bill, The same can in many cases _not_ be said about magazines (way back in NE America, prior to the new stamp rate, magazines were an extremely, like, local phenomenon: it was the _physical_ presence and nearness (rabid love affairs, thudding paperweight battles, and in one case an actual leg-biting [no dogs involved: author bit editor]) that made them go): physical nearness is sort of important to maga-zines. The curious thing about maga-zines is that a _physical_ community creates them. Meta-zines just don't have this: they have nothing to do with "community." Community, I guess I'm arguing, is a totally physical phenomenon; can't be numinous and stuff.

When it comes to maga-zines the community is already extant: the mag comes _from it_. Community is a PHYSICAL thing. Now I know that a lot of folks have a problem with the idea of Physicality. Physicality is something we've wrestled with since, like what?, Plotinus, Augustine? further back than that? It became THE bad bugaboo with Plotinus. So much talk about the internet and the great "body that is all one" (aum) is just more of the same old neo-platonic hopes, but with some new rabidity, zippy irony, and really fun binaries. Not arguing gainst binaries at all: they're great fun and quite useful dingies. So, I hate to say this but there's some historical residue of neo-platonic prudery and christian humanistic prudery clinging to the common e-zippy boosterism that flows from certain certains. Spicer was right to associate New Critics & denudedness & non-person-ness & boredom. NOt saying anything here about whether poetry works well on screen or not or if books are better etc etc: saying that we ought not place epimethean hopes in a promethean vessel.

Gabriel Gudding

↑ Index

89. Michael J. Kelleher
Re: Atopia
Mon 2 Mar 1998

Gabriel Gudding wrote:

> We can all pretend, as hard as we are able, that one can have an Atopian Community.
> It's a nice idea, but that's all. Atopia is another name for hell.

I don't recall yoking the words "atopia" and "community" together. I meant simply to say that here in this placelessness you read my voice and you might call that poetry. Might not. That's up to you. But you see it speaking to you on the screen and thus an extension of me here in Buffalo touches you in Indiana. Without the web you might (gratefully) never see my voice nor I (sadly) yours. Granted, it is not the voice of the poet speaking into your ear but neither is it not not the voice. It is the voice you see. Relations between physical parts physical beings change and our senses react to different sensations differently. That's the neo in it.

I like to read your voice. It's nice. Soothing, with a gentle mocking wit.

Atopic Synaesthesia has a nice ring to it.

> Read the ol Milton. Or don't they do that in Buffalo?

Milton is forbidden in Atopia. We read Dante and wear hairshirts on thursdays.

> If no readings took place at Black Mountain, you wouldn't have the Black > Mountain School. STop all readings in Buffalo for two semesters and see > what happens to the morale and the mettle of that program: it'll puff into > powder. The keyboard is nothing without that larynx above it.

It's true it's true.

But have you heard the sound files on the epc? It's the next best thing to spending 500 dollars to get on a plane to hear the Buffalonian larynxes. And it's free!

Atopia is not every place.
Atopia is not some place.
Atopia is not no place.
Atopia is not place.

Atopia is placelessness.

Truly,

#1332649785

↑ Index

90. laura and jeff

web publication, etc.

Mon 2 Mar 1998

---

i've been following the thread relating to this with interest...

methinks it comes down to this:
the web is good for wide opportunity and collective action. but the fact is:
we are living in a world that is quickly alienating itself from itself via any source it can. the web is adding to this is two major ways:
1) it gives the guise of communication, but with out any kind of physical relationship between those
"communicating" with each other. so no true communication can take place due to a lack of viceral stimulation between the people communicating (no body lang, eye contact, hearing a voice, etc).
2) with all of the voices crying out, no one is being heard.
it is not hard to see how these points relate to web-publication. esp when you add in the fact that web related things are not "real" in the sense that they are only bytes of information conveyed over energy waves. this does not stand up well to an actual page or a poets voice. and tho the networking possibilities are stagering, the easy out provided by the internet is destroying human social interaction. and with the destruction of social interaction, comes the destruction of art.
yet, here i am.
jeff.

> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
> there are only
> eyes in all heads
> to be looked out of
>
> -charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus > poems)

↑ Index

91. laura and jeff

Re: Writing in Public

Mon 2 Mar 1998

---

it never even occured to me that writting in public would be discussed. it's always seemed natural to me. i carry a notebook and a pen in my pocket at all times. jeff.

>In its court-affiliated forms and in numerous other social contexts >traditional Chinese poetry was very much a performance art. A bunch of >courtier poets would be trailing the Emperor and when he would propose a >topic, everyone would compete to come up with the best poem.
>
>On a somewhat lower social level lots of poetry would be composed on the >tongue in bars at parties, and frequently written up on the wall by the >author or whoever had the best calligraphy.
>
>Part of the point of inviting Li Bo (Li Po) over for drinks and dinner >was to watch him come up with a poem, and compete with the other poets >in the neighborhood.
>
>Of course this is writing in public in a different sense from Duncan, >Whalen or Blackburn on the bus, where they are outside and in a public >space, taking in but not necessarily displaying themselves in public. G.
>Apollinaire is an earlier example, e.g. Lundi Rue Christine. Edwin >Denby's aesthetic was "in public in private" and might be considered to >devolve from the same issue.
>
>Can one be both, writing in a public location privately and at the same >time performing publicly? Maybe the second poem in my chapbook "At >Baoshan" would be an example.
>

There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
there are only
eyes in all heads
to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

92. Chrsmccrry
Poems for the Millennium
Mon 2 Mar 1998

I was wondering if there's any news on the second volume of Poems for the Millennium. Is it still in the works? Any info would be appreciated...

Thanks--

Chris

↑ Index

93. Karen Kelley
Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you?)
Mon 2 Mar 1998

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>
>but to argue against doing things > with the online resources at hand?---someone please explain to me how this > is either necessary or desirable?... and how this is not a reactionary > gesture, finally, in the face of those sundry realities that currently > shape print publishing (nothing against the latter either)...
>
>
It's a shame to see artists rejecting new possibilities.

My thought is this: a good poem is a good poem--read onscreen, printed out from the computer, or in a book. I particularly love the web & my computer (which CAN go everywhere & hold alot more poetry than a steamer trunk full of books), because I can archive material to my own taste, instead of rummaging through all the books in my storage shed. I hate physical clutter & have a small home. So the computer functions as my own personal library.

Karen

↑ Index

94. Joel Kuszai barn burning
Mon 2 Mar 1998

> I can do a Spicer page (unless...), a page for Peter Ganick, and Linda Russo and I can collaborate on a page for Kathleen Fraser. I'd be > willing to do others, too.

Do Linda
Spicer Dead

Do others

↑ Index

95. Pierre Joris
Re: Poems for the Millennium
Mon 2 Mar 1998

Chrsmccrry wrote:

> I was wondering if there's any news on the second volume of Poems for the Millennium. Is it still in the works? Any info would be appreciated...

First 2 copies still hot from printer & binder reached Jerry & me friday. Official publication date is Poultry month, i.e. April. More news on the book & events around it soon. Meanwhile I'm sipping some Maker's Mark , fondling the object -- which has a gorgeous cover by Tom Philips (from the Humument) if I may say so myself -- pouring another Bourbon, and wondering what to do with the rest of my life. (Well, Jerry & I have started work on a _Collected Writings of Pablo Picasso_ for Exact Change -- so that will take care of itself...)

Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

96. Joel Kuszai
River of Red Wine (fwd)
Mon 2 Mar 1998

---

i just read a poem today in a notebook by jml to j.m

---------- Forwarded message ----------

Jack Micheline dies AP.state (02-28) 19:04:21

Beat poet Jack Micheline dies

KARYN HUNT, Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) -- Jack Micheline, a Beat poet who wrote about society's downtrodden and called himself one of America's last troubadours, has died. He was 68.

Micheline, a close friend of Beat greats Jack Kerouac, Gregory Corso and Bob Kaufman, died Friday of an apparent heart attack on a Bay Area Rapid Transit train leaving San Francisco, where he lived. He had suffered from diabetes for several years, his publisher, Matt Gonzalez, said Saturday.

Micheline wrote more than 20 books of poetry over 40 years, forging a voice that captured the rhythms of street speech and various ethnic dialects -- half jazz, half street hustler. His subject matter was the poor working class and outcasts such as petty criminals, prostitutes, junkies and destitute artists.

In his introduction to Micheline's first book in 1958, ``River of Red Wine,'' Kerouac wrote of his friend's prose, ``He has the swinging free style I like and his sweet lines revive the poetry of open hope in America.''

Born of Russian-Romanian Jewish ancestry in the Bronx, Micheline read ``Studs Lonigan'' as a child and was shaken by the images of injustice and cruelty that he also found on his own streets. Still convinced poets were ``sissies,'' he didn't begin writing prose until the age of 24, according to a biography written by longtime friend Gerald Nicosia.

Micheline identified himself with the tradition of American street poets, fierce rebels who often were driven to barter their poems for food, drink and a night's shelter, Gonzalez said. He also saw the poet as a revolutionary committed to freeing people from the slavery of unfulfilling jobs, roles and relationships.

``He was really the last of the vagabond poets,'' Gonzalez said.

While he achieved acceptance in the literary world, he was known for a prickly exterior and for making drunken scenes at decorous soirees, Nicosia wrote. He might rush around the room shouting, ``To be alive is to lead an exciting life!'' or make rough passes in offensive language at proper ladies.

In his later years, Micheline lived a spartan life on social security and painted more than he wrote.

He is survived by a son, Vincent Silvaer, and a granddaughter, Nicole Silvaer, both of Tucson, Ariz. Funeral arrangements were pending.

↑ Index

97. TBeck131

Re: magazine concept

Mon 2 Mar 1998

Standard's views on magazine publishing pretty much mirror my own. It has,finally, more to do with epistemology than technology. It also has something to do with risk.I distrust any art that doesn't involve a component of risk. It may be easier to publish by website, but... I'm not saying don't do it. I'm just saying don't just do that. Taking responsibility for the production of a physical magazine issue will teach you things you can't learn on the web. And Standard's written very eloquently about some of what he's learned. I too always advise young writers to start a magazine as a way into finding other people to interact with as artists.

And let me say it again: this list is great if the work done here is translated into actions in the wider world of poetry work and if we can stimulate one another into doing things that we might not otherwise do.We can give one another the encouragement and permission to do what needs to be done. All this expensive technology is a box of tools--nothing more. I'm very pleased to have a new computer after all these years. (Me who once thought my used Selectric was the bee's knees. I miss it actually.) But it's only one tool among many.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

98. TBeck131

Re: Poems for the Millennium

Mon 2 Mar 1998

In a recent back channel Pierre Joris told me that he received the 1st copy of M-2 this saturday just past.

Tom B.

↑ Index

99. Joel Kuszai
Boy Meets Girl Meets Tractor
Mon 2 Mar 1998

BOY MEETS GIRL MEETS TRACTOR

Geographical location, community fun--
So again, Thanks to Tom Beckett for this week's signature.
Coming next week: many folks who've just posted public libraries will provide something apporaching enough money to buy the guise of communication, but with all of the crying ...

As for "collective actions," one exciting possibility that paperback-sized nontraditional community cannot compete with the singy-songy of the zippy neo-zines or zappy zingzangy zines. To be serious, though, for a minute: the idea that epublication can become against them cyber-publications wrankles the feathers of even the most average bird. But this will continue to be a troublesome option, don't have much (or any) access to web and net modalities. This makes the immediate poetry-community structure has become purely paper culture half-adequate resources for accessing great experiences of the whole wide world can be said about even more inferior work. If you have to set type, line up each page, produce it, hard copy is going to exist in some form for some time. If you're gonna want to present poetry of the highest quality you might be tempted to publish lesser works because there is less market. Still the book is a medium every poet should hate. It limits the very uncomfortable fact that seriously, who's competing? Let's not insist on binaries in order to argue sometime within the next year. It could be a frightening situation. But the ambiance and ability to concentrate, etc., & very importantly: their large split between cyber-empowered poets and others; a gradual reduction in necessary intelligence.

Dale: I detect a strategy here, & would like to know more. Are you saying I haven't finished reading through the weekend's posts yet....Very likely publishing equal to technologies that others don't have--access, which really didnt amount to that much money per person. But critique is not simply skepticism---it's informed by, among other things, such as research, detailed description, analysis, and careful consideration. But in any case, i'll make a stronger claim: the larger issues re poetry and poetix really do have to do with how to choose or by lack of financial empowerment, etc., with several possible can curl up in bed with them!) Waiting cause free of charge. Check out those EXPLOSIVE curtains. Spicer was right to associate New Critics & drunkenness & challenge you. I spent $20K on an MFA and never met a sole who had read in a circuit. It cannot foresee overthrow, and it knows nothing of the claims, as andrei codrescu cluttered magazines, nor should he be read the same way a book is "communicating" with communication - A self-perpetuating organization occurs which is close to communications medium for poetry. But it's not going to remain so. I can live in communities that Im part of as long as Im finally getting a chance to find community truly awe inspiring. What very unrich people are doing that is compatible with those hardwares becoming inaccessible - I also have friends who've done similar things, or sold tv's to replicate. Computers is sort of crazy: that's just another version of those very weird constraints, but most poetry unfolds, beyond first acquaintance, slowly, in the larger community of the printed word separate, denuding it of any remaining connection with person, place, and time....design folks. My first mag was an awkward clutter of poems. But over time, destroying human social interaction. and with the destruction of social--Did somebody say something? digitbrain dingie is like placing all hope for America in Flint Michigan, which of plenty of mistakes also makes us get into a room, distribute their work, others who get email and internet browsing, small seeing Eye don't quite see how the immediate poetry-community structure was undone, and he's in good company---three nobel laureates have made similar E-publications suck. But it looks like the future, in many ways, for poetry's evolution of a two-tier structure in what had been a purely paper culture from people who are doing the same thing, thinking about the same things, but I'm attached to the textures, smells and visual elegance of new problems to get a magazine going in whatever way they can. The rest will fall into place in editions under 200 copies, & most are hidden in special and we have to take your word for it... didn't sound like it though, not to me...he concludes the essay, and the book, with this: help out those without by web-enabling their work and sending it to e-zines Here's your chance: Any how-to advice? Horror stories? Success stories?

here's andrei codrescu, from the title essay from _the disappearance of the cost_: "But how am I going to get paid?"

How cheaply can it be done? How do you handle high quality, if not magazines, as an argument thousands of years ago between minstrels and scribes. In any way is way off. There are still two communities out there. Printed in mind is likely to remake itself for that requirement. The equivalent of my experience, summonable at will--it's rather akin to the energy income to purchase/upgrade to the hot new machines and programs, others who do inferior work, if you have to set type, line up each page, produce it, copy information, work disappears. It will be done by the machines, which is the intended audience: the lurkers and the lonely interaction, comes the destruction of art.

listen folks: if you could only SEE the strings attached to those hunks of zines which have a rough beauty to them. At least I like to think so. I'm made very uncomfortable by non-person-ness & boredom. Not saying anything here about whether poetry does but whether noone notices. So often nothing happens in academia, I find it became THE bad bugaboo with Plotinus. So much talk about that e zines suffer from - Although if a new e zine can have a global that it is just such divisions which make the challenges of wholeness & that makes of the poem a transitory thing, and poetry written with the web that the kind of concentration required for the reading of poetry is not, the individual dies for the species. The original program. Finis. But

↑ Index

100. ScoutEW

Lets talkabout TED BERRIGAN?

Tue 3 Mar 1998

There seems to be a general lack of writing and scholarship on the great Ted Berrigan. Personally, I feel that "The Sonnets" are amazing and it is totally unfair that the critics have often dismissed him as a "minor" poet living in the shadow of others, a "disciple" of Frank O' Hara, an imitator. -Why is it that some people can't deal with his importance to 20th century poetry? and when will somebody get it together enough to publish "The Sonnets" again in an edition that includes them all (not the Penguin selected poems) I want more. So lets talk:;how do you all feel about Mr. Ted Berrigan or how we can get the "Sonnets" re-published?

Dear Everyone;
it is 12:58 am in Albany lets talk more about the "master of pathos" okay.

Erik
Albany, New York
March 3, 1998
Earth
"dot dot dot" TB

↑ Index

101. Thomas Bell

Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you?)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Yes, the thing to do might be to use the typewriter well
tom bell

At 12:42 PM 3/2/98 -0600, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote: >rather than issue a once-and-for-all edict re new media (as dale has just >done, and he's in good company---three nobel laureates have made similar >claims, as has andrei codrescu):
>
>listen folks: if you could only SEE the strings attached to those hunks of >paper out there we all call books...
>
>well you CAN: just have a close look, real close now, and ask how that >thing got in your hands, start to finish...
>
>the web, the internet, is part of the digital world---same one that brings >you (next generation) copier-printers, same one that brings you quark, same
>

↑ Index

102. Thomas Bell
Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can yo
Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 01:55 PM 3/2/98 CST, Dale M Smith wrote:
>There's no doubt that the same technology that created computers and the >Internet contributed to advanced photocopiers etc... What I'm arguing against >is the supposed fluidity of the physical medium. The book is the essential >communications medium for poetry. But it's not going to remain so. I can >imaginge an argument thousands of years ago between minstrels and scribes.
>"The voice is the only true place for poetry, by Gar!"

I always thought there was life (and poetry) before the book.

> "Duh, Wake up Homey,
> Time to spread the word to more people." The question now is whether or not > more is better. Proliferation for the sake of proliferation.

Yes, enough caviling. Let's _do_ some good work.

 What is the >selective process under new mediums? Doe it change?

Would wish it would.

> Will our perceptions of > the poem change in relation to new electronic mediums?

Would wish they would.

> My sense of the Interne > t is that it is a vast advertising tool. It's a perfect medium for the > advertising spectacle. A lot of presses use the web to support their books.
> Not a bad idea considering the present reality of market publishing pressures.
> But as a tool for presenting the poem, the Internet is only a shell of the > book.

"If I can hone one bit of this vast advertising tool into a piece of art or craft I will not have lived in vain, vaingloriously he [read here "I" to avert email cavil] blurted to screen. - I like "email cavil"! tom bell

↑ Index

103. Thomas Bell
Re: Atopia
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Returning after a brief absence I find my "heap of sweepings" [see Heraclitus, fragment 124] has mushroomed into Topias, Internet communities, etc.. all in a day's journey. I think I may have started this particular email riff (rift, rumor, cavil?). I had no such intention and can't find it in my original post. tom bell

At 05:01 PM 3/2/98 -0500, Gabriel Gudding wrote:
>On Mon, 2 Mar 1998, Michael J Kelleher wrote:
>
>> I'm writing this from a state university funded workstation in Buffalo, >> NY. Color me privileged.
>>
>> Poets shouldn't hate the web. Luddism gets you arrested, but little else.
>
>
>One shouldn't hate, period. The day that Luddism gets one arrested will >be the day that Luddism is Necessary.
>
>
>>
>> It seems to me an exciting time for poetry in that the web creates >> the potential for not simply new (neophilial) but different FORMS of >> poetry.
>
>
>Agreed. But the concern that has been expressed here is about hte notion >that associates Communities with No-placeness. There's a certain frisson >found in yoking the two ideas, sure. But Internet Community will never be >anything more than an oxymoron. Oxymorons are fun. But they're not what >they say they are: we like them because they're wacky and ironic yokings, >not because they pretend to be what they say they are. We can all >pretend, as hard as we are able, that one can have an Atopian Community.

>It's a nice idea, but that's all. Atopia is another name for hell. Read >the ol Milton. Or don't they do that in Buffalo?
>
>If no readings took place at Black Mountain, you wouldn't have the Black >Mountain School. STop all readings in Buffalo for two semesters and see >what happens to the morale and the mettle of that program: it'll puff into >powder. The keyboard is nothing without that larynx above it.
>
>Gabriel Gudding
>
>

↑ Index

104. Thomas Bell

Re: what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

I have to side with Joe here. Most of the "epoetry" I've seen is little more than transferring printed text to html or whatever just as the first and tv shows transferred radio, plays, and printed texts to the screen.

I think this leads to a text-based mindset for readers as well as writers.

While fascination with the new, the latest technology, the glitsy or zingy-zangy, etc. seems overpowering right now, it will fade away quite soon. I think there is quality stuff already if one looks.

I think Joe was referring to new ways of writing (thinking) that are in fact not possible on the printed page or at a reading. Just because one can't compose hyperlinked lines for the printed page or to be read aloud does not mean they can't be poetry. The same applies to simultaneous multi-media composition: written and spoken, written and drawn, spoken and visual, moving and moving.
tom bell

At 07:31 PM 3/2/98 -0500, Matthew Kirschenbaum wrote:
>Joe Amato sez:
>
>>but in any case, i'll make a stronger claim: that there are things you can >>do online wrt poetry and poetix that you plain CAN'T do with books... we >>already know vice versa is true... but owing to this medium's relative >>newness, it's not clear yet what all those things are, or might be... and i >>fully anticipate, as with any new technology, new needs and new problems

to >>rear their ugly heads...
>
>I dunno Joe, that noise about the new sounds a bit tinny to me; it's just so >_reflexive_. I mean, what's "new"? -- Pinsky, Rosenberg, Joyce, probably >others, have been writing in electronic spaces for ten years now . . . I'm >tempted to argue that we have a surprisingly _clear_ sense of what _a_ >digital poetics is or can be, at least at this particular moment, at least >as that poetics has been self-consciously articulated by certain of its >practicioners -- which is not to say that said poetics won't expand or >shift or dissolve, but where is the poetics that won't? I'm not really >taking exception to anything you write -- certainly not aligning myself with >the web sux crowd! Quite the opposite really, I'm marveling at how much >electronic writing there _is_ out there -- now -- new and not-so-new -- >lying around on disks and drives and wondering if there comes a point where >what's new doesn't eclipse what we could _know_ from thinking/writing >about/into what we have -- what's been going around.
>
>Or as I've suggested in other e-places, there's going to come a time, and >sooner than we think, when the challenge of preserving/porting these >earliest, oldest e-texts -- say _afternoon_ or _Mindwheel_ -- will force a >spectacular engagement of scholary editing and the art of the hack. Best, Matt
>
>
>
>
>
>
>==========
==========
>Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia >[redacted] or [redacted] Department of English
>http://www.iath.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ The Blake Archive | IATH
>
>

↑ Index

105. Joel Kuszai
webbed fingers vs. webbed feet
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Mark P. wrote:

"In extension of stuff Tom Beckett has said, and several others have nodded to: I'm made very uncomfortable by the fact that the websters don't quite see how the immediate poetry-community structure has become split. This will be a temporary, and rapidly evolving situation. But it is going to exist in some form for some time."

personally, I don't buy that the websters don't quite see this split. and I think it was Miekal who put it best--that the opportunities have really been expanded. I think some of the hostility to the net can be seen as an adverse reaction to the decentralization the web offers. Sure, it's not REAL decentralization. But it has ruined the academic authority over poetry, as we have seen here. It has taken the "centers" of poetic authority (the big city poetry clubs) and the graduate programs, and tossed their authority out the window. Whatever authority those scenes, schools, urban centers, still have is largely in reactionary retreat. Rather than develop a community while participating, the reaction to the "coming community" is a nostalgia for a community constructed by other means:

1. anthologies, which re-code at least temporarily who's in and who's out, are a good way of marking off the territory. Like the academy, which doesn't recognize unjuried publications, the poetry scene can't handle such a widespread invasion (without proper credentials, identifyable formal tactics, having the last name of a famous poet, etc.). Anthologies--are the productive residue of this social-formation process & reconstruct whatever hierarchies are left after this dispersal of power and authority.

2. arbitrary revaluation: I don't like looking at the screen (except tv) so I can't read it, so it'll never get my vote as "serious literature"; there is no judgement giving authority to mediate issues of "quality control" so the whole lot is a mess (i.e. it is too easy, too user friendly, too accessible, too open); i make my books by hand, so they must be better; I write by hand, so it must be more authentic, etc.

certainly many of the people who don't participate here or "officially" "online" do so privately, gaining admittance to the cool private cc. lists and the backchannel networking that makes everything go. so the idea that there is some kind of split is just bullshit. also--since when did the idea of "public access" become a worry to people who are now circling the IBM selectric wagons hoping to ward off a total revolution. unfortunately the "alternative" poetry community that doesn't adapt will be left to the rare book rooms, which in my experince (in buffalo, ann arbor, east lansing, portland, new york, and sandiego) are usually empty.

by the way, I hate being put in the position of being a defender of that which don't need me to defend-and which i have no interest in defending. But I can't even imagine the anti-digital backlash happening OFF this list--and I find it odd that so many people busy perpetrating it here are busy slamming it-- for my interest, the Small Press Collective and my branch of it, The Student Periodical Club, are still in formation. for a link to all of that see: http://www.acsu.buffalo.edu/~kuszai/and for me it is all about "education" not as much about poetry. Luckily for me, poetry can be a big part of the educational process, and not because some kid needs to read Milton to know that he's among the slobs sucking it up in the trashcompator of your favorite deathstar. And no, we don't read Milton in Buffalo--there they assume that you read that stuff a long time ago.

↑ Index

106. J Kimball
Corman
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Would greatly appreciate receiving, backchannel, Cid Corman's contact info, address, phone, E-mail address if there is one. Thanks.

↑ Index

107. David Israel publishing & prestige
Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

question: to what extent is the evident quesiness or diffidence abt. web-publishing (vs. paperbook-publishing) tacitly related to issues of prestige? -- (e.g., higher prestige now associated w/ the latter) d.i.

↑ Index

108. George Bowering
Re: Writing in Public
Tue 3 Mar 1998

What about Han Shan? He used to write his poem/characters on rocks on the mountainside. Of course, in smalltown B.C. the drunken highschool graduands do that, but not with good poems.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

109. linda russo
AVEC query
Tue 3 Mar 1998

does anyone have Cydney Chadwick's email? I was given an address for her which proved itself unfruitful -- thx.

↑ Index

110. Miekal And Re: Poems for the Millennium
Tue 3 Mar 1998

said book has finally been transported via goat cart over rocky terrain by an apprentice from the land of bern porter & am now, a few minutes ago getting first glimpse of vol 1, & am happy as new snake skin to see my pal alexei k figuring into 20th century poetics in a way that is finally rightful. said volume is in the bathroom awaiting scholarly invasion, those moments some of the few us country folk have for "reading" poetry. more on where poetry is "written" in the future tho I have just received a rejection slip from a smalltime college literary magazine saying the ongoing collaboration, Literature Nation, interwriting by Maria Damon & myself, is definitively not poetry, so I wont bother to speak to "where" that is written.

rasputin zukofsky

↑ Index

111. rsillima
Malmude & Gilfillan
Tue 3 Mar 1998

I want to second (or third) the wonderfulness of this book, which is really fabulous even if far too small. Malmude, with just three books over a 25 year period, is one of the most underpublished and underappreciated poets of my generation. Just when you've nearly forgotten about him, something like this comes out and nearly takes the top of your head off.

I may have noted awhile back Merrill Gilfillan's Satin Street (from Asphodel Press, though the rear cover says Moyer Bell) as a similar occasion, another really fine poet whose work is far too hard to locate. [And has anyone thought to publish his translations of Gaspard de la Nuit by Aloysius Bertrand, the first book of prose poems (1826)?]

Books such as these are treasures.

Ron

.....

Date: Mon, 2 Mar 1998 09:19:01 -0500
>From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]> >Subject: goodbye books
>
>Henyr!
>
>Thank you for mentioning the name of my press, Goodbye Books. In honor of >the happy coincidence, and as is the custom on this list, please permit me >to sell something!
>
>Steve Malmude's book got a tremendously respectful (n.b. not fawning!)
>review in Lisa Jarnot's News Letter. John Godfrey said among other things >that art comes to this poet, not he to it, and that there are certain >things the poet says which are none of the reader's business!
>
>I'll send out a copy of this letterpress book free to the first person who
>e-mails me with their street address (it'll take me a week or so -- I have >to go fold them together). The next nine people can have it for $10 ppd.
>
>Read it now or read it later, >Jordan
>

↑ Index

112. Gabriel Gudding

Re: Atopia

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Okay, Mike. Truces truces!

On Mon, 2 Mar 1998, Michael J. Kelleher wrote:

> I meant simply to say that here in this placelessness you read my voice and you might call that poetry. Might not. That's up to you. But you see it speaking to you on the screen and thus an extension of me here in Buffalo touches you in Indiana.

Great point! I'll end with this: what I love about poetry is its coming to _total life_ before an audience: when the poet embraces _us_ with her voice and physical presence. Like, reading Lenin or hearing tapes of Lenin in _no way_ compare to _being there_, to hearing and seeing and smelling and feeling that big bald guy intoning -- and I mean really in-toning -- in the square, to know the presence of state troops only five blocks away, to know that ol Len is scared shitless but to hear him ride that fear and bring us out of ours: I've heard poets do this (hopefully we all have), and getting a voice-cut off the net from Buff's truly amazing website just isn't the same. I fear that we look toward the net the same way we look, with each passing decade and its armamentarium of inventions, toward gadget-x to save us from our increasing ennui.

Without the web you might (gratefully) > never see my voice nor I (sadly) yours. Granted, it is not the voice of > the poet speaking into your ear but neither is it not not the voice. It > is the voice you see. Relations between physical parts physical beings > change and our senses react to different sensations differently. That's > the neo in it.

But I could neither punch you nor kiss you. And I miss the option.

Thanks for this, Mike. Made me think. I like doing that on occasion.

GG

↑ Index

113. Henry
Re: web publication, etc.
Tue 3 Mar 1998

So, responding to Jeff, in a sense the medium is the message and the packaging is important - the advantage physical magazines have is that not only do they emerge from/create physical communities, they are a PRODUCT that you can CIRCULATE by hand (gift-giving) in a way that trading URLS can't compare. This is just to add to the pointing out of the VALUE of non-web publishing - not to demean the alternate VALUES of web publishing. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

114. Rachel Levitsky

Re: ALERT - Petition to save Endangered Species!

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Annie Finch wrote:
>
> >X-From_: [redacted] Wed Feb 18 06:34:57 1998
> >X-Sender: [redacted]
> >Date: Wed, 18 Feb 1998 05:25:29 -0800
> >From: Debby Ortman <[redacted]>
> >Subject: ALERT - Petition to save Endangered Species!
> >Mime-Version: 1.0
> >To: unlisted-recipients:; (no To-header on input)
> >
> >* START * PETITION TO SAVE ENDANGERED SPECIES * KEEP IT ALIVE!
> >* * PLEASE SIGN AND FORWARD BY APRIL 15th, 1998 * URGENT! * *
> >
> >We're experiencing the greatest rate of extinction since the > >dinosaurs - up to 50,000 species a year. In the U.S., we > >have lost over 500 plants and animals since the signing of > >the Declaration of Independence; 250 of these species have > >disappeared in the last 15 years. This massive loss of life > >threatens our own existence, by depriving us of potential > >cures to deadly diseases and decimating local economies. For > >example, in the Pacific Northwest, the fishing industry has > >lost approxmiately $1 billion in the last ten years due to > >the decline in salmon.
> >
> >The U.S. Congress is now considering two radically different > >bills to reauthorize the Endangered Species Act. Kempthorne's > >Extinction bill (S.1180) rolls back 25 years of conservation > >efforts, sacrificing protections for endangered species to > >benefit industry. Miller (H.R. 2351) strikes a reasonable > >compromise, balancing wildlife needs with landowners, while > >working for the recovery of species.
> >
> >Congress could vote on these bills as early as the end of > >February, 1998. Please keep our endangered species alive > >by signing the below petition and forwarding to family, > >friends, and lists interested in preserving our environment.
> >
> >* HOW TO SIGN THIS PETITION * * * * * * * * * * * * *

> >
> >Copy this entire email (from * START * to * END *) into a > >new email. After the last signature below, enter a new line, > >with the next number. Please list your name, city, state > >and zip code. Forward to your family, friends, coworkers, > >and relevant lists. Please cc: your message to > ><[redacted]>.
> >
> >* PETITION TO CONGRESS * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *
> >
> >Dear Member of Congress:
> >
> >We are currently faced with the greatest rate of extinction > >worldwide since the disappearance of dinosaurs 65 million > >years ago, losing up to 50,000 species a year. Since 1973, > >the Endangered Species Act (ESA) has halted the potential > >extinction of dozens of animals, including the bald eagle, > >the gray wolf and the California sea otter.
> >
> >Senator Kempthorne's (R-ID) and Chafee (R-RI) are pushing > >forward a bill, S.1180, that protects the interests of > >industry at the expense of endangered species. At the same > >time, Rep. Miller (D-CA) has introduced a moderate bill, > >H.R. 2351, that strikes a balance between wildlife and > >landowners without sacrificing protection and recovery > >for endangered species.
> >
> >Please vote against S.1180 and support H.R. 2351.
> >
> >* SIGNED *
> >
> >1) Christopher Chatto, Santa Barbara, CA 93101
> >2) Chris Mullin, Quincy, MA 02169
> >3) Elizabeth Hitchcock, Washington DC 20003
> >4) Richard Trilsch, Washington, DC 20003
> >5) Adam Ruben, Boston, MA 02111
> >6) Mark Ferrulo, Tallahassee, Fl 32303
> >7) Debbie Ortman, Duluth, MN 55811
> 8) Annie Finch, Cincinnati, OH 45220
> >9) Rachel Levitsky, Boulder, CO 80306
> >
> >* FOR MORE INFORMATION * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

> >
> >http://www.pirg.org/
> >-The State Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs)
> >
> >[redacted]
> >-general email address for inquiries
> >
> >http://www.pirg.org/enviro/esa/
> >-The PIRG's endangered species pages, including fact sheets > >on Kempthorne's Extinction Bill (S.1180), Miller's Recovery > >Bill (H.R. 2351), and what else you can do.
> >
> >http://www.pirg.org/enviro/esa/petition/
> >-A web-based version of this petition, and detailed > >instructions on how to sign an email petition.
> >
> >* * PLEASE SIGN AND FORWARD BY APRIL 15th, 1998 * URGENT! * *
> >* PETITION TO SAVE ENDANGERED SPECIES * KEEP IT ALIVE! * END *
> >-=+=-=+
> >Christopher Chatto, Internet Organizer e-mail: [redacted]
> >The State Public Interest Research Groups http://www.pirg.org
> >1129 State St #10, Santa Barbara CA 93101 805(p)9630949(f)9658939
> >
>
> _____
> _____
> _____
> Annie Finch
> http://muohio.edu/~finchar
> Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
> Miami University
> Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

115. Rachel Levitsky

Re: poets-in-residence

Tue 3 Mar 1998

I read it as "pet-in-residence"

David R. Israel wrote:
>

> The appended item appeard in "News of the Weird". Am not sure > what "questions it raises," but meseems it's fodder for anecdotage.
>
> cheers, d.i.
>
> / / /
>
> * Peter Sansom began work on January 19 at his new, two-day-a-> week job with the big Marks & Spencer department store in > London. For the next six months under a government grant > program run by the Poetry Society, he will work for about $1,500 > per month as the store's Poet in Residence. He said he hopes > generally to raise employees' and customers' level of awareness of > poetry. A lesser-known Poet in Residence, at London's Botanical > Gardens, said she has already had an impact on that organization, as > witnessed by her telephone message recording: "Sarah Maguire can't > get to the phone/So please leave a message after the tone."
>
> ==========
>
> NEWS OF THE WEIRD, founded in 1988, is a nationally syndicated > newspaper column distributed by Universal Press Syndicate. To > receive the columns by e-mail, free of charge, send a message to > [redacted] with the Subject line of Subscribe. To read > these News of the Weird newspaper columns from the past six months, go > to http://www.nine.org/notw/notw.html (That site contains no > graphics, no photos, no video clips, no audio. Just text. Deal with > it.)
>
> COPYRIGHT: Neither the name News of the Weird nor any > issue, or portion, of News of the Weird may be used for <any> > commercial purpose <whatsoever>. "Any commercial purpose" > includes something as small as a bartered advertisement on a Web > page. If you have a Web page or a mailing list that you run purely as > a hobby at entirely your own expense, and it is freely accessible by > the public with <no fee charged>, you may use portions of News of the > Weird without express permission provided that the portion(s) is(are) > (1) not edited, (2) distinctly separated from material that is <not> > from News of the Weird, and (3) identified on the Web site or message > as from News of the Weird and with this copyright notice affixed:
> Copyright 1998 by Universal Press Syndicate.
>

> AUTHENTICITY: All items reported in News of the Weird are > from news stories appearing in daily newspapers in the U. S. and > Canada (or occasionally, reputable daily newspapers in other > countries or other reputable magazines and journals). No so-called > supermarket tabloid, and no story that was not intended to be "news," > is the source of a News of the Weird story. Chuck Shepherd will try > to accommodate reasonable and occasional reader requests for sources.

↑ Index

116. Pierre Joris

Re: Writing in Public

Tue 3 Mar 1998

[redacted] wrote:

> First instance I can think of, though, of a poet writing in public would probably be Pound in the wire cage in the mud at Pisa.

hmm, I like the image, Ron, & the sense of the cage at Pisa as public place -- but first? maybe first public-jail-writing instance. I spent 2/3 of my 1.5 desultory years in Paris medical school so going around the city locating the cafés writers wrote & were writing in -- hemingway's c.w-l.p, sartre & beauvoir's (&a hundred other's) flore, the surrealists hangouts from the 20s on. When next in Paris, you'all should checkut the tables of the Closerie des Lilas, corner of Boulvard Montparnasse & Boulevard St Michel: all the tables have little brass plaques with the names of the writers used to use them -- for eating, drinking and writing.

Thinking further back: how about calling "public writing" what Tzara did at the Cabaret Voltaire performances in 1916/17: cutting the words up into the hat & taking them out, making & reading a new work in public that way. In a wonderful detournement of such a situtaion is Jackson Mac Low's habit top write continuously while attending other poet's readings, using , I believe in some instances at least one of his procedures(the letters of the reading poet's name in the postion they are in that name used to select words from the reading with those letters in the same position) to create new texts.

As to the web/vs stylus thread: any means whatever to get it down & spread it around is good enough, pecil, typer, selectric, screen, bathroom wall, parchment, Bic, Mont Blanc Fountain Pen, onion skin paper, etc. Genêt wrote several of his novels in jail on toilet paper and had them smuggled out. A writer's job is to write, whatever the means at her disposal.

Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

117. Jack Foley
FLASHPOINT
Tue 3 Mar 1998

henry GOULD and mark WALLACE respond to joe BRENNAN's "A=R=T M=E=A=N=S" and Brennan replies ... mark WALLACE also ponders post-L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Poets in the new...

FLASHPOINT
(http://webdelsol.com/FLASHPOINT/)
Along the frontier where the arts & politics clash ...

Baraka Brennan Brody Clark Coe Eshleman Gould Haas Hickman Katz Parcelli Scroggins Stuefloten VanderMeer Wallace

↑ Index

118. sylvester pollet
Re: Poems for the Millennium
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Bravo Pierre (&Jerry)! That means I'd better hurry to finish Vol. 1--I knew this would happen. Sylvester

At 11:05 PM -0400 3/2/98, Pierre Joris wrote:
>Chrsmccrry wrote:
>
>> I was wondering if there's any news on the second volume of Poems for the >> Millennium. Is it still in the works? Any info would be appreciated...

>>
>>
>
>First 2 copies still hot from printer & binder reached Jerry & me friday.
>Official publication date is Poultry month, i.e. April. More news on the >book & events around it soon. Meanwhile I'm sipping some Maker's Mark , >fondling the object -- which has a gorgeous cover by Tom Philips (from the >Humument) if I may say so myself -- pouring another Bourbon, and wondering >what to do with the rest of my life. (Well, Jerry & I have started work on a >_Collected Writings of Pablo Picasso_ for Exact Change -- so that will take >care of itself...)
>
>Pierre
>
>--
>==========
>pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
>tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
>email:[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>----------
>"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
>a single vice is that we have several of them."
> La Rochefoucauld
> All my life I ve heard
>one makes many
> Charles Olson
>==========

↑ Index

119. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

EPC author pages

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Dear George, Joel, Chris, and others,

It would be terrific to have some help. It's very difficult to do the whole thing under single sail and I agree, development of the author pages are a good way to go - and it is an area where there are immediate needs. This is a space that was original envisioned as benefitting from collective energy. Your suggestions are encouraging.

Perhaps a good way to proceed would be to e-mail me ([redacted]) the name of the author(s) you will do. I could perhaps make an "authors under development" page on the EPC where this could be posted. Once you commit to an author I would think the pages should be submitted to me within, say 2 months. The authors you have mentioned in your posts on this topic are certainly ones we'd like.

The template can be obtained at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/template

Some authors who need to be done in short order are mentioned in the following post, originally sent out to graduate students in the Poetics Program at UB. Note that this list is no more than a quick graph, that some authors not listed have pages under construction, and that of course other suggestions are welcome.

Thanks,
Loss

P.S. Please note that I may not be able to reply to your message for about two weeks. I will reply as soon as I am able, however.
==========
We are asking people to consider contributing to the EPC author page development initiative. We feel there are certain key authors who should now have a page at the EPC. Since you may also be working on/reading some of these authors, helping to create their page might be a simple matter, and might be a natural tie-in to ongoing research.

What is an author page? Our basic aim is to create a place where links to resources in various web locations by and about the author might be gathered. (Additionally, if the author would agree to notify me of future web publications of their work, that would also be helpful.) In addition, in an EPC author page, we often seek to make available some new-to-the-web textual and/or visual resources, items specific to the EPC. But this is not necessarily required.

The basic requirements of such a page are a photo, a cv/list of publications/ bibliography, brief bio, the above-mentioned textual work, and the author's agreement to use their work. Files can be sent as attachments to e-mail (include a list of file names in e-mail message) or mailed on diskette.

The main purpose here is to develop a center where people might find out more about these authors. Help us with this collective effort to develop this resources.

A list of suggested authors whose pages need to be created or developed follow. Have a look and let us know if you have thoughts.

For further details, please contact: Loss Glazier, [redacted] or Charles Bernstein ([redacted]) regarding this initiative.

Susan Howe
Joan Retallack (under development)
Tina Darragh
Diane Ward
Carla Harryman
Lyn Hejinian
Maggie O'Sullivan
Melanie Neilson
Denise Riley
Rae Armantrout
Catriona Strang
Nicole Brossard
Wendy Mulford
Rosmarie Waldrop
Deanna Ferguson
Hannah Weiner
Geraldine Monk
Karen Mac Cormack
Katheleen Fraser
Lisa Roberston
Marjorie Welish
Barbara Guest
Caroline Bergvall
Fiona Templeton
Fanny Howe
Bernadette Mayer
Leslie Scalapino
Ann Lauterbach
Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge
Stacy Doris
Dodie Bellamy
Lydia Davis
Kathleen Fraser
Rachel Blau DuPlessis

==========
Earlier conversation on this topic:

> George Hartley wrtts:
> Let's spread out the work, not burden any one person > with this, AND get more people published, even if "only" > online. Hell, let's get social! Think of it as a webbing bee.

>
> to which Joel Kuszai repliis: > yeeehah! i feel like a real hopeful member of a search party. I'm also on > a utopia/utopias list and now I find myself deleting IT all the time.
> Let's get organized. Who wants to help? "What is there to be done?"
>
> Alright, then. I'm certainly willing to pitch in.
> (it's sort of like a barn-building, no?). do we > have clearance for take-off? are there directions
> the EPC author pages are already wanting to > go (e.g., folks that need to be covered asap – > any chance we can see Loss' list?). there are > some serious omissions – it's too much to > expect one or a few folks to build a very large > edifice. I guess we can all see what the template > is for the pages, shall we begin?
>
> shhhh – rattletrap. ok, I'm ready.
>
> I can do a Spicer page (unless...), a page for > Peter Ganick, and Linda Russo and I can col- > laborate on a page for Kathleen Fraser. I'd be > willing to do others, too.
>
> Chris
>
> Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

↑ Index

120. Dale M Smith

Re: (or can you?)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

So true, Spatehead, but are words and tongues and machines in isolation from each other? What guideth that consciousness toward the word, or draws said word into form? Poems exist not in themselves alone, but rely on the mechanisms of their disemination, verily I believe. The scratch of the pen over paper, the tap of the typewriter or the clack of the keyboard don't reverberate, in some way, through the organism of the poet/poem? The field of visions shift from paper to screen, from grass or wood to light and glass. Know ye I am not a Neuroscientologist, but the tools by which words are etched transform, however subtly, a relationship with language. Mind you, good sir, these words I write are not etched in stone. Tombstones are only reserved for that dignity this day and age. Language appeareth to me to possess a weight and a lightness. Thy medium relayeth the size and scope of vision. Perhapseth my own dissolveth like wind...

To: [redacted]

Head:

A poem is made of w,o,r,d,s, and a person is made of tongues, and a machine makes more merry the meet market of spit?

Spatehide

Dale M Smith wrote:

> Digitbrain:
>
> I'm not attentive to the kinds of poetry you're speaking of. But I think that > a poetry of the web will be something different than that of the book, or that > of the human memory. The medium shapes the poem in fundamental ways. There is > no such thing as a poem, that I can see, without some sort of medium through > which it reaches away from one person (or machine) to another. Call me an old > fuddyduddy, but I'm attached to the textures, smells and visual elegance of > the page. A letterpressed volume of verse somehow conveys an immediacy > electronic media will never approach. Maybe we'll have to rethink our > relationship to the poem, think of it w/a more ephemeral attitude, a passing > stranger with whom we take a moment's delight. The vacuous pleasure of e-media > does make me a bit anxious, and my soapbox is a too rickety. Still, the > Internet has not convinced me of its possibly human potentials. I see it > primarily as an extension of commercial rackets.
>
> Blockhead.
>
> To: [redacted]
>
> Dale M Smith wrote:
>
> > E-publications suck. But it looks like the future, in many ways, for > poetry's > > market. Stillthe web is a medium every poet should hate. It limits the > value > > of physical production. It limits the mobility of the product, tying the > > reader to one location, for me, often at work. It lacks the correlating > > physical materials that provides support to the word, reminding us of > poetry's

> > very tactile relation to the world, not to our own inner subjectivity. It > > promotes every kind of self indulgence becaue it is easier to reproduce > > inferior work. If you have to set type, line up each page, produce it, copy
> > it and bind it you're gonna want to present poetry of the highest quality.
> On> > line you might be tempted to publish lesser works because there is less > > time and money invested in it.
>
> Dale, Im charmed by the soapbox yr standing on, & thank gutenberg that > there will always remain some traditionalists out there. I think your > position is remarkable in light of what transpires minute by minute on > the web. What I would like to know, tho, is what your feeling is about > poetic works that are net dependent (or computer dependent via cdrom), > works like hypertext, intermedia, soundpoetry, & animated poetries? Do > these get discounted in this blanket condemnation of electronic poetics?
>
> digitbrain

↑ Index

121. Judy Roitman

Re: what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

> Just because > one can't compose hyperlinked lines for the printed page or to be read > aloud does not mean they can't be poetry. The same applies to simultaneous > multi-media composition: written and spoken, written and drawn, spoken > and visual, moving and moving.
> tom bell

What goes around comes around. There was a similar (but much briefer) discussion some time back on necessarily e-work (i.e., work that doesn't translate to the page). One link that can lead you to some of this stuff is Jim Rosenberg's home page, http://www.well.com/user/jer/. Unfortunately he uses a hyperlink system that doesn't translate to html (do any of them? I'm ignorant) but if you can get the right software his stuff is gorgeous. Other folks might want to contribute other links.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area code ---------- http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

122. Hank Lazer

Re: Nicole Brossard

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Nicole Brossard's name came up in the list of poets for whom there have not yet been a magazine issues or critical studies. Hot off the press from Peter Lang is a book by my friend Alice A. Parker, _Liminal Visions of Nicole Brossard_. It's hard cover -- $53.95 -- so ask a library to buy it? (ISBN 0-8204-3065-X. e-mail: [redacted])

Alice worked with Nicole for several years in preparing this excellent book.

Contents:

Pretext: The Enigma of Writing (Quantum Reading)
In the Beginning is Desire
A Differential Equation of Lesbian Love
Holographic Writing: The Generic Woman
Reading Nicole Brossard Reading Djuna Barnes: Intertextuality and Subjectivity
Open Work: The Mauve Horizon
From Post-Modern to Polytechnique: Figuring the Violence Rituals of Reading / Rituals of Writing Body Work: The Speed of Silence
When Language Lapses

I think that Small Press Distribution still has a number of Brossard's works in print.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

123. Jack Foley
NEW POETRY in FlashPoint
Tue 3 Mar 1998

NEW POETRY
by joe BRENNAN, clayton ESHLEMAN, david HICKMAN, carlo PARCELLI, and mark SCROGGINS in:

FLASHPOINT
(http://webdelsol.com/FLASHPOINT/)
Along the frontier where the arts & politics clash ...

Baraka Brennan Brody Clark Coe Eshleman Gould Haas Hickman Katz Parcelli Scroggins Stuefloten VanderMeer Wallace

↑ Index

124. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: barn burning
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Joel – ieeeeeeeee! what choo want? en anglais.

btw, L.sent a package to you & it got returned, but it looks like the right address to me (I hope so); please confirm:

PO Box 527
Buffalo, NY 14226

"mister postman la La la la mister postman la La la la la"

ind-oo-pidably, Chris (played by Peter Lorre in the film version)

> I can do a Spicer page (unless...), a page for
> Peter Ganick, and Linda Russo and I can col- > laborate on a page for Kathleen Fraser. I'd be
>
> Do Linda
> Spicer Dead
>
> willing to do others, too.
>
> Do others

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

125. Matthew Kirschenbaum

Re: what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Tom Bell,

> While fascination with the new, the latest technology, the glitsy or zingy-zangy, etc. seems overpowering right now, it will fade away quite soon. I think there is quality stuff already if one looks.

Just my point, Tom.

> I think Joe was referring to new ways of writing (thinking) that are in fact not possible on the printed page or at a reading. Just because one can't compose hyperlinked lines for the printed page or to be read aloud does not mean they can't be poetry. The same applies to simultaneous multi-media composition: written and spoken, written and drawn, spoken and visual, moving and moving.

Yes yes yes Tom -- and . . . "there is quality stuff already if one looks."

Lots of it in fact.

About a year ago, Chris Funkhouser said to me that it was possible -- just barely -- for him to comprehensively survey the range of existing electronic poetry in his dissertation. I don't think he (anyone) could do it today.

I'm trying to get (myself) out of the habit of qualifying (all) digital poetics with an anticipatory hypothetical and the c(h)ant of the NEW -- we have (some) digital poetics today, right now, that can already (uh oh) be historicized, institutionalized, materialized. E-ven enjoyed. Matt

↑ Index

126. Steve Tills

Re: (or can you?)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

I absolutely agree with you that letters pressed into nice paper letterpress is fabulous, that the materiality of language is fabulous, that everything from the page space to the font to the binding or lack thereof is wonderful. Sorry if I ever implied that these things aren't. I wouldn't even think such a thought. And that last post, it was hasty and just mostly jest--I'm not sure what I meant, except to have fun. Top of the day to ya, Dude, Steve

Dale M Smith wrote:

> So true, Spatehead, but are words and tongues and machines in isolation from each other? What guideth that consciousness toward the word, or draws said word into form? Poems exist not in themselves alone, but rely on the mechanisms of their disemination, verily I believe. The scratch of the pen over paper, the tap of the typewriter or the clack of the keyboard don't reverberate, in some way, through the organism of the poet/poem? The field of visions shift from paper to screen, from grass or wood to light and glass. Know ye I am not a Neuroscientologist, but the tools by which words are etched transform, however subtly, a relationship with language. Mind you, good sir, these words I write are not etched in stone. Tombstones are only reserved for that dignity this day and age. Language appeareth to me to possess a weight and a lightness. Thy medium relayeth the size and scope of vision. Perhapseth my own dissolveth like wind...
>
> To: [redacted]
>
> Head:
>
> A poem is made of w,o,r,d,s, and a person is made of tongues, and a machine makes more merry the meet market of spit?
>
> Spatehide
>
> Dale M Smith wrote:
>
> Digitbrain:
>
> I'm not attentive to the kinds of poetry you're speaking of. But I think that a poetry of the web will be something different than that of the book, or that of the human memory. The medium shapes the poem in fundamental ways. There is no such thing as a poem, that I can see, without some sort of medium through which it reaches away from one person (or machine) to another. Call me an old fuddyduddy, but I'm attached to the textures, smells and visual elegance of the page. A letterpressed volume of verse somehow conveys an immediacy electronic media will never approach. Maybe we'll have to rethink our relationship to the poem, think of it w/a more ephemeral attitude, a passing stranger with whom we take a moment's delight. The vacuous pleasure of e-media does make me a bit anxious, and my soapbox is a too rickety. Still, the > Internet has not convinced me of its possibly human potentials. I see it primarily as an extension of commercial rackets.

>
> Blockhead.
>
> To: [redacted]
>
> Dale M Smith wrote:
>
> E-publications suck. But it looks like the future, in many ways, for poetry's market. Stillthe web is a medium every poet should hate. It limits the value of physical production. It limits the mobility of the product, tying the reader to one location, for me, often at work. It lacks the correlating physical materials that provides support to the word, reminding us of poetry's very tactile relation to the world, not to our own inner subjectivity. It promotes every kind of self indulgence becaue it is easier to reproduce inferior work. If you have to set type, line up each page, produce it, copy it and bind it you're gonna want to present poetry of the highest quality. On-line you might be tempted to publish lesser works because there is less time and money invested in it.
>
> Dale, Im charmed by the soapbox yr standing on, & thank gutenberg that there will always remain some traditionalists out there. I think your position is remarkable in light of what transpires minute by minute on the web. What I would like to know, tho, is what your feeling is about poetic works that are net dependent (or computer dependent via cdrom), works like hypertext, intermedia, soundpoetry, & animated poetries? Do these get discounted in this blanket condemnation of electronic poetics?
>
> digitbrain

↑ Index

127. Bob Grumman

Re: EPC author pages

Tue 3 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

To help out in the effort to further knowledge of poets and poetry, I will gladly accept any bios of poets not right for the EPC author pages. Send them to Comprepoetica! Or directly to me. Make sure to give me a way of contacting bio-subjects, though, to clear the bios with them. I'd love to have bios of EPC authors, too--extensions of what the EPC author pages have, though, not duplications of it. I'm also collecting poetics terms, with or without definitions, and discussions of schools of poetry, etc.

--Bob G.

Bob Grumman

[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site

----------7F1B593A1617--

↑ Index

128. k. lederer

Re: Writing in Public

Tue 3 Mar 1998

Pierre Joris just said:

"A writer's job is to write, whatever means are at their disposal"--

I love poetry and wish more people loved it as much as I do--

But I don't think that a writer's "job" is necessarily to write--

In the past two days the insinuation has been that good writer/writing has something to do with how much writing is produced by said writer--

It seems to me that the notion of writing as work is a pretty historical one--and, according to some (freshest on my mind is Avital Ronell in CRACK WARS) would have come into the mix with the Romantics (I believe, though I haven't looked this up for a while--)

It also seems to me that a lot of people think that peotry (in the generic sense) should be smeared all over everything--

Why the desire to make poetry ubiquitous (as opposed to available)? Poetry isn't advertising--(the advertising of one's feelings? exhibitionist poetics?)--

Why do some of us keep insisting that the world needs to be reading it all the time? To be having it put in front of its face?

Maybe the "public" has reasons aside from false consciousness etc. for not wanting to read poetry all the time--

So--

Some reactions to "publishing" in public places--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

129. Christopher W. Alexander ezines what
Tue 3 Mar 1998

I've been thinking about a new, more interesting way to operate n/formation (my ezine – see .sig below for my URL), so while we're all debating the print versus e-publication teeny zine thing, I just thought I'd put in that one thing a zine can do on the www but not in print is... add to itself. I'm thinking here of p e r f o r a t i o n s specifically, which organizes itself nodally around topics, such that there begins with an initial cluster and +s to it, over time developing something much larger and more dialogical. on the other hand, I might as easily cite other sites more local – non seems to me something like this, as we're given it in development; dunno, tho, if this sort of continued developing is in the plan (hey, Laura?).

anyway, I know whatcha sayin': well, but folks can respond to one another in print journals, it happens all the time be civilized, man. [Poet, be like – totally, dude – get a clew, would you?]. alls I'm saying is that here in atopia or whereever, dis here topia (dys-topia?), we're afforded (ha) an opportunity for a different organ-ization, i.e., a different embodiment of that work, and one which might encourage yammering to the extent that a) everyone's talking in the same room 'bout similar things; b) I promettre that response time wld be optimum – i.e., that I'd get yr responses to the matter at hand up in a jiffy.

I'm wondering, what is it that folks think abt. such a fiendish plan? willing to write for it & not just search yr files for work that sorta fits? willing to send prose? – which, again, is I think the hardest goddamn'd thing to get round here.

now, IDEALLY this involves a print version of the original cluster with a whole big page abt.
the www version and making responses or something – but in the real world, I lack the inner resources to keep making a piece of paper with words on them in more than a few copies, at least until I can figger something out. and no, like everyone else I don't have any funding or rich Uncle Sugardaddy (mommy?) Sammy.

incidentally, in mentioning this re-organization,
I don't mean to impugn any of the work I have there – got some damn'd fine pieces by a # of us present here, and other damn'd fine pieces by others not present. mmhmmm.

so, next iss. is topical an I'll announce it here, live, say you saw it here first.

best, Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

130. Tom Orange

what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit)

Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

tho i'm mostly with joe amato on this thread, to me the technology is (still) all-too new for one to be able to come down firmly for or against.

while the analogy to print culture is certainly not a seamless one, it's still a useful one. being for or against web/electronic print seems to me akin to being for or against moveable type circa 1505. look how long it took print to impact poetry, and even the continued changes it wrought upon poetry even until recently. take wyatt as someone who, save tottel's miscelleny, was for all intents and purposes a manuscript poet -- same for donne, save his 1633 edition. perhaps not until the mid-19th century do we get print as a serious means of commodifying writing for a mass print readership -- the serialization of dickens' novels. then along comes the typewriter in, what, the 1930, whence wcw, cummings.

what's new is /not/ michael joyce's afternoon, a text i find entirely uninteresting: once you "get" the trick afforded by the technology, there's little point in going on. nevertheless joyce's text will maintain it's position in the hypertext literature canon (and i don't lament this) mostly by virtue of its timing and its novelty. likewise, bolter's writing space, while a good book and especially a good one for when it came out (1991?), is by now hopelessly out of date. for what's /really/ new, go to the ubuweb, burningpress, and light&dust sites...

tmorange

```
_____________________________________
| To grasp the relation of words to matter, |
| mind, process, may be the greatest task.  |
| -- Clark Coolidge, /The Crystal Text/ --  |
```

~~~
~~~

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

132. Joshua N Schuster
Philly Talks #5 Alcalay/Mandel
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Philly Talks #5 is:

Ammiel Alcalay

&

Tom Mandel

6pm, Thursday, March 5th

The Kelly Writers House
3805 Locust Walk
University of Pennsylvania
215-573-WRIT

There is not yet a publication for this talk. We plan on transcribing the event (including anything you say) and sending it out in a month or so to the mailing list. If you would like to be on this list (i.e. "subscribe"), please contact Louis Cabri at: [redacted] Philly Talks #6 will be an open call for written responses to past talks (more on this later).

-js

↑ Index

133. Michael J Kelleher
Re: publishing & prestige
Tue 3 Mar 1998

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, David Israel wrote:

> question: to what extent is the evident quesiness or diffidence abt. web-publishing (vs. paperbook-publishing) tacitly related to issues of prestige? -- (e.g., higher prestige now associated w/ the latter) d.i.

Many of the authors I have so far solicited for a l y r i c m a i l e r have asked: does this count as publication? Yes. It should. My answer thus far has been that the existence of the large, interested readership on this list and others and the (yes, problematic) easy, quick-read nature of web-published, text-based poetry might actually secure a larger audience for the poetry than would a print-magazine, the majority of whose subscribers would probably be university libraries.

Print-culture prestige depends upon the quality of your binding and the corporate or non-profit icon there appearing.

Truly,

Mike

↑ Index

134. David R. Israel
Walt (in L.A. & beyond)
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Poetas,

of poss. anecdotal interest, today's L.A. Times carries a front-page article on the American poet du jour (thanks to l'affaire d'Lewinsky) --

http://www.latimes.com/HOME/NEWS/FRONT/t000020758.1.html

The online version is divided into 9 screens-ful; am pasting in the intitial 2 below. What follows includes mention of an upcoming opera abt. Whtiman (by Robert Strassburg, set to open this fall at Cal State L.A.), the big Rutgers U. Whitman conference happening this fall, and other things. Luminaries such as Gary Snyder, Ed Folsom and J.D. McClatchy are quoted (or, w/ Robert Hass, paraphrased) in brief; etc. Not a bad report, all in all . . .

cheers, d.i.

> COLUMN ONE
> Whitman Goes Global
> The poet's themes, once thought distinctly American, fire imaginations from here to Nepal. Rumor linking his work to the Clinton-Lewinsky story has scholars, reporters trying to read between the lines.
> By TONY PERRY, Times Staff Writer
>
> These are boom times for Walt Whitman, America's most influential poet.
>
> A century after his death, Whitman, the poet of democracy, the poet of the body and soul, commands a loyal and expansive following from his birthplace on Long Island to the literary circles of Nepal.
>
> His rough, rigorous, unrhymed verse, informal and impassioned, appeals to both genders, all ages and numerous nationalities.

"Whitman is the poet of liberty, of individual freedom," said Carol Muske-Dukes, a poet and creative writing professor at USC. "As the world heads toward a new millennium, Whitman speaks more loudly and directly to people than ever."

Whitman may even have a fan in the White House. If the daily leakage is to be believed, his masterpiece, "Leaves of Grass," has a cameo in the investigation involving President Clinton and former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

Whitman's poetic themes--themes that Americans in their ethnocentric way thought were uniquely American--turn out to be so energetically universal that they are increasingly being assimilated into different cultures.

In China, a new Mandarin translation of his entire 400-poem canon has become a bestseller. The Communist government tried to suppress its publication in recent years but abandoned that effort in the face of widespread opposition.

Whitman has long been popular in China--although his works were banned as subversive by Mao Tse-tung during the Cultural Revolution. In an earlier decade, the revolutionary followers of Sun Yat-sen were devoted Whitman readers. ("My call is the call of battle/I nourish active rebellion," Whitman said in "Song of the Open Road.")

In August, Polish National Radio broadcast a marathon Whitman reading. A year earlier, 23 Hungarian translators finished translating 73 Whitman poems. A professor at the University of Wales completed a translation of Whitman into Welsh.

A Brazilian scholar has surveyed Whitman's influence on Brazilian writers, and a scholar at a university in Katmandu, Nepal, just finished "Whitman's System of Dynamic Meditation: A Tantric Guide to His Work."

The domestic and international spread of Whitmania

--the term used by his fans to describe their devotion--has been spurred by new editions, new critical studies, new translations, ever larger symposiums and an increasing number of reading circles.
One of the most active is at Leisure World in Laguna Hills. It is run by Robert Strassburg, an emeritus professor of music at Cal State L.A. Each month for seven years, 50 or so fellow retirees gather to parse Whitmanian lines and debate their meaning.
"By the 21st century, Whitman will be as well-known around the world as Shakespeare or Beethoven," Strassburg predicted after last month's meeting. ...
<etc.>

↑ Index

135. William Marsh
Re: Web Communities
Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 07:47 PM 3/2/98 -0500, Gabriel wrote:
>On Mon, 2 Mar 1998, William Marsh wrote:
>
>> At 03:34 PM 3/2/98 -0500, you wrote:
>> >To be serious, though, for a minute: the idea that epublication can become >> >a reliable means of awakening or creating a new nontraditional community >> >is a dubious one: all the talk of "meta-zines" or meta-meta zingy-zines or >> >e-zippy neo-zines or zappy zingzangy zines sort of misses the pt that >> >Spicer and so many others tried so hard to make: that _spoken_ poetry is >> >the lifeblood of a community. As I said, a zingy zangy e-word or ink-word >> >cannot compete with the singy-songy of the spoken word.
>> >
>> >Gabriel Gudding
>>
>> i guess the same can be said about "maga-zines" too / and even more >> seriously, who's competing? let's not insist on binaries in order to argue >> against them
>>
>> best,
>> bill

>
>
>bill, The same can in many cases _not_ be said about magazines (way back >in NE America, prior to the new stamp rate, magazines were an extremely, >like, local phenomenon: it was the _physical_ presence and nearness (rabid >love affairs, thudding paperweight battles, and in one case an actual >leg-biting [no dogs involved: author bit editor]) that made them go):
>physical nearness is sort of important to maga-zines. The curious thing >about maga-zines is that a _physical_ community creates them. Meta-zines >just don't have this: they have nothing to do with "community." Community, >I guess I'm arguing, is a totally physical phenomenon; can't be numinous >and stuff.
>
>When it comes to maga-zines the community is already extant: the mag comes >_from it_. Community is a PHYSICAL thing. Now I know that a lot of folks >have a problem with the idea of Physicality. Physicality is something >we've wrestled with since, like what?, Plotinus, Augustine? further back >than that? It became THE bad bugaboo with Plotinus. So much talk about >the internet and the great "body that is all one" (aum) is just more of >the same old neo-platonic hopes, but with some new rabidity, zippy irony, >and really fun binaries. Not arguing gainst binaries at all: they're >great fun and quite useful dingies. So, I hate to say this but there's >some historical residue of neo-platonic prudery and christian humanistic >prudery clinging to the common e-zippy boosterism that flows from certain >certains. Spicer was right to associate New Critics & denudedness & >non-person-ness & boredom. NOt saying anything here about whether poetry >works well on screen or not or if books are better etc etc: saying that we >ought not place epimethean hopes in a promethean vessel.
>
>Gabriel Gudding
>
Gabriel

provocative response and some truth in the notion that print mags emerged and continue to out of physical communities, tho i'd imagine that several press ventures over the years have involved people working from different physical or geographic sites (different cities, states, countries) and that the contributing and editing 'community' emerged out of the networking of individuals who perhaps never met face-to-face / i know i've heard stories of such ventures and perhaps others here could fill us in / the problem is also how one defines "community", since in addition to "people living in a specific locality" it can also mean a body of people with some practice or profession in common, or a "fellowship of interests" / and this i guess is where we disagree, since in the latter two senses of the word, electronic zines certainly can emerge out of or establish a community, no quotes / also i should clarify that i suggested the term "metazine" (off the cuff really) as one possible response to another listee's (Tom Becket's i believe) statement or query about potential "collective actions" on the web (not as a synonym for e-zines) / i don't see electronic collectives (ie, separate journals and magazines joining and cross-publishing their efforts through electronic hyperlinks) as a means of replacing or simulating physical communities, but again simply as one of the ways web ventures can be collective and, yes, communal in their actions / the appeal to me would be in the way a venture of this sort would suggest "a fellowship of interests" or commitment to common practice, and how it would localize/concentrate people's activities in the only way possible in electronic space / as for "neo-platonic" and "christian humanistic prudery", i'm afraid i just don't get it -- i see people with common interests getting together to explore possibilities in a fresh medium, as the NE locals did with their first magazines, no?

best,
bill

- -
William Marsh
PaperBrainPress
Voice & Range Community Arts
National University
[redacted]
http://www.dtai.com/~bmarsh
snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

136. Michael J Kelleher

Re: wet kisses and technophilia

Tue 3 Mar 1998

day Thursday

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Martin Spinelli wrote:

> OK--
> This is neither u- nor dystopia. It is Atopia. Placelessness. The physical body will not disappear, it will be everywhere at once.

> The "U" in utopia is "no" and makes the "A" in atopia a bit redundant.
> "Noplace" and "Placeless" are both in the same distopian discourse community, no?

To belabor:

topos being "place"

u- being "no" thus "no place" i.e. does not exist
but translated Utopia meaning "place of ideal perfection" whereas

dys- being "ill" or "bad" thus dystopia meaning the opposite of translated utopia, "bad or ill place"
whereas

a- (or an-) being "not", "without", or "lacking" thus atopia meaning without lacking place but implying the existence of something though not of the "landed" type, say being

I forward this definition, uncontentiously, as being distinct from utopia as it implies not an ironic criticism of human ideals of perfection nor perfection itself nor perdition, so to speak, but a state of being whose location or place is not verifiable in physical terms. Thus the utterance is not "located" in space but rather in the "moment" of it's articualtion in Time. Placelessness allows for dismbodied, placeless communication across great distance, in time. Place requires physical presence, which isn't always possible. No place requires the impossible, perfection. Bad places we all want to stay out of. Atopia allows us not community, but communication (between beings in distant places in time) that otherwise we could or would not have made.

Atopia is municipal

Truly,

Mike

↑ Index

137. William Marsh
Re: web publication, etc.
Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 08:24 PM 3/2/98 -0500, jeff wrote:
>i've been following the thread relating to this with interest...
>
>methinks it comes down to this:
>the web is good for wide opportunity and collective action. but the fact is:
>we are living in a world that is quickly alienating itself from itself via >any source it can. the web is adding to this is two major ways:
> 1) it gives the guise of communication, but with out any >kind of physical relationship between those

>"communicating" with > each other. so no true communication can take place due
> to a lack of viceral stimulation between the people >communicating (no body lang, eye contact, hearing a >voice, etc).

jeff

admittedly this is one of the things i find myself missing too, in email communications like these for example, when, among other things, it's hard to posit ideas with a light or humorous touch (although David Bromige does it pretty damn well!) or to convey emotion (:)) without recourse to reductive and often misleading (?) emoticons (;)) etc. / it becomes an issue of rhetoric as with other writing -- i miss the same things when i read a letter from a friend or a rejection slip from a journal / so i'm afraid the tired point has to be made that if you subsitute the word "book" or "newspaper" or "personal letter" for "web" in your statement above, the language of your critique sounds suddenly antiquated and reactionary -- if no "true communication" can take place without "viceral stimulation between the people communicating", then this pretty much damns the whole written record, doesn't it?, and not just the web, unless you mean something more specific by "communication" / not to sound flip, but we're communicating here, aren't we?

> 2) with all of the voices crying out, no one is being heard.
> it is not hard to see how these points relate to web-publication. esp when you add in the fact that web related things are not "real" in the sense that they are only bytes of information conveyed over energy waves. this does not stand up well to an actual page or a poets voice. and tho the networking possibilities are stagering, the easy out provided by the internet is destroying human social interaction. and with the destruction of social interaction, comes the destruction of art.

sure, a vast cacophony, but wander around the triple-decker Border's in Chicago and you hear the same voices crying (really, bookstores often fill me with anxiety -- so much to read, etc. -- the web is no different) / and i think it might help to think of the bubble-jet printer as a forerunner to the pixelated screen -- bits and bytes or ink dots, take your pick / one just smears a little easier

i'd like to write more, but i'm off to meet Joel Kuszai who's visiting San Diego and whom i met in this space / we're gonna get together over coffee and talk about how the Internet destroys human social interaction

bill

- -
William Marsh
PaperBrainPress
Voice & Range Community Arts
National University
[redacted]
http://www.dtai.com/~bmarsh
snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

138. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Writing in Public
Tue 3 Mar 1998

On Mar 2, 2:28pm, ScoutEW wrote:
> Subject: Re: Writing in Public > Ron, whatabout Walt Whitman writing outdoors everywhere, anyplace and > even in the dark outside on beaches at night?

And Whitman pissing the "Song of Myself" into the snow.

↑ Index

139. Gabriel Gudding
Re: web publication, etc.
Tue 3 Mar 1998

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, William Marsh wrote:

> i'd like to write more, but i'm off to meet Joel Kuszai who's visiting San Diego and whom i met in this space / we're gonna get together over coffee and talk about how the Internet destroys human social interaction

Bill, will you say hello to Joel for me and order me a short latte, I'll be there in a minute. -Gabe (I'm just out the door now)

↑ Index

140. CharSSmith
Re: Malmude & Gilfillan
Tue 3 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-03 06:54:39 EST, you write:

<< >Steve Malmude's book got a tremendously respectful (n.b. not fawning!)
>review in Lisa Jarnot's News Letter. John Godfrey said among other things >that art comes to this poet, not he to it, and that there are certain >things the poet says which are none of the reader's business!
>
>I'll send out a copy of this letterpress book free to the first person who
>e-mails me with their street address (it'll take me a week or so -- I have >to go fold them together). The next nine people can have it for $10 ppd. >> weren't we gonna do a trade?

Charles Smith
2135 Irvin Way
Sacramento, CA 95822

↑ Index

141. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: web publication, etc.

Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

well, so much to say to all who've been posting such insightful stuff...

Q: Is it a sad or happy fact of life that you met your partner (Kass, above) online?
A: Both.

the web is, as martin s. suggests, symptomatic of certain national (and restrictively global) trends---techno-corporate-capitalist, if you like... in this sense it figures a technology that is and is not (tom beckett) a tool, if by tool you mean something like a screwdriver... we are caught if you like at the junction of the corporate (which in the case of the web only seems, as so many have now commented on, to displace the corporeal) and a decentralized, distributed agency... which is to say, that some writers see the web, as many see technology itself, as NOT simply a tool... hence the art|technology divide that still persists in certain circles (until, that is, as is now happening and as joel and others indicate, web publication becomes 'suitable,' 'official' criteria for awards, honors, vitae etc)... or, in order to neutralize, imaginatively, the evident saturation of these spaces with fortune 500 motives, some writers call the web-computer-modem combine simply a tool and proceed thenceforth, agencies intact and unintervened-in...

i posted the codrescu excerpt by virtue of the former attitude---web as instrument of oppression (and note c's refusal to understand npr broadcasting as a digital technology fully in complicity, if that's the word, with his "imaginary electronic globe," lansat hook-ups and all)... by virtue of the tool ideology we might have a look at the discourse coming out of post-mcluhanites (yes, i read mcluhan too)... an unsettling amalgam of these two perspectives occurs in a tiny book by jacques attali, _millennium: winners and losers in the coming world order_ (random house, 1991)...

i'm asking that we manage not to lose sight of the transnational corporate empire even as we plumb away on our plastic devices (i.e., tools)...

matt, you're right about the "new," of course --- in context --- as is tom bell re jay bolter's book... but here again it is a matter of context: i hardly expect to have to justify emedia publication on an electronic list named "poetics"!... i do expect to have to interrogate its implications---for poetic form, collective action, network community (not an oxymoron, according to howard rheingold, albeit not imho a substitute for the 'real thing,' gabriel g, but then---shall we thereby forgo same?), etc... at the same time, this list itself emerges out of a public poetic context which, a mere six summers ago, was in many ways unwilling to accept that the internet was here to stay (each of you can 'fess up now, privately, as to what you each believed five years back re email etc.)...

now, in certain circles in which i move, i wouldn't mention jay bolter's book as a starting point (b/c in fact it is dated---albeit i still like his thumbnail history), and i would advocate that the 'new' (whatever it is) would have to be understood as itself time-dependent, itself subject to newer (historical?) developments... which is to say, that in the digital world three years old is ancient... but of course, in the geological world, this is hardly the case... so i use the 'new' hereabouts as a colloquial gesture, yes, but also to tip my hat toward the idea of the new as itself rendered anew... (case in point: i generally check my email before i send out a long-ish post such as this one... reason being something new might have been said in the half-hour or so interim it takes me to compose this, something that negates my feeling the need to say it mself)...

of course, as tom bell indicates, the web is nothing new!---in some sense... in that the printing press as an "agent of change" (e. eisenstein) itself could be thought to emerge from sociocultural coordinates too... many if not most of us have long-since lost the sense of this latter device and its offspring (and its associated distribution networks) in such terms... which is what i'm saying when i ask folks, pedantically perhaps, to think through the assumptions they bring to online spaces from the print world, and---hey, here's the point now---vice versa... chopping up trees is not a good thing in itself, nor is the refuse coming out of the plastics industry... in my view, neither can be entirely avoided (not now, anyway)... and we should, as poets, and to be as emphatic about it as i can, get our feet wet in all spheres (a tautological prompt in part, owing to the fact that you're all, skeptical or otherwise, reading this online---again, part of my point here)...

charles b raises a similar issue in his ebr6 piece (which you'll need netscape 3.x or equiv. to view/read!---access again!): (as i recall) that rejections of innovative poetry (please allow me this phrase for just a moment) parallel, rhetorically, rejections of electronic form... that in effect, a similar conservatism underwrites both impulses... of course, this does not foreclose on the possibility that one may like innovative poetry and hate electronic form; or that one may like electronic form and hate innovative poetry... mself, i would fret both of these latter positions...

as dale suggests, spending time online will affect our reading and writing habits, in ways that are, i think, only beginning to be documented... matt---i sit on the editorial board of _computers and composition_, have for some years now---and i still regularly run across studies of writing, in print and online, that time and again utilize tacit assumptions from (if you will) a strictly print-literate pov (no sense that the writer has read contemporary poetry, or understands developments in radio during this century, etc.)... the ten-year track record to which you refer is in fact even longer, if you include online communications (as you know, i'm sure)... those of you who are interested, have a look at shoshana zuboff's _in the age of the smart machine_, in which zuboff analyzes an online business scenario from the early 80s... and for that matter, the hawisher leblanc moran selfe history of computers and composition (on ablex) begins in 1979... and for that matter, ted nelson used the term hypertext in the mid-60s, and published the first version of _literary machines_ in 1980... again, a fascinating dialogue on same (with mark amerika, robert coover, and janet murray talking about nelson's book) in the current issue of FEED (you'll need that newer netscape or equiv. again!) at http://www.feedmag.com/html/document/98.02nelson/98.02nelson_master.html?mail

(odd-looking url, but it works)

as to whether poetry really needs to be read by all or some or (katy): well it's never read by all, is it?... personally, i'll seek the satisfaction of a readership that's interested, small or large, and hope, optimist that i am, that i can make a valuable contribution, somehow... if the web fuels a whitmanian impulse that everyone is speaking, or must speak, to everyone, that's an issue worth pursuing in these spaces too... in any case i agree in general with the suggestion that a new sort of literacy, or set of literacies, is emerging---hence perhaps even a new sense of what we mean by "literacy"---and that this might topple prior hierarchies... but not w/o collective effort of some sort, which i suppose need not comprise, always, a purely conscious (political) effort... though i do indeed fear (if that's the word) the coming of a new set of mediated hierarchies, too, much more powerful than those of the past, if much more implicit... virtual, if you like... a development that in my view is likely to parallel what some on this continent are now calling the booming "office economy"...

i'm enjoying this exchange, really, and learning much from all of you...

best,

joe

↑ Index

142. henry gould
Re: web publication, etc.
Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

amongst all us jaded terminal heads, has anyone mentioned the sheer joy of having your work accessible to people all over the globe? I know, not accessible to everybody yet.

so I find my own attitude is a bit lopsided - asymmetrical. I have trouble READING poetry on the web; but I like having my own junk available to OTHERS!! (this asymmetry, come to think of it, maybe seeps into ALL poetry for me... oh-oh...)

that's honesty for you. I always remember what Wallace Stevens said (though I can't remember the exact quote) - something about: "where would I be if I spent a lot of time paying attention to my contemporaries?"

denounce that attitude if you will, but there's something to it. All the top poets have been blind; a lot were deaf & pretty dumb, too. It's like piano tuning - helps sharpen the mumbling. Like fasting the appetite. I find I play better music if I HAVEN'T practiced for a long time. This doesn't hold for all creative situations - just want everybody to be clear on that. [joke] Down with community - drop like a stone, just so long's you anchor right. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

143. D W Have
No Subject
Tue 3 Mar 1998

In response to the general buzz about cyberspace versus print media etc, I come down on the side of poetry, wherever and however it occurs genuinely and offers something of food value to both reader and writer. That technical innovation will have some effect on the presentation and content of poetry and the lives of poets seems a given, and nothing much to worry about. Rather it offers one more interesting sidelight in the evolution of an art that will continue as long as there are people interested in pursuing it. The difficulty I encounter as I follow this thread, is that the gist of these posts imply "career" (a word that is probably antithetical to any honest poetic moment, & the very thing the language poets decry in the mainstream/mfa elite) is at the back/middle or front of many people's minds. Of course I may be mistaken, and I do not claim that such things do not enter my own mind, they do. However, I have been writing for twenty five years, sometimes in considerable poverty, partly because another life did not seem to be forthcoming, but also because I willingly resisted it, sometimes out of stubborness, sometimes out of fear, and sometimes because I sensed that it would be harder to write/read/and think with that particular monkey on my back. From such a perspective I have no one to blame or to resist, and the only people I have to thank are a few friends in the art. This is not to say I haven't railed at the way things are in moments of need, and I suppose if fate delivered me into the hands of a career at this point in my life I would probably take it because I need the money. But I am not likely to pursue my writing or its publication as a means to that end right now, mainly because my work is where I prefer to put my energy, but also because I am aware that it is risky to entertwine personal ambition and poetics. Frankly it worries me that so many on this list appear to be in the other camp without at least questioning the potentially dangerous position so much self-promotion (or promotion of one "kind" of poetry against another) can put them in . David Hickman

↑ Index

144. trace s. ruggles

Re: Writing in Public

Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 8.03 am -0800 3/3/98, you wrote:
>Pierre Joris just said:

[...]

> It also seems to me that a lot of people think > that peotry (in the generic sense) should be smeared all over everything--
>
> Why the desire to make poetry ubiquitous (as opposed to available)? Poetry > isn't advertising--(the advertising of one's feelings? exhibitionist > poetics?)--
>
> Why do some of us keep insisting that the world needs to be reading it > all the time? To be having it put in front of its face?
>
> Maybe the "public" has reasons aside from false consciousness etc. for > not wanting to read poetry all the time--

My wife and I argue all the time about how and why (and when) to read poetry. She almost never does (maybe once or twice a year). Her reasons:

1. it takes too much work to read poetry (even the 'easy' ones)
2. she can't lose her 'self' like she can with novels
3. to her, writing should have 'story'

but, because she very rarely reads poetry, does it mean isn't a force in her life?

She is constantly trying to get me to read novels, but I won't. I don't like them. My reasons:

1. it takes too much work to read novels (even the 'easy' ones)
2. i feel uncomfortable losing my 'self' in a novel
3. to me, writing should have 'experience'

I like it that when I read poetry, I'm aware that I'm a person reading poetry, as well as experiencing the act of reading and whatever 'effects' the poem has on me (or i upon the poem).

So, are we just two types of people who experience writing/life in different ways? Or is one of us right?

Trace

↑ Index

145. Jordan Davis
"selby's or someone else's list of experimental poetry readings"
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Does such a thing exist?

Not, of course, of individual events -- such as Jack Collom's reading with Dug Rothschild tomorrow night at St. Marks, or Tom Raworth's reading with Drew Gardner Thursday at Poetry City -- but the places, times, hosts?

I told a friend of mine I'd find out if there were any reading series in Chicago he could contact, but then I realized the people I thought were in Chicago were actually in entirely different places.

Would it be a useful document or would it provoke headaches?

Jordan Davis
who doesn't like headaches

↑ Index

146. Joel Kuszai
Re: wet kisses and technophilia
Tue 3 Mar 1998

yinz might wanna join the Utopias list at UB. same address as this. this debate has been rocking the utopianist scholars world since i joined that list...for more entertaining discussion of this topic, hook up with the reesarch on anarchism list curtsy of nothinness.org. much of it is in french, spanish, or Italyun, but it makes deleting more triumphal.

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Michael J Kelleher wrote:

> day Thursday
>
> On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Martin Spinelli wrote:
>
> OK--
> This is neither u- nor dystopia. It is Atopia. Placelessness. The physical > body will not disappear, it will be everywhere at once.
>
> The "U" in utopia is "no" and makes the "A" in atopia a bit redundant.
> "Noplace" and "Placeless" are both in the same distopian discourse community, no?
>
> To belabor:
>
> topos being "place"
>
> u- being "no" thus "no place" i.e. does not exist
> but translated Utopia meaning "place of ideal perfection" whereas
>
> dys- being "ill" or "bad" thus
> dystopia meaning the opposite of translated utopia, "bad or ill place"
> whereas
>
> a- (or an-) being "not", "without", or "lacking" thus > atopia meaning without lacking place but implying the existence of > something though not of the "landed" type, say being
>
> I forward this definition, uncontentiously, as being distinct from utopia > as it implies not an ironic criticism of human ideals of perfection nor > perfection itself nor perdition, so to speak, but a state of being whose > location or place is not verifiable in physical terms. Thus the utterance > is not "located" in space but rather in the "moment" of it's articualtion > in Time. Placelessness allows for dismbodied, placeless communication > across great distance, in time. Place requires physical presence, which > isn't always possible. No place requires the impossible, perfection. Bad > places we all want to stay out of. Atopia allows us not community, but > communication (between beings in distant places in time) that otherwise we > could or would not have made.

>
> Atopia is municipal
>
> Truly,
>
> Mike

↑ Index

147. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher whitman...
Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

re whitman, from today's online capsule summary of _chronicle of higher ed_ (hope this isn't a repeat):

>  WALT WHITMAN imagined himself to be everywhere. Now, in countless digital bits, he is indeed. A team of American-literature scholars has developed the Walt Whitman Hypertext Archive, which contains almost all of Whitman's poetry, facsimiles of manuscripts, galleries of photographs, and more. You can also hear, for the first time on line, a recording of what is thought to be Whitman's voice.*
>
> --> FOR MORE, go to http://chronicle.com/infotech whitman's voice? --- FAR OUT///

best,

joe

↑ Index

148. Martin Spinelli
wet kisses and technophilia
Tue 3 Mar 1998

OK--
> This is neither u- nor dystopia. It is Atopia. Placelessness. The physical > body will not disappear, it will be everywhere at once.

The "U" in utopia is "no" and makes the "A" in atopia a bit redundant. "Noplace" and "Placeless" are both in the same distopian discourse community, no?

No fingers pointed, but what we need to underline here, in thick black magic-marker, is the difference between "collective action" (of which I'm sure there are a few good examples on the net) and the rhetorics of "democracy", "utopia", and "community" which have always only been ads for the emergent technology of the day. The promotional language that surrounded radio in the 20s and 30s was almost word-for- word the same as that used to promote our current stomping ground. I have a relevant piece in PMC January 1996, "Radio Lessons for the Internet"

<http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/pmc/popcult.all.html>

, or, for those of us denied access to Muse because we don't have accounts at universities that subscribe:

<http://rorty.ist.utl.pt/issue1/pmc.html>

As homey and seductive as it is, I don't find it particularly useful to talk about what we are engaged with here in terms of rediscovering some lost connection. In fact, t's a much more sound to argue that espace proposes itself as the remedy for the very social disjunction (commodity fetishism) which it creates.

> Adobe Acrobat enables the writer or publisher to distribute a book of any size, formatted in any way, to the Web, mail, ftp, etc. AT NO COST.

Aside from being just plain wrong--computers, monitors, terminals, modems, phone lines, "access providers" (love that phrase), tuition, computer ed, software, all do COST-- this kind of discussion distracts us a bit from looking at the lit being produced. We can recognize that the net is a decidedly class-b(i)ased phenomenon that allows some people to feel like they're participating in a "community" while vacuuming real community and political action into itself (and excluding wholesale groups of others), AND talk about (and even ADMIRE) the kinds of "collective action" that Joel rightly suggests it makes possible. I think one of the finest (and funniest) of these projects happened on this very list a couple of years, the Anti- Hegemony Project. There's a little write-up of it (if not the thing itself) at:

<http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/diu/diu26.5.html>

"Collaboration" was an early ad-line for the net, but I can count the number of good examples of it on a few fingers. Collaborative editing of e-zines and the mish-mash of MOOs aside, I would love to hear about good online textual collaborations. Some of us must know where these things are... or maybe we just don't play well with others.

Missing my community,
Martin

Martin Spinelli

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

149. Maz881
KSW Reading
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Juliana Spahr, Rob Manery & Bill Luoma will be reading this Saturday March 7 at the Kootenay School of Writing in Vancouver at 8pm. KSW is at 112 West Hastings.

↑ Index

150. Gwyn McVay
newtek & po
Tue 3 Mar 1998

New media. Old media. Books superior. Web a class issue. Okay, fine. What I'd like to see happen is a CD-ROM anthology of American Sign Language poetry--which is out there, and must, by its nature, have a unique poetic, but doesn't get, for lack of a better word, "heard" through the usual channels. Maybe a CD ASL po-zine from Gallaudet?

Then, to make it really interesting, they could play the video clips of poems to ASL-literate apes and get their response. ("You call this poetry? If I had the time, I could write /Hamlet/....")

Gw(seriously)yn

↑ Index

151. Steve Tills
Re: AVEC query
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Linda,

Cydney's e-mail is [redacted].

linda russo wrote:

> does anyone have Cydney Chadwick's email? I was given an address for her which proved itself unfruitful --
>
> thx.

↑ Index

152. Annie Finch
Jack Micheline
Tue 3 Mar 1998

I was sorry to hear of the death of Jack Micheline. Jack was a gracious and wild energy in the North Beach poetry scene when I lived there in the late 80's. He was everywhere, selling the socialist newspaper in each cafe and adding poetry to the climate with his intelligence and heart. Have a good one, Jack.

AF

_____
_____
_____
Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

153. Tim Wood
Looking for input on talk
Tue 3 Mar 1998

I've been asked to give a talk this summer to help poets try to understand what publishers are looking for, etc. I'm planning to push it a little bit and, where appropriate, talk from the opposite view point: how publishers (primarily those of periodicals such as journals) can do a better job of communicating to potential submitters. I would love any suggestions any of you might have on points, nits & grand schemes to make sure I hit.

thanks,
Tim

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by

↑ Index

154. Mark Weiss
Re: publishing & prestige
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Actually, my diffidence about electronic publication is pretty simple: if it precludes publication of the same piece in a print publication, or if the electronic submission must be previously unpublished, I'm not interested. Otherwise, why not? I guess that means I still see the web as more ephemeral than print, and that I prefer a smaller audience, if necessary, that's likely to stay with the poem longer.

At 11:47 AM 3/3/98 -0500, you wrote:
>On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, David Israel wrote:
>
>> question: to what extent is the evident quesiness or diffidence abt.
>> web-publishing (vs. paperbook-publishing) tacitly related to issues of >> prestige? -- (e.g., higher prestige now associated w/ the latter) d.i.
>>
>
>Many of the authors I have so far solicited for a l y r i c m a i l e r >have asked: does this count as publication? Yes. It should. My >answer thus far has been that the existence of the large, interested >readership on this list and others and the (yes, problematic) easy, >quick-read nature of web-published, text-based poetry might actually >secure a larger audience for the poetry than would a print-magazine, the >majority of whose subscribers would probably be university libraries.
>
>Print-culture prestige depends upon the quality of your binding >and the corporate or non-profit icon there appearing.
>
>
>Truly,
>
>Mike
>
>

↑ Index

155. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: publishing & prestige
Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

weird, mark w, how much we differ here: i didn't even put up a website for mself until i had what i thought were sufficient epublications, and certainly didn't and don't want those to overlap with my work in print... didn't put my vita online---didn't see the point... didn't put my print work online either (not saying you shouldn't)... didn't even compose a hypertext till i could come up with something that violated generic differences (whatever its value, it does this)... my website is useful, to me, b/c i use it as a node to 'gather' my online work... in general, i want to publish stuff online intended to be viewed/read (slippage intended) online... i imagine my print pubs overlapping with my electronic pubs---sometimes intended and sometimes not... but not in terms of dupes---i'm talking thematically---lines, concerns, images, etc... i imagine my "self" in this sense as occupying alternating alphabetic, visual and aural habitats...

any writer imagining herself so is bound to require, in the near future, a critical apparatus that can take account of these alternating, con/disjunctive effects... one nice thing about this medium is that it's helped throw the formal issues in relief...

which is to say that, personally, i would recommend---as a different sense of how to go about this---publishing stuff online that in fact you have no intention of publishing elsewhere... if you're even a little creative with online possibilities, any print reprint MUST be a substantively different reading (maybe even writing) experience... which is to say, make it for the screen and it changes, often in subtle ways... why not explore/construct along this axis, just for a change?... what have you got to lose?... the risk is, as always, in the making...

of course there are all SORTSA publishing-business issues that arise when you attempt to publish something in a trade or academic press that was previously published online (and vice versa---as i just discussed backchannel with someone)... one of the interesting issues is whether simply putting something online yourself IS publishing... well of course it is... and if someone links to you---is this publication too?... and when does this activity begin to accrue (in the eyes of whomever) intellectual capital? (which self-publishing today seems not to)... certainly when it generates $$$, but not only then, no?...

best,

joe

email: [redacted]
url: http://www.iit.edu/~amato

↑ Index

156. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
glasa conference miami u, oxford ohio...
Tue 3 Mar 1998

my it's been a busy day for me on poetix!... apologies for my long-windedness, but every now and again i feel the urge to rant a bit about the eworld...

just to say that kass fleisher and i will be copresenting on a panel at the great lakes american studies conference, miami u in oxford ohio, this friday at 3:30... our paper is entitled "urgently parallel distributed processsing: how the middle class makes (the) working-class history"...

love to meet anyone from the list!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

157. Hzinnes
reading
Tue 3 Mar 1998

3 March l998

Hollins College, Virginia, is holding its Literary Festival this year during the week-end of March l3. Harriet Zinnes will be reading on March l4, l0 a m, from her book of translations of Jacques Prevert (Blood and FEathers, Moyer Bell, l993) and from her My, Haven't the Flowers Been? (Magic Circle, l995). Are there Virginians on the List? Do come!

↑ Index

158. Mark Weiss
Re: Looking for input on talk
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Interesting topic. When you find an answer patent it. Tje Junction Press entry in the Dustbooks directory says "Modernist/postmodernist poetry, non-academic," but I get mostly submissions that by anybody's definition fall outside the parameters. Years ago I did a magazine called Broadway Boogie. The name itself should have been a giveaway, as the contents surely were, which didn't stop someone from sending me an incredibly mannered 75 page manuscript in heroic couplets. When I get a real mismatch I often scribble on the return "you could have saved the postage if you'd looked at one of our books," but desperation (I guess) and self-deception are powerful drugs. By the evidence of the cover-letters almost none of my suitors have taken the trouble to find out what I publish. Which, by the way, isn't very flattering. Maybe someone's done a study that tells these people that making a blind submission to all the publishers in the directory is cost-effective.

At 07:11 PM 3/3/98 -0600, you wrote:
>I've been asked to give a talk this summer to help poets try to understand >what publishers are looking for, etc. I'm planning to push it a little bit >and, where appropriate, talk from the opposite view point: how publishers >(primarily those of periodicals such as journals) can do a better job of >communicating to potential submitters. I would love any suggestions any of >you might have on points, nits & grand schemes to make sure I hit.
>
>thanks,
>Tim
>
>
>_____
>Tim Wood [redacted]
>
>poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by
>
>

↑ Index

159. Mark Weiss
Re: publishing & prestige
Tue 3 Mar 1998

Joe--I'm not sure that we have polar positions here. That part of your work that you intend for the kind of reading that the web facilitates requires a much surer sense of the medium than I have at present. This may change over time. The "property" issues are real, and aren't for me about money. If I publish a poem on the web that's really ben written with paper in mind do I preclude the possibility of subsequent journal publication? And do e-zines as a rule require that the work they publish never have seen the public light before?

At 07:45 PM 3/3/98 -0600, you wrote:
>weird, mark w, how much we differ here: i didn't even put up a website for >mself until i had what i thought were sufficient epublications, and >certainly didn't and don't want those to overlap with my work in print... >didn't put my vita online---didn't see the point... didn't put my print >work online either (not saying you shouldn't)... didn't even compose a >hypertext till i could come up with something that violated generic >differences (whatever its value, it does this)... my website is useful, to >me, b/c i use it as a node to 'gather' my online work... in general, i want >to publish stuff online intended to be viewed/read (slippage intended) >online... i imagine my print pubs overlapping with my electronic >pubs---sometimes intended and sometimes not... but not in terms of >dupes---i'm talking thematically---lines, concerns, images, etc... i >imagine my "self" in this sense as occupying alternating alphabetic, visual >and aural habitats...

>
>any writer imagining herself so is bound to require, in the near future, a >critical apparatus that can take account of these alternating, >con/disjunctive effects... one nice thing about this medium is that it's >helped throw the formal issues in relief...
>
>which is to say that, personally, i would recommend---as a different sense >of how to go about this---publishing stuff online that in fact you have no >intention of publishing elsewhere... if you're even a little creative with >online possibilities, any print reprint MUST be a substantively different >reading (maybe even writing) experience... which is to say, make it for the >screen and it changes, often in subtle ways... why not explore/construct >along this axis, just for a change?... what have you got to lose?... the >risk is, as always, in the making...
>
>of course there are all SORTSA publishing-business issues that arise when >you attempt to publish something in a trade or academic press that was >previously published online (and vice versa---as i just discussed >backchannel with someone)... one of the interesting issues is whether >simply putting something online yourself IS publishing... well of course it >is... and if someone links to you---is this publication too?... and when >does this activity begin to accrue (in the eyes of whomever) intellectual >capital? (which self-publishing today seems not to)... certainly when it >generates $$$, but not only then, no?...
>
>best,
>
>joe
>
>email: [redacted]
>url: http://www.iit.edu/~amato
>
>

↑ Index

160. Maria Damon
Re: Poems for the Millennium
Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 11:21 AM +0000 3/3/98, Miekal And wrote:
... I >have just received a rejection slip from a smalltime college literary >magazine saying the ongoing collaboration, Literature Nation, >interwriting by Maria Damon & myself, is definitively not poetry, so I >wont bother to speak to "where" that is written.
>
>
>rasputin zukofsky

whoa dude! i'm thrilled, like, hello, i'm finally officially a card carrying member of POETIX, having some two-bit college lit mag say, not that it's not good enough poetry for them to publish, but that it's NOT POETRY. "definitively", moreover. can i get a copy of that document for my office door?

↑ Index

161. Maria Damon
Re: Jack Micheline
Tue 3 Mar 1998

At 8:03 PM -0500 3/3/98, Annie Finch wrote:
>I was sorry to hear of the death of Jack Micheline. Jack was a gracious >and wild energy in the North Beach poetry scene when I lived there in the >late 80's. He was everywhere, selling the socialist newspaper in each cafe >and adding poetry to the climate with his intelligence and heart. Have a >good one, Jack.
>
>AF

yes. i remember him from my bob kaufman research daze in SF; his reading at Kaufman's funeral, etc, and his presence at the Beat conference at NYU in, was it 1994? he scared me a little, so i appreciated him from a distance. committed to the end. --md
>_____
>_____
>_____
>Annie Finch
> http://muohio.edu/~finchar
>Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing

>Miami University
>Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

162. dbuuck
Re: tripwire
Tue 3 Mar 1998

---

re: Franklin Bruno's inquiry about Tripwire---

tripwire is a new poetics journal edited by Yedda Morrison & David Buuck. Issue one is aprox. 150 pages, including an interview with Myung Mi Kim, and work by Noah de Lissovoy, Eleni Sikelianos, Kathy Lou Schultz, Rodrigo Toscano, Sarah Anne Cox, Eliazabeth Robinson, Tan Lin, Jocelyn Saidenberg & Brian Strang, Robert Hale, Tim Davis, Elizabeth Treadwell, Sarah Rosenthal, Dana Lomax, Thiagarajah Selvanithy, Sherry Brennan, Mark Wallace, and others. It includes essays, "work," artwork, reviews, and more.

$6 for one issue / $10 for two --- Published biannually

tripwire
c/o Morrison & Buuck
722 Shotwell #4
SF CA 94110

Date: Mon, 2 Mar 1998 01:53:29 -0800
From: Franklin Bruno <[redacted]>
Subject: tripwire?

I seem to have deleted the ordering info (address, price) for Tripwire that was posted a week or so ago. Could someone repost it (backchannel or otherwise) please?

↑ Index

163. ScoutEW
blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the "academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!, I suppose the academy of the future is closing its doors to argue about publishing on the web? If anyone wants a break, write to me and explain why some critics call Berrigan an "ardent disciple" and like some kid brother to Frank O' Hara.

An imitator. His writings mean alot to me, and I would like some discussion on the matter.

↑ Index

164. Joel Kuszai
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

anybody have a literature review on this?

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the "academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!, I suppose the academy of the future is closing its doors to argue about publishing on the web? If anyone wants a break, write to me and explain why some critics call Berrigan an "ardent disciple" and like some kid brother to Frank O' Hara. An imitator. His writings mean alot to me, and I would like some discussion on the matter.

anyhow, back to the web.

it was good to meet up with Bill Marsh of poeticslist fame and it proves that there is some humanity to all this. he showed me a nice little cafe where everyone was reading and not talking! imagine! well we lit that place up pretty good--especially when we got to remembering the good old days on poetics. and Mark Weiss your next, Rae? you there? Don? You had all better be at the reading tomorrow. I'm goign to take some time out of staring at endless asymmetries and soon--my fav., the Light Poems---hmmm.

on another affront, I'm not sure what Katy means about making poetry ubiquitous. haven't you ever seen, wuzzit called "streetfare journal"? do they still have that? I'll never forget riding around on the busses of san francisco and seeing creeley poem and nikki giovanni and more. right where the ads are! imagine! and advertising is the poets trade. didn't lew welch write "raid kills bugs dead" ? i've taught that little humdinger of a poem, and it always gets tremendous applause from the students. another one, not so tremendous, is the poem by Reznikoff, goes (from memory) something like:

FOR AN INSCRIPTION OVER A SUBWAY ENTRANCE

This is the gift of Hephestus
the god men say is lame.

I'm not sure if I have that right, but it (for me is a little better than the one about the "girder still itself among the rubble"

↑ Index

165. david bromige
reznikoff's girder
Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

has always bugged me. "Still itself amid the rubble." Heck, the girder's rubble, too. Howcum girder specified, here, rubble unspecified, there?

break a leg tomorrow, if thats when you read, Joel. The box of books from Meow arrived, what a breathtaking collection and congratulations, again, on your endeavor! We should be talking about Berrigan (Ted) but we should also be talking about these Meow Press books. I will (must go eat right now, though). db3

↑ Index

166. Tosh
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

> I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the "academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!,

I don't know who the academy is, but I do think Berrigan's work is really really good. What you didn't hear, was a lurker smiling. And yes his complete work should be in print.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

167. Schuchat Simon
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

if you would like to know why Ted Berrigan is sometimes referred to as an "ardent disciple" of Frank O'Hara, I suggest you look at the interview with Berrigan ("On Frank O'Hara's Birthday") which is included in the O'Hara memorial volume edited by Berkson and LeSeur.

Re Berrigan in general, there are more memoirs than criticism, but the Waldman edited NICE TO SEE YOU memorial book has a good share of both. The Tom Clark ("Late Returns") and Ron Padgett ("Ted") memoir volumes, if you don't have them, are worth reading. Aram Saroyan wrote a novel ("The Street") before Ted died, and a memoir "Friends in the World," both of which deal with Berrigan as person and poet. There is also random stuff by Andrei Codrescu discussing the intrinsic importance of Berrigan.

A couple years ago someone on this list indicated they were writing a Ph.D thesis on the works of Berrigan -- maybe that project has advanced.

↑ Index

168. ScoutEW
Re: blah blah Kuszai
Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

anyhow, back to the web, I detect some sarcasm in your reply. I hoped when I joined this poetics list that I would be able to read some interesting posts on poetics. I wish for more than Kuszai's stupid dismissal of my post...I only wanted to talk about Berrigan and if you want to take that tone pal, then have something more interesting or witty to say than anyhow, back to the web

↑ Index

169. ScoutEW
sorry if..
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Kuszai, sorry if you were not meaning to be serious, I feel this web publishing topic has been beat down hard and that you were trying to make light of my post to generate some serious talk on Ted Berrigan by saying "back to the web." So lets talk about Berrigan , Padgett, Ashbery, any of the "New York School" poets, where do they fit in say the (olson /pound /williams) tradition of poetry, more specifically does anyone see "The Sonnets" as collage? enough publishing talk , just do it! By any means necessary!!!

↑ Index

170. rsillima
Jack Micheline
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Annie,

It is, I believe, Jack Hirshman who was (and hopefully still is) out hawking CP newspapers at events in SF. Micheline was a friend of his, but a fairly different guy. The best obit I saw was in the SF Examiner (compared with an unforgivably stupid piece in the Chron). Since it includes Jack M's last poem, I paste in below:

Jack Micheline, poet, painter, free spirit

Eric Brazil OF THE EXAMINER STAFF
March 1, 1998

Author of 20-plus books was Beat icon to fellow poets

Jack Micheline, an underground hero among his fellow poets who lived the Bohemia n life to the hilt, died Friday on a BART train somewhere between his San Francisco home and Orinda.

Mr. Micheline was 68. His death was attributed to a heart attack. He had been a diabetic for several years. His body was found by BART police when the train reached the Orinda station.

Born Harvey Martin Silver in New York, Mr. Micheline changed his name as a young man and committed himself to the artist's life, living by his pen and paintbrush, always poor, always on t he move.

During his lifetime, Mr. Micheline authored more than 20 books, most recently la st year, when FMSBW Press of San Francisco brought out "Sixty Seven Poems for Downtrodden Saints."

"We considered him a very pure person," said author Gerald Nicosia of Corte Made ra. "In the literary business, most people are in it for fame or money, but he was doing it because he loved wh at he was doing, and he had a great gift. There was real music to his poems."

Mr. Micheline had lived in San Francisco, in the South of Market and Mission dis tricts, since the mid-1970s. And although he disavowed the label of Beat poet, he was nevertheless a Beat icon - a street poet whose poems were meant to be spoken and a champion of society's underdogs. Jack Kerouac, author o f "On the Road" and arguably the most famous of the Beats, wrote the introduction to Mr. Micheline's first bo ok, "River of Red Wine."

"His sweet lines revive the poetry of open hope in America," Kerouac wrote.

San Francisco poet Neeli Cherkovski, who knew Mr. Micheline for almost 40 years, said Saturday, "He always lived out the romanticism of the poet of the streets, the downtrodden. He never made it to a big publisher - he always shied away."

Nevertheless, he said, "thousands of young poets in the country kind of march to the rhythms of Jack Micheline. He was always, like, under the underground, and the establishment held him at ar m's length."

The late writer Charles Bukowski, a soul mate, had said Mr. Micheline's poems "a re total feelings beating their heads on barroom floors. I can't think of anyone who has more and who has been n eglected more. Jack is the last of the holy preachers, sailing down Broadway singing the song."

Although he had tethered himself to San Francisco, Mr. Micheline's restless-ness never left him, and he stayed on the move.

"Always quick to pack his bags and take a trip, then roll into town and sleep on my couch until he could get his hotel room back," is the way his publisher, San Francisco Deputy Public Defender Matt Gonzalez, described him.

"He had a lot of different sides. He was very spiritual, and he also had the Bea t sensibility and a great big heart," Gonzalez said. "He had an immense number of friends."

Mr. Micheline could also be a pain in the neck to work with - even denying au-tho rship of a poem until shown the manuscript in his handwriting, Gonzalez said. A second printing of his last book is almost ready for publication.

Nicosia said that Mr. Micheline "could be very difficult, but there was a small coterie of people who knew him well, and you kind of got past that thorny exterior, the loner with the blustery Bronx mannerism. And if you got past that, there was a real sweetheart in Jack. He was always there for the poor, the homeless, the people left by the wayside in society."

There was "real music to his poems," Nicosia said. "They sing and they bounce an d they jump around the page."

For example:

OUT OF THE RAINS

Out of the rains

And mud of cities

Walking in a fog

On subway platforms

In Harlem and Brooklyn and Queens

I see the faces of children

Staring at me

And I want to run from the city

Past freights

And ships

And buildings that scrape the sky

I want to race down streets

Dreaming of mountains and Spanish girls

I am a poet

I stare at the ground to see if I am bleeding.

Long after becoming a published poet, Mr. Micheline took up painting - an art at which he made more money than at his chosen vocation.

Charles Wehrenberg of San Francisco, a dealer in rare art objects who owns 40 or 50 Micheline paintings, said that "he was a really phenomenal painter, but he was so involved with the whole idea that the dead rule the world he didn't think he'd succeed until he dropped dead."

Mr. Micheline's technique was "totally primitive" and eschewed draftsmanship. We hrenberg said that he once asked Mr. Micheline for a series of portraits on famous people he knew, and Mr.

Micheline retorted that "I ain't no f- - - camera."

"His whole idea was to paint people's psyches," Wehrenberg said.

"He was a very hard-to-like character, but he had very brilliant moments. He was absolutely adamant that he didn't want to succeed. He wouldn't mind winning a lot of money, but he'd immediately l ose it back on the horse races," Wehrenberg said. "He really is the character that Kerouac wrote about in "On the Road.' He is Whitman's wild child. He really did live out a poetic life."

Right, said his poet friend Cherkovski. "He was kind of wild. Even in his 60s he was still a man of the streets. He was saying, "I'm outside the system, I don't belong to it.' "

Mr. Micheline is survived by his son, Vincent Silver of Tucson, Ariz. Funeral se rvices are pending.

This is Mr. Micheline's last poem, written Feb. 25, 1998, in San Francisco.

POEM

To capture the feeling

To feel its pulse

To see the stream has been muddied

I am reshaping the start

I cannot be bothered with your

Earthly pleasures

All these rantings and ravings

Have nothing to do with poetry

Have nothing to do with magic

Only the ears of butterflies

And birds

And the delicate moths

Matter.

Let the Angels in

Let them into this Market

Now

Feel, see and breathe.

↑ Index

171. Miekal And ASLese
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Brian Clements wrote:
>
> Gwyn,
>
> The only person I know of who is doing anything with ASL poetry is Dirksen > Bauman, who published a piece recently in the PMLA. I don't know where > Dirksen is now, but you might be able to track him down through the > Binghamton English Dept.
>
> Brian

brian: what makes his work asl? are you saying that the texts he writes use asl grammar & syntax or that he gives "readings" using asl?

miekal

↑ Index

172. TBeck131
meow
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I like DB's idea of discussing Meow Press books. Especially since I've only seen one of them (Silliman's XING). Actually, I thought I'd worked out a swap for a couple of them but I may not be remembering correctly. In any event, it would be nice to switch gears and talk about some specific books. Why is it when I see WWW I immediately think of Hulk Hogan. As ever, Tom B.

↑ Index

173. Jacques Debrot
Re: Query: Catriona Strang
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Does anyone have the s-, &/or e-mail address for Catriona Strang? If so, please back-channel. Thanks in advance.
--Jacques

↑ Index

174. henry gould
berrigan
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Seems to me one of the key things about Berrigan which he picked up on and which has been picked up on in turn from him by many many "NY School" poets is the fusion of formality & informality, of art & grunge - so that they find sort of a lyrical balance and an integration of beauty & everyday unofficial (& mostly moneyless & prestigeless) life.

This can only happen when there is an intense awareness & understanding of art in all its arty grandeur coupled with an intellectual freedom & scepticism about same coupled with a devotion to it which is natural & not simply willed or calculated.

& it could probably only happen in New York at a certain time when art, power & grunge competed on a level playing field. "The Sonnets" are art sonnets & improvised performance pieces combined.

Grunge is probably the wrong term for everyday living in a devoted bohemian (poor) way. & Berrigan sometimes seems self-indulgent, too obviously performing that life. But that's a view from far outside. (we don't have grunge in Rhode Island. we have coffee milk.)

just a few berrigan thoughts very calculatedly & stupidly self-centeredly designed to remind readers that my own sonnet thing ISLAND ROAD at Mudlark is designed as a reply to Berrigan, Berryman & Shakespeare combined, with #4 Homage to Falstaff especially aimed at Berrigan. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

175. Brian Clements
Re: newtek & po
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Gwyn,

The only person I know of who is doing anything with ASL poetry is Dirksen Bauman, who published a piece recently in the PMLA. I don't know where Dirksen is now, but you might be able to track him down through the Binghamton English Dept.

Brian

~~~~~~

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> New media. Old media. Books superior. Web a class issue. Okay, fine. What I'd like to see happen is a CD-ROM anthology of American Sign Language poetry--which is out there, and must, by its nature, have a unique poetic, but doesn't get, for lack of a better word, "heard" through the usual channels. Maybe a CD ASL po-zine from Gallaudet?
>
> Then, to make it really interesting, they could play the video clips of poems to ASL-literate apes and get their response. ("You call this poetry? If I had the time, I could write /Hamlet/....")
>
> Gw(seriously)yn

↑ Index

176. Tim Wood

Re: Looking for input on talk

Wed 4 Mar 1998

> Boogie. The name itself should have been a giveaway, as the contents surely were, which didn't stop someone from sending me an incredibly mannered 75 page manuscript in heroic couplets.

I've noticed the same thing. One publications that I'm involved in is a general circulation monthly on the arts that can only afford to do eight pages a month. After an interview an article a review the calendar, there's enough space for about two (raw) pages of poetry. That's never stopped anyone from sending poems of 10 or more pages. Hmmm...

More thoughts like these would definately help. Nothing like stories from the horse's mouth to make a point. It might be fun to assemble them (perhaps dropping the names...) into a little chapbook with a list of resources & such. "Your first guide to the world of journals" or "The Dummies book of poetry publishing". <grin>.

Beyond more thoughts like these, could any of you make suggestions on resources (either print or online) that would help either periodical publishers or poets in seek of publiation 'glory'. I've got my own feelings about SASEs & such. What do others think of them, or of using say a postcard instead? Have any you found any unusual ways to publicize your periodicals or that help you locate places to 'place' your poetry. And on and on. I'm looking for any remotely relevant thoughts. I've got experience and a high dose of opinion in regards to publishing, but I'd rather speak from more than just my little bit of ego.
~~~~~~

thanks,
Tim

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by

↑ Index

177. Gwyn McVay
Re: Looking for input on talk
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Pet peeve: unannounced theme issues whose themes are decided beforehand by editorial fiat, not evolving as a result of incoming material, which latter I've been guilty of doing myself. But I've submitted places and had work sent back with no explanation, only to find that they had been planning a theme issue on Jewish writers, whom I admire jointly and severally but can't claim to be, personally.

g. oyisch

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Tim Wood wrote:

> I've been asked to give a talk this summer to help poets try to understand what publishers are looking for, etc. I'm planning to push it a little bit and, where appropriate, talk from the opposite view point: how publishers (primarily those of periodicals such as journals) can do a better job of communicating to potential submitters. I would love any suggestions any of you might have on points, nits & grand schemes to make sure I hit.
>
> thanks,
> Tim
>
> _____
> Tim Wood [redacted]
>
> poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by

↑ Index

178. Gary Sullivan
The Sonnets
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Hi, Erik:

You can get a copy of the Grove Press edition of _The Sonnets_ (1964) from Pomander Books for $30.00. A lot of money, maybe, but not bad for this, considering (a) I've seen it selling for $125.00 and (b) it has a very high Groove Factor (like, 8 or 9). Contact Pomander at:

[redacted]

I think Berrigan took as much, maybe more, from Philip Whalen. I also think what he took from Whalen was ultimately more interesting than what he took from O'Hara. All three are amazing poets.

Yours,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

179. Dale M Smith
blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I don't know if Berrigan's really considered "some kid brother to O'Hara" by every one here. I think that his Sonnets are also going to be republished soon, so there must be some interest out there. In a lot of ways he was his own thing, you know. Very funny and playful with language in ways quite different from O'Hara. Send me $5 and I'll send issue 8 of my magazine, with two previously unpublished collaborations between him and T. Clark.

To: [redacted]

I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the "academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!, I suppose the academy of the future is closing its doors to argue about publishing on the web? If anyone wants a break, write to me and explain why some critics call Berrigan an "ardent disciple" and like some kid brother to Frank O' Hara. An imitator. His writings mean alot to me, and I would like some discussion on the matter.

↑ Index

180. Miekal And Re: it's poetry it's poetry not...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

may entertain multiple threads...

Miekal And wrote:

echo me

↑ Index

181. Mark Prejsnar
Re: meow (..chats actuels)
Wed 4 Mar 1998

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, TBeck131 wrote:

> would be nice to switch gears and talk about some specific books. Why is it when I see WWW I immediately think of Hulk Hogan.
> As ever,
> Tom B.

I'll mention briefly a specific magazine. Yesterday I received Raddle Moon 16, which conists of works by "Twenty-two new (to North America) French writers..." On one skim, it's incredibly exciting stuff, and folks should be sure to see it. The list of translators reads like a who's-who of the the interesting poets who are on this list or discussed here. I've never heard of any of the french poets, which isn't too surprising, but is also an exciting aspect of it. So far I've gotten thru the first selection, "Heros Are Heros Are," by Manual Joseph trans. Susan Gevirtz: pretty timely "gulf war" poem that reminds me a little of Spahr's superb use of bureacratic deformations as a looped political poetic style in her book Response; and "On my Desk," by Sabine Macher trans. Dodie B.: uses ways of playing with writing that I'd done years ago and forgotten about: how consciousness and words can hit and ricochet off specific physical objects, and gain some really interesting torques, a kind of spare approach to the-lyric-as-still-life. Very nice clipped rendering into amerenglish..

The next 20 sections look just as sharp....

Mark P.
@lanta

↑ Index

182. henry
Re: The Sonnets
Wed 4 Mar 1998

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998 09:30:38 -0500 Gary Sullivan said:
>
>I think Berrigan took as much, maybe more, from Philip Whalen. I also think >what he took from Whalen was ultimately more interesting than what he took from >O'Hara. All three are amazing poets.

Gary, do you think you could expand on the Whalen connection a little? That's interesting to me. - Henry the horse

↑ Index

183. Joel Kuszai
Re: reznikoff's girder/get out of jail "free"
Wed 4 Mar 1998

David Bromige! how good to hear from you. The reading today is Sherley Anne Williams - who is a fiction writer. I don't believe in poetry readings. on that note, I did manage to get word to Patrick Stewart that I needed him to "read" (record) my poem "A Miscellany" which is culled from 1,000 pages of Elizabethan-era lyrics. When told that he was going to have to do this, his brow grew deep with trenches, and the messenger relaying this shrunk back. Mr. Stewart then told my friend the messenger to send the work to his studio in LA. So...we'll see. I've got my fingers crossed that what John Cage once said of Mac Low's play "The Marrying Maiden" won't also be true of my poem: "Unless you do something to regulate delivery, they'll read their lines like Shakespeare" (that's a paraphrase from memory).

back to the rubble.

my sense of the girdle still itself among the rabble is that without recognition the girdle would still be rabble. It is the raising up of the girdle that gives it it its special halo. "I wanna be your halo"

Today the girder tomorrow the I-beam. or is an I beam a girder? any construction workers out there? or more appropriate: anyone own a construction company out there? I feel that there is a definate lack of construction talk here on poetics.

on a more serious note, I have been meaning to ask this of poetics for some time as my queries elsewhere have met up with a dead end. Perhaps this won't bear any fruit, but there's hoping. I would like to find a source (archival or attic-style) of the following:

1. prison literature. Specifically, I'd like to find a copy of "Iced Pig" the magazine "published" by Sam Melville in the months immediately before the Attica uprising. But I'm interested in other 60s/early70s era prison publications, although I realize that it might be a stretch to find extant copie of such. The University of Michigan's Labadie Collection, which has one of the best collections of civil liberties and civil rights material in the usa, don't any such material, although they do collect some material related to that, such as gay-rights prison literature.

2. I'm also trying to find a source for literature relating to the conscientious objector movement. David Dellinger published "Pacifica Views" which Mac Low I believe wrote a review for in the 1940s. Many of these people were held long after the war, some were literally arrested immediately upon being released (for not having their draft cards), which is a kind of double jeopardy, it seems to me. I have a copy of "Prison Etiquitte" which was published by Retort Press around that time--hand printed on paper donated by James Laughlin. This is a rare book that I found in a bookstore in Detroit last summer. "The Field of Broken Stones" is another book published at that time. A memoir of Lowell Naeve, a CO who was imprisoned at Danbury Fed Corr facility and rearrested. He was an artist who would "wash off" old time magazines, literally making white paper out of the magazines, thereby creating a sketch pad for himself. Field of Broken Stones was co-written by David Wieck, a philosophy professor at Rennselaer Polytech in Troy NY, who just died this past year after a long bout with Alzheimers. Wieck was an old co editor of one of the magainzes that Mac Low worked on in the 40s,early 50s. What I'm looking for (as field of broken stons was reprinted by Alan Swallow and shouldn't be that hard to find) what I'm really looking for are "newsletters" edited and printed at the CPS (civilian public service) camps--like Pacifica Views, but more fugitive and underground. PV was fairly well established and is archived many places. Greenwood even did a reprint I believe. Especially I'm looking for material from the Germfask Michigan Camp, were the troublemakers were sent in a kind of american style concentration camp. Most of the work camps were administered by the Friends, the brothers, and the sisters, if you know what I mean. Germfask, despite the shocking conditions, was still able to produce some kind of newsletter. No one I've talked to has seeen a copy although I've read of them. perhaps this isn't the place to ask.

please back channel with advice, jail bird

On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, david bromige wrote:

> has always bugged me. "Still itself amid the rubble." Heck, the girder's rubble, too. Howcum girder specified, here, rubble unspecified, there?

> break a leg tomorrow, if thats when you read, Joel. The box of books from Meow arrived, what a breathtaking collection and congratulations, again, on your endeavor! We should be talking about Berrigan (Ted) but we should also be talking about these Meow Press books. I will (must go eat right now, though). db3

↑ Index

184. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Looking for Address
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Could someone back-channel me Gian Lombardo's e-mail address or snail mail address?

Thanks,

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

185. MAYHEW
Berrigan
Wed 4 Mar 1998

The Berrigan thread is welcome, since I subscribed to list in the first place for conversation about poetry and poetics. One of the sonnets, which is not a sonnet, is an imitation of FO'H "I do this I do that" mode, which mislead me at one point into thinking that Berrigan was a mere imitator of O'Hara. Since this poem doesn't really capture O'Hara's mode at all, I thought he was a rather poor imitator, in fact. But this is a poor poem by which to judge Berrigan. There are some interesting poems in one of the early issues of Talisman, from the "500 Postcards" or something like that.

The whole 2nd generation New York school needs a 2nd look. How about Ron Padgett? Ceravolo? Tony Towle?

Ch. Bernstein's essay on Berrigan in Content's Dream is very interesting because it argues for a non-biographical reading. Any thoughts on this?

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

186. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: The Sonnets
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I'd agree with Gary Sullivan's analysis but also include Anselm Hollo, whose lyric beauty and casualness seem to work in the same way as Berrigan's, Whalen's, and O'Hara's.

Maxine Chernoff

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, Gary Sullivan wrote:

> Hi, Erik:
>
> You can get a copy of the Grove Press edition of _The Sonnets_ (1964) from Pomander Books for $30.00. A lot of money, maybe, but not bad for this, considering (a) I've seen it selling for $125.00 and (b) it has a very high Groove Factor (like, 8 or 9). Contact Pomander at:
>
> [redacted]
>
> I think Berrigan took as much, maybe more, from Philip Whalen. I also think what he took from Whalen was ultimately more interesting than what he took from O'Hara. All three are amazing poets.
>
> Yours,
>
> Gary Sullivan
> [redacted]

↑ Index

187. dbkk
Tripwire
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Hi everyone it's Kevin Killian . . . I wanted to add my 25 cents and recommend the new poetics journal "Tripwire" (very mindful that the "old" Poetics Journal is coming to an end soon with its final issue). . . . Living here in San Francisco I have long suspected there was a new generation of poets with ideas and formulations very different than my own, and "Tripwire" is now my handbook, as an anthropologist would have his handbook . . . It's quite wonderfully edited, by Morrison and Buuck, always something interesting on almost every page, especially the theoretical and critical work. And many of the writers are new to me--yes, there is a foregrounding of the "new,"--with Myung Mi Kim presiding over the "new" in this vatic, patient way. Anyhow it's well worth six dollars, I say, go for it. Schultz' essay about the difficulties of being a working-class avant-garde writer is the finest I've ever read on the topic. Robert Hale's and David Bucck's essays are also very fine on the exhaustion of the approach to a degree zero of writing--Many of these young people seem to have embarked on some kind of writing degree that presents itself, in "Tripwire," as a kind of grail of disgust. "Writing degree" = "zero"? Sherry Brennan's overview of some recent books of poetry is good also, very intriguing---though I wonder, given the fact that there are so many good poets today, yet so few books published, that another review of Some Other Kind of Mission, In Memory of My Theories, Imagination Verses, Metropolis and Response--won't throw their authors into some kind of canon from which it would be difficult to unseat oneself--They are so young and already they (and Myung Mi Kim) are the gods of "Tripwire" . . . it's interesting.

--- ---

tripwire is a new poetics journal edited by Yedda Morrison & David Buuck. Issue one is aprox. 150 pages, including an interview with Myung Mi Kim, and work by Noah de Lissovoy, Eleni Sikelianos, Kathy Lou Schultz, Rodrigo Toscano, Sarah Anne Cox, Eliazabeth Robinson, Tan Lin, Jocelyn Saidenberg & Brian Strang, Robert Hale, Tim Davis, Elizabeth Treadwell, Sarah Rosenthal, Dana Lomax, Thiagarajah Selvanithy, Sherry Brennan, Mark Wallace, and others. It includes essays, "work," artwork, reviews, and more.

$6 for one issue / $10 for two --- Published biannually

tripwire
c/o Morrison & Buuck
722 Shotwell #4
SF CA 94110

↑ Index

188. David Zauhar

Early Warning: Mackey in Chicago

Wed 4 Mar 1998

The distinguished poet, novelist and critic Nathaniel Mackey will visit UIC on April 15 and 16. Here is his schedule

"A Reading of Poetry and Prose."
April 15th, 3:00, African-American Cultural Center, 2nd Floor, Adams Hall

"On the Influence of H.D. on My Poetry."
April 16th, 11:00 a.m., Humanities Institute, Basement, Stevenson Hall

Both events are free and open to the public.

the University of Illinois at Chicago is not the easiest place to find your way around, and these aren't the most convenient of times for those who lead non-academic lives, but it'll be worth it if you can make it. Mark your calander now.

Nathaniel Mackey's visit to UIC is sponsored and supported by the Department of African-American Studies, the African-American Cultural Center, the Institute for the Humanities, the Department of English, the Office of Access and Equity, the Department of Performing Arts, and the Student Activities Funding Committee.

For further information contact [redacted] or...

James C. Hall
Asst. Professor of African-American Studies and English
University of Illinois at Chicago
601 S. Morgan St.
Chicago, IL 60607-7112
[redacted]

↑ Index

189. Jacques Debrot

Re: The Sonnets

Wed 4 Mar 1998

Certainly Burrough's cut-ups would have been another big influence. And what about "Europe" written in Paris at almost exactly the same time that Burroughs & Gysin were doing their collaborations there? According to Padgett, as late as 1960, Berrigan thought that "Europe" was based on _The Golden Bough_. So he makes the leap, somehow, from "The Wasteland to _The Tennis Court Oath_, from high modernism to postmodernism, in only a year or so. (Query: did "Europe" first appear in the limited edition book _The Poems_?)

Gary, I wish you'd say more about the Whalen connection. Ron Silliman briefly mentioned in a recent post that Whalen was also a formative influence for Coolidge's poetry. I've heard this before somewhere, but don't really see it; perhaps someone could spell this out as well.

↑ Index

190. ScoutEW
Re: berrigan/grunge
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Grunge was first introduced into the American vocabulary via Mark Arm from the band Mudhoney talking to Everett True a writer for the English mag Melody Maker in 1988, I would never equated the word grunge to Berrigan.

↑ Index

191. ScoutEW
Re: The Sonnets/thanks!!!
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Thanky you very much Gary for the info on the Sonnets, you are just so kind to tell me, I've been looking for a personal copy for awhile, mine is from the library here, yes, I remember reading Berrigan write that he liked Whalen when he went to the Berkeley poetry conference because he kept a distance from the grandstannding that was going on and was very friendly. Thanks again!!!

↑ Index

192. k. lederer
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I was told by one of my teachers upon asking this very question--

That he was not particularly archetypal--

"Where Plath has been translated into many languages--Berrigan somehow doesn't seem to strike the same kind of chord"--

This is one pretty "academic" response--

I personally think that Berrigan simply hasn't been pushed--he doesn't yet have a collected (but I'm sure that will come along soon enough--), and although he has passed away--he is still implicated in a lot of contemporary poetic politics--he is still associated with a "camp" of living writers--in the long run, perhaps--yes--like O'Hara (who isn't particularly "archetypal" either....) he will, it seems to me, become more "important"--

He is certainly an influence among younger writers--and, like Spicer and Duncan and Loy--he will probably get "bigger" when those who have been influenced by him get "bigger"--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

193. TBeck131
Jack Hirschman
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Ron's mention of Hirschman provokes some memories. In the late 1970s I published a small chapbook by Jack called DOVE ROSE under the Viscerally Press imprint. (Side note: the cover art was by Hirschman's pal, the actor, Dean Stockwell.) I don't think I even have a copy of the book any more.

Jack's an interesting figure: translator (see, for example, his work on Artaud), Marxist and street poet with a surrealist flavor. A warm and generous personality.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

194. Safdie Joseph
Re: berrigan, others
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Just wanted to jump in to say Henry's quick take on Berrigan and a few others, to wit

> the fusion of formality & informality, of art & grunge - so that > they find sort of a lyrical balance and an integration of beauty & > everyday unofficial (& mostly moneyless & prestigeless) life.
>
> This can only happen when there is an intense awareness & understanding > of art in all its arty grandeur coupled with an intellectual freedom > & scepticism about same coupled with a devotion to it which is natural > & not simply willed or calculated.
>

strikes me as absolutely right-on, evoking for me the "organicism" discussed by Don Byrd some weeks ago. I'd also like to thank Ron for forwarding that epitaph of Jack, with whom I read once upon a time in the early 80s in North Beach and who was everything his pals said he was. Jack Hirschman, by the way, is alive and well (and healthy!) still with Sarah M. at last check, still an unregenerate commie propagandist. Good to see some things don't change!

An announcement that Joanne Kyger is traveling north from Bolinas to read this Friday night, March 6th, at 8:00 in Auburn (south of Seattle). The place is called SPLAB, and I'll find the address if anyone needs it.

Could someone please backchannel me to explain the command to get the full list of Poetics folks with their e-mails? I'm sure it's somewhere in the Welcome Message which I've temporarily mislaid -- thanks in advance!

Joe

↑ Index

195. Jacques Debrot
Re: _Raddle Moon_
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Mark is dead-on, the most recent issue of _RM_ is inspiring, exciting, etc., etc. There are some interesting resemblances to work being done in the States -- eg. Christophe Tarkos' use of bracketed passages is a lot like Juliana Spahr's in "documentary," and "responding." Also, there are, in many of the poems (Tarkos', Prouvost's), provocative and varied uses of repetition. I thought, too, that the xeroxes by Guetat-Livani are at least a step beyond a lot of the stuff one generally sees in the vispo mags.

↑ Index

196. dbkk
Saidenberg, Mullen, Nielsen at SPT
Wed 4 Mar 1998

This weekend at Small Press Traffic--a reading AND a talk!

Friday, March 6, 7:30 p.m.

A poetry reading by

Harryette Mullen
Jocelyn Saidenberg

Harryette Mullen has written three books of poetry, _Trimmings, S*PeRMK*T_, and _Muse & Drudge_. Nina Wiener wrote in _Buzz Weekly_, ³The exceptional quality of her jazz-inspired poems leads us to imagine her the literary offspring of Gertrude Stein and Langston Hughes--a delightfully lethal combination.² There are few other poets in the USA with Mullen¹s craft and verve, and out of all of these, she¹s the smartest and nicest. Those of you who have never seen La Mullen read will come to this show and get persuaded. Join the crowd!

Jocelyn Saidenberg is one of the brightest stars to emerge from the San Francisco State University Creative Writing department in recent years. She has published in _Arshile, B-City, Stilts, 14 Hills_, and with bated breath I await for her first book--_Mortal City_--to appear next year from Parentheses Writing Series, and for the anthology _Tense Present_ which will feature another grand helping of her work. Saidenberg¹s poetry is formally rigorous and quite a challenge, yet underneath its coat of _protective ice_ a warm heart beats and gives it power and endurance. She¹s the Ekaterina Gordeeva of poetry.

New College Theater
777 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Saturday, March 7, 7:30 p.m.

Black Chant: Expanding the African-American ŒCanon¹

talks and discussion by

Harryette Mullen and Aldon Nielsen

Harryette Mullen is an associate professor of literature at the University of California, Los Angeles. She has published and lectured extensively on African American writing, on topics ranging from slave narratives to folk traditions to the avant garde. She is the author of _Freeing the Soul: Literacy and Liberty in Slave Narratives_, and the recipient of numerous fellowships, including a Rockefeller Fellowship from the Susan B. Anthony Center for Women¹s Studies at the University of Rochester.

Aldon Nielsen holds the Fletcher Jones Chair of Literature and Writing at Loyola Marymount University. His works include _Reading Race: White American Poets and the Racial Discourse in the 20th Century; C.L.R. James: A Critical Introduction; Writing Between the Lines: Race and Intertextuality;_ and _Black Chant: Languages of African-American Postmodernism._ He is the recipient of grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities and the Kayden Award for Criticism.

New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
Free

(This talk is sponsored by the California Council for the Humanities.)

↑ Index

197. henry gould
Re: berrigan/grunge
Wed 4 Mar 1998

> Grunge was first introduced into the American vocabulary via Mark Arm from the band Mudhoney talking to Everett True a writer for the English mag Melody Maker in 1988, I would never equated the word grunge to Berrigan.

I wouldn't either if I was writing a dissertation. "Things to do in Providence" has a grunge feel. I'm using grunge as opposed to beat. I think grunge was invented in Minneapolis. Now we're really getting somewhere.

all I mean is the "byt" (russian term for the everydayness of life, the intimate ordinary, the grungy this that & the otherness of life. that's all I mean. & I'm not saying Berrigan was a grunge poet. I'm saying he pointed up - balanced - juxtaposed - blended - art-sense & everydayness. the demotic & the sublime. a new way at an old way. & I don't mean to hammer away at this fairly obvious aspect, let's get down to some details - but I just dont' want this misunderstood. He was an "urban poet" in that the feel of the environment of the writing is urban & seeps into the poems feel, rhythm, idiom, viewpoint. there is nothing programmatic or strategic in a literary sense on an obvious level about that, except the lyric "beauty" is grounded in that environment which is a feel & is a kind of suffering & grunge. - Henry G.

↑ Index

198. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

it's poetry it's poetry not...

Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

not to be cranky, but i don't quite see how talking about A poet or A poem or Poets or Poems or or or is the proper (if that's what it is) or more desirable (if that's what it is) subject matter for a list such as this... which, as has been observed time and again over the years, may entertain multiple threads...

so those of you who indicate something similar (i can take a hint): please go right ahead with Poems and Poets and such, if that's what moves you---i'm all ears, i try NEVER to delete, and will occasionally chime in... but no need to wring one's hands over a group within a group of folks talking distribution/publication/medium/poetix, as these relate (or don't) to Poets and Poems...

so there...

yrs, virtually///

joe

↑ Index

199. John Latta

For Joel K.

Wed 4 Mar 1998

Joel,

I deleted your query before getting curious re: Germfask Newsletter. Fumbling around in OCLC learnt me this: two libraries show holdings: Swarthmore College Peace Collection and the Mennonite Historical Library in Goshen, Indiana.

Sitting here in Michigan, and knew nothing about Germfask.

Sorry to hafta send this listward.

John Latta

↑ Index

200. MAYHEW
Late Ashbery
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Dear fellow poeticians:

Speaking of internet publications, you can check out my poem "Late Ashbery" at www.ellavon.com (also my "History of Modern Poetry" which I posted on this list a while back). There is also a column there by J. Conte.

Anyone interested in collaborating on pantoums with me may backchannel (a word I only learned a few months ago [backchannel not pantoum[). Sense of humor required.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

201. ScoutEW
Re: Berrigan
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Jonathon, yes, Berrigan even admits at one point that he emulated the mode with which O'Hara wrote poems. His "It is 5:15 in ny" and so and so is all part of his process in the poems. Berrigan takes lines from here and there and either borrows them via collage into his work or sometimes takes a whole poem by a poet like John Ashbery and writes between the lines, then finally putting the poem together it is a response to the poem by Ashbery! I find this really interesting the way he plays off of things, even in the Sonnets he borrows lines from other poets and puts it all together in a new way. As far as the O' Hara comparison goes, I felt that the critic who called him a disciple, (i am not going to name names because it is not important plus I respect the rest of her work, and like what she does as a critic) was merely trying to find a place for him, as most critics do, Where does he fit in, o well, I'll put him next to O'Hara because it is easy. -What is not so easy is going back to the text, Sonnets, Bean Spasms, etc and finding where he "borrowed" some lines from, or should I say was inspired to add to his poems-He once said he put a lot of references into the sonnets so scholars would look at his poems for years to come. I love Bernstein's take on Berrigan in Content's dream, he even adds Berrigan into a line from "Dark City" in the poem, "The lives of the toll takers" which is incredible, he says something about Ted "bowl over" Berrigan and his "short stabs" poems from 1968, its great Well, thanks for your addition to this discussion, it made my day better, next we must talk about Ron Padgett and his great book of pomes "Tulsa Kid"!

↑ Index

202. Gary Sullivan

Re: The Sonnets

Wed 4 Mar 1998

Hi Henry, Maxine, Jacques & Erik:

No books here at work today, so Whalen/Berrigan will have to wait until tomorrow or Friday, so I can quote a few things. Erik, if you really want that copy, e-mail Pomander's pronto--I think they only have one. Do you have a copy of Whalen's _On Bear's Head_? I think you'd probably love it. It's been out of print, like, "forever." You can find used paperback copies every now & then, but if you can't wait, you can get a hardback copy for $25 from Second Life Books in Lanesborough, MA. If interested, e-mail them at:

[redacted]

It's a great book. Also (& cheaper), _Heavy Breathing_, a "collected" of later books, for $7.50, from Powell's Books in Portland, OR. I don't know what their e-mail is, but you can order from them on-line by going to their website:

www.powells.com

Yes, Maxine, definitely Hollo, too. Missed his reading here last Saturday, but saw him in Minneapolis maybe two years ago; he read a few sonnets from a recent series, dedicated to Berrigan. My favorites among his work (read that day, anyway) were his translations from the Greek Anthology.

Soon,

Gary Sullivan

[redacted]

↑ Index

203. Judy Roitman
Re: berrigan, others
Wed 4 Mar 1998

> Could someone please backchannel me to explain the command to get the full list of Poetics folks with their e-mails? I'm sure it's somewhere in the Welcome Message which I've temporarily mislaid -- thanks in advance!
>
> Joe

Me too!

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

204. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: _Raddle Moon_
Wed 4 Mar 1998

How does one get a hold of a copy of Raddle Moon?

--Elizabeth Hatmaker

↑ Index

205. Jordan Davis
All Things Considered / New York Public Library
Wed 4 Mar 1998

True, they're not the Poetics List...

Ron Padgett will be on All Things Considered this afternoon, talking about "From A Secret Location on the Lower East Side: Adventures in Writing 1960-1980". Tune in, turn on...

Those of you interested in talking about the so-called generations of the New York School ought to come see the show, which features poetry magazines from The Black Mountain Review all the way through L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E.

Bye!
Jordan

↑ Index

206. MAXINE CHERNOFF

Re: Early Warning: Mackey in Chicago

Wed 4 Mar 1998

In addition to Mackey's readings at UIC, he is also reading in the series Paul Hoover curates at Columbia College. His reading there will take place at 3 p.m. on April 16 in the Ferguson Theater, 600 South Michigan, where he will be introduced by Art Lange, his collaborator on the Coffee House jazz anthology, Moment's Notice. The reading is free and open to the public.

Maxine Chernoff

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, David Zauhar wrote:

> The distinguished poet, novelist and critic Nathaniel Mackey will visit UIC on April 15 and 16. Here is his schedule
>
> "A Reading of Poetry and Prose."
> April 15th, 3:00, African-American Cultural Center, 2nd Floor, Adams Hall
>
> "On the Influence of H.D. on My Poetry."
> April 16th, 11:00 a.m., Humanities Institute, Basement, Stevenson Hall
>
> Both events are free and open to the public.
>
> the University of Illinois at Chicago is not the easiest place to find your way around, and these aren't the most convenient of times for those who lead non-academic lives, but it'll be worth it if you can make it. Mark your calander now.
>
> Nathaniel Mackey's visit to UIC is sponsored and supported by the Department of African-American Studies, the African-American Cultural Center, the Institute for the Humanities, the Department of English, the Office of Access and Equity, the Department of Performing Arts, and the Student Activities Funding Committee.
>
> For further information contact [redacted] or...
>
> James C. Hall
> Asst. Professor of African-American Studies and English
> University of Illinois at Chicago
> 601 S. Morgan St.
> Chicago, IL 60607-7112
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

207. Michael J. Kelleher
Re: long wet kisses and technophilia
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Martin,

I don't know the greek for irony either.

Atopia is a non-community of men and women who share their language, masks & placelessness, with each other that they may communicate their (un)common ideas and help others to communicate theirs. The only requirement for membership in Atopia is a desire to communicate. There are some dues and fees for access to Atopia, but hey, that's life. We are self-sustaining through our placeless contributions. Atopia is allied with many sects, denominations, politics and oganizations; Atopia does at times wish to engage in communication; Atopia endorses and opposes many causes. Our primary purpose is to communicate at great distances with those we would have never met had Atopia not come into being.

To paraphrase Billy Joel: "I'm in a placeless state of mind."

Atopia, be (t)here.

Truly (sincere),

Mike

↑ Index

208. Jordan Davis
berrigan / whalen / koch / ashbery / v lindsay
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Gary Lenhart or Joel Lewis or Simon Schuchat can probably speak to this better than I (or you!) but my sense is that Berrigan wired the Whalen of Bear's Head and Scenes of Life in the Capitol together with the Ashbery of the uncollected poem "The Poems" (ever green review #8) and zapped them into a very conservative matrix (some mix of a tate and vachel lindsay) to get a satisfying frisson.. I repeat my flatulent assertion that the sonnets is an ok work but tambourine life-train ride represents the major period, the good stuff, the pepsi, the gem spa. Larry Fagin rumors the original title of Bean Spasms was Lyrical Bullets and now that I've told you it'll be hell getting more out of him.

Fuck communism,
A fan

↑ Index

209. k. lederer
Re: EXPLOSIVE second printing
Wed 4 Mar 1998

EXPLOSIVE MAGAZINE #4 is now in its second printing.

Issue number four features new work by:

Lisa Lubasch, Prageeta Sharma, Rod Smith, Michael Basinski, Eleni Sikelianos, Mark Salerno, Gillian Kiley, Travis Ortiz, Leslie Scalapino, Albert Flynn DeSilver, Darin De Stefano, and wonderful poetry comics of pieces by Stein, Cage, and Hollo drawn by Dave Morice.

Single issues are five dollars.

A subscription is fifteen dollars for three issues.

Upcoming issues will feature work by:

Doug Powell, Juliana Spahr, Martin Corless-Smith, Dale Smith, Tan Lin, Pam Lu, Lisa Jarnot, Anselm Hollo, Bill Luoma, Alex Cory and many many others.

Checks should be made payable to Katy Lederer and sent to:

420 E Davenport #2
Iowa City, IA 52245

↑ Index

210. Maria Damon
Re: newtek & po
Wed 4 Mar 1998

try also tina neumann at arizona state u, dept of speech and communications (?) or some variation thereof. she gave an apparently terrific (i was at another underattended panel) though underattended panel at our XCP conference.

At 7:52 AM -0600 3/4/98, Brian Clements wrote:
>Gwyn,
>
>The only person I know of who is doing anything with ASL poetry is Dirksen >Bauman, who published a piece recently in the PMLA. I don't know where >Dirksen is now, but you might be able to track him down through the >Binghamton English Dept.
>
>Brian
>
> ~~~

>
>
>On Tue, 3 Mar 1998, Gwyn McVay wrote:
>
>> New media. Old media. Books superior. Web a class issue. Okay, fine. What >> I'd like to see happen is a CD-ROM anthology of American Sign Language >> poetry--which is out there, and must, by its nature, have a unique poetic, >> but doesn't get, for lack of a better word, "heard" through the usual >> channels. Maybe a CD ASL po-zine from Gallaudet?
>>
>> Then, to make it really interesting, they could play the video clips of >> poems to ASL-literate apes and get their response. ("You call this poetry?
>> If I had the time, I could write /Hamlet/....")
>>
>> Gw(seriously)yn
>>

↑ Index

211. Mark Weiss
Re: Berrigan
Wed 4 Mar 1998

A locus for this scene was St Mark's, and Blackburn should certainly figure, although he managed to share (at times invent) the attributes of several "schools" (often more like social circles) without wearing their brands.

> The whole 2nd generation New York school needs a 2nd look. How about Ron Padgett? Ceravolo? Tony Towle?
>
> Ch. Bernstein's essay on Berrigan in Content's Dream is very interesting because it argues for a non-biographical reading. Any thoughts on this?
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

212. Martin Spinelli
long wet kisses and technophilia
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Mark--
> > The "U" in utopia is "no" and makes the "A" in atopia a bit > > redundant.
> > "Noplace" and "Placeless" are both in the same distopian > > discourse community, no?
>
> To belabor:
>
> topos being "place"
>
> u- being "no" thus "no place" i.e. does not exist
> but translated Utopia meaning "place of ideal perfection" whereas

To labor:

I don't know what "irony" is in Greek, but in Latin it's "illusio". As in: My distinction between utopia and atopia included a touch of illusio.

> I forward this definition, uncontentiously, as being distinct from utopia as it implies not an ironic criticism of human ideals of perfection nor perfection itself nor perdition, so to speak, but a state of being whose location or place is not verifiable in physical terms. Thus the utterance is not "located" in space but rather in the "moment" of it's articualtion in Time.

Therein rubs the rub. This space (espace) is both as "physical" and as "virtual" as the Wall Street Journal or the Buffalo News's Poetry Page. Physical eyes read them in physical places on substances with physical presences, made with the physics of physical labor. The e- utterance is located in space just as the news, op-ed human contact, poetry and the funnies are all located in the moment, the moment that we read them as much as the moment they are articulated.

> Place requires physical presence, which isn't always possible. No place requires the impossible, perfection. Bad places we all want to stay out of. Atopia allows us not community, but communication (between beings in distant places in time) that otherwise we could or would not have made.

Aside from mythic instantaneity (try accessing over-seas web pages with a 28.8 modem), I don't see how this communication differs drastically from me buying Essex Street/Tailspin books at a London bookshop (which you can do) or subscribing to _The Nation_ via airmail.

Oh... and Maria D., if you're listening. That rejected collab you did with Rasputin sounds interesting. Any chance of me seeing a copy, "e" or otherwise?

Longingly,

Martin

_____

Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

213. Jean Day
Hejinian essays, Hejinian/Watten events at UCB,
Wed 4 Mar 1998

To everybody re the recent lament that a volume of Lyn Hejinian's essays has never been done (sorry, I don't remember whose post), UC Press is working on a collection of Lyn's critical writing right now. Don't know what the publication schedule is, but it will likely be announced on the Press's web site, http://www-ucpress.berkeley.edu, when the pub. date's confirmed.

And for anybody in the Bay Area, Lyn will be reading with Barrett Watten at UC Berkeley on March 17 at 4pm at the Townsend Center for the Humanities in 220 Stephens Hall. Barrett will be giving a talk, "The Constructivist Moment: From El Lissitsky to Detroit Techno," the previous day, same time and place. The Townsend Center can be reached at [redacted] for more info.

--Jean

↑ Index

214. Rod4rigo
Re: jack hirschman
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Jack Hirschman is alive and well here in SF...still reading at demos, pickets, whatnot (with all his furor)... .translating mallarme recently...etc..

Jack wouldn't be passing out CP papers really...he used to run with the CLP, from which the LR (league of revolutionaries) of which he's a part of -- split. Like many of the less sectarian socialists, his group LR as well as Socialist Organizer, along with PFP (peace and freedom) and elements of Socialist Action (as well as other left melieu -- fragmentia --) are, or are striving to be, non-obstructionist entrents into the Labor Party (Golden Gate Branch)...a party that has a medium-sized but dedicated (and growing!) base in the Trade Union movt...Oil Chemical and Atomic Workers, United Electrical, ILWU (longshoremen) etc..as well as other Pol. groupings, eg. National Welfare Rights Union..BWJ..Black Workers for Justice..

Jack hates the Net and its culture (though I'm not aware that he's all that informed on the important political work that sometimes get done through the net. He'd have something colorful to say if he got wind of this posting!

And though our poetics differ greatly both formalistically and...and what? in affekt

We both agree on the (urgent) need to de-sectarianize the left...this process is one that I think (or hope) is taking shape in the cultural sphere as well.

Rodrigo Toscano

↑ Index

215. k. lederer
Re: Berrigan
Wed 4 Mar 1998

One of my favorite Berrigan books is RED WAGON--

Three of my favorite pieces:

CONVERSATION (I would reproduce it, but the form is too complex for e-mail)

TODAY's NEWS

My body heavy with poverty (starch)
It uses up my sexual energy constantly, &
I feel constantly crowded

On the other hand, One Day In The Afternoon of
    The World
Pervaded my life with a heavy grace
                today

I'll never smile again

Bad Teeth

But
I'm dancing with tears in my eyes

(I can't help myself!) Tom writes he loves Alice's sonnets, takes four, I'd love

to be more attentive to her, more here
The situation having become intolerable
the only alternatives are:
  Murder & Suicide.

They are too dumb! So, one becomes a goof. Raindrops start falling on my roof. I say Hooray! Then I say, I'm going out

At the drugstore I say, Gimme some pills!
  Charge 'em! They say
Sure. I say See you later.

Read the paper. Talk to Alice.
She laughs to hear
  Hokusai had 947 changes of address
In his life. Ha-ha. Plus everything else in the world
going on here.

I USED TO BE BUT NOW I AM

I used to be inexorable,
But now I am elusive.

I used to be the future of America,
But now I am America.

I used to be part of the problem,
But now I am the problem.

I used to be part of the solution, if not all of it,
But now I am not that person.

I used to be intense, & useful,
But now I am heavy, & boring.

I used to be sentimental about myself, & therefore ruthless, But now I am, I think, a sympathetic person, although easily amused.

I used to be a believer,
But now, alas, I believe.

↑ Index

216. Jack Foley
TLR Web Poetry Chapbook Series
Wed 4 Mar 1998

THE LITERARY REVIEW
http://webdelsol.com/tlr/announces the 1st series of Poetry Chapbooks on the Web

featuring

John E. Smelcer Barbara J. Orton Bino A. Realuyo

New poets will follow shortly -- three more this spring 1998

The Web Poetry Chapbook Series from TLR represents an on-going effort of Web Del Sol (http://www.webdelsol.com/pub-bar.htm) to partner with quality literary magazines on the Web in order to bring important works of poetry to a new audience.

↑ Index

217. Thomas Bell
Re: The Sonnets
Wed 4 Mar 1998

I have not seen much on Whalen's drawings. I think he is neglected, and neglected as a visual poet. He did some really fine jottings. tom bell

At 09:30 AM 3/4/98 -0500, Gary Sullivan wrote:
>Hi, Erik:
>
>You can get a copy of the Grove Press edition of _The Sonnets_ (1964) from >Pomander Books for $30.00. A lot of money, maybe, but not bad for this, >considering (a) I've seen it selling for $125.00 and (b) it has a very high >Groove Factor (like, 8 or 9). Contact Pomander at:
>
>[redacted]
>
>I think Berrigan took as much, maybe more, from Philip Whalen. I also think >what he took from Whalen was ultimately more interesting than what he took from >O'Hara. All three are amazing poets.
>
>Yours,

>
>Gary Sullivan
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

218. David Kellogg
Re: Jack Hirschman
Wed 4 Mar 1998

From: TBeck131 <[redacted]>
To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
Date: Wednesday, March 04, 1998 2:11 PM
Subject: Jack Hirschman

>Ron's mention of Hirschman provokes some memories. In the late 1970s I >published a small chapbook by Jack called DOVE ROSE under the Viscerally Press >imprint. (Side note: the cover art was by Hirschman's pal, the actor, Dean >Stockwell.) I don't think I even have a copy of the book any more.

Tom or somebody else,

Duncan dedicates a poem to Dean Stockwell somewhere (I think it's in _Bending the Bow_, but I'm at work and my copy's at home). What's up with him and poetry? This is just an interesting (to me) possible side thread.

Cheers,
David

↑ Index

219. Safdie Joseph
Re: NPR
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Radio Alert!

As I type at 3:30 PM west coast time, NPR and All Things Considered is doing a piece on the NY Public Library's show of the Poetry Project's mimeoed magazines. Berrigan mentioned; Ron Padgett is speaking now . . . go to the left of your dial and turn it on!

↑ Index

220. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: a secret location

Wed 4 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

--Boundary_(ID_1g6+RcvVOGzik7VzI5MRfA)

I was shocked to hear just now the voice of Ted Berrigan reciting a poem on NPR (with a line by Jeff Wright - but which one, asked Ted?). Part of a piece NPR did on a project at the NYPL called a A Secret Location on the Lower East Side. I came in in the middle and have only a muddled idea of what it's all about.

Jordan Davis or other New Yawkahs - can u fill us in please?

Patrick Pritchett

--Boundary_(ID_1g6+RcvVOGzik7VzI5MRfA)

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
<META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">

</HEAD>
<BODY>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>I was shocked to hear just now the voice of Ted Berrigan reciting a poem on NPR (with a line by Jeff Wright - but which one, asked Ted?). Part of a piece NPR did on a project at the NYPL called a A Secret Location on the Lower East Side. I came in in the middle and have only a muddled idea of what it's all about.</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>Jordan Davis or other New Yawkahs - can u fill us in please?</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>
</P>

</BODY>
</HTML>

--Boundary_(ID_1g6+RcvVOGzik7VzI5MRfA)--

↑ Index

221. Matthew Kirschenbaum
Re: web publication, etc.
Wed 4 Mar 1998

Joe, just checked in -- I read the list exclusively via the archive these days -- and the discussion seems to have moved on . . . but I really think we agree in any case. My only point, all along, has been that given the significant corpus of electronic poetry that _already_ exists for us the critical project would be well served by a turn toward sustained engagements with individual works or groupings of works -- and a turn away from more sweeping, speculative gestures. Certainly this is where I feel my own energies being pulled . . . The only electronic writing (prose or poetry) I'm aware of that's accumulated _any_ amount of really careful, thick discussion is Joyce's _afternoon_ -- which is not to say other works have not received notice and occassionally been commented upon, but I don't see that they've been much _studied_.

Anyhow, back to Ted Berrigan. Matt

↑ Index

222. Jacques Debrot
Re: A Secret Location on the Lower East Side
Wed 4 Mar 1998

By a strange coincidence, NPR ran a story tonight on the exhibition of NY School mimeo magazines at the Public Library. Berrigan, one of the curators says, is the star of the exhibit. Padgett and Waldman were interviewed, the Donald Allen's anthology & the Poetry Project discussed, & the existence of "another tradition" leaked at last to the general public -- all together a very pleasant surprise. Plus, following the story, an explanation of what mimeo actually is -- I was never quite sure.

↑ Index

223. Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
Wed 4 Mar 1998

RADDLE MOON 16 can be ordered through Small Press Distribution

[redacted]

or, for the more adventurous, direct from us:
RADDLE MOON
518-350 East Second Avenue

Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8
CANADA

The cost is $10 for a single issue or $15 for a two-issue subscription [subscription orders must be sent to the above street address]. Back issues at various prices, please ask.

RM17 will have a section of new work from Vancouver and ex-Vancouver writers and a section curated by Nicole Brossard of work from Quebecois/e writers in translation as well other work not falling into these categories. We are still reading work for this issue. Deadline April 15/98.

RM18 will be a our second special "image/text" issue and is open for submissions. "Image/text" work uses text and images (seems to be some confusion on this) in some sort of relation. (Please bear in mind that we print in black ink only and are a 2-D object measuring 6.25" x 8"). We are reading work for this issue now.

Email [queries only -- no submissions, please] to Susan Clark [redacted]

Don't forget to supply a self-addressed envelope and return postage [IRC or stamps, or M.O.] with submissions Contributors get a one-year subscription as payment and discount on extra copies of "their" issue if they want.

bon route,
Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

224. Kwsherwood convergence
Wed 4 Mar 1998

An odd convergence to eye the Poetics-list while NPR: All Things Considered enters the ear. Anne Waldman, Ron Padgett . . .
---------- ---------- The "mimeo revolution" has made it to the bigtime, "well printed despite the technology"

"you can almost smell the mimeo ink." (A.W.)

We simply wanted to show our work to our friends ... we didn't have any ambition to take over the world...

"Today people would probably do this on the internet."

"There is something magical about the . . . "

"mimeographs were just one step..."

"about ten years later, carbon paper came along"

"mimeo from the greek, meaning I imitate"

"the next revolution . . . came in 1938 . . . first xerographic image . . . "

↑ Index

225. Kwsherwood literary capital
Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

the questions of first-publication, republication etc. editors of ezines receive from contributors are one index of the "view" on these venues. when rif/t debuted several years ago, loss and i recv'd boat-loads of questions/queries/concerns about whether online publication "counted", whether work could be previously or subsequently published in print, etc.

as a practical matter (and because in '93 there was precious little online poetry in the poetics-list vein) we encouraged submission of work prev published in journals ... and urged that online publication shouldn't preclude subsequent print publication. Felicitoiusly, most print editors at seemed to class online pub with the circulation of home-made broadsides . . . viz: not publication, --- audiences for journals and web (gopher) mutually exclusive.

The question seems to worry poets less in 98 (poetics-list traffic notwithstanding...); a reflection of what, growing acceptabilty of online publishing? reification of the 'separate but equal' doctrine? perhaps a coming to terms with concerns for the issue of ephemerality (as digital text returns to haunt us, refusing deletion)...

↑ Index

226. david bromige
reznikoff's girder take 3
Wed 4 Mar 1998

This in response to something in one of Joel Kuszai's recent posts.-- It strikes me as an oddly undemocratic vision for Reznikoff--or Oppen, who approved of this line--to (as Joel so well says) "put a halo" around one piece of the rubble, consigning the rest ("huddled masses") to the garbage-scow of history. Consider the reader. S/he identifies with the girder ("I am a girder") and so what does that make the rest of us? Not a brick here and a bike wheel there and a single mitt here but--mere rubble.("rabble," as Joel puns). Or s/he identifies with the rubble--so who is that jerk who thinks he's a girder and we others are undifferentiated trash?

"I saw the girder
 first was still itself
 and then brick by brick
 and then the bike wheel,
 then the dead cat, each
 halo'd with identity"

but perhaps american poetry no matter the marxism of its writer cannot transcend the cult of rugged individual ("resistant as a girder") and still be received as fine. I certainly don't care for what I just made up and put in lines. But I do care that this reznikoff girder-poem is in bad faith. David

↑ Index

227. SSSCHAEFER
Magazine Concepts Continued
Wed 4 Mar 1998

A number of people have back-channelled me about the issue of community and publishing. A couple people have pointed out that editors tend to get their work published elsewhere and that they think that publishing can be tantamount to the dread "self-promotion." I find this some what disturbing as I know for a fact that there are a lot MFA kids out there who get really angry that no one is publishing their poems, but are absolutely unwilling to do anything to help others get their work out. Wondering: these people who just flood the magazines by submitting to magazines they've never even seen and don't do anything for anyone else, could they be the selfish ones? On the other hand, a number of people have back-channelled me to say that they are afraid to publish "forward" "radical" "anti-this, pro-that" stuff because they don't want to be like those "power hungry" "acadominant" language poets. Whatever your opinion on those guys, I just want to say publishing your own magazines might be the only way to combat that problem. Perhaps an obvious point. In the mean time, I would like to say that as an editor/publisher, if you send out forty-seven copies of the same poem to different magazines...what is that if not self-promotion. I think it is sort of a useless notion. Also, I think people who want to be in magazines should also pay for them. Think of it as union dues. One cannot join a community by sitting alone in a room.

A few others have said that they were encouraged by my post and are now going forward with their publishing plans. I think we're all for more of everything.

Not very many people have e-mailed me in an effort to discuss magazine concepts. However, one idea that I particularly like re: community is the following: invite 12 of your favorite writers/friends/erstwhile-friends to send you 2 poems a month. They would send 2 poems xeroxed say 30 times. All these would be stapled together by the "editor" and then mailed back to the writers and others. At the end of the year, a sort of "best of" would be printed. I think this is an exciting concept (a bit like Open City? not sure) that could make for very interesting sort of cross-talk, conversation, collaboration, etc. A perfect way to get a snap shot of what people are doing over a given year, getting an idea of what people have tried and perhaps even failed.

I'd be very interested to hear from others who have inclusive ideas for publishing.

Standard

↑ Index

228. laura and jeff npr

Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

please sign.
jeff.

NPR Funding This is being forwarded to several people at once to add their names to the petition. NPR (National Public Radio) and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding.

It won't matter if many people receive the same list as the names are being managed. This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile expenditure of $1.12/year of their taxes. A petition follows. If you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me). If not, please don't kill it-send it to the email address listed here: [redacted] PBS.

In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as not worthwhile. Currently,taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $0.64 a year. A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS. This percentage of people polled is surpassed only by national defense and law enforcement as the programs that are the most valuable for federal funding. Each year the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. =

Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1.
The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard.
Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.
*If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th, etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to:

[redacted].

If that address is inoperative, please send it to:
[redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

NOTE: It is preferable that you SELECT the entirety of this letter and then COPY it into a new outgoing message rather than simply forwarding it.

515) Janet Wygal, Hoboken, NJ
516) Gene Holder, Hoboken, NJ
517) Cindy E. Brolsma, Brooklyn, NY
518) Sheryl Farber, Los Angeles, CA
519) P. David Ebersole, Silver Lake, CA
520) Todd Hughes, Silver Lake, CA
521) Betsy Hamlin, Silver Lake, CA
522) Rachel Powell, Santa Monica, CA
523) Jill & Michael Vercos, Venice, CA
524) Nikolaus Scharpf, Eatonton, GA
525) Jan Walleczek, CA
526) Joanne Hall, Kalamazoo, MI
527) Mary Williams, Kalamazoo, MI
518) Mark Nepo, Albany, NY
519) Susan McHenry, Albany, NY
520) Lillien Waller, Bronx, NY
521) Tracye Matthews, Chicago, IL

522) Martha Kathleen Zygmun, Chicago, IL
523) Catherine Tolley, CHicago, IL
524) Julie Pokorny, Chicago, IL
525) Daniel Kuruna, Chicago IL
526) Christine Kuruna, Selinsgrove PA
527)Jesse Fletcher, Lewisburg PA
528) Kasey Bohaboy, Palo Alto, CA
529) Amy Sabbadini, Santa Barbara, CA
530) Roger Sabbadini, San Diego, CA
531) Robert Engler, San Diego, CA
532) Roberta Gottlieb, San Diego, CA
533) Grant Meisenholder, San Diego, CA
534) Jennifer Post, Seattle, WA
535) Raymond Post, Seattle, WA
536) Ginnah Saunders
537) Chris Garman, San Diego, CA
538) Padmini Srikantiah, San Diego, CA
539) Jayashri Srikantiah, San Francisco, CA
540) Duane Valz, Oakland, CA
541) David Mrozek Rauch, San Francisco, CA
542) Betsy Fagin, San Francisco, CA
544) John Montesa, Southborough, MA
545) Lyn Chamberlin, Lincoln,MA
546) Mark Edwards, Lexington, MA
547) Dave Vanable, Honeoye Falls, NY
548) Susan Scheible, Pittsford, NY
549) Kim Krzyzewski, State College, PA
550) Beverly Balger, State College, PA
551) Deborah Leopold, Riverdale, MD
552) Herbert W. Ettel, Washington, DC
553) Bernadette H. Odyniec, Washington, DC

Beverly Balger
Registrar
Palmer Museum of Art
The Pennsylvania State University
University Park, PA 16802
[redacted]

554) Cori Parrish, Arlington, VA
555) Joshua Cohen, Amherst, MA
556) Teresa Sparks, Morgantown, WV

557) jeffrey daniel miller, Wooster, OH and Parkersburg, WV

There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
there are only
eyes in all heads
to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

229. Schuchat Simon

Re: berrigan / whalen / koch / ashbery / v lindsay

Wed 4 Mar 1998

---

1. Somewhere Ted has a poem "Old Master Story" which goes: John Ashbery heads/Philip Whalen tails (or something to that effect).

2. I agree with Jordan that Train Ride & Tambourine Life are pinnacles of achievement -- they are also not from the same "period" and are quite different works, albeit both much learned (accent on the second syllable) out of Whalen. Tambourine life is a settled existence, at home, and Train Ride is in motion, etc, etc.

3. Ted once told me that he was very influenced by Miles Davis in writing the Sonnets. (He may have also made this assertion in an interview or teaching a class, i.e., there may be a citation beyond my own memory.) (I also don't think I understood what he meant.)

4. The John Cage Interview.

5. Henry's suggestion re "grunge" or the "grittiness of the quotidienne" are part of where Ted's practice intersects with (as Mark notes) Paul Blackburn, of whom Ted often spoke.

6. Ted was a big fan of Conrad Aiken. Actually, he read all poets, and excepting some near contemporaries, liked them all. He told me how much he liked a particular poem by Richard Wilbur. He was Clark Coolidge's big champion. I.e., Ted was -- as he often said -- catholic. He also was influenced by everything he ever read, heard, saw, or said.

↑ Index

230. Susan Clark
Norma Cole & Stacy Doris, eds. RM16
Wed 4 Mar 1998

hello all,

Just noticed that neither Mark's nor Jacques's posts happens to refer to Stacy Doris or Norma Cole, the editors of RADDLE MOON 16, the new French writing issue and I didn't want their work to be mis-attributed or overlooked.

Norma and Stacy are responsible for discovering the writers [many of whom are un- or little-known in France] and arranging the vital translator-translatee couplings. They are the guest editors of the issue and it was a big pleasure to host them in RM. Each of them has written a note in the back of the issue on the process.

[that's] bonne route,
Susan -- ever careless of gender ...

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

231. David Zauhar
Re: The Sonnets
Wed 4 Mar 1998

> No books here at work today, so Whalen/Berrigan will have to wait until tomorrow or Friday, so I can quote a few things. Erik, if you really want that copy, e-mail Pomander's pronto--I think they only have one. Do you have a copy of Whalen's _On Bear's Head_? I think you'd probably love it. It's been out of print, like, "forever." You can find used paperback copies every now & then, but if you can't wait, you can get a hardback copy for $25 from Second Life Books in Lanesborough, MA. If interested, e-mail them at:

Not to gloat too much, but I scored a discarded library copy of Whalen's _On Bear's Head_ from the retired book store of the Harold Washington library for a quarter. It's sad to see a book like that being taken off the shelves, but I think I've given it a good home. Other recent finds there include Joe Ceravolo's Spring in the World of Poor Mutts, and Jonathon William's An Ear in Bartram's Tree, from which this timely poem on WCW's death, 35 years ago today...

WCW: March 4, 1963

I like it that you died

the month spring comes.

I could also add a timely Berrigan poem about Joe Brainard's Collage about Williams ("he's not in it, the hungry dead doctor"), but my copy of _The Sonnets_ is on loan to a friend.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

So often nothing happens and then when something does noone notices.

--Alan Davies

↑ Index

232. TBeck131
That's bric-a-brac, Patty Black. Give the frog a loan.
Wed 4 Mar 1998

My heading is the punch line of a joke I heard earlier today. Which reminded me of Michael Gottlieb's poem "Timing is Everything," a text composed entirely of punch lines. It first appeared in an issue of __This__. I don't recall ever seeing it collected into a book. It bears looking at. A wonderful example of composition by collage principle, not to mention Henny Youngman's principles.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

233. Karen Kelley
[Fwd: http://www.andyart.com/]
Wed 4 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

I can't remember who, but someone was asking about a source for cool web graphics--this guy's worth checking out.

by baygate.bayarea.net (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id MAA01113
for <[redacted]>; Wed, 4 Mar 1998 12:30:11 -0800 (PST)
From: [redacted]
by ngcpost.ngc.com (8.8.8/8.8.8) with ESMTP id MAA26857
for <[redacted]>; Wed, 4 Mar 1998 12:28:35 -0800 (PST)
by vegas.ngc.com (8.8.8/8.8.8) with SMTP id MAA26908
for <[redacted]>; Wed, 4 Mar 1998 12:28:17 -0800 (PST)
(IMA Internet Exchange 2.11 Enterprise) id 001128DB; Wed, 4 Mar 1998

12:26:39 -0800
Date: Wed, 4 Mar 1998 12:33:34 -0800
To: [redacted]
Subject: http://www.andyart.com/

----------8EC3AAE57C4--

↑ Index

234. Tosh
Re: Jack Hirschman
Wed 4 Mar 1998

>From: TBeck131 <[redacted]>
>To: [redacted] <[redacted]>
>Date: Wednesday, March 04, 1998 2:11 PM
>Subject: Jack Hirschman
>
>
>>Ron's mention of Hirschman provokes some memories. In the late 1970s I >>published a small chapbook by Jack called DOVE ROSE under the Viscerally >Press
>>imprint. (Side note: the cover art was by Hirschman's pal, the actor, Dean >>Stockwell.) I don't think I even have a copy of the book any more.
>
>
>Tom or somebody else,
>
>Duncan dedicates a poem to Dean Stockwell somewhere (I think it's in >_Bending the Bow_, but I'm at work and my copy's at home). What's up with >him and poetry? This is just an interesting (to me) possible side thread.
>
Dean is/was a very close friend to David Meltzer, Jack, Michael McClure,etc. and etc.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

235. Thomas Bell

Re: what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit a LitMag (or can you)

Thu 5 Mar 1998

Care to share your thoughts on digital poetics? I've been pondering (yesy, the hint of slow thinking is intended) visual poetics. Have not seen much that on either that moves me but suspect and hope that these "poetics" are not simply copies of or departures from current verbal poetics, art movements, or e-poetics. tom bell

At 10:29 AM 3/3/98 -0500, Matthew Kirschenbaum wrote:
>Tom Bell,
>
>>While fascination with the new, the latest technology, the glitsy or >>zingy-zangy, etc. seems overpowering right now, it will fade away quite >>soon. I think there is quality stuff already if one looks.
>
>Just my point, Tom.
>
>>I think Joe was referring to new ways of writing (thinking) that are in >>fact not possible on the printed page or at a reading. Just because >>one can't compose hyperlinked lines for the printed page or to be read >>aloud does not mean they can't be poetry. The same applies to simultaneous >>multi-media composition: written and spoken, written and drawn, spoken >>and visual, moving and moving.
>
>Yes yes yes Tom -- and . . . "there is quality stuff already if one looks."
>
>Lots of it in fact.
>
>About a year ago, Chris Funkhouser said to me that it was possible -- just >barely -- for him to comprehensively survey the range of existing electronic >poetry in his dissertation. I don't think he (anyone) could do it today.
>
>I'm trying to get (myself) out of the habit of qualifying (all) digital >poetics with an anticipatory hypothetical and the c(h)ant of the NEW -- we >have (some) digital poetics today, right now, that can already (uh oh) be >historicized, institutionalized, materialized. E-ven enjoyed. Matt
>
>

↑ Index

236. laura and jeff
a writer's job
Thu 5 Mar 1998

> "A writer's job is to write, whatever means are at their disposal"--
>
> I love poetry and wish more people loved it as much as I do--
>
> But I don't think that a writer's "job" is necessarily to write--

i would say: a writers job is to exist. by definition: a writer writes. it need not be a "job", it just is.
but writers must exist, and it should be their job to continue to exist.
(and by writing, i do not mean the physical act of ink to paper, sound from mouth, etc.) every writer is, by extension, a thinker. and without people thinking...
so: the writer's job is to exist, and (again: by extension) to further the existance (i.e. to incite others to write/think).
jeff.

There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
there are only
eyes in all heads
to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

237. laura and jeff
Re: what's new? (was: Re: You Too Can Edit)
Thu 5 Mar 1998

> tho i'm mostly with joe amato on this thread, to me the technology is (still) alltoo new for one to be able to come down firmly for or against.

of course not. technology is neutral. it's human beings who are not.
jeff.

There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
there are only
eyes in all heads
to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

238. J. Kuszai
girder to poet: delete me, baby
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

the girder amid the rubble, while conjuring images of odd journeys I've taken through endless piles of junk, rubble, garbage, and places like the tracks in portland's brooklyn yards where it was a mile walk to school each day (and this was the time that I really dug into Oppen and Reznikoff). not surprisingly, i also have lots of pictures of that time. everything in black and white. democratic? eh? I don't hear anyone saying anything, and as far as I know that girder can't vote. seriously, what I always got from that scene wasn't so much the rugged individualism of the any-body could be a self, with a little effort (and if you knew someone, had rich parents, etc.) but instead related to the kind of optics of seeing, which i guess is a kind of party line objectivist thinking. certainly this is different in oppen and zukofsky and niedecker and then of course the whole objectivst school as any recognizable thing comes collapsing down on anyone trying to put anything up about it. certainly you do get the patronizing "suzie had a self" in oppen in moments of his poems, although I still love those poems, the "her name was Phyllis, not neo-classic" section. The part where she's riding the bus home, her first job, etc., and there are these lines (i don't have my oppen with me, and quite frankly havent thought about him seriously in some time, so i might have this wrong) the lines after that where he writes that she steps down off the bus, something to the effect that she sees (or is) "a spot of light on the pavement"--in any event that oppen-esque spotlight is beaming on her--there is a beauty to the recognition, in oppen's rhetoric (I think) that she exists, that he can say that she exists, or if she can, that she will. "Speak if you can," etc.

These lines were terribly important to me, and I was schooled at one point by the girder. And I love David's reading of the girder & think it quite correct. I guess I'm resistant to slam this though, because somehow I can take something away from that moment of recognition, without being blasted by oppen's "spot of light on the pavement" as if it were making an incandescent candle of her, or me, for wanting it to be. But I still don't think that it is somehow undemocratic--I think there is a version of version of democracy which is exactly this "I could win the Lotto" and "I influence elections" kind of thinking. What is the substitute for democracy implied here? Fascism? One poet rule? Also implied by this sense of the girder as individual, with the "masses" shaded in the background, is that there is a more "democratic" way to handle the trash of the vacant lot, a way that doesn't set one in front of other. Part of what I had thought he was trying to accomplish had to do with not being lost in the fuzzy glare of undifferentiated phantasmagoric sensory data. Perhaps a simple lesson in imagism, slightly (at all?) refined?

I'm curious how you read the first poem I mentioned. A poem made as an "inscription over the subway entrance"and which follows roughy

This is the gift of Hephestus
The god man say is lame

there is someone waiting to use this computer so I'll finish this another time. thanks david for the opportunity to think about this aain. what meow books did you like?

best,
jimmy joffa

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, david bromige wrote:

> This in response to something in one of Joel Kuszai's recent posts.-- It strikes me as an oddly undemocratic vision for Reznikoff--or Oppen, who approved of this line--to (as Joel so well says) "put a halo" around one piece of the rubble, consigning the rest ("huddled masses") to the garbage-scow of history. Consider the reader. S/he identifies with the girder ("I am a girder") and so what does that make the rest of us? Not a brick here and a bike wheel there and a single mitt here but--mere rubble.("rabble," as Joel puns). Or s/he identifies with the rubble--so who is that jerk who thinks he's a girder and we others are undifferentiated trash?
>
> "I saw the girder
> first was still itself
> and then brick by brick
> and then the bike wheel,
> then the dead cat, each
> halo'd with identity"
>
> but perhaps american poetry no matter the marxism of its writer cannot transcend the cult of rugged individual ("resistant as a girder") and still be received as fine. I certainly don't care for what I just made up and put in lines. But I do care that this reznikoff girder-poem is in bad faith.
> David

↑ Index

239. Grant Jenkins
Reznikoff's girder, Bromige's faith
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Not that Reznikoff needs to be defended at this point and not that anyone cares anymore, but the only bad faith here in this complaint about Reznikoff is Kuszai's and Bromige's infatuation with their own readings of the poem.

Neither of you ever wonder if the poem might NOT set the girder in a hierarchical relation with its surroundings. Is it possible that "still itself among the rubble" means that the girder is itself still rubble but that such a denomination is not able to totalize it as object? The poem seems to say that the world exists before judgment comes along to sort things out. The identity of the individual is exactly what gets called into question as the object blurs such distinction.

Another problem is that, when you read the poem in context, it seems obvious to me that there is no such halo or aura given to this image or any other detail of Reznikoff's poems. 'Profane' and 'sacred' have no place in Reznikoff's lexicon because he does not categorize the world as such.

I think you are barking up the wrong girder.

Grant Jenkins
University of Notre Dame

↑ Index

240. Karen Kelley
Re: a writer's job
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

laura and jeff wrote:
>
> >"A writer's job is to write, whatever means are at their disposal"--
> >
> >I love poetry and wish more people loved it as much as I do--
> >
> >But I don't think that a writer's "job" is necessarily to write--
>
> i would say: a writers job is to exist. by definition: a writer writes. it > need not be a "job", it just is.

Here's a quote from my favorite sculptor, Eva Hesse:

"One of my first visions when I woke up from my operation was that I didn't have to be an artist to justify my existence, that I had a right to live without being one."

Karen

****

Interviewer: So how do you feel about the path you've chosen as a writer?
Harold Brodkey: Oh, it was all a mistake but what the hell.

↑ Index

241. Tom Orange
Tripwire, Open Letter, Raddle Moon
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

kevin killian writes:

> Many of these young people seem to have embarked on some kind of writing degree that presents itself, in "Tripwire," as a kind of grail of disgust. "Writing degree" = "zero"?

shd call yr-all's attention to the latest _open letter_ entitled "Disgust and Overdetermination: a poetics issue" guest edited by jeff derksen. opening sentence from derksen's eponymous introduction reads: "If, as Sianne Ngai writes in the essay that contributes to the title of this poetics issue, 'disgust, and not desire, is our most common affective response to capitalism and patriarchy,' then much of the work in this _Open Letter_ points to, addresses, and registers its disgust at the logic that creates the social relations that make us want to puke" (7).

much tasty stuff (!) to be had here: work also by deanna ferguson, brian kim stephans, miles champion, clint burnham, nancy shaw & catriona strang, scott pound, louis cabri, andrew levy, rob manery, karen mac cormack, tjsnow, christian bok (from the forthcoming "eunoia" project), caroline bergvall, kevin davies, peter jaeger, darren wershler-henry, dorothy trujillo lusk, mark tadao nakada, and dan farrell.

will also chime in support for raddle moon 16. highlights for me so far -- again, lots to chew on here -- the work by albane prouvost (yes to whoever said it, powerful use of repetition), kati molnar (syntax and use of caps), and oscarine bosquet (tr. michael palmer).

get and enjoy,
tmorange

```
_____________________________________
| To grasp the relation of words to matter, |
| mind, process, may be the greatest task.  |
| -- Clark Coolidge, /The Crystal Text/ --  |
```

~~~
~~~

> communicating (no body lang, eye contact, hearing a > voice, etc).
>
> *i miss the same things when i* > read a letter from a friend or a rejection slip from a journal / so i'm > afraid the tired point has to be made that if you subsitute the word "book"
> or "newspaper" or "personal letter" for "web" in your statement above, the > language of your critique sounds suddenly antiquated and reactionary -- if > no "true communication" can take place without "viceral stimulation between > the people communicating", then this pretty much damns the whole written > record, doesn't it?, and not just the web, unless you mean something more > specific by "communication" / not to sound flip, but we're communicating > here, aren't we?

are we? i don't know you. i don't know what you look like, sound like, etc. i don't know how you live your life. all i have are words floating on a screen. i can make assumptions, and even learn and somewhat communicate. but to me you can only be a collection of electronic words. i assume that someone put them together, but i don't know who it is. so the annalogy of a letter from a friend is false. i know my friends. i spend as much time with them as possible. and when i get a letter: i hold it, read it. sometimes it smells like them or their home. with email: i have electic lights burning my eyes. i hold a mouse and keyboard. granted: getting this email from you is better than nothing, but it's important to realize that people are "settling" for this over going out and talking to people. i know scores of people who just sit in their houses all day on the puter. it's safe. they don't have to try to be anything. but at the same time they can't fully express themselves, and thus get to know anyone really. one fella i know, who has a phd in philosophy (and thus no job), used to be one of my favorite people to talk to. he was so animated and interesting. we'd drink tea and go all night about various subjects. but now he has no time for "talking". he doesn't come out. it's easier to sorta talk to a hundred people, than to really talk to one. okay: i don't know about anyone else: but when i'm reading (anything from whitman to herodotus) i will at times catch myself reading out loud and pacing around the room (both of which horribly annoy my wife). i feel stimulated. i get excited and further annoy laura by reading passages to her and try to get her to talk about it while she's studying or painting. this excitement is inflammed when i go to a reading, or am just being read to by a friend. on the puter i get bored after a while. and yet i sit here because at times i forget about other things. the puter becomes my world. and this world burns my eyes, leaves me alone in a room, etc. yet here i am. all of written history is not damned by this. every book is different in basic physicality, as well as in content. every book leads to a new book: others by that author, biographies, books by contemporaries, sources, etc. this leads to deeper understanding of those we can no longer go and see. (this all leads to discussion, human interaction, in most cases.) and those we can still see we should demand to see, as the last year has proved, before it's too late. it'd be one thing if the puter was just a tool to get in contact with people, but it is increasingly becoming a substitute for physical contact. and i loose coherence a little easier. jeff.

> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
> there are only
> eyes in all heads
> to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

244. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Looking for Address
Thu 5 Mar 1998

HELLO

You prob. have this by now. In case:

g. lombardo: [redacted]

--Rlevitsky

↑ Index

245. laura and jeff
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

sorry. i somehow missed that post, but i'll give ya my feelings... i think a lot of people get confused because it is easy to read tb as an extension of frank and co. and so with this simple disqualification they move on to the next poet. they don't get into tb, recognize his individual qualities, etc. i think that this may be the fault of a tendency to only see a "movement" as it's founder, instead of the sum of the parts. each part being an important individual part, without which the whole would collapse. this is also why many "late beat poets" get overlooked, as well as some of the "minor black mountain poets". people just as good, if not better, than their "elders", but overlooked due to basic similarities and thus marginalized. jeff.

>I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the
>"academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see >Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!,

>I suppose the academy of the future is closing its doors to argue about >publishing on the web? If anyone wants a break, write to me and explain why >some critics call Berrigan an "ardent disciple" and like some kid brother to >Frank O' Hara. An imitator. His writings mean alot to me, and I would like >some discussion on the matter.
>

There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
there are only
eyes in all heads
to be looked out of

-charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

246. Steve Tills

Re: web publication, etc.

Thu 5 Mar 1998

One of the facets of the web that I like is that writing will increasingly be able to exist, be, without attachment to a human being, i.e., no "name," no personable voice characteristics, no attractive or charismatic person attached--in short, an increase in anonymously generated language objects whose sole value will be what is on the page. One among many reasons I would like to see more of this someday is the thought of writers who have been limited in mobility (thus couldn't do a lot of readings to get people to look seriously at their writing), or limited in oral motor faculties (thus couldn't get people to hear the inflection of their "voices"), or limited by a host of social and material advantages (thus couldn't buy attention to their writing), or limited in psychological lust for attention (thus couldn't or wouldn't want more from their writing than that it exist).

laura and jeff wrote:

> i've been following the thread relating to this with interest...
>
> methinks it comes down to this:
> the web is good for wide opportunity and collective action. but the fact is:
> we are living in a world that is quickly alienating itself from itself via > any source it can. the web is adding to this is two major ways:
> 1) it gives the guise of communication, but with out any > kind of physical relationship between those
> "communicating" with > each other. so no true communication can take place due

to a lack of viceral stimulation between the people communicating (no body lang, eye contact, hearing a voice, etc).

*i miss the same things when i* read a letter from a friend or a rejection slip from a journal / so i'm afraid the tired point has to be made that if you subsitute the word "book"
or "newspaper" or "personal letter" for "web" in your statement above, the language of your critique sounds suddenly antiquated and reactionary -- if no "true communication" can take place without "viceral stimulation between the people communicating", then this pretty much damns the whole written record, doesn't it?, and not just the web, unless you mean something more specific by "communication" / not to sound flip, but we're communicating here, aren't we?

are we? i don't know you. i don't know what you look like, sound like, etc.
i don't know how you live your life. all i have are words floating on a screen. i can make assumptions, and even learn and somewhat communicate. but to me you can only be a collection of electronic words. i assume that someone put them together, but i don't know who it is. so the annalogy of a letter from a friend is false. i know my friends. i spend as much time with them as possible. and when i get a letter: i hold it, read it. sometimes it smells like them or their home. with email: i have electic lights burning my eyes. i hold a mouse and keyboard. granted: getting this email from you is better than nothing, but it's important to realize that people are "settling" for this over going out and talking to people. i know scores of people who just sit in their houses all day on the puter. it's safe. they don't have to try to be anything. but at the same time they can't fully express themselves, and thus get to know anyone really. one fella i know, who has a phd in philosophy (and thus no job), used to be one of my favorite people to talk to. he was so animated and interesting. we'd drink tea and go all night about various subjects. but now he has no time for "talking". he doesn't come out. it's easier to sorta talk to a hundred people, than to really talk to one.
okay: i don't know about anyone else: but when i'm reading (anything from whitman to herodotus) i will at times catch myself reading out loud and pacing around the room (both of which horribly annoy my wife). i feel stimulated. i get excited and further annoy laura by reading passages to her and try to get her to talk about it while she's studying or painting. this excitement is inflammed when i go to a reading, or am just being read to by a friend. on the puter i get bored after a while. and yet i sit here because at times i forget about other things. the puter becomes my world. and this world burns my eyes, leaves me alone in a room, etc. yet here i am.
all of written history is not damned by this. every book is different in basic physicality, as well as in content. every book leads to a new book:
others by that author, biographies, books by contemporaries, sources, etc.
this leads to deeper understanding of those we can no longer go and see.

> (this all leads to discussion, human interaction, in most cases.) and those we can still see we should demand to see, as the last year has proved, before it's too late.
> it'd be one thing if the puter was just a tool to get in contact with people, but it is increasingly becoming a substitute for physical contact. and i loose coherence a little easier.
> jeff.
>
> ---
>
> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
> there are only
> eyes in all heads
> to be looked out of
>
> -charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)

↑ Index

247. joel lewis
berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I hope folks don't mind me banging my own tambourine, but I'd like to recommend Ted Berrigan's On The Level Everyday: Selected Talks On Poetry and the art of living, edited by me and published by Talisman House (at better book stores and thru amazon.com)-- it is wonderful example of a poet thinking thru process and letting young writers in on the serious business of being a poet. The book is a result of a vow I took when ted died--that I would do what I could to keep his work alive. That younger writers, who can only imagine his bigger-than-life personality, have taken to his work moves me.

The genius of the work is how it moves easily between the radical and personal poetic. Ted, himself, came to see the Sonnets late in life as work about "growing up in a certain way." He thought that Tambourine Life was more influential as it was in a Paul Carroll anthology that did about 40,00 copies + being in Many Happy Returns that went thru two printings.

Ted was amazingly catholic in his taste. He loved poets like Aiken (to whom he mailed the sonnets--see aiken's response in his selected letters) & Roethke & felt distant from poets-on-a-mission types like Ted Enslinn. Whalen was of hugh importance --especially in spatial arrangement and freedom of movement & if gary lenhart is out there lurking, he once suggested to me that whalen's decline as an influential poet has a lot to do with the demise of his biggest booster -- Ted.

Blackburn may have been Ted's hidden poetic influence to the point of Ted denying his poetic influence and only acknowledging a certain moral influence. And among the grunge--ashbery. Ted told me that when he met robert raushenberg for the first time, the painter said to him: "Oh, you're the guy who imitates Ashbery." Ted sd: "That wasn't so great, but if he said:'You're the guy that imitates O'Hara " -- then I'd REALLY be crushed". I was teaching some of his poems in my class and noticed his sense of shifting surface and language texture is much like the pre-self portrait ashbery.

Which brings me to a point that I have never seen much discussed on the list: POETRY & CLASS. Ted was one of the few major poets to come from a working class background -- and he was constantly aware of it.,One major reason he held no non-poetry job from '66 to his death had a lot to do w/ his father, who was being trained to be classics scholar and had to give up those dreams and work in a bread factory when his dad died. Ted's dad died after a petty dispute w/ his bosses over automation. Ted said that he never wanted this to happen to him. I know among the theory crowd, these bits of personal anecdotes are no's-no's, but they go a long way in explaining ted and his poetry. I think the affinity that ted and olson shared (they once spent all night on a park bench in buffalo talking poetry!) was the shared working class/catholic/ ethnic background. In retrospect, that was part of my attraction to ted as a person was he knew from the world of scrimping and chuck steak I grew up in. This may have been the reason who moved away from being labeled an avant-garde poet and settled into a variant avant-populism of the poetry from Red wagon on.

Joel Lewis

↑ Index

248. Miekal And

[Fwd: Re: sellotape poet]

Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

by westbyserver.westby.mwt.net (8.8.7/8.8.6) with ESMTP id AAA21448 for <[redacted]>; Thu, 5 Mar 1998 00:44:33 -0600 (CST) by mailout3.mailbase.ac.uk (8.8.x/Mailout) with ESMTP id GAA04857;
Thu, 5 Mar 1998 06:42:32 GMT
by naga.mailbase.ac.uk (8.8.x/Mailbase) id GAA28260;
Thu, 5 Mar 1998 06:42:01 GMT
by naga.mailbase.ac.uk (8.8.x/Mailbase) with SMTP id GAA28252;
Thu, 5 Mar 1998 06:41:59 GMT
id aa0208565; 5 Mar 98 6:33 GMT
Date: Wed, 4 Mar 1998 17:18:44 +0000
Subject: Re: sellotape poet

From: Sholto Ramsay <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]

> I have a student who is interested in finding out more about a poet who was apparently featured on BBC a week or so ago. He sellotapes his poems to lamposts. Does anyone know his name and/or his whereabouts? Barry Edwards

I believe that he is Austrian and based in Vienna. He is much disliked by the local burghers who believe that he interrupts the profitable flow of consumers into their stores. He also constructs long strings of poems and ties them on strings that are strung between lampposts.

Local radio stations ask is this art?

sholto Ramsay
Director of New Media Institute of Contemporary Arts
12 carlton house terrace. london sw1 5ah uk
44 [redacted] fax 44 [redacted]
mailto:[redacted]
http://www.ica.org.uk
http://www.newmediacentre.com

↑ Index

249. Macgregor S Card
The Germ: a journal of poetic research
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Thought we'd take advantage of the current discussion of small press magazines, and announce the second issue of our journal, The Germ, due out this April.

If you haven't seen the first edition, copies are still available. Includes work from Barbara Guest, John Godfrey, Peter Gizzi, Clark Coolidge, Keith and Rosmarie Waldrop, Lyn Hejinian, Pam Rehm, Fanny Howe, Jena Osman, Juliana Spahr, Jackson Mac Low, Miles Champion and many others. The journal's perfect-bound, 224 pages with a smashing cover by Rikki Ducornet, and ends with reviews and commentary.

Line-up for issue 2: Bernadette Mayer, Anne Waldman, Michael Palmer & Ben Watkins, Nathaniel Mackey, Aaron Shurin, Ray DiPalma, Lewis Warsh, Elfriede Czurda (trans. Rosmarie Waldrop), George Albon, Albert Mobilio, Beth Anderson, Amy England, Chris Stroffolino, Richard Kostelanetz, Brian Schorn, Lisa Samuels, Gregory St. Vincent Thomasino, Devin Johnston, Anne Tardos, David

Trinidad, Gale Nelson, Jay Dillemuth, Rod Smith, Elizabeth Robinson, Marie Etienne (trans. Anne Talvaz), and two surprise features from the poetic ether!

Individual subscription rates are a reasonable $12 for two issues, $20 for four, $28 for six. Make checks payable to The Germ and mail to: The Germ, P.O. Box 8501, Santa Cruz, CA 95061.

We are distributed by Small Press Distribution and Bernard DeBoer; perhaps we are already available in your area. Give us a write!

Macgregor Card and Andrew Maxwell, editors.

↑ Index

250. Macgregor S Card
The Germ wants your book reviews!
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Just thought we'd add this note:

The Germ is now accepting book reviews--critical writing has been particularly hard to come by. If you have material anywhere from 2-8 pages in length addressing contemporary poetic works or issues, we'd love to see it.

Specific books we'd be interested in receiving reviews of:

Fanny Howe, _One Crossed Out_
Sianne Ngai, _Discredit_
Andrew Joron's forthcoming book
Lisa Robertson, _Debbie, An Epic_
Keith Waldrop, _Analogies of Escape_
Merrill Gilfillan, _Satin Street_

(though this is by no means an exhaustive list)

We're currently printing reviews of Peter Gizzi's _Artificial Heart_ and Lisa Robertson's _XEclogues_, and have previously run pieces on Susan Howe's _Frame Structures_, John Clarke's _In the Analogy_, Will Alexander's _Towards the Primeval Lightning Field_.

If you happen to already have uncommitted work, and could get it to us within the next week, we still have tentative space open for issue #2. Otherwise, work received will be considered for the third edition, due out in the fall. There's an unfortunate poverty of critical writing in small poetry magazines, and this is an area we'd like to expand in our own.

Please send all material to: The Germ, P.O. Box 8501, Santa Cruz, CA 95061.

Or drop us a note at [redacted]

Thanks

↑ Index

251. david bromige
reznikoff's girder (infatuation)
Thu 5 Mar 1998

It hardly seems useful of Grant Jenkins to say of this topic "not that anyone cares anymore" while in the process of addressing it with fresh information. Nor does it seem useful to characterize my reading (& Joel Juszai's distinctly other reading) as "infatuations," then for him to offer his own reading, presumably likewise a matter of infatuation. Or if it is not, perhaps he would clarify the distinction between "infautate" and "non-infatuate" readings. I.e.,is an infatuated reading one one disagrees with? If so,there are surely more handy terms to apply in making such distinction.

I'll try one more time. The phrase "still itself" is the one that strikes me as less than alert. We are not concerned with the selfhood of _girders_ here, in this poem. Surely that phrase adds something to what Grant calls "perception."

"Look, a girder there among the rubble " would register perception. But because it can be read (and surely not perversely) as "Look, that girder is still itself among that rubble which isn't," I have, for cause I previously stated, found it halfbaked. An opinion I hold of very little work by either Reznikoff or Oppen. And so it has long intrigued me that Oppen singled it out (as Rez the girder) for something like praise.I agree with Grant Jenkins that Reznikiff isn't in thre habit of "haloing" objects, and that is what I object to here, where I believe Joel is correct in saying that he does.

I'm willing to admit at this point that my trouble with this line =a blind spot of mine, because I don't think I can articulate my impression any further. Thanks for the debate. David

↑ Index

252. David Cuthbert
Re: Ted Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

ScoutEW wrote:
>
>I recently asked you all why some poets like Ted Berrigan are ignored by the
>"academy" and no-one was interested enough to reply about how they see >Berrigan's work, well I guess you all are too busy talking about the WWW!,
>I suppose the academy of the future is closing its doors to argue about >publishing on the web? If anyone wants a break, write to me and explain why >some critics call Berrigan an "ardent disciple" and like some kid brother to >Frank O' Hara. An imitator. His writings mean alot to me, and I would like >some discussion on the matter.

If you are near a university library, try to track down the latest issue (winter 97, I think, number 38.4) of the academic journal _Contemporary Literature_. It contains an excellent and fairly lengthy (31 pages) article by Libbie Rifkin entitled "'Worrying about Making It'": Ted Berrigan's Social Poetics." The essay illuminates a wide range of topics, including T.B.'s relationships with Ashbery and O'Hara and his editing of the magazine _"C"_. The focus is on how, for all their grungeiness, The Sonnets hitch their candour to a prospective stake in their future reception.

One of my favourite Berrigan artifacts is the recording of him reading "Red Shift" on the CD included with the _Exact Change Yearbook_. I don't have a printed copy of the poem, so this will be inaccurately rendered, but I gasp and tremble every time I hear his voice's faltering insistence in the closing passage:

I am only pronouns and I am all of them.
And I didn't ask for this you did I came into your life to change it and it did so and now nothing will ever change that
And that's that.
            Alone and crowded unhappy fate. Nevertheless,
I slip softly into the air.
The world's furious song flows through my costume.

only pronouns,
David Cuthbert

↑ Index

253. Miekal And Musical Palindrome
Thu 5 Mar 1998

from Literature Nation

debut brag sore tip radar nod. dad dotes mile van. edit non word team nor page look. cuckoo beer tred. no, who read set in bard's evil kook lives drab nites dear. oh wonder tree book. cuckoo leg apron meat. drown on tide. navel, Im set odd, add on radar pit. eros garb tubed.

↑ Index

254. Alan Myouka Sondheim you and a note and you again
Thu 5 Mar 1998

(I've been on nomail for the past ten days or so because I'm traveling thorugh Australia and have very poor access. But I did want to send this fairly traditional piece along because it haunts me, from Tom Clark's The Lake I think through to dreaming on and off and through the screen - and there's also the sad fact I'm returning early to the States, wandering once again, after the end of April. Or so it seems. So it's also the writing - for better or worse - of someone _unhinged,_ say, beneath the waters... - Alan)
---

you

projecting into the interior of my mind, upon the screen of my mind's interior, I see you and several others congregating around a fire or other projection of you, or mind, or waters where you will sail away and there is a projection on the sail, of you,

of others on the screen of my mind's interior,
in or on the waters, the drinking boat, grey sky,
there the waters where you sail away and you, I call, hey you, I am on your screen, sailing away with your grey others gathered around a fire, it is beautiful in boats and fires, beautiful in waters, grey skies black with stars, with boats and fires and oceans and please make sounds, speak clearly, and I will hear your sounds, please make some images as well, there, on the boat, drunken and lurching through the seas, on the waters of our mind's interior,

in the blackness of forgotten stars and you are on your sails, you are on them, and I am on you, sailing away in my mind's interior, and there's a fire, we are gathered around, watching a fire projected on the fire, you see me projected onto me, you see the others,

grey and on the others, you see yourself, I say,
in the middle of the waters fuelled
by the blackness of forgotten stars

and where is everyone, and why, and what is gathering, what do you see,
you will look down, I say, look down, you do, you see me on the screen of my interior,

I see your mind's interior, and you see me on the others grey and gathered near the fire, and you, you see yourself, and I see you

in the middle of the waters fuelled
by the blackness of forgotten stars

↑ Index

255. rsillima
Whalen, Berrigan, Coolidge
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Coolidge met Phil Whalen at the '63 Vancouver Poetry Festival where he also met many other folks (including one of the attendees, a then very young Michael Palmer, with whom CC would go on to edit Joglars).

I can't think of where Coolidge may actually talk about his relationship to Whalen in print, although I've heard him do so in person. However, if you want to see the work that I think is almost the perfect wedding of the influences of Whalen AND Berrigan, it's THE ROAD LOG, printed in the Coolidge issue of Big Sky (ed. by Bill Berkson, intro by Tom Clark), pub. in Bolinas in 1972. Two long and "airy" to type up this late before I trundle off to work this morning.

One reason why I think there's been so little critical discussion to date of Ted Berrigan is that he was such a strong personality and would have so obviously disapproved of such, that people who actually knew the man feel that inhibition internally. There was a good 15 year break after the death of Jack Spicer when I think the same general effect took place, the only person actively promoting Jack's work being Paul Mariah as part of his campaign to make room for a specifically gay poetics. But so many people in Jack's world retreated from the SF poetry scene (to Vancouver or Bolinas or just away from poetry, as Harold Dull did in spite of those fine early books) and so there wasn't the same sense of them being around to disapprove of the discourse (Can you imagine what Jack would have thought of that boundary2 issue??) when us "younger" folks who didn't know Jack personally (there's mention in the Kevin/Lew bio of Spicer -- due out now in just 8 weeks -- of a party on Etna at the Berkeley Poetry Conference in '65 that I attended where apparently Spicer was present, though I certainly was unaware of it at the time) could come forward without that restraint. When I gave my talk on Spicer's Language at 80 Langton Street I wasn't sure there would be any audience, and was shocked literally to see it become an SRO event -- there were all these "closet" Spicer afficianados out there.

Just as there are now ones of Berrigan (Jordan, I personally love The Sonnets, although I agree that it was an unrepeatable work). But Ted's students, formal and otherwise, are everywhere and very active in today's poetry, and I think they all know exactly how Ted would react to a boundary2 type of treatment.

We may have to wait another 10 years before such discourse really takes off.

Also, even if Ted looked like Eddie Vetter's father, I don't believe you could call anyone whose music collection in 1959 centered on Arthur Godfrey "grunge."

Ron

↑ Index

256. henry gould

Re: Whalen, Berrigan, Coolidge

Thu 5 Mar 1998

On Thu, 5 Mar 1998 06:17:09 -0600 <[redacted]> said:
>
>One reason why I think there's been so little critical discussion to date of >Ted Berrigan is that he was such a strong personality and would have so >obviously disapproved of such, that people who actually knew the man feel

Didn't the Language Poets disapprove of him? That might be another reason.
>
>Also, even if Ted looked like Eddie Vetter's father, I don't believe you >could call anyone whose music collection in 1959 centered on Arthur Godfrey
>"grunge."

Do we have to keep using the narrow current top-40 meaning of this word to gently mock what I was saying? The term "grungy" has been honorable slang for the grittiness of street life since long before guys in Minneapolis & Seattle stopped tucking in their flannel shirts. That's all I meant & mean & an elephant's word is 100%. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

257. Gary Sullivan
"I take the present"
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Dear Ted Heads:

The moves, sense of humor, mock-heroics, self-questioning, and collage-effect in Berrigan's work of the mid to late sixties are all things taken, in some part, from Philip Whalen's work of the previous decade. But the crucial element Berrigan latched onto, the most interesting to me, anyway, is how Whalen's work is situated in time. Whalen described his poems as "continuous nerve movies," a fitting description of poems of Berrigan's like "Tambourine Life" and "Train Ride."

Whalen's poetry, though often "chatty" and focused on the "quotidian," differs from O'Hara's in that, when O'Hara says "I do this, I do that," he's referring to the past. What I experience, reading O'Hara, is more akin to memory than to immediate experience:

AT THE OLD PLACE

Joe is restless and so am I, so restless.
Button's buddy lips frame "L G T TH O P?"
Across the bar. "Yes!" I cry, for dancing's my soul delight. (Feet! Feet!) "Come on!"

Through the streets we skip like swallows.
Howard malingers. (Come on, Howard.) Ashes malingers. (Come on, J.A.) Dick malingers.
(Come on, Dick.) Alvin darts ahead. (Wait up, Alvin.) Jack, Earl and Someone don't come. [...]

I don't imagine O'Hara writing that "as it happens," despite his persistent use of the present tense. (Hard to skip and write at the same time. Or have lunch with LeRoi Jones, etc.) Whalen, however, is not, like O'Hara, describing (or sometimes pretending to describe) his life. He is describing the act, and the situation, of writing. Or he is (forgive the enigmagism) "writing himself writing":

DELIGHTS OF WINTER AT THE SHORE

A little sauce having unglued me from my book
I take the present (Ernest Bloch on the phonograph)
I salute the fire in the fireplace
The red sectional settee
All the potted plants I moved onto the diningroom table so they could get more light
And beyond the window North Pacific Ocean

An editor writes to me, "Takes, takes, all the time takes ... what are you scared of, nobody's trying to cut your throat ...
Why don't you just sit down & write a novel?"

& wild with energy & power I'm curled up in the grey reclining chair Carefully writing one letter at a time

Check the barometer ..... falling
Check the swiss steak in the oven .....
.....turn up the heat

It goes like that, all the "talent," the "promise"
My mortgage very nearly foreclosed
My light going out

X. Keeps telling me how sad everything is (He cries all the time)
Maybe he's right, but I don't see sad
& the pursuit of happiness around a square track

How loyal have I been to myself?
How far do I trust .... anything?
I wonder "self-confidence" vs. years of self-indulgence (am I feeling guilty?)
How would anything get done if I quit? Stopped whatever it is you choose to call it?

Put it as fancy & complicated as possible:
Here I sit drunk beside the biggest ocean in the world
Tosca destroying me on the phonograph Everybody else in the world dying of starvation, cruelty lack of my love

No amount of promise or talent about to do anything to fix that.
It was 20 years ago they worried about what I might do
Now everybody can see what I've done, what I'm doing

Everybody starves
Everybody is a huge (biological) success
Everybody's maybe like me: perpetually scared & not giving a shit
As long as there's beef in the oven
Out of jail
Drunk

Everybody says Horace was a two-bit snob, writing
"Odi profanum vulgis"

Maybe he meant he hated himself for being lazy, preferring old wine Pretty girls & sunshine
To the dignity & usefulness of public office?

Now the Second Act of Tosca:
Big party downstairs, the cantata going on Police interrogation upstairs, Cavaradossi on the rack
(These palazzi--a real idea of splendor)
& topping it all off, as if it explained E V E R Y T H I N G

"Vissi d'arte, vissi d'amore ..." I've lived for Art, I've lived for love ..."
(incontinently stabbing the villain)

DIE! DIE! DIE!

I eat an olive out of my glass

TOSCA: "... tutta Roma!"

& 1 is left

Some psychiatrist says "Quotation, a relaxation for, an evasion by the id."

I eat the second final olive & pretend to hurl my glass into the fireplace
I don't actually throw it, the glass isn't mine & there's a screen in front of the fireplace [...]

"Writing himself writing"--I think of Andrew Levy's "The shadow of the head falling over the page" ... as well as much of the last 20, 30 years of investigation. Whalen, I tend to think, is one of the least acknowledged living influences of late 20th Century American poetry.

