I hear the big island report from Glenn. Each day he does one and only one story & it's about crime and it involves drug taking and women getting beat up. KHRN, Hilo is how he ends his report.

If you look around, there are a pleasing number of distractions hung on the fence: SeaLand: Island Focus / Global Reach, Schuler Homes, Sears, Bank of Hawaii, Vanstar: The Technology Services Company, Kobayashi Inc, Amfac, Mufi Hannemann, Waikele Club, Napa, Charley's Care Care Center, New City Nissan, E-Z Corners: Shade Canopies & Accessories, Zelt, The Brain Coral Foundation, West Oahu Canaries, 1st Hawaiian Bank, Gatorade, Carrot Systems, Mililani Shopping Center, Loco Moco Drive Inn, Pearl City Shopping Center, Lagestic Mookies & Dormers, National Waste Removal, American Fence Co.

How did these get here? O let me see if I'm replicating.

I don't notice the best sign which is for Wahiawa General Hospital in left center field. It's called the $10,000 puka. I suppose if someone hits a dong into the hole, they get $10,000. I know what a puka is because when I hooked up my computer in the branch, the District Manager said you need a new puka for your patch cable. The District Manager's son is hapa. The District Manager's favorite lunch meal is a big bbq pork sandwich at Big Kahuna's near the airport. They make their own bread and pizza.

It is true that you don't have to hit in the puka to get money. For example, cheerleaders come around with a hat and ask for money to give to the guy who just hit a homerun. Mufi Hannemann sponsors these lovely ladies, The Sugar Canes. They do dances between innings and help stage the prize giving events also. Mufi is on the city council and his picture is on the program. He is smiling in an aloha shirt and next to his smile it says Aloha to a Winning Team!

Susan is embarrassed about asking for the autograph of the CaneFires' Manager Tom Lawless. I think he used to be a utility infielder for the Cardinals. Susan says so any time a player comes up who is affiliated with the Cardinals. Both she and Bryant are wearing Cardinals hats. Hers is home. His away.

On the drive to the game Bryant says the NavSat attenuates during wartime so certain informed users can fire weapons with very accurate foci. During peace time, the attenuation is dithered so that airplanes and ships can listen to the satellites for positioning, but not firing weapons. This relates to the antenna which has just been pulled down to speed the opening of the new H-3 freeway. The antenna looked like many high tension wires strung across the big gorge near Kaneohe. A network of these sounders broadcasted very low frequency beeps to ships. They were called the Omega Stations because they were the end all to large broadcasters. You can see a sign in North Dakota that says US Coast Guard Omega Station. Another funny thing is that the Omega wavelengths are about 15 miles. I have trouble imagining waves that big, even on the north shore, which is near Bryant's house and he is a science teacher and is always reading some book at poetry readings like the CMOS cook book.

Juliana is grading papers, I'm watching for foul balls, Susan has her mitt (lefty), Bryant is sucking on crack seed & Charles is mixing $1.75 mai tais for Australians on Pub Craaaawl at the Reef Towers pool bar in Wacky Kitty and never sees any of this so then this is for him. One foul ball hits the stadium lights behind home plate and I want the lights to shatter like in the Natural, but no, the ball just falls back to the field. During its fall the umpire gets a new ball out of his pouch and begins to throw it to the pitcher; but he stops mid-motion because the foul ball has bounced off his leg. A bat boy kid picks up the foul ball as the umpire completes his throw to the pitcher.

The Phili Phanatic is here tonite, but in his non-denominational form which is called Sport. Sport shakes his belly in a hip jerky sex motion and goes ha ha ha. Sport comes up and rubs the non hair on my bolohead thank you Susan. Sport is pleased stroking the short spines and makes an ah ah ah noise. I imagine Rodney Dangerfield is below the surface.

In the middle of the sixth inning, Sport puts on a pink dress & feather boa and approaches the home plate ump. A song plays like I can't take my eyes off you, you're to good to be true, etc. Sport seduces the ump and they slow dance. Sport wraps the pink feather boa around the ump's neck and trails it down between his legs. Sport pulls the feather boa slowly from behind in order to stimulate the ump. Some young girls say when he go do dis, ya and ya, he funny, ya.

CaneFire man is here too. I am frightened by CaneFire man. He has a yellow fire head and big white eyes and a white mouth. Yet the eyes don't work and he never speaks. He lives on the hat and is in fact the logo of the team where he swings a burning bat and is smiling and has devilish eyebrows. He represents the spirit of the Cane Fire, which starts in the middle and slowly creeps outward. Rats scurry across the road, trying to get away. Egrets swoop down to eat worms. The cane crackles like metal in a microwave. The flames are anxious to burn the cane. Flames jump from stalk to stalk, hiding behind the smoke and burning the stalks to a crisp. The ashes rustle in the wind and land like soft feathers.

The field was developed by the Oahu Sugar Company and improved through the efforts of plantation manager, Mr. Hans L'Orange. He recognized Waipahu as a baseball town and he supported 24 ball teams at the plantation to keep the workers and the community entertained. Mr. L'Orange had a vision for Waipahu and its people, whom he sincerely cared for. He also had a vision for the ballpark which coincided with his business philosophy that Oahu Sugar Company had good sugar because Oahu Sugar Company had happy people.

Capacity: 2,200
Dimensions (LF): 278
Dimensions (LC): 351
Dimensions (CF): 400
Dimensions (RF): 385
Dimensions (RC): 325
CF to RF Fence: 10' High
CF to LF Fence: 40' High
Playing Surface: Grass

As we leave the game, the CaneFires undress in the dug out. Juliana is bummed she has not noticed the Asian players doing this, but does see the umpires changing in the parking lot.

The field is now empty and black, with only flickering flames, popping up here and there, playing hide and seek. Trucks lumber like elephants, carrying loads of black cane from the wide, black, deserted fields.

The cane trucks rumble into the sugar mill and unload black stalks onto the conveyor belt. Molasses barrels are piled up like blocks. Thick smoke rises out of the stacks. The faded green buildings drowse as the smell of sweet sugar drifts through the air and lingers in the town and another day at the Oahu Sugar Company has come to an end.

Bill L

> Date: Sun, 16 Nov 1997 09:43:11 -1000
> From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
> Subject: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball

> Last night at the winter league game between the Honolulu Sharks and the Maui Stingrays, the former Philly Phanatic (now sporting the rather dull moniker of "Sport") was spotted buffing list member Bill Luoma's bolohead not once, but twice. On the second go-round, he applied squeegee and a tiny plunger to help him in his task. Bill was then presented with an autographed card of Sport, but not the one showing the mascot pinching a base coach's bum--that one was strangely reserved for the under 10 crowd. But by far the best venue for baseball on this island (Juliana, Bill, and I will attest to this) is the choicely named Hans L'Orange Park in Waipahu, where the West Oahu Cane Fires play their home games. At that park, a collection is taken up from the crowd for the private use of any Cane Fires player who hits one home run, lidat!
>
> Susan
>
> No poetry but in baseball.

↑ Index

386. david bromige
naropa triple A report
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Thank you, Pat Pritchett, for one more of your always eminently readable reports on a poetry evening. Anselm's AHOE is a lovely book, which I continue to read around in, & it was good to see it being named out here on the List.

I'm glad you didnt title yr post "Schelling/Waldman/Hollo." Whenever I see a List-post thats just a proper name these weeks I shrink up with fear that the person being named, has died. I had to pause & wonder at "Buckminster Fuller" earlier today....

Anyhow, perhaps the plethora of these reports has something to do with the darkening of Anselm's palette. As long as he continues to emit, though, time can reverse itself.

David

↑ Index

387. Maria Damon
Re: Naropa Triple A
Mon 17 Nov 1997

At 5:01 PM -0500 11/17/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>Sunday night at Naropa the annual Fall faculty reading was finally held, an >earlier date having been called on account of blizzard.

>
etc terrific report patrick thanks

↑ Index

388. Maria Damon
Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
Mon 17 Nov 1997

---

jeez, everyone seems to be having so much fun and writing so entertainingly about it, while i sit in 15 degree weather sweating over this dumb conference paper. it makes me feel much better, actually to read these marvelous doings in far places like boulder and hawai'i. plus, i had a skylight put into my bedroom ceiling; having officially joined the ranks of the bourgeoisie (also having started in oct to have $ deducted from my paycheck toward retirement); this is our version of fun in the frozen heart land. life's looking up (at a sometimes-blue sky thru a glass hole in my roof!)

At 7:48 PM -0500 11/17/97, [redacted] wrote:
>There kept being a crow noise from the speaker. Sometimes Sit down in your >seat would come out. And breaking glass sounds on something fouled. We >listen to these and other noises as the West Oahu CaneFires become super >victorious over the Hilo Stars at Hans L'Orange Park in Waipahu.
>
>Getting tickets was easy from the District Manager where I work because he >has season tickets. Four grandstands that cost $6 each were free for me.
> Also, I can Option games at Rainbow Stadium to see the Mud Sharks, or on >Maui to see the Stingrays or even the big island to see the stars. This >reminds me that I like listening to the am news station KHNR when I hear the >big island report from Glenn. Each day he does one and only one story & it's >about crime and it involves drug taking and women getting beat up. KHRN, >Hilo is how he ends his report.
>
>If you look around, there are a pleasing number of distractions hung on the >fence: SeaLand: Island Focus / Global Reach, Schuler Homes, Sears, Bank of >Hawaii, Vanstar: The Technology Services Company, Kobayashi Inc, Amfac, Mufi >Hannemann, Waikele Club, Napa, Charley's Care Care Center, New City Nissan, >E-Z Corners: Shade Canopies & Accessories, Zelt, The Brain Coral Foundation, >West Oahu Canaries, 1st Hawaiian Bank, Gatorade, Carrot Systems, Mililani

>Shopping Center, Loco Moco Drive Inn, Pearl City Shopping Center, Lagestic >Mookies & Dormers, National Waste Removal, American Fence Co.
>
>How did these get here? O let me see if I'm replicating.
>
>I don't notice the best sign which is for Wahiawa General Hospital in left >center field. It's called the $10,000 puka. I suppose if someone hits a >dong into the hole, they get $10,000. I know what a puka is because when I >hooked up my computer in the branch, the District Manager said you need a new >puka for your patch cable. The District Manager's son is hapa. The District >Manager's favorite lunch meal is a big bbq pork sandwich at Big Kahuna's near >the airport. They make their own bread and pizza.
>
>It is true that you don't have to hit in the puka to get money. For example, >cheerleaders come around with a hat and ask for money to give to the guy who >just hit a homerun. Mufi Hannemann sponsors these lovely ladies, The Sugar >Canes. They do dances between innings and help stage the prize giving events >also. Mufi is on the city council and his picture is on the program. He is >smiling in an aloha shirt and next to his smile it says Aloha to a Winning >Team!
>
>Susan is embarrassed about asking for the autograph of the CaneFires' Manager
>Tom Lawless. I think he used to be a utility infielder for the Cardinals.
> Susan says so any time a player comes up who is affiliated with the >Cardinals. Both she and Bryant are wearing Cardinals hats. Hers is home.
> His away.
>
>On the drive to the game Bryant says the NavSat attenuates during wartime
so >certain informed users can fire weapons with very accurate foci. During >peace time, the attenuation is dithered so that airplanes and ships can >listen to the satellites for positioning, but not firing weapons. This >relates to the antenna which has just been pulled down to speed the opening >of the new H-3 freeway. The antenna looked like many high tension wires >strung across the big gorge near Kaneohe. A network of these sounders >broadcasted very low frequency beeps to ships. They were called the Omega >Stations because they were the end all to large broadcasters. You can see a >sign in North Dakota that says US Coast Guard Omega Station. Another funny >thing is that the Omega wavelengths are about 15 miles. I have trouble >imagining waves that big, even on the north shore, which is near Bryant's >house and he is a science teacher and is always reading some book at poetry >readings like the CMOS cook book.

>
>Juliana is grading papers, I'm watching for foul balls, Susan has her mitt >(lefty), Bryant is sucking on crack seed & Charles is mixing $1.75 mai tais >for Australians on Pub Craaaawl at the Reef Towers pool bar in Wacky Kitty >and never sees any of this so then this is for him. One foul ball hits the >stadium lights behind home plate and I want the lights to shatter like in the >Natural, but no, the ball just falls back to the field. During its fall the >umpire gets a new ball out of his pouch and begins to throw it to the >pitcher; but he stops mid-motion because the foul ball has bounced off his >leg. A bat boy kid picks up the foul ball as the umpire completes his throw >to the pitcher.
>
>The Phili Phanatic is here tonite, but in his non-denominational form which >is called Sport. Sport shakes his belly in a hip jerky sex motion and goes >ha ha ha. Sport comes up and rubs the non hair on my bolohead thank you >Susan. Sport is pleased stroking the short spines and makes an ah ah ah >noise. I imagine Rodney Dangerfield is below the surface.
>
>In the middle of the sixth inning, Sport puts on a pink dress & feather boa >and approaches the home plate ump. A song plays like I can't take my eyes >off you, you're to good to be true, etc. Sport seduces the ump and they slow >dance. Sport wraps the pink feather boa around the ump's neck and trails it >down between his legs. Sport pulls the feather boa slowly from behind in >order to stimulate the ump. Some young girls say when he go do dis, ya and >ya, he funny, ya.
>
>CaneFire man is here too. I am frightened by CaneFire man. He has a yellow >fire head and big white eyes and a white mouth. Yet the eyes don't work and >he never speaks. He lives on the hat and is in fact the logo of the team >where he swings a burning bat and is smiling and has devilish eyebrows. He >represents the spirit of the Cane Fire, which starts in the middle and slowly >creeps outward. Rats scurry across the road, trying to get away. Egrets >swoop down to eat worms. The cane crackles like metal in a microwave. The >flames are anxious to burn the cane. Flames jump from stalk to stalk, hiding >behind the smoke and burning the stalks to a crisp. The ashes rustle in the >wind and land like soft feathers.

>
>The field was developed by the Oahu Sugar Company and improved through the >efforts of plantation manager, Mr. Hans L'Orange. He recognized Waipahu as a >baseball town and he supported 24 ball teams at the plantation to keep the >workers and the community entertained. Mr. L'Orange had a vision for Waipahu >and its people, whom he sincerely cared for. He also had a vision for the >ballpark which coincided with his business philosophy that Oahu Sugar Company >had good sugar because Oahu Sugar Company had happy people.
>
>Capacity: 2,200
>Dimensions (LF): 278
>Dimensions (LC): 351
>Dimensions (CF): 400
>Dimensions (RF): 385
>Dimensions (RC): 325
>CF to RF Fence: 10' High
>CF to LF Fence: 40' High >Playing Surface: Grass
>
>As we leave the game, the CaneFires undress in the dug out. Juliana is >bummed she has not noticed the Asian players doing this, but does see the >umpires changing in the parking lot.
>
>The field is now empty and black, with only flickering flames, popping up >here and there, playing hide and seek. Trucks lumber like elephants, >carrying loads of black cane from the wide, black, deserted fields.
>
>The cane trucks rumble into the sugar mill and unload black stalks onto the >conveyor belt. Molasses barrels are piled up like blocks. Thick smoke rises >out of the stacks. The faded green buildings drowse as the smell of sweet >sugar drifts through the air and lingers in the town and another day at the >Oahu Sugar Company has come to an end.
>
>Bill L
>
>>Date: Sun, 16 Nov 1997 09:43:11 -1000
>>From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
>>Subject: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball

>
>>Last night at the winter league game between the Honolulu Sharks and the >>Maui Stingrays, the former Philly Phanatic (now sporting the rather dull >>moniker of "Sport") was spotted buffing list member Bill Luoma's bolohead >>not once, but twice. On the second go-round, he applied squeegee and a >>tiny plunger to help him in his task. Bill was then presented with an >>autographed card of Sport, but not the one showing the mascot pinching a >>base coach's bum--that one was strangely reserved for the under 10 crowd.
>>But by far the best venue for baseball on this island (Juliana, Bill, and >>I will attest to this) is the choicely named Hans L'Orange Park in >>Waipahu, where the West Oahu Cane Fires play their home games. At that >>park, a collection is taken up from the crowd for the private use of any >>Cane Fires player who hits one home run, lidat!
>>
>>Susan
>>
>>No poetry but in baseball.
>>

↑ Index

389. Safdie Joseph
Re: buzzwords of the moment
Mon 17 Nov 1997

"weapons of mass destruction"

equals

"wrote fascist opus send moan"

(well, there's about a thousand anagrams -- that's one that jumped out at me)

↑ Index

390. Pierre Joris
Re: R. Bucky Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

& Bucky called the poetics of his thing "ventilated prose" -- a delightful description, me thinks -- Pierre

Jo Ann Blevins wrote:

> Fuller's text is _Untitled Epic Poem on the History of Industrialization_ (Touchstone/Simon & Schuster, 1962).

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Adding music to a good poem is like using a stained-glass window to light a painted picture. — Paul Valéry
==========

↑ Index

391. Marcella
Re: R. Buckminster Fuller
Mon 17 Nov 1997

It's called "Untitled Epic Poem on the History of Industrialization." I = believe it's out of print, but it was published by Simon & Schuster in = 1962, and yes, it's definitely worth tracking down.

From: [redacted]
Sent: Monday, November 17, 1997 12:54 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: R. Buckminster Fuller

A friend tells me that Fuller wrote a book-length open-form poem about the Industrial Revolution. Anyone know about it? Is it worth tracking = down?

Gary R.

↑ Index

392. George Bowering
Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
Mon 17 Nov 1997

Onliest baseball game I ever saw on Oahu was between U. Hawaii and Arizona State. Neat. This was at Aloha Stadium, I think, at Pearl. Artificial turf. And multipurpose. That is, they rolled some bleacher seats in to be the outfield barrier. Neatest thing was not that the Rainbow Warriors won, but that in the stands instead of hotdogs, all the old Japanese guys were eating miso soup.

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

393. George Bowering
Re: Pound, Moore, Laughlin
Mon 17 Nov 1997

>Insofar as Pound goes,
  As to his poetry...its punctuated >with greatness, but also often dissolves in nothingness.
>
>Jerry.

Phew! I have just been reading it for 45 years, and have been labouring at writing poetry for a decade less than that, and so far I havent made myself educated enough to know that Pound is that poor. I still think he's a great poet, and that most of the time. I guess I just havent worked at it hard enough.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

394. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: buzzwords of the moment
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Frankly, rather than buzwords of the moment, I rather know what Opus is thinking...or Dilbert. The only sense I get of the world from newpapers happens in the comics. Gee, I miss Pogo...the most poetic cartoon.

"I has met the enemy and He is Us!" Pogo...sums it up well.

Jerry

↑ Index

395. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Tue 18 Nov 1997

While I agree democracy is based on trust...I can't agree about representative democracy. That comes about because whoever draws up the rules doesn't trust the rule of the mob and finds a "nice" way of developing a leadership faction. And, then, those with money buy off the representatives...that's the way it works in Congress, the Presidency, right down to city hall and the water district.

Jerry

↑ Index

396. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: social (was texas)
Tue 18 Nov 1997

And here, I, a displaced and lonely Texan, thought we would get into a discussion of my native country! Oh well, would have just made the homesickness worse.

Jerry.

↑ Index

397. mark weiss
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Tue 18 Nov 1997

I've lived in two New England towns that were small enough that everyone knew everyone. They were governed by town meeting--direct democracy, Yankee-style. As far as I could tell, these towns were governed with a degree of corruption that would make a Bostonian blush. This being America, almost no one attended the meetings except those who had inherited a monopoly on town offices. An example: The town tree warden in Williamsburgh, Mass., also ran a tree-removal company. For every tree he condemned he earned a fee, and he assigned the execution to his own profit. His brother was the road commissioner. I lived on South Street, then and now a quiet place that saw traffic primarily when the school bus picked the kids up in the morning and deposited them in the afternoon. It had one vicious curve that an occasional drunk took the hard way when it was covered with ice during the seven months of winter, to much crunching of metal and little bodily harm. The road commissioner saw a good thing here. Under Mass law roads above a certain width automatically become the responsibility of the state. In theory widening the road could save the town a little of the plowing costs it sustained every winter. It would also remove half of the front lawns of the houses along the road, and, coincidentally, a lot of trees. Using that vicious curve and the school buses as an excuse, and holding out the prospect of relief from plowing costs, the widening proposal was pushed through a packed crowd of maybe 20 close friends and relatives. The following morning, before anyone else could find out what had happened at the meeting, the tree warden was on South Street with his crew. By 10 AM a row of oak trees that had run in a straight line for a couple of hundred yards along the road for two hundred years had been reduced to firewood. But the warden had miscalculated. The trees had bordered Nels Christiansen's farm, and Nels was married to Cathy Merritt, whose family had been on South Street, a half-mile of which they owned, for longer than the oaks. They got a special town meeting called and organized a couple of hundred people to attend. The road did get widened, but more carefully, up to the border with the next town, where it retains its original width, meaning that there has been no effect on traffic or safety. The bad curve is still there, and so are the tree warden and his family, and no one without something to gain goes to the town meetings. Maybe the idea of representative democracy was that if you paid someone to attend a meeting he might actually get there.

At 10:38 PM 11/17/97 -0800, you wrote:
>While I agree democracy is based on trust...I can't agree about >representative democracy. That comes about because whoever draws up the >rules doesn't trust the rule of the mob and finds a "nice" way of >developing a leadership faction. And, then, those with money buy off the >representatives...that's the way it works in Congress, the Presidency, >right down to city hall and the water district.
>
>Jerry
>
>

↑ Index

398. david bromige
pound more laughlin
Tue 18 Nov 1997

George, I hadnt realized that "but also often dissolves in nothingness" meant that Pound was a poor poet. Isnt that what all the finest poetry does? (I took the "in" to mean "into". But perhaps the writer means, "drop it in a pot of nothingness, and it dissolves", a remark that may have something to do with the esthetics of reception.) Btw, did you get those moose antlers off your head yet? We've been missing you at the poker game. David

↑ Index

399. Rob Hardin
grief to come/tragedy et al
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Although I did express grief over Kathy Acker on UB Poetics, and even though I did not use the word tragedy in expressing my grief, I do find Kathy's present condition intolerably sad. I am not part of your literary community; I am not an academic; I had been trying refrain from speaking publicly about the recent loss of Kathy and others. Those who know Kathy well must be aware of the strong and conflicting emotions she can evoke. The strength of those emotions took me by surprise when I posted here. I underestimated the intensity of those emotions.

If I'm reading them correctly, certain correspondents on this list are more interested in challenging grief than in acknowledging it. If so, remember: I did not post a discussion of scholarship or historical accuracy. Truthfully, I should not even have mentioned Kathy, since her health ought to have remained my private concern. Nor do I wish to go into detail about Kathy's condition. To challenge the assessments of others would mean to divulge more of what I ought to have kept to myself.

My reason for posting here was simple. People were discussing Laughlin's death while I was trying not to think about Kathy. Nevertheless, as the discussion continued, I kept thinking of her. I also thought of Lou Stathis, David Wojnarowicz, Susan Walsh and Liz Brockland, all of whom died or disappeared without my being able to do anything about it. When I could not go on thinking about their passing, I posted blindly.

To David and Maria:

While it is terrible to read of someone's death, it is worse still to feel death's immanence without being able to intervene. It is worse to watch impotently as death descends. Your words do not correspond to my understanding of death, nor have I endorsed your words; therefore I need not be true to your words. I need to be true to the memory of those for whom I grieve.

I did not know your child prodigy. I have not stood at the epicenter of any of the disasters you cite. Yes, these events are tragic. But while one can lament them in the abstract, such events do not awaken pain.

What I want is not to win some argument over terms like grief and tragedy and loss. What I want is for Kathy to remain alive. What I want is for Lou, Lizzie, Susan, David and others to resurface. It is unfair that we should live and they should not. I wish they were alive and that is all I wish.

In the past, I have cared about rhetoric as ardently as I cared about people. But now that I'm losing people, it is harder to care about rhetoric.

If you did not mean to attack me over an honest expression of grief, then please accept my apologies for misunderstanding your reply.

However, if you did wish to quibble with me over texts, then please choose a textual reference in any other post I have ever made. Please don't take me to task over this one. Grief is bad enough. An autopsy would be torture.

All the best to you. May you be reconciled to this subject in a more adult fashion than I have managed so far. I wish you no ill. I do not wish to fight.

All best always,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

400. hen

Re: not worth quoting, a tangent

Tue 18 Nov 1997

On Mon, 17 Nov 1997 22:38:18 -0800 Jerry E. Fletcher said:
>While I agree democracy is based on trust...I can't agree about >representative democracy. That comes about because whoever draws up the >rules doesn't trust the rule of the mob and finds a "nice" way of >developing a leadership faction. And, then, those with money buy off the >representatives...that's the way it works in Congress, the Presidency, >right down to city hall and the water district.

That still leaves the question, how would "the mob", i.e., everybody, take care of garbage collection each week? I believe in giving trust a chance and reining in the money interests. You cynics give up too easily. Popular sovereignty AND the rule of law would seem to require elected representatives to devote full time to interpreting the law. Though many of our congresspeople seem to devote full time to fundraising and partisanship. That's because most of us have left out the sovereignty clause. We're apolitical and then we blame the politicians for taking advantage of us. Our enemies never seem to live up to our own versions of utopia, for some reason. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

401. David Zauhar
Re: RHawai'i Winter League Baseball
Tue 18 Nov 1997

All this talk about Baseball in Hawaii makes me feel even stupider for sitting through a Chicago Bears game on Sunday in minus-five windchill. That game, too, had poetic implications. Besides constantly reminding me of Lorine Neidecker's quote ("these are the folk from whom all poetry flows. and dreadfully much else" {pardon the lack of lineation}), it also reminded me that more people read interesting books than I tend to assume: when during one of the hundreds of TV timeouts I showed my friend the used book I bought the day before (David McFadden's _Gypsy Guitar_), and which I was reading to and from the game on the el, the guy sitting next to him said, "hey, he write travel books?" Turns out his wife works in a bookstore, and she brought home the recently released collection of McFadden's "trip" books, and he read the _Trip Around Lake Huron_, and I learned for the first time that these three books had been brought out as one: from a guy wearing a Bears Jersey who put away enough beer to pickle an ox. Almost worth freezing to death while watching a boring game.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"The oldest of all alleged libraries are the libraries of the gods" --Ernest Cushing Richardson

↑ Index

402. J. Tate
Literacy
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Many books/articles on literacy stress the socio-cultural empowerment literacy brings. But, little I can find addresses these sorts of questions: is aesthetic education useful to literacy? can aesthetic pleasure be a reason to teach someone to read?

Any suggestions on readings that address how aesthetic concerns intersect with literacy issues?

Thanks,

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
Department of English
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

403. Rob Hardin grief not merely mine, nor conclusions personal--
Tue 18 Nov 1997

--when we voice fears that she may cease to be.

> Subject: rob hardin's grief > shared by many, I have no doubt. And No, Rob, it wasnt you who used 'tragedy". My chief concern was that Listpersons were posting in as if Kathy Acker's death were a foregone conclusion & this struck me as callously insensitive. What would it cost you-all to have at least as much patience as she needs to muster? David

I can understand your position, David. You cite good and sober reasons for voicing it, not the least of which is compassion. But if you've read Kathy's cancer piece in the English press, then perhaps you know that she, too, has been impatient with her own mortality; has treated it as a foregone conclusion. She has been more dramatic about her own death than the majority of us could manage at our most excessive.

Those who fear the worst are not callous for expressing that fear:

A callous person wishes the worst to be true. A friend fears the worst and wishes it were not. I would never have voiced my fear if I were not chafed and abraded from visits to the hospital that did zero good, from visits to the police department, from profitless searches for the others whom I've mentioned. What might seem like callousness is really the desperation of a useless friend. That desperation is personal and does not translate. "My" grief is a vain and frivolous subject which,
I fear, is not worth anyone's attention. It posits but does not merit your eloquent response.

My mistake, D. and everyone else. I've said as much already and reiterate now.
I hope we can drop this thread and go about our business.

All the best to you,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

404. Christopher Alexander
Re: to spank your curiosity
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Miekal And wrote:
> You are invited to encounter JOGLARS [...]
> http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/index.html

I just want to call this again to list attention ("whoso would list"), as some of us have been there & many of us seem not to have (or passed without a trace from off...) been there. & thanks, Miekal & Maria (+ participants), for an amazing site!

best, Chris

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted] Marriott Library Instruction
[redacted] (lv. msg.)

↑ Index

405. Jordan Davis
Re: Hershon and Chatterton
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Wow, no! And my goof, it wasn't public school, it was Bob's students at the private St. Ann's School in Brooklyn who created Lawrence Stazer (Teachers & Writers Magazine, V15#3). Chatterton should be listed in yr desk reference or cd rom -- here's how they encapsulate him in the concise Columbia:

1752-70, English Poet. At age 12 he was composing the "Rowley poems" and claiming they were copies of 15th-cent. manuscripts. He came to London, failed to get his work published, and killed himself at 17. An original genius as well as an adept imitator, he used 15th-cent. language but a modern approach. He was a hero to the Romantics.

How many pseudonyms do you have, Henry?
Business Classics

On Mon, 17 Nov 1997, Mark Baker wrote:

> Chatterton, who Bob Hershon used to call one of his marvellous boys, began in gladness to read LANGUAGE poetry while in the bath, then for his first assignment in Bob's class handed in one of Bernstein's poems. Bob, stunned by the archaic calligraphy, passed Chatterton's ms onto Sun and

> Moon, which _did not recognize the original voice_! How this amused Chatterton, who nevertheless ended in despondency and madness.
>
> Could somebody fill me in on Chatterton and Bob Hershon's public school students?
>
> Thanks!
>
> You're welcome,
>
> Mark Baker

↑ Index

406. Tom Vogler

Bananas?

Tue 18 Nov 1997

I'm wondering if anyone knows where the infamous Bruce Andrews one-line poem "Bananas is an example" comes from? I'm especially interested in tracking down a critical essay or intro to an anthology where I know I read it first. (My interest is in the logic of exemplification, so I'm mostly interested in how this poem gets used as "an example").Any help would be much appreciated.
Tom Vogler <[redacted]>

↑ Index

407. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Naropa Triple A

Tue 18 Nov 1997

Thanks Maria & David. Yes, I suspect David you correctly attribute one of the causes for the alleged recent endarkenment in Hollo's poems. Dark they may be, but I find them bracing and peculiarly comforting, perhaps from acknowledgement of common plight, i.e. mortality. And unlike Pound, thank god, no retreat into tempus anything but straight on until nightfall, damn "the insight stew."

Patrick Pritchett

From: Maria Damon
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Naropa Triple A
Date: Tuesday, November 18, 1997 9:38AM

At 5:01 PM -0500 11/17/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>Sunday night at Naropa the annual Fall faculty reading was finally held, an >earlier date having been called on account of blizzard.
>
etc terrific report patrick thanks

↑ Index

408. Rudolph Rougenez
Re: Hershon and Chatterton
Tue 18 Nov 1997

On Tue, 18 Nov 1997 13:48:38 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>
>1752-70, English Poet. At age 12 he was composing the "Rowley poems" and >claiming they were copies of 15th-cent. manuscripts. He came to London, >failed to get his work published, and killed himself at 17. An original >genius as well as an adept imitator, he used 15th-cent. language but a >modern approach. He was a hero to the Romantics.
>
>How many pseudonyms do you have, Henry?

Dear Mr. Davis, Unaccustomed as I am to this epistolary format, nevertheless I will endeavor to respond to your query. In brief, Sr. Enrique Chepasa de Shivamitimbres-Goulashada, known to certain contemporary "email" networks variously as "Henry Gould", "Jack Spandrift", Eric Blarnes", and "Torquemada", remains an elusive historical personage in the history of late 17th-cent. Iberian pseudo-poetics. Born in Granada (according to local legend, beneath a flowering Burpee seed catalog), Sr. Enrique served in the Spanish Armada under the pseudonym of Fernando Bombastador, Capitain of the Galleon Reye Leetle-Brune-Jug, which foundered tragicomically off the northeast coast of Scotland in 1588. To summarize, Sr. Enrique lived out the rest of his days chained to a barrel of McDougall's ale; from there, he wrote the masterful version of Cervantes' famous "Don Quijote" which so inspired JL Borges' inimitable "Don Rickles en Madrid" pastiche, with which I have no doubt you have undoubtedly certain familiarities, I am convinced. (Pardon my english.) The writings attributed to his other pseudonyms, mentioned above, are apocryphal and of doubtful provenance; however, Luigi Della Patata of Bologna in a recent monograph has compared chirography of the various ms. with signal success. For further information I encourage you to consult Della Patata's website:
http://www.consyrup.com; and thank you for all your enquiries to which I regret my inability to respond individually, as I am 16 different persons, and you can imagine the practical difficulties which might result from such and etc.

Yours multiply,
Rudolph Rougenez

↑ Index

409. Pritchett,Pat
Re: to spank your curiosity
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Thanks for the nudge, Christopher. I'm finally checking it out and it is truly a garden of marvels. Great job Miekal & Maria!

Patrick Pritchett

From: Christopher Alexander
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: to spank your curiosity
Date: Tuesday, November 18, 1997 2:15PM

Miekal And wrote:
> You are invited to encounter JOGLARS [...]
> http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/index.html

I just want to call this again to list attention ("whoso would list"), as some of us have been
there & many of us seem not to have (or passed without a trace from off...) been there. & thanks,
Miekal & Maria (+ participants), for an amazing site!

↑ Index

410. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Tue 18 Nov 1997

---

hen wrote:
>

> That still leaves the question, how would "the mob", i.e., everybody, > take care of garbage collection each week?
> I believe in giving trust a chance and > reining in the money interests. You cynics give up too easily.
> Popular sovereignty AND the rule of law would seem to require elected > representatives to devote full time to interpreting the law.

> Though many of our congresspeople seem to devote full time to fundraising and partisanship. That's because most of us have left out the sovereignty clause. We're apolitical and then we blame the politicians for taking advantage of us. Our enemies never seem to live up to our own versions of utopia, for some reason. - Henry Gould

Henry,

I'm no cynic about the path of representative democracy and have not given up. I do think its the best way to govern, but history is on the side of the money powers buying what they think is best for them and hang the rest of us. Then all the corruption and power games get thrown in and you have the continual messes we find ourselves in most of the time. Nay, not a cynic, but a student, as well as practioner, of government and electoral politics with an insider view to its workings.

Jerry.

↑ Index

411. david bromige
Not only my curiosity
Tue 18 Nov 1997

---

has been spanked, but also my interest & my awareness--thank you, Chris, for the heads-up : youre better than an English nanny! And kudos to Mikael y Maria for their hard work. David

↑ Index

412. henry gould
Re: democracy
Tue 18 Nov 1997

A follow-up to previous thread. Cynicism & realism. With respect to rose-tinted glasses, please give me some slack: I was born & raised in Minnesota, after all. & you probably recall that old Rhode Island political adage: "The road to Hell is paved with Hubert Humphreys, potholed with Gene McCarthys, and resurfaced with Walter Mondales."

Speaking of Rhode Island, here's a little Roger Williams: When a field is to be broken up, they have a very loving sociable speedy way to dispatch it: All the neighbors Men and Women forty, fifty, a hundred &etc., joyne, and come in to help freely. With friendly joyning they break up their fields, build their Forts, hunt the Woods, stop and kill fish in the Rivers, it being tru with them as with all the World in the Affaires of Earth or Heaven: By concord little things grow great, by discord the greatest come to nothing _Concordia parvae res crescunt,

Discordia magnae dilabunter_. - Roger Williams KEY INTO THE LANGUAGE OF AMERICA (Rosmarie Waldrop, poeta valora, literally "scratched the surface") - Henry Gould

↑ Index

413. david bromige
rob hardin's grief
Tue 18 Nov 1997

---

shared by many, I have no doubt. And No, Rob, it wasnt you who used 'tragedy". My chief concern was that Listpersons were posting in as if Kathy Acker's death were a foregone conclusion & this struck me as callously insensitive. What would it cost you-all to have at least as much patience as she needs to muster? David

↑ Index

414. p. durgin
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Anyone who heard Clinton's address will remember his quoting of Whitman. Next day, William B.'s "silent revolution," Eileen Myles' '92 campaign of "total disclosure," and wondering about poetics as gesture(s) of activism. A representitive democracy would seem to simulate how we ultimately "trust" our authors. Who wrote Mr. Clinton's address? Myles, in a '94 interview, "I was simply being a writer, a poet, in public. And there was no other way to do that other than to say you're a presidential candidate." C. Bernstein, "Ideology . . . everywhere informs poetry and imparts to it . . . a density of materialized social being expressed through the music of a work as well as its multifoliate references." By insinuating that gays and lesbians and bisexuals as well as himself are equally entitled to the rights of their citizenship, ie. consomate representation, was bittersweet at best. That societal values own up to this notion has yet to be seen. How incredibly calculated Mr. President's unprecedented appearance, and it is a group of faithful voters he's after. I "trust" he will earn some. A poem, as a cultural product, seems an abject token in this context. The question I have for the list is this: to what extent are our poetries/poetics an effective cultural analogue? Is the gap of representation (assuming a lot here, I realize) really any wider now than it may have been in the past, may be in the future? Patrick F. Durgin

|||[redacted]|||

↑ Index

415. Jay Schwartz
Re: Grief to come
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Rob-

Please fill me (us) in on what is wrong with Kathy Acker. I am truly sad to hear of this...

Jay Schwartz

↑ Index

416. p. durgin
Re: not worth quoting, a tangent
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Which is exactly the point attempting to be made by this here cynic. If Clinton were a zine editor, he'd be put out of business half way to Kinko's.

|||[redacted]|||

_____

On Tue, 18 Nov 1997, hen wrote:

> You cynics give up too easily.
> Popular sovereignty AND the rule of law would seem to require elected representatives to devote full time to interpreting the law.
> Though many of our congresspeople seem to devote full time to fundraising and partisanship. That's because most of us have left out the sovereignty clause. We're apolitical and then we blame the politicians for taking advantage of us. Our enemies never seem to live up to our own versions of utopia, for some reason. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

417. mark weiss
(no subject)
Tue 18 Nov 1997

This came to me over the web, ultimate source unknown. I pass it along as a possible source of poems for those so inclined.

One of the fringe benefits of being an English or History teacher is receiving the occasional jewel of a student blooper in an essay. I have pasted together the following "history" of the world from certifiably genuine student bloopers collected by teachers throughout the United States, from eighth grade through college level. Read carefully, and you will learn alot.

The inhabitants of Egypt were called mummies. They lived in the Sarah Dessert and traveled by Camelot. The climate of the sarah is such that the inhabitants have to live elsewhere, so certain areas of the dessert are cultivated by irritation. The Egyptians built the Pyramids in the shape of a huge triangular cube. The Pyramids are a range of mountains between France and Spain.

The Bible is full of interesting caricatures. In the first book of the Bible, Guinesses, Adam and Eve were created from an apple tree. One of their children, Cain, asked "Am I my brother's son?" God asked Abraham to sacrifice Issac on Mount Montezuma. Jacob, son of Issac, stole his brother's birthmark. Jacob was a patriarch who brought up his twelve sons to be patriarchs, but they did not take to it. One of Jacob's sons, Joseph, gave refuse to the Israelites.

Pharaoh forced the Hebrew slaves to make bread without straw. Moses led them to the Red Sea, where they made unleavened bread, which is bread made without any ingredients. Afterwards, Moses went up on Mount Cyanide to get the ten commandments. David was a Hebrew king skilled at playing the liar. He faught with the Philatelists, a race of people who lived in Biblical times. Solomon, one of David's sons, had 500 wives and 500 porcupines.

Without the Greeks, we wouldn't have history. The greeks invented 3 kinds of columns---corinthian, Doric and ironic. They also had myths. A myth is a female moth. One myth says that the mother of Achilles dipped him in the River Stynx until he became intolerable. Achilles appears in "The Illiad", by Homer. Hoomer also wrote the "Oddity", in which Penelope was the last hardship that Ulysses endured on his journey. Actually, Homer was not written by Homer but by another man of that name. Socrates was a famous Greek teacher who went around giving people advice. They killed him. Socrates died from an overdose of wedlock.

In the Olympic Games, Greeks ran races, jumped, hurled the biscuits, and threw the java. The reward to the victor was a coral wreath. The government of Athen was democratic because the people took the law into their own hands. There were no wars in Greece, as the mountains were so high that they couldn't climb over to see what their neighbours were doing. When they faught the Parisians, the greeks were outnumbered because the Parisians had more men.

Eventually the Ramons conquered the Greeks. History called people Romans because they never stayed in one place very long. At Roman banquets, the guests wore garlic in their hair. Julius Caesar extinguished himself on the battlefields of Gaul. The Ides of March killed him because they thought he was going to be made king. Nero was a cruel tyrany who would torture his poor subjects by playing the fiddle to them.

Then came the Middle Ages. King Alfred conquered the Dames, King Arthur lived in the Age of Shivery, King Harlod mustarded his troops before the battle of hastings, Joan of Arc was cannonized by George Bernard Shaw, and the victims of the Black Death grew boobs on their necks. Finally the Magna Carta provided that no free man should be hanged twice for the same offense.

In Midevil times most of the people wee alliterate. The greatest writer of the time was Chaucer, who wrote many poems and verse and also wrote literature. Another tale tells of William Tell, who shot an arrow through an apple while standing on his son's head.

The Renaissance was an age in which more individuals felt the value of their human being. Martin Luther was nailed to the church door at Wittenberg for selling papal indulgences. He died a horrible death, being excommunicated by a bull. It was the painter Donatello's interest in the female nude that made him the father of the Renaissance. It was an age of great inventions and discoveries. Gutenberg invented the Bible. Sir Walter Raleigh is a historical figure because he invented cigarettes. Another important invention was the circulation of blood. Sir Francis circumcised the world with a 100 foot clipper.

The government of England was a limited mockery. Henry VIII found walking difficult because he had an abbess on his knee. Queen Elizabeth was the "Virgin Queen." As a queen she was a success. When Elizabeth exposed herself before her troops, they all shouted "hurrah." Then her navy went out and defeated the Spanish Armadillo.

The greatest writer of the Renaissance was William Shakespear. Shakespear never made much money and is famous only because of his plays. he lived in Windsor with his merry wives, writing tragedies, comedies and errors. In one of Shakespear's famous plays, Hamlet rations out his situation by relieving himself in a long soliloquy. In another, lady Macbeth tries to convince Macbeth to kill the king by attacking his manhood. Romeo and Juliet are an example of a heroic couplet. Writing at the same time as Shakespear was Miquel Cervantes. He wrote "Donkey hote." The next great author was John Milton. Milton wrote "Paradise Lost." Then his wife dies and he wrote "Paradise regained."

During the Renaissance America began. Christopher Columbus was a great navigator who discovered America while cursing about the Atlantic. His ships were called the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Fe. Later the pilgrims crossed the ocean, and that was called the Pilgrim's Progress. When they landed at Plymouth Rock, they were greeted by indians, who came down the hill rolling their was hoops before them. The indian squabs carried porposies on their back. Many of the indian heroes were killed, along with their cabooses, which proved very fatal for them. The winter of 1620 was a hard one for the settlers. Many people died and many babies were born. Captain John Smith was responsible for all this.

One of the causes of the revolutionary Wars was the English put tacks in their tea. Also, the colonists would send their parcels through the post without stamps. During the war, Red Coates and Paul Revere was throwing balls over stone walls. The dogs were barking and the peacocks crowing. Finally, the colonists won the War and no longer had to pay for taxis.

Delegates from the original thirteen states formed the Contented Congress. Thomas Jefferson, a virgin, and Benjamin Franklin were two singers of the Declaration Of Independence. Franklin had gone to Bostin carrying all his clothes in his pocket and a loaf of bread under each arm. He invented electricity by rubbing cats backwards and declared "a horse divided against itself cannot stand." Franklin died in 1790 and is still dead.

George Washington married Matha Curtis and in due time became the Father of our country. Then the Constitution of the United States was adopted to secure domestic hostility. Under the Constitution the people enjoyed the right to keep bare arms.

Abraham Lincoln became America's greatest Precedent. Lincoln's mother died in infancy, and he was born in a log cabin which he built with his own hands. When Lincoln was president, he wore only a tall silk hat. he said "In onion there is strength." Abraham Lincoln wrote the Gettysberg Address while traveling from Washington to Gettysberg on the back of an envelope. He also signed the Emasculation Proclamation, and the Fourteenth Amendment gave the ex-Negroes citizenship. But the clue clux clan would torcher and lynch the ex-Negroes and other innocent victims. On the night of April 14, 1865, Lincoln went to the theater and got shot in his seat by one of the actors in a moving picture show. The believed assinator was John Wilkes Booth, a sopposedly insane actor. This ruined Booth's career.

Meanwhile in Europe, the enlightenment was a reasonable time. Voltare invented electricity and also wrote a book called "Candy." Gravity was invented by Issac Walton. It is chiefly noticeable in the Autumn, when the apples are falling off the trees.

Bach was the most famous composer in the world, and so was Handel. Handel was half German, half Italian, and half English. He was very large. Bach died from 1750 to the present. Beethoven wrote music even though he was deaf. He was so deaf he wrote loud music. He took long walks in the forest even when everyone was calling for him. Beethoven expired in 1827 and later died for this.

France was in a very serious state. The French Revolution was accomplished before it happened. The Marseillaise was the theme song of the French Revolution, and it catapulted into Napoleon. During the Napoleonic Wars, the crowned heads of Europe were trembling in their shoes. Then the Spanish gorrilas came down from the hills and nipped at Napoleon's flanks. Napoleon became ill with bladder problems and was very tense and unrestrained. he wanted an heir to inherit his power, but since Josephine was a baroness, she couldn't bear him any children.

The sun never set on the British Empire because the british Empire is in the east and the sun sets in the West. Queen Victoria was the longest queen. She sat on a thorn for 63 years. Her reclining years and finally the end of her life were exemplatory of a great personality. Her death was the final event which ended her reign.

The ninteenth century was a time of many great inventions and thoughts. The invention of the steam boat caused a network of rivers to spring up. Cyrus McCormick invented the McCormic raper, which did the work of 100 men. Samuel Morse invented a code for telepathy. Louis Pastuer discovered a cure for rabbis. Charles Darwin was a naturailist who wrote the "Organ of the Species." Madman Curie discovered radium. And Karl Marx became one of the Marx Brothers.

The First World war, caused by the assignation of Arch-Duck by a surf, ushered in a new error in the anals of human history.

↑ Index

418. Steven Marks
more comedy tonight
Tue 18 Nov 1997

This came to me in my e-mail today. Thanks, Mark W., for that hilarious history of the world.

> ACTUAL ENGLISH SUBTITLES USED IN FILMS MADE IN HONG KONG.
>
> 1. I am damn unsatisfied to be killed in this way.
> 2. Fatty, you with your thick face have hurt my instep.
> 3. Gun wounds again?
> 4. Same old rules: no eyes, no groin.
> 5. A normal person wouldn't steal pituitaries.
> 6. Damn, I'll burn you into a BBQ chicken!
> 7. Take my advice, or I'll spank you without pants.
> 8. Who gave you the nerve to get killed here?
> 9. Quiet or I'll blow your throat up.
> 10. You always use violence. I should've ordered glutinous rice chicken.
> 11. I'll fire aimlessly if you don't come out!
> 12. You daring lousy guy.
> 13. Beat him out of recognizable shape!
> 14. I have been scared sh_tless too much lately.
> 15. I got knife scars more than the number of your leg's hair!
> 16. Beware! Your bones are going to be disconnected.

> 17. The bullets inside are very hot. Why do I feel so cold?
> 18. How can you use my intestines as a gift?
> 19. This will be of fine service for you, you bag of the scum. I am sure you will not mind that I remove your manhoods and leave them out on the dessert flour for your aunts to eat.
> 20. Yah-hah, evil spider woman! I have captured you by the short rabbits and can now deliver you violently to your gynecologist for a thorough extermination.
> 21. Greetings, large black person. Let us not forget to form a team up together and go into the country to inflict the pain of our karate feets on some _ss of the giant lizard person.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

419. Miekal And hEar wRave
Tue 18 Nov 1997

t e s t r u n +++++ t e s t r u n +++++ t e s t r u n +++++

UBUTRONIC
Audio Faucet & Brainwave Seducer

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/logokon/noise/prenoiseframe.html

-hypertext song
-requires netscape 3
-frames
-interactive 4 channel sound
-fat samples

↑ Index

420. David Zauhar
Re: Literacy
Tue 18 Nov 1997

I would recommend Ross Talarico's _Spreading the Word: Poetry and the Survival of Community_ (Duke, 1995). Talarico is a poet who was employed for a decade or so by the city of Rochester (NY) as its artist in residence, and he gave workshops to seniors, disadvantaged kids, etc. One of his interesting points is that one way to bring people to reading (literacy) is through writing, esp poetry.

And there's some pretty impressive poetry by some of the high school kids in there, much better than that by those kids represented by Adrienne Rich in her edition of the Best American poetry 1996. He also advances the notion of "deliteracy" as a way of explaining the state of the word in the contemporary US (pointing out that we live in a culture in which those who use language to deceive can get rich and gain power, whereas those who use it to demystify and enlighten, are marginalized. No news to anybody on this list, but personally, I never get tired of hearing it.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"The oldest of all alleged libraries are the libraries of the gods" --Ernest Cushing Richardson

On Tue, 18 Nov 1997, J. Tate wrote:

> Many books/articles on literacy stress the socio-cultural empowerment literacy brings. But, little I can find addresses these sorts of questions: is aesthetic education useful to literacy? can aesthetic pleasure be a reason to teach someone to read?
>
> Any suggestions on readings that address how aesthetic concerns intersect with literacy issues?
>
> Thanks,
>
> Joseph Tate
> Graduate Student
> Department of English
> U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

421. david bromige
gratitude for the comedies tonight
Tue 18 Nov 1997

Mark, I have only inflicted with my nails the meniscus of your astonished document. Yours, Steven, being more than half as less, I have already ingested though in parts it found me impenetrable to gulp. #19, for typicality, blew me as confected because altogether much less likely to be upcome of genial translatorese. By what examination elect how authenticized each instant? #21 blows me as much increased true mistake. I think #17 clockless wonder of haiku-like beauty, very shifting, almost moanratic. I only lash myself that these were not viable then in 1993 altereity-sage should I have installed them in my slender measure of space _The Harbormaster of Hong Kong_ ! No wax, David

PS

Out of sight, out of mind

_____

Invisible lunatic

↑ Index

422. Maria Damon

Re: to spank your curiosity

Tue 18 Nov 1997

---

thanks all but by far the greater part of the credit goes to miekal; he and i have been writing, but he's the techno-genius who knows how to make it cool on the web, and add all the special visuals. he met w/ my class and showed us how to hypertext and then posted our stuff on da web. thanks again miekal ps if anyone wants to hire him to do workshops for your groups --he's just terrific.--md

At 2:45 PM -0500 11/18/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>Thanks for the nudge, Christopher. I'm finally checking it out and it is >truly a garden of marvels. Great job Miekal & Maria!
>
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------
>From: Christopher Alexander
>To: POETICS
>Subject: Re: to spank your curiosity
>Date: Tuesday, November 18, 1997 2:15PM
>
> Miekal And wrote:
>> You are invited to encounter JOGLARS [...]
>> http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/index.html
>
>I just want to call this again to list attention >("whoso would list"), as some of us have been
>there & many of us seem not to have (or passed >without a trace from off...) been there. & thanks,
>Miekal & Maria (+ participants), for an amazing site!

↑ Index

423. Alan Myouka Sondheim origins of language (fwd)
Wed 19 Nov 1997

-

The Language

Maybe they're walking. Maybe they're in Hakata-Eki. Maybe they're out in the street. Maybe there's no street, no names, just first-last, who got there. Maybe there's the getting.

The language is the same all the way down, Jennifer said. First you notice the signs on the street, then labels on electrical cords, things like that. You expect hiragana or katakana, fixed alphabets, and instead you get infinity. Infinity leaks everywhere; kanji goes on and on, back and back, flooding the world. The world is all that is inscribed, she said.

They wonder how we reproduce. They keep track of us with electronics, sometimes collars. We're nameless; they can't tell us apart. We fade quickly in the sun; sometimes shadows give us away, but not often enough. There's no borders around us. They think we don't reproduce.

Kon said, they don't reproduce; he knew it. They were fixed, like stations. They had answers for everything; questions were a suffix. They're present - they were always present. They'll be there. Europe is a flower.

Somewhere there is a signal, and an eye meets it. What crosses and reverses is chiasmus, thinking organ /\/ organic thought. There are terms beyond alphabets and numbers, pronunciations that do not meet the eye, then are no signals, but instances, instantiations. They cut the paper in two; they made the paper, the edges of it rough, shorn as if torn.

They'd write this in hopes of a better future life. Kon was doomed, Jennifer distraught. Polaroid filtration, transparent apart, blocking light and yama-mountain together. They'd have a better life.

Gaijin distraught. Gaijin at a loss. Gaijin on the run. Gaijin with guns; no one else in the world has guns. They're long and black and metal, flat blue metal and black grips and blue bullets and black chambers. They have fetish-sheen, get high black-market, grey-market prices for them.

Tom looked up; he's got one for sale. The customer: a Korean from Pusan. Ni-man, worth every yen. Eyes the bullets. Calls Tom out to the genkan. Look, man. Guy looks Tom in the eyes. Tom takes two of them, down for the kill.

Koreans are killers. Gaijin make the guns, peace-makers. They fire them in special kilns. Last several months, waterproof, always good in Fukuoka autumn.

Rains destroy wars. Gaijin never get wet; they've got oils in their pale skins. Dollars go a long way translated into any currency.

There's an investigation, Jennifer distraught. She calls on Kon. He sees death for the first time. It's gaijin death; Kon understands. Suddenly: Zen, satori! Knows all. Kon knows.

Jennifer and Kon go out to the Darkroom. It's black, blue, like bul- lets. There's a ledge on one side. They sit. Korean walks into the glare. He's looking, nervous, edgy. Could it be someone else; they know all of them know all of them, Kon says. Jennifer says, Kon, you're prejudiced, ignorant, unknowing-cloud, you haven't got it. Kon says, Jennifer.

The Korean orders saki. Saki-man says none, besides no heat here, just the sound. Hole blares from the speakers, pale-faced Alan requests from the corner. They've got hats. Jennifer knows hatred first-hand, sees it seething. The Korean turns slowly, as if there were something on his mind. Kon says, impossible. Jennifer thinks, impolite.

Soon someone will reach for something and it will all begin. It's a question of time, not Heidegger or Husserl, not being. It's waiting an instant out, a moment. The Korean gets up to leave. Stop, says Jennifer, hold on, just a moment. The sky turns blue-black.

Nani says the Korean. Gaijin bastard. You haven't a mother haven't a father. You came from the clouds. Jennifer whips him across the face; eyes flash out, sliced last-vision Jennifer down on the ground scream- ing; she's scrammed. Kon: Don't do that again. You've screwed the deal.

Tom, Tom, Jennifer says, he's dead. The language is all the way down.

As for Jennifer, her personality is gentle. Jennifer-san rages late- night Darkroom, but never again; Nakasha heats up, Tenjin, all the outlying districts. See gaijin run; Kon gnaws death as for himself.

Kuchi ga gatai, he's closed-mouthed, hard-mouthed; he now watches Kon. Jennifer-san awakens from a dream of killing, slicing; it's all right. What was before is the same; Kon's transitive, she thinks. Kon thinks, she's the one for me. They have tea.

Nothing happened at the Darkroom, Jennifer guesses. She's lost her name, -san has disappeared. She wants Eigo all the way down, the tongue of the native, transparent comfort pretending understanding. All language is viral, poison (she read); it seeps in, obscures, makes pretty-poison blue-black writing. This _is the case_ she decides, here! now! She wants to have the description of the world delivered daily to her front door, no genkan in the way, socks and boots already facing inside-outside and everywhere.

She doesn't understand, Kon decries, decides. They have tea, toast, what remains of yesterday's bento. They move on and early-morning out, already rage against the city. What happened to Tom? What did he speak with gun-barrel diplomacy, or rather kanji could he read just about anywhere?

