In the painting

In the bushes Helicopter

Down in the river
Our boat

Down in the river

Figures of disputation, 'we Fought for the bridge for five weeks'

Everything 'til now was water,
Pre-

*

Painting of the battle
On the site of the battle

Flank attack by the language god
Bituminous bastard loves an allegory

Night breeze kicks up between your lines
Within

Illumination flare lights what it can Beyond bright blackness

Mr. Chien with his hand on the rudder
Mr. Thuong with his thumb shot off

In stuttering etcetera

'Maynard Smith drowned
A kid whose name I can't remember

Was killed by a recoilless
Another guy was killed by a recoilless

And then we took Ed's boat to Cua Viet Where it hit a mine'

'When there's trouble and we're beset'

Something happening
Something just going to happen

Two monks, one in saffron
One in tweed

*

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

247. Poetry Project
Events at the Poetry Project 2/9 - 2/14
Thu 8 Feb 2007

Dears,

Please join us.
Also, workshops begin next week. It is not too late to enroll! Scroll down for details.

Love,

The Poetry Project

Friday, February 9, 10:30 pm
Open 24 Hours

An evening celebrating the work published by Open 24 Hours Press, edited by Greg Fuchs and John Coletti. Readers to include Corina Copp, Arlo Quint, Dustin Williamson, Mariana Ruiz-Firmat and Erica Kaufman. Plus a collaborative happening with visual artist Jonathan Allen, frequent Open 24 Hours cover designer. Open 24 Hours is based in New York City and fashions itself after the mimeo style of 1960's poetry publishing efforts. This event may include the construction and utilization of a martini bar.

Monday, February 12, 8:00 pm
Meet the Press: An Evening With Factory School Design Team

The performative culmination of a series of public statements about small press poetry, anarchism and education, Bill Marsh and Joel Kuszai will describe the progress of Factory School learning and production collective in the context of their 2006 move to New York City. Part lecture-theatrics, part analytic-hijinks, their multimedia performance will demonstrate the range of their work at Factory School, from research and design to publishing and resource sharing. Bill Marsh works at the Institute of Writing Studies on the Queens campus of St. John's University and is founding member of Factory School. From April 2005 to January 2007 he curated the Heretical Texts series. Joel Kuszai has been involved in critical thinking since 2003. He resides in Queens, where he teaches cultural rhetoric at Queensborough Community College.

Wednesday, February 14, 8:00 pm
Eugene Ostashevsky & Stephen Rodefer

Eugene Ostashevsky's books of poetry include Iterature and Infinite Recursor Or The Bride of DJ Spinoza, both available through Ugly Duckling Presse. He translates Russian absurdist literature of the 1930s, and is the editor of OBERIU: An Anthology of Russian Absurdism, published by Northwestern University Press. In honor of Valentine's Day, Eugene will strive to bring tears to the eyes of both the loved and the unloved. The American writer and Parisian resident Stephen Rodefer is the author of the prize-winning Four Lectures, Villon by Jean Calais, Emergency Measures, Passing Duration, Mon Canard and Left Under a Cloud, among many other titles. He is presently working on some Baudelaire translations called Baudelaire OH: Les Fleurs du Val. He has been called the last beatnik, the first postmodern modernist, the greatest living American poet, and the oldest living teenager. He has none of it.

Spring Workshops at the Poetry Project

The Poetry School Of Poetry Douglas Rothschild Tuesdays at 7 Pm: 10 Sessions Begin February 13th

Writing poetry is difficult; writing good poetry, more difficult still. In this workshop, we will focus on exactly what we think is good in a poem & determine how our senses of aesthetics inform our responses to this question. Working within our own aesthetic notions we will then begin to refine our writing, & help each other to write the best poems that we can. The workshop will conduct a number of actual experiments with writing that will allow us to step outside the world of id, which wants to keep all the beautiful words, & into the artistic self, which understands which pieces fit & which belong elsewhere. We will also engage the basic Poetry School of Poetry premise that the poet¹s first job is to learn how to edit. Dgls N. Rthschld has been behind the foods table at the New Years Reading more times than it is worth mentioning. He has also written a number of chapbooks, the most ground breaking entitled The Minor Arcane. He has taught what seem to be innumerable college writing classes, and is currently teaching at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, a CUNY school.

The Visible Unseen: Writing Outside Borders Akilah Oliver Thursdays at 7 pm: 10 Sessions Begin February 15th

Are poetry and prose virtual realities, simulations of something other, or the real thing? Where does the ³I² live? How many moments exist in the moment of the line? What borders of form are crucial for us to hang on to & which boundaries are collapsible? In this workshop, we will explore the connections and tensions between the visible and the unseen world/s, not as dualities or binaries, but as complementary sites of composition. Through engagement with text (written and visual), public spaces, the imagination, dreams and Eros, participants are invited to think of writing as that which re-imagines the known and the unknown. Though this is a text based workshop, poets, prose writers, and artists from all disciplines are welcome. Readings include: Giorgio Agamben, Laura Mullen, Whitman, Anne Waldman, Derrida, & Ben Okri. Akilah Oliver is the author of the she said dialogues: flesh memory, An Arriving Guard of Angels, Thusly Coming to Greet, a(A)gust, & The Putterer¹s Notebook. She is faculty at the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics Summer Writing Program at Naropa University.

Impurity Rocks! A Poetry Lab & Workshop Joanna Fuhrman
Fridays at 7 pm: 10 Sessions Begin February 16th

The class will focus on ³impure² poetry, poetry that employs a mixture of tones and styles. Special emphasis will be placed on works that combine narrative and humor with linguistic and imagistic disjunction. In-class exercises and take-home assignments will touch on issues of scale, space, sound, genre and wordplay. Time will also be devoted to reading published poems as well as in-depth discussions and critiques of student work. Joanna Fuhrman is the author of three collections of poetry, Freud in Brooklyn, Ugh Ugh Ocean and Moraine, all published by Hanging Loose Press. She has taught poetry writing at The University of Washington, The Cooper Union Saturday Outreach program and in the New York City Public Schools.

Poetry For The Page, Stage, And Computer Screen Thomas Savage Saturdays
At 12 pm: 10 Sessions Begin February 17th

This course is a writing workshop where students' writing is the main focus. Also used as inspiration and writing prompts will be samples of work by writers from The Beats, Black Mountain poets, The New York School (all generations), Language Poetry, Poets Theater, Pablo Neruda, and works being published today online, among other sources. Practices will include reading as well as writing assignments and, in a great Poetry Project tradition, in-class writing. Thomas Savage has written eight published books of poems including most recently Bamiyan Poems, Brain Surgery Poems and Political Conditions/Physical States. His poems have appeared in many print and online venues including The New York Times, Hanging Loose, Rattapallax, Big Bridge, Black Box, and regularly on the Wryting-L website. He has taught poetry workshops at The Poetry Project and Tribes Gallery.

* The workshop fee is $350, which includes a one year Sustaining Poetry Project membership and tuition for any and all spring and fall classes. Reservations are required due to limited class space, and payment must be received in advance. Caps on class sizes, if in effect, will be determined by workshop leaders. Please send payment and reservations to:

The Poetry Project, St. Mark's Church
Attn: Workshops
131 East 10th St.
NYC, NY 10003

For more information, or to pay by credit card, please call [redacted], or email: [redacted].

http://www.poetryproject.com/workshops.php

Become a Poetry Project Member! http://poetryproject.com/membership.php

Winter Calendar: http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

The Poetry Project is located at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery
131 East 10th Street at Second Avenue
New York City 10003
Trains: 6, F, N, R, and L.
[redacted]
www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $8, $7 for students/seniors and $5 for members (though now those who take out a membership at $85 or higher will get in FREE to all regular readings).

We are wheelchair accessible with assistance and advance notice. For more info call [redacted].

If you¹d like to be unsubscribed from this mailing list, please drop a line at [redacted].

↑ Index

248. Aaron Belz
RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Thu 8 Feb 2007

Folks- An era has ended. Anna Nicole Smith died today in a hotel room in Hollywood, Florida. She was 39 years old. I am hopeful that works of art, music, literature, etc. are forthcoming to commemorate her life and mourn her tragic death. A special issue of Painted Bride Quarterly, perhaps.

Oh, maybe I sound ironic, but I really am feeling this one.

Aaron

↑ Index

249. Adam Morey
Jed Rasula's Poetics of Embodiment
Thu 8 Feb 2007

Hello all,

I am looking for the book Poetics of Embodiment: A Theory of Exceptions by Jed Rasula and it does not come up even in a google search. Perhaps I have the title wrong. It was reccomended to me by a friend.

If anyone can help me out, let me know. I checked ABE and SPD, nothing came up there as well.

Thanks,

Adam

↑ Index

250. David Baratier
Re: deconstruction and poetry
Thu 8 Feb 2007

No, Finnegan's Wake is a strophe.

An apostrophe is a diacritical mark,

Finnegans Wake has critical marks.

how's that for the Haiku discussion?

No, Finnegans Wake IS an apostrophe.

Hal

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

251. Barrett Watten
Watten lecture in Minneapolis 2/9
Thu 8 Feb 2007

University of Minnesota lecture

"On the Advantages and Disadvantages of Negativity for Life"
3:00–4:30 PM, 9 February 2007, Department of English
207A Lind Hall, UM's East Bank, University of Minnesota

↑ Index

252. Jennifer Karmin
"Growing Up Girl" Chicago reading
Thu 8 Feb 2007

---

hey poetry friends....check out this new anthology of women's writing edited by michelle sewell. it's a terrific example of a community-based project being fully supported by an independent press.

onwards,
jennifer karmin

A reading for
"Growing Up Girl:
An Anthology of Voices from Marginalized Spaces"

Featuring editor Michelle Sewell
and Chicago contributors:
Wendy Altschuler
Jennifer Karmin
Janet Vega
Latiffany Wright
Jewel Sophia Younge

7:30pm Friday, February 16
Women and Children First Books
5233 N. Clark Street -- Chicago, IL
http://www.womenandchildrenfirst.com
Free

Published by GirlChild Press, this eclectic collection of poems, essays, and short stories documents the transition from girl to woman as told by the girls and women who know the journey best. The multicultural anthology examines issues such as identity, domestic violence, acceptance, motherhood, beauty, and sexuality. It can be bought from independent bookstores like Women and Children First or purchased through http://www.girlchildpress.com.

WENDY ALTSCHULER graduated with high honors from DePaul University with a degree in Women's and Gender Studies and Anthropology. She is the first person in her family to graduate from college.

JENNIFER KARMIN is a poet, artist, and educator who has experimented with language throughout the U.S. and Japan. She is a founding member of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise and co-curator of the Red Rover reading series. Jennifer works as a Poet-in-Residence for the Chicago Public Schools and teaches creative writing to immigrants at Truman College.

MICHELLE SEWELL is an award-winning poet and screenwriter whose writing has appeared on NPR and Black Entertainment Television. Throughout her work as a poet and a social worker, Sewell has maintained that there must be a place for women and girls to develop and express their truest selves.

JANET VEGA is 28 years old, married, and mother to two beautiful boys. She is currently attending Morton College for an Associates in Office Management Technology.

LATTIFANY WRIGHT is 24 years old and resides in Chicago with her daughter. She is a student in the Masters of Fine Arts program at Chicago State University and plans to write full time after completing her degree.

JEWEL SOPHIA YOUNGE has used several pen names in her career. She has published a short story, "Roots Thing Dirty," a short play, and poems in magazines ranging from English Journal to Rolling Out. New York artist Uraline Hager featured Younge's work in New York and Havana exhibits. Younge also worked on Coquie Hughe's most recent film "Did I Just Look at Her." Younge is a

St. Louis playwright who teaches, writes, and resides in Chicago.

___ The fish are biting. Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing. http://searchmarketing.yahoo.com/arp/sponsoredsearch_v2.php

↑ Index

253. Alan DeNiro
Invitation: Speculative Poetry mailing list
Thu 8 Feb 2007

Hi,

I wanted to invite people to swing by a (relatively) new mailing list that I've set up that hopes to explore the intersections between science, science fiction, and poetry. It casts a fairly wide net, but I hope that some will find it of interest.

The People's League of Speculative Poetry

http://groups.google.com/group/speculativepoetry/

An open and open-ended community whose poetic work or interests involve, but is not necessarily limited to: science fiction, science, cybernetics, metaphysics, futurism, simulacra, junk sci-fi culture, hyper-globalism, and killer robots. Discussions and postings of poetry and poetics welcome.

Best wishes,
Alan DeNiro

___
8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
with the Yahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/shortcuts/#news

↑ Index

254. Alan Sondheim
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Thu 8 Feb 2007

I've followed her career fairly closely, watched the 'reality show,' and was fascinated; she resisted easy summaries, but there was always a violent edge to things around her that felt exhausted. She died ten years older than Anita Berber and six than Christ.

- Alan

On Thu, 8 Feb 2007, Aaron Belz wrote:

> Folks-
> An era has ended. Anna Nicole Smith died today in a hotel room in Hollywood, Florida. She was 39 years old. I am hopeful that works of art, music, literature, etc. are forthcoming to commemorate her life and mourn her tragic death. A special issue of Painted Bride Quarterly, perhaps.
>
> Oh, maybe I sound ironic, but I really am feeling this one.
>
> Aaron

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

255. Chris Stroffolino

HAIKU LIFE

Thu 8 Feb 2007

MDW
I'm enjoying what you say about haiku-- but one question about what you say below?
why such shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?
that seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness?
for example, the shiki one you quote below...

or, what for you is it to "control objectivity and subjectivity"

On Feb 8, 2007, at 11:56 AM, Michael Dylan Welch wrote:

> Thanks for your message below, David-Baptiste. I like what you say about how haiku trains the eye. It's like a photographer who "frames" images in his or her mind, even if without a camera. Before I was married, it was informative to take a date to the beach, because I found it revealing of the person to see if they'd notice the tiniest shells or driftwood, and have curiosity for the natural world, or if they limited their conversation to shopping or work or whatever, without much interaction with the environment.

Call it, perhaps, a "haiku mind," whether one writes haiku or not -- or even any poetry at all. It's a matter of being present and aware, and it certainly helps one write haiku, which is a poetry of the five senses, with a sensitivity to the seasons and thus to nature. It can also be a way of life, a part of one's cosmology.

For what it's worth, I don't think of the haiku I write as "American haiku." It's haiku.

*Haiku deserves a lot of dissing. That's because there's a boat-load of crap out there -- the pseudohaiku, of course, but also the trivial stuff that most people write and think is haiku (though I can hardly blame them, given how haiku is nearly uniformly mistaught in schools). And even those who excel at haiku play a percentage game (as does any poet). I think it was Basho who said one is a master if you write just ten excellent haiku in a lifetime (we have a record, I believe, of something like 1,500 of Basho's haiku; Issa is known to have written 20,000, and most of them are weak or just average). But I think haiku has earned an extra amount of dissing because is strikes so many people as easy, and people dash 'em off, or pervert them as literature by writing flippantly. In his excellent book, Empire of Signs, Roland Barthes says "haiku has this rather fantasmagorical property: that we always suppose we ourselves can write such things easily."*

*For anyone who wants to write seriously about haiku, or to study it, I am pretty sure that they will see a difference between the latest pseudo-haiku book like Haikus for Jews or Honku (about road rage, etc.) and serious literary haiku written in English. However, there's a middle ground between the two that too many people think of as haiku, yet is still far wide of the mark, as any kind of literature. That stuff deserves dissing, too. What is odd is that some people diss the literary achievements because they are naive enough to say that, well, it's not 5-7-5. People cling so hard to that notion, for reasons that I can't fathom. I can only imagine that it's because they learned this incorrect rule (for haiku in English) at an impressionable age, when their teachers could do no wrong, and thus they swallowed it hook, line, and sinker.*

For me, haiku makes perfect use of what Eliot called the objective correlative. Haiku dwells on things (nouns) that carry meaning and emotion ("no ideas but in things"). Haiku (even literary haiku) can be many things to different people, but to me it has a spiritual aspect, a sort of approach to infinity (by approaching the narrowest of image-moments). By the way, this spirituality that I find in haiku has little to do with Zen (another misperception of haiku, which the Japanese are puzzled at regarding the American understanding of haiku -- thanks to folks like Alan Watts, R. H.

Blyth, Jack Kerouac and other Beats, who promoted haiku from that perspective).

I teach a class on using haiku techniques to improve your longer poetry. The point of view, the awareness, that David-Baptiste mentioned in his message is a big part of that, but so are the ability to control objectivity and subjectivity, to create implication through juxtaposition (and thus create intuitive, emotional, or even intellectual effects), and a reliance on seasons as archetypes to add weight and compression to the poem. Rather than being "easy" to write, haiku can be very hard indeed.

Indeed, the true discipline of haiku has nothing to do with counting syllables. That's trivial and superficial, and nearly everyone I've met who says they like that discipline has been completely unaware of the much more challenging disciplines that literary haiku require. And that's entirely aside from the fact that 5-7-5 syllables in English is a misguided taget relative to the 17 mora of Japanese haiku.

FYI, the word "haiku" need not be treated with a capital H, in the same way that it's not necessary to capitalize the S in "sonnet." Why do people do that? I've never understood that.

*Also, Robert Hass's Essential Haiku book of poems by Basho, Buson, and Issa (inexplicably and lazily omitting Shiki, the fourth great master of Japanese haiku) is lyrical and approachable, but not the most reliable of translations. For example, Hass repeats an error of an earlier translator of ascribing the "for me going / for you staying / two autumns" haiku to Buson, when in fact it was written by Shiki -- what does that tell you about his sources?*

*I would also say that "writing in an instant" does not in itself necessarily produce good haiku. Basho rewrote his poems or reordered and restructured their appearance in the Oku no hosomichi (Narrow Road to the Interior). Rather, one CAN write in an instant, but one need not stop there. And like any art, or even a sport, it builds upon practice. The perfect serve of a Wimbledon champion is not just in an instant, but is a culmination of a lifetime of practice.*

Michael

P.S. I've been asked offlist to share some of my haiku. You'll find some (and some senryu) online, paired with photographs, at http://www.brooksbookshaiku.com/welch/. I put this together about eight years ago.

-----Original Message-----

Date: Wed, 7 Feb 2007 13:45:53 -0600
From: David-Baptiste Chirot <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match/HAIKU LIFE

Many deep thanks to Michael Dylan Welch for his letters affirming the LIFE of American Haiku and providing so many insights and so much information.

A few times before Haiku has been discussed (and dissed one might say a bit)-and so often concerning only the syllable counting as though distinguishing right foot from the left means one knows how to walk. A lot of what i know have learned from reading Japanese and American haiku is ways of awareness in the world--practicing different ways of seeing things, movements, colors and how their particualrs cab be continually framed and reframed within a very few words, not only to present juxtapostion, but in doing so to provide as Michael wrote, the data for making a leap inside the mind--opening into a whole other view of the "scenes" so to speak. Continually training the eye in finding particulars among all that is happening within an instant--the haiku a way of learning to see distinctly that which is hidden in plain sight by the too distracted superficial attention. Out of a mass of colors, forms, movements, exact notations of a particular moment in a specific time of year--emerge the particles in the ongoing flow which present paradoxes, contradcitions, things far apart suddenly brought close. A haiku is a form of documentary which "opens one's eyes"--and if one is so inclined, mind, heart, soul, physical awarenesses.

The importance of the time element is to indicate not a stillness bu a cotinual process of change, in which the insatnt presented in the poem is taking part--a transitory movement from the no longer present of the moment before to the not yet present of the moment after. On the one hand the teeming chaos of the moment in its incredible profusion of details, on the other, the nothingness, unknowable--to see with clarity a continual becoming--out of chaos and nothingness, that which is.

Hiaku have brought a continual daily work with seeing, hearing, moving--details within each instant--site/sight/cite--oscillations of an opening outwo/ards and a paring to the bare bones.

Haiku bring not just forms of artistic or mystical "illuminations" as it were--also bring evidences cotinually of social contradictions, paradoxes all around one. To see the world from a crowded bus or within a very confined space--and find in them both a continual happening. Through barred windows to see everyday the same view yet to find moment by moment it is changing.

I am just touching on a very small area of what study of Haiku can bring for writing, visual work, being alive. It's a form of disicpline one may practice at any time any where. Even in dreams it can happen.

There is also the spirtual aspect of haiku as a Way. This can be found in a great many poets practising haiku as a method among spiritual disicplines.

Pascal wrote: "it is not the elements which are new, but the order of their arrangement." To work with arrangements of course you have to continually discpline the unedrstanding of the elements, and i think Haiku teaches one in this, how to go about finding what the elements are at any moment. Time spent studying cracks in a wall can be an opening into the anarkeyological possibilities which are ever available.

The famous text by Basho called "Learn from the Pine" is a great introduction to ways of working with Haiku as a discipline in living to find ways to see and hear and move. In this way, the making of the Haiku is like an instant between the profusion of reality and the nothingness. Through discipline "composition must occur in an instant."
Robert Hass edited a great collection of Haiku and prose by Basho, Suson & Issa called The Essential Haiku--you can find "learn from the Pine" in there-- > to show how hard it to write haiku--i wrote his in an instant from what seen > outside the window

> you can see that i wil have to live a hundred years to make aven an average > one > but what i learn from reading others'--has helped change many ways of seeing > for me and i am very thank ful to Haiku for this--
>
> ghetto winter street > dope man, bible man, crack hos-- > all call the crow "thief"
>
> ---
>
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

256. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: haiku /Violi

Thu 8 Feb 2007

---

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten eleven twelve thirteen

~ Dan Zimmerman

----- Original Message -----
From: "George Bowering" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Thursday, February 08, 2007 3:04 PM
Subject: Re: haiku /Violi

> Best US haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:
>
> Seven syllables
> Eleven syllables
> Seven syllables

gb

On 8-Feb-07, at 8:47 AM, Stephen Vincent wrote:

I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

Don't look at my face.
No change, just large bills.
One wrong move will be your last.

Actually, I think this one comes from a side-set genre of haiku that Al
Capone once christened (after a sweet heist by one of his boys) as a

Noirku

Though the French are fond of calling Paul Violi's particular piece a

Noircoup

The French apparently love to apply a "coup" wherever possible to both elegant and inelegant seizures, Paul V's piece being of the elegant variety, Obviously.

I hope the introduction of this particular genre/convention is "helpful", too.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

Charlie Rossiter <[redacted]> wrote:
Seriously...I'm trying to be helpful

> I tried in an earlier message to tell you...but that didn't get through so > let me try again...some of you you sound like undergraduates calling the > library and essentially asking the reference librarian to do your research > for you
>
> Just read a couple good books about haiku and stop guessing and second > guessing about what haiku in English is all about. That kind of stuff > only makes you look foolish to people who know about the subject.
>
> I hope you folks spending time writing notes about haiku are really > interested...once you get it, you might write some memorable poems...haiku > can actually be a powerful form of poetic expression...go for it
>
> if I sound impatient it's because the second-guessers (duh, I wonder if > Sato made that up) are really tiresome...
>
> don't take this the wrong way....the goal is always better > poetry...haiku > or otherwise
>
> charlie
>
> George Cletis Bowering
> Slow to anger. Well, slow about everything.

↑ Index

257. Alexander Jorgensen

Fwd: A New BathHouse!

Thu 8 Feb 2007

A creditable online journal. Lots of integrity. Lots of good work. Trying to do things, if I can speak for them, and I've not asked for permission - right!

AJ
--- Michael Alber <[redacted]> wrote:

> To: [redacted],
> Jeffrey Scott Parker <[redacted]>,
> Michael Alber <[redacted]>,

Julie Alber <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted]
From: Michael Alber <[redacted]>
Subject: A New BathHouse!
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 11:22:50 -0500

Hi all,

I wanted to let you all know that the new BathHouse is up and ready for inspection. This issue represents a kind of departure for BathHouse, as the major component is a fascinating look at Russian Net art by an important cultural critic from St. Petersburg, Russia.
We've also got a couple of other pieces, all worth checking out.

If you have pieces with us, please don't despair. You should have your answers by February.

> Enjoy!
>
> Mike Alber
>
> Editor
> BathHouse
> www.emich.edu/studentorgs/bhouse

_____
TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
http://tv.yahoo.com/

↑ Index

258. Alexander Jorgensen
GEORGE BOWERING
Thu 8 Feb 2007

Don't you sometimes get the feeling that he's kinda like a labrador - who's been chewing on a bone for far too long a time, just for the fun of it! His tail waggin' and all ears!

AJ
--- George Bowering <[redacted]> wrote:

> If he's smoking on the porch,
> you got him.
>
> gb
>
> On 8-Feb-07, at 1:17 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
>
> If I wanna drive across the state to see this how > can I be sure it > will actually be Kent Johnson who appears at this > thing?
>
> You can never be too careful.
>
> ~mIEKAL

> On Feb 8, 2007, at 3:03 PM, David-Baptiste Chirot wrote:
>
> Kent Johnson--"Mr. Kent" in some of his poems, like Burroughs' being "Mr. Lee" in various of his writings--will be making the following appearances this month in the guise of the "author function" known as "Kent Johnson"--at the following sites:
>
> a reading at Illinois Wesleyan University the week following on Saturday, February 25, at 7:30 PM, Hansen Student Center, 300 Beecher St., Bloomington, Illinois.
>
> and, on behalf of Susan Firer from the English Dept. at UW-Milwaukee, this announcement of next week's Milwaukee appearances:
>
> Geo. Bowering, DLit
> A devotee of Veronica Lake

8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
with the Yahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/shortcuts/#news

↑ Index

259. Eric

Re: haiku /Violi

Thu 8 Feb 2007

Or for the conventionally minded (in loud clothes):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

↑ Index

260. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku Death Match
Thu 8 Feb 2007

---

but if we did that, then folks wouldn't be able to be snobby about authenticity. because we all know that authenticity is what's really important. and in order for anything to be authentic, it must first be esoteric. i think what should be done is that all the books about haiku, in particular lee gurga's that keeps getting recommended, ought to be entrusted to secret societies and all publicly available copies should be burnt. and then everyone who thinks it's important that a haiku be "real" can join the secret societies, and the rest of us can get on with writing short poems. i'll even promise to never call a short poem of mine a haiku so long as the haiku-snobs will promise to point out that it isn't really a haiku. then we can all be at peace with one another in a sort of zen state of mutually acknowledged dumbness.

Barry Schwabsky wrote:
> Jeez. Can't we just decide that all contemporary haikus are "fake" and leave it at that?
>
> Because to my mind that would be at least giving them the benefit of the doubt, since it is extremely unlikely that a "real" sonnet, a "real" dramatic monologue, a "real" epic, a "real" ode, or likewise a "real" haiku could also be a good poem. Only starting from the assumption that using any of this forms or genres is absurd, practically kitsch, is one likely to get anywhere with them.
>
> There are societies of watercolor painters out there, according to whose members, probably, the works of any important contemporary artist who might produce a watercolor that you'd in the drawing dept. of MoMA or the Whitney are just obtuse efforts that show no sense of the rules of watercolor painting. But really, one should understand that, unlike hobbyists, real artists have only the most contingent interest in following any rules they have not set for themselves.
>
> "Tom W. Lewis" <[redacted]> wrote:
> I first became aware of the haiku form via an interview with Laurie
> Anderson in the early 80s... she claimed to have written "fake haikus"
> for her song Kokoku (the interview is archived here:

> http://www.archive.org/details/LaurieAndersonOTG)
>
> at least she didn't claim they were "real" haikus -- does anyone > recognize the Japanese text she quotes in the lyrics below?
>
> Kokoku
>
> I come very briefly to this place.
> I watch it move. I watch it shake.
>
> Kumowaku yamano. Watashino sakebi.
> Watashino koewo. Ushano kokoku.
> Watashiwa sokoni. Watashiwa asobu.
>
> Mountain with clouds. A cry. My voice.
> Home of the brave. I'm here now. And lost.
> They say the dead will rise again. And here they come now.
> Strange animals out of the Ice Age. And they stare at you.
> Dumbfounded. Like big mistakes. And we say: Keep cool.
> Maybe if we pretend this never happened, they'll all just go away.
>
> Watashiwa sokoni. Watashiwa asobu.
> Mewotoji. Mewotoji. Kikunowa kotori.
> Watashino sakebi. Watashino koewo.
>
> ...
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]]
> On Behalf Of Michael Dylan Welch
> Sent: Saturday, February 03, 2007 2:08
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match
>
>
> Sure, one can use any formal restraint as a poetic game, as a challenge
> of > sorts. But as challenges go, in haiku, the syllabic challenge (whatever > pattern > you might choose) is mighty superficial. Indeed, in my years of > teaching > haiku, I've seen that it's the easiest thing in the world for students > of nearly > all grade levels to count their pretty little syllables. Why brag about > pulling on your underwear all by yourself when your hair is on fire?

>
> It's a > trivial "discipline." And these same haiku, while hitting that trivial > target -- > again, an incorrect target in English -- are widely missing the more > important > targets. And most often, these proud 5-7-5ers are completely oblivious
> to > those other targets -- ones that are actually more important. Why > bother with > arbirary constraints for haiku when there are far more serious, > literary, > challenging, and effective constraints that you miss in the process of > focusing > on 5-7-5?!?
>
> It can be fun to write cinquains or iambic pentameter, or the recent > "Fib" > form (counting syllables in subsequent lines to match the Fibonacci > sequence).
> But when it comes to haiku, writing 5-7-5 syllables in English isn't
> the > same as following the prescribed syllables of cinquains or pentameter or > Fibs.
> That's because following 5-7-5 assumes a "correctness" for that pattern
> in > English, which isn't accurate when it's really a borrowed form. Yes, > sonnets are > borrowed from Italian to English, but at least that's the same alphabet, > so > it's not fraught with the problems of translating from Japanese to > English.
> It's folly to translate the number (5-7-5) without thinking more deeply > about > what is being counted. Yet that is precisely what has happened that > lead to > the false conception of haiku being 5-7-5 syllables in English. Quite > simply, > when we apply that pattern to English syllables, we miss the boat. It's > simplistic and naive.

>
>
> A person can do whatever they like and call it haiku (Lord knows that's > happened plenty enough). If you're having fun, knock yourself out. But > if you're > writing 5-7-5 haiku, it's best to be aware of how you're writing a poem > that's > markedly longer than what is expressed in a Japanese haiku (not all of > which > are 5-7-5, by the way). It's best to be aware that you're writing in a > pattern that, for good reason, pretty much ALL of the leading haiku > poets writing > in English do not follow. It's best to be aware that writing 5-7-5 > frequently > creates artificial syntax and awkward line breaks purely for an > unnecessary > constraint while more important strategies (also constraints) are > completely > missed. Indeed, most 5-7-5 haiku writers tend to be completely unaware > of the > other strategies necessary for traditional haiku, though perhaps that's > a > separate problem, although it's frequently caused by a belief that > 5-7-5 is all > there is to it. In any event, if one aims at seasonality and a two-part > juxtapositional structure, and employs objective sensory imagery, you > can let > the rest of form take care of itself (organically). But of course, > there's more > to it than that -- writing in the present tense, no titles, no rhyme, > seldom > any similes or metaphors, employing fragments rather than full > sentences, > employing allusion, and more. And perhaps the most important aspect of > all -- > implication. It's very hard to do well, to hint at something that the > reader > can figure out on his own, making a leap of understanding that's made > possible
>
>

> because of your restraint as a poet, because you deliberately left > something > out. As I like to emphasize in haiku workshops, don't write about your > emotion, write about what caused your emotion. Then, if you do it > right, the reader > can feel what you felt without your having to say so. But of course all
> of > this is missed by those who think haiku is only a 5-7-5 > syllable-counting > poetry trick. Some "challenge."
>
> As I say in the title of one of my haiku lectures: "Haiku: It's Bigger > Than
> You Think." Yet of course, it's also smaller than most English speakers > think,
> too.
>
> Michael
>
> P.S. Nearly every serious haiku poet I know has had a progression in > their > haiku -- and I'm talking about many hundreds of leading haiku poets who > I pay > attention to, perhaps even thousands. They nearly all started out > writing
> 5-7-5, as did I. And then they progressed to learning the more > important aspects > of the genre (and haiku is best thought of as a genre of poetry, of > which
> "form" is just one aspect). At this point, nearly all of them stop > writing in > the 5-7-5 pattern. The few exceptions to this progression include those > who > went straight to avoiding 5-7-5 in the first place. But there are clear > reasons > for this progression. It's not that 5-7-5 is "abandoned." Rather, it is > apprehended as something that was inappropriate in the first place, and > causes
>
> many problems in English. Higher targets are sought -- ones, in fact, > that turn > out to be far more challenging and require far more discipline. If

> 5-7-5 in > English serves any useful purpose, it is purely as the first > stepping-stone on > a long path. But, alas, too many people, even otherwise accomplished > poets,
> stop at just that first stepping stone with their haiku.
>
>
> In a message dated 02-Feb-07 9:01:40 PM Pacific Standard Time, > [redacted] writes:
>
> Date: Fri, 2 Feb 2007 10:41:59 -0600
> From: Joe Amato
> Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match
>
> While I think it's a good idea to understand that 5-7-5 is simply a > convenience of sorts, even something of a mistranslation (even > something of a cultural oversight), I feel about this pretty much the > way I feel about bending any formal rule. I.e., it's fun to use > 5-7-5 as an arbitrary constraint in composing haiku, just as it's fun > to use 14 lines as an arbitrary constraint in composing sonnets.
> (Which latter might not result in 14 lines, ysee, but that won't keep > me from calling it a sonnet.)
>
> Granted, correcting the misconception is one thing. But having fun > with same is quite another, which, to me, is one reason I write > poetry.

↑ Index

261. Jim Andrews

Re: A New BathHouse!

Fri 9 Feb 2007

Here are some interesting Russian sites:
http://platform.netslova.ru/english.html (visual poetry)
http://cmart.design.ru (net art)
http://www.andrekarpov.com (Andre Karpov, citizen of the world)

I read the essay at www.emich.edu/studentorgs/bhouse , Alexander. Curious. Many new media artists and critics are at pains to insist on the unimportance of net art which, they maintain, is no longer serious. I surmise that what is serious is work in galleries, and performance. And video and film. And glossy books.

Fishy.

ja

> ...the major component is a fascinating
> look at Russian
> Net art by an important cultural critic from St.
> Petersburg, Russia.
> We've also got a couple of other pieces, all worth > checking out.
>
> Mike Alber
> Editor
> BathHouse
> www.emich.edu/studentorgs/bhouse

↑ Index

262. Haas Bianchi
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Such lament. I am sure that there is a PHD thesis somewhere in this.

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Aaron Belz
Sent: Thursday, February 08, 2007 4:53 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era

Folks- An era has ended. Anna Nicole Smith died today in a hotel room in Hollywood, Florida. She was 39 years old. I am hopeful that works of art, music, literature, etc. are forthcoming to commemorate her life and mourn her tragic death. A special issue of Painted Bride Quarterly, perhaps.

Oh, maybe I sound ironic, but I really am feeling this one.

Aaron

↑ Index

263. Jesse Glass
Looking for Wikipedia Help
Fri 9 Feb 2007

For these pages:

Found Poetry. The page needs more serious examples.

Judith Skillman

Oscar Williams

Fleshing out Helen Adams

Would like to start a Gene Derwood page. If you'd like to help, please back-channel

Haptic Poetry

It's incredibly easy to edit a wiki page. Please take a look at the Faq "What Wikipedia Is and What It Isn't" and material about what makes a good article before you begin.

Jess

↑ Index

264. C. A. Conrad

UPDATE on the Frank Sherlock EMERGENCY FUND.....thanks Juliana!.....

Fri 9 Feb 2007

UPDATE on the Frank Sherlock EMERGENCY FUND.....

a link for those wishing to include this in blogs:
_http://phillysound.blogspot.com/2007_02_01_phillysound_archive.html_
(http://phillysound.blogspot.com/2007_02_01_phillysound_archive.html)

Thanks to the generosity of Juliana Spahr you can now send checks for the Frank Sherlock EMERGENCY FUND which will be tax deductible!

'A 'A ARTS
c/o J. Spahr 5000 MacArthur Blvd.
Oakland, CA 94613

CHECKS SHOULD BE MADE OUT TO "'A 'A ARTS"
and these checks will be tax deductible.
PLEASE MAKE A NOTE THAT YOUR CHECK IS FOR FRANK SHERLOCK.
Thanks so much! Your donations are very much appreciated!

from the Friends of Frank Sherlock

↑ Index

265. Vernon Frazer

Re: Vernon Frazer in Mad Hatter's Review

Fri 9 Feb 2007

Hello

I received noticed that I jumped the gun in announcing my work on Mad Hatter's Review (http://www.madhattersreview.com <http://www.madhattersreview.com/>).

The new issue won't officially appear until Valentine's Day.

Vernon

http://vernonfrazer.com <http://vernonfrazer.com/>

↑ Index

266. thom donovan

REMINDER: POA presents David Levi Strauss & Kyle Schlesinger TONIGHT Friday February 9th, 2007

Fri 9 Feb 2007

Peace On A

presents

David Levi Strauss & Kyle Schlesinger

Friday, February 9th 2007 8PM
BYOB & recommended donation: $5

hosted by Thom Donovan at:

166 Avenue A, Apartment #2
New York, NY 10009

about the readers:

Kyle Schlesinger is a book artist, poet, editor and the guy who does Cuneiform Press. Recent artists' books include A Book of Closings and Moonlighting. His serial poem Mantle (with Thom Donovan) was published by Atticus Finch in 2005, and his next book of poems will be published by BlazeVox Books in 2007. He currently teaches poetry and typography at the University at Buffalo.

Meanwhile prolongs this observation.
Boarding trains this circular morn between two points the sky – robin blue and just for you. Declines night now. Waning figures cast fishnet sentences. Lines darting here or there – sequence yourself.
~ from Moonlighting

David Levi Strauss is a writer and critic in New York, where his essays and reviews appear regularly in Artforum and Aperture. His collection of essays on photography and politics, Between the Eyes, with an introduction by John Berger, was published by Aperture in 2003, and has just been released in an

Italian edition by Postmedia. The Book of 101 Books: Seminal Photography Books of the Twentieth Century, with catalogue essays by Strauss, was published by P.P.P. Editions and D.A.P. in 2001. Between Dog & Wolf: Essays on Art & Politics was published in 1999 by Autonomedia, and Broken Wings: The Legacy of Landmines (with photographer Bobby Neel Adams) came out in 1998. His essays have appeared in a number of recent books and monographs on artists such as Leon Golub and Nancy Spero, Martin Puryear, Miguel Rio Branco, Francesca Woodman, Carolee Schneemann, and Alfredo Jaar. He was the founding editor of ACTS: A Journal of New Writing (1982-1990), and author of a book of poetry, Manoeuvres, before moving from San Francisco to New York in 1993. He has been awarded a Logan grant, three Artspace grants, a Visiting Scholar Research Fellowship from the Center for Creative Photography, a Guggenheim fellowship in 2003-04, and the Infinity Award for writing from the International Center of Photography in 2006. Strauss taught at the Center for Curatorial Studies at Bard College from 2001-05, and is now on the faculties of both the Graduate School of the Arts and the undergraduate studio art program at Bard. In his introduction to Between the Eyes, John Berger wrote, “Strauss, who is a poet and storyteller as well as being a renowned commentator on photography (I reject the designation critic) looks at images very hard . . . and comes face-to-face with the unexplained. Again and again. The unexplained that he encounters has only little to do with the mystery of art and everything to do with the mystery of countless lives being lived.” And Luc Sante wrote, “David Levi Strauss brings an eloquent and deep moral seriousness to his examination of photography. Again and again he makes the ringing point that trying to separate aesthetics and politics can only result in vacuity. He is photography’s troubled conscience.” Half hope, half fear. Like when people who react against politically committed art say, on the one hand, that such art is pretentious, delusional, and dishonest, since art is powerless to cause real political change; and, on the other hand, that this kind of art is irresponsible and dangerous, since it inflames the passions of the already savage rabble. So which is it, dog or wolf? ~ from Between Dog & Wolf

Peace On A is an events series devoted to emergent work by writers, artists, performers and scholars. Past presenters at Peace on A include Alan Gilbert, E. Tracy Grinnell, Cathy Park Hong, Paolo Javier, Andrew Levy & Eléna Rivera. Scroll down Wild Horses of Fire weblog (whof.blogspot.com) for back advertisements, introductions and reading selections.

Measure a million million
Measure a million to margin
~ Susan Howe

166 Avenue A NY, NY 10009
whof.blogspot.com

8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
with the Yahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/shortcuts/#news

↑ Index

267. susan maurer
robin morgan's new fighting words
Fri 9 Feb 2007

went to a reading at nyc strand of atheist jack huberman and social activist and poet robin morgan, she is very informative and extremely entertaining on the subject of countering arguments with the religious right. susan maurer

---

Laugh, share and connect with Windows Live Messenger
http://clk.atdmt.com/MSN/go/msnnkwme0020000001msn/direct/01/?href=http://imagine-msn.com/messenger/launch80/default.aspx?locale=en-us&source=hmtagline

↑ Index

268. Jesse Crockett
Listenlight new issue 07
Fri 9 Feb 2007

"Ransom" --- listenlight 07 ------

Christine Hamm, Caleb Puckett, Kimberly Truitt, Lisa Jarnot, Ridley Sindios, C A Conrad, Amanda Chiado, Suchoon Mo, Noah Eli Gordon, Sara Veglahn, Joshua Marie Wilkinson

listenlight.net <http://listenlight.net>

Jesse Crockett, editor

↑ Index

269. David-Baptiste Chirot

behalf of:[WIB-LA] ISRAELI[ANTI-]APARTHEID WEEK - NYC! - Feb. 10 - Feb. 18, 2007

Fri 9 Feb 2007

On behalf of WIB-LA and associated Peace, Human Rights, Legal and Women's groups

(WIB stands for Women in Black; this is from the LA chapter) wide variety of events and speakers including Professor EmeritusTanya Reinart from Tel Aviv University--author of some very good books and journalism. Robert Robideau, Leonard Peltier Defense Committee & American Indian Movement benefit for Young Photographers of Balata Refugee Camp--some of whom will be traveling in USA with exhibition of works by the young people participating iin this program (aim and shoot with cameras, not guns being the idea in good part)

PLEASE CIRCULATE WIDELY The 3rd
>International Israeli Apartheid Week – New York City Come out to Israeli >Apartheid Week (IAW) to be held in New York City for the first time. IAW >will be a weeklong series of events held concurrently in different >cities around the world to contribute to a growing public discussion of >Israel as an apartheid state and to gather support for the international >boycott, divestment, and sanctions campaign called for by more than 170 >Palestinian civil society organizations in July, 2005. For more >information about Israeli Apartheid Week please visit >www.endisraeliapartheid.net. Below is the schedule of events for the >week: GRASSROOTS NONVIOLENT RESISTANCE TO ISRAELI APARTHEID IN PALESTINE
>Mohammed Khatib from Bil'in and Feryal Abu Haikal from Tel Rumeida, >Hebron Saturday, February 10 at 6:30 p.m. Hunter College, 695 Park >Avenue between 67th and 68th streets Hunter West Building, 4th floor, >room HW415 Sponsored by The Palestine Club at Hunter College; >ISM-NYC;Adalah-NY ISRAEL AND THE APARTHEID ANALOGY Saree Makdisi, >professor of English literature , University of California Los Angeles
>Basheer Abu-Manneh, assistant professor of English, Barnard University >Robert Robideau, co-director of the Leonard Peltier Defense Committee >and member of the American Indian Movement Yifat Susskind, >communications director of the International Women's Human Rights >Organization MADRE. Monday, February 12 at 7:30 p.m. Judson Memorial >Church, 55 Washington Square South. Take the A, C, E, F, B or V to West >4th Street Sponsored by Israeli Apartheid Week NYC DIGITAL RESISTANCE:
>PALESTINIAN YOUTH MEDIA Tuesday, February 13 at 7:00pm Furman Hall, 245

>Sullivan Street, Room 214 Take the A, C, E, F, B or V to West 4th Street
>Sponsored by the Palestine/Israel Education Project; NYU SJP; NYU
>Women's Center; Law Students for Human Right. CONTESTING ISRAELI >APARTHEID: BOYCOTT, DIVESTMENT AND SANCTIONS IN CONTEXT Sami Hermez, >Riham Barghouti and Issa Mikel Tuesday, February 13 at 7:00 p.m. WESPAC >Foundation, 255 Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd., White Plains AND >Thursday, February 15 at 7:00 p.m. Judson Memorial Church, 239 Thompson
>St. Sponsored by the NYC Campaign for Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions
>LOVE UNDER APARTHEID: PALESTINIANS AND ISRAEL'S DISCRIMINATORY MARRIAGE >LAWS Jamil Dakwar, former senior attorney for Adalah: The Legal Center >for Arab Minority Rights in Israel, followed by a screening of the film
>"Just Married," directed by Ayelet Bechar. Wednesday, February 14 at >7:30-9:45 p.m. Brecht Forum, 451 West Street between Bank and Bethune
>Sponsored by Action Wednesdays Against the War and NYU-SJP APARTHEID >THROUGH THE LENS A Fundraising Evening for the Young Photographers of >Balata Refugee Camp, Palestine Thursday, February 15 at 7:00 p.m. Alwan:
>16 Beaver St. $10 suggested donation at the door Sponsored by Al-Awda, >Palestine Right to Return Coalition - NY CHALLENGING ISRAELI APARTHEID
>Joseph Massad, associate professor of Middle East studies, Columbia >University Tanya Reinhart, professor emeritus, Tel Aviv University
>Friday, February 16th at 7:30 p.m. St. Mary's Episcopal Church, 521 W.
>126th St. between Amsterdam and Broadway Take the 1 to 125th street
>Sponsored by Israeli Apartheid Week NYC EXPOSING ISRAELI APARTHEID - >SUPPORTING PALESTINIAN LIBERATION: A Teach-In Sunday, February 18,
>2:00-5:00 p.m. Pope Hall, St. Peter's College, 2641 Kennedy Blvd., >Jersey City, NJ Sponsored by NJ Solidarity – Activists for the >Liberation of Palestine For more information about Israeli Apartheid
>Week visit www.endisraeliapartheid.net or contact: >[redacted]. For more information about the >international boycott, divestment, and sanctions campaign please visit >www.bds-palestine.net. NYC-area sponsors of Israeli Apartheid Week are:
>NYU Students for Justice in Palestine; Falasteen and the Arab Students >Association at Columbia University; Action Wednesdays Against the War; >Adalah-NY: The Coalition for Justice in the Middle East; the Palestinian >Education Project; Al-Awda New York; NJ Solidarity – Activists for the >Liberation of Palestine; ISM-NYC; and WESPAC.
>_____
>_____
>

>
>[redacted]
>
>

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft Office Live
http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

270. Alexander Jorgensen
The Object in Postmodernism
Fri 9 Feb 2007

An anecdote:

In a class on cross cultural criticism, discussing some of Picasso's later work. A student begins by stating the images studied are an example of the objectification of women, that such images of a woman exposed with legs drawn can only be constructed by another woman and indicates, which is more interesting to me, that Picasso's work is bad - malicious, even. I understand that these are tools for examining culture, etc - and it's all old for me - but for me what was more interesting was what it indicated about the author, Picasso, who in later years was stricken by a kind of psychological melee related to his declining health and prostate cancer. What do you think? And back-channel if deemed safer.
Certainly there is no universality of thought with regards to these issues of representation, but I'm trying to gage where some of us are.

Regards,
Alexander Jorgensen

_____
___
Do you Yahoo!?
Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

271. mIEKAL aND
Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Fri 9 Feb 2007

(censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any national news source....)

Vagina Monologues Gets New Name

By Summer Minor

http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html

The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.

A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and was upset that her niece had also seen the title.

Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."

Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.

The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.

↑ Index

272. mIEKAL aND
Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Speaking of censorship, my company publishes a monthly newsletter for employees & each Feb they have a special Valentine's issue. I submitted the spampo piece pasted below but it was removed from the issue because it was deemed unappropriate & possibly offensive to employees. ~mIEKAL

VIAGRA

I cant find that file
This is where I get my Valium

Unfolding The Rose...
Give Her Something To Smile About!

Your antidepressant with no side effects
You here yet

Fast-Acting
Very Confidencial (please call me)

meeting is on Monday boys this your chance!

I just called to say I Love You
No one will know!

i’m in your area
Don’t wait to find out...

What will your family do?
only this would helps

On Feb 9, 2007, at 11:52 AM, mIEKAL aND wrote:

> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any national news source....)
>
> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
>
> By Summer Minor
>
> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
>
> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.
>
> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
>
> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."

> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
>
> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.

↑ Index

273. Factory School
Meet the Press (PS 1 and 2)
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

public statement: "Report on Future Viability of the Capital Expansion of Experimental Writing Markets"

Content is arbitrary.

Most studies of group formation concentrate on labelling zeitgeist or subculture; rarely is an organizational plan offered as a formula for “building an audience.”

*

public statement: "Heresy in the Small Press Education World"

The current crisis in poetry is that there's no crisis. From Poetry's "vigorous presence" in US culture to the fulfilled promises of the radical avant-garde, there's nothing heretical, even all that risky, in publishing anti-ideological refrains for a captured audience of converts.

Or what.

*

Meet the Press: An Evening With Factory School Design Team
Poetry Project at St. Marks Church
Monday, 8:00 pm

http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

↑ Index

274. Aaron Belz
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Yes, such lament. Here's my poem to mark the occasion. It's not very good--like yesterday's news-- Belz

ANNA NICOLE SMITH (1967-2007)

You said you wanted to make a name for yourself.

What kind of name?
They asked.
Anna Nicole Smith,

you replied
in a tiny voice-- then found

a husband's worth of love in a man named Howard Stern

who, not a DJ,
knew the logic
of your reply.

↑ Index

275. David A. Kirschenbaum
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

So, has the poetics list now devolved to us making fun of dead people?

↑ Index

276. George Bowering
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Yes. I agree. Our making fun of dead people isn't poetics.

On 9-Feb-07, at 11:44 AM, David A. Kirschenbaum wrote:

> So, has the poetics list now devolved to us making fun of dead people?
>
>

George B.
Author of his own misfortunes.

↑ Index

277. Rob McLennan
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

ya; id say theres no need for that.
rob

> So, has the poetics list now devolved to us making fun of dead people?

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press fair ...12th poetry coll'n - aubade (Broken Jaw Press) .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

278. Eric
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

> Our making fun of dead people isn't poetics.

How about ee cummings making fun of buffalo bill's defunct atony? Maybe it depends on how long the subject is dead? And of course the motives of the fun-maker?

↑ Index

279. Rob McLennan
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

he isnt on the list; i dont think it would be any better there either. rob

> How about ee cummings making fun of buffalo bill's defunct atony? Maybe it depends on how long the subject is dead? And of course the motives of the fun-maker?

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press

fair ...12th poetry coll'n - aubade (Broken Jaw Press) .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

280. L Guevarra
NEW BOOK: Green and Gray
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Dear Buffalo Poetics List:

The University of California Press is pleased to announce the publication of:

Green and Gray

Geoffrey G. O'Brien is a Lecturer at the University of California, Berkeley, and the author of _The Guns and Flags Project _(UC Press).

http://go.ucpress.edu/O'Brien

"O'Brien writes meditative poetry at the highest level. The thinking here is not 'about' anything; rather thinking becomes a modality of being within which the potential of lyric situations unfolds and takes on delightful intensities. These are not poems to interpret but to explore for how the mind attentive to the full resources of lyric traditions stretches the senses and therefore finds itself more truly and more strange."-Charles Altieri

Geoffrey G. O'Brien's second collection documents the "remorse of the senses" that attends each moment of experience, the pain and pleasure of not exiting a world in which injustice and distraction secure every sensual event. Attempting to reestablish experience as something other than complicity, these poems insist on "desiring that which is as if it were not," making poetry out of neighborhood flyers, the Patriot Act, and the poverty of presidential speech. Given this mandate to stay within limited resources, _Green and Gray_ makes a virtue of refusing to abandon them, often relying on an emphatic recirculation of words and phrases to generate its own system complexities. These are poems whose materials remember their former use: the gray of the city and the green it used to be.

Full information about the book, including the table of contents, is available online: http://go.ucpress.edu/O'Brien

--
Lolita Guevarra
Electronic Marketing Coordinator
University of California Press
Tel. [redacted] | Fax [redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

281. Dan Coffey
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

No. I think Belz did an honest and fair job of poetically eulogizing ANS.

On 2/9/07, David A. Kirschenbaum <[redacted]> wrote:
> So, has the poetics list now devolved to us making fun of dead people?
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

282. L Guevarra
NEW BOOK: Harm.
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Dear Buffalo Poetics List:

The University of California Press is pleased to announce the publication of:

Harm.

Steve Willard's work has been published in _Colorado Review, Volt, Boston Review, Denver Quarterly,_ and _1913 - A Journal of Forms._

http://go.ucpress.edu/Willard

"You'll want to stop right now and read this book. No day should be without its adamancy, its invention, its honesty. Its edge of defiance, mixed with triumph, operates like a spotlight on human possibility. Always veering just out of sense on a curve of sound, Willard's is a voice that not only has something new to say but that has also has found a new way to say it. This is language at the speed of life."-Cole Swensen, author of _The Book of a Hundred Hands_

This debut volume establishes Steve Willard as a true original, an artist whose kinetic sense of wordplay is deft, smart, and unfailingly provocative. Intended to be read in repeated passes, these poems are Cubist in feel, multifaceted in syntax, and brilliant in coloration. By turns disjunctive, narrative, plaintive, and disruptive, _Harm. _makes use of a wide formal range in reaching toward its ambition, which is nothing short of reclaiming lost human potentiality from current norms. Syntax flexes and the world is refigured, observed as if through a different camera's open aperture, drawing the reader to a new and transformative interior landscape.

Full information about the bookis available online:
http://go.ucpress.edu/Willard

--
Lolita Guevarra
Electronic Marketing Coordinator
University of California Press
Tel. [redacted] | Fax [redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

283. Ren Powell
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

If ever I tended toward misanthropic brooding, the postings on this are inspiring.