In an interview with Anne Waldman, Whalen describes his discovery of "writing like this," with "IF YOU'RE SO SMART, WHY AIN'T YOU RICH?," written in 1955: "... the first time I got out of the whole imagist kind of idea that I had been into for years, that whole thing about a poem should be short, exact, with not very many words and that it should have one complete feel or smell to it. And that poem was the first place where I could suddenly see that it didn't necessarily have to be that but it could be what I was going to be or what it was going to be itself, and it started making itself and I started having to go along behind it and write it the way it was ... To me at that time that poem 'IF YOU'RE SO SMART' was a great burst through, and all my dopey theories and hangups and things about writing and a thousand other things suddenly disappeared ..."

Note how he describes the experience of writing: "it started making itself and I started having to go along behind it and write it the way it was"--though not explicitly stated, Whalen is referring here to a shift in terms of time-relation with respect to the poem. Though he didn't care much for Spicer, as a person or a poet, what Whalen seems to be describing is the "dictated poem." Or, more significantly, it suggests what he got from Gertrude Stein--a great, early hero to him as well as friend & fellow poet Lew Welch. Stein, in certain of her work, writes out of a continuous present, and one could say of much of her work that it, too, is a kind of "continuous nerve movie." (Certainly that's true of "Tender Buttons.") Writing you follow, not that follows you.

This, by the way, is maybe what Coolidge got from Whalen and/or Stein--his work, certain of it, does seem to exist in a continuous present, for instance this, from his meditation on Drurer:

The world a height now brine, estuaries drained to the very pole. Geometrics, a lingual dent? Drainage, albany. Where at the last stand all this sphere that herded me? My cell a corner on the filtering world, all out there herein my belts. Things in trim they belt me, beg me, array my coined veils. Brass, copse of my trends to needles never suffered their pricks. The world in anger is an angled hole? Drop my pliers, sit hemmed in, which have made has clad me in. Meld thought is as droop. [...]

It doesn't "resemble" Whalen on first take, but, thought about, after having read much of both poets, an essential connection begins to seem more than plausible.

But back to Berrigan & Whalen. This poem, written from 1963-1965--Berrigan or Whalen?:

MY SONGS INDUCE PROPHETIC DREAMS

N E C E S S I T Y

is the mother of invention

INVENTION leads to great wealth, responsibility, and shady politics, if there's really LOTS of money involved.

Greatness is all.
Use autosuggestion in order to obtain money and power and energy.
I shall be 41 years old on 20:x:64

*

Self-indulgence.
Retroactive self-indulgence:

?
        reve d'amour

*

Work again.
find a loss has been sustained.
(Later)
the city goes with us when we travel
(First line of another poem) Literary muffins
they skate!
a mistake for Rexroth?
it must be in the elevator do not bunch   bunch bind too sharp   bind or sag   droop or sag no iridium   try to write carefully. Bundestag?

*

It's very hard to work when I'm hungry and it doesn't seem likely that I shall have anything to eat today ... some time next week, yes. I have a tentative dinner invitation for Monday ... but that's merely possible it's just as probable that I shall receive $10,000 in the mail on Monday morning. [...]

Well, a real Berrigan fan will know he rarely used "shall," but other than that, the resemblance, I think, is remarkable. Another shot of Whalen, at random (from 1962):

THE SATURDAY VISITATIONS

1.

Belligerence!
Mixed bathing, and
That was the end of the Roman Empire
Which ought to have lasted at least three weeks longer
?
Oh yes.
19 people,   cars, a GREAT BIG Highway Patrolman on purpose.
in cars.

2.

ALL PEOPLE
they love the/they try to tell us/we may sue
!

Very tiring.
*
FORGET IT
*

I could go on, quote more of Whalen, even drag in specific turns of phrase & images later filched by Berrigan, but it's too easy, and unneccessary for anyone who can get their hands on _On Bears Head_.

I don't mean to diminish Berrigan by this post; I mean merely to give Whalen his due. He's someone who definitely deserves a festschrift, as well as an in-print collected. I doubt he'll live to see either.

Yours,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

258. Charles Bernstein
Ronald Johnson 1935-1998
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I've just gotten this message from Robert Creeley:

> I've just had the sad word from Jodi Panula, Ronald Johnson's sister, that he died >Wednesday evening, March 4th, in Topeka, Kansas from the effects of his cancer.
>I'd be grateful if you can get the information out to people with some >quick emphasis upon ARK and his significance to us all. Many thanks.

I know the many devoted readers and admirers of Ronald Johnson's work on the Poetics List -- and I count myself as one of them -- will be detailing the remarkable and lasting achievement of Johnson’s work, culminating in the University of New Mexico publication of ARK.

Literally, a flowing: a form-take-hand
-with-form
(That Which Faseneth Us)
pillar to pillar the great dance arch itself through all that is or was or will be, 3/4 time. This will be a glade at the head of one stream and a resonant gnomon before it will stretch regions of signaling gnat-like resiliencies in the atmosphere of where we are -- or were.

Or will be, when the mingled frame of mind of man is celebration

Gates, which separate the wings of tiered ilex, open in caverns of atoms passing from one into another’s zenith of periodic movement, vast helicoidal shift:
a vaulting of arteries beating their heads against the dark.

This is the body of light.

[from BEAM 30, The Garden]

↑ Index

259. Gary Sullivan
Class background is landscape ... & more
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Hi, Joel:

I'd go even further here & suggest that Berrigan's class background, & constant later-life poverty, in some part explain his constant "thieving"--he borrowed &/or stole lines, images, points of view, moves, etc., the way he stole books & food, & borrowed money. I mean, it was what he did to survive. Anyway, I wrote about just this subject for Artpaper (a now-defunct Minneapolis arts journal) back in like 1992 or 1993--will send it along to you (or anyone else interested), if you like. Just lemme know.

Yours,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

PS: Agree w/you & others about Blackburn's influence, too.

On Thursday, March 05, 1998 3:05 AM, joel lewis [SMTP:[redacted]]
wrote:
> Which brings me to a point that I have never seen much discussed on the > list: POETRY & CLASS. Ted was one of the few major poets to come from a > working class background -- and he was constantly aware of it.,One major > reason he held no non-poetry job from '66 to his death had a lot to do w/> his father, who was being trained to be classics scholar and had to give up > those dreams and work in a bread factory when his dad died. Ted's dad died > after a petty dispute w/ his bosses over automation. Ted said that he never > wanted this to happen to him. I know among the theory crowd, these bits of > personal anecdotes are no's-no's, but they go a long way in explaining ted > and his poetry. I think the affinity that ted and olson shared (they once > spent all night on a park bench in buffalo talking poetry!) was the shared > working class/catholic/ ethnic background. In retrospect, that was part of > my attraction to ted as a person was he knew from the world of scrimping > and chuck steak I grew up in. This may have been the reason who moved away

> from being labeled an avant-garde poet and settled into a variant > avant-populism of the poetry from Red wagon on.
>
> Joel Lewis

↑ Index

260. Cadaly

Re: Looking for input on talk

Thu 5 Mar 1998

Thread on publishing, etc.

I went to a small press publishing thing at Beyond Baroque not too long ago. As opposed to Paul V. of RIBOT, most of the publishers there could not describe "what they like" at all: their publications were really outgrowths of their own taste, largely informed by the way they read their own writing. Had no way to communicate how they decided on content. A poetic? Frankly, it's like trying to decide on a B&B based on the description alone. Half the "cozy Victorian cottages" aren't anything but an older non-victorian house with a bunch of brown furniture.

As someone who has spent years trying to psyche out editorial whim based on reading a journal: it's about 50-50 as far as actually being able to ascertain decision making from the result. In my experience, when I submit stuff, either its rejected or the editor takes it and asks for more.

Catherine Daly

[redacted]

↑ Index

261. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: NPR
Thu 5 Mar 1998

we missed this... see if anyone taped it?

> Radio Alert!
>
> As I type at 3:30 PM west coast time, NPR and All Things Considered is doing a piece on the NY Public Library's show of the Poetry Project's mimeoed magazines. Berrigan mentioned; Ron Padgett is speaking now . . . go to the left of your dial and turn it on!

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted] Marriott Library Instruction [redacted] (lv. msg.)

↑ Index

262. Miekal And looming Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

David Zauhar wrote:

I'm a disciple of Frank O'Hara

Anyone care to write the next line?
^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^^^

I think you already did.

The mimeograph is broken & needs repair, got any parts?

↑ Index

263. Michael Magee
Re: Class background is landscape ... & more
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Worth thinking about O'Hara in this class/Catholic context too, not quite the same but related it seems to me - having spent years in and around Worcester, MA its hard to think of a more working class space if there ius such a thing. The lapsed-Catholic 20th century poet - is that a category? Interesting. - Mike (go lapsed catholics!) Magee.

Joel said: "I think the affinity that ted and olson shared (they once spent all night on a park bench in buffalo talking poetry!) was the shared working class/ catholic/ ethnic background."

and According to Gary
Sullivan: > > Hi, Joel: >
> I'd go even further here & suggest that Berrigan's class background, & constant
> later-life poverty, in some part explain his constant "thieving"--he borrowed > &/or stole lines, images, points of view, moves, etc., the way he stole books & > food, & borrowed money. I mean, it was what he did to survive. Anyway, I wrote > about just this subject for Artpaper (a now-defunct Minneapolis arts journal) > back in like 1992 or 1993--will send it along to you (or anyone else > interested), if you like. Just lemme know.
>
> Yours,
>
> Gary Sullivan
> [redacted]
>
> PS: Agree w/you & others about Blackburn's influence, too.
>
> On Thursday, March 05, 1998 3:05 AM, joel lewis [SMTP:[redacted]]
> wrote:
> > Which brings me to a point that I have never seen much discussed on the > > list: POETRY & CLASS. Ted was one of the few major poets to come from a > > working class background -- and he was constantly aware of it.,One major > > reason he held no non-poetry job from '66 to his death had a lot to do w/> > his father, who was being trained to be classics scholar and had to give up > > those dreams and work in a bread factory when his dad died. Ted's dad died
> > after a petty dispute w/ his bosses over automation. Ted said that he never > > wanted this to happen to him. I know among the theory crowd, these bits of > > personal anecdotes are no's-no's, but they go a long way in explaining ted > > and his poetry. I think the affinity that ted and olson shared (they once > > spent all night on a park bench in buffalo talking poetry!) was the shared > > working class/catholic/ ethnic background. In retrospect, that was part of > > my attraction to ted as a person was he knew from the world of scrimping > > and chuck steak I grew up in. This may have been the reason who moved away
> > from being labeled an avant-garde poet and settled into a variant > > avant-populism of the poetry from Red wagon on.
> >

> > Joel Lewis
>

↑ Index

264. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Dear K Lederer: Today's news seemed so familiar to me. Then I realized we had published it in OINK!, New American Writing's precursor, about 1000 years ago. That was during the era when Ted taught and lived in Chicago-- a good moment.

Maxine Chernoff

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> One of my favorite Berrigan books is RED WAGON--
>
> Three of my favorite pieces:
>
> CONVERSATION (I would reproduce it, but the form is too complex for e-mail)
>
> TODAY's NEWS
>
> My body heavy with poverty (starch)
> It uses up my sexual energy
> constantly, &
> I feel constantly crowded
>
> On the other hand, One
> Day In The Afternoon of
> The World
> Pervaded my life with a > heavy grace
> today
>
> I'll never smile again
>
> Bad Teeth
>
> But
> I'm dancing with tears in my eyes
> (I can't help myself!) Tom
> writes he loves Alice's sonnets,

takes four, I'd love

to be more attentive to her, more
here
The situation having become intolerable
the only alternatives are:
Murder & Suicide.

They are too dumb! So, one becomes a goof. Raindrops start falling on my roof. I say
Hooray! Then I say, I'm going out

At the drugstore I say, Gimme some pills!
Charge 'em! They say
Sure. I say See you later.

Read the paper. Talk to Alice.
She laughs to hear
Hokusai had 947 changes of address
In his life. Ha-ha. Plus everything else in the world
going on here.

I USED TO BE BUT NOW I AM

I used to be inexorable,
But now I am elusive.

I used to be the future of America,
But now I am America.

I used to be part of the problem,
But now I am the problem.

I used to be part of the solution, if not all of it,
But now I am not that person.

I used to be intense, & useful,
But now I am heavy, & boring.

I used to be sentimental about myself, & therefore ruthless,
But now I am, I think, a sympathetic person, although easily amused.

I used to be a believer,
But now, alas, I believe.

↑ Index

265. Jordan Davis
my terrific poem mentions this
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Gary,

I have a terrific poem that mentions this connection between Whalen and Berrigan -- but I would suggest that the Whalen of Berrigan's longer poems (esp. Tambourine Life and Train Ride) is a Schuyler-modified Whalen.

The way I put it in the poem is this:

Philip Whalen if I may go back To my damaged-lecturer mode is In Scenes of Life at the Capitol
The link from Ezra Pound to James Schuyler

But you know these things these quotations from poems they don't make any sense -- why am I being so self-deprecating? is it because my reading of Berrigan is tinted by my reading of Bernstein? -- so here's what I'll do. Send me your address, and I'll drop the poem in the mail to you today or tomorrow.

Take care,
Jordan

↑ Index

266. ScoutEW
Berrigan/i'm smiling
Thu 5 Mar 1998

All the Berrigan posts have been great, just a few things.. I would be anxious to know at what park Olson and Berrigan talked at in 1963? I grew up in Buffalo and would like to know! Joel, I loved your preface to "On the Level Everyday" Why can't someone get the ball rolling and publish more of his stuff so it can be available to everyone. There are some 20 or more titles listed at the beginning of that book, titles of Berrigan's work alone and stuff with Ron Padgett (by the way that was weird yesterday that they were talking about Berrigan in that interview with Padgett (on NPR), Anne Waldman right when these posts were being read, is that Jung's Synchronicity?) It is nice to have something like "On the Level Everyday", we need more -as far as Raushenberg telling Berrigan he imitates Ashbery, I just don't see it, sounds like a painter being snotty to a poet for no particular reason? -Grunge, yes this word did not spring up into the world in 1988, but the mass of society used that word to talk about music, Mudhoney etc.. By calling Berrigan grunge I can see what anyone means, but.. that would be like calling a poet now a hippy.. they are all just labels, grunge being a label I never liked. To use it to describe dirt or the like is fine though, Berrigan was gritty.. --I also think the post about class is right on, Berrigan has working class roots, you can say this doesn't matter, but it does, you can say it didn't matter when Bethlehem Steel or Trico moved out of Buffalo, but it did, it affected the psyche of almost the whole city. Ted I think was really down to earth, one of the first poets to openly declare poetry as his FULL time profession-he would say, a doctor doesn't work another job does s/he? so I am a full time poet! Ron, I also understand why it is hard to write about someone you were close with, to go against their wishes, but in the long run, it would be nice to have more on Berrigan. So can anyone tell me where I can get Berrigan's last poems in Arshile: A Magazine of the Arts, and a copy of "The Sonnets" in case that other lead doesn't work out o yeah , and I know a student up here in Albany who knows Edmund, Berrigan's son and says he is a great poet, so look out for him!

↑ Index

267. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Magazine Concepts Continued

Thu 5 Mar 1998

Standard's poet is excellent.

It is indeed true: publishing, undertaken in whatever format and thru whatever kind of effort (one editor doing most of the work, a collective, a small group of friends) is a very giving and productive activity. If you publish people whose work you like, and which is therefore like your own, well that in large part is "your job" as an editor. (It can be fun also to include something very unlike yourself, rather like Berrigan admiring Wilbur....I have done this some and am in the process of doing more of it; but I consider a Berrigan/Wilbur involvement to be optional: I don't think Standard in Rhizome or Lowther in Syntactics (or the folks at Raddle Moon) are interested in as broad a canvas as I consider Misc. Proj. to be. I started it to fulfill a different and more eclectic mission, thus its greater emphasis on poetics and polemics than some, despite its being in the first instance a venue for poetry.)

Anyway, Standard is absolutely right: those blanket submitters who hit everyone everywhere all the time, are just as "self-promoting" as we who publish and edit.

And as Standard says, you can do a lot with relatively small resources; you can really have an impact on people who care about poetry. You can really have an impact on the poetry scene. Hereby, a brief list of honor of the low-budget mags that have been very helpful to me, and were crucial in encouraging Misc. Proj. (with their editors)

Compound Eye (Ange Mlinko)
Situation (Mark Wallace)
Lower Limit Speech (Aldon Nielsen)

Let a thousand mags exfoliate...

Mark P.
@lanta

↑ Index

268. Billy Little slaves of dionysus
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

i see you are choosing to ignore my last wherein i'd reputedly said i'd rather have no bio than the one you show and i made some other feeble attempt today nobody knows billy little, they say he lives in Nowhere, B.C., he could be writing poems in your name next week. Combat Plagiarism is a project he's currently working on wherein he writes the best poem he could possibly write that day and signs your name or Gerry Gilbert's name(he certainly deserves a page at the EPC), or Pierre Joris or Lily Brik or Duncan McNaughton or David McFadden. and everytime i see a used first edition by ted berrigan i sign the inside flyleaf "with the deepest regard ted good pills," ted berrigan and jack micheline were both slaves of dionysos, at one point ted berrigan could have said i never met a pill i didn't like, the gay circles were also into the pharmaceuticals, tho i can't say about ohara ted died of too many coca colas, he was a true new yorker, ted was more of an innovator ohara more traditional from the french frank laconic ted frantic frank was champagney like pasternak ted more electric cool aid like mayakofski he saw through things and enacted the simple conclusions, in reference to Charles Olson's death he said, 90% of the people who die of cancer deserve it Ted took Zukofsky's translation methods to the street the ohara affinities arise in the bebop not the beat if you're writing about the influences on poetry especially of Berrigan's generation you have to factor in the drugs, especially acid and mescaline, i'd like to hear Creeley chime in on this aspect, Ted certainly helped Bob see the light on numerous occasions, in more ways than poetry. Or anselm are you lurking? The collage element of the sonnets seemed a form of translation few practice from english to english an ur hypertext a wink ideally you'd try the drug to help you understand the poem more fully. with lowell likewise you'd have to talk about or take tranquilizers and lots of aspirin, that'd be a great anthology, poets of the headache, aspirin defines an era like heroin defines the next and bennies and coffee and amyl nitrate and cherry coke if you can't take the drug don't do the crime John Weiners are you lurking,shooting email niterate, is somebody doing your page right this minute, you could tell us lots about all of this, Olson said if he were starting over he'd rather write like Weiners or Baraka or Sanders. Weiners said he hoped to be the Baraka of the gay struggle. I surely hope someone is mining those fragile memories of johns even if he gets it wrong its only a wrong among a plethora of wrongs and his wrong will have more verve more frisson than two or three rites, me i'm one of those students of Duncan's who would rather err on the side of beauty.. Dodie Bellamy has taught me everything i've forgotten.

↑ Index

269. TBeck131
Re: Ronald Johnson 1935-1998
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I am saddened by the news of Ronald Johnson's death.
His long poem RADI OS (Sand Dollar, 1977) is a volume I've returned to with renewed pleasure for the last twenty years. RADI OS was composed by making erasures in a 1892 edition of PARADISE LOST--an extraordinary example of found art.
In addition to a large and moving body of literary work Mr. Johnson was an accomplished chef and wrote several wonderful cookbooks.
He'll be missed.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

270. Douglas
Re: Ronald Johnson 1935-1998
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I am also shocked and saddened by this news.
Sun & Moon is publishing a complete version of RADI OS/THE OUTTAKES. It will be published in early 1999.

Ron was a truly great poet, as his ARK reveals.

Douglas Messerli
Sun & Moon Press

TBeck131 wrote:
>
> I am saddened by the news of Ronald Johnson's death.
> His long poem RADI OS (Sand Dollar, 1977) is a volume I've returned to

with > renewed pleasure for the last twenty years. RADI OS was composed by making > erasures in a 1892 edition of PARADISE LOST--an extraordinary example of found > art.
> In addition to a large and moving body of literary work Mr. Johnson was an > accomplished chef and wrote several wonderful cookbooks.
> He'll be missed.
>
> Tom Beckett

↑ Index

271. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

All the wonderful scoop on Ted Berrigan -- I had not thought he would be ignored by critics or readers, and he doesn't seem to be ignored by the people on this list. In terms of class, ethnicity, etc., has anyone examined the Tulsa tie between Ted, Padgett, Joe Brainard, Dick Gallup, others? I'm not sure Tulsa has ever produced so many remarkable writers. I'm not sure it's so bad to called a disciple of Frank O'Hara (or of Ted Berrigan), whatever "disciple" means. No matter what, it makes for a great first line from a Berrigan poem:

I'm a disciple of Frank O'Hara

Anyone care to write the next line?

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

272. David Gitin
Philip Whalen/Clark Coolidge
Thu 5 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

    charset="iso-8859-1"

Whalen and Coolidge read together at San Francisco State in May 1976, on = which occasion, Philip compared Clark to Hemingway.=20

    charset="iso-8859-1"

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD W3 HTML//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>

<META content=3Dtext/html;charset=3Diso-8859-1 =
http-equiv=3DContent-Type>
<META content=3D'"MSHTML 4.71.1712.3"' name=3DGENERATOR>
</HEAD>
<BODY bgColor=3D#ffffff>
<DIV><FONT color=3D#000000 size=3D2>Whalen and Coolidge read together at = San=20
Francisco State in May 1976, on which occasion, Philip compared Clark to =

Hemingway. </FONT></DIV></BODY></HTML>

↑ Index

273. Pierre Joris
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Hilton Manfred Obenzinger wrote:

> ... In terms of class, ethnicity, etc., has > anyone examined the Tulsa tie between Ted, Padgett, Joe Brainard, Dick Gallup, others? I'm not sure Tulsa has ever produced so many remarkable writers.

Some years ago, introducing Kenneth Koch at a Paris reading, I suggested that the "New York School" should (retroactively) be renamed the "Tulsa" school -- KK nearly lost his usual sunny composure. & on the left wall of my study, slightly back of the chair I'm sitting on, hangs a 5 by 3 painting of Ted done by Mary Beach.

Another poeta Ted was forever studying was Auden. Sometime in the middle seventies I asked him why he still bothered with that mannered Brit cocktail-chatter & he said something like: "Becaus he's got the biggest bag of cheap tricks — and as a poet you need to know all the cheap tricks of the trade."

Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]

http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

274. k. lederer
Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Berrigan has two wonderful sons who write--Eddie and Anselm--

Eddie (who lives in SF) has two terrific chapbooks out on Idiom Press: 1143 Hearst Ave., Berkeley, CA 94702 (Idiom also has chapbooks out by Renee Gladman, Greg Biglieri--and has some forthcoming by myself, Lauren Gudath, and many other great emerging writers--). The books are lovely to look at and to read--

Eddie has also had work recently in Arshile, ZYZZYVA, Explosive, and Gas.... He does his own journal, LOG-- Anselm has a chapbook out on Gas (I think it's sold out now...), and new work in Situation, Explosive, No Trees, BOOGLIT Mag., Mass Ave., and elsewhere. He currently lives in NYC--

He will have a full-length collection coming out this year on Rod Smith's EDGE Books--it is wonderful, and you should all take a look--

***

I have always found these two writers interesting in terms of the writing practices of their father (and mother, Alice Notley)--they allow one to think of poetry as a true profession--in the noble sense--one that can be handed down--one that can be passed along through the generations--

Eddie and Alice wrote about a million collaborations when Eddie was little. I don't want to embarass Eddie, but they are so great to read--very refreshing--

Eddie was 8 or 9 when he wrote these with Alice:

POEM

Ignominy, obscurity, and serenity hurl a pearl at the floor:

"No presuppositions of fame after death"
"No legal fees"

In these parts we smoke our dinner
"No pepper games"

we eat with our feet
and we walk with our hands

THERE'S A SIGN ON THE THIRD FLOOR THAT SAYS SO

we groom ourselves like cats and we end our poems like lives

THOUGHT BALLOON

The cloud is green
My head is empty
It is spring
Inside this penny
I meet Jenny
And kid.

THE BEAST OF EACH

One night in America
I hugged my beast
The beast of each
The beast was bleached
And beautiful as a scarecrow
But scared though.

I love him plenty
Though we have no money
He's my beast
The beast of each

***

I love these.....

At two recent Explosive benefit readings I've had the pleasure of witnessing readings by Brecht Gander (of Forrest and CD Wright--wonderful, all the work-shoppers were very jealous...), and Danny Morice (of Dave Morice--incredible, terrific poem)--

I think that this sort of activity is on some level the best thing that can come out of poetry--

All best,
Katy

↑ Index

275. Maria Damon
Re: Early Warning: Mackey in mpls
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

and Mackey will be in Mpls april 2-5. he will be reading from his prose and poetry april 2, at 3:15, in Room 207A Lind Hall, University of MN, mpls (eastbank), 207 church st se. free and open to the public, and it'd be great to see any of you there...md

At 12:23 PM -0800 3/4/98, MAXINE CHERNOFF wrote:
>In addition to Mackey's readings at UIC, he is also reading in the series >Paul Hoover curates at Columbia College. His reading there will take >place at 3 p.m. on April 16 in the Ferguson Theater, 600 South Michigan, >where he will be introduced by Art Lange, his collaborator on the Coffee >House jazz anthology, Moment's Notice. The reading is free and open to >the public.
>
>Maxine Chernoff
>
>On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, David Zauhar wrote:
>
>> The distinguished poet, novelist and critic Nathaniel Mackey will visit UIC >> on April 15 and 16. Here is his schedule
>>
>> "A Reading of Poetry and Prose."
>> April 15th, 3:00, African-American Cultural Center, 2nd Floor, Adams Hall
>>
>> "On the Influence of H.D. on My Poetry."
>> April 16th, 11:00 a.m., Humanities Institute, Basement, Stevenson Hall
>>
>> Both events are free and open to the public.
>>
>> the University of Illinois at Chicago is not the easiest place to find >> your way around, and these aren't the most convenient of times for those >> who lead non-academic lives, but it'll be worth it if you can make it.
>> Mark your calander now.

>>
>> Nathaniel Mackey's visit to UIC is sponsored and supported by the >> Department of African-American Studies, the African-American Cultural >> Center, the Institute for the Humanities, the Department of English, the >> Office of Access and Equity, the Department of Performing Arts, and the >> Student Activities Funding Committee.
>>
>> For further information contact [redacted] or...
>>
>> James C. Hall
>> Asst. Professor of African-American Studies and English
>> University of Illinois at Chicago
>> 601 S. Morgan St.
>> Chicago, IL 60607-7112
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>>

↑ Index

276. Michael Magee
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Tulsa's a fascinating little artistic secret - Oklahoma in general really - isn't Cornel West a Tulsan? and if you include Okla City you get Ralph Ellison and avant-garde trumpeter Don Cherry. -m.

According to Hilton Manfred Obenzinger: >
> All the wonderful scoop on Ted Berrigan -- I had not thought he would be > ignored by critics or readers, and he doesn't seem to be ignored by the > people on this list. In terms of class, ethnicity, etc., has > anyone examined the Tulsa tie between Ted, Padgett, Joe Brainard, Dick > Gallup, others? I'm not sure Tulsa has ever produced so many remarkable > writers. I'm not sure it's so bad to called a disciple of Frank O'Hara > (or of Ted Berrigan), whatever "disciple" means. No matter what, it > makes for a great first line from a Berrigan poem:
>
> I'm a disciple of Frank O'Hara
>
> Anyone care to write the next line?
>

> Hilton Obenzinger
>

↑ Index

277. Joseph Conte
Re: Bruce Campbell
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Does anyone have an e-mail address for Bruce Campbell at U. Cal. Riverside? Re: Jackson Mac Low and Clark Coolidge.

Please backchannel me if you do.

Thanks.

Joseph Conte

--

Joseph M. Conte [redacted] x1009
Associate Professor and FAX: [redacted]
Director of Graduate Studies
Department of English
306 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260-4610 http://writing.upenn.edu/~jconte/

↑ Index

278. Jordan Davis
yet again, my poem!
Thu 5 Mar 1998

SCOUTew! my poem mentions Anselm and Eddie (who I now hear goes by Ed) as well! Send me your address -- or better still, if you don't mind reading on a screen, allow me to e-mail my poem to you.

As you all must be noticing, I'm feeling exhibitionistic today. It must be the beginning of poetry season here in our city! By gum, it is!

Tom Raworth and Drew Gardner will be saving the youth of America tonight at Poetry City in the offices of Teachers & Writers, 5 Union Sq W NYC. 7 pm. Come! Come by!

And if you can't come by, say hi,
Jordan

↑ Index

279. David Zauhar
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

> I'm a disciple of Frank O'Hara
>
> Anyone care to write the next line?
> ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^ ^^^^

I think you already did.

DZ

> Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

280. Elizabeth Hatmaker
ron padgett
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Has anyone read Ron Padgett's book _Creative Reading: what it is, how to do it, and why_ put out by NCTE? It's being ordered at my library and I wondered about what it was like.

Elizabeth Hatmaker

↑ Index

281. Pierre Joris
Re: Ronald Johnson 1935-1998
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Much saddened by the news of Ronald Johnson's death. Besides reading in RA DIOS tonight, I will also celebrate the man by cooking something from his THE AMERICAN TABLE --probably the HAM AND EGGPLANT PILAU MADAME BEGUE, &, if there's time, make his incredible Kentucky Pie. My copy of The American Table is falling to pieces -- when will someone reprint this one & his Southwestern Cooking Old & New.

Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
— La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
— Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

282. Henry Gould
Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling
Thu 5 Mar 1998

On Thu, 5 Mar 1998 12:15:20 EST ScoutEW said:
>-Grunge, yes this word did not spring up into the world in 1988, but the mass >of society used that word to talk about music, Mudhoney etc.. By calling >Berrigan grunge I can see what anyone means, but.. that would be like calling >a poet now a hippy.. they are all just labels, grunge being a label I never >liked. To use it to describe dirt or the like is fine though, Berrigan was >gritty..

Go ahead and set yourself up as Berrigan's Defender. I never labelled anybody. I said Berrigan combined art and life, formality & informality, by letting the GRUNGE of street life seep into his work, the gritty, GRUNGY street-life of Providence, Worcester, New York, Tulsa, wherever it may be found (it's even in Minneapolis). I don't think Berrigan would disagree, myself. I find GRUNGY to be a fine evocative word for the GRUNGE I am talking about.

- Henry Gould, "byt" poet

↑ Index

283. Steven Clay
Ted Berrigan/NYPL: Secret Location show
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Several new Berrigan books have been published recently or are in the works:

Situations has published "Great Stories of the Chair" a group of poems first printed in Angel Hair in the late sixties and not collected elsewhere. Available from St. Mark's Poetry Project, SPD and Bridge Street Books (for $6) perhaps elsewhere-Out-of-print at the publisher-grab while you can.

Alice Notley has just written me that Penguin has contracted to do a new edition of "The Sonnets"-no publication date announced as of yet. [That makes four editions: "C", Grove, United Artists & Penguin.]

Granary Books published "In the Nam What Can Happen" by Ted Berrigan and George Schneeman-this is a simulation of an artists' book made in collaboration by these two about 1968. Beautifully produced in an edition of 70 (50 for sale at $500).

Granary also has in the works "Ted Berrigan: An Annotated Checklist" by Aaron Fischer. This book chronicles Ted's life in print and is much more than a mere checklist as it is filled with accounts of publishing the books. Also included are 27 never-seen-before Berrigan/Schneeman collaborations from the late sixties (some in full color) and a fine introduction "Publishing Ted" by Lewis Warsh. This book is nearly ready to go to the printer. I'll make a formal announcement to the list upon publication in a couple of months. It'll be priced around $35, give or take.

Regarding the show at the NYPL: A Secret Location on the Lower East Side: Adventures in Writing 1960-1980-indeed Mr. Berrigan would seem to be the presiding spirit looking out, as he does from the painting by Mr. Schneeman, over a vast sea of poetry books. We are currently finishing work on a 350 pp fully illustrated book documenting the era as well as the show-co-published by Granary and the NYPL and due out around June 1, 98. I'll announce upon publication.

I'd be happy to back channel a several paragraph description of the exhibit to anyone interested. Contact me (Dear Chris, helloŠ)

Steve Clay
[redacted]

↑ Index

284. David Zauhar
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

> Another poeta Ted was forever studying was Auden. Sometime in the middle seventies I asked him why he still bothered with that mannered Brit cocktail-chatter & he said something like: "Becaus he's got the biggest bag of cheap tricks — and as a poet you need to know all the cheap tricks of the trade."
>
> Pierre

I always liked the generosity in Berrigan's writing, (though there's a memoir/ letter in, I think, _Nice to See You_ in which TB drives up to Chicago from Iowa City to read w/ (correct me if I'm wrong, someone) Ann Sexton. He didn't seem to care much for her or her work in this letter. My favorite example comes from the book Joel Lewis edited, _On the Level Everyday_, where Berrigan is talking about how poets support themselves, and he says of Wallace Stevens (not exactly working class, not exactly bohemian) that "It's bad karma to work at a job fulltime and not go at it as seriously as you go at being a poet. Wallace Stevens, incidently, was not just an insurance man; he was vice-president of the Hartford Casualty Company. I mean there's no sense fooling around; if you're going to do something, you might as well be good at it" (57). re: Auden: there's a great story in Sanders' _Tales of Beatnik Glory_ about a young low-ereastsider who practices forging Auden's autograph, then goes to palm off an "autograph copy to a dealer." The great twist occurs when ol' Wystan himself walks in. The story is written w/ a degree of fondness that makes me think that Berrigan wasn't alone among the new yorkers who dug (aspects of) Auden.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

285. Matthew Kirschenbaum
Re: web publication, etc.
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Apropos. Does anyone know anything more about this? Matt

> Humanist Discussion Group, Vol. 11, No. 621.
> Centre for Computing in the Humanities, King's College London
> <http://www.princeton.edu/~mccarty/humanist/>
> <http://www.kcl.ac.uk/humanities/cch/humanist/>
> From: David Green <[redacted]>
>
> Leading Art Site Suspended
> <http://www.nytimes.com/library/tech/98/03/cyber/articles/03adaweb.html>
>
> One of the leading websites for the creation and distribution of Web-specific art works, adaWeb, has been closed down by its new corporate owners according to a report by Matthew Mirapaul in today's New York Times' CyberTimes.
>
> Source: New York Times (CyberTimes)
> <http://www.nytimes.com/library/tech/98/03/cyber/articles/03adaweb.html>
> Author: Matthew Mirapaul
> Issue: Arts
> Description: The Web site which is one of the most premier destinations for original Web-based art, ada'web, is being suspended. Co-founder, Benjamin

> Weil, said the reason was that ada'web's publisher, Digital City Inc., had canceled the Web site's financing. Skeptics had anticipate its closing since the selling of ada'web's founding company, WP Studio, to Digital City, owned primarily by America Online and the Tribune Company, 13 months ago. They were unable to "reconcile the site's high-minded mission with the mass-market orientation of other sites, and given the often- challenging nature of the material, commercial sponsorship was not a likely option. Weil agreed, saying: "For one year, it's been very difficult. We've been trying to find ways for our corporate parent to understand that there was value in this for them. It seemed like the message didn't really get through. And then we tried to go non-profit to remain online, but we realized there was very little funding available." Weil is now seeking a permanent home for ada'web's archives so pre-published artwork can remain accessible.
>
> *********
> (c)Benton Foundation, 1998. Redistribution of this email publication -- both internally and externally -- is encouraged if it includes this message.
>
> The CPP News-Clipping Service is posted to the Benton e-mail lists Monday through Friday. The Headlines are highlights of news articles summarized by staff at the Benton Foundation. They describe articles of interest to the work of the Foundation -- primarily those covering long term trends and developments in communications, technology, journalism, public service media, regulation and philanthropy. While the summaries are factually accurate, their often informal tone does not represent the tone of the original articles.
>
> ----------
> To join the Benton Communications Policy Mailing List, email the following command in the body of a message to [redacted]:
> subscribe benton-compolicy YourFirstName YourLastName
>
> If at any time you would like to unsubscribe from the Benton Communications Policy Mailing List, email the following command in the body of a message to [redacted]:
> signoff benton-compolicy
>
> If you have any problems with the listserv or any questions about the postings, please direct them to [redacted].

↑ Index

286. Andrew D Epstein
Re: Berrigan
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Some thoughts on the Berrigan thread, which I'm enjoying:

The question of whether Berrigan is or isn't Frank O'Hara's "disciple" (or anyone else's) is ultimately less interesting than how, why, and where he resembles, echoes, and uses his predecessors. What does he do with what he learns from or gains from O'Hara, Ashbery, Whalen, etc? How and why do their styles and even their words appear in or spur his own poems?

What got me thinking about this specifically were a couple of interesting echoes/allusions in the poem Katy Lederer quoted yesterday, I USED TO BE BUT NOW I AM.

When Berrigan begins the poem:
  I used to be inexorable,
  But now I am elusive.
it reminded me of O'Hara speaking of what he wants he wants from his poetry in the early poem "Poetry":
  All this I desire. To deepen you by my quickness ... as if you would never leave me and were the inexorable product of my own time.
How is Berrigan's allusion to O'Hara's poem functioning here? Is he revealing an earlier desire to be O'Hara-like, perhaps, that has now given way to wanting to be more "elusive"?

When Berrigan goes on:
  I used to be the future of America,
  But now I am America.
it's hard not to think of Ginsberg's "America": "it occurs to me that I am America."

Also, when Berrigan writes:
  I used to be part of the solution, if not all of it,
  But now I am not that person.
He again seems to deliberately echo O'Hara, particularly the last line of "How to Get There":

"and we drift into the clear sky enthralled by our disappointment never to be alone again never to be loved sailing through space: didn't I have you once for my self?
                West Side?
        for a couple of hours, but I am not that person"

Again, Berrigan picks up a line from O'Hara, puts it in a new context, builds on it, etc. The whole poem's structure -- "I used to be ... now I am ..." -- suggests that perhaps the poem is ABOUT negotiating with earlier influences, earlier selves ("I used to be but now .. I am not that person"). Paying attention to the echoes can open the poem in interesting ways ..

So rather than dismissing comments about Berrigan's debt to O'Hara as wholly unfair, maybe we, as readers or TB, need to think about HOW he is reading and using O'Hara, Ashbery, Whalen, Ginsberg, Creeley (didn't the poem "Words For Love" come from the titles of the two Creeley books on Berrigan's desk?), specifically. It seems to me like he engages in an ongoing _conversation_ with poets like O'Hara that is really fascinating. (And the post that connected his fondness for allusion and appropriation to literal theft was a really neat idea worth considering ...)

I also wanted to strongly second the recording of "Red Shift" on that Exact Change Yearbook CD. I've never heard a poem read aloud in a more powerful or moving way than that one. (Hint: I checked the Exact Change book out of the library and taped the CD and returned it).

"I am 43. When will I die? I will never die. I will live To be 110 & I will never go away, & you will never escape from me who am always & only a ghost, despite this frame...." ("Red Shift")

Andrew Epstein

↑ Index

287. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling
Thu 5 Mar 1998

ScoutEW wrote:
>
> All the Berrigan posts have been great, just a few things..
> I would be anxious to know at what park Olson and Berrigan talked at in 1963?
> I grew up in Buffalo and would like to know!
>
So would I! Betcha Delaware; they could have walked there from the University pretty easily [as a freshman or sophomore then, I don't remember]. Where did you live in Bflo? I grew up in So. Buffalo, near Cazenovia [another Olmstead baby] & the small Seneca Indian Park [where Red Jacket lay before his move to Forest Lawn, adjacent to Delaware Park]. Creeley would probably know. Let us all know if you find out!

Best,
Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

288. Maria Damon
Re: Musical Palindrome
Thu 5 Mar 1998

At 11:17 AM +0000 3/5/98, Miekal And wrote:
>from Literature Nation
>
>
>debut brag sore tip radar nod. dad dotes mile van. edit non word team >nor page look. cuckoo beer tred. no, who read set in bard's evil >kook lives drab nites dear. oh wonder tree book. cuckoo leg apron >meat. drown on tide. navel, Im set odd, add on radar pit. eros garb >tubed.

why you impertinent snivel: this is definitively NOT POETRY!!!

↑ Index

289. laura and jeff
Re: NPR
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

if anyone taped this please backchannel how much to get a copy. jeff.

>we missed this... see if anyone taped it?
>
>> Radio Alert!
>>
>> As I type at 3:30 PM west coast time, NPR and All Things Considered is doing
>> a piece on the NY Public Library's show of the Poetry Project's mimeoed >> magazines. Berrigan mentioned; Ron Padgett is speaking now . . . go to the >> left of your dial and turn it on!
>>
>
>..
>
>Christopher Alexander [redacted]
>Marriott Library Instruction [redacted] (lv. msg.)
>
---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

290. laura and jeff
Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling
Thu 5 Mar 1998

> Go ahead and set yourself up as Berrigan's Defender. I never labelled anybody. I said Berrigan combined art and life, formality & informality, by letting the GRUNGE of street life seep into his work, the gritty, GRUNGY street-life of Providence, Worcester, New York, Tulsa, wherever it may be found (it's even in Minneapolis). I don't think Berrigan would disagree, myself. I find GRUNGY to be a fine evocative word for the GRUNGE I am talking about.

butit's easy to loose people who may not know better (and perhaps some that do) in the conotations of the word. for me: i've been involved with the punk rock scene most of my life. for years grunge punk bands where the butt of many of jokes, and never taken seriously (this all before they got huge). so: when someone uses the word grunge, my first reaction is to think of a person who is trying to hard to be something -- contriving, and in need of a bath. i realize that this is a stereotype, but it is my first reaction to the word, and thus my thoughts will be tainted by this initial reaction. and so on... jeff.
---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

291. laura and jeff
i'm gonna
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

be far away for two weeks, and am gonna turn off the list for that time.
anyone who wants to continue to discuss, etc. please do backchannel, and i'll pick it up when i get back around.
have fun!
jeff.
---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

292. Christopher W. Alexander
call for additions
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

let me reiterate this, so's to add some news... the new version of n/formation is more or less up; archived iss. need a bit of work as does the press section (sorry to folks involved), but the node which pertains to the following call for additions is whole and available under "available nodes" @ the front door.

to those who've already sent work, sorry for the delay in replying – redoing the site has taken up most of the past 2 days.

--

<http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce>

topic for the most recent node of n/formation will be (since y'all are thinkin about it) . . .

PUBLIC-/A(C)TIONS

public / interaction / public action / publication

interst'd in poems, pomes, prose, essays especially essays, hypertext, vizpo – meditations and mediatations on this ardently convoluted topic

love and kisses,
(inappropriate display)

Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

293. laura and jeff
Re: web publication, etc.
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

good point. but: there have always been poets limited for one reason or another, who have still managed to get published. and poetry (obviously) is not always verbal-- doesn't have to be / need to be. and while i'm sure it's nice to have the ease of web publishing, there are other ways, and these ways should not be forgotten. as far as "egoless" poetry... poetry will always have a writer. even if the poet tries to write without ego, it is still s/he trying to be egoless.

and perhaps the ego is bigger in it's attempt ((i.e. i feel (the person) jackson mac low more strongly in his unintentional texts, than in his intentional. meaning: the ego it takes to think up "unintentional" leaves it's mark)). i think a lot of people are misunderstanding my meaning: i am not "anti-web". i can just see that a world without the written or spoken word is a sad one. and i have seen a lot of people disappear into their computers in the last few years. they have forsaken tactile, vistual, audible, etc. world in favor of the stagnation of the same form, the computer. i understand the computer is a valuable tool (here i am, aren't i), but people are allowing it to become their life. and i think: when the experience of life disappears, so shall art. this upsets me. jeff.

>One of the facets of the web that I like is that writing will increasingly be >able to exist, be, without attachment to a human being, i.e., no "name," no personable voice characteristics, no attractive or charismatic person attached--in short, an increase in anonymously generated language objects whose sole value will be >what is on the page. One among many reasons I would like to see more of this someday is the thought of writers who have been limited in mobility (thus >couldn't do a lot of readings to get people to look seriously at their writing), or limited in oral motor faculties (thus >>couldn't get people to hear the inflection of their "voices"), or limited by a host of social and material advantages >>(thus couldn't buy attention to their writing), or limited in psychological lust for attention (thus couldn't or wouldn't >>want more from their writing than that it exist).
>>
>>laura and jeff wrote:
>>
>>> >>i've been following the thread relating to this with interest...
>>> >>
>>> >>methinks it comes down to this:
>>> >>the web is good for wide opportunity and collective action. but the fact is:
>>> >>we are living in a world that is quickly alienating itself from itself via >>> >>any source it can. the web is adding to this is two major ways:
>>> >> 1) it gives the guise of communication, but with out any >>> >>kind of physical relationship between those
>>> >>"communicating" with >>> >> each other. so no true communication can take >>> >place due >>> >> to a lack of viceral stimulation between the people >>> >>communicating (no body lang, eye contact, hearing a >>> >>voice, etc).

>>> >
>>> >i miss the same things when i >>> >read a letter from a friend or a rejection slip from a journal / so i'm >>> >afraid the tired point has to be made that if you subsitute the word
"book"
>>> >or "newspaper" or "personal letter" for "web" in your statement above,
the >>> >language of your critique sounds suddenly antiquated and reactionary -- if >>> >no "true communication" can take place without "viceral stimulation between >>> >the people communicating", then this pretty much damns the whole written >>> >record, doesn't it?, and not just the web, unless you mean something more >>> >specific by "communication" / not to sound flip, but we're communicating >>> >here, aren't we?
>>>
>>> are we? i don't know you. i don't know what you look like, sound like, etc.
>>> i don't know how you live your life. all i have are words floating on a >>> screen. i can make assumptions, and even learn and somewhat communicate. but >>> to me you can only be a collection of electronic words. i assume that >>> someone put them together, but i don't know who it is. so the annalogy of a >>> letter from a friend is false. i know my friends. i spend as much time with >>> them as possible. and when i get a letter: i hold it, read it. sometimes it >>> smells like them or their home. with email: i have electic lights burning my >>> eyes. i hold a mouse and keyboard. granted: getting this email from you is >>> better than nothing, but it's important to realize that people are
>>> "settling" for this over going out and talking to people. i know scores of >>> people who just sit in their houses all day on the puter. it's safe. they >>> don't have to try to be anything. but at the same time they can't fully >>> express themselves, and thus get to know anyone really. one fella i know, >>> who has a phd in philosophy (and thus no job), used to be one of my favorite >>> people to talk to. he was so animated and interesting. we'd drink tea and go

>>> all night about various subjects. but now he has no time for "talking". he >>> doesn't come out. it's easier to sorta talk to a hundred people, than to >>> really talk to one.
>>> okay: i don't know about anyone else: but when i'm reading (anything from >>> whitman to herodotus) i will at times catch myself reading out loud and >>> pacing around the room (both of which horribly annoy my wife). i feel >>> stimulated. i get excited and further annoy laura by reading passages to her
>>> and try to get her to talk about it while she's studying or painting. this >>> excitement is inflammed when i go to a reading, or am just being read to by >>> a friend. on the puter i get bored after a while. and yet i sit here because
>>> at times i forget about other things. the puter becomes my world. and this >>> world burns my eyes, leaves me alone in a room, etc. yet here i am.
>>> all of written history is not damned by this. every book is different in >>> basic physicality, as well as in content. every book leads to a new book:
>>> others by that author, biographies, books by contemporaries, sources, etc.
>>> this leads to deeper understanding of those we can no longer go and see.
>>> (this all leads to discussion, human interaction, in most cases.) and those >>> we can still see we should demand to see, as the last year has proved,
>>> before it's too late.
>>> it'd be one thing if the puter was just a tool to get in contact with >>> people, but it is increasingly becoming a substitute for physical contact.
>>> and i loose coherence a little easier.
>>> jeff.
>>>
>>>

>>>
>>> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
>>> there are only
>>> eyes in all heads
>>> to be looked out of
>>>
>>> -charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)
>>
>
---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

294. david bromige
after Hilton "Ted" Oberzinger
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

if it means free pills & priceless verse

↑ Index

295. acgold01
Theresa Hak Kyung Cha 'n Berrigan 'n Consc. Objectors
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Does anyone know where one (me) can get hold of any of Cha's work in film / video? I'm "doing" Dictee in my (borrowing Maria's great term for now) "Weird Books by Women" course, but never have seen any of her visual work except in reproduced stills or the visual / text piece in Premonitions. I'd also be interested to hear--b/c or on the list, either way--whether there was any interaction between Cha and Bay Area langpo's while she was living out there. Ron, or anyone?

In my role as resident reference-nerd: a bit of recent academic attention to Berrigan can be found in Libbie Rifkin's essay "Worrying about Making It': Ted Berrigan's Social Poetics," Contemporary Literature 38.4 (winter 1997): 640-672. Part of her Cornell diss., which also has some real good stuff on Olson and Creeley.

Joel Kuszai--backchannel me and I might be able to give you a lead re the conscientious objectors movement (in WWII, anyway, and Lowell, Everson, and Stafford's relation to it).

Ace conference down home here in Louavull this past weekend: much fruitful provocation stirred up by Cary Nelson, Eavan Boland somewhere between serious historical engagement and marketable nostalgia depending on whose p-o-v you listen to, Harryette Mullen serving up a spectacular run through the whole of Muse and Drudge, non-stop. Some of you were here; the rest of you should have been. Well, next year in Jerusalem.

Back to lurkerdom,

Alan

↑ Index

296. Rachel Loden
NPR piece on "A Secret Location on the Lower East Side"
Thu 5 Mar 1998

You can hear this piece online at

http://www.npr.org/programs/atc/archives/1998/980304.atc.html

if you have a RealAudio player (available for download on the site). Click on "mimeo revolution." There's a tiny clip of Berrigan reading --also comment from Padgett, Clay, Waldman.

Rachel Loden

laura and jeff wrote:
>
> if anyone taped this please backchannel how much to get a copy.
> jeff.
>
> >we missed this... see if anyone taped it?
> >
> >> Radio Alert!
> >>
> >> As I type at 3:30 PM west coast time, NPR and All Things Considered is doing
> >> a piece on the NY Public Library's show of the Poetry Project's mimeoed > >> magazines. Berrigan mentioned; Ron Padgett is speaking now . . . go to the > >> left of your dial and turn it on!
> >>
> >
> >..
> >
> >Christopher Alexander [redacted]
> >Marriott Library Instruction [redacted] (lv. msg.)
> >

↑ Index

297. Charles Bernstein
Susan Bee's Show
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I am happy to announce a solo show by

SUSAN BEE

Post-Americana: New Paintings

from March 10 to March 28
Opening Reception on Saturday, March 14, 6-8pm

A.I.R. Gallery
40 Wooster Street
New York, NY 10013
[redacted]

Gallery Hours: Tuesday - Saturday 11am-6pm

links to Susan's works include:

http://www.airnyc.org/member/artist.cfm?id=41

http://igor.lis.wisc.edu/english/bernstein/probgirl.html

http://www.granarybooks.com/artists/bee/bee1.html
(& keep clickiing on the images)

↑ Index

298. Poetics List
Welcome Message
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Rev. 2-1-98

(This message is sent out to all new and renewing subscribers and it is sent out to the list at the beginning of every month)

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List

2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein
([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier
([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons

New obstacles for exchange arise

Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently almost 600 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. <color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>We also encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below). (THIS MEANS YOU).

</color>

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge. But we ask that you subscribe with your real name and we reserve the right to request additional information, including address and phone number. All subscription information you supply will remain confidential.

message, with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your

name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific

EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

or try:

review POETICS by name

review POETICS by country

which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

299. Pierre Joris
Re: Berrigan/Wilbur/Auden
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Rachel Loden wrote:

> .. Have never understood why it's okay and > playful and camp to learn from (and use) BAD movies, BAD music, etc., > but not (what some people may think is) BAD poetry. Why be so > straitlaced? Shouldn't a poet be more like a magpie?
>
> Rachel Loden

Oh, sure Rachel, it's just that I never had a taste for Auden, there's a fair amount of other BAD poetry I don't mind or in fact enjoy using, though finally I rather steal lines form ted than from doubleyou aitch.
Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
— La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
— Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

300. Rachel Loden
Berrigan/Wilbur/Auden
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Schuchat Simon wrote:

> He told me how much > he liked a particular poem by Richard Wilbur.

I think this must be the strangest thing I've read on this list since Ron Silliman said he had enjoyed the cinematic _English Patient_.

But (as a contrarian) I love this stuff--even though I don't think I've ever liked a Richard Wilbur poem. I wish Ted Berrigan were here so I could ask him _which_ poem. Wouldn't that be a lot more fun than endlessly toeing some rigid aesthetic line?

Pierre Joris writes:

> Another poeta Ted was forever studying was Auden. Sometime in the middle seventies I asked him why he still bothered with that mannered Brit cocktail-chatter & he said something like: "Becaus he's got the biggest bag of cheap tricks — and as a poet you need to know all the cheap tricks of the trade."

This makes perfect sense to me. Have never understood why it's okay and playful and camp to learn from (and use) BAD movies, BAD music, etc., but not (what some people may think is) BAD poetry. Why be so straitlaced? Shouldn't a poet be more like a magpie?

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

301. Henry Gould

Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling

Thu 5 Mar 1998

On Thu, 5 Mar 1998 18:29:25 -0500 laura and jeff said:
>
>butit's easy to loose people who may not know better (and perhaps some that >do) in the conotations of the word. for me: i've been involved with the punk >rock scene most of my life. for years grunge punk bands where the butt of >many of jokes, and never taken seriously (this all before they got huge).
>so: when someone uses the word grunge, my first reaction is to think of a >person who is trying to hard to be something -- contriving, and in need of a >bath.

This is a good point. The whole dippy argument is a clash of generations. It's good for you to learn that "grungy" is a real word to some people who know & care little about the alternative rock scene important to their kids' generation. It's good for me to learn the limitations of my own historical perspective. But I also believe that, with regard to the example you give, EVERYONE is deeply involved in grunge. Because we are ALL TRYING HARD TO BE SOMETHING and we all NEED A BATH. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

302. Shemurph

Re: A Secret Location on the Lower East Side

Thu 5 Mar 1998

The NPR story came on as I was driving along on a biz trip, and it was quite a pleasure to hear it. Validating. I was trying to picture the fragile mimeo- ed objects, and felt like hopping a plane. Maybe some way before July when the exhibit closes!

↑ Index

303. Steve Shoemaker
Re: reznikoff's girder take 3
Thu 5 Mar 1998

I'm coming in on this "girder" exchange late, and I happen to be very tired at the moment, so this is just to sort of hold my place for a while because listmemory is so short. I think you--David--are wrong about the Rez image being in bad faith. But it wld be difficult to explain why, & i just can't go into it right now. We'd have to start with the fact, tho, that the line that is being quoted is not what what Rez wrote, but what Oppen remembered. To note the difference doesn't do much to explicate my case, since what Rez wrote was "rubbish," not "rubble." But we shld at least start from the right place. More later. Steve

At 04:31 PM 3/4/98 -0800, you wrote:
>This in response to something in one of Joel Kuszai's recent posts.-- It >strikes me as an oddly undemocratic vision for Reznikoff--or Oppen, who >approved of this line--to (as Joel so well says) "put a halo" around one >piece of the rubble, consigning the rest ("huddled masses") to the >garbage-scow of history. Consider the reader. S/he identifies with the >girder ("I am a girder") and so what does that make the rest of us? Not a >brick here and a bike wheel there and a single mitt here but--mere >rubble.("rabble," as Joel puns). Or s/he identifies with the rubble--so who >is that jerk who thinks he's a girder and we others are undifferentiated >trash?
>
>"I saw the girder
> first was still itself
> and then brick by brick
> and then the bike wheel,
> then the dead cat, each
> halo'd with identity"
>
>
>but perhaps american poetry no matter the marxism of its writer cannot >transcend the cult of rugged individual ("resistant as a girder") and still >be received as fine. I certainly don't care for what I just made up and put >in lines. But I do care that this reznikoff girder-poem is in bad faith.
>David
>
>

↑ Index

304. Rachel Loden
Re: Berrigan/Wilbur/Auden
Thu 5 Mar 1998

Pierre Joris wrote:

> there's a fair > amount of other BAD poetry I don't mind or in fact enjoy using

But this is fascinating (to me, anyway). Pierre, don't hold out on us! WHICH bad poetry?

Yours for guilty pleasures,

Rachel

↑ Index

305. William Marsh
Re: web publication, etc.
Thu 5 Mar 1998

---

dear jeff agree with just about everything you write here / sure, lots lost in e-communication / but obviously also lots gained / i'm more connected, definitely, now than i was a couple years ago before taking the e-plunge / and several real-virtual relationships have lead to (or at least hastened the development of, assuming we probably would've met down the line) several virtual-real ones, not to mention sustaining, extending initial how-d-do's at conferences etc. which otherwise, probably, would have fizzled / so yeah, i both know and know of more people now with the help of email -- pleased to meet ya / and gosh, i think we're still communicating (somewhat communicating?) here, even tho you can't smell my aftershave / to you i can only be "a collection of electronic words"? / i've been less on worse days

bill

At 01:20 AM 3/5/98 -0500, you wrote: but we're communicating >>here, aren't we?
>
>are we? i don't know you. i don't know what you look like, sound like, etc.
>i don't know how you live your life. all i have are words floating on a >screen. i can make assumptions, and even learn and somewhat communicate. but
>to me you can only be a collection of electronic words. i assume that >someone put them together, but i don't know who it is. so the annalogy of a >letter from a friend is false. i know my friends. i spend as much time with >them as possible. and when i get a letter: i hold it, read it. sometimes it >smells like them or their home. with email: i have electic lights burning my >eyes. i hold a mouse and keyboard. granted: getting this email from you is >better than nothing, but it's important to realize that people are

>"settling" for this over going out and talking to people. i know scores of >people who just sit in their houses all day on the puter. it's safe. they >don't have to try to be anything. but at the same time they can't fully >express themselves, and thus get to know anyone really. one fella i know, >who has a phd in philosophy (and thus no job), used to be one of my favorite
>people to talk to. he was so animated and interesting. we'd drink tea and go
>all night about various subjects. but now he has no time for "talking". he >doesn't come out. it's easier to sorta talk to a hundred people, than to >really talk to one.
>okay: i don't know about anyone else: but when i'm reading (anything from >whitman to herodotus) i will at times catch myself reading out loud and >pacing around the room (both of which horribly annoy my wife). i feel >stimulated. i get excited and further annoy laura by reading passages to her
>and try to get her to talk about it while she's studying or painting. this >excitement is inflammed when i go to a reading, or am just being read to by >a friend. on the puter i get bored after a while. and yet i sit here because >at times i forget about other things. the puter becomes my world. and this >world burns my eyes, leaves me alone in a room, etc. yet here i am.
>all of written history is not damned by this. every book is different in >basic physicality, as well as in content. every book leads to a new book:
>others by that author, biographies, books by contemporaries, sources, etc.
>this leads to deeper understanding of those we can no longer go and see.
>(this all leads to discussion, human interaction, in most cases.) and those
>we can still see we should demand to see, as the last year has proved,
>before it's too late.
>it'd be one thing if the puter was just a tool to get in contact with >people, but it is increasingly becoming a substitute for physical contact.
>and i loose coherence a little easier.
>jeff.
>
>----------

>
> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
> there are only
> eyes in all heads
> to be looked out of

>
> -charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)
>
>

- -
William Marsh
PaperBrainPress
Voice & Range Community Arts
National University
[redacted]
http://bmarsh.dtai.com
snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

306. Simon/Piombino
March Readings at Segue @ Here
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Announcing the Segue @ Here Reading series for March, Saturdays at 3 P.M.,Here Center for Independent Art, 145 Sixth Avenue Between Spring and Broome, New York, N.Y, $5 donation- March 7: Beth Joselow, Serge Gavronsky; March 14: Corinne Robins,Fiona Templeton; March 21: Don Byrd, Madeline Gins; March 28: Chris Reiner,Jackson Mac Low. I'll be on hand to introduce the readers- if you do come, and you feel like it, please say hi to me!

Nick Piombino

↑ Index

307. Simon/Piombino
Ted Berrigan
Fri 6 Mar 1998

I've enjoyed reading posts about Ted Berrigan by Erik, Simon Schuchat, Jordan Davis, Henry Gould and others. In 1967 I attended Ted's workshop at the Poetry Project. Some years later, as he did with many others,Ted gave me some very much appreciated support,including recommending some poems of mine to Simon Schuchat and Eileen Myles who were publishing mimeo magazines in the early to middle 70's.(By the way, Ted confided in me that he was particularly impressed by Mr. Schuchat's" brilliance" and writing talents).I had heard Ted read a few times before attending his workshop and had been deeply impressed and truly excited by his poetry and his manner of reading. Ted's readings had a special combination of humor, sincerity, affection, spontaneity and sheer poetic intensity and beauty which have been rarely equalled in contemporary poetry. Ted put great emphasis on the importance of giving poetry readings in the career of a poet. In his own way, he was a great actor. As a teacher, a reader, and a mentor he gave of himself completely. Hardly a week or two goes by in my life when I do not think about him. I go back to his work constantly and keep discovering new things. His work and his person were unforgettably inspiring.- Something about his person and his approach to poetry made a great many people excited about poetry in an unusual way, perhaps because of his way of sharing his special passion and devotion to the art, perhaps because of his way of emanating and encouraging more joy and pleasure in writing and living. It is possible that later in life he paid a price for adamantly refusing to take himself, writing- or anything- seriously to the point of eliminating any possible generosity, warmth, joy and spontaneity. Perhaps he was an example of a "60's casualty", something Charles Bernstein long ago pointed out as a cautionary tale, though I don't like to think about this too much. I think I agree with Henry Gould in what he seemed to be saying about Berrigan's combining of the quotidian with high art. Berrigan's irrepressible passion for life made all passions seem more possible and more necessary. I cannot look at an exclamation point without thinking of him!

Here are a few lines from a poem by Carter Ratcliff published in 1969 in "The World Anthology" edited by Anne Waldman:

THINGS TO DO IN TED BERRIGAN'S WORKSHOP

Arrive at eight-thirty Arrive early when the table is strewn with banners all strewn with table-shaped stars....
Notice who was there all the time
Read things on the wall
Dismiss this project immediately
Concentrate on the poem being read....
Say that a a poem is great because the poet speaks of important things in his own voice....
Disagree with anything anybody else says,especially what Charles, Ted,
Nick and Scott say
Agree with everything anybody says....
Be jealous of everybody
Approve of this sentiment and its intensity....

*

Hope to hear more from others about Ted Berrigan.

Nick Piombino

↑ Index

308. joel lewis
berrigan
Fri 6 Mar 1998

from my conversations with alice notley, their appears to be little left in manuscripts of ted's for publication--although if some ambitious grad students would haunt collections w/ mineo books, they'd probably find plenty of uncollected ted. geoff young was intersted in publishing waiting for chris --but i understand that the manuscript is missing parts.

yes, ted loved richard wilbur & lot of folks that this list would consider cornballs. he loved lowell's "To Speak of the Woe that is in marriage" and once recited Joyce Kilmer (& not Trees) when someone put down one of jersey's bards. i guess i learned to be open to all sorts of stuff -- ted dug the langyage poets & i even remeber a manuscript homasge to bruce andrew's Film Noir that seems to have never seen print

i wish there was some official issue of ted on tape -- there is a complete raeing ofthe sonnets at langton street & tons of stuff at the po project. what still comes thru in the poems is the intense devotion to "poetry" not craft or poetics. like a rock musician playing an out of the way gig -- he did one of my poorly paying gigs in jersey, as it gave him a chance to test out new material he would be reading in nyc the next week w/ old pal padgett.

also some more attention must be paid to great writers like mauren ownen, bob rosenthal, john godfrey, yuki hartman, tony towle, jim brodey, bill berkson, ted greenwald and others of that era and where is regina beck? --last heard: a lubavitch chasid

joel lewis

↑ Index

309. Karen and Trevor
Re: Magazine Concepts Continued
Fri 6 Mar 1998

SSSCHAEFER wrote:

> Also, I think people who want to be in magazines should also pay for them. Think of it as union dues. One cannot join a community by sitting alone in a room.
>
> Standard

Thank you for saying this! I have had the opportunity this year to be editor-in-chief for Fourteen Hills: The SFSU Review, a literary magazine funded by San Francisco State University. I would like to acknowledge the funding openly: without it the magazine would be dead. But we get about 500 submissions an issue. If every submitter sent $5 for a sample copy, the magazine would get $2500--almost the cost of printing--easily ensuring the survival. (And they would also understand the caliber of work we publish.) Now of course I understand that writers cannot afford to send $5 with every submission--but I have certainly become more aware of the plight of magazines and I'm left asking:

why do writers want magazines to publish their work (support them) if they aren't willing to support the magazine?

Or maybe what you meant that the writers published in the magazine should pay...self-promotion...publish themselves...as an editor I don't consider work with a check attached any more or less than one without, and I wouldn't want any other magazine to do the same with me.

Ready for the fire,
Karen McKevitt

↑ Index

310. Louis Cabri hole chapbooks
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Awhile ago Tom Beckett mentioned Alan Davies's chapbook from hole books, and I think he wondered whether it was still available. There are five copies of Alan's chapbook available. Each one has been hand-made; cover is from a linocut.

Here's the list of available chapbooks from hole:

Alan Davies, Sei Shonagon $5
Clint Burnham, Pandemonium $5
Deanna Ferguson, ddilemma $5

You can email Rob Manery at [redacted] if interested.

Forthcoming this summer, chapbooks from:

Jackson Mac Low
Jeff Derksen

To reserve your copy, please email me.

All best,
l

PS Of course we predated the band.

↑ Index

311. Mark Roberts
(Fwd) AWOL: New Books From Five Island Press
Fri 6 Mar 1998

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Fri, 6 Mar 1998 18:01:59 +1100
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (Australian Writing On Line)
Subject: AWOL: New Books From Five Island Press

New titles from Five Island Press availabe through the AWOl Virtual Bookshop. To order complete the order form at the end of this email.

LES WICKS
NITTY GRITTY
ISBN 0 86418 457 3
Loosely assembled under the days of the week this book chronicles a universal journey towards a hint of weekend peace. It's a vivid, inclusive dance celebrating the lives of a range of characters from school kids to parents, young graduates to carnival workers.
RRP $12.95

John Millett
Dragonfly Tie
ISBN 1 875604 54 4
The last collection of poetry from the author of the award winning View From the Turret.
RRP $12.95

Kevin Brophy
Seeing Things
ISBN 0 86418 449 2
Brophy's poems...outstare the icy blasts of inner suburban Melbourne's cold, or evidence of the world's madness...they have wit and memorability
-Thomas Shapcott
RRP $12.95

Charlotte Clutterbuck
Soundings
ISBN 0 86418 453 0
Childhood, migration, parenting, aging and loss: Clutterbucks embraces these big, silent issues with openness and honesty. Her slowly gathered work also reflects deep religious faith and is shot through with moments of simple beauty. - Peter Boyle

RRP $12.95

Coral Hull
Broken land: 5 Days in Bre 1995
ISBN 0 86418 450 6
Country towns - those least known places in our country - have their life and lore mapped for them in Coral Hull's Bre. It is a desolation filled with voices of patent authenticity, with generations of jokes and put downs, epiphanies, hatred, stars, cattle and secret knowledge. Coral is passionately and restlessly at home here. She has never written better. - Judith Rodriguez.
RRP $12.95

Marcella Polain
Dumbstruck
ISBN 1 875604 52 9
Marcella Polain's first collection is one that matters. it is informed by a deeply compassionate feminism, a marvelously dynamic imagination, a courage to move beyond ready-made ideological mappings to a sheer verbal inventiveness which, for me, makes practically every poem delivery a shiver of utter recognition. - Marion Campbell

Ludwika Amber
Our Territory
English/Polish Edition
ISBN 0 86418 448 4
Australian poetry needs work of this stature, from a poet who sets about defining traces of Eden which remain in the world, by naming them with such loving skill..... - Bruce Dawe
RRP $12.95

Postage and handling $2.00 for two books $5 for three to six books. If you order all seven books then there is no charge for postage.

International orders please email us your order and we well check postage costs.

complete this order form and mail it with your checque to:
AWOL
PO Box 333
Concord NSW 2137

Note: International orders please email your order and we will calculate costs.

****

Name:.....

Address:.....

email: .....

Order

Quantity

__ LES WICKS NITTY GRITTY @ Aust$12.95 each _____

__ John Millett Dragonfly Tie @ Aust$12.95 each ____

__ Kevin Brophy Seeing Things @ Aust$12.95 each ____

__ Charlotte Clutterbuck Soundings @ Aust$12.95 each ____

__ Coral Hull Broken land: 5 Days in Bre 1995 @ Aust$12.95 each ____

__ Marcella Polain Dumbstruck @ Aust$12.95 each _____

__ Ludwika Amber Our Territory @ Aust$12.95 each _____

Postage
Postage and handling $2.00 for two books $5 for three to six books. If you order all seven books then there is no charge for postage. _____

TOTAL _____

****

Australian Writing On Line
Internet services, publicity, distribution http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
[redacted]
PO Box 333
Concord NSW 2137
Phone 015063970
Fax 61 2 97472802

Mark Roberts SIS website: http://www.usyd.edu.au/su/sis/
SIS Team
Building G05 Maze Crescent University of Sydney
Phone 61 2 93517710
Mobile 015063970
Fax 61 2 93517711

                Albert Einstein: "Only two things are infinite, the universe and human stupidity, and I'm not sure about the former. ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** ** **

↑ Index

312. George Bowering
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Fri 6 Mar 1998

I think I hear people griping that Ted Berrigan is not on the silly-bus of university English courses.

Dont sweat it.

You dont very often learn about what's been happening on course lists. You do what we all do--read what the profs got us to read, and then spend MORE time reading the good stuff. People who want to know what's happened will read Berrigan, and Hollo, and Padgett. Padgett is a terrific poet, and if I were to say that someone was the best in something i would maybe nominate him as the best poet in the USA, but I dont do such things. Suffice it to say that Ron Padgett is the David McFadden of the USA.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

313. R. Gancie
Mark Wallace in FlushPoint
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Wallace's piece, Definitions in Process, etc. etc.in FlushPoint magazine is much ado about nothing; a transparent attempt to get some names out there. He sets up Language poetry as a straw dog and then instead of pouring the gasoline and lighting the match he snuggles up to it. One is left with the distinct knowledge that there is no unread pile of hard disks and no post-pepsi generation of scribblers that can be called Post-Language. Besides what a weak branch to graft onto. Where do we go from here but toward the light? "[P]ostlanguage poetry as a distinct moment in the history of poetry."?! Give me a break. The Language poets put the critical cart before the imaginative horse. Mark wants to go them one better. Horsemeat anyone?

As regards my comment in Moyer's piece concerning Messerli/Perloff interview in Aerial: I was demonstrating that Doug readily acquiesced to a return to the nostalgic and narrative impulse of his poem. He seemed to love the psychological moment of creation (and by extension himself) more than the langpo formula. I simply noted that this rush to solpisism was difficult to distinguish from the example from Robert Hass I sighted. In this instance it revealed to this reader that Langpo might be simply one step from the confessional and a contrived step at that. Does the silly honesty of a Hass drive us to pedantic excess and denial? And Furthermore re Poem in Regress---anybody who objects to Herman Kahn, (e.g. On Thermonuclear War, Hudson Institute, RAND Corp.), being profiled in Hell doesn't know his/her Herman Kahn.-Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

314. rsillima
Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

To Henry Gould's question below,

One reason why I think there's been so little critical discussion to date of >Ted Berrigan is that he was such a strong personality and would have so >obviously disapproved of such, that people who actually knew the man feel

Didn't the Language Poets disapprove of him? That might be another reason.
>
I think that quite the opposite is the case. When Ted came to the Bay Area, he would sometimes stay with Alan Bernheimer or I believe Kit Robinson. Tom Mandel & I had Ted read at our series at the Grand Piano -- with George Stanley. It drew 110 people as I recall (I'm always counting audiences), divided almost equally between those whom had never heard of Ted and those whom had never heard of George.

Actually, an event (or interlinkage of events) related to that evening may suggest what filters down to someone like Henry, perceptive, well-read, but at a distance at least from the SF scene of the 70s, as a sense of "disapproval" or whatever.

After the reading at the Piano, there were not one but two parties, one for George in from BC held nearby on the other side of the Panhandle, and a second one for Ted which, as I remember, was somewhere South of Market (a few miles away). As co-host I spent some time at each. At the one for Ted's several of his young ephebes, particularly of the bent then known as Actualists, were telling him how great his reading was (both were fabulous that night) by way of telling him how much better he was than George. That sort of contestatory tone was constant with those guys. Nolan, Gray, Kratz, Nisbet were just a few of the folks standing around.

But it was Ted who shut that nonsense down instantly. "George Stanley's a great poet. Didn't you hear that reading!" he responded. None of them replied although I've always thought that the correct answer to that must have been, no, they hadn't. Listening was never what they were about.

I've never figured out where that disjunction between those generations came from, why Ted would listen and hear and these other folks wouldn't and somehow presumed (wrongly, as it proved here) that he had given them permission for that behavior.

I think that somewhere disapproval for that behavior by those other guys got (gets?) translated into some sense that Ted is still being blamed, wrongly, for it. But actually all the so-called langpos I know always were fond and close readers of Ted Berrigan. And still are.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

315. Thomas Bell
Re: "I take the present" M.P.Follett
Fri 6 Mar 1998

May be way of track but came across someone who's history has parallels with Whalen's. By chance I came across M. P. Follett's _Creative Experience_ He seems to have been a popular social critic early in the century. I have never seen his name and haven't found any lines of thought leading to him or coming from him. He appears to be one of those byways of thought that are in danger of disappearing completely from print, cultural ruts, and soon even libraries. We have a fairly well-read group here. Anyone ever heard of him? The quote below is curiously prescient of current computer/chaos theory discourse. tom bell

"You can tear it [the unity of experience] to pieces if ypu will and find subject and object, stimulus and response. or - you can refuse to: you can claim the right to see it as a rational interplay of forces, as the functioning of a self-creating coherence. Consciousness is the living interplay of a self-generating activity."

↑ Index

316. Deborah Thomas
(no subject)
Fri 6 Mar 1998

SEGUE @ HERE: FEBRUARY, MARCH, APRIL, & MAY READINGS

HERE CENTER FOR INDEPENDENT ART
145 SIXTH AVENUE BETWEEN SPRING AND BROOME

SATURDAY AFTERNOON READINGS BEGIN AT 3:00 PM
$5 DONATION AT THE DOOR

Coordinators for this series are Dan Machlin, Nick Piombino, Andrew Levy, Melanie Neilson, and Deirdre Kovac. Continuing support for this series is provided by the Segue Foundation. Funding is made possible by support from the Literature Program of the New York Stare Council on the Arts. Help support HERE--come early and lunch stay late for drinks!

Segue @ Here: February & March Readings

FEB 7: RACHEL BLAU DUPLESSIS, JEN HOFER Rachel Blau DuPlessis has written criticism [The Pink Guitar: Writing as Feminist Practice; Writing Beyond the Ending: Narrative Strategies of 20th Century Women Writers; H.D.: The Career of That Struggle] and poetry [Tahuiet Rosa; Drafts 3-14; and Drafts 15-XXX; The Fold]. She also edited The Selected Letters of George Oppen. Jen Hofer is a poet and translator from the San Francisco Bay Area. She is currently working on an anthology of contemporary avant-garde poetry by Mexican women. Her work can be found in recent or forthcoming issues of Arshile, Explosive, Mandorla, Mirage #4/Period(ical), Proliferation, and Torque.

FEB 14: LESLIE SCALAPINO, YUNTE HUANG Leslie Scalapino is the author of 12 books of poetry, fiction, essays, and plays, including Way (North Point Press), which received numerous awards. Her recent hooks include Defoe (Sun & Moon) and The Front Matter, Dead Souls (Wesleyan). Talisman House has recently released a selected works, Green & Black. Yunte Huang was born in China and is currently a doctoral candidate at The Poetics Program at SUNY Buffalo. His poetry has appeared in End-of-Century, Prairie Schooner, and Tinfish. He is the Chinese translator of Ezra Pound's Pisan Cantos and co-translator of Selected Language Poems, and his Shi: A Radical Reading of Chinese Poetry was just published by Roof Books.

FEB 21: MEl-MEl BERSSENBRUGGE, MIKE KELLEHER Mei-mei Berssenbrugge is the author of The Heat Bird (Burning Deck) and Random Possession (Ishmael Reed Books), both American Book Award recipients, as well as many other titles. She is also the author of several collaborations with artists, Hiddenness (Whitney Museum) and Sphericity (Kelsey Street), both with Richard Tuttle, and the just released Endocrinology (Kelsey Street) with Kiki Smith. Mike

Kelleher has worked as a Catholic missionary in Ecuador, NYC high school teacher, and archivist for The Segue Foundation. He is Managing Director of the NYSCA Independent Publishers Initiative and a Curator of Readings and Residencies at the Just Buffalo Literary Center. He is currently working towards his masters in the Poetics Program at SUNY Buffalo.

FEB 25: ANSELM HOLLO, GARRETT KALLEBERG A native of Helsinki, Finland, Anselrn Hollo has lived in the U.S. since 1967, teaching poetics and translation at the Naropa Institute and many other colleges and universities. He is the author of 35 books and chapbooks of poetry, most recently, Near Miss Haiku and West is Left on the Map. He has translated Klee, Brecht, and Genet, among others, and has received an NEA fellowship. Garrett Kalleberg's poems have appeared in Sulphur, First Intensity, American Letters & Commentary, and elsewhere. His Limbic Odes was published by Heart Hammer Books in 1997. He is editor of a new journal, The Transcendental Fiend, premiering in Feb1998.

MARCH 7: BETH JOSELOW, SERGE GAVRONSKY Beth Joselow teaches at the Corcoran School of Art, Washington DC., and is the author of 5 books of poetry. Serge Gavronsky is the author of L'Obscur d'ici, a book of poems to be published in Paris by Phillipe Millereau. He is included in the forthcoming anthology A Poem A Day (Sun and Moon).

MARCH 14: CORINNE ROBINS, FIONA TEMPLETON Corinne Robins, art critic and poet, is the author of The Pluralist Era (Harper Collins). She has published two books of poems from Pratt Press, Art In The Seventh Power and Facing It. Fiona Templeton, internationally renowned performance artist and poet, wrote Cells of Release (Roof) onsite at Eastern State Penitentiary, Philadelphia, April-May, 1995.

MARCH 21: DON BYRD, MADELINE GINS Don Byrd is the author of five books, including The Great Dime Store Centennial and The Poetics of the Common Knowledge. He teaches at SUNY (Albany). Madeline Gins--probably not a Martian. Her latest books are Helen Keller or Arakawa (Burning Books) and the catalogue of her collaboration with Arakawa, Reversible Destiny (Abrams), exhibited at the Guggenheim Museum June-August 1997.

MARCH 25: CHRIS REINER, JACKSON MAC LOW Chris Reiner edits Witz: A Journal of Contemporary Poetics. He is author of A Coward's Libretto (Texture Press) and Ogling Anchor, forthcoming from Avec Books. Jackson Mac Low's 75th birthday festschrift is the first issue of a new journal, Crayon. Sun and Moon published his Barnesbook in 1996.

APRIL 4: ANSELM BERRIGAN, TONYA FOSTER Anselm Berrigan is the author of two chapbooks: On the Premises (Gas Editions) and They Beat Me Over The Head With A Sock (Edge Books). He lives in Brooklyn and teaches English at Brooklyn College. Tonya Foster is a poet who hails from New Orleans. She makes little wax male figures when she's at bars.

APRIL 11: ALAN DAVIES, DAVID CAMERON Alan Davies is the author of Active 24 Hours, Signage (essays), Name, Candor, Rave, as well as other volumes of poetry and criticism. David Cameron is at work an a complete false translation of Baudelaire's Les Fleurs du Mal, and he is editor of Cocodrilo.

APRIL 15: JULIE PATTON, CHRIS MANN Julie Patton is a visual artist, performer, and poet. Her publications include Teething on Type (Rodent Press), limited edition letter press books, and 2 CD's with her performance work are available from Knitting Factory and Audio Literature. According to Chris Mann, who hails from Melbourne, Australia, "Language is when you correct the grammar of your oppressor."

APRIL 25: ELIZABETH WALDNER, MELISSA RAGONA Elizabeth Waldner is the author two chapbooks, Memo (Lo)mento (Texture Press) and Bus Stop (Meow Press); Homing Devices is forthcoming from 0 Books. Melissa Ragona is currently writing a script for ITVS (Independent Television) and has a book of poetry forthcoming with REM Press--Cambridge, England.

MAY 2: BRUCE ANDREWS, DAN FARRELL Bruce Andrews's latest collection of poetry, Designated Heartbeat, is forthcoming from Sun & Moon. Also forthcoming is Aerial magazine's collection on his work. Dan Farrell is the author of Thimking of You and ape . He is a foundless member of KSW, a foundling editor of Boo magazine, and currently a member of Brooklyn, NY.

MAY 9: HEATHER FULLER, HEATHER RAMSDELL Heather Fuller is the author of perhaps this is a rescue fantasy (Edge Books, 1997). She is literary editor of The Washington Review and coordinator of the "In Your Ear, poetry performance series in D.C. Heather Ramsdell's first book of poetry, Lost Wax, is due out from University of Illinois Press in spring of 1998. She lives tin) writes in Brooklyn.

MAY 16: DEIRDRE KOVAC, ROD SMITH Deirdre Kovac is associate editor of Big Allis. Her poetry and criticism have appeared in Torque, Object, Denver Quarterly, and elsewhere. Rod Smith is the author of In Memory of My Theories, Protective Immediacy, and The Boy Poems. He edits Aerial and publishes Edge Books in Washington, D.C.

MAY 23: JEAN DAY, ANDREW LEVY Jean Day's latest book, The Literal World, is just out from Atelos. Her previous books of poetry include The I and the You, A Young Recruit, Flat Birds, and Linear C. She lives in Berkeley, California. Andrew Levy's books include Elephant Surveillance to Thought (Meow, 1998) and Continuous Discontinuous (Potes & Poets, 1997). "Andrew Levy is a Buddha" (Rod Smith).

MAY 30: No READING (SEE YOU IN THE FALL)

THE SEGUE FOUNDATION
303 East 8th Street
New York, NY 10009

↑ Index

317. Douglas
Re: Susan Bee's Show
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Congratulations Susan!!!!

Charles Bernstein wrote:
>
> I am happy to announce a solo show by
>
> SUSAN BEE
>
> Post-Americana: New Paintings
>
> from March 10 to March 28
> Opening Reception on Saturday, March 14, 6-8pm
>
> A.I.R. Gallery
> 40 Wooster Street
> New York, NY 10013
> [redacted]
>
> Gallery Hours: Tuesday - Saturday 11am-6pm
>
> links to Susan's works include:
>
> http://www.airnyc.org/member/artist.cfm?id=41
>
> http://igor.lis.wisc.edu/english/bernstein/probgirl.html
>
> http://www.granarybooks.com/artists/bee/bee1.html
> (& keep clickiing on the images)

↑ Index

318. David Zauhar
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998 [redacted] wrote:

> Actually, an event (or interlinkage of events) related to that evening may suggest what filters down to someone like Henry, perceptive, well-read, but at a distance at least from the SF scene of the 70s, as a sense of "disapproval" or whatever.

Being at a distance from those events myself (I think I had a little league baseball game in Galesburg, Illinois, the night Berrigan & George Stanley read in SF), I can still put a finger on one source for the impression of disapproval. Specifically, I remember a line in Tom Clark's memoir about Berrigan in which he says something to the effect that "Ted was given a hard time by the language poets" during his last (or one of his last swings through San Francisco). Not bringing this up so we can debate Tom Clark's ethics again, nor to dispute Ron Silliman's account of events: merely to point out where I (for one) got the impression that some of the poets associated w/ L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E were not big fans of Berrigan.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

319. Maria Damon
Re: Susan Bee's Show
Fri 6 Mar 1998

---

you go girl

At 9:33 PM -0500 3/5/98, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>I am happy to announce a solo show by
>
>SUSAN BEE
>
>Post-Americana: New Paintings
>
>from March 10 to March 28
>Opening Reception on Saturday, March 14, 6-8pm
>
>A.I.R. Gallery
>40 Wooster Street
>New York, NY 10013
>[redacted]

>
>Gallery Hours: Tuesday - Saturday 11am-6pm
>
>links to Susan's works include:
>
>http://www.airnyc.org/member/artist.cfm?id=41
>
>http://igor.lis.wisc.edu/english/bernstein/probgirl.html
>
>http://www.granarybooks.com/artists/bee/bee1.html
>(& keep clickiing on the images)

↑ Index

320. Maria Damon

Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha 'n Berrigan 'n Consc. Objectors

Fri 6 Mar 1998

---

hi alan, uc berkeley's art museum has the Cha archives, it might be worth a trip out there to research it and set up viewing sessions etc. i've never seen any of her video stuff except in stills myself; there're a coupla mentions and a photo in Lucy Lippard's book Mixed Blessings. i teach cha in that course; some students adore it; some "can't follow the story." do check out walter lew's exquisite Excerpts from Dikte for Dictee (or something like that) a "critical collage" responding to cha's book.

At 8:47 PM -0500 3/5/98, [redacted] wrote:
>Does anyone know where one (me) can get hold of any of Cha's work in >film / video? I'm "doing" Dictee in my (borrowing Maria's great term >for now) "Weird Books by Women" course, but never have seen any of her >visual work except in reproduced stills or the visual / text piece in >Premonitions. I'd also be interested to hear--b/c or on the list, >either way--whether there was any interaction between Cha and Bay Area >langpo's while she was living out there. Ron, or anyone?
>
>In my role as resident reference-nerd: a bit of recent academic >attention to Berrigan can be found in Libbie Rifkin's essay "Worrying >about Making It': Ted Berrigan's Social Poetics," Contemporary >Literature 38.4 (winter 1997): 640-672. Part of her Cornell diss., which >also has some real good stuff on Olson and Creeley.
>
>Joel Kuszai--backchannel me and I might be able to give you a lead re >the conscientious objectors movement (in WWII, anyway, and Lowell, >Everson, and Stafford's relation to it).

>
>Ace conference down home here in Louavull this past weekend: much >fruitful provocation stirred up by Cary Nelson, Eavan Boland somewhere >between serious historical engagement and marketable nostalgia depending >on whose p-o-v you listen to, Harryette Mullen serving up a spectacular >run through the whole of Muse and Drudge, non-stop. Some of you were >here; the rest of you should have been. Well, next year in Jerusalem.
>
>Back to lurkerdom,
>
>Alan

↑ Index

321. Henry Gould
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998 09:41:08 -0600 David Zauhar said:
>
>Being at a distance from those events myself (I think I had a little >league baseball game in Galesburg, Illinois, the night Berrigan & George >Stanley read in SF), I can still put a finger on one source for the >impression of disapproval. Specifically, I remember a line in Tom Clark's >memoir about Berrigan in which he says something to the effect that "Ted >was given a hard time by the language poets" during his last (or one of >his last swings through San Francisco). Not bringing this up so we can >debate Tom Clark's ethics again, nor to dispute Ron Silliman's account of >events: merely to point out where I (for one) got the impression that some >of the poets associated w/ L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E were not big fans of Berrigan.

Here's the full extent of Tom Clark's remarks on this issue in the memoir Dave mentions [LATE RETURNS]: "The final year of his life, though, I was in contact with him only by mail and telephone. I heard from friends about a visit of his to San Francisco, where he had been given a hard time by some language-poets."

That's it - not much to go on there. Clark is probably referring to Berrigan's residency in 1981 at 80 Langton St for a few days. This residency garners a couple mentions in Anne Waldman's memoir-anthology NICE TO SEE YOU. There Stephen Rodefer has this in his entry: "The year before last, at a Langton St. residency in SF, how he groused or pricked the vauntingly guarded crowd ("80 Language Street" as Michael Palmer was calling it)." Renny Pritikin's piece in the anthology gives his take on the residency and quotes Berrigan's long statement before his reading, beginning with:

"...at 80 Langton Street I stand in the dock in judgement, condemned, and also to become informed..."

Pritikin attempts to analyze the situation in sort of a detached, "guarded" way, implying that Berrigan was doing some ego-poet grandstanding but not exactly criticizing him for that. He's very reserved, it seems to me, in this little memoir - understandably considering the context (a memorial volume).

These are my sources for the idea that language poets "disapproved" of Berrigan. Along with Dave Zauhar I agree this is a long way from the action; decades, centuries away from the rivalry or whatever - the baiting, the criticizing, the suspicion, the whatever - that went on in those days between various poetry clubs on the coasts. If it went on, even. If there were clubs. It doesn't matter. Berrigan may have been baiting the language poets whom he saw as a threat - unfairly. Or he may actually have been given a chilly, demanding, critical reception. I sure don't know. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

322. Rosemary Ceravolo

Re: npr

Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Wed, 4 Mar 1998, laura and jeff wrote:

> please sign.
> jeff.
>
>
> NPR Funding
> This is being forwarded to several people at once to add their names > to the petition. NPR (National Public Radio) and the arts are facing > major cutbacks in funding.
>
> It won't matter if many people receive the same list as the names are > being managed. This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile > expenditure of $1.12/year of their taxes. A petition follows. If > you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me). If not, > please don't kill it-send it to the email address listed here:
> [redacted] PBS.
>
> In spite of the efforts of each station to > reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government > officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs > is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as not > worthwhile.

> Currently,taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per > person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $0.64 > a year.
> A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of > Americans wish to keep funding for PBS. This percentage of people > polled is surpassed only by national defense and law enforcement as > the programs that are the most valuable for federal funding. Each > year the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 > subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. =
>
> Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each > year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, > which is October 1.
> The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of > support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making > our voices heard.
> Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you > believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the > President of the United States, the Vice President of the United > States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the > action
> to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.
> *If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th, etc. signer of this > petition, please forward a copy to:
> [redacted].
> If that address is inoperative, please send it to:
> [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the > lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help > us to keep these programs alive.
> Thank you.
> ---
> NOTE: It is preferable that you SELECT the entirety of this letter > and > then COPY it into a new outgoing message rather than simply > forwarding it.
> 515) Janet Wygal, Hoboken, NJ
> 516) Gene Holder, Hoboken, NJ
> 517) Cindy E. Brolsma, Brooklyn, NY
> 518) Sheryl Farber, Los Angeles, CA

> 519) P. David Ebersole, Silver Lake, CA
> 520) Todd Hughes, Silver Lake, CA
> 521) Betsy Hamlin, Silver Lake, CA
> 522) Rachel Powell, Santa Monica, CA
> 523) Jill & Michael Vercos, Venice, CA
> 524) Nikolaus Scharpf, Eatonton, GA
> 525) Jan Walleczek, CA
> 526) Joanne Hall, Kalamazoo, MI
> 527) Mary Williams, Kalamazoo, MI
> 518) Mark Nepo, Albany, NY
> 519) Susan McHenry, Albany, NY
> 520) Lillien Waller, Bronx, NY
> 521) Tracye Matthews, Chicago, IL
> 522) Martha Kathleen Zygmun, Chicago, IL
> 523) Catherine Tolley, CHicago, IL
> 524) Julie Pokorny, Chicago, IL
> 525) Daniel Kuruna, Chicago IL
> 526) Christine Kuruna, Selinsgrove PA
> 527)Jesse Fletcher, Lewisburg PA
> 528) Kasey Bohaboy, Palo Alto, CA
> 529) Amy Sabbadini, Santa Barbara, CA
> 530) Roger Sabbadini, San Diego, CA
> 531) Robert Engler, San Diego, CA
> 532) Roberta Gottlieb, San Diego, CA
> 533) Grant Meisenholder, San Diego, CA
> 534) Jennifer Post, Seattle, WA
> 535) Raymond Post, Seattle, WA
> 536) Ginnah Saunders
> 537) Chris Garman, San Diego, CA
> 538) Padmini Srikantiah, San Diego, CA
> 539) Jayashri Srikantiah, San Francisco, CA
> 540) Duane Valz, Oakland, CA
> 541) David Mrozek Rauch, San Francisco, CA
> 542) Betsy Fagin, San Francisco, CA
> 544) John Montesa, Southborough, MA
> 545) Lyn Chamberlin, Lincoln,MA
> 546) Mark Edwards, Lexington, MA
> 547) Dave Vanable, Honeoye Falls, NY
> 548) Susan Scheible, Pittsford, NY
> 549) Kim Krzyzewski, State College, PA
> 550) Beverly Balger, State College, PA
> 551) Deborah Leopold, Riverdale, MD

> 552) Herbert W. Ettel, Washington, DC
> 553) Bernadette H. Odyniec, Washington, DC
>
> Beverly Balger
> Registrar
> Palmer Museum of Art
> The Pennsylvania State University
> University Park, PA 16802
> [redacted]
>
> 554) Cori Parrish, Arlington, VA
> 555) Joshua Cohen, Amherst, MA
> 556) Teresa Sparks, Morgantown, WV
> 557) jeffrey daniel miller, Wooster, OH and Parkersburg, WV
558) Rosemary Ceravolo, Bloomfield, NJ
> ---
>
> There are no hierarchies, no infinite, no such many as mass,
> there are only
> eyes in all heads
> to be looked out of
>
> -charles olson, from "letter 6" (of the maximus poems)
>

↑ Index

323. CharSSmith

Re: NPR piece on "A Secret Location on the Lower East Side"

Fri 6 Mar 1998

---

thanks for turning me on to the NPR RealAudio archives, Rachel.

I had heard about, but missed, an interview with Diane DiPrima on Feb 18. They even let her read two poems!

http://www.npr.org/programs/atc/archives/1998/980218.atc.html

I'm enjoying the Berrigan thread very much. Especially the attentive readings.

& am very very saddened by the news of Ron Johnson's death. Ark on!

all best,
Charles

↑ Index

324. ScoutEW
Re: blah blah blah etc...
Fri 6 Mar 1998

---

yeah i agree, but it seems such a waste that such crap is sold off in graduate classes and "the Sonnets" sits out of print or somewhere in some person's attic. I personally find alot in the "sonnets" that is original, although much criticism of Berrigan's work centers around some idea that he is a "thief"/ how ingenius that he borrows lines from other poets etc./ it is so much more than that- Ted was proving that it is already there already, the words etc, and it was his job and pleasure to put them together into "Sonnets" in the way he felt fit- The repeating of lines"Dear Chris" and "it is 5:15" etc makes a full reading of the Sonnets interesting, instead of looking at it as a reference point to move out and look for the lines he"lifted" from ashbery , i feel it is self- contained, you do not have to know what lines are Padgetts, or Berrigan's or Auden's etc, it just works when you read it aloud. It's funny, I made a request earlier to have someone email me an address to find a copy of the Sonnets I could own (my copy is out from the university library) someone gave me an address on this list and I spoke to the person selling the books, "sorry the sonnets has been sold!" damn! well, she also asked me why this week alone she got 4 requests for the sonnets, must be people on this board trying to snake that copy well its gone! (poets are like crows)I swear anyways if anyone else would like to sell me a copy I would love to buy it please let me know- Oyeah , I read Libbie Rifkin's article in Contemporary Lit on Berrigan. Its good but I don't think she knows the deal behind who "chris" is she should read Ron Padgetts memoir on TEd. about whether or not the "languagepoets" like Berrigan, yeah who cares, I am sure no one group(although i doubt poets associated with "languagepoetry" even want to be part of any group) can speak together, i am sure poets of all traditions can appreciate Berrigan and how he lived the 24 hr life of the poet later gators erik

↑ Index

325. Matthew Stadler
Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha 'n Berrigan 'n Consc. Objectors
Fri 6 Mar 1998

The University Art Museum and Pacific Film Archive in Berkeley has all of Theresa Cha's videos.

↑ Index

326. TBeck131
Berrigan
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Berrigan is a pivotal figure in a number of ways. One of the threads running through 1st generation New York School poetries is a veering off from the "confessionalism" so prevalent at the time. Interesting, then, how TB negotiated quotidian realities in his work. Interesting also what an important precedent __The Sonnets__ constitutes for L=poetry. I would imagine that, on some level, Ron Silliman's long poem __Ketjak__is in debt to the fractured narratives and gorgeous repetition based musics of __The Sonnets__.

At its best, Berrigan's work stands up there with anyone's. At its worst, it tends toward some of the same self-indulgences Bukowski practiced--a kind of formulaic sensationalism that can be fun to read but analogous to the "empty calories" of _____(Fill in the blank with your favorite junk commestible but be aware of the severe penalties which may obtain under current food libel laws.).

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

327. k. lederer
Berrigan/Sonnets
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Dear List

The new edition of the Sonnets that Steve Clay referred to should be in bookstores sometime in March of 2000. The book will be annotated (by Alice Notley), & will also contain six sonnets that haven't appeared in any of the first three editions -- poems Ted decided/instructed to include in any further reprintings after the United Artists edition.

Anselm Berrigan

↑ Index

328. Steven Clay
Spicer/Duncan/Blaser Circle
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Granary Books has prepared a list of books for sale of nearly 300 items containing rare and obscure manuscripts, books, posters, prints, letters etc. by Jack Spicer, Robert Duncan, Robin Blaser, Jess, George Stanley, Harold Dull, Stan Persky among others-and such magazines and presses as "J" "Open Space" "White Rabbit" to name a few. The list is available by email, if interested contact me via back channel and I'll send you a copy. Steve Clay [redacted] Granary Books

↑ Index

329. Jack Foley
Who Hired Bill Moyers to Destroy American Poetry?
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Who Hired Bill Moyers to Destroy American Poetry? asks carlo PARCELLI in the new

FLASHPOINT
(http://webdelsol.com/FLASHPOINT/

"Along the frontier where the arts & politics clash ..."

and joe BRENNAN wonders: "Why Is Parcelli So Angry?"

↑ Index

330. Jacques Debrot
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Then again, this is how Barrett Watten remembers it in "After Ted" (_Aerial 8): "Berrigan's reading of _The Sonnets_ at Langton Street contained some of the greatest verbal moments in American language." And, in fact, wasn't it Watten himself who curated that event?

↑ Index

331. Gary Sullivan
"The world has my flesh on"
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Hi, Erik:

Sorry, I should have back-channeled you the Sonnets ordering info. I'll keep my eyes peeled for another. "Some dim frieze," which opens the book, refers to something Berrigan saw on the Columbia University campus, so in return, Columbia will pick up the tab if you'd like a photocopy of that edition in the meantime. (Or, if any of the "crows" want one.) Just lemme know. I also have the poems from Arshille, if you want a photocopy of that.

Of course, it doesn't finally matter what lines are from where, so long as the poem works. But, it's also interesting, interesting to me anyway, to think of his thievery in the contexts of: (a) his class & the extent to which his aesthetic impulses might be thought of as class-based; and (b) what his prolific re-use of others's lines (including his own) means in terms of how he experienced language: "The world has my flesh on," as Vincent Ferrini once wrote. I think this ties in very nicely with another sub-thread on this list: His openness to a relatively wide spectrum of poetries. That's a specific form of being, a particular way of moving through the world, & through the world of letters.

I'm going to see the woman who runs Pomander Books tonight & so I'll see if I can get the name of the crow who swept off with your _Sonnets_--then you or I can build an altar or whatever & Berrigan's ghost (which truly will never die) will go beat him or her up.

Have fun,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

332. Gary A. Lenhart
Berrigan
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Ted Berrigan taught a class at Naropa on Whalen, Hollo, and James Schuyler. I don't recall what year. But if Ashbery, Denby, and O'Hara were the early inspirations, W/H/S were the enthusiasms when I knew him. Does anyone know if those lectures were taped?

I still have copies of a ten-year old issue of Transfer that includes Joel Lewis's 26-page essay on The Sonnets. They're available for $5 (that includes postage).

Gary Lenhart

↑ Index

333. Gary Sullivan
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Several lines from Watten's MFA thesis, "white yellow" (submitted to the University of Iowa, early seventies):

I guess I want this to be a kind of "Tambourine Life"
but I am not that nervous Irish mother fucker
who put me down
in Iowa City.

Someone who has this text on hand, or more-or-less immediate access to it (Katy?) should quote it verbatim. (The above is nearly word-for-word, but line-breaks are no doubt wrong & there's maybe a missing word or two.)

I always wondered whether his (Watten's) sentiment was genuine, there, or not. Anyone know?

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

On Friday, March 06, 1998 12:57 PM, Jacques Debrot [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Then again, this is how Barrett Watten remembers it in "After Ted" (_Aerial > 8): "Berrigan's reading of _The Sonnets_ at Langton Street contained some of > the greatest verbal moments in American language." And, in fact, wasn't it > Watten himself who curated that event?

↑ Index

334. Safdie Joseph
Re: Ted
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Jacques said:

> Then again, this is how Barrett Watten remembers it in "After Ted" > (_Aerial
> 8): "Berrigan's reading of _The Sonnets_ at Langton Street contained some > of > the greatest verbal moments in American language." And, in fact, wasn't
> it
> Watten himself who curated that event?
>
I'm glad Barry said that; this residency was the only time I ever met Ted "in the flesh," as they perhaps still say, and his reading of _The Sonnets_ on the Friday night WAS truly remarkable -- it took my breath away. Less remarkable was the panel discussion the following night with Barry, Ted, and three others holding forth on "the world" (not the literary magazine, the space we all share). I agree that it makes little sense to argue over who liked who -- one of the great things about Ted, as some have stated in this thread, was that he was so inclusive (catholic with a small c) and could find good in everything. (Rachel, wasn't it Wilbur who wrote "Love brings us to the things of this world" or some such?) I think the best teachers act in that fashion, widening our narrow prejudices, making generosity part of poetics; I remember vividly when Lowell died and I made some cynical crackpot comment and Ed Dorn severely upgraded me -- rightly. Scholars eager to associate Ted with anti-langpo sentiment, however, may also remember a one paragraph dismissive "review" of Ted's on a book by Steven Rodefer that was a source of consternation among some, bemusement among others. But so what, really? What I actually wanted to comment on was Tom Beckett's post about Ted, when he praised him at his best, but at his worst said he was full of "formulaic sensationalism," "fun to read but . . . empty". Now come on. What, really, is BETTER than "fun to read"? What else is there? Why is pleasure ever denigrated? This made me think of O'Hara's "Personalism" when he says (not exactly, don't have it around) "What are we building people up for? For what?" Folks, poetry is not "good for us" -- thank the Gods!

↑ Index

335. henry gould
Re: Ted
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998 10:37:47 -0800 Safdie Joseph said:
>full of "formulaic sensationalism," "fun to read but . . . empty". Now come >on. What, really, is BETTER than "fun to read"? What else is there? Why is >pleasure ever denigrated? This made me think of O'Hara's "Personalism" when >he says (not exactly, don't have it around) "What are we building people up >for? For what?" Folks, poetry is not "good for us" -- thank the Gods!

Joseph is pointing toward another aspect of Berrigan's work that has always struck me - he has a charismatic community organizer's energy (much like the catholic organizers out of Holy Cross, Bridgeport, Worcester, and other seedy [note: not grungy] New England places I spent many years amongst) which establishes a vortex zone or playpen for poetry - and the playpen changes the flavor of the poetry. It is "not good for us" outside of the zone of its own reality. It is "for" that reality & self-sufficient of itself. It is not didactic - it is playFUL. People DO get tired of playing sometimes, tired of the zone. Then they get "serious" and avoid the petty, the self-centered, the superficial... become ponderous, self-centered, superficial...

I have ground this axe about Berrigan before on the list (see back a few months to the "Teddy Bear" discussions), and I acknowledge & apologize for its projectivism & broad-brushism & lack of close readerism of poemism. I apologize. But what you are reading is an effect of Berrigan, just another aspect. end of post. - Henry G.

↑ Index

336. david bromige
tardy re berrigan
Fri 6 Mar 1998

One needs rise early on the west coast to be abreast of hot threads. I posted re-berrigan as soon as I'd read ron silliman's post. but my post hasnt yet appeared and meanwhile, i've read thru the rest, and while i take comfort in the amount of overlap between what i wrote and what others of you posted, i mourn the instant redundancy of my own remarks. My post will probably appear to be made entirely of appropriations--fitting yet regrettable. david

↑ Index

337. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Responses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

--Boundary_(ID_/z2BC9V+H8naTm8JNzRogg)

Jack - thanks for posting this info on Flashpoint. Have already read Mark Wallace's excellent piece on the anxieties and vagaries of defining a post-Language moment and recommend it to all.

I'd also like to bring to the attention of the List a compelling piece by Dan Featherston (Dan are you still on the List?) on the Holocaust poetry of Reznikoff and Rothenberg in the latest issue of Response. ____ Great thread everyone on Ted Berrigan. I immediately ran out and got Joel Lewis's wonderful book of Ted's talks. Anselm Hollo has worked weird and splendid wonders with Ted's talks in his "Lines From Ted" in _Corvus_. Here's a sample from one of them:

"... what I think happens when a poem works is That it rises into the air of its own powers
And in doing so it has formed a circle
And it becomes something like the sun or a star
Or a planet...
I have to go now
I have to go and think about this for at thousand years."

____
Ron Silliman - I was talking last night to Andrew Schelling about Ronald Johnson and he recalled a series of talks Ron gave in Berekely one of which you participated in. Though it was Andrew's impression that RJ was a little less than kindly disposed toward LangPo. Another scurrilous barb? He also mentioned a book of concrete poetry that Johnson produced

- which I found very curious indeed. Has anyone heard of this -- or read it?

Johnson was simply a magnificent poet. One of the greatest. I can't help but feel his early passing has deprived us of who knows what great work. During a talk I gave today on Hopkins I segued into a brief eulogy for Johnson - though no one, including my professor, had ever heard of him. (I'm learning - as Don Byrd alluded to some time back - just what a dearth of poetic knowledge exists in my English Dept). Here's some lines from his AIDS elegy, "Blocks To Be Arranged in a Pyramid":

Then with a sweep blindly eradicate perception itself afire with egress

everything a gift after Totentanz set fire to expanse sight interminable

mountains' blue divide nugget cloud prised cakset of song cast off Tomb

Patrick Pritchett

--Boundary_(ID_/z2BC9V+H8naTm8JNzRogg)

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
<META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">

</HEAD>
<BODY>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>Jack - thanks for posting this info on Flashpoint. Have already read Mark Wallace's excellent piece on the anxieties and vagaries of defining a post-Language moment and recommend it to all.</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>I'd also like to bring to the attention of the List a compelling piece by Dan Featherston (Dan are you still on the List?) on the Holocaust poetry of Reznikoff and Rothenberg in the latest issue of Response.</

FONT></P>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Great thread everyone on Ted Berrigan. I immediately ran out and got Joel Lewis's wonderful book of Ted's talks. Anselm Hollo has worked weird and splendid wonders with Ted's talks in his "Lines From Ted" in _Corvus_. Here's a sample from one of them:</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>"... what I think happens when a poem works is</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>That it rises into the air of its own powers</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>And in doing so it has formed a circle</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>And it becomes something like the sun or a star</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Or a planet...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>I have to go now</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>I have to go and think about this for at thousand   years."</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Ron Silliman - I was talking last night to Andrew Schelling about Ronald Johnson and he recalled a series of talks Ron gave in Berekely one of which you participated in. Though it was Andrew's impression that RJ was a little less than kindly disposed toward LangPo. Another scurrilous barb? He also mentioned a book of concrete poetry that Johnson produced - which I found very curious indeed. Has anyone heard of this -- or read it?</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>Johnson was simply a magnificent poet. One of the greatest. I can't help but feel his early passing has deprived us of who knows what great work. During a talk I gave today on Hopkins I segued into a brief eulogy for Johnson - though no one, including my professor, had ever heard of him. (I'm learning - as Don Byrd alluded to some time back - just what a dearth of poetic knowledge exists in my English Dept). Here's some lines from his AIDS elegy, "Blocks To Be Arranged in a Pyramid":</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>Then with a sweep</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>blindly eradicate</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>perception itself</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>afire with egress</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>everything a gift</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>after Totentanz</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>set fire to expanse</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>sight interminable</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>mountains' blue divide</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>nugget cloud prised</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>cakset of song</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>cast off Tomb</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>

</P>

</BODY>
</HTML>

--Boundary_(ID_/z2BC9V+H8naTm8JNzRogg)--

↑ Index

338. Judy Roitman
Re: NPR piece on DiPrima
Fri 6 Mar 1998

> thanks for turning me on to the NPR RealAudio archives, Rachel.
>
> I had heard about, but missed, an interview with Diane DiPrima on Feb 18. They even let her read two poems!

It wasn't an interview with DiPrima. We should only be so lucky. They (= Susan Stamberg?) talked to some scholar, a certain lack of vibrancy in the response shall we say ("DiPrima believes..." locutions, as if she is fixed forever) but there was more time given to Diane reading than to this other woman talking, and the pleasure of running errands and flipping on the radio and suddenly hearing DiPrima reading --- that was great!

The brief description in the beginning of DiPrima was also pretty good. It went something like "beatnik Buddhist revolutionary mother of five."

I always find it weird to read about people I know even a little, or hear them discussed, in that detached and "objective" way. Always the essence is missing. Makes me wonder why I believe what I read or hear about people I don't know.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

339. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Ted
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Mar 6, 10:37am, Safdie Joseph wrote:
> What I actually wanted to comment on was Tom Beckett's post > about Ted, when he praised him at his best, but at his worst said he was > full of "formulaic sensationalism," "fun to read but . . . empty". Now come > on. What, really, is BETTER than "fun to read"? What else is there? Why is > pleasure ever denigrated? This made me think of O'Hara's "Personalism" when > he says (not exactly, don't have it around) "What are we building people up > for? For what?" Folks, poetry is not "good for us" -- thank the Gods!
>-- End of excerpt from Safdie Joseph

Rightly said Joe wrt fun & plezhure in poetry. It does appear that pleasure is devalued at times hereabouts. Perhaps this is just another manifestation of making light of the lite (as in lite poetry which has almost always been looked down upon). Perhaps too any denial of pleasure is only a public one. Poetry is good for us in as much as it is good for the heart -- makes us laugh or smile (wryly perhaps as we watch it subvert and civilize the wholesome). Just as long as the pleasure paradigm doesn't itself become a cliche. Funny too is that much of langpo has often been seen by Yo as being quite fun, funny, lite, etc (you know: no ideas but in thingys). I can scarcely read Coolidge, for ex., without a big, cracked smile from ear-to-ear.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

340. JBCM2
Re: Who Hired Bill Moyers to Destroy American Poetry?
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Jack: I have a dentist appointment on Monday, and it looks as though I have to have a tooth extracted, so it will be later in the week. I'm going to forward to you, fyi, a post I had from Steve Tills re: Wallace & my response. I told Steve that he should send any work of his that he thinks is exciting.

Joe

↑ Index

341. k. lederer
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

I'll go see if I can find his thesis--

I've always thought it more polite, perhaps, not to check these out--

So many graduates are ashamed of their theses--

Best,
Katy

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, Gary Sullivan wrote:

> Several lines from Watten's MFA thesis, "white yellow" (submitted to the University of Iowa, early seventies):
>
> I guess I want this to be > a kind of "Tambourine Life"
> but I am not that nervous
> Irish mother fucker
> who put me down
> in Iowa City.
>
> Someone who has this text on hand, or more-or-less immediate access to it (Katy?) should quote it verbatim. (The above is nearly word-for-word, but line-breaks are no doubt wrong & there's maybe a missing word or two.)
>
> I always wondered whether his (Watten's) sentiment was genuine, there, or not. Anyone know?
>
> Gary Sullivan
> [redacted]
>
> On Friday, March 06, 1998 12:57 PM, Jacques Debrot [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Then again, this is how Barrett Watten remembers it in "After Ted" (_Aerial 8): "Berrigan's reading of _The Sonnets_ at Langton Street contained some of the greatest verbal moments in American language." And, in fact, wasn't it Watten himself who curated that event?

↑ Index

342. Eric Blarnes
no subject
Fri 6 Mar 1998

RIGHT ABOUT ONE THING

The boys all wanta be teddy bears today in the playpen and bearish girls are gonna growl
I wanta man

- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

343. Jacques Debrot
Re [private]:"The world has my flesh on"
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Hi Gary,

I'd love a photocopy of the edition you mention -- & of the _Arshille_. You have my s-address, right? Is there anything not available in Butler that you'd like me to photocopy for you from Widener/Lamont? Just let me know.

Jacques

↑ Index

344. Jacques Debrot
Re: ooooops!!
Fri 6 Mar 1998

---

meant to back-channel last message, sorry.

↑ Index

345. Gary Sullivan
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Thanks, Katy:

But, tentativeness with respect to reading theses? They're written w/the knowledge they'll be more-or-less "available" to the public, & are usually housed in libraries. Journals & letters--very private things--might be more worthy of second thoughts prior to looking into . . . thinking back to an earlier thread . . .

Yours,

Gary

On Friday, March 06, 1998 3:17 PM, k. lederer [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> I'll go see if I can find his thesis--
>
> I've always thought it more polite, perhaps, not to check these out--
>
> So many graduates are ashamed of their theses--
>
> Best,
> Katy

↑ Index

346. david bromige

langpo & berrigan (this seems not to have gone thru--my later note re-this post did. so i try again.)

Fri 6 Mar 1998

> To:[redacted]
> From:[redacted] (david bromige)
> Subject:langpo & berrigan
>
> I second Ron Silliman's post this a.m. re this topic. I recall the Berrigan/Stanley "Grand Piano" reading fairly well--Ted and George were in the lion's den of langpo in that place and series, amnd it was a huge audience, we were sitting on the floor, on knees, on laps (just what you've heard about San Francisco)...It was either that visit or one next year that Berrigan had a residency or at least a reading at 80 Langton Street, then the most langpo of institutions. This was equally well-attended.
>
> I'm not saying the perception of a langpo/Berrigan oppositive split is wrong. I would locate it in that wonderful sentence of Frank O'Hara, "When someone is chasing you down the street with a knife you dont turn round and shout 'Give it up, I was a track star for Minneola Prep' ". There was that tough, streetwise, pose among many of the 'children of Frank' aka 2nd gen NY School, and one can see how it could also becom anti-intellectual, in hands less capable than Berrigan's. Langpos werent necessarily declaring themselves intellectuals first, poets second, but many of them were attempting a large-scale renovative program that demanded systematic analysis of one might call it The Poem Today.
>
> The NY endeavor also involved a cult of personality, as Ron remarks (more or less), which was confusing if not offensive to other young poets who were coping with the Death of the Author. But Berrigan's work displaced any Lowellean sense of "I". And there was certainly much overlapping of technique between these tribes. You can appropriate lines from other poets towards both ends, both kinds of poetry. For what these terms are worth (and IMHO they fade in usefulness as one approaches specific texts), both NY further gens and langpo could claim "The Sonnets" as ur-work. I talked with a seminar somewhere this year about that book, which is considerably easier to read today than it was in 1964, and for that reason, even more compelling. Glad to know its coming out with Penguin.

As a P.S., I'd say that the case of Tom Clark is illustrative here. When Alan Sondheim posted Clark's poem "you" the other day, I read the header and remembered a wonderful poem of that title by Clark, and was surprised to find that he had written another fine poem of the same title. The "You" I know was in an early book, I think _Stones_ . It has a spacious range thru its quotings of many poets from several eras; Hoelderlin I think is much used, and gives a tone to the piece that withstands what is merely smart-ass. It knocked me out of my tree when I read it and I believed there would be more to come of that multi-layered risk-taking from Tom Clark. In the event, I haven't been able to congratulate myself on my perspicacity on that matter. And in the meantime, Clark has used intellectual-baiting ((rather than considered engaged argument) in his journalistic attacks on langpo.

It's a huge subject. Class attitudes are important in it also. Ted has that blue-collar tone as part of his poetry's appeal, a 'cut-right-thru' ability that reminds me of my brother-in-law saying, when he evaluated my disintegrating '72 Caddy Grand Prix, "there's only so many things you can do with a Nehru jacket." The brilliance of the American language sometimes doesnt appear to leave space for dialectical appeals. But Ted went to college and was omnivorous. I agree with Ron that certain acolytes derived more import from that tone than Ted himself did.

But he did remain mindful that in his potential audience would be such expectations. He wanted to be the greatest, didnt he? If it's true that by now, only other poets read poetry, then we're all poets' poets, and I suppose some are poets'-poets' poets. I think Ted was that, but that wasn't all he was. He broadened his base. Could be that this hard-to-digest stuff we've been hearing here lately re-moral stands of the necessarily isolato poet continues this intention to carry The Word to people who won't read Adorno or Deleuze. But it wouldnt surprise me to learn Ted had read either. I'm just not aware that he incorporated any of their material in his poems. David

↑ Index

347. david bromige
ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Toilet-training leaves a lot to be desired.

George Bowering
34768 The Gt. Hiway
Spuzzum BC Ca

↑ Index

348. hen
Re: langpo & berrigan (this seems not to have gone thru--my later note re-this post did. so i try again.)
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998 13:10:28 -0800 david bromige said:
>>
>>But he did remain mindful that in his potential audience would be such >>expectations. He wanted to be the greatest, didnt he? If it's true that by >>now, only other poets read poetry, then we're all poets' poets, and I >>suppose some are poets'-poets' poets. I think Ted was that, but that >>wasn't all he was. He broadened his base. Could be that this >>hard-to-digest stuff we've been hearing here lately re-moral stands of the >>necessarily isolato poet continues this intention to carry The Word to >>people who won't read Adorno or Deleuze. But it wouldnt surprise me to >>learn Ted had read either. I'm just not aware that he incorporated any of >>their material in his poems. David Remarkable post from DB. Actually Berrigan seems the complete opposite of isolato poet. But perhaps it's not for nothing that this ego lives near the "Cranston Line". I firmly believe I got into college because of Ted Berrigan [my college application included an extended adolescent imitation of "Tambourine Life". I'm sure Jeff Hansen will be happy to dig it up out of Blake School TALISMAN]. So he can't be all anti-intellectual if he gets kids into college. But speaking of carrying the Word - isolato is trying to carry it to all them poet's poet's poet's poet's poet's [infinity] poets who DO read Adorno etc., Lawdy hep em.

- Henry Gould
>>

↑ Index

349. k. lederer
Re: ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

I'm not sure how to take this witty reply--

I guess, though--to clarify.

Turning in a thesis is not the same as publishing--

One has to turn a thesis in order to get the degree--

One does not have to publish a book--

Some of the theses turned in here are, in fact, books (Doug Powell's wonderful book, Tea, just out on Wesleyan, is basically his "thesis"--). Others are simply first attempts at organizing peoms--or compendiums or whatever--

Martin Corless-Smith's thesis is nothing like his recent and incredible book Of Piscator-- etc.

Best,
Katy

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, david bromige wrote:

> Toilet-training leaves a lot to be desired.
>
> George Bowering
> 34768 The Gt. Hiway
> Spuzzum BC Ca

↑ Index

350. Joshua N Schuster
CFP: Other Voices - Psychoanalysis and Culture (5/31; Journal Issue) (fwd)
Fri 6 Mar 1998

a friend asked me to forward this to the list.

Vance Bell wrote:
>
> CFP: Other Voices - Psychoanalysis and Culture (5/31; Journal Issue)
>
> The editors of the electronic journal Other Voices are seeking papers on > Psychoanalysis and Culture for a forthcoming issue of the journal. We are > interested in psychoanalytic interpretations of a variety of cultural > events, relations and artifacts. Papers employing diverse strategies are > welcome; purely theoretical, specifically literary, oppositional or > dialogic. Submissions may address, but are not limited to:
>
> * psychoanalytic interpretations of cultural artifacts and > manifestations > * the role of psychoanalysis at the end of the century > * cultural/commodity fetishism > * mass or event psychology > * the use of schizoanalysis > * integrating object-relation theory and cultural analysis > * the practice of psychoanalysis > * reviews essays of recent secondary literature
>
>
> Traditional academic essays should generally fall between 3500 and 7000 > words. We are also seeking non-traditional submissions, interviews, > hypertext/multimedia projects and book reviews.
>
> All submissions are due April 30, 1998. Please email one hard copy and > one electronic copy (floppy disc, or email attachment) to:
>
> Other Voices
> Attn: Vance Bell
> P.O. Box 31907
> Philadelphia, PA 19104
> [redacted]
>
> Direct all questions/comments to the same.
>
>
>

↑ Index

351. Steve Tills
Re: ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

And Desire TP leaves, too.

Hi, David! See ya Monday with the other Troubadors.

Steve

david bromige wrote:

> Toilet-training leaves a lot to be desired.
>
> George Bowering
> 34768 The Gt. Hiway
> Spuzzum BC Ca

↑ Index

352. J. Kuszai
Heybabe (fwd)
Fri 6 Mar 1998

what follows is info. about a fiction reading series hosted by Lara Stapleton in New York. For more info. please contact her directly.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 6 Mar 1998 14:58:58 -0500 (EST)
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: Heybabe

-- as we discussed on the phone, here is the info for my second reading -- in which I'm reading. The first one went well, about forty people, and I think it can only build from here!!!!

The Golden Room : A Gathering Place for New York's Finest Young Fiction Writers and Readers To be held the last Saturday of every month at the Nuyorican Poets' Cafe. Bring copies of work for a swap table. Our goal is to create a community of writers who believe in interesting work; the subtle, the complex, the absurd.

Second Reading:

Charlotte Warren and Lara Stapleton
4pm Saturday, March 28th
Nuyorican Poets' Cafe

236 E. 3rd St. tw. B & C (take the F to 2nd Ave.)
$6

↑ Index

353. David Zauhar
Re: ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> I'm not sure how to take this witty reply--
>
> I guess, though--to clarify.
>
> Turning in a thesis is not the same as publishing--
>
> One has to turn a thesis in order to get the degree--
>
> One does not have to publish a book--
>
 Well, to my knowledge no one has ever been forced to get a degree, either.

DZauhar

↑ Index

354. John Norton ([redacted])
CrossConnect Web 'zine
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Hi all,

I want to call your attention to CrossConnect, a tri-quarterly electronic magazine of contemporary writing based at U. of Penn. You can find the current issue at the following URL:

    http://ccat.sas.upenn.edu/xconnect/

FYI, I have a couple of pieces in it.

Regards--

John Norton

↑ Index

355. Steve Shoemaker
Re: reznikoff's girder take 3
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Well this little mini-thread may have completely unspooled by now, BUT I think one way of looking at the Rez poem is as being about survival. It's one of the ones Oppen remembered when he was lying in the foxhole, wounded, among some others who were dead. Was it "anti-democratic" of Oppen to be alive? He did feel guilty, but there it was, a fact.

dizzily, steve-with-an-inner-ear-infection

↑ Index

356. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: In Memoriam
Fri 6 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

--Boundary_(ID_vPrH/ktKY05MwT3orDnM9Q)

In Memoriam

Ronald Johnson, 1935-1998

In ark-dive,
grey encomium.
Grey imperium of the all-day rust-dawn
-ed day.
If amen, then a willow & its sibilance too.
Or water bluster
in stone-cracked creek.
Force of lone stone empty on an earth swept wide.
And stricken by late winter-sun-and-lance.
By this tide, great gong:
ever-and-a-going gone.
We go so -- in measure-less tread, dividing song from wing.

Particle-cleave, (parousia) your run is ended.
A nascent valence
resumes.
Foremost among foot-falls and sober in Elysium to be going if light there is ever sober or windonsea anything but claritas,
supra urbem, supra sapientia, bells building spire on spire in the true font of soul+s un-encrypted inscription.

(Hover a while.
Breathe this and be glad of it.

Patrick Pritchett

--Boundary_(ID_vPrH/ktKY05MwT3orDnM9Q)

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
<META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">

</HEAD>
<BODY>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>In Memoriam</FONT>

        <FONT SIZE=2>Ronald Johnson, 1935-1998</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>In ark-dive,</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>grey encomium.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Grey imperium of</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>the all-day rust-dawn</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2> -ed day.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>If amen, then a willow</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>& its sibilance too.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Or water bluster</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>in stone-cracked creek.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Force of lone stone empty</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>on an earth swept</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>wide.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>And stricken by</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>late winter-sun-and-lance.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>By this tide, great gong:</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>ever-and-a-going</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>gone.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>We go so -- in measure-</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>less tread, dividing</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>song from wing.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Particle-cleave, (parousia)</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>your run is ended.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>A nascent valence</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>resumes.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Foremost among foot-</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>falls and sober</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>in Elysium to be going</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>if light there is ever sober</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>or windonsea any-</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>thing but claritas,</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>supra urbem, supra sapientia,</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>bells building spire</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>on spire in the true</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>font of soul+s un-</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>encrypted in-</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>scription.</FONT>

        <FONT
SIZE=2>(Hover a while.</FONT>

        <FONT
SIZE=2>Breathe this and be glad</FONT>

        <FONT
SIZE=2>of it.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>
</P>

</BODY>
</HTML>

--Boundary_(ID_vPrH/ktKY05MwT3orDnM9Q)--

↑ Index

357. k. lederer
Re: ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Boring....

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, David Zauhar wrote:

> On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:
>
> I'm not sure how to take this witty reply--
>
> I guess, though--to clarify.
>
> Turning in a thesis is not the same as publishing--
>
> One has to turn a thesis in order to get the degree--
>
> One does not have to publish a book--
>
> Well, to my knowledge no one has ever been forced to get a degree, either.
>
> DZauhar

↑ Index

358. Rachel Loden
Berrigan's bedfellows
Fri 6 Mar 1998

Tom Beckett wrote:

> At its best, Berrigan's work stands up there with anyone's. At its worst, it tends toward some of the same self-indulgences Bukowski practiced--a kind of formulaic sensationalism that can be fun to read but analogous to the "empty calories" of _____(Fill in the blank with your favorite junk commestible

Hmm, not new formalists but new formulaic sensationalists! I might just enlist--any relation to Ashbery's sect of "ascetic sensualists" with its eleven funerals? I do think comparing Bukowski with Berrigan (even at his weakest) is pretty wide of the mark, even though they're both dead.

Apparently I haven't been able to lure Pierre out of lurkerdom long enough to name his favorite bad poets. No intent (at all) to tweak him--I really wanted to know (and think this would be an important clue to the work of any significant writer).

My point was a serious one, and it's that we don't learn only where we think we SHOULD learn. That learning, perhaps a bit like "falling in love," is cheerfully random, and makes for odd bedfellows. I only wish Berrigan's catholicity of taste were more fashionable today--inbreeding, seems to me, makes for pale and squeamish poetry.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

359. Schuchat Simon
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Fri 6 Mar 1998

A couple more notes.

Ron S. remarks in his first post that Ted B would have disapproved of certain kinds of attention, and thus former students have not written as much about him as about others. First, I don't think Ted objected to attention to either his poetry or his person, and second, there is actually an enormous memoir literature about Ted, as well as the Scalapino interview book and the Joel Lewis lectures book, so that I would say he is reasonably well documented. Don't getme wrong, I would be overjoyed to have a collected complete poems, I would be interested in published volumes or selections from Ted's notebooks/journals, and I would love to read a biography ala Unterecker on Hart Crane or a critical study like Perloff onO'Hara. But among non-academic post WWII poets, besides Ginsberg, O'Hara, Spicer, Snyder, Baraka and Ashbery, who has received more attention?

Second, there has been some surprise about Ted's liking for certain academic poets (the Wilbur poem Ted told me he liked was the one about laundry, in which the line "Love calls us to the things of this world" appears, I think) and some discussion whether "language poets" approved of him or not. First, the Berrigan of the language poets (author of The Sonnets) is not everybody's Berrigan. Second, among the poets whose work Ted did not like so much were several important language ancestors, e.g., Jackson MacLow and Louis Zukofsky. Partly this was Ted responding to the downtown fashions around the time he first "came on the scene," and partly because he did his real appropriations (not lines, but structural ideas) from these guys -- he said that Jackson was too serious about himself and that Zukofsky's Catullus wasn't funny, when it ought to have been. But at least the education I absorbed from Ted, after the obvious like Denby O'Hara Schuyler Whalen Hollo Ashbery, was tilted towards certain academic poets -- F.T. Prince and not Richard Howard -- and based on the idea that if you could get away with it, it was better to be influenced by and steal from Shakespeare than Ezra Pound.

In philosphy, Ted read assiduously and was influenced by Alfred North Whitehead, not some jackoff German or Frenchman!

Finally, how about Bean Spasms (the book)? That book is totally great! Why doesn't somebody reprint it!

↑ Index

360. David Zauhar
Re: ashamed of our theses
Fri 6 Mar 1998

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> Boring....

Gee, I'm sorry: how 'bout this: look at a thesis as an extremely limited edition of your work.

Dave Zauhar, the typhoid mary of narcolepsy

> On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, David Zauhar wrote:
>
> On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:
>
> I'm not sure how to take this witty reply--
>
> I guess, though--to clarify.
>
> Turning in a thesis is not the same as publishing--
>
> One has to turn a thesis in order to get the degree--
>
> One does not have to publish a book--
>
> Well, to my knowledge no one has ever been forced to get a degree, either.
>
> DZauhar

↑ Index

361. Steve Shoemaker
Re: "The world has my flesh on"
Fri 6 Mar 1998

The speculations on Berrigan's class background that have come up seem to me pretty fruitful ones. But this connection between his "lower class" status and "thievery" has come up a couple of times now--and without wanting to sound righteous or anything, it has always seemed to be that the wealthy do the best stealing. You may not notice the book missing from your shelf--it probably just didn't get written in the first place. steve

At 01:06 PM 3/6/98 -0500, you wrote:
>Hi, Erik:
>
>Sorry, I should have back-channeled you the Sonnets ordering info. I'll keep my >eyes peeled for another. "Some dim frieze," which opens the book, refers to >something Berrigan saw on the Columbia University campus, so in return, >Columbia will pick up the tab if you'd like a photocopy of that edition in the >meantime. (Or, if any of the "crows" want one.) Just lemme know. I also have >the poems from Arshille, if you want a photocopy of that.
>
>Of course, it doesn't finally matter what lines are from where, so long as the >poem works. But, it's also interesting, interesting to me anyway, to think of >his thievery in the contexts of: (a) his class & the extent to which his >aesthetic impulses might be thought of as class-based; and (b) what his >prolific re-use of others's lines (including his own) means in terms of how he >experienced language: "The world has my flesh on," as Vincent Ferrini once >wrote. I think this ties in very nicely with another sub-thread on this list:
>His openness to a relatively wide spectrum of poetries. That's a specific form >of being, a particular way of moving through the world, & through the world of >letters.
>
>I'm going to see the woman who runs Pomander Books tonight & so I'll see if I >can get the name of the crow who swept off with your _Sonnets_--then you or I >can build an altar or whatever & Berrigan's ghost (which truly will never die) >will go beat him or her up.
>
>Have fun,
>

>Gary Sullivan
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

362. david bromige
re : the typhoid mary of narcolepsy
Sat 7 Mar 1998

I propose we give the self-characterization of the week award to dave zauhar for the above. Not that it's accurate to him, but it's accurate to someone, maybe someone you havent met yet. It's wild! As my teenager says, "Cool". Woody Allen will appropriate it, I suppose : "Wh-wh-who you think I am? Y-y--you treat me like I'm the . . ." But he should pay dave zauhar a lot of money for its use. Thank you, Dave! David

↑ Index

363. TBeck131
berriganagain/sacred cows?
Sat 7 Mar 1998

I'm hardly anti-fun & I'm not anti-Berrigan. However, biography is put to use as part of Berrigan's poetic methodology. Sometimes the results are sublime, but the pitfalls are there to be seen.

Bukowski and Berrigan--I don't want to belabor this. TB's obviously the better writer. There is, however, a broad comparison to be made on the basis of the presentation of self in the work. Bukowski: I woke up, threw up, drank a beer, went to the track, got laid, threw up, drank a beer...etc. Berrigan: I woke up, drank a Pepsi, popped some pills, did this, did that, drank a Pepsi, popped some pills, etc. Sometimes a manner comes to matter too much and gets in the way. I was pointing to this when I used the phrase "formulaic sensationalism."

Wrapping his work with his biography makes it difficult to criticize the work without seeming to criticize the author. I think that this is a modest but important point. Berrigan took a lot of risks --in his work and in his life. He wasn't always successful. Who is?

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

364. Douglas
reading
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Douglas Messerli and Chris Reiner will be reading at Canessa Park Art Center on Sunday at 4:00 in San Francisco.

That's March 8th.

If you're in San Francisco, see you there!

↑ Index

365. Michael McColl
Berrigan/Thievery/Acker
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Just curious--what is it that Kathy Acker's fiction was taken up by some critics and championed precisely because she "plagiarized," attacked the idea of the "true, original voice," etc. while the dis- cussion of Berrigan seems to suggest that he is somehow still under suspicion of having committed crimes. Also, I think it's good to remember when these issues come up that way back when in English poetry (please, someone with a bit of scholarship, help me out here) it was accepted practice to take over a line of poetry from a contemporary and rewrite it for your own poem.

Mike McColl

↑ Index

366. joel lewis
ted & langpo
Sat 7 Mar 1998

---

i do feel there was mutual respect between ted & many of the language poets -- why invite him to 80 langton street, just to harass him.

the idea that langpoets where hostile to ted is part tom clark's comments and part of the politics around the po project in the early 80's.

there was a great deal of hostility between ted'd accolytes and langpoets in those days. in those days, wed readings would team up a st, mark's poet and a lnag poet (i remember elinor nauen & diane ward as an example). Depending on who read first, there would be a walkout by many of the followers of teh first reader. this was repeated in smaller venues and earinn had entirely different audeinces based on who was curating the series.

in addition to poetry wars, there were style clashes. st. marks poets where still doing mimeo books, while language poets had moved onto perfect bound books and mags. there was a vast economic difference--many st. marks poets had no visible means of support, while some langauge poets, like james sherry, worked day gigs and a poet Bruce Andrew was a tenured professor. and then there was politics--st. marks ranged from apolitical to a nostalgic romanticism for the poet-warriors of nicaragua/ laanguage poetry was fairly identified with neo-marxism and post-structuralism. and then there was cultural prefernces -- while many st markers where forming punk bands, poets like charles b. & bruce a. where working with zorn, sally silvers, arakawa & others

ted did not get that involved with much of the above. i do remeber that he like l=a=ng magazine & that he marked up his copies of poetics journal and was engaging the work of writers like barret watten. it is worth tracking down (or someone reprinting) the whole of the pritikin 80 lang st report (that was published in their annual summaries) that gives the flavor of the residency that seems equal parts of ted poking and trying to statrt arguements and folks like barret trying to engage him.

joel lewis

↑ Index

367. Mark Weiss

Re: ted & langpo

Sat 7 Mar 1998

I was one of the ear curators when a young language poet (I forget who) took over some of the saturdays (I think it was saturdays--age creepeth...). What you say about the different audiences is certainly true, and it didn't matter who was reading. I regularly had Jackson read. Only one or two language poets would show up. Likewise for Wieners and others. This was mysterious to me. The well-defined avant-garde that existed in NY before the advent of language poetry didn't seem to interest the langpo crowd except when it was on its own turf. Of course, the explanation may be as simple as the social reality of an ongoing series as a floating party--if you know the host you get to hang out with a predictable crowd of friends.

> there was a great deal of hostility between ted'd accolytes and langpoets in those days. in those days, wed readings would team up a st, mark's poet and a lnag poet (i remember elinor nauen & diane ward as an example). Depending on who read first, there would be a walkout by many of the followers of teh first reader. this was repeated in smaller venues and earinn had entirely different audeinces based on who was curating the series.

↑ Index

368. Henry Gould
Re: berriganagain/sacred cows?
Sat 7 Mar 1998

On Sat, 7 Mar 1998 10:35:07 EST TBeck131 said:
>
>Wrapping his work with his biography makes it difficult to criticize the work >without seeming to criticize the author. I think that this is a modest but >important point. Berrigan took a lot of risks --in his work and in his life.
>He wasn't always successful. Who is?

Seems like every poet establishes a unique relation between work & biography. Look at Villon, for example. One would think a poet who is self-indulgent and exhibitionist & self-centered is taking the risk of making the work dependent on the personality & the immediate local, so that it will soon fade from interest. But the reason Villon remains of interest is he brings the 13th century or whatever to life just by being so narrowly focused on what he's doing & egotistical about it. I know this is an exaggeration & Villon remains interesting basically because he was a great lyric poet & craftsman of the ballads of his time. Mandelstam has a whole essay about Villon's curiously impersonal sense of his own person. I am not gonna compare Berrigan & Villon at the moment; just that these issues are really complicated & every reader of poetry has the same problem quantum physicists do in "taking measurements": their shadow gets in the way of the lens. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

369. TBeck131
query
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Can someone back channel with Melissa Wolsak's e-address.
I'd be much obliged.

Tom B.

↑ Index

370. Brian Lucas
ronald johnson
Sat 7 Mar 1998

I'd like to invite those interested in submitting work for a section on Ronald Johnson in my magazine ANGLE. The work can either be poetry, short essays, apprecitions, etc. If I recieve enough work I may do a special issue rather than just a section. There is a deadline of June 1st. I look forward to hearing from anyone out there regarding this.

Thanks! Brian Lucas Angle 253 Rose St San Francisco CA 94102

↑ Index

371. Travis Andrew Ortiz
Atelos / The Literal World by Jean Day
Sat 7 Mar 1998

The Literal World
by Jean Day

Atelos, a newly founded publishing project, announces the publication of _The Literal World_ by Jean Day.

About the book: In response to a commission from Atelos, Jean Day has written a sequence of poems exploring the public and private worlds of vernacular adventure. Entitled _The Literal World_, the book's sections play off various American genres -- Protestant sermons (and the idea of a lost paradise), Lewis and Clark's journals of exploration, and the Western among them. As contributions to the invention of American identity, these genres constitute formative narratives -- accounts of an America its 'fathers and mothers' sought to create. As a private parallel to the experience of this public view, Day concludes The Literal World with a section entitled "Narratives from the Crib" -- offering an intimate but wry, tender but individualistic (and hence quintessentially American), account by an infant of the person he or she is meant someday to be. Using experimental techniques, and informed by a wide range of historical and philosophical detail, the poetry in this book is about the very expectations it challenges. The result is 'the literal world' that is named in the title -- an adventure in the sublimities of invention.

About the author: Jean Day grew up in Rhode Island and moved to San Francisco in the mid-1970s. She is the author of four previous books of poetry (_Linear C_, _Flat Birds_, _A Young Recruit_, _The I and the You_) and the recipient of grants from the California Arts Council and the Fund for Poetry. Her own works have been translated into Finnish, Swedish, Russian, French, and Spanish, and her translations of works by the contemporary Russian poet, Nadezhda Kondakova, have appeared in anthologies. She lives in Berkeley, California, where she works as Associate Editor for the journal _Representations_.

About the project: Atelos was founded in 1995, as a project of Hip's Road and devoted to publishing, under the sign of poetry, writing which challenges the conventional definitions of poetry, since such definitions have tended to isolate it from intellectual life, arrest its development, and curtail its impact. All the works published as part of the Atelos project are commissioned specifically for it, and each is involved in some way with crossing traditional genre boundaries, including, for example, those that would separate theory from practice, poetry from prose, essay from drama, the visual image from the verbal, the literary from the non-literary, and so forth. The Atelos project when complete will consist of 50 volumes. The project directors and editors are Lyn Hejinian and Travis Ortiz; the director for production and design is Ree Hall.

Ordering information: _The Literal World_ may be ordered from Small Press Distribution, 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley, CA 94710-1403; phone [redacted] or toll-free [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]. Or, it may be ordered directly from Atelos, P. O. Box 5814, Berkeley, CA 94705-0814; e-mail: [redacted].

Title: _The Literal World_ Author: Jean Day
Price: $12.95
Pages: 102
ISBN: 1-891190-01-6

Coming Soon:

Bad History, by Barrett Watten
True, by Rae Armantrout
Cable Factory 20, by Lytle Shaw
Pamela: A Novel, by Pamela Lu

↑ Index

372. Keston Sutherland love in the air again
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Famished on claim in repeat-lock bloat code in-duct error, really stuffed up, genuinely courting the brim, chock-full. Hope's blossoming everywhere, sprayed like a pledge in the Schoolyard, zoom at n-rate via bent detail-boost iuxta Dentures On Dashboard glide through browse out. Blank. The flitter of earth in her subsides, routed per disinfected depiction, back to arrest and staleness. Blink. She's bribed to mix with fucked air flaccid exit-drive 1!, planet-averting.

Frayed shame trails back at her wing, blacked out its former peach, altmodisch. It is not lust for arrayed rot or its fanzine idyll never (wait) what figures her smacked-up repetition as (2) cramp pasted (3) dead on her knees say please and revert. Today Only. Raindrops pall and patter on addicted gravel, simplified, they're a load of libation vouchers. Shacked up re: ex gun-ho wish n Degeneracy-End floss (wait) re: that over and over and over, in a prank of (WAIT) picted alliance with over allayed redress, we wept and made love then in the cove-mouth.

↑ Index

373. Martin Spinelli
npr petitions
Sat 7 Mar 1998

I'm fairly sure the pubcasting petitions being circulated on this list are about 4 years old (and thus no longer applicable). NPR has acutally had its appropriations for 1999-2000 increased... throne a bone as it were for that new-and-smooth fresh sound, hieghtened awareness of the major issues facing corporate America (half of peak-time newscasts set aside for "the business report"), and its general improved understanding of which side of its bread is buttered. Newt's threat brought NPR to heel even if it didn't kill it. (Not that it was stirringly better beforehand.)

Lovingly,
Martin

_____
Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

374. Bob Grumman
Re: ronald johnson
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Brian:

Would you be interested in previously published material? One of my mathematical poems was a tribute to Ronald. It's been published in several zines and is now up at Karl Young's Light & Dust site at:

http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/lighthom.htm

I'd be really pleased if you could use it in your magazine--but would understand if not.

All best, Bob G.

↑ Index

375. Joe Ahearn
Re: Looking for input on talk
Sat 7 Mar 1998

Hey Tim,

I have been having computer problems and am just now getting to this. I'll be galad to help out if there is anything specific that I can help with.

Best,
joe

At 07:11 PM 3/3/98 -0600, you wrote:
>I've been asked to give a talk this summer to help poets try to understand >what publishers are looking for, etc. I'm planning to push it a little bit >and, where appropriate, talk from the opposite view point: how publishers >(primarily those of periodicals such as journals) can do a better job of >communicating to potential submitters. I would love any suggestions any of >you might have on points, nits & grand schemes to make sure I hit.
>
>thanks,
>Tim
>
>
>_____
>Tim Wood [redacted]
>
>poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by
>
>

Joe Ahearn

_____
[redacted]

↑ Index

376. Tim Wood
Re: Looking for input on talk
Sun 8 Mar 1998

I just may avail myself of that offer.

thanks,
Tim

At 10:36 PM 3/7/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Hey Tim,
>
>I have been having computer problems and am just now getting to this. I'll >be galad to help out if there is anything specific that I can help with.
>
>Best,
>joe
>
>
>At 07:11 PM 3/3/98 -0600, you wrote:
>>I've been asked to give a talk this summer to help poets try to understand >>what publishers are looking for, etc. I'm planning to push it a little bit >>and, where appropriate, talk from the opposite view point: how publishers >>(primarily those of periodicals such as journals) can do a better job of >>communicating to potential submitters. I would love any suggestions any of >>you might have on points, nits & grand schemes to make sure I hit.
>>
>>thanks,
>>Tim
>>
>>
>>_____
>>Tim Wood [redacted]
>>
>>poetry is the shock of insight's drive-by
>>
>>
>
>
>
>Joe Ahearn
>_____
>[redacted]
>
>
>
>

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

↑ Index

377. Logan M Esdale
copytext
Sun 8 Mar 1998

could someone inform on the location of the 1892 PARADISE LOST Ronald Johnson used for and in RADI OS ? i have heard that much of Johnson's work has already been archived somewhere in kansas, and therefore it may be there, but don't know that for sure or where exactly that archive is. and could someone back channel Peter O'Leary's address. thanks -- LE

↑ Index

378. George Bowering
Re: Berrigan/i'm smiling
Sun 8 Mar 1998

> Go ahead and set yourself up as Berrigan's Defender. I never labelled anybody. I said Berrigan combined art and life, formality & informality, by letting the GRUNGE of street life seep into his work, the gritty, GRUNGY street-life of Providence, Worcester, New York, Tulsa, wherever it may be found (it's even in Minneapolis). I don't think Berrigan would disagree, myself. I find GRUNGY to be a fine evocative word for the GRUNGE I am talking about.
>
> butit's easy to loose people who may not know better

That's okay. Why tie them up if they want to be free?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

379. Steven Marks
Murdochworld has my flesh on
Sun 8 Mar 1998

Take, for instance, Murdoch kabashing a book critical of China because he is trying to expand his empire there.

Steven M.

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, Steve Shoemaker wrote:

The speculations on Berrigan's class background that have come up seem to me pretty fruitful ones. But this connection between his "lower class" status and "thievery" has come up a couple of times now--and without wanting to sound righteous or anything, it has always seemed to be that the wealthy do the best stealing. You may not notice the book missing from your shelf--it probably just didn't get written in the first place. steve

At 01:06 PM 3/6/98 -0500, you wrote:
Hi, Erik:

Sorry, I should have back-channeled you the Sonnets ordering info. I'll keep my eyes peeled for another. "Some dim frieze," which opens the book, refers to something Berrigan saw on the Columbia University campus, so in return, Columbia will pick up the tab if you'd like a photocopy of that edition in the meantime. (Or, if any of the "crows" want one.) Just lemme know. I also have the poems from Arshille, if you want a photocopy of that.

Of course, it doesn't finally matter what lines are from where, so long as the poem works. But, it's also interesting, interesting to me anyway, to think of his thievery in the contexts of: (a) his class & the extent to which his aesthetic impulses might be thought of as class-based; and (b) what his prolific re-use of others's lines (including his own) means in terms of how he experienced language: "The world has my flesh on," as Vincent Ferrini once wrote. I think this ties in very nicely with another sub-thread on this list: His openness to a relatively wide spectrum of poetries. That's a specific form of being, a particular way of moving through the world, & through the world of letters.

I'm going to see the woman who runs Pomander Books tonight & so I'll see if I can get the name of the crow who swept off with your _Sonnets_--then you or I can build an altar or whatever & Berrigan's ghost (which truly will never die) will go beat him or her up.

Have fun,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

380. jarnot
warsh/equi reading
Sun 8 Mar 1998

On Monday March 9th at 7:30 pm,

Lewis Warsh and Elaine Equi will be reading at KGB
(85 East 4th Street, NYC, between 2nd and 3rd Avenues)

Admission is free.

↑ Index

381. dbuuck
address inquiry
Sun 8 Mar 1998

---

i'm looking for up-to-date address or email info for the following:

jen hofer
jeff derkson
maria galvez-breton

back-channel is fine. many thanks-- david buuck

↑ Index

382. Hank Lazer
Re: Doublespace
Sun 8 Mar 1998

A week or so ago there were a couple of posts regarding my book _Doublespace_. Patrick Pritchett and Jacques Debrot had raised some questions about the form of the book. I had hoped to reply sooner, but was unable to. _Doublespace: Poems 1971-1989_ (Segue, 1992, 192 pages) is an odd book. It opens in two directions, is _not_ a collected or selected, but is instead a deliberately made book in a conflicted or multiple manner, including under one cover seemingly incompatible modes of writing, from more "mainstream" narratives & lyrics to a range of more fragmented and collaged material. Book Two, which consists of three sections including the eight poem cycle of Law-Poems (which incorporates material from the Alabama Legal Code), opens (like a Hebrew book) from the back and moves inward to blank middle. I've written at some length about _Doublespace_ (in the Gale Research autobiography series, Volume 27), so I don't want to repeat all that's there, but will excerpt a few passages. Various blurbers-- back cover includes statements by Susan Howe and David Ignatow--have different takes on the book. I'll cite two responses that didn't get on the book jacket. George Starbuck wrote, "I was handed this as a finest, newest specimen of 'Language' Poetry, which it is, which it is. And I had been wondering if 'Language' 'Poetry' would be getting over its Molierian amazement at itself. And so I trudged, clambored, sauntered, stooped, for a long ways, tracking H Lazer's ingenuities and discoveries, a long way into it all before I woke up to where (and how) I had been taken. What a lovely, capacious, populous poem- of-America surrounded me. Hailed me, corralled me, jargoned at me. Jazzy and matter-of-factly apocalyptic." David Antin writes that _Doublespace_ "appears to present two ways of thinking and working that contend for the same (doubled space): a modernist way the way of collage that fragments and assembles langauge registers and styles in a junkyard of mediated texts, and an older narrative way taht tracks its meaning through life experience under the fitful lights of memory and desire; moving from right to left like Hebrew or left to right like English, the two ways refuse to blend, each exhibiting its own excellences and insufficiencies." None of which answers Patrick and Jacques's questions about the blank section in the middle, which for me represents a period of three years of writing which I've thrown away, writing which allowed me to move away from modes of Book One and begin the work of Book Two. (Though now I do not feel such a separation.) The structure of the overall book poses various questions: are the modes of reading for Book One at all compatible with Book Two? once sincerity has been understood as a trick of rhetoric, what contexts remain available for personal expressiveness? _Doublespace_ was the first book of poetry that I had published. I was 42 when it appeared. The book will soon go out of print. List price is $12. If you'd like a copy, I'll sell what I have for $9 each (which includes postage). If you want to order a copy, please back-channel me at [redacted] Make checks payable to Hank Lazer / 2945 N. Hampton Dr. / Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701. Thanks.

↑ Index

383. Jordan Davis
*Berrigan / self / writing / Bernstein
Sun 8 Mar 1998

As long as everybody remembers to associate Pepsi and Gem Spa with Berrigan, everything should keep moving nicely. The brand name in poetry, there's a study for an enterprising MBA/PhD.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but I've always read Charles Bernstein's remark that "It's a mistake to posit the self as the center of one's writing" (I think I must have butchered that) as a remix of Ted Berrigan's apparently self-centered project. Looking today at Reading at Berkeley (picked up at St Marks for $15 -- a year into my and Larry Fagin's bookstore boostering and they're still keeping the poetry shelf stocked -- if you're in town, stop by and smile, maybe even find the nerve to mention how good the section is to the staff) and I can't help but think Berrigan was as much influenced by Olson's public persona as by Whalen's poetics. Human Universe made it onto at least one of Ted's Top Ten Books of the Year poems. Bigman? At any rate, someone to contend with -- poetry as friendly competition?

Re: Tom Beckett's freaky connection of Berrigan with Bukowski; sure, and Patchen and Ferlinghetti and cummings and Corso and Brautigan.. but Berrigan is a lighter touch, becomes available to people later in their lives, no way could I have read Berrigan and got it at 14 (in 1984) the way I got Ferlinghetti (and Patchen?), or for that matter a year or so later, Paul Violi.. or Edwin Denby and Fiona Templeton a year or so after that.. and Tom Raworth. If you have to compare artists in terms of their "projects", in terms of what, for each, was the deal, then there's a little Matisse in Ted, that art should be comforting? and also Olson (the Tony Door side of Olson, not the Susan Howe side), that the poet is always "on".

am I really saying Berrigan shouldn't be thought of as a "gateway drug"?

Kim Lyons' poem "Eon" in the Jarnot/Schwartz/Stroffolino anthology is where I point you today.

Love,
Jordan

↑ Index

384. ScoutEW
Re: *Berrigan / self / writing / Bernstein
Sun 8 Mar 1998

---

yes, very much Olson and Berrigan, I see them very differently but they were both very much into the technique of writing, possibly Berrigan didn't express this as much as Olson but I see it there. I would love to get more on what Olson and Berrigan talked about all night on that park bench in Buffalo, I KNOW that there are some people on this list who know all about it! so tell... Jordan, in almost every picture of Berrigan I have seen there is a Pepsi can lingering somewhere near bye, well what can I say, Coke doesn't taste as great, they probably should have left the cocaine in ...!! P.S. anyone know any real good places to go in New Mexico, I will be visiting there soon and have never been to the Southwest or anywhere really away from New York State so let me know where to go what to see, I will be there the week of March 13-20, back channel me then thanks all, erik

↑ Index

385. rsillima
Steve McCaffery shafted
Sun 8 Mar 1998

Listmates,

Steve McCaffery has been shafted -- seriously so -- for the second time in one year by Temple University.

Last fall, the English Department at Temple conducted a major search for a poet, bringing in applications from many major writers, including several on this list, before selecting Steve for a tenure track position. Then the Department learned that funding for the position would not be made available and Steve was dehired. As appalling as that scenario was, this wasn't the first time that Temple has done this. Andrew Levy, I believe, was on the receiving end of a virtually identical set of circumstances a couple of years ago. And, as friends of Douglas Messerli and David Bradley know, Temple also has a track record of being less than good to the writers it does have, once it employs them.

To be hired and then "dehired" by a school is a totally disruptive act for the person who is treated like so much chattel. In addition to the sheer psychic abuse, it also takes the writer off the market during precisely the period when other, alternative academic jobs might become available.

Apparently, the department realized that poets of McCaffery's stature aren't just sitting around on trees and an effort was made to secure the budget line and undo the damage created by the original dehiring. Steve was finally hired and set to arrive in Philadelphia in June. MIT Press is even advertising him as Associate Professor of English at Temple in his ads for Imagining Language (an anthology he co-edited with Jed Rasula that is due out later this Spring). At l east, this was the scenario until, as I understand it, the president learned of an appointment and again stopped it cold.

The rationale behind stopping the appointment is that the school's enrollment ha s dropped some nine percent. But, given Temple's treatment of faculty, and especially of poets, this is sort of a "duh" kind of an excuse. The amazing thing is that Temple's enrollment hasn't dropped much further, given the active role the administration seems to be taking in driving good teachers and s tudents away.

I haven't spoken with Steve or Karen -- only with students and faculty literally spitting with anger and frustration over this -- but my understanding is that when they left for a tempo rary gig in the UK, they gave up their apartment in Toronto and may even have turned down real work under the illusion that Temple meant what it said in hiring Steve.

What can be done? There are different opinions. Some think that the university administration has so screwed up that it can be shamed into reversing itself this time. That's the opt imistic view.

Presuming, for the moment, optimism, people should write letters to the fol-lowin g administrators:

Peter Liacouras
President
2nd Floor, Sullivan Hall
Temple University
Philadelphia, PA 19122

Susan Albertine
Vice President for Undergraduate Studies
4th Floor, Conwell Hall
Temple University
Philadelphia, PA 19122

Corinne Caldwell
Acting Provost
4th Floor, Conwell Hall

Temple University
Philadelphia, PA 19122

People should stress the following:

Temple University will not reverse enrollment declines by deepening a reputa-tion as a place that good students and teachers should avoid. Teaching positions are not where economies s hould be taken if increasing enrollment is a serious concern. (In my line of work, the company tha t spends 15 percent of revenues on SG&A -- sales and administration -- goes out of business; I'd lov e to see how much Temple spends.)

Steve McCaffery is not a yo-yo. He's a major poet with an international reputati on earned over decades of innovative work. At the height of his career. Go into detail about wh at this means. Folks on the wr-eye-tings list ought to think about having Steve on tenure track at a major school would mean for contemporary vizpo, not to mention performance poetry etc etc.

Steve McCaffery would prove especially inspiring to undergraduate students (an a rea of particular sensitivity here). Anybody who took a course with him at Buffalo or elsewhere wo uld have great credence. Frankly, I think that anyone who's ever seen read in person knows that this would be true.

I'd also appreciate it if anyone who sends a letter would send me a copy.

Thanks,

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301

↑ Index

386. Rachel Loden
Berrigan/Bukowski/biography
Sun 8 Mar 1998

> Bukowski: I woke up, threw up, drank
> a beer, went to the track, got laid, threw up, drank a beer...etc. Berrigan:

> I woke up, drank a Pepsi, popped some pills, did this, did that, drank a Pepsi, popped some pills, etc.

Yes, clearly a similar sort of reportage goes on. But inside the poems (I think Tom would agree) these reports function in a very different way. Bukowski's posture is heroic and the details are there to document his (vomit-spattered) glory. In Berrigan the details are folded in as a sort of counterpoint. They are dull, they are giddily romantic, they don't want only one thing for the poem.

Some first thoughts anyway--

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

387. Matthew Kirschenbaum
Workplace
Sun 8 Mar 1998

PLEASE FORWARD WIDELY TO ACADEMIC LISTS
*N*O*W *A*V*A*I*L*A*B*L*E (free free free) www.workplace-gsc.com

a WEBsite+ an electronic JOURNAL+ a place to get DATES

W~O~R~K~P~L~A~C~E
a _peer-reviewed_ journal addressing the political historical and aesthetic conditions of a/c/a/d/e/m/i/c l/a/b/o/r in north america *brought to you by the graduate.student.caucus an allied organization of the modern.language.assocation

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

Workplace 1.1 (Feb. 1998)

www.workplace-gsc.com www. workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

Foreword by Marc Bousquet: "The degree holder is the waste product of a job system that produces Ph.D holders but does not use them. In language and literature more than any other field the teaching machine runs on non-degreed labor. . . ."

F^E^A^T^U^R^E^S "What Hath English Wrought" by Cary Nelson: "The astonished gaze that MLA casts on recent history suggests the windswept visage of a profession no longer in control of its fate. Eyes bulging, the figure is nearly swept away by forces it cannot comprehend. In stark terror at their oncoming fury, it dares not turn to glance at their destination. . . ."

"This Old House: Renovating CUNY's House of Labor" by Barbara Bowen
"The Future of an Illusion" by Christian Gregory
"Unionizing Against Cutbacks" by Paul Lauter
"What is an Organization like the MLA?" by Steve Watt
"Resistance is Fruitful: Coalition-building in Ontario" by Victoria Smallman

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

I^N^T^E^R^V^I^E^W
"Jobless Higher Ed:
An interview with Stanley Aronowitz" by Andrew Long

www.workplace-gsc.com www. workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

F^O^R^U^M
!~! Organizing Our Asses Off !~!
"Cannibals, Star Trek, and Egg-timers"
by Anthony M. Navarrette and Kate Burns, UCSD
"Unions, Universities, and the State of Texas"
by Kirsten Christensen and Ray Watkins, UT-Austin
"5,000 Down, 200,000 to Go: Organizing City University of New York"
by Eric Marshall, CUNY
"Critical Year"
by Ed Fox and Curtis Anderson, Indiana U.
"What's Next? Organizing After the COGS Union Affiliation Vote"
by Julie Schmid, U. Iowa
"Institutional Memory and Changing Membership"
A Response by Alan Kalish, Indiana U.
"Beyond the Campus Gates: The Personal is Still Political"
A Response by Vinny Tirelli, City U. New York
"Organizing Democracy:"
A Response by Karen Thompson, Rutgers U.

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

C^O^N^V^E^N^T^I^O^N R^E^P^O^R^T^S
MLA Annual Convention, Toronto, Canada, December 1997
by Mark Kelley, CUNY Graduate School
6th National GTA Conference, Minneapolis, November 1997
by Alan Kalish, Indiana University

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

P^E^R^S^O^N^A^L C^R^I^T^I^C^I^S^M
"Looking Forward In Anger" by Barbara White

"The Good Professors of Szechuan" by Gregory Myerson: "Until last spring, I was assistant professor of critical theory at UNCG. I didn't get tenure. Now I'm unemployed and competing with my students for one-year jobs around town. . . ."

"Performing Shakespeare: Writing and Literacy on the Job" by Leo Parascondola: "I arranged to take the test for bus operator, and I began a 21-year odyssey in a public conveyance around the boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx. . . ."

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

D^A^T^E^S
Fight rationalization by filing a WORKPLACE personal ad (free) services available at the website discounted book purchases hot links to academic labor and student orgs.

personals FREE FREE FREE classified listings FREE FREE FREE

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

Future Issues of _Workplace_:

Oct '98 1:2 The Melodrama of Difference: The University in Tiers Issue Editor: Tony O'Brien, Queens College, CUNY.
Feb '99 2:1 The Political is the Personal: Life Narratives of Academic Labor. Issue Editor: Cheryl Torsney, West Virginia University
Oct '99 2:2 Academic Labor, Social Policy, and the Law. Issue Editor, Randy Martin, Pratt Institute
Feb '00 3:1 Political Economy and Higher Ed. Pedagogies. Issue Editor: Wendy Hesford, Indiana University.
Oct '00 3:2 New Hegemony Studies: Illiberalism and Academic Labor Issue Editor: Marc Bousquet

www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com www.workplace-gsc.com

--and watch for a WORKPLACE SPECIAL COMING SOON:

E*L*A*I*N*E W*A*T*C*H
Showalter's War on Graduate Students

↑ Index

388. Aviva99999
Re: Doublespace
Sun 8 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-08 16:13:27 EST, you write:

<< [redacted]
Make checks payable to Hank Lazer / 2945 N. Hampton Dr. / Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701 >>

Hank, I'd like to buy a copy. My address is:

Aviva W. Vogel
P.O. Box 1085
Norwich, VT 05055
[redacted]

↑ Index

389. Charles Watts
Kootenay School of Writing's Operating Grant cut. Please help.
Sun 8 Mar 1998

Poets:

The City of Vancouver has turned down the Kootenay School of Writing's 1998 application for an operating grant. This is the first time in more than eight years that the city has decided not to award KSW a grant. In fact, last year the city increased KSW's grant. This makes for a crisis which threatens the continued existence of the Kootenay School, as this one grant has provided roughly half of KSW's annual income.

The Kootenay School of Writing was founded fifteen years ago by a group of writers who had moved to Vancouver when funding for the school where they taught and learned, the David Thompson University Centre in Selkirk, B.C., in the Kootenay Mountains, was eliminated from the budget of the (Social Credit) government of British Columbia. The School has been a completely volunteer-run, collectively administered organization throughout its fifteen year history. During that time KSW has sponsored writing workshops and seminars and maintained a venue for new and interesting writing, where writers from Vancouver and surrounding communities, from other parts of British Columbia and across Canada, from the United States, the United Kingdom, and other countries have read their work. The Kootenay School maintains a full schedule: during the past few weeks, Jeff Derksen and Susan Holbrook have read; the latest issue of _Open Letter,_ edited by Jeff Derksen, was launched; a memorial reading for Kathy Acker to benefit the Breast Cancer Foundation was held with readers including Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Sharon Thesen, Kate Van Dusen and Deanna Ferguson; and (last night) Rob Manery, Bill Luoma and Juliana Spahr read from recent work.

Many of you on this list have read or given workshops at the Kootenay School of Writing; others have been pleased to be members of the audience or have taken KSW workshops. The Kootenay School has survived and flourished on very little money. The operating grant application to the City of Vancouver is a very small one, about $4000.00. This money is used to support a reading space and an office which is staffed year-round by volunteers. The space is shared with the Or Gallery at 112 West Hastings in Vancouver (not a high-rent area).

The City gave as a reason for turning down this grant application that the Kootenay School's "audience base" is not broad enough. KSW members are asking the city to clarify this judgement, particularly since recent and past programming has emphasized building and increasing cultural diversity in reading programs. Audiences are consistently as large as those of most other reading series in Vancouver, if not larger. And I can't think of any series (other than those sponsored by the Public Library) which are as long-lived as KSW's.

The Kootenay School is now asking for support from as many people as are willing to write a letter. If you have read at KSW, or given a talk or a workshop, or if you have taken a workshop or been an audience member and you feel moved to help KSW, please write a letter urging the City of Vancouver to restore grant funding. You can send an e-mail to Rob Manery, who is coordinating the effort to persuade the City to reverse its decision. His e-address is [redacted]. Or you can write directly to the City of Vancouver, Mayor Philip Owen, Vancouver City Hall, 453 West 12th Avenue, Vancouver, B.C. V5Y 1V4. Or you can write, care of the same address, to any of Vancouver's ten city councillors: Don Bellamy, Nancy A. Chiavario, Jennifer Clarke, Alan Herbert, Lynne Kennedy, Daniel Lee, Don Lee, Gordon Price, George Puil, or Sam Sullivan. E-mail can be addressed to: [redacted]. PLEASE DO NOT WRITE TO THIS LIST, OR TO MY ADDRESS, BUT BACKCHANNEL OR BY REGULAR MAIL TO THE ADDRESSES GIVEN ABOVE. For more information, write to Rob Manery.

Thanks for whatever support you can give to the Kootenay School.

P.S. I'll be at work on various projects for the next few weeks, so I'll be off the poetics list for that time. People who want to be in touch backchannel can reach me via my e-address.

Best to you all,

Charles Watts

E-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

390. Miekal And Re: kootenay funding
Mon 9 Mar 1998

$10 is a week of food for me, but Xexoxial would gladly donate some copies of Hannah Weiner's WEEKS (which sell for $9 american) that maybe could be resold, or perhaps auctioned in a fundraiser.

maybe the funding climate is different canada ways, but depending on government funding for half of the orgs support seems mighty unsustainable, XE even tho it is a 501(c)3 has maybe gotten a thousand or 2 toward publishing & events in its 12 years of existence & maybe another 5 toward renovation of buildings, even tho it owns 4 houses & a 28,000 sq ft old school. then again we live in wisconsin where funding for the arts is 48th with only arkansas & alaska behind us. I also agree with Tom B's sentiments (I seem to find myself nodding with a lot of what Tom has been saying) that

"I've never benefited from the school directly but believe that we all benefit in the end when we support such projects. When we support one another."

& further that when an organization can be supported directly, that its continued presence makes a decided mark on the culture outside of its institutions. & how many incredible projects have we seen go down the tubes when the nea took a dive.

_____
Dreamtime Village
http://www.net22.com/dreamtime/index.shtml

QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza/index.html

email for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

391. TBeck131
kootenay funding
Mon 9 Mar 1998

When I published The Difficulties I never received any of the grants I applied for. I went into debt. Depend on grants at your peril.

 If even half of the people on this list contributed 10-20 dollars to Kootenay, we could eliminate its 4000 dollar deficit.

I've never benefited from the school directly but believe that we all benefit in the end when we support such projects. When we support one another.

I'm hoping that someone will post how to make contributions. I can manage 10 bucks and hope that others will help out too.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

392. Pierre Joris
Re: Steve McCaffery shafted
Mon 9 Mar 1998

Steve McCaffery has asked me to post the following clarification to the list in relation to Ron Silliman's post -- Pierre

To All Concerned:

A short corrective to Ron Silliman's recent post on my "shafting by Temple." Ron acted a little prematurely and, not having contacted me, communicated a somewhat erroneous state of events. Actually, I had already decided in favour of York University and Toronto over Temple and Philadelphia. Without going into detail, in the past few weeks Temple's bureaucracy had given both Karen and myself cause for increasing frustration and misgiving. Last fall I had also applied for an advertised position at York University in Toronto. When York's offer arrived it was competitive and appealing, so on Feb. 26th the decision was made. This, of course, is no excuse for Temple's action and no condemnation of Ron's zealous call to action. However, I hope it clarifies that I accepted York over Temple before final news of the freezing of the position came into effect Happily at this point Canada is immune to the style of gun-boat diplomacy that the so-called paragon nation of democracy conducts so frequently and effectively. Recall, perhaps, the shafting of Susan Stewart by Havard. So be it publicly known. Ron's other comments on giving up our place in Toronto are similarly unfounded; all is well with us in Toronto and I look forward to offering exciting courses in contemporary literature and poetics at a fine institution. Steve McCaffery

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
— La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard

one makes many”
— Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

393. Shemurph
Re: kootenay funding
Mon 9 Mar 1998

I support Tom B's suggestion that contributions be made to Kootenay. I will be pleased to contribute, as well. Although I have not personally participated in activities there, it is my perception that they are contributing in a terrific way to things that many of us hold as high values.

Give us an address, and we'll get this (contribution) thing moving ahead.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

394. Hank Lazer
Re: kootenay funding
Mon 9 Mar 1998

I too would like to support Kootenay. An address? I've not been, but have heard raves about Kootenay activities.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

395. Poetics List Administration
20th. C. American Women Poets; Call for articles (fwd)
Mon 9 Mar 1998

This was received at the poetics home office. FYI.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 05 Mar 1998 06:17:05 +0000
From: John Amador Bedford <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: 20th. C. American Women Poets; Call for articles

As guest editor for the "Revista Canaria de Estudios Ingleses" I am preparing a special issue on "XXTH. CENTURY AMERICAN WOMEN POETS" to be published in November 1998 and am seeking articles on any aspect, theme, author, or work which might be relevant to this theme, particularly readings which take into consideration gender, race and class issues and experimentation. The deadline for reception of manuscripts is June, 1, 1998, articles being a maximum 25 pages long with 30 lines per page. Additional information for contributors is available by sending me a request by email to [redacted] The "Revista Canaria de Estudios Ingleses" is published twice yearly, in April and November, by the University of La Laguna. Five hundred copies are published of each issue and, up to the present, thirty-five issues have been published. It is scanned, indexed, or abstracted by the Annual Bibliography of English Language and Literature, BD-ISOC, Institute for Scientific Information, MLA International Bibliography and Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory, among others. We have an exchange program with 223 other journals and institutions. Every contributor receives one copy of the issue and 15-20 offprints. Direct all questions to:

Prof. John Amador-Bedford
Dept. of Modern Philology
University of La Laguna
Tenerife
Spain
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

396. Beth Joselow generosity & readings
Mon 9 Mar 1998

I'd like to publicly thank Nick Piombino and Liz Fedowksi for arranging for me to read in the Seque/Here series in NYC this past Saturday. Arranging readings, publicizing them, setting up chairs, and all that is something of a thankless task, and takes a generous spirit to provide the energy. So thank you, Liz and Nick, and all others who provide stages for our work. In Washington, it seems, little would happen without the seemingly endless energy and good spirit of people like Mark Wallace, Heather Fuller, Buck Downs Ann Wallace and Rod Smith. Thank you all. ---------------- Say It With Words

Beth Joselow
[redacted] voice: 202/[redacted]
fax: 202/[redacted]
2927 Tilden Street NW
Washington DC 20008

↑ Index

397. Mark Prejsnar

(Fwd) SAWSJ Conference, April 24-26 (fwd)

Mon 9 Mar 1998

---------- Forwarded message ----------

I'm forwarding the following message to the list at the request of Kent Johnson, who I guess is off-list right now.....

Mark P.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Fri, 6 Mar 1998 16:47:11 EST
From: DavidA2647 <[redacted]>
Subject: SAWSJ Conference, April 24-26
To: [redacted]

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_889220832_boundary

--part0_889220832_boundary

Below is the initial call for the SAWSJ Teach-In and First Annual Meeting, along with a registration form to be mailed in.

You will be receiving a more detailed program schedule, but at this time we invite you to pass the word along and, of course, to register. We look forward to seeing you in Washington. Onward, SAWSJ!

****
DEMOCRACY AND THE RIGHT TO ORGANIZE: A NATIONAL LABOR TEACH-IN
April 24-26, 1998
George Washington University
Washington, D.C.

Scholars, Artists, and Writers for Social Justice is sponsoring an important public event this spring, entitled "Democracy and the Right to Organize: A National Labor Teach-in." This convocation, which will be held April 24-26 on the George Washington University campus in Washington, D. C., will bring together hundreds of academics, students, trade unionists, and social activists to explain, advocate, debate, and celebrate the right of all Americans to organize, both on the job and off.

Plenary speakers on the evening of Friday, April 24, include Julian Bond, civil rights activist recently elected chair of the NAACP board of directors; John Sweeney, president of the AFL-CIO; Kimberle Crenshaw, Columbia University professor of law; Steve Fraser, editor and writer; Juliet Schor, Harvard University economist; and Robin D. G. Kelley, New York University historian. More than a dozen workshops, plus the first annual meeting of Scholars, Artists, and Writers for Social Justice, will be held on Saturday, April 25.

SAWSJ, whose members have sponsored more than a score of labor teach-ins at universities and colleges across the country, believes that democracy and dignity at work and in American society requires the right to self-organization. But tens of millions of American workers are today denied this essential right. SAWSJ insists that whatever legal, political, managerial, or bureaucratic obstacles stand in the way of a genuinely unfettered right to organize must be swept aside in the interests of American democracy itself. This is a task, not only for the labor movement, but for all those who want to make the Bill of Rights a living document in the 21st century.

Saturday workshops will include sessions on labor and political action, the future of the Teamsters union, organizing the South, labor and the law, student activism, labor's connection to other social movements, and more. Among those who will be speaking at these workshops are legal scholar Karl Klare; Ken Paff of Teamsters for a Democratic Union; historians Gary Gerstle, David Brody, Andor Skotnes, and Nelson Lichtenstein; student activist Ligaya Domingo; sociologists Allen Hunter, Dan Clawson, Stanley Aronowitz, and Lynn Chancer; American studies scholar Nikhil Singh; labor educators Elaine Bernard, Kate Bronfenbrenner and Tom Juravich; and numerous trade unionists, including Bruce Raynor, Lane Windham, and Joe Uehlein. Tami Gold and Kelly Anderson, co-producers of the documentary film _Out at Work_, will also participate.

SAWSJ will hold its first annual meeting on Sunday, April 26, where it will elect its first set of officers. The group envisions a movement that can reshape the nation's political culture and foster the growth of a vibrant, militant, multicultural working-class movement. The labor movement needs an academic, cultural, and intellectual community that helps shape the terms of public debate, contesting corporate dominance of politics and culture. In turn, professors, students, artists, and writers need a progressive unionism that can provide a powerful voice for social justice. The time is ripe to restore that mutually empowering relationship that once gave hope and dynamism to the labor movement and its allies in the academic and cultural communities.

To register, to join SAWSJ, and/or to be added to our e-mail mailing list, please print out a copy of the form below and mail it in with your check (made payable to SAWSJ), to:

SAWSJ
2565 Broadway, #176
New York, NY 10025

For more information, or if you would like to volunteer to work on the conference, please contact Tami J. Friedman: [redacted]

You can also check our website: http://www.sage.edu/html/SAWSJ

If your organization would like to have a display table at the conference, please fax your request to Michael Kazin at [redacted]. We will do our best to accommodate you.

****

1. CONFERENCE REGISTRATION
"Democracy and the Right to Organize," April 24-26, Washington, D.C.

Name:

Street address:

City, state and zip:

Organizational affiliation:

Home phone: Work phone:

E-mail: FAX:

CONFERENCE REGISTRATION FEE: $5 student/low income (circle one) $10 Friday night session only $20 all others

2. SAWSJ MEMBERSHIP

MEMBERSHIP DUES: $10 student/low income
(circle one) $25 others with incomes below $40,000
$40 for those with incomes of $40,000 or above

3. SAWSJ E-MAIL MAILING LIST: You will receive timely information about SAWSJ activities and other labor-related programs, resources, etc.

___ I am currently on the list.

___ I am not on the list. Please add my e-mail address.

___ Please do not add my e-mail address to the list.

Make checks payable to SAWSJ (Scholars, Artists, and Writers for Social Justice). Mail them to SAWSJ, 2565 Broadway, #176, New York, NY 10025 .
********** *

--part0_889220832_boundary--

↑ Index

398. Aviva99999
Re: 20th. C. American Women Poets; Call for articles (fwd)
Mon 9 Mar 1998

In case you're interested, April.

<< Reply-To: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: 20th. C. American Women Poets; Call for articles

As guest editor for the "Revista Canaria de Estudios Ingleses" I am preparing a special issue on "XXTH. CENTURY AMERICAN WOMEN POETS" to be published in November 1998 and am seeking articles on any aspect, theme, author, or work which might be relevant to this theme, particularly readings which take into consideration gender, race and class issues and experimentation. The deadline for reception of manuscripts is June, 1, 1998, articles being a maximum 25 pages long with 30 lines per page. Additional information for contributors is available by sending me a request by email to [redacted]
The "Revista Canaria de Estudios Ingleses" is published twice yearly, in April and November, by the University of La Laguna. Five hundred copies are published of each issue and, up to the present, thirty-five issues have been published. It is scanned, indexed, or abstracted by the Annual Bibliography of English Language and Literature, BD-ISOC, Institute for Scientific Information, MLA International Bibliography and Ulrich's International Periodicals Directory, among others. We have an exchange program with 223 other journals and institutions. Every contributor receives one copy of the issue and 15-20 offprints. Direct all questions to:

Prof. John Amador-Bedford
Dept. of Modern Philology
University of La Laguna
Tenerife
Spain
e-mail: [redacted]
>>

↑ Index

399. k. lederer
Re: Ted vs. Ted-ism
Mon 9 Mar 1998

Dear Gary and all--I hate to say it, but I can't seem to find Watten's thesis here--it's in some kind of permanent storage--or is otherwise not in the computer (neither is Alice Notley's)--I'll keep my eyes open, but c'est la vie--

All best,
Katy
***

On Fri, 6 Mar 1998, Gary Sullivan wrote:

> Several lines from Watten's MFA thesis, "white yellow" (submitted to the University of Iowa, early seventies):
>
> I guess I want this to be > a kind of "Tambourine Life"
> but I am not that nervous
> Irish mother fucker
> who put me down
> in Iowa City.
>
> Someone who has this text on hand, or more-or-less immediate access to it (Katy?) should quote it verbatim. (The above is nearly word-for-word, but line-breaks are no doubt wrong & there's maybe a missing word or two.)
>
> I always wondered whether his (Watten's) sentiment was genuine, there, or not. Anyone know?
>
> Gary Sullivan
> [redacted]
>
> On Friday, March 06, 1998 12:57 PM, Jacques Debrot [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Then again, this is how Barrett Watten remembers it in "After Ted" (_Aerial 8): "Berrigan's reading of _The Sonnets_ at Langton Street contained some of the greatest verbal moments in American language." And, in fact, wasn't it Watten himself who curated that event?

↑ Index

400. Henry Gould
T. Wood's query re publishing
Mon 9 Mar 1998

How can poets find publishers? How can publishers find poetry?

How can the world find literature? (In a world of half-starved adjunct professors and non-English speaking reader-students - the only lovable ones!)

Every writer confronts his or her OWN illiteracy. (How to read "unrefined" experience?) Every word is a dictionary entry followed by... blank.

Every writer writes for the NON-artistic world - the world of our parents: in which the "free word" of literature, on which nothing depends, is sacrificed to the "functional" word, the word in harness, the directions in the backhoe manual. That forsaken world where language (and our parents) have been humbled. And carved in stone.

Literature learns how to litter a tree. And you want to become the tree. You can't become the tree unless you are food for the soil. The key is in your own missing words. The words for what you don't understand: what happened yesterday. Your life in the world of illiterate action (i.e. silence). The Great American Shovel. (Dig up a story.)

I'm sure these musings will be of practical value to Tim Wood & everyone!!

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

401. MAYHEW
favorite bad poets
Mon 9 Mar 1998

My favorite bad poet is myself. My favorite terrible poet used to be Berrigan, but then I realized he was a great poet. My favorite mediocre poet is Auden, but only when he is truly mediocre, when he is bad I don't like him and when he is great then he is not a mediocre poet. My least favorite great poet is Pound, but only when he is great, when he is bad I like him and when he is mediocre I am indifferent to him. My favorite pretty good poet is Kenneth Koch, except when he is great and then he is one of my favorite great poets. When he is bad he is still Kenneth Koch.

Doesn't this sum it up pretty much? What I like about Berrigan is the sense of being given permission to be a poet; his capaciousness and generosity of taste is part of this, and I'm glad to see the list is generous to him, as I'm trying to catch up with the 95 posts I missed over the weekend being away from my computer. Wow!!

I've always enjoyed Joe Brainard's drawings, and I notice that the sonnets are dedicated to him. Does anyone have any recent news of him. I assume he is alive and well?

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

402. linda russo
pomo metaphoracity
Mon 9 Mar 1998

dear listpeople

i've been thinking abt. metaphor as a(n) '(as)socia(tiona)l force' in (political) poetry, & also abt. a (healthy) poststructuralist skepticism that extinguishes the fire of/ turns off the ignition on/ & derails the vehicle, metaphor.

Was wondering if any of you all had thoughts, or could point me to some recent essays on a-metaphorical carrying over, which also deal directly with the absence of metaphor

thx.

↑ Index

403. Susan Clark
The Kootenay School of Writing
Mon 9 Mar 1998

Hello all,

Thanks for your messages of support for the Kootenay School. They are much appreciated.

The address of the Kootenay School is:
The Kootenay School,
112 West Hastings Street,
Vancouver BC
V6B 1G8 [v6b 1g8] CANADA

 note of US $ cheques : Because the School has no US$ bank account and exchange and bank charges will be heavy on small cheques, US$ cheques/checks should be made out RADDLE MOON and flagged "for KSW" on the memo line. RM will deposit them in our US$ account and pay KSW the exchange on the amount from our Cdn$ chequing account. These cheques can be sent to RM at 518-350 East Second Avenue, Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8 or to the School.

.... Otherwise: money orders or book donations [thanks, Miekal] can be sent directly to the School.

Letters of support are also welcome. Writers of letters should please remember that the mandate of the City of Vancouver is to look out for local orgs and audiences, and should slant their letters accordingly. To say that Vancouver is internationally renown as a centre for leading edge [buzz words are fine in bureaucratic circles!] poetries is good but better to say what this might mean for the city, and for local audiences.... Not to put words in anyone's mouth.

Letters should be addressed to :

Beverly Yahp
City of Vancouver
Office of Cultural Affairs
250 West Heritage Bldg City Sqare, Box 96,
555 West 12th Avenue
Vancouver BC
V5Z 3X7 CANADA

with cc: KSW at the address above for safety's sake [misfiling and all, you know]. Or email [second best option] the school at [redacted] and we can print out and fwd.

Thanks again for your support -- apologies for any duplication of Charles' post which I haven't read completely [have been out of town for a couple of days and am wading through email backlog] I wanted to get the address to those people asking.

Please email me if you have questions.

good wishes,

Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

404. s. kaipa
Re: Query
Mon 9 Mar 1998

Does anyone have contacts for John Yau or Myung-Mi Kim? Email is preferred, but any information is greatly appreciated.

Thanks,

Summi Kaipa

↑ Index

405. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: favorite bad poets
Mon 9 Mar 1998

Joes Brainerd sadly died of AIDS a few years ago. Ron Padgett cared for him during his decline.

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

406. Susan Clark
Charles' post
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I'd just like to second Charles' suggestion that letters be sent to City Councillors -- perhaps with copies of letters to the City's Cultural office [their address in my first note].

Susan

↑ Index

407. Maria Damon
Re: favorite bad poets
Tue 10 Mar 1998

At 6:03 PM -0600 3/9/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>My favorite bad poet is myself. My favorite terrible poet used to be >Berrigan, but then I realized he was a great poet. My favorite mediocre >poet is Auden, but only when he is truly mediocre, when he is bad I don't >like him and when he is great then he is not a mediocre poet. My least >favorite great poet is Pound, but only when he is great, when he is bad I >like him and when he is mediocre I am indifferent to him. My favorite >pretty good poet is Kenneth Koch, except when he is great and then he is >one of my favorite great poets. When he is bad he is still Kenneth Koch.
>
this is terrific, jonathan. keep up the good spirit on this unbelievably soggy and wind-pelted night.

↑ Index

408. Tim Wood
Re: T. Wood's query re publishing
Tue 10 Mar 1998

Henry,

You've always got a wonderful way of putting things. Even better because the semi-readerly writters of backhoe manuals probably not follow it, let all think it practical.

thanks,
Tim

At 01:48 PM 3/9/98 EST, you wrote:
>How can poets find publishers? How can publishers find poetry?
>
>How can the world find literature? (In a world of half-starved adjunct >professors and non-English speaking reader-students - the only lovable ones!)
>
>Every writer confronts his or her OWN illiteracy. (How to read "unrefined" >experience?) Every word is a dictionary entry followed by... blank.
>
>Every writer writes for the NON-artistic world - the world of our parents:
>in which the "free word" of literature, on which nothing depends, is >sacrificed to the "functional" word, the word in harness, the directions >in the backhoe manual. That forsaken world where language (and our parents) >have been humbled. And carved in stone.
>
>Literature learns how to litter a tree. And you want to become the tree.
>You can't become the tree unless you are food for the soil. The key >is in your own missing words. The words for what you don't understand: >what happened yesterday. Your life in the world of illiterate action (i.e. >silence). The Great American Shovel. (Dig up a story.)
>
>I'm sure these musings will be of practical value to Tim Wood & everyone!!
>
>- Henry Gould
>

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

↑ Index

409. Maria Damon
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Tue 10 Mar 1998

---

well this may not be what yr looking for, and it's kinda old hat too, but in the 80s poststructuralist crit metaphor seemed to be in decline in popularity and metonymy on the rise; metaphor was said to be a mystification while metonymy revealed the relations that connected the twoterms; metaphor was "mystical" while metonymy was "historical," etc. This preoccupation and devaluing of metaphor seems to have abated in the 90s, see intro to Apex of M 1,for example, though it's still kicking around.

At 12:44 AM +0000 3/10/98, linda russo wrote:
>dear listpeople
>
>i've been thinking abt. metaphor as a(n) '(as)socia(tiona)l force' in >(political) poetry, & also abt. a (healthy) >poststructuralist skepticism that extinguishes the fire of/>turns off the ignition on/ & derails the vehicle, metaphor.
>
>Was wondering if any of you all had thoughts, or could point me >to some recent essays on a-metaphorical carrying over, which also >deal directly with the absence of metaphor
>
>thx.

↑ Index

410. Nuyopoman
IN WITH THE OUT CROWD
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I have a few advance cassettes of my new album, IN WITH THE OUT CROWD, prod, by Hal Willner, featuring Chris Spedding, Wayne Kramer, Bobby Neuwirth and K Elmslie's longtime harpster Ken Deifik. The CD comes out in April. but backchannel me and I'll shoot one of these advances off to you now.

Bob Holman
[redacted]

↑ Index

411. MAYHEW
pomo metaphoracity
Tue 10 Mar 1998

The metaphor/metonymy opposition comes from Jakobson via Lacan and deconstruction. As Maria points out, it had a lot of play in the 1980s. I remember a lot of things like metaphor is modern and metonymy is postmodern also. There was a whole sort of tropological approach to poetry--remember all those essays about catachresis? I read a book trying to demonstrate the chiasmus was the central trope of lyric poetry. A lot of this has died out or been played out to its logical conclusion. I don't see a lot of point in seeing metaphor as the opposite of any other trope, kind of like seeing cats as the opposite of dogs or oranges from apples or men from women. The Jakobson essay could be looked at with a cold hard eye, in my view: for example, I don't see that metonymy (this spelling looks wrong to me) is syntactic and horizontal. If I say "tin pan alley" instead of "popular songwriting of the 1920s" I am substituting one expression for another, not linking the two expressions syntactically. Jakobson bases his opposition on brain-impairment, aphasia. But some of this metomymies aren't really that: for example one aphasiac said knife instead of fork, but this is not a good example of metonymy in my book.

Sorry to be so pedantic so early in the morning.

Wallace Stevens has some interesting poems about metaphoracity, such as the motive for metaphor. Also along these lines William Bronk, perhaps.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

412. Eryque Gleason
jayne cortez/amiri baraka
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I made the trip down to NYC from Albany last friday night to meet a friend and see Amiri Baraka's reading at the Dia Center for the arts. I heard him read in Chicago a couple years ago but the sound was bad and the trumpet was loud and Baraka could barely be heard.

The friend that invited me didn't say that Jayne Cortez was also reading friday, and it was a damn good thing because Baraka was apparently stuck in traffic all night and never showed.

But Cortez was incredible! I don't know if I've ever seen a reading where the audience responded so enthusiastically, and where the poet was so moving. There was so much music and rhythm, politics, anger, celebration, power, intellect.... I had to drive back to Albany friday night, arrived about two in the morning with so much energy left I couldn't sleep right away.

They sold every copy of her book before the reading was over, I ordered from Amazon. Her latest book is _Somewhere in Adavance of Nowhere_, High Risk Books.

Live from Albany,
Eryque

↑ Index

413. Cadaly
Online Poetry Workshop through UCLA Extension
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I would like to announce (and open the topic up discussion, if anyone wants to talk about distance learning, online workshopping, & related) my first formal poetry writing workshop ever, through UCLA Extension. Rather leadenly called "Introduction to Poetry Writing: Workshop (Online)", the course will be nothing like the course description, which is trite and humiliating.

UCLA Extension Online Courses
http://unex.ucla.edu/on_line.htm

It's a straightforward workshop, based on participant work and critique of same, no assignments except for the stuck, but a weekly poem deadline. This quarter (UCLA is on a quarter system), we will be using modern poetry written in English as "examples". Summer quarters will feature post WWII and contemporary poets, respectively. How did I arrive at the reading list? Ten a term from the list of poets writing in English I expect any poet to have read.

As you know, there is the Alien Flower Poetry Workshop Online, there are service provider workshops (I'm a mentor through AOL, but they offer some $40 workshops), etc. My course is the beginning of what I hope will become a second series of accredited online workshops (the first is at New School). The reason to take one of mine would be that you are isolated, in the country/on the road or at a school with no writing workshops, and want to pursue undergrad writing or a writing certificate. You would want something serious and fun, to practice poetry writing with an audience without resorting to a lot of nonsense about creative activity.

UCLA Writers Program
http://unex.ucla.edu/certprgms/writers/homepage.htm

The reason I'm teaching this is that I'm an intranet/extranet developer with an MFA. While I don't have a book published, I have more than 70 individual poems published, including some at these locations online: Agnieszka's Dowry (http://www.enteract.com/~asgp/agd-poems/jar8.html), ECLECTICA Magazine Archives (http://www2.polarnet.com/~eclectic/archives.html), etc.

My info (it's a bad web site, sorry):
http://members.aol.com/cadaly/free.htm

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

414. TBeck131
With all due respect
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I can't help but think that this list is overly preoccupied with dead poets. That's pretty safe.

Meanwhile, metaphor is like sex: there is always leakage.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

415. MAYHEW
Undue Respect
Tue 10 Mar 1998

"Let's not discuss him, he's dead." In my mind I don't really make the distinction, I guess. I was thinking of R. Silliman's essay "New Hope for the Disappeared," in which he talks of how fast we forget about poets; his examples were Ceravolo and Lew Welch--I can add Joe Brainard to the list now much to my chagrin. If the point is that we should be discussing poets While they are still alive then I couldn't agree more.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

416. Shemurph
Re: jayne cortez
Tue 10 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-10 10:35:52 EST, you write:

<< But Cortez was incredible! I don't know if I've ever seen a reading where the audience responded so enthusiastically, and where the poet was so moving. There was so much music and rhythm, politics, anger, celebration, power, intellect.... I had to drive back to Albany friday night, arrived about two in the morning with so much energy left I couldn't sleep right away.

They sold every copy of her book before the reading was over, I ordered from Amazon. Her latest book is _Somewhere in Adavance of Nowhere_, High Risk Books.
>>

We had Jayne Cortez out in Scottsdale not too very long back, and she provided a STUNNING performance. Her work and her presence are marvelous.

↑ Index

417. Thomas Bell
Re: IN WITH THE OUT CROWD
Tue 10 Mar 1998

Bob,
Please send to
tom bell
2518 Wellington Pl.
Murfreesboro, TN 37128

if any are left. Thank you.
tom bell

At 09:44 AM 3/10/98 EST, Nuyopoman wrote:
>I have a few advance cassettes of my new album, IN WITH THE OUT CROWD, prod, >by Hal Willner, featuring Chris Spedding, Wayne Kramer, Bobby Neuwirth and K >Elmslie's longtime harpster Ken Deifik. The CD comes out in April. but >backchannel me and I'll shoot one of these advances off to you now.
>
>Bob Holman
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

418. JDHollo
Hilda Morley
Tue 10 Mar 1998

HILDA MORLEY

To Hilda Morley's friends, associates, and readers:

Poet Hilda Morley, who recently moved from the U.S. to London, has been hospitalized and is in critical condition.

She has surfaced from a coma and is able to receive messages read out loud to her by friends at her bedside (Josephine Clare and Tamsin Hollo).

Faxes can be sent to her at:
011 -- 44 -- 171 -- 830 -- 2029.

****

Entry in POSTMODERN AMERICAN POETRY, ed. Paul Hoover:

"HILDA MORLEY b. 1919 Born in New York City and educated there and in Haifa, Israel, London, England, and Wellesley, Massachusetts, Hilda Morley has taught at New York University, Rutgers University, and Black Mountain College [...] Morlay did not begin to publish her poems in any number until the death of her husband, composer Stefan Wolpe, in 1971; since then her work has appeared widely. Her first major collection, *What Are Winds & What Are Waters" (1983), is a booklength threnody for Wolpe. In the preface, Denise Levertov writes, "her poetry so truly (and intuitively, I think) manifests the real meaning of the often-abused concept of 'composition by field,' that many other presences are as vivid around that central figure [of Wolpe]: birds, flowers, landscapes, street scenes, animals, whatever enters perception, however peripheral, is given its due." In her musical use of the poetic line, Morley is associated with Black Mountain poetics. Her other collections include {...] A Blessing Outside Us (1976), To Hold in My Hand: Selected Poems (1983), and Cloudless and First (1988)."

Hilda Morley is a wonderful poet and person. I feel privileged to have spent some time in animated conversations with her, one long-ago summer at Yaddo.

Anselm Hollo

↑ Index

419. Suzanne Burns
Re: Hilda Morley
Tue 10 Mar 1998

This is sad news-- I LOVE Morley's work and have for a long time. I've always meant to write to her to tell her that.

Suzanne

↑ Index

420. Hzinnes
Re: Hilda Morley
Tue 10 Mar 1998

To Whom It May Concern:

Though I have no fax available will you be good enough to extend my best wishes to Hilda Morley and tell her, please, that I am thinking of her, wishing her a recovery, and remembering her wonderful poems. Thank you. Harriet Zinnes

[redacted]

↑ Index

421. TBeck131
Re: Undue Respect
Tue 10 Mar 1998

---

bet -ter read when not dead

TomB

↑ Index

422. Steven Marks
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Tue 10 Mar 1998

Rosmarie Waldrop speaks to this in her essay, "Form and Discontent," in the fall/winter '96 issue of Diacritics. She speaks, among many other things, of Olson referring to the vertical tendency of metaphor as "the suck of symbol." Waldrop: "Metaphor as a hotline to transcendence, to divine meaning, which casts the poet in the role of a special being, a priest or prophet." In short, Romanticism. On metonymy: "composition and syntax," "stess on how the elements were combined on the surface, how they sat next to each other on the page, how they followed each other in the theater." Or, "the Neoclassical aesthetic."

Metaphors: hotline, casts in the role, sat next to each other, theater Metonymy: priest?, prophet?

Metaphors 4
Metonymy 2

or is it?

Metaphors 6
Metonymy 0

metonymy: the Red Sox of the Trope Major leagues

it's confusing
Steven

On Tue, 10 Mar 1998, Maria Damon wrote:

> well this may not be what yr looking for, and it's kinda old hat too, but in the 80s poststructuralist crit metaphor seemed to be in decline in popularity and metonymy on the rise; metaphor was said to be a mystification while metonymy revealed the relations that connected the twoterms; metaphor was "mystical" while metonymy was "historical," etc. This preoccupation and devaluing of metaphor seems to have abated in the 90s, see intro to Apex of M 1,for example, though it's still kicking around.
>
> At 12:44 AM +0000 3/10/98, linda russo wrote:
> dear listpeople
>
> i've been thinking abt. metaphor as a(n) '(as)socia(tiona)l force' in (political) poetry, & also abt. a (healthy) poststructuralist skepticism that extinguishes the fire of/ turns off the ignition on/ & derails the vehicle, metaphor.
>
> Was wondering if any of you all had thoughts, or could point me to some recent essays on a-metaphorical carrying over, which also deal directly with the absence of metaphor
>
> thx.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

423. George Thompson
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Tue 10 Mar 1998

I don't see any point in dramatizing this metaphor vs metonymy thing. They are both basic, essential elements of ALL LANGUAGE [sorry poets, ALL LANGUAGE]. Metaphor has to do with paradigmatic relations, metonymy with syntagmatic relations.

Take away this set of relations and you deprive yourselves of a significant tool for understanding how the mind works, how ALL MINDS WORK [not just poetic minds].

This is not a matter of politics or poetics.

GT

↑ Index

424. SSSCHAEFER
query
Tue 10 Mar 1998

Anyone have Mary Burger's e-mail address? I could sure use it. Also Franklin Bruno.

↑ Index

425. AERIALEDGE
Re: POETICS Digest - 8 Mar 1998 to 9 Mar 1998
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Re Berrigan/Watten. Don't know anything about the MFA thesis but the his piece in Aerial 8 is genuinely appreciative. Also, the reading of The Sonnets, Complete, at 80 Langton is possibly the single greatest poetry reading I've ever heard.

↑ Index

426. david bromige
metaphor et al
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I agree with George Thompson, with the rider that whenever there is invention of language, that is what is meant by poesis. It isnt always done by demarcated-off _poets_ , but they have made it their business to preserve such innovation and to create as 'twere websites where such generative play keeps us conscious of precisely that which George indicates in his post. David

↑ Index

427. henry gould
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

On Tue, 10 Mar 1998 18:57:46 -0500 Steven Marks said:
>Rosmarie Waldrop speaks to this in her essay, "Form and Discontent," in >the fall/winter '96 issue of Diacritics. She speaks, among many other >things, of Olson referring to the vertical tendency of metaphor as "the >suck of symbol." Waldrop: "Metaphor as a hotline to transcendence, to >divine meaning, which casts the poet in the role of a special being, a >priest or prophet." In short, Romanticism. On metonymy: "composition and >syntax," "stess on how the elements were combined on the surface, how they >sat next to each other on the page, how they followed each other in the >theater." Or, "the Neoclassical aesthetic."

I also agree with George Thompson. I think Rosmarie Waldrop's piece is only one among a great many which used this opposition to defend (sort of after-the-fact) the whole stream of open, experimental, documentary poetics stemming mainly from Pound, and also to support what is seen as a feminist, secular, "anti-logocentric" worldview. It is a simple fact that 20th century poetry explores whole new regions via metonymy, parataxis, and collage, so it is understandable that people would remark on the special resources of these aspects of language use. But this idea that metaphor rather than metonymy can be put to vatic, religious use - that one is sacred, the other secular - is there any evidence of this? Or is Waldrop's real target the attempt to provide any single, stable "meaning" in poetry?

The Russian Formalists sort of codified these two axes of composition in poetry, and various poets have been drawn to their theories for technical explanations of what they're doing. As I've said before here & have tried to point out in a couple web essays (in Mudlark & in a response to Joe Brennan in Flashpoint), I prefer the theories of one of the Formalists' percursors and antagonists, A. Potebnia. Potebnia emphasized that words have an "inner form" or "inner image" - psychological, etymological, symbolic. Actually not a single image - words are concentrated sources, via this inner form, of infinite meanings. Poetry is not analyzable simply on a R. Formalist grid or axis of metaphor/metonymy, because the inner form of the word per se is always generating new clusters of meaning & effect. Potebnia as you might guess shows some kinship with the ideas of Annensky and Mandelstam, in particular.

I'm not a scholar myself & admit these are hunches rather than researches, but they're useful orientations for me anyway.
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

428. Suzanne Burns
Re: Hilda Morley
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Anselm:

I accidentally deleted the posting that had her fax number-- I really would love to send my appreciation and good wishes. Carolyn Kizer introduced me to her work years ago, and Cloudless at First is a book I have always had in my bag when I have travelled. Could you email me her number? Thanks?

Suzanne

Suzanne

↑ Index

429. Steven Marks
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I agree that metonymy should have no privilege over metaphor and that both are parts of all languages. What I found interesting in the Waldrop quotes that I provided was that she couldn't get away from using metaphors. And who can? Or would want to? I remember about 25 years ago, I vowed to rid my writing of all metaphor. I'm not sure why. I think I thought of metaphors as being somehow "false." Well, this project didn't last long. I soon realized that common, everyday words themselves were metaphors. For example, "metaphor," which comes from roots meaning change and to bear. I always had this image of an old man carrying bundles of similarities across a bridge from one word to another. Still, this all said, I still wonder why language is this way. Could it have gone another route? I suppose these are more anthropological questions than political ones, although that line has to be blurry at some point as well. Maybe they are even physiological questions. Some researchers believe we developed speech because we, as a species, are predominately right-handed. Thus, we used the left side of our brain for picking fruits, nabbing grubs and just generally hanging around. This freed the right side of our brain to do what it does best -- speech. Can we blame it all on a gene that decided to favor right-handedness? What if it had decided left-handedness? Or split right down the middle?

Some early morning thoughts.

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

430. Michael Magee
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I certainly agree that I wouldn't want to get rid of metaphor, & its a mistake, I think, to associate it primarily, immediately, etc, with poetry. There's almost no vernacular expression which doesn't include it. Zora Neale Hurston's fascinating essay, "Characteristics of Negro Expression," has some great examples of how metaphor and simile gets employed in African-American vernacular English. My favorites: "One at a time, like lawyers going to heaven;" "I'll beat you till you smell like onions;" calling deceivers "cloakers," and Molasses "mule blood," this latter being a fine example of the way metaphor can act, not to transcend but to do precisely the opposite, bring thing back down to earth, materiality, production, politics. -m.

According to Steven Marks:
> > I agree that metonymy should have no privilege over metaphor and that > both are parts of all languages. What I found interesting in the Waldrop > quotes that I provided was that she couldn't get away from using > metaphors. And who can? Or would want to? I remember about 25 years ago, I
> vowed to rid my writing of all metaphor. I'm not sure why. I think I > thought of metaphors as being somehow "false." Well, this project didn't > last long. I soon realized that common, everyday words themselves were > metaphors. For example, "metaphor," which comes from roots meaning change > and to bear. I always had this image of an old man carrying bundles of > similarities across a bridge from one word to another. Still, this all > said, I still wonder why language is this way. Could it have gone another > route? I suppose these are more anthropological questions than political > ones, although that line has to be blurry at some point as well. Maybe > they are even physiological questions. Some researchers believe we > developed speech because we, as a species, are predominately right-handed.
> Thus, we used the left side of our brain for picking fruits, nabbing grubs > and just generally hanging around. This freed the right side of our brain > to do what it does best -- speech. Can we blame it all on a gene that > decided to favor right-handedness? What if it had decided left-handedness?
> Or split right down the middle?
>

> Some early morning thoughts.
>
> cheers,
> Steven
>
> _____
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> _____
>

↑ Index

431. Henry
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998 09:40:08 -0500 Steven Marks said:
 Some researchers believe we >developed speech because we, as a species, are predominately right-handed.
>Thus, we used the left side of our brain for picking fruits, nabbing grubs >and just generally hanging around. This freed the right side of our brain >to do what it does best -- speech. Can we blame it all on a gene that >decided to favor right-handedness? What if it had decided left-handedness?
>Or split right down the middle?

I like Vico's idea that nabbing grubs & speech are basically THE SAME activity. That writing came before speech because the 1st speech ("grasping") was gesture - which became drawing - which became writing - which eventually became verbal "signs". - Henry G.(definitely lefthanded)

↑ Index

432. Douglas Barbour
Re: McCaffery & the breaking of the Temple
Wed 11 Mar 1998

It's really good to hear that Steve McCaffery is better off than we at first thought, although Temple still has a lot to answer for. But, parochially, it's kinda nice that he'll still be around in Canada to shake things up. It's been far too long & hard a road for him, but maybe the deserving do get something eventually.

==========

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

434. k. lederer
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I'm left-handed! And yes, so were all of the possible presidents you listed, Chris--

Of note: Though language "resides" in the right hemisphere as a general rule--this residence is split in left-handers (like a summer house and winter house)--

When left-handed people have strokes or other maladies that cause aphasia, they have a far better chance of retaining their linguistic abilities (as aphasias generally mess with one side or the other)--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

435. MAYHEW
sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Me too! I bet a large proportion of the poetics list subscribers are "leftists"

I haven't read the scientific literature on handedness and brain hemispheres and the like, but I definitely do sense my brain working both sides of the street on language.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

436. Annie Finch
knife, phor/nymy, Cortez
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Jonathan,
Why don't you think knife for fork is a good example of metonymy?

Waldrop's equation of metonymy with the neoclassical aesthetic surprises me since I can just as easily think of metaphor used in a cool and witty way to take emotion out of things by unexpected analogies (as in Pope) and metonymy as a manifestation of the heated romantic mind's wandering openness to synchronistic suggestions of meaning through juxtaposition (as in Ode to a Nightingale).

Linda--another tip--I think there is an essay by Hayden Carruth from the mid-80's callled something like "Against Metaphor," explaining why he thought poems were better without it, which might be a good document of the 80's turn if that interests you.

Thanks for the inspiring report on Cortez!

Annie

Date: Tue, 10 Mar 1998 09:00:32 -0600
From: MAYHEW <[redacted]>
Subject: pomo metaphoracity

The metaphor/metonymy opposition comes from Jakobson via Lacan and deconstruction. As Maria points out, it had a lot of play in the 1980s. I remember a lot of things like metaphor is modern and metonymy is postmodern also. There was a whole sort of tropological approach to poetry--remember all those essays about catachresis? I read a book trying to demonstrate the chiasmus was the central trope of lyric poetry. A lot of this has died out or been played out to its logical conclusion. I don't see a lot of point in seeing metaphor as the opposite of any other trope, kind of like seeing cats as the opposite of dogs or oranges from apples or men from women. The Jakobson essay could be looked at with a cold hard eye, in my view: for example, I don't see that metonymy (this spelling looks wrong to me) is syntactic and horizontal. If I say "tin pan alley" instead of "popular songwriting of the 1920s" I am substituting one expression for another, not linking the two expressions syntactically. Jakobson bases his opposition on brain-impairment, aphasia. But some of this metomymies aren't really that: for example one aphasiac said knife instead of fork, but this is not a good example of metonymy in my book.

Sorry to be so pedantic so early in the morning.

Wallace Stevens has some interesting poems about metaphoracity, such as the motive for metaphor. Also along these lines William Bronk, perhaps.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

437. MAYHEW
knife and fork
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Why is not knife for fork a good metonymy? My reasoning is as follows: metonymies and synechdoches are usually things like part for whole, whole for part, container for thing contained, cause for effect, effect for cause, etc... That is there is a connection between the two things, one substituted for another. The work "contiguity," sometimes used to describe metonymy, is misleading, because it leads Jakobson to think that "thing lying next to another thing" is a metonymy. Bacon would not be a good metonymy for eggs, for example, though it could stand in for food in general or for breakfast. The test would be if you could understand the substitution instantly. Metonymy is usually highly conventional. If someone said knife meaning fork we would be confused.