Kuchi ga karui, she'd have a light mouth, ask everyone, spread rumors, listen everywhere, blabber on, prattle to friends and strangers, talk and talk until _it_ returned with news, something in a pocket, a trail leading backwards and forwards, shuttling through snack-bar town. She'd open herself wide, ready for the fall. She thought Kon: I like you. Deeper, I love you. Maybe deeper yet, I'm in love with you, or maybe I'm crazy in love with you, madly in love. She thought Eigo Eng- lish talk, Jennifer-san, may I speak to you after class? An English is my owning language. Kon read his name on the bullet.

She read, in blue and black, "The evolution of machines is at first evident by the fact that they arise in "generations." One after anoth- er, newer models supersede the older, which often are embedded - let's call this the distortions of history, somewhat backwards-compatible. But sooner or later, there's a big leap to a new paradigm, and every- one is left behind. Capital picks up the pieces: Buy New! And trans- late the best you can; otherwise, there's nothing to do but start over."

This Korean who killed Tom for the guns is a machine, she decided, there's a new game in town. But it's only human species, said Kon, well, by definition, not so much new under the sun. Certainly not in the centuries of Fukuoka, everyone business as usual. The guns were laid out in parallel rows, glittering, glint-glint! as jagged patterns flashed before Jennifer's eyes, a migraine coming on.

She was gaijin, up to gai-jinx. She lived in a world of pure incompre- hension, the lessons of school-children, difficult periods, medication and saki-solace. Japanese would have been another language of smooth vocalizations, repetitions. Syllabic-hangul Koreans closed in, taking over yakuza-gaijin connects. Kon thought it was a matter of alphabets, lean syllables, phonemics, running slipshod across low-bandwidth com- puters, everything running high-speed forever, wires singing. In cyberspace, everyone knew their place, a matter of romaji, latin let- ters. In the future, Kon thought in black and blue, wars will be a matter of position, citation degree-zero. But not now as pachinko lights cast spells upon the population, gaijin and native alike. Not to mention the schoolgirls sliding like eels into the depths of child- hood, everyone wanting a piece.

Into the maelstrom of the Darkroom, Rumours, Snack-Bar Delight, Kon and Jennifer plunge; naked beneath their shirts and pants, they clutch each other, mouths open as if about to speak, recite alphabets and guns. All the colors in the world, are all the colors in the world. Now, she takes his gun in, Tom forgotten. Now, every-word-perfection comes to bare on flesh, a new position for the body as concepts mount one another, photograph the moment of arousal.

Begin language. Gesture.. Some chemical makes response to rhythm; ano- ther makes visions. Flexible arms and legs. Skin-book, the first book is the body. Jennifer's nipple pierced by Kon's ring of silver; Jen- nifer-hiragana across Jon's breast. Numbered into one another. The dog-eating Korean has the guns. Rumors: look for them, they're looking for you. Machinic dispositions of reciprocity and exchange. Gears coagulate out of the beginnings of material culture: Jennifer owns her ring, Kon, his skin-marks.

Savage names lacerate mobile sites right from the beginning. _No one understands the name,_ it's the hinge or vortex of incomprehension. It's too close to the real. The Korean is "the Korean." Tom-dead is clearly generic; Kon knew he reproduced like water, no-fuck flows and empty-rhythm culture.

There's no name to truth as bodies wed to earth: "Kon and Jennifer are marrying." "Kon and Jennifer are getting married," Jennifer teaches. "But Jennifer is wedded to the earth." Kon, Khan, conquistador and the dirt of central Asia. He should know. He should know her.

The language is the same all the way across. Across the strait, Pusan beckons. Kon and Jennifer for the holiday, for the hell of it. They knew: no truth here. Suddenly: blaze-guns in the streets. They go down: something's coming!

It's the dog-eating Korean, following them, how? On the ferry, foot, bicycle. With the new guns, he fires away. Perfect trajectories are catenaries slightly out of shape, given the earth's tired sphere. A star-pattern across Pusan's streets, they're running now. Jennifer thinks Jennifer's fault, she's spread talk everywhere, loose lips, kuchi ga karui, can't keep her mouth shut, can't keep a secret, asked too many questions, talked everywhere and everywhere. Her words flooded the streets of Fukuoka from Chiyo south to Okinawa. Everyone knew, crazy gaijin with her signs of Eigo, placards of romaji, kanji boards held taut with gaijin-Tom's improper name.

In Pusan, dust. Policeman Dick is riding by, beauty-bicycle, black and blue. Policeman Dick's gun puffs, dog-eating Korean is blown away. Now Kon and Jennifer quietly leave the park for the ferry; they've had enough! Now they'll wed the water, work through all four elements. Kon thinks, there's a time for everything; Jennifer knows better. Jennifer knows she owns time, owns Kon's time, owns all the time in the world. Jennifer-gaijin is always perfect Jennifer.

Kon and Jennifer reproduce together, and Kon learns the useless value of collars, electronics, monitoring devices. He takes her silver ring between his teeth, distends her breast slightly. She can read the hiragana, Jennifer's true love.

↑ Index

424. Michael Magee
Re: democracy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

Just wanted to quickly jump in and propose, I guess in Henry's defense, that "rose-tinted glasses" can, when used as part of a web of self-conscious symbolic action, have social and poltical teeth. I'm thinking particularly of Frederic Jameson's "proposition that the effectively ideological is also, at the same time, necessarily utopian," in The Political Unconscious. Jameson attempts "to project an imperative to thought in which the ideological would be grapsed as somehow at one with the Utopian." The utopian is useful as symbolic action because it awakens both disenchantment and desire, two necessary components of political and social action. Now of course, Jameson's Utopia is a Marxist one. But who's to say we might not hijack the theory to posit "Democracy" as a narrative which is "socially symbolic action," as Jameson insists all narratives are? The cynic says, "democracy's no good b/c it doesn't work." The skeptic says, "the times, the materials are out of synch with democracy. Democracy as symbolic action is what Burke called 'deferred action,'" and maybe this awakens the desire for social change. What good is the writer who merely tells us "things is bad." Hell, we already know that. -m.

According to henry gould:
> > A follow-up to previous thread. Cynicism & realism. With respect to > rose-tinted glasses, please give me some slack: I was born & raised in > Minnesota, after all. & you probably recall that old Rhode Island political > adage: "The road to Hell is paved with Hubert Humphreys, potholed with > Gene McCarthys, and resurfaced with Walter Mondales."
>
> Speaking of Rhode Island, here's a little Roger Williams:
> When a field is to be broken up, they have a very loving sociable speedy way > to dispatch it: All the neighbors Men and Women forty, fifty, a hundred &etc., > joyne, and come in to help freely.
> With friendly joyning they break up their fields, build their Forts, hunt the > Woods, stop and kill fish in the Rivers, it being tru with them as with all the > World in the Affaires of Earth or Heaven: By concord little things grow great, > by discord the greatest come to nothing _Concordia parvae res crescunt, > Discordia magnae dilabunter_. - Roger Williams KEY INTO THE LANGUAGE OF > AMERICA (Rosmarie Waldrop, poeta valora, literally "scratched the surface")

> - Henry Gould
>

↑ Index

425. William Burmeister Prod
(no subject)
Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Nov 18, 4:34pm, mark weiss wrote:
> Subject:
> This came to me over the web, ultimate source unknown. I pass it along as a > possible source of poems for those so inclined.
>
>
>
>
> One of the fringe benefits of being an English or History teacher is > receiving the occasional jewel of a student blooper in an essay. I have > pasted together the following "history" of the world from certifiably > genuine student bloopers collected by teachers throughout the United > States, from eighth grade through college level. Read carefully, and you > will learn alot.
>
> The inhabitants of Egypt were called mummies. They lived in the Sarah > Dessert and traveled by Camelot. The climate of the sarah is such that > the inhabitants have to live elsewhere, so certain areas of the dessert are > cultivated by irritation. The Egyptians built the Pyramids in the shape of > a huge triangular cube. The Pyramids are a range of mountains between > France and Spain. & ...

Oh for happy misunderstandings! Mo funny when heard from the mouths of babes (ie the Little Rascals (Our Gang) which I think is marvelous to watch).

William Burmeister

↑ Index

426. William Burmeister Prod
Re: more comedy tonight
Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Nov 18, 7:52pm, Steven Marks wrote:
> Subject: more comedy tonight
> This came to me in my e-mail today. Thanks, Mark W., for that hilarious > history of the world.

>
> >>> ACTUAL ENGLISH SUBTITLES USED IN FILMS MADE IN HONG KONG.
> >>>
> >>> 1. I am damn unsatisfied to be killed in this way.
> >>> 2. Fatty, you with your thick face have hurt my instep.
> >>> 3. Gun wounds again?
> >>> 4. Same old rules: no eyes, no groin.
> >>> 5. A normal person wouldn't steal pituitaries.
> >>> 6. Damn, I'll burn you into a BBQ chicken!
> >>> 7. Take my advice, or I'll spank you without pants.
> >>> 8. Who gave you the nerve to get killed here?
> >>> 9. Quiet or I'll blow your throat up.
> >>> 10. You always use violence. I should've ordered glutinous rice > >>> chicken.
> >>> 11. I'll fire aimlessly if you don't come out!
> >>> 12. You daring lousy guy.
> >>> 13. Beat him out of recognizable shape!
> >>> 14. I have been scared sh_tless too much lately.
> >>> 15. I got knife scars more than the number of your leg's hair!
> >>> 16. Beware! Your bones are going to be disconnected.
> >>> 17. The bullets inside are very hot. Why do I feel so cold?
> >>> 18. How can you use my intestines as a gift?
> >>> 19. This will be of fine service for you, you bag of the scum. I am > >>> sure you will not mind that I remove your manhoods and leave them out > >>> on the dessert flour for your aunts to eat.
> >>> 20. Yah-hah, evil spider woman! I have captured you by the short > >>> rabbits and can now deliver you violently to your gynecologist for a > >>> thorough extermination.
> >>> 21. Greetings, large black person. Let us not forget to form a team > >>> up together and go into the country to inflict the pain of our karate > >>> feets on some _ss of the giant lizard person.
>

The best of this kind of thing (in film) that I've heard yet! Some of the Italian film subtitles are interesting as well (like In Fellini's _Satyricon_ and elsewhere). There is a dramatic quality about them: along with the humor there is a liveliness or energy in them that is hard to match. The lines are short and impulsive/implosive, the language of farce. In some of these, I hear Charles Boer (one of Olson's students) in his translation of Ovid's Metamorphoses where the economy of language and oftentime absence of the pronoun lend to it absurdly.

beft,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

427. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Literacy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Nov 18, 7:34pm, David Zauhar wrote:
> Subject: Re: Literacy
> I would recommend Ross Talarico's _Spreading the Word: Poetry and the > Survival of Community_ (Duke, 1995). Talarico is a poet who was employed > for a decade or so by the city of Rochester (NY) as its artist in > residence, and he gave workshops to seniors, disadvantaged kids, etc. One > of his interesting points is that one way to bring people to reading > (literacy) is through writing, esp poetry. And there's some pretty > impressive poetry by some of the high school kids in there, much better > than that by those kids represented by Adrienne Rich in her edition > of the Best American poetry 1996.
>

And through readings. I just finished this morning reading poetry to a group of elementary school children (K through 5). Read to them from Roethke's _Praise to the End!_, _Words to the wind_, and _I am! Says the Lamb_. It was exciting to see how much poetry appeared to still have a place in their lives, and how their teachers gave poetry writing assignments.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

428. David Benedetti
Re: Literacy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Tue, 18 Nov 1997, J. Tate wrote:

> Many books/articles on literacy stress the socio-cultural empowerment literacy brings. But, little I can find addresses these sorts of questions: is aesthetic education useful to literacy? can aesthetic pleasure be a reason to teach someone to read?
>
> Any suggestions on readings that address how aesthetic concerns intersect with literacy issues?
>
> Thanks,
>
> Joseph Tate

> Graduate Student
> Department of English
> U. of Washington, Seattle

Readings that address how aesthetic concerns intersect with literacy issues? Did I hear that as it was intended? Intersect? Interpenetrate?

I'm tempted to suggest that one look at "literature" to see aesthetic concerns intersecting with literacy.....

↑ Index

429. William Marsh
bloopers
Wed 19 Nov 1997

---

mark and others interested:

i don't know if this is the only paper source, but you'll find this and other "bloopers" in Anguished English: An Anthology of Accidential Assaults Upon Our Language (interesting title in its own right) by Richard Lederer some others gems:

"A virgin forest is a place where the hand of man has never set foot."
"Arabs wear turbines on their heads."
"A virtuoso is a musician with real high morals."
"A passive verb is when the subject is the sufferer, as in "I am loved."

bmarsh

At 04:34 PM 11/18/97 -0800, you wrote:
>This came to me over the web, ultimate source unknown. I pass it along as a >possible source of poems for those so inclined.
>
>
>
>
>One of the fringe benefits of being an English or History teacher is >receiving the occasional jewel of a student blooper in an essay. I have >pasted together the following "history" of the world from certifiably
>genuine student bloopers collected by teachers throughout the United >States, from eighth grade through college level. Read carefully, and you >will learn alot.
>
>The inhabitants of Egypt were called mummies. They lived in the Sarah >Dessert and traveled by Camelot. The climate of the sarah is such that >the inhabitants have to live elsewhere, so certain areas of the dessert are >cultivated by irritation. The Egyptians built the Pyramids in the shape of >a huge triangular cube. The Pyramids are a range of mountains between >France and Spain.

>
>The Bible is full of interesting caricatures. In the first book of the >Bible, Guinesses, Adam and Eve were created from an apple tree. One of >their children, Cain, asked "Am I my brother's son?" God asked Abraham to >sacrifice Issac on Mount Montezuma. Jacob, son of Issac, stole his >brother's birthmark. Jacob was a patriarch who brought up his twelve sons >to be patriarchs, but they did not take to it. One of Jacob's sons, Joseph, >gave refuse to the Israelites.
>
>Pharaoh forced the Hebrew slaves to make bread without straw. Moses led >them to the Red Sea, where they made unleavened bread, which is bread >made without any ingredients. Afterwards, Moses went up on Mount Cyanide
to >get the ten commandments. David was a Hebrew king skilled at playing the >liar. He >faught with the Philatelists, a race of people who lived in Biblical times.
>Solomon, one of David's sons, had 500 wives and 500 porcupines.
>
>Without the Greeks, we wouldn't have history. The greeks invented 3 >kinds of columns---corinthian, Doric and ironic. They also had myths. A >myth is a female moth.
>One myth says that the mother of Achilles dipped him in the River Stynx >until he became intolerable. Achilles appears in "The Illiad", by Homer.
>Hoomer also wrote the "Oddity", in which Penelope was the last hardship >that Ulysses endured on his journey. Actually, Homer was not written by >Homer but by another man of that name.
>Socrates was a famous Greek teacher who went around giving people >advice. They killed him. Socrates died from an overdose of wedlock.
>
>In the Olympic Games, Greeks ran races, jumped, hurled the biscuits, and >threw the java. The reward to the victor was a coral wreath. The >government of Athen was democratic because the people took the law into >their own hands. There were no wars in Greece, as the mountains were so >high that they couldn't climb over to see what their neighbours were doing.
>When they faught the Parisians, the greeks were outnumbered because the >Parisians had more men.
>
>Eventually the Ramons conquered the Greeks. History called people Romans >because they never stayed in one place very long. At Roman banquets, the >guests wore garlic in their hair. Julius Caesar extinguished himself on the >battlefields of Gaul. The Ides of March killed him because they thought >he was going to be made king. Nero was a cruel tyrany who would torture his >poor subjects by playing the fiddle to them.

>
>Then came the Middle Ages. King Alfred conquered the Dames, King Arthur >lived in the Age of Shivery, King Harlod mustarded his troops before the >battle of hastings, Joan of Arc was cannonized by George Bernard Shaw, and >the victims of the Black Death grew boobs on their necks. Finally the Magna >Carta
>provided that no free man should be hanged twice for the same offense.
>
>In Midevil times most of the people wee alliterate. The greatest writer >of the time was Chaucer, who wrote many poems and verse and also wrote >literature. Another tale tells of William Tell, who shot an arrow through >an apple while standing on his son's head.
>
>The Renaissance was an age in which more individuals felt the value of >their human being. Martin Luther was nailed to the church door at >Wittenberg for selling papal indulgences. He died a horrible death, being >excommunicated by a bull.
>It was the painter Donatello's interest in the female nude that made him >the father of the Renaissance. It was an age of great inventions and >discoveries. Gutenberg invented the Bible. Sir Walter Raleigh is a >historical figure because he invented cigarettes.
>Another important invention was the circulation of blood. Sir Francis >circumcised the world with a 100 foot clipper.
>
>The government of England was a limited mockery. Henry VIII found >walking difficult because he had an abbess on his knee. Queen Elizabeth >was the "Virgin Queen." As a queen she was a success. When Elizabeth >exposed herself before her troops, they all shouted "hurrah." Then her navy >went out and defeated the Spanish Armadillo.
>
>The greatest writer of the Renaissance was William Shakespear. Shakespear >never made much money and is famous only because of his plays. he lived in >Windsor with his merry wives, writing tragedies, comedies and errors. In >one of >Shakespear's famous plays, Hamlet rations out his situation by relieving >himself in a long soliloquy. In another, lady Macbeth tries to convince >Macbeth to kill the king by attacking his manhood. Romeo and Juliet are an >example of a heroic couplet. Writing at the same time as Shakespear was >Miquel Cervantes. He wrote "Donkey hote." The next great author was John >Milton. Milton wrote "Paradise Lost." Then his wife dies and he wrote >"Paradise regained."

>
>During the Renaissance America began. Christopher Columbus was a great >navigator who discovered America while cursing about the Atlantic. His >ships were called the Nina, the Pinta and the Santa Fe. Later the pilgrims >crossed the ocean, and that was called the Pilgrim's Progress. When they >landed at Plymouth Rock, they were greeted by indians, who came down the >hill rolling their was hoops before them. The indian squabs carried >porposies on their back. Many of the indian heroes were killed, along with >their cabooses, which proved very fatal for them. The winter of 1620 was a >hard one for the settlers. Many people died and many babies were born.
>Captain John Smith was responsible for all this.
>
>One of the causes of the revolutionary Wars was the English put tacks in >their tea. Also, the colonists would send their parcels through the post >without stamps. During the war, Red Coates and Paul Revere was throwing >balls over stone walls. The dogs were barking and the peacocks crowing.
>Finally, the colonists won the War and no longer had to pay for taxis.
>
>Delegates from the original thirteen states formed the Contented Congress.
>Thomas Jefferson, a virgin, and Benjamin Franklin were two singers of the >Declaration Of Independence. Franklin had gone to Bostin carrying all his >clothes in his pocket and a loaf of bread under each arm. He invented >electricity by rubbing cats backwards and declared "a horse divided against >itself cannot stand." Franklin died in 1790 and is still dead.
>
>George Washington married Matha Curtis and in due time became the Father >of our country. Then the Constitution of the United States was adopted >to secure domestic hostility. Under the Constitution the people enjoyed the >right to keep bare arms.
>
>Abraham Lincoln became America's greatest Precedent. Lincoln's mother >died in infancy, and he was born in a log cabin which he built with his >own hands. When Lincoln was president, he wore only a tall silk hat. he >said "In onion there is strength." Abraham Lincoln wrote the Gettysberg >Address while traveling from Washington to Gettysberg on the back of an >envelope. He also signed the Emasculation Proclamation, and the Fourteenth >Amendment gave the ex-Negroes citizenship. But the clue clux clan would >torcher and lynch the ex-Negroes and other innocent victims. On the night >of April 14, 1865, Lincoln went to the theater and got shot in his seat by >one of the actors in a moving picture show. The believed assinator was John >Wilkes Booth, a sopposedly insane actor. This ruined Booth's career.

>
>Meanwhile in Europe, the enlightenment was a reasonable time. Voltare >invented electricity and also wrote a book called "Candy." Gravity was >invented by Issac Walton. It is chiefly noticeable in the Autumn, when the >apples are falling off the trees.
>
>Bach was the most famous composer in the world, and so was Handel. Handel >was half German, half Italian, and half English. He was very large. Bach >died from 1750 to the present. Beethoven wrote music even though he was >deaf. He was so >deaf he wrote loud music. He took long walks in the forest even when >everyone was calling for him. Beethoven expired in 1827 and later died for >this.
>
>France was in a very serious state. The French Revolution was accomplished >before it happened. The Marseillaise was the theme song of the French >Revolution, and it catapulted into Napoleon. During the Napoleonic Wars, >the crowned heads of Europe were trembling in their shoes. Then the Spanish >gorrilas came down from the hills and nipped at Napoleon's flanks. Napoleon >became ill with bladder problems and was very tense and unrestrained. he >wanted an heir to inherit his power, but since Josephine was a baroness, >she couldn't bear him any children.
>
>The sun never set on the British Empire because the british Empire is in >the east and the sun sets in the West. Queen Victoria was the longest >queen. She sat on a thorn for 63 years. Her reclining years and finally the >end of her life were exemplatory of a great personality. Her death was the >final event which ended her reign.
>
>The ninteenth century was a time of many great inventions and thoughts.
>The invention of the steam boat caused a network of rivers to spring up.
>Cyrus McCormick invented the McCormic raper, which did the work of 100 men.
>Samuel Morse invented a code for telepathy. Louis Pastuer discovered a cure >for >rabbis. Charles Darwin was a naturailist who wrote the "Organ of the >Species." Madman Curie discovered radium. And Karl Marx became one of the >Marx Brothers.
>

>The First World war, caused by the assignation of Arch-Duck by a surf, >ushered in a new error in the anals of human history.
>
>

↑ Index

430. p. durgin
Re: democracy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

"defferred action" sounds like a what-good-is-a-writer telling us that "things is not perfect" as I imagine they could be.

|||[redacted]|||
_____

↑ Index

431. Michael Magee
Re: democracy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

Far from it. I am a writer so I could harly be a what-good-is-a-writer. In Burke's sense, "deferred action" is the dialectical counterpart to "things is not perfect," hence its utopian character - it shows symbolically what could be and sets itself in dialogue with what is (or isn't). Though, do you really think things could be perfect? I think we'd all have to be dead for that. -m.

According to p. durgin: >
> "defferred action" sounds like a what-good-is-a-writer telling us > that "things is not perfect" as I imagine they could be.
>
>
> |||[redacted]|||
> _____
>

↑ Index

432. Steve Evans
Jarnot & Moxley at MIT
Wed 19 Nov 1997

Lisa Jarnot and Jennifer Moxley are reading tomorrow night in the [redacted] series curated by Bill Corbett. Event kicks off at 7:30pm in Bartos Theatre, 20 Ames Street in Cambridge, Massachussetts. Profiles of the poets and more information about the series can be seen at http://web.mit.edu/humanistic/www/poetseri.htm, or call [redacted] or [redacted]

↑ Index

433. James Finnegan
Re: Dugan/out of print books
Wed 19 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-14 20:51:24 EST, you write:

> After a varied string of posts on another list, I heard that Alan Dugan's poems are now all completely out of print. I assume this is true since a friend of mine who knows him told me so, but I am wondering where I might get copies of Poems 1, 2, and 4. Any help would be greatly appreciated.

Two places I know of that deal in OP poetry books:

VERSEtility Books, Bob Jacobs,
Box 1366 Burlington CT 06013
[redacted]

Whitehead Rare Books, Jett Whitehead,
1412 Center Ave. Bay City MI 48708
[redacted]

They both catalog mostly first edition, & often signed, copies. so the books, if they've got em, will come at a dear price.

Finnegan

↑ Index

434. p. durgin
Re: democracy
Wed 19 Nov 1997

No No No -- Not what I was saying at all. I'm just skeptical of a dialectical process whose extremes are absolutes, ie. "perfect" -- Although I'm not as familiar with Burke's system as perhaps I should be, the dynamic vaguely resembles typical, western, macho blunders through the ages.

|||[redacted]|||

On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Michael Magee wrote:

> *Far from it. I am a writer so I could harly be a what-good-is-a-writer. In Burke's sense, "deferred action" is the dialectical counterpart to "things is not perfect," hence its utopian character - it shows symbolically what could be and sets itself in dialogue with what is (or isn't). Though, do you really think things could be perfect? I think we'd all have to be dead for that. -m.*
>
> According to p. durgin: >
> "defferred action" sounds like a what-good-is-a-writer telling us that "things is not perfect" as I imagine they could be.
>
> |||[redacted]|||
>
> _____

↑ Index

435. UB Poetics Program

Job Listing for SUNY-Buffalo

Wed 19 Nov 1997

The English Department of SUNY-Buffalo asked that we post this job announcement. Please pass on to anyone you think might be interested.

Specialist in African-American literature, rank open, pending final budgetary approval.

Professor, Associate Professor, or Assistant Professor

We are looking for a candidate with strong theoretical interests to work in the graduate and undergraduate programs. Our poetics program, our diverse studies in American literature, our close relation to other centers at the university doing cultural studies, offer several locations where one could situate his/her work. Novelists- and poet-critics are encouraged to apply. Critical work is as significant as poetry/fiction. Please apply to Chair, African-Americanist Search Committee, Department of English, 306 Clemens Hall, SUNY-Buffalo, Buffalo, NY 14260. Applicants for a junior position should include a 30 or so page writing sample along with a letter, CV, and recommendations. SUNY Buffalo is an AA/EO employer.

↑ Index

436. Laura Moriarty
Grim, Harrison and Lookingbill
Wed 19 Nov 1997

New non!

Jessica Grim, Bob Harrison and Colleen Lookingbill -

Soon bio and links page -

Attention all non contributors!!!

If you have not sent a short bio for non, please send one. Include also links with which you would like to be associated -

Laura Moriarty

↑ Index

437. KENT JOHNSON
Yasusada in Texas
Wed 19 Nov 1997

I've been lurking every so often in the archives this semester and lurked yesterday to find Jordan Davis's post, "Yasusada, Watten, social texas." In it, he says that "Kent Johnson seems to have taken a vacation from the Yasusada updates."

Well, you can hardly expect me to not respond to that! Hi Jordan. And by the way, you still owe me $20 from last summer.

But anyway, I'd like to second Jordan's remarks about the Financial Times article ("Mind Food: On the Art of Writing Wrongs"--on the FT web site) because it's pretty interesting, but to say also that its views about heteronymous authorship are pretty restricted. Check out, for example, the views of the Granta editor, or the concluding analogy, if that's the word, of the article's writer, Christian Tyler: that literature should always carry a "warning" or "origin of production" label (however small, he qualifies), like the food you buy in a supermarket! (And I don't think he's being tongue in cheek.) Also of related interest just out in UK is a section devoted to Yasusada discussion in the new issue of Poetry Review, including letters from Stand editor Jon Silkin, an inteview with me by Peter Forbes (PR editor) and an exchange of letters between myself and Akitoshi Nagahata (part of a by now larger correspondence about issues relating to Yasusada that we intend to publish somewhere--Mikhail Epstein and Eliot Weinberger also enter this debate). Akitoshi Nagahata is on this list, and his criticisms of Yasusada are far and away the most thoughtful and thought-provoking I have encountered so far.

But the main update I'm back from vacation to post is that _Doubled Flowering: From the Notebooks of Araki Yasusada_, is just out from Roof Books, quite beautiful in production and available for $14.95. I believe James Sherry will be putting a more complete notice on the list shortly. The book is 170 pages, including a 45 page "critical appendix."

I know many of you have been assuming that the book is by me. Well, here it is. "Who it's by," if that's important, is present there. But you can read it, too, without playing detective. Hope you'll give it a look!

Kent

↑ Index

438. David Zauhar

Re: Literacy

Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:
> And through readings. I just finished this morning reading poetry to a group of > elementary school children (K through 5). Read to them from Roethke's _Praise > to the End!_, _Words to the wind_, and _I am! Says the Lamb_. It was exciting > to see how much poetry appeared to still have a place in their lives, and how > their teachers gave poetry writing assignments.
>
> William Burmeister
>
Yes! Along these lines, a lot of those Kenneth Koch and Ron Padgett books from the Teachers and Writers Collaborative (did I get the name right?) might be helpful. They're not theoretical enough to please many graduate school types (of which I'm one), but they do make points about the place of the aesthetic in education.

This summer I taught some 6-8 graders. Their favorite: Wallace Stevens' "13 Ways of Looking at a Blackbird." At least in terms of generating imitations and parodies.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

439. Aldon Nielsen
Los Angeles reading
Wed 19 Nov 1997

Harryette Mullen and giovanni singleton read Monday evening, November 24, at 7:30 PM at Loyola Marymount University. The reading will be in the McIntosh Center of Sullivan Hall.

For those of you flying in for the reading, Loyola Marymount is conveniently located near the Los Angeles airport. For those of you driving to the reading from the local area -- take Manchester towards the ocean. Before driving into the ocean, turn onto Loyola Boulevard. This street will take you directly into the campus. Before turning into the large visitors' parking lot at the entrance, stop and ask the helpful staff in the security booth to show you where Sullivan Hall is located.

If you have any other questions, call me at my office: [redacted]

↑ Index

440. Dean A. Brink
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Wed 19 Nov 1997

Sounds like Kent Johnson would like all of us to read the Yasusada book even if it isn't by Yasusada. Splendid attitude.

Now the question is Why not use your own name?
Again, the specter of Orientalism underlies your self-deploying fanfare.

Your lackadaisical nonchalance regarding the falsification of A-Bomb survivor literature is tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature just to make a buck at Borders (a similar point was made to me by John Treat recently).

dean brink
EALC UChicago
[redacted]
interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

441. David Zauhar
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Wed 19 Nov 1997

On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:

> Sounds like Kent Johnson would like all of us to read the Yasusada book even if it isn't by Yasusada. Splendid attitude.
>
> Now the question is Why not use your own name?
> Again, the specter of Orientalism underlies your self-deploying fanfare.
>
> Your lackadaisical nonchalance regarding the falsification of A-Bomb survivor literature is tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature just to make a buck at Borders (a similar point was made to me by John Treat recently).

Thanks for another self-congratulating condemnation of yet another book you haven't bothered to read.

David Zauhar

↑ Index

442. Dean A. Brink
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Wed 19 Nov 1997

I would like to discuss this issue further, but you must refrain from personal attacks (how am I "self-congratulating"?) and speak to the contents of my insinuations (in this long-established discourse). The issue is the forging of the book not the quality -- which, as has been established from the pieces in print, is less than satisfactory: predictable attempts at entrepreneurial Orientalism, riddled with affective clichés and revealing a shallow understanding of Japanese life (to be expected of an American ignorant of Japan); devaluation of the lives of actual Japanese who experience the effects of the A-bombs still today.

A couple years ago in Japan a major magazine ran an article on the fact that the Jewish Holocaust never happened. Should this be ignored too? (The magazine folded soon after, to take responsibility for the outrage.)

Last week a judicial nominee withdrew his name after admitting to have falsified stories of tragic racial violence against a member of his family in the 1940s or 50s. He took responsibility for using historical tragedy for personal gains.

Similarly I think informed readers should know what they're buying and boycott the Johnson book if they don't want to contribute to the distortion and consecration of historical tragedies (note that racism figures in all these example of the Jewish Holocaust, the decision to drop the A-bomb twice on Japan, and the murder of African Americans in the pre-civil rights US).

I can't imagine anyone seriously reading the Yasusada book except as a case study in an ethics course, or a literary theory class discussing the limits of post-modernism (I hope no one actually does this, wouldn't want to fuel his projects).

db

David Zauhar wrote:

> On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:
>
> Sounds like Kent Johnson would like all of us to read the Yasusada book even if it isn't by Yasusada. Splendid attitude.
>
> Now the question is Why not use your own name?
> Again, the specter of Orientalism underlies your self-deploying fanfare.
>
> Your lackadaisical nonchalance regarding the falsification of A-Bomb survivor literature is tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature just to make a buck at Borders (a similar point was made to me by John Treat recently).
>
> Thanks for another self-congratulating condemnation of yet another book you haven't bothered to read.
>
> David Zauhar

↑ Index

443. George Bowering
(no subject)
Thu 20 Nov 1997

> One of the fringe benefits of being an English or History teacher is receiving the occasional jewel of a student blooper in an essay. I have pasted together the following "history" of the world from certifiably genuine student bloopers collected by teachers throughout the United States, from eighth grade through college level. Read carefully, and you will learn alot.

That "alot" was on purpose, wasn't it?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

444. david bromige
lingo
Thu 20 Nov 1997

George, alot of people are disinterested in that oldcodgerese you and me were learned to write. I imply alot from yr brief missile, but alot more dubitably dont. Give up your licked. Get those antlers off of yr egghead & get yr ass down here to the poker game, prof! We miss you alot, as I hoped I have supplely inferred . Dave.

↑ Index

445. Jerry E. Fletcher
(no subject)
Thu 20 Nov 1997

George Bowering wrote:
>
> >
>
> >States, from eighth grade through college level. Read carefully, and you > >will learn alot.
>
> That "alot" was on purpose, wasn't it?
>
> George Bowering.
> ,I really think what was meant is that one will lean a lot...have to in order to hold oneself to keep from going into hysterics...either because its so damn funny or depressing.

On the other hand, my 11 year old won 2nd place in his school for his two page essay on What is a Hero...surprisingly well written, correct grammer, great content, complete sentences...a beginning, middle, and end. The litt bugger knew to say real heroes are the ordinary folk that make this life go, and contribute...not the Jordans, et.al in sports.

Makes this dad proud...especially after seeing the language art papers my wife grades when she suffers through teaching one of those classes...her first field is art, but is a damn good English teacher.

Jerry Fletcher.

↑ Index

446. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: lingo
Thu 20 Nov 1997

david bromige wrote:
>
> George, alot of people are disinterested in that oldcodgerese you and me > were learned to write. I imply alot from yr brief missile, but alot more > dubitably dont. Give up your licked. Get those antlers off of yr egghead & > get yr ass down here to the poker game, prof! We miss you alot, as I hoped
> I have supplely inferred . Dave.

Hmmm,

I lik it..bck ta reel anglish, fore the damn Normies, damn f------ frency frogs, scrwd wid da langige.

Jerry.

↑ Index

447. henry gould
Re: democracy
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Perfection, utopia. Responding to M. Magee's posts, Herbert Schneidau in SACRED DISCONTENT (often quoting Jameson) talks about the utopian impulse as part of a general ambivalence toward culture per se which has its roots in Hebraic-Biblical nomad tradition, fiercely antithetical to the established Egyptian or Near Eastern empires surrounding it, and eventually turning the criticism (in a truly unprecedented way) on itself. This character of self-alienation can terminate in nihilism, or overthrow for the sake of overthrow, but Schneidau characterizes the western impulse as truly ambivalent - a love-hate relation with culture which is perhaps the key factor in culture's long-term survival.

What if utopia is truly an inward reality, yet based on the character of a person's relations with family, friend, enemy, neighbor? What if "the kingdom of heaven is within you"? Then the demand for an "outer" utopia tends to extremism. Perhaps to be zealous for those siblings, democracy and law, is enough. To struggle for a truly international law based on human equality might be the real flower of an inward utopia - an inward utopia based on the recognition of terrible IMperfection. Not self-righteousness. The hardest law to live up to is to love your neighbor as yourself. & that's the basis of all the rest. This will be judged to be the complacent pablum of a middle-class mid-lifer. Tell a poor person about the inward utopia, they will say. But you'd be surprised what a number of poor persons would say in reply. It's all just talk until it conquers the world. - Oldest Living Minnesotan

↑ Index

448. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Dean:

Strong feelings, to be sure. But just to clarify, in case you weren't aware: the AY work has been known to be a fiction for a year and a half now.

My own strong feeling is that the Yasusada writings spark issues that are a good deal less settled and more ambiguous than your formulations below would allow. There is a long interview in the book, actually, that attempts--if tentatively--to bring some of these difficult questions forward.

I suppose I could only ask you to first read the book. It's at least possible, I think, that you might soften your judgement after considering the whole work.

Would you (or anyone else on list) happen to have John Treat's e-mail? I admire _Writing Ground Zero_ a great deal, and would like to exchange some ideas with him.

Kent

On Nov. 19, Dean Brink wrote:
> Sounds like Kent Johnson would like all of us to read the Yasusada > book even if it isn't by Yasusada. Splendid attitude.
>
> Now the question is Why not use your own name?
> Again, the specter of Orientalism underlies your self-deploying fanfare.
>
> Your lackadaisical nonchalance regarding the falsification of A-Bomb > survivor literature is tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature
> just to make a buck at Borders (a similar point was made to me by John > Treat recently).
>
>
>
>
> dean brink
> EALC UChicago
> [redacted]
> interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim

> www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html
>

↑ Index

449. Maria Damon
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

At 9:18 PM -0600 11/19/97, David Zauhar wrote:
>On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:
>
>> Sounds like Kent Johnson would like all of us to read the Yasusada >> book even if it isn't by Yasusada. Splendid attitude.
>>
>> Now the question is Why not use your own name?
>> Again, the specter of Orientalism underlies your self-deploying fanfare.
>>
>> Your lackadaisical nonchalance regarding the falsification of A-Bomb >> survivor literature is tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature
>> just to make a buck at Borders (a similar point was made to me by John >> Treat recently).
>
>Thanks for another self-congratulating condemnation of yet another book >you haven't bothered to read.
>
>David Zauhar

i don't necessarily think this is the point. "the book itself" --whatever that may be --is not the only thing worth discussing in cases like this.--md

↑ Index

450. Rachel Loden
alot(ta) lingo
Thu 20 Nov 1997

David Bromige wrote:

> George, alot of people are disinterested in that oldcodgerese you and me were learned to write. I imply alot from yr brief missile, but alot more dubitably dont. Give up your licked. Get those antlers off of yr egghead & get yr ass down here to the poker game, prof! . . .

Last night dreamt George Bowering lumbering down from Canada, terrifying apparition with the head and torso of a black bear, hindquarters of an Arctic fox, grey squirrel's tail, giant eagle's wings and a rack of deer antlers on his head. What can it mean?

There were no answers at http://www.anto.com/salzxmas.html

"The Christmas season brings not only St. Nikolaus, the bearer of gifts, but also Krampus, his darker side, who appears to mete out punishments for misdeeds of the past year. Large, foreboding, black-clad and antlers on his head, Krampus roams the streets on an evening around December 8. He thwacks passersby with a switch, which causes recipients of his swats to be grateful that their warm loden coats are a little like protective armor."

Uh oh,

Rachel

↑ Index

451. David Zauhar
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:

> I would like to discuss this issue further, but you must refrain from personal
>
> attacks (how am I "self-congratulating"?) and speak to the contents of my insinuations (in this long-established discourse).
> The issue is the forging of the book not the quality -- which, as has been established from the pieces in print, is less than satisfactory: predictable attempts at entrepreneurial Orientalism, riddled with affective clichés and revealing a shallow understanding of Japanese life (to be expected of an American ignorant of Japan); devaluation of the lives of actual Japanese who experience the effects of the A-bombs still today.

I think that the actual real A-bomb devalued the lives of its victims a hell of a lot more than any poem ever could.

> A couple years ago in Japan a major magazine ran an article on the fact that the Jewish Holocaust never happened. Should this be ignored too? (The magazine folded soon after, to take responsibility for the outrage.)

Does Kent Johnson, or anyone else, deny that A-bombs were dropped on Nagasaki and Hiroshima?

> Last week a judicial nominee withdrew his name after admitting to have falsified stories of tragic racial violence against a member of his family in the 1940s or 50s. He took responsibility for using historical tragedy for personal gains.

Thanks for the update, but I read the papers and listen to NPR, too.

> Similarly I think informed readers should know what they're buying and boycott the Johnson book if they don't want to contribute to the distortion and consecration of historical tragedies (note that racism figures in all these example of the Jewish Holocaust, the decision to drop the A-bomb twice on Japan, and the murder of African Americans in the pre-civil rights US).

You've been living in the world of discourse for too long. No one denies that these events are catastrophic and evil. What I object too, and called "self-congratulatory," was the assumption that you are the lone crusader, on this list, for justice. And I object to criticizing books you haven't read. Even if you know they're evil. Some time back when I worked as a free lance journalist I wrote about the Turner Diaries, assuming before I read it that it would be vile and disgusting based on what I'd heard. But before I wrote about it, for the now defunct Minneapolis _City Pages_, I read the book. Guess what? I read it, wrote more intelligently about it than I would have otherwise, and still to this day have not lynched a single person of color or feminist. I also object to the assumption that it is impossible for someone to write in a persona, to IMAGINE what it might be like to be a survivor of the Atomic bomb. In the Yasusada poems I've read, it seems like the poet does an adequate job. I could be wrong. You could even demonstrate to me that I've read badly, that I'm wrong, but not if you haven't read the poems yourself.

> I can't imagine anyone seriously reading the Yasusada book except as a case study in an ethics course, or a literary theory class discussing the limits of postmodernism (I hope no one actually does this, wouldn't want to fuel his projects).

Who was your critical mentor, the Ayatollah Khomeini? For he too knew all about certain books without having to read them. The discourse of Orientalism is problem, and when it distorts the lives and experiences of other people, it should be criticized.If the Johnson book actually does that, go after it. But you don't really know if it does or not. Is this what you are learning in graduate school, how to make authorative pronouncements about books you haven't read? I don't think that's what your teachers really want.

David Zauhar

↑ Index

452. KENT JOHNSON

Re: discontented graduate students send for catalogues

Thu 20 Nov 1997

A spur of the moment and awkward attempt at light-heartedness on my part, and I apologize to Jordan. I guess I was assuming everyone would know that Jordan and I didn't know each other!

As far as the mention of American poetry in major newspapers, the Asahi Shimbun, Japan's major newspaper, carried a front page story about the Yasusada discussion in August (this was reprinted in a number of newspapers in Japan, including in Hiroshima), and this was followed up by an article by Akitoshi Nagahata a couple weeks later in the Asahi. I mention this not because I think publicity is "good for its own sake" (for what it's worth, I don't), but because I think it is significant that a serious consideration of Yasusada's aesthetic and ethical implications is emerging in Japan, and it will be very interesting to see the positions taken and how they compare to the strong and very different evaluations here.

Kent

On Nov. 20, Jordan Davis wrote:
> Let the record show I have not met "Kent Johnson" and have no debt to him.
> I mentioned the article simply because it was as close to a mention in a > major newspaper as recent American poetry has gotten in a good while > (forgive me, Bob Holman). If Andy Warhol was right and publicity is a good > in itself, then good for "Kent".
>
> While I can't offer the intense discounts Yasusada-publisher James Sherry > used to dangle before this list, I can send Teachers & Writers' fall > catalogue out to anyone here who e-mails their mailing address to me. We > have several non-theoretical graduate-student-irritating titles by Kenneth > Koch, and a few point-making books edited by Ron Padgett (including > _Handbook of Poetic Forms_ -- ask Mark Baker! -- and _T&W Guide to Walt > Whitman_). Oh all right, here's a discount -- e-mail me today and I'll > send you Ron Padgett's _Creative Reading_ for $20 ppd, a 20% savings off > the usual deal (US & Canada US$20, elsewhere US$25).
>
> Signed,
> "Jordan"
>
> On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, David Zauhar wrote:
>
> > On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:

> > > And through readings. I just finished this morning reading poetry to a group of > > > elementary school children (K through 5). Read to them from Roethke's _Praise > > > to the End!_, _Words to the wind_, and _I am! Says the Lamb_. It was exciting > > > to see how much poetry appeared to still have a place in their lives, and how > > > their teachers gave poetry writing assignments.
> > >
> > > William Burmeister
> > >
> > Yes! Along these lines, a lot of those Kenneth Koch and Ron Padgett books > > from the Teachers and Writers Collaborative (did I get the name right?) > > might be helpful. They're not theoretical enough to please many graduate > > school types (of which I'm one), but they do make points about the place > > of the aesthetic in education.
> >
> > This summer I taught some 6-8 graders. Their favorite: Wallace Stevens'
> > "13 Ways of Looking at a Blackbird." At least in terms of generating > > imitations and parodies.
> >
> > Dave Zauhar
> >
>

↑ Index

453. Eric Blarnes religion
Thu 20 Nov 1997

On 11.29.97, Jack Spandrift said:
>well, respondin to Rev. Gould's latest bromides, I'd like to paraphrase >that famous RUSSKIE poet, Marina Tsvetaeva: "In this most Milquetoast >$$CHRISTIAN$$ empire of ours, the poet is a blue-nosed coyote."

Now Jack, don't go spoiling Henry's sermons. You know he means well, and - > yeah, yeah, yeah...he's from MINNESOTA!!!! AAAAARRRRGGHGGHGHHH!!!!!

> If I ever get ahold of him, I'll wrap his email around what's left > of it & tie him to a steak & let the vultures at him and....

↑ Index

454. Jordan Davis
discontented graduate students send for catalogues
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Let the record show I have not met "Kent Johnson" and have no debt to him. I mentioned the article simply because it was as close to a mention in a major newspaper as recent American poetry has gotten in a good while (forgive me, Bob Holman). If Andy Warhol was right and publicity is a good in itself, then good for "Kent".

While I can't offer the intense discounts Yasusada-publisher James Sherry used to dangle before this list, I can send Teachers & Writers' fall catalogue out to anyone here who e-mails their mailing address to me. We have several non-theoretical graduate-student-irritating titles by Kenneth Koch, and a few point-making books edited by Ron Padgett (including _Handbook of Poetic Forms_ -- ask Mark Baker! -- and _T&W Guide to Walt Whitman_). Oh all right, here's a discount -- e-mail me today and I'll send you Ron Padgett's _Creative Reading_ for $20 ppd, a 20% savings off the usual deal (US & Canada US$20, elsewhere US$25).

Signed,
"Jordan"

On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, David Zauhar wrote:

> On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, William Burmeister Prod wrote:
> And through readings. I just finished this morning reading poetry to a group of elementary school children (K through 5). Read to them from Roethke's _Praise to the End!_, _Words to the wind_, and _I am! Says the Lamb_. It was exciting to see how much poetry appeared to still have a place in their lives, and how their teachers gave poetry writing assignments.
>
> William Burmeister
>
> Yes! Along these lines, a lot of those Kenneth Koch and Ron Padgett books from the Teachers and Writers Collaborative (did I get the name right?) might be helpful. They're not theoretical enough to please many graduate school types (of which I'm one), but they do make points about the place of the aesthetic in education.
>
> This summer I taught some 6-8 graders. Their favorite: Wallace Stevens' "13 Ways of Looking at a Blackbird." At least in terms of generating imitations and parodies.
>
> Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

455. David Kellogg
Fw: Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

-----Original Message-----
From: Dean A. Brink <[redacted]>

>I can't imagine anyone seriously reading the Yasusada book except as a case >study in an ethics course, or a literary theory class discussing the limits
of >postmodernism (I hope no one actually does this, wouldn't want to fuel his >projects).

So, Dean Brink can't imagine why I might want to read the book? Wow, I guess I won't read it then. . .

Perhaps you shouldn't give your imagination so much credit. Just because you can't imagine why somebody would read (or do) something doesn't mean they don't have legitimate reasons for doing exactly that. That aporia is precisely enough to further my interest.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

From: "Franklin D. Lewis" <[redacted]>
Subject: Literary Modalities of Praise: Conference (fwd)
To: [redacted]

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 19 Nov 1997 14:40:49 -0500
From: Joan Dolphin <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: CFP: Literary Modalities of Praise (4/15; 10/2-10/4)

Call for Papers

Lakehead University English Department invites paper proposals for our

1998 Conference: "Literary Modalities of Praise"
October 2-4, 1998

What is praise?
What linguistic modalities make it known?
How do past or present authors effectively praise nature, the supernatural, people, or language itself?
How is contemporary literary theory skeptical of praise?
Is there a place for praise in literary studies that is not hagiographic, sentimental, or commercial?
What is the role of epideictic rhetoric in the construction of literary or artistic discourse communities?
How are praise and dialogical play interrelated?
What might "constructive" praise look like in composition and pedagogy?
If we deconstruct ideology far enough, will the absence at the center be affirming in any way?
Why praise?

"Ever newly begin the praise you cannot accomplish."
--Rainer
Maria Rilke

Please send abstracts (or papers) for 20 minute presentations before April 15, 1998 to:

A.G. den Otter, English,
Lakehead University,
955 Oliver Road,
Thunder Bay, Ontario
P7B 5E1
[redacted]

↑ Index

457. Michael Magee

Re: democracy

Thu 20 Nov 1997

It seems we've started an interesting chian of misreadings, fruitful I hope. In any event, Burke's own dialectical process is anything but absolutist. And he's saved from extremes by his insistence that philosophy, like poetry, is rhetorical - about strategies rather than truths. Essentially he's a pragmatist not unlike Wm James or Dewey, in the sense that he believes that, as Dewey says, "Philosophy is not a form of knowledge. Philosophy is a form of desire, of effort at action." Any utopia which a writer posits then (and I'm thinking particularly of utopias posited at the level of syntax in a Jackson MacLow and others, not a story about "why can't we all get along") is good for what it does not for what it is. In regards to poetry, Burke describes it this way:

"The general approach to the poem might be called 'pragmatic' in this sense: It assumes that a poems structure is to be described most accurately by thinking always of the poems function. It assumes that the poem is designed to 'do something' for the poet and his readers, and that we can make the most relevant observations about its design by considering the poem as the embodiment of this act."

So, looked at in this light - utopia as a rhetorical strategy, as socially symbolic act and not absolute at all - that's what I'm getting at I guess.

-m.

According to p. durgin: >
> No No No -- Not what I was saying at all. I'm just skeptical of > a dialectical process whose extremes are absolutes, ie. "perfect" -- > Although I'm not as familiar with Burke's system as perhaps I should be, > the dynamic vaguely resembles typical, western, macho blunders through the > ages.
>
>
> |||[redacted]|||
> _____
>
> On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Michael Magee wrote:
>
> > Far from it. I am a writer so I could harly be a what-good-is-a-writer.
> > In Burke's sense, "deferred action" is the dialectical counterpart to > > "things is not perfect," hence its utopian character - it shows > > symbolically what could be and sets itself in dialogue with what is (or > > isn't). Though, do you really think things could be perfect? I think > > we'd all have to be dead for that. -m.

> >
> > According to p. durgin: >
> > > "defferred action" sounds like a what-good-is-a-writer telling us > > > that "things is not perfect" as I imagine they could be.
> > >
> > >
> > > |||[redacted]|||
> > > _____
> > >
> >
>

↑ Index

458. Maria Damon
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

At 9:03 AM -0600 11/20/97, David Zauhar wrote:
>On Wed, 19 Nov 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:
>
>> I would like to discuss this issue further, but you must refrain from >>personal
>>
>> attacks (how am I "self-congratulating"?) and speak to the contents of my >> insinuations (in this long-established discourse).
>> The issue is the forging of the book not the quality -- which, as has been >> established from the pieces in print, is less than satisfactory: predictable >> attempts at entrepreneurial Orientalism, riddled with affective clichÈs and >> revealing a shallow understanding of Japanese life (to be expected of an >> American ignorant of Japan); devaluation of the lives of actual Japanese who >> experience the effects of the A-bombs still today.
>
>I think that the actual real A-bomb devalued the lives of its victims a >hell of a lot more than any poem ever could.
>
>> A couple years ago in Japan a major magazine ran an article on the fact that >> the Jewish Holocaust never happened. Should this be ignored too? (The >>magazine >> folded soon after, to take responsibility for the outrage.)

>
>Does Kent Johnson, or anyone else, deny that A-bombs were dropped on >Nagasaki and Hiroshima?
>
>
>> Last week a judicial nominee withdrew his name after admitting to have >> falsified stories of tragic racial violence against a member of his >>family in >> the 1940s or 50s. He took responsibility for using historical tragedy for >> personal gains.
>
>Thanks for the update, but I read the papers and listen to NPR, too.
>
>> Similarly I think informed readers should know what they're buying and >>boycott
>> the Johnson book if they don't want to contribute to the distortion and >> consecration of historical tragedies (note that racism figures in all these >> example of the Jewish Holocaust, the decision to drop the A-bomb twice on >> Japan, and the murder of African Americans in the pre-civil rights US).
>
>You've been living in the world of discourse for too long. No one denies >that these events are catastrophic and evil. What I object too, and called >"self-congratulatory," was the assumption that you are the lone crusader, >on this list, for justice.
> And I object to criticizing books you haven't read. Even if you >know they're evil. Some time back when I worked as a free lance >journalist I wrote about the Turner Diaries, assuming before I read it >that it would be vile and disgusting based on what I'd heard. But before I >wrote about it, for the now defunct Minneapolis _City Pages_, I read the >book. Guess what? I read it, wrote more intelligently about it than I >would have otherwise, and still to this day have not lynched a single >person of color or feminist.
> I also object to the assumption that it is impossible for someone >to write in a persona, to IMAGINE what it might be like to be a survivor >of the Atomic bomb. In the Yasusada poems I've read, it seems like the >poet does an adequate job. I could be wrong. You could even demonstrate to >me that I've read badly, that I'm wrong, but not if you haven't read the >poems yourself.
>
>
>> I can't imagine anyone seriously reading the Yasusada book except as a case >> study in an ethics course, or a literary theory class discussing the >>limits of >> postmodernism (I hope no one actually does this, wouldn't want to fuel his >> projects).

>
>Who was your critical mentor, the Ayatollah Khomeini? For he too knew all >about certain books without having to read them.
> The discourse of Orientalism is problem, and when it distorts the >lives and experiences of other people, it should be criticized.If the >Johnson book actually does that, go after it. But you don't really know >if it does or not. Is this what you are learning in graduate school, how >to make authorative pronouncements about books you haven't read? I don't >think that's what your teachers really want.
>
>David Zauhar

jeez dave, there are enough ideas at stake here to make personal attack unnecessary. even kent himself in his response was not so virulent. i tend to agree w/ dean, tho i'd probly express myself in milder terms. and why assume that people who raise the issue of social justice and the ethical problems with appropriation are dupes of something you call "discourse?"

↑ Index

459. Christopher Alexander
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Maria writes:
> jeez dave [Zauhar], there are enough ideas at stake here to make personal > attack unnecessary. even kent himself in his response was not so virulent.
> i tend to agree w/ dean, tho i'd probly express myself in milder terms.

discussions about controversial topics are always subject to this pattern of escalation--which is why you can start off arguing about who is to do the dishes, & end up being called or calling someone "asshole" & the like. while I agree with Maria here, that we might be able to have this discussion without that sort of interference, I wld also like to point out that escalation is something like a virus: it comes from somewhere & it goes somewhere. in this case, I think it's a little silly to jump on Dave Zauhar for an inflammatory ad hominem post without acknowledging that Dean's remarks about "self-deploying fanfare" &

"lackadaisical nonchalance" hardly meet the standard of disinterested criticism he's bearing.

incidentally, I wonder if we can look a little more closely at the frequently levelled accusation that (assuming for a second that which is by no means a foregone conclusion) Kent constructed this project to enrich himself either in terms of monetary or cultural capital (I think the statement in this case was "tantamount to forging Jewish Holocaust literature just to make a buck at Borders"--not an outright accusation, but the implication is there). now, before folks start jumping on my head, let me say this isn't quite a defense of the project--which does have very serious ethical implications of which all of us are aware--so much as it is a wish to drop excess baggage. does anyone seriously believe that the AY author is going to make his/her fortune from the sales of this book? that it's going to get him or her a great job somewhere? from what I've seen so far, Kent, as the most prominent figure in the affair, isn't rolling in ill-gotten gains, be they monetary or, again, cultural capital. in fact, except for a few supporters & a few more temperate critics, he's been absolutely reviled at every turn as an unredeemed racist who tells the worst kind of lie--the one we believed.

now, I'd love to have this discussion again, but first can we all go back to our corners & figure out what's really at stake?

best, Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

460. Jordan Davis
rediscovered contentiousness
Thu 20 Nov 1997

"Kent" --

Sorry to have assumed that the Yasusadayada was in fact a publicity scheme! I don't know where I could have gotten this idea! I regret that because I am on a tight budget the Roof Book-to-be-published-next-year I am planning on acquiring is not the Yasusada book but Brian Kim Stefans' _Free Space Comix_! Best of luck!