Thinking of Aristotle's definition of tragic and given the media-, fame-hungry society we live in. . . add to that the fact that her child died before she did, it is tragic and hardly a call for jokes in bad taste. The only thing I find ironic is that people who write poetry can look at things with such a shallow gaze.

_____
Ren Powell
[redacted]
www.sidesteppingreal.blogspot.com
www.icorn.org

↑ Index

284. Pluto, Anne Elezabeth
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Thank you - Ron Powell - how sad and true. As a mother - I can't even imagine what it would be like to bury my child.

> ----------
> From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Ren Powell
> Reply To: UB Poetics discussion group
> Sent: Friday, February 9, 2007 3:33 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
>
> If ever I tended toward misanthropic brooding, the postings on this are inspiring.

> Thinking of Aristotle's definition of tragic and given the media-, fame-hungry society we live in. . . add to that the fact that her child died before she did, it is tragic and hardly a call for jokes in bad taste. The only thing I find ironic is that people who write poetry can look at things with such a shallow gaze.
>
> _____
> Ren Powell
> [redacted]
> www.sidesteppingreal.blogspot.com
> www.icorn.org

↑ Index

285. Ren Powell
nevermind. . .
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Sorry- total knee jerk jerk posting stemming from a truly well-rooted misanthropy.

_____

Ren Powell

[redacted]

<http://www.sidesteppingreal.blogspot.com> www.sidesteppingreal.blogspot.com

<http://www.icorn.org> www.icorn.org

↑ Index

286. Aaron Belz
I was serious...
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Hey folks - my poem, and my sense of loss, is real. The Anna Nicole Smith story is complex and symbolic of our age. I think the fact that you read the poem as "making fun" might speak more to your own academic detachedness rather than anything inherently lighthearted about the poem I posted.

Aaron

↑ Index

287. George Bowering
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

On 9-Feb-07, at 12:39 PM, Pluto, Anne Elezabeth wrote:

> Thank you - Ron Powell - how sad and true. As a mother - I can't even imagine what it would be like to bury my child.

Well, my wife did that 4 months ago, and I can tell you that it is worse remembering than it is imagining.

gb

↑ Index

288. kevin thurston
Re: I was serious...
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

amen

nothing can kill passion and create cynicism like a .edu email address

On 2/9/07, Aaron Belz <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Hey folks - my poem, and my sense of loss, is real. The Anna Nicole Smith > story is complex and symbolic of our age. I think the fact that you read > the poem as "making fun" might speak more to your own academic > detachedness
> rather than anything inherently lighthearted about the poem I posted.
>
> Aaron
>

--
new address as of 2/1

299 richmond ave lower buffalo, ny 14222
usofa

↑ Index

289. Suzanne Burns
Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Ahhh, Anna Nicole. Thanks for the mammaries.

Suzanne

(Sorry, had to get that in....)

On 2/9/07, Aaron Belz <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Yes, such lament. Here's my poem to mark the occasion. It's not very > good--like yesterday's news-- Belz
>
>
>
> ANNA NICOLE SMITH (1967-2007)
>
> You said you wanted
> to make a name
> for yourself.
>
> What kind of name?
> They asked.
> Anna Nicole Smith,
>
> you replied
> in a tiny voice-- > then found
>
> a husband's worth
> of love in a man > named Howard Stern
>
> who, not a DJ,
> knew the logic
> of your reply.
>

--
"I will take the Ring to Mordor...though...I do not know the way."

Frodo Baggins, Fellowship of the Ring

↑ Index

290. Alan Sondheim

Anna Nicole Smith

Fri 9 Feb 2007

She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky. Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.

She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't register properly, there was always something else going on. On another list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.

So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get "hold" of Michael Jackson.

Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty, a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.

Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.

This really was upsetting.

- Alan

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

291. cralan kelder
this interesting fascinate
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

nice vid to watch starts out with difference between hand written and digital texts, segues into something describing itself

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6gmP4nk0EOE&eurl

↑ Index

292. Lewis LaCook
The Fog of Dracula - New Video by Lewis LaCook
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

http://www.lewislacook.org/king-s-woods/the-fog-of-dracula.html

Lewis LaCook
Director of Web Development
Abstract Outlooks Media

[redacted]

http://www.abstractoutlooks.com
Abstract Outlooks Media - Premium Web Hosting, Development, and Art Photography

http://www.lewislacook.org
lewislacook.org - New Media Poetry and Poetics

http://www.xanaxpop.org
Xanax Pop - the Poetry of Lewis LaCook

Don't get soaked. Take a quick peak at the forecast with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.

↑ Index

293. Ren Powell
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Eloquent, Alan.
If I write a very short thanks it would be taken for irony, wouldn't it?
It's not.

_____
Ren Powell

↑ Index

294. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. / One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.

By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten eleven twelve thirteen

A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.

And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"

Seven syllables
Eleven syllables
Seven syllables

I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?

For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.

Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."

I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think, too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem, "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.

Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

Michael
P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ([redacted]):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line). 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like an obedient school bo y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have expected better on this discussion list. 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another

contributor to the wooliness in this line. 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation. 5. The poem is choppy and awkward. 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry). 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku, no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life) techniques -- and more. And through al l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.

On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation. It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with images, they start with them.

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku

I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

Don't look at my face.
No change, just large bills.

One wrong move will be your last.

Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

295. George Bowering
Re: GEORGE BOWERING
Fri 9 Feb 2007

Well, kind of.
But I like labs.
Who could not.

On 8-Feb-07, at 6:24 PM, Alexander Jorgensen wrote:

> Don't you sometimes get the feeling that he's kinda > like a labrador - who's been chewing on a bone for far > too long a time, just for the fun of it! His tail > waggin' and all ears!
>
> AJ
> --- George Bowering <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>> If he's smoking on the porch,
>> you got him.
>>
>> gb
>>
>>
>> On 8-Feb-07, at 1:17 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
>>
>>> If I wanna drive across the state to see this how >> can I be sure it >>> will actually be Kent Johnson who appears at this >> thing?
>>>
>>> You can never be too careful.
>>>
>>> ~mIEKAL
>>>
>>>

>>> On Feb 8, 2007, at 3:03 PM, David-Baptiste Chirot >> wrote:
>>>
>>>> Kent Johnson--"Mr. Kent" in some of his poems, >> like Burroughs' being
>>>> "Mr. Lee" in various of his writings--will be >> making the following >>>> appearances this month in the guise of the >> "author function" known as
>>>> "Kent Johnson"--at the following sites:
>>>>
>>>> a reading at Illinois Wesleyan University the >> week following on >>>> Saturday, February 25, at 7:30 PM, Hansen Student >> Center, 300 Beecher
>>>> St., Bloomington, Illinois.
>>>>
>>>>
>>>> and, on behalf of Susan Firer from the English >> Dept. at UW-Milwaukee, >>>> this announcement of next week's Milwaukee >> appearances:
>>>
>>>
>> Geo. Bowering, DLit
>> A devotee of Veronica Lake
>>
>
>
> ---
>
>
>
> _____
> _____
> 8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
> with the Yahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.
> http://tools.search.yahoo.com/shortcuts/#news
>
>
George
Satisfied with his undergarments.

↑ Index

296. Stephen Vincent
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

> *A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.*

Maybe with my good Protestant origins, I have never been at home with adherence to any kind of orthodox system of behavior, but I find your insistences about Haiku (origins and form) static and humorless. Occasionally I work among elderly Chinese emigrants here in San Francisco, and indeed, for example, in making watercolors, many of them continue to adhere unwaveringly to 'branches, leaves, blossoms and bird' forms - sometimes attractive but boring, boring, rigid, etc. At best you want to tear up the pages and introduce students to the fresh experience of montage, collage, etc. Such as with Violi's haiku - the juxtaposition of what he has done against conventional content is startling, refreshing - a response that I find with what I can only sense to be 'good' translations of 'ancient' haiku. Much of which I suspect Paul Violi and many of us have been variably interested readers - whether via Pound, Rexroth, Waley & on.

Your argument for a formally true Haiku, seems as claustrophobic to me as someone who might argue - with similar orthodox leanings - that Coltrane, Rollins, etc., etc. are not making authentic "ballads". Morph, my friend, morph - it is, from my experience, at least, a mutable, non-static universe of which the contemporary spirit and practice of haiku is inextricably involved.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

297. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Fri 9 Feb 2007

I don't think something has to be esoteric to be authentic. That's certainly the case for haiku (and here I note that the theme for the 2005 Haiku North America conference was "authenticity"!). In fact, if a haiku is too esoteric, it tends to lose authenticity for many people because they can't relate to it, or even stretch themselves to do so. Better, I think, to be esoteric (if you want) while also still being sufficiently authentic and accessible. Leaf through the pages of Modern Haiku magazine, or Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology, and over and over you will find poems that strike a fine balance between the esoteric (alienating in the extreme) and the immediate (to easy and comfortable in the extreme). It's a balance between the universal and the particular, and a balance between the expression of the self and the effective communication of that self to someone else.

More to the point here, Jason (re your message below), it seems I or others come off as haiku snobs to you. Forgive me for such snobbishness, if you can. And then I hope you and anyone else who feels the same way can still take a look at the ISSUE itself to see whether you understand it fully or not. I guess I am wagging a finger here, aren't I? And I'm obviously in earnest. But there are problems that deserve to have fingers wagged at them. Indeed, tell me, what else are we who write literary haiku supposed to do? I don't want to be snobbish about haiku -- in fact, one of the virtues of haiku is how accessible it can be, in that it focuses on everyday subjects of personal immediacy (Issa wrote about the flies in his house, Buson about his dead wife's comb underfoot). Yet what should we do if we see haiku being so widely misunderstood, even just in the mainstream poetry community (never mind the general public)? What, pray tell, am I being dumb about (to refer to the end of y our message)?

Michael

P.S. Some of you might be interested in a book review I wrote for Modern Haiku that's online at http://www.modernhaiku.org/bookreviews/UnsweptPath2006.html. I discuss the issue of influences in haiku, and the range of possibilities in the genre, in particular regarding the anthology Unswept Path, from White Pine Press -- an excellent yet flawed book. In this review, I deride the notion of a secret handshake for haiku poets. A secret society or the ghettoization of haiku is not what I think is good for anybody, hence this discussion. These are tricky matters of education, and unfortunately it seems to need to begin with the implication that person A is educated, and person B is not. It need never be brought up, except that, in this case person B seems to be claiming, even if not overtly, to be "educated" about haiku, when in fact that's demonstrably not the case. I'm interested in deghettoizing haiku here, and that means, I think, some education for those outside the haiku g hetto, as well as some education for those in the ghetto. A dialog between the two will do worlds of good. That's what I'm after. Telling me to keep my haiku to myself in a secret society isn't going to help. So how do we curb such haiku "snobbishness" and address the real issue at hand?

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 20:47:42 -0800
From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match

but if we did that, then folks wouldn't be able to be snobby about authenticity. because we all know that authenticity is what's really important. and in order for anything to be authentic, it must first be esoteric. i think what should be done is that all the books about haiku, in particular lee gurga's that keeps getting recommended, ought to be entrusted to secret societies and all publicly available copies should be burnt. and then everyone who thinks it's important that a haiku be "real" can join the secret societies, and the rest of us can get on with writing short poems. i'll even promise to never call a short poem of mine a haiku so long as the haiku-snobs will promise to point out that it isn't really a haiku. then we can all be at peace with one another in a sort of zen state of mutually acknowledged dumbness.

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

298. Factory School

Meet the Press (PS 3 and 4)

Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

public statement: "Ex-Communication, Clandestine Missions (the bypath of culture work)"

Fleeting thoughts, nursery songs, idle chat, story-telling, worthless tales, visions, nonsense, imaginary arguments, devices, trifles, mockeries, dreams, absurdities -- all the fruits of dementia.

Against the rhetorical unification of opposites, a multiplication of contraries, with all books ex-communicating their ir-relevance and ir-rationality in a new zone of heterodox cultural production.

*

public statement: "Design as Resistance Production"

Where poetry ends, architecture begins. This is the end of the theater architecture of the classroom.

The pataphysician would build something impossible out of something real; another kind of physician would build something real out of the impossible.

Utopian images, like poetry, end at the moment the blueprints are held up to the sky.

*

Meet the Press: An Evening With Factory School Design Team
Poetry Project at St. Marks Church
Monday, 8:00 pm

http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

↑ Index

299. Mark Weiss
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

A couple of years ago, on a dare, I composed a renga according, as far as I understand them, to the orthodox rules, including the seasonal references in their ordained places, etc. Except of course that a renga is supposed to be a group effort. But there are enough of me to go around.

RENGA

Summer? In Sumer
I'd expect it.
But here?

Waver of light rising off the tarmac.

In such a state anything, tire tracks.

...and if I were a bird
I would fly away...

Harvest moon through smoke rising, enormous.

Filtered by leaves the light stains your face.

Made love to on the deep soft purple duff.

Come out come out come all ye wherever you are.

Easy to leave Cheyenne this morning.

A mountain somewhere with something on it.

Having pissed, polar bear is whiter than snow.

Frozen, Moon River flows through frozen fields.

Each day the bird has learned a different tune.

Repetition the wild card in this game.

Who wrote who wrote who wrote the book of love?

Ask her: who wrote, wrought
what? "Which needs?" she says.

First there is a mountain with a white bear.

Fly away, build a nest
and shriek your heart out.

Only bees can understand the flowers.

One can refuse to be reborn, maybe.

At 06:17 PM 2/9/2007, you wrote:
> > A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the > way, that haiku > > nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie > > Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before > > proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't > think there > > can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's > > poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself > > publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and > is easily torn > > apart for failing as haiku.

>
>Maybe with my good Protestant origins, I have never been at home with >adherence to any kind of orthodox system of behavior, but I find your >insistences about Haiku (origins and form) static and humorless.
>Occasionally I work among elderly Chinese emigrants here in San Francisco, >and indeed, for example, in making watercolors, many of them continue to >adhere unwaveringly to 'branches, leaves, blossoms and bird' forms - >sometimes attractive but boring, boring, rigid, etc. At best you want to >tear up the pages and introduce students to the fresh experience of montage, >collage, etc.
>Such as with Violi's haiku - the juxtaposition of what he has done against >conventional content is startling, refreshing - a response that I find with >what I can only sense to be 'good' translations of 'ancient' haiku. Much of >which I suspect Paul Violi and many of us have been variably interested >readers - whether via Pound, Rexroth, Waley & on.
>
>Your argument for a formally true Haiku, seems as claustrophobic to me as >someone who might argue - with similar orthodox leanings - that Coltrane, >Rollins, etc., etc. are not making authentic "ballads". Morph, my friend, >morph - it is, from my experience, at least, a mutable, non-static universe >of which the contemporary spirit and practice of haiku is inextricably >involved.
>
>Stephen Vincent
>http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>

↑ Index

300. Marcus Bales
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

On 9 Feb 2007 at 15:17, Stephen Vincent wrote:
> ... morph - it is, from my experience, at least, a mutable, non-static > universe of which the contemporary spirit and practice of haiku is > inextricably involved.

Ah, the opinion that every opinion is just as good as every other opinion, "... except YOUR opinion is not as good as MINE...", rears its ugly head.

Marcus

↑ Index

301. Ruth Lepson
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Fri 9 Feb 2007

---

amen to you both

ruth l.

On 2/9/07 4:59 PM, "Ren Powell" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Eloquent, Alan.
> If I write a very short thanks it would be taken for irony, wouldn't it?
> It's not.
>
> _____
> Ren Powell

↑ Index

302. Davey Volner
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
> One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's > quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with > haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet > labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do > with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (

> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 > edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an > essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of > longer poetry. Comments welcome.
>
> By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another > mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this > stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from > the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):
>
> flag haiku
>
> one two three four five
> six seven eight nine ten e> leven twelve thirteen
>
> A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that > haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As > Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre
> before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't > think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong > as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could > see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and > is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.
>
> And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
> haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
>
> Seven syllables
> Eleven syllables
> Seven syllables
>
> I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a > poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American
> poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to > suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your > tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you > read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?
>
> For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit > http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.

>
> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early > 20th c.---eliot's objective
> correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce > too the haiku suggestiveness."
>
> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind > things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness > rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word > chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think, > too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects > correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the > word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from > person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative > than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things > perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly > objective, focusing on nouns a > nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive > weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
> "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the > cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be > strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and > in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a > subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > subjective element isn't overpowering.
>
> Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it > somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think > that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain > people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why > it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label

> something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that > you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.
>
> Michael
> P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > [redacted]):
>
> Golf Haiku
>
> Robin watches drive,
> waits until I leave the tee,
> probes divot for worm.
>
> Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):
>
> 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need > to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have > titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on > Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is > insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a > form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think > somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a > set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't > want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on > the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather,
you > want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much > as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the > scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like
> an obedient school bo
> y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension > of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, > letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
> -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; > Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable > by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to > chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have > expected better on this discussion list.

> 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is > oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase > letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a > person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping > off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in > this line.
> 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our > attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks > implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like > this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
> 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
> 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
> (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the > seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect > of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as > honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
> 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's > either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and > it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of > 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for > example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the > snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird > taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if > a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku, > no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it > employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> techniques -- and more. And through al > l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
>
> On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or > intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective > description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
> It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > images, they start with them.

>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: haiku
>
> I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which > I am
> proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't > believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the > conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:
>
> Don't look at my face.
> No change, just large bills.
> One wrong move will be your last.
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, > free AOL Mail and more.
>

↑ Index

303. Dan Coffey
Re: haiku
Fri 9 Feb 2007

I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems themeselves.

I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.

On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
> I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are > satirical?
>
> On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
> >
> > If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
> > One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's > > quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with > > haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet > > labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do > > with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (

> > http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 > > edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an > > essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of > > longer poetry. Comments welcome.
> >
> > By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another > > mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this > > stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from > > the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):
> >
> > flag haiku
> >
> > one two three four five
> > six seven eight nine ten e> > leven twelve thirteen
> >
> > A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that > > haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As > > Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre
> > before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't > > think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong > > as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could > > see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and > > is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.
> >
> > And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
> > haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
> >
> > Seven syllables
> > Eleven syllables
> > Seven syllables
> >
> > I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a > > poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American
> > poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to > > suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your > > tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you

> > read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?
> >
> > For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit > > http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
> >
> > Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early > > 20th c.---eliot's objective
> > correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce > > too the haiku suggestiveness."
> >
> > I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > > other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind
> > things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness > > rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word
> > chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,
> > too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > > chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
> > correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > > associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read
the
> > word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from > > person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
> > than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things
> > perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly > > objective, focusing on nouns a > > nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > > relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive > > weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > > subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
> > "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the > > cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be > > strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and > > in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > > controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a > > subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > > subjective element isn't overpowering.
> >

> > Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it > > somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think > > that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > > good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > > them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain > > people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why
> > it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > > first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label > > something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that > > you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.
> >
> > Michael
> > P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > > [redacted]):
> >
> > Golf Haiku
> >
> > Robin watches drive,
> > waits until I leave the tee,
> > probes divot for worm.
> >
> > Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > > among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that > > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):
> >
> > 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > > redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need > > to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have > > titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> > 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > > drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on > > Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is > > insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a
> > form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think > > somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a > > set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > > tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't > > want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on > > the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather,
you > > want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much > > as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the > > scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like

> > an obedient school bo
> > y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension > > of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, > > letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
> > -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; > > Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
> > by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to > > chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have > > expected better on this discussion list.
> > 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is > > oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase > > letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a > > person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping > > off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
> > this line.
> > 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our > > attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks > > implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like > > this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
> > 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
> > 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
> > (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the > > seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect > > of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as > > honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
> > 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > > implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > > enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's > > either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and > > it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of > > 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for > > example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the > > snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird > > taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > > realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if > > a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku,

> > no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it
> > employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> > techniques -- and more. And through al > > l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
> >
> > On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > > objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or > > intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective > > description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
> > It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > > images, they start with them.
> >
> >
> >
> > -----Original Message-----
> > Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> > From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Re: haiku
> >
> > I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which > > I am
> > proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't > > believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the > > conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:
> >
> > Don't look at my face.
> > No change, just large bills.
> > One wrong move will be your last.
> > _____
> > Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security
> > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, > > free AOL Mail and more.
> >
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

304. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Well, i think the real issue is one of investment and value. You're a person who has devoted a considerable amount of time and energy into a poetic form, and as such that form has a value for you that it simply doesn't for me, as a person who generally is a little bit snide towards the idea of form from the get go. I think where the disconnect takes place is that you're mistaking a lack of interest in the minutiae of something that you say is complex (i'm not saying it's not complex, just that i don't know enough about it to be able to affirm or deny) for naivete, which is a little bit insulting. I can maybe illustrate with my own experience writing haiku. Like most people at some point in the third or fourth grade, my language arts teacher introduced the idea of syllables, as well as the idea of poems that don't possess end rhyme, by talking about these short little japanese poems called haiku that have a 5-7-5 syllable pattern. I think for most people that's the beginning and end of the interest in the form. I know that it has been largely for me. I've written all manner of poems in a 5-7-5 formula, and all manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku? if i don't know what the real purpose of a haiku is, and what the real goal is, and am in fact trying to achieve some other goal and mistakenly calling it haiku, i'm not being naive, i'm just using the wrong word. So i stop calling it haiku, and we can go about our lives happily enough never discussing it again. However, there's something very peculiar about in particular the haiku booster that really rubs me the wrong way. almost like some people take a sort of obscene pleasure in "correcting" the mistake of the less informed. at some point it becaomes as trivial a matter as whether kirk or picard were a superior starship captain.

so what i'm saying is, i think what in your messages has gotten my back up a bit is the way it's expressed in such an accusatory and aloof manner, as if haiku is the only way to write a short poem, and that if one is working at the length of haiku there can't possibly be a goal higher than in realizing the conventions of haiku. being mainly an anti formalist and against the idea of poetic form that can't be expressed in a number of words fewer than the form permits the poem, i'm skeptical of such claims from the outset. So it takes some convincing for me to buy in to the idea that there really is something in this constructed form which genuinely warrants societies being dedicated to it, magazines devoted to it, and books written exploring teh depth of it. But instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating about how i don't know anything about the subject and that if i want to talk about it, i really need to do my homework.

Well fine, i say, i hate homework so lets just not talk about it. Let teh haiku snob wallow in his penny-ante beat, and i'll roll my eyes and move on to something that i think genuinely is of value.

If that makes sense, and I promise you i'm not trying to be adversarial, just trying to sort through the array of emotions and their instigations in the thread about haiku to date that prompted me to dispatch a snarky email. If you really want my opinion, this last email has gone a longer way towards getting me interested in haiku than your previous emails which seemed largely concerned with showing how some poems claiming to be haiku are not in fact.

What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it. What is it about the seasonal words and juxtapositions that you find in haiku that make them so essential and raises this above other forms like, for example, an aubade? I think maybe you'd get farther with snide jackasses like me if you focussed more on the positive argument for real haiku rather than the negative argument against fake haiku. Because i generally don't find things that are defined primarily by contrast to things which they are not to be particularly interesting. birds are cool because they have wings, not because they don't have gills, y'know?

All of that having been said, i want to let you know that I really appreciate the sincerity and tone of your last email, and I want you to know that by it, you've aroused a curiosity in me about the form that did not exist when i snarkily suggest that haiku be relegated to mystery cults. There's very little as effective as the sincere expression of passion for a topic to make another person sympathetic to investigating it. I've ordered Gurga's book, and am looking forward to reading it. I don't know if i'll become a haiku fanatic, or even if i'll ever try to write a haiku, but you've swayed me to thinking that maybe there's something i'm missing out on, and that's a tactic that is very effective with me.

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> I don't think something has to be esoteric to be authentic. That's certainly the case for haiku (and here I note that the theme for the 2005 Haiku North America conference was "authenticity"!). In fact, if a haiku is too esoteric, it tends to lose authenticity for many people because they can't relate to it, or even stretch themselves to do so. Better, I think, to be esoteric (if you want) while also still being sufficiently authentic and accessible. Leaf through the pages of Modern Haiku magazine, or Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology, and over and over you will find poems that strike a fine balance between the esoteric (alienating in the extreme) and the immediate (to easy and comfortable in the extreme). It's a balance between the universal and the particular, and a balance between the expression of the self and the effective communication of that self to someone else.

>
> More to the point here, Jason (re your message below), it seems I or others come off as haiku snobs to you. Forgive me for such snobbishness, if you can. And then I hope you and anyone else who feels the same way can still take a look at the ISSUE itself to see whether you understand it fully or not. I guess I am wagging a finger here, aren't I? And I'm obviously in earnest. But there are problems that deserve to have fingers wagged at them. Indeed, tell me, what else are we who write literary haiku supposed to do? I don't want to be snobbish about haiku -- in fact, one of the virtues of haiku is how accessible it can be, in that it focuses on everyday subjects of personal immediacy (Issa wrote about the flies in his house, Buson about his dead wife's comb underfoot). Yet what should we do if we see haiku being so widely misunderstood, even just in the mainstream poetry community (never mind the general public)? What, pray tell, am I being dumb about (to refer to the end o f y > our message)?
>
> Michael
>
> P.S. Some of you might be interested in a book review I wrote for Modern Haiku that's online at http://www.modernhaiku.org/bookreviews/UnsweptPath2006.html. I discuss the issue of influences in haiku, and the range of possibilities in the genre, in particular regarding the anthology Unswept Path, from White Pine Press -- an excellent yet flawed book. In this review, I deride the notion of a secret handshake for haiku poets. A secret society or the ghettoization of haiku is not what I think is good for anybody, hence this discussion. These are tricky matters of education, and unfortunately it seems to need to begin with the implication that person A is educated, and person B is not. It need never be brought up, except that, in this case person B seems to be claiming, even if not overtly, to be "educated" about haiku, when in fact that's demonstrably not the case. I'm interested in deghettoizing haiku here, and that means, I think, some education for those outside the haik u g > hetto, as well as some education for those in the ghetto. A dialog between the two will do worlds of good. That's what I'm after. Telling me to keep my haiku to myself in a secret society isn't going to help. So how do we curb such haiku "snobbishness" and address the real issue at hand?
>
>

> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 20:47:42 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match
>
> but if we did that, then folks wouldn't be able to be snobby about authenticity.
> because we all know that authenticity is what's really important. and > in order for anything to be authentic, it must first be esoteric. i think what > should be done is that all the books about haiku, in particular lee > gurga's that keeps getting recommended, ought to be entrusted to secret > societies and all publicly available copies should be burnt. and then everyone > who thinks it's important that a haiku be "real" can join the secret societies, > and the rest of us can get on with writing short poems. i'll even > promise to never call a short poem of mine a haiku so long as the haiku-snobs > will promise to point out that it isn't really a haiku. then we can all > be at peace with one another in a sort of zen state of mutually acknowledged > dumbness.
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

305. Jason Quackenbush

Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era

Sat 10 Feb 2007

---

i agree, i thought belz's poem was pretty okay.

Dan Coffey wrote:
> No. I think Belz did an honest and fair job of poetically eulogizing ANS.
>
> On 2/9/07, David A. Kirschenbaum <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>> So, has the poetics list now devolved to us making fun of dead people?
>>
>
>

↑ Index

306. Joe Amato
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

But Dan, how would you know whether a poet knows "the history of the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?

Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.

This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?

There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, with (or without) the possession of such knowledge. Whether the results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c they've deviated from the norm. If you think you can read a given example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated knowledge.

That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has a stomach for.

At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence of such knowledge.

I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of haiku.

Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, and resistance thereto. That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.

Best,

Joe

> I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems themeselves.
>
> I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.
>
> On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
> I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?
>
> On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> *If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. / One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.*
>
> By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten eleven twelve thirteen

*A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.*

And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"

Seven syllables
Eleven syllables
Seven syllables

*I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?*

For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.

Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."

I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think, too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects

correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the
word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
"for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically,
where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's
> clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.

Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare
while, if it
somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

Michael
P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( [redacted]):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that

haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my *drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of
Time: Essays on
Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is* insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from.
Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable
count like
an obedient school bo
y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
-- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have expected better on this discussion list.
3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
this line.
4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
(I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).

7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied.
Consider, for
example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if
a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku, no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled,
whether it
employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
techniques -- and more. And through al
l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.

On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or
intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with images, they start with them.

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku

I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am
proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

Don't look at my face.
No change, just large bills.
One wrong move will be your last.

Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

>
> --
> http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

307. Charlie Rossiter

haiku

Sat 10 Feb 2007

I hate to be the bearer of bad tidings, but anyone who knows haiku will tell you Violli's "poem" would never be seen as even a minimally passable haiku--it's got way too much narrative--haiku is not a mini-story in 3 lines. sorry, but that's how it is.

you can still like that work as a 3 line poem if you like--but do you really like it as a poem or do you think it's a terribly clever way to do a bit of flash fiction in 3 lines. Poetry leaves room for the reader's imagination.

One good thing about poetry is that we have countless editors out there with different taste so that someone who has no use for our work can be quickly forgotten as we forge onward looking for the editor who appreciates it.

charlie
--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
Charlie said that.
www.poetrypoetry.com
where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them

www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)

www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues

www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

308. Laura Winton
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what she was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death has made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure without many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to find out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm not sure I want to participate in further.

Does that make any sense at all???

-----Original Message-----
From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
Subject: Anna Nicole Smith

She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky. Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.

She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't register properly, there was always something else going on. On another list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.

So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get "hold" of Michael Jackson.

Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty, a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.

Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.

This really was upsetting.

- Alan

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

309. Alan Sondheim
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Our culture is perpetuated in any case, of course; what's important is what one does in relation to it; at best perhaps, one can take a critical and/or empathetic stand. I've heard the 'famous for being famous' in relation to a number of people, and I think in a way it begs the question. How can one open this short-circuit? For me, it's related to causation; one always looks for cause and effect - we're brought up to believe this. But causality is problematic, and the questions that Anna Nicole Smith raises may literally be unanswerable, and at the same time 'eternally' vulnerable (or susceptible) to theory - the descriptions, analyses, go on and on, just as Tonya Harding appeared in scholarly works as well as innumerable pop venues.

One element of interest is that such analyses can be applied anywhere, anywhen; from Anna Nicole Smith to far more 'important' matters such as world conflicts, issues of fundamentalism, etc., (for me) to realize just how fragile causality (and its accompanying enunciation of specific effect/affect) is. In other words, I think it's fine not to have answers, ethical structures, etc., in one's life.

I hope this makes sense - it's late at night. I do want to add that if you watched the reality show, the tragedy came through rather starkly; there were times literally couldn't watch.

Finally, I really don't know what she's perpetuating (or was used to perpetuate); there are many other models for exaggerated sexuality for example.

- Alan

On Fri, 9 Feb 2007, Laura Winton wrote:

> *I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what she was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous* *for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death has made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure without many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to find out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm not sure I want to participate in further.*

Does that make any sense at all???

-----Original Message-----
From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
Subject: Anna Nicole Smith

She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky. Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.

She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't register properly, there was always something else going on. On another list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.

So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get "hold" of Michael Jackson.

Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty, a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.

Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.

This really was upsetting.

- Alan

==========

> ==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check
> WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance,
> dvds, etc.
> ==========

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

310. Alan Sondheim

Real-time file access and organization - suggestions?

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Real-time file access and organization -

Here is the problem, as anyone following my work can attest - there's too much of it. I'll be at the Openport festival in Chicago the end of the month, doing a symposium, talk, two performances. So I'm attempting to organize files for the last, and it's difficult. I narrowed the video/ audio work to 900 files - and these are edited from the mass of my video/ audio work in general, running I think around 2500. I've placed the files in two folders, Performance 1 / 2. The names (titles) of the files convey nothing. I'm still naming from the film years when one produced "pieces" with such. So there are 900 names, and I forget what most of these things are. It's not even easy to tell by extension - there are sound files for example ending as .mp4, and some of the .mov are set for no framework and loop; these are most often converted .mp4 in disguise. The problem with .mp4 in performance - the compression uses a lot of CPU cycles; the result is that it's actually more difficult to run a number of parallel .mp4 files (which are quite small) than to run the same from the original very large .mov or .avi files.

Thumbnails won't do - they would be too difficult to manage, would clutter up the screen, wouldn't handle audio. I think of code - G for Geneva, D for dance, GG for Gruyere, GA for Aletsch glacier work - but then the individual pieces are still left behind. I've tried brief 2-3 word descriptions in the titles, but that doesn't seem to help; there are variations, some of the work is indescribable in terms of a few words, and so forth. In any case, the directories have to be on the screen when I'm performing - that's the whole point of it - the ability to choose video/ audio on the fly. I'm not sure where to take this - memorizing indices, mnemonics ... The total number of still images that I work with (i.e. not family) is about 10000. The total of everything is probably around 14000.

I swim in these. I need a directory structure for everything, coupled with a search engine; I need keywords and a way to delimit and present files during performance; I need a system which is easily understandable on the fly. I'm speaking of approximately 200 gigabytes of material here. I've been sitting going through file after file; it's a real impossibility! If the equipment holds up (I've been having difficulties with Quicktime retaining its preferences which are critical), things should run smoothly - they'll be more out of control than ever, the semantics of the perform- ance trying to keep up. But the presentation will, internally, be somewhat scattershot. I work with laser scan, motion capture, dancers, mappings and remappings of the human body, landscape, very low frequency and shortwave radio, filtered and unfiltered recordings of various musical instruments, images from the problematic of 'wilderness,' video and audio bounced and transformed across the country, material from Second Life performance, materials from programs like Netstumbler (tracking wireless), modified travel footage, local histories and architectures of early mass transit, sexuality, the 'edges' of languages, choreographies, interactivities, codework and codework software, Mathematica, and video/audio noise across the Net, offline as well. All of these areas are subsetted; they spread like tentacles across my workspace, (in)(co)herent, lost and found; now when I perform, I'm part audience, seeing the (re)presentation for the first time, trying more desperately than ever to hold everything together. This is a world of the forgotten, unorganized in relation to 'the clean and proper body,' inert to deconstruction (which is collapsed by error, circles of confusion, exhaustion, loss), open to Levinas' existence and existents. Never do I know where this has gone, will go. But I still need something of a system, something of a path through the dark woods. (And of course any suggestions greatly appreciated.)

- Alan

↑ Index

311. Tim Peterson

EOAGH Issue 3: Queering Language

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Announcing

EOAGH: A Journal of the Arts Issue 3: QUEERING LANGUAGE

for kari edwards (1954-2006)

at the CHAX Press website:
http://chax.org/eoagh/issue3/issuethree.html

EDITED BY CA Conrad
kari Edwards
Paul Foster Johnson
Erica Kaufman
Jack Kimball
Tim Peterson and Stacy Szymaszek

FEATURING

Kazim Ali
Antler
John Ashbery
Micah Ballard
Jeffrey Beam
Jen Benka
Mark Bibbins
Gregg Biglieri
Julian T. Brolaski
Nicole Brossard
Brandon Brown
Regie Cabico
David Cameron
Guillermo Castro
Abigail Child
Allison Cobb
Sean Cole
Jen Coleman
Kyle Conner
Dennis Cooper
Cori Copp
Jim Cory
Phil Crippen
Del Ray Cross
Rachel Daley
Almitra David

Tim Dlugos
John Mercuri Dooley
Sarah Dowling
Michael Tod Edgerton
kari edwards
Joe Elliot
Maria Fama
Michael Farrell
Corrine Fitzpatrick
Alex Gildzen
Guillermo Gómez-Peña
Alexandra Grilikhes
E. Tracy Grinnell
Nada Gordon
Chris Gullo
Jeremy Halinen
Rob Halpern
Julia Hastain
Hassen
Jen Hofer
Yuri Hospodar
Brenda Iijima and Stacy Szymaszek
Mytili Jagannathan
Paolo Javier and Ernest Concepcion
Stephen Jonas
Jeffrey Jullich
Anne Kaier
Amanda Katz
Vincent Katz
Candace Kaucher
Erica Kaufman
Eric Keenaghan
Kevin Killian
Jack Kimball and Tim Peterson
Amy King
Wayne Koestenbaum
Bill Kushner
Susan Landers
Gerrit Lansing
Rachel Levitsky
Lori Lubeski
Ben Malkin

Filip Marinovich
Tim Martin
Janet Mason
Farid Matuk
Edric Mesmer
Thomas Meyer
Cathleen Miller
Eileen Myles
Sawako Nakayasu
Tenney Nathanson
Chris Nealon
Martha Oatis
Jeni Olin
Akilah Oliver
Ashraf Osman
Ronald Palmer
Stephen Potter
kathryn l. pringle
Austin Publicover
Sina Queyras
Camille Roy
Trish Salah
Jocelyn Saidenberg
David Shapiro
Nathaniel Siegel
Cedar Sigo
Jack Spicer
Christina Strong
Roberto Tejada
Karl Tierney
Jay Thomas
David Trinidad
Tony Towle
John Tyson
Stephen Vincent
Alli Warren
Jonathan Williams
Stephanie Young
Rachel Zolf
Magdalena Zurawski
Jason Zuzga

* * *

Thanks to everyone who helped make this possible!

Don't forget: the NY Release Party and Reading on Saturday happens at 8 PM at the Bowery Poetry Club.

A Philadelphia release party and reading is also in the works; more info soon.

* * *

SUBMIT to EOAGH: A Journal of the Arts at http://chax.org/eoagh/submit.htm

↑ Index

312. Barry Schwabsky
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

At least in the case of Paul's poem, I don't think that's true at all. It is quite funny, but not satirical. For me, it is profound expression of the human condition, if you don't mind me putting it like that. (I know that sounds a bit old-fashioned.) Also, contrary to what someone else said, I don't see any real narrative in it. It conjures an image with which one is familiar from narratives (movies, tv) about bank robberies, but nothing is narrated, there is no before or after, no chain of events: just a moment in which one is suddenly faced with something.

Regarding Ron's poem, with which I was previously unfamiliar, I also doubt that the intention behind it is mainly satirical. It's pretty dry for that, after all. It seems more to be about pure formalism and its paradoxes, in a manner reminiscent of certain early '70s conceptual art, such as some of Dan Graham's text works. But as I said, this is just a first impression as far as Ron's poem goes.

Finally, I have to say to the person who used the childish gesture of putting scare quotes around the word "poem" when writing about these efforts--whether one find them successful or not is another thing: the reactionary attitude this betrays is its own counterargument.

Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
>
> If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /

> One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's > quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with > haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet > labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do > with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 > edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an > essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of > longer poetry. Comments welcome.
>
> By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another > mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this > stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from > the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):
>
> flag haiku
>
> one two three four five
> six seven eight nine ten e> leven twelve thirteen
>
> A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that > haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As > Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre
> before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't > think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong > as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could > see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and > is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.
>
> And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
> haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
>
> Seven syllables
> Eleven syllables
> Seven syllables
>
> I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a > poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American
> poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to > suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your > tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you > read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?

>
> For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit > http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
>
> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early > 20th c.---eliot's objective
> correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce > too the haiku suggestiveness."
>
> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind
> things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness
> rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word > chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,
> too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
> correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the > word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from > person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
> than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things > perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly > objective, focusing on nouns a > nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive > weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
> "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the > cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be > strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and > in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a > subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > subjective element isn't overpowering.
>
> Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it > somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think > that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain > people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why > it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label > something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that > you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

>
> Michael
> P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > [redacted]):
>
> Golf Haiku
>
> Robin watches drive,
> waits until I leave the tee,
> probes divot for worm.
>
> Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):
>
> 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need > to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have > titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on > Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is > insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a
> form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think > somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a > set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't > want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on > the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather,
you > want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much > as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the > scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like
> an obedient school bo

> y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension > of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, > letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
> -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; > Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
> by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to > chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have > expected better on this discussion list.
> 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is > oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase > letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a > person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping > off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
> this line.
> 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our > attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks > implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like > this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
> 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
> 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
> (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the > seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect > of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as > honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
> 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's > either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and > it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of > 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for > example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the > snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird > taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if > a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku,
> no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it
> employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> techniques -- and more. And through al > l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
>

> On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or > intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective > description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
> It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > images, they start with them.
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> From: Barry Schwabsky
> Subject: Re: haiku
>
> I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which > I am
> proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't > believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the > conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:
>
> Don't look at my face.
> No change, just large bills.
> One wrong move will be your last.
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web,
> free AOL Mail and more.
>

↑ Index

313. Ren Powell
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Alan,

I do think it makes sense. (Perhaps the assumption that the original comments were derisive is because they seemed to come so quickly out of the gate- at least I think that's why I jerked to that kind of reading).

"One element of interest is that such analyses can be applied anywhere, anywhen; from Anna Nicole Smith to far more 'important' matters such as world conflicts, issues of fundamentalism, etc., (for me) to realize just how fragile causality (and its accompanying enunciation of specific effect/affect) is. In other words, I think it's fine not to have answers, ethical structures, etc., in one's life."

I am not at all sure that this is where you were going, but I wonder if social ethical structures are descriptive and not determining structures- the way zoologists classify animals. What do you do with the platypus?

Now, that probably makes no sense.

I heard an interview with Edward Albee regarding the revival of Who's Afraid. . . he said, "there comes a point when a play is famous for being famous".

And I don't think it's a new phenomenon.

↑ Index

314. Barry Schwabsky
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

I think Joe's point is well taken. While this discussion has been very instructive in many ways, we should not forget that this is list whose topic is innovative poetics. I'm sure there are other lists available for the promulgation of traditionalist poetics, and some of the same people might even be on both lists, since there is no reason not to be interested in both. But to the extent that we are not, at some point we just have to respectfully agree to disagree, letting the discussions of traditionalist poetics continue in whatever space is devoted to that and the discussions of innovative poetics, whatever that turns out to be, move forward in this one.

As for myself, I think that a good deal of that heat that's been generated here hasto do with the "ownership" of the name "haiku." Although it would be useful to me to have recourse to this name at certain times, it doesn't really mean as much to me as it obviously does to some others, and therefore I'd just as soon cede it to them. I don't know why, but somehow this all reminds me of the dispute between Greece and one of the former Yugoslav republics over the name "Macedonia." United Nations intervention has still not resolved this issue. But when I lived in Italy, "macedonia" (small m) was the word for "fruit salad"--an association with very positive connotations as far as I'm concerned. So from now on I am going to avoid the use of the h-word to refer to any poem using a 5-7-5 structure or any other similar short poem whatsoever, except where this is unavoidable, such as when citing something that someone else said. From now on, I promise to refer to all such poems as "macedonia."

This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

↑ Index

315. Wystan Curnow

Re: The Object in Postmodernism

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Alex,
I am frequently struck by a psychological melee, I think it a wonderful feeling and a lot of my best writing is in fact a result of it; I've had prostate cancer as well, but have good relations with my students and women. I learned quite recently that Duchamp had prostate problems relatively early. Intentional phallacies aside, I don't think these matters are talked about enough and I suspect that many male artists have suffered from prostate, and erectile disfunction, and that the notions of 'late style' may have to be revised in the light of this.
Wystan

From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Alexander Jorgensen Sent: Sat 10/02/2007 6:03 a.m.
To: [redacted]
Subject: The Object in Postmodernism

An anecdote:

In a class on cross cultural criticism, discussing some of Picasso's later work. A student begins by stating the images studied are an example of the objectification of women, that such images of a woman exposed with legs drawn can only be constructed by another woman and indicates, which is more interesting to me, that Picasso's work is bad - malicious, even. I understand that these are tools for examining culture, etc - and it's all old for me - but for me what was more interesting was what it indicated about the author, Picasso, who in later years was stricken by a kind of psychological melee related to his declining health and prostate cancer. What do you think? And back-channel if deemed safer.

Certainly there is no universality of thought with regards to these issues of representation, but I'm trying to gage where some of us are.

Regards,
Alexander Jorgensen

_____
___
Do you Yahoo!?
Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com <http://new.mail.yahoo.com/>

↑ Index

316. Wystan Curnow
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Causality will be as fragile or robust as proximity allows. 'Our' culture is for me 'your' culture, and all the posts on this subject have proceeded from 'you', her 'fellow Americans.' You are seemingly (at your best) closer to 'ANS' than I imagine myself to be. Wystan

_____

From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Alan Sondheim
Sent: Sat 10/02/2007 7:03 p.m.
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith

Our culture is perpetuated in any case, of course; what's important is what one does in relation to it; at best perhaps, one can take a critical and/or empathetic stand. I've heard the 'famous for being famous' in relation to a number of people, and I think in a way it begs the question. How can one open this short-circuit? For me, it's related to causation; one always looks for cause and effect - we're brought up to believe this. But causality is problematic, and the questions that Anna Nicole Smith raises may literally be unanswerable, and at the same time 'eternally' vulnerable (or susceptible) to theory - the descriptions, analyses, go on and on, just as Tonya Harding appeared in scholarly works as well as innumerable pop venues.

One element of interest is that such analyses can be applied anywhere, anywhen; from Anna Nicole Smith to far more 'important' matters such as world conflicts, issues of fundamentalism, etc., (for me) to realize just how fragile causality (and its accompanying enunciation of specific effect/affect) is. In other words, I think it's fine not to have answers, ethical structures, etc., in one's life.

I hope this makes sense - it's late at night. I do want to add that if you watched the reality show, the tragedy came through rather starkly; there were times literally couldn't watch.

Finally, I really don't know what she's perpetuating (or was used to perpetuate); there are many other models for exaggerated sexuality for example.

- Alan

On Fri, 9 Feb 2007, Laura Winton wrote:

> *I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what she was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death has made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure without many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to find out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm not sure I want to participate in further.*
>
> Does that make any sense at all???
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
> Subject: Anna Nicole Smith
>
> She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky. Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.
>
> She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't register properly, there was always something else going on. On another list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.
>
> So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get

> "hold" of Michael Jackson.
>
> Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty, a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.
>
> Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.
>
> This really was upsetting.
>
> - Alan
>
> ==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com <http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org <http://www.asondheim.org/> .
> Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc.
> ==========

==========
Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com <http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org <http://www.asondheim.org/> . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc.
==========

↑ Index

317. Ren Powell
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Please.

I have never seen the reality series, because it isn't on the free stations in my country. But unless you are living on the moon, your culture is most certainly touched by American mass media. 60 minutes is popular in Iraq. Afghan children know who Brittany Spears is. ANS was all over billboards in Scandinavia a few years ago- as model for H&M.

If you even know who Anne Nicole Smith is, yet claim a kind of superior distance to American pop culture (am I interpreting you correctly?)- this strikes me as absurd and self-deceiving.

One would hope that your comment simply means you believe we Americans are more inclined to explore the cultural context of an individual tragedy rather than believing that somehow we Americans uniquely identify with the kind of celebrity foibles and worse. _____ Ren Powell

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Wystan Curnow
Sent: 10. februar 2007 11:58
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith

Causality will be as fragile or robust as proximity allows. 'Our' culture is for me 'your' culture, and all the posts on this subject have proceeded from 'you', her 'fellow Americans.' You are seemingly (at your best) closer to 'ANS' than I imagine myself to be. Wystan

---

From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Alan Sondheim
Sent: Sat 10/02/2007 7:03 p.m.
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith

Our culture is perpetuated in any case, of course; what's important is what one does in relation to it; at best perhaps, one can take a critical and/or empathetic stand. I've heard the 'famous for being famous' in relation to a number of people, and I think in a way it begs the question. How can one open this short-circuit? For me, it's related to causation; one always looks for cause and effect - we're brought up to believe this. But causality is problematic, and the questions that Anna Nicole Smith raises may literally be unanswerable, and at the same time 'eternally' vulnerable (or susceptible) to theory - the descriptions, analyses, go on and on, just as Tonya Harding appeared in scholarly works as well as innumerable pop venues.

One element of interest is that such analyses can be applied anywhere, anywhen; from Anna Nicole Smith to far more 'important' matters such as world conflicts, issues of fundamentalism, etc., (for me) to realize just how fragile causality (and its accompanying enunciation of specific effect/affect) is. In other words, I think it's fine not to have answers, ethical structures, etc., in one's life.

I hope this makes sense - it's late at night. I do want to add that if you watched the reality show, the tragedy came through rather starkly; there were times literally couldn't watch.

Finally, I really don't know what she's perpetuating (or was used to perpetuate); there are many other models for exaggerated sexuality for example.

- Alan

On Fri, 9 Feb 2007, Laura Winton wrote:

> I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what she > was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous > for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she > had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death has > made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure without > many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness > about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to find > out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm > not sure I want to participate in further.
>
> Does that make any sense at all???
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
> Subject: Anna Nicole Smith
>
> She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, > she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky.
> Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I > never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that > her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.
>

> She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it > transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd > subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't > register properly, there was always something else going on. On another > list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.
>
> So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the > discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only > semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get
> "hold" of Michael Jackson.
>
> Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty, > a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep > up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.
>
> Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) > issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's > mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on > her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.
>
> This really was upsetting.
>
> - Alan
>
>
==========
==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com
<http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org <http://www.asondheim.org/>
.
Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > dvds, etc.
==========
==========
>
>
==========
==========

Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com
<http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted].
Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org <http://www.asondheim.org/> .
Email: [redacted].
http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc.
==========

↑ Index

318. Alison Croggon
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Ren, I think, perhaps presumptively, that Wystan is reacting to that inclusive "our" rather than placing himself above mass culture. Being touched or even colonised by a culture does not, after all, make it one's own. American culture is, for me as well, "your" culture. Of course this doesn't mean at all that exchange isn't possible, but on the whole it's preferable if it's mutual exchange, rather than all one way. And people do get tired of having their differences expunged, even if it's well meaning.

All best

A

On 2/10/07, Ren Powell <[redacted]> wrote:
> Please.
>
> I have never seen the reality series, because it isn't on the free stations > in my country. But unless you are living on the moon, your culture is most > certainly touched by American mass media. 60 minutes is popular in Iraq.
> Afghan children know who Brittany Spears is. ANS was all over billboards in > Scandinavia a few years ago- as model for H&M.
>
> If you even know who Anne Nicole Smith is, yet claim a kind of superior > distance to American pop culture (am I interpreting you correctly?)- this > strikes me as absurd and self-deceiving.
>
> One would hope that your comment simply means you believe we Americans are > more inclined to explore the cultural context of an individual tragedy > rather than believing that somehow we Americans uniquely identify with the > kind of celebrity foibles and worse.

> _____
> Ren Powell
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of Wystan Curnow
> Sent: 10. februar 2007 11:58
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith
>
> Causality will be as fragile or robust as proximity allows. 'Our' culture is > for me 'your' culture, and all the posts on this subject have proceeded > from 'you', her 'fellow Americans.' You are seemingly (at your best) > closer to 'ANS' than I imagine myself to be.
> Wystan
>
>
>
> _____
>
> From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Alan Sondheim
> Sent: Sat 10/02/2007 7:03 p.m.
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith
>
>
>
> Our culture is perpetuated in any case, of course; what's important is > what one does in relation to it; at best perhaps, one can take a critical > and/or empathetic stand. I've heard the 'famous for being famous' in > relation to a number of people, and I think in a way it begs the question.
> How can one open this short-circuit? For me, it's related to causation;
> one always looks for cause and effect - we're brought up to believe this.
> But causality is problematic, and the questions that Anna Nicole Smith > raises may literally be unanswerable, and at the same time 'eternally' > vulnerable (or susceptible) to theory - the descriptions, analyses, go on > and on, just as Tonya Harding appeared in scholarly works as well as > innumerable pop venues.
>
> One element of interest is that such analyses can be applied anywhere, > anywhen; from Anna Nicole Smith to far more 'important' matters such as > world conflicts, issues of fundamentalism, etc., (for me) to realize just > how fragile causality (and its accompanying enunciation of specific > effect/affect) is. In other words, I think it's fine not to have answers, > ethical structures, etc., in one's life.

>
> I hope this makes sense - it's late at night. I do want to add that if you > watched the reality show, the tragedy came through rather starkly; there > were times literally couldn't watch.
>
> Finally, I really don't know what she's perpetuating (or was used to > perpetuate); there are many other models for exaggerated sexuality for > example.
>
> - Alan
>
> On Fri, 9 Feb 2007, Laura Winton wrote:
>
> > I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what
> she > > was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous > > for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she > > had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death
> has > > made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure > without
> > many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness > > about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to > find > > out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm > > not sure I want to participate in further.
> >
> > Does that make any sense at all???
> >
> >
> >
> > -----Original Message-----
> > From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
> > Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
> > Subject: Anna Nicole Smith
> >

> > She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, > > she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky.
> > Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I > > never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that > > her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.
> >
> > She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it > > transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd > > subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't > > register properly, there was always something else going on. On another > > list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.
> >
> > So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the > > discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only > > semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get
> > "hold" of Michael Jackson.
> >
> > Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty,
> > a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep > > up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.
> >
> > Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) > > issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's > > mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on > > her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.
> >
> > This really was upsetting.
> >
> > - Alan
> >
> >
==========
==========
> > Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com
> <http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted].
> > Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org
<http://www.asondheim.org/> .
> Email: [redacted].
> > http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > > dvds, etc.

==========
==========
> >
> >
>
>
>
==========
==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com
> <http://nikuko.blogspot.com/> . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org <http://www.asondheim.org/>
.
> Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > dvds, etc.
==========
==========
>

--
Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

319. Ren Powell
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Alison,

It wouldn't surprise me if I am the one being presumptive. I have been lately. I apologize.

I do also have an overdeveloped defence response to stereotypes regarding the tabloid mentality associated with Americans.

A lot of things assumed to be Americanization are actually not. Like reality television.

Seeing that this listserv is Buffalo.edu, it seems to me unnecessary for anyone posting "our" to be compelled to preface it with "as Americans".

So, reading a posting which objects to this, which expresses a dissociation from ANS based on national cultural identity. . . I do (perhaps mistakenly) draw a conclusion regarding the person's motivation to do so.

And now I'm going to keep my fingers still and go back to reading what everyone has to say about poetry.