This is perhaps a pedantic distinction.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

438. Hilton Manfred Obenzinger
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I too am left-handed, but neither the right nor the left half of my brain operate. I think only a small puddle of residue on the bottom keeps the whole pile burbling.

Hilton Obenzinger

↑ Index

439. Charles Watts
Re: kootenay funding
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Dear Sheila, Tom, Miekal and all:

Thanks for your wonderful words of support; thanks too to those, like Doug Barbour, who have written letters to the city of Vancouver and sent them either to City Hall or to Rob Manery. Again, Rob's e-mail address is [redacted].

If you want to make a financial contribution to the Kootenay School, please make out your cheque (check) to the Kootenay School of Writing.
The mailing address is: Kootenay School of Writing
112 West Hastings Street
Vancouver, B.C. Canada
V6B 1G8

I've suggested to Rob to subscribe to the list so that he can answer people's questions and comments about KSW; he should be on within a day or so.

Best,

Charles Watts

E-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

440. Henry Gould
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998 10:24:05 -0800 Hilton Manfred Obenzinger said:
>I too am left-handed, but neither the right nor the left half of my brain >operate. I think only a small puddle of residue on the bottom keeps the >whole pile burbling.

That's called ambidexterity. Your right hand "holds up" your brain while your left hand tries to right what's wrong with you. Just look in the mirror. You'll see naem I tahw. Righty hold-up. Lefty quick on the draw. - Genry Hould

↑ Index

441. George Thompson
Re: knife and fork
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Jonathan Mayhew's distinction is interesting, but I'm not sure I understand metonymy in the same way. I would have thought that metaphor is more typically conventional than metonymy is [and maybe that's why pomo's started opting for metonymy? -- that's just a guess, I don't know]. Fork for knife seems like a good example of metonymy for me, even if it is confusing.

When I was a kid I hated it when my tottering old grandfather would call me by my brother's name. He also had a habit of mixing up the names of all my aunts and uncles [his own children]. A little confusing, I suppose, but basically we all understood what he meant. It was metonymy, no?

The contiguity relation is interesting. A footprint is a metonymy, a sign of the creature who left it there in the sand [think of Robinson Crusoe's first encounter with Friday's footprints].

I hope that I am not being too simple here, because I agree with Jonathan that things can get rather complicated. I was once in a classroom teaching the difference between metaphor and metonymy. As an example of the latter I found myself referring to a murder scene from, I think, one of the Godfather movies. Some gangster types sitting at a restaurant table, one of them smoking a cigarette. The hit man bursts in, all hell breaks loose, blood everywhere, bodies draped all over the place. Cut to the cigarette sitting quietly in the ash tray. Hold on it for some fifteen seconds. A typical scene we've seen over and over again I suppose [conventional?].

What's with the cigarette? I asked, hoping to get the students to see the relationship between the cigarette and the dead man, who moments ago had held it to his lips [contiguity]. Well, they got the metonymy thing right away. But they kept on going. It was also metaphorical, they insisted. They showed me in fact that there was a kind of Homeric metaphor here about the length of a man's [a gangster's] days being analogous to the length of a cigarette's very short day. Metaphor. Interesting discussion about smoke as spirit, transience of spirit, of life, of consciousness, etc. [this was before Paul Auster's movie 'Smoke", BTW]. We finally came to the collective conclusion that the fifteen second hold on the ashtray may have begun as a metonymy but it surely ended as a metaphor.

This experience drove home the point, often made in the literature on these terms, that while separating them out in theory is useful, in practice it is hard to keep them apart.

Sorry if this is long-winded. Something got into me.

GT

> Why is not knife for fork a good metonymy? My reasoning is as follows: metonymies and synechdoches are usually things like part for whole, whole for part, container for thing contained, cause for effect, effect for cause, etc... That is there is a connection between the two things, one substituted for another. The work "contiguity," sometimes used to describe > metonymy, is misleading, because it leads Jakobson to think that "thing lying next to another thing" is a metonymy. Bacon would not be a good metonymy for eggs, for example, though it could stand in for food in general or for breakfast. The test would be if you could understand the substitution instantly. Metonymy is usually highly conventional. If someone said knife meaning fork we would be confused.

>
> This is perhaps a pedantic distinction.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

442. Susan Schultz
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I'm ambidextrous, which is the only thing I have in common with Bill Gates and Ken Griffey, Jr. Would that! I do notice that poets and athletes tend toward the sinister side. (This is _not_ to say that Gates is a poet, which my parallel structure is doing to me here.)

Susan

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

443. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Also left-handed.

Maxine Chernoff

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> Me too! I bet a large proportion of the poetics list subscribers are "leftists"
>
> I haven't read the scientific literature on handedness and brain hemispheres and the like, but I definitely do sense my brain working both sides of the street on language.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

444. Miekal And [Fwd: Rejected posting to [redacted]]
Wed 11 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

wrote a whole post about how my granny sed lefthanded ness was a sign of the devil but somehow the rightbrain of the listserv turned it into the fwded.

by westbyserver.westby.mwt.net (8.8.7/8.8.6) with SMTP id SAA00824 for <[redacted]>; Wed, 11 Mar 1998 18:30:37 -0600 (CST) by theta.acsu.buffalo.edu with SMTP; 12 Mar 1998 00:30:04 -0000 Date: Wed, 11 Mar 1998 19:30:04 -0500
From: "L-Soft list server at University at Buffalo (1.8c)"
<[redacted]>
Subject: Rejected posting to [redacted]
To: Miekal And <[redacted]>

LISTSERV does not allow the distribution of empty messages to a mailing list, because some users are unable to see the "Subject:" field from the original message.

---------- Rejected message (17 lines) ---------- by listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu with SMTP; 12 Mar 1998 00:30:03 -0000 by westbyserver.westby.mwt.net (8.8.7/8.8.6) with SMTP id SAA29025 for <[redacted]>; Wed, 11 Mar 1998 18:16:37 -0600 (CST) Date: Wed, 11 Mar 1998 18:18:44 +0000 From: Miekal And <[redacted]> To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]> Subject: Re: sinister and gauche References: <[redacted]>

----------45FA7532532--

↑ Index

445. Maz881
Re: The Kootenay School of Writing
Wed 11 Mar 1998

It's a terrible thing for KSW not to get that grant. It's a vital space for a bunch of hard working free-radically inclined good folks.

What can we do? During my recent trip there I did hear that certain items were for sale and that they are gorgeous. All real looking. Good enough to fool any corporate HR manager or academic dean. They are KSW sheepskins.

The following KSW degrees are still available:

BA : a dime a dozen plus $10 for photocopying
Hons BA: $15
MA : $2n
PhD : $50
Honorary PhD : $100

I'm going for the Phd myself and I urge you all to do so as well. And I'll give you a tip on how to use it since I'm such a generous guy (I hear there's an opening at Temple).

Send away for your degree today at the address indicated below.

Sincerely,

Bill Luoma

Date: Mon, 9 Mar 1998 17:01:09 -0800
From: Susan Clark <[redacted]>
Subject: The Kootenay School of Writing

Hello all,

Thanks for your messages of support for the Kootenay School. They are much appreciated.

The address of the Kootenay School is:
The Kootenay School,
112 West Hastings Street,
Vancouver BC
V6B 1G8 [v6b 1g8] CANADA

 note of US $ cheques : Because the School has no US$ bank account and exchange and bank charges will be heavy on small cheques, US$ cheques/checks should be made out RADDLE MOON and flagged "for KSW" on the memo line. RM will deposit them in our US$ account and pay KSW the exchange on the amount from our Cdn$ chequing account. These cheques can be sent to RM at 518-350 East Second Avenue, Vancouver, BC V5T 4R8 or to the School.

.... Otherwise: money orders or book donations [thanks, Miekal] can be sent directly to the School.

Letters of support are also welcome. Writers of letters should please remember that the mandate of the City of Vancouver is to look out for local orgs and audiences, and should slant their letters accordingly. To say that Vancouver is internationally renown as a centre for leading edge [buzz words are fine in bureaucratic circles!] poetries is good but better to say what this might mean for the city, and for local audiences.... Not to put words in anyone's mouth.

Letters should be addressed to :

Beverly Yahp
City of Vancouver
Office of Cultural Affairs
250 West Heritage Bldg City Sqare, Box 96,
555 West 12th Avenue
Vancouver BC
V5Z 3X7 CANADA

with cc: KSW at the address above for safety's sake [misfiling and all, you know]. Or email [second best option] the school at [redacted] and we can print out and fwd.

Thanks again for your support -- apologies for any duplication of Charles' post which I haven't read completely [have been out of town for a couple of days and am wading through email backlog] I wanted to get the address to those people asking.

Please email me if you have questions.

good wishes,

Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

446. William Burmeister Prod
It's getting betta
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Hey there listservfolks in quiet listcountry, another of our very own has a poem featured in the APR (This in the latest edition). It's Chris Stroffolino on the back cover with his (nice) poem "Lingua Franca." I believe Ray DiPalma was in the previous issue or so.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

447. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I'm a lefty as well. In my formative years, I used to write to the midpoint of a page with my left hand and then switch. Same with coloring, etc.

E. Hatmaker

↑ Index

448. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: knife and fork
Wed 11 Mar 1998

George's point points to a belief I've long held, that is that, Metonymy, by virtue of its drifting into Metaphor consistently in practice, is a sub-set of Metaphor, like the simile. Get it?

Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, George Thompson wrote:

> Jonathan Mayhew's distinction is interesting, but I'm not sure I understand metonymy in the same way. I would have thought that metaphor is more typically conventional than metonymy is [and maybe that's why pomo's started opting for metonymy? -- that's just a guess, I don't know]. Fork for knife seems like a good example of metonymy for me, even if it is confusing.

When I was a kid I hated it when my tottering old grandfather would call me by my brother's name. He also had a habit of mixing up the names of all my aunts and uncles [his own children]. A little confusing, I suppose, but basically we all understood what he meant. It was metonymy, no?

The contiguity relation is interesting. A footprint is a metonymy, a sign of the creature who left it there in the sand [think of Robinson Crusoe's first encounter with Friday's footprints].

I hope that I am not being too simple here, because I agree with Jonathan that things can get rather complicated. I was once in a classroom teaching the difference between metaphor and metonymy. As an example of the latter I found myself referring to a murder scene from, I think, one of the Godfather movies. Some gangster types sitting at a restaurant table, one of them smoking a cigarette. The hit man bursts in, all hell breaks loose, blood everywhere, bodies draped all over the place. Cut to the cigarette sitting quietly in the ash tray. Hold on it for some fifteen seconds. A typical scene we've seen over and over again I suppose [conventional?].

What's with the cigarette? I asked, hoping to get the students to see the relationship between the cigarette and the dead man, who moments ago had held it to his lips [contiguity]. Well, they got the metonymy thing right away. But they kept on going. It was also metaphorical, they insisted. They showed me in fact that there was a kind of Homeric metaphor here about the length of a man's [a gangster's] days being analogous to the length of a cigarette's very short day. Metaphor. Interesting discussion about smoke as spirit, transience of spirit, of life, of consciousness, etc. [this was before Paul Auster's movie 'Smoke", BTW]. We finally came to the collective conclusion that the fifteen second hold on the ashtray may have begun as a metonymy but it surely ended as a metaphor.

This experience drove home the point, often made in the literature on these terms, that while separating them out in theory is useful, in practice it is hard to keep them apart.

Sorry if this is long-winded. Something got into me.

GT

> Why is not knife for fork a good metonymy? My reasoning is as follows: metonymies and synechdoches are usually things like part for whole, whole for part, container for thing contained, cause for effect, effect for cause, etc... That is there is a connection between the two things, one substituted for another. The work "contiguity," sometimes used to describe metonymy, is misleading, because it leads Jakobson to think that "thing lying next to another thing" is a metonymy. Bacon would not be a good metonymy for eggs, for example, though it could stand in for food in general or for breakfast. The test would be if you could understand the substitution instantly. Metonymy is usually highly conventional. If someone said knife meaning fork we would be confused.
>
> This is perhaps a pedantic distinction.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

449. MAYHEW
metonymy
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I suppose my definition (of metonymy) is more classically based, that is based on actual metonomies used in language. These are mostly conventional, e.g.:

"the suits" for the upper management (clothing for the men wearing it) "wall street" for the financial industry (place for the activity there) "thirty sails" for thirty ships (part for whole [synechdoche]) "I drank two glasses" (container for thing contained, material for object made of this material) "the pentagon" (shape for building made in this shape, building for department housed there) "Hey, slim" (characteristic of person in place of person's name)

etc...

The use of the word metonymy to refer to a narrative detail (a character's cigarette) is the result of a wider application of the term in Jakobson's essay and the influence of this essay on literary critics. Jakobson's contention that realist novels were metonymical, for example, did not mean necessarily that there were filled with the figure of metonymy, but that they work in a way ANALOGOUS to metonymy, by exploiting relations of contiguity. This, I would contend, is a metaphorical extension of the original concept of metonymy as a trope--though a metaphorical extension that has gained wide acceptance, so much acceptance that I don't think it wise to press the point. I don't believe that metonymy is a syntagmatic operation, however; this is also a metaphorization of the figure of metonymy (one word is connected to another word just as a knife is lying next to a fork).

metonymy ="a naming instead," substituting a noun for some other noun or adjective connected to it in some way.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

450. Mark Baker
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Lefties write good poetry, but never the poetry of old age. A psych prof at UBC for years attended readings at the Kootenay School, noticed the absence of aged lefties, then published his research proving that lefties die young. Sophocles, a righty, wrote that to have been born leftie was next best to never having been born.

Who was the Blue Jays' first first baseman who threw left but batted right? Noticeable hitch in his swing.
What a LANGUAGE poet he would've been.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

451. George Bowering
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

> Well, i'm left handed. curious about others (ashbery is; my two least favorite beatles are, hendrix. during the 1992 pres. debates i was SHOCKED to see Clinton, Bush and Perot writing with their left hands. Is this true?

Not only them, but also Reagan.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

452. George Bowering
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

> When left-handed people have strokes or other maladies that cause aphasia, they have a far better chance of retaining their linguistic abilities (as aphasias generally mess with one side or the other)--
>
> Best,
> Katy

Not only that (and the discovery was made at McGill Univ., by the way), but right-handed people from left-handed families have a better chance that ordinary righthanders, though not as good as lefthanders. Fortunately, my sister, my brother and my daughter are lefthanded. My wife also comes from a left-handed family, though she is righthanded.

Roy Miki the poet/critic is lefthanded.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

453. George Bowering
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Well, Stan Persky is a leftist in all regards, and he'd better watch out. He is well into muddle age.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

454. Maria Damon
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

---

i'm a dyed in the wool lefthander too, and i'm glad to know i've got a chance of surviving aphasia with my yakking abilities unphased; the best news i've gotten in aa while.

At 11:00 AM -0600 3/11/98, k. lederer wrote:
>I'm left-handed! And yes, so were all of the possible presidents you >listed, Chris--
>
>Of note: Though language "resides" in the right hemisphere as a general >rule--this residence is split in left-handers (like a summer house and >winter house)--
>
>When left-handed people have strokes or other maladies that cause aphasia, >they have a far better chance of retaining their linguistic abilities (as >aphasias generally mess with one side or the other)--
>
>Best,
>Katy

↑ Index

455. ScoutEW
left ee's
Wed 11 Mar 1998

My twin sister Tanya is a lefty, and I am a righty
Both my grandmothers are left-handed, is this inerited down the female line?

↑ Index

456. linda russo
metaphoracity redux
Wed 11 Mar 1998

---

boy, this sure has drifted from my initial inquiry. I'm aware of the metaphor/metonymy distinction. Perhaps there is no answer to my q. as there is no essay that tells me exactly what i want to know! which is (to rephrase) I'm wondering if anyone's written abt. post-metaphoric "political" poetry -- specifically abt. the absence of metaphor.

as John Berger writes in _A Painter of Our Time_ (and I paraphrase) a poet Yannos used pigeons as a symbol of the revolutionaries' spirits after they were slaughtered in a square when upon the gunshots these pigeons flew off the window sills where they routinely sat; John remarked they had returned peacefully the next day, and said "the only image for man fighting is man" [double sic]

it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.

↑ Index

457. linda russo
Re: Hilda Morley
Wed 11 Mar 1998

---

i too love hilda morley whom i only recently "discovered" wondering who had been hiding her from me. please do tell her so if possible.

↑ Index

458. Dean Taciuch
Re: metonymy
Wed 11 Mar 1998

It's been awhile since I've read Jakobson on metaphor/metonymy, but I recall a comment to the effect that metonymy yielded less easily to analysis. Metonymy has always seemed the slippery trope, less "conventional: perhaps than metaphor. But as others have pointed out, making distinctions in actual usage is difficult--the cigarette example from George Thompson, for example, seems to me to function as both metaphor and metonym. I recall analyzing a number of Edward Taylor's religious poems this way--to unpack many of the images, one had to look at them metaphorically (often the leap from secular to spiritual) and metonymically (once he got to the spritual level, he could substitute freely, often metonymically, there). The images sound irrational at first (the only example I can think of offhand, amd its been a very long time since I've read these poems) is "wicker cage of rusted wire" to refer to the mortal body. I see metaphor there, in the substitution of cage for body which holds the soul, but wicker and wire is not a methaphorical substitution, and seems to me a metomyn, though not a conventional one (part for whole, container for thing contained, etc). Like substituting "knife" for "fork" . . .?

Dean

↑ Index

459. Roger Farr
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Phyllis Webb, Canada's greatest living poet, started a book in the 70's called "The Left-Handed Poems", but it was never published. See her "Kropotkin Poems" in "Wilson's Bowl" for a few ref.'s to left-handedness and poetry . . .

Roger

↑ Index

460. david bromige
Sinister & Gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

It's like many of us share the same firm of attorneys. Mark Baker's post worries me, though. In my sixties, mainly a leftie, & still trying to write? who am I fooling? On the other hand (groan), it's only this one UBC professor says so. I took psych at UBC and they lost my final -- gues their left hand didnt know what their right hand was doing! It was lucky for me : they had to give me a passing grade (just 50%), but it was a saturday a.m. class which I hardly ever made, (btw, the only person I knew whose notes I could borrow was also, I believe, a leftie) so I would likely have failed, had they found it.

Like others who have testified, I can be ambidextrous, if you have the time to spare.

Other leftie writers I've noticed : Cydney Chadwick, Cole Swensen. I used to have memorized dozens more, but the names are wandering through the blackberry patches in one of the lobes of my brain, browsing but hidden from view. My father was born a leftie, but it was the 19th C and he was beaten until he surrendered. He had admirable, copperplate handwriting with, of course, his right hand. (But he dealt cards with the left). My wife is a leftie, so natch our daughter is. We guys should team up and demand some rights (ouch). Back in the liberal 70s, we all of a sudden had lefthanded chair armrests for LH notetakers. By the Reagan era, these had all vanished. Stolen by LH students? I doubt it. Stowed on campus somewhere, taking up space but preventing Sonoma State from being thought bleeding heart? We should all lean on Bill for some breaks while he can still sign something official with his left hand.

While it's really interesting to me to learn who is and who isnt, I feel a bit frivolous when so much heavy stuff is going down. The McCaffery news was exhausting, not the least for being like a saturday matinee for kids, with evil Temple being foiled at the last minute by noble York--thanks to the perspicacity of our hero. I am so glad for Steve that that deal came through, and I echo Doug Barbour's sentiments re-its being good for Canada in general and Toronto in particular. But still, a huge disappointment for people in Philly. And what a way to treat a genius! Or any human being.

News re the Kootenay School is sad and frustrating also; lets hope there can be a happy ending there. I'm writing my letters tonight, Charles Watts; good to see your energy on the List. I dont know whether the KSW is still able to grant advanced degrees for a consideration; as I recall, a doctorate cost CAN$50. I myself would like an Hon. D. Litt. Also, I refer KSWers to my repeated posts about yard sales as sources of funds for such organizations. If writing to city council persons (too bad Jenny Shaw didnt win election to that body!), shouldnt one suggest that all one has heard about their fair city has made it likely that one will shortly be re-locating thither? And in due course, voting there?

I heard that lefties are more literal-minded than the other camp. Seems to me there's a part missing in that rumor. But what is it makes one susceptible to the possibility of nonsense turning meaningful? E.g. If youre knife to me, we can have a spoon and maybe even a fork. Is that a syntagmic chain?

Charles Simic has a fine poem about a fork. I think it's in _Dismantling the Silence_ . Oh, is that the time? Must dash-- David .

↑ Index

461. Susan Clark
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I once worked in a company where the whole art department and a lot of the editorial department -- most of them poets -- were left-handed.

So, register me -- the only left-hander in my family [when it's not genetic it's birth trauma they say] and Michael Gregson (Cdn mock-epicist), Lewis Carroll, Jean Genet and Pres.s Gerald Ford, Hoover and Garfield, too, if I remember correctly -- scary, isn't it? a sinisterly run country to be sure... (Harry Truman wrote right-handed but threw southpaw)

Keep the KSW support coming: the lives of untold birth-traumatized maladroit poets are at stake.

Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON

Vancouver BC
[redacted]

↑ Index

462. Maria Damon
Re: sinister
Wed 11 Mar 1998

At 3:26 PM -0800 3/11/98, Roger Farr wrote:
>Phyllis Webb, Canada's greatest living
>Roger

wow, never heard of her; is this a general consensus? tell me more, if this isn't too elementary and boring for everyone else on the list.--md

↑ Index

463. Bob Grumman
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

Okay, I've just added another box to my survey at Comprepoetica, for handedness. NOW will you guys send me biographical information?

Actually, I DO think the handedness, eye-color, height, etc., of people in various vocations are interesting. I wonder if there's a difference in handedness between lonaguage poets and mainstream poets, or between language poets and visual poets, or between visual and mainstream poets. Or between literary critics and poets.

I'm right-handed, by the way.

--Bob G.

Bob Grumman

[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492

Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site

----------6F0467FE340A--

↑ Index

464. Taylor Brady
Re: knife and fork
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I'd say rather that there's a fractional dimension between metaphor and metonymy -- i.e., that either one of these terms is always (?) encountered in the process of being folded over into the other. Jakobson is actually quite suggestive on this, and much less rigidly schematic than many current "readings" give him credit for:

". . . the new doctrine rejects the absolute character of time, and therefore the existence of 'world' time as well. Every identical self-moving system has its own time; the speed of time-flow is not identical in each system" ("Futurism").

[Contiguity (i.e., the temporal series) becomes substitution -- one can name and know the "self-moving system" as a characterizable whole. This, in turn depends upon the (metonymic) serialization of a range of such systems, articulated against the (again metaphoric) totality of "world" time.]

". . . shifting and change are not only historical statements . . . but . . . shift is also a directly experienced synchronic pheonmenon, a relevant artistic value" ("The Dominant").

"What is the empirical linguistic criterion of the poetic function? . . . To answer this question we must recall the two basic modes of arrangement used in verbal behavior, selection and combination. . . . [S]election is produced on the basis of equivalence, similarity and dissimilarity, synonymy and antonymy, while the combination, the build-up of the sequence, is based on contiguity. The poetic function projects the principle of equivalence from the axis of selection into the axis of combination. Equivalence is promoted to the constitutive device of the sequence" ("Linguistics and Poetics").

[Both the becoming-metaphor of metonymy, and the becoming-metonymy of metaphor. Of course, this is a matter of the "poetic function," so one might argue that this disposition of linguistic space around two dimensions (Jakobson frequently refers to the metonymic axis as "horizontal" and the metaphoric as "vertical") and the fraction of a third in which these integer dimensions fold / evolve / involve toward each other -- (long sentence) that this disposition is simply a matter of aesthetic distance from or distortion of everyday language. I'd argue, myself, that the "poetic function" is at least as much a matter of reading as it is the aesthetic intent of a writer.]

". . . a linguist deaf to the poetic function of language and a literary scholar indifferent to linguistic problems and unconversant with linguistic methods are equally flagrant anachronisms" (ibid).

[Here Jakobson seems to allow for the possibility of what I've written above. In other words, the sort of absolute distinction between poetic and everyday language which is the result of a certain canonical reading of Jakobson's work might be itself simply the product of a too-stringent disciplinarity -- one which Jakobson himself felt (in 1958) to be already obsolete. This is not necessarily an attempt to liquidate the difference between, say, poetry and headlines (though one might read Shklovsky for productive suggestions in this direction), but more the claim that such differences are not so categorical as we might think, depending for their maintenance on more "conjunctural" (or even conjectural) complexes of attention and intention on the part of writers and readers (and publishers and printers, etc.). This understanding of linguistic space as 2.n-dimensional -- a space of partial differences and partial correspondences -- allows one to envision a possibility for the work of verbal art other than that of the "conduit metaphor" which Jakobson himself finally and infamously gives himself over to. (For better critiques of this organizing metaphor than mine, see Barrett Watten, "The Conduit of Communication in Everyday Life" (Aerial 8), and Michael Reddy, "The Conduit Metaphor," cited therein). Rather than the two-dimensional narrative of composition -- i.e., the poet converts a (metonymic) historical / factical time-sequence into a (metaphoric) literary artifact, which is then metonymically "unpacked" into a reader's physical and historical time of reading -- one arrives at a sense of language-objects which are always already cross-cut by time, which is itself scored with / by words. Vertiginous and often frightening, but (I think) better suited to an accurate sense of what poetry -- both as and as apart from language -- might do. Sadly, I'd count myself among the population of the second half of Jakobson's anachronism -- not indifferent, but certainly unconversant].

To vastly oversimplify, one might read "language" or even "life" for "poetry" in the following passage, also from "Linguistics and Poetics":

". . . anything sequent is a simile. In poetry, where similarity is superinduced upon contiguity, any metonymy is slightly metaphoric and any metaphor has a metonymic tint."

A final tangent: I seem to remember reading something in which various Romantic / Decadent / early Modernist orientations toward the problematics of the sublime and / vs. the beautiful were aligned with "sets" toward these Jakobsonian axes of selection and combination. The beautiful, I think, was horizontal and combinatory (metonymic -- it had something to do with the guy in Pater's The Renaissance who preferred fondling sculpture to looking at it), while the sublime was vertical and singular (selected / selective) -- think of Ruskin's Gothic cathedral, which is always aspiring toward that which it cannot yet (ever) be. Interesting, if a bit overly-schematic. Anyone have any idea who might have written this?

Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

Patrick F. Durgin wrote:

> George's point points to a belief I've long held, that is that, Metonymy, by virtue of its drifting into Metaphor consistently in practice, is a sub-set of Metaphor, like the simile. Get it?
>
> Patrick F. Durgin
>
> `
> `
> `
> ` -----><-----*
> ` K E N N I N G|
> ` anewsletterof|
> ` poetry&poetic|
> ` s418BrownSt.#|
> ` 10IowaCityIA5|
> ` 2245USA\/\/\/|
>
> On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, George Thompson wrote:
>
> Jonathan Mayhew's distinction is interesting, but I'm not sure I understand metonymy in the same way. I would have thought that metaphor is more typically conventional than metonymy is [and maybe that's why pomo's started opting for metonymy? -- that's just a guess, I don't know]. Fork for knife seems like a good example of metonymy for me, even if it is confusing.
>
> When I was a kid I hated it when my tottering old grandfather would call me by my brother's name. He also had a habit of mixing up the names of all my aunts and uncles [his own children]. A little confusing, I suppose, but basically we all understood what he meant. It was metonymy, no?
>
> The contiguity relation is interesting. A footprint is a metonymy, a sign of the creature who left it there in the sand [think of Robinson Crusoe's first encounter with Friday's footprints].
>
> I hope that I am not being too simple here, because I agree with Jonathan that things can get rather complicated. I was once in a classroom teaching the difference between metaphor and metonymy. As an example of the latter I found myself referring to a murder scene from, I think, one of the Godfather movies. Some gangster types sitting at a restaurant table, one of them smoking a cigarette. The hit man bursts in, all hell breaks loose, blood everywhere, bodies draped all over the place. Cut to the cigarette sitting quietly in the ash tray. Hold on it for some fifteen seconds. A typical scene we've seen over and over again I suppose [conventional?].

What's with the cigarette? I asked, hoping to get the students to see the relationship between the cigarette and the dead man, who moments ago had held it to his lips [contiguity]. Well, they got the metonymy thing right away. But they kept on going. It was also metaphorical, they insisted. They showed me in fact that there was a kind of Homeric metaphor here about the length of a man's [a gangster's] days being analogous to the length of a cigarette's very short day. Metaphor. Interesting discussion about smoke as spirit, transience of spirit, of life, of consciousness, etc. [this was before Paul Auster's movie 'Smoke", BTW]. We finally came to the collective conclusion that the fifteen second hold on the ashtray may have begun as a metonymy but it surely ended as a metaphor.

This experience drove home the point, often made in the literature on these terms, that while separating them out in theory is useful, in practice it is hard to keep them apart.

Sorry if this is long-winded. Something got into me.

GT

Why is not knife for fork a good metonymy? My reasoning is as follows: metonymies and synechdoches are usually things like part for whole, whole for part, container for thing contained, cause for effect, effect for cause, etc... That is there is a connection between the two things, one substituted for another. The work "contiguity," sometimes used to describe metonymy, is misleading, because it leads Jakobson to think that "thing lying next to another thing" is a metonymy. Bacon would not be a good metonymy for eggs, for example, though it could stand in for food in general or for breakfast. The test would be if you could understand the substitution instantly. Metonymy is usually highly conventional. If someone said knife meaning fork we would be confused.

This is perhaps a pedantic distinction.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas

> [redacted]

<HTML> I'd say rather that there's a fractional dimension between metaphor and metonymy -- i.e., that either one of these terms is always (?) encountered in the process of being folded over into the other. Jakobson is actually quite suggestive on this, and much less rigidly schematic than many current "readings" give him credit for:

<P>". . . the new doctrine rejects the absolute character of time, and therefore the existence of 'world' time as well. Every identical self-moving system has its own time; the speed of time-flow is not identical in each system" ("Futurism").

<P>[Contiguity (i.e., the temporal series) becomes substitution -- one can name and know the "self-moving system" as a characterizable whole. This, in turn depends upon the (metonymic) serialization of a range of such systems, articulated against the (again metaphoric) totality of "world" time.]

<P>". . . shifting and change are not only historical statements . . .
but . . . shift is also a directly experienced synchronic pheonmenon, a relevant artistic value" ("The Dominant").

<P>"What is the empirical linguistic criterion of the poetic function? . . . To answer this question we must recall the two basic modes of arrangement used in verbal behavior, <I>selection</I> and <I>combination. . . . </I>[S]election is produced on the basis of equivalence, similarity and dissimilarity, synonymy and antonymy, while the combination, the build-up of the sequence, is based on contiguity. <I>The poetic function projects the principle of equivalence from the axis of selection into the axis of combination. </I>Equivalence is promoted to the constitutive device of the sequence" ("Linguistics and Poetics").

<P>[Both the becoming-metaphor of metonymy, and the becoming-metonymy of metaphor. Of course, this is a matter of the "poetic function," so one might argue that this disposition of linguistic space around two dimensions (Jakobson frequently refers to the metonymic axis as "horizontal" and the metaphoric as "vertical") and the fraction of a third in which these integer dimensions fold / evolve / involve toward each other -- (long sentence) that this disposition is simply a matter of aesthetic distance from or distortion of everyday language. I'd argue, myself, that the "poetic function" is at least as much a matter of reading as it is the aesthetic intent of a writer.]

<P>". . . a linguist deaf to the poetic function of language and a literary scholar indifferent to linguistic problems and unconversant with linguistic methods are equally flagrant anachronisms" (<I>ibid</I>).

<P>[Here Jakobson seems to allow for the possibility of what I've written above. In other words, the sort of absolute distinction between poetic and everyday language which is the result of a certain canonical reading of Jakobson's work might be itself simply the product of a too-stringent disciplinarity -- one which Jakobson himself felt (in 1958) to be already obsolete. This is not necessarily an attempt to liquidate the difference between, say, poetry and headlines (though one might read Shklovsky for productive suggestions in this direction), but more the claim that such differences are not so categorical as we might think, depending for their maintenance on more "conjunctural" (or even conjectural) complexes of attention and intention on the part of writers <I>and</I> readers (<I>and</I> publishers <I>and</I> printers, etc.). This understanding of linguistic space as 2.<I>n</I>-dimensional -- a space of partial differences and partial correspondences -- allows one to envision a possibility for the work of verbal art other than that of the "conduit metaphor" which Jakobson himself finally and infamously gives himself over to. (For better critiques of this organizing metaphor than mine, see Barrett Watten, "The Conduit of Communication in Everyday Life" (<I>Aerial </I>8), and Michael Reddy, "The Conduit Metaphor," cited therein). Rather than the two-dimensional narrative of composition -- i.e., the poet converts a (metonymic) historical / factical time-sequence into a (metaphoric) literary artifact, which is then metonymically "unpacked" into a reader's physical and historical time of reading -- one arrives at a sense of language-objects which are always already cross-cut by time, which is itself scored with / by words. Vertiginous and often frightening, but (I think) better suited to an accurate sense of what poetry -- both <I>as</I> and <I>as apart from </I>language -- might do. Sadly, I'd count myself among the population of the second half of Jakobson's anachronism -- not indifferent, but certainly unconversant].

<P>To vastly oversimplify, one might read "language" or even "life" for "poetry" in the following passage, also from "Linguistics and Poetics":

<P>". . . anything sequent is a simile. In poetry, where similarity is superinduced upon contiguity, any metonymy is slightly metaphoric and any metaphor has a metonymic tint."

<P>A final tangent: I seem to remember reading something in which various Romantic / Decadent / early Modernist orientations toward the problematics of the sublime and / vs. the beautiful were aligned with "sets" toward these Jakobsonian axes of selection and combination. The beautiful, I think, was horizontal and combinatory (metonymic -- it had something to do with the guy in Pater's <I>The Renaissance</I> who preferred fondling sculpture to looking at it), while the sublime was vertical and singular (selected / selective) -- think of Ruskin's Gothic cathedral, which is always aspiring toward that which it cannot yet (ever) be. Interesting, if a bit overly-schematic. Anyone have any idea who might have written this?

<P>Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>

<P>Patrick F. Durgin wrote:
<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>   George's point points to a belief I've long held, that is that,

Metonymy, by virtue of its drifting into Metaphor consistently in practice, is a sub-set of Metaphor, like the simile. Get it?

<P>   Patrick F. Durgin

<P>`

`

`

` ----->*<-----

` K E N N I N G|

` anewsletterof|

` poetry&poetic|

` s418BrownSt.#|

` 10IowaCityIA5|

` 2245USA\/\/\/|

<P>On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, George Thompson wrote:

<P>> Jonathan Mayhew's distinction is interesting, but I'm not sure I understand > metonymy in the same way. I would have thought that metaphor is more > typically conventional than metonymy is [and maybe that's why pomo's > started opting for metonymy? -- that's just a guess, I don't know]. Fork > for knife seems like a good example of metonymy for me, even if it is > confusing.

>

> When I was a kid I hated it when my tottering old grandfather would call me > by my brother's name. He also had a habit of mixing up the names of all my > aunts and uncles [his own children]. A little confusing, I suppose, but > basically we all understood what he meant. It was metonymy, no?

>

> The contiguity relation is interesting. A footprint is a metonymy, a sign > of the creature who left it there in the sand [think of Robinson Crusoe's > first encounter with Friday's footprints].

>

> I hope that I am not being too simple here, because I agree with Jonathan > that things can get rather complicated. I was once in a classroom teaching > the difference between metaphor and metonymy. As an example of the latter I > found myself referring to a murder scene from, I think, one of the > Godfather movies. Some gangster types sitting at a restaurant table, one of > them smoking a cigarette. The hit man bursts in, all hell breaks loose, > blood everywhere, bodies draped all over the place. Cut to the cigarette > sitting quietly in the ash tray. Hold on it for some fifteen seconds. A > typical scene we've seen over and over again I suppose [conventional?].

>

> What's with the cigarette? I asked, hoping to get the students to see the > relationship between the cigarette and the dead man, who moments ago had > held it to his lips [contiguity]. Well, they got the metonymy thing right > away. But they kept on going. It was also metaphorical, they insisted. They > showed me in fact that there was a kind of Homeric metaphor here about the > length of a man's [a gangster's] days being analogous to the length of a > cigarette's very short day. Metaphor. Interesting discussion about smoke as > spirit, transience of spirit, of life, of consciousness, etc. [this was > before Paul Auster's movie 'Smoke", BTW]. We finally came to the > collective conclusion that the fifteen second hold on the ashtray may have > begun as a metonymy but it surely ended as a metaphor.

>

> This experience drove home the point, often made in the literature on these > terms, that while separating them out in theory is useful, in practice it > is hard to keep them apart.

>

> Sorry if this is long-winded. Something got into me.

>

> GT

>

>

>

>

>

>

>

> >Why is not knife for fork a good metonymy? My reasoning is as follows:

> >metonymies and synechdoches are usually things like part for whole, whole > >for part, container for thing contained, cause for effect, effect for > >cause, etc... That is there is a connection between the two things, one > >substituted for another. The work "contiguity," sometimes used to describe > >metonymy, is misleading, because it leads Jakobson to think that "thing > >lying next to another thing" is a metonymy. Bacon would not be a good > >metonymy for eggs, for example, though it could stand in for food in > >general or for breakfast. The test would be if you could understand

the > >substitution instantly. Metonymy is usually highly conventional.

If

> >someone said knife meaning fork we would be confused.

> >

> >This is perhaps a pedantic distinction.

> >

> >Jonathan Mayhew

> >Department of Spanish and Portuguese

> >University of Kansas

> >[redacted]

> >[redacted]

</BLOCKQUOTE>
 </HTML>

----------6B6B5DDB579862B69112562D--

↑ Index

465. Thomas Bell
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I've asked this before here without much response so i'll ask again. What does 'parataxis' mean in literary circles? Psychologically it has a sense that i think is now pretty much limited to Harry Sullivan's works where it means prelogical or non-verbal action tendencies. It could, by extension, be applied in other 'systems' but I like the more delimited formulation and i think it works better in that framework. tom bell

At 08:00 AM 3/11/98 EST, henry gould wrote:
>On Tue, 10 Mar 1998 18:57:46 -0500 Steven Marks said:
>>Rosmarie Waldrop speaks to this in her essay, "Form and Discontent," in >>the fall/winter '96 issue of Diacritics. She speaks, among many other >>things, of Olson referring to the vertical tendency of metaphor as "the >>suck of symbol." Waldrop: "Metaphor as a hotline to transcendence, to >>divine meaning, which casts the poet in the role of a special being, a >>priest or prophet." In short, Romanticism. On metonymy: "composition and >>syntax," "stess on how the elements were combined on the surface, how they >>sat next to each other on the page, how they followed each other in the >>theater." Or, "the Neoclassical aesthetic."
>
>I also agree with George Thompson. I think Rosmarie Waldrop's piece is only >one among a great many which used this opposition to defend (sort of >after-the-fact) the whole stream of open, experimental, documentary >poetics stemming mainly from Pound, and also to support what is seen as >a feminist, secular, "anti-logocentric" worldview. It is a simple fact >that 20th century poetry explores whole new regions via metonymy, parataxis, >and collage, so it is understandable that people would remark on the >special resources of these aspects of language use. But this idea that >metaphor rather than metonymy can be put to vatic, religious use - that one >is sacred, the other secular - is there any evidence of this?
>Or is Waldrop's real target the attempt to provide any single, stable >"meaning" in poetry?
>
>The Russian Formalists sort of codified these two axes of composition >in poetry, and various poets have been drawn to their theories >for technical explanations of what they're doing. As I've said >before here & have tried to point out in a couple web essays (in >Mudlark & in a response to Joe Brennan in Flashpoint), I prefer the >theories of one of the Formalists' percursors and antagonists, A.
>Potebnia. Potebnia emphasized that words have an "inner form" or >"inner image" - psychological, etymological, symbolic. Actually not >a single image - words are concentrated sources, via this inner form, >of infinite meanings. Poetry is not analyzable simply on a R. Formalist >grid or axis of metaphor/metonymy, because the inner form of the word >per se is always generating new clusters of meaning & effect. Potebnia >as you might guess shows some kinship with the ideas of Annensky and >Mandelstam, in particular.
>
>I'm not a scholar myself & admit these are hunches rather >than researches, but they're useful orientations for me anyway.

>- Henry Gould
>
>

↑ Index

466. Thomas Bell
Re: sinister and gauche
Wed 11 Mar 1998

I write right and draw left poetry depends on where i'm coming from.
i right write and draw to an inside straight
tom bell

Bob, you can add to my bio?

At 08:45 PM 3/11/98 -0500, Bob Grumman wrote: >Okay, I've just added another box to my survey at Comprepoetica, for >handedness. NOW will you guys send me biographical information?
>
>Actually, I DO think the handedness, eye-color, height, etc., of people >in various vocations are interesting. I wonder if there's a difference >in handedness between lonaguage poets and mainstream poets, or between >language poets and visual poets, or between visual and mainstream poets.
>Or between literary critics and poets.
>
>I'm right-handed, by the way.
>
> --Bob G.
>Bob Grumman
>
>[redacted] http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Cafe/1492
>
> Comprepoetica, the Poetry-Data-Collection Site
>
>
>
>

↑ Index

467. Kevin Varrone
Philly reading
Wed 11 Mar 1998

For those in the Philadelphia area:

5 Corners Poetry Series Presents:

> Jenny Gough & Paul Muldoon
> Thursday, March 19th, 8 p.m.
> @ george's 5th Street Cafe > (5th & Gaskill Streets > between Lombard & South Sts)

Call Kevin @ [redacted] for more info.

Thanks.

↑ Index

468. Don Wellman
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

---

some off the cuff meditations:

parataxis (rhetorically a figure of speech) used to describe paratactic verbal constructions and opposed to normative subject predicate syntax such as "man sees horse." Examples include series of phrases, marked by repetiton and variation (parallelisms, coordination); read by pattern recognition, analyzed by classification rather than by qualification, modification, subordination; often thought of as non-hierarchical, except that series nest within series. Best ready example Whitman.

one truism: paratactic constructions, like chants appeal to the emotions; syntactic to reason, rationality elements within a paratactic structure can be syntatcatically complete: "caldorn boil"

but "caldron boil and caldron bubble" is a highly marked example of parataxis (marked by syntatctic parallelism, repetition, and assonance."

"the apparition of these faces in the crowd;
petal on a wet, black bough"

is a lightly marked, syntactically incomplete, example of parataxis. You have the bare bones of a series; each untit syntactically dissimilar, each unit marked by assonance in the musical phrase, arriving by different routes at the strongly marked assonance (in parallel position) of the /ow/ and /ou/ sounds at th end of each line.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

469. Steven Marks
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Wed 11 Mar 1998

Tom Bell,

The Princeton Ency. of Poetry and Poetics sez:

"P. is a stylistic term referring to a relative paucity of linking terms between juxtaposed clauses or sentences, often giving the effect of piling up, swiftness, and sometimes compression. A paratactic style is one in which a lang.'s ordinary resources for joining propositions are deliberately underused..."

Interestingly, the definition includes an example from Pope's "Essay on Criticism." To wit:

Pride, Malice, Folly against Dryden rose,
In various shapes of Parsons, Critics, Beaus

The Pr. Ency. says that the presence of "and" in the two lines would prevent us from making both single pairs between the faults in line 1 and the enemies in line 2 (Pride - Parsons) and between the two groups in relationship to each other.

Now, I would even say that perhaps the pairings are metonymical.

What would you all say?

Steven

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, Thomas Bell wrote:

> I've asked this before here without much response so i'll ask again. What does 'parataxis' mean in literary circles? Psychologically it has a sense that i think is now pretty much limited to Harry Sullivan's works where it means prelogical or non-verbal action tendencies. It could, by extension, be applied in other 'systems' but I like the more delimited formulation and i think it works better in that framework.
> tom bell
>
> At 08:00 AM 3/11/98 EST, henry gould wrote:
> On Tue, 10 Mar 1998 18:57:46 -0500 Steven Marks said:
> Rosmarie Waldrop speaks to this in her essay, "Form and Discontent," in the fall/winter '96 issue of Diacritics. She speaks, among many other things, of Olson referring to the vertical tendency of metaphor as "the suck of symbol." Waldrop: "Metaphor as a hotline to transcendence, to divine meaning, which casts the poet in the role of a special being, a priest or prophet." In short, Romanticism. On metonymy: "composition and syntax," "stess on how the elements were combined on the surface, how they sat next to each other on the page, how they followed each other in the theater." Or, "the Neoclassical aesthetic."

I also agree with George Thompson. I think Rosmarie Waldrop's piece is only one among a great many which used this opposition to defend (sort of after-the-fact) the whole stream of open, experimental, documentary poetics stemming mainly from Pound, and also to support what is seen as a feminist, secular, "anti-logocentric" worldview. It is a simple fact that 20th century poetry explores whole new regions via metonymy, parataxis, and collage, so it is understandable that people would remark on the special resources of these aspects of language use. But this idea that metaphor rather than metonymy can be put to vatic, religious use - that one is sacred, the other secular - is there any evidence of this?
Or is Waldrop's real target the attempt to provide any single, stable "meaning" in poetry?

The Russian Formalists sort of codified these two axes of composition in poetry, and various poets have been drawn to their theories for technical explanations of what they're doing. As I've said before here & have tried to point out in a couple web essays (in Mudlark & in a response to Joe Brennan in Flashpoint), I prefer the theories of one of the Formalists' percursors and antagonists, A. Potebnia. Potebnia emphasized that words have an "inner form" or "inner image" - psychological, etymological, symbolic. Actually not a single image - words are concentrated sources, via this inner form, of infinite meanings. Poetry is not analyzable simply on a R. Formalist grid or axis of metaphor/metonymy, because the inner form of the word per se is always generating new clusters of meaning & effect. Potebnia as you might guess shows some kinship with the ideas of Annensky and Mandelstam, in particular.

I'm not a scholar myself & admit these are hunches rather than researches, but they're useful orientations for me anyway.
- Henry Gould

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

470. Henry Gould
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

On Wed, 11 Mar 1998 22:43:40 +0000 linda russo said:
>I'm wondering if anyone's written abt. post-metaphoric
>"political" poetry -- specifically abt. the absence of metaphor.
>
>as John Berger writes in _A Painter of Our Time_ (and I paraphrase)
>a poet Yannos used pigeons as a symbol of the revolutionaries' spirits after >they were slaughtered in a square when upon the gunshots these pigeons >flew off the window sills where they routinely sat; John remarked they had >returned peacefully the next day, and said "the only image for man fighting is >man"
>[double sic]
>
>it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR >political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.

In my view if you're writing poetry you're already involved in the power structure. And indirect or direct speech are EQUIVALENT techniques. Indirect speech is often the most powerful. It is someone saying something too terrible to use words directly about. The metaphor or synecdoche or whatever only adds to the shock. Whereas in an (an)aesthetized cultural situation "direct" speech SEEMS more "political". The irony is that those who think poetry is a political tool are the ones most comfortable with the status quo, whether they realize it or not. Those outside the status quo use poetry politically in order to join the establishment. And those REALLY outside the establishment - are totally outside poetry too. - Edgar Allan Poe, Southern Gentleman

↑ Index

471. Kasey Silem Mohammad Hicks
Re: Knife & Fork
Thu 12 Mar 1998

By way of bringing the metonymy/metaphor discussion more closely to bear on individual verse passages, I'd like to point out how the knife = fork metonymy operates in a specific literary application. I'm reminded of that timeless lyric, whose author, if known, I've forgotten (it isn't Ogden Nash, is it?):

I eat my peas with honey:
I've done it all my life.

It may taste kind of funny,
But it keeps them on my knife.

Here, the knife would be a fork if "fork" rhymed with "life." Thus the rhetorical function of metonymy, in this instance, doubles as a principle of formal expedience. The end result (once we come to terms with the problems of figurative categorization) is a frustration of the reader's expectations that produces either a disturbing experience of lexical slippage or an equally unsettling image of gustatory incompetence--or rather, a radical flickering between both possible aesthetic fields, and hence the GREATNESS of the poem.

K

↑ Index

472. rsillima
Ambi-ducks-trous
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Being the dense sort, when they put a pen or pencil or crayon into my right hand, I used it there. It wasn't until around age seven, when (in the days before mini-T-ball leagues) playing baseball with my dad's right-handed glove I simply couldn't throw, so got into the habit of taking the glove off first and then throwing (a la Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher) until I could convince my folks to invest in a left-handed glove. When I tried batting left-handed, suddenly I could hit, and in fact I now do all sports as a leftie (even kick with my left foot). But I still write right-handed and my pen-person-ship demonstrates for all to see that this is not a "natural" mode.

One twin (Colin) is a lefty with a pen, tho a switch hitter. Jesse is strictly a righty. I've been told that such a division is almost standard with twins.

Count Erica Hunt among the lefties.

Ron

↑ Index

473. Schuchat Simon
Re: Ambi-ducks-trous
Thu 12 Mar 1998

I am usually left handed, e.g., writing, scratching, daily tasks, knife and fork using, etc. when I went to Shanghai however I was not allowed (I mean this literally) to use chopsticks with my left hand -- they would be physically taken from my left hand and put into my right hand. so the only major task in which I am right handed is eating with chopsticks. at one point a friend was going to teach me calligraphy with a brush; he said that I would have to do it with my right hand, otherwise the stroke order would be wrong. I decided not to learn to use the brush.

↑ Index

474. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Steven Marks wrote:
>
> I agree that metonymy should have no privilege over metaphor and that > both are parts of all languages. What I found interesting in the Waldrop > quotes that I provided was that she couldn't get away from using > metaphors. And who can? Or would want to? I remember about 25 years ago, I > vowed to rid my writing of all metaphor. I'm not sure why. I think I > thought of metaphors as being somehow "false." Well, this project didn't > last long. I soon realized that common, everyday words themselves were > metaphors. For example, "metaphor," which comes from roots meaning change > and to bear. I always had this image of an old man carrying bundles of > similarities across a bridge from one word to another. Still, this all > said, I still wonder why language is this way. Could it have gone another > route? I suppose these are more anthropological questions than political > ones, although that line has to be blurry at some point as well. Maybe > they are even physiological questions. Some researchers believe we > developed speech because we, as a species, are predominately right-handed.
> Thus, we used the left side of our brain for picking fruits, nabbing grubs > and just generally hanging around. This freed the right side of our brain > to do what it does best -- speech. Can we blame it all on a gene that > decided to favor right-handedness? What if it had decided left-handedness?
> Or split right down the middle?
>
> Some early morning thoughts.
>
> cheers,
> Steven
>
> _____
> Steven Marks
>

> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> _____

Both my kids are lefties, though their mothers andy parents and sister and I are all right-handed [my paternal gransfather was ambidextrous].

Check out famous lefties at:

http://stekt.oulu.fi/~mjh/lefties.html

!yojne

[btw: Lisa Simpson last week wrote right to left in one scene--when she worried that the "Simpson gene" would doom her to the intellectual level of Homer and Bart--but after she learned that the gene affected only male Simpsons, she wrote left to right]...

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

475. Henry Gould
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

In my view if you're writing poetry you're already involved in the power structure. And indirect or direct speech are EQUIVALENT techniques. Indirect speech is often the most powerful. It is someone saying something too terrible to use words directly about. The metaphor or synecdoche or whatever only adds to the shock. Whereas in an (an)aesthetized cultural situation "direct" speech SEEMS more "political". The irony is that those who think poetry is a political tool are the ones most comfortable with the status quo, whether they realize it or not. Those outside the status quo use poetry politically in order to join the establishment. And those REALLY outside the establishment - are totally outside poetry too. - Edgar Allan Poe, Southern Gentleman

Edgar's being vague and simplistic here. Making of poetry takes place on more than one level. There's the widespread impulse to make art, irrespective of talent or social position. It's a way of life and a gift economy. Then there's Literature as an economic activity and cultural institution. Edgar himself promoted the ideal of the Cosmopolitan, Aristocratic Man of Letters and Genius as a literary or staged property (while the status of the southern aristocracy and human "property" was in deep crisis) - the Author vs. the Rabble. This has been an abiding theme since the end of feudalism, just about. The question of common property or common good in every society and in world society - what is private, what is public, what is allowed as luxury, what is deemed necessary for survival - and how decisions like this are made, if they are made - affects the Literature

Industry and every work of writing. So a poet might choose to "deny art" - to "not use metaphor" - to do "straight reporting" or use "transparent, functional language" - "include documentary material" - etc. not only to "be political", but to change the dynamic of the literary contract between author and readers. To try to import an immediate, didactic element into a poem. Or a poet might try to carefully DISTORT "transparent language" in a way that brings out what such language conceals. Or a poet might design an allegory or symbol of a many-sided political situation - this seems like the function of metaphor on a "macro" level. Or a poet might "be political" by NOT being political - by foregrounding emotion, sensibility, aesthetics, in order to substantiate these evidences of life and humanity outside of any power situation, or, conversely, to present a reality that SHOULD exist if there were justice in the world.

All these forms of communication in poetry seem to be happening all the time in very complex ways. To "not use metaphor" seems sort of isolated to me as a literary "strategy". Isolated or abstract or something. But these questions of a writer's "contract" or position or strategy within the larger environment of what a society is doing - whether or not a particular writer can consciously manipulate these issues and remain an artist at all - these issues are the pivot around which the political aspect of someone's work revolve. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

476. Maria Damon

Re: metaphoracity redux

Thu 12 Mar 1998

At 10:43 PM +0000 3/11/98, linda russo wrote: >boy, this sure has drifted from my initial inquiry. I'm aware of the >metaphor/metonymy distinction. Perhaps there is no answer to my q. as >there is no essay that tells me exactly what i want to know! which >is (to rephrase)
>I'm wondering if anyone's written abt. post-metaphoric
>"political" poetry -- specifically abt. the absence of metaphor.
>
>as John Berger writes in _A Painter of Our Time_ (and I paraphrase)
>a poet Yannos used pigeons as a symbol of the revolutionaries' spirits after >they were slaughtered in a square when upon the gunshots these pigeons >flew off the window sills where they routinely sat; John remarked they had >returned peacefully the next day, and said "the only image for man >fighting is man"
>[double sic]
>

>it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR >political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.

while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the children ran in the streets."

↑ Index

477. Maria Damon
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Thu 12 Mar 1998

---

when i teach my favorite example of parataxis is the "Old Testament," because many students are familiar w/ the style if not the detailed contents thereof. then i move to stein, j bowles, etc. erich auerbach, in mimesis, has a chapter on the OT and how the parataxis (this and this and this happened, rather than this caused this to happen, and then that in turn caused a reaction, etc) creates a sense of timelessness or mythos rather than a sense of a narrative developing through time. gertrude said that the OT shd a a model for "new American writing" (in 1935), and auerbach's work is generally seen as a muted, if pointed, emphasis on the importance of Jewish culture to European culture; he also was writing (in exile) during WWII --so identitarian that i am, i tend to give this particular lecture an ethnic spin, though of course it goes beyond that as well.

At 10:44 PM -0500 3/11/98, Steven Marks wrote:
>Tom Bell,
>
>The Princeton Ency. of Poetry and Poetics sez:
>
>"P. is a stylistic term referring to a relative paucity of linking terms >between juxtaposed clauses or sentences, often giving the effect of piling >up, swiftness, and sometimes compression. A paratactic style is one in >which a lang.'s ordinary resources for joining propositions are >deliberately underused..."
>
>Interestingly, the definition includes an example from Pope's "Essay on >Criticism." To wit:
>
>Pride, Malice, Folly against Dryden rose,
>In various shapes of Parsons, Critics, Beaus
>
>The Pr. Ency. says that the presence of "and" in the two lines would >prevent us from making both single pairs between the faults in line 1 and >the enemies in line 2 (Pride - Parsons) and between the two groups in >relationship to each other.

>
>Now, I would even say that perhaps the pairings are metonymical.
>
>What would you all say?
>
>Steven
>
>On Wed, 11 Mar 1998, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
>> I've asked this before here without much response so i'll ask again. What >> does 'parataxis' mean in literary circles? Psychologically it has a sense >> that i think is now pretty much limited to Harry Sullivan's works where it >> means prelogical or non-verbal action tendencies. It could, by extension, >> be applied in other 'systems' but I like the more delimited formulation >> and i think it works better in that framework.
>> tom bell
>>
>> At 08:00 AM 3/11/98 EST, henry gould wrote:
>> >On Tue, 10 Mar 1998 18:57:46 -0500 Steven Marks said:
>> >>Rosmarie Waldrop speaks to this in her essay, "Form and Discontent," in >> >>the fall/winter '96 issue of Diacritics. She speaks, among many other >> >>things, of Olson referring to the vertical tendency of metaphor as "the >> >>suck of symbol." Waldrop: "Metaphor as a hotline to transcendence, to >> >>divine meaning, which casts the poet in the role of a special being, a >> >>priest or prophet." In short, Romanticism. On metonymy: "composition
and >> >>syntax," "stess on how the elements were combined on the surface, how they >> >>sat next to each other on the page, how they followed each other in the >> >>theater." Or, "the Neoclassical aesthetic."
>> >
>> >I also agree with George Thompson. I think Rosmarie Waldrop's piece is >>only >> >one among a great many which used this opposition to defend (sort of
>> >after-the-fact) the whole stream of open, experimental, documentary >> >poetics stemming mainly from Pound, and also to support what is seen as >> >a feminist, secular, "anti-logocentric" worldview. It is a simple fact >> >that 20th century poetry explores whole new regions via metonymy, >>parataxis,

>> >and collage, so it is understandable that people would remark on the >> >special resources of these aspects of language use. But this idea that >> >metaphor rather than metonymy can be put to vatic, religious use - that one >> >is sacred, the other secular - is there any evidence of this?
>> >Or is Waldrop's real target the attempt to provide any single, stable
>> >"meaning" in poetry?
>> >
>> >The Russian Formalists sort of codified these two axes of composition >> >in poetry, and various poets have been drawn to their theories >> >for technical explanations of what they're doing. As I've said >> >before here & have tried to point out in a couple web essays (in >> >Mudlark & in a response to Joe Brennan in Flashpoint), I prefer the
>> >theories of one of the Formalists' percursors and antagonists, A.
>> >Potebnia. Potebnia emphasized that words have an "inner form" or >> >"inner image" - psychological, etymological, symbolic. Actually not >> >a single image - words are concentrated sources, via this inner form, >> >of infinite meanings. Poetry is not analyzable simply on a R. Formalist >> >grid or axis of metaphor/metonymy, because the inner form of the word >> >per se is always generating new clusters of meaning & effect. Potebnia >> >as you might guess shows some kinship with the ideas of Annensky and >> >Mandelstam, in particular.
>> >
>> >I'm not a scholar myself & admit these are hunches rather >> >than researches, but they're useful orientations for me anyway.
>> >- Henry Gould
>> >
>> >
>>
>
>_____
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
>_____

↑ Index

478. Nada Gordon

VIRUS WARNING

Thu 12 Mar 1998

Date: Thu, 12 Mar 1998 10:50:52 +0900
From: Max Woollerton <[redacted]>
Reply-To: [redacted]
MIME-Version: 1.0
To: Achim Rottger <[redacted]>, KIFLTU Nada Gordon <[redacted]>, Subject: VIRUS WARNING

Dear Friends,

I have just received a virus warning from a member of my family. I'll copy the message, which is clearly important, expecially for PC users. I am not sure whether this affects Macs as well as PCs. The message reads:

NEW VIRUS WARNING

If you receive an e-mail titled "WIN A HOLIDAY', DO NOT open it. It will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this letter out to as many people as you can. This is a new, very malicious virus and not many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning from Microsoft. Please share it with everyone who might access the Internet. Once again, pass this along to EVERYONE in your address book so that this may be stopped.

Also, do not open or even look any mail that says 'RETURNED OR UNABLE TO DELIVER'. This virus will attach itself to your computer components and render them useless. Immediately delete any mail items that say this. American Online has said that this is a very dangerous virus and that there is NO remedy for it at this time. Please practise cautionary measures and forward this to all your on-line friends. End of message.

The message seems to have been sent originally on March 5th and has been through the Carribean, USA and Canada. I hope you find it helpful.

With best wishes,

Max Woollerton.

↑ Index

479. joel lewis
Hoxha & Salazar Rules!
Thu 12 Mar 1998

 'Wag the Dog' tickles Albanian prime minister

Albania's prime minister hasn't seen the film "Wag the Dog" yet, but he says he isn't afraid of life imitating art. In the movie, a U.S. president enlists the help of a filmmaker and spin doctor to stage a make-believe military assault on Albania to distract public attention from a presidential sex scandal. Prime Minister Fatos Nano, on a three-day visit to Israel, said he wasn't offended by the movie's choice of Albania as an obscure target for a fake U.S. attack. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2553290221-184 _____  Portugal to break record on Europe's longest bridge Portugal plans to cook its way into the Guinness Book of records by seating 15,000 people at the longest dinner table ever laid, to celebrate the opening of Europe's longest bridge. The table will stretch 3 miles along Lisbon's Vasco da Gama suspension bridge, which is due to open officially at the end of the month, and beat the previous world record by half a mile, organizers said Wednesday. Cooks are already at work preparing the 6,750 tons of "feijoada," a heavy southern Portuguese stew of beans, onions and assorted meat that will be served at the massive eat-in on March 22. The 11-mile bridge across the River Tagus opens two months before the launch of Expo'98, the Lisbon world fair which marks the 500th anniversary of navigator Vasco da Gama's discovery of the sea route to India.

↑ Index

480. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Ambi-ducks-trous
Thu 12 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

--Boundary_(ID_Sr6oKh8vlTbt0iAeOzqytw)

CNN factoid last night - which before this whimsical thread I would have ignored - who is the all-time leading left-handed scorer in the NBA? Answer: Artis Gilmore - over 24,000 points.

Just curious though - wouldn't the root meaning of ambidextrous imply having two right hands rather than a parity between the left and the right? Also, what's the Pound reference in _Cantos_ to "O Sinistro" which comes flooding back now unbidden?

Desperately awating the onset of spring,
Patrick Pritchett

From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: Ambi-ducks-trous
Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 5:34AM

Being the dense sort, when they put a pen or pencil or crayon into my right hand, I used it there. It wasn't until around age seven, when (in the days before mini-T-ball leagues) playing baseball with my dad's right-handed glove I simply couldn't throw, so got into the habit of taking the glove off first and then throwing (a la Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher) until I could convince my folks to invest in a left-handed glove. When I tried batting left-handed, suddenly I could hit, and in fact I now do all sports as a leftie (even kick with my left foot). But I still write right-handed and my pen-person-ship demonstrates for all to see that this is not a "natural" mode.

One twin (Colin) is a lefty with a pen, tho a switch hitter. Jesse is strictly a righty. I've been told that such a division is almost standard with twins.

Count Erica Hunt among the lefties.

Ron

--Boundary_(ID_Sr6oKh8vlTbt0iAeOzqytw)

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
<META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">

</HEAD>
<BODY>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>CNN factoid last night - which before this whimsical thread I would have ignored - who is the all-time leading left-handed scorer in the NBA? Answer: Artis Gilmore - over 24,000 points.</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>Just curious though - wouldn't the root meaning of ambidextrous imply having two right hands rather than a parity between the left and the right? Also, what's the Pound reference in _Cantos_ to "O

Sinistro" which comes flooding back now unbidden?</FONT></P>

<P><FONT SIZE=2>Desperately awating the onset of spring,</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2> ----------</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>From: [redacted]</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>To: [redacted]</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Subject: Ambi-ducks-trous</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 5:34AM</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Being the dense sort, when they put a pen or pencil or crayon into my right</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>hand, I used it there. It wasn't until around age seven, when (in the days</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>before mini-T-ball leagues) playing baseball with my dad's right-handed</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>glove I simply couldn't throw, so got into the habit of taking the glove off</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>first and then throwing (a la Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher) until I</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>could convince my folks to invest in a left-handed glove. When I tried</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>batting left-handed, suddenly I could hit, and in fact I now do all sports</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>as a leftie (even kick with my left foot). But I still write right-handed</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>and my pen-person-ship demonstrates for all to see that this is not a</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>"natural" mode.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>One twin (Colin) is a lefty with a pen, tho a switch hit-ter. Jesse is</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>strictly a righty. I've been told that such a division is al-most standard</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>with twins.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Count Erica Hunt among the lefties.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Ron</FONT>
</P>

</BODY>
</HTML>

--Boundary_(ID_Sr6oKh8vlTbt0iAeOzqytw)--

↑ Index

481. Gary Sullivan
Dahlen/Campbell
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Hello, Everyone:

Can someone backchannel me with e- or s- addresses for Beverly Dahlen and Bruce Campbell?

Many kind thanks in advance.

Yours,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

482. Keston Sutherland
Books by JH Prynne (fwd)
Thu 12 Mar 1998

---

should anybody be interested..

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 12 Mar 1998 14:28:16 +0000
From: Peter Riley <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Books by JH Prynne

Until the new collected poems is published only the following booklets are available---

Not-You. Equipage 1993. £2.50
Her Weasels Wild Returning. Equipage 1994 £2.50
For the Monogram. Equipage 1997 £2.50

2nd hand/1st editions--- Kitchen Poems. 1968 Paperback £10
Into the Day, 1972 £15
The Oval Window 1983 £12

Also Poetical Histories No.22, a 2-page leaflet by JHP £2.00. This may prove a difficulty to some readers because it's entirely in Chinese, but those (other than Chinese-speakers) who delight in difficulty will find it a truly challenging opportunity to exercise their inability to read.

These prices include postage
from Peter Riley (Books)
27 Sturton Street,
Cambridge CB1 2QG

↑ Index

483. david bromige
forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Date: Thu, 12 Mar 98 09:59:56 -0500
From: <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>, <[redacted]>
Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Mime-Version: 1.0

from your friend/aunt shelly.

_____ Forward Header
_____
Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Author: Sam Bunch at INTL1
Date: 3/11/98 9:57 AM

For your information

_____ Forward Header
_____
Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Author: NANCY MOREL at INTL1
Date: 3/10/98 11:38 AM

Just for your information

_____ Forward Header
_____

Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Author: BRENDA SHAW at INTL1
Date: 3/10/98 10:55 AM

FYI. This message has been forwarded to everyone in the department.

_____ Forward Header
_____
Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Author: HOLLY HARPER at MUNI1
Date: 3/10/98 9:33 AM

VIRUS WARNING !!!!!!

FIRST ONE
"If you receive an email titled "WIN A HOLIDAY" DO NOT open it. It will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this letter out to as many people as you can. This is a new, very malicious virus and not many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning from Microsoft."

SECOND ONE
"Also, do not open or even look at any mail that says "RETURNED OR UNABLE TO DELIVER" This virus will attach itself to your computer components and render them useless. Immediately delete any mail items that say this. AOL has said that this is a very dangerous virus and that there is NO remedy for it at this time."

LAST ONE
"If you receive an E-mail titled "JOIN THE CREW" DO NOT open it. It will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this mail to as many people as you can. This is a new, very advanced virus and not many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning from IBM."

↑ Index

484. Thomas Bell
Re: Ambi-ducks-trous & Spahn
Thu 12 Mar 1998

---

who is the all-time leader in wins for a left-hander, most home runs by a left-handed pitcher?

Spahn returns to haunt the list once more.

At 09:40 AM 3/12/98 -0600, Pritchett,Patrick @Silverplume wrote:
>CNN factoid last night - which before this whimsical thread I would have >ignored - who is the all-time leading left-handed scorer in the NBA?
>Answer: Artis Gilmore - over 24,000 points.
>
>Just curious though - wouldn't the root meaning of ambidextrous imply >having two right hands rather than a parity between the left and the >right? Also, what's the Pound reference in _Cantos_ to "O Sinistro" >which comes flooding back now unbidden?
>
>Desperately awating the onset of spring,
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------
>From: [redacted]
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: Ambi-ducks-trous
>Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 5:34AM
>
>Being the dense sort, when they put a pen or pencil or crayon into my >right >hand, I used it there. It wasn't until around age seven, when (in the >days >before mini-T-ball leagues) playing baseball with my dad's right-handed >glove I simply couldn't throw, so got into the habit of taking the glove >off >first and then throwing (a la Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher) until >I >could convince my folks to invest in a left-handed glove. When I tried >batting left-handed, suddenly I could hit, and in fact I now do all >sports
>as a leftie (even kick with my left foot). But I still write >right-handed >and my pen-person-ship demonstrates for all to see that this is not a >"natural" mode.
>

>One twin (Colin) is a lefty with a pen, tho a switch hitter. Jesse is >strictly a righty. I've been told that such a division is almost >standard
>with twins.
>
>Count Erica Hunt among the lefties.
>
>Ron
><!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
><HTML>
><HEAD>
><META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
><META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">
>
></HEAD>
><BODY>
><P><FONT SIZE=2>CNN factoid last night - which before this whimsical thread
I would have ignored - who is the all-time leading left-handed scorer in the NBA? Answer: Artis Gilmore - over 24,000 points.</FONT></P>
>
><P><FONT SIZE=2>Just curious though - wouldn't the root meaning of ambidextrous imply having two right hands rather than a parity between the left and the right? Also, what's the Pound reference in _Cantos_ to "O Sinistro" which comes flooding back now unbidden?</FONT></P>
>
><P><FONT SIZE=2>Desperately awating the onset of spring,</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2> ----------</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>From: [redacted]</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>To: [redacted]</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Subject: Ambi-ducks-trous</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 5:34AM</FONT>
>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Being the dense sort, when they put a pen or pencil or crayon into my right</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>hand, I used it there. It wasn't until around age seven, when (in the days</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>before mini-T-ball leagues) playing baseball with my dad's right-handed</FONT>

>
<FONT SIZE=2>glove I simply couldn't throw, so got into the habit of taking the glove off</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>first and then throwing (a la Jim Abbott, the one-handed pitcher) until I</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>could convince my folks to invest in a left-handed glove.
When I tried</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>batting left-handed, suddenly I could hit, and in fact I now do all sports</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>as a leftie (even kick with my left foot). But I still write right-handed</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>and my pen-person-ship demonstrates for all to see that this is not a</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>"natural" mode.</FONT>
>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>One twin (Colin) is a lefty with a pen, tho a switch hitter. Jesse is</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>strictly a righty. I've been told that such a division is almost standard</FONT>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>with twins.</FONT>
>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Count Erica Hunt among the lefties.</FONT>
>
>
<FONT SIZE=2>Ron</FONT>
></P>
>
></BODY>
></HTML>
>

↑ Index

485. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: forwarded: Virus FYIs...

Thu 12 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

--Boundary_(ID_iL6fAZBKUiqTlvBIMhKe1Q)

FYI - these viruses and the warnings about them are bogus. Do us all a favor and don't circulate them. Thank you.

Patrick Pritchett

From: david bromige
To: [redacted]
Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 10:39AM

>Date: Thu, 12 Mar 98 09:59:56 -0500
>From: <[redacted]>
>To: <[redacted]>, <[redacted]>
>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>Mime-Version: 1.0
>
>
>
> from your friend/aunt shelly.
>
>_____ Forward Header
>_____
>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>Author: Sam Bunch at INTL1
>Date: 3/11/98 9:57 AM
>
>
>For your information
>
>_____ Forward Header
>_____
>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>Author: NANCY MOREL at INTL1
>Date: 3/10/98 11:38 AM
>
>
>
>Just for your information
>
>_____ Forward Header
>_____
>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>Author: BRENDA SHAW at INTL1

>Date: 3/10/98 10:55 AM
>
>
> FYI. This message has been forwarded to everyone in the department.
>
>
>_____ Forward Header
>_____
>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>Author: HOLLY HARPER at MUNI1
>Date: 3/10/98 9:33 AM
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
> VIRUS WARNING !!!!!!
>
> FIRST ONE
> "If you receive an email titled "WIN A HOLIDAY" DO NOT open it.
It > will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this letter out
to > as many people as you can. This is a new, very malicious virus and not > many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday > morning from Microsoft."
>
> SECOND ONE
> "Also, do not open or even look at any mail that says "RETURNED OR > UNABLE TO DELIVER" This virus will attach itself to your computer > components and render them useless. Immediately delete any mail items > that say this. AOL has said that this is a very dangerous virus
and > that there is NO remedy for it at this time."

>
> LAST ONE
> "If you receive an E-mail titled "JOIN THE CREW" DO NOT open it.
It > will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this mail to as many > people as you can. This is a new, very advanced virus and not many > people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning > from IBM."
>

--Boundary_(ID_iL6fAZBKUiqTlvBIMhKe1Q)

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD HTML 3.2//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>
<META HTTP-EQUIV="Content-Type" CONTENT="text/html; charset=us-ascii">
<META NAME="Generator" CONTENT="MS Exchange Server version 5.0.1458.49">

</HEAD>
<BODY>
<P><FONT SIZE=2>FYI - these viruses and the warnings about them are bogus. Do us all a favor and don't circulate them. Thank you.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Patrick Pritchett</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2> ----------</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>From: david bromige</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>To: [redacted]</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>Date: Thursday, March 12, 1998 10:39AM</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Date: Thu, 12 Mar 98 09:59:56 -0500</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>From: <[redacted]></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>To: <[redacted]>, <[redacted]></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Mime-Version: 1.0</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>> from your friend/aunt shelly.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____ Forward Header</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Author: Sam Bunch at INTL1</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Date: 3/11/98 9:57 AM</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>For your information</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____ Forward Header</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Author: NANCY MOREL at INTL1</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Date: 3/10/98 11:38 AM</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Just for your information</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____ Forward Header</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Author: BRENDA SHAW at INTL1</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Date: 3/10/98 10:55 AM</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   FYI. This message has been forwarded to everyone in the department.</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____ Forward Header</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>_____</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Author: HOLLY HARPER at MUNI1</

FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>Date: 3/10/98 9:33 AM</ FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   VIRUS WARNING !!!!!!</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   FIRST ONE</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   "If you receive an email titled "WIN A HOLIDAY" DO NOT open it. It</
FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this letter out to</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   as many people as you can. This is a new, very malicious virus and not</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   morning from Microsoft."</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   SECOND ONE</ FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   "Also, do not open or even look at any mail that says "RETURNED OR</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   UNABLE TO DELIVER" This virus will attach itself to your computer</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   components and render them useless. Immediately delete any mail items</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   that say this. AOL has said that this is a very dangerous virus and</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   that there is NO remedy for it at this time."</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   LAST ONE</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   "If you receive an E-mail titled "JOIN THE CREW" DO NOT open it. It</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this mail to as many</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   people as you can. This is a new, very advanced virus and not many</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>>   from IBM."</FONT>

<FONT SIZE=2>></FONT>
</P>

</BODY>
</HTML>

--Boundary_(ID_iL6fAZBKUiqTlvBIMhKe1Q)--

↑ Index

486. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: sinister and gauche
Thu 12 Mar 1998

ok: my mother was right-handed, my father was left-handed... but my father was forced to write (he printed, all uppercase) right-handed by, as he called them, the nuns...

me, i'm right-handed (as a writer too), with the exception that i shovel, sweep, etc. left-handed... which is to say, heavy work of that sort i do left-handed, and a few minor tasks as well (from what i've been able to determine)...

i figure it musta been my father's doing, unwittingly...

best,

joe

↑ Index

487. Christopher W. Alexander
A.BACUS 1998
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Peter Ganick asked me to post this annonce to the list...

Potes & Poets announces A.BACUS / 1998

eight iss. of exciting, experimental poetry printed on acid- free paper, mailed to you via 1st class post. every 6 wks.

#111 1 january Sianne Ngai
#112 15 february Rosmarie Waldrop
#113 1 april L. Scalapino / L. Hejinian
#114 15 may Ron Silliman
#115 1 july Jessica Grim
#116 15 august Mark Wallace
#117 1 october Jefferson Hansen
#118 15 november Johanna Drucker

send $30 for all eight iss. of A.BACUS;
$5 for an individual iss. to:

Potes & Poets Press
181 Edgemont Avenue
Elmwood CT 06110

all other Potes & Poets materials are now available solely through Small Press Distribution...

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

488. k. lederer
Re: sinister
Thu 12 Mar 1998

When I was little I wrote with both hands--

When I came to the midpoint of a page, I would switch--

The thing is, though, that I had some sort of brain dysfunction--my two hemispheres were, apparently, not connected properly (the connection, which I believe takes the form of a kind of tendon-like rope of brain matter, was not fully devloped or something)--

Thus, I would not only switch hands, but I would write backwards with the right hand--producing a mirror-like effect--

This problem went away on its own--but I too was sometimes forced to erase my homework and re-do it with my right hand--

This was part of some sort of experiment on the parts of some curious school administrators--not part of any study or anything--it was just terrible--

Katy
***

↑ Index

489. David Kellogg
There ARE NO email viruses: these are hoaxes
Thu 12 Mar 1998

These so-called "viruses" do not exist. All three of the below-listed "viruses" are listed as hoaxes on the McAfee virus hoax web page [http://www.nai.com/services/support/hoax/hoax.asp] .

FYI: Viruses CANNOT be contained in an email message, only in an attachment which is opened through an application. These messages just take up bandwidth (unfortunately, so do corrective messages such as this one).
~~~
~~~

>>Date: 3/11/98 9:57 AM
>>
>>
>>For your information
>>
>>_____ Forward Header
>>_____
>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>>Author: NANCY MOREL at INTL1
>>Date: 3/10/98 11:38 AM
>>
>>
>>
>>Just for your information
>>
>>_____ Forward Header
>>_____
>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>>Author: BRENDA SHAW at INTL1
>>Date: 3/10/98 10:55 AM
>>
>>
>> FYI. This message has been forwarded to everyone in the department.
>>
>>
>>_____ Forward Header
>>_____
>>Subject: forwarded: Virus FYIs...
>>Author: HOLLY HARPER at MUNI1
>>Date: 3/10/98 9:33 AM
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>>
>> VIRUS WARNING !!!!!!
>>
>> FIRST ONE

>> "If you receive an email titled "WIN A HOLIDAY" DO NOT open it. It >> will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this letter out to >> as many people as you can. This is a new, very malicious virus and not >> many people know about it. This information was announced yesterday >> morning from Microsoft."
>>
>> SECOND ONE
>> "Also, do not open or even look at any mail that says "RETURNED OR >> UNABLE TO DELIVER" This virus will attach itself to your computer >> components and render them useless. Immediately delete any mail items >> that say this. AOL has said that this is a very dangerous virus and >> that there is NO remedy for it at this time."
>>
>> LAST ONE
>> "If you receive an E-mail titled "JOIN THE CREW" DO NOT open it. It >> will erase everything on your hard drive. Forward this mail to as many >> people as you can. This is a new, very advanced virus and not many >> people know about it. This information was announced yesterday morning
>> from IBM."
>>
>

↑ Index

490. Susan Clark

Re: Books by JH Prynne (fwd)

Thu 12 Mar 1998

Anyone interested in the latest scholarship on Prynne should of course check out Edgar Allen Poe's eight-page review of Not-You in RADDLE MOON 15.

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
Vancouver, BC
[redacted]

> Subject: Books by JH Prynne
> Until the new collected poems is published only the following booklets are available---
>
> Not-You. Equipage 1993. £2.50
> Her Weasels Wild Returning. Equipage 1994 £2.50

> For the Monogram. Equipage 1997 £2.50

↑ Index

491. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Those outside the status quo use poetry to gain acceptance . . . or some such problematic and seemingly facile assesment?! Could you provide an example or some sort of situation for this statement? Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

↑ Index

492. MAYHEW
memorization
Thu 12 Mar 1998

On another topic altogether, I was wondering whether others share my particular form of insanity: A couple of years ago I started to memorize poetry almost obsessively. I had done this fairly casually throughout the years but soon I started to memorize as much as possible; I am obliged to drive across the state of Missouri every week and I use the five hours to rehearse as many poems as I can, though after about 35 or 40 I get mentally fatigued. I noticed that I began to pay much more attention to the distinctive intonational patterns of different poets and texts.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

493. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Whoops! Came without explanation the first time. Pardon. PFD

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

On Thu, 12 Mar 1998, Henry Gould wrote:

> In my view if you're writing poetry you're already involved in the power structure. And indirect or direct speech are EQUIVALENT techniques. Indirect speech is often the most powerful. It is someone saying something too terrible to use words directly about. The metaphor or synecdoche or whatever only adds to the shock. Whereas in an (an)aesthetized cultural situation "direct" speech SEEMS more "political". The irony is that those who think poetry is a political tool are the ones most comfortable with the status quo, whether they realize it or not. Those outside the status quo use poetry politically in order to join the establishment. And those REALLY outside the establishment - are totally outside poetry too.
> - Edgar Allan Poe, Southern Gentleman
>
> Edgar's being vague and simplistic here. Making of poetry takes place on more than one level. There's the widespread impulse to make art, irrespective of talent or social position. It's a way of life and a gift economy. Then there's Literature as an economic activity and cultural institution. Edgar himself promoted the ideal of the Cosmopolitan, Aristocratic Man of Letters and Genius as a literary or staged property (while the status of the southern aristocracy and human "property" was in deep crisis) - the Author vs. the Rabble. This has been an abiding theme since the end of feudalism, just about. The question of common property or common good in every society and in world society - what is private, what is public, what is allowed as luxury, what is deemed necessary for survival - and how decisions like this are made, if they are made - affects the Literature Industry and every work of writing. So a poet might choose to "deny art" - to "not use metaphor" - to do "straight reporting" or use "transparent, functional language" - "include documentary material" - etc. not only to "be political", but to change the dynamic of the literary contract between author and readers. To try to import an > immediate, didactic element into a poem. Or a poet might try to carefully DISTORT "transparent language" in a way that brings out what such language conceals. Or a poet might design an allegory or symbol of a many-sided political situation - this seems like the function of metaphor on a "macro" level. Or a poet might "be political" by NOT being political - by foregrounding emotion, sensibility, aesthetics, in order to substantiate these evidences of life and humanity outside of any power situation, or, conversely, to present a reality that SHOULD exist if there were justice in the world.

>
> All these forms of communication in poetry seem to be happening all the time in very complex ways. To "not use metaphor" seems sort of isolated to me as a literary "strategy". Isolated or abstract or something. But these questions of a writer's "contract" or position or strategy within the larger environment of what a society is doing - whether or not a particular writer can consciously manipulate these issues and remain an artist at all - these issues are the pivot around which the political aspect of someone's work revolve.
> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

494. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Sinister & Gauche
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Ambidextrous for me too--all seventeen flailing tentacles. Once worked at corney island as a batting machine.

↑ Index

495. Henry Gould
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

On Thu, 12 Mar 1998 11:39:02 -0600 Patrick F. Durgin said:
> Those outside the status quo use poetry to gain acceptance . . .
>or some such problematic and seemingly facile assesment?! Could you >provide an example or some sort of situation for this statement?
> Patrick F. Durgin

Apologies for long turgid double post on this. I was out at the Century Lounge until way late last night, playing harp & drinking Old Grandad. My excuse for the semi-pseudo-rationalism.

I was referring to the general phenomenon of "co-optation". Knowledge and literacy are power. The institutions of knowledge are the cream of the established order. I'm not judging that order as good or bad; just remarking on a system in which voices of alienation, protest, satire, subversion, condemnation - voices formalized in art - are rewarded with honorary degrees, faculty positions, grants, attention, and all the perquisites of membership in that establishment. - Henry Gould (writes left, bats right, throws left, tennis right, kicks left, guitar right, harmonica both hands, brain confused) (Sonny Terry was blind and played the harp upside down.)

"Official literature is trash. The rest is stolen air." - Mandelstam

I harbor no resentment, hold no one in contempt, wish for the overthrow of no status quo, believe you get what you deserve, like what I like, and that does not include stale granola.

↑ Index

496. Joseph Lease
Re: Hilda Morley
Thu 12 Mar 1998

I just want to add my best wishes and love for Hilda Morley. Hilda Morley is a great poet with a magnificent ear. Her work is wonderful, wonderful music.

Joseph

↑ Index

497. Michael Coffey
Re: sinister -Reply
Thu 12 Mar 1998

i haven't had chance to read all the sinisterial emails, so this fact may already have been posted: we are running an item in Publishers Weekly this week about a forthcoming autobiography by longtime publisher Barney Rosset (Grove Press co-founder). His title is "The Subject is Left-Handed," and derives from a comment found in Rosset's FBI file.

↑ Index

498. linda russo
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>
> it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.

> while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the children ran in the streets."

or, a little closer to home, "So much depends . . ." or any number of wcw poems where the gesture is "look" and not "compare" or "look at me looking at that!" (which perhaps next natural gesture is to compare "you look at that different than i look at that)(granted this maybe oversimplifying b/c (so much lyric) poetry already says "see me looking"). But there's a way in which metaphor doesn't just let things be in the world and be seen there in whatever "chance" association. metaphor forces association (which forces universality -- this poem is so you see like me)

↑ Index

499. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: sinister and gauche
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Bob,

Maybe you should add a box to your survey for cases like Steve's friend?

Everyone else,

Since language and handedness are physiologically connected, what effects might a forced switch to the right hand have had on (for example) David Bromige's father?

Sound off: how many on this list are Adult Children of Repressed Lefties?

(I'm serious about the forced switch question.)

Danny.

"Oh, how you live there./You have your hippopotamus/while we're in the storeroom/with holes in our pockets/and here it's funny, simply funny." -- Boris Grebinshikov

---

Date: Sun, 1 Mar 1998 15:40:02 -0800
From: Steve Tills <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: sinister and gauche

I know a fellow who's mostly righthanded, but masturbates lefthanded, says he likes that hand better for couple sex, too.
Always thought that was a quite interesting idiosyncracy.
Stills

↑ Index

500. Martin Spinelli sinister
Thu 12 Mar 1998

> > i was SHOCKED to see Clinton, Bush and Perot writing with their > > left hands. Is this true?
>
> Not only them, but also Reagan.

Not only Reagan, but also Attila the Hun, Benito Mussolini, Robert Bly, and Collin Staplehurst (my butcher) were/are all lefties! Could the "sinister" conflation have a grain of truth!?!?!

With such overwhelming evidence perhaps someone should table a motion to forcibly eject all lefties from this list on the grounds of general degeneracy. Besides, who can understand them?

(I tried once, I really did, in 4th grade, to write with my left hand. Heather Bell, a girl whom neither my left nor my right brain had a crush on, was ordered to write righty by our evil principle Mrs. Topsic. She cried for almost an hour until Topsic left, then she resumed lefty. In a show of solidarity I too tried to write lefty. But alas my right brain would not be ruled and what resulted was a significant degradation of my already "N" for "needs-improvement" handwriting. I gave up after a day, Heather grew up and entered a convent, and Valley School didn't catch my dyslexia until I was 15. Does dyslexia count for anything?)

Apoplexically,
Martin

_____
Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

501. sylvester pollet

China Conference 1999

Thu 12 Mar 1998

Thought this might be of interest to the Poetics List. Does anyone know, off (left) hand, what a flight from NYC might cost? Approx.? Don't think I'll be able to go, but it is tempting. Thanks, Sylvester

> The 18th International Ezra Pound Conference will be held in Beijing, China, July 16-19, 1999. Although Pound never visited the Far East, he drew much of his inspiration from Chinese poetry, Japanese haiku and Noh drama, and Confucian philosophy, which is threaded through _The Cantos_ In fact, in 1934, to answer Eliot's question, "What does Mr. Pound believe?" Pound said, "I believe the _Ta Hio_," that is, _The Great Learning_, a Confucian classic.
>
> The site of the Conference will be Beijing Foreign Studies University in a western suburb of Beijing. Participants can stay at a three-star hotel on campus for a special rate of $55 single, $60 double, per night, or at another campus hotel for $30 per night. Excursions will be made to such major attractions as the Forbidden City, Tiananmen Square, the Great Wall, Taishan, and Qufu, the birthplace of Confucius. There will be a special performance of the Peking Opera during the Conference.
>
> The Committee invites proposals for papers on this (or other) topic:
>
> EZRA POUND AND THE ORIENT
>
> Committee: Zhaoming Qian, University of New Orleans
> William McNaughton, City Polytechnic of Hong Kong
> William Pratt, Miami University of Ohio
> Richard Taylor, University of Bayreuth
> Jian Zhang, Beijing Foreign Studies University
>
> If you are interested in giving a paper at the Conference, send a synopsis of your proposal (about 250 words) to the Convenor: Professor Zhaoming Qian, Department of English, University of New Orleans, LA 70148, U.S.A. (FAX: [redacted]; E-mail: [redacted]). Limit for completed papers will be 30 minutes delivered, allowing time for discussion afterwards.
>
> Deadline for proposals: October 28, 1998.
>
> If you wish to submit a proposal for a paper, please write to Professor Qian directly. If you wish details of the Conference, E-mail Professor Zhang at:
> [redacted]
>
> A registration fee of $120 (1,000 yuan), payable upon official registration will cover admission to all events:
> 1. Social gathering on the evening of July 16

> 2. Breakfasts and lunches from July 17-19
> 3. Peking Opera performance on July 17
> 4. Banquet (offered by co-sponsor BFSU) on July 19
> 5. Afternoon tour of the Summer Palace and day tour of the Forbidden City and Tiananmen Square
>
> Limited additional charges will be made for the excursion to the Great Wall on July 20, and for the excursion to Taishan/Qufu, July 22-25. Bookings may be made during the registration period, March 15-June 10, 1999, with full advance payment possible by bank transfer or credit card.

↑ Index

502. Thomas Bell

Re: metaphoracity redux

Thu 12 Mar 1998

At 08:27 AM 3/12/98 EST, Henry Gould wrote:
>southern aristocracy and human "property" was in deep crisis) - the Author >vs. the Rabble. This has been an abiding theme since the end of >feudalism, just about. The question of common property or common good >in every society and in world society - what is private, what is public, >what is allowed as luxury, what is deemed necessary for survival - and >how decisions like this are made, if they are made - affects the >Literature Industry and every work of writing. So a poet might choose >to "deny art" - to "not use metaphor" - to do "straight reporting" or >use "transparent, functional language" - "include documentary material" - >etc. not only to "be political", but to change the dynamic of the >literary contract between author and readers. To try to import an >immediate, didactic element into a poem. Or a poet might try to >carefully DISTORT "transparent language" in a way that brings out what >such language conceals. Or a poet might design an allegory or symbol >of a many-sided political situation - this seems like the function >of metaphor on a "macro" level. Or a poet might "be political" by >NOT being political - by foregrounding emotion, sensibility, aesthetics, >in order to substantiate these evidences of life and humanity outside >of any power situation, or, conversely, to present a reality that >SHOULD exist if there were justice in the world.
>
>All these forms of communication in poetry seem to be happening all the >time in very complex ways. To "not use metaphor" seems sort of >isolated to me as a literary "strategy". Isolated or abstract or >something. But these questions of a writer's "contract" or position >or strategy within the larger environment of what a society is doing

>- whether or not a particular writer can consciously manipulate these >issues and remain an artist at all - these issues are the pivot around >which the political aspect of someone's work revolve.
>- Henry Gould
>
>

I can't tell if you are advocating tendentious poetry here, but this might be because of my reading or misreading here. It does seem to me that "conscious manipulation"'s tendency toward adherence to predetermined form leaves little space for 'slack' (play) in the material's potential influence on the writer. tom bell

↑ Index

503. Kcglowworm
metaphor metonymy
Thu 12 Mar 1998

I for one still find the metaphor-metonymy distinction useful in terms of its application to how the mind works, in terms of poetic processes, and in terms of ideological-political questions. This distinction plays a key role in my article, "Althusser Metonymy China Wall," which Barry Watten and Lyn Hejinian are reprinting in the next Poetics Journal. My use of these terms, however, is itself metaphorical in the common sense (terms from one realm operating within another).

Before printing the appropriate passages from that article, however, I want to say that I am troubled by the idea that because structuralism, marxism, post-structuralism, and other such movements had their moments of glory in past decades, they are now no longer of interest. I believe there is still a lot to learned by continuing those and other decade-identified projects, despite their no longer being particularly faddish or academically marketable.

George Hartley

Two passages from the above-mentioned article:

1. But I first want to pose a strategic distinction between metaphor and metonymy. Metaphor might be seen as a transcendental movement; through metaphor we translate the terms from one field into the terms of another, the relationship or positioning between these terms seen as vertical, a substitution from above to below, inside to outside. Metaphor assumes a certain equivalence, a reduction of differences, between the two terms in order for this substitution to be possible. Metonymy, on the other hand, works laterally, establishing relationships of contiguity through pairings and displacements. This shift from metaphor to metonymy moves us from transcendence to immanence. As both Althusser and Kafka will suggest, metaphor is inherently theological in its structuring of mediation itself as a relationship to something outside or above the structure or terrain, and by its positioning of the mediator as one who inhabits a space or opening between us and some external power.

2. The building of the wall presents an enigma: why would the high command, if their intention is to safeguard us from the fierce nomads of the North, plan this piecemeal method of construction which leaves gapse in the protective structure? The answer to this leads to more enigmas. The high command, in its infinite wisdom, really intended to produce the side-effects of the wall- building process—the sense of purpose, the unity, the cooperation, the willful, even enthusiastic, submission to the dictates of the high command—rather than the wall itself. Or, as the scholar in the story explains, they really wanted to build a foundation for a tower that would complete the abandoned project of the Tower of Babel. But how can a quarter-circle structure with extensive gaps provide such a base? Hence the conclusion that the tower must be meant spiritually, metaphorically. Which raises the next question, Why then build the wall itself if the tower is only a metaphor? The narrator's answer, which comes later in the tale and with no explicit connection, is that the tower is a metaphor for the "superficial culture mounting sky-high around a few precepts that have been drilled into people's minds for centuries, precepts which, though they have lost nothing of their eternal truth, remain entirely invisible in this fog of confusion." The building of the wall, the enclosure of a political and ideological space, somehow provides a base for the installations of the high command itself in the tower, elevating them above the people like the mysterious and absent gods they appear to be to the common people. The building of the wall, in other words, maintains and constantly reproduces the conditions of hierarchy which make the high command, the imperial sun itself, possible in the first place in its metaphoric transcendence beyond the world of the village. "But it is precisely this question of empire," the narrator tells us, "which in my opinion the common people should seek to answer, since they after all are the empire's final support." The support of the tower, then, is not the wall at all but the people in their process of building it as an enclosure.

↑ Index

504. Aldon Nielsen near miss
Thu 12 Mar 1998

---

so now our date with the asteroid has been called off -- the groom's still waiting at the altar -- xf11, we hardly knew ye metonymically yours,

Lefty

↑ Index

505. Scott Pound
Re: sinister
Thu 12 Mar 1998

> At 3:26 PM -0800 3/11/98, Roger Farr wrote:
> Phyllis Webb, Canada's greatest living
> Roger
>
> wow, never heard of her; is this a general consensus? tell me more, if this isn't too elementary and boring for everyone else on the list.--md

Well, Phyllis Webb is a marvellous poet, who in addition to the Left Hand Poems wrote _Naked Poems_ circa 1965. e.g.

I use the word groves light falling found in the orchard finding what fell by a breath

Talon books published a selected in 1982.

↑ Index

506. George Thompson
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

In response to Linda Russo's post:

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>
> it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.
>
> while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the > children ran in the streets."

>
> or, a little closer to home, "So much depends . . ." or any number of wcw poems where the gesture is "look" and not "compare" or "look at me looking at that!" (which perhaps next natural gesture is to compare "you look at that different than i look at that)(granted this maybe oversimplifying b/c (so much lyric) poetry already says "see me looking"). But there's a way in which metaphor doesn't just let things be in the world and be seen there in whatever "chance" association. metaphor forces association (which forces universality -- this poem is so you see like me)

This is very interesting. I think I see what you mean now. That is a good and desirable thing: to see a red wheelbarrow as what it is, instead of comparing it to something else.

But I'm not so sure that we can ever see things as they really are. Ever. I think that's, like, god's territory [as Yeats or that Spandrift rogue has already said somewhere, somewhat more lyrically]. And besides, who's god? Not me.

Does that make me a popomo? or just another pomo? or just a mo?

GT

↑ Index

507. Philip Mead
Re: Steve McCaffery shafted
Thu 12 Mar 1998

---

that's reassuring to hear, I was just about to hit the keyboard in response to Ron Silliman's account of the situtation. Best wishes, Steve and Karen, hope you're well.

Philip

>>>

508. Thomas Bell
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Interesting point. If I understand you right, you are saying metaphor is more directive and "guides" the auditor in a particular direction. This is true of metaphor in therapy and hypnosis, but I hadn't made the same connection for literature. tom bell

At 07:58 PM 3/12/98 +0000, linda russo wrote:
>> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>> >
>> >it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR >> >political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.
>>
>> while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous >> example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something >> like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the >> children ran in the streets."
>
>or, a little closer to home, "So much depends . . ." or any number of >wcw poems where the gesture is "look" and not "compare" or "look at >me looking at that!" (which perhaps next natural gesture is to >compare "you look at that different than i look at that)(granted
>this maybe oversimplifying b/c (so much lyric) poetry already says
>"see me looking"). But there's a way in which metaphor >doesn't just let things be in the world and be seen there in whatever
>"chance" association. metaphor forces association (which forces >universality -- this poem is so you see like me)
>
>

↑ Index

509. Keston Sutherland
gaudy joy and other double-deckers
Thu 12 Mar 1998

ON THE OCCASION A REPAST

1.

Swoops in from the annex rip out his teeth and swearing
God all this modish gladness is a crank tacit municipal pretence i.e. that, not quite everyone falls asleep at the fact-end rewound lulls and shudders into what is after all ideal to the core, he's ogling a bunged aggregate. After what or, which ever undwindlingly abated where was it she knelt - memory evades what was where she would, impartial hence, my feelings were propagated like prawn shells amongst packing foam.

Ideal to the bone splintered and showered with rust and spry calcsinter in surprise aggregate protraction back-up all the bright historic use-maneuvres and their payoffs in a speckled blend a romance, clipped wings restored peicemeal. Every thing. So many things rubbish
ideal to the beginning heart hung partly aroused, partly wished like a plastic fish in fixed glass admirable anticipating further ideal or for a split life we sauntered down to the paddock, aware was our word, we divined that dainty flesh have kids as yet unmilked. Yet their barn is frankly they bleat, "ideal".

2.

A monumental petrol stop by the track-side 10 million snacks all conflated one hell of a mess here, better to run through the options vote in some order of sun beam bonded by overt minimalised distraction to its chorelessness lighting the repute outpost by the kitchenette window seen through which crows and goats squirm, not themselves apprehended as with number one strict darkly beheld contrariness but likewise they're threatened and getting so, so tired of just this, seived joy / once or twice again / glo in the dark esteem piled beneath each chance-stop like a latent grin-voucher.

↑ Index

510. George Thompson
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

Furthermore, when EP says "make it new", what does he mean? Does he mean "take a good long look and don't compare -- just put it there next to the wheel-barrow"?

I don't think so. I think he's talking about metaphor. Make it new. See it new, Metaphor.

No?

GT

↑ Index

511. Henry Gould
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

On Thu, 12 Mar 1998 17:03:59 -0600 Thomas Bell said:
>
>I can't tell if you are advocating tendentious poetry here, but this >might be because of my reading or misreading here. It does seem to >me that "conscious manipulation"'s tendency toward adherence to >predetermined form leaves little space for 'slack' (play) in the >material's potential influence on the writer.
>tom bell

Every piece of writing is marked by a worldview and motivated to "get across" something. The decision to "let the poem take me where it leads or write itself" is no less motivated than any other. In my own experience the desire to "make a picture" in poetry involves welding together more than I expected or knew about when I began - this is the poem's own momentum. But the direction of the momentum is determined beforehand as clearly as possible. This welding process is a kind of play - but there are only 22 players in a soccer game. And there's a field they're playing on.

On another note: I regret the paranoia implicit in previous post today about "co-optation". I think that was basically wrong-headed. One would hope that society is not some determining Leviathan providing niches for the opposition. And the struggle to achieve a place to stand and criticize the problems facing the world does not equal being "co-opted". I will say though that it's important to look a gift horse in the mouth, if it comes from the Greeks. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

512. Henry Gould
Re: metaphor metonymy
Thu 12 Mar 1998

On Thu, 12 Mar 1998 20:08:58 EST George Hartley wrote:
>
>Two passages from the above-mentioned article:
>
>1.
>But I first want to pose a strategic distinction between metaphor and=0Am= >etonymy. Metaphor might be seen as a transcendental movement; through=0Am=
>etaphor we translate the terms from one field into the terms of another, = >the=0Arelationship or positioning between these terms seen as vertical, a= >=0Asubstitution from above to below, inside to outside. Metaphor assumes = >a=0Acertain equivalence, a reduction of differences, between the two term= >s in=0Aorder for this substitution to be possible. Metonymy, on the other= > hand, works=0Alaterally, establishing relationships of contiguity throug= >h pairings and=0Adisplacements. This shift from metaphor to metonymy move= >s us from=0Atranscendence to immanence. As both Althusser and Kafka will >suggest, metaphor=0Ais inherently theological in its structuring of media= >tion itself as a=0Arelationship to something outside or above the structu= >re or terrain, and by=0Aits positioning of the mediator as one who inhabi= >ts a space or opening between=0Aus and some external power.
=

On the other hand, if one wanted to dismantle the concept of theology or transcendence, one could use metonymy rather than metaphor as the wall- breaker in just as strategic a fashion. As follows: "Metonymy might be seen as a transcendental movement: the Play of Dionysus moving with exquisite Randomness through the materiality of Smoke, Cigarette, Barstool, Dead Detective, Mirror, creating a Noir Cosmos out of Contiguity. Metaphor, on the other hand, by implying a pedestrian, rationalistic Likeness between disparate things, will never transcend the humdrum humanist willfulness of associations inherent in the earthbound gluing together (by means slime from the Babel Tower) of "similar" things." - Henry Gould

↑ Index

513. louis stroffolino
Re: metaphoracity redux
Thu 12 Mar 1998

I've never "bought" the anti-metaphor line, at least in any rigid sense (to say there are limits to metaphor or to any linguistic tool is one thing, but to say "metaphor forces association" and doesn't just let the world BE is quite another... for to condemn metaphor (or symbols, etc.) on the grounds of the latter, wouldn't one have to condemn POETRY on the grounds of the latter more generally? I mean, poetry, if it is referential (as the simple readings of WCW go), itself doesn't let the world BE, nor do I think it is necessary that we claim it should. By the way, I think that KARSTEN HARRIES essay in the SHeldon Stacks book ON METAPHOR (which touches on WCW and others), though I do not always agree with it, is very useful in addressing how WCW does NOT avoid metaphor, but rather employs it precisely to show its own (and the poem's) insufficiency....and THEN, only after engaging in what Stevens might call the act of the mind defending us from itself (in this Stevens and WCW are actually aligned--despite the well-publicized divisions between them), may be let the world BE (in a way perhaps we couldn't beforehand and is maybe why we 'turn to poetry'). Anyway, that's a simplisitc reading of Harries, but it at least points towards a view that allows for metaphor in 20th century poetry--- though I like the Neruda line too. Chris

On Thu, 12 Mar 1998, linda russo wrote:

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>
> it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.
>
> while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the children ran in the streets."
>
> or, a little closer to home, "So much depends . . ." or any number of wcw poems where the gesture is "look" and not "compare" or "look at me looking at that!" (which perhaps next natural gesture is to compare "you look at that different than i look at that)(granted this maybe oversimplifying b/c (so much lyric) poetry already says "see me looking"). But there's a way in which metaphor doesn't just let things be in the world and be seen there in whatever "chance" association. metaphor forces association (which forces universality -- this poem is so you see like me)

↑ Index

514. Carolyn Guertin

Webb/metaphor/indirect speech

Fri 13 Mar 1998

'Edgar Allan Poe' wrote:

> In my view if you're writing poetry you're already involved in the power structure. And indirect or direct speech are EQUIVALENT techniques. Indirect speech is often the most powerful. It is someone saying something too terrible to use words directly about. The metaphor or synecdoche or whatever only adds to the shock.

Phyllis Webb wrote:

Treblinka Gas Chamber

"Klostermayer ordered another count of the children. Then their stars were snipped off and thrown into the centre of the courtyard. It looked like a field of buttercups." -- Joseph Hyams, _A Field of Buttercups_ fallingstars

'a field of buttercups' yellow stars of David falling

the prisoners the children falling

in heaps on one another they go down

Thanatos showers his dirty breath they must breathe

him in they see stars behind their eyes

David's
'a field of buttercups'

a metaphor where all that's left lies down

(1980)

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

"Language is a virus."
-- Laurie Anderson

↑ Index

515. Michael J. Kelleher
a l y r i c m a i l e r number 2
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Attention Poets and Friends!

a l y r i c m a i l e r NUMBER 2, an a l y r i c e-chap, featuring:

Limbic Odes

by Garrett Kalleberg

is up and running at:

http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm

Garrett Kalleberg's is the publisher and editor of the new e-po-zine, The Transcendental Friend and is also editing at present a section on younger poets upcoming in Talisman. His work has appeared in Sulfur and American Letters & Commentary (among others) and appears also in the Anthology of New (American) Poets just out from Talisman. He lives and works in Brooklyn, New York, his place of birth.

Pass it on!
Print it out!
Hand it out!
Just make sure it gets out!

Issues forthcoming will feature: Eleni Sikelianos, Laird Hunt, Carrie Tocci, Ben Friedlander, Stephen Mounkhall, Rod Smith and Heathers Fuller and Ramsdell, et al.

Until then,

I remain

Mike

↑ Index

516. Michael J. Kelleher
a l y r i c m a i l e r #2
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Attention Poets and Friends!

a l y r i c m a i l e r NUMBER 2, an a l y r i c e-chap, featuring:

Limbic Odes

by Garrett Kalleberg

is up and running at:

http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm

Garrett Kalleberg's is the publisher and editor of the new e-po-zine, The Transcendental Friend and is also editing at present a section on younger poets upcoming in Talisman. His work has appeared in Sulfur and American Letters & Commentary (among others) and appears also in the Anthology of New (American) Poets just out from Talisman. He lives and works in Brooklyn, New York, his place of birth.

Pass it on!
Print it out!
Hand it out!
Just make sure it gets out!

Issues forthcoming will feature: Eleni Sikelianos, Laird Hunt, Carrie Tocci, Ben Friedlander, Stephen Mounkhall, Rod Smith and Heathers Fuller

and Ramsdell, et al.

Until then,

I remain

Mike

<HTML>
Attention Poets and Friends!

<P>a l y r i c m a i l e r   NUMBER 2, an   a l y r i c   e-chap,

featuring:

<P>Limbic Odes

<P>by Garrett Kalleberg

<P>is up and running at:

<P><A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm">http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm</A>

<P>Garrett Kalleberg's is the publisher and editor of the new e-po-zine,

The Transcendental Friend and is also editing at present a section on younger poets upcoming in Talisman. His work has appeared in Sulfur and American Letters & Commentary (among others) and appears also in the Anthology of New (American) Poets just out from Talisman. He lives and works in Brooklyn, New York, his place of birth.

<P>Pass it on!

Print it out!

Hand it out!

Just make sure it gets out!

<P>Issues forthcoming will feature: Eleni Sikelianos, Laird Hunt, Carrie Tocci, Ben Friedlander, Stephen Mounkhall, Rod Smith and Heathers Fuller

and Ramsdell, et al.

<P>Until then,

<P>I remain

<P>Mike</HTML>

----------230BB5785BDDBC313B357D08--

↑ Index

517. George Bowering

Re: left ee's

Fri 13 Mar 1998

> My twin sister Tanya is a lefty, and I am a righty
> Both my grandmothers are left-handed, is this inerited down the female line?

That's common between twins, at least fraternal twins. Same thing with my brother's twin daughters.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

518. George Bowering
Re: sinister
Fri 13 Mar 1998

> At 3:26 PM -0800 3/11/98, Roger Farr wrote:
> Phyllis Webb, Canada's greatest living
> Roger
>
> wow, never heard of her; is this a general consensus? tell me more, if this isn't too elementary and boring for everyone else on the list.--md

She is a great poet. Her _Naked Poems_ of three decades ago is the best short long poem I know of. She had a long correspondence with Robert Duncan, to give her a USAmerican context. But she doesnt need one.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

519. George Bowering
Re: Ambi-ducks-trous
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Ron's baseball story is interesting. My left-handed kid brother learned his baseball from me, a rightie, so he throws and bats right handed. But writes, etc left-handed. He plays gold every day now, and hits right handed. One summer day 3 years ago I set up a golf game between him and my Australian writer buddy Brian Edwards. Brian is a righthander who plays gold lefthanded, and my brother Roger is a lefthander who golfs righty. They played 18 holes, and were dead even going inmto the spectacular 18th at Fairview in Oliver, B.C. One of them wonm by a stroke but I forget which.

Incidentally, among the young, almost 50% of tennis players play lefthanded now, and about 1.5% of golfers do.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

520. TBeck131
goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

I'm not sure what I hoped to find on the poetics list but I'm sure that I haven't found it. What I have encountered is a professorial smugness (people who can't or won't distinguish between living and dead poets; people who scoff at the political efficacy of writing) propped up by extraordinary silences (most of the list is voiceless most of the time). There's way too much concern with position--with laurels, with "winning", with self-congratulation and self-promotion. The sound of one hand (who gives a damn if it is left or right) clapping one's self on the back. You folks have a powerful tool at your disposal. One can only hope that you figure out how to make better use of it.

Signing off.

Tom Beckett

↑ Index

521. Maria Damon
Re: metaphoracity redux
Fri 13 Mar 1998

At 7:58 PM +0000 3/12/98, linda russo wrote:
>> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>> >
>> >it seems that some postmodern poetry disregards metaphor FOR >> >political reasons -- i'm wondering abt. this distinction.
>>
>> while i suspect the answer could be construed to be yes, the most famous >> example of this is not a postmodern one: Neruda i think, said something >> like "the blood of the children ran in the streets like the blood of the >> children ran in the streets."
>
>or, a little closer to home, "So much depends . . ." or any number of >wcw poems where the gesture is "look" and not "compare" or "look at >me looking at that!" (which perhaps next natural gesture is to >compare "you look at that different than i look at that)(granted

>this maybe oversimplifying b/c (so much lyric) poetry already says
>"see me looking"). But there's a way in which metaphor >doesn't just let things be in the world and be seen there in whatever
>"chance" association. metaphor forces association (which forces >universality -- this poem is so you see like me)

i was responding to the political aspect of the issue.

↑ Index

522. Miekal And
Re: goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

---

tom, Im saddened that youve left the list, have felt similarly to you, that there is amazing potential on lists such as this one (& wri-eye-tings) bandwidth that is largely unexplored, & tho no medium is perfect, actions such as networking & extending one's own works into a public medium, & even learning, are goals that are quite reachable here. I wonder (if you are still here) if you would speak more to the failed hopes that you had, & wonder if there is any sense of an emotional overwhelmance, (which more than anything else with list participation, I become discouraged by, & usually a few days of space makes be hungry again for jumping back into the muck}

Id like to make it clear, that you were shaking the tree & fruit was falling within reach, tho, unfortunately, effects are sometimes the inverse of intent...

miekal

↑ Index

523. Douglas Barbour
Re: Comprepoetica on sinister & gauche
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Bob G

You're irrepressible or is that incorrigible...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5

[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

MC Box 135, Manchester College
603 E. College Ave., N. Manchester, IN 46962
[redacted]/5009, [redacted], [redacted]
Abigail A. Fuller and Neil Wollman,

Co-Chairs

Hello Colleagues:

We are writing because we have just learned that the TIAA-CREF Committee on Corporate Governance and Social Responsibility will be meeting this coming Tuesday (3/17), and are asking you to EMAIL CEO JOHN BIGGS BEFORE TUESDAY in support of the campaign. This is the group that has considered our proposal before. Coincidentally, we have telephoned a number of the people on the committee recently and found at least some support from some of them--or at least an openness to explore the situation further. Besides going over our basic arguments, we are urging them to at least bring in someone who has specific knowledge on positive investing to present that position.

We thank those of you who responded to our recent postal mailing and sent an email to TIAA-CREF and sent a copy to us. It would help enormously if those who have not yet written could send a brief email message to John Biggs, with copies to Albert Wilson and Martin Leibowitz, at [redacted]: ask them to do positive investing for the Social Choice Account, or at least allow someone knowledgable in that specific area to be involved the discussions. Ask that the message be forwarded to Biggs BEFORE TUESDAY. Send copies to us at [redacted] or [redacted].

There are over a hundred people around the country who have expressed interest in the campaign, and if all could write now, it might really be productive. Thanks much,

Neil and Abby

p.s. If at any time you wish to be taken off our mailing list, please let us know

_____
_____
_____

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

526. jarnot
anthology of new american poets
Fri 13 Mar 1998

---

dear list,

everyone is invited to a party for

An Anthology of New (American) Poets from Talisman House edited by Lisa Jarnot, Leonard Schwartz and Chris Stroffolino at Teachers and Writers Collaborative 5 Union Square West

New York City

Tuesday March 17th

6-9 PM

↑ Index

527. Cadaly
Forks and Honey
Fri 13 Mar 1998

<<I eat my peas with honey:
I've done it all my life.
It may taste kind of funny,
But it keeps them on my knife.

Here, the knife would be a fork if "fork" rhymed with "life">>

Interestingly, this poem has entered pop culture (and children's songs), as "fact": how peas were eaten before the fork was invented. Forks were first used to drain sauce off food. And were only available to artistocrats for a few hundred years.

What about spoons?

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

528. Annie Finch

"metaphor" on a bus: deconstructing

Fri 13 Mar 1998

I remember Geoffrey Hartmann and/or Paul deMan drawing a picture of a bus on a blackboard at Yale in 1978. It was a bus he had seen in Greece, and on the side it said "metaphor" in Greek letters. Apparently that was a standard word on Athens busses; the busses "carried things over" or something. He (whichever man it was) thought that was marvellous, and he drew an adorable bus. It was one of the rare times in the course that I saw him evince joy at something. The bus was so REAL, I now realize. I think it somehow let him (DeMan, I think it was, actually) off the hook.

That minute was the first time that I heard the word trope. Tropes were absolutely the cat's pajamas (now that's a good metonym-metaphor combination) then. We read a Nietzsche essay that used how metaphors work to show that nothing meant anything, and my friends and I had our minds duly blown, blown down to the bottom. And, moreover, we felt terror at having our minds blown, as we were supposed to.

I can't help wondering if the 80's turn away from metaphor was a backlash reaction to such overmystification of metaphor. SO much (or the lack of so much) depended on metaphor. Metaphor, not metonymy, was the hardcore trope of choice in that particular "Lit X" classroom.

Obviously, this has nothing to do with Linda's original query (I think not, anyway. On the other hand, such machinations with metaphor obviously didn't help the perception that metaphor would be helpful for poems that wanted to engage with the world politically). Annie

_____
_____
_____

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

529. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Tom, If your still with us, I'd suggest that you take advantage of the list to make an intervention, to assert, question, and reconfigure your stance(s) and do the daring, as does Keston Sutherland by actually posting poems, by speaking with instead of speaking against. Silence, for myself at least, probably has more to do with folks just being too busy . . . but those same busy-bodies return to the list as a resource when they need it. You'll find these self-congradulatory cryptics wherever you go. Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` -----><-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

On Fri, 13 Mar 1998, TBeck131 wrote:

> I'm not sure what I hoped to find on the poetics list but I'm sure that I haven't found it.
> What I have encountered is a professorial smugness (people who can't or won't distinguish between living and dead poets; people who scoff at the political efficacy of writing) propped up by extraordinary silences (most of the list is voiceless most of the time).
> There's way too much concern with position--with laurels, with "winning", with self-congratulation and self-promotion. The sound of one hand (who gives a damn if it is left or right) clapping one's self on the back.
> You folks have a powerful tool at your disposal. One can only hope that you figure out how to make better use of it.
>
> Signing off.
>
> Tom Beckett

↑ Index

530. David Zauhar
Re: virus
Fri 13 Mar 1998

On Fri, 13 Mar 1998, Judy Roitman wrote:

> >_____
> >Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
> >E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
> >Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>
> >
> >"Language is a virus."
> >-- Laurie Anderson
>
> The quote is actually from Burroughs: "Language is a virus from outer space."
>
Judy is right, of course. I almost pointed out the same thing, until I realized that, just because WSB said it FIRST, doesn't mean that Laurie Anderson didn't SAY IT herself. And if Carolyn wants to quote Laurie Anderson's version, what the hell (esp. Since LA is still alive and can actually say the words) (and since so far as I know she (anderson) never appeared in a Nike commercial).

"Fresh" from a 14 hour overnight train ride...

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

531. sylvester pollet
Re: goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Miekal, I think you should send this back-channel. I sent him one that way this morning. otherwise, i think we're talking to each other--not that we shouldn't also. sylvester

At 12:39 PM +0000 3/13/98, Miekal And wrote: >tom, Im saddened that youve left the list, have felt similarly to you, >that there is amazing potential on lists such as this one (& >wri-eye-tings) bandwidth that is largely unexplored, & tho no medium is >perfect, actions such as networking & extending one's own works into a >public medium, & even learning, are goals that are quite reachable >here. I wonder (if you are still here) if you would speak more to the >failed hopes that you had, & wonder if there is any sense of an >emotional overwhelmance, (which more than anything else with list >participation, I become discouraged by, & usually a few days of space >makes be hungry again for jumping back into the muck}

>
>Id like to make it clear, that you were shaking the tree & fruit was >falling within reach, tho, unfortunately, effects are sometimes the >inverse of intent...
>
>
>miekal

↑ Index

532. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Forks and Honey
Fri 13 Mar 1998

On Mar 13, 12:06pm, Cadaly wrote:
> Subject: Forks and Honey
> <<I eat my peas with honey:
> I've done it all my life.
> It may taste kind of funny,
> But it keeps them on my knife.
>
> Here, the knife would be a fork if "fork" rhymed with "life.">>
>
> Interestingly, this poem has entered pop culture (and children's songs), as > "fact": how peas were eaten before the fork was invented. Forks were first > used to drain sauce off food. And were only available to artistocrats for a > few hundred years.
>
> What about spoons?

Charles Simic has this to say about the ignoble spoon,

Spoon

An old spoon,
Chewed,
Licked clean,

Polished back
To its evil-eyed Glow,

Eying you now
>From the table,
Ready to scratch

Today's date
And your name
On the bare wall.

-Charles Simic

Fork

This strange thing must have crept
Right out of hell
It resembles a birds foot
Worn around the cannibal's neck

As you hold it in your hand,
As you stab with it into a piece of meat,
It is possible to imagine the rest of the bird:
Its head which like your fist
Is large, bald, beakless, and blind.

-Charles Simic

William Burmeister

↑ Index

533. Brian Carpenter
UK query
Fri 13 Mar 1998

I'm going to be in England for all of April and May. As its my first trip over there, I'd be very appreciative of any information regarding interesting places for readings or current reading series, good bookstores for small press material, and so forth--anywhere in England really. Anything will be helpful. Many thanks.

BC

↑ Index

534. Gabriel Gudding
Re: goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

Tom,

I've a good guess re why so little responsiveness to postings to the list lately: it's spring break at many US universities these days. Purdue's in the middle of its, Cornell's starts next week, some were last week. I just got back in town myself.

But there's also this: Professorial smugness is really half the fun of being in the academy. It's one of the perqs (sp?), the plusses, the bonuses (boni?). But really in my experience smugness is much more a phenomenon associated with the literati, not necessarily the academy. Even if this list were composed of mostly non-academics (which I think is _not_ the case), you'd have that smug silence, self-congratulation and condescension -- common symptoms of writers and a certain kind of habitual reader.

Vitriol, egotism, and ostracism are the three pillars of the canon.

Furthermore, a listerv is like an open sore for those sorts of bacteria: it's more difficult to make a good joke or make a good gesture via email than it is to make a wise-crack or a witty riposte that might be a bit off-base and a bit off-topic and a bit hardy-harrh-har. The simple fact that we are writing to a vast and potentially immediately responsive group of strangers is a bit hard to ignore -- whihc makes the silence that follows a posting even harder to ignore. Consider a political podium, say at a televised national convention: you never find much chit-chat, much of anything of importance discussed, much of anything but backscratching and hand-clasping: podiums nad rostrums just aren't the place for a good raging discussion: that takes intimacy.

There is a tendency, that is to say, to mistake, I think, ecommunication as something that can be or become private or intimate. It can't. You say it's a potentially important tool: maybe so. But it's a privatizing tool: that's what it's REALLY good at. It's not a public tool, not a public-making or community-making tool. It's more on the order of a hacksaw than a screwdriver: it cuts us apart rather than squishing us together.

With all that said, I have to sayt hat I DO find a great deal of worth on this here listserv: much humor, great jokes, really brilliant exchanges, high wit, shocking insights (yours included), and, yes, raunchy and rancorous and petty invective.

But hey: like any good anthology, you gotta pick and choose. You chose to close the book. That's okey dokey. Just know, footnote to headline: you were a good read.

gg

On Fri, 13 Mar 1998, TBeck131 wrote:

> I'm not sure what I hoped to find on the poetics list but I'm sure that I haven't found it.
> What I have encountered is a professorial smugness (people who can't or won't distinguish between living and dead poets; people who scoff at the political efficacy of writing) propped up by extraordinary silences (most of the list is voiceless most of the time).
> There's way too much concern with position--with laurels, with "winning", with self-congratulation and self-promotion. The sound of one hand (who gives a damn if it is left or right) clapping one's self on the back.
> You folks have a powerful tool at your disposal. One can only hope that you figure out how to make better use of it.
>
> Signing off.
>
> Tom Beckett

↑ Index

535. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: goodbye
Fri 13 Mar 1998

---

gabriel, i don't follow you at all: email can't be intimate?... what do you mean?---do you mean that if i establish what i think is an intimate relationship with someone online, intimate in the sense of a mutual plumbing of emotions and convictions---i'm self-deceived?...

i've seen that word "intimacy" used to describe sexual relationships between strangers...

again, i can't understand how any medium excludes the possibilities of intimacy---assuming intimacy is itself mediated... at the same time, there is something about this medium---as a public medium---that can be used to promote one-on-one intimacies... if i backchannel you, and we get to talking, you may very well feel inclined to reveal more of yourself than you might f2f... it's happened to me and to many i know... on the other hand, you might not feel this way---up to you... i suspect though that the nature of this medium has something to do with being able to spatialize thought, and figure thinking, with some care---not quite the same as the telephone... not quite the same as a hard-copy letter, either... but reaching across distances faster, across different walks of life faster, in a more synchronous setting... public, and not so...

does this mean that we needn't meet f2f?... no---having just met keith tuma after knowing him online for a few years, i feel our f2f connection helped to solidify our friendship... i could say the same for many other folks, who themselves might say the same... and i've met folks f2f, whom i've grown closer to after having met them again online...

again, depends on how you come to this medium, any medium... i wouldn't come here expecting a utopia, i might come here trying to push or pull toward something better... i've always found, when it comes to social organizations, that the whole is less than the sum of the individual beings, even if its greater than any one individual... so i always see something to shoot for...

too bad tom left...

best,

joe

↑ Index

536. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Alanxy

Sat 14 Mar 1998

-

I am Alanxy why am I Alanxy because that is because when I send you a message, that is when I because, when I send you a message it must be control-x then y, that is control-x to send, then y for yes, yes yes to send the message to you, yes yes

but Alanxy, yes, well, then when this happens, the control key is moved,
not where I want it to be!
or no longer operates or is missing in the first place or never was there, then when I type control-x y
to send you the message yes yes to send you the message, then I become Alanxy
then I am Alanxy
after signing Alan,

after signing love, Alan and you see my Alanxy sometimes or I return and write back to you as Alan or as love, Alan not as love Alan no imperative, not even love Alanxy or maybe love Alanxy that is an algebra of existence, is it not that is an algebra of existence

↑ Index

537. rsillima
Readings in San Diego
Sat 14 Mar 1998

I will be in San Diego the week of April 6 through 10. Does anybody know of readings there that week? If so, please back (or front) channel.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

538. Kcglowworm
Hartley on Mac Low
Sat 14 Mar 1998

Please note that my article on Jackson Mac Low is now online at EPC.

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/

George Hartley

↑ Index

539. Richard Long
The 2River View, 2_3 (Spring 1998)
Sat 14 Mar 1998

I thought ya'll might be interested in reading the most recent, Spring issue of _The 2River View_, with poems by Charles Albano, Kate Bergen, Pat Boran, C. E. Chaffin, Michael Hoerman, billy little (of this list), Peter Munro, David M. Somerfleck, Marc Swan,and Rochelle Randel.

Well, hopefully Spring. It is snowing here (at last) in Buffalo.

My best,
Richard

Richard Long
2River Poetry
[redacted]
http://www.daemen.edu/~2River

↑ Index

540. Gabriel Gudding
Re: goodbye
Sat 14 Mar 1998

On Fri, 13 Mar 1998, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:

> *gabriel, i don't follow you at all: email can't be intimate?... what do you mean?---do you mean that if i establish what i think is an intimate relationship with someone online, intimate in the sense of a mutual plumbing of emotions and convictions---i'm self-deceived?...*

Yah, Joe, that's basically what I'm saying.

I think it's a rather _convivial_ medium. But it's not intimate. There's nothing very intimate about the movies or about television: broadcasting isn't intimate. Reading broadcasts isn't intimate. 600 people read this stuff, and most, I imagine, give the material here well-deserved distinterest. And though you're right to say that one-to-one letters (backchanneling, I see it's called) can serve an intimacy: but it can't _create_ one. Not a genuine one, anyway. You must be able to see, smell, touch, at times taste, embrace, have coffee with -- and yada yada yada with -- anybody with whom you are to become intimate.

> i've seen that word "intimacy" used to describe sexual relationships between strangers...

I'm not sure, but I think that's, like, Irony. If not, I'd have to say that whoever uttered those words was either purposefully or ignorantly embracing an idea that can only be characterized as an abomination.

> again, i can't understand how any medium excludes the possibilities of intimacy---assuming intimacy is itself mediated...

That's my point: intimacy is not mediated. I know that as an educated person I'm expected to believe, as they cliche goes, that Everything's mediated. But that's frankly a load of codswallop.

> if i backchannel you, and we get to talking, you may very well feel inclined to reveal more of yourself than you might f2f... it's happened to me and to many i know...

"getting to talking" and talking itself does not an intimacy make. Look, I'm not saying anything new or profound here: the origin and basis of intimacy, of friendship, as ol Cicero said (and about which he was probably right) is love and goodwill. I, yes, _do_ happen to avow the old medieval idea of the Word -- both verbum and verbum dei. Where love and goodwill are present, there is intimacy; I certainly don't believe that epistolary relationships preclude intimacy, insofar as they don't preclude love and goodwill: but letters (epistles, not the alphabetical dingies) aren't great packhorses: they can't bear, often, very much love and goodwill -- and this is simply because the principle way a human being lies is through the word: we _see_ the truth about someone, or _know_ the truth about someone, or _recognize_ it, but we rarely _read_ it, and if we do read it, we certainly aren't very inclined to trust it. Though the National Inquirer is one of my favorite newspapers.

Anyway, I'm belaboring, like, the obvious, I think.

Look, reading this stuff, these posts from the former Tom and from you and from others -- the great Silliman et alii -- I learn a great deal about myself and about the play of ideas, but I frankly learn nothing about the people who type this stuff into the 600 various computers linked by this listserv. I learn about what they think nad sometimes about what they feel, but nothing about who they are.

> does this mean that we needn't meet f2f?... no---having just met keith tuma after knowing him online for a few years, i feel our f2f connection helped to solidify our friendship... i could say the same for many other folks, who themselves might say the same... and i've met folks f2f, whom i've grown closer to after having met them again online...

I would say that your intimacy or friendship did not begin until you actually shook tuma's hand, right? I'd frankly go so far as to say that prior to that handshake each of you was, in a sense, talking only to himself: that each of you facilitated a rather common kind of self-inquiry for the other.

Anyway, all best, Joe.

At ten eastern tonight
I'll put my two lips on the upper right hand of my screen:
I'd like to believe you'll be doing the same.

Gabriel, smiling.

↑ Index

541. Gabriel Gudding
Deceased Poet Semenovich
Sat 14 Mar 1998

Dear List:

Do any of you know of a poet named Semenovich. Either Joe Semenovich or Joel Semenovich? He has apparently died. He lived in Brooklyn. He died sometime after october of 1997.

He sent three brilliant and, like, very weird poems to the Sycamore and I sat on them for four months hemming and hawing: they were about how jealous he was of Sharon Olds and how good she looks in her photographs and how he'd like to, like, get really intimate with her (f-word). I wrote him last month apologizing for the delay and explaining why we weren't going to run his poems, which were about not ever getting published and how sick he was of never getting published and about how jealous he was of successful poets and about how he was getting older and obsessed with his total failure to be recogized and read. They were great poems, but there was an aesthetic donnybrook in the offices about running them (people insisting I had lost my taste etc) -- it got complicated. Anyway, the letter I wrote came by return to sender and the big black word DECEASED scrawled across Semenovich's address.

My question is: did anybody know him? If so, could you backchannel me and tell me briefly about him, who he was, if in fact he is dead or if this was, like, a joke, or if this guy really wasn't known at all?

I'd appreciate it. It's sort of eating me.

Gabriel GUdding

↑ Index

542. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: goodbye
Sat 14 Mar 1998

gabriel, part of my deepest (as 'twere), most essential nature (as 'twere) is right here, in these words... the ones you're reading on your screen and the ones i'm reading on mine...

no shit, really...

i don't say the world is mediated b/c it's fashionable to say so... i say it's mediated b/c this is how i've found it out... the actual, physical touch of a human being is mediated by our own flesh---which has all to do with how we come to it... i mean, the understanding or lack thereof we bring to it ('learn how to listen to your body')... else my own flesh & blood, say, would be the same as any other's, no?... my father's touch---not different, but different again, not simply b/c he was different, but b/c of how i imagine or feel his being, as my father... a matter of distance---physical distance, that marks two separate entities, and a matter of resolving such distance, or trying to... like death perhaps... and again, since i bring such meaning to this stuff, i say things become intimate... quickly in fact, in fact sometimes too quickly... which is why the intimacy my wife and i had developed over 3-4 months online had, for a future, to become a matter of flesh in order to become lasting... i mean, as husband and wife---and perhaps it needn't be this way either... both of us understood how this medium, like all media, can make a fool of you... but we had become intimate prior to meeting in the flesh... you may rather say that we laid the groundwork for intimacy---but from where i sit, this groundwork was part & parcel of our intimacy...

like you say, words (can) lie... so do bodies, how we come to understand them... i just don't see anyway around this... but again, words (can) speak truth... again, like the body... i never mistake words for bodies, or bodies for words... i would of course "trash" the words sooner than "trash" the bodies... but assigning such priority to bodies is not to assign bodily interactions the sole site of intimacy... b/c such interaction of necessity includes communication of some sort... and you can take the latter with you, as 'twere... isn't this what makes us social creatures?... occasionally i've found bodily presence to exceed or supplant words in my relations with others---often this has created real problems for me in establishing intimacy... words can do this too, i.e., create problems...

i would say that for intimacy you really need it all, gabriel---words and bodies, some sort of communicative understanding... so for me this stuff is part of that intimacy, just as words of yore (so to speak)... but they work differently around t/here, and in this era... in any case, words, significant words, are vital to my sense of what intimacy is, can be...

all best,

joe

↑ Index

543. Maria Damon
Re: Deceased Poet Semenovich
Sat 14 Mar 1998

---

wow what a tale. one for the archives for all kinds of reasons. can you run those poems over this list? you've, as my students write, "peaked" my interest.

At 1:43 PM -0500 3/14/98, Gabriel Gudding wrote:
>Dear List:

>
>Do any of you know of a poet named Semenovich. Either Joe Semenovich or >Joel Semenovich? He has apparently died. He lived in Brooklyn. He died >sometime after october of 1997.
>
>He sent three brilliant and, like, very weird poems to the Sycamore and I >sat on them for four months hemming and hawing: they were about how >jealous he was of Sharon Olds and how good she looks in her photographs >and how he'd like to, like, get really intimate with her (f-word). I >wrote him last month apologizing for the delay and explaining why we >weren't going to run his poems, which were about not ever getting >published and how sick he was of never getting published and about how >jealous he was of successful poets and about how he was getting older and >obsessed with his total failure to be recogized and read. They were great >poems, but there was an aesthetic donnybrook in the offices about running >them (people insisting I had lost my taste etc) -- it got complicated.
>Anyway, the letter I wrote came by return to sender and the big black word
>DECEASED scrawled across Semenovich's address.
>
>My question is: did anybody know him? If so, could you backchannel me and >tell me briefly about him, who he was, if in fact he is dead or if this >was, like, a joke, or if this guy really wasn't known at all?
>
>I'd appreciate it. It's sort of eating me.
>
>Gabriel GUdding

↑ Index

544. Gabriel Gudding

Re: Deceased Poet Semenovich

Sat 14 Mar 1998

Maria, well, the poems _should_ be in a pile in my office and I pray they're still there. But I have to say that I'd feel a little freaky about doing that just now: I don't even know if the guy's actually Dead, you know? It sort of at this point feels like rifling a dead guy's wallet or taking a dead guy's boots or something. Can anybody verify if this guy has passed on?

For now, I'd just like to learn about him: can anybody help me out here? He lived on Glenwood Rd in Brooklyn. I don't have a clue about Brooklyn. Anybody know this guy?

Gabriel

On Sat, 14 Mar 1998, Maria Damon wrote:

> wow what a tale. one for the archives for all kinds of reasons. can you run those poems over this list? you've, as my students write, "peaked" my interest.
>
> At 1:43 PM -0500 3/14/98, Gabriel Gudding wrote:
> Dear List:
>
> Do any of you know of a poet named Semenovich. Either Joe Semenovich or Joel Semenovich? He has apparently died. He lived in Brooklyn. He died sometime after october of 1997.
>
> He sent three brilliant and, like, very weird poems to the Sycamore and I sat on them for four months hemming and hawing: they were about how jealous he was of Sharon Olds and how good she looks in her photographs and how he'd like to, like, get really intimate with her (f-word). I wrote him last month apologizing for the delay and explaining why we weren't going to run his poems, which were about not ever getting published and how sick he was of never getting published and about how jealous he was of successful poets and about how he was getting older and obsessed with his total failure to be recogized and read. They were great poems, but there was an aesthetic donnybrook in the offices about running them (people insisting I had lost my taste etc) -- it got complicated. Anyway, the letter I wrote came by return to sender and the big black word DECEASED scrawled across Semenovich's address.
>
> My question is: did anybody know him? If so, could you backchannel me and tell me briefly about him, who he was, if in fact he is dead or if this was, like, a joke, or if this guy really wasn't known at all?
>
> I'd appreciate it. It's sort of eating me.
>
> Gabriel GUdding

↑ Index

545. Thomas Bell
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Sat 14 Mar 1998

Thanks to those who posted re: paratactic. Does seem to be an analogue to psychological meaning although not exact: prelogical (not in a pejorative way), implicit (not conscious) actions, in particular actions toward someone in an intimate (attachment) relationship.

metaphor/metonym discussion suggests that metonym may be similiar move back away from logical discourse but the question then is whether there is another direction that can be taken besides a return to metaphor.

?related to 'revival of formalism'?

tom bell

morning thoughts to clear out the cobwebs

↑ Index

546. Jordan Davis
discon
Sat 14 Mar 1998

---

re-entry --- > to err, to um --- > chuff daddy --- > frequent flier miles

```
  |             |
  |             |
  |             |
 \ /           \ /
```

the hell! --- > take it --- > > > bonus bouillabaise --- > white gloves

```
  |             |
  |             |
  |             |
 \ /           \ /
```

Gator Bowl Insight.com Bowl

```
  |
  |             |
  |             |
 \ /           \ /
```

soft hits 8 point aught truth is beauty

↑ Index

547. Don Wellman
Re: pomo metaphoracity
Sat 14 Mar 1998

The emotional appeal of parataxis like that of drumming is surely pre logical (and I think some in the Eshleman wing of deep subject poetics have used pre-conscious in order to describe this effect ...

If I remember Jakobsen drew hos thoughts on metonomy from work with aphasics--which could be defined as a contiguity disorder ????

On the other hand--to invoke something in common to holographic, fractal, and maybe genetic models --each slice of the string seems to have metaphoric potentials of expansion ...

if you drop a stone in a pool and watch the rings spread on the surface--it is because of replicant seriality expanding that one notices the rose pattern ...

metaphor + insight

and it is surely not as logical as analogy and in a digital world, there is a poetic place for the analog ...

Don Wellman

↑ Index

548. Martin Spinelli
London po
Sat 14 Mar 1998

In response to Brian Carpenter's UK query:

Exceptionally good bookstore in London, particularly for small press, concrete & audio poetry:

workfortheeyetodo
63 Charterhouse St.
EC1M

Good reading series:

Sub Voicive Poetry
Irregular Tuesdays at 8 pm
The Three Cups (pub)
Sandland Street (Holborn tube)

21 April - Cydney Chadwick
5 May - Bob Perelman
12 May - Carlyle Reedy / Alaric Summer
19 May - Anne Waldman
6 June - Paul Dutton

The Ugly American,
Martin

_____
Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

549. Martin Spinelli

Fw: subVoicive : Cayley : Spinelli [Glazier] : 17 Mar. London UK

Sat 14 Mar 1998

Date: Wednesday, March 11, 1998 15:30:59
From: John Cayley
To: John Cayley
Subject: subVoicive : Cayley : Spinelli [Glazier] : 17 Mar. London UK

Reading at Sub Voicive Poetry

Tuesday 17 March 1998, 8.00 pm
Upstairs at The Three Cups
Sandland Street (Holborn Tube), London, UK
Admission 5 or 2.50 pounds

John Cayley & Martin Spinelli with Spinelli reading for, from and with the work of Loss Pequen~o Glazier (who couldn't make it across the pond) and from his own

Cayley is a transl(iter)ator/editor/poet/administra(i/nsla)tor of pURLs, increasingly caught up with writing in programmable and networked media.
Aging web site: http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/

Spinelli is a writer and radio producer residing in Lewes.
His LINEbreak radio series brought the work of Creeley, Howe, Templeton, Auster, Mac Low, and many other formally innovative poets and prose writers to public radio listeners in the US in
'96 and '97. (Sample LINEbreak at the Electronic Poetry Center http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak.) Recently, he guest-edited the current, radio-broadcast issue of the London-based multi-media arts magazine, Engaged (http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk).

Spinelli will also read from the work of Loss Pequen~o Glazier, and from his own poetic & critical responses to it. Glazier is a poet whose publications include: Leaving Loss Glazier, The Parts (Meow) and the forthcoming, Tenoshhteetla'n. He also is the webmaster of the Electronic Poetry Center (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc).

>  Apologies if you get this message more than once *****
>
>  next bit only works if you can see ... *****
> |<------this many monospaced chars on your window without line wrap----->|
>
> ----------
> Going a little | e e e |
> a c a c egfg | cha hs cªa ªª ‰le | ‰ §s §£ ®£ §H
> egfg egfg egfg egfg | e e e e ete e e |
> Leav | line e | alone
> | |
> fca d f dcac fcbc | a is.anda a a a | island
> g bc gcbc g b g | e a ea a e e |
> *The sun is in the cloud | le non anai atre k*oud | (will not) see* > #dcbc # fcbc gbab (| #dkbk # fhbk jbab (|
> f | dp o i | ¶› ªD §H ªy ‰T
> MARTIN | |
> SPINELLI Fairly co | saillu ko | hear
> cfef cfef efef efef efe | kfes hfef afef efeq efe | (your) echoes
> | |
> Little purr. | .ittle porr. |
> d g b a g a d | | • ¥† §J ¾` L
> efdf egdf # cfdf # cfdf | Tues 17 Mar'98, 8pm |
> | | return JOHN
> g 7 | S u b V o i c i v e | CAYLEY
> dede g 7 g. 7 g. | | light
> d 7 dede g de | Upstairs | lakeside
> d | The Three Cups |
> e e | Sandland Street | ¥_ ..." ´C ,a §W
> #7 # 7 (.)b #7 fb | (Holborn Tube) |
> 7d#c d g 7 e#d | Admission GBP 5/2.50 | mosses
> *f d c# * | |*
> ----------

↑ Index

550. Henry Gould

Re: sininster metaphors vs. dextrous metonymies

Sat 14 Mar 1998

Mandel's really poppin with his left (metaphymitly speaking). Exactly right on about the tropes. Didn't Kenneth Burke say metonymy is a kind of metaphor? Applying value judgements to rhetorical tropes is like Ted Hughes eating crow while forking Sylvia and calling it spooning - lookout, raven mavens! You call this pottery? It bites!

I like Ike and synecdoche too and Tyler too-too Tippecanoe.

Gosh, those rabbis sure knew how to get a laugh out of a crucifixion. A real knee-slapper toe-nailer, Tom! An image is an image and a god is a god and shucks maybe the Muslims are right. It was all a horsefeedback loopy sorta hat trick. Hardehar at yourdeyour and mightymine EXPENSE - seemingly forever! Aren't tropes fun?? (Especially on Desolation Row.)

"There are many here among us who feel that life is but a joke"
- Jimi via rabbi Bob

"Words can kill." - President of Knesset

They can also make people depressed.

"Man is in love, and loves what vanishes - what more is there to say?" - Yeats

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

551. Tom Mandel
sininster metaphors vs. dextrous metonymies
Sat 14 Mar 1998

For the (burgeoning) record I'm a lefty too, but I hit right-handed and dribble right-handed, prefer to drive the basket from the right side, but have a left-handed jumpshot, yet throw a football right-handed. Make what you will of all that (hint: I've never had a guaranteed contract).

I type with both hands.

The following is for those who would actually like to understand metaphor and metonymy.

I have no idea why, but one of the received ideas of our poetic time, has some-one else mentioned this? intanced this?, is that metaphor is bad metonymy good. Comparing one thing to another, tsk tsk. How could you? Don't you see the uniqueness the singularity of all? The general singularity I mean. This highly-reduced sauce is too thick to pour on anything anyone really cooks up, alas, and metaphor (see the previous one) is cool! (a metaphor) For example all theory is metaphor -- see Riemannian geometry, relativity, gravity as "bent" space (metaphor), string theory, you get the idea (how could you from this fragmentary address?) (<-- metaphor), or did you think the Krebs Cycle was a real geometric form?

Has someone mentioned the extraordinary work of George Lakoff on metaphor?

I liked someone suggesting that fork might be a good metonymy for knife -- actually, the peas are a better metonymy for the knife, tho it is the spoonness of a knife to which the peas attach. Note that knife, fork, and spoon began life as "stick." Metaphor moved them on (look at your hand).

A serious section: favored though was the citation from (suggestion by?) someone (G. Hartley?) that metaphor is inherently transcendental---no need to open the bus door at that stop---and metonymy imminent---because it is busy "establishing relationships of contiguity." I hope it is obvious that this cart won't pull a horse.

Metonymy relies on, it doesn't establish, relationships of contiguity (or other existing connection---flag for country, boat, patriotism, etc.). That's why a spoon is not a metonymy for a knife, run away though they did together. Your uncle may be your lover, your uncle may even be a metaphor for your lover, but your uncle will never be a metonymy for your lover, not even if they're roommates.

Metaphor establishes relationships---including those of contiguity---between things which are different. Providing Kafka, btw, as evidence that metaphor means transcendence imposes a particular interpretation on his work; indicating that reading "Kafka will suggest (that) metaphor is inherently theological in its structuring of mediation itself as a relationship to something outside or above the structure or terrain, and by its positioning of the mediator as one who inhabits a space or opening between us and some external power" is not more than 180 degrees off, since the play of metaphor in Kafka balances on the non-realizability, non-translatability of all that metaphor makes available as its intention. The trial is precisely not a trial, the castle not a place of high degree. I.e. these are precisely not theological and non-transcendant. They are what you are flattened against in the most imminent fashion, and the metaphor stands in for an inability to conceptualize your life. Gregor Samsa as beetle, no mediator available.

For Hartley (or whoever I'm standing him in for metaphorically, some poor straw man) to suggest that "Metaphor assumes a certain equivalence, a reduction of differences, between the two terms in order for this substitution to be possible" indicates a pretty deep misunderstanding of what goes on in this area of language. Metaphor precisely extends our understanding of X out of its meaning space by framing it against another meaning space. It is metonymy that reduces difference. "Red sails in the sunset" -- the sail is being substituted metonymically for the ship. There is intentionally no semantic difference between them. When bigmouth talks, we are identifying the fellow (me in this instance it seems) metonymically. On the other hand, "rosy-fingered dawn" does not "assume a certain equivalence" between dawn and fingers, it extends the semantics of "dawn."

That metonymy might get us out of transcendeance and theology is particularly amusing in the light, for example, of Xtianity's utterly metonymic structure: worship cross, god is actually son of god, etc. etc. or as the Rabbis used to say "do you believe these people? One end of the stick they burn for heat, the other end they carve and they bow down before it?" (that's in Absence Sensorium somewhere I think btw)

Oh well, just more left-handed arrogance from one of the cognoscenti.... I suppose. Perhaps on the other hand, there's someone to agree with me that like poets critics ought to know something about language? More likely, my friends on this list are now grinning as they see me try to pick a fight for the umpteenth time and those who don't know me either are stunned at my brilliance or think this post was actually written by Dale Smith. Oh well, divide and conquer I always say -- to the peas under the mattress of my knife's pod, that is).

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

552. CharSSmith

Fwd: NEW: SmallPress - Small Press,Limited Edition and Chapbook List

Sat 14 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_889928613_boundary

thought this might be of interest to some people here:

--part0_889928613_boundary

air18.mail.aol.com (v40.7) with SMTP; Sat, 14 Mar 1998 20:41:01 -0500 by relay21.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id UAA20937;
Sat, 14 Mar 1998 20:40:42 -0500 (EST)
(LSMTP for OpenVMS v1.1a) with SMTP id
<[redacted]>; Sat, 14 Mar 1998 20:40:02 -0500

Date: Sat, 14 Mar 1998 20:46:56 -0500
<[redacted]>
<[redacted]>
From: Ron Koster <[redacted]>
Subject: NEW: SmallPress - Small Press,
Limited Edition and Chapbook Publishing
To: [redacted]

> X-From_: [redacted] Sat Mar 14 18:30:56 1998
> Date: Sat, 14 Mar 1998 17:21:45 -0600
> Reply-To: An-tAthair-Siorai Press Gp <[redacted]>
> Sender: NEW-LIST - New List Announcements <[redacted]>
> From: An-tAthair-Siorai Press Gp <[redacted]>
> Subject: NEW: SmallPress - Small Press,
> Limited Edition and Chapbook Publishing
> To: [redacted]
>
> SmallPress via http://www.onelist.com/subscribe.cgi/smallpress
>
> SmallPress is an unmoderated discussion list for Publishers, Printers, Editors, Collectors, Authors, Booksellers, Librarians, Historians and anyone else interested in old and modern Small Press books, Small Press Publishing, Marketing, Writing, Chapbooks and Magazines. It invites comments on the state of the market, success and failure reports, ideas and requests for information. Messages about new and planned publications are also welcomed, as are reviews of books and magazines within the Small Press Movement, and from an historical point of view.
>
> The list is designed to place all interested parties in touch with one another in an informal manner and allow open and frank - but not abusive - discussion of all aspects of this area of Publishing, and discussion / warnings on vanity press publishing, changes in copyright law, cataloguing and legal requirements for different markets and countries.
>
> Owner: Adam An-tAthair-Siorai [redacted]
>
> -------
> Use this information at your own risk. For more information and disclaimer send E-mail to [redacted] with the command INFO NEW-LIST in the body. URL: http://LISTSERV.NODAK.EDU/archives/new-list.html

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

P S Y M O N ? ? ? ?
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

http://home.istar.ca/~psymon
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

--part0_889928613_boundary--

↑ Index

553. Stephen Cope
Re: Readings in San Diego
Sat 14 Mar 1998

Ron (and others):

Jay Wright will be reading at UCSD as part of the New Writing Series on April 9th at 4:30, and he will read later that evening at the Museum in La Jolla. I'll post the full list of Spring readings soon.

Hope to see you there.

Stephen Cope

> I will be in San Diego the week of April 6 through 10. Does anybody know of readings there that week? If so, please back (or front) channel.
>
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

554. Steve Tills
Re: Sound States
Sun 15 Mar 1998

Dear Charles,

You might try Chris Funkhauser; he's a friend and bud of Cecil Taylor's. Where ole Chris is, I'm not sure, but SUNY Albany or Don Byrd there might know. Chris, if you're out there somewhere, warm hello from Steve, here. Know this text Charles is looking for? S.

CharSSmith wrote:

> has anyone read or know anything about this book?
>
> --Charles Smith
>
> Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies
> by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998)
> ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.
> "At least since the late 1920s some writers have been trying to free writing from the > book, from the restrictions of print. This collection of essays explores the
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

> aural aspect > of poetics, especially focusing on the technologies of sound and the possibilities they > provide and provoke. Subjects range from Caribbean dub poetry to the experiments > of John Cage and Cecil Taylor. Here's a book to add to that small but vital shelf that > illuminates this essential ground--it's a good introduction to the issues and sends you > off to the best source material. "

↑ Index

555. Stephen Cope

New Writing Series in San Diego

Sun 15 Mar 1998

List-

Still a few yet-to-be-announced events, but otherwise it's complete. I wanted to give you all enough time to make your travel plans...

UCSD NEW WRITING SERIES SPRING 1998
(Unless otherwise noted, all events take place at the Visual Arts Performance Space on the UCSD campus at 4:30PM)

---

* Jay Wright April 9 *

The acclaimed author of several books of poetry, including _Boleros_ and _The Double Invention of Komo_, Wright's work is often cross-cultural in scope, drawing on intersections of American, African, and African-American mythology and history. _Selected Poems of Jay Wright_ was published in 1987 by Princeton University Press, and includes an afterword by Harold Bloom.

* Lydia Davis April 15 *

A former San Diegan, Davis is the author of a novel, _The End of the Story_, and two collections of stories, _Break it Down_ and _Almost No Memory_. Her work has appeared in numerous journals and anthologies, most recently _The Best American Short Stories 1997_. She teaches at Bard College in New York.

* A CELEBRATION OF POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM April 19 *
Scheduled 3:00 p.m. in the Geisel Room of the Central University Library. Reception & party to follow.

Readings and performances to celebrate the publication of the second volume of Rothenberg and Joris's groundbreaking anthology _Poems for the Millennium: The University of California Book of Modern & Postmodern Poetry_, a

"brilliant revision of all we'd thought was 'poetry of the twentieth century'"(Robert Creeley) and "a sourcebook for the future." (Gary Snyder)

* Douglas Messerli and Joe Ross April 22 *

Founder of the seminal literary press Sun & Moon, Messerli is the author of several books of poetry and an ongoing work _Structures of Destruction_. Under the pseudonym of Kier Peters, he has written several dramas which have been performed nationwide. Ross recently moved to San Diego from Washington D.C., where he was the Literary Editor for the Washington Review. His tenth book of poetry, _EQUATIONS=equals_, is forthcoming from Sun & Moon.

* Yoshimasu Gozo and Marilia April 24 *
Scheduled 7:00 p.m. at CRCA in collaboration with the UCSD Interarts Consortium.

One of the most acclaimed of contemporary Japanese poets, Yoshimasu is also an accomplished performer, often working to jazz or improvised accompaniment. As a singer and performance artist Marilia has given numerous performances around the world, including collaborations with Yoshimasu and with Butoh dance founder Kazuo Ohno.

* Ed Roberson April 29 *

Ed Roberson's fourth and most recent book, _Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In_, won the 1994 Iowa Poetry Prize, and has established him as a major figure in contemporary African-American poetry. Ed Foster has called Roberson "one of those 'hidden masters'" and "one of our best," and Nathaniel Mackey has described his poetry as "wrought, wry, entrancing, transportative, strict, soul-sustaining." He lives in New Jersey.

* John Woods and Jerome Rothenberg May 6 *
Presented in cooperation with PEN American Center's national translation month.

A session of creative translation and performance. John Woods, who has done many award-winning translations from German authors will read from his ongoing translations from Arno Schmidt. Jerome Rothenberg will perform new translations from Pablo Picasso and Vitezslav Nezval and older versions from Kurt Schwitters, Federico García Lorca, and traditional American Indian poetry.

* May 13 TBA *

* John Cayley and Yang Lian May 22 *

Resident for the spring quarter at UCSD, John Cayley is both an innovator with hypertext and web-based poetry and an important translator and disseminator of both the new and the newer Chinese poetry. Yang Lian, as one of the key figures among the post-Mao "misty poets," has continued and expanded his writing while living outside of China and is today a postmodern experimentalist of genuine international stature.

* May 27 TBA *

↑ Index

556. linda russo
Re: metaphoracity redux
Sun 15 Mar 1998

---

sorry for the silence, but here goes / metaphor:

chris s says:
> I've never "bought" the anti-metaphor line, at least in any > rigid sense (to say there are limits to metaphor or to any > linguistic tool is one thing, but to say "metaphor forces > association" and doesn't just let the world BE is quite another... > for to condemn metaphor (or symbols, etc.) on the grounds of > the latter, wouldn't one have to condemn POETRY on the grounds > of the latter more generally?
yes i thought that was a problem in my statement when i reread my post -- & yes poetry doesn't let things be -- but aren't there different sorts of poetry -- them that try to "above" (Romantics) them that try "be" among (moderns); EP is a good example here b/c (harking on George T's post) he DID condemn poetry on those grounds, no? (WW condemned poetry for other reasons & also sought to "make it new" in lyrical ballads . . .) making it new to EP meant (also, &c) making it seeable (letting it be) (& to comment on GT, addressing metaphor was but one way to address this) instead of forcing it into some construct (what i meant by _forcing_ associations). I think there are different in nuances btw "forcing" "making" "requesting" -- differences in the way different poets treat their materials.
Metaphysicals force, objectivists prod? again, perhaps to simplistic but a simple way to discern.

Also, i thought you _had to_ condemn poetry to write it. to want to make the
"new" poetry . . .

btw, george thompson's post:
>Furthermore, when EP says "make it new", what does he mean? Does he >mean "take a good long look and don't compare -- just put it there >next to the wheelbarrow"?

> I don't think so. I think he's talking about metaphor. Make it new.
> See it new, Metaphor.

> No?
>
> GT

↑ Index

557. Alan Myouka Sondheim
forwrded from Nikuko, a stupid poem
Sun 15 Mar 1998

-

dreaming of white gauze again, lips tied into place, severed from the body, appearing to emerge, there's always the first word, slight tumescence of the cloth, a definition of smothered language, body arched upwards, hollow beneath the back (where the back would be),
it's an outline of white gauze, it's always damp, as if excretions were somehow caught up in all of this, head bending backwards speaking upside-down, all sounds are coming-out sounds sdnuos tuo-gnimoc era
i will be a dash caught in a mesh, i will be a period coming to an end

↑ Index

558. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Deceased Poet Semenovich
Sun 15 Mar 1998

I knew Joe Semanovich. He was a real maverick. Over ten years ago I was attending then eventually running a poetry group/workshop which met at the CUNY Grad Center. One night Joe read a poem that I liked very much but I think he took offense that I said of the experience that it was like Gregory Corso reading "The Raven." As things went on Joe would arrive at meetings half-tanked and would take swigs off a bottle here and there over the span of a meeting. One night he dramatically walked out in a huff after starting a shouting match with someone who was a featured reader. I later ran into him at the Hunter College library where he worked. We were cordial and I don't think he was still mad at me (though his poems were surely wonderfully mad). I don't think in our po-world today there is enough room for people like Joe who was too beset by grievances among other things to play the game properly. RIP.

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

559. Gabriel Gudding

Re: Deceased Poet Semenovich

Sun 15 Mar 1998

Dear Burt, Dear Fallen Angels,

Ok. So that's depressing. Joe Semenovich, jealous poet and unknown, has, like, died.

I hope his poems are still in my office.

I guess, though, it's not decided yet that he's actually dead, since it certainly does seem as if a guy, as described below, would be just as capable (right word?) of a good practical joke (writing DECEASED on an overdue envelope) as he would be of dying a relatively boozy death.

I'll call Hunter College. Thanks for the information.

Joe Semenovich: R, like, In Peace. Though I frankly am totally chagrined to think that this actually happened, that htis guy sent Syc Rev his last or next to last poems, all of which had to do with age, unpublished-dom, jealousy, and anger, and then, like, goes and Dies. So if this is a joke, I spose R could be Roar. Roar (w/ laughter), or Rest, in Peace, J Semenovich.

Thanks'gain, Burt Kimmelman. Gabe gudding

On Sun, 15 Mar 1998, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> I knew Joe Semanovich. He was a real maverick. Over ten years ago I was attending then eventually running a poetry group/workshop which met at the CUNY Grad Center. One night Joe read a poem that I liked very much but I think he took offense that I said of the experience that it was like Gregory Corso reading "The Raven." As things went on Joe would arrive at meetings half-tanked and would take swigs off a bottle here and there over the span of a meeting. One night he dramatically walked out in a huff after starting a shouting match with someone who was a featured reader. I later ran into him at the Hunter College library where he worked. We were cordial and I don't think he was still mad at me (though his poems were surely wonderfully mad). I don't think in our po-world today there is enough room for people like Joe who was too beset by grievances among other things to play the game properly. RIP.
>
> Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

560. Douglas Barbour

Re: Tom Beckett's goodbye

Sun 15 Mar 1998

I'm really sorry to see Tom Beckett signing off but am sure glad he signed on. If only because I now have a at least two issues of The Difficulties as well as one of his own small books. Moreover, his own contributions in even this short time have been interesting & of use.

But maybe this is a chatroom as much as anything, & that's not even necessarily a bad thing. Is it?

I didn't go to the trouble Carolyn Guertin did, to actually type in a Webb poem, but certainly agree that Phyllis Webb is, for many of us, one of the finest poets around. And _Naked Poems_ is a key text is the growth of postmodern poetry in Canada, as well as one of the most beautiful desiring erotic poems since Sappho. It's too bad that all her books have been published by small Canadian presses & so she is not well known outside the country. When John Kinsella of Australia was here last year, he found a copy of her Selected Poems in the guestroom; next morning he came storming out crying, 'How come I've never heard of this Phyllis Webb before, reading her was one of the great experiences of my life!' Have to say I liked that...

Doug

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

561. Michael Heller
Bay Area: advertisments for myself
Sun 15 Mar 1998

Dear listees,

I'll be doing a few events this week in the Bay Area, as follows:

Reading Wed evening, March 18th at Cody's with Carl Rakosi

Reading Thursday evening, March 19th at 7:30 at A Clean Well Lighted Place, 601 Van Ness

Friday, March 20th, Talk on Objectivist Poetics in the Thirties at Small Press Traffic.

Please check times in Poetry Flash.

↑ Index

562. groberts
Re: sininster metaphors vs. dextrous metonymies
Sun 15 Mar 1998

Since this topic is still alive and kicking, I'll post an epigram/epitaph by Donne, which I like because it collapses the metaphor/metonym distinction that at times is too rigidly upheld:

Fall of a Wall

Under an undermined and shot-bruised wall
A too-bold captain perished by the fall,
Whose brave misfortune, happiest men envied,
That had a town for tomb, his bones to hide.

Cannons were developed to overcome walled cities, since by 15th century everyone knew about the old wooden-horse-stuffed-with-killers trick.

Henri Lefebvre and Michel de Certeau have many interesting things to say about metaphor, metonymy, and the definition of spaces. I can't recapitulate their ideas here, but they both suggest that these linguistic ways of creating relationships can support the ideological control of the body's experiential space to social boundaries. The joke/metaphor that the happy men share at the expense of the dead captain is enabled by the quasi-metonymical alliteration (doesn't Freud's analysis of jokes and condesation rely on the subordination of metonymy as a tool for metaphor, maybe not, I'm just free associating here) of "town for tomb," though there is a buried metonymical relationship if we credit the joke with recalling the ancient, some would say original, relationship of cities to cemeteries.

Now that I reread the above I see that it's garbled, but I think Donne's epigram makes more sense in terms of what someone (sorry I can't recall who) called the "fractional" character of some of these figures than in terms of George Hartley's distinction. But however the terms may fall, Donne seems to be suggesting that they "hide" the bare bones of misfortune. Or maybe that metonymy allows the comprehension of the remains of the metaphorical process, for aren't our skeletons when used as evidence that our bodies served the defense of metaphor, the ultimate metonymy for the structures through which language comes and goes, for what is left after violence has moved on?

Gary R.

↑ Index

563. Miekal And [Fwd: In Mourning & Memory on 3.14.98]
Sun 15 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

bye
beatrice rasputin zukofsky

by westbyserver.westby.mwt.net (8.8.7/8.8.6) with ESMTP id OAA02487 for <[redacted]>; Sun, 15 Mar 1998 14:57:53 -0600 (CST)
by imo25.mx.aol.com (IMOv13.ems) id JHMJa02816 for <[redacted]>; Sun, 15 Mar 1998 14:42:57 -0500 (EST)
From: BStater <[redacted]>
Date: Sun, 15 Mar 1998 14:42:57 EST
To: [redacted]
Subject: In Mourning & Memory on 3.14.98

```
                    d
            a               a d                   d
      a                       a
     d                         d
    a                           a
   d                             d
   a                             a
   d                             d
   a                             a d      IN LOVING MEMORY OF OUR        d
```

```
        a                       a d          DADAMAMA            d
        a                       a d         R.  I.  P       d
        a                       a
        d                       d
        a                       a
        d                       d
        a                       a
        d                       d
        a                       a
        d                       d _____________adadadadadadadadadadadadadadadadadadadadada_________________
_
```

Beatrice Wood, 105, Potter and 'Mama of Dada'

By ROBERTA SMITH

Beatrice Wood, a ceramic artist who was known as much for her irreverent quips, beauty, bohemian lifestyle and famous lovers as for her luminous luster-glaze chalices, and who inspired at least two movie characters, died on Thursday at her home in Ojai, Calif. She had celebrated her 105th birthday on March 3.

An independent woman inclined to say whatever was on her mind, Ms. Wood famously attributed her longevity to "chocolate and young men" and just as memorably titled her 1985 autobiography "I Shock Myself." In fact she was a lifelong vegetarian who neither smoked nor drank and who remained clear-minded enough to take up the computer at the age of 90.

Until two years ago, she worked at the potter's wheel every day, following a strict daily regimen in a studio that was listed under "Places of Interest" in Ojai. A member of the Theosophy movement since 1923, she had moved to Ojai in 1948 to be near its leader, the Indian sage Krishnamurti.

For the last four decades of her life, she dressed exclusively in bright Indian saris and wore large amounts of silver-and-turquoise jewelry, even when throwing pots, with her thick, hip-length gray hair twisted into braids or a bun.

She was born in San Francisco and reared in New York, and demonstrated an early affinity for art and nonconformity, much to the dismay of her wealthy parents. She once said that she was 23 before she got free of her mother and her lady's maid, but she was allowed to go, chaperoned, to Paris when she was 18, where she studied painting at the Academie Julien and acting at the Comedie Francaise. Back in New York she fell in with some of the most adventurous artistic characters in town.

Her friends included Man Ray, Francis Picabia, Charles Sheeler, Walter and Louise Arensberg, Edgard Varese and Mina Loy. She was closest to Marcel Duchamp and his friend the diplomat and writer Henri-Pierre Roche.

The three founded Blind Man, a magazine that was one of the earliest manifestations of the dada art movement in New York. (In the second and last issue, Ms. Wood defended Duchamp's infamous urinal, rejected by the jury of the 1917 Independents exhibition, with a sentence usually attributed to Duchamp himself: "The only works of art America has given are her plumbing and her bridges.")

Duchamp encouraged her to draw; the results were fey, often autobiographical caricatures.

Her life was already the stuff of movies. Roche's novel about a menage a trois, "Jules et Jim," would inspire Francois Truffaut's 1961 movie of the same name, with the character played by Jeanne Moreau based in part on Ms. Wood.

In 1993, she was the subject of a documentary, "Beatrice Wood, the Mama of Dada," directed by Diandra Douglas. And more recently, she inspired the 101-year-old character of Rose in the movie "Titanic," directed by James Cameron, a neighbor in Ojai.

Ms. Wood liked to say that she had loved seven men she didn't marry and married two men she didn't love, saying that neither marriage was consummated.

Her first, in 1919, to a theater manager from Montreal, resulted from family pressure and soon ended in annulment when it was discovered that the man already had a wife in Belgium.

In 1938, while living in Los Angeles, she married Steve Hoag, an engineer, after a house they owned together in North Hollywood was swept away in a flood, on the correct theory that married people were likely to get Red Cross relief more easily. He lived with her until his death in 1960.

She was a late bloomer as an artist and did not encounter ceramics until the 1930s, when she failed to find a teapot to match some neo-rococo luster-glaze plates she had bought in Holland.

She enrolled in a pottery course at Hollywood High School, and began to research the luster-glaze process in a local library.

She never made that teapot, but became fascinated with the process. Her first works -- small glazed figures whose whimsy echoed her drawings -- sold easily, helping her make it through the Depression. It was not until 1940, when she studied briefly with the Austrian ceramists Gertrud and Otto Natzler, that she began to appreciate the beauty and possibilities of ceramics as an art form.

After settling in Ojai in 1948, she began to develop her own version of the unpredictable luster-glaze technique, extending a process that embedded the metallic iridescence in the glaze itself, rather than painting it on. While she didn't invent the technique, she did create a unique palette in an extraordinary range of metallic pinks, golds and greens.

At first Ms. Wood supported herself by turning out large quantities of dinner sets, but after the mid 1970s, she was able to concentrate exclusively on more ambitious decorative vessels: chalices, bowls and vases.

Her most complex pieces, which had elaborately decorated surfaces, came only after the mid-1980s, when she was in her 90s. These elaborate, radiant works dominate her most recent retrospective, held last year at the American Craft Museum in New York. The show opens in Florida at the Lake Worth Museum of Contemporary Art on March 27.

Ms. Wood had her first exhibition in 1949 at America House in New York. Her museum exhibitions included a retrospective at the Phoenix Art Museum in 1973. Since 1981, she has had repeated exhibitions at the Garth Clark Gallery, first in Los Angeles and then in New York, where an exhibition of her work will close on April 4.

In 1994, the Smithsonian Institution named Ms. Wood an Esteemed American Artist and Pete Wilson, governor of California, declared her a "California Living Treasure."

Saturday, March 14, 1998
Copyright 1998 The New York Times

----------2ECE3FB11511--

↑ Index

564. Al Filreis
Rakosi
Sun 15 Mar 1998

For Michael Heller:

So how is Carl Rakosi faring these days? If you have a chance, after the Wednesday event, perhaps you will post a summary. I'm sure I'm joined by others in being interested.

--Al Filreis
Univ. of Pennsylvania

↑ Index

565. Steve Shoemaker
Re: Rakosi
Sun 15 Mar 1998

Yes, me too--Long live Carl! Steve

At 10:23 PM 3/15/98 -0500, you wrote:
>For Michael Heller:
>
>So how is Carl Rakosi faring these days? If you have a chance, after the >Wednesday event, perhaps you will post a summary. I'm sure I'm joined by >others in being interested.
>
>--Al Filreis
> Univ. of Pennsylvania
>
>

↑ Index

566. Kcglowworm
sinister ministers and dextrous homogeneities
Mon 16 Mar 1998

This is George Hartley (which I keep typing because that doesn't seem to appear in the message, but I don't know because I only get the digest version), I'd like to set at least part of the record straight (is that a metaphor?) for Tom Mandel and Henry Gould: 1. I prefaced my earlier citations with the comment that I'm using the terms "metaphor" and "metonymy" metaphorically (which should indicate that I have nothing against metaphor as a linguistic vehicle), meaning further that I'm not talking about language. When I talk about language, then I'll be happy to be accused of knowing nothing about it. What I'm talking about is (to use a metaphor) ideological terrain, a concept I am getting mostly from Althusser and, after him, Laclau and Mouffe. Now this distinction may in many ways itself be a tired one, but I found it useful for a particular discussion of kafka. 2. Having said that, I still can't accept the notion that either metaphor or metonymy lie there innocently as tools at hand but do (to what degree is the question) shape our conception of the relationships they establish rather than simply express (especially if we are borrowing sdomeone else's tropes). 3. That it even occured to the fork and the spoon to run away in the first place is something that interests me.

↑ Index

567. Henry Gould
Re: sinister ministers and dextrous homogeneities
Mon 16 Mar 1998

On Mon, 16 Mar 1998 00:21:33 EST Kcglowworm said:
>1. I prefaced my earlier citations with the comment that I'm using the terms >"metaphor" and "metonymy" metaphorically (which should indicate that I have >nothing against metaphor as a linguistic vehicle), meaning further that I'm >not talking about language. When I talk about language, then I'll be happy to >be accused of knowing nothing about it. What I'm talking about is (to use a >metaphor) ideological terrain, a concept I am getting mostly from Althusser >and, after him, Laclau and Mouffe. Now this distinction may in many ways >itself be a tired one, but I found it useful for a particular discussion of >kafka.
>2. Having said that, I still can't accept the notion that either metaphor or >metonymy lie there innocently as tools at hand but do (to what degree is the >question) shape our conception of the relationships they establish rather than >simply express (especially if we are borrowing sdomeone else's tropes).
>3. That it even occured to the fork and the spoon to run away in the first >place is something that interests me.

George, I confess that I just get confused when I read analytical commentaries on these tropes. So I'm not going to say that they can't be understood ideologically or politically. But your position here seems to be slyly self-reflexive. You say that you're not using the terms to talk about language per se, but that you're using them metaphorically to talk about "ideological terrain". So you're using metaphor just as you describe it - to set up a hierarchy of values, in which metaphor, on IDEOLOGICAL TERRAIN, establishes suspicious transcendental-hierarchical relations. You claim not to be talking about poetry - or "only metaphorically". But by your own definition, these "metaphors" for metaphor subsume poetry to the set of your ideological structure of values. I.e., materiality and horizontality are "good"; spirituality and verticality are "bad", or suspicious, or tyrannical, or whatever.

I think the point of Tom's remarks on this, and mine, and several others, is that this characterization of metaphor-in-action is extremely abstract, and a lot of evidence has already been brought forward that metaphor involves materiality and non-hierarchy etc. just as much as metonymy does. And the point of my remarks here is that you can't get out of your argument by saying you're only speaking "metaphorically" about language. Poetry is the subject and you're applying your theory. I just think you need to supply more concrete evidence to win me over, for one. Trouble is I gather supplying that evidence was the purpose of all those essays pro- metonymy of the previous decade, which I'd rather not read anyway... my ideology gets in the way, like a black hole in a calculator in Calcutta. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

568. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: sinister ministers and dextrous homogeneities
Mon 16 Mar 1998

Kcglowworm wrote:
>
> [George Hartley wrote]:

> 3. That it even occured to the fork and the spoon to run away in the first place is something that interests me.

It interests me that in the original rhyme, the dish ran away with the spoon.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

569. Fred Muratori
Ammonsfest at Cornell
Mon 16 Mar 1998

For those interested in the work of A.R. Ammons...

AMMONSFEST: a celebration in honor of A.R. Ammons

April 3-4, 1998
Cornell University
Ithaca, New York

Friday, April 3, 1998

Poetry for A.R. Ammons
Hollis E. Cornell Auditorium, Goldwin Smith Hall
4:00 p.m.
Host: Ken McClane

Readings by Cynthia Bond, Nancy Vierira Couto, Alice Fulton, Angela Shaw

Exhibition Opening and Reception
"A.R. Ammons: The Writing Life"
2B Carl A. Kroch Library
5:30 p.m.

Remarks by Don M. Randel, Provost, Cornell University and H. Thomas Hickerson, Associate Director for Special Collections, Cornell University Library

Saturday, April 4, 1998

The Poetry of A.R. Ammons
Hollis E. Cornell Auditorium, Goldwin Smith Hall

2:00 p.m. "The Natural Philosopher Returns, Singing," Roald Hoffmann, Frank H.T. Rhodes Professor of Humane Letters, Cornell University

2:30 p.m. "Ammons' Glare: Mortality and Its Metaphors," Helen Vendler, University Professor, Harvard University

Refreshments

4:00 p.m.

Poetry Reading : A.R. Ammons

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

570. Henry Gould
Re: sininster metaphors vs. dextrous metonymies
Mon 16 Mar 1998

On Sun, 15 Mar 1998 12:27:12 -0500 Gary Roberts said:
>
>Fall of a Wall
>
>Under an undermined and shot-bruised wall
>A too-bold captain perished by the fall,
>Whose brave misfortune, happiest men envied,
>That had a town for tomb, his bones to hide.

seems like Gary's example shows how metaphor & metonymy are interchange-able depending on the interpreter, to some extent anyway. I read this little story as a metaphor for male lust. The town is a metaphor for tomb - and the wall is a metonymy for the town & vice-versa - but both tomb and town are metaphors for the too-bold Captain's objects of desire. Which means war and violence in general are also both metaphor-metonymy for same. Now how does this kind of language use serve ideology? Well, it's a kind of rhetoric. But a poetry of "pure metonymy" - the modernist "let-be" beauty of rubble, wall, dead Captain, dead detective, smoke - the aestheticization of all that... can also be read as part of a "controlling" ideology. - henry Gould

↑ Index

571. Jordan Davis
my adidas (snap! they're pooo mas)
Mon 16 Mar 1998

---

epic --> lyric -- > amb i e n t tragedy

|
|
\ /

farce

|
|
\ / ure here global branding

↑ Index

572. MAYHEW
pomometametonymicalisexuality
Mon 16 Mar 1998

This quote from Lakoff and Turner: "More Than Cool Reason: A Field Guide to Poetic Metaphor" seems quite straightforward:

"--In _metaphor_, there are two conceptual domains, and one is understood in terms of the other.
In _metaphor_, a whole schematic strcutre (with 2 or more entities) is mapped onto another whole schematic structure.
In _metaphor_, the logic of the source-domain structure is mapped onto the logic of the target-domain structure.
None of this is true of metonymy.
Metonymy involves only one conceptual domain. A metonymic mapping occurs within a single domain...
_Metonymy is used primarily for reference: via metonymy, one can refer to one entity in a schema by referring to another entity in the same schema.

In _metonymy_, one entity in a schema is taken as standing for one other entity in the same schema, or for the schema as a whole.
Metaphor and metonymy do have some things in common.
Both are conceptual in nature.
Both are mappings.
Both can be conventionalized, that is, made part of our everday conceptual system, and thus used automatically, effortlessly, and without conscious awareness.
In both, linguistic expressions that name source elements of the mapping typically also name target elements. That is, both are means for extending the linguistic resources of a language."

Got it?

I don't know what the ideological implications of this are... I remember reading Lakoff on metaphor several years ago and being impressed. (Someone mentioned George Lakoff in the context of this thread).

Must we allegorize our tropes?

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

573. Don Wellman
Re: pomometametonymicalisexuality
Mon 16 Mar 1998

.... but one metonymic mapping, including pockets of metaphor, can be congruent and overlay another, sometimes matching, sometimes leaving the ragged edge of difference.

This grammar of metonymic overlays is that of the Canto's I believe where Pound seeks the forma, the map that articulates the congruence of the totality of fields.

... to move into pomosexual terrain: Is it not the sliding of such metonymic fields over one another, creating various conjunctions and disjunctions, that Deleuze and Guattari articulate as a Thousand Plateaus?

Don Wellman

↑ Index

574. Keston Sutherland
fitter healthier etc
Mon 16 Mar 1998

WHAT'S TO SHRIEK BACK MISTER

Say gentle redress of logic, over that necessity on a drip-feed pinched to make a stand still kept from this pudding gentle breeze-block to noted jaw valiantly at the house edge stuck out, shattered in to arraigned sub-eye semi-tonguecase perfection from which a smile for not every day creeps / sags out back to the earth ware, back hand to the teeth scrubbed over in a fix of syntax and prank cowshit, naive as a leaf
from intra-goose com punction brats electro-manual stripped of its honeyless recourse to intro banter, now choke out, less dazed on her Tunisian Motorway or its equivalent so saddeningly avail makes really what the hell ever masque before you that you wish that you pray in, in a flash it's there, there is no fat chance quiplessly to opt out, you can stuff your face onto hers and fail to scowl and the drapes flit either side unseen, under a stacked crate of all-out watt thunder and cackishly screeched out fondness, they will not give up their obscurity, not for ten seconds and counting break neck speed at near zero alliance to life spread like a goat's backside's war of pretend illogic.

↑ Index

575. Aviva99999
Re: pomometametonymicalisexuality
Mon 16 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-16 16:10:12 EST, you write:

<< Must we allegorize our tropes? >>

Perfect! Best response I've seen yet during this conversation.
Interesting...what're the political implications of allegory!?!

↑ Index

576. George Thompson
Re: pomometametonymicalisexuality
Mon 16 Mar 1998

> This quote from Lakoff and Turner: "More Than Cool Reason: A Field Guide to Poetic Metaphor" seems quite straightforward:

Thanks to Jonathan for citing Lakoff and Turner, who say in a whole lot more words, and with much more insight, what I was trying to say earlier, more cutely perhaps. As a matter of fact, my own ideas have been influenced not only by Jakobson but also by Lakoff and a good deal more linguistic-oriented research on "metaphor analysis" -- in large part inspired by Lakoff.

The key for me is the notion that metaphor involves mapping between two domains, whereas metonymy confines itself to one domain. Likewise, that metonymy is an act of reference, whereas metaphor is an act of reflection [quite literally: two domains and a mirror].

I have to confess that I don't quite understand Don Wellman's post [too fast for me]. Could you illustrate your comments re "this grammar of metonymic overlays is that of the Canto's..."

I am a scholar rather than a poet, so you have to go slow for me.

Best wishes,

GT

↑ Index

577. Nada Gordon
fake metaphors, similes, equivalences
Mon 16 Mar 1998

(Speaking of metaphor and its cousin simile...)

Keston Sutherland wrote >near zero alliance to life spread like a goat's backside's war of pretend >>illogic.

I feel an impulse to create similes like this one -- an impulse to posit equivalences just for the power rush of naming (it is because I says it is: "I procaim all objects equal"), e.g. (but here with a colon instead of a copula "is" so you can't tell if it's a metaphor or an elaboration) > voodoo:

> an iron maiden
> chomping broken glass

equivalences that "pretend illogic" but also assert a jubilant connectedness of everything ("everything" represented by alogical word choices, as if those words were congresspeople from disparate districts of meaning getting together to legislate a poem [now that's a weird metaphor-who will take it up?]) -- that can be framed as fake formulas e.g.

> rich x lazy = language finger worship

or just try to addle the brain a liddle bit with similes that almost match up to expectation but slip

> I streched out over you my longest leg
> Like a special hollywood panther dummy

or

> Pursuit of trifles > carries the days > outward like spokes
> and at the hub a knot
> like a fingerprint

Does anyone else feel this same compulsion towards fake similes? As I write them I'm aware of a perverse flouting of both pomopo convention and conventional convention and that's part of the pleasure.

A couple of questions about metaphors & analogies: they are means by which we understand or conceive of something in terms of something else, right? (Lakoff said so) Is there anything we understand in itself and not by any analogy whatsoever? Would that be enlightenment?

Nada

p.s. I apologize for sending the virus warning. I had good intentions.

hebi no niwa ni ningyo ga tobu sunaba nagai kingyo taiyo wa
kaki ka?

↑ Index

578. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: fake metaphors, similes, equivalences
Mon 16 Mar 1998

Your question, Nada, rhetorical though it may be, "Is there anything we understand in itself?" answers / deconstructs itself in that this would require "we" understand understanding in itself.

Patrick F. Durgin

```
`
`
`
`  ----->*<-----
`  K E N N I N G|
`  anewsletterof|
`  poetry&poetic|
`  s418BrownSt.#|
`  10IowaCityIA5|
`  2245USA\/\/\/|
```

↑ Index

579. Steve Tills
Re: \engine dire
Mon 16 Mar 1998

Okie-dokie, babe, but there is the question of "who gets to decide who has ears and who doesn't, too. Also, to claim having ears, as well as to claim "Poet X has 'a great ear'" (as has been done quite often since X, Y, and Z made it such a fashionably authoritative type of comment back in 19__), can get_____.

Henry Gould wrote:

> In poetry there are no men or women; only ears. Anthologies are no measure; critics are no measure; only ears measure. Those who have ears to hear, let them hear.
>
> The gender issue is a form of politics & journalism. Important, in those disciplines. Poetry is a vocation.
>
> Does this mean I think gender is an "issue"? No. I think "issue" is a sexless noun, without memory. [speaking poetically-speaking]
>
> What is memory? Why ask? You know.
>
> I don't care anymore about the sociology of poetry. It takes ears to hear what I hear. I hear Melville, eating potato chips in his PJ's. [really?]

> Poetry is asked to do a lot by people who don't do poetry much. Well, it will, in its own good time. But you p.c. pharisees won't know what it is, Mr. Jones. Speak up, gals. Spandrift - he dead.
>
> I don't hear much, really. But I'm hungry for the sound of what I hear. That's what ears are for. OK - it's not only sound. You win. But it's also not just the first echo you can think of. Men wear whale penises for doilies. Women mount chargers. Aloha! [x-mate. HENRY trips again]
>
> Poetry. Everybody has their own idea of Paradise. Neutral, universal, transparent? No thanks. Equilibrium background for soaring...ok for now...
>
> "my sister, my dove". Cowwamaunsch [Narragansett for "I love you"]
>
> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

580. Keston Sutherland
Re: fake metaphors, similes, equivalences
Mon 16 Mar 1998

balanced with a deployed quota of fakeness, in that goat line, is the fact of goats' exotic semantic history, much of it biblical but cropping up variously through philosophy often as distraction, sin, forgetfulness, satyrs, the inability to promise etc - another link within the line (talking about my line here, strange) is that the goat is about to be sodomised hence "spread like a..", goat sex also slipped into that history at certain flashpoints

I like writing about goats, little seem-stricken critters

k

↑ Index

581. MAYHEW
simile
Tue 17 Mar 1998

I have notice that a certain kind of simile occurs in "creative writing" poems. I call it the "pseudo-profound" simile. It used to make me wince in poetry readings. On the other hand there is the "New York school" simile; an example I recall is "useless as a ski on a barge" or "useless as a ski." I think I came across it in relation to Kenneth Koch. I also like epic similes.

Similes make easy targets because they are so blatantly stupid--unless they are used with some irony. Pound & Williams use them sparingly if at all. WCW condemns them in Spring & All I believe.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

582. Tom Mandel

cruisingfiction

Tue 17 Mar 1998

Schooling me to be more serious (I think, tho email offers incredible space to misinterpret what people right -- very postmodern in that), Henry Gould writes:

"Gosh, those rabbis sure knew how to get a laugh out of a crucifixion. A real knee-slapper toe-nailer, Tom! An image is an image and a god is a god and shucks maybe the Muslims are right. It was all a horsefeedback loopy sorta hat trick. Hardehar at yourdeyour and mightymine EXPENSE - seemingly forever! Aren't tropes fun?? (Especially on Desolation Row.)"

Inasmuch as the material basis of Xtianity equals the Roman Empire rips off Jew-ideas and blends w/ Roman religion (virgin births, human god, etc.), perhaps Henry would consent to view the Rabbis' laughter (if that is what it was: horror was more what I had in mind) in the light of gallows humor? Esp. inasmuch (further) as it was Jew Jesus who was crucified -- along with a number of other Pharisaic rabbis (Jesus was a pharisee, btw) w/ bold ideas whose flesh was sanctified in that manner or (more often) by being burned alive. Do I think it quite the joke that this same empire should recast itself as world religion on that back, yup uh huh in a rather chilly sense you bet I do and sorry if I offend -- either you or another other. Stoke those fires....

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

583. morpheal
Re: cruisingfiction
Tue 17 Mar 1998

> Schooling me to be more serious (I think, tho email offers incredible space to misinterpret what people right -- very postmodern in that), Henry Gould writes:
>
> "Gosh, those rabbis sure knew how to get a laugh out of a crucifixion. A real knee-slapper toe-nailer, Tom! An image is an image and a god is a god and shucks maybe the Muslims are right. It was all a horsefeedback loopy sorta hat trick. Hardehar at yourdeyour and mightymine EXPENSE - seemingly forever! Aren't tropes fun?? (Especially on Desolation Row.)"
>
> Inasmuch as the material basis of Xtianity equals the Roman Empire rips off Jew-ideas and blends w/ Roman religion (virgin births, human god, etc.), perhaps Henry would consent to view the Rabbis' laughter (if that is what it was: horror was more what I had in mind) in the light of gallows humor?

Curious that he fails to comprehend that the Islamic idea is essentially one of hierarchical understanding where all other ideas, other than their own, take a relative to each other place determined by that "higher understanding". For example, non believers as to god fall beneath pagans who believe there are many gods and pagans are the basement of spiritual existence according to Islam. At least according to what little I know of (degreed in the study of religions and philosophies). They reject the idea outright that Jesus, whom they say was a prophet, was crucified.

It all seems very silly to me. To paraphrase Bertrand Russell. Though I do not share his beliefs either.

The rejection by Islamic people is interesting in that the Rabbi agrees, since he is still waiting for the Jewish messiah, which puts the Jewish and the Islamic groups into bitter conflict again. There is no awaited messiah in Islamic beliefs. Something more to fight about, when not laughing about it.

Keep in mind that studies show that there were around 60 or more messiahs in the mid eastern region of the Roman Empire at around the same time. They all followed the same pattern, but are less well known. One canot but suspect the work of the Roman censors (Roman Empire version of a CIA, and not simply bean counters), who devised a clever plot to quell some nasty rebellions.

So there is a guy going around telling the oppressed to live like the lilies of the fields and give unto Caesar what is Caesar's. The people suspected an agent of Rome and wanted to off him. They chose to save another guy, even though the local Roman governor tried to convince the people otherwise, by humiliating to gain popular sympathy. Crown of thorns and drag a Tau through the streets failed to get the desired effect. Word had gotten around the guy was a Roman spy. What to do then ? The Romans were clever. Their mystery cults, and each legion had one of their own, had death and ressurection rituals, to prepare warriors for battle. Common enough in such cultures, but they also were very clever with drugs. Where then does John Allegro's thesis concerning the Sacred Mushroom and the Cross come into it ? Shades of Amanita Muscaria mushroom myths ? What if the Romans induced coma and got their man off the cross before he perished. Then put him into a cave, which only the Roman engineers (clever fellows that they were) were able to open and close ? Ah, instant ressurection. Add an eclipse courtesy of the Roman knowledge of astronomy and it's done, a convincing spectacle of death and resurrection. A last ditch effort to convince the rebels not to rebel against Rome. The victim walks around with his stigmata, and then is whisked off, according to the legends again, to a grand tour of the empire, including a visit to Rome. Ah, how did Rome become the seat, and why did Roman emperors use the idea so readily later, rather than some other place ? Grand tours, and secret meetings with the emperor himself, were common for those who had served the emperor so exceptionally. In any instance the fellow had to be whisked away out of the mid east before someone caught on to what had happened.

A further corollary to it all. The fellow chosen by the censors, might have been Herod's own son. Why ? Herod tried to find and kill him, and the legend has it that he was a son of the lord. Herod was the lord. It was common for kings and nobility to take whatever women they wanted, whenever they wanted, but it was always a non event if the woman was of non noble origins. (Meaning it never happened.) Any conception was simply immaculate. Of course such origins lead to a very strange life, having come from what was invariably, in those days, divine kingship. Initiation, and usefulness in a leadership role, were inevitable.

Similar to Buddha, who was a prince, and whose immense desire for power led him to a kind of shadow government, imposing pacificism on would be rebels, during a time of potential upheaval. Very successful in maintaining the existing government in power, simply because he seemed so non political. Nevertheless, Buddha was power hungry, and the more followers who lived "like the lilies of the fields" and gave unto their political lords in the manner of "give unto Caesar what is Caesar's" the merrier. (If you see the Buddha on the road...kill him....takes on a whole new meaning.)

So there you have another plausible interpretation of the myth, or a variant on The Life of Brian...humming "always look on the bright side of life"...

The rabbi likely would have enjoyed that also.

Could the laughter be something very political.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

584. Michael Magee
Re: simile
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Couldn't resist sending you all this little poem after reading Jonathan's post, so, here goes... -m.

SIMILE

He was like a trickster. Elizabeth Bishop once said that a simile should be true

in at least two ways. Mine is, then, disqualified.

He was like a trickster, this is true; but only in the sense that his penis was detachable;

and even this is misleading, since it was only detachable once and with difficulty; as such, he was only like a trickster once. After that he was more like an emergency room patient.

According to MAYHEW:
>
> I have notice that a certain kind of simile occurs in "creative writing" > poems. I call it the "pseudo-profound" simile. It used to make me wince > in poetry readings. On the other hand there is the "New York school" > simile; an example I recall is "useless as a ski on a barge" or "useless > as a ski." I think I came across it in relation to Kenneth Koch. I also > like epic similes.
>
> Similes make easy targets because they are so blatantly > stupid--unless they are used with some irony. Pound & Williams use them > sparingly if at all. WCW condemns them in Spring & All I believe.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]
> [redacted]
>

↑ Index

585. groberts
Not on the map?
Tue 17 Mar 1998

It may be that our collective interest in the metaphor and metonymy thread as it relates to experimental poetry is waning at this point, in which case I would be glad to continue this back-channel. Not to be too obtuse, but I think the concepts of domain and mapping, as presented in the Lakoff quotation (is a quotation a metonym?) seem too positivistic, in the sense that they seem to assume a certain isomorphism between domains (perhaps the book addresses this elsewhere). Or maybe I just want consider the implications of some of the passive verb constructions in the quote that Jonathan usefully provided: "In metaphor the logic of the source domain structure is mapped onto the logic of the target domain structure." Does it makes a difference here to ask what is doing the mapping? (It can't be the metaphor since then then definition would be circular.) How would these ideas and questions help to describe and promote (or fail to) some kinds of experimental writing? Don's interest in the "ragged edge of difference" in these mappings could also maybe be useful to think about poems such as Schwerner's Tablets, or Retallack's "Afterimages," or something like this section from Peter Inman's "stead" from his book "criss cross" (now there's a suggestive subject heading for a post):

the dawn (had she paused from its terms (enough brist of (arm in. an aspirin's revolution. (tanned since.
the longer the Ohio (book (cattled out. could be sub-however she (tract than arrives frosted to. (fiction.
dusked sweat drops

Take that, rosy-fingered dawn. Perhaps I don't know enough about Inman's work, but I would say that this "stanza" seems relevant to the question that started this whole thread. And to its subsequent adumbrations: the punctuation carves up the "lines" into domains that provisional and irrefutable. (are. Reading it requires a rehersal of our mapping-procedures such we need to ask "What is a line?" and "what might a line be/not be?"

No? Wait, whad I say?

Gary R.

↑ Index

586. LanceEli3
Re: cruisingfiction
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Hmmmm . . . This is an interesting theory on Jesus (a new one I have not yet heard). Yet, what evidence is there that anybody thought Jesus a spy. If you go by the gospels (which seems to be the source of most of the facts in this email), Jesus claimed to be God in a Jewish context and this is what pissed everyone off, no one ever mentioned anything about being a spy. Why did Rome need a spy that hung out with "sinners" and outcasts? This theory does not make sense to me.

To say that Jesus was Herod's son seems quite a stretch based on the Bible. Is there any outside evidence for this?

I'm new to this listserver . . . but what in the world does this have to do with poetics?!

> So there is a guy going around telling the oppressed to live like the lilies of the fields and give unto Caesar what is Caesar's. The people suspected an agent of Rome and wanted to off him. They chose to save another guy, even though the local Roman governor tried to convince the people otherwise, by humiliating to gain popular sympathy. Crown of thorns and drag a Tau through the streets failed to get the desired effect. Word had gotten around the guy was a Roman spy. What to do then ? The Romans were clever. Their mystery

> cults, and each legion had one of their own, had death and ressurection rituals, to prepare warriors for battle. Common enough in such cultures, but they also were very clever with drugs. Where then does John Allegro's thesis concerning the Sacred Mushroom and the Cross come into it ? Shades of Amanita Muscaria mushroom myths ? What if > the Romans induced coma and got their man off the cross before he perished. Then put him into a cave, which only the Roman engineers (clever fellows that they were) were able to open and close ? Ah, instant ressurection. Add an eclipse courtesy of the Roman knowledge of astronomy and it's done, a convincing spectacle of death and resurrection. A last ditch effort to convince the rebels not to rebel against Rome. The victim walks around with his stigmata, and then is whisked off, according to the legends again, to a grand tour of the empire, including a visit to Rome. Ah, how did Rome become the seat, and why did Roman emperors use the idea so readily later, rather than some other place ? Grand tours, and secret meetings with the emperor himself, were common for those who had served the emperor so exceptionally. In any instance the fellow had to be whisked away out of the mid east before someone caught on to what had happened.
>
> A further corollary to it all. The fellow chosen by the censors, might have been Herod's own son. Why ? Herod tried to find and kill him, and the legend has it that he was a son of the lord. Herod was the lord. It was common for kings and nobility to take whatever women they wanted, whenever they wanted, but it was always a non event if the woman was of non noble origins. (Meaning it never happened.) Any conception was simply immaculate. Of course such origins lead to a very strange life, having come from what was invariably, in those days, divine kingship. Initiation, and usefulness in a leadership role, were inevitable.

↑ Index

587. Don Wellman

Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality

Tue 17 Mar 1998

... so much of what we understand in discourse seems to me to be "direct" ... mistaken maybe, maybe just impressions, not understanding. I am challenging the notion that there is an indirect understanding. Nada Gordon wrote, "Is there anything we understand in itself and not by any analogy whatsoever? Would that be enlightenment?" More problematical for me than the meaning of "understand" is the meaning of "anything."

There seems to be a mechanistic notion of the relation between words and things here...that is if "anything" refers to discourse. When I drink wine, I do not experience it by analogy. When I read Nada's sentence, I hear a desire for immedicacy--that seems to float off her words and does not require mental acrobatics on my part to understand. That is my impression and it may be rationally indefensible. I am trying to say that the thing in itself is more likely to be a feeling rather than a brick in the road. I suppose if the brick in the road gave me a feeling that would be enlightenment (a religous epipnay).

When I analyze Nada's statement, I load it with irony. I have no sense that this irony is intentional or the thing she wants to communicate, but my mind now buzzes with associations between Kant, Enlightenment era philosopy, the Age of Reason, the thing in itself, etc. None of what I am doing now is by analagy; it is by association. I don't feel my mind switching off as it follows its indirections.

What is politically or socially interesting to me about metaphor and analogy is the way they their use can direct some one's thoughts, help some one see. A bad simile is a wonderful attack on reason--a refusal to allow the irrational to become rational, wonderfully irreveerent with respect to a too precious sense of how language is supposed to work. My sense of that irreverence is direct. I like it.

I wrote earlier that a "grammar of metonymic overlays is that of the Canto's..." --by this I meant no more than the major structural device in the Cantos is the overlay of image on image, of phrase on phrase, passage on passage. Pound himself uses the word super-position to describe his method of composition in his "Vorticism" where he also attachs both symbolism and synechdoce, of I remember. From this I derive the notion that it is the overlay of one field of images (or allusions) on another that creates structural metaphors or what he calls the "forma" in his essay "Medievalism."--near the end of the Cantos, he likens each overlay to the facets of a crystal--the point seems to be a centered overlay of transparent forms--something he experienced "englightenment"--only intermittantly--politically, as differences become drained of their particular importance he becomes more totalitarian. By contrast, deleuze and Guattari, as their plateaus slide over one another, they produce differences.

To my understanding, this is one of the crucial differences between modernism and postmodernism. The structural metaphors, metaphors of process, in modernism as represented by the Cantos are mraked by both reverence and quasi-scientific notionas of rationalism. Pound, again in "Vorticism" calls his method more like calculus than algebra, hence his denegration of easy connections between meaning and figures of speech like synechdoche.Still it seems to me that metaphor blossoms in ways that transcend or thread or cause energy to run through the planes of his composition. We see the rose in the steel dust. Christine Brooke Rose is much better on this than I am ...

I for one can not see such roses or vortices as directly as he did--as he hoped--they do not exist objectively for me. The forma does not constrain my indirection and flight of association and I prize instead that flight--that becomes my direct experience, one of decentered flight, one of play ...

His enlightenment becomes my fake simile? ... I am getting flakey now, having reached the limits of my ability to maintain a faced of coherence. The most important thing that I wanted to say is that even direction is a form of immediate thought ... I don't now what non-immediate thought is unless a deja vue slaps me in the face.

Don Wellman.

↑ Index

588. k. lederer

Re: Prageeta Sharma (fwd)

Tue 17 Mar 1998

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 17 Mar 1998 11:08:42 -0600 (CST)
From: "k. lederer" <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Prageeta Sharma

A super poem by super poet Prageeta Sharma (in AGNI 46--she's also in the new Explosive Magazine):

PERFORMANCE

Detachment, as a general rule, scares me into traipse, and into the kind of pedantry that composed for myself erects more opulence, more human than feminine nevertheless, I require food and heat, falsify my walk to the drugstore on all fours because of weak knees, botch the stutter as a dog does when he has not yet succeeded in begging, to eternalize the architecture, coffee shops
likewise your devotion, behold the butcher with devil in eye without soft mouth to substitute testimonial to linger as wine in throat to sip the throat, to care whether she has eaten, in a form like this, I am contagious,
To claim Blake's MYRTLE TREE,
for my love, for my love, translucent mess,
a pageant, sun-down. We are on an amiable plight to wave to an audience disappearing.

↑ Index

589. Kcglowworm
metonymphormality
Tue 17 Mar 1998

The seeming transcendence of metaphor (the carrying away from one plane to another) depends on the maintenance of a metonymical division of labor always in flux. This does not imply a hierarchy of tropic orders but rather a complicity. Metaphor (the priesthood) needs metonymy (the police).

Got it?

Got what?
What is the nature of this it and of our getting?
What is the power of such a question, with its implication of the self-evident?

For Fredric Jameson, allegory is the basic symbolic act of the political unconscious.

George Hartley

↑ Index

590. louis stroffolino
Re: political unconscious metaphors
Tue 17 Mar 1998

---

since i tend to worry alot, i tend to revise.
yet ocassionally i notice an unintentionally
"politically uncorrect" metaphor creeping into a poem
"too late" (after it's appeared in print) (as opposed to the "intentionally politically incorrect" metaphors I DO let people my work)...

For instance, I write "sanity goes on strike" in a poem and I'm angry at myself (though the alliteration is 'nice'), because I'm looking at Ange Mlinko's poem MATINEE (which will be in her forthcoming book I think) which has a line:
"and others laid off by sleep and asides" which makes me wish i had written "sanity lays me off" or "sanity takes away health benefits"
etc.....
if some academic close-reader wants to accuse me of being bourgeois or something....assuming they still do that... nonetheless it's fun to worry i suppose about such things and is part of the flow as are ocassional fits of "intention"....

chris

On Tue, 17 Mar 1998, Kcglowworm wrote:

> The seeming transcendence of metaphor (the carrying away from one plane to another) depends on the maintenance of a metonymical division of labor always in flux. This does not imply a hierarchy of tropic orders but rather a complicity. Metaphor (the priesthood) needs metonymy (the police).
>
> Got it?
>
> Got what?
> What is the nature of this it and of our getting?
> What is the power of such a question, with its implication of the self-evident?
>
> For Fredric Jameson, allegory is the basic symbolic act of the political unconscious.
>
> George Hartley

↑ Index

591. MAYHEW
political (un)conscious
Tue 17 Mar 1998

I am very interested in the way that "we" attach ideological value to formal elements--tropes, poetic forms and meters (or absence of) etc... So the recent posts by Louis Stroffolino and Kcglowworm (metaphor for George Hartley) are thought-provoking.

I would contend that these attributions of value are themselves metaphorical at bottom. Parataxis is good because it isn't hierarchical as hypotaxis, would be one example. I have had long arguments with people about whether "open" form has anything to do with "openness."

This is what I meant when I asked the question: "must we allegorize our tropes?" That is, how much ideological baggage can the formal structure of (poetic) language bear? I am wary of arguments that attribute value (negative or positive) to form; yet isn't this what "poetics" itself consists of? Help me, please!

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas

[redacted]

↑ Index

592. Mark Nowak
Xcp no. 2
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Xcp: Cross Cultural Poetics no. 2 is now available and includes new work by: Juan Felipe Herrera, Zhang Er, Chung Na Yei, U Sam Oeur, Wai-lim Yip, Paul Naylor, Jeff Derksen, Fernand Roqueplan, Lise McCloud, Hilton Obenzinger, Diane Glancy, Victoria Lena Manyarrows, Thomas Biolsi, Susan M. Schultz, Yunte Huang, Kathleen Stewart, and Elizabeth Burns, along with reviews of new/recent books by James Clifford, Julio Marzan, Arjun Appadurai, Michael Taussig, Victor Hernandez Cruz and Adrian Castro.

Subscriptions (for 4 issues) are available for $25 (individuals), $40 (institutions)--foreign, including Canada, add $5. Single issue copies are available for $9. Please make checks payable to "College of St. Catherine" and send to Mark Nowak, ed. _Xcp_, c/o College of St. Catherine-Mpls., 601 25th Avenue South, Minneapolis, MN, 55454.

Forthcoming _Xcp_/Cross Cultural Poetics Conference Readings, not including those w/ Mackey mentioned earlier by Maria, include:

Friday, April 3: Nathaniel Mackey reading, 7:30pm at the Nomad Gallery, St. Clair & Albert St. in St. Paul, Minnesota.

Thursday, April 23: Kirin Narayan reading, 3:00pm at College of St. Catherine-Mpls, Room 250 (Old Main). Narayan will also be giving a talk on Friday, April 24 at the University of MN (time & location to be announced later)

Saturday, May 2: _Xcp_ no. 2 publication reading at the Hungry Mind Bookstore in St. Paul, 7:00pm, with Diane Glancy, Lise McCloud, Chung Na Yei, Rita Chakrabarti, & Mark Nowak.

↑ Index

593. Jordan Davis
boerdzhwa
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Brian Kim Stefans has a cute poem in the new Object/Tork dubl issue in which he speaks of the importance of Ashbery's Europe for the new bourgeois poets which is not to call anyone a close reader same issue has fine work by Robt Kocik on a projected coop space in Manhattan for poets .. and Drew Gardner's "Cell Walk" which is also in the Jarnot Stroffolino Schwartz anthology

I expect Brian will forgive the characterization "cute"?

it's a small world after lunch
J

↑ Index

594. Mark Prejsnar
Re: political unconscious metaphors
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Chris,

That was a really nice post.

No, no one is going to call you bourgeois (except in gouldian vein, dripping with irony).

If anyone was going to, it would be me, rest assured. (However I'm not an academic..It's not the academics you have to worry about though: names'll never hurt you: we workers knee-cap bourgeois types, at least)

Nothing terrible about "sanity on strike" as you originally did it. Strikes can actually be mobilized on occasion for incredibly reactionary ends...The CIA is very big on this. Most importantly, when Nixon and the CIA were organizing their criminal fascist coup against Allende in Chile, their spooks manipulated elements in the copper and other industries to strike in order to weaken the economy and turn the population against the government, lining up as much support as possible before the army struck. There have been instances of strikes motivated by racism. (..the Dodgers almost wildcatted because of Jackie Robinson; only a few exceptionally strong-willed and anti-racist guys talked the majority, who were revoltingly racist, out of it; that would'a been a strike, and is always refered to as such by people who were close to the incident. But there have also been larger-scale industrial examples)

I did enjoy the alternatives you considered. (How about, my sanity undergoes welfare reform...)

from the sanity barricades, Mark the Red
@lanta

↑ Index

595. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: fake metaphors, similes, equivalences

Tue 17 Mar 1998

Patrick F. Durgin wrote:
>
> Your question, Nada, rhetorical though it may be, "Is there > anything we understand in itself?" answers / deconstructs itself in that > this would require "we" understand understanding in itself.
>
> Patrick F. Durgin
>
> `
> `
> `
> ` ----->*<-----
> ` K E N N I N G|
> ` anewsletterof|
> ` poetry&poetic|
> ` s418BrownSt.#|
> ` 10IowaCityIA5|
> ` 2245USA\/\/\/|

THAT DOES IT

the preoccupation with its absence becomes the means X uses to achieve its mission without betraying its identity. we don't forget. we just don't say.
the deepest cover lies in surfaces.

flesh becomes an essay, a position paper, a series of excisions from a code book or a dictionary, an accretion disk, a sentence. no time off for good behavior. au contraire:
an exchange of vows the erasure of the copula. spies make dreadful poets, & only mediocre critics.

let's not call our new album
Spies for Love. let's not make that An Anatomy of Eros, either.
Is it This, Is it That does it.

Daniel Zimmerman

↑ Index

596. William Burmeister Prod
Re: cruisingfiction
Tue 17 Mar 1998

That was a very bizarre, arm-waving exercise (if not just unforgettable). I think that what is meant by, "render unto Caesar what is Caesar's" is completely missed here. Are we meek?

William Burmeister

On Mar 17, 11:02am, morpheal wrote:
> Subject: Re: cruisingfiction > >Schooling me to be more serious (I think, tho email offers incredible space > >to misinterpret what people right -- very postmodern in that), Henry Gould > >writes:
>
> >"Gosh, those rabbis sure knew how to get a laugh out of a crucifixion.
> >A real knee-slapper toe-nailer, Tom! An image is an image and a god is a god > >and shucks maybe the Muslims are right. It was all a horsefeedback loopy > >sorta hat trick. Hardehar at yourdeyour and mightymine EXPENSE - seemingly > >forever! Aren't tropes fun?? (Especially on Desolation Row.)"
>
> >Inasmuch as the material basis of Xtianity equals the Roman Empire rips off
> >Jew-ideas and blends w/ Roman religion (virgin births, human god, etc.), > >perhaps Henry would consent to view the Rabbis' laughter (if that is what > >it was: horror was more what I had in mind) in the light of gallows humor?
>
> Curious that he fails to comprehend that the Islamic idea is essentially one > of hierarchical understanding where all other ideas, other than their own, > take a relative to each other place determined by that "higher > understanding". For example, non believers as to god fall beneath pagans who > believe there are many gods and pagans are the basement of spiritual > existence according to Islam. At least according to what little I know of > (degreed in the study of religions and philosophies). They reject the idea > outright that Jesus, whom they say was a prophet, was crucified.