-- "Jordan"

At 10:10 AM -0500 11/20/97, KENT JOHNSON wrote:
>A spur of the moment and awkward attempt at light-heartedness on my >part, and I apologize to Jordan.

↑ Index

461. George Bowering
Re: lingo
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Damn, every time I try to reply to a Bromige bromide, my damned server freezes. Ouch! Damn, I hate having a frozen server. But I sure like having Bromige on the line. He is a warm person. I melt when I hear his warm English cadence. I have also just read 2 more books by rae Armantrout. Boy, is she good. And I am thankful to Brmige for touting her to me a few years ago.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

462. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Futurists, Formalists, Acmeists
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Having been away from this list for some time due to work in visual poetry, painting, etc.--this note may be somewhat late. In the discussion of the futurists, formalists and acmeists, an important work to consider is The Futurists, the Formalists and the Marxist Critique, edited and introduced by Chritospher Pike with translations by Pike and Joe Andrews as well as prefaces, notes and afterword provided by Gerard Conio and translated from the French by R. Swyer. London: Ink Links, 1979. The influence of the formalists in the last quarter century on many aspects of "language centered writing " is well known, and the influence of the Acmeists, both in Russia and the USA today, is also well known. The work of the Futurists however has been for the most part suppressed or distorted. Indeed, in an essay in the Chuch Welch edited book Eternal Network, the Russian visual poet and mail artist Rea Nikonovna notes that when she and her husband fellow visual poet and mail artist published the Samizdat journal Transpolans in the 1970s, a Neo-Futurist journal, it was widely attacked by both the social realists and the conservatives of the Acmeist schools.Personally and as a writer and visual poet, I find that much more is to be learned from the Russian Futurists, that there is much to consider in their work, their manifestos, their visual poetry and artists books--and perhaps that is why they are still largely ignored, because they offer ways of working and thinking opposed to the more easily acceptable formalists and Acmeists. I would hope that with the slowly growing body of work in English language concerning the Futurists more recognition and thought will be given to them and their work. While attending a Visual Poetry conference last summer in Edmonton, I found that to the poets from Russia and Ukraine, the greatest poets of this century for them are the Futurists Khlebnikov and Kruchonyhk--not the Acmeists or the formalists. There are a number of excellent books now available on Russian Futurism; one that is in part available on the web is Gerald Janecek's Zaum The transrational poetry of Russian Futurism which is mainly concerned with the work of Kruchonyhk. Chapters from the book and some of the work of Kruchonhyk may be found at Light and Dust http://www.thing.net/~grist/homekarl.htm

from Zaumland--

dbchirot

↑ Index

463. Henry G
Re: Futurists, Formalists, Acmeists
Thu 20 Nov 1997

I have heard from others that the work of Kruchonyk, not widely known in the US (to say the least) is very strong. I can't argue with your version of the respective treatment of Acmeists or Futurists in Russia, Dave, but I'm skeptical of a simplified victimology ("futurists were ignored or suppressed"). For one thing, the formalists were critics & literary scholars, not a school of poetry - & they focused on the futurists in their studies as well as on the "acmeist school" (it never was a "school" - unless you're talking about people like A. Kushner, an academic Mandelstam imitator of the present generation). Secondly, as I understand it, the interest of some of the language poets in russian poetry had a LOT to do with the futurists, not just the theories of the formalists. Khlebnikov has had at least as much a vogue on that score as the acmeists.

Mikhail Epstein has an interesting essay comparing end-of-century russian "schools" with the big 3 at the beginning of century (symbolism acmeism, futurism) in the THIRD WAVE anthology. But it's also sort of creatively forced & schematic. Acmeism... it's sort of shorthand for particular poets, like Gumilev, Mandelstam & Akhmatova. But it means what you make of it these days (the way Epstein did). The fact is Mandelstam & Akhmatova left not only a body of poetry but of theoretical writings & essays for scholars to chew over; Khlebnikov did the same, but less traditional & more difficult to analyze. Maybe that's part of the "problem". But is it a problem? They were not airtight schools by any means. Mandelstam held Khlebnikov in high regard & some say elements of his style were drawn from K. during the 20s. Pasternak, closely associated with the futurists, has certainly gotten at least as much attention as the "acmeists". - Henry Gould

↑ Index

464. acgold01
Andrews poem
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Tom (Vogler)--Eyebrow-raisingly enough, Robert Pinsky devotes 2+ pages to "Bananas are an example" in The Situation of Poetry (Princeton, 1976), and discusses it in terms of--guess what?--the logic of exemplification. According to Pinsky's note, the poem was published in The Paris Review 53 (1972), p. 162. Whether it's reprinted in one of Bruce's books I don't know.

Whoda thunk it?

Alan

(Though someone who took a workshop with RP once told me that he discussed Grenier with some modicum of interest.)

↑ Index

465. Timothy Materer
MODERN_POETS-L
Thu 20 Nov 1997

Dear Listmembers: If anyone would like to add to or vary their e-mail by joining a modern poetry discussion group, you would be especially welcome:

MODERN_POETS-L is an electronic discussion list devoted particularly to the generation of poets whose work developed from the 1900s through the 1940s, including Wallace Stevens, Marianne Moore, Hart Crane, Robert Frost, W. H. Auden, Mina Loy, Langston Hughes, and William Carlos Williams. (This listing is not restrictive. Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliot and H.D. are not mentioned because they have active lists of their own.) Poets whose careers were briefer or less influential are welcome in the discussion as well as later ones who have brought modernist poetics into the contemporary scene. The discussion will develop according to the interests of the list members. The list is unmoderated and open to all readers of modern poetry. Questions should be addressed to Timothy Materer at the University of Missouri <[redacted]> leaving the Subject line blank. In the body of the message, enter the single line:

SUBSCRIBE MODERN_POETS-L Yourfirstname Yourlastname

Timothy Materer, 228 Tate, English Department
University of Missouri, Columbia MO 65211
http://www.missouri.edu/~engtim

↑ Index

466. Scott Pound

Mail Strike in Canada

Thu 20 Nov 1997

This is a quick notice to the people who have kindly indicated that they would like to subscribe to ESSEX:

Canada Post is on strike which prevents me, for the time being, from mailing issues to new subscribers. Please hold off on posting payment to the Toronto address for now. There's good indication that the strike may be over in a week.

If the strike drags on I will mail stuff out from Buffalo the next time I'm down, which will be within the next month for sure.

Thanks,

Scott Pound

↑ Index

467. david bromige

latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county

Thu 20 Nov 1997

---

yasu, thats my sada
nosu, dont mean nada
yesu, thats my sada now

and on that day
yes on that day
i'm gonna walk up to that sherry-man & say

roof books, do my sada
yasu, dont mean nada
roof books, do my sada now

it's not a hoax
it is a hoax
the author's dead & here we have the quotes

& if it floats
yes if it floats
or if it sinks or swims kent proudly boasts

yasu thats my saga
now, fans, dont go gaga
get on line buy yasusada no-ow

now here's my point:
creation's joint
the eye of the beholder proves my point:

yasu, thats _your_ sada
nosu, thats _your_ nada
send _your_ dough for yasusada no-ow!

↑ Index

468. Maria Damon
Re: latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county
Thu 20 Nov 1997

---

thanks bromige for the terrific laugh!

At 6:22 PM -0800 11/20/97, david bromige wrote:
>yasu, thats my sada
>nosu, dont mean nada
>yesu, thats my sada now
>
>and on that day
>yes on that day
>i'm gonna walk up to that sherry-man & say
>
>roof books, do my sada
>yasu, dont mean nada
>roof books, do my sada now
>
>it's not a hoax
>it is a hoax

>the author's dead & here we have the quotes
>
>& if it floats
>yes if it floats
>or if it sinks or swims kent proudly boasts
>
>yasu thats my saga
>now, fans, dont go gaga
>get on line buy yasusada no-ow
>
>now here's my point:
>creation's joint
>the eye of the beholder proves my point:
>
>yasu, thats _your_ sada
>nosu, thats _your_ nada
>send _your_ dough for yasusada no-ow!

↑ Index

469. Charles Bernstein
David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Fri 21 Nov 1997

David Ignatow died on Monday, according to an obituary in Wednesay's New York Times.

from "All Else is Prelude" in The One and the Many:

"If language could save me from death, I would already have been declared bodily immortal. I wrote that with thought in mind, thinking writing was an elixir of the secret of living forever, until I began to spy my hair graying. I had to a knowledge that if there is immortality, it is in writing itself as an art, not as an elixir of the body's survival. Now I have to write so that what I write has the very breadth of life itself, such as I can write into it to have it live beyond me, for me, by me, having by then died."

↑ Index

470. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: latest hit theyre hummin in yasonoma county
Fri 21 Nov 1997

Don't know, but it seems most of us aren't really interested and/or are bored with the Yasusada crap, lets move along, get over it, OK.

Jerry.

↑ Index

471. dbkk
Davis and in SF
Fri 21 Nov 1997

Small Press Traffic presents:

Tim Davis
John Tranter

Saturday, November 29, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Tim Davis is the author of two chapbooks, _My Life In Politics--or--A History of N=A=R=R=A=T=I=V=E Film_ (Object Editions/Poetscoop) and _The Analogy Guild_ (Arras Press). He is also a ukeleleist, photographer, assistant editor at New Directions. ³These days,² he writes, he ³seems to feel both shaken and stirred.² Davis is among the new generation of young poets who have once more made New York the poetry capital of America while we look on with remote envy and fascination. His writing combines every mode you can think of with volley upon volley of perception, analysis and a thousand jokes and puns. ³Their masseuses telex like it is/ a peace ribbon/ frayed with lack of rage/ there¹s an Œa so¹ in Mason/ but I don¹t know/ all society is secret our/ crinoline rallying cries claim.²

Born in 1943, John Tranter is the ³leading Australian poet of his generation.² He has published ten volumes of poetry, including a _Selected Poems_ (Hale & Iremonger, Sydney, 1982). His most recent books are _The Floor of Heaven_ (1992), and _At The Florida_ (1993). His work appears in the _Norton Anthology of Modern Poetry_ (New York, second edition, 1988). He compiled and edited (with Philip Mead) the 1992 _Penguin Book of Modern Australian Poetry_. Earlier anthologies include the controversial _The New Australian Poetry_ (1979). Tranter has published widely at home and abroad in the _Paris Review, Kenyon Review, Grand Street, New American Writing, Conjunctions, Boulevard,_ and _Post-Modern Culture_ (on the Internet). He now lives in Sydney.

↑ Index

472. David R. Israel
(Fwd) Cheap Print & Pop Culture (CFP)
Fri 21 Nov 1997

Poetas,

got the appended, and thought it might interest some here. In particular, although evidently the tabloid press (& maybe pulp fiction?) is the probable major focus of the requested essays, seems to me there may well be scope for discussion of that fave topic here in Poetics land --

the Xerox-zine / Mimeo-zine [or other variants of nonofficial publication] -- as note the inviter's remark: << . . . these essays should focus on the way in which cheap print in general, or particular print forms, can not only represent but transform culture. >>

She does also refer to << studying the format of cheap, mass-distributed print>>

so while those myriad of mimeo / xerox poetry magazines all qualify in terms of "cheap", whether they qualify in terms of "mas-distributed" is another kettle of worms / can of fish.

I leave that to work out with your prospective editor . . .

d.i.

btw, I don't subscribe to the "calls for papers" mailing list, but one supposes that some diehard essayists might find it of interest (see end of post for particulars)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 19 Nov 1997 21:56:55 -0500
From: "Deborah Applegate (GD 1996)" <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: CFP: Cheap Print & Pop Culture (1/15; collection)

CALL FOR CONTRIBUTORS:

TABLOID HISTORY: CHEAP PRINT AND POPULAR CULTURE

I would like to invite you, to submit a portion of your work for a volume of collected essays entitled, "Tabloid History: Cheap Print and Popular Culture."

"Tabloid History" is designed as a collection of essays depicting the ways in which studying the format of cheap, mass-distributed print changes our understanding of cultural and literary history. In contrast to recent volumes which present periodicals through more traditional forms of literary/publishing history, these essays should focus on the way in which cheap print in general, or particular print forms, can not only represent but transform culture.

All topics, geographical regions and time periods are welcome. Interdisciplinary work is strongly encouraged. Submissions will be chosen on the basis of their interpretive and methodological contributions.

My idea is that the essays will be as clear and brief as possible. They should be useful both for scholars trying to think in new ways with pthis material and for undergraduate classes looking to combine primary fmaterials with a good secondary essay that will illuminate the toriginal documents. I'm less interested in getting a bunch of brand new pwork, per se, as much as distilling the best lessons from the work that tpeople are already doing.

Because I would like to move along the pace of this project, I'd be grateful if you could contact me immediately if you are at all interested in contributing. The deadline for abstracts is Jan. 15, so I can get preliminary approval from the publisher.

Thank you very much for your time,

Debby Applegate

American Studies Program
Yale University
53 Lawrence St.
New Haven, CT 06511
[redacted]

==========

From the Literary Calls for Papers Mailing List
[redacted]
Full Information at http://www.english.upenn.edu/CFP/or write Jack Lynch: [redacted]

==========

↑ Index

473. William Burmeister Prod
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Fri 21 Nov 1997

On Nov 21, 1:24am, Charles Bernstein wrote:
> Subject: David Ignatow (1914-1997)

> David Ignatow died on Monday, according to an obituary in Wednesay's New > York Times.
>
> from "All Else is Prelude" in The One and the Many:
>
> "If language could save me from death, I would already have been declared > bodily immortal. I wrote that with thought in mind, thinking writing was an > elixir of the secret of living forever, until I began to spy my hair > graying. I had to a knowledge that if there is immortality, it is in > writing itself as an art, not as an elixir of the body's survival.
> Now I have to write so that what I write has the very breadth of life > itself, such as I can write into it to have it live beyond me, for me, by > me, having by then died."
>-- End of excerpt from Charles Bernstein

Thank you Charles for relaying the sad news. I didn't know him personally, but I have been reading him with much interest. David Ignatow was a poet of uncommon, brutal honesty. A poet of the real but also a poet of alternate reality, of very real possibilities (the 'what if,' or 'why not'). I have found in his poetry a tough but hopeful dialogue with self; far from familiar, even his physical self to him could be as other as deathly reflection in a mirror. His journals reveal this lifelong struggle with his own identity and mortality. They also point to him as poet/citizen having a considerable political conscience. He too has been underestimated, always there prolifically writing away in the background, but I don't think this will continue to be the case.

Sadly - William Burmeister

↑ Index

474. Tosh
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Fri 21 Nov 1997

A couple years ago, he gave a lively reading at Beyond Baroque. He was wonderful, and a very pleasant person to boot. Sorry to hear about his passing

---
Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

475. Charles Bernstein
Dia Reading / NYC
Fri 21 Nov 1997

Kathleen Fraser
& CharlesBernstein
reading at DIA Center for the Arts
Friday, December 5, 7pm
548 West 22nd Street
New York, NY

↑ Index

476. Jerry McGuire
special issue
Fri 21 Nov 1997

This issue of _College Literature_, just out, may interest some of you.

Diversity and American Poetries
College Literature 24.3, Oct. 1997
Guest Editor, Jerry McGuire

Contents:

Jerry McGuire.....Introduction: Diversity, Factionalism, and Audience

Richard Masteller.....Between Silence and Banality: The Poetic Search for Community

Janet Zandy.....Fire Poetry on the Triangle Shirtwaist Company Fire of March 25, 1911

Walter Kalaidjian....."Deeds Were Their Last Words": The Return of Edwin Rolfe

Albert Cook.....Metrical Inventions: Zukofsky and Merwin

Karen J. Ford.....These Old Writing Paper Blues: The Blues Stanza and Literary Poetry

Jonathan N. Barron.....At Home in the Margins: The Jewish American Voice Poem in the 1990s

Nicky Marsh....."Out of My Texts I Am Not What I Play": Politics and Self in the Poetry of Susan Howe

Charles Bernstein.....Riding's Reasons: An Introduction to Laura (Riding) Jackson and Schuyler Jackson, _Rational Meaning: Toward a New Foundation of Words_

REVIEW ESSAYS

Timothy Brennan.....Controlling Terms: Originality in African Diasporic Studies [Reviews Tejumola Olaniyan, _Scars of Conquest/ Masks of Resistance_; Farah Jasmine Griffin, _Who Set You Flowin'?: The African-American Migration Narrative_]

Anthony Dawahare.....The Remembering and Remaking of American Working Class Life and Literature [Reviews Constance Coiner, _Better Red: The Writing and Resistance of Tillie Olsen and Meridel LeSueur_; Janet Zandy, ed., _Liberating Memory: Our Work and Our Working-Class Consciousness_]

David Stouck.....Willa Cather and Cultural Studies [Reviews Joseph Urgo, _Willa Cather and the Myth of American Migration_; Walter Benn Michaels, _Our America: Nativism, Modernism, Pluralism_]

Marc Ratner.....A Larger "Slice of Life": Re-Assessing Literary Naturalism [Reviews _Paul Civello, _American Literary Naturalism and Its Twentieth-Century Transformations_; James R. Giles, _The Naturalistic Inner-City Novel in America: Encounters with the Fat Man_]

T. J. Arant.....Trouble with Anthologies [Reviews John Ed Pearce, _Days of Darkness: The Feuds of Eastern Kentucky_; Robert J. Higgs, Ambrose N. Manning, and Jim Wayne Miller, eds., Appalachia Inside Out, Volume 1: Conflict and Change_; and Volume 2: Culture and Custom_]

Feroza Jussawalla.....Children's Literature [Review of Peter Hunt, _An Introduction to Children's Literature_; Gillian Avery, _Behold the Child: American Children and Their Books 1621-1922_]

The special issue is available at $8 per copy. A one year subscription is $24.00. Requests for the issue can be sent, with a check payable to COLLEGE LITERATURE, to:

COLLEGE LITERATURE, SSC II C-474,
West Chester University
West Chester, PA 19383

All best--

Jerry

↑ Index

477. David R. Israel
quadrosyllabics
Fri 21 Nov 1997

Poetas,

hazarding outre tangentiality, here's forwarding a post of mine from the SoAsian Literature listserv -- with my runaway exploration of quadrosyllabics [or is that quatro-?] in English.

cheers,
d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
From: David R. Israel <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: 2nd syllable stress
Date: Fri, 21 Nov 1997 22:22:04 -0400

[was, Re: regarding farsi]

Moazzam,

thanks for the excerpt from Manto's letter to Nehru -- this is the 1st of read of this much-mentioned Manto, and he seems witty & likeable.

/ / / / /

Hope you'll pardon me if I pedantically quibble over one small point of English. Your point was quite good, and yet the illustration was poss. inaccurate in one particular. You wrote --

> . . . When a word travels, it is vulnerable to the new environment. Everyone, or a vast majority at least, in the Subcontinent pronounce 'photo graphy', as with two equal stresses, not realizing that English is a stress language, and a 'native', and I understand I am here as vulnerable as any word, of English will pronounce 'ph[]tography' putting the stress on the first syllable.

Did you really mean the first syllable -- i.e., PHOto-graphy?

There are many differences in stress between British pronunciation and American. Here are a few common examples (using capitalized syllables to denote the syllable wherein occurs the stress):

American	British
garAGE	GARage
LABoratory	laBORatory
WEEKend	weekEND

As a "native American speaker" (not to say an Amerindian), I can tell you (with a sense of conviction) that photography, in the U.s., is properly pronounced with stress on the 2nd (not 1st) syllable -- i.e.,

phoTOGraphy

In this, the word follows the same (2nd-syllable-stress) pattern as is to be seen in similar (4-syllable) words (many of which are, likewise, ideational nouns). There are quite a number of examples. Allow me to present a concatenation of such:

biOGraphy / geOGraphy / porNOGraphy /
ePIphany / anTIthesis / philOLogy /

onTOLogy / onTOGeny / phyLOGeny /
onCOLogy / zoOLogy / asTROLogy /

exOGgenous / homOLogous / hoMOGinized /
biOGraphist / phoTOGraphist / anTHOLogized /

asTRONomy / lobBOTomy / eCONomy /
exCEEDingly / perNICiously / apPALlingly /

enTIrely / reDICulous / psyCHOLogy /
aPOLogy / cosMOLogy / anTHOLogy /

desPARingly / peDANtically / comMODious /
ofFICiously / deLICiously / melLODious /

apPARantly / enVItronment / suPERlative / unCERtainty / enVIDeous / comPARative

sufFICiency / efFICiency / proDIGiously /
prePOSterous / hyPOTHesis / reLIGiously /

liTIGinous / phiLOsophy / reLIGionist /
acQUIsitive / deRIVitive / reVISionist /

acCOUtrement / reQUIRement / aMAZingly / asTONishing / adMONishing / outRAGeously /

acCORDingly / afFORDable / supPOSedly /
adDORingly / aDORable / imPOSingly /

EmPEDocles / PyTHAGoras / HerODdotus /
TheuSIDdites [sp?] / EuRIPpides / phoTOGraphous [a neolgism]

and the like.

[the penultimate 5 words are, of course, Greek names -- but they follow quite the same pattern (prosody), and I suspect that they may well hint at the origin of this stress pattern in English]

/ / / / /

Now, I suppose it's poss. that Britishers may say PHOtography -- they do get a lot of things mixed up like that! ;-) -- but I did think (till seeing your post) that they had this one right -- er, I mean, the same as is heard in the American form, which latter is, as said, -- (at least throughout my short lifespan it has been) --

phoTOGraphy

(believe it or not . .)
'nuff said?

cordially yours,
d.i.

p.s.: to wax aphoristic:

phoTOGraphy is to biOGraphy
as is word to thought . . . .

p.p.s.: I dearly hope this runaway tangent of a post [note stress in tanGENtially] may hap to inspire some resident SAsian writer, & thereby beLATedly justify my reCALcitrant [ditto] . . . [etc.] . . .

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

PHOtograph, phoTOGraphy, and photoGRAPHic. Not a bit tangential to my own sense of each word as at least a ratchet set. [All that so I could read the transliterations in Blythe's four volume _Haiku_ properly!] Gotta dig the beat!

Daniel Zimmerman

David R. Israel wrote:
>
> Poetas,
>
> hazarding outre tangentiality, here's forwarding a post of mine from > the SoAsian Literature listserv -- with my runaway exploration of > quadrosyllabics [or is that quatro-?] in English.
>
> cheers,
> d.i.
>
> ------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
> From: David R. Israel <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: 2nd syllable stress
> Date: Fri, 21 Nov 1997 22:22:04 -0400
>
> [was, Re: regarding farsi]
>
> Moazzam,
>
> thanks for the excerpt from Manto's letter to Nehru -- this is the 1st > of read of this much-mentioned Manto, and he seems witty & likeable.
>
> / / / / /
>
> Hope you'll pardon me if I pedantically quibble over one small point > of English. Your point was quite good, and yet the illustration was > poss. inaccurate in one particular. You wrote --
>
> >. . . When a word travels, it is vulnerable to > > the new environment. Everyone, or a vast majority at least, in the > > Subcontinent pronounce 'photo graphy', as with two equal stresses, > > not realizing that English is a stress language, and a 'native', and > > I understand I am here as vulnerable as any word, of English will > > pronounce 'ph[]tography' putting the stress on the first syllable.
>

> Did you really mean the first syllable -- i.e., PHOto-graphy?
>
> There are many differences in stress between British pronunciation and > American. Here are a few common examples (using capitalized syllables > to denote the syllable wherein occurs the stress):
>

American	British
garAGE	GARage
LABoratory	laBORatory
WEEKend	weekEND

>
> As a "native American speaker" (not to say an Amerindian), I can tell > you (with a sense of conviction) that photography, in the U.s., is > properly pronounced with stress on the 2nd (not 1st) syllable -- i.e.,
>
> phoTOGraphy
>
> In this, the word follows the same (2nd-syllable-stress) pattern as is > to be seen in similar (4-syllable) words (many of which are, likewise, > ideational nouns). There are quite a number of examples. Allow me to > present a concatenation of such:
>
> biOGraphy / geOGraphy / porNOGraphy /
> ePIphany / anTIthesis / philOLogy /
>
> onTOLogy / onTOGeny / phyLOGeny /
> onCOLogy / zoOLogy / asTROLogy /
>
> exOGgenous / homOLogous / hoMOGinized /
> biOGraphist / phoTOGraphist / anTHOLogized /
>
> asTRONomy / lobBOTomy / eCONomy /
> exCEEDingly / perNICiously / apPALlingly /
>
> enTIrely / reDICulous / psyCHOLogy /
> aPOLogy / cosMOLogy / anTHOLogy /
>
> desPARingly / peDANtically / comMODious /
> ofFICiously / deLICiously / melLODious /
>

> apPARantly / enVItronment / suPERlative / > unCERtainty / enVIDeous / comPARative
>
> sufFICiency / efFICiency / proDIGiously /
> prePOSterous / hyPOTHesis / reLIGiously /
>
> liTIGinous / phiLOsophy / reLIGionist /
> acQUIsitive / deRIVitive / reVISionist /
>
> acCOUtrement / reQUIRement / aMAZingly / > asTONishing / adMONishing / outRAGeously /
>
> acCORDingly / afFORDable / supPOSedly / > adDORingly / aDORable / imPOSingly /
>
> EmPEDocles / PyTHAGoras / HerODdotus /
> TheuSIDdites [sp?] / EuRIPpides / phoTOGraphous [a neolgism]
>
> and the like.
>
> [the penultimate 5 words are, of course, Greek names -- but they > follow quite the same pattern (prosody), and I suspect that they may > well hint at the origin of this stress pattern in English]
>
> / / / / /
>
> Now, I suppose it's poss. that Britishers may say PHOtography -- they > do get a lot of things mixed up like that! ;-) -- but I did think > (till seeing your post) that they had this one right -- er, I mean, > the same as is heard in the American form, which latter is, as said,
> -- (at least throughout my short lifespan it has been) --
>
> phoTOGraphy
>
> (believe it or not . .)
> 'nuff said?
>
> cordially yours,
> d.i.
>
> p.s.: to wax aphoristic:
>

> phoTOGraphy is to biOGraphy
> as is word to thought . . . .
>
> p.p.s.: I dearly hope this runaway tangent of a post [note stress in > tanGENtially] may hap to inspire some resident SAsian writer, & > thereby beLATedly justify my reCALcitrant [ditto] . . . [etc.] . . .
> .
> .....
> .....
> \\\\

480. John Cayley
Chinese New Year comes early
Sat 22 Nov 1997

OFFERS FROM WELLSWEEP
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/>, and one from Indra's Net <http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/> (see below).

I'm offering the books (&/disk) listed below. A couple of them are offered at special prices. The deal is also post free (for surface post anywhere & air to Europe; I will add a supplement for airmail outside Europe to the invoice, if you request it) and, so long as you order by email, quoting this message, I will send the books with invoice and trust you to send me a cheque (check) by return post. All cheques (checks) to be made payable to 'Wellsweep'.

I can accept checks in US$ (drawn on US or CDN banks) and US$ prices are shown.

All these books are in stock. (The URLS are links to more information.) Newest books first:

Zhao, Henry Y. H. & John Cayley ed: ABANDONED WINE. Chinese Writing Today 2. London, 1997. 314 pp. Foreword by Gary Snyder. 20x13 cm. Paper. GBP 8.95 (US$ 15.00) Prose, poetry, essays and fiction by contemporary Chinese writers, selected and translated from the Chinese literary magazine, Today (Jintian). Second in a series of such anthologies. Essential.
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsnew.html#CHW02>

Yang Lian: WHERE THE SEA STANDS STILL. A Poetic Sequence. Wellsweep Chinese Poets 6+. London, 1995. 32 pp. 4 b/w illustrations by Gao Xingjian. Parallel text. 21x13 cm. Paper. special price (usually 3.50) GBP 3.00 (US$ 5.00) Yang Lian (1955-) is one of the important Chinese poets to have emerged since the late 1970s. His work has been published widely, and he recently edited a special issue of _Index_ on Hong Kong. An important sequence. A version is on the web at <http://www.illumin.co.uk/ica/wsss/>. For info. on the book see: <http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsnew.html#YANWS>.

Yang Lian: NON-PERSON SINGULAR. Selected Poems. Wellsweep Chinese Poets 6.
London, 1994. 128 pp. Parallel text. 21x13 cm.
Cloth special price (usually 14.95) GBP 10.00 (US$ 16.00)
Paper special price (usually 7.95) GBP 7.00 (US$ 12.00)
A collection of Yang's shorter poems. See previous.
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsnew.html#YANNP>

Zhao, Henry Y. H. & John Cayley ed: UNDER-SKY UNDERGROUND. Chinese Writing Today, 1. London, 1994. 247 pp. Foreword by Jonathan Spence.

Frontispiece. 20x13 cm. Paper. GBP 7.95 (US$ 13.00) Prose, poetry, essays and fiction by contemporary Chinese writers, selected and translated from the Chinese literary magazine, Today (Jintian). First in a series of such anthologies. See _Abandoned Wine_ above.
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsrec.html#ZHAUU>

Hartill, Graham: RUAN JI'S ISLAND & (TU FU) IN THE CITIES. London, 1993. 62 pp. 7 b/w illustrations (and full-colour cover) by Bronwyn Borrow. 20x13 cm. Paper. special price (usually 4.95) GBP 4.00 (US$ 6.50) Two seqences of original (and innovative) poetry in English, by the co-translator of the first Wellsweep book, Ruan Ji's _Songs of my Heart_.
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsrec.html#HARRJ>

Burnett, David & Cayley, John trans: MIRROR AND POOL. Translations From the Chinese. London, 1992. 96 pp. 24 illustrations. 21x13 cm. Paper. special price (usually 6.95) GBP 5.00 (US$ 8.00) 'Mirror' (Cayley) and 'Pool' (Burnett) version of a number of famous Chinese poems, with further cross-art translations for many of them into torn-paper monochrome collages by Bronwyn Borrow. <http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsback.html#BURMP>

Huanzhulouzhu: BLADES FROM THE WILLOWS. A Chinese Novel of Fantasy and Martial Arts Adventure. London, 1991. 256 pp. 8 full-colour illustrations.
20x13 cm. Paper.
special price (usually 7.95) GBP 5.00 (US$ 8.00)
A wild, sword & sorcery literary progenitor of Hong Kong cinema. The first full-length translation from the genre into English! If you don't have it, get it now and subscribe to the sequel!!
<http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/wells/wsback.html#HUABW>

==========

OFFER:

INDRA'S NET BEFORE THE WEB

A special sampler of work from Indra's Net by John Cayley <http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/>

For GBP 7.50 (US$ 12.00) I will send you a single Apple Macintosh-only 1.4Mb disk with the following works from Indra's Net:

- wine flying
- Collocations
- Leaving the City

- An Essay on the Golden Lion
- The Speaking Clock
- Pressing the <REVEAL CODE> Key

more info at: <http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/incat.html>

The offer is post free and, if you order by email, I will send you the disk with and invoice as for the books above. An order of books and disk may be mixed. All cheques (checks) made payable to 'Wellsweep'.

These are all HyperCard Stacks with mesostic and collocationals and hybrid text generators. In order to fit them on the disk, I must supply them as stacks only, so you will need to have your own copy of HyperCard or HyperCard Player to view them.

↑ Index

481. simon
syllabic stress/quadrosyllabics
Sat 22 Nov 1997

From: IPFW::SIMON 22-NOV-1997 10:23:02.12
To: MX%"[redacted]"
CC: SIMON
Subj: Re: quadrosyllabics

Shifts of syntax would be word order, e.g.
Biru ga Michiko ni camera o yatta (Bill Michiko camera gave) vs
Bill gave Michiko a camera.
Japanese syntax is Subject Object Verb
vs
English syntax which is Subject Verb Object

Shifts in syllabic stress are phonological.

best,
beth simon

↑ Index

482. Annie Finch
Re: syllabic stress/quadrosyllabics
Sat 22 Nov 1997

The bulk of the words were indeed Greek in origin -- and if I remember my Greek correctly, it is usual for four-syllable words in Greek to be accented on the antepenult (one of my favorite words)

Annie

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

483. Sylvester Pollet
Post Office Caveat Emptor
Sat 22 Nov 1997

This info might help someone--would have helped me. I've been working on something with a deadline, bought a "Priority Mail" envelope & stamps for it, got to the central P.O. about five minutes after it closed, & so dropped the envelope into a big "Priority Mail" box outside. Fine. Next day I'm away, come back late, get my mail, & there's the "Priority Mail" envelope, address pasted over with a green tag saying that anything over 1 pound MUST be presented to a retail clerk at a post office "because of heightened security measures." Funny nobody mentioned that when I bought the thing. So I had to drive out through a bad snowstorm this morning to re-send it, two days later, and asked for an explanation. Do they have poem-sniffing dogs, or what exactly? And if they thought it was explosive, why did they risk the life of my rural route carrier to give it back to me? I mean, she's a very nice woman! Got a family! Explanation was that after the last TWA exploded the FAA required anything that might go on a plane to be personally received. Anything over one pound. So if you're gonna do it, do it in 15 ounces. Personally, I don't believe it--I think they've got poem-sniffing dogs. Have an iced-tea, Sylvester

↑ Index

484. James Finnegan
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Sat 22 Nov 1997

As a hoax I'm interested in the Yasusada debate.
What does it mean that so many editors rushed to discover/print/promote this work? But I won't be one of the first to actually order the book. Sorry, I'm just not interested in the poems. And I wonder what the next project of our hoaxer might be:

How it would go over publishing the 'lost' poems of a Holocaust victim? Or posing as a black Jazz musician with a herion habit?

Finnegan

↑ Index

485. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Sat 22 Nov 1997

> Or posing as a black Jazz musician with a herion habit?
>
> Finnegan

her ion, hab it?

her/i ...on habit?

habit? on her eye!

↑ Index

486. dbkk
Carole Maso in San Francisco
Sat 22 Nov 1997

Small Press Traffic and Myung Mi Kim present

Carole Maso
an informal reading and conversation

Sunday, November 30, 1:30 p.m.
777 Valencia Street
Room 6
(This is the same building as the NC Theater. Instead of turning right for the theater, turn left towards the restroom, nearby which you will be diverted by the sound of Carole Maso's siren like voice leading you in and making you think all about desire and the inmost secrets of language and syntax . . .)

↑ Index

487. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Sun 23 Nov 1997

I was sure hoping all the Yasusada crap had stopped, to much time on it, tired of hearing, if you want to discuss that crap go back door direct to those interested. No one has to buy the book, you can either do as Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin used to advocate, steal the damn thing, or do what I do when interested, but not enough to buy something...sit in a nice comfy chair at Barnes and Nobles or Borders, read to you hearts delite...satisfy both curiosity and social conscience. Meanwhile, the book and all the talk is just wearing...get a life.

Jerry.

↑ Index

488. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Sun 23 Nov 1997

Jerry E. Fletcher wrote:
>
> I was sure hoping all the Yasusada crap had stopped, to much time on it, > tired of hearing, if you want to discuss that crap go back door direct to > those interested. No one has to buy the book, you can either do as Abbie > Hoffman and Jerry Rubin used to advocate, steal the damn thing, or do > what I do when interested, but not enough to buy something...sit in a > nice comfy chair at Barnes and Nobles or Borders, read to you hearts > delite...satisfy both curiosity and social conscience. Meanwhile, the > book and all the talk is just wearing...get a life.
>
> Jerry.

<<<"And so farewell, dear Reader, from Descartes."

--Dan Zimmerman>>>

↑ Index

489. jarnot
readings at the poetry project
Sun 23 Nov 1997

---

dear list people: here are some upcoming readings at the Poetry Project for those of you who will be in the New York area during December and January. The Poetry Project is located at 10th Street and 2nd Avenue in Manhattan. Readings begin at 8:00 pm.

DECEMBER:

3 Wednesday Some of the Dharma A unique celebration of the first-time publication of Jack Kerouac's remarkable book, Some of the Dharma, featuring performances and readings by actors Willem Dafoe and Karen Allen; Lee Ranaldo from Sonic Youth, Rob Buck from 10,000 Maniacs and Danny Chauvin from Hitchhiker; Ed Sanders of the Fugs, David Amram, Doug Brinkley, Ann Douglas, Maggie Estep, and many more.

5 Friday Gillian McCain & Jeffery Conway Gillian McCain is the author of Tilt, recently published by The Figures/Hard Press, and the co-author (with Legs McNeil) of Please Kill Me: the Uncensored History of Punk (Grove Press). Her work has appeared on the CD Getchertiktz (SOOJ Records), a spoken word album with Ric Ocasek and Alan Vega, as well as in Lingo, Arshile, The World, and B City. She is a former Program Coordinator of the Poetry Project and the former editor of The Poetry Project Newsletter. Jeffery Conway is the author of Blood Poisoning (Cold Calm Press 1995). His work has appeared in Plush, Eros in Boystown, Queer Dog, and the current issue of The World. [10:30 pm]

8 Monday Elliott Sharp & Eddie Bell Composer, multi-instrumentalist, and founder of ZOaR records, Elliott Sharp leads the groups Carbon & Orchestra Carbon, Tectonics, and Terraplane. His most recent CD releases include the Carbon album, Interference, Revenge of the Stuttering Child with Israeli poet Ronny Someck, and the Tectonics CD, Field & Stream. Eddie Bell, an educator and poet, completed his first book-length poetry manuscript, Capt's Dreaming Chair, during two fellowships he was awarded by the Ragdale Foundation, an artists and writers' retreat.

10 Wednesday Thomas Sayers Ellis & Bei Dao Thomas Sayers Ellis is a co-founding member of the Dark Room Collective and the author of The Good Junk which appeared in the AGNI/Graywolf annual Take Three. His poems have appeared most recently in Grand Street, AGNI, Calloloo, Best American Poetry 1997, and The Garden Thieves: Twentieth Century African-American Poetry. He is also the author of View-Master, a forthcoming chapbook from Vimal Press. He currently teaches in the English Department at Case Western Reserve University. Recently elected an honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters, Bei Dao is one of the foremost poets from China. A former Red Guard, he now lives in exile in the United States. Translated into English are four books of poetry (most recently, Landscape Over Zero, New Directions) and a book of short stories, Waves.

12 Friday Janet Hamill & Lo Galluccio Janet Hamill, co-author with Patti Smith of the forthcoming The Eternal Café, will be presenting new work accompanied by bass and rhythm guitar. Hamill is also the author of Nostalgia of the Infinite, The Temple, and Troublante, and has been included in several anthologies, including Living with the Animals, More Reflections on the Meaning of Life, and The Unmade Bed: Sensual Writing on Married Love. Lo Galluccio, a poet and singer, has recently put out her first CD, Being Visited, with musicians Miki Navazio, Brad Jones, and Michael Evans. Galluccio started performing in Fish-Pistol and evolved Being Visited at cbgb's gallery, The Knitting Factory, and the Nuyorican Poet's Café. [10:30 pm]

15 Monday Malika Lee Whitney & Josefina Baez Actress, writer, and storyteller Malika Lee Whitney is the artistic director of Pickney Productions and the Pickney Players. She is also the author of Bob Marley: Reggae King of the World. Josefina Baez is the founder and director of Latinarte, an intercultural art troupe. She is currently working on a children's book, Why Is My Name Marisol?, a book of poetry-prose, In Dominicanish, and poetry-prose in Spanish, Telele, Telele, Telele-Blah, Blah, Blah.

17 Wednesday Tom Carey & Tomas Salamun Tom Carey's most recent book, Desire, was recently published by Painted Leaf Press. He has lived in New York City since 1977. In 1988 he became a Franciscan brother in the Society of St. Francis. He currently lives and works in Brooklyn, New York. Slovenian poet Tomaz Salamun was born on the 4th of July in Zagreb, Croatia. In the 1970s, Salamun was invited to the Iowa International Workshop, where he met Anselm Hollo, Ted Berrigan, Barrett Watten, and others. One of the foremost poets of Slovenia, he has published 27 books of poetry, including The Selected Poems (Ecco, 1988), and most recently, The Four Questions of Melancholy. He is currently the cultural attace at the Slovenian Consulate in New York.

22 Monday Poetica and Bob Quatrone Inspired by the Paul Winter Consort and Coleman Barks reciting the poems of Rumi, Robert Fox and Steven Wright created Poetica, which will perform both known and new poetry in an original blend of words and music. Bob Quatrone is the former chief lecturer and program director of the Walt Whitman Poetry of NYC, and the former editor of Lunch.

JANUARY

1
24th Annual New Year's Day Marathon Reading
Featuring over 120 poets, performers, dancers, musicians, and artists, including Richard Hell, Tuli Kupferberg, Penny Arcade, Homer Erotic, Vole, and many more! [2 pm-1 am, $15, $12 for Poetry Project Members]

5 Monday
Open Reading, sign-up at 7:30 pm.[8 pm]

7 Wednesday Juliana Spahr & Harryette Mullen Juliana Spahr's most recent book, Response, is available from Sun and Moon Press. She co-edits the journal

Chain with Jena Osman and currently teaches at the University of Hawaii, Manoa. Harryette Mullen currently teaches Creative Writing and African-American Literature at UCLA. She is the author of trimmings, Muse & Drudge,and S*PeRMK*T.

12 Monday Elizabeth Alexander & Shirley LeFlore Elizabeth Alexander is the author of 2 books of poetry, The Venus Hottentot, and Body of Life. Her verse-play, Diva Studies, was produced at the Yale School of Drama in 1996. She is currently working on a third book of poetry, and a book of essays, On Black Masculinity. Shirley LeFlore is a poet, professor, and vocalinquist. Her works-in-progress include a CD, The Bet, forthcoming from MapleShade; a book, The Collection Plate; and a collection of autobiographical stories and poems, Threads. Her collaborations with saxophonist J.D. Parran are on the recent CD Spiritstage.

14 Wednesday Ammiel Alcalay & TBA Ammiel Alcalay is a poet, translator, and scholar who teaches classical and Oriental literatures at Queens College and tat the CUNY Graduate Center. He is the author of the cairo notebooks, After Jews and Arabs, and Keys to the Garden. He has translated poetry and articles written in Bosnia, including The Tenth Circle of Hell, an account of a survivor of a Serbian camp.

16 Friday Lauren Spencer & Sharon Mesmer Lauren Spencer is currently working on a series of books profiling bands on the road and in the studio with MTV/Simon and Schuster: the first installment on Bush is due in stores in 1998.She is a regular contributor to Rolling Stone and Jane magazines. Sharon Mesmer's first collection of poems Half Angel, Half Lunch, described by Allen Ginsberg as "beautifully bold and vivaciously modern," will be published by Hard Press in 1998. Formerly of the band Mellow Freakin' Woodies, and fresh from performing her work in Japan, she now teaches at the New School for Social Research. [10:30 pm]

19 Monday Babalorisa John Mason & Raymond Patterson Babalorisa John Mason is a Yoruba priest, African and jazz percussionist, and noted scholar and theologian whose books include Orin Orisa: Songs for Selected Heads and, co-authored with Professor Henry Drew, the forthcoming catalogue for the exhibition, Beads, Body and Soul: Luminous Art in the Yoruba Universe. Raymond Patterson is the author of 26 Ways of Looking at a Black Man and Elemental Blues. He is the writer of opera librettos, former member of the Umbra Poetry Workshop, and has been anthologized in numerous collections, including the seminal New Black Voices, edited by Addison Gayle.

21 Wednesday Nina Zivancevic & Ben Friedlander Nina Zivancevic was born in Belgrade, former Yugoslavia-a literary critic, journalist , translator as well as a poet and a fiction writer-she lived for several decades in New York where she wrote in English, and now resides in Paris where she is currently working on her PhD on Modern literature. Her most recent book Inside and Out of Byzantium was published by SEMIOTEXT(E), and her first novel Living on Air is to come out by Cool Grove Inc. in New York this coming spring. Ben Friedlander's most recent publication, A Knot is Not a Tangle, is available from Meow Press. He is the co-editor, with Don Allen, of Charles Olson's Collected Prose. Friedlander currently lives in Buffalo, New York where he is a graduate student at the State University of New York.

23 Friday Chris Kraus & Ann Rower Chris Kraus's novel I Love Dick has just been published by Semiotext(e) Native Agents. She wrote and directed the feature film, Gravity and Grace (Lonely Girl Films 1995) and produced The Chance Event, a three-day philosophy rave with Jean Baudrillard and Roseanne Stone at Whiskey Pete's Casino in the Nevada Desert. Ann Rower, a former Wooster Group writer, is the author of Armed Response (Serpent's Tail, 1995) and If You're a Girl (Semiotext(e) Native Agents). [10:30 pm]

26 Monday Reading and Book Party for Patricia Landrum Patricia Landrum was an early member of the Stoop Poetry Workshop, formerly on the Board of Directors at the Poetry Project, and part of the Nuyorican Poet's Café. She was also a founding member of the women's poetry theater collaboration, Cayenne. and author of the chapbook, Sweet (New Spirit). In honor of her, and of the publication of the manuscript-Mary and Other Ordinary Women-that she was preparing at the time of her death, Tracie Morris, Sheila Alson, Cheryl Boyce Taylor, and others will read, talk, and perform.

28 Wednesday Miles Champion & Keith Waldrop Miles Champion was born in Nottingham, England, in 1968, and now lives in London. He is the writer of Sore Models and Compositional Bonbons Placate. Recent work has appeared in BOO, The Germ, and in the mini-anthology Sleight of Foot (Reality Street Editions). Keith Waldrop teaches at Brown University and, with Rosmarie Waldrop, is editor of the small press, Burning Deck. Recent books include The Silhouette of the Bridge (Avec) and Light While There Is Light (Sun and Moon). He has translated, among others, Anne-Marie Albiach, Claude Royet-Journoud, Paol Keineg, Dominique Fourcade, and Jean Grosjean.

↑ Index

490. Jordan Davis
Re: quadrosyllabics
Sun 23 Nov 1997

Blyth's Zen in English & world Literature is worth hunting down as well... like Saintsbury maybe more energetically articulate (=enthusiastic?) than sensible, but who said sensibility was all that important anyway.

Jordan

On Fri, 21 Nov 1997, Daniel Zimmerman wrote:

> Thanks, David.
> Eons ago, in graduate school, I took a course in Japanese morphology which explored, in a language I knew [& still know, sadly] little of, the shifts of syntax specifying the differences between [in English, say] PHOtograph, phoTOGraphy, and photoGRAPHic. Not a bit tangential to my own sense of each word as at least a ratchet set. [All that so I could read the transliterations in Blythe's four volume _Haiku_ properly!] Gotta dig the beat!
>
> Daniel Zimmerman
>
> David R. Israel wrote:
>
> Poetas,
>
> hazarding outre tangentiality, here's forwarding a post of mine from the SoAsian Literature listserv -- with my runaway exploration of quadrosyllabics [or is that quatro-?] in English.
>
> cheers,
> d.i.
>
> ------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
> From: David R. Israel <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: 2nd syllable stress
> Date: Fri, 21 Nov 1997 22:22:04 -0400
>
> [was, Re: regarding farsi]
>
> Moazzam,
>
> thanks for the excerpt from Manto's letter to Nehru -- this is the 1st of read of this much-mentioned Manto, and he seems witty & likeable.
>
> / / / / /
>
> Hope you'll pardon me if I pedantically quibble over one small point of English. Your point was quite good, and yet the illustration was poss. inaccurate in one particular. You wrote --
>
> . . . When a word travels, it is vulnerable to the new environment. Everyone, or a vast majority at least, in the Subcontinent pronounce 'photo graphy', as with two equal stresses, not realizing that English is a stress language, and a 'native', and

I understand I am here as vulnerable as any word, of English will pronounce 'ph[]tography' putting the stress on the first syllable.

*Did you really mean the first syllable -- i.e., PHOto-graphy?*

There are many differences in stress between British pronunciation and American. Here are a few common examples (using capitalized syllables to denote the syllable wherein occurs the stress):

American	British
garAGE	GARage
LABoratory	laBORatory
WEEKend	weekEND

As a "native American speaker" (not to say an Amerindian), I can tell you (with a sense of conviction) that photography, in the U.s., is properly pronounced with stress on the 2nd (not 1st) syllable -- i.e.,

phoTOGraphy

In this, the word follows the same (2nd-syllable-stress) pattern as is to be seen in similar (4-syllable) words (many of which are, likewise, ideational nouns). There are quite a number of examples. Allow me to present a concatenation of such:

biOGraphy / geOGraphy / porNOGraphy /
ePIphany / anTIthesis / philOLogy /

onTOLogy / onTOGeny / phyLOGeny /
onCOLogy / zoOLogy / asTROLogy /

exOGgenous / homOLogous / hoMOGinized /
biOGraphist / phoTOGraphist / anTHOLogized /

asTRONomy / lobBOTomy / eCONomy /
exCEEDingly / perNICiously / apPALlingly /

enTIrely / reDICulous / psyCHOLogy /
aPOLogy / cosMOLogy / anTHOLogy /

desPARingly / peDANtically / comMODious /
ofFICiously / deLICiously / melLODious /

apPARantly / enVItronment / suPERlative /
unCERtainty / enVIDeous / comPARative

sufFICiency / efFICiency / proDIGiously /
prePOSterous / hyPOTHesis / reLIGiously /

liTIGinous / phiLOsophy / reLIGionist /
acQUIsitive / deRIVitive / reVISionist /

acCOUtrement / reQUIRement / aMAZingly /
asTONishing / adMONishing / outRAGeously /

acCORDingly / afFORDable / supPOSedly /
adDORingly / aDORable / imPOSingly /

EmPEDocles / PyTHAGoras / HerODdotus /
TheuSIDdites [sp?] / EuRIPpides / phoTOGraphous [a neolgism]

and the like.

[the penultimate 5 words are, of course, Greek names -- but they follow quite the same pattern (prosody), and I suspect that they may well hint at the origin of this stress pattern in English]

/ / / / /

*Now, I suppose it's poss. that Britishers may say PHOtography -- they do get a lot of things mixed up like that! ;-) -- but I did think (till seeing your post) that they had this one right -- er, I mean, the same as is heard in the American form, which latter is, as said, -- (at least throughout my short lifespan it has been) --*

phoTOGraphy

(believe it or not . .)
'nuff said?

cordially yours,
d.i.

p.s.: to wax aphoristic:

phoTOGraphy is to biOGraphy
as is word to thought . . . .

p.p.s.: I dearly hope this runaway tangent of a post [note stress in tanGENtially] may hap to inspire some resident SAsian writer, & thereby beLATedly justify my reCALcitrant [ditto] . . . [etc.] . . .
.
.....
.....

> \\\\

493. William Burmeister Prod
Re: readings at the poetry project
Mon 24 Nov 1997

> DECEMBER:
>
> 3 Wednesday
> Some of the Dharma
> A unique celebration of the first-time publication of Jack Kerouac's remarkable book, Some of the Dharma, featuring performances and readings by actors Willem Dafoe and ...

Should be interesting with Willem Dafoe reading. Remember his cameo appearance in "Basquiat" as the electrician/painter (or sculptor) delivering the line, "I'm glad I haven't received any recognition yet, it's given me more time to develop."

↑ Index

494. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Yasusada in Texas
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Finnegan,

I go to your wake. Brilliant thread? With noise about nothing, a need to listen, and hearing only buzz, my needle cannot sew. I've weft and weave come unraveled. Steal the book, get a life.

Jerry.

↑ Index

495. William Burmeister Prod
FlashPoint URL
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Does anyone out there know the URL for FlashPoint?

Thanks,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

496. Hank Lazer
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Mon 24 Nov 1997

I've been spending some time this past week thinking about my friend David Ignatow. When Charles sent out word about David's death, I began thumbing through David's most recent book of poems, _I Have a Name_, published by when David was 82. A couple of poems:

As If

The prayerful humanity of Bach, the soldier machinegunning-- I don't know how to reconcile one with the other and to the living, where with others I walk, stunned.

In a cafe music is pouring itself in joy for itself for anyone to dream of reconciliation with conflicted life.
Farther down the road an energetic man is beating his wife.

How to live in confusion and as a skeptic, angry to have been born to music and to screams intermingling, as if--not one without the other-- to make a whole of it.

*

For Rose 1913-1995

I have a name a substitute for the word infinity.

When my name is called it is not me
you are calling.

*

David's poetry and friendship meant a great deal to me. He wrote a very generous blurb for my first book, _Doublespace_. He was an energetic correspondent, and he continued to read, think, and argue. Early on in our friendship, he steered me to George Oppen's poetry. I have written about David's poetry, and I remain drawn to its odd syntax, a kind of quirky yiddishness, an odd mixture of modesty and passion.

*

David Ignatow
1914-1997

there would be then this way of erasure as you had studiously entered into that space of your disappearance intimate with its parameters savoring particularities of its persistent integrity there you are in dialog with each imagined shadow and every other poet a kingdom the cir cumference of your many singular friendships

↑ Index

497. maz881
Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Hubble is kind of a figure that stands. Getting mad at him doesn't help. Thru his red shifting, the big bag was able to roll (unlike a man). He also started the idea of measuring how far stuff was away. How fast stuff was moving away. How basically nothing was moving toward (no blues).

a thing i have always found suspect in the red shift theorizing is that you have to postulate a basic uniform thing from here to there. and from here to another there. and from here to another there, etc. and you build up all these theres and say the universe is about this old and this big. so the question i like is what if one particular galaxy (these are typically the things that are being measured) was really nearby, but for reasons of non-uniformity of space (due say to huge gravity fluxors) it appeared massively red shifted, and so the linear thing to say would be to say it was the farthest thing away and was moving away from us x fast and is really really old. (quasars pose problems like this).

below are two entries in a dictionary of physics on the web. they just happened to be back to back. and i haven't fooled with them tony.

uniformity principle (E.P. Hubble):

The principle that the laws of physics here and now are not different, at least qualitatively, from the laws of physics in previous or future epochs of time, or elsewhere in the Universe. This principle was scoffed at by the ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that governed the heavens were completely divorced; now it is used routinely in cosmology to describe the structure and evolution of the Universe.

universal age paradox:

Two of the most straightforward methods of calculating the age of the Universe -- through redshift measurements, and through stellar evolution -- yield incompatible results. Recent (mid 1990s) measurements of the distances of distant galaxies through the use of the Hubble Space Telescope indicate an age much less than the ages of the oldest stars that we calculate through stellar evolution theory. At present there is no conclusion to this paradox; a cosmological constant would rectify the situation, but it's possible that the discrepancy will disappear with more accurate measurements of the age of the Universe using both methods. .....

If you like physics, math, etc dictionaries, there's a good one by a guy named eric (his treasure trove).

http://www.astro.virginia.edu/~eww6n/physics/physics.html

can anyone look up a good definition of quantum mechanical tunnelling and post it? the eric dictionary entry is under construction.

Bill L

↑ Index

498. Jack Foley
FlashPoint URL -Reply
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Yessir! The URL for FlashPoint is http://webdelsol.com/FLASHPOINT/

-- JR Foley,
On-line Editor,
FlashPoint

>>> William Burmeister Prod <[redacted]>
11/24/97 03:41pm >>>
Does anyone out there know the URL for FlashPoint?

Thanks,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

499. Aldon Nielsen
Ann Petry
Mon 24 Nov 1997

I just now learned that novelist Ann Petry died last Spring. The news was on the same page as a piece about Pound that a friend mailed me from the Washington Post. Has anyone spotted any other news coverage of Petry?

↑ Index

500. henry gould
Re: Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

---

yes, interest multiplies - but what if the red shift is actually a blue shift? I mean, if you're not the only purple on the beach (i.e. within a coney island radius). MillenniuM starts with M, ends with M, and has 2 Ns trying to be a 3rd M in the middle. what does this tell you about the donut shape of spacetime? I mean, what if the purple shift is right here, diaphanous, in the bree E ze? & we can't even see it? And the calcified driftwood (or Xxzv...w*klphtok in Assyrian) is a leftover from LAST week's recycling? - Eric Blarnes, somewhere in Madras

p.s. M = 1,000 in Latin. telescoped to the nth. sort of a hubble-dub-dubble.