Apologies again,

Ren

↑ Index

320. Dubravka Djuric
Re: small cultures and innovative poetry
Sat 10 Feb 2007

---

hi jim, thank you for this words, and for all in this list i will suggest to find the sight of awin (association for women initiatives where i now for 10 years established school for innovative poetry and poetics, you could find there text in english where you could have a sense what we have been doing!

http://www.awin.org.yu

----- Original Message -----
From: "Jim Andrews" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Saturday, February 03, 2007 5:23 AM
Subject: Re: small cultures and innovative poetry

> Hi Dubravka,
>
> Thanks for your fascinating post. Also, the tone of it is appealing: it > isn't calling for anybody's head on a platter; it is articulate and > progressive, not bitter or vengeful. You do not play the nationalistic > trumpet but, instead, question the political and poetical value of > aggressive nationalism. You speak for the value of experimental poetry
that > introduces critical methods into poetry. That is important in poetry and
in > contemporary society.
>
> Poetry needs to be able to deal with situations such as > http://alternet.org/blogs/peek/47507 . Intensest engagement with language, > these days, is not necessarily in a poemy poem on a page. It can happen off
> the page and even off the art map. Poetry needs to be able to go there.

>
> ja
> http://vispo.com

↑ Index

321. Alexander Dickow
ANS and F Sherlock
Sat 10 Feb 2007

All,
All this Anna Nicole Smith talk is fine by me one way or the other, but shouldn't we be talking about Frank Sherlock, who's apparently very ill? Seems like the time for talking about dear fellow-poets, rather than celebrities.
Cheers to Aaron for his caring, though, and others, still.
Amicalement,
Alex

www.alexdickow.net/blog/

les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

322. Factory School
Meet the Press (PS 5 and 6)
Sat 10 Feb 2007

public statement: "Classroom Economics of Fugitive Reproduction"

How to Fair Use Revealed

Instruments of social and cultural reproduction, our books are developed by and for specific communities of learners within and without institutions of state-corporate power. A university press without a university, Factory School makes available currently unavailable content, channeling public funds away from the corporate textbook scam.

*

public statement: "Knowledge Laundering, Community Handbook Project"

Knowledge should be shared and developed in freedom, so why isn't it? Textbook publishers careen through knowledge like bulls through the community pantry. Absent the merger to end all, we must take back what is rightfully ours, hack what is usefully right, and compose our own off-grid monuments to the spirit of inquiry. This project shows one way.

*

Meet the Press: An Evening With Factory School Design Team
Poetry Project at St. Marks Church
Monday, 8:00 pm

http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

↑ Index

323. Halvard Johnson
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

And where's this blinkin' rule book that gets so much mention? I've never seen one.

When it comes to form, it seems to me one can be descriptive but not prescriptive.

Hal

L'uccello canta nella gabbia
Non di gioia ma di rabbia!

The songbird in its cage
Sings not for joy, but rage!

--Italian proverb

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 9, 2007, at 11:23 PM, Joe Amato wrote:

> *But Dan, how would you know whether a poet knows "the history of the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?*
>
> Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.

This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?

*There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, with (or without) the possession of such knowledge. Whether the results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c they've deviated from the norm. If you think you can read a given example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated knowledge.*

That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has a stomach for.

*At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence of such knowledge.*

*I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of haiku.*

Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, and resistance thereto. That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.

Best,

Joe

I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems themeselves.

I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.

On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:

If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 *edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an* essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.

By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten eleven twelve thirteen

A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As *Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre*
before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and
is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.

And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"

Seven syllables
Eleven syllables
Seven syllables

I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you *read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?*

For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.

Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."

I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think, too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem, "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.

Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

Michael
P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( [redacted]):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

>
> 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> *2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like an obedient school bo y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would* *have

 expected better on this discussion list.
 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
 this line.
 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
 (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the*

snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku, no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life) techniques -- and more. And through al l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.

On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation. It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with images, they start with them.

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku

I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

Don't look at my face.
No change, just large bills.
One wrong move will be your last.

> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web,
> free AOL Mail and more.
>
> --
> http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

324. Dan Coffey
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

To borrow a word someone used in an offline message regarding my statement, I will defer to your rebuttal, Joe. I didn't mean to speak in absolutes, nor to imply that anyone except the poet should have to be aware of their knowledge of form, history, etc. Speaking only of the haiku form, it seems to have gotten a particularly bad, trivializing, rap. There are so many haikus out there that are atrocious, and rather than see the atrociousness of the poem as a singular (repeated many times over) occurrence, the form itself gets triviailized, Hallmarkized.

To all, I'm sorry if my statement was at odds with the guiding principles of the Poetics list. I should have thought it through further before posting. I certainly am not one to prescribe any quantified amount of poetic knowledge, or proscribe any experimentation or subversion of form. But I always hope it will be done thoughtfully, and with purpose.

On 2/9/07, Joe Amato <[redacted]> wrote:
> But Dan, how would you know whether a poet knows "the history of > the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you > can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?
>
> Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against > MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.
>
> This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in > poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and > investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of > received forms and styles, and to the creation of the > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and > impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

>
> The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to > haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed > acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?
>
> There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th > century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to > suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, > with (or without) the possession of such knowledge. Whether the > results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c > they've deviated from the norm. If you think you can read a given > example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient > knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to > argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules > might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple > deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem > make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated > knowledge.
>
> That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has > a stomach for.
>
> At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated > approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess > with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion > that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other > poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering > associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the > knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to > alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be > evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody > messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence > of such knowledge.
>
> I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone > to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted > here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and > styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku > posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of > haiku.

>
> Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not > to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment > is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, > and resistance thereto. That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that > strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.
>
> Best,
>
> Joe
>
> >I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing > >of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems > >themeselves.
> >
> >I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good > >point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the > >poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.
> >
> >On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
> >>I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are > >>satirical?
> >>
> >>On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
> >>>
> >>> If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
> >>> One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's > >>> quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with > >>> haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > >> > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet > >>> labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do > >>> with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> >> > http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 > >>> edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in > >>>which I have an > >>> essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of > >>> longer poetry. Comments welcome.

> >>>
> >>> By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another > >>> mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went > >>>through this > >>> stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from > >>> the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):
> >>>
> >>> flag haiku
> >>>
> >>> one two three four five
> >>> six seven eight nine ten e> >>> leven twelve thirteen
> >>>
> >>> A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that > >>> haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As > >>> Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre
> >>> before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you
"don't > >>> think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul > >>>Violi. As strong > >>> as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could > >>> see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and > >>> is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.
> >>>
> >>> And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
> >>> haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
> >>>
> >>> Seven syllables
> >>> Eleven syllables
> >>> Seven syllables
> >>>
> >>> I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a > >>> poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn > >>>all American > >>> poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to > >>> suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English.
> >>>And if your > >>> tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good > >>>haiku? Have you > >>> read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?

> >>>
> >>> For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit > >>> http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
> >>>
> >>> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early > >>> 20th c.---eliot's objective
> >>> correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce > >>> too the haiku suggestiveness."
> >>>
> >>> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > >>> other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind > >>> things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its > >>>suggestiveness
> >>> rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word > >>> chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,
> >>> too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > >>> chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
> >>> correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > >>> associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when > >>>we read the
> >>> word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from > >>> person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
> >>> than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things > >>> perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly > >>> objective, focusing on nouns a > >>> nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > >>> relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive > >>> weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > >>> subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
> >>> "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the

> >>> cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be > >>> strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and > >>> in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > >>> controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically,
> >>>where there's a > >>> subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of > >>>something that's > >> > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > >>> subjective element isn't overpowering.
> >>>
> >>> Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > >> > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare
> >>while, if it
> >>> somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think > >>> that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > >>> good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > >>> them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain > >>> people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why > >>> it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > >>> first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label > >>> something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that > >>> you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.
> >>>
> >>> Michael
> >>> P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > >>> [redacted]):
> >>>
> >>> Golf Haiku
> >>>
> >>> Robin watches drive,
> >>> waits until I leave the tee,
> >>> probes divot for worm.
> >>>
> >>> Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > >>> among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any --
> >>>a task that > >>> haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

> >>>
> >>> 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > >>> redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need > >>> to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have
> >>> titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> >>> 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > >>> drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of > >>>Time: Essays on > >>> Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is > >>> insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit
a
> >>> form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think > >>> somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following
a > >>> set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > >>> tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you
don't > >>> want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges
on
> >>> the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from.
> >>>Rather, you > >>> want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much > >>> as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus,
the > >>> scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable
> >>>count like
> >>> an obedient school bo > >>> y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension > >>> of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, > >>> letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
> >>> -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts;
> >>> Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
> >>> by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to > >>> chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have > >>> expected better on this discussion list.

> >>> 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is > >>> oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase > >>> letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a > >>> person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping
> >>> off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
> >>> this line.
> >>> 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our > >>> attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks > >>> implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like
> >>> this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
> >>> 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
> >>> 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
> >>> (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but
the
> >>> seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > >> > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect
> >>> of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding
to > >> > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known
as > >>> honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
> >>> 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > >>> implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > >>> enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's > >>> either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and > >>> it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name
of
> >>> 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied.
> >>>Consider, for > >>> example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from
the > >>> snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird
> >>> taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > >>> realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of > >>>the time, if
> >>> a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku,

> >>> no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled,
> >>>whether it
> >>> employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> >>> techniques -- and more. And through al > >>> l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
> >>>
> >>> On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > >>> objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an > >>>emotional or
> >>> intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective > >>> description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
> >>> It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > >>> images, they start with them.
> >>>
> >>>
> >>>
> >>> -----Original Message-----
> >>> Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> >>> From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
> >>> Subject: Re: haiku
> >>>
> >>> I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which > >>> I am > >>> proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't > >>> believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the > >>> conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:
> >>>
> >>> Don't look at my face.
> >>> No change, just large bills.
> >>> One wrong move will be your last.
> >>> _____
> >>> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security
> >>> tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, > >>> free AOL Mail and more.
> >>>
> >>
> >
> >
> >--

> >http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> >http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

325. Joe Amato
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Dan, you didn't say nuthin wrong!

And atrocious poetry of any stripe ought to be called out for what it is.

In all, it seems to me that it's beneficial to examine publicly what the commitment to form (or formalism) might be on a list such as this one, and we can expect, and should tolerate, a range of responses to same.

At any rate, I certainly feel I've learned from this exchange.

Best,

Joe

> To borrow a word someone used in an offline message regarding my statement, I will defer to your rebuttal, Joe. I didn't mean to speak in absolutes, nor to imply that anyone except the poet should have to be aware of their knowledge of form, history, etc. Speaking only of the haiku form, it seems to have gotten a particularly bad, trivializing, rap. There are so many haikus out there that are atrocious, and rather than see the atrociousness of the poem as a singular (repeated many times over) occurrence, the form itself gets triviailized, Hallmarkized.
>
> To all, I'm sorry if my statement was at odds with the guiding principles of the Poetics list. I should have thought it through further before posting. I certainly am not one to prescribe any quantified amount of poetic knowledge, or proscribe any experimentation or subversion of form. But I always hope it will be done thoughtfully, and with purpose.
>
> On 2/9/07, Joe Amato <[redacted]> wrote:
> *But Dan, how would you know whether a poet knows "the history of the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?*

Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.

This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?

*There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, with (or without) the possession of such knowledge. Whether the results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c they've deviated from the norm. If you think you can read a given example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated knowledge.*

That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has a stomach for.

*At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence of such knowledge.*

*I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of*

haiku.

Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, and resistance thereto. That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.

Best,

Joe

I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems themeselves.

I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.

On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:

*If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. / One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.*

By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from > the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

>
> flag haiku
>
> one two three four five
> six seven eight nine ten e- > leven twelve thirteen
>
> *A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.*
>
> And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
>
> Seven syllables
> Eleven syllables
> Seven syllables
>
> *I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?*
>
> For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
>
> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early > >>> 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."
>
> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind

> >>> things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness
> >>> rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word > chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,
> too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
> correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the > word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from > person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
> than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things
> perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly > objective, focusing on nouns a > nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive
> weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
> "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the > cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be > strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and > in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a > subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > subjective element isn't overpowering.
>
> Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it > somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think > that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) > that certain > people might feel are more important and should never be > missed. That's why

> it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon > as you label > something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of > haiku that > you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.
>
> Michael
> P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > [redacted]):
>
> Golf Haiku
>
> Robin watches drive,
> waits until I leave the tee,
> probes divot for worm.
>
> Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any --
> a task that > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):
>
> 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and > we don't need > to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other
> "haiku" that have > titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > *drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of
> Time: Essays on
> Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is* > insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it > properly fit a > form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or > if they think > >>> somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're > not following a > set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and > that you don't > want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see

smudges on >>> the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from.
>>>Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable
count like
an obedient school bo y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
-- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have expected better on this discussion list.
3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem.
The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
this line.
4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).

> 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for > worms (that's > either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is > too it, and > it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in > the name of > 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied.
> Consider, for > example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by > yarn / from the > snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird
> taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of > the time, if > a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails > as a haiku,
> no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled,
> whether it
> employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> techniques -- and more. And through al
> l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
>
> On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an > emotional or > intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use > of objective
> description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or
> reverberation.
> It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > images, they start with them.
> >>>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: haiku
>
> I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul > Violi, which
> I am > proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years > ago. I don't > >>> believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the
> >>> conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

> Don't look at my face.
> No change, just large bills.
> One wrong move will be your last.
>
> ---
>
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security
> tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web,
> free AOL Mail and more.
>
> --
> http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com
>
> --
> http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

326. Anny Ballardini

Re: Anna Nicole Smith

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Tabloid culture is the easiest and juciest way to talk and talk and talk, rumbling mouths
nothing to do with the Talking Heads, nor with Aaron Belz or Alan Sondheim,
so long,

On 2/10/07, Ren Powell <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Alison,
>
>
>
> It wouldn't surprise me if I am the one being presumptive. I have been > lately. I apologize.
>
>
>

> I do also have an overdeveloped defence response to stereotypes regarding > the tabloid mentality associated with Americans.
>
>
>
> A lot of things assumed to be Americanization are actually not. Like > reality > television.
>
>
>
> Seeing that this listserv is Buffalo.edu, it seems to me unnecessary for > anyone posting "our" to be compelled to preface it with "as Americans".
>
> So, reading a posting which objects to this, which expresses a > dissociation > from ANS based on national cultural identity. . . I do (perhaps > mistakenly)
> draw a conclusion regarding the person's motivation to do so.
>
>
>
> And now I'm going to keep my fingers still and go back to reading what > everyone has to say about poetry.
>
>
>
> Apologies again,
>
>
>
> Ren
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>

>
>
>

↑ Index

327. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku Death Match
Sat 10 Feb 2007

As I understand it, Japanese is not accented the way English or Latin is. Thus each "syllable" of a multisyllable word is generally pronounced evenly in Japanese. The Japanese word for a species of cuckoo, hototogisu, has each syllable pronounced evenly, which is part of its music. As a more common example, the word for cherry blossom, sakura, has each of its syllables at about the same pitch and length. It's not sa-KU-ra. Nor is it SA-ku-ra (like the beginning of "saccharine"). And of course it's also not "sa-ku-RA." On the other hand, some Japanese people drop or greatly minimize the last syllable in some words when speaking (even though they would still count that sound in haiku). Thus I've often heard a Japanese person speak of "haik" (with an extremely subtle "u" after the "k") when they mean "haiku" -- or they might say "hototogeese" (though with a very quick "geese") and barely say the "oo" sound that normally follows in "hototogisu." If you ask the question "Desu ka," it typically sounds like "Des-ka." Otherwise, though, I think the sounds are fairly even. I know other words and phrases are commonly shortened or combined, but that's more of a colloquial compression of language than a variance in pronunciation.

Not sure what you're after when you ask for "an example of how a haiku should read."

Michael

In a message dated 02-Feb-07 9:01:40 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Fri, 2 Feb 2007 10:16:44 -0600
From: "Tom W. Lewis" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match

There's a "three-mora rule" (Dreimorengesetz) for ancient Greek and Latin words -- does the same go for Japanese?=20
(http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dreimorengesetz)

Could I get a good translation, taking into account the quantities of the Japanese original, as an example of how a haiku should read?=20

tl
veteran (pseudo-)haiku warrior

↑ Index

328. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Again, "Haiku" doesn't need to be treated with a capital. It's not a proper noun.

If I'm static and humourless, well, shucks, I'll try to let my hair down for you when I can. If I seem static, that's because I'm advocating for a position out of years of study, and positing that against some serious misunderstandings. What you say of Violi's poems is all true, but true of the poem as a POEM, not as a haiku. Yup, that's "static" -- or "rigid," you might say. Look, a rose is not a chrysanthemum. That's all I'm trying to say. Why assert that the poem is a haiku, when it clearly lacks understanding of haiku's history, aesthetics, and various other understandings? Why persist with what I might guess is a misunderstanding of the genre, indicated, among other things, by something as simple as treating the name of the genre as a proper noun when it isn't? I hesitate to say there's some arrogant ignorance going on here, but there does seem to be some resistance to the serious research that Charlie and I have encouraged. Sure, the poem is haiku-like, if you want to say that. But that's an important distinction from claiming it as a haiku, and a far cry from claiming it to be about the best haiku ever.

I'm a lot less static as you might think, except that from your perspective it may look that way. But over the years, as I've learned different things about haiku (and still have much to learn), I've definitely evolved and changed my ideas on things. I used to think of haiku as a Zen art (a long time ago). I know better now. I used to think haiku was a nature poem. Well, actually, it's a seasonal reference that haiku is generally after, and nature just comes along for the ride (though of course it's true, therefore, that it IS mostly a nature poem, but not always). And I could list a few more changed understandings. But because the location of where my perspective is evolving is down the track from where it seems you are, the distance between our perspectives probably makes my stance seem static. The movement of my train seems so slight to you because I'm probably at a different place on the haiku track from where you are, and the distance between us flatens your ability to detect my movement. I assure you my stance is not static, because even your claiming that I'm static encourages me to re-examine my perspectives to see if that's true, and to try to be responsive to that thought.

Believe me, I find it really boring and imitative to write the "branches, leaves, blossoms and bird" forms of haiku. I'm not advocxzating that at all (perhaps you thought I was?!?). No, I'm advocating a deeper understanding of haiku as a subset of "poetry," which thereby distinguishes Violi's poem from haiku. Most of the time, such a distinction wouldn't matter (how's that for a bit of not being static?), except for the fact that you claimed the poem as haiku -- and not just haiku, but a really darn good one. Not only is it not a darn good one, but it's not even a haiku at all. At most, it's hit just one of the many targets for haiku (brevity), but that single overlap with haiku should not be confused with it's being haiku, which necessitates hitting quite a few more haiku targets than that. It's a great little poem, but I see startling and fresh little poems like that all the time in the best haiku journals (and some of "branches, leaves, blossoms and bird" poems -- and they can still have their appeal to some folks, or have mild variations that can make them succeed). You try writing a cherry blossom haiku -- it's very hard to do with originality and freshness.

I appreciate that you're seeing my advocation for a formally true haiku, yet seeing that I don't mean a 5-7-5 formalism (I hope). If my perspective is claustrophobic to you (or others), I suppose that may be true. But believe me, I appreciate all sorts of short poems for what they are, without needing to apply a label to them (as with Violi's poem). My feeling is that you can't fling poetry labels around willy-nilly based on a limited understanding of the label. Doing so without sufficient understanding of the history and aesthetics of haiku, for example, dilutes the notion of what haiku is. If poets try to speak carefully, you'd think they'd speak not only with care in their words, but with a responsibility towards the words that takes ownership for understanding their meaning. In the case of haiku, there's a serious disconnect between popular perceptions and reality. In Japan, at your assertion that Violi's poem is a haiku, they would do one of two things: immediately and politely agree with you to your face (perhaps like saying to a child, yes dear, the sun is purple -- what a lovely drawing), or they would dismiss it without a thought.

I can hear you saying that there can be purple suns in haiku. I'm all for creativity and poetic license -- believe it or not. But only when it comes from a position of understanding, not ignorance, about haiku and its history and aesthetics. Basho said to learn the rules and then forget them (meaning, to internalize them so thoroughly that you no longer have to think about them). In your case, meaning to be as polite as I say this, it seems you haven't learned the rules yet.

Consider the following throughts on mastery and understanding, thoughts that probably apply to any literature, or any art or craft. I think most people progress through the following steps with their art, including poetry:

1. Unconscious incompetence (the person doesn't know that he isn't competent or doesn't understand). 2. Conscious incompetence (the person realizes that he isn't competent -- the door is now open to learning). 3. Conscious competence (the person has to consciously work at being competent -- it doesn't yet come naturally). 4. Unconscious competence (the person has internalized effective techniques so well that he no longer has to think about it, the way a quarterback doesn't have to think about how to throw a good spiral -- this is what I think Basho meant by "learn the rules and then forget them").

Since you urge morphing, why is it you resist morphing your understanding of haiku? The question here isn't adherence to any kind of orthodox behaviour, but that too many people proceed with behaviour they think is orthodox (thinking they know what a haiku is) when it isn't. See the difference?

As for being humourless, well, I've always known I can't tell a joke to save the queen. I am in earnest, obviously. But you won't find me as inflexible as you seem to think.

Good wishes,

Michael

In a message dated 09-Feb-07 9:04:30 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Maybe with my good Protestant origins, I have never been at home with adherence to any kind of orthodox system of behavior, but I find your insistences about Haiku (origins and form) static and humorless. Occasionally I work among elderly Chinese emigrants here in San Francisco, and indeed, for example, in making watercolors, many of them continue to adhere unwaveringly to 'branches, leaves, blossoms and bird' forms - sometimes attractive but boring, boring, rigid, etc. At best you want to tear up the pages and introduce students to the fresh experience of montage, collage, etc. Such as with Violi's haiku - the juxtaposition of what he has done against conventional content is startling, refreshing - a response that I find with what I can only sense to be 'good' translations of 'ancient' haiku. Much of which I suspect Paul Violi and many of us have been variably interested readers - whether via Pound, Rexroth, Waley & on.

Your argument for a formally true Haiku, seems as claustrophobic to me as someone who might argue - with similar orthodox leanings - that Coltrane, Rollins, etc., etc. are not making authentic "ballads". Morph, my friend, morph - it is, from my experience, at least, a mutable, non-static universe of which the contemporary spirit and practice of haiku is inextricably involved.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

329. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Barry,

Actually, both Paul's and Ron's poems reflect their sensibilities and styles as poets: Paul's up your face clarity, Ron's understating, ant-heroic ethos, for instance, a wonderful poem about how to sweep the floor. They are Paul and Ron poems before they are haiku. In English, Haiku does imply brevity, a certain sudden cut in point of view, which can be ironic or in rare successful cases metaphysical. Does any one rememberthe wonderful haiku in the movie Miami Blues where the Alec Baldwin character is robbing a house (breaking and entering...)?

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/10/07, Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> At least in the case of Paul's poem, I don't think that's true at all. It > is quite funny, but not satirical. For me, it is profound expression of the > human condition, if you don't mind me putting it like that. (I know that > sounds a bit old-fashioned.) Also, contrary to what someone else said, I > don't see any real narrative in it. It conjures an image with which one is > familiar from narratives (movies, tv) about bank robberies, but nothing is > narrated, there is no before or after, no chain of events: just a moment in > which one is suddenly faced with something.
>
> Regarding Ron's poem, with which I was previously unfamiliar, I also > doubt that the intention behind it is mainly satirical. It's pretty dry for > that, after all. It seems more to be about pure formalism and its paradoxes, > in a manner reminiscent of certain early '70s conceptual art, such as some > of Dan Graham's text works. But as I said, this is just a first impression > as far as Ron's poem goes.
>
> Finally, I have to say to the person who used the childish gesture of > putting scare quotes around the word "poem" when writing about these > efforts--whether one find them successful or not is another thing: the > reactionary attitude this betrays is its own counterargument.
>
>

> Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
> I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are > satirical?
>
> On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> >
> > If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
> > One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's > > quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do > with > > haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, > which > > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet > > labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to > do
> > with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> > http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 > > edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I > have an > > essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing
> of > > longer poetry. Comments welcome.
> >
> > By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another > > mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through > this > > stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over > (from > > the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):
> >
> > flag haiku
> >
> > one two three four five
> > six seven eight nine ten e> > leven twelve thirteen
> >
> > A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that > > haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As > > Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre
> > before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't > > think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As > strong > > as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I > could > > see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku,

> and
> > is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.
> >
> > And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
> > haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
> >
> > Seven syllables
> > Eleven syllables
> > Seven syllables
> >
> > I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote
> a > > poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all > American
> > poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to > > suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if > your > > tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have > you
> > read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?
> >
> > For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit > > http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
> >
> > Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of > early > > 20th c.---eliot's objective
> > correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce > > too the haiku suggestiveness."
> >
> > I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any > > other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power > behind > > things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its > suggestiveness
> > rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the > word > > chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And > think,

> > too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric > > chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
> > correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and > > associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read
> the > > word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary
> from > > person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective > correlative > > than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of > things
> > perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is > mostly
> > objective, focusing on nouns a > > nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a > > relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the > emotive
> > weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are > > subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's > poem,
> > "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about
> the > > cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to > be > > strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem,
> and
> > in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of > > controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where > there's a > > subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something > that's > > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the > > subjective element isn't overpowering.
> >
> > Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but > not > > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if > it > > somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't > think > > that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a > > good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of > > them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that > certain > > people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's > why

> > it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry > > first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you > label
> > something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku
> that > > you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.
> >
> > Michael
> > P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( > > [redacted]):
> >
> > Golf Haiku
> >
> > Robin watches drive,
> > waits until I leave the tee,
> > probes divot for worm.
> >
> > Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be > > among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task
> that > > haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):
> >
> > 1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is > > redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't > need > > to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that > have
> > titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
> > 2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my > > drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in *The Nick of Time:
> Essays on > > Haiku Aeshetics*, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is > > insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit
> a > > form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they > think > > somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not > following a > > set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at > > tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you > don't > > want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges

> on > > the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather,
> you > > want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as > much > > as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus,
> the > > scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count
> like
> > an obedient school bo
> > y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an > extension
> > of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as > possible,
> > letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as > possible
> > -- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan > Watts;
> > Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be > punishable
> > by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to > > chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have > > expected better on this discussion list.
> > 3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is > > oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase > > letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a > > person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The > lopping
> > off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness
> in
> > this line.
> > 4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our > > attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks > > implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative > like > > this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect > presentation.
> > 5. The poem is choppy and awkward.

> > 6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer > > (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but
> the
> > seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the > effect
> > of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding
> to
> > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as > > honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
> > 7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no > > implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well > > enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms > (that's > > either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it,
> and > > it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name
> of > > 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, > for > > example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from
> the > > snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird
> > taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with > > realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the > time, if > > a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a > haiku,
> > no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled,
> whether it
> > employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
> > techniques -- and more. And through al > > l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.
> >
> > On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using > > objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an > emotional or > > intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of > objective
> > description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or > reverberation.
> > It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with > > images, they start with them.

> >
> >
> >
> > -----Original Message-----
> > Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
> > From: Barry Schwabsky
> > Subject: Re: haiku
> >
> > I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, > which
> > I am > > proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I > don't > > believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the > > conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:
> >
> > Don't look at my face.
> > No change, just large bills.
> > One wrong move will be your last.
> > _____
> > Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and > security > > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the > web,
> > free AOL Mail and more.
> >
>

↑ Index

330. Stephen Vincent

Re: haiku / Vorticism

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Re the impact of haiku & ways of perception shaped by Buddhist and other Asian (Indian) religious forms of meditation and literature on the making of modernism (Pound, etc.) I strongly recommend Eliot Weinberger's essay on Vorticism in a recent Chicago Review (#5?? - the also good Lisa Robertson issue) - the introduction of Yoga and Yogis at the Columbia Exposition in 1892 in Chicago and the subsequent publishing craze and influence, etc., I find real interesting. A must read.

Which is also to say that David B-C's recent post about the relationship of Haiku to a manner of perceiving (regardless of arguments with the haiku formalists here) is an important contribution - a contemporary one that bears a strong relationship to the work of Kyger, Eigner, Whalen, Snyder, Welch and Grenier among many, many others.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

> I think Joe's point is well tak en. While this discussion has been very instructive in many ways, we should not forget that this is list whose topic is innovative poetics. I'm sure there are other lists available for the promulgation of traditionalist poetics, and some of the same people might even be on both lists, since there is no reason not to be interested in both. But to the extent that we are not, at some point we just have to respectfully agree to disagree, letting the discussions of traditionalist poetics continue in whatever space is devoted to that and the discussions of innovative poetics, whatever that turns out to be, move forward in this one.
>
> As for myself, I think that a good deal of that heat that's been generated here hasto do with the "ownership" of the name "haiku." Although it would be useful to me to have recourse to this name at certain times, it doesn't really mean as much to me as it obviously does to some others, and therefore I'd just as soon cede it to them. I don't know why, but somehow this all reminds me of the dispute between Greece and one of the former Yugoslav republics over the name "Macedonia." United Nations intervention has still not resolved this issue. But when I lived in Italy, "macedonia" (small m) was the word for "fruit salad"--an association with very positive connotations as far as I'm concerned. So from now on I am going to avoid the use of the h-word to refer to any poem using a 5-7-5 structure or any other similar short poem whatsoever, except where this is unavoidable, such as when citing something that someone else said. From now on, I promise to refer to all such poems as "macedonia."
>
> This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

↑ Index

331. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: haiku and Anna Nicole Smith

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Thank you so much for your letter Anny Ballardini! Anna Nicole Smith is non-stop on cable news--and here at buffalo list, too--(though is the discussion here "innovative" and "questioning recieved forms and styles" and so actually superior to the tablod and news reporting?--the analysis by alan sondheim for example is given within abt first ten seconds by the tabloids, and then contually surpassed in as Anny writes, "talk talk talk talk"-- actually very much the talk talk talk and barrage of images interviews quotes--is the creation via Tragedy, of a Saint--being elevated into the Heavens of the Spectacle--the allusions which media makes and Anna Nicole continaully made to Mailyn --link her immediately to that Sainted image and sacrifical Tragedy--yet there are also many background murmruings of the ever onging Sanctification of Princess Di--and lost in the depths Jayne Mansfield as well, though she is a Lesser Saint than Marilyn and Di and Anna Nicole--(whose name also conjures resomating imagery of the tragic tall blonde Nicole Simpson Brown--)--

the Tragedy of the lowly little girl's frairy tale princess' dream and attainment of real Princess fame and fortune via beauty and wealthy, powerful men--(Jayne Mansfield married literally a "Strong Man"--famous body builder--and Jayne, like Anne Boleyn--decapitated though not by any King's decree other than those of the women who are the Fates)--and treacheries along the way of those who don't want to allow the princess to become a Queen--so that they die tragically, experience martyrdoms--and become beloved above all among "the people"--their loyal subjects as it were--and then transformed into Saints for the Adoration-- talk tlak tlak tlak and images images images--with scandal always attendent--mysteries of fathers, of children, courts of law--social barriers transgressed--the manipulation by media and media manipulation by "star"--it is an endless pagentry and each new princess/Saint contributes her own unique variations on the theme, on the relics, on the forms of Adoration and memorialization--each contributes to the enhancement of the others--for the glory of the firmaments where the Stars are existing in Eternal Light-- for secular fallen worlds, a new form of religion/opiate of the masses--and for the masters and mistreeses in charge, more pagentry, bread and circuses to keep "the people" from wanting to pay attention to the Bad news which is being jettisoned in all the pomp and glory, all the mysteries of fatherhood, of legal ranglings over Gold--posseions--and the mysterious deaths--natural/suicidal/murder by conspiracy--the triumph of the female Saint over the male desire to dominate and condemn and destroy them--the lovers who along the way adored or betrayed-Saint Joan and her Inquistors--burning at the stake and like Artaud's victim, signalling through the flames--before the Ascension-- so many powerful forces unleashed in the tabloid world's energies--in the drug store the other night going from magazine cover to magaine cover, tabloid sheet to tabloid sheet cover--a whole procession of images of the Saints and martyrs among the Stars--their sufferings, weight, child, man, money, career dramas rising and falling in the melodramtic rhythms of a word/music/image ritualized ceremonial Stations of the Cross in a serial form--not just the imagery, but the use of words, their typogrpahies in the immense visual/sound serial feuillton poem/drama-- and who is still with one--stil going strong--LIZ!!!--since childhood LIZ has been there--ruling the living heavens--a kind of Patron Saint of the Tabloids--endlessly dy8ing almost and being reborn--endless finding husbands and lovers--and moving on to another one--so as never to be dull or boring by having tthe same againg companion--for her eteranl youth--Madonna has made a career out of running her own tabloids to go laong withthose that surround her--Demi--Katie--Barbara Mandrell (back with her stolen tour bus in the front page news--on cable----straight out of country song--)--Hillary--(lately joining the ones who seem destinied for their stops in rehab--according to some of the Tabloid iconogrpahy--)--Halle--Venus--Whitney--Oprah--Visitations by Mary, Our Lady of Guadalupe, Serena, Shakira--a long gallery of icons one passes by in the altar area of the cash register-alongside the little boxes for donations to various organizations for children's diseases--and now Anna Nicole will for a while be the one whose Adoration will burn with the finest flame--for some months to come-- as she becomes a permanent part of the Spectacle of Stardom Sainthood--her Ascension attained--into that Eternal Company

The Tabloids are really the Living Presence of ancient energies which negentropically regenerate--rther than run down--and continually gather more Saints, more intensity with each new form of media--icons of the Goddesses since times immemorial--Cleopatra--Helen of Troy-- in one of his autobriographical novels Blaise Cendrars writes of the forms of Tabloids and feuilleton photo-novels he finds in the farthest reaches of Brazil--and writes of how these--with the Stars, the monsters (aliens, Big Foot, etc--), the horoscopes and predictions of Nostradums, Book of revelations--how al these anceint "interprepations of dreams", love potions, methods of Better Health and Beauty--al of it, the belief in the stars of the Screen and of the Horoscopes--are al truly signs of the ancient world which have never been expunged for all the "progress" in history--but have only made uses of progress and progress made uses of them--to burn ever brighter, be ever more proliferating, ever more Glora in Excelsus --

re the discussion of haiku--
Joe--(message below)--

there is something rather paradoxically humorous about invoking the Words of the Welcome Message-- a number of writers have presented themselves as poets who are anti-the-rules and anti-the -forms --by inclination and style--of form in their own senses of form--renovators and innovators--in both the Spirit and Letter of the Law--of the List-- which actually if you think of it is a bit oxymoronic-- that is--the Rules of the List demand innovation, renovation, investigation questioning, creation possibly of the unimagined, untried, unexpected, impossible, improbale--

the Rules of the lLst--now arent some of the same people who invoke all sorts of rule breaking--the ones who are insisting on referrring back to the Rules?!-- i can't help it, i find this very funny-- for if one were a rule breaker in such Rules' context--wouldn't a way of breaking these rules be to consider seriously the rules of a form "untried, unimagined" by oneself??--let alone by the type of innovative poetry that is intended by the Rules-- (when there are rules re innovation, let alone renovation, investigation, --one knows implicity that this means only certain kinds of innovation will be recognized--leading to domination, denomination, demonization and many other forms of debilitation)--

if one is so opposed to rules, forms and classifications--why then quote a set of rules, and use said rules to as it were silence the claims of other forms of rules--?--

i mean if one is truly a rule breaker--wouldn't one also just chuck these rules, too?-- and listen to other rules of form, other forms of rules--rather simply One Form of Rlues, The Rule of One Form?--One Form Rules? (i .e. the "innovative, rneovative, investigative" one--yet--innovative, renovative, investigative--according to Whom--in the words of M. Foucault--to invoke a Voice of Authority so as to be a good Rule follower for the nonce as it were--, "Who Speaks?"--through the Message and Rules--whose innovation is one engaging with?-- what if one truly engaged in innovations which were of some other sort entirely?--truly being a rule breaker breaking rules?

or is there fear of such "chaos" being introdced into the system, or fear of other rules than that of the Message-- why is it one cites these rules in order to turn a deaf ear as it were to a set of rules existing in an other form of poetry? does not the kind of innovation being asked for here consist of its own sets of rules?

you see, if someone sends the Message to question, to investigate--Rules, Forms, Authorities-- does this not also entail a questioning of the authority, of the Rules--which are making this Call?--becuase one must, truly, if being embarked on quesdtoning, question who it is that is asking for investigations, innovations, questionings-- other swise one is still truly a follower of the Law, in spirit and letter--and not an independent questioner, but one doing so at the behest of others, for purposes which must be indeed perhaps for their benefit?

i am writing this both very humourously and very seriously--

remember the period of "Let a Hundred Flowers Bloom" in China?-- a brillaint bit of work by Chairman Mao and company-- a Welcome Message as it were was sent out to al the people of China-- "Let a Hundred Flowers Bloom"--a new openness! everyone was encourgaed to come forward with their questionings, suggestions for innovations and renovations and investigations--for al voices to be rasied in order to have a great conversation, a great exchange openly of ideas--on how to renovate and innovative and redecorate and investigate the way things were being run by the sytem, by the great Chairman Welcomer Mao himself--each person who brought forward something of use for improving the existing sytem would be a great contributor to the cause, to the nation-- the excietment and joy with which this edict was met was incredible--people came forward with literally millions of suggestions, new ideas, things learned on how to improve this and that glitch-- and once they had al come out in the open, O Hundred Blooming Flowers-whack whack whack!!!

off with their heads!!
and a Hundred Flowers Doomed--

this is a true story, the life and death parable, which i always think of when i hear that there are rules for innovations-- because--look what happens--a person writing of an other form of poetry and trying to make clear its form, and advocate for a study of its history, examples, in order to understand it and to attempt a beginning of its practice-- is told--basically to stuff it--becuase the rule here is we don't have any uses for rules-- ("other than our own")-- so isn't one advocating that as the Rules say there are no other rules to be bothered about--than the Rule here-- isn't one becoming a kind of cop or soldier in the service of the Rule of the Rules--and so--ready and willing to chop off the heads of anything with other rules, and --one feels it is implied--with innovations which aren' t in the spirit of the kind of innovations being asked for by the Rules and its followers citiing them?

do you see why i find this both very humourous and also a serious question?

to really be questioning and investigating--one needs to be open to lsiten--to a great many forms and their sets of rules, to have an interest in learning and understandig what is different--just as one needs to question and investigate also what it means to be a rule breaker and yet a follower of Rules--how this might affect one's ability to have a questionng which leads to understanding--rather than a questioning which leads to silencing, ridicule or willful ignorance and arrogance--

Yeats wrote that poetry comes from the struggle with oneself, rhetoric and politics of the argument with others--

the questioning and invetsigation--one needs to begin with oneself--am i really a rule breaker?--do i really believe in sometimes following the rules and sometimes not--and what helps me make these decisisons?--why do i reject the rules of form--yet advocate strongly the Rules of a list telling me to question them?-- do i question another's authority because it was one i am not familiar or interested in one? do i question the authority by which i claim authority to question the rules followed by others? if i am questionng the authority of others to set certain rules and abide by them-- why then do i not question myself for followng certain rules and abiding by them? is my authority to question others rules and authorities higher than their power to believe in them abide by them and create by them? and is my authority to question only based on a belief in the authority which allows me this form of questioning? what proofs do i have to make me believe my authority of rules is higher than that of others and their follwing theirs while i follow mine? am i nothing more than a blindly obediant follower of Rules when i say that others are?

"some things are so serious that all one can do is laugh"--werner heisenberg--he of the Uncertainty Principle--

as the song says

still i wonder
still i wonder who'll stop the rain

or as the old saying goes:
"remember the first time you were ripped off by a head?"
"question authority"--means al authorities--including the one telling you to question other's authority
it means questining one's own authority

so once i send this i am going to question my authority in sending this which isn't authority at all--other than experience in many coiuntries and situations--of many auhtorites of al forms --controlling one's existence or trying to convince one of one's freedoms-- auhtorites and rules exist--even when asking one to ask questions-- for purposes of their own

just as charity is said to begin at home, so questioning is best begun at home--in oneself--and with the rules one is following on someone's authority in order to questions rules-- (i.e.--don't listen to me either!!)(remember the wise Russian Proverb President Reagan used to love to endlessly repeat and mispronounce?--"Trust, but Verify"!!!) you see--there are no free rides at the carnival-- if you think that there are-- then perhaps you have listened to a cunning old carnie con--

in the guise of something looking like a Benevolent Authority for all you may know-- without question and investigating=- and truly --remeber tohave some good laughs at all one finds in the funhouse mirror distortions within and without oneself-!!!
in the sense of affectionate community-
(and as the creator at one time of a series of zollage (xeroxed collage) zines called "NO ACCIDENT: The Journal of Extra-Sensory Paranoia") david-bc now back to my own tabloid life and work!!!

> From: Joe Amato <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: haiku
> Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 23:23:02 -0600
>
> *But Dan, how would you know whether a poet knows "the history of the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?*
>
> Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.
>
> This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)
>
> The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?
>
> There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, with (or without) the possession of such knowledge. Whether the results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c they've deviated *from the norm. If you think you can read a given example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated knowledge.*

That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has a stomach for.

*At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence of such knowledge.*

*I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of haiku.*

Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, and resistance thereto. That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.

Best,

Joe

I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems themeselves.

I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.

On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are

satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:

If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005
*edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest Books, 2004), in which I have an* essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.

By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten eleven twelve thirteen

A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As *Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre*
before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I *could

see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and
is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.*

*And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US
haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"*

*Seven syllables
Eleven syllables
Seven syllables*

*I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?*

*For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit
http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.*

*Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective
correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce
too the haiku suggestiveness."*

*I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind
things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,
too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and*

*associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative
than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
"for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.*

Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry.

*Poetry
first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

Michael
P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( [redacted]):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much* as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like

an obedient school bo
y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience the image as sharply as possible
-- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have expected better on this discussion list.
3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
this line.
4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer
(I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms

*(that's either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku,
no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it
employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
techniques -- and more. And through al
l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.*

*On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with images, they start with them.*

*-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku*

*I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am
proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:*

> Don't look at my face.
> No change, just large bills.
> One wrong move will be your last.
>
> ---
>
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security
> tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web,
> free AOL Mail and more.
>
> --
> http://hyperhypo.org/blog
> http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

_____ FREE online classifieds from Windows Live Expo – buy and sell with people you know http://clk.atdmt.com/MSN/go/msnnkwex0010000001msn/direct/01/?href=http://expo.live.com?s_cid=Hotmail_tagline_12/06

↑ Index

332. Joe Amato
Re: haiku and Anna Nicole Smith
Sat 10 Feb 2007

David, yes, of course, to all that! There are "rules" (having to do with poetry, for some) and "rules" (in this case, having to do with context, for anyone subbed to this list). I was reproducing the context "rules" not to enforce them, but to give some idea of why some people around here might resist the notion that the "rules" (having to do with poetry) are to be rather scrupulously adhered to.

For me, then, the "rules" of context explain in part the dynamics of the list. I sense some dismay hereabouts on the part of some that others might not wish to follow the "rules" of poetry. Well, but have a look at what this list is presumed to be about.

That said, I for one enjoy hearing about, and being educated in, formalities, formalisms incl. But this doesn't mean that I'm inclined to forgo my own creative impulses, which -- if I do say so -- have generally been at least somewhat informed by the "rules." So perhaps the approach ought to be more like, "I'm not sure you're prepared to accept these rules [of haiku], but here they are, and please know that some regard same with considerable gravity." That would at least acknowledge the legitimacy of others who conduct their poetic practice w/o deference to such "rules."

Anyway, there's a paradox at work here, certainly. On my office door is taped a little cartoon that depicts two guys, both in suits, one sitting behind a desk, and the other standing before him, saying, "I'll be happy to do innovative thinking. What are the guidelines?"

That about sums it up, no? And it certainly sums up my experience at times teaching creative writing, along with most else.

Best,

Joe

> Thank you so much for your letter Anny Ballardini! Anna Nicole Smith is non-stop on cable news--and here at buffalo list, too--(though is the discussion here "innovative" and "questioning recieved forms and styles" and so actually superior to the tablod and news reporting?--the analysis by alan sondheim for example is given within abt first ten seconds by the tabloids, and then contually surpassed in as Anny writes, "talk talk talk talk"--
>
> actually very much the talk talk talk and barrage of images interviews quotes--is the creation via Tragedy, of a Saint--being elevated into the Heavens of the Spectacle--the allusions which media makes and Anna Nicole continaully made to Mailyn --link her immediately to that Sainted image and sacrifical Tragedy--yet there are also many background murmruings of the ever onging Sanctification of Princess Di--and lost in the depths Jayne Mansfield as well, though she is a Lesser Saint than Marilyn and Di and Anna Nicole--(whose name also conjures resomating imagery of the tragic tall blonde Nicole Simpson Brown--)--

the Tragedy of the lowly little girl's frairy tale princess' dream and attainment of real Princess fame and fortune via beauty and wealthy, powerful men--(Jayne Mansfield married literally a "Strong Man"--famous body builder--and Jayne, like Anne Boleyn--decapitated though not by any King's decree other than those of the women who are the Fates)--and treacheries along the way of those who don't want to allow the princess to become a Queen--so that they die tragically, experience martyrdoms--and become beloved above all among "the people"--their loyal subjects as it were--and then transformed into Saints for the Adoration-- talk tlak tlak tlak and images images images--with scandal always attendent--mysteries of fathers, of children, courts of law--social barriers transgressed--the manipulation by media and media manipulation by "star"--it is an endless pagentry and each new princess/Saint contributes her own unique variations on the theme, on the relics, on the forms of Adoration and memorialization--each contributes to the enhancement of the others--for the glory of the firmaments where the Stars are existing in Eternal Light-- for secular fallen worlds, a new form of religion/opiate of the masses--and for the masters and mistreeses in charge, more pagentry, bread and circuses to keep "the people" from wanting to pay attention to the Bad news which is being jettisoned in all the pomp and glory, all the mysteries of fatherhood, of legal ranglings over Gold--posseions--and the mysterious deaths--natural/suicidal/murder by conspiracy--the triumph of the female Saint over the male desire to dominate and condemn and destroy them--the lovers who along the way adored or betrayed-Saint Joan and her

Inquistors--burning at the stake and like Artaud's victim, signalling through the flames--before the Ascension-- so many powerful forces unleashed in the tabloid world's energies-- in the drug store the other night going from magazine cover to magaine cover, tabloid sheet to tabloid sheet cover--a whole procession of images of the Saints and martyrs among the Stars--their sufferings, weight, child, man, money, career dramas rising and falling in the melodramtic rhythms of a word/music/image ritualized ceremonial Stations of the Cross in a serial form--not just the imagery, but the use of words, their typogrpahies in the immense visual/sound serial feuillton poem/drama-- and who is still with one--stil going strong--LIZ!!!--since childhood LIZ has been there--ruling the living heavens--a kind of Patron Saint of the Tabloids--endlessly dy8ing almost and being reborn--endless finding husbands and lovers--and moving on to another one--so as never to be dull or boring by having tthe same againg companion--for her eteranl youth--Madonna has made a career out of running her own tabloids to go laong withthose that surround her--Demi--Katie--Barbara Mandrell (back with her stolen tour bus in the front page news--on cable----straight out of country song--)--Hillary--(lately joining the ones who seem destinied for their stops in rehab--according to some of the Tabloid iconogrpahy--)--Halle--Venus--Whitney--Oprah--Visitations
by Mary, Our Lady of Guadalupe, Serena, Shakira--a long gallery of icons one passes by in the altar area of the cash register-alongside the little boxes for donations to various organizations for children's diseases-- and now Anna Nicole will for a while be the one whose Adoration will burn with the finest flame--for some months to come-- as she becomes a permanent part of the Spectacle of Stardom Sainthood--her Ascension attained--into that Eternal Company

The Tabloids are really the Living Presence of ancient energies which negentropically regenerate--rther than run down--and continually gather more Saints, more intensity with each new form of media--icons of the Goddesses since times immemorial--Cleopatra--Helen of Troy--

in one of his autobriographical novels Blaise Cendrars writes of the forms of Tabloids and feuilleton photo-novels he finds in the farthest reaches of Brazil--and writes of how these--with the Stars, the monsters (aliens, Big Foot, etc--), the horoscopes and predictions of Nostradums, Book of revelations--how al these anceint "interprepations of dreams", love potions, methods of Better Health and Beauty--al of it, the belief in the stars of the Screen and of the Horoscopes--are al truly signs of the ancient world which have never been expunged for all the "progress" in history--but have only made uses of progress and progress made uses of them--to burn ever brighter, be ever more proliferating, ever more Glora in Excelsus --

re the discussion of haiku--
Joe--(message below)--
there is something rather paradoxically humorous about invoking the Words of the Welcome Message-- a number of writers have presented themselves as poets who are anti-the-rules and anti-the -forms
--by inclination and style--of form in their own senses of form--renovators and innovators--in both the Spirit and Letter of the Law--of the List--
which actually if you think of it is a bit oxymoronic-- that is--the Rules of the List demand innovation, renovation, investigation questioning, creation possibly of the unimagined, untried, unexpected, impossible, improbale--

the Rules of the lLst--now arent some of the same people who invoke all sorts of rule breaking--the ones who are insisting on referrring back to the Rules?!-- i can't help it, i find this very funny-- for if one were a rule breaker in such Rules' context--wouldn't a way of breaking these rules be to consider seriously the rules of a form

"untried, unimagined" by oneself??--let alone by the type of innovative poetry that is intended

by the Rules-- (when there are rules re innovation, let alone renovation, investigation, --one knows implicity that this means only certain kinds of innovation will be recognized--leading to domination, denomination, demonization and many other forms of debilitation)--

if one is so opposed to rules, forms and classifications--why then quote a set of rules, and use said rules to as it were silence the claims of other forms of rules--?--

i mean if one is truly a rule breaker--wouldn't one also just chuck these rules, too?-- and listen to other rules of form, other forms of rules--rather simply One Form of Rlues, The Rule of One Form?--One Form Rules? (i .e. the "innovative, rneovative, investigative"
one--yet--innovative, renovative, investigative--according to Whom--in the words of M. Foucault--to invoke a Voice of Authority so as to be a good Rule follower for the nonce as it were--, "Who Speaks?"--through the Message and Rules--whose innovation is one engaging
with?-- what if one truly engaged in innovations which were of some other sort entirely?--truly being a rule breaker breaking rules?

or is there fear of such "chaos" being introdced into the system, or fear of other rules than that of the Message--

why is it one cites these rules in order to turn a deaf ear as it were to a set of rules existing in an other form of poetry?
does not the kind of innovation being asked for here consist of its own sets of rules?

you see, if someone sends the Message to question, to investigate--Rules, Forms, Authorities-- does this not also entail a questioning of the authority, of the Rules--which are making this Call?--becuase one must, truly, if being embarked on quesdtoning, question who it is that is asking for investigations, innovations, questionings-- other swise one is still truly a follower of the Law, in spirit and letter--and not an independent questioner, but one doing so at the behest of others, for purposes which must be indeed perhaps for their benefit?

i am writing this both very humourously and very seriously-- remember the period of "Let a Hundred Flowers Bloom" in China?-- a brillaint bit of work by Chairman Mao and company-- a Welcome Message as it were was sent out to al the people of China--

"Let a Hundred Flowers Bloom"--a new openness! everyone was encourgaed to come forward with their questionings, suggestions for innovations and renovations and investigations--for al voices to be rasied in order to have a great conversation, a great exchange openly of ideas--on how to renovate and innovative and redecorate and investigate the way things were being run by the sytem, by the great Chairman Welcomer Mao himself--each person who brought forward something of use for improving the existing sytem would be a great contributor to the cause, to the nation--

the excietment and joy with which this edict was met was incredible--people came forward with literally millions of suggestions, new ideas, things learned on how to improve this and that glitch--
and once they had al come out in the open, O Hundred Blooming Flowers-whack whack whack!!!
off with their heads!!
and a Hundred Flowers Doomed--

this is a true story, the life and death parable, which i always think of when i hear that there are rules for innovations-- because--look what happens--a person writing of an other form of poetry and trying to make clear its form, and advocate for a study of its history, examples, in order to understand it and to attempt a beginning of its practice-- is told--basically to stuff it--becuase the rule here is we don't have any uses for rules-- ("other than our own")-- so isn't one advocating that as the Rules say there are no other rules to be bothered about--than the Rule here-- isn't one becoming a kind of cop or soldier in the service of the Rule of the Rules--and so--ready and willing to chop off the heads of anything with other rules, and --one feels it is implied--with innovations which aren' t in the spirit of the kind of innovations being asked for by the Rules and its followers citiing them?

do you see why i find this both very humourous and also a serious question?

to really be questioning and investigating--one needs to be open to lsiten--to a great many forms and their sets of rules, to have an interest in learning and understandig what is different--just as one needs to question and investigate also what it means to be a rule breaker and yet a follower of Rules--how this might affect one's ability to have a questionng which leads to understanding-- rather than a questioning which leads to silencing, ridicule or willful ignorance and arrogance--

Yeats wrote that poetry comes from the struggle with oneself, rhetoric and politics of the argument with others--

the questioning and invetsigation--one needs to begin with oneself--am i really a rule breaker?--do i really believe in sometimes following the rules and sometimes not--and what helps me make these decisisons?--why do i reject the rules of form--yet advocate strongly the Rules of a list telling me to question them?-- do i question another's authority because it was one i am not familiar or interested in one?
do i question the authority by which i claim authority to question the rules followed by others?
if i am questionng the authority of others to set certain rules and abide by them-- why then do i not question myself for followng certain rules and abiding by them?
is my authority to question others rules and authorities higher than their power to believe in them abide by them and create by them?

and is my authority to question only based on a belief in the authority which allows me this form of questioning? what proofs do i have to make me believe my authority of rules is higher than that of others and their follwing theirs while i follow mine? am i nothing more than a blindly obediant follower of Rules when i say that others are?