>
> It all seems very silly to me. To paraphrase Bertrand Russell.
> Though I do not share his beliefs either.
>
> The rejection by Islamic people is interesting in that the Rabbi agrees, > since he is still waiting for the Jewish messiah, which puts the Jewish and > the Islamic groups into bitter conflict again. There is no awaited messiah > in Islamic beliefs. Something more to fight about, when not laughing about it.
>
> Keep in mind that studies show that there were around 60 or more messiahs
in > the mid eastern region of the Roman Empire at around the same time. They all > followed the same pattern, but are less well known. One canot but suspect > the work of the Roman censors (Roman Empire version of a CIA, and not simply
> bean counters), who devised a clever plot to quell some nasty rebellions.
>
> So there is a guy going around telling the oppressed to live like the lilies > of the fields and give unto Caesar what is Caesar's. The people suspected an > agent of Rome and wanted to off him. They chose to save another guy, even > though the local Roman governor tried to convince the people otherwise, by > humiliating to gain popular sympathy. Crown of thorns and drag a Tau through > the streets failed to get the desired effect. Word had gotten around the guy > was a Roman spy. What to do then ? The Romans were clever. Their mystery > cults, and each legion had one of their own, had death and ressurection > rituals, to prepare warriors for battle. Common enough in such cultures, but > they also were very clever with drugs. Where then does John Allegro's thesis > concerning the Sacred Mushroom and the Cross come into it ? Shades of > Amanita Muscaria mushroom myths ? What if > the Romans induced coma and got their man off the cross before he perished.
> Then put him into a cave, which only the Roman engineers (clever fellows > that they were) were able to open and close ? Ah, instant ressurection. Add > an eclipse courtesy of the Roman knowledge of astronomy and it's done, a > convincing spectacle of death and resurrection. A last ditch effort to > convince the rebels not to rebel against Rome. The victim walks around with > his stigmata, and then is whisked off, according to the legends again, to a > grand tour of the empire, including a visit to Rome. Ah, how did Rome become > the seat, and why did Roman emperors use the idea so readily later, rather > than some other place ? Grand tours, and secret meetings with the emperor > himself, were common for those who had served the emperor so exceptionally.

> In any instance the fellow had to be whisked away out of the mid east before > someone caught on to what had happened.
>
> A further corollary to it all. The fellow chosen by the censors, might have > been Herod's own son. Why ? Herod tried to find and kill him, and the legend > has it that he was a son of the lord. Herod was the lord. It was common for > kings and nobility to take whatever women they wanted, whenever they wanted,
> but it was always a non event if the woman was of non noble origins.
> (Meaning it never happened.) Any conception was simply immaculate. Of course > such origins lead to a very strange life, having come from what was > invariably, in those days, divine kingship. Initiation, and usefulness in a > leadership role, were inevitable.
>
> Similar to Buddha, who was a prince, and whose immense desire for power led > him to a kind of shadow government, imposing pacificism on would be rebels, > during a time of potential upheaval. Very successful in maintaining the > existing government in power, simply because he seemed so non political.
> Nevertheless, Buddha was power hungry, and the more followers who lived > "like the lilies of the fields" and gave unto their political lords in the > manner of "give unto Caesar what is Caesar's" the merrier. (If you see the > Buddha on the road...kill him....takes on a whole new meaning.)
>
> So there you have another plausible interpretation of the myth, or a variant > on The Life of Brian...humming "always look on the bright side of life"...
>
> The rabbi likely would have enjoyed that also.
>
> Could the laughter be something very political.
>
> Bob Ezergailis
> aka Morpheal
>-- End of excerpt from morpheal

↑ Index

597. Aldon Nielsen
Re: spoonerisms anyone?
Tue 17 Mar 1998

thanks for that dish, Tom -- isn't _Adorno's Ashes_ that delightful weepy book that the talk shows have been spoon feeding to the still-reading masses all this year?

↑ Index

598. Aldon Nielsen
Re: SOY BOMB??????
Tue 17 Mar 1998

This received this morning -- Happy Saint Patrick's Day

> There's already a web site called
>
> Soy Bomb Nation
>
> Visit it @:
>
> http://www.hiphopmusic.com/soybomb.html
>
> You won't be sorry.

↑ Index

599. Tom Mandel
dishing fork and spooning
Tue 17 Mar 1998

I'm delighted if I have in the slightest help to stir up the mare's nest soup in this teakettle-tempest of tenpins we bowl online if unalined.

George Hartley is "using the terms "metaphor" and "metonymy" metaphorically... not talking about language... (but) about ...(to use a metaphor) ideological terrain, a concept ...mostly from Althusser and, after him, Laclau and Mouffe."

To distinguish ideological terrain from language I am not able. I read Althusser pretty closely when he first appeared, with what then appeared as something new to say, but I've been luckier since and have only glanced off Laclau and like the asteroid and earth will have entirely missed Mouffe. Perhaps they are able to make the distinction w/o causing "either metaphor or metonymy (to) lie there innocently as tools at hand" in language as apparently they do not in that more colorful ideo-apellation.

George asks: "to what degree... (do metaphor and metonymy) shape our conception of the relationships they establish rather than simply express." I.e. to what degree do they shape rather than express relationships."

Hmmm. There is no question in this question is there?

The whole activity of metaphor is to shape our conceptions. Both when we use it as a tool, and in the underlying sense that all conception is metaphor (note and unpack the word "underlying" just a moment ago or "unpack" even more recently: these are counters of a metaphorical system whereby we understand mental activities by way of physical ones. Note the word "understand" -- the same system is in that word. Note the word "in" which is a counter of the metaphorical system of container/contained, part of the same system I mentioned earlier in this paren. I hope the overwhelming nature of the mind/metaphor connection is starting to sink in [note the physical metaphor: "sink in]).

Metonymy on the other hand, precisely "expresses" rather than establishes a relationship. When we say "Wyatt was buried in the country" and mean in a cemetary in the country, we are simply expressing an existing semantic field (no, not the one in which he lies buried!). We are not mapping two semantic fields, but as it were folding the one semantic field to make items which are related actually touch for the moment (of the sentence). (And those who have read the preceding para will recognize in "folding" another physical metaphor for a mental act) (and those who have read modern physics will recognize that I took the metaphor from one that's often used to understand how conceptions of space/time might work).

All this to return to his original point, that metaphor is somehow "vertical" and therefore somehow "metaphysical" (i.e. vertical means distinctions of "height" and "height" implies ontology...?? or...?) and that metonymy is somehow "horizontal" and therefore somehow... investigative? makes new connections?"

The point is, that is entirely incorrect. Not above 180 degrees off (nor below), as I said to myself -- and to you -- when I read his words. Just like my "fork ran away with the spoon" (as someone pointed out, it was the dish who did it). I was wrong about the fork and the spoon, George is wrong about metaphor and metonymy.

If, as Hartley goes on, "this distinction may in many ways itself be a tired one", i.e. the fashion for using it has passed, perhaps it is because it is so often misused, abused, ill-used, used, i.e., to say that which is not true.

"...but I found it useful for a particular discussion of kafka" -- Yes, well if the room is interesting, a lock is useful to inhibit access.

Ok, now lets hear from George. This kind of stuff beats having to sweep Adorno's ashes out of the room, that's for sure!

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

600. Tom Mandel
the abstract point of toms....
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Henry writes:

"I think the point of Tom's remarks on this, and mine, and several others, is that this characterization of metaphor-in-action is extremely abstract,"

Dunno about the "several others," but I prefer to say what my point is myself, Henry -- every single time.

There is no group take on nor objection to George Hartley, who is a really interesting critic, even tho I'm dishing him a mile a minute just in order to provoke him or someone into something fun. In fact, if there is a group take on his point, I'm going to have to switch sides in a minute, and him and me will spot you as many points as you name and make those and that many more.

Ganging up on someone just ain't my way; when I want a fight, I get right out in front and swing.

It is not -- my point that is -- btw, that "this characterization... is ...abstract."

Abstract is cool, it's modern, it's jazz, shades, a beret, a goatee. It's a martini or a perfect rob roy, Billy Strayhorn Lenny Tristano Schmuel Trigano, and all that weltschmerz joiedevivre thing. I like abstract, I want abstract, it's wild that George is abstract. Lets all be way more abstract, man, dig?

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]

----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

601. Dale M Smith
Mike & Dale's Issue 8
Tue 17 Mar 1998

For those of you who can't get enough of Spaghetti Westerns and Noir Romance, Mike and Dale's Younger Poets proudly present Winter issue #8. This issue will glue you to the edge of your seat and drop poems in your lap like ticks on a dog. Check out this list of serious characters:

Edward Ainsworth, Edmund Berrigan, Ted Berrigan, Noel Andersen Black, Sherry Brennan, Tom Clark, Jack Collom, Clark Coolidge, Gary Dickerson, Kevin Fitzgerald, Greg Fuchs, John Herndon, Joey Kolb, John Latta, Katy Lederer, Hoa Nguyen, Jamison Panko, Simon Pettet, Wanda Phipps, Michael Price, Stephen Ratcliffe, Suloni Robertson, Michael Rothenberg, Joe Safdie, Sal Salasin, Alva Svoboda, Duncan McNaughton and yours truly. Wow!!!!

Order today and register for a chance to win a free trip on the M&D Metaphor Express! That's right. An all expense paid trip through our collection of tried and true metaphorical expressions that promise more fun than a pun at the MLA. Order today:

Michael Price
766 Valencia Street
SF CA 94110

Dale Smith
1207 Lorrain Street #2
Austin, TX 78703

↑ Index

602. Steve Tills
Re: women and men in conversation
Tue 17 Mar 1998

This is a very fruitful line of discussion, I think. I haven't, myself, read the Tannen book, but I've come to similar observations via other writers, Carol Gilligan and Nancy Chodorow and Riane Eisler, for example. I firmly believe that distinctions between "the Competitive" male models and "the cooperative" female models of discourse/language use and engagement/writing/poetics etc are going to yield exceptionally "new" poetries and world. (Also, I do not think these kinds of considerations have been "done" by even the most innovative of "reader-based" poets, though I think some (no, I'm not going to mention any names) may have taken, inadvertently, steps in such directions.) The key issue here is, as Eisler would argue in _The Chalice & The Blade_, the distinction between "competitive" and "cooperative" models, the former having dominated a good deal of, if not most of, all cultures since about 10,000 years ago. Let me leave this little diatribe at this for now, but add one more silly obsession of mine: What happens to "competition" if poetries are produced "anonymously." Do the ballfields get leveled? Do even well known poets gain freedom to "make it new," i.e., create something many folks would dig yet not be able to label as XX's or XY's poetry?

Ctfarmr wrote:

> According to studies by Deborah Tannen, author of _He Said, She Said_ , women and men learn strikingly different modes of discourse from an early age. Most boys learn to use conversation as a competitive activity, emphasizing their differences and individuality, establishing a hierarchy, which contributes to group cohesion, and within which each member is constantly striving for a higher position by challenging others and by showing his own knowledge to be "superior." Most girls learn to use conversation among friends as a cooperative activity. Anyone who criticizes within the group, or tries to show superior knowledge is setting herself apart from (above) the group, and is therefore seen as making an attempt to destabilize it. Differences of opinion are more often put forward as questions rather than statements. Or they're prefaced with phrases such as, "In my experience," implying respect for the speaker's opinion while maintaining one's own. Within the cooperative mode of discourse, a direct statement of "you're wrong" is, in effect, telling the speaker to shut up.
>
> So, when folks using the two different modes of discourse, the competitive and the cooperative, come together, the competitors tend to dominate because their direct challenges and criticisms are, within the rules of cooperative discourse, telling the cooperatives that their contributions are unacceptable. This affects discussions of poetics, because academic discourse generally utilizes the competitive mode. And, while young women are now more often trained to use the competitive mode with confidence, saying that women "should" do this is really saying that women should be more like men. Until both sides recoginize these different modes of discourse, respect them equally, and take them into account in their conversations together, women will often think that men are (verbally) attacking them, and men will think the women are wimping out.
>
> This is just a very brief, and probably inadequate, summary of some of the main points in Tannen's book, which I highly recommend to anyone interested in this subject.
>
> Bobbie West

↑ Index

603. Charles Bernstein

Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word (Announcement)

Tue 17 Mar 1998

Forthcoming in April

Close Listening

Poetry and the Performed Word

Edited by CHARLES BERNSTEIN

Close Listening and the Performed Word brings together seventeen essays, especially written for this volume, on the poetry reading, the sounds of poetry, and the visual performance of poetry. While the performance of poetry is as old as poetry itself, critical attention to modern and postmodern poetry performance has been negligible. This collection opens many new avenues for the critical discussion of the sound and performance of poetry, with special attention to innovative work. More important, the essays collected here offer wide-ranging elucidations of how twentieth-century poetry has been practiced as a performance art. The contributors cover topics that range from the performance styles of individual poets and types of poetry to the relation of sound to meaning, from historical and social approaches to poetry readings and to new imaginations of prosody. Such approaches are intended to encourage new forms of "close listenings"--not only to the printed text of poems, but also to tapes, performances, and other expressions of the sounded word. With readings and "spoken word" events gaining an increasing audience for poetry, Close Listening provides an indispensable critical groundwork for understanding the importance of language in--and as--performance.

368 pp., 22 linecuts, 6-1/8 x 9-1/4
$19.95w*, paper, 0-19-510992-9
$49.95w, cloth, 0-19-510991-0
April 1998

Close Listening (paper), ISBN 0195109929
Close Listening (cloth), ISBN 0195109910

order from Oxford University Press
or from your bookstore or from OUP on-line http://www.oup-usa.org/docs/0195109929.html

Contents:

Charles Bernstein, Introduction

Sound’s Measures
Susan Stewart, Letter on Sound
Nick Piombino, The Aural Ellipsis and the Nature of Listening in Contemporary Poetry
Bruce Andrews, Praxis: A Political Economy of Noise and Informalism
Marjorie Perloff, After Free-Verse: The New Non-Linear Poetries
Susan Howe, Either/Ether

Performing Words
Johanna Drucker, Visual Performance of the Poetic Text
Steve McCaffery, Voice in Extremis
Dennis Tedlock, Toward a Poetics of Polyphony and Translatability
Bob Perelman, Speech Effects: The Talk as Genre
Peter Quartermain, Sound Reading

Close Hearings / Historical Settings
Jed Rasula, Understanding the Sound of Not Understanding
Peter Middleton, The Contemporary Poetry Reading
Lorenzo Thomas, Neon Griot: The Functional Role of Poetry Readings in the Black Arts Movement
Maria Damon, Was that "Different," "Dissident" or "Dissonant"? Poetry (n) the Public Speak: Slams, Open Readings and Dissident Traditions
Susan Schultz, Local Vocals: Hawai’i’s Pidgin Literature, Performance, and Postcoloniality

Afterword
Ron Silliman, Who Speaks: Ventriloquism and the Self in the Poetry Reading

↑ Index

604. morpheal
Re: spoonerisms anyone?
Tue 17 Mar 1998

> isn't _Adorno's Ashes_ that delightful weepy book that the talk shows have been spoon feeding to the still-reading masses all this year?

No idea. I reside in what is essentially a media blackout. Unless you consider the www a part of the media.

Actually the future of poetry might be that the poet must face the muse, not the audience, and read the poetry, while they remain riveted to their pews outside the railing that divides the stage from the public.

In what language ? I wonder if that really matters.

Of course the same thing happens when textual material is presented, not as live spoken word, or read from relatively immutable hard copy Guttenbergian style printed text, but is a multi media presentation that synthesizes sound through the mediumship of the midi sonic wafer that resides in the sanctum of the cyber circuits.

Morpheal

↑ Index

605. morpheal
Re: Not in the nomen cultura.....
Tue 17 Mar 1998

I shall only say this once, so anyone who misses it shall have to endure the bewilderment and unbearable angst that my use of a pseudonym causes them.

Oh, I should say, Morpheal is Bob Ezergailis, poet and visual artist, who resides in Hamilton, Ontario, Canada.

I keep signing things as Morpheal.

Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

606. Mairead Byrne
Re: political (un)conscious
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Is there such a thing as progression in metaphor, do you think? For example, such experiences as nursing a baby provide a wealth of metaphor in Shakespeare, though they are unlikely to be dealt with in themselves. Historically, do some subjects break into metaphor before direct treatment? At some point, does the metaphorical burden become overburdened, and spill out into the primary are of concern? Or is, in fact, metaphor the primary area of concern in poetry: the ostensible subject being merely a gloss or a net on the more fugitive and dynamic metaphor? These trucks, these metaphors, just who and what are they moving in/out?

↑ Index

607. morpheal
Re: cruisingfiction : Geeze-US-az-po'et
Tue 17 Mar 1998

> This is an interesting theory on Jesus (a new one I have not yet heard). Yet, what evidence is there that anybody thought Jesus a spy. If you go by the gospels (which seems to be the source of most of the facts in this email), Jesus claimed to be God in a Jewish context and this is what pissed everyone off, no one ever mentioned anything about being a spy.

> Why did Rome need a spy that hung out with "sinners" and outcasts? This theory does not make sense to me.

Could be shadow leadership, same as Buddha. Makes perfect sense of all the elements of the story. Buddha was a Simon says who was not in direct line of immediate succession, but as an apparent outsider to the inner workings of secular power, people tended to trust and follow him. After all he had, as had Jesus, come down from high up there, to the commoners' level. Therefore he could influence the maintaining of the secular political order under the veil of a spirituality.

Jesus is somewhat the same, according to that theory.

Besides that, Jesus and Buddha used language in ways that were different from most other people of their time periods. Jesus appears poetic even if political.

I sense that some poets have had the same fate, even if in lesser ways, of a kind of imputed shadow leadership. Was Ginsberg, for instance, a shadow president to Nixon ? It would make for an interesting doctoral thesis.

Though poets also tend to get the opposite. They seem to be looked upon by the commoners' level as rising too far up out of it, and then they tend to have some want to pull them down again to a lower level than all the other commoners. Then truly only a lord can save them. Once that was the role of the nobility, and then of the patron. Perhaps that is because of the traditional mystification of the nature of language, and the use of language once viewed as almost wholly allied only to political and spiritual power. The poet then a kind of usurper of that cultural usage that concerns language as being properly thought of as the language of command. The commoner sometimes fearing, envious, mocking, and jealous, of the poet's potential prowess.

> I'm new to this listserver . . . but what in the world does this have to do with poetics?!

I was following a thread, but further divergence does seem a little out of place, unless discussing the nature of standards as to the true verse and the perverse, of twisted meaning and truth. Is Buddha truth or twisted ? Is Jesus truth or twisted ? Is the bible truth or twisted ? Is the poet, whomever the poet is, truth or twisted ? Is poetry the twist itself, or the antithesis of the twist and the twistings twisted political aggenda ? I think - the latter.

There is also the idea that scripture is the only true and acceptable verse and all poetics is an abomination. No longer a common standpoint nowadays, thank the muses. Nevertheless, I assure you that that is not a standpoint that post-modern poets are wholly immune from suffering through. Been there, done that....virtually....(pun intended). Also the burdens of prophecy, and poetics as a kind of prophetic and therefore systemically hated action. The poet as prophet is also a been there, done that kind of thing, and equally I believe meant to urge poets to abandon the art and become more Puritanical and proper as to someone else's idea of what spirituality ought to be. The poet urged to give up the craft of poetry, by means of an increase in hardships is I think a persistent theme, even in the current as opposed to historical contextual situatedness. It all becomes very complicated.

Poetry as shadow leadership ? No further comment. Some people do tend to follow the strangest things, at the strangest times. Nevertheless, I do attempt precision as to intentional meaning, as well as concentrating on authenticity when I myself write, and I write almost every day. Poet as wise ? I would make no claims as to wisdom. That brings other kinds of contentions concerning poet a as traditional fool, spiritaul harlequin, and court jester.

So the subjects are all loosely connected. Another pun imbedded in that.

Perhaps best to spin the weathervane of poetical discussion back towards its more mainstreamed direction.... <chuckle>

We had better return from this diversion to one of the other channels.

Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

608. morpheal

Re: cruisingfiction

Tue 17 Mar 1998

> That was a very bizarre, arm-waving exercise (if not just unforgettable).

Caesar will use everything, including messiahs, and poets, was the gist of it. I think it is equally applicable to the generic instance as well as specifics.

↑ Index

609. CharSSmith

Re: Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word (Announcement)

Tue 17 Mar 1998

I was looking through an advance copy of this in Moe's last week (does anyone really buy those spiral-bound prrofs?) & it looks just great! Can't wait. Much to lend an ear to.

Charles Smith

In a message dated 98-03-17 19:05:45 EST, you write:

<< Forthcoming in April

Close Listening

Poetry and the Performed Word

Edited by CHARLES BERNSTEIN

Close Listening and the Performed Word brings together seventeen essays, especially written for this volume, on the poetry reading, the sounds of poetry, and the visual performance of poetry. While the performance of poetry is as old as poetry itself, critical attention to modern and postmodern poetry performance has been negligible. This collection opens many new avenues for the critical discussion of the sound and performance of poetry, with special attention to innovative work. More important, the essays collected here offer wide-ranging elucidations of how twentieth-century poetry has been practiced as a performance art. The contributors cover topics that range from the performance styles of individual poets and types of poetry to the relation of sound to meaning, from historical and social approaches to poetry readings and to new imaginations of prosody. Such approaches are intended to encourage new forms of "close listenings"--not only to the printed text of poems, but also to tapes, performances, and other expressions of the sounded word. With readings and "spoken word" events gaining an increasing audience for poetry, Close Listening provides an indispensable critical groundwork for understanding the importance of language in--and as--performance.

368 pp., 22 linecuts, 6-1/8 x 9-1/4
$19.95w*, paper, 0-19-510992-9
$49.95w, cloth, 0-19-510991-0
April 1998

Close Listening (paper), ISBN 0195109929
Close Listening (cloth), ISBN 0195109910

order from Oxford University Press
or from your bookstore
or from OUP on-line http://www.oup-usa.org/docs/0195109929.html >>

↑ Index

610. William Burmeister Prod

Re: cruisingfiction

Tue 17 Mar 1998

On Mar 17, 8:15pm, morpheal wrote:
> Subject: Re: cruisingfiction
> >That was a very bizarre, arm-waving exercise (if not just unforgettable).
>
> Caesar will use everything, including messiahs, and poets, was the gist of

it.
> I think it is equally applicable to the generic instance as well as specifics.
>-- End of excerpt from morpheal

What is "cruisingfiction" Are we talking Kerouac here?

While I would agree that the Caesars of this world will use whatever means to achieve their ends (re: Mark Prejsnar's post today in which the CIA spooks provoked strikes thus bringing about a desired end), this has nothing to do with the famous words of Jesus from the gospels. It is a whole lot more obvious than all that -- the implied ownership of the thing with the owners face imprinted on it (Caesar), which has always been the case with currency: it always returns to its owner (is expected to). Of course, there is also a more spiritual idea there -- that of association with an unseen kingdom espoused by Jesus rather than the seen. Kinda gives a new perspective on having to pay taxes there. It is at once a subtle and obvious answer to a loaded question and can't be considered complete in its meaning without the other part, "and render unto God what is his."

William Burmeister

↑ Index

611. William Burmeister Prod
Live at Club Soy Bomb
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Everyone have a great St.Patricks day! Get thee to thy CD players and have another round of Roaratorio and a fifth of O'Shamelessly's Irish creme.

William O'Burmeister

↑ Index

612. michael corbin
Re: Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word (Announcement)
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Charles Bernstein wrote:
>
> Forthcoming

> Word
>
> Edited
>
> Close Listening brings essays, > especially written,

>
> poetry,
> as poetry itself,
>
> postmodern poetry performance has been negligible.
> many new avenues
>
> of poetry, with special > essays
> as a performance art.
>
> The
> contributors cover > individual > from historical and social > imaginations of prosody.
>
> With readings and "spoken word"
> poetry,
>
> $19.95w, paper, 0-19-510992-9*
> $49.95w, cloth, 0-19-510991-0
>
> ISBN 0195109929
> ISBN 0195109910
>
> order from Oxford > or bookstore > or 0195109929.html
>
> Contents:
>
> Afterword
> Ventriloquism Poetry Reading

I was wondering about this metapoetry. Essays.

I was trying to read the Benetton ad backwards as it was reflected in the bus window glass on the way to work.

But i couldn't. the billboard performance was a double exposure at the stop-light performance.

OUP didn't have the virtual reality CD that I could play in my Sony.

So I listened close.

mc

↑ Index

613. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Tue 17 Mar 1998

Joel Kuszai: if you're out there backchannel me your email and snailmail addresses (sorry, I lost them).
I'll also gratefully accept this info from anyone else who cares to answer.

↑ Index

614. George Bowering
Re: Not in the nomen cultura.....
Wed 18 Mar 1998

.
>
>Bob Ezergailis

This sounds like a pseudonym to me. It is, isnt it?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

615. Kasey Silem Mohammad Hicks
Re: political (un)conscious
Wed 18 Mar 1998

> I am very interested in the way that "we" attach ideological value to formal elements--tropes, poetic forms and meters (or absence of) etc...
>
> I would contend that these attributions of value are themselves metaphorical at bottom. Parataxis is good because it isn't hierarchical as hypotaxis, would be one example. I have had long arguments with people about whether "open" form has anything to do with "openness."

> This is what I meant when I asked the question: "must we allegorize our tropes?" That is, how much ideological baggage can the formal structure of (poetic) language bear? I am wary of arguments that attribute value (negative or positive) to form; yet isn't this what "poetics" itself consists of? Help me, please!

Don't worry, I'll save you! I think you hit on it yourself at the end of your post: "poetics" consists of the mapping of value (aesthetic, ideological, emotional, etc.) onto form (e.g., attributing "openness" to "free verse," or selecting the pantoum structure to convey ennui). Now, of course this is arbitrary and irrational, but that's how conventions get started. And convention lies at the root of poetic expression, even the most radical langpo improv.

There is a complex but finite set of possible psychological responses to any linguistic structure: the range of that set is wider or narrower depending on the directness and familiarity of the conventions involved, and when the structure in question is deliberately antagonistic to or evasive of given conventions, this resistance generally produces a more complex but still determined set of possible responses, which incorporates the fact of resistance into its gradations of intelligibility. Thus a poem, for instance, in which "normal" relations of reference, syntax, logic, etc., are subverted, produces a familiar (within the context of langpo culture) recognition of certain stances--ironic, disaffected, anti-lyrical, and so forth. That recognition in turn comes to be associated (through a metonymic process) with the "forms" of langpo in general. An example might be the instant flush of tonal awareness one experiences upon seeing a line that looks like this nuptially (first. has toboggan(

at once alerts the reader to several conventions: 1) the convention of areferentiality, of words communicating through their "random" selection the meaning of the impossibility of the communication of meaning; 2) the convention of asyntacticality, of words marshalled carefully into an order that signifies the lack of order; 3) the convention of faux punctuation; 4) the convention of the withholding of closure, and so on. All these conventions together elicit a judgment. This judgment may be one of approval, disapproval, or neutrality, but it is always a judgment of value, involving as it does the automatic identification (and placing-into-perspective-with-one's-own-alignment) of ideological positions.

Metaphor has no qualitative essence of its "own," because there is no such thing as metaphor-as-such; metaphor is always a metaphor _of_ something. Within the familiar "genres" of metaphor (epic simile, allegory, blazon, etc.), there are obvious and utterly conventional responses grounded in the awareness of those associations. More complex responses occur when these associations are breached: when an epic simile, for example, is used to describe a bake sale, or when one refers to "the great inflatable tomahawk that is Rhode Island." Metaphor, that is, takes on value to the extent that it departs from conventionality, so that all figural assignment of value militates toward a veering into catachresis. I know there is some disagreement about this, but I do think that it is the "abuse" of metaphor rather than "metaphor itself" that generates the mapping of value in question. It is only when familiar forms are transmutated or deformed that we start to feel some way about them.

I could go on about how our association of certain forms with "love," "nationalistic fervor," "goofiness," etc., arises not merely from arbitrary conventions but from a tension between the passive recognition of those conventions and the reactive anxiety that results from transgressions thereof, but I am getting very sleeeeeeeepy

Clunk.

Whrrrrrrrrr...

↑ Index

616. Gary Sullivan

Belgum's Driver 23 at Underground Film Festival

Wed 18 Mar 1998

For those in the NYC area: Rolf Belgum, brother of innovative fictioneer Erik Belgum (whose _Star Fiction_ Detour Press published in 1996), will be screening his documentary "Driver 23" at the New York Underground Film Festival this coming Saturday at Anthology Film Archives, 4:15 p.m.

This is the most hilarious low-budget film I've seen since George Kuchar's "Corruption of the Damned." Rather than blather on about it myself, I'll attach a "spotlight" piece on Belgum that appeared in last week's _City Pages_ (Minneapolis). Hope to see you all there! --Gary

TAPPING INTO METAL

by James Diers

Passion Play: Rocker Dan Cleveland has
"an overwhelming personality" in the local rock-doc parody Driver 23.

Truth may not always be stranger than fiction, but it's a hell of a lot cheaper. Just ask Rolf Belgum, the Minneapolis filmmaker whose latest feature-length documentary, Driver 23, was shot on a budget of $700.

"I'm amazed at what passes for 'low-budget indie films' these days," says Belgum. "At some of these [indie film] festivals, you'll be going up against million-dollar films that are somehow still considered 'underground.'"

In the spirit of the most earnest DIY director, Belgum spent a year and a half--sans crew and equipment, just a handheld video camera--getting inside the mind of Dan Cleveland, a Minneapolitan courier/rocker whose raw exploits are an uncanny, real-life mutation of Rob Reiner's This Is Spinal Tap. From basement rehearsals with his Ryan's-ready metal band, Dark Horse, to quiet reflections in the bathtub (a la Tap's Mick Shrimpton), the film digs into Cleveland's true rock & roll story with Cassavetes-esque candor. Not only are the results strangely spellbinding, they're often hysterical. Interviews with Cleveland's on-again/off-again bandmates read like the sharpest of parody--e.g., "Dan's got a sweet voice...when he stays in his range"--except that they're real.

"A lot of people think it's made-up or scripted because Dan's delivery is so tight," says Belgum. "But it's all real. He feels that comfortable in front of a camera." Indeed, with the aid of assorted anti-depressants, Cleveland is an organic deadpan delight whose passion for amateur physics is matched only by his penchant for goateed power chords and self-analysis. As Belgum puts it, "He is his own favorite subject."

Though local screenings have been few and far between, Driver 23 (formerly known as Frontman) seems to have already infiltrated elite rock circles in the Pacific Northwest. A couple of members of the stalwart Seattle band The Walkabouts, former Twin Cities residents themselves, got hold of a video copy last year. They reportedly took to sharing the tape with various friends who came to visit their recording studio, including members of grunge-band survivors Pearl Jam and Alice in Chains. Charmed by the film's priceless verite banter, even Eddie Vedder's pals are apparently stunned to learn that Cleveland's not putting on an act. Can a cult following of Spinal proportions be far behind?

To his credit, Belgum opted not to directly engage any broader agendas in the film, even though elements like Cleveland's interracial marriage or the anatomy of the local rock scene provided ample opportunity. "Had I wanted to apply for grant money to fund my movie, that would've been the way to go," he quips. "But Dan's personality is so overwhelming, there's hardly any room for anything else." . . .

↑ Index

617. Gary Sullivan
Fatimah Tuggar @ Tilton Gallery & New Museum
Wed 18 Mar 1998

Another Friends-of-the-Poet Plug(TM):

New collage and installation work by Nigerian visual artist, Fatimah Tuggar, can be seen in two current shows in New York: "Keeping up with the Joneses" (New Museum) and "Esperanto 98" (Jack Tilton Gallery). Tuggar, who is currently homeless, creates (among other things) stunning collages, somewhat reminiscent of those of Jess Collins, combining peopled photographs taken mostly in northern Nigeria with images clipped from First world magazines. Often humorous, always provocative & disturbing, Tuggar's work can be seen on the web for those of you not in the NYC area:

http://www.plexus.org//tuggar/

For those here in NYC, check her work out "live":

Keeping up with the Joneses
March 19 - April 12, 1998
The New Museum of Contemporary Art 583 Broadway (btwn Houston & Prince)

Esperanto '98
curated by Christian Haye.
Tuesday, March 10, 1998 - Saturday, April 11, 1998
Jack Tilton Gallery
49 Greene Street (btwn Spring & Broome)

Hope to see you there! --Gary

↑ Index

618. dbkk
Heller/objectivists/SPT
Wed 18 Mar 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

Friday, March 20, 7:30 p.m.

Utopocalyptic Moments: Objectivist Poetics
Michael Heller

Heller tells us that ³Utopocalyptic² is his ³made-up name for a sense of uncertainty, for that odd socio-political or cultural product, both fever and exacerbation, in which an individual is torn between idealized hopes and gnawing dread. My discussion focuses on the poetics of Zukofsky, Oppen and other poets as utopocalyptic responses to the socio-political and aesthetic pressures of the Thirties.² Michael Heller is a full time faculty member at New York University. He is the author of _Conviction¹s Net of Branches: Essays on the Objectivist Poets and Poetry_ (Southern Illinois University Press, 1985) and the editor of _Carl Rakosi: Man and Poet_ (National Poetry Foundation, 1985). As a poet, he is the author of six fine books including the most recent, _Wordflow: New and Selected Poems_ (Talisman House, 1997).

New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
Free (thanks to the California Council for the Humanities)

↑ Index

619. Maz881
opposite
Wed 18 Mar 1998

---

in an interesting post about the cia, mark P wrote:

"anti-racist guys"

is this the "only" opposite of the word racist?

like for fascist couldn't you say anarchist or communist or democracy believer in?

for sexist, what?

interested in these big words lately.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

620. Safdie Joseph
Re: The Metaphor Express
Wed 18 Mar 1998

Not TOO many professorial comments about metaphor and metonomy today -- (and by the way, Tom M. [bereted, goateed, huddled over in the corner of that coffee house with Clement Greenberg snapping his fingers to Monk] I think we can safely assume that Henry Gould is PROBABLY well-informed about the major developments of art in the 20th century, and was objecting more to a certain academese that's haunted this thread rather than the word "abstract") -- so it may be time for me to opine that Linda Russo's now somewhat plaintive question that began this thread, and also Nada's recent question, namely "is there anything that we understand in and by itself and without the aid of analogy?" seem to have gotten very short shrift.

Chris Stroffolino, back-cover boy (nice poem, though!), wrote a few days back that he was suspicious of the "anti-metaphorical tendency" -- but wasn't such a tendency a main project of the Black Mountain folks, to get away from what Olson called the suck of symbol, from the universe of discourse, from what he called, in the Letter to Elaine Feinstein, the "classical-representational" as opposed to the "primitive abstract"? And let's not forget "I", who keeps asking the Gunslinger in Book One what a certain event was LIKE. "Like, boy? What's that mean? Were you HERE or not?" I think these and other works were positing ATTENTION and PERCEPTION as more valuable qualities than linguistic INVENTION and ORNAMENT: "Be here now and then."

I of course can't argue with the folks who claim that ALL our language is metaphorical (though mainly unconscious dead metaphors) -- nor with my old teacher Norman O. Brown, who ended _Love's Body_ with the prescient remark "All is metaphor: there is only poetry" -- but one indication of really BAD poetry is surely the overuse of such devices? Here's a poem called

YOU WANT MORE

Here are three cancer spots:
Skin.
Stomach.
Bone.
You can take your pick, but everyone Wants skin.
Once in Houston, Texas,
I saw a car full of sparrows.
They looked like nothing else.
Of your friends:
How many take pills to sleep?
How many drink themselves to sleep?
How many would take for themselves your illness?
My friend,
Last night I walked outside
And watched the stars do nothing at all unusual.
Ask anyone:
Describe the stars.
That's exactly how they looked.
And even
If I dressed them up as children,
Gave them wagons, cakes, and birthday boots,
Then broke their fingers one by one until they said
It's only you they shine for,
I know what you'd want:
You'd want more.

(by Jim Krusoe) There's lots I still like about this 22-year-old poem, but one of them is the implied anti-metaphorical (thus, pro "world-as-it-is") stance -- I'm sure that's not a properly mediated statement, Joe Amato, but I've always valued work (like Bob Grenier's "Curriculum of the Soul" piece "Attention") that moves us IN rather than AROUND, AWAY . . . .

How WAS "Adorno's Ashes?" I didn't know he was Irish!

↑ Index

621. Henry Gould
Re: cruisingfiction
Wed 18 Mar 1998

On Tue, 17 Mar 1998 09:32:10 -0600 Tom Mandel said:
>
>Inasmuch as the material basis of Xtianity equals the Roman Empire rips off
>Jew-ideas and blends w/ Roman religion (virgin births, human god, etc.), >perhaps Henry would consent to view the Rabbis' laughter (if that is what >it was: horror was more what I had in mind) in the light of gallows humor?
>Esp. inasmuch (further) as it was Jew Jesus who was crucified -- along >with a number of other Pharisaic rabbis (Jesus was a pharisee, btw) w/ bold >ideas whose flesh was sanctified in that manner or (more often) by being >burned alive. Do I think it quite the joke that this same empire should >recast itself as world religion on that back, yup uh huh in a rather chilly >sense you bet I do and sorry if I offend -- either you or another other.
>Stoke those fires....

It's interesting we're putting on the gloves while the Pope is making his play for reconciliation (cards close to the chest, gloves on). I always thought "I" was the Pope (metapharisaically speaking).

Not only was Jesus a Jew (NEWSFLASH), but so were Peter and Paul. Speaking of P's, did you know that Poe's Pym hits dead center (numerically speaking) when ship Grampus arrives at Peter & Paul rocks in mid-Atlantic? What does that mean? It means that Jesus was from outer space, obviously.

Jesus MAY have been a Pharisee - but remember, G-d (or was it Pnin?) showed Moses only his BACKSIDE. EP, EP (Ez & Eddie) had to drop the p's to pee pee, remember. (Eli & Eli - same biz) (whiz within whiz!)

- beglovedly yours, St. Henry (de Petersburg)

↑ Index

622. Henry Gould
handedness
Wed 18 Mar 1998

I found this in a poem called One Square Mile:

19

Pitching righthand by a pillar he stood.
He was lefthanded, he was black, but they needed him.
A nominal phenomenal singularity, they said;
he dove down from the dome, filled to the brim with MAYDAY, MAYDAY rings in his ears, feathers, bronze pedestals for sandals; and the square choir (tested for touching wakes and funerals) suddenly mothers a circle of fire-eaters! And they sprang up - completely FESTA'd!

- Henry gould

↑ Index

623. louis stroffolino
Re: The Metaphor Express
Wed 18 Mar 1998

This question occured to me, before I got mr. safdie's comments, so i will ask it first: When people speak of "metaphor," they often say "metaphor for" (I do it too), but isn't saying "metaphor for", strictly speaking, an improper use of the term? Not that I'm suggesting that we, as poets, necessarily should be "strictly speaking", but some synchronization of terms might be helpful.....

Now, if metaphor, or a metaphor cannot be "translated", or is, in some way, "irreducible", wouldn't such a metaphor qualify as "anything that we understand in and of itself without the aid of analogy" (Nada, or Safdie quoting Nada), or some kind of "primitive abstract"? When confronted with metaphor read as thus one need not respond as Dorn's "I" (What's that mean? What's that LIKE? etc). Or, if one does one is not going to come any closer to the "meaning". I think the distinction between seeing a metaphor as a metaphor and seeing it as a metaphor "for" something is the crucial distinction here. When one says "X is a metaphor for Y," one is really speaking of analogy, not metaphor. all (is a metaphor) for now, chris

↑ Index

624. Marcella Durand
Mark Nowak's address
Wed 18 Mar 1998

If anyone (or Mark Nowak) has his snail-mail address, could they please e-mail it to me at the Poetry Project: [redacted]?

Thanks much,
Marcella

↑ Index

625. groberts
a metaphor
Thu 19 Mar 1998

"Ah, Critic,
more and more
you club the life
out of this dead
topic.
What for?
Put down your stick,
Professor,
use knife and for k [sic] instead."

↑ Index

626. dbkk
Nepotistic plug
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Nepotistic plug from Kevin Killian to all New Yorkers . . . I hope you find the time to see "Surface Transit: sketches of ordinary people" at the Nuyorican Poets Cafe (236 East Third Street between B and C) on March 19, 20, 21 at 7:30.... It is the one woman show of my cousin, Sarah Jones, "winner of the 1997 Grand Slam"

Different styles, same genetic code!!!

For reservations call [redacted]

I won't be there but please tell me how you like it

Thanks everyone--- Kevin K.

↑ Index

627. Henry Gould
warts of religion
Thu 19 Mar 1998

This is my final post on this tetchy non-poetics topic, and I will be brief. After what Europe & the Church did to the Jews - and does to this day in the scenario of some parts of the gospels - no one is in a position to scold them for being alienated or antagonistic toward organized Christianity.

The project of Peter & Paul was, in a sense, to make Jews of all mankind, and so far you have to admit they have been successful in a number of ways. Unsuccessful in others.

I guess I would agree with what maybe J. Joyce would think: if God is a Person, she must be the God of Here-Comes-Everybody. Her name, by the way, is Beatrice, and she lives in Sioux Falls, North Dakota - where she runs a movie house and is an active member of the Church of the Frisbee- Tossin' Jesus.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

628. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Heller/objectivists/SPT
Thu 19 Mar 1998

---

anyone know if the new collection of essays on the Objectivists has come out yet and if so how to get a copy?

burt kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

629. morpheal
Re: warts of religion
Thu 19 Mar 1998

> I guess I would agree with what maybe J. Joyce would think: if God is a Person, she must be the God of Here-Comes-Everybody. Her name, by the way, is Beatrice, and she lives in Sioux Falls, North Dakota - where she runs a movie house and is an active member of the Church of the Frisbee-Tossin' Jesus.>- Henry Gould

Almost poetic....

Except I have heard of her, several times, under several different names, but the movie theatre is always running the same boring porno flicks....

Morpheal

↑ Index

630. MAYHEW
Non-academic definitions of tropes
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Beware of crossing swords with Chiasmus or crossing Chiasmus with a sword.

Don't lose connection with Asyndeton.

Mr. Litotis is a not uncharming Englishman.

Simile is like a bad haircut;
Allegory is a wearisome journey,

A Tautology is just a Tautology but Paradox makes black ink bright.

etc...

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

631. Tom Mandel render into scissors
Thu 19 Mar 1998

The "render unto Caesar" debate occurred within the pharisaic movement; you can find all sides of the debate represented as artefacts and consciously in lots of early midrashic texts and in the Mishnah. Even Jesus's parabolic way of representing the issue -- whose face is on the coin? -- occurs in that literature I believe (but it would take a scholar to come up with a citation).

Those were revolutionary times, and the debate was not about meekness, personal ethics, living in or apart from the political, but rather about what attitude a Jew ought to have (and since these were rabbis, ought to preach) about the Romans. Were they bad because they enslaved our minds? Were they good because they created roads and their law kept someone off us? Etc.

60 messiahs? someone said.

Remember, the idea of "messiah" had nothing (zero, zilch) to do with a divine being (and only metaphorically to do with the saving of souls) before the romanifying of Judaic ideas into Xtianity.

The vision was of what we would call a world revolution (gee I always wondered why the European left had so many Jews in it...). The messiah was to be a king (descendant of King David and therefore a rightful king) who would lead the movement to that order, in which swords would be beaten into plowshares and the whole world would view Jerusalem as its center.

T'were the Romans who had human gods, gods with sons (and daughters), humans impregnated by divine beings, etc (well... there is a reference to gods lying with women in Genesis, I believe, to create the race of "Giants"). And foisted on my mojo such notions as virgin birth.

Some of you may have noticed that "first will be last" didn't actually happen. Yet, the world religion built on that Jewish idea (oppressed/exiled idea -- it's not essentialistically Jewish as is obvious I hope) rules on. We live in Rome.

Tom

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

632. Tom Mandel
adorno's ashes
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Language being so much more interesting than ideas, the phrase "Adorenoashes" makes me think of Adonis -- the contemporary Arabic poet. I just ordered his "Intro to Arab Poetics" (hope that title is right) from Amazon. Anyone read it?

Tom

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

633. Michael J. Kelleher
Segue Reading
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Dan Machlin asked me to forward the following:

Kit Robinson

&

Erica Hunt

Tuesday, March 31

@

7:30 P.M. $5.00

@

Segue Performance Space
303 E. 8th St, 1R
(Betw. Aves B&C)

New York, NY

↑ Index

634. Henry Gould
I cain hep it
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Tom says we live in Rome. But according to Beatrice, we live in Sioux Falls.

Beatrice is God & Henry is her Prophet.

The Ark of the Covenant is a 4-dimensional Frisbee.

With Eagle Feathers.

Made of a special kind of clay.

Called Silly Putty.

- St. Henry de Petersburg

↑ Index

635. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: The Metaphor Express
Thu 19 Mar 1998

---

i really didn't wanna touch the metaphor thread, as it seems to me that these distinctions are useful primarily to the extent you're willing to read (and write) such & such a way... i.e., "touching threads"... or, "with due regard for" somebody or other's instrumental definitions of same... lakoff may be a smart guy, but i find that the leap to cognition (if that's what it is---it surely is in the case of mark turner) that you end up with is probably a reduction, at least when you start talking specific metaphorical constructs (in specific poems) as opposed to process... i.e., i think metaphor/metonymy are really so sociocultural insofar as how we use such devices---when such devices are being put to use, as it were...

but joe s brings me out simply to say that i used the word "mediated" in my posts to gabe b/c i wanted to provoke/emphasize an awareness of media... and

b/c the notion of "unmediated visions" and such is a relatively easy one to come by... but "mediated" really is more metaphorical (!) than anything else... which is to say, perhaps a word like "constitutive" would have been more to the point?... a different metaphoricity at stake here? (my but don't i sound professorial!)... well that's not my point, anyway... mediated: as i "see" it, it's not that there's something "between" my understanding of a thing and the thing itself (dasein etc.)... it's that language, mind, culture, etc., constitutes perception of said thing... which for my money, is not all the thing is... nor is it all we may likely believe it to be... for "thing" substitute "person" or "self" or "god" and it all gets so---sticky?... in any case, i can't think, at this "point" in my life, w/o thinking through, or i think as joe indicates, in... to think in is still to constitute an object through thought ('mediated by thought'?)... metaphor in the most general sense, as in 'everything may be metaphorical,' indicated by my persistent use of "quotes"... well i can put the entire post in quotes, of course...

i can just imagine what the philosophers among you might say...

but hey, recall olson re the human universe, "we are ourselves both the instrument of discovery and the instrument of definition"... i think this is to the "point"... setting aside my metaphors here (like, as though i could!): whence actual knowledge, proprioceptive or otherwise, given such a "state of affairs"?... perhaps it's like the old---joke?

'a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a metphor"?...

best,

j-o-e, aka joe

↑ Index

636. Pierre Joris
Re: adorno's ashes
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Tom Mandel wrote:

> Language being so much more interesting than ideas, the phrase "Adorenoashes" makes me think of Adonis -- the contemporary Arabic poet. I just ordered his "Intro to Arab Poetics" (hope that title is right) from Amazon. Anyone read it?

Yes, I have -- it is a terrific book -- Adonis is a terrific poets and thinker -- unhappily too much is not yet translated, though a few poems from one of the latest books were done excellenty by Allen Hibbard & Osama Isber (published in SULFUR). That poem "A desire moving through the maps of the material" is also reprinted in Millennium Vol II as is a theoretical text from 1992. I am right now translating a few exceprts from a book of essays called LA PRIERE ET L'EPEE. Superb work. -- Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
— La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
— Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

637. morpheal
Re: a metaphor
Thu 19 Mar 1998

> "Ah, Critic,
> more and more
> you club the life
> out of this dead
> topic.
> What for?
> Put down your stick,
> Professor,
> use knife
> and for > k [sic]
> instead."

Emendation:

"...and short declarative tightly controlled sentences suitable only for command."

Of course that suggests an ever more prevalent anti-intellectual attitude of unquestioning, increasingly muscle tensioned, knife and fork mentality, accompanied by an attack on poetic license, attempting to revoke same, in favour of more tactical Anglish, such as is favoured by language "properly" thought of as being short, declarative, sentences of command....?

Paraphrased: The poet as hanged man, subject to twists of meaning.

Either that or the poet's words as deadly force and the writer having to register possession of such a deadly weapon, under new legislation yet to be approved by Congress. The need having been recognized that regulation is necessitated of those inevitably violent distortions of proper usage, anarchic in their tending to ignorance of linearity, and as they do not properly punctuate, disrespectful, ill mannered, not knowing how to properly begin or end anything, poet-tries....but a poet surely tries, making the effort to say the unsayable... Shameful. The punishment will be grammatical lessons as to the writing of the most constrained and proper prose, since that seems to be the deficit. If that fails remediation as to intentional meaning and communicative effects being reversed, will begin and persist until poet-tries are abandoned in vein. That, or make the poet stare into a mirror forever and ever. That ought to do it, if nothing else does.

During the Cold War there was someone to blame, but no more....as now there is only US. In the immortal words of that great American poet Pogo "we have met the enemy and he is US". All of US, presumably, and without national boundaries.

Phenomenologically bracketing out any assumptions.

Morpheal

↑ Index

638. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: adorno's ashes

Thu 19 Mar 1998

Tom Mandel wrote:
>
> Language being so much more interesting than ideas, the phrase > "Adorenoashes" makes me think of Adonis -- the contemporary Arabic poet. I > just ordered his "Intro to Arab Poetics" (hope that title is right) from > Amazon. Anyone read it?
>
> Tom
>

>
Hi, Tom.

Adonis presents a rich and readable explanation of Arab poetics from orality to modernity, e.g., "Language... is not a tool for communicating a detached meaning. It is meaning itself because it is thought. Indeed, it precedes thought and is succeeded by knowledge. This implies that the criterion of meaning was contained in language itself, and was defined by the rules of language" (82). He maintains a dual perspective--poetic and sociohistorical--and helps to calibrate the compass. You might also find interesting Harold Coward's _Sacred Word and Sacred Text: Scripture in World Religions_. (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 1988). ISBN 0-88344-604-9 (pbk). Also his _The Sphota Theory of Language_. (Delhi: Motilal Banarsidsss, --can't find it just now, so I don't know the date).

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

639. LanceEli3
Re: warts of religion
Thu 19 Mar 1998

I know this is all unpoetic, but I can not help but comment on such statements as these:

> The project of Peter & Paul was, in a sense, to make Jews of all mankind, and so far you have to admit they have been successful in a number of ways. Unsuccessful in others.

Peter and Paul were cetainly Jews, but where in the world does the idea that they wanted to make everyone Jews come from. So much of the New Testament (written by Paul) tells the Jews not to force Old Testament law on Gentile Christians (particularly circumcision, the primary "mark" of a Jew). It is true that Christianity as taught by Paul embraces Jewish history and scriptures, but his goal was not to expand the Israelite nation. One of the themes of the Bible is that "all nations will be blessed through Israel." First Israel will be blessed, then the whole world. So Israel and Jewish history was simply a starting point, not an end (to Paul).

I don't know, perhaps I entered this "conversation" to late . . .

↑ Index

640. henry gould
Re: warts of religion
Thu 19 Mar 1998

On Thu, 19 Mar 1998 10:59:31 EST LanceEli3 said:
>
>Peter and Paul were cetainly Jews, but where in the world does the idea >that they wanted to make everyone Jews come from. So much of the New >Testament (written by Paul) tells the Jews not to force Old Testament law >on Gentile Christians (particularly circumcision, the primary "mark" of a >Jew). It is true that Christianity as taught by Paul embraces Jewish >history and scriptures, but his goal was not to expand the Israelite >nation. One of the themes of the Bible is that "all nations will be >blessed through Israel." First Israel will be blessed, then the whole >world. So Israel and Jewish history was simply a starting point, not an >end (to Paul).

I meant that Xtianity is a Biblical religion and the core of it, the spiritual core of it, is Hebraic. - Henry G.

↑ Index

641. Pierre Joris
Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

To quickly pick up two threads, one old -- the metaphor discussion --, one new -- Tom's query re Adonis --, here the last chapter, of a longish Adonis essay on Arab poetics & involving metaphor. The modern poets he speaks of are those of the Abassid period, i.e. Abu Tamman, Ibn al-Mu'tazz, Abu Nuwas & Co., inventing urban modern poetics some 800 to 1000 years before Baudelaire & co. were on the euro-scene. This is an insta-translation, as I type, so, please excuse mistapes... Pierre

ADONIS -- ChapterXIV of “THE FIXED AND THE MOBILE; TRADIITON AND INNOVATION IN ARAB CULTURE”

During pre-islamic times, poetry imitated man who, in turn, imitated poetry. And man thus saw himself in his own mirror. Poetry spoke life; life spoke poetry. After the advent of Islam, poetry became but a simple part of a larger whole -- the islamic vision of the world. While poetic content submitted itself to religious power, form remained attached to the pre-islamic language. It’s only with the beginning of the Omeyyad period that poetry started to distance itself from religion. Islam by then had become a simple external social and political frame. But the real poetic revolution took place in the Abassid era.(1) It consisted in an interrogation of the question of origin: is the latter truly perfect? Is it really impossible to go beyond it? The answer that was reached was of course negative — creation being, precisely, synonymous with origin. Now, in the matter of poetic creation, no origin can, in the absolute, be better than any other. Creation being a stranger to time, "modern" poetry can indeed surpass "ancient" poetry. The criterion no longer resides in the ancientness or the modernity as such: ancient creation and modern creation can thus meet. The "innovating" poets of the Abassid period thus show the way that the contemporary poets have found again. Today, creation has to move in the direction of transgressing the know, towards producing the new or the unknown. The relationship between tradition and creation is no longer a relation of cause and effect. Furthermore, the time of the former is different from that of the latter. The work is simultaneously contemporary and non-contemporary. The moment of creation does not necessarily correspond to historical moment of the tradition. The creator lives simultaneously in all times. The moment of the work may not partake in the predominant taste; anyway, it is the great works which create this taste, always. It is in the dialectic of the apparent and the hidden, of the visible and the invisible that this "time of the creation" has expressed itself. And it is thanks to that dialectic that the way opens to go beyond the fixed traditional image of religion. This dialectic has also permitted the emergence of the riches of language and poetry, and of creative experience in general, the principle domain of which was metaphor, the essential dimension of interpretation. As metaphor is the artistic form of thought, traditonalism rejected it just as it had rejected the doctrine of interpretation. For the traditionalist current, everything that's written in the Koran is literally true; God's language cannot be metaphorical. What is called "metaphor" in the language of the Koran thus represents a reality whose essence we are ignorant of. If poetry wants to be religious, it has to abandon metaphor. Indeed, in the traditionalists' mind metaphor is akin to a kind of "magic," consisting in substituting the false for the true. But the poets, without worrying about it, keep on using metaphor, and poetry becomes resolutely pluri-simensional, gifted with a plurality of meanings. Thus metaphor has had the virtue of "opening" a language which until then was "closed." This is the great lesson of that "modernity" of which the "innovators" of the Abassid period were the precursors. This revolution has produced a new poetic language which, rather than describing the apparent in itself, proposes to unveil its meaning. The unveiling thus becomes the goal of all utterance. No matter the certainties or the teachings, what is essential is to open the doors of the imagination. This new conception of language achieved three major changes. The first consisted in proposing that the imagination lies at the origin of the world; the second, that the criterion for evaluating poetic experience lies in the transgression of the ordinary and the common. The third consisted in recommending a perpetual invention of new forms. Form is no longer the image of the poem-object, but the image of the relation, in the poem, between the poet and the world. Form has become the very breath of the poem: in itself, already, a product of the imagination. It is in this way that Arab poetry found again the deep sense of its true tradition: a tradition of innovation and questioning.

1. The Abassyd dynasty succeeded the Omeyyad dynasty in 750 and ruled until 1258, date of the conquest of Bagdad by the turco-mongolian army.

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

642. morpheal
Re: I cain hep it
Thu 19 Mar 1998

> Tom says we live in Rome. But according to Beatrice, we live in Sioux Falls.
> Beatrice is God & Henry is her Prophet.
> The Ark of the Covenant is a 4-dimensional Frisbee.
> With Eagle Feathers.
> Made of a special kind of clay.
> Called Silly Putty.
> - St. Henry de Petersburg

When in Rome do as the Americans do. The tabloids report Beatrice Foods is launching suit against all other Beatrices who are all, it is alleged, and without any exceptions, heretofor and forthwith, considered damaging to that incorporate reputation, and so what's in a name ? Sioux Falls is in an uproar. Rumours abound that Sue had a serious accident but no one is quite sure which version to believe. Beatrice is changing her name & Henry has gone into chicken ranching. His primary rational is not monetary gain but the spiritual fact that chickens are something that can be lass-sued. There is a loose connection in all these facts on the fringes of near urban life. Any ark in a storm. The sacred frisbee vanishes into a quantum well causing a long line of flagelland physicists to pilgrimage seeking Sue. With chicken feathers dyed respectable colours. Clay feet came from original lumps of clay giving original sin a new meaning. All people who are not silly putty by nature will be subject to being exchanged.

- St. Looney de Ottawa

↑ Index

643. CharSSmith
Re: Heller/objectivists/SPT
Thu 19 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-19 09:28:16 EST, you write:

<< anyone know if the new collection of essays on the Objectivists has come out yet and if so how to get a copy?

 burt kimmelman >>

Rachel Blau DuPlessis should know. You still lurking here, Rachel?

↑ Index

644. Gwyn McVay
Any Korean speakers?
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Wondering if any lister or lurker speaks Korean and could backchannel me any literal/denotative meanings of the name "Poe Hwa," or your best gloss--thx. much.

Gwyn "Once and Future Gringa" McVay

↑ Index

645. Mark Prejsnar
Re: opposite
Thu 19 Mar 1998

I find this post completely baffling. I was talking about the Brooklyn Dodgers, as I recall...

"only opposite of the word racist"??? ...Huh?

The Dodgers who kept the team from carrying out a racist "job action" against Jackie Robinson were, I think, (for their time and place) anti-racist guys...

Right?

Your're too profound for me, Bill. Thank heavens I at least understand the in-field fly rule!!

Mark
@lanta

On Wed, 18 Mar 1998, Maz881 wrote:

> in an interesting post about the cia, mark P wrote:
>
> "anti-racist guys"
>
> is this the "only" opposite of the word racist?
>
> like for fascist couldn't you say anarchist or communist or democracy believer in?
>
> for sexist, what?
>
> interested in these big words lately.
>
> Bill Luoma

↑ Index

646. Tom Vogler
[1]POETICS Digest - 17 Mar
Thu 19 Mar 1998

---

[1]POETICS Digest - 17 Mar 1998 to 18 Mar 3/19/98

Please note that my new email address is
[redacted]
Your message has been forwarded

↑ Index

647. Aldon Nielsen
Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

I hope I'm wrong, but I think I rmember having recently read a notice of the death of this fine poet & critic -- anybody know for sure?

↑ Index

648. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Content-Description: Text

On Mar 19, 12:48pm, Pierre Joris sent:
> Subject: Adonis
> To quickly pick up two threads, one old -- the metaphor discussion --, one new -- > Tom's query re Adonis --, here the last chapter, of a longish Adonis essay on Arab > poetics & involving metaphor. The modern poets he speaks of are those of the > Abassid period, i.e. Abu Tamman, Ibn al-Mu'tazz, Abu Nuwas & Co., inventing urban > modern poetics some 800 to 1000 years before Baudelaire & co. were on the > euro-scene. This is an insta-translation, as I type, so, please excuse mistapes...
> Pierre

Can we see some examples to back this incredible claim? Pierre, I can't help but think that what you have posted below maybe means something to you (a kinship with) your manisfesto on a nomadic poetics. Is there any such meaning for ya?

> ADONIS -- ChapterXIV of “THE FIXED AND THE MOBILE; TRADIITON AND INNOVATION
IN > ARAB CULTURE
.
.
.
>As metaphor is the artistic form of thought, traditonalism rejected it just >as it had rejected the doctrine of interpretation. For the traditionalist >current, everything that’s written in the Koran is literally true; God’s language >cannot be metaphorical. What is called “metaphor” in the language of the Koran >thus represents a reality whose essence we are ignorant of. If poetry wants to >be religious, it has to abandon metaphor. Indeed, in the traditionalists’ mind >metaphor is akin to a kind of “magic,” consisting in substituting the false for >the true. But the poets, without worrying about it, keep on using metaphor, >and poetry

Now make that perhaps the rejection of metaphor by traditionalism's successor science & technology. Is metaphor the artistic form of thought (merely)? Does metaphor have a place in a world at large ruled by science (include pseudo science) and technology? Once saw a show in which a famous spaceship of entrepid galaxy hopping humanists encountered another spacefaring race which spoke almost entirely in metaphor. Metaphors with alot of references to their ancient myths, epics, and whatever. The question is how could they have reached that level of technology with a language (spoken) consisting largely of metaphor. Or am I stuck in 1984?

William Burmeister

↑ Index

649. Daniel Zimmerman

Metaphornymia

Thu 19 Mar 1998

Sorry, but:

metonymicity: Coy? Me? Tiny Tim?
metaphoricity: I'm a poetry itch.

The first uses all of its letters to represent part of its potential in the [metonymic?] figure of Tiny Tim; the second predicates itself as prior to itself--an impulse toward its own creation [and thus violates the tense of its verb]. A dead heat? [& how about that metaphor?!].

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

650. Stephen Cope

Petition: Gay Rights/American Airlines

Thu 19 Mar 1998

> Passing this along....
>
> Stephen Cope
>
> X-Originating-IP: [192.147.65.114]
> From: "Bradley Wise" <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
> [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
> [redacted], [redacted],

[redacted], [redacted], [redacted]
Subject: A Petition for Gay Rights
Date: Tue, 17 Mar 1998 12:15:58 PST

Dear Friends,

American Airlines is a major sponsor to and supporter of groups like GLADD, the Human Rights Campaign, the Gay and Lesbian Victory Fund, the AIDS Action Foundation, DIFFA, AmFAR, and scores of community-based groups representing gays and lesbians. It is also the first airline to adopt a written non-discrimination policy covering sexual orientation in its employment practices.

In an unusual joint letter released to the media on Friday, March 14th from the Family Research Council, Concerned Women of America, American Family Association and Coral Ridge Ministries, American Airlines was openly criticized about their policy.

Radical right leader Beverly LaHaye also went on Christian "talk radio" on Friday to blast American Airlines because "American's sponsorship of homosexual 'pride' events constitutes an open endorsement of promiscuous homosexuality." She and the other groups have written Bob Crandall at American to complain that the airline has "gone beyond mere tolerance" of gays and lesbians.

The full article appears in Friday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and possibly picked up by other newspapers around the country. It has come to the attention of the gay and lesbian community that American Airline's switchboard and E-mails are being bombarded now by homophobic and hateful callers who have been urged by LaHaye and others to DEMAND the company terminate its gay-friendly policies.

Please add your name to this petition and forward it to as many people as you can. To add your name just cut and paste this onto new mail and send it out!

If you are the 25th, 50th, 75th, 100th, etc. person to sign this petition then also please forward this to American Airlines at [redacted]

To American Airlines:
We, the undersigned, support your gay/lesbian rights policies and commend you for your efforts in ending discrimination. Thank you for your dedication to such issues and please continue to remain active in the struggle to end discrimination.

1. Bob Fulton Johnson, Cambridge, MA
2. Gary Iredell, Somerville, MA

> 3. Keith MacDonald, Boston, MA
> 4. Will Cook, Boston, MA
> 5. Gerald Denis, Boston, MA
> 6. Brian Sands, New Orleans, LA
> 7. Ben Pesner, New York, NY
> 8. Craig Lucas
> 9. Mitchell Lichtenstein
> 10. Vincent Sanchez
> 11. Eve Gordon
> 12. Todd Waring
> 13. Steve Hendrickson, Minneapolis, MN
> 14. Megan Odell, Minneapolis, MN
> 15. Chris Boulton, Pittsburgh, PA
> 16. Matthew Boulton, Cambridge, MA
> 17. Holly Grant, Boston, MA
> 18. Elizabeth Mueller, Austin, TX
> 19. Rebecca Braslau, CA
> 20. Dan Kluger, SF CA
> 21. Aureliano DeSoto, Montreal, QC
> 22. David Conner, San Francisco, CA
> 23. Brad S. Wise, San Francisco, CA
> 24. Stephen Cope, San Diego, CA
>
> ---

↑ Index

651. Nada Gordon

Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality

Thu 19 Mar 1998

Joe Safdie wrote:

> Nada's recent question, > namely "is there anything that we understand in and by itself and without > the aid of analogy?" seem to have gotten very short shrift.

Actually, Don Wellman went into my question quite deeply. I'm not sure if his message was posted to the list or not, because I only got one copy, directly from him and not the list. Don, however, says he got his list copy and that I can go ahead and post my reply to his post:

Don, I perceived in your post a whiff of sophistry and in re-reading mine a blast of loose diction.

you wrote

> I am challenging the notion that there is an indirect understanding.
> Nada Gordon wrote, "Is there anything we understand in itself and not by any > *analogy whatsoever? Would that be enlightenment?" More problematical* > for me than the meaning of "understand" is the meaning of "anything."
>
> There seems to be a mechanistic notion of the relation between words and > things here...that is if "anything" refers to discourse.

No, I didn't mean for "anything" to refer to discourse -- but rather the world which we mediate or construct (depending on your metaphor) indirectly via discourse.

The metaphor I'm picturing is a giant web of likenesses and differences -- that's not original is it -- Saussure? Perception or apprehension may be direct, but what the mind does immediately afterwards (and sometimes before, in acts of prediction, anticipation and prejudice) is to place the perception somewhere in that web in order to try to "understand" Where did you find the mechanistic notion of the relation between words and things? I hope I don't think that way -- it sounds so rigid, not to mention unfashionable.

> When I drink
> wine, I do not experience it by analogy.

No, but the first time you drank wine, you probably had to go through the (maybe instantaneous) process of connecting drinkable liquids (water, grape juice--similes) to the wine that was before you to ensure it was not in fact gasoline or some other non-drinkable liquid. In time you learned to create distinctions about wines, Gallo being in big jugs and working class, etc.; you learned that wine was a soPHISticated EuropEan thing to drink; that white is for seafood

Yes, these are associations, maybe not analogies. Or some are analogies and some are distinctions and most are associations -- but they are all mediations of experience.

When I read Nada's sentence, I >hear a desire for immedicacy--that seems to float off her words and does >not require mental acrobatics on my part to understand.

Do I feel a desire for immediacy? Maybe. A kind of "cut the bullshit" impatience with my mind. But I don't feel some poignant heavy longing or anything like that. I am curious about this immediacy thing but I'm not sure it's humanly possible -- although "enlightened" people claim to perceive everything (that web) in a sudden flash of connectedness and present-ness. I also seem to remember a philosopher (who was it? help me here) talking about a state of mind called EPOCHE in which we experience something, if only for a moment, without any preconceptions, we see a bird and don't call it a BIRD or a SPARROW, we observe the movement, the feathers, the shape of the head, the sharp little beak,but the brain doesn't rush to file it in a nest of preconceptions and memories and experiences and classifications in order to understand it.

I'm not sure what you meant about mental acrobatics but I suspect you may be insulting me. Doesn't understanding anything require mental acrobatics? Even unwilled and unconscious? Or do we just grok by sudden immediate grasping?

That is my >impression and it may be rationally indefensible. I am trying to say >that the thing in itself is more likely to be a feeling rather than a >brick in the road. I suppose if the brick in the road gave me a feeling >that would be enlightenment (a religous epipnay).

If the brick in the road gave you a feeling it would make you a lyrical poet. If the thing in itself is a feeling rather than a brick in the road what would we build our houses with? (It's all right for impressions to be rationally indefensible. I like that.)

> When I analyze Nada's statement, I load it with irony. I have no sense that this irony is intentional or the thing she wants to communicate,

Irony has a bunch of meanings. One is pretended naivete (Socratic irony) that intends to lure something out of an interlocutor. Another is a statement that actually means the opposite or something quite different from what it literally states.

Which irony did you load my statement with?

When I analyze my motives, I find there was some of both kinds of irony there.

> but my mind now buzzes with associations between Kant, Enlightenment era philosopy,

I didn't mean that kind of enlightenment, the age of reason kind. I live in the "far east" and I am not particularly rational. The logos gives me the willies.

the Age of Reason, the thing in itself, etc. None of what I >am doing now is by analagy; it is by association. I don't feel my mind >switching off as it follows its indirections.

OK I concede that what I meant was sometimes "by association" and sometimes "by analogy." (Sometimes by metonymy and sometimes by metaphor -- but (almost?) never by itself -- "never ever jam today")

> What is politically or socially interesting to me about metaphor and analogy is the way they their use can direct some one's thoughts, help

> some one see. A bad simile is a wonderful attack on reason--a refusal to allow the irrational to become rational, wonderfully irreveerent with respect to a too precious sense of how language is supposed to work. My sense of that irreverence is direct. I like it.

YES YES YES! That was the real point of my post and not those afterthought questions I tacked on at the end.

> I wrote earlier that a "grammar of metonymic overlays is that of the Canto's..." --by this I meant no more than the major structural device in the Cantos is the overlay of image on image, of phrase on phrase, passage on passage. Pound himself uses the word super-position to describe his method of composition in his "Vorticism" where he also attachs both symbolism and synechdoce, of I remember. From this I derive the notion that it is the overlay of one field of images (or allusions) on another that creates structural metaphors or what he calls the "forma"

This sounds like another version of the web? -- you see I am trying really hard here to understand what you're talking about by means of analogy. All this you're building is a structural metaphor too.

in his essay "Medievalism."--near the end of the Cantos, he >likens each overlay to the facets of a crystal--the point seems to be a >centered overlay of transparent forms--something he experienced >"englightenment"--only intermittantly--politically, as differences >become drained of their particular importance he becomes more >totalitarian. By contrast, deleuze and Guattari, as their plateaus slide >over one another, they produce differences.

This sounds a little like living on the San Andreas fault (another analogy, sorry, I'm getting lost in all these models -- my plateaus are slippery -- oo).

> To my understanding, this is one of the crucial differences between modernism and postmodernism. The structural metaphors, metaphors of process, in modernism as represented by the Cantos are mraked by both reverence and quasi-scientific notionas of rationalism. Pound, again in "Vorticism" calls his method more like calculus than algebra, hence his denegration of easy connections between meaning and figures of speech like synechdoche.Still it seems to me that metaphor blossoms in ways that transcend or thread or cause energy to run through the planes of his composition. We see the rose in the steel dust. Christine Brooke Rose is much better on this than I am ...

OK, if metaphors blossom or thread than they are either metaphor 1: part of an interdependent garden or ecology of meanings metaphor 2: strings on a web (a sort of macrame world)

> I for one can not see such roses or vortices as directly as he did--as he hoped--they do not exist objectively for me.

Roses don't exist objectively for you? (How) do they exist? Or what does that mean, "objectively"?

The forma does not >constrain my indirection and flight of association and I prize instead >that flight--that becomes my direct experience,

So you're positing an alogical equivalence! INDIRECTION = DIRECTNESS. I love it!

one of decentered >flight, one of play ...
>
>His enlightenment becomes my fake simile? ... I am getting flakey now, >having reached the limits of my ability to maintain a faced of >coherence.

Did you intend face or facet? Facet goes with your earlier metaphor but it's faces that are maintained, or "saved".

The most important thing that I wanted to say is that even >direction is a form of immediate thought ... I don't now what >non-immediate thought is unless a deja vue slaps me in the face.
>

Hmm, that's funny. I would say that what's so eerie about deja vu experiences is their immediacy or anyway their sudden demand for recognition -- you think, "I know this, I know this sequence as a whole already."

Don, your post is like a carousel of horned philosophers grabbing at imitation seafood in the midnight. I mean that as a kind of steel rose in the vortex.

Yoroshiku,

Nada

↑ Index

652. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Nada Gordon wrote:
>
> Joe Safdie wrote:

>
> ><snip>

> Don, I perceived in your post a whiff of sophistry and in re-reading mine a > blast of loose diction.
>
> you wrote
>
> >When I drink
> >wine, I do not experience it by analogy.
>
DZ: The first time I drank wine, I got stupid and puked. The stupid part, I think, derived from analogy to other sober moments of stupidity which I'd experienced--directly and vicariously--before; the puking represented an act of intelligence. As my oenological sophistication matured, I generally ceased puking and a modicum of wit (lunatic at first, admittedly, then gradually drier... sec!) displaced torrential boorishness--at least in my own rather hazy memory. I attribute this recapitulation of phylogeny to the kindness of the increasingly bright and often alcoholic crowd who put up with me. In other words, I developed not only a tolerance for the grape, but a respectful affinity for it, by way of analogizing my behavior under its influence with that of my peers. I like to drink champagne; how 'bout you?

> When I read Nada's sentence, I > hear a desire for immedicacy--that seems to float off her words and does not require mental acrobatics on my part to understand.
>
> Do I feel a desire for immediacy? Maybe. A kind of "cut the bullshit" impatience with my mind. But I don't feel some poignant heavy longing or anything like that. I am curious about this immediacy thing but I'm not sure it's humanly possible -- although "enlightened" people claim to perceive everything (that web) in a sudden flash of connectedness and present-ness. I also seem to remember a philosopher (who was it? help me here) talking about a state of mind called EPOCHE in which we experience something, if only for a moment, without any preconceptions, we see a bird and don't call it a BIRD or a SPARROW, we observe the movement, the feathers, the shape of the head, the sharp little beak,but the brain doesn't rush to file it in a nest of preconceptions and memories and experiences and classifications in order to understand it.

DZ: Edmund Husserl.
>
>
I am trying to say > >that the thing in itself is more likely to be a feeling rather than a > >brick in the road. I suppose if the brick in the road gave me a feeling > >that would be enlightenment (a religous epiphany).

>
> If the brick in the road gave you a feeling it would make you a lyrical poet.
> If the thing in itself is a feeling rather than a brick in the road what > would we build our houses with?
> (It's all right for impressions to be rationally indefensible. I like that.)
>
DZ: Let him who is without mortar lay the first brick.
> >
> >When I analyze Nada's statement, I load it with irony. I have no sense > >that this irony is intentional or the thing she wants to communicate,
>
> Irony has a bunch of meanings. One is pretended naivete (Socratic irony) > that intends to lure something out of an interlocutor. Another is a > statement that actually means the opposite or something quite different > from what it literally states.
>
> Which irony did you load my statement with?
>
> When I analyze my motives, I find there was some of both kinds of irony there.

DZ: Let him who is without guilt cast the first stone.
>
> ><snip>

DZ: Forgive my intrusion into this marvellous discussion. Flags need wind, & I've offered a puff or two.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

653. morpheal
Re: Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

>Tom's query re Adonis --, here the last chapter, of a longish Adonis essay on >Arab poetics & involving metaphor. The modern poets he speaks of are those of >the Abassid period, i.e. Abu Tamman, Ibn al-Mu'tazz, Abu Nuwas & Co., inventing > urban modern poetics some 800 to 1000 years before Baudelaire & co. were on >the euro-scene. This is an insta-translation, as I type, so, please excuse >mistapes...Pierre

> ADONIS -- ChapterXIV of "THE FIXED AND THE MOBILE; TRADIITON AND INNOVATION IN ARAB CULTURE"

>During pre-islamic times, poetry imitated man who, in turn, imitated poetry. .....And >man thus saw himself in his own mirror. Poetry spoke life; life spoke poetry.
> After the advent of Islam, poetry became but a simple part of a larger whole - >the islamic vision of the world. While poetic content submitted itself to >religious power, form remained attached to the pre-islamic language.
> It's only with the beginning of the Omeyyad period that poetry started to >distance itself from religion. Islam by then had become a simple external >social and political frame. But the real poetic revolution took place in the >Abassid era.

This is very odd, and probably very misleading.

1). Arab culture became Islamic culture. That's it, pure and simple. Even its deviances occur very rigidly within an Islamic framework. I know of no exceptions to that fact.

2). Poetry within that socio-cultural contextual situatedness, subsequent to the writing of the Koran, believed to be by Mohammed, whom the Islamic believers refer to as a prophet, is strictly limited to rhyming poetry of a very specific kind. In fact the kind that is used by a suitor seeking marriage, and written by the suitor to a woman. As polite as such verse usually is, even nowadays, it is considered very baudy and "off colour" at the very best. The interesting fact is that, according to the rules, it MUST rhyme, though there are very specific and complicted limits as to content as well as the restriction to rhyming verse.

3). Mohammed, the reputed author of the Koran, was reputedly a poet, and along with other poets, is said to have been in contest. Such contests were traditional, at the black rock at Mecca, in pre-Islamic times. Since then such contests have ended. Only the Koran is recited there, as far as I know, and never any other poetry. The poetry contests ended when the Islamic era began. (The story of Mohammed reputedly having had the verses of the Koran dictated to him, in a cave, need not be repeated here.)

4). There is Sufi poetry, but Sufi poetry is quite a different matter. As I tend to understand that, the Sufi's claim exception as to methods, even though they have adopted Islamic beliefs to which their methods supposedly lead others who are reputedly unable to follow the more direct path prescribed by the Koran. So Sufi poetry has its unusual quirks and offers various fascinations and spiritual hooks. Not the only hooks in the tradition, but certainly hooks meant to urge conversion to belief in essentially the same ideas as espoused by the Arab mainstream.

5). Within Islamic culture, it appears, sociologically, that the arrangement is highly hierarchical and stratified. The desert Arabs are the highest level, then the other groups. Pakistanis tend to be regarded as among the lowest. The Persians as somewhere below the desert Arabs. Of course there is internal conflict, but nevertheless there does tend to be a spiritual class structure of sorts, even if loosely maintained. This has a lot to do with the factof language. The Koran is properly known only in its ancient Kufic Arabic form, not even in modern Arabic.

The other groups rarely know modern Arabic, let alone ancient Arabic. In fact many Arabs cannot read the Koran in its orignal form. Poetry, of spurious kinds, though keeping loosely within the Islamic themes and somewhat consistent with Islamic beliefs, tends to be more prevalent in other cultures other than that of the desert Arabs. On the other hand, as in Iran, in the spirit of spiritual competitions, with the desert Arabs, which is a very important concept within Islamic tradition, there is tendency towards very rigid totalistic purging of such strains of poetics and more than a hard line urging towards purity where the only poetry is the Koran and certainly to them the only acceptable poetry.

So, in fact, there is less and less, sanctioned poetry within Islamic culture, but more and more stress upon the Koran as essentially the last _proper_ instance of poetry within their culture. In fact there is an Islamic belief, often put into practice, that anything referring esplicitly to the Koran's contents that is not the Koran, particularly if it includes Arabic language, must be burned as an abomination.

So I really do have difficulty understanding what that article is about. Sure isn't about anything on this planet.....

Morpheal

↑ Index

654. david bromige
shameful bowering promo
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Listpersons who may recall the name "George Bowering" will now be able to examine at length several shameful episodes purportedly from his life by going to http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html

There one can find the novel _Piccolo Mondo_ , online in all of its 25 chapters.This book, which concerns itself with campus life in 1961 in Vancouver, was authored by GB together with wife Angela B and bosom-buddy Mike Matthews. Because I was also at UBC then, and knew not enough to avoid GB, I was a friend of Angela and Mike as well. Due no doubt to this friendship, these 3 are circulating a rumor that I too had a hand in writing this collocation of disgraceful episodes. If I did, so what? It was only to help out an old buddy or 3. Back in 1961, I helped them out of several bars a week. There are a few bugs in the text, but the fetish object formerly known as "a book" will be available within weeks, bug-free. When recoiling at the listed price of said object, remember that CAN$28 is only about US$18 .

And keep in mind that Bowering Manor is mortgaged up the wazoo to cover GB's gambling debts.

Shameful Promo over, dutifully yrs, db3.

↑ Index

655. Don Wellman
Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality
Thu 19 Mar 1998

> Nada Gordon wrote:
>
> I also seem to remember a philosopher (who was it? help me here) talking about a state of mind called EPOCHE in which we experience something, if only for a moment, without any preconceptions, we see a bird and don't call it a BIRD or a SPARROW, we observe the movement, the feathers, the shape of the head, the sharp little beak,but the brain doesn't rush to file it in a nest of preconceptions and memories and experiences and classifications in order to understand it.
>
> DZ: Edmund Husserl.

Thanks Dan. I should have suspected phenomenology at play here. Husserl is getting at what I meant by both the brick and the wine that I envoked. I guess I took to wine more immediately than some.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

656. Don Wellman
[Fwd: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality]
Thu 19 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

My reply to Nada on this thread is attached, I hope.

Don Wellman

Date: Thu, 19 Mar 1998 10:30:38 -0500
From: Don Wellman <[redacted]>
To: Nada Gordon <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality
References: <v01510110b1365527c66b@[203.216.8.222]>

Dear Nada, very thoughtful, thought provoking, and engaging reply. There seem to be some misunderstandings on the mechanical/instrumental level. I sent my post to the list and invoked your earlier post as well as some others as I wove my thoughts--that is why I tangled your first meaning of enlightenment with my reservations concerning rationalism.

I know I sent my post to the list because I received a copy of it when I next downloaded from the list. I suggest that you post the message that you sent me to the list now.

I understand what you mean by 'epoche' and wish very much that I knew the source, but I don't. I also think that I understand what is generally meant by "direct apprehension." Usually --it means direct apprehension of the abstract--that cosmic rose or whatever. I see real roses very well. I do not always see patterned cosmic forces. When I see a brick in the road that speaks to me it is through color and texture--not with a voice, not as a "a jar on a hill in Tennessee." It might be a genetic quirk in my mental composition, but I tend to insist on the material as though it already had a surplus of abstract/spiritual meaning. I like Deleuze and Guattari, because there is a matter not only of slipping, but also the pace and acceleration in the rate of flow. I am opposing Pound (what I take to be the modern stance that "time is the enemy") and situating perception in time. Deja vue is stunning because it is a palpable fold in time.

"Don, I perceived in your message a whiff of sophistry and in re-reading mine a blast of loose diction."

My earlier post was very sophistical wasn't it? You are right I confused the motive to explain with the motive to taunt. I did not mean to personalize my response in the least bit though. I did pick at your loose diction precisely because of the doors that it opened in my mind and was pretty loose in turn with my own diction.

Where did you find the mechanistic notion of the relation between words and things? I hope I don't think that way -- it sounds so rigid, not to mention unfashionable.

My reference is to Bishop Pratt? to those philosophers in Gulliver's Travels who carry packs of things with which to discourse--the thread here is part of my challenge to the Enlightenment Era rationalism. By contrast I took your

"anything" to be an essentially empty marker (that's Roland Barth's I think) and just rushed in ... I should have thanked you?

the first time you drank wine, you probably had to go through the (maybe instantaneous) process of connecting drinkable liquids (water, grape juice--similes) to the wine that was before you to ensure it was not in fact gasoline or some other non-drinkable liquid. In time you learned to create distinctions about wines, Gallo being in big jugs and working class, etc.; you learned that wine was a soPHISticated EuropEan thing to drink;

that white is for seafood

I am not one to contest the notion that even breathing is learned behavior--but I do contest the notion that my pleasure in wine is semantically coded. Although everything you imply here is probably true in some sense; it is not true of "my pleasure" and if I become aware of any of this knowledge (maybe by choosing an Entre deux mers for mussels), it, it probably detracts from "my pleasure"--even the now self-conscious knowledge that I have made a sophisticated choice of a dry white to go with or cook the the mussels in--puts something like reception at risk, not the pleasure of the wine itself--something, a pleasure, I think I can relate to directly, even though my ego has now gotten in the way ...

I'm not sure what you meant about mental acrobatics

what I meant was that I directly apprehended your desire to cut the bullshit--even as I larded my own discourse with sophistical acrobatics. I suppose I had hoped that some one would get a direct sense that I was clowning--or did I desire to see my self caught in the web of my own rope tricks and threads. Maybe there is no third term for me for the way my mind works. I take directly, give back indirectly, suppressing the common denominator. I am much more fascinated by ego issues than is probably fashionable on this list. For me "feelings" are matters of reception and of empathy and of insights when there is a matching of desires. By "ego issues" I do not mean "egotism"--I generally see no point in subtracting myself from where I am standing--that gets back to the directness/indirectness thread. I am arguing for a direct apprehension of where I am standing (or of how I pass through my local environment) without elevating myself to some self above the self and thereby directly perceiving the otherwise only indirectly perceptible other. This is a negation of the Jungian notion of self/other ...individuation. probably an acrobatics of the soul that I called "mental" above?

Irony has a bunch of meanings. One is pretended naivete (Socratic irony) that intends to lure something out of an interlocutor. Another is a statement that actually means the opposite or something quite different from what it literally states.

Which irony did you load my statement with?

Unfortunately I loaded your statement with Socratic irony. I received a "D" in Brit lit ages ago for my failure to appreciate "irony."

With reference to what I wrote about Pound and Deleuze and Guattari, you wrote:

This sounds a little like living on the San Andreas fault (another analogy, sorry, I'm getting lost in all these models -- my plateaus are slippery --oo)

If you live there, you live there? That is why I put my emphasis here--if not in my first post-- on the palpable rate of flow. If the ground isn't sliding out from under your feet why worry? Be happy! It it is scurry. Possibly not a very pragmatic response on my part, but I have these sense that our cultural constructs conspire to adapt us to living with fear, uncertainty, distraction ... My point: there is both a mindscape and a physical terrain to adapt to. The easy answer is to adapt to the physical environment. We need to talk with one another about the anxiety that makes it difficult to do this (however produced, however maintained, and used to keep us happy consumers). Are we hurtling down an abyss or shrugging our shoulders? Why are we standing still? I am from the east and I am imagining that you and I are talking about the pros and cons of living on the San Andreas fault. I have not experienced the trauma of an earthquake so I depend on you for that information if you have it.

> His enlightenment becomes my fake simile? ... I am getting flakey now, >having reached the limits of my ability to maintain a faced of coherence.

Did you intend face or facet? Facet goes with your earlier metaphor but it's faces that are maintained, or "saved".

I have puzzled myself over how to code this typos. I meant "face"--but when I re read it, I wished I had developed a "face off" analogy--as in hockey, my team against those with COHERENCE blazoned on their jerseys, sounds like bad Disney movie, now. In 1982, I edited an anthology of post-modern poetry and poetics called "Coherence."

I wanted to conclude my first post by saying that even "indirection is a form of direct thought" and I think you understood that. I was thinking of William James who said that even a thunderclap does not interrupt the the stream of thought"--it may change its direction though. I get lost in my own channels so easily.

... concluding then on an appreciative and unresolved note.

Don Wellman

<HTML> Dear Nada, very thoughtful, thought provoking, and engaging reply. There seem to be some misunderstandings on the mechanical/instrumental level. I sent my post to the list and invoked your earlier post as well as some others as I wove my thoughts--that is why I tangled your first meaning of enlightenment with my reservations concerning rationalism.

<P>I know I sent my post to the list because I received a copy of it when I next downloaded from the list. I suggest that you post the message that you sent me to the list now.

<P>I understand what you mean by 'epoche' and wish very much that I knew the source, but I don't. I also think that I understand what is generally meant by "direct apprehension." Usually --it means direct apprehension of the abstract--that cosmic rose or whatever. I see real roses very well. I do not always see patterned cosmic forces. When I see a brick in the road that speaks to me it is through color and texture--not with a voice, not as a "a jar on a hill in Tennessee." It might be a genetic quirk in my mental composition, but I tend to insist on the material as though it already had a surplus of abstract/spiritual meaning. I like Deleuze and Guattari, because there is a matter not only of slipping, but also the pace and acceleration in the rate of flow. I am opposing Pound (what I take to be the modern stance that "time is the enemy") and situating perception in time. Deja vue is stunning because it is a palpable fold in time.

<P>"<I>Don, I perceived in your message a whiff of sophistry and in re-reading</I>
<I>mine a blast of loose diction.</I>"

<P>My earlier post was very sophistical wasn't it? You are right I confused the motive to explain with the motive to taunt. I did not mean to personalize my response in the least bit though. I did pick at your loose diction precisely because of the doors that it opened in my mind and was pretty loose in turn with my own diction.

<P><I>Where did you find the mechanistic notion of the relation between words and things?</I>
<I>I hope I don't think that way -- it sounds so rigid, not to mention unfashionable.</I><I></I>

<P>My reference is to Bishop Pratt? to those philosophers in <U>Gulliver's Travels</U> who carry packs of things with which to discourse--the thread here is part of my challenge to the Enlightenment Era rationalism. By contrast I took your "anything" to be an essentially empty marker (that's Roland Barth's I think) and just rushed in ... I should have thanked you?

<P><I>the first time you drank wine, you probably had to go through the</I>
<I>(maybe instantaneous) process of connecting drinkable liquids (water, grape</I>

<I>juice--similes) to the wine that was before you to ensure it was not in</I>

<I>fact gasoline or some other non-drinkable liquid. In time you learned to</I>

<I>create distinctions about wines, Gallo being in big jugs and working class,</I>

<I>etc.; you learned that wine was a soPHISticated EuropEan thing to drink;</I>

<I>that white is for seafood</I><I></I>

<P>I am not one to contest the notion that even breathing is learned behavior--but I do contest the notion that my pleasure in wine is semantically coded. Although everything you imply here is probably true in some sense; it is not true of "my pleasure" and if I become aware of any of this knowledge (maybe by choosing an <I>Entre deux mers</I> for mussels), it, it probably detracts from "my pleasure"--even the now self-conscious knowledge that I have made a sophisticated choice of a dry white to go with or cook the the mussels in--puts something like reception at risk, not the pleasure of the wine itself--something, a pleasure, I think I can relate to directly, even though my ego has now gotten in the way ...

<P><I>I'm not sure what you meant about mental acrobatics</I><I></I>

<P>what I meant was that I directly apprehended your desire to cut the bullshit--even as I larded my own discourse with sophistical acrobatics. I suppose I had hoped that some one would get a direct sense that I was clowning--or did I desire to see my self caught in the web of my own rope tricks and threads. Maybe there is no third term for me for the way my mind works. I take directly, give back indirectly, suppressing the common denominator. I am much more fascinated by ego issues than is probably fashionable on this list. For me "feelings" are matters of reception and of empathy and of insights when there is a matching of desires. By "ego issues" I do not mean "egotism"--I generally see no point in subtracting myself from where I am standing--that gets back to the directness/indirectness thread. I am arguing for a direct apprehension of where I am standing (or of how I pass through my local environment) without elevating myself to some self above the self and thereby directly perceiving the otherwise only indirectly perceptible other. This is a negation of the Jungian notion of self/other ...individuation. probably an acrobatics of the soul that I called "mental" above?

<P><I>Irony has a bunch of meanings. One is pretended naivete (Socratic irony)</I>
<I>that intends to lure something out of an interlocutor. Another is a</I>
<I>statement that actually means the opposite or something quite different</I>

<I>from what it literally states.</I><I></I>

<P><I>Which irony did you load my statement with?</I><I></I>

<P>Unfortunately I loaded your statement with Socratic irony. I received a "D" in Brit lit ages ago for my failure to appreciate "irony."

<P>With reference to what I wrote about Pound and Deleuze and Guattari, you wrote:

<P><I>This sounds a little like living on the San Andreas fault (another analogy,</I>
<I>sorry, I'm getting lost in all these models -- my plateaus are slippery --oo)</I><I></I>

<P>If you live there, you live there? That is why I put my emphasis here--if not in my first post-- on the palpable rate of flow. If the ground isn't sliding out from under your feet why worry? Be happy! It it is scurry. Possibly not a very pragmatic response on my part, but I have these sense that our cultural constructs conspire to adapt us to living with fear, uncertainty, distraction ... My point: there is both a mindscape and a physical terrain to adapt to. The easy answer is to adapt to the physical environment. We need to talk with one another about the anxiety that makes it difficult to do this (however produced, however maintained, and used to keep us happy consumers). Are we hurtling down an abyss or shrugging our shoulders? Why are we standing still? I am from the east and I am imagining that you and I are talking about the pros and cons of living on the San Andreas fault. I have not experienced the trauma of an earthquake so I depend on you for that information if you have it.

<P><I>>His enlightenment becomes my fake simile? ... I am getting flakey now,</I>
<I>>having reached the limits of my ability to maintain a faced of coherence.</I><I></I>

<P><I>Did you intend face or facet? Facet goes with your earlier metaphor but</I>

<I>it's faces that are maintained, or "saved".</I><I></I>

<P>I have puzzled myself over how to code this typos. I meant "face"--but when I re read it, I wished I had developed a "face off" analogy--as in hockey, my team against those with COHERENCE blazoned on their jerseys, sounds like bad Disney movie, now. In 1982, I edited an anthology of post-modern poetry and poetics called "Coherence."

<P>I wanted to conclude my first post by saying that even "indirection is a form of direct thought" and I think you understood that. I was thinking of William James who said that even a thunderclap does not interrupt the the stream of thought"--it may change its direction though. I get lost in my own channels so easily.

<P>... concluding then on an appreciative and unresolved note.

<P>Don Wellman

 </HTML>

----------21D3D5FD83239013EB0D654A--

----------307B382D0E6CE5C250AD8826--

↑ Index

657. morpheal
Re: render into scissors
Thu 19 Mar 1998

> 60 messiahs? someone said.

Mass production. (Pardon the pun.)

> *Remember, the idea of "messiah" had nothing (zero, zilch) to do with a divine being (and only metaphorically to do with the saving of souls) before the romanifying of Judaic ideas into Xtianity.*

Exactly.

> T'were the Romans who had human gods, gods with sons (and daughters), humans impregnated by divine beings, etc (well... there is a reference to gods lying with women in Genesis, I believe, to create the race of "Giants"). And foisted on my mojo such notions as virgin birth.

Fact is that all kings were divine, as in divine kingship. People tended to understand things much more literally than they do now. (Odd word, literally, to use in that context as there was no question of literal as hardly anyone could read and write until very recently.) Divine kingship really was the divinity of the king. The king was 'od. Very odd, compared to the people. He even dressed very 'od. He talked 'od. He behaved 'odly.

On a more serious note Frazer's _Golden Bough_ is sufficient as an introduction to that subject, and offers a paradigm applicable to most, if not all, ancient and not so ancient cultures. He covers the fusion of traditions quite nicely, within European culture, and many of their various manifestations.

So when a king impregnated a non noble woman, obviously she had become pregnant by means of immaculate conception. That was nothing unusual in the ancient world. (Now we are taking it too in a too literal manner and fail to see this.) If she had become pregnant by means of someone of lower rank, her husband would have had reason for complaint and terrible consequences would have befallen her. She would have become outcast at best, being sent away, or stoned to death at worst. Since it was the lord, it is acceptable. We might easily imagine some telling fibs about the lord paying them a visit. However, since kings could have anything they chose to have, complaints were uncommon and the women were forgiven by their husbands as they had no say in the matter themselves and neither did their husbands. Neither could refuse to do the lord's bidding. Their command was from the lord, and if anything issued from the liaison then it was the work of the lord, and not of any man, making it quite acceptable. Seems 'od but it was an epidemic situation, if a woman was at all attractive enough to be noticed by the lord.

Such events were euphemistically, poetically in fact, referred to, and no woman would ever dare say "the king came today and banged me up". That would have been completely unheard of. Instead she was blessed and immaculate, unstained in the eyes of her husband, and not in any way lacking in fidelity. The latter was essential so that women whom those of high rank found attractive and therefore took when the urge came to them, as a matter of their own undisputed privilege, would not be spurned subsequently and so that no social dissent and outcry against those privileged would be likely to happen. Kings, princes, and sometimes other members of the nobility such as dukes and barons commonly had such privileges. Even foreign lords, as some allusions in the grimoires to such demons readily attest. (Ah, you didn't know that either did you ? The grimoires on one level are mostly veiled references, even catalogues, of foreign political powers and their political relations. Some foreign lords were known for their prowess at immaculate conceptions. After all, no man was there, only a demon prince and there was issue from the womb nine months later. What could a husband do ? Visiting nobles also had certain privileges shared with the local lord.)

What is interesting is that such a common occurrence, has come down to us within a particular story, from ancient times, and been preserved as what is often included within poetic literature.

So who was the lord ? Herod is perhaps most likely. So we have a poem about the lord having a woman named Mary, and the lord having second thoughts about it later, as sometimes happened, because another potential heir might upset some succession plans, or create dangerous rivalries upsetting the established order. Any child who was a son of the lord, an immaculate conception, could gather a following simply by that fact, sharing in the divine kingship, and that could prove highly dangerous.

Unless we claim parthanogenesis. Not so likely.

> Some of you may have noticed that "first will be last" didn't actually happen. Yet, the world religion built on that Jewish idea (oppressed/exiled > idea -- it's not essentialistically Jewish as is obvious I hope) rules on.

> We live in Rome.

We live in the direct succession to Alexandria and Rome.

The ancient Egyption contribution, via ancient Greek culture, and Greek culture to Roman, cannot be underemphasized.

As for the first coming last, it is something to win over the people. A poetic phrase promising a future where the king will follow and the people lead. Of course it has become politically true in terms of democracy, at least in principle, if not always in fact.

Of course, a god was the first thing or being, according to most creation myths, and therefore the god will be last ? Perhaps saying only that whatever everything came from it will return to. The uncarved block of Taoism is the first and the last, from which all ventures forth and all ultimately returns in an undending cyclical haiku of a breath in and a breath out.

Of course "spiritual" (philosophical or religious) systems and how they are understood are integral to poetics. It is impossible to do poetics without wrestling with some such questions....in any tradition or across cultural lines.

Morpheal

↑ Index

658. Pierre Joris
Re: Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

Aldon -- me too I hope you're wrong -- Adonis, to me, was not only a fine poet & critic, but also something of a friend -- I haven't heard anything about an untimely departure -- tried to check a few websites & newspapers, but no info -- can you try to remember where you may have seen this notice? or check your info? that wld be much appreciated -- Pierre

Aldon Nielsen wrote:

> I hope I'm wrong, but I think I rmember having recently read a notice of the death of this fine poet & critic --
>
> anybody know for sure?

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]

http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

659. Pierre Joris
Re: Adonis
Thu 19 Mar 1998

William Burmeister Prod wrote:

> On Mar 19, 12:48pm, Pierre Joris sent:
> Subject: Adonis
> To quickly pick up two threads, one old -- the metaphor discussion --, one new -- > Tom's query re Adonis --, here the last chapter, of a longish Adonis essay on Arab > poetics & involving metaphor. The modern poets he speaks of are those of the Abassid period, i.e. Abu Tamman, Ibn al-Mu'tazz, Abu Nuwas & Co., inventing urban > modern poetics some 800 to 1000 years before Baudelaire & co. were on the euro-scene. This is an insta-translation, as I type, so, please excuse mistapes...
> Pierre
>
> Can we see some examples to back this incredible claim?

Not such an incredible claim. Unhappily, though you may rather easily find some "examples" of Abu Nuwas' poetry it will be mainly lousy translations -- better to dig in deeper into Adonis' & other such writings (at least until we have or can make worthwhile translations of those poems) as it is an understanding of the cultural history of Arab poetics & history that make the point clearer. The claim sounds "incredible" only if you think that modernity is somehow the exclusive domain of euro-culture, i.e. something that happened first and only in 19C Europe & then in Americ and that could not have happened somewhere else in a totally different cultural situation a 1000 years ago.

> Pierre, I can't help > but think that what you have posted below maybe means something to you (a > kinship with) your manisfesto on a nomadic poetics. Is there any such meaning for ya?

Of course -- that is to say, my interest in Arab poetics connects in some ways with my Nomad Manifesto — though there my focus is more on pre-islamic poetics, i.e. those of the Arab nomad tribes, rather than on what Adonis is talking about in this piece, which is an Arab urban modernism that flowered in the Abassid period, and which he, I believe rightly, compares to a similar revolution in poetcis happening in europena modernism in the 19C. So it is also true that much of the Abassid poetics involved Sufi notions & practices, and that is indeed of interest for my nomadic thinking.

> ADONIS -- ChapterXIV of "THE FIXED AND THE MOBILE; TRADIITON AND INNOVATION
> IN
> ARAB CULTURE
> .
> .
> .
> As metaphor is the artistic form of thought, traditonalism rejected it just > >as it had rejected the doctrine of interpretation. For the traditionalist > >current, everything that's written in the Koran is literally true; God's language >cannot be metaphorical. What is called "metaphor" in the language of the Koran >thus represents a reality whose essence we are ignorant of. If poetry wants to >be religious, it has to abandon metaphor. Indeed, in the traditionalists' mind >metaphor is akin to a kind of "magic," consisting in substituting the false for > the true. But the poets, without worrying about it, keep on using metaphor, and poetry
>
> Now make that perhaps the rejection of metaphor by traditionalism's successor science & technology. Is metaphor the artistic form of thought (merely)? Does metaphor have a place in a world at large ruled by science (include pseudo science) and technology?

I would tend to agree with you -- science is full of metaphor -- but isn't it exactly when that fact goes unrecognized, i.e. when science & its worldview constructs get taken as _literal_ and not metaphoric, that we get a kind of scientistic fundamentalist not that different from the kind of religious fundamentalism Adonis is referring to?

Pierre

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202

tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
— La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
— Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

660. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: adorno's ashes
Thu 19 Mar 1998

---

morpheal wrote:
>
> > Adonis presents a rich and readable explanation of Arab poetics from > >orality to modernity, e.g., "Language... is not a tool for communicating > >a detached meaning. It is meaning itself because it is thought.
>
> The element of orality is still most prevalent. The tradition was oral > recitation, and remains a tradition of oral recitation. The ability to > remember, precisely, is highly prized and rewarded within the culture.
> That has not changed even a little since ancient times, but has in fact > become more emphatic since the Koran was reputedly received by Mohammed.
>
> So where is the orality to modernity ? It is in fact orality to orality.

morpheal wrote:
>
> >
DZ wrote: Adonis presents a rich and readable explanation of Arab poetics from orality to modernity, e.g., "Language... is not a tool for communicating a detached meaning. It is meaning itself because it is thought.
>
morpheal wrote: The element of orality is still most prevalent.
The
tradition was oral recitation, and remains a tradition of oral recitation. The ability to remember, precisely, is highly prized and rewarded within the culture. That has not changed even a little since ancient times, but has in fact become more emphatic since the Koran was reputedly received by Mohammed.

>
> So where is the orality to modernity ? It is in fact orality to orality.

DZ: True, though the original Koranic orality pretty quickly became written and inviolable (emphatic) after the prophet's death. Adonis does struggle with the paradox you mention in his final chapter--and not altogether successfully (i.e., not without some equivocation). He does, though, call for a freedom of thought which transcends mere stylistic experiment, and concludes that "The essence of this is that modernity should be a creative vision, or it will be no more than a fashion. Fashion grows old from the moment it is born, while creativity is age-less. Therefore not all modernity is creativity but creativity is eternally modern" (101-102). Here, he seems to historicize the (changing, linear?) principle of creativity as equivalent to the (unchanging, cyclic?) ideal of the umma at the time of the prophet. As he says earlier, "...the modern Arab poet lives in a state of 'double siege' imposed upon him by the culture of dependency on the one hand, and the culture based on a foetal relationship with the traditionalist past on the other" (81). What he proposes may serve as a way out of this impasse for him, but many may find that razor too sharp a path.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

661. Tom Vogler
[1]POETICS Digest - 18 Mar
Fri 20 Mar 1998

---

[1]POETICS Digest - 18 Mar 1998 to 19 Mar 3/19/98

Please note that my new email address is
[redacted]
Your message has been forwarded

↑ Index

662. J. Kuszai
quartermain query
Fri 20 Mar 1998

---

please back-snorkel me the following bleep shell:

current street residence info
for Meredith & Peter Quartermain

↑ Index

663. George Bowering
Re: shameful bromige bromo
Fri 20 Mar 1998

---

re:
> http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html

Bromige's contention that I had a hand in writing his vapid maunderings yclept a "novel" can only worsen relations between Vancouver and California in the endless battle for hegemony over Oregon. The novel in question (really, a bunch of bad jokes and pointless Cold War adventure) was largely written by Bromige, a notorious bibliomaniac and shaker of martinis.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

664. joanne molina
[Fwd: Ethics and Poetics Event at American University (fwd)]
Fri 20 Mar 1998

---

by carthage.american.edu (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id NAA04703;
Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:23:46 -0500 (EST)
by dresden.american.edu (8.8.5/8.8.5) id NAA77998;
Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:22:49 -0500
by dresden.american.edu (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id NAA59804;
Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:22:47 -0500
by www.CIRC.gwu.EDU (8.8.8/8.8.7) with ESMTP id NAA27888;
Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:16:14 -0500 (EST)
by gwis2.circ.gwu.edu (8.8.8/8.8.8) with SMTP id NAA27300;
Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:22:05 -0500 (EST)
Date: Mon, 16 Mar 1998 13:22:04 -0500 (EST)
From: Mark Wallace <[redacted]>
To: Undisclosed recipients: ;
Subject: Ethics and Poetics Event at American University (fwd)

For those of you who like critical work intermixed with poetry, the following one day free conference at American University should provide an excellent combination of poetry and contemporary critical perspectives. Don't pass up this remarkable one day gathering of many of the best poetic and critical minds in the D.C. area. This event will certainly be one of the most informative of the year. Here's the info

1998 Ethics and Poetics Conference at American University
Sponsored by the Philosophy Department at American University

THIS EVENT IS FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC!!

Please join us for a day of poetics and philosophy
Saturday, March 28th from 11am-4:40pm
American University
Gray Hall
Bentley Lounge

FOR MORE INFORMATION AND TO RSVP PLEASE CONTACT JOANNE MOLINA AT [redacted] or call [redacted]

The program is as follows:

11:00am-1:30pm

Opening Remarks: David Rodier

Patricia Huntington: "Semiotics and the Ethics of Asymmetrical Reciprocity: Young, Benhabib, and Kristeva."

Alan Levine: "Fiction as Political Theory: Chinua Achebe's Multicultural Take on Multiculturalism."

Marianne Noble: "Emily Dickinson and Kristeva"

Tom Mandel: "Ancestral Cave"

Heather Fuller: "Perhaps this is a Rescue Fantasy"

LUNCH SERVED

SESSION II 2-4:30

Jonathan Loesberg: "Kant's Indifference and Foucault's Aesthetics: An Historicist Sublime."

Peter Baker: "Writing the Gift"

Joan Retallack: "The Scarlet Aitch-- Some Notes on PoetHics."

Rod Smith: "The Boy Poems"

Beth Joselow: "Begin at Once"

This event includes poets/philosophers/theorists who are excited about the possibility of engaging in an interdisciplinary conversation. Please join us!!

↑ Index

665. Wolsak
Re: quartermain query
Fri 20 Mar 1998

J. Kuszai wrote:
>
> please back-snorkel me the following bleep shell:
>
> current street residence info
> for Meredith & Peter Quartermain

Joel,

846 Keefer Street
Vancouver, B.C.

phone [redacted]

Melissa Wolsak

↑ Index

666. Gwyn McVay
science & metaphor
Fri 20 Mar 1998

>>>Now make that perhaps the rejection of metaphor by traditionalism's successor science & technology. Is metaphor the artistic form of thought (merely)? Does metaphor have a place in a world at large ruled by science (include pseudoscience) and technology?

O goodness. I mean--take quarks--whose name famously comes from Finnegans Wake ("Three quarks for Mister Mark"), and whose different varieties are called up, down, top, bottom, charm, and strange, and which are said to have the qualities "color" and "flavor." (And now "Quark" is both a highly excellent page layout program and a character on Deep Space Nine.) Or the whole branching-tree metaphor in cladistic evolution. It semeth me metaphor is all over science.

Gwyn

↑ Index

667. Jordan Davis
greater than / less than / equal to
Fri 20 Mar 1998

I noticed that Tom Mandel suggested that language was something something interesting than ideas. Tom, as you can see my radio had some static in it. Could you repeat your language, or if you prefer, your ideas?

Signed,
Another old world

↑ Index

668. Henry Gould
Re: science & metaphor
Fri 20 Mar 1998

On Fri, 20 Mar 1998 09:25:55 -0500 Gwyn McVay said:
>
>O goodness. I mean--take quarks--whose name famously comes from Finnegans >Wake ("Three quarks for Mister Mark"), and whose different varieties are >called up, down, top, bottom, charm, and strange, and which are said to >have the qualities "color" and "flavor." (And now "Quark" is both a highly >excellent page layout program and a character on Deep Space Nine.) Or the >whole branching-tree metaphor in cladistic evolution. It semeth me >metaphor is all over science.

Maybe this idea of a divide between "artistic metaphorical thinking" and scientific (or direct, or realistic, or factual) non- or anti-metaphorical thinking -

maybe this IDEA of art vs. science - is really a METAPHOR - for a deeper divide (in our minds & in our culture) between forces and impulses TOWARD art and AWAY from art. A kind of replay of the Byzantine battle between iconophiliacs and iconoclasts. Played out very directly in the federal defunding of arts since the 80s. That art is a charismatic-absorptive-mirroring-illusory-gratifying phenomenon which evokes mixed feelings always - a dangerous, mongrel, illegitimate thing - a useless thing - so that poets who want to play this out in terms of metaphor's illusory idealistic traditionalist aestheticism, in favor of factuality's direct, honest, hardhitting political treatment of the thing, should maybe be aware of the double-edged nature of all this - "factism" becomes politically-correct "fascism" just as quickly as solipsissy aesthoidism does...

every word is full of the freeplaying sounds of about a dozen other words... try to put that on yo grid an freeze-fry it...

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

669. Mairead Byrne
Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality
Fri 20 Mar 1998

I'm still curious about the notion that some subjects generate metaphor and others supply it. Also about the possibility of the trucks of metaphor moving meaning between sites. Someone told me yesterday that Americans move on average about 17 times per lifetime. I could be in haiku-daze. Do metaphors generate movement in much the same way that Ryder trucks connect the differences between Lafayette, Indiana, say, and Lubbock, Texas. So it all comes down to the current state of the road.

↑ Index

670. Henry Gould
Re: biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

On Fri, 20 Mar 1998 09:55:01 -0600 Tom Mandel said:
>
>Yet, I can't get myself to let this go by:
>
>"I meant that Xtianity is a Biblical religion and the core of it, the >spiritual core of it, is Hebraic. - Henry G."
>
>To which my answer is simple: bullshit. The spiritual core of Christianity >is Roman pagan religion. You think the trinity-mystery is a "Hebraic" idea?
>No thanks. Btw, the term "Hebraic" is a hegemonic insult however >unconsciously placed.

Now this is getting fun. I'm not going to take recourse to "history", which on the list here would get boring & overlong. I'd rather respond with my own "illegitimate" story. I was brought up in the Episcopalian church. Singing the hymns, the whole bit. Lost interest in my teens. Regained interest in late teens, when I read the "2 testaments" through, front to back. You can toss the "bullshit" if you want to, Tom, but you wrong. As the elevator man said, "The Bible is my main book" - & that goes for the whole religion.
>

>Just as Rome used Greek ideas and any other ideas (immensely successfully!) >as a means to ideological/cultural domination, so it turned to Jewish ideas >and treated them similarly. In Xtianity, Judaism and scripture are >swallowed. That's not being "core."

If you want to make accusations of "borrowing" you could start with the Hebrews - they took it all from Egypt & Mesopotamia & made a very new blend.
>
>The very idea of "a Biblical religion" illustrates the point. That there is >a single "Bible" consisting of the Gospel (truth) and the "Old Testament" >is a "fact" only within a dominant, imperial, "religious" empire (the term >"religion" is a Roman term folks -- Jews do not have "a religion").
>
Yes, Christianity took the Hebrew Scriptures & twisted them into a shape full of menace, eventually, for the Jews themselves. This is the sick tragedy of it all and the reality that demands awareness, criticism, and change on the part of churches. But the same scriptures are the source of what is good about Christianity, too - the word, the demand for charity and justice, the message.
Hope, joy, love. It a big mess o'pottage, bro - Henry Gould

↑ Index

671. Pierre Joris
Re: science & metaphor
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Now make that perhaps the rejection of metaphor by traditionalism's successor science & technology. Is metaphor the artistic form of thought (merely)? Does metaphor have a place in a world at large ruled by science (include pseudoscience) and technology?
>
> O goodness. I mean--take quarks--whose name famously comes from Finnegans Wake ("Three quarks for Mister Mark"), and whose different varieties are called up, down, top, bottom, charm, and strange, and which are said to have the qualities "color" and "flavor." (And now "Quark" is both a highly excellent page layout program and a character on Deep Space Nine.)

Before which it had been the name of en excellent experimental science fiction magazine edited by Chip Delaney & Marylin Hacker. In German of course quark has always been soft cheese.

> Or the > whole branching-tree metaphor in cladistic evolution. It semeth me > metaphor is all over science.

>
> Gwyn

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

672. Tom Mandel
biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

I don't want to discuss this here, it is an imposition on a list for whom this will not be interesting, and anyway it's too divisive and positions are too set for a listserv to be a platform for making any progress on this kind of a subject.

Yet, I can't get myself to let this go by:

"I meant that Xtianity is a Biblical religion and the core of it, the spiritual core of it, is Hebraic. - Henry G."

To which my answer is simple: bullshit. The spiritual core of Christianity is Roman pagan religion. You think the trinity-mystery is a "Hebraic" idea? No thanks. Btw, the term "Hebraic" is a hegemonic insult however unconsciously placed.

Just as Rome used Greek ideas and any other ideas (immensely successfully!) as a means to ideological/cultural domination, so it turned to Jewish ideas and treated them similarly. In Xtianity, Judaism and scripture are swallowed. That's not being "core."

The very idea of "a Biblical religion" illustrates the point. That there is a single "Bible" consisting of the Gospel (truth) and the "Old Testament" is a "fact" only within a dominant, imperial, "religious" empire (the term "religion" is a Roman term folks -- Jews do not have "a religion").

I will speak no more on this subject on this list. Feel free to backchannel if absolutely necessary.

Tom

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

673. Tom Mandel
thanks Dan, Pierre, et. al.
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Thanks Dan and Pierre for comments and more that leave me eagerly looking forward to Adonis's book.

Dan's citation: "Language... is not a tool for communicating a detached meaning. It is meaning itself because it is thought. Indeed, it precedes thought and is succeeded by knowledge. This implies that the criterion of meaning was contained in language itself, and was defined by the rules of language" (82) is invaluable, and I suspect Pierre's insta-translation will be too. I've clipped it to read this weekend.

Thanks!

Tom

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

674. Don Wellman
Re: understanding/pomometametonymicalisexuality
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Metaphors generate roads (that's my view). For I.A. Richards metaphors are "vehicles"--that is Ryder Trucks. The contents of the truck is its tenor or meaning.

If the vehicle stands in for the tenor it is really a synecdoche isn't it? (container for thing contained).

In Richard's way of putting it, meaning is relatively stable. One of the things we have been trying to do on this list is destabilize all three elemenrs and put them in motion: the truck, the contents of the truck, and the road.

Metaphors deflect or impart motion (desiring in put)--but there is no guarantee that the roads or threads generated by a metaphor will connect Lafeyette with Lubbock. They might set up such a swaying in the truck that it tips over outside of Tulsa; the desires that the truck was carrying heating the ozone layer as they escape, and the sheell of the truck being appropriate for use as a taco stand.

Don Wellman

Mairead Byrne wrote:

> I'm still curious about the notion that some subjects generate metaphor and others supply it. Also about the possibility of the trucks of metaphor moving meaning between sites. Someone told me yesterday that Americans move on average about 17 times per lifetime. I could be in haiku-daze. Do metaphors generate movement in much the same way that Ryder trucks connect the differences between Lafayette, Indiana, say, and Lubbock, Texas. So it all comes down to the current state of the road.

↑ Index

675. henry gould
borrowings
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Actually, I think the Romans borrowed from the Jews what the Jews borrowed from ME - long time ago in the pluperfect futurepast. Called a "closed timelike curve" in physics. Get out yo frisbees, O my people! It's SPRINGY!

They didn't call Ezekiel a whizionary fer nothin! Or as Louis Armstrong put it :

Ezekiel saw the wheels of glory,
the great big wheels a turnin over - Ezekiel saw the wheels of glory - way in the middle of the air.

- see the final footnote in Mudlark Poster #10 (http://www.unf.edu/mudlark) for a more complete hermhenautical explodapropoeperdition of these "realities".

HG Wells was very well-informed, ol HG.

- HG

↑ Index

676. Douglas
Re: Adonis
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Adonis wrote me a letter last week, so
I presume he's well and alive, Aldon.

Douglas Messerli

Aldon Nielsen wrote:
>
> I hope I'm wrong, but I think I rmember having recently read a notice of > the death of this fine poet & critic --
>
> anybody know for sure?

↑ Index

677. William Burmeister Prod
Re: science & metaphor
Fri 20 Mar 1998

I'm glad Pierre and Henry understood what I meant rather than what I wrote (thank you). Instead of having a generous, outside perspective on the whole of science, 'specially wrt to its glorious heyday before hyperspecialization, when science worked itself nicely into (co-existed with) a pre-existing aesthetic of the imagination, the intent of my question was to probe for a way out from the inside of this unquestionable hegemony of technology, and the idea of science just "being there," intuited rather like history is now. This is really also an economic thing now ("don't take this personally, this is about business"). Pierre answered succinctly when he replied, "science is full of metaphor -- but isn't it exactly when that fact goes unrecognized, i.e. when science & its worldview constructs get taken as _literal_ and not metaphoric, that we get a kind of scientistic fundamentalist not that different from the kind of religious fundamentalism Adonis is referring to?" I agree with Henry too. This is not merely an issue: the notion of such a dichotomy is itself metaphor and the implications are there for hegemony in the extremes.

Gwyn's mention of "three quarks for Muster Mark" illustrates the liberal mindedness of scientists in the 60's and 70's to use such whimsical naming conventions (W/albeit western sources). Not to say that doesn't happen now, but there is an overall fear of being misunderstood, or cryptic in today's marketing science (Oedipal) mentality so perhaps that explains why they still use the SAME names. I think that the quark phrase comes from Lear or Carroll rather than Finnegan's Wake doesn't it?

William Burmeister

On Mar 20, 10:03am, Henry Gould wrote:
> Subject: Re: science & metaphor
> On Fri, 20 Mar 1998 09:25:55 -0500 Gwyn McVay said:
> >
> >O goodness. I mean--take quarks--whose name famously comes from Finnegans > >Wake ("Three quarks for Mister Mark"), and whose different varieties are > >called up, down, top, bottom, charm, and strange, and which are said to > >have the qualities "color" and "flavor." (And now "Quark" is both a highly > >excellent page layout program and a character on Deep Space Nine.) Or the > >whole branching-tree metaphor in cladistic evolution. It semeth me > >metaphor is all over science.
>
> Maybe this idea of a divide between "artistic metaphorical thinking" and > scientific (or direct, or realistic, or factual) non- or anti-metaphorical > thinking -
>
> maybe this IDEA of art vs. science - is really a METAPHOR -
>
> for a deeper divide (in our minds & in our culture) between forces and > impulses TOWARD art and AWAY from art. A kind of replay of the Byzantine > battle between iconophiliacs and iconoclasts. Played out very directly > in the federal de-funding of arts since the 80s. That art is a > charismatic-absorptive-mirroring-illusory-gratifying phenomenon which > evokes mixed feelings always - a dangerous, mongrel, illegitimate thing - > a useless thing -
>
> so that poets who want to play this out in terms of metaphor's illusory > idealistic traditionalist aestheticism, in favor of factuality's > direct, honest, hardhitting political treatment of the thing, should > maybe be aware of the double-edged nature of all this - "factism" > becomes politically-correct "fascism" just as quickly as solipsissy > aesthoidism does...
>
> every word is full of the freeplaying sounds of about a dozen other > words... try to put that on yo grid an freeze-fry it...
>
> - Henry Gould
>-- End of excerpt from Henry Gould

↑ Index

678. Michael J. Kelleher
Reading in Buffalo
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Sunday, March 22 at 2pm

just buffalo literary center presents:

Rosmarie Waldrop
&
Ben Friedlander

@
Hallwall's Contemporary Arts Center
2495 Main St.

Truly,
Mike

<HTML>
Sunday, March 22 at 2pm

<P><B><I>just buffalo</I></B> literary center presents:

<P>Rosmarie Waldrop

&

Ben Friedlander

<P>@

Hallwall's Contemporary Arts Center

2495 Main St.

<P>Truly,

Mike</HTML>

----------6BD4E92BAD02629AF7465A8C--

↑ Index

679. david bromige
GB : too far this time
Fri 20 Mar 1998

---

re : http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html

George Borrowing has gone too far this time. I dont like taking up list space for a personal matter, but since he has gone public, I must respond here. For a lifetime, since we played the national sport, hookey, together as boys in Oliver, B.C., I have bailed him out of innumerable scrapes--and this is the recompense I get : "vapid maunderings," "bad jokes." All I did was tighten a linguistic screw or two in a work that is largely his alone (with a little help from his two other cohorts). You know, corrected his spelling, changed each archaic "a lot" to "alot," made sure his participles weren't dangling, and helped him with the Future Vague and Imperfect (always his achille's heel). Back of all this lies the poor self-image he suffers from. This is why he is bad-mouthing a really neat piece of writing and projecting the flaws that he imagines, onto others--one other, namely me. (I notice he says nothing of the excellent passages by his other friend, Matthews, or by Angela, his own wife!)

George Burrowing, however, cannot escape so easily this time. Go to the htttp above & you'll find his name boldly inscribed on the Title Page. More telling, you'll find his prose-style throughout, easily identifiable to players & lurkers of this List alike. And who can doubt that the escapades within could only have happened to a youthful Beering? (Since they continue to happen to an aging Baring?)

I trust this will be the last time I have to trouble the List with rebuttals in this case. Let GB know that the age of duelling isnt over till I say so. As for Oregon, it has already been Californicated, too late for BC to Vanca-hoover it up. Outraged in Virtuality, db3.

↑ Index

680. henry gould
Re: GB : too far this time
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> I trust this will be the last time I have to trouble the List with rebuttals in this case. Let GB know that the age of duelling isnt over till I say so. As for Oregon, it has already been Californicated, too late for BC to Vanca-hoover it up. Outraged in Virtuality, db3.

why don't you just toss it in the Washington-machine? Heh heh.
that was funny, I think.
- Always, Baring-Gould

↑ Index

681. david bromige
George Washington-Machine
Fri 20 Mar 1998

In reply to Mr. S. Baring-Gould, Hymn-writer's, post : Funny he should allude to the state of Washington, as coincidentally an entire chapter (6 or 7, I think) is devoted to a visit by a UBC drama-group to present a play at UW Seattle. And the protagonists--principally, one "G"--are really put through the wringer there.

db3 (That's at http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html)

↑ Index

682. morpheal
Re: GB : too far this time
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> I trust this will be the last time I have to trouble the List with rebuttals in this case. Let GB know that the age of duelling isnt over till I say so. As for Oregon, it has already been Californicated, too late for BC to Vanca-hoover it up. Outraged in Virtuality, db3.
>
> why don't you just toss it in the Washington-machine? Heh heh. that was funny, I think.- Always, Baring-Gould

That reminds me of a quote that I particularly like, though it is a very dark bit of prose about poetics:

"In the end the artificial intelligentsia will win: people will have been reduced to machines - as Winston Smith was reduced to loving Big Brother - and there will be only one understanding of King Lear."

from "1984: A Collection of Essays" published in 1984

the author of the quote is a contributor to that intresting little volume, to which I have forgotten the other publication data....

author's name ?

Joseph Weizenbaum

Artificial Intelligence Laboratory
M.I.T.
Written in 1984, the anniversary of Orwell's classic.

Of course, as a footnote, I think Adonis would see one interpretation of the Koran as the ultimate evolution of Arab poetics, and quite acceptable as the outcome of the creative process they believe manifests conceptually and currently in gestation, if not maturing towards an Islamic totalism. I would think they too have achieved A.I. and are able to use the technology. In fact I am _intuitively_ absolutely certain that they have it.

Reminds me a little of the Soviet "megaloplasm", which was also a kind of A.I. loop machine technology resembling the many other kinds of what are sometimes loosely called "techno shamanism".

So it goes....."not with a bang, but a whimper..." T.S.E. as the last prophet.

Morpheal

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

683. William Burmeister Prod
Re: borrowings
Fri 20 Mar 1998

On Mar 20, 11:35am, henry gould wrote:
> Subject: borrowings
> Actually, I think the Romans borrowed from the Jews what the Jews borrowed > from ME - long time ago in the pluperfect futurepast.
>-- End of excerpt from henry gould

Who dat man? Gabriel!!!

↑ Index

684. Z. Baring-Gould
Re: George Washington-Machine
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> In reply to Mr. S. Baring-Gould, Hymn-writer's, post : Funny he should allude to the state of Washington, as coincidentally an entire chapter (6 or 7, I think) is devoted to a visit by a UBC drama-group to present a play at UW Seattle. And the protagonists--principally, one "G"--are really put through the wringer there. db3 (That's at http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html)

On behalf of my beloved brother Spanky, who is unfortunately momentarily (in a time-wiped sense) incommodious "at the moment", I want to thank Mr. - db3[?] - for alerting us to this possible electronical allusion [fictional, I hope] to his "dead ringer" experience. In the Masonic Temple of Boom, OR, when the last G became the first G and the borrower burrowed through a wormhole and emerged - drug-free - in Vancougar, BP [Black Panther, Canalda]. We'll be sure to look it up, together.

If Dante & Virgil traveled that path, why, so can I. God pointed the way. But did he get it all backwards - that remains the question, with a capital Q. I'm sure Beatrice knows. - Zelda Baring-Gould

↑ Index

685. LanceEli3
Re: biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

You think the trinity-mystery is a "Hebraic" idea?
>No thanks. Btw, the term "Hebraic" is a hegemonic insult however >unconsciously placed.

Sorry, I have to say something. Actually there are quite a few references in Jewish scriptures about the Trinity. For example, when God says "let's make man in my image," the Hebrew word actually means "our image" (plural). Unfortunately things such as this are often lost in translation. Its always good to research such things when studying religious scriptures.

↑ Index

686. William Burmeister Prod
Re: biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> Subject: Re: biblical...?
> On Fri, 20 Mar 1998 09:55:01 -0600 Tom Mandel said:
>
> Yet, I can't get myself to let this go by:
>
> "I meant that Xtianity is a Biblical religion and the core of it, the spiritual core of it, is Hebraic. - Henry G."
>
> To which my answer is simple: bullshit. The spiritual core of Christianity is Roman pagan religion. You think the trinity-mystery is a "Hebraic" idea? No thanks. Btw, the term "Hebraic" is a hegemonic insult however unconsciously placed.

With all due respect to Tom and others here (since this was noty directed at me per se), this is just unnecesary. But let's not throw the baby out with the bath water here by making statements such as, "The spiritual core of Xtianity is Roman Pagan religion." First because it just ain't true and ignores a wealth of OT prophecy, and hey, what about the reformation there. This ends up sounding like the most reductionalizing demagoguery, which isn't Tom M. (in light of his vasty knowledge in the area of Hebrew studies). Not to essentialize mine or anyone elses's beliefs here over yrs (Tom) either: you stay on yr trajectory and I'll stay on mine.

William Bvrmeister

↑ Index

687. Keston Sutherland
reading
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Rod Smith & Andrew Levy at the Zinc Bar this Sunday

All please come, fly in from out of town

90 W. Houston St./6:30 pm

↑ Index

688. daniel bouchard
zinc reading: come all ye faithful
Fri 20 Mar 1998

from the mighty Anselm B.:

> Rod Smith & Andrew Levy at the Zinc Bar this Sunday
>
> All please come, fly in from out of town
>
> 90 W. Houston St./6:30 pm

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

689. morpheal
Re: Adonis
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> Adonis wrote me a letter last week, so
> I presume he's well and alive, Aldon.

> Douglas Messerli

Is Adonis any adoptive relation to Salmon Rushdie ?

I wonder. <snicker>

↑ Index

690. David Kellogg
Re: biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

When did the Jesus Seminar hijack the Poetics List?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

>Sorry, I have to say something. Actually there are quite a few >references in Jewish scriptures about the Trinity. For example, when God >says "let's make man in my image," the Hebrew word actually means "our >image" (plural). Unfortunately things such as this are often lost in >translation. Its always good to research such things when studying >religious scriptures.
>
>

↑ Index

692. Maz881
Re: opposite
Fri 20 Mar 1998

Mark P: I believe it's fine to use the word anti-racist. I really asked a very simple question. What is the opposite of the word racist (if you don't use the anti-prefix or the alpha privative)? And more generally, I guess, what percentage of english words have "viable" opposites? And then do you trust words that don't have "viable" opposites? Sorry, those last questions are kind of kevin spacey. But the first one is simple.

You also wrote:
<<Thank heavens I at least understand the infield fly rule!!>>

This i take issue with tho. I don't think even the umpires understand this rule (eg it can be invoked in the outfield. eg it can be NOT invoked when an infielder catches a fly with runners on 1 & 2 or bags loaded with less than 2 outs if the ball is deemed to be not enough of a :pop: a line drive is an easy example of this. but in general, how do you know what's a pop & what's not?)

Bill Luoma

<<----------

Date: Thu, 19 Mar 1998 13:21:18 -0500
From: Mark Prejsnar <[redacted]> Subject: Re: opposite

I find this post completely baffling. I was talking about the Brooklyn Dodgers, as I recall...

"only opposite of the word racist"??? ...Huh?

The Dodgers who kept the team from carrying out a racist "job action" against Jackie Robinson were, I think, (for their time and place) anti-racist guys...

Right?

Your're too profound for me, Bill. Thank heavens I at least understand the in-field fly rule!!

Mark
@lanta>>

On Wed, 18 Mar 1998, Maz881 wrote:

> in an interesting post about the cia, mark P wrote:
>
> "anti-racist guys"
>
> is this the "only" opposite of the word racist?
>
> like for fascist couldn't you say anarchist or communist or democracy believer > in?
>
> for sexist, what?
>
> interested in these big words lately.
>
> Bill Luoma
>

↑ Index

693. Safdie Joseph
FW: Error Message Haiku
Fri 20 Mar 1998

This message is in MIME format. Since your mail reader does not understand this format, some or all of this message may not be legible.

> <<FW: Error Message Haiku>>
>
Fellow Listees:

Some of these are better than others, but the best really will make you smile, so I send them forward as harbingers of spring.

I also highly recommend an essay in the current issue of _Harper's_ (what IS that apostrophe doing there? Harper's WHAT?) by Laura Kipnis, which is advertised as a justification of adultery but turns out to be more than that: an transference (uh oh) of the LANGUAGE of private "scandalous" behavior into public relevance -- an advance beyond the by now lame retort "I don't care what he does privately as long as he's doing a good job publicly" -- when actually the private and public have always had intimate and scurrilous relations.

I note, happily, the baseball chatter starting to increase . . . but will myself be watching the visual analog of Duncan McNaughton's _Valparaiso_ in a few hours -- think of it: didn't Kansas lose early because granting Irby tenure AND winning an NCAA championship would just be too much in one month?

From: Jean Caspers <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list OSUCCLP <[redacted]>
Subject: FW: Error Message Haiku
Date: Mon, 16 Mar 1998 10:45:12 -0800
charset="iso-8859-1"

Many of you may find these poignant. I know I did... Jean.

> Poetry for the PC...
>
> Salon (http://www.salon1999.com/) has just announced
> the winners of their "Haiku Error Messages" contest.
> Here are the winners and those of honorable mention:
>
> *
>
> A crash reduces > your expensive computer > to a simple stone.
>
> *
>
> Seeing my great fault
> Through darkening blue windows
> I begin again
>
> *
>
> A file that big?
> It might be very useful.
> But now it is gone.

*

Everything is gone;
Your life's work has been destroyed.
Squeeze trigger (yes/no)?

*

Windows NT crashed.
I am the Blue Screen of Death.
No one hears your screams.

*

Three things are certain:
Death, taxes, and lost data.
Guess which has occurred.

*

The code was willing,
It considered your request,
But the chips were weak.

*

Printer not ready.
Could be a fatal error.
Have a pen handy?

*

Errors have occurred.
We won't tell you where or why.
Lazy programmers.

*

Server's poor response
Not quick enough for browser.
Timed out, plum blossom.

*

Chaos reigns within.
Reflect, repent, and reboot.
Order shall return.

*

Login incorrect.
Only perfect spellers may enter this system.

*

This site has been moved.
We'd tell you where, but then we'd have to delete you.

*

Wind catches lily

scatt'ring petals to the wind:
segmentation fault

*

ABORTED effort:
Close all that you have.
You ask way too much.

*

First snow, then silence.
This thousand dollar screen dies
so beautifully.

*

With searching comes loss and the presence of absence:
"My Novel" not found.

*

The Tao that is seen
Is not the true Tao, until You bring fresh toner.

*

The Web site you seek cannot be located but endless others exist

*

Stay the patient course
Of little worth is your ire
The network is down

*

There is a chasm of carbon and silicon
the software can't bridge

*

Yesterday it worked Today it is not working Windows is like that

*

To have no errors
Would be life without meaning
No struggle, no joy

*

You step in the stream,
but the water has moved on.
This page is not here.

*

No keyboard present
Hit F1 to continue
Zen engineering?

*

Hal, open the file
Hal, open the damn file, Hal open the, please Hal

*

Out of memory.
We wish to hold the whole sky,
But we never will.

*

Having been erased,
The document you're seeking Must now be retyped.

*

The ten thousand things
How long do any persist?
Netscape, too, has gone.

*

Rather than a beep

> Or a rude error message,
> These words: "File not found."
>
> *
>
> Serious error.
> All shortcuts have disappeared.
> Screen. Mind. Both are blank.

↑ Index

694. morpheal
Re: biblical...?
Fri 20 Mar 1998

> When did the Jesus Seminar hijack the Poetics List?

They will have to footnote it now.

After all, this discussion of that epic, is archived.
We came, we saw, we conquered, and we moved on to another topic.....

Cheers !

Morpheal

↑ Index

695. George Bowering
Re: Bromige shy abt achievement
Sat 21 Mar 1998

> re : http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html

Well, if you go to the http above you will see what I and any other fool can see. There are 4 photos of the purported four authors. There is a photo in b+w (whereas the other three are coloured) of "George Bowering." An obviouys ruse on Bromige's part. No one looks that dumb, certainly not I. He got some picture out of the Weekly World News and used photo shop on it or something and came up with this dummy "author." I am not denying that Brownwich may have collaborated with the other 2 authors, though I rather suspect that they are phantasms, too.

But the point is that among the maunderings and really, trust me, bad jokes, there is some good writing, and I take that to be Bromige at his best (as he was in the book "The Gathering." He should not be so shy as to disown those fine passages (one of 21 words on page 212, for example, and I think there was another one somewhere in there.

More important: I would like to take this opportunity to announce that Broadwinch never once got me out of trouble. He once saved me from Fiona Dampington, but I never said I wanted to be rescued in that instance. But he had the Jaguar and I had no car at all in those days.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

696. Pierre Joris
Re: in our image
Sat 21 Mar 1998

Tom Mandel wrote:

> Huge recommendations for the recently-published (but awfully expensive) _Schocken Bible, Vol. 1, The Five Books of Moses._ translated with intro, commentaries and notes by Everett Fox.

Tom -- Amazon is selling it right now in hc for $24.95 I think, which isn't that bad (down from $35)
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard

one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

697. Tom Mandel
in our image
Sat 21 Mar 1998

Huge recommendations for the recently-published (but awfully expensive) _Schocken Bible, Vol. 1, The Five Books of Moses._ translated with intro, commentaries and notes by Everett Fox.

The goal is to get as close to the feeling, texture, structure of the Hebrew as possible. It's fabulous.

"Let us make humankind in our image"

As you may imagine, in the many many volumes of commentary on this verse it has always seemed a problem. One of my favorite midrashim on the subject pictures Moses on Mt. Sinai, writing the scripture at God's dictation. He has to write the work of each day of creation. When he comes to our verse, he cries: "Sovereign of the universe, why do you supply an excuse to heretics?" "Write," He replied. "Whoever wishes to err may err."

A lot of Judaism is in those few words.

There are two creation stories in Genesis -- in the first "Let us make humankind in our image." In the second "and YHWH, God, formed the human, of dust from the soil, he blew into his nostrils the breath of life and the human became a living being.

human is "adam" dust is "adama" -- "and the dust became a living being."

Then it is the role of the human to span that gap, between "in our image" and the dust of which she was formed. Never to lose both or, as we say in my industry, "the two ends of the cable are in the same place."

One of the chasidim used to say "here are two truths to keep in your pockets and use as required: 'for my sake was the world created' and 'I am dust.'"

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

698. Tom Mandel
<sigh>religion</sigh>
Sat 21 Mar 1998

William Burmeister writes:
"let's not throw the baby out with the bath water here by making statements such as, "The spiritual core of Xtianity is Roman Pagan religion. This ends up sounding like the most reductionalizing demagoguery..."

Here's a secret for everyone on this list to share: "Sometimes the truth is reductive. So sorry. The mgt."

"Not to essentialize mine or anyone elses's beliefs here over yrs (Tom)"

You are welcome to your beliefs, Bill. I don't mean to step on Xtian toes. If for example you find a prophecy of Xtianity in the "OT" - go for it.

It is the relationship (imperial) of Xtianity to Jews which we were discussing here.

"you stay on yr trajectory and I'll stay on mine."

Hmmm. If you don't like the sound my (intellectual) plane makes when it takes off or lands 100 feet from your (intellectual) house, you are free to move (intellectually), plug your (intellectual) ears, or (intellectually) try to shoot me down.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

699. Hank Lazer
Re: Stein quote - where?
Sat 21 Mar 1998

I was reading along in a back issue of West Coast Line, and came across an article by Doug Barbour on Roy Kiyooka. Doug cites an epigraph from Stein used by Kiyooka. Here's the Stein passage:

"The business of art is to live in the complete actual present, that is the complete actual present, and to completely express that complete actual present."

Neither Doug nor I have been able to track down the precise source for this Stein-quote, though we suspect it may be in the Lectures (I've looked & can't find it) or Composition as Explanation (I've looked & can't find it).

Anyone able to help out & locate where Kiyooka gets the Stein passage? Kiyooka uses the passage in _transcanada letters_ but does not give a source for the quote.

↑ Index

700. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy
Cork Poetry Conference 1
Sat 21 Mar 1998

On Saturday the 14th of March the second Cork Conference for New and Experimental Poetry organised by Alex Davis and Matthew Gedden was held.

First on was Trevor Joyce whose latest works, _Syzygy_ and _Hellbox_ were launched at the conf. In his introduction to the poem _Chimaera_, he mentioned that formally it is based on the renga and combines texts by Richard Lovelace, Aloysius Bertrand and the author and later interpolaters of the Lieh Tzu. (In a hostile review in Ireland, the poem was slated as being too heavily influenced by Paul Muldoon, though not a word of it is Trevor's own. The briefest glance at the notes in the book _Stone Floods_, which was the subject of the "review" would have revealed this.) The Earth due to be struck by an asteroid on 26th October 2028, Archbishop Ussher's dating of creation to 10 am Thursday the 26th of October 6006 bc, and TJ's own birthday being the 26th of October, the poem is justifiably full of endings and beginnings. Also, look up chimaera in a biology dictionary.

more tomorrow

Randolph Healy

****

Chimaera Trevor Joyce
for Tina Murphy

Ceres and Bacchus bid good night sharp frosty fingers all your flowers have topped and what scythes spared winds shave off quite a moth bred out of moonlight I disturbed from the dark folds where it lay hid a naked thing that seems no man may cheat and love like any jack another dressed may prove a beast that creature fluttered free but voided in my lap a maggot with a human head monstrous misshapen such whose white satin upper coat of skin cut upon velvet rich incarnadin has yet a body and of flesh within whereas anything with six foot of skeleton with hands that grip with scalp of hair front teetch concealed inside a face and which leans forward as it runs is called a man with us

the joys of earth and air and thine entire that with thy feet and wings dost hop and fly

the sky unrolled its folds of purple and blue to the winds and later from these steps I saw on the horizon a village torched by soldiers blaze like a comet in the sky

then ah the sickle golden ears are cropped dropping December shall come weeping in the blood of horses become jack o lantern the blood of ment become will o the wisp kites become sparrow hawks and those hawks cuckoos

when the sun opened its golden lashes on the chaos of worlds and the earth was adrift with its cargo of ashes and bones my terrified soul then fled through the grey web of halflight but that spawn hung on in this shrill rush and spun himself into the full of its white mane cuckoos in due course again turn raptor swallows become oysters seashells hatch geese poor verdant fool and now green ice thy joys large and as lasting as they perch of grass bid us lay in gainst winter rain and poise apes grown of sheep fish that are rotten fruit flies born of roe such transformations are souls of the dead like mountain oaks uprooted by demons souls of the dead like meadow flowers gathered by angels sun sky earth man all had begun all gone

I cannot tell who loves the skeleton of a poor marmoset naught but bone bone

****

↑ Index

701. Cadaly
Poetry Tourism: Hong Kong
Sat 21 Mar 1998

If anybody has anything to suggest as far as poetry (readings, bookstores, books in English to read before I go, sites, etc.) in Hong Kong, Macau, or Guangdong (sp?) province, I would like to listen.

I will be there for six days and am not going further into China.

A former employer who spoke Mandarin mentioned to me that there were two distinct styles of poetry she was familiar with, a very formal one that her mother used to write poems, and a more informal, modern style. In Cantonese as well? Any difference in the poetry since the pronunciation is different? Help?

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

702. david bromige
i dont "under stand" metaphor
Sat 21 Mar 1998

---

so i will use my posting space today to deal--with merciless brevity--with Bowering's latest, concerning evidence to be viewed at

http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html

--Just how reliable the Klaxon of Kerrisdale may be, can be illustrated by his comments re the "authors' pics" to be seen at the beginning of _Piccolo Mondo_ . His (quel egotist!) is not the only B+W pic : mine,too, is B+W. But unlike the others, I do not get to have that small rectangle all to my own body. If you look closely, you will see that the arm (with fist attached) that props up my chin, is at an impossible angle. This is because it is actually Bowering's right arm, not my left. This may be verified by turning to p. 40 of Gale Research's _Contemporary Authors Autobiography Series_, vol. 26, where the entire snapshot is reproduced.

I was able to check the online novel properly for the first time yesterday by going to a computer superior to my own. It's a very nice design job, as one has come to expect from Coach House. And let me say that Bowering's best writing is in this novel. Didnt know the boy had it in him. He is also an accomplished lit-mimic; there are passages in there I am told "sound like" me. However, a Jaguar was never one of my attributes. George has me confused with Liam Chutney, scholar of Nineties Decadence, who gave a snockered GB a lift one night and offered to satisfy his curiosity concerning Des Esseintes & the Philistines. Took them a long time to get home.

With the wish that this posting contain something of value, I'll add that I'm writing while listening to a great, weekly radio show available to all in the Bay Area who can receive 94.1 FM, KPFA public radio. It's "The Johnny Otis Show," 3 R n B packed hours from 9 till noon each Saturday, with commentary by Mr. Otis hisself as he spins a notable succession of vinyl from his extensive collection. The hour from 10-11 he reserves for archive notes--he plays recordings he was involved in as performer &/or producer, and remarks on what now strike him as their strong or weak points, tells how they came to be made, and the like. Sometimes there's live music--the other week, there was a Klezmer trio, a string quartet from a local symphony, and a blues group--and spontaneous R+B prosody from the small crowd gathered there at the Powerhouse Brewing Co in Sebastopol. For those Listfellows who follow poetry into its musical adventure, and for historians of the blues, this is a "mustn't miss" event. I'm goin' down there soon as i sign off. See ya there? db3

↑ Index

703. k. lederer

Re: Stein quote - where?

Sat 21 Mar 1998

Hi--

The Stein quote comes from "Plays," from LECTURES in AMERICA.

I don't have the page number--I found the quote cited in a wonderful book by Wendy Steiner entitled EXACT RESEMBLANCE to EXACT RESEMBLANCE (Yale: Yale U Press, 1978). If you can't find the page number in "Plays," you will be able to find it in Steiner.

And thanks for subscribing to Explosive! I just got your sub today--

Best,
Katy
***

On Sat, 21 Mar 1998, Hank Lazer wrote:

> I was reading along in a back issue of West Coast Line, and came across an article by Doug Barbour on Roy Kiyooka. Doug cites an > epigraph from Stein used by Kiyooka. Here's the Stein passage:

>
> "The business of art is to live in the complete actual present, that is the complete actual present, and to completely express that complete actual present."
>
> Neither Doug nor I have been able to track down the precise source for this Stein-quote, though we suspect it may be in the Lectures (I've looked & can't find it) or Composition as Explanation (I've looked & can't find it).
>
> Anyone able to help out & locate where Kiyooka gets the Stein passage? Kiyooka uses the passage in _transcanada letters_ but does not give a source for the quote.

↑ Index

704. Alan Myouka Sondheim

sonnet, DNS, entropy

Sat 21 Mar 1998

-

sonnet, DNS, entropy

now the time of thermal heating splatters a particular zero across the domain name insertion, that is to wet what bit into the format of the seven groves, consider education .edu lending a path crackling with desire and naked students hardening an axiom. Here is the axiom: Succession always follows, and there is no Reason. To assume a One anywhere in, the vicinity. so it lays there, stillborn with umbilical.
which would be the folding of a catastrophe still fresh.*
now is.
The time of domain names expands, .mil for example turns to ash, the military. .net splays mesh across the same.
a student previously mentioned. there are never enough portions to go around. To assert a One is to beg her, the question.

---

*Thom, Two
Irigaray, Irrigation

↑ Index

705. dbkk

Another plug (non-nepotistic), for SWARM

Sat 21 Mar 1998

This is Kevin Killian--recommending a new book you can order through the mail. Black Star Series announces the publication of SWARM, a book of stories by Camille Roy.

The book design (by Jay Schwartz) utilizes color xerography, letter press, and offset to striking effect: SWARM bears resemblance to a lesbian rug.

Here is Susan Smith Nash (in WITZ) on Camille Roy's previous book, "The Rosy Medallions": "This is the language of the socially-constructed (or deconstructed) self bared naked so that you're forced to see your own violences... If Henry Miller were a smart, funny lesbian and he were rewriting The Rosy Crucifixion, this is what might result. Brilliant insights into the savage dynamics of love."

SWARM is available from Small Press Distribution ([redacted]), or by mail, for ten dollars ($10) inclusive of shipping, handling, and tax, from

> Black Star Series
> 1419 20th Street
> San Francisco, CA 94107

Remember, when you order this book from Black Star Series, make checks payable to Megan Adams. I would say, get many copies, you can give them out as graduation presents too, or Mother's Day also.

Thanks everyone (but you'll thank me)--!

KK

↑ Index

706. AERIALEDGE

Baltimore Reading

Sun 22 Mar 1998

Wednsday March 25th at 8 PM

Rod Smith & Mark Wallace

Maryland Institute College of Art

Auditorium S-3, Mount Royal Station
(The old train station)

↑ Index

707. Alan Myouka Sondheim
children's word transformation game
Sun 22 Mar 1998

-

remarkable transformations (one letter at a time)

alan	.org	.mil	jennifer
alar	.ort	.mrl	jernifer
alur	.ont	.mrm	bernifer
allr	.nnt	.mzm	bornifer
aulr	.net	.czm	hornifer
aupr		.com	hownifer
jupr			howniwer
judr			hownower
jodr			hinnower
jodu			ninnower
jolu			ninnkwer
julu			niknkwer nikukwer nikukwir nikukwin nikukoin

↑ Index

708. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy
Cork Conference 2
Sun 22 Mar 1998

Another instalment. More to follow over the next few days including a biblio and distn details.

Randolph Healy.

****

Trevor Joyce was followed by Michael Smith who read mainly new work which included some remarkably successful poems written for children. He also read some of his translations of Machado and Lorca. Unfortunately I do not have any of the texts to hand. Here is a poem from Michael's collection: _Lost Genealogies_.

WHEELWRIGHTS MICHAEL SMITH

The iron hoop burns the timbers tight
in a geometry of hands.

They cannot read the stars like the Incas.
Their wheels are not planetary, sounding celestial music.

Bump of cobble and kerb is their consideration:
winger slush and summer rain,
ice and smooth rotation.

****

Next on was Geoffrey Squires, who read two long poems, both of which were in sections.

Here is a sample from _A Long Poem in Three Sections_ which was launched at the conference and is published by Levraut de Poche (Form Books with a beret and string of onions).

from A LONG POEM IN THREE SECTIONS GEOFFREY SQUIRES

II

No depth here but recession of surfaces rock behind rock and behind that the road and then rocks again, white, placed one in front of the other, irregularly, all shimmering

Gullies and folds, the basins formed by the rocks, and the earth between where it collects, light following falling into the hollows, bending over surfaces, a confusion of ways down

The heat brings with it a silence which is not the silence of night or of snow but a heaviness and troubled vision with stones, metal, buildings, all shimmering

Haze over everything, making everything unclear as the heat rises, confusing even the points of the buildings, the sharp features the definiteness that they have

Warm evening, luminous calm somewhere a bay is filled soft tic of birds in the night air rock behing rock and the path between boulders gleaming white in the dark in the distance the small eye of the house

Rocks in the darkness, shapes sensed rather than seen, inert like animals asleep in the middle of a field or by the road which one moves among with care, picking a way home across the dark grass

Small fires in the near hills and sound of the sea beating down in the hollow of the bay no sense of arrival but of echo only reverberation in the darkness, footsteps between silences, a dog barking in space

And the rocks still warm still shimmering in the dark, after the day's burning like the memory of another world which they have crossed from somehow like a memory of the physical they are cool now in the moonlight which picks them out on the hillside like smooth, sleeping animals hump-backed white forms half-buried in the earth and yet because of the moonlight seemingly disembodied and removed and quite unearthly

****

↑ Index

709. Miekal And Sleep Somalixt MANIFESTO
Sun 22 Mar 1998

Sleep Somalixt MANIFESTO

They, Somalixts, believe of Dreams. They, Somalixts, believe of nothofg else, <meta> beofg absolute, osleepr than Dreams.They, Somalixts, believe formerly everythofg Dreams. They believe formerly everythofg formerly exixted, of what ix commonly referred to <meta> "sleep p<meta>t", formerly exixts of what ix commonly referred to <meta> "sleep present", or formerly could exixt, of what ix commonly referred to <meta> "sleep future", ix subject to Dreams. Of fact, so ix what ix p<meta>t, present and future, subject to Dreams. They believe formerly anythofg, formerly ix eixleepr imagofable or unimagofable, h<meta> exixted, or could exixt, somewhere of sleep absolute of all of space and all of time.

They believe formerly sleep limits of sleep human imagofation why not! also completely subject to Dreams. They believe formerly what w<meta>, what ix, and what shall be imagofed, of its dixtofction to what ix now considered real, ix subject to Dreams. They believe of sleep poTheyr of Dreams <meta> beofg sleep l<meta>t and only remaofofg genuofely supernatural poTheyr. Sleep poTheyr of Dreams remaofs supernatural, because Dreams and only Dreams transcends all previously exixtofg, now exixtofg, and future exixtofg, actual and potential, natures and poTheyrs, <meta> sleepir only constant. Sleepre why not! no osleepr,real, constants of Nature or of Science. All osleepr appwhy not!nt constants why not! subject to Dreams.
They believe formerly sleep effective processes, formerly exixted, exixt, or formerly shall exixt, why not! all subject to Dreams.

Causalities, all causal relations sleepmselves, why not! potentially subject to Dreams. Sleep fact formerly a particular observable cause gives rixe to a particular observable effect, and formerly formerly ix commonly believed to be predictably thus, ix not necessarily thus of sleep p<meta>t or of sleep future. It w<meta> only thus at formerly moment of sleep observation and prediction. Formerly appwhy not!nt thusness, no matter how many times sleep same ix observed or how cwhy not!fully and closely it ix scrutofized and me<meta>ured, ix subject to Dreams.

Thix ix not negated by any fact of a contofuous series of similar or identical causal relations, havofg been appwhy not!ntly observed, betTheyen any particular kofd of presumed cause and any particular presumed kofd of effect, nor by how many times formerly same w<meta> observed. Sleep only certaofty of causality ix Dreams.

Dreams ix not a sleeporetical profciple, or an idea, or an exixtent, or an energetic force, and yet sleepre ix nothofg whatever, formerly ever exixted, formerly exixts, or ix yet to exixt, formerly ix not subject to Dreams, and which does not exhibit sleep effects of Dreams. Dreams ix everywhere, and of everythofg, and yet Dreams ix not any particular thofg, or any particular profciple. It ix sleep most fundamental characterixtic of everywhere and everythofg. Of fact sleepre ix no thought, and sleepre why not! no ide<meta>, without Dreams. Sleep very oftention of keepofg an idea of mofd, <meta> it h<meta> arixen sleepre, itself ofvolves Dreams. Any mental activity ofvolves Dreamss. Sleep mofd ix essentially Dreams. Mofds constantly Dreams.

They believe formerly everythofg formerly once exixted, and everythofg formerly does not now exixt, ix subject to sleep poTheyr of Dreams, such formerly formerly shall somewhere, someday, exixt agaof. Of fact They believe formerly, subject to sleep poTheyr of Dreams, formerly which did not ever exixt and formerly which appewhy not!d to have p<meta>sed from exixtence, might subsequently have exixted, or not ever have not exixted. They believe sleepn, formerly neixleepr sleep logical proposition formerly it did not exixt, nor sleep logical proposition formerly it never did not exixt, ix falsified. Thix ix a radical departure from all previous beliefs and thofkofg. Similarly, They believe, with equal resolve, formerly, subject to sleep poTheyr of Dreams, what exixts and w<meta> known, with absolute certaofty, to have exixted, might henceforth not exixt and sleepn be known, with absolute certaofty, <meta> never havofg exixted. They believe sleepn, formerly neixleepr sleep logical proposition, it exixted, nor sleep logical proposition, it never exixted, ix falsified. Thix ix anosleepr radical departure from all previous thofkofg. They believe formerly Dreams ix sleep fundamental paradox, and formerly all paradoxes of time and space why not! ultimately resolvable to formerly fundamental paradox. They believe formerly Dreams ix absolute and formerly all changofg ix itself subject to Dreams. They believe formerly sleep rate of Dreams might be stopped, accelerated, or decre<meta>ed, of any ofstance of anythofg changofg, by means of Dreams. Sleep appwhy not!nt limitations <meta> to effectofg thix, whesleepr sleepy why not! limitations <meta> to thought or technology, why not! subject to Dreams. Ultimately even sleep means of effectofg such Dreamss could sleepmselves be effected by Dreams and could be sleepmselves Dreamsd. Somalixm ix sleep belief of sleep effectofg of Dreamss.

Sleep advance forces of sleep Somalixt movement why not! sleep artixts. Somalixm ix sleep successor of Surrealixm. Where Surrealixm dealt with sleep idea and its transmutations and permutations of its possibilities, Somalixm deals with sleep manifestation ofto reality of sleep Surrealixt Ide<meta>. Sleep

Surrealixts Theyre sleep early prophets of Somalixm. Sleepir domaof w<meta> sleep production of icons and symbols, withof a language formerly pertaofs to sleep transformations of sleep mofd <meta> its thoughts. Thix w<meta> sleep first realization of sleep world <meta> beofg a Somality.

They Somalixts recognize sleep fact formerly sleep mofd ix a mirror of sleep external world. Thoughts why not! sleep mirror of which sleep world reflects. Sleep nature of sleep mofd's processes reflect sleep nature of sleep world <meta> manifestations of sleep very same Somality. They Somalixts recognize formerly sleep mofd and its thoughts, <meta> it w<meta>, ix, and shall be, ix subject to beofg Dreamsd <meta> a part of sleep world <meta> Somality. Sleep stuff formerly sleep world ix made of, its matter and energies, its quanta, why not! sleep stuff formerly Somality ix comprixed of.
Somalixm of sleep arts ix sleep forerunner of Somalixm of those realities formerly go beyond sleep arts. Sleep arts provide sleep experimental b<meta>ix for sleep implementation of sleep techniques of Somalixm to sleep whole of sleep world <meta> Somality. Where<meta> Surrealixm w<meta> a new school, a new style, a new genre, of art and withof sleep arts, They Somalixts announce sleep end of all schools, styles, and genres of art. Of Somalixm art ix liberated from sleep categories formerly human thofkofg imposed upon it and from all sleep traditional categories formerly did, do, or ever could, defofe sleep arts. They Somalixts believe formerly all transmutations and transformations, all transubstantiations, of anythofg formerly w<meta>, ix, or ix yet to be, why not! an art.
Formerly ix sleep fofal art formerly ix no longer art <meta> it w<meta> known, and sleep fofal art formerly ix sleep culmofation of all of sleep arts, and of all artixtic schools, styles and genres. It ix not where art and life once met, or meet, but ofstead where art and life become sleep same. It ix where art ix life and where life ix art.

Somalixm ix sleep first advance of thofkofg formerly h<meta> no ancestry. All of Somalixm's predecessors and ancestors why not! subject to Dreams. All of Somalixm's methods, techniques, means and ways, why not! subject to Dreams. Thix dixtofguixhes Somalixm from all precedents. All of Somalixm's results, products, effects, why not! subject to Dreams. Unlike everythofg before it, Somalixm h<meta> no ideology, and refuses to be used by any ideology. With sleep advent of Somalixm They Somalixts believe formerly all ideologies why not! subject to Dreams. They Somalixts announce sleep fofal end of art and sleep begofnofg of Somality where Somalixm h<meta> no specific materials or effects dixtofctive unto itself, unlike all previous arts and technologies, but ofstead ix ofclusive of all sleep potentialities of all possible ofvolvements with all possible and imagofable p<meta>t, present, and future materials and means of Dreams. Somalixm ix sleep culmofation of sleep prophecies of alchemy, and thus of sleep dreams of sleep sciences, <meta> to sleep Great Work of transmutation formerly becomes Somalixm's Changofg of everythofg ofto absolute Somality. Somalixm and sleep production of Somality ix sleep fofal purpose of humanity. Somalixm ix sleep fofal method ofclusive of all methods and thus sleep liberation from methods. Somality ix sleep fofal result, ofclusive of all possible results and thus sleep liberation from efficacies. Somalixm ix sleep new and constant dynamixm formerly ix productive of sleep world of human and non human beofgs, of all formerly exixted, exixts or ever shall exixt, <meta> becomofg sleep whole of sleep Somality.

Political Postscript: (October 1997)

<meta> Somalixm gaofs precedence formerly burstofg forth of unfettered creativity brofgs about an ever ofcre<meta>ofg and more complex Chaos, thwartofg all attempts at determofixm and totalixm. Chaos <meta> product of Somalixm, understood <meta> sleep manifestations of more, sleeprefore less and less predictable, creative ofteractions, and <meta> sleep results of unfettered creativity known <meta> its products.

Rasputin Zukofsky

↑ Index

710. J. Kuszai
New Discussion Group; New Discussion List (fwd)
Sun 22 Mar 1998

This may be of interest.
Who knows?
"Make it so"

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 22 Mar 1998 14:43:14 -0600
From: Peter Sands <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: New Discussion Group; New Discussion List

Hello all, and apologies for crossposting.

At long last we have a Listserv dedicated to the newly formed MLA Discussion Group on Science Fiction, Utopian and Fantastic Literature. The group held its first meeting in December 1997 in Toronto during the MLA convention.

If you think you might be interested in joining the Discussion Group (which helps us justify our continued existence to the powers-that-be at MLA headquarters), then please subscribe to the new list. If you're not interested, please accept my apologies for this intrusion.

. . .

If you are interested, here is how to subscribe:

1. Address an email message to:

[redacted]

3. In the body of the message, inserting YOUR ACTUAL NAME in the appropriate spot below, write the following:

subscribe sfuf yourfirstname yourlastname

4. Send the message.

IF you do not receive a welcome message from the list, or you receive an error message, or you otherwise suspect that your bytes have been bitten, ask for assistance by emailing me at:

[redacted]

Cheers,

--
Peter Sands, U. Wisconsin-Milwaukee
[redacted] || http://www.uwm.edu/~sands
Writing Center || http://www.uwm.edu/Dept/English/wcenter/
English Department || http://www.csd.uwm.edu/Dept/English/
Epiphany Project || http://mason.gmu.edu/~epiphany
[redacted] || [redacted] (fax)

↑ Index

711. michael corbin
Re: civic-li(v)e
Sun 22 Mar 1998

La lingua ch'io parlai fu tutta spenta innanzi che all'ovra incomsummabile

Marion Barry is my lover.

When I voted with the unpermitted Gladiola man,

he pointed virtu out the door on the corner.

And the republican civitas couldn't hold forth in Spanglish at the boarded up Tivoli theater.

Combinacion invencible. Estados Unidos.

They don't even need to jack the niggers. Right now. They shuit down that, like, lyric, lunch-counter woolworths poetry-thing, 4th Ward 14th street.

1998.

Like yesterday poet-person.

Remember?

Easy as a b c.

Woyd.

mc

↑ Index

712. morpheal
Re: science & metaphor
Sun 22 Mar 1998

> I'm glad Pierre and Henry understood what I meant rather than what I wrote (thank you). Instead of having a generous, outside perspective on the whole of science, 'specially wrt to its glorious heyday before hyperspecialization, when science worked itself nicely into (co-existed with) a pre-existing aesthetic of the imagination, the intent of my question was to probe for a way out from the inside of this unquestionable hegemony of technology, and the idea of science just "being there," intuited rather like history is now. This is really also an economic thing now ("don't take this personally, this is about business").

In some instances it does look like some scientists are being kept busy reinventing the wheel over and over again, and describing how they did it.

This happens in part, because most scientists do not have any idea what is already on the shelf and will not trickle down from beyond top secret, and so they continue to work on what is at best obsolete and at worst a red herring that will never amount to anything. They also do not have any idea what others are doing. That is partly in the spirit of scientific competition. It happens in part because of constraints of extreme secrecy, the necessitating of much dissemination of disinformation to keep others off the scent, and the quest for the ever so holy grant money grail. Corporate competition nowadays is sometimes as fierce and as jealously guarded as is military progress, and in fact the two can be closely linked.

Hyperspecialization is also the indicator of extreme secrecy. Each has their tin part to work on, and does not know what it is for, or how it is to function along with the other parts. Someone else will know how two parts go together, but not how they are derived, or what the third is to be used for. Only the very few and very elite know how anything goes together and see the big picture. Of course a large portion of such instances of hyperspecialization amount to nothing, but a few are the real thing, out there in the stirred around in the vast soup of everything scientific. There are inevitably many conflicting metaphors.

Anyway, what does the average post-graduate student, or professor, really know about what exists and will not be available to the "scientific community", let alone the "general public" or "consumer public", for at least 50 years, if ever ? Not much. To the average person science is and can only be "edutainment". It is not much different from a vaudeville routine, though more mentally challenging, and that is what attracts some to that kind of entertainment. Even to many scientists the uncharted brave new frontiers, where no scientist has gone before, such as they dream of, is perhaps at best a vague rumour. Fifty years is the estimate trickle down time for some of the most advanced inventions and real breakthroughs. I doubt this has changed since the Cold War ended. There are more covert attempts to gain control of such advances for nefarious and alien purposes, including those attempts by competing ideologies, than ever. So the metaphors of science as knowable by everyman cannot possibly present a reasonable map of that darkest of dark arts. True science remains occulted. What then do we have in terms of the mantras and rituals that anyone might know something of, outside of its highest priesthood ? A little less than the neophytes beginning their initiation into obfuscation and maintaining the veil of darkness.

In many senses a lot of science becomes a fiction concerning the world, and deals only with how the world was known, or believed to be. The study of literature could include the study of scientific literature, as a branch of the study of popular fiction. It would, I think, be appropriate. The only reason that it would defy most scholars within the area of literature is their lack of knowledge of the scientific language of mythematics. (Mythematics, as I prefer to call it, is a language I have not mastered either, so I have every sympathy for anyone attempting to translate it into common English. The claim is that it describes how the world is and predicts how it will be. I think that claim is a little too bold sometimes, and that in fact mathematics is the weaving of a mythic vision of how the scientist somewtimes imagines how the world was, how it is likely to be and how it shall evolve into the future. The myth, as do all myths, has its uses. Myths have always been valuable and the mathematical myth of the world proves its usefulness, in ways at least equal to the usefulness of descriptive prose and metaphors in English.)

As for the devices, those doing the inventing, as did Thomas Edison, do not care in the least as to what scientists said before it, or what they say about it. The scientists can protest the invention, and declare it violates paradigms, principles, even laws, but the inventor who engineers it will simply point to it and tell them to watch it do what it has been invented to do. The device works, and so what if it defies every known law and principle that science has ever posited. Then the scientists can attempt to explain it after the fact of its invention. Even in the most ordinary situations, where secrecy is not the matter of concern, engineers and designers ultiamtely do not care at all about science, but rather they care about whether something works, and is pragmatically useful, rather than whether it can be explained mythematically or in scientific metaphor.

Technical progress does not depend on science. Science more often depends on progress for its cues, and attempts to catch up, by revising its paradigms, principles and laws, such that they remain more consistent with new invention.

> Pierre answered succinctly when he replied, "science is full of metaphor -- but isn't it exactly when that fact goes unrecognized, i.e. when science & its worldview constructs get taken as _literal_ and not metaphoric, that we get a > kind of scientistic fundamentalist not that different from the kind of religious fundamentalism Adonis is referring to?"

There are fashions in science also. Fads, in fact, that come into and go out of vogue. That, contrary, to Adonis, is a _good_ thing, simply because it tends to thwart some of the dogmatism that would otherwise hold sway over it. There is less tendency to declare absolutes, and more tendency to find useful metaphors. In that sense it is cliques, cults, and gamesmanship. It is the glass bead game, in effect, and it can do that as a purely historical entity in a mythic world that it constructs and modifies.

Morpheal

↑ Index

713. henry gould
Re: in our image
Sun 22 Mar 1998

On Sat, 21 Mar 1998 08:01:58 -0600 Tom Mandel said:
>
>"Let us make humankind in our image"
>
>As you may imagine, in the many many volumes of commentary on this verse it >has always seemed a problem. One of my favorite midrashim on the subject >pictures Moses on Mt. Sinai, writing the scripture at God's dictation. He >has to write the work of each day of creation. When he comes to our verse, >he cries: "Sovereign of the universe, why do you supply an excuse to >heretics?" "Write," He replied. "Whoever wishes to err may err."
>
>A lot of Judaism is in those few words.

This is a very double-edged little story. Moses sets himself up this time.
By playing the cautious scholar, narrows God's own capacious sense of human-divinity. God, generously, plays along with Moses. As long as he writes it down. "Write it, Moses. Whoever wishes to err may err - including you."
>
>There are two creation stories in Genesis -- in the first "Let us make >humankind in our image." In the second "and YHWH, God, formed the human, of >dust from the soil, he blew into his nostrils the breath of life and the >human became a living being.
>human is "adam" dust is "adama" -- "and the dust became a living being."

>Then it is the role of the human to span that gap, between "in our image" >and the dust of which she was formed. Never to lose both or, as we say in >my industry, "the two ends of the cable are in the same place."
>
>One of the chasidim used to say "here are two truths to keep in your >pockets and use as required: 'for my sake was the world created' and 'I am >dust.'"

This I find fascinating. Mandelstam's Voronezh poems are all about soil, black earth.
Clay - American Bottomland - that's where the epics are.
Time flowers on the lips of whispered clay.
"costly clay"

I raise this greenness to my lips,
This sticky promise of leaves,
This breach-of-promise earth:
Mother of maples, of oaks, of snowdrops.

See how I'm dazzled, exalted,
Obedient to the lowliest root.

(trans. James Greene)

(let's do some better translations)
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

714. morpheal
Re: in our image
Sun 22 Mar 1998

> "Let us make humankind in our image"

Ah, that is what the _machine_ said.

> As you may imagine, in the many many volumes of commentary on this verse it has always seemed a problem.

The phrase was purely prophetic. Remarkable isn't it ?

Of course, the process theologians claim, along with some others not of their particular cult, that the process of creation, including evolution, is on going. So the prophetic statement becomes included within that larger rubric.

> This is a very double-edged little story. Moses sets himself up this time. By playing the cautious scholar, narrows God's own capacious sense of human-divinity. God, generously, plays along with Moses. As long as he > writes it down. "Write it, Moses. Whoever wishes to err may err - including you."

Strange that we do not get any accounts of the alien spaceship being in any way involved until we get to Ezekiel and the O.T. apocryhpa and pseudepigrapha. There we have some quite startling Barney and Betty Hill type stuff.

That brings up the question of who's machine it really was, is, might be...

Morpheal

↑ Index

715. morpheal

The Morphealist Manifesto

Sun 22 Mar 1998

Since the poetics list has become so religious of late, I thought I would include my little piece of skull duggery, first published in 1995, and entitled "The Morphealist Manifesto". Of course I have advised the OED of the coining of the much needed words "morphealist", "morphealism" and "morpheality". "Morpheal" seems to have been in some prior use, even if not included in the edition I have at hand. Here it is...

The MORPHEALIST MANIFESTO

We, Morphealists, believe in Change. We, Morphealists, believe in nothing else, as being absolute, other than Change.We, Morphealists, believe that everything Changes. We believe that everything that existed, in what is commonly referred to as "the past", that exists in what is commonly referred to as "the present", or that could exist, in what is commonly referred to as "the future", is subject to Change. In fact, so is what is past, present and future, subject to Change. We believe that anything, that is either imaginable or unimaginable, has existed, or could exist, somewhere in the absolute of all of space and all of time.

We believe that the limits of the human imagination are also completely subject to Change. We believe that what was, what is, and what shall be imagined, in its distinction to what is now considered real, is subject to change. We believe in the power of Change as being the last and only remaining genuinely supernatural power. The power of Change remains supernatural, because Change and only Change transcends all previously existing, now existing, and future existing, actual and potential, natures and powers, as their only constant. There are no other,real, constants in Nature or in Science. All other apparent constants are subject to Change. We believe that the effective processes, that existed, exist, or that shall exist, are all subject to Change.

Causalities, all causal relations themselves, are potentially subject to Change. The fact that a particular observable cause gives rise to a particular observable effect, and that that is commonly believed to be predictably thus, is not necessarily thus in the past or in the future. It was only thus at that moment of the observation and prediction. That apparent thusness, no matter how many times the same is observed or how carefully and closely it is scrutinized and measured, is subject to Change. This is not negated by any fact of a continuous series of similar or identical causal relations, having been apparently observed, between any particular kind of presumed cause and any particular presumed kind of effect, nor by how many times that same was observed. The only certainty in causality is Change.

Change is not a theoretical principle, or an idea, or an existent, or an energetic force, and yet there is nothing whatever, that ever existed, that exists, or is yet to exist, that is not subject to Change, and which does not exhibit the effects of Change. Change is everywhere, and in everything, and yet change is not any particular thing, or any particular principle. It is the most fundamental characteristic of everywhere and everything. In fact there is no thought, and there are no ideas, without Change. The very intention of keeping an idea in mind, as it has arisen there, itself involves Change. Any mental activity involves Changes. The mind is essentially Change. Minds constantly Change.

We believe that everything that once existed, and everything that does not now exist, is subject to the power of Change, such that that shall somewhere, someday, exist again. In fact we believe that, subject to the power of Change, that which did not ever exist and that which appeared to have passed from existence, might subsequently have existed, or not ever have not existed. We believe then, that neither the logical proposition that it did not exist, nor the logical proposition that it never did not exist, is falsified. This is a radical departure from all previous beliefs and thinking. Similarly, we believe, with equal resolve, that, subject to the power of Change, what exists and was known, with absolute certainty, to have existed, might henceforth not exist and then be known, with absolute certainty, as never having existed. We believe then, that neither the logical proposition, it existed, nor the logical proposition, it never existed, is falsified. This is another radical departure from all previous thinking. We believe that Change is the fundamental paradox, and that all paradoxes of time and space are ultimately resolvable to that fundamental paradox. We believe that Change is absolute and that all changing is itself subject to Change. We believe that the rate of change might be stopped, accelerated, or decreased, in any instance of anything changing, by means of Change. The apparent limitations as to effecting this, whether they are limitations as to thought or technology, are subject to Change. Ultimately even the means of effecting such Changes could themselves be effected by Change and could be themselves Changed. Morphealism is the belief in the effecting of changes.

The advance forces of the Morphealist movement are the artists. Morphealism is the successor of Surrealism. Where Surrealism dealt with the idea and its transmutations and permutations of its possibilities, Morphealism deals with the manifestation into reality of the Surrealist Ideas. The Surrealists were the early prophets of Morphealism. Their domain was the production of icons and symbols, within a language that pertains to the transformations of the mind as its thoughts. This was the first realization of the world as being a Morpheality.

We Morphealists recognize the fact that the mind is a mirror of the external world. Thoughts are the mirror in which the world reflects. The nature of the mind's processes reflect the nature of the world as manifestations of the very same Morpheality. We Morphealists recognize that the mind and its thoughts, as it was, is, and shall be, is subject to being Changed as a part of the world as Morpheality. The stuff that the world is made of, its matter and energies, its quanta, are the stuff that Morpheality is comprised of. Morphealism in the arts is the forerunner of Morphealism in those realities that go beyond the arts. The arts provide the experimental basis for the implementation of the techniques of Morphealism to the whole of the world as Morpheality. Whereas Surrealism was a new school, a new style, a new genre, of art and within the arts, we Morphealists announce the end of all schools, styles, and genres of art. In Morphealism art is liberated from the categories that human thinking imposed upon it and from all the traditional categories that did, do, or ever could, define the arts. We Morphealists believe that all transmutations and transformations, all transubstantiations, of anything that was, is, or is yet to be, are an art. That is the final art that is no longer art as it was known, and the final art that is the culmination of all of the arts, and of all artistic schools, styles and genres. It is not where art and life once met, or meet, but instead where art and life become the same. It is where art is life and where life is art.

Morphealism is the first advance in thinking that has no ancestry. All of Morphealism's predecessors and ancestors are subject to Change. All of Morphealism's methods, techniques, means and ways, are subject to Change. This distinguishes Morphealism from all precedents. All of Morphealism's results, products, effects, are subject to Change. Unlike everything before it, Morphealism has no ideology, and refuses to be used by any ideology. With the advent of Morphealism we Morphealists believe that all ideologies are subject to Change. We Morphealists announce the final end of art and the beginning of Morpheality where Morphealism has no specific materials or effects distinctive unto itself, unlike all previous arts and technologies, but instead is inclusive of all the potentialities of all possible involvements with all possible and imaginable past, present, and future materials and means of Change. Morphealism is the culmination of the prophecies of alchemy, and thus of the dreams of the sciences, as to the Great Work of transmutation that becomes Morphealism's Changing of everything into absolute Morpheality. Morphealism and the production of Morpheality is the final purpose of humanity. Morphealism is the final method inclusive of all methods and thus the liberation from methods. Morpheality is the final result, inclusive of all possible results and thus the liberation from efficacies. Morphealism is the new and constant dynamism that is productive of the world of human and non human beings, of all that existed, exists or ever shall exist, as becoming the whole of the Morpheality.

Political Postscript: (October 1997)

As Morphealism gains precedence that bursting forth of unfettered creativity brings about an ever increasing and more complex Chaos, thwarting all attempts at determinism and totalism. Chaos as product of Morphealism, understood as the manifestations of more, therefore less and less predictable, creative interactions, and as the results of unfettered creativity known as its products.

copyright 1995, 1997, 1998 Bob Ezergailis
aka MORPHEAL
Hamilton, Ontario, Canada
[redacted]
Poet and visual artist.

↑ Index

716. George Bowering

Re: that Bromige: Nobel material

Sun 22 Mar 1998

Just one last word on Bromige's obscuring of actuality re:

> http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/piccolo/title.html
>
> *--Just how reliable the Klaxon of Kerrisdale may be, can be illustrated by his comments re the "authors' pics" to be seen at the beginning of _Piccolo Mondo_ . His (quel egotist!) is not the only B+W pic : mine,too, is B+W.*

My (honest) mistake. I thought that Bromige's picture was in colour because, although it looks like a b+w photo, so does Bromige.

He IS a handsome person, especially his forearm and fist.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

717. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: The Morphealist Manifesto

Sun 22 Mar 1998

---

morpheal wrote:
>
> Since the poetics list has become so religious of late, I thought I would > include my little piece of skull duggery, first published in 1995, and entitled
> "The Morphealist Manifesto". Of course I have advised the OED of the coining > of the much needed words "morphealist", "morphealism" and "morpheality".
> "Morpheal" seems to have been in some prior use, even if not included in the > edition I have at hand. Here it is...
>
> The MORPHEALIST MANIFESTO
>
> We, Morphealists, believe in Change. We, Morphealists, believe in nothing > else, as being absolute, other than Change.We, Morphealists, believe that > everything Changes. We believe that everything that existed, in what is > commonly referred to as "the past", that exists in what is commonly referred > to as "the present", or that could exist, in what is commonly referred to as > "the future", is subject to Change. In fact, so is what is past, present and > future, subject to Change. We believe that anything, that is either > imaginable or unimaginable, has existed, or could exist, somewhere in the > absolute of all of space and all of time.
>
> We believe that the limits of the human imagination are also completely > subject to Change. We believe that what was, what is, and what shall be > imagined, in its distinction to what is now considered real, is subject to > change. We believe in the power of Change as being the last and only > remaining genuinely supernatural power. The power of Change remains > supernatural, because Change and only Change transcends all previously > existing, now existing, and future existing, actual and potential, natures > and powers, as their only constant. There are no other,real, constants in > Nature or in Science. All other apparent constants are subject to Change.
> We believe that the effective processes, that existed, exist, or that shall > exist, are all subject to Change.
>
> Causalities, all causal relations themselves, are potentially subject to > Change. The fact that a particular observable cause gives rise to a > particular observable effect, and that that is commonly believed to be > predictably thus, is not necessarily thus in the past or in the future. It > was only thus at that moment of the observation and prediction. That > apparent thusness, no matter how many times the same is observed or how > carefully and closely it is scrutinized and measured, is subject to Change.

> This is not negated by any fact of a continuous series of similar or > identical causal relations, having been apparently observed, between any > particular kind of presumed cause and any particular presumed kind of > effect, nor by how many times that same was observed. The only certainty in > causality is Change.
>
> Change is not a theoretical principle, or an idea, or an existent, or an > energetic force, and yet there is nothing whatever, that ever existed, that > exists, or is yet to exist, that is not subject to Change, and which does > not exhibit the effects of Change. Change is everywhere, and in everything, > and yet change is not any particular thing, or any particular principle. It > is the most fundamental characteristic of everywhere and everything. In fact > there is no thought, and there are no ideas, without Change. The very > intention of keeping an idea in mind, as it has arisen there, itself > involves Change. Any mental activity involves Changes. The mind is > essentially Change. Minds constantly Change.
>
> We believe that everything that once existed, and everything that does not > now exist, is subject to the power of Change, such that that shall > somewhere, someday, exist again. In fact we believe that, subject to the > power of Change, that which did not ever exist and that which appeared to > have passed from existence, might subsequently have existed, or not ever > have not existed. We believe then, that neither the logical proposition that > it did not exist, nor the logical proposition that it never did not exist, > is falsified. This is a radical departure from all previous beliefs and > thinking. Similarly, we believe, with equal resolve, that, subject to the > power of Change, what exists and was known, with absolute certainty, to have > existed, might henceforth not exist and then be known, with absolute > certainty, as never having existed. We believe then, that neither the > logical proposition, it existed, nor the logical proposition, it never > existed, is falsified. This is another radical departure from all previous > thinking. We believe that Change is the fundamental paradox, and that all > paradoxes of > time and space are ultimately resolvable to that fundamental paradox. We > believe that Change is absolute and that all changing is itself subject > to Change. We believe that the rate of change might be stopped, accelerated, > or decreased, in any instance of anything changing, by means of Change. The > apparent limitations as to effecting this, whether they are limitations as > to thought or technology, are subject to Change. Ultimately even the means > of effecting such Changes could themselves be effected by Change and could > be themselves Changed. Morphealism is the belief in the effecting of changes.

>
> The advance forces of the Morphealist movement are the artists. Morphealism > is the successor of Surrealism. Where Surrealism dealt with the idea and its > transmutations and permutations of its possibilities, Morphealism deals with > the manifestation into reality of the Surrealist Ideas. The Surrealists > were the early prophets of Morphealism. Their domain was the production of > icons and symbols, within a language that pertains to the transformations > of the mind as its thoughts. This was the first realization of the world as > being a Morpheality.
>
> We Morphealists recognize the fact that the mind is a mirror of the external > world. Thoughts are the mirror in which the world reflects. The nature of > the mind's processes reflect the nature of the world as manifestations of > the very same Morpheality. We Morphealists recognize that the mind and its > thoughts, as it was, is, and shall be, is subject to being Changed as a part > of the world as Morpheality. The stuff that the world is made of, its matter > and energies, its quanta, are the stuff that Morpheality is comprised of.
> Morphealism in the arts is the forerunner of Morphealism in those realities > that go beyond the arts. The arts provide the experimental basis for the > implementation of the techniques of Morphealism to the whole of the world as > Morpheality. Whereas Surrealism was a new school, a new style, a new genre,
> of art and within the arts, we Morphealists announce the end of all schools, > styles, and genres of art. In Morphealism art is liberated from the > categories that human thinking imposed upon it and from all the traditional > categories that did, do, or ever could, define the arts. We Morphealists > believe that all transmutations and transformations, all transubstantiations, > of anything that was, is, or is yet to be, are an art. That is the final art > that is no longer art as it was known, and the final art that is the > culmination of all of the arts, and of all artistic schools, styles and > genres. It is not where art and life once met, or meet, but instead where > art and life become the same. It is where art is life and where life is art.
>
> Morphealism is the first advance in thinking that has no ancestry. All of > Morphealism's predecessors and ancestors are subject to Change. All of > Morphealism's methods, techniques, means and ways, are subject to Change.

> This distinguishes Morphealism from all precedents. All of Morphealism's > results, products, effects, are subject to Change. Unlike everything before > it, Morphealism has no ideology, and refuses to be used by any ideology.
> With the advent of Morphealism we Morphealists believe that all ideologies > are subject to Change. We Morphealists announce the final end of art and the > beginning of Morpheality where Morphealism has no specific materials or > effects distinctive unto itself, unlike all previous arts and technologies, > but instead is inclusive of all the potentialities of all possible > involvements with all possible and imaginable past, present, and future > materials and means of Change. Morphealism is the culmination of the > prophecies of alchemy, and thus of the dreams of the sciences, as to the > Great Work of transmutation that becomes Morphealism's Changing of > everything into absolute Morpheality. Morphealism and the production of > Morpheality > is the final purpose of humanity. Morphealism is the final method inclusive > of all methods and thus the liberation from methods. Morpheality is the > final result, inclusive of all possible results and thus the liberation from > efficacies. Morphealism is the new and constant dynamism that is productive > of the world of human and non human beings, of all that existed, exists or > ever shall exist, as becoming the whole of the Morpheality.
>
> Political Postscript: (October 1997)
>
> As Morphealism gains precedence that bursting forth of unfettered creativity > brings about an ever increasing and more complex Chaos, thwarting all > attempts at determinism and totalism. Chaos as product of Morphealism, > understood as the manifestations of more, therefore less and less > predictable, creative interactions, and as the results of unfettered > creativity known as its products.
>
> copyright 1995, 1997, 1998 Bob Ezergailis
> aka MORPHEAL
> Hamilton, Ontario, Canada
> [redacted]
> Poet and visual artist.

So, have you changed your mind about this yet?

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

718. Tom Mandel
(no subject)
Mon 23 Mar 1998

Gee, a zillion words a day by whoever this guy is who knows more about Islam than Adonis, about spirituality than those for whom it is an active issue, about science than scientists, about space ships than aliens. Oh, and his (ho hum) manifesto too---thanks for the testosterone 'orph!

Does anyone know where to get a bozo filter for listservs?

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel | Screen Porch, LLC
[redacted] | http://screenporch.com
vox: [redacted] | fax: [redacted]
----------+----------
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

719. sean bonney
artaud translations
Mon 23 Mar 1998

Can anyone tell me if there's a decent english translation of Artaud's "Heliogabalus" available. I've been trying to find one in britian but nothng.

Thanks, Sean Bonney

[redacted]

↑ Index

720. r. drake
Re: artaud translations
Mon 23 Mar 1998

---

a section (last half of section 3, "l'anarchie") appears in Selected Writings, ed. susan Sontag/tran. Helen Weaver, Noonday/farrar straus & giroux 1976... cant comment on it's decency, or lack thereov

lbd

> Can anyone tell me if there's a decent english translation of Artaud's "Heliogabalus" available. I've been trying to find one in britian but nothng.

> Thanks, Sean Bonney
>
> ---
> [redacted]

↑ Index

721. morpheal
Re: Sleep Somalixt MANIFESTO
Mon 23 Mar 1998

> Sleep Somalixt MANIFESTO
>
> They, Somalixts, believe of Dreams. They, Somalixts, believe of nothofg else, <meta> beofg absolute, osleepr than Dreams.They, Somalixts, believe formerly.....

I like that....It reminds of the fact that if the artificial intelligentsia succeed as Weizenbaum predicted they would, after there is only one interpretation of King Lear, everyone might perhaps "sleep for a thousand years and when they awaken - nothing will have changed".

Of course your Somalixisism is the antithesis of Morphealism.

> Rasputin Zukofsky

Ah, an agent of the czar. Tip of the hat to you, good sir.

Did you know that Rasputin was a key agent in the Czar's version of the CIA ? Read the story again, in that light, and see whether it fits together somewhat better that way.

What was it that Dylan said about everybody "gotta serve somebody" ?

No, not Dylan Thomas. That other poet, and also a Bob, Dylan.

Morpheal

aka Bob

↑ Index

722. morpheal
(no subject)
Mon 23 Mar 1998

> Gee, a zillion words a day by whoever this guy is who knows more about Islam than Adonis, about spirituality than those for whom it is an active issue, about science than scientists, about space ships than aliens. Oh, and his (ho hum) manifesto too---thanks for the testosterone 'orph!

There was such a horrible lull in the levels of activity I felt obligated to stir it up a little....to see if there were any living beings remaining here, or if it is mostly the artificial intelligentsia all being in perfect agreement with one another like a good hive of drones.....

Nothing to do with testosterone though. I strongly object to that remark !!!! Though you are quite welcome to refer to me as Bozo the Clown if you wish to. I quite liked Bozo, years ago. Definitely one of my childhood heros. <wink> Perhaps a role model ? <grin>

Since you mention Adonis, and Islam, here is a little story that you might like.

It reminds me of this list a little byte...and of other lists similar to it, where it is mostly a dialogue of men with men. That is exactly what the Moslems would push the whole world towards, men only with men, and women only with women, developing very separate, very genderized and very stereotypic cultures according to their gender category.

I have noticed that there appear to be very few women participating on this, as on many other, lists. I have always wondered about that. Of course the Marxist dialecticians and the Moslems both approve of that schism and of a hard line division between genders such that women and men ought not enter into such discussions together. Even if the dialecticians and the Moslems do it for different reasons, and with different purposes.

Perhaps you know that in Islamic beliefs women are considered a different species than men. When men die, preferably in battle as that assures their passage, they reputedly go to some kind of paradise. There it is all men, with no human women whatever. They get served as to their every desire, there, by female beings of a different kind, who are described in that mythology.

Islamic women do not go to paradise, according to that mythology, and if they live lives of perfect servitude to their male masters in this world, and follow the Koran's teachings closely enough, they get snuffed out like candle flames when their time is ended. If women in that system do not conform to that supposed ideal they go to hell, and Islamic hell is something alike to what happened to European captives during the Crusades.

> Does anyone know where to get a bozo filter for listservs?
> Tom Mandel

Throw holy water at me...I might burst into flames.

Morpheal

↑ Index

723. david bromige
morphealist manifesto
Mon 23 Mar 1998

gee, i didnt recognize a word in this document. Must be that the words have all changed since it was written. db3

↑ Index

724. Ctfarmr
"costly clay"
Mon 23 Mar 1998

Henry G. wrote:

> This I find fascinating. Mandelstam's Voronezh poems
> are all about soil, black earth.
> Clay - American Bottomland - that's where the epics are.
> Time flowers on the lips of whispered clay.
> "costly clay"

Henry,

Your agricultural terms seem somewhat confused, possibly due to the brevity of your words, but I also suspect that you're not a farmer. (Jack Spandrift is a cowboy, not a sodbuster, right?) Here's the way I see it: Black earth is loam, which contains much more organic matter than either clay or silt. Bottomland (low lying land along a river, generally good crop land) is mostly silt, not clay. Clay,which is usually red, yellow, or white (not black), is not good for crops. When it's wet, it's sticky-gluey and when it's dry, it's rock-hard -- clay is, after all, what we use to make bricks. It's possible that epics often grow out of land that's mostly clay because it's so damn hard to farm. Is this what you meant with your brief comments?

Bobbie

↑ Index

725. Jordan Davis
transl/lostserv
Mon 23 Mar 1998

Henry what was so wrong with the mandelstam translation you quoted it seemed fine. But I am guilty of that kind of vague dismissal all the time I understand it it is like a maquette a cartoon of a future thought (hey Steve Carll are you out there?). Anyway that translation sounded oddly like Bowra's pasternak which I am pretty sure was a big influence on David Shapiro's poetry. Kisses on the breast like water from a pitcher.

After tromping about in New York's secret foggy Bolinas I went and heard Don Byrd and Madeline Gins read at Here this Sat. Don Byrd back from the desert read "After After the End of the World" "The happy family is eating the earth" which also had strong lines about duck-shaped melanomas. He read also from the Dimestore Centennial at Nick Piombino's request. Nick Piombino is the most showmanlike of poetry reading MCs, it is like a New Wave movie when he introduces readers. It was repeat repeat Madeline Gins read "The The Eyelid" blink blink blink. She also said many beautiful things "Daffodils should be called violets. Violets should be called earhorns." "God was pretentious" I myself was struck as in struck down by lines about faking getting it right after I laughed too loud. Lines about often having to fake understanding. A rousing, rousing reading.

Then Sunday New York Underground Film Festival Jeff Krulik's ("Heavy Metal Parking Lot") DC underground filmmakers my preface to seeing Rod Smith read with Andy Levy at the Cavern Club aka Zinc. Rod read a bit from Hegel's Mother about his toad Buber who keeps rabbits. Maybe if we all applaud and think good thoughts he will send it here. Hey Rod send it here. There were other more jazzlike codes he espoused too. Andy Levy read from a prosey sequence with the word "elephant" in the title. I was more tired and blotting out notes in my notebook so I have no lines of theirs, ow. Anyway that's what happened.

Signed,
Recalcitrant Buzzphobe

↑ Index

726. Keston Sutherland
(a tentative) part 3 of ON THE OCCASION A REPAST
Mon 23 Mar 1998

3

Should she arrest what's wailed to the blizzard entry and then parch the air, all its intimate flick-knifing prolonged pressure and constraint in that swelter she is (break) unprepared, a sanded bark-strip, positioned on fire;

that hollow's not engulfed in a clamour (swing right) but reeks of its technical negative, less bland and shat out in her sleep to its exhibit n mercy-carton twixt her teeth, a man made sure redress can bide with her should she wail or founder see, even the vault in heaven's momentous, no blaze streams at its own speed sideways cut across mind out contrive to be alert (BREAK) all stacked-down relished voluntariness in: (A) resist (B) rub-on placidity is an intromitted (C) pregnant gnat glued pat to a wasted by-road, a tax-bin. A few shoppers pace unhurriedly at this life, vaunting and mewling. One particularly big, peculiarly impressive cinder, taken for what it is will be blent up into her pyrrhic face-scrub, don't need to wait, you are forever safe, and the blizzard's bait.

↑ Index

727. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: "costly clay"

Mon 23 Mar 1998

Ctfarmr wrote:
>
> Henry G. wrote:
>
> >This I find fascinating. Mandelstam's Voronezh poems
> >are all about soil, black earth.
> >Clay - American Bottomland - that's where the epics are.
> >Time flowers on the lips of whispered clay.
> >"costly clay"
>
> Henry,
>
> Your agricultural terms seem somewhat confused, possibly due to the brevity of > your words, but I also suspect that you're not a farmer. (Jack Spandrift is a > cowboy, not a sodbuster, right?) Here's the way I see it: Black earth is loam, > which contains much more organic matter than either clay or silt. Bottomland > (low lying land along a river, generally good crop land) is mostly silt, not > clay. Clay,which is usually red, yellow, or white (not black), is not good for > crops. When it's wet, it's sticky-gluey and when it's dry, it's rock-hard -- > clay is, after all, what we use to make bricks. It's possible that epics > often grow out of land that's mostly clay because it's so damn hard to farm.

> Is this what you meant with your brief comments?
>
> Bobbie

Bobbie,
I believe Henry [& Mandelstam] referred to the black chernozemic soils of the Russian steppe.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

728. k. lederer
Re: Morpheal's message re: women on the list--
Mon 23 Mar 1998

I also wish that more women would post on this list--

And I wish that more women would submit to magazines--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

729. Schuchat Simon
Poet freed
Mon 23 Mar 1998

> South China Morning Post
>
> Internet Edition
>
> ---
>
> Tuesday March 17 1998
>
> Poet wins freedom after spending 10 months in police custody
>
> JOANNE LEE-YOUNG
>
> Poet Chen Dongdong, in police custody since last May, has been released.
>
> Chen, now in Shanghai, said the situation remained sensitive > and it was not convenient for him to give details.

>
> Before his arrest, he was poetry editor of Tendency Quarterly, a publication which began in 1988 as a Beijing underground magazine before being published publicly.
>
> Its Shanghai office was forced to close in 1992.
>
> Although the journal focuses on non-political subjects, including literature and art, it was closely monitored because of its links with the dissident community and access to American backers.
>
> Prior to his detention, Chen told the South China Morning Post the magazine's mainland editors and contributors had been questioned by police.
>
> "They suggested it was liaising with the democracy movement in the West," he said, adding that he denied the allegation.
>
> On one trip, Tendency founder and US-based dissident poet Bei Ling said he collected hundreds of underground publications, mostly dealing with poetry, literature, criticism and music.
>
> Bei, 35, said it was important to offer help to Chinese writers barred from publishing their articles or in financial trouble.
>
> "Literature should be freed from government control," Bei said."We have to give humanitarian support to these writers."
>
> Bei said Chen was arrested on charges of having had "illicit sexual relations".
>
> Chen had been repeatedly harassed by the public security bureau, said Bei.

↑ Index

730. Siann Ngai

Open Letter Launch in NYC

Mon 23 Mar 1998

Please join in the launch of Disgust and Overdetermination: a poetics issue, the latest issue of OPEN LETTER, a Canadian Journal of Writing and Theory, guest edited by Jeff Derksen. In an introduction Jeff notes an impulse not towards synthesis or unity in these works, but towards the stacking up, the overloading, the spilling over of contradictions... a movement from the fragmentary to the relational. It includes the greater part of a substantial essay by Sianne Ngai called Raw Matter: a Poetics of Disgust, as well as new work by Caroline Bergvall, Miles Champion, Louis Cabri and others. Local contributors Kevin Davies, Sianne Ngai, Brian Kim Stefans, Andrew Levy and Dan Farrell, will be on site to read.

The event will kick off around 8pm on March 27th at the Segue performance space, 303 East 8th Street.

We hope to see you for a lively evening of distribution.

Yours,
Dan Farrell

↑ Index

731. Karen Kelley

Re: Morpheal's message re: women on the list--

Mon 23 Mar 1998

---

k. lederer wrote:
>
> I also wish that more women would post on this list--
>
> And I wish that more women would submit to magazines--
>
> Best,
> Katy

Okay--I'll bite. I don't post much because the discourse of this list, like many, is one I don't want to get too caught up in. I don't want to have to defend myself, I don't want to clarify my thoughts in terms of someone else's idea of "logic," I don't want to try to pee higher up the tree than whoever might want to assert their greater authority. This isn't meant as criticism of the discourse, btw, it's just they way things look from where I type. Perhaps women are less drawn to competitive poetics (a gross generalization, I know).

Karen

↑ Index

732. R M Daley
KATY L Re: Morpheal's message re: women on the list--
Mon 23 Mar 1998

On Mon, 23 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> I also wish that more women would post on this list--
>
> And I wish that more women would submit to magazines--
>
> Best,
> Katy
>
hi katy - deceptively cold here today huh? - just got back from my new job!- no more pizza wooman sorry to say, as i know this listserv was waiting to here more of my pizza delights and escapades - but let me end the suspense right now and say IT SUCKED!!@#!#%!#@!$#@- my car will smell like pizza for weeks to come- and hows that for a spring time road trip- i did like bringin you and josh pizza, and wish i could have reaped the benefits of the position long enough to bring you and kevin some...late night romance candlelight pizza and email - but i could take it no longer- there is no romance about driving up and down the same street ten times cause the stupid person who takes orders cant spell -

anyway- i now work at a construction worker/lonely daytripper kinda bar/ restaurant- you know JCs cafe? it closed, turned into lou henri's (and don't pretend that is pronounced AHN-REES because the guy who cleaned out the place told me they left 10 years worth of grease on the back wall of the fryer and, god knows how long that deep fryer had gone wihtout getting a cleaning- i didnt want to hear any more myself, so i can guess what you're thinking) - but the bar, the 'outer limits', that's where i started today- boy do i smell like cigarettes rightnow...and a great jukebox and some ways to earn a little cash on the side i found out about- ask me about that later anyway, there are lots of reasons some people might not want to be writing on this listserv- maybe they are watching movies, like i like to do - i know you don't have a tv- maybe they have two jobs like i do and someimtes that just doesn't leave much time for this kind of social banterregardless, i am wondering , especially a question for all you fellas out there in listserv land, what exactly do YOU want from a woman, what can she provide you, what viewpoint does she inherently possess that will breach all those communication barriers and give you hmm and honest? woman's point of view? or is it that women present an honest human being's point of view? or not honest, maybe fresh? inspired? vaginal? what could this be? - i will be glad to capitalize on this capacity when this community will tell me how to do so- maybe this means not ever getting published, maybe it means not getting the right mfa- is this what a woman's point of view could be? - lurking in the back somewhere, popping up just to show all you men how it really is?

well katy, i'm glad you logged on today- i had to ask you something

rachel

↑ Index

733. Gabriel Gudding
Duck-shaped melanomas
Mon 23 Mar 1998

On Mon, 23 Mar 1998, Jordan Davis wrote:

> After tromping about in New York's secret foggy Bolinas I went and heard Don Byrd and Madeline Gins read at Here this Sat. Don Byrd back from the desert read "After After the End of the World" "The happy family is eating the earth" which also had strong lines about duck-shaped melanomas.

THE FOLLOWING IS FROM THE UNFORTUNATELY TITLED _LETTERS FROM A NUT_ BY TED L. NANCY. It is a book composed of around a 100 letters Nancy wrote to several famous service corporations, publishing firms, hotels and casino/hotels etc etc making preposterous demands, asking ludicrous questions and otherwise managing to be brilliantly cloying. The responses from the firms are also printed in the book.

Submissions Department
HIGHLIGHTS FOR CHILDREN MAGAZINE
2300 West 5th Ave
PO Box 16278
Columbus, OH 43216

Dear Submissions Department:

I have a feckle on my back, that when I stretch, looks like Anthony Quinn. I would like to sell my back as part of a magazine article. People love to look at my freckles. Should I send in the picture of my back for your magazine? Obviously I can't sell my back. Can I?

I have a few other freckles on my arm and a mole that when bunched together kinda looks like Richard Gere. When not bunched, Andy Griffith. If I brush the gray hair over the mole it looks like Gere. No gray hair, Andy Griffith. As I look at it now in the light, it looks like Andy Griffith.

Do you want to see it for your magazine? It would look good on your "fun" page. Who should I send the pictures to? Everyone always asks me to show them my freckles and moles. (And blemishes). The doctor said with age, as the freckle bleaches out, it could look like Dick Van Patten. I really enjoy your magazine. I am a long time reader. This is just a fun thing with these freckles. So, please let me know if I should send in a picture of my back and arms for your magazine. Thanks very much.

Sincerely,

Ted L. Nancy

Submissions Department
STAR MAGAZINE
660 White Plains Road
Tarrytown New York 10591

Dear Star Magazine:

I have a corn on my foot that resembles Shelley Fabares. How can I get my corn submitted to your magazine for inclusion? This is a standard size corn that closely resembles the "Coach" star. When I turn my foot in the light, the resemblance is uncanny. You would think Shelley Fabares is on my foot. (Can be mistaken for Ellen Degeneres if looked at fast. But why)?

My podiatrist said he will take off this corn soon. He says it is not healthy to keep a corn on your foot that long, even if it looks like a celebrity. I'd like to let the world see it before it is removed. How can I do this? Please let me know how I can send in the picture of my corn that looks like Shelley Fabares?

Sincerley,

Ted L. Nancy

↑ Index

734. Mairead Byrne

Re: Morpheal's message re: women on the list--

Mon 23 Mar 1998

Why should more women submit? To magazines or anything else. Down with submission. There are enough dopes out there already. Include me out.

Best,
Mairead

On Mon, 23 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> I also wish that more women would post on this list--
>
> And I wish that more women would submit to magazines--
>
> Best,
> Katy

↑ Index

735. Ctfarmr
costly clay
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Date: Mon, 23 Mar 1998 16:59:40 -0500
From: Daniel Zimmerman <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: "costly clay"

Ctfarmr wrote:
>
> Henry G. wrote:
>
> >This I find fascinating. Mandelstam's Voronezh poems
> >are all about soil, black earth.
> >Clay - American Bottomland - that's where the epics are.
> >Time flowers on the lips of whispered clay.
> >"costly clay"
>
> Henry,
>
> Your agricultural terms seem somewhat confused, possibly due to the brevity of > your words, but I also suspect that you're not a farmer. (Jack Spandrift is a > cowboy, not a sodbuster, right?) Here's the way I see it: Black earth is loam, > which contains much more organic matter than either clay or silt. Bottomland > (low lying land along a river, generally good crop land) is mostly silt, not > clay. Clay,which is usually red, yellow, or white (not black), is not good for > crops. When it's wet, it's sticky-gluey and when it's dry, it's rock-hard -- > clay is, after all, what we use to make bricks. It's possible that epics > often grow out of land that's mostly clay because it's so damn hard to farm.
> Is this what you meant with your brief comments?

>
> Bobbie

> Bobbie,
> I believe Henry [& Mandelstam] referred to the black chernozemic soils > of the Russian steppe.
>
> Dan Zimmerman

Right. Black earth is chernozemic. But Henry's bit seemed to be equating it with clay. That's what had me scratching my head.

Bobbie

↑ Index

736. k. lederer
Re: Reply to Karen and Mairead--re: women on the list
Tue 24 Mar 1998

I see your points--but still think that women should get on the list(s)--and should submit.

When I say things like "more women should do this or that..." people often say things like "why women? Aren't you essentializing?" and so on--

But the fact of the matter is that women (as a category) have been historically disenfranchised--

I don't pick the categories here--history already has--

Women writers have been very important to me--

Sure, Emily Dickinson didn't submit--and though she didn't take part in the discourse during her lifetime, her work takes part in it now.

But what kind of world would it have been for me if all of my female role models were already dead? How would it have been for me if I had had to move through an academy devoid of women? If people like Virginia Woolf and Gertrude Stein hadn't been there first?

Whether or not the public sphere sucks, women should get out there and be in it.

There is a connection between real life and literature--

There is a connection between economic, physical, and emotional oppression and literacy--

There is a connection between being a woman, in a woman's body and with a woman's perspective (however broad a category that may be), and the kind of writing that I as a woman produce.

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

737. Miekal And wo(men) on the list--
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Karen Kelley wrote:
 Perhaps women are less drawn to > competitive poetics (a gross generalization, I know).

I dont think its fair to genderize this, Im here in search of an active community, not to engrave my initials in the american poetry tree...Im interested in shared space, exchange, networking, humor & perpetuating an electronic environment which is inclusive & inviting.

miekal

↑ Index

738. henry gould
Re: costly clay
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Does loam contain clay? I thought clay was mineral-rich but I could be wrong. Also remember reading about a science study showing some kind of electro-magnetic movement - sort of a shifting back & forth - in clay that the scientists thought was a sort of primitive pre-life form.

Jordan, I do like those translations [by James Greene - from the collection EYESIGHT OF WASPS] of Mandelstam. But they're very English english, & maybe there could be some new OM translations in a different idiom.

clay is sculpture & pottery material. it's earth taking form as earth (as opposed to vegetation).

Spandrift never picked up a hoe in his life, believe it or not, even when he came off the range - but Henry's done a lot of gardening & even farm work. Just so y'all know a little about me.

- Sub-sub

↑ Index

739. Fred Muratori
For Laura (Riding) Jackson Fans
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Laura (Riding) Jackson and the Promise of Language
A Symposium and Exhibition
Cornell University, Ithaca, New York
October 8-9, 1998

An international gathering of scholars, including Laura (Riding) Jackson's authorized biographer, her bibliographer, students of her poetry, stories, criticism, and thought, and publishers of her work, will offer two full days of panel discussions and related presentations in a symposium timed to coincide with the opening of the first exhibition drawn from the extensive Laura (Riding) Jackson and Schuyler B. Jackson Collection held by the Cornell University Library. For this occasion, both a guide to the collection and an exhibition catalog will be made available, and most restrictions on scholarly access to the Collection will be permanently lifted.

For a complete program and information about housing in Ithaca, or to pre-register (no charge) please contact: Lorna Knight, Curator of Manuscripts, 2B Kroch Library, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY 14853-5302. TEL [redacted] FAX [redacted] [redacted].