↑ Index

501. Brent Long
Re: Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Excuse my asking, and it may be in ignorance, but what the hell does this have to do with Poetics???

At 04:27 PM 11/24/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Hubble is kind of a figure that stands. Getting mad at him doesn't help.
> Thru his red shifting, the big bag was able to roll (unlike a man). He also >started the idea of measuring how far stuff was away. How fast stuff was >moving away. How basically nothing was moving toward (no blues).
>
>a thing i have always found suspect in the red shift theorizing is that you >have to postulate a basic uniform thing from here to there. and from here to >another there. and from here to another there, etc. and you build up all >these theres and say the universe is about this old and this big. so the >question i like is what if one particular galaxy (these are typically the >things that are being measured) was really nearby, but for reasons of >non-uniformity of space (due say to huge gravity fluxors) it appeared >massively red shifted, and so the linear thing to say would be to say it was >the farthest thing away and was moving away from us x fast and is really >really old. (quasars pose problems like this).

>
>below are two entries in a dictionary of physics on the web. they just >happened to be back to back. and i haven't fooled with them tony.
>
>
>uniformity principle (E.P. Hubble):
>
>The principle that the laws of physics here and now are not different, at >least qualitatively, from the laws of physics in previous or future epochs of >time, or elsewhere in the Universe. This principle was scoffed at by the >ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that >governed the heavens were completely divorced; now it is used routinely in >cosmology to describe the structure and evolution of the Universe.
>
>universal age paradox:
>
>Two of the most straightforward methods of calculating the age of the >Universe -- through redshift measurements, and through stellar evolution -- >yield incompatible results. Recent (mid 1990s) measurements of the distances >of distant galaxies through the use of the Hubble Space Telescope indicate an >age much less than the ages of the oldest stars that we calculate through >stellar evolution theory. At present there is no conclusion to this paradox;
>a cosmological constant would rectify the situation, but it's possible that >the discrepancy will disappear with more accurate measurements of the age
of >the Universe using both methods.
>.....
>
>If you like physics, math, etc dictionaries, there's a good one by a guy >named eric (his treasure trove).
>
>http://www.astro.virginia.edu/~eww6n/physics/physics.html
>
>can anyone look up a good definition of quantum mechanical tunnelling and >post it? the eric dictionary entry is under construction.

>
>Bill L
>
>

Curious the small and lesser fates which join to lead a man to this.
- Cormac McArthy

↑ Index

502. David Kellogg
Re: Ann Petry
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Aldon, I knew she died but I haven't seen news coverage of it. (I learned because I'm teaching The Street next Spring).
~~~
~~~

(have you seen Bill's poems? I'd send you off to SPD to order _My Trip to New York City_ but I'm pretty sure they're out of it), who has an avid interest in astronomy, has long thought about astrophysics and poetry with the same part of his brain, and is proposing that there is some connection between the difficulty of measuring the size of the universe and the difficulty of understanding whether poetics is the discussion of what happens in poems or is it just where any individual stands (that is, their status) in poetry. Now we know from Mark Wallace that there aren't really any individuals, and I know from talking to Bill that when he's being allegorical he's also really just talking about the things that excite him, it being his (and Ange Mlinko's and practically any other poet worth talking about's) poetics to pay attention to what is exciting. At this point I will direct you back to the Poetics Archives where you may read Bill's translations of Sappho, his notes on power wires, and miscellaneous found poetry regarding the global branding of Tiger Woods, and birds (I think). Getting mad at him doesn't help.

All best,
Jordan

On Mon, 24 Nov 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> Excuse my asking, and it may be in ignorance, but what the hell does this have to do with Poetics???
>
> At 04:27 PM 11/24/97 -0500, Billy Luoma wrote:
> Hubble is kind of a figure that stands. Getting mad at him doesn't help.

↑ Index

504. Dean Taciuch
Re: Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

> Brent,
>
> It appears that one may be able to use the subject matter for a poem.
>
> Jerry.

Subject matter? Anything can be subject matter for a poem. It's what you do with it, as WCW would say. Use the concepts. A garden isn't just dirt and some pretty green stuff. . .a question of the size of one's world isn't just subject matter--it's a formal question in the most basic way.

If it were a question merely of subject matter, we'd be talking about science fiction. We're not. (are we?)

Dean

↑ Index

505. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Well, if you write a haiku, for example, & it takes more than about a heartbeat for it to register, you've got a little too much thought in there, a brow-wrinkle driving the poem apart--a [dead than]redshift. On the other hand, if your haiku stays within the "pulsation of an artery," as Blake puts it, you've got a Rinzai-whack--a [black &]blueshift. Cf. fission vs. fusion, or, chiasmically [& perhaps cosmetically vs. cosmically], fashion vs. frisson. Everything, rightly conceived, has to do with poetics [cf. Bachelard's _The Poetics of Space_, Pound's economics, that (who wrote that?) poem based on the Fibonacci sequence].

Dan Zimmerman

Brent Long wrote:
>
> Excuse my asking, and it may be in ignorance, but what the hell does this > have to do with Poetics???
>
> At 04:27 PM 11/24/97 -0500, you wrote:
> >Hubble is kind of a figure that stands. Getting mad at him doesn't help.
> > Thru his red shifting, the big bag was able to roll (unlike a man). He also > >started the idea of measuring how far stuff was away. How fast stuff was > >moving away. How basically nothing was moving toward (no blues).
> >
> >a thing i have always found suspect in the red shift theorizing is that you > >have to postulate a basic uniform thing from here to there. and from here
to > >another there. and from here to another there, etc. and you build up all > >these theres and say the universe is about this old and this big. so the > >question i like is what if one particular galaxy (these are typically the > >things that are being measured) was really nearby, but for reasons of > >non-uniformity of space (due say to huge gravity fluxors) it appeared > >massively red shifted, and so the linear thing to say would be to say it was > >the farthest thing away and was moving away from us x fast and is really > >really old. (quasars pose problems like this).
> >
> >below are two entries in a dictionary of physics on the web. they just > >happened to be back to back. and i haven't fooled with them tony.

> >
> >
> >uniformity principle (E.P. Hubble):
> >
> >The principle that the laws of physics here and now are not different, at > >least qualitatively, from the laws of physics in previous or future epochs of > >time, or elsewhere in the Universe. This principle was scoffed at by the > >ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that > >governed the heavens were completely divorced; now it is used routinely in > >cosmology to describe the structure and evolution of the Universe.
> >
> >universal age paradox:
> >
> >Two of the most straightforward methods of calculating the age of the > >Universe -- through redshift measurements, and through stellar evolution -- > >yield incompatible results. Recent (mid 1990s) measurements of the distances > >of distant galaxies through the use of the Hubble Space Telescope indicate an > >age much less than the ages of the oldest stars that we calculate through > >stellar evolution theory. At present there is no conclusion to this paradox;
> >a cosmological constant would rectify the situation, but it's possible that > >the discrepancy will disappear with more accurate measurements of the age of > >the Universe using both methods.
> >.....
> >
> >If you like physics, math, etc dictionaries, there's a good one by a guy > >named eric (his treasure trove).
> >
> >http://www.astro.virginia.edu/~eww6n/physics/physics.html
> >
> >can anyone look up a good definition of quantum mechanical tunnelling and > >post it? the eric dictionary entry is under construction.
> >
> >Bill L
> >
> >
>
> Curious the small and lesser fates which join to lead a man to this.
> - Cormac McArthy

↑ Index

506. david bromige
who wrote that Fibonacci poem
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Dan Zimmerman : Ron Silliman

↑ Index

507. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Hubble's influence
Mon 24 Nov 1997

Brent,

It appears that one may be able to use the subject matter for a poem.

Jerry.

↑ Index

508. David R. Israel
Re: readings at the poetry project
Tue 25 Nov 1997

---

from William Burmeister Prod:

> DECEMBER:
>
> 3 Wednesday
> Some of the Dharma
> A unique celebration of the first-time publication of Jack Kerouac's remarkable book, Some of the Dharma, featuring performances and readings by actors Willem Dafoe and ...
>
> Should be interesting with Willem Dafoe reading. Remember his cameo appearance in "Basquiat" . . .

some might also recall his recent appearance in Seven Years in Tibet (where he's -- ultimately -- an acolyte of the Dalai Lama)

d.i.

↑ Index

509. David R. Israel
oops
Tue 25 Nov 1997

[was, Re: readings at the poetry project]

Regarding Willem Defoe, I senselessly wrote --

> *some might also recall his recent appearance in Seven Years in Tibet (where he's -- ultimately -- an acolyte of the Dalai Lama)*

well, I guess I was thinking of Brad Pitt; pardon moi.

Wasn't Defoe a longtime member of that astonishing multimedia troupe that performs at The Garage (or is it The Gas Station)? (^ the name of which theatre group escapes my mind, poss. for similar reasons as my confounding Pitt for Defoe -- or maybe I've just been away from NYC too long . . .)

anway, sounds like a fun reading

↑ Index

510. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Hank,

Many thanks for sharing David Ignatow's work and your comments about how he influenced your work and life. The Ignatow work you shared I am not familiar with and will seek out.

Thanks,

Jerry Fletcher

↑ Index

511. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Hubble's influence
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Dean,

I apologize for upsetting you further...now that you mention it, maybe a science fiction poetics group or as was suggested by another, this is poetry. We may not be advanced enough to see it as such. There IS a lot out there parading around as poetry that is not.

Please take this in stride...we'll wade through the manure soon enough, only to get stuck in another pile.

Jerry.

↑ Index

512. Louis Cabri
borsht of longing
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Joseph Tapp?

I think "aesthetics" and literacy can be thought together, broadly speaking, through the notion of "the difficult," through "difficulty," modernist terms that can be resuscitated without their high-cultural presumptive address, and located, rather, in a reading body scanning social registers, some legible, others not (for differing reasons).

Peanut shells quilted to the imaginary pink shift,
Louis

↑ Index

513. Layne Russell
Re: Hubble's influence
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Daniel Zimmerman wrote:

> Well, if you write a haiku, for example, & it takes more than about a heartbeat for it to register, you've got a little too much thought in there speaking of haiku, here is one for breakfast or coffee/tea break....

little white truck rounds the silver street no mail again

layne

↑ Index

514. maz881
Re: Hubble's influence
Tue 25 Nov 1997

---

jordan is amusing. i probably posted that to make him laugh. but also i wanted a definition of tunnelling (no one has a mcgraw-hill physics dict handy? i'm embarrassed not to have one.) and i'm too chicken to post something on an astrophysics listserve. anyway or furthermore, i just thought creation myths were part of the job description. i mean even one of the definitions i quoted alludes to this (say pre-socratic or substitute any similar tendency): "This principle was scoffed at by the ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that governed the heavens were completely divorced."

↑ Index

515. rsillima
Ignatow & Objectivism
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Hank,

Thanks for your post on Ignatow.

I read him closely throughout the 1960s, far more sporadically after that. I was intrigued to see that he had suggested Oppen to you. I've always read both him and Harvey Shapiro (the former NYTBR editor) as two poets who showed the Williams influence very clearly, but in a way that demonstrated what growing up as a poet during the period when the Objectivists were silent and out of print would lead to -- decidedly on the far side of the New American poetry and generally antithetical to everything that has spun out from that.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

516. Henry Gould
D. Ignatow
Tue 25 Nov 1997

A poem by David Ignatow, from _A Glass of Green Tea - With Honig_:

THE POET
for Edwin

What does he want of himself?
How to write without reservation,
yet without repugnance,
so that to value writing, teeth, tongue and terror - he will accept the terror.

[when you look at the repetitions of sounds around the "t" of "poet" and "write" - w, r, t - this little praise poem takes on something elegant]

↑ Index

517. henry gould
acmeism / futurism
Tue 25 Nov 1997

I thought the following passage from a new study of a forerunner of both the Russian Acmeists and Futurists was quite interesting - linking futurist practice to the decadents of the late 19th century and early 20th in the approach to the word-as-such as self-enclosed or "quaint" object. In the same monograph, the author links the "classicism" of the acmeists not so much to the ancients, but to 19th-cent. french poetry again via Innokentii Annenskii. The book is "At the Crossroads of Russian Modernism: Studies in Innokentij Anneskij's poetics", by Anna Ljunggren; Stockholm Studies in Russian Literature. These issues of influence have some (maybe tangential) reference to contemporary "experimental" approaches.

"Like a trail of fluorescent particles, terms enable us to follow the history of a style in its trajectory from the decadents to the futurists. It is well known that the acmeists considered Annenskij their teacher, and like him they turned to the French poetic tradition of both the Parnassians and "les maudits". Closer examination also reveals the continuity between the decadents and the futurists. Essentially, the French fin-de-siecle legacy is divided between acmeists and futurists, and one can find echoes between their paradigms which derive from their common ancestry. The exoticism discussed above, for example, is also present in futurist works such as Xlebnikov's _Zangesi_ and acmeist poetry such as Gumilev's "Ziraf"(The Giraffe). Mandelstam's recollected "blessed" word was brought to life by French Byzantianism and is no more connected with genuine Greek antiquity than are Xlebnikov's verbal incantations. The recollected "blessed senseless word" has an analogue in the archaisms of futurist _zaum_. Valuable in this respect is R.D. Timencik's analysis of Gumilev's poem "On the Distant Star Venus", which points to the parallels between the language consisting of vowels spoken by the inhabitants of Venus and the transrational vowels in the poetry of Xlebnikov and Kruchenyk. It remains only to add that this analogy can be explained as having evolved from a common root, namely the exotic synaesthesia of French symbolist poetry. At the center of attention in both systems is the relationship of the word to the thing. Both are based on the category of the "object" word and various interpretations of objectness. If the acmeists retain a focus on the linguistic nature of the word and cultivate object meanings, the futurists consistently and radically deny the difference between the word as sign and the word as meaning (cf. the street signs in futuristic work; see also Kruchenyk's manual on how to make futuristic poetry - _Displaceology of Russian Verse_). The identification of word and object gives rise to a manipulation of the word which is related to the decadents' neologizing. In other words, the futurist understanding of the word as artifact derives from the decadents' cult of the artificial and of the quaint object. These analogies reveal the historical paradox of Russian futurism - namely that the movement is a direct continuation - more consistent and radical than acmeism - of the very stratum of culture that the futurists furiously attacked. Because in the French tradition continuity is greater and the transitions smoother, the various forms of symbolism from the decadent Huysmans to the "imagist" Laforgue coexist within a single aesthetic tendency. Hypnotised by the alleged absolute novelty of the avant-garde, researchers have not brought up the question of the systemic links between these two related branches of Russian post- symbolism. In part this is due to the fact that our philological and theoretical notions of futurism have in many respects been shaped by the formalists, in particular Roman Jakobson, who as a friend and co-author of the futurists remained enclosed in the magic circle of the Russian avant-garde."

Word and object. Aesthetic experiment comes into focus via communication theory - language as gesture and/or blocking or eliding of meaning. Sound and noise. Message and code. Both meaning and not-meaning as tools of expression. All this relates to the approach to "artifice" of several branches of the "New American poetry". In fact what Ljunggren identifies as French symbolist-decadent tradition - filtered in 2 directions through the seminal poetry of the Petersburg school principal I. Annenskii - could be seen as fractally exploded-imploded and taken to its "limit" by U.S. post-Olson experimentalism.

- Henry Gould, Founder-Factotum of the Weird-Revisionist School

↑ Index

518. Marcella
Re: Hubble's influence
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Tunnelling: Moving through immense quantities of A. Dirt (i.e. escaping = from jail, or from New York City) B. Space (i.e. flying from New York = City to Hawai'i) or C. Talk (resurfacing again in the strangest places, = i.e. a poetics list). Hey Bill, good to hear from you even if it is = thrice removed!

From: [redacted]
Sent: Tuesday, November 25, 1997 5:56 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Hubble's influence

jordan is amusing. i probably posted that to make him laugh. but also = i wanted a definition of tunnelling (no one has a mcgraw-hill physics dict handy? i'm embarrassed not to have one.) and i'm too chicken to post something on an astrophysics listserve. anyway or furthermore, i just thought creation myths were part of the job description. i mean even = one of the definitions i quoted alludes to this (say pre-socratic or substitute = any similar tendency): "This principle was scoffed at by the ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that governed = the heavens were completely divorced."

↑ Index

519. dbkk
Friends of Kathy Acker
Tue 25 Nov 1997

As some of you may have heard, Kathy Acker is in crisis. She is in a hospital in Tijuana with cancer of the lung, liver and spleen. She is very weak and her only hope is the combined holistic and allopathic treatment she is receiving at American Biologics' clinic. But this help is costly and her financial resources are on the verge of running out. She has no medical insurance. Like many artists and writers, she was never able to secure benefits from any institution.

Kathy Acker was diagnosed with breast cancer in April 1996. Shortly thereafter she had a full mastectomy and there was some involvement in her lymph nodes. After the surgery she underwent extensive alternative therapies in San Francisco, then moved to London to be with friends in August '96. (This period is described in "The Gift of Disease") Over the summer of 1997 she suffered increasingly bad health, ranging from digestive disorders to pneumonia. Once back in San Francisco in the fall, her condition worsened and she finally was taken to the emergency room by Sharon Grace and Matias Viegener. At Davies Medical Center, she was told she had advanced cancer of the liver, pancreas, spleen, and lungs.

In the hospital, she was given few options but morphine and hospice care; Kathy chose to persue alternative treatment. On November 1, she was taken to American Biologics, a holistic integrated health clinic in Tijuana, Mexico. Thanks to treatment she is getting there, and her strong will, her condition is stable. However, she is running out of money. $28,000 of her savings of approximately $40,000 have already been spent in hospitalization in Mexico, and the bills from 8 days in Davies Medical Center in SF are already past $30,000 (these we hope to defer indefinitely; Medicare is still pending for at least part of them). The financial crisis is looming.

We have made arrangements with the John Giorno Fund for Artists with AIDS to be the receiver of any contributions (which would make them tax-deductible, and 100% of the donations will go to Kathy's bills). The address is Giorno Poetry Systems, 222 Bowery NY NY 10012; the check itself may be made out to JOHN GIORNO and on the memo line write "Kathy Acker Fund."

Kathy has a solid core of people caring for her and is happy with American Biologics' hospital, where Matias Viegener, Amy Scholder, Sylvere Lotringer, Ira Silverberg, and David Antin among others have been with her. As phone calls tend to exhaust her now, she asks that people who are concerned write her c/o

American Biologics, Chula Vista, CA 91911 (this is the American office of the clinic).

Anything you can do would be appreciated. Please forward this email to anyone you believe can help.

Thank you,

Matias Viegener, Los Angeles ([redacted]) [redacted]
with David Antin, San Diego ([redacted]) [redacted]
Sharon Grace, San Francisco ([redacted]) [redacted]
Sylvere Lotringer, New York ([redacted]) [redacted]
Amy Scholder, New York ([redacted]) [redacted]
Ira Silverberg, New York ([redacted]) [redacted]

ps: http://www.abmex.com/ is the website for American Biologics. http://acker.thehub.com.au/gift.html has KA's article of last winter about her cancer.

↑ Index

520. Douglas Barbour
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Thanks to Hank Lazar for that small but so complete eulogy. Heart/felt.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

521. Aviva Vogel
Re: David Ignatow (1914-1997)
Tue 25 Nov 1997

In a message dated 97-11-24 22:08:03 EST, you write:

<<
Many thanks for sharing David Ignatow's work and your comments about how he influenced your work and life. >>

Yes, thank you. I have been "on-and-off" attracted to his work; at the very least, I find it kind of "uplifting"! He's got a good soul.

↑ Index

522. Safdie Joseph
Re: Ignatow & Objectivism
Tue 25 Nov 1997

I, too, was thinking of thanking Hank for his moving and thoughtful post on Ignatow when Ron's post below came over the wires.

> Hank,
>
> Thanks for your post on Ignatow.
>
> I read him closely throughout the 1960s, far more sporadically after > that. I > was intrigued to see that he had suggested Oppen to you. I've always > read both > him and Harvey Shapiro (the former NYTBR editor) as two poets who > showed the > Williams influence very clearly, but in a way that demonstrated what > growing > up as a poet during the period when the Objectivists were silent and > out of > print would lead to -- decidedly on the far side of the New American > poetry
> and generally antithetical to everything that has spun out from that.
>

I was looking at some Ignatow poems this morning from an old anthology, _The Voice That Is Great Within Us_ (discussed previously on the list). He was one of those figures that I devoured while in graduate school (this would have been in the 70s) -- a voice that I trusted implicitly, in the wake of so much that was false, pretentious, merely aesthetic. The simplicity and tough-mindedness appealed to me, yet a sure concern for craft (as Henry notes in another post this AM) was also apparent; his journals were a great read as well. But the connection to Oppen (surprising to me as well) gets to what I was thinking: here's a writer who could conceivably bridge the gap between competing "schools" -- someone whose work can be respected by people working all sides of the street -- so immediately to label him as "antithetical" to the New American Poetry (and we all know how problematic THAT appellation is to Ron, and others) seems to me unseemly. Enough with the opposing camps for a while -- let's appreciate the man and what he wrote, and did.

↑ Index

523. Harold Rhenisch
Re: literacy
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Literacy has a price, too.

It is a trade off: you trade off the benefits and detriments of oral culture for the benefits and detriments of a written one.

Values can be assigned to this transaction. It is, however, still a transformation.

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]
108 Mile Ranch, B.C. Canada

↑ Index

524. Harold Rhenisch
Used Dog Urine
Tue 25 Nov 1997

In Toronto a few years back I saw a man walking the street in front of City Hall, with a baseball game hot dog vendor style tray strapped on to his slight frame and full of chapbooks, and a cardboard sign hung around his neck with butcher cord, reading, in bright neon: USED DOG URINE: THE SECOND GREAT ANTHOLOGY OF BAD CANADIAN POETRY. What I found intriguing was that this grandstanding was most successful: he was continually approached by people and was actually selling the stuff.

Is there a Used Dog Urine URL? Shouldn't there be?

Hmmm?

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]
108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

↑ Index

525. trace s. ruggles
Re: oops
Tue 25 Nov 1997

> From: "David R. Israel" <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: oops
> Date: Tue, 25 Nov 1997 01:20:07 -0400
>
> [was, Re: readings at the poetry project]
>
> Regarding Willem Defoe, I senselessly wrote --
>
> *some might also recall his recent appearance in Seven Years in Tibet (where he's -- ultimately -- an acolyte of the Dalai Lama)*
>
> well, I guess I was thinking of Brad Pitt; pardon moi.

Defoe does have the same boyish good looks...

> Wasn't Defoe a longtime member of that astonishing multimedia troupe that performs at The Garage (or is it The Gas Station)? (^ the name of which theatre group escapes my mind, poss. for similar reasons as my confounding Pitt for Defoe -- or maybe I've just been away from NYC too long . . .)

it was called "The Wooster Group", and if I'm not mistaken, I think they still do performances occasionally. It's also where Spalding Gray did a lot of work on evolving his monologue writing/performances...

> anway, sounds like a fun reading

↑ Index

526. Herb Levy
forthcoming Subtext readings
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Third Thursdays at 7:30 pm in the back room of Seattle's Speakeasy Cafe, in picturesque Belltown.

December 18th - Joe Safdie & Dorothy Trujillo Lusk

January 15th - Reuben Radding & Steven Forth

Check it out. (& don't forget the usual post-function function at the Belltown Tavern).

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

527. Herb Levy
Eustache's The Mother & the Whore
Tue 25 Nov 1997

Since there was a lot of discussion about a year ago or so about whether this film was available on video (it doesn't seem to be), I imagine that some folks will be interested to know that it's scheduled to be screened in a new 35mm print 20-26 February at the Grand Illusion here in Seattle.

While this run starts the day after that month's Subtext reading, so you out of towners COULD make a weekend trip of it (& we'd all love to see you here), it's probably more to the point that it'll be showing up at obscure rep houses & series this winter.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

528. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Hubble's influence
Tue 25 Nov 1997

> "This principle was scoffed at by the ancients who believed that the laws that governed the Earth and those that governed the heavens were completely divorced."

Sigh. As always, they didn't think of the consequences for the kids.

;-)

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]
108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

↑ Index

529. Miekal And bad poetics
Tue 25 Nov 1997

to follow up on david's chiming in where how so many times Ive heard languaged poetries refered to as just plain BAD POETRY

where the baddest keeps getting badder is there no saving the word?

miekal

↑ Index

530. Miekal And zaum + Re: acmeism / futurism = explodity
Tue 25 Nov 1997

---

just wanted to tag onto Henry's fine account of the beginning of the 20th century by mentioning that the 1913 Zaum Manifesto, "The Letter as Such" by by Velimir Khlebnikov & Alexei Kruchonykh is up at my page ZAUM IN THE AGE OF ELECTRONIC HUTS

http://www.net22.com/qazingulaza/zaum.html

Im also interested in posting any other zaum esoterica & pertinent links anyone cares to submit to me backchannel....

say Za' oom!

Miekal And
The Driftless Academy of Botanical Apparitions

↑ Index

531. Carolyn Guertin
Re: Used Dog Urine
Tue 25 Nov 1997

That was Krad Kolodny (spelling?). Some of his books are available through more usual channels. He is a self-proclaimed bad poet who made his living for many years selling 'bad' poetry on Yonge Street for a buck a pop. Interesting sort. Don't know of an URL though...

Cheers,
Carolyn

> In Toronto a few years back I saw a man walking the street in front of City Hall, with a baseball game hot dog vendor style tray strapped on to his slight frame and full of chapbooks, and a cardboard sign hung around his neck with butcher cord, reading, in bright neon: USED DOG URINE: THE SECOND GREAT ANTHOLOGY OF BAD CANADIAN POETRY. What I found intriguing was that > this grandstanding was most successful: he was continually approached by > people and was actually selling the stuff.

>
> Is there a Used Dog Urine URL? Shouldn't there be?
>
> Hmmm?
>
> Harold Rhenisch
> [redacted]
> 108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm

"Aldus [Manutius] is creating a library which has no boundaries other than the world itself." -- Erasmus

↑ Index

532. Steven Marks
Re: oops
Tue 25 Nov 1997

let's not forget that Willem played the Old Possum in "Tom and Viv"

_____

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

_____

↑ Index

533. david bromige
krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
Tue 25 Nov 1997

You can see right away that he is a bad poet--needless ambiguity. All for want of one hyphen. Natch, one wants to know whether he considers his poetry the outpourings of an as-it-were used dog, or the used outpourings of a so-to-speak dog. My thanks to Harold Rhenisch for drawing our attention to this matter of "bad poetry", and to Carolyn Guertin for identifying this particular perpetrator. George Bowering and Doug Barbour have fresh support in keeping Canadian culture alive on the Internet. I welcome Rhenisch's pithy comments.(Thought I'd say that before Henry did). But that's not just a joke, his comments are very pithy.

Bad poetry has its history, and notable among Kolodny's precursors is William McGonagle (sp?), whose works are so very bad that they are always in print. In that way they back on to A.E.Housman's _A Shropshire Lad_ . But it may not be until our own day that a poet has set out to be deliberately bad. I allude to Douglas Powell, who for a while ran on a platform of "bad" poetry (or wherever the quotes should go) and even published a manifesto about it.(I will post this brief essay to the List upon request). He no longer presents himself as its advocate, however, and has fled that scene to pace the heavens overhead with his upcoming book from Wesleyan, _Tea_ . And very good it is, too--but then, I always thought his "bad" poetry was good.

In fact, upon inspiration from Doug, I used to order the rest of my students to write bad poems,too, not just to feel that I was in control of the class, but to challenge them to consider esthetic value in the bluntest terms. By discussing whether Debbie's poem was worse than Scott's, we were freer than in our disputes as to whether there were any saving graces at all about Myfawnwy's or Cuthbert's. I even wrote some bad poems myself, as some of you will know.

In Berkeley & SF in the 60s we had a street poet who took unto himself an Indian or Spanish name--it was just one word, which escapes my recall--but who was really Douglas Palmer. He would stand on street corners and write you a poem upon request. Some of those must have been quite bad, don't you think? But the Bubble-Lady of Berkeley, Julia Vinograd, is a street poet who writes poems that are really quite fine, looked at from the perspective of the appropriate poetics. Her autobiography, btw, in a recent volume from Gale Research is outstanding.

Then there can be bad poetry in the sense that the Bad Lord Byron was bad, I suppose; like the Bad Charles Bukowski (although some readers think his poetry is bad in all senses). The word "bad" is beginning to take on the complete meaninglessness of any over-used word, & I will put an end to this right now. David

↑ Index

534. Herb Levy

Re: forthcoming Subtext readings

Wed 26 Nov 1997

I forgot to mention, for the record (& the folks who asked), the reradings below mark the end of Robert Mittenthal's rotating curatorship and begin that of Ezra Mark.

See you there then.

> Third Thursdays at 7:30 pm in the back room of Seattle's Speakeasy Cafe, in picturesque Belltown.
>
> December 18th - Joe Safdie & Dorothy Trujillo Lusk

> January 15th - Reuben Radding & Steven Forth
>
> Check it out. (& don't forget the usual post-function function at the Belltown Tavern).
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

535. IMBURGIA
Re: bad thanksgiving poem
Wed 26 Nov 1997

ODE TO THANKSGIVING

The Pilgrims came sick and weak, exhausted from the ride
they landed in a foriegn land already occupied
The people of the land came forth and shared of all they had they made the Pilgrims well again so everyone was glad

Thanksgiving I was always taught was about that selfless sharing from the Indians to the Pilgrims as a sacred way of caring But I grew up and learned of truths otherwise left blind of how the white man stole the land and got the treaties signed

How Indians were shoved aside and trampled in the wake of thousands more white people who desired land to take their deep traditions and beliefs considered to be odd these people of the forest who had always walked with God.

I learned the truth from knowing them apart from lies and books and discovered Indian blood in my viens and in my looks I cherish them who showed the stranger hospitality and love they hold a cherished place in this ones heart,signed Spiritdove.

11/2/97

From: henry gould[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Wednesday, November 26, 1997 5:16 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: bad thanksgiving poem

THE BAD ODE TO THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving! Turkey Day!
What a happy time for friends and family, hey!

Thanks goes first of all here in this poem
to one of the great Americans, Ben Franklin!
Because... because... because... ! !
If Ben had his way
Turkey Day
would be a birthday party
for the National Bird of the U.S.A.! Hey!
Sorry, Ben! Better luck next time with your bird!

Thanksgiving! Turkey Day!
Friends and family! They gather 'round the big stuffed animal and pour on the gravy and also the greasy warm conversation! Hey!
It all started with the Pilgrims.
Pocahontas poured gravy all over John Smith,
and said, "squawk for yourself, John!"
What a time they had, Indians and Americans,
around the big long table, groaning, bored. Hey!

So whenever Christmas rolls around again,
remember Turkey Day! And take off for the hills!
Loll on the old oak branch, with the other turkeys!
Under the vague immensity of the empurpled sunset horizon sundown! ["!"]
O America! What a great day! Hey!
And while you're at it, O my people -
don't forget the Bald Eagle!
His mighty wings oe'r'spr'ead - his mighty talons
crying - SQUAWK! !

↑ Index

536. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
Wed 26 Nov 1997

David Bromidge said:

He would stand on street corners and write you a poem upon request. Some of those must have been quite bad, don't you think?

David,

I hate to think it so, but I met one woman, I think she lived in England, who set up a booth during holiday shopping periods and wrote poems for people who wanted "personalized" poems to send someone. She made good money, especially during Valentine's and Xmas. It wasn't a full time activity, but paid better than many good poets ever make off their work.

She offered to teach me her technique. While the possibility of intresting research into why and what type of poems would sell, I declined. I've heard of others who do the same in card shops and at mall booths. Maybe better marketing would help...didn't hurt Rod McCluen.

Jerry.

↑ Index

537. henry gould
bad thanksgiving poem
Wed 26 Nov 1997

THE BAD ODE TO THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving! Turkey Day!
What a happy time for friends and family, hey!

Thanks goes first of all here in this poem
to one of the great Americans, Ben Franklin!
Because... because... because... ! !
If Ben had his way
Turkey Day
would be a birthday party
for the National Bird of the U.S.A.! Hey!
Sorry, Ben! Better luck next time with your bird!

Thanksgiving! Turkey Day!
Friends and family! They gather 'round the big stuffed animal and pour on the gravy and also the greasy warm conversation! Hey!
It all started with the Pilgrims.
Pocahontas poured gravy all over John Smith,
and said, "squawk for yourself, John!"
What a time they had, Indians and Americans,
around the big long table, groaning, bored. Hey!

So whenever Christmas rolls around again,
remember Turkey Day! And take off for the hills!
Loll on the old oak branch, with the other turkeys!
Under the vague immensity of the empurpled sunset horizon sundown! ["!"]
O America! What a great day! Hey!

And while you're at it, O my people -
don't forget the Bald Eagle!
His mighty wings oe'r'spr'ead - his mighty talons
crying - SQUAWK! !

↑ Index

538. Harold Rhenisch

Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine

Wed 26 Nov 1997

Hugh Kenner was recently on CBC radio, saying that the Shakespeare of the sonnets might have been a literary hack, writing the sonnets to the order of lovers of various kinds, for pay. Kenner based this on Pound's comment that he had done the same for the guards at St. Elizabeth's, who wanted poems to send to their sweethearts. I wonder if any of those have survived?

I did a quick web search for bad poetry. Dull. Awful poetry. Duller. I did what I should have done in the first place: used dog urine. Well, well, well. I found a site called "Don't rub his nose in it". I think it is a new, alternative poetics web-site in disguise. From there:

"The most important part of housetraining goes on not in your house but in your mind." "The biggest mistakes made in housetraining are made by the owners, not the puppy. These mistakes can mean the difference between a reliable, well-trained canine companion and a dog who has to be watched and restricted for the rest of his life." "New dog owners often don't understand how dogs think. The new owner believes that his puppy thinks the same way he does - and has the same ability to understand tough concepts such as cause and effect or evi-dence. This is simply not true."

I also found a site called "Fooling the Bladder Cops". This thing is a massive found poem, of book-length yet. I doubled up over the keyboard in laughter. Yet another poetics site in disguise. No, not the keyboard: the bladder guys. One sample:

"I heard from Dr. Grow that dog urine (of all things) can be substituted, and will pass the test! ... This subsection assumes you have a clean dog....It would make more sense to use human urine, but dog urine provides a workable substitution in an emergency."

and remember, if you fail:

"If you're an adult, contact ACLU. If you're a child, don't bother; ACLU won't do anything for children who fail the drug test."

>From the Red Shift to the ACLU, poetics does indeed infiltrate all levels of society.

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]
108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

↑ Index

539. Judy Roitman
Re: literacy
Wed 26 Nov 1997

> Literacy has a price, too.
>
> It is a trade off: you trade off the benefits and detriments of oral culture for the benefits and detriments of a written one.
>
> Values can be assigned to this transaction. It is, however, still a transformation.
>
> Harold Rhenisch
> [redacted]
> 108 Mile Ranch, B.C. Canada

I have a dyslexic friend who is also a writer, in fact he won a major literary award a couple or three years back (and does not want his dyslexia widely known, so will remain anonymous). He feels very strongly that literacy has a serious price, and that price is alienation from the phenomenal world.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

540. hen
Re: bad thanksgiving poem
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Thanks, "Imburgia". Good to take the true spirit of the day out of the "bad poetry" category. a good reminder. - Henry G.

↑ Index

541. Christopher Alexander
Buy Nothing Day 1997
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Buy Nothing Day 1997 is on Friday, November 28th

(remember: it always falls on the first shopping day after US Thanksgiving, traditionally the busiest shopping day of the year, and a starter's pistol in the run-up to the Christmas shopping frenzy). This year, why not take part? Rise above the commodified, advertiser-engineered, niche-marketed, sales-figure-boosting, GDP-pumping consumerism of the Christmas Season.

for more info, visit <http://www.adbusters.org/> & follow the "Pop Goes Your Culture" link.

Chris

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted] Marriott Library Instruction
[redacted] (lv. msg.)

↑ Index

542. Christopher Alexander bad thinksgiving pome
Wed 26 Nov 1997

---

fooling the bladder cops (for Harold Rhenisch)

this butler lends an air of sophistication to that public siphon. illuminate the press.
many diagnoses of our postmodern condition hinge upon debates about the relative stress-patterns of crowd shopping. (it's all an act).

some adults wonder @ the workings of Our Father.

don't rub his nose in it: if you're an adult, contact the ACLU locally; if you're a child, don't bother.

Chris

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted] Marriott Library Instruction
[redacted] (lv. msg.)

↑ Index

543. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: bad thanksgiving poem
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Henry,

The "poem" for Thanksgiving not only sucks, its bad history.

Thanks for sharing,

Jerry

↑ Index

544. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: literacy
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Judy Roitman wrote, responding to Harold Rhenisch:
>
> I have a dyslexic friend who is also a writer, in fact he won a major > literary award a couple or three years back (and does not want his dyslexia > widely known, so will remain anonymous). He feels very strongly that > literacy has a serious price, and that price is alienation from the > phenomenal world.
>
> ---
> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] |
> fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ---
> Note new area code
> ---
> http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

> ----------
Judy,

On what basis does your dyslexic friend see alienation from the phenomenal world as the price of literacy? Does he make that claim only for himself &/or other dyslexics, or for everyone, or only for non-dyslecics? Does he see that cost as permanent, or as operative only when slamdunking such moolah into toll-booths on the turnpike of actual reading/writing practice? Would he make a similar claim about orality, which has its own not-necessarily-natural orders? How does he compose?

Dan Zimmerman
Middlesex County College
Edison, NJ 08818-3050

↑ Index

545. IMBURGIA
Re: bad thanksgiving poem
Wed 26 Nov 1997

You are welcome! Spiritdove. (Dan Imburgias' wife...Ojibwa!)

From: hen[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Wednesday, November 26, 1997 10:42 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: bad thanksgiving poem

Thanks, "Imburgia". Good to take the true spirit of the day out of the "bad poetry" category. a good reminder. - Henry G.

↑ Index

546. david bromige
one more entry for the Turkey Award
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Congratulations, Henry on a real turkey of a poem, really really bad. You should get the prize. But the poster with the whidby e-ddress is pretty bad, too, once we dissociate the lofty sentiments from the execrable form, which was surely that person's intent, in calling their poem "bad".-- Since nothing else is going on on the List (has everyone gone elsewhere for Thanksgiving?--Joel, are you there? if so, b-c me!) I take the liberty to post my entry in the turkey-poem sweepstakes. It ensues forthwith :

A Thanksgiving Poem That Would Be Bad If It Only Could

I am a stranger in your land
You are the Indians just for now
and I am you in a likewise temporary manner
Explaining your odd & divers customs
Pouring forthright explanations into my sly European ear. . .
I quote Ed Van Aelstyn, then Editor of the _Northwest Review_
When I was Poetry Editor
And Ed wanted to run in the same issue (this was in 1963)
(1) a photo-essay by Roger Prentice clearly favorable to Castro's Cuba
(2) McClure's translation of Artaud's
"To Have Done With the Judgement of God"
and (3) a Whalen poem in which he says "I must stop masturbating so often"
And I said "Ed, not all 3 in one issue, self-abuse, treason, blasphemy, You're going to kill the bird
that has been laying such golden eggs" and Ed says
"Enough of you, & of Richard Sassoon (a fellow-editor of Euro-U.S.
background) with your sly European ways"
I reckon that "bird" was a "turkey"
after the university admin were thru with us
They made it into an organ of little future interest
Just the way it had been before Van took over
When he was just a grad student at U of O
which he was when we first met (1962)
It was a student writers' conference at Eugene
George Bowering and I drove down from Vancouver to attend
We got drunk on Gallo Port (the same wine winos drink)
And at the party chez Van Aelstyn we played charades
(All of us, not just George & me)
And next morning back at our motel
(Which was an old-style motel, i.e., cabins)
GB came into my cabin where I was laying on my bed of pain thinking about the filling that has just come out of my tooth
Due I decided to drinking Gallo Port & resolving not to do so again
(And I never have) and he said "Aren't you ashamed of yourself?"
To which naturally I responded "Why, what did I do?", because
In those days I didn't have complete recall of what had happened
after I got drunk at parties) and predictably he responded
"Why, don't you remember?" to which I of course replied
"Would I be asking if I did, you Prince?!" [except I didn't say "Prince"]
And George said "You don't remember playing charades?"
And I said, "Yeah, sortof, why?" And he said
"We were acting out book titles" and I said "Uh-huh"

And he said, grinning that goofy grin of his,
"And yours was 'The Naked and the Dead'"
But I had suddenly lost interest
Because being highly distractable I had focussed on George's pjs
Which were boldly striped and cut short on the arms
So the thin arms of the poet stuck out from the pjs
Reminding me of a deckchair in a high wind
On the way back George drove all the way very fast
Because he wanted to be with his girlfriend of the moment
And also because he thought he was "On the Road" Bowering
But the rest of us in the car well we weren't so sure
Ed made me Poetry Editor I guess he liked my charade {btw, none of this
Had happened at Thanksgiving, this was in the spring}
He would send me the submissions in Berkeley where I had moved to
And I would lose them among my stacks of students' papers
And the notes for grad essays & seminar papers & some poems
Ed would get mad at me then I'd find most of them
Most of them were really bad poems
But then I got the word out around Frisco & Beserkeley
So poets like McClure (not McCluen, aka McKuen(or McCluhan??)
and Whalen sent their stuff and then all came about as I have already told which resulted in the loss of my modest stipend
and Ed being fired but then that was all for the good Because he got a job at SF State
and he was a linguist and he taught linguistics to Ron Silliman
so that was how Language Poetry began now that wasn't too bad was it?
And Van and Jim Koller and Will Wroth I _think_ started up _Coyote's Journal_
Which was sort of a journal of Projective Verse/ Snyderean ecoconsciousness
It had an honorable table of contents not too dusty either huh?
So when they wheel that sucker in on Thursday
(lets hope thoroughly cooked so all the guests dont get sick and/or die)
And while grandma is crossing herself & saying grace
remember the Canadian grace "Good drink, Good meat, Good God, Let's eat"
& remember the phrase "The naked and the dead"
Think of people on this day who don't have any clothes to wear
or don't have any life to move them from place to place
To lift a fork to their mouths and chew
For some of us it will be our last Thanksgiving although we don't know that at the time not usually and being slightly hysterical I don't want to experience
that sense of pervasive unreality I experience when I think of my own chemise
I expect I shall do as I have done for many years now

Imitate the natives, eat too much, cultivate turkey torpor
(which is an 'improvement' on a phrase of Richard Brautigan's, after he had cooked us an italian meal, "5 minutes now to spaghetti torpor")
And since it would be unsocial to go to my study & write
Watch 3 football games instead now I am beginning to grasp american football
How it reveals the American genius for organization as Watten wrote recently
Think of past Thanksgivings when lively persons of the poetic persuasion
Graced my dinner table (not cooked & stuffed, I mean they sat there)
(But not as in "they just sat there"--they might jump up to recite or to get another bottle or to tidy their dirty dishes away While I just sat there in poetic torpor) and so to bed eventually at such a loss for words our last words were likely Happy Thanksgiving!

Ebenezer MacGonagal.

↑ Index

547. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy

Wild Honey Ad.

Wed 26 Nov 1997

Wild Honey Press is delighted to announce the publication of _Citation Suite_ by Robert Archambeau. It's a beautiful book which takes quotations from Virginia Woolf, Plato, E.M. Forster, Naipaul, Richard Rorty, Shelley, William Morris and Nathaniel Tarn and weaves them with other material in a meditation on culture and legibility. For a book written with such a light touch it has a remarkable way of coming back into mind. Insights, witticisms, lovely phrases.

I'm not sure how to put this but it acts on the boundary between the well innovative and the mainstream in very interesting ways. Yes it is consciously constructed, works with constraints, undermines the monogrammed metaphor. But there is a joyfully lyrical presence, not so much in the diction or anything obviously nail-downable, but in the movement from feeling to idea.

Available from Wild Honey Books, 16a Ballyman Rd., Bray, Co. Wicklow, Ireland, e-mail [redacted] as above.

Price £3.50 (U.K. & Ireland) or $5 (bills, no checks) or in exchange for a poem or indeed any piece of writing in any form.

Best to all,

Randolph Healy.

↑ Index

548. Brian Carpenter
Re: krad kolodny, bad poet of used dog urine
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Harold--

What CBC program was this on and when is that show? In some parts of Seattle here one can catch the CBC radio bleedover signal from Victoria, BC. (FCC-free radio is a blessed thing.) Anyhow, would quite like to know more about it. Many thanks.

BC

On Wed, 26 Nov 1997, Harold Rhenisch wrote:

> Hugh Kenner was recently on CBC radio, saying that the Shakespeare of the sonnets might have been a literary hack, writing the sonnets to the order of lovers of various kinds, for pay. Kenner based this on Pound's comment that he had done the same for the guards at St. Elizabeth's, who wanted poems to send to their sweethearts. I wonder if any of those have survived?
>
> I did a quick web search for bad poetry. Dull. Awful poetry. Duller. I did what I should have done in the first place: used dog urine. Well, well, well. I found a site called "Don't rub his nose in it". I think it is a new, alternative poetics web-site in disguise. From there:
>
> "The most important part of housetraining goes on not in your house but in your mind."
> "The biggest mistakes made in housetraining are made by the owners, not the puppy. These mistakes can mean the difference between a reliable, well-trained canine companion and a dog who has to be watched and restricted for the rest of his life."
> "New dog owners often don't understand how dogs think. The new owner believes that his puppy thinks the same way he does - and has the same ability to understand tough concepts such as cause and effect or evidence. This is simply not true."
>
> I also found a site called "Fooling the Bladder Cops". This thing is a massive found poem, of book-length yet. I doubled up over the keyboard in laughter. Yet another poetics site in disguise. No, not the keyboard: the bladder guys. One sample:
>
> "I heard from Dr. Grow that dog urine (of all things) can be substituted, and will pass the test! ... This subsection assumes you have a clean dog....It would make more sense to use human urine, but dog urine provides a workable substitution in an emergency."
>
> and remember, if you fail:

> "If you're an adult, contact ACLU. If you're a child, don't bother; ACLU won't do anything for children who fail the drug test."
>
> From the Red Shift to the ACLU, poetics does indeed infiltrate all levels of society.
>
> Harold Rhenisch
> [redacted]
> 108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

↑ Index

549. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Not poetry, but fun: check out the international Herald Tribune (iht.com) tomorrow--they usually reprint Art Buchwald's classic attempt to explain Thanksgiving to the French (Sample: Miles Standish becomes Kilometres Deboutish).

↑ Index

550. Jordan Davis
Re: one more entry for the Turkey Award
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Dear sir we appreciate very much your poem however we take issue with your discreption of american football as having to do with american managerial practice when it is an allegory of territorialism and (as c.b. says intellectual property is also theft) have a nice meal and remain calm. Jordan

↑ Index

551. Bob Grumman
Re: literacy
Wed 26 Nov 1997

Judy Roitman's dyslexic friend makes an interesting point about literacy's price being alienation from the phenomenal world, but my own take is that full appreciation of the phenomenal world only comes from the ability to view it from the afar of conceptuality.

By the way, now that I'm posting two minute items close together, I'm reminded of the Buffalo site's daily quantity-of-posts maximum of 50. It shuts down for a day if more than 50 posts are made to it in any 24-hour period, or something like that. Does this site have anything similar?

--Bob G.

↑ Index

552. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: Buy Nothing Day 1997
Thu 27 Nov 1997

No problem celebrating buy nothing day, I have no money. How about a coke? Is that off-limits?

↑ Index

553. Charles Weigl
[Fwd: [Fwd: friends of Kathy Acker]]
Thu 27 Nov 1997

---

via sendmail with P\:smtp/D:user/T:local (sender: <[redacted]>) (ident <root> using rfc1413) id <[redacted]>
for <[redacted]>; Tue, 25 Nov 1997 09:24:14 -1000 (HST)
(Smail-3.2.0.96 1997-Jun-2 #3 built 1997-Aug-20)
Date: Tue, 25 Nov 1997 09:29:03 -1000
From: Juliana Spahr <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: [Fwd: friends of Kathy Acker]

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

via sendmail with P\:esmtp/D:user/T:local (sender: <[redacted]>)
id <[redacted]>
for <[redacted]>; Mon, 24 Nov 1997 23:25:54 -1000 (HST) (Smail-3.2.0.96 1997-Jun-2 #3 built 1997-Aug-20)
by mrin53.mail.aol.com (8.8.5/8.7.3/AOL-2.0.0)
id EAA11064;
Tue, 25 Nov 1997 04:23:53 -0500 (EST)
Date: Tue, 25 Nov 1997 04:23:53 -0500 (EST)
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],

[redacted], [redacted]
Subject: friends of Kathy Acker

As some of you may have heard, Kathy Acker is in crisis. She is in a hospital in Tijuana with cancer of the lung, liver and spleen. She is very weak and her only hope is the combined holistic and allopathic treatment she is receiving at American Biologics' clinic. But this help is costly and her financial resources are on the verge of running out. She has no medical insurance. Like many artists and writers, she was never able to secure benefits from any institution.

Kathy Acker was diagnosed with breast cancer in April 1996. Shortly thereafter she had a full mastectomy and there was some involvement in her lymph nodes. After the surgery she underwent extensive alternative therapies in San Francisco, then moved to London to be with friends in August '96. (This period is described in "The Gift of Disease") Over the summer of 1997 she suffered increasingly bad health, ranging from digestive disorders to pneumonia. Once back in San Francisco in the fall, her condition worsened and she finally was taken to the emergency room by Sharon Grace and Matias Viegener. At Davies Medical Center, she was told she had advanced cancer of the liver, pancreas, spleen, and lungs.

In the hospital, she was given few options but morphine and hospice care; Kathy chose to persue alternative treatment. On November 1, she was taken to American Biologics, a holistic integrated health clinic in Tijuana, Mexico. Thanks to treatment she is getting there, and her strong will, her condition is stable. However, she is running out of money. $28,000 of her savings of approximately $40,000 have already been spent in hospitalization in Mexico, and the bills from 8 days in Davies Medical Center in SF are already past $30,000 (these we hope to defer indefinitely; Medicare is still pending for at least part of them). The financial crisis is looming.

We have made arrangements with the John Giorno Fund for Artists with AIDS to be the receiver of any contributions (which would make them tax-deductible, and 100% of the donations will go to Kathy's bills). The address is Giorno Poetry Systems, 222 Bowery NY NY 10012; the check itself may be made out to JOHN GIORNO and on the memo line write "Kathy Acker Fund."

Kathy has a solid core of people caring for her and is happy with American Biologics' hospital, where Matias Viegener, Amy Scholder, Sylvere Lotringer, Ira Silverberg, and David Antin among others have been with her. As phone calls tend to exhaust her now, she asks that people who are concerned write her c/o American Biologics, Chula Vista, CA 91911 (this is the American office of the clinic).

Anything you can do would be appreciated. Please forward this email to anyone you believe can help.

Thank you,

Matias Viegener, Los Angeles (═══════) ═══════
with David Antin, San Diego (═══════) ═══════
Sharon Grace, San Francisco (═══════) ═══════
Sylvere Lotringer, New York (═══════) ═══════
Amy Scholder, New York (═══════) ═══════
Ira Silverberg, New York (═══════) ═══════

ps: http://www.abmex.com/ is the website for American Biologics. http://acker.thehub.com.au/gift.html has KA's article of last winter about her cancer.

----------D0406EB15E679A6940059762--

↑ Index

554. Douglas Barbour
Re: Hugh Kenner on CBC
Thu 27 Nov 1997

For Brian Carpenter & any interested others:

Hugh Kenner delivered a weeks' worth of this year's Massey Lectures on the CBC radio program, "Ideas," last week. It may (indeed, probably will) be re-broadcast next summer, but it should certainly be made available in book form eventually. I forget the title, but he was dealing, very wittily the one segment I heard, with the culture of travel & bordercrossings etc. A kind of popular summing up of a lot of the ideas he has promoted throughout his career.

On another note:

between old gossip & new views of the pilgrim fathers etc, the 'bad poems' eally did their proper job, & how I do like the proper in poetry... thanks to all who cared enough to send their very worst...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
═══════ FAX:═══════
H: ═══════
~~~
~~~

~~~~~~~

these words seem to be rehearsing -

the unquantifiable extinction of all similitudes

Roy Kiyooka

↑ Index

555. Harold Rhenisch

Kenner on the CBC

Thu 27 Nov 1997

Brian Carpenter wrote:

> What CBC program was this on and when is that show? In some parts of Seattle here one can catch the CBC radio bleedover signal from Victoria, BC. (FCC-free radio is a blessed thing.) Anyhow, would quite like to know more about it. Many thanks.

Brian,

it was on "Ideas" every night last week, from 9 to 10 p.m. Kenner was this year's Massey Lecturer, which is a big deal. He spoke on "The Elsewhere Community". Basically, his thesis was that western culture has been fertilized since at least Homer by the need to gain knowledge, and to gain this knowledge from somewhere else. More or less, it was a talk about mentorship. One night was Pound, another Joyce, another Williams, with anecdotes about Eliot, Beckett, Moore, Lowell, Homer, and a lot more besides.

You can get a text or taped copy from the CBC or a text copy, soon, through your bookstore.

The text is called "The Elsewhere Community" and it will be published by House of Anansi Press. The CBC will send you a copy for CDN$19. They will send you a set of tapes for CDN$53. The charges include shipping and taxes. Who knows if there is an extra charge for the U.S.

write to:
Massey Lectures, Ideas Transcripts, P.O. Box 500, Station A, Toronto, Ontario, Canada, M5W 1E6.

By the way, CBC is available on RealAudio, for people in Bosnia, Bulgaria, Slovakia, and, I suppose, the Autonomous Republic of Seattle.

Best,

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index
~~~~~~~

556. Harold Rhenisch
Re: literacy
Thu 27 Nov 1997

Bob Grumman wrote:

> Judy Roitman's dyslexic friend makes an interesting point about literacy's price being alienation from the phenomenal world, but my own take is that full appreciation of the phenomenal world only comes from the ability to view it from the afar of conceptuality.

Bob,

both are true, aren't they? Sure they are. Just different. That's why literacy is a price. You get the full appreciation, but it is from the afar of conceptuality. Mind you, who's defining 'full appreciation'? Mr. Phenomenal or Mr. Conceptual?

best,

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]
108 Mile Ranch, B.C.

↑ Index

557. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Buy Nothing Day 1997
Thu 27 Nov 1997

> No problem celebrating buy nothing day, I have no money. How about a coke? Is that off-limits?

You mean that out there at IBM.NET you can get a coke without money?

HR ;-)

↑ Index

558. Bob Grumman
Re: literacy
Thu 27 Nov 1997

Harold Rhenisch gave me a question that might be the very first I've ever gotten from our discussion group that I KNOW I can answer with no fear of (sane) contradiction when he asked, "Who's defining 'full appreciation' (of the phenomenal world)? Mr. Phenomenal or Mr. Conceptual?" Answer: Only Mr. Conceptual would be able to define anything.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

559. Harold Rhenisch

Re: literacy

Thu 27 Nov 1997

Bob Grumman wrote:

> Harold Rhenisch gave me a question that might be the very first I've ever gotten from our discussion group that I KNOW I can answer with no fear of (sane) contradiction when he asked, "Who's defining 'full appreciation' (of the phenomenal world)? Mr. Phenomenal or Mr. Conceptual?" Answer: Only Mr. Conceptual would be able to define anything.

--Bob G.

You're welcome, Bob. No trouble.

Well said.

Still, what would Mr. Phenomenal have to say about that? We can only guess. Very rightly you hint that he would have nothing to say. So?

I propose using the considerable resources of the western capitalist de mock race ease to erect a sliding barrier between the phenomenal and the conceptual, a barrier porous enough that a traveller starting out in the mountains of Phenomena could set off on a long journey across the steppes, s journey so long that when said traveller arrived at Mr. Concept's door, the traveller could speak only of the journey, in bright images, and any conceptual links would be incidental, and would, conceptually speaking, be the journey. Poor Mr. Concept would have to set out on the reverse journey. A conceptual conversation would ensure, surely, but it could not be reduced. To reduce it to anything else would be to step outside it. Poof! Mr. Concept would be sitting on his doorstep again, smoking his pipe in the evening, watching the sublime sun set through the sublime old fruit trees of abandoned orchards, and he would not even know that he was still on a journey, because he would have no phenomena by which to experience it.