"some things are so serious that all one can do is laugh"--werner heisenberg--he of the Uncertainty Principle--

as the song says

still i wonder
still i wonder who'll stop the rain

or as the old saying goes:
"remember the first time you were ripped off by a head?"
"question authority"--means al authorities--including the one telling you to question other's authority
it means questining one's own authority

so once i send this i am going to question my authority in sending this which isn't authority at all--other than experience in many coiuntries and situations--of many auhtorites of al forms --controlling one's existence or trying to convince one of one's freedoms-- auhtorites and rules exist--even when asking one to ask questions-- for purposes of their own

just as charity is said to begin at home, so questioning is best begun at home--in oneself--and with the rules one is following on someone's authority in order to questions rules-- (i.e.--don't listen to me either!!)(remember the wise Russian Proverb President Reagan used to love to endlessly repeat and mispronounce?--"Trust, but Verify"!!!)
you see--there are no free rides at the carnival--
if you think that there are--
then perhaps you have listened to a cunning old carnie con--

in the guise of something looking like a Benevolent Authority for all you may know-- without question and investigating=- and truly --remeber tohave some good laughs at all one finds in the funhouse mirror distortions within and without oneself-!!!
in the sense of affectionate community-(and as the creator at one time of a series of zollage (xeroxed collage) zines called "NO ACCIDENT: The Journal of Extra-Sensory Paranoia")
david-bc now back to my own tabloid life and work!!!

From: Joe Amato <[redacted]>
Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: haiku
Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 23:23:02 -0600

*But Dan, how would you know whether a *poet knows "the history of the poem, its implications" etc.? -- unless of course you feel you can glean same from a reading of (e.g.) the poem itself?

Stephen Vincent makes the proper point, in any case, even against MDW's reasoned argument in favor of such knowledge.

This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

The question before us is a typical question, really, applicable to haiku or to any rec'd form: at what point is taking liberties deemed acceptable, or unacceptable, and why?

There are surely histories of poetry, in the U.S. (e.g.), in the 20th century (e.g.) -- a history of resistance to received forms -- to suggest that some (of us) will be inclined to mess with rec'd forms, with (or without) the *possession of such knowledge. Whether the results are successful, well -- they're not not successful simply b/c they've deviated from the norm. If you think you can read a given example and suss out whether the poet has not acted with sufficient knowledge, very well then. But that's a mite tougher to do, and to argue, than simply to compare and contrast with what the formal rules might say such items ought to attempt. Pardon me, but simple deviation from the norm does not (as I see it) an unsuccessful poem make, haiku or otherwise, nor does it suggest a lack of associated knowledge.*

That said, I opt for as much knowledge of the formal rules as one has a stomach for.

*At any rate, I daresay it will require a much more sophisticated approach to form generally to persuade most on this list not to mess with rec'd form. Where I part company with MDW is in my assertion that haiku are no different, finally, than sonnets (or any other poetic form) insofar as the inherent legitimacy of altering associated constraints. Again, how is one to prove that one has the knowledge sufficient to being granted license (poetic license) to alter form? Or, again, are we saying that all such knowledge will be evident in the poetry itself? One way to almost guarantee that nobody messes with form is to argue that a given poem must exhibit evidence of such knowledge.*

*I hope you all see the conundrum at work here. So, I'd like someone to explain to me -- seriously now -- why some of the haiku posted here DON'T work when understood as "questioning of received forms and styles" (see above). Or even better, how it is that some of the haiku posted here, lionized or no, do not reveal sufficient knowledge of haiku.*

Unless the problem is simply one of naming -- i.e., that we ought not to call a haiku that which merely resembles same -- then a judgment is being made as to how best to approach this matter of poetic form, and resistance thereto.

That's not pertinent simply to haiku -- that strikes at the heart of what a list like this is supposed to be about.

Best,

Joe

I think the writer is reacting to Bowering's and Schwabsky's lionizing of Padgett's and Violi's poems, respectively, and not the poems
themeselves.

I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it.

On 2/9/07, Davey Volner <[redacted]> wrote:
I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

On 2/9/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:

If Paul Violi's "Don't look at my face. / No change, just large bills. /
One wrong move will be your last." poem blows your mind, wonderful. It's quite arresting, I agree. But it's not because it has anything to do with haiku (except for the obvious overlap with haiku of having brevity, which > gives the poem focus). So the problem here is either you or the poet labelling it as a haiku. For an overview of reasons why it has little to do with haiku, see my online essay "Becoming a Haiku Poet" (
> http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html). Or see the 2005 *edition of Poet's Market (Writer's Digest* Books, 2004), in which I have an essay on haiku and applying its techniques and aesthetics to the writing of longer poetry. Comments welcome.

By the way, wordplay on "low-ku," "noir-coup," or whatever, is another mark of haiku poetasters. So are most poems about haiku. I went through this stage, too. But I got over it. This is the kind of trivia I got over (from the esteemed pen of Mr. Daniel Zimmerman):

flag haiku

one two three four five
six seven eight nine ten e> leven twelve thirteen

>
> *A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn apart for failing as haiku.*
>
> And a quick, respectful message to George (Bowering): You say, "Best US haiku I know is Ron Padgett's:"
>
> Seven syllables
> Eleven syllables
> Seven syllables
>
> *I have to hope your tongue is in your cheek. But if so, why? Why promote a poem that doesn't take the genre seriously? If you mean to damn all American poems by favouring such an obviously clueless one, then that seems to suggest an unfamiliarity with the best haiku written in English. And if your tongue's not in your cheek, why would you say this is a good haiku? Have you read Cor van den Heuvel's Haiku Anthology, just for starters?*
>
> For a slightly dated annotated list of recommended books on haiku, visit http://mensaww.org/HaikuBooks.htm.
>
> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."
>
> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think,

too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects
correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem,
"for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's > clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.

Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not > necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why
it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label
something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

Michael
P.S. To discuss another poem offered here, from Eric ( [redacted]):

Golf Haiku

Robin watches drive,
waits until I leave the tee,
probes divot for worm.

Here are some problems with this "haiku" (which I would hope would be among the 1,000 haiku one writes before trying to publish any -- a task that haiku writer Jim Kacian set for himself):

1. It has a title, which haiku avoid (and in this case, the title is redundant -- we know from the poem that it's about golf, and we don't need to be condescended to and be told it's a haiku; in other "haiku" that have titles, the title is a sort of cheating -- adding a fourth line).
2. It drops natural articles in the first and third lines (a robin, a/my drive, the divot). Paul O. Williams, *writing in The Nick of Time: Essays on Haiku Aeshetics, calls this tontoism. It arises when a person is* insufficiently accomplished at crafting the poem to make it properly fit a form (if they wish to follow a prescribed syllable count), or if they think somehow that it's "better" simply to be briefer (if they're not following a set form). Ted Kooser has written that a good poem is like looking at tropical fish through the bottom of a glass-bottom boat, and that you don't want things to clatter down onto the glass as you look, or see smudges on the glass, and thus make you aware of where you're looking from. Rather, you want to be totally absorbed in what you're seeing, to experience IT as much as possible. As soon as you resort to tontoism, you show the apparatus, the scaffolding, and also reveal that following an arbitrary syllable count like
an obedient school bo
y is more important than crafting good content. (Let form be an extension of content!) The words of a good poem should be as invisible as possible, letting you feel the meaning or experience
the image as sharply as possible

-- this is why haiku is sometimes called the "wordless poem" (Alan Watts; Eric Amann). My goodness, the haiku crime of tontoism should be punishable
by a lifetime of having to listen to Rod McKuen poetry speeded up to chipmunk speed. That's such a basic matter of crafting. I would have expected better on this discussion list.
3. It is presented as a sentence (ending with a period, even), and is oblivious to the fragmentary nature of haiku. Starting with a lowercase letter in this case would also prevent the misreading of "Robin" as a person's name, which muddies the interpretation of this poem. The lopping off of the article ("a robin") is another contributor to the wooliness in
this line.
4. It lacks the two-part juxtapositional structure that focuses our attention on a specific emotion that we can figure out (the poem lacks implication and reverberation). Haiku, too, are usually not narrative like
this one, and are usually best if they avoid a cause/effect presentation.
5. The poem is choppy and awkward.
6. Because of the worm, I suppose we can imagine it's spring or summer (I'd have to check the history of "worm" as a seasonal indicator), but the seasonal element isn't strong here. (That doesn't bother me too much, > though.) A strong seasonal element, however, can greatly deepen the effect
of a poem by tapping into seasonal or natural archetypes, and alluding to > other poems about the same subject (allusion and a technique known as honkodori is common in Japanese poetry).
7. The biggest problem is that this is a so-what poem. There's no implication, nothing for the reader to figure out. I like the image well enough -- that a bird is waiting for your divot to look for worms (that's either a smart robin, or a lazy one). But that's all there is too it, and it's obfuscated by the awkward and unnecessary syntax, all in the name of 5-7-5. But something more needs to be left out, to be implied. Consider, for example, this poem: "an old woolen sweater / taken yarn by yarn / from the snowbank." When students in my classes figure out that it's about a bird taking bits of yarn for a nest in spring, their faces light up with realization -- they "get it." Yet no bird is mentioned. Most of the time, if a haiku doesn't leave something out to be "got," then it fails as a haiku, no matter how well the objectivity or subjectivity is controlled, whether it employs a kigo or kireji equivalent, or shasei (sketching form life)
techniques -- and more. And through al
l of this, of course, it's irrelevant whether the poem is 5-7-5 or not.

On the good side, this poem is objective, but the POINT of using objectivity is to create some sort of subjective reaction -- an emotional or intuitive moment. And this poem feels too shallow in its use of objective description to have created enough of a leap, overtones, or reverberation.
It's got a greater starter image for a haiku, that haiku don't end with images, they start with them.

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 8 Feb 2007 07:12:09 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku

I don't think there can a haiku better than this one by Paul Violi, which I am proud to have published in a magazine I co-edited many years ago. I don't believe it follows a single one of your rules, nor does it follow the conventional syllable count, but it blows my mind:

Don't look at my face.
No change, just large bills.
One wrong move will be your last.

Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

FREE online classifieds from Windows Live Expo – buy and sell with people you know http://clk.atdmt.com/MSN/go/msnnkwex0010000001msn/direct/01/?href=http://expo.live.com?s_cid=Hotmail_tagline_12/06

↑ Index

333. Dubravka Djuric
Re: small cultures and innovative poetry
Sat 10 Feb 2007

---

at the moment, there is no english version of the site, so i am sending a short description of this alternative educational project, which is situated in the totaly anti-intelectual approches to poetry, we developed highly intelectual approach, and i think it is unique work in poetry in the region, as far as i have information. i hope that something of this work will be in some moment available in english!

AWIN's school for poetry and theory was established in 1997 first as summer school within the Belgrade Center for Womes Studies and communication, and then within Association for Woemn's Initiative.

The program of the work implies:

- knowledge of poetry and poetics by 20th century poets from French simbolists, Italian futurists, Russian cubofuturists, Chech poetists, American beat poets and language poets to Sought Slavic poets;

- developing of artistic self-consciousness and self-reflection (writing of poetics);

- thinking of poetry at the level of the models of poetry;

- lectures and representing guests;

- consideration of relations between contemporary relation between poetry and contemporary theories (deconstruction, feminism, technoaestetics, etc);

- discussing the relation contemporary media cultures *movie, advertising, photographies) and poetry;

- discussing the relationship between contemporary poetry and visual art and theatre;

- working on poetry as performing art...

----- Original Message -----
From: "Dubravka Djuric" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Saturday, February 10, 2007 2:35 PM
Subject: Re: small cultures and innovative poetry

> hi jim,
> thank you for this words, and for all in this list i will suggest to find > the sight of awin (association for women initiatives where i now for 10 > years established school for innovative poetry and poetics, you could find > there text in english where you could have a sense what we have been doing!

>
>
> http://www.awin.org.yu
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: "Jim Andrews" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Sent: Saturday, February 03, 2007 5:23 AM
> Subject: Re: small cultures and innovative poetry
>
>
> > Hi Dubravka,
> >
> > Thanks for your fascinating post. Also, the tone of it is appealing: it > > isn't calling for anybody's head on a platter; it is articulate and > > progressive, not bitter or vengeful. You do not play the nationalistic > > trumpet but, instead, question the political and poetical value of > > aggressive nationalism. You speak for the value of experimental poetry
> that > > introduces critical methods into poetry. That is important in poetry and
> in > > contemporary society.
> >
> > Poetry needs to be able to deal with situations such as > > http://alternet.org/blogs/peek/47507 . Intensest engagement with language,
> > these days, is not necessarily in a poemy poem on a page. It can happen
> off
> > the page and even off the art map. Poetry needs to be able to go there.
> >
> > ja
> > http://vispo.com

↑ Index

334. Eireene Nealand

Re: small cultures and innovative poetry

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Hi Dubravka,

The description of your school sounds great. As far as getting the work from it out there, I'd encourage you and members of the school to submit to our experimental magazine, Tarpaulin Sky. (hhtp://www.tarpaulinsky.com). We're always looking for new writers and I have a sort of special interest in postSoviet life...especially since we here too in the US are quite affected by this strange world that has lost it's two poles. It's a question of global interest, I think.

Eireene

On 2/10/07, Dubravka Djuric <[redacted]> wrote:
> at the moment, there is no english version of the site, so i am sending a > short description of this alternative educational project, which is situated > in the totaly anti-intelectual approches to poetry, we developed highly > intelectual approach, and i think it is unique work in poetry in the region, > as far as i have information. i hope that something of this work will be in > some moment available in english!
>
> AWIN's school for poetry and theory was established in 1997 first as summer > school within the Belgrade Center for Womes Studies and communication,
and > then within Association for Woemn's Initiative.
>
> The program of the work implies:
>
> - knowledge of poetry and poetics by 20th century poets from French > simbolists, Italian futurists, Russian cubofuturists, Chech poetists, > American beat poets and language poets to Sought Slavic poets;
>
> - developing of artistic self-consciousness and self-reflection (writing of > poetics);
>
> - thinking of poetry at the level of the models of poetry;
>
> - lectures and representing guests;
>
> - consideration of relations between contemporary relation between poetry > and contemporary theories (deconstruction, feminism, technoaestetics, etc);
>
> - discussing the relation contemporary media cultures *movie, advertising, > photographies) and poetry;
>
> - discussing the relationship between contemporary poetry and visual art > and theatre;
>
> - working on poetry as performing art...
>

>
>
>
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: "Dubravka Djuric" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Sent: Saturday, February 10, 2007 2:35 PM
> Subject: Re: small cultures and innovative poetry
>
>
> > hi jim,
> > thank you for this words, and for all in this list i will suggest to find
> > the sight of awin (association for women initiatives where i now for 10 > > years established school for innovative poetry and poetics, you could find > > there text in english where you could have a sense what we have been > doing!
> >
> >
> > http://www.awin.org.yu
> >
> > ----- Original Message -----
> > From: "Jim Andrews" <[redacted]>
> > To: <[redacted]>
> > Sent: Saturday, February 03, 2007 5:23 AM
> > Subject: Re: small cultures and innovative poetry
> >
> >
> > > Hi Dubravka,
> > >
> > > Thanks for your fascinating post. Also, the tone of it is appealing: it > > > isn't calling for anybody's head on a platter; it is articulate and > > > progressive, not bitter or vengeful. You do not play the nationalistic > > > trumpet but, instead, question the political and poetical value of > > > aggressive nationalism. You speak for the value of experimental poetry
> > that > > > introduces critical methods into poetry. That is important in poetry and
> > in > > > contemporary society.
> > >
> > > Poetry needs to be able to deal with situations such as > > > http://alternet.org/blogs/peek/47507 . Intensest engagement with > language,

> > > these days, is not necessarily in a poemy poem on a page. It can happen
> > off
> > > the page and even off the art map. Poetry needs to be able to go there.
> > >
> > > ja
> > > http://vispo.com
>

↑ Index

335. Eric
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

> Golf Haiku

Thanks to MDW for taking the time to write such a thoughtful critique of my haiku. Though you missed my intention -- which was merely to knock off something silly -- your criticism was excellent. It helped me to understand the form and tradition of a proper haiku. Honest criticism is rare enough, but honest and extensive criticism is both rare and rewarding.

↑ Index

336. George Bowering
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

On 9-Feb-07, at 3:17 PM, Stephen Vincent wrote:

> A wee bit of reseach in haiku literature would reveal, by the way, that haiku
> nearly never have titles, and there are important reasons why. As Charlie > *Rossiter says, do some serious research and study of the genre before* > proclaiming work as being haiku, let alone saying that you "don't think there > can be a haiku better" than the example by Paul Violi. As strong as Violi's > poem may be as poetry, and as clear as its virtues are (I could see myself > publishing it too), it has nearly nothing to do with haiku, and is easily torn > apart for failing as haiku.

> Maybe with my good Protestant origins, I have never been at home with adherence to any kind of orthodox system of behavior

That is all right. But it is what haiku demands.
So you can write something else just as satisfying.

>
>
>
>
>
George B.
Author of his own misfortunes.

↑ Index

337. Jason Quackenbush
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

I love it, some macedonia for the list:

"Idyll Thoughts"

I don't wrote haiku.
to count syllables is fun.
Fucked your mom last night.

"Talk About Stuff"

Blah blah he said blah
blah natter guffaw she said
back. I got off the bus.

both by me. Here's a favorite macedonia by Jack McCarthy:

"The Super Polydent commercial I wish that Wilfred Brimley would do:"

There's nothing worse
when yer down on the muffin than a loose upper palate.

I'm off now to add a "macedonia" entry to the wikipedia list of poetic forms.

Semi-seriously though, my roommate my first year at berklee was a greek named athanasios. Across the hall from us lived a fellow who claimed he was from macedonia, but who thanos insisted was a Skopian and that the republic of macedonia was a lie cooked up by Tito to legitimize bulgarian holdings in historically greek territory. it struck me at the time that the whole thing was a little bit silly, and that the worry about the skopian land grab had very little to do with whether the slavs in the southeast of the former yugoslavia called themselves macedonians or skopians or bulgarians or whatever. i think, as such, the analogy to haiku is highly apropos.

Barry Schwabsky wrote:
> I think Joe's point is well taken. While this discussion has been very instructive in many ways, we should not forget that this is list whose topic is innovative poetics. I'm sure there are other lists available for the promulgation of traditionalist poetics, and some of the same people might even be on both lists, since there is no reason not to be interested in both. But to the extent that we are not, at some point we just have to respectfully agree to disagree, letting the discussions of traditionalist poetics continue in whatever space is devoted to that and the discussions of innovative poetics, whatever that turns out to be, move forward in this one.
>
> As for myself, I think that a good deal of that heat that's been generated here hasto do with the "ownership" of the name "haiku." Although it would be useful to me to have recourse to this name at certain times, it doesn't really mean as much to me as it obviously does to some others, and therefore I'd just as soon cede it to them. I don't know why, but somehow this all reminds me of the dispute between Greece and one of the former Yugoslav republics over the name "Macedonia." United Nations intervention has still not resolved this issue. But when I lived in Italy, "macedonia" (small m) was the word for "fruit salad"--an association with very positive connotations as far as I'm concerned. So from now on I am going to avoid the use of the h-word to refer to any poem using a 5-7-5 structure or any other similar short poem whatsoever, except where this is unavoidable, such as when citing something that someone else said. From now on, I promise to refer to all such poems as

> "macedonia."
>
> This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

↑ Index

338. Nicholas Ruiz III
Symposium
Sat 10 Feb 2007

intertheory.org presents...

--Symposium-- a political action roundtable committee.
http://intertheory.org/symposium

Information:

Each symposium ends in a draft resolution, to be forwarded by Symposium to the appropriate officials.

There are 10-12 symposia per year, each approximately four weeks in duration, dedicated to a problem in the cultural political landscape.

Meetings are virtual and asynchronous in the listserv:
[redacted]

Symposium #1: U.S. Healthcare (March 2007)

Participate by joining the listserv:
[redacted]

Dr. Nicholas Ruiz III
Chair, Symposium
http://intertheory.org/symposium

↑ Index

339. Stephen Vincent
Libby Grand Jury / C-Span
Sat 10 Feb 2007

I just happened to turn on C-Span and found myself listening to the Grand Jury/Fitzgerald questioning of "Scooter Libby." An 8 hour affair. Absolutely fascinating - the machinations of Cheney and his Under-Lord re the media, Judith Miller et al, revealing classified documents (National Intelligence Estimate), etc. Madly trying to cover their arses re Joe Wilson's revelations.

Good Theater Spooky Reality.

If you miss it,I suspect C-Span will replay a few times over the next week. Check the web site.

Stephen V

↑ Index

340. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: haiku
Sat 10 Feb 2007

How about these?

fog on the river

docked boats jostle

on the changing tide

after the blizzard

shovelers pitch snow

only so high

my newspaper

too wet from the snowbank

to read today

~ Daniel Zimmerman

----- Original Message -----
From: "Michael Dylan Welch" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Saturday, February 10, 2007 12:21 PM
Subject: Re: haiku

> Again, "Haiku" doesn't need to be treated with a capital. It's not a proper > noun.
>
> If I'm static and humourless, well, shucks, I'll try to let my hair down for > you when I can. If I seem static, that's because I'm advocating for a > position out of years of study, and positing that against some serious > misunderstandings. What you say of Violi's poems is all true, but true of the poem as a > POEM, not as a haiku. Yup, that's "static" -- or "rigid," you might say. Look, > a rose is not a chrysanthemum. That's all I'm trying to say. Why assert that > the poem is a haiku, when it clearly lacks understanding of haiku's history, > aesthetics, and various other understandings? Why persist with what I might > guess is a misunderstanding of the genre, indicated, among other things,

*by something as simple as treating the name of the genre as a proper noun when it isn't? I hesitate to say there's some arrogant ignorance going on here, but there does seem to be some resistance to the serious research that Charlie and I have encouraged. Sure, the poem is haiku-like, if you want to say that.
But that's an important distinction from claiming it as a haiku, and a far cry from claiming it to be about the best haiku ever.*

*I'm a lot less static as you might think, except that from your perspective it may look that way. But over the years, as I've learned different things about haiku (and still have much to learn), I've definitely evolved and changed my ideas on things. I used to think of haiku as a Zen art (a long time ago).
I know better now. I used to think haiku was a nature poem. Well, actually, it's a seasonal reference that haiku is generally after, and nature just comes along for the ride (though of course it's true, therefore, that it IS mostly a nature poem, but not always). And I could list a few more changed understandings. But because the location of where my perspective is evolving is down the track from where it seems you are, the distance between our perspectives probably makes my stance seem static. The movement of my train seems so slight to you because I'm probably at a different place on the haiku track from where you are, and the distance between us flatens your ability to detect my movement. I assure you my stance is not static, because even your claiming that I'm static encourages me to re-examine my perspectives to see if that's true, and to try to be responsive to that thought.*

Believe me, I find it really boring and imitative to write the "branches, leaves, blossoms and bird" forms of haiku. I'm not advocxzating that at all (perhaps you thought I was?!?). No, I'm advocating a deeper understanding of haiku as a subset of "poetry," which thereby distinguishes Violi's poem

from haiku. Most of the time, such a distinction wouldn't matter (how's that for a bit of not being static?), except for the fact that you claimed the poem as haiku -- and not just haiku, but a really darn good one. Not only is it not a darn good one, but it's not even a haiku at all. At most, it's hit just one of the many targets for haiku (brevity), but that single overlap with haiku should not be confused with it's being haiku, which necessitates hitting quite a few more haiku targets than that. It's a great little poem, but I see startling and fresh little poems like that all the time in the best haiku journals (and some of "branches, leaves, blossoms and bird" poems -- and they can still have their appeal to some folks, or have mild variations that can make them succeed). You try writing a cherry blossom haiku -- it's very hard to do with originality and freshness.

I appreciate that you're seeing my advocation for a formally true haiku, yet seeing that I don't mean a 5-7-5 formalism (I hope). If my perspective is claustrophobic to you (or others), I suppose that may be true. But believe me, I appreciate all sorts of short poems for what they are, without needing to apply a label to them (as with Violi's poem). My feeling is that you can't fling poetry labels around willy-nilly based on a limited understanding of the label. Doing so without sufficient understanding of the history and aesthetics of haiku, for example, dilutes the notion of what haiku is. If poets try to speak carefully, you'd think they'd speak not only with care in their words, but with a responsibility towards the words that takes ownership for understanding their meaning. In the case of haiku, there's a serious disconnect between popular perceptions and reality. In Japan, at your assertion that Violi's poem is a haiku, they would do one of two things: immediately and politely agree with you to your face (perhaps like saying to a child, yes dear, the sun is purple -- what a lovely drawing), or they would dismiss it without a thought.

I can hear you saying that there can be purple suns in haiku. I'm all for creativity and poetic license -- believe it or not. But only when it comes from a position of understanding, not ignorance, about haiku and its history and aesthetics. Basho said to learn the rules and then forget them (meaning, to internalize them so thoroughly that you no longer have to think about them). In your case, meaning to be as polite as I say this, it seems you haven't learned the rules yet.

Consider the following throughts on mastery and understanding, thoughts that probably apply to any literature, or any art or craft. I think most people progress through the following steps with their art, including poetry:

1. Unconscious incompetence (the person doesn't know that he isn't competent or doesn't understand).
2. Conscious incompetence (the person realizes that he isn't competent -- the door is now open to learning).
3. Conscious competence (the person has to consciously work at being competent -- it doesn't yet come naturally).
4. Unconscious competence (the person has internalized effective techniques so well that he no longer has to think about it, the way a quarterback doesn't have to think about how to throw a good spiral -- this is what I think Basho meant by "learn the rules and then forget them").

Since you urge morphing, why is it you resist morphing your understanding of haiku? The question here isn't adherence to any kind of orthodox behaviour, but that too many people proceed with behaviour they think is orthodox (thinking they know what a haiku is) when it isn't. See the difference?

As for being humourless, well, I've always known I can't tell a joke to save the queen. I am in earnest, obviously. But you won't find me as inflexible as you seem to think.

Good wishes,

Michael

In a message dated 09-Feb-07 9:04:30 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Maybe with my good Protestant origins, I have never been at home with adherence to any kind of orthodox system of behavior, but I find your insistences about Haiku (origins and form) static and humorless. Occasionally I work among elderly Chinese emigrants here in San Francisco, and indeed, for example, in making watercolors, many of them continue to adhere unwaveringly to 'branches, leaves, blossoms and bird' forms - sometimes attractive but boring, boring, rigid, etc. At best you want to tear up the pages and introduce students to the fresh experience of montage,
collage, etc.
Such as with Violi's haiku - the juxtaposition of what he has done against conventional content is startling, refreshing - a response that I find with what I can only sense to be 'good' translations of 'ancient' haiku. Much of which I suspect Paul Violi and many of us have been variably interested readers - whether via Pound, Rexroth, Waley & on.

Your argument for a formally true Haiku, seems as claustrophobic to me as someone who might argue - with similar orthodox leanings - that Coltrane, Rollins, etc., etc. are not making authentic "ballads". Morph, my friend, morph - it is, from my experience, at least, a mutable, non-static universe of which the contemporary spirit and practice of haiku is inextricably involved.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

341. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku Death Match
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> As I understand it, Japanese is not accented the way English or Latin is.
> Thus each "syllable" of a multisyllable word is generally pronounced evenly
> in > Japanese. The Japanese word for a species of cuckoo, hototogisu, has each > syllable pronounced evenly, which is part of its music. As a more common > example, the word for cherry blossom, sakura, has each of its syllables at > about > the same pitch and length. It's not sa-KU-ra. Nor is it SA-ku-ra (like
> the > beginning of "saccharine"). And of course it's also not "sa-ku-RA." On the > other hand, some Japanese people drop or greatly minimize the last syllable
> in > some words when speaking (even though they would still count that sound
in > haiku). Thus I've often heard a Japanese person speak of "haik" (with an > extremely subtle "u" after the "k") when they mean "haiku" -- or they might > say
> "hototogeese" (though with a very quick "geese") and barely say the "oo"
> sound > that normally follows in "hototogisu." If you ask the question "Desu ka," > it > typically sounds like "Des-ka." Otherwise, though, I think the sounds are > fairly > even. I know other words and phrases are commonly shortened or combined,
> but > that's more of a colloquial compression of language than a variance in > pronunciation.

I took Japanese for three years in highschool, and while i'm far from fluent, I do have some recall of of the issues revolving around this because it's some of the hardest stuff involving correct pronunciation, and my drill instructor japanese teacher ground them into our heads. I think she was more concerned with our pronouncing the language properly than understanding it. Basically, japanese syllable weight is determined by the onji, and accents happen in pitch rather than in syllable weight. So what you get often times is syllables getting shortened or lengthened so that the on fit the timing, because they shorten vowels that we normally hear as double vowels, because English is stress-timed and so syllable length isn't something that we contemplate a lot it just sort of happens by convention. Not so in japanese, the on are all the same length, so syllables will vary in length depending on how many on are in it. So for example in "ikimasho" (japanese for "let us go"), there are four syllables i-ki-ma-sho, but there are five on i-ki-ma-shy-o, all of which get the same amount of time. similarly with desu and the irregular verb form masu, the [u] vowel is generally a long vowel in English, whereas with japanese all vowels have long and short versions and so their terminal u's sound really chopped to western ears because they have to be distinguished from a longer vowel and a different meaning (i don't know if desoo or masoo are other words or if it would just sound like nonsense to a native speaker.) Once i got used to listening to it, it became apparent that the shortening of "su" that i thought i was hearing, while it doesn't happen, it wasn't nearly as pronounced as i thought it was because it was very similar to the su that one finds in the beginning of a word like "sushi" as it is pronounced in japanese (a slight but noticable difference from its English Cognate), or the shortened version in "sukoshi" (a small quantity, from which the English Scosh is derived). the [u] is always still there, but i think as English speakers what happens is that we mutate the foreign sounding vowels that we don't generally use into to consonant codas and our ears then turn something like "sukoshi" or "sukiyaki" into "scoshii" or "skyaki." Most japanese speakers can hear the difference and the dropped syllables, but English speakers have to learn to listen for it. I even vaguely remember my teacher saying that one of the signs of an american accent when speaking japanese is either dropping vowels or making vowels too long. so an american might render "kore wa usagi deshitaka" (was that a rabbit) as "Cord wa oozagy deshtaka" writing phonetically. The difference of course beign that where we are listening for syllables, the japanese are listening for mora, or onji, and the syllable is a slightly larger unit than a mora.

I'm surprised i remember that many words, but i'm starting to think maybe i should go take a night class in japanese since so much of the fundamentals still seem to be there.

↑ Index

342. Eireene Nealand

Tarpaulin Sky Celebrates OBERIU--an anthology of Russian Absurdism

Sat 10 Feb 2007

Please join us!

Tarpaulin Sky celebrates OBERIU: a bilingual translation reading along with new Russian and émigré writing

Eugene Ostashevsky
Genya Turovskaya
Ilya Bernstein
Eireene Nealand

Saturday February 24th 1:30-3:30pm
@ The Bowery Poetry Club $3
308 Bowery, New York, NY 10012

ABOUT OBERIU

It was a movement so artfully anarchic, and so quickly suppressed, that readers only began to discover its strange and singular brilliance three decades after it was extinguished-and then only in samizdat and emigre publications. Some called it the last of the Russian avant-garde, and others called it the first (and last) instance of Absurdism in Russia; however difficult to classify, it was OBERIU (from an acronym standing for The Union of Real Art), and the pleasures of its poetry and prose are, with this volume, at long last fully open to English-speaking readers.

"OBERIU, sometimes called Russia's last avant-garde, is one of the most intriguing--and little known--movements of the years before World War II. The absurdist poets at its center--Alexander Vvedensky, Daniil Kharms, and Nikolai Zabolotsky--belonged to the first generation of writers to come of age after the October Revolution and hence stand apart from their Futurist predecessors. Less interested in coining neologisms than in destroying the protocols of semantic coherence and linguistic realism, these poets have produced a series of inventive, free-wheeling, and often hilarious poetic texts in a variety of forms and genres.This anthology, the first large-scale English translation of OBERIU poetry, has been superbly edited and translated by the Russo-American poet Eugene Ostashevsky and his colleagues. In avant-garde annals, this is a milestone." --Marjorie Perloff

"The OBERIU writers are a revelation, an aspect of Russian modernism in the early Soviet period that has been largely invisible to readers in English, and these translations are brilliant, as nervy and funny and demotic as if the work were written in an inspired English in the first place." –Robert Hass

"OBERIU is as relevant today as ever." --Book Forum

***
ABOUT THE READERS:

Eugene Ostashevsky Born in St. Petersburg, Russia but raised in New York City, Eugene Ostashevsky is a poet, scholar and reckless metaphysician. A book of his poetry, The Off-Centaur, was published by Germ Folios, and his volume The Compleat Unraveller will be published in 2005 by Ugly Duckling Press. He is editor and co-translator of the forthcoming anthology, OBERIU and the Chinars: Russian Absurdism, 1927-1941. Ostashevsky won the 2003 Wytter Bynner Poetry Translation Fellowship for his translations from Russian. He teaches at NYU.

Genya Turovskaya Genya Turovskaya is an American poet. She was born in Kiev, Ukraine in 1973 and grew up in New York City. Her original poetry and translations from Russian have appeared in Chicago Review, Conjunctions, 6x6, Aufgabe, Poets and Poems, Octopus, and other publications. She lives in Brooklyn where she edits the Eastern European Poets Series at Ugly Duckling Presse.

Ilya Bernstein Ilya Bernstein, born in Moscow, is an émigré poet and translator, living in the nether-reaches of northern Manhattan. He is the translator of books by Italian architectural theorist Remo Guidieri, including Argonautics (Cooper Union, 1997), and has also translated poetry and children's stories by Daniil Kharms. Attention and Man is his first book of poems. It is also the first book in the new Eastern European Poets Series from Ugly Duckling Presse. Letterpressed cover.

Eireene Nealand Eireene Nealand translates contemporary postmodernist poetry and writes about language and postmodernism in conjunciton with her Ph.d. work in Literature at UC Santa Cruz. She has degrees in Political Theory from UC Berkeley and UCLA. Her fiction has been published in Sidebrow, Fourteen Hills, Thin Air, New Standards, and Transfer and Tight magazines among other places. She won the Ivan Klima Fellowship in Fiction in 2004 and currently edits fiction for Tarpaulin Sky.

↑ Index

343. Ruth Lepson

Re: haiku

Sat 10 Feb 2007

---

haiku by ros chast:

two volvos collide
in stop & shop parking lot no one is injured

On 2/10/07 6:47 PM, "Jason Quackenbush" <[redacted]> wrote:

> I love it, some macedonia for the list:
>
> "Idyll Thoughts"
>
> I don't wrote haiku.
> to count syllables is fun.

Fucked your mom last night.

"Talk About Stuff"

Blah blah he said blah
blah natter guffaw she said
back. I got off the bus.

both by me. Here's a favorite macedonia by Jack McCarthy:

"The Super Polydent commercial I wish that Wilfred Brimley would do:"

There's nothing worse
when yer down on the muffin than
a loose upper palate.

I'm off now to add a "macedonia" entry to the wikipedia list of poetic forms.

Semi-seriously though, my roommate my first year at berklee was a greek named athanasios. Across the hall from us lived a fellow who claimed he was from macedonia, but who thanos insisted was a Skopian and that the republic of macedonia was a lie cooked up by Tito to legitimize bulgarian holdings in historically greek territory. it struck me at the time that the whole thing was a little bit silly, and that the worry about the skopian land grab had very little to do with whether the slavs in the southeast of the former yugoslavia called themselves macedonians or skopians or bulgarians or whatever. i think, as such, the analogy to haiku is highly apropos.

Barry Schwabsky wrote:
I think Joe's point is well taken. While this discussion has been very instructive in many ways, we should not forget that this is list whose topic is innovative poetics. I'm sure there are other lists available for the promulgation of traditionalist poetics, and some of the same people might even be on both lists, since there is no reason not to be interested in both. But to the extent that we are not, at some point we just have to respectfully agree to disagree, letting the discussions of traditionalist poetics continue in whatever space is devoted to that and the discussions of innovative poetics, whatever that turns out to be, move forward in this one.

As for myself, I think that a good deal of that heat that's been generated here hasto do with the "ownership" of the name "haiku." Although it would be useful to me to have recourse to this name at certain times, it doesn't really mean as much to me as it obviously does to some others, and therefore I'd just as soon cede it to them. I don't know why, but somehow this all reminds me of the dispute between Greece and one of the former Yugoslav republics over the name "Macedonia." United Nations intervention has still not resolved this issue. But when I lived in Italy, "macedonia" (small m) was > the word for "fruit salad"--an association with very positive connotations as far as I'm concerned. So from now on I am going to avoid the use of the h-word to refer to any poem using a 5-7-5 structure or any other similar short poem whatsoever, except where this is unavoidable, such as when citing something that someone else said. From now on, I promise to refer to all such poems as

>
> "macedonia."
>
> This is, after all, a list devoted to discussing "those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible." (I quote from the Poetics List Welcome Message.)

↑ Index

344. Jesse Crockett
easy on the ego
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Somewhere amidst the anna nicole smith \ haiku smackdown was lost our invitation to read the latest instance of listenlight <http://listenlight.net>, the most unlikely poetry journal in the universe, presently featuring ---

Christine Hamm, Caleb Puckett, Kimberly Truitt, Lisa Jarnot, Ridley Sindios, C A Conrad, Amanda Chiado, Suchoon Mo, Noah Eli Gordon, Sarah Veglahn, Joshua Marie Wilkinson ---

I'd really love its release date proximity page rush acclivity be kept intact.

Best regards,
Jesse Crockett, editor

↑ Index

345. Larissa Shmailo
Andy Warhol: In His Wake Opening Reception and Reading 2/22
Sat 10 Feb 2007

Andy Warhol: In His Wake
Opening reception: Thursday, February 22, 2007, 6-10PM

On the twentieth anniversary of Warhol's death, The Carrozini von Buhler Gallery presents Andy Warhol: In His Wake, a group exhibition of poetry and art works by artists from Warhol's Factory including original members Ultra Violet, Taylor Mead, Billy Name, and Ivy Nicholson. Also featured will be Anton Perich and Steve Joester, two artists who documented Warhol, as well as seven artists who have been influenced by him including Pamela Martin, William Tisdale, Amy Cohen Banker, Cynthia von Buhler, Molly Weingart, and Gary Azon.

Andy Warhol: In His Wake will feature poetry, paintings, sculptures, projections, and photography. The Carrozini von Buhler Gallery will be transformed to look like Warhol's Silver Factory with glittering silver walls, disco balls, silver pillow balloons, and aluminum foil drapes.

Five Minutes of Fame Reading 6-7:30 PM with Dorothy F. August, Star Black, Patricia Carragon, Greg Fuchs, Ron Kolm, Bill Kushner, Taylor Mead, Thad Rutkowski, Jackie Sheeler, Larissa Shmailo, Hal Sirowitz, and Carol Wierzbicki.

The Carrozzini von Buhler Gallery
407 West 13t Street (between 9th Avenue & Washington Street)
[redacted]
Subway: A, C, E & L to 14th Street at 8th Avenue.
Free and open to the public.

Larissa Shmailo_ [redacted]_ (mailto:[redacted])
http://www.myspace.com/larissaworld (http://www.myspace.com/larissaworld) http//:www.cdbaby.com/cd/shmailo http//:larissashmailo.blogspot.com http://www.bigbridge.org/deathlshmailo.htm

↑ Index

346. clifford
Re: haiku mister lou is
Sat 10 Feb 2007

I like this one Tom _ acka Wordman

> many words for little poems
> many words for little > poems are little words
>
>

↑ Index

347. Paul Nelson
Haiku
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Is that a real haiku
I mean a Japanese haiku or a Sears haiku.

--
Paul E. Nelson
Global Voices Radio
http://www.AmericanSetnces.com
http://www.globalvoicesradio.org
www.splab.org
888.735.MEAT

↑ Index

348. Peter Ciccariello thought, finding form, rising
Sun 11 Feb 2007

---

thought, finding form, rising <http://www.cgi7.com/peterimages/thought.htm>

-- Peter Ciccariello
http://invisiblenotes.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

349. Laura Winton
Re: Anna Nicole Smith
Sun 11 Feb 2007

As far as my comments goes about perpetuating something, it wasn't really about sexuality or femininity. It was more the idea that for me to find out more about her life at this point would be to perpetuate -- I just lost the perfect phrase I had -- this gaze into her life, this public voyeurism that reality tv and people "famous for being famous" has encouraged.

I don't buy that Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf is famous for being famous. There was something in the first place that led people to know about the piece. A film, a play, etc. I realize it is a phrase that gets bandied about a lot, but I think that says something about the condition of things. I had a professor once who said things become clichés for a reason.

That said, I'm still sorry for her tragedies.

-----Original Message-----
From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, February 10, 2007 12:03 AM
Subject: Re: Anna Nicole Smith

Finally, I really don't know what she's perpetuating (or was used to perpetuate); there are many other models for exaggerated sexuality for example.

- Alan

On Fri, 9 Feb 2007, Laura Winton wrote:

> I was no fan of Anna Nicole Smith. I could never really figure out what she > was famous for and saw her as more of the trend of people who are famous > for being famous (not unlike Paris Hilton). But it seems that of late she > had turned very quickly into something of a tragic figure and her death
has > made me rethink maybe how long she might have been a tragic figure without
> many people really knowing or recognizing it. So I do feel this sadness > about it without knowing really why and at the same time I feel that to find > out somehow perpetuates something about her and about our culture that I'm > not sure I want to participate in further.
>
> Does that make any sense at all???
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Alan Sondheim [mailto:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, February 09, 2007 3:36 PM
> Subject: Anna Nicole Smith
>
> She always fascinated me. Like Michael Jackson she broke a lot of taboos, > she couldn't be placed. Her reality show was time slowed, almost milky.
> Howard K. Stern talked Ivy League, she murmured. Her son was there. I > never knew what I was watching. I was constantly thrown off, in a way that > her son's death was thrown off, and her death, now, is thrown off.
>
> She couldn't be placed: just as soon as you had it figured out, it > transformed. I did guess that she and Howard were lovers; it was an odd > subtext to the show. The photographs were sexy but meta-sexed; they didn't > register properly, there was always something else going on. On another > list people rave Anita Berber; there's a relationship.

>
> So poetics? Yes because this doesn't fit, it fractures, it breaks the > discourse of the Law, however you want to define it. It's not only > semantics, it's syntax that's broken down, just as reporters couldn't get
> "hold" of Michael Jackson.
>
> Then again, her life and death say something about our notions of beauty,
> a kind of inconceivable sexuality associated with it, the body can't keep > up. What's incarnate falls apart; it's always already fallen apart.
>
> Finally, there are very real class (economic, geographic, educational) > issues here; like Tonya Harding, she couldn't keep up (I remember TH's > mother saying she couldn't raise an ice princess), or she kept up, on > her own track, in her own way, which is something few of us get to do.
>
> This really was upsetting.
>
> - Alan
>
>
==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > dvds, etc.
==========
>
>
==========
Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc.
==========

↑ Index

350. Charlie Rossiter
haiku--what are we here for
Sun 11 Feb 2007

It warms my heart that the haiku discussion has prompted thought about what we're here for.

I don't care what the rules say, I'm here to get whatever I can to write better poems of any type.

And by the way, if anyone out there cares to get diverted for a bit I think the virelay is way under-appreciated and under-noticed.

Charlie

--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
Charlie said that.
www.poetrypoetry.com
where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them

www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)

www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues

www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

351. Susan Webster Schultz
Language as Responsibility: new TINFISH chapbook
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Dear friends--

Tinfish Press is proud to announce the sewing, stamping, and publication of the following;

L A N G U A G E _ A S _ R E S P O N S I B I L I T Y
by Leonard Schwartz â€¢ 2006 â€¢ $12
Design by Lian Litvin

This hand-sewn chapbook contains three parts: 1) in which the Israel poet Aharon Shabtai offers witness. 2) in which a publishing vision emerges from the rich sources mingling in Jerusalem. 3) a verse essay on poetic form in America by Leonard Schwartz that argues responsibility is the ability to respond.

Language as Responsibility is something of a departure for Tinfish Press, as its context is the Middle East, not the Pacific. But its author, who now lives in Washington State, argues forcefully for a poetics of publishing that crosses boundaries of language and difference (in this instance Arabic and Hebrew, Palestine and Israel). Such crossings fit Tinfishâ€™s philosophy, hence this beautiful chapbook.

See http://tinfishpress.com/chapbooks.html

for more details and to order copies. Tinfish books are also available through Small Press Distrubution, http://spdbooks.org

Aloha, Susan

Susan M. Schultz
Tinfish Press

↑ Index

352. Anny Ballardini
Re: haiku mister lou is
Sun 11 Feb 2007

I also noticed, thanks Clifford for bringing it back.

On 2/11/07, clifford <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> I like this one Tom _ acka Wordman
> ----------
>
> > many words for little poems
> > many words for little > > poems are little words
> >
> >
> ----------
>

↑ Index

353. Dan Wilcox
Third Thursday Open Mic in Albany, NY
Sun 11 Feb 2007

the Poetry Motel Foundation
presents

Third Thursday Open Mic for Poets

now at
the Social Justice Center
33 Central Ave., Albany, NY

Thursday, February 15, 2007
7:00 sign up; 7:30 start

Featured Poet: John Raymond who says he is “a local rapscallion who is coming out of seclusion to take part in the Open Mic scene. He enjoys music, backpacking, and smoked meats.”

Sheet Music

The pushers of the rattling shopping carts on the five a.m. street sift through the discarded cores of last night's fruit and the crows crow their graveled songs and her hair
one strand on the bed curls like a G clef shivering with the turning of a small creaking fan

$3.00 donation.
Your host since 1997: Dan Wilcox.

↑ Index

354. Jeffrey Side CALLING ALL DUSIE POETS
Sun 11 Feb 2007

I'm forwarding this invitation from Susana Gardner to join the dusi/e-chap kollektiv for the second annual chap making/swapping collective with several dozen other poets.

The kollektiv is coming together once again and if you have had your work in Dusie or it is forthcoming (this includes all aspects of Dusie) she says consider yourself invited. Write to her at [redacted] to be signed up for the listserv.

She stresses that, unless invited by her, you must have been published in Dusie or have work forthcoming in it.

Some of the things you will be expected to take part in are:

* Being a part of a group-project (group dialogue via post and email) * Getting daily emails via the listserv (and hopefully contributing when possible) * Receiving mail nearly everyday for 2 months from other poets * Publishing your chap the way you imagine it. * Sending your chap out to ALL of the participants within the specified time-frame given doing the sufficient print run (and to send them out to reviewers too)

If you are interested, please reply to Susana and not me as I have nothing to do with this and am merely passing the message on.

You can contact her at: [redacted]

↑ Index

355. Dan Wilcox
Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
DWx

↑ Index

356. Haas Bianchi
Iowa City Reading Ray Bianchi and Chris Glomski
Sun 11 Feb 2007

I realize that many of you will be at AWP the weekend of March 2-3 2007 but if you happen to be in Iowa City I am reading with Chris Glomski at Prairie Lights (See Below) anyone who comes to the reading I will be buying drinks at the Deadwood afterwords

Ray Bianchi

Prairie Lights

Store Events - March 2, 7:00 PM

Time: Friday, March 2, 2007 7:00 PM

Title of Event: CHRIS GLOMSKI & RAY BIANCHI Poets Chris Glomski and Ray Bianchi will read from their work. Chris Glomski, who co-curates the popular Danny's Reading Series in Chicago, will read from Transparencies Lifted from Noon, a book that seeks to radicalize both lyric and narrative alike. Ray Bianchi will read from Circular Descent- a collection of "up-to-date heartbreaking cubistic international songs." -Peter Gizzi

↑ Index

357. Marcus Bales
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Real limericks or fake limericks?

M

On 11 Feb 2007 at 10:34, Dan Wilcox wrote:

> Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
> Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
> DWx
>
> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.35/680 - Release Date: 2/10/2007 9:15 PM

↑ Index

358. Barry Schwabsky
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Funny you should mention that. I had just been thinking it might be an interesting project to translate some h.... -- excuse, some macedonia into limericks or vice versa. (Or perhaps it would be better to refer to them as senryu than macedonia? I defer to the experts.)

For instance, I found this macedonia by Basho online:

Old pond
Frog jump-in Water sound
and that might turn into a limerick like:

There once was a Japanese frog
Who jumped into a watery bog
he made such a splash
But that watery crash
Went unheard by the Japanese frog.

On the other hand, there is this limerick by Edward Lear:

There was an Old Person of Buda,
Whose conduct grew ruder and ruder;

Till at last, with a hammer,
They silenced his clamour,
By smashing that Person of Buda.

I could imagine that being translated into something like this:

Raucous old person
watch out for a hammer
next time you're smashed

Dan Wilcox <[redacted]> wrote:
Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
DWx

↑ Index

359. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Limericks? Hey, why not? . . .

when swallowing pride, rest assured:
the morsel may not leave you cured;
you may never pas
the concomitant gas,
but you will, in the end, have endured.

~ Daniel Zimmerman

----- Original Message -----
From: "Barry Schwabsky" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Sunday, February 11, 2007 11:21 AM
Subject: Re: Haiku You

> Funny you should mention that. I had just been thinking it might be an interesting project to translate some h.... -- excuse, some macedonia into limericks or vice versa. (Or perhaps it would be better to refer to them as senryu than macedonia? I defer to the experts.)
>
> For instance, I found this macedonia by Basho online:
>
> Old pond
> Frog jump-in > Water sound
> and that might turn into a limerick like:

> There once was a Japanese frog
> Who jumped into a watery bog
> he made such a splash
> But that watery crash
> Went unheard by the Japanese frog.
>
> On the other hand, there is this limerick by Edward Lear:
>
> There was an Old Person of Buda,
> Whose conduct grew ruder and ruder;
> Till at last, with a hammer,
> They silenced his clamour,
> By smashing that Person of Buda.
>
> I could imagine that being translated into something like this:
>
> Raucous old person
> watch out for a hammer
> next time you're smashed
>
> Dan Wilcox <[redacted]> wrote:
> Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
> Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
> DWx

↑ Index

360. Ruth Lepson
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

---

there once was a poetry list serv its image it tried to conserve but the haiku came round and blew them out of town
now the list serv is dissed for its nerve

On 2/11/07 11:16 AM, "Marcus Bales" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Real limericks or fake limericks?
>
> M
>
> On 11 Feb 2007 at 10:34, Dan Wilcox wrote:

> Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
> Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
> DWx
>
> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.35/680 - Release Date: 2/10/2007 9:15 PM

↑ Index

361. Factory School

Meet the Press (PS 7 and 8)

Sun 11 Feb 2007

---

public statement: "A Need for Creed - HT's Apocalyptic Present to the world"

"Poetry can extend the document," so what can a poetry book series document? And to what extent?

In its desire to present a picture of the conflict between good and evil, Heretical Texts deliberately creates, if not a drama, at least a set of easily visualizable scenes and strongly-drawn characters that because of their imaginative power remain fixed in the reader’s mind.

*

public statement: "The University Research Lab and the Institutional Self-Imagination"

At the outbreak of the "War For Iraq," a group of professors, students, activists, and "community members" dropped out of school to found a university. Giving up on the project to work as anarcho-consultants in Gotham City, they left behind only a trail of notebooks, blogs, photographs, and research studios devoted to historical antecedents. What were they thinking?

*

Meet the Press: An Evening With Factory School Design Team
Poetry Project at St. Marks Church
Monday, 8:00 pm

http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

↑ Index

362. heidi arnold
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

---

mi mi mi said the poet of noeate he he he said the list serve of verve it may over rhyme from such overtime
but who cares -- and that's the last word

On 2/11/07, Dan Wilcox <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
> Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
> DWx
>

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

363. cris cheek
TNWK Bulletin 1
Sun 11 Feb 2007

TNWK

www.tnwk.net
(new conversation pieces)

- performing at OPENPORT (Chicago) sound & language festival:

Links Hall on Friday February 16th with:
Donna Rutherford (UK)

Talan Memmott (US)

TNWK (UK)

and Saturday February 17th with:

Goat Island (US)

Dana Vinger & Robyn Okrant (US)

TNWK (UK)

Wilton Azevedo (BR)

also:

PANEL DISCUSSION

Tyne Dogger, Thames, Fitzroy: westerly variable

@ Chicago Cultural Center
Saturday, February 17, 2PM - 3:30PM, Free

Fiona Wright

Donna Rutherford
TNWK

AND

BASE SPACE EXHIBIT

Sheet of Paper

Live Installation February 19–21. Exhibit open for viewing February 22 and 24 in Columbus BLDG of The School of the Art Institute of Chicago, 280 S. Columbus Drive, Free

for more information:

http://www.openportchicago.com/

↑ Index

364. reJennifer Bartlett
Issue 5 of Saint Elizabeth Street
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Issue #5 of Saint Elizabeth Street has arrived @
www.saintelizabethstreet.org with interviews by Adam Clay, Jen Benka, Andrea Baker, Kate Greenstreet, and Bruce Covey.

Best,

Jennifer

_____ From predictions to trailers, check out the MSN Entertainment Guide to the Academy Awards® http://movies.msn.com/movies/oscars2007/?icid=ncoscartagline1

↑ Index

365. Barry Schwabsky
Re: Issue 5 of Saint Elizabeth Street
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Nice. I appreciate the clarity of focus: present just a few things, in such a way that each one can be savored. The opposite of journals that present vast amounts of material by great numbers of people so that it becomes very difficult for anything in particular to stand out. Here, with just one poem and one interview per poet, I already feel like I've been properly "introduced" to each one. A dinner party, not a disco. Thank you!

reJennifer Bartlett <[redacted]> wrote: Issue #5 of Saint Elizabeth Street has arrived @
www.saintelizabethstreet.org with interviews by Adam Clay, Jen Benka, Andrea Baker, Kate Greenstreet, and Bruce Covey.

Best,

Jennifer

_____ From predictions to trailers, check out the MSN Entertainment Guide to the Academy Awards® http://movies.msn.com/movies/oscars2007/?icid=ncoscartagline1

↑ Index

366. Eric
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

> but who cares -- and that's the last word

There once was a list of poetics
abuzz with political frenetics,
then haiku came to town
and calmed them all down
and now they discuss ... poetics.