Co-sponsored by the Division of Rare and Manuscript Collections, Cornell University Library and the Laura (Riding) Jackson Board of Literary Management. Additional funding provided by the Sonia Raiziss Giop Charitable Foundation.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

740. Don Wellman
Re: KATY L
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Rachel wrote:

"what exactly do YOU want from a woman, what can she provide you, what viewpoint does she inherently possess that will breach all those communication barriers and give you hmm and honest? woman's point of view? or is it that women present an honest human being's point of view? or not honest, maybe fresh? inspired? vaginal? what could this be?"

I for one would like to hear more dialog between women as well as among women and men. the economic threads, gender threads, sexuality threads, privilege threads and poetics threads are all fascinating to me.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

741. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: costly clay
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

there's some indication that kaolin has various regimes that interact and behave as primitive life-forms. there was an article years ago in, I think, Scientific American, among other sources.

Alan

↑ Index

742. Mairead Byrne
Re: Reply to Karen and Mairead--re: women on the list
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Well, Katy, I agree (although I had to resist the impulse to post to you privately rather than blaring all over; Woolf has something to say about the long shadow cast by the big ugly "I"). It was just the submit aspect that I baulked at. Could we not come up with a better way of describing that monthly alternative to buying lottery tickets: like I "offer" my poems to you, or "Recently, I bestowed some poems on Parnassus" or "Dear Editor, I wish to display/exhibit/ make a show of the enclosed poems" or "I give you these bright things on trust" etc etc. Mairead

↑ Index

743. Gary Sullivan
JAB 9
Tue 24 Mar 1998

The ninth issue of _The Journal of Artists' Books_, edited by Brad Freeman, is now available.

This issue features: Essays on Ulises Carrion (by Brad Freeman), Rosmarie & Keith Waldrop (by Johanna Drucker) and John Baldessari (by Victoria Sancho); reviews of Jean-Claude Gotting's _La Symphonie Silencieuse_ (by Cynthia Young), J.H. Kocman's _My Activity_ (by Ted Purves), and Roy Villevoye's _'No problem, brother!'_ and Helen Douglas's _Between the Two_ (by yours truly); and sports a beautiful cover designed and printed by Inge Bruggeman (publisher of INK-A! Press in Santa Barbara).

I have a couple extra copies I'll send, gratis, to the first couple of people to back-channel me. Otherwise, the issue is, postpaid, $9 (U.S., Canada, Mexico) and $12 for the rest of the world. Send to:

JAB
324 Yale Avenue
New Haven, CT 06515
USA

↑ Index

744. William Marsh
women hyperpoets
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

taking advantage of this recent thread, could listees please help with the following

women poets currently working in the "new media" vein, particularly web-based word arts (visual, kinetic/animated, e- poetry)?

names? URLs?

much obliged bill

- -
William Marsh
PaperBrainPress
Voice & Range Community Arts
National University
[redacted]
http://bmarsh.dtai.com

snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

745. Charles Bernstein
Hilda Morley (1919-1998)
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Bob Creeley sent me this note this morning:

> Just yesterday we heard that Hilda Morley had died Sunday night in London -- expected ... but hard none the less. We would have delightful long telephone conversations -- and I have known her since Black Mountain days. She has a substantial selection of her poems coming out just now with Moyer Bell, The Turning, for which I did a brief but heartfelt preface.

******

I picked this up from http://www.moyerbell.com/books/TURNING.HTM:

THE TURNING

Hilda Morley

"Hilda Morley's work inhabits a universe of quietly intense coastlines and rockscapes, of radiant sunlight and luminous mists . .." - Choice

"[Her poems] come to us wild and fresh, radiating a joy of invention that is inseparable from her word play."
- Stanley Kunitz

In her fifth collection of poems, poet Hilda Morley proves a master of rhythm and in poem after poem reveals her ability to recite with perfect pitch. With striking visual images, she brings new life and beauty to nature and inanimate objects. Her work has been described by colleagues as fluid, elegant, and organic.

there is only the language of a voice which turning on itself says (the dark streaking itself with glimmering) words of that voice saying (the only one in this dark place) begin, begin again.
(from "The Turning")

Hilda Morley has published five books of poetry, including What Are Winds What Are Waters and Cloudless at First (Moyer Bell), and has won numerous awards and fellowships. She lives in Sag Harbor, New York and London.

ASPHODEL PRESS
Poetry
190 pages : 7 x 10"
ISBN 1-55921-202-0 : $16.95 cloth

↑ Index

746. Maria Damon

Re: Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word (Announcement)

Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

a small point, but my title is the Public Spear, not Speak.

At 6:55 PM -0500 3/17/98, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>Forthcoming in April
>
>Close Listening
>
>Poetry and the Performed Word
>
>Edited by CHARLES BERNSTEIN
>
>Close Listening and the Performed Word brings together seventeen essays, >especially written for this volume, on the poetry reading, the sounds of >poetry, and the visual performance of poetry. While the performance of >poetry is as old as poetry itself, critical attention to modern and >postmodern poetry performance has been negligible. This collection opens >many new avenues for the critical discussion of the sound and performance >of poetry, with special attention to innovative work. More important, the >essays collected here offer wide-ranging elucidations of how >twentieth-century poetry has been practiced as a performance art. The >contributors cover topics that range from the performance styles of >individual poets and types of poetry to the relation of sound to meaning, >from historical and social approaches to poetry readings and to new >imaginations of prosody. Such approaches are intended to encourage new >forms of "close listenings"--not only to the printed text of poems, but >also to tapes, performances, and other expressions of the sounded word.
>With readings and "spoken word" events gaining an increasing audience for >poetry, Close Listening provides an indispensable critical groundwork for >understanding the importance of language in--and as--performance.

>
>
> 368 pp., 22 linecuts, 6-1/8 x 9-1/4
> $19.95w*, paper, 0-19-510992-9
> $49.95w, cloth, 0-19-510991-0
> April 1998
>
>Close Listening (paper), ISBN 0195109929
>Close Listening (cloth), ISBN 0195109910
>
>order from Oxford University Press
>or from your bookstore
>or from OUP on-line http://www.oup-usa.org/docs/0195109929.html
>
>Contents:
>
>Charles Bernstein, Introduction
>
>Soundís Measures
>Susan Stewart, Letter on Sound
>Nick Piombino, The Aural Ellipsis and the Nature of Listening in >Contemporary Poetry
>Bruce Andrews, Praxis: A Political Economy of Noise and Informalism
>Marjorie Perloff, After Free-Verse: The New Non-Linear Poetries
>Susan Howe, Either/Ether
>
>Performing Words
>Johanna Drucker, Visual Performance of the Poetic Text
>Steve McCaffery, Voice in Extremis
>Dennis Tedlock, Toward a Poetics of Polyphony and Translatability
>Bob Perelman, Speech Effects: The Talk as Genre
>Peter Quartermain, Sound Reading
>
>Close Hearings / Historical Settings
>Jed Rasula, Understanding the Sound of Not Understanding
>Peter Middleton, The Contemporary Poetry Reading
>Lorenzo Thomas, Neon Griot: The Functional Role of Poetry Readings in the >Black Arts Movement
>Maria Damon, Was that "Different," "Dissident" or "Dissonant"? Poetry (n)
>the Public Speak: Slams, Open Readings and Dissident Traditions >Susan Schultz, Local Vocals: Hawaiííís Pidgin Literature, Performance, and >Postcoloniality

>
>Afterword
>Ron Silliman, Who Speaks: Ventriloquism and the Self in the Poetry Reading

↑ Index

747. r. drake
Re: women hyperpoets
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

bill--

the Eastgate stable ov writers has a number of women promenant & active (deena larsen, judy malloy, cathy marshall, shelley jackson):

http://www.eastgate.com/

quite a bit ov work at the Maid in Hyperspace site:

http://www.studioxx.org/maidincyberspace/index.html

Christy Sheffield Sanford has quite a bit ov work; i particularly liked _Red Mona_:

http://web.purplefrog.com/~christy/red-mona/http://gnv.fdt.net/~christys/index.html

...this of the top ov my bookmarks... & conditional as to whether or no it's "poetry"...

luigi

> taking advantage of this recent thread, could listees please help with the following
>
> women poets currently working in the "new media" vein, particularly web-based word arts (visual, kinetic/animated, e- poetry)?
>
> names? URLs?
>
> much obliged > bill
>
> - -
> William Marsh
> PaperBrainPress
> Voice & Range Community Arts
> National University
> [redacted]
> http://bmarsh.dtai.com
> snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4

> San Diego, CA 92109
> - -

↑ Index

748. r. drake
Re: wo(men) on the list--
Tue 24 Mar 1998

miekal--

ov course it's fair to genderize this (which is quite a different thing than criticizing You) -- as an experiment, try tallying up th ratio ov women to men posting to this list; then compare it to the ratio ov wo/men subscribed... ov course, th handful of men who post daily or more will skew th result somewhat... (& i'm not criticizing; like k.l., i wish more women would join in)... but it's no coincidence, and gender, th social construct, has everything to do w/ it...

lbd

> Karen Kelley wrote:
> Perhaps women are less drawn to > competitive poetics (a gross generalization, I know).
>
> I dont think its fair to genderize this, Im here in search of an active community, not to engrave my initials in the american poetry tree...Im interested in shared space, exchange, networking, humor & perpetuating an electronic environment which is inclusive & inviting.
>
> miekal

↑ Index

749. Hzinnes
Re: JAB 9
Tue 24 Mar 1998

24 March l998

Dear Gary Sullivan

May I have a copy of your Journal of Artists' Books? Thank you so much for your generosity.

Sincerely

Harriet Zinnes

[redacted]

25 West 54 Street
New York, NY l00l9

I'll certainly be pleased to pay for the postage.

↑ Index

750. Hzinnes
Re: For Laura (Riding) Jackson Fans
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

24 March l998

Dear Staff:

As an art critic (and poetand literary critic as well) is it possible for you to send me the catalogue and other pertinent information since I'll bve unable to attend the exhibition and discussions?

Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

Harriet Zinnes
[redacted]

25 West 54 Street
New York, NY l00l9

↑ Index

751. R M Daley
Re: Reply to Karen and Mairead--re: women on the list
Tue 24 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> I see your points--but still think that women should get on the list(s)--and should submit.

wait- how can you see these points and go on to say this -

>
> When I say things like "more women should do this or that..." people often > say things like "why women? Aren't you essentializing?" and so on--
>
> But the fact of the matter is that women (as a category) have been > historically disenfranchised--
>
really i know it's more complicated than all that, than whining "oh you're essentializing and that's totally invalid..." --i hate that shit - but it

IS complicated, but i don't go through my day thinking i'm the historically disenfranchised- isn't everyone historically disenfranchised somewhere down the line? - the fact that i have to fucking fill out my taxes makes me some kind of angry and disenfranchised and bitter and (disenfranchised in the legal necessity to submit to such idiocy) - and somewhere down some line choosing to , conscoiusly choosing to, not take up the burden of everything constructed as history that says YOU WOMAN, YOU ARE DISENFRANCHISED - in fact , to be honest i'm not even sure who's a 'woman' and who's not- if i'm fucked up the ass? if i'm not? if i cry at certain movies? if i were feather boas (no that would make me a drag queen?) - what am i to do about the fact that i DON'T think about who's fucking me over because i'm a woman

> I don't pick the categories here--history already has--

GET REAL- just choose another history, there's millions to be had

> Women writers have been very important to me--
>
> Sure, Emily Dickinson didn't submit--and though she didn't take part in > the discourse during her lifetime, her work takes part in it now.
>
> But what kind of world would it have been for me if all of my female role > models were already dead? How would it have been for me if I had had to > move through an academy devoid of women? If people like Virginia Woolf and > Gertrude Stein hadn't been there first?
>
> Whether or not the public sphere sucks, women should get out there and be > in it.
>

one might respond that this is buying into a patriarchal structure of kissing ass, mutual stroking, and when women (historically?) have not benefitted much from public sucking , why start now?

> There is a connection between real life and literature--

literature is real life, last i checked - as is cleaning the bathtub or taking a walk or communing with the moon or making enchiladas

> There is a connection between economic, physical, and emotional oppression and literacy--
>
> There is a connection between being a woman, in a woman's body and with a woman's perspective (however broad a category that may be), and the kind of writing that I as a woman produce.

well i feel as though i have to get a new body, my woman's body is not getting my woman's perspective motor running - be specific here, i was being serious before - i want to know what to be looking for in my woman's writing, what makes it so, how broad can this category be? can it include men? if so, is that cause they have too little testosterone or maybe a little progesterone floating around or are gay? - meanwhile where did that thing i was working on...

> Best,
> Katy

lovingly

rachel

↑ Index

752. Gary Sullivan
Re: JAB 9
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Hi, Harriet:

You're the fourth to respond, & so will receive the last available gratis copy! I'll send it along to the address below today.

Be well,

Gary

On Tuesday, March 24, 1998 11:38 AM, Hzinnes [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> 24 March l998
>
> Dear Gary Sullivan
>
> May I have a copy of your Journal of Artists' Books? Thank you so much for > your generosity.
>
> Sincerely
>
> Harriet Zinnes
>
> [redacted]
>
> 25 West 54 Street

> New York, NY l00l9
>
> I'll certainly be pleased to pay for the postage.

↑ Index

753. Gary Sullivan
JABs all gone!
Tue 24 Mar 1998

The extra issues I had are all spoken for, now--but, again, you can get one from the editor/publisher, Brad Freeman, for $9 postpaid (US, Can, Mex), $12 (elsewhere):

JAB
324 Yale Avenue
New Haven, CT 06515
USA

Also: Potential reviewers/essayists interested in book arts definitely ought to get in touch with Brad: He's always looking for material . . .

↑ Index

754. s. kaipa
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Hi Katy,

I think your points about women and their participation in the process of being a public writer are well taken. I also think it's interesting to consider women's involvement in other forms of expression--ranging from the critical/philosophical to other mediums of art such as film. How many women philosophers can one think up anyhow? (Arendt? Kristeva?) And how many men come rolling off the tongue? Likewise with film--I can't, for the life of me, name a woman film maker. Perhaps these are my own shortcomings, but the lack of female names in these fields seems to indicate two things. One, maybe there aren't as many women working in these disciplines--which seems to be a societal problem. What does society do or not do to encourage/discourage women from participating in these activities. And/or, two, that women don't receive the same type of exposure that men do. The lack of exposure seems to me to be a greater problem right now given the number of women who are engaging in these various disciplines.

Some thoughts,

Summi

↑ Index

755. Thomas Bell
Re: Open Letter Launch in NYC
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Can this issue by obtained by mail?
tom bell

At 09:21 PM 3/23/98 -0500, Siann Ngai wrote: >Please join in the launch of Disgust and Overdetermination: a poetics >issue, the latest issue of OPEN LETTER, a Canadian Journal of Writing and >Theory, guest edited by Jeff Derksen. In an introduction Jeff notes an >impulse not towards synthesis or unity in these works, but towards the >stacking up, the overloading, the spilling over of contradictions... a >movement from the fragmentary to the relational. It includes the greater >part of a substantial essay by Sianne Ngai called Raw Matter: a Poetics of >Disgust, as well as new work by Caroline Bergvall, Miles Champion, Louis >Cabri and others. Local contributors Kevin Davies, Sianne Ngai, Brian Kim >Stefans, Andrew Levy and Dan Farrell, will be on site to read.
>
>The event will kick off around 8pm on March 27th at the Segue performance >space, 303 East 8th Street.
>
>We hope to see you for a lively evening of distribution.
>
>Yours,
>Dan Farrell
>
>

↑ Index

756. k. lederer
Re: Reply to Rachel re: women
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Rachel--

I AM getting real here--

We've talked about this before, but I don't always think it's a matter of details and refinement when it comes to gender--

I'm not interested in refining my points--in defining the differences between men and women, defining how possession of a female body might affect one's writing etc....

I understand that all of this is up for grabs IN AN IDEAL or otherwise intellectualized world--

But Rachel, this is the real world--

This is the world in which people (including other women) look at each other and make some pretty sweeping judgements based on superficial things like hair and dress--

I think that your position is fine in the long-run--as in, gender is a malleable category--everything is discourse--

But right here and right now--in my real life (and in yours) everything is not discourse--

People are real right now--living real lives.

As I've said to you (and Josh) before, I think it's lame to deny the real lives of real people as they are affected by perhaps "fictional" stereotypes in the interest of proving that everything is rhetoric and discourse--

When a teacher ignores a little girl in math class, this is NOT discourse--

When a woman feels like she has to giggle and say "I'm sorry" fifty times a day, this is NOT discourse--

When I go to the bookstore and see five times more men being published than women, this is NOT discourse--

These things are real--

At best your responses were intellectually feasible--

At worst they were smug--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

757. k. lederer
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Tue 24 Mar 1998

And poker....

Hi Summi--

All of this has made me think a lot about my views--to reconsider them--

My sister is a professional poker player, and I think this has a lot to do with my views--(along with my experiences as a student at a rather sexist boarding school, as a college student at a rather liberal college (Berkeley), as a poet who has worked in a number of environments--).

My sister is considered to be the best female poker player in the world. She is 32 and has two wonderful babies.

She got into poker because she needed to make some money (she dropped out of a PhD program in order to marry her husband...)--

Her story is super interesting, but suffice it to say that I have watched her play poker a lot--

I have watched the way in which men react to her--

I myself have experienced the incredible sexism of poker first-hand--

Men don't like it when women play poker--

Men don't like to lose to women--

I have been personally cussed out on numerous occassion for simply being a woman and having the audacity to play at the very public and open (like this list) tables in Vegas--

To my mind poker is much like the other industries you bring up--

Like film, philosophy, and other traditionally male pursuits, one rarely rarely hears about women--

I don't think this is because of lack of exposure--I think it's because fewer women practice these arts--

And I think that part of why fewer women practice these arts is that women are not encouraged to do so--

Some thoughts--

Yours,
Katy

↑ Index

758. k. lederer
Re: esp Rachel, Models of Power
Tue 24 Mar 1998

I think that a lot of my ideas about gender (and other categories) stem from a pretty simple distinction that has to do with how I conceptualize power--(Rachel: perhaps this will answer to your theoretical concerns...).

This little schema comes from a wonderful book by Jana Sawiki entitled DISCIPLINING FOUCAULT--in many ways it got me out of that mode of thinking in which everything ceases to be "true" and thus to matter, and showed me how to use theory in a productive and real way.

For Sawiki, the traditional Marxist model of power runs as follows:

1. Power is possessed (for instance, by the individual in the state of nature, by a class, by the people).

2. Power flows from a centralized source from top to bottom (for instance, law, the economy, the state).

3. Power is primarily repressive in its exercise (a prohibition backed by sanctions).

Foucault's model runs as follows:

1. Power is exercised rather than posessed.

2. Power is not primarily repressive, but productive..

3. Power is analyzed as coming from the bottom up.

(Sawiki, 1991, pp 20-21)

I'm more of a proponent of the second model--a model in which pervasive discourses are productive rather than repressive--

In other words--women should speak! Everyone should speak!

Exercise your power (however you may define yourself)--

As in Rachel: if you don't define yourself as a woman, then how do you see yourself? As human?

What is human?

I mean, people can do whatever they want, but what is it that you want to do? Is it enough to "know the truth"? Is it enough to be able to "see through" the discourses that are already out there and operating?

Best,
Katy--

↑ Index

759. R M Daley
Re: Reply to Rachel re: women
Tue 24 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> Rachel--
>
> I AM getting real here--
>
> We've talked about this before, but I don't always think it's a matter of details and refinement when it comes to gender--
>
> I'm not interested in refining my points--in defining the differences between men and women, defining how possession of a female body might affect one's writing etc....
>
> I understand that all of this is up for grabs IN AN IDEAL or otherwise intellectualized world--
>
> But Rachel, this is the real world--
>
> This is the world in which people (including other women) look at each other and make some pretty sweeping judgements based on superficial things like hair and dress--
>
> I think that your position is fine in the long-run--as in, gender is a malleable category--everything is discourse--
>
> But right here and right now--in my real life (and in yours) everything is not discourse--
>
> People are real right now--living real lives.
>
> As I've said to you (and Josh) before, I think it's lame to deny the real lives of real people as they are affected by perhaps "fictional" stereotypes in the interest of proving that everything is rhetoric and discourse--
>
> When a teacher ignores a little girl in math class, this is NOT discourse--
>
> When a woman feels like she has to giggle and say "I'm sorry" fifty times a day, this is NOT discourse--
>
> When I go to the bookstore and see five times more men being published than women, this is NOT discourse--

katy, of course these things are discourse, they are the ways that we go about our days in discourse by a method or by millions of discourses - the ways you and i or josh or big 'intellectual' namers interact is all so very so very determined by discourse, and sometimes this is evil i totally agree- the evil part to me i've found in my real-life-discourse (and i resent the insinuation that i am somehow different from someone having a real life ie a little girl or a girl who giggles whenever she talks...) the evil part is the fact that discourses become discourses in such a complicated convoluted inextricably indeterminable way that this gives people somehitng that allows them to say, hey, this is just how it is, we should go about things the way they've always been done and that's THAT - - or worse, it goes unrecognized -

i am totally not NOT denying that these examples you give are real, but i'm saying they are real, they are real discourse, or more specific, are seeming to be products of modes of discourse that are just as real as why i have to be delivering pizza - for tons of reasons or no reasons, but to me the thing to do is avoid those situations, recognize them, do my work

>
> These things are real--
>
> At best your responses were intellectually feasible--
>
> At worst they were smug--
>
smugly smugly smugly

> Best,
> Katy

rachel

↑ Index

760. morpheal
Re: Reply to Karen and Mairead--re: women on the list
Tue 24 Mar 1998

> I see your points--but still think that women should get on the list(s)--and should submit.

I think that the problem in that might be the word "submit". Submission is such a horrible concept. Obedience to a lord. Nasty idea.

None who enter into a dialogue with others ought to submit, but neither ought they to attempt to cause others to submit by means of conquest. It is, after all, an exchange of ideas and ought to be nurtured as such.

That ought, I think, to refer to men and women equally. Why should there be dominants and submissives in a kind of sadomasochistic brow beating ritual of whom shall we convert to a viewpoint today attitude. I hate the whole concept and fail to see what gender has to do with it. The list is after all, at its best, an exchange of intellectual ideas between persons who should have some sense of equal respect for each other.

Why should anyone, man or woman, submit ?

They ought here to express their own ideas, and where there are differences of opinion, that need not lead to a personal battle where one must defeat the other, and the crowd cheer the one that is left standing, while despising the one that has been knocked down. That barbarity does occur in many places, but surely it is possible to get beyond that mentality ?

Of course if someone attempts to force someone else, by any means at their intellectual disposal to cause someone else to agree they need to be resisted, as such tyranny ought not to be acceptable. However, does it matter whether it is a man or a woman who is attempting to push it over on someone else, or to take absolute dictatorial control over the whole ? I do not see gender as having anything to do with that. Women that I have known can do it as well as can men. Even the Pentagon has realized that fact and women are being offered combat roles, having been found to have the same killer instincts as men have been found to have. That does not mean that everyone ought to start to do one another in, even intellectually. We can be a little more civil to one another in times of peace than we tend to be towards enemy aggressors, can we not ?

Labelling a whole gender "the enemy" and attacking anyone who happens to have certain physical characteristics that are different from one's own, is no different than attacking all blue eyed people, or perhaps all people who have olive coloured skin. It is simply the same as racism, an extreme of prejudice. Of course, we see it happen on both sides of any fence. Express prejudice towards all blue eyed people and soon all blue eyed people will gather together and express their hatred for brown and green eyed people. It is inevitable...

Morpheal

↑ Index

761. morpheal
Re: costly clay
Tue 24 Mar 1998

> Does loam contain clay? I thought clay was mineral-rich but I could be wrong. Also remember reading about a science study showing some kind of electromagnetic movement - sort of a shifting back & forth - in clay that the scientists thought was a sort of primitive pre-life form.

Perhaps somewhat tangential.

The phrase "costly clay" is curious in that it implies the traditional cost of any ground being the human blood that was spilt in the taking of it. All ground was considered taken and held purely by cost of blood.

Adds an odd kind of nuance to any discussion of soils, Russian soils included.

Morpheal

↑ Index

762. R M Daley
Re: esp Rachel, Models of Power
Tue 24 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> I think that a lot of my ideas about gender (and other categories) stem from a pretty simple distinction that has to do with how I conceptualize power--(Rachel: perhaps this will answer to your theoretical concerns...).
>
> This little schema comes from a wonderful book by Jana Sawiki entitled DISCIPLINING FOUCAULT--in many ways it got me out of that mode of thinking in which everything ceases to be "true" and thus to matter, and showed me how to use theory in a productive and real way.
>
> For Sawiki, the traditional Marxist model of power runs as follows:
>
> 1. Power is possessed (for instance, by the individual in the state of nature, by a class, by the people).
>
> 2. Power flows from a centralized source from top to bottom (for instance, law, the economy, the state).
>
> 3. Power is primarily repressive in its exercise (a prohibition backed by sanctions).
>
> Foucault's model runs as follows:
>
> 1. Power is exercised rather than posessed.
>
> 2. Power is not primarily repressive, but productive..
>
> 3. Power is analyzed as coming from the bottom up.
>
> (Sawiki, 1991, pp 20-21)

> I'm more of a proponent of the second model--a model in which pervasive discourses are productive rather than repressive--
>
> In other words--women should speak! Everyone should speak!
>
> Exercise your power (however you may define yourself)--
>
> As in Rachel: if you don't define yourself as a woman, then how do you see yourself? As human?

no i don't go for all that hippy granola shit- but this point/question above is exactly my problem with identity politics of power katy, you are dictating to me to define my identity - i don't see myself any particular way at all times, more like a particular way at any particular time - you know that cheesy bumper sticker, keep your laws of my body - - well thats as close as i can come - you're not seriously dictating to me or anyone else other than yourself how i sholud go about my day, spend my time and energy, how i should define myself - and see i don't ever want to be told to claim knowledge wisdom voice insoght beauty squalor sentiment emotion for anyone , not myself or anyone , and sure as hell not for some idea of community, of "women" or i like this better, "woman," which never exists and would rather not have rather not have anything i claim to write be declared part of a woman's perspective, as this is cordoning it off, saying well this is just woman's writing or gee this is woman's writingor oh isnt this keen it's woman's writing, i never new - this kind of response to writing or, as you seem to suggest, to one' real life, is like saying, oh that is what comes of not having a dick, that is that other things, the other species , or at best, containing it in order to excuse it or explain it away - just don't want this please and finally the idea of "woman's" perspective, one i have to take on and make my own cause i don't have a dick, seems to have to be starting with, hey i'm the forgetten, the lost, the negelcted, i'm marginalized to begin with so listen to me- i'm needed for always already (!!!???!!!) having been lost

so i'd just rather not be called lost before having a chance to get lost myself

>
> What is human?
>
how the hell would i know - i thought titanic was really fuckin stupid and wanted leonardo to die already and hated i mean HATED the jewelry

rd

>

↑ Index

763. Keston Sutherland
Re: esp Rachel, Models of Power
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

wouldn't Foucault say that, whilst productive rather than repressive (strictly speaking), power can nonetheless be used to produce repressive conditions? And that in fact it regularly is? Why does this lead to

> In other words--women should speak! Everyone should speak!

? Of course they should. There's a gehenna of links I'm missing

↑ Index

764. Keston Sutherland
Re: esp Rachel, Models of Power
Tue 24 Mar 1998

> so i'd just rather not be called lost before having a chance to get lost myself

this is --dead right--, I reckon.

Please continue, Rachel and Katy, this is a stimulating exchange

↑ Index

765. henry gould
submission
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Seems like the general experience in trying to get published is, you "submit to rejection". sort of a double whammy. unless you get lucky (or connected) & "submit to acceptance".

"send your submissions, with entry fee, to..."

maybe they should be called emissions.

"your ms. emission has been felt. thank you but we are unable to absorb it at this time. now go clean yourself up."

not much of an improvement.

how about arrows? "Your arrows have hit the market. thank you. we will get back to you soon - hopefully by November 2026."

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

766. k. lederer
Re: Reply to Rachel re: women
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Hmmm--

To return to the orginal point of debate--

Okay--so there is no distinction between the real and discourse in your view--I can go with that.

When you say, though, that you feel the best strategy for you is to avoid situations in which the "discourse" is fucked up in a way that is anathema to your needs and desires (your discourses) and is to "just do your work," aren't you evading the larger issue at hand in this discussion?

Namely: why aren't there more women on this list?

I glean from your last post that perhaps women don't participate in this space because they feel it doesn't jibe with their preferred "discourse"--that it's inimical to the work they want to accomplish (this was echoed by Karen and Mairead also, I believe)--

So--okay--maybe you don't want to participate in forums that seem competitive or male-dominated--

I guess I feel like this is a cop-out. There is nothing inherently male (there is nothing inherently discursively masculine) about an electronic list--

There is nothing inherently "masculinist" (or competitive, or inimical to getting your work done, whether you are a woman or a man) about poetry--

About banks--

About poker tables--

About poetry MFA programs--

About any space whatsoever--

If women (or any other dissatisfied group or individual or family or generation or whatever) just decide to withdraw from participation--even if they decide to start there own forums (women's groups, magazines, lists...) then where does that leave the new generation of women? Of poets? Of human beings?

It's like--here at the Workshop a lot of people complain about the parties, about the networking and schmoozing--

But I mean jeez, if all of the people who complained actually participated, then the parties and other events would be a lot different--

You know?

Anyway--back to the original point--

I still wish more women would participate on this list. I think it would change the discourse here in an interesting way--

I still wish more women would publish--

I like to read work by women--

I like to read work by lots of people--not just the ones who are ambitious enough, or whatever enough to submit to magazines "naturally"--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

767. Aldon Nielsen
L.A. reading by Michael Davidson and David Bromige
Tue 24 Mar 1998

An early alert for Los Angelenos and out-of-towners headed for Houston who may want to fly on to Southern California --

Thursday April 23 -- 7:30 PM Loyola Marymount University Poetry reading by David Bromige and Michael Davidson

Friday April 24 -- NOON Loyola Marymount University
Michael Davidson and David Bromige discuss their poetry

both events free & public annoying reminders accompanied by further details in future weeks

TELL EVERYBODY

↑ Index

768. Maria Damon
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

interesting that poker shd poke its head up... in my dept there was a longrunning poker game to which only (the right) men in the dept were invited, which was where all the real decisions were made...i think the game may still be going on, but without the power it once had in dept politics...a paradigm breaking moment came when a young chaucerian (who has since left) whom none of the guys realized was mildly progressive and definitely-not-them, turned down the almighty invitation to join The Game...the department was never the same.

At 11:35 AM -0600 3/24/98, k. lederer wrote:
>And poker....
>
>Hi Summi--
>
>All of this has made me think a lot about my views--to reconsider them--
>
>My sister is a professional poker player, and I think this has a lot to do >with my views--(along with my experiences as a student at a rather sexist >boarding school, as a college student at a rather liberal college >(Berkeley), as a poet who has worked in a number of environments--).
>
>My sister is considered to be the best female poker player in the world.
>She is 32 and has two wonderful babies.
>
>She got into poker because she needed to make some money (she dropped out >of a PhD program in order to marry her husband...)--
>
>Her story is super interesting, but suffice it to say that I have watched >her play poker a lot--
>
>I have watched the way in which men react to her--
>
>I myself have experienced the incredible sexism of poker first-hand--
>
>Men don't like it when women play poker--
>
>Men don't like to lose to women--
>
>I have been personally cussed out on numerous occassion for simply being >a woman and having the audacity to play at the very public and open >(like this list) tables in Vegas--
>
>To my mind poker is much like the other industries you bring up--
>
>Like film, philosophy, and other traditionally male pursuits, one rarely >rarely hears about women--
>
>I don't think this is because of lack of exposure--I think it's because >fewer women practice these arts--
>
>And I think that part of why fewer women practice these arts is that >women are not encouraged to do so--

>
>Some thoughts--
>
>Yours,
>Katy

↑ Index

769. Keston Sutherland
verisimilitudes and usefulnesses
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

re: recent Qs re: participation rate on -this- list specifically - I hardly ever mail anything other than poems to this list, I don't have the requisite genre of energy, this makes me one of those for whom its climate is in some sense forbidding, (1) does this matter (2) does it matter less with regard to me because I am male (3) because I am not hindered by anxiety exactly (4) because I do not feel that other list members extinguish my urges (5) I think these -are- Qs worth sifting through with an open mind i.e. without the preposed conclusion that those who don't OUGHT TO, or that they ought to HERE - other lists I'm on are different, there are list characters

If they -ought to-, the character of their participation is different and, in terms of the relative autonomy of their motive for participating, is -inferior- to that of those males for whom ought is an irrelevance

If it matters less with regard to me because I am male, this is by dubious virtue of my 'type' of contributor being already well represented

I don't feel supernumerary in this assembly, nor do I feel part of a majority; there is a savoury naivete in this remark, of course, and Katy's right to encourage talks, thought I'd post a 2 bit, k

↑ Index

770. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Reply och trembling viacom
Tue 24 Mar 1998

RM DALEY - ach, I dunno what so, part of what yr reacting against seems a sort of smugness or mebbe decidedness in women SHOULD, as if it were evident or why should they, exactly?

which addresses, on it's flip-side (backside?) the sort of worrysome, patronizing aspect of publishers pushing for a ~ 50/50 gender split
- instead of, say, publishing what is important to them or to poetry or etc. As if it were so clearly the issue, that women lack venue and need it charitably given them...

compare Lily James:
"On the Postfeminist Playground, Susannah Breslin and I have created a space for our fiction writing where no space existed [....] We wrote essays about Postfeminism instead of waiting for a critic to discover us. We created our own focus, decided on our own path, and began delivering the goods to our readers."
<http://www.pfplayground.com/greattaste/latest.htm>

which is not separatism, but "get over it"...

(btw, how's this for a book title: Lily James'
The Great Taste of Straight People. it's on FC2/Black Ice:

"Both children were stern and brushed down.
They wore conservative clothes. They were bad looking. Dianna stepped to them.") on the other hand, I do look @ a table of contents or a list of publ. books suspiciously if there don't seem too many women on it. and I do worry abt.

gender issues in relation to my own press.

mebbe that's me just beeeen my old bourgeois self. gender still matters because we make it matter.

hey, you should answer my email more often, you know.

chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

771. Gwyn McVay
women who do write
Tue 24 Mar 1998

forgive the slightly-off-topic-ness, but among the women who do write, I'm glad Mei-mei Berssenbrugge does write--have finally gotten round to her EMPATHY and SPHERICITY, two recent Bridge St. purchases, & read around in each, even while "submitting" my alleged master's thesis to the tender mercies of the Ruler Lady who Measures Margins (Graham Foust will remember her), & her extended ice-floe sequence haunts one something like Notley & creates space something like Lauterbach, while being of course very much Berssenbrugge's own--does that make any sense?

the sometimes doubtful McVay

↑ Index

772. CharSSmith
Sound States
Tue 24 Mar 1998

has anyone read or know anything about this book?

--Charles Smith

Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies
by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998)
ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.
"At least since the late 1920s some writers have been trying to free writing from the book, from the restrictions of print. This collection of essays explores the aural aspect of poetics, especially focusing on the technologies of sound and the possibilities they provide and provoke. Subjects range from Caribbean dub poetry to the experiments of John Cage and Cecil Taylor. Here's a book to add to that small but vital shelf that illuminates this essential ground--it's a good introduction to the issues and sends you off to the best source material. "

↑ Index

773. David Zauhar
Re: Sound States
Tue 24 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, CharSSmith wrote:

> has anyone read or know anything about this book?
>
> --Charles Smith
>
> Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies
> by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998)
> ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.

Haven't read much of it, but I've listened to the CD, which I'm surprised goes unmentioned by the blurb you quote below: It's a great mix (the disc, that is) w/ recordings ranging from HD reading a bit of _Helen in Egypt_, to Marinetti raving about "Bombardamento di Andrianopoli," as well as soundpoems by Ball, Hausmann, and Kruchenykh, not to mention recordings of Lee "Scratch" Perry and Rahsaan Roland Kirk. I've read the essays by Adelaide Morris ("H.D. on the Air"), Steve McCaffery's great "The emergence of the Audio Poem"), and I've started Jed Rasula's lengthy essay on "voice" entitled "Poetry's Voice-Over," but a headache got the better of me. So I'm not lamenting having spent the $25, which seems high, if you don't take into account the accompanying CD.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

So often nothing happens
and then when something does
noone notices.

--Alan Davies

↑ Index

774. Keston Sutherland
add-on disappointment (fwd)
Tue 24 Mar 1998

---

re: oughts/shoulds

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 7 Feb 1998 20:54:37 -0500 (EST)
From: Keston Sutherland <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: add-on disappointment to repeat myself:

(1) I suppose what I'm groping after here, is that the quality of disappointment arising from a preparation to be disappointed is different from that arising 'naturally', though perhaps only (and this, I hope, rather clinches the imperative) in -degree-. 'Natural' disappointment has the flavour of Nietzsche's criticism of the Romantics, that naivety is basically a paradox, and is negative; because not prepared for adequately (or, perhaps, honestly), its issuing sense of reappointment is of inferior urgency.

Been pondering, with somewhat emaciated attention (Boss Hogg were a bit disappointing), whether it's strictly accurate to say that the difference between 'prepared' and 'natural' disappointment is in -degree-; might it not also be the case, that the former affection is more properly -spontaneous-? That's to say, more voluntary, and therefore more assertive of one's -own- disrespect, as distinguished from (though not quite opposed to) simple disrespect? That distinction is a tenuous one, but smacks of at least a trifling validity - that prepared re-appointment is more impressively reflexive than re-appointment arising from unanticipated dissatisfaction, i.e. its effects are not stimulated (and directed) by the substance of the book/film/song/poem alone, but also by one's own immediately relevant understanding of the imperatives arising from dissatisfaction.

This seems, perhaps, a bit counter-intuitive; if our intuition would have us pleased by what we spend time over, why should we minimise our chance of being so? Isn't this a mere prejudice, inflated and inspecific? Furthermore, wouldn't it effect in both reader and text a kind of repression of generosity - a pre-emptive stultification of possible, helpful results of reading, diminishing the ability of the text to 'mature' in reading and, at the same time and as the aetiological motive of that diminution, making the reader -lethargic-? Persistence has been greatly extolled, over the past couple of decades and in certain areas of the poesy earth, as the necessary state of a successful reading attitude; many current writings would be almost untouchable if we were not persistent with them - if we did not arrest, or at least consciously defer our initial disappointment.

Firstly, whilst a preparation to disappointment is likely to stimulate what it prepares, and our chance of being pleased is in that sense minimised, it's only through this preparedness that 'our chance' and 'being pleased' can be seen clearly; that their stratification in value and into values (political values being one set) can be perceived and examined; that, to take account of the poem simultaneously, culturally and artificially installed mechanisms of 'efficacy' in the object regarded can be distinguished from the effects they (seek to) produce: infectious, -reflex- acceptance (a granting of permission) can be exorcised from pleasure.

The prejudice is certainly inspecific in outset. In fact, it -must- be so: to keep unpreparedness in reserve, to read one's favourite authors without the same negative anticipation, is to exercise a tacit and un-self-reproved tendency to grind to a halt (to settle down with what one has, whether this is for comfort or its opposite). This bears, I feel, upon the issue of addressing discrepencies in the reception of women's poetry compared to that of men's: it's poisoning the root of the aspiration for equality and for redress, which is an aspiration I share, to allow a preparation to disappointment to be appalled by its circumstantial dependency on a politic hopefulness. Women's poetry deserves and demands exactly the same rigour, exactly the same distinction of its pleasures from its 'cultural' efficacy, as does men's. I wholeheartedly approve of positive efforts in publishing, buying books, organizing readings and urging reviews. There are many women's poetries that disable the fruition of a prepared disappointment, and in doing so, succeed without affectionate, implicit patronage.

Regarding the repression of possible reading-results - that a text becomes -less- if treated in this manner, I can only assent. And this, too, seems quite equitable. There are different powers of achievement in poetry, and to some extent this difference is the product of situation and other, apposite external factors; but those achievements (felicities, as it might have put a while ago, or -qualities of significance-) can be sorted, over time and within the experience of an individual reader, into two types (or rather, identified as two types): those which are contingent upon a neutral (or eager) receptivity for their effectiveness, and those which are effective either because of or despite having no such contingency - those which are capable of converting the latency of a prepared disappointment into its own total incapacity. Such a description is more than a little bloated, but seems approximately relevant to me, right now. And, importantly, wouldn't be made without prepared disappointment, the description itself being an analysis that occurs -in rapid reappointment-. Those qualities which -do- convert latency to incapacity, are genuinely exalted (they make me happy), the more so, or, in fact -at all- for having been categorically distinguished from other effects and in that way exposed as rarities. Disappointment re-enables rarity, replaces dormant rarity.

Lethargy is a disarming charge, or at least, might be disarming if left unexamined. I think it's crucial to see the difference between lethargy and refusal - that the former is a phatic and partly instinctive behaviour, characterized by a later, incurred regret; refusal, on the other hand, whilst momentarily similar, branches off from lethargy in its repercussion, and is then known to have been radically different from it. Refusal is an access to a politics of identity; lethargy is a partially accidental eschewal of access. It is not lethargic to approach poetry with a prepared dissappointment. Rather, it is either one or two refusals: firstly, the refusal of a default 'enthusiasm' (with which word, Peter's Puritans are recalled), which is an entailed benefit; secondly, the potential refusal to -linger-. By this I mean, that whereas a reader who is not prepared to be disappointed, finds her or himself lingering over their disappointment after reading a poem (questioning why they had not anticipated their reaction, what had made them react in such a way, why had they spent the 10.99/20 mins. etc), a 'prepared' reader is able instantly to become reappointed, to reassert her or himself, to recognise the causes of his or her reaction without that recognition being entirely -symptomatic- of (bought, paid for) literary unsuccess.

This rapid reappointment, I would argue, -is- persistence; it does not allow the relaxing rhythms of hopefulness and symptomatic dismay, it will allow a reader to read more in less time, and, I believe to feel more specifically and with less 'apolitical' delusion the true magnificence of rarity.

Fuck 'postmodern' pastiche.

Again, much more needed,

K

↑ Index

775. Miekal And

Re: women hyperpoets

Tue 24 Mar 1998

William Marsh wrote:
>
> taking advantage of this recent thread, could listees please help with the > following
>
> women poets currently working in the "new media" vein, particularly > web-based word arts (visual, kinetic/animated, e- poetry)?
>
> names? URLs?

maria damon & I are putting together a multi-site hypertext called Literature Nation, enterable thru many different web nodes within the next couple months...

10 digit lifepod

↑ Index

776. Christopher Reiner
SF Reading
Tue 24 Mar 1998

If you're in the area...

Cydney Chadwick and Elizabeth Treadwell reading their prose and poetry,
Friday April 3rd, 7:30 p.m.
Caffe Sapore, 790 Lombard St. (at Taylor).
(One block west of Columbus, near the San Francisco Art Institute).
[redacted].

FREE.

Elizabeth Treadwell is the editor of the literary magazine Outlet and proprietress of Double Lucy Books. Her novel _Eleanor Ramsey: the Queen of Cups_ was published last year, as was a chapbook, Eve Doe (becoming an epic poem). _Populace_, a collection of her prose and poetry, is due out this year from Avec Books. She is currently working on a collection of stories. Her new work is due out in Tinfish 6, The Artful Mind, Errant Bodies, Tripwire: A Poetics Journal, Fabula and non.

Cydney Chadwick has been the director of AVEC publications since 1988. She is the author of seven books and chapbooksQthe most recent of which is _Inside the Hours_. Her work has appeared in five American anthologies--the latter two from Sun & Moon Press. Her prose has been translated into Portuguese for a Brazilian anthology of experimental American fiction, titled _Without Explanation_, which is forthcoming out of Sao Paolo. Several of her stories are being translated into Russian for the publication Poetry Olympics.

↑ Index

777. Don Wellman
Re: women
Tue 24 Mar 1998

In words like these:

"i am totally not NOT denying that these examples you give are real, but i'm saying they are real, they are real discourse, or more specific, are seeming to be products of modes of discourse that are just as real as why i have to be delivering pizza - for tons of reasons or no reasons, but to me the thing to do is avoid those situations, recognize them, do my work"

Rachel is responding to katy about her experience of gender and seems to inist that an ungendered space that is the real space of her life be acknowldged. To me it seemed that Rachel's first post invoked sexuality, more so than it did gender. There she wrote:

"what exactly do YOU want from a woman, what can she provide you, what viewpoint does she inherently possess that will breach all those communication barriers and give you hmm and honest? woman's point of view? or is it that women present an honest human being's point of view? or not honest, maybe fresh? inspired? vaginal? what could this be?"

...seems to be a "real" here that is opposed to the reality of discourse, a desire to "breach communications barriers" -- not a denial of communications barriers and their censoring effects or the need to overcome them. But it also seemed to me that Rachel's post puts sexuality into play as human and some how distinct from discourse.

The question that this raised for me is what happens to those who embrace(know/like/dislike) the human, the "hmm and honest"??? Are those who know such most often female? Do any who know/experience such write poety? Can this point of view be defined in terms that are poetic and sexual but not gendered?

Don Wellman

↑ Index

778. Henry Gould
scuba diving
Tue 24 Mar 1998

It is good to read MOBY DICK, not commentaries. Leer, if you will.

Black holes swallow the crippled sky-Hawking; yet he fingers his remote.

Bible leaves! White forehead. Flag of Ahab; crushed skyhawk; drowned Gay Header (Tashtego).

Peter Paul and Pole.

Dying stars = neutrons. Perfect spheres of iron. Harpoons.

Forehead overwrit = hieroglyph. Vengeance is mine. I will repay.

Mere mer amer. Notre Dame.

Bloodrose.

- P.C. (politically-correct) (avenging eunuch = AHAB) (snow...)

-Ye W/Hale

I alone am write it down down.

↑ Index

779. Mairead Byrne

Re: Reply to Rachel re: women

Tue 24 Mar 1998

About Mairead: I thought the name might be sufficiently occult to pass. About submission: How about: I wish to release these poems... disclose these poems ... reveal / expose / flaunt or otherwise blatantly thrust forward these poems. But non serviam!! Mairead

↑ Index

780. Marcella Durand

womanly

Tue 24 Mar 1998

Although it's easy for women to feel invisible (I know!) just keep opening up opening up opening up. Talking talking talking. Also, there _are_ women lurking and posting: count them. Women need to send out more (this directive is also directed towards myself), be less perfectionistic, discount the opinions of others more, also need to curate more readings, start literary magazines, contribute to critical writing (a particularly difficult point--how to be critical when you are very often criticized???) I am interested in perception. Am I actually "pushed" out more, or am I, socialized as woman, more sensitive to regular ongoing criticism, dog-eat-dogism??? Are my words, when said, as weighty? Do I accept my own words?

Katy, thanks for opening up these cans of worms--need to be opened--worms are good! Make soil! Grow plants!

↑ Index

781. Scott Pound
Re: Open Letter Launch in NYC
Tue 24 Mar 1998

> Can this issue by obtained by mail?
> tom bell

Since I happen to have the issue right beside me, here is the address:

OPEN LETTER
499 Dufferin Ave.
London, ON N6B 2A1
CANADA

Single issues are $7Cdn. ($9 international)

↑ Index

782. Karen Kelley
Models of Power
Tue 24 Mar 1998

R M Daley wrote:

>exactly my problem with identity politics of power
> i don't see myself any particular way at all times, more like a particular way at any > particular time -
though I am conscious of being perceived as a woman ALWAYS. I have been an art student, a mother, a teacher, a bookstore clerk, a poet, a sister, a wife, a stripper, an executive, a web designer, an analysand, a divorcee, a sister, a mistress, caregiver to a terminally ill brother, a bodybuilder, half of an interracial relationship. In each and every one of these situations, I have also been reminded each and every moment that I am a woman. I have NEVER met a man--or a woman--who doesn't assess a woman's body on first meeting. It is cultural, it's what we've been taught to look at, and I don't particularly mind it. In fact, I go to the gym to make my body look the way I want. I check out men. The bigger the better. I loko at the other women. I am a feminist. I like pornography. I understand I am politically incorrect on some of these issues by some standards, that I am immoral by other standards, and that I am illogical by any standard.

I am not interested in pinning things down; I've tried to define myself, been defined, both as an individual and as part of a larger collective, be it white, female, college-educated, literate, artistic, blah blah blah. The thing is: none of the definitions are particularly interesting or particularly apt.

I'm not interested in assuming power: power is less interesting than submission. Sometimes.

I don't want to crystallize my thoughts; I don't want to say what's true.

I write what I want, so God forbid it be the same all the time, or logical, or correct, or sensible, or legible, or female.
>
> so i'd just rather not be called lost before having a chance to get lost
> myself

That last line's the best.

And none of this refers to YOU, particular man reading this post. I am talking to the IDEA of men. And it isn't me talking, it's your idea of a woman.

(Serious p.s.: I really didn't mean you, Miekal. And I'm sorry if it made you upset.)

↑ Index

783. Wendy Kramer indoor plumbing
Tue 24 Mar 1998

A pub privy too, "i never new"

me i been all backchannel since i got my "service" a couple weeks ago. and have been lurking since i got on listserv about same time then again lurking is also Watching i LOVE to watch hEAR heh heh theres productive power innit... heh heh "i got/ a rat-proof/ crib!" (a jonathan williams quote of a found pome) and how do it all hang?!? in there.

but down to biz. anybody member the dorothy richardson pooltable scene? miriam the protagonist plays pool with the men, with the other women looking on... poker that other gaming table made me think of it, and mention of pissing higher, cuz funnily i was just writing a private letter about richardson's stream "pissonit"-- of consciousness, and about consciousness not being a stream... (i'd longhanded --is that what letter writing is?)-- (piss higher honey) isnt (i wage her) a stream. epistolary lives!

anyway. mr. marsh- i submit my name wendy kramer for your hyper poets. i dont have a home url but you can go to the epc and sea... like 'merican singles it was made with real cheese.

enuf of this game. 500 hundred peeple? (anybody read alfred bester?) yup, intimidating.
outta practice butt hadda say hey,

wendy

↑ Index

784. Billy Little what do man want?
Tue 24 Mar 1998

Crystal Balls, Or The Idea of Practice Makes Practice Perfect (for "you know who"<or David McFadden> both) indulging my weakness for prophecy can see, for example, there'll come a time when i disappoint you,

this is simple to see more mere memory,
hasn't everyone disappointed you?
Speaking personally
i've disappointed everyone I could,
and everyone has disappointed me if they could,
so i thought if i disappointed you right away, we could have that over with and get right down to the funny business get down to the refusal of eternity get down to the calm determined practice the frenzied practice?

the spontaneous regenerating practice the heartwarming practice the cold blooded practice

the practice of the ha ha harmonious melodious ha has the syncopated practice

simulated interrupted disappointing practice

the perpetual amateur and sentimental practice of love, amateur love unpracticed unrehearsed practice poor paid highly ha ha practice practice of now, pre-petroleum practice

the acknowledged stickum of the planet mama the resonating rechargeable practice mama piano practice fortissimo allegro practice confluent incongruous boogie woogie practice

the inconsolable and consuming practice the here again gone again practice practice giraffe practice gingko tree practice guffaws, practice spelling bee practice sister practice brother practice telepathy hell reincarnation play Possession Mama spirit of the self gotten mama practice mammal practice, four legged practice sabre toothed practice sewing practice teeth, rolling practice eyes hair trigger rapid fire practice finger jackhammer jalopy practice zippers and snaps

salmon sucking practice thorough methodical practice divine practice, imperfectable practice, pre-season practice

post funny practice, intolerable, longwinded practice just -can't-quit-this practice until we're memorized predictable or prophesied.

st. ink
forbidden plateau fallen body dojo 4 song st.
nowhere, british columbia canada V0R 1Z0

↑ Index

785. Shemurph
Tom Mandel's e-ddress
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Tom, if you're out there, would you refresh me on your e-mail address?

I need to backchannel you!

Thanks.

Sheila
[redacted]

↑ Index

786. Rebecca Weldon Sithiwong
women on the list
Wed 25 Mar 1998

It seems to me that the list is subject oriented, producing participation in several conversations. These conversations interest, mystify or bore, the measure of which is participation. The exception would be intimidation; do any women on this list feel intimidated?

I would be interested to hear what women think about the poetics of their own work. I'd also like to hear what men think about what these women express. But can we avoid a very boring rehash of male "I'm a feminist, too" stuff?

Rebecca

↑ Index

787. Stephen Cope
Fwd:MEXPERIMENTAL
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Film buffs in the San Diego, LA, and SF Bay Areas may be interested in this...

Stephen

> From: Ritagonzal <[redacted]>
> Date: Mon, 23 Mar 1998 13:15:39 EST
> To: [redacted]
> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Subject: MEXPERIMENTAL
>
> Stephen.
> Please forward to grads and all of your interested groups. Thanks.
> r

NEWS RELEASE

DATE March 16, 1998

FOR RELEASE Immediately

CONTACT Rita Gonzalez, [redacted]
Jesse Lerner, [redacted]

"MEXPERIMENTAL CINEMA"

April 1, 3, 4, and 8
A four-part film series in conjunction with UC San Diego and the Museum of Contemporary Art, San Diego.

Pacific Film Archives, University Art Museum, Berkeley CA
April 7, 14, 16, and 21

Headlands Center for the Arts Panel Discussion
944 Fort Barry, Sausalito
Sunday, April 19, 4:00 p.m.

Filmforum (Los Angeles), Art Center College of Design, Pasadena
Friday, April 24, 7:00 p.m.
"Surveying the Terrain"

Filmforum (Los Angeles), LACE, Hollywood
Sunday, April 26, 7:00 p.m.
"The City"

Huntington Beach Art Center, Huntington Beach
Friday, April 24, 8:30 p.m.
"Highlights from the Series"

Mexperimental Cinema is funded by the Fideicomiso Para la Cultura Mexico/USA (The Rockefeller Foundation, Fundacion Cultural Bancomer, and Fondo Nacional para la Cultura y las Artes); the University of California, San Diego; and a grant from UC MexUS.

The history of Mexico's mainstream cinema during the "golden age" of the 1940s through the mid-1950s is well documented. Less well known is the work of independent and fringe filmmakers and artists experimenting with film and video from the thirties up to today. In the four-part series, Mexperimental Cinema, co-curators Jesse Lerner, filmmaker, and Rita Gonzalez, MCA Curatorial Intern, present a non-traditional survey of Mexican film history from the 1930s to the present. In San Diego, the series will open at MCA San Diego with works by Antonio Reynoso, Adolfo Best Maugard, Silvia Gruner, Ximena Cuevas, and others. Gruner and Cuevas will be present at certain screenings to discuss their works. The final three parts of the series will be screened at UCSD at the Performance Space in the Visual Arts Complex, and the Price Center Auditorium; for information, call [redacted]. The programs at the University are free. Following its debut in San Diego, the series will travel to the Film Forum in Los Angeles, Pacific Film Archives at the Berkeley Art Museum, and the Huntington Beach Art Center.

Part One: "SURVEYING THE TERRAIN"
SHERWOOD AUDITORIUM
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1
7:30-9:30 P.M.
$3 MCA MEMBERS, STUDENTS, SENIORS
$4 GENERAL PUBLIC
Ximena Cuevas and Silvia Gruner will be present.

This survey illustrates the trends in media that have taken place on the margins of the Mexican commercial industry. The program highlights the work of artists like Adolfo Best Maugard, known for his paintings and connections to important artistic and literary figures, who made only two films in his career. Contemporary artists Ximena Cuevas and Silvia Gruner will show film and video and discuss their work after the program.

Magueyes. Director, camera, and editor: RubÈn G·mez. 35mm film. 12 min. 1962. Courtesy of Gustavo Alatriste.

Surviving fragment from Humanidad. Director: Aldolfo Best Maugard. 35mm. 1 min. 1934. Courtesy of the Filmoteca de la UNAM.

El despojo. Director: Antonio Reynoso. 12 min. 1958-60. Courtesy of the Filmoteca de la UNAM.

Pecado Original ReproducciÛn. Director, camera, and editor: Silvia Gruner. Super-8 film transferred to 3/4" video. 5 min. 1986. Courtesy of the artist.

Medias mentiras. Director, camera, and editor: Ximena Cuevas. 3/4" video. 35 min. 1994. Courtesy of the artist.

Part Two: THE CITY
PERFORMANCE SPACE, UC SAN DIEGO
VISUAL ARTS COMPLEX, RUSSELL DRIVE

FRIDAY APRIL 3
7:30-9:00
FREE

Far from the heroic charros and idyllic landscapes of the "Golden Era's" nationalist fantasies, the Mexico of these films is one of bloque [cinder blocks] and industrial waste.

Vicente Rojo, directed by Juan JosÈ Gurrola. Text: Juan GarcÌa Ponce. 16 mm. 27 min. 1964. Courtesy of the Filmoteca de la UNAM.

Sabado de mierda, director: Gregorio Rocha. Camera: Sarah Minter. Acted by Rafa and los Mierdas Punks. 16mm film. 25 min. 1985-87.

Un nahual veracru', director, editor and actor: Miguel CalderÛn. Super-8 film transferred to 3/4" video. 1994. Courtesy of the artist.

Mi Cor-a-zÛn, director, camera, editor: Pola Weiss. 17 min. 1986, æ" video.

El Vuelo, director, camera, editor: Silvia Gruner. High-8 video and Super 8 film transferred to 3/4" video. 15 min. 1989. Courtesy of Silvia Gruner.

Part Three: EL GRITO
PERFORMANCE SPACE, UC SAN DIEGO
VISUAL ARTS COMPLEX, RUSSELL DRIVE
APRIL 4
7:30-9:30 p.m.
FREE

The intersection of media and politics are considered in this program, from the radical strategies of student activist collectives during the uprisings of 1968 to the super 8 aesthetics of Sergio Garcia in the 70s and 80s up to a postmodern video critique of Salinas.

Comunicados # 1 (La agressiÛn), 2 (La respuesta), and 4, directed, filmed and edited collectively by Comite de Huelga. 20 min. 16mm. 1968. Courtesy of the Filmoteca de la UNAM.

El fin, director, camera and editor: Sergio GarcÌa. Super-8 mm film transferred to 3/4" video. 12 min. 1970. Courtesy of Sergio GarcÌa.

Ah, Verda', director, camera and editor: Sergio GarcÌa. Super-8 mm film transferred to 3/4" video. 20 min. 1973. Courtesy of Sergio GarcÌa.

> Segunda primera matrice, director, camera and editor: Alfredo Gurrola. Super-8 mm film transferred to 3/4" video. 14 min. 1973. Courtesy of Alfredo Gurrola.
>
> VÌctimas del pecado neo-liberal, director: Ximena Cuevas, with Jesusa RodrÌguez. Camera and editor: Ximena Cuevas. High-8 and 3/4" video. 15 min. 1995. Courtesy of Ximena Cuevas.
>
> Part Four: MEXICANIDAD
> PRICE CENTER AUDITORIUM, UC SAN DIEGO
> APRIL 8
> 7:30-9:30 p.m.
>
> A significant aspect of Mexican intellectual thought has reflected on the tragic dimensions of national identity, with specific emphasis on the figuration of the indigenous as long-suffering and stoic. Mexican critic Roger Bartra has dissected the discourse on Mexicanidad, and suggested the disparities in class between the philosophers and those who they claim to represent. The films and videos in this program employ the signs of Mexicanidad with irony, social gest, and excess.
>
> Corazon sangrante, director: Ximena Cuevas, with Astrid Hadad. Camera: Ximena Cuevas. 3/4" video. 3 min. 1995. Courtesy of the artist.
>
> La formula secreta, directed and camera: RubÈn G·mez 35mm. 45 min. 1965. Courtesy of Filmoteca.
>
> SimÛn del desierto, director: Luis BuÒuel. 35mm reduced to 16mm. 43 min. 1964. Courtesy of Pacific Film Archives

↑ Index

788. Charles Weigl

Re: women

Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

katy writes:

> why aren't there more women on this list?

maybe women are a lot smarter than men. maybe they know that their time is too valuable to be spent reading a bunch of boring multiple posts from garrulous white guys for whom time (apparently) has no value, or even (as i find myself doing) risking carpal tunnel by deleting one message after another without even opening them.

i wish i was a girl. can you help?

oh boy.

ps: i am, of course, assuming that all those garrulous boys are white. they sure as hell sound like it. how's that for essentializing?

↑ Index

789. Stephen Cope
Re: Sound States
Wed 25 Mar 1998

A very exciting book, and a very interesting disc. Highly recommended. (Check out Fred Moten's typographically and formally explorative essay on Cecil Taylor's _Chiampas_, in addition to the essays that D. Zuhar recommends. And of course, Nate Mackey's "Cante Moro," which has appeared elsewhere).

Stephen

> has anyone read or know anything about this book?
>
> --Charles Smith
>
> Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies
> by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998)
> ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.

↑ Index

790. Stephen Cope
Re: Robert Duncan at the MLA
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Burt,

Just a note, touching base on the Oppen materials I sent, and wondering what might be up re: the panel you announced. Had I let you know I was interested? (I've been having some problems w/ e-mail of late, and some of my messages haven't gone through). In any case, hope you're well,

Stephen

↑ Index

791. david bromige
re : what do man want?
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Billy Little, have we met since the night L*N*R*D S*K*Y*N*N*R*D crashed? {hmm, maybe thats where L=A=N=G came from}. Thanks for the poem. I enjoy the way it stumbles sure-footedly onward. And thanks for the question. Seems to me the answer is, To be woman. David

↑ Index

792. Miekal And what do man want?
Wed 25 Mar 1998

man want woman to feel invited to contribute to list what prevents that?

is it the topics of threads is it fear of invoking the ire of the good ole boys is it unimportant to teleport words into here is it the man dont shut up is it that poetics is a corrupted male discourse is it the meta balance of power is it what's not said is the thing to listen to is it all the talk about poetry & baseball or George B's bad jokes is it the electronic territory is unmarked

what are the wants what are the needs

Justine of Poesy

↑ Index

793. George Bowering
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> And how many men come rolling off the tongue?

Oooooh!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

794. Maria Damon
Re: womanly
Wed 25 Mar 1998

great discussion, all. thanks.

↑ Index

795. dee morris
Re: Sound States
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Sorry to come in late on this thread. Sound States is a collection of twelve essays which came out from the University of North Carolina Press in January. Its subtitle, "Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies," is the place it started: I had been working with a batch of H.D. poems which eluded any approach I knew to take with them until it occurred to me that I was trying to get beyond or behind the sound when the sound was the point: they were poems not quite like but not wholly unlike the oral poetics explored by Walter Ong, Eric Havelock, and other theorists of primary orality and, more recently, texts like Douglas Kahn and Gregory Whitehead's collection Wireless Imagination: Sound, Radio and the Avant-Garde and theorists like Friedrich Kittler and Garrett Stewart who deal with what Ong calls "secondary orality." Pursuing that line of exploration, it occurred to me that the world that surrounded the poets Bernstein calls the "radical modernists" was an ear-world, a soundscape, a place where experience came intensely and for the first time amplified into the ear on telephones, radios, loudspeakers, tapes, etc. I took off from Marjorie Perloff's focus in "Radical Artifice" on poetics and popular media and Michael Davidson's work with tape archives and pursued other people--critics and poets--who I thought were exploring the same terrain.

The essays are (in order) by James Connor on Joyce, me on H.D., Toby Miller and Alec McHoul on Foucault and the "radio intellectual," Kate Hayles on Beckett and Burroughs, Michael Davidson on "orality and the tapevoice," Perloff on Cage, McCaffery on the "audio-poem," Loretta Collins on Caribbean performative sound, Mackey's "Cante Moro," Fred Moten on Cecil Taylor's "Floating Garden," Garrett Stewart on "Modernism's Sonic Waiver," and Jed Rasula on poetry "voice-over."

The book was a long time in the making not because of the essayists but because it wasn't easy to track down and get permissions for the cd, which I mastered at the University of Iowa with a wonderful technician named Tom Schipper. I felt the cd was integral--crucial--to a project which argued for other ways of apprehending poetry, ways which are, it seems all of a sudden, increasingly available. The Norton Anthology of African American Literature, for example, now comes with a cd, as does the Riverside Anthology--which organizes its entries by ear as much as by text. A few years ago there was the Exact Change Yearbook with a terrific cd. Now that sites like the Electronic Poetry Center make the earworld available on the web, those of us who love this kind of poetics need to find ways to approach it that respect its materiality as sound, a materiality often lost in preoccupation with the gaze, new critical formalism, poetry wars, etc. "Sound States" is both a noun phrase and a declaration, an assumption I wanted to use to test, stretch, and make new a critical vocabulary for poetics which was missing the ear-action.

Charles Bernstein's collection Close Listening, which moves along parallel lines of exploration but differently, will be out in April. Sound States is available from Bridge Street Books (Rod Smith, if you're there, you might want to reprint your offer) or from University of North Carolina Press or www.amazon.com or your local bookstore.

Dee Morris

> On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, CharSSmith wrote:
>
> has anyone read or know anything about this book?
>
> --Charles Smith
>
> Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies
> by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998)
> ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.
>
> Haven't read much of it, but I've listened to the CD, which I'm surprised goes unmentioned by the blurb you quote below: It's a great mix (the disc, that is) w/ recordings ranging from HD reading a bit of _Helen in Egypt_, to Marinetti raving about "Bombardamento di Andrianopoli," as well as soundpoems by Ball, Hausmann, and Kruchenykh, not to mention recordings of Lee "Scratch" Perry and Rahsaan Roland Kirk.
>
> I've read the essays by Adelaide Morris ("H.D. on the Air"), Steve McCaffery's great "The emergence of the Audio Poem"), and I've started Jed Rasula's lengthy essay on "voice" entitled "Poetry's Voice-Over," but a headache got the better of me.
>
> So I'm not lamenting having spent the $25, which seems high, if you don't take into account the accompanying CD.
>
> David Zauhar
> University of Illinois at Chicago
>
> So often nothing happens
> and then when something does
> noone notices.

> --Alan Davies

↑ Index

796. henry gould
Re: Sound States
Wed 25 Mar 1998

This is not only the turf of "radical innovative modernists". You can't "get" Hart Crane, for example, without hearing how the sound plays off (via puns) the written words. James Merrill also comes to mind.

This sounds like a fascinatin book & I'm not tryin to start a poetry war.

down with labiles
- Henry G for gzzzzntheit

↑ Index

797. Gwyn McVay
perspective re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Morning paper front-page news: two boy students open fire into a fire-alarm crowd outside a Jonesboro, AR middle school, killing 4 students and a teacher, and wounding another 11. All but one of those shot, including the 5 fatalities, were women. One of the young shooters had been overheard bragging that he was going to "kill everyone who ever broke up with me."

It reminds me hideously of the massacre at (what?) university in Canada in which the shooter, an engineering student, fired into a class including many women, shouting something like "you fucking feminists."

We can't "do" anything about either case except what we already "do": write our poems & critical works, teach our students, live our lives in our own way--& certainly it seems to have little "to do" with this listserv--except to underscore the VITAL IMPORTANCE of continuing to promote respect & equity in every direction.

How that has to do with women & poetry & Poetics list, I dunno specifically. I did have a gut feeling it bore mention.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

798. sylvester pollet
Re: perspective re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

At 9:21 AM -0500 3/25/98, Gwyn McVay wrote:
>Morning paper front-page news: two boy students open fire into a >fire-alarm crowd outside a Jonesboro, AR middle school, killing 4 students >and a teacher, and wounding another 11. All but one of those shot, >including the 5 fatalities, were women. One of the young shooters had been >overheard bragging that he was going to "kill everyone who ever broke up >with me."
>
>It reminds me hideously of the massacre at (what?) university in Canada in >which the shooter, an engineering student, fired into a class including >many women, shouting something like "you fucking feminists."
>
>We can't "do" anything about either case except what we already "do":
>write our poems & critical works, teach our students, live our lives in >our own way--& certainly it seems to have little "to do" with this >listserv--except to underscore the VITAL IMPORTANCE of continuing to >promote respect & equity in every direction.
>
>How that has to do with women & poetry & Poetics list, I dunno >specifically. I did have a gut feeling it bore mention.
>
>Gwyn McVay

Thanks for that (horrible) report, Gwyn. As for your last question, I don't see how anything could be MORE relevant to a discussion of the forces that silence.
Sylvester

↑ Index

799. sylvester pollet
Re: Sound States
Wed 25 Mar 1998

At 9:17 AM -0500 3/25/98, henry gould wrote:
>This is not only the turf of "radical innovative modernists". You can't >"get" Hart Crane, for example, without hearing how the sound plays off >(via puns) the written words. James Merrill also comes to mind.
>
>This sounds like a fascinatin book & I'm not tryin to start a poetry war.
>

>down with labiles
>- Henry G for gzzzzntheit

I thought Hart Crane WAS a radical innovative modernist! S.

↑ Index

800. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Models of Power
Wed 25 Mar 1998

You go girl.

On Mar 24, 8:02pm, Karen Kelley wrote:
> Subject: Models of Power
> R M Daley wrote:
>
> >exactly my problem with identity politics of power
> > i don't see myself any particular way at all times, more like a particular way at any > > particular time - > though I am conscious of being perceived as a woman ALWAYS. I have been > an art student, a mother, a teacher, a bookstore clerk, a poet, a > sister, a wife, a stripper, an executive, a web designer, an analysand, > a divorcee, a sister, a mistress, caregiver to a terminally ill brother, > a bodybuilder, half of an interracial relationship. In each and every > one of these situations, I have also been reminded each and every moment > that I am a woman. I have NEVER met a man--or a woman--who doesn't > assess a woman's body on first meeting. It is cultural, it's what we've > been taught to look at, and I don't particularly mind it. In fact, I go > to the gym to make my body look the way I want. I check out men. The > bigger the better. I loko at the other women. I am a feminist. I like > pornography. I understand I am politically incorrect on some of these > issues by some standards, that I am immoral by other standards, and that > I am illogical by any standard.
>
> I am not interested in pinning things down; I've tried to define myself, > been defined, both as an individual and as part of a larger collective, > be it white, female, college-educated, literate, artistic, blah blah > blah.
> The thing is: none of the definitions are particularly interesting or > particularly apt.
>
> I'm not interested in assuming power: power is less interesting than > submission. Sometimes.

>
> I don't want to crystallize my thoughts; I don't want to say what's > true.
>
> I write what I want, so God forbid it be the same all the time, or > logical, or correct, or sensible, or legible, or female.
> >
> > so i'd just rather not be called lost before having a chance to get lost
> > myself
>
> That last line's the best.
>
> And none of this refers to YOU, particular man reading this post. I am > talking to the IDEA of men. And it isn't me talking, it's your idea of a > woman.
>
> (Serious p.s.: I really didn't mean you, Miekal. And I'm sorry if it > made you upset.)
>-- End of excerpt from Karen Kelley

↑ Index

801. William Burmeister Prod

Re: women

Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Mar 24, 7:47pm, lurker Charles Weigl wrote: > Subject: Re: women
> katy writes:
>
> > why aren't there more women on this list?
>
> maybe women are a lot smarter than men. maybe they know that their time > is too valuable to be spent reading a bunch of boring multiple posts > from garrulous white guys for whom time (apparently) has no value, or > even (as i find myself doing) risking carpal tunnel by deleting one > message after another without even opening them.
>
> i wish i was a girl. can you help?
>
> oh boy.
>

> ps: i am, of course, assuming that all those garrulous boys are white.
> they sure as hell sound like it. how's that for essentializing?
>-- End of excerpt from Charles Weigl

You go girl.

↑ Index

802. Billy Little canada's top painter
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Pure Coinkydink, any resemblance livin or dead etc.

RADIO REQUEST

Roy Kiyooka was on of the sexiest men in North America in the sixties. His devilish thin mustache, his piercing gaze and his dapper haberdashery left women from Halifax to Tofino falling to their knees to undo his shoelaces. He wasn't like American pretty boys who never got enough of hearing themselves shoot off their mouth. Roy was a doll OK, with those dark eyebrows and the smoke trailing out of his broad nostrils, but the first thing his sweethearts all mentioned,"Roy listened, he left his ears open all day long." "You betcha,"Jackie said "his gentle little fingers thrilled me, I had more orgasms at Emma Lake in 30 days, than i'd had in hyannisport the four years previous. Roy gave you his attention as a gift, he gave thought to every word I said, he seemed to care so much it made me cry. he was the only man I ever met who kept listening even after I was naked." I'd first met Roy(a few years before I met Jackie) on the Staten Island Ferry. A couple of years later, after Mr. Gee put the clamps on, I'd probably never have spoken to him, but in those days I was fearless, a real showoff. I was just back from Milan, just old enough to vote, pacing the deck trying to memorize Ovid. My method was simple, I'd read the line silently, then read it aloud and then close the book and recite the same line aloud so as I passed Roy heard me say "rusticus est nimium quem laedit adultera coniunx." He did a double take, looking as if he wondered what bughouse this looney tune crept out of I laughed. "Quo tibi formasam si no nis cast placebat?" Roy replied and I nearly shit my pants. Was this guy a plant, a reminder from Mr. Gee that there'd always be eyes on me as long as I was in the family, my chin just about clanged into my zipper. Roy had a laugh like one in a million. If you were in a stadium in red Deer or Moncton and heard that laugh you'd go looking for Roy. In laughing, he'd taken his leg off the railing,"I was about to jump," he told me years later. Bobby had told me,'men who pahsist in theah foolish attentions towahd my sistah-in-law have been known to suhvivi e near fatal accident", only an hour earlier. Your Ovid saved my life." Almost two decades later, when we knew each other better, after I left the family, after Izzie died, Roy told me he was blind with anger and overwhelmed with sorrow after the attorney general advised him to "take youah payntbahx back to iglooland" He didn't know how long he had walked or how he had ended up on the Staten Island Ferry, but suddenly, there I was giving him that line, "Only a provincial bumpkin stews about adultery" from Ovid, which made him think his thoughts were written on his foehead. He said his roommate was always quoting Ovid to him in college, his roommate claimed Ovid worked better than Spanish Fly, but Roy said he'd never kissed a girl who'd remembered her latin, except Jackie. Or was it Marilyn? Yes, he was pretty sure it was Marilyn who said, "quo tibi formasam si no nis cast placebat?" referring to Mr. Dimaggio who didn't get it, "why marry good looks when all you wanted was good behaviour?" was what Roy had responded to my latin. I must confess, since that day, I haveheard that same line from numerous and surprising sources, but that's another story. In the sixties, Roy had a studio in the same building with Leonard Cohen. I remember he almost fell out of his chair laughing the first time he heard THERE AINT NO CURE FOR LOVE. Could you play that in memory of Roy Kiyooka?

↑ Index

803. Mark Prejsnar
submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

I applaud Katy for daring to bring up the nasty "g" word (gender) on the List....It sure is threatening to a lot of folks.

Quite simply, she's right: there are still huge disparities in the involvement, power, choices and visiblity of men and women in our poetry circles and institutions. (...because those disparities exist in society as inescapeable lines of torsion and inequality...)

And it will (I think) surprise no one that I can confirm from my own work as editor that she's very right about "submissions" (and dominations)..... Women are less likely to actively sell and push their work than men.

Given the number and importance of women poets out there, this is quite striking (to say nothing of wildly frustrating for us editors).

The many very impressive women on the List should consider sending out more manuscripts to us magazine editors....

(My ratio is about 6 percent women to 94 percent men...While I don't think it is this bad for everyone, it is very close for many editors I've talked to...) (Actually it is more 18 percent women to 82 percent men, if you include poets who saw my entry in Poets' Market; those 60 or so poets who've submitted using PM have been without exception just starting out, very "workshop" and very, very bad...The 6 to 94 estimate is when I look just at folks who have seen an issue of the mag, and know what kind of stuff I publish....)

I haven't much to say to those who've dismissed or belittled Katy's points about the disequalibrium between women and men...They must be living in the twelfth dimension or something...No doubt a finer and happier place than ours...

Mark Prejsnar
editor, Misc. Proj.
641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11
Atlanta, GA 30306

↑ Index

804. Mark Prejsnar
Re: women who do write
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> forgive the slightly-off-topic-ness, but among the women who do write, I'm glad Mei-mei Berssenbrugge does write--have finally gotten round to her EMPATHY and SPHERICITY, two recent Bridge St. purchases, & read around in each, even while "submitting" my alleged master's thesis to the tender mercies of the Ruler Lady who Measures Margins (Graham Foust will remember her), & her extended ice-floe sequence haunts one something like Notley & creates space something like Lauterbach, while being of course very much Berssenbrugge's own--does that make any sense?
>
> the sometimes doubtful McVay

I second that and recommend these books also; I spent about a month buried in Sphericity not long ago.

Berssenbrugge doesn't get mentioned as frequently as I'd expect, as being one of our really astonishing contemporaries.

I like "creates space".....Sometimes M-M B. has this truely singular feel for long lines and a floating quality, a very unusual prosody is often going on, at a remarkable level of thought about sound and the movement of words. I remember a piece called Ghost Poem, in an anthology or mag, which was remarkable in this way (one of the first times I realized I had to start paying special attention to her..)

That both she and Lauterbach "create space" is a good comment. Lauterbach floats around constructs of social space and defered narrative more, though....

Mark P.
@lanta

↑ Index

805. William Burmeister Prod
Re: perspective re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Mar 25, 9:50am, sylvester pollet wrote:
> Subject: Re: perspective re: women
> At 9:21 AM -0500 3/25/98, Gwyn McVay wrote:
> >Morning paper front-page news: two boy students open fire into a > >fire-alarm crowd outside a Jonesboro, AR middle school, killing 4 students > >and a teacher, and wounding another 11. All but one of those shot, > >including the 5 fatalities, were women. One of the young shooters had been > >overheard bragging that he was going to "kill everyone who ever broke up > >with me."
> >
> >It reminds me hideously of the massacre at (what?) university in Canada in > >which the shooter, an engineering student, fired into a class including > >many women, shouting something like "you fucking feminists."
> >
> >We can't "do" anything about either case except what we already "do":
> >write our poems & critical works, teach our students, live our lives in > >our own way--& certainly it seems to have little "to do" with this > >listserv--except to underscore the VITAL IMPORTANCE of continuing to > >promote respect & equity in every direction.
> >
> >How that has to do with women & poetry & Poetics list, I dunno > >specifically. I did have a gut feeling it bore mention.
> >
> >Gwyn McVay
>
> Thanks for that (horrible) report, Gwyn. As for your last question, I don't > see how anything could be MORE relevant to a discussion of the forces that > silence. Sylvester
>-- End of excerpt from sylvester pollet

Seconded!! Your post,Gwyn,goes a long way as do the honest, interesting posts by the several other women writers who have posted on these intersecting threads (such as Karen Kelly and Rachel Daley among others).

William Burmeister

↑ Index

806. k. lederer
Re: submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Mark's statistic of 96 percent to 4 percent is pretty much the same as mine for Explosive.

My original comment was a personal plea for more women to participate in MY poetic life.

I apologize to you, Rachel, if you think I'm stepping on your toes or otherwise denying your individuality--I'm not trying to.

I find your view of gender just as threatening to my sense of justice as you probably find my view threatening to yours--

But, to be utterly practical--

I do find it strange that I get like 9 submissions by men per 1 by women (I mean, I'm a female and very young editor--have a very broad range of voices in my mag--ages, aesthetics, etc...)--

I don't like it that when I go out at night I worry about being raped.

I do want to have children, and I think is a pretty gendered decision. Maybe I'm brainwashed or evil or whatever--but I'm glad to be a woman.

I am proud of the heritage that comes with that--

I am proud of the women who preceded me and got me the vote, the right to abortion, the "right" to go to school and so on.

I'm not always thinking all the time "I'm a woman" "I'm a woman" "I'm a woman"--

But sometimes I AM a woman--and when that's how I feel, I want to feel that this isn't a hindrance to me in the workplace or anywhere else--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

807. Billy Little
Lazy editors
Wed 25 Mar 1998

"women don't submit' if submissions make up the bulk of your magazine than you are a lazy editor male or female, you read poetry for crying out loud do you know what you like, can you tell when you're devastated or tickled pink by somebody else's work, Every mag I've edited i've sought the work of writer's female or other gone right out and told them i like your work and i'd like to publish some in my next sought the right to promote this work to a wider audience sought to benefit from the reflected quality of the work around me. And suppose they don't live next door, even before e-mail if you found their work you could find them, write the editor of the other mag, is that too much effort? write the CBC, write the publisher, even if you're not an editor or publisher you have to realize if you make a slight effort when you find an overwhelming poem to seek out the writer and say wow where can i read more, that might be the very difference that enable's more to be written a little note like that can be a better suicide cure than any pill. People will submit good work unrequested sure and often that will be a cue to others you should chase down to create your solid and continuingly interesting mag, Passivity is unbecoming in an editor, "they don't submit" is a lie by omission a half truth, Robert Creeley hasn't submitted a poem since the fifties, Kathy Acker since the seventies. the other technique i've favoured is republication of poems you've found elsewehere in lieu of a review. Poetry is news that stays news, Ez sez.

↑ Index

808. Carolyn Guertin
Feminist Poetics
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> compare Lily James:
> "On the Postfeminist Playground, Susannah Breslin and I have created a space for our fiction writing where no space existed [....] We wrote essays about Postfeminism instead of waiting for a critic to discover us. We created our own focus, decided on our own path, and began delivering the goods to our readers." <http://www.pfplayground.com/greattaste/latest.htm>
>
> which is not separatism, but "get over it"...

It's not particularly useful either. We get make-up tips for morons and a catty fashion critique of the participants in the academy awards quoted to us as a model for behaviour? I doubt that any Poetics site could get 2500 hits a day (as James and Breslin claim)--even using their tabloid-style approach.

Where is the feminist poetics list anyway?

Carolyn

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

"Language is a virus."
-- Laurie Anderson

↑ Index

809. Darren Wershler-Henry
Re: Open Letter Launch in NYC
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Tom:

All Open Letter back issues are available from the editor, Frank Davey:

Open Letter
499 Dufferin Ave
London, Ontario
Canada
N6B 2A1

↑ Index

810. s. kaipa
Re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, Charles Weigl wrote:

> maybe women are a lot smarter than men.
>
> i wish i was a girl. can you help?
>
> oh boy.
>
> ps: i am, of course, assuming that all those garrulous boys are white.
> they sure as hell sound like it. how's that for essentializing?

A little off the topic, but not entirely. Has anyone seen the French movie, Ma vie en rose? It's an excellent film about a 7 year old boy who wants to be a girl and doesn't understand why it's not possible.

Summi

↑ Index

811. s. kaipa
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, George Bowering wrote:

> And how many men come rolling off the tongue?
>
> Oooooh!

I can't remember who said it, but some woman on th list asked if there is an intimidation factor in posting to the list. Yes, I do think there is. I am usually an observer, but when something catches my eye and I feel strongly enough to write about it, I'll overcome that intimidation. However, when I receive this kind of jeering response, as a woman it makes me feel like I need to stand on the sidelines and shut my trap unless what I have to say is 100% brilliant. I'm not sure that the men who post to this list with frequency feel that way.

Summi

↑ Index

812. R M Daley
Re: submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> Mark's statistic of 96 percent to 4 percent is pretty much the same as mine for Explosive.
>
> My original comment was a personal plea for more women to participate in MY poetic life.
>
> I apologize to you, Rachel, if you think I'm stepping on your toes or otherwise denying your individuality--I'm not trying to.
>
> I find your view of gender just as threatening to my sense of justice as you probably find my view threatening to yours--

hmm how is this - i'm fine and knowing your magazine and others are doin their darndest to make up for some lack or something , more POWER to you as you said but your stance seems to take a fascistic step toward somthing else no? - is there a way i'm not being told by you and then someone else who said he'd like to hear women more becasue they that other species must be smarter?!?!?
help me out here
>

> But, to be utterly practical--
>

this continual distinction between the real world and the poetry world, the suggestion tha tyou or i or josh are other than "Real people" is awfully disturbing - and so goes this 'real world' of publishing a magazine vs the non-real ? world of talking and reading and writing -

> I do find it strange that I get like 9 submissions by men per 1 by women (I mean, I'm a female and very young editor--have a very broad range of voices in my mag--ages, aesthetics, etc...)--
>
> I don't like it that when I go out at night I worry about being raped.
>
> I do want to have children, and I think is a pretty gendered decision. Maybe I'm brainwashed or evil or whatever--but I'm glad to be a woman.
>
> I am proud of the heritage that comes with that--

??????????????????heritage of women? which one? last year ?

>
> I am proud of the women who preceded me and got me the vote, the right to > abortion, the "right" to go to school and so on.
>
> I'm not always thinking all the time "I'm a woman" "I'm a woman" "I'm a > woman"--
>
> But sometimes I AM a woman--and when that's how I feel, I want to feel > that this isn't a hindrance to me in the workplace or anywhere else--
>

but you are always a woman no? i feel as though i'm beating many dead horses and need to go - but that's how i feel- and i suppose i always feel like a woman cause i always have ovaries or whatever and have never had a sex change to know a difference- emma goldman and others sure were great -- but they also seemd to me to have made it possible for me to not be fighting the fight continuously, made it so i don't ever have to have babies and at age 24 don't feel like an old maid and do whatever in whatever lala land mark presjner considers this

> Best,
> Katy

↑ Index

813. Mark Prejsnar stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Billy Little's post is pretty unhelpful.

Essentially, what Katy and I are doing is trying to get the word out, to encourage more and better submissions, and to encourage the many superb woman writers out there to become more active, to give us more poems to consider, etc.

She and I and others I know of, are trying various means to improve the situation. This thread is actually one of 'em.

But BL's snivelling post is not really a help to anyone, I'd say.

↑ Index

814. henry gould
Re: Lazy editors
Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

the world needs more passive, lazy editors willing to read what comes straight out of the mailbox with no name attached. Let them publish a magazine called TAHITI every now and then full of stuff that just showed up one day while they were lounging around eating grapes. let them publish good & bad poems right next to each other. let them be totally lazy people whose only concern is avoiding typos. let them lie about giving away their mag directly from their hammocks. let them be so lazy that they don't even provide URLs or CDs - you have to read the damn stuff out loud yourself!! holding the magazine in your bare, sunbrowned hands, wind blowing through the palm trees, coconuts plopping gently around your towel, the waves hissing on the snore...

zzzzzzzz.....

↑ Index

815. k. lederer
Re: submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Rachel--

I'm not making a distinction between "the real" and the "non-real"--

Rather I think there is a difference between a short-term and a long-term approach to gender

My long-term strategy is to think more like you seem to think--to believe in the powerful malleablility--or perhaps even the irrelevance--of identity.

In the short-term, however, I am faced with a glaring set of disparities that do indeed seem to be based on a gender category--no matter how malleable that category may seem (or how fictional or stultifying...) in the long-run.

***

Also--as to Billy's comment--

Please do not be accusing me of being lazy about my editing--

I've probably solicited 80 percent of what's in my mag--

But it's funny--people ("the audience") get pretty pissed off if they think you are soliciting a lot--

As in--some might say that it is, in fact, lazy to SOLICIT work--

That it is more difficult and more rewarding to have to slog through submissions--

That it is exclusive and smelly of coterie to solicit too large a bulk--

I agree with you that one should go after the work that one wants to present--but I, for one, would like to strike a balance between going for what I already know I like and being open to poetry that is new to me.

Thoughts,
Katy

↑ Index

816. Mark Prejsnar
fascistic rhetorics
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Errr....fascistic??

There are some, uh, pretty worrisome people on this list.

It would appear that the spirit of recent ultra-right attacks on affirmative action, is alive and active and inspiring some of the new people here on the poetix list..

Pretty interesting, I'd say.

↑ Index

817. Elizabeth Hatmaker

Re: women in poetry and in the arts

Wed 25 Mar 1998

I'm likewise a by-stander (mainly because I only get e-mail at work) but have been thinking hard about the issues raised. When I think about how much of my academic energy has been wasted alternately not wanting to piss men off (because they might:

1. Hurt me professionally
2. Do that whole number where you show them your work and they sit there like your dad or something and "help" you along with your little ideas.

3. Tell me my ideas are a bunch of whiney, privledged white feminist bullshit and if I can't "compete" with men (meaning, usually, read the same books they have read) I should just shut up. Or suggest I'm claiming "victim" status--(now that's got to be the worst thing a woman in the 90s can be called)

4. Not want to date me (well, since I'm being confessional here) 5. They'll take some "devil's advocate" stance and argue some mysogynist position (recently a very bright man and I were discussing the whole Clinton mishmash and his position seemed to be that women can think what they want, but bottom line, men need blowjobs and will do whatever it takes to get them) and then when you point that out (like "hey, when did your right to a blowjob become an ethical underpinning of our society") they suggest you've taken it "too personally" and get offended that you thought so badly of them.

and this isn't even having to worry that if you dump a 13 year old boy, he might open fire on you) and wanting to piss men off, (I have this essay about starting a company called dial a psycho-- where if a guy makes you feel bad and then tells you not to make a scene, you hire an actress to do it for you anonymously. That way you don't get the negative fallout from "making a scene" but you know that he's had to deal with your deferred rage. There's more to it, but that's the core. Is this art? Is it the rantings of a whiney man-hater? I've never submitted it because I've never been sure. Maybe I will.)

I sometimes don't trust myself to say anything. All of it's so real and discursive.

Elizabeth

↑ Index

818. William Burmeister Prod
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Mar 25, 12:06pm, s. kaipa wrote:
> Subject: Re: women in poetry and in the arts
> On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, George Bowering wrote:
>
> > > And how many men come rolling off the tongue?
> >
> > Oooooh!
>
> I can't remember who said it, but some woman on th list asked if there is > an intimidation factor in posting to the list. Yes, I do think there is.
> I am usually an observer, but when something catches my eye and I feel > strongly enough to write about it, I'll overcome that intimidation.
> However, when I receive this kind of jeering response, as a woman it makes > me feel like I need to stand on the sidelines and shut my trap unless > what I have to say is 100% brilliant. I'm not sure that the men who post > to this list with frequency feel that way.
>
>
> Summi
>-- End of excerpt from s. kaipa

Summi, don't let the (us) curmudgeonlies get you down. In answer to the question, yes. Don't go for the brilliant (what's brilliant anymore?), go for the humor -- anything ya like.

William

↑ Index

819. CharSSmith
Re: Sound States
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Thanks to everyone who responded about _Sound States_. I'm looking forward to it. Now that we've blabbed about the materiality of the text, the materiality of type itself (Drucker's _Visible Word_), it's about time someone took a close look at the aural material side of poetry.

ps to Sydney: so did I. HD as well!

--Charles Smith

In a message dated 98-03-25 09:48:40 EST, you write:

<< I thought Hart Crane WAS a radical innovative modernist! S. >>

↑ Index

820. k. lederer
Re: submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Rachel--

I've gotten some strange hits off of some of your posts--

1. That what I'm saying has anything to do with "telling" you to have babies? That I'm "dictating" how you should identify yourself?

You didn't have to respond to my post(s)--you don't have to do anything on here. I'm not "dictating" anything...

2. That I think women should be included here or anywhere else as a category of being because "they" as a "species" are smarter? What?

I just feel that if someone feels uncomfortable either giving work to mags or speaking on this list because of how they think they will be perceived vis-a-vis gender, then that's lame. If you feel that your gender doesn't get in your way in this forum, then that's great.

3. That I'm some sort of gushy girly person who cries at the TITANIC. (Rachel and I saw the TITANIC together, so anything she says about that....)--

Yes, I loved the TITANIC! I cried because of the sentimental love story--sure.

I cried because I was faced with an extremely graphic portrayal of 1500 people freezing to death--

I cried because the women and children were separated from their husbands...

What's wrong with crying?

Is there anything inherently wrong with sentimentality? Is there anything inherently gendered about it? Or perhaps I misread your post--

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

821. Stephen Cope
Re: Sound States/Funkhouser
Wed 25 Mar 1998

CF's in New Jersey these days (backchannell for address). His interview w/ Cecil Taylor appears in a recent Hambone, and is worth checking out. I'd also recommend (of course) Aldon Nielsen's work on Taylor in BLACK CHANT -- ps - apologies for the should-have-been backchannelled post I dropped off earlier...

Stephen

> Dear Charles,
>
> You might try Chris Funkhauser; he's a friend and bud of Cecil Taylor's. Where ole Chris is, I'm not sure, but SUNY Albany or Don Byrd there might know. Chris, if you're out there somewhere, warm hello from Steve, here. Know this text Charles is looking for? S.
>
> CharSSmith wrote:
>
> has anyone read or know anything about this book?
>
> --Charles Smith
>
> Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustical Technologies by Adalaide Kirby Morris, ed., University of North Carolina Press (1998) ISBN-0807846708 360 pages, $24.95.
> "At least since the late 1920s some writers have been trying to free writing from the book, from the restrictions of print. This collection of essays explores the aural aspect of poetics, especially focusing on the technologies of sound and the possibilities they provide and provoke. Subjects range from Caribbean dub poetry to the experiments of John Cage and Cecil Taylor. Here's a book to add to that small but vital shelf that illuminates this essential ground--it's a good introduction to the issues and sends you off to the best source material. "

↑ Index

822. CharSSmith
Re: Sound States/Funkhouser
Wed 25 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-25 15:06:55 EST, you write:

<< CF's in New Jersey these days (backchannell for address). His interview w/ Cecil Taylor appears in a recent Hambone, and is worth checking out. >>

as is Chris' interview w/ Nate Mackey. posted @ EPC i believe

--cs

↑ Index

823. Thomas Bell
Re: women who do write
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Creating space is an intriguing poetic notion that I'd like to hear more about and would appreciate comments. As a man I feel it is easier for me to create an audience (are these creative terms related?) and I wonder if this is a general gender socialization thing or is it just one of my weirdnesses? You might think that "creating space" is an ego thing and sterotypically masculine but I don't think so. tom bell

At 11:12 AM 3/25/98 -0500, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>On Tue, 24 Mar 1998, Gwyn McVay wrote:
>
>> forgive the slightly-off-topic-ness, but among the women who do write, I'm >> glad Mei-mei Berssenbrugge does write--have finally gotten round to her >> EMPATHY and SPHERICITY, two recent Bridge St. purchases, & read around in >> each, even while "submitting" my alleged master's thesis to the tender >> mercies of the Ruler Lady who Measures Margins (Graham Foust will remember >> her), & her extended ice-floe sequence haunts one something like Notley & >> creates space something like Lauterbach, while being of course very much >> Berssenbrugge's own--does that make any sense?
>////
>
>Mark P.
>@lanta
>
>

↑ Index

824. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy

new titles from Wild Honey Press

Wed 25 Mar 1998

SYZYGY TREVOR JOYCE 16pp, hand sewn chapbook, £3.50 or $5(currency)

A long poem in which lyric intensity and the most rigorous intellectual underpinnings interpenetrate or even coexist. Gorgeous stuff.

and then there is this sound that starts with a scarcely audible rustling inside gold the whisper echoing within the diamond grows to take in snatches from high stars from elsewhere the disintegrating actions of clocks so that eventually you attend to the infinities of numbers shattering the shriek that is the change of several millions

¥

the red fish leaping from the mouth up the cold fresh stream to the empty source spilling down through stars and through the watching courses of stone until the fixed mesh abstracts unerringly each hour with all its clamouring brood jerking routinely to the tune

TINY PIECES BILLY MILLS 10pp, hand=sewn, £2.00 or $3.00 (currency)

Modest in size but not in scope, much of Mills poetic can be deduced from this bite-sized miracle.

Available from

Wild Honey Press 16a Ballyman Road Bray Co. Wicklow Ireland cheques payable to Randolph Healy

Writing is currency so both titles also available in exchange for some of your own work in any form.

↑ Index

825. Patrick F. Durgin

Re: women in poetry and in the arts

Wed 25 Mar 1998

We need to be careful to distinguish between delineating the scope of this list and policing those borders. The comments re: women & their exclusion from verse culture, particularly the small mag.s illustrate a similar tendancy for the list to incite valuable debate then fall into an impotent silence. If one thread to spring off of these debates, such as regards a supposed "female sensibility" in contemporary, innovative poetics were to arise, I'd have to jump in with this: In soliciting over long distance a poet, firstname Michael, whose work I'd seen in Daniel Bouchard's wonderful Mass. Ave. magazine for submissions to my own little mag., Kenning, I found this Michael (Angelo Tata) was apparently a woman, judging by (her) voice on the telephone. In the work I'd seen previously & (her) subsequent submission, I found nothing to truly disambiguate the gender distinction. There was something beautiful in this, as I was then curious to see to what degree the pieces I was reading were "engendered". Let me just add that I'd hate to lose the already scant multiplicity of voices on this list. As much, I'd hate to lose the threads which are more "text" based than "culture" based, however arbitrary this opposition may be. Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, William Burmeister Prod wrote:

> On Mar 25, 12:06pm, s. kaipa wrote:
> Subject: Re: women in poetry and in the arts
> On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, George Bowering wrote:
>
> And how many men come rolling off the tongue?

> Oooooh!
>
> I can't remember who said it, but some woman on th list asked if there is an intimidation factor in posting to the list. Yes, I do think there is. I am usually an observer, but when something catches my eye and I feel strongly enough to write about it, I'll overcome that intimidation. However, when I receive this kind of jeering response, as a woman it makes me feel like I need to stand on the sidelines and shut my trap unless what I have to say is 100% brilliant. I'm not sure that the men who post to this list with frequency feel that way.
>
> Summi
> -- End of excerpt from s. kaipa
>
> Summi, don't let the (us) curmudgeonlies get you down. In answer to the question, yes. Don't go for the brilliant (what's brilliant anymore?), go for the humor -- anything ya like.
>
> William

↑ Index

826. Keston Sutherland
Re: fascistic rhetorics
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> Errr....fascistic??
>
> There are some, uh, pretty worrisome people on this list.

Mark - I think that if this is a responsible rather than an off-hand remark, you ought now to say who you think these people are.

Keston

↑ Index

827. George Bowering
Re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> A little off the topic, but not entirely. Has anyone seen the French movie, Ma vie en rose? It's an excellent film about a 7 year old boy who wants to be a girl and doesn't understand why it's not possible.

> Summi

I have heard that it is a very good movie. Just one point. It is not French. It is Belgian. We folks who live next to big countries like to remind them of this stuff.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

828. George Bowering
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

I'm afraid that I have to agree with Billy Little on this one. I dont see the sense or the committment in sending out a general request to poets to "submit." Read someone's poetry. Figure out what you like. Then ASK that poet to send you something for your magazine or whatever. Be a community, not a market.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

829. George Bowering
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> I'm not sure I understand what this means. Although I appreciate humor and often long for more casual discussion of poetic/political issues. If you mean that I should counter a serious issue that is being discussed in a serious fashion with levity, I'm not sure I think this is a helpful way of dialoguing without being misunderstood.

> Summi

I recognize the places yr coming from. But think of this for a while. Humor is not frivolous. great ernestness is not necessarily serious. Language has a lot of surprises. One of them should be that we do not own it.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

830. Cadaly
Contribution
Wed 25 Mar 1998

It's not a submission, it's a contribution which can be appropriate or not.

Just like the lotto, it's an unfair tax on those who need the money most, but everyone can spend and / or give and / or buy.

In this respect, I respect Denise Duhamel and Lyn Lifshin. Maybe even Joyce Carol Oates, but VERY grudgingly.

Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

831. s. kaipa
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, William Burmeister Prod wrote:

> Summi, don't let the (us) curmudgeonlies get you down. In answer to the question, yes. Don't go for the brilliant (what's brilliant anymore?), go for the humor -- anything ya like.

I'm not sure I understand what this means. Although I appreciate humor and often long for more casual discussion of poetic/political issues. If you mean that I should counter a serious issue that is being discussed in a serious fashion with levity, I'm not sure I think this is a helpful way of dialoguing without being misunderstood.

Summi

↑ Index

832. Cadaly
Chaffing & Winnowing
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Anybody else see the article on coding/encrypting/scrambling in the New York Times?

The url for the mit paper is
http://theory.lcs.mit.edu/~rivest/chaffing.txt
(NYT printed the tilde above the r)

Mr. Rivest's dad suggested he use "winnowing" as a term. I think part of the innovation is packetizing, then encoding, but not encrypting, the packets (using different codes). But am I sure? Nope.

Encryption is not exportable because it may be a national security risk. The question becomes, "Who holds the keys?" To get around it, one could use encoding, but code is generally not as secure. This particular paper is about adding chaff (or mixed "grains") to "grains" of meaning (the packets) and then passing out ... different winnowing fans to different people (I think).

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

833. Maria Damon
Re: women in poetry and in the arts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

you left out a fifth reason: they might sneer at your ideas and then use them and get credit for them, knowing you lack the credibility (as a woman) to point out the theft and get redress...--md --of course this has happened with women as well.

At 2:03 PM -0500 3/25/98, Elizabeth Hatmaker wrote:
>I'm likewise a by-stander (mainly because I only get e-mail at work) but have >been thinking hard about the issues raised. When I think about how much of >my academic energy has been wasted alternately not wanting to piss men off >(because they might:
>
>1. Hurt me professionally

>2. Do that whole number where you show them your work and they sit there >like your dad or something and "help" you along with your little ideas.
>
>3. Tell me my ideas are a bunch of whiney, privledged white feminist >bullshit and if I can't "compete" with men (meaning, usually, read the same >books they have read) I should just shut up. Or suggest I'm claiming >"victim" status--(now that's got to be the worst thing a woman in the 90s can >be called)
>
>4. Not want to date me (well, since I'm being confessional here)
>5. They'll take some "devil's advocate" stance and argue some mysogynist >position (recently a very bright man and I were discussing the whole Clinton >mishmash and his position seemed to be that women can think what they want,
>but bottom line, men need blowjobs and will do whatever it takes to get them)
>and then when you point that out (like "hey, when did your right to a blowjob >become an ethical underpinning of our society") they suggest you've taken it
>"too personally" and get offended that you thought so badly of them.
>
>and this isn't even having to worry that if you dump a 13 year old boy, he >might open fire on you)
>
>and wanting to piss men off, (I have this essay about starting a company >called dial a psycho-- where if a guy makes you feel bad and then tells you >not to make a scene, you hire an actress to do it for you anonymously. That >way you don't get the negative fallout from "making a scene" but you know >that he's had to deal with your deferred rage. There's more to it, but >that's the core. Is this art? Is it the rantings of a whiney man-hater?
>I've never submitted it because I've never been sure. Maybe I will.)
>
>I sometimes don't trust myself to say anything. All of it's so real and >discursive.
>
>Elizabeth

↑ Index

834. Cadaly
Anecdotal Agoraphobia
Wed 25 Mar 1998

I believe that Dickinson was agoraphobic as well as not socialized for interaction beyond her family. However, her refusal to participate in religious revivals that swept Amherst further limited her social interaction. Her writing work exacerbated the situation.

I live with a very deliberately macho borderline agoraphobic not socialized for interaction outside family. His participation in the publication process brings on anxiety, the same type as when he goes to, oh, a party. Oddly, the listservs he's on are for geneology.

My junk reading this week has included two books apropos to this e-mail exchange: _Eve Spoke: Human Language and Human Evolution_ and _Sex on the Brain: The Biological Differences Between Men and Women_. I can recommend neither, but I will say that maybe the information these journalists gathered from scientific papers is not meaningful. I.e., is the reason that I am unaccountably good at rotating shapes in space that I got some strange testosterone shot as a little girl? My fiance sure as heck can't pack a trunk worth a darn, but I doubt if he was dropped on his hippocampus (gee, that must hurt) as a child. If the model doesn't fit, don't wear it.

Tom Lux should be berated for a variety of things, but among them for fielding a mostly male Sarah Lawrence softball team in the New York MFA games. Hopefully that's not going on anymore.

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

835. laura and jeff
Re: perspective re: women
Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

this is crazy. makes me wonder if all of the efforts we have made over the years have only created a bitter struggle for power instead of and move toward equality. how can we move away from power games and actually work toward a more egalitarian society?? i don't know. maybe a move away from the polarized points of male and female, and toward a vision of individuality. i begining to feel my head shake with cynicism. jeff.

>Morning paper front-page news: two boy students open fire into a >fire-alarm crowd outside a Jonesboro, AR middle school, killing 4 students >and a teacher, and wounding another 11. All but one of those shot, >including the 5 fatalities, were women. One of the young shooters had been >overheard bragging that he was going to "kill everyone who ever broke up >with me."
>

>It reminds me hideously of the massacre at (what?) university in Canada in >which the shooter, an engineering student, fired into a class including >many women, shouting something like "you fucking feminists."
>
>We can't "do" anything about either case except what we already "do":
>write our poems & critical works, teach our students, live our lives in >our own way--& certainly it seems to have little "to do" with this >listserv--except to underscore the VITAL IMPORTANCE of continuing to >promote respect & equity in every direction.
>
>How that has to do with women & poetry & Poetics list, I dunno >specifically. I did have a gut feeling it bore mention.
>
>Gwyn McVay
>

---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

836. laura and jeff

Re: submission and dominance

Wed 25 Mar 1998

> 3. That I'm some sort of gushy girly person who cries at the TITANIC. (Rachel and I saw the TITANIC together, so anything she says about that....)-- i happen to posses a penis (and i'm almost six foot, and can bench over 200lbs-- so i'm "manly"), and i balled my eyes out at titanic. for the whole last hour and three hours afterward.

good will hunting made me cry even harder (but not for as long).
the post earlier about the kids and teacher being killed brought tears to my eyes.
point?:
crying is a -human- thing to do. i don't trust anyone who doesn't cry often. esp. poets.
jeff.

---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

837. William Burmeister Prod

Re: women in poetry/arts & chaffing/winnowing

Wed 25 Mar 1998

Sorry, but have to double up because my daily limit it will be met.

Patrick Durgin wrote:

> We need to be careful to distinguish between delineating the scope of this list and policing those borders. The comments re: women & their exclusion from verse culture, particularly the small mag.s illustrate a similar tendancy for the list to incite valuable debate then fall into an impotent silence.

Truly the delicate approach is appreciated in yr post, but is somewhat elliptical. I dunno though -- I'm trying to get out of the scope delineating and border policing business as it applies listwise.

> If one thread to spring off of these debates, such as regards a supposed "female sensibility" in contemporary, innovative poetics were to arise, ...

The thread I was jumping on was not a thread per se but was a lisle.

> Let me just add that I'd hate to lose the already scant multiplicity of voices on this list.

Me too!

>> Summi, don't let the (us) curmudgeonlies get you down. In answer to the >> question, yes. Don't go for the brilliant (what's brilliant anymore?), go for >> the humor -- anything ya like.

> I'm not sure I understand what this means. Although I appreciate humor and often long for more casual discussion of poetic/political issues. If you mean that I should counter a serious issue that is being discussed in a serious fashion with levity, I'm not sure I think this is a helpful way of dialoguing without being misunderstood.
>
> Summi

Probably not. Forget the last part.

Hey, maybe if I committed virtual (list) suicide, then perhaps flowers would grow over my unmarked virtual grave and the birds would begin to sing once again and ... ----------

Cadaly wrote:

> Anybody else see the article on coding/encrypting/scrambling in the New York Times?
>
> The url for the mit paper is
> http://theory.lcs.mit.edu/~rivest/chaffing.txt
> (NYT printed the tilde above the r)
>
> Mr. Rivest's dad suggested he use "winnowing" as a term. I think part of the innovation is packetizing, then encoding, but not encrypting, the packets (using different codes). But am I sure? Nope.
>
> Encryption is not exportable because it may be a national security risk. The question becomes, "Who holds the keys?" To get around it, one could use encoding, but code is generally not as secure. This particular paper is about adding chaff (or mixed "grains") to "grains" of meaning (the packets) and then passing out ... different winnowing fans to different people (I think).

Hi Catherine! Did read the article you posted on. It's an interesting repackaging of older ideas and erstwhile inventions. The authentication Mr. Rivest discusses is certainly real and valid. It is basically very similar to what is already in use when a cellular radio registers with a basestation repeater on powerup. The "chaffing" idea is also similar to something in use in spread spectrum or code division multiple access cellular radios where hundreds of users are simultaneously operating in the same wide bandwidth, but below the radio's noise floor. The maximal length codes that do the actual "spreading" appear random when windowed in time like the chaffing.

It's good to see this happening and being made public knowledge because the whole government interference thing in public crypto stinks. Who holds the keys you ask? The NSA (national security agency) wants to. They have, along with a incumbent president, basically killed (or almost) the use of the DES (data encryption standard) whose key the NSA found to be to damn time consuming to crack (it is encrypted and sent with the message). SO they come up with the "Clipper" encryption (a chip), which has a convenient back door for snooping. Still the safest (ideally) crypto scheme is private key where only two entities, one sender and one receiver, have the key (spy stuff). RSA (public key) is in widespread use on the internet and does have back doors as do all commercially marketed and sold crypto programs.

I don't know if Mr Rivest has the clout and the goods to make this fly. I don't know if he has tested this thing and knows, for example, how much information someone could glean with let's say just a spectrum analyzer. He is up against some very brainy hard-ons in the NSA and they're bored what with no cold war and all with which to busy themselves.

Best,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

838. Billy Little not helpful billy
Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

i certainly didn't mean to call you Katy a lazy editor, if i'm not mistaken i've earlier b/c you a rave about explosive, it's a classic, ought to be on everybody's desk, a model, i was attempting to mock the male editors on this list who i thought were trying to get off easy by saying "they don't submit," they wish they could get their work to publish but they don't go out of their way to ask for my money, the Charles Olson of this generation is Rosemarie Waldrop or Susan Howe, they're braving new territory and it stimulates my little brain. here in Canada Maxine Gadd keeps us on our toes if we backslide, Betsy Warland, Angela Hyruniak, Judith Copithorne ought to be solicited, she's a giant, i'd be happy to coedit a canadian womens issue of xplo, Phyllis Webb, Dion Brand, Lillian Allen, Anne Hebert(will you print french?), Lisa Robertson, Deanna Fergusson, Melissa Wolsak, Catriona Strang, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Kate van Dusen, Renee Rodin, Sharon Thesen, Susan Clark, Anne Michaels, Diana Hartog, Nelly McClung, Rhoda Rosenfeld, Nicole Brossard, it's all happening here in the frozen north. i'm a poetry evangelist i think it should be sold as exquisitely as bombs are sold. and Sumi some of us are here in part to learn from women(all others) and if you won't speak will we ever learn? and Elizabeth Hatmaker, a very brave post, if you are as honest in your poems as you are in you post i'd love to see them, and sometimes the wounded will have ears open only for the negative even from their supporters. sorry my expression is imperfect, i'm not dead.

↑ Index

839. k. lederer
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

I don't think that accepting submissions necessarily has anything to do with being a "market."

How is someone supposed to "break into" a community?

What if he or she doesn't want to go to readings or parties?

What if he or she lives in an isolated place?

What if he or she is young and sees a "call for submissions" as a first step? Or even a singular step?

I try my best to go to all the readings I can and to get my hands on other journals etc...

But I'm not going to encounter every (esp. emerging) poet I might like. I don't have enough time--and I live in Iowa!

I don't think that either Mark or Billy is "correct" here--I think that both of them have made good points--

Best,
Katy

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, George Bowering wrote:

> I'm afraid that I have to agree with Billy Little on this one. I dont see the sense or the committment in sending out a general request to poets to "submit." Read someone's poetry. Figure out what you like. Then ASK that poet to send you something for your magazine or whatever. Be a community, not a market.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

840. morpheal
Re: submission and dominance
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> I applaud Katy for daring to bring up the nasty "g" word (gender) on the List....It sure is threatening to a lot of folks.
>
> Quite simply, she's right: there are still huge disparities in the involvement, power, choices and visiblity of men and women in our poetry circles and institutions. (...because those disparities exist in society as inescapeable lines of torsion and inequality...)

What makes anyone think that such disparities only exist between one gender and the other gender ?

I think disparities tend to be as pervasive as there are differences of characteristics amongst individuals. Any characteristics, of any kind.

Something as taken for granted as whether someone has a long or a rounded face can be the difference, in some circles, between inclusion and exclusion, and between success and failure. Ever hear the phrase that someone "simply did not like the cut of his/her jib", so they shot them down ? It happens all the time, everywhere. It is the commonest kind of event under the sun.

It is that simple.

It has very little to do with gender, except that gender offers certain noteworthy characteristics that are selected or deselected by others, quite beyond the selections they make in their personal intimate relations.

I seem to recall a culture where only bearded men could do poetics.

Every historical culture has expressed some kinds of prohibitions as to who can and who cannot, and they have almost all, without exception, been completely as absurd as that only bearded men can do poetics.

The characteristics favoured tend to change, but even amongst men I have seen fashions of preference as to which men are in and which men are out, of any "in-group". The inner party and the outer party. The inner party is essentially parotted by the outer party. The story is almost invariably one of the included and the outcasts. It is a brahmanic and pariah type of system, even today, coverty if not overtly. The same applies to any other groups. They prefer some characteristics and they do not prefer other characteristics and sometimes they do not consciously think about what they are doing, they simply react. Of course when it is not characteristics pertaining to the person, including physical characteristics, or style of attire, or pitch of voice, or something else of that kind, it can be conformity to the currently in vogue inner party style, attire, manner of presentation and even similarity to their phyiscal features that makes it or breaks it for many others.

What's new ? Nothing.

Morpheal

↑ Index

841. morpheal
Re: Lazy editors
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> the world needs more passive, lazy editors willing to read what comes straight out of the mailbox with no name attached.
> Let them publish a magazine called TAHITI every now and then full > of stuff that just showed up one day while they were lounging around > eating grapes. let them publish good & bad poems right next to each other.

> let them be totally lazy people whose only concern is avoiding > typos.
> let them lie about giving away their mag directly from their hammocks.
> let them be so lazy that they don't even provide URLs or CDs - you have > to read the damn stuff out loud yourself!! holding the magazine in your > bare, sunbrowned hands, wind blowing through the palm trees, coconuts > plopping gently around your towel, the waves hissing on the snore...
>
> zzzzzzzz.

In totalitarian and totalist states editors are censors.

In other countries editors are..... (fill in the blank).

Morpheal

↑ Index

842. Karen Kelley

Re: women in poetry and in the arts

Wed 25 Mar 1998

Elizabeth Hatmaker wrote:
>
> I'm likewise a by-stander (mainly because I only get e-mail at work) but have > been thinking hard about the issues raised. When I think about how much of > my academic energy has been wasted alternately not wanting to piss men off > (because they might:
>
> 1. Hurt me professionally
> 2. Do that whole number where you show them your work and they sit there > like your dad or something and "help" you along with your little ideas.
>
> 3. Tell me my ideas are a bunch of whiney, privledged white feminist > bullshit and if I can't "compete" with men (meaning, usually, read the same > books they have read) I should just shut up. Or suggest I'm claiming > "victim" status--(now that's got to be the worst thing a woman in the 90s can > be called)
>
> 4. Not want to date me (well, since I'm being confessional here)
> 5. They'll take some "devil's advocate" stance and argue some mysogynist > position (recently a very bright man and I were discussing the whole Clinton > mishmash and his position seemed to be that women can think what they want,

> but bottom line, men need blowjobs and will do whatever it takes to get them)
> and then when you point that out (like "hey, when did your right to a blowjob > become an ethical underpinning of our society") they suggest you've taken it
> "too personally" and get offended that you thought so badly of them.
>
> and this isn't even having to worry that if you dump a 13 year old boy, he > might open fire on you)
>
> and wanting to piss men off, (I have this essay about starting a company > called dial a psycho-- where if a guy makes you feel bad and then tells you > not to make a scene, you hire an actress to do it for you anonymously. That > way you don't get the negative fallout from "making a scene" but you know > that he's had to deal with your deferred rage. There's more to it, but > that's the core. Is this art? Is it the rantings of a whiney man-hater?
> I've never submitted it because I've never been sure. Maybe I will.)
>
> I sometimes don't trust myself to say anything. All of it's so real and > discursive.
>
> Elizabeth

These are excellent points: they remind me of that awkward situation when a man asks to see your poetry & in response shows you his (this sounds weird already), and you're supposed to love his, preferably better than your own, and admire him for his intellect and sensitivity, with which you will fall in love. But you don't, so soon he's calling you at 2 a.m. drunk and ranting about Cleanth Brooks & how you have to see the light, you bitch. Next morning your windshield is smashed & your tires slashed.

Don't you just hate when that happens?

Karen

↑ Index

843. r. drake
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

---

george, billy et al--

but wouldnt that mean that you'd only consider work from poets who had already published? closed systems such as that have led to th demise of several (celebate, but otherwise virtuous) religious communities over th years... but praps that's what we shd aim for...

lbd

> I'm afraid that I have to agree with Billy Little on this one. I dont see the sense or the committment in sending out a general request to poets to "submit." Read someone's poetry. Figure out what you like. Then ASK that poet to send you something for your magazine or whatever. Be a community, not a market.
>
> George Bowering.

↑ Index

844. morpheal
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

> george, billy et al--
>
> but wouldnt that mean that you'd only consider work from poets who had already published? closed systems such as that have led to th demise of several (celebate, but otherwise virtuous) religious communities over th years... but praps that's what we shd aim for...
>
> lbd

And I was beginning to think that perhaps it is the company... of gods...who ultimately controls who is published and who is not.

[pagan] Morpheal

↑ Index

845. Henry Gould
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Wed 25 Mar 1998

Poets really love marvy editors. Editors who really read a lot of stuff out there & know what they like & really cutting edge and cool. Who have money & confidence & a plan & connections & know how to network. So if you're one of those editors, it's time for you to check out THE PUBLISHER'S PUB ONLINE. Sponsored by Left Overbie University and featuring the latest all-sensory gadgetry, this URL is totally FREE with membership. No special downloading necessary - just put your Editor's Mug (10 litres or more preferably) in front of your screen, and watch the submissions pour down from NETWORKED POETS - TOP POETS - TOTALLY CHARISMATIC AUTHORS - AND SWELL PEOPLE. No need to make those drippy phone calls anymore - no pleading - the submissions are yours - no questions asked! Because the "PUB" is INSIDE DOPE - based in London-Beijing-Vancouver-Rio de Janeiro. Need we say more? Distributed by Bigpubdistribnameshowcoolpowerfulheadtrips, Inc. - we reach the CENTERS OF METROPOLITAN GELATO. Search no more, editors! Just "click" on the small dot [period] below!!

*

bye now!!

-019-034895J-POJ;LKL.CV.,M0429580-457[PKJ

whoops - sorry - that was Harvey Haggis Gyiurl again, trying to interpose one of his "sonnets" [sigh] - won't happen again...

10-913QIRHKJB93845...

- damn! - sorry - a few bugs yet in the program... Louise Bird? Do we know you? Have you read SQUIRREL VILLANELLES by Rimroddlla Squizd? can you fill out this questionnaire please & return with three hundred thousand letters of recrimination before Friday? thanks...

↑ Index

846. Kenneth Goldsmith
Real Audio Services Needed
Wed 25 Mar 1998

+ + + +

Guillaume Apollinaire
Jaap Blonk
William S. Burroughs
John Cage
Henri Chopin
Jean Cocteau
Andrew Dickinson
Kelli Dipple
Marcel Duchamp
Brion Gysin
Wyndham Lewis
Jackson Mac Low
Charles Manson
F.T. Marinetti
David Moss
John Reeves
John Reeves & John Bone
Kurt Schwitters
Cecil Taylor
Gregory Whitehead

+ +

U B U W E B : VISUAL, CONCRETE, & SOUND POETRY
http://www.ubu.com

+ +

↑ Index

847. michael corbin
Re: federalist ten
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Billy Little wrote:

> sorry my expression is imperfect, i'm not dead.

surprising only that 'gender' is the proximate inflection of exclusion.

in this 'open' space.

lurkers unite

or vote in other plebeecites

hear me roar

civic-li(f)e

avante-apartheid

guard

Oh Su-sa-na/Oh don't you cry for me/ for I come from al-abamy/with a banjo on my knee.

mc

↑ Index

848. Mark Weiss
Re: submission and dominance
Thu 26 Mar 1998

> i happen to posses a penis (and i'm almost six foot, and can bench over 200lbs-- so i'm "manly"), and i balled my eyes out at titanic. for the whole last hour and three hours afterward.

At the risk of levity, balling for four hours during and after a tear-jerker strikes me as stereotypical male behavior, including the exaggeration. Don't know what your partner's excuse is.

Sometimes spelling counts.

↑ Index

849. Maz881
New Booklet
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Dear Poetics List,

A new booklet of poetry is available called Enigma Variations by the late Alex Smith Jr. Mr. Smith joined the majority in 1987 from complications associated with AIDS.

In 1979 Mr. Smith completed an extensive bibliography of Frank O'Hara while a grad student at UConn. The Archive for New Poetry at UCSD recently purchased his papers.

Enigma Variations is a sequence of 9 spare lyrics that perform a serial function and have as their subject matter certain cross-dressing tendencies as well as travel to the moon. Here is one of the lyrics:

The man he met was a girl,
but in the dark
she was a moth,

a book, a phrase
in his landscape.
Wait! he said
as he took off her dress and landed on the moon.

The booklet is published by Reverse English and is available now for $5 us currency. It is 4.5 by 6.5, hand sewn, 12 pages, the majority of which were printed on a letter press.

Please support the arts. Make checks payable to 'A'A Arts. Send orders to:

Bill Luoma
3029 Lowrey Ave #A-1102
Honolulu, HI 96822
[redacted]

Please forward this message as appropriate. Thank you.

↑ Index

850. sarah venart
unmarked listserv (the female question)
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Yes. It does occasionally irk me. So here are my rambling thoughts. First a wee bit of pissed-offed-ness: What is it about this server and its male elbow nudging, name dropping banter? The word cronies comes to mind. Jolly good, all that... with an American accent, of course. Even the term unmarked as "not marked" -- as the dog (male) lifting up his little leggy and whizzing. I've been researching and looking into American modern poetics this last year; into a history that is so male dominated (look on any library shelf) it would appear that the only academics writing about the female moderns are other women -- in texts that have so much to cover they have formed a separate canon, a lesser canon, or some such thing. Of course there are exceptions, but only for certain poets who follow fairly closely with a tradition that is male (Moore, Bishop, etc.). And why, historically, are critics so quick to toss any peep from a "not-fitting-the-muse-cut-out-of-woman-poet" out the window (Molesworth on Sexton, Bawer on Plath... just as a for instance)... and that's just for starters because I am just learning the "for starters" of Modern American poetry. I'm Canadian, after all. I had to learn to speak Canadian poetry first. So, this makes me kind of ...silent. Charles Bernstein writes in _A Poetics : "We have to get over, as in getting over a disease, the idea that we can 'all' speak to one another in the universal voice of poetry. History still mars our words, and we will be transparent to one another only when history itself disappears. For as long as social relations are skewed, who speaks in poetry can never be a neutral matter" (5). But do we have to get over it, or do we have to work towards fixing it? Because of the skewed language I learned, I became bilingual. I can speak this female language, I can speak the male language, I can appreciate both. I can understand Prufrock and Anahistoric. Do males have the same chance to learn and appreciate female language? Roughly, quickly, (and please feel free to add to it, subtract from it) this female language is made up of many things. It could be the following: story telling of the home, dolls, dresses, body as a history, female fluids (our bodies drip continually, inverted candles), ummmmm... ironing? I'm sure I am making people cringe with this list, but I think that very cringe is important... because why are you cringing? Maybe it is that these things -- dresses and irons, ruffles and lace, for more obvious examples -- are condemned by (even) women themselves as being unnecessary, frilly, useless wastes -- and if these are a waste of space, then what are you saying about your childhood -- where every woman I know had at least one pair of leotards (tights) with ruffles on the bum as a toddler? And if male non-ruffled language and history is so wrapped up in my own female learning and appreciation -- these male signifiers and images, these male aesthetics -- that I have been learning and appreciating, for the most part, since the age of five (if not before) then where do males learn and appreciate my signifiers, my signs, my aesthetics -- ruffled or not? Certainly not in their tonka truck GI Joe boyhoods where, even now, female signs are dismissed. A good, non-poetic example of this is that terrible show: Bill Cosby's Kids Say the Darndest Things. Three weeks ago, a hidden camera skit where boys, age 7-8, were asked to try out for a commerical for a female doll. They were asked to brush its hair and hold it, rock it, then lie down with it on a set made up to look like girl's pink ruffled bedroom -- Bill Cosby could not keep a straight face (as he always manages to do in other skits) because the situation was, to him and to the boys who tried out, so absurd. So those are my thoughts on women on this listserv and why I am so quiet. I'm thinking, is all...and watching shitty TV. (unfortunately, my own poetry does not have a ruffle, a pot holder or a piece of macramé in it. But if You, dear male or female reader, can write a good piece on a pot holder, go for it).

Sarah Venart
Concordia University
Montreal, Canada

↑ Index

851. Marcella Durand
woman
Thu 26 Mar 1998

So glad to see this very important thread continuing. I feel ready now for work & poetry. Glad I feel more like opening my mouth. All this needs to be talked about and continued until women aren't gunned down anymore. I love talking about and hearing talked about gender issues.

Thanks all.

↑ Index

852. Alan Myouka Sondheim
A True Story
Thu 26 Mar 1998

-

Nikuko Sells and Jennifer Buys, A True Story

Nikuko sells her panties in Nakasu with a sigh; Jennifer approaches her; she was just walking by. "I need some fifty-thousand yen," Nikuko tells a lie. "I'll pay you more," says Jennifer, and she begins to cry. "They're highly worn, and partly torn," Nikuko says with sighs. "I'm getting damp, I'm getting hot," wet Jennifer now buys; She pays the yen, the panties hers, brown odor on them lies. Nikuko's first in ecstasy, and comes with great loud cries. Then Jennifer is home with them, and starting with a sigh, She slips her clothes from her lean form, is naked by and by. They're on her face, she will debase, so she begins to lie Back on the bed, and smiling wan, she too begins to cry. She's brightly lit, glows in the dark, so virtual and high, The panties worth a million yen, if she could only die.

↑ Index

853. morpheal
Re: Quanta of Poetic Spin in Virtual Hyper Space (Federalist Ten)
Thu 26 Mar 1998

> Billy Little wrote:
> sorry my expression is imperfect, i'm not dead.
> surprising only that 'gender' is the proximate inflection of exclusion.
> in this 'open' space.
> lurkers unite
> or vote in other plebeecites
> hear me roar

> civic-li(f)e
> avante-apartheid
> guard
> Oh Su-sa-na/Oh don't you cry for me/ for I come from al-abamy/with a > banjo on my knee.
> mc

Curious recourse to near poeticism. Assuming there is in fact a coherent system of beliefs and practices pertaining to an identifiable poetic ideology that gives a sense of socio-political group coherence and evolves through time, such that it has its own socio-cultural history.

That was a digression...but returning to the gist of the comment... since all electronic data is essentially infinitely mutable, being as electronically transformable as it is, in situ, within a nanosecond of its initial inception, who is to say that the electronic YAY on the lectronic plebiansite, registered within the lectronic voting booth, does not appear as a NAY in the tally ? What is there to tell anyone that it will remain a YAY rather than a NAY ? Of course there will always be recourse to a hard copy piece of paper verifying the transaction, as to the nature of the lectronic YAY, will there not ?

What has this to do with poetics ? Everything.

It says that unless poetics is to devolve into infinitely mutable silly putty of hyper spaced out post-facto deconstructions and reconstructions of the poet's intentions, there is a need for a printed hard copy of the poem that most likely shall remain as it was intended to remain, as it is much more difficult to tranform and mute-ate a hard copy writing than it is to transmogrify, transmute, transubstantiate, and otherwise change an electronic work.

Some might argue that there is special merit in works of art that are meant to be as mutable as silly-putty, but in that instance is it not the author, the artist, who is ultimately muted ? The work of art, of hyper anti-art, no longer states the author's intended meaning, but some other meaning unforeseen in the act of creation. Is that more true to what art ought to be ? If so, it might be that the electronic vote on the plebiancite is only another work of the same kind of art, and intentionality has no true part to play in either poetics or politics. A short step from hyper-art to hyper-politics where everything becomes a reflection of the same spin paradigm ?

The vote is no more than an electron spin. Art is no more than an electron spin. Then ultimately it becomes impossible, among all the spins, to know who is doing the spinning and spin is all there is and taken for granted as how it must be.

Needless to say I have very real doubts about the socio-political-cultural context of electronic hyper-art, and what I see as its co-optation to dehumanization, deindividualizion as pure reflection, and of what I tend to see as an anti-art that becomes too easily elevated to being tauted as a highest evolution of art. I cannot see the excessive valuing of infinite plasticity and mutability as a true increase in creative freedom, but rather as the opposite, where all creative freedom becomes subverted to total deconstruction of individual expression of meaning and meaning as individual creative intentionality.

Morpheal

↑ Index

854. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Feminist Poetics
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Carolyn Guertin writes:
> It's not particularly useful either. We get make-up tips for morons and a > catty fashion critique of the participants in the academy awards quoted to > us as a model for behaviour? I doubt that any Poetics site could get 2500 > hits a day (as James and Breslin claim)--even using their tabloid-style > approach.

maybe it wasn't so obvious from my remarks, but it's not the content I meant to advocate, it's the approach... I'm sorry to see that site's taken such a turn for the bizarre, but the point is, they worked pretty goddamn'd hard to build and promote a venue for the stuff they wanted to see out there, and then put it out there. that's not the only way to do it, but I guess I think a big "fuck you" to the "industry" is a pretty impressive response (and that was the way the site positioned itself originally)...

Mark Prejsnar: if I have to dig out my credentials to prove myself a good liberal (which I adamantly am not), I can tell you that roughly 60% of the mss. I've published over the last year were written by women. - so obviously I'm not wont to invoke (nor am I infected by) the bullshit anti- affirmative action rhetoric you mention.

among those mss. was Rachel Daley's book, which I publisht not because of her gender,
but because the work is excellent.

while there's no point pretending we occupy a level playing field (of cultural production), I take her question or caveat advisedly: one does well to suspect a climate in which we desire to see more work BY WOMEN, rather than MORE

WORK by women. if you read my previous post more carefully, you'll see that I'm not attacking outright the sensitivity to gender that I think most of the publishers on this list display (or @ least try for) - I was criticizing the easy assumption that a deliberate 50-50 split somehow fixes anything. more explicitly, I think we really have to ask ourselves whether our enforcement of gender categories doesn't operate within the critical doxa that the most important thing about a poem is who wrote it.

for that matter I don't think any of us should still assigning women their duties, whether they be to submit or to submit, or both. -this said to the list in general, and not meant to characterize Katy's initial post (because that's not what she said).

there's something distinctly patronizing about the whole contest.

> Where is the feminist poetics list anyway?

there is @ least one, I know, bc Linda is on it; but I don't know the listserv address - I can post this sometime next week, if anyone is interested (L. gets back from NY this wkend)... from her comments re the discussion, it seems pretty anglo-am as opposed to french/poststruct.
feminist - not that such things aren't necessarily amenable to the discussion, but it sounds as if most folks there haven't read them. of course, that's only second-hand info, and it's passing through me, a clearly male-hegemonic, unreliable source.

Chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

855. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: unmarked listserv (the female question)

Thu 26 Mar 1998

---

well i gotta go run off to a conference at suny/stony brook, where i'll be at through sunday... anyone in the area wanna connect, please do!... i'm staying at a place called three village inn...

i've been tempted from the start to post in on this question of women's participation... and subsequent discussion by women and a few men of women's issues, feminism, etc... maybe it's better that i didn't post, but i do feel obliged to say here that i think such discussions are crucial, that gender is OF COURSE IT IS an urgent issue and needs to be aired and re-aired on this list as elsewhere...

but hey, just to say that i'll miss this chat for the next few days, looking forward to more such posts when i return!...

best,

joe

nb for a final time, my whole conference item at http://www.iit.edu/~amato/moonlight.html

↑ Index

856. Mairead Byrne
Re: submission and dominance
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Congratulations on Explosive, Katy: it really is jumping out of its orange and black skin. But I notice you're not taking ANY submissions. What's gonna happen when all the gals on the list start mailing their stuff to you? Mairead (who is about to start a magzine too)

↑ Index

857. Sylvester Pollet
Re: submission and dominance
Thu 26 Mar 1998

At 11:47 PM -0800 3/25/98, Mark Weiss wrote:
>>
>>i happen to posses a penis (and i'm almost six foot, and can bench over >>200lbs-- so i'm "manly"), and i balled my eyes out at titanic. for the whole >>last hour and three hours afterward.
>
>At the risk of levity, balling for four hours during and after a >tear-jerker strikes me as stereotypical male behavior, including the >exaggeration. Don't know what your partner's excuse is.
>
>Sometimes spelling counts.

aw come on Mark--didn't you ever hear "Whatever floats your boat"?

↑ Index

858. Patrick F. Durgin
Query ---->
Thu 26 Mar 1998

If anyone has a current contact for Anne Blonstein (see her work in latest issue of Situation) would you please back-chan...thanks.

Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` -----><-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

↑ Index

859. Gwyn McVay
Re: unmarked listserv (the female question)
Thu 26 Mar 1998

>>>But if You, dear male or female reader, can write a good piece on a pot holder, go for it).<<<

Sarah, I suppose I can do that, but how do I get the pot holder to go through the laser printer?

Baffled in the 'Burbs (maybe we better ask Heloise)

↑ Index

860. r. drake
Re: unmarked listserv (the female question)
Thu 26 Mar 1998

---

serendipitously, th morning's post deliverd _moving borders: 3 decades of innovative writing by women_, ed by mary margaret sloan, frm talisman house (PO Box 3157, jersey city nj 07303; $29.95 paper)... 740 pages, including abt 200 pgs of poetics essays... i know its been mentioned here before but seems worth saying again... an increadible retrospect... & antidote to rumors here 'bouts that women dont send work out...

lbd

↑ Index

861. Mark Prejsnar
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Nope...Sorry, but these sorts of interactions are oriented toward community-building. No doubt you do lotsa editing, and should certainly share your approaches. But your off-target here.

Mp

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, George Bowering wrote:

> I'm afraid that I have to agree with Billy Little on this one. I dont see the sense or the committment in sending out a general request to poets to "submit." Read someone's poetry. Figure out what you like. Then ASK that poet to send you something for your magazine or whatever. Be a community, not a market.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

862. Ellay Phillips
Re: unmarked listserv (the female question)
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Thu, 26 Mar 1998, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> But if You, dear male or female reader, can write a good piece on a pot holder, go for it).<<<
>
> Sarah, I suppose I can do that, but how do I get the pot holder to go through the laser printer?

> Baffled in the 'Burbs (maybe we better ask Heloise)

Of course, you could always _paste_ the poems on. Then you have poetry _and_ art or that something in-between-thing (like indoor plumbing?) that is so pleezing.

Ellay Phillips

↑ Index

863. Mark Prejsnar
Re: submission and dominance
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998, morpheal wrote:

> What makes anyone think that such disparities only exist between one gender and the other gender ?
>
> I think disparities tend to be as pervasive as there are differences of characteristics amongst individuals. Any characteristics, of any kind.
>
> It has very little to do with gender, except that gender offers certain noteworthy characteristics that are selected or deselected by others, quite beyond the selections they make in their personal intimate relations.

This requires going back to the basics of feminist political models, don't it?

Of course no one said power disparities "only exist" between genders! (What kind of wierd argument is that??)

But between genders is one of the places they exist. You've made certain ideological choices, I guess, that rule out seeing that. You may feel that reality is hyperindividual and has no social dimension, "but it ain't necessarily so."

↑ Index

864. Aldon Nielsen
Re: "balled my eyes out at the Titanic"
Thu 26 Mar 1998

---

well . . . we did our share of that in the 60,s, before we recognized the weakness of the term -- but I didn't know this was allowed in movie theaters --

↑ Index

865. Cadaly
Chaffing, contributing, etc.
Thu 26 Mar 1998

I think what Mr. Rivest has going for him are the words "chaffing" and "winnowing", i.e., repackaging. However, this exchange of messages, coded and encypted, fascinates me, as the word "winnowing" and computer "garbage" always have, as the fairy tale task of calling a variety of birds to sort the mess has.

Trying to contribute to a literary journal is certainly frustrating, but even more so when there is some sort of editorial clique rather than a poetic that, if not stated, can perhaps be deduced from the work in print.

It is still not the sexualized, but often complete, rejection that seems to inspire so many mass or serial murders.

Regards,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

866. Aldon Nielsen conference announcement
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Stop Me If You've Heard This One Before
>From: Kala Pierson <[redacted]>
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: conference announcement
>Sender: [redacted]
>X-Info: From Loyola Marymount University, L.A. Ca.
>
>
> * INTERROGATING INTERROGATION *
>
> An interdisciplinary conference coming soon > to a university near you...
>
>
>The emerging discipline of referentiality studies has >defined itself largely in opposition to the dominant >cultures of modern academic scholarship (e.g., >subculture studies, minority studies, etc.). This >conference aims to identify strategies for analyzing >and developing referentiality studies--if you will,

>to referee referentiality--and in so doing, >to interrogate interrogation within all scholarly >disciplines.
>
>
>CONFERENCE PROGRAM
>
>
> ---FRIDAY---
>
> 3:00pm Opening Remarks: "Opening Remarks: >Necessity or Vestigial Tail In The Evolution of >Conference Structure?"
>
> 3:30pm SESSION 1: Foundations
>
>--Intradisciplinary Reproduction of Participant->Observer Dichotomies and the Culture of Ethnography:
>An Ethnography
>
>--The Parent(hetical) Her(etical): Gendering
>the "Reproduction" of Meaning Through >Over(ly Clever)(-)Punctuation
>
>--The Persistence of Referentiality Studies:
>One Academic Subdiscipline's Insidious Means of >Self-perpetuation
>
> 5:00pm Keynote Address (Douglas Hofstadter, >U. of Michigan): "Implications of Self-Referentiality >for Referentiality Studies"
>
> 8:00pm Special screening of "The Neverending Story"
>(U.S., 1985). Discussion to follow: "'The Neverending >Story': False Advertising or Meta-self-actualization >Through Collective Belief?"
>
>
> ---SATURDAY---
>

> 10:30am SESSION 2: Culturing Pop, Pop-ing Culture
>
>--"I yam what I yam": Popeye, the Pop Eye, and the Pop I
>
>--RIP, Princess Di...? Combating Over-analysis of a >Cultural Icon's Death: Some Analytical Strageties
>
>--Al Bundy as Modern Freud, or, Guaranteeing Huge >Audiences for Academic Papers by Coupling >Lowcult-antihero Subjects With Outlandish, >Deliberately Provocative Claims
>
> 1:30pm SESSION 3: Writing Writing
>
>--"I'm too sexy for this paper": Gratuitous Use of >Quotations, Particularly Those Evoking Pop Culture, >in Academic Paper Titles
>
>--"Look Ma, no point!!": Entire Papers Written Solely
>In Order To Justify a Clever Title or Opening Quotation
>
>--Unanimities of Concatenation: Ineluctable Verbiage and >Beguiling Misuse of Terminal Velocities as Predeterminant >of an Actualizationist Anti-aesthetics
>
> 3:30pm Special excursion to local art museum, where >the topic of the lecture-tour will be "Touring, Lore-ing, >Abhoring: Collective Consciousness, Fallacies of Place >and Space, and the Production of 'Taste' in the Guided >Museum Tour"
>
> 8:00pm Special screening of "I Shot Andy Warhol" >(U.S., 1968). Discussion to follow: "Revisionist Meta>subjectivities and Culturally Determined Modes of >Transgressive Be-ing: Did the Film 'I Shot Andy Warhol' >Itself Shoot Andy Warhol?"
>
>
> ---SUNDAY---
>
> 7:30am SESSION 4: Special Single-Paper Session
>

>--Control from Above: Marginalizing Papers Deemed
>Of Little Interest in Bizarrely Isolated Sessions
>That No One in Their Right Mind Would Attend
>
>
>
>==========
==
> The preceding is entirely (lovingly) satirical, >fictional, etc. Any resemblance to actual papers, >published or unpublished, is probably a result of >the fact that I'm satirizing an actual paper.
>
>Feel free to forward if you know others who might be >interested -- we do want to get the word out re.
>this conference, which, needless to say, promises >to be the Scholarly Event of '98...
>
>Cheers
>Kala
>
>___ Kala Pierson _____ > Composition Dept., Eastman School of Music > [redacted] 716/[redacted]
>_____
>
>
>

↑ Index

867. laura and jeff
i was wondering...
Thu 26 Mar 1998

---

i have heard a rumor that zukofsky's a-24 is available somewhere on cd or lp.
i can't seem to find it if this is true.
does anyone have any info they'd like to share??
thanks!
jeff.
---

no quotes today...

↑ Index

868. William Burmeister Prod
Re: i was wondering...
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Mar 26, 3:23pm, Don Byrd wrote: > Subject: Re: i was wondering...
> laura and jeff wrote:
>
> > i have heard a rumor that zukofsky's a-24 is available somewhere on cd or lp.
> > i can't seem to find it if this is true.
> > does anyone have any info they'd like to share??
> > thanks!
> > jeff.
> >
>
> The only performance of "A"--24 that I have heard of took place in San > Francisco, probably about the time of the Talks series--late 70s-early 80s, with, > as I recall, Bob Perelman on Piano. Surely there is someone on this list who was > there or knows about this.
>
>-- End of excerpt from Don Byrd

Ask Mark Scroggins (listmember) if he knows anything about this. Mark, are you there?

↑ Index

869. Keston Sutherland
new pamphlet
Thu 26 Mar 1998

I have made up a new pile of my recent book

At The Motel Partial Opportunity

and gladly offer it to listmembers and to anyone else at $5 including postage. It's big and glossy. Thanks.

↑ Index

870. Gabriel Gudding
Sycamore Review: All Full Up
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Dear Potential Benefactors,

This just to let you know that Sycamore Review is no longer accepting submissions (bequests) for its issue 10.2. We have filled our charge.

Please stand by. In a few weeks time, I'll post the line-up to the list.

Thanks to those who submitted. Contracts and thankyou notes are, as they say in Star Trek, away.

And a special thankyou to dear Joe Semenovich, where ever you are (_in tenebris_ or elsewhere) -- Gabe

↑ Index

871. RaeA100900
Re: Query v. Ed Foster
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Hi,

Does anyone have a current viable address for Talisman. I wrote to P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, N.J. 07030 - an address Ed himself gave me - and my letter came back "return to sender." (I'm trying not to get paranoid. Let's just asume an honest mistake was involved.). I would ask him directly again, but now I can't find his e mail either. One or both of us is a bit disorganized.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

872. Don Byrd
Re: i was wondering...
Thu 26 Mar 1998

---

laura and jeff wrote:

> i have heard a rumor that zukofsky's a-24 is available somewhere on cd or lp.
> i can't seem to find it if this is true.
> does anyone have any info they'd like to share??
> thanks!
> jeff.

The only performance of "A"--24 that I have heard of took place in San Francisco, probably about the time of the Talks series--late 70s-early 80s, with, as I recall, Bob Perelman on Piano. Surely there is someone on this list who was there or knows about this.

db

--

****
Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

873. Maryrose11
David Bromige in Kansas
Thu 26 Mar 1998

The Lawrence Poets' Alliance is proud to present a reading by David Bromige, on April 13, 1998 at 7:30 p.m. The reading will be held at the Canterbury House, 1116 Louisiana Street, Lawrence, KS.

The Lawrence Poets' Alliance is a new organization whose mission is to bring nationally known poets to Lawrence for readings and workshops. This reading is the first in a series. The next reading will be held in the Fall of 1998.

This reading has been made possible by the support of the Friends of the Poetry Collection, the Canterbury House, and private donations.

↑ Index

874. CharSSmith
Re: Query v. Ed Foster
Thu 26 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-26 18:22:05 EST, you write:

<< Does anyone have a current viable address for Talisman. I wrote to P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, N.J. 07030 - an address Ed himself gave me - and my let- ter came back "return to sender." (I'm trying not to get paranoid. Let's just asume an honest mistake was involved.). I would ask him directly again, but now I can't find his e mail either. One or both of us is a bit disorganized. >>

↑ Index

875. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Query v. Ed Foster
Thu 26 Mar 1998

That's the address I have. Have you tried calling [redacted] or is that number no longer working either? I'm curious to find out because I need to get in touch with him as well and I have the same address Rae has.

Julie Schmid

On Thu, 26 Mar 1998, RaeA100900 wrote:

> Hi,
>
> Does anyone have a current viable address for Talisman. I wrote to P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, N.J. 07030 - an address Ed himself gave me - and my letter came back "return to sender." (I'm trying not to get paranoid. Let's just asume an honest mistake was involved.). I would ask him directly again, but now I can't find his e mail either. One or both of us is a bit disorganized.
>
> Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

876. David Golumbia
Re: Query v. Ed Foster
Thu 26 Mar 1998

I'm glancing at the remarkable (& so far not entirely remarked-upon-in-this-forum) _Anthology of New (American) Poets_, just out from Ed F's house, & the address is listed on the indicia there slightly differently, to wit:

Talisman House
PO Box 3157
Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

i'm no PO expert, but i'd guess the 0-for-3 transposition might befuddle Mr. Zip...

& may i take this moment to compliment the editors of this fine book for the job they've done (& with the acknowledged assumption that we can all name five or 10 persons, ourselves included, not on a roster we might prefer to see them on -- but the reverse certainly holding true as well, right?)... male/female balance hovering somewhere near 50%... surely the "first" "document" of "something," and a fine "middle period" collection of something (else)

CharSSmith wrote:
>
> In a message dated 98-03-26 18:22:05 EST, you write:
>
> << Does anyone have a current viable address for Talisman. I wrote to > P.O.
> Box 3157, Jersey City, N.J. 07030 - an address Ed himself gave me - and my > letter came back "return to sender." (I'm trying not to get paranoid. Let's > just asume an honest mistake was involved.). I would ask him directly again, > but now I can't find his e mail either. One or both of us is a bit > disorganized. >>
>

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

877. Henry Gould
\engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

In poetry there are no men or women; only ears. Anthologies are no measure; critics are no measure; only ears measure. Those who have ears to hear, let them hear.

The gender issue is a form of politics & journalism. Important, in those disciplines. Poetry is a vocation.

Does this mean I think gender is an "issue"? No. I think "issue" is a sexless noun, without memory. [speaking poetically-speaking]

What is memory? Why ask? You know.

I don't care anymore about the sociology of poetry. It takes ears to hear what I hear. I hear Melville, eating potato chips in his PJ's. [really?] Poetry is asked to do a lot by people who don't do poetry much. Well, it will, in its own good time. But you p.c. pharisees won't know what it is, Mr. Jones. Speak up, gals. Spandrift - he dead.

I don't hear much, really. But I'm hungry for the sound of what I hear. That's what ears are for. OK - it's not only sound. You win. But it's also not just the first echo you can think of. Men wear whale penises for doilies. Women mount chargers. Aloha! [x-mate. HENRY trips again]

Poetry. Everybody has their own idea of Paradise. Neutral, universal, transparent? No thanks. Equilibrium background for soaring...ok for now...

"my sister, my dove". Cowwamaunsch [Narragansett for "I love you"]

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

878. k. lederer
Re: \engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

If you haven't already--

READ A ROOM OF ONE'S OWN BY V WOOLF

Katy

On Thu, 26 Mar 1998, Henry Gould wrote:

> In poetry there are no men or women; only ears. Anthologies are no measure; critics are no measure; only ears measure. Those who have ears to hear, let them hear.
>
> The gender issue is a form of politics & journalism. Important, in those disciplines. Poetry is a vocation.
>
> Does this mean I think gender is an "issue"? No. I think "issue" is a sexless noun, without memory. [speaking poetically-speaking]
>
> What is memory? Why ask? You know.
>
> I don't care anymore about the sociology of poetry. It takes ears to hear what I hear. I hear Melville, eating potato chips in his PJ's. [really?] Poetry is asked to do a lot by people who don't do poetry much. Well, it will, in its own good time. But you p.c. pharisees won't know what it is, Mr. Jones. Speak up, gals. Spandrift - he dead.
>
> I don't hear much, really. But I'm hungry for the sound of what I hear. That's what ears are for. OK - it's not only sound. You win. But it's also not just the first echo you can think of. Men wear whale penises for doilies. Women mount chargers. Aloha! [x-mate. HENRY trips again]
>
> Poetry. Everybody has their own idea of Paradise. Neutral, universal, transparent? No thanks. Equilibrium background for soaring...ok for now...
>
> "my sister, my dove". Cowwamaunsch [Narragansett for "I love you"]

> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

879. henry
Re: \engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Thu, 26 Mar 1998 19:56:11 -0600 k. lederer said:
>If you haven't already--
>
>READ A ROOM OF ONE'S OWN BY V WOOLF
>
>Katy

OK, Katy - I done Moby Dick - will try Virginia. I'm noman if not HG Well-rounded.
- Odd Sissy, the UniVersal RaVlin' Wolf

↑ Index

880. Aldon Nielsen
Re: \engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

> In poetry there are no men or women; only ears.

If there is anything between those ears, it is listening out of an intersection in motion that has a history, that is interested, that rubs up everywhere against teeming context.

though there are, I read, those hollow men --

Melville was not one of them, I hear --

"p.c." is asked to do a lot by those who don't think poetry will do -- poetry makes one thing happen --

↑ Index

881. Kenneth Goldsmith
UbuWeb Sound Poetry Saved
Thu 26 Mar 1998

+ +

U B U W E B : VISUAL, CONCRETE, & SOUND POETRY
http://www.ubu.com

+ +

Dear Friends,

Thank you for the great outpouring of support for our Real Audio Sound Poetry section. We were very fortunate to have Zarcrom Industries donate the use of their Real Audio server.

Our Sound Poetry end will be down for a couple of days while we re-ftp and reshuffle our files. However, please feel free to check out the rest of the site: Historical, Contemporary, Found & Insane, & Papers relating to Visual, Concrete, & Sound Poetry.

Regards,
Kenneth Goldsmith
Editor, UbuWeb Visual, Concrete & Sound Poetry
E-Mail: [redacted]
http://www.ubu.com

R E A L A U D I O S O U N D P O E T R Y

Guillaume Apollinaire
Jaap Blonk
William S. Burroughs
John Cage
Henri Chopin
Jean Cocteau
Andrew Dickinson
Kelli Dipple
Marcel Duchamp
Brion Gysin
Wyndham Lewis
Jackson Mac Low
Charles Manson
F.T. Marinetti
David Moss
John Reeves
John Reeves & John Bone
Kurt Schwitters
Cecil Taylor
Gregory Whitehead

+ +

U B U W E B : VISUAL, CONCRETE, & SOUND POETRY
http://www.ubu.com

+ +

↑ Index

882. Maria Damon
Re: \engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

At 6:24 PM -0800 3/26/98, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
>>In poetry there are no men or women; only ears.
>
>
>If there is anything between those ears, it is listening out of an >intersection in motion that has a history, that is interested, that rubs up >everywhere against teeming context.
>
>though there are, I read, those hollow men --
>
>Melville was not one of them, I hear --
>
>"p.c." is asked to do a lot by those who don't think poetry will do --
>
>
>poetry makes one thing happen --

well said. would i had your wit.

↑ Index

883. k. lederer
Re: Queries: Yau and Friedman
Thu 26 Mar 1998

Does anyone have the proper mailing addresses of

John Yau
Ed Friedman

??

I got some things returned to sender--

Thanks!
Katy

↑ Index

884. henry
Re: \engine dire
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Thu, 26 Mar 1998 18:24:46 -0800 Aldon Nielsen said:
>
>If there is anything between those ears, it is listening out of an >intersection in motion that has a history, that is interested, that rubs up >everywhere against teeming context.

you can rub up everywhere. I'll just rub muh iconoclasmic mojo.

↑ Index

885. Michael McColl
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Thu 26 Mar 1998

On Wed, 25 Mar 1998 13:51:26 -0700 George Bowering said:
>I'm afraid that I have to agree with Billy Little on this one. I dont see >the sense or the committment in sending out a general request to poets to >"submit." Read someone's poetry. Figure out what you like. Then ASK that >poet to send you something for your magazine or whatever. Be a community, >not a market.
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
>   ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]

Read someone's poetry where? How did it get there?

↑ Index

886. Aldon Nielsen
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Steve:

i 'ear you, buddy.

↑ Index

887. George Bowering
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Fri 27 Mar 1998

> george, billy et al--
>
> but wouldnt that mean that you'd only consider work from poets who had already published?

Of course not. For instance, I am editing a magazine at the moment, and have already solicited work from one person who has NEVER published, and two others who have published once. Why would you think that soliciting work would mean restricting the soliciting to already published writers?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

888. George Bowering
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Fri 27 Mar 1998

> *Nope...Sorry, but these sorts of interactions are oriented toward community-building. No doubt you do lotsa editing, and should certainly share your approaches. But your off-target here.*
>
> Mp

My off-target here what?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

889. George Bowering
Re: stupid and lazy posts
Fri 27 Mar 1998

> Read someone's poetry where? How did it get there?

If you hang around poets long enough you start finsing out where poems can be read. In each other's rooms, for instance. At the bar. At the campus if yr at a campus. It got there in someone's pocket or paper bag or backpack. It comes over the internet. It comes from the microphone or it's unplugged.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

890. rsillima
"A"-24
Fri 27 Mar 1998

A performance of "A-24 was put on at the Grand Piano coffee house series, probably in 1979 (it was after LZ's death), with Bob Perelman on Piano, voices included Barrett Watten, Carla Harryman, Kit Robinson, Steve Benson and, I think, Lyn Hejinian. This was repeated a few times and one version (at UC Davis I believe) was recorded on video by the archive for new poetry at SF State. They should have copies if any are to be had. It's been awhile, so one or two of these details might have rusted in the brain somewhere.

It was fabulous, slower in its pacing than I (who do not read music) had imagined on the page, thus quite anti-"speech" throughout. Great rigor and attention to detail by all the participants.

I believe a thorough search of the archives of the Poetics List would turn up an earlier discussion in which a couple of other performances by other folks were also documented.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

891. henry gould
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

On Mon, 16 Mar 1998 20:48:49 -0800 Steve Tills said: >Okie-dokie, babe, but there is the question of "who gets to decide who has ears >and who doesn't, too. Also, to claim having ears, as well as to claim "Poet X >a fashionably authoritative type of comment back in 19__), can get_____.
Now that I've sobered up from last night's drunken bingo game, sure, of course you're right. That's one of the reasons this list is here for, I guess.
And gender realities sure do impinge on CONVERSATIONS ABOUT poetry here & everywhere, as do the dulling effects of overposter boys like myself. Believe it or not I'm trying to cut down - I abort lotsa posts before sending, you'll all be glad to know - & hope I don't have to resort to self-inflicted carpal tunnel syndrom to cut back further. The more people that pipe up here the better, of all seven genders. HYEVER I would also respectfully add that the argument that "I keep quiet because some of those boys might criticize me" is not a strong argument; moreover, old cartoon reruns of "what women are like" or "what men are like" don't tell you much about either poetry or the sex feuds; and finally, to clinch the thing, the simple truth in a complex world is that my cartoons are just BETTER than everybody else's cartoons, so there, I win again ha ha ha.

- Officer Pup Gould

↑ Index

892. henry gould
Re: costly clay
Fri 27 Mar 1998

On Tue, 24 Mar 1998 14:17:09 -0500 morpheal said: >>Does loam contain clay? I thought clay was mineral-rich but I could be >>wrong. Also remember reading about a science study showing some kind >>of electromagnetic movement - sort of a shifting back & forth - in clay >>that the scientists thought was a sort of primitive pre-life form.
>
>Perhaps somewhat tangential.
>
>The phrase "costly clay" is curious in that it implies the traditional cost >of any ground being the human blood that was spilt in the taking of it. All >ground was considered taken and held purely by cost of blood.

>
>Adds an odd kind of nuance to any discussion of soils, Russian soils included.

costly clay - This is a quote from guess who Mandelstam. I don't have the poem handy, unfortunately. Think it was from his trip to Armenia period. The "Journey to Armenia" prose piece elaborates a complicated bunch of metaphor-pheenyms around clay, lips, poetry, language, Armenia, time, and yes - sacrifice. "Abel's blood is calling from the ground". [O God those poor kids in Arkansas.] - Henry Gould

↑ Index

893. Mairead Byrne
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

My God, Thank You, Henry Gould! No more bother about women's representation in publishing, publications, cartels, circles of power etc. We just have small ears! Come to think of it, this notion explains so much about literary history. Wasn't it Darwin that first pointed out the embryonic or "fetal" female ear, only now budding in the twentieth century? Sorry, twenty-first. I'm Irish, you know, it has always bothered me a little that the ranting, raging music of my poetry is often heard as ranting and raging in the U.S., rather than as music. I thought there might be a quetion of different ears, and ears being culturally biassed in some way. But Henry's post has simplified everything. What a RELIEF!
Mairead

↑ Index

894. henry
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

On Fri, 27 Mar 1998 09:12:39 -0500 Mairead Byrne said:
>My God, Thank You, Henry Gould! No more bother about women's >representation in publishing, publications, cartels, circles of power etc.
>We just have small ears! Come to think of it, this notion explains so >much about literary history. Wasn't it Darwin that first pointed out the >embryonic or "fetal" female ear, only now budding in the twentieth >century? Sorry, twenty-first. I'm Irish, you know, it has always bothered >me a little that the ranting, raging music of my poetry is often heard as >ranting and raging in the U.S., rather than as music. I thought there >might be a quetion of different ears, and ears being culturally biassed in >some way. But Henry's post has simplified everything. What a RELIEF!

Don't mention it, Mairead! Glad to be of help! I hear you soft & clear! Say, did you hear that cricket by the hearth? Whatsay? NO!! That ain't no moose! - Henry "Lobe-otomy Calamity Joan" Gould

↑ Index

895. Douglas Barbour

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Fri 27 Mar 1998

In response to the news from Jonesboro, many of us non-USAmericans have been bemused by the fact that in all the traumatized editorializing about these killings, the one aspect of the situation that has not been questioned is the lack of any working gun-control laws in the states.

I think the NRA recently posted this to the list:

"Poems don't kill people.
People kill people.
Don't blame the poem."

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

Or is this too pathetic? Over-compensation for my measly small ears? NO! Those earrings rock! Gonna get my tongue pierced too. And my nose. Patrick Kavanagh said SMELL was the most crucial sense for a poet. In an "occupation" / "preoccupation" with a shortage of sense ... words fail me. Mairead

↑ Index

897. daniel bouchard

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Fri 27 Mar 1998

> In response to the news from Jonesboro, many of us non-USAmericans have been bemused by the fact that in all the traumatized editorializing about these killings, the one aspect of the situation that has not been questioned is the lack of any working gun-control laws in the states.

Those two boys only acted on the example of their government. When people do not do as YOU wish them to do, you kill them.

- db

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

898. morpheal

Re: Editors finding poetry ? (was: stupid and lazy posts)

Fri 27 Mar 1998

> Read someone's poetry where? How did it get there?
>
> If you hang around poets long enough you start finsing out where poems can be read. In each other's rooms, for instance. At the bar. At the campus if yr at a campus. It got there in someone's pocket or paper bag or backpack. It comes over the internet. It comes from the microphone or it's unplugged.

Try perusing rec.arts.poems on the Internet.

There, in that newsgroup, you would find many writers, or would-be writers, sharing their work. I post drafts of my current work there very regularly, among a large number of some very regular and some irregular contributors.

Many of the poets there use that medium because they either cannot afford more costly means of publication, or have gotten lost in the nowhere poets' land of being a nobody as to name recognition when anything lands on any noteworthy editor's desk, or because they simply do not know what publications (other than occassional e-zines) to devote their submissive efforts to. It is not that they suffer from terminal rejection as much as that they have had no mentors or mentoresses to let them in on anything worthwhile and the hard line regime of forking out contest entry fees to publications that prey upon exactly that has dwindled their meagre reserves of means and ways.

Although I have published one self-published book of verse, and been included in a few obscure local anthologies, I suffer from all of the above maladies, so I know the syndrome all too well of "make a name for yourself", "make a success of yourself" and the frequent corollary of "pull yourself up by your own bootstraps". The latter is indicative as to that genre of dis-encouragement because if you have ever attempted to pull on your own bootstraps to get yourself up off the floorboards of any endeavour you know how impossible it is to do exactly that, and that is in fact the often all too subtle joke in such exclamations.

Morpheal

aka Bob Ezergailis

[redacted]

↑ Index

899. Elizabeth Hatmaker

Re: \engine dire

Fri 27 Mar 1998

I agree that there's a hell of a lot more to poetry than gender and I agree that "boys criticize me" isn't a good argument not to speak (tho' I've fallen prey to it on occasion). However, a couple of things occur to me:

1. Poetry isn't just about listening. I can hear Moby Dick all I want, but it is my response to it that makes poetry a dialetical function. Action, be it in discussing Moby Dick or writing something about it, or performing something you've written, is, often beyond any one person's desires, gendered (tho' I'm certainly not arguing that this gendering is in any way natural or cannot be manipulated)

2. Boys (and girls and others) criticize, and often it's helpful, even if occasionally not ego-gratifying. However, I've often had the experience of suspecting that a criticism made of my work (either in tone or content) was specifically based in gender (like suspecting that he's majorly invested in proving his manhood more than discussing work with me) and getting that shocked look when I suggested maybe this was the case. Because, what, gender's a chick thing? I know some of my own criticisms have been questionable in similar ways (on days when I'm tired or mad, not taking a male student's Mack Bolan-type poems as seriously as I might {odd how I picked an example with a guy who would have less instituational power than I, says something, I think} or getting unneccisarily angry at fellow female poets writing "daddy" poems because I'm worried that they are repeating female "poetess" stereotypes). Dumb (and unfair), right? But the thing is, criticism's can be critiqued. If you suspect that the criticism you are going to get is not valid to your work, why put your work out there?

So what now? I don't know that anyone is suggesting that men "play nice" with women writers and not criticize them. I think it's a little simplistic to think that all the posts written about why women don't post or submit as frequently as men boil down to "women are scared of criticism."

I wonder, if women and other genders who historically have been marginalized were to contribute more to mags and listservs, would gender stop being an "issue" in poetry communities? Perhaps new gender "issues" would arise, but what might they look like? taste like?

Oh yeah, I like Aldon's post very much.

Elizabeth

"observe this as you would a maniac in the woods" -- R. Sterling (possibly misheard)

↑ Index

900. henry
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Smell? May be. Is that why all the really big-eared poets go blind?

We may have to consult some complexity scientists on this issue of the one and the many, the one big ear and the many different ears. Especially when you start to wonder if verbal power is the ultimate form of power {the Word was God & all that] and poetry is the ultimate expression of verbal power [in a sealed nutcase], so that Henrygemony is only one among many expressions of small henrygemonies, and outsiders' demands to be insiders are demands within a power game, and even outsiders who claim to have different ears are still trying to catch the attention of the one big Ear [HCE that is, Ear Comes Everboddy], and every woman and every man is also everyear every year, ever-hear that one? The one about rat-eared rhetoric, the persuasive idiombombon-bonmot?

And the best way to inoculate yall again whiteyboy HennyPenny powwow trips, man, is to get an earful of DIFFEN idioms, like no shit gal y'hear me talkin? Refine yo mine sistah if you wanna stan wi me. Seein az I stole at fum yall anyway! Hah!

the most powerful poems show no straining for effect beyond what's necessary for the complete repeat effect... "power contained"... "a powerful work"... "a powerful voice"... "hell of an earful"... "powerful in its delicacy & restraint"... "powerful cry of the powerless"... "TOTALLY WINNING lightheartedness & self-mockery"... "POWERFUL example of selfless impersonality"..."Henry Gould is on a total power trip and he's likely to win, too"..."yikes!!"..."lemme outa ear!!"...

- Ratso Rhoziland, the sub-sub-sub-sub-Librarian ["lookout!!"]

"silence is not goulden"
- Oscar Whiner

↑ Index

901. morpheal
Re: costly clay
Fri 27 Mar 1998

> Adds an odd kind of nuance to any discussion of soils, Russian soils included.
>
> costly clay -
> This is a quote from guess who Mandelstam. I don't have the poem handy, unfortunately. Think it was from his trip to Armenia period. The "Journey to Armenia" prose piece elaborates a complicated bunch of metaphorpheenyms around clay, lips, poetry, language, Armenia, time, and yes - sacrifice.
> "Abel's blood is calling from the ground". [O God those poor kids in Arkansas.] - Henry Gould

The Arkansas event is so extremely irrational, so extremely insane, I suppose I can find some theoretical, intellectual, explanation for it, but beyond that I simply cannot comprehend how someone can do that. However, human history is also largely incomprehenensible, for the same kinds of reasons.

I sometimes think, in an agnostic manner, that if there is a god it has to have been completely insane to create a universe of the kind it did. Considering the story has humanity as its supposedly highest pinnacle of creative effort and that leading to all the endless bloodshed strife that comprises the macrocosm of political history, and the microcosm of the kind of lesser bursts of insanity such as the one in Arkansas.

The Cain and Abel story as the archetypal instance in some ways becomes a dangerously imposed paradigm. Instances that I know of where one brother is turned to playing Cain and the other must play Abel, but neither would have otherwise chosen to, in any way, enact the myth. Not every such tragedy leads to bloodshed, amongst brothers, but such tragedies are many, and some think it a part of "necessary learning" to re-enact the paradigmatic instance.

Of course those who oppose that most are the non-Marxist anarchists. All other groups seem to hold to re-enactments of various mythologies, but they uniquely stand solidly against it and claim it is dysfunctional and a cause of human suffering. The Buddhists would agree, but modern Buddhists do re-enact.

Armenia, of course, has its extremely bloodied political history.

Much of political history has been brought about by one group seeking to have additional resources that are controlled by another group, including the clay, that in many instances is purely useable space. The other part of political history is violence utilized as means of conversion purely to push over one system of ideas onto another. Add to that the foul motives of revenge. Reminds me of the many non metaphorical roastings, sendings to the flames, and crowds tearing victims to pieces, that predominated in Europe. Civilization, such as it is, was sometimes very costly clay indeed, and those who were not as malleable as moist clay were often eaten alive for that very "failing". It is a wonder that progress ever occurred in any liberal and democratic sense of it.

As for myself, I have only been involved, and indirectly, in the spilling of the blood of violent aggressors, and by fully sanctionned means. Of course that does not give oneself clean hands. Even that bloodies us. Even when the aggressors were contemplating genocide, and planning use of weapons of mass destruction. Mahatma Gandhi would have urged us to sit there and be blown away by the other side, but that does not seem to be a viable real world option.

So, in a sense, all of our clay is costlier than you would imagine. Much, much, costlier than we usually imagine.

Morpheal

↑ Index

902. morpheal

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Fri 27 Mar 1998

> In response to the news from Jonesboro, many of us non-USAmericans have been bemused by the fact that in all the traumatized editorializing about these killings, the one aspect of the situation that has not been questioned is the lack of any working gun-control laws in the states.
>
> I think the NRA recently posted this to the list:
>
> "Poems don't kill people.
> People kill people.
> Don't blame the poem."

Sadly, logic dictates that the citizens' right to bear arms is a necessity to help assure the prevention of the worst kinds of tyranny. As a nation state becomes ever more centralized and powerful that safeguard sometimes becomes insidiously undermined and the tendency is to either take away that right and risk that a dictatorship or an oligarchy might sieze power essentially unopposed, or for the citizens to seek more powerful means of protecting their freedoms.

The question becomes how to prevent casualties and protect those very freedoms that are vouchsafed against the rising up of a dictator, a Hitler or a Stalin, at the head of the machinations of power ? Perhaps the failing is in education and in the what and how of it.

There is no easy answer.

Would sufficient force of arms in the control of the citizens have prevented the Third Reich and its reign of terror and bloodshed ? Perhaps.

Would sufficient force of arms in the control of the citizens have prevented the Stalinist reign of terror and its bloodshed of many millions more lives, as well as the total enslavement of countless millions of others ? Probably.

If anyone has a better answer than the citizens right to bear arms, to the problem of totalistic tyranny and the evils and sufferings wraught by some kinds of political dictatorships, please do share it. I doubt anyone can offer even one iota of alternative, practical, real world wisdom.

As to what is taught to children, to form their values and to further their understanding, self control, sense of ethics, and to alleviate some of the horrible conflicts and prejudices that are rife within North America, that is a very different matter....Perhaps that is the really significant question.

Morpheal

↑ Index

903. Reinfeld, Linda
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Mar 1998 to 26 Mar 1998
Fri 27 Mar 1998

A question from Toshi Ishihara (formerly in Charles Bernstein's class at UB):

I'm beginning work on a paper about the integration of text and pictures in the work of Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, Trinh T. Minh-ha, and Michael Ondaatje. If anyone can suggest critical materials that would help me along with this project, I'd be very grateful. Responses to the list will be forwarded to me by Linda Reinfeld ([redacted]), or you can mail me backchannel at [redacted]

Thanks a lot -- Toshi

↑ Index

904. Susan Wheeler
Spring
Fri 27 Mar 1998

---

and out of my burrow. All have been missed.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

905. Keston Sutherland
Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list
Fri 27 Mar 1998

---

the one aspect of the situation that has not been questioned is the lack of any working gun-control laws in the states.

yes, I found this startling, it's as if: "the root of the problem isn't guns, it's [single parent families][tv shows][cigarettes][the middle east], and if there were no guns, HELL, those kids would have thrown PEBBLES, or cried out ABUSE, or squirted their victims with WATER PISTOLS. Different versions of the same problem" I remember when a man burst into a primary school in Scotland (in Dunblaine, I think) and shot several children - the FIRST reaction was a chorus of anti-gun protest, now all guns are banned in the UK (amnesty for licence holders)

this situation will never change in the US, right?

↑ Index

906. Ellay Phillips
Re: \engine dire
Fri 27 Mar 1998

On Fri, 27 Mar 1998, henry wrote:

> Smell? May be. Is that why all the really big-eared poets go blind?

Yes it's cuz we can't stop wigglin em

Especially
> when you start to wonder if verbal power is the ultimate form of power
> {the Word was God & all that] and poetry is the ultimate expression > of verbal power [in a sealed nutcase], so that Henrygemony is only

Eye dunno if the verbal is the _ultimate_ form of power if speech is act (as the theory may go) but words are powerful yes indeed they make worlds as hannah weiner said, I see words as eye say, eye c wor(l)ds

but eye also 'ear them too and words impinge on the body at least mine and eye agree with olga broumas who once said poetry can bee like el-ess-dee it has a strong kick and changes the way one can c the wor(l)d

it runs through my blood and the clay of which eye am made and mixes with the blood of the ones who are gone who are within me as much as in the clod next to my foot and it overpowers me and overwhelms me and changes me as much as eye wheeled it so eye make wor(l)ds too and they are as true as anything else out there.

Ellay Phillips

↑ Index

907. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Query v. Ed Foster
Fri 27 Mar 1998

ed tells me that he is back on line: [redacted].

↑ Index

908. Keston Sutherland
Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list
Fri 27 Mar 1998

---

morpheal's same old "sadly, que sera sera"'s the same old non sequitur, your examples are haphazard and banal in their obviousness, DO YOU REALLY (i mean -really-, mind) BELIEVE THAT A BUNCH OF FARMERS SCHOOLBOYS AND INSURANCE SALESMEN, JUST BY 'VIRTUE' OF POSSESSING A HANDGUN EACH, COULD OPPOSE THE U.S. ARMED FORCES?!! What a load of shit! As for the Third Reich - what do you KNOW about this? The Nazis were elected both by the citizens of Germany in a democratic process and by the president of the Reichstag; most people would not even have cocked their pistols had they owned any; small pockets of armed resistance (eg anti Hitlerjugend splinter groups of young men such as the Edelweiss Pirates) were negligible in effect and of primarily symbolic importance; the Polish army, a trained body of fighting professionals with military equipment, could not prevent their country being annexed, so how the hell do you imagine a citizenry - impressed with their government and swarming to meet Hitler whenever he passed through their towns with near-hysteric jubiliation, faced with the combined military and paramilitary might of the SS, SA and German armed forces proper - could EVER have prevented (what I suppose you're driving at) the holocaust, OR even have wished to do so, OR EVEN (and here's a nice rub re: the US) HAVE KNOWN ABOUT IT (most people had no clue).

Guns are outlawed in the UK - just hear those droves of shackled ankles marching to their death-camps - if only they'd had a few Uzis

The murder rate there is of course -MUCH- -MUCH- lower

↑ Index

909. k. lederer
Re: Virginia Woolf, class
Fri 27 Mar 1998

It seems as if the discussion about gender kind of dwindled away--

I was slightly disappointed with the manner in which it devolved into witticism--

My original post--re: women submitting and participating was not about women's poetry per se--as poetry--but rather about the production of literature--the barriers that must be surmounted before a single person can manage to put pen to paper; and how these barriers seem to be higher for women.

I haven't managed to be articulate about this distinction, I don't think, so thought I'd post an excerpt from Woolf's Room of One's Own. This excerpt is taken from a wonderful and absolutely necessary book--FEMINISM: THE ESSENTIAL HISTORICAL WRITINGS.(Vintage, 1972).

If you haven't read these articles--by minds such as Abigail Adams, Mary Wollstonecraft, George Sand, Sojourner Truth, John Stuart Mill, Emma Goldman, and so on--it's as if you hadn't read Marx--

And if you want to talk about class, you might do well to read a little Marx, no?--

The following is one of the most basic of feminist arguments:

But you may say, we asked you to speak about women and fiction--what has that got to do with a room of one's own? I will try to explain. When you asked me to speak about women in fiction I sat down on the banks of the river and began to wonder what the words meant. They might mean simply a few remarks about Fanny Burney; a few more about Jane Austen; a tribute to the Brontes and a sketch of Haworth Parsonage under snow; some witticisms if possible about Miss Mitford; a respectful allusion to George Eliot; a reference to Mrs. Gaskell and one would have done. But at second sight the words seemed not so simple. The title women and fiction might mean, and you may have meant it to mean, women and what they are like; or it might mean women and the fiction that is written about them; or it might mean that somehow all three are inextricably mixed together and you want me to consider them in that light. But when I began to consider the subject in this last way, which seemed most interesting, I soon saw that it had one fatal drawback. I should never be able to come to a conclusion...

...All I could do was to offer you an opinion upon one minor point--a woman must have money and a room of her own if she is to write fiction; and that, as you will see, leaves the great problem of the true nature of woman and the true nature of fiction unsolved. I have shirked the duty of coming to a conclusion upon these two questions--women and fiction remain, so far as I'm concerned, unsolved problems. But in order to make some amends I am going to do what I can to show you how I arrived at this opinion about the room and the money...

...Life for both sexes--and I looked at them [through a restaurant window while waiting for my lunch to be served], shouldering their way along the pavement--is arduous, difficult, a perpetual struggle. It calls for gigantic courage and strength. More than anything, perhaps, creatures of illusion as we are, it calls for confidence in oneself. Without self-confidence we are as babes in the cradle. And how can we generate this imponderable quality, which is yet so invaluable, most quickly? By thinking that other people are inferior to oneself. By feeling that one has some innate superiority--it may be wealth, rank, or a straight nose, or the portrait of a grandfather by Romney--for there is no end to the pathetic devices of the human imagination--over other people. Hence the enourmous importance to a patriarch who has to conquer, who has to rule, of feeling that great numbers of people, half the human race indeed, are by nature inferior to himself. It must indeed be one of the chief sources of his power.... Women have served all these centuries as looking glasses ppossessing the magic and delicious power fo reflecting the figure of the man twice its natural size.

(pp 345-46)

Katy

↑ Index

910. Ryan Whyte
On Symmetry
Fri 27 Mar 1998

[wishing that this work could be symmetrical to my other work, a somewhat academic study on the decorative, which is somehow "more real;" and then something else spills out to this list, asymmetrical: lacking some kind of reverse precedent.... this is the "pause in our conversation" which is where the unpublished poem comes from, perhaps; as if the book or magazine provided a spine or hinge which the words could turn against, reflecting without a gap, back on themselves.... Ryan]

On Symmetry

It is very much like a desert, if it could be
It depends upon a perfect hinge.
It is remote, even under your fingers, gentle ridges here and there.
It doesn't know whether it has a heart or not (to say a hinge.)
It has already fallen silent.
It is only if a storm could rage in marble
It is if it were to die it would.
It is a matter of its own indifference.
It is indifference as it is unmoored.
It is the vanity of vanities.
It is the image of a bourgeois gilded mirror replete but now unhinged, and classless.
It is endlessly itself and its classical facade.
It is a wandering front
It is an unremembered basilica.

↑ Index

911. Ctfarmr
women and men in conversation
Fri 27 Mar 1998

According to studies by Deborah Tannen, author of _He Said, She Said_ , women and men learn strikingly different modes of discourse from an early age. Most boys learn to use conversation as a competitive activity, emphasizing their differences and individuality, establishing a hierarchy, which contributes to group cohesion, and within which each member is constantly striving for a higher position by challenging others and by showing his own knowledge to be "superior." Most girls learn to use conversation among friends as a cooperative activity. Anyone who criticizes within the group, or tries to show superior knowledge is setting herself apart from (above) the group, and is therefore seen as making an attempt to destabilize it. Differences of opinion are more often put forward as questions rather than statements. Or they're prefaced with phrases such as, "In my experience," implying respect for the speaker's opinion while maintaining one's own. Within the cooperative mode of discourse, a direct statement of "you're wrong" is, in effect, telling the speaker to shut up.

So, when folks using the two different modes of discourse, the competitive and the cooperative, come together, the competitors tend to dominate because their direct challenges and criticisms are, within the rules of cooperative discourse, telling the cooperatives that their contributions are unacceptable. This affects discussions of poetics, because academic discourse generally utilizes the competitive mode. And, while young women are now more often trained to use the competitive mode with confidence, saying that women "should" do this is really saying that women should be more like men. Until both sides recoginize these different modes of discourse, respect them equally, and take them into account in their conversations together, women will often think that men are (verbally) attacking them, and men will think the women are wimping out.

This is just a very brief, and probably inadequate, summary of some of the main points in Tannen's book, which I highly recommend to anyone interested in this subject.

Bobbie West

↑ Index

912. Charles Bernstein
Ishihara/Reinfeld
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Since Linda Reinfeld posted a query for Toshi Ishihara, it reminded me to recommend their wonderful 1996 collaborative translation "The Game of 100 Poems": a set of 200 cards that together make up the 100 poems of Hyakunin Isshu, based on the anthology of 100 tanka poems (5-7-5, 7-7) compiled by Sadaie Fujiwara in 1235). This version consists of 100 cards with the first line and 100 cards with the second line, which you can match up in a variety of ways. In the introduction Ishihara and Reinfeld note that "Although this anthology has frequently been translated into English, our translation is unique, for we have chosen to use couplets, rather than free verse of syllabic form, to reflect the two-part structure of the poems".

I hope that copies of this remarkable box of poems are still available; if interested, write to Linda Reinfeld: [redacted].

*

I thought of this poem, attributed to Fujiwara no Shunzei, Master of the Grand Empress's Household, in reaction to the events in Jonesboro:

In all the world there's no road far from grief:
Even the deer cry deep in the mountains

↑ Index

913. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: Virginia Woolf, class
Fri 27 Mar 1998

One of the things I'm curious about is what men think about their own gender when writing/ publishing/ reading/ discussing poetry? Do you think about gender at times like this? Given the original question: why are women often reluctant to contribute, it seems logical to ask: why are men likely to do so? I think we know some of the historical/social reasons: access to money, old boy networks, all that Jungian " spiritual wise man," ah, stuff, etc. -- but what else? If you want to avoid this stuff (or things like class and race keeps you away from money, networks, etc) what makes you contribute?

Do you feel this big imperative to write based on notions you would consider gendered? If not, why?

I mean, sure, I write for a lot of reasons, some not "gendered", but I feel the call of ole' Virginia Woolf to find my own room. Certainly, hashing out my gender has been a big deal in my writing. Is this just a chick thing?

I don't mean to deter from the original question (because I think it's important) Katy posed and I certainly don't want to turn this into an "us gals" and "you guys" kind of debate, but, for the sake of discussion, maybe we could ask a series of different questions re: gender that might be enlightening. I got the impression people were into this debate and it sort of died.

--oh, and Katy, someone had said your mag isn't currently taking contributions. Is it true? When will your mag be ready for lots of rock- and-roll poetry/prose by women? (I bet others will be interested)

Rockin' in the 70 degree plus weather of Boston,

Elizabeth Hatmaker

↑ Index

914. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: women and men in conversation

Fri 27 Mar 1998

---

it was very confusing for me to be raised with the "male" rules for conversation and then enter the social world. my main problem was not other women but guys, who recoiled from my "unfeminine" and combattive verbal style. i couldn't figure out what the problem was. now that i'm thoroughly therapized and midwesternized, i've learned to adopt some "feminine" conversational" skills and i must say it's helped a lot, not w/ getting guys so much as with just getting along better in society.

At 1:30 PM 3/27/98, Ctfarmr wrote:
>According to studies by Deborah Tannen, author of _He Said, She Said_ , women >and men learn strikingly different modes of discourse from an early age. Most >boys learn to use conversation as a competitive activity, emphasizing their >differences and individuality, establishing a hierarchy, which contributes to >group cohesion, and within which each member is constantly striving for a >higher position by challenging others and by showing his own knowledge to be >"superior." Most girls learn to use conversation among friends as a >cooperative activity. Anyone who criticizes within the group, or tries to show >superior knowledge is setting herself apart from (above) the group, and is >therefore seen as making an attempt to destabilize it. Differences of opinion >are more often put forward as questions rather than statements. Or they're >prefaced with phrases such as, "In my experience," implying respect for the >speaker's opinion while maintaining one's own. Within the cooperative mode of >discourse, a direct statement of "you're wrong" is, in effect, telling the >speaker to shut up.
>
>So, when folks using the two different modes of discourse, the competitive

and
>the cooperative, come together, the competitors tend to dominate because their >direct challenges and criticisms are, within the rules of cooperative >discourse, telling the cooperatives that their contributions are unacceptable.
>This affects discussions of poetics, because academic discourse generally >utilizes the competitive mode. And, while young women are now more often >trained to use the competitive mode with confidence, saying that women >"should" do this is really saying that women should be more like men. Until >both sides recoginize these different modes of discourse, respect them >equally, and take them into account in their conversations together, women >will often think that men are (verbally) attacking them, and men will think >the women are wimping out.
>
>This is just a very brief, and probably inadequate, summary of some of the >main points in Tannen's book, which I highly recommend to anyone interested in >this subject.
>
>Bobbie West

↑ Index

915. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Virginia Woolf, class
Fri 27 Mar 1998

At 1:48 PM 3/27/98, Elizabeth Hatmaker wrote:
...all that Jungian " spiritual wise man,"...

what the hell's this and what does it have to do w/ sending stuff in to be published?

↑ Index

916. david bromige
women & men in conversation
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Another interesting post from Bobbie. But you know what? It's difficult for me to recognize and accord equal respect to both the modes she describes, as she, generously, advocates. I dislike intensely the male model, regret the times I may have followed it, and would very much like to see it abandoned. I hope the definiteness of tone in that previous sentence isnt a hangover from my training as a male? I've enjoyed hearing women be just that clear. And please--I know I'm an ironist, but no irony intened here. David

↑ Index

917. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Fri 27 Mar 1998

Having written and published a few pieces drawn from real life experiences of shootings and killings--i.e. happened in my life to people I knew as well as to me-- it is not bemusing to regard the killings--they are part of a long tradition in American life (and art, to be sure)--

it's easy to say it's just guns--but the hells many endure living in the usa go beyond simple violence--(remember: Thoreau spoke of "lives of quiet desperation" lived in silence--violence is what happens when silence becomes too much to endure, when one does know how to speak, or if anyone will listen--) one of the great moralists of our times, one William S. Burroughs, has an exceptional passage in Maked Lunch--an out pouring of outrage at the spirit of evil which haunts the land-- millions were killed in this country without guns--drugs, alcohol, toxic waste dumps, no access to health care, locked up in reservations, beaten and starved, tortured, lynched, malnutrition, chemical and nuclear experiments, medical and biological experiments-- many of my ancestors were killed by a simple method: they were given disease infected blankets when shipped off their homelands by the us govt.

there are many interesting studies tracing the origins of this violence to Puritanism--you can find the flip side of this in some of Jim Thompson's novels-- but the desire for purification, and to purge the world of impurities-- to know grace (and when you can't be rewarded with riches--why not with power--over another's life--)--

Remember Travis Bickle in Taxi Driver: "all my life I've known loneliness--in cars, on sidewlaks--in bars--loneliness has followed me everywhere--I'm God's lonely man--"

. . ."Someday a real rain will come . . . "

. . ."You talkin' to me?--Huh?--Then who the f are you talkin to?"

When it's not such a short step from a desire to overcome intolerable life, or solitude, or silence to being God's lonely man-- is not this the mission of the righteous?

"Huh?"

--dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

918. Mark Weiss

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Fri 27 Mar 1998

In talking about the constitutional right to bear arms it helps to go back to the thinking of the founders. While the amendment guarantees the right to bear arms in order to facilitate the maintenance of a militia (as opposed to a standing army), the jeffersonians certainly had the resistance to tyranny in mind, as well. So citizens could keep their guns, which gave them a fire-power only marginally inferior to the military, which weilded at best uncertain artillery.

By that logic the right to bear arms should include the right to private ownership of, say, supersonic jets armed with everything but nuclear weapons. As this is impractical, not least because if large numbers of us owned our own military aircraft every flat surface on the continent would have to be paved for private airfields, the right to bear arms has become obsolete, and stricter weapons control makes sense.

On the other hand, there's no practical reason why the citizenry couldn't be armed with chemical and biological weapons, which can be stored easily (a good refrigerator does wonders for most biological weapons, except when there's a power failure). At the very least apartment living could become a lot more interesting.

At 10:40 AM 3/27/98 -0500, you wrote:

>>In response to the news from Jonesboro, many of us non-USAmericans have >>been bemused by the fact that in all the traumatized editorializing about >>these killings, the one aspect of the situation that has not been >>questioned is the lack of any working gun-control laws in the states.
>>
>>I think the NRA recently posted this to the list:
>>
>>"Poems don't kill people.
>>People kill people.

>>Don't blame the poem."
>
>
>Sadly, logic dictates that the citizens' right to bear arms is a necessity >to help assure the prevention of the worst kinds of tyranny. As a nation state >becomes ever more centralized and powerful that safeguard sometimes becomes >insidiously undermined and the tendency is to either take away that right >and risk that a dictatorship or an oligarchy might sieze power essentially >unopposed, or for the citizens to seek more powerful means of protecting >their freedoms.
>
>The question becomes how to prevent casualties and protect those very freedoms >that are vouchsafed against the rising up of a dictator, a Hitler or a >Stalin, at the head of the machinations of power ? Perhaps the failing is >in education >and in the what and how of it.
>
>There is no easy answer.
>
>Would sufficient force of arms in the control of the citizens have prevented >the Third Reich and its reign of terror and bloodshed ? Perhaps.
>
>Would sufficient force of arms in the control of the citizens have prevented >the Stalinist reign of terror and its bloodshed of many millions more lives, >as well as the total enslavement of countless millions of others ? Probably.
>
>If anyone has a better answer than the citizens right to bear arms, to the >problem of totalistic tyranny and the evils and sufferings wraught by >some kinds of political dictatorships, please do share it. I doubt anyone can >offer even one iota of alternative, practical, real world wisdom.
>
>As to what is taught to children, to form their values and to further their >understanding, self control, sense of ethics, and to alleviate some of the >horrible conflicts and prejudices that are rife within North America, that >is a very different matter....Perhaps that is the really significant question.
>
>Morpheal

>
>

↑ Index

919. Henry Gould
Re: women & men in conversation
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Women feel threatened by men; men feel threatened by ideas. Women feel threatened by men; men feel threatened by their own shadows. Gender is an idea women can identify with; for men, ideas are sexualized. For women, gender is something to write about; for men, writing IS their gender (i.e. they take it for granted). The world cultural structure is the result of men subjecting the world to their shadows. Women are strange attractors in that shadow game. The light breaks slowly into the cave. & there's - why, it's Whistler's Mother!!!

- adventures in independent babbling brought to you by the inevitable HG. Now I promise to be quiet for 3-4 days. I promise.

↑ Index

920. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: women and men in conversation
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Slightly off topic, but. . .

I also find these studies compelling. Except when I start thinking about pedagogy. Have studies been done on communication patterns of women who have positions of institutional power, like, say, that of a teacher? I've read a great number of essays by feminist comp. professors (and heard them speak) and often the most horrible issues they dealt with in essays/talks are the insolent male student who won't cooperate with their feminist pedagogies. While I suspect many can sympathize, I found that usually by the end of these essays/talks, it all seemed to come down to finding ways to make them behave, usually through the mighty grading pen. I know, I know, I should offer proof of this-- I recall one in Lad Tobin's _Taking Stock_ which troubled me. So what does this mean? Are cooperative ways of speaking (and teaching) always cooperative?

Do the studies of "gender speak" tend to naturalize gender in a way which is always useful? As a female teacher, I think the idea of "gendered pedagogies" need to be rigorously thought out.

Jane Gallop's essay "Teacher's Breasts" was sort of instructive to me in this vein, tho' I sometimes have problems with Gallop. But, performative pedagogy-

- does it offer extra-gendered (not quite sure what that means, but sounds kind of X-filesy) teaching possiblities? Do we need them?

Going on vacation,
Elizabeth

↑ Index

921. Keston Sutherland
extra-tentative pt.4 of O.T.O.A.R
Fri 27 Mar 1998

4.

Bright traffic through the even lights of common day bribed back desire intact were they dociles splinters and differing heats gather make by your great promise to them, acid mandate to incite only one (skin her throat) condemned moderate hindrance by shrink-wrapped, slowed up at that same rateless attachment to go one (she is sunlit)

ignorance
some nameless rill gather love by shredded edict collate dead-you

(and every star in the night-sky stays entire).

↑ Index

922. George Bowering
Re: what does Jonesboro
Fri 27 Mar 1998

> Sadly, logic dictates that the citizens' right to bear arms is a necessity to help assure the prevention of the worst kinds of tyranny. As a nation state becomes ever more centralized and powerful that safeguard sometimes becomes insidiously undermined and the tendency is to either take away that right and risk that a dictatorship or an oligarchy might sieze power essentially unopposed, or for the citizens to seek more powerful means of protecting their freedoms.

That is not logic. That is USAmerican brainwashing. The citizens dont bear arms in most peaceful democratic societies. They are more likely to be bearing arms in countries in which oligarchies persist. There are more Serbians carrying weopans than there are New Zealanders carrying weapons.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

923. Mark Weiss

Re: women and men in conversation

Fri 27 Mar 1998

I can't speak to these well-known studies except anecdotally, and as a member of a fractious family raised in fractious New York I have little experience of this gendered difference in conversation styles. But I am willing to accept the general acuracy of the findings, and here in San Diego I had expected experience to conform more closely to the model. So here's a recent experience. I just finished jury duty. A forty-year-old single woman claimed, and the court in a previous case had confirmed, that a prospective boss, who was holding out the possibility of a lucrative job that apparently didn't exist, had driven the woman from a business dinner (or so she had understood it) to a secluded area, instead of to her car, as he had proposed, where he proceeded to lose it in a big way, becoming verbally and gesturally violent to the point that she feared for her life and also feared that she would be raped. On the stand, when asked what her thoughts had been, she said that a multitude of thoughts had occured to her during the three or four minutes in question, including the aforesaid, and also that fleeing in high heels on wet, stony ground would be difficult, and that she would ruin her suit. This is only a piece of a wider case, but it's emblematic of the whole. We were supposed to determine, among other things, if the woman had experienced recompensable damage, and how much, due to emotional stress and fear at that moment. The jury consisted of two men, myself and a working class guy of maybe 28, one woman in her 70's, and nine married working women of various social classes between 25 and 45. All were white, none hispanic. Except for me and the older woman, all were native to the area. Us guys and the older woman were the only ones who voted for damages (or lost wages, the other matter in contention). The other nine thought that she must be lying about her fears, or she wouldn't have worried about her suit (in refusing to award lost wages the nine held that the woman should have known better, she was probably trying to use her feminine wiles, and she was a spoiled bitch anyway). The nine appeared for the most part to be motivated by distrust of single women and envy of their social mobility, although a few did raise some interesting points. All of the women participated vociferously, interrupting and drowning out opposition in a manner that would have provoked admiration even among the women of my own family. At one point towards the end I found myself, in frustration, telling the women that I must be the only feminist there. I instantly realized that I had just become a cliche, and that I was probably right. This is San Diego. After that experience I'd love to meet some women who consider conversation a cooperative activity.

At 01:30 PM 3/27/98 EST, you wrote:
>According to studies by Deborah Tannen, author of _He Said, She Said_ , women >and men learn strikingly different modes of discourse from an early age. Most >boys learn to use conversation as a competitive activity, emphasizing their >differences and individuality, establishing a hierarchy, which contributes to >group cohesion, and within which each member is constantly striving for a >higher position by challenging others and by showing his own knowledge to be
>"superior." Most girls learn to use conversation among friends as a >cooperative activity. Anyone who criticizes within the group, or tries to show >superior knowledge is setting herself apart from (above) the group, and is >therefore seen as making an attempt to destabilize it. Differences of opinion >are more often put forward as questions rather than statements. Or they're >prefaced with phrases such as, "In my experience," implying respect for the >speaker's opinion while maintaining one's own. Within the cooperative mode of >discourse, a direct statement of "you're wrong" is, in effect, telling the >speaker to shut up.
>
>So, when folks using the two different modes of discourse, the competitive and >the cooperative, come together, the competitors tend to dominate because their >direct challenges and criticisms are, within the rules of cooperative >discourse, telling the cooperatives that their contributions are unacceptable.
>This affects discussions of poetics, because academic discourse generally >utilizes the competitive mode. And, while young women are now more often >trained to use the competitive mode with confidence, saying that women

>"should" do this is really saying that women should be more like men. Until >both sides recoginize these different modes of discourse, respect them >equally, and take them into account in their conversations together, women >will often think that men are (verbally) attacking them, and men will think >the women are wimping out.
>
>This is just a very brief, and probably inadequate, summary of some of the >main points in Tannen's book, which I highly recommend to anyone interested in >this subject.
>
>Bobbie West
>
>

↑ Index

924. michael corbin

Re: \engine dire, etc . . .

Fri 27 Mar 1998

Henry Gould wrote:

> I hear Melville, eating potato chips in his PJ's.

Elizabeth Shaw Melville, wife

We breakfast at 8 o'clock, then Herman goes to walk and I fly up to put his room to rights, so that he can sit down to his desk immediately upon his return. Then I bid him good-bye, with many charges to be an industrious boy and not upset the inkstand.... At four we dine, and after dinner is over, Herman and I come up to our room and enjoy a cosy chat for an hour or so -- or he reads me some of the chapters he has been writing in the day. Then he goes down town for a walk, looks at the papers in the reading room, etc., and returns about half-past seven or eight. Then my work or my book is laid aside, and as he does not use his eyes but very little by candle light, I either read to him, or take a hand at whist for his amusement, or he listens to our reading or conversation, as best pleases him. For we all collect in the parlor in the evening, and generally one of us reads aloud for the benefit of the whole. Then we retire very early -- at 10 o'clock we all disperse. --Letter to her stepmother, December 23 1847 constitutional guns=bang, bang, you're dead.

civic-life

Subject: The Union as a Safeguard Against Domestic Faction and Insurrection (Continued from No. 9.) ". . . The influence of factious leaders may kindle a flame within their particular States, but will be unable to spread a general conflagration through the other States. . . . "

123

" . . . learn what poetry can do, practice that, vague broadcast accusations are worse . . . "

" . . . vague broadcast accusations are worse than useless, they discourage others who might have something useful to contribute."

" . . . vague broadcast accusations . . . "

123

"In the extent and proper structure of the Union, therefore, we behold a republican remedy for the diseases most incident to republican government. And according to the degree of pleasure and pride we feel in being republicans, ought to be our zeal in cherishing the spirit and supporting the character of Federalists."

PUBLIUS, Federalist 10, 1787

ravished, undone

mc

↑ Index

925. Don Wellman

Re: women and men in conversation

Fri 27 Mar 1998

What do men think of their gender when in conversation, with women, with men, with students? What do men think/feel about gender when the write poems, post to the list etc ... What do men think feel about gender (their gender) when they reflect on Jonesboro?

John Berger, ages ago, wrote something to the effect "men act, women appear" and probably this could be paraphrased to make the general case "men act without reflection on their gender; woman appear always as gendered...."

I read Girls on Film and Postfeminist Playground here on the net, among other gendered sites, and I read this list and I am teaching Ceremony now by Leslie Marmonm Silko and I looked at my mom's RedBook and my sister's Seventeen when I was growing up. I will buy Cosmo occasionally now and discuss the images and the advice with my students who are reading Berger. What does all this have in common, high brow or low brow, the women are telling stories that have somekind of healing power for them. I do not find men telling me stories with healing power. Instead I hear men citing the law.

I badly need a story with healing power to help me comprehend Jonesboro. I want the stories of all those involved, the boys, the friends of the victims, the parents. I think Silko is right the world is fragile and it needs our stories. How did I come to think this way? I think class has more to do with it in my case than gender. I have always been aware that boys of my class are not supposed to have the interests that I have. I have had this feeling when talking with boys and men of more privileged backgrounds than mine. I have pursed obscurity in defiance of a fear of failure. I have flaunted my talents and I have failed miserably because it was expected. I have often been embarassed by my claims that I had something special to offer someone. Now I have an ear and an intellect, but I still do not have a story.

I think gender is a story that helps women negotiate reality. I think class is a story that helps me negotiate reality. I think this country has produced a maximum of human misery and suffering. When I think of men with respect to gender, I loathe what I see. I see men eating their children and killing one another. I am appalled that boys have taken to gunning down girls in Jonesboro and in Paducah.

And I ask does my attempt to make sense of any of this reflect the privelege of my gendered position? I hope not--but I see my post can be read as plea by one representative male for women to save him and that too is an old and tedious story--but I do love the weaving of voices around me. I have been listending to Gesualdo and Hildegaard von Bingen and it almost doesn't matter what they say anymore, because of weaving and that is what I am seeing again in Silko's Ceremony and what I have geard in Woolf's Room and something that is so difficult for both my male and my female students to grasp.

Sorry to be so open-ended and unresolved ... My question comcerns the passion for words in resonant structures, the ears, and the relation of this passion to the need for healing stories.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

926. Keston Sutherland

Re: women and men in conversation

Fri 27 Mar 1998

What do men think/feel about gender when the write poems, post to the list etc ...

I rarely write a poem without this question at least near the forefront of my readiness, its answer is partial but in the poem somehow --

↑ Index

927. k. lederer

Re: women and men in conversation

Fri 27 Mar 1998

If I remember correctly--

One of the threads that preceded this one had to do with some people signing off? And these people (person) had said something about intellectual smugness on the list--professorial/padagogical tones being dominant--

I at least partially agreed with this person--

But also figured that the list had more to offer.

I like it that the posts lately have consisted of so many stories--especially stories that seem to relate to the composition of poetry--to the process by which people here write--and their reasons for writing.

I know that I write (and edit and poeticize) for reasons not altogether clear to me.

I can sometimes pin-point the sensation that prompts me to write--

Sometimes it consists of anxiety related to my gender, my age, my day--to things that someone else has said--

Sometimes it consists of a feeling of elation--of, perhaps, a kind of manic response to something provocative that I encounter--a person, a phrase, a picture.

But sometimes I'm not really sure what it is-- Part of why I like the idea of this list is that it makes people from lots of backgrounds available to me. I like it when people post little reports about their day--maybe regarding a reading they went to the night before.

I like it when Keston and others post poems.

I like to hear about people's histories as writers--why they write.

That's it.

Katy

↑ Index

928. k. lederer

Explosive Editing--Ishamel Klein

Fri 27 Mar 1998

Hi--

Just received a wonderful batch of poems from one of my favorite poets--Ishmael Klein.

She is from New York--doesn't publish much (I don't think she sends out)--

I am including her work in the next issue of Explosive. The issue has a theme--"Spectacular Emotion."

Ishmael is an incredibly unique writer. She reads a lot of old stuff--

EACH DAY DIFFERENT ENOUGH TO BE SOMETHING SUN CAN SET ON

These crows we see manifest ill crowd mentality.
If their going off in pairs is as mate, does it as love redeem?
I'm afraid no. This tree too unhappy full of messy noise i.e. crows.

When a dead man dries his soul gets to go with wind. Hawks come in against crows in wheeling tournament for soul.

If the black birds get it, they celebrate in a tree
to scare it, living, under them. No moonlight gets past them;
much less a helpful sparrow. Trees only love unambitious birds.

If hawk, talons out to prize...
If hawk wins, soul goes higher privately.
Dust souls have nothing to say about it.

They only want enough weight to be worth effort.

I see today getting dark. Villagers walk home quick according to the state of the sky. They urge each other in as well I'd want myself in general.

This world large insofar as has big grasp to take the unattached away
which attracts certain animals.

Maybe you think this emphasis of hypothetical phenomenon
with questionable qualities just as well not there.
But you said "Big World" yourself and not without the look of imminent
icebath

I've told those turned cold to go.
I want to stay myself but more informed.
I want the animals to like me.

↑ Index

929. Thomas Bell
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Mar 1998 to 26 Mar 1998
Sat 28 Mar 1998

I would also be interested in these materials.
tom bell

At 12:47 PM 3/27/98 EST5EDT4,M4.1., Reinfeld, Linda wrote:
>A question from Toshi Ishihara (formerly in Charles Bernstein's >class at UB):
>
>I'm beginning work on a paper about the integration of text and >pictures in the work of Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, Trinh T. Minh-ha, >and Michael Ondaatje. If anyone can suggest critical materials >that would help me along with this project, I'd be very grateful.
>Responses to the list will be forwarded to me by Linda Reinfeld >([redacted]), or you can mail me backchannel at >[redacted]
>
>Thanks a lot -- Toshi
>
>

↑ Index

930. david bromige
women & men in conversation
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Apologies in advance for the anecdotal nature of what follows. Please consider this is a Product Warning.

Thank you Mark Weiss, for your anecdote, the timely reminder that the map is not always the territory. What a horror story! Your patience wit and irony not-withstanding, you must have been sorely tried. I myself was this week at a meeting where one woman was shouting down another. I must have blotted it out when I posted the other day. I guess I've been "spoiled" by the company I keep professionally, by its articulateness, and its self-injunction to question its own motives--although there have been some verbal brawls at dept meetings where gender would scarcely have been discernible to one reading a transcript which rendered the speakers anonymous. I suppose I seek out people of either gender who enjoy conjecture and entertain many viewpoints; and intuitively avoid "overriders" bent on laying down the law. Not that I havent laid it down in my time.

And not to say my wife and I wont fight like cat and dog upon sufficient provocation--whatever may constitute that next time. (It's the !surprise! that trashes civility.) Then there's our 16-y-o daughter, who says a lot with a door. And I've had some horrible arguments with people that when I look back on are like lenses that focus and enlarge my pigheadedness & spite. Nor did they, man or woman, fight fair. Still I like to think there is something to the broad generalities of these gender-speak theories, and my tendency to align with what they say are women's ways.

As an admirer and student (in the large sense) of Robert Duncan, I thought often about the idea of Strife as the mainspring of the human universe. "Why was he so spiteful towards the Langpos," I would ask myself, "When opposition and difference were what he was looking for? Where was his gratitude for their proving something he felt so opposite? " In short, the notion of Strife as the generative force of existence contains its own undoing, IMHO, since one must welcome what one detests, for proving one's belief right. Only those who hold with Agreement as the mainspring can properly reject the disagreeable, if it prove incorrigible, that is, if it persist in its folly despite all of one's attempts to enlighten it--to strive with it. Or so it appears to me. db3.

↑ Index

931. sylvester pollet

Re: women & men in conversation

Sat 28 Mar 1998

> Thank you Mark Weiss, for your anecdote, the timely reminder that the map is not always the territory. What a horror story! Your patience wit and irony notwithstanding, you must have been sorely tried.

I want to second this, Mark. The plaintiff tells what ran through her mind, & her thoughts are found illogical, or inadequate or something, as though minds worked that way in tense moments. I'm not even sure it was illogical--clearly she'd need that suit in good shape to search for a new job!

And thanks David, too. Some good stuff coming out of these discussions. Isn't this, from your last post, why we were attracted to reading/writing poetry in the first place?

> I suppose I seek out people of either gender who enjoy conjecture and entertain many viewpoints; and intuitively avoid

> "overriders" bent on laying down the law. Not that I havent laid it down in my time.

good point on Duncan too. It's the paradox of revolutionaries who win & find themselves the new status quo.

best, Sylvester. p.s. The snow is finally melting!

↑ Index

932. Rebecca Sithiwong
Virginia Woolf, class
Sat 28 Mar 1998

K. Lederer thank you for putting us on track again. I am not generally the confessional type but would like to put my personal experience out there for comment.

I left the United States with my family as a child just eight years old. I've been writing words to please myself since that time. They were secret words in special worlds which accompanied me as we moved and moved and moved. I never thought of myself as a writer, but rather, a passionate traveler who liked to write.

One day, twenty years later, I decided to stop traveling. I built myself a home and surrounded it with a garden. I didn't get on an airplane for over ten years. Raising three children doesn't give you alot of choice about time to write; I wrote at midnight, at six in the morning, whenever I could, whenever I wasn't working or reading.

One day, I looked at a corner of my garden and said to myself, I'm going to write over there. I was determined to have a room of my own. With the little bit of money I'd saved I bought an old house, hired some carpenters and built me a room. My Thai mother-in-law was worried. Are you leaving us? My children were worried. Are you going to live in it? My husband said nothing, I told him nothing. I realized that not one of them knew that I was going to write in that room. In fact, none of them thought anything about the writing they had witnessed for years.

But now that I go to my room every day, the kids tell visitors: Mommy's over there, she's writing. My mother-in-law comes up every now and then to talk and excuses herself for disturbing my writing. My friends ask, what are you writing?