Insanely,

Harold

↑ Index

560. david bromige
literacy
Thu 27 Nov 1997

Concepts protect us from experience. So she had conceived.

↑ Index

561. Bob Grumman
Re: literacy
Thu 27 Nov 1997

david bromige wrote: "Concepts protect us from experience. So she had conceived." And experience protects one from concepts.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

562. david bromige
literacy/concept/phenom/thread
Fri 28 Nov 1997

Yes, Bob, but that formulation, "experience protects one from concepts," is conceptual. I agree that wisdom gleaned from experience gives one a wise mistrust of concepts, even though that too is a concept. But that wasn't all I was after when I wrote, "Concepts protect us from experience. So she had conceived." One, I imagined a concept, in "her" mind, as a condom; rejecting its use, she becomes pregnant ("so she had conceived.") I wanted to imply there is a price to pay for pooh-poohing the conceptual. But there is a price to pay for operating only via conceputal wisdoms--one of which might be the extinction of life itself ("for who would fardels bear"...or babies!?)

I don't think the balance you name quite operates by that sort of symmetry. I doubt that unconceptualized experience is available to us, so I don't see the conceptual and the experiential as true opposites. Granted, this is subject to a further turn of the screw, whereby, in order to preserve any meaning at all for the word _experience_ , we can argue that if all our experience is only experience of the conceptual, then that _is_ what experience means, ands that _is_ experience.

But out of such bottlenecks there is sometimes a way, if only via a retreat. Reading Merleau-Ponty is not the same as reading Fichte. So the "retreat" is from the general absolute towards the realm of the particular, which is I take it a phenomenological tack. For instance, I have now quite forgotten how this "literacy" thread turned into this concept v. phenomenon thread. David

↑ Index

563. David R. Israel
Re: literacy
Fri 28 Nov 1997

Bob Grumman wrote

> david bromige wrote: "Concepts protect us from experience. So she had conceived." And experience protects one from concepts.

so he had experienced

d.i.

↑ Index

564. Bob Grumman
Re: literacy/concept/phenom/thread
Fri 28 Nov 1997

David,

I think I'm with you all the way on this one. Although I did miss the concept/ condom pun. I don't think it's concept versus the phenomenal but concept added to the phenomenal world. I just saw a chance to make a quick score (I thought) on behalf of one of my buzz dogmas: the unreflected-on life isn't worth living.

I don't know how this discussion got started, either, but I do know I'm still having trouble with being in two discussion groups, this one and the modern poetry one, especially when someone like Harold R. writes two letters that arrive here at the same time, one to each group. So I've been answering some letters from thread in this group to the other group and vice versa. That includes the following comment for this concept/ phenomenal world thread that explains my position a little more:

As for pore Mister Conceptual's attempt to tell of his journey through the phenomenal world, you described it well. The conceptual must be founded on the sensual, or phenomenal. In fact, in my decidedly uncertified theory of psychology (now you're in for it), I call that part of the brain that deals with sensory information The Fundaceptual Awareness. The conceptual part of the brain I call The Reducticeptual Awareness. There are other -ceptual awarenesses I refuse to reveal at this time, but hope to discuss at a personal website before too long. Nothing too original about these awarenesses; they mostly follow Howard Gardner's ideas--which, in turn, are not particularly original, either.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

565. Pierre Joris
for your amusement
Fri 28 Nov 1997

For your amusement, check out the following piece from the IHT re Rushdie vs Le Carré in the letter columns of the Guardian.

http://www.iht.com/IHT/TODAY/THU/FPAGE/feud.html will keep you another 10 minutes from going out & shopping on the day after.

happy post-gobble daze,

Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Adding music to a good poem is like using a stained-glass window to light a painted picture. — Paul Valéry
==========

↑ Index

566. Steven Marks
"gang" review
Fri 28 Nov 1997

Listfolks,

Just wanted to alert y'all to a review I wrote for latest issue of _American Book Review_. Chapbooks and websites reviewed are those of Mark Wallace, Kristin Prevallet, Jeffeson Hansen, Wendy Battin and Jena Osman. Chapbooks are available from Mary Hilton's primitive publications, 1706 U St., NW, #102, Washington, D.C. They are:

The Haunted Baronet, by Mark Wallace
Lead, Glass and Poppy, by Kristin Prevallet
Why I Am Not a Christian, by Jefferson Hansen

Websites reviewed are at:

http://camel.conncoll.edu/ccother/wjbat

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/osman

Many other familiar names of reviewers in this issue as well.

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

567. KENT JOHNSON phenomena
Fri 28 Nov 1997

It's Buy Nothing Day, and I haven't bought a thing. But now I'm wondering: Is the nature of that act (or non-act) mainly phenomenal or conceptual? Is "not-buying" phenomenal things for a day something like an _idea_ with no phenomenal status at all, like, for example, the "just yet" in "I have to go to the bathroom after all that turkey, but I'm not going to go_ just yet_"? (I think Wittgenstein said something like that.) Or is it _commodities_ that are purely conceptual and their "thingness" only index of a phenomenally (historical relations of production, exchange, etc.) constructed fetishism which is, of course, ideological and thus conceptual through and through? In other words, are social relations and our actions that help make them up (like buying or not-buying) _more real_ than all those apparent "things" up for sale? (I think Marx said something like that.)

But what if not-buying really_is_ just a concept? I mean if commodities are only conceptual in nature and my one-day act of resistance to them is, from an ontological standpoint (am I using ontological correctly here?), not disimilar from them, then is it possible that "buying-nothingness" is actually a kind of commodity (like a scentless perfume suddenly all the rage) that enters into a deeper set of real and existing relations that are obscured from me?

And is that question in any way applicable to all poetry today?

I honestly don't know, and it's driving me so crazy that I'm just glad I bought twice as much to drink yesterday knowing that I wouldn't be buying anything today. Cheers to the violence within that protects us from the violence without.

Kent

↑ Index

568. KENT JOHNSON
Bromige and Tennyson
Fri 28 Nov 1997

By the way, did anyone notice that David Bromige's supposedly "bad" entry for the Turkey Award, "A Thanksgiving Poem That Would Be Bad If Only It Could", is actually a sustained quantitative alternation (albeit with a few variations) of Alcaic and Sapphic verses? I have an eye for these things ever since I discovered that Tennyson's "Hesperides," generally considered to be a failed poem because it doesn't scan accentually, is a quantitative experiment with the amphimacer as insistent meter within longer aeolic units. It fits with the theme: Hercules was originally from Crete. I almost got the paper published in Victorian Poetry, but one of the readers said that surely, if ALT had intended such, we would find something in his notes and letters about it! Talk about stuffy... Kent

↑ Index

569. David R. Israel
Re: phenomena
Sat 29 Nov 1997

Kent,

it's beyond me to reply to all your points, so here's just a part --

> But what if not-buying really_is_just a concept? I mean if commodities are only conceptual in nature . . .

no no, they're not only conceptual in nature. They have physical substantiation.

If you try to say they're only conceptual, I'm just not buying it.

> . . . is it possible that "buying-nothingness" is actually a kind of commodity (like a scentless perfume suddenly all the rage) that enters into a deeper set of real and existing relations that are obscured from me?

I don't know, but I just checked out the "Cafe Nirvana" on the Tricycle site (http://www.tricycle.com/). The slogan might be germane to this discussion? --

"It's Always Empty, Even When You're There"

I woulda gone shopping if I hadn't stayed at home.

d.i.

.
.....
.....
\\\

```
  >   david   raphael   israel   <
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇  (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇     (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

570. Harold Rhenisch
Re: literacy/concept/phenom/thread
Sat 29 Nov 1997

> I don't know how this discussion got started, either.

With thoughts on dyslexia generating the insight that literacy's price was a loss of the phenomenal world, following up my thoughts on literacy being a price paid.

> I'm still having trouble with being in two discussion groups, this one and the modern poetry one, especially when someone like Harold R. writes two letters that arrive here at the same time, one to each group. So I've been answering some letters from thread in this group to the other group and vice versa.

Bizarre, isn't it.

Harold

↑ Index

571. Gwyn McVay
Guest festschrift at Brown
Sun 30 Nov 1997

Can anyone point me toward more information on the 1994 festschrift on Barbara Guest? (I'm starting from point zero--all I know is that such a thing did happen--so any and all leads would be greatly appreciated.)

Found poetics department--and a reminder to be really specific about those web search parameters--you wouldn't believe the number of women named Barbara who have guest books on their web pages.

thanks--
Gwyn

↑ Index

572. Annie Finch
Re: Bromige and Tennyson
Sun 30 Nov 1997

Dear Kent,

Does "The Hesperides" have another title? I can't find it in my complete Tennyson. And now I'm very curious. . ..

This is also the first I've heard of a connection between cretics and Crete. Do you know more about that and could you point me to a reference?

My Princeton ency. has led me to an inconsequential poem of ALT's in cretics called "The Oak," b ut that's it.

Annie..

> Dear Annie:
>
> Thanks for the note. Yes, just a bit of fun, though I do think I might have a point about ALT's "The Hesperides" (though what I said about Hercules was a little clue to the joke about Bromige). But the cretic is the dominant pattern in that poem, especially when the Hesperides "sing," and it is interesting that Crete may be the most logical site for this particular labor of Hercules. All of which is pretty esoteric, but there you have it. Feel free to forward this to the list if you want. There's been nothing on there in the past two days, and I'm a bit worried that everyone is busy trying to do a quantitative analysis of DB's turkey poem!
> best,
> Kent
>
> Date: Sun, 30 Nov 1997 14:11:52 -0500
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (Annie Finch)
> Subject: Re: Bromige and Tennyson
>
> Dear Kent,
>
> Your remarks on the scansion are a joke, right? I'm backchanneling this because if they are, I'm embarrassed that I don't get it. If it's not a joke, please feel free to forward my present message and your reply to the list so we can discuss the prosody on the list---it would make a nice change of pace, don't you think?
>
> I really liked your comment about the commodification of the buy nohting concept and do think it applies to poetry.
>
> More on that later.

Annie

By the way, did anyone notice that David Bromige's supposedly "bad" entry for the Turkey Award, "A Thanksgiving Poem That Would Be Bad If Only It Could", is actually a sustained quantitative alternation (albeit with a few variations) of Alcaic and Sapphic verses? I have an eye for these things ever since I discovered that Tennyson's "Hesperides," generally considered to be a failed poem because it doesn't scan accentually, is a quantitative experiment with the amphimacer as insistent meter within longer aeolic units. It fits with the theme: Hercules was originally from Crete. I almost got the paper published in Victorian Poetry, but one of the readers said that surely, if ALT had intended such, we would find something in his notes and letters about it! Talk about stuffy...
Kent

A Thanksgiving Poem That Would Be Bad If It Only Could

I am a stranger in your land
You are the Indians just for now
and I am you in a likewise temporary manner
Explaining your odd & divers customs
Pouring forthright explanations into my sly European ear. . .
I quote Ed Van Aelstyn, then Editor of the _Northwest Review_
When I was Poetry Editor
And Ed wanted to run in the same issue (this was in 1963)
(1) a photo-essay by Roger Prentice clearly favorable to Castro's Cuba
(2) McClure's translation of Artaud's
"To Have Done With the Judgement of God"
and (3) a Whalen poem in which he says "I must stop masturbating so often"
And I said "Ed, not all 3 in one issue, self-abuse, treason, blasphemy, You're going to kill the bird
that has been laying such golden eggs" and Ed says
"Enough of you, & of Richard Sassoon (a fellow-editor of Euro-U.S.
background) with your sly European ways"
I reckon that "bird" was a "turkey"
after the university admin were thru with us
They made it into an organ of little future interest
Just the way it had been before Van took over
When he was just a grad student at U of O
which he was when we first met (1962)
It was a student writers' conference at Eugene
George Bowering and I drove down from Vancouver to attend
We got drunk on Gallo Port (the same wine winos drink)
And at the party chez Van Aelstyn we played charades
(All of us, not just George & me)

And next morning back at our motel
(Which was an old-style motel, i.e., cabins)
GB came into my cabin where I was laying on my bed of pain
thinking about the filling that has just come out of my tooth
Due I decided to drinking Gallo Port & resolving not to do so again
(And I never have) and he said "Aren't you ashamed of yourself?"
To which naturally I responded "Why, what did I do?", because
In those days I didn't have complete recall of what had happened
after I got drunk at parties) and predictably he responded
"Why, don't you remember?" to which I of course replied
"Would I be asking if I did, you Prince?!" [except I didn't say "Prince"]
And George said "You don't remember playing charades?"
And I said, "Yeah, sortof, why?" And he said
"We were acting out book titles" and I said "Uh-huh"
And he said, grinning that goofy grin of his,
"And yours was 'The Naked and the Dead'"
But I had suddenly lost interest
Because being highly distractable I had focussed on George's pjs
Which were boldly striped and cut short on the arms
So the thin arms of the poet stuck out from the pjs
Reminding me of a deckchair in a high wind
On the way back George drove all the way very fast
Because he wanted to be with his girlfriend of the moment
And also because he thought he was "On the Road" Bowering
But the rest of us in the car well we weren't so sure
Ed made me Poetry Editor I guess he liked my charade {btw, none of this
Had happened at Thanksgiving, this was in the spring}
He would send me the submissions in Berkeley where I had moved to
And I would lose them among my stacks of students' papers
And the notes for grad essays & seminar papers & some poems
Ed would get mad at me then I'd find most of them
Most of them were really bad poems
But then I got the word out around Frisco & Beserkeley
So poets like McClure (not McCluen, aka McKuen(or McCluhan??)
and Whalen sent their stuff and then all came about as I have already told
which resulted in the loss of my modest stipend
and Ed being fired but then that was all for the good Because he got a job at SF State
and he was a linguist and he taught linguistics to Ron Silliman
so that was how Language Poetry began now that wasn't too bad was it?
And Van and Jim Koller and Will Wroth I _think_ started up _Coyote's Journal_
Which was sort of a journal of Projective Verse/ Snyderean ecoconsciousness
It had an honorable table of contents not too dusty either huh?
So when they wheel that sucker in on Thursday
(lets hope thoroughly cooked so all the guests dont get sick and/or die)
And while grandma is crossing herself & saying grace
remember the Canadian grace "Good drink, Good meat, Good God, Let's eat"
& remember the phrase "The naked and the dead"

> Think of people on this day who don't have any clothes to wear
> or don't have any life to move them from place to place
> To lift a fork to their mouths and chew
> For some of us it will be our last Thanksgiving although we don't know that > at the time not usually and being slightly hysterical I don't want
> to experience
> that sense of pervasive unreality I experience when I think of my own chemise
> I expect I shall do as I have done for many years now
> Imitate the natives, eat too much, cultivate turkey torpor
> (which is an 'improvement' on a phrase of Richard Brautigan's, > after he had cooked us an italian meal, "5 minutes now to spaghetti torpor")
> And since it would be unsocial to go to my study & write
> Watch 3 football games instead now I am beginning to grasp american football
> How it reveals the American genius for organization as Watten wrote recently
> Think of past Thanksgivings when lively persons of the poetic persuasion
> Graced my dinner table (not cooked & stuffed, I mean they sat there)
> (But not as in "they just sat there"--they might jump up to recite
> or to get another bottle or to tidy their dirty dishes away
> While I just sat there in poetic torpor) and so to bed eventually > at such a loss for words our last words were likely Happy Thanksgiving!
>
> Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
> Department of English
> Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

573. raea100900

Re: Kathy Acker

Sun 30 Nov 1997

Kathy died last night in a Tijuana treatment center. Reportedly, her death was "peaceful."

Rae A.

↑ Index

574. Douglas

James Laughlin

Sun 30 Nov 1997

I just returned from two weeks in Paris, where I was participating in the poetry Biennale; accordingly
I was unable to participate in the conversations surrounding J Laughlin and New Directions. However, while in Paris, the LA WEEKLY asked me to write a small piece of Laughlin, and I thought some of you might be interested in my comments.

I write from Paris, where, for literary reasons, I have been visiting the great cemetaries of thecity: Pere Lachaise, Montparnasse, Montmartre and Passy. And suddenly the writer Jerome Rothenberg reports the death of James Laughlin. I use the word SUDDENLY, not because one did not expect the death--J, as his friends called him, was 83--but because for so many decades now, Laughlin's publishing house, New Directions, has demonstrated that there could be something in American literature other than that produced by the commerical conglomerates, and because those of us who took that lesson to heart could never have properly prepared ourselves for its founder's passing and, thus, its possible absence from the American scene. The young would-be poet who visited Ezra Pound in Italy certainly did not appear a likely candidate for either profession. As the heir to the Inland Steel company, he might have been expected to have chosen other, less problematic avocations. Pound pronounced Laughlin "not much of a poet" and suggested he "do something useful like publishing." It is part of Laughlin's genius that he took Pound's advice-- along with his writing. Beginning in 1936, Laughlin began to publish Pound and the work of othr poets recommended to him: William Carlos Williams, Dylan Thomas, George Oppen, Carl Rakosi, and Kenneth Rexroth (who himself would later serve as an un- official advisor). He reprinted important works of American fiction such as Djuna Barnes's NIGHTWOOD, Gertrude Stein's THREE LIVES and Nathanel West's MISS LONLEYHEARTS, and added drama to his list with the plays of Tennessee Williams. What was even more amazing about Laughlin, however, was that he not only published these authors--there have been a number of wealthy men and women who have treated publishing as a philanthropic hobby--but committed himself to many of these writers over several decades, bringing out their every book. From his home in Connecticut and his somewhat dowdy but serviceable offices in New York, Laughlin built up a loyal and partisan staff of editors--who through the years have included the late Robert MacGregor (for many years his right-hand man), Griselda Ohannessian, the translator and novelist Peter Glassgold, Peggy Fox, Barbara Epler and others--helping him to acquire and edit books by some of the most important writers of the century: Louis-Ferdinand Céline, Eugenio Montale, Federico Garcia Lorca, St.-John Perse, Raymond Queneau, Octavio Paz, Mikhail Bulgakov, Anonio Tacucchi, Clarice Lispector, Kamu Braithwaite, and Bei Dao, to name only a few. American writing, however, remained at the center of New Directions' ventures. Its list of American writers is for- midable, including John Hawkes, Robert Duncan, Michael McClure, Henry Miller, Gary Snyder, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Guy Davenport, Toby Olson, Jerome Rothenberg, David Antin, and, in recent years, Bernadette Mayer, Susan Howe, Michael Palmer, and my own collection of writers of "Language" poetry. Laughlin was not only loyal and imaginativae in his pub- lishing activities, but, despite Pound's abjuration, he con- tinued to write his own poetry--was prolific in fact. He generally chose not to publish his own poems, which may have contributed to his neglect. But in recent years, collections have appeared under the imprints of several smaller presses, and his POEMS: NEW AND SELECTED is dure out this spring from New Directions. The poet-publisher is a rarity, and James Laughlin brought something far more importnat than money and commitment to publishing; he brought a vision--in a period of an ever-expanding drive for simplicity of information, in a time of news "briefs" and "blips," computer "hits," and formulaic writing in literature, film and television--a vision that believed in the complexity of human language and thought. The books of New Directions are generally entertaining and enjoyable to read, but they offer something more: human confusion, uncertainty, doubt. When reading them, one is often frustrated, pained, angered, even infuriated. In breif, they represent the beautifully rich and terrorizing tapestry of human life. No bromides, quick winks and asides, no stereotypical characterizations here. For years Laughlin's books appeared bound in covers printed only in black and white; it was almost as if the books them- selves invited careful scrutiny before one entered their pages. And when one did enter, the entire world opened up. It is hard to explain that effect on young and often starving minds. In the middle of Iowa, my adolescent fists found that the books of this great poet-publisher were a natural fit, and the mind was made to come alive.

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

575. Douglas
errors in Laughlin
Sun 30 Nov 1997

A few corrections to the letter on J. Laughlin just sent.

First paragraph: line 6 : small piece ON Laughlin

Fifth paragraph: Antonio Tabucchi

Seventh paragraph: imaginative in his publishing activities his POEMS: NEW AND SELECTED is due out

Eighth paragraph: line 2 something far more important line 9 In brief, they represent

Sorry for the errors in my quick typing.

↑ Index

576. rsillima
Natacha Lallemand
Sun 30 Nov 1997

Does anybody have an address, physical or virtual, for Natacha Lallemand, a student at the Sorbonne? If so, please back-channel me or call directly.

Thanks!

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

December 1997

437 messages · Mon 1 Dec 1997 – Wed 31 Dec 1997

December was the quietest month in two years — four hundred and thirty-six letters, Kyoto mentioned four times, the year winding down — and it produced, almost by accident, the single most honest document in this archive. It began on the eighth with a small advertisement. M. L. Weber edits a magazine called Sugar Mule, and the next issue was to be women's writing with an emphasis on the natural world; all genres welcome; email only; deadline the twentieth of January. Thank you. That is the entire post. Forty letters came of it.

Jerry Fletcher started them, saying the notice raised a topic of socio-political interest, and offering the view that "the quality of men's writing has gone down" as men's political issues have diminished. The room took that up with more patience than it deserved and then, underneath it, got to the real question, which is whether women are in fact underrepresented here and in the magazines. Judy Roitman put the case in one line — there may be more equity now, but "women are still left out of history, including literary". Harold Rhenisch went and looked at the current Malahat Review and reported the tally: "18 women; 18 men". And then David Israel did something nobody on this list has done before or since.

He counted the room. He ordered a fresh copy of the subscriber list off the Listserv computer — five hundred and sixty-two identified subscribers, two concealed, nineteen countries, four hundred and sixty-three American addresses — and sat down and read it through, ticking off the female names. He got a hundred and fifty-two. Then he did the thing that makes the post worth printing: he attacked his own method, at length, before anybody else could. He does not know how to tell the gender of a Japanese name from its syllables. What is he to do about subscribers who use initials? Some people are subscribed twice, or three times. Correcting for all of it, he thought the real figure might be two hundred, possibly two hundred and twenty-five — call it forty per cent.

Which settles nothing, and he says so. It is not the extreme male majority somebody had asserted; it is not the parity somebody else had. And the number he actually wanted, he notes, is not this one: a diehard statistician, he says, would count the ratio of posts rather than of subscribers — who speaks here, not who is on the roll — and would probably find it worse. He did not do that count. He signed off in six words: "end of statistics / no conclusions".

Consider what he was doing. In February, Ron Silliman had spent thirty-seven letters proving to this room that a poet's name is an invention — that Duncan was christened Symmes, that Armantrout was born Korkegian, that names are particularly unstable things where people are concerned. Ten months later the room wanted to know what it was made of, and the only instrument it had was the roll of its own names, and a man read them one by one and guessed. I have set Weber's advertisement and Israel's count at either end of this volume, because a room that could never define a word went out in December and tried to count itself instead — and found it could not tell, from the names, who was in it.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 437 in all.

WRITERS

Administration, Poetics List 97
Aerialedge 110, 311, 381
Alexander, Christopher 24
Alexander, Christopher W. 81, 82, 170, 189, 191, 269
And, Miekal 52, 53, 142, 282, 285, 286, 292, 315, 323, 332, 333, 335, 361, 364, 398, 399, 429
Androla, Ron 178
Archambeau, Robert 93
Baker, Mark 204, 233, 372
Barbour, Douglas 8, 220, 221, 391, 393, 404
Basinski, Michael D 157
Beard, Tom 301
Bernstein, Charles 11, 327
Blarnes, Eric 34
Bowering, George 213, 387, 406
Brink, Dean A. 61, 80, 99, 159
Bromige, David 28, 67, 114, 140, 275, 331, 386, 403, 405, 415
Brown, Lee Ann 324, 379
Bruno, Franklin 77, 378
Burger, Mary 35
Burns, Suzanne 382
Cabri, Louis 74, 84, 104, 186, 245
Cadaly 76, 176, 236
Carll, Steve 12
Carpenter, Brian 396
Carter, Daniel 71
Cayley, John 263, 349
Ceravolo, Rosemary 117
CharSSmith 132, 180
Clippinger, David W. 3, 9, 30
Cockram, Patricia 139, 183, 184, 234, 235, 294, 295
Coffey, Michael 359, 424
COLLIER, DANIEL L. 238
Cope, Stephen 29
Crown, Kathleen 334
Daly, Catherine 17
Damon, Maria 40, 41, 144, 145, 261, 298, 310, 319, 321, 427
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 14
Davis, Jordan 33, 49, 57, 94, 124, 163, 190, 218, 247, 338, 373, 416, 418, 419
Dbkk 58, 59, 312, 330
Debrot, Jacques 19, 152, 296, 304, 336, 340, 402
Dlugonski, Dan Or Orion Raphael 135
Douglas 4, 305
Dowker, David 280
Drake, Jennifer 23
Drake, Robert 86, 217, 368, 380
Durand, Marcella 308, 417
Farrah, George J 388
Felix, Joel 309
Finch, Annie 147, 148, 158, 209, 239, 253, 316
Fletcher, Jerry E. 109, 141, 192, 193, 250, 251, 257, 259, 260
Foley, Jack 302
Foutu, Mark 138, 428
Freind, W. 10
Gallagher, Kristen 297
Gitin, David 131
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 20, 66
Goldsmith, Kenneth 27, 42
Gould, Henry 6, 47, 326, 351, 369, 385, 401, 426, 433
Groberts 179, 195, 272
Grotjohn, Bob 352
Grumman, Bob 79, 194, 232, 265, 276, 277, 307, 360
Guertin, Carolyn 347
Hansen, Jeff 216
Hardin, Rob 85, 136
Hatlen, Burt 320
Henry 5, 425
Hicks, Kasey Silem Mohammad 244
Hill, Laurie Schneider/Crag 329
Israel, David 171, 177, 205, 211, 350
Israel, David R. 16, 65, 182, 187, 188, 243, 248, 281, 377, 394, 395, 410, 411
Jarnot 293
JforJames 160
JOHNSON, KENT 26, 39, 75, 90, 95, 108, 113, 127, 241, 254, 255, 271, 273, 287, 337
Joris, Pierre 60, 346
Joseph, Safdie 125, 289, 339
Kalleberg, Garrett 37
Kellogg, David 353, 363
Landers, Pete 435
Lazer, Hank 400
Lefthandb 146
Levitsky, Rachel 88
Levy, Herb 313, 314, 355
Lewis, Joel 73, 348
List, Poetics 383, 421
Loden, Rachel 78, 175
Long, Brent 63, 120, 149
Lopez, Tony 22, 155, 290
Magee, Michael 133

Marcella 181
Marks, Steven 62, 229, 328
Marsh, William 56, 115, 318
Maz881 367
Mccartney, Jill A 389, 390
McVay, Gwyn 55, 89, 118, 284, 303
Mfranco34 375
MillettiC 38, 69
MLWeber 92, 164
Moriarty, Laura 165, 343
Morris, Robin 126, 162, 354
Nielsen, Aldon 322
Nuyopoman 43
Orange, Tom 237
Osman, Jena 123
Pollet, Sylvester 143, 267, 283, 342, 430, 432
Pound, Scott 299, 437
Prejsnar, Mark 151, 223, 288, 317, 431
Pritchett,Pat 46, 111, 129, 130, 268
Pritchpa 384, 434
Prod, William Burmeister 112, 156, 172, 200, 227, 230, 278, 300, 356
R.drake 199, 341
RaeA100900 357, 358
Rhenisch, Harold 7, 32, 45, 72, 102, 153, 196, 201, 202, 203, 210, 225, 226, 228, 240, 258
Roberson, Matthew 291
Roitman, Judy 21, 36, 167, 173, 197, 222, 224, 270
Rsillima 2, 362, 365
Russell, Layne 168, 206
Saldana, Tristan 122
Schmid, Julie Marie 374
Schultz, Susan 252
Schwerner, Armand 407
Seagram, Blair 366
Shemurph 134
Slotnick, Stacie 161
Slotnick, Stacie E. 128
Sondheim, Alan Myouka 54, 68, 87, 98, 100, 101, 106, 107, 150, 207, 266, 344, 376, 408, 409, 412, 420
Spahr, Juliana 279, 345
Spandrift, Jack 422
Steinberg, Hugh 262, 325
T.R.Healy, L.MacMahon And 166, 249
Tate, J. 121, 154
Thomas, Fraser 15
Tiess, Robert J 1, 13, 18
Tosh 83
Tranter, John 137, 169
Upton., Lawrence 44, 50, 392, 413, 436
Vassilakis, Nico 370, 371
Wallace, Mark 91, 105
Weiss, Mark 25, 48, 51, 70, 96, 103, 116, 119, 174, 185, 198, 208, 212, 231, 242, 246, 256, 264, 274, 423
Wheeler, Susan 215, 219, 397, 414
Zimmerman, Daniel 31, 64, 214
}, { Brad Brace 306

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 12, 17, 20, 37, 41, 324, 356
Alexander, Christopher W. 24, 26, 81, 82, 170, 189, 191, 199, 269
Alice, Mary 278
Allison, Dorothy 59
Americans, Asian 345, 394, 407
Anderson, Beth 4
Andre, Michael 171, 172
Andrews, Bruce 289, 305, 355
Armantrout, Rae 352, 353, 355, 357, 386, 400
Ashberry, John 423, 424
Ashbery, John 79, 124, 177, 243, 386, 416, 424
Atlanta, Mark P. 151, 288, 308, 317
Auden, W. H. 416
Austin, Geer 224, 230, 260
Balaz, Joe 345
Baron, Todd 338
Battin, Wendy 56, 62
Beckman, Paul 164
Bellamy, Dodie 58, 312, 313
Benjamin, Walter 383
Bennett, John M. 288, 308, 317
Bergvall, Caroline 22
Berkeley, Michael 370, 386, 395
Berkson, Bill 33
Berman, Tosh 83
Bernstein, Emma 355
Berrigan, Anselm 110, 381
Berrigan, Ted 33, 293
Berry, Stephen 193, 198, 202, 208, 212
Bishop, Elizabeth 354, 416
Blau, Rachel 22
Boer, Charles 356
Bouchard, Dan 4
Bradley, John 97
Brazil, David 86
Brennan, Karen 334
Brennan, Sherry 91, 105
Brink, Dean A. 61, 65, 68, 80, 99, 100, 159
Bryan, John 146, 155
Bryant, Dana 417
Bryant, Elizabeth 345
Burger, Peter 4, 200
Burton, Philip 320
Bush, George 214
Caesar, Little 200
Campbell, Jeremy 77
Carey, Steve 43, 45, 48
Carey, Tom 293
Carlos, William 86
Carroll, Jim 417

Celan, Paul 12, 118, 324
Ceravolo, Joe 57
Chapman, Wes 25
Chaucer, Geoffrey 118
Clampitt, Amy 126
Clark, Susan 58
Clark, Tom 125, 130, 140
Clarke, Jack 241, 246, 254, 255, 264
Clarke, John 241, 246, 255, 264
Clemente, Francesco 86, 276, 337
Clinton, Bill 224, 230, 243, 260
Clippinger, David W. 3, 9, 30
Clover, Joshua 77
Columbus, Christopher 58
Conte, Joseph 334
Coolidge, Clark 79, 100
Cooper, Paula 407
Corbett, Robert 138
County, Mike 31
Crane, Lee 339, 342, 346, 354, 359, 416
Creeley, Robert 79, 383, 400
Crosby, Harry 171, 172
Crozier, Andrew 22
Curtay, Paul 305
Darragh, Tina 305
Deming, Alison 345
Derrida, Jacques 100
Dickens, Charles 171, 172
Donnelly, Jean 381
Doubiago, Sharon 334
Dubois, Caroline 58
Duncan, Andrew 22
Duncan, Robert 383
Durgin, Patrick F. 288, 308, 317
Dutton, Paul 199, 215
Economou, George 146
Edison, Thomas 31
Eigner, Larry 21, 25, 36, 167, 173, 197, 214, 222, 224, 229, 230, 270
Eliot, Joe 169, 287, 327, 348
England, Amy 97, 174, 383, 404, 406
Evans, George 14, 336
Evans, Steve 77
Fagin, Larry 33
Farrell, Dan 330
Federman, Raymond 291
Ferguson, Jesse 59
Finnegan, James 160, 173
Fisher, Harrison 381
Fletcher, Jerry E. 109, 139, 141, 144, 153, 192, 193, 250, 251, 257, 259, 260, 295
Forche, Carolyn 97
France, Peter 22, 86, 242, 263, 383
Frances, Mary 14
Franco, Michael 375
Fraser, Simon 15, 31, 49, 312, 313, 320
Freind, Bill 10, 32
Frost, Corey 334
Frost, Robert 383
Gander, Forrest 138
Garcia, Rodrigo 319
Genet, Jean 40
Gevirtz, Susan 4, 58
Gilbert, Roger 103, 106
Ginsberg, Allan 327
Ginsberg, Allen 370
Gioia, Dana 241, 246, 255, 264
Giorno, John 417
Gizzi, Michael 81
Gladman, Renee 4
Goldberg, Ariel 416, 419
Gomez, Audrey 59
Goodman, Amy 334, 383
Graham, Susan 110
Grenier, Bob 289
Hansen, Jefferson 46, 62, 105
Hardy, Thomas 77, 78
Harris, Ken 237, 245, 280
Harvey, George 324
Hass, Bob 400
Healy, Randolph 166, 168, 206, 249, 252, 261, 268
Hecht, Anthony 253
Hejinian, Lyn 22, 79
Heller, Michael 143
Heller, Mike 164
Herman, Rachel 369
Heuving, Jeanne 334
Hicks, Sue 244, 254
Higgins, Dick 134, 149, 158, 260, 329, 337
Hinton, Laura 334
Hogue, Cynthia 334
Hollo, Anselm 110, 293
Holman, Bob 43, 45, 48, 160, 173
Holmes, Janet 383
Homer 417
Hoover, Edgar 175
Hoover, Paul 164, 175, 253
Howe, Susan 79
Huang, Yunte 97
Hugo, Victor 160, 173
Ignatow, David 383
Indiana, Gary 23
Irby, Ken 270
Ireland, Lauren 22
Israel, David R. 16, 65, 68, 97, 182, 187, 188, 243, 248, 281, 377, 394, 395, 410, 411
Jackson, Jesse 241, 246, 253, 255, 264, 305, 330
Jarman, Mark 316
Jarnot, Lisa 417
Jones, Bob 383, 417
Jordan, June 57, 94, 124, 190, 196, 218, 220, 221, 338, 373, 377, 378, 416, 418

Kathryn, Mary 345
Kaufman, Robert 343
Keats, John 121, 125, 126, 128, 130, 131, 145, 154, 274
Killian, Kevin 312, 313
Kinsella, John 22, 33
Kiyooka, Roy 8, 220, 221
Klein, Ralph 220, 228, 232, 259
Kyger, Joanne 289
Laughlin, James 8, 127, 137, 138, 169
Lauterbach, Ann 123, 129, 133
Lavender, Bill 4
Lehman, David 416, 419
Levertov, Denise 380, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 388, 391, 393, 400, 401, 404, 406
Lew, Walter K. 14
Logan, John 400
London, Frank 44, 263, 349, 383
Lopez, Richard 411, 413
Louise, Bobbie 249, 252, 261, 268, 433
Luoma, Bill 165
Lyons, Kimberly 417
Mann, Chris 110
Marshall, Robert 248, 383
Mayer, Bernadette 33, 129, 305
McCaffery, Steve 199, 215
Mead, Taylor 417
Medal, Frost 383
Melville, Pierre 369
Messerli, Douglas 4, 8, 305
Meyer, Tom 263
Middleton, Peter 22
Miller, Lee 375
Milletti, Christina 38, 69
Milne, Drew 22
Mitchell, Stephen 350, 383
Moore, Rebecca 417
Morris, Robin A. 126, 162, 354
Morris, Tim 417
Morse, Jesse 33
Moxley, Jennifer 77
Mueller, Ursula 45, 48
Mullen, Harryette 334
Murphy, Michelle 263
Murphy, Sheila 134, 149, 158
Musgrave, Susan 155
Myers, Michael 305
Nagahata, Akitoshi 287
Neilsen, Aldon 253
Nicholls, Peter 22
Niedecker, Lorine 271
Nixon, Richard 224, 230, 243, 258, 259, 260
Norman, Peter 146
Norton, John 142
Olds, Sharon 386
Oliver, Douglas 22
Olsen, Lance 164, 421, 423
Olson, Charles 241, 246, 255, 264, 422, 425
Ovid 356
Pacific, Asian 14, 61, 75, 80, 99, 100, 159, 205, 275, 278, 289, 309, 370
Padgett, Ron 151
Padin, Clemente 86, 263, 271, 273, 329, 337
Palmer, Michael 28, 58, 114
Parkway, Neal 386
Pastan, Linda 128
Peabody, Richard 17
Penberthy, Jenny 271
Perelman, Bob 22, 331
Perloff, Marjorie 97, 400
Perreault, John 305
Perry, David 375
Peters, Mark 42, 114
Peyrafitte, Nicole 60
Piombino, Nick 288, 308, 317
Prevallet, Kristin 46, 62, 91, 105, 110
Pritchett, Patrick 46, 111, 129, 130, 170, 268, 434
Purcell, Jack 155
Rakosi, Carl 157
Ranaldo, Lee 417
Ratcliffe, Stephen 4
Raworth, Tom 93, 263
Reagan, Nancy 124, 143, 216, 223
Reid, Vernon 417
Reuters, Boston 171, 172
Rexroth, Kenneth 383
Ribot, Marc 417
Rich, Adrienne 192
Richter, Karl 214
Ridge, Tom 345
Riding, Laura 416
Riley, Peter 22
Rosenberg, Jim 263
Rothschild, Douglas 345
Rowe, William 44
Sandburg, Carl 192
Santos, Craig 263
Scalapino, Leslie 4, 237, 243
Schultz, Susan M. 252
Schuyler, James 416
Selby, Spencer 288, 308, 317
Shakespeare, William 7, 10, 47, 48, 177, 205, 264, 274
Shapiro, David 124
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 383
Sherry, James 97
Shurin, Aaron 59
Silliman, Ron 2, 79, 97, 318, 355, 383, 434
Simic, Charles 128
Sloan, Margaret 312, 313
Smith, Harry 370
Smith, Rod 110, 416
Smith, Susan 70

Smith, Tracy K. 324, 370
Snyder, Gary 188
Sparrow, John 131, 140
Spears, Patricia 417
Spicer, Jack 237, 386
Stanley, Jared 47
Statman, Mark 33
Stein, Gertrude 107, 111, 112, 371, 374, 389, 394, 396
Stein, Suzanne 394, 396
Sterling, Bruce 365
Stevens, Wallace 339, 342, 346, 354, 359, 383
Stroffolino, Chris 381
Sutherland, Keston 33
Taggart, John 29, 30
Terry, Philip 22
Texas, Irving 271, 280
Thomas, Dylan 15, 31, 265, 346
Torra, Joe 4, 288, 308, 317
Trask, Kay 279
Trujillo, Dorothy 289
Tuma, Keith 253
Valery, Paul 60, 346
Vendler, Helen 422, 425
Violi, Paul 417
Virgil 375
Vitiello, Chris 4
Vitiello, Stephen 4
Waldman, Anne 33, 148
Waldrop, Keith 3
Waldrop, Rosemary 3, 5, 9
Walker, Alice 14
Wallace, Sara 116
Warsh, Lewis 33
Washington, Harold 17, 23, 91, 105, 121, 125, 126, 154, 242, 370, 381, 383
Watson, Sasha 359
Watten, Barrett 293
Weber, Charles 92, 164
Weinberger, Eliot 97, 127, 137, 287
Welish, Marjorie 22
Welsh, Lawrence 383
Williams, Tony 342, 346, 354, 383
Williams, William Carlos 79, 383
Wilson, Rob 279
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 143
Wordsworth, William 198, 202, 208, 212, 251, 256, 274
Yau, John 243, 417
Young, Karl 265, 273
Zedd, Nick 417

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 59, 237, 279, 345, 383
Aesthetics 83, 86, 253, 318, 319, 321, 329, 343
African American poetry 253, 298
Anthologies 13, 14, 18, 97, 128, 148, 158, 211, 217, 253, 298, 316, 325, 370
Appropriation 89, 113, 119, 294, 424
Archives and libraries 14, 155, 185, 187, 347, 374
Autobiography 8, 383
Avant-garde 86, 323, 325, 328, 333, 395
Beauty 54, 61, 75, 80, 97, 202, 208, 212, 266, 383, 400
Biography 27, 194, 374
Black Mountain 383, 386
Book announcements 4, 10, 32, 59, 97, 123, 129, 133, 161, 177, 331, 359
Bookstores 4, 38, 205, 253
Calls for submissions 1, 13, 23, 38, 52, 53, 69, 72, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 435
Capitalism 26, 254, 315, 321
Censorship 98, 103, 106, 111, 112, 170, 212
Cities 86, 196, 220, 279, 383
Class 190, 196, 220
Close reading 75, 80, 90
Collage and montage 324
Conferences and festivals 14, 22, 93, 278, 309, 327, 334, 400
Copyright and permissions 1, 324
Creative writing pedagogy 23, 237, 315, 321, 423
Deconstruction 68, 98, 100, 103, 106, 108, 112, 116, 285
Difficulty 86
Dreams 95, 96, 135, 202, 208, 212, 282, 367, 379, 386, 431, 432, 434
Ecology and ecopoetics 250, 257
Editing 115, 139, 141, 144, 152, 156, 167, 183, 201, 238, 239, 253, 263, 349, 425
Electronic poetry and hypertext 12, 20, 38, 62, 66, 82, 91, 191, 199, 215, 252, 263, 324, 421, 423
Empire and imperialism 75, 80, 83, 87, 90, 98, 103, 106, 233, 240, 242, 265, 315, 321
Epic 248, 324
Epistemology 177, 412
Ethics 237
Experimental poetry 86, 253, 337, 352, 353, 355
Fascism 190, 220, 221, 228, 233, 240, 242, 259
Feminism 202, 208, 210, 212, 334, 352, 353, 355, 357, 383, 386
Film 14, 48, 86, 171, 172, 330, 370, 375, 389, 390, 394
Fluxus 323
Formalism 177, 241, 244, 246, 253, 254, 255, 264, 265, 316, 325, 343, 401
Free verse 265, 270, 401
Futurism 297, 323

Gender 115, 162, 185, 187, 193, 256
Ghazal 209, 211, 235, 239
Grants and funding 14, 59, 94, 146, 367, 383
Haiku 54, 61, 75, 80, 89, 95, 96, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103, 106, 108, 113, 116, 118, 119, 147, 159, 265, 284
Hermeneutics 97
Humour and satire 49, 86, 114, 147, 159, 171, 172, 323, 325, 328, 345, 379
Ideology 26, 75, 80, 99, 100, 112, 323
Indigenous and Native poetics 253, 345
Interviews 35, 36, 155, 370
Israel and Palestine 16, 26, 65, 68, 97, 171, 172, 177, 182, 187, 188, 205, 211, 243, 248, 281, 294, 350, 377, 394, 395, 407, 410, 411
Language poetry 100, 265, 289, 290, 355, 400
Letters and correspondence 287, 383, 400, 425
List moderation 1, 423
Little magazines 14, 16, 17, 35, 36, 38, 40, 69, 72, 86, 92, 109, 115, 125, 130, 137, 139, 141, 144, 151, 164, 167, 169, 183, 185, 187, 208, 212, 265, 282, 288, 308, 317, 325, 345, 395
Lyric poetry 86, 248, 265, 281, 400, 401
Marxism 363
Memory 25, 27, 86, 173, 198, 202, 208, 211, 212, 214, 229, 230, 251, 256, 272, 400, 427
Modernism 14, 315, 321, 383
Mourning and loss 20, 27, 66, 82, 95, 96, 196, 266
Multiculturalism 345
Music and poetry 27, 60, 172, 183, 222, 241, 246, 255, 264, 266, 330, 333, 346, 348, 367, 370, 379, 391, 393, 395, 401, 404, 434
Nationalism 315, 321
Nature 86, 97, 99, 100, 162, 193, 198, 202, 208, 212, 383, 421, 423
New Formalism 241, 244, 246, 253, 254, 255, 264
New York School 49
Obituary and memorial 169, 380, 382, 383
Objectivism 370
Ontology 49, 412
Oulipo 253
Performance and the poetry reading 14, 23, 289, 334, 345, 348
Philosophy 27, 143, 146, 315, 321, 372, 373, 377, 378, 383, 412
Poetics 7, 10, 15, 23, 31, 32, 34, 43, 52, 79, 97, 99, 100, 107, 111, 112, 129, 130, 142, 150, 153, 158, 182, 187, 196, 202, 204, 205, 208, 210, 212, 215, 229, 243, 247, 250, 263, 268, 288, 300, 304, 308, 317, 324, 351, 357, 366, 378, 379, 383, 398, 404, 406, 411, 413, 414, 421
Politics and poetry 318, 400
Print vs. digital 16, 86, 140, 146, 177, 266, 364, 365, 368, 412
Prizes and awards 59, 383, 418
Procedural and constraint writing 151, 241, 246, 255, 264
Prose poem 270, 277, 351, 356
Prosody and meter 241, 246, 254, 255, 264, 265, 274, 351, 401
Psychoanalysis 423
Queer poetics 59, 155
Race and poetry 97, 115, 141, 144, 162, 167, 183, 190, 193, 196, 210, 220, 330, 345
Reading announcements 33, 58, 59, 330, 386
Religion and the sacred 62, 89, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 105, 147, 159, 205, 236, 319, 367, 383, 395
Representation 86, 202, 208, 212
Reviewing and criticism 19, 46, 77, 86, 93, 97, 105, 142, 146, 155, 156, 166, 185, 187, 201, 230, 238, 265, 289, 290, 305, 327, 335, 340, 345, 383, 416, 421, 423, 435
Romanticism 145, 274, 383
Science 86, 222, 224, 229, 230, 236, 241, 243, 246, 255, 260, 264, 265, 279, 347, 361, 365
Semiotics 99, 100, 244, 254, 285
Sestina 160, 173, 253
Small press publishing 4, 11, 21, 25, 59, 91, 105, 134, 149, 158, 185, 187, 330, 345, 381
Software and code 38, 67, 151, 224, 230, 243, 275, 278, 309
Sonnet 241, 244, 246, 254, 255, 262, 264, 265, 270, 272, 274, 277, 281
Sound poetry 86, 199, 215
Subjectivity 40, 66, 162, 166, 168, 192, 253, 265, 266, 412
Sublime 343
Surrealism 171, 172
Terrorism 315, 321, 324
The academy 8, 14, 21, 22, 23, 25, 36, 38, 59, 80, 86, 90, 97, 128, 146, 147, 148, 155, 158, 159, 167, 171, 172, 173, 197, 205, 209, 214, 220, 221, 222, 224, 229, 230, 239, 250, 252, 253, 270, 287, 290, 291, 300, 304, 316, 319, 320, 347, 353, 363, 370, 374, 383, 391, 393, 398, 404, 413, 421, 423
The body 66, 193, 329
The canon 421, 423, 435
The Gulf War 153, 190, 196, 197, 203, 214, 222, 250
The Holocaust 171, 172, 386
The internet 1, 13, 38, 78, 137, 242, 289, 290, 330, 332, 341, 344, 364, 392, 395, 421, 423
The Iraq war 250

The line 253, 277
The listserv 1, 17, 46, 75, 80, 113, 116, 119, 123, 127, 129, 133, 137, 142, 152, 156, 158, 163, 165, 166, 168, 170, 176, 177, 178, 180, 185, 187, 189, 191, 199, 206, 215, 260, 267, 284, 289, 291, 292, 296, 298, 299, 300, 302, 305, 313, 314, 322, 327, 335, 383, 416, 426, 431, 432, 434
Theatre 49, 146, 177, 330, 348, 351, 356
Torture and Abu Ghraib 45, 48
Translation 39, 44, 58, 87, 95, 96, 97, 99, 100, 101, 106, 111, 146, 147, 159, 265, 266, 344, 356, 379, 383
Vietnam 250, 383, 386
Visual and concrete poetry 79, 86, 271, 280, 285, 332, 341, 344, 360, 392, 395
Visual art 58, 97, 146, 254, 263, 329, 333, 337, 345, 347, 367, 370, 394, 395, 410, 414, 416, 419, 422, 425
Women's writing 92, 109, 115, 139, 141, 144, 162, 164, 167, 176, 183, 185, 187, 193, 194, 198, 201, 202, 234, 251, 256, 257

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 437 in all.

1 DEC 1997

1. Robert J Tiess — Permission to Post
2. rsillima — Missing message
3. David W. Clippinger — Waldrop
4. Douglas — Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
5. henry — Re: Waldrop
6. henry gould — apology
7. Harold Rhenisch — poetics under the jackboot
8. Douglas Barbour — Re: James Laughlin
9. David W. Clippinger — Re: Waldrop
10. W. Freind — Re: poetics under the jackboot
11. Charles Bernstein — SPD web site
12. Steve Carll — Fwd: Kathy Acker
13. Robert J Tiess — An Invitation to Submit

2 DEC 1997

14. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — announcement
15. Fraser Thomas — The future of poetics!
16. David R. Israel — cosmicrobia
17. Catherine Daly — Acker Benefit
18. Robert J Tiess — Poetfest (erratum)
19. Jacques Debrot — Re: Lit Mags
20. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Kathy Acker
21. Judy Roitman — 501(c)3
22. tony lopez — postmodern poetry conference 98
23. Jennifer Drake — CFP: Comparative American Poetries (1/10; ASA 11/98)
24. Christopher Alexander — Re: phenomena
25. Mark Weiss — Re: 501(c)3
26. KENT JOHNSON — so much for Dasein
27. Kenneth Goldsmith — This is a riot!

3 DEC 1997

28. david bromige — thanks kenneth goldsmith!
29. Stephen Cope — query
30. David W. Clippinger — Re: Taggart
31. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: The future of poetics!
32. Harold Rhenisch — Re: poetics under the jackboot
33. Jordan Davis — There's A Riot Going On, We're Lions in Slumber (was: It Just Dasein , Matte...
34. Eric Blarnes — Re: the future of poetics!
35. Mary Burger — Announcing idiom #3 online magazine
36. Judy Roitman — Re: Announcing idiom #3 online magazine

4 DEC 1997

37. Garrett Kalleberg — Kathy Acker Requiem
38. MillettiC — call for submissions
39. KENT JOHNSON — somewhat esoteric query
40. Maria Damon — self-promo unabashed
41. Maria Damon — Re: Kathy Acker Requiem
42. Kenneth Goldsmith — The Right Blonde
43. nuyopoman — Subject: Re: poetics under the jackboot
44. Lawrence Upton. — Re: somewhat esoteric query
45. Harold Rhenisch — Re: anti-shakespeare

46. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Marks et al in ABR
47. Henry Gould — anti-shakespeare
48. Mark Weiss — Re: anti-shakespeare
49. Jordan Davis — textual perversity in new york
50. Lawrence Upton. — oops - not for the first time
51. Mark Weiss — (no subject)

5 DEC 1997

52. Miekal And — Re: call for submissions
53. Miekal And — Re: call for submissions
54. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Iroiro
55. Gwyn McVay — pronunciation
56. William Marsh — Re: Marks et al in ABR
57. Jordan Davis — Re: pronouncement
58. dbkk — Raddle Moon reading in San Francisco
59. dbkk — SPT: Shurin, Ferguson, Allison, Gomez
60. Pierre Joris — Reading
61. Dean A. Brink — Re: Iroiro
62. Steven Marks — Re: Marks et al in ABR
63. Brent Long — Help!
64. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Help!

6 DEC 1997

65. David R. Israel — Re: Iroiro
66. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — EPC Regen
67. david bromige — rceiving mail
68. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Iroiro
69. MillettiC — Re: rceiving mail
70. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
71. Daniel Carter — invalid claim withdrawn: inaccessible detour
72. Harold Rhenisch — Re: rceiving mail
73. joel lewis — Re: pronunciation

7 DEC 1997

74. Louis Cabri — few ago
75. KENT JOHNSON — Iroiro and Orientalism
76. Cadaly — Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
77. Franklin Bruno — a few questions
78. Rachel Loden — Re: a few questions
79. Bob Grumman — Poetics Taxonomy at Comprepoetica
80. Dean A. Brink — Re: Iroiro and Orientalism

8 DEC 1997

81. Christopher W. Alexander — address query hell: Michael Gizzi?
82. Christopher W. Alexander — spit shine and polish (not the ethnicity)
83. Tosh — Iroiro and Orientalism
84. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
85. Rob Hardin — FREE! NEW! Today's Revolutionary One-On-One Pocket Pastor!
86. robert drake — Forward: Edgardo Antonio Vigo
87. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
88. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
89. Gwyn McVay — Line of Okay--Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
90. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
91. Mark Wallace — primitive publications
92. MLWeber — invitation to women writers
93. Robert Archambeau — Fall '96 New Hampshire Conference
94. Jordan Davis — Poet to bring out creativity in retail staff

95. KENT JOHNSON — Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
96. Mark Weiss — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
97. Poetics List Administration — Two New Books from ROOF
98. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
99. Dean A. Brink — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
100. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
101. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

9 DEC 1997

102. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Poet to bring out creativity in retail staff
103. Mark Weiss — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
104. Louis Cabri — Re: Poet to spit shine Line of Okay one-on-one
105. Mark Wallace — Re[2]: primitive publications (fwd)
106. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
107. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Iroiro
108. KENT JOHNSON — Orientalist haibun
109. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: invitation to women writers
110. aerialedge — upcoming DC readings
111. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Iroiro
112. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Iroiro
113. KENT JOHNSON — Orientalist haibun
114. david bromige — The Right Blonde
115. William Marsh — Re: invitation to women writers
116. Mark Weiss — Re: Orientalist haibun
117. Rosemary Ceravolo — Re: CERAVOLO pronunciation
118. Gwyn McVay — Re: Orientalist haibun
119. Mark Weiss — Re: Orientalist haibun
120. Brent Long — Suggestions?
121. J. Tate — Keats
122. tristan saldana — Re: Suggestions?
123. Jena Osman — new Lauterbach book
124. Jordan Davis — Re: Suggestions?
125. Safdie Joseph — Re: Keats
126. Robin Morris — Re: Keats
127. KENT JOHNSON — The Nation
128. Stacie E. Slotnick — Re: Keats and pantoums
129. Pritchett,Pat — Re: new Lauterbach book
130. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Keats
131. David Gitin — Re: Keats
132. CharSSmith — Re: Suggestions?
133. Michael Magee — Re: new Lauterbach book
134. Shemurph — pantoum

10 DEC 1997

135. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — poem beginning with a line from the Mickey Mouse Club
136. Rob Hardin — (no subject)
137. John Tranter — Weinberger's Laughlin tribute also in Jacket # 2
138. Mark foutu — Laughlin tribute in Cambridge
139. Patricia Cockram — Re: invitation to women writers
140. david bromige — keats
141. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: invitation to women writers
142. Miekal And — Re: Posting poems to the list
143. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Suggestions?
144. Maria Damon — Re: invitation to women writers
145. Maria Damon — Re: keats
146. lefthandb — New release from Left Hand Books
147. Annie Finch — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

148. Annie Finch — Re: Suggestions?
149. Brent Long — Re: pantoum
150. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Iroiro
151. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Suggestions?
152. Jacques Debrot — Re: Posting poems to the list
153. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
154. J. Tate — Thanks for Keats references
155. tony lopez — Forwarded: sum temporaree home
156. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Posting poems to the list
157. Michael D Basinski — Re: Rakosi
158. Annie Finch — Re: pantoum
159. Dean A. Brink — Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
160. JforJames — Re: pantoum
161. Stacie Slotnick — Re: pantoum
162. Robin Morris — Re: invitation to women writers
163. Jordan Davis — Re: Posting poems to the list
164. MLWeber — invitation to women writers once again
165. Laura Moriarty — Re: Posting poems to the list
166. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Re: Posting poems to the list
167. Judy Roitman — Re: invitation to women writers
168. Layne Russell — Re: Posting poems to the list
169. John Tranter — Correct URL for the Laughlin obit piece in Jacket
170. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Iroiro
171. David Israel — A Codrescu Xmas
172. William Burmeister Prod — Re: A Codrescu Xmas
173. Judy Roitman — Re: pantoum
174. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
175. Rachel Loden — Hoover pantoum, Tranter _Jacket_
176. Cadaly — Re: invitation to women writers
177. David Israel — Re: pantoum
178. Ron Androla — Re: Posting poems to the list
179. groberts — Warning: contains distasteful poem.
180. CharSSmith — Re: Posting poems to the list
181. Marcella — address
182. David R. Israel — Re: Iroiro

11 DEC 1997

183. Patricia Cockram — Re: invitation to women writers
184. Patricia Cockram — Re: pantoum
185. Mark Weiss — Re: invitation to women writers
186. Louis Cabri — yesterday's digest
187. David R. Israel — Re: invitation to women writers
188. David R. Israel — Re: Iroiro
189. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Iroiro
190. Jordan Davis — Re: Machismo Bush
191. Christopher W. Alexander — My Little Pony, er Query
192. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Warning: contains distasteful poem.
193. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: invitation to women writers
194. Bob Grumman — Re: invitation to women writers
195. groberts — canned laughter
196. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
197. Judy Roitman — Re: Machismo Bush
198. Mark Weiss — Re: invitation to women writers
199. r.drake — Re: My Little Pony, er Query
200. William Burmeister Prod — fOUnd POEm
201. Harold Rhenisch — Re: invitation to women writers

202. Harold Rhenisch — Re: invitation to women writers
203. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
204. Mark Baker — Re: Machismo Bush
205. David Israel — Lafcadio Hearn
206. Layne Russell — Re: Posting poems to the list
207. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Iroiro
208. Mark Weiss — Re: a modest proposal
209. Annie Finch — Re: pantoum
210. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
211. David Israel — Re: pantoum
212. Mark Weiss — a modest proposal

12 DEC 1997

213. George Bowering — Re: Machismo Bush
214. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Machismo Bush
215. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Dec 1997 to 11 Dec 1997
216. Jeff Hansen — clinton
217. robert drake — CybpherAnthology update & invitation
218. Jordan Davis — Re: Machismo Bush
219. Susan Wheeler — Digest Flub
220. Douglas Barbour — Re: anti-union? You bet!
221. Douglas Barbour — Re: Machismo Bush
222. Judy Roitman — Re: Machismo Bush
223. Mark Prejsnar — Re: clinton
224. Judy Roitman — Diction
225. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
226. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
227. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Machismo Bush
228. Harold Rhenisch — Re: anti-union? You bet!
229. Steven Marks — rationally visual math
230. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Diction
231. Mark Weiss — Re: Machismo Bush
232. Bob Grumman — Ralph Klein and Comprepoetica

13 DEC 1997

233. Mark Baker — Re: Machismo Bush
234. Patricia Cockram — Re: invitation to women writers
235. Patricia Cockram — Re: pantoum
236. Cadaly — Re: rationally visual math
237. Tom Orange — Machismo Harris
238. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: Diction
239. Annie Finch — Re: pantoum
240. Harold Rhenisch — Re: Machismo Bush
241. KENT JOHNSON — Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
242. Mark Weiss — Re: Machismo Bush
243. David R. Israel — Re: Diction

14 DEC 1997

244. Kasey Silem Mohammad Hicks — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
245. Louis Cabri — Re: Machismo Bush Re: Machismo Harris
246. Mark Weiss — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
247. Jordan Davis — Scairy
248. David R. Israel — riff du jour
249. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — new arrival
250. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Machismo Bush NOTE: Overly long and venemous diatribe of festerin…
251. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: invitation to women writers

252. Susan Schultz — Re: new arrival
253. Annie Finch — A Dactylic Tetramete-Based Envelope Quatrain, Followed by a Passage of Prose,...
254. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
255. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
256. Mark Weiss — Re: invitation to women writers
257. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: invitation to women writers
258. Harold Rhenisch — Re: anti-union? You bet!
259. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: anti-union? You bet!
260. Jerry E. Fletcher — Re: Diction
261. Maria Damon — Re: new arrival

15 DEC 1997

262. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
263. John Cayley — poesie[sous rature] & informatique
264. Mark Weiss — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
265. Bob Grumman — Sonnets, Dissonnets, Nonnets, Eceterants
266. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Voice
267. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Voice
268. Pritchett,Pat — Re: new arrival
269. Christopher W. Alexander — vacancy, I mean vacation
270. Judy Roitman — Re: Sonnets, Dissonnets, Nonnets, Eceterants
271. KENT JOHNSON — Niedecker/Padin
272. groberts — O, Sonnet!
273. KENT JOHNSON — "?"
274. Mark Weiss — Re: Four Sonnets for Annie Finch
275. david bromige — The Lost Sites of Webworld
276. Bob Grumman — Re: "?"
277. Bob Grumman — Re: Sonnets, Dissonnets, Nonnets, Eceterants
278. William Burmeister Prod — Re: The Lost Sites of Webworld
279. Juliana Spahr — praying, protesting

16 DEC 1997

280. David Dowker — Re: Machismo Bush Re: Machismo Harris
281. David R. Israel — "no one writes vallanelles . . . "
282. Miekal And — not just any word
283. Sylvester Pollet — oops
284. Gwyn McVay — Re: Orientalist haibun
285. Miekal And — viva la zaumnaya
286. Miekal And — Re: Manifestos
287. KENT JOHNSON — Yasusada's Jacket
288. Mark Prejsnar — Misc. Proj. 4 is out
289. Safdie Joseph — Re: lost in the web
290. tony lopez — lost in the web
291. Matthew Roberson — Re: Manifestos
292. Miekal And — Re: Manifestos -Reply
293. jarnot — Tom Carey & Tomaz Salamun at the Poetry Project
294. Patricia Cockram — Re: Diction
295. Patricia Cockram — Re: Diction
296. Jacques Debrot — Re: Manifestos
297. Kristen Gallagher — Re: Manifestos
298. Maria Damon — Re: Manifestos
299. Scott Pound — Re: Manifestos
300. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Manifestos
301. Tom Beard — Re: Manifestos
302. Jack Foley — Re: Manifestos -Reply
303. Gwyn McVay — Re: Manifestos -Reply

304. Jacques Debrot — Re: Manifestos
305. Douglas — Re: Manifestos
306. { brad brace } —  Psychic Cleansing from Arts Administrators and Faculty-Artists ***
307. Bob Grumman — Re: not just any word
308. Marcella Durand — Re: Misc. Proj. 4 is out
309. Joel Felix — Re: The Lost Sites of Webworld
310. Maria Damon — Re: Manifestos -Reply

17 DEC 1997

311. aerialedge — Re: Manifestos
312. dbkk — Kathleen Fraser tribute
313. Herb Levy — Re: Kathleen Fraser tribute
314. Herb Levy — The standard oops
315. Miekal And — Re: Manifestos
316. Annie Finch — manifestoes
317. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Misc. Proj. 4 is out
318. William Marsh — Re: Manifestos
319. Maria Damon — wieners & bernstein
320. Burt Hatlen — Re: Kathleen Fraser tribute
321. Maria Damon — Re: Manifestos
322. Aldon Nielsen — (no subject)
323. Miekal And — gather around me brothers & sisters & ye shall.....
324. lee ann brown — Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Nov 1997 to 1 Dec 1997
325. Hugh Steinberg — Re: manifestoes
326. Henry Gould — Re: manifestoes
327. Charles Bernstein — New works on web
328. Steven Marks — Re: wieners & bernstein

18 DEC 1997

329. Laurie Schneider/Crag Hill — Manifestos
330. dbkk — Ngai and Farrell at SPT
331. david bromige — The Dictionary of Received Ideas
332. Miekal And — kanji
333. Miekal And — experimedia simplexity: a manifesto festering
334. Kathleen Crown — MLA Poetry Reading
335. Miekal And — as the world turns
336. Jacques Debrot — Re: Manifestos ridiculous?
337. KENT JOHNSON — Manifestos/Padin
338. Jordan Davis — Reading / manifestore
339. Safdie Joseph — Re: Vacation
340. Jacques Debrot — Re: Boston Review URL
341. r.drake — Re: kanji
342. Sylvester Pollet — Re: Vacation
343. Laura Moriarty — MLA talk, kiss-off and non
344. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: kanji
345. Juliana Spahr — reading report from Honolulu, two
346. Pierre Joris — Re: Vacation
347. Carolyn Guertin — Manifesto for the Unstable Media

19 DEC 1997

348. joel lewis — rhythmic grumbling department
349. John Cayley — kanji
350. David Israel — Re: Vacation
351. Henry Gould — recommended drudgery
352. Bob Grotjohn — Looking for an essay
353. David Kellogg — Re: Looking for an essay
354. Robin Morris — Re: Vacation

355. Herb Levy — Re: Looking for an essay
356. William Burmeister Prod — Re: recommended drudgery
357. RaeA100900 — Re: Looking for an essay
358. RaeA100900 — Re: Looking for an essay
359. Michael Coffey — Re: Vacation -Reply
360. Bob Grumman — Re: recommended drudgery

20 DEC 1997

361. Miekal And — electronic paper
362. rsillima — Rae's essay
363. David Kellogg — Rae and cladistics; signing off till early January

21 DEC 1997

364. Miekal And — Re: Electronic Paper
365. rsillima — Electronic Paper
366. Blair Seagram — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Dec 1997 to 19 Dec 1997
367. Maz881 — da happy kine
368. robert drake — Re: Electronic Paper
369. Henry Gould — Re: da happy kine

22 DEC 1997

370. nico vassilakis — Think of the Self Speaking (fwd)
371. nico vassilakis — Gertrude Stein (Films?
372. Mark Baker — Yeah, yeah, said who?
373. Jordan Davis — Re: Yeah, yeah, said who?
374. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Gertrude Stein (Films?
375. Mfranco34 — Re: STEIN FILMS
376. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Julu-Traditional-Poem by Jennifer

23 DEC 1997

377. David R. Israel — Re: Yeah, yeah, said who?
378. Franklin Bruno — Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Dec 1997 to 22 Dec 1997
379. lee ann brown — Re: POETICS Digest - 20 Dec 1997 to 21 Dec 1997
380. robert drake — another passing...
381. aerialedge — New Anselm Berrigan chapbook
382. Suzanne Burns — Re: another passing...
383. Poetics List — Denise Levertov (1923-1997)
384. pritchpa — Re: Denise Levertov
385. Henry Gould — Denise Levertov
386. david bromige — Denise Levertov, deceased
387. George Bowering — Re: another passing...

24 DEC 1997

388. George J Farrah — Re: Denise Levertov
389. Jill A Mccartney — Re: Gertrude Stein Films
390. Jill A Mccartney — Re: gertrude stein films
391. Douglas Barbour — Re: Denise Levertov
392. Lawrence Upton. — Re: kanji
393. Douglas Barbour — Re: Denise Levertov

25 DEC 1997

394. David R. Israel — Re: Gertrude Stein Films
395. David R. Israel — Re: kanji
396. Brian Carpenter — Re: Gertrude Stein Films
397. Susan Wheeler — Holiday L, R or G

26 DEC 1997

398. Miekal And — Re: Manifestos

399. Miekal And — who needs poetry when you have error messages
400. Hank Lazer — Re: Denise Levertov, deceased
401. henry gould — Re: Denise Levertov, deceased
402. Jacques Debrot — Re: Joris website
403. david bromige — tony lopez messages bouncing
404. Douglas Barbour — Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Dec 1997 to 25 Dec 1997
405. david bromige — snailmail address of suny buffalo eng dept
406. George Bowering — Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Dec 1997 to 25 Dec 1997
407. armand schwerner — Gertrude Stein' Making of Americans reading

27 DEC 1997

408. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Color Words Such as White
409. Alan Myouka Sondheim — error (fwd)
410. David R. Israel — PS122 website & zine
411. David R. Israel — The Lopez connundrum

28 DEC 1997

412. Alan Myouka Sondheim — The Book
413. Lawrence Upton. — Re: The Lopez connundrum
414. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 26 Dec 1997 to 27 Dec 1997
415. david bromige — snailmaildress : got it!
416. Jordan Davis — What is eternal vigilance, Alex?
417. Marcella Durand — New Year's Marathon

29 DEC 1997

418. Jordan Davis — Re: What is eternal vigilance, Alex?
419. Jordan Davis — Competition Winner
420. Alan Myouka Sondheim — (from someone named Sarah Kanji)
421. Poetics List — Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
422. Jack Spandrift — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
423. Mark Weiss — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
424. Michael Coffey — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative -Reply
425. henry — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
426. Henry Gould — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
427. Maria Damon — another

30 DEC 1997

428. Mark foutu — Future of Narrative BACK to the future

31 DEC 1997

429. Miekal And — testing..1,2,3, (or tasting integers)
430. sylvester pollet — Dec 31
431. Mark Prejsnar — testing..1,2,3,
432. sylvester pollet — Re: testing..1,2,3,
433. Henry Gould — Re: testing..1,2,3,
434. pritchpa — Re: testing..1,2,3,
435. Pete Landers — Re: Call for Papers: Future of Narrative
436. Lawrence Upton. — Re: testing..1,2,3,
437. Scott Pound — Re: testing..1,2,3,

1. Robert J Tiess
Permission to Post
Mon 1 Dec 1997

I would like to ask the list owner/moderator if it is permissible to post a "call for submissions" for my free poetry publication on the web. Thank you. - RJT

↑ Index

2. rsillima
Missing message
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Hmm, the core of my message appears to have been dropped. So, try again:

Does anybody have an address, physical or virtual, for Natacha Lallemand, a student at the Sorbonne? If so, please back-channel me or call directly.

Thanks!

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

3. David W. Clippinger
Waldrop
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Could someone please back channel me Keith Waldrop's address. I would greatly appreciate it.

David Clippinger

↑ Index

4. Douglas
Re: Announcing Proliferation #4 issue & Contributors' Reading
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Mary, could you please send me a copy so that I can consider the poems for THE GERTRUDE STEIN AWARDS IN INNOVATIVE POETRY.

Thanks.
Douglas Messerli
6026 Wilshire Boulevard

Sun & Moon Press
Los Angeles, CA 90036

Mary Burger wrote:
>
> Proliferation #4 is now available, with work by Susan Gevirtz, Stephen > Ratcliffe, Pamela Lu, Renee Gladman, Dan Bouchard, Beth Anderson, Joseph > Torra, Tan Lin, Bill Lavender, Laura Moriarty, Leslie Scalapino, and more.
>
> BAY AREA CONTRIBUTORS' READING:
> Friday, Nov. 14, 7:30 p.m.
> Modern Times Bookstore
> Valencia St. & 20th St.
> San Francisco
>
> ISSUE available from:
> * Modern Times Bookstore
>
> * The Editors: (send check for $9.50 including postage, payable to M.
> Burger or C. Vitiello)
> Mary Burger, 1253 Hampshire St., San Francisco CA 94110
> or
> Chris Vitiello, 2707 Farthing St., Durham NC 27704
>
> *Small Press Distribution - coming soon!
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

5. henry
Re: Waldrop
Mon 1 Dec 1997

The Waldrops & Burning Deck Press are at 71 Elmgrove Ave, Providence, RI 02906

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

6. henry gould
apology
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Very sorry List, should have back-channeled that address. dang reply key! & sorry, addressee! - HG

↑ Index

7. Harold Rhenisch
poetics under the jackboot
Mon 1 Dec 1997

A bizarre little piece of propaganda: as an 11 year old boy in Germany during WWII, my father received school instruction in the evils of Shakespeare. Seemingly, Shakespeare was proof of the visciousness of the English, and of their lack of imagination and culture--a true barbarian who was unable to end his plays in any manner other than the slaughter of everyone on stage. This was portrayed as the ultimate in stupidity.

An attempt at political resistance, or just a horrific irony?

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

8. Douglas Barbour
Re: James Laughlin
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Thanks to Douglas Messerli for his thought-full memoir/eulogy of James Laughlin. Whatever 'we' might think of Pound, or even of Laughlin's poetry, I think Douglas caught both the import of his life-work with ND, & what those little b&w paperbacks could mean to so many young readers who had previously known only the pocketbooks at the corner drugstore...Of course, the hardback NDs were nice to hold too, if one could afford the awful cost of $3 or $4 (way back when)...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]