↑ Index

367. Halvard Johnson
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Last words are important. Here I was hoping for, not "poetics," but maybe a last word like . . . oh, "diuretics."

Hal

On Feb 11, 2007, at 1:09 PM, Eric wrote:

> but who cares -- and that's the last word
>
> There once was a list of poetics
> abuzz with political frenetics,
> then haiku came to town
> and calmed them all down
> and now they discuss ... poetics.

↑ Index

368. Joe Amato
From Kent Johnson re haiku
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Fwding this post from Kent:

At 2:16 PM -0600 2/11/07, Kent Johnson wrote:
>Anyway, I was clicking around in this haiku discussion at Poetics, >seeing the exchange, including yours, on "rules," syllable count, >etc. Maybe I missed mention of this, not having read through all of >the posts, but has no one pointed out that there's been a vibrant >tradition of "rule-breaking" haiku in Japan since the 1910s, with >Ogiwara Seisensui and the Soun (Layered Clouds) group, which >included great and beloved "free-haiku" poets like Taneda Santoka >and Ozaki Hosai?
>
>Just wondering, as there is wonderful work in this tradition-- and >given what seems to be a growing interest in the "short poem" within >innovative scene, this is a treasure trove. Plenty of stuff in >translation of Santoka and Hosai. A great book, too, is Makoto >Ueda's Modern Japanese Haiku.
>

Joe

↑ Index

369. Eric
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

> Last words are important. Here I was > hoping for, not "poetics," but maybe
> a last word like . . . oh, "diuretics."

Thanks, Hal! I was thinking of kinetics then decided to go with the anticlimactic poetics, emphasizing its self-evident nature with the ellipsis. But maybe you're right ...

↑ Index

370. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: From Kent Johnson re haiku

Sun 11 Feb 2007

I'll second that.
Santoka and Hosai are my two favorite haiku poets.
have their fotos on the wall here

> From: Joe Amato <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: From Kent Johnson re haiku
> Date: Sun, 11 Feb 2007 14:33:29 -0600
>
> Fwding this post from Kent:
>
> At 2:16 PM -0600 2/11/07, Kent Johnson wrote:
> Anyway, I was clicking around in this haiku discussion at Poetics, seeing the exchange, including yours, on "rules," syllable count, etc. Maybe I missed mention of this, not having read through all of the posts, but has no one pointed out that there's been a vibrant tradition of "rule-breaking" haiku in Japan since the 1910s, with Ogiwara Seisensui and the Soun (Layered Clouds) group, which included great and beloved "free-haiku" poets like Taneda Santoka and Ozaki Hosai?
>
> Just wondering, as there is wonderful work in this tradition-- and given what seems to be a growing interest in the "short poem" within innovative scene, this is a treasure trove. Plenty of stuff in translation of Santoka and Hosai. A great book, too, is Makoto Ueda's Modern Japanese Haiku.
>
> Joe

_____ From predictions to trailers, check out the MSN Entertainment Guide to the Academy Awards® http://movies.msn.com/movies/oscars2007/?icid=ncoscartagline1

↑ Index

371. Tracey Gagne
Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Puh-lease!

I find the term "hoohaa" much more offensive.

On Feb 9, 2007, at 12:52 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:

> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any national news source....)
>
> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
>
> By Summer Minor
>
> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
>
> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.
>
> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
>
> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."
>
> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
>
> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.

↑ Index

372. Ron Starr
Reading at Open Books, Seattle, Tuesday, 2/13
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Tuesday, 2/13, at 7:30 at Open Books, 2414 N. 45th St. Seattle, WA 98103.

Please feel free to pass this on if you know of interested folks.

Here's the description of the reading from the store's calendar:

REBECCA LOUDON & RON STARR // Tuesday, February 13, at 7:30 PM We are happy to host two poets with books recently published by Edmonds-based Ravenna Press. Ron Starr's inventive book, _A Map by a Dim Lamp_ ($12.95), flows from the belief held by Oulipo, the French experimental writing group, that form is freeing, and that new forms must constantly be created. Mr. Starr, in "Luther's Narrow Road," replaces some of the words in Basho's classic haiku with those from a Martin Luther essay, resulting in poems such as, "An offense / has settled on a bare Christ -- / autumn evening." Sharp intelligence, humor, close attention to the details of rhythm and sense, and a fascination with religious texts allow his writing to spark on various levels, including the baroque/modern oddness of its structures. Another example: one section of his "Creation Myths of the Latter Urbanites" starts, "In the beginning green grass created happiness and envy. The expressways were without Fords and Volvos, and dusk was upon the fences of the domiciles...."

Radish King ($13.95) is Rebecca Loudon's deliciously dark and darkly hilarious collection. Things domestic go seriously wrong -- "She's ready to go it alone, more than ready / having tired of and tidied her family, / having sewed her daughter, her son, into waterproof coats." The poems are dreamily menacing, permeated with a sort of courtship of threat and sex. "I want to hurt you in a Rock Hudson Doris Day kind of way." And where else will you find a poem like "Everyone's Favorite Holiday Suicide: A Letter in which Violet Bick Addresses George Bailey for the Last Time," ending (we're sorry to give it away, but we're compelled), "I hope more than anything you just have the courage to jump." She is also the author of the fever-dreamish book _Navigate, Amelia Earhart's Letters Home_, mentioned in our December 2006 newsletter. This promises to be a quirky and dynamic evening.

↑ Index

373. Alison Croggon
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:

There was a young man of Japan
Whose poetry never would scan.
When asked why 'twas so
He replied, "Yes, I know,
But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly can."

--
Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

374. tlrelf
Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Me, too. Furthermore, changing the name for the reasons outlined, just feeds into what this play is intended to thwart, don't you think?

Ter

> Puh-lease!
>
> I find the term "hoohaa" much more offensive.
>
> On Feb 9, 2007, at 12:52 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
>
> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any national news source....)
>
> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
>
> By Summer Minor
>
> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
>
> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.
>
> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
>
> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use > child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."

>
> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
>
> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.

↑ Index

375. Andrew Taylor
CFP: "Stanley Cavell and Literary Criticism" - conference May 2008
Sun 11 Feb 2007

CFP: 'Stanley Cavell and Literary Criticism', conference, May 9-11 2008, Edinburgh University.

Stanley Cavell's work has been influential for the theory and practice of literary criticism for many years. From his consideration of Beckett and Shakespeare in his first book, Must We Mean What We Say? (1969) to the recent collection of writing on Emerson, Emerson's Transcendental Etudes (2003), Cavell's philosophical concerns have consistently been grounded in the problems and challenges offered by literary texts. This conference, the first to consider explicitly the connection between philosophical practice and literary art in Cavell, will include major scholars from both sides of the Atlantic. Professor Cavell has agreed to participate in the event.

An edited volume of specially commissioned essays arising out of papers given at the conference is also planned.

Possible topics for consideration include: literary ethics; speech act theory; literary and philosophical romanticism; the idea of America; Shakespeare; modernism and modernity.

Abstracts of no more than 500 words should be sent to [redacted]. The deadline for submissions is May 1, 2007.

James Loxley, Lee Spinks, Andrew Taylor (English Literature, University of Edinburgh)

↑ Index

376. Mark Weiss
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

A good one.

And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of filth, edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with scholarly apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's still available in reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap copies available at AbeBooks. Should be on every bookshelf.

Mark

At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:
>
>There was a young man of Japan
>Whose poetry never would scan.
>When asked why 'twas so
>He replied, "Yes, I know,
>But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly can."
>
>--
>Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
>Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
>Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

377. Dan Coffey
Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Yeah -- too bad the playwright couldn't make some short-notice additions to the script, to play up the ludicrousness of the name change.

Hoohaa reminds me of Hee Haw, and now I have this image of people popping out of the cornfield. Thanks, Atlantic Beach!

On 2/11/07, tlrelf <[redacted]> wrote:
> Me, too. Furthermore, changing the name for the reasons outlined, just feeds > into what this play is intended to thwart, don't you think?
>
> Ter

>
> > Puh-lease!
> >
> > I find the term "hoohaa" much more offensive.
> >
> >
> > On Feb 9, 2007, at 12:52 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
> >
> >> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any > >> national news source....)
> >>
> >> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
> >>
> >> By Summer Minor
> >>
> >> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/
> >> vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
> >>
> >> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir > >> when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the
> >> "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.
> >>
> >> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and > >> was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
> >>
> >> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint > >> about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use > >> child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."
> >>
> >> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset > >> over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should > >> already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, > >> clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
> >>
> >> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler > >> which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play > >> is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, > >> be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, > >> birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a > >> physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the > >> piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate > >> embodiment of individuality.

> >>
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

378. George Bowering
Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
Sun 11 Feb 2007

On 11-Feb-07, at 3:15 PM, Tracey Gagne wrote:

> Puh-lease!
>
> I find the term "hoohaa" much more offensive.

How good of you.

>
>
> On Feb 9, 2007, at 12:52 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
>
>> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make any >> national news source....)
>>
>> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name
>>
>> By Summer Minor
>>
>> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/
>> vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
>>
>> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir
>> when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the >> "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's >> name.
>>
>> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and >> was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
>>
>> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint >> about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use >> child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."

>>
>> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are >> upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a >> sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, >> scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
>>
>> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler >> which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The >> play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the >> vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, >> masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or >> simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme >> throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, >> and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.
>>
>
>
George Bowering, M.A.
Acclaimed for his modesty.

↑ Index

379. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Vagina Monologues Gets New Name

Sun 11 Feb 2007

Yes, & I also like the COOCHIE SNORCHER vagina monologue.....

On Feb 11, 2007, at 3:53 PM, tlrelf wrote:

> Me, too. Furthermore, changing the name for the reasons outlined,
> just feeds into what this play is intended to thwart, don't you think?
>
> Ter
>
> Puh-lease!
>
> I find the term "hoohaa" much more offensive.
>
> On Feb 9, 2007, at 12:52 PM, mIEKAL aND wrote:
>
> (censorship has become so commonplace that this didn't even make > any national news source....)
>
> Vagina Monologues Gets New Name

> By Summer Minor
>
> http://www.associatedcontent.com/article/145495/vagina_monologues_gets_new_name.html
>
> The Atlantic Theaters marquis in Atlantic Beach Florida caused a stir when they changed the advertisement for the Vagina Monologues to the "Hoohaa" Monologues after receiving a complaint about the play's name.
>
> A driver complained to the theater, saying that she saw the title and was upset that her niece had also seen the title.
>
> Bryce Pfanenstiel, of the Atlantic Theater, said "We got a complaint about this play The Vagina Monologues. We decided we would just use child slang for it. That's how we decided on Hoohah Monologues."
>
> Though the theater says they trying not to offend anyone, some are upset over the change. "A child who is old enough to read it on a sign should already know what 'vagina' is, as well as vulva, penis, scrotum, clitoris," some are saying about the sign change.
>
> The Vagina Monologues is an award winning play written by Eve Ensler which premiered at the off-Broadway Westside Theatre in 1996. The play is a series of monologues preformed by women that relate to the vagina, be it through sex, love, rape, menstruation, mutilation, masturbation, birth, orgasm, the variety of names for the vagina, or simply as a physical aspect of the female body. A recurring theme throughout the piece is the vagina as a tool of female empowerment, and the ultimate embodiment of individuality.

↑ Index

380. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

I love the limerick form. I write in it all the time.

Dan Wilcox wrote:
> Alright, enough idiotic exchanges about haiku.
> Anyone want to start bashing limericks?
> DWx

↑ Index

381. Jesse Crockett
Listenlight
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Guillermo and I wish to thank all those who make Listenlight a "competitive" poetry journal, a metric we're taking on merit of receiveing close to ten thousand page views last month, & is well on its way to achieving the same statistic for this month ---- thanks to all who've visited, linked, commented, & especially to all who've sent their work in for review. Without you, we're nothing. Tee hee :-)

Cheers !

Jesse Crockett & Guillermo Parra

@

http://listenlight.net

↑ Index

382. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

The idea that a limerick must be lewd is a common amateur limerick writers mistake, similarly, the need for five lines. Both of these targets are not nearly as important as the necessity of a slow moving to fast rhyme and the requisite of novelty in the tail of the poem. Aiming at bawdiness and a rigid adherence to the three stress three stress two stress two stress three stress structure is the sign of an unsophisticated limerick writer, and such people cannot be said to truly be writing limericks.

Mark Weiss wrote:
> A good one.
>
> And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are > supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of filth, > edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with scholarly > apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's still available in > reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap copies available at AbeBooks.
> Should be on every bookshelf.
>
> Mark
>
> At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>

>> Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:
>>
>> There was a young man of Japan
>> Whose poetry never would scan.
>> When asked why 'twas so
>> He replied, "Yes, I know,
>> But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly >> can."
>>
>> --
>> Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
>> Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
>> Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

383. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Thanks, Jason.
We've certainly 'murdered to dissect' the haiku sufficiently.
Let's hope we don't proctologize the limerick as well.

~ Dan

----- Original Message -----
From: "Jason Quackenbush" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Sunday, February 11, 2007 10:15 PM
Subject: Re: Haiku You

> The idea that a limerick must be lewd is a common amateur limerick writers mistake, similarly, the need for five lines. Both of these targets are not nearly as important as the necessity of a slow moving to fast rhyme and the requisite of novelty in the tail of the poem. Aiming at bawdiness and a rigid adherence to the three stress three stress two stress two stress three stress structure is the sign of an unsophisticated limerick writer, and such people cannot be said to truly be writing limericks.
>
> Mark Weiss wrote:
> A good one.
>
> And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of filth, edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with scholarly apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's still available in > reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap copies available at AbeBooks. Should be on every bookshelf.

>
> Mark
>
> At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>
> Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:
>
> There was a young man of Japan
> Whose poetry never would scan.
> When asked why 'twas so
> He replied, "Yes, I know,
> But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly can."
>
> --
> Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
> Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
> Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

384. Mark Weiss
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

Legman was hardly an amateur, and he didn't write them, he collected them as (largely middleclass) folklore. That was a couple of generations ago. But we all remember what the young maid from Nantucket would do with whatever she found. She probably wasn't very sophisticated either. Me, I don't write limericks. I do, however, strongly recommend the book.

Mark

At 10:15 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>The idea that a limerick must be lewd is a common amateur limerick >writers mistake, similarly, the need for five lines. Both of these >targets are not nearly as important as the necessity of a slow >moving to fast rhyme and the requisite of novelty in the tail of the >poem. Aiming at bawdiness and a rigid adherence to the three stress >three stress two stress two stress three stress structure is the >sign of an unsophisticated limerick writer, and such people cannot >be said to truly be writing limericks.
>

>Mark Weiss wrote:
>>A good one.
>>And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are >>supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of >>filth, edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with >>scholarly apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's >>still available in reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap >>copies available at AbeBooks. Should be on every bookshelf.
>>Mark
>>At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>>
>>>Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:
>>>
>>>There was a young man of Japan
>>>Whose poetry never would scan.
>>>When asked why 'twas so
>>>He replied, "Yes, I know,
>>>But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly can."
>>>
>>>--
>>>Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
>>>Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
>>>Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

385. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku You
Sun 11 Feb 2007

---

oh, i'm sure. I was just (gently, i hope) teasing mr welch about his statements about haiku.

I love limericks and i'm looking forward to getting a copy of that book. It looks like there are a number of decent shape hardcovers on ABE. Also, he did a sequel called "More Limericks" it looks like. Do you have an opinion on that one?

Mark Weiss wrote:
> Legman was hardly an amateur, and he didn't write them, he collected > them as (largely middleclass) folklore. That was a couple of generations > ago. But we all remember what the young maid from Nantucket would do > with whatever she found. She probably wasn't very sophisticated either.
> Me, I don't write limericks. I do, however, strongly recommend the book.

>
> Mark
>
>
> At 10:15 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>
>> The idea that a limerick must be lewd is a common amateur limerick >> writers mistake, similarly, the need for five lines. Both of these >> targets are not nearly as important as the necessity of a slow moving >> to fast rhyme and the requisite of novelty in the tail of the poem.
>> Aiming at bawdiness and a rigid adherence to the three stress three >> stress two stress two stress three stress structure is the sign of an >> unsophisticated limerick writer, and such people cannot be said to >> truly be writing limericks.
>>
>> Mark Weiss wrote:
>>
>>> A good one.
>>> And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are >>> supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of >>> filth, edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with >>> scholarly apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's still >>> available in reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap copies >>> available at AbeBooks. Should be on every bookshelf.
>>> Mark
>>> At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>>>
>>>> Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely >>>> appropriate:
>>>>
>>>> There was a young man of Japan
>>>> Whose poetry never would scan.
>>>> When asked why 'twas so
>>>> He replied, "Yes, I know,
>>>> But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly >>>> can."
>>>>
>>>> --
>>>> Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
>>>> Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
>>>> Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

386. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: haiku
Mon 12 Feb 2007

I don't see how Violi's poem is satirical, or how it could ever be meant that way, at least regarding haiku, but perhaps you can enlighten me? The Padgett piece seems too trivial and even juvenile in its stance to achieve meaningful satire. It may seem clever if you're new to "haiku about haiku" like Padgett's, but HUNDREDS of people have dashed off poems like that. Believe me, they were stale the instant the first one was written. And most beginners go through a stage of writing them.

Re Dan Coffey's comment: "I agree with Vincent that morphing is necessary, but MDW makes a good point, one that shouldn't have to be made. Know the history of the poem, its implications and subtleties, and THEN subvert it." In response, yes, feel free to subvert all you want, but from a position of knowledge, not ignorance. But also remember that nothing has to be subverted at all.

Also, I realize that not everyone is wired to care about haiku, which is fine by me. But I do have a problem with people claiming something as a good haiku when it sometimes isn't a haiku at all. Making such a claim presumes that one has at least a basic understanding of the genre -- and hopefully more knowledge than that.

Michael

In a message dated 09-Feb-07 9:04:30 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 19:36:04 -0500
From: Davey Volner <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku

I trust the writer understands that both Violi's haiku and Padgett's are satirical?

↑ Index

387. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: E. E. Cummings
Mon 12 Feb 2007

It is common for folks to refer to E. E. Cummings with just lowercase letters. However, have you noticed, in at least the last 20+ years, that Liveright (Cummings' publisher) has not treated his name that way? If you've not noticed, please notice now. Despite the popular perception of his name being lowercased, it is not what he wanted (unlike, say, k.d. lang, who has specifically said she wants her name treated in lowercase letters). The lowercase treatment of his name was a designer's choice, and not one that Cummings himself favoured. Norman Friedman, a friend and leading critic of Cummings, and also longtime president of the E. E. Cummings Society, has written two seminal artic les on this subject. You can find them online if you search for "Cummings capitalization":

Not "e. e. cummings" -- _http://www.gvsu.edu/english/cummings/caps.htm_ (http://www.gvsu.edu/english/cummings/caps.htm)
Not "e. e. cummings REVISITED" -- _http://www.gvsu.edu/english/cummings/caps2.html_ (http://www.gvsu.edu/english/cummings/caps2.html)

In the interests of full disclosure, I'm a contributing editor to Spring: The Journal of the E. E. Cummings Society. Just as haiku is misunderstood in English as a "5-7-5-syllable" poem, so too does the capitalization of Cummings' name suffer from popular misperception.

Michael

In a message dated 09-Feb-07 9:04:30 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 15:07:49 -0500
From: Eric <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: RIP Anna Nicole - The end of an era

> Our making fun of dead people isn't poetics.

How about ee cummings making fun of buffalo bill's defunct atony? Maybe it depends on how long the subject is dead? And of course the motives of the fun-maker?

↑ Index

388. Mark Weiss
Re: Haiku You
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Also essential. And there are the three immense volumes of Anatomy of the Dirty Joke. None off them in verse, tho.

At 11:55 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>oh, i'm sure. I was just (gently, i hope) teasing mr welch about his >statements about haiku.
>
>I love limericks and i'm looking forward to getting a copy of that >book. It looks like there are a number of decent shape hardcovers on >ABE. Also, he did a sequel called "More Limericks" it looks like. Do >you have an opinion on that one?

>
>Mark Weiss wrote:
>>Legman was hardly an amateur, and he didn't write them, he >>collected them as (largely middleclass) folklore. That was a couple >>of generations ago. But we all remember what the young maid from >>Nantucket would do with whatever she found. She probably wasn't >>very sophisticated either. Me, I don't write limericks. I do, >>however, strongly recommend the book.
>>Mark
>>
>>At 10:15 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>>
>>>The idea that a limerick must be lewd is a common amateur limerick >>>writers mistake, similarly, the need for five lines. Both of these >>>targets are not nearly as important as the necessity of a slow >>>moving to fast rhyme and the requisite of novelty in the tail of >>>the poem. Aiming at bawdiness and a rigid adherence to the three >>>stress three stress two stress two stress three stress structure >>>is the sign of an unsophisticated limerick writer, and such people >>>cannot be said to truly be writing limericks.
>>>
>>>Mark Weiss wrote:
>>>
>>>>A good one.
>>>>And helps disprove Gershon Legman's contention that limericks are >>>>supposed to be lewd. Legman, probably the greatest folklorist of >>>>filth, edited The Limerick, a collection of 1700 examples, with >>>>scholarly apparatus. It's the locus clasicus, and I think it's >>>>still available in reprint, but there are a lot of very cheap >>>>copies available at AbeBooks. Should be on every bookshelf.
>>>>Mark
>>>>At 06:47 PM 2/11/2007, you wrote:
>>>>
>>>>>Somehow this, one of my favourite limericks, seems strangely appropriate:
>>>>>
>>>>>There was a young man of Japan
>>>>>Whose poetry never would scan.
>>>>>When asked why 'twas so

>>>>>He replied, "Yes, I know,
>>>>>But I always try to get as many words in the last line as I possibly can."
>>>>>
>>>>>--
>>>>>Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
>>>>>Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
>>>>>Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

389. Gabriel Gudding praise be to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Praise be to the watch which is not responsible for rationalism or the mechanistic view of being Whereas I agree that Rene Descartes whose watchmechanism theory of animals held animals were automata was a jovian ignoramus who perpetrated a great and lasting evil on the world by furthering the practice of gratuitous murder of other meat-bearing beings of bone, chiton, and slime. But those who have attacked wristwatches as harmful clams, vigil posts of death, totalizing disk engines, pulsing pucks of Beelzebub, were for the most part British and anglophiles, whereas Emerson and Whitman found the watch fascinating and an instrument of sunlight, as did Benjamin Franklin, whereas those who defiled the watch were Dryden, including Laurence Stern, Wycherley, Ben Jonson, Samuels Butler and Beckett and Coleridge, tho the Samuel Pepys was proud of his watch and delighted in it, for it is a thing to delight with, whereas Allens Ginsberg and Edgar Poe were equal American idiots, the latter being addicts and American, Alan Poe having written a racist screed against the Dutch, clocks and cabbage, and tho he deplored the dissection of animals Alexander Pope and yes the fatuous boneheaded Wm Blake, even him, tho i know most of you like him, and his melodramatic and mostly retarded whinging about “infernal cogs” whereas I find no woman who attacked the watch, being sensible, that these aforementioned people mostly are idiots operating completely as imbeciles, essentially scapegoated a mechanism, small at that, masking a complicitous participation in an increasingly rationalized society by dissing a collection of nanosprings and small teeth of brass arrayed on circles, praising, worse, inordinately the word and that betrayal of thought called Reason while forgoing their fundamental nature, which is called lovingkindness, can bite my ass. Also can Allen Ginsberg bite my ass he was an idiot. Whereas Dante put his single horologe into heaven, and had it run there as a great sun horse, and Rabelais’ dislike stemming mostly from the the relation between clocks and monks and increasingly oppressive use of clocks by the religious hierarchy, with which skepticism I forgive and am down with, for tho prayer like work is a group activity, the clock itself I argue stood as a taunting analogous reminder of self-sufficient individuation-—an example of ostensible self-reliance which ironically served, in my personal theory, as an inspiration to that at first okay then supremely retarded anti-rationalist counter-culture called romanticism, which strangely took to defiling the clock itself when it was the clock that stood, in their hippy minds, as a replacement of an hierarch sun Praise to the currently ubiquitous watch, but in 1720 the price of a watch was equivalent to a servant girl's wage for ten years. Samuel Pepys', thus, love of watch was consonant with his fondling and raping of his servant girls, including one Deborah Willett, which adultery and rape he recorded first in Latin then in the cocktail of French, Portuguese, Latin, and coded English after his wife read his account of his raping of same and witnessing him w/ his member in Ms Willett Praise be the man who wrote The Barber of Seville and The Marriage of Figaro, Beaumarchais, as he was a brilliant watchmaker Praise be Wm Hogarth an artist who cd paint a portrait in one hour and depicted consistently time pieces, then new, in his renderings, as with the rise of the waistcoat in 1675 men ceased to wear watches by chains on the neck and placed them in pockets, whereas women continued to wear them on chains, in fact it was the discomfort afforded by the weight of the watch suspended on the neck that caused Charles II to devise an expedient sling composed by a light garment for the torso, a "vest," upon which small internal purses of cloth, which we call pockets, could be hung. Tompion who in his life made 6,000 watches and 500 clocks, was the occasion of much thievery: The personal advertisements of London papers frequently mentioned rewards for stolen Tompion watches Praise be Daniel Defoe, born in the horological revolution, who depicts one Moll Flanders who stole gold watch after gold watch. The best watches now are made of stainless steel, and sometimes Titanium Praise be all those who resisted Descartes who in 1619 reports wishing to construct a mechanical flying pigeon, a dancing dog, and a spaniel chasing a pheasant Praise be the watch, it is the amphitheater of all those who are awaiting the outcome of our present Praise be the many bugs, more complex than watches. That they have an energy that has left us. They have the energy of children. That they are the favorites of God and are but the particles of people with the wills of children. That insects are my little cousins under the uncle of heaven. And I am happy of them Praise that the wristwatch is essentially an astronomical instrument, which fact we among the houses forget. That what is a watch used for, it is used for the mimicking of the turning of the sky as the turning of its hands remembers the turning of the sky, the rolling of the earth before and under the sun Praise be the watch by which to constant remember decay, for rather we would have bolted a dancing fetus to a wall, or something like that Praise be the minute hand which tho the watches were around since the early 16th century as a personal vademecum, the minute hand did not arise on a watch until 1660 Praise to the Northern Hemisphere which gave the watch Praise to Randall Benson who sd “A watch does not respond to force, they are too small to compete with it.” Praise to the 4th chronometer of John Harrison which in 1761 erred no more than 15 seconds in a 5 month journey to the West Indies and back Praise to the British horological revolution of 1660-1770 Praise to John Harrison, he that built the first sea clock, a clock to be taken unto the seas w/out losing even a second a week, incredible, despite buffet by wave, storm, the seamen themselves and sometimes, which did happen, a fish from the window And even tho the Industrial Revolution was precipitated by the British horological revolution, praise to the British horological revolution Praise to the escapement, a device which through repetitive mechanical motion regulates the running down of the motive power Praise to the history of clocks which is to a large extent a history of the improvement of the technologies of escapement Praise to the clock which is not a metaphor for the enslavement of peoples, the enslavement of labor, the abuse of human power, the call of the factory, nor the bell that tolls as death Praise to Ikuo Tokunaga-san designer of the Seiko divers 1974-present who sd “And if your 1000m diver’s watch will be damaged unfortunately in any case, please contact to the SEIKO Service Center of your country as soon as possible. And last of all, I would like to say again The watches are living machines and they wanted to be cared from their lovely owner with heart-full mind every day. Please love your professional 1000m diver’s watch for ever. Thanks again. Sincerely yours, Ikuo Tokunaga” Praise to Richard Leigh, 1695, who wrote of insects, “Like Living Watches, each of these conceals/ A thousand Springs of Life, and moving wheels…” Praise to those in Norway, who are generally Norwegians, that they wear clocks. That they have rain there. That things are busy there. That they are busy with Norway. That there are old incomparable fountain pens there. That all these things are Norway, of Norway, and make Norway. Praise to weakened insects of Norway, who are happy, being fond of snow, which burdens them Praise that wristwatches, like nickels on the sea, are children of the colossal. That they burden no person, mar no time, and are made of the sound of the baskets. That Sunlight in Norway is of strained apricot. That this on my wrist is a celestial theater. That a wristwatch is a small celestial theater. It is a small sky. A device for the measure of shadows Praise be Ikuo Tokunaga-san designer of the Seiko divers 1974-present who sd “All watches are the noble-minded living machines for which human beings have created as the mechanical watches and as quartz watches. In those creatures, there are ‘the culture of the time’ which tells human beings' history, ‘the law of the time’ which keeps social order, ‘mankind's philosophy’ which tells their feelings, ‘the drama of sports’ with sweat and tears, and also ‘the art of the time’ which charms people's mind deeply by the ultimate mechanism. Both mechanical watches and quartz watches have their individuality, and both are alive with you with respectful character in this world. Although determined by the style of your life, and TPO, since my selection basis of watches is summarized in the next table, please make it reference which to be chosen." Praise be the wristwatch, small celestial theater Praise be the first nanotechnology Praise be the watch, up, and it bring a brave morning Praise be the watch which is not responsible for the death of spiritual time

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

↑ Index

390. Robin Hamilton
Re: praise be to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Good stuff, Gabe. Enjoying it.

About a third of the way through, I realised I'd have to print it out and read the rest more carefully.

Will do that now.

Robin

----- Original Message -----
From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 7:46 AM
Subject: praise be to the watch

> Praise be to the watch which is not responsible for rationalism or the mechanistic view of being ...

↑ Index

391. ALDON L NIELSEN
Fwd:Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----

<<

So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----

<<

Poems will appear this week by: Mary Maher, Vernon Frazer, and Sandra Alland.

A new poem about poetry every day.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

396. Jordan Stempleman
Re: New Poetics List Moderator
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Wonderful. Perhaps it's an early indication for good things in '08.

> Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 09:24:37 -0500> From: [redacted]> Subject: Re: New Poetics List Moderator> To: [redacted]> > good luck amy. hopefully this will result in a decline of some of the truly > grotesque hate mail which i for one vote against. susan maurer> > > >From: Poetics List <[redacted]>> >Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>> >To: [redacted]> >Subject: New Poetics List Moderator> >Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 09:16:26 -0500> >> >We are pleased to announce that Amy King will be the new moderator for> >the Poetics List. We are delighted that she has agreed to take on this> >role. Over the years, the list has adopted different approaches to> >approving posts and we will continue to keep open all possibilities.> >For the time being, however, all posts to the list will be sent to the> >moderator for approval. As a result, there will be a delay from the> >time posts are sent to when they are posted.> >> >Welcome, Amy!> >> >Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Joel Kuszai, Nick Piombino> >Poetics List Editorial Board> > _____> Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft > Office Live http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

_____
Get connected - Use your Hotmail address to sign into Windows Live Messenger now.
http://get.live.com/messenger/overview=

↑ Index

397. Gerald Schwartz
Re: Fwd:Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Yes, and at the very least a big protest was lodged by Flea of the

Red Hot Chile Peppers, spay-painting
his battery of stacked amps with ORNETTE COLEMAN WE LOVE YOU...

Somebody knows what time it is!

Gerald Schwartz

> So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to > come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----
>
> *<<

together. Now we will have asynchronous computers in the future, what will that be light?

In regard to moderation, I'm not so positive as the two other members who have written in; poets are an unruly bunch and that seems to be at the heart of remaking language itself. Here we literally have to have Amy's approval, and it's unclear where that stands, what is acceptable to her and what is not. As far as unpleasant posts to a list - there's no reason at all why posts _should_ be pleasant or etiquette-fulfilled, as long as there is no outandout racism, name-calling, what have you. For poets are also a stubborn bunch; it takes courage to write poetry, perhaps the most courage at all, and it's a shame so little of it appears in this forum. (The email list I run with Sandy Baldwin, wryting, is filled with it by the way.)

For my recent work, just check the blog or Youtube at times, although the accompanying texts are absent; for example

"for valeska gert

ruptured mess of the avatars banged into one another maybe they fucked in any case whatever skin they had disappeared in any case the lens blew out with all the action in any case i'm exhausted from their screaming why not mash them mosh them why not mash us mosh us in any case by this time it's all debris by this time i'm under the cabinet by this time doctor leopold konninger returns with horn-rimmed dark glasses in any case he says if you can't dance to it anita berber you might as well explode valeska gert

http://www.asondheim.org/ruptured.mp4
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R54HTJUfeiM
http://www.asondheim.org/bubbled.mp4

when history becomes histrionic naked dance parades on the silver screen oh they look so good light shining through the bones"

-- Valeska Gert was a Jewish dancer of the grotesque during the Weimar years.

-- Gabe and Amy, good luck!

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

400. charles alexander
CODEX symposium
Mon 12 Feb 2007

It would be great to see any Bay Area poets, or poets visiting there, at the CODEX symposium and book fair at UC-Berkeley Feb. 13-15. Chax Press will be displaying books there. The public "book fair" is Feb. 14 & 15. For more information, . . .

http://www.codexfoundation.org/bookfair/index.html

We'll be displaying a new fine art edition of the poem WITNESS by Kathleen Fraser. The book is also by Nancy Tokar Miller, who made eleven original (and stunning!) works of art for the book. But we'll also have handmade books we've done over the last bunch of years, and a smattering of trade paperback books of poetry. Check out our web site for recent titles . . .

http://chax.org

I hope to see some friends in Berkeley!

Charles

charles alexander / chax press

fold the book inside the book keep it open always read from the inside out speak then

↑ Index

401. Stephen Baraban lim
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Hai-cuckoos, suppressed "vagina", Celebrities lurid but minor--
Had I brilliance to say,
I'd rush to the fray:
For now, butting out would be kinder.

___ Finding fabulous fares is fun. Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains. http://farechase.yahoo.com/promo-generic-14795097

↑ Index

402. Michael Kelleher
Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 2.12.07
Mon 12 Feb 2007

LITERARY BUFFALO
2.12.07-2.18.07

LITERARY BUFFALO IN THE NEWS:

Michael Kelleher interviews poet Michael Gizzi in Artvoice:

http://www.artvoice.com

READINGS THIS WEEK

2.14

Just Buffalo Open Reading
Featured: Ken Feltges
Wednesday, February 14, 7 p.m.
Carnegie Art Center 240 Goundry St., North Tonawanda
10 open slots: all readers welcome!

&

Earth's Daughters Collective's Gray Hair Reading Series
Norma Kassirer and Dennis Maloney
Poetry and Fiction Reading
Wednesday, February 14, 7:30 p.m.
Hallwalls Cinema at The Church, 341 Delaware (at Tupper)

Dennis Maloney is a poet, translator, and landscape architect. His own poetry includes the book The Map Is Not The Territory, and his translations include The House in the Sand by Pablo Neruda and The Landscape of Castile by Antonio Machado. He is currently working on translations of works of Juan Ramon Jimenez and Yosano Akiko. Dennis is also the founding editor/publisher of the highly respected White Pine Press.

Norma Kassirer's first book was Magic Elizabeth, the enduring novel for children first published in hard cover by Viking Press in 1966. Several paperback editions by major publishers-Scholastic, Knopf-Random House, and most recently Harper-Collins (1999)-have kept the book continuously in print. The book is included in The New York Times Parent's Guide to the Best Books for Children. A second novel for children, The Doll Snatchers, was also published by Viking (1969). Short stories and articles for adults have appeared in a variety of magazines. The Hidden Wife, a collection of some of her stories, was published by Shuffaloff Press in 1991. Her poetry is written for adults.

2.15

Just Buffalo/Small Press Poetry Series
Michael Gizzi and Michael Basinski
Poetry Reading
Thursday, February 15, 7 p.m.
Rust Belt Books, 202 Allen St., Buffalo

Michael Gizzi worked for more than a decade as a licensed arborist in Southern New England. He is presently a visiting lecturer at Brown University and the curator of the Downcity Poetry Series in Providence, Rhode Island. Gizzi is the author of more than 10 books of poetry, including: My Terza Rima (The Figures, 2001); Cured in the Going Bebop (Paradigm Press, 1999); and No Both (The Figures/Hard Press 1997). Throughout the 1990's he edited lingo magazine and Hard Press. HE has collaborrated on a number of projects with Clark Coolidge, including a recording, in it's entirety, of Jack Kerouac's Old Angel Midnight.

Michael Basinski is The Curator of The Poetry Collection State University of New York at Buffalo. He performs his work as a solo poet and in ensemble with the EBMA and his own group, BuffFluxus. Most recently, he released his first CD Fungenii. Among his many books of poetry are Heka (Factory School); Strange Things Begin to Happen When a Meteor Crashes in the Arizona Desert (Burning Press); The Idyllic Book (Michel Letko, Houston, Texas); Mool, Mool3Ghosts and Shards of Shampoo (Bob Cobbing's Writers Forum); Cnyttan and Heebie-Jeebies (Meow Press); By and The Doors (House Press); Un Nome, Red Rain Two, Abzu and Flight to the Moon (Run Away Spoon Press): Poemeserss (Structum Press) and many more.

2.16

Just Buffalo Interdisciplinary Event
Arabian Nights/Middle Eastern Poetry and Dance_
Friday March 16th 7 p.m.
Unitarian Universalist Church
695 Elmwood Ave., Buffalo (corner of Ferry)_
$4 adults/$3 students & seniors/$2 Just Buffalo members__

Arabian Nights features romantic poetry and songs by Lonnie B. Harrell, with Middle Eastern dance performed by Cathy Skora/Folkloric Dance Company. Throw aside your inhibitions and learn "the dance of the seven veils." Complete the evening with a sampling of Middle Eastern snacks. Cathy Skora has been studying teaching & performing dance for over fifteen years, and is founder and executive director of Folkloric Productions Dance Co., Inc. Her dance studies have included Modern (Graham-Based) and African (Dunham-Based), with the Gemini Dance Company, under the direction of Steve Porter. As a member of Gemini, Cathy traveled to Europe for several summers as part of an international folk festival. Her area of special study are dances of the Middle East and North Africa. Cathy has traveled throughout Egypt, Morocco, Turkey, and Greece, exploring dance and culture.

2.18

Just Buffalo Open Reading
Featured: Liz Mariani
Sunday, February 18, 7 p.m.
Rust Belt Books, 202 Allen St., Buffalo
10 open slots: all readers welcome!

RECURRING LITERARY EVENTS

JUST BUFFALO WRITER'S CRITIQUE GROUP
Members of Just Buffalo are welcome to attend a free, bi-monthly writer critique group in CEPA's Flux Gallery on the first floor of the historic Market Arcade Building across the street from Shea's. Group meets 1st and 3rd Wednesday at 7 p.m. Call Just Buffalo for details.

JUST BUFFALO TIMED WRITING GROUP
A writing practice group meets every FRIDAY at noon at Starbucks Coffee on Elmwood and Chippewa. Writing practice is based on Natalie Goldberg's suggested exercises in Writing Down The Bones. Writers in all genres, fiction and non-fiction welcome. There is no charge. Contact Trudy for info: [redacted].

WESTERN NEW YORK ROMANCE WRITERS group meets the third Wednesday of every month at St. Joseph Hospital community room at 11a.m. Address: 2605 Harlem Road, Cheektowaga, NY 14225. For details go to www.wnyrw.org.

JUST BUFFALO MEMBERSHIP RAFFLE

Visit the literary city of your dreams:

-Joyce's Dublin
-Paris' Left Bank
-Dante's Florence
-Shakespeare's London
-Harlem Renaissance NYC
-The Beats' San Francisco
-Anywhere Continental flies.*

Now through May 10, 2007 your membership support of Just Buffalo Literary Center includes the chance to win the literary trip of a lifetime:

Package (valued at $5,000) includes:

-Two round-trip tickets to one of the great literary cities on Continental Airlines
-$1500 towards hotel and accommodations
-$500 in spending money

One ticket ($35) = Just Buffalo Individual Membership
Two tickets ($60) = Just Buffalo Family Membership
Three tickets ($100) = Just Buffalo Friend Membership

Purchase as many memberships as you like. Give them to whomever you choose as a gift (or give someone else the membership and keep the lottery ticket to yourself!). Only 1000 chances will be sold. Raffle tickets with Just Buffalo membership make great gifts! Drawing will be held the second week of May, 2007. Call [redacted] for more info.

* Raffle ticket purchases are not tax-deductible. If you want your membership to put you in the "literary trip of a lifetime" raffle, please write "raffle membership" in the "payment for" cell on the Paypal form. You will automatically be entered in the raffle, but your membership will not be tax-deductible. If you prefer not to be in the raffle and want tax-deductible status, then please write "non-raffle member" in the "payment for" cell.

JOIN JUST BUFFALO ONLINE!!!

If you would like to join Just Buffalo, or simply make a massive personal donation, you can do so online using your credit card. We have recently added the ability to join online by paying with a credit card through PayPal. Simply click on the membership level at which you would like to join, log in (or create a PayPal account using your Visa/Amex/Mastercard/Discover), and voilá, you will find yourself in literary heaven. For more info, or to join now, go to our website:

http://www.justbuffalo.org/membership/index.shtml

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

403. Barry Schwabsky
Re: Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Who is Carrie Underwood?
Was he giving the award to her or she to him? If the former, isn't it right that the senior person give the award to the lesser figure? Like if I was getting an award for poetry, it would mean a lot if was being given me by John Ashbery, whereas it would be merely presumptuous if I were to give one to him.

Vernon Frazer <[redacted]> wrote: I didn't see the Grammies, but I'd say this is a slap in the face to Ornette, considering how much he's contributed. I'm out of the popular culture loop and can't imagine Carrie Underwood's accomplishments comparing to his even remotely.

Vernon
http://vernonfrazer.com

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of ALDON L NIELSEN
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 9:08 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Fwd:Ornette at the Grammies

So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----

<<

you assistance would be much appreciated

kh

sincerely

l y braithwaite

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lawrence_Ytzhak_Braithwaite

http://www.sidebrow.net/2006/a047braithwaite.php

↑ Index

405. Gabriel Gudding
Re: praise to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Thanks, Robin. That stuff quoting Ikuo Tokunaga (Tokunaga-san, as he's affectionately known) is from the Seiko Citizens Watch Forum (http://www.network54.com/Forum/78440/).

This is just a beginning, written over the last two days. I want to explore the history of the watch and wristwatch in relation to first gender and then colonialism. It's a huge field, almost untouched.

Looking at the paintings of Wm Hogarth - was just struck by how many are of women and watches/clocks. The watch and women have this buried history that goes weirdly back to people like Pepys and Tompion. I'm not sure yet what to make of it. Gabe

<<Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 11:11:18 -0000
From: Robin Hamilton <[log in to unmask]>
Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
reply-type=response

Good stuff, Gabe. Enjoying it. About a third of the way through, I realised I'd have to print it out and read the rest more carefully. Will do that now. Robin --

↑ Index

406. Ken Rumble
Nathaniel Tarn & Janet Rodney, This Saturday, Feb. 17th, 8pm, Internationalist Books, Chapel Hill
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Please spread far and wide....

Who: Nathaniel Tarn: poet, translator, anthropologist, and editor; author of thirty volumes of poetry, and numerous translations (including acclaimed versions of Pablo Neruda, Victor Segalen, and others); /Selected Poems 1950-

2000/ published in 2002 by Wesleyan University Press; selected essays in poetics and anthropology /Views from the Weaving Mountain/ published in 1991 by University of New Mexico Press; specialist in Highland Maya studies and the sociology of Buddhist institutions; one of Marcel Duchamp's chess partners.

Who: Janet Rodney: digital artist, poet, and letterpress printer; author of four books of poetry, including /Orphydice/, /Atitlan / Alashka/, and the meditative memoir /The Book of Craving/; fifteen year resident of Spain while a journalist, editor, translator, and interpreter.

What: Desert City Poetry Series, you thought it would never happen.

When: This Saturday, February 17th, 8pm, 2007, the year formerly known as "next year."

Where: Internationalist Books, 405 W. Franklin Street, Chapel Hill, North Carolina, same place, fresh air.

How much: $2 donation which will contribute to the hospital bills of Philadelphia poet Frank Sherlock.

Why: "Rite of return / elegant orange "bird" / shines on my memory / flying the sun from west to east" "you are right, / at this time the mind / is a mirror to the sun / the heart a coal / bright in, the wind, / nothing / is mine / but the ride"

See you there....

Nathaniel Tarn: http://jacketmagazine.com/06/index.shtml

Janet Rodney: http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/ljrdny1.htm

"Ancestors"
by Nathaniel Tarn

"At the exact site of the Lituanica's tragedy, in the forest of Soldin, Germany, the Aero Club of Lithuania rented for ninety nine years a . . . circle-shaped area and erected a monument. (The inscription:) "Here died as heroes the Transatlantic Flyers Darius & Girenas " (July 15, 1933) . . . After World War II, that part of Germany was annexed to Poland and Lithuania was occupied by the Soviets."

Small provincial town in "my" fathers' land at creation's edge - border post deserted,
a line of lindens,
opposite post deserted,
no crossings anymore

as there once were between old world and new.

"God's Playground" here
as they used to call it:
what does He play with what is the message of a life,
what is the information,
what can the play mean from bit to life, and back?

Other end of town:
small sunlit graveyard field
edged with small jungles:
hazels, apples, roses, ferns, nettles, mushrooms, herbs - loud with warblers, storks overhead
birds of my secret childhood.

    Rite of return elegant orange "bird" shines on my memory flying the sun from west to east back to its homeland, the two boys clean pure-blooded heroes - narrative simple a nation's testament torn out of anonymity
        the double fit
thanks X and gentle Y.

When was "our" departure:
before the warning signs were clearly witnessed or very near the terminus of possibility - by which way forward under the lindens was it to left,
was it to right
they went from east to west and to what purpose to what end in "me"?

Scrabble to read the graves four hours the heat increasing.
Small stone book-shape - third the way down from top - grips one pointed gravestone (like a clown's hat) perhaps a sign of "us"
whose trade was bookbinding.

When not finding's no matter - this is community -
"my" people sunk into
"our" people floating here their stones on the grass sea.
So that it does not matter
if name sings here or not:
what is a name inside oblivion?

Not enough money to buy the right equipment
homed into heroism:
arrival no arrival
a crash short of the goal
in a "great neighbor" country, the whole scene under glass shrine in its own museum when it had been subtracted out from the swastikas.
Crowd size at funeral never yet seen in all of history.

Behind the pointed grave, thick trees spread darkness,
huge long-house trench:
a thousand hidden there - but not by natural demise - shot in the neck:
it will take lifetimes to read those dead.

Came to the sky these luftmenschen too early against the grain of their determinations.

Now I'm at table:
Gorge at my life deep sun!
Take down the charming pilots and too "my" ancestors!

In the town,
"they" who are always present holding a festival of later generations.
Midway between creations all ate and drank the same heard the same blood beat of excremental music - we paid them no attention.
How many of "their" fathers might have helped to fill that field?

"Their" flyers:
nothing as infiltrated
as "our" sallow legions storm troopers in their time would soon dispose of.
How could a record flight else among so many bring home the corpses embalmed, later, hidden for years
from various oppressors until again, an independence.

While it is on record
(those who don't sleep or dream) that in a neighbor town
"they" stood on rooftops many smiling
to watch the shooting circus.

from /Crystals/
by Janet Rodney

I.

The time of which I write

is a memory

of getting back to Mother Earth, mouth pressed to hers, desire's irresistible

curl of lips when love for Father Water is strongest

I look for his eye and hear a hellish laughter as from outside

up from the ocean.

II.

Long after all horizons have proved themselves mortal

I see my rider shadow galloping along the beach,

it is August, lead-bellied gulls rise toward the Rock

where Atlantic currents and Mediterranean mix

wild roses
corrupting on its face,

you are right,
at this time the mind

is a mirror to the sun
the heart a coal
bright in, the wind, nothing is mine but the ride

before the sequence vanishes like lead

drawn down
thru deep water.

XV. The Androgynous Principle (A)

In a small dream in a small room
in a small town in New Jersey

I am on the make,
a huntress stepping out of fathomless woods

her small breasts are smooth as riverstones her own phallus, a knife hung around her neck instrument of delight.

The prey this evening is elusive:
she would like to be worthy of her victim who doesn't appear to cruise these parts this hour

would like to give her body to the victim of her choice precisely when he, the hunted, steps out of her moves in, penetrating, manly, fucking in blindness bringing them news

of light.

XVI. The Androgynous Principle (B)

Each day the sun rises inside her eye looking for new fields, at night drops

like a coin into water, she is blown back by darkness, her coat of shells catching a light from below

where he is hidden, shining in water he waits

while she dangles her clothes on a tree, descends to the edge,
water rising slowly up her body between her thighs

he drinks her.

XVII.

Here we are and all we see is more than ourselves, the failing leaves and flowerheads float on the canal like scales of carp downriver

here we are and more,
wind driving thru the cracks of our windows bringing on the cold
we know from our skin (and over hard ground walk the circuit of each other)

that winter has made it our way again

↑ Index

407. Dan Waber
first adventures of col and sem
Mon 12 Feb 2007

kite tail press is pleased to announce the release of:

first adventures of col and sem, by Dan Waber
http://www.logolalia.com/kitetailpress/

Lyric narrative punctuation poetry, what else can be said? Well, here's what others are saying:

<[brick]> it's sort of a love story between the colon and the semicolon <devin> ahh, those two have had a thing going for centuries <[brick]> she's totally hot in palatino linotype <devin> oh i know

"i like the way this is simple but symbolically charged. romantic but smart. concrete but abstract."--Jim Andrews

"Brill!"--Mairéad Byrne

"Loved it. [...] so romantic!"--K.S. Ernst

"Love poems like no one has ever seen."--Michael Harold

"...bits of punctuation set free to mean, to make, to be."--Geof Huth

"o this is way beyond punctuation poetry."--Karl Kempton

"It¹s cheeky."--Chris Mansell

"...a display of what can only be called heorically wordless subminimality in the sense of utter alphabetical absence..."--Irving Weiss

For information on how to purchase a copy, please send an email to your favorite word, whatever that may be, at logolalia dot com.

Regards,
Dan

↑ Index

408. David A. Kirschenbaum
Re: Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Ornette actually got more facetime than the other lifetime achievement grammy award winners--among them The Doors, The Grateful Dead, and Booker T. & The MG's--who after each of them were talked about for a few seconds from the stage had a camera focused upon them in the audience. This is the way it's been for the past few years at the grammy awards with these awards.

As for Flea, he began playing the trumpet at age nine and grew up the step-son of jazz musician Walter Urban, Jr., and wanted to be a jazz musician like him. I think he was just honoring Ornette, perceived grammys slight be damned.

Best,
david

On 2/12/07 9:44 AM, "Gerald Schwartz" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Yes, and at the very least a big > protest was lodged by Flea of the > Red Hot Chile Peppers, spay-painting
> his battery of stacked amps with > ORNETTE COLEMAN WE LOVE YOU...
>
> Somebody knows what time it is!
>
> Gerald Schwartz
>
> So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to > come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----
>
> *<<

Carroll Gardens, Brooklyn

F or G to Carroll Street

FREE

Kostas Anagnopoulos was born and raised in Chicago. He is the editor and co-founder of Insurance Magazine and Insurance Editions. In 2003 he published his chapbook, Daydream. This spring Ugly Duckling Presse will publish his long poem, Irritant. He lives in Jackson Heights, Queens, and he works as a salesman.

Elisa Gabbert holds degrees from Rice University and Emerson College. She is a reader for Ploughshares and an editor of Absent. Recent work appears or will appear in journals including Pleiades, LIT, No Tell Motel, Kulture Vulture, RealPoetik, H_NGM_N, and Redivider, as well as the forthcoming anthologies The Bedside Guide to No Tell Motel – Second Floor and Outside Voices 2008 Anthology of Younger Poets. This week Kitchen Press released her chapbook, Thanks for Sending the Engine.

___
Never miss an email again!
Yahoo! Toolbar alerts you the instant new Mail arrives.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/toolbar/features/mail/

↑ Index

410. heidi arnold
Re: New Poetics List Moderator
Mon 12 Feb 2007

"good luck amy. hopefully this will result in a decline of some of the truly grotesque hate mail which i for one vote against. susan maurer"

-- yeah -- i agree --

from thich nhat hanh: -- one day a monk came to tue trung, the most illustrious teacher of Buddhism in Vietnam in the thirteenth century, a time when Buddhism was flourishing in Vietnam. the monk asked him, "what is the pure, immaculate Dharmakaya?" and Tue Trung pointed to the excrement of a horse. This was an irreverent approach to Dharmakaya, because people were using the word immaculate to describe it. you cannot use words to describe the Dharmakaya. Even though we say it is immaculate, pure, that does not mean it is separate from things that are impure. reality, ultimate reality, free from all adjectives, either pure or impure. so his response was to shake up the mind of the monk, for him to cleanse himself of all these adjectives in order to see into the nature of the dharmakaya...

- heidi

On 2/12/07, susan maurer < [redacted]> wrote:
>
> good luck amy. hopefully this will result in a decline of some of the > truly > grotesque hate mail which i for one vote against. susan maurer
>
>
> >From: Poetics List < [redacted] >
> >Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> >To: [redacted]
> >Subject: New Poetics List Moderator
> >Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 09:16:26 -0500
> >
> >We are pleased to announce that Amy King will be the new moderator for > >the Poetics List. We are delighted that she has agreed to take on this > >role. Over the years, the list has adopted different approaches to > >approving posts and we will continue to keep open all possibilities.
> >For the time being, however, all posts to the list will be sent to the > >moderator for approval. As a result, there will be a delay from the > >time posts are sent to when they are posted.
> >
> >Welcome, Amy!
> >
> >Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Joel Kuszai, Nick Piombino > >Poetics List Editorial Board
>
> _____
> Don't miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from > Microsoft
> Office Live http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/
>

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

411. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

I've never forgotten Ornette on the phone saying artists don't need to go to art schools--they need to go to business schools--

it's not called the Entertinment INDUSTRY because it's about "art" and "artists" you know--it's strictly business-- so of course Ornette wd show up and get his Grammy--it's good for HIS business, too are Jazz musicians supposed to always be neglected, poor and "pure" from money and awards other musicians are given? for the sake of their fans--?

this is about business, not art-- an artist knows they are an artist, a great one, wihout needing to be told or awarded-- but the award and publicity and cash it brings--that they do need--to live--for themselves, their family, their work--

> From: Andrew Jones <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Ornette at the Grammies
> Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 16:05:44 +0100
>
> guess he wouldn't have shown up if he didn't want to, and besides,
> it's only the grammys, it's not like it means anything.
>
> On 2/12/07, ALDON L NIELSEN <[redacted]> wrote:
> So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he gets to > come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----
>
> *<<

412. Brian Clements

Teaching Position Announcement--Western Connecticut State University

Mon 12 Feb 2007

This newly announced position is advertised for the English Dept., but WestConn is in the process of establishing a Dept. of Writing and Linguistics effective Fall '07. We expect final approval shortly, and this position would go with the new department. Even though we expect approval of the new department, applications should be addressed to the English Dept. Candidates who meet the requirements below and who have additional experience as professional writers (outside academia) will be especially attractive.