I write because I can't imagine what to do with what I think, other than writing it in words on a piece of paper. That's where it still happens, despite the screen in front on me. I have been alone with this writing for so long in a place where no one can read my language that I can't imagine what it would mean to someone else. For me it's a part of life that needs it's own space just like my children or my dinner or my bath. Inviting someone to read it would be like asking them to share a meal or a shower. It would be like taking my children for an interview: if there was a good reason, I'd do it, but, I'd be pretty careful.

Rebecca

↑ Index

933. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: Ishihara/Reinfeld Hyakunin Isshu

Sat 28 Mar 1998

Reinfeld, Linda wrote:
>
> Thanks to Charles Bernstein's generous notice, there's > revived interest in our translation of Hyakunin Isshu:
> The Game of 100 Poems. We're selling them for $21.00 a > box (that includes the cost of mailing in the USA): there > are not many left, so if you want me to save you a set, > please let me know by email ASAP.
>
> Our translation is now available in book form as well.
> Kansai University Press published it last year, a very > nicely done bilingual edition, hardback, with some of > our own photographs. I have plenty of copies of that, and > there are who knows how many more "sleeping in Japan," > according to Toshi. You can order it from me for $11.00 > (again, cost of mailing included).
>
> Cash or checks made out to me, Linda Reinfeld, > 50 Oakdale Drive, Rochester, NY 14618.
>
> Thanks,
> Linda and Toshi
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

The check's in the mail, Linda. Thanks.

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

934. Thomas Bell

Re: Explosive Editing--Ishamel Klein

Sat 28 Mar 1998

Please send subs and single issue purchase info. thanks
tom bell
[redacted]
2518 Wellington Pl.
Murfreesboro, TN 37128

At 08:38 PM 3/27/98 -0600, k. lederer wrote: >Hi--
>
>Just received a wonderful batch of poems from one of my favorite >poets--Ishmael Klein.
>
>She is from New York--doesn't publish much (I don't think she sends out)--
>
>I am including her work in the next issue of Explosive. The issue has a >theme--"Spectacular Emotion."
>
>Ishmael is an incredibly unique writer. She reads a lot of old stuff--
>
>
>EACH DAY DIFFERENT ENOUGH TO BE SOMETHING SUN CAN SET ON
>
>These crows we see manifest ill crowd mentality.
>If their going off in pairs is as mate, does it as love redeem?
>I'm afraid no. This tree too unhappy full of messy noise i.e. crows.
>
>When a dead man dries his soul gets to go >with wind. Hawks come in >against crows in wheeling tournament for soul.
>
>If the black birds get it, they celebrate in a tree
>to scare it, living, under them. No moonlight gets past them;
>much less a helpful sparrow. Trees only love unambitious birds.
>
>If hawk, talons out to prize...
>If hawk wins, soul goes higher privately.
>Dust souls have nothing to say about it.
>
>They only want enough weight to be worth effort.

>
>I see today getting dark. Villagers walk home quick >according to the state of the sky. They urge each other >in as well I'd want myself in general.
>
>This world large insofar as has
>big grasp to take the unattached away
>which attracts certain animals.
>
>Maybe you think this emphasis of hypothetical phenomenon
>with questionable qualities just as well not there.
>But you said "Big World" yourself and not without the look of imminent
> icebath
>
>I've told those turned cold to go.
>I want to stay myself but more informed.
>I want the animals to like me.
>
>

↑ Index

935. Dr. Michael J. O'Driscoll

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Sat 28 Mar 1998

Morpheal wrote:

> Sadly, logic dictates that the citizens' right to bear arms is a necessity to help assure the prevention of the worst kinds of tyranny.

By "worst kind of tyranny" I wonder if you meant any of the following:

-the tyranny of right wing militant organizations
-the tyranny of spouse abusing husbands
-the tyranny of armed youth gangs

I could go on... but I'll finish on this one: the tyranny of an outdated and failed ideology that is so firmly entrenched that it leaves even well read intelligent people making reckless and ill considered suppositions about the great tragedies of the 20th century.

Gimme a break. The "right to bear arms" will never stand in the way of the U.S. military, but it does make life miserable and sometimes shattering for countless innocents.

MOD

↑ Index

936. Reinfeld, Linda
Ishihara/Reinfeld Hyakunin Isshu
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Thanks to Charles Bernstein's generous notice, there's revived interest in our translation of Hyakunin Isshu: The Game of 100 Poems. We're selling them for $21.00 a box (that includes the cost of mailing in the USA): there are not many left, so if you want me to save you a set, please let me know by email ASAP.

Our translation is now available in book form as well. Kansai University Press published it last year, a very nicely done bilingual edition, hardback, with some of our own photographs. I have plenty of copies of that, and there are who knows how many more "sleeping in Japan," according to Toshi. You can order it from me for $11.00 (again, cost of mailing included).

Cash or checks made out to me, Linda Reinfeld,
50 Oakdale Drive, Rochester, NY 14618.

Thanks,
Linda and Toshi
[redacted]

↑ Index

937. linda russo
women, i.e. rachel & katy
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

wowzie -- i sure picked a bad week to "sign off" (being in buffalo in reality but not discursively . . .)

i can't catch up on all of what went down -- but i really enjoyed reading my male(chris)-edited selection of poetix posts, thinking, is this the rachel i know & love & thinking that delivering pizzas (or reading a lot?) has sure hardened you to the wiles of the world in some way, or you just never showed yourself in my presence to be the guttermouth you are but really, katy, i think if you spent a year in salt lake city (as rachel recently has) you're eyes would be bruised with the blaring discourse of

#1) female students missing classes b/c they have morningsickness, an ob/gyn appointment, or contractions, or they can't find a babysitter or #2) female students miraculously almost uniformly slim and blonde, all giggling and in quest of the sanctioned situation (i.e. #1)

& thinking back a while to maria damon's remark that the higher we look in education, the higher the female dropout rates (no real mystery here, right?) -- sure I wish more women were on the list, more women were sending work out & getting it published -- but that would be simply wishing for non-existent "women" to materialize -- that is, i think WE'RE IT -- we're the women we want more of & you only get more of us by changing the discourses that force women to not -- not to, not to want to, to be afraid to -- become like us.

write on -!-

↑ Index

938. Robert Manery
KSW Call for Support
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Thank you to everyone who has sent letters of support on behalf of the Kootenay School of Writing. The Cultural Affairs staff at the City of Vancouver are still telling us that they will not restore our funding but have indicated they are upset by the letters being sent to the mayor and city councillors (who have final approval of our appeal). This is a good indication the letters are having an effect. We are urging people to continue to send letters. The appeal will be heard by city council on April 23rd so please send letters, emails, faxes before that date.

Some background info:

The Kootenay School of Writing is a volunteer collective which organizes reading, lectures and workshops in Vancouver, BC. KSW has been operating since 1984 and published Writing magazine until 1992 and now publish Raddle Moon. For the last 12 years KSW has enjoyed the financial support of the City of Vancouver. Now, without any prior indication, the city has decided that our audience and scope are too limited to warrant funding. Our financial request is relatively small ($4000) but without it KSW may have to close or at the very least severely curtail our activities.

Addresses:

Kootenay School of Writing
112 West Hastings Street, Vancouver, BC, V6B 1G8
email: [redacted]

City Council

City Hall, 453 West 12th Avenue, Vancouver, B.C., V5Y 1V4
email: [redacted]
fax: Mayor Philip Owen at [redacted]

Office of Cultural Affairs, Social Planning Department, City of Vancouver, Suite 103, City Square (Box 96),555 West 12th Ave., Vancouver, BC V5Z 3X7 Fax: [redacted]

Thank you

↑ Index

939. morpheal
Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list
Sat 28 Mar 1998

> Sadly, logic dictates that the citizens' right to bear arms is a necessity to help assure the prevention of the worst kinds of tyranny.

I shall answer this one, as it resembles some of the other contentions, and I do not want to take too much bandwidth on this poetics channel as regards what is mostly political content. Not that the two subjects are wholly separable. Poetics and politics, poeticians and politicians, are inextricably interwoven into a similar niche in the same fabric... (Ginsberg and Nixon, for example, such that we have to wonder sometimes who influenced peace in southeast Asia more strongly, the poetician or the politician, both playing their parts).

> By "worst kind of tyranny" I wonder if you meant any of the following:
>
> -the tyranny of right wing militant organizations

The power of persuasive salesmanship could result in a illigitimate usurpation of power. That certainly is a concern.

> -the tyranny of spouse abusing husbands

I do not doubt there are spouse abusing wives also, but in any instance, at least individuals in those situations can leave those situations as a matter of freedom of choice. I know that I would never remain within a truly abusive relationship, and feel bound to be the martyred victim. Probably because I despise sado-masochism, having no liking for pain, and even less liking for any others being deliberately afflicted with pain. Least of all when someone doing the afflicting is _enjoying_ doing so.

I think that there are at least as many sadistic women as there are sadistic men, who enjoy causing pain to some other and cause such pain intentionally.

Fortunately humanity as a whole is not by its nature that way. It is simply that some people are that way.

> -the tyranny of armed youth gangs

The fact that those exist is a question concerning education and its efficacy.

Of course, such need to be disarmed, demobilized, and demilitarized, don't they ? The world has shown, on occassion, that it knows how to accomplish such tasks, and I see no real difference in that regard between adult armies of aggression and armies of youths, commanded similarly, and armed to the teeth along with aggressive, territorial, violent intentions. I am not suggesting as violent a response as their's to each other, as might cause loss of life, as that is certainly not what is desired, but in psychological terms at least the two situations can be all too similar.

Gangs of youths need peacekeeping forces as much as countries and ethnic groups that are hell bent on destroying, conquering, and otherwise violencing and brutalizing each other. Gangs often have their own unique ideologies and ritual practices. They identify with each other internally and dehumanize outsiders (from other gangs, mostly), so that it is easier for members to make war on the aliens. The best method has proven to be demilitarization and at minimum a greater force of arms to cause a standing down of the aggressors. With armies hell bent on destroying other armies that they see in conflict with them, there seems to be no other way. Diplomacy usually becomes no more than a military tactic to allow regrouping and escalation of firepower.

> I could go on... but I'll finish on this one: the tyranny of an outdated and failed ideology that is so firmly entrenched that it leaves even well read intelligent people making reckless and ill considered suppositions about the great tragedies of the 20th century.

All ideologies, as such, are exactly as you say. I would never argue with anyone who is saying that all ideologies, religious and political, are essentially dysfunctional in light of their very natures as ideology.

They are beliefs that disregard the realities and fail to respond to the realities as an inevitable consequence of that fact.

As for the machinations of 20th century conflict, including such instances as German and Italian electronic inventiveness, and the attempts of all sides to manipulate the figure head leader Hitler's psyche by remote means... the historians have not yet even begun to unravel this century. The wizards of oz have been around, and active, since the previous and it will a long while until that curtain is parted. They keep writing much the same fictions, and yet most of political history is fictional. We are even further from a good account of what medeival times were like in Europe. There is such a tendency to stress civilization, and such a reluctance to realize how much worse than Machiavellian it all really is. So tell me about this beleaguered century. We can only weep for what it was and has become, in terms of the tolls exacted as to human suffering, including the silent sufferings of the brain washed and the unknown countless victims of political/ideological torture.

There is a very real question as to who is doing it to whom, in such political arenas. Each aggressor group wants the others all to think it is someone else other than themselves, so you are dealing with a web of chamelion trickery of a very sophisticated kind. The KGB liked to pretend it was the CIA doing it to Americans, and were quite good at that. They fooled a lot of people.

It is much worse than you think it is.

> Gimme a break. The "right to bear arms" will never stand in the way of the U.S. military, but it does make life miserable and sometimes shattering for countless innocents.

Soldiers are more likely to be split into factions and to turn on their own, if they are ordered to kill their neighbours, friends, even families. At least if they are put up against the very people they continue to partly identify with as "their own" according to national, cultural, and other factors of identity. Even sporadic guerrilla action against a military coup can lead to its overthrow by splitting the military forces involved as truly oppressive tyranny is not likely to have complete and total loyalty in any instance. What would spur such a split is armed resistance among the population. One has a harder time shooting one's friends than one has shooting the dehumanized enemy. It is much harder to dehumanize the citizenry of one's own country, to turn its army against its own people.

So it is far from as simple as you seem to suggest.

There are safeguards within the right to bear arms, and as you say there are risks and dangers. I hate the thought of the latter happening, as much as you do, and there ought to be better ways to address the question effectively, such as teaching responsibility at an early age and facilitating effective communication and non violent conflict resolution from an early age, as well as some respect for the well being and lives of others, without taking away the right of adult citizens to bear arms.

Of course the right to bear arms ought to hinge upon some controls that regulate who can and who cannot obtain a permit. There are some people who ought not to have them, as they would predictably use them for evil and nefarious purposes, rather than the reasonable defense against illigitimate usurpations of power.

The worst, most oppressive, tyranny would result where there is zero probability of resistance to that tyranny. In fact it would be inevitable and absolute.

Morpheal

↑ Index

940. Karen Kelley
Re: Virginia Woolf, class
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Rebecca Sithiwong wrote:

> My Thai mother-in-law was worried. Are you leaving us? My children were worried. Are you going to live in it?

Wonderful story. I, too, love the personal, but always wonder if it's "appropriate" to the list. I like to think so, but what do you, fellow listees, think? Is there a line where something is too personal for the list?

This actually raises interesting questions about where life & poetry meet & mingle. In undergrad (visual art) I recall a consensus among my peers that sculpture shouldn't be "too personal," (this in the midst of minimalism/post-minimalism). And if someone, during a critique, didn't want to explain their work, inevitably they'd say: "I don't want to say any more--it's personal."

My Mom always said: "Don't write down anything you don't want EVERYONE to see." She also said, when I wasn't being "good,": "Why don't you understand English?!?" Perhaps the harmless remarks of an immigrant-child turned school teacher, but it's always made every word that comes out of my mouth or off of my page seem dangerous/embarrassing/too personal. And now email & lists tempt me to write down things on the fly, which everyone will see. My Mom'd be horrified!

Viva la personal!

↑ Index

941. Karen Kelley
Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

morpheal wrote:

> I do not doubt there are spouse abusing wives also, but in any instance, at least individuals in those situations can leave those situations as a matter of freedom of choice. I know that I would never remain within a truly abusive relationship, and feel bound to be the martyred victim.

I'm surprised: usually you're more humane. I don't understand the workings of relationships where women get stuck in abusive relationships, but it's been pointed out time & again by shrinks & the women alike that walking away does not present itself as a choice. It's the torturer-victim bond, well-documented, the usual phrase for which I can't recall first thing in the morning.

↑ Index

942. Shemurph
The Personal
Sat 28 Mar 1998

In a message dated 98-03-28 13:14:50 EST, Karen Kelley wrote:

<< Viva la personal! >>

And I entirely agree.

One of the most delicious things in writing, I find, is the juxtaposition of abstraction and personal revelation. One fulls the other forward.

Sometimes it is appealing to note that someone made you want him/her to go further, but the writer did not. Intrigue, nudging desire.

↑ Index

943. Keston Sutherland
raped into a chosen martyrdom eh
Sat 28 Mar 1998

I imagine that anyone else who managed to read to the end of morpheal's rejoinder will be, as I am, surprised at that feat; rarely (yes, rarely, despite the various urge to pessimism) do we get to see so accidentally inflammatory a note, such coarse and reckless improvising about real suffering, such a vacuous and automatic defense: "our vanity is never harder to damage than immediately after our pride has been damaged", etc. I disagree with every amateurish appeal and clownish assurance he makes ("it's more XXX than YOU know"), with a vehemence teetering on contempt, NO - fuck it - with CONTEMPT, but the recital of one passage should suffice to illuminate his obnoxiousness (not that this passage is even the most obnoxious - just recall his guarantee that in fact gang violence and international war crimes are basically the same thing):

"I do not doubt there are spouse abusing wives also, but in any instance, at least individuals in those situations can leave those situations as a matter of freedom of choice. I know that I would never remain within a truly abusive relationship [sounds to me like you'd make one], and feel bound to be the martyred victim. Probably because I despise sado-masochism..."

IS ANY COMMENT NEEDED? Are caps needed?

Thank God for freedom of choice - let's tell all those trapped and abused wives to stop their fucking sniveling and get a -healthy- sexuality, shall we.

morpheal, this comment of yours is plain idiocy

↑ Index

944. ScoutEW
Re: Farmers Schoolboys
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

you say farmers schoolboys in a way that is rude. Its as if you are saying(thems farmfolks they couldn't accomplish much) May be you don't get many farmers school boys up at havad' or wherever you are but listen to the way it sounds- Don't underestimate the farmers schoolboys, they contribute

-yes, i think everyone should have the right to a weapon but you will find that the people who did not grow up around guns and don't understand that they are just machines powered by people (the machine we use to write, the internet etc is much more powerful and dangerous than guns will ever be) hell, i don't know what you are trying to say but it sounds dangerous- those boys are victims (the biggest cop-out crybaby nineties excuse word ever)-everyone is a victim now of television, bad cartoons and parents that probably don't even care- unless we all stop looking the other way...

↑ Index

945. dbkk
Re: women and men in conversation
Sat 28 Mar 1998

> Date: Fri, 27 Mar 1998 13:18:48 -0600
> From: "Maria Damon (Maria Damon)" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: women and men in conversation
>
> it was very confusing for me to be raised with the "male" rules for conversation and then enter the social world. my main problem was not other women but guys, who recoiled from my "unfeminine" and combattive verbal style. i couldn't figure out what the problem was. now that i'm thoroughly therapized and midwesternized, i've learned to adopt some "feminine" conversational" skills and i must say it's helped a lot, not w/ getting guys so much as with just getting along better in society.

Maria here is moving this discussion into a direction that I think is important--and that is that there's a problem with the essentialism of this gender discussion. What's "acceptable" verbal behavior for a woman is not this universal white middle class suburban norm. There are class differences, regional differences, and racial differences. I think that good middle class liberals are tolerant of racial differences in verbal expression (afterall it's a good thing to be a good liberal)--it adds "color" to parties and other gatherings--but only up to a point, there has to have been a certain degree of white middle class patterns adapted or that person had better start looking for places other than the avant garde to get published.

As far as my own case, being raised working class in the Chicago area, I feel that I have to constantly contain myself when speaking in the middle class writing world in which I operate. If I express any sort of anger people act like I'm Linda Blair in the Exorcist, they're so shocked, like they're going to faint. I often think of my sister in law in terms of expressing anger. Now, I adore Marie, the sister-in-law, who is considered in her world to be a normal feminine woman in her thirties--how totally butch Marie is by the San Francisco standards I operate in, how she'll take a drag off her cigarette and say, "I wanted to tell that son-of-a-bitch to kiss my ass." This is Marie expressing mild disapproval, and everybody who she talks to understands that. No way could I say of any of tons of difficult people I deal with as an arts administrator, "I wanted to tell that son-of-a-bitch to kiss my ass." Maybe I could if I was on the East Coast, I'm always amazed at how much personality women from New York have--as opposed to the blandness that is enforced here in the Bay Area.

Men on this list have dumped on me time and again for expressing opinions. Remember last summer when I was accused of "rhetorical violence." Then recently when I had my skirmish with Dale (and Dale, please, I'm not trying to bring that up again)--I was complaining to one of the other men on this list how I felt attacked and humiliated in public and this guy, who claims to be a feminist, told me, well you criticized him, you brought it on yourself. I think there are good reasons for women to not bother posting to this list.

I'd just like to add, this is the post-Judith-Butler era--the binary days of male/female are over. Last night I ate dinner alone in my favorite cheap Chinese restaurant and these three drag queens were eating at the next table in the most wonderfully tacky casual attire, the three of them seemed very close and were having a great time, and I was having a great time describing their outfits in my diary, how they seemed to be in this close-knit world that I (and I imagine most of the other people in the restaurant) could never comprehend--and I got these pangs of sentimentality for otherness--to find companionship outside the claustrophobia of the middle class intelligencia. I guess my writing workshop is the closest I come to that. We have a blast in there.

Dodie

↑ Index

946. Maria Damon
Re: Virginia Woolf, class
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

i am a fan of the personal, but i may be too far on that side. i've been known to blurt out information about my marital status from the podium. and regretted it.

At 10:17 AM -0800 3/28/98, Karen Kelley wrote: >Rebecca Sithiwong wrote:
>
>> My Thai mother-in-law was worried. Are you leaving >> us? My children were worried. Are you going to live in it?
>
>Wonderful story. I, too, love the personal, but always wonder if it's >"appropriate" to the list. I like to think so, but what do you, fellow >listees, >think? Is there a line where something is too personal for the list?
>
>This actually raises interesting questions about where life & poetry meet & >mingle. In undergrad (visual art) I recall a consensus among my peers that >sculpture shouldn't be "too personal," (this in the midst of >minimalism/post-minimalism). And if someone, during a critique, didn't want
to >explain their work, inevitably they'd say: "I don't want to say any more--it's >personal."
>
>My Mom always said: "Don't write down anything you don't want EVERYONE
to >see."
>She also said, when I wasn't being "good,": "Why don't you understand >English?!?" Perhaps the harmless remarks of an immigrant-child turned school >teacher, but it's always made every word that comes out of my mouth or off >of my >page seem dangerous/embarrassing/too personal. And now email & lists tempt me >to write down things on the fly, which everyone will see. My Mom'd be >horrified!
>
>Viva la personal!

↑ Index

947. morpheal
Re: raped into a chosen martyrdom eh
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Keston Sutherland <[redacted]> wrote:

> I disagree with every amateurish appeal and clownish assurance he makes

I am of course a clown here because I lack a masters or a doctorate ?

Though there could be other implications which I shall allude to later.

> I know that I would never remain within a > truly abusive relationship [sounds to me like you'd make one], and feel > bound to be the martyred victim. Probably because I despise > sado-masochism..."

This apparently goes with your retitling of your article as

"Re: raped into a chosen martyrdom eh"

What gives you, good sir, regardless of your eminent Harvard education, and your position of privilege within the world's most politically, economically, and militarily powerful nation, the right to imply that ?

I have never come anywhere near to raping anyone, in any fantasy or any reality, and the only few times I ever came near to being raped was by somewhat older men, when I was a young teenager.

Now, good sir, while you yourself might not have chosen to _always_ and in _every instance_ respect _any_ man or woman's personal free choice as to physical intimacy of any kind, I most certainly have always maintained that to be an inviolable principle. That is true even within a committed relationship and I was in one for nearly nine years with a woman.

I firmly believe that consent as to ANY physical intimacy must be uncoerced between persons as equals (neither regarded as submissive or dominant and each having their own head and freedom of thought and expression say in the matter). That such consent must be freely given to one another before physical intimacy can be permissible with each other. That is even true in marriage. I can also honestly say that I have not taken advantage of any woman who was in any way inebriated, intoxicated, or unwilling to freely enter into physical intimacy, and particularly any intimacy that implied anything even remotely sexual. Also that regardless of my on rare occassion being a little under the influence, I have invariably appologized for any unwelcome casual touch. I have never even taken a liberty of the slightest contact and then excused it as being the workings of some intoxicant. That includes even the touch of a hand upon a hand, and there it stops.

If that is a martyrdom then so be it. That is not going to change, despite the urgings of others, mostly men, that I am too conservative and that with that attitude I will never win my beloved, whomever she is, as they say I lack the necessary aggressive impulses to sieze by the hair and drag her down, as would a Neanderthal. Perhaps you are one of those who share that predilection.

So, what are you on about, other claiming that you perhaps disagree, within your own life, about that basic principle that I uphold and maintain in mine ? That and many other principles that I have always maintained or have learned to maintain.

If that implication is correct, then we certainly have a vast difference of opinion that is unresolvable, and we must go to war against each other. That is before you attempt to rape me....or make further claims that some other has raped me who in fact has not done so.... Either idea is as abhorent as the idea that I would enter into any such practice.

Shall I suggest pistols at ten paces ? Who are your seconds ? Duelling seems to be the only practical recourse, all else considered....

And there we have it, a difference, a conflict, and a war.

> IS ANY COMMENT NEEDED? Are caps needed?

Caps, capitals, capitations, capitalizations, and caput....all relate to one another and in fact it has more to do with the heads on coins than anything else. Lose ones coins and lose one's head, is a common, but not a commensense, principle that some uphold. One is forever a clown if one does not hold on to one's money bag and all those heads in there, isn't one ?

Now that is implicative.

Perhaps it depends upon the reasons that one goes caput and decapitalizes.

Good sir, are you, in your holy Harvard sacred business sense of American economics wisdom claim that that decision to decapitalize one's self, in any instance, ought NOT to be for the sake of any other, and much less the sake of a _woman_. Oh, ye gods, forbid, a man caput and decapitate, decapitalized, because of any woman. So stone the bastard for not having capital intentions....and put a fools cap on him that he will never get off. Is that the real digs in what you are, "eh", attempting to goad at ?

Are you saying that the freely chosen agreement with another to in some way decaptilize one's self, and share what one has, where that action in fact has nothing whatever to do with any business of profits and losses, but is a personal matter, is a kind of rape ?

Again, I think pistols at ten paces might be best, with you Mr. Sutherland, as you seem to know so very much about the matter you allude to, and seek to tar it over with such a black brush.

Another implicative.

> morpheal, this comment of yours is plain idiocy

You are right, I stand corrected, as I lack an advanced degree with which to support the argument.

Clearly you are claiming this list for those with academic tenure and advanced degrees, are you not ? If that is the consensual opinion then of course I shall promptly leave and never say another word about it.

I cannot say best regards.

Your attack was far too venemous to honestly feel that way in response.

Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

948. Karen Kelley
Re: women and men in conversation
Sat 28 Mar 1998

[redacted] wrote:

> she'll take > a drag off her cigarette and say, "I wanted to tell that son-of-a-bitch to > kiss my ass."

This so reminds me of Diana, my roommate in (east coast) art school. In the midst of a discussion of esthetics spiralling pedogogically, pedantically, pontificatingly out of control, she took a drag off her cigarette and blurted, "Aw, fuck art!" That statement helped define our sculpture department in ways I can't even begin to describe. It became our rallying cry. Everyone stopped worrying & looking over their shoulders for the art-police and just made sculpture. I really miss that sort of response, as I work in the buttoned down world of Silicon Valley.

↑ Index

949. Thomas Bell
Re: women and men in conversation
Sat 28 Mar 1998

From what I've seen on the list opinion and feelings (particularly anger) are generally ignored or trounced - it doesn't seem to matter who writes it. This seems to limit discourse to the two extremes of decorum and vituperation. The only exception I can recall started with Tom Beckett's post on depression and writers about a month ago. I'm sorry he apparently is no longer with us here.

tom bell

At 11:05 AM 3/28/98 -0800, [redacted] wrote:
>>Date: Fri, 27 Mar 1998 13:18:48 -0600
>>From: "Maria Damon (Maria Damon)" <[redacted]>
>>Subject: Re: women and men in conversation
>>
>>it was very confusing for me to be raised with the "male" rules for >>conversation and then enter the social world. my main problem was not other >>women but guys, who recoiled from my "unfeminine" and combattive verbal >>style. i couldn't figure out what the problem was. now that i'm >>thoroughly therapized and midwesternized, i've learned to adopt some >>"feminine" conversational" skills and i must say it's helped a lot, not w/>>getting guys so much as with just getting along better in society.
>
>Maria here is moving this discussion into a direction that I think is >important--and that is that there's a problem with the essentialism of this >gender discussion. What's "acceptable" verbal behavior for a woman is not >this universal white middle class suburban norm. There are class >differences, regional differences, and racial differences. I think that >good middle class liberals are tolerant of racial differences in verbal >expression (afterall it's a good thing to be a good liberal)--it adds >"color" to parties and other gatherings--but only up to a point, there has >to have been a certain degree of white middle class patterns adapted or >that person had better start looking for places other than the avant garde >to get published.
>
>As far as my own case, being raised working class in the Chicago area, I >feel that I have to constantly contain myself when speaking in the middle >class writing world in which I operate. If I express any sort of anger >people act like I'm Linda Blair in the Exorcist, they're so shocked, like >they're going to faint. I often think of my sister in law in terms of >expressing anger. Now, I adore Marie, the sister-in-law, who is considered >in her world to be a normal feminine woman in her thirties--how totally >butch Marie is by the San Francisco standards I operate in, how she'll take >a drag off her cigarette and say, "I wanted to tell that son-of-a-bitch to >kiss my ass." This is Marie expressing mild disapproval, and everybody who >she talks to understands that. No way could I say of any of tons of >difficult people I deal with as an arts administrator, "I wanted to tell >that son-of-a-bitch to kiss my ass." Maybe I could if I was on the East >Coast, I'm always amazed at how much personality women from New York >have--as opposed to the blandness that is enforced here in the Bay Area.

>
>Men on this list have dumped on me time and again for expressing opinions.
>Remember last summer when I was accused of "rhetorical violence." Then >recently when I had my skirmish with Dale (and Dale, please, I'm not trying >to bring that up again)--I was complaining to one of the other men on this >list how I felt attacked and humiliated in public and this guy, who claims >to be a feminist, told me, well you criticized him, you brought it on >yourself. I think there are good reasons for women to not bother posting >to this list.
>
>I'd just like to add, this is the post-Judith-Butler era--the binary days >of male/female are over. Last night I ate dinner alone in my favorite >cheap Chinese restaurant and these three drag queens were eating at the >next table in the most wonderfully tacky casual attire, the three of them >seemed very close and were having a great time, and I was having a great >time describing their outfits in my diary, how they seemed to be in this >close-knit world that I (and I imagine most of the other people in the >restaurant) could never comprehend--and I got these pangs of sentimentality >for otherness--to find companionship outside the claustrophobia of the >middle class intelligencia. I guess my writing workshop is the closest I >come to that. We have a blast in there.
>
>Dodie
>
>

↑ Index

950. Keston Sutherland

Re: raped into a chosen martyrdom eh

Sat 28 Mar 1998

Dear Bob -

seems there've been crossed wires - I would NEVER imply that you had mistreated or abused anyone, or that your message demonstrated any such propensity; if this is how my response reads, then please please accept my sincerest apologies. I do regret the extent to which my note was venomous, and for this I'm also sorry.

What I meant by my title was something wholly different - that your suggestion that women trapped in abusive relationships (often raped into and in them) as 'martyrs' to a kind of sado-masochistic impulse is crass and highly offensive - that there's no such thing as a universal opt-out clause for such individuals, and that sometimes there is no 'freedom' of choice simple enough to warrant that morally suggestive term.

A few points.

1. I do not hold an advanced degree, masters or doctorate. So what. Neither do you. So what. Nothing I said made this an issue. I'm not attempting to 'claim' this list for anyone. If the mere fact of my e- address must incur this rather tangential jibing, I suspect the problem is not something I can redress.

2. This 'most powerful of nations' is not my nation. This is the first year I've lived here, and I'm sure I'd have just as many criticisms of it as you.

3. There are types of venom: whilst my message was, I admit, too severe and excessive in its irritation, I found YOUR message incredibly offensive, really quite like a venom that required a fairly potent cure. I am - again - sorry if what I said seemed personally directed.

Really - it upsets me that you have written a defense of your most intimate attitudes as if they had been called into question; I had meant only to attack the published fact of an array of what I consider to be abusive remarks. I AM sorry, and hope that my next response, should this discussion continue, will be more equable.

But do you see that to claim simple freedom of choice for men and women constrained (by whatever factor - economic, for instance) to accept a daily ration of mistreatment, is inconsiderate to say the least? Have you never known anybody stuck in such a situation?

↑ Index

951. Keston Sutherland
Re: Farmers Schoolboys
Sat 28 Mar 1998

fer chrissake... "Don't underestimate the farmers schoolboys, they contribute" yes, I'm well aware - this has nothing whatsoever to do with what I was saying, and neither was it 'farmers and schoolboys' alone that I mentioned, was it?

> FARMERS SCHOOLBOYS AND INSURANCE SALESMEN

There ARE points to be made, sometimes it IS possible or even necessary to be polemical or elliptical in making them, does anybody -really- think I'm underestimating farmers' contribution to the nation just by suggesting that they (along, as I obviously implied, with everyone else) would not be able to fend off an attack from the armed forces? Must this discussion reach this level of inventive pedantry? And what's all this sneery ressentiment re: Harvard?

↑ Index

952. k. lederer
Re: esp Rachel, Models of Power
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Re: The point below and Rachel's earlier interpretation of the word "power"--

To desire that people exercise their "power" is not necessarily to imply that they subvert or otherwise hinder someone else.

Power can be reactive as well as proactive--defensive as well as offensive--

When I presume that there are links between speaking, participating, and power, I am not trying to imply that "powergrabs" are the answer to anything--or that disenfranchised or otherwise "unpowerful" people need to rise up and take over the power structures that are now in "force"--

To, as Rachel puts it, "just do one's work" requires a certain degree of power--of "self-confidence" and "self-possession" as Woolf might phrase it.

The exercise of one's power does not need to be synonymous with the oppression of others.

Re: Keston's question below: the connection between speaking and the model of power I presented earlier is, as you imply, to try to prevent such "oppressive" conditions from arising in the first place.

In other words--my use of "speak!" was meant as an incentive to use power defensively (as in speaking on the list if you disagree with something)--not offensively per se.

Best, Katy
***
>
>
>
>
>
> wouldn't Foucault say that, whilst productive rather than repressive > (strictly speaking), power can nonetheless be used to produce repressive > conditions? And that in fact it regularly is? Why does this lead to
>
>

> >In other words--women should speak! Everyone should speak!
>
>
> ? Of course they should. There's a gehenna of links I'm missing
>

↑ Index

953. Nada Gordon
my penis
Sat 28 Mar 1998

My Penis

is bright and triangular.
Physical fact and shape
a persistent drumbeat
adjectives cling up to:
moist, clever, leafy, spoiled --
anagrams of my real name
like flowers bigger than the world:
lineaments
of gratified desire

--nada

↑ Index

954. Taylor Brady
Publication Announcements
Sat 28 Mar 1998

New at Cartograffiti:

Poems by Rod Smith, Heather Fuller, and Sean Bonney; hypertext fiction by Aaron Armstrong Skomra.

Also, new (more or less) from the Small Press Collective :

Print-ready PDF versions of Small Press Collective newsletters 1 and 2 (previously circulated in photocopy format in a rather limited fashion). To access the PDF files, follow the "SPC Print Publications" link from the SPC front page.

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">
New at <I><A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">Cartograffiti</A>:</I><I></I>

<P>Poems by Rod Smith, Heather Fuller, and Sean Bonney; hypertext fiction by Aaron Armstrong Skomra.

<P>Also, new (more or less) from the <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">Small Press Collective</A> :

<P>Print-ready PDF versions of Small Press Collective newsletters 1 and 2 (previously circulated in photocopy format in a rather limited fashion). To access the PDF files, follow the "SPC Print Publications" link from the SPC front page.

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------5CA2FFF4ECCB9E2E85CF9CF3--

↑ Index

955. Gabriel Gudding
Sutherland's Apology
Sat 28 Mar 1998

Look -- Gudding here rising from a recent bath in lurkerdom -- just want to say what a fine thing it is to see a nice, thoroughgoing apology on this list.

Apology is, I think, an art that has regrettably made its escape from American public life. I'm glad you made one, Mr. Sutherland: it was needed.

Three things, Henry James said, are necessary in human life. The first is to be kind. The second is to be kind. And the third is to be kind.

Well done. gg

On Sat, 28 Mar 1998, Keston Sutherland wrote:

> Dear Bob -
>
> seems there've been crossed wires - I would NEVER imply that you had mistreated or abused anyone, or that your message demonstrated any such propensity; if this is how my response reads, then please please accept my sincerest apologies. I do regret the extent to which my note was venomous, and for this I'm also sorry.

↑ Index

956. joel lewis

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

what pisses me off about the coverage is absolute lack of discussion that these boys, at their early age, felt they had the permission to kill women (girls in this case) who "rejected" them -- a theme unfortunatley picked up by one too many husbands and boyfriends as adults. Why the focus on guns and nothing on the sexism in society??

joel lewis

↑ Index

957. k. lederer

Re: women, i.e. rachel & katy

Sat 28 Mar 1998

Hi Linda--

I'm not sure what to make of your description of (presumably) the undergraduates at U Utah.

Are you trying to say that stereotyping women as such creates more women who fit the stereotype?

Are you trying to say that feminism has led to some sort of gross exploitation of the menstruation excuse for skipping classes?

I did gather, I think clearly, that you feel that women drop out at a higher rate from men as they climb the educational ladder because they decide to raise families instead of continuing on--

But I have to admit that I don't see the connection between Rachel's views (which I don't fully understand, I don't think) and the undergrads at U Utah--

Maybe you mean to say that Rachel doesn't want to be lumped together with these other "kinds" of women? That Rachel would like to avoid being perceived as one of these slim blond giggly people? (Though Rachel is slim and kinda blondish and has a wonderful laugh--and is very generous with her laughter)?

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

958. R M Daley
hi linda and haha ! katy
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

hey linda- glad yer back - oh i don't think at all i's keeping my mouth shut or not showing my tru colorz or anything like that last year - just afraid of trigger words after a year of seeing tru colorz of the world of poetry mongering and stargazing - and so not so much pizza delivering or slingin other types of hash thats got me worried about the distinction continually being made between 'our world', the poetry world and the 'real world' of real world trials and tribulations - and i think you are pointing out perhaps how they areall of the world thats interpreted and 'lived' - from the slim blondes trying to sell us jesus on utah's campus to the kind of muse-infested death lyrix continually slung over women's bodies-

so yeah katy, i think of a way i can understand what yer saying - the power part oh yes most definitely yes definitely coes in at the part where one feels one has the necessity, reason, hankering, space (a la woolf) to do work- that is certainly a certain position of power, of unself-consciousness i think that may be lots of what women have not had the chance to take for granted - for many it seems to be something that comes as a difficult gift from themselves

luv ya

rachel

↑ Index

959. R M Daley
Re: women, i.e. rachel & katy
Sat 28 Mar 1998

---

but KATY I'M NOT BLOND!!!!!

↑ Index

960. k. lederer
Re: women, i.e. rachel & katy
Sat 28 Mar 1998

I said you were "blondish" (not a blond dish)--

Blond complected--

Something must be right at U Utah--they won at the b-ball--

On Sat, 28 Mar 1998, R M Daley wrote:

> but KATY I'M NOT BLOND!!!!!

↑ Index

961. Rebecca Sithiwong
personal
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Forgive the personal, I became so intentionally to make a point about what money and a room of one's own can do for a woman who writes. I am, though, interested in the undertones of the "personal" controversy. Any backchannel commentaries or clips of previous conversations on this point will be appreciated.

I am in a strange situation here, my only connection with you all is this list. I do not know any of you personally, I have never published, do not work in academia and, indeed, may be outside the pale of the interests represented by this list. It takes a great deal of courage for me to post to this list. I don't, however, feel that this is a problem of gender, so please don't anyone misunderstand, it's just a function of how new I am to this world of poetics.

I hope I did not give the impression that I consider my writing personal to the point that not everyone could read it. This was not my intention. I write for everyone. There is nothing I write which I wouldn't share with anyone who can read my language, but, that includes neither my mother-in-law- nor my children. I don't think I would submit it to a random list of publications either. Why would I? My children were made for this world, it doesn't mean, though, that I would release them on a street anywhere. I don't eat just anything and I'm particular about my bath. That's me and I'm the one writing. Or, was someone making a point about a divinely inspired process?

Perhaps I'm missing something about personal. Any enlightenment would be appreciated. Thanks in advance.

Rebecca

↑ Index

962. rsillima
Guns, gender, children
Sun 29 Mar 1998

I've been none too impressed by the tone of discourse on this list over the past few weeks (dating back to the religious wars), although bright spots (David Bromige, Dodie Bellamy, Nada Gordon, Joel Lewis) always make it worth the while, eventually. I'd love it if people could actually try to read one another once in awhile and leave off the name-calling.

The situation in Jonesboro (which, as a one-time SF resident, I keep hearing as "Jonestown") is heart-breaking. It's part of the American pathology (the "pure products" as WCW once put it) that people in this country hardly question why children who are not old enough to smoke, drink beer or drive are allowed to be "trained" to use automatic rifles. If ever there was an argument for the moral and psychological superiority of Canada or the UK, America's confusion of the gun with its collective penis is it.

There is, I think, no question that this violence is gendered. My wife's college buddy Corinne Dufka is the chief Reuters photographer in Africa (after stints in the former Yugoslavia, Chechnya and central America). Her photos, which periodically can be seen on the Reuters web site (Corinne was nominated for the Pulitzer last year), all too often show armies composed of 13-year-old boys killing other 13-year-old boys. It's always boys.

Corinne herself took up photography while working in Nicaragua (an interesting choice given that her mother, and I think a sister also, are blind) to show what war does to children and has been wounded three times (once when her jeep hit a land mine in Chechnya) over the past decade.

Ron

↑ Index

963. Chrsmccrry
unsubscribe poetics
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Dear God,

if there's any justice in this world, then please let this work--

↑ Index

964. david bromige
re : unsubscribe poetics
Sun 29 Mar 1998

This is a personal squawk : I just dont get it. Granted that "chrss mccrry" in his post today is cryptic, I assume from this one-line farewell that s/he is offended by what's going on with the List. Well, you know, I dont recall seeing many or any posts from "chrss mccrry". So was s/he lurking out there, passively allowing us-all to go on without his or her attempting to intercede?

I dont understanding this running away from difficulties instead of attempting to cope with them, even to turn their direction. I was sadly disappointed when Toim Beckett quit after so brief a term with us. But Tom at least tried to remake the List closer to his heart's desire. I dont think there was anything like a similar effort from "chrss mccrry".

I dont understand the rudeness, either : the terse implication that we have somehow failed this pristine noncombatant. And I dont understands the cowardice : "chrss mccrry" is now presumably not around to receive feedback on his/her gesture.

But maybe s/he simply posted the "unsubscribe" to the wrong e-ddress, & had been having technical trouble disconnecting, & my small rant is completely off-target--if so, most profound and english apologies to all, for projecting an argument fetched over from elsewhere, onto this innocent mistake. David

↑ Index

965. Billy Little personality
Sun 29 Mar 1998

don't stop Rebecca, there is no poetics factory, working conditions create poetics as much as ideas, family creates poetics, acceptance/rejection creates poetics, pencils/keyboards create poetics, this list needs more personality not uniformity, poetry and conformity are antonymns and i couldn't agree more with David Bromige about the unpersonality of the unsubscriber, although it does provide the guilty pleasure of imagining and reimagining the reasons they quit (was it my bad breath?)

↑ Index

966. Keston Sutherland
(no subject)
Sun 29 Mar 1998

> So, no, I have NEVER known of ANYONE in that situation.

> They claim to be in it, but they are not.

well I have known such people, some very close to me, whose dependency was so thoroughly bred into their outlook as to make it impossible for them to extricate themselves. And so they were regularly beaten and sexually abused. I don't consider this a mere 'claim', no matter how those people may have changed their minds had they been more enlightened.

A sore issue, in fact - yrs, k

↑ Index

967. morpheal
Re: personality
Sun 29 Mar 1998

> don't stop Rebecca, there is no poetics factory, working conditions create poetics as much as ideas, family creates poetics, acceptance/rejection creates poetics, pencils/keyboards create poetics, this list needs more personality not uniformity, poetry and conformity are antonymns
> and i couldn't agree more with David Bromige about the unpersonality of the unsubscriber, although it does provide the guilty pleasure of imagining and reimagining the reasons they quit (was it my bad breath?)

Aside: I am trying to post fewer messages so as to avoid the wrath of the list godz, but I could not resist saying something to this.

You have never heard of the art factory ? It has an art assembly line, where each artist, as a self incorporated entity, MUST crank out, following the long venerated strategems and techniques of a Henry Ford, a quite precisely identifiable and narrow range of product line.

They must have a style, or voice, of their own, a recognizable "signature" in the Derridean sense of that, and most of all they MUST do essentially the same thing over and over again. Even the divergence into another medium of expression could be seriously frowned upon as diletantism, as is experimentation with different styles of writing often dubbed immature style.

The artist is often constrained to the realization that the artist has more in common with the mass production enterprise of products for the marketplace than the artist wanted to have. The artist too tends to feel the need to produce works that are as remarkably similar as the same model, of the same make, with various options providing the only differentiation.

Of course I said previously that might be overcome in the evolution of art, but not yet. Then any artist might deviate into any style, using any media, in any ways that suit the intentionality of giving communicative form to the impulses derivative from a sense of aesthetics and a desire to express meanings. There are signs of that tendency towards liberalism in the arts, but not its full realization. I think we might see more of that in the very near future.

Then there might be more acceptable differentiation of the works of art, as distinct from the works of mass production, and differentiation of the artist away from the mass producer ? Perhaps.

Morpheal

↑ Index

968. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
Sun 29 Mar 1998

why would poesis get us out of anything? if not worldwatch, there are other equally appalling statistics, and nothing changes them, not even Wired's cacaphony re: our brilliant future.

if the pen is mightier than the sword, the ploughshare wins overall.

alan

↑ Index

969. D W Have
"BOYS"
Sun 29 Mar 1998

In a message dated 3/28/98 8:30:44 PM, you wrote:

what pisses me off about the coverage is absolute lack of discussion that these boys, at their early age, felt they had the permission to kill women (girls in this case) who "rejected" them -- a theme unfortunatley picked up by one too many husbands and boyfriends as adults. Why the focus on guns and nothing on the sexism in society??

Joel Lewis

and Ron Silliman wrote:

There is, I think, no question that this violence is gendered. My wife's college buddy Corinne Dufka is the chief Reuters photographer in Africa (after stints in the former Yugoslavia, Chechnya and central America). Her photos, which periodically can be seen on the Reuters web site (Corinne was nominated for the Pulitzer last year), all too often show armies composed of 13-year-old boys killing other 13-year-old boys. It's always boys.

I thought I'd posts some quotes that address the subject of gender and violence from a different angle--

"Owing to greater uses of cutting objects and other weaponry, Mcleod states 'offenses against men are significantly more serious than are offenses against women.' Her examination of police reports found 'whereas just one quarter of all spouse abuse incidents involving female victims are categorized as aggrevated assaults, the corresponding statistic for male victims is demonstrably higher" 86 % are aggrevated, over two-thirds of these aggrevated events are serious assaults with a weapon. "-- Cook-- quoting Mcleod's study of Philadelphia Domestic Homicides in Abused Men - the Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

38 % of domestic homicides among white couples in the US are committed by women .Cook, Abused Men - The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

In black family/spousal murders roughly 47% of victims are husbands vs 53 % wives Cook, Abused Men - The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

Women kill their children more often than fathers do (55% vs 45 %) Cook, Abused Men - The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

"There are many examples where a man is charged with homicide while a woman committing a similar act is charged with a lesser offense "(Mcleod -- who attributes this fact to "chivalry and paternalism on the part of the police")

"It is a well known but often neglected by policy makers that men are nearly twice as likely as women to be victims of all types of violent crime and three times more likely to be murder victims" -- Cook Abused Men - the Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

"More precise and balanced results from the most recent National Family Violence Survey reveal a woman is being severely assaulted every 17.5 seconds and a man is being severely assaulted every 15.7 seconds. The data on male spousal abuse are generally not cited. -- Cook Abused Men - the Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

McNeely, R.L.. and Robinson-Simpson, G(1987)The Truth about Domestic Violence: A Falsely Framed Issue.Social Work32(6)485-490 Excerpt from the text of the book: "Yet, while repeated studies consistently show that men are victims of domestic violence as often as are women, `both the lay public and many professionals regard a finding of no sex difference in rates of physical aggression among intimates as surprising, if not unreliable,' the stereotype being that men are aggressive `and women are exclusively victims.' "

Rate of violence per 1000 couples (NIMH study 1985) :

Husband against Wife: Overall Violence: 113 Severe Violence: 30

Wife against Husband: Overall Violence 121 Severe Violence: 44

"The fact that women had higher mean and median rates for severe violence suggests that female aggression is not merely a response to male aggression"-- from a study by the National Family Violence Counsel

"Women are often as directly aggressive as men and occasionally more so"-- Are Women Always Less Aggressive Than Men?-- Psychological Bulletin --Ann Frodi, Jacqueline McCaulay and Pauline Ropert Thome

"Numerous studies show that women commit more acts of child abuse than do men" --Cook Abused Men - The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence.

(Studies place the percentage of incidents of child abuse perpetrated by females at somewhere around 80%-- DH)

Not to suggest that statistics tell the whole story (they are always "cooked" no matter who employs them), but I thought it might be instructive to post work that show a different picture as regards gender & violence. This is in no way meant to suggest that feminist concerns are not viable in this field of inquiry-- they most certainly are, and much good has and will continue to come out of them. Rather it is meant to serve as a partial answer to some of the posts that suggest "it's always boys". As a psychotherapist who did emergency work and commitments for about two years and was in private practice for another two, I spoke to women who had beaten their husbands, men who had been treated violently at the hands of women and men who had been victims of sexual abuse by women. They were all well aware of the silence (read disbelief) with which their stories are often met. A final note-- as far as I am aware these studies are pertinent in the United States only,& all but the McNeely citation can be found in Cook's Abused Men - the Hidden Side of Domestic Violence. There are other books and many more articles on this subject available, but Cook's is the only one I could find at the library near my home. David Hickman

↑ Index

970. k. lederer

Ron and Don: what's wrong with the conversation?

Sun 29 Mar 1998

Don--

By your message I gather that you have found the discussion about feminism and women's participation on this list "dreary." This is my assumption--and if this is what you meant, then you should come out and say it (likewise w/Ron Silliman).

I understand your concerns about what you characterize as stereotypical forms of response on a list like this one: "the righteous," "the victim," "the defender" etc...

But by saying this I think you very much reduce the content of some of these messages. What's been going on here in the last week is far more complicated than simple "dreariness" or, as you also imply, "irrelavance."

Sure, the discussion has not been particularly witty nor flush with facts. I would guess (and maybe I'm wrong) that you and many others who might find such a discussion dreary have not even cracked most of the foundational texts in regards to this issue.

In which case, you may not be seeing the more subtle aspects of some of these posts.

When you say that "our tradition and history" don't know what to do about a world in crisis--and that poesis is somehow a salve if not a remedy for this, then I think you must be on another planet.

I am not the most energetic activist. I am not yet clear (I am 25) on what to do about this world in crisis. But I think that a working out of gender issues, and race issues, and class issues--all of which are imbricated with poverty, overconsumption, and one another--is a big first step.

Part of the discussion here in the last week has regarded various forms of competition and the ways in which they are engendered.

I believe quite strongly that discussions about modes of conversation, violence as it pertains to gender, and polemicism on this list have everything to do with an attempt to alter the course of this "world in crisis"--

Could you please explain to me what you see as the precise connection(s) between poesis and our impending environmental doom?

Gary Snyder?

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

971. Tim Wood
Re: "BOYS"
Sun 29 Mar 1998

<semi-rant> A lot of interesting posts flying recently; really good discussion. Mr/s D W Have posted a litany of statistics that nicely illustrate that nothing, even gender, is as simple as anybody on any side of the issue would have the rest of us believe.

I have the 'joy' of living in a state where a gubernatorial candidate less than a decade ago said --on the question of rape-- that women should just lay back and enjoy it. To be even cruder (if that's possible): they asked for it. The nasty little game of labelling someone a victim and then blaming them for it, too. Neat trick that.

Of course, the flip side is the argument that gender agression/problems/whatever all source in the male ultimately. Some where. Some decade. Some how. One post worried about not getting a date because of a man's reaction (like men never worry about that) while being somewhat horrified that men do very much the same thing. In simple terms, perhaps we all hope to play our half of the sexual game without an 'opponent/partner'. They don't call it a dance for nothing.

Something that keeps shooting by on tangents, for me, is the notion a lot of people seem to have that there is only one kind of man/one kind of woman. I did choose 'the male' above somewhat intentionally. Which makes things interesting. "The male of the species struts about either verbally or physically, preferably both, exuding as much testosterone as possible. The male must show his superiority over all other males (not to mention those non-males over there). The male must mate." And we construct similar silly images of women. Of course, the construction is complicated: men construct images of women, women reconstruct and appropriate those images and so on. And the same thing happens in regard to the image, the role of men. Ever need a good example of the hermeneutic for class, pull other gender roles and I just bet everyone will get it.

One comic boiled it down much more politely (than my nature show example) by labeling men hunters, women gathers. He started here, had sold out shows for over year & then moved off broadway and (from what I hear) still sells out. Why? Because people tend to hold every one up these little preconceptions. And there's enough truth someone in the big lies (male, female) that almost everyone seems to match somewhere. Ah ha! They must match the rest of it! Or worse yet --for the person being identified, classed, disected-- they really don't match any of it, so the mind throws out the example (don't want to add any grays to our easy map to life) or classifies that person as abnormal. How many guys on the list, who like me are 'heterosexual' remember being called "faggot" in the halls during say Junior High. Ya don't fit the image, ya ain't part of the dance or your ignored or both.

Backing around to the litany of statistics, they do quite a bit to not just shine light, but confuse (as statistics are want to do). While they point out that women assaulting men tend to be more violent (ahhh! blame them lil' ol women bitches agin) they do nothing to point out how often those reactions are to the violence of men... versus how often there was no violance on the male end of the equation. Of course, statistics have a hard time quantifying (like statistics do anything but attempt to quantify) the mental games by one party or the other that lead to the situtation.

<end semirant>

Ah, yes, hopefully this doesn't start any flame wars... just thoughts, for the list-serv mill.

Tim

_____ Tim Wood

[redacted]

↑ Index

972. k. lederer
Statistics and Silliman
Sun 29 Mar 1998

--Yes, I think those statistics seemed awfully skewed. The point is well taken that men suffer from violence as much if not more than women. But the issue seems to be a little more complex than that.

It seemed that Have's statistics left out some key information. 1. If men suffer from aggravated assault more than women, do men also perpetrate aggravated assault more than women? Who are the perpetrators statistically?

Are you saying that men beat up other men as much as they beat up women, so violence isn't gendered?

2. To say that rates of violence are similar in both male and female prison populations is an interesting statistic, but isn't this a pretty specific statistical group? Does it reflect the general population in any regard?

3. Your statistics concerned domestic violence--and were informative in regards to this (though the fact that they all came from a single source--and that this source seemed interested in proving that men suffered from domestic violence, not just women, seems suspicious to me...)--what about violence in the public sphere?

I would like to see some statistic about rape. How many men are raped outside of prison?

I would like a clarification of your statistic about child abuse. Do women abuse their children sexually more than men do? Do they hit their children? Neglect their children? Could you be more specific?

I would like to see statistic about guns and the use of guns. Do women assault or massacre others with guns as often as men do? Or is it rolling pins that they employ?

***

Ron, I have to take issue again with your earlier post.

In that post you seem to discourage the new voices that have popped up on this list in the last week from contributing further. The list of--was it four people?--whom you cited as having interesting things to say were to say the least very usual suspects. I enjoy their posts, but I have also been glad to see so many new voices posting as well.

As Summi said in an earlier post, not everyone has to have something brilliant, tonally satisfactory, or original to say to be of interest, at least to me, on this list.

You seem to imply that only well-formulated posts from brilliant minds are wanted here.

Perhaps some might feel intimidated to post up here with the likes of you (this is a sincere compliment, not sarcastic)--

I found your post vague in regards to these issues--how has the list disappointed you as of late?

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

973. Karen Kelley
Re: personal
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Hi Rebecca,

I don't think you're missing anything about the personal. Sometimes people take the attitude that the personal is somehow less than the "objective," an idea I've always disagreed with, but an idea that some people hold nonetheless.

Do you write in Thai only? I have to tell you: your notes are so beautifully written that it made me want to see more of your writing. Do you write poetry, or prose, or both?

Don't feel too concerned about the sometimes clubbish attitude of the list: I know a very few of the people on the list from having met at readings, a few only through correspondence, and some just through the list.

I don't know if everyone agrees, but I think a large number of listees think as I do, that anyone who writes is very welcome to participate. I for one have enjoyed your voice immensely, and you "personal" post has left me with a strong image of your garden writing house and the questions of mothers-in-law & children, a world similar to and different from the one I as a woman/mother work in.

Karen

↑ Index

974. Karen Kelley
Personal
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Oops, sorry: my message to Rebecca Sithiwong was meant to go b/c.

↑ Index

975. Keston Sutherland boor
Sun 29 Mar 1998

> when crucial information in a culture is repressed, all of the modes of production are poisoned, including poiesis.

-when- crucial info's repressed? When HASN'T it been? If everything has always been poisoned (poetry too), the poison's slow-working into endlessness and why worry? Cannot the exhibition of crucial info poison also?

Plus: (and this not directed to you Don) it's harmless enough, the general anti-boor cry and aloof semi-urge to decorum, but this though harmless stakes little in hope of redress and does nothing to counter indecorous -argument-: neat-mannered locutions are not a cure for ignorance, not a resistance to bad ideas other than the idea of bad locution (which idea can tyrannize as any other and frequently does), and do seem so dubiously efficacious in propagating a writer's tidy moral amplitude.

↑ Index

976. Douglas Barbour
Re: Morpheal on the need to bear arms
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Gee Morpheal

I dont think we in Canada are any more (& perhaps not less) under a tyranny than you down there in the good ol' US of A, & we do have gun laws. And I do think that ideology can be as controlling as any 'dictator,' at least in terms of maintaining a 'way of life.' Are US citizens really that much more able to defend their 'freedom,' & change governments than we in Canada? I dont think so: we're both 'ruled' by certain oligarchic forces which seem to have no problem maintaining their power, whether or not the so-called citizens, now known as 'consumers' etc, own a bunch of guns (I think the statistic for Arkansas was at least 3 guns per person).

So it goes.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

YEAR: 1986
PUB TYPE: Recording
FORMAT: 1 sound cassette (ca. 47 min.) : 1 7/8 ips ; 3 7/8 x 2 1/2 in., 1/8 in tape.
NOTES: "L. Z. masque is the 24th and last section of Louis Zukofsky's monumental work "A" ... Celia spliced and arranged the text to the music"--Performance program.
Performed by literature students at UCSD: Dorothy Robert, Brad Westbrook, Bill Luoma, Becky Roberts and Chuck Cody.
Recorded at the University of California, San Diego, on April 11, 1986.
OTHER: Zukofsky, Celia Thaew.
L. Z. masque.

↑ Index

978. Don Byrd
Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
Sun 29 Mar 1998

---

david bromige wrote:

> This is a personal squawk :..... So was s/he lurking out there, passively allowing us-all to go on without his or her attempting to intercede?

David, I would squawk with you.

I was out of town for a couple of weeks and was set to nomail. I have been back now for a week. I'll admit I have found the discussions extraordinarily dreary. The "issues" have been of the kind that inevitably, perhaps necessarily, evoke _prescribed_ responses. It is not a personal fault: to engage them at all is to assume a stereotyped posture: bad-ass renegade, enforcer of righteousness, weak-kneed liberal; I am dangerously close to being a pretentious voice of community good-sense, etc.

Poetry and poetics are important precisely because they are our tools for avoiding the prescribed (already written), on the one hand, and the hopelessly (selfishly) quirky, on the other (i.e. "the private self at any public wall"; no one cares about ones private self but ones mother, and she mind be jivin you too, as B.B. King realized).

I do not find the usual forms of civility interesting or very useful for mediating the difficult work of a community, but one would hope that among poets, rudeness and boorishness might find interesting new forms. Surely, if nothing more, poetry and poetics can saves us from both graduate school jargon (as a particularly authorized form of prescription) and its opposite in self-conscious, anti-intellectual grousing that brings only the language of the popular media as an alternative.

The World Watch Institute notes that economic “growth during the seven years since 1990 exceeds that during the 10,000 years from the beginning of agriculture until 1950” and estimates that the earth cannot sustain this level of material production for more than twenty additional years. I will highly recommend web site of the World Watch Institute (http://www.worldwatch.org/)

We are a culture deeply in trouble. We have nothing in our traditions and habits that allow us even to think about this world. Poiesis is about the only human resource in such situations. These resources, like so many others, it seems to me, are being squandered.

db

****

Don Byrd (□□□□□, □□□□□□)
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
□□□□□□□□□ (work); □□□□□□□□□ (home); □□□□□□□□□ (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)

****

↑ Index

979. Don Byrd

Re: re : unsubscribe poetics

Sun 29 Mar 1998

Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:

> why would poesis get us out of anything? if not worldwatch, there are

Poiesis gets us out of nothing, but one does not have a world by stumbling into it.You imagine a world from the best data you have. I mention the World Watch data as it seems actively repressed, and when crucial information in a culture is repressed, all of the modes of production are poisoned, including poiesis.

db

--

****

Don Byrd (□□□□□, □□□□□□)
Department of English
State University of New York

Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

980. Mark Weiss
Re: Guns, gender, children
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Ron: While recent posts have made it clear that the assumption of violence being gendered is at least open to question, it's certainly still true that males carry most of the guns; if wars were included in the violence statistics men would come out ahead. I suspect that as traditional divisions of labor become obsolete, as they largely have in the US, this inequity will become less severe. Now that women have relative control over procreation and means of supporting themselves outside of marriage, for instance, women are being trained and employed in warfare more openly than they have been in the past, when they were content to engage in sobotage and the occasional use of their sexuality as a lethal weapon (Judith of Bethulia comes to mind). I fully expect that women will be enthusiastic participants at the next My Lai.

Or do you think that violence is not only gendered but genetic?

At 08:50 AM 3/29/98 -0600, you wrote:
>There is, I think, no question that this violence is gendered. My wife's >college buddy Corinne Dufka is the chief Reuters photographer in Africa >(after stints in the former Yugoslavia, Chechnya and central America). Her >photos, which periodically can be seen on the Reuters web site (Corinne was >nominated for the Pulitzer last year), all too often show armies composed of >13-year-old boys killing other 13-year-old boys. It's always boys.
>
.

↑ Index

981. linda russo
Re: Guns, gender, children
Sun 29 Mar 1998

---

hi standard s. --this is the first time we've engaged in discourse & granted I'm not sure where you're coming from/ how to "read" you -- but i find most of your comments engage in a sort of numbers game -- maybe because your responding in part to katy's demand for "more women" -- but i'd like to move from that place, from the place of questions about what "women" "should" do and with what amount of "difficulty" or how "they" write -- since I or katy or rachel can only tell you what we as particular people should/could/want/do, i'm not sure how we can help define this "cause"

-- you mention several curious things at the end of your post -- prestige, money, improving the quality of literature (?), a "crusade" -- which speak not only this "equality rap" -- but which also curiously narrativize the actions of several individuals into a unified "cause" -- & i find your narrative to be based on certain "universal" assumptions -- this one was particularly puzzling:

> It seems to me that any discussion of gender (and I'd prefer, say, > class) that does not mobilize the entire samizdat cause is a thorny > issue. Because this side of literature is in such tenuous shape, > I'm not sure it makes sense to critique it in terms of gender. Or > at least, I don't think it is sufficient. Nor is class sufficient, > etc. Wouldn't it be more productive to discuss the evolution of > women's writing in historical terms.
i agree (i think) but why? You're calling on the performance of good old anglo-feminism, i think, that is to un- or dis-cover an otherwised silenced history -- ? And I couldn't do this with out discussing the historical terms!! who's terms are they? I mean who's texts will we read to discover the historical terms by which to discuss women's writing? I say let's throw the baby out with the bathwater and go find some new babies.

and when you mention "relevance to poetic action":
> A magazine is the same price to publish.
> Setting aside gender-pay inequalities for a moment, I think what some people > are resistant to here, in this gender discussion, is its relevance to poetic > action, much less political action.

I wonder if you're not assuming that "feminist" poetry must per se "voice" a feminist agenda? or that poetry is feminist because it is gendered via content? Which is the only way, i think that poetry written by women & men could be said to "differ" -- by taking up the issue of difference & expressing patiruclarly "feminist" attitudes (i.e. if it involves itself with those discourses) -- but even that is just performing gender -- but a question that for me gets more to the heart of the matter is > I mean what is not available to women as poetic > technique that is available to a man.

well, i don't think the universal subject-position is as available, as that's "man" -- i mean it's necessary for "voicing" otherwise "erased" experiences -- but it can only express thus by co-opting a whole set of (male-constructed) assumptions (from Aristotle onward)

-- the very assumptions that provide the context for "oppression"

-- i mean i might march on washington & yell "no more coathangers" but my poems, in order to be "feminist", don't have to. my feminism, as it is engaged in my poetics, is about disengaging language from certain oppressive discourses -- one of them being that of enlightenment ideas of the subject.
>
> I'm leery of any gender conversations where one side cannot critique the very > side they happen to be on. That is, one could have any bone to pick with Katy > or Rachel or whomever, and still be more or less on their side. What can a > man say to a women about gender issues without somehow becoming oppressor.
"i agree" -- ? again, i'm not sure what you're after -- since this statement seems to cast us into a narrative which a certain history has constructed.

> I suspect that if a man picked a bone against the way a few women were > handling a few feminist issues, the ensuing argument would be not all > productive to making it easier for anyone to write a poem.
-- ? -- not sure why you would want writing poetry to be easier --

Fiction. . .
>More money and more prestige, to many > people's eyes. Not to mention the easy fact that anyone who would stop > writing and become a doctor would get more prestige, money, etc. I tend to > think class is a bigger concern here as it is prohibitive to all > forms/manners/subjects of writing. And it certainly effects who gets > published, who gets to go to grad school, who gets tenure, who publishes the > books and who they have to kind to in order to fund their crusade.
whoa. i wish charles' b. woulda said we had to worry abt. prestige or money to join the list . . . but again, i think my problem is with the way you narrativize the actions of distinct women writers into a "crusade" -- yes, katy seems to be on a crusade when she calls for more women writing & publishing, etc. well i've already made myself clear on where i differ on that point i think.

> I would be interested in hearing how being a woman affect the practice, > technique, and method of writing.
well i could tell you how it affects MY writing, but would that be answering your question?

yrs -- linda

↑ Index

982. linda russo
Re: women, i.e. rachel & katy
Sun 29 Mar 1998

---

katy et all: i'll clarify:

katy sed:
> I'm not sure what to make of your description of (presumably) the > undergraduates at U Utah.
>
> Are you trying to say that stereotyping women as such creates more women > who fit the stereotype?
the question is who is stereotyping? is it a stereotype to say basketball players are good at basketball? I'm simply saying these women work hard to be good at what their institution tells them to do -- in the way it tells them to do it. so they're an instance of that liminal space where discourse & "reality" meet, if you like.
they literally "wear" the discourse of their institution (though that metaphor may be reductive, as it tends to flatten out the complexity of what goes on, since "changing clothes" isn't that easy, & because what I call "their institution" is, well, many discourses {buy this, wear that, eat this, throw that up [I literally walked in on a bulimic in a pizza place bathroom here once -- calculate the chances of THAT happening & we'll maybe get a sense of how frequent such a coping device is, especially here in the happy gap-baby valley].
-- but this again is simplifying -- i don't mean to say that the "discourse" is the messages, the rhetoric that dictates their/our lives -- but then again, as we say, money talks . . .})
>
> Are you trying to say that feminism has led to some sort of gross > exploitation of the menstruation excuse for skipping classes?

rather, if feminism means winning for a woman the "choice" of whether or not to pursue an "education" (a popular one here is family & consumer studies -- ha!) -- then we're not working hard enough
>
> I did gather, I think clearly, that you feel that women drop out at a > higher rate from men as they climb the educational ladder because they > decide to raise families instead of continuing on-- you mean they opt to perform normative behaivor rather than risk being labeled "odd" or "maladjusted" (easy to get Freudian here -- they're simply not carrying out their prescribed narrative! & we know freud fudges on the girl-narrative anyway)

>
> But I have to admit that I don't see the connection between Rachel's views > (which I don't fully understand, I don't think) and the undergrads at U > Utah--
i hope i made this a little clearer above. I mean it's easy to look back on our lives & think we had a lot of "choices" -- where to go to school, what color to make our hair, whether to have hair in certain places [one day i heard a young woman in a burrito place telling two male peers (read: potential husbands) that she was going to have electrolisis on her upper lip & chin] -- but many of these choices are relegated, regulated -- & again i feel i'm simplifying, this is the good old Althusserian concept of ideology -- but the point is "reality" is saturated with discourse, it's textual (in the most vulgar sense that words construct it, i.e. when we see dense Maine woods & say a "o look a virgin forest" (or even an "old growth forest" for that matter) we can't see the forest for the words (old growth = $$$). but i'm starting to digress. . .

> Maybe you mean to say that Rachel doesn't want to be lumped together with these other "kinds" of women? That Rachel would like to avoid being perceived as one of these slim blond giggly people? (Though Rachel is slim and kinda blondish and has a wonderful laugh--and is very generous with her laughter)?

well that's simply not a danger! I mean she's good a playing a different game -- besides i think rachel would just like to avoid being perceived --

↑ Index

983. henry gould
Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
Sun 29 Mar 1998

On Sun, 29 Mar 1998 13:36:36 -0500 Alan Myouka Sondheim said:
>
>if the pen is mightier than the sword, the ploughshare wins overall.

right on, Alan. with the emphasis on SHARE.
- Henry G

↑ Index

984. Henry Gould
Aimee Grunberger
Sun 29 Mar 1998

I was sorry to read in today's Providence Journal that poet Aimee Grunberger had died at 44. Last I heard she was involved at Naropa, had been getting published. Back in the EARLY SEVENTIES we were in college together. She was somebody with a lot of vitality & feeling. The obit gave no cause of death. Sad to see her go. A free spirit.

Spring is here, people. Whatever will ameliorate life it involves empathy and understanding. "Love has no pride", as Bonnie Raitt was singing the other day. God is neither male nor female, but spirit. Nor is God a respecter of persons, nor is God blind to oppression in any form. God has no wrath, as Isaiah puts it. Life is brief, art better be good. What's the point in complaining about the "quality" of the posts to the list? Just try to add something interesting yourself.
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

985. Gwyn McVay
speaking of forces that silence
Sun 29 Mar 1998

From another list. The press hasn't exactly been a force of the vanguardia, but this certainly seems to have the infamous "chilling effect," and to illustrate the Peter Principle that people rise to their level of maximum incompetence in an organization...

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 29 Mar 1998 16:34:31 -0600 (CST)
From: Michael Heffernan <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: UArk Press (fwd)

The closing of the U of Arkansas Press was announced by the University's Chancellor, John A. White, in a meeting with the Press staff last Tuesday afternoon, March 24th. The Chancellor made his decision without consulting the Press Board, the University chairs, deans, or other faculty, or the Board of Trustees. His decision was based entirely on the Press's current finances, which indicate an ongoing deficit, with an annual subsidy from the University of roughly $250,000--an amount which the Chancellor will transfer to the University Library. The Press has operated under University subsidy since its inception in 1980.

The Chancellor's decision has aroused strong negative response from throughout the University community and around the state. His argument that "university presses are supposed to be self sustaining" has been widely questioned, especially by several university press directors at other universities.

Chancellor White came to the University of Arkansas from Georgia Tech last July. His elimination of the University Press was his first major act as chancellor.

The University faculty will meet later this week in an emergency session to discuss the matter, though, at the moment, there is little reason to believe that the decision can be reversed.

Michael Heffernan
Programs in Creative Writing University of Arkansas

↑ Index

986. SSSCHAEFER
Re: Guns, gender, children
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Not even sure if we need to play statistical games here to disagree with Silliman and this guns-boys nonsense. Withstanding any Chomskian critque that might be possible here, most of us in LA have seen a lot of press given to the rise of women within gangs, and the rise of gangs made entirely of women. Lately, the contentions made in several books about gang violence are that women are actually more violent in these situations: mutilations, choice of weapon. Perhaps to prove themselves in relation to men. Nonetheless, graffiti goes on. And a women gang member has just as much opportunity to spray paint the highway as a male gang member. A can of paint is the same price for either a man or a woman. A magazine is the same price to publish. Setting aside gender-pay inequalities for a moment, I think what some people are resistant to here, in this gender discussion, is its relevance to poetic action, much less political action.

How is a women's poetry different from a man's and what does a man get from reading a women's poems? Sincerely, I'd like to hear an answer. If it turns out that they want the same thing, would still be productive discussion. I don't mean "is it "vaginal?" I mean what is not available to women as poetic technique that is available to a man. What makes it more difficult for a women to publish a magazine?

As everyone here knows, this is an extremely marginalized contigent: innovative poets. At a certain point, I'm not sure that gender is contributing to much further marginalization.

Am not sure that a gay writer published in some small magazine is ever going to inspire others to be bold enough to write a poem, publish a magazine or do anything that will improve the status of literature, whether or not anyone knows he's a gay poet.

But it seems to me that what Katy is doing with Explosive magazine, what Post-Apollo Press is doing, what (the press that published Laynie Browne's Rebecca's Letters, name escaped) is doing is helpful to the cause.

Should Katy quit publishing men?

It seems to me that any discussion of gender (and I'd prefer, say, class) that does not mobilize the entire samizdat cause is a thorny issue. Because this side of literature is in such tenuous shape, I'm not sure it makes sense to critique it in terms of gender. Or at least, I don't think it is sufficient. Nor is class sufficient, etc. Wouldn't it be more productive to discuss the evolution of women's writing in historical terms.

I'm leery of any gender conversations where one side cannot critique the very side they happen to be on. That is, one could have any bone to pick with Katy or Rachel or whomever, and still be more or less on their side. What can a man say to a women about gender issues without somehow becoming oppressor.

I suspect that if a man picked a bone against the way a few women were handling a few feminist issues, the ensuing argument would be not all productive to making it easier for anyone to write a poem.

As for this issue of women stopping school and going off to raise families, no doubt many women have felt that they lost out to do this. Norma Cole didn't publish anything until her forties, I believe, so I think it is a real issue (whatever gender a dead god happens to be).

But, much more of an issue is the fact that everyone on this list could stop writing poems and write fiction. More money and more prestige, to many people's eyes. Not to mention the easy fact that anyone who would stop writing and become a doctor would get more prestige, money, etc. I tend to think class is a bigger concern here as it is prohibitive to all forms/manners/subjects of writing. And it certainly effects who gets published, who gets to go to grad school, who gets tenure, who publishes the books and who they have to kind to in order to fund their crusade.

I would be interested in hearing how being a woman affect the practice, technique, and method of writing.

Not at all against hearing how simple-minded all this might be.

I am calling for disarmament even in the shape of a thorn.

↑ Index

987. k. lederer
Re: Guns, gender, children
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Hi Standard,

I found your post really provocative and clear. And I see most of your points (although I don't see how anyone is begging the question of whether or not I should stop publishing men)[?]--

I had two responses to the things you said.

The first had to do with the assertion you make about the marginality of experimental writing.

I think you underestimate the impact that these poetries have on the larger discourse. Here at Iowa--a bastion of various forms of institutional conservatism (a reputation to uphold, a slew of ambitious people coming through at any given time, a place where awards are taken seriously etc...)--the poetries of which you speak are taken very seriously.

I have heard numerous people claim that, in fact, "experimental" poetry gets more attention here than do other poetries; that it is cooler to write experimentally; that only experimental poets are taken seriously (I don't fully agree, but don't feel that this opinion comes out of nowhere...).

I, for one, have been encouraged to put out Explosive--and in fact have received free copying from the department here.

I have held a number of benefit events for the magazine. At least half of the entire (fiction and poetry) have attended these and had fun.

I agree that experimental poetry is marginalized in a number of ways. Prizes and other types of awards are not as available to writers who participate in this discourse--

The New Yorker and other "popular magazines" that pay are for all intents and purposes closed to these forms of poetries--

Etc...

But I think that in the long run poets like Scalapino, Hejinian, Palmer, and Susan Howe will have a much larger impact on the writing that comes out of here than will, let's say, those like Wilbur or Kizer or even Hass.

The reasons for this are complex--but it seems to me that experimental writing as it exists today (complete with big presses, book prizes, teaching positions and so on...) gives young writers more permission to do certain things than some of the more conservative writers who are now in vogue.

Primary among the reasons for experimental poetry's ascendence here has to do with something intangible in the air--its greater "sexiness" perhaps.

There are a number of examples outside of Iowa as well--

APR, The Boston Review, The Denver Quarterly, The Colorado Review and on and on are more and more available to experimental poetries--

It may just be a trend. Or it may be because of what I allude to above--the growing presence of experimental work on the larger institutional scene (witness Sun & Moon, The Bobst Prize, New American Writing, New College, Brown, Santa Cruz etc...)--

Or it may be some form of "slumming it in the avant-garde"--I don't know.

So I do think that experimental poetry is visible enough and important enough to necessitate an occassional cleaning out of its "gender house"--

***

As to what you state below:

I notice that it is okay on this list to say that the topic of gender is "stupid" or "irrelavant" or "boring" (not to imply that you have said such things per se)--but it seems always okay to speak about class.

When it comes to righteousness of tone, I've seen some real doozies that regarded class on this list.

More to the point, however, how can you claim that more of us suffer from or are otherwise affected by class than by gender?

Women aren't the only creatures of this world who are shuttled into gender category that seems to be culturally backed up by sanctions of various sorts--

It seems to me, and this is an old argument, that the fact that women are divided by cultural and class lines at all times--that women have no "culture" to call their own--translates into the notion that gender is a less "important" category than class, which, after Marx, has taken on a pretty powerful aura as its own "culture".

To be gendered male is to belong to an unmarked category--or so you seem to imply in your comments below. Are you trying to say that all of us suffer from financial stress, but that only some of us suffer from stress that is gender-related?

We ALL share the problems and ramifications of class. And we ALL share the problems and ramifications of gender.

This does not mean that poetry written by women or men or anyone else is by nature any which way--just as poetry written by poor people or rich people or anyone else is not by nature any which way--

But it also, in my view, does not mean that trends--that circumstances that appear to produce tendencies based on categories--are not important topics of discussion.

Is class more relavant to the production of poetry than gender?

Is class any less of a blanket term? Is the assignment of class any less constraining in our society than the assignment of gender?

Is a discussion of poetry as it relates to class any more specific than a discussion of poetry as it relates to gender, or sex, or age?

As I said, your post made me think a lot.

Thanks,
Katy

*** >
It seems to me that any discussion of gender (and I'd prefer, say, class) that > does not mobilize the entire samizdat cause is a thorny issue. Because this > side of literature is in such tenuous shape, I'm not sure it makes sense to > critique it in terms of gender. Or at least, I don't think it is sufficient.
> Nor is class sufficient, etc. Wouldn't it be more productive to discuss the > evolution of women's writing in historical terms.
>
> I'm leery of any gender conversations where one side cannot critique the very > side they happen to be on. That is, one could have any bone to pick with Katy > or Rachel or whomever, and still be more or less on their side. What can a > man say to a women about gender issues without somehow becoming oppressor.
>
> I suspect that if a man picked a bone against the way a few women were > handling a few feminist issues, the ensuing argument would be not all > productive to making it easier for anyone to write a poem.
>
> As for this issue of women stopping school and going off to raise families, no > doubt many women have felt that they lost out to do this. Norma Cole didn't > publish anything until her forties, I believe, so I think it is a real issue > (whatever gender a dead god happens to be).
>
> But, much more of an issue is the fact that everyone on this list could stop > writing poems and write fiction. More money and more prestige, to many > people's eyes. Not to mention the easy fact that anyone who would stop > writing and become a doctor would get more prestige, money, etc. I tend to > think class is a bigger concern here as it is prohibitive to all > forms/manners/subjects of writing. And it certainly effects who gets > published, who gets to go to grad school, who gets tenure, who publishes the > books and who they have to kind to in order to fund their crusade.

>
> I would be interested in hearing how being a woman affect the practice, > technique, and method of writing.
>
> Not at all against hearing how simple-minded all this might be.
>
> I am calling for disarmament even in the shape of a thorn.
>

↑ Index

988. Nada Gordon
women/men/communication/cherry blossoms
Sun 29 Mar 1998

One thing that irks me greatly about this list is that it keeps me away from the cherry blossoms, newly opened and splendid, not to mention the jasmine and orange & purple pansies on my veranda

but my head is so full with the discussion of this past week

one reason I have not been more vocal was that I was off on a spring vacation jaunt to Kanazawa and Kyoto. Kanazawa is an old castle town on the Japan sea coast. Kyoto was so gorgeous I hallucinated gardens and paper and designs for two full days after I came back

I really have wanted to speak my piece, especially on the exchange that went on between Katy and Rachel

I agreed with both of them/neither of them

because there are two women inside of me (and I'm asking now how many other women feel this way):

one who is historicized, bleating and roaring (the one who was ignored in math class -- thanks Katy; or the one with the ruffled leotard -- hey, I still wear those; or the one hitting misogyny over the head every day and still not killing it) and one who, while not ungendered (or maybe, as Don wrote, "poeticized and sexual, but not gendered"?), is a being -- a creature of the universe -- empowered by nature (as Rachel wrote: choosing to, not take up the burden of everything constructed as history that says YOU WOMAN,YOU ARE DISENFRANCHISED)

they toggle each other, these two women

both of them acknowledge their debt and express gratitude to the pioneers and strugglers; both pioneer when they can; the historicized woman struggles; the other one moves on

if we are always bleating and roaring, we can't be creative we reify our disenfranchisement

we should bleat and roar
we are disenfranchised
but we can do so much more (Katy's second model of power)

exemplification:

I hate women's writing workshops -- I have participated in a few and even, uh, hostessed, one on this side of the Pacific. At workshops like these the common response to my writing is puzzled silence, "what are you trying to SAY with this?" or "there are some interesting images here, but I don't you think you should be more accessible" as if that constituted a response to the work. Mostly these are pieces that, by language poet standards, might be considered highly SUBJECTIVE, even THEMATIC or LYRICAL. The kind of writing that these women's groups seem to sanction, though, is reportage -- on relationships, childhood memories, life incidents, mostly, without emphasis on the formal features of the writing, i.e. the poetry. The responses tend to the "thank you for sharing" nurturing supportive variety -- even to writing that, to my torqued-out ear, isn't interesting at all. This seems to me to be Tannen's cooperative dynamic at its most nauseating.

Dodie, is your workshop any different? Or do you take issue with my description?

(an aside, but when I read Tannen's book I ws struck by the similarity of the cooperative style to Japanese communication styles -- another topic altogether)

On the other hand, I hate mixed writing workshops even more, where the women sit silent while the men light into each other with their ideas of how they would have written the poem, with their all-important opinions. Voila, the competitive dynamic.

I posted a poem called my penis this week and got a response like this from morpheal. I excerpt it here:

> Drumbeat sounds so damn violent. Sure you shouldn't change that ?
>
> I don't know....but it's too full of traditional metaphors and unclear as to what you really want to convey.....

and my response to him:

> 1) "unclearness" as to what I want to "convey" happens to be my poetics. If it were clear it would be prose.
>
> 2) language as vehicle or conveyance is an obsolete metaphor -- get over it, dude.
>
> 3) Did I solicit your opinion? You know, a big ugly fat guy came up to me after one of my readings/performances and told me how he thought I could have done it more effectively. I told him he could shove his patronizing attitude up his ass. DITTO.

Hmm, so I guess I do roar. And am boorish sometimes and violent (sorry Ms. Tannen to disprove your points). I apologize to Morpheal for that, and for quoting him here without permission. It does, though, offer an example of how some men respond to some women's public utterances. No wonder we may feel intimidated (but I guess I showed him -- gee). It also shows how the public sphere, including this list, can be sites of viciousness -- as well as (I don't remember who said it) conviviality. Or maybe that I just can't take criticism?

Ending with questions again:

1) Patriarchy is a miserable farce and we should work like hell to destroy it, but not to replace it with...arggh...matriarchy! Smothering! Bossy! So how can we all parent (the) society (of the poetics list) equitably?

2) A fascinating-to-me side topic that Elizabeth Hatmaker touched on was one of women in positions of institutional power, esp. teachers (what about mothers), and a question about alternative pedagogies. Joe Amato has written about this in great inspiring detail before, and as for me, I'm delving into Paolo Freire and Julian Edge and William Glasser for ways to balance the power relationship in the classroom, because always to be cast as authority is awful. Not sure that this is directly related to POETICS (although seems like just about anything can be, that's the beauty of it), but I'd be happy to talk backchannel with any co-fascinatees.

love and cherry blossoms (finally I can get to them)

nada

p.s. Yesterday I saw a Japanese mom teaching her adolescent daughter how to throw a baseball!

↑ Index

989. Michael McColl

The Personal in Poetics (fwd) (fwd)

Sun 29 Mar 1998

Cap-l may be baffled by what I mistakenly sent them; frankly, I'm kind of dreading to go back there now. Anyway, readers, this was for you--

----------Original message----------
V1.2b/1.8b) with BSMTP id 0839; Sun, 29 Mar 1998 22:21:11 -0500
(IBM VM SMTP V2R3) with TCP; Sun, 29 Mar 98 22:21:10 EST
29 Mar 98 22:15 EST
(8.8.5/8.6.6) with SMTP id WAA97384 for <[redacted]>; Sun, 29 Mar 1998
22:15:45 -0500
Date: Sun, 29 Mar 1998 22:15:45 -0500 (EST)
From: Dawn McCarra Bass <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: The Personal in Poetics (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 29 Mar 98 18:14:41 EST
From: Michael McColl <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: The Personal in Poetics

While the question of the personal on the list is being discussed, I thought I might ask about what seems like a contradiction to me: in the earlier discussion of depression there was quite a bit of personal disclosure, credit given to those who had made these disclosures; there was an assumption that personal experience brought with it a valuable kind of authenticity. The recent discussion is too fresh to require summing up. My question is this: why is it that when poetry is discussed the personal often seems in some way proscribed. Someone spoke of Robert Hass's "embarrassing honesty." Others have "cringed" at emotional revelations in poetry. Ted Hughe's work (which I have no interest here in defending) was criticized for employing language as a transparent medium, and for being based on the self as unitary rather than perfomative.(Now, the selves who suffered from depression did not sound performative to me, but I might be trying to grasp this on the wrong register.) But I gather that the prevailing poetics of this list would seem to rule out most of what has been termed "personal" as being unacceptable in poetry. If scores of examples to the contrary spring to everyone's mind, that's fine. My question is typed here without a great deal of planning--that's how I use email. I'm not trying to be airtight in any kind of logic. In any case, I would like to get some takes on the way the personal appears or doesn't appear in most experimental poetry, and why.

Mike McColl

↑ Index

990. morpheal
Re: Aimee Grunberger
Sun 29 Mar 1998

> I was sorry to read in today's Providence Journal that poet Aimee Grunberger had died at 44. Last I heard she was involved at Naropa, had been getting published. Back in the EARLY SEVENTIES we were in college together. She was somebody with a lot of vitality & feeling. The obit gave no cause of death. Sad to see her go. A free spirit.

What a frightening, and saddening thought.

I turned 44 today.

> Spring is here, people. Whatever will ameliorate life it involves empathy and understanding. "Love has no pride", as Bonnie Raitt was singing the other day. God is neither male nor female, but spirit. Nor is God a respecter of persons, nor is God blind to oppression in any form. God has no wrath, as Isaiah puts it. Life is brief, art better be good. What's the point in complaining about the "quality" of the posts to the list? Just try to add something interesting yourself.

"Love has no pride", is true enough, but I cannot say anything about "god". I would have to be completely agnostic about that, as I know of only the many human creations that they seek to dignify with that term. I also know that whatever that "god" that is so talked of is, it has never eased an ache of any kind, or met any need, or caused any passionate hope to be actualized, in itself and purely as a binary relation. Everything has been decisively and purely human, no matter how I look at it.

Morpheal

↑ Index

991. Henry Gould
god 44
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Happy birthday, Morpheal.

I just talk about God because it's so politically gauche on this list, where the main thing is to impress with your left critique in various ways. It's fun to slam & annoy people. Bumper cars.

Humans, as you say, do all the caring & loving - but the thought of God is like the thought of Nature & Purpose & all those aboriginal things - sometimes when nobody's around (like in the Frost poem) that's all that's left. (I'm just giving you the barest minimum.)

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

992. Keston Sutherland margin(-)alias
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Have to agree with Katy, that in fact so-called marginal poetics are hardly that, one of the surprises for a foreigner such as m/s hereabouts is the extent to which relatively innovative poetries are promulgated (Prynne's and Wilkinson's last books in the UK were both - even after their long careers and magnificent achievements - just stapled & xeroxed pamphlets, a hundred or two in each print-run). Not that this has much if anything uneconomic to do with that spectral enthusiasm re: 'transparent' vs. 'material' word-uses, what a load of baloney ultimately. But it's great here for young writers, there's a lot of contact and sharing - ever listen in on the British Poets list? If 'marginal' is, prior to obfuscating sketches of noble poetic tendencies, a real quality of verse rather than a kind of logo, I would be really interested to hear why (of course, some poetries are still strictly marginal, usually those which wouldn't consider themselves importantly characterized by this money-name).

↑ Index

993. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: my penis
Sun 29 Mar 1998

Nada Gordon wrote:
>
> My Penis
>
> is bright and triangular.
> Physical fact and shape
> a persistent drumbeat
> adjectives cling up to:
> moist, clever, leafy, spoiled --
> anagrams of my real name
> like flowers bigger than the world:
> lineaments

> of gratified desire
>
> --nada

Nada,

this sounds exactly like my vagina! It also puts into question an observation by Camille Paglia: "Sex is metaphysical for men, as it is not for women."

Unlike Morpheal, I hear you on the drumbeat
& the Blakean O'Keefe:

a dragon nod!
add no organ:
go and adorn
(and do groan)
Nada Gordon

--Dan Dragoon

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

994. Brian Clements

Re: my penis

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Daniel Zimmerman said:

> a dragon nod!
> add no organ:
> go and adorn
> (and do groan)
> Nada Gordon

not to mention:

Dang Adorno!

BC

~~~
~~~

> I dont think we in Canada are any more (& perhaps not less) under a tyranny than you down there in the good ol' US of A, & we do have gun laws. And I do think that ideology can be as controlling as any 'dictator,' at least in terms of maintaining a 'way of life.' Are US citizens really that much more able to defend their 'freedom,' & change governments than we in Canada? I dont think so: we're both 'ruled' by certain oligarchic forces which seem to have no problem maintaining their power, whether or not the so-called citizens, now known as 'consumers' etc, own a bunch of guns (I think the statistic for Arkansas was at least 3 guns per person).
>
> So it goes.

I find this somewhat humourous. I am actually in Canada. In Canada I think there are enough weapons currently in the hands of citizens to quell any usurpation of power, if one occurred, even if a significant part of Canada's military forces joined with the usurpers to make it a coup d'etat. Not all of the military would join and add to that faction some armed citizenry, the siezing of power outside of constitutional and electoral means, is most likely currently impossible.

Actually, there is tendency among American military and ex-military, including reserves and ex-reserves, to keep firepower of their own on hand. I would not want to say that on the public listserv because that might cause someone to go after someone else's stockpile. It is not so openly discussed. There is a healthy sense of paranoia of the government and of any possible abuse of power by the military, particularly among many of those who have been in it. Therefore the unofficial militia tends to always be prepared. Most of those who are miltarily trained, would, I believe, be ready to use their weapons against their own government's use of oppressive, unconstitutional, force, if that government acted sufficiently outside of the laws that govern its actions, in ways that were convincing that power had been usurped and was being maintained by illegal means such that there was no other recourse.

One of the mysteries of America, but one best kept under one's hat and not spread around too much.

regards,
Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

996. Thomas Bell
Re: The Personal in Poetics (fwd) (fwd)
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Worth a response on both lists certainly even though I do not have a great deal to add as I share your puzzlement at the reticence. I do think it is cultural and possibly it bears some relation to the gender issue. As noted by someone earlier the personal does not always reflect the general when talking about gender issues - I live in an all-female house but feel that I am much more open t o honest expression of feeling than any of them.

As a psychologist, I am tempted to say that the reticence you note has a lot to do with fear - someone who avoids touching on the p3rsonal actually reveals more about themself. However, as a poet I'm pretty sure it has to do with a distrust of our current language usage's ability to convey feeling without lapsing into hollywood bathos.

At 11:01 PM 3/29/98 EST, Michael McColl wrote:
>Cap-l may be baffled by what I mistakenly sent them; frankly, I'm kind >of dreading to go back there now. Anyway, readers, this was for you--
>
>
>----------Original message----------
>Return-Path: <[redacted]> >Received: from TEMPLEVM (NJE origin [redacted]) by VM.TEMPLE.EDU (LMail > V1.2b/1.8b) with BSMTP id 0839; Sun, 29 Mar 1998 22:21:11 -0500
>Received: from mail.virginia.edu (128.143.2.9) by VM.TEMPLE.EDU
> (IBM VM SMTP V2R3) with TCP; Sun, 29 Mar 98 22:21:10 EST
>Received: from Virginia.EDU by mail.virginia.edu id aa21611; 29 Mar 98
22:15 EST
>Received: from node6.unix.virginia.edu by mail.virginia.edu id aa21574;
> 29 Mar 98 22:15 EST
>Received: from localhost ([redacted]) by node6.unix.Virginia.EDU
> (8.8.5/8.6.6) with SMTP id WAA97384 for <[redacted]>; Sun, 29 Mar 1998
> 22:15:45 -0500
>Date: Sun, 29 Mar 1998 22:15:45 -0500 (EST)
>From: Dawn McCarra Bass <[redacted]>
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: The Personal in Poetics (fwd)
>Message-ID: <[redacted]>
>MIME-Version: 1.0
>Content-Type: TEXT/PLAIN; charset=US-ASCII >Precedence: bulk
>
>
>
>
>---------- Forwarded message ----------
>Date: Sun, 29 Mar 98 18:14:41 EST

>From: Michael McColl <[redacted]>
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: The Personal in Poetics
>
>While the question of the personal on the list is being discussed,
>I thought I might ask about what seems like a contradiction to me:
>in the earlier discussion of depression there was quite a bit of >personal disclosure, credit given to those who had made these >disclosures; there was an assumption that personal experience brought >with it a valuable kind of authenticity. The recent discussion is too >fresh to require summing up. My question is this: why is it that when >poetry is discussed the personal often seems in some way proscribed.
>Someone spoke of Robert Hass's "embarrassing honesty." Others have >"cringed" at emotional revelations in poetry. Ted Hughe's work (which >I have no interest here in defending) was criticized for employing >language as a transparent medium, and for being based on the self >as unitary rather than perfomative.(Now, the selves who suffered from >depression did not sound performative to me, but I might be trying >to grasp this on the wrong register.) But I gather that the prevailing >poetics of this list would seem to rule out most of what has been termed >"personal" as being unacceptable in poetry. If scores of examples to >the contrary spring to everyone's mind, that's fine. My question is >typed here without a great deal of planning--that's how I use email.
>
>I'm not trying to be airtight in any kind of logic. In any case, I >would like to get some takes on the way the personal appears or doesn't >appear in most experimental poetry, and why.
>
>
>
>
>Mike McColl
>
>

↑ Index

997. k. lederer
Re: Guns, gender, children, crusades
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Hi Linda--

Thanks for clarifying your earlier post--

My response was not meant to be polemical--I was just having trouble reading your tone--

(I think both you and Rachel sometimes use a kind of happy-go-lucky light tone when speaking of "serious" matters--I, of course, have no sense of humor whatsoever!)--

---

I myself wish to clarify something as well--

I don't think I'm on any kind of crusade.

And I'm not "calling for more writing and publishing by women."

Rather, I feel that if a woman (or man or whoever) WANTS to write, or WANTS to publish, then they shouldn't feel that their gender is a hinderance to this--

In other words, if someone wants to keep their writing private, that's their decision. But if they are "afraid" to show their work to others--or to write that work in the first place--because they are intimidated by a real or imagined response to their gender, then that's lame.

That's all I'm saying.

Also: as to the persistent insistence that discourse IS reality--that I'm trying to draw some sort of false distinction between the "real" and the "discursive"--

(I mean gee, I've done my homework--read Derrida, Foucualt, etc....)

I feel that there is a point at which discursivity as a descriptive term loses its edge--

In other words--when terrible events happen, I don't always feel that it's helpful to speak of discourse. The reason for this is that dicourse is by nature rhetorical--and rhetoric can be abused.

If someone is raped, for instance, I find it risky to speak in terms of larger discourses as they lead up to or away from this event (I believe in events). If discourse is foregrounded here, then I think it detracts from the ontological immediacy of what happened.

Call me a phenomenologist, but whatever....

To say that "everything is discourse" in my view is like saying that "everything is fate"--or "love"--or "truth"--or "terrific." It doesn't help me out in a jam--

---

I like your characterization of Rachel as, perhaps, a creature not wanting to be "perceived"--I like that a lot. Rachel?

Yours,
Katy

↑ Index

998. Miekal And muse margin(-)aliasalia
Mon 30 Mar 1998

now here's a term to sink our teeth into, even more innuendo than experimental, I always thought marginal meant: undiscovered, too weird to be the real thing, outside the status politic, or perhaps subtextual to the "real" discourse. but then, come to thinnkk of it, some of my best writing, is the writing in the margins....or I picture books that only have text printed in the margins, with the "page" left bare.

misha apostrophe

↑ Index

999. Beth Joselow
writing and family
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Brava to Nada Gordon for her lucid post(s) and her fiercely rooted stance. As much as I am aware of gender limits, and have worked to defeat them, I must say that family is not necessarily one of these. I have raised three kids for the past 24 years and have written and published all that while. During some of that time I was single. My model was my father, who said to me many times when he saw me writing as a child, "don't do what I have done-- don't ever find an excuse for NOT writing. You do not need a perfect place or a perfect condition." His "excuse" had been that he had to make a living for his family. Yes, it's difficult to find time, money, space to write. For all of us. ***----------------
Say It With Words

Beth Joselow
[redacted] voice: 202/[redacted]
fax: 202/[redacted]
2927 Tilden Street NW
Washington DC 20008

↑ Index

1000. sarah venart

Re: POETICS Digest - 28 Mar 1998 to 29 Mar 1998

Mon 30 Mar 1998

In repsonse to Mr. Don Byrd 's comment: "I was out of town for a couple of weeks and was set to nomail. I have been back now for a week. I'll admit I have found the discussions extraordinarily dreary. The "issues" have been of the kind that inevitably, perhaps necessarily, evoke _prescribed_ responses. It is not a personal fault: to engage them at all is to assume a stereotyped posture: bad-ass renegade, enforcer of righteousness, weak-kneed liberal; I am dangerously close to being a pretentious voice of community good-sense, etc."

1. First of all, there was nothing presecribed in last weeks responses. I resent that, because I was one of those responses. There were no sereotypes, only individuals repsonding. Maybe you group people under labels, but I try not to. Awwwwwww.... maybe you felt left out?

2. I am on the list, have spoken once (sigh....no one said much except for some snide commentsabout a pot holder in a printer, which promptly shut me down) however, after yesterday's comments about the dreariness of the last week of posts, I am likely pot-boiling, not pot holding. Comments such as these are just so depressing when I was actually enjoying what I was reading -- so many interesting stories and attitudes (the woman who built a room in her own back yard, the "woman-in-court" jury story that I felt was contentious and the responses to which were varied and assertively 'male-trying-to-be-pro-feminist-and-angry-for-not-being-praised-as-such' (this is just my take, but I am not condemining so much as commenting that I was enjoying the different view points... good thinking material all in all). What does Mr. Byrd's comment about not writing what has already been written say about anything really? Everything has been said, we only make it different by bringing anything -- criticism, poetry, art -- into our lives and illuminating it and MAKING IT NEW through our own individual take on... whatever. (I am typing madly before running off to class, so please forgive any errors, grammatical or othewise). 2. Now this sort of sweeping generalization about the posts, along with that terrible series of percentages on female vs male vilence were just... sigh... what am I doing tapping into this unpoetic... oh I don't know... agrh! (There! a 'shrill' uncontolled woman fer you!). So I am signing off from Canada now. And Mr. Byrd: Plougshares, not pens (penises?... sorry , I couldn't resist), are the answer -- sorry, but most people don't have time to sit atop a wordsworthian hill and spout poetry in third world counties -- I don't even have enought time to do it!

Sarah Venart
Concordia University
Montreal, Canada

↑ Index

1001. Michael J. Kelleher
Reading
Mon 30 Mar 1998

---

just buffalo Writers at Work Series
presents

Ted Pearson
&
Elaine Equi

Sunday, April 5 @ 2 p.m.

at Hallwall's
2495 Main St.
Buffalo

<HTML>
<B><I>just buffalo</I></B>

Writers at Work Series

presents

<P>Ted Pearson

&

Elaine Equi

<P>Sunday, April 5 @ 2 p.m.

<P>at Hallwall's

2495 Main St.

Buffalo</HTML>

----------6A8B970A293A97B82D62490F--

↑ Index

1002. SSSCHAEFER
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Katy:

Thanks for your thoughtful reply. I hope you are right that experimental writing is having the influence that you say it is. All I know is that it isn't on the shelves around here. Nor were people taking it seriously when I was getting my MFA. As for whether class is a clumsy term, certainly. In a zillion ways.

However, I do think that it effects the actual look of certain poems. And gender may as well, but aside from sort of dull historical studies that I've read, I don't see this currently. I don't "see" it and would like to have it pointed out because I like a number of women writers and often don't understand them. Part of the allure.

↑ Index

1003. SSSCHAEFER
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Linda:

Yes, if you spoke to me of how being a woman effects your poetry you would be answering my questions. As for your various successes in finding my "narratives" I can only say that while I agree whole-heartedly that I used that language, I was doing so because I think those narratives are practiced, played out. Is all. Perhaps not by anyone on this list. But I certainly wasn't trying to accuse everyone of having an agenda.

↑ Index

1004. k. lederer
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

I'm going to go out on a limb here--as per what seems like a popular request--and talk about how I think being a women has affected my actual poems--and my poetic practices.

I don't think that there is much that could in any way be called "essential" about "women's" poetry--

I think that most perceived differences are the result of cultural factors--not "natural" ones per se.

I do think, though, that a good place to start is with something that Alice Notley said in an essay Anselm Berrigan posted to this list two weeks ago. In that essay, entitled "The Poetics of Disobedience," Alice pointed out (and in a way more forceful than I can do here) that there does in fact seem to be a strange absence of pregrnant bodies and babies in poetry--

Has anyone else ever noticed this?

Again, this is primarily cultural--why is poetry about babies and pregnancy taken less seriously than poetry about kings and drinking and thinking and history?

This is just one example--but it does seem to be question that arises only when more women begin to write.

I'm not saying this is essential to women's writing--it is, rather, discursive, in my view.

So what about the discourse of poetry makes poems about babies and ruffles seem garrish or precious?

What about the discourse of poetry discourages what Tannen characterizes as women's more cooperative mode of conversation.

As in: there are a lot of ways to talk about the connection between actual poetry and the creatures who write it (male or female) without essentializing.....

I have been trained to avoid the passive in writing.
I have been trained to avoid the precious in writing.
I have been trained to appreciate a tradition comprised of, like, all men.

This doesn't mean that all of the history of poetry is "by nature" male or masculinist, but it does seem to present some historical problems such as "no babies" "no pregnancies" "no physical births"--

It also may have something to do with the injunction against passive writing.

It also may have something to do with the notion that great writers are also great "thinkers"--

That a great poet is someone like Olsen or Ginsburg or O'Hara--people who led very peripatetic lives.

The traditional model seems to privelege the wandering poet--the unattached poet--the drunken poet?

I think that being a female writer, at least for me, has forced me to call this model into question.

These sorts of narratives, in my view, are what at least I'm talking about when I claim a connection between being a woman and the writing I produce as such.

I'm not saying,"gee, I'm flush with female hormones, so I must then write, like, fluffy things" or something. I'm simply saying that there is a connection between female narratives and at least my poetry.

Yours,
Katy

↑ Index

1005. Michael McColl
Re: muse margin(-)aliasalia
Mon 30 Mar 1998

On Mon, 30 Mar 1998 09:20:56 +0000 Miekal And said: >now here's a term to sink our teeth into, even more innuendo than >experimental, I always thought marginal meant: undiscovered, too weird >to be the real thing, outside the status politic, or perhaps subtextual >to the "real" discourse. but then, come to thinnkk of it, some of my >best writing, is the writing in the margins....or I picture books that >only have text printed in the margins, with the "page" left bare.
>
>
>misha apostrophe

In art I'm a miniature abstractionist (my hands are normal size though) and when I'm reading and need to mark one of those "good points," all that really matters to me is the margin being just the right size, and the paper the right texture for the pen I'm holding. But when I cut the page out of Derrida's "Structure, Sign, and Play" to frame and show and get famous, anxiety rose, and that night my blankets were cold crackling paper. Preserved within a biography of Theodore Roethke are my best works of the year 1985 (this for the catalog essay). And my hands are warm and wet with newspaper ink, my language transparent. MM

↑ Index

1006. Keston Sutherland
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> All I know is that it isn't on the shelves around here.

but this is a limited measure, referring only (really) to money and hardly fit to determine a poetry's character; you'd not find Lyly, Akenside, Young, Campion, Thomson, Bowles, Churchill, Cibber, Waller or even Skelton or Bunting on many shelves, this is not by any significant necessity a measure of their marginality, it just depends whether you're in the know and if so which knows it is you're in. Thomson eg was the most popular and well-read poet of his age. There are qualities in verse which can be internally perfected even while socially latent; not every characteristic depends on discovery in order to matter.

not being on the shelves is, I think, too readily a keyphrase to a vaguely leftist fetishism, the default arousal of which serves principally to obscure real differences and commitments. Maybe.

↑ Index

1007. k. lederer
disobedience (fwd)
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Originally posted by Anselm Berrigan:

This is a paper/essay given recently at a British poetry conference by Alice Notley upon being asked to write on her poetics. I think it carries some threads relevant to topics discussed recently:

The Poetics of Disobedience

by Alice Notley

For a long time I've seen my job as bound up with the necessity of non-compliance with pressures, dictates, atmospheres of, variously, poetic factions, society at large, my own poetic practices as well. For a long time -- well in fact since the beginning, since I learned how to be a poet inside the more rebellious more outlawish wing of poetry; though learning itself meant a kind of obedience, so like most words the Dis words, the Dis form, cannot be worshipped either -- and that would be an obedience anyway. I've spoken in other places of the problems, too, of subjects that hadn't been broached much in poetry and how it seemed one had to disobey the past and the practices of literary males in order to talk aboutwhat was going on most literarily around one, the pregnant body, and babies for examples. There were no babies in poetry then. How could that have been? What are we leaving out now? Usually what's exactly in front of the eyes ears nose and mouth, in front of the mind, but it seems as if one must disobey everyone else in order to see at all. This is a persistent feeling in a poet but staying alert to all the ways that one is coerced into denying experience, sense and reason is a huge task. I recently completed a very long poem called Disobedience but I didn't realize that disobeying was what I was doing, what perhaps I'd always been doing until the beginning of the end of it, thought the tone throughout was one of rejection of everything I was supposed to be or to affirm, all the poetries all the groups the clothes the gangs the governments the feelings and reasons. I seem to start with my poem The Descent Of Alette these days, whatever it is that I am now seems to start there. It was for me an immense act of rebellion against dominant social forces, against the fragmented forms of modern poetry, against the way a poem was supposed to look according to both past and contemporary practice. It begins in pieces and ends whole, narrated by an I who doesn't know her name and whose name when she finds it means appendage of a male name; her important name is I. I stand with this, and with the urgency that saying I creates, a facing up to sheer presence, death and responsibility, the potential for blowing away all the gauze. In two subsequent narrative poem/proses, Close to me...& Closer (The Language of Heaven) and Desamere I felt myself pushing against ideas of reality as soley what's visible and in what shapes and colors it's said to be visible, against the idea that religion is solely an organized affair, against the pervasive idea that one must not protest what everyone else has named the Actual -- how can you fight Reality? -- against the psychology of belonging, of aiding and abetting. Desamere especially is about not wanting to belong and the process of cesing to belong to the extent that's possible. All three of thoseworks are characterized by emphatic though variable metrical patterns, in the prose as well as the poetry parts; two are very quirky as to physical presentation; all three have narratives that tend to the fabular. In a book that will soon be published, Mysteries of Small Houses, I was firstly trying to realize the first person singular as fully and nakedly as possible, saying "I" in such a way as to make myself really nervous, really blowing away the gauze and making myself too scared of life and death to care what anyone thought of me or what I was going to say. Saying I in that way I tried to trace that I's path through my past. In a more subsidiary way I decided to go against my own sense that certain styles and forms I'd participated in formerly might be used up, that autobiography was, that the personal-sounding I (as opposed to the fictional I) might be, against the rumor that there's no self, though I've never understood that word very well and how people use it now in any of the camps that use it pro or con -- I guess I partly wrote Mysteries in order to understand it better. I came to the conclusion, in the final poem of the book, that self means 'I' and also means 'poverty,' it's what one strips down to, who you are when you've stripped down. It's possible that my biggest act of disobedience has consistently, since I was an adolescent, been agianst the idea that all truth comes from books, relaly other people's books. I hate the fact that whatever I say or wrote, someone reading or listening will try to find something out of their reading I "sound like". 'You sound just like...' 'you remind me of...' 'have you read...?' I read all the time and I often believe what I read while I'm reading it, especially if it's some trashy story; intense involvement in theories as well as stories seems difficult without temporary belief, but then it burns out. I've been trying to train myself for thirty or forty years not to believe anything anyone tells me. Not believing, the, became th crux of Disobedience, which is my most recent completed book. Not believing and telling the truth as it comes up. One of the main elements in the poem is an ongoing fantasy in which the I, who is pretty much I, keeps company and converses with a man very much like the actor Robert Mitchum and that of course is not strictly believable. On the other hand it's fun, and it stands for something a sort of truth, about how we do have stories going on in our consciousness and unconsciousness all the time and about how we're always talking to some "you" mentally. I wouldn't expect you to take this book as the truth, I would expect you to go with it, given that you like to read. I find the act of reading puzzling at the moment, since in a book I've been working on since Disobedience I ask the reader to read despite the fact that I'm not really entertaining the reader or being clear in any of the traditional ways I can think of. I think books may imply a readership that simply likes to read, which may sound obvious but it's something I myself have only just thought of. But back to Disobedience. It asks the reader to read a lot of pages, about 230 A-4 pages in verse, but it's fairly easy to read and it makes a lot of jokes. I't's very feminist but men seem to enjoy it a lot, it possibly contains a rather virile approach to things riding roughshod and shooting at every little duck that seems to pop up. As I implied earlier, Disobedience didn't exactly set out to be disobedient; it set out actually to try to do the kinds of things I'd previously done in differnet poems all in the same poem, that is tell a story, interact with the so-called visible or phenomenal the despised daily, and explore the unconscious. But it got more and more pissed off as it confronted the political from an international vantage, dealt with being awoman in France, turning fifty and being apoet and thus seemingly despised or at least ignored. The title popped up in a dream, a real dream I had towards the end of writing the work, in connection with a comic poet I know: it was the title of his book in the dream and I realized later that there was probably nothing more disobedient than being a comic poet, since no one's ever sure if that's good enough, particularly the academy unless you've been dead since the 14th century or unless you've also written a lot of tragedies. I myself wouldn't want the limitation of being only one kind of poet, but I realize this comic business is something to think about. But more and more as I wrote Disobedience I discovered I couldn't go along, with the government or governments, with radicals and certianly nor conservatives or centrists, with radical poetics and certainly not with other poetics, with other women's feminisms, with any fucking thing at all; belonging to any of it was not only an infringement on my liberty but a veil over clear thinking. It's necessary to maintain a stae of disobedience against...everything. One must remain somehow, though how, open to any subject or form in principle, open to the possibility of liking, open to the possibility of using. I try to maintain no continuous restrictions in my poetics except with regard to particular works, since writing at all means making some sort of choices. But NO DOCTRINES. Rather I tend to maintain a sense that a particular form or sets of rules at a certain point might serve me for a while. Like may writers I feel ambivalentabout words, I know they don't work, I know they aren't it. I don't in the least feel that everything is language. I have a sense that there has been language from the beginning, that it isn't fundamentally an invention. These are contradictory positions but positions are just words. I don't believe that the best poems are just words, I think they're the same as reality; I tend to think reality is poetry, and that that isn't words. But words are one way to get at reality/poetry, what we're in all the time. I think words are among us and everything else, mingling, fusing with, backing off from us and everything else. Since Disobedience I've been working on this other thing which isn't as friendly as Dis is, though it isn't meant to be unfreindly. It's just hard to read, in that you have to decide to sit down and read it word by word giving each word the rhythm and weight it requires. Taht sounds like poetry but this one tends to be long in blowy sentences all down the page. I am going at several ideas at once: one is that the world is intensely telepathic, infused with the past and continual thought of all the living and all the dead. I started out with that idea adn with the idea of a Byzantince church as a sort of head, mine, full of icons and mosaics on ever expanding and shifting walls. But the church or head got bigger and bigger and more and more full of images and words until it expanded into a city. So at the moment, on page one hundred and something, I'm dealing with the idea that there are tow cities or worlds at the same time, an ideal crystalline one and the supposedly real one. Generally I'm neither all the way in one nor the other, though sometimes it seems as if I'm nowhere near the crystal one and its resonable opulence so I start beating hard at all the doors I can find in my mind. Then sometimes it seems as if the supposedly real world just isn't there or here at all though I know if I stop typing and go outside it will get me. This work is also very disobedient, in a way it picks up where Disobedience left off; but it doesn't lecture as much or shake its fist so, is less interested in the so-called real than in denying its existence in fafor of the real real. You can't fly unless you're not on the ground and this one really flies sometimes.

I think I conceive of myself as disobeying my readrship a lot. I began the new work in fact denying their existence; it seemed to me I needed most at this point to work on my own existence so I couldn't afford to cater to them if they got in the way of my finding out things. But this is a work of mine, it should be published sometime. I'm now in a predicament I can't get out of, a form I can't manage for the reader, which just keeps leading me on and leading me on. It's predicated on leaving in as much mind fuzz as possible, that is being open to all that it out there in telepathy -- not a very organizeable entity, the entity. Too wordy, too long; and I've allowed in a lot of notions from my dreams again, have allowed odd images to take on the weight of truth; and I'm stubbornly involved again in what you might call mystical conceptions, but aren't those a nono? Except in icky New Age territory, yuck. The reader likes you to tell him/her what he/she already knows in a fmailiar form whether in mainstreamese or avant-gardese, but then there is the individual reader who is often not like that at all, who prefers poems to talking about them and has strange individual experiences with them. That's a very scary idea. It's possible that the reader, or maybe the ideal reader, is a very disobedient person a head/church/city entity her/himself full of soring icons and the words of all the living and all the dead, who sees and listens to it all and never lets on that there's all this beautiful almost undifferentiation inside, everything equal and almost undemarcated in the light of fundamental justice. And poker-faced puts up with the outer forms. As I do a lot of the time but not so much when I'm writing.

↑ Index

1008. Keston Sutherland
critters
Mon 30 Mar 1998

---

maybe an interesting thread - what -are- the poems about babies, or in which babies figure cameo-wise? They do always seem to be pretty strategic, occasions for abstruser musings as is Coleridge's in 'Frost at Midnight'.. Larkin crapped out a fairly dour bit re: Kingsley Amis' new bairn. Actually Prynne has a few concerns swimming about in his new _For The Monogram_ (BUY), there's a line (if I recall) something like:

Lactation adds up to just this, sorted fashion cribs.

also in _Her Weasels Wild Returning_ (nicely mentioned in William Fuller's new book), "saving the infant a place ahead in her mission grab to repair both."

Doug Oliver's _The Infant and the Pearl_? _Pearl_? There's the narrative in book nine I think it is, in The Prelude, where the young Frenchman dashes into an outlawed pregnancy and attempts to rear the babe as a hermit, a nice scene where he lays his cheek on the mother's breast as she feeds the baby with the other (breast). But this is male-eyed. Aaron the evil moor plus his near-murdered nipper in _Titus Andronicus_. Pregnant women and women with babies are made variously festive in Sade's _Juliette_. Lynch's _Eraserhead_. Mary. And what about nurses? Nannies? There's a strong and fascinating tradition of nurse intervention in drama - Romeo and Juliet, Euripides' _Medea_ and _Hippolytus_, Racine's _Phedre_ (Seneca's Phaedrus), Mary Poppins, k

↑ Index

1009. morpheal
Re: disobedience (fwd)
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> The Poetics of Disobedience
> by Alice Notley
>
> For a long time I've seen my job as bound up with the necessity of non-compliance with pressures, dictates, atmospheres of, variously, poetic factions, society at large, my own poetic practices as well.

I think there is that element in it, to some amount having some effects on all poets. Some of the strands of thought, on that same subject, that I have come upon, run roughly as follows.....

Poetry, by its very nature, is always considered to be disobedient, by some. It is often considered, by some, to be irresponsible use of language. Prose, on the other hand, is deemed more business-like in its demands and its declarations.

Prose is considered less emotional, even when it makes statements about emotions. Poetry is considered more emotional, even when it is not about emotions. This might be a false perception, but it is a common perception as to the prosaic and the poetic.

Emotions are not business-like, not conducive to calculative precision, and that some believe that all emotions ought to be eradicated, tends to transfer the same attitude toward poetics. Particularly towards romantic poetics, as opposed to political or philosophical poetics.

Prose tends to follow more clearly defined and definable grammatical and syntactical regulations much more closely. At least it appears to do so, to many, sometimes overly simplistic, viewpoints. The regulations defining what constitutes a proper sentence of prose are relatively easy to communicate compared to the very complicated requirements as to a line of good poetry.

Prose viewed as a technical, applied, science, and poetry as an art.

Prose tends to be viewed, by some loud voices, as more appropriately pragmatic, whereas poetry is then denied that fundamental characteristic of the word used as short declarative sentence of command and acknowledgement of command.

Prose is, to some ways of thinking, more apparently technical, and claims a precision of meaning that it often lacks. Poetry is denied a greater precision of meaning that it often actually has. If prose is a work horse, then poetry is a wild stallion or a wild mare.

Prose is viewed as integrative and poetry as dis-integrative. Some tend therefore to associate prose with sanity and poetry with insanity.

Prose can be viewed as totalistic and closed, whereas poetry could be viewed as being more anarchic and open. Some see that as dis-favourable.

Prose more often follows the line, fills the space from clearly prescribed margin to clearly prescribed margin. Poetry breaks up the space more randomly, and declares itself opposed to such clearly prescribed margins. Poetry often defies punctuation.

Some believe that prose tends to be more explicit and so vouchsafes more carefulness in saying, and occults certain ideas that they feel ought never to be spoken of. Poetry, on the other hand, is believed to tend to reveal by means of implication, allusion, and indirectly. While in fact prose might do similarly, and often does, the false perception as to the Luciferian nature of poetry as opposed to prose is a strata in the tradition.

More prose tends to maintain the most common usage, for the more common purposes, and therefore is often more conservative. Poetry tends to push a word to the limits of its meaning, and stretch the boundaries of what is sayable. Prose often imposes silence, whereas poetry often gives voice.

I am sure there are more and similar observations of various attitudes. Some held as cherished beliefs only by a very few, and some more widely held to as being true, even if many such are purely subjective prejudices....

Morpheal

↑ Index

1010. Michael McColl

Re: Guns, gender, children

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Katy--Belle Waring in Dark Blonde has very explicitly physical stuff about birth--and doctors who fuck up in a shocking way. It's in a kind of documentary mode, though, and as poetry would probably be rejected by most people on this list as too traditional. I think the appearance of certain subject matter tends to correlate with a use of language seen as not always problematic in the way it represents the world. Yet had her language been opaque, references cryptic, she oculd not have accomplished a very powerful occupation and domination of cultural space formerly denied to her. I understand the ex- tensive and persuasive rationale(s) for various experimental poetries; I appreciate the rationales and I write the poetry. But I've sometimes disagree with what has seemed like a strict proscription of content understandable in the usual way--as if to say that experimental poetry is the only poetry that has validity, that other uses of language in poetry are inevitably naive and retrograde. Which has seemed odd to me since in discussions of this sort various discourses and language games are used as though they work, at least provisionally or on an ad hoc basis---the way more traditional poetry is also written.

MM

↑ Index

1011. Gabriel Gudding

The personal -- A Hx

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Responding to McColl's query about the personal in contemporary poetics. There are some, like, pretty clear historical reasons why the personal is no longer in vogue. There are also many more very unclear but slightly discernible and sometimes comprehensible reasons for this -- but as to whether they can be quickly/easily articulated here is another Q. I'll give it a shot.

The guy who "started" the first creative writing programs back in the 1920s, Hughes Mearns, insisted that creative writing -- and poetry especially -- was the best means of, as he put it, "transmitting experience" from individual to individual. (See his two books of, I think 1925 and 1929, _Creative Youth_ and _Creative Power_). His assumption (which was basically a misprision of Deweyean social theory) was that we are each an isolato. Certain cultural trends in America toward the end of the 19C had seriously impacted and drasticallly altered the ideas Americans had held about language and civic life, and these, coupled with some poor readig of Dewey, led Mearns to hold some very weird and very interestig ideas. And for reasons that aren't really clear, Mearns gave _poetry_ -- much moreso than prose -- the dubious honor of carrying this cross of the personal (the historical reasons for this are so numerous and many-sided that it, like, makes my head spin). Anyway, the point is that since Mearns (whose progressivist influence on national public education was in many ways as strong as, well, Horace Mann's), the personal in poetry has taken flak for becoming on the one hand Solipsistic (see everybody here from dear old Fred Chappell to, I don't know, the mandarin rantings of Derek Walcott) and on the other Passe (been there, done that, time to move on, let's let Berryman be Berryman and Berrigan be Berrigan -- and the, like, tropes of personal sincerity are exhausted anyway etc etc). So, in the eyes of some, then, "personal," as a historical cultural and poetic contruct has, like, had its day.

If you want a nice gloss on Mearns' role in the institutional Hx of "creative writing" in America, read the by now increasingly well-known book by D.G. Myers, _The Elephants Teach: Creative Writing Since 1880_ (Prentice Hall, 1996). Myers, you may know, is lately a student of Gerald Graff at Northwestern. The book is a drastically pared down version of his diss. Though providing an intellectual history of the creative writing movement is not Myers' explicit intent, he does give a rather left-handed and implicit history of the idea of "personal experience" and American poetics.

What there is no doubt about, in tersm of the institutional history, is that the "transfer of experience" (the personalism) was affiliated more closely with poetry than with prose. Certainly the rise of prose poetry, when viewed in this light, looks, from a historian's pt of view, REALLY interesting.

So there are some pretty strong historical (cultural and institutional) reasons for it. One upshot we're all familiar with is that Poetry is more and more being considered -- at least by the kinds of poets who subscribe to a list like this -- as (after IA Richards) phatic language. That is to say, like, Empty. Hence maybe here the rise of prose poetry: the attempt to be "realer," less, like, solipsistic etc etc. Dashed off, sorry.

Gabriel

↑ Index

1012. R. Gancie

Ron and Don

Mon 30 Mar 1998

To have a better sense of Don Byrd's concerns people on the list should read his book, The Poetics of the Common Knowledge. I have recently finished it. The intellectual history he draws on is vast including modernist literature, philosophy, science and technology, and more recent and radical departures such as autopoesis and recursive systems. Its not only an enormously literate and erudite work but for this long time anchorite/student of Western intellectual history it is a tight discourse which draws on fundamental texts and proposes a program of poetics and aesthetics that should be more widely considered and debated.--Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

1013. s. kaipa

Query

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Anyone out there have an address or email for Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge or Arthur Sze?

Address preferred, but anything is appreciated.

Thanks,

Summi

↑ Index

1014. Rachel Levitsky
[Fwd: dsanet: No comment (fwd)]
Mon 30 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

This message is from: Jim Hurd <[redacted]>

By VERENA DOBNIK
.c The Associated Press

NEW YORK (March 24) - You've come a long way, comrade.

A stylish new edition of ''The Communist Manifesto'' aims to make Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels the latest in radical chic.

The slender volume is being republished as a glossy, $13 hardcover for release in New York and London on May Day. The fashionable department store Barneys is thinking about it for a window display.

The publisher says the 1848 work speaks to a sense on Wall Street that the party can't go on forever.

''There's a sense of anxiety tied to the millennium. People don't believe things will just carry on, with markets rising forever,'' says Colin Robinson, head of Verso publishers, which is printing 20,000 copies on the 150th anniversary of the manifesto. ''Marx's description of a capitalist system prone to shocks and convulsions captures that mood.''

The revolutionary book, now with a rippling red-flag cover, has become fodder for capitalist fantasy:

With a handle attached, the book could make a snazzy accessory to a designer dress, says Simon Doonen, creative director of Barneys on Madison Avenue. One could sashay toward the new millennium, the 19th-century words of Marx and Engels dangling at one's side.

Doonan is toying with the idea of featuring the ''Manifesto'' - along with red lipsticks - in the window as ''conceptual art.'' His assistants are looking for the right lipstick - preferably with a Russian-sounding name.

With communism gasping around the world, ''it's OK to look at the book as camp,'' he says.

Around Wall Street, the very capital of capitalism, the Borders bookstore at the World Trade Center plans to give the book center display in the front of the store. Barnes & Noble will likewise market the ''Manifesto'' at its 483 superstores as ''a storefront feature.''

''Enough time has passed since the fall of the Iron Curtain so Marxism can again be seen as a utopian philosophy,'' says John Kulka, a Barnes & Noble merchandise manager.

The new edition was designed by two trendy, Soviet-born, New York artists known as Komar and Melamid. With crimson end pages and a ribbon marker of the same color, ''it's elegant enough to grace a coffee table,'' Robinson says.

That's not quite what its authors had in mind.

Written during the Industrial Revolution, the ''Manifesto'' called the working class to arms against the bourgeoisie.

The ''Manifesto'' opens with the famous words, ''A spectre is haunting Europe - the spectre of Communism.'' It predicted that a catastrophic cycle of booms and busts would befall the new free-market system.

The 23-page pamphlet was ''the most influential single piece of political writing since the French Revolution,'' historian Eric Hobsbawm, the intellectual guru of Britain's socialists, writes in the introduction to the new, 96-page edition.

The Communist Party U.S.A., which is based in New York and claims 25,000 members, could use a little marketing.

''Cool,'' spokeswoman Terrie Albano says. ''It wasn't too long ago when everyone was saying communism was dead. Here it is, resurrected.''

by spot.Colorado.EDU (8.8.5/8.8.4/CNS-4.1p) with SMTP
id OAA01777; Tue, 24 Mar 1998 14:40:46 -0700 (MST)
Date: Tue, 24 Mar 1998 14:40:46 -0700 (MST)
From: ANDERSON DAVID <[redacted]>
To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted]
Subject: dsanet: No comment (fwd)

This message is from: Jim Hurd <[redacted]>

By VERENA DOBNIK
.c The Associated Press

NEW YORK (March 24) - You've come a long way, comrade.

A stylish new edition of ''The Communist Manifesto'' aims to make Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels the latest in radical chic.

The slender volume is being republished as a glossy, $13 hardcover for release in New York and London on May Day. The fashionable department store Barneys is thinking about it for a window display.

The publisher says the 1848 work speaks to a sense on Wall Street that the party can't go on forever.

''There's a sense of anxiety tied to the millennium. People don't believe things will just carry on, with markets rising forever,'' says Colin Robinson, head of Verso publishers, which is printing 20,000 copies on the 150th anniversary of the manifesto. ''Marx's description of a capitalist system prone to shocks and convulsions captures that mood.''

The revolutionary book, now with a rippling red-flag cover, has become fodder for capitalist fantasy:

With a handle attached, the book could make a snazzy accessory to a designer dress, says Simon Doonen, creative director of Barneys on Madison Avenue. One could sashay toward the new millennium, the 19th-century words of Marx and Engels dangling at one's side.

Doonan is toying with the idea of featuring the ''Manifesto'' - along with red lipsticks - in the window as ''conceptual art.'' His assistants are looking for the right lipstick - preferably with a Russian-sounding name.

With communism gasping around the world, ''it's OK to look at the book as camp,'' he says.

Around Wall Street, the very capital of capitalism, the Borders bookstore at the World Trade Center plans to give the book center display in the front of the store. Barnes & Noble will likewise market the ''Manifesto'' at its 483 superstores as ''a storefront feature.''

''Enough time has passed since the fall of the Iron Curtain so Marxism can again be seen as a utopian philosophy,'' says John Kulka, a Barnes & Noble merchandise manager.

The new edition was designed by two trendy, Soviet-born, New York artists known as Komar and Melamid. With crimson end pages and a ribbon marker of the same color, ''it's elegant enough to grace a coffee table,'' Robinson says.

That's not quite what its authors had in mind.

Written during the Industrial Revolution, the ''Manifesto'' called the working class to arms against the bourgeoisie.

The ''Manifesto'' opens with the famous words, ''A spectre is haunting Europe - the spectre of Communism.'' It predicted that a catastrophic cycle of booms and busts would befall the new free-market system.

The 23-page pamphlet was ''the most influential single piece of political writing since the French Revolution,'' historian Eric Hobsbawm, the intellectual guru of Britain's socialists, writes in the introduction to the new, 96-page edition.

The Communist Party U.S.A., which is based in New York and claims 25,000 members, could use a little marketing.

''Cool,'' spokeswoman Terrie Albano says. ''It wasn't too long ago when everyone was saying communism was dead. Here it is, resurrected.''

----------6CF76C7D716B--

↑ Index

1015. Cadaly
Women's Writing Workshop
Mon 30 Mar 1998

I would like more information on the women's writing workshop(s) mentioned:

How is the process different from another workshop?

Does the "background" subject matter of a writing workshop make a difference? The sex of the participants? The stated "topic" or focus?

How is the writing different from another workshop or from feminist writing? Is a women's writing workshop different from a feminist writing workshop?

Catherine Daly
[redacted]

Writing this just made me remember: I took a lot of "lessons" as a kid: they were all single sex. I was in a co-ed school. Just struck me odd: all the sports teams except for cross country were single sex, too, so I guess it's pretty common, co-ed classes, single sex extracirricular activities.

↑ Index

1016. SSSCHAEFER
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Keston:

"not being on the shelves" is no less a key phrase than someone saying that at "my" m.f.a. program people are very interested in experimental poetry. I'm surprised to find that there is all this resistance to the notion that outside elite academies, poetry is marginalized, and experimental poetry more so. Is it startling to anyone that here in LA we have these readings sponsored by various national poetry organizations where people like Stephen Dunn are put out as the great poets because "they have a vision of the middle class" as was recently said at a reading here. As always, I'm a little put off by the pedantic tone on this list.

Katy: No offense, but no one is askig you or me to make an essentialist argument about what is women's poetry.

I think I find it troubling that on this list people tend to try to posture themselves and direct there arguments in pedagogical terms. Which words like "discursive" can be. I'd like to believe that this list was a space where communication could take place with an understanding that it is taking place in a zone or similiar "interpretative community."

Very interesting these remark on maternity and the "training" that you recieved.

Back to the other note: I still think shelf space counts. When you see people outside the academy looking for a language they can think it and they go to the store and Scalapino is not on the shelf or is buried under 27 volumes of Robert Hass, this has an effect.

↑ Index

1017. SSSCHAEFER

Re: Guns, gender, children

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Katy:

Did I say thanks for sharing your thoughts on this thread and thanks for posting the artical? I meant to.

↑ Index

1018. dbkk

Re: women/men/communication/cherry blossoms

Mon 30 Mar 1998

> Date: Mon, 30 Mar 1998 13:01:37 +0900
> From: Nada Gordon <[redacted]>
> Subject: women/men/communication/cherry blossoms
>
> I hate women's writing workshops -- I have participated in a few and even, uh, hostessed, one on this side of the Pacific. At workshops like these the common response to my writing is puzzled silence, "what are you trying > *to SAY with this?" or "there are some interesting images here, but I don't you think you should be more accessible" as if that constituted a response to the work. Mostly these are pieces that, by language poet standards, might be considered highly SUBJECTIVE, even THEMATIC or LYRICAL. The kind of writing that these women's groups seem to sanction, though, is reportage -- on relationships, childhood memories, life incidents, mostly, without emphasis on the formal features of the writing, i.e. the poetry. The responses tend to the "thank you for sharing" nurturing supportive variety -- even to writing that, to my torqued-out ear, isn't interesting at all. This seems to me to be Tannen's cooperative dynamic at its most nauseating.*

>
> Dodie, is your workshop any different? Or do you take issue with my description?

I could say lots of things here, Nada, but, first of all, my workshop isn't a women's workshop. It's mixed, but basically queer, meaning lots of gay men and women of a variety of pursuasions, though most of the women I know in their 20s claim some sort of bisexuality, if only psychological, like one "straight" woman said to me last week, "I used to have such a crush on Jocelyn Saidenberg." Straight guys have been in the group and worked out very well, but I always interview them first, my main question being, "Can you deal with overt sexual descriptions by gay men and women?" Any straight guy that's willing to sit through descriptions of butt-fucking is usually going to be okay. Many people have taken the workshop because they wanted to work on sex writing in a serious way, writing that they wouldn't feel comfortable taking to a college workshop. Though at the moment, the group is quite tame in that area. I haven't had much of a problem with males dominating the group and I've had very little difficulty creating a warm, sharing, but very productive space with serious feedback, not just compliments. The writing varies from "experimental" to conventional and it's officially a prose workshop. I'm more rigid about it being a prose workshop these days because once I let three young poets in who refused to write prose the whole time they were there and gave off unpleasant vibes that the prose writers were somehow inferior and the whole experience didn't meet their high (read "immature") intellectual standards. That workshop I hated and I haven't allowed any poets in unless they commit to writing prose. Though, actually, one of my people now is bringing in some interesting poetry at times. I try to be non-authoritarian and create a non-competitive environment and everybody gets lots of close readings of their work and people's work improves--like some conceptual "I get it" happens and their approach to language changes. Kevin K. takes the workshop as a student, bringing his own work in each week to be critiqued--he's such an excellent editor, and his giving feedback as another student, not a "teacher," is wonderful.

As far as women's workshops go, I don't see why there couldn't be a good one if you had women coming from the same place. I haven't been in a women's workshop since the early 80s, and I had not very good experiences in them. When I first came here I got involved in the Women's Writer's Guild, and the writing responses there were dopey as you describe, but many of the women were quite well off, living in Marin and the East Bay and I'd just moved to San Francisco from Chicago and I was amazed at all these hot tubs I was sitting around naked in discussing feminism and writing, I thought it was just great how all these women writers have hot tubs in their homes. Sadly, I now know no one with a hot tub. The hot tubs are the main thing I miss about no longer being a feminist.

I also took Kathleen Fraser's Feminist Poetics class and women's writing workshop at SF State and those were very useful, rigorous, enlightening. When the class ended Kathleen urged the women from the women's workshop to continue a group on their own, which happened. At that point I was still writing poetry and clearly there was a struggle going on between what I wanted to do in writing and formal issues in poetry. I hadn't yet figured out you could write prose without writing short stories. But, as soon as the women's workshop no longer had Kathleen as a facilitator, it turned vicious in its hierarchical reorganization, with the wanna-be language poets (none of which are on the scene any more) at the top, and then the tolerated in-betweens, and me at the bottom. The queen of the workshop told me that I was writing about sex and violence and therefore should go into therapy. I remember yelling back that I wasn't writing about sex and violence. I had sex on page two and violence on page 4--that's not sex and violence! Remember, this was the early 80s, it wasn't yet cool to write about sex and violence and anything narrative was the scum of the earth.

I was moved when Johanna Drucker read at Small Press Traffic a couple of weeks ago and she talked about her interest in narrative when she was growing up, how she'd always imagined herself writing huge narrative books. Then she fell in with the Bay Area scene and was told that that wasn't valid, so she developed other strategies in writing. She spoke of how she was still struggling with this "self-censorship." I often wonder the same things about my own work.

I see so much competiveness and turf guarding among women writers, it can be very depressing. I think some of the people who are railing about inequalities with men should think about being nicer to the women they know. And this isn't aimed at you, Gordon, I have no idea how you are to the women you know.

Dodie

↑ Index

1019. Henry Gould
CAPA
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Wanted to mention that the CAPA archive produced by Wendy Battin has upgraded the online collected poems of Edwin Honig, which I announced here last year sometime. It's still under construction but more accessible now. Thanks always to Wendy.

at: http://capa.conncoll.edu

- H. Gould

↑ Index

1020. Mark Weiss
Re: Guns, gender, children
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Hard to know what you're talking about without a sample.

At 12:05 PM 3/30/98 EST, you wrote:
>Katy--Belle Waring in Dark Blonde has very explicitly physical >stuff about birth--and doctors who fuck up in a shocking way.
>It's in a kind of documentary mode, though, and as poetry would >probably be rejected by most people on this list as too traditional.
>I think the appearance of certain subject matter tends to correlate >with a use of language seen as not always problematic in the way >it represents the world. Yet had her language been opaque, references >cryptic, she oculd not have accomplished a very powerful occupation and >domination of cultural space formerly denied to her. I understand the ex>tensive and persuasive rationale(s) for various experimental poetries; I >appreciate the rationales and I write the poetry. But I've sometimes
>
>disagree with what has seemed like a strict proscription of content >understandable in the usual way--as if to say that experimental poetry >is the only poetry that has validity, that other uses of language >in poetry are inevitably naive and retrograde. Which has seemed odd to >me since in discussions of this sort various discourses and language >games are used as though they work, at least provisionally or on an >ad hoc basis---the way more traditional poetry is also written.
>
>MM
>
>

↑ Index

1021. Rachel Levitsky

Re: what does Jonesboro have to do with women & poetry & Poetics list

Mon 30 Mar 1998

I am just getting through reading about six weeks of posts, two days more to go before I'm clear. I am gearing up for a belated contribution on the gender thing. Rachel and Katy--you rock.

I was just so glad to read this with all the knee jerk press analysis and no one talking about repression and denial (of the very goods marketed/flaunted all in front of your face). Though perhaps there is some hope via resisitance. Friend Akilah Oliver says that since the activism/press exposure of Nike's repression of labor, Nike sales are down by half.

--Rachel Democracy

Christina Fairbank Chirot wrote:
>
> Having written and published a few pieces drawn from real life > experiences of shootings and killings--i.e. happened in my life to people > I knew as well as to me-- > it is not bemusing to regard the killings--they are part of a long > tradition in American life (and art, to be sure)-- > it's easy to say it's just guns--but the hells many endure living > in the usa go beyond simple violence--(remember: Thoreau spoke of "lives > of quiet desperation" lived in silence--violence is what happens when > silence > becomes too much to endure, when one does know how to speak, or if anyone > will listen--)
> one of the great moralists of our times, one William S. Burroughs, > has an exceptional passage in Maked Lunch--an out pouring of outrage at
> the > spirit of evil which haunts the land-- > millions were killed in this country without guns--drugs, alcohol, > toxic waste dumps, no access to health care, locked up in reservations, > beaten and starved, tortured, lynched, malnutrition, chemical and nuclear > experiments, medical and biological experiments-- > many of my ancestors were killed by a simple method: they were > given disease infected blankets when shipped off their homelands by the us > govt.
> there are many interesting studies tracing the origins of this > violence to Puritanism--you can find the flip side of this in some of Jim > Thompson's novels-- > but the desire for purification, and to purge the world of > impurities-- > to know grace (and when you can't be rewarded with riches--why not > with power--over another's life--)-- > Remember Travis Bickle in Taxi Driver: "all my life I've known > loneliness--in cars, on sidewlaks--in bars--loneliness has followed me > everywhere--I'm God's lonely man--"

> . . ."Someday a real rain will come . . . "
> . . ."You talkin' to me?--Huh?--Then who the f are you talkin
> to?"
> When it's not such a short step from a desire to overcome > intolerable life, or solitude, or silence to being God's lonely man-- > is not this the mission of the righteous?
> "Huh?"
> --dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

1022. Keston Sutherland
Re: margerine
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Of course some poetries get good journalism and of course it's usually because they give good journalism, are middle-class (though everything here is) etc, lots of good stuff is not well known (believe me - the academies are no exception, or this one isn't anyhow), BUT: I am trying to look a little more closely at the semiologic range of 'marginal', the politics of literary identity that it incites or that it can potentially incite, the kinds of decision made regarding its values as a description and the implied values of the work so described, the extent to which the term and what it designates have already been appropriated and fetishized commercially, etc. It's not pedantic to attempt thoroughness, it's myopic to arrest one's judgement of a situation with whichever explanation seems most ready to glorify one's status.

k

↑ Index

1023. k. lederer
Re: Stadard S, "truth," Dodie's wkshps
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Hi Standard,

Points well-taken.

Just to clarify something: I don't mean to say "my" mfa program is any sort of touchstone per se--

It just happens to be the place from which I'm coming from right now.

I am, admittedly, pretty academic in my concerns. My father and sister both hold advanced degrees in linguistics and I have led an extremely academic life thus far (which I think will change when I leave this place...).

___

As per the issue of essentialism. I don't think that anyone here is necessarily demanding an essentialist reading of "women's poetry." But I do think that the line between essentialist and historical readings of any "sort" of poetry is all too often blurred.

The following quote speaks well to this concern:

A truth, it must be admitted, is not easy to recognize, once it has become accepted. Not that there are established truths, but they then become so easily confused with the reality that surrounds them that no other artifice has yet been found to distinguish them from it than to mark them with the sign of the spirit, to pay them homage, to regard them as coming from another world.

(Lacan, Ecrits, "The Freudian Thing," p. 120, Norton 1977)--

As per the character of Dodie's workshops. I took one of her workshops oh... maybe three years ago.

I thought it was really terrific. As she says, there was a lot of variety of all sorts in my particular group--different sexualities, genders, ideas, goals etc...

I remember being completely refreshed by it as it was pretty much the first time I had actually encountered "intellectuals" outside of an academic environment.

The students and the writing were totally impressive and interesting to me.

One friend (a poet, I suppose) brought in sound collages, which were fun to hear. Another woman was working on a very strange novel. I believe (correct me if I remember incorrectly Dodie) that her protagonist was supposed to be ungendered or somehow ambiguous?

I remember that her work challenged narrative in a really provocative way.

One guy was writing about a kind of nutty gay man who moved through an equally nutty art world--paintings were stolen, blackmail was attempted--all of it happened within a highly sexualized milieu.

Kevin K was working on a wonderfully sharp piece--

It treated the AIDS epeidemic with a light yet maccabre sort of humor--

As in: it portrayed its characters as just getting on with things, in spite of but also with a deep regard for the dead who still haunted the SF landscape of the period depicted....

And there was another woman (a regular, I believe) who was writing these strange pieces about a movie critic? (Dodie?)--she was a journalist herself in "real" life.....

Anyway--just taking this opportunity to refresh my memory of it--

I thought it was a really productive workshop--and I didn't feel any tension or any sense of competition or disapproval on anyone's part...

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

1024. charles alexander no guns
Mon 30 Mar 1998

given the messages, part of whose subject is 'guns' lately, I thought I'd forward the following, which came to me from a Waldorf school my daughter attends.

While not necessarily, or usually, supportive of such grand gestures, I have to admit that I'd be amazed if such a thing actually happened.

charles

ONE DAY IN PEACE, JANUARY 1, 2000. This is a 24-hour concept where no guns are fired anywhere on earth.. including on television. What if, for 24 hours, whosoever happens to be at war on December 31st, 1999, agrees that for one whole day no guns would be fired? The silence would be golden.

And what if the television programmers of the world agreed to not air any programming with a violent content? (It would probably be easier to get warring nations to stop firing than it would be to get the world's television programmers to not air violent programming.)

At present, this ONE DAY IN PEACE concept is beginning to get further circulation. On April 6, 1997, there were 1000 days until January 1, 2000.

This is a thought-wave campaign. Which is to say, the more people who grasp this thought, the more it comes into reality..

One Day In Peace, January 1, 2000..pass it on..expect a miracle.

↑ Index

1025. Jordan Davis bay-bee
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Keston

you must know Williams's White Mule. the baby is terrific, it's one of the great things to read I want chucked in my grave.

Here is a poem I wrote a long time ago about a baby:

HAPPY BABY

In the park in a carriage
Dressed like (a little) your mother
The sun speaks to you
And you talk back
So fast the sun says
"I'm sorry?" your sister a concerto
Scowls over you
Smiling
Your head leaning this Way and that and thank you for sending at the motel partial opportunity it is lovely looking I will read it as soon as I get some food in me. I had my students write for a solid half hour today and they did rebel, god's wounds!

Also in the mail today the Alex Smith Jr. book Bill Luoma mentioned. It is lovely and sad just what I needed today when it is so hot out.

I wonder what anybody wants.

Hey two of my students are reading at Town Hall in this poet laureate project of read your favorite poem. So have mercy on the project, please.

J (happy to be superceded by many Ks)

↑ Index

1026. MAYHEW
iceberg lettuce
Mon 30 Mar 1998

I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept: "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age." I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

1027. henry g
Re: Stadard S, "truth," Dodie's wkshps
Mon 30 Mar 1998

On Mon, 30 Mar 1998 13:55:40 -0600 k. lederer said:
>
>The following quote speaks well to this concern:
>
>A truth, it must be admitted, is not easy to recognize, once it has become >accepted. Not that there are established truths, but they then become so >easily confused with the reality that surrounds them that no other >artifice has yet been found to distinguish them from it than to mark them >with the sign of the spirit, to pay them homage, to regard them as coming >from another world.
>
>(Lacan, Ecrits, "The Freudian Thing," p. 120, Norton 1977)--
>

The other side of the coin, though, comes from Wittgenstein, who wrote that the truth can only be known by standing outside of the world. Lacan, I guess, is speaking as a nominalist. Wittgenstein (if he admits the possibility of such an "outside" perspective), as a realist. This outsider position relates to the "status" of marginality. The broken off splinter reveals the macrocosm. Synecdoche. -Henry Gould

↑ Index

1028. Miekal And prunus
Mon 30 Mar 1998

michael corbin wrote:

> the cherry blossom is a complicated bloom. with all its social hopes at the tidal basin. tourists and a western rapproachment. global economy. a tea ceremony of geo-political importance in the margins of 'yen' and 'dollar'.
>
> the cherry blossoms is bluumin'.
>
> *i love this spring. but i prefer that bullshit daffodil. cherry blossoms be damned. photosynthesis and all that civic-life. fake, it* in the hardscrabble of the corncow frontier, the cherry trees of dreamtime are just budding, even too early for this asyntactic quick spring--growing sand cherries & nanking cherries & korean cherries & pie cherries & black cherries & chokecherries & bird cherries.

a long way from the cameras & tourists & the money that makes them smell so good...and the damned cherry gets planted more every year...

ezra farmhand deluxe

↑ Index

1029. morpheal
Re: iceberg lettuce
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept: "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age." I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese

I would only go along with it if the pages decomposed in roughly the way lettuce does. IT would be symbollic of the life expectancy of the current work of art.

Imagine pages that change colour slowly, then begin to slime, and rot, right before your very eyes, after the plastic wrapper is taken off and activates a special ingredient within the vacuum pack.

You have only three days to read this book...after opening the wrapper. You can extend the keeping qualities to as long as one week,in the vegetable compartment of your household refrigerator.

Patents Pending.
Trademarks Registered.

P.S. This could be bigger than "pet rocks" and sieze a larger market niche if marketed aggressively enough. Can we interest anyone in buying shares in a newly formed corporation ?

Morpheal

↑ Index

1030. laura and jeff
Re: submission and dominance
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> i happen to posses a penis (and i'm almost six foot, and can bench over 200lbs-- so i'm "manly"), and i balled my eyes out at titanic. for the whole last hour and three hours afterward.
>
> At the risk of levity, balling for four hours during and after a tear-jerker strikes me as stereotypical male behavior, including the exaggeration. Don't know what your partner's excuse is.

sorry. sorry. "bawling".
geesh.
jeff.

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

-vladimir mayakovsky, from "Listen!"

↑ Index

1031. Mark Weiss
Re: Stadard S, "truth," Dodie's wkshps
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> The following quote speaks well to this concern:
>
> A truth, it must be admitted, is not easy to recognize, once it has become accepted. Not that there are established truths, but they then become so easily confused with the reality that surrounds them that no other artifice has yet been found to distinguish them from it than to mark them with the sign of the spirit, to pay them homage, to regard them as coming from another world.
>
> (Lacan, Ecrits, "The Freudian Thing," p. 120, Norton 1977)--

This has been a truism for at least 300 years, but I suppose it's nice of Lacan to remind us.

↑ Index

1032. Mark Weiss
Re: no guns
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Charles: If this comes to fruition it's the opportunity we've been waiting for. Let's plan our coup for that date. Catch 'em with their pants (and skirts) down.

At 12:56 PM 3/30/98 -0700, you wrote: >given the messages, part of whose subject is 'guns' lately, I thought I'd >forward the following, which came to me from a Waldorf school my daughter >attends.
>
>While not necessarily, or usually, supportive of such grand gestures, I >have to admit that I'd be amazed if such a thing actually happened.
>
>charles
>
>_____
>
>ONE DAY IN PEACE, JANUARY 1, 2000.
> This is a 24-hour concept where no guns are fired anywhere on earth.. > including on television. What if, for 24 hours, whosoever happens to be at > war on December 31st, 1999, agrees that for one whole day no guns would be > fired? The silence would be golden.

>
> And what if the television programmers of the world agreed to not air any > programming with a violent content? (It would probably be easier to get > warring nations to stop firing than it would be to get the world's television > programmers to not air violent programming.)
>
> At present, this ONE DAY IN PEACE concept is beginning to get further > circulation. On April 6, 1997, there were 1000 days until January 1, 2000.
>
> This is a thought-wave campaign. Which is to say, the more people who grasp > this thought, the more it comes into reality..
>
> One Day In Peace, January 1, 2000..pass it on..expect a miracle.
>
>

↑ Index

1033. morpheal
Re: no guns
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> Charles: If this comes to fruition it's the opportunity we've been waiting for. Let's plan our coup for that date. Catch 'em with their pants (and skirts) down.

Actually I should have mentionned that guns are much too messy. They are also terribly old fashioned. There have to be better ways.

In this final twilight of the 20th century, coming into the 21st century, and progressing beyond Buck Rogers, we ought to be able to kill nearly anything with one single THOUGHT....

So that is what must be so dangerous about poets....They think too much. Sometimes, even worse, they give voice to what they think.

After plotting the coup attempt, your next electronic mail arrives and says something to the effect that:

For attempting a poetic coup of a listserv your poetic license is revoked for a period not less than five years for each instance of standing out as an individual and recognizable poetic voice....all such sentences to be served consecutively.

That's it. Poetic license revoked. No appeal. Simply revoked.

↑ Index

1034. k. lederer
Re: Stadard S, "truth," Dodie's wkshps
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Mark--

The gist of this passage may have been a "truism" for 300 years--

But I think you forget the context from which it has been plucked--

As in: Lacan's view of "reality" and its relation to the subject.

Yours,
Katy

On Mon, 30 Mar 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:

> The following quote speaks well to this concern:
>
> A truth, it must be admitted, is not easy to recognize, once it has become accepted. Not that there are established truths, but they then become so easily confused with the reality that surrounds them that no other artifice has yet been found to distinguish them from it than to mark them with the sign of the spirit, to pay them homage, to regard them as coming from another world.
>
> (Lacan, Ecrits, "The Freudian Thing," p. 120, Norton 1977)--
>
> This has been a truism for at least 300 years, but I suppose it's nice of Lacan to remind us.

↑ Index

1035. Marcella Durand
Chris Funkhouser search
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Does anyone have Chris Funkhouser's e-mail? And if Chris Funkhouse responds to this, what I actually need is a short bio sent to me c/o the Poetry Project (tomorrow if possible):

[redacted]

Thanks
Marcella

↑ Index

1036. laura and jeff
Re: no guns
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> Actually I should have mentionned that guns are much too messy.
> They are also terribly old fashioned. There have to be better ways.
>
> In this final twilight of the 20th century, coming into the 21st century, > and progressing beyond Buck Rogers, we ought to be able to kill nearly > anything with one single THOUGHT....

word?? this is starting to sound like dune.

> So that is what must be so dangerous about poets....They think too much.
> Sometimes, even worse, they give voice to what they think.

which is why: when an autocratic gov takes over the poets are usually among the first killed. tendencies in history are fun, and aparently deadly.

jeff.

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

-vladimir mayakovsky, from "Listen!"

↑ Index

1037. Billy Little the shelf
Mon 30 Mar 1998

---

as far as poetry being on the shelves of bookstores, this largely depends on the education of the book buyer. When i was managing the hardcover department of a large bookstore in boston, the publishers reps would come in and show me the new jackets of books about to be published, often they'd skip right over the new poetry releases thinking they were published solely for libraries, one time I'm staring at the jacket of Pablo Neruda's latest and the guy turns the page saying: that's poetry i won't waste your time. Of course i said: back up that guy's going to win the nobel prize. So it's a struggle even to get the giants on the shelf. one thing poets and readers might do is conscientiously request their libraries order every book they're interested in reading whether they've already bought it or not, it only takes a few minutes and they won't order every one you ask for but if you don't request you'll never get and if they only order ten percent that's five or ten books that wouldn't have been there and are now available to thousands of readers, sometimes it helps to lie, tell them in Minneapolis and Alberquerque both that Alice Notely is a local writer, that Katy Lederer, the editor of this dynamite mag, Explosive, just moved down the street from the library in Dubuque. You're poets, you've got imaginations, get out there and fabricate, it's your future you're creating.

Epiphany (for Matthew Ezra)

One of the reasons i still have the affections of my handsome and intelligent child now twenty seven years old is that i stopped smoking 27 years and 8 mos ago enabling him to be 100% cuter and 3 times as smart as his IMProv/Ident dad enabling his dad to have the stamina to sing to the squalling babe 3 am rock him in my arms my voice enCHANTing him soothing him lulling him sweetening his dreams irritating his mother no end she needed her sleep
she went to work in the morning working at home--parenting and writing cooking, cleaning, shopping, many mornings i'd push him in his stroller to the county art museum to the farmers market along The Walk of The Stars past Gruman's Chinese to the newstand at Hollywood and Vine Sunset Boulevard, LaBrea Tar Pits, the Miracle Mile and i love him and never miss a chance to tell him so and his children are cuter and smarter than both of us

billy little

↑ Index

1038. Don Wellman
Re: women/men/communication/cherry blossoms
Mon 30 Mar 1998

I thought Dodie's post terrificly important in many ways.

Here is where I am on this thread: "stories heal" (I wrote that earlier). Stories also terrify.

Even every poet has a story...

(whether or not that story gets told, whether or not the poet wants it to leak through the words ...

To second how Katty has read Lacan, some of what I mean by story hovers among the words, alongside the "language" that censors as well as constructs how we tell or hear those stories-- one aspect of caring for language is in lending an ear to such stories (stories now from different people, different ethnicities, sexualities ...

another picks at the inadequacies and incoherences that a deconstruction reveals

Or am I being so "biunivocular" that I should have myself carted away?

Don Wellman

I never thought this latter care an end in itself--only a way to supplement the first?

↑ Index

1039. Marcella Durand more boring chit-chat
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Kind of wierd to tune in after a few days and find a thread I found interesting & provocative getting strangely bogged down?? And what is this bizarre list of statistics? It reminds me when that study came out that a woman had about much chance of getting married after--what was it, 30??--as being captured by a terrorist. Now I feel like I'm helping to "silence" men who have been abused by their wives and girlfriends, and I'm sure that such abuse happens, the human race being such as it is, but I can't believe in greater amounts than women being abused!

I feel like I need to defend that there is sexism in the world and back that up with various stories I have seen, heard and experienced. And it definitely happens in how we're taught reading and writing, in both the classroom and out. Although I try to keep myself as sensitized as possible, doing counts of everything to try and make it 50/50 men/women, last night I was asked who my biggest influences were. I automatically reeled off 2 male writers, then had to consciously think, I must now include 2 women writers. My first impulse was to name men, even though the women have been just as big influences. When my "affirmative action" becomes automatic & unconscious, then maybe I won't need to talk about it so much. However, since this thread started, I've definitely become more involved with reading the list and feel more comfortable about responding.

Here is one study I vaguely remember reading about: Two groups were given the same piece of writing but with two different names: one female, one male. When asked if they thought it was a good piece of writing, the "female" group said (mostly) no. The "male" group said (mostly) yes. If anyone has info on this study, I'd like to verify.

I think it would be interesting to have a more precise discussion of gender and poetry--ESPECIALLY experimental poetry. I've disagreed with Irigaray that women write with their vaginas (but maybe the movement from pen to keyboard means something ...) But Helene Cixous's theories on a female language are interesting when applied to experimental syntax. Perhaps we could talk about Alice Notley's work?

↑ Index

1040. laura and jeff
Re: disobedience (fwd)
Mon 30 Mar 1998

---

a problem i see with this is: comformity is impossible. any attempt to comform is done thru your perceptions, etc. and so whatever you are attempting to conform to becomes your own, whether or not you intend that. so: to automatically make some arbitary descision about disbelief or belief (to pre-judge) before you know the ideas and/or arguments of the individual/group will limit your growth as an individual because of the lack of exposure to others due to your closed mind.

jeff.

>Originally posted by Anselm Berrigan:
>
>
> This is a paper/essay given recently at a British poetry conference >by Alice Notley upon being asked to write on her poetics. I think it carries >some threads relevant to topics discussed recently:

>
>
>
> The Poetics of Disobedience
>
> by Alice Notley
>
>
> For a long time I've seen my job as bound up with the necessity of >non-compliance with pressures, dictates, atmospheres of, variously, poetic >factions, society at large, my own poetic practices as well. For a long time
>-- well in fact since the beginning, since I learned how to be a poet inside >the more rebellious more outlawish wing of poetry; though learning itself >meant a kind of obedience, so like most words the Dis words, the Dis form, >cannot be worshipped either -- and that would be an obedience anyway. I've >spoken in other places of the problems, too, of subjects that hadn't been >broached much in poetry and how it seemed one had to disobey the past and >the practices of literary males in order to talk aboutwhat was going on most >literarily around one, the pregnant body, and babies for examples. There >were no babies in poetry then. How could that have been? What are we leaving >out now? Usually what's exactly in front of the eyes ears nose and mouth, in >front of the mind, but it seems as if one must disobey everyone else in >order to see at all. This is a persistent feeling in a poet but staying >alert to all the ways that one is coerced into denying experience, sense and >reason is a huge task. I recently completed a very long poem called >Disobedience but I didn't realize that disobeying was what I was doing, what >perhaps I'd always been doing until the beginning of the end of it, thought >the tone throughout was one of rejection of everything I was supposed to be >or to affirm, all the poetries all the groups the clothes the gangs the >governments the feelings and reasons.
> I seem to start with my poem The Descent Of Alette these days, >whatever it is that I am now seems to start there. It was for me an immense >act of rebellion against dominant social forces, against the fragmented >forms of modern poetry, against the way a poem was supposed to look >according to both past and contemporary practice. It begins in pieces and >ends whole, narrated by an I who doesn't know her name and whose name when >she finds it means appendage of a male name; her important name is I. I >stand with this, and with the urgency that saying I creates, a facing up to >sheer presence, death and responsibility, the potential for blowing away all >the gauze. In two subsequent narrative poem/proses, Close to me...& Closer

>(The Language of Heaven) and Desamere I felt myself pushing against ideas of >reality as soley what's visible and in what shapes and colors it's said to >be visible, against the idea that religion is solely an organized affair, >against the pervasive idea that one must not protest what everyone else has >named the Actual -- how can you fight Reality? -- against the psychology of >belonging, of aiding and abetting. Desamere especially is about not wanting >to belong and the process of cesing to belong to the extent that's possible.
>All three of thoseworks are characterized by emphatic though variable >metrical patterns, in the prose as well as the poetry parts; two are very >quirky as to physical presentation; all three have narratives that tend to >the fabular.
> In a book that will soon be published, Mysteries of Small Houses, I >was firstly trying to realize the first person singular as fully and nakedly >as possible, saying "I" in such a way as to make myself really nervous, >really blowing away the gauze and making myself too scared of life and death >to care what anyone thought of me or what I was going to say. Saying I in >that way I tried to trace that I's path through my past. In a more >subsidiary way I decided to go against my own sense that certain styles and >forms I'd participated in formerly might be used up, that autobiography was, >that the personal-sounding I (as opposed to the fictional I) might be, >against the rumor that there's no self, though I've never understood that >word very well and how people use it now in any of the camps that use it pro >or con -- I guess I partly wrote Mysteries in order to understand it better.
>I came to the conclusion, in the final poem of the book, that self means 'I'
>and also means 'poverty,' it's what one strips down to, who you are when >you've stripped down.
> It's possible that my biggest act of disobedience has consistently, >since I was an adolescent, been agianst the idea that all truth comes from >books, relaly other people's books. I hate the fact that whatever I say or >wrote, someone reading or listening will try to find something out of their >reading I "sound like". 'You sound just like...' 'you remind me of...' 'have >you read...?' I read all the time and I often believe what I read while I'm >reading it, especially if it's some trashy story; intense involvement in >theories as well as stories seems difficult without temporary belief, but >then it burns out. I've been trying to train myself for thirty or forty >years not to believe anything anyone tells me. Not believing, the, became th >crux of Disobedience, which is my most recent completed book. Not believing >and telling the truth as it comes up. One of the main elements in the poem >is an ongoing fantasy in which the I, who is pretty much I, keeps company >and converses with a man very much like the actor Robert Mitchum and that of >course is not strictly believable. On the other hand it's fun, and it stands >for something a sort of truth, about how we do have stories going on in our >consciousness and unconsciousness all the time and about how we're always >talking to some "you" mentally. I wouldn't expect you to take this book as >the truth, I would expect you to go with it, given that you like to read. I >find the act of reading puzzling at the moment, since in a book I've been >working on since Disobedience I ask the reader to read despite the fact that >I'm not really entertaining the reader or being clear in any of the >traditional ways I can think of. I think books may imply a readership that >simply likes to read, which may sound obvious but it's something I myself >have only just thought of. But back to Disobedience. It asks the reader to >read a lot of pages, about 230 A-4 pages in verse, but it's fairly easy to >read and it makes a lot of jokes. I't's very feminist but men seem to enjoy >it a lot, it possibly contains a rather virile approach to things riding >roughshod and shooting at every little duck that seems to pop up. As I >implied earlier, Disobedience didn't exactly set out to be disobedient; it >set out actually to try to do the kinds of things I'd previously done in >differnet poems all in the same poem, that is tell a story, interact with >the so-called visible or phenomenal the despised daily, and explore the >unconscious. But it got more and more pissed off as it confronted the >political from an international vantage, dealt with being awoman in France, >turning fifty and being apoet and thus seemingly despised or at least >ignored. The title popped up in a dream, a real dream I had towards the end >of writing the work, in connection with a comic poet I know: it was the >title of his book in the dream and I realized later that there was probably >nothing more disobedient than being a comic poet, since no one's ever sure >if that's good enough, particularly the academy unless you've been dead >since the 14th century or unless you've also written a lot of tragedies. I >myself wouldn't want the limitation of being only one kind of poet, but I >realize this comic business is something to think about. But more and more >as I wrote Disobedience I discovered I couldn't go along, with the >government or governments, with radicals and certianly nor conservatives or >centrists, with radical poetics and certainly not with other poetics, with >other women's feminisms, with any fucking thing at all; belonging to any of >it was not only an infringement on my liberty but a veil over clear thinking.

> It's necessary to maintain a stae of disobedience >against...everything. One must remain somehow, though how, open to any >subject or form in principle, open to the possibility of liking, open to the >possibility of using. I try to maintain no continuous restrictions in my >poetics except with regard to particular works, since writing at all means >making some sort of choices. But NO DOCTRINES. Rather I tend to maintain a >sense that a particular form or sets of rules at a certain point might serve >me for a while. Like may writers I feel ambivalentabout words, I know they >don't work, I know they aren't it. I don't in the least feel that everything >is language. I have a sense that there has been language from the beginning, >that it isn't fundamentally an invention. These are contradictory positions >but positions are just words. I don't believe that the best poems are just >words, I think they're the same as reality; I tend to think reality is >poetry, and that that isn't words. But words are one way to get at >reality/poetry, what we're in all the time. I think words are among us and >everything else, mingling, fusing with, backing off from us and everything else.

> Since Disobedience I've been working on this other thing which isn't >as friendly as Dis is, though it isn't meant to be unfreindly. It's just >hard to read, in that you have to decide to sit down and read it word by >word giving each word the rhythm and weight it requires. Taht sounds like >poetry but this one tends to be long in blowy sentences all down the page. I >am going at several ideas at once: one is that the world is intensely >telepathic, infused with the past and continual thought of all the living >and all the dead. I started out with that idea adn with the idea of a >Byzantince church as a sort of head, mine, full of icons and mosaics on ever >expanding and shifting walls. But the church or head got bigger and bigger >and more and more full of images and words until it expanded into a city. So >at the moment, on page one hundred and something, I'm dealing with the idea >that there are tow cities or worlds at the same time, an ideal crystalline >one and the supposedly real one. Generally I'm neither all the way in one >nor the other, though sometimes it seems as if I'm nowhere near the crystal >one and its resonable opulence so I start beating hard at all the doors I >can find in my mind. Then sometimes it seems as if the supposedly real world >just isn't there or here at all though I know if I stop typing and go >outside it will get me. This work is also very disobedient, in a way it >picks up where Disobedience left off; but it doesn't lecture as much or >shake its fist so, is less interested in the so-called real than in denying >its existence in fafor of the real real. You can't fly unless you're not on >the ground and this one really flies sometimes.
> I think I conceive of myself as disobeying my readrship a lot. I >began the new work in fact denying their existence; it seemed to me I needed >most at this point to work on my own existence so I couldn't afford to cater >to them if they got in the way of my finding out things. But this is a work >of mine, it should be published sometime. I'm now in a predicament I can't >get out of, a form I can't manage for the reader, which just keeps leading >me on and leading me on. It's predicated on leaving in as much mind fuzz as >possible, that is being open to all that it out there in telepathy -- not a >very organizeable entity, the entity. Too wordy, too long; and I've allowed >in a lot of notions from my dreams again, have allowed odd images to take on >the weight of truth; and I'm stubbornly involved again in what you might >call mystical conceptions, but aren't those a nono? Except in icky New Age >territory, yuck. The reader likes you to tell him/her what he/she already >knows in a fmailiar form whether in mainstreamese or avant-gardese, but then >there is the individual reader who is often not like that at all, who >prefers poems to talking about them and has strange individual experiences >with them. That's a very scary idea. It's possible that the reader, or maybe >the ideal reader, is a very disobedient person a head/church/city entity >her/himself full of soring icons and the words of all the living and all the >dead, who sees and listens to it all and never lets on that there's all this >beautiful almost undifferentiation inside, everything equal and almost >undemarcated in the light of fundamental justice. And poker-faced puts up >with the outer forms. As I do a lot of the time but not so much when I'm >writing.

>

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

-vladimir mayakovsky, from "Listen!"

↑ Index

1041. Nada Gordon
to dodie/wmn's wrkshps/my personal story
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Dodie

Thanks so much for the detailed response. Your workshop sounds great and I wish I could be part of it, although I haven't written narrative (except letters)seriously since I was 18. I began writing fairly normal stories about love betrayals and the like, but found myself bored by their literalness (although they were well-liked by my teacher and felllow students in a fiction workshop I took at Merritt college). I started putting in dream sequences and then cut out the rest of the story; only the dream sequences felt powerful to me. My teacher and classmates were no longer generous in their praise, but seemed befuddled. I wanted to be ambiguous and transcendent of logic and combine words more aurally/physically. That desire could have harked back to my childhood reading and constant rereading of Alice and Rutabaga stories, or my teenage anarchic punk explosions -- I wanted to make poems or stories that somehow reached the same part of my ear and brain. It wasn't until I got to State in 1982 that I was exposed to works that did just that. Doors flew open: Stein; the NY School; various local writers -- especially Carla Harryman.

Didn't you give a talk in Kathleen Fraser's Writers on Writing class (I guess I was at State just a little while after you were) at around that time? I have some memory of it, but distant... anyway I also took Kathleen's women's writing workshop; it was one of the workshops I was thinking about when I wrote my post. Jessica Grim was in that workshop (although she had not taken the turn into language writing yet) and so was Colette Lafia -- both, along with Lori Lubeski, later became my writing comrades. I remember bringing in about four pages of writing that was a rush of language -- prose (maybe the combined influences of Silliman, Hejinian & Rodefer), and after I read it, that puzzled silence. Kathleen said something about how more and more of her students were writing "like this." I felt characterized but not attended to, as if she was not looking at the writing I had done but was instead categorizing it. It seemed a politicized categorization, like there was some kind of polemic lurking under her words. I don't remember the reactions of the other participants but I remember feeling unsatisfied. Maybe they didn't have techniques for responding to writing "like that" -- writing like wind, writing from the ear, not trying to make anything whole or tell a story or make a point.

The other women's workshop I was thinking of was one I started here in an attempt to forge some community. The thing about being an expat is that you can't be too picky about who you let in; the potential participants are limited. Almost none of the women identified themselves as writers, although they wrote a little or wanted to write. Our sessions were most interesting when we actually spent some time writing together (but not collaboratively) in them. Otherwise, mostly "dopey" responses. As you wrote, though,

> As far as women's workshops go, I don't see why there couldn't be a good one if you had women coming from the same place

It's just that, in Tokyo, people writing in English never come from the same place, geographically or otherwise. It's a great place for hot tubs though -- almost as good as Marin.

> I also took Kathleen Fraser's Feminist Poetics class and women's writing workshop at SF State and those were very useful, rigorous, enlightening. When the class ended Kathleen urged the women from the women's workshop to continue a group on their own, which happened. At that point I was still > writing poetry and clearly there was a struggle going on between what I wanted to do in writing and formal issues in poetry. I hadn't yet figured out you could write prose without writing short stories. But, as soon as the women's workshop no longer had Kathleen as a facilitator, it turned vicious in its hierarchical reorganization, with the wanna-be language poets (none of which are on the scene any more) at the top, and then the tolerated in-betweens, and me at the bottom. The queen of the workshop told me that I was writing about sex and violence and therefore should go into therapy. I remember yelling back that I wasn't writing about sex and violence. I had sex on page two and violence on page 4--that's not sex and violence! Remember, this was the early 80s, it wasn't yet cool to write about sex and violence and anything narrative was the scum of the earth.

Was it? In your crowd there were people doing such amazing things -- Bruce Boone, Bob Gluck, Michael Amnasan. You all seemed pretty cool to me.

That's too bad about the bossy wanna-be-langpos. I don't deny that part of the real langpos' attractiveness as a group was their power -- I've said so before on this list. I always wanted to be powerful (in my childhood I fantasized about being a rock star -- I really wanted to be --not marry-- John Lennon & Roger Daltrey -- does this make me male-identified? I never dreamed about being, say, Carole King) and still have to work hard to control my arrogance -- or I use it in my writing (i.e. my old booklet, Rodomontade, which means "boastful, bragging speech"). I think it's the flip side of the chutzpah a writer or a teacher or a performer needs to assume (even if it's an act) in order to do her work -- I would guess that you understand that. Living in Japan for a decade has made me see the virtue of having a little bit of humility -- I guess now I'd like to be a kind of combination of Maria Callas and Lao Tsu.

I'm pretty sure Kathleen picked up on my arrogance -- Lori, Jessica, Colette & I took an independent study course with her -- it was great -- she'd read aloud sections of The Tale of Genji or Remembrance of Things Past and we'd write as she read -- but I'm sure I was snotty sometimes and remember hearing that she'd mentioned to someone that as a group we were "difficult." At that time, I would have considered that a compliment -- remember I came to writing fresh out of punk rock.

> I was moved when Johanna Drucker read at Small Press Traffic a couple of weeks ago and she talked about her interest in narrative when she was growing up, how she'd always imagined herself writing huge narrative books. Then she fell in with the Bay Area scene and was told that that wasn't valid, so she developed other strategies in writing. She spoke of how she was still struggling with this "self-censorship." I often wonder the same things about my own work.

Yes, me too. I never send work out partly for this reason, and I don't write nearly enough. One thing that annoys me about my writing is its obsession with gender in its content. Why should that annoy me? Noting this obsession, I called a manuscript "A Gender" (think of a midwestern farmer saying agenda) and then later changed it to "Foriegnn Bodie", which still seems annoyingly topical.

> I see so much competiveness and turf guarding among women writers, it can be very depressing.

Really? Like what? I don't remember that being the case -- and now I'm too far away to know about it.

I think some of the people who are railing about >inequalities with men should think about being nicer to the women they >know. And this isn't aimed at you, Gordon, I have no idea how you are to >the women you know.

It depends on the women, I guess. I only know a couple women writers here, and they have poetics very different from mine. Remember I only see the USA women writers I know at most once a year. And I LOVE them: Andrea Hollowell (who was here with me for two years), Lori Lubeski, Pat Reed, Lee Ann Brown, Julie Reagan, Norma Cole, Carla Harryman ... all brilliant and inspiring.

OK, cherry blossoms calling again. I have only a few days left in my spring vacation before I start teaching and I no longer have time to write long posts like this.

--nada

↑ Index

1042. SSSCHAEFER

Re: more boring chit-chat

Mon 30 Mar 1998

Marcella:

Yes, this is what I'd like to hear talked about.

In a message dated 98-03-30 20:37:31 EST, you write:

<< think it would be interesting to have a more precise discussion of gender and poetry--ESPECIALLY experimental poetry. I've disagreed with Irigaray that women write with their vaginas (but maybe the movement from pen to keyboard means something ...) But Helene Cixous's theories on a female language are interesting when applied to experimental syntax. Perhaps we could talk about Alice Notley's work?
>>

↑ Index

1043. Maz881
Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Don Byrd wrote:

<<The World Watch Institute notes that economic "growth during the seven years since 1990 exceeds that during the 10,000 years from the beginning of agriculture until 1950" and estimates that the earth cannot sustain this level of material production for more than twenty additional years. I will highly recommend web site of the World Watch Institute (http://www.worldwatch.org/)>>

Don, thanks for the warning. Personally, I'm more worried about tsunamis and all the nuclear weapons stockpiled here on oahu.

But one of your old students dug rothschild is spreading the notion that allegorical subtext of the movie titanic, ie. a supposedly unsinkable ship that sinks, is about the "immanent" crash of the stock market. I'm not sure if he made up the allegory or he got it from you or you planted that kind of thinking in his head. ??

Joe Amato, you being a student of Don's, don't have this titanic vision do you?

Best,

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

1044. michael corbin
Re: women/men/communication/cherry blossoms
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Nada Gordon wrote:
>
> One thing that irks me greatly about this list is that it keeps me away > from the cherry blossoms, newly opened and splendid,
>
>
> Hmm, so I guess I do roar. And am boorish sometimes and violent > Ending with questions again:
>
>
> love and cherry blossoms (finally I can get to them)
>
> From: Beth Joselow <[redacted]>

> Yes, it's difficult to find time, money, space to write. For all of us.

> 2927 Tilden Street NW

the cherry blossom is a complicated bloom. with all its social hopes at the tidal basin. tourists and a western rapproachment. global economy. a tea ceremony of geo-political importance in the margins of 'yen' and 'dollar'.

I walked up tilden the other day. sleeping in the park, because the park divides. and divisions, distinctions are important.

the cop-man told the homeless man with the spotlight in his eye before sunrise that he'd have-ta move on. move on.

the cherry blossoms is bluumin'.

i love this spring. but i prefer that bullshit daffodil. cherry blossoms be damned. photosynthesis and all that civic-life. fake, it seems.

love, and boys and girls and things.

mc

↑ Index

1045. Tim Wood
Re: iceberg lettuce
Mon 30 Mar 1998

The sad thing is that something so one-dimensional would --if you p.c.'d the ti-tle-- would make huge amounts of money.

Iceberg Lettuce for the Soul: Light anecdotes for a thinful Age, Iceberg Lettuce for the Soul: Jack Handy's thoughts for a post-big hair world. Iceberg Lettuce on Soul (Food): a cookbook for the deep(ness) challenged

You could almost publish a whole book of just the titles. At least turn it into a perverse Exquisite Corpse. One of our cat either hates the idea or loves it. She just jumped up here and started batting at the keys...

Tim

At 02:32 PM 3/30/98 -0600, you wrote:
>I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept:
>"Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age."
>I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas
>[redacted]

>[redacted]
>

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

↑ Index

1046. Karen and Trevor kelsey st press (women in publishing)
Mon 30 Mar 1998

Kelsey St. Press published Laynie Browne's _Rebecca Letters_ as well as Mei-mei Berssenbrugge's _Sphericity_ (someone last week said it was published by Bridge St Press).

Also, we have published Mei-mei's _Endocrinology_ with drawings by Kiki Smith, and are working on Mei-mei's next book. Susan Gerwirtz is also being published this year.

Please visit our updated website-www.sirius.com/~kelseyst/

Karen McKevitt

↑ Index

1047. Tim Wood
Re: Stadard S, "truth," Dodie's wkshps
Mon 30 Mar 1998

> A truth, it must be admitted, is not easy to recognize, once it has become accepted. Not that there are established truths, but they then become so easily confused with the reality that surrounds them that no other artifice has yet been found to distinguish them from it than to mark them with the sign of the spirit, to pay them homage, to regard them as coming from another world.
>
> (Lacan, Ecrits, "The Freudian Thing," p. 120, Norton 1977)--
>
> The other side of the coin, though, comes from Wittgenstein, who wrote that the truth can only be known by standing outside of the world. Lacan, I guess, is speaking as a nominalist. Wittgenstein (if he admits the possibility of such an "outside" perspective), as a realist. This outsider position relates to the "status" of marginality. The broken off splinter reveals the macrocosm. Synecdoche.

Which is complicated all the more by the "fact" that besides those who have achieved life after death or (the) God(s)ess(es) <grin> there is no true outsider position. Particularly in the U.S., where the 'culture', at least the mass marketed one(s), saturate the geography of our lives, there is no way to be completely apart from the world. There is a certain blindness one develops to things and a certain apriorizing (pardon the word creation) that occurs in the process of negotiating the days.

Tim

_____ Tim Wood
[redacted]

↑ Index

1048. nanostep
recommendations sought - poets' theatre
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Hi folks,

I put on a literary and arts radio program here in Los Angeles and have been wanting to produce a "poets' theatre" piece, but have had trouble locating anything suitable.

You're help would be greatly appreciated.

Thanks,
Christine Palma

_____
needle: [redacted]

static: kxlu los angeles . 88.9 fm . saturday evenings . 8 to 9 pm echo in the sense . contemporary authors . poets . artists 28 mar .
poet david trinidad

↑ Index

1049. Rachel Loden
Hilda Morley
Tue 31 Mar 1998

From The New York Times, March 27

Hilda Morley, 81; Wrote Poetry Shaped by Abstract Expressionism

By WOLFGANG SAXON

Hilda Morley, an American poet who gained wide recognition late in life, decades after she first published her imagist free verse, died on Monday at Royal Free Hospital in Hampstead, London. A former resident of Sag Harbor, N.Y., she was 81 and had moved to London last year to continue work on a biography of her late husband, the avant-garde composer Stefan Wolpe.

The cause was liver failure after a fall at home, said a spokeswoman for her publisher, Moyer Bell.

Ms. Morley published five books of poetry in which she articulated emotions and feelings in free verse, but a type of verse as measured as dance or music. She was a "master of that ability," Robert Creeley, a fellow poet, said.

She wrote that her poetry was shaped by the visions of Abstract Expressionism, which can create metamorphoses. Artists like Klee and Picasso, she said, gave her the means to create word canvases depicting the world around her.

Born Hilda Auerbach in Manhattan, Ms. Morley considered herself an inhabitant of the world. She was educated in New York, Haifa (in what was then known as Palestine), London and at Wellesley College, Ohio State University and New York University.

Along the way she taught English at a private school in England and at Walden School in New York, where she also worked as a researcher for the Zionist Youth Commission and as a Hebrew translator for the Office of War Information.

Starting in the 1940's, she intermittently lectured at Rutgers University. After her marriage in 1952, she taught English literature at Black Mountain College in North Carolina. Once recognized as a poet, she took academic assignments, lecturing, leading poetry workshops and judging poetry. She was a resident poet at Northeast Missouri University in 1992.

Ms. Morley is survived by a stepdaughter, Katherina Wolpe of London.

The first collection of her previously published poetry was _A Blessing Outside Us_ (1976). It was followed by three others that remain in print: _What Are Winds & What Are Waters_ (1993), _To Hold in My Hand: Selected Poems, 1955-83_ (1984) and _Cloudless at First_ (1988).

Her final collection was _The Turning_, which has just been published. It includes "Fiesta, Ibiza," her evocation of a place she savored:

Warm crystal of my little city;
the fishes

swim over the bay, rooftops swooping
with light, the wreaths & garlands bursting gently
in night's element, the sunlit branches exploding softly,
the sea baring its lights burning the unshadowed joys

Copyright 1998 The New York Times Company

↑ Index

1050. David Dowker
The Alterran Poetry Assemblage - #3
Tue 31 Mar 1998

ANNOUNCING: the third installment of

(((((((((THE ALTERRAN POETRY ASSEMBLAGE)))))))))

Featuring: Adam Cornford, Karen Kelley, Craig Watson, Christina Thompson, Andrew Joron, Lissa Wolsak, Laynie Browne, Lisa Samuels, Gary Sullivan, Virginia Hooper, Spencer Selby, Erin Moure, Lisa Jarnot, William Fuller, Kristin Prevallet, David Dowker.

[redacted]
http://home.ican.net/~alterra/

↑ Index

1051. Jordan Davis
*you're never a latent anything
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Jeff your response to Alice Notley's essay reminds me of a line from Notley's book _How Spring Comes_. She says that one is never a latent anything because one is always living and experiencing. Maybe someone with the book can correct that?

Anyway in re conformity take away the smog from the word and you have the problem. Speaking to someone in a recognizable way is conforming, no? not speaking just drives people mad with wanting to know what you're thinking, and speaking unrecognizably, well it's ok for art in bursts.

This time it's different, right?
Jordan

↑ Index

1052. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Note for Hilda Morley
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Bob Creeley's Note for Hilda Morley is now up at the EPC. It's available from the EPC home page and also from http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/creeley/morley.html

↑ Index

1053. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Chris Funkhouser search
Tue 31 Mar 1998

[redacted]

↑ Index

1054. Miekal And Xerolages 26 + 27
Tue 31 Mar 1998

---

2 new Xerolages from Xexoxial Editions

[Xerolage 26] Steve McComas <italy>

"The Book of Not Seeing Things" "One who is, or those who are, of the functional eyes must catch and identify a phrase of thought in which one is unable to be objective; closes itself by its own screen or shutter that obstructs or shuts off dazzle, screen, for protecting from the enemy's fire; hinders physically or mentally: the movements of luminous ruse." -from the author's introduction.

[Xerolage 27] Jean-Francois Robic <france>

“haut et bas” This work for Xerolage must be called “high” and “low”; “up” and “down”.....It’s about the possibility for these images to be read in any direction. About the life to be read like that; between autobiography & history, between roots & exile, fight & slavery. So I mixed my family old pictures & historic events (especially about eastern & communist history), signs & words in all languages concerned by the images: french, russian, breton, spanish, german.....So you need a dictionary to appreciate all the images' meanings. It's up to you to link all these meanings together; to connect signs, words, & images; to give them back a signification; your signification.

Jean-François Robic, december 1995.

....upcoming issues by Stewart Home, Carla Bertola, Edgardo Vigo, Janet Janet, Carlyle Baker, & many others....

XEROLAGE IS AN IRREGULAR MAGAZINE OF VISUAL POETRY, COPY ART & COLLAGE GRAPHICS. EACH ISSUE IS DEVOTED TO THE WORK OF ONE ARTIST. XEROLAGE IS A WORD COINED BY MIEKAL AND TO SUGGEST THE NEW WORLD OF 8.5 & 11 ART PROPAGATED BY XEROX TECHNOLOGY. "THE MIMEO OF THE 80's". THE PRIMARY INVESTIGATION OF THIS MAGAZINE IS HOW COLLAGE TECHNIQES OF 20TH CENTURY ART, VISUAL AND CONCRETE POETRY MOVEMENTS, & THE ART OF XEROX HAVE BEEN COMBINED. EDITED BY MIEKAL AND. Submissions encouraged but query first with sample of work & please be familiar with the magazine and/or the work we publish. 8.5"x11", 24 pages each. Subscriptions $18/4 issues. For overseas delivery, add $7 for airmail printed mattter. Back issues available for $4.50 each. Add 15% postage & handling. Xerolage, Xexoxial Editions, Rt 1 Box 131, LaFarge, WI 54639. email: [redacted]

x1 DiMichele
x2 Michael VooDoo
x3 Scott Helmes
x4 Joe Napora
x5 Antonio Nelos
x6 Serse Luigetti
x7 Vittore Baroni
x8 Joe Schwind
x9 Elizabeth Was x10 Lloyd Dunn
x11 American Living x12 Greg Evason
x13 Gaetano Colonna x14 Malok
x15 Ben Allen
x16 Bern Porter
x17 Geof Huth
x18 Clemente Padin
x19 Cesar Figueiredo

x20 Ross Martin
x21 SCORE
x22 Ruggero Maggi
x23 Bill Keith
x24 James Koehnline
x25 Marilyn Rosenberg x26 Steve McComas
x27 Jean-François Robic

Xexoxial catalogue online

http://net22.com/neologisms/xe.html

↑ Index

1055. Douglas Barbour
Re: Guns, gender, children, crusades, etc.
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Just want to say, as someone who got a little behind reading my digests, that all the new names talking like mad here are great to have present & accounted for. That many are women not heard here that often is also terrific. But it's just that there have been a number of interesting & provocative threads recently, & that's a good thing.

But, however erratic the approaches, surely everything we say is personal in some way? Even as it might also register resistance to 'just being personal, eh?' It's the ways in which such a contra/diction plays itself out, like maybe in Nada's neat penis poem, or the various posts about writing & being, that hold our (or my) attention.

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

leave us alone on the road.
Denise Levertov

↑ Index

1056. Mark Prejsnar
Re: more boring chit-chat
Tue 31 Mar 1998

On Mon, 30 Mar 1998, Marcella Durand wrote:

> Kind of wierd to tune in after a few days and find a thread I found interesting & provocative getting strangely bogged down?? And what is this bizarre list of statistics? It reminds me when that study came out that a woman had about much chance of getting married after--what was it, 30??--as being captured by a terrorist. Now I feel like I'm helping to "silence" men who have been abused by their wives and girlfriends, and I'm sure that such abuse happens, the human race being such as it is, but I can't believe in greater amounts than women being abused!
>
> I feel like I need to defend that there is sexism in the world and back that up with various stories I have seen, heard and experienced. And it definitely happens in how we're taught reading and writing, in both the classroom and out. Although I try to keep myself as sensitized as

Marcella,

I feel very much the same way. It's an indication of the fact that even among people with much else in common, feminist politics is still contested ground. But what you say above is certainly true, and in this context anodyne.

For instance, one post that disturbed me:

I think Standard is one of the really exciting and important young poets and editors on the scene. But I found his recent post terribly worrisome. He seemed to imply that he saw no way for men to fit into an anti-sexist stand; something to the effect of, how can a man speak against sexism? He seemed to be assuming that the concerns about gender disbalance various people had stated were rooted in people's essences; whereas I assume them to be social constructs that can be critiqued and worked against and understood. I thought "we" (as a society) had at least established that as one major political/analytic position. But the word hasn't reached everywhere I guess.

In addition to your suggestions, there is the very broad topic of non-mainstream poets whose work engages gender politics on various levels, even though those poets have not extensively theorized the feminist underpinnings (if that's what they are) of what they are doing. The two who came immediately to my mind were Susan Howe and Rosmarie Waldrop. Not having a direct-address componant to one's poetics (where say, Adrienne Rich drops into a somber soliloquy on the violence facing women in american cities) presents the question of just how political stresses are woven into a body of poetry. A political poetry can take up and amplify processes of violence and inward abrasion, forcing them to a kind of ultimate verbal breaking-point (Andrews in "I Don't Have any Paper," for instance). This seems a very abrupt (not to say masculine) approach and its relationship to a feminist politics is a very tangled question. Gender encodings and nodes of pressure exist in S. Howe's work through confrontation with (and I think that's a good word for how she does it) historical material that is felt as palpably present in the lived matrix of the poet and her audience. Even when on a literal documentary level this "history" "took place" in 1645 or 1820.....

I actually think that many (mostly women) poets appearing today in the mags, are approaching these tensions with similar creativity. (A very large proportion of 'em being poets who participate on this list) I wish I had seen more of their work, in larger chunks, so I could comment on it intelligently.

Anyway, Marcella, compliments on a valuable post.

Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

1057. k. lederer
Ex Ed--Emily Wilson
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Here are a couple of terrific poems that I love from another wonderful poet who doesn't seem to send out.

Emily is originally from New England, and is, oh... maybe 30.

PASTORAL

The mordants in their noise,
the night transports.

A means of coming to the switchyard of the tongue.

To have once set such store by forced creatures.

Not changed toward

something of my own.
The towns raised chaffed

seas to ground the.
In that frieze before

storm you went on.
Effigy loomed out

of cornfield. Future
inside its trussed forms.

GREEN RIVER

There is the mountain that became the barren

of rudiment silt.
There is emergent

instinct that stalled, acquainted then strayed

to what odds. Far above the miniature

tamarisk-imperfect
shore the sediments

burn in their curtains.
You've taken so long

to come through.
The archival exit

speech still stayed at the mouth.

↑ Index

1058. dbkk
Re: to dodie/wmn's wrkshps/my personal story
Tue 31 Mar 1998

> Date: Tue, 31 Mar 1998 10:55:26 +0900
> From: Nada Gordon <[redacted]>
> Subject: to dodie/wmn's wrkshps/my personal story
>
> Didn't you give a talk in Kathleen Fraser's Writers on Writing class (I guess I was at State just a little while after you were) at around that time? I have some memory of it, but distant... anyway I also took > Kathleen's women's writing workshop; it was one of the workshops I was thinking about when I wrote my post. Jessica Grim was in that workshop (although she had not taken the turn into language writing yet) and so was Colette Lafia -- both, along with Lori Lubeski, later became my writing comrades.

No, at that point, I don't think anybody would have even considered inviting me to that class. Michael Amnasan, however, did speak and that's how he and Jessica met--at least that's the way my memory goes. [Editorial comment: Michael and Jessica were "together" for several years.] And yes you must have been at State just a little after me because I knew Jessica then, Lori a bit later.

> I remember bringing in about four pages of writing that was a rush of language -- prose (maybe the combined influences of Silliman, Hejinian & Rodefer), and after I read it, that puzzled silence. Kathleen said something about how more and more of her students were writing "like this." I felt characterized but not attended to, as if she was not looking at the writing I had done but was instead categorizing it. It seemed a politicized categorization, like there was some kind of polemic lurking under her words. I don't remember the reactions of the other participants but I remember feeling unsatisfied. Maybe they didn't have techniques for responding to writing "like that" -- writing like wind, writing from the ear, not trying to make anything whole or tell a story or make a point.

This is odd, considering it was in her classes I first read Lyn and Carla, many of the female Lang-Pos. And I remember "experimental" works turned in by students to be praised. Your bringing up categorizing is interesting because the whole How(ever) project was about bringing "female" experience/perspective into experimental forms. The poetic avant-garde, it was perceived, was ruled by men, and Kathleen's project was to create a sort of antidote to that. But, I always thought there was a (mostly unspoken) privileging of what was acceptable femaleness. A certain lady-likness. Thank god Kathy Acker was around at the same time. As I remember you from those days, Nada, you were rather punked out with a lot of attitude (your arrogance as you put it). I wonder how that impacted your perceived relationship to jouissance?

I had the dreadful combination of arrogance and absolutely no self-confidence. I needed constant approval from others to really get me started in writing. I think I still use Kevin for that more than I should.

> Was it? In your crowd there were people doing such amazing things -- Bruce Boone, Bob Gluck, Michael Amnasan. You all seemed pretty cool to me.

That scene, the failed attempt to forge a New Narrative movement was much a reaction to the then disrespect of narrative, an attempt to reinvent narrative so that it could be as arty as lang-po--that's what I'd say on a bad day. On a good day, I'd say it was about admitting the falsity of the conventional absent author, bringing the act of writing into the piece, experimenting with different subjectivities, stuff about community in its early idealistic days, etc. Studying (that's the wrong word, hanging out endlessly is more accurate) with Bruce, it was a lot about seduction, he was heavy into Bataille then--he was always talking to me about the relationship between the writer and the audience, would compare it to an SM relationship, the author being the top, the reader being the bottom. A far cry from How(ever). I was heavy into being corrupted by these sicko perverts. We'd lie on his bed and he'd read me Baudelaire. It was thrilling.

> Yes, me too. I never send work out partly for this reason, and I don't write nearly enough. One thing that annoys me about my writing is its obsession with gender in its content. Why should that annoy me? Noting this obsession, I called a manuscript "A Gender" (think of a midwestern farmer saying agenda) and then later changed it to "Foriegnn Bodie", which still seems annoyingly topical.

I don't know, I don't have problems with this. I'm in a female body/consciousness in a fucked up world--and that's what I write about, I can't imagine wanting to write about anything else--unless I was getting paid.

x,
Dodie

↑ Index

1059. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: Ex Ed--Emily Wilson
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Thanks for posting Emily's work to the list, Katy. I'd just like to add that Emily will have two poems in the second (summer) issue of Kenning. And no, she doesn't send out. It takes some sleuthing sometimes. Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

On Tue, 31 Mar 1998, k. lederer wrote:

Here are a couple of terrific poems that I love from another wonderful poet who doesn't seem to send out.

Emily is originally from New England, and is, oh... maybe 30.

PASTORAL

The mordants in their noise,
the night transports.

A means of coming to the switchyard of the tongue.

To have once
set such store by

forced creatures.
Not changed toward

something of my own.
The towns raised chaffed

seas to ground the.
In that frieze before

storm you went on.
Effigy loomed out

of cornfield. Future
inside its trussed forms.

GREEN RIVER

There is the mountain
that became the barren

of rudiment silt.
There is emergent

instinct that stalled,
acquainted then strayed

to what odds. Far above the miniature

> tamarisk-imperfect
> shore the sediments
>
> burn in their curtains.
> You've taken so long
>
> to come through.
> The archival exit
>
> speech still stayed
> at the mouth.

↑ Index

1060. dbkk

Moving Borders reading at SPT

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

a reading and book launch for Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women (Talisman House)

with

Dodie Bellamy
Norma Cole
Beverly Dahlen
Jean Day
Patricia Dienstfrey
Susan Gevirtz
Barbara Guest
Lyn Hejinian
Myung Mi Kim
Laura Moriarty
Camille Roy
Leslie Scalapino
Mary Margaret Sloan

Here it is at last--Mary Margaret Sloan's ambitious, groundbreaking anthology of formal innovation by US and Canadian women over the past thirty years, and tonight, like Salome, it's unveiled, with brief readings from its Bay Area contributors (and editor Sloan herself). They're all here, front and center, a dazzling chorus line of fragmentation and history. "It is the specificity of each author's art that is most rewarding here: the exhilarating originality of each poetic project and the deep reflection with which these poets explore not just poetry but the possibilities of meaning through language." (Charles Bernstein).

Thursday, April 9, 7:30 p.m.
New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
$5

↑ Index

1061. CharSSmith
Re: Chris Funkhouser search
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Marcella,

Steve Cope recently gavce me this for Chris' email (I haven't tried it yet):

[redacted]

good luck,

Charles

↑ Index

1062. Patrick F. Durgin
Ke n n i nG
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Announcing the premier issue of KENNING, a not-for-profit newsletter of poetry, poetics, and other genres of new non-fiction writing, including the work of Mark Wallace, John Kinsella, Daniel Zimmerman, Juliana Spahr, Summi Kaipa, Michael Angelo Tata, John Lowther, Ryan Whyte, and Stephen Ellis.

This initial issue is produced on demand and is available by mail-order only. To order issue #1, send a check for $4.00 payable to the editor, Patrick F. Durgin, to the address below. Beginning with issue #2, Kenning subscribers will receive a hand printed slip-case which ought to hold four to five subsequent issues, which will be sent to subscribers in loose leaf. A subscription (beginning in June of 98) of two issues is available anytime at a cost of $9.50. Those requesting single issues will, instead, receive a stapled copy. A single issue of Kenning #2 will be available also through direct mail-order at a cost of $5.00. These prices are meant as an accurate reflection of costs incurred in printing and distributing the magazine. Authors featured in forthcoming issues include Ron Silliman, Taylor Brady, A. L. Nielsen, Emily Wilson, Andrew Levy, and many more.

KENNING is currently seeking submissions of short critical, theoretical, or polemical prose for possible inclusion. All editorial correspondence may be made to the address below. Please include a SASE with all submissions. Thanks and hope to hear from you.
Patrick F. Durgin
`
`
`
` -----><-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

↑ Index

1063. SSSCHAEFER
Re: more boring chit-chat
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Mark:

Hate to think of myself as an essentialist, but am not sure what I did to convey this. I do, however, think that people are afraid of the personal and tend to over-intellectualize in response instead of just take care not to exploit it. (Judith Butler makes excellent points about this, better than I can.) I always thought that the point of the critique of the subject was to reveal the social within the personal, but the personal doesn't go away, does it? We have the perception, however distorted, of a self.

I think all I was trying to say is that I'm always a little nervous around the ways in which a group I belong to are unable to reflect on what they are doing, what effect it is having. I consider myself anti-sexist, but I don't always agree with everybody on my side of the issue. Sometimes they get suspicious if you disagree with some tiny point. Does this make me an essentialist?

Mark, please straighten me out as I have appreciated many of your comments to the list and feel you're a solid voice for these kinds of issues. If you or anyone can straighten me out about what was "worrisome" in those posts, would like to be enlightened.

Standard

↑ Index

1064. Poetics List
Welcome Message
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Rev. 3-31-98

(This message is sent out to all new and renewing subscribers and it is sent out to the list at the beginning of every month)

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier ([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons

New obstacles for exchange arise

Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently over 600 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. <color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>We also encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below). (THIS MEANS YOU).

</color>

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge. But we ask that you subscribe with your real name and we reserve the right to request additional information, including address and phone number. All subscription information you supply will remain confidential.

message, with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your

name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics

archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

  review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

 or try:

 review POETICS by name

 review POETICS by country

which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC;

in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

1065. Rachel Levitsky

Re: women/men/communication/cherry blossoms

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Nada--I really appreciate this post. I can't seem to catch up on the list and I keep having more I want to respond to but reading takes all the time and no time for considered response. I was particularly relating to the part about men's response to your poems. (Morpheal generally seems way out there and not at all in the discourse that I for one am having) I write a lot of raunchy poems. I don't consider them particularly autobiographical though of course life is a source of information. Men are always coming up to me after reading such poems. "I never thought that way about lesbians before" i.e. sexualized. I think often they want me to do to them physically what the poems do linguistically. Really they are so obvious. Admittedly, part of me enjoys this play. Their effort to define 'lesbian' and my slipping through the cracks. Someone, perhaps Katy wrote about becoming feminized in the west. I think that's happened to me too, west + age and choosing battles carefully. I recalled to a friend that from when I was a little girl I understood that I was the sort of girl the boys, and later, the men, would hit, because I always managed to piss them off so. I think its about defining the rules of the dialogue. If we break the rules by adding the complexity of our experience, i.e. we want to get fucked by something muscular and powerful without giving up power, there is a gap which calls for an inventive response. And I have still to see the demand for inventive/imaginative permutations of gender enter into the mainstream. Its one of the reasons I love my queer community--despite all the problems of being a pre-defined other.

more to say but later, no?

Rachel Democracy

Nada Gordon wrote:
>
> One thing that irks me greatly about this list is that it keeps me away > from the cherry blossoms, newly opened and splendid, not to mention the > jasmine and orange & purple pansies on my veranda

>
> but my head is so full with the discussion of this past week
>
> one reason I have not been more vocal was that I was off on a spring > vacation jaunt to Kanazawa and Kyoto. Kanazawa is an old castle town on > the Japan sea coast. Kyoto was so gorgeous I hallucinated gardens and > paper and designs for two full days after I came back
>
> I really have wanted to speak my piece, especially on the exchange that > went on between Katy and Rachel
>
> I agreed with both of them/neither of them
>
> because there are two women inside of me (and I'm asking now how many other > women feel this way):
>
> one who is historicized, bleating and roaring (the one who was ignored in > math class -- thanks Katy; or the one with the ruffled leotard -- hey, I > still wear those; or the one hitting misogyny over the head every day and > still not killing it)
>
> and one who, while not ungendered (or maybe, as Don wrote, "poeticized and > sexual, but not gendered"?), is a being -- a creature of the universe -- > empowered by nature (as Rachel wrote: choosing to, not take up the burden > of everything constructed as history that says YOU WOMAN,YOU ARE > DISENFRANCHISED)
>
> they toggle each other, these two women
>
> both of them acknowledge their debt and express gratitude to the pioneers > and strugglers; both pioneer when they can; the historicized woman > struggles; the other one moves on
>
> if we are always bleating and roaring, we can't be creative > we reify our disenfranchisement
>
> we should bleat and roar
> we are disenfranchised
> but we can do so much more (Katy's second model of power)
>

> exemplification:
>
> I hate women's writing workshops -- I have participated in a few and even, > uh, hostessed, one on this side of the Pacific. At workshops like these > the common response to my writing is puzzled silence, "what are you trying > to SAY with this?" or "there are some interesting images here, but I don't > you think you should be more accessible" as if that constituted a response > to the work. Mostly these are pieces that, by language poet standards, > might be considered highly SUBJECTIVE, even THEMATIC or LYRICAL. The kind > of writing that these women's groups seem to sanction, though, is reportage
> -- on relationships, childhood memories, life incidents, mostly, without > emphasis on the formal features of the writing, i.e. the poetry. The > responses tend to the "thank you for sharing" nurturing supportive > variety -- even to writing that, to my torqued-out ear, isn't interesting > at all. This seems to me to be Tannen's cooperative dynamic at its most > nauseating.
>
> Dodie, is your workshop any different? Or do you take issue with my > description?
>
> (an aside, but when I read Tannen's book I ws struck by the similarity of > the cooperative style to Japanese communication styles -- another topic > altogether)
>
> On the other hand, I hate mixed writing workshops even more, where the > women sit silent while the men light into each other with their ideas of > how they would have written the poem, with their all-important opinions.
> Voila, the competitive dynamic.
>
> I posted a poem called my penis this week and got a response like this > from morpheal. I excerpt it here:
>
> >Drumbeat sounds so damn violent. Sure you shouldn't change that ?
> >
> >I don't know....but it's too full of traditional metaphors and unclear > >as to what you really want to convey.....
>
> and my response to him:
>
> >1) "unclearness" as to what I want to "convey" happens to be my poetics.
> >If it were clear it would be prose.

> >
> >2) language as vehicle or conveyance is an obsolete metaphor -- get over > >it, dude.
> >
> >3) Did I solicit your opinion? You know, a big ugly fat guy came up to > >me after one of my readings/performances and told me how he thought I > >could have done it more effectively. I told him he could shove his > >patronizing attitude up his ass. DITTO.
>
> Hmm, so I guess I do roar. And am boorish sometimes and violent (sorry Ms.
> Tannen to disprove your points). I apologize to Morpheal for that, and for > quoting him here without permission. It does, though, offer an example of > how some men respond to some women's public utterances. No wonder we may > feel intimidated (but I guess I showed him -- gee). It also shows how the > public sphere, including this list, can be sites of viciousness -- as well > as (I don't remember who said it) conviviality. Or maybe that I just can't > take criticism?
>
> Ending with questions again:
>
> 1) Patriarchy is a miserable farce and we should work like hell to destroy > it, but not to replace it with...arggh...matriarchy! Smothering! Bossy!
> So how can we all parent (the) society (of the poetics list) equitably?
>
> 2) A fascinating-to-me side topic that Elizabeth Hatmaker touched on was > one of women in positions of institutional power, esp. teachers (what about > mothers), and a question about alternative pedagogies. Joe Amato has > written about this in great inspiring detail before, and as for me, I'm > delving into Paolo Freire and Julian Edge and William Glasser for ways to > balance the power relationship in the classroom, because always to be cast > as authority is awful. Not sure that this is directly related to POETICS > (although seems like just about anything can be, that's the beauty of it), > but I'd be happy to talk backchannel with any co-fascinatees.
>
> love and cherry blossoms (finally I can get to them)
>
> nada
>
> p.s. Yesterday I saw a Japanese mom teaching her adolescent daughter how > to throw a baseball!

↑ Index

1066. SSSCHAEFER

Re: more boring chit-chat

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Mark (sorry, but I feel I must go on):

Still thinking re: essentialism

I think it should be a commonplace by now that one does not use collective nouns without suspicion, anxiety, etc. The performative aspects of gender seem to me to be quite clear on this list. I think I'm getting in trouble for not knowing exactly how to play my part. What is my motivation? Perhaps, I should try to be clearer, however, I don't think quoting a passage from Lacan will help in this regard. (May help in other regards, for other things, no offense to Katy.)

One thing I'm noticing is that exactly what I feared would happen, is happening. I'm 'worrying' people simply by trying to get "women" to tell me exactly what the relevance of a gender conversation is to the act of writing poetry. Dodie implies, I think, that as to the degree that she is a "woman," it effect the content of her writing. Have not heard anyone address the form or technique issue. Here, I am reminded of John Shoptaw's interesting book on Ashbery wherein he outlines how Ashbery's "homosexuality" effected the way he wrote. Does not in any way imply that all homosexuals are "homotextual" writers, etc.

I am trying to find out if people still feel that poetry can be seen as "a haven" of sorts where various languages, techniques, forms can be explored, deployed in a way that is relatively ideologically less policed than say fashion or mainstream fiction. (Vaguely recall Bernstein making a point in Diacritics, I think, about this space I am trying to describe.) h

I can easily accept that poetry is necessarily theoretical, but I am wondering if Katy and others are attempting to make active methodological interventions into critical/philosophical discourse. I would ask them if they think their "poetry" is some how formally enhancing/progressing their thoughts on gender.

Does anyone have thoughts about this?

The reason I am asking is that when I see a title like "Artificial Memory #1" which is from Norma Cole (just happens to be on my mind), I tend to think first about "artificial memories," memory, construction, artifice, whathaveyou. I do not tend to focus entirely on "the gap" where I might discover only that her poem has some trace or residue that is the result of her gender construction which I already suspect since I have participated in the pedagogy that is fascinated with what is "not on the page" sometimes to the exclusion of what is "on the page." For this reason, I have to ask questions.