~~~
~~~

> Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

11. Charles Bernstein
SPD web site
Mon 1 Dec 1997

still developing, but an important web site for independent publishing even at this stage --

Small Press Distribution --

http://www.spdbooks.org/

↑ Index

12. Steve Carll
Fwd: Kathy Acker
Mon 1 Dec 1997

Just had this forwarded to me from Jack Foley.

> From sjcarll Mon Dec 1 10:40:36 1997
>
> Jack,
>
> Checks for the Kathy Acker Fund should be made out to GIORNO POETRY SYSTEMS.
> You can send checks to ATTICUS BOOKS--1508 U Street, NW--Washington, DC 20009.
>
> Kathy Acker died November 30 at 1:30 am PST.
>
> Sad news.
>
> Lucinda

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

13. Robert J Tiess

An Invitation to Submit

Mon 1 Dec 1997

~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~

P O E T F E S T - An Invitation to Submit

~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~ ~

Dear Poets,

Poetfest is currently seeking submissions for the upcoming January 98 Anthology, which will be published exclusively on the World Wide Web and made freely enjoyable to readers and fellow poets of all ages, from all over the world.

Poetfest is an ongoing series of thematically-arranged poetry anthologies. The theme for the next collection is "Journies." The deadline is December 30, 1997, but I would appreciate hearing from you earlier, if possible.

All poets are welcome and encouraged to submit their best material (up to 10 poems, any style, up to 100 lines, plain text) for consideration at the Poetfest site:

http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Acropolis/7101/poetfest.htm

I will consider more and/or longer poems if you wish. You may send me poems through the site itself or to me directly via e-mail. Please read the publication, and all rights always remain with the author.

You may also view the first anthology (Fall 97), which is presently available on-line until January 1998. Your comments and suggestions are most welcome.

I look forward to hearing from you, and I thank you all for your time and consideration. Take care.

Truly yours,
Robert
[redacted]

↑ Index

14. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
announcement
Tue 2 Dec 1997

Date: Tue, 2 Dec 1997 13:02:52 -0800 (PST)
To: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
From: [redacted] (Walter K. Lew) Subject: Please forward

"Brine: A Poetry Reading by Walter K. Lew"
Friday, December 5, 1997
2:00-3:30 p.m.
Social Sciences Building, Rm SOS B40,
University of Southern California
Parking is available at USC Gate #3 at Figueroa and 35th St.

The Souther California Korean and Korean American Studies Group is funded by a grant from the US Dept. of Education. For further information, please contact Chris Evans at [redacted]

*****

Walter K. Lew's books include _Excerpts from Dikte, for DICTEE (1982)_ and the forthcoming collection of poems, _Brine_. He edited _Premonitions: The Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry_ and the inaugural volume of _Muae: a journal of Transcultural Production_.

Lew is presently preparing the selected works with commentary of both the Korean modernist Yi Sang and Korean American novelist Younghill Kang, as well as the collected poems of the late N. Y. Chinatown writer Frances Chung. Lew's "movietelling" (benshi or pyonsa) performances have been staged at the 1990 Los Angeles Festival, Walker Art Center, Pacific Film Archive, and Asian CineVision's Asian and Asian American International Film Festival (1982). Lew has worked as producer for many internationally broadcast news stories and documentaries on Korean topics for CBS News, NHK Japan, and British ITV. He has taught at Brown and Cornell, among other universities, and is presently in the Cultural and Comparative Studies doctoral program at UCLA.

↑ Index

15. Fraser Thomas
The future of poetics!
Tue 2 Dec 1997

Attention potential partners:

At last a syntax sophisticated and inclusive enough to contain your entire cultural needs. You may never need to speak spontaneously again.

Syntax is changing faster and faster. Experts predict that by 2003, linguistic systems will need major updates every few days. We may not be at that level yet, but here at Global Telelanguage Resources, we don't think you can be too prepared. We work with structures dynamic and flexible enough to configure even the most disjunctive approaches to communication and art.

Following directly from the many daring innovations in poetry performed in the 1970s and 1980s, GTR features an expanded program of verbal initiatives to bring us the next millennium and beyond. Where previous schools of poetry promised you a total syntax, GTR will give you a truly "Global" one.

Check out the future of poetics at

http://users.uniserve.com/~gtr

Sincerely yours,

Fraser Thomas
Partner in Language

Global Telelanguage Resources
http://users.uniserve.com/~gtr

↑ Index

16. David R. Israel
cosmicrobia
Tue 2 Dec 1997

---

a word to watch

Evidently, astrophysicists Hoyle and Narlikar authored a book called Life on Mars -- regarding which, this quote is credited to the journal Astronomy Now:

<< If you are interested in a clear description of the theories of cosmicrobia (or more crudely, "bugs from space") then this is the book for you. . . >>

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

```
| [redacted]      (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

17. Catherine Daly

Acker Benefit

Tue 2 Dec 1997

From my e-mail:

Calling all Writers.

It's not often we here at Pif Magazine interrupt our in-between issue sabbatical, but a worthy cause has come to our attention and we'd like to spread the word.

Any of you who've spent any time in the Washington, D.C., area are already well-aware of Atticus Books, home to (among others) Gargoyle Magazine, Lucinda Ebersole, Richard Peabody. The place is a proving ground for many of the District's aspiring poets and writers. And one of the joint's staunchest supporters, Kathy Acker, needs our help. Her cancer is spreading and the prognosis isn't good.

Kathy's friends are holding a benefit (to raise money to off-set her costly medical treatments) and they ask any and all interested writers to attend. Richard Peabody says: "We're asking people to give what they can afford and we'll pass the hat. Kathy's in Mexico ... She had a double mastectomy last year. Was in remission. Now has cancer of liver, kidneys, spleen, you name it. Her bills are astronomical and we're just going to try and help a little. "

The event will be held on Saturday, December 13th, at 7 pm. The list of attending writers is large, so don't miss out. For those who don't already know, the address for Atticus Books is: 1508 U Street, NW Washington D.C. 20009 (On the Green Line. Just 2 blocks from the U Street/Cardozo METRO Station).

For more information about the benefit you can email [redacted], or phone [redacted].

Thanks,

Richard Luck
Editor, Pif Magazine
http://www.dimax.com/pif/

↑ Index

18. Robert J Tiess
Poetfest (erratum)
Tue 2 Dec 1997

> Poetfest is an ongoing series of thematically-arranged poetry anthologies. The theme for the next collection is "Journies."

The last word should be Journeys. ("Journies" was actually was listed in the user dictionary of my spell-checker.)

rjt

↑ Index

19. Jacques Debrot
Re: Lit Mags
Tue 2 Dec 1997

If anyone knows the subscription and/or single issue cost of any of the following mags, would you please post or backchannel the info to me:

JUXTA
MEMBRANE
NO ROSES REVIEW
PRIMARY WRITING
SYN/AES/THETIC
SYNTACTICS
TRANSMOG
WASHINGTON REVIEW

↑ Index

20. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Kathy Acker
Tue 2 Dec 1997

See the EPC home page for a link to a terrific tribute to Kathy Acker.

↑ Index

21. Judy Roitman
501(c)3
Tue 2 Dec 1997

If you have any advice about getting 501(c)3 status for a small press, Lee Chapman would appreciate hearing it. Her fax is [redacted], her e-mail [redacted]. In particular, she'd appreciate copies of successful 501(c)3 forms and by-laws.

Thanks.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

22. tony lopez
postmodern poetry conference 98
Tue 2 Dec 1997

POSTMODERN POETRY; AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

30-31 March 1998 at Exmouth Campus, University of Plymouth, UK.

A programme of academic papers on innovative contemporary poetry and a reading by six leading poets from USA, Australia and UK. Speakers from USA, France, Australia, Germany, Northern Ireland, UK will include poets and scholars Caroline Bergvall, Andrew Crozier, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Lyn Hejinian, Richard Kerridge, John Kinsella, Peter Middleton, Drew Milne, Peter Nicholls, Douglas Oliver, Bob Perelman, Peter Riley, Marjorie Welish and others: 25 papers in all. Readers on Monday evening will be Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Lyn Hejinian, John Kinsella, Bob Perelman, Douglas Oliver & Marjorie Welish.Registration including a wine reception, refreshments & lunch on each day, conference materials, dinner at a nearby hotel on Monday 30th: #50 sterling waged/ #40 sterling unwaged. Without dinner #35 sterling waged/#25 sterling unwaged. Details (registration forms, list of accommodation at various grades/ prices) from Karen Somerfield, Faculty of Arts & Education, University of Plymouth, Douglas Avenue, Exmouth EX8 2AT, UK, phone Karen Somerfield on 01395 255342, [redacted]. The conference organisers Tony Lopez & Philip Terry gratefully acknowledge the support of the University, the Ronald Duncan Literary Foundation and South West Arts. Sponsors especially welcome.

NB : If you are a participant, there is a letter already on its way to you with a registration form and further details.

TL

_____

Dr Tony Lopez
Reader in Poetry
University of Plymouth
Faculty of Arts & Education
Douglas Avenue
Exmouth
EX8 2AT
UK

tel: 1395 255418
fax: 1395 264196

_____

↑ Index

23. Jennifer Drake

CFP: Comparative American Poetries (1/10; ASA 11/98)

Tue 2 Dec 1997

Call for Papers: Comparative American Poetries

American Studies Association, Seattle, Washington, November 19-22, 1998

I am seeking proposals for presentations/performances that place U.S. poetic traditions in international and/or diasporic contexts, that take a comparative approach to U.S. poetries, or that articulate (dis)connections between poetries of the Americas. Of particular interest are proposals on performance poetries, community-based poetries, poetry and the public sphere, poetry and/as art activism, poetry and/as historical 'narrative,' poetry and/as pedagogy, bi- or multilingual poetries, 'border' poetries, poets in dialogue, cross-cultural poetics. Alternative approaches to writing, presenting, and eliciting audience participation are strongly encouraged.

Please send abstracts, proposals, or papers by January 10 to Jennifer Drake, Department of English, Indiana State University, Terre Haute, IN 47809, or by email: [redacted]

↑ Index

24. Christopher Alexander
Re: phenomena
Tue 2 Dec 1997

Kent wrote:
> is it possible that "buying-nothingness" is actually a kind of commodity > (like a scentless perfume suddenly all the rage) that enters into a > deeper set of real and existing relations that are obscured from me?

oh, Kent, why go to all this worry & fuss - you could've just asked me to re-post the price list.

Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

25. Mark Weiss
Re: 501(c)3
Tue 2 Dec 1997

Junction Press was helped with its successful application bt Volunteeer Lawyers for the Arts, in New York.

At 09:19 AM 12/2/97 -0600, you wrote:
>If you have any advice about getting 501(c)3 status for a small press, Lee >Chapman would appreciate hearing it. Her fax is [redacted], her e-mail >[redacted]. In particular, she'd appreciate copies of successful >501(c)3 forms and by-laws.
>
>Thanks.
>
>
>
>----------
>Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
>Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
>Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
>[redacted] |
>fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,

1927-1996
>----------
>Note new area code
>----------
>http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/
>----------
>
>

↑ Index

26. KENT JOHNSON
so much for Dasein
Tue 2 Dec 1997

On 12/2 Chris Alexander wrote:
>Oh, Kent, why go to all this worry and fuss--you could've jsut asked >me to report the price list.

Chris, I really didn't buy anything on Buy Nothing Day, _except_ a box of smuggled Monte Cristo's fresh from Havana. That doesn't count, right?

But here's what I replied (I know no one cares, but so what?) to David Israel a couple days back, which my reply key sent somewhere into the ether. David said something linke "no, Kent, no, things also have substantiation," to which I replied: "Right. What I meant in that part of my little ramble is that the phenomenal expression of the commodity is something utterly other than its noumenal being. Marx's somewhat wild point is that the objective but hidden social relations of capitalism _bring into appearance_ the status of the commodity as a "discrete substance," as if it were a thing in and of itself. Thus, what we don't see is more real than what we do, and so on. This magic act of the commodity, says Marx, is the core conceptual phantasm fueling capital's engine, and a big, big part of its generalized mystification of phenomena (i.e. ho hum, ideology). It makes us want to buy deodorant and boss-logo T-shirts that say "Don't buy the commodity for a day!," makes us neurotic and alienated, even (when you trace it back) makes us desire to post post after post in hopes that someone will buy what we have to say and love us, oh, and welcome us, as if we belonged, into the poetry store, and, ok, ok...

But, no, David, what it would be like to "see" this bottle and book in front of me with a full apprehension of their "substantiation" is certainly beyond me. We can never do that, and that we can't is not just the matter of a "pure" epistemological dilemma.

And I think the scent of this Cuban cigar made me say all that. Kent

↑ Index

27. Kenneth Goldsmith

This is a riot!

Tue 2 Dec 1997

This is a riot! Hope you find it funny too!

Kenny G.

Forwarded Message

> The right blonde
> by M.P.
>
> Wrong: Terre Haute > Right: Burnt Toast
>
> Wrong: I can't wait until our hot bodies compress
> Right: I may possibly be the right blonde
>
> Wrong: This too-short life
> Right: This lousy T-shirt
>
> Wrong: A > Right: B
>
> Wrong: But the priest's right > Right: Go to hell
>
> Wrong: The will of God
> Right: The wrong type of man
>
> Wrong: Her cousin > Right: Her eye
>
> Wrong: You moron!
> Right: Seldom have I seen such gall
>
> Wrong: Modern technology
> Right: Ooh baby baby
>
> Wrong: The universal order
> Right: Grandchildren
>
> Wrong: Be super freaky

> Right: Hold on to your values
>
> Wrong: Live and love
> Right: Do you want a bun for that hot dog?
>
> Wrong: The tool
> Right: The facts
>
> Wrong: Janet is jubilant
> Right: Emma is in a dilemma
>
> Wrong: My roommate has crabs
> Right: And Matt wears her underwear
>
> Wrong: I quack quietly > Right: I hate myself
>
> Wrong: Boxers
> Right: Wrestlers
>
> Wrong: Get misty-eyed
> Right: Just squat
>
> Wrong: You make me feel so healthy
> Right: You look like Bukowsi
>
> Wrong: I am so fucking stoned!
> Right: I am studying the Bible!
>
> Wrong: The bird flew around the cage
> Right: The bird flew into the cage
>
> Wrong: The bird flew over the cage
> Right: You have a small duck
>
> Wrong: VROOM, VROOM!!!!
> Right: Chomp, Chomp!!
>
> Wrong: Doomsday doomsday doomsday doomsday doomsday
> Right: Um possibly Friday
>
> Wrong: You're a big dog
> Right: Can I be your puppy?
>
> Wrong: Your big green eyes
> Right: Your crow bar
>
> Wrong: Getting a hard-on

> Right: Following the Pope
>
> Wrong: Chased with a whisk
> Right: Having a death scene
>
> Wrong: Spaghetti, pancakes and pork > Right: Ed
>
> Wrong: Jeffrey
> Right: Joseph
>
> Wrong: And I . . . I just believed him > Right: I have a pair of pretty ones
>
> Wrong: In my finest hour
> Right: Buxom beauties
>
> Wrong: A real loss
> Right: Oh well, dont kill yourself yet
>
> Wrong: I need clean underwear!
> Right: This must be heaven
>
> Wrong: Hundreds of nude photos
> Right: In loving memory
>
> Wrong: 12 boys
> Right: 2 girls
>
> Wrong: In the way a good student is easy to train
> Right: In conclusion
>
> Wrong: I want to feel your pulsating cock inside me
> Right: Why dont you come over and put some wood in my fire?
>
> Wrong: My sun, moon and mountains
> Right: My steel bullet
>
> Wrong: Colleagues
> Right: Collaborators
>
> Wrong: Free diagnostic treatment
> Right: No talent required
>
> Wrong: Smear-free
> Right: Peek-a-boo!
>
> Wrong: Your sky-blue whip

> Right: A simple coincidence
>
> Wrong: After the failure
> Right: After the future
>
> Wrong: Continental philosophers
> Right: Northern stars
>
> Wrong: Ill see you in cckcccchcccch
> Right: Ill stop here
>
> Wrong: Jeff is smiling because "It's windy out today"
> Right: Angela is smiling because "I'm getting audited"
>
> Wrong: I thank you > Right: I spank you
>
> Wrong: Frank
> Right: Joan
>
> Wrong: Disco
> Right: A world class cigar
>
> Wrong: That happy day
> Right: I used to be a thug
>
> Wrong: We specialize in all types
> Right: All others keep out
>
> Wrong: Busy and bubbly
> Right: Worst and most contemptible
>
> Wrong: Real kids
> Right: Real results
>
> Wrong: Ideal chicken > Right: Good chicken
>
> Wrong: Liberal titties
> Right: Mandatory fees
>
> Wrong: If you love me
> Right: On the other hand
>
> Wrong: Big hair and a bathing suit
> Right: A little sympathy
>
> Wrong: A Chinese opera nun

> Right: A second-hand dude
>
> Wrong: Like that no-frills white boy
> Right: Like the white-winged dove
>
> Wrong: Your blindfolding fantasies
> Right: Some biographical details
>
> Wrong: You mean purple-headed warrior?
> Right: Tired of losing?
>
> Wrong: I am in the chapel
> Right: Keep those videotapes coming
>
> Wrong: My little sister
> Right: A widened social consciousness
>
> Wrong: Walking the dog
> Right: Walking on Lake Erie
>
> Wrong: Cut the turkey
> Right: Weigh my turkey
>
> Wrong: One night that changed everything > Right: To be prearranged later
>
> Wrong: Joy
> Right: First, lets have some ice cream
>
> Wrong: The problem remains serious
> Right: The dude got mulched
>
> Wrong: With hilarious results
> Right: By popular demand
>
> Wrong: Mental health
> Right: Youre a weirdo
>
> Wrong: Are you hungry?
> Right: Which is your truck?
>
> Wrong: Gods infinite plan
> Right: You make me happy drawer with foil!
>
> Wrong: Kennels
> Right: Women
>
> Wrong: Men

> Right: Diapers
>
> Wrong: A perfect example
> Right: Beep beep beep beep
>
> Wrong: Danish
> Right: Toast

↑ Index

28. david bromige
thanks kenneth goldsmith!
Wed 3 Dec 1997

This poem is a big step forward for Michael Palmer. Using techniques familiar to his fans, the interweaving "double staircase"/DNA-helices structure found in a number of his earlier works, M.P. steps out of the umbrous marges slap bang into the clearing. From what source, btw, was this uncommonly pellucid poem retrieved? David

↑ Index

29. Stephen Cope
query
Wed 3 Dec 1997

Hello,

Might anyone have an e-mail address for John Taggart?

Thanks in advance,
Stephen Cope

↑ Index

30. David W. Clippinger
Re: Taggart
Wed 3 Dec 1997

John doesn't have e-mail, but you can call him at [redacted] (office) or [redacted] (home) or his address is

295 E. Creek Road
Newburg, PA 17240

Best,
David Clippinger

At 02:41 AM 12/3/97 -0800, you wrote:
>Hello,
>
>Might anyone have an e-mail address for John Taggart?
>
>Thanks in advance,
>Stephen Cope
>
>

↑ Index

31. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: The future of poetics!
Wed 3 Dec 1997

A freaking hilarious site, complete with an [empty] Ministry of Truth virtual office building! Sokal's revenge?

Dan Zimmerman
Middlesex County College
Edison, NJ

Fraser Thomas wrote:
>
> Attention potential partners:
>
> At last a syntax sophisticated and inclusive enough to contain your entire > cultural needs. You may never need to speak spontaneously again.
>
> Syntax is changing faster and faster. Experts predict that by 2003, > linguistic systems will need major updates every few days. We may not be at > that level yet, but here at Global Telelanguage Resources, we don't think > you can be too prepared. We work with structures dynamic and flexible > enough to configure even the most disjunctive approaches to communication > and art.
>
> Following directly from the many daring innovations in poetry performed in > the 1970s and 1980s, GTR features an expanded program of verbal initiatives > to bring us the next millennium and beyond. Where previous schools of > poetry promised you a total syntax, GTR will give you a truly "Global" one.
>
> Check out the future of poetics at
>

> http://users.uniserve.com/~gtr
>
> Sincerely yours,
>
> Fraser Thomas
> Partner in Language
> _____
> Global Telelanguage Resources
> http://users.uniserve.com/~gtr

↑ Index

32. Harold Rhenisch

Re: poetics under the jackboot

Wed 3 Dec 1997

> Just out of curiosity, who was the anti-Shakespeare? Goethe? Holderlin?
>
> Bill Freind

I don't know. I will ask.

Schiller or Goethe, probably.

Harold

↑ Index

33. Jordan Davis

There's A Riot Going On, We're Lions in Slumber (was: It Just Dasein , Matter)

Wed 3 Dec 1997

Have it your way! The world is ugly and the people are sad!

—
The much-anticipated John Kinsella/Keston Sutherland reading at Poetry City this Thursday has been postponed. Each poet will be at T&W next spring. Don't neglect to come to New York for the Mark Statman/Michael Morse reading Dec. 11 -- it's the annual Teachers & Writers holiday party, and we'll be showing the much-wrinkled home movies of Larry Fagin, Lewis Warsh, Anne Waldman, Bill Berkson, Bernadette Mayer, Ted Berrigan etc etc etc.

So to sum up, no Po City this Thurs. Next Thurs, yes.

Signed,
Peremptorily Brine-Omphalos Commodity the Lesser

↑ Index

34. Eric Blarnes
Re: the future of poetics!
Wed 3 Dec 1997

But why bother with all that high-tech hardware? Things sure are changing fast. I was over at CVS yesterday to pick up some dental floss and noticed that Colgate is offering something called Syntaxis Toothpaste - with a thorough daily brushing your gums absorb a complete lexical system based on a digitalized analog of FINNEGAN'S WAKE, and you find yourself spouting poetry (& fresh breath, too!) very spontaneously. No forethought required - just remember to brush regularly! - Eric Blarnes p.s. Jack Spandrift tells me the big news in 21st century poetry will be - you guessed it - RHYME. Look out! Henry Gould dissertation to follow [NOT].

↑ Index

35. Mary Burger
Announcing idiom #3 online magazine
Wed 3 Dec 1997

Announcing the appearance (resurrection) of Idiom Number 3 on monitors across the planet. This issue includes poetry, reviews, interviews, and art (the art will be completed and posted in a week). Stay tuned in the coming months for Number 4 and some special topic issues.

http://www.dnai.com/~idiom/issue3/issue3_cover.html

Mary Burger
Technical Writer
User Education
Adobe San Jose
W7 - 106
[redacted]

↑ Index

36. Judy Roitman
Re: Announcing idiom #3 online magazine
Wed 3 Dec 1997

> Announcing the appearance (resurrection) of Idiom Number 3 on monitors across the planet. This issue includes poetry, reviews, interviews, and art (the art will be completed and posted in a week). Stay tuned in the coming months for Number 4 and some special topic issues.

> http://www.dnai.com/~idiom/issue3/issue3_cover.html
>
> ----------
> Mary Burger
> Technical Writer
> User Education
> Adobe San Jose
> W7 - 106
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

Couldn't get Jay Schwartz' page to come up.

?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://titania.math.ukans.edu/faculty/roitman/

↑ Index

37. Garrett Kalleberg
Kathy Acker Requiem
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Posted Wednesday at CTheory, an excerpt from Kathy Acker's Requiem:

http://www.ctheory.com/a56.html

Garrett Kalleberg
[redacted]

↑ Index

38. MillettiC
call for submissions
Thu 4 Dec 1997

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_881239049_boundary

Folks,
Please pass this call on to anyone you think might be interested.

I've also attached a hard copy if you'd like to post it.
Thanks,
Christina Milletti
Editor, The Little Magazine

The Little Magazine Announces a Call for Submissions for a 1998 Hypermedia CD-ROM Issue

What we want:
Send us your experiments, your finished pieces in the following areas:

· web art and web based projects
· hypertexts: hyperpoetry & hyperfiction
· animations & digitized pieces · sound texts and toys
· manifestos & theoretical work
· multimedia explorations (whatever isn't covered above)

What are you doing? How are you doing it?
That's what we want to know.

See our website at www.albany.edu/~litmag or The Little Magazine Vol 21 on CD- ROM (1996) for what we've done in the past, and what we'd like to try.

Who we are: Since 1965, The Little Magazine has been a literary journal devoted to publishing fiction and poetry in experimental forms. In 1995, we embraced our own mission: we moved to the web and CD-ROM in order to explore and exploit the nexus of opportunities that now exist between literature and media—how literature, in effect, can benefit from emerging technologies. Above all, we remain devoted to work of strong artistic merit which pushes its own limits: to forms which writers and artists are now just starting to take advantage.

Deadlines:
Send submissions by February 1, 1998 to:

The Little Magazine or to: [redacted]
University at Albany, SUNY CD-ROM Issue
Albany, NY 12222

We prefer submissions on disk (PC/Mac) or via e-mail. Contact us re: formatting and software questions.

The Little Magazine CD-ROM (1996) is available in bookstores. Or, send a $15.00 check/money order to our above address.

--part0_881239049_boundary
name="CALLFO~1.DOC"

--part0_881239049_boundary--

↑ Index

39. KENT JOHNSON
somewhat esoteric query
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Is anyone out there involved in translation (or know of anyone doing so) of contemporary poets from Uruguay or Bolivia? Please back-channel. Thanks.
Kent

↑ Index

40. Maria Damon
self-promo unabashed
Thu 4 Dec 1997

---

just had a piece out in a journal called _symploke: a journal for the intermingling of literary, cultural and theoretical scholarship_. it's me at my most unabashedly over-the-top gushy, on the subject of "Jean Genet: Passion In Memoria Aeterna." i sort of can't believe i wrote it, it's so too-too.

↑ Index

41. Maria Damon
Re: Kathy Acker Requiem
Thu 4 Dec 1997

---

is money sstill being collected to defray her expenses, or are those announcements now moot? if there's still a call for $, wd someone please repost the mailing info? thanks.

At 1:23 AM -0500 12/4/97, Garrett Kalleberg wrote:
>Posted Wednesday at CTheory, an excerpt from Kathy Acker's Requiem:
>
>http://www.ctheory.com/a56.html
>
>
>
>
>
>Garrett Kalleberg
>[redacted]

↑ Index

42. Kenneth Goldsmith
The Right Blonde
Thu 4 Dec 1997

"The Right Blonde," BTW, was by Mark Peters.

Kenny G.

↑ Index

43. nuyopoman
Subject: Re: poetics under the jackboot
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Isn't Henry Carey, author of "Chrononhotonthologos," the Anti-Shakespeare?

Bob Holman

↑ Index

44. Lawrence Upton.
Re: somewhat esoteric query
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Kent

Do you know / know of Will Rowe? Professor William Rowe at Kings College London? I dont think he is, but he may well know. I shall copy your message to him

L
-----Original Message-----
From: KENT JOHNSON <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: 04 December 1997 15:49
Subject: somewhat esoteric query

Is anyone out there involved in translation (or know of anyone doing so) of contemporary poets from Uruguay or Bolivia? Please back-channel. Thanks.
Kent

↑ Index

45. Harold Rhenisch
Re: anti-shakespeare
Thu 4 Dec 1997

> Isn't Henry Carey, author of "Chrononhotonthologos," the Anti-Shakespeare?

> Bob Holman

Bob, I don't know this piece. Could you tell me more?

But it would have to hold up to _Hamletmaschine_ by Mueller, wouldn't it?

"I was Hamlet.
I stood on the seashore and conversed with the surf BLA BLA BLA.
Behind me, the ruins of Europe."

and on we go!

or, act 2

"I am Ophelia. The one the river didn't keep. The woman dangling from the rope. The woman with her arteries cut open."

or, act 3

"OPHELIA: Do you want to eat my heart, Hamlet?
HAMLET: I want to be a woman."

or, act 4

"JUST THE WORST TIME OF THE YEAR FOR A REVOLUTION
Cement in bloom walks through the slums
Doctor Zhivago weeps
For his wolves"

or

"I'm not Hamlet. I don't take part any more. My words have nothing to tell me anymore."

or

"TV screens go black. Blood oozes from the refrierator. Three naked women: Marx, Lenin, Mao. They speak simultaneously, each one n his own language, the text: THE MAIN POINT IS TO OVERTHROW ALL EXISTING CONDITONS..."

or, act 5:

"This is Electra speaking. In the heart of darkness. Under the sun of torture. To the capitals of the world. In the name of the victims."

Whew.

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

46. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Marks et al in ABR
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Just wanted to call the List's attention to some truly fine reviews by Steven Marks in the latest ish of American Book Review. The poets whose works are considered are Mark Wallace, Kristen Prevallet, Jefferson Hansen, Wendy Battin and Jena Osman, the last two being reviews of the author's poetry websites. Marks's concluding remarks about "learning new language games" while too brief, are foresightful and provocative.

To Jefferson Hansen and Mark Wallace - can you please post info on how to order your books?

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

47. Henry Gould
anti-shakespeare
Thu 4 Dec 1997

One theory has it Shakespeare was really William Stanley, hereditary ruler of the Isle of Man (a manxman). There is a small island off Man called the "Calf" of man, which some kooks relate to the island setting of the Tempest. Caliban is called the "calf-man" (among other things...).

was WS really WS? The ante-WS?

only Jack Spandrift knows for sure. they trimmed his tail a long time ago. (oh-oh, now I'm gonna get it...) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

48. Mark Weiss
Re: anti-shakespeare
Thu 4 Dec 1997

The best of this sort that I know is the first film version of Hamlet, shot in Denmark in a think 1903. The plot is a melange of Shakespeare and Saxo Grammaticus, with the wholly original element that Hamlet is played by a woman pretending to be a man. Even Gertrude is apparently unaware of the deception. When Hamlet receives her fatal wound Horatio opens her tunic to check out the damage, revealing a breast. He looks up at the camera, astonished. Cut to the title: "No wonder I've always been attracted to you!" And of course there's always Dryden and Davenant's version of The Tempest as scurrilous farce: they add a male equivalent of Miranda, a few noble ladies to tempt his virtue, and a female Caliban. It's quite wonderful, but it does feel like someone has scrawled graffitti on the sistine chapel.

At 10:01 AM 12/4/97 -0700, you wrote:
>>Isn't Henry Carey, author of "Chrononhotonthologos," the Anti-Shakespeare?
>
>>Bob Holman
>
>Bob, I don't know this piece. Could you tell me more?
>
>But it would have to hold up to _Hamletmaschine_ by Mueller, wouldn't it?
>
>"I was Hamlet.
>I stood on the seashore and conversed with the surf BLA BLA BLA.
>Behind me, the ruins of Europe."
>
>and on we go!
>
>or, act 2
>
>"I am Ophelia. The one the river didn't keep. The woman dangling from the >rope. The woman with her arteries cut open."
>
>or, act 3
>
>"OPHELIA: Do you want to eat my heart, Hamlet?
>HAMLET: I want to be a woman."
>
>or, act 4
>
>"JUST THE WORST TIME OF THE YEAR FOR A REVOLUTION
>Cement in bloom walks through the slums
>Doctor Zhivago weeps
>For his wolves"
>
>or
>
>"I'm not Hamlet. I don't take part any more. My words have nothing to tell >me anymore."
>
>or
>

>"TV screens go black. Blood oozes from the refrierator. Three naked women:
>Marx, Lenin, Mao. They speak simultaneously, each one n his own language, >the text: THE MAIN POINT IS TO OVERTHROW ALL EXISTING CONDITONS..."
>
>or, act 5:
>
>"This is Electra speaking. In the heart of darkness. Under the sun of >torture. To the capitals of the world. In the name of the victims."
>
>Whew.
>
>Harold Rhenisch
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

49. Jordan Davis
textual perversity in new york
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Bob's referring to the play the New York School loved, a parody of elizabethan blank verse drama (tho it is certainly an elizabethan blank verse drama). I forget which mimeo press brought out a (facsimile) version of the text.

To isolate the germ of amusement: Chronohotontologos's name takes up more than half of a blank verse line.

Hey Simon Fraser U, don't they give you enough work to keep you occupied? I mean, I liked GTR almost as much as I dug Giuffria or Ratt, but what's with the hard-drinking lesly? and the note pad is straight outta Matt Groening. But to speak tectonically: nice work, keep going.

Ok dok,
JD

↑ Index

50. Lawrence Upton.
oops - not for the first time
Thu 4 Dec 1997

---

apologies - to will and kent a mesage that was intended for backchannel

no harm done i think but foot in an unintended cowpat

L

↑ Index

51. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Thu 4 Dec 1997

Anybody have Joseph Duermer's and/or Nate Mackey's email address? Does Hambone continue? Please backchannel.

↑ Index

52. Miekal And
Re: call for submissions
Fri 5 Dec 1997

---

christina:

caught your call for submissions on the poetics list. there was no mention of formats or how many megs a submission can be. personally Id like to do something specifically for your project but wonder if you are even interested in my work. perhaps you could take a look at some of my recent things & see what you think. they are at:

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/index.html

Miekal And

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

53. Miekal And
Re: call for submissions
Fri 5 Dec 1997

---

sorry, letter intended backchannel---

m

↑ Index

54. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Iroiro
Fri 5 Dec 1997

-

Iroiro

The weather began to turn around the beginning of November. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night across the wooden houses. We were jammed against the cemetary, bad luck in any season; Hokusai's ghosts spoke across hideous red lanterns, their teeth waiting for the skin to fall. Fukuoka was ruptured by uneasy presences; the foreign community talked and talked, waiting for something to happen. Rumblings from Eastern City penetrated Nine-States Island. These were the States at that juncture:

State-of-Hand-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Being-Perfectly-Not-Here
State-of-Disconsolate-Thought-of-Wings
State-of-Hand-Not-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Beauty-Futon-Winter-Comfort
Electric-State-of-Coming-Wonders
State-of-Seeing-You-Around-About
Eighth-State-of-Fukuoka-City
State-of-Siege-of-Hardly-Kanji

Eastern City was in State-of-This-Main-Origin-of-Book, still spring, I would say still April, the murmur of brook-larks heard high in Shinto trees. For truth, I did not recognize talons where hands were joined, words wired to electrical wonders not yet evidenced on the way from Kyoto to Fuji, by way of Wheat-Rice-Island. Thinking of wings, I flew, these were my thoughts:

Winged Thoughts, Iron Thoughts, Fire Thoughts, Singed Thoughts, River- Water Thoughts, Electric-Coming-Wonder-Thoughts.

There were seven flowers, six elements, perfect nights. In Northern- Nine-State-City, it was autumn, late-blooming chrysanthemum engraved on lacquer-bone poet-box, crane-flight, swimming-turtle careful gold design. I would write wonder-haiku,

one two sorrow five
six mountain eight pine ten e- x leven twelve autumn four- x
ox oo
and win honor at go-moku, xxxxx o in summer-Kurume, waiting near Wide Island, very many tower down to Nagasaki. For to be sure, I was fast disappearing. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night. I dreamed of wooden houses. I dreamed of shogi sets, the sound of game pieces scraped across the wooden boards.

I dreamed of the fluttering of go boards, the sound of stone-and-shell game pieces scraped across the hollow tables. I dreamed of mother-of- pearl orderings from Eastern City, dreamed of the Origin of All Things, dreamed of State-of-Siege.

↑ Index

55. Gwyn McVay
pronunciation
Fri 5 Dec 1997

Dear list, is the name of the late author of "Ho Ho Ho Caribou" pronounced:

a) ce RA vo lo

b) ce ra VO lo

c) Throat-wobbler Mangrove?

thanks in advance
Gwyn

↑ Index

56. William Marsh
Re: Marks et al in ABR
Fri 5 Dec 1997

> Wendy Battin and Jena Osman, the last two being reviews of the author's poetry websites. Marks's concluding remarks about "learning new language games" while too brief, are foresightful and provocative.

Patrick--

would you post, if you know, the url's for these two sites

thanks

bill marsh

↑ Index

57. Jordan Davis
Re: pronouncement
Fri 5 Dec 1997

Rosemary Ceravolo reads this list from time to time, so I'll not pretend to authority, but various friends of Joe Ceravolo have used _both_ pronunciations around me.

Jordan

On Fri, 5 Dec 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Dear list, is the name of the late author of "Ho Ho Ho Caribou" pronounced:
>
> a) ce RA vo lo
>
> b) ce ra VO lo
>
> c) Throat-wobbler Mangrove?
>
> thanks in advance
> Gwyn

↑ Index

58. dbkk
Raddle Moon reading in San Francisco
Fri 5 Dec 1997

ANNOUNCING A READING:
to celebrate the publication of

RADDLE MOON 16: TWENTY-TWO NEW (TO NORTH AMERICA) FRENCH WRITERS

Translator/Poets Dodie Bellamy, Susan Gevirtz, Susan Clark (from Vancouver), Norma Cole, Laura Moriarty, Michael Palmer & Cole Swenson will read from their translations of French Poets Manuel Joseph, Sabine Macher, Huguette Champroux, Caroline Dubois, Cecile Gaudin, Oscarine Bousquet and others!

Thursday December 11
7:30 p.m.
at Canessa Park Gallery
708 Montgomery St (at Columbus)

↑ Index

59. dbkk
SPT: Shurin, Ferguson, Allison, Gomez
Fri 5 Dec 1997

Small Press Traffic presents:

Friday, December 5, 7:30 p.m.

Deanna Ferguson
Aaron Shurin

Deanna Ferguson is the author of _ddilemma, Rough Bush_ , and _The Relative Minor_. She is one of the editors of Vancouver¹s estimable _BOO Magazine_ and the small press Tsunami Editions. Oh, how I¹ve schemed for years to bring Deanna to Small Press Traffic, my fingers worn to the bone counting the miles between B.C. and San Francisco. Her poetry is extremely dense and yet inviting; it¹s woven like a web of spidery filaments into a radar dish of primitive and advanced sensation. Over the past few years I¹ve watched her reputation mount from a simmer to a full boil. It may be December but this will be the hottest night of the year!

Aaron Shurin¹s books of poetry include _Into Distances_ (Sun & Moon), _A's Dream_ (O Books), and _The Graces_ (Four Seasons Foundation). Coming this year: _A Door_ (Sun & Moon) and _The Paradise Of Forms: Selected Poems_ (Talisman House). His most recent book, _Unbound_ (Sun & Moon), is the most affecting and splendid book yet written about AIDS, HIV and the place we all live in now. He has won a NEA fellowship, a California Arts Council fellowship, and the Gerbode Poetry Prize. He teaches at San Francisco State University and the University of San Francisco.

New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
$5

Friday, December 12, 7:30 p.m.

Dorothy Allison
Jewelle Gomez

The celebrated poet and novelist Dorothy Allison will come down to Small Press Traffic for old times¹ sake. If you have never seen her read, here¹s a chance to catch her in a rare intimate appearance. She is the most spectacular reader I¹ve ever seen. Maybe Jonathan Edwards in ye olde Puritan days was better but I doubt it! She is the author of two books of essays, _Skin_ and _Two or Three Things I Know for Sure_, a book of stories _Trash_, a volume of poetry _The Women Who Hate Me_, and a novel, the best-selling _Bastard Out of Carolina_ .

Her new novel _Cave Dweller_ will appear in March of 1998. Allison spent a lot of time in the small press San Francisco writing scene before _Bastard_ catapulted her to fame, and she is one girl who has not forgotten her roots!

Jewelle Gomez is equally well-known for her forays into science fiction and a painful, heartfelt realism (I¹m looking forward to the spring publication of her new book of stories, _Don¹t Explain_, the title story of which I read first in _The Penguin Book of Lesbian Short Stories_). She is the author of the groundbreaking novel _The Gilda Stories_, which was the winner of two Lambda Literary Awards. She¹s also published a collection of essays, _Forty-Three Septembers_, and three books of poems, _The Lipstick Papers, Flamingoes and Bears_, and the recent _The Oral Tradition_. Gomez has been a poetry activist for many years in New York and now here, where she works as the executive director of the Poetry Center at San Francisco State.