Cordially, bc

School of Arts & Sciences
English Department

Western Connecticut State University's English Department seeks a tenure-track, Assistant Professor beginning in August, 2007. The English Department offers undergraduate majors in Literature and Professional Writing, as well as combined majors in American Studies and Elementary & Secondary Education. The Department's graduate program includes Master of Arts, Master of Fine Arts, and Master of Science degrees with options in literature studies, teaching English as a second language, and writing. The Department also offers four minors and a variety of writing intensive and introductory literature courses for credit in General Education.

Assistant Professor
Coordinator of First-Year Composition

The tenure-track Assistant Professor will serve as the Coordinator of First-Year Composition. A Ph.D. or terminal degree in Composition/Rhetoric or closely related field is required. Candidates with specializations in composition studies, professional writing, or linguistics are welcomed; however, the successful candidate will have primary interest in first-year writing pedagogy. Must be willing to teach courses at both graduate and undergraduate levels and direct the department's writing lab. Must have experience with teaching ethnically and linguistically diverse populations. Experience with writing across the curriculum, instructional technology, assessment, and directing a writing lab is desirable.

Application Process: Send cover letter, CV, graduate transcripts, and three letters of recommendation, along with a fifteen page writing sample to [redacted]. Reference Search # 500-117 in the Subject line.

Screening of applications will begin February 21, 2007 and continue until the position is filled.

Salary & Benefits: WCSU offers competitive salaries commensurate with candidate's experience and a comprehensive benefit package.

Dr. Brian Clements, Coordinator
MFA in Professional Writing
[redacted]

_____
Dept. of English Language, Comparative Literature, and Writing
Western Connecticut State University
181 White St.
Danbury, CT 06810

_____
http://www.wcsu.edu/english/mfa

↑ Index

413. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: praise be to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Gabriel,

I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.

Murat

On 2/12/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Ah, this is one of the most beautiful pieces I've read in a long time;
> there's something 17th18th century running through it, those references > to Pepys for example though I still prefer Johnson they're still > associated in my mind. The incantatory prose itself ticks away, I miss the > digital, though there are slight references; the poem is mechanism, the > digital might as well not be a watch since it is watched itself, clocked > itself, in order that the parts function together. Now we will have > asynchronous computers in the future, what will that be light?
>
> In regard to moderation, I'm not so positive as the two other members who > have written in; poets are an unruly bunch and that seems to be at the > heart of remaking language itself. Here we literally have to have Amy's > approval, and it's unclear where that stands, what is acceptable to her > and what is not. As far as unpleasant posts to a list - there's no reason > at all why posts _should_ be pleasant or etiquette-fulfilled, as long as > there is no outandout racism, name-calling, what have you. For poets are > also a stubborn bunch; it takes courage to write poetry, perhaps the most > courage at all, and it's a shame so little of it appears in this forum.

> (The email list I run with Sandy Baldwin, wryting, is filled with it by > the way.)
>
> For my recent work, just check the blog or Youtube at times, although the > accompanying texts are absent; for example
>
> "for valeska gert
>
> ruptured mess of the avatars banged into one another maybe they fucked in > any case whatever skin they had disappeared in any case the lens blew out > with all the action in any case i'm exhausted from their screaming why not > mash them mosh them why not mash us mosh us in any case by this time it's > all debris by this time i'm under the cabinet by this time doctor leopold > konninger returns with horn-rimmed dark glasses in any case he says if you > can't dance to it anita berber you might as well explode valeska gert
>
> http://www.asondheim.org/ruptured.mp4
> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R54HTJUfeiM
> http://www.asondheim.org/bubbled.mp4
>
> when history becomes histrionic naked dance parades on the silver screen > oh they look so good light shining through the bones"
>
> -- Valeska Gert was a Jewish dancer of the grotesque during the Weimar > years.
>
> -- Gabe and Amy, good luck!
>
>
==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > dvds, etc.

==========
==========
>

↑ Index

414. George Bowering
Re: Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

You should tell us who Carrie Underwood is.

gb

On 12-Feb-07, at 6:07 AM, ALDON L NIELSEN wrote:

> So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this > he gets to > come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----
>
>
>
<<

http://vernonfrazer.com <http://vernonfrazer.com/>

↑ Index

416. ALDON L NIELSEN
Re: Ornette at the Grammies
Mon 12 Feb 2007

All that granted -- and of course I know he got a lot more attention at the part of the ceremonies that was not televised --

Still, I think it good to take note of such things, to make whatever small noise there is to be made -- That, after all, is how the grammies eventually moved out of the "let's give all the awards to Mitch Miler" mode of the past and finally began to acknowledge the existence of more interesting music -- I'm under no illusions -- the jazz awards often go to the most middle of the road performers, as with poetry awards -- in some years, viewers could be excused for thinking Herbie Hancock, Chick Corea and Arturo Sandoval were members of, say, Jewel's backup band -- and let's not even get started on what they do to classical music -- and it was great to see Ornette (and that suit!) at all -- but it was a lifetime of people complaining about such things that brought the academy to give him a lifetime achievement award -- so, I still say complaining is a good thing - and bless Flea for wearing his heart on his grille cloth --

On Mon, 12 Feb 2007 13:05:34 -0600 UB Poetics discussion group wrote:

I've never forgotten Ornette on the phone saying artists don't need to go to art schools--they need to go to business schools--

it's not called the Entertinment INDUSTRY because it's about "art" and "artists" you know--it's strictly business-- so of course Ornette wd show up and get his Grammy--it's good for HIS business, too

are Jazz musicians supposed to always be neglected, poor and "pure" from money and awards other musicians are given? for the sake of their fans--?

this is about business, not art--
an artist knows they are an artist, a great one, wihout needing to be told or awarded-- but the award and publicity and cash it brings--that they do need--to live--for themselves, their family, their work--

> From: Andrew Jones <https://webmail.psu.edu/webmail/main.cgi#>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <https://webmail.psu.edu/webmail/main.cgi#>

> To: https://webmail.psu.edu/webmail/main.cgi#
> Subject: Re: Ornette at the Grammies
> Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 16:05:44 +0100
>
> guess he wouldn't have shown up if he didn't want to, and besides,
> it's only the grammys, it's not like it means anything.
>
> On 2/12/07, ALDON L NIELSEN <https://webmail.psu.edu/webmail/main.cgi#>
> wrote:
> So, Orentte Coleman gets a Lifetime Achievement Grammy, and for this he > gets to > come out on stage and give an award to Carrie Underwood ----
>
> *<<

Introduction:
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/Intro.htm

These pages are cursor friendly. Speakers on.

-Joel

_____

Joel Weishaus
Research Faculty
Department of English
Portland State University
Portland, Oregon
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282

↑ Index

418. Jesse Crockett
Re: praise to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

During my "six month initiation" to _____, I became obsessed by my digital wristwatch. It seemed always to catch my eye at "crazy ones", "crazy twos", etc. (terms I made up much later playing space-deck home run derby) So, I put it in the street, hoping some car would smash it. But after re-situating it a couple times, I began to feel dumb, so I put it back in my pocket. I think it wound up as charity for the mission shelter in El Paso, Texas, along with my favorite shirt ever.

Gabriel Gudding wrote: > Thanks, Robin. That stuff quoting Ikuo Tokunaga (Tokunaga-san, as he's > affectionately known) is from the Seiko Citizens Watch Forum > (http://www.network54.com/Forum/78440/).
>
> This is just a beginning, written over the last two days. I want to > explore the history of the watch and wristwatch in relation to first > gender and then colonialism. It's a huge field, almost untouched.
>
> Looking at the paintings of Wm Hogarth - was just struck by how many > are of women and watches/clocks. The watch and women have this buried > history that goes weirdly back to people like Pepys and Tompion. I'm > not sure yet what to make of it. Gabe
>
> <<Date: Mon, 12 Feb 2007 11:11:18 -0000
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[log in to unmask]>

> Sender: UB Poetics discussion group <[log in to unmask]>
> From: Robin Hamilton <[log in to unmask]>
> Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
> Content-Type: text/plain; format=flowed; charset="Windows-1252"; > reply-type=response
>
> Good stuff, Gabe. Enjoying it. About a third of the way through, I > realised I'd have to print it out and read the rest more carefully.
> Will do that now. Robin

↑ Index

419. eleni Stecopoulos
Re: Jed Rasula's Poetics of Embodiment
Mon 12 Feb 2007

To the person looking for this: it's his dissertation, from UC Santa Cruz. Should be available from UMI.

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft Office Live
http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

420. Poetics List
Poetics List Welcome Message
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Please note changes to the Welcome Message:

The Poetics List

Sponsored by: The Electronic Poetry Center (SUNY-Buffalo/University of Pennsylvania) and the Regan Chair (Department of English, Penn) & Center for Program in Contemporary Writing (Penn)

Poetics List Editor: Amy King

Poetics List Editorial Board:
Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Amy King, Joel Kuszai,
Nick Piombino

Note: this Welcome message is also available at the EPC/@Buffalo page

Poetics Subscription Registration (required)
poetics.list --at -- gmail.com
note our new address!

Poetics Subscription Requests:
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html

Poetics Listserv Archive:
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html

Note that any correspondence sent to the Poetics List administration account takes about ten days, for response; mail to this account is checked about once per week.

C O N T E N T S:

1. About the Poetics List
2. Posting to the List
3. Subscriptions
4. Subscription Options
5. To Unsubscribe
6. Cautions

Above the world-weary horizons
New obstacles for exchange arise
Or unfold,
O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

With the preceding epigraph, the Poetics Listserv was founded by Charles Bernstein in late 1993. Now in its fourth incarnation, the list has over 1300 subscribers worldwide. We also have a substantial number of nonsubscribing readers, who access the list through our web site (see archive URL above).

The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. While we recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities for exchange, we request that those participating in this forum keep in mind the specialized and focused nature of this project and respect our decision to operate a moderated list. The Poetics List exists to support and encourage divergent points of view on innovative forms of modern and contemporary poetry and poetics, and we are committed to do what is necessary to preserve this space for such dialog.

Due to the high number of subscribers, we no longer maintain the open format with which the list began (at under 100 subscribers). The specific form of moderation that we employ is a relatively fluid one: in most cases, messages are reviewed after having been posted to the list, and difficulties resolved on that basis; however, the listserv editorial board may shift between this and a pre-review mode which calls for all messages to be read and approved before being forwarded to the list. We prefer to avoid this option as it hampers the spontaneity of discussion that we hope to promote. In addition to these options, the editorial board will unsubscribe individuals if they are not, in our opinion, productively contributing to the list or following our guidelines. We remain committed to this editorial function as a defining element of the Poetics List.

Please also note that this is a not a general interest poetry list and information about this list should not be posted to directories of poetry lists. The idea is to keep the list membership to those with specific engagement related to the list's stated orientation. The current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, and a maximum of four messages per subscriber per day; but these limits are subject to change withouth notice.

In addition to being archived at through the EPC (http://epc.buffalo.edu) and at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas.

Note also that Roof Books published Joel Kuszai's edited collection of the Poetics List; this is available from ROOF and also on line at the EPC.

2. Posting to the List

editors in keeping with the goals of the list as articulated in this Welcome Message (see section 1).

Please note that while this list is primarily concerned with discussions of poetry and poetics, messages relating to politics and political activism, film, art, media, and so forth are also welcome. We strongly encourage subscribers to post information, including web links, relating to publications (print and internet), reading series, and blogs that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this list. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications (print or digital) are always welcome.

We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries.

Also, please note that the Poetics List is not a "chat" list and we discourage the posting of very short messages intended for only a few subscribers.

All posts go out not only to list subscribers but also become a public part of the list archive on the web. Note that posting to the list is a form of publication and that by sending your message to the list you formally consent to such web publication. Posts are currently being indexed by search engines such as Google. It is not possible for us to remove posts from the list archive or to control search engine indexing of these posts.

Subscribers only may post to the Poetics List. Send messages directly to the list address: [redacted].

3. Subscriptions

*For all subscription requests go to http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html.

*To subscribe for the first time click on "Subscribe (join) a List." Immediately following your subscription to the poetics listserv we ask that you email [redacted], subject-line "registration," with your full name, street address, email address, and telephone number. Failure to register at the time of subscription will result in automatic deletion from the subscription roll.

*To manage your subscription (for descriptions of the different subscription options please see section 3), click on "Subscriber's Corner."

Subscriptions to the Poetics List are free of charge, but formal registration is required. All other questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to this same administrative address.

PLEASE NOTE: All subscription-related information and correspondence remains absolutely confidential.

All posts to the list must provide your full real name, as registered. If there is any discrepancy between your full name as it appears in the "from" line of the message header, please sign your post at the bottom. Subscribers who do not include their full name with each post will be unsubscribed form the list.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced, which will result in your subscription being automatically terminated by the Listserv program and the automatically generated message telling you that this has occurred will also likely bounce. If this happens, you may re-subscribe to the list by the same process described above. One remedy to avoid this happening in the future: set your list options to "no-mail" and read the list on the web.

4. Subscription Options

We encourage you to alter your subscription options via the link on the right side of the screen at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html. If you would prefer not to use the web-interface, you may also email <[redacted]> the following commands:

*to subscribe to the Poetics listserv send [redacted] this one-line message with no "subject":

*RECOMMENDED: if you wish to read the list on our web interface and not receive any messages sent directly, while remaining subscribed to the list and so eligible to send us posts, send this one-line message to <[redacted]> with no "subject": set poetics nomail. Note: this option is also useful for temporary suspension of email service.

*to reactivate Poetics e-mail send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics mail

* to receive the list in digest form (you will receive the day's individual posts in one email sent just after midnight EST), send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics digest

*to receive posts in the default option (you will receive individual postings immediately), send <[redacted]> this one- line message with no "subject": set poetics nodigest

* to receive the list in index form (you will receive a list, without the text of the posts, of the subjects discussed each day along with the author's name and address and the number of lines it comprises; you can also choose to have the index sent to you in either plain text or in HTML format with hyperlinks), send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics nohtml index --or-- set poetics html index

PLEASE NOTE: do not leave your Poetics subscription in default or digest mode if you are going to be away for any extended period of time. Your account may become flooded and you may lose Poetics messages as well as other important mail. In such cases, switch your subscription to "nomail" as recommended above.

5. To Unsubscribe

To unsubscribe (or change any of your subscription options), again, we strongly encourage you to go to the right-hand side of the screen at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html You may also may unsubscribe by sending a one-line email to

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note: sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages old address, then resubscribe with your new email address.

6. Cautions

"Flame" messages will not be tolerated on the Poetics List. We define 'flaming' as any post that resembles a personal attack or personal insult to anyone--subscriber or not. This of course includes racist, sexist, or other slurs as well as ad hominem arguments in which the person rather than their work is attacked; in other words while critique of a person's work is welcome (critical inquiry is one of the main functions of the list), this critique cannot extend to a critique or criticism of the person.

The listserv is intended to be a productive communal space for discussion and announcements; as such, subscribers who do not follow listserv policy will be removed from the subscription roll.

In enforcing this policy, the editors must consider sometimes competing interests. The basis for our decisions, however, rests with our collective judgment about the kind of space we want for the list.

For reasons of basic security, we do not allow pseudonymous subscriptions. All messages intended for the Poetics List should be sent in Text-Only format, without attachments. We do not accept HTML-formatted messages or attached files. As a general rule, keep individual posts to 1,000 words or less.

Please do not publish list postings without the express permission of the author. Posting on the list is a form of publication. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use" of published materials.

All material on the Poetics List remains the property of the authors; before you reproduce this material, in whole or in part, we ask that you get permission (by email is fine) from the authors. If they give permission, then we ask only that you say that the post or posts appeared originally on the Poetics List Used by permission of the author.

As an outside maximum, we will accept no more than 4 messages per day from any one subscriber. Also, given that our goal is a manageable list (manageable both for moderators and subscribers), the list accepts 75 or fewer messages per day, though these paramenters may be changed at the discretion of the list moderator.

Like all systems, the listserv will sometimes be down: if you feel your message has been delayed or lost, please wait at least one day to see if it shows up, then check the archive to be sure the message is not posted there; if you still feel there is a problem, you may wish to contact the editors at <[redacted]>.

↑ Index

421. Alexander Jorgensen
Re: Poetics List Welcome Message
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Nice touch. Kinda like Dr Phil & South African, Oprah Winphrey. But david Letterman -

AJ
--- Poetics List <[redacted]> wrote:

> Please note changes to the Welcome Message:
>
>
> The Poetics List
>
> Sponsored by: The Electronic Poetry Center > (SUNY-Buffalo/University of > Pennsylvania) and the Regan Chair (Department of > English, Penn) &
> Center for Program in Contemporary Writing (Penn)
>
> Poetics List Editor: Amy King
>
> Poetics List Editorial Board:
> Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Amy > King, Joel Kuszai,
> Nick Piombino
>
> Note: this Welcome message is also available at the > EPC/@Buffalo page
>
> Poetics Subscription Registration (required)
> poetics.list --at -- gmail.com
> note our new address!
>
> Poetics Subscription Requests:
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html
>

> Poetics Listserv Archive:
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html
>
> Note that any correspondence sent to the Poetics > List administration > account takes about ten days, for response; mail to > this account is > checked about once per week.
>
> C O N T E N T S:
>
> 1. About the Poetics List
> 2. Posting to the List
> 3. Subscriptions
> 4. Subscription Options
> 5. To Unsubscribe
> 6. Cautions
>
> ----------
>
> Above the world-weary horizons
> New obstacles for exchange arise
> Or unfold,
> O ye postmasters!
>
>
> 1. About the Poetics List
>
> With the preceding epigraph, the Poetics Listserv > was founded by > Charles Bernstein in late 1993. Now in its fourth > incarnation, the > list has over 1300 subscribers worldwide. We also > have a substantial > number of nonsubscribing readers, who access the > list through our web > site (see archive URL above).
>
> The Poetics List is not a forum for a general > discussion of poetry or > for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, > inform, and extend > those directions in poetry that are committed to > innovations, > renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as > content, to the > questioning of received forms and styles, and to the > creation of the > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected,

> improbable, and impossible.
> While we recognize that other lists may sponsor > other possibilities > for exchange, we request that those participating in > this forum keep > in mind the specialized and focused nature of this > project and respect > our decision to operate a moderated list. The > Poetics List exists to > support and encourage divergent points of view on > innovative forms of > modern and contemporary poetry and poetics, and we > are committed to do > what is necessary to preserve this space for such > dialog.
>
> Due to the high number of subscribers, we no longer > maintain the open > format with which the list began (at under 100 > subscribers). The > specific form of moderation that we employ is a > relatively fluid one:
> in most cases, messages are reviewed after having > been posted to the > list, and difficulties resolved on that basis;
> however, the listserv > editorial board may shift between this and a > pre-review mode which > calls for all messages to be read and approved > before being forwarded > to the list. We prefer to avoid this option as it > hampers the > spontaneity of discussion that we hope to promote.
> In addition to > these options, the editorial board will unsubscribe > individuals if > they are not, in our opinion, productively > contributing to the list or > following our guidelines. We remain committed to > this editorial > function as a defining element of the Poetics List.

>
> Please also note that this is a not a general > interest poetry list and > information about this list should not be posted to > directories of > poetry lists. The idea is to keep the list > membership to those with > specific engagement related to the list's stated > orientation. The > current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, > and a maximum of > four messages per subscriber per day; but these > limits are subject to > change withouth notice.
>
> In addition to being archived at through the EPC > (http://epc.buffalo.edu) and at
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html,
> some posts to > Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, > announcements, etc.)
> may also become part of specific EPC subject areas.
>
> Note also that Roof Books published Joel Kuszai's > edited collection of > the Poetics List; this is available from ROOF and > also on line at the > EPC.
>
>
> 2. Posting to the List
>
> are reviewed by the > editors in keeping with the goals of the list as > articulated in this > Welcome Message (see section 1).

>
> Please note that while this list is primarily > concerned with > discussions of poetry and poetics, messages relating > to politics and > political activism, film, art, media, and so forth > are also welcome.
> We strongly encourage subscribers to post > information, including web > links, relating to publications (print and > internet), reading series, > and blogs that they have coordinated, edited,
> published, or in which > they appear. Such announcements constitute a core > function of this > list. Brief reviews of poetry events and > publications (print or > digital) are always welcome.
>
> We do not accept postings of creative work not > directed toward a > discussion of poetics issues on the list. The > Poetics List is not a > venue for the posting of free-standing, personal > poems or journal > entries.
>
> Also, please note that the Poetics List is not a > "chat" list and we > discourage the posting of very short messages > intended for only a few > subscribers.
>
> All posts go out not only to list subscribers but > also become a public > part of the list archive on the web. Note that > posting to the list is > a form of publication and that by sending your > message to the list you > formally consent to such web publication. Posts are > currently being > indexed by search engines such as Google. It is not > possible for us to > remove posts from the list archive or to control > search engine > indexing of these posts.

>
> Subscribers only may post to the Poetics List. Send > messages directly > to the list address: [redacted].
>
>
> 3. Subscriptions
>
> *For all subscription requests go to
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html.
>
> *To subscribe for the first time click on "Subscribe > (join) a List."
> Immediately following your subscription to the > poetics listserv we ask > that you email [redacted], subject-line
> "registration," with > your full name, street address, email address, and > telephone number.
> Failure to register at the time of subscription will > result in > automatic deletion from the subscription roll.
>
> *To manage your subscription (for descriptions of > the different > subscription options please see section 3), click on > "Subscriber's > Corner."
>
> Subscriptions to the Poetics List are free of > charge, but formal > registration is required. All other questions about > subscriptions,
> whether about an individual subscription or > subscription policy, > should be addressed to this same administrative > address.

>
> PLEASE NOTE: All subscription-related information > and correspondence > remains absolutely confidential.
>
> All posts to the list must provide your full real > name, as registered.
> If there is any discrepancy between your full name > as it appears in > the "from" line of the message header, please sign > your post at the > bottom. Subscribers who do not include their full > name with each post > will be unsubscribed form the list.
>
> The most frequent problem with subscriptions is > bounced messages. If > your system is often down or if you have a low disk > quota, Poetics > messages may get bounced, which will result in your > subscription being > automatically terminated by the Listserv program and > the automatically > generated message telling you that this has occurred > will also likely > bounce. If this happens, you may re-subscribe to the > list by the same > process described above. One remedy to avoid this > happening in the > future: set your list options to "no-mail" and read > the list on the > web.
>
> 4. Subscription Options
>
> We encourage you to alter your subscription options > via the link on > the right side of the screen at
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html.

> If you would > prefer not to use the web-interface, you may also > email > <[redacted]> the following > commands:
>
> *to subscribe to the Poetics listserv send > [redacted] this one-line message > with no "subject":
>
> *RECOMMENDED: if you wish to read the list on our > web interface and > not receive any messages sent directly, while > remaining subscribed to > the list and so eligible to send us posts, send this > one-line message > to <[redacted]> with no
> "subject": set poetics > nomail. Note: this option is also useful for > temporary suspension of > email service.
>
> *to reactivate Poetics e-mail send > <[redacted]> > this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics > mail
>
> * to receive the list in digest form (you will > receive the day's > individual posts in one email sent just after > midnight EST), send > <[redacted]> this one-line > message with no
> "subject": set poetics digest
>
> *to receive posts in the default option (you will > receive individual > postings immediately), send > <[redacted]> this one-> line message with no "subject": set poetics nodigest
>
> * to receive the list in index form (you will > receive a list, without > the text of the posts, of the subjects discussed > each day along with > the author's name and address and the number of > lines it comprises;

> you can also choose to have the index sent to you in > either plain text > or in HTML format with hyperlinks), send > <[redacted]> this one-line
> message with no
> "subject": set poetics nohtml index --or-- set > poetics html index
>
> PLEASE NOTE: do not leave your Poetics subscription > in default or > digest mode if you are going to be away for any > extended period of > time. Your account may become flooded and you may > lose Poetics > messages as well as other important mail. In such > cases, switch your > subscription to "nomail" as recommended above.
>
> 5. To Unsubscribe
>
> To unsubscribe (or change any of your subscription > options), again, we > strongly encourage you to go to the right-hand side > of the screen at
>
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html
> You may also > may unsubscribe by sending a one-line email to > <[redacted]> with no "subject":
>
> If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please > note: sometimes > your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your > system > administrator. If this happens you will not be able > to send messages > continue to receive > mail from the Poetics List. To avoid this problem, > unsub using your > old address, then resubscribe with your new email > address.

>
>
> 6. Cautions
>
> "Flame" messages will not be tolerated on the > Poetics List. We define > 'flaming' as any post that resembles a personal > attack or personal > insult to anyone--subscriber or not. This of course > includes racist, > sexist, or other slurs as well as ad hominem > arguments in which the > person rather than their work is attacked; in other > words while > critique of a person's work is welcome (critical > inquiry is one of the > main functions of the list), this critique cannot > extend to a critique > or criticism of the person.
>
> The listserv is intended to be a productive communal > space for > discussion and announcements; as such, subscribers > who do not follow > listserv policy will be removed from the > subscription roll.
>
> In enforcing this policy, the editors must consider > sometimes > competing interests. The basis for our decisions, > however, rests with > our collective judgment about the kind of space we > want for the list.
>
> For reasons of basic security, we do not allow > pseudonymous > subscriptions. All messages intended for the Poetics > List should be > sent in Text-Only format, without attachments. We do > not accept > HTML-formatted messages or attached files. As a > general rule, keep > individual posts to 1,000 words or less.

>
> Please do not publish list postings without the > express permission of > the author. Posting on the list is a form of > publication. Copyright > for all material posted on Poetics remains with the > author; material > from this list and its archive may not be reproduced > without the > author's permission, beyond the standard rights > accorded by "fair use"
> of published materials.
>
> All material on the Poetics List remains the > property of the authors;
> before you reproduce this material, in whole or in > part, we ask that > you get permission (by email is fine) from the > authors. If they give > permission, then we ask only that you say that the > post or posts > appeared originally on the Poetics List > [give date and say:]
> Used by permission of the author.
>
> As an outside maximum, we will accept no more than 4 > messages per day > from any one subscriber. Also, given that our goal > is a manageable > list (manageable both for moderators and > subscribers), the list > accepts 75 or fewer messages per day, though these > paramenters may be > changed at the discretion of the list moderator.
>
> Like all systems, the listserv will sometimes be > down: if you feel > your message has been delayed or lost, please wait > at least one day > to see if it shows up, then check the archive to be > sure the message > is not posted there; if you still feel there is a > problem, you may > wish to contact the editors at > <[redacted]>.

>
>
>

_____
___ Any questions? Get answers on any topic at www.Answers.yahoo.com. Try it now.

↑ Index

422. Alexander Jorgensen
Our messages are being monitored
Mon 12 Feb 2007

I was told that my post, I a responsible member of the world community, will wait 1-3 days before my message is posted. China, man. <ew!>

AJ
--- Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]> wrote:

> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat
>
> On 2/12/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]>
> wrote:
> >
> > Ah, this is one of the most beautiful pieces I've
> read in a long time;
> > there's something 17th18th century running > through it, those references
> > to Pepys for example though I still prefer Johnson
> they're still

> > associated in my mind. The incantatory prose > itself ticks away, I miss the > > digital, though there are slight references; the > poem is mechanism, the > > digital might as well not be a watch since it is > watched itself, clocked
> > itself, in order that the parts function together.
> Now we will have > > asynchronous computers in the future, what will
> that be light?
> >
> > In regard to moderation, I'm not so positive as > the two other members who > > have written in; poets are an unruly bunch and
> that seems to be at the > > heart of remaking language itself. Here we > literally have to have Amy's > > approval, and it's unclear where that stands, what > is acceptable to her > > and what is not. As far as unpleasant posts to a > list - there's no reason
> > at all why posts _should_ be pleasant or > etiquette-fulfilled, as long as > > there is no outandout racism, name-calling, what > have you. For poets are > > also a stubborn bunch; it takes courage to write > poetry, perhaps the most > > courage at all, and it's a shame so little of it > appears in this forum.
> > (The email list I run with Sandy Baldwin, wryting, > is filled with it by > > the way.)
> >
> > For my recent work, just check the blog or Youtube
> at times, although the > > accompanying texts are absent; for example
> >
> > "for valeska gert
> >
> > ruptured mess of the avatars banged into one > another maybe they fucked in > > any case whatever skin they had disappeared in any > case the lens blew out

> > with all the action in any case i'm exhausted from > their screaming why not > > mash them mosh them why not mash us mosh us in any > case by this time it's > > all debris by this time i'm under the cabinet by > this time doctor leopold
> > konninger returns with horn-rimmed dark glasses in > any case he says if you > > can't dance to it anita berber you might as well > explode valeska gert
> >
> > http://www.asondheim.org/ruptured.mp4
> > http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R54HTJUfeiM
> > http://www.asondheim.org/bubbled.mp4
> >
> > when history becomes histrionic naked dance
> parades on the silver screen
> > oh they look so good light shining through the > bones"
> >
> > -- Valeska Gert was a Jewish dancer of the > grotesque during the Weimar
> > years.
> >
> > -- Gabe and Amy, good luck!
> >
> >
>
==========
==========
> > Work on YouTube, blog at
> http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> > Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org .
> Email: [redacted].
> > http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim
> for theory; also check
> > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on > books, cds, performance,
> > dvds, etc.
>
==========

==========
> >
>

Don't pick lemons.
See all the new 2007 cars at Yahoo! Autos.
http://autos.yahoo.com/new_cars.html

↑ Index

423. Tom W. Lewis
Re: Poetics List Welcome Message
Mon 12 Feb 2007

>The current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, and a maximum of >four messages per subscriber per day; but these limits are subject to >change withouth notice.

4 messages a day now?! never have the moderated enjoyed such liberty at the hands of their moderators (or so it would appear)

but I'm curious (in my giddy glee) about what precisely this project's expectations are... [bowing head to parse]:

to support, inform, and extend

those directions

in poetry

committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations

of form and/or/as content

to the questioning of received forms and styles, and

to the creation

of the otherwise unimagined, untried,
unexpected, improbable, and impossible.

Innovation, then;
questioning;
creation --

these the goals of this virtual turkey-shoot.

if anyone else has thoughts, elaborations, or counter-readings of "what this is all about," write 'em so we can all see.

tl

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]]
On Behalf Of Poetics List
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 14:51
To: [redacted]
Subject: Poetics List Welcome Message

Please note changes to the Welcome Message:

The Poetics List

Sponsored by: The Electronic Poetry Center (SUNY-Buffalo/University of Pennsylvania) and the Regan Chair (Department of English, Penn) & Center for Program in Contemporary Writing (Penn)

Poetics List Editor: Amy King

Poetics List Editorial Board:
Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Amy King, Joel Kuszai,
Nick Piombino

Note: this Welcome message is also available at the EPC/@Buffalo page

Poetics Subscription Registration (required)
poetics.list --at -- gmail.com
note our new address!

Poetics Subscription Requests:
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html

Poetics Listserv Archive:
http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html

Note that any correspondence sent to the Poetics List administration account takes about ten days, for response; mail to this account is checked about once per week.

C O N T E N T S:

1. About the Poetics List
2. Posting to the List
3. Subscriptions
4. Subscription Options

5. To Unsubscribe
6. Cautions

Above the world-weary horizons
New obstacles for exchange arise
Or unfold,
O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

With the preceding epigraph, the Poetics Listserv was founded by Charles Bernstein in late 1993. Now in its fourth incarnation, the list has over 1300 subscribers worldwide. We also have a substantial number of nonsubscribing readers, who access the list through our web site (see archive URL above).

The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. While we recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities for exchange, we request that those participating in this forum keep in mind the specialized and focused nature of this project and respect our decision to operate a moderated list. The Poetics List exists to support and encourage divergent points of view on innovative forms of modern and contemporary poetry and poetics, and we are committed to do what is necessary to preserve this space for such dialog.

Due to the high number of subscribers, we no longer maintain the open format with which the list began (at under 100 subscribers). The specific form of moderation that we employ is a relatively fluid one: in most cases, messages are reviewed after having been posted to the list, and difficulties resolved on that basis; however, the listserv editorial board may shift between this and a pre-review mode which calls for all messages to be read and approved before being forwarded to the list. We prefer to avoid this option as it hampers the spontaneity of discussion that we hope to promote. In addition to these options, the editorial board will unsubscribe individuals if they are not, in our opinion, productively contributing to the list or following our guidelines. We remain committed to this editorial function as a defining element of the Poetics List.

Please also note that this is a not a general interest poetry list and information about this list should not be posted to directories of poetry lists. The idea is to keep the list membership to those with specific engagement related to the list's stated orientation. The current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, and a maximum of four messages per subscriber per day; but these limits are subject to change withouth notice.

In addition to being archived at through the EPC (http://epc.buffalo.edu) and at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas.

Note also that Roof Books published Joel Kuszai's edited collection of the Poetics List; this is available from ROOF and also on line at the EPC.

2. Posting to the List

editors in keeping with the goals of the list as articulated in this Welcome Message (see section 1).

Please note that while this list is primarily concerned with discussions of poetry and poetics, messages relating to politics and political activism, film, art, media, and so forth are also welcome. We strongly encourage subscribers to post information, including web links, relating to publications (print and internet), reading series, and blogs that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this list. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications (print or digital) are always welcome.

We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries.

Also, please note that the Poetics List is not a "chat" list and we discourage the posting of very short messages intended for only a few subscribers.

All posts go out not only to list subscribers but also become a public part of the list archive on the web. Note that posting to the list is a form of publication and that by sending your message to the list you formally consent to such web publication. Posts are currently being indexed by search engines such as Google. It is not possible for us to remove posts from the list archive or to control search engine indexing of these posts.

Subscribers only may post to the Poetics List. Send messages directly to the list address: [redacted].

3. Subscriptions

*For all subscription requests go to http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html.

*To subscribe for the first time click on "Subscribe (join) a List." Immediately following your subscription to the poetics listserv we ask that you email [redacted], subject-line "registration," with your full name, street address, email address, and telephone number. Failure to register at the time of subscription will result in automatic deletion from the subscription roll.

*To manage your subscription (for descriptions of the different subscription options please see section 3), click on "Subscriber's Corner."

Subscriptions to the Poetics List are free of charge, but formal registration is required. All other questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to this same administrative address.

PLEASE NOTE: All subscription-related information and correspondence remains absolutely confidential.

All posts to the list must provide your full real name, as registered. If there is any discrepancy between your full name as it appears in the "from" line of the message header, please sign your post at the bottom. Subscribers who do not include their full name with each post will be unsubscribed form the list.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced, which will result in your subscription being automatically terminated by the Listserv program and the automatically generated message telling you that this has occurred will also likely bounce. If this happens, you may re-subscribe to the list by the same process described above. One remedy to avoid this happening in the future: set your list options to "no-mail" and read the list on the web.

4. Subscription Options

We encourage you to alter your subscription options via the link on the right side of the screen at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html. If you would prefer not to use the web-interface, you may also email <[redacted]> the following commands:

*to subscribe to the Poetics listserv send [redacted] this one-line message with no "subject":

*RECOMMENDED: if you wish to read the list on our web interface and not receive any messages sent directly, while remaining subscribed to the list and so eligible to send us posts, send this one-line message to <[redacted]> with no "subject": set poetics nomail. Note: this option is also useful for temporary suspension of email service.

*to reactivate Poetics e-mail send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics mail

* to receive the list in digest form (you will receive the day's individual posts in one email sent just after midnight EST), send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics digest

*to receive posts in the default option (you will receive individual postings immediately), send <[redacted]> this one- line message with no "subject": set poetics nodigest

* to receive the list in index form (you will receive a list, without the text of the posts, of the subjects discussed each day along with the author's name and address and the number of lines it comprises; you can also choose to have the index sent to you in either plain text or in HTML format with hyperlinks), send <[redacted]> this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics nohtml index --or-- set poetics html index

PLEASE NOTE: do not leave your Poetics subscription in default or digest mode if you are going to be away for any extended period of time. Your account may become flooded and you may lose Poetics messages as well as other important mail. In such cases, switch your subscription to "nomail" as recommended above.

5. To Unsubscribe

To unsubscribe (or change any of your subscription options), again, we strongly encourage you to go to the right-hand side of the screen at http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html You may also may unsubscribe by sending a one-line email to

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note: sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages old address, then resubscribe with your new email address.

6. Cautions

"Flame" messages will not be tolerated on the Poetics List. We define 'flaming' as any post that resembles a personal attack or personal insult to anyone--subscriber or not. This of course includes racist, sexist, or other slurs as well as ad hominem arguments in which the person rather than their work is attacked; in other words while critique of a person's work is welcome (critical inquiry is one of the main functions of the list), this critique cannot extend to a critique or criticism of the person.

The listserv is intended to be a productive communal space for discussion and announcements; as such, subscribers who do not follow listserv policy will be removed from the subscription roll.

In enforcing this policy, the editors must consider sometimes competing interests. The basis for our decisions, however, rests with our collective judgment about the kind of space we want for the list.

For reasons of basic security, we do not allow pseudonymous subscriptions. All messages intended for the Poetics List should be sent in Text-Only format, without attachments. We do not accept HTML-formatted messages or attached files. As a general rule, keep individual posts to 1,000 words or less.

Please do not publish list postings without the express permission of the author. Posting on the list is a form of publication. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use" of published materials.

All material on the Poetics List remains the property of the authors; before you reproduce this material, in whole or in part, we ask that you get permission (by email is fine) from the authors. If they give permission, then we ask only that you say that the post or posts appeared originally on the Poetics List Used by permission of the author.

As an outside maximum, we will accept no more than 4 messages per day from any one subscriber. Also, given that our goal is a manageable list (manageable both for moderators and subscribers), the list accepts 75 or fewer messages per day, though these paramenters may be changed at the discretion of the list moderator.

Like all systems, the listserv will sometimes be down: if you feel your message has been delayed or lost, please wait at least one day to see if it shows up, then check the archive to be sure the message is not posted there; if you still feel there is a problem, you may wish to contact the editors at <[redacted]>.

↑ Index

424. Maria Damon

Fwd: Dylan symposium registration now OPEN

Mon 12 Feb 2007

> Dylan symposium-early registration through March 12
>
> Highway 61 Revisited: Dylan's Road from Minnesota to the World
> University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, MN
> March 24-March 27, 2007
> For program and registration information:

> <http://weisman.umn.edu/exhibits/upcomingDylan.html>http://weisman.umn.edu/exhibits/upcomingDylan.html
>
> Assessing Bob Dylan's work, sources, and international influence, this symposium features Greil Marcus, Michael Gray, Christopher Ricks, Alessandro Carrera, Anne Waldman, Daphne Brooks, Matt Friedberger, Gayle Wald, Dave Marsh, Thomas Crow, CP Lee, Darcey Steinke, Robert Polito, Stephen Scobie, Dylan Hicks and other musicians, and more. The symposium is presented in conjunction with the Weisman Art Museum exhibition Bob Dylan's American Journey, 1956-66, on view through April 29, 2007.
>
> Jill Boldenow
> Weisman Art Museum
> 333 E. River Road
> Minneapolis, MN 55455
> [redacted]

↑ Index

425. Dan Coffey
Re: Jed Rasula's Poetics of Embodiment
Mon 12 Feb 2007

You probably have a 50/50 chance or better of getting it through interlibrary loan if you have a university connection.

(confidential to George B:

wood
---
carry

On 2/12/07, eleni Stecopoulos <[redacted]> wrote:
> To the person looking for this: it's his dissertation, from UC Santa Cruz.
> Should be available from UMI.
>
> _____
> Don't miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft > Office Live http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

426. Tony Trigilio
Court Green #4 / Dossier: Political Poetry
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Announcing the release of COURT GREEN #4, featuring Nin Andrews, Kurt Brown, Brenda Coultas, Christopher Davis, Elaine Equi, Terrance Hayes, George Kalamaris, Joan Larkin, D.H. Lawrence, Bernadette Mayer, Gail Mazur, Sheila E. Murphy, Naomi Shihab Nye, Alan Michael Parker, Muriel Rukeyser, Jerome Sala, Aaron Smith, Novica Tadic, Susan Tichy, Susie Timmons, Nick Twemlow, Lee Upton, Joshua Marie Wilkinson, and many others.

Our special dossier section in this issue features a collection of political poetry.

Copies for $10 each (checks payable to Columbia College Chicago) through the address below. Subscriptions are $25 for three years (three issues).

COURT GREEN
Columbia College Chicago
English Department
600 South Michigan Ave.
Chicago, IL 60605.

COURT GREEN is a poetry journal published annually in association with the English Department at Columbia College Chicago, and is edited by Lisa Fishman, Arielle Greenberg, Tony Trigilio, and David Trinidad. Submissions of poetry are welcomed each year from March 1 through June 30 (no more than 5 pages of poems). Email submissions not accepted. Submissions without self-addressed, stamped envelope will not be returned.

http://english.colum.edu/courtreen
(the web site will be updated soon)

↑ Index

427. Robin Hamilton
Re: praise to the watch
Mon 12 Feb 2007

From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>

> Looking at the paintings of Wm Hogarth - was just struck by how many are of women and watches/clocks. The watch and women have this buried history that goes weirdly back to people like Pepys and Tompion. I'm not sure yet what to make of it. Gabe

Ah, that confirms it -- I've now got an Unarguable Reason to go to the Hogarth exhibition on at the Tate at the moment. I'll keep an eye out for watches (though they'd all be analogue in his paintings, pace Alan Sondheim, surely?) and let you know what I notice.

(I only recently came on his [later] paintings, as opposed to all the usual Progress series of etchings, and they blew my mind. Reports of the Tate exhibition that I've read suggest that they're juxtaposing the two periods in Hogarth's work.)

Robin

↑ Index

428. Tony Trigilio

Sorry, typo on the Court Green URL

Mon 12 Feb 2007

Apologies for the mistake. Should be:

http://english.colum.edu/courtgreen/

(Web site is not updated yet, though.)

Tony

↑ Index

429. Elizabeth Treadwell

Place & Wertheim at Small Press Traffic Fri 2/16

Mon 12 Feb 2007

Small Press Traffic is pleased to present
Vanessa Place & Christine Wertheim

Friday, February 16, 2007 at 7:30 p.m.?

Vanessa Place is the author of a 50,000-word, one-sentence novel, Dies: A Sentence (2005), and co-founder/editor at Les Figues Press, publisher of the TrenchArt series of experimental literature. Her work has appeared in Film Comment, the LA Weekly Literary Supplement, and Five Fingers Review. Of Dies, the American Book Review has this to say: "... heaven may be no more than this grace of an extended lucidity in a mind struck brilliant by the imminent threat of fate.... as one comma leads to another in this delightful tour de force of a hopelessly grim predicament."

Christine Wertheim writes poetics and aesthetic criticism. Her book +|'me'S-pace, will be published in 2007 by Les Figues Press. Other work has appeared in La Petite Zine, Five Fingers Review, Cabinet, Open Letter, Art History vs Aesthetics and X-tra. With Matias Viegener, she co-organizes an annual writing conference whose publications are Séance (2006) and The?noulipian Analects

(2007). She teaches literature, writing and feminisms in the school of Critical Studies at CalArts. ”helled by her being” – Christine Wertheim, like Caroline Bergvall, has got to be seen and heard in the flesh. ???$5-10 sliding scale, free to SPT members & CCA community. Timken Lecture Hall CCA 1111 -- 8th St, SF for directions & map please see: http://www.sptraffic.org/html/fac_dir.html

Elizabeth Treadwell, Director
Small Press Traffic
Literary Arts Center at CCA
1111 -- 8th Street
San Francisco, CA 94107
[redacted]
http://www.sptraffic.org

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft Office Live http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

430. Eric
Re: Our messages are being monitored
Mon 12 Feb 2007

> China, man. <ew!>

Argot is "the great firewall of China." A software called the Great Ladder supposedly helps people get over the great (fire)wall.

↑ Index

431. Vernon Frazer
Re: Our messages are being monitored
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Hi Alex

Don't blame this one on China. I got the same message here in the People's Democracy of South Florida. And then the message in question appeared a few minutes later. Go figure.

Vernon
http://vernonfrazer.com

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Alexander Jorgensen
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 4:01 PM

To: [redacted]
Subject: Our messages are being monitored

I was told that my post, I a responsible member of the world community, will wait 1-3 days before my message is posted. China, man. <ew!>

AJ
--- Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]> wrote:

> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat
>
> On 2/12/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]>
> wrote:
> >
> > Ah, this is one of the most beautiful pieces I've
> read in a long time;
> > there's something 17th18th century running > through it, those references
> > to Pepys for example though I still prefer Johnson
> they're still > > associated in my mind. The incantatory prose > itself ticks away, I miss the > > digital, though there are slight references; the > poem is mechanism, the > > digital might as well not be a watch since it is > watched itself, clocked
> > itself, in order that the parts function together.
> Now we will have
> > asynchronous computers in the future, what will
> that be light?
> >
> > In regard to moderation, I'm not so positive as > the two other members who > > have written in; poets are an unruly bunch and
> that seems to be at the > > heart of remaking language itself. Here we > literally have to have Amy's > > approval, and it's unclear where that stands, what
> is acceptable to her

> > and what is not. As far as unpleasant posts to a > list - there's no reason
> > at all why posts _should_ be pleasant or > etiquette-fulfilled, as long as > > there is no outandout racism, name-calling, what > have you. For poets are > > also a stubborn bunch; it takes courage to write > poetry, perhaps the most > > courage at all, and it's a shame so little of it > appears in this forum.
> > (The email list I run with Sandy Baldwin, wryting,
> is filled with it by > > the way.)
> >
> > For my recent work, just check the blog or Youtube
> at times, although the > > accompanying texts are absent; for example
> >
> > "for valeska gert
> >
> > ruptured mess of the avatars banged into one > another maybe they fucked in > > any case whatever skin they had disappeared in any > case the lens blew out
> > with all the action in any case i'm exhausted from > their screaming why not > > mash them mosh them why not mash us mosh us in any > case by this time it's > > all debris by this time i'm under the cabinet by > this time doctor leopold
> > konninger returns with horn-rimmed dark glasses in > any case he says if you > > can't dance to it anita berber you might as well > explode valeska gert
> >
> > http://www.asondheim.org/ruptured.mp4
> > http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R54HTJUfeiM
> > http://www.asondheim.org/bubbled.mp4
> >
> > when history becomes histrionic naked dance
> parades on the silver screen
> > oh they look so good light shining through the > bones"

> >
> > -- Valeska Gert was a Jewish dancer of the > grotesque during the Weimar
> > years.
> >
> > -- Gabe and Amy, good luck!
> >
> >
>
==========
> > Work on YouTube, blog at
> http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> > Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org .
> Email: [redacted].
> > http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim
> for theory; also check
> > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on > books, cds, performance,
> > dvds, etc.
>
==========
> >
>

Don't pick lemons.
See all the new 2007 cars at Yahoo! Autos.
http://autos.yahoo.com/new_cars.html

↑ Index

432. Anselm Berrigan

Fwd: Bowery Broadside Series 2,3,4 Pass it on!

Mon 12 Feb 2007

16 Feb 2007, 7:00 to 8:30
Bowery & Bleeker, New York, New York 11206
Cost : 2 Drink Minimum (free admission)

Farfalla Press presents the second installment of the Bowery Broadside Series featuring Marcella Durand and Jesse Fiorini. First 50 people receive free broadsides. All original art work for the series provided by George Schneeman
Â
All events are 7:00 to 8:30 pm
Â
March, 16th
Lee Renaldo and Jessica Rogers
Â
April 20th
Anne Waldman and Corrine Fitzpatrick
Â

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more. =0

↑ Index

433. reJennifer Bartlett
BugHoouse
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Does anyone know how to reach Doug Blumhardt, Eric Peterson, or Noah Stroehle? These were editors of a AZ/NM magazine called Bughouse in the mid-1990's. Please backchannel!

_____ FREE online classifieds from Windows Live Expo – buy and sell with people you know http://clk.atdmt.com/MSN/go/msnnkwex0010000001msn/direct/01/?href=http://expo.live.com?s_cid=Hotmail_tagline_12/06

↑ Index

434. Potree Journal
Call for submissions
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Little Red Leaves is a collectively edited online poetry journal. Our first issue will be released on MayDay (May 1st 2007). Since this is a collective, we do not subscribe to any one poetics/school of poetry etc. and the hope is that this will still ensure an interesting read. We also have a chapbook press, Dos Press, which will be debuting in May as well.

(In addition to this post, information about the journal can be found at littleredleavesjournal.blogspot.com)

*General Submissions: Please send 3-5 poems (of any length) as a Word, RTF, or PDF attachment to [redacted]. In the subject line include your name and "general."

*Other Submissions: Each editor might also decide to edit a 'special section' with more specific guidelines. These will be posted separately as such.

Simultaneous submissions are accepted as long as you let us know if someone else has snatched your brilliant poem first.
We do not consider previously published work.

Please allow six to eight weeks for a response. After eight weeks, please query if you haven't heard a word.

*Queries: Send any questions you might have to [redacted] with "Query" as your subject line.

Special Calls :
Currently we have two calls- one for long poems and one for entre-genres.
Please see the blog for updates/editions to these.

We hope to hear from you!

Alison Cimino
Michelle Detorie
Julia Drescher
Chad Heltzel
CJ Martin
Pablo Miguel Martinez
Karen McBurney

↑ Index

435. Catherine Daly
Re: The Hoohah Dialogues
Mon 12 Feb 2007

---

did anybody bother to ask the playwright???

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

436. Jennifer Karmin
Chicago Performance Symposium: February 22-23
Mon 12 Feb 2007

The Disappearance of Latitude:
Live Presence and Realtime in Contemporary Practices

A two-day symposium
Thursday February 22 & Friday February 23
http://www.openportchicago.com
Chicago, IL
Free

This symposium brings together theorists and practitioners from a variety of backgrounds to present lectures and participate in discussions formulated around the themes of “Live” and “Realtime,” and topics that arise from this convergence of terms. As with the OPENPORT performance series, the intention of the symposium is to group speakers from fields and backgrounds that, while perhaps not normally exposed to one another, may share a common vocabulary. This symposium is presented in collaboration with The School of the Art Institute of Chicago’s Performance Department.

ADVANCE REGISTRATION ESSENTIAL:
email [redacted] or write to SAIC, Performance Department, c/o Mark Jeffery, 280 S. Columbus Drive, Chicago, IL 60603. Please include name, phone number, email address, affiliation (if any), number and names of people you are reserving for.
Reservation deadline: Monday, February 19.

Opening Address
Adrian Heathfield (UK) - Impress of Time
Thursday February 22, 6pm
SAIC Auditorium, 280 S. Columbus Drive

Moving away from ideas of performance as a momentary shattering, a technique of disappearance, Heathfield explores the way that performance remains in and through the experience of duration, and how performance allows a vital space for the lived understanding of time within the contemporary.

Friday February 23, 9am – 4:30pm
SAIC Performance Space 012 &
Base Space, 280 S. Columbus Drive

Friday's symposium events consist of talks from two distinguished visiting scholars, in conjunction with panel presentations from OPENPORT artists and SAIC faculty members.

Visiting Scholars:
Wendy Hui Kyong Chun, Brown University (US):
Realtime Imagined Networks
N. Katherine Hayles, UCLA (US):
The Time of Electronic Literature

OPENPORT Artists / Panelists:
jonCates (US) – OPENPORT artist/SAIC Faculty John Cayley (UK) – OPENPORT artist
Lin Hixson (US) – SAIC Faculty
Kirsten Lavers (UK) – OPENPORT artist
Matthew Goulish (US) – SAIC Faculty
Laetitia Sonami (US) – OPENPORT artist
Alan Sondheim (US) – OPENPORT artist
Fiona Wright (UK) – OPENPORT artist

___ Expecting? Get great news right away with email Auto-Check. Try the Yahoo! Mail Beta.
http://advision.webevents.yahoo.com/mailbeta/newmail_tools.html

↑ Index

437. Stephen Vincent
Mom w/first published poem
Mon 12 Feb 2007

http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

For those with a continuing interest, a new blog entry re my almost 91- year-old mom's apparent, totally unintended, new career in poetry - Re her responses to her recent publication in Jow Lindsay's edit of the London mag, Everyone's Cup of Tea! (Also an event in itself, the mag!).

Enjoy,

Stephen V

↑ Index

438. Chris Stroffolino
Re: haiku
Mon 12 Feb 2007

Michael---

Part of my issue with the invocation of those 'legitimate' Euro-
American modernist analogies for haiku practice is because they rely on a notion of 'objective' and 'things' which still largely operate against a backdrop, or within an 'understanding,' of a 'subject-object' dichotomy that lopsidedly favors one side....
They both become such 'reductive' catchphrases, even if ideally they open the door to a less clamped-down understanding.

I've used both phrases in non-pejorative ways in certain (pedagogical) situations,
but when people try to separate the "Objective Correlative" (GOOD)
from the "pathetic fallacy" (BAD),
I tend to want to "elevate" the "pathetic fallacy" to acknowledge that the "objective-subjective matrix" is not a one-way street.
As for "no ideas but in things," what I tend to see in the very same poems that people often champion for meeting the non-pejorative standards of exemplary in the "no ideas but in things vein," is "No Ideas but in relationships"--- so, in that hAIKU you quoted, that's what I saw....a relationship between things (but at the same time "things" that are
'of' relationship.... as it seems to me (and I believe you'd have to agree) that the best haiku involve the relationship between the 'word' and 'thing,' the word as thing, and has as much of counter-pull away from the 'thing' as toward it....