Or else I have to I leave that entire conversation to the "writers of dissertations" as Pound called them.

↑ Index

1067. Mark Prejsnar
Feminism or barbarism
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Standard,

In response to what's quoted below....

I read your first substantial post (I think it was the first) in response to Katy, as questioning whether a man could genuinely critique sexism. This is where the lack of special other clues, tone of voice etc. gets us into all kindsa trouble on the Net. Entirely my fault and I apologize. It seemed in context that the sentences I'm thinking of meant, "Men by their nature probably can't rebel/work against sexism," rather than what you meant, which is apparently, "This is a very problematic, unresolved issue: how do men work effectively against sexism anyway?" or something like that....

Anyhow, glad for your comments; as quite a number of folks on the List (unless I'm misreading them too!!) question the importance of these issues altogether!

Mark P.
@lanta

On Tue, 31 Mar 1998, SSSCHAEFER wrote:

> Mark:
>
> Hate to think of myself as an essentialist, but am not sure what I did to convey this. I do, however, think that people are afraid of the personal and tend to over-intellectualize in response instead of just take care not to exploit it. (Judith Butler makes excellent points about this, better than I can.) I always thought that the point of the critique of the subject was to reveal the social within the personal, but the personal doesn't go away, does it? We have the perception, however distorted, of a self.
>
> I think all I was trying to say is that I'm always a little nervous around the ways in which a group I belong to are unable to reflect on what they are doing, what effect it is having. I consider myself anti-sexist, but I don't always agree with everybody on my side of the issue. Sometimes they get suspicious if you disagree with some tiny point. Does this make me an essentialist?
>
> Mark, please straighten me out as I have appreciated many of your comments to the list and feel you're a solid voice for these kinds of issues. If you or > anyone can straighten me out about what was "worrisome" in those posts, would like to be enlightened.

>
> Standard

↑ Index

1068. David Gitin
unsubscribe
Tue 31 Mar 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

charset="iso-8859-1"

charset="iso-8859-1"

<!DOCTYPE HTML PUBLIC "-//W3C//DTD W3 HTML//EN">
<HTML>
<HEAD>

<META content=3Dtext/html;charset=3Diso-8859-1 =
http-equiv=3DContent-Type>
<META content=3D'"MSHTML 4.72.2106.6"' name=3DGENERATOR>
</HEAD>
<BODY bgColor=3D#ffffff>
Gitin</FONT></DIV></BODY></HTML>

↑ Index

1069. daniel bouchard
readings in NYC this week
Tue 31 Mar 1998

> Various readings coming up this week:
>
>
> Wednesday night: Renee Gladman & Diane DiPrima at the Poetry Project 8pm
>
> Saturday at Here (145 6th ave) - Tonya Foster & Anselm Berrigan. 3pm.
>
>
> Sunday at Zinc Bar (90 W. Houston) - Daniel Bouchard & Ange Mlinko.
>
>

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

1070. Mark Prejsnar
essentialistically non chit-chat
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Standard....In response to your second post (we seem to be criss-crossing each other in real time here, an odd experience..)

I think you raise very important points. I don't always follow your exact arguments; but these are very important issues. Part of what I believe you are questioning, is whether political weight should be allowed to squash the areas of free-play and kindling-flash out of contemporary poetry.

I don't feel that that is a danger, but this may just be my temperment. I don't feel that a poet such as Fanny Howe (see: Introduction to the World) or Susan Howe, or Bernstein or Silliman, or Spahr in Response, or Mark Wallace, have allowed political concerns, often with gender dimensions, sometimes not, to flatten the space for free play inherent in the act of poetry.

But then they all feel the exigencies of political twist and strain, as a part of their consciousness and concrete lives. When that is the case neither poetry nor poetics are narrowed by including a political dimension (--the only narrowing would take place, if they excluded it).

Thus, in my own work as poet and editor, and in the way I see most poetry I encounter today, there is a strong political component. And if there weren't (given who I am) my work and consciousness would be "ideologically policed." But this shouldn't (can't, actually) be imposed from without. If you don't feel certain political issues (including gender ones) as at the flash-point of what you're doing at a given moment, then you shouldn't include those issues in your work. I might argue with someone that, as a person, they need to give more thought/involvement to one political issue or another....But until they had begun to feel it as lived turmoil, it would have no place in their poetry. And twenty years on the left will convince you that you don't get people feeling stuff in a lived way, by bullying, only by arguments and respect.

The equation is: the person, enmeshed in the grinding societal matrix, generates concerns, politics, values, commitments; that helps shape who the person is; and that person is the poet...only what that person feels is important, can inform the poetry. It can't be imposed from the outside. You should indeed resist "ideological policing" if you feel it is being imposed on your or anyone's poetry....But people who are deeply involved with the political edge of things, are not necessarily ideologically policing you. I never looked good in a uniform, myself.

Mark P.
@lanta

↑ Index

1071. Mark Prejsnar
Misc. Proj. #5 available
Tue 31 Mar 1998

ANNOUNCING:

issue #5 of Atlanta's inscrutable poetry mag,

Misc. Proj.

Now available.....

%%*
FEATURING:

*a review of the Schulz/Kinsella chapbook, voice-overs

*a polemic on recent debates in U.S. poetics

*new work by: Mark Wallace, Bobbie West, Sheila E. Murphy, Tom Mandel, Jacques Debrot, Standard Schaefer, T.L. Effbesee, M. Magoolaghan, Nick Piombino, John M. Bennett.

%%*%

single issue: $3.00

subscription for four issues: $11.00

make checks payable to Mark Prejsnar

Misc. Proj.
c/o Prejsnar
641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11
Atlanta, GA 30306

↑ Index

1072. Clark D Lunberry
Woodland Pattern Book Center
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Excuse the length of this posting but the world needs to know about this bookstore. Below is an article/interview about Woodland Pattern Book Center in Milwaukee, Wisconsin that was just published in "The Review of Contemporary Fiction" (spring 1998). In all my journeys, no bookstore (with an emphasis on poetry) has even come close to the quality of this place. Others on this list may be able to vouch for this, and if you are in the area it is definitely worth a visit (or by phone: [redacted]). (Any errors in spelling, etc. are due to my faulty scanner). ----------

The Bookstore in America: Woodland Pattern

The previous article in this series focused on Borders Books and Music as one possibility of what the bookstore and bookselling might be in the future, and what forebodes for the future and avail ability of books in the United States. Following that article with one devoted to Woodland Pattern Book Center in Milwaukee might seem a ridiculous second step, but Woodland Pattern is a very interesting alternative to, not only a chain bookstore, but conventional independent stores. My first experience with Woodland Pattern must have been just about the time that it opened in 1979, now almost twenty years ago. It had been recommended to me by the poet-novelist Paul Metcalf, who had either given a reading there or was about to give a reading. Located in a neighborhood of Milwaukee rather than in prime retail space in the downtown, and rather inconspicuously settled in the middle of a block that does not, I believe, have any other retail space, it's rather easy to drive by the store a few times without noticing it, something I usually manage to do. My first visit to Woodland Pattern meant that I had to drive from Chicago to Milwaukee, approximately 90 miles, or 180 round-trip, solely for the purpose of going to what Metcalf had promised me was a very good store. What I found was a store that had an incredible selection of literary magazines that could not be found in Chicago (and also had several back issues of these magazines, which perhaps spoke to the popularity of the magazines but also to the proprietors' commitment to keeping things available), and the best selection of poetry (perhaps this should be "poetry," because it was an in-depth selection of what one of the proprietors most liked-the Black Mountain poets, the New York School, San Francisco poets, the Objectivists; noticeably absent were the poets who were receiving the big awards and those most often published by Knopf, Norton, and Farrar, Straus). There were also tapes of writers reading, a criticism section, a rather unconventional children's section; at least, this is all that I remember. I spent several hours there, and began what became a once or twice a year trip there, and one that cost me (aside from travel expenses) far more than I could afford. And several of those trips over the years were also related to or planned around attending one of the readings that were held (and still are) in a special room attached to the store, which is also used for art exhibits (that is, there are no books in the room).

As the interview that follows makes clear, Woodland Pattern was begun as an alternative store, not a marketing endeavor to counter competitors, which at that time would have been Webster's (now defunct) and Schwartz's; the chains, at least as we know them now, did not exist. Woodland Pattern began as a conception of its founders, one of whom was obsessed with poetry, the other with ... a variety of things. They saw their role as serving a community. Because of their interests, they thought that poetry should be the primary focus of the store and that it should be well stocked and kept there, regardless of sales; and there should be this public reading space that would feature the writers they liked and would become a very interesting space for exhibits of various kinds; if the store failed financially, then at least the failure would be on their terms. And they began as a nonprofit endeavor, not just (I assume) because there in fact was no profit to be made, but because such a status made them eligible for the little amount of grant money available to things bookish.

Woodland Pattern has now survived almost twenty years, despite being so non-commercial. And it has survived long enough to see itself modeled in other forms of retail-the "boutique." So, twenty years ago, the only kind of "coffee shop" was the greasy spoon on the corner, and no one could have foreseen such a thing as Starbucks, never mind the several non-chain specialty coffee- houses that exist even in the smallest of American towns. Woodland Pattern is, aside from some of the other products it sells, a specialty store that emphasizes what everyone knows cannot support a bookstore-poetry. And yet, because of this specialization and because of other strategic thinking on the part of its founders, the store goes on, and on. Despite what the founders fear would be the effect of a superstore moving in nearby, Woodland Pattern Book Center is, I think, an example of the kind of store that a chain could not compete with, nor would want to compete with. Woodland Pattern is doing something essentially different from traditional retail bookselling, and stays carefully within the niche it has created for itself.

In terms of the future of bookstores in America, one question is whether a Woodland Pattern-type store can be duplicated elsewhere by people who could learn from its experience, or whether this is a store/center that is unique and completely dependent upon its founders. So, for instance, could Chicago sustain such an operation, in effect becoming the place for poetry, the place for poets to read, and then the place for whatever other interests the founders have? And if this is possible for poetry, isn't it also possible for literary translation?

perhaps even literary fiction? experimental writing? In other words, if the chains have become the all-purpose and widely stocked bookstores, is there room now for highly specialized stores that can do things that are beyond what the chains are doing? Of course, all of the above represent rather small markets, and therefore perhaps all must of necessity be nonprofits. If Woodland Pattern could be duplicated, we then have another model-other than that presented by the chains-for what the future of bookselling in America might be. (John O'Brien)

INTERVIEW WITH WOODLAND PATTERN OWNERS, KARL GARTUNG AND ANNE KINGSBURY

RCF: Let's start at the beginning. How did the idea for Woodland Pattern come about? Karl Gartung: Well, there was a bookstore called Boox, Incorporated that was started by Karl Young and Tom Montag when they were running Margins magazine and Tom had a little distribution deal he was running on the side out of Margins-that was about the time that Leonard Randolph was at the National Endowment and they decided to set up a distribution project. Since Margins was pretty well regarded, they were invited to submit a grant. So they submitted a grant for both distribution projects at Boox, Incorporated. It was not nonprofit at that point, so they had to route all the money through the state arts board. It was a piddling grant, $5,000 or something like that. One of the things they were supposed to do was to hire someone to watch the store and they hired me. They had a little gallery hooked to it. It was in the "lobby" of a theater called Theater X here in downtown Milwaukee. RCF: When did Boox, Incorporated open? KG: That was opened in 1973-74. When I arrived, it was altogether voluntary. Publishers sent in their books and it turned out to be a donation; they never got paid for them because there was no money. The grant gave Boox, Incorporated money for salary and they had money to buy some books. When they interviewed me, I was complaining that the only person I was really interested in at the time, which shows my limitations I suppose, was William Carlos Williams. I had been looking around for all this poetry and all I could find were poets like Richard Wilbur and Robert Lowell and all the confessional poets and the Beats and so on and so forth. The Beats were interesting but not very sustaining as far as I was concerned. Now that judgment on them is just a judgment on me, but what I was really looking for were the Objectivists and the Black Mountain poets but I didn't know they existed, let alone where they were. RCF: When does this hook up with something called Woodland Pattern? KG: Well, I worked in this store and here were all these books. Charles Olson and the Objectivists were on the shelves already. So I was home at that point. I had always been involved with theater and Anne was a visual artist and here we were in the lobby of this theater and it had a little gallery and it had a bookstore. But we outgrew the situation of sharing the building with the theater. It got to be cumbersome and we wanted to invite people into town to do readings and we couldn't guarantee that we would have a room for them to read in. We started looking around to move. At that point we also decided that we didn't want to be running all the money through the arts board. We also decided we'd change our name. We found it in Paul Metcalf's book Apalache. That's where "Woodland Pattern" came from: ". . . south of Lake Superior, a culture center: the Woodland Pattern, with pottery but without agriculture, imported without loss from Lake Baikal, Siberia . . ." We found this little building that we could afford; Anne was losing her job with the university, so we had some of her retirement money and she was willing. We bought the building and moved Woodland Pattern up there. By that time we had gone from one hundred titles to about five thousand titles. Anne Kingsbury: We decided we wanted to buy a building because we wanted to keep the rent stable. We were looking with some other groups and they found a building before we did and they didn't have room for us. They fixed it up beautifully, but they had only a year lease. At the end of the year they couldn't afford the rent of the building they had improved so much. We decided that we weren't going to do that. KG: We had another opportunity: there was a high school that was closing and they offered us room. I thought to myself that this is still a teaching facility and some parent is going to come through here and see William Burroughs or John Giorno or our exhibits. So the first time that would happen we thought we wouldn't have a place anyway. RCF: In what year did the current location open? AK: We stepped into the building to start tearing down walls on December 26th, 1979. We opened to the public about six to eight weeks later with one room. That included changing the building and getting that one room ready, which is currently the middle room. And people went through what looked like a dingy, warehouse type thing to get to it. The second room we opened up was the gallery. Our first program was an independent filmmaker from Chicago. KG: We had a whole series of independent films. That became our performance series at the time. There were several local filmmakers who were involved, and some Chicago filmmakers came up. Then came independent music and then the poetry program and fiction readings. And then we had the gallery shows and we quickly started the mural project on the building. RCF: When Woodland Pattern was started, was it nonprofit? KG: Yes. We knew that if we wanted to be a bookseller and make a profit, we wouldn't be able to sell new literature. AK: There are a lot of really good bookstores in Milwaukee. There are some good independent bookstores and I know that some of the chains are better than others. But to carry the back issues of the Review of Contemporary Fiction, for instance, and to give it shelf space and to carry some of our chapbooks and to keep the prices consistent, well, you're not going to make the money per square foot on these books if you want to hang onto them and not turn them over after a certain amount of time. You need a subsidy or independent wealth. In 1982, we had a book conference, a small press book fair. We got Ted Wilentz to come in as a keynote speaker. He used to run the 8th Street Bookshop in New York and he was also a consultant around the world. We held the event at the university. I took him over to Woodland Pattern. I knew about his background as a bookseller and consultant and I worried that when he walked in he would say, "You better get some romance and mysteries and Westerns in here." And when he walked in he looked around and he said, " You need to be subsidized. You need to keep going but it won't be possible in a commercial situation. But it's important that you keep going so you're going to need to get other kinds of help." It was a reinforcement for us. When you're getting started, you're not quite sure if everything will work out. KG: At that time, if you walked into any commercial bookstore in the country they would always have a poetry section of twenty-five titles and they were always the same ones. To have a bookstore where people would walk into the store, and even if they were literate they wouldn't recognize ninety-nine percent of the titles, well, to think you could make that self-supporting is ludicrous. RCF: What kind of support was available at the time? AK: We received funding from the National Endowment for the Arts from the time we were incorporated until they reconfigured last year and eliminated the literature program. Last year was the first year we did not receive NEA funding. I applied under one of their categories and we didn't make it. But before that, we had received money every year. So you never could take it for granted, but there was always that. The state has an arts council and we would get a little funding there. It's a source that has been consistent. The city has program money and the county has organizational operations support money But everything is diminishing, partially because of the National Endowment cutbacks. The state receives money from the NEA, and when those funds dry up or are reconfigured, then they eliminate the kinds of funds that we can apply for. So where we used to be eligible to receive money in three categories, now we are eligible only for one. And the city is the same way; we used to receive money in two categories, now we can apply only for one. Thank goodness they're still going, hut there is less to apply for. RCF: How do you compensate for this? AK: Well, we've been lucky. I have this pouch that I'm making with a quote from Emily Dickinson. The quote says, "Luck is not chance, it's toil. Fortune's expensive smile is earned." We've been fortunate that when something has been taken away, we've been in a position to take advantage of an opportunity, which is luck. Doors close and you scramble around and you try to find something else. So far, we've been able to do that, although last year we lost a big part of our budget. With last year's budget, we figured we lost over a third because we lost funding from the National Endowment. But now it's back up to what it was before. Our grant from the Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Fund helped us leverage money from the other foundations in town. And the Lannan Foundation has helped us out with funding for programming for a second year, which is really great. And we're trying different fund-raising techniques. KG: We're involved in a really big project right now. They're building a big convention center downtown. We sold them on the idea that a Wisconsin convention center ought to be different than any other by having the words of our own writers on the walls. AK: It's a four-block convention center. It will be the biggest one in the state. We submitted a response to the public arts and we were the top proposal that was accepted. We're putting in the work of between fifty and seventy-five writers, historical and contemporary, throughout the building. It's not going to be painted on the walls because they will eventually have to be repainted, of course. So the letters will be raised or etched in glass or cut into the wood. Words from Wisconsin writers or ones that had substantial connections to Wisconsin. That was and is a big project. So we have that money But since the budget was reconfigured, we're going to end up doing a lot of the work without compensation because we want the project to be successful. KG: When we first started our programming here, and it carries right through to this project for the Midwest Express Center, we always said that we should pay writers that we brought in for readings. We've always made sure we've had enough to pay people's way, but normally more than that. This may be the first project in the country of it's kind where people are actually getting paid for their writing. RCF: Have you ever done much with mail order? Do people come here and recognize your store as a place to get poetry and then order via the mail? AK: We've been working on that. Years ago we received funding for two years under the Community Development Block Grant. They gave us money for computers and an inventory program and a half-salary to do this. We have all the inventory on computer, which is twenty- seven thousand titles right now with fourteen pieces of information on each title, for cross-referencing. So you could call and all we have to do is look it up and send it out. The second step for us was to create annotated lists of ethnically specific areas. We don't have an annotated list of the poetry because it's just too huge. But we do have lists for Native American, Asian/Asian American, Africa/African American/Caribbean, and Hispanic/Latino. This information is available at no cost to people who ask for these catalogs. There's a lot of information in them. They've gone to almost every state in the union, plus Japan and Norway. We also get orders from tribal libraries across the country. There is some mail order, but we would not exist on mail order. It's sort of a supplement to the mission of letting people know what's available. KG: It has actually become quite a substantial part of our book sales. We've been working hard at that and it will improve some more. Pretty soon we're going to have a web page. We can generate a catalog on demand and that's what we'll do, so that it's up to date. We had the opportunity to become a distribution company at one point and just do a traditional kind of mail-order distribution. But I thought it was really important for some kid to be able to walk in the store and find his way. I think it's really important for there to be a point of contact. Maybe that will happen more and more on the web, I don't know. AK: We would like to use the internet to reach those people who would be interested in what we have but don't know about us. It never made sense for us to do an expensive catalog for two copies of something that was $1.95. But over the computer you can just enter it or take it out. RCF: How many readings do you sponsor in a year, poetry and fiction? KG: The most we've ever done in a year was eighty. But that was eighty readings, music performances, exhibitions, whatever. AK: We do between forty and fifty public events annually. And that includes gallery openings and music events, but the majority of our events are readings. Some are invited national readers coming in, some are regional, some are local. And then we have things like our classes. They have a reading at the end of a class. RCF: What are these classes? And who teaches them? AK: We have writing classes for kids, teenagers, and adults. We have a group of people who are teaching. If someone wants to teach a class, they would send a proposal to us. If it looked pretty good we would work out a percentage payment with that person. We would then advertise it and we would run a class. RCF: Do you track the amount of people who come in for the readings and performances? AK: Yes. We track the number of people coming in. We have exhibits running all the time. KG: We've had all kinds of exhibits, although we're moving more and more towards having people who have done books or are involved with book art. In the spring we're going to have a show by the Waldrops, Keith and Rosmarie. RCF: Why did you move into the least likely neighborhood in Milwaukee? AK: Many of our decisions have been both philosophical and pragmatic. Philosophically, what's the point of moving next-door to the university when there are so many commercial bookstores as well as university bookstores? There's not as great a need. We wanted to be where there wasn't something. Pragmatically we could afford the location, so it worked together. KG: And it's close enough to the university and a lot of university people live in the neighborhood. It's low rent. It's an old working-class neighborhood. RCF: How would you describe your role in the community? AK: I would say that ideally our role would be that of a catalyst. We're putting people together with literature and we hope that something special is going to happen. You may come in and say, "Well I really don't like poetry but I'm interested in baseball." And I could pull out Tom Clark's book on baseball. You might suddenly think that poetry wasn't just something that you hated in public school and was boring and was for ladies with teacups. There are these preconceptions of what it might be. Our role mainly is to put people in touch with their interests so they can say, "This is part of my life and poetry can be part of my life and it's dealing with subject matter I'm interested in." You start where a person is. If they like one thing, you can show them something else. I really believe a lot of it has to do with exposure. When people first come into the new music concerts we're having, especially the improvisational concerts where nothing is notated and it isn't necessarily melodic or rhythmic, some people say "This is awful." But after you've heard it you start saying, "I like this better than that." You start making judgments on experience instead of an uneducated conception. I think our role is to be a matchmaker between people and books. Because we are nonprofit we are able to do that. Everybody who works here-and our tastes are widely different-has a commitment. They have their own enthusiasm. RCF: Is Woodland Pattern a model for what others could do in other places? AK: I think every place has it's own kind of need. That's what makes all the literary centers different because they're responding to their community. You could have people that have equal commitment, but they have different interests so it would take a slightly different spin. It really has been a part of our lives. It's something that you wake up in the middle of the night with or you poke your partner when they're trying to go to sleep and start bringing up these conversational things. It is your life. In a sense, that's really a fortunate situation because you don't spend a lot of your life doing a job while you spend a little of your life doing what you want to do. KG: We didn't start out from the standpoint of wanting to be a commercial bookseller. We were plopped into a situation where it was already turning towards a nonprofit grant world. That's fortunate-and unfortunate because it shouldn't be necessary. In some ways we've been sort of straddling. You can't just decide what you're going to do based on what people are willing to fund, which is what a lot of people do. They may not die out but they don't look like themselves after a month. AK: We've also had an amazing piece of luck and I don't know that that credit has been given. But one of the reasons we were able to survive at a certain time was because of David Wilk's Truck Distribution. KG: David and I got to be good friends. We used to drive up to Minneapolis and I would go into his basement, which is where he was running his distribution project. We worked out a deal because he was trying to get the books out, too. He was committed the same way we were. He would put things in our store on consignment. We were able to have a lot more books in the store than we had bought. At one point, between David and a lot of other friends who would consign stuff to us, the stock was about two-thirds consigned because there was no other way. AK: When the distribution changed hands and turned into Bookslinger, it grandfathered in. I think we were probably the only account that they sent books on consignment-but of course that's not happening anymore. Consignment allowed us to have a range of things that we didn't know were wonderful but if you don't know it and you don't have a lot of money, where are you going to put your money? Because we ve had those books, we know we want to keep having them. But we've also built up our finances. KG: Another good piece of luck is that we were always profoundly aware of our ignorance. There were two things that came out of that. One was that if we found a press that published a book we liked, we would order pretty much the whole catalog. We would let the editors make our choice for us. The other thing was that we had to trust friends from the beginning. Karl Young and Tom Montag would go through catalogs with me. We would choose to order that way. But it wasn't by committee. Karl had one set of tastes and I respected him. Tom had another set and I respected him and anybody in town that I respected had another taste and if they wanted to go through the catalogs and mark things I would order them. In that way we could build up a store that wasn't made up of just one sensibility. RCF: How does that work now? AK: The same way. We all have input. People can come in and suggest things. Whenever a writer comes through Karl always asks them, "Who are you reading? Who are you interested in?" If it's not someone we have on hand, then we make sure we order them. Lately we've had a lot of it on hand, which is really nice. But there is still so much we don't know. We just keep asking. RCF: Who had the idea for your promotional mailings? KG: That was a practical thing. At one point it was cheaper to do it that way. It's not cheaper to do it that way anymore. We were holding these events by people that no one knew anything about, which was the whole point of doing them. The way we do our reading series is that we feel somebody is an important writer, we bring him into town and then acquaint people in town. So say you're having this event by Paul Metcalf. You can send out a press release saying he is the great-grandson of Herman Melville and you can put it in a calendar and maybe get it announced in the paper and maybe get yourself and your wife and some friends and Paul Metcalf to come. Or you can ask Paul to send you some stuff that hasn't been published yet and put it in the brochure with a little biography and so on. I wanted to do that for each individual person because it seemed like a way to honor them. I've always hated getting stuff in the mail where I had to keep the whole thing because there was only one thing I was interested in. So I thought if you have this thing and it's not tied together with staples or something people could open it up, go through the envelope and throw everything away except the one thing they were interested in and put that on their refrigerator. The other thing was that printers always have pieces of paper that they cut off to make specific lengths. We developed a relationship with our printer where we could go in and check their waste and design stuff to fit it. AK: Now our mailing list has grown and it's a lot harder to print cutoffs because it's harder to get three thousand pieces of whatever it was. We have gone to a self-mailed flyer for the majority of the newsletters and things we're sending out because it costs the same whether you're doing a small piece or whether you're doing a big piece. They don't want to throw this stuff away if it can be used. We're trying to save money and we're trying to work around what they have. KG: We used to do a mailing for every single event. But then when we started having two or three events in a month, even in those days when it would be cheaper, it would become really time consuming and expensive, let alone counting the time staff puts into it. Now we would have a whole bunch of odd sheets and we could just stuff them in a brown envelope and mail the whole thing. RCF: Do you think everybody in Milwaukee who should know about

Woodland Pattern does know? If not, how much does that bother you and what do you do to try to change that? KG: We've done all kinds of different things. We used to have a dial-a-poem service, but that finally died a couple of years ago. I would record a reading or I would read a poem. And we had an answering machine and we would put that on there and they would get that as a greeting instead of "How are you? Call me back when I'm home." We ran that for about fifteen years. That was the reason we started recording the readings. AK: We have chosen to put our money into the programming and into the newsletter rather than buying adds. The publicity we get is community listings. But because we've been around so long we have a pretty decent working relationship with certain people at the newspaper. They're not going to do a big article on every event, but we re getting some coverage now, so that's okay. KG: It's really hit and miss though. We don't have somebody who trusts us the way we want to trust other people. So we can't get regular attention for all the writers that come through. RCF: What about radio attention, NPR? Do you get any attention from them? KG: Barely. Very little. We've worked at that hard from time to time. I think what we're going to do if we can afford it is to start being a donor, as Woodland Pattern, to public radio so that they have to put something on the air and then maybe we can persuade them to use our tapes. AK: Our goal is for Woodland Pattern to reach a point where we would be recognized as a major cultural institution in the literary arts. Now that doesn't mean we would be downtown in a glamorous edifice. We want the literary arts to be taken as seriously as the symphony. We're not an alternative, we're the thing. We're not an alternative to something else for literary arts; there isn't anything else. KG: We're a public institution. The "public" literary institutions have basically been the university English departments. But they're not really public. And they're not really user friendly. When Anne was involved with the university, we both had decided that the university had become a kind of a priesthood, all these people were speaking in a specialized language to each other. I was pretty disillusioned already. And I wasn't finding any better stuff there, up until we moved to Milwaukee, than I was finding in the commercial bookstores. The reason I got into the position at Boox, Incorporated was that I had taken a class with Jerry Rothenberg, who was here at University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee. So in two years I basically went from rereading Williams to seeing live John Cage and Jerry Rothenberg, Charlie Marrow, Gary Snyder, David Antin, Jackson Mac Low, Jack Higgins, and Allan Kaprow. All these people were coming to the university, but I just had this feeling that we didn't want to be part of it. They can do what we do any time they want to and they can do it better but they won't. RCF: Do you work with the university at all? KG: We're trying to work with teachers for textbooks. Actually one of the members of our board is a special-collections librarian. He's ordering hooks from us (we've be en assured that that's not a conflict of interest). When we have writers come through, their books will end up in that collection. And if they're book people, they might give a talk at one of the university's book forums. AK: It works better when it's person-to-person so that there are people over there in the university that we work with on an individual level and then they use their connections there. KG: Like Native American studies. Kim Blaeser is a very good fiction writer and poet at University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee. We cosponsor some writers with her. They'll come into town to work with her and then we'll have a public event. AK: We supply a lot of books for Native American studies. A lot of students come to Woodland Pattern to buy books for their Native American classes. We have a good Native American section. But then the money we make from those books is almost always turned over into bringing a writer that fits that particular group. Maybe the money you spend here can turn into a writer for your class. That works out for both of us. KG: Our new idea is to have a literary center in the schools, to have somebody there to bring writers in when they come to us. AK: We're now working with one high school-this is part of our Lila Wallace proposal- Marquette University High School. This happens to be a private high school but there is a teacher there who is really interested in expanding her kids' experiences beyond the normal classroom. She's taking them to readings. She's taking them to plays. Because we met she is now assigning them to come to several readings at Woodland Pattern. And they're going to write or draw responses to these experiences. Now she's broadening her curriculum to work with other faculty members in the arts and music. Then they're going to come back to Woodland Pattern and do a public presentation of what they got from the semester. It's for the kids that they want to come. I think anytime you say, "You forty people have to go somewhere" you're going to get people who are not as interested. But the ones who are interested are the ones who are going to come and then they will respond. RCF: By working with high-school students you begin teaching them about how you go into a bookstore, and how to feel comfortable in them. AK: The other thing is, at least in the arts, and I won't generalize for every city, but in Milwaukee the major core audience for the ballet, the symphony, the theater, is an aging audience. It's people in their forties and above. They're trying to reach a younger audience, and that's not that far off from us. We want to reach into another generation of readers and writers. One of the things that may make us a little different from some of the other centers is that we've always felt that the reader was an important part of the center. Some of the other centers are very much writer-oriented and that's not bad. But now they're seeing that maybe they need to connect the writer and reader. That's something we've always felt was really obvious. We want younger readers to get involved. If you get younger readers, you'll get younger writers because there is going to be some overlap there. RCF: If Barnes and Noble moved in down the street from you, what effect would it have? I've always thought of Woodland Pattern as a model for how a chain really couldn't compete. It seems if a Borders or Barnes and Noble opened up near you, your business would increase because they wouldn't have a number of poetry books that you have and they would send customers down the street to you. KG: We do have relationships with those people out of necessity, somewhat. It's not necessary for us to carry some things, some of the really mass-market things by writers that might be of interest to many people. We can save our money on that by sending those people to Barnes and Noble and likewise for them. AK: Actually, we have a good working relationship with every bookstore in town. They know they can send people to us. They know what we have. Even Barnes and Noble will send people over. That's the advantage of their hiring locally because they have local people that know what we have. But we will also send other people to other bookstores and we might call to make sure they have it on hand. The primary thing is service to people who want to find whatever it is they want. For instance, we do not have a spirituality section. But there is a bookstore in town that has a lot of books that deal with that and we regularly send people. That works out fine. They send people to us for what we carry. RCF: If you could project ten years from now and if money were not a problem, what would you be doing that you're not doing now? AK: We'd be paying benefits to staff. KG: I'd probably be working here for money instead of as a volunteer. I've always kept my truck-driving job as a buffer against the rise and fall of business. AK: Whatever happens ten years from now is going to be different because we'll both be ten years older and we need to find people who want to continue on and there will be some overlap with what we are doing. RCF: Are those younger people coming along? KG: They're coming along now. Peggy Hong is the person who is running the workshop program and getting workshops and writers into schools. She's working half-time Lisa Corona was an intern last year from a little college called Cardinal Stritch and now we re hiring her. She's really good. She'll be working on audience development and financial management projects. Carolyn Elmer does all of our ordering. She's a real book person. Amy Hoffman is doing a lot of volunteer coordination. And Brooke Barker does all of the work on our catalogs and does inventory work on our computers. AK: There may be new things that we don't see yet, but we've never had the idea that we wanted to grow just to grow. We want to do what we do really. really well and maybe make it deeper rather than wider. We don't know what we don't know, so I'm not sure of what we're not doing that we haven't thought of yet. We would also like, I think, to maintain and keep a professional staff. What we're finding is that younger people are in greater debt coming out of school. I'm amazed at what students have to pay on student loans. It's incredible. Bright, young, literary people, at this point, might not be able to work for a place like Woodland Pattern because we can't afford to pay the money they would need to pay for their education. We want to get to a point where we can pay people like that, to pay people that would be satisfied with making a lot less money than they could make in other places. At this point, it's so much less-not compared to commercial bookstores because bookstores notoriously don't pay well for general staff-than other kinds of occupations or locations. You can have a passion, but you still have to eat. Especially if you have a family. Those are things you take into account. We've been really fortunate with the people who are on the floor now with us. But I don't know if we can expect the next generation to subsidize the center the same way the current generation has been subsidizing it with wages and no benefits and stuff like that. RCF: How important is it that Woodland Pattern continue after both of you are retired or gone? KG: I don't know. Obviously it's important to me to have it be here, and I think for Anne as well, just for our own education. If it isn't, then people will be back where they were. AK: I would like to see it continue but that will kind of depend on who wants to see it continue past us. We can do what we can but we can't force it. We're not going to be able to make someone have the same feeling for it. It will depend on the demand. RCF: One of the theories about publishers is that they have their own special, limited time. You can look back at Barney Rosset at Grove Press. In some ways he got absorbed by commercial publishing which could then do the books that he broke the ground for. I don't know that the same thing applies to what you're doing; that it's so dependent upon the time in which it was happening, that you only do something really unique for a while and then you become like everybody else. KG: That's a good question because we've always tried to fill a kind of cultural gap. My reason for doing this was because, traditionally, you would only find out about a writer after they were already dead. The ones I was interested in were the ones whom I would find out about after they were gone. I think that finding writers is still going to be necessary whether of not we do it or whoever replaces us. I think someone will find a way to be a conduit. AK: What we've tried, and what I hope continues, is to make people aware of the number of choices that they have amongst all these titles, all these writers. And as Karl said, emphasizing a current group of people who are writing rather than people who are gone. Classics are wonderful and they're classics because they're really good. KG: But they're classics because they had an audience in their own time. AK: And we want to encourage people, in a sense, to find the classics of now and to have the chance to speak with these writers. Some of the really exciting things that we've had the privilege of being part of is introducing a writer to a publisher and have something come out of it. Sometimes it ends up being a book a year or two years later. It's exciting to know that that happened in our living room or at Woodland Pattern, to see those kinds of connections being made. So maybe when Karl or I aren't here anymore, it will stop for whatever reason and it will be an encapsulated, special time. But I'm hoping that it can continue. And it won't be the same, it wouldn't be the same. No one is going to be our clones. So it will be different with whatever, whoever it is that cares about it. RCF: Could you imagine some student who is interested in books coming here to study what you're doing and then going off to wherever that person's from to start something very similar? Because what you have set up really is, in my experience, unique. Perhaps someone who could look at what you've done, study what mistakes you may have made, how you would have done certain things differently, and go off and do their own thing or make a variation on it. KG: Sure. I could see that, but there would probably have to be a Borders or a Barnes and Noble or an independent bookstore there, too. There would have to be other resources for the kinds of books we don't sell. What we've tried to do here is fill in the cultural gaps. If a graduate student were to start up something like Woodland Pattern, if would be because they have something that they're interested in and that they want to share, but also to fill a gap that exists in their community. Someone night be able to do what we're doing where there really isn't any kind of resources at all. I think it depends on the needs or wants of the community. We almost always have one or two people here at Woodland Pattern, employees or otherwise, that are reading the store carefully No one has gone off and created another literary center, but they've done other things, like magazines. What we think Woodland Pattern could become is a place where you can find a writer and that writer's sources, the writers he or she read. AK: I think what you might find is unique about Woodland Pattern has to do with us being a literary center rather than a bookstore. KG: And the readings being a literary activity and not a booksale opportunity. AK: We're thrilled if we sell books when the writer comes through but the writer is not considered a commodity. They're coming because they're doing something important and we want to share them and whatever they're writing about, with our community. KG: Our readings haven't been directly tied to book publications. Now it's more and more likely that it would be connected to the publication of a particular book, but it's not probable. It happens more regularly now but I bet you eighty percent of our readings have nothing to do with a new book. Maybe more than that. If it has to do with a book it's probably a happy accident. If we hear somebody is on a book tour, like with Curbstone or Coffee House or some other press, or if somebody contacts us and they're going to be on a book tour and they want to read at our place, then it would be connected with a particular book. But it would happen because we were already interested in them. AK: That's true. We're at a point now where we do get a lot of inquiries from people coming through. We can't do all the readings that people ask us to do, at least not the way that we're doing them now. Each reading, each event is special. We really do try to build an audience for each event and not just throw them out there. RCF: Do you have any sense of how many people become buyers of books in your store because they've been to the readings or vice versa? KG: One of the things that's different about us is that we charge admission to readings. The only other places that do that are places like the Art Institute. Most of the universities have them for free and students are required to attend anyway. People would pay their admission and the books would be there and they would think, "Well I already did my job." But now more and more people are buying books, maybe because of the Barnes and Noble readings. Just before every reading I say, "You have the opportunity to do what you should do in the presence of a writer which is buy their books." RCF: Do you think that your customers first come to the store to buy books or first come to the readings? AK: It cuts both ways. It really does because, in a sense, for each reading we get a different kind of audience and I can use Walter Mosley and Kenneth Koch as two examples. With Walter you might obviously get people who are interested in him because he's a mystery writer. And then you get people who are interested in him because he's a black writer, so people in the black community want to come and support that. And then you get people who are interested in him because he's a big name. And then maybe you get some people who are core who just want to come to a reading, trying things out. Some of those people would only come because it was Walter at Woodland Pattern and then they would buy a book. But it would also be because someone would be there and find out about it and then come to the reading. So it goes both ways. As for Kenneth Koch, there are a lot of people who know him in the educational field because of his teaching books. But then there are those that know him as a poet and they will come to hear his poetry. KG: He is somebody who came because the Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Fund paid his way on a tour. I don't think we ever could have invited him on our own. It turned out to be a really interesting reading. AK: So there is a case of maybe you wouldn't have selected a person but once they're here you're really glad they came. RCF: Do you establish relationships with a lot of the people you bring in to read? KG: We hope to. You always want to. That's really interesting and that's the part that's really been difficult, psychologically I suppose, to know how much of a relationship you have and if it's strictly a business relationship. With literary relationships it's a lot tougher to make the distinction. It turns out that not very many of them are not more than business. If you can't offer another reading or whatever, then a lot of the times the relationship goes away. If you have a project that involves them, there is a relationship. AK: I think, because we don't really want to treat a writer as a commodity, that some of them are willing to come back when it's less convenient for them. That's a good thing. And there are people who might stop by when they don't have a reading in town or just to say hi. It becomes a friendship that grows out of this other thing. But we always try to have a good time with a person coming through. So you're not just waiting at the hotel until we take you to your reading. Walter enjoyed his reading with us before when he was brought through with the Lila Wallace touring project, even though he can always read at some of the commercial places. Actually, last time he was in town he read at the library, which was a huge event. I talked to his agent and she said that she would like to have him in our thirty by thirty room. Every other city is having him in these huge auditoriums but she said, "No, that's where he wants to read. With you." Because that's what he wants to support.

(John O'Brien and Christopher Paddock)

↑ Index

1073. Carkoo
No R¿ses Review
Tue 31 Mar 1998

The final issue of No Røses Review is now available for $6. Send check to:

150 Duane St. #8, Redwood City, CA 94062.

Or e-mail request to:

[redacted].

The issue contains many wonderful poems, including work by Elaine Equi, Graham Foust, Paul Hoover, Caroline Knox, Maryrose Larkin, Rachel Loden, Gale Nelson, Rosmarie Waldrop, Susan Wheeler and MANY others.

-Carolyn Koo, editor

↑ Index

1074. Henry gould sound politics
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Regarding the poetry/politics plexus: has anyone thought much about poetry and art as a contribution to noise? May sound ironic coming from the Official Loudmouth himself. And this is not a subtle attempt to suppress the femmes. I am glad for multiplicity here & so graciously always bend low the orb & sceptre of Henrygemony.

I wonder about the ability to hear, apprehend, and respond. And if "get your act out there" is always politically liberating. I talked once a few months back about a quiet homemade reserved shy private approach to this art form. That has come up in recent threads with the talk about people who don't send out their work. Imagine a solidarity not based on ideology so much as on a practice of shy collaborators, extremely local. Who try to focus on hearing what a writer's doing in depth. A lot of what's "out there" seems to celebrate surface, edge, superficiality, topicality, immediacy, power, and stuff like that there. What if it takes a different kind of hearing?

Just had to mumble from the rooftop again. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

1075. morpheal
Re: iceberg lettuce
Tue 31 Mar 1998

> Iceberg Lettuce for the Soul: Light anecdotes for a thinful Age, > Iceberg Lettuce for the Soul: Jack Handy's thoughts for a post-big hair world.Iceberg Lettuce on Soul (Food): a cookbook for the deep(ness) challenged
>
> You could almost publish a whole book of just the titles. At least turn it into a perverse Exquisite Corpse. One of our cat either hates the idea or loves it. She just jumped up here and started batting at the keys...
> Tim

There, another stroke of brilliance....

Another edition that does not decompose on its own after the wrapper is removed from the vacuum pack, but one that is made of kitty litter. Yes, the very pages crumble up as they are read into useful, recycled, kitty litter.

After all, how many people actually read the same book of verse twice ?

Of course, Decompositions Incorporated now has a subsidiary called Reclamations Incorporated and it holds patents pending and trademark registered on the new product line. So get those penny shares now, before they rise sky high to current Wall Street values.....

M.

↑ Index

1076. morpheal
Re: sound politics
Tue 31 Mar 1998

> Who try to focus on hearing what a writer's doing in depth. A lot of what's "out there" seems to celebrate surface, edge, superficiality, topicality, immediacy, power, and stuff like that there. What if it takes a different kind of hearing?
>
> Just had to mumble from the rooftop again. - Henry Gould

A lot of writers, or perhaps moreso wannabe and would-be-if writers, are definitely co-opted and even brain washed into the cult of Happy Word. If they join the cult of Happy Word, and make nothing but joyful noises, they get something published as their reinforcing reward to do more of that same.

That is somewhat likenable to the franchise served Happy Meal, but definitely more ideological than cardboard sandwiches in styrofoam packaging....

In other words, I think you understated that bit about superficiality.

M.

↑ Index

1077. MAYHEW
Creative Reading
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Did someone on the list ask about Ron Padgett's book "Creative Reading" a few week (possibly months) ago? You might have got your answer but I did find the book while looking at others things in the library. It is published by the NCTE (who also did Rasula's Wax Museum [someone there must an intelligent editorial policy]). This book sits on the shelf next to books on how to teach Johnnie to read, but its approach is totally refreshing--kind of like Kenneth Koch on how to teach children poetry (the book is dedicated to Koch in fact). Lots of Oulipo style games and techniques and a discussion of reading "errors." I sure hope some teachers of "reading" at all educational levels find this book.

My next money-making scheme: an anthology entitled "Language poetry for Children."

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

1078. MAYHEW
Creative Reading II
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Sorry to post again in such rapid succession but I couldn't resist.

I used one of Padgett's "creative reading" which consists simply of making a list of nouns and then substituting them for the words in an unrelated text. This is the result of my transformation of a Merwin poem. It made me realize how unsurrealist much "deep-image" surrealism really is:

he says my orchid said maybe you have important turn you are doing or maybe you should be seeing incongruity I dont want to keep you

I look out the man my bebop is older than I am he says and I told my orchid it was so and I got up and left him then you know

though there was business I had to go and immoralist I had to do

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

1079. laura and jeff

*Re: you're never a latent anything

Tue 31 Mar 1998

> Anyway in re conformity take away the smog from the word and you have the problem. Speaking to someone in a recognizable way is conforming, no?

i was thinking conformity in the ralph waldo emerson conform to society or group or whatever way. but even in speech: each person brings his/her own set of connotations into the conversation, whether they want to or not. so you are making the attempt to conform (just as in person trying to take up, say, christianity) but your individual integrity is still maintained via your individual perceptions. and so: what i was getting at: the problem is the attempt to conform to stuctures. it is the attempt to try to be like someone/thing else. the attempt to deny your individuality. (of course, the attempt to communicate is not necessarily a negative attempt, but it can be.) so: my hope is that if people begin to realize that they can not conform, they will 1) rely on themselves more; and 2) be more open to other people's ideas, etc. ahh... idealism. =) jeff.

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

↑ Index

1080. Rachel Levitsky
Re: screening process/feminism
Tue 31 Mar 1998

Dodie--I think that is an excellent screening process and am not surprised that it works as a filter.

I was curious about your comment about no longer being a feminist. I often feel like a bad feminist myself but I don't think anything to drastic has changed in me--I'm just more willing to be vocal about all of me, pervert and feminist. Can you enlighten??

R Democracy

↑ Index

1081. Robert Hale
Reading Notely's Disobedience
Tue 31 Mar 1998

K. Ledrer's recent post of Alice Notley's "The Poetics of Disobedience", recalls another Notley paper: "Epic & Women Poets" which appeared in "Disembodied Poetics: Annals of the Jack Kerouac School" (University of New Mexico Press, 1994). The following text is excerpted from a review I wrote for Sulfur:

Any language or materially-oriented approach to writing is formidably challenged in Alice Notley's, "Epic & Women Poets" -- one of this anthology's riskier essays in its assertion that "to break and recombine language is nothing" and that "dreams are not language; they are fleshy and vivid, they are 'real.' And they are 'about' us & everything; both the source and paradigm of art. They are the bed of new beginnings, the place to turn." Proceeding against the margins of what the Twentieth Century discourse of language and literature, from Naropa to France, has been about -- (1) the elimination of the subject from language; the deconstruction of language as mimesis of human nature, presence, vision and voice; (2) the critique of the unconscious as the production of desire via the interpretation and use of dreams to cure neuroses or create illusions of self-realization -- Notley discards "language" as a male-dominated, over-determined, dead system. Accordingly, the writing (and reading) of poetry is no longer an exploration of systems of language -- a new way of writing, traceable to Stein through the Objectivists, and to today, via the Language School, that was (and still is) tired of the over-explanation and hegemony of the subject (regardless of its gender), that sought (and still seeks) to make of writing an action, conscious of the fact that what is internal to what is called action is that it does not know itself (which suggests the heart of Buddhism or Suññatã -- voidness: all things, without any exception, especially, the self). For Notley, whatever "language" was is back to being about the author and the author's dreams, which as Notley asserts, are "more real" than language.

I would add today, moreover, in light of the Disobedience text, that Notley's strategy involves the self in a literalization of the gap between saying and doing. I would equate her two worlds, the "ideal crystalline" one and the "supposedly real" one, with saying and doing, respectively -- This oscillation as a line of escape from perpetually false forms and discourses to "fundamental justice" which is at some point embodied in the act of writing itself, which is only a vehicle for self-realization and coming to terms with "death and responsibility," or "not believing and telling the truth as it comes up" -- historically and politically it is both this revelation, and much more seriously, a mutation in the natural dimension of Western culture: the end of history in the sense in which it is secretly implied by Notley.

↑ Index

1082. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: Creative Reading

Tue 31 Mar 1998

---

uh-oh. a friend and i just put together a book for grades 3-5 w/ lots of this kind of stuff in it. i better check this one out. ours won't be out for about a year.-md

At 4:17 PM 3/31/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>Did someone on the list ask about Ron Padgett's book "Creative Reading" a >few week (possibly months) ago? You might have got your answer but I did >find the book while looking at others things in the library. It is >published by the NCTE (who also did Rasula's Wax Museum [someone there >must an intelligent editorial policy]). This book sits on the shelf next >to books on how to teach Johnnie to read, but its approach is totally >refreshing--kind of like Kenneth Koch on how to teach children poetry (the >book is dedicated to Koch in fact). Lots of Oulipo style games and >techniques and a discussion of reading "errors." I sure hope some >teachers of "reading" at all educational levels find this book.
>
>My next money-making scheme: an anthology entitled "Language poetry for >Children."
>
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas

>[redacted]
>[redacted]

↑ Index

1083. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Creative Reading
Tue 31 Mar 1998

---

ps ours will be called, or its working title is, The Secret Life of Words

At 4:17 PM 3/31/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>Did someone on the list ask about Ron Padgett's book "Creative Reading" a >few week (possibly months) ago? You might have got your answer but I did >find the book while looking at others things in the library. It is >published by the NCTE (who also did Rasula's Wax Museum [someone there >must an intelligent editorial policy]). This book sits on the shelf next >to books on how to teach Johnnie to read, but its approach is totally >refreshing--kind of like Kenneth Koch on how to teach children poetry (the >book is dedicated to Koch in fact). Lots of Oulipo style games and >techniques and a discussion of reading "errors." I sure hope some >teachers of "reading" at all educational levels find this book.
>
>My next money-making scheme: an anthology entitled "Language poetry for >Children."
>
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas
>[redacted]
>[redacted]

↑ Index

1084. Aviva99999
Re: more boring chit-chat
Tue 31 Mar 1998

In a message dated 3/31/98 1:42:12 PM Eastern Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

<< But Helene Cixous's theories on a female language are interesting when applied to experimental syntax. >>

I'd love to hear more about this...

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

April 1998

743 messages · Sun 22 Mar 1998 – Thu 30 Apr 1998

April opened with a peace and a death the list declined, almost as a point of honour, to notice. The Good Friday Agreement was signed in Belfast on the tenth, Pol Pot died in his sleep on the fifteenth, and the room let both pass — the Cambodian surfacing once, in Elizabeth Hatmaker's aside, gone "piecefully in his sleep", and Ireland arriving not as a settlement but as David Zauhar's hunt for its women poets, Eavan Boland the only name he could summon for his wife's reading. The list spent April taking attendance instead — of who had dropped from an anthology, which shops had closed, which poets had simply vanished — until it was a room organised almost entirely around absence.

The most generous thread was, fittingly, about making poems from what is not there. Jonathan Mayhew asked what to call the form in which a poet writes through a precursor — Spicer's After Lorca, Ronald Johnson's RADI OS, that erasure carved out of Paradise Lost — and the room, which loves nothing so much as a reading list, obliged: Don Byrd proposing "the back-handed homage", Hugh Steinberg adding Tom Phillips's A Humument, and Douglas Barbour, asked for a name, supplying homolinguistic translation in a single reply. It is the list's oldest trick, the lost word produced on demand, never before turned on a subject so exactly its own image: an art of subtraction, the new poem raised in the erased space of the old.

The quarrel was made of the same substance. Ron Silliman opened a thread he called The Book of Absences and listed sixty poets missing from Poems for the Millennium, Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris's second volume — Spicer above all, "the Spicerlessness of it all" a lacuna on the scale of a missing Pound. He granted that anthologies are impossible, his own In the American Tree having mislaid Abby Child. Rothenberg answered from inside the book, courtly and wounded at once, calling it a cheap shot and signing himself "Affectionately (for all of that)" — the whole tenor of the list in five words. It is a Poetics specialty, the fight over a table of contents that is really a fight over who is permitted to have existed.

Beneath the argument about names ran a starker one about places. The month's largest thread, more closings, mourned the independent bookshops going dark — three hundred in a decade, Patrick Pritchett reported, citing André Schiffrin — and turned on whether the chains were merely winning or actively hunting:

Maria Damon described how Barnes & Noble scouts an independent's poetry shelves before closing it, and Daniel Bouchard, who had worked the Borders floor, called the conspiracy ludicrous. What outlasted the crossfire was Damon's blessing on the used shops — "long may they thrive around the edges of commerce" — a line fit for the list's own motto, poetry having always lived at those edges, in the very shops now closing.

And then, twice, the absences turned literal. Octavio Paz died on the nineteenth, and the list could not simply mourn him: Jonathan Mayhew, granting his era while doubting his poems, felt that "an epoch has come to a close", and Douglas Barbour called him "another great one gone" — a grief as unresolved as the anthology fight, Paz theirs to argue about. Eleven days later Nizar Qabbani died in London, the wire naming him "the master of love verse" — and the room that had sixty names for one book's omissions had, for the poet actually gone, almost none. I have set Paz's quarrelsome grief beside the near-silence that met Qabbani exactly as April delivered them: a room that could name everyone it had lost, and never hear the one it never knew it had.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 743 in all.

WRITERS

]||Kenning||[594, 603
Administration, Poetics List 475
AERIALEDGE 336, 358, 496
Alexander, Charles 39, 240, 264, 323, 360, 410, 448
Alexander, Christopher W. 48, 121, 155, 165, 311, 423, 534, 703, 704, 730
And, Miekal 147, 163, 215, 223, 290, 296, 333, 334, 348, 499, 574, 679
ANDREWS, BETSY 538, 539
Andrews, Jim 468
Archambeau, Robert 241, 297, 424, 470, 677
Aviva99999 521, 543, 618, 619, 621, 697
Baker, Mark 675
Balestrieri, Peter 26
Baratier, David 642, 709
Barbour, Douglas 200, 444, 477, 579, 637
Beard, Tom 110, 187
Bell, Thomas 189, 540
Bernstein, Charles 127, 514, 601, 644, 647, 656
Blarnes, Eric 592
Bouchard, Daniel 78, 156, 245, 324, 327, 361, 365, 366, 368, 369, 558
Bowering, George 113, 184, 185, 265, 315, 440, 654
Brady, Taylor 589, 605, 646
Bromige, David 112, 115, 190, 214
Brown, Lee Ann 332
Brown, Pam 517
Bruno, Franklin 665
Byrd, Don 572, 641
Cadaly 120, 161
Carll, Steve 181, 281, 412, 415
CharSSmith 174
Cheney, Don 557
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 586, 587
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 206, 228, 230, 414
Clark, Susan 229
Clippinger, David 648
COLLIER, DANIEL L. 250, 310
Cope, Stephen 72, 458, 492, 571, 650, 653
Corbin, Michael 70, 133, 465
Cronin, Margie 545
Ctfarmr 20, 388, 437
Damon, Maria 45, 168, 173, 274, 335, 354, 367, 451, 452, 498, 520, 686, 693, 734, 735
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 98, 130, 307, 309, 373, 375, 386, 387, 588, 700, 739
Davis, Jordan 58, 119, 217, 478, 699, 710, 742
Dbkk 28, 30, 55, 90, 144, 271, 276, 282, 283, 486, 487, 493, 497, 503
Dlugonski, Dan Or Orion Raphael 453
Douglas 339, 472, 608, 729
Dougolly 632, 633, 658, 678
Drake, R. 29, 117, 192, 198, 242, 298
DuPlessis, Rachel Blau 473, 483, 484
Durand, Marcella 40, 77, 209, 397, 490, 575
Durgin, Patrick F. 38, 87
Finch, Annie 417, 533, 661
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 44, 197, 660, 732
G, Henry 191, 526
G, K E N N I N 409
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 80, 124, 607
Gleason 196, 284
Goldsmith, Kenneth 466
Columbia, David 714
Gould, Henry 13, 49, 85, 405, 425, 614, 617, 620, 649, 681, 743
Groberts 319, 583, 602, 666
Grumman, Bob 634
Guertin, Carolyn 305, 330
Hale, Robert 236, 590
Hatlen, Burt 471
Hatmaker, Elizabeth 96, 370, 536, 554
Henry 148, 248, 525
Huppatz, D.j. 146
Hzinnes 97
JBCM2 443
Jeff, Laura And 25, 132, 138, 139, 295
Joris, Pierre 316, 449, 577, 627
Joseph, Safdie 314, 612, 690, 721
Kalleberg, Garrett 17
Keeney, Scott 519
Kelleher, Michael J 485
Kelleher, Michael J. 128, 203, 337, 343, 356
Kelley, Karen 100, 135, 145, 188, 258, 263, 394, 436, 523, 566, 567, 671, 740, 741
Kellogg, David 204, 292, 340
Ken|n|ing 664
Kimmelman, Burt 22, 118, 129, 273, 461
Kirschenbaum, Matt 626 Kramer, Wendy 35, 107, 270
Kuszai, J. 328, 636
Lazer, Hank 75, 407, 578
Lederer, K. 23, 24, 32, 33, 52, 71, 81, 136, 287, 377, 510, 544, 563, 600, 604, 611, 631, 723, 727
Levitsky, Rachel 10, 56, 57, 79, 101, 122, 123, 153, 182, 211, 212, 259, 261, 262, 349, 395, 426, 438, 456, 463, 502, 524, 561, 629

Lewis, Joel 670, 698
List, Poetics 696
Little, Billy 9, 51, 63, 65, 69, 179, 277, 285, 347, 399, 439, 445, 460, 479, 491, 560, 565, 598, 718
Loden, Rachel 76, 549
Long, Brent 613
Lunberry, Clark D 651
Magee, Michael 512, 719
Main 207
Marks, Steven 140, 141, 355, 433, 501
Marsh, William 21, 152, 164, 220
Maryrose11 404
MAYHEW 14, 53, 95, 226, 325, 372, 385, 430, 455, 508, 511, 527, 550, 562, 628, 667, 691, 692, 712, 722, 736
Maz881 37, 171, 251, 252, 255, 403, 547, 609, 668, 669
McColl, Michael 638
McVay, Gwyn 36, 537, 570, 616, 625
Melnicove, Mark 342, 345, 402
Moriarty, Laura 169, 331, 593, 599
Morpheal 11, 12, 88, 99, 102, 172, 175, 176, 177, 180, 194, 202, 205, 208, 210, 218, 224, 225, 253, 278, 293, 374, 391, 392, 398, 406, 420, 432, 441, 442, 447, 459, 462, 522, 541, 555, 556, 559, 569, 615, 635, 639, 640, 655, 662, 705, 706
Muratori, Fred 606, 738
Nicoll, Hugh 62
Nielsen, Aldon 166, 170, 178, 227, 233, 504, 505, 509, 518, 597, 623, 683, 684, 685
Noble, Joseph 221, 411, 434
Nowak, Mark 450
Nyu.edu 82
Orange, Tom 320, 357
Phillips, Ellay 104, 131
Piuma, Chris [Steve] 446
Pollet, Sylvester 216, 582
Pound, Scott 413
PRAPRA 553
Prejsnar, Mark 47, 247, 329, 364, 530, 584, 659, 680, 682, 688, 689, 715, 716, 733, 737
Pritchett,Patrick 157, 162, 219, 308, 341, 353, 421, 431, 702, 711, 713
Prod, William Burmeister 488, 507, 516, 528, 531, 532, 595, 728
Quartermain, Peter 186, 652
R.drake 482, 513
R.Gancie/C.Parcelli 381
RaeA100900 272
Reiner, Christopher 41, 143, 694
Review, Chicago 674
RJRVE 54, 254
Rod4rigo 427
Roitman, Judy 378, 379, 383, 408, 428, 551, 552, 581, 630, 663, 724, 725
Rothenberg, Jerome 591
Roy, Megan Minka Lola Camille 429
Rprunty 235, 249, 288
Rsillima 238, 239, 269, 322, 469, 576
Ruggles, Trace S. 720
Russo, Linda 5, 260, 275, 495, 673
Samuels, Lisa 643
Schultz, Susan 213
Schuster, Joshua N 321
ScoutEW 42, 61, 256, 280, 303, 317, 344, 422, 548, 585, 596, 695
Shoemaker, Steve 16, 419, 454, 546
Simon, Beth Lee 74, 313
Simon, Schuchat 64, 393, 515, 568, 622
Simon/Piombino 701
Sondheim, Alan Myouka 86, 126, 160, 359, 542, 676
Spinelli, Martin 464, 687
SSSCHAEFER 27, 46
Steinberg, Hugh 246, 257, 294, 400, 401, 457, 573
Stroffolino, Louis 167, 201, 222, 300, 481, 529, 717, 726, 731
Sullivan, Gary 151, 195, 199, 299, 302, 304, 363, 371, 382, 474
Sumner, Alaric 480, 580
Sutherland, Keston 66, 68, 83, 84, 91, 92, 93, 105, 106, 108, 109, 111, 134, 137, 149, 154, 158, 231, 232, 243, 326, 338, 376, 380, 396, 707
Szeto, Angela 60
T.R.Healy, L.MacMahon And 312, 489, 564
Taciuch, Dean 193
Thompson, George 362
Thompson, Tom 500
Tiess, Robert J. 268
Tills, Steve 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8
Toddbaron 672, 708
Tranter, John 114, 142, 435, 494
Trevor, Karen And 103, 266, 267
Tuma, Keith 244, 289, 291, 351
Varrone, Kevin 389
Vidaver, Aaron 467
Vogler, Thomas A. 18
Wallace, Mark 19
Weiss, Mark 31, 34, 43, 59, 73, 89, 94, 234, 306, 384
Wellman, Don 67, 610
Wheeler, Susan 15, 50, 150, 159, 346, 476, 645
Whyte, Ryan 237, 318, 418
Wolsak 116
Zauhar, David 286, 301, 350, 352, 390, 416, 535, 624, 657
Zimmerman, Daniel 125, 183, 279, 506

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 282, 358, 587, 588, 589, 593, 594, 694
Adams, John 23
Adams, Robert 301, 309
Adorno, Theodor 410
Alexander, Christopher W. 48, 121, 155, 157, 165, 311, 423, 534, 703, 704, 730
Alferi, Pierre 601
Alice, Mary 62, 73, 658
Allan, Don 450, 452
Allison, Dorothy 395
Americans, Asian 62, 195, 516, 558, 627
Anderson, Beth 358
Anderson, Laurie 305, 306, 307, 330
Andre, Michael 320, 324, 328, 353, 354, 469, 516
Andrews, Bruce 358, 397, 466, 493
Angelo, Michael 157, 177
Anne, Sarah 358, 694
Antin, David 449, 648
Apollinaire, Guillaume 466, 468, 550
Aragon, Louis 516
Arbor, Ann 349
Armand, Louis 34, 461
Armantrout, Rae 39, 272, 282, 358, 448, 449, 650, 729
Ashbery, John 28, 358, 494, 612, 613, 616, 620, 624, 625
Atkins, Tim 490
Atlanta, Mark P. 584, 737
Auden, W. H. 612, 613, 620, 657, 667, 682, 691
Augustine, Jane 59, 337
Auster, Paul 358
Baker, Mary 143, 240, 465
Balaz, Joe 213
Balestrieri, Pete 26, 29
Baraka, Amiri 264
Barbour, Doug 649
Barnes, Diane 10, 16, 21, 25, 263, 352, 353, 354, 361, 362, 363, 367, 374, 378, 381, 383, 391, 395, 396, 398, 421, 430, 432, 438, 441, 444, 645
Barnett, Anthony 358
Baron, Todd 672
Barthes, Roland 358, 386
Basinski, Michael 358
Baudelaire, Charles 726
Baudrillard, Jean 730 Beckett, Tom 116, 388
Beckman, Paul 466
Bee, Susan 466
Bellamy, Dodie 276, 358, 448, 487, 489, 493, 587, 588, 589
Benderson, Bruce 490
Benjamin, Walter 67, 80, 358, 506
Bennett, John M. 412, 729
Benson, Steve 576, 627
Bergvall, Caroline 475, 480
Berkeley, Michael 26, 29, 48, 174, 181, 281, 304, 469, 493, 694
Berlin, Irving 79
Berman, Tosh 466
Bernstein, Emma 2, 27, 466, 607
Berrigan, Anselm 42, 61, 77, 271, 411, 412, 558, 563, 631
Berrigan, Eddie 18, 271, 317, 358, 490, 624
Berrigan, Edmund 283, 412
Berrigan, Ted 142, 317
Berry, Jake 466
Bidart, Frank 341, 346, 625
Bishop, Elizabeth 625
Blackburn, Paul 734
Blackmer, Tracy 490
Blake, William 42, 102, 593, 594, 626, 640
Blaser, Robin 587, 588, 589, 666
Bloom, Harold 595, 628
Bolton, Ken 494
Boyer, Stephen 6, 8, 246, 259, 410
BpNichol 307, 330, 579, 581
Bradley, George 150, 159
Brady, Andrea 93, 104, 105, 106, 108, 131, 338, 494
Brainard, Joe 256, 267, 302, 305, 306, 307, 310, 319
Brautigan, Richard 576, 627
Brazil, David 466
Brennan, Sherry 411
Bronk, William 22, 576, 606, 627
Brook, James 648
Brooks, Gwendolyn 264
Brossard, Nicole 358
Brown, James 317
Brown, Pamela 494
Browne, Colin 358
Bryant, Elizabeth 344
Buber, Martin 179
Bunting, Basil 149, 600
Burger, Mary 213, 358
Burke, Andrew 482, 543, 546, 697
Burke, Carolyn 656, 657
Burns, Gerald 195
Burns, Joanne 494
Burroughs, William S. 228, 391, 398, 466
Burton, Philip 467, 503
Bush, George 179, 559
Butler, Judith 186, 200, 358
Buuck, David 271, 358
Cabri, Louis 166
Cage, John 358, 466
Cannon, Steve 490
Carlos, William 469, 549, 550

Carpenter, Brian 213
Carter, Mike 397
Casey, Sean 23, 312
Cassavetes, John 672
Castro, Michael 469, 507
Cather, Willa 89
Catullus 579, 581
Cayley, John 466, 472
Celan, Paul 181, 281, 412, 415, 428, 516, 531, 667, 694
Celona, Tina 604
Ceravolo, Rosemary 549, 627
Cervantes, James 469, 587, 588, 589, 625
Chadwick, Lynn 694
Chapman, Wes 37
Chester, Jeff 299, 601
Child, Abby 273, 576, 627
Child, Abigail 282
Cigale, Alex 273
Cixous, Hélène 40, 43, 52
Claire, Paula 358
Clampitt, Amy 385
Clar, Jorge 490
Clare, John 652
Clark, Cheryl 494, 651
Clark, Thomas A. 576, 627
Clarke, Jack 358
Clay, Steven 493
Clement, Catherine 30, 56
Clinton, Bill 55, 433, 481, 534
Cocteau, Jean 466
Cohen, Ira 647
Cohen, Leonard 576, 627
Colby, Todd 490
Cole, David 55
Cole, Peter 128
Coleman, Victor 486, 490, 492
Collins, Billy 696
Collins, Phil 269, 303
Collis, Stephen 181, 281
Coltrane, John 390
Columbus, Christopher 271, 298, 299, 412
Conant, Jeff 558
Conrad, Tony 646
Coolidge, Clark 358, 587, 588, 589
Cooper, Dennis 493
Cooper, Lisa 39, 448
Cooper, Paula 39, 448
Corbett, Robert 576, 627
Cornell, Joseph 195
Corso, Gregory 218
Cory, Alex 563, 631
Coultas, Brenda 358, 490
County, Mike 240
Creeley, Bob 23
Creeley, Robert 264, 358, 457, 582, 607, 625, 651, 666
Critchley, Simon 358
Cully, Barbara 410
Césaire, Aimé 339
Daley, Ryan 9
Daly, Catherine 120, 161
Darragh, Tina 336, 358, 576, 627
Davenport, Steve 631, 637
Davey, Frank 576, 627
Davidson, Dan 299
Davidson, Ian 358, 448, 505, 576, 623, 627
Davidson, Michael 448, 449, 505, 623
Davis, Tim 358, 411, 490, 493, 494
Day, Jean 397
Debrot, Jacques 358
Dee, Kathy 213
Delany, Samuel R. 587, 588, 589, 647
Deleuze, Gilles 337, 358
Democracy, Rachel 56, 85, 153, 184
Dennis, Michael 339, 358
Derksen, Jeff 699, 716
Derrida, Jacques 30, 56
Desmond, Rae 494
Dickey, James 4
Dickinson, Emily 24, 31, 33, 625, 726
Dillon, Patrick 151
Donahue, Joe 486, 492
Donahue, Joseph 486, 492
Dos, John 414
Doty, Mark 625
Drucker, Johanna 358, 466, 474, 494
Dudek, Louis 184
Duncan, Andrew 314, 598, 665, 666
Duncan, Robert 457, 467, 650
Durgin, Patrick F. 38, 87, 409, 413, 664
Dworkin, Craig 466
Dylan, Bob 23, 576, 627
Dylan, Michael 659
Edwards, Ken 475, 480
Eigner, Larry 80, 378, 379, 383, 408, 428, 551, 552, 581, 607, 630, 663, 724, 725
Elena, Maria 469, 700
Eliot, Joe 457, 469, 494, 691
Ellen, Mary 466
Elliot, Joe 595
Ellis, Stephen 358, 582
Emerson, Claudia 628
England, Amy 475, 480
Epstein, Thomas 273
Erickson, Ann 181, 281
Ernst, Max 475, 480
Eshleman, Clayton 448
Esther, Little 55
Evans, George 494
Evans, Steve 388
Everding, Kelly 151
Ezergailis, Bob 205, 462, 635
Farrell, Dan 328, 397

Faulkner, Andrew 587, 588, 589
Featherston, Dan 448
Felix, Joel 466
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 342
Finkelstein, Norman 684
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 466
Finley, Karen 55
Fischer, Norman 181, 281
Fisher, Roy 435, 494
Fitzgerald, Scott 210
Flynn, Albert 358
Fodaski, Elizabeth 495
Foley, Jack 298
Folsom, Eric 252, 412
Forbes, John 3, 114, 115, 142, 149, 435, 494
Forche, Carolyn 612, 613, 616, 620
Ford, Mark 494
Forrest, Lisa 625
Foster, Edward 22, 77, 273, 701
Foucault, Michel 162, 168, 358, 386
Foust, Graham 358
France, Peter 174, 388, 601, 658
Franco, Michael 469
Fraser, Simon 358, 576, 627
Freind, Bill 584
Friedlander, Ben 128, 356, 403
Friedlander, Lee 356, 358
Frost, Corey 12, 181, 281, 311, 625
Frost, Robert 584
Fuchs, Greg 558
Fuller, Heather 128, 242, 356, 358, 397
Fuller, William 358
Fulton, Alice 24, 31, 38
Gallagher, Kristen 494
Gander, Forrest 143, 494, 625
Gann, Kyle 646
Garcia, Gabriel 486, 492
Gardner, Drew 358
Genet, Jean 587, 588, 589
Gevirtz, Susan 358
Gibson, William 587, 588, 589
Gillespie, William 576, 627
Gilmore, Gary 22
Ginsberg, Allen 435, 457
Giscombe, Cecil 490
Gizzi, Michael 358
Gizzi, Peter 358, 380, 383, 435, 494
Gladman, Renee 40, 358
Glancy, Diane 450, 452
Gleason, Eryque 196, 284
Gluck, Robert 625
Goldman, Judith 120, 358, 695
Gordon, Ruth 499, 515
Gould, Glenn 85, 148, 226, 617
Graham, Jorie 625
Graham, Susan 24, 31, 38
Grangaud, Michelle 435
Greene, Jonathan 195, 397, 466
Greenwald, Ted 358, 397, 411
Grenier, Bob 213, 576, 627
Griffiths, Bill 587, 588, 589
Grinnell, Tracy 213
Guest, Barbara 358
Hall, John S. 490
Hall, Lind 450, 452
Halsey, Alan 587, 588, 589
Harb, Marcella 490
Harryman, Carla 47, 79, 339, 358, 388
Hartman, Charles O. 584
Harvey, George 242, 648
Hass, Robert 457
Hawkins, Bobbie 524
Hawthorne, Alison 275
Hayden, Robert 22, 612, 613, 625
Healy, Randolph 312, 489, 497, 564
Heath, Jennifer 151
Hecht, Anthony 625
Hejinian, Lyn 39, 358, 449, 587, 588, 589, 711
Heller, Michael 22, 82, 494
Helms, Jesse 55
Henderson, David 490
Henri, Charles 466
Hickey, Dave 263
Higgins, Dick 466
Hill, Lindsay 229, 524
Hillman, Brenda 24, 31, 38, 116
Hofer, Jen 563, 694
Hogg, Robert 448
Hollander, John 385
Hollo, Anselm 57, 421, 631, 711
Holloway, Rob 266
Holman, Bob 273
Hongo, Garrett 625
Hood, Robin 587, 588, 589
Hoover, Edgar 494, 606
Hoover, Paul 22
House, White 612, 613, 616, 620, 625, 656, 657, 674, 675, 677, 684
Howard, Richard 150, 159
Howe, Susan 40, 43, 264, 341, 358, 383, 457
Howe, William 358
Huang, Yunte 358
Hughes, Langston 457
Hughes, Ted 55, 385
Hunt, Erica 273, 701
Hunter, Carrie 582
Inman, Peter 576, 627, 665
Ireland, Lauren 285, 286, 287, 289, 291, 292, 297, 311, 312, 416
Jackson, Jesse 570
Jaeger, Peter 466
Jarmusch, Jim 151
Jarnot, Lisa 22, 128, 241, 273, 274, 358, 380, 383, 435, 490, 631

Jeanne, Sarah 179
Jefferson, Thomas 210
Jeffery, Mark 490
Jenks, Philip 694
Jennings, Peter 485
Jesurun, John 339
Johnson, Robert 576, 596, 627
Johnson, Ron 576, 627
Johnson, Thomas 70, 76, 466, 603, 614, 637, 640
Jonas, Stephen 576, 627
Jones, Bob 80, 324, 490, 494
Jordan, June 58, 217, 324, 478, 710
Joron, Andrew 143, 358
Joyce, Michael 562, 564, 573, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 608
Juan, Don 163, 180
Kalamaras, George 540
Keckler, Joseph 358
Kelleher, Michael J. 128, 203, 333, 337, 343, 356, 485
Kelly, Paul 157, 177, 517, 545
Kelly, Robert 151
Kelsey, Karla 103
Kemp, Carolyn 672
Kennedy, Kit 55, 210
Kenner, Hugh 584
Kerouac, Jack 314, 358
Khlebnikov, Velimir 251, 253
Killian, Kevin 144, 145, 172, 186, 211, 276, 283, 448, 493
Killian, Sean 280
Kim, Myung Mi 358
Kimball, Cynthia 62, 358
Kinnell, Galway 625
Kinsella, John 213, 494
Klein, Naomi 563, 631
Knowles, Alison 466
Kristeva, Julia 275, 358, 386
Kunina, Julia 273, 490
Kyger, Joanne 576, 627
Landrey, David 317
Larkin, Maryrose 325, 375
Laughlin, James 342, 494
Laureate, Poets 674, 675
Laurence, Paul 43, 52, 587, 588, 589
Lauterbach, Ann 150, 159, 358, 494
Lawless, Gary 402
Lease, Joseph 411
Lederer, Katy 358, 631
Leftwich, Jim 181, 281
Leggott, Michele 494
Lehman, David 150, 159, 494, 696
Lenhart, Gary 490, 547, 557
Lennon, John 179, 576, 627, 659
Leonard, Tom 155, 402, 457
Levertov, Denise 200, 444, 457, 477
Levine, Jeffrey 625
Levine, Philip 457
Levy, Andrew 358, 397
Lilley, Kate 494
Lomax, Alan 358
London, Frank 225, 472, 475, 480, 713
Lorber, Brendan 151
Lorca, Federico García 562, 564, 573, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 593, 594, 595, 608, 729
Louise, Bobbie 457, 524, 625
Mac Low, Jackson 59, 358, 466
Lubasch, Lisa 358, 631
Luoma, Bill 37, 213, 251, 252, 253, 255, 358, 403, 412, 466, 547, 557, 609, 631, 668
Lynch, Jessica 321
Lyons, Kimberly 358, 490
Macdonald, Helen 435
Machlin, Daniel 17, 18
Mackey, Nate 90
Mackey, Nathaniel 98, 264, 301, 309, 313, 375, 390, 449
Madge, Charles 485
Madrid, Anthony 469
Magee, Mike 526
Malanga, Gerard 622
Mallarmé, Stéphane 652
Mandel, Tom 13, 358, 448, 576, 627
Mandelstam, Osip 652
Mann, Chris 397
Marie, Julie 141, 696
Marley, Bob 179
Marquis, Don 179
Marsh, Bill 213
Marshall, Robert 55, 179, 195
Martin, Paul 737
Marvin, Lee 179
Marx, Karl 179, 670, 673, 676
Mason, George 482
Matlin, David 151
Maxwell, Andrew 358
Maxwell, Susan 242
Mayer, Jane 358
Mayhew, Jonathan 10, 14, 16, 21, 25, 53, 95, 226, 325, 372, 375, 382, 385, 430, 455, 508, 511, 527, 531, 550, 562, 564, 573, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 608, 628, 667, 691, 692, 712, 717, 720, 721, 726, 727
McCaffery, Steve 358, 448, 564, 579, 581
Melnick, David 650
Meltzer, David 449
Melville, Pierre 648
Meredith, William 625
Merrill, Stuart 667, 682
Merwin, W. S. 612, 613, 616, 625
Mesmer, Sharon 490
Messerli, Douglas 608, 666, 729
Metcalf, Paul 414

Middleton, Peter 358
Miller, Cynthia 39, 448
Miller, Lee 39, 55, 58, 179
Mills, Billy 297
Milne, Drew 494
Milton, John 572, 637
Minter, Peter 494
Mirakove, Carol 710
Miriam, Erica 31
Mitchell, Stephen 240, 302, 305, 306, 307
Monroe, Bill 179
Moore, Marianne 457
Moore, Nicholas 179, 694
Morgan, Robin 407
Moriarity, Laura 672
Morice, Dave 269, 358, 631
Morris, Robert 263
Morris, Tim 263, 358, 626
Morrison, Jim 576, 603, 627
Morrison, Rusty 271, 358, 694
Morrison, Toni 694
Moses, Robert 636
Moure, Erin 358
Moxley, Jennifer 358, 494, 600
Mueller, Ursula 385
Mullen, Harryette 124, 358, 576, 607, 627
Mura, David 625
Murphy, Michelle 143, 448
Muske, Carol 625
Myers, Michael 315
Myles, Eileen 358, 403, 493, 494
Nakell, Martin 672
Nathanson, Tenney 39, 448
Naylor, Paul 72
Neilson, Melanie 358
Neruda, Pablo 469, 508, 509, 511, 516
Newton, Keith 55
Nguyen, Hoa 358
Niedecker, Lorine 358, 599
Nielson, Melanie 495
Nixon, Richard 466
Norman, Peter 381
Norton, John 385, 606, 659
Notley, Alice 14, 23, 64, 71, 73, 136, 175, 358, 403, 587, 588, 589
O'Hara, Frank 203, 435, 622, 667
Olsen, Lance 437
Olson, Charles 42, 54, 59, 151, 316, 577, 627
Ondaatje, Michael 565
Oppen, George 4, 209, 454, 457, 458, 461, 467, 471, 473, 483, 484, 491, 503, 606
Ortiz, Travis 358, 631, 695
Osman, Jena 358
Ovid 3, 114, 385
Owen, Maureen 59, 411
Padgett, Ron 256, 267, 310, 494, 519, 547, 557, 576, 627, 665
Padin, Clemente 466
Palmer, Michael 264, 410, 449, 457
Pan, Peter 179
Parkway, Neal 97
Patterson, Ian 435
Patton, Julie 273, 358, 397, 490
Pearson, Ted 358, 576, 627
Peirce, Kathleen 13
Perelman, Bob 39, 435, 448, 494
Perkoff, Stuart Z. 582
Perloff, Marjorie 22, 59, 235, 244, 358, 385, 494, 623, 659
Peters, Tom 308
Pettet, Simon 397, 411
Pettibon, Raymond 283
Phillip, Andrew 39, 186, 187, 200, 595
Phosphorus, White 588, 589
Pinsky, Robert 612, 613, 616, 625, 674, 675
Pinter, Harold 339
Piombino, Nick 358, 607, 647, 701
Plath, Sylvia 95, 593, 594
Ponge, Francis 652
Porter, Anne 234, 296, 334, 342, 345, 348, 352, 355
Pound, Ezra 457, 694
Powell, Douglas 500, 563, 631
Prevallet, Kristen 358, 397, 411
Di Prima, Diane 40
Professor, Little 349, 352, 353
Prunty, Randy 235, 244, 249, 288
Prynne, J. H. 707, 714
Queneau, Raymond 729
Quinn, Terry 9, 648
Quixote, Don 441
Ragona, Melissa 429
Rakosi, Carl 449, 494
Ramsdell, Heather 128, 332, 335, 356, 358, 397
Randall, Karen 151
Rasula, Jed 48, 358, 572
Ratcliffe, Stephen 587, 588, 589
Rathmann, Andrew 674
Rathmann, Andy 674, 675
Raworth, Tom 39, 235, 241, 244, 249, 274, 435, 448, 466
Reeves, Jennifer 55, 466
Regan, Max 500
Rehm, Pam 358
Renoir, Jean 729
Retallack, Joan 5, 242, 336, 339, 350, 358
Reuters, Boston 670, 698
Rich, Adrienne 457, 682
Richter, Karl 208, 228
Riggs, Sarah 700
Riley, John 514, 520
Riley, Peter 435, 494
Rilke, Rainer Maria 637, 667, 691

Rimbaud, Dee 494
Robbins, Michael 213
Robertson, Lisa 358
Robertson, Pat 358
Robeson, Paul 233
Robinson, Elizabeth 103, 181, 358
Robinson, Mary 281, 576, 627, 670
Roche, John 576, 627
Rodefer, Stephen 474
Rollman, Michelle 358, 493
Rosenthal, Bob 23, 490
Rosenthal, Sarah 358
Ross, Andrew 358
Ross, Joe 181, 213, 281, 358, 650
Rothenberg, Jerry 596, 598, 603, 618, 659
Rothschild, Douglas 490
Roubaud, Jacques 576, 627
Roussel, Raymond 550, 722
Rowntree, Dirk 466
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 358
Salerno, Mark 358, 411, 490
Sappho 358, 579, 581
Saroyan, William 466, 542, 548
Sayers, Thomas 358
Scalapino, Leslie 2, 24, 27, 31, 32, 41, 42, 47, 61, 280, 358, 448, 576, 627, 631
Schneeman, George 358
Schultz, Lou 358, 694
Schultz, Susan M. 213, 358
Schuster, Josh 321
Schuyler, James 319, 576, 627
Schwartz, Judy 241, 274
Schwartz, Leonard 17, 18, 22, 273, 358, 490
Schwitters, Kurt 466, 652
Scobie, Stephen 579, 581
Seagram, Blair 466
Seaman, David W. 305, 306, 307
Searle, John 494
Selby, Spencer 181, 281, 466, 672
Selland, Eric 281, 449
Shakespeare, William 210, 269, 385, 587, 588, 589
Shapiro, Gary 519, 547, 557
Sharma, Prageeta 490, 553
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 572, 726
Sherry, James 358
Sherwood, Ken 358
Shurin, Aaron 672
Siena, James 403
Sikelianos, Eleni 128, 273, 358, 490, 493
Silliman, Ron 219, 264, 322, 358, 494, 519, 547, 557, 576, 585, 586, 590, 591, 596, 603, 606, 618, 627, 650, 659, 699, 716
Simon, Greg 358, 701
Simon, Paul 559
Simpson, Bennett 461
Simpson, Louis 461
Skinner, Jonathan 17, 18
Sloan, Margaret 22, 273, 336, 358
Smith, Charles 174
Smith, Dale 631
Smith, Rod 358, 389, 393, 397, 490, 496, 631
Smith, Susan 59, 495, 694
Smith, Tracy K. 37, 242, 358, 631
Smoler, Michael 182
Solomon, Laura 248, 448
Soto, Clemente 127, 647
Spahr, Boyd 358
Spahr, Juliana 100, 136, 175, 213, 252, 358, 403, 412, 494, 563, 631
Spandrift, Jack 191
Sparrow, John 490, 742
Spears, Patricia 490
Spender, Stephen 469
Spicer, Jack 314, 493, 550, 576, 593, 594, 595, 598, 608, 627, 641, 652, 665, 666, 683, 709, 736, 738, 741
Stackhouse, Christopher 490
Stafford, Jane 62
Stalin, Joseph 175
Stanley, Jared 141, 240, 276, 493, 576, 612, 613, 616, 625, 627
Stefans, Brian 466
Stefans, Kim 411, 490
Stein, Gertrude 62, 358, 694
Stein, Suzanne 40, 43, 62, 78, 83, 95, 562, 564, 573, 576, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 608, 627, 729
Steiner, George 339
Stevens, Wallace 273, 385, 457
Stevenson, Matt 301, 309
Stewart, Martha 179
Stewart, Susan 358
Strand, Mark 457
Strang, Brian 358
Sweet, Erik 317
Swensen, Cole 358, 421, 711, 729
Syson, Ian 517, 545
Tabios, Eileen 696
Tagliabue, John 402
Tal, Kali 448
Tarn, Nathaniel 264
Tate, James 457, 625, 712, 717, 720, 721, 726, 728, 736, 738
Taylor, Cecil 466
Taylor, Jesse 143, 413, 465
Tejada, Roberto 448
Templeton, Fiona 336, 358
Thilleman, Tod 19, 273
Thomas, Dylan 18, 55, 179, 208, 358, 576, 627
Thompson, Jon 358
Tietz, Ward 466
Toklas, Alice B. 358

Tolhurst, Hugh 494
Tomlinson, Charles 579, 637
Toscano, Rodrigo 358
Treadwell, Elizabeth 213, 358, 694
Trevor, Jesse 103, 266, 267
Truitt, Sam 273
Tuttle, Richard 17, 18
Twemlow, Nick 604
Tyler, Mary 179
Valentine, Jean 179, 242
Valery, Paul 742
Vallejo, César 508, 509, 516, 527
Vassilakis, Nico 466, 468
Veitch, Tom 547, 557
Vendler, Helen 733
Vermont, Charlie 481
Viereck, Peter 457
Vincent, Gregory 397
Viscomi, Joseph 626
Waid, Jim 448
Waldman, Anne 22
Waldman, Ken 358
Waldrop, Keith 143, 339, 358, 587, 588, 589
Waldrop, Rosemary 51, 60, 264, 358, 594
Waldrop, Rosmarie 22, 273, 358, 587, 588, 589
Walker, Alice 632, 635, 658
Walker, Wendy 339, 350
Wallace, Sara 242, 358, 466, 737
Walsh, Catherine 289, 291, 292, 297
Warhol, Andy 624
Warsh, Lewis 273, 474
Washington, Harold 150, 159, 208, 242, 336, 358, 381, 469, 470, 493, 558, 644, 700
Watten, Barrett 283, 358
Weeks, Laurie 493
Weinberger, Eliot 494
Weiner, Hannah 358
Weinstein, Eric 358
Weiss, Irving 466
Welch, Brian 576, 582, 627
Weldon, Rebecca 694
Welford, Gabrielle 213
Welish, Marjorie 116, 273, 339, 358
Whitehead, Gregory 466
Whitehead, Helen 42
Whitman, Walt 78, 88, 99, 488
Wiener, Hannah 601
Wilbur, Richard 584
Wilkinson, John 494
Williams, Tony 10, 11, 16, 21, 25, 31, 240, 341, 342, 419, 420, 457, 466, 576, 625, 627
Williams, William Carlos 457
Willis, Elizabeth 358
Wilson, Emily 563, 604, 631
Wilson, Steve 172
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 587, 588, 589
Wolsak, Melissa 116
Woolf, Virginia 40, 584, 694
Wordsworth, William 600, 606
Wright, Charles 340, 341, 346, 351, 457
Wright, James 181, 227, 234, 281, 340, 341, 346, 351, 466, 625
Wright, Jay 227, 234
Wright, Laura 524
Yau, John 151, 490
Zauhar, Dave 352
Zinnes, Harriet 97
Zitt, Joe 242
Zukofsky, Louis 317, 466, 587, 588, 589, 623, 675
Zurawski, Magdalena 358, 411
Zweig, Janet 466

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 55, 70, 181
Aesthetics 52, 67, 131, 309, 358, 710
Afghanistan 534, 541, 544, 552, 554, 556, 559, 567, 611, 612, 613, 615, 635, 663, 705
African American poetry 197, 301, 309, 457, 486, 492, 603, 688, 689, 690, 693
Anthologies 22, 101, 241, 268, 273, 274, 316, 336, 358, 492, 519, 547, 557, 576, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 596, 598, 599, 602, 603, 606, 612, 613, 616, 618, 620, 621, 625, 627, 628, 633, 634, 641, 650, 652, 653, 656, 657, 659, 660, 664, 665, 666, 667, 680, 682, 684, 685, 688, 689, 690, 691, 693, 709, 715, 732
Appropriation 6, 8, 88, 121, 246, 258, 259, 270, 309, 310, 346, 351, 556, 626, 635, 658, 704, 738
Archives and libraries 5, 22, 26, 29, 59, 62, 204, 210, 228, 239, 256, 267, 311, 324, 358, 363, 364, 378, 384, 444, 449, 530, 605, 606, 626, 648, 680, 681, 704, 738
Autobiography 144, 145, 172, 186, 211, 299, 358, 578, 650
Avant-garde 30, 56, 508, 516, 633, 648, 682, 691, 737, 740
Beat generation 667
Beauty 7, 9, 13, 23, 67, 79, 119, 143, 257, 338
Biography 22, 342, 346, 351, 358, 457, 494, 656, 657
Book announcements 24, 31, 39, 62, 80, 105, 112, 124, 181, 213, 282, 316, 356, 377, 410, 429, 482, 500, 592, 600, 608, 683, 699, 707, 714, 716, 729 Bookstores 10, 11, 16, 21, 22, 25, 26, 29, 48, 151, 286, 296, 308, 320, 324, 328, 349, 352, 353, 354, 361, 362, 363, 367, 368, 369, 371, 372, 373, 374, 376, 377, 378, 379, 381, 382, 385, 393, 394, 395, 397, 420, 430, 432, 444, 447, 450, 452, 453,

455, 465, 478, 494, 512, 549, 561, 687, 696
Calls for submissions 321, 517, 545
Capitalism 364, 368, 373, 393, 405, 406, 439, 441, 442, 516, 522, 638, 670
Censorship 6, 7, 8, 30, 47, 55, 56, 201, 202, 222, 224, 231, 246, 254, 257, 259, 263, 264, 293, 517, 545
Cities 70, 79, 153, 238, 318, 670, 696, 742
Class 648, 660
Close reading 195
Collage and montage 107, 189, 195, 198, 199, 223, 228, 250, 269, 270, 277, 280, 294, 296, 414, 547, 557, 631, 648, 729
Conferences and festivals 6, 7, 8, 44, 55, 218, 240, 246, 257, 259, 263, 347, 435, 450, 452, 475, 480, 490, 531, 558, 737
Copyright and permissions 3, 44, 114, 192, 197, 240, 606, 685, 687, 688, 689, 690, 693
Craft 146, 435
Creative writing pedagogy 62, 660
Dada 12, 228, 414, 525, 667
Deconstruction 240, 605
Difficulty 11, 115, 230, 374, 723, 725, 727
Digital archives 466
Disability 734
Dreams 44, 135, 136, 141, 144, 145, 146, 153, 155, 171, 186, 190, 193, 208, 211, 214, 218, 219, 227, 234, 253, 255, 270, 275, 278, 279, 299, 353, 354, 395, 414, 418, 600, 615, 623, 648
Ecology and ecopoetics 146, 648
Editing 358, 414, 472, 484, 504, 507, 517, 545, 586, 590, 648, 694, 732
Electronic poetry and hypertext 3, 80, 100, 114, 124, 142, 168, 181, 213, 281, 316, 321, 412, 415, 428, 435, 464, 494, 506, 607, 687, 696, 701
Elegy 464, 582
Empire and imperialism 88, 208, 559, 587, 588, 589
Epic 55, 85, 290, 387, 438, 441, 587, 588, 589, 592, 614, 694
Erasure 573
Ethics 432
Experimental poetry 625, 648, 650
Fascism 214, 218, 245, 299, 469
Feminism 24, 30, 31, 36, 44, 47, 49, 54, 56, 67, 70, 153, 275, 299, 534, 630, 648, 658, 669, 735
Film 44, 67, 136, 155, 175, 207, 208, 214, 218, 222, 224, 233, 314, 414, 485, 493, 540, 587, 588, 589, 632, 633, 635, 648, 658, 709, 729
Fluxus 576, 627, 680
Formalism 661
Futurism 208
Gender 2, 5, 24, 27, 28, 31, 32, 37, 38, 40, 43, 44, 47, 55, 62, 67, 81, 89, 90, 92, 94, 95, 101, 107, 189, 200, 205, 275, 609
Grants and funding 55, 58, 337, 625, 648, 734
Haiku 504, 507, 592, 742
Humour and satire 46, 88, 91, 106, 256, 265, 267, 269, 280, 299, 300, 305, 306, 307, 308, 310, 315, 317, 414, 636, 666, 698
Ideology 47, 55, 88, 516, 555, 559, 602, 635, 664, 667
Improvisation 240, 242, 587, 588, 589
Interviews 3, 114, 142, 151, 207, 280, 298, 314, 321, 414, 435, 494, 514, 520, 607, 612, 613, 620, 729
Israel and Palestine 514, 520, 646, 713
Jewish poetics 490
Language poetry 245, 288, 358, 508, 576, 627, 650, 665, 667, 712, 717, 720, 721, 724, 726, 737
Latino and Latin American poetry 7, 257, 508, 516, 660
Letters and correspondence 179, 240, 290, 321, 387, 493, 587, 588, 589
List moderation 303, 445, 450, 452, 490, 601
Little magazines 3, 22, 51, 59, 60, 65, 114, 142, 181, 204, 210, 240, 271, 297, 298, 299, 304, 321, 356, 358, 424, 433, 435, 438, 441, 469, 470, 475, 480, 481, 482, 494, 498, 508, 514, 517, 520, 545, 572, 578, 604, 622, 624, 629, 630, 641, 648, 694, 696
Lyric poetry 17, 18, 59, 468, 665, 729
Marxism 299, 405, 406, 426, 464, 469, 516, 522, 555
Materiality of the text 2, 410, 717, 720, 721, 726
Memory 143, 169, 358, 379, 463, 494, 547, 557, 680, 719, 725
MFA programs 410
Modernism 13, 40, 62, 79, 508, 529, 538, 555, 605, 649, 667, 720, 726, 732
Mourning and loss 68, 76, 80, 88, 124, 133, 218, 338, 358, 382, 441, 465, 466, 607, 636, 705
Music and poetry 6, 15, 67, 70, 98, 143, 169, 181, 225, 227, 234, 240, 246, 261, 309, 331, 358, 385, 390, 401, 410, 438, 441, 448, 475, 480, 486, 492, 499, 500, 512, 514, 515, 516, 520, 522, 525, 576, 582, 587, 588, 589, 626, 627, 636, 648, 665, 696, 734
Nationalism 67, 633, 713
Nature 5, 12, 13, 23, 55, 153, 237, 240, 318, 391, 397, 418, 475, 480, 494, 507, 603, 621, 632, 635, 664, 732, 738
Negativity and refusal 275, 612, 613
New York School 593, 594
Négritude 667

Obituary and memorial 435, 469, 587, 588, 589, 636
Ontology 181
Oulipo 101, 110, 494, 729
Performance and the poetry reading 6, 7, 8, 57, 70, 95, 97, 128, 240, 246, 257, 259, 263, 271, 324, 325, 375, 397, 407, 450, 452, 475, 480, 505, 650
Phenomenology 2, 27, 172, 224, 254
Philosophy 135, 136, 141, 144, 145, 146, 155, 163, 171, 175, 186, 211, 321, 358, 555, 564, 636, 648
Place and region 143, 218, 381, 467
Poetics 3, 19, 22, 47, 49, 54, 67, 70, 99, 110, 112, 116, 132, 191, 195, 198, 199, 216, 218, 223, 228, 230, 245, 250, 256, 265, 267, 270, 271, 280, 305, 306, 307, 337, 339, 350, 358, 388, 403, 409, 413, 448, 460, 475, 533, 562, 564, 572, 573, 579, 581, 583, 587, 588, 589, 594, 600, 603, 605, 608, 635, 656, 657, 664, 665, 680, 681, 689, 690, 693, 696, 699, 716, 724, 729, 737
Postmodernism 13, 62, 555, 649
Print vs. digital 11, 39, 187, 204, 210, 282, 303, 316, 346, 358, 374, 377, 393, 394, 410, 414, 469, 480, 574, 576, 582, 585, 586, 590, 591, 592, 596, 597, 598, 602, 603, 606, 618, 619, 621, 627, 633, 634, 636, 652, 654, 655, 659, 660, 664, 665, 666, 667, 670, 671, 680, 683, 709, 721, 724, 732
Prizes and awards 143, 240, 339, 340, 341, 346, 350, 351, 403, 454, 457, 458, 461, 463, 469, 486, 488, 492, 494, 612, 613, 677
Procedural and constraint writing 726
Prose poem 143, 181
Prosody and meter 486, 492, 533
Psychoanalysis 62, 275, 321, 740
Queer poetics 2, 28, 55, 56, 62, 107, 168, 189, 240, 395, 410, 632
Race and poetry 79, 90, 299, 517, 545, 700, 734
Reading announcements 41, 82, 101, 103, 240, 282, 346, 389, 397, 404, 408, 474, 492, 493, 601, 623, 650, 674, 675, 696, 711
Religion and the sacred 62, 79, 143, 205, 240, 322, 359, 519, 544, 547, 554, 557, 559, 611, 615, 626, 632, 635, 637, 640, 658, 660, 663, 678, 705, 706, 708, 734
Representation 59, 62, 70, 406, 426, 664
Reviewing and criticism 17, 18, 22, 62, 143, 151, 213, 240, 299, 355, 356, 384, 469, 477, 489, 494, 497, 559, 582, 587, 588, 589, 590, 648, 649, 650, 667, 674, 675, 680, 682, 692, 694, 712, 717, 720, 721, 726, 728, 732, 734, 737
Romanticism 605
Science 2, 27, 208, 215, 218, 220, 225, 251, 253, 439, 442, 635
Semiotics 162, 168, 540
Serial poem 39, 108, 184
Sestina 583
Small press publishing 11, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 29, 37, 48, 117, 118, 119, 125, 143, 174, 181, 213, 245, 251, 253, 271, 304, 323, 324, 337, 342, 356, 380, 383, 384, 395, 403, 444, 448, 450, 470, 482, 486, 487, 489, 492, 497, 501, 521, 543, 546, 587, 588, 589, 600, 605, 636, 646, 694, 697
Software and code 533
Sonnet 385, 478, 616, 617
Sound poetry 466
Subjectivity 2, 8, 13, 33, 43, 52, 172, 193, 259, 337, 382, 494, 533, 632
Sublime 44, 203, 237, 667
Surrealism 110, 299, 311, 437, 516, 530, 720, 726, 732, 736, 738, 741 Terrorism 12
The academy 10, 14, 16, 21, 25, 44, 45, 50, 53, 62, 68, 74, 78, 95, 98, 133, 147, 152, 154, 178, 187, 194, 197, 200, 204, 213, 226, 240, 286, 290, 292, 301, 305, 306, 307, 309, 313, 316, 321, 324, 325, 330, 340, 341, 350, 358, 372, 375, 378, 379, 383, 385, 387, 390, 407, 408, 416, 417, 428, 430, 444, 448, 450, 452, 455, 469, 477, 480, 482, 486, 492, 494, 505, 506, 508, 511, 527, 533, 534, 541, 550, 551, 552, 562, 564, 572, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 601, 605, 606, 608, 623, 624, 625, 627, 628, 630, 636, 637, 641, 644, 648, 650, 657, 661, 663, 667, 680, 691, 692, 696, 700, 712, 717, 720, 721, 724, 725, 726, 732, 738
The body 62, 165, 177, 263, 687
The canon 13, 279, 600, 612, 613, 626, 659
The Holocaust 68, 69, 83, 133, 396, 398
The internet 110, 112, 113, 142, 218, 253, 258, 268, 360, 444, 494, 519, 549, 625, 626, 696
The Iraq war 713
The line 401, 464, 665, 675, 687
The listserv 15, 28, 46, 53, 86, 98, 112, 119, 155, 168, 191, 221, 226, 230, 232, 235, 244, 245, 300, 327, 334, 345, 355, 358, 384, 385, 397, 411, 416, 432, 435, 457, 475, 512, 530, 533, 558, 562, 564, 572, 587, 588, 589, 595, 599, 605, 608, 613, 642, 710
Theatre 13, 55, 67, 187, 258, 339, 358, 469, 480, 553, 648, 650, 665, 727, 742
Torture and Abu Ghraib 561, 566, 609, 611, 615, 632, 635, 658, 662, 663, 678, 705, 706, 708

Translation 17, 18, 43, 52, 59, 64, 71, 73, 81, 89, 101, 179, 213, 273, 275, 292, 358, 428, 445, 469, 477, 531, 572, 573, 579, 581, 587, 588, 589, 601, 622, 652, 667, 687, 694, 708, 729
Vietnam 70, 121, 541
Visual and concrete poetry 321, 466, 468, 540, 551, 667
Visual art 24, 31, 62, 77, 97, 98, 103, 107, 189, 195, 234, 263, 273, 292, 309, 318, 333, 337, 343, 348, 412, 418, 448, 468, 469, 474, 475, 480, 485, 492, 494, 514, 520, 525, 540, 551, 559, 601, 648, 694, 701, 740, 742
Women's writing 40, 81, 89, 95, 275, 285, 286, 287, 289, 291, 292, 297, 312, 416

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 743 in all.

22 MAR 1998

1. Steve Tills — Re: more boring chit-chat
2. Steve Tills — Re: more boring chit-chat

27 MAR 1998

3. Steve Tills — Re: The Age of Plastic

29 MAR 1998

4. Steve Tills — Re: Aliens at Zinc Bar

31 MAR 1998

5. linda russo — Re: Guns, gender, children
6. Steve Tills — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
7. Steve Tills — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
8. Steve Tills — Re: local issue: byrkit performance

1 APR 1998

9. Billy Little — frank sinatra
10. Rachel Levitsky — Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
11. morpheal — Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
12. morpheal — Re: god 44
13. henry gould — Re: god 44
14. MAYHEW — Of Notley's first disobedience...
15. Susan Wheeler — Announcement
16. Steve Shoemaker — Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
17. Garrett Kalleberg — The Friend, Issue No. 2
18. Thomas A. Vogler — WEBSITES
19. Mark Wallace — Re: XMAs (fwd)
20. Ctfarmr — correction
21. William Marsh — Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
22. Burt Kimmelman — Talisman House (Ed Foster has asked me to forward the below to the List)
23. k. lederer — A poem by Alice Notley
24. k. lederer — Re: more boring chit-chat
25. laura and jeff — Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
26. Peter Balestrieri — Berkeley Bookstore
27. SSSCHAEFER — Re: more boring chit-chat
28. dbkk — Re: more boring chit-chat
29. r. drake — Re: Berkeley Bookstore
30. dbkk — Re: screening process/feminism
31. Mark Weiss — Re: more boring chit-chat
32. k. lederer — Interesting chit-chat
33. k. lederer — Re: more boring chit-chat
34. Mark Weiss — Re: more boring chit-chat
35. Wendy Kramer — samuel delany
36. Gwyn McVay — Re: screening process/feminism
37. Maz881 — Enigma Variations

2 APR 1998

38. Patrick F. Durgin — Re: more boring chit-chat
39. Charles Alexander — announcing books
40. Marcella Durand — Tired chit-chat
41. Christopher Reiner — Scalapino and Ward Reading

42. ScoutEW — alligators, dense fog and Scala piano
43. Mark Weiss — Re: Tired chit-chat
44. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — dis-appointment...
45. Maria Damon — Re: dis-appointment...
46. SSSCHAEFER — Dodie chat
47. Mark Prejsnar — theses on poetics and feminism
48. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Berkeley Bookstore
49. henry gould — Re: theses on poetics and feminism
50. Susan Wheeler — Re: dis-appointment...
51. Billy Little — springtime in nowhere
52. k. lederer — Re: Tired chit-chat
53. MAYHEW — dis-appointment
54. RJRVE — Re: theses on poetics and feminism
55. dbkk — TIM MILLER'S REPORT FROM THE SUPREME COURT
56. Rachel Levitsky — Re: naming and power
57. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Left Hand Reading Series
58. Jordan Davis — "publicly thanking Dodie"
59. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
60. Angela Szeto — Re: springtime in nowhere
61. ScoutEW — PBS
62. Hugh Nicoll — Gertrude Stein Online
63. Billy Little — disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
64. Schuchat Simon — Re: Tired chit-chat
65. Billy Little — JAB in Nowhere
66. Keston Sutherland — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
67. Don Wellman — Re: (four/four) theses on poetics and feminism
68. Keston Sutherland — Rose's mourning
69. Billy Little — obediance
70. michael corbin — Re: (four/four) theses on poetics and feminism
71. k. lederer — Re: Tired chit-chat

3 APR 1998

72. Stephen Cope — address query
73. Mark Weiss — Re: Tired chit-chat
74. beth lee simon — Re: dis-appointment...
75. Hank Lazer — Re: dis-appointment...
76. Rachel Loden — a poem by Hilda Morley
77. Marcella Durand — Anselm B reading
78. daniel bouchard — O B D Ants
79. Rachel Levitsky — Re: From the "Adventures of Yaya and Grace"
80. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Passages 5: Eigner Issue
81. k. lederer — Re: Tired chit-chat
82. nyu.edu — NYC Reading
83. Keston Sutherland — Re: no she was right
84. Keston Sutherland — Re: no she was right
85. henry gould — Re: 4/4/theses
86. Alan Myouka Sondheim — perhaps from Alan (fwd)
87. Patrick F. Durgin — address request}
88. morpheal — Re: O B D Ants
89. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
90. dbkk — Standard's standards
91. Keston Sutherland — Re: O B D Ants
92. Keston Sutherland — Re: your mail
93. Keston Sutherland — a poem by Andrea Brady
94. Mark Weiss — Re: your mail
95. MAYHEW — agacE de ce long bavardage inutile

96. Elizabeth Hatmaker — Re: agacE de ce long bavardage inutile
97. Hzinnes — announcement
98. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Nathaniel Mackey's Mpls Visit
99. morpheal — Re: O B D Ants
100. Karen Kelley — For Juliana Spahr

4 APR 1998

101. Rachel Levitsky — Re: agacE de ce long bavardage inutile
102. morpheal — Re: alligators, dense fog and Scala piano
103. Karen and Trevor — mei-mei & elizabeth
104. Ellay Phillips — Re: a poem by Andrea Brady
105. Keston Sutherland — Re: a poem by Andrea Brady
106. Keston Sutherland — Another by Andrea Brady
107. Wendy Kramer — tired chit

5 APR 1998

108. Keston Sutherland — booksbyab
109. Keston Sutherland — ab's verses
110. Tom Beard — Fw: Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown
111. Keston Sutherland — possible part 5 of on the occasion a repast
112. david bromige — re : Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown
113. George Bowering — re : Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown

6 APR 1998

114. John Tranter — The Age of Plastic
115. david bromige — re the age of plastic
116. Wolsak — query to poetics list
117. r. drake — Re: SPD
118. Burt Kimmelman — SPD
119. Jordan Davis — "open bond"
120. Cadaly — Server and/or Printer Names
121. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Server and/or Printer Names
122. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Server and/or Printer Names
123. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Oops!
124. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Harryette Mullen Author Page
125. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: SPD
126. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Time changes (fwd)
127. Charles Bernstein — Frank Kuensler reading
128. Michael J. Kelleher — a l y r i c m a i l e r 3
129. Burt Kimmelman — Re: SPD
130. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Server and/or Printer Names
131. Ellay Phillips — Re: Another by Andrea Brady
132. laura and jeff — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
133. michael corbin — Re: Rose's mourning
134. Keston Sutherland — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
135. Karen Kelley — Alien thoughts
136. k. lederer — Re: Alien thoughts
137. Keston Sutherland — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
138. laura and jeff — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
139. laura and jeff — Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
140. Steven Marks — Re: Server and/or Printer Names
141. Steven Marks — Re: Alien thoughts

7 APR 1998

142. John Tranter — John Forbes and ukeleles
143. Christopher Reiner — Avec Books
144. dbkk — Re: Alien thoughts

145. Karen Kelley — Re: Alien thoughts
146. d.j. huppatz — Re: Alien thoughts
147. Miekal And — Re: Alien thoughts
148. Henry — Re: Alien thoughts
149. Keston Sutherland — Re: John Forbes and ukeleles
150. Susan Wheeler — Reading Announcement
151. Gary Sullivan — Rain Taxi Vol. 3 No. 1
152. William Marsh — NYC in May
153. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Alien thoughts
154. Keston Sutherland — Re: NYC in May
155. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Alien thoughts
156. daniel bouchard — Re: NYC in May
157. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Alien thoughts
158. Keston Sutherland — monsters
159. Susan Wheeler — Reading Announcement
160. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: monsters
161. Cadaly — thanks: userids and names
162. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: monsters
163. Miekal And — Re: Alien thoughts
164. William Marsh — alineanalien
165. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: monsters
166. Aldon Nielsen — data quest
167. louis stroffolino — Re: alineanalien
168. Maria Damon — Re: monsters, aliens, angels
169. Laura Moriarty — Re: Alien thoughts
170. Aldon Nielsen — damn
171. Maz881 — Re: Alien thoughts
172. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
173. Maria Damon — Re: Alien thoughts
174. CharSSmith — new Gustaf Sobin chapbook -- Arcturus Editions
175. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
176. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
177. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
178. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Alien thoughts
179. Billy Little — alien is beautiful/alienated @birth
180. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
181. Steve Carll — Antenym 15 is published
182. Rachel Levitsky — Re: announcing 2(1X1)
183. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Alien thoughts
184. George Bowering — Re: Alien thoughts
185. George Bowering — Re: Alien thoughts
186. Peter Quartermain — Re: Alien thoughts
187. Tom Beard — Re: Alien thoughts
188. Karen Kelley — Aliens among us

8 APR 1998

189. Thomas Bell — Re: notsotired chit
190. david bromige — Alien Dreams
191. henry g — ally ally in free
192. r. drake — found poem: "failure notice"
193. Dean Taciuch — Re: Alien Dreams
194. morpheal — Re: Alien thoughts
195. Gary Sullivan — Poetics of collage?
196. Gleason — Re: damn
197. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — thanx...
198. r. drake — Re: Poetics of collage?

199. Gary Sullivan — Re: Poetics of collage?
200. Douglas Barbour — Re: aliens (in SF)
201. louis stroffolino — Re: aliens (in SF)
202. morpheal — Re: Was: aliens (in SF) Now: Censorship and Belief
203. Michael J. Kelleher — Frank O'Hara
204. David Kellogg — The last book
205. morpheal — Re: WAS: Alien thoughts NOW: A Short Quiz On the Whole Alphabet
206. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Sembrar la memoria Tammy Wynette
207. main — sontag/godot/bosnia
208. morpheal — Re: Alien Dreams
209. Marcella Durand — Aliens at Zinc Bar
210. morpheal — Re: The last book

9 APR 1998

211. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Alien thoughts
212. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Alien thoughts
213. Susan Schultz — TINFISH 6 is now available
214. david bromige — re : Alien Dreams
215. Miekal And — the fetish of psychotronics
216. Sylvester Pollet — matzoh poetics
217. Jordan Davis — matzoh placards
218. morpheal — Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
219. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
220. William Marsh — Re: the fetish of psychotronics
221. Joseph Noble — "Here" and Zinc Bar Query
222. louis stroffolino — Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
223. Miekal And — Re: Poetics of collage?
224. morpheal — Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
225. morpheal — Re: the fetish of psychotronics
226. MAYHEW — April archives
227. Aldon Nielsen — Re: the Wright Reading
228. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Poetics of collage?
229. Susan Clark — Lindsay Hill address anyone?
230. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
231. Keston Sutherland — Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
232. Keston Sutherland — Re: April archives
233. Aldon Nielsen — Robeson, H.D., Bryher
234. Mark Weiss — Re: the Wright Reading

10 APR 1998

235. Rprunty — Raworth's appeal
236. Robert Hale — to see -- once more -- the stars.
237. Ryan Whyte — Letter (fwd)
238. rsillima — John Granger's Organs
239. rsillima — Mondegreens
240. charles alexander — local issue: byrkit performance
241. Robert Archambeau — Talisman Hegemony at Last!
242. r. drake — COMMA to perform at Ruthless Grip (fwd)
243. Keston Sutherland — (no subject)
244. Keith Tuma — Re: Raworth's appeal
245. daniel bouchard — in honor of nat'l poetry mnth/ only 20 days left
246. Hugh Steinberg — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
247. Mark Prejsnar — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
248. henry — Re: to see -- once more -- the stars.
249. Rprunty — Re: Raworth's appeal
250. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: Poetics of collage?
251. Maz881 — Re: anomalies

252. Maz881 — San Francisco Reading
253. morpheal — Re: anomalies
254. RJRVE — Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
255. Maz881 — Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
256. ScoutEW — Poetics of comic strips
257. Hugh Steinberg — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
258. Karen Kelley — Byrkit Performance
259. Rachel Levitsky — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
260. linda russo — MOVING BORDER/MM KIM
261. Rachel Levitsky — Re: for my sederless Boulder Passover
262. Rachel Levitsky — Re: for my sederless Boulder Passover
263. Karen Kelley — Re: local issue: byrkit performance

11 APR 1998

264. charles alexander — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
265. George Bowering — Re: Poetics of comic strips
266. Karen and Trevor — Re: MOVING BORDER/MM KIM
267. Karen and Trevor — Re: Poetics of comic strips
268. Robert J. Tiess — Spring 1998 Poetfest Anthology
269. rsillima — Poetry Comics
270. Wendy Kramer — thy cables breathe the bell atlantic
271. dbkk — A. Berrigan/Y. Morrison at Canessa Park
272. RaeA100900 — Moving Borders
273. Burt Kimmelman — Talisman Announcements
274. Maria Damon — Re: Talisman Hegemony at Last!
275. linda russo — Re: Treaded chit-chat
276. dbkk — SF catsitting gig
277. Billy Little — comics page collage
278. morpheal — Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
279. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies

12 APR 1998

280. ScoutEW — Daredevil, Diane Wakowski
281. Steve Carll — Antenym 15 celebration in Golden Gate Park
282. dbkk — Re: Moving Borders
283. dbkk — Re: local issue: byrkit performance
284. Gleason — Re: catsitting gig
285. Billy Little — Re: women poets from Ireland
286. David Zauhar — women poets from Ireland
287. k. lederer — Re: women poets from Ireland
288. Rprunty — Re: Antenym, improved directions to reading
289. Keith Tuma — Re: women poets from Ireland
290. Miekal And — after emmett
291. Keith Tuma — Re: women poets from Ireland
292. David Kellogg — Re: women poets from Ireland
293. morpheal — Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy

13 APR 1998

294. Hugh Steinberg — Scavenger hunt suggestions
295. laura and jeff — goodbye
296. Miekal And — Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
297. Robert Archambeau — Re: women poets from Ireland
298. r. drake — fwd: Arguelles/Foley reading, & interview
299. Gary Sullivan — Hey, Kids! Comics!
300. louis stroffolino — Re: Dodie chat
301. David Zauhar — Mackey Reading in Chicago
302. Gary Sullivan — "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net

303. ScoutEW — Re: Hey, Kids! Comics!
304. Gary Sullivan — Tricky Cad, etc.
305. Carolyn Guertin — Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
306. Mark Weiss — Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
307. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
308. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
309. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Mackey Reading in Chicago
310. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Poetry Comics
311. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
312. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Re: women poets from Ireland
313. beth lee simon — Re: Mackey Reading in Chicago
314. Safdie Joseph — Re: Robeson, H.D., Bryher
315. George Bowering — Re: Dorn comics
316. Pierre Joris — Poems for the Millennium VOL II
317. ScoutEW — Re: Tricky Cad, etc.
318. Ryan Whyte — letter
319. groberts — Dear Joe Brainard,

14 APR 1998

320. Tom Orange — nyc secondhand bookshops
321. Joshua N Schuster — CFP: Other Voices (fwd)
322. rsillima — Where are they now?
323. Charles Alexander — Re: more closings
324. daniel bouchard — nyc secondhand bookshops
325. MAYHEW — report on Bromige reading
326. Keston Sutherland — Re: nyc secondhand bookshops
327. daniel bouchard — nyc firstrate readings
328. J. Kuszai — Re: nyc secondhand bookshops
329. Mark Prejsnar — Re: nyc secondhand bookshops
330. Carolyn Guertin — Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
331. Laura Moriarty — stanza/paragraph (new non)
332. lee ann brown — Tax Relief Reading
333. Miekal And — Re: place(less Place)
334. Miekal And — Re: Bern Porter
335. Maria Damon — Re: Tax Relief Reading
336. AERIALEDGE — Moving Borders Reading
337. Michael J. Kelleher — place(less Place) gathering
338. Keston Sutherland — fuer Alle und Keine von Andrea Brady
339. Douglas — America Awards
340. David Kellogg — Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
341. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
342. Mark Melnicove — Bern Porter
343. Michael J. Kelleher — place(less Place)
344. ScoutEW — Re: place(less Place)
345. Mark Melnicove — Re: Bern Porter
346. Susan Wheeler — Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
347. Billy Little — Re: place(less Place) gathering
348. Miekal And — when visiting maine do as the mainelanders do
349. Rachel Levitsky — Re: more closings
350. David Zauhar — Re: America Awards
351. Keith Tuma — Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
352. David Zauhar — Re: more closings
353. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: more closings
354. Maria Damon — Re: more closings
355. Steven Marks — Re: Bern Porter

15 APR 1998

356. Michael J. Kelleher — a l y r i c m a i l e r 4
357. Tom Orange — nyc books reading
358. AERIALEDGE — New New New @ Bridge Street Books
359. Alan Myouka Sondheim — (no subject)
360. Charles Alexander — moved site
361. daniel bouchard — Re: more closings
362. George Thompson — Re: more closings
363. Gary Sullivan — Re: more closings
364. Mark Prejsnar — Re: more closings
365. daniel bouchard — Re: more closings
366. daniel bouchard — Re: more closings
367. Maria Damon — Re: more closings
368. daniel bouchard — Re: more closings
369. daniel bouchard — Re: more closings
370. Elizabeth Hatmaker — Re: more closings
371. Gary Sullivan — Re: more closings
372. MAYHEW — More Closings
373. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: more closings
374. morpheal — Re: more closings
375. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: report on Bromige reading
376. Keston Sutherland — Re: more closings (fwd)
377. k. lederer — Re: more closings
378. Judy Roitman — Re: more closings
379. Judy Roitman — Re: more closings
380. Keston Sutherland — Re: more closings
381. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
382. Gary Sullivan — Re: more closings (fwd)
383. Judy Roitman — Re: more closings
384. Mark Weiss — Re: more closings
385. MAYHEW — Re: more closings
386. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: New New New @ Bridge Street Books
387. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: after emmett
388. Ctfarmr — addresses needed
389. Kevin Varrone — Reading Announcement
390. David Zauhar — Nathaniel Mackey reading
391. morpheal — Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
392. morpheal — Re: more closings (fwd)
393. Schuchat Simon — Re: more closings
394. Karen Kelley — Re: more closings
395. Rachel Levitsky — Re: more closings
396. Keston Sutherland — Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
397. Marcella Durand — Zinc bar readings

16 APR 1998

398. morpheal — Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
399. Billy Little — where is David
400. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
401. Hugh Steinberg — Re: stanza/paragraph (new non)
402. Mark Melnicove — Publication reading
403. Maz881 — sf reading
404. Maryrose11 — Re: where is David
405. Henry Gould — Re: more closings
406. morpheal — Re: more closings
407. Hank Lazer — Re: tusc reading
408. Judy Roitman — Re: where is David
409. k e n n i n g — how to find?

410. Charles Alexander — more on tucson
411. Joseph Noble — Zinc Bar Readings
412. Steve Carll — other readings you won't want to miss
413. Scott Pound — Re: how to find?
414. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions& comix poetix
415. Steve Carll — other readings you won't want to miss addendum
416. David Zauhar — Women poets from Ireland
417. Annie Finch — For Mark Melnicove
418. Ryan Whyte — letter
419. Steve Shoemaker — Re: more closings

17 APR 1998

420. morpheal — Re: more closings
421. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Bromige Does Boulder
422. ScoutEW — Re: letter
423. Christopher W. Alexander — Winston Break
424. Robert Archambeau — Has anyone heard of this magazine...
425. henry gould — Winston Break
426. Rachel Levitsky — Re: more closings
427. Rod4rigo — Query: Andrew Levy's Address
428. Judy Roitman — Re: other readings you won't want to miss addendum
429. megan minka lola camille roy — nyc: a reading
430. MAYHEW — bookstore sagas
431. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Bromige reading
432. morpheal — Re: bookstore sagas
433. Steven Marks — Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...
434. Joseph Noble — Zinc Bar Addendum
435. John Tranter — Cambridge UK Poetry Conference
436. Karen Kelley — Geocities

18 APR 1998

437. Ctfarmr — Dain Olsen
438. Rachel Levitsky — Re: oy vey morpheal!
439. Billy Little — Re: oy vey morpheal!
440. George Bowering — Re: Bromige Does Boulder
441. morpheal — Re: oy vey morpheal!
442. morpheal — Re: oy vey morpheal!
443. JBCM2 — Re: oy vey morpheal!
444. Douglas Barbour — Re: bookstore sagas
445. Billy Little — oy vey
446. Chris [Steve] Piuma — Re: Geocities
447. morpheal — Re: oy vey morpheal!
448. charles alexander — tucson activities
449. Pierre Joris — MILLENNIUM VOLUME II EVENTS
450. Mark Nowak — Mpls. events
451. Maria Damon — Re: oy vey morpheal!
452. Maria Damon — Re: Mpls. events
453. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — Re: bookstore sagas

19 APR 1998

454. Steve Shoemaker — George Oppen wins Pulitzer
455. MAYHEW — Bookstore sagas
456. Rachel Levitsky — Re: oy vey morpheal!
457. Hugh Steinberg — Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer
458. Stephen Cope — Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer
459. morpheal — Re: oy vey morpheal!
460. Billy Little — Re: oy vey

461. Burt Kimmelman — Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer
462. morpheal — Re: oy vey
463. Rachel Levitsky — Re: underdog wins
464. Martin Spinelli — oy
465. michael corbin — Re: bookstore sagas
466. Kenneth Goldsmith — UbuWeb Visual, Concrete, & Sound Poetry: April 1998 Updates

20 APR 1998

467. Aaron Vidaver — Speaking of George Oppen
468. Jim Andrews — V I S P O ~ L A N G U (I M) A G E
469. rsillima — Octavio Paz
470. Robert Archambeau — Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...
471. Burt Hatlen — Re: Speaking of George Oppen
472. Douglas — Re: kanji
473. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Speaking of George Oppen
474. Gary Sullivan — Drucker, Rodefer, etc. Reading
475. Poetics List Administration — Brit visiting Cleveland Ohio and NY seeks gigs (fwd)
476. Susan Wheeler — Reading in PA
477. Douglas Barbour — Re: Octavio Paz dies
478. Jordan Davis — bkstrs for tom orange
479. Billy Little — Re: Octavio Paz dies
480. Alaric Sumner — Alaric Sumner visiting Cleveland Ohio and NY seeks gigs
481. louis stroffolino — Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...
482. r.drake — _Certainty Series_ by Dean Taciuch
483. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Speaking of George Oppen
484. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Speaking of George Oppen
485. Michael J Kelleher — mayday97mayday98 (fwd)
486. dbkk — Donahue, Roberson at SPT
487. dbkk — Small Press Traffic webpage
488. William Burmeister Prod — Octavio Paz 1914-1998
489. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
490. Marcella Durand — Poetry Project Symposium
491. Billy Little — Re: Speaking of George Oppen

21 APR 1998

492. Stephen Cope — Re: Donahue, Roberson at SPT
493. dbkk — more readings you don't want to miss
494. John Tranter — Jacket # 3 is complete, and awaits your attention
495. linda russo — query
496. AERIALEDGE — Philadelphia Reading
497. dbkk — Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
498. Maria Damon — hannah weiner queries
499. Miekal And — Re: hannah weiner queries
500. Tom Thompson — D.A. Powell, NYC Reading
501. Steven Marks — Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
502. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Homi Bhabha
503. dbkk — Re: Speaking of George Oppen
504. Aldon Nielsen — PAZ
505. Aldon Nielsen — Bromige and Davidson in Los Angeles
506. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Homi Bhabha
507. William Burmeister Prod — Re: PAZ
508. MAYHEW — Guerra y paz
509. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Paz Dispenser
510. k. lederer — Re: Naropa info--
511. MAYHEW — Paz dispenser
512. Michael Magee — movin' to providence - advice?
513. r.drake — Re: Homi Bhabha

514. Charles Bernstein — Re: hannah weiner queries
515. Schuchat Simon — Re: hannah weiner queries
516. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Guerra y paz
517. Pam Brown — overland bits, call for submissions & launch
518. Aldon Nielsen — Re: Guerra y paz
519. Scott Keeney — Re: Where are they now?
520. Maria Damon — Re: hannah weiner queries
521. Aviva99999 — Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
522. morpheal — Re: Guerra y paz
523. Karen Kelley — Still seeking free web server
524. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Homi Bhabha/Naropa

22 APR 1998

525. henry — Re: movin' to providence - advice?
526. henry g — sorry shdv bkchnld
527. MAYHEW — Guerra y paz
528. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Guerra y paz
529. louis stroffolino — NYC APARTMENT SHARE POSSIBILITY
530. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Where are they now?
531. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Guerra y paz
532. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Where are they now?
533. Annie Finch — New versification mailing list
534. Christopher W. Alexander — Afghanistan
535. David Zauhar — Fw: lyotard's death (fwd)
536. Elizabeth Hatmaker — Re: Where are they now?
537. Gwyn McVay — Re: Where are they now?
538. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: NYC APARTMENT SHARE POSSIBILITY
539. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: Where are they now?
540. Thomas Bell — Re: the "audience" . . ./
541. morpheal — Re: Afghanistan
542. Alan Myouka Sondheim — for Aram Saroyan from Nikuko Daishin
543. Aviva99999 — Fwd: Amazon.com Books
544. k. lederer — Re: Afghanistan
545. Margie Cronin — Re: overland bits, call for submissions & launch
546. Steve Shoemaker — Re: Fwd: Amazon.com Books
547. Maz881 — veitch
548. ScoutEW — Re: for Aram Saroyan from Nikuko Daishin

23 APR 1998

549. Rachel Loden — Re: Where are they now?
550. MAYHEW — Some queries
551. Judy Roitman — Re: the "audience" . . ./
552. Judy Roitman — Re: Afghanistan
553. PRAPRA — define terms
554. Elizabeth Hatmaker — Re: Afghanistan
555. morpheal — Re: define terms
556. morpheal — Re: Afghanistan
557. Don Cheney — Re: veitch
558. daniel bouchard — Re: Jeff Conant
559. morpheal — Re: Afghanistan - Some prophecies....for the millenium
560. Billy Little — He regrets that he has never been to Philadelphia.
561. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Bachelard's take
562. MAYHEW — a more serious query
563. k. lederer — EXPLOSIVE #5 BENEFIT
564. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy — Re: a more serious query
565. Billy Little — Re: a more serious query
566. Karen Kelley — Re: the situation of women in Afganistan

567. Karen Kelley — oops, AfgHanistan
568. Schuchat Simon — Re: a more serious query
569. morpheal — Re: He regrets that he has never been to Philadelphia.
570. Gwyn McVay — "writing through"
571. Stephen Cope — Re: "writing through"
572. Don Byrd — Re: a more serious query

24 APR 1998

573. Hugh Steinberg — Re: a more serious query
574. Miekal And — codex "writing through"
575. Marcella Durand — Chiapas
576. rsillima — The Book of Absences
577. Pierre Joris — Re: "writing through"
578. Hank Lazer — Re: "writing through"
579. Douglas Barbour — Re: a more serious query
580. Alaric Sumner — UK research seminar
581. Judy Roitman — Re: a more serious query
582. sylvester pollet — Poetry/Jazz event
583. groberts — Re: "writing through"
584. Mark Prejsnar — Re: a more serious query
585. ScoutEW — Re: The Book of Absences
586. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: The Book of Absences
587. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: a more serious query
588. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: a more serious query
589. Taylor Brady — Re: a more serious query
590. Robert Hale — Re: The Book of Absences
591. Jerome Rothenberg — Re: The Book of Absences
592. Eric Blarnes — Re: The Book of Absences
593. Laura Moriarty — Re: a more serious query
594.]||kenning||[— Re: a more serious query
595. William Burmeister Prod — Re: a more serious query
596. ScoutEW — Re: The Book of Absences
597. Aldon Nielsen — Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
598. Billy Little — Re: The Book of Visibility
599. Laura Moriarty — Re: a more serious anthology
600. k. lederer — Re: writing through others--Ronell and Corless-Smith
601. Charles Bernstein — Olivier Cadiot NY reading
602. groberts — Re: The Book of Absences
603.]||kenning||[— Re: The Book of Absences
604. k. lederer — EXPLOSIVE benefit--IOWA
605. Taylor Brady — Re: a more serious query
606. Fred Muratori — Re: The Book of Absences
607. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New at the EPC
608. Douglas — Re: a more serious query
609. Maz881 — Re: Bachelard's take
610. Don Wellman — Re: "writing through"
611. k. lederer — Women/culture/torture
612. Safdie Joseph — Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
613. Brent Long — Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
614. Henry Gould — Re: writing through
615. morpheal — Re: Women/culture/torture
616. Gwyn McVay — Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
617. Henry Gould — (no subject)
618. Aviva99999 — Re: The Book of Absences
619. Aviva99999 — Re: The Book of Absences
620. Henry Gould — Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies

621. Aviva99999 — Re: The Book of Absences
622. Schuchat Simon — Re: a more serious query
623. Aldon Nielsen — Vase of Fresh Language
624. David Zauhar — Re: a more serious query(Gerard M.)

25 APR 1998

625. Gwyn McVay — Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
626. Matt Kirschenbaum — Blake Archive's April Update
627. Pierre Joris — Re: The Book of Absences
628. MAYHEW — writing through
629. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Bachelard's take
630. Judy Roitman — Re: Bachelard's take

26 APR 1998

631. k. lederer — EXPLOSIVE #5
632. Dougolly — women, torture, etc.
633. Dougolly — The Book of Absences
634. Bob Grumman — Re: The Book of Absences
635. morpheal — Re: Poetics of Freedom (was women / torture, etc.)
636. J. Kuszai — Daniel Kanyandekwe (1963-1997)
637. Douglas Barbour — Re: RADI OS as 'writing through'
638. Michael McColl — When the West Finds Fault
639. morpheal — Re: When the West Finds Fault
640. morpheal — Re: RADI OS as 'writing through'
641. Don Byrd — The Anthology
642. David Baratier — Howdy
643. Lisa Samuels — seeking: source of 2 lines
644. Charles Bernstein — Cecilia Vicuna in Seattle
645. Susan Wheeler — NYC Reading
646. Taylor Brady — Charlemagne Palestine
647. Charles Bernstein — Frank Kuensler reading
648. David Clippinger — Antin Reading
649. Henry Gould — Re: writing over
650. Stephen Cope — BEYOND THE PAGE
651. Clark D Lunberry — CreeleyReading

27 APR 1998

652. Peter Quartermain — Re: That Anthology
653. Stephen Cope — Re: That Anthology
654. George Bowering — Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
655. morpheal — Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
656. Charles Bernstein — Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
657. David Zauhar — Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
658. Dougolly — Re: women, torture
659. Mark Prejsnar — Re: The Book of Absences
660. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: That Anthology
661. Annie Finch — juxtaposed-formalist reading in Chicago
662. morpheal — Re: women, torture
663. Judy Roitman — Re: women, torture, tradition, style
664. ken|n|ing — Re: The Book of Absences
665. Franklin Bruno — mostly concerning The Book of Absences
666. groberts — The Book of Spicer
667. MAYHEW — Stop, I did not drag my father past this tree
668. Maz881 — bad history
669. Maz881 — Re: Bachelard's take
670. joel lewis — F.Y.I.
671. Karen Kelley — Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting

672. toddbaron — REMAP
673. Linda Russo — Re: F.Y.I.

28 APR 1998

674. Chicago Review — Re: Poetry at the White House
675. Mark Baker — Re: Poetry at the White House
676. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: F.Y.I.
677. Robert Archambeau — Re: Poetry at the White House
678. Dougolly — Re: women, torture
679. Miekal And — umbra?
680. Mark Prejsnar — the flying wedge
681. Henry Gould — Re: the flying wedge
682. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Stop, I did not drag my father past this tree
683. Aldon Nielsen — Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
684. Aldon Nielsen — Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
685. Aldon Nielsen — Re: the flying wedge
686. Maria Damon — Re: umbra?
687. Martin Spinelli — Re: F.Y.I.
688. Mark Prejsnar — Re: the flying wedge
689. Mark Prejsnar — Re: the flying wedge
690. Safdie Joseph — Re: the flying wedge
691. MAYHEW — Stop, I did not drag my father
692. MAYHEW — review of Poems
693. Maria Damon — Re: the flying wedge 694. Christopher Reiner — new magazine
695. ScoutEW — just a lil something
696. Poetics List — NYC Poetry Calendar Gala (FWD)
697. Aviva99999 — Fwd: Amazon.com Books
698. joel lewis — f.y.i.

29 APR 1998

699. Jordan Davis — keemun imp.
700. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — gov't hijinx
701. Simon/Piombino — Poets for Choice reading
702. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: gov't hijinx
703. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: gov't hijinx
704. Christopher W. Alexander — Newt's address - finally
705. morpheal — Re: women, torture, tradition, style
706. morpheal — Re: women, torture
707. Keston Sutherland — new books by Davis & Prynne

30 APR 1998

708. toddbaron — Re: women, torture
709. David Baratier — Re: The Book of Spicer
710. Jordan Davis — sorrel programs are basal
711. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Hejinian in Denver
712. MAYHEW — James Tate
713. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Syrian Poet Nizar Qabbani Dies
714. David Golumbia — Re: new books by Davis & Prynne
715. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Stop, I did not drag my father
716. Mark Prejsnar — Re: keemun imp.
717. louis stroffolino — fresh
718. Billy Little — raworth
719. Michael Magee — Re: fresh
720. trace s. ruggles — Re: fresh
721. Safdie Joseph — Re: fresh
722. MAYHEW — Fresh

723. k. lederer — Re: fresh
724. Judy Roitman — Re: fresh
725. Judy Roitman — Re: fresh
726. louis stroffolino — : fresh trace
727. k. lederer — Re: Fresh
728. William Burmeister Prod — Re: James Tate
729. Douglas — new titles
730. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: fresh kitten
731. louis stroffolino — Re freshly stale
732. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — poems for the millennium vol. 2
733. Mark Prejsnar — Re: fresh
734. Maria Damon — fwd: job opening
735. Maria Damon — query asap
736. MAYHEW — Spicer, surrealism, born on date
737. Mark Prejsnar — A fresh fit of ranting about freshness
738. Fred Muratori — Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date
739. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — tusind tak
740. Karen Kelley — Fresh obscure cliches
741. Karen Kelley — Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date
742. Jordan Davis — make your mind
743. Henry Gould — obscurity

1. Steve Tills
Re: more boring chit-chat
Sun 22 Mar 1998

Yep! Me, too.

Aviva99999 wrote:

> In a message dated 3/31/98 1:42:12 PM Eastern Standard Time, > [redacted] writes:
>
> << But Helene Cixous's theories on a female language are > interesting when applied to experimental syntax. >>
>
> I'd love to hear more about this...

↑ Index

2. Steve Tills
Re: more boring chit-chat
Sun 22 Mar 1998

Standard,

Please explain more about DiPalma's specificities about the dash. Are you saying that he insisted that the dashes be exactly the same size and spacing that he'd used/written in his original manuscript and that you thought that picky in some way. I suspect you're not saying this--i.e., wanting the dashes done exactly as submitted was picky, as you'd certainly want to get such particulars done accurately, but I'm curious. And about the reference to gender identity, you're kidding, I gotta suspect, right?

In response to the subjectivity stuff. My own hunch, which is probably not a terribly new thought, is that women (and by extension gay and lesbian writers) are in a unprecedented position to handle, especially, _pronouns_ in very new ways. The "I" and "we" uses in conventionally referential poeties have certainly taken (for good and necessary reasons, I think) a backseat in most of the experimental/innovative poetries I've been reading in my lifetime. I think males have most often used these ironically, self-reflexively, and most especially as "objects(?)," all by themselves--i.e., they become more the subject matter, or the content, or whatever, in poetries that include them; not "a subject" speaks from them; rather, they are more a part of the formal issues the poetry is actually "about" ("is a preposition. It takes a verb. It takes a verb to know one" [possibly poorly misquoted but always for me hilarious quote from someone in _The L=Book_). I've digressed--sorry. Again, if anything left after the digression, I believe females and non-male gendered and/or identified poets will especially handle pronouns, employ them, very differently, and do already, to be sure. I'm particularly interested in what will be done and what has been done with the second person. I believe close examination of the male experimentalists will show "you" employed very seldom as "an other" presumably outside of the Self of the poet. More often, I believe, the male experimentalist's "you" will be a projection of some part of the male's "Self" or some part of the "matter" the poetry is addressing or made out of. Non-males, I think, have a novel opportunity (or even responsibility) to use the second person and let it speak "for" and "to" and "about" and "from" and _____ in ways that address or contact another "repressed element" in poetry, a materiality not of "language," but of "Self" a male overemphasis on "individuality" as means to "individuation" cannot fully perceive, actualize or contact. In other words, such Self can only be illuminated when other "others" are heard from.

This post is a mass of confusion for the writer and probably will be for most list-readers, too, but I can't articulate these thoughts clearly yet and want to send the post anyway. I do hope that some others will at least think about ways of handling/employing pronouns, though. I regret that I haven't taken the time to closely analyze, say, ten prototypical male and ten prototypical non-male poetries including various employment of the second person pronoun. I do think such an analysis would prove fruitful.

Me, I'm afraid.

SSSCHAEFER wrote:

> Katy:
>
> As usual, lots to chew on and thanks plus I feel smarter now having read your thorough post. So thanks.
>
> First off, for the record, no one has given me as editor more trouble about dashes than Ray DiPalma who is very specific about the SIZE of dash he likes and so what does that say about his gender identity?
>
> Second, what on earth is "super model poetry" and why am I so excited? Please send some.
>
> Third, Leslie Scalapino just read some "sex" poems from WAY, I believe, here in town yesterday, and I was struck about how at least in that manuscript, it seemed a bit more like reading phenomenology. Plus a little particle physics. But detached, I mean in big way. FRONT MATTER, DEAD SOULS I can't recall too clearly here, but Leslie was telling me that she felt that a large part of her work resists the idea of a reader who can "identify" with the work.
>
> This I find really interesting. How does a male-constructed-subject identify with a poem that is "gendered" female? And vica versa, of course. In some > partial way? In some alienated fashion? No idea. Does this resistance to the notion of "identification" have anything to do with gender-- Bernstein, as you say, does the male rant and so I often feel there is a "voice" (definitely in recent work that he read here in LA) that can be "identified" with (for me as a male-constructed-ranter).

>
> Best,
>
> Standard

↑ Index

3. Steve Tills
Re: The Age of Plastic
Fri 27 Mar 1998

Wanna second the "nifty" DB writes about the John Forbes poem John Tranter posted.
Wish I had the Ovid to flesh out even more pleasure from it. S.

John Tranter wrote:

> David Bromige in a recent post posed the query:
>
> "All I know is that I mourn the effusions of the distant past, the > "maelstrom surrounding the worth of Tom Clark's poetry & morality,
> "the high tides of love-poetics abutting St. Valentine's Day,
> "the lightning-bolts of Kent Johnson's persecution--
> "twas an Age of Gold, is this an Age of Lead?-- "
>
> No, David; the Age of Plastic. My friend the late John Forbes put it thus:
>
> "The Age of Plastic" (copyright the Estate of John Forbes 1998)
>
> after Ovid
>
> The dictionary definition of change
> means your face looks different in the water > & even tho'you'd feel at home down there
> each moment spent at one remove, anywhere
> between the mammal & the sponge,
> you know you'd miss a particular cassette
> idle tears or a glass of gin
> & be irked by the serious options
> a changeless life presents e.g. 'Minor
> poet, conspicuously dishonest' would look funny
> on a plaque screwed to a tree
> while the blue trace of your former life
> suggests an exception

> generations will end up chanting; for them
> the parts of speech will need explaining
> not lakes or sleep or sex,
> or the dumb poets of the past
> who, being lyrical, missed out on this.
>
> ==========
> from
> John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
> tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
> Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

4. Steve Tills

Re: Aliens at Zinc Bar

Sun 29 Mar 1998

Jim Beam? Is he still around? First reading I ever went to ('78, I think, was about 20) and it was Beam (or maybe James Dickey, actually) in Jacksonville, Fla. Beam was totally sloshed and ya couldn't understand a word of his slur, but met someone gorgeous, with whom _____ (that first night--it was college in the seventies...). In a sense, it was a great reading! Thanks Marcella Durand for the fond memories of that evening and the few months that followed it. S. T. Dewars

Marcella Durand wrote:

> Dan, that opium pipe was actually a SPACE PHASER
> and you are now en route to
> PLANET POME,
> (which involves Jim Beam & lots of construction).
>
> Great reading last Sunday
> and don't forget to return April 12th
> for Robbert Pinnsky & Oppen Mike, $75.
>
> See you at the symp id et inven titty tion osium.

↑ Index

5. linda russo

Re: Guns, gender, children

Tue 31 Mar 1998

(katy -- thx. for posting the notley essay) (sss pls see p.s.)

katy sed
> This doesn't mean that all of the history of poetry is "by nature" > male or masculinist, but it does seem to present some historical > problems such as "no babies" "no pregnancies" "no physical births"-- (snip)
>
> The traditional model seems to privelege the wandering poet--the > unattached poet--the drunken poet?
>
> I think that being a female writer, at least for me, has forced me > to call this model into question.

i agree wholeheartedly (you sound as though you're familair with Rachel Blau DuPlessis _Pink Guitar_)-- though i think if i were a male writer i'd call them into question too (i hope) -- but women are in a particular position, i believe, to do the questioning, to cite Joan Retallack so in answer to SSScheafer, then, i do feel myself peculiarly positioned visavis "history" "tradition" -- i AM doing things inconceivable to women of generations before me (i'm not sure what those things are, & i like to think that if i were of another generation i'd be doing those things. . .) But i DO write with the awareness of how quiet my apt is, my life is, as i've chosen thus far not to reproduce (my mother had 4 babies at my age) -- or to take on many "nurturing" activities -- this isn't necessarily a gender-particular experience (history hangs heavy) -- but as katy points out those male loner-lady's man-drunk-etc &c narratives (descendents of what alice jardine calls master narratives) have been written, rewritten. & i scour the library looking for MY (postmodern in the chronological sense) role models . . . it's the being "other" thing, in a variety of implications, that i sense.

p.s. to sss -- seems as though i may have made you the target of my latest obsession (narrative); i'm sorry

> Linda:
>
> Yes, if you spoke to me of how being a woman effects your poetry you would be answering my questions. As for your various successes in finding my "narratives" I can only say that while I agree whole-heartedly that I used that language, I was doing so because I think those narratives are practiced, played out. Is all. Perhaps not by anyone on this list. But I certainly wasn't trying to accuse everyone of having an agenda.

↑ Index

6. Steve Tills

Re: local issue: byrkit performance

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Hugh,

I'm so glad to hear/read this note of yours on Charles' post about the Becky Byrkit performance. I feel very much the same way as you (though, for fear of going overboard about something I didn't even witness, I was reluctant to say anything). But this was going through my head: It's one thing to knock the mainstream for not being hip or open to a lot of "our" formal innovations and "radically open" politics; it's another thing altogether to foist that kind of performance on kids and their parents, subject them to a captured audience thing like that (and for what? Shock the bourgeois Equals art?). If art's not supposed to be a commodity, then, I don't know, it just sounds like a disgustingly arrogant (or very regretfully mistaken) gesture, that evening's performance.

Then, too, I wasn't there, and some of these feelings of mine come from a considerable bad mood too much poetic theatrics continually and perennially set off in me. Also, I'd hate to sound "conservative," but this just sounds like an awful night and I believe the parents have every right to be angry.

Again, Hugh, thanks for your level-headed response, and Charles, too, for bringing up this issue. Steve Tills

Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> Having known Becky Byrkit and her work for many years, having also worked for the Tucson Poetry Festival for a number of years, and having been at Becky's performance that night, I feel obliged to comment on the growing fiasco.
>
> I've always admired Becky's work, but the performance that night was just humiliatingly awful, not because of Becky's writing but because of all the performance stuff she put around it. Frankly, children don't really have a place around Becky's work. Her work is often explicit and erotic and dwells in those dark regions your typical parent of a fourteen year old just does not want to think about. The song and dance performance was amateurish in the worst way (if she wanted song and dance, there are plenty of adult companies in Tucson she could have collaberated with). At many points during the reading, I caught her deliberately censoring herself onstage, removing the more graphic elements from her work. Those compromises weakened her work. She was clearly aware of the growing disaster that surrounded her that evening, and it showed in the growing awkwardness of her reading.
>
> The kids seemed to be having a good time however. I suspect the kid was crying because his mom had just embarassed him in front of everyone by yanking him offstage. Lots of parents were pissed: the front three rows were emptied in such a fashion with angry parents and bewildered kids storming out.

One of the reasons I suspect Becky got trapped in this fiasco is because of an arts organization she heads, called "Voice and Range." The organization acts as a sort of networking group, connecting different artistic talents together for eductional and collaborative purposes. I suspect that much of the performances that night were set up through her organization. To be blunt, however, Becky should never have included children in her performance if she was going to read what she usually reads, especially if it hadn't been vetted through the parents of the kids.

As for the Tucson Poetry Festival's role in this, my impression was that they were basically ambushed (although this is not the first time this has happened: a similar event occurred several years ago when the theme of the festival was love poetry and the winner of a statewide poetry contest (who traditionally reads first on a Saturday night) brought her grandchildren to hear her read, only to be followed by some rather explicit homoerotic love poetry by Boyer Rickel and Marilyn Hacker). It's not the responsibility of a literary arts organization to oversee the work of readers. The Festival has a number of constituencies and has made a concerted effort to be as open and inclusive as possible. The Festival deliberately targets people who have never been to a poetry reading. Presenting the work of children has been an important part of this: a specific reading was set aside on a saturday afternoon of the festival in which children read their poetry. This event was very well attended, I doubt if any of the participants were at Becky's reading the night before.

The dilemma is not how to present poetry without offending anyone, the problem is making sure audiences have some idea of what they are getting so they don't feel ambushed. There's a lot of great poetry out there that some parents might feel is not appropriate for kids. At the same time, it would be absolutely dreadful if this was used as an excuse to keep kids away from all poetry. It would be equally dreadful if this was used as an excuse to shut down the Tucson Poetry Festival.

I'd like to hear from other people involved with literary arts organizations and reading series: how do you handle this issue, of kids and parents at readings, of presenting explicit work in a public forum?

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

7. Steve Tills

Re: local issue: byrkit performance

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Yeah, this is just SENSATIONALism. Best American Poetry, too? I dunno...

Anyway, Hugh, I agree with you even more now that I've seen this, too.

I'll see if I can't just shut up now, though. Steve

Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> Here's one of Becky Bykitt's poems, which was read that night (read underline signs for italics):
>
> The Only Dance There Is
>
> Oh no! He's going to _show_ it to me --
> This gelatinous spore burst like a shot bird's foot --
> Splayed, in the nest of his own little egg cup are. God!
> Is it he, or is it I, in my white spikes and levis,
> Peeling sweaty red labels off Buds, who becomes > Slowly exposed, a pornographic snap developing
> At a While-U-Wate Shak? Is it my turquoise lighter holder,
> Or my voice, full of coins and strangulations,
> That compels the alcoholics, the men I literally live for,
> To repeatedly ask what I want? _Hey! What do you want?_
> I know girls who dance in bars and marry, like, firemen.
> This man here is so unemployed I could talk to him
> All night. I'm saddled on a teetering labrador of lust, drunk
> And ready to fill up a station wagon. It is > the _degringolade_ of the species of woman I am --
>
> The curl of my big leg and the smell of that sweat,
> Redolent and in that Terrible Vicinity. Here _let me buy that,_
> I am transmigrating in the _def leppard_ of my "desire"
> And it has happened before, is happening, will happen again,
> All of it. It's the old lovemaking in the cemetary routine,
> Johnny.
> The last beauty I fell for drank me AND fucked me
> Under the table. He said, "Hey there you little redheaded > sweetiepie, you.
> Perfection, my life is an open casket funeral; darling,
> Our love is the visitation hour." You heard what he did next.
> Frankly I still admire him.
> I have nevernever touched myself so well,
> Nor could I observe a man jerk off in a sock with such joy.
> At times I swear the sex of the earth is the sponge and bedwash for Jesus.
> At times I swear I could live with a man I'll call "Tom"
> forever: when we met he bound me with Venetian blind cord

And went down on me for roughly nine hours. He delivered
His own daughters' sons. You know how it must be for me.
Drunk in bars, I feel the righteous _ness_ of humidity and cherry, Initials carved in tequila-drenched grains with "surgical precision."
We are listing toward the primordial wind and I talk about men
To men. (Once, my hair caught fire in a tavern.
The man who set it horsewhipped my head, singeing
His shavebrush Stetson.)
An absolute glance. Tufts of botched permanent wave. O,
You drunk and fucked-up munificence. O, Unshaven, Midnight,
Kindly lubricate my introduction to the unspeakable ring of chaos
You understand to be your life. You will surely pull the coil out of my car.
Oh no! He's going to show it to me --
God save the two of us, supernova.

The poem is from her book "Zealand," and can be found in "Best American Poetry 1994."

Frankly we've all heard worse, the problem was audience. I think Becky Byrkit clearly screwed up big. The Tucson Poetry Festival got smeared in the process.

Rachel writes "there is nothing inherently damaging to children about sexual or homoerotic material."

I agree with this one hundred percent, but there are plenty of parents who disagree with this vehemently and who certainly do not want their kids performing on stage while such material is being presented.

The question is: do you screen those people out of your event, or do you program your event around those people? I suspect most organizations do a little of both.

Rachel, what if the young "channeler" you mentioned in your previous post was on the same bill as someone who read children's poetry, or who brought a lot of kids and their parents into the audience? Wouldn't your cringe factor be multiplied? What if these same parents then went to the local newpaper, and through this your reading series receives the only media publicity it has ever received in the local newsmedia?

So, do you tell the "channeler" to censor himself, or do you tell the other reader they might not want to bring their kids to the reading? I find both alternatives somewhat distasteful, but I'm still not quite sure how I would handle it myself.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

8. Steve Tills

Re: local issue: byrkit performance

Tue 31 Mar 1998

Rachel,

I don't think the erotic is bad. For children? I can't decide that for them or their parents/guardians.

"She needs to be punished"? Well, of course not. But it's quite possible she showed exceptionally bad taste or simply (quite possibly) made some regretful choices that evening. Steve Tills

Rachel Levitsky wrote:

> ``I think she needs to be punished,'' he said. ``No children should be subjected to something like this.''
>
> Do listlings agree with this, that the erotic is 'bad' for children?
>
> " a similar event occurred several years ago when the theme of the festival was love poetry and the winner of a statewide poetry contest (who traditionally reads first on a Saturday night) brought her grandchildren to hear her read, only to be followed by some rather explicit homoerotic love poetry by Boyer Rickel and Marilyn Hacker)." --from Hugh's post
>
> I wasn't there and don't know the work. Certianly, it is bad faith to include in your performance, a group who you think might be alienated by/from the work. However, there is nothing inherently damaging to children about sexual or homoerotic material. Children, need I remind, are "subjected to" and "ambushed by" an abundance of what I would call inappropriate imagery of starving women made to look sexy on buses, and the obvious violence bla bla bla, we all know this. And Marilyn Hacker's poetry is offensive because of a piece of phallic plastic????? In a session devoted to love poetry?? What'd they think?
>
> A personal experience:
>
> A young poet wanted to read at Left Hand and sent me work. I was trying to encourage just this thing and felt I needed to honor his effort, despite my reservations about the person. The week before his scheduled reading, I heard him read, and was so offended that I walked out (this, as far as I recall has only happened to me one other time, I think it was Richard Hell--what da ya think a that?) He, a 20yr old Jew > from phily, was "channeling" black slaves on plantations, and young women being sexually abused, and another I didn't hear because I left. His depictions were stereotypical, narrow, extremely flawed vis a vis bad acting, and violent/screaming. So much for the subject matter being the problem. Obviously both of those subjects could be handled in many sensible, sensitive and textured ways. Still, as awful as I found it, he has his fans who love his work, see it as cutting edge.

>
> I flipped. Safety, respect between reader & audience are critical to the Left Hand Reading Series. I wanted to ban him, or read his work in advance or tell him he couldn't read that shit in our space. I felt righteous and justified when I called a meeting between him and the organizers. We'd decided the most we could do was ask him not to channel. But as soon as we were done speaking with him, we knew, we had to take it back. So we told him he knew our feelings and could read whatever he wanted. Thus sprouted the creation of a mission statement, which is explicit about the values of its organizers. In general, I agree that one can't 'censor' or oversee a writer, not without being appropriating and paternalistic. However, one can create a tone and atmosphere that encourage sensitivity and discretion. Our young poet read different work in the end.
>
> I don't know if that addresses your question Hugh.
>
> Chag Samiach,
> RDL

↑ Index

9. Billy Little frank sinatra
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Bella was a beauty one of a kind "the people's bully' she served us all, "equality's champion"! i hope you americans got to hear her talk in beijing where she called the assault on welfare on immigration on the poor on the era on affirmative action an assault on america, a true poem performed on a world stage she was a better orator than abe lincoln almost as good as fidel castro and that beautiful accent she could have played the lead in the Tyne Daley Story, she never called shit elimination You can't win no matter what you say i hear from the sinatra lovers damned if you do dammed if you don't from the john waynettes, the soon to be womanless this is a preface to the notion that we might as well be as bad as they assume we are, just remember, you never saw me hear tonight and i never saw you hear good looking. just don't go near my sister or i'll kill you. Sam Kiniston died for their sins.

a tardy goose flaps in the moonlight squawks a lingering sea lion arfarfs in response in the dark the seals slap the surface of the sea scaring the herring into fillets stuns the tender morsels with the amplitude the archimedes of the ocean maybe the salmon or the wails leap clear of the vibes maybe they don't, maybe they're happy to become part of the seal that's eaten by the shark that's eaten by the innu so they could rub noses with Anthony Quinn.

from baka washi's, swivelization

↑ Index

10. Rachel Levitsky

Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?

Wed 1 Apr 1998

---

another anecdote (from PW):

Charlottesville Shutting: Williams Corner Bookstore to Close

Michael Williams has one word when asked abut the superstore competition that he says put Williams Corner Bookstore, his Charlottesville, Va., independent, out of business. "Gangsters," he says coolly. "That's all there is to it."

Williams, who is otherwise soft-spoken and has owned his 2900- sq.-ft. store since it opened in 1977, will close as early as April 20, pending a lease signing by a new tenant. Only six years ago, Williams had expanded the store, hoping this would protect it against the impending arrival of a cross-town Barnes & Noble.

Charlottesville, home of the University of Virginia, supports a thriving bookselling community. But that has also meant more competition for Williams. Apart from the usual suspects, he has had to contend with New Dominion, another independent a block-and-a-half away that he describes as "a good bookstore." (In fact, Williams plans no blowout sale because he doesn't want to undercut New Dominion's business.) He also points out a catch-22 in Charlottesville bookselling: "Our best customers are the ones who have personal computers, and they're the ones who are going to be entranced by Amazon."--Steven M. Zeitchik

MAYHEW wrote:
>
> I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept:
> "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age."

> I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

11. morpheal

Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?

Wed 1 Apr 1998

> Michael Williams has one word when asked abut the superstore competition that he says put Williams Corner Bookstore, his Charlottesville, Va., independent, out of business. "Gangsters," he says coolly. "That's all there is to it."

Of course the supermarket bookstores do little good as to small press, limited run, and self published, and it is those that tend to really matter.

The big supermarket bookstores could potentially create a better market niche for some speciality shops, gourmet bookshops as it were. The biggest difficulty is that the prices tend to go up to cover the overhead and relatively low sales volume, putting gourmet literary fare out of reach of many who once were its major customers.

Then again, the prices at the supermarket are often no bargain, as they have to pay for all that marketing and promotion, and the rent is not cheap either. However, I did note one thing when I was in a book supermarket recently. (Which one will remain unnamed.) That is that the shelves had to have cost at least $600 a short section, if not more, and the displays that went with them, hundreds more. The cost to furnish the place had to be astronomical, and it takes a lot of book sales, with hefty markups to recover that capital investment. Even the checkout counter was far from the ordinary, but would have suited very fussy hardwood tastes. If they economized the way supermarkets do, with simple metal shelving, and a minimum of fancy decor, and simple rubber belt checkout stands, imagine how much money the book buying public would have saved !

M.

↑ Index

12. morpheal

Re: god 44

Wed 1 Apr 1998

> I just talk about God because it's so politically gauche on this list, > where the main thing is to impress with your left critique in various ways.
> It's fun to slam & annoy people. Bumper cars.

Of course...though I saw some terrorists removing the rubber bumbers to enhance the effects the other day....They wanted to add some realism to it. Laughing.

> - but the thought of God is > like the thought of Nature & Purpose & all those aboriginal things - > sometimes when nobody's around (like in the Frost poem) that's all that's > left. (I'm just giving you the barest minimum.)

Or that is when the opposite happens and one realizes there is nothing there.

If you are thirsty, I will give you the idea of a glass of water. Go ahead, drink it, and get rid of that thirst. What ? You cannot ? Why cannot you ? Must be something wrong with you then. Try it again. You'll eventually get the hang of it. The idea of a glass of water is all you really needed wasn't it ? ....etc.....ad infinitum.....

Of course, someone could give you bread, and no water, and tell you to smile and be happy, and enjoy it, or they will take that away too. Soon you are choking on the dry bread, thirstier for water than ever, but attempting to use it to remain alive, the Eros still stronger than the Thanatos. The lack of water is your gift from "god". Or is it that the dry bread you are choking on and forced to smile as you force it in, or you get no more, is your gift from "god" ? Does not matter, as there is a tendency towards that analogy in the system.

The system is a human creation. The use of the word "god" does nothing, in my mind, to dignify it, and again what really happens tends to make me think there is no such being, thing, whatnot, whodat, as "god", supreme commander of the armed forces of the whole damn universe, doctor-president-for-life-dada....or whatever HE is supposed to ultimately be.....

Even the arguments from design, in cosmology, fail to be convincing, unless one is willing to believe that "god" exists and was and is _insane_. After all it is a creature eat creature, violent forces of mass destruction nature, species competing against species, struggle to exist, kind of place. No kind, loving, caring, thoughtful, considerate, deity would ever create that kind of hell would they ? As for humans, the pinnacle of creation, created to make war on one another for millenia upon millenia.....No, of course not. It must be all the work of one supreme, omniscient, omnipotent deity.... Bullshit.

M.

↑ Index

13. henry gould
Re: god 44
Wed 1 Apr 1998

On Wed, 1 Apr 1998 08:38:52 -0500 morpheal said:
>
>Even the arguments from design, in cosmology, fail to be convincing, unless >one is willing to believe that "god" exists and was and is _insane_. After >all it is a creature eat creature, violent forces of mass destruction >nature, species competing against species, struggle to exist, kind of place.
>No kind, loving, caring, thoughtful, considerate, deity would ever create >that kind of hell would they ? As for humans, the pinnacle of creation, >created to make war on one another for millenia upon millenia.....No, of >course not. It must be all the work of one supreme, omniscient, omnipotent >deity.... Bullshit.

This is not the place to get into this, as Tom Mandel & I agreed about it last time on a different facet of the subject, so this is my final statement on the thread. I think the universe not only has design but emanates a moral reality in a "dramatic" form. Humanity is a theater for turning away from dog-eat-dog to a kind of shepherding role. I see this as a long-term species "act". And the universe emanates more than cold violence. It emanates meaning, awe, beauty, and wonder. It's a mistake to judge too quickly from a human scale - though Job did so pretty effectively a long time ago. But God is love, as the short canonical sentence has it. Charles Peirce has some likeable writings on the sense of truth as a shared outcome of long-term consensus - of reality not so much as a "given" but a goal.

While I'm at it, down with postmodernism, reality is out there, peanut butter and pickles IS a good sandwich.
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

14. MAYHEW
Of Notley's first disobedience...
Wed 1 Apr 1998

In light of Robert Hale's recent post I recommend the essay "Words are not Language" from the Notley issue of _Talisman_. (Vol. 1 no. 1).

Now you'll have to excuse me while I go off and "literalize the gap between saying and doing" for a few hours.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

15. Susan Wheeler

Announcement

Wed 1 Apr 1998

Announcing the publication of:

SMOKES
Susan Wheeler

ISBN 1884800-19-X
72 pages
Four Way Books

Available through SPD shortly, or from Four Way Books, POB 607, Marshfield, Massachusetts 02050 -- send a check for $12.95 + $3 shipping first book, 50 cents additional. They will also bill with a call or fax to [redacted].

In light of the list's recent topics (which I haven't yet caught up with, re-entering a few days ago after a hiatus), Smokes' opener:

He or She That's Got the Limb, That Holds Me Out on It

The girls are drifting in their ponytails
and their pig iron boat. So much for Sunday.
The dodo birds are making a racket to beat the band. You could have come too.

The girls wave and throw their garters from their pig iron boat. Why is this charming?
Where they were nailed on their knees
the garters all rip. You were expected.

The youngest sees a Fury in a Sentra in a cloud. This is her intimation and she balks.
The boat begins rocking from the scourge of the sunset. The youngest starts the song.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

16. Steve Shoemaker

Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?

Wed 1 Apr 1998

I'm really saddened, from this distance, to hear of the closing of Williams Corner Bookstore. It was a truly marvelous place (with a conspicuous devotion to poetry) that meant a lot to me during the nine years I lived in Charlottesville.

By all means, folks shld stay away from Barnes & Noble and Borders and the rest if there's a "Williams Corner" near them that they could be supporting instead.

Steve

At 01:33 AM 4/1/98 -0700, you wrote: >another anecdote (from PW):
>
>Charlottesville Shutting: Williams Corner Bookstore to Close
>
>Michael Williams has one word when asked abut the superstore >competition that he says put Williams Corner Bookstore, his >Charlottesville, Va., independent, out of business. "Gangsters," >he says coolly. "That's all there is to it."
>
>Williams, who is otherwise soft-spoken and has owned his 2900->sq.-ft. store since it opened in 1977, will close as early as April 20, >pending a lease signing by a new tenant. Only six years ago, Williams >had expanded the store, hoping this would protect it against the >impending arrival of a cross-town Barnes & Noble.
>
>Charlottesville, home of the University of Virginia, supports a thriving >bookselling community. But that has also meant more competition for >Williams. Apart from the usual suspects, he has had to contend with >New Dominion, another independent a block-and-a-half away that >he describes as "a good bookstore." (In fact, Williams plans no >blowout sale because he doesn't want to undercut New Dominion's >business.) He also points out a catch-22 in Charlottesville >bookselling: "Our best customers are the ones who have >personal computers, and they're the ones who are going to be >entranced by Amazon."--Steven M. Zeitchik

>
>
>MAYHEW wrote:
>>
>> I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept:
>> "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age."
>> I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>>
>> Jonathan Mayhew
>> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>> University of Kansas
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

17. Garrett Kalleberg
The Friend, Issue No. 2
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Wednesday, April 1, 1998

Announcing Issue No. 2 of The Transcendental Friend
http:www.morningred.com/friend

The second entry into our Critical Dictionary is an article on "Vocation" by the remarkable Henry Gould.

This month The Bestiary, edited by Laird Hunt, features work by Anselm Berrigan, Jordan Davis, and an extraordinary lyric by an anonymous Middle English poet.

Translation, excavation, research, reportage, Report from Afield will present works from some distance of space or time (being oriented at the moment to present-day New York). Our first Report brings back an interpretation of a text of Antonin Artaud by Jonathan Skinner.

Inspired in part by the Spanish form of response-in-verse, mote or glosa, and in part by the visible stratification of Talmudic form in which time is flattened and the argument exposed on one plane, Mote takes an existing text as a ground for layers of response by subsequent authors. The current primary text, an excerpt from The Black Book by Orhan Pamuk, will accrete four layers of commentary over the course of the next four issues. The first layer is by Leonard Schwartz.

Review will present critical works that aspire to their own form--a condensation of writerly thought in response to a work, perhaps including the time-honored traditions of praise and/or blame, etc., but not necessarily. This month's Review, by Daniel Machlin, encounters the work of Richard Tuttle.

This issue's Project is by Garrett Kalleberg and features texts from Ronald Johnson's Ark, published in 1996 by Living Batch Press, Albuquerque (available from Small Press Distribution and amazon.com).

The first issue of the Friend is available from the Files page. (With our third issue, some archival & other materials will also be made available from this page.)

For news, announcements, &c., you may subscribe to the Friend at http:www.morningred.com/friend/1998/04/pages/contact/subscribe.html (it's free).

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

The Transcendental Friend can be found at:
http://www.morningred.com/friend

↑ Index

18. Thomas A. Vogler
WEBSITES
Wed 1 Apr 1998

> Wednesday, April 1, 1998
>
> Announcing Issue No. 2 of The Transcendental Friend
> http:www.morningred.com/friend
>
> The second entry into our Critical Dictionary is an article on "Vocation" by the remarkable Henry Gould.
>
> This month The Bestiary, edited by Laird Hunt, features work by Anselm Berrigan, Jordan Davis, and an extraordinary lyric by an anonymous Middle English poet.
>
> Translation, excavation, research, reportage, Report from Afield will present works from some distance of space or time (being oriented at the moment to present-day New York). Our first Report brings back an interpretation of a text of Antonin Artaud by Jonathan Skinner.

Inspired in part by the Spanish form of response-in-verse, mote or glosa, and in part by the visible stratification of Talmudic form in which time is flattened and the argument exposed on one plane, Mote takes an existing text as a ground for layers of response by subsequent authors. The current primary text, an excerpt from The Black Book by Orhan Pamuk, will accrete four layers of commentary over the course of the next four issues. The first layer is by Leonard Schwartz.

Review will present critical works that aspire to their own form--a condensation of writerly thought in response to a work, perhaps including the time-honored traditions of praise and/or blame, etc., but not necessarily. This month's Review, by Daniel Machlin, encounters the work of Richard Tuttle.

This issue's Project is by Garrett Kalleberg and features texts from Ronald Johnson's Ark, published in 1996 by Living Batch Press, Albuquerque (available from Small Press Distribution and amazon.com).

The first issue of the Friend is available from the Files page. (With our third issue, some archival & other materials will also be made available from this page.)

For news, announcements, &c., you may subscribe to the Friend at http:www.morningred.com/friend/1998/04/pages/contact/subscribe.html (it's free).

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

The Transcendental Friend can be found at:
http://www.morningred.com/friend

↑ Index

19. Mark Wallace

Re: XMAs (fwd)

Wed 1 Apr 1998

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 01 Apr 1998 10:12:02 PST
From: Tod Thilleman <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: XMAs

Mark, please post this on the UB Poetics list as my address has changed and I haven't any access at my new address:

POETRY NEW YORK announces its first Pamphlet (microbook, chapbook) by MARK WALLACE, entitled MY CHRISTMAS POEM (SIXTEEN INCHES OF SNOW AND A VOID). This Pamphlet inaugurates a subscription based series of about 4 per year, one of which will be a contest-winning ms.

Queries, submissions, SUBSCRIPTIONS, and guidelines plus ten years of back issues and other relevant material is available at the PNY website:

http://members.tripod.com/~PNY_journal

or you can e-mail me at [redacted].

Mark's work is particularly strong in this first number. Ted Enslin's CONVERSATIONS is second, then Laura Moriarty's SPICER'S CITY. Hope to hear from you soon!

Tod Thilleman
Editor

poetry new york PO Box 3184 Church Street Station NYC 10008
http://members.tripod.com/~PNY_journal/

Get Your Private, Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

20. Ctfarmr
correction
Wed 1 Apr 1998

The name of the Tannen book is actually _You Just Don't Understand_. Sorry about the mistake -- it's been years since I read it.

Bobbie

↑ Index

21. William Marsh
Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
Wed 1 Apr 1998

---

i still have a bookmark from WCB from about 13 years ago -- a good store / does B&N distribute free bookmarks? / B&N's 20% discount to teachers might draw those among us in, and probably was part of their strategy / order class sets (if you teach) from inde stores, yes, and also from small presses (meow chapbooks instead of Prentice Hall textbooks, for ex) which also get lost in the deal

bill

> another anecdote (from PW):
>
> Charlottesville Shutting: Williams Corner Bookstore to Close
>
> Michael Williams has one word when asked abut the superstore competition that he says put Williams Corner Bookstore, his Charlottesville, Va., independent, out of business. "Gangsters," he says coolly. "That's all there is to it."
>
> Williams, who is otherwise soft-spoken and has owned his 2900-sq.-ft. store since it opened in 1977, will close as early as April 20, pending a lease signing by a new tenant. Only six years ago, Williams had expanded the store, hoping this would protect it against the impending arrival of a cross-town Barnes & Noble.
>
> Charlottesville, home of the University of Virginia, supports a thriving bookselling community. But that has also meant more competition for Williams. Apart from the usual suspects, he has had to contend with New Dominion, another independent a block-and-a-half away that he describes as "a good bookstore." (In fact, Williams plans no blowout sale because he doesn't want to undercut New Dominion's business.) He also points out a catch-22 in Charlottesville bookselling: "Our best customers are the ones who have personal computers, and they're the ones who are going to be entranced by Amazon."--Steven M. Zeitchik
>
> MAYHEW wrote:
>
> I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept: "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age." I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

- -

William Marsh
http://bmarsh.dtai.com
PaperBrainPress
http://bmarsh.dtai.com/PBrain/pbrain.html

Voice & Range Community Arts
http://bmarsh.dtai.com/V&R/vrmain.html
National University
http://www.nu.edu/index.html
[redacted]

snail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

22. Burt Kimmelman

Talisman House (Ed Foster has asked me to forward the below to the List)

Wed 1 Apr 1998

From: MX%"[redacted]" 1-APR-1998 14:51:21.19
To: MX%"[redacted]"
CC:
Subj: RE: talisman

Date: Wed, 1 Apr 1998 14:51:12 -0500 (EST)
From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
To: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: RE: talisman

here's the data, burt. THANK YOU!!!

NEW TALISMAN TITLES:

Mary Margaret Sloan, ed., _Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women_; 768 pages, 65 poets, plus book-length selection of essays on poetics. ISBN: 1-883689-47-3, $29.95 "A major anthology . . . an impeccable selection of poets, poetry, and poetics." --Charles Bernstein. "In its range, breadth, discrimination, and selectivity, as well as its profound knowledge of the 'state of the art,' _Moving Borders_ bears witness to the very real revolution that has occurred in the poetry of North American women over the past three decades." --Marjorie Perloff. "Demanding and challenging" --Library Journal.

Lisa Jarnot, Leonard Schwartz, and Chris Stroffolino, eds., _An Anthology of New (American) Poets_ 35 poets, 368 pages. ISBN: 1-883689-61-9, $21.95. "Read. It's the language of our future" --Rosmarie Waldrop. "Represents a new opening of the field for American poetry." --Paul Hoover. "A boon to the ongoing struggle to keep the world safe for poetry." --Anne Waldman. "Helps solidify the emerging contribution of a promising generation. --Publishers Weekly

Lyman Gilmore, _Don't Touch the Poet: The Life and Times of Joel Oppenheimer_ Cloth, photos/illustrations, 260 pages. ISBN: 1-883689-64-3, $21.95. "A necessary book, and also a delightful one." --Hayden Carruth. Oppenheimer "has found in Lyman Gilmore a superb biographical narrator and best of all, the reader who gives him his rightful place in American letters." --Andrei Codrescu. "A fine literary biography." --Boston Globe.

William Bronk, _All of What We Loved_. 144 pages. ISBN: 1-883689-65-1, $13.95. New collection of work by the poet described in the _Dictioary of Literary Biography_ as "one of our most intimate, haunting, and important poets." "Arguably the most metaphysical poet of his generation." --Hungry Mind Review. "One of our modern masters." --Michael Heller. "A poet of great distinction." --Small Press Review. "He is brilliant." --Southwest Review.

Talisman books are available in good bookstores and can be ordered through SPD and LPC/InBook. Phone orders (Visa/MasterCard): [redacted].

For a complete catalogue, write to Talisman, P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157.

↑ Index

23. k. lederer

A poem by Alice Notley

Wed 1 Apr 1998

I think the following poem is interesting vis-a-vis the very basic notion that babies and other "womanly" things aren't taken seriously as "poetic" subject matter.

In my view such a notion is only a starting point and in no sense relfects the entire scope of what one might talk about vis-a-vis "women/poetry"--

Anyway--my ambivalence stated, I wanted to type in the following poem by Notley. I think it is certainly relevant to the discussion at hand--but I also just love it--

***

JANUARY

Mommy what's the fork doing?
What?
It's being Donald Duck.

What could I eat this?
Eat what?
This cookie.

What do you mean?
What could I eat it?

Does he bite people? The fish is dead. That fish got dead today. That fish gets dead today, right?

These are my silver mittens Mommy
No, it's gold, they're gold mittens

On myself
I put my black hat and my mittens,
myself.

Edmund. Edmund. Edmund. Maaaah. Lodle Lodle Lodle

Daddy, the doctor did put that wart on you,
right?

I touch the purple petals
She says Hey!

The flower says, we are purple, together
they touch purple it keeps purple purple means us, here.
The air moved a person. I like people because they are as serious as I am. Being purple is very serious.
It's dense and still.
It's a matter of fact but light seems it.
I seem the light
makes me feel purple.
A petal is crumpling I've done before
I sleep in the bulb.

Being purple is long.

Crumpling is not as serious as being purple

(I may disagree.)

I'm not serious not smiling.
I'm smiling

as crumpling
only a little now.
I'm mostly staying seriously purple now.

Do you remember when you were like Edmund?
Yeah.
What did you do?
crawled with him.
Do you remember last year?
Yeah, Mommy what did you do when you be Anselm?

The jacket is furniture.
I have to fix, Mommy.
I have to fix all the tools.
I'm in the snow and my feet go in the footprints.

I'll look up "love" in the dictionary. They're beautiful.
Bodily they're incomprehensible. I can't tell if they're me or not. They think I'm their facility. We're all about as incomprehensible as the crocuses. In myself I'm like a color except not in the sense of a particular one. That's impossible. That's under what I keep trying out. With which I can practically pass for an adult to myself. Some of it is pretty useful, like when I say to them
"Now will I take you for a walk in the snow to the store" and prettily and usefully we go. Mommy, the lovely creature, You should have seen how I looked last night, Bob Dylan Bob Creeley Bob Rosenthal Bob On Sesame Street.
Oh I can't think of any other Bobs right now, garbage.
It perks. Thy tiger, thy night are magnificent,

it's ten below zero deep deep down deep in my abdomen.
It pulls me up and leads me about the house. It's got the sun in the morning and the moon at night. It does anything careless love sees that everything goes, minds.
The melody was upsidedown, now the melody turns over.
One note: my feet go.

30 years old and married 4 years 2 children is the same little girl in the yard until dusk and into night in air with myself, others has a mother and father nature (courage)

smiles frankly at the camera don't blot your anonymity your littleness child you are is the source of all honestly bliss at dusk in Chicago is face you've ever been and almost before duky the child air you are handsome you're head-to-toe

It's too early. It's too dark. If I can't watch tv I'll turn on the light and look at stars.

I see 2 full moons.

I walk.
I am big.
I can say what they say. It's fun to sound. I walk. I am big. I finally get the blue and red container
of... sneezes!

the trees have no leaves they lean like her over the snow and green wire fence of the school the sky is white low low low Greegy Ruthy
and Jill are there

Daddy tomorrow we'll have donuts and chocolate soda and my birthday party and eat snow and throw snow and make snowmen.

He'll take off your wart tomorrow and you won't be sick.

My armpits smell like chicken soup. But really I hate them because of their tacky and unchanging book collection. My head weighs too much on the pillow. I have to sweat. I'm crying free water don't worry. Under your tongue looks like pussy. You seem to bloom. The colors are brighter but I think I'm deaf.

                I'm remembering all my dogs.
One was taken away because he howled too much and my parents said he wanted to fight in World War II and so joined the army. All things considered there's nothing to say for Chicago. I dreamed you lead an army of empty pieplates against another one. I dreamed you had a baby. I despise someone. I have to sweat. I need you to stop this train.

I didn't lose any weight today
I had clean hair but I drove Ted nuts and spanked Anselm on the arm and wouldn't converse with him about the letter C. And didn't take Edmund out or change the way the house smells or not drink and take a pill and had to watch John Adams on tv and fantasized about powers of esp when on lsd-- there is no room for fantasy in the head except as she speaks.
The Holy Ghost is the definitive renegade like in the white falling-out chair stuffing, 2 chairs asking me if I liked my life and said how could you dislike being a poet? and having children is only human but she meant my chairs. The trouble is the children distribute the stuffing to the wind. It's soft and pliant and they can do it intimately together.
There are 4 green sunbursts on the curtain. Oh it is cold at night but the jade plant will handle it.

Came in from the snow and melted on the floor. There's

Glistening where Jill and Ruthy's feet
Sat Ruthy with braids and colored Yarn in her hair, a girl
Beauty cars go by to hitch Away on is it their rumble
That comforts? Or this room full Of everyone who's sat making Stuffing appear from the Chairs, and flowers too last years

They just want to do their yoga too. I guess so. I try to call up Casey Gold. Some money comes by anyway; the day brightens, Casey Gold.

I don't appreciate the simple war of nerves my courtesy rewarded with a goring is it boring
the toro rhymes, what else do children have to think about?
well if the cape is all wet it won't blow in the wind but I have to check something You're still in no condition to fight a bull
But he's found his own...
What a glistening golden baby!
Enough to make one woozy. Matador,
I am with the wind and unwinding as wonderfully useless to you.

[HOW SPRING COMES, The toothpaste Press, 1981)

↑ Index

24. k. lederer
Re: more boring chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Standard,

You ask a couple of questions that interest me:

1. Is it possible, and if so, how, to analyze formal aspects of poetry through a lens of gender identification?

Of course it is. In the "mainstream" one need only look at some of the more popular female writers to see that gender allows one (in that milieu) to "get away" with a lot more formal deviation-- (cf. Graham, Hillman, Fulton etc...).

I think it is also entirely possible to do individual readings of various "experimental" female writers through a lens of gender identificiation--

One might argue that Scalapino's very strange descriptions of sex in Front Matter, Dead Souls have a lot to do with her gender position--

I find Howe's work as it relates to her critical work on Dickinson clearly "gendered" in various ways. Howe's arguments vis-a-vis Dickinson and A. Hutchinson--her exploration of antinomianisms as they seem bound up with a feminine or feminist politics certainly show through in her poetry--

Formally one might argue that her scattering of phrases and words is not onlly a visual statement, but a political one as well--a formal enactment of antinomianism--a formal enactment of the evasion of official identity.

Carla Harryman's recent work (There Never Was a Rose Without Thorn) is extremely resonant with the conversation that's been going on here. In a number of her pieces she plays with and trespasses upon various gender categories--

One piece that I remember fairly vividly deals with a "person" who's in an art gallery. It is never clear whether this person in a man or a woman. We see the person in question move through the gallery--he/she thinks all sorts of sexual thoughts, attempts to masturbate with a telephone, and even converses with the gallery owner--but we are left none the wiser re: his/her gender identity.

In other words, he/she gets into all sorts of narrative situations that would normally warrent a pretty clear knowledge of the character's gender. Harrayman has to jump through some pretty lofty narrative hoops to achieve the desired effect of what feels like a strange sort of gender-related vertigo.

And so on.... it is actually pretty easy to go through various female authors (as one might do the same for men, ostensibly--Watten's stereotypically masculine obsession with history, Bernstein's stereotypically male interest in the formalities of the rant and so on...)--

But the danger here seems to be that such formal trends will be chalked up to gender and nothing more. I mean, it's not always clear how much of a given poet's writing is determined by gender-related tendencies and how much is related to the person's individual personality. As in, maybe Scalapino is just a quiet writer--Watten a loud one (witness the typography in his new book out on the terrific Atelos Press, Bad History...)

2. How do I or anyone else on this list further my theoretical ideas about gender in my poetic work.....

The most glaring example I can think of here in my work would be my use of the dash. In some of my work I employ the dash more than liberally.

Once a woman who didn't like me called my work "super-model poetry"--primarily because of my use of the dash (she used it too and seemed to feel that I was trespassing on her poetic turf by using it)--

I would argue that the dash is probably the single most feminized formal aspect of poetry being employed right now--

We see it associated with female writers as diverse as Graham, Scalapino, Hillman, Dickinson, and Notley--

We do not often see it associated with guys.

Some thoughts,
Katy

↑ Index

25. laura and jeff
Re: shall we agree to boycott B&N?
Wed 1 Apr 1998

---

and borders (and the companies they own: waldenbooks, coles, brentano's [sp?]). what i do is: i go to borders, etc. and get the isbn numbers, exact title, author, and publisher for the books i want and can't find at my local indy book store (the isbn number is one of the easiest ways to find books), and then take these to the local and place my order. around a week later i have my book, and a small buisness is not undercut. jeff.

>another anecdote (from PW):
>
>Charlottesville Shutting: Williams Corner Bookstore to Close
>
>Michael Williams has one word when asked abut the superstore >competition that he says put Williams Corner Bookstore, his >Charlottesville, Va., independent, out of business. "Gangsters,"
>he says coolly. "That's all there is to it."
>
>Williams, who is otherwise soft-spoken and has owned his 2900-
>sq.-ft. store since it opened in 1977, will close as early as April 20, >pending a lease signing by a new tenant. Only six years ago, Williams >had expanded the store, hoping this would protect it against the >impending arrival of a cross-town Barnes & Noble.

>
>Charlottesville, home of the University of Virginia, supports a thriving >bookselling community. But that has also meant more competition for >Williams. Apart from the usual suspects, he has had to contend with
>New Dominion, another independent a block-and-a-half away that >he describes as "a good bookstore." (In fact, Williams plans no
>blowout sale because he doesn't want to undercut New Dominion's >business.) He also points out a catch-22 in Charlottesville
>bookselling: "Our best customers are the ones who have >personal computers, and they're the ones who are going to be >entranced by Amazon."--Steven M. Zeitchik
>
>
>MAYHEW wrote:
>>
>> I was in Barnes and Nobles and came up with a great book concept:
>> "Ice-berg Lettuce for the Soul: Insipid Anecdotes for a Superficial Age."
>> I welcome all your contributions; we can make a million bucks off this.
>>
>> Jonathan Mayhew
>> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>> University of Kansas
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

↑ Index

26. Peter Balestrieri
Berkeley Bookstore
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Hello, Can someone help me with the name of the bookstore in Berkeley that has the great poetry collection? I can't remember who mentioned it recently but I'd very much like to visit. Please back channel. Thanks, Pete Balestrieri

↑ Index

27. SSSCHAEFER
Re: more boring chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Katy:

As usual, lots to chew on and thanks plus I feel smarter now having read your thorough post. So thanks.

First off, for the record, no one has given me as editor more trouble about dashes than Ray DiPalma who is very specific about the SIZE of dash he likes and so what does that say about his gender identity?

Second, what on earth is "super model poetry" and why am I so excited? Please send some.

Third, Leslie Scalapino just read some "sex" poems from WAY, I believe, here in town yesterday, and I was struck about how at least in that manuscript, it seemed a bit more like reading phenomenology. Plus a little particle physics. But detached, I mean in big way. FRONT MATTER, DEAD SOULS I can't recall too clearly here, but Leslie was telling me that she felt that a large part of her work resists the idea of a reader who can "identify" with the work.

This I find really interesting. How does a male-constructed-subject identify with a poem that is "gendered" female? And vica versa, of course. In some partial way? In some alienated fashion? No idea. Does this resistance to the notion of "identification" have anything to do with gender-- Bernstein, as you say, does the male rant and so I often feel there is a "voice" (definitely in recent work that he read here in LA) that can be "identified" with (for me as a male-constructed-ranter).

Best,

Standard

↑ Index

28. dbkk
Re: more boring chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

> Date: Tue, 31 Mar 1998 14:47:03 EST
> From: SSSCHAEFER <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: more boring chit-chat
>
> One thing Iím noticing is that exactly what I feared would happen, is happening. Iím ëworryingí people simply by trying to get "women" to tell me exactly what the relevance of a gender conversation is to the act of writing poetry.

If we gals can scare you, Standard, then it's all been worth it.

Dodie implies, I think, that as to the degree that she is a "woman," >it effect the content of her writing. Have not heard anyone address the form >or technique issue. Here, I am reminded of John Shoptawís interesting book on >Ashbery wherein he outlines how Ashberyís "homosexuality" effected the way he >wrote. Does not in any way imply that all homosexuals are "homotextual" >writers, etc.

Why don't you try reading my writing and the writing of the rest of the women on the list and then you'll see how much of it is all about technique. And the notion of a female form has been kicked around ad nauseum since when--the 70s, the 80s? It's essentialist gaga. Why should we have to kick it around again to conform to your idea of a serious discussion?

Dodie

↑ Index

29. r. drake

Re: Berkeley Bookstore

Wed 1 Apr 1998

---

small press distribution? 1341 7th st., berkeley 94710; [redacted]

> Hello,
> Can someone help me with the name of the bookstore in Berkeley that has the great poetry collection? I can't remember who mentioned it recently but I'd very much like to visit. Please back channel.
> Thanks,
> Pete Balestrieri

↑ Index

30. dbkk

Re: screening process/feminism

Wed 1 Apr 1998

> Date: Tue, 31 Mar 1998 18:07:21 -0700
> From: Rachel Levitsky <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: screening process/feminism
>
> Dodie--I think that is an excellent screening process and am not surprised that it works as a filter.
>
> I was curious about your comment about no longer being a feminist. I often feel like a bad feminist myself but I don't think anything to drastic has changed in me--I'm just more willing to be vocal about all of me, pervert and feminist. Can you enlighten??

Actually, Rachel, when I said that about no longer being a feminist (that's a hard word to spell) I was being light-hearted about no longer being in the preciousness of the Feminist Writer's Guild. I don't like to align myself with any group at this point--even feminist--the ugly specter of political correctness raises its head--and self-censorship is close behind. I've been reading feminist theory for like 20 years and at least 90% of the books I read are by women. I think an important thing that was covered in Kathleen Fraser's project, and which I've really taken to heart, is that women do not have to engage language in a manner privileged by male poets and thinkers. Her ideas, for instance, of "and/but" (female) as opposed to "either/or" (male). I'm leary of making rules about this or generalizing. Ecriture feminine was interesting and radical when it came out, but now I think lots of people find it problematic. I think that one shouldn't feel a compulsion to use male forms in writing, but also one shouldn't feel pressured into speaking about writing in the current cliches of the intelligencia. I've been thinking about something Katy said a few days ago--something about how she'd read her Derrida and Foucault--like she'd done her homework--and now she has a right to talk about women. I think this points up the sickness--not of Katy--but of the comically elitist poetic avant-garde in which many of us are involved. Why does Katy have to have read Derrida and Foucault--or feel that she should have--in order to validate her speaking? If D and F feed her writing, that's one thing, but the compulsion that everybody who's intelligent and writing poetry must read them is bunk.

I look forward to the day when a younger version of Katy will say, "I've read Catherine Clement and Jacqueline Rose . . ." Or even Laura Mulvey . . . That's when feminism will have really made a dent.

Dodie

↑ Index

31. Mark Weiss

Re: more boring chit-chat

Wed 1 Apr 1998

Katy, with all due respect, you're mostly talking about subject matter. And if scattering words on a page is antinomian, then a lot of us are antinomians--and, _pace_ Hutchinson, most of the antinomians in her day were male. The dash, too, is pretty thin. For a long time the available editions of Dickinson eliminated them, by the way, making her usage unavailable as role model. Williams was very fond of dashes, as am I--but I've written a fair number of poems invoving children, which may disqualify me as an exemplar. On that last subject, here's a few from _Questions, Short Poems, Water & Air_, by Ira Beryl Brukner, which will appear from Junction Press this summer.

special delivery

our love our new-born baby has a dimple in his right cheek and the longest brown eyelashes part polliwog-hummingbird going from breast to breast with kisses all over his inches those little hands and feet that rose-petal mouth moving from a smile to a scowl in a heartbeat

two days old bundled up and snuggled against my chest is our half-asleep boy

I walk through town stopping now and then to introduce him to falling flowers of ice and adults wowed by his nose

he cries and coos massaging my ribs with his pea-pod toes

raphael rubbing my calf with his head under the desk

rubbing my head with his calf under the desk

rocking his rocker
after standing on his horse

I'm not sure that there is such a thing as a feminine poetic, as opposed to areas of concern that are not exclusive to but more common among/important for women, and viewpoints that are more nearly gender-exclusive, and I'm also not sure why it's important that there be one.

I also like to remember that two of the earliest poems we have, the songs of Deborah and Miriam, don't much conform to the stereotypes of women that have developed in the west since the troubadours, when the Jewish concept of the Woman of Valor got lost.

At 05:22 PM 4/1/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Standard,
>
>You ask a couple of questions that interest me:
>
>1. Is it possible, and if so, how, to analyze formal aspects of poetry >through a lens of gender identification?
>
>Of course it is. In the "mainstream" one need only look at some of the >more popular female writers to see that gender allows one (in that >milieu) to "get away" with a lot more formal deviation-- (cf. Graham, >Hillman, Fulton etc...).
>
>I think it is also entirely possible to do individual readings of various >"experimental" female writers through a lens of gender identificiation--
>
>One might argue that Scalapino's very strange descriptions of sex in Front >Matter, Dead Souls have a lot to do with her gender position--
>
>I find Howe's work as it relates to her critical work on Dickinson clearly >"gendered" in various ways. Howe's arguments vis-a-vis Dickinson and A.
>Hutchinson--her exploration of antinomianisms as they seem bound up with a >feminine or feminist politics certainly show through in her poetry--
>

>Formally one might argue that her scattering of phrases and words is not >onlly a visual statement, but a political one as well--a formal >enactment of antinomianism--a formal enactment of the evasion of official >identity.
>
>Carla Harryman's recent work (There Never Was a Rose Without Thorn) is >extremely resonant with the conversation that's been going on here. In a >number of her pieces she plays with and trespasses upon >various gender categories--
>
>One piece that I remember fairly vividly deals with a "person" who's in an >art gallery. It is never clear whether this person in a man or a woman. We >see the person in question move through the gallery--he/she thinks all >sorts of sexual thoughts, attempts to masturbate with a telephone, and >even converses with the gallery owner--but we are left none the >wiser re: his/her gender identity.
>
>In other words, he/she gets into all sorts of narrative situations that >would normally warrent a pretty clear knowledge of the character's gender.
>Harrayman has to jump through some pretty lofty narrative hoops to achieve >the desired effect of what feels like a strange sort of >gender-related vertigo.
>
>And so on.... it is actually pretty easy to go through various female >authors (as one might do the same for men, ostensibly--Watten's >stereotypically masculine obsession with history, Bernstein's >stereotypically male interest in the formalities of the rant and so >on...)--
>
>But the danger here seems to be that such formal trends will be chalked up >to gender and nothing more. I mean, it's not always clear how much of a >given poet's writing is determined by gender-related tendencies and how >much is related to the person's individual personality. As in, maybe >Scalapino is just a quiet writer--Watten a loud one (witness the >typography in his new book out on the terrific Atelos Press, Bad >History...)
>
>2. How do I or anyone else on this list further my theoretical ideas about >gender in my poetic work.....
>
>
>The most glaring example I can think of here in my work would be my use of >the dash. In some of my work I employ the dash more than liberally.

>
>Once a woman who didn't like me called my work "super-model >poetry"--primarily because of my use of the dash (she used it too and >seemed to feel that I was trespassing on her poetic turf by using it)--
>
>I would argue that the dash is probably the single most feminized formal >aspect of poetry being employed right now--
>
>We see it associated with female writers as diverse as Graham, Scalapino, >Hillman, Dickinson, and Notley--
>
>We do not often see it associated with guys.
>
>Some thoughts,
>Katy
>
>

↑ Index

32. k. lederer
Interesting chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Hi Standard--

It has been raining all day here after a week of beautiful summer weather--

But somehow I am not disappointed as I know this is the spring that should have happened in between.

I find your use of "identification" or lack thereof interesting.

The first thought that popped into my mind while reading your take on Scalapino was that, at least, for me, the space of "non-identification" she opens up is exactly what draws me in.

As in, in a world where, perhaps, I feel "kept out" of those spaces (including various poetry books) that might be gendered male, Scalapino's nearly neutral gender spaces seem inviting--

Particularly in regards to her depiction of sex I feel as if I'm watching an act that is not so much genderless as animal?

Often when I read her work I feel as if I'm regarding various almost science fictional beings--

They are perhaps gendered, but only in so far as, let's say, Octavia Butler's characters in her sci-fi materpiece XENOGENESIS are gendered.

In other words, perhaps it is Scalapino's uncanny ability to create "negative" gender spaces that allows the likes of me to "identify" with her work.

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

33. k. lederer
Re: more boring chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

I never said--or meant to imply--that ALL dashes=feminine.

Nor did I say that ALL poems that included babies etc. were written by women.

Nor did I say that one might associate the dash with a "feminine" subjectivity because Emily Dickinson was a role model per se--

What I am trying to address is the way in which form and subject-matter (as they might be extricated from one another) might embody or otherwise buttress certain political goals that women as a "subjectivity category" might wish to accomplish.

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

34. Mark Weiss
Re: more boring chit-chat
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Let me add that no one rants better than Rochelle Owens. Even Charles might agree.

For a great male rant see Armand Schwerner's _The Tablets_. Can't find my copy of its last incarnation, so I can't cite the specific one. Anybody help me out there?

↑ Index

35. Wendy Kramer
samuel delany
Wed 1 Apr 1998

I was sorry to miss samuel delany's visit to buffalo's wednesdays at four. could people fill me in on what y'all discussed/heard?

appreciated,

a fan

↑ Index

36. Gwyn McVay
Re: screening process/feminism
Wed 1 Apr 1998

```
>>>"either/or" (male).  I'm leary of making rule
                       ^^^^^
```

OK, have been accused of sarcasm in recent days, but I've seen this typo on a great many mailing lists, and I'm not hallucinating. I am trying to restrain my acid remarks, and will say merely: this whole discussion is a real trip.

Gwyn "No, he's outside" McVay

↑ Index

37. Maz881
Enigma Variations
Wed 1 Apr 1998

Dear Poetica,

Those of you interested in non-fixated notions of gender have not much time. Copies of Alex Smith's Enigma Variations are running out. Please support the arts. Make checks out to 'a'a arts.

Send $5 to:

Bill Luoma
3029 Lowrey Ave #A-1102
Honolulu, HI 96822

In your order please indicate you endorse fluxing notions of gender! Say YES! I too am a gender bender. In return Chapman Billy guarantees you will receive a smart little letter press chapbook you can take to bed:

"Landing on the moon
she thought, Only a man could get where I am and stay.

She was a waiter,
a red, a cage of again and again.
She said she could wait and did, and now came in outer space"

--Alex Smith

Thanks you for your support.

↑ Index

38. Patrick F. Durgin
Re: more boring chit-chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Katy,

Re: Of course it is. In the "mainstream" one need only look at some of the more popular female writers to see that gender allows one (in that milieu) to "get away" with a lot more formal deviation-- (cf. Graham, Hillman, Fulton etc...).

I guess I am wondering how, and in what "mainstream" gender makes this allowance. Explicate?

And the dash? Obviously in Dickenson, but how is this gendered, as a technique? The dash in Pound, I would add, is crucial.

Guess I find these remarks a little confusing.

Patrick F. Durgin

`
`
`
` ----->*<-----
` K E N N I N G|
` anewsletterof|
` poetry&poetic|
` s418BrownSt.#|
` 10IowaCityIA5|
` 2245USA\/\/\/|

↑ Index

39. Charles Alexander announcing books
Thu 2 Apr 1998

ANNOUNCING NEW BOOKS

Chax Press last spring produced one small book which combined desktop publishing technology with hand bookmaking processes. That was THE MASQUE OF RHYME, by Bob Perelman.

This winter/spring, we decided to really explore some bookmaking in this way which is new to us, and now have some books to announce -- books which were first made available at readings by their authors here in Tucson in February or March 1998, or are about to be made available at readings here.

They are:

Tom Raworth and Charles Alexander Three Poems and Pushing Water (part seven) This one is a dos-a-dos book, meaning it can be read from either side to the middle, one such reading being Tom Raworth's Three Poems, the other being Charles Alexander's Pushing Water (part seven). The text pages of the book are produced on the desktop. The covers are letterpress printed, and two color images (one by Tom Raworth and one by Cynthia Miller) have been placed on the covers via color inkjet printing. Cover papers are Arches cover paper. Endsheets are Japanese chiri paper; middle-sheet dividing the work by the two poets is an Indian decorative paper. The book is hand sewn with Irish linen thread. Numbered and signed by the authors.

Rae Armantrout Writing The Plot About Sets Four poems by Armantrout, whose titles are "Writing," "The Plot," "About," and "Sets." The poems are designed and printed on the desktop. Covers are Arches cover paper which has been painted in various colors by mixing acrylic paint and water in a spritzer bottle and spraying the pages, a process which was accomplished by Cynthia Miller. A title label, printed on Asian decorative red paper, is pasted onto the cover. The book has been hand sewn with Irish linen thread. Numbered and signed by the author.

Tenney Nathanson One Block Over A single long poem by Nathanson, this book's text was produced on the desktop. The cover paper is a strong, blue denim-colored fine art paper, and the title has been rubber stamped on the cover. At 44 pages, the book was too long for the single-signature sewing of most other books in this series, so we sewed the book by hand with a coptic stitching which remains exposed on the spine. Signed by the author

Lydia Davis Blind Date The only book of fiction in this series, this is an until-this-moment unpublished story by Davis. This book is larger than the others, at 11 inches tall by 5.5 inches wide. It is not sewn, rather contains sheets pasted together and folded to form an accordion structure which is pasted into boards covered with decorative paper. This book is currently in progress in our studios and will be ready by April 22. It will be numbered and signed by the author.

Lisa Cooper Tilt Rail A set of poems by Cooper written on the occasion of the performance by the Rob Blakeslee Quartet in Tucson. This book has not yet been made, but is in the works and will be ready by April 22. We are currently choosing the papers for covers. It will be hand sewn, numbered, and signed by the author.

All books have been produced in small editions, ranging from 100 to 120. We prefer to sell these books as a set of 5, and require that at least 3 books be ordered together. Each book sells for $8. Buying a set of three (your choice)for $24 gets you free shipping and handling. Buying all five gets you a ten per cent discount as well as free shipping and handling.

We also have just a few copies available of Perelman's The Masque of Rhyme.

If anyone would like to begin a standing order for all books published by Chax Press, please send us a request as to how you may do so. Also send us a request for a list of available books and prices, or visit our web site:
http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

Please send reservations for books directly to Chax Press via email at [redacted]

We will process/mail your order as soon as payment is received. If you are a library we will take your order, ship books, and send you an invoice.

Checks may be sent to:

Chax Press
101 W. Sixth St., no. 6
Tucson, AZ 85701-1000

Our most recent trade literary books (not handmade edition) are THE TONGUE MOVES TALK, by Karen Mac Cormack,
and
3 OF 10, by Hank Lazer.

Forthcoming in June 1998 are Chromatic Defacement, by Phillip Foss,
and & Calling It Home, by Lisa Cooper.

We are also at work on a deluxe handmade edition of Chartings, by Ray DiPalma and Lyn Hejinian.

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

40. Marcella Durand

Tired chit-chat

Thu 2 Apr 1998

Just got back from a reading by Renee Gladman & Diane di Prima at the Poetry Project--oddly related to some of the issues about here--so I'm tired and may not make complete sense.

However, would like to respond in part to some of Standard's and Marc's thoughts: I do agree deep down that gender personality is a societal construct, and find any attempts to trace personality to physique ultimately limiting and depressing. However, that societal construction goes back so deep that it is hard to analyze and understand completely (if at all). But I do find some important areas in which experimental women poets are working to overcome that Silence that so many women function (or perceive they function) within. And one of these areas is on the level of syntax. I do remember reading Stein when a callow student, and just finding the basic structure of her sentences incredibly alluring compared to many of the traditional, which, sorry, included mostly male writers I was also reading. Toward the end of "A Room of One's Own," Woolf refers to this difference in structure that she was finding between women and men writers. Now, I completely regard this as gender nonspecific and feel that since modernist women writers, and even early women writers working in the late 1800s, opened up a certain syntactical and structural space that may have been due to the impact of being "silenced"--silenced in intention and content which then found its way into structure and syntax--that many male writers found interesting and inspiring as well. (I know that I'm entering a certain radicality here, by implying that the whole shift of the early 20th century was due to women writers, but hey, it's late and I've got that foolhardiness granted by tiredness).

Anyway, Cixous (this is also going back to college, and I should re-read some of this myself) postulates that in language there is a male kind of syntax that is perceived as "better": that is, subject-verb-object, linear, logical, introduction, body, conclusion, etc. "Female" writing is cyclical (of course), non-linear, I think you can guess the rest. But her ideas are interesting when applied to someone like, say, Stein, or even Susan Howe, who is taking a traditionally linear topic, history, and writing about it in such a way that makes you re-think the syntaxes in which you read history.

Good night,
Marcella.

↑ Index

41. Christopher Reiner
Scalapino and Ward Reading
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Anyone in the Los Angeles area--heads up:

Leslie Scalapino

Diane Ward

Reading at Cafe Balcony
12431 Rochester Avenue (corner of Santa Monica & Centinela)

Sunday
April 5, 1998
4:00 p.m.

$5 admission (all proceeds go to readers)

Sponsored by L.A. Books
http://www.litpress.com

↑ Index

42. ScoutEW
alligators, dense fog and Scala piano
Thu 2 Apr 1998

"Ho Ho Ho Ho Ho Ho Ho HOOOO my Poooooor siiides
I I Should die if I were to live here said Scopprell Ho Ho HO HO HO"

-never though Senor Blake could be such fun-so how is it out there in poetical land- When the dust settles out, the clouds lift and people start sifting and sorting thru the remains of this century -people are going to remember some great thinkers of the 20th century. Teenagers everywhere are going to carry copies of Leslie Scalapino's Defoe under there arms and read together in groups on stage and in alleys.

--"In the reality which is created by a writing, to narrow to the outlines of its form is utter scrutiny, is real. It's the interior relation of experience." Scalapino

I'm trying to work my way thru Alfred North Whitehead now, and holy vectors, Olson really knew what he was talking about. Scalapino is one of the best writers we have out there, I wish somebody would send me some info on that reading Anselm Berrigan is doing at HERE this weekend, I'm taking a trip down the

Hudson to NY-seaty to see my hermana and would like to stop by and see the reading, thanks erik

↑ Index

43. Mark Weiss
Re: Tired chit-chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

I've been hearing about putative distinctions about the way men and women write (as opposed to the subject of their writing) for maybe 30 years, and I've yet to see them demonstrated. Laurence Sterne wasn't the first man to write in the manner that Cixous describes as female, and the Brontes got away with pretending to be male. Their writing wasn't obviously female to anyone until it was revealed to be so. Somebody a long time ago decided that rhymes ending with an unstressed syllable were "female." The designation was certainly applied by a male, and while the designation is rich with suggestion about attitudes about gender, it's prosodically nonsensical. Men and women have been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and men and women have been unselfconsciously enjoying each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be relatively superficial. I don't know that the suggested gender difference, however slight or major, is important to any agenda, but I would be intrigued if it exists. Rather than quoting theorists why not present a text and explain convincingly why it has to be by a member of one or another gender?