New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
$5

↑ Index

60. Pierre Joris
Reading
Fri 5 Dec 1997

For those in or around the apple:

Cole Swenson
Nicole Peyrafitte
& Pierre Joris

will be reading/performing tomorrow Saturday, 6 December

at 3 pm

@ The Here Center
145 Sixth Avenue (between Spring & Broome)
New York
(tel: [redacted])

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]

http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Adding music to a good poem is like using a stained-glass window to light a painted picture. — Paul Valéry
==========

↑ Index

61. Dean A. Brink
Re: Iroiro
Fri 5 Dec 1997

If you want comments, all I can say is for ideas for similar works you might try reading Chamberlain, Aston, Lafcadio Hearn and other Orientalist writers from a century ago. There you might get a better sense of how to tuck in the condescending mishmash of nonsense that was made possible by colonial domination or, in the case of Japan, which was not colonized, by military superiority and unilateral imposition of unfair treaties.

Of course, you don't want to get too historical, lest thee lose sight of the navelesque vision required for such in-sights.

Sorry, but take away the Orientalist pathos, there's not much left in this piece.

Ever in search of beautiful human life,
dean

Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:

> -
>
> Iroiro
>
> The weather began to turn around the beginning of November. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night across the wooden houses. We were jammed against the cemetary, bad luck in any season; Hokusai's ghosts spoke across hideous red lanterns, their teeth waiting for the skin to fall. Fukuoka was ruptured by uneasy presences; the foreign community talked and talked, waiting for something to happen. Rumblings from Eastern City penetrated Nine-States Island. These were the States at that juncture:
>
> State-of-Hand-Joined-to-the-Body
> State-of-Being-Perfectly-Not-Here
> State-of-Disconsolate-Thought-of-Wings
> State-of-Hand-Not-Joined-to-the-Body
> State-of-Beauty-Futon-Winter-Comfort
> Electric-State-of-Coming-Wonders

> State-of-Seeing-You-Around-About
> Eighth-State-of-Fukuoka-City
> State-of-Siege-of-Hardly-Kanji
>
> Eastern City was in State-of-This-Main-Origin-of-Book, still spring, I would say still April, the murmur of brook-larks heard high in Shinto trees. For truth, I did not recognize talons where hands were joined, words wired to electrical wonders not yet evidenced on the way from Kyoto to Fuji, by way of Wheat-Rice-Island. Thinking of wings, I flew, these were my thoughts:
>
> Winged Thoughts, Iron Thoughts, Fire Thoughts, Singed Thoughts, River-Water Thoughts, Electric-Coming-Wonder-Thoughts.
>
> There were seven flowers, six elements, perfect nights. In Northern-Nine-State-City, it was autumn, late-blooming chrysanthemum engraved on lacquer-bone poet-box, crane-flight, swimming-turtle careful gold design. I would write wonder-haiku,
>
> one two sorrow five
> six mountain eight pine ten e- x
> leven twelve autumn four- x
> ox oo
> and win honor at go-moku, xxxxx o in summer-Kurume, waiting near Wide Island, very many tower down to Nagasaki. For to be sure, I was fast disappearing. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night. I dreamed of wooden houses. I dreamed of shogi sets, the sound of game pieces scraped across the wooden boards.
>
> I dreamed of the fluttering of go boards, the sound of stone-and-shell game pieces scraped across the hollow tables. I dreamed of mother-of-pearl orderings from Eastern City, dreamed of the Origin of All Things, dreamed of State-of-Siege.

--
dean brink

[redacted]

interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

62. Steven Marks

Re: Marks et al in ABR

Fri 5 Dec 1997

The URLs are:

http://www.conncoll.edu/ccother/wjbat
for Wendy Battin's "Lucid Dreaming" and "Poetry is Sense, Sensed"

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/osman
for Jena Osman's "The Periodic Table as Assembled by Dr. Zhivago, Occulist." Which gets my vote for title of the year!

In answer to Patrick's earlier question, "The Haunted Baronet" (Mark Wallace), "Lead, Glass and Poppy" (Kristin Prevallet) and "Why I am Not a Christian" (Jeff Hansen) are all available from primitive publications. The editor is Mary Hilton and her e-mail address is [redacted]

cheers,
Steven

On Fri, 5 Dec 1997, William Marsh wrote:

> Wendy Battin and Jena Osman, the last two being reviews of the author's poetry websites. Marks's concluding remarks about "learning new language games" while too brief, are foresightful and provocative.
>
> Patrick--
>
> would you post, if you know, the url's for these two sites
>
> thanks
>
> bill marsh

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

63. Brent Long
Help!
Fri 5 Dec 1997

Anyone here have an e-mail address for Michael Heffernan? Please send it to me if you do...lost it when a nasty virus corrupted my system this week. Thanks in advance.

Brent

↑ Index

64. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Help!
Fri 5 Dec 1997

[redacted]

Brent Long wrote:
>
> Anyone here have an e-mail address for Michael Heffernan? Please send it > to me if you do...lost it when a nasty virus corrupted my system this week.
> Thanks in advance.
>
> Brent

↑ Index

65. David R. Israel
Re: Iroiro
Sat 6 Dec 1997

Regarding A.Sondheim's recent writing "Iroiro," Dean A. Brink indefatigably suggests, well maybe (though "not much" can amount to a quantity); but jeez, add it back, and look what you get!

> Sorry, but take away the Orientalist pathos, there's not much left in this piece.

d.i.

["jeez" may be understood to signify mid-American pathos]