Is it really "the emotive power BEHIND things" as you put it? I can appreciate that you want to be a spokesman for haiku, and I am not going to claim that I am as learned in it, as you, and am quite willing, along with Barry Schwabsky and others, to let you have that word, but, as an outsider, I am curious as to what role you think what a contemporary American (or from wherever) would call 'humor' or 'wit' had, or may have had, in that founding impulse to the haiku.

You've sufficiently established that the traditional haiku form is a more serious art than many give it credit for, but I'm curious in what ways you also find that the traiditional haiku form a more hilarious art form than many give it credit for. I ask this question with no disrespect to you, or the traditional haiku form as you understand it, but more out of a genuine desire to BE CONVINCED by your understanding of the form, because, for me (whether rightly or wrongly), there can't be one (high seriousness) without the other ('hilarity' for lack of a better word-thing approximation)....

Chris

On Feb 9, 2007, at 2:43 PM, Michael Dylan Welch wrote:

> Chris Stroffolino also writes that one of the "shorthand staples of early 20th c.---eliot's objective correlative? or no ideas but in things?" . . . "seems to distort/ reduce too the haiku suggestiveness."
>
> I would answer by saying this: Because haiku -- perhaps more than any other poetry (because it's so short) -- relies on the emotive power behind things, the notion of the objective correlative increases its suggestiveness rather than distort or reduce it. We have an immediate reaction to the word chair that's different, say, than our reaction to the word soup. And think, too, of how we react differently to "easy chair" compared with "electric chair." I'm just naming things with these examples, but these objects correlate to immediate emotions or feelings, or connotations and associations. Even a "stone" will carry some feeling for us when we read the word in a poem, though of course the nature of that feeling may vary from person to person. There's more to the concept of the objective correlative than just this, of course, but haiku relies on the emotive power of things perhaps more strongly than other poetry. To the extent that haiku is mostly objective, focusing on nouns a nd things such as they are (yet presented in such a way to imply a relationship and an intuitive feeling), haiku strongly rely on the emotive weight associated with each thing named in the poem. Certainly there are subjective or nonliteral elements in some haiku (such as in Shiki's poem, "for me going / for you staying / two autumns," or Basho's haiku about the cicada's cries piercing the rocks), but not every haiku is or needs to be strictly objective. It's a matter of finding balance, within each poem, and in a particular poem relative to other poems. They are examples of controlling the objectivity and subjectivity, and typically, where there's a subjective element in haiku, it's usually in the context of something that's clearly objective -- something that grounds the rest of the poem so the subjective element isn't overpowering.
>
> Sure, you can do ____ (whatever: fill in the blank) in a haiku -- but not necessarily often (heck, even have a title once in a very rare while, if it somehow really needs it). Haiku is not a strict set of rules (don't think that I think it is). Rather, haiku is a field of multiple targets, and a good haiku will hit multiple targets at once, but not necessarily all of them -- and > occasionally miss one or two of them (on purpose) that certain people might feel are more important and should never be missed. That's why it's good to see haiku as a continuum with other kinds of poetry. Poetry first, labels later (if at all). But, I hasten to say, as soon as you label something as haiku, it had better be a proper understanding of haiku that you mean -- and for too many folks, that's not the case.

>
> Michael

↑ Index

439. Alison Croggon

Re: haiku

Mon 12 Feb 2007

I guess the haiku interests me most of all in the context of haibun, that prose/poem nexus is a happening thing. From what I understand, the conventions of seasons &c are all invented by Basho anyway - would he have wanted slavish copyists?

On 2/13/07, Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]> wrote:
> Michael---
>
> Part of my issue with the invocation of those 'legitimate' Euro-
> American modernist analogies for haiku practice > is because they rely on a notion of 'objective' and 'things' which > still largely operate against a backdrop, or within > an 'understanding,' of a 'subject-object' dichotomy that lopsidedly > favors one side....
> They both become such 'reductive' catchphrases, even if ideally they > open the door to a less clamped-down understanding.
>
> I've used both phrases in non-pejorative ways in certain > (pedagogical) situations,
> but when people try to separate the "Objective Correlative" (GOOD)
> from the "pathetic fallacy" (BAD),
> I tend to want to "elevate" the "pathetic fallacy" to acknowledge > that the "objective-subjective matrix" is not a one-way street.
> As for "no ideas but in things," what I tend to see in the very same > poems that people often champion for meeting the > non-pejorative standards of exemplary in the "no ideas but in things > vein," is "No Ideas but in relationships"---

Hey Chris, you're my kind of guy. Only recently I was rehabilitating the pathetic fallacy from Ruskin's character assassinations - all that manly Victorianism caused him a few problems, I think.

Cheers

A

--
Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

440. Mark Weiss
Re: The Hoohah Dialogues
Tue 13 Feb 2007

That would be an even bigger news story.

At 08:39 PM 2/12/2007, you wrote:
>did anybody bother to ask the playwright???
>
>--
>All best,
>Catherine Daly
>[redacted]

↑ Index

441. Joel Lewis
ornette & the grammies
Tue 13 Feb 2007

I had the privelige of interviewing Ornette Coleman last year at his loft & the impression I came away with was a man who put no walls between categories of music. Is it really such a horror to be asked to be a presenter of an award? Like many so-called avant-garde jazz musicians, Coleman has always wanted to be present his music to as wide as possible an audience --hence Prime Time, the attempts at using vocalists here and there and the classical music. As early as '62, at his Town Hall concert which was released at ESP, Ornette performed with an r n' b group --which sadly was not released and apparently no longer exists on tape.

Actually amazing that he got the lifetime award!

joel lewis

↑ Index

442. Martha Deed

Re: Mom w/first published poem

Tue 13 Feb 2007

Dear Stephen--

This is both powerful and touching. I really liked the originality of your mother's words, too, both in the poem and in her discussion with you of her poem -- her connection to the poem. And -- your blog entry is really an instance of image and text reinforcing one another.

What she produces, what you facilitate, takes one beyond some of the dichotomies we often think about here.

I hope that you continue to announce her progress here.

Martha

----- Original Message -----
From: "Stephen Vincent" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 9:53 PM
Subject: Mom w/first published poem

> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
> For those with a continuing interest, a new blog entry re my almost 91-> year-old mom's apparent, totally unintended, new career in poetry - Re her > responses to her recent publication in Jow Lindsay's edit of the London mag,
> Everyone's Cup of Tea! (Also an event in itself, the mag!).
>
>
> Enjoy,
>
> Stephen V
>
>
> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.36/681 - Release Date: 2/11/2007
6:50 PM

>
>

↑ Index

443. Paul Nelson
Re: Mom w/first published poem
Tue 13 Feb 2007

I tried to leave a comment on your blog, with no luck, so:

Stephen,

I tried to leave a comment on your blog, with no luck, so:

I read about this on the SUNY-Buffalo list and I find the whole thing delightful. Having just gone to L.A. for my 79 year old Aunt's Memorial Service, I can better appreciate the effort to keep a loved one around in the wily crannies of cyberspace. Good going Barbara. My Aunt was named Barbara as is my sister. I very much enjoyed the poem.

Paul Nelson

Paul E. Nelson
www.GlobalVoicesRadio.org
www.SPLAB.org
908 I. St. N.E. #4
Slaughter, WA 98002
[redacted] or [redacted]

----- Original Message ----
From: Stephen Vincent <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 6:53:39 PM
Subject: Mom w/first published poem

http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

For those with a continuing interest, a new blog entry re my almost 91- year-old mom's apparent, totally unintended, new career in poetry - Re her responses to her recent publication in Jow Lindsay's edit of the London mag, Everyone's Cup of Tea! (Also an event in itself, the mag!).

Enjoy,

Stephen V

↑ Index

444. David A. Kirschenbaum
Jill Stengel Featured at www.notellmotel.org/
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Hi all,

Jill Stengel, swell editor of a+bend and mem and swell poet, too, is the featured poet for this valentine's week.

http://www.notellmotel.org/

the first poem is at the bottom of the page--you can work your way up. there will be more each day through friday.

Enjoy,
david

↑ Index

445. Marcus Bales
Two Events At Gallery 324 Saturday February 24
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Two Events At Gallery 324 Saturday February 24

Saturday At Noon:

Terry Provost, Wanda Sobieska, and JE Stanley will read their poems, followed by an open mike reading.

Saturday at 7 pm:

Celebrate the launching of "Christ Couture" Fashions, uniquely designed by Veda.

When: Saturday February 24, 2007
Where: Galleria Mall, Gallery 324
1301 East 9th Street
Cleveland, Ohio 44114
ENTER THROUGH PARKING GARAGE OFF LAKESIDE
Time: 7 pm
Admission: $10 at the door
Cash Bar

For more information: Veda 216/[redacted]

↑ Index

446. Jesse Glass
Your Chance To Learn What Haiku Really Is
Tue 13 Feb 2007

---------- Meikai University Seeks Part-Time Instructors For its English Program

Job Description
1. Position: Part-time instructor (2 to 6 koma$B!G(Bs a week; one koma is for 90 minutes)
2. Openings: 2 or 3 positions
3. Course to be taught: English for communication purposes (intensive program with small classes of 15 and medium-size classes for non-English majors)
4. Term of contract: one year renewable
5. Remuneration: \23,000 to \30,000 a month for 12 months per 1koma/week
6. Start of employment: April 1, 2007
7. Qualification: a) native or near-native speakers of English
b) M.A. or its equivalent
8. Application material: a) CV
b) deadline: Feb. 24, 2007
c) an interview will be held in the days that will follow

Send material to:
Professor Masahito Watanabe
Meikai University, 8 Akemi,Urayasu, Chiba $B")(B279-8550
E-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

447. Anny Ballardini
Re: Poetics List Welcome Message
Tue 13 Feb 2007

___Special congratulations to Amy King___

my usual congratulations to Charles Bernstein, the founder, and Nick Piombino. Due to my ignorance I partly know Lori Emerson whom I would like to thank for having helped me out patiently when I first subscribed, nor do I know Julia Bloch or Joel Kuszai. It goes without saying that to manage such a list you need an ever-present *Good Will. * Best wishes,

Anny Ballardini
http://annyballardini.blogspot.com/
http://www.fieralingue.it/modules.php?name=poetshome

http://www.moriapoetry.com/ebooks.html
I Tell You: One must still have chaos in one to give birth to a dancing star!
Friedrich Nietzsche

On 2/12/07, Tom W. Lewis <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >The current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, and a maximum
> of > >four messages per subscriber per day; but these limits are subject to > >change withouth notice.
>
> 4 messages a day now?! never have the moderated
> enjoyed such liberty at the hands of their moderators
> (or so it would appear)
>
> but I'm curious (in my giddy glee) about what precisely this project's > expectations are... [bowing head to parse]:
>
> to support, inform, and extend
>
> those directions
>
> in poetry
>
> committed
>
> to innovations, renovations, and investigations
>
> of form and/or/as content
>
> to the questioning of received forms and styles, and
>
> to the creation
>
> of the otherwise unimagined, untried,
> unexpected, improbable, and impossible.
>
>
> Innovation, then;
> questioning;
> creation --

>
> these the goals of this virtual turkey-shoot.
>
> if anyone else has thoughts, elaborations, or counter-readings of "what > this is all about," write 'em so we can all see.
>
> tl
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]]
> On Behalf Of Poetics List
> Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 14:51
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Poetics List Welcome Message
>
> Please note changes to the Welcome Message:
>
>
> The Poetics List
>
> Sponsored by: The Electronic Poetry Center (SUNY-Buffalo/University of > Pennsylvania) and the Regan Chair (Department of English, Penn) & > Center for Program in Contemporary Writing (Penn)
>
> Poetics List Editor: Amy King
>
> Poetics List Editorial Board:
> Charles Bernstein, Julia Bloch, Lori Emerson, Amy King, Joel Kuszai, > Nick Piombino
>
> Note: this Welcome message is also available at the EPC/@Buffalo page
>
> Poetics Subscription Registration (required)
> poetics.list --at -- gmail.com
> note our new address!
>
> Poetics Subscription Requests:
> http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html
>
> Poetics Listserv Archive:

> http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html
>
> Note that any correspondence sent to the Poetics List administration > account takes about ten days, for response; mail to this account is > checked about once per week.
>
> C O N T E N T S:
>
> 1. About the Poetics List
> 2. Posting to the List
> 3. Subscriptions
> 4. Subscription Options
> 5. To Unsubscribe
> 6. Cautions
>
> ----------
>
> Above the world-weary horizons
> New obstacles for exchange arise
> Or unfold,
> O ye postmasters!
>
>
> 1. About the Poetics List
>
> With the preceding epigraph, the Poetics Listserv was founded by > Charles Bernstein in late 1993. Now in its fourth incarnation, the > list has over 1300 subscribers worldwide. We also have a substantial > number of nonsubscribing readers, who access the list through our web > site (see archive URL above).
>
> The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or > for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend > those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, > renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the > questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible.
> While we recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities > for exchange, we request that those participating in this forum keep > in mind the specialized and focused nature of this project and respect > our decision to operate a moderated list. The Poetics List exists to > support and encourage divergent points of view on innovative forms of > modern and contemporary poetry and poetics, and we are committed to do > what is necessary to preserve this space for such dialog.

>
> Due to the high number of subscribers, we no longer maintain the open > format with which the list began (at under 100 subscribers). The > specific form of moderation that we employ is a relatively fluid one:
> in most cases, messages are reviewed after having been posted to the > list, and difficulties resolved on that basis; however, the listserv > editorial board may shift between this and a pre-review mode which > calls for all messages to be read and approved before being forwarded > to the list. We prefer to avoid this option as it hampers the > spontaneity of discussion that we hope to promote. In addition to > these options, the editorial board will unsubscribe individuals if > they are not, in our opinion, productively contributing to the list or > following our guidelines. We remain committed to this editorial > function as a defining element of the Poetics List.
>
> Please also note that this is a not a general interest poetry list and > information about this list should not be posted to directories of > poetry lists. The idea is to keep the list membership to those with > specific engagement related to the list's stated orientation. The > current limits of the list are 75 messages per day, and a maximum of > four messages per subscriber per day; but these limits are subject to > change withouth notice.
>
> In addition to being archived at through the EPC > (http://epc.buffalo.edu) and at > http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html, some posts to > Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.)
> may also become part of specific EPC subject areas.
>
> Note also that Roof Books published Joel Kuszai's edited collection of > the Poetics List; this is available from ROOF and also on line at the > EPC.
>
>
> 2. Posting to the List
>
> editors in keeping with the goals of the list as articulated in this > Welcome Message (see section 1).
>
> Please note that while this list is primarily concerned with > discussions of poetry and poetics, messages relating to politics and > political activism, film, art, media, and so forth are also welcome.

> We strongly encourage subscribers to post information, including web > links, relating to publications (print and internet), reading series, > and blogs that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which > they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this > list. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications (print or > digital) are always welcome.
>
> We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a > discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a > venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal > entries.
>
> Also, please note that the Poetics List is not a "chat" list and we > discourage the posting of very short messages intended for only a few > subscribers.
>
> All posts go out not only to list subscribers but also become a public > part of the list archive on the web. Note that posting to the list is > a form of publication and that by sending your message to the list you > formally consent to such web publication. Posts are currently being > indexed by search engines such as Google. It is not possible for us to > remove posts from the list archive or to control search engine > indexing of these posts.
>
> Subscribers only may post to the Poetics List. Send messages directly > to the list address: [redacted].
>
>
> 3. Subscriptions
>
> *For all subscription requests go to
> http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html.
>
> *To subscribe for the first time click on "Subscribe (join) a List."
> Immediately following your subscription to the poetics listserv we ask > that you email [redacted], subject-line "registration," with > your full name, street address, email address, and telephone number.
> Failure to register at the time of subscription will result in > automatic deletion from the subscription roll.
>

> *To manage your subscription (for descriptions of the different > subscription options please see section 3), click on "Subscriber's > Corner."
>
> Subscriptions to the Poetics List are free of charge, but formal > registration is required. All other questions about subscriptions, > whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, > should be addressed to this same administrative address.
>
> PLEASE NOTE: All subscription-related information and correspondence > remains absolutely confidential.
>
> All posts to the list must provide your full real name, as registered.
> If there is any discrepancy between your full name as it appears in > the "from" line of the message header, please sign your post at the > bottom. Subscribers who do not include their full name with each post > will be unsubscribed form the list.
>
> The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If > your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics > messages may get bounced, which will result in your subscription being > automatically terminated by the Listserv program and the automatically > generated message telling you that this has occurred will also likely > bounce. If this happens, you may re-subscribe to the list by the same > process described above. One remedy to avoid this happening in the > future: set your list options to "no-mail" and read the list on the > web.
>
> 4. Subscription Options
>
> We encourage you to alter your subscription options via the link on > the right side of the screen at > http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html. If you would > prefer not to use the web-interface, you may also email > <[redacted]> the following commands:
>
> *to subscribe to the Poetics listserv send > [redacted] this one-line message with no "subject":
>
> *RECOMMENDED: if you wish to read the list on our web interface and > not receive any messages sent directly, while remaining subscribed to > the list and so eligible to send us posts, send this one-line message > to <[redacted]> with no "subject": set poetics > nomail. Note: this option is also useful for temporary suspension of > email service.

>
> *to reactivate Poetics e-mail send <[redacted]> > this one-line message with no "subject": set poetics mail
>
> * to receive the list in digest form (you will receive the day's > individual posts in one email sent just after midnight EST), send > <[redacted]> this one-line message with no
> "subject": set poetics digest
>
> *to receive posts in the default option (you will receive individual > postings immediately), send <[redacted]> this one-> line message with no "subject": set poetics nodigest
>
> * to receive the list in index form (you will receive a list, without > the text of the posts, of the subjects discussed each day along with > the author's name and address and the number of lines it comprises;
> you can also choose to have the index sent to you in either plain text
> or in HTML format with hyperlinks), send > <[redacted]> this one-line message with no
> "subject": set poetics nohtml index --or-- set poetics html index
>
> PLEASE NOTE: do not leave your Poetics subscription in default or > digest mode if you are going to be away for any extended period of > time. Your account may become flooded and you may lose Poetics > messages as well as other important mail. In such cases, switch your > subscription to "nomail" as recommended above.
>
> 5. To Unsubscribe
>
> To unsubscribe (or change any of your subscription options), again, we > strongly encourage you to go to the right-hand side of the screen at > http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html You may also > may unsubscribe by sending a one-line email to
>
> If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note: sometimes > your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system > administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages > old address, then resubscribe with your new email address.
>

>
> 6. Cautions
>
> "Flame" messages will not be tolerated on the Poetics List. We define > 'flaming' as any post that resembles a personal attack or personal > insult to anyone--subscriber or not. This of course includes racist, > sexist, or other slurs as well as ad hominem arguments in which the > person rather than their work is attacked; in other words while > critique of a person's work is welcome (critical inquiry is one of the > main functions of the list), this critique cannot extend to a critique > or criticism of the person.
>
> The listserv is intended to be a productive communal space for > discussion and announcements; as such, subscribers who do not follow > listserv policy will be removed from the subscription roll.
>
> In enforcing this policy, the editors must consider sometimes > competing interests. The basis for our decisions, however, rests with > our collective judgment about the kind of space we want for the list.
>
> For reasons of basic security, we do not allow pseudonymous > subscriptions. All messages intended for the Poetics List should be > sent in Text-Only format, without attachments. We do not accept > HTML-formatted messages or attached files. As a general rule, keep > individual posts to 1,000 words or less.
>
> Please do not publish list postings without the express permission of > the author. Posting on the list is a form of publication. Copyright > for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material > from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the > author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use"
> of published materials.
>
> All material on the Poetics List remains the property of the authors;
> before you reproduce this material, in whole or in part, we ask that > you get permission (by email is fine) from the authors. If they give > permission, then we ask only that you say that the post or posts
> appeared originally on the Poetics List
> Used by permission of the author.
>
> As an outside maximum, we will accept no more than 4 messages per day > from any one subscriber. Also, given that our goal is a manageable > list (manageable both for moderators and subscribers), the list > accepts 75 or fewer messages per day, though these paramenters may be > changed at the discretion of the list moderator.

>
> Like all systems, the listserv will sometimes be down: if you feel > your message has been delayed or lost, please wait at least one day > to see if it shows up, then check the archive to be sure the message > is not posted there; if you still feel there is a problem, you may > wish to contact the editors at <[redacted]>.
>
>
>

↑ Index

448. Tarpaulin Sky

READING: Jenny Boully, Jordan Davis, Douglas A. Martin, Max Winter

Tue 13 Feb 2007

Jenny Boully, Jordan Davis, Douglas A. Martin, & Max Winter Saturday, February 17, 2007, 2 p.m. The Four-Faced Liar, 165 West 4th Street (between 6th & 7th Ave), New York, NY

Come celebrate the release of Max Winter's new book, _The Pictures_ (Tarpaulin Sky Press, 2007) and catch readings from Winter and fellow Tarpaulin Sky Press author Jenny Boully, along with the incomparable Jordan Davis and Douglas A. Martin. Mingling at 1:30. Reading at 2, followed by a book-signing.

Jenny Boully is the author of _[one love affair*]_ (Tarpaulin Sky Press, 2006) and _The Body_ (Slope Editions, 2002). Her work has been anthologized in _The Best American Poetry 2002_, _Great American Prose Poems: From Poe to the Present_, and _The Next American Essay_ and has appeared in Boston Review, Seneca Review, and Conjunctions. Her _Book of Beginnings and Endings_ is forthcoming from Sarabande. Born in Thailand and reared in Texas, she has studied at Hollins University and the University of Notre Dame and is pursuing a Ph.D. at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. She divides her time between Brooklyn and a small town in Texas.

Poet and critic Jordan Davis is the author of _Million Poems Journal_ and host of The Million Poems Show, a live poetry talk show based in Manhattan at the Bowery Poetry Club. His blogs, Equanimity and Million Poems, draw more than 35,000 readers each month. His poems have appeared in Chicago Review, American Letters and Commentary, Boston Review, and, Fence, among other journals. He is a columnist for the acclaimed literary review, Constant Critic, and his reviews have appeared in Publishers Weekly, Paper, and the Village Voice. With Chris Edgar he edits The Hat, an annual literary journal.

Douglas A. Martin's most recent books are _Branwell_, a novel of the Bronte brother, and a collection of stories, _They Change the Subject_. His first novel, _Outline of My Lover_, was named an International Book of the Year in the Times Literary Supplement and adapted in part by The Forsythe Company for the multimedia dance- theater piece "Kammer/Kammer." He is also the author of two collections of poetry and a co-author of _the haiku year_. In 2008, he will publish _Last Early Poems_ and a new lyric prose work, _Your Body Figured_.

Max Winter is the author of _The Pictures_ (Tarpaulin Sky Press, 2007). Winner of the Fifth Annual Boston Review Poetry Contest, Winter has poems appearing recently in Free Verse, New American Writing, Ploughshares, The Paris Review, Colorado Review, Volt, The Yale Review, The Canary, Denver Quarterly, First Intensity, GutCult, TYPO, and New Young American Poets (Southern Illinois, 2000). He has published reviews in The New York Times, The Washington Post, The San Francisco Chronicle, Newsday, and BOMB, and is a Poetry Editor of Fence.

About _The Pictures_:
http://www.tarpaulinsky.com/Press/Winter/index.html

Sparse, clear, and free of flourishes, the poems in The _Pictures_ examine war, boredom, death, love, decay, happiness, and worship through a series of moving and still images. In one poem, from a group of "moving" pictures, three soldiers bide their time in a barren landscape, awaiting destruction; in a "still" picture, a group of stones invite us to pay closer attention to them; in another still picture, a woman stands with her mouth open, fists clenched, words unimportant. Sight is unmysterious but wondrous in this book; the poems demonstrate that to look at something or to read it is to experience it, along with its attendant sadness or joy. The "pictures" collected here are communicative and profound, quick to read but long to develop.

↑ Index

449. Herb Levy
Steve Swallow on Robert Creeley
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Not simply a puff piece for his most recent recording of music with readings by Creeley, but an actual discussion of how Swallow relates to the work and the poet.

http://www.allaboutjazz.com/php/article.php?id=24544

One more reader of poetry who doesn't write it or teach about it. That makes nearly a dozen of us now, based on past exchanges around here anyway.

↑ Index

450. L Trent
New Issue of 21 Stars Review
Tue 13 Feb 2007

The fourth issue of 21 Stars Review (http://sundress.net/21stars) is up! Featuring poetry and prose from Nina Alvarez, Arlene Ang, F.J. Bergmann, Michelle Bitting, C.L. Bledsoe, Mark DeCarteret, Jennifer Gravely, Len Joy, Amanda Laughtland, Duane Locke, Kyle Minor, Alison Shaffer, and Shellie Zacharia.

↑ Index

451. Pierre Joris
Albany, NY Performance
Tue 13 Feb 2007

The New York State Writers Institute invites you to the following event.

Friday, February 16, 8PM at the WAMC Linda Norris Auditorium, 339 Central Ave., Albany.

Performance Poets Nicole Peyrafitte and Pierre Joris.

Tickets $15, Call [redacted], ext. 4 for reservations.

To celebrate the release of their CDs The Bi-Continental Chowder and Routes, Not Roots, performance artist Nicole Peyrafitte and poet Pierre Joris have created a multi-media event. They will perform a selection of Peyrafitte's songs and Joris' poems that are featured on the new CDs. The evening will be framed by Peyrafitte's "Bi- Continental Chowder" prepared, commented, simmered, and served right on stage--a truly synesthetic experience that will stimulate all the senses. Pyrenees-born Nicole Peyrafitte is a performance artist who sings, paints, films, writes and cooks. She draws on her eclectic heritage to perform songs ranging from French cabaret to jazz standards and contemporary poetry. Pierre Joris is a poet, essayist, translator, and anthologist whose most recent publications include Poasis: Selected Poems 1986-1999 (2001), and a collection of essays, A Nomad Poetics (2003). Recent translations include Lightduress (2004) by Paul Celan which received the 2005 PEN Poetry Translation Award. Joris teaches in the UAlbany English Dept.

For more information and reservations call [redacted], ext. 4, or go to http://www.albany.edu/writers-inst/joris_peyrafitte.html.

To see our complete list of events, go to http://www.albany.edu/writers-inst/vws.html.

==========
"Fascism should more properly
be called corporatism,since it is the merger of state and corporate power."
— Benito Mussolini
==========
Pierre Joris
244 Elm Street
Albany NY 12202
h: [redacted]
c: [redacted]
o: 518 442 40 71
Euro cell: (011 33) 6 75 43 57 10
email: [redacted]
http://pierrejoris.com
Nomadics blog: http://pjoris.blogspot.com
==========

↑ Index

452. mIEKAL aND
New literary twist added to laundry cycle
Tue 13 Feb 2007

(anyone taking part in this?...)

New literary twist added to laundry cycle
Tue Feb 13, 2007 9:08am ET

NEW YORK, Feb 12 (Reuters Life!) - Doing the laundry has taken on a new meaning for New Yorkers who can now watch their wash and spin cycles while listening to poetry and prose.

Instead of burying their head in a book or heading to the nearest coffee shop to beat the boredom of laundry, New York writer Emily Rubin has organised a series of readings called "Dirty Laundry: Loads of Prose," at laundromats in New York.

"Just mixing laundry and writing seemed completely natural to me because truly in life and metaphorically as a writer, everyone has dirty laundry," said the Brooklyn native who started the series last year.

She contemplated holding the readings in various neighborhood venues including shops but said a laundromat seemed "a natural fit."

People can wash their dirty laundry while listening to a poem or short story or just attend the readings. During the first of the 2007 series writer Carolyn Turgeon read some of her work while people loaded the dryers and washing machines.

"It just makes me feel homey and reading is just sort of part of this regular thing, if that makes sense," she said, adding that a laundromat doesn't feel as stuffy or artificial as other venues.

"It feels like you're part of this natural environment," Turgeon explained.

Author Marie Carter, who moved from Edinburgh, Scotland to New York in 2000, likes the idea of entertaining people in a laundromat which is not usually a center of excitement.

Some of the people attending the reading felt a bit odd initially but got used to the idea.

"It was a little strange, it was kind of wild," said one person.

Rubin, who calls herself "Mistress of Laundry" is planning more readings at laundromats across New York and is encouraging people to come along with or without their dirty washing.

↑ Index

453. Gabriel Gudding
on the telepathic nature of the social
Tue 13 Feb 2007

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

↑ Index

454. Dan Coffey
Re: Steve Swallow on Robert Creeley
Tue 13 Feb 2007

The book _Conversations with Steve Lacy_ also has many interesting discussions of how Lacy related to the poets whose texts he used in his compositions (Creeley foremost among them, but also Gysin, Taslima Nasrin, Osip Mandelstam, Anne Waldman, even Herman Melville). Always wished he would've tackled some of Emily Dickinson's poems. I think Irene Aebi would be a great person to give voice to them

On 2/13/07, Herb Levy <[redacted]> wrote:
> Not simply a puff piece for his most recent recording of music with > readings by Creeley, but an actual discussion of how Swallow relates to > the work and the poet.

>
> http://www.allaboutjazz.com/php/article.php?id=24544
>
> One more reader of poetry who doesn't write it or teach about it. That > makes nearly a dozen of us now, based on past exchanges around here anyway.
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

455. Jim Andrews
David Jhave Johnston
Tue 13 Feb 2007

DAVID JHAVE JOHNSTON
http://year01.com/jhave/SIAT_blog/meanderings/blog.html

Jhave is a Canadian poet-programmer. His blog is a fascinating collection of writings, streaming videos, graphics, and other media largely concerned with language arts. Also check out his http://glia.ca site where you will find his Flash work, which is very programmerly literary media. Quite a bit of his Flash-based work combines video and text with interactive programming.

ja
http://vispo.com

↑ Index

456. amy king
One Way of Getting It Out There
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Besides poems on subways, how else do we share it off the page?

Poetry, images go public at Louisiana Tech
[http://www.thenewsstar.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=2007702100319]

Poetry can be hard to find in a public place unless you are at Louisiana Tech University.

English professor Veronica Schuder's freshmen have taken a unique approach to the concept of service learning by displaying poetry in a major traffic zone.

The students opened an exhibit of large posters Friday in Tolliver Hall sporting poetry and images compiled by a professional graphic designer. The class posted works by poets Sylvia Plath, Paul Laurence Dunbar, William Blake and Walt Whitman.

Art education major Allison Reynolds said the project was aimed at trying to get poetry into the minds of people who may not have never given it a chance.

"We want students to take a minute and reflect on their day," Reynolds said. "We want them to walk by (the exhibit) and stop to think about what is important to them."

Reynolds said Dunbar's "We Wear the Mask" is one work students should relate to easily.

"In our day-to-day lives, we put up a fraud," she said. "We go through the motions without making a real connection most days. Reminding people of what can be profound."

Mechanical engineering major Stephan White said the tendency to think of Shakespeare is one reason poetry can be hard to tackle.

"It's not just for the upper class," White said. "Poets we study are down-to-earth people that you can relate to."

Schuder said she hopes the service aspect of the project, showing the work in a public way, will change some students' minds.

The project also made her students think about poetry in a way that changed how they learned, Schuder said, and the quarter's work left her feeling closer to this class than some previously.

"My goal was to bring poetry alive for my students — learning poetry shouldn't be about writing down every word that the teacher says," Schuder said. "Having to present this project to people made poetry leap out of the classroom for them."

The students put in more work than they thought they did, Schuder said. Students had to sort through a list of 50 or more poems to find one they could present, she said.

"It forced them to be critical of each other in a way they don't normally deal with, as well," Schuder said.

The posters will hang in Tolliver Hall until mid-March.

--By way of Jilly Dybka's blog (http://www.poetryhut.com/wordpress/).

Finding fabulous fares is fun.

Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains.

↑ Index

457. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: One Way of Getting It Out There

Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

i've taped up visual poems and sound scores on telphone poles, trees, mail boxes, wlls in alleys, sides f dumpeters, inside bathrooms, on backs of seats in theaters, on friends' cars, pinned or taped up on bulletin boards any old palce they have them, at construction sites, just abt any place someone might find them and enjoy, take home, deface, alter--and let the weather do its work also--creating new poems in the ongoing processes-- at some sites where boards in dumpsters etc--made paintings on them and left there--leaning against the sides-- in many places also where exposed patches of ground, made them in the dirt--and taken found objects and arranged these in grass in parks or alongside public building areas--as "concrete" "material language" poems, 3-D--shrines, beings--enigmas-- some things are signed--many not --some remian for awhile-days even few weeks-many don't-- that way, the poems have lives of their own--freed from any "officially recognized" framing-- in these lives of their own--they may be found by anyone, or find anyone themselves-- even on a bus. poems only find themslves among poeple who rides buses--not walkers, not those who ride only in cars-- and many of the poems don't even need to be "read" in a standardized way either--so many people who may not read a public poem may be able to understand them in other ways--visual, tactile-- they may not even some of them be thought of as "poems"--by people not interested in "poems"--but as something else entirely--yet recognized as a sign of a communication in their own terms--and understood in all sorts of myriad other ways--

(much like being a person--maybe known only to onself--"read" in all sorts of ways during course of a day--may stil know that they are a "poet", the poems know they are a "poem"--so not worried if "read" myriad other ways-makes life always much more interesting--)

From: amy king <[redacted]>
Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: One Way of Getting It Out There
Date: Tue, 13 Feb 2007 09:13:40 -0800

Besides poems on subways, how else do we share it off the page?

Poetry, images go public at Louisiana Tech
[http://www.thenewsstar.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=2007702100319]

Poetry can be hard to find in a public place unless you are at Louisiana Tech University.

English professor Veronica Schuder's freshmen have taken a unique approach to the concept of service learning by displaying poetry in a major traffic zone.

The students opened an exhibit of large posters Friday in Tolliver Hall sporting poetry and images compiled by a professional graphic designer. The class posted works by poets Sylvia Plath, Paul Laurence Dunbar, William Blake and Walt Whitman.

Art education major Allison Reynolds said the project was aimed at trying to get poetry into the minds of people who may not have never given it a chance.

"We want students to take a minute and reflect on their day," Reynolds said. "We want them to walk by (the exhibit) and stop to think about what is important to them."

Reynolds said Dunbar's "We Wear the Mask" is one work students should relate to easily.

"In our day-to-day lives, we put up a fraud," she said. "We go through the motions without making a real connection most days. Reminding people of what can be profound."

Mechanical engineering major Stephan White said the tendency to think of Shakespeare is one reason poetry can be hard to tackle.

"It's not just for the upper class," White said. "Poets we study are down-to-earth people that you can relate to."

Schuder said she hopes the service aspect of the project, showing the work in a public way, will change some students' minds.

> The project also made her students think about poetry in a way that changed how they learned, Schuder said, and the quarter's work left her feeling closer to this class than some previously.
>
> "My goal was to bring poetry alive for my students — learning poetry shouldn't be about writing down every word that the teacher says," Schuder said. "Having to present this project to people made poetry leap out of the classroom for them."
>
> The students put in more work than they thought they did, Schuder said. Students had to sort through a list of 50 or more poems to find one they could present, she said.
>
> "It forced them to be critical of each other in a way they don't normally deal with, as well," Schuder said.
>
> The posters will hang in Tolliver Hall until mid-March.
>
> --By way of Jilly Dybka's blog (http://www.poetryhut.com/wordpress/).
>
> ---
> Finding fabulous fares is fun.
> Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains.

_____ Check out all that glitters with the MSN Entertainment Guide to the Academy Awards® http://movies.msn.com/movies/oscars2007/?icid=ncoscartagline2

↑ Index

458. Adam Fieled

Steve Halle, Tom Orange on PFS Post

Tue 13 Feb 2007

Check out new work from Chicago's Steve Halle and DC's Tom Orange on Philadelphia's PFS Post:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

"like the FBI...and the CIA....and the BBC....BB King....and Doris Day...Matt Busby, dig it, dig it, dig it, dig it..."

Access over 1 million songs - Yahoo! Music Unlimited.

↑ Index

459. Tim Peterson
Belladonna 2/13 w Deborah Meadows & Tim Peterson
Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

enjoy

BELLADONNA*

with

Deborah Meadows & Tim Peterson

Tuesday, February 13, 7PM
@ Dixon Place (258 Bowery, 2nd Floor—Between Houston & Prince)
Admission is $5 at the Door.

Deborah Meadows has lived in Pasadena, California since 1986. She teaches in the Liberal Studies department at California State Polytechnic University, California where she has worked as a labor organizer on education equity issues, curates the Poetry and Jazz series for her students, participates in travel exchanges with writers in the campus' Cuba program, and contributed to curriculum design in the campus' interdisciplinary program. Her works of poetry include: Representing Absence (Green Integer, 2004) selected for The Gertrude Stein Poetry Award 2004; Itinerant Men (Krupskaya Press, 2004); "The 60's and 70's: from The Theory of Subjectivity in Moby-Dick" Tinfish Press (2003).

Tim Peterson is the author of Since I Moved In (Chax Press, 2007). He lives in Brooklyn, NY where he edits EOAGH: A Journal of the Arts -- the newest issue, titled "Queering Language" is now available online at chax.org/eoagh/issue3/issuethree.html

from The Draped Universe by Deborah Meadows

surface
,the body

may society

obsession with textiles of Islam eighth century

represented the ultimate, beyond the open doors

*

bare floors, marched royal spaces, baldachin

Islam, of each type can be glad manuscripts, value of each type, a dictionary, such as the Book of Gifts, for the most part medieval sources of no help in matching geographical terms

textiles in specific locales

from Trans Figures by Tim Peterson

The voice wants to turn itself into a body.
It can't, though it tries hard--
it brings you flowers, to engender a meaningful relationship. It makes you coffee in the morning.
Here, have a cup.
See? It likes you. It makes your bed
and shows you this mountain vista out the window
a field of jupiters beard and beyond it
the dying fields. It shows you things like the sun going down, and then here it is coming up in the hollyhocks.
Don't look, you'll hurt your eyes. I want to be there for you, you never respond
in those moments we touch (but they are not enough).
Let me stroke your hair once more, here,
and again here. The voice is growing distant
now, it is fading like the sun fades
and explodes in strands of parti-colored fibers
you will never be able to see.

Upcoming Belladonna* Events:
3/13/07 Maureen Owen & Patricia Spears Jones
4/10/07 Rebecca Brown & Anna Moschovakis
5/8/07 Claudia Rankine & Jocelyn Saidenberg

Founded as a reading series at a women¹s radical bookstore in 1999, Belladonna* is a feminist avant-garde event and publication series that promotes the work of women writers who are adventurous, politically involved, multi-form, multicultural, multi-gendered, unpredictable, dangerous with language (to the death machinery). In its eight year history, Belladonna* has featured such writers as Julie Patton, kari edwards, Leslie Scalapino, Alice Notley, Erica Hunt, Fanny Howe, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Cecilia Vicuña, Latasha Natasha Nevada Diggs, Camille Roy, Nicole Brossard, Abigail Child, Norma Cole, Lydia Davis, Gail Scott, Renee Gladman, Rachel Blau Duplessis, Marcella Durand and Lila Zemborain along with nearly 100 other experimental and hybrid women writers. The curators promote work that is explicitly experimental, connects with other art forms, and is political/critical in content. Alongside the readings, Belladonna* supports its artists by publishing commemorative chaplets of their work on the night of the event. Please contact us (Erica Kaufman, Rachel Levitsky, Sina Queyras et al) at [redacted] to receive a catalog and be placed on our list.

Dixon Place, a home for performing and literary artists, is dedicated to supporting the creative process by presenting original works of theater, dance and literature at various stages of development. An artistic laboratory with an audience, we serve as a safety net, enabling artists to present challenging and questioning work that pushes the limits of artistic expression. With a warm, nurturing atmosphere that encourages and inspires artists of all stripes and persuasions, we place special emphasis on the needs of women, people of color, youth, seniors and lesbian/gay artists. Dixon Place is a local haven for creativity as well as an international model for the open exploration of the process of creation. Please visit www.dixonplace.org for more information deadly nightshade, a cardiac and respiratory stimulant, having purplish-red flowers and black berries Belladonna readings happen monthly between September and June. We are grateful for funding by Poets and Writers, CLMP, NYSCA, and Dixon Place.

↑ Index

460. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Mom w/first published poem

Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

hi stephen. my mom's 88 and was a wonderful sculptor (well, i guess still is but isn't making anything anymore), so i was very touched by this little peice with your mom. i love the way she uses words when she speaks too. lucky you to be hanging out still with such a mom. lucky me too. :-) best, gabe

On Tue, 13 Feb 2007, Martha Deed wrote:

> Dear Stephen--
>
> This is both powerful and touching. I really liked the originality of your mother's words, too, both in the poem and in her discussion with you of her poem -- her connection to the poem. And -- your blog entry > is really an instance of image and text reinforcing one another.

>
> What she produces, what you facilitate, takes one beyond some of the dichotomies we often think about here.
>
> I hope that you continue to announce her progress here.
>
> Martha
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: "Stephen Vincent" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 9:53 PM
> Subject: Mom w/first published poem
>
> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
> For those with a continuing interest, a new blog entry re my almost 91-year-old mom's apparent, totally unintended, new career in poetry - Re her responses to her recent publication in Jow Lindsay's edit of the London mag,
> Everyone's Cup of Tea! (Also an event in itself, the mag!).
>
> Enjoy,
>
> Stephen V
>
> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.36/681 - Release Date: 2/11/2007 6:50 PM

gabrielle welford
[redacted]

Checked by AVG anti-virus system (http://www.grisoft.com). Version: 6.0.595 / Virus Database: 378 - Release Date: 2/25/2004

wilhelm reich anarcho-syndicalism gut/heart/head/earth

↑ Index

461. blacksox
Not getting through
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Hey for some reason i have not been able to get messages posted? Can this be corected?

Thanks
Russ Golata
living in the poetic wastelands of Central florida

↑ Index

462. paolo javier
Crossing the Border Reading/Panel @ NYU, March 2nd, 6 pm
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Dear All: I'll be taking part in a reading/panel on Canada-U.S. poetries with fellow North American scribes Adeena Karasick & AF Moritz. Novelist Tamaz Dobozy will moderate. Deets below. It's an open event, but I do believe you need to rsvp. Hope you do, & to see you there!

best,
Paolo

--

Crossing the Border: North American Bi-National Poetics

Friday, March 2, 6-8 pm
New York University
Graduate Languages and Arts Building
19 University Place, First Floor
RSVP: [redacted]
Email: [redacted] <[redacted]>

This Canadian-American literature/poetry event will feature readings and an in-depth panel discussion on comparative aesthetics, Canada-U.S. publishing industry differences, and raising the profile of Canadian literature in the U.S. market.

Moderator and Fulbright Chair Tamas Dobozy (Nanaimo, British Columbia) will lead a stimulating discussion with poets A.F. Moritz (University of Toronto), Paolo Javier (New York/Vancouver), and Adeena Karsick (Winnipeg).

--
http://blog.myspace.com/paolojavier http://www.2ndavepoetry.com/

↑ Index

463. Ruth Lepson
Re: Mom w/first published poem
Tue 13 Feb 2007

I clicked but nothing happened--another way to get the poem?

On 2/13/07 12:34 AM, "Martha Deed" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Dear Stephen--
>
> This is both powerful and touching. I really liked the originality of your mother's words, too, both in the poem and in her discussion with you of her poem -- her connection to the poem. And -- your blog entry is really an instance of image and text reinforcing one another.
>
> What she produces, what you facilitate, takes one beyond some of the dichotomies we often think about here.
>
> I hope that you continue to announce her progress here.
>
> Martha
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: "Stephen Vincent" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Sent: Monday, February 12, 2007 9:53 PM
> Subject: Mom w/first published poem
>
> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
> For those with a continuing interest, a new blog entry re my almost 91-year-old mom's apparent, totally unintended, new career in poetry - Re her responses to her recent publication in Jow Lindsay's edit of the London mag,
> Everyone's Cup of Tea! (Also an event in itself, the mag!).
>
> Enjoy,
>
> Stephen V

> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.36/681 - Release Date: 2/11/2007 6:50 PM

↑ Index

464. Jena Osman
visiting writer position
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Temple University. Visiting writer, Creative Writing-poetry. One semester position in Temple University's Creative Writing Program for Spring 2008. Applicants should have a deep commitment to writing & be willing to teach graduate poetry workshops and special topics in creative writing. Visiting writer will also be expected to perform service connected to the Creative Writing program such as mentoring students, contributing to the Poets and Writers Series, and giving a presentation of creative or critical work to the larger Temple community. MFA or PhD in creative writing or the equivalent, teaching experience & publication record required. Teaching load is 2 courses for the semester; salary commensurate to qualifications, plus benefits. Send letter of interest, c.v., & letters of recommendation to: Search Committee, Creative Writing Program/English Department, 10th floor Anderson Hall, Temple University, 1114 W. Berks St., Philadelphia, PA 19122-6090. Applications must be received no later than April 1, 2007. AA/EOE

If you have questions, feel free to send me a message at [redacted]

Jena Osman
Associate Professor of English
Director, Creative Writing Program
Temple University
[redacted]

↑ Index

465. Cati Porter
New to the list / Call for submissions
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Hi all.

I'm new to this list, so I thought I'd take a moment to introduce myself and then pass along my call for submissions.

My name is Cati Porter. I live in southern California, and am the mother of two small boys. I'm primarily a poet, though I've also published freelance articles and book reviews. I'm also founder and editor of Poemeleon: A Journal of Poetry (www.poemeleon.org), and contributing editor for Babel, the webzine for the International Cities of Refuge Network (www.ICORN.org). I also belong to Wompo (women's poetry listserv), and as I've been receiving Poetics' e-mails over the past couple of days, I couldn't help but notice that there's some crossover, so some of you might already know me. I probably won't post a whole lot -- my time is pretty divided between the journals and my kids -- but I'm looking forward to joining in the discussion as time permits.

As for my call for submissions, I'm looking right now for poems in form -- traditional verse forms as well as poems that use form in innovative ways -- for a Poemeleon issue that will launch in June. Previously published is fine as long as you retain all rights and the poems have never before appeared online.

If you have any questions, feel free to backchannel me.

Thanks!

Cati

↑ Index

466. Didi Menendez
Re: New to the list / Call for submissions
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Hello -

I too am new to the list although I am not new at all.

My name is Didi Menendez.

I don't have a call for submissions other than the regular call for submissions although that is not new either.

Thank you.

----- Original Message -----
From: Cati Porter<mailto:[redacted]>

To: [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]>
Sent: Tuesday, February 13, 2007 6:26 PM
Subject: New to the list / Call for submissions

Hi all.

I'm new to this list, so I thought I'd take a moment to introduce myself and then pass along my call for submissions.

My name is Cati Porter. I live in southern California, and am the mother of two small boys. I'm primarily a poet, though I've also published freelance articles and book reviews. I'm also founder and editor of Poemeleon: A Journal of Poetry (www.poemeleon.org<http://www.poemeleon.org/>), and contributing editor for Babel, the webzine for the International Cities of Refuge Network (www.ICORN.org<http://www.icorn.org/>). I also belong to Wompo (women's poetry listserv), and as I've been receiving Poetics' e-mails over the past couple of days, I couldn't help but notice that there's some crossover, so some of you might already know me. I probably won't post a whole lot -- my time is pretty divided between the journals and my kids -- but I'm looking forward to joining in the discussion as time permits.

As for my call for submissions, I'm looking right now for poems in form -- traditional verse forms as well as poems that use form in innovative ways -- for a Poemeleon issue that will launch in June. Previously published is fine as long as you retain all rights and the poems have never before appeared online.

If you have any questions, feel free to backchannel me.

Thanks!

Cati

↑ Index

467. Simon DeDeo
rhubarb is susan
Tue 13 Feb 2007

New material up on the poem-review blog rhubarb is susan, covering Nancy Kuhl's new book, A. Van Jordan's DC Comics commedia dell'Arte, and Kimberly Truitt's resurrection of 3rd century flarf:

http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/kimberly-truitt-female-cento.html http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/nancy-kuhl-open-house.html http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/van-jordan-superposition-of-atom.html http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/

Thanks for tuning in, and do join the conversation.

Snowed in in Chicago,

Simon

↑ Index

468. Daniel Godston
Swallow & Hersch
Tue 13 Feb 2007

Swallow & Creeley's "So There" CD is amazing.

Here's an excellent interview with pianist/composer Fred Hersch, regarding his "Leaves of Grass" project:
http://www.allaboutjazz.com/php/article.php?id=17230.

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group
[mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of Dan Coffey Sent: Tuesday, February 13, 2007 9:37 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Steve Swallow on Robert Creeley

The book _Conversations with Steve Lacy_ also has many interesting discussions of how Lacy related to the poets whose texts he used in his compositions (Creeley foremost among them, but also Gysin, Taslima Nasrin, Osip Mandelstam, Anne Waldman, even Herman Melville). Always wished he would've tackled some of Emily Dickinson's poems. I think Irene Aebi would be a great person to give voice to them

On 2/13/07, Herb Levy <[redacted]> wrote:
> Not simply a puff piece for his most recent recording of music with > readings by Creeley, but an actual discussion of how Swallow relates to > the work and the poet.
>
> http://www.allaboutjazz.com/php/article.php?id=24544
>
> One more reader of poetry who doesn't write it or teach about it. That > makes nearly a dozen of us now, based on past exchanges around here anyway.
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

469. Ruth Lepson

Re: Belladonna 2/13 w Deborah Meadows & Tim Peterson

Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

hope it was ablast.
love
r

On 2/13/07 2:10 PM, "Tim Peterson" <[redacted]> wrote:

> enjoy
>
> *BELLADONNA
>
> with
>
> Deborah Meadows & Tim Peterson
>
> Tuesday, February 13, 7PM
> @ Dixon Place (258 Bowery, 2nd Floor—Between Houston & Prince)
> Admission is $5 at the Door.
>
> Deborah Meadows has lived in Pasadena, California since 1986. She teaches in the Liberal Studies department at California State Polytechnic University, California where she has worked as a labor organizer on education equity issues, curates the Poetry and Jazz series for her students, participates in travel exchanges with writers in the campus' Cuba program, and contributed to curriculum design in the campus' interdisciplinary program. Her works of poetry include: Representing Absence (Green Integer, 2004) selected for The Gertrude Stein Poetry Award 2004; Itinerant Men (Krupskaya Press, 2004); "The 60's and 70's: from The Theory of Subjectivity in Moby-Dick" Tinfish Press (2003).
>
> Tim Peterson is the author of Since I Moved In (Chax Press, 2007). He lives in Brooklyn, NY where he edits EOAGH: A Journal of the Arts -- the newest issue, titled "Queering Language" is now available online at chax.org/eoagh/issue3/issuethree.html
>
> from The Draped Universe by Deborah Meadows
>
> surface
> ,the body
>
> may
>
> society
>
> obsession with textiles
> of Islam eighth century

represented the ultimate, beyond the open doors

*

bare floors, marched royal spaces, baldachin

Islam, of each type can be glad

manuscripts, value of each type, a dictionary, such as the Book of Gifts, for the most part medieval sources
of no help in matching geographical terms
textiles in specific locales

from Trans Figures by Tim Peterson

The voice wants to turn itself into a body.
It can't, though it tries hard--
it brings you flowers, to engender a meaningful relationship. It makes you coffee in the morning.
Here, have a cup.
See? It likes you. It makes your bed
and shows you this mountain vista out the window
a field of jupiters beard and beyond it
the dying fields. It shows you things like the sun
going down, and then here it is coming up in the hollyhocks.
Don't look, you'll hurt your eyes. I want to be there for you, you never respond
in those moments we touch (but they are not enough).
Let me stroke your hair once more, here,
and again here. The voice is growing distant
now, it is fading like the sun fades
and explodes in strands of parti-colored fibers
you will never be able to see.

Upcoming Belladonna Events:*
3/13/07 Maureen Owen & Patricia Spears Jones
4/10/07 Rebecca Brown & Anna Moschovakis
5/8/07 Claudia Rankine & Jocelyn Saidenberg

Founded as a reading series at a women¹s radical bookstore in 1999, Belladonna is a feminist avant-garde event and publication series that promotes the work of women writers who are adventurous, politically involved, multi-form, multicultural, multi-gendered, unpredictable, dangerous with language (to the death machinery). In its eight year history, Belladonna* has featured such writers as Julie Patton, kari edwards, Leslie Scalapino, Alice Notley, Erica Hunt, Fanny Howe, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge,*

> Cecilia Vicuña, Latasha Natasha Nevada Diggs, Camille Roy, Nicole Brossard, Abigail Child, Norma Cole, Lydia Davis, Gail Scott, Renee Gladman, Rachel Blau Duplessis, Marcella Durand and Lila Zemborain along with nearly 100 other experimental and hybrid women writers. The curators promote work that is explicitly experimental, connects with other art forms, and is political/critical in content. Alongside the readings, Belladonna supports its artists by publishing commemorative chaplets of their work on the night of the event. Please contact us (Erica Kaufman, Rachel Levitsky, Sina Queyras et al) at [redacted] to receive a catalog and be placed on our list.*
>
> Dixon Place, a home for performing and literary artists, is dedicated to supporting the creative process by presenting original works of theater, dance and literature at various stages of development. An artistic laboratory with an audience, we serve as a safety net, enabling artists to present challenging and questioning work that pushes the limits of artistic expression. With a warm, nurturing atmosphere that encourages and inspires artists of all stripes and persuasions, we place special emphasis on the needs of women, people of color, youth, seniors and lesbian/gay artists. Dixon Place is a local haven for creativity as well as an international model for the open exploration of the process of creation. Please visit www.dixonplace.org for more information
>
> deadly nightshade, a cardiac and respiratory stimulant, having purplish-red flowers and black berries*
> Belladonna readings happen monthly between September and June. We are grateful for funding by Poets and Writers, CLMP, NYSCA, and Dixon Place.*

↑ Index

470. Ron Silliman

Silliman's Blog

Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

RECENT POSTS

ROVA: Orkestrova plays Coltrane

My Angie Dickinson
by Michael Magee
(a classic of flarf)

Concerning the health of Frank Sherlock

Listening to the vowels in the poetry of Rae Armantrout

Unveiling / Marianne Moore
by John Taggart

The spiritual poetics of Rae Armantrout

on reaching 1,000,000 visits on this blog

Next Life
by Rae Armantrout

Tell them Molly sent you

Volver â€“ a film with women
in every major role

May Day â€“
Robert Kelly
and the question of poems vs. poetry

Kenny Goldsmith writes a blog on uncreative writing for Poetry Magazine!