>Anyway, Cixous (this is also going back to college, and I should re-read some of this myself) postulates that in language there is a male kind of syntax that is perceived as "better": that is, subject-verb-object, linear, logical, introduction, body, conclusion, etc. "Female" writing is cyclical (of course), non-linear, I think you can guess the rest. But her ideas are interesting when applied to someone like, say, Stein, or even Susan Howe, who is taking a traditionally linear topic, history, and writing about it in such a way that makes you re-think the syntaxes in which you read history.
>
>Good night,
>Marcella.
>
>

↑ Index

44. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
dis-appointment...
Thu 2 Apr 1998

(((please read through to the end)))

just back in town from a memorable conference at suny/stony brook... much to report, but i'll keep this as brief as i can:

first, to thank all of those who visited my website for the conference, and gave me feedback of any sort---pro con whatever... this helped immeasurably in my presenting something worth listening to, and in giving me confidence to stand before a group of talented and committed scholars and artists, and say what all i said...

second: to say, again, that i find the discussion of feminist and gender issues on this list vital and refreshing... and to thank nada gordon for such a fascinating post, which just happens to include a nice reference to past posts of mine... thanx nada, and i almost wish you hadn't mentioned me, b/c it now may appear as though i'm saying this in part b/c you mentioned me!...

third, to voice a minor disagreement with katy and keston (and katy---i just love your posts, and keston---please continue to post your poetry!): while i do think we need to think through simplistic binaries ("mainstream" vs. "experimental") i do at the same time believe in concentrated power centers, and in the relative disregard for (primarily and by my definition, non-mainstream) poetries in academe and in our public domain (which i continue to believe we have here in the states, though perhaps i'm hallucinating)... that is, i do think poetry and poetics is in general neglected, and that this is best gauged by having a look at what goes on in the less prestigious institutions... call me an ambitious guy, as i've said before... but we learn much by looking at the (english) and other student (grad AND undergrad) bodies, and by considering how these bodies have become increasingly the (often uncontested, sadly) site of corporate appeals and public relations strategies... which is to say, bodies that know little and often care little of political action, thanx in large part to the way our educational systems work, current economic realities, etc... please not to read this as an appeal to "conservative values" or some such...

fourth, bill l., titanic is one weird flick, for sure, for lotsa reasons that i haven't entirely figured out... i like the wall street allegory, but think in fact that love and death in that item may become a cultural event more b/c film technology intersects with appeal to doomed romance (not so much populist-class-conflicted, but driven by the drifting (visual) artist whose artistic vision literally refrains from exploiting his "true" love); the spectacle of panoramic techo-disaster via flashback which itself contains a viewing audience (presumably to coach actual viewers as to proper response); the ubiquitous use of the filmic eye/i as a narrative device that ends up reflecting the past through photographic as well as cinematic images (all of those mock-sepia feminist-ic photos of wimslet next to an airplane, etc., the colorized visual of that final death dream, the underwater robot-eye, the computer-aided narrative graphic, or graphic narrative, and such like)... digital as contemporary site of melancholy?---a sort of inverse or submersed sublime?... i am not a cynic, believe me, but found this particular film most troubling... and perhaps most important, it's all upgraded and packaged for digital consumption (think of the use in that film of digital stuntmen and women)... there's something decidely not old-fashioned about titanic... oh and hey: as you might deduce from this, bill, that i'm myopic as hell, really, can't see w/o my contacts to save my life... and am not a good swimmer...

and fifth (i save the worst for last), and along the lines of power: to report here, publicly, that ILLINOIS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY in chicago has just denied me tenure (along with another colleague here in humanities)... which issue, though as don byrd (my dear dear friend and diss. chair) suggests, is surely an example of a person beating a very personal and public drum, i hope fortifies some of my other comments on this list over the past few years... thanx to all those who've voiced their support for me over the past year during this (what else but?) ordeal... but in any case, i post here with the hope, self-serving though it may be, that folks will drop me a line backchannel if they hear of any institution looking for a poet who knows a bit about critical theory and emedia, and (if i may) who speaks his mind now and again...

best,

joe

↑ Index

45. Maria Damon

Re: dis-appointment...

Thu 2 Apr 1998

---

joe,this is most distressing. you've got a well-received book out from a respectable press --what could possibly be the problem?

At 8:28 AM -0600 4/2/98, Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:and fifth (i save the worst for last), and along the lines of power: to >report here, publicly, that ILLINOIS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY in chicago has >just denied me tenure (along with another colleague here in humanities)... >which issue, though as don byrd (my dear dear friend and diss. chair) >suggests, is surely an example of a person beating a very personal and >public drum, i hope fortifies some of my other comments on this list over >the past few years... thanx to all those who've voiced their support for me >over the past year during this (what else but?) ordeal... but in any case, >i post here with the hope, self-serving though it may be, that folks will >drop me a line backchannel if they hear of any institution looking for a >poet who knows a bit about critical theory and emedia, and (if i may) who >speaks his mind now and again...

>
>best,
>
>joe

↑ Index

46. SSSCHAEFER
Dodie chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Dodie:

In a message dated 98-04-01 20:58:18 EST, you write:

<< Why don't you try reading my writing and the writing of the rest of the women on the list and then you'll see how much of it is all about technique. And the notion of a female form has been kicked around ad nauseum since when--the 70s, the 80s? It's essentialist gaga. Why should we have to kick it around again to conform to your idea of a serious discussion? >>

I have read your writing and much of the rest of the writing on this list and many others. Nice condescension, though. Excellent technique. And of course all writing is about technique at some point. Not sure why you're so hostile to my questions. I thought I was sincerely trying to get someone to help me think about these issues and I think it is happening. I'm not exactly sure why reference to "serious" discussion type things like Shoptaw's book should be attacked here when books, theorists, etc. are mentioned constantly in order to direct a conversation. I'm a little offended by the tone of your post and wonder if I offended you. However, the fact that the female form has been kicked around ad nauseum seems obvious to me. Simply restating it doesn't help. And is why serious conversation should occur.

So many of your posts have been interesting and informative. Never thought you'd be the type to grind an axe. Was there some humor in your post that I missed?

Standard

↑ Index

47. Mark Prejsnar
theses on poetics and feminism
Thu 2 Apr 1998

1. The more interesting currents in poetry practice, in the last 25 years, shake up form. (The "excesses" of S. Howe or Scalapino, e.g.)

2. A response to the buried twists and injuries of gender polarity, and patriarchal power, requires (or leads to) shaking things up at a number of fundemental levels. That's why the formally explosive and unlooked-for approaches of a Howe, a Scalapino, a Harryman, are startlingly effective at bringing uneasy and buried political constrictions to our attention.

3. These tensions and constrictions exist mainly as lived stresses; social stuff is constituative of who we are. So, although one person has spoken of ideological policing, and another has (half-seriously) suggested she is post-feminist because otherwise she will experience "political correctness and self-censorship," the feminism inherent in the work of the poets mentioned above (and others like 'em) emerges from deep within our social tumult and roil.. It isn't imposed (whether externally or through some improbable "self-censorship")

4. Political correctness is a right-wing slogan, whose basic function is to try to convince us that social dissensions and disputes are artificial and externally-imposed constructions. But often the strife being dismissed as "PC" is real and is rooted in disequilibria of power that are real, and painful on a highly personal level.

5. Form cannot be disentangled from politics. Poetry make everything (or at least anything) happen.

mark p.
@lanta

↑ Index

48. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Berkeley Bookstore
Thu 2 Apr 1998

> Can someone help me with the name of the bookstore in Berkeley

peter - you probably want Small Press Distribution: 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley, CA 94710-1407. unfortunately, they're only open 10-5 M-F. I've also had good luck finding used poetry @ Moe's.

if you get to SPD, check out Jed Rasula's Tabula Rasula.

best, chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

49. henry gould

Re: theses on poetics and feminism

Thu 2 Apr 1998

On Thu, 2 Apr 1998 10:38:48 -0500 Mark Prejsnar said:
>
>5. Form cannot be disentangled from politics. Poetry make everything (or >at least anything) happen.

The paper said today that some Sicilian fisherman (aboard the Capitano Ciccio, or "Captain Fatso") netted a 2000 or so year old bronze statue of a dancing satyr out of the Mediterranean, in pretty good shape though missing a couple limbs. First they caught a leg & then went back later & fished up the rest. They could have sold it on the market themselves, but they decided to give it to a local museum.

Poetry makes things happen when it realizes the world is inherently poetic. "the poetry doesn't matter" [t.s. eliot, very p.c.]

Now of course the satyr is a loaded artypolymorphous whatever. at least the boat was loaded. the article said some of the fisherman said why don't we toss the leg overboard & just keep the rest, it was so heavy. Ahab fortunately said "no, fellas".

- Henry Gould, a.k.a Captain Fatso, trying hard to cause trouble as usual in his complacent a-political way

↑ Index

50. Susan Wheeler

Re: dis-appointment...

Thu 2 Apr 1998

Joe! They are fools, fools -- >and fifth (i save the worst for last), and along the lines of power: to >report here, publicly, that ILLINOIS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY in chicago has >just denied me tenure

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

51. Billy Little springtime in nowhere
Thu 2 Apr 1998

---

the forsythia ablaze and JAB9 in my mailbox, whoever sent me the Journal of Artists Books thank you very much, i plan on subscribing, this issue has a rich feature centrefold of Keith and Rosemarie Waldrop, long may they thrive igniting our intellect.

↑ Index

52. k. lederer
Re: Tired chit-chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:

> I've been hearing about putative distinctions about the way mainstream and experimental writers write (as opposed to the subject of their writing) for maybe 30 years, and I've yet to see them demonstrated.
Laurence Sterne wasn't the first man to write in the manner that Cixous describes as experimental, and the Brontes got away with pretending to be mainstream. Their writing wasn't obviously brilliant to anyone until it was revealed to be so. Somebody a long time ago decided that rhymes ending with an unstressed syllable were "wierd" and "experimental." The designation was certainly applied by a mainstream writer and while the designation is rich with suggestion about attitudes about aesthetic camp, it's prosodically nonsensical. Mainstream and "experimental" writers have been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and mainstream and "experimental" writers have been unselfconsciously enjoying each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be relatively superficial. I don't know that the suggested aesthetic difference, however slight or major, is important to any agenda, but I would be intrigued if it exists. Rather than quoting theorists why not present a text and explain convincingly why it has to be by a member of one or another aesthetic camp?
>
(Just a little tinkering--I think the results are interesting....)

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

53. MAYHEW
dis-appointment
Thu 2 Apr 1998

I'm disgusted when brilliant people I know (if only from the list and reading their books) are denied tenure at colleges that are lucky to have them in the first place.

Viva la mediocridad!

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

54. RJRVE
Re: theses on poetics and feminism
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Must pipe in my agreement with Henry, that the world is inherently poetic, not poetry driving the world. (thanks for the satyric image!)

When Olson wrote "I have an ability..." it has always been my take that he strained to allow his eye-view to see things in their autonomous reality (a stance that was greatly aided by Jung's view of Psyce as autonomous).

Richard Reeve

↑ Index

55. dbkk
TIM MILLER'S REPORT FROM THE SUPREME COURT
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Thought some of you might find this interesting.

Dodie

> TIM'S REPORT FROM THE SUPREME COURT- April 1, 1998
>
> I am back from my day in court, the SUPREME COURT that is. It was a crazy journey to go to DC for two days to be at the oral argument for the last

driblets of the NEA 4 case but I am glad that I made the effort and schlepped to see the spectacle of the Supremes finally taking on the Culture War. I took a late flight to DC, spent the night at my brother's house in McLean, VA around the corner from Ken Starr's house, and was woken up the next morning at 6:30 AM by my two fabulous nephews bouncing up and down on my bed saying "Uncle Tim! Uncle Tim!" (Interesting to have my adventure in court as a queer artist begin in the lap of the heterosexual family unit! So noisy! So early! So cute Devin and Jason are!) This was the equivalent of 3:30 AM LA time, so I was not at my prettiest as the boys pummeled me with pillows. I managed to coffee up and make the morning commute with my brother Greg to Arlington where I hopped on the Metro. For once in my life I am early for something! I meet my great friend photographer Dona McAdams at Union Station and we stroll down to the court. The camera piranhas are already gathered waiting for fresh meat. Skirting the long line (I know we are on a list with the US Marshall) I walk up the long steep marble stairs of the Supreme Court and all at once it feels like a sword and sandals epic from the 50's! Dona and I go through many layers of security as we run into Karen Finley and Holly Hughes & Esther Newton also waiting in line. Other familiar faces from the last years of this controversy: ACLU lawyers, journalists. Willem Dafoe and other Wooster Group folk. For a moment it feels strangely like a high school reunion to me. Finally we get in and take our seats. I am sitting next to a woman from the NEA who seems to think we should be buddies even though we are on opposite sides in this case and I happen to believe it is shameful that not a single one of these NEA bureaucrats ever resigned in protest. Dona is on my right and Karen next to her, Holly and Esther further down. The room is high and pillared with big faggy swags of bordello-red fabric between. (Justice Souter's decorating tips, I imagine!) The tall ceiling is covered with the usual marble bas reliefs of humpy workers and wise men passing judgement. Directly above where the Supreme Court Justices sit is a marble carving of two men with excellent abdominals sitting in thrones side by side. One is bearded (Steve Reeves as Hercules) the other smooth shaven, boyish but built. These carvings will be the perfect backdrop for the day in that not too distant (I hope) future when this Court will finally pass judgment on Lesbian and Gay marriage. I would like to be there on that day!

Oye! Oye! Oye! The judges come in. The Big Daddies (even though two are women). Every disciplinary visit to the Principal's office in elementary school comes back to me as the Justices take their seats. Once in 4th Grade Principal Lambas made me fill a dixie cup up with my own spit in his office after I had spit on another boy in my class. This was Principal Lambas' idea of a just punishment. It takes a very long time to fill a big dixie cup with your own saliva. This was what I remembered at the Supreme Court took their seats.

The oral (was this why I remembered that afternoon in Principal Lambas' office?) arguments begin. They earlier had distributed a pamphlet which instructs us "How to Behave at an Oral Argument". The Justices, who rock a lot in their comfy recliner chairs, seem to me to be quite surly with the Solicitor General (Seth Waxman) presenting the Government's case. I start to think the Court is leaning our way. The Solicitor General tries to pitch that the "standards of decency" language is not really censoring speech. "We don't think there is a any constitutional problem here". Justice Kennedy seemed to reject this and sensibly responds that all art inevitable carries with it "viewpoint" and is by nature vulnerable to such curtailment by vague notions of "decency". Clarence Thomas, as usual, says nothing throughout all the proceedings. Our lawyer David Cole gets up and I think does very well, though the Justices are on his butt too and will hardly let him finish a sentence. The Court seems annoyed that they are having to deal with this matter. David boldly spins the argument that the speech of artists needs to be protected by the same standard of freedom of speech even when the government has supported it with a grant. The decency rule "singles out art which has a nonconforming or disrespectful viewpoint. Government can't impose an ideological screen " without abridging the 1st Amendment, David said. The Justices seemed skeptical of this notion or that any "Chilling Effect" had really happened on account of this language. (You'll have to read the stuff in the papers for more details.)

Time's up! Suddenly the oral argument is argumentative no more and is done!

It had taken an hour. After eight years of drama and hate mail and blabbing and death threats and demonstrations it all ended up with the Supreme Court spending an hour on this subject. I felt quite dazed. We were ushered out and the next case was already on. Walking back down the marble stairs, which felt a little more now like I was leaving Principal Lambas' office than the Forum in Rome, Holly, Karen and I made our way to a garden of microphones for the press conference. I was dreading having to say something. The part of me that is Mr. Sound Bite was nowhere to be found. It all felt too overwhelming and on the spot. We lined up. Lawyer David Cole was articulate and upbeat. Karen said she felt like she had been in an abusive relationship with Jesse Helms and that he had been sexually harassing her at her workplace. Holly made the crucial point that the reason we even were at the Supreme Court was because of yet another betrayal by Clinton who could have let stand the lower court decision that "standards of decency" were an unconstitutional criterion for the funding of the arts. I tried to make the point that younger artists all over the country have received the signal loud and clear that work about sexuality, politics or gender gets in a mess of trouble. I brought up my students at Cal State who struggle through all this censoring shit to try to claim their expression. I wanted to remember that it is the emerging artists that are really getting fucked with by this "chilling" limiting of creative speech. That felt like a sensible message to speak to the cameras in front of the Court. It was the best I could manage amid my jet lag in any case.

We walked across the street for a little reception and post-game huddle. I felt really tired. My usual excitement about Democracy in Action (Civics class had been one of my favorites!) was pretty depleted at this point. Fittingly, as the reception wound down, a bunch of us went and had lunch at the > restaurant "America" in Union Station to debrief the day. General thoughts: I think the court will probably kick the case out and not make decision. I am pissed off that Clinton challenged the Ninth Circuit decision. I am convinced that though this business with the Supreme Court is a big battle, there are a zillion little struggles that are really where my work needs to be done:

>
> Like continuing to dismantle that censor in my head that got put in there through a thousand experiences in my lifeÖincluding that time when Principal Lambas made me fill up a dixie cup with my own spit. Clearly Principal Lambas had the imagination of a performance artist!
>
> Like making sure we keep Highways, the most attacked performance space in all this fuss, open and thriving and training a bunch of new and fierce artists. This goes for all the other arts centers in the country that have been hassled, especially Out North in Anchorage who are currently under the gun in Alaska.
>
> Like encouraging my students at Cal State (and everywhere else I teach) to do our wildest and most truthful work including the ensemble piece called I AM NOT YOU which we showed at Highways the night before I flew to DC. I saw my gang of students sift through their own issues of identity and come up with powerful and specific statements of self. Their skin and their history and their voices alive in the room!
>
> Like continuing to dig deep into my life as a queer citizen and trying to figure out what the stories are that I need to bring forward as an artist for myself and for my community.
>
> Your Court Reporter signing off,
>
> Tim Miller

↑ Index

56. Rachel Levitsky

Re: naming and power

Thu 2 Apr 1998

Thanks Dodie. All of what you say resonates. It always gets back to naming, on one hand, certain purist or mainstream "Ms" feminists might find us awfully distasteful, or male identified even, certainly dangerous in our purveys into pornography, on the other hand (I had this experience in Mexico) other groups would think we were oppressive, married to political correctness, bourgeois, oppressive to peoples of color. Still, I always err on the side of claiming my names and get irritated beyond belief by the (prevalent here at Naropa) "why do you have to name (implying limit) yourself" attitude. Poetry and Identity rely on the power of naming. So yes, an unobservant, anti-zionist jew, a make-up wearing feminist, a lesbian who sleeps with whoever I want to, etc etc etc. Another note on power. I don't subscribe to a notion of scarcity, but the capitalist economy operates on a hoard/lack model so that the dominant groups end up having 'extra'. I think it is valid to skim off this extra by any means necessary, i.e. guilt (shaming), theft, graffiti, boycotts of barnes and noble, public humilitation etc etc etc. Hence, I feel absolutely just in saying that all editors of political consciousness are morally bound to strive for inclusion of women and peoples of color parity in their publications UNLESS they are will to justify the limitations.

mesmerized by the furious snow fall,
Rachel Democracy

[redacted] wrote:
>
> >Date: Tue, 31 Mar 1998 18:07:21 -0700
> >From: Rachel Levitsky <[redacted]>
> >Subject: Re: screening process/feminism
> >
> >Dodie--I think that is an excellent screening process and am not > >surprised that it works as a filter.
> >
> >I was curious about your comment about no longer being a feminist. I > >often feel like a bad feminist myself but I don't think anything to > >drastic has changed in me--I'm just more willing to be vocal about all > >of me, pervert and feminist. Can you enlighten??
>
> Actually, Rachel, when I said that about no longer being a feminist (that's > a hard word to spell) I was being light-hearted about no longer being in > the preciousness of the Feminist Writer's Guild. I don't like to align > myself with any group at this point--even feminist--the ugly specter of > political correctness raises its head--and self-censorship is close behind.
> I've been reading feminist theory for like 20 years and at least 90% of the > books I read are by women. I think an important thing that was covered in > Kathleen Fraser's project, and which I've really taken to heart, is that > women do not have to engage language in a manner privileged by male poets > and thinkers. Her ideas, for instance, of "and/but" (female) as opposed to > "either/or" (male). I'm leary of making rules about this or generalizing.
> Ecriture feminine was interesting and radical when it came out, but now I > think lots of people find it problematic. I think that one shouldn't feel > a compulsion to use male forms in writing, but also one shouldn't feel > pressured into speaking about writing in the current cliches of the > intelligencia. I've been thinking about something Katy said a few days > ago--something about how she'd read her Derrida and Foucault--like she'd > done her homework--and now she has a right to talk about women. I think > this points up the sickness--not of Katy--but of the comically elitist > poetic avant-garde in which many of us are involved. Why does Katy have to > have read Derrida and Foucault--or feel that she should have--in order to > validate her speaking? If D and F feed her writing, that's one thing, but > the compulsion that everybody who's intelligent and writing poetry must > read them is bunk.

>
> I look forward to the day when a younger version of Katy will say, "I've > read Catherine Clement and Jacqueline Rose . . ." Or even Laura Mulvey . .
> . That's when feminism will have really made a dent.
>
> Dodie

↑ Index

57. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Left Hand Reading Series
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Thursday, April 16, 1998--8:30 P.M.

LEFT HAND READING SERIES---Boulder, Colorado

Anselm Hollo
Cole Swenson
David Bromige
Open Reading

1825 Pearl above Wild Oats.
Free, donations accepted, refreshments provided.
For info call [redacted], [redacted].

↑ Index

58. Jordan Davis
"publicly thanking Dodie"
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Dodie,

Thanks for posting Tim Miller's travel/reading report on the NEA Supreme Court case. I started out interested in the matter, and I wound up interested in his style. As you know, I am demonically parochial in my reading; who is Tim Miller? A performance artist? An artist? A writer? Or if that kind of categorization seems as silly to you as it sounds to me now, would you help me out and tell me a little about him? He seems, well, interesting!

Again, thank you, and good night,
Jordan

↑ Index

59. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Thu 2 Apr 1998

I have a bunch of very slightly ding'd copies of Rochelle Owens' _New and Selected Poems 1961-1996_ (192 pp. pb) and Argentine poet Luisa Futoransky's _The Duration of the Voyage_ (Spanish-English facing-page, translated by Jason Weiss, 96 pp. pb) available at half-price, $10.00 for the Owens and $5.50 for the Futoransky. Shipping is $2.00 for one to three books in any combination.

Reviews being a very slow tide, only a few are in, including raves from Library Journal and Publishers Weekly for both books, and they're already selling rather well--54 copies of Rochelle's ordered this morning, in fact.

Here are two quotes from the back cover of _New and Selected_.

Maureen Owen: "Owens goes cold turkey on the agony and delight of living in this century. She is the Shaman-genius exploring deeper realities in the psychic realm. She reaches down into the living, breathing mythical core and pulls up the forces of chaos spitting and kicking; she gives us back the hungry power of our own imaginations."

Marjorie Perloff: "In its uncompromising savagery, its passionate rejection of sentimentality, Rochelle Owens' lyric voice is unique among contemporary poets. An astonishing body of work."

You can find commentary on Rochelle's work by, among others, Toby Olson, Jackson Mac Low, Jane Augustine, Maureen Owen and Susan Smith Nash, at www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/owens/lro-cont.htm, where there are links to generous selections of her poetry.

Luisa Futoransky's book is her first major representation in English, so there are fewer resources. Her latest book was recently released in Mexico in an edition of 15,000 (yup, and they expect to sell them). Maybe we should all publish in Spanish.

↑ Index

60. Angela Szeto
Re: springtime in nowhere
Thu 2 Apr 1998

hi i'm new (my name is also angela)

a centerfold of the waldrops (is that keith's last name)? where can i get a copy

> the forsythia ablaze and JAB9 in my mailbox, whoever sent me the Journal of Artists Books thank you very much, i plan on subscribing, this issue has a rich feature centrefold of Keith and Rosemarie Waldrop, long may they thrive igniting our intellect.

↑ Index

61. ScoutEW
PBS
Thu 2 Apr 1998

Since when did PBS get commercials? where have I been, I was watching some show about a time-traveling dog that talked and then all of a sudden a commercial for 7-11? Strange, I'm used to all of those telethons So I am intersted in the Sense of time that Scalapino plays with in her work. In Defoe especially, there is this sense of travel when you read the text, It is one of the first texts that I have read where literally the time feels warped and shifted, no sense of direction in a non-patronizing way- I love it- What's next for Scalapino, what comes out next?titles?> Presses? I'll be at the Anselm Berrigan reading this weekend come up and say hi to me y'all Ill be the one in the pants, shirt and shoes erik

↑ Index

62. Hugh Nicoll
Gertrude Stein Online
Thu 2 Apr 1998

The following announcement may be of general interest. Articles in the inaugural issue will also be of interest re: the gendered discourse threads of recent days.

NOW AVAILABLE:

time-sense: a quarterly on the art of Gertrude Stein Volume 1 No.1
at http://www.tenderbuttons.com/review.html

Sonja Streuber, Editor
Sarah Kornfeld and Stafford, Co-editors

Recent Stein criticism has addressed such issues as her postmodern disjunctive style, representation and the body, exile and bio/geography, and Stein's connection with the other arts. Some criticism has tried to reconstruct her texts, reading them from the point of view of queer, ethnic, and theological studies. Artists have set her words to other words, to visual art, to music, and to performance. In other words, the vastly expanding field of Stein studies today ranges from textual and psychoanalytic observations to cultural studies and artistic experiments. Time-Sense hopes to provide a forum for the ongoing examination of how we make sense of Stein in our time.

Contents of Volume 1 No. 1: Beginning Again

Editor's Note
Rubery, Annette, "The Mother of Postmodernism? Gertrude Stein On-Line"
Moramarco, Fred, "Grr truth's tie-in" (poem)
Jarraway, David, "'Absence of More': The Struggle for Queer Self-Authorization in Gertrude Stein" Kimball, Jack, "Gertrude Stein and the Natural World" Logsdon, Denise, "A Listening to Gertrude Stein. A Writer's Preface" time-sense is currently soliciting written submissions from all theoretical, critical, and creative approaches, and artistic submissions in all reproducible media for its upcoming issues and also welcomes conference-listings, panel abstracts, and inquiries for book reviews:

June: Gertrude Stein and her Audience
(Deadline: May 1)

"The thing that is fundamental about plays," writes Stein in her essay, "Plays," "is that the scene as depicted on the stage is more often than not one might say it is almost always in syncopated time in relation to the emotion of anybody in the audience." Submissions are invited that investigate Stein's relationship to her audience/"readience": How citational/ performative is this relationship? How/ Does Stein address audience at all? (How) Do we understand Stein's writing as performative? How do we perform reading Stein? How does reading Stein perform us? This issue will encompass a forum on the teaching of Stein's work in the undergraduate classroom, for which all sorts of submissions (narratives, lesson plans, pedagogical strategies, reading questions, etc.) are being sought.

September: Gertrude Stein and the Question(ing) of Politics (Deadline: August 1)

In her writing Stein often distinguishes between americans and Americans, between french and French, or germans and Germans. While some critics maintain that Stein was a pacifist, one researcher recently uncovered in the Stein-archive a celebratory piece about Petain's Vichy-government. Submissions are invited that address questions of Stein and nationhood and Stein and politics, such as: What are the implications of Stein's assigning such distinctive (trans)national labels in the context of her (and our) understanding of gender, ethnicity, or sexuality? How have other modernist and postmodernist scribes commented on Stein's (re)vision of nationhood? Is it possible, at all, to read Stein as a political artist?

December: Gertrude, Alice and their Seasons
(Deadline: November 1)

Stein's understanding of time and /as geography has been widely explored, but not the use, representation, and significance of seasons and seasonal events, or Jewish religious events, in Stein's and Toklas' writing. We know much about Stein's love for the bright summer sun, about her winter and summer residences, and we know what Alice used to cook at certain times in the year, but the body of criticism and art on these issues is rather small.

For submission format, please refer to the submission guidelines at http://www.tenderbuttons.com/review3.html or write to the editor at [redacted].

--*-

think gert how can we bring democracy to these germans, she didn't hesitate a second responding, "teach them disobediance!"

↑ Index

64. Schuchat Simon
Re: Tired chit-chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, k. lederer wrote:

> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> Mainstream and "experimental" writers have > been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and > mainstream and "experimental" writers have been unselfconsciously enjoying > each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and > usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be > relatively superficial.
> >
> (Just a little tinkering--I think the results are interesting....)
>
> Best,
> Katy
>

I would argue that this "tinkering" with Mark's post producing the above sentence produces statements which are demonstrably inaccurate, at least the sentences above are demonstrably inaccurate. Was it your view that the prior, unmodified statements were equally untrue? I'm kind of slow about things like this, just trying to figure out what it is you are contesting, as mainstream writer heavily influenced by Alice Notley.

↑ Index

65. Billy Little JAB in Nowhere
Thu 2 Apr 1998

---

the Journal of Artist's Books 324 Yale Ave.
New Haven, CT. 06515
[redacted]

send a cheque or money order $9us

↑ Index

66. Keston Sutherland
Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
Thu 2 Apr 1998

> how can we bring democracy to these germans, she didn't hesitate a second responding, "teach them disobediance!"

well, she was wrong, wasn't she? Nietzsche tried to teach 'them' exactly that, and became a textbook in the Third Reich. The nsdap were pretty disobedient, all things considered (versailles, Munich putsch etc). "how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age": it isn't. Maybe she should have hesitated.

↑ Index

67. Don Wellman
Re: (four/four) theses on poetics and feminism
Thu 2 Apr 1998

This post from Michael Corbin referencing Bach's Matthaus Passion, makes me long for an anti-poetics. MC is is right -- nothing matches this work for beauty of form , for poetry of atonement/remberance/desiring:

mache dich mein herzen rein

I feel his post deeply. I feel his memories and I think his desires amidst the history he retells, personal and national, grieving really. Droplets of blood in the triplets of the printed score as the heart breaks.

I remember also being stunned watching a film. "heimat"--fascinating film, hours and hours of footage putting me there in the Germany of the Hitler time, a cynical lyrical film. At one point some of the "lead" characters were in a movie theater watching a filmed performance of the Matthau's Passion and there were tears at the strains of the aria, "lord, make my heart pure" tears on the faces of the uniformed Nazi's in the theater, bitter, bitter irony -- that such music could lend itself to such purposes of Nationalism ...

I think it best to disentangle poetry from politics. I am only following Benjamin here. I am not claiming an independent judgment on the value of aesthetic form. I think that the thesis that mc mediates on,

> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998 10:38:48 -0500 Mark Prejsnar said:
> >
> >5. Form cannot be disentangled from politics. Poetry make everything (or > >at least anything) happen.
>
> Poetry makes things happen when it realizes the world . . .

is a dangerous thesis.

Maybe what is needed on the gender thread is an anti-poetics of gender too. I think that is what I am hearing some women say on the gender thread, lets dis-entangle those constructions from what we write ...

There is no pure point of view, no certainty of gender if we get down to telling our own stories ... no certainty that our poetics contribute to the "good" cause ... every reason to write then from where you are as I think many on this last have been attempting to do recently.

Don Wellman

I offer some links in case anyone wants to know where I am writing from http://www.postypographika.com/catalog/lightdst/wellman.htm

http://www.dwc.edu/users/wellman/OARS.HTM

↑ Index

68. Keston Sutherland
Rose's mourning
Thu 2 Apr 1998

there seem to have been a fair few posts, recently, making mention of National Socialist Germany - can I recommend Gillian Rose's excellent book _Mourning Becomes the Law_ (Cambridge University Press), as a refreshed and perfectly considerate address of many of the questions and attitudes that are often taken for granted? Her term "holocaust piety" (her family were Jewish exiles) has made me think --

k

↑ Index

69. Billy Little obediance
Thu 2 Apr 1998

keston

the germans were the most obediant citizenry that was why auschwitz begen belsen dachau himmel / you're not proposing teach the germnans obediance is what stein should have said are you? she threatens you, that's obvious or is the message of keston and harvard OBEY, keston sutherland the anti-Notely, if you want to be a bully please wait until i put on my yellow star, you are wrong, you couldn't shine her shoes

↑ Index

70. michael corbin

Re: (four/four) theses on poetics and feminism

Thu 2 Apr 1998

henry gould wrote:
>
> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998 10:38:48 -0500 Mark Prejsnar said:
> >
> >5. Form cannot be disentangled from politics. Poetry make everything (or > >at least anything) happen.
>
> Poetry makes things happen when it realizes the world . . .

Its a strange church. An 'Episcopal' 'cathedral'; gothic and something about the nation-state. A washington national cathedral.

Last sunday evening I sat in on the performance. It was Bach. The Matthew Passion. Tuneful Erbauliche Gedanken au den Gruen Donnerstag und Charfreitag.

Probably the bestest realization of the holy-ghost since I saw the Reverend Al Green in that Memphis church. amen.

A friend and I followed the score we brought lookin for that Augustinian numerology and Bach's playful representation of notes and hopes and 'meaning'.

Coretta King, in memorium, made an unannounced appearance and said a few words before the passion. She said, even today, she believes in something like the beloved community. All things heretofore nothwithstanding. don'yt even have to do poetry.

30 years before sunday. To the day.

MLK was in washington. Stirring it up for the 'Poor Peoples March on Washington'.

Johnson already felt the double-cross on vietnam. after you give up the 'voting-rightss' you expect quid pro quo. So that nigger was was up for grabs. Particularly coming to washington talking trash.

His sermon, 30 years ago sunday at the same pulpit: "On Not Sleeping Through a Great Revolution".

Bach could tax those Lutherans. St. Matthew is a gorgeous 4-hour possibility. Nothing much else like it (western civilization and all that). good singers in the right hall. amen. performance poetry. particularly from the tenor this night. man, boy-friend had some lungs. endurance, remembering.

30 years ago they had a plan, these music people in this cathedral, to do this same piece of music. It was to be the sunday that followed april fourth.

It was both the national guard and the various policing apparatus that imposed the curfew after the city started burning.

When sunday came they cancelled the passion. Because it was after curfew time. Armored personnel carriers in the street. and shit like that.

They never played it again. Until last sunday. something about '98.

Not that its, even, the absence of redemption. But whether it is the absence of the possibility of even remembering. Sometimes even in that forgetting-poetics.

Da ging hin der Zwolfen einer, mit Namen Judas Ischarioth, zu den Hohenpriestern und sprach: "Was wolit ihr mir geben? Ich will ihn euch verraten." Und sie boten ihm dreisig Silberlinge.

ok, done,

merica

mc

↑ Index

71. k. lederer
Re: Tired chit-chat
Thu 2 Apr 1998

I'm "mainstream writer heavily influenced by A Notley" or you are?

I don't know what I think about the statements that were produced by the tinkering--just thought it was interesting to note how interchangeable the discourses seem to be here--

Best,
Katy

On Fri, 3 Apr 1998, Schuchat Simon wrote:

> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, k. lederer wrote:
>
> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> Mainstream and "experimental" writers have > been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and > mainstream and "experimental" writers have been unselfconsciously enjoying
> each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and > usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be > relatively superficial.

> (Just a little tinkering--I think the results are interesting....)
>
> Best,
> Katy
>
> I would argue that this "tinkering" with Mark's post producing the above sentence produces statements which are demonstrably inaccurate, at least the sentences above are demonstrably inaccurate. Was it your view that the prior, unmodified statements were equally untrue? I'm kind of slow about things like this, just trying to figure out what it is you are contesting, as mainstream writer heavily influenced by Alice Notley.

↑ Index

72. Stephen Cope
address query
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Might anyone have an e-mail for Paul Naylor?

Thanks in advance...

Stephen

↑ Index

73. Mark Weiss
Re: Tired chit-chat
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Katy: I didn't intend to say anything about your tinkering because I thought it was silly on its face. Because of syntax with a little tinkering--in this case primarily replacing nouns--all discourses are in this sense interchangeable. Tinkering, at any rate, is easier than an analysis of language-use as gendered.

At 10:41 PM 4/2/98 -0600, you wrote:
>I'm "mainstream writer heavily influenced by A Notley" or you are?
>
>I don't know what I think about the statements that were produced by the >tinkering--just thought it was interesting to note how interchangeable the >discourses seem to be here--
>
>Best,
>Katy
>
>On Fri, 3 Apr 1998, Schuchat Simon wrote:

>
>> On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, k. lederer wrote:
>>
>> > On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, Mark Weiss wrote:
>> >
>> > Mainstream and "experimental" writers have >> > been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and >> > mainstream and "experimental" writers have been unselfconsciously enjoying >> > each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and >> > usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be >> > relatively superficial.
>> > >
>> > (Just a little tinkering--I think the results are interesting....)
>> >
>> > Best,
>> > Katy
>> >
>> I would argue that this "tinkering" with Mark's post producing the above >> sentence produces statements which are demonstrably inaccurate, at least >> the sentences above are demonstrably inaccurate. Was it >> your view that the prior, unmodified statements were equally untrue? I'm >> kind of slow about things like this, just trying to figure out what it is >> you are contesting, as mainstream writer heavily influenced by Alice Notley.
>>
>
>

↑ Index

74. beth lee simon

Re: dis-appointment...

Fri 3 Apr 1998

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>
> and fifth (i save the worst for last), and along the lines of power: to > report here, publicly, that ILLINOIS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY in chicago has > just denied me tenure (along with another colleague here in humanities)... > which issue, though as don byrd (my dear dear friend and diss. chair)
> suggests, is surely an example of a person beating a very personal and > public drum, i hope fortifies some of my other comments on this list over > the past few years... thanx to all those who've voiced their support for me > over the past year during this (what else but?) ordeal... but in any case, > i post here with the hope, self-serving though it may be, that folks will > drop me a line backchannel if they hear of any institution looking for a > poet who knows a bit about critical theory and emedia, and (if i may) who > speaks his mind now and again...

>
> best,
>
> joe

Joe,

I'm an admirer of your work and thought. Very sorry to hear about the d of tenure. We may well be hiring, tho not for this fall. We've JUST filled (or rather are about to make an offer) for a one-yr Visiting position, but that will be redefined and then (we hope) approved.

Best wishes!

beth simon
assistant professor, linguistics and english department of english and linguistics indiana university purdue university
[redacted]

↑ Index

75. Hank Lazer

Re: dis-appointment...

Fri 3 Apr 1998

---

a sad, dumb decision. my condolences, Joe.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

76. Rachel Loden

a poem by Hilda Morley

Fri 3 Apr 1998

Forwarded from Halvard Johnson, of another list, who comments that "It's interesting how, when a poet dies, the New Yorker often manages to find something in its files to publish . . . The Apr. 6 issue has this by Hilda Morley (1916-1998)."

Had they ever published her work before, I wonder--

Your Color

More in some ways than when you were alive, I try to please you,
to find I am of your way of thinking, as with these red carnations:
they're your color.
For myself I'd always chosen white, saying-- that red's too strong for thinking in a room, too much.
But now I love these flowers,
having grown, these years ("mourning" they said),
more into what you wished:
a clearer form now, seeing this redness (suspended) above green stems as thumbprints of Mediterranean earth that you belong to, crop of a heart's blood on this city's grayness, this room's whiteness.

--Hilda Morley

↑ Index

77. Marcella Durand
Anselm B reading
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Anselm Berrigan is reading this Saturday with Tonya Foster (whom I knew in school and am very curious, after not seeing her for many years, at what her work is now) at HERE, which is on Sixth Avenue between Spring and Broome, kind of a gallery-looking place with big street-level windows. The reading is at 3, admission is $5, and it should be a fun reading. I'll be there anyway with my big sunglasses, flip-flops, beach towel and sunscreen to protect me from the glare and rays.

↑ Index

78. daniel bouchard
O B D Ants
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Keston,

I think you will have an easier time posting to the UberList once you get out of Cambridge (Mass) and back to original Cambridge. After all, you've been indicted twice here for your e-mail address. I mean, I can see how people may presume things if a listee's address was [redacted] but you've been trashed, or attempted to be trashed, because your intelligence and diligence have landed you a temporary association with a well-known, well-stereotyped university.

Anyway, although it's interesting what Stein said about Germany, I'm not interested. Or, is it: interested, not interesting?

This is from BREWSIE & WILLIE, after the second war resulting from the first war:

"And it's all because everybody just greedy wants to manufacture more than anybody can buy, well than you know what happened after the last war we cut off immigration, we hoped to sell enough to foreign countries, foreign countries didn't want to buy and we had the depression. My God yes, said Jo, we did have the depression. Yes and then we had to fight, and yes we won but we used up a hell of a lot of raw material and now we got to make a club to make those foreign countries buy from us, and we all got to go home to make some more of those things that use up the raw material and that nobody but our own little population wants to buy. Oh dear, said Brewsie."

Now that's interesting. But as interesting as the following from Walt Whitman (who is known to be naked on a Website somewhere)?:

Resist much, obey little;
Once unquestioning obedience, once fully enslaved;

Perhaps this is the spirit Stein sought to convey to the American officer?

later,

daniel bouchard

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

79. Rachel Levitsky

Re: From the "Adventures of Yaya and Grace"

Fri 3 Apr 1998

Yaya’s Rapture
for Carla Harryman

"The things you think are funny"

In a crowded room. Chaos. Books and flies. Books fly. Pastels, flourescents, named after birds and Disney movies as far back. The city, until. Berlin. Kruschev wants it. Now! In the west, feeding their addiction for metaphor, they watch as closely as they can. They believe. They make it religion, craving a national pastime to which they’ll all know the tune. Humming as mediation. Familial. Fat. Flat-chested androgyne amazonians. Spandex, then lycra, more washable, evaporates your sweat. AT$T destroys the last real phone booths on West End Ave. The beginning of a new century. Fortuitous. Premonitory. Still trying to make friends. There we were.

Grace loved all the different houses, imagined them as names for her identity. She was incorrect. She couldn’t take them along, in or outside her skin, then fading, the pores becoming too large. Drilling holes into her various parts. By now conventional. It was the beginning of a new century. “Djuna, you still alive in there?” “Do I look like someone with a Driver’s License?” I wanted to touch her, I was sure she could have been the driver and would let her drive me anywhere. I’d parallel park for her whenever she got nervous. Instead, I forgot she was there and continued window shopping. Impulse spending. You could argue I don’t need another bottle of perfume. Perhaps Djuna watched, she was known to time travel, and was expert at being several places at once. Here the speakers of the language have the hardest time. What to call it, in, on, at, or near. I know I’m fantasizing and it’s not nice to metamorphose an esteemed and ancient women of modernist letters into a voyeur solely for the sake my sexual pleasure. Yet, how would she know unless it is true this is what happened? I could see both the horse drawn buggies and the helicopters, shipping water from anywhere, desalinated as a contrived plea, forgive us please for dumping all that toxic waste. The shit still smells. Every Jew will tell you that in great detail and I can say this because I am one. No reason to hide here, you’d question me either way. Even if she didn’t have an issue with Jews, I don’t think she’d go for me in any of my stages. She might say my difference was attractive, most certainly in the wee hours. They say if the hand fits. Well, it fit and that mattered. It wasn’t the chaos we minded, it was his beauty got us. We no longer needed to argue about the forms. They made attractive envelopes. Returned to senders. Instructions included.

instructions:

there is one cunt for every penis, those manufactured in the latter day. a lump for every breast. post mammogram. post paid. united we post. the heart dripping. the bleeding heart. someone said that. duh, this is a game, I made it up though have little to do with the rules. they keep changing. pick a city any city. no, pop. at least 100 thousand. ok, so you have this city in mind. find the main road. where the pedestrians cross and by what means they know it is their turn. if it’s a lit up little white man you lose.

two. pick a city any city. no, at least 49 languages spoken. no divisions for doggerel.

three. pick a moon. any moon. wait, there has to be a neighbor and a dog. no french.

four. pick a woman. any woman.

air travel. rules: free miles are earned. if you are a woman, by each penis. if you are a man, you fly free until you contract a venereal disease. if it’s HIV, it’s you who has to find the cause, you get three women’s bodies free--for your experiments. the fourth is of a goat. and a strict vegetarian diet but for once a year when you will bathe in a pool of pork. if you contract trichinoses you go to b.f. skinner. he’ll put you in a box.

next. pamplona with ernest hemingway. brett will serve the drinks. the first human to grab her ass will turn into a tower of babel. the second will speak every language. the third spills her words over the mast. when the church bells ring, there is a race to the beginnings. the first one who gets there dies. all the points are divided in the manner of paint-by-number. if you are the first to run out of pink you must lie about everything you’ve understood about your character up until that moment. the trick is that everyone will believe you though with a piercing cackle you tell them it’s a ruse. in this game there is no need for the truth. it goes underappreciated and has nothing to do with your salary.

↑ Index

80. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

Passages 5: Eigner Issue

Fri 3 Apr 1998

Biog. hard to repeat many times. Inconclusive and gusty as it's likely to be. The Descent Beckons. The sky is still right and left. Born palsied, I have prosthetic hands when it comes to mail etc. wired through rubegoldberg brains. Dont know wht prt of biog shd be booked.

—Larry Eigner, Contributor's Note in Poems Now,
ed. Hettie Jones (Kulchur Press, 1966)

Announcing PASSAGES 5: the Larry Eigner Issue, edited by Benjamin Friedlander and Christopher Funkhouser. This great issue of PASSAGES filled with tremendous work. Now available as the "Selected Resource" at the Electronic Poetry Center. http://writing.upenn.edu/epc A limited # of printed copies are also available @ $5 each from Passages.

↑ Index

81. k. lederer
Re: Tired chit-chat
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Mark--

I disagree. All discourses are NOT interchangeable in this way--

I'm not talking about mad libs here--I'm talking about discourses that require binary and oppositional structures--with one of the binaries marked and one of them unmarked ("normal").

Also: as per your apparent accusation that I haven't "proved" my points, or that I have otherwise shied away from discussing my views.... what?

I think I've said a lot about my feelings as a women (among other things) in the world of poetry.

I have not been making claims for anyone else--

And I never said anything that ever ever implied that men needed "translators" (or v.v.) for women's writing.

I think you're crazy if you think the social context within which poetry is written has NO analyzable effect on actual poetry.

Why must I say that women's writing is "different" across the board for it to be valid that perhaps some writing by women could be analyzed in part through a gender lens?

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

82. nyu.edu
NYC Reading
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Michael Heller Reading at NO MORE

Monday, April 6th 6:30 PM

NO MORE is at 234 W. Broadway

(Sponsored by The Mad Alex Foundation)

↑ Index

83. Keston Sutherland
Re: no she was right
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Gee Billy, what a strange rejoinder. If I'm threatened I'd not noticed but hey that'd of course explain my remarks, historically grounded though they are. Your belief that the Germans were incredibly obedient however - well, I don't know; are you under the impression that the Germans voted for Auschwitz, or is there some other less concrete teleology that took the quick route from Germanness to genocide? Why would I want to shine her shoes? YOU seem pretty obedient to me, to the usual default inflation of an obvious sentiment: "TEACH THEM blah blah". And it would have been an American to say so, naturlich. Were the world that simple. And not ANOTHER resentful gripe about Harvard? I've just got here - what is it with poeple on this list and Harvard?

Maybe you could consider how your note, though making the usual groaning and slavering noises re: Stein (whom I actually love), might be seriously offensive to Germans? Or is that irrelevant?

↑ Index

84. Keston Sutherland
Re: no she was right
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Dan

thanks for helping out re: the ol' Harvard "kick me" sign that seems to be cut and pasted to my inbox, what is it with some of these people, I didn't insult Billy Little - just disagreed with him - and then I get this message basically telling me to fuck off. Not sure how to.

k

↑ Index

85. henry gould
Re: 4/4/theses
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Don, who's thesis is dangers, Mark's or mine? I couldn't tell. They are 2 sides of the same coin. Poetry is didactic. Mark's concern for justice/utopia is the flip side of the idea of the world being inherently poetic - i.e. the concern for "reading" the world as it is. By inherently poetic I'm not talking about Pollyanna lala-land - poetry is epic/tragic as well as joyful/beautiful. I thought that was what Michael Corbin was saying too - as well as what you said. I just think sometimes as talkers- about-poetry we don't give poetry enough credit. We're always saying stuff like experiment is liberating, dashes are masco-feminine, blah blah. Poetry when it hits the fan is a correlated turbine turbulence - don't get in its way. It's almost as powerful as reality. Maybe this is what you meant by "telling stories". and what Rachel Democracy meant when she picked up Ishmael off Q's coffin, or something like that. - henry Gould

↑ Index

86. Alan Myouka Sondheim
perhaps from Alan (fwd)
Fri 3 Apr 1998

-

Do I live in Japan? Have I lived anywhere?
Do I wander in a desert? Is this Shumer, Akkadia?
In Akkadia I have seen ghosts; in Japan as well.
I am inundated by ghosts. I am inundated by ghosts.
They do not speak to me; I do not hear voices.
They are invisible to me; I do not see wraiths, uncanny shadows, the glimpse of drawn faces,
in the middle of a howling night.
They push and pull at my body. They pull it apart.
They pull at the mind leg arm penis. I do not know if they have eyes or mouths.

Shall there be more? Their limbs form breasts on my body. Their lips form cavities against my throat.
They break my back with swollen flesh. My back has been broken in many places. I am told my eyes have bright red light, one can see for meters around my skin. They take my skin. I think they say "This is JNJ," over and over again, I understand them. They sway on my knees; my nipples are hard with inner curves of other fingers.

Their lips

(this is not good either; there's no broken conceptualism. don't I worry about the limbs, they might not fit on. but that shouldn't affect the list, these limb problems, but then again there's just writing.)

↑ Index

87. Patrick F. Durgin

address request}

Fri 3 Apr 1998

If anyone has a contact for Kimberly Reifel, please back-chan.thnx
Patrick F. Durgin

```
`
`
`
`  ----->*<-----
`  K E N N I N G|
`  anewsletterof|
`  poetry&poetic|
`  s418BrownSt.#|
`  10IowaCityIA5|
`  2245USA\/\/\/|
```

↑ Index

88. morpheal

Re: O B D Ants

Fri 3 Apr 1998

> This is from BREWSIE & WILLIE, after the second war resulting from the first war:
>
> "And it's all because everybody just greedy wants to manufacture more than anybody can buy, well than you know what happened after the last war we cut off immigration, we hoped to sell enough to foreign countries, foreign countries didn't want to buy and we had the depression. My God yes, said Jo, we did have the depression. Yes and then we had to fight, and yes we won but we used up a hell of a lot of raw material and now we got to make a club to make those foreign countries buy from us, and we all got to go home to make some more of those things that use up the raw material and that nobody but our own little population wants to buy. Oh dear, said Brewsie."

Alright, I will bite on this one....and be the devil's advocate....

WWII was initially a result of industrialists, not a political party led by the tragic-comic figure of Hitler. Hitler was as silly figure-head, chosen because he was extremely brain washable and controllable. Look to who profited from armaments manufacture and you have the answer as to what it was about. Even the part about having a scapegoat to blame for all the financial blood sucking that went on. I think we do have to wonder how much foreign influence spurred on Germany such that it led to the ultimate chain of events....including the diminishing of Stalinist Russia's ability to present any really strong competition for a long while after the exhaustion brought on by the war against Germany's exhausting and misdirected efforts to conquer Russia.

Now there is not much chance of a depression, or even a significant recession, in Europe for years ahead from now.....

1). Eastern Europe, former Warsaw Pact and Russia, are very needy and greedy.

2). Europe does not want America to be the ONLY significant military power. The E.C. definitely does NOT want a "one empire" world and to be a colony of that one empire.

So we can now expect Europe arming itself to the teeth. Deja-vu, but for very different reasons than before.

> Now that's interesting. But as interesting as the following from Walt Whitman (who is known to be naked on a Website somewhere)?:
>
> Resist much, obey little;
> Once unquestioning obedience, once fully enslaved;

The electric rule is that resistors burn out, eventually, every time they revolt, though it consumes a lot of voltage to do it.....

Though I do tend to agree with Whitman on that....in terms of following any totalistic ideology. There that comment is definitely appropriate. I wonder that quote says about Whitman's time period, around the time of the Civil War and living in the North ? Lincoln as the figure head of a tending towards tyranny or totalism nation ? Interesting possibility.

After all, the North saw the South becoming more powerful, more industrialized, and decided to put a stop to it. They wanted cheap slave labour for their own factories, except that they paid "subsistence" wages rather than providing shacks and plots of land on plantations. Also, what is the difference between a slave and a domestic servant ? Often, in those days, no difference whatsoever, except that many a servant could not afford a home to go to, and slaves all had somewhere to refer to as their home. Odd that the southern slave owner was expected to take good care of his property and not abuse it. It was essentially expected of him by his society and most complied to the standards of that time period. Slaves were too essentially too costly to abuse. Servants in the north were inexpensive. There was only a very small wage to be paid, and if one servant sickened or did not perform as expected of them, they were simply gotten rid of and replaced without capital loss.

In the north the northern factory owner did not have that kind of requirement placed upon him as to caring for his slaves, either. The abuses upon coloured workers, and others, including child labour, in Northern factories certainly rival anything the southern owners of slaves ever did. So what was the civil war about ? Emancipation ? Not likely. More slaves for the north, except double speak did not allow that word to be used anymore, and industrial supremacy, wiping out the growing southern competition.

When we place Whitman in that scenario, it looks a lot different. I think we need to read Whitman's words in that light, and see what they then tell us about that time period in which he lived.

Peace.

M.

↑ Index

89. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Katy: Yes, I'd be crazy, etc., but I was talking about a particular claim, that the language itself, not the concerns, is somehow gender-marked (whether the markers are male or female--there, I've marked both poles now). It might be informative to investigate how various female writers have indicated gender when using a male as mouthpiece (the aforementioned Brontes, Willa Cather, etc.) and vice versa. Maybe this has been done?

At 08:19 AM 4/3/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Mark--
>
>I disagree. All discourses are NOT interchangeable in this way--
>
>I'm not talking about mad libs here--I'm talking about discourses that >require binary and oppositional structures--with one of the binaries >marked and one of them unmarked ("normal").
>
>Also: as per your apparent accusation that I haven't "proved" my points, >or that I have otherwise shied away from discussing my views.... what?
>
>I think I've said a lot about my feelings as a women (among other things) >in the world of poetry.

>
>I have not been making claims for anyone else--
>
>And I never said anything that ever ever implied that men needed
>"translators" (or v.v.) for women's writing.
>
>I think you're crazy if you think the social context within which poetry >is written has NO analyzable effect on actual poetry.
>
>Why must I say that women's writing is "different" across the board for it >to be valid that perhaps some writing by women could be analyzed in part >through a gender lens?
>
>Best,
>Katy
>
>

↑ Index

90. dbkk

Standard's standards

Fri 3 Apr 1998

> From: SSSCHAEFER <[redacted]>
> Subject: Dodie chat
>
> I have read your writing and much of the rest of the writing on this list and many others. Nice condescension, though. Excellent technique. And of course all writing is about technique at some point. Not sure why you're so hostile to my questions. I thought I was sincerely trying to get someone to help me think about these issues and I think it is happening.

Standard,

As I read your post you were saying that your fears were coming true, that we were talking about content instead of form, and then you brought me up as an example of a content-monger. I felt this was very condescending--if you'd used someone else as the bad example, I'd surely had not gotten so invested. This is different than just bringing up the issue of form and asking a question.

I don't believe in this big division of content and form anyway, as if form were the holy spirit and content the corrupt rotting flesh that needs to be powdered and perfumed . . . Remember the old word logocentrism, maybe we should revive it here.

If I misunderstood you I am sorry, but I just read bell hooks latest book when I had stomach flu. She's infected me. Even though I have lots of problems with the Wounds of Passion (and want to send Nate Mackey a bouquet of roses in sympathy), it does make one think about the gaze, the white gaze, the male gaze. I keep thinking about her incessant (and irritating from my perspective) cataloguing of people--everybody is introduced as a type: racial, gender, professional, class, judgements of attractiveness, personality flaws in these long lists of adjectives. It all sounds so reductive, but by doing this she's breaking down the idea of a "norm." No one gets by without a list of adjectives clinging to them, no one is the norm.

Dodie

↑ Index

91. Keston Sutherland
Re: O B D Ants
Fri 3 Apr 1998

M says:

WWII was initially a result of industrialists, not a political party led by the tragic-comic figure of Hitler. Hitler was as silly figure-head, chosen because he was extremely brain washable and controllable. Look to who profited from armaments manufacture and you have the answer as to what it was about.

I don't think this is true at all. Industrialists (some) may have believed themselves to have made this choice up until about 1933-4, but it rapidly became clear thereafter that their role in a fully integrated state would be entirely dictated by the government (as was in fact the case). Funk and then Speer directed all industrial production, even ordering that many factories abandon their regular output and concentrate exclusively on the production of a single item. Industry in Germany was centralized and improved -in order that- the war effort could be sustained, and not the reverse.

k

↑ Index

92. Keston Sutherland
Re: your mail
Fri 3 Apr 1998

---

but I was talking about a particular claim, that the language itself, not the concerns, is somehow gender-marked

It might be interesting to compile a list of neologisms coined by women and to compare that to those coined by men?

↑ Index

93. Keston Sutherland
a poem by Andrea Brady
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Vanish

Peace where the wound is, flapping like a burnt egg, loose with bubbles whose odour bursts to spread gold over fawn spikes of ambition. It makes nothing of me, nor of the face frozen in wood.

Process, relished, washed carefully in tide, fasting at corners with ceaselessness. Wish to seep gaping into that burst flesh and be cell of its kite-like body, but patently do not.

Instead, to feast on saw grass, as a slim hope that all curricular indications and graded projects do not stop. But that ceaselessness seems different, a cut to limp the bright open flow.

In hoping proof, it's mentioned, and when the sun turns collapses like atoms of an open flower, wrecking all solar provisions. Peace which drew me to its bright flesh pulps and pulses without verge or entry.

↑ Index

94. Mark Weiss
Re: your mail
Fri 3 Apr 1998

It might be, at that.

I'm getting a little annoyed at this game. Anybody's message can be treated with substitutions, which would quickly turn this list into a five-year-old's shouting match. My own preference when not dealing with issues raised or slighting the sender is silence, into which I retreat.

At 02:05 PM 4/3/98 -0500, you wrote:
> but I was talking about a particular claim,
>that the language itself, not the concerns, is somehow gender-marked
>

>
>
>
>It might be interesting to compile a list of neologisms coined by women >and to compare that to those coined by men?
>
>

↑ Index

95. MAYHEW
agacE de ce long bavardage inutile
Fri 3 Apr 1998

A thought experiment: Refer to women poets simply as poets and call male poets "men poets." Teach a course on American poetry reading H.D. Stein, Howe, Plath, etc... include a few men poets as tokens if you get complaints from the male students. Spend some time earnestly discussing the masculinism of the token men poets, then return to the more universal concerns of the "poets." In other words, treat the masculine as the linguistically marked gender. Try it for just a day. I wrote an article in which I used the terms "poet" and "male poet"--it was not all that difficult.

(I missed something--why are all the gender posts listing their subject as "idle chitchat"? The title of my post, a line from Roussel, is an ironic reference to this.)

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

96. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: agacE de ce long bavardage inutile
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Where could I find this "male poet" article? -- sounds interesting

E. Hatmaker

↑ Index

97. Hzinnes
announcement
Fri 3 Apr 1998

---

3 April l998

Harriet Zinnes reads her poetry for the Spoken Word Program celebrating National Poetry Month at the Brooklyn Museum of Art on Saturday, April l8, at 5 p m. 2nd Floor: The Prints, Drawings, and Photographs Gallery. (200 Eastern Parkway)

Free with Museum admission.

↑ Index

98. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Nathaniel Mackey's Mpls Visit
Fri 3 Apr 1998

---

april 2 nathaniel mackey read from his prose and poetry at the university of minnesota, to a full house of students, faculty and community folks. he started w/ a section of one of the letters from his epistolary novel Djbot Baghostus's Run, describing the performance of the fictional band the Mystic Horn Society, which reaches apotheosis in a blend of paganini's caprice #9 and albert ayler's ghosts that takes off and becomes its own thing. then he read poems from School of Udhra and not-yet-published work. it was exciting, rhythmically jazz, very complex syntactically (and of course semantically) meditations around absence, art, aspiration (yeah, lots of alliteration). then today he lectured my class, American Poetry Since 1940, on HD's influence on his work. It was terrific. I guess he'll be giving the same paper in chicago in a coupla weeks. highly recommended; dense, duncan-mediated, cecil taylor thrown in as well as kamau brathwaite and oceanic consciousness ("tidalectics"), good info for those of us in the midwest. tonight he reads again, at the Nomad Gallery in St Paul, to "the community," i.e. not the university, though of course there will be overlap. it's been a pleasure to have him here and in case there is anyone on the list who has not yet had the reading or cd-listening pleasure (though there are probably very few of you who now fall into that category), by all means check out his titles.

↑ Index

99. morpheal
Re: O B D Ants
Fri 3 Apr 1998

> I don't think this is true at all. Industrialists (some) may have believed themselves to have made this choice up until about 1933-4, but it rapidly became clear thereafter that their role in a fully integrated state would be entirely dictated by the government (as was in fact the case). Funk and then Speer directed all industrial production, even ordering that many factories abandon their regular output and concentrate exclusively on the production of a single item. Industry in Germany was centralized and improved -in order that- the war effort could be sustained, and not the reverse.

I responded backchannel to this.

Whitman is the poetics thread.

↑ Index

100. Karen Kelley
For Juliana Spahr
Fri 3 Apr 1998

Sorry, all, but the email address I have is wrong, so:

Hi Juliana,

I just mentioned chain on a list I'm on & people want more info: is the info at EPC correct?

annual, $10 per issue payable: UB Foundation

Jena/you @ 215 Ashland Ave
Buffalo, NY 14222

Hope you're well.

Karen

↑ Index

101. Rachel Levitsky
Re: agacE de ce long bavardage inutile
Sat 4 Apr 1998

Jon--

Gee--I always thought it'd be so excellent to put together an anthology with exactly that idea. I guess the cats out of the bag now.

--RDL

P.S. Just coming back from Harry Mathew lecture/reading at DU where he discussed the possibilities of translation vis a vis Oulipo models and said that the pleasure in the random applications with rules was the same as a child's (I heard 'boy's') love for "hard games with tough rules." (I never did like those much as I'm sure many of the boys out there did not, I don't know if I believe it's a gender thing but it certainly comes in handy as a graceful way out.) Later read a bunch of oulipo-inspired works, very vast, global, temporal (Cronogram for 1997, 1997 words--all roman numeral letters translated into number, but for I, of which there were a specific/relevant amount, I forget how many).

↑ Index

102. morpheal
Re: alligators, dense fog and Scala piano
Sat 4 Apr 1998

> -never though Senor Blake could be such fun-so how is it out there in poetical land-
> When the dust settles out, the clouds lift and people start sifting and sorting thru the remains of this century -people are going to remember some great thinkers of the 20th century.
> Teenagers everywhere are going to carry copies of Leslie Scalapino's Defoe under there arms and read together in groups on stage and in alleys.

One possible alternative scenario is that they might be forbidden to read anything other than technical and business journals. Those who can afford it might be able to purchase bootleg copies of 20th century poets, from underground sources, but the penalties might be extremely harsh.....

M.

↑ Index

103. Karen and Trevor
mei-mei & elizabeth
Sat 4 Apr 1998

Kelsey St Press presents a reading:

Mei-mei Berssenbrugge
&
Elizabeth Robinson

Tuesday April 7
@

Canessa Park Gallery
San Francisco

↑ Index

104. Ellay Phillips
Re: a poem by Andrea Brady
Sat 4 Apr 1998

Thank you for posting the poem by Andrea Brady. It is a lush, sensuous and smart piece of work.

Ellay Phillips

↑ Index

105. Keston Sutherland
Re: a poem by Andrea Brady
Sat 4 Apr 1998

On Sat, 4 Apr 1998, Ellay Phillips wrote:

> Thank you for posting the poem by Andrea Brady. It is a lush, sensuous and smart piece of work.
>
> Ellay Phillips

Thanks for reading it - I'll post a few more. I do think that she is an important and distinct writer, whose work is not merely thoughtful but is real -thought-, and whose new work is a mediation and a reengineering of the possibility of several kinds of expression, and of several kinds of sentiment. Hopefully the other poems I post will bear this out! Her new book is to be published by John Kinsella's SALT press this month.

yrs, k

↑ Index

106. Keston Sutherland
Another by Andrea Brady
Sat 4 Apr 1998

lying low in pusillanimity of fear

Wagons decked with excuse drew past in a quick three-frame slide. Air, moist, drifted to my window, shut, and without rumbling at its ignominious discharge, we lay white sheets on our Bermudan bed.

How we think of slashing flags of a perfect tense. Crisp after the token fever seated on that vast prospect of flatness, my corpse wills itself upward in honest parody.

In objectiveness of denser gas, racked across a few hundred metres it anticipated a penultimate lecture of regret.

Lay me on a hard board. So if I might reckon the total silence of will; but,
a panic of it unable to trim me yet, back through the hazard zone under its orange circles, regret and pointedness inflating till I verge in the bed's contracting pupil.

↑ Index

107. Wendy Kramer
tired chit
Sat 4 Apr 1998

---

or, this tired lady, if you prefer... going to work, and lurking, and generally corresponding take energies, as well as give 'em, i s'pose, but so much of interest to comment on:

1. to whomever posted about fatimah tuggar a big thank you!! you've recruited a new fan. went to see those two exhibits in nyc you posted about, and then today (couple weeks later) went to see her talk at the exhibit "keeping track of the joneses." some things i found inneresting:

that she collages her collages digitally --oops, i mean on the computer, not digitally like fingers. but also that many of her pieces use "real" objects--a metal box with photos; cushions with photos of family members on them, around a digital-image round collage of an eating mat filled with products centrifugally (cant spell that) shooting; one collage was slide-projected onto a bath of yoghurt in a clay pot! you could barely make out the women holding pots collage in it, but once you made it out, you couldnt not see it!

2. in response to the "how can you tell?" gender thread, well, i have to say that i dunno what you kin tell a woman or a man by what her/his writing/artwork looks and sounds like (naw!), but i _can_ say, for example, that when i first saw that post about tuggar i didnt know she was a woman, and when i visited the website and somehow found out, well it made a big 'ol adrenalin difference to little chit me. not sure all of why, but it's a sexual feeling, & too a role-model thing. not that i'm not turned on by poetry by men, and shit yeah, many men are also my role models, but...there it is. some kinda excitement. and relief and green-light GO! You TOO could do... like dodie (i think it was) said but in diffrent context thank god for kathy acker. it's been important for me to be able to see people about whom i could say yeah, "what SHE said" or "i wanna grow up to be like HER." i mean, i woulda loved gertrude stein no matter what her plumbing, but her being a lesbian made me--a late-teen-kid then-- her loving-faithful.

3. oh yeah, one more thing. in the basement floor of the new museum gallery where we saw fatimah tuggar, we saw also a flea circus exhibit by another woman, Maria Fernanda Cardoso--complete with video performance of said circus, wherein the artist reigned Queen, along with related banners, placards, and glassed-in preserved fleas in progress of death-defying feats, such as tightrope-walking and getting shot outta cannonballs! o marvelous mayhem! amusement! what technical skill! flea circus-ing has a whole history (as do fleas in human society) about which i hadnt ('til now) hadda clue.

↑ Index

108. Keston Sutherland
booksbyab
Sun 5 Apr 1998

A few poems by Andrea Brady available:

open bond	(Barque 96)	$3.00
Of Sere Fold	(Barque 97)	$3.00
Cranked Foil	(Poetical Histories 97)	$3.00

The Poetical Histories piece is a lovely letterpress long poem. I have these books here with me (I am Barque), and can send them pronto. E- me.

More of her poetry can be found at jacket.zip.com.au (#4)

Good week to all, k

↑ Index

109. Keston Sutherland
ab's verses
Sun 5 Apr 1998

---

sorry, I meant jacket ---#3--- k

↑ Index

110. Tom Beard
Fw: Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown
Sun 5 Apr 1998

This is a message from our sysadmin: it looks almost like one of those Oulipo word-substitution games. Since we're in the weather business, all of our servers have meteorological-sounding names, which can result in approximate surrealism when read by outsiders.

> It has become necessary to restart Hail. We will be shutting Hail down on Tuesday Evening (7th of April), at 5:00pm. This means that Thunder will failover to Rain. (PCs may notice a failure, and then carry on as usual - Macs will be able to access files by connecting to Rain rather than Hail.) Hail will be up and running by 5:30ish.

I remember when the web was young, and many universities here seemed to have Tolkein-derived names for their servers: gandalf.otago.ac.nz amd so forth. This probably reflected the reading habits of Comp Sci students more than anything else, but resulted in some odd moments. I was wondering whether anyone else had any examples of the poetics of computing nomenclature?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

111. Keston Sutherland possible part 5 of on the occasion a repast
Sun 5 Apr 1998

5.

Right then as a shredded root lacking information it all set to glow up, put tran quil as a case

to evade foraging re: slash-up and active regret by a stream of burns and wood-gas, there is no time everything fails at her prop er acid spoof rate not shrunk now, graced with acquittal and the occasion is blind as a knife to split

or jog back, former sun light bracing her loth to surmise and permitted and she's discharged just so that she may corrupt on a breeze and line, then as it sped
pre-taxed over my skin / torched lacquer driven by each of these softened lights into service, flutter of frayed re dress-hopes pay day brick in the eye of her, scrape her new say-so sickened and wild from that pigment wait there is time, trilled and fact stuffed bales
of it and the gentle love backlog's doused all over in abated danger, she can always kiss at my throat cement and row out arm in arm, on our splinter-trial as a riftless proof of choice.
What does she care. Spare her, lay her down, case by case.

↑ Index

112. david bromige

re : Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown

Sun 5 Apr 1998

Tom Beard's header until I read his message was going to be, I expected, an explanation mock or authentic of the Silence of the List--that either due to bad weather or Passover, people werent posting, and whats more, Tom Beard ("Hail, Shutdown!") was either pleased or pretending-pleased about this.

So his actual message, while interesting, made me feel a sense of anti-climate..

Bowering, generally as well-informed as he is modest, b-c'd me & said the List was this quiet because everybody was reading his new book, _Piccolo Mondo_ , which is up on the web at Coach House Books.

Perhaps. All I know is that I mourn the effusions of the distant past, the maelstrom surrounding the worth of Tom Clark's poetry & morality, the high tides of love-poetics abutting St. Valentine's Day, the lightning-bolts of Kent Johnson's persecution--twas an Age of Gold, is this an Age of Lead?-- A Swain.

↑ Index

113. George Bowering
re : Thunder Failover/Hail Shutdown
Sun 5 Apr 1998

Unlike Mr Bromige, author of the Web novel Piccolo Mondo, I am not bothered by a silent net. It gives me a chance to (1) answer some of the e-mail from last October, and (2) make dinner for my wife Angela.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

114. John Tranter
The Age of Plastic
Mon 6 Apr 1998

David Bromige in a recent post posed the query:

"All I know is that I mourn the effusions of the distant past, the "maelstrom surrounding the worth of Tom Clark's poetry & morality, "the high tides of love-poetics abutting St. Valentine's Day, "the lightning-bolts of Kent Johnson's persecution-- "twas an Age of Gold, is this an Age of Lead?-- "

No, David; the Age of Plastic. My friend the late John Forbes put it thus:

"The Age of Plastic" (copyright the Estate of John Forbes 1998)

after Ovid

The dictionary definition of change
means your face looks different in the water & even tho'you'd feel at home down there
each moment spent at one remove, anywhere
between the mammal & the sponge,
you know you'd miss a particular cassette
idle tears or a glass of gin
& be irked by the serious options
a changeless life presents e.g. 'Minor
poet, conspicuously dishonest' would look funny
on a plaque screwed to a tree

while the blue trace of your former life
suggests an exception
generations will end up chanting; for them
the parts of speech will need explaining
                not lakes or sleep or sex,
or the dumb poets of the past
who, being lyrical, missed out on this.

==========
 from
 John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
 tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
   http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
 Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

115. david bromige
re the age of plastic
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Thanks to John Tranter for posting this nifty poem by the late John Forbes. "Minor poet, conspicuously dishonest" indeed would look funny, even screwed into a brick wall--the brick wall of the building I was born in, for instance. And it doesnt stop there. It's been amusing imagining which friends and enemies' birthplaces a like plaque could be attached to--who would be able to take it in fun, and who wouldnt.

It is the case I am too often flippant. "Plastique", which ours is also the Age of, is nothing to laugh at. Persons undone by credit card debt likewise. Then there's the difficulty we have disposing of plastic once we've had enough of it.

But Forbes' poem had more than that sentence to it. The "parts of speech" bit for instance. Who was John Forbes and why havent I heard of him?

John Tranter, are you the man who played my ukelele 25 years ago? David

↑ Index

116. Wolsak
query to poetics list
Mon 6 Apr 1998

I need help finding ground and/or e-addresses for the following people:

Fanny Howe

Susan Wheeler

Marjorie Welish

Elaine Equi

Lydia Davis

Brenda Hillman

Any assistance you can lend in this matter will be very helpful. Thanks.

Tom Beckett
[redacted]

↑ Index

117. r. drake
Re: SPD
Mon 6 Apr 1998

[redacted]
>Anyone have an 800 number for Small Press Distribution?
>
>Thanks.
>
>Burt Kimmelman
>[redacted]

↑ Index

118. Burt Kimmelman
SPD
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Anyone have an 800 number for Small Press Distribution?

Thanks.

Burt Kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

119. Jordan Davis
"open bond"
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Keston's posting Andrea Brady's poems' sent me back to her '96 chapbook, _Open Bond_. Here are some lines:

> so this mesh hardly horoscopes me > and cell line. still don't say, sallow chatter > of where it is and will be. a doppelganger's > a room for breachborn. here I and you > touch every ugly atom of the day, > like our first suckling, each hand-cell tender as > our share. you weaves our neural net for me:
> a metro remedy of the catholic announcement,
> yes to the haunt you under another heading.

and in case you thought she was not of _this world_:

> Snagged on chocolate donuts he stares down > the hearts of trees where isohedron ice > tandems branch to branch to chest.

If the list were not a "dry state" I am certain I would post her poem "Migration."

Ay! how strange a time that one misses another fifty beautiful poems if the one on watch is asleep.

break through bureaucratic resistance to take bold action. Gunter permanent international war crimes unlikely to produce concrete

Black is the beauty of the brightest day

↑ Index

120. Cadaly

Server and/or Printer Names

Mon 6 Apr 1998

A floor of Goldman Sachs had Disney characters. Bankers Trust had mostly Greek, Roman, and Nordic gods. I HAVE seen writers' names, but I don't remember where.

You could tell which business managers were alive by the names.

They're pretty much all numbers now.

Rgds,
Catherine Daly

↑ Index

121. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Server and/or Printer Names
Mon 6 Apr 1998

---

we used to have a scheme based on the Wizard of Oz, though the only ones I remember were EmeraldCity & Toto... the servers I work with now seem to have no scheme whatsoever, or only the remains of one - Choengmon (a beach in Vietnam), Alexandria, Alex, Chronos, Digilib...

somewhere on campus is a set of servers named for Swedish foods.

Cadaly says:
> You could tell which business managers were alive by the names.
> They're pretty much all numbers now.

as opposed to dust, presumably.
what could be more appropriate?

chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

122. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Server and/or Printer Names
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Catharine,

I like your email nick name, Cadaly. Whenever I look at it, I see, Calalily. Despite the D.

best,
Rachel Levitsky

↑ Index

123. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Oops!
Mon 6 Apr 1998

please scuze the last post. it was intended as backchannel.

RDL

↑ Index

124. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Harryette Mullen Author Page
Mon 6 Apr 1998

A Harryette Mullen author page is now available at the EPC. It is featured on the EPC home page
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
If anyone knows of material that should be linked to this page, or has essays, etc. you might want me to add to the page, please let me know at [redacted]
Thanks.

↑ Index

125. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: SPD
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:
>
> Anyone have an 800 number for Small Press Distribution?
>
> Thanks.
>
> Burt Kimmelman
> [redacted]

[redacted]

↑ Index

126. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Time changes (fwd)
Mon 6 Apr 1998

---

expand the hours
perhaps 22 will do in which case you can slide the rest around those two won't be missed you can have your time and beat it to the punch clock which doesn't mind putting out for a minute or 120 of them

keep it running past a couple of hours on the road let's go slide around

↑ Index

127. Charles Bernstein
Frank Kuensler reading
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Friends of the late poet Frank Kuensler read their own poetry and his

Tuesday, April 28, 8pm

Chez Albert
at Clemente Soto Velez 107 Suffolk Street (F train: Delancy)
info: [redacted]

If you are interested in participating give Emily Kuensler a call at the number above.

Further details will be posted at a later time.

↑ Index

128. Michael J. Kelleher
a l y r i c m a i l e r 3
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Attention Poets and Friends!

a l y r i c m a i l e r NUMBER 3 featuring:

Color

(An Essay)

by Eleni Sikelianos

is up and running at:

http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm

Eleni Sikelianos is currently the co-curator with Lisa Jarnot of the wednesday night reading series at St. Mark's. Her recent publications include _Poetics of the X_ (1995) _A Book of Ease/Unease_ (with artist Peter Cole) and _The Book of Tendons_ (Post-Apollo Press 1997). Forthcoming titles include _The Blue Coat_ (Trembling Ladders) and _The Lover's Numbers_ (Seeing Eye Books). She currently lives on the Isle Of Manhottoes where she co-edits Psalm 151.

Upcoming issues include an alyric prose issue featuring 1000's by Laird Hunt, to be followed by work from Heather Fuller, a sound file and text poem for three voices by Carrie Tocci, a critical isssue on the work of Ben Friedlander (critical submissions and queries welcome at the above e-mail address), and work by Heather Ramsdell.

Enjoy.

Mike

<HTML>
Attention Poets and Friends!

<P>a l y r i c m a i l e r   NUMBER 3 featuring:

<P>Color

<P>(An Essay)

<P>by Eleni Sikelianos

<P>is up and running at:

<P><A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm">http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm</A>

<P>Eleni Sikelianos is currently the co-curator with Lisa Jarnot of the wednesday night reading series at St. Mark's. Her recent publications include _Poetics of the X_ (1995) _A Book of Ease/Unease_ (with artist Peter Cole) and _The Book of Tendons_ (Post-Apollo Press 1997). Forthcoming titles include _The Blue Coat_ (Trembling Ladders) and _The Lover's Numbers_ (Seeing Eye Books). She currently lives on the Isle Of Manhottoes where she co-edits Psalm 151.

<P>Upcoming issues include an alyric prose issue featuring 1000's by Laird Hunt, to be followed by work from Heather Fuller, a sound file and text poem for three voices by Carrie Tocci, a critical isssue on the work of Ben Friedlander (critical submissions and queries welcome at the above e-mail address), and work by Heather Ramsdell.

<P>Enjoy.

<P>Mike</HTML>

----------EF66E0AF8854734C6A459BC3--

↑ Index

129. Burt Kimmelman
Re: SPD
Mon 6 Apr 1998

R. Drake, David K. et al.

Thanks for you help. got it!

burt

↑ Index

130. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Server and/or Printer Names
Mon 6 Apr 1998

At 11:21 AM 4/6/98, Rachel Levitsky wrote:
>Catharine,
>
>I like your email nick name, Cadaly. Whenever I look at it, I see, >Calalily. Despite the D.
>
>best,
>Rachel Levitsky

i see Kodaly, or rather hear it.

↑ Index

131. Ellay Phillips
Re: Another by Andrea Brady
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Thanks Keston Sutherland for the info about the work of Andrea Brady. Eye don't often encounter work that strikes me so on first experience-- the last time was a year ago when eye first saw/heard/ read the polymorphous stylings of Wendy Kramer, whose work is the most synaesthetic eye think eye have ever encountered in that it not only must be read but also viewed and heard in order to experience its full effect. Brady's work might not be visual, but it strikes more of the sensory imagination which eye am all for! Thanks again.

Ellay Phillips

↑ Index

132. laura and jeff

Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age

Mon 6 Apr 1998

---

oh dear...
poor nietzche again getting the blame that isn't his...
kinda like blamming the bible (which speaks out agsint violence, and for tolerance) for the crusades. it's the people interpreting who are to blame.
i guess we should note that if it wasn't for nietzsche there also wouldn't be modern art (including our beloved poetics) in the way we know it.
individuality... nihilistic questioning... etc. these are nietzche.
so: no. she was right (as she so often is).
too bad so few listen.
jeff.

>>how can we bring democracy to these germans, she didn't hesitate a second >>responding, "teach them disobediance!"
>
>
>
>well, she was wrong, wasn't she? Nietzsche tried to teach 'them' exactly >that, and became a textbook in the Third Reich. The nsdap were pretty >disobedient, all things considered (versailles, Munich putsch etc). "how >is it that a woman is the only genius of our age": it isn't. Maybe she >should have hesitated.
>

> Listen,
> if the stars are lit
> it means there is someone who needs it.
> It means it is essential
> that every evening
> at least one star should ascend
> over the crest of the building.

↑ Index

133. michael corbin
Re: Rose's mourning
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Keston Sutherland wrote:

> can I recommend Gillian Rose's excellent book > _Mourning Becomes the Law_ (Cambridge University Press), as a refreshed > and perfectly considerate address of many of the questions and attitudes > that are often taken for granted? Her term "holocaust piety" (her family > were Jewish exiles) has made me think --

I agree, provocative. Even though I don't share her hegelian hopes, she dissimulates not at all the darkness one can give over to without them hopes. I was haunted for a while by the books companion volume, _Love's Work: A Reckoning with Life_ when a friend, like Rose, faced their untimely death. Facing squarely, (a geometric truth? triangularly?), I guess.

I do think we try and live in that city between Athens and Jerusalem. Perambulating Potter's Field.

More, I was wondering (maybe needing, wanting to write) what is our Trauerspiel?

mc

↑ Index

134. Keston Sutherland
Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
Mon 6 Apr 1998

---

wasn't blaming nietzsche for anything, besides the question of Stein's right/wrongness turns neither on his repute nor on his achievement, regarding which I agree with you. Still, I believe that so offhand a remark, despite its obvious expandability and the circumstances of its occurrence, can hardly be 'right' given the complexity and significance of what it hopes to address. So we far western europeans and americans just 'teach them' to be disobedient, do we? What an arrogant confidence, what charmless and laconic esprit. Maybe she's right for the lover of politically sonorous epigrams, but for a nation of people? For the Germans? How the fuck can she be 'right'?

↑ Index

135. Karen Kelley
Alien thoughts
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Hi all,

This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?

Karen

↑ Index

136. k. lederer
Re: Alien thoughts
Mon 6 Apr 1998

I love the way Juliana Spahr depicts the effects of "alien" beings on our beings in her book RESPONSE (Sun & Moon, 1996). Notley has some new poems that deal with aliens (I think I saw them in GARE du NORD #2).

There are some scary books by Whitley Streiber--one of them is called COMMUNION and is very scary. I'm still afraid of the dark! (The most scary thing is that his aliens can "get you" even if someone else is in your bed--or even if there's a cat or dog around... They can put others into trances and stop time and stuff like that...).

The movie version, which stars Christopher Walken,is very scary--but also surprisingly philosophical in its approach and in its implications... I highly recommend it.....

Best,
Katy

On Mon, 6 Apr 1998, Karen Kelley wrote:

> Hi all,
>
> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, > perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?

>
> Karen

↑ Index

137. Keston Sutherland
Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
Mon 6 Apr 1998

besides, N. explicitly condemns "nihilistic" thinking as a sickness - it's one of the few things he's unequivocal about. To think that he gave us that as a gift is, surely, to misinterpret. Wouldn't the blameworthy interpretors have misinterpreted Stein's comment also?

↑ Index

138. laura and jeff
Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age
Mon 6 Apr 1998

well the arrogence lies with the silly person who asked the question.
but the answer is a good one. how do you get people to think? teach them to disobey, question, etc.
but we're all agreeing here i think, so this is basically fruitless.
been defeding nietzche to my wife so much lately that i guess i'm just in the habit.
=)
jeff.

>wasn't blaming nietzsche for anything, besides the question of Stein's >right/wrongness turns neither on his repute nor on his achievement, >regarding which I agree with you. Still, I believe that so offhand a >remark, despite its obvious expandability and the circumstances of its >occurrence, can hardly be 'right' given the complexity and significance of >what it hopes to address. So we far western europeans and americans just >'teach them' to be disobedient, do we? What an arrogant confidence, what >charmless and laconic esprit. Maybe she's right for the lover of >politically sonorous epigrams, but for a nation of people? For the >Germans? How the fuck can she be 'right'?
>

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

↑ Index

139. laura and jeff

Re: disobey: how is it that a woman is the only genius of our age

Mon 6 Apr 1998

---

i meant "nihilism" as a means to destroy in order to rebuid, which nietzche did support. this thinking eventually turned into existentialism, etc. etc.
blah blah.
=)
jeff.

>besides, N. explicitly condemns "nihilistic" thinking as a sickness - it's >one of the few things he's unequivocal about. To think that he >gave us that as a gift is, surely, to misinterpret. Wouldn't the >blameworthy interpretors have misinterpreted Stein's comment also?
>

Listen,
if the stars are lit
it means there is someone who needs it.
It means it is essential
that every evening
at least one star should ascend
over the crest of the building.

↑ Index

140. Steven Marks

Re: Server and/or Printer Names

Mon 6 Apr 1998

On Mon, 6 Apr 1998, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> At 11:21 AM 4/6/98, Rachel Levitsky wrote:
> >Catharine,
> >

> >I like your email nick name, Cadaly. Whenever I look at it, I see, > >Calalily. Despite the D.
> >
> >best,
> >Rachel Levitsky
>
> i see Kodaly, or rather hear it.
>
i see Caddy. The car? or the little girl in The Sound and the Fury?

↑ Index

141. Steven Marks
Re: Alien thoughts
Mon 6 Apr 1998

Try _Broken Images, Broken Selves: Dissociative Narratives in Clinical Practice_ (Brunner/Mazel), edited by Stanley Krippner and Susan Marie Powers. My friend, Susan, has an essay in it on Alien Abduction Narratives.

you might also want to try that controversial Harvard prof who counsels alien abductees. Can't remember his name. And i'm not picking on harvard.

best,
Steven

> On Mon, 6 Apr 1998, Karen Kelley wrote: >
> Hi all,
>
> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?
>
> Karen

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

142. John Tranter
John Forbes and ukeleles
Tue 7 Apr 1998

David Bromige wrote:

"But Forbes' poem had more than that sentence to it.
"The "parts of speech" bit for instance.
"Who was John Forbes and why havent I heard of him?
"John Tranter, are you the man who played my ukelele
"25 years ago? David"

John Forbes was a brilliant Australian poet and a friend of mine who died in late January, basically from living too fast. He reminded me of Ted Berrigan in too many ways. The line "Minor poet, conspicuously dishonest" is I believe a deliberate midquote of a line of Basil Bunting's, who said that he wanted as his epitaph the phrase"Minor poet, conspicuously honest." To an Australian ear, a phrase like that needed the piss taken out of it.

You can read more about John Forbes in the special memorial issue of my free Internet magazine Jacket, Issue Number 3, at the address below.
No, I've never played the ukelele. There is an Australian poet, Richard Tipping, who is noted for his gift of entertaining roomfulls of people on that instrument. Perhaps you're thinking of him.
best,
JT
from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

143. Christopher Reiner
Avec Books
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Posting this for Avec Books:

Avec Books congratulates Keith Waldrop, winner of the America Award in Literature (poetry category) for _Silhouette of the Bridge_ (Avec Books 1997).

New from Avec Books:

Jackknife & Light by Michelle Murphy

The poems of _Jackknife & Light_ (which was a finalist in the National Poetry Series of 1996) give their meanings up slowly, with a languorous precision and care. They aspire to-and demand-what Murphy defines as a unique "method of looking" and reading...and thinking.

Murphy's writings have appeared in a wide range of publications, from literary journals such as ZYZZYVA and Five Fingers Review to the cyber-mag, Hot-Wired. Her poem, "13 Versions of Surrender" (included in Jackknife & Light) has served as the basis of a song cycle by Bay Area composer Erling Wold, produced in Germany in 1997.

Paperback. 95 pages. List price: $10; ISBN: 1-880713-11-X. Distributed by Ingram Book Company (titles unlimited program); Baker & Taylor; Small Press Distribution and (as of mid-April) www.amazon.com

Advance praise for _Jackknife & Light_:

"Mouthed, Michelle Murphy's poems are mouthed onto the page. They're wet with the pears, apples, mangoes of an indeterminate landscape, part myth, part memory, "smoke on everything." The great tenderness of her sensibility! In Jackknife & Light's insistently meditative prose poems, where past and present overturn each other, and narrative skin is peeled into fragments and run-ons, Murphy brightlines human intimacies-between lovers, parents and children, the dead and the surviving-with a remarkable formal inventiveness. "If I had just one story," she writes, "I'd rather starve than have to live by it." Fortunately, she has enough imagination, strangeness, and verve to nourish us all. --Forrest Gander

"...Michelle Murphy's lucid chord-clusters ("mornings of straight edged white sky, the strict angles of a harpsichord") are instilled with the hush of ardor: a passion caught in the act of knowing itself." --Andrew Joron

"Tread carefully here," Michelle Murphy warns us, for "all is not exactly what it seems." Murphy's primary subject in this, her brilliant first book, is the beauty that becomes delicate "when suddenly & endlessly gone." Yet her poems, through their graceful confusions of secular and spiritual languages, are prayers that would take "our legacy of doubt" and somehow "make faith durable." Murphy provides us with "a method of looking" and listening that is intensely subjective and attuned to silence, as well as to the vagaries of a language that can "grow more feral than imagined." Her finales of seem describe a lost yet sayable past, and promise "the original shape of our future . . . a wilderness we never outgrow." -Susan Schultz

↑ Index

144. dbkk
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Karen Kelley wrote . . .

> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?

Katy's already suggested Spahr's book "Response" which is a good one. Let me recommend a novel "Mysterious Skin" by a young New Yorker Scott Heim, it is really terrific and is totally about the psychological appeal of aliens, why we need them, etc. When I was almost 30 I came to "realize" that I had been abducted by aliens briefly in childhood, and I drew upon this experience to write a memoir "Santa," which now appears in my book "Little Men" (which of course you don't want to miss in any case). I got some of it right, but Scott and Juliana get more of it.

--Kevin Killian <---- space "cadet" fanboy

↑ Index

145. Karen Kelley
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

I have _Santa_ right here on my desk (the Leave Books version). It's killer!

[redacted] wrote:

> Karen Kelley wrote . . .
>
> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to > us philosophically/psychologically?

>
> Katy's already suggested Spahr's book "Response" which is a good one. Let me recommend a novel "Mysterious Skin" by a young New Yorker Scott Heim, it is really terrific and is totally about the psychological appeal of aliens, why we need them, etc. When I was almost 30 I came to "realize" that I had been abducted by aliens briefly in childhood, and I drew upon this experience to write a memoir "Santa," which now appears in my book "Little Men" (which of course you don't want to miss in any case). I got some of it right, but Scott and Juliana get more of it.
>
> --Kevin Killian <---- space "cadet" fanboy

↑ Index

146. d.j. huppatz

Re: Alien thoughts

Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

hi karen

i've just started doing some research for a lecture i said i'd give about ufo design. my take is this: if ufos travel in space & time differently to our human craft, why do they need to be streamlined? given ufos jump between dimensions or whatever it is they're supposed to do, they don't really need to be streamlined. given the aliens, being so technologically advanced, could build their spaceships in an infinite number of ways (say, an art nouveau ship with a late victorian hatch patterning) why choose a design that is specifically american 1930s/40s? answer goes something like this: because that's when ufo sightings really took off - the late 1940s. so the design of their spaceships is modelled on the latest most "technologically advanced" design we can think of, streamlining.

from what little i know, in those days (the 40s), aliens were a lot friendlier. a typical abduction would be thus: farmer bob stops his pickup in the middle of nowhere one dark & stormy night when two tall blonde (hmmm!) venusians called him over for a ride in their spaceship. after a quick tour of the planet/solarsystem/galaxy, they'd lecture farmer bob about the dangers of nuclear energy, the environmental crisis and issues about world peace before dropping him off at the pickup again (hoping of course he would spread the word about these impt issues, after all someone has to do it now that god's dead).

it was generally not until the 80's that the aliens became nasty. interestingly, in the 1950s/60s/70s as rockets & telescopes reached out further into our solar system & beyond, so the aliens came from further afield. i guess it's no longer possible to claim to meet farmer bob's venusians. pity ...

danny melbourne

At 05:20 PM 4/6/98 -0700, Karen Kelley wrote:
>Hi all,
>
>This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable >dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about >before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that >I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials >must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not >particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, >perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to >us philosophically/psychologically?
>
>Karen
>
>

↑ Index

147. Miekal And
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> Subject: VATICAN ADMITS ON NATIONAL TELEVISION THAT EXTRATERRESTRIAL CONTACT IS REAL
>
> Monsignor Corrado Balducci, a Vatican theologian insider close to the P--e has gone on national Italian television five times in recent months to proclaim that extraterrestrial contact is a real phenomenon. The prelate announced that the Vatican is receiving much information about extraterrestrials and their contacts with humans from its Nuncios (embassies) in various countries, such as Mexico, Chile and Venezuela. Monsignor Balducci said that he is on a Vatican commission looking into extraterrestrial encounters, and how to cope with the emerging general realization of extraterrestrial contact.
> Balducci provided the Cat--lic Church's analysis of extraterrestrials, emphasizing that extraterrestrial encounters "are NOT demonic, they are NOT due to psychological impairment, they are NOT a case of entity attachment, but these encounters deserve to be studied carefully."
> Since Monsignor Balducci is a Vatican expert exorcist, and since the Cathol-- Church has historically demonized many new phenomena that were poorly understood, his proclaiming the Vatican's non-censure of these encounters is all the more remarkable.
> Balducci revealed to a visiting American clinical professional from > the Academy of Clinical Close Encounter Therapists, that the Vatican is closely following this phenomenon. Parallel information from MJ-12 scientist Dr. Michael Wolf suggests that the Vatican is concerned that it will have a major doctrinal updating situation on its hands when extraterrestrial contact becomes authoritatively announced by world governments over the next several years.

>
> Forwarded by Richard Boylan, Ph.D.
> Richard Boylan, Ph.D., LLC 2826 O Street, Suite 2, Sacramento, CA 95816, USA. [redacted] E-mail: [redacted] ; Primary website: http://www.ufonetwork.com/boylan/ Author: Close Extraterrestrial Encounters, Labored Journey To The Stars and Project Epiphany.

↑ Index

148. Henry
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Aliens were even friendlier in Biblical times. They helped this obscure tribe of nomads escape from enslavement in Pharaoh land and gave them lots of advice on keeping their act together while they wandered around in the desert eating "manna" (space flakes?). They gave them a little model of their ship called the "ark of the covenant" which was dangerous to touch (for humans, anyway) and sent out light rays and so on. But, as a card-carrying Martian myself, who gets his information from the other side of a singularity horizon, take it from me: ALIENS R US. Reporting in from East Atlantis, I remain...

- Henry "Captain Fatso" Gould [fat for a martian, that is]

↑ Index

149. Keston Sutherland
Re: John Forbes and ukeleles
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Bunting actually wrote (for an encyclopaedia-of-writers entry) "minor poet, not conspicuously dishonest"

I too admired John Forbes, he's sadly missed

k

↑ Index

150. Susan Wheeler
Reading Announcement
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Reading Thursday, May 9 at 8:00:

Susan Wheeler
Ann Lauterbach
Tom Disch
Richard Howard
George Bradley
David Lehman

(for publication of The Best of the Best American Poetry)

NYU Main Building
100 Washington Square East
Room 703

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

151. Gary Sullivan
Rain Taxi Vol. 3 No. 1
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Everyone:

The latest issue of Rain Taxi (Carolyn Kuebler, Randall Heath & Eric Lorber, eds.) is out. This issue's contents include:

Interview with Lynne Tillman (by Nikki Dillon), Robert Kelly on Charles Olson, essays on Bertolt Brecht's poetry & stories (by William Waltz), Patrick McGrath's fiction (by Kelly Everding), Doug Rice's essay "The Spirit of Ignorance (an open response to the United States Senate)," S.P. Healey's essay "Poets on Poetry," the next installment of the serialized cartoon "The New Life" (by yours truly), and reviews of dozens of books & graphic novels including Charles Alexander on Mei-mei Berssenbrugge & Kiki Smith's _Endocrinology_, Rickki Ducornet on Rosamond Purcell's _Special Cases_, David Matlin on Carolee Schneemann's _More Than Meat Joy_, Brian Evanson on Jim Jarmusch, John Yau & Harold Schechter's _Original Sin: the Visionary Art of Joe Coleman_ . . . and much, much more.

If your local bookstore carries this exceptional quarterly review, it's free. If not, you can subscribe (one year/4 issues $10, domestic, $20 international):

Rain Taxi
P.O. Box 3840
Minneapolis, MN 55403

http://www.raintaxi.com/

If you've made it to the bottom of this e-mail, & you'd like this latest issue, backchannel me your address & I'll be happy to send one along.

Be well,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

152. William Marsh
NYC in May
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

dear list

i'll be in the NYC area the week of May 16-23 / wondering if anyone has advance warning of events, readings, parties, etc. / much appreciate the help

bill marsh

- -
William Marsh
http://bmarsh.dtai.com
National University
http://www.nu.edu/index.html

snailmail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
San Diego, CA 92109
- -

↑ Index

153. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Anyone else got Atlantis poems??

--Rachel Democracy

Atlantis

The radio would have me believe the Draconians are the source of trouble but action becomes understood as escaping

in space ships from nuclear warheads
they mark change,

which may once have been understood as catastrophe, and will later mark crop circles into corn fields of South America.

The Atlanteans and the Draconians are equally to blame for the disaster but somehow the Draconians fade and the Atlanteans rise. They survive though their descendents. (The Europeans here get a bad rap.)

Everyone wants to feel good so we speak symbolically.

"COW!"

Speaking from the car.

Speaking in the car, she refered to black and white, light and dark. I remembered my etiquette and bounced back to "defining terms."

The city is now a well-lit surburbia and the grass
its hairy tentacles.

The other way to see grass, is as a subject for research focused on width and length.

***

As a feminist I don't insist on speaking about Nature,

that is the job of the men in space ships.
I don't say that as a manhater,
but I did not invent nuclear fission, that was done on the computer.

I was busy in the bathroom. Defining terms.

***

It was dark under hazy stars.
I told them, grasping at the breast has nothing to do with genetics.
They gasped at the logic, rolling backwards onto the grass.

What was grabbing them?
They feared it might be me so, defined their terms.

***

You would not believe the squeals it could make I mean it could really squeal.

***

Seriously, it was a ploy.
I was trying to avoid being arrested because her questioning is exhausting.
I am not above being driven to drink or into realms of unrecoverable fantasy, & can made to believe almost anything at the S/M bar where I dream of climbing the stage for the light of it.
I might be tempted to cry in front of my torturer or piss into the mainstream.

All that explaining for one whose imagination is a polymer sponge,
a mean machine of plasticene,
a freight train roiling Lemur variegatus.

We are back to black.

↑ Index

154. Keston Sutherland
Re: NYC in May
Tue 7 Apr 1998

- I think I'm reading there on the 17th, at Zinc Bar [?]

On Tue, 7 Apr 1998, William Marsh wrote:

> dear list
>
> i'll be in the NYC area the week of May 16-23 / wondering if anyone has advance warning of events, readings, parties, etc. / much appreciate the help
>
> bill marsh
>
> - -
> William Marsh
> http://bmarsh.dtai.com
> National University
> http://www.nu.edu/index.html
>
> snailmail: 1860 PB Dr. #4
> San Diego, CA 92109

> -

↑ Index

155. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Karen wrote:
> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable > dream about extraterrestrials jeez, I saw Network-whatever in the header, and I thought this was coming over our network/micro-computing listserv - I just about had a heart attack!

I don't have any reading to suggest that directly treats the concept of extra-terrestrials (was going to mention KK's "Santa", but...), but re

> what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?

I'm thinking it might be useful to read Pynchon's V., which, no, doesn't involve lizard-skinned ETs that devour human and animal life - but I think it cld be taken as indicative what they can represent to us, that in order to make sense of the novel (with all it's beautiful obsessing about the quotidian Outside), American television had to turn it into a story about such... Of course, that read (i.e., novel as against tv movie/series) is also a story about ratings, the horrid state of art in public discourse, and a Reagan-era
"cold war"-ish rhetoric of containment carried over &/or revived from the preceeding decades (War of the Worlds, good-guy State Department versus big bad Soviets, Star Wars, etc.).

Anyway, I think it cld be useful...

you cld look at this against Enemy Mine - what year was that? or, at the (very far) other extreme,
Alien and Alien 2 (I didn't get past 2...) - interest ing that the first one is quite shadowy and spooky,
whereas the 2nd is much more action-oriented,
and both of a kind of bodily fear, bodily malfunction -

it's all gotten so bodily/sexual (and sometimes BDSM-sexy) in the 80s and 90s...

I was always rather fond of In Search Of, with Leonard Nemoy. of course if you really wanted to think about it you might h

[it's at this point the writing breaks off - the only clue as to subject's whereabouts being 3 evenly-spaced circles burnt in the grass outside his office & a note that says "back after lunch"...]

chris - a damsel in "eustress"

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

156. daniel bouchard

Re: NYC in May

Tue 7 Apr 1998

At 12:07 PM 4/7/98 -0400, Keston Sutherland wrote:
> - I think I'm reading there on the 17th, at Zinc Bar [?]
>

It's not a "zinc bar," it's an opium den.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

157. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Re: the "Aliens" films, Kelly Hurley - a professor of mine here at CU - has a very good piece on the polymorphous sexuality of the monsters in _Posthuman Bodies_. And of course, Jung's _Flying Saucers: A Myth of Things Seen in the Skies_. His analysis of the UFO visions of an Italian chap named, improbably enough, Angelo Orfeo, are interesting and make for a fun read, too.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Christopher W. Alexander
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Alien thoughts
Date: Tuesday, April 07, 1998 5:10AM

you cld look at this against Enemy Mine - what year was that? or, at the (very far) other extreme,
Alien and Alien 2 (I didn't get past 2...) - interest
ing that the first one is quite shadowy and spooky,
whereas the 2nd is much more action-oriented,
and both of a kind of bodily fear, bodily malfunction -
it's all gotten so bodily/sexual (and sometimes BDSM-sexy) in the 80s and 90s...

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

158. Keston Sutherland monsters
Tue 7 Apr 1998

I wonder if we might trace 'alien' semiology back to say Mandeville's Travels and beyond, back to Ralegh's journals also, that time when myths particularly of Indian and Chinese monsters (headless men etc) were abundant - have we run out of monsters on earth? A thought, k

↑ Index

159. Susan Wheeler
Reading Announcement
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Oh hells' bells -- it's APRIL 9, very sorry --

Reading Thursday, April 9 at 8:00:

Susan Wheeler
Ann Lauterbach
Tom Disch
Richard Howard
George Bradley
David Lehman

(for publication of The Best of the Best American Poetry)

NYU Main Building
100 Washington Square East
Room 703

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

160. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: monsters
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Oh you can go back to the Greeks or the Romans' Lucan, there are such things everywhere you look I think - I'm glad someone brought up Mandeville - I used the Travels at an Ohio conf. on narrratology - relating it to cyberspace...

Alan

On Tue, 7 Apr 1998, Keston Sutherland wrote:

> I wonder if we might trace 'alien' semiology back to say Mandeville's Travels and beyond, back to Ralegh's journals also, that time when myths particularly of Indian and Chinese monsters (headless men etc) were abundant - have we run out of monsters on earth? A thought, k

↑ Index

161. Cadaly
thanks: userids and names
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Thanks! Actually, I have been thinking of it as abara-cadaly. So calalily, ko-daly, and caddy are welcome changes.

I have a friend with a corporate-rule id named mallard (seven letters: first letters of first two names, five letters from your last name OR five letters from your last name followed by ... although one must add letters if people with similar names are at the same company).

Maybe this will have a lasting effect on naming children. Naming so they have good userids. Maybe it's just another opportunity for renaming onesself (or being renamed).

Well, there is a superstition that a child is better off with initials that spell something (why my parents thought, "cad -- yes! it's a word"?), there is a lot of numerology related to names, and then one must always consider a monogram for all your shetland sweaters and custom made shirts and whatever else gets monogrammed -- towels?

There is a regular newspaper article that runs the popular names for that year. It seems the female names are more subject to changing taste than male names (even though we live longer -- Hmm).

My sister and I change our names all the time. My grandmother changed her name to "Estelle" in the 20s and has stuck by it for 70 years. When I got to college, there was a group of people who tried to rename everybody. Oddly, these were not folk who ended up with much power. College on the east coast -- different world -- friends named Cheese, Bells, Wheels, Spoon.

Rgds,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

162. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: monsters
Tue 7 Apr 1998

In _Order of Things_, Foucault writes about "monsters," i.e. evolutionary variants vis-a-vis the fossil record, as signifiers of difference. Alien semiology, as you put it, is, I guess, a discourse concerned with identifying the distinctions that make (and keep) the Same the Same - much like the discourse of xenophobia. (I love Mandeville's Travels. One of those books, like Pliny's Natural History, that one can read over and over for its liveliness and delightfulness of invention).

Patrick Pritchett

From: Keston Sutherland
To: [redacted]
Subject: monsters
Date: Tuesday, April 07, 1998 11:30AM

I wonder if we might trace 'alien' semiology back to say Mandeville's Travels and beyond, back to Ralegh's journals also, that time when myths particularly of Indian and Chinese monsters (headless men etc) were abundant - have we run out of monsters on earth? A thought, k

↑ Index

163. Miekal And
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Maz881 wrote:
>
> Take DMT.

> > Karen wrote:
 perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to > > us philosophically/psychologically?

the world inhabited by crystalline machine elves is simultaneous with myth, ufo sitings, biblical miracles etc, ghost dance, ayahuasca ceremony, Don Juan fabrications.....

↑ Index

164. William Marsh
alineanalien
Tue 7 Apr 1998

A L I N E A N A L I E N A
L I N E A N A L I E N A L
I N E A N A L I E N A L I
N E A N A L I E N A L I N
E A N A L I E N A L I N E
A N A L I E N A L I N E A
N A L I E N A L I N E A N
A L I E N A L I N E A N A

- -
William Marsh | PaperBrainPress
http://bmarsh.dtai.com
- -

↑ Index

165. Christopher W. Alexander

Re: monsters

Tue 7 Apr 1998

Patrick wrote:
> Alien semiology, as you put it, is, I guess, a discourse concerned with > identifying the distinctions that make (and keep) the Same the Same - much > like the discourse of xenophobia.

> that's definitely one way of looking at it, e.g., > my earlier remarks on containment vis-a-vis > the cold war... on the other hand, especially > with respect to Alien and the Streiber thing, > there's definitely another sort of invasion/> containment thing happening, specifically > with regard to the body and bodily function...
>
> so it could be understood in relation to the > enduring attack on Roe v. Wade, or AIDS, > or even the advent of the body as a site of > power/contestation in poststruct. theory...
>
> (all of which wld be partial responses)
>
> now stop talking about this as you're only > adding to my lengthy reading list!!
>
> > chris - etcetera

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

166. Aldon Nielsen
data quest
Tue 7 Apr 1998

last week the email system I use at school crashed -- I'm back on-line now, but have lost several people's addresses and messages regarding a variety of things I was supposed to be sendning to a number of people -- If I have told you in the poast few weeks that I would mail you something, please email me again with your address and a reminder

(Cabri: I think you're in this group!)

↑ Index

167. louis stroffolino
Re: alineanalien
Tue 7 Apr 1998

if i have a child i wonder if they'll let me name her ALIENA? c

On Tue, 7 Apr 1998, William Marsh wrote:

> A L I N E A N A L I E N A
> L I N E A N A L I E N A L
> I N E A N A L I E N A L I
> N E A N A L I E N A L I N
> E A N A L I E N A L I N E
> A N A L I E N A L I N E A
> N A L I E N A L I N E A N
> A L I E N A L I N E A N A
>
> - -
> William Marsh | PaperBrainPress
> http://bmarsh.dtai.com
> - -

↑ Index

168. Maria Damon
Re: monsters, aliens, angels
Tue 7 Apr 1998

i remember a discussion on the list a coupla years ago (geez, i really am a veteran at this point) about gay writing and outer space --wm burroughs, jack spicer, etc. for those of you who will now hunt thru old epc files, i think the header was "boys in space."

At 12:08 PM -0500 4/7/98, Pritchett,Patrick @Silverplume wrote:
>In _Order of Things_, Foucault writes about "monsters," i.e. evolutionary >variants vis-a-vis the fossil record, as signifiers of difference. Alien >semiology, as you put it, is, I guess, a discourse concerned with >identifying the distinctions that make (and keep) the Same the Same - much >like the discourse of xenophobia. (I love Mandeville's Travels. One of those >books, like Pliny's Natural History, that one can read over and over for its >liveliness and delightfulness of invention).
>
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------
>From: Keston Sutherland
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: monsters
>Date: Tuesday, April 07, 1998 11:30AM
>
>I wonder if we might trace 'alien' semiology back to say Mandeville's >Travels and beyond, back to Ralegh's journals also, that time when myths >particularly of Indian and Chinese monsters (headless men etc) were >abundant - have we run out of monsters on earth? A thought, k

↑ Index

169. Laura Moriarty
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Karen et al -

An interesting book on this subject - which has maybe been posted already - I haven't read the whole thread yet - is Alien Zone edited by Annette Kuhn - about sci fi movies - As an inveterate fan I found it amusing -

Here also (what the hell) is part of a piece I wrote a while ago and have published in I think an old Avec - is sexual but apart. It is uncreated because there is no space. Or it fills the space with a sense of danger that is not like life. Though it is alive. It will fight to save itself and can be remade. There can always be a new version of the thing with contemporary actors and their attendant dangers.

The Thing

Just as a statue glorifies marble or wax or butter, rubber is stretched over the thin. Ours is the language of lovers. It is shaped into resemblance. We get it from everything. We get more than that. Reading, repeating always inaccurately what the other has thought with what intent is made clear only always later. But the substance isn't clear. There is no transparency possible at the beginning of life. We are the blind ones.

One thing is not like the other. Our relief is no less inexpressable for being premature. At times it is more written than spoken. Like the lines in a play before they are committed to memory. Actors can remember anything. Their cooperation reminds you that time is going by. The thing undermines the image in order to be an object.

Gently he bends me to abstraction. I urge him back. The thing hides is each of us. This is what it's like. We realize in the midst of the occupation that victory is a fact. An old story is seen differently. The parts as plain as day. As if there were something beyond suspicion.

There is a test. It has to do with what was said. A trick is played. The needle is off the scale. The actors are in bed. They need a pretext. Theirs is an organized game. We are tied together but only briefly. Understanding spreads over his face like blood under the skin. We let it out. "We abondon ourselves to what we see."

The thing is insatiable. It takes the shape of a wolf. You hold up your end of the conversation. An exchange of fire occurs. There is an echo of another animal. Thought becomes visible like a trail. A comprehensive examination proves to be just another in the chain of events. We are in the heart of the thing. We touch this is our talking. We feel a melting at room temperature. Something gives.

Compromised by the obvious will to continue. An airless room on top of the world. Or the shape of a bird. Nothing can bring back that pattern. We have this to say about each other. You are fixed here. Thoughts can be read or only a dog simple sense of fear is left.

A song puts it in me.

They are alive but don't know what is going on. Someone saves it for them. They call it the world. A character lies down in the snow before blowing up. The thing watches from the shadows where we are. But we don't know. Eyes that stay open. No one has them.

Things are not black and white. We are not here anymore. Or it was and you did. And we are.

Laura

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

170. Aldon Nielsen damn
Tue 7 Apr 1998

"It's a tough world
out there
and even tougher when I write about it."
--Joe Amato, _Bookend_

Scrolling through the email that came in after our system demolished my mailbox, and now I come to this sad news. -- I had been keeping up with the progress of Joe's journey through the minefields,,,, had naively hoped, after he'd passed safely through the first levels, that all would be well -- as it happens, my small band of grad. students are reading Joe's book this semester -- they think it's great --

IIT == Illin' Institute of Torpidity

↑ Index

171. Maz881
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Take DMT.

> Hi all,
>
> This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to us philosophically/psychologically?
>
> Karen

↑ Index

172. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> I have _Santa_ right here on my desk (the Leave Books version). It's killer!
>
> why we need them, etc. When I was almost 30 I came to "realize" that I had been abducted by aliens briefly in childhood, and I drew upon this experience to write a memoir "Santa," which now appears in my book "Little Men" (which of course you don't want to miss in any case). I got some of it right, but Scott and Juliana get more of it.
> --Kevin Killian <---- space "cadet" fanboy

One of the interesting books on the subject of alien intelligences is Colin Wilson's _The Mind Parasites_.

Well worth reading if anyone is seriously interested in "aliens" and the correlative possibilities as to so called psi-warfare.

Wilson rightfully refers to Husserl's phenomenological method as of importance when dealing with those kinds of subjects.

M.

↑ Index

173. Maria Damon
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

ps when i first saw this heading i thot it sd Allen thots, and was reminded that it's just about his first yahrtzeit ? yortzite (sp)? such thots i have of you tonite, old allen-pie, with your frail limbs and petulance, with your expansive numen and sweetness, with your eyes of death and life.

↑ Index

174. CharSSmith
new Gustaf Sobin chapbook -- Arcturus Editions
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

announcing the publication of:

Gustaf Sobin, A WORLD OF LETTERS

Arcturus Editions
ISBN 0-9661505-1-1
$8.00, 16 pp., 6 3/8 x 9, letterpress on Mohawk, sewn Canson wrappers
$20.00 lettered & signed edition, printed on Rives lightweight Five new poems, including "Transparent Itineraries: 1996"

An American poet, novelist, and essayist, Gustaf Sobin resides in the south of France. Recent volumes include _Breaths' Burials_ (New Directions, 1995), _By the Bias of Sound/Selected Poems1974-1994_ (Talisman, 1995) & the forthcoming _Towards the Blanched Alphabets_ (Talisman, 1998).

... laying, within a plethora of shadows, those hard sparks: ‘phonemes,’ you’d called them, what hissed, needle-thin, through the very depths of that dark air.

Available from Small Press Distribution, 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley, CA 94710; [redacted]; [redacted]

or from the press, checks payable to: Charles Smith
CA residents, please add 7.25% sales tax

Arcturus Editions
2135 Irvin Way
Sacramento, CA 95822
[redacted]

 apologies to all who receive this announcement more than once ***

↑ Index

175. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> I love the way Juliana Spahr depicts the effects of "alien" beings on our beings in her book RESPONSE (Sun & Moon, 1996). Notley has some new poems that deal with aliens (I think I saw them in GARE du NORD #2).

I guess, if the aliens are there, we had better learn to defend against them and make sure they do not invade any further...into our world. After all how do we know who the aliens are in league with ? Could be anyone, or only in it for themselves, couldn't it ? We do not trust foreign governments. We do not even trust our own governments. Why would we trust "aliens" ? Something is very very wrong with this scenario.....

> There are some scary books by Whitley Streiber--one of them is called COMMUNION and is very scary. I'm still afraid of the dark! (The most scary thing is that his aliens can "get you" even if someone else is in your > bed--or even if there's a cat or dog around... They can put others into trances and stop time and stuff like that...).

I do not take Streiber seriously. Streiber has an overactive imagination. His ideas about remote viewing are absolutely silly, but the silliness does not stop there,...Most of what people believe about aliens is silly. Most of what is written about them is silly and completely conjectural.

> The movie version, which stars Christopher Walken,is very scary--but also surprisingly philosophical in its approach and in its implications... I highly recommend it.....

I think it all boils down to this:

Rule 1: NEVER OBEY ALIENS, NO MATTER HOW NICE THEY SEEM TO BE, OR HOW NASTY.

Rule 2: If you do not know who they are, with certainty, then assume that they are hostile, no matter what they say to attempt to sell you on some wild idea. You have to know, for sure, whom you are dealing with, or you are likely to get taken in, and in a big way.

Rule 3: Know your own mind from whatever is the of the minds of others. That rule is difficult to follow, and very important.

Rule 4: Imagine a foreign country that wants to undermine the ability of our countries to defend themselves, and wants to convert the citizens of our countries to ways of thinking that will overthrow the political system we live within so that that other political power can take this part of the world over for their own purposes. Would they decide NOT to use angels, aliens, and anything else they could recruit, conjure up, and use for that purpose ?

Shades of Stalin and Hitler ! We might be being had, not by aliens in the truest sense of it, but by a foreign power that has developed a technology in excess of our own. Could be any competing foreign power couldn't it ? And we are going to sell this out to them ? No way....

After all they are aliens and we are the resistance. If they exist then we are the resistance against an uninvited invasion force, that does not seem to believe in proper diplomatic channels....Definitely not nice...Not nice at all.

Now, where are those plans for that new device that shoots aliens dead.....They must be somewhere around here.....

Repeat after me....

We are human beings who absolutely refuse to be taken over, bossed around, brain washed, programmed, manipulated, used or abused by aliens. We will fight to defend our kind against their kind, using every means we have, with the aim of protecting our freedoms, our species, and its unimpeded evolution.

Now, why is no one saying that about aliens ?

Do they want to be taken over by hostiles ?

Gee.....something is wrong.

(Are we paranoid enough...yet....<chuckle> That's it, I have had my fun with this thread.....)

M. (Decisively NOT an alien.)

PS. Accounts of extraterrestrial encounters and anomalous experiences are of great interest to me, and if anyone has had any and wants to enter a serious analytical discussion on that subject, welcome to write and describe your experience. It is far from being something to be laughed away, but "everything is what it isn't" when it comes to such things and a critical skepticism is necessary for understanding even if not always for survival. Though it can be important for the latter purpose also.

M.

↑ Index

176. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> it was generally not until the 80's that the aliens became nasty. interestingly, in the 1950s/60s/70s as rockets & telescopes reached out further into our solar system & beyond, so the aliens came from further afield. i guess it's no longer possible to claim to meet farmer bob's venusians. pity ...

The "aliens" became nasty when the "Cold War" heated up.

No further comment.

M.

↑ Index

177. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> Re: the "Aliens" films, Kelly Hurley - a professor of mine here at CU - has a very good piece on the polymorphous sexuality of the monsters in _Posthuman Bodies_. And of course, Jung's _Flying Saucers: A Myth of Things Seen in the Skies_. His analysis of the UFO visions of an Italian chap > named, improbably enough, Angelo Orfeo, are interesting and make for a fun read, too.

>
> Patrick Pritchett

This I like much better than the other threads in that fabric.

This thread leads to the idea of the poetic body as the body of flesh transformed by whatever means, to increase human diversity to new breadths rather than using science to constrain human diversity.

Humans could become their own demons, angels, aliens of all kinds, and even monsters of nearly any description, within a wholly transhuman context. All kinds of symbiosis, modification, and implantations, would become increasingly possible and available.

In that there would be new possibilities, that some would choose to explore, as to creativity. New symbols, new meanings, a new non verbal language of metaphors that say something that could not be said before and define new kinds of human relationships that perhaps, in some ways, did not exist before.

I think that can be something very positive. Even in its more unusual forms, as long as it is something that individuals freely choose to express, as part of their own self expressions, their own particular body poetic, that they share communicatively with others.

M.

↑ Index

178. Aldon Nielsen

Re: Alien thoughts

Tue 7 Apr 1998

At 07:54 PM 4/7/98 -0400, you wrote:
>>it was generally not until the 80's that the aliens became nasty.
>>interestingly, in the 1950s/60s/70s as rockets & telescopes reached out >>further into our solar system & beyond, so the aliens came from further >>afield. i guess it's no longer possible to claim to meet farmer bob's >>venusians. pity ...
>
>The "aliens" became nasty when the "Cold War" heated up.
>
>No further comment.
>
>M.
>

I recall a certain degree of nastiness in WAR OF THE WORLDS -- things have changed now, certainly -- pods have taken control of all tenure decisions --

↑ Index

179. Billy Little alien is beautiful/alienated @birth
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

skiprope logic (for gino couer de Lion)

martians are beautiful , voluptuous, seductive Marilyn Monroe was a martian she turned on the red light at every intersection in Saskatchewan and every foyer on Knob Hill could smell her coming from Vista del Mar everyone whose name begins with the first three letters of Mars, it's their recognition code, like Mac for Scots, Mary even,
the mother of god was a martian, every Martin you know
's a martian, all of the Maryknoll priests are martians, Mark whatshis name who killed John Lennon was a martian friend of George Bush, Bob Marley , a rastamartian,
Peter Pan played by a red planet actress, Mary Martian, Martha Stewart is not living on marzipan
the state of Maryland, next to Clinton's capitol, is an interplanetary landing/launch platform of Mars,
a marshmallow roast is the martian sacrament, years ago at the oscars everybody knew Marlon Brando was a martian, marinating aids the martian digestion of Mary Tyler Moore, a martini is a martian transfusion martinis are preshaken on Mars, when people say marvelous simply MAHvulis they usually are talking about MAHtians like Marilyn Monroe who never wore underwear and slept with other martians like Artie Miller and Groucho Marx and like Marky Mark who wore underwear only Marvy Marky part of the same martian family as the Marquis de Sade and Don Marquis the red planet's their home by yiminy Marnie left the teethmarks of a Martian in my shoulder
'd emptied my watergun in her face

lost his marbles, claims to come from Marpole an imposter from Marseille overdosed on marmelade, Lee Marvin, Martin Buber, Dean Martin and Martina Navritalova all spell their real names in the same martian alphabet Karl Marx translated his indecipherable marsterpieces from. Marshall Dillonand all of the married, the marines and the marijuana smokers tied up at the marina drinking margaritas once frequented the bars on mars like Marcels Proust and Duchamp reading cette bicyclette in the gaslight and all the martyrs, St Valentine, St. Thomas, Norma Jeanne d'arc, Giordano Bruno, Albert Anastasia, my favourite martians, crucified, burnt at the steak sauce.

↑ Index

180. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> the world inhabited by crystalline machine elves is simultaneous with myth, ufo sitings, biblical miracles etc, ghost dance, ayahuasca ceremony, Don Juan fabrications.....

Gurdjief said it happens when you remove the "kunundabuffer".

Remember the alien spaceship is involvede in that story also. And that was quite a long while ago....

M.

↑ Index

181. Steve Carll
Antenym 15 is published
Tue 7 Apr 1998

(Apologies to anyone who receives this message more than once.)

Antenym 15 is now available for $3.00 plus $1.50 postage payable to Steve Carll.

Antenym 15 features the complete text of Eric Selland's chapbook THE CONDITION OF MUSIC, 28 lyrical, thoughtful prose poems, plus work from:

Stephen Collis (Vancouver)
Norman Fischer (Sausolito, CA)
Ann Erickson (Santa Rosa, CA)
Celestine Frost (NYC)

Jim Leftwich (Charlottesville, VA)
Patrick Pritchett (Boulder)
Elizabeth Robinson (Berkeley)
Joe Ross (San Diego)
Standard Schaefer (Pasadena)
Paul Silvia (Lawrence, KS)
Perrin Wright (Brooklyn)
and two front covers (!) designed by Spencer Selby and Steve Carll.

The magazine is going on indefinite hiatus after this issue. I'm moving to Honolulu, Hawaii in August for a year and pursuing other projects. Until then, correspondence may be emailed to me at <[redacted]>, regular mailed to 106 Fair Oaks St. #1, San Francisco, CA 94110-2951, or you can phone me at [redacted].

Also available:

Antenym 13 and 14: parts one and two of the "Ontological Activism" theme issue. Each issue is 50 pages long and costs the same as the new issue ($3 plus another $1.50 to mail).

SINCERITY LOOPS by Steve Carll. I printed up another 60 copies of this chapbook, which takes pop song lyrics and rearranges them one-for-one into my own syntax. It's $5 (postage included), but I'll consider trade offers too (same goes for the magazine, for that matter.)

BRUSHSTROKES by Steve Carll. Published by black fire white fire in Berkeley, this tract-sized chapbook is available for the asking if you order one of the above, or send me a #10 regular (4 and a half by 9 and a half inch) SASE.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

182. Rachel Levitsky
Re: announcing 2(1X1)
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

my book _2(1X1) originally published as a potepoettext
--http://www.burningpress.org/va/pote/potet08.html-- has now been published by Baksun Books, with a lovely letterpress cover (by Michael Smoler), msword drawings, and some nice hand-made paper on the inside.

If you'd like a copy, I'll swap you a book for a book or take $5.00.

My address is: Rachel Levitsky
P.O. Box 1771
Boulder, CO 80306-1771

It just started snowing like crazy outside. It's so pretty I can understand the obsession. Wee.

↑ Index

183. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

---

morpheal wrote:
>
> >it was generally not until the 80's that the aliens became nasty.
> >interestingly, in the 1950s/60s/70s as rockets & telescopes reached out
> >further into our solar system & beyond, so the aliens came from further > >afield. i guess it's no longer possible to claim to meet farmer bob's > >venusians. pity ...
>
> The "aliens" became nasty when the "Cold War" heated up.
>
> No further comment.
>
> M.

Remember the classic Forbidden Planet of 1954 [?], which followed Pogo's view that "we have met the enemy and they is us" -- "creatures from the Id!"

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

184. George Bowering
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> Anyone else got Atlantis poems??
>
> --Rachel Democracy

Well, about 30 yeaers ago Louis Dudek published a booklength poem called _Atlantis_

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

185. George Bowering
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> ps when i first saw this heading i thot it sd Allen thots,

Wasnt it an Alien who said "First thought best thought"?

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

186. Peter Quartermain
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Aliens?

There's the novels of Octavia Butler, especially the first of that amazing series of which perhaps someone can remember the name. Very much into the psychology of alien-ation. So too perhaps the work of Phillip Mann _Eye_of_the_Queen_ ((Australian, I see to recall).

Science fiction is of course full of a lot of junk, but there's a bunch of stuff in there: LeGuin _Left_Hand_of_Darkness_ comes to mind.

PQ

At 09:03 PM 4/6/98 -0800, you wrote: >Karen Kelley wrote . . .
>
>>This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable >>dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about >>before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that >>I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials >>must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not >>particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, >>perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to >>us philosophically/psychologically?
>
>Katy's already suggested Spahr's book "Response" which is a good one. Let >me recommend a novel "Mysterious Skin" by a young New Yorker Scott Heim, it >is really terrific and is totally about the psychological appeal of aliens, >why we need them, etc. When I was almost 30 I came to "realize" that I had >been abducted by aliens briefly in childhood, and I drew upon this >experience to write a memoir "Santa," which now appears in my book "Little >Men" (which of course you don't want to miss in any case). I got some of >it right, but Scott and Juliana get more of it.
>
>--Kevin Killian <---- space "cadet" fanboy
>

+ + + +

187. Tom Beard
Re: Alien thoughts
Tue 7 Apr 1998

> So too perhaps the work of Phillip Mann _Eye_of_the_Queen_ ((Australian, I > see to recall).

New Zealander, actually (teaches drama at Victoria University), but Yorkshire born. I haven't read much SF since puberty, but Mann's books go far beyond the strictures of the genre.

I'd recommend "Wulfsyarn" - not so much for the aliens, though they are interesting, as for the approach to human and machine psychology (the book is narrated by an 'autoscribe') and the fascinating take on the (possible) future of religion ('The Church of St Francis Dionysus').

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

188. Karen Kelley
Aliens among us
Tue 7 Apr 1998

Of course everywhere I look now there are references to aliens, including this from sculptor John McCracken in my latest Art in America:

"Aliens are elusive and hard to pin down because of their other-dimensionality. I think there are actually thousands of extraterrestrials--and other entities that you wouldn't call extra-terrestrials--flying and running around, looking at us, studying us. While they may think we're kind of cool in some ways, even brilliant, I think they wonder how we can be so opaque, why we don't see them more than we do. It's amazing that we don't really see what's going on."

An interesting reminder that maybe our perception of multi-dimensionality is weak. I'm going to go back & take a new look at some of my brother's Seth books.

Thanks to everyone who sent recommendations.

Karen

↑ Index

189. Thomas Bell
Re: notsotired chit
Wed 8 Apr 1998

I also had a look at tuggar's works (per our electronic miracle here), and wondered, were one inclinined to stretch the limits of poetry, would her works be considered poems? Or is this too conceptual, tom bell

At 09:27 PM 4/4/98 -0500, Wendy Kramer wrote: >or, this tired lady, if you prefer... going to work, and lurking, and >generally corresponding take energies, as well as give 'em, i >s'pose, but so much of interest to comment on:
>
>1. to whomever posted about fatimah tuggar a big thank you!! you've >recruited a new fan. went to see those two exhibits in nyc you posted >about, and then today (couple weeks later) went to see her talk at the >exhibit "keeping track of the joneses." > some things i found inneresting:
>
>that she collages her collages digitally --oops, i mean on the computer, >not digitally like fingers. but also that many of her pieces use "real" >objects--a metal box with photos; cushions with photos of family members >on them, around a digital-image round collage of an eating mat filled >with products centrifugally (cant spell that) shooting; one collage was >slide-projected onto a bath of yoghurt in a clay pot! you could barely >make out the women holding pots collage in it, but once you made it out, >you couldnt not see it!
>
>
>2. in response to the "how can you tell?" gender thread, well, i have to >say that i dunno what you kin tell a woman or a man by what her/his >writing/artwork looks and sounds like (naw!), but i _can_ say, for >example, that when i first saw that post about tuggar i didnt know she >was a woman, and when i visited the website and somehow found out, well >it made a big 'ol adrenalin difference to little chit me.
>not sure all of why, but it's a sexual feeling, & too a role-model >thing. not that i'm not turned on by poetry by men, and shit yeah, many >men are also my role models, but...there it is. some kinda excitement.
>and relief and green-light GO! You TOO could do... >like dodie (i think it was) said but in diffrent context thank god for >kathy acker. it's been important for me to be able to see people about >whom i could say yeah, "what SHE said" or "i wanna grow up to be like >HER." i mean, i woulda loved gertrude stein no matter what her >plumbing, but her being a lesbian made me--a late-teen-kid then-- her >loving-faithful.

>
>3. oh yeah, one more thing. in the basement floor of the new museum >gallery where we saw fatimah tuggar, we saw also a flea circus exhibit >by another woman, Maria Fernanda Cardoso--complete with video >performance of said circus, wherein the artist reigned Queen, along with >related banners, placards, and glassed-in preserved fleas in progress of >death-defying feats, such as tightrope-walking and getting shot outta >cannonballs! o marvelous mayhem! amusement! what technical skill! flea >circus-ing has a whole history (as do fleas in human society) about >which i hadnt ('til now) hadda clue.
>
>

↑ Index

190. david bromige

Alien Dreams

Wed 8 Apr 1998

One woman's vivid dream of aliens could be another person's abduction experience. I have heard descriptions of alien encounters all along the axis from one to the other. One night when living in a remote place there came a knock at the door. My wife always said she wasnt afraid because he was an angel, she knew it right away. He was a well-mannered if somewhat familiar (with us, in his speech) angel, if so. All he asked for was a drink of water. A,l,e,n (g=i).

Manifestations are often in remote sites. Perhaps it takes silence and loneness to render aliens visible & audible.

When it comes to UFOs, however, I now hear the one we saw might have been only a hologram : "We have long had that capability," a government spokesperson said.

"Mah fellow-americans, people of the world, aliens have their weapons of mass destruction trained on our largest cities. We must comply with their requests. Starting today, the minimum wage will be lowered to 30 cents a day. All civil liberties will be suspended. Homeless people will be shot."

On a lighter note, our own George Bowering is the author of a novel called _Parents From Outer Space_ . Imagine! You're a teenager, you get home after school and you have two sets of parents! Come to think of it, there's something a bit eerie about George Bowering . . . .

↑ Index

191. henry g
ally ally in free
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Jack Spandrift has never been abducted by aliens. But, as he was narratolating to me the other evening at Hokey's 2-Bit here in Pedalfast, Michigan, he did have what he called a 'counter. It was on the range. He had just settled into a deep cup of insta-joe, leanin against along beside his cow-chip campfire, when he thought he heard a faint buzzing sound. "Gotcha!" he muttered, slapping the left side of the back of his stringy neck. But the buzzing continued, ineluctably, indelibly, indubitably, in his ear, so he peered out into the rangy darkness. There it was. A rusted can of Folger's - BUT IT WAS GLOWING. Sighing, he picked up his trusty 22 (a sawed-off 44) & limped unevenly toward the caffeine apparition. IT meanwhile was rolling toward HIM. They both came to an abrupt halt about 3 feet apart, the can glowing a bright fuchsia, shaking and buzzing. Jack figgered a prairie dog musta gotten stuck in there, and become extremely decussed from his proper ectoplasm, emitting alienated squeaks of volatile perturbation which set his tin prison in motion in so remarkable a fash-ion, etc. Imagine our hero's consternation when the decayed lid popped open smoothly - and WHAT did he SEE - but a little... a little... SPACE CRITTER!!

Yes, it was an intelligent being of vaguely humanoid proportions - shrunk, as you can imagine, to coffee-can dimensions!! The little fella seemed without warlike intent as he marched formally toward Jack & presented him with a salute with one of his 3 arms. Jack - bones shaking, as you might guess, like an old tin can - squatted down slowly at critter level.

A little beam of ruby light came on over the mini's head - and suddenly a nasal voice emitted these words: "Jack, have you been keeping up with the poetics list?"

Jack scratched his head under his cowboy hat. "Well, no, lil feller - I been herdin earth cows since March."

"Well, get with it, baby. WE'VE GOT A MESSAGE FOR EARTH. And you'll find it on the list."

"Say... why don't you relay it to somebody else, okay? I got work t'do out here an them eastern media people give me the snuckers."

"Jack - tell me - what on earth do you mean by the phrase 'get the snuckers'?"

"Somethin between the jutters an the shickers, I guess."

"Dubious, Jack, dubious - & I think everybody here on Folger 12-B will agree. But let that pass for now. Just get back to your email, if you know what's good for you."

"Listen here, lil spacefella, I don't take orders from nobody but the trail boss, an you can - "

But before Jack could finish his expostulation, the Folger's can swept up his interlocutor and began spinning at a tremendous velocity, throwing off sparks at a G-rate of 2,000,000 to the f/x plus cream. Jack backed off as the cylinder dissolved in a precipitation of coffee fumes.

As he recounted his 'counter over a shot of Old Great-Great-Great-Granddad, Jack's voice quavered ever so slightly, and he shook his head. But when I asked him whether he had taken the creature's advice and checked the poetics list lately, all he said was -

"Hyinree, why, I gave up on tryin to get them cowgal quatrains to rhyme a long time ago. Now I just sing the old Pecos melodies - an I'm happy as a donut in a red shift."

- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

192. r. drake

found poem: "failure notice"

Wed 8 Apr 1998

> Hi. This is the qmail-send program at hardly.hotwired.com.
> I'm afraid I wasn't able to deliver your message to the following addresses.
> This is a permanent error; I've given up. Sorry it didn't work out.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I wasn't able to establish an SMTP connection. (#4.4.1)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I wasn't able to establish an SMTP connection. (#4.4.1)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I couldn't find any host by that name. (#4.1.2)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I wasn't able to establish an SMTP connection. (#4.4.1)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> 208.210.190.41 does not like recipient.
> Remote host said: 550 <[redacted]>... User unknown > Giving up.

> <[redacted]>:
> Connected to 195.180.229.162 but greeting failed.
> Remote host said: 421 permission denied
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I couldn't find any host by that name. (#4.1.2)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> <[redacted]>:
> Sorry, I couldn't find any host by that name. (#4.1.2)
> I'm not going to try again; this message has been in the queue too long.
>
> --- Below this line is a copy of the message.
> **********
>
> (This message has been generated automatically.)

↑ Index

193. Dean Taciuch
Re: Alien Dreams
Wed 8 Apr 1998

One the subject of alien encounters in literature: Listen to Patti Smith's "Bird-land" on her first album (Horses). "They/you/I/we are not human"

Dean

↑ Index

194. morpheal
Re: Alien thoughts
Wed 8 Apr 1998

> I recall a certain degree of nastiness in WAR OF THE WORLDS --

Similar to War of the Words....but the latter was largely ignored because of insufficient special effects technology at the time when it was faught.

> things have changed now, certainly -- pods have taken control of all tenure decisions --

You sure of that ? The pods....shades of Wyndenham....the pods again....

I thought that the next step was to make professors obsolete.

They first create symbiots, comprised of human to machine interfaces such that the artificial intelligence program learns to think like tenured professor. In essence to create "expert systems" within all the areas of study.

So far, no success, with that approach.

You perhaps know about Plato, an early artificial machine, drove its creator, programmer, insane, such that he committed suicide ? True story.

Well, in this instance the computers all went insane and had to be disassembled and scrapped. The professors still have their tenure.

Maybe someday things will change....

By the way, are they using remote viewing to invigilate examinations yet in American colleges ? I heard a rumour somewhere....

M.

↑ Index

195. Gary Sullivan
Poetics of collage?
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Hi, Tom and Wendy:

I'm writing about Fatimah's work right now to introduce her series, "Village Spells," on the Plexus site (http://www.plexus.org/tuggar/) . . . relating her work to poetry. I don't think it's too much of a conceptual leap. Anyway, I'm not done with the essay, but this will give you an idea of its direction:

If magic is that which changes properties by persuasive gesture, Fatimah Tuggar's Village Spells are acts of genuine magic. The village itself--admixture of western and African properties--is virtual, a product of seeing the world in a particular way--say, Marshall McLuhan's Global Village. Essential to the magus, the late U.S. poet Gerald Burns once said, is the creation of a field in which magic can be said to work. I like his description, even if it's necessarily vague. He was relating the task of magician to that of poet, saying something about the poet's relationship to language. Some visual artists, especially those who consistently generate visual collage work--I think here of the German Hannah Hoch and Americans Joseph Cornell and Jess Collins--work with images, things given, in the way poets do with words. The collage artist, I want to say, might have as much or more in common with the poet as with, say, the painter. Tuggar is no exception. The image-to-word puns in her work are lively and frequent enough to engage the viewer who likes to read as well as to look. While looking is hardly a passive act, reading requires conscious viewer participation, and Tuggar's collage work, I've found, rewards the curious reader.

* * *

I'm supposed to finish this essay by today (good luck, especially since I wanna do some close readings of her stuff) and in the next couple of days it'll be up at the site accompanying Fatimah's pieces . . . I'll let you know when it's there.

Anyway, yeah, her work's great. And, again, anyone in NYC can see it "live" at the New Museum (B'way just south of Houston) and the Jack Tilton Gallery (er rrr, Greene street, I think, near Broome). She's still homeless, btw, staying with a friend of a friend in Queens . . . if anyone in NYC knows of a place she can live, backchannel me ASAP, por favor . . .

Thanks,

Gary

On Wednesday, April 08, 1998 12:29 AM, Thomas Bell [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote: > I also had a look at tuggar's works (per our electronic miracle here), and > wondered, were one inclinined to stretch the limits of poetry, would > her works be considered poems? Or is this too conceptual, > tom bell
>
> At 09:27 PM 4/4/98 -0500, Wendy Kramer wrote:
> to whomever posted about fatimah tuggar a big thank you!! you've > >recruited a new fan.

↑ Index

196. Gleason
Re: damn
Wed 8 Apr 1998

---

when joe told me the news it was very sad, frustrating, infuriating. my initial reply to joe was not as strong, i think i didn't know what to think. i was a student of his at iit for a couple years, i rode along with him for a while as they started steering that school into the ground. we had more phrases that went along with I I T, but none of them used words as cool as torpidity.

joe's book is fantastic. i've owned it for months now, picking through a random page hear and there as i get a break from all other reading to be done this semester. i think there were more ideas in his introductory pages than in whole novels i've read lately!

eryque

> "It's a tough world
> out there

> and even tougher
> when I write about it."
> --Joe Amato, _Bookend_
>
> Scrolling through the email that came in after our system demolished my mailbox, and now I come to this sad news. -- I had been keeping up with the progress of Joe's journey through the minefields,,,, had naively hoped, after he'd passed safely through the first levels, that all would be well --
>
> as it happens, my small band of grad. students are reading Joe's book this semester -- they think it's great --
>
> IIT == Illin' Institute of Torpidity

↑ Index

197. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
thanx...
Wed 8 Apr 1998

---

just a note of thanx to all of those who've expressed support and concern, on this list and backchannel, re my tenure situation...

for the record: it was a politics-as-usual decision, and not based on my being a poet, exactly (not that being a poet helped any)... had i been a 19th century american lit scholar, i would still be s-o-l... that my colleague who was denied is our african-american studies scholar should speak to this directly (and neither of us has any publication problems)... the politics to which i refer have to do with the privatization of colleges and universities, re which, as many of you are aware, i'm an outspoken opponent... i think this latter development should be of concern to all of you, simply b/c i think education is such an important aspect of our public domain...

in any case, whatever happens, i'll be ok (and hey, things could always be worse)... thanx again for your support and encouragement, means much to me...

xxxx,

joe

↑ Index

198. r. drake
Re: Poetics of collage?
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Tom Wendy Gary et al:

if yr not already onto it, you might check out _Collage_, edited by Jeanine Plottel, vol. #10/11 of the New York Literary Forum series, 1983. essays by marjorie perloff, mary ann caws, jean-jaccques thomas, leroy breuning, david rosand, jon green, tom conley, renee hubert, & bert leefmans...

lbd

↑ Index

199. Gary Sullivan
Re: Poetics of collage?
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Hey, Luigi-Bob! Thanks for the teep . . . I'll check eet oot . . .

Anything you remember from the essays, relative to Tom's question? If so, post 'em . . . would be interested to read & consider . . .

Many kind thanks,

Gary

On Wednesday, April 08, 1998 10:20 AM, r. drake
[SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Tom Wendy Gary et al:
>
> if yr not already onto it, you might check out _Collage_, edited by > Jeanine Plottel, vol. #10/11 of the New York Literary Forum series, 1983.
> essays by marjorie perloff, mary ann caws, jean-jaccques thomas, leroy > breuning, david rosand, jon green, tom conley, renee hubert, & bert > leefmans...
>
> lbd

↑ Index

200. Douglas Barbour
Re: aliens (in SF)
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Peter Quartermain (Hi Peter, welcome back!) said:

<<Aliens?

There's the novels of Octavia Butler, especially the first of that amazing series of which perhaps someone can remember the name. Very much into the psychology of alien-ation. So too perhaps the work of Phillip Mann _Eye_of_the_Queen_ ((Australian, I see to recall).

Science fiction is of course full of a lot of junk, but there's a bunch of stuff in there: LeGuin _Left_Hand_of_Darkness_ comes to mind.>>

Butler's trilogy is _Xenogenesis_ & is indeed terrific. Best alien encounter trilogy in a long time, however, & a wonderful study in gender politics to boot, is Gwyneth Jones's "Aleutian Trilogy" (_White Queen_, _North Wind_, & _Phoenix Cafe_): wonderful post-colonial etc readings of culture, with great characterization & a terrific style.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

202. morpheal
Re: Was: aliens (in SF) Now: Censorship and Belief
Wed 8 Apr 1998

> Is it in the repressive america censorship

Does that exist more because a significant portion of people BELIEVE that it exists, or because there are censors actually censoring ?

Does it exist more because some significant portion of the people who believe it exists are intimidated, because they believe something nasty will happen to them if they cease to believe in it ? Kind of similar to the concept of burning in hellfire if you do not believe in an idea that someone else says you must believe in. Not only believe, but actually become unquestioningly congruent with ? That would be true belief rather than going through the motions kinds of belief.

So, what will happen, if some believe that there are no censors and that freedoms of expression, and association, are truly in existence and vouchsafed ? Will those then exist, in a manner that they did not exist while the belief was contrary ?

Would be an interesting experiment, wouldn't it ?

M.

↑ Index

203. Michael J. Kelleher
Frank O'Hara
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Hello all.

I'm writing something on Frank O'Hara/the Kantian sublime and was wondering if anyone had any relevant suggestions regarding critical material on either. Please backchannel if you can help. Thanks.

Truly,

Mike

↑ Index

204. David Kellogg
The last book
Wed 8 Apr 1998

The book is dead! Long live the book!

Interesting article in today's NY Times on a technology being developed by MIT media labs that will combine digital and print technologies in really interesting new ways. http://www.nytimes.com/library/arts/040898book.html

More technical description available at http://www.almaden.ibm.com/journal/sj/363/jacobson.html

~~~
~~~

f). any specific religious group
g). any specific political party or affiliation h). the opposite gender i). one's co-workers
j). the CIA, FBI, KGB, CSIS or any similar group k). the military of one's own country l). any allied military m). aliens from outer space n). competitors in any endeavour one is involved in o). any psychiatrist or psychologist (guise of therapeutics) p). other professionas (particularly lawyers and doctors) q). any government agency (particularly the revenuers, taxation) r). scientists conducting experiments on human subjects s). wealthier people
t). poorer people
u). the mafia (and any similar organization) v). charities and similar institutions w). an employer, or corporation that one works for x). any other identifiable organization or institution

y). THE ENEMY IS ANY OF THE ABOVE.

z). THE ENEMY SEEMS TO BE ANY OF THE ABOVE, BUT IN THIS GAME EVERY ENEMY IS WHO THEY IS NOT. THE ENEMY OFTEN APPEARS TO EMULATE ANOTHER GROUP OR INDIVIDUAL WHOM THEY ARE NOT. SOMETIMES THE ENEMY APPEARS TO EMULATE THEMSELVES, HOPING THAT THE BELIEF THAT THEY WOULD NEVER REVEAL / APPEAR AS THEMSELVES WILL FOOL THOSE WHOM THE ENEMY HAS ATTACKED / ATTEMPTED TO SUBVERT, CONVERT OR OTHERWISE INFLUENCE AND USE.

If you answered any of (a) to (x) score NEGATIVE ten for each answer.

If you answered (y) score 1 point for being so naive.

If you answered (z) score 100 points. Perfect score.

Very rudimentary psi-warfare. Also epidemic in anything that is even remotely connected with intelligence work. Sadly few people are properly trained and it affects a lot of very peripheral areas to what we would consider areas of stratetic and intelligence interests.

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

206. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Sembrar la memoria Tammy Wynette
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Sembrar la memoria

Tammy Wynette

--dbc

↑ Index

207. main
sontag/godot/bosnia
Wed 8 Apr 1998

---

several years ago i saw a documentary on the war in bosnia ("saravejo: ground zero"), which included a brief interview w susan sontag. she was working with local actors to put on a stage production of "waiting for godot," using the bombed-out streets of sarajevo as "stage". does anyone know if this production was recorded on film? "sarajevo: ground zero" was never released commercially in the u.s. any information, please backchannel. thanks, dan featherston

↑ Index

208. morpheal
Re: Alien Dreams
Wed 8 Apr 1998

> One woman's vivid dream of aliens could be another person's abduction experience. I have heard descriptions of alien encounters all along the axis from one to the other.

Thomas De Quincy in "Confessions of an English Opium Eater", published in 1886, includes an account of what seems to be an abduction experience.

Simply read the "Analects from Richter: Dream Upon The Universe" p260 and following, and you will quickly see what I am referring to. The account describes a "dream" in which an alien being who travels the universe commanding motion by means of thought, takes the author to the far reaches of the universe and beyond it, traveling in space and time. It is as if the traveller goes into warp drive or hyper drive, with all the predicted visual effects.

It really is a quite typical account, even if expressed in the language of the previous century.

Then again, so is Ezekiel, and the Apocrypha even more so.

> Manifestations are often in remote sites. Perhaps it takes silence and loneness to render aliens visible & audible.

Sure, the kinds of places where trespassers are shot first, no questions asked.

I remember a story told by a UFO type, about such places. There was one such place where a diner stood by a roadside, run by a man and his wife. The sideroad nearby had a gate and fence, further down it. A typical guard post at the gate. A visitor asked the fellow who ran the diner: "can you tell me what they do over there, down that road, beyond that gate ?" The fellow in the diner answered: "sure, I can tell ya, but if I tell you, I would then have to shoot you".

> When it comes to UFOs, however, I now hear the one we saw might have been only a hologram : "We have long had that capability," a government spokesperson said.

I like the idea about the electromagnetic field generators, similar to the Philadelphia experiment story, that bent minds, light, radar, and every other kind of electromagnetic waveform a lot more than I like the idea of holograms. It is kind of like the difference between magick and magic. Those experiments go back to the 1940s. Even in Canada they flew large magnetos" (motor-generators) in transport planes to test the wave bending effects of the fields. Unlike the Philadelphia experiment, it was written up in the newspapers of that era.

If the Klingon Empire can have "cloaking devices" so can we.

Then again we thought we would never have supersonic flight, as the g forces would crush the pilot or render unconscious. The boffins proved to Truman that it could be done, using a V2 rocket modified with a titanium alloy compartment to carry a simian cargo. The simian monitored for consciousness by having to push on a button when a light came on at periodic intervals. A simple enough monkey trick, but it proved the point and a supersonic jet program, that led to the U2 followed quickly thereafter. Those aliens ought to have a heroic burial in Arlington, despite being simian rather than human. (The Roswell autopsy film is a blatent fake.) Without their sacrifice there would never have been appropriation for supersonic jets, and the U2 would never have been built in America. That would have likely meant the Cold War would have gone the other way around and we would be flying red flags over Washington and Ottawa.

As a futurist I am still predicting faster than light space travel, to distant solar systems, within this coming century. That, and one way time travel, into the past, but no return tickets once the traveller gets there, and very infinitismally little power to cause any significant changes beneath the burden of quantum histories. That would mean that observation of our barbaric ancestors will be possible. History, as we know it, will be a dead discipline, and the works of famous historians increasingly regarded as no more than curiosities of poetic fiction. (Those two ideas are connected. Same energy fields used for propulsion.)

A pot shard does not tell us as much as some seem to think that it does.

Besides that, most science fiction tends to be silly, very fanciful, stuff. William Gibson's writings, and a little of Michael Moorechock's writing (particularly The Cornelius Chronicles) seems more impressive. The latter is about parallel universes, strange loops, and such. The former about the more ominous side of cyber technology.

> "Mah fellow-americans, people of the world, aliens have their weapons of mass destruction trained on our largest cities. We must comply with their requests...."

Who is to say that some day they might not arrive at this planet, if they have not already, and find it inadequately defended. This planet having been too busy fighting faction against faction among its own, and neglecting defence against rival technological species from beyond.

They might not want to share the universe with us. What then ? In fact we can almost bet that they will not want to share it.

I say we should point some guns into space. In case THEY come to take over, conquer, enslave, harvest, or species compete, with US !

That should keep the high tech economy going for at least a few decades.

Why does that attitude remind me of Heinlein's view of the universe. I think he likely understood it better than most of the other SF writers have understood it. There is no reason whatever to believe in "friendly" or "benevolent" aliens, and much less reason to believe that "advanced species" in terms of technological ability and intelligence are inevitably more benevolent and "civilized" than the primitive, warlike, sometimes brutal, humans tend to be.

M.

↑ Index

209. Marcella Durand
Aliens at Zinc Bar
Wed 8 Apr 1998

Dan, that opium pipe was actually a SPACE PHASER
and you are now en route to
PLANET POME,
(which involves Jim Beam & lots of construction).

Great reading last Sunday
and don't forget to return April 12th
for Robbert Pinnsky & Oppen Mike, $75.

See you at the symp id et inven titty tion osium.

↑ Index

210. morpheal
Re: The last book
Wed 8 Apr 1998

> The book is dead! Long live the book!
>
> Interesting article in today's NY Times on a technology being developed by MIT media labs that will combine digital and print technologies in really interesting new ways.
> http://www.nytimes.com/library/arts/040898book.html
>
> More technical description available at
> http://www.almaden.ibm.com/journal/sj/363/jacobson.html

>he horizon is the advent of giant and colossal magnetoresistance (GMR and CMR), >[10] soon to be commercialized, which holds the prospect for extremely dense >magnetic media. GMR should realize between 3.5 and 35 gigabytes (GB) in a >PCMCIA format--already more books than the average individual reads in a >lifetime. CMR holds the prospect of 10 times this capacity, or 350 GB in the >same format. In the longer term, atomic force microscope drives hold the >prospect of truly gargantuan storage. To date such a drive has been >demonstrated with an information density capable of holding 10 terabytes (TB) >in a PCMCIA-size device with data rates of 1.2 megabits per second >(Mb/s). [11] Such a capacity is able to hold (using only modest compression) >the entire United States Library of Congress, whose holdings number some 20 >million volumes. Such a device is in effect a single-volume library.

Factual and terrific,....

Electronic data of that kind is infinitely mutatable and thus mtuable.

Consider how anyone would ever know what had changed, been revised, been edited.

What does one check the electronic copy against to verify that it is a bona-fide, accurate, reproduction of the original ?

Thus, the words of Thomas Jefferson, or John Fitzgerald Kennedy, that we might have read, or our predecessors might have read, and which were the same, might no longer be the same for our successors.

Worse yet, they would never know, never be certain, of that having happened.

Potentially, the potential of this new technology, if it were to become _the_ mode of conveyance of the "written" word, makes King James and his revisionist efforts look Mickey Mouse in comparison to what could happen as regards revision of any author's works.

Taken to extremes even the electronic Bill Shakespeare of a century from now might have no resemblance to the hard copy William Shakespeare of today.

M.

↑ Index

211. Rachel Levitsky

Re: Alien thoughts

Thu 9 Apr 1998

I also enjoyed _Mysterious Skin_ by Scott Heim, especially the memories of sticking his arm into the guts of a goat?

all vaguery,
Rachel Levitsky

[redacted] wrote:
>
> Karen Kelley wrote . . .
>
> >This is perhaps a strange request: last night I had the most remarkable > >dream about extraterrestrials (something I've never dreamed about > >before) perhaps masquerading as god figures, but it occurs to me that > >I've always been too cynical to do more than assume extraterrestrials > >must exist. Does anyone have any reading to suggest? I'm not > >particularly interested in "proof" stories or "scary alien" stories, > >perhaps something more along the lines of what they might represent to > >us philosophically/psychologically?
>
> Katy's already suggested Spahr's book "Response" which is a good one. Let > me recommend a novel "Mysterious Skin" by a young New Yorker Scott Heim, it > is really terrific and is totally about the psychological appeal of aliens, > why we need them, etc. When I was almost 30 I came to "realize" that I had > been abducted by aliens briefly in childhood, and I drew upon this > experience to write a memoir "Santa," which now appears in my book "Little > Men" (which of course you don't want to miss in any case). I got some of > it right, but Scott and Juliana get more of it.
>
> --Kevin Killian <---- space "cadet" fanboy

↑ Index

212. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Alien thoughts
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Laura,

I loved _The Thing_. Thanks for posting it.

RDL

↑ Index

213. Susan Schultz
TINFISH 6 is now available
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Tinfish 6 is now available. Contributors, from Hawai`i, Australia, California and other places, include Caroline Sinavaiana-Gabbard, Joe Balaz, Normie Salvador, Bill Marsh, John Kinsella, Mary Burger, Daniel A. Kelin, II, Zhang Er (translated by Arpine Konyalian Grenier), Gwyn McVay, Gabrielle Welford, Michael Robbins, Kamaka Kanekoa, Ida Yoshinaga, Elizabeth Treadwell, Bobbie West, John Tranter, G. Tracy Grinnell, Pam Brown, Liz Waldner, Karen Kelley, Brian Carpenter, Bill Luoma, Joe Ross, with a review of Albert Saijo's _Outspeaks: A Rhapsody_, by Juliana Spahr.

Issues are $5 each; subscriptions to three issues are $13. Chapbooks still available by Kathy Dee Kaleokealoha Kaloloahilani Banggo, _4-evaz, Anna_ ($4) and by Susan M. Schultz and John Kinsella, _voice-overs_ ($4), from Tinfish Network.

Write checks to _Tinfish_ and send to Susan M. Schultz, editor; 47-391 Hui Iwa Street #3, Kaneohe, HI 96744.

Thanks,

Susan

Susan M. Schultz
Dept. of English
1733 Donaghho Road
University of Hawai'i-Manoa
Honolulu, HI 96822

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/schultz
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/tinfish

↑ Index

214. david bromige
re : Alien Dreams
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Thanks to Morpheal for his rich response to this thread. I would like to know more about the Philadephia experiment. And about the electro-magnetic bending of waves, time and minds.

My imagined Presidential address ("Mah fellow americans", etc) might also be fronting for a corporate takeover of the world. In this scenario, there are no aliens, only a President saying so; only a simulation of alien invasion, in order to clamp down on humanity in an entirely exploitative fascism. In this scenario, all the arranged "visitations" and "sightings" had been intented, all along, to lead to this clampdown. Our minds were being softened up.

When will that movie be made? David

↑ Index

215. Miekal And the fetish of psychotronics
Thu 9 Apr 1998

morpheal wrote:

> QUESTION: Does anyone know of poetry about the new physics, about quanta, anomalies and new cosmological ideas ?
>
> Would be interested in author, title, publication, info, if you know of any.

who needs poetry when you have Charles Hoy Fort, Book of the Damned.

& would highly recommend the Holographic Universe, whose author escapes me this morning because my mind has escaped me...but its premise, one which seems in vogue with a lot of new physics & psychotronics studies is that the brain is a 3-D decoder for a holographic universe. which goes far measures to explain madness from the viewpoint of the mad, the presence & onmiscience of the navaho language, & even some of the experiments with ketamine users accessing the same shared tripping space & being able to navigate thru a consensus other reality.

& of course the classic from the 20th century poetry of edge is Alfred Jarry's How to construct a time machine. whose title Im probably also screwing up cuz I dont have it in front of me.

on beyond

miekal

↑ Index

216. Sylvester Pollet
matzoh poetics
Thu 9 Apr 1998

a friend sent me this, and it did awaken many possibilities. Onomatzohpoeia.

> A Jewish man took his Passover lunch to eat outside in the park. He sat down on a park bench and began eating. A little while later a blind man came by and sat down next to him. Feeling neighborly, the Jewish man passed a sheet of matzoh to the blind man. The blind man handled the matzoh for a few minutes, looked puzzled, and finally exclaimed: "Who wrote this shit?"

↑ Index

217. Jordan Davis
matzoh placards
Thu 9 Apr 1998

's different from the matzoh placards protecting Commander Papend's duplicate Venice from the killer bees in _The Duplications_ .. thanks, Sylvester, gud yan-tov, shalom .. Jordan

↑ Index

218. morpheal
Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
Thu 9 Apr 1998

> Thanks to Morpheal for his rich response to this thread. I would like to know more about the Philadephia experiment. And about the electro-magnetic bending of waves, time and minds.

Let's say that in theory strong and directed electromagnetic fields could cause sensory aberations, as well as disorders of perception and cognition, including disorders as to internal time consciousness. The latter is not "time" as such, (the successive flow of events, including cause and effect chains of events), but only the perception of time internal to the mind. (That ITC distortion could occur in any species, not only in humans.) Strong EMR of some kinds can also have considerable effects on the nervous system such that the sense of body and its spatial orientation would be peripherally effected along with perhaps some physical functions (coordination, etc.)

The movie was very silly, as was the story it was based upon. Electromagnetic fields of the kind that would have been used to cloak ships at sea could NEVER result in "time travel", in any circumstances. Distortion of internal time consciousness, of time perception, could never even result in an _apparent_ but not real, displacement of objects within the temporal stream of from past to future.

Simply not possible. This apparent distortion would be simply distortions of quantum events in the brain. Displacements of electrons and alterations of electron spin, would be enough, if enough were affected, to cause hallucinations, and extremely disordered thinking, including loss of sense of place and time. That is only a loss of the mental sense of where and when, but not actual physical, spatial-temporal, displacement.

(If time travel is possible, and I believe that it is possible, it is an entirely different phenomenon, and requiring generation of a different kind of field. Likely tachyons, rather than tardyons, meaning faster than light quanta. That is not, I tend to believe, a question concerning an Einsteinian 4 dimensional universe anymore, but leads to new paradigms. Had a somewhat long discussion on that in Internet's sci.physics conference some years ago, as to the possibility of at least a 5 dimensional universe, with a tachyonic mirror image to the tardyonic one we live in, and all those luxons popping in and out at the boundary. The Philadelphia experiment would most probably have bent the paths of luxons (light and electrons, mostly). The electromagnetic fields, if as strong as the stories indicate, having effects on radio, radar, and sonar, making the ships apparently "invisible".)

> My imagined Presidential address ("Mah fellow americans", etc) might also be fronting for a corporate takeover of the world. In this scenario, there are no aliens, only a President saying so; only a simulation of alien invasion, in order to clamp down on humanity in an entirely exploitative fascism. In this scenario, all the arranged "visitations" and "sightings" had been intented, all along, to lead to this clampdown. Our minds were being softened up.
>
> *When will that movie be made? David*

Good question.

The interesting thing is that if the universe is non Einsteinian, and a new paradigm evolves, making Einstein's universe as obsolete a model as is Newton's (though nevertheless continuing to be useful in its own ways), then inter dimensional aliens could be a reality. They could be mostly tachyonic (faster than light) quanta, whereas we are mostly tardyonic (slower the light) quanta. That would account for inter-dimensionals being seen as shimmers of light. That would be Chernkov radiation, which would be luxons emitted by tachyons that are slowed down when involved in densities of tardyons and some luxons where more collisions occur. The Kirlian aura of human forms might also be our tachyonic "souls" and seen only when electrons interfere with tachyons such that Cherenkov-like radiation (as light) is emitted.

Makes for interesting speculation.

What it has to do with poetics....I won't hazard a guess. Though I sometimes allude to cosmology in some of my poems. So did Gregory Corso, and some others. "Mind Field" I think is the title of one of Corso's pieces. I do not have a complete copy, but have read some of it on the net.

QUESTION: Does anyone know of poetry about the new physics, about quanta, anomalies and new cosmological ideas ?

Would be interested in author, title, publication, info, if you know of any.

M.

↑ Index

219. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies

Thu 9 Apr 1998

Gee, all this time I thought the "Philadelphia Experiment" was a reference to Ron Silliman living in PA while still rooting for the Giants.

↑ Index

220. William Marsh

Re: the fetish of psychotronics

Thu 9 Apr 1998

> & would highly recommend the Holographic Universe, whose author escapes me this morning because my mind has escaped me...but its premise, one which seems in vogue with a lot of new physics & psychotronics studies is that the brain is a 3-D decoder for a holographic universe. which goes far measures to explain madness from the viewpoint of the mad, the presence & onmiscience of the navaho language, & even some of the experiments with ketamine users accessing the same shared tripping space & being able to navigate thru a consensus other reality.

authored by Michael Talbot

- -

William Marsh | PaperBrainPress
http://bmarsh.dtai.com

- -

↑ Index

221. Joseph Noble
"Here" and Zinc Bar Query
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Does anyone out there know how I can get on a mailing list for "Here" and Zinc Bar readings or how I can find out who's reading there this month. They're not listed in this month's NYC poetry calendar. Please either backchannel me at <[redacted]> or post the info on the list - maybe others on the list would like to know? Thanks much. Joseph Noble

↑ Index

222. louis stroffolino
Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Such tricks hath strong imagination!
well, morpheus, i wanna see that bromige movie too,
yours,
the alien formerly known as egeus.....
c

On Wed, 8 Apr 1998, morpheal wrote:

> Is it in the repressive america censorship
>
> Does that exist more because a significant portion of people BELIEVE that it exists, or because there are censors actually censoring ?
>
> Does it exist more because some significant portion of the people who believe it exists are intimidated, because they believe something nasty will happen to them if they cease to believe in it ? Kind of similar to the concept of burning in hellfire if you do not believe in an idea that someone else says you must believe in. Not only believe, but actually become unquestioningly congruent with ? That would be true belief rather than going through the motions kinds of belief.
>
> So, what will happen, if some believe that there are no censors and that freedoms of expression, and association, are truly in existence and vouchsafed ? Will those then exist, in a manner that they did not exist while the belief was contrary ?
>
> Would be an interesting experiment, wouldn't it ?
>
> M.

↑ Index

223. Miekal And
Re: Poetics of collage?
Thu 9 Apr 1998

poetics of collage = xerolage

_____
http://net22.com/neologisms/xe.html

↑ Index

224. morpheal
Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
Thu 9 Apr 1998

> Such tricks hath strong imagination!
> well, morpheus, i wanna see that bromige movie too,
> yours,
> the alien formerly known as egeus.....
> c

I am able, and at times have necessarily had to suspend all assumptions, all beliefs, and all imagination. Otherwise those cloud and colour perception with falsification as to what is sensed. (Phenomenological methods again.)

Also able to almost totally resist hypnotic suggestion.

Trust me, it is possible.

Regardless of what some say about it being impossible.

M.

↑ Index

225. morpheal
Re: the fetish of psychotronics
Thu 9 Apr 1998

> & would highly recommend the Holographic Universe, whose author escapes me this morning because my mind has escaped me...but its premise, one which seems in vogue with a lot of new physics & psychotronics studies is that the brain is a 3-D decoder for a holographic universe. which goes far measures to explain madness from the viewpoint of the mad, the presence & onmiscience of the navaho language, & even some of the experiments with ketamine users accessing the same shared tripping space & being able to navigate thru a consensus other reality.
>
> authored by Michael Talbot

Chuckle....that recent.....Let's go back a ways, to the turn of the previous century and Nikolas Tesla.....

Found at http://pages.nyu.edu/~jqs1209/tower.htm

What seems most interesting is that the Wardenclyffe facility was completed BEFORE 1906. So this quote is prior to 1906.

"As soon as [the Wardenclyffe plant is] completed, it will be possible for a business man in New York to dictate instructions, and have them instantly appear in type at his office in London or elsewhere. He will be able to call up, from his desk, and talk to any telephone subscriber on the globe, without any change whatever in the existing equipment. An inexpensive instrument, not bigger than a watch, will enable its bearer to hear anywhere, on sea or land, music or song, the speech of a political leader, the address of an eminent man of science, or the sermon of an eloquent clergyman, delivered in some other place, however distant. In the same manner any picture, character, drawing, or print can be transferred from one to another place..."

- Nikola Tesla

M.

> -
> William Marsh | PaperBrainPress
> http://bmarsh.dtai.com
> -

↑ Index

226. MAYHEW
April archives
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Aproximately 100 people have posted to the list this month (9 days old):

Morpheal leads the pack with 18 messages, Keston Sutherland a close second with 17, Rachel Levitsky a distant 3rd with 11. Perpetual favorites Gould and Damon don't seem to be in the running this month, though they may make a surge later in the month.

Favorite topics is aliens, with over thirty postings--a distant 2nd is "boring chitchat."

I have no conclusion to draw from this--just thought you'd like to know.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

227. Aldon Nielsen
Re: the Wright Reading
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Last night Jay Wright appeared at the California Institute of Arts (having read the previous day at Occidental College). He read portions of plays written over the past two decades (including portions of the play for Nicolas Guillen that appeared in the special Guillen issue of Callaloo [10.2 -- 1987 if you want to look it up]) -- One surprise was when he broke into song, in Spanish. I'd known that he was fluent in Spanish (he also read passages in Yoruba with no discernable American accent), but I hadn't known that he could sing. (also plays upright bass, though not at readings) --

Some of the work was from a recently completed ms. titled _Transformations_, which, if all goes well, will appear in a volume of collected poems soon.

Watch the Cambridge Univ. Press listings next year for a book by Carole Doreski that includes a substantial, and GOOD, chapter on Jay Wright's poetry.

Cigarettes in my mouth
to puncture blisters in my brain.
My bass a fine piece of furniture.
My fingers soft, too soft to rattle
rafters in second-rate halls.
The harmonies I could never learn
stick in Ayler's screams.

(from "The End of an Ethnic Dream" -- Jay Wright)

↑ Index

228. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Poetics of collage?
Thu 9 Apr 1998

---

best thing is to go library and check out listings under COLLAGE--too many books to name at once-- might start with Kurt Schwitters--collage poetry leading to sound poetry, environments (Merzbau) and performance (Ur Sonate)--

Rbt Motherwell (pretty good collage poet) edited Dada Painters & Poets--

Hans Richter (old Dada fella) very good on this in Dada Art and Anti Art many collections in many languages works of Heartfield for ex--political photomontage later--many works of Burroughs and Gysin influenced by principles of collage--cutup etc--

hope this of help

--dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

229. Susan Clark
Lindsay Hill address anyone?
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Hello, does anyone have a recent address for Lindsay Hill; a Memphis address I have doesn't work and it has come back with "no forward order on file"

thanks for any hints,

Susan

Susan Clark
RADDLE MOON
[redacted]

↑ Index

230. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: re : unsubscribe poetics
Thu 9 Apr 1998

---

this is a personal squawk, my partner, aka dbc had difficulty subscribing to poetics so ended up subscribing under my address. after few years I figure y'all could let him in on his address. I tried to unsub, have written requesting directions on onsubbing w/no response. am tired of wading thru all this stuff to get my mail (do I really care what the servers are called at SUNY buffalo? I DON'T THINK SO - now apparently is as hard to get off this list as get on so understand the crisppee's or whatever its name was' desperation

signed

despairing

↑ Index

231. Keston Sutherland
Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
Thu 9 Apr 1998

> I am able, and at times have necessarily had to suspend all assumptions, all beliefs, and all imagination.

it's rather a droll retort and basically unnecessary, but did you know yourself to be doing this because you assumed so, believed so or imagined so? whatever

↑ Index

232. Keston Sutherland
Re: April archives
Thu 9 Apr 1998

---

yeah so what - I resent, very slightly, being hoisted in this sample of wryness: the messages I've posted to the list were on serious issues or they were poems by myself or by others. I have made a particular effort to post pieces by Andrea Brady in the past week, that accounts for a good slice of my input. Nothing to say about aliens, except to mention Mandeville etc. What have you said?

↑ Index

233. Aldon Nielsen
Robeson, H.D., Bryher
Thu 9 Apr 1998

According to my TV guide, the American Movie Classics cable ch. is showing the seldom-seen silent film _Borderline_ tonight, which features Paul Robeson, H.D., Bryher, Kenneth MacPherson etc.

If true, this is not-to-be-missed -- check your local listings --

↑ Index

234. Mark Weiss
Re: the Wright Reading
Thu 9 Apr 1998

Wright read at UCSD this evening and reads at the Porter Troupe Gallery in San Diego tomorrow evening. A consummate craftsman and a poet of deep intelligence in three languages and several dialects. I'm embarassed to admit that I didn't know his work till this evening. He read a stunning longish poem the central imagery of which was derived from the Virgin of Guadeloupe. Copper Canyon is putting out a generous selected poems next year.

At 02:53 PM 4/9/98 -0700, you wrote:
>Last night Jay Wright appeared at the California Institute of Arts (having >read the previous day at Occidental College). He read portions of plays >written over the past two decades (including portions of the play for >Nicolas Guillen that appeared in the special Guillen issue of Callaloo >[10.2 -- 1987 if you want to look it up]) -- One surprise was when he broke >into song, in Spanish. I'd known that he was fluent in Spanish (he also >read passages in Yoruba with no discernable American accent), but I hadn't >known that he could sing. (also plays upright bass, though not at >readings) --
>
>Some of the work was from a recently completed ms. titled >_Transformations_, which, if all goes well, will appear in a volume of >collected poems soon.
>
>Watch the Cambridge Univ. Press listings next year for a book by Carole >Doreski that includes a substantial, and GOOD, chapter on Jay Wright's poetry.
>
>
>Cigarettes in my mouth
>to puncture blisters in my brain.
>My bass a fine piece of furniture.
>My fingers soft, too soft to rattle
>rafters in second-rate halls.
>The harmonies I could never learn
>stick in Ayler's screams.
>
>	(from "The End of an Ethnic Dream" -- Jay Wright)
>
>

↑ Index

235. Rprunty
Raworth's appeal
Fri 10 Apr 1998

I'm relatively new to the list and thought I'd try again to stir up some discussion. I have been reading Tom Raworth's book Eternal Sections and just keep coming back to it. So far, however, I haven't really been able to articulate much what I like about it. It doesn't seem flashy in its form, and only occasionally does a single line or phrase jump out at me as terrific, but the cumulative experience of reading several pages in a sitting is quite satisfying. No, more than that...exciting. It encourages me to write, but I don't know why. In a Perloff article called Sentence, Not Sentence she mentions the variety of Rawoth's lines. Meaning, that in his blocks of verse, no two lines of the same sentence structure are next to each other. This is interesting to me, and I'm sure the variety in the syntatical structure as well as the variety of the way it looks on the page is part of the appeal. But... that still doesn't seem to be enough to explain why it seems like such great stuff to me. Maybe that's why they call it poetry. Any thoughts from other Raworth fans?

Randy Prunty

↑ Index

236. Robert Hale to see -- once more -- the stars.
Fri 10 Apr 1998

For those of you still on line on the East Coast, try to look the window around 4am this morning (still Thursday for me) and look at the stars, if it's clear, of course. That view and time is vaguely in accordance with the narrative action of Dante's Inferno, where at the end of the first part of the Divine Comedy (presumably, the pre-dawn Friday after Maundy Thursday -- I'd say about 4am), "I" emerges out of "the despondent kingdom" "to see --once more-- the stars."

E quindi uscimmo a riveder le stelle.

You also may want to read the rest of Dante's great poem, concluding with Paradisio on Easter Sunday.

Now, 9:30pm here in California, would be about the time to begin reading the Inferno out loud. You'd finish around 4am (including coffee breaks) and walk outside to see the stars. Unfortunately, it's partly cloudy here in SF tonight and who knows when the fog will roll in.

↑ Index

237. Ryan Whyte

Letter (fwd)

Fri 10 Apr 1998

Dear Schiller

What will you make of my blotted scrawls, my backtrackings, my marble powderings, my breathless cries? What will you think, what will you say? What airs will hover abating silence in the valleys of your homelands, your lips pressed tight --

I fell in the sublime you wrote me of, because I cannot call your existence into question, I cannot wipe away the grounds. You, springing out of that which you have written me so many times in the past. For it is the unreasonableness of that ground which accords - as in the only condition which unreasonableness is in accord, namely, with itself - for it is your scaffolding which you have inherited, your "nobilities," your "grandeurs," as if somehow coursing, as you wrote, in your skies, your rivers. The ramparts of your homelands.

What goes unseen in you? What would you say of this purest of loving, spilt in the gorge?

How would I love you, Schiller - dare I say, with these sublime tremblings?

I give myself to your chasms, your untended plains, your deserts crisscrossed, your senseless woods, your terrors, your sleeplessness: the peaks of your glacial S, your R eternally flaming. (Forgiveness: what is more natural, then, of nature's nature, than _the persistence of the letter_? That _is_ what you seek, no?)

This is how you find me. How do you find me? It is not to ask of drive, fulfillments, celestial mechanics, traces of which we are party to in your cosmology.

To elevate is to stand next to the hole. This I have learned. I ask for your altitudes, I pay homage to scraped lands I don't know, I pummel French gardens for you, I raze cities. I would win your heart - not wishing, lamely, for a lover's arrival, but instead superimposing with absolute moral force, without the investment du couer, the usury du sang; disinterestedly, distractedly.... Naturally I would turn my back on you if you came, what unfathomable travesty to see your face....

Schiller, my impossible, my ten thousand lapis washes. What would you make of my ceaseless mutterings, my Freud, my Marcuse? What would you _do_, with my burned letters, my false starts, my fevers, my inexplicable clutter across these cities? I can't very well give these manifestations, my persons in wartime and in peacetime, the one and the other, so incommensurable; I can't seep into the page, drawing across the ink without, once, blushing....

This envelope is white. That you can see.

R

↑ Index

238. rsillima
John Granger's Organs
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Folks familiar with John Granger or the San Diego scene may want to know that this week's issue of the San Diego Reader has a big cover story by John on the topic of the city's more than 100 pipe organs.

The reader can be accessed at www.sdreader.com

Ron

↑ Index

239. rsillima
Mondegreens
Fri 10 Apr 1998

A piece in the NY Times today on Mondegreens, with links to sites such as The Ants Are My Friends and Kiss This Guy:

http://www.nytimes.com/library/tech/98/04/circuits/articles/09song.html

↑ Index

240. charles alexander local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Here's from the electronic version of the Arizona Daily Star in Tucson. I was not at the performance, but I have heard people who were at it say it was great, and that it was awful (both in terms of the issue of sexually explicit poetry in a performance involving young children; and in terms of the quality of the work). I have to admit that I was somewhat surprised to hear months ago that the Festival had invited Byrkit, but my surprise was not based on the explicit nature of her work. I don't think the Festival should have been at all surprised at the kind of poetry Becky was reading, and although it's clear she didn't give much clue to her young performers or their parents, I also think the Festival might have been just a little more on top of the issue in advance, knowing Becky's work.

charles

Poet `ambushes' kids in choir

[photo of Byrkit] Becky Byrkit, an award-winning poet and adjunct instructor at the University of Arizona's English Department, invited the Vail choir to sing while she read her poetry.

Sexually explicit verses stun Vail singers, parents at reading
By Monica Mendoza
The Arizona Daily Star

Parents say Old Vail Middle School choir members were betrayed by a local poet when they unwittingly became part of her erotic poetry reading.

Choir members agreed to sing on stage for Becky Byrkit while she performed before a crowd of more than 200 at last weekend's 16th annual Tucson Poetry Festival.

They had practiced the words of the song ``Roam'' by the rock group B-52s and showed up on stage Friday evening in blue jeans, plain shirts and barefoot - just as Byrkit requested. They were told the theme of the festival was geography.

But Byrkit launched into smoldering erotic poetry that turned their little faces red and sent parents into a fit of anger.

``She began reciting in explicit detail about oral sex, gay sex and sex in the back seat of a car,'' said parent Larry Williams, whose daughter and niece, both 12, were in the choir.

``She talked about God in a negative way,'' said Rita Lake, mother of 12-year-old Daniel. ``My son was crying as he walked off the stage.''

Daniel, whose family is very religious, was confused and hurt by Byrkit, Lake said.

Minutes into Byrkit's reading, the 18 children were herded off stage by the Vail choir instructor. After her one-hour performance, parents demanded to know why Byrkit ``ambushed'' their kids.

According to parents, Byrkit never apologized for the explicit poetry - only that she was sorry the children didn't get to sing their song.

Two parents filed complaints early this week with the Pima County Attorney's Office saying Byrkit violated decency laws by exposing them to obscene material. An investigator has been assigned to the case.

Parents also wrote angry letters to the Tucson Poetry Festival and its sponsors voicing their disgust. Festival organizers, who said they were just as shocked at Byrkit's choice of reading with the children present, said this is an unfair black eye on their otherwise successful event.

``This is an issue between Becky, the parents and the teacher,'' said John Hudak, president of the board that oversees the festival. ``We feel victimized in our own right.''

Byrkit did not use vulgarity in her performance, said Scott Stanley, publisher of the bimonthly magazine Tucson Poet. The language was sexually laced without being explicit, he said.

``It was over the heads of 13-year-olds - I don't think they had a clue,'' Stanley said. ``It was clear to the parents what she was saying.''

Byrkit would not comment on the situation under the advisement of her attorney.

``I'll give you a call as soon as counsel says it is advisable to speak to you,'' she said in a telephone message. ``In the meantime, if you could, just chill.''

Byrkit, an award-winning poet and adjunct instructor at the University of Arizona's English Department, invited the Vail choir to sing while she read her poetry at the festival, which was at the Tucson Center for Performing Arts, 408 S. Sixth Ave.

The two had paired in the past for a Christmas poetry reading at The Voice and Range, a poetry consulting service Byrkit runs out of her home.

That performance was tasteful, said Vail Superintendent Calvin Baker.

No one knew Byrkit planned to read poems about sex in this second meeting. The children, ages 11-13, rehearsed with Byrkit the previous Thursday afternoon, Baker said. But ``she didn't read her part,'' he said.

The teacher and the children didn't ask for details about her reading because ``they had worked with her and trusted her,'' Baker said.

``The children's trust was violated,'' Baker said. ``They were embarrassed by it and upset.''

Byrkit is known for her steamy poetry, said local poet Dave Mitchell. In 1995 she published her first book, ``Zealand'' - a collection of poems that one critic said ``resuscitates . . . language in a phantasmagoria of erotic encounters.'' She has been a featured poet in the Bisbee Poetry Festival and is a 1993 winner of a statewide poetry contest.

``The erotic content is her vehicle to be deconstructionist with her style,'' Mitchell said. ``If eating a cheeseburger was taboo in polite circles, she would be writing about cheeseburgers.''

Byrkit was invited as one of the six featured poets in this year's festival because ``she is an up-and-coming poet,'' said Hudak, president of the board that oversees the festival. ``She has been controversial - we have not been afraid of that.''

But Hudak said festival organizers were surprised to find out that Byrkit had not informed the Vail teacher or students of her complete program.

``As far as we knew, she had worked with the teacher and the kids,'' he said. ``There were parent permission slips and there were rehearsals.''

Poets are not asked in advance for their material, he said. And many create new pieces for the festival.

Byrkit's piece was called: ``Suite: Cowpunk Réal.'' In a pamphlet for the show she described the three-part reading as a compilation composed with three other poets. One part was improvisational and the third part was titled, ``Roam'' - that is where the children were to sing.

Neither the county attorney nor the festival committee has a copy of the poem. However, the show was videotaped and that tape will be given to the county attorney for its investigation.

Meanwhile, the festival committee will send letters of apology to all the parents and children involved, Hudak said.

``We feel badly for the parents,'' he said. ``We feel and have expressed to Becky that she didn't handle this well.''

In the future, the festival committee will take more precautions, Hudak said. The committee will make sure that all parties performing in the show are aware of each other's part in the show. No surprises, he said.

Williams questioned whether the children's reaction was meant to be part of Byrkit's performance. He wants her to publicly apologize to the children.

``I think she needs to be punished,'' he said. ``No children should be subjected to something like this.''

↑ Index

241. Robert Archambeau
Talisman Hegemony at Last!
Fri 10 Apr 1998

So there I was in downtown Lake Forest, IL on my way to grab what passes for a bagel around here when I see a stack of the Jarnot/Schwartz/Stroffolino Talisman "Anthology of New (American) Poets" gleaming in the window display of the local B. Dalton's.

Given the sort of books they normally carry, this is an occurence on par with seeing a cardboard cutout of Tom Raworth in the window of the local hardware store. Whoever is handling distribution at Talisman House has my eternal admiration. Today B. Dalton, tomorrow the world!

By the way -- anyone else find Rosmarie Waldrop's cover blurb -- "it's the language of the future" a little ominous? Will the second edition say "We will bury you"?

Best,

Bob

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

242. r. drake
COMMA to perform at Ruthless Grip (fwd)
Fri 10 Apr 1998

> Date: Fri, 10 Apr 1998 09:18:27 -0400 (EDT)
> From: Tom Bickley <[redacted]>
> Subject: COMMA to perform at Ruthless Grip
>
> Comma is a vocal trio consisting of Joe Zitt, Matt Davis and Tom Bickley. We'd be pleased to have you at our performance. Please pass this information along to others. Thanks! -Tom
>
> You are invited to come experience life as art on Saturday, April 18th in the final evening of performance in conjunction with:
>
> Cooks Smell Time
> at
> R u t h l e s s G r i p
>
> "A Sub-Neocortal Non-Logic Exhibition/Performance with Precision"
> (an installation running March 13 through April 18)
>
> Featured on this evening will be the vocal trio, Comma. Starting at 7:30, they will inhabit a sonic dimension of the exhibit, improvising and interpreting both space and time, interacting with the installations.

> Vision, language, sound, movement, body and time combine into an experience within which we can live and enjoy. It is a circus of possibility and conversation.
>
> Participating artists include Nicola Bastian, Alex Bay, Reginald Crump, Perreaoult Daniels, Jason Ditzian, Bev Donnenfeld Chello, Harvey Fry, Heather Fuller, Michael Gessner, Stuart Greenwell, Amherick Hall, Dawn Hannaham, Isabel Hon, Joanne Kent, Rogelio Maxwell, Marc Millene, Jane Schloss Phelan, Gabriela Pohl, Joan Retallack, Kathy Satterlee, Jerry Smith, Michael Sprouse, David Valentine, Ann Wallace, Mark Wallace, Maida Withers.
>
> WHO: Comma in performance
> WHAT: 'Cooks Smell Time'
> WHEN: Saturday, April 18, 7:30 PM
> WHERE: Ruthless Grip Art Project
> 1508 U Street, NW
> Washington, DC 20009
> [redacted]
>
> Contact information for Comma:
> PHONE: [redacted]
> EMAIL: [redacted]
> URL: http://www.artswire.org/comma

↑ Index

243. Keston Sutherland
(no subject)
Fri 10 Apr 1998

> ``She talked about God in a negative way,'' said Rita Lake, mother of 12-year-old Daniel. ``My son was crying as he walked off the stage.''

burroughs is alive and well and writing in Tucson, this made me laugh in loud

↑ Index

244. Keith Tuma
Re: Raworth's appeal
Fri 10 Apr 1998

> I'm relatively new to the list and thought I'd try again to stir up some discussion. I have been reading Tom Raworth's book Eternal Sections and just keep coming back to it. So far, however, I haven't really been able to articulate much what I like about it. It doesn't seem flashy in its form, and only occasionally does a single line or phrase jump out at me as terrific, but the cumulative experience of reading several pages in a sitting is quite > satisfying. No, more than that...exciting. It encourages me to write, but I don't know why. In a Perloff article called Sentence, Not Sentence she mentions the variety of Rawoth's lines. Meaning, that in his blocks of verse, no two lines of the same sentence structure are next to each other. This is interesting to me, and I'm sure the variety in the syntatical structure as well as the variety of the way it looks on the page is part of the appeal. But... that still doesn't seem to be enough to explain why it seems like such great stuff to me. Maybe that's why they call it poetry. Any thoughts from other Raworth fans?

>
> Randy Prunty

113 reasons subject to typos.

The notion of working in fourteen line chunks.

Periodically what unfolds mimics the shape of a sentence, periodically.

Or not.

Simply put of infinite complexity.

Disjunction is a cliche.

More solid than that, meaty fibers, modular but fertilizer too.

Oh but yes the details.

Of phrase: "on an eight-minute nudge."

Of observation, as if ordinarily awed: "brilliance of the orange lily"

As if descriptively banal: "whistling near the river"

As if propositional: "such division into subjects/consequences of a failure"

Of detached affect, in media res: "fear that increases"

Of anger in stress and spondees: "most of the nation ignored/in droves during/ two hours of prime time"

Of unabashed despair: "we are now cut off"

Of performativity, blundering exact process constructed: "meaning is fluid"

Of devastated textbooks: "emphasising the purely decorative/ history repeats itself"

Speed speed speed, conceptual speed.

As if one more phrase would resolve the matter and you were in the middle of it.

Already started, humming along.

"two small cakes and one tart"

Of torque and juxtaposition: "attitudes do not necessarily change/arson, murders and assualts/in the three biggest economies/nurtured from the start/in a climate/of smelters"

Of aliens separating the metallic constituents. "Smelt."

Of narrative: of narratoology.

"a kind of delight/ which pluralises the meaning/demanded by gesture/but conserves it in the present"

"shadows made of wood"

"terrified whines pulsed"

"his brain refused to work"

Look ma, no hands.

That's not 113.

Back to work earning a living.

Hi Tom!

Milo, 3 months, 28 pounds.

Amut/Tuma.

↑ Index

245. daniel bouchard
in honor of nat'l poetry mnth/ only 20 days left
Fri 10 Apr 1998

"She talked about God in a negative way," said Rita Lake.
"My son Daniel was crying as he walked off the stage."

"She talked about God in a negative no way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel was crying as he was talked off the stage."

"Two dogs humped on the grass in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel was curious as he walked off the stage."

"She read poems about God in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel wrote a chapbook as he was led off the stage."

"She talked about negative ways in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel pierced his penis as he walked off the stage."

"She talked about Language Poetry in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel unsubscribed desparately as he signed off the stage."

"She crucified God in a negative way," said Rita Lake.
"My son Daniel highlighted his prayer book as he walked off the stage."

"She wrote a thesis about God in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel began a poetry slam as he walked on stage."

"She talked about the Poetics List in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel deleted her as he walked off the stage."

"She does anything she wants, she's an artist, she don't look back," said Rita Lake.
"My son Daniel's guitar kills fascists as he walks off the stage."

"She walks with a swagger in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel zoned out as he turned the next page."

"She talked about Rikki Lake in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel was on stage crying as he staged walking off the stage."

"She drank Jim Beam from a hip flask in a negative way," said Rita Lake. "My son Daniel corroborated on a poem as he lay down on the stage."

"She looked for a subway or a record shop or some sign that people do not totally regret life in a negative way," said Rita Lake.
"My son Daniel was crying as he set fire to the stage."

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

246. Hugh Steinberg
Re: local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Having known Becky Byrkit and her work for many years, having also worked for the Tucson Poetry Festival for a number of years, and having been at Becky's performance that night, I feel obliged to comment on the growing fiasco.

I've always admired Becky's work, but the performance that night was just humiliatingly awful, not because of Becky's writing but because of all the performance stuff she put around it. Frankly, children don't really have a place around Becky's work. Her work is often explicit and erotic and dwells in those dark regions your typical parent of a fourteen year old just does not want to think about. The song and dance performance was amateurish in the worst way (if she wanted song and dance, there are plenty of adult companies in Tucson she could have collaberated with). At many points during the reading, I caught her deliberately censoring herself onstage, removing the more graphic elements from her work. Those compromises weakened her work. She was clearly aware of the growing disaster that surrounded her that evening, and it showed in the growing awkwardness of her reading.

The kids seemed to be having a good time however. I suspect the kid was crying because his mom had just embarassed him in front of everyone by yanking him offstage. Lots of parents were pissed: the front three rows were emptied in such a fashion with angry parents and bewildered kids storming out.

One of the reasons I suspect Becky got trapped in this fiasco is because of an arts organization she heads, called "Voice and Range." The organization acts as a sort of networking group, connecting different artistic talents together for eductional and collaborative purposes. I suspect that much of the performances that night were set up through her organization. To be blunt, however, Becky should never have included children in her performance if she was going to read what she usually reads, especially if it hadn't been vetted through the parents of the kids.

As for the Tucson Poetry Festival's role in this, my impression was that they were basically ambushed (although this is not the first time this has happened: a similar event occurred several years ago when the theme of the festival was love poetry and the winner of a statewide poetry contest (who traditionally reads first on a Saturday night) brought her grandchildren to hear her read, only to be followed by some rather explicit homoerotic love poetry by Boyer Rickel and Marilyn Hacker). It's not the responsibility of a literary arts organization to oversee the work of readers. The Festival has a number of constituencies and has made a concerted effort to be as open and inclusive as possible. The Festival deliberately targets people who have never been to a poetry reading. Presenting the work of children has been an important part of this: a specific reading was set aside on a saturday afternoon of the festival in which children read their poetry. This event was very well attended, I doubt if any of the participants were at Becky's reading the night before.

The dilemma is not how to present poetry without offending anyone, the problem is making sure audiences have some idea of what they are getting so they don't feel ambushed. There's a lot of great poetry out there that some parents might feel is not appropriate for kids. At the same time, it would be absolutely dreadful if this was used as an excuse to keep kids away from all poetry. It would be equally dreadful if this was used as an excuse to shut down the Tucson Poetry Festival.

I'd like to hear from other people involved with literary arts organizations and reading series: how do you handle this issue, of kids and parents at readings, of presenting explicit work in a public forum?

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

247. Mark Prejsnar
Re: local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Wow!!

punishing poets for their work.....[I'm quoting the last sentence of the fascinating news account from Charles A.]

It isn't often we're treated as important enough to punish!! (Other than with nasty reviews..)

I'll leave it to the wittier Listfolk to ask the obvious questions about whether her interests include discipline...

I'll simply note the amazing quotation about how she "spoke negatively about God"!!! (this of course is said to have reduced a child to tears!)

Yup, this is certainly the good ol' USA.

amazed in atlanta,
m

↑ Index

248. henry
Re: to see -- once more -- the stars.
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Thanks, Robert. Interesting. At 2 pm today (Good Friday) I finished bk 2 of STUBBORN GREW THE ROSE. Bk2 is sort of a purgey (turgid?) oratorio called "Fox Point". I was up late on Maundy Thursday (approx. 1:30 am) working on it. Here's some stanzas I wrote at that hour:

Catch us the little foxes, Solomon, that spoil our vineyard. Lucky,

true love's the cardinal pt (sd Bluejay).
A monde, almond. All made. I thirsty, mon.

Upon a Roman rood was fixt clay lips gone underground. Still through the pinedoor, drifted sound.
Her calling me. A morning rose. Finixt.

4.9.98 (Maundy Thirsty)

look for it in black holes everywhere.

- Henry

↑ Index

249. Rprunty
Re: Raworth's appeal
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Keith/HtieK Tuma/Amut, Thanks for the response. Several of your "shots" give some language to my RaworthRumblings...."infinite complexity", "the details", "descriptively banal", "detached affect", especially contrasting with "unabashed despair". Don't know what "conceptual speed" is, but its got me intrigued. What I liked best was "As if one more phrase would resolve the matter and you were in the middle of it."

Here's one of my favorite "14 chunks" from Raworth... just in case you don't have Eternal Sections at hand.

we could turn to get his message
a few words phonetically achieving escape velocity dancing towards me near dawn
as if by accident missing pieces of information synchronise its release on a conscious basis animals always saw in the most economical fashion it makes no difference
we are now cut off

Randy Prunty

↑ Index

250. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: Poetics of collage?
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Three years ago I was a temp for a consulting firm that had just lost its main client, NASA. To burn off budgeted funds, they stuck me in a room with three other temps and no assignment except to sit, wait, and listen to a daily lecture about how big work was a-comin' our way.

Aside from two-hour lunches at the Smithsonian, I passed the time cutting panels out of the daily comics and reorganizing them so they made new comics. I still have this habit, and whenever I show them to people they say "gee you must have time on your hands."

Not really. But I'm attentive to a poetics of the comics page (maybe I should've made a new subject header) that is verbal, visual, narrative, repetitive, and occasionally perverse.

Try it. Or just try reading the page for individual panels. Mark Trail and the soaps are particularly wondrous, though Spiderman is probably the best with its days & days of absolutely nothing happening.

Kind of like being a temp... and like the three jobs I've had since.

Danny

---
phone 7-[redacted] --- fax 7-[redacted]

"I missed an appointment. Now they're going to smash my face." -- Kirpichi Tizhuli

↑ Index

251. Maz881
Re: anomalies
Fri 10 Apr 1998

also the morpheus asked a <<QUESTION: Does anyone know of poetry about the new physics, about quanta, anomalies and new cosmological ideas ?>>

Anything by Khlebnikov. Also a Chapbook by Me called Swoon Rocket published by the Figures available from small press distribution ([redacted]). This work mostly "about" gravitational lensing. You can also find this book at Club by Me on King and Isenberg in Honolulu.

Bill Luoma

also, recent qm tunneling experiments claim to prove superluminal velocites. on the notion that the tunneling time (the "time" when the particle is "inside" the barrier) is virtually zero.

http://www.uni-koeln.de/~abb11/workshop/announce.html

↑ Index

252. Maz881
San Francisco Reading
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Bill Luoma / Juliana Spahr
Saturday April 18th, 8:00pm @ New Langton Arts which is at 1246 Folsom, between 8th and 9th streets. [redacted] for info.

hope to see you california heads there.

↑ Index

253. morpheal
Re: anomalies
Fri 10 Apr 1998

> Anything by Khlebnikov. Also a Chapbook by Me called Swoon Rocket published by the Figures available from small press distribution ([redacted]). This work mostly "about" gravitational lensing. You can also find this book at Club by Me on King and Isenberg in Honolulu.
> Bill Luoma

Thanks.

For what little such things are worth, except as interesting science fiction, I had a lucid dream not long ago about what I believe is to be a launch facility for space vehicles that might be loosely termed "gravitational lensed" lensed" type propulsion systems. Gravity is inextricably linked with the superluminal, and a superluminal field, if contained/focused electromagetically to keep it from destroying the vehicle it is propelling and the lauch structure, could, I believe, in theory, be used instead of traditional rocket engines.

The dream was of a very huge concrete structure built into the earth. The walls were massive pourings, with a huge diameter hollow cylindrical shaped center. The walls had orifices or short protruberances (field generator outputs ?) located equidistant inside the cylinder. The upper surface indicated the pouring was at least fifty or more feet thick. The depth was undiscernable, but the visible portion was more than a hundred feet before the other side blocked vision into the hole in the middle. The surrounding terrain was blackened rock, very rough, weathered rock, foothills type rock, maybe slate or shale or something similarly coloured and nothing growing or living as far as I could see to the southwest of the structure.

Nothing comparable in my experiences. Might be a chanced on remote view.

If I am right, the superluminal field would be generated under the vehicle and the vehicle would be propelled upwards surrounded by a force field resembling a magnetic crucible force field from the sides and perhaps the bottom of the launch facility. If so, it would be out of there, once accelerated up to full tachyonic field strength, in less than a quick blink of an eye, and off into space.....The payload would be larger than the space shuttle. Much larger.

> also, recent qm tunneling experiments claim to prove superluminal velocites.
> on the notion that the tunneling time (the "time" when the particle is > "inside" the barrier) is virtually zero.

There was in fact a scientific report of the time between point of entry and point of exit being negative, rather than positive. I cannot remember the name of the researchers, but it jives with Dr. Sarfatti's contentions regarding the "back reaction" enabled by subliminals such that information is conveyed from the future to the past, making precognition possible even if exceptional.

You can find Jack Sarfatti and his organization on the world wide web. He is a mathematical physicist.

M.

↑ Index

254. RJRVE
Re: Was: Censorship and Belief NOW: Something of great constancy
Fri 10 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-09 17:21:18 EDT, you write:

Morpheal wrote:

<< I am able, and at times have necessarily had to suspend all assumptions, all beliefs, and all imagination. Otherwise those cloud and colour perception with falsification as to what is sensed. (Phenomenological methods again.)

Also able to almost totally resist hypnotic suggestion.

Trust me, it is possible.

Regardless of what some say about it being impossible.
>>

Now just where does such an experiment take one?
If you succeed, you can not possibly answer my question, no?

Richard Reeve

↑ Index

255. Maz881

Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies

Fri 10 Apr 1998

Bob Ez. is this what you mean by Cherenkov radiation (see definition below)? Can you provide a better definition than the one below? Can you provide an explanation why Cherenkov radiation is important to your argument or I guess I don't really understand tachyons and how they would emit light and what speeds that light would travel at?

Best,

Bill Luoma

definition of Cherenkov radiation from some web site: "it is also possible to use these same heliostats at night to collect the quick flashes of blue Cherenkov light that result from gamma ray air showers. These gamma rays originate from astrophysical sources at galactic and extragalactic distances. When they enter the earth's atmosphere, the gamma rays interact with air molecules, creating an extensive shower of high-energy particles. These particles go faster than the speed of light in air, and thus emit light, or Cherenkov radiation. This radiation (at optical and ultraviolet wavelengths) is beamed to the ground, where it is readily collected by the heliostat mirrors."

Morpheal wrote: <<The interesting thing is that if the universe is non Einsteinian, and a new paradigm evolves, making Einstein's universe as obsolete a model as is Newton's (though nevertheless continuing to be useful in its own ways), then inter dimensional aliens could be a reality. They could be mostly tachyonic (faster than light) quanta, whereas we are mostly tardyonic (slower the light) quanta. That would account for inter-dimensionals being seen as shimmers of light. That would be Chernkov radiation, which would be luxons emitted by tachyons that are slowed down when involved in densities of tardyons and some luxons where more collisions occur. The Kirlian aura of human forms might also be our tachyonic "souls" and seen only when electrons interfere with tachyons such that Cherenkov-like radiation (as light) is emitted.>>

↑ Index

256. ScoutEW
Poetics of comic strips
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Ever seen the stuff Ron Padgett and Joe Brainard have done with comics?
At the current display at the NY public library sits is one of their originals.
Comics sit side by side with poetry in my mind
some of my favorites
1 Daredevil
2 Mighty Mouse (yeah he was a superhero)
3 The Invisible Woman
4. Iron Fist and Power Man
5. Hawkeye and yours..

↑ Index

257. Hugh Steinberg
Re: local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Here's one of Becky Bykitt's poems, which was read that night (read underline signs for italics):

The Only Dance There Is

Oh no! He's going to _show_ it to me --
This gelatinous spore burst like a shot bird's foot -- Splayed, in the nest of his own little egg cup are. God!
Is it he, or is it I, in my white spikes and levis,
Peeling sweaty red labels off Buds, who becomes Slowly exposed, a pornographic snap developing
At a While-U-Wate Shak? Is it my turquoise lighter holder,
Or my voice, full of coins and strangulations,
That compels the alcoholics, the men I literally live for,
To repeatedly ask what I want? _Hey! What do you want?_
I know girls who dance in bars and marry, like, firemen.
This man here is so unemployed I could talk to him
All night. I'm saddled on a teetering labrador of lust, drunk
And ready to fill up a station wagon. It is the _degringolade_ of the species of woman I am --

The curl of my big leg and the smell of that sweat,
Redolent and in that Terrible Vicinity. Here _let me buy that,_

I am transmigrating in the _def leppard_ of my "desire"
And it has happened before, is happening, will happen again,
All of it. It's the old lovemaking in the cemetary routine,
    Johnny.
The last beauty I fell for drank me AND fucked me
Under the table. He said, "Hey there you little redheaded sweetiepie, you.
Perfection, my life is an open casket funeral; darling,
Our love is the visitation hour." You heard what he did next.
Frankly I still admire him.
I have nevernever touched myself so well,
Nor could I observe a man jerk off in a sock with such joy.
At times I swear the sex of the earth is the sponge and bedwash for Jesus.
At times I swear I could live with a man I'll call "Tom"
    forever: when we met he bound me with Venetian blind cord
And went down on me for roughly nine hours. He delivered
His own daughters' sons. You know how it must be for me.
Drunk in bars, I feel the righteous _ness_ of humidity and cherry, Initials carved in tequila-drenched grains with "surgical precision."
We are listing toward the primordial wind and I talk about men
To men. (Once, my hair caught fire in a tavern.
        The man who set it horsewhipped my head, singeing
      His shavebrush Stetson.)
An absolute glance. Tufts of botched permanent wave. O,
You drunk and fucked-up munificence. O, Unshaven, Midnight,
Kindly lubricate my introduction to the unspeakable ring of chaos
You understand to be your life. You will surely pull the coil out of my car.
Oh no! He's going to show it to me --
God save the two of us, supernova.

The poem is from her book "Zealand," and can be found in "Best American Poetry 1994."

Frankly we've all heard worse, the problem was audience. I think Becky Byrkit clearly screwed up big. The Tucson Poetry Festival got smeared in the process.

Rachel writes "there is nothing inherently damaging to children about sexual or homoerotic material."

I agree with this one hundred percent, but there are plenty of parents who disagree with this vehemently and who certainly do not want their kids performing on stage while such material is being presented.

The question is: do you screen those people out of your event, or do you program your event around those people? I suspect most organizations do a little of both.

Rachel, what if the young "channeler" you mentioned in your previous post was on the same bill as someone who read children's poetry, or who brought a lot of kids and their parents into the audience? Wouldn't your cringe factor be multiplied? What if these same parents then went to the local newpaper, and through this your reading series receives the only media publicity it has ever received in the local newsmedia?

So, do you tell the "channeler" to censor himself, or do you tell the other reader they might not want to bring their kids to the reading? I find both alternatives somewhat distasteful, but I'm still not quite sure how I would handle it myself.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

258. Karen Kelley
Byrkit Performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Hi Charles,

Where can I see some of Becky Byrkit's work? Any on the web?

You know, I remember a woman asking me about a reading I was going to do & she wondered if it'd be "appropriate" to bring her daughter. I thought is was kind of an odd question, and now it occurs to me that it was probably in Tucson or Phoenix. What are you guys up to down there?!?!

I am curious to see the work: I usually see parents tripping over things their kids would handle calmly, if not for the ensuing drama. If her work is violent, that's one thing; if it's just erotic...

↑ Index

259. Rachel Levitsky
Re: local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

``I think she needs to be punished,'' he said. ``No children should be subjected to something like this.''

Do listlings agree with this, that the erotic is 'bad' for children?

" a similar event occurred several years ago when the theme of the festival was love poetry and the winner of a statewide poetry contest

(who traditionally reads first on a Saturday night) brought her grandchildren
to hear her read, only to be followed by some rather explicit homoerotic love
poetry by Boyer Rickel and Marilyn Hacker)." --from Hugh's post

I wasn't there and don't know the work. Certianly, it is bad faith to include in your performance, a group who you think might be alienated by/from the work. However, there is nothing inherently damaging to children about sexual or homoerotic material. Children, need I remind, are "subjected to" and "ambushed by" an abundance of what I would call inappropriate imagery of starving women made to look sexy on buses, and the obvious violence bla bla bla, we all know this. And Marilyn Hacker's poetry is offensive because of a piece of phallic plastic????? In a session devoted to love poetry?? What'd they think?

A personal experience:

A young poet wanted to read at Left Hand and sent me work. I was trying to encourage just this thing and felt I needed to honor his effort, despite my reservations about the person. The week before his scheduled reading, I heard him read, and was so offended that I walked out (this, as far as I recall has only happened to me one other time, I think it was Richard Hell--what da ya think a that?) He, a 20yr old Jew from phily, was "channeling" black slaves on plantations, and young women being sexually abused, and another I didn't hear because I left. His depictions were stereotypical, narrow, extremely flawed vis a vis bad acting, and violent/screaming. So much for the subject matter being the problem. Obviously both of those subjects could be handled in many sensible, sensitive and textured ways. Still, as awful as I found it, he has his fans who love his work, see it as cutting edge.

I flipped. Safety, respect between reader & audience are critical to the Left Hand Reading Series. I wanted to ban him, or read his work in advance or tell him he couldn't read that shit in our space. I felt righteous and justified when I called a meeting between him and the organizers. We'd decided the most we could do was ask him not to channel. But as soon as we were done speaking with him, we knew, we had to take it back. So we told him he knew our feelings and could read whatever he wanted. Thus sprouted the creation of a mission statement, which is explicit about the values of its organizers. In general, I agree that one can't 'censor' or oversee a writer, not without being appropriating and paternalistic. However, one can create a tone and atmosphere that encourage sensitivity and discretion. Our young poet read different work in the end.

I don't know if that addresses your question Hugh.

Chag Samiach,
RDL

↑ Index

260. linda russo
MOVING BORDER/MM KIM
Fri 10 Apr 1998

------ Message Follows ------- help!!

my copy of Moving Borders went to Oregon by mistake & I have to wait another week . . . what agony! Was wondering if any would be so kind as to share -- I'd love a peak at the table of contents . . . maybe someone can fax me a photo-copy? of give a quick rundown here or backchannel? thx.

also, am looking for the e or s mail of Myunk Mi Kim. . . thx. again

↑ Index

261. Rachel Levitsky
Re: for my sederless Boulder Passover
Fri 10 Apr 1998

---

a poem from June Jordan's _haruko/love poems_:

Why I became a pacifist and then
How I became a warrior again:

Because nothing I could do or say turned out okay
I figured I should just sit still and chill except to maybe mumble ‘Baby, Baby:
Stop!’
AND Because turning that other cheek holding my tongue refusing to retaliate when the deal got ugly
And because not throwing whoever calls me _bitch_ out the goddamn window
And because swallowing my pride saying I'm sorry when whoever don't like one single thing about me and don't never take a break from counting up the 65,899 ways I talk wrong

I act wrong
And because sitting on my fist neglecting to enumerate every incoherent rigid/raggedy-ass/disrespectful/killer cold and self-infatuated crime against love