.
.....
.....
\\\

```
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| [redacted]  (home)
| [redacted]     (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

66. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

EPC Regen

Sat 6 Dec 1997

This a.m. @ 2 a.m. I have just completed a regen of all 20,000 (?) of le EPC. So here's the scoop. This has been a massive regeneration of header/body info/formatting. So for those who are vested ie. have author pages or other interests in this layered intricate holy cow of pages ... check pages that are important to you to make sure everything still looks fine. Send a message to [redacted] with "Update Check" in the subject of the message and "ok" in the body of the message (assuming all is ok). I appreciate this. But I've just machine-interacted with these thousands of files and want to make sure it all looks fine. The background should now be white and the wording of the top links somewhat changed. Quieter, calmer, cleaner. Thanks.

↑ Index

67. david bromige

rceiving mail

Sat 6 Dec 1997

Listfolk : somebody has sent me a file my software finds indigestible. It's like watching a small python trying to swallow a large pig. As a consequence, I will be unable (at least until monday, when my server's office will be open & I can get expert advice) to access the messages that are "behind" this monstrous file. I shall also have to unsubscibe until things get fixed. Please be patient & I will get back to you. If it is urgent, please phone me at [redacted]. Thanks. David

↑ Index

68. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Iroiro
Sat 6 Dec 1997

or realize at least that the pathos are deconstructed; as far as Hearn et. al. go, I just have to leave the house.

Alan

On Sat, 6 Dec 1997, David R. Israel wrote:

> Regarding A.Sondheim's recent writing "Iroiro," Dean A. Brink indefatigably suggests,
>
> Sorry, but take away the Orientalist pathos, there's not much left in this piece.
>
> well maybe (though "not much" can amount to a quantity); but jeez, add it back, and look what you get!
>
> d.i.
>
> ["jeez" may be understood to signify mid-American pathos]
>
> .
> .....
> .....
> *\\\

To all of you who may have had similar troubles downloading the grossly overlarge attachment I sent with a Call for Submissions for the Little Magazine earlier this week, my humblest humblest apologies.

It was an accident (I sent a non-shrunk attachment by mistake). But an "oops" certainly doesn't cover it.

Again: my sincerest apologies.
Christina Milletti
Editor, The Little Magazine
http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/

↑ Index

70. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Sat 6 Dec 1997

Anyone have an email address for Susan Smith Nash? Please backchannel.

↑ Index

71. Daniel Carter invalid claim withdrawn: inaccessible detour
Sat 6 Dec 1997

{ }

intro-eye

delta beacon void

vote I.D. Ray

hesitant curious stillness struck late until now most naught they sat t' sip salute

http://www.inch.com/~abz/

↑ Index

72. Harold Rhenisch
Re: rceiving mail
Sat 6 Dec 1997

> To all of you who may have had similar troubles downloading the grossly overlarge attachment I sent with a Call for Submissions for the Little Magazine earlier this week, my humblest humblest apologies.

I fed it to my cat. No problem. This saved a muskrat.

Harold Rhenisch

↑ Index

73. joel lewis
Re: pronunciation
Sat 6 Dec 1997

> Dear list, is the name of the late author of "Ho Ho Ho Caribou" pronounced:
>
> a) ce RA vo lo
>
> b) ce ra VO lo
>
> c) Throat-wobbler Mangrove?

gwen --

i knew joe (fellow jersey poet) and he said that he accepted both the a & b pronunciation, don't know about "c", tho'

joel lewis

↑ Index

74. Louis Cabri
few ago
Sun 7 Dec 1997

I tend not to age re: 'happy to be here' & tuba, play it hairy, although in specific ways, if these references to preeves of the discussionscuffed can be quickly repolshd. Id orf ound all toba ANGWA otch, sowa boutgovs their doors are open. Erner Meyel Splan (came up before - posts fr prots. days ago?) etorks pat'hes ooli TWO PLYNITS FORENOTS TWIT (ha-ha, old joke) "toails seaprinting Os." (So, against prenims? - Yes! - or No!) SWaa bod ipn srot hogs chepp brundits (yes), lop prinnies, adalyafs (wat ers). "K yr shtitsils." Bordin (uh-oh...)--blerd rak allo bedots, frintong snittingl: AIR 4 db AK. Or 2 w/ .6 on OPH, same magn. I'd put it in revenge & trawl. - Let me know, yo! Best wishs, l

↑ Index

75. KENT JOHNSON
Iroiro and Orientalism
Sun 7 Dec 1997

Dean:

am I understanding you correctly? "Military superiority" of the West and its "imposition of unfair treaties" on Japan is the "historical" reason why Alan Myouka Sondheim's letter to Iroiro comes freighted with time-worn, unconscious traces of Orientalist condescension? Obviously, any number of lands have been so subjected by any mumber of other lands, and thus it would seem that one could bid good-bye to a good deal of cross-cultural imagining around the globe! Writers in Japan, citizens as they are of a nation with a long and sordid imperialist history (a nation "not colonized," as you put it), would not be the least compromised in this regard.

I'm not suggesting that Orientalism is not an important issue. Of course it is. But it seems to me that your last post is a good example of its ideologically overzealous and simplistic application. But I am aware that this is your academic field, and that I might be wrong. Could you, then, illustrate your point by detailing, _with some textual specificity_, why Sondheim's poem is as you have pegged it to be? Here, at least, is a text you have read before making the dismissal.

I'm sure I wasn't the only one on the list who found the piece rather moving and exciting--certainly quite different in language and spirit from the dusty works of the writers you rather preachily urge Sondheim to school himself in. Obviously you think there is a continuity between him and them and that we shouldn't have enjoyed the poem? A close reading, please.

Kent

On 5 December, Dean Brink wrote:

> If you want comments, all I can say is for ideas for similar works
> you might try reading Chamberlain, Aston, Lafcadio Hearn and other Orientalist writers > from a century ago. There you might get a better sense of how to tuck in > the condescending mishmash of nonsense that was made possible by colonial > domination or, in the case of Japan, which was not colonized, by military > superiority and unilateral imposition of unfair treaties.
>
> Of course, you don't want to get too historical, lest thee lose sight of > the navelesque vision required for such in-sights.
>
> Sorry, but take away the Orientalist pathos, there's not much left in this > piece.
>
> Ever in search of beautiful human life,
> dean
>
> Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:
>
> -

Iroiro

The weather began to turn around the beginning of November. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night across the wooden houses. We were jammed against the cemetary, bad luck in any season; Hokusai's ghosts spoke across hideous red lanterns, their teeth waiting for the skin to fall. Fukuoka was ruptured by uneasy presences; the foreign community talked and talked, waiting for something to happen. Rumblings from Eastern City penetrated Nine-States Island. These were the States at that juncture:

State-of-Hand-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Being-Perfectly-Not-Here
State-of-Disconsolate-Thought-of-Wings
State-of-Hand-Not-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Beauty-Futon-Winter-Comfort
Electric-State-of-Coming-Wonders
State-of-Seeing-You-Around-About
Eighth-State-of-Fukuoka-City
State-of-Siege-of-Hardly-Kanji

Eastern City was in State-of-This-Main-Origin-of-Book, still spring, I would say still April, the murmur of brook-larks heard high in Shinto trees. For truth, I did not recognize talons where hands were joined, words wired to electrical wonders not yet evidenced on the way from Kyoto to Fuji, by way of Wheat-Rice-Island. Thinking of wings, I flew, these were my thoughts:

Winged Thoughts, Iron Thoughts, Fire Thoughts, Singed Thoughts, River-Water Thoughts, Electric-Coming-Wonder-Thoughts.

There were seven flowers, six elements, perfect nights. In Northern-Nine-State-City, it was autumn, late-blooming chrysanthemum engraved on lacquer-bone poet-box, crane-flight, swimming-turtle careful gold design. I would write wonder-haiku,

one two sorrow five
six mountain eight pine ten e- x
leven twelve autumn four- x
ox oo
and win honor at go-moku, xxxxx o in summer-Kurume, waiting near Wide Island, very many tower down to Nagasaki. For to be sure, I was fast disappearing. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night. I dreamed of wooden houses. I dreamed of shogi sets, the sound of game pieces scraped across the wooden boards.

I dreamed of the fluttering of go boards, the sound of stone-and-shell game pieces scraped across the hollow tables. I dreamed of mother-of-> pearl orderings from Eastern City, dreamed of the Origin of All Things, dreamed of State-of-Siege.

>
> ---
>
> --
> dean brink
>
> [redacted]
>
> interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
> www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

76. Cadaly
Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
Sun 7 Dec 1997

There is western orientalism and chinese orientalism: for example, I am currently working with some chinese ladies who consider the peoples of the middle east to be oriental, and have fairly well-codified opinions of their folkways.

Catherine Daly

↑ Index

77. Franklin Bruno a few questions
Sun 7 Dec 1997

1. Does someone know what Hardy poem the phrase "original air-blue gown" appears in? I think it's called "The Visit," but I went through a Collected Poems that didn't have an alphabetical title index, and couldn't find it.

2. Can someone backchannel me an e-mail address for Steve Evans or Jennifer Moxley? I tried the one on the Impercipient letterhead, and it bounced.

3. Just for discussion--what do people think about the following books/poets: Campbell McGrath, -Spring Comes To Chicago-, and Joshua Clover, -Madonna Anno Domini-? Both books intrigue me: the first for its combination of self-conscious 'plain-spokenness' and (seemingly) sophisticated economic critique, the second as an example of the incursion of 'language-ish' indeterminacy into a largely workshoppy framework. I'm not sure that's a criticism, but it's a curious twist.

fjb

↑ Index

78. Rachel Loden
Re: a few questions
Sun 7 Dec 1997

Franklin Bruno wrote:
>
> 1. Does someone know what Hardy poem the phrase "original air-blue gown" > appears in? I think it's called "The Visit," but I went through a Collected > Poems that didn't have an alphabetical title index, and couldn't find it.
>

From the web: can't say whether the layout is right . . .

The Voice

Woman much missed, how you call to me, call to me, Saying that now you are not as you were
When you had changed from the one who was all to me,
But as at first, when our day was fair.

Can it be you that I hear? Let me view you, then,
Standing as when I drew near to the town
Where you would wait for me: yes, as I knew you then,
Even to the original air-blue gown!

Or is it only the breeze, in its listlessness
Travelling across the wet mead to me here,
You being ever dissolved to wan wistlessness,
Heard no more again far or near?

Thus I; faltering forward,
Leaves around me falling,
Wind oozing thin through the thorn from norward,
And the woman calling.

--Thomas Hardy

↑ Index

79. Bob Grumman
Poetics Taxonomy at Comprepoetica
Sun 7 Dec 1997

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

The latest news from my poetics/poetry/poets site is that things have been dragging: not too many visits. William Carlos Williams is leading the vote for favorite all-time US poet but only has 10 votes; Ashbery leads in the vote for favorite living poet with 8 votes; Ron Silliman, Charles Bernstein, Lyn Hejinian, Susan Howe, Robert Creeley and Clark Coolidge are tied for second with four, each.

There are now 33 bios on file and 23 poems.

And NOW AT LAST, what you've all been waiting for, my own FINAL DEFINITIVE TAXONOMY OF VISIO-TEXTUAL POETRY! It's now up at Comprepoetica at:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492/vispdef.html

It includes 9 examples of visio-textual art (a few not that effectively reproduced but adequate for my purposes)--as well as a history of my reasoning. The terminology is klunky but the system itself seems pretty airtight to me. It's hard for me to believe that any genuine student of visual poetry and related art could fail to get something out of it, however many flaws he found with it. Any comments, especially negative ones, would be MOST welcome. My poetics taxonomization is a nutty life's work (although I DO have other life's works), but I'm serious about it. I hope it makes sense.

I've also have put some notes toward a taxonomy of literature up at Comprepoetica. Important parts of these came out of discussions at UB Poetics: the discussion of what to call gaps in lines of poetry helped me much in defining poetry as having what I call flow-breaks (a slight refinement on the old idea of poetry as that which is lineated); and another discussion I don't think I even participated in, helped me work out where narrative fits in, and what it is. This second essay (very dry, for specialists only, I would think) is at:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492/lit-tax.html

Again, I'd greatly appreciate any comments, pro or con, especially the latter. For those who think taxonomy is stupid or even evil, I've put up an intemperate rant in favor of it that will be sure to anger you at:

http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492/taxdfens.html

Meanwhile, I'm still anxious for bios. Come visit the site, fill out a survey, leave a poem, vote for a favorite poet or two. When Comprepoetica takes over the world, I'll remember you, I promise!

--Bob G.

Bob Grumman

[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site

----------5EEE5530601F--

↑ Index

80. Dean A. Brink

Re: Iroiro and Orientalism

Sun 7 Dec 1997

History 101 for Kent Johnson:

You confuse the Japan that was a victim of imperialism (especially 1853-1900) and the Japan that was a champion of imperialism (economic and military, especially from the 1890s until the end of the War).

Maybe you should stick to imaginary people before you tackle the historical.

dean brink

KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> Dean:
>
> am I understanding you correctly? "Military superiority" of the West and its "imposition of unfair treaties" on Japan is the "historical" reason why Alan Myouka Sondheim's letter to Iroiro comes freighted with time-worn, unconscious traces of Orientalist condescension? Obviously, any number of lands have been so subjected by any mumber of other lands, and thus it would seem that one could bid good-bye to a good deal of cross-cultural imagining around the globe! Writers in Japan, citizens as they are of a nation with a long and sordid imperialist history (a nation "not colonized," as you put it), would not be the least compromised in this regard.
>
> I'm not suggesting that Orientalism is not an important issue. Of course it is. But it seems to me that your last post is a good example of its ideologically overzealous and simplistic application. But I am aware that this is your academic field, and that I might be wrong. Could you, then, illustrate your point by detailing, _with some textual specificity_, why Sondheim's poem is as you have pegged it to be? Here, at least, is a text you have read before making the dismissal.
>
> I'm sure I wasn't the only one on the list who found the piece rather moving and exciting--certainly quite different in language and spirit from the dusty works of the writers you rather preachily urge Sondheim to school himself in. Obviously you think there is a continuity between him and them and that we shouldn't have enjoyed the poem? A close reading, please.

Kent

On 5 December, Dean Brink wrote:

If you want comments, all I can say is for ideas for similar works
you might try reading Chamberlain, Aston, Lafcadio Hearn and other Orientalist writers from a century ago. There you might get a better sense of how to tuck in the condescending mishmash of nonsense that was made possible by colonial domination or, in the case of Japan, which was not colonized, by military superiority and unilateral imposition of unfair treaties.

Of course, you don't want to get too historical, lest thee lose sight of the navelesque vision required for such in-sights.

Sorry, but take away the Orientalist pathos, there's not much left in this piece.

Ever in search of beautiful human life,
dean

Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:

-

Iroiro

The weather began to turn around the beginning of November. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night across the wooden houses. We were jammed against the cemetary, bad luck in any season; Hokusai's ghosts spoke across hideous red lanterns, their teeth waiting for the skin to fall. Fukuoka was ruptured by uneasy presences; the foreign community talked and talked, waiting for something to happen. Rumblings from Eastern City penetrated Nine-States Island. These were the States at that juncture:

State-of-Hand-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Being-Perfectly-Not-Here
State-of-Disconsolate-Thought-of-Wings
State-of-Hand-Not-Joined-to-the-Body
State-of-Beauty-Futon-Winter-Comfort
Electric-State-of-Coming-Wonders
State-of-Seeing-You-Around-About
Eighth-State-of-Fukuoka-City
State-of-Siege-of-Hardly-Kanji

> Eastern City was in State-of-This-Main-Origin-of-Book, still spring, I would say still April, the murmur of brook-larks heard high in Shinto trees. For truth, I did not recognize talons where hands were joined, words wired to electrical wonders not yet evidenced on the way from Kyoto to Fuji, by way of Wheat-Rice-Island. Thinking of wings, I flew, these were my thoughts:
>
> Winged Thoughts, Iron Thoughts, Fire Thoughts, Singed Thoughts, River-Water Thoughts, Electric-Coming-Wonder-Thoughts.
>
> There were seven flowers, six elements, perfect nights. In Northern-Nine-State-City, it was autumn, late-blooming chrysanthemum engraved on lacquer-bone poet-box, crane-flight, swimming-turtle careful gold design. I would write wonder-haiku,
>
> one two sorrow five
> six mountain eight pine ten e- x
> leven twelve autumn four- x
> ox oo
> and win honor at go-moku, xxxxx o in summer-Kurume, waiting near Wide Island, very many tower down to Nagasaki. For to be sure, I was fast disappearing. I dreamed of fire, sparks flying in the night. I dreamed of wooden houses. I dreamed of shogi sets, the sound of game pieces scraped across the wooden boards.
>
> I dreamed of the fluttering of go boards, the sound of stone-and-shell game pieces scraped across the hollow tables. I dreamed of mother-of-pearl orderings from Eastern City, dreamed of the Origin of All Things, dreamed of State-of-Siege.
>
> ---
>
> --
> dean brink
>
> [redacted]
>
> interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
> www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

--
dean brink

[redacted]

interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

81. Christopher W. Alexander address query hell: Michael Gizzi?
Mon 8 Dec 1997

---

yet another scintillating address query:
does anyone have an email (or even a snail-mail) address for Michael Gizzi?

"much obliged".

Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

82. Christopher W. Alexander spit shine and polish (not the ethnicity)
Mon 8 Dec 1997

---

to Loss Glazier & all concerned: the new EPC pages look great. (to all unconcerned: nyah nyah nyah).

best, Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

83. Tosh
Iroiro and Orientalism
Mon 8 Dec 1997

You confuse the Japan that was a victim of imperialism (especially 1853-1900) and the Japan that was a champion of imperialism (economic and military, especially from the 1890s until the end of the War).

Maybe you should stick to imaginary people before you tackle the historical.

Dear Dean:

Your response to Kent Johnson's post is qutite nasty. There is no doubt that you are a genius in Japanese history. Perhaps you can explain to us how Japan was a vicitm of imperialism. Are you talking culturally or in practical everyday matters? For instince, Tanazaki wrote about the conflicts between the West and the East in his early novels. Especially in aesthetics, sexual mores, and in the difference between Japanese and Western cultures. Not everyone is exposed to different cultures. It is obvious that you are truly a master in Japanese studies. But don't look down on people who are not familar with things outside their culture.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

84. Louis Cabri
(no subject)
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Iroar!!!

"Mili" stmomsts "imp eaties"! Thit thone id yoodal outhgle. Pithizens afa nithong periists ("notonized" syupuit) udnots Helecoprosad. Inots ugging ortals isnots impotties sue. Ocorsits.

Buetit oo-me haturlas ostisgoox aefteolical? Acadeckiebe wrog cu illointailing _withomexual ecificity_, whond's poes vep'd. --sWasn henly nen whoups -- hertain itifferentang irit thed churmool--

Vioy herisontnu weenioyd!

--Bar.

Wesortalandese:

Whoothers iddlets ortaland odopions wolks.

--Ca.

Sa:

3. Cussato plethinkowbool.

--i

Woozin inoughwa, Anthma.

--Tosod

OWAT STFLEFNI VETAXO OMOV EXALETRY...!!!

--oG.

01. Yi!!! Pan thwacteral ismies 18. Pwimpial ismec onco rimpi smecospfrodofe. Mabe shick pepe eor tacthenthistical.

--dek

↑ Index

85. Rob Hardin

FREE! NEW! Today's Revolutionary One-On-One Pocket Pastor!

Mon 8 Dec 1997

http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/DunceDoseForDobie.html

↑ Index

86. robert drake

Forward: Edgardo Antonio Vigo

Mon 8 Dec 1997

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted] (Clemente Padin)
To: [redacted]
Date: 97-12-03 05:29:31 EST

Please, pass on this text:
EDGARDO ANTONIO VIGO: Aspiration to Freedom

Clemente
Padin

Edgardo Antonio Vigo, aged 70, died in La Plata, the city of his birth. Vigo was an engraver, experimental poet, conceptualist, constructor of "objects-without-use" and "oddmachines," a constant innovator whose only recently discovered work keeps on surprising, given the almost ineffable character of his projects. He also cultivated forms that until now have been considered sub-artistic or simply not thought of as "art" in the vernacular sense of the term, such as mail art and experimental poetry.

In Vigo's work can be seen influences of Marcel Duchamp-we recall Vigo's film Blanco sobre Blanco (White on White), shown on the spectators' backs, and the "ready-mades" he constantly sent his friends-and, above all, of Macedonio Fernandez, not only in his irreverent attitude but also in his long and contradictory titles and paratexts. From both, Vigo took the ludic attitude of play, making the spectators participate and desacralizing the work of art through manipulation and co-creation, to the point that he preferred to speak of the "creative-constructor" instead of the "spectator," trying to make of artistic creation a multiple act, not something individual and solitary.

Born in La Plata in 1927, Vigo enrolled in the School of Fine Arts of the La Plata University in 1950 and, in 1953, he went on a scholarship to France where he met the Venezuelan artist Jesus Soto and came into contact with the international avant-garde. In 1954, on returning to his country, Vigo exhibited wooden objects that already foretold his later tendency towards an art of popular participation. He was an important magazine editor, publishing Diagonal Cero (1961) and Hexagono 70, which featured "novisima" poetry-what he liked to call visual poetry-together with the subsequent Nuestro Libro Internacional de Estampillas y Matasellos (Our International Book of Stamps and Postmarks) with original stamps and postmarks by artists from around the world (artistamps and rubber stamps). These are considered paradigmatic of what is known today as "artists' books." In 1965 Vigo exhibited his first "useless machines," such as the Palanganometro Mecedor para Criticos de Arte (Palaganometer Rocking Chair for Art Critics) and the Bi-Tri-Cicleta Ingenua (Ingenuous Bi-Tri-Cycle) that was heaped with vernacular criticism, initiating a long silence that lasted until the 1990s. But, the alternative scene in France, 1967, published his Poemas Matematicos Barrocos (Mathematical Baroque Poems) and the next year his Poemas Matematicos Incomestibles (Mathematical Inedible Poems) (an object enclosedbetween two empty tuna cans soldered together). Also, in 1968, in La Plata there appeared his first traffic light, Manojo de Semaforos (Bunch of Traffic Lights). This consisted of analyzing from the aesthetic and creative point of view the traffic signals located in the intersection of First and Sixtieth Avenues in La Plata. Presenting an anonymous and useless element in its specific function (stressing an ironic urban commentary) this project sought to initiate a specific dialogue with an abstract content. The public invited to participate were to develop their ideas using the minimal keys given by the artist, who wasn't there. The proposal was to subtract out all prejudicial contact in order to generate an action in freedom.

In issue 11 of the magazine Los Huevos del Plata (1968) there appeared Vigo's New Avant-Garde Poetry in Argentina and experimental poems by Jorge de Luxan, Carlos Ginzburg, Luis Pazos, and his own. Here is found the second break with the lyric tradition in Argentina (the first was in the 1930s, under the sign of Ultraism).

From the mid-60s, Vigo was a proponent of conceptualist tendencies in Latin America, above all the Conceptualism applied to undoing the mechanisms and instrumentation of the work of art and its relation to its spectators, not the Conceptualism of Kosuth's "Art is the definition of art." Vigo emphasized the self-referential qualities of the work that not only promoted ambiguity (the possibility of extreme polysemy) but also the possibility of the choice of the spectator in the final selection of meaning, causing him to be considered as co-author of the work itself. Vigo's project in this sense was crystallized in Poetry to and/or Realize, through which he tried to get the spectator to participate in the "constructive activation with which it is possible for the consumer to pass over to the category of creator" (From Process Poetry to Poetry to and/or Realize, Diagonal Zero, La Plata, 1970). Vigo continued with the I Expo de Proposiciones a Realizar (I Expo of Propositions to Realize) in 1971, which took place in the Cayc, Centro de Arte y Comunicacion (Art and Communication Center) of Buenos Aires, where, together with works received from all around the world, were brought together the artists Wlademir Dias-Pino (creator of Brazilian Process/Poem), Guillermo Deisler (the late Chilean visual poet), and the Uruguayans Francisco Accame (musician and sound poet), and myself.

On one of his first visits to our country, Vigo realized-during the "Exhibition of Avant-Garde Publications" organized by the magazine OVUM 10 in the Hall of the University of the Republic on September 30, 1970, the proposal "Demagogic Poem," a parody of the election process. Votes were cast in an urn with a round opening. The ballots were nothing but forms distributed by the performer in which the participant-creator was asked to express whatever he wanted, and then Vigo put the ballots, not folded but rolled up in the form of cylinders, into the special container.

At the beginning of the 1970s, Vigo joined the new currents of mail art, becoming one of its most regular creators until the day of his death. The military dictatorship of his country struck hard, causing one of his sons to disappear. Because of this disgraceful act, Vigo's work took on a strongly political character such that his contacts with foreigners were augmented, spreading the word about the brutal repression and crimes against humanity of this ferocious dictatorship. From this period came his work Trelew (1974), in memory of the 16 revolutionaries assassinated in the Trelew jail in southern Argentina on August 22, 1972. On each page of the book is a representation of each fallen body. From those sad moments Vigo lent his talent to the mobilizations of the "Mothers of the Plaza of May" (his collective visual poem "Sembrar la memoria" [To Seed Memory] was emblematic, realized in the large popular event "Everyone or No One" that the group "Ezcombros" organized in La Plata on December 9, 1995). In his last years, Vigo's work turned towards the light; he exhibited individually in the Tan Telmo Foundation (1991), where he had a retrospective show of his major works. In 1994, he was selected to form the Argentine section to the XXII Biennial of Sao Paulo, Brazil, thereby achieving world recognition in this area.

To conclude, allow me to include these words of Vigo's taken from his public declaration of 1968,"An Art to Realize," that will give us a more accurate idea of his project:

"Towards a touchable art that breaks in the artist the possibility of the use of "rotten" materials to the extreme that they produce the alienation of the hand of the observer -simple form of perception- that will stay in this position without the "epidermal" participation of the thing. Through use of "base" materials and for a delimiting quotidian context of the content. A touchable art that rejects the possibility of satisfying an "elite" that the artist has been forming to his regret, a touchable art that can be located in any home and not enclosed in Museums and Galleries. An art with mistakes that alienates the exquisite. Taking advantage to the maximum of the aesthetic of "surprise," through "occurrence" -primary act of creation- to be converted -already in for the masses form- into involving movements or for individuality congruence of intentionality-, in attitude. An art of expansion, of atrape for the ludic way, that facilitates active participation of the spectator, the absurd way. An art of signaling so that the quotidian escapes to the unique possibility of the functional. No more contemplation without action. No more exhibition without presentation. Where inert material, stable and fixed, takes its movement and necessary change so that the image is constantly modified. Finally: a contradictory art."

Only with some difficulty have I been able to touch on all or even some of the facets and dimensions of this indefatigable creator, barely able schematically to redeem Vigo's attitude towards art and the society in which he lived and suffered. This artist subjected himself only to his own rules. All his life he was guided by ideas having to do with freedom. His work will last as long as there exists in people this desire for liberty that he tried to keep fresh by confronting the split of choosing between the various possibilities of signification (including that of altering meaning) that his works offered, thereby concretizing through that choice our deepest nature: the aspiration to freedom.

Montevideo, Uruguay, November 12, 1997

---

frat ernally,

Clemente Padin
C.Correo Central 1211
11000 Montevideo
URUGUAY Fax (598) 2 915 94 17

↑ Index

87. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Re: Iroiro and Orientalism

Mon 8 Dec 1997

I'm curious as well about my Orientalism - is it because of the ma/mu gaps - my use of "iroiro" ("various") or local color mixing prints with the def. of Kyushu? or the fact that there's no correlation between our place in Hakata-ku and anything extruded in the text? Perhaps it's in the fact that I haven't understood the Tale of Genji correctly? Or read it in the wrong translation? (I didn't read it; I lied.) Perhaps it's in the florid language which goes nowhere, deliberately? I should have mentioned imperialism (long bow) but thought that shogi's origins in India and China were sufficient...

I bow corrected.

Alan

P.S. Who is "Lafcadio Hearn"?

↑ Index

88. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
Mon 8 Dec 1997

But Dean Brink you still don't address the issue of textual specificity that Kenneth raises. I think rather than shaming us whose Japanese history fails your test of adequacy, it would help to have some pointers.

--R D Levitsky

↑ Index

89. Gwyn McVay
Line of Okay--Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Re orientalism, I respect the need not to blindly appropriate others' cultural baggage--the rich-hippies-in-"sweat lodges" phenomenon is a prime example--but I do wonder where the Line of Okay gets drawn. Like, I practice a Japanese form of Buddhism, and I like to read haiku and waka and tanka and renga and suchlike, and I adore sushi, but am nonetheless willing to concede that Japan's conformity principle is scary, its non-electronic consumer products can be cheesy, and its pizza is terrible. Is it okay to like Basho if you don't decorate your Stateside apartment in tatami? Wondering.

bests
Gwyn

ps. happy purported Bodhi day

↑ Index

90. KENT JOHNSON
Re: Iroiro and Orientalism
Mon 8 Dec 1997

On December 7, Dean Brink wrote:

> History 101 for Kent Johnson:

>You confuse the Japan that was a victim of imperialism (especially >1853-1900) and the Japan that was a champion of imperialism >(economic and military, especially from the 1890s until the end of the War).

> Maybe you should stick to imaginary people before you tackle the historical.

Dean: Why do you assume I confuse anything? I said Japan had a long history of imperialism. But I don't doubt you know much more about Japan's history than I do. I would hope, since this is your advanced academic field, that you do!

But is this reply the best you can do? I asked you, out of sincere curiosity, to provide a close reading of Sondheim's poem so as to give evidence for your sarcastic attack on its "Orientalism." I thought this would be a good thing, since you have used this loaded term as a club in a number of posts to dismiss, censure, and insult. And you have done this with little or no textual evidence or support to justify your rebukes. (In fact, you have yourself admitted, in attacking two projects that I have been involved in, that you haven't even read what you are attacking!)

So once more: Here's your chance to go beyond jargon-slinging. Orientalism is a heavy and fascinating issue. Combine your knowledge of history with a close analysis of the poem in question, and show us _why_ you think as you do.

Kent

↑ Index

91. Mark Wallace
primitive publications
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Thanks to Patrick and others who requested info about my book and primitive publications!

Mary Hilton, the editor of primitive, may post a complete list of her available books some time this week. In the meantime, the address for primitive publications is 1706 U Street NW #102, Washington, D.C. 20009.

The cost of individual books from primitive is $4. Mary may be giving deals on complete sets. I don't know. She has also published books by Jeff Hansen, Sherry Brennan, Kristin Prevallet, and a fine chapbook of her own.

In the meantime, the best e-mail address at which to reach Mary is currently [redacted] The e-mail address which Steven Marks mentioned is still functional, but she seems to check it less often.

Mary is doing a wonderful production job on these chapbooks, and I hope you'll support her project.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:

| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

92. MLWeber
invitation to women writers
Mon 8 Dec 1997

I edit Sugar Mule, a literary magazine.

The upcoming issue (#4) will be composed of women's writing with an emphasis on the natural world.

All genres from poetry to all types of prose are needed.

Please send only via email by 1/20/98

Thank you,
M. L. Weber, ed.

↑ Index

93. Robert Archambeau
Fall '96 New Hampshire Conference
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Just noticed that the long-awaited Electronic Book Review #6 is now online, and along with an astonishingly high-caliber array of other stuff is Michael Barret's review of the "Assembling Alternatives" Conference attended by many listees last fall.

The review is at:

http://www.altx.com/ebr/reviews/rev6/r6barrett/r6bar.htm

and has been paired up with a review of a very different conference in a fascinatingly dialogic way. Check it out.

Bob
--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

the user experiences
no need of acting
    -Tom Raworth

↑ Index

94. Jordan Davis
Poet to bring out creativity in retail staff
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Poets-in-residence are turning up in new places thanks to a 450,000 stg National Lottery grant to the UK's Poetry Society, according to an article in today's Financial Times. Peter Sansom has been appointed resident poet at Marks and Spencer, a British chain. Lavinia Greenlaw has taken a similar (though not funded by the lottery) appointment at the law firm Mishcon de Reya, at a salary of 10,000 stg a year. Marks & Spencer does not intend for the sales staff to reply to customers in verse, but they do hope to encourage the "creative side of [their] people".

antibiotics anyone?
Jordan

↑ Index

95. KENT JOHNSON
Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
Mon 8 Dec 1997

Dean:

It is because what we say is unfinished, always, that we can say without fear. The gatekeepers themselves, in speaking back law, say only what they have been given to say by signs. It is always unfinished. Thinking of this I gathered courage, making prostrations. The land to the East or West of us is there because we are here, speaking of it. (My sister wrote that.)

Anyway, when I arrived at the first gate, I was told I could not pass. The guards were dressed in coats of black scales, with half-moons of gold covering their mouths. They spoke in tongues from the West and told me to return there. Beyond their head-sets, sparks flew in the night across the wooden houses, and I imagined that those of the foreign community inside were shimmering and transparent so that their bones mingled as one with the tea-fires and the frozen flight of the cranes. (Awkward, but I am writing quickly here.) And then, by magic, Dean, the Western Guards became tethered to long and shiny poles of discourse (though it was dark and I couldn't quite see) and were spun round and round so that a breeze lightly scented with bream and salt cooled my face. I smashed the turtle's shell and passed boldly through the gate.

You see, it was the thought of Witter Bynner that led me on. I desired my dust to be mingled with his, forever and forever and forever. I also thought of the following things, though I would never dare to speak them openly:

The State of Hand Not Joined to Body
The State of Being Perfectly Not Here
The State of Disconsolate Thought of Wings
The State of Myouka Writing "Hand Not Joined to Body"
The State of Rose of the Snow Kimono
The State of Poem Written on Throat of Turtle
The State of Shikantaza as Loving Cunt Enfolding
The State of Kissing Son on Loving Lips
The State of Sons as Suicidal Aviators Exultant
The State of Being a Staff or Whisk
The State of Stillness in Self-Fulfilling Samadhi
The State Where the Moon Swallowing Is Brought Forth

Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then, preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:

[xx] shungyo ya hito koso shirane kigi-no ame [xx]
Which I choose to translate thus:
[mourning his son he crosses the hills with a large sack of eggs]

When I arrived at the second gate it was May, and all was in the State of Three Heads and Eight Arms as Rain on the Trees. The guard of this gate had the corpulent face and body of Amida, but I knew that was just a disguise. He spoke in hoarse whispers and in a language I could only understand by imagining. He told me to display wares in my laquer-bone-poet-box, and I did so. He told me to ornately describe the Eastern Suburbs with their alleys full of squatting whores and peddlars, and I did this. He told me to squat thusly and shit in my beggar's hat and I did so. He told me to write one wonder-haiku on cicada husk's soundless cry, and I did this, his sword suspended in threat above. I wrote:

Towa x ni x ikitashi x onna-no x koe x to x semi-no x ne x to
Which I choose to translate thus:
[my soul passes through those of others: hydragena exhibit]

Thus, this apparition vanished, and I went deeper into the mandala, having no idea where I was headed (and admittedly half-wishing I had heeded the cautionary advice of my grad school advisors). Wide-eyed, I witnessed:

The Room of Looking through a Bamboo Tube
The Room of Scholars Who Count Letters
The Room of Poets with Strings of Law Leading Back to Their Names
The Room of the Theory of Five Ranks

The Room of Mud Within Mud
The Room of Merely Being "In the Mountains"
The Room of Oneness Within Differentiation
The Room of Udumbara in Shameless Flower
The Room of "Life Streams Issue from Plum Blossoms"
The Room of Everyday Rice-Eating Activity
The Room of Sky with Palms Together
The Room of Mind Moon Alone and Full

I felt fear and trembling, I felt the insistent repetition of all phenomenal things, I felt an anxiety and dread of concepts that verged (is it possible to say it?) on the irony of Being itself, and I felt a sickness unto death. You see, Dean, I had come to the gate through which the masts of Foreign Ships are visible! It was like a forest after a great fire, or a city of people who have been burned to a crust but are still standing. And I realized that this was the Room of No Turning Back.

The guard here was dressed in elegant suit. He both was and was not (if you can imagine that!), like the brittle sumi-e I had seen at Eihei-ji: a single Not-Thinking stroke bringing sudden form out of no-form. He appeared to me as an American executive from Toshiba, and he brandished a scroll of unfair treaties, all inscribed in the most delicate calligraphy. He said I could pass only should I beat him in Poetry-Duel-to-Death. "I go first," he growled, "and my poem is titled 'State of Siege.'" He read in rapid-fire bursts, his voice screeching as ten-thousand shikirichi, and through the great roar of rushing waters' sound, this is what I heard:

shaving dace [...] now stomping [.....]
town wall [....] place for gossip or [...] [.....]daughter's dream--silkworm dealers?[.....]but[..]
But [.....]market flooded. Why Pentium Chips if [.....]waving fan--clay stove [..]
[.....] so [.....] no, [.....]
Ah, Hiroshima's blessing [...] fast track is [.....] better and [.] for one thousand vats of nightsoil [.....] but legs spread for love-making [.....] while far away [.....]
geisha expert [...] quick web-search for [.....] thirty seven Mexicans suffocated in freight car clawing eyes out
[.....]

I was fearful and trembled at his fierce visage. A device for measuring time glowed with Oriental splendour on his wrist. Sparks flew in the night across the great wooden ships beyond. I knew now the foreigners had been waiting there, shimmering and transparent, for thousands and thousands of Springs. I dipped my brush and raised it slowly back, knowing death-poem in my bones, knowing the darkness there in the glistening point of it... And I wrote:

xHyakuxxxsen-noxxxdokanxxitsumademoxxxxwarauxxxkareno-nox
Which is untranslatable thus:
[ ]

And when I woke, drenched from the dream, it was my teacher, serene in Electric State of Coming Wonders, speaking to us in measured and instructional tones. And this is what I heard:

"This paradox cannot be mediated, for it depends specifically on this: In attachment blossoms fall, and in aversion weeds spread. The single individual is only the single individual. As [inaudible] as this single individual wants to express his absolute duty in the universal, becomes conscious of it in the universal, he recognizes that he is involved in a spiritual trial. [extended inaudible section] Do not be limited to the narrow views held by human beings. Even where there is no sun and moon, there is day and night." (I taped that.)

He was a monk from Japan. He was vegetarian and ate his rice and things with chopsticks. And I spoke every Orientalist dream that came to me that sesshin, into the black hole of his succulent, papery ear.

Kent

↑ Index

96. Mark Weiss
Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
Mon 8 Dec 1997

I enter where I have no business, but so be it. Perhaps what some find offensive is their familiar world being transformed by those to whom it is less familiar into a kind of science fiction (perhaps they feel that the daily lives of others are too available at this juncture to be treated without irony as exotica.) For myself the familiar so transforms itself often enough to keep me busy.

At 05:29 PM 12/8/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Dean:
>
>It is because what we say is unfinished, always, that we can say >without fear. The gatekeepers themselves, in speaking back law, say >only what they have been given to say by signs. It is always >unfinished. Thinking of this I gathered courage, making prostrations.
>The land to the East or West of us is there because we are here, >speaking of it. (My sister wrote that.)

>
>Anyway, when I arrived at the first gate, I was told I could not >pass. The guards were dressed in coats of black scales, with >half-moons of gold covering their mouths. They spoke in tongues from >the West and told me to return there. Beyond their head-sets, sparks >flew in the night across the wooden houses, and I imagined that those >of the foreign community inside were shimmering and transparent >so that their bones mingled as one with the tea-fires and the frozen >flight of the cranes. (Awkward, but I am writing quickly here.) And >then, by magic, Dean, the Western Guards became tethered to long and >shiny poles of discourse (though it was dark and I couldn't quite >see) and were spun round and round so that a breeze lightly scented >with bream and salt cooled my face. I smashed the turtle's shell and >passed boldly through the gate.
>
>You see, it was the thought of Witter Bynner that led me on. I >desired my dust to be mingled with his, forever and forever and >forever. I also thought of the following things, though I would never >dare to speak them openly:
>
>The State of Hand Not Joined to Body
>The State of Being Perfectly Not Here
>The State of Disconsolate Thought of Wings
>The State of Myouka Writing "Hand Not Joined to Body"
>The State of Rose of the Snow Kimono
>The State of Poem Written on Throat of Turtle
>The State of Shikantaza as Loving Cunt Enfolding
>The State of Kissing Son on Loving Lips
>The State of Sons as Suicidal Aviators Exultant
>The State of Being a Staff or Whisk
>The State of Stillness in Self-Fulfilling Samadhi
>The State Where the Moon Swallowing Is Brought Forth
>
>Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then, >preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:
>
>[xx] shungyo ya hito koso shirane kigi-no ame [xx]
>Which I choose to translate thus:
>[mourning his son he crosses the hills with a large sack of eggs]
>
>When I arrived at the second gate it was May, and all was in the >State of Three Heads and Eight Arms as Rain on the Trees. The guard >of this gate had the corpulent face and body of Amida, but I knew >that was just a disguise. He spoke in hoarse whispers and in a >language I could only understand by imagining. He told me to display >wares in my laquer-bone-poet-box, and I did so. He told me to >ornately describe the Eastern Suburbs with their alleys full of >squatting whores and peddlars, and I did this. He told me to squat >thusly and shit in my beggar's hat and I did so. He told me to write >one wonder-haiku on cicada husk's soundless cry, and I did this, his >sword suspended in threat above. I wrote:

>
>Towa x ni x ikitashi x onna-no x koe x to x semi-no x ne x to
>Which I choose to translate thus:
>[my soul passes through those of others: hydragena exhibit]
>
>Thus, this apparition vanished, and I went deeper into the mandala, >having no idea where I was headed (and admittedly half-wishing I had >heeded the cautionary advice of my grad school advisors). Wide-eyed,
>I witnessed:
>
>The Room of Looking through a Bamboo Tube
>The Room of Scholars Who Count Letters
>The Room of Poets with Strings of Law Leading Back to Their Names
>The Room of the Theory of Five Ranks
>The Room of Mud Within Mud
>The Room of Merely Being "In the Mountains"
>The Room of Oneness Within Differentiation
>The Room of Udumbara in Shameless Flower
>The Room of "Life Streams Issue from Plum Blossoms"
>The Room of Everyday Rice-Eating Activity
>The Room of Sky with Palms Together
>The Room of Mind Moon Alone and Full
>
>I felt fear and trembling, I felt the insistent repetition of all >phenomenal things, I felt an anxiety and dread of concepts that >verged (is it possible to say it?) on the irony of Being itself, and >I felt a sickness unto death. You see, Dean, I had come to >the gate through which the masts of Foreign Ships are visible! It was >like a forest after a great fire, or a city of people who have been >burned to a crust but are still standing. And I realized that this >was the Room of No Turning Back.
>

>The guard here was dressed in elegant suit. He both was and was not >(if you can imagine that!), like the brittle sumi-e I had seen at >Eihei-ji: a single Not-Thinking stroke bringing sudden form out of >no-form. He appeared to me as an American executive from Toshiba, and >he brandished a scroll of unfair treaties, all inscribed in the most >delicate calligraphy. He said I could pass only should I beat him in >Poetry-Duel-to-Death. "I go first," he growled, "and my poem is >titled 'State of Siege.'" He read in rapid-fire bursts, his voice >screeching as ten-thousand shikirichi, and through the great roar of >rushing waters' sound, this is what I heard:
>
>shaving dace [...] now stomping [.....]
>town wall [....] place for gossip or [...] >[.....]daughter's dream--silkworm dealers?[.....]but[..]
>But [.....]market flooded. Why Pentium Chips if >[.....]waving fan--clay stove [..]
>[.....] so [.....] no, [.....]
>Ah, Hiroshima's blessing [...] fast track is [.....] better and
>[.] for one thousand vats of nightsoil [.....] but legs
>spread for love-making [.....] while far away [.....]
>geisha expert [...] quick web-search for [.....] >thirty seven Mexicans suffocated in freight car clawing eyes out
>[.....]
>
>I was fearful and trembled at his fierce visage. A device for >measuring time glowed with Oriental splendour on his wrist. Sparks >flew in the night across the great wooden ships beyond. I knew now >the foreigners had been waiting there, shimmering and transparent, >for thousands and thousands of Springs. I dipped my brush and raised >it slowly back, knowing death-poem in my bones, knowing the darkness >there in the glistening point of it... And I wrote:
>
>xHyakuxxxsen-noxxxdokanxxitsumademoxxxxwarauxxxkareno-nox
>Which is untranslatable thus:
>[ ]
>
>
> ---
>
>And when I woke, drenched from the dream, it was my teacher, serene >in Electric State of Coming Wonders, speaking to us in measured and >instructional tones. And this is what I heard:

>
>"This paradox cannot be mediated, for it depends specifically on >this: In attachment blossoms fall, and in aversion weeds spread. The >single individual is only the single individual. As [inaudible] as >this single individual wants to express his absolute duty in the >universal, becomes conscious of it in the universal, he recognizes >that he is involved in a spiritual trial. [extended inaudible >section] Do not be limited to the narrow views held by human beings.
>Even where there is no sun and moon, there is day and night."
>(I taped that.)
>
>He was a monk from Japan. He was vegetarian and ate his rice and >things with chopsticks. And I spoke every Orientalist dream that >came to me that sesshin, into the black hole of his succulent, papery >ear.
>
>Kent
>
>

↑ Index

97. Poetics List Administration

Two New Books from ROOF

Mon 8 Dec 1997

ROOF BOOKS
303 East 8th Street, New York, NY 10009
[redacted]

Contact: James Sherry [redacted]
[redacted]

Doubled Flowering

> From the Notebooks of Araki Yasusada

The materials of the Japanese poet Araki Yasusada (1907-1972), a survivor of Hiroshima, were published in Grand Street, Conjunctions, Abiko Quarterly, First Intensity, Stand, and The American Poetry Review. Gradually the rumor began circulating that Araki Yasusada did not exist and that the poems were a "hoax" perpetrated by the Japanese-American author Tosa Motokiyu or by his literary executor, the American poet Kent Johnson. On August 9th, 1997, Asahi Shimbun, Japan's leading newspaper, published a front page story on Araki Yasusada, accompanied by his apocryphal penciled portrait. The article, along with a subsequent feature story in the Asahi, has made Yasusada an emerging literary sensation in Japan. Indeed, no other poetry in English in recent memory has provoked such wide-ranging international discussion and controversy before book publication. In major publications in the U.S., England, Australia, Mexico, Russia, Spain, Israel, and Italy, poets and critics have expressed excitement, hostility, and bewilderment toward Yasusada's idiosyncratic work. They have judged it as everything from a "racist inspired hoax" to an "imaginative gesture of profound beauty and empathy." Presented here for the first time in complete form, readers now have the chance to draw their own conclusions about Doubled Flowering and-if they read with understanding and care-to perhaps gain access to the mysteries of its origins.

Critical Acclaim for Araki Yasusada

"'Yasusasa's' writing is an entry into a spiritual space . . . It is a work of art in the largest sense." - Carolyn Forche

"The 'scandal' of these poems lies not in the problematics of authorship, identity, persona, race or history. Rather, these are wonderful works of writing that also invoke all of these other issues, never relying on them to prop up a text. In a time and place where book jacket blurbs routinely claim that X or Y poet has written a work that has "found that which is essential" in whatever, this book makes the argument for anti-essentialism. That it has done it so well infuriates folks with a proprietary interest in categories. Thank you, Araki Yasusada!" -Ron Silliman

"Knowing its fictitious nature, with a slight sense of disgust, I find Yasusada's poetry evil, and eerily beautiful." - Hosea Hirata, Assistant Professor of Japanese Literature, Tufts University

"Having edited the volume Atomic Ghost: Poets Respond to the Nuclear Age and having read a great deal of poetry on Hiroshima, both by hibakusha and non-hibakusha, I find Yasusada's 'Mad Daughter and Big-Bang' simply one of the most moving and revealing poems ever written on the effects of the Bomb. If we ignore the strange and wonderful writing we find in this book, future readers may judge the real fraud not Yasusada, but us." -John Bradley

"(The Yasusada author) has done a brilliant job in inventing a world at once ritualized and yet startlingly modern, timeless yet documentary, archaicized yet au courant--a poetic world that satisfies our hunger for the authentic, even though that authentic world is itself a perfect simulacrum. . . . Like Pound's Homage to Sextus Propertius, the Yasusada notebooks force us to go back to the 'originals,' so as to see what they really were and how they have been transformed." -Marjorie Perloff, Professor of Comparative Literature, Stanford University

"(It is) a mistake, I think, in having 'Kent Johnson' stand for the author. He/She/They should be known as the Yasusada Author, much as we refer to a Renaissance painter as the Master of the X Altar. . . . (Yasusada) is both the greatest poet of Hiroshima and its most unreliable witness."-Eliot Weinberger, Boston Review & The Village Voice

"Yasusada's manuscripts have attracted wide attention. Among the readers is included a poet who confessed that he was so moved that he "could not sleep." . . . Whether Yasusada's fictional texts are worth appraisal as that which expresses a desire for a union with the victims of the atomic bombs, or whether they are a beautiful but superficial composition which evades the issues of responsibility and guilt, one cannot find any sort of agreement among poets and critics in American circles. . . . In the wariness not unlike that of evading a taboo, one might feel an ripples of this scandal will reach further. One could not overlook then how the discussion will develop, particularly on the relation between the responsibility and guilt over the atomic bombs and the way literary fiction should pose itself in opposition to these heavy questions." -Akitoshi Nagahata, Asahi Shimbun

176 pp. ISBN: 0-937804-71-1 $14.95

SHI
A Radical Reading of Chinese Poetry
by Yunte Huang

This book is not an attempt to grasp the "essence" of Chinese poetry, nor is it an endeavor to produce an over-polished version of English that claims aesthetic superiority over other works in the same field. It grapples rather with the nature of translation and poetry, and explores poetic issues from the perspective of translation and translation issues from the perspective of poetry. With its agenda hidden, translation is too often the handyman for the metaphysical, mystical, or universal notion of poetry. When emerging from obscurity, translation becomes an ally with poetic material and enacts the wordness of the words. This book strives to strengthen the alliance between translation and poetry.

"In this anthology of classic poetry from China, Yunte Huang transforms our sense of "Chineseness" by replacing the Orientalized scenic and stylistic tropes of traditional translations with multilevel encounters with the Chinese language. In acknowledging the foreigness of its source texts, this collection reimagines the task of translation and the possibilities for crosscultural points of contacts, in the process changing the way we read Chinese poetry." --Charles Bernstein, SUNY Buffalo

"Yunte Huang has created an intersting mode halfway between a hermeneutical cartography and a translation; this, to test and expand the reader's horizon of expectation." --Wai-Lim Yip, University of California at San Diego

ROOF BOOKS NEW YORK ISBN: 0-937804-72-X $9.95

↑ Index

98. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Mon 8 Dec 1997

On Mon, 8 Dec 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> I enter where I have no business, but so be it. Perhaps what some find > offensive is their familiar world being transformed by those to whom it is > less familiar into a kind of science fiction (perhaps they feel that the > daily lives of others are too available at this juncture to be treated > without irony as exotica.) For myself the familiar so transforms itself > often enough to keep me busy.
>

It also depends on what is familiar. I am writing from the position of being a gaijin, so what is familiar is also unfamiliar and vice versa. It's not exotica for me, nor is it alien, nor is it not exotica, nor is it not alien.

It is similar to a situation expressed in Quebecois literature all the way back through Chamberland, but here there is a differentiation between else and other based on language and entrance.

I might add that Japanese writers write about and/or "American" as well, without PC censors around; I might also add that perhaps imperialisms have to be deconstructed here, as well as colonialisms in regard to these "nations" among others, but then again I am no expert on American history either.

Alan

↑ Index

99. Dean A. Brink

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Mon 8 Dec 1997

Such literal imitations ringing of earlier imitations of haibun do not go too far beyond what is called in Japanese "direct translation style" (chokuyakutai). There are possibilities here that you may be able to polish into something more interesting and in tune with both what haibun writers have been doing and what might be done. I would love to see the genre developed in English - it is far more interesting than haiku, because it doesn't so easly let the reader forget the context, which I think is important to the appreciation of most Japanese poetry. In English haiku have been presented as floating snippets of consciousness along the Way. In haibun the haiku means much more than a pithy breath unit.

But as it stands, even if we were to put aside the "defense of Orientalism" rhetoric framing your piece,
there are so many issues regarding the application of genres and voices,
it would seem hard to overcome the 'pathos for feeling deeply' that is so overdramatized in Western emulations and so beautiful in Classical Japanese poetry, i.e. waka (modern Japanese poetry is another can of genres).

I guess it is just such a "let's be pathetic" all around and "I'm okay, you're okay" in a great circle that doesn't work too well in much Orientalist writing in America. The problem is that Anglo-American poetry continues to locate Asia or Asian cultures as a Shangri-La of inspiration, a safe haven for the Muses driven out by the Enlightenment from Parnassus. The inspiration is often very sweet and sometimes mushy; the pathos is presented (and defended) as a form of anti-Intellectualism that sings spiritual truths in its own way by right of irrationality (which I can respect). It can seem to seek to push itself on the reader like a child writing for mommy and shaking on an apron. This is where the Orientalist pathos at least seems to go. Maybe all poetry is an apron thing.

What makes me cringe at (Orientalist) poetry is how it confuses historical escape with the literary (in the old-fashioned New Critical sense to boot). Such work only waters down the intensity of poetry and its cultural life (semiotic, discursive, peripheral...), relies on tropes of ambiguity and diffusion. In the long haul, we need more than distraction in poetry. Isn't that the idea of it: It seems that poetry that so deliberately pursues the ahistorical is like a sculptor of abstract human figures who does not know the feeling of others' bodies. Poetry is intimately ideological. Poetry with historical shells (cf. Hokusai's ghost) runs away from the problem of our context here and seeks to import one for inspirational nourishment. Fine, but it is not easy to graft traditions; it can be done. Becoming somewhat familiar with how this process occurred in 19 th century Japan with Western culture and poetry in particular, I would be happy to share my research. I think that more research on Japanese poetic discourse will help show how American imitations display shortcomings in terms of understanding the breadth of Japanese cultures (not all courtly or sacerdotal) and more developed understanding of Japanese rhetoric/poetics (this is no one's fault but mine - I'd be happy to develop my work on this if there is an interest in it).

Japanese poetry is not all good-natured (plenty of back-stabbing, sarcasm, and puns, many of these as political attacks)... is not all jovial, Buddha-nature-bearing childishly innocent (=truth = no mind = constant nothing) Way, and of course, very very few Japanese poems have a flying chance of alluding to "the sound of one hand swatting the frog into water: bleep" poetic that gets so much mileage.

One more item:

Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then, preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:

I really like this image, movement; however the diction does smack of the archaic ("Weary" [why not "tired"]) and of direct translation of Japanese or Chinese ("great"), and that is what can be called "playing the Orientalist card." If we really have respect for Asian cultures, the least we can do is not stereotype the language used in association with them (Buddhism, haibun, etc.). This is the legacy of bad translations and imitations (cf. the common use of "Chinatown," and the obsolete "Chinaman" - when used, were these celebrating Chinese culture or alienating and cordoning it off from the mainstream?). Similar issues exist today, just as obvious if you look for them.

dean brink

interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

100. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Mon 8 Dec 1997

On Mon, 8 Dec 1997, Dean A. Brink wrote:

> But as it stands, even if we were to put aside the "defense of > Orientalism" rhetoric framing your piece,
> there are so many issues regarding the application of genres and voices,
> it would seem hard to overcome > the 'pathos for feeling deeply' that is so overdramatized in Western > emulations and so beautiful in > Classical Japanese poetry, i.e. waka (modern Japanese poetry is another > can of genres).
>

Except that it is precisely _not_ about feeling deeply but about surfaces. Nor is it a defense of Orientalism; this is your charge - Orientalism - and therefore you create a Lyotardian differend here - to respond or not to respond. I have no thought except you misunderstood this, and probably the Fukuoka novel I wrote (which includes llamas) and sent to the list - not to mention the Jennifer/Julu materials.

These are fictions in a deeper sense - not pathos in a deeper sense - not feelings in a deeper sense - than you give credit for..

> problem is that Anglo-American poetry continues to locate Asia or Asian > cultures as a Shangri-La of inspiration, a safe haven for the Muses > driven out by the Enlightenment from Parnassus. The inspiration is often > very sweet and sometimes mushy; the pathos is presented (and defended) as > a form of antiIntellectualism that sings spiritual truths in its own way > by right of irrationality (which I can respect). It can seem to seek to > push itself on the reader like a child writing for mommy and shaking on > an apron. This is where the Orientalist pathos at least seems to go.
> Maybe all poetry is an apron thing.
>
Except again that I am not espousing spiritual truths, and this work is connected with the other Clara-pieces ("Novel," and earlier stuff going back to Disorders of the Real).

My own thinking is the opposite; Japanese work off of Disneyland and all sorts of Amerikan-cultural objects/aspects here without a problem. Now do you call this Occidentalism, critique it the same way? I think that Japan, whatever, must be precious for you, untouchable - that any referencing is seen as an invasion. That it's _your_ territory.

By the way since Said's book at the least, I don't know the reference to "Orientalist" which needs deconstruction as well, or am I missing some- thing here?

> What makes me cringe at (Orientalist) poetry is how it confuses historical escape with the literary (in the old-fashioned New Critical sense to boot). Such work only waters down the intensity of poetry and its cultural life (semiotic, discursive, peripheral...), relies on tropes of ambiguity and diffusion. In the long haul, we need more than distraction in poetry.

This is an entirely different issue. I have used tropes of ambiguity and diffusion and for that matter so have Derrida and Jabes. Or do you find "Oriental poetry" whatever that is, full of them?

I _like_ diffusion in poetry, the spread of the word into the field, blahblah. (Blahblah reminds me so does Heiner Muller - it's not just a one-way street.)

Isn't that the idea of it: It seems that poetry > that so deliberately pursues the ahistorical is like a sculptor of > abstract human figures who does not know the feeling of others' bodies.

> Poetry is intimately ideological. Poetry with historical shells (cf.
> Hokusai's ghost) runs away from the problem of our context here and seeks > to import one for inspirational nourishment.

Hokusai's ghost is less a shell if you live next to a cemetary here, which I do. But of course it's easier for an "Orientalist" to prejudge.

And "deliberately pursues the ahistorical" - no - just _might be_ a-hist- orical. Such as language poetry. I remember Clark Coolidge referencing the deaths of some spelunkers in Flag Flutter... He didn't know them - all the way from another state. Is that ok?

Fine, but it is not easy to > graft traditions; it can be done.

Except I'm not "grafting traditions." Using a haiku for an english number count critiques haiku, inserting words of english-trite-haiku in the midst to point that out, go-moku as a scatter across it, since gaijin can at best play that without much skill.

> Becoming somewhat familiar with how this process occurred in 19 th century Japan with Western culture and poetry in particular, I would be happy to share my research. I think that more research on Japanese poetic discourse will help show how American imitations display shortcomings in terms of understanding the breadth of Japanese cultures (not all courtly or sacerdotal) and more developed understanding of Japanese rhetoric/poetics (this is no one's fault but mine - I'd be happy to develop my work on this if there is an interest in it).

There is an interest in it from this party at least, but not in relation to my work being called "American imitations," since again I feel you are totally missing the point. You read my material as "Orientalist" and then proceed to build upon this imaginary model (which holds almost nowhere today).
>
> Japanese poetry is not all good-natured (plenty of back-stabbing, > sarcasm, and puns, many of these as political attacks)... is not all > jovial, Buddha-nature-bearing childishly innocent (=truth = no mind = > constant nothing) Way, and of course, very very few Japanese poems have a > flying chance of alluding to "the sound of one hand swatting the frog > into water: bleep" poetic that gets so much mileage.

I think this goes without saying. Nor is all Japanese poetry Buddhist. Nor does all Japanese poetry ignore Western models and subject matters. But of course that is a matter for Occidentalists to critique and misunderstand.

Alan

> One more item:
>
> Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then,
> preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:
>
> I really like this image, movement; however the diction does smack of the archaic ("Weary" [why not "tired"]) and of direct translation of Japanese or Chinese ("great"), and that is what can be called "playing the Orientalist card." If we really have respect for Asian cultures, the least we can do is not stereotype the language used in association with them (Buddhism, haibun, etc.). This is the legacy of bad translations and imitations (cf. the common use of "Chinatown," and the obsolete "Chinaman" - when used, were these celebrating Chinese culture or alienating and cordoning it off from the mainstream?). Similar issues exist today, just as obvious if you look for them.
>
> dean brink
>
> [redacted]
>
> interpoetics - poetry of Asia and the Pacific Rim
> www.w-link.net/~dean/interpoetics/index.html

↑ Index

101. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Mon 8 Dec 1997

> >
> > One more item:
> >
> > Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then,
> > preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:
> >
> > I really like this image, movement; however the diction does smack of the > > archaic ("Weary" [why not "tired"]) and of direct translation of Japanese > > or Chinese ("great"), and that is what can be called "playing the > > Orientalist card." If we really have respect for Asian cultures, the > > least we can do is not stereotype the language used in association with > > them (Buddhism, haibun, etc.). This is the legacy of bad translations and > > imitations (cf. the common use of "Chinatown," and the obsolete

> > "Chinaman" - when used, were these celebrating Chinese culture or > > alienating and cordoning it off from the mainstream?). Similar issues > > exist today, just as obvious if you look for them.
> >
Just want to point out you might on the other hand see these lines working off of past Japanista translations, not off of contemporary Japan.
"Weary" works fine in either case; "great" would reference other misrecognitions among those who considered themselves literalists.

But of course if you hold to the purity of Japan, you are completely correct, and one _must_ use colloquial Americanisms (not English) as well.

Alan

↑ Index

102. Harold Rhenisch

Re: Poet to bring out creativity in retail staff

Tue 9 Dec 1997

Ode to Marks & Spencer

Mark sands pence her arc re ate if peep hole who's hell
argh guile sock sly Kell he ought died for end heeze a poe et they sell frau zen fish hand chip stew wit is all it tell ling land end ding land is a land dove poe et tree is in its till now?

bye, hair rolled wren niche

↑ Index

103. Mark Weiss

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Tue 9 Dec 1997

There's some smoke and mirrors here. I'll say my piece as clearly as I can, then I'm outa this. I don't give a damn about the political ramifications of what you do. You can write as whatever you want--we call that fiction. But it raises questions when the details of place and time are lifted from a turn-of-the-century japonisme that would have been acceptable in an edwardian interior decorator or, say, in the Mahler (actually chinoiserie) of Das Lied, or even Gilbert and Sullivan--they didn't know any better--the orient was unfamiliar enough to be a stand-in for never-never land. The daily lives of Japanese people, and their own view of their past, is everywhere accessible to us, whether in news reports, japanese fiction, films, what have you--they have their own voices, and it takes a willful blindness nowadays not to hear them. That's why the foreign as decorative element can appear, as I think it does in your latest attempt, merely decorative, which is certainly taking another culture rather lightly. If you're going to write from a japanese persona, in other words, you might want to be a bit more rigorous with yourself.

At 11:06 AM 12/9/97 +0900, you wrote:
>On Mon, 8 Dec 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
>> I enter where I have no business, but so be it. Perhaps what some find >> offensive is their familiar world being transformed by those to whom it is >> less familiar into a kind of science fiction (perhaps they feel that the >> daily lives of others are too available at this juncture to be treated >> without irony as exotica.) For myself the familiar so transforms itself >> often enough to keep me busy.
>>
>It also depends on what is familiar. I am writing from the position of >being a gaijin, so what is familiar is also unfamiliar and vice versa.
>It's not exotica for me, nor is it alien, nor is it not exotica, nor is it >not alien.
>
>It is similar to a situation expressed in Quebecois literature all the way >back through Chamberland, but here there is a differentiation between else >and other based on language and entrance.
>
>I might add that Japanese writers write about and/or "American" as well, >without PC censors around; I might also add that perhaps imperialisms have >to be deconstructed here, as well as colonialisms in regard to these >"nations" among others, but then again I am no expert on American history >either.
>
>Alan
>
>

↑ Index

104. Louis Cabri

Re: Poet to spit shine Line of Okay one-on-one

Tue 9 Dec 1997

Swelabou miorebies,

ma/mu. Ubjelectrak yut alkultuon acticaduy, illompticus
"Touchable Executive": Ablex Cutter Ouch.

Mimpizmistule golgolimous "chex blechutts." RodyptEE! EW!
Ortnid ont yoofsters. --Chouch.

Esnoks,

↑ Index

105. Mark Wallace

Re[2]: primitive publications (fwd)

Tue 9 Dec 1997

The following is information about primitive publications, for those interested after Steven Marks' ABR review.

primitive publications is a press dedicated to historically influenced literature. It is the mission of this press to highlight those works with an innovative and challenging focus on history and literature. Cost of one chapbook is $4.00, or $20.00 for a subscription of six. Titles include:

"The History of the State May Last, 1616" by Mary Hilton
"The Haunted Baronet" by Mark Wallace
"Lead, Glass and Poppy" by Kristin Prevallet
"Why I Am Not a Christian" by Jefferson Hansen
"Taken" by Sherry Brennan
"Saunter" by Joshua McKinney (forthcoming)

All checks should be made payable to Mary Hilton and mailed to:

primitive publications
c/o Mary Hilton, editor
1706 U Street, NW, #102
Washington, DC 20009
e-mail: [redacted] or [redacted]

Inquires, submissions for the 1998 season, or requests to be included on the mailing list are welcome. Thank you for your interest.

↑ Index

106. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)
Tue 9 Dec 1997

This is also my last comment here. I am _not_ writing from the viewpoint of a japanese persona, 1. as was pointed out ; and 2. where do you ever get the idea that the daily life etc. is everywhere accessible to us, when in fact translations are heavily english to japanese and very little the other way around?

As far as "lifted," I've "lifted" Hokusai for about 30 years now in any case. I've also "lifted" Lautreamont who unfortunately is also last century.

As far as lightweight goes, of course. I can't argue with this.

Alan

On Tue, 9 Dec 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> There's some smoke and mirrors here. I'll say my piece as clearly as I can, then I'm outa this. I don't give a damn about the political ramifications of what you do. You can write as whatever you want--we call that fiction. But it raises questions when the details of place and time are lifted from a turn-of-the-century japonisme that would have been acceptable in an edwardian interior decorator or, say, in the Mahler (actually chinoiserie) of Das Lied, or even Gilbert and Sullivan--they didn't know any better--the orient was unfamiliar enough to be a stand-in for never-never land. The daily lives of Japanese people, and their own view of their past, is everywhere accessible to us, whether in news reports, japanese fiction, films, what have you--they have their own voices, and it takes a willful blindness nowadays not to hear them. That's why the foreign as decorative element can appear, as I think it does in your latest attempt, merely decorative, which is certainly taking another culture rather lightly. If you're going to write from a japanese persona, in other words, you might want to be a bit more rigorous with yourself.
>
> At 11:06 AM 12/9/97 +0900, you wrote:
> On Mon, 8 Dec 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> I enter where I have no business, but so be it. Perhaps what some find offensive is their familiar world being transformed by those to whom it is less familiar into a kind of science fiction (perhaps they feel that the daily lives of others are too available at this juncture to be treated without irony as exotica.) For myself the familiar so transforms itself often enough to keep me busy.
>
> It also depends on what is familiar. I am writing from the position of being a gaijin, so what is familiar is also unfamiliar and vice versa. It's not exotica for me, nor is it alien, nor is it not exotica, nor is it > not alien.

>
> It is similar to a situation expressed in Quebecois literature all the way back through Chamberland, but here there is a differentiation between else and other based on language and entrance.
>
> I might add that Japanese writers write about and/or "American" as well, without PC censors around; I might also add that perhaps imperialisms have to be deconstructed here, as well as colonialisms in regard to these "nations" among others, but then again I am no expert on American history either.
>
> Alan

↑ Index

107. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Iroiro
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Well, I feel I have been sufficiently
chastened and it makes me sick to my stomach.
So see, it's ok to write out of Lautreamont or take say Gertrude Stein apart (yes, I've spoofed her and it's in archives now), but God forbid we touch other cultures because after all they're precious and we should only work out of contemporary otherness, or maybe not even that. So I will watch my words carefully on this list, as far as the politics go,
I didn't give a fuck about them but brought them up in response to Dean and you, see? But it's clear now, what's acceptable to the poetics
community and I stand corrected.

No more of this fucking shit will pass your way!

Alan, PC to the hilt.

(You shoulda said something about the _novel_
for chrissake - I made a big mistake - there are no llamas here not even lamas.)

↑ Index

108. KENT JOHNSON
Orientalist haibun
Tue 9 Dec 1997

This is all fascinating stuff and pretty complex. eh? More complex than the great suspended sword of "Orientalism," which kind of makes everyone shut-up and mind their manners at the table... But good on Dean Brink for the thoughtful reply, and wow to gaijin Sondheim, who comes spinning like a Noh-top out of the Seventh Underworld!

Just a quick question before running to class: Mark Wallace wrote-- "If you're going to write from a Japanese persona, in other words, you might want to be a bit more rigorous with yourself."

The wild irony of calling on Sondheim to be "more rigorous" with himself aside, this raises an interesting question, at least for me: Wouldn't being "more rigorous" in this context perhaps mean, in part, a deconstruction of essences--an effort toward a showing of the Western in the Eastern, and vice-versa, and the fascinating complications, paradoxes, and poetic propellants such volatile mixtures create? I ask, because infamous Japanese persona Yasusada has been lambasted _both_ for being essentialist in an Orientalist way (see Dean's earlier posts, for example) and for his obvious and shameful corruptions of Japanese cultural and poetic conventions. It would seem (or am I wrong--_how should_ one do it, Mark?) that when it comes to inhabiting a cross-cultural persona--or having that persona inhabit you--that you (plural) just can't win. Kent

↑ Index

109. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: invitation to women writers
Tue 9 Dec 1997

In message <[redacted]>, MLWeber <[redacted]> wrote:
> I edit Sugar Mule, a literary magazine.
>
> The upcoming issue (#4) will be composed of women's > writing with an emphasis on the natural world.
>
I read this post and it brings up a topic of socio/politcal interest. When submitting work in response to calls from literary magazines that are open to all comers, do women writers still feel disadvantaged? Also, do women writers feel more constrained about submitting work that speaks from a woman's point of view and, or about women's issues. Of course, I'm no longer sure that women's issue's aren't also men's issues.

Jerry.=

↑ Index

110. aerialedge
upcoming DC readings
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Saturday Dec 13th 7:30

Kristen Prevallet
& Rod Smith

Ruthless Grip Art Project
1508 U St NW near 15th & U

Sunday Dec 14th 8 PM

Anselm Hollo
& Anselm Berrigan

Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
[redacted]

Sunday December 21, 3 PM

Chris Mann
& Graham Faust

DCAC (District of Columbia Arts Center)
2438 18th St NW
near 18th & Columbia

↑ Index

111. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Iroiro
Tue 9 Dec 1997

It distresses me that Alan Sondheim feels so distressed. I greatly value his unique contributions to this List, which are as innovative and bracing as any writing being done today. Please, Alan, do not censor yourself on Dean Brink's or anyone else's account.

As for Dean Brink's criticisms, they are, I'm sure, valid as far as they go with respect to Orientalism per se. I think, though, the project Alan has in mind is altogether different in intention, that is, it has little interest in merely reproducing Japanese figures of speech as a way to evoke "the otherness of the Orient," with all the colonial nostalgia that implies, but rather uses these tropes to arrive at a reconfigured pastiche in which the language (process) itself is the focus, and which, as a by-product, offer a critique of those nostalgias, the way they articulate an impossible desire: an erotics of the Other.

In one way, at least, his recent poems here (and Kent Johnson's last incredible post), function as deliberate parodies of the style of translation which Dean condemns. For instance, Kent's witty mention of Witter Bynner. Far from encouraging a stereotypical deployment of Oriental tropes, Alan and Kent have problematized the way we read the idea of the East. The playfulness of their language points up the linguistic opacity of the Other.

How do others read this?
Patrick Pritchett

From: Alan Myouka Sondheim
To: POETICS
Subject: Iroiro
Date: Tuesday, December 09, 1997 11:20AM

Well, I feel I have been sufficiently
chastened and it makes me sick to my stomach.
So see, it's ok to write out of Lautreamont
or take say Gertrude Stein apart (yes, I've spoofed her and it's in archives now), but God forbid we touch other cultures because
after all they're precious and we should only
work out of contemporary otherness, or maybe
not even that. So I will watch my words carefully on this list, as far as the politics go,
I didn't give a fuck about them but brought them
up in response to Dean and you, see? But it's clear now, what's acceptable to the poetics
community and I stand corrected.

No more of this fucking shit will pass your way!

Alan, PC to the hilt.

↑ Index

112. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Iroiro

Tue 9 Dec 1997

On Dec 9, 11:50pm, Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:
> Subject: Iroiro
> Well, I feel I have been sufficiently
> chastened and it makes me sick to my stomach.
> So see, it's ok to write out of Lautreamont
> or take say Gertrude Stein apart (yes, I've > spoofed her and it's in archives now), but > God forbid we touch other cultures because
> after all they're precious and we should only
> work out of contemporary otherness, or maybe
> not even that. So I will watch my words care> fully on this list, as far as the politics go,
> I didn't give a fuck about them but brought them
> up in response to Dean and you, see? But it's > clear now, what's acceptable to the poetics
> community and I stand corrected.
>
> No more of this fucking shit will pass your way!
>
> Alan, PC to the hilt.
>
> (You shoulda said something about the _novel_
> for chrissake - I made a big mistake - there are > no llamas here not even lamas.)
>-- End of excerpt from Alan Myouka Sondheim

I hate to see this kind of cultural censorship done in the name of patronage and preservation of social/cultural realism.

Alan, I hope you still feel that you can do whatever you like here: you can spoof, deconstruct, empathize with no one in particular, get in and out of the crossed-up cultural, be willfully blind, willfully take another culture lightly, take exception to poetry as "intimately ideological," decorate the foreign, foreignize the decorative, be rather nonintimately ideo-logical, but whatever you do, don't be rigorous with yourself!

The tasteful and intellectual nomination of culture is whimsical in itself.

We still need distraction. This especially from the boring, authorized pc representations of culture that only serve as useful for a short time (until the wheels fall of of the bandwagon).

William Burmeister

↑ Index

113. KENT JOHNSON
Orientalist haibun
Tue 9 Dec 1997

On 9 December, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Pastiche is still pastiche, regardless of theory, and I suppose some like that sort of thing. But it does raise a different issue: the publication of one's poetry on the list...If I want my friends to see a new piece because I'm wild with excitement about it I backchannel: seems more appropriate."

Mark:

I don't believe I've ever posted a poem to the list, though I am certainly thankful that people with greater imaginations than my own (like Alan Sondheim) do.

My "Orientalist haibun" post was not intended as a poem; it was a reply to Dean Brink.

Kent

↑ Index

114. david bromige
The Right Blonde
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Someone backchanelled me re my posting about this poem, & made me realize I was putting a great deal on a reader of my post, to arrive at my intention for it. So, to clarify : I believed the poem to be a parody of a Michael Palmer poem (the "MP" threw me that notion, and the techniques employed in the poem supported it), and I thought that I was at once going along with this parody (it _was_ funny, to imagine that Michael Palmer might have written it ; the mixture of likeliness and unlikeliness is appealing, as in one of his "False Portrait" poems, like the notion that I share traits with Pagannini) _and_ calling its author, "O, sure, sure, _that's_ an MP poem?" At no time did I think it _was_, and at no time would I think it was a "big step forward" for the poet of "Ecolalia". But some of the poems in "At Passages" disclose a more demotic flatness of surface than before, therefore it was just barely likely and thus, I thought, a skilful parody. All that aside, now I know it is the work of the MP called Mark Peters, I congratulate him on a striking poem that can certainly stand on its own. I look forward to reading more of his work, and I thank Kenneth Goldsmith for bringing it to our attention. David

↑ Index

115. William Marsh

Re: invitation to women writers

Tue 9 Dec 1997

At 04:27 PM 12/9/97 GMT, Jerry wrote:

>In message <[redacted]>, MLWeber <[redacted]> wrote:
>> I edit Sugar Mule, a literary magazine.
>>
>> The upcoming issue (#4) will be composed of women's >> writing with an emphasis on the natural world.
>>
>I read this post and it brings up a topic of socio/politcal interest.
When submitting work in response to calls from literary magazines that are open to all comers, do women writers still feel disadvantaged?

this issue has come up before on this list and i'm sure a few contributors will respond in the positive, that women are still at least under-represented or excluded if not "disadvantaged" / i think there are still (and will always be) exclusionary practices in the literary marketplace, and good reason obviously to identify them and to counteract with publications that represent under-represented work

frankly, i'm more concerned with those moments when editorial practices are misconstrued as gender (or race or age or "camp") biased when there's no supporting evidence / a female colleague of mine said she was convinced her poem about her recent hysterectomy was rejected because the editor was male / i don't know if she considered other possible reasons, but she certainly didn't mention them / the politics of that statement bother me / don't know who the editor was, or the mag, so i admit my example is problematic, but nonetheless the "male editor" was stereotyped concerned as well with those moments when clearly-stated editorial biases (interests, slants)--"women's writing with an emphasis on the natural world", for example--are not explained / should it be obvious to me (the tenor of Jerry's question suggests that it isn't to all readers) why an issue-focus of this kind is (still) necessary? / in other words, is it the editor's responsibility to explain inclusions/exclusions (of whatever kind) when posting calls to a list of this kind?

bill marsh

↑ Index

116. Mark Weiss
Re: Orientalist haibun
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Whileeading your post I felt a sudden rush of power: I could say anything I want and Mark Wallace would have to answer for it! Like Claude Rains in the invisible man. But I thought better of it. Wallace has enough responsibilities, and he bears the same last name as my favorite prof from college. 'Twas I killed cock robin. This may be a matter of taste. Pastiche is still pastiche, regardless of theory, and I suppose some like that sort of thing. But it does raise a different issue: the publication of one's poetry on the list. This usually arouses all the passions one would expect in an exceedingly polite gathering of friends, where little serious demur is likely to be voiced. If I want my friends to see a new piece because I'm wild with excitement about it I backchannel: seems more appropriate. But this is a forum to use as one wishes. Nuff said.

Mark Weiss

At 09:59 AM 12/9/97 -0500, you wrote:
>This is all fascinating stuff and pretty complex. eh? More complex >than the great suspended sword of "Orientalism," which kind of makes >everyone shut-up and mind their manners at the table... But good on >Dean Brink for the thoughtful reply, and wow to gaijin Sondheim, who >comes spinning like a Noh-top out of the Seventh Underworld!
>
>Just a quick question before running to class: Mark Wallace wrote--
>"If you're going to write from a Japanese persona, in other words, >you might want to be a bit more rigorous with yourself."
>
>The wild irony of calling on Sondheim to be "more rigorous" with >himself aside, this raises an interesting question, at least for me:
>Wouldn't being "more rigorous" in this context perhaps mean, in part, >a deconstruction of essences--an effort toward a showing of the >Western in the Eastern, and vice-versa, and the fascinating >complications, paradoxes, and poetic propellants such volatile >mixtures create? I ask, because infamous Japanese persona Yasusada >has been lambasted _both_ for being essentialist in an Orientalist >way (see Dean's earlier posts, for example) and for his obvious and >shameful corruptions of Japanese cultural and poetic conventions. It >would seem (or am I wrong--_how should_ one do it, Mark?) that when >it comes to inhabiting a cross-cultural persona--or having that >persona inhabit you--that you (plural) just can't win.
>Kent

>
>

↑ Index

117. Rosemary Ceravolo
Re: CERAVOLO pronunciation
Tue 9 Dec 1997

As Joe's spouse, then widow, I can verify without a doubt that our surname is correctly pronounced: Che RA' vo lo.
However, we were both aware of the many mispronunciations commonly made by those unfamiliar with the Italian language.

In any case, his Poetry is the thing, not what's in a name.

Rosemary Ceravolo
.....
On Sat, 6 Dec 1997, joel lewis wrote:

> Dear list, is the name of the late author of "Ho Ho Ho Caribou" > pronounced:
>
> a) ce RA vo lo
>
> b) ce ra VO lo
>
> c) Throat-wobbler Mangrove?
>
> gwen --
>
> i knew joe (fellow jersey poet) and he said that he accepted both the a & b > pronunciation, don't know about "c", tho'
>
> joel lewis

↑ Index

118. Gwyn McVay
Re: Orientalist haibun
Tue 9 Dec 1997

It semeth me that one can study old Japanese forms, hokku, waka, etc. (although I would make a case for renga as having transcended its historical moment) while simply recognizing it as such--I don't believe a Japanese student of Chaucer would be left with the impression that the English now go around saying things like "Tehe, quod she, and clapte the window to."

It semeth me as well that the deliberate holes in Yasusada pointed out in Perloff's excellent essay--the Paul Celan anachronism, for example--make the whole project more interesting to me than an actual slavish imitation of then-current forms.

Gwyn

↑ Index

119. Mark Weiss
Re: Orientalist haibun
Tue 9 Dec 1997

My apologies. I should be more careful when I'm up past my bedtime.

At 01:15 PM 12/9/97 -0500, you wrote:
>On 9 December, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
>>Pastiche is still pastiche, regardless of theory, and I suppose some >>like that sort of thing. But it does raise a different issue: the >>publication of one's poetry on the list...If I want my friends to >>see a new piece because I'm wild with excitement about it I >>backchannel: seems more appropriate."
>
>Mark:
>
>I don't believe I've ever posted a poem to the list, though I am >certainly thankful that people with greater imaginations than my >own (like Alan Sondheim) do.
>
>My "Orientalist haibun" post was not intended as a poem; it was a >reply to Dean Brink.
>
>Kent
>
>

↑ Index

120. Brent Long
Suggestions?
Tue 9 Dec 1997

I have recently become interested in a style of writing called "pantoum". I am asking for suggestions from those of you familiar with this style as to whom I should try reading in the hopes of a better understanding of its structure.

Thanks in advance,

Brent

↑ Index

121. J. Tate
Keats
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Has anyone come across a poem or series of poems that dramatizes Keats's time as a med student?

Thanks in advance,

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
Department of English
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

122. tristan saldana
Re: Suggestions?
Tue 9 Dec 1997

I'd like to know what patoum writing is too.

Tristan

On Tue, 9 Dec 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> I have recently become interested in a style of writing called "pantoum". I am asking for suggestions from those of you familiar with this style as to whom I should try reading in the hopes of a better understanding of its structure.
>
> Thanks in advance,
>
> Brent

↑ Index

123. Jena Osman
new Lauterbach book
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Ann Lauterbach has asked that I announce to the list the arrival of her new book, _On A Stair_, just out from Penguin.

Please look out for it.

Jena Osman
[redacted]

↑ Index

124. Jordan Davis
Re: Suggestions?
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Brent, if you have an apple][handy Teachers & Writers published long ago a pantoum video game -- I mean a pantoum-writing program. Some writers who have done nice things with the genre are John Ashbery ("Hotel Lautreamont" is a pretty good example) and David Shapiro ("From Malay"). Personally, I get a little manic in the presence of pantoums, which remind me of Ronald Reagan.

Best of luck,
Jordan "Louis-Cabri-bait"

At 3:57 PM -0500 12/9/97, Brent Long wrote:
>I have recently become interested in a style of writing called "pantoum".
>I am asking for suggestions from those of you familiar with this style as >to whom I should try reading in the hopes of a better understanding of its >structure.
>
>Thanks in advance,
>
>Brent

↑ Index

125. Safdie Joseph
Re: Keats
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Try "The Life of John Keats" by Tom Clark -- don't know, however, if it was published as a separate book or exists only in little magazines. I'll try and find out.

> Has anyone come across a poem or series of poems that dramatizes
> Keats's
> time as a med student?
>
> Thanks in advance,
>
> Joseph Tate
> Graduate Student
> Department of English

> U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

126. Robin Morris
Re: Keats
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Amy Clampitt has a series on Keats in _What the Light Was Like_. Sorry, I don't have time to check to see if it encompasses his medical studies.

Robin

At 01:33 PM 12/9/97 -0800, you wrote:
>Has anyone come across a poem or series of poems that dramatizes Keats's >time as a med student?
>
>Thanks in advance,
>
>Joseph Tate
>Graduate Student
>Department of English
>U. of Washington, Seattle
>
>

* * * * * * * * *

Robin A. Morris
[redacted]
Home page: http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~ramorris

↑ Index

127. KENT JOHNSON
The Nation
Tue 9 Dec 1997

This may have been posted already, but just in case: Eliot Weinberger has a moving tribute to James Laughlin in the Dec. 15 Nation. It's full of fun anecdotes and makes the plain case that Laughlin is one of the central reasons that we all are, well, "here," reading and thinking about writing (with all of our differences) as we do. EW gives "The List" of who Laughlin gave us, and it's an amazing, amazing thing. Do check it out.

Kent

↑ Index

128. Stacie E. Slotnick
Re: Keats and pantoums
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Both Robert Pack and Linda Pastan have written pantoums, and I can't remember either of the titles (they read them about 4 years ago when I was at the Breadloaf W.C.). They might be in the Breadloaf Anthology.

John Burt, in his book Work without Hope, has a poem about Keats called "Love and Fame" that's definitely worth looking at.

Stacie Slotnick
Brandeis University Department of English & American Literature
Waltham, MA 02254
[redacted]

It's a baffle, I said only yesterday.
Then I raised my beer glass
And invited everyone present
To drink to my future happiness,
When the bartender asked me
To please stop making a disturbance. --Charles Simic

↑ Index

129. Pritchett,Pat
Re: new Lauterbach book
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Thanks for that announcement, Jena Osman. In fact, I was browsing last night at a local booksellers, saw a single copy of it on the shelves, and snapped it up at once. What I've read so far is pretty wonderful - esp. the Invocation for Bernadette Mayer.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Jena Osman
To: POETICS
Subject: new Lauterbach book
Date: Tuesday, December 09, 1997 6:10PM

Ann Lauterbach has asked that I announce to the list the arrival of her new book, _On A Stair_, just out from Penguin.

Please look out for it.

Jena Osman
[redacted]

↑ Index

130. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Keats
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Believe, Joe, that was called "Junkets on a Sad Planet," pub. by Black Swallow. The first word of the title being a pun of Keats on his own name.
Patrick Pritchett

From: Safdie Joseph
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Keats
Date: Tuesday, December 09, 1997 6:10PM

Try "The Life of John Keats" by Tom Clark -- don't know, however, if it was published as a separate book or exists only in little magazines. I'll try and find out.

↑ Index

131. David Gitin
Re: Keats
Tue 9 Dec 1997

JUNKETS ON A SAD PLANET (Black Sparrow)

↑ Index

132. CharSSmith
Re: Suggestions?
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Diane DiPrima has a pantoum in First Intensity #3.

--cs

↑ Index

133. Michael Magee
Re: new Lauterbach book
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Just a plug - I picked up Ann's book at Grollier's in Boston last week - it's really wonderful. -Mike.

According to Jena Osman:
>
> Ann Lauterbach has asked that I announce to the list the arrival of her > new book, _On A Stair_, just out from Penguin.
>
> Please look out for it.
>
> Jena Osman
> [redacted]
>

↑ Index

134. Shemurph
pantoum
Tue 9 Dec 1997

Brent Long,

You probably know of Anne Waldman's chapbook First Baby Poems. In that chap is a wonderful pantoum called "Baby's Pantoum" (or something close to that). It's a splendid example of the form. I've used the form on a few occasions, as have a number of people. I see in a recent letter from the poet Mary Rising Higgins (of Albuquerque) that she's just completed one. What do you want to know about the form?

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

135. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski poem beginning with a line from the Mickey Mouse Club
Wed 10 Dec 1997

CLENSED

you put the emPHAsis on the wrong syLAHble you find an acre pond the same color as my eyes do the dance that bad dance in a closed room with a big bonfire stoked by dozens of stunk &droned people dancing to industrial triphop accelerated beyond the metric system a galvanized synthetic heart beyond our tantrums the nerves would disguise though faster than light light thicker than water getting up from the mountain both sides of our river like a dinner table where a hundred of near relatives, former cohorts, keep appearing in dreams where i cant get where i need to go as if im being immunized with roadblocks & frustration to bear more gravity to peel away these bio-habits addicted to food to sleep addicted to having a body to seeing only through my eyes talking only with my mouth coz i know whats important cant be known to hold fire ignore it completely-- hold your fire hold your water your breath dont tread dive in through the bottom

swirls like a high speed laundromat-- the foam of stars the sopping wet mass of mislabeled vacuum
as matter is trapped vacuum/energy, energy is full of questions which are where every trip starts:
why not how come since when what if i dont want the planets in my head to turn into tumors. i can see so much with this alien technology learning from infection

it aint the meat, its the synthesis beaming in the suns entrails, shadows language stitched through rain
as a body turns fiber into landscapes embroidered into ecosystems demagnify complexitys curls before boiling/pressure simplifies by opening up, homogenizing the space
when walls can no longer hold their sideways and surrender to the straight-- no matter how often you wash a wall it only declines, itching to dance, to curve like windows

↑ Index

136. Rob Hardin
(no subject)
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Lists Global

↑ Index

137. John Tranter
Weinberger's Laughlin tribute also in Jacket # 2
Wed 10 Dec 1997

On Tue, 9 Dec 1997 17:59:09 -0500
KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> This may have been posted already, but just in case: Eliot Weinberger has a moving tribute to James Laughlin in the Dec. 15 Nation. It's full of fun anecdotes and makes the plain case that Laughlin is one of the central reasons that we all are, well, "here," reading and thinking about writing (with all of our differences) as we do. EW gives "The List" of who Laughlin gave us, and it's an amazing, amazing thing. Do check it out.

For those unable to get that issue of Nation, Mr Weinberger's tribute is reprinted in the free Internet magazine Jacket, issue # 2, at http:www.jacket.zip.com.au/jacket02/laughlin.html

regards,

from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

138. Mark foutu
Laughlin tribute in Cambridge
Wed 10 Dec 1997

TO ALL IN BOSTON:
WED. dec. 10th 730pm Yenching Auditorium 32 Divinity Ave
Harvard Univ.

W. Corbett Forrest Gander Roland Pease of Zoland Books and more in Tribute to Laughlin

↑ Index

139. Patricia Cockram
Re: invitation to women writers
Wed 10 Dec 1997

At 04:27 PM 12/9/97 +0000, Jerry E. Fletcher wrote:

>In message <[redacted]>, MLWeber <[redacted]> wrote:
>> I edit Sugar Mule, a literary magazine.
>>
>> The upcoming issue (#4) will be composed of women's >> writing with an emphasis on the natural world.
>>
>I read this post and it brings up a topic of socio/politcal interest. When submitting work in response to calls from literary magazines that are open to all comers, do women writers still feel disadvantaged? Also, do women writers feel more constrained about submitting work that speaks from a woman's point of view and, or about women's issues. Of course, I'm no longer sure that women's issue's aren't also men's issues.
>
They are. But until there is equity (real and perceived), under-represented groups need to promote themselves exclusively. Besides, we are talking here about one special issue of a journal. Do we know what the editorial policy is in general?
Patricia

↑ Index

140. david bromige
keats
Wed 10 Dec 1997

---

the book you want, I think, is by Tom Clark, published by Black Sparrow several years ago. Cant recall the title. David

↑ Index

141. Jerry E. Fletcher
Re: invitation to women writers
Wed 10 Dec 1997

> They are. But until there is equity (real and perceived), under-represented > groups need to promote themselves exclusively. Besides, we are talking here > about one special issue of a journal. Do we know what the editorial policy > is in general?
> Patricia

>
 I understand well the equity issue, both real and perceived. Its just that women writers seem both more in evidence and taken seriously today. I have no argument with special issues or even literary mags devoted exclusively to one sex or another, race, etc. But see more equity in some of the journals today than ten years ago. Personally, I think the quality of men's writing has gone down as their political issues diminish...nothing like a little war to get the machismo flowing, just as Bush.

Jerry=

↑ Index

142. Miekal And Re: Posting poems to the list
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Wonder how others feel.

imagine overhearing a radio in another room saying:

/where does poetics end & poems begin

/trust in selforganizing modes

/lick the back a da stamp before placing on envelope

/the question the acts the shelflife

/where's alan julu jennifer when ya need em

/criticism is recursive when the word speaks itself

/a whole lotta shruggin going on

1999: Emperor Norton declares Poetics listserv
a Temporary Autonomous Zone

Miekal

↑ Index

143. Sylvester Pollet
Re: Suggestions?
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Brent Long/Jordan Davis et al : if pantoums remind you of Ronald Reagan maybe you haven't seen Armand Schwerner's "The Crystal Skull Pantoums," Number 30 in the Backwoods Broadsides Chaplet Series, which I sent out in October, with #31, Amiri Baraka's "Past Present." The series is $10. year for 8 issues ppd., or these two for $2. Here's the opening of Armand's "The Salary"--"with material from Svetlana Alliluyeva's twenty letters to a friend, Tarthang Tulku's Time Space and Knowledge, & phrases from Wittgenstein (through Michael Heller)."

my father had his weaker side; he was capable of self-doubt we must pass from moment to moment but Lavrenty Beria was more practiced in perfidy than father Wittgenstein said "the aim of philosophy is not truth but kindness"

[Sylvester Pollet RR 5 Box 3630 Ellsworth ME 04605]

↑ Index

144. Maria Damon

Re: invitation to women writers

Wed 10 Dec 1997

At 11:41 AM +0000 12/10/97, Jerry E. Fletcher wrote:
>> They are. But until there is equity (real and perceived), under-represented >> groups need to promote themselves exclusively. Besides, we are talking here >> about one special issue of a journal. Do we know what the editorial policy >> is in general?
>> Patricia
>>
> I understand well the equity issue, both real and perceived. Its just >that women writers seem both more in evidence and taken seriously today.
>I have no argument with special issues or even literary mags devoted >exclusively to one sex or another, race, etc. But see more equity in some >of the journals today than ten years ago. Personally, I think the quality >of men's writing has gone down as their political issues >diminish...nothing like a little war to get the machismo flowing, just as >Bush.
>
>Jerry

there may be more parity than previously, but not enough. i was just at a conference that hosted 3 wonderful and important male poets and NOT ONE woman poet, though the poetic tendency or "school" the guys represented also can boast some eminent, accomplished and famous women. the progress, i think, is that the absence was glaring, esp to the guys themselves, whose friends and/or partners were not there. also, tho' (some few, like myself) women may be making some gains professionally, when balanced against the attack on reproductive rights, welfare etc and other political efforts to control women and keep them down, the matter of visibility at the cultural level comes to appear somewhat compensatory and selective; i.e. one woman is invited to appear on an MLA panel for every thousand women who lose their AFDC benefits.

↑ Index

145. Maria Damon
Re: keats
Wed 10 Dec 1997

---

i put this query to a friend who posted it on his romanticism list; here's what he got:

> Date: Tue, 9 Dec 1997 21:21:20 -0400
> To: Andrew Elfenbein
> From: [redacted] (Susan Wolfson)
> Subject: Keats
>
> Dear Andy,
>
> Your friend may be thinking of Tom Clarke's wonderful Junkets on a Sad Planet, which does K's whole life in a series of poems: 3 of them, "Morbidity," "Dark Commerce," and "Imagination" are about his term at Guy's Hospital.
>
> Best, Susan

↑ Index

146. lefthandb
New release from Left Hand Books
Wed 10 Dec 1997

CENTURY DEAD CENTER by George Economou paper; 128 pages + 4-page color insert; $15.00

Visit the Left Hand Books website <http://www.lefthandbooks.com/lhb> to read exerpts from CENTURY DEAD CENTER

CENTURY DEAD CENTER contains George Economou's prose, poetry, translations and visual art-a selection of work spanning eighteen years. The title piece drives home Walter Benjamin's claim, in THESES ON THE PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY, that "There is no document of civilization which is not at the same time a document of barbarism." In "Century Dead Center," the phantasmagorical information age eclipses the sleep of reason. "If the center has not held it's because it has become self-centrifugal and keeps the appearance of not running away altogether by clinging by its nails to its circumargin long enough to give the prophet a picture of immanent disaster. The archaeologist sees no such thing and keeps circling and diving. Whatever she can clutch radiates, a pressed flower that blooms in her head. Justitia still rides her circuit, knees gripped at a 45° tilt. And the mythomaniac concurs with them all by telling tales from the book of virus." Among the five paintings by George Economou reproduced in this book is "1892." It and its companion poem were made in response to Pierre Bonnard's painting "Crépuscule" or "La partie de croquet." The poem reflects the painting at the level of the simplest telling. Of the group at play depicted in Bonnard's painting, Economou writes: "Their pleasure at dusk / exists in the image he has pictured // of it for them-held back in the picture, / the ring of girls that almost slips his gaze / but stays, secure in the last light of dusk. / Serene mystery becomes the invention / of the carefree account of happiness / they figure un-invisibly for Pierre." George Economou was born in Great Falls, Montana, on September 24, 1934. He has published six books of poetry and several books on medieval literature. He has also published translations from ancient and modern Greek as well as from a number of medieval languages, most recently William Langland's PIERS PLOWMAN (University of Pennsylvania Press). His poems, translations, and criticism have appeared in many leading literary and scholarly journals. He has held fellowships for his writing from the New York Council for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Rockefeller Foundation. He earned his A.B. from Colgate University and his M.A. and Ph. D. from Columbia University. He is currently Professor of English at the University of Oklahoma and lives with his wife, poet-playwright Rochelle Owens, in Norman, Oklahoma and Wellfleet, Massachusetts.

Bryan McHugh, Director
LEFT HAND BOOKS
Station Hill Road
Barrytown, NY 12507
Fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

147. Annie Finch

Re: Orientalist haibun (with cups of sake four)

Wed 10 Dec 1997

I took this passage and the whole entry as a tongue-in-cheek parody of Orientalist cliches. You can't be saying this piss was meant seriously.

Annie

> One more item:
>
> Weary, I took a piss, making great steam in the Autumn grasses. Then, preparing ink on a large stone, I wrote:
>
> I really like this image, movement; however the diction does smack of the archaic ("Weary" [why not "tired"]) and of direct translation of Japanese or Chinese ("great"), and that is what can be called "playing the Orientalist card." If we really have respect for Asian cultures, the least we can do is not stereotype the language used in association with them (Buddhism, haibun, etc.). This is the legacy of bad translations and imitations (cf. the common use of "Chinatown," and the obsolete "Chinaman" - when used, were these celebrating Chinese culture or alienating and cordoning it off from the mainstream?). Similar issues exist today, just as obvious if you look for them.
>
> Just want to point out you might on the other hand see these lines working off of past Japanista translations, not off of contemporary Japan. "Weary" works fine in either case; "great" would reference other misrecognitions among those who considered themselves literalists.
>
> But of course if you hold to the purity of Japan, you are completely correct, and one _must_ use colloquial Americanisms (not English) as well.
>
> Alan

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

148. Annie Finch

Re: Suggestions?

Wed 10 Dec 1997

Brent, The anthology A Formal Feeling Comes, which I edited, has a good long pantoum by Anne Waldman accompanied by a description of how it is put together and her process of writing it. There is also a pantoum I like a lot by Nellie Wong in the same anthology. A poet named Vince Gotera has been doing a lot with pantoums and his recent books should include several of them.

Annie Finch

> I have recently become interested in a style of writing called "pantoum". I am asking for suggestions from those of you familiar with this style as to whom I should try reading in the hopes of a better understanding of its structure.

> Thanks in advance,
>
> Brent

Annie Finch (Homepage: http://www.muohio.edu/~finchar/)
Department of English
Miami University, Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

149. Brent Long
Re: pantoum
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Sheila,

I am interested in its exact structure (what are the rules, etc.) and its origin. Thanks in advacne for your help.

Brent Long

At 09:39 PM 12/9/97 EST, you wrote:
>Brent Long,
>
>You probably know of Anne Waldman's chapbook First Baby Poems. In that chap >is a wonderful pantoum called "Baby's Pantoum" (or something close to that).
>It's a splendid example of the form. I've used the form on a few occasions, >as have a number of people. I see in a recent letter from the poet Mary >Rising Higgins (of Albuquerque) that she's just completed one. What do you >want to know about the form?
>
>Sheila Murphy
>
>

↑ Index

150. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Iroiro
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Well, I do want to apologize for an outburst occasioned by a bad outbreak of fugu (blowfish, yes - I know, I know ...) in my stomach, nettling me above and below the Poetics list...

Meanwhile I do learn and think and shall continue another day.

Alan

(Fugu - "I was born between the taste of fugu and the fear of death." Fugu is a kind of fish eaten raw here - it can apparently kill you, if badly prepared.)

↑ Index

151. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Suggestions?
Wed 10 Dec 1997

On Tue, 9 Dec 1997, Brent Long wrote:

> I have recently become interested in a style of writing called "pantoum". I am asking for suggestions from those of you familiar with this style as to whom I should try reading in the hopes of a better understanding of its structure.
>
> Thanks in advance,
>
> Brent

Brent,

My first recommendation is that you check out the magazine Syntactics, edited here in Atlanta. Its editor John Lowther has been interested in pantoums over the past year; the first issue comes with a broadside discussing approaches to the pantoum (..these broadsides will be a regular feature of the mag, reflecting John's intense interest in formal frames and MacLovian procedural writing...)

There are copies of the first issue still available for $4.00:

[checks payable to John Lowther]
syntactics
P.O. Box 1381
Decatur GA 30031

Also the superb and underrecognized Armand Schwerner has just come out with a pantoum work as part of the Backwoods Broadsides series.

Ron Padgett and others designed a piece of software in 1989 called "Pantoum : Writing Game"--described as "creative writing software to create pantoums" in its OCLC cataloging record.

--Mark Prejsnar
atlanta

↑ Index

152. Jacques Debrot
Re: Posting poems to the list
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Frankly, I'm glad there isn't much poetry posted to the list. What's missing in this venue, obviously, is any editorial agency. I find that, while I'd never want the posts vetted in any way, I also feel that this function can be important & useful for creative work. Still, I'm not at all comfortable with the conservative implications of this. Wonder how others feel.

As it is there are few enough poems posted to the list that, for the poet, it's a little bit like leading with one's jaw, isn't it? Hurt feelings are inevitable I suppose, but it's also naive to imagine that any work will be received by the list with anything but, at the very best, a mixed response (because of diverse tastes, unfinished arguments, opportunities to posture, etc.).

↑ Index

153. Harold Rhenisch
Re: Machismo Bush
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Jerry E. Fletcher wrote:

> Personally, I think the quality of men's writing has gone down as their political issues diminish...

Do you mean that these political issues are diminishing or that men's perception or experience of or ability to frame these issues is diminishing?

> nothing like a little war to get the machismo flowing, just as Bush.

Is that what you mean by political issues?

Personally, I'd say there are political issues, the political issues are being ignored, and that this is, among other things, a problem of poetics.

I don't know how the Gulf War was perceived in the U.S.A. but up here in Canada it was perceived pretty cynically. That might be a political issue, but it is not machismo. Is it?

I'd be interested in hearing how the Gulf War was perceived in the U.S.A.

Machismo is a male political issue? Sure, but how do you mean? I feel you could say so much more on this, and I'd like to hear it.

Regards,

Harold Rhenisch
[redacted]

↑ Index

154. J. Tate
Thanks for Keats references
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Thanks to all for the timely responses to my question on Keats.

Best wishes,

Joseph Tate
Graduate Student
Department of English
U. of Washington, Seattle

↑ Index

155. tony lopez
Forwarded: sum temporaree home
Wed 10 Dec 1997

Organization: University of Plymouth
To: [redacted]
Date: Wed, 10 Dec 1997 11:36:32 BST
Priority normal
Subject: sum temporaree home
From: tony lopez <[redacted]>

I have recently received the latest Capilano Review series 2, no 23, Fall 97, which is a special issue on bill bissett, including poems, drawings, paintings by bissett (similar to Bryan Wynter's mescaline paintings) an interview with bissett by D McFadden and articles on bissett by various contributors including Susan Musgrave.
bissett an anti-authoritarian gay/bisexual poet who writes a kind of phonetic spelling poetry that resists various power games. He seems to have got stronger & stronger. Very interesting issue and a must for anyone wanting to know the range of Canadian writing.

Anyone who can order for a library please get it.

Capilano Review
2055 Purcell Way
North Vancouver
BC Canada
V7J 3H5

Editor Robert Sherrin.

TL

_____
Dr Tony Lopez
Reader in Poetry
University of Plymouth
Faculty of Arts & Education
Douglas Avenue
Exmouth
EX8 2AT
UK

tel: 1395 255418
fax: 1395 264196

_____

_____
Dr Tony Lopez
Reader in Poetry
University of Plymouth
Faculty of Arts & Education
Douglas Avenue
Exmouth
EX8 2AT
UK

tel: 1395 255418
fax: 1395 264196

_____

↑ Index

156. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Posting poems to the list

Wed 10 Dec 1997

On Dec 10, 10:59am, Jacques Debrot wrote:
> Subject: Re: Posting poems to the list > Frankly, I'm glad there isn't much poetry posted to the list. What's missing > in this venue, obviously, is any editorial agency. I find that, while I'd > never want the posts vetted in any way, I also feel that this function can be > important & useful for creative work. Still, I'm not at all comfortable with > the conservative implications of this. Wonder how others feel.
>
> As it is there are few enough poems posted to the list that, for the poet, > it's a little bit like leading with one's jaw, isn't it? Hurt feelings are > inevitable I suppose, but it's also naive to imagine that any work will be > received by the list with anything but, at the very best, a mixed response > (because of diverse tastes, unfinished arguments, opportunities to posture, > etc.).

>-- End of excerpt from Jacques Debrot

Probably for the best. Poetry on the list has usually been received in silence, which is not meant to necessarily imply indifference though that could be the case too (indifference as worse than open criticism?). Perhaps listmembers have vulcanized themselves against the temptation to balkanize around someone's list poems. I suppose it is unreasonable to expect universal agreement when posting poems to the list: in replying to/about them, one may appear to be nominating one poet to the perceived exclusion of another. Still the creative work continues. Yours is both an argument for and against this practice. And certainly, the mixed responses, diverse tastes, unfinished arguments, and so on are what poetry is about right? Criticism is included like the tax. It is essential, but is also creative writing in its own right and a dialog that is ongoing, never ending and certainly never final.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

157. Michael D Basinski

Re: Rakosi

Wed 10 Dec 1997

Joel Shatzky is looking for someone to write a 3,000 word essay on the work of Carl Rokosi. Some cash. Interested: Joel Shatzky -- [redacted] (Binghamton, N.Y.).