Babel
and the ensemble film of globalization

Experimental Form and Issues of Accessibility (Susanne Dyckman, Rusty Morrison, Maxine Chernoff, Paul Hoover, and Jaime Robles)

Daisy Fried should win
the National Book Critics Circle Award
by acclamation

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

471. Catherine Daly

Fwd: Nautilus Book Awards - Final Call for Entries - Deadline Feb. 15

Tue 13 Feb 2007

Hi. I just got this via e-mail and thought it was freaky. Reminds me of the DIY Book Awards (http://www.diyconvention.com) annually here in LA (entry fee, who knows or cares who wins).

All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

 NAUTILUS BOOK AWARDS - FINAL ENTRY DEADLINE FEBRUARY 15th **

Announcing the sixth annual Nautilus Book Awards, recognizing literary contributions to spiritual growth, conscious living, and positive social change. This prestigious awards contest was suspended in 2005 but is back this year to reward and promote books that change people's lives and help heal our planet. Nautilus Book Awards 2007 will accept books copyrighted or released in 2005 or 2006, in 20 categories (see list below).

Final Deadline: Online entries must be completed by midnight on February 15, 2007. Mailed entries must be postmarked by February 15, 2007. Guidelines and entry form available at <http://www.independentpublisher.com/nautilus>.

In partnership with Marilyn McGuire & Associates (former head of NAPRA, the New Age book trade association and review journal), we proudly announce the sixth annual Nautilus Book Awards, honoring books that contribute to our society's awareness and well-being, and that embrace spiritual and ecological values such as compassion, sustainability, simplicity, and global peace. With today's mass global communication, political unrest, and religious and secular fanaticism all growing at an alarming rate, the phrase, "Changing the World One Book at a Time" is more meaningful than ever before. Enter your world-changing titles in Nautilus Book Awards 2007.

Nautilus Book Awards winners and finalists will be announced in a multi-page, full-color spread in the June issue of EVOLVE! - the publication of New Leaf Distributing Company designed to introduce new and exciting books, music, spoken audio and video titles to the Body-Mind-Spirit community. Winning books will also be exhibited at Book Expo America in New York in June in a special "Nautilus Book Awards Showcase."

Visit the Nautilus Book Awards website at <http://www.marilynmcguire.com/> for background information. Downloadable guidelines/entry form and secure online entry are both available at < http://www.independentpublisher.com/nautilus>.

2007 Nautilus Book Awards categories:

1 Animals/Nature
2 Art/Specialty/Gift
3 Business/Leadership
4 Cosmology/New Science
5 Ecology/Environment
6 Food/Cooking/Nutrition
7 Grieving/Death & Dying
8 Health & Healing
9 Inspirational/Motivational
10 Memoir/Personal Journey
11 Parenting/Family
12 Relationships/Men & Women's Issues
13 Self-Help/Psychology
14 Social Change/Current Events/Activism
15 Spirituality/Religion
16 Yoga/Massage/Body Movement
17 Adult Visionary Fiction
18 Young Adult Visionary Fiction/Non-Fiction
19 Children's Illustrated
20 Children's Non-Fiction

Questions? Contact:
Marilyn McGuire - [redacted]
Jim Barnes - [redacted] / ph: [redacted] x.1011

==========

Out of fairness, we are delivering this message to every independent publisher with a registered 2006 copyright, and our intent is to keep you informed about a legitimate book marketing opportunity. However, if you wish to gracefully opt-out of future communications from JGI or Independent Publisher, send your request to [redacted] with the word "remove" in the subject line.

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

472. ishaq arashi
Condi Rice Raps
Tue 13 Feb 2007

---

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=C0f2dHJ6A18

http://www.publicenemy.com/pb/viewtopic.php?t=35968

___
Stay Strong

-"I testified/My mama cried/Black people died/When the other man lied" --chuck d

"Be a friend to the oppressed and an enemy to the oppressor" --Imam Ali Ibn Abu Talib (as)

"They want to see us breathless. We will not be. They want to see us tired. We refuse to be. They want to see what our strength is. We will not show it in advance. We will continuously surprise them." -- Julia Wright

"We restate our commitment to the peace process. But we will not submit to a process of humiliation."
--patrick o'neil

"...we have the responsibility to make no deal with the oppressor" --harry belafonte

"...these people generate wars in Asia and Africa,...These are the people who, in the last century, caused several devastating wars. In one world war alone, they killed over 60 million people.... In the near future, Allah willing, we will put you to trial in courts established by the peoples...."-- mahmoud ahmadinejad

http://www.sidebrow.net/2006/a047braithwaite.php

↑ Index

473. Laura Winton
Re: New literary twist added to laundry cycle
Wed 14 Feb 2007

I used to organize poetry readings at a little run down laundro at 24th & Lyndale next to Muddy Waters in Minneapolis. We called in Coin Op Poetry. The acoustics in that place were great.

I told people to wear their "laundry clothes" -- those beat up old things, sweats, housedresses, etc. that you only wear while you're doing laundry. When I got on the bus with my big duffle bag and in my "laundry clothes" I think people thought I was homeless. But it does keep people from sitting by you.

But I digress.

It was hilariously fun, but we only did about 4 months I think and then the place shut down. Now it's a consignment/used/hipster clothing store. Damn. I need to start that back up.

-----Original Message-----
From: mIEKAL aND [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Tuesday, February 13, 2007 9:03 AM
Subject: New literary twist added to laundry cycle

(anyone taking part in this?...)

New literary twist added to laundry cycle
Tue Feb 13, 2007 9:08am ET

NEW YORK, Feb 12 (Reuters Life!) - Doing the laundry has taken on a new meaning for New Yorkers who can now watch their wash and spin cycles while listening to poetry and prose.

Instead of burying their head in a book or heading to the nearest coffee shop to beat the boredom of laundry, New York writer Emily Rubin has organised a series of readings called "Dirty Laundry: Loads of Prose," at laundromats in New York.

"Just mixing laundry and writing seemed completely natural to me because truly in life and metaphorically as a writer, everyone has dirty laundry," said the Brooklyn native who started the series last year.

She contemplated holding the readings in various neighborhood venues including shops but said a laundromat seemed "a natural fit."

People can wash their dirty laundry while listening to a poem or short story or just attend the readings. During the first of the 2007 series writer Carolyn Turgeon read some of her work while people loaded the dryers and washing machines.

"It just makes me feel homey and reading is just sort of part of this regular thing, if that makes sense," she said, adding that a laundromat doesn't feel as stuffy or artificial as other venues.

"It feels like you're part of this natural environment," Turgeon explained.

Author Marie Carter, who moved from Edinburgh, Scotland to New York in 2000, likes the idea of entertaining people in a laundromat which is not usually a center of excitement.

Some of the people attending the reading felt a bit odd initially but got used to the idea.

"It was a little strange, it was kind of wild," said one person.

Rubin, who calls herself "Mistress of Laundry" is planning more readings at laundromats across New York and is encouraging people to come along with or without their dirty washing.

↑ Index

474. Rod Smith
New Tom Raworth, Caller and Other Pieces, from Edge Books
Wed 14 Feb 2007

New from Edge Books:

CALLER AND OTHER PIECES

by Tom Raworth

48 pgs, perfectbound, cover by the author

$9.00 ($12.50 retail)

Caller and Other Pieces is Raworth's first collection since his Collected Poems of 2003. Comprised of 14 pieces with the long poem "Caller" at its center, this book evinces a striking formal and tonal variety-- from the classic Raworth rhythmic and roving perceptual matrix, to the comedic one-liner, to the parodic end-rhyme, the visual, and even a bit of nouveau-zaum. Caller and Other Pieces again demonstrates that Tom Raworth's accomplishment is essential to the poetry of our time.

Paypal is now available at aerialedge.com

Go to Caller and Other Pieces: http://aerialedge.com/caller.htm

Or send $9 payable to Aerial/Edge to POBox 25642, Washington, DC 20007.

Many of our titles receive web discounts:

Some Notes on my Programming, Anselm Berrigan, $14 (regularly $15)
Once Upon A Neoliberal Rocket Badge, Jules Boykoff, $12 (regularly $14)
Cipher/Civilian, Leslie Bumstead, $12 (regularly $14)
American Whatever, Tim Davis, $12 (regularly $14)
Metropolis XXX, Robert Fitterman, $12 (regularly $14)
Dovecote, Heather Fuller, $12 (regularly $14)
The Sense Record and other poems, Jennifer Moxley, $12.50 (regularly $14) interval, Kaia Sand, $12 (regularly $14) Haze, Mark Wallace, $12.50 (regularly $14)

www.aerialedge.com

Also new from Edge:

Ladies Love Outlaws, Buck Downs, 24 pages, $5

Go to: http://aerialedge.com/ladies.htm

All prices postpaid.

Thanks for your support!

↑ Index

475. David A. Kirschenbaum
A 40th Birthday Celebration for Kurt Cobain
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

please forward

Boog City's Classic Albums Live presents

A 40th Birthday Celebration for Kurt Cobain

Tues. Feb. 20, 7:00 p.m., $8

Cakeshop
152 Ludlow St.
NYC

With all three Nirvana studio albums

‹Bleach, Nevermind, and In Utero‹

performed live by

Daouets
The Domestics
Dibson T. Hoffweiler
Jeffrey Lewis
Limp Richard
The Marianne Pillsburys
The Olga Gogolas
Renminbi
Schwervon
The Sparrows
The Trouble Dolls
Genan Zilkha

Hosted by Boog City editor and publisher David Kirschenbaum

Directions: F/V to Second Ave.; F to Delancey St.; J/M/Z to Essex St. Venue is between Stanton and Rivington streets.

For further information: 212-842-BOOG(2664), [redacted], [redacted], or http://www.cake-shop.com/

Musical acts[1] bios and websites follow show running order

Bleach

The Olga Gogolas
1. Blew
2. Floyd the Barber
3. About a Girl

Limp Richard
4. School
5. Love Buzz
6. Paper Cuts

The Olga Gogolas
7. Negative Creep
8. Scoff
9. Swap Meet

Jeffrey Lewis
10. Mr. Moustache
11. Sifting
12. Big Cheese

Marianne Pillsbury and The Song Hoes
13. Downer

Nevermind

1. Smells Like Teen Spirit
2. In Bloom

Schwervon
3. Come as You Are
4. Breed
5. Lithium

The Trouble Dolls
6. Polly
7. Territorial Pissings
8. Drain You

Genan Zilkha
9. Lounge Act

10. Stay Away
11. On a Plain

Dibson T. Hoffweiler
12. Something In The Way
    Endless, Nameless

In Utero

The Domestics
1. Serve The Servants
2. Scentless Apprentice
3. Heart-Shaped Box

Renminbi
4. Rape Me
5. Frances Farmer Will Have Her Revenge On Seattle
6. Dumb

Daouets
7. Very Ape
8. Milk It
9. Pennyroyal Tea

The Sparrows
10. Radio Friendly Unit Shifter
11. tourette's
12. All Apologies

Bios:

*Daouets http://www.myspace.com/daouets DAOUETS is a mini-supergroup devised by three musicians who, as tireless collaborators in New York, wanted a little space for their solo material to breathe. Switching off instruments, songwriters, and moods with ease, the group draws on its diverse musical heritage and the diverse talents of its members.

*The Domestics http://www.thedomestics.com/ During a brief stint as an A&R assistant, Alina Moscovitz (ex-Bionic Finger) spent her days listening to piles of less-than-stellar demos. She decided she could do better, so she left the corporate world and returned to songwriting. She then hooked up with music supervisor and drummer Eric Shaw (fresh from the break-up of Conquistador which featured Sam Endicott of The Bravery). They soon lured Evan Silverman (ex-Rosenbergs) away from his jazz bass lessons in Paris and gigs at the Rainbow Room back to the world of rock.

As a trio, The Domestics morphed into a potent combination of blazing pop-punk energy, sickeningly catchy hooks, and lyrics that have a sharp wit and intelligence seldom heard inside of a three-minute song. If Debbie Harry shoved her way onstage during a Green Day show, the result might sound something like this.

Besides constantly playing live shows, the Brooklyn-based band wrote the closing credits song, "Girl I Never Kissed" for the film The D Word, "Anorexic Love Song" appears on the X-Girls DVD and "Fire Hazard" was included in the "Say It Don't Spray It" compilation CD packaged with the Warped Tour DVD. The band has participated in MEANY Fest, International Pop Overthrow and LadyfestEast festivals. The Domestics are currently recording a full-length album.

*Dibson T. Hoffweiler http://dibson.net/ http://www.myspace.com/dibson/ The latest in a long line of quirky anti-folk ingenues, including Beck, Adam Green and Jeffrey Lewis, Dibs applies that time-honored tradition of off-beat songwriting to his own private world of sugar factories, laundry baskets and ducks. With a low voice, both sweet and deadpan, and a guitar-style both virtuosic and sloppy, Dibson Hoffweiler carves out a space of compassion and intelligence in a landscape of boring love songs and thinly-veiled songwriterly misogyny.

Known for his work in anti-folk flagship bands Cheese On Bread, Huggabroomstik and Urban Barnyard, Dibs began his cultural life as an anonymous Moldy Peaches fan. But, after a stint working the soundboard at the Sidewalk Cafe, and two years generating buzz with his old band, Dibs & Sara, this Jersey boy established himself as a musical force in his own right. After several months touring Europe and North America, Dibs has proved (to himself, and to others) that his bizarre, ramshackle aesthetic is palatable outside the freaky comfort zone of New York anti-folk.

*Jeffrey Lewis http://www.thejeffreylewissite.com/ Jeffrey Lewis is a New York City born-and-bred comic book artist as well as being a local antifolk staple; with or without his band he performs his unique mix of lo-fi folk, sci-fi punk & hand-illustrated "low-budget videos" regularly around the United States and Europe. As of 2007 he has three albums out on the venerable indie label Rough Trade and his most recent comic book series "Fuff" is up to issue #5.

*Limp Richard http://www.breedingground.com/ Limp Richard (tonight without his backing band, The Disappointments) is wrapping up recording of a new LP at Olive Juice. By the time it's released, however, it's probably going to have a completely different name. Just feeling ornery.

*Marianne Pillsbury and The Song Hoes http://www.mariannepillsbury.com/ Maine native Marianne Pillsbury writes pop-rock songs with cleverly-crafted, hook-laden melodies and brash, witty, tongue-in-cheek lyrics. Released in 2004, her debut album The Wrong Marianne has received enthusiastic reviews from

The New York Times, Time Out New York, The Boston Herald and The San Francisco Chronicle and elicited comparisons to the best work of Liz Phair, Juliana Hatfield and Jill Sobule. The album was named a Top 12 DIY Pick in Performing Songwriter Magazine. The song "Boo Hoo" won Best Alt/Rock Song in The Great American Song Contest 2004 and was also selected for inclusion on ROCKRGRL magazine's Discoveries 2005 compilation CD.

*The Olga Gogolas The itinerant and magisterial Olga Gogolas feature Wayne Waverly on guitar and vocals, and James Keepnews on bass-synth-noise watch. For this set, the OG's plan to completely demolish Cobain's original arrangements on six tracks from Bleach, only to resurrect them like so many false grunge deities who stank of junk.

*Renminbi http://www.renminbinyc.com/ http://www.myspace.com/renminbi Definitely not for the faint-hearted, we combine stripped-down punk basics with ass-shaking keyboard grooves and apocalyptic build-ups. Someone else said it best: "Imagine Polvo fronted by Kim Gordon and you might have a sense of NYC trio Renminbi's sound. Š Pitting frenetic drumbeats against postrock keyboards and angular guitar, Renminbi retain all the concision without losing an ounce of urgency.[2]

*Schwervon! http://www.olivejuicemusic.com/schwervon.html http://www.myspace.com/schwervon Schwervon! Is a two-piece rock band. Nan and Matt have been a couple longer than they have been a band. Their relationship influences their art. Their art influences their relationship. They are two birds of a different feather. You might say one flies and one rolls and they meet in the middle with two halves of the worm. They are a collaboration. Is one Sonny and one Cher? Is one a pop lover and one a noise lover? Why do they both love food so much? Why are they obsessed with their cat Gummo?

*The Sparrows http://myspace.com/rachelandrew Andrew Phillip Tipton met Rachel Talentino in Savannah while working at The Gap. A common love for catchy melodies, Carole King, and boys led them to Brooklyn. As The Sparrows, Andrew and Rachel make up the cutest anti-folk duo around! Simple and lovely.

*The Trouble Dolls
http://www.troubledolls.net/
Trouble Dolls are Cheri, Matty, and Chris. They play pop music. They are from Brooklyn. They do not smoke. Their album "Sticky" is available on Half a Cow Records. They thank you for coming to see them play.

*Genan Zilkha http://www.myspace.com/genanisfabulous Genan Zilkha, guitar/vocals, was a classically trained pianist until she found that she had a taste of rock and roll. Since that didn't work out, she now spends her time writing folk songs with titles such as "I Think I Might Be Food Poisoning (But it could also be love)" and "I Know What Will Make You Not A Dyke." Genan is also known for her unique takes on Britney Spears songs, in particular her version of Britney's version of the Bobby Brown song "My Prerogative." She has performed at the Knitting Factory, as well as at venues throughout Rhode Island and Binghamton, NY.

David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

476. jUStin!katKO
Re: Mom w/first published poem
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

dear list

the magazine in which Stephen's mom's poem was published - "Everyone's Cup of Tea #1" - is issue 5 of the Bad Press Serials. If you don't know about the Serials, then u must familiarize yourself. It's an excellent emerging run of a journal - not only because the poems in them are brilliant - but because of the Miscellany at the back of each issue. The Miscellany is a chronological record of what's happening in poetry and politics, providing an Essential History of information regarding readings / book releases / deaths / births / continuations / news items. But more importantly, it collects discourse from blogs, lists and the editors on particularly significant events or texts. It's a really useful gathering of discourse and poetry information.

if you'd like copies, the best way is probably to write Jow Lindsay, one of the editors: <[redacted]>. the journal's co-edited by Marianne Morris and Jonathan Stevenson. PDFs of the 1st and 2nd issues are available at http://badpress.infinology.net/

Also - each issue of the Serials is a nominal first issue of a 'new journal', so in order they go like this:

- Bad Press Serials Version 1: He's Asked For Size Ten Arial On This One & It Goes Over the Edge A Bit BUt If It's Size Ten Arial He Wnats It's Size Ten Arial He's Getting - #1 - Bad Press Serials Version 2: Verfassungspatriotisthmus - #1 - Bad Press Serials Version 3: Can We Have Our Bell Back - #1 - Bad Press

Serials Version 4: Eyes Monthly - #1 - Bad Press Serials Version 5: Everyone's Cup of Tea - #1

the provocation is perhaps that different editorial collectives should edit these journals' 2nd, 3rd, 4th, etc issues. and i'm intending this email as an invitation for someone to actually do that. such an action would be exciting and easily recognizable as Responsible.

Bad Press Serials! Subscribe to this journal! Somebody publish an issue 2!

x justin katko

↑ Index

477. Dubravka Djuric
march in belgrade cultural center
Wed 14 Feb 2007

IF SOMEONE FROM THE PEOPLE IN THIS LIST IS OR WILL BE IN EUROPE ARROUND MARCH 20, AND COULD AFFORD TO COME TO BELGRADE AND HAVE PRESENTATION OF HIS OR HER WORK, IT WILL BE POSSIBLE TO DO THIS WITHIN THE MANIFESTATION POETRY WEEK... IN BELGRADE CULTURAL CENTER (I THINK YOU COULD FIND THE SITE), JUST LET ME KNOW... ONE OR 2 PERSONS! THEY COULD GIVE ACCOMODATION AND SMALL AMMOUNT OF MONEY FOR LOCAL COSTS DURING THE STAY.

↑ Index

478. Ruth Lepson
Re: "Growing Up Girl" Chicago reading
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

many congratulations on the anthology. I edited Poetry from Sojourner: A Feminist Anthology & know what it means to gather the words of disparate women & bring those words to a larger world. Hope it is greeted warmly. Women & Children is a great place to begin. Wish you success on your reading tour.

On 2/8/07 6:47 PM, "Jennifer Karmin" <[redacted]> wrote:

> hey poetry friends....check out this new anthology of women's writing edited by michelle sewell. it's a terrific example of a community-based project being fully supported by an independent press.
>
> onwards,
> jennifer karmin

A reading for
"Growing Up Girl:
An Anthology of Voices from Marginalized Spaces"

Featuring editor Michelle Sewell
and Chicago contributors:
Wendy Altschuler
Jennifer Karmin
Janet Vega
Latiffany Wright
Jewel Sophia Younge

7:30pm Friday, February 16
Women and Children First Books
5233 N. Clark Street -- Chicago, IL
http://www.womenandchildrenfirst.com
Free

Published by GirlChild Press, this eclectic collection of poems, essays, and short stories documents the transition from girl to woman as told by the girls and women who know the journey best. The multicultural anthology examines issues such as identity, domestic violence, acceptance, motherhood, beauty, and sexuality. It can be bought from independent bookstores like Women and Children First or purchased through http://www.girlchildpress.com.

WENDY ALTSCHULER graduated with high honors from DePaul University with a degree in Women¹s and Gender Studies and Anthropology. She is the first person in her family to graduate from college.

JENNIFER KARMIN is a poet, artist, and educator who has experimented with language throughout the U.S. and Japan. She is a founding member of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise and co-curator of the Red Rover reading series. Jennifer works as a Poet-in-Residence for the Chicago Public Schools and teaches creative writing to immigrants at Truman College.

MICHELLE SEWELL is an award-winning poet and screenwriter whose writing has appeared on NPR and Black Entertainment Television. Throughout her work > as a poet and a social worker, Sewell has maintained that there must be a place for women and girls to develop and express their truest selves.

>
> JANET VEGA is 28 years old, married, and mother to two beautiful boys. She is currently attending Morton College for an Associates in Office Management Technology.
>
> LATTIFANY WRIGHT is 24 years old and resides in Chicago with her daughter. She is a student in the Masters of Fine Arts program at Chicago State University and plans to write full time after completing her degree.
>
> JEWEL SOPHIA YOUNGE has used several pen names in her career. She has published a short story, ³Roots Thing Dirty,² a short play, and poems in magazines ranging from English Journal to Rolling Out. New York artist Uraline Hager featured Younge¹s work in New York and Havana exhibits. Younge also worked on Coquie Hughe¹s most recent film ³Did I Just Look at Her.² Younge is a St. Louis playwright who teaches, writes, and resides in Chicago.
>
> ---
>
> The fish are biting.
> Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.
> http://searchmarketing.yahoo.com/arp/sponsoredsearch_v2.php

↑ Index

479. Andrew Taylor

CFP: 'George Oppen: A Centenary Conference' - conference

Wed 14 Feb 2007

CFP: 'George Oppen: A Centenary Conference', conference, Fall/Autumn 2008, Edinburgh University.

2008 marks the centenary of the birth of the American poet George Oppen. From his early "objectivist" volume Discrete Series (1934) to the spare and enigmatic meditations of Primitive (1978), Oppen's work consistently interrogated the relationship between poetry and sincerity and the ground of political and ethical value. This conference will include major scholars from both sides of the Atlantic (including keynote addresses from Professor Marjorie Perloff of Stanford University and Professor Peter Nicholls of Sussex Univerity) in order to celebrate Oppen's centenary and to consider key aspects of his artistic achievement and legacy. An edited volume of specially commissioned essays arising out of papers given at the conference is also planned.

Possible topics for consideration include: Objectivism and the literary object; style and sincerity; literary and philsophical modernism; the cold war; the idea of America; poetry and the polis.

Abstracts of no more than 500 words should be sent to [redacted]. The deadline for submissions is November 1, 2007.

Lee Spinks (English Literature, University of Edinburgh)

↑ Index

480. Dan Waber
hush suite, 6 by Jenny Sampirisi
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

the minimalist concrete poetry site at:

http://www.logolalia.com/minimalistconcretepoetry/

has been updated with 6 pieces by Jenny Sampirisi.

Poetry rewires brains. This makes it the ideal tool to use for effecting cultural, social, and political change. Poetry built for the eye has the added benefit of the slow burn on the retina to help ensure it really sticks.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

481. Shankar, Ravi (English)
Re: praise to the watch
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Gabe - very glad to read your piece too and in fact I began something with a similar premise last year, but - pardon the pun - never had the time to finish it. It's fascinating that something as apparently transparent as the passage and recording of time is in fact deeply politicized and constitutive of consciousness. Am including the piece I was working on, which is fragmentary and incomplete in nature, but rubs up nicely against yours I think.

-Ravi

Timekeeping

Interrogate the role of the clock in the maintenance of empire.

Take the 1884 Prime Meridian Conference. The “universal” hour, Greenwich Mean, favors industry to agriculture, punching in to the peripatetic, plugged and debugged to poaching like an egg in the turbulence of a brass kettle.

Nothing nearer than fin de siecle.

Spaces gravid with teleological forms. Silences and elisions. Swathes of season that know no second hand. Attempts to articulate sanitized versions of nomadic culture in corporeal form, as perfected bodies strapped to the wrist are subtle acts of terrorism.

Scratch marks on bones or sticks with a stone, count the interval between phases of the moon, or like the Egyptians watch for Canis Major, the Dog Star, to rise approximately when the inundation of the Nile begins.

Anything with moving hands both disables and enables a spectatorial position that cannot be graphed on axes.

Gnomons, shadow-casters, combined with scales to produce sundials, specially made for different latitudes, status symbols when miniaturized during the reign of Augustus Caesar,

Drip-drop a precursor to tick-tock a precursor to beep-beep-beep.

Water through a siphon turns a wheel to set a drum marked with lines the floating pointer of the clepsydra indicates to show elapse.

The moment of marigold feeling elongated into an outer fringe pulled taut as a shawl over the eyes, a crouching in a trench where footfall had been grown over green and withered to appear again, briefly luminescent, not yours but more you than your own embodiment, though all desire to possess it vanished, all desire vanished, a stillness where motion ceased and you began, where you began with tentative strokes, to recollect what in retrospect could not be recreated, was in fact and would remain without semblance, what could not be, but was, in fact is.

Astrolabe, star-grasper, instrument of the devil, set of movable plates showing ecliptic and meridian, modeled on Hipparchus’ map that imagined a perpendicular line connecting each celestial body to the plane of the Earth’s equator, so location and distance and time were discernable.

Dram is to scruple is to grain is to fraction of a gram is to measurable duration.

On the Spanish slave schooner, the Amistad, the ship’s passengers, snatched from Sierra Leone, revolted, sparing only the navigator for his sextant, but instead of being returned home, ended up seized by the United States Navy, interred in a New Haven jail, were argued over by abolitionists and federal courts, were marked Cuban merchandise by the Spanish, until, a few years later, accompanied by Christian missionaries, they were returned to their village. What would you call the passage of time for them contrasted with the lives of those who had been left behind?

King Alfred the Great of England credited “officially” with inventing graduated candles to divide his day into duties, though for centuries previous and into the Sung dynasty, the Chinese calibrated sticks of incense to measure time, using sticks of different scents at different intervals, so that hours were manifest by shifting fragrance. Sandalwood sunrises, jasmine at noon, juniper evenings, myrrh presaging dusk, the threads unraveling and dropping into a sounding plate, the air charged with passages to read in the nose.

Noon in New York. 7:00 PM, Cape Town, South Africa 1:00 PM, La Paz, Bolivia 8:00 PM in Baghdad, Iraq. 2:00 PM, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil 10:30 PM in Bombay, India 5:00 PM, Casablanca, Morocco Midnight in Bangkok, Thailand 4:00 PM, Reykjavik, Iceland 1:00 AM, next day, Shanghai, China 6:00 PM, Oslo, Norway 3:00 AM, next day Melbourne, Australia

Standardization is to make uniform. Uniforms when worn show coherence. Are a means of identification. Are markers of a lack of variation, diversity or changes in degree. Standardization and uniforms go hand in hand. Uniforms and force go hand in hand. Standardization, uniforms and force go hand in hand. Commerce trails not far behind.

How time slows under intense gravity and increased velocity. The faster one goes, the less time passes. Approach the speed of light and live forever.

I wait for nothing, for nothing will come to pass.

Shifting grains in an hourglass, powdered eggshell, marble dust or sand slipping away, metaphoric, flowing from one bulb of a glass vessel to the other, through a passageway ten times the size of any single particle. An hourglass to measure cooking times, municipal meetings, speeds at sea, periods of torture.

In a verge-and-foliot escapement, gravity is mediated. A weighted rope turns a toothed wheel. Controlling the movement of the wheel is a verge with pallets at each end. When the wheel turns, the foliot oscillates with weights until stopped by the pallets. Back forth, back forth, back forth. Nothing measured but movement.

Because time is out there, eaten by light. (Norma Cole). The essence of nowness runs like fire along the fuse of time (George Santayana).

In the movies, time is abetted by edits. Cut from a plane taking off to a plane landing in the same airport. A voyage has been taken, time has passed. Cut from a zoom in of a door handle, to the interior of a room: space has been moved through, time has passed. Use a montage of images to depict passing time; use voiceover to move the action forwards, backwards, into the leading edge of the narrative. Cinematic time, save the two hours in a dark theater, is the elaborate construction of a fiction. Yet take the projectionist in his dark booth, running a reel backwards, so the coffee flows back into the pot, the butter smoothed off the toast, the sizzling eggs liquefying then leaping from the pan back into eggshells.

Time is a form of becoming. Becoming the form of time.

Quartz crystals possess piezoelectric charge, vibrate millions of time a second when exposed to alternating electrical fields, yet over time, the oscillations, due to temperature change, impurity, or decay, lose their accuracy, drift, misquote the hour.

Between any two instants, there is a third, and between them, another, an unquantifiable infinity of them, strung along a linear continuum like shrinking beads on an invisible string.

****

Ravi Shankar
Ed., http://www.drunkenboat.com
Poet-in-Residence
Assistant Professor
CCSU - English Dept.
[redacted]

↑ Index

482. heidi arnold
Re: march in belgrade cultural center
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Dear Dubravka Djuric,

-- thank you for your message -- i imagine you are getting a lot of replies to it --

-- i would be interested in doing this -- very much so -- i would not need any funds -- and had planned to be in europe anyway -- it is a wonderful idea!

thank you again for this post -- i will understand if you already have too many people

best wishes,

heidi

www.heidiarnold.org
www.peaceraptor.blogspot.com

On 2/14/07, Dubravka Djuric <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> IF SOMEONE FROM THE PEOPLE IN THIS LIST IS OR WILL BE IN EUROPE ARROUND
> MARCH 20, AND COULD AFFORD TO COME TO BELGRADE AND HAVE PRESENTATION OF HIS
> OR HER WORK, IT WILL BE POSSIBLE TO DO THIS WITHIN THE MANIFESTATION POETRY
> WEEK... IN BELGRADE CULTURAL CENTER (I THINK YOU COULD FIND THE SITE), JUST
> LET ME KNOW... ONE OR 2 PERSONS! THEY COULD GIVE ACCOMODATION AND SMALL
> AMMOUNT OF MONEY FOR LOCAL COSTS DURING THE STAY.
>

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

483. heidi arnold
Re: march in belgrade cultural center
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

sorry, that was not meant for the list and should have been sent offlist regards,

heidi

On 2/14/07, heidi arnold <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Dear Dubravka Djuric,
>
> -- thank you for your message -- i imagine you are getting a lot of > replies to it --
>
> -- i would be interested in doing this -- very much so -- i would not need > any funds -- and had planned to be in europe anyway -- it is a wonderful > idea!
>
> thank you again for this post -- i will understand if you already have too > many people

>
> best wishes,
>
> heidi
>
> www.heidiarnold.org
> www.peaceraptor.blogspot.com
>
> On 2/14/07, Dubravka Djuric <[redacted]> wrote:
> >
> > IF SOMEONE FROM THE PEOPLE IN THIS LIST IS OR WILL BE IN EUROPE ARROUND
> > MARCH 20, AND COULD AFFORD TO COME TO BELGRADE AND HAVE PRESENTATION OF HIS
> > OR HER WORK, IT WILL BE POSSIBLE TO DO THIS WITHIN THE MANIFESTATION POETRY
> > WEEK... IN BELGRADE CULTURAL CENTER (I THINK YOU COULD FIND THE SITE), JUST
> > LET ME KNOW... ONE OR 2 PERSONS! THEY COULD GIVE ACCOMODATION AND SMALL > > AMMOUNT OF MONEY FOR LOCAL COSTS DURING THE STAY.
> >
>
>
>
> --
> www.heidiarnold.org
> http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

484. William Allegrezza

Series A in Chicago--Next Tuesday Sterling Plumpp

Wed 14 Feb 2007

I'd like to invite you to this month's Series A event.

On Feb. 20th, next Tuesday, Sterling Plumpp with read with a musical duo.

All events take place at the Hyde Park Art Center (5020 S. Cornell, Chicago, IL) at 7:00. BYOB.

As our mailing list is small, please feel free to forward this e-mail. If you are a teacher, feel free to invite your students.

For more information, visit http://www.moriapoetry.com/seriesa.html

Bio:

Sterling Plumpp was born in Clinton, Mississippi. Educated in public and religious schools, he graduated from high school in 1960 and went on to attend Roosevelt University in Chicago. Growing up poor in rural Mississippi, Plumpp worked in the cotton and cornfields and by the time he was eleven, he was expected to grow up to be a field hand. A bootlegger aunt had other plans for him, however, and paid for him to attend Holy Ghost High School in Jackson, Mississippi. Earning a scholarship to a small local college, Plumpp began his college education, but the scholarship money ran out, so he hitchhiked to Chicago in 1962. He worked in a post office until 1964, and during that time, he began writing his poetry.

Plumpp saw his first poems published in 1971 in Negro Digest and was hired to teach English and later African American studies at the University of Illinois, Chicago. His poetry, often based on blues and jazz rhythms, has won him numerous awards, including the Richard Wright Literary Excellence Award, the Carl Sandburg Literary Award for poetry, and three Illinois Arts Council awards. He has published twelve volumes of his work.

You can find a web site dedicated to Sterling Plumpp at http://www.shs.starkville.k12.ms.us/mswm/MSWritersAndMusicians/writers/Plump p.html

Bill Allegrezza

↑ Index

485. Tom Orange
Rodney Jones wins $100,000 Poetry Prize
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

dear all,

just came across this:

"One of the richest prizes in poetry, the Kingsley Tufts Poetry Award, has gone to Rodney Jones, a professor of English at Southern Illinois University. Mr. Jones, the author of a collection titled "Salvation Blues" (Houghton Mifflin), will receive $100,000 from Claremont Graduate University, which selects the winner. Claremont chose Eric McHenry, a Seattle poet, as the winner of the Kate Tufts Discovery Award for his book "Potscrubber Lullabies," published by the Waywiser Press. He will receive $10,000." <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/02/14/books/14poetry.html>

here is the title poem (the final stanza is italicized)...

> "Salvation Blues"
>
> Many people here expect
> the dead are not really dead.
> Therefore, they resolve to live
> as though they were not alive:
>
> so softly the minor thirds
> so tenderly the major sevenths,
> white gospel the elderly virgins
> keep treading like chastity
>
> until Franz Liszt, ravager
> and destroyer of pianos,
> critiques with a thunderstorm:
>
> Remind us there is something > to be dead about. Play like > you are alive, even if it is not true.

the entire collection is searchable and readable on amazon.

enjoy (to the extent possible),
tom orange

↑ Index

486. Peter Ciccariello
For this was on seynt Volantynys day
Wed 14 Feb 2007

For this was on seynt Volantynys day<http://www.cgi7.com/peterimages/valentinesday.htm>

The first recorded association of Valentine's Day with romantic love is in Parlement of Foules (1382)

"For this was on seynt Volantynys day Whan euery bryd comyth there to chese [chose] his make [mate]."
- by Geoffrey Chaucer

From Wikipedia

-- Peter Ciccariello
http://invisiblenotes.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

487. Joel Weishaus
Cecil Touchon
Wed 14 Feb 2007

I think this is some interesting work:
http://suprematism.org/index.html

-Joel

↑ Index

488. Rob McLennan
fwd - [[redacted]: One year on]
Wed 14 Feb 2007

One year on, the shadow train is still travelling somewhere furiously towards you. In carriage #13:

Davd HW Grubb wears clean underwear and carries A BRIEF GUIDE TO EVERYTHING; Luke Kennard has a go at pressing the FUN button; rob mclennan writes Valentines to Tina-Francis, Jennifer and others; John Muckle follows Nadine out of the station and under a bridge into the town; Emma Lee can’t stop texting someone; while Peter Hughes dreams of making a go-cart.

To see more, go to http://shadowtrain.com

Thank you.

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press fair ...12th poetry coll'n - aubade (Broken Jaw Press) .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

489. Thomas savage
Re: Rodney Jones wins $100,000 Poetry Prize
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Although it is of course questionable to judge a poet on the basis of one poem, it would seem that if this poem is representative of the style of the whole book, Mr. Jones has been vastly overpaid by the people who gave him one hundred thousand dollars. I could think of ten living poets right away who deserve this money more. Many fine poets have barely made $10,000 from their poetry after a lifetime of labor. Of course that labor is its own reward, but it would be nice if the money landed where it was deserved, for a change. Regards, Tom Savage

Tom Orange <[redacted]> wrote: dear all,

just came across this:

"One of the richest prizes in poetry, the Kingsley Tufts Poetry Award, has gone to Rodney Jones, a professor of English at Southern Illinois University. Mr. Jones, the author of a collection titled "Salvation Blues" (Houghton Mifflin), will receive $100,000 from Claremont Graduate University, which selects the winner. Claremont chose Eric McHenry, a Seattle poet, as the winner of the Kate Tufts Discovery Award for his book "Potscrubber Lullabies," published by the Waywiser Press. He will receive $10,000."

here is the title poem (the final stanza is italicized)...

"Salvation Blues"

Many people here expect
the dead are not really dead.
Therefore, they resolve to live
as though they were not alive:

so softly the minor thirds
so tenderly the major sevenths,
white gospel the elderly virgins
keep treading like chastity

until Franz Liszt, ravager
and destroyer of pianos,
critiques with a thunderstorm:

Remind us there is something to be dead about. Play like
you are alive, even if it is not true.

the entire collection is searchable and readable on amazon.

enjoy (to the extent possible),
tom orange

Check out the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta - Fire up a more powerful email and get things done faster.

↑ Index

490. Catherine Daly
Re: Rodney Jones wins $100,000 Poetry Prize
Wed 14 Feb 2007

> Eric McHenry
From Potscrubber Lullabies

from Waywiser Press, home to the Anthony Hecht Poetry Prize; I think he freelances to Slate occasionally, has had some stuff published in Cranky.

A note that while the Kingsley was formerly nominations only, now anyone can enter it. First books for the Kate. Since you have to send five copies of the book, this really adds up.

Potscrubber Lullabies

I

The Potscrubber completes a cycle
so vigorous the knives were rattling,
and pauses, waking Evan Michael,
who finds all silences unsettling.

There's no resemblance. It's too early.
Everything is still so round.
But we've occurred to him as surely
as silence has occurred to sound,

and when he's finished sharpening
into himself, and when we've blurred,
we're going to go on happening
in silence like he's never heard.

II

I wore him like a broken arm
all summer, slung
from my right shoulder in a paisley hammock
so deep the sides closed over him.
When I walked he swung, and slept,
lulled by the time his body kept
against my stomach.
When I stopped I had to sing.

Bird Plays to a Cow

A Swedish musician remembers a drive through farm country in a car full of musicians, one of whom told Bird that cows love music. Bird asked the driver to pull over ..." – Gary Giddins, Celebrating Bird: The Triumph of Charlie Parker

Fifty years from now
a writer, writing about me
playing to this cow,
will call the cow "he."
There's her udder, plain
as an udder, and yet . . .
something about what people want
a cow, or an audience, to be.

Some painters haze the foreground
and render something in the middle-distance
unnaturally sharp, to remind the idiot looker
that this is a painting, not a pasture.

The writer will probably do something self-referential, too,
and will almost certainly call the cow "bewildered."

"Bewildered." As though
I strode out here expecting her to nod
in time or stand on two hooves and applaud.
As though cows stand around waiting for something,
and not just anything, to come along.
Come on. What I do might confuse
you, but this cow was wildered when I got here.

To this cow there is only the plain fact –

hot fence, sharp fence, shit,
puddle, tuft of grass, golden horn
in the hands of the brown man
who wasn't here this morning and is here now,

and notes, too –
after so much noise,
the plain fact of song.

My friend,
the bewildered one who's still in the car,
told me that cows dig music.
I choose to believe that. That's what I'm doing here.
She chews. That's what she's doing here.

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

491. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Rodney Allen Jones Prize
Wed 14 Feb 2007

He was a fascinating, engaging poet who used to read in Philly.....Does anybody know if he's still around?

Chris

On Feb 14, 2007, at 11:17 AM, Catherine Daly wrote:

> Eric McHenry
> From Potscrubber Lullabies
>
> from Waywiser Press, home to the Anthony Hecht Poetry Prize; I think he freelances to Slate occasionally, has had some stuff published in Cranky.
>
> A note that while the Kingsley was formerly nominations only, now anyone can enter it. First books for the Kate. Since you have to send five copies of the book, this really adds up.
>
> Potscrubber Lullabies
>
> I
>
> The Potscrubber completes a cycle
> so vigorous the knives were rattling,
> and pauses, waking Evan Michael,
> who finds all silences unsettling.
>
> There's no resemblance. It's too early.
> Everything is still so round.
> But we've occurred to him as surely
> as silence has occurred to sound,
>
> and when he's finished sharpening
> into himself, and when we've blurred,
> we're going to go on happening
> in silence like he's never heard.
>
> II
>
> I wore him like a broken arm
> all summer, slung
> from my right shoulder in a paisley hammock

so deep the sides closed over him.
When I walked he swung, and slept,
lulled by the time his body kept
against my stomach.
When I stopped I had to sing.

Bird Plays to a Cow

A Swedish musician remembers a drive through farm country in a car full of musicians, one of whom told Bird that cows love music. Bird asked the driver to pull over ..." – Gary Giddins, Celebrating Bird: The Triumph of Charlie Parker

Fifty years from now
a writer, writing about me
playing to this cow,
will call the cow "he."
There's her udder, plain
as an udder, and yet . . .
something about what people want
a cow, or an audience, to be.

Some painters haze the foreground
and render something in the middle-distance
unnaturally sharp, to remind the idiot looker
that this is a painting, not a pasture.

The writer will probably do
something self-referential, too,
and will almost certainly call the cow "bewildered."

"Bewildered." As though
I strode out here expecting her to nod
in time or stand on two hooves and applaud.
As though cows stand around waiting for something,
and not just anything, to come along.
Come on. What I do might confuse
you, but this cow was wildered when I got here.

To this cow there is only the plain fact –

> hot fence, sharp fence, shit,
> puddle, tuft of grass, golden horn
> in the hands of the brown man
> who wasn't here this morning and is here now,
>
> and notes, too –
> after so much noise,
> the plain fact of song.
>
> My friend,
> the bewildered one who's still in the car,
> told me that cows dig music.
> I choose to believe that. That's what I'm doing here.
> She chews. That's what she's doing here.
>
> --
> All best,
> Catherine Daly
> [redacted]

↑ Index

492. Lauren Sorensen
Frank Kuenstler
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Hello poetics list,

I'm writing because I am conducting some research on NYC-based poet and filmmaker Frank Kuenstler (1928-1996). Anthology Film Archives recently acquired film elements produced by Kuenstler, and we're at a point now where we're trying to get a sense of the historical context, his role in the poetry community, and so on.

I understand he was one of the founders of the Eventorium, a poetry and performance venue in the Upper East Side, that operated in the mid-60's. Those involved in this scene also produced a short-lived journal called the "Eventorium Muse." Kuenstler published numerous volumes of poetry, including LENS through Film Culture, and many others.

Titles by Kuenstler would be especially helpful, as are any recollections of screenings of his work, or if you may have worked with him- please let me know, on- or off-list.

If anyone has any information to share, I would greatly appreciate it. Library research is turning up very little, so any anecdotal information is especially useful.

Thanks so much.

best,
Lauren Sorensen
NYU Moving Image Archiving & Preservation

↑ Index

493. Alexander Jorgensen
AL FRANKEN TO RUN FOR US SENATE - OFFICIAL
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

http://www.alfranken.com/page/content/videoMessage

_____
___ Looking for earth-friendly autos? Browse Top Cars by "Green Rating" at Yahoo! Autos' Green Center. http://autos.yahoo.com/green_center/

↑ Index

494. Tim Peterson
Julie E. Patton and M. Nourbese Philip - SEGUE at BPC, Sat Feb 17, 4 PM
Wed 14 Feb 2007

---

please come!

Julie E. Patton and M. Nourbese Philip

Saturday, February 17th, 2007
4pm-6pm
Segue Reading Series
The Bowery Poetry Club
@ 308 Bowery, just north of Houston $6
Curators: Tonya Foster and Erica Hunt

Julie Patton is a performance artist and writer. She is busy working on various community development/greenspace/sustainability projects under the rubric of “Think Green!” Her new chapbook “Notes for Some (Nominally) Awake” is forthcoming from Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs. Julie often takes to the road for various collaborative projects with Uri Caine, and is a fellow at Bates College’s Common Grounds Project in Maine, where she collaborates with Jonathan Skinner.

from “Car Tune” in “Car Tune” & Not So Bella Donna by Julie Patton

Cobberates d’escapist nature
O, not-so-funny papers pen Ulti mate racistcaper

ah-h-h! shucksguffaw photogeneticaesthetics

O, the evening news

Correction

Fluid car toon bloob Boobtubelooneytoonblues

Technicoloring

Marlene Nourbese Philip is a poet, essayist, writer and lawyer who lives in Toronto. A recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship in poetry, the prestigious Casa de las Americas prize for She Tries Her Tongue, Nourbese Philip is also the l988 first prize winner of the Tradewinds Collective Prize (Trinidad & Tobago) in both the poetry and the short story categories. "The experiences of Black women and girls are foremost in NourbeSe's works, as are issues of belonging, language, place and location."

from Looking for Livingstone by M. Nourbese Philip

Livingstone now lies buried at Westminster Abbey because he “discovered” and explored Africa, turning what had been “burning solitudes, bleak, and barren, heated by poisonous winds, infested by snakes and only roamed over by a few scattered tribes of untameable barbarians” into “a high country, full of fruit trees, abounding inshade, eatered by a perfect network of rivers.”* Perhaps he discovered something else—the same thing I search for—bruised by tongue under tooth lips caress before the cruel between of teeth crush grind the hard kernels of silence

↑ Index

495. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Jason, et al,

I've been away from email, but want to respond to some of the comments about haiku recently.

To start with, I regard haiku as a genre of poetry, not a form. Form is only one aspect of many aspects of the genre. If you're snide towards form in general, to use your characterization of yourself, then perhaps you don't understand where I'm coming from regarding haiku, because I don't promote any set syllabic form for haiku. So I'm glad to hear that I've persuaded you, at least a little bit, that there's something you're missing out on with haiku. Perhaps others are missing it, too.

Perhaps too, Jason, you've missed my insistence that a poem is a poem first, and a haiku (or not) only secondarily. If a poem moves me, I couldn't give a flying fig for whether it's a haiku or not. So the problem lies with claiming something is a haiku when it clearly misses some of haiku's predominant targets. You say "All manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku?" You seem to think I don't agree with you. Yes indeed, so what? Something can be really effective as a short poem, without regard to whether it's a haiku, even if it happens to be 5-7-5 syllables (which I think is irrrelevant to haiku in English, though some people think it IS relevant). This openness (poetry first, labels later, if at all) is one of my guiding priniciples in editing Tundra: The Journal of the Short Poem, whose contributors have included the following (some of these are forthcoming): Francisco X. Alar con, Art Beck, Robert Bly, John Brandi, Billy Collins, Ruth Daigon, Doc Dachtler, Dick Davis, Diane di Prima, Tom Disch, Jack Foley, Dana Gioia, Jonathan Greene, Jane Hirshfield, H. L. Hix, Ted Kooser, Richard Kostelanetz, Gerald Locklin, Leza Lowitz, Stefanie Marlis, Samuel Menashe, Paul Nelson, Charles Rossiter, Steve Sanfield, Barry Spacks, Robert Spiess, Robert Sward, Susan Terris, Mike Tuggle, Cor van den Heuvel, Ken Waldman, and many others. I provide this list to lend credence, I hope, to the quality of the short poetry I appreciate. Only two or three of the poets I've just listed are haiku writers, and you will also see a wide spectrum of formalists and experimentalists as well. Poetry first.

Indeed, so what if a poem isn't a haiku? The only problem is when people claim that such poems ARE haiku if they're not. That's all. So if a person doesn't value haiku much, that's something I'm perfectly fine with. It's just that claiming something as haiku if it's very wide of the mark seems sloppy, and even naive in the extreme, like complaining that one's doggerel isn't accepted for publication at the leading poetry journals, yet insisting that one's doggerel is high art. It's that disconnect that strikes me as problematic, for both readers and the writer. I'm simply trying to point out that certain people, even if they're not claiming to be emperors, have no clothes on, yet seem to think they're wearing haiku clothes. At one level, who cares? I would like to hope, though, that POETS care, that EDUCATORS care. To think that something is a haiku when it's not can indeed be problematic. In one sense, it's a delusion. In another sense, it perpetuates misunderstandings fo r those who might be inclined to take the genre more seriously. I am perfectly happy to respect a lack of interest in haiku, but that's distinct from asserting something is haiku (out of naivete?) when it's not. At the very least, as you say, it's simply using the wrong word to call it haiku, but in my experience I've found that there is sometimes a deeper naivete than just using the wrong word because many people are so adamant and think that haiku is 5-7-5 (which is misguided in English), and nothing more (which is also misguided). It's more than just semantics, at least for many people.

Your experience with learning haiku in school as a 5-7-5 poem is exactly the problem that needs to be corrected. I had the same experience, except it was in high school. The problem lies with the teachers, the curriculum guides, and the textbooks. You are apparently a victim of the problem, and may unwittingly contribute to the perpetuation of the problem. If you hardly cared about haiku, fine, but at least I hope you are now more aware of the issue.

Where you get to a more valuable point is where you say "instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating." You may indeed be right there, so the difference may lie in my seeing value, and you not. The truth is that I see great value in it for its own sake, as well as great benefit of haiku techniques to other kinds of writing. You don't need haiku to learn these techniques, but haiku isolates and emphasizes certain techniques of clarity, image, implication, and objective/subjective control, so that's why it can be so helpful. But on its own terms, a haiku can be transcendent, producing a spiritual wholeness for many readers. A haiku may not change the world any more than a good joke gives momentary satisfaction, but there is something THERE, and I do think it gives many people more than just the short diversion of a joke. If you're not wired for haiku , fine (I repeat, that's fine). But for many people, a good haiku lifts the tops of their heads off. There's obviously value in it for a lot of people (hence societies, the many journals, and the 4,000+ haiku books in my library, which are but a portion of what's out there). I appreciate that you're not trying to be adversarial, but neither am I. Yet I'm stuck with observing what really is a great disconnect between the reality and perception of haiku poetry. And of course, I presume on this discussion list that people do care about poetics, and I would like to hope that that can include the poetics of haiku.

Your most excellent point is where you say, "What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it." However, your comment presumes that they haven't done this, whereas I believe they have done this in spades. Consider the five volumes of books that H. F. Noyes has published called "Favorite Haiku," where he does exactly that. By talking about the specific successes of individual poems, the overall gestalt of each of his books is one of why haiku as a genre is successful and appealing. And consider books such as Higginson's Haiku Handbook or Gurga's Haiku: A Poet's Guide, and several other similar books. This effort is beyond concerted -- it's masterful. The haiku journals regularly include similar commentary as to why haiku is appealing, to the point that it has become old news to those who have been writing in the genre for decades. Yet always there is a new crop for whom it is fresh news, so the commentary remains useful. As for me, take a look at my "Becoming a Haiku Poet" essay (http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html) and tell me if that doesn't begin to answer the question for you. Or another essay of interest may be "Haiku and the Japanese Garden," online at http://hometown.aol.com/welchm/Haiku-and-the-Japanese-Garden.html. And speaking of Lee Gurga, he has a fine essay on haiku aesthetics at http://www.baymoon.com/~ariadne/form/haiku/haiku.aesthetics.gurga.htm (scroll down a bit). He begins by asking a very sensible question of those who have been writing haiku: "It is unavoidable that we should have some idea of what haiku is. The question then becomes what kind of an idea should it be?"

What is it I like about haiku? There are so many ways to answer that question, but for me haiku is an approach to infinity, in the way it creates a sense of wholeness and rightness by the careful emotive pairing of juxtaposed elements. The seasonal context adds archetypal meaning and a setting to the poem, but the main technique of implication -- somehow saying the unsaid -- allows reader engagement more than some other types of poetry, or at least in a more concentrated way. No wonder, for good reason, haiku is called an "unfinished poem." I've not heard that said of other genres of poetry. The world of allusion that goes on in good haiku is also an appeal. This is no different from other poetry, of course, but it's a richness that many casual readers of haiku (or those who read only pseudo-haiku) often don't notice.

A selection of my haiku (with photographs) is online at http://www.brooksbookshaiku.com/welch/. Many of these poems are among my favourites (at least up until about 2000, when this online collection was published).

It is not my preference to refer to "fake" haiku, versus "real" haiku, though I do like to paraphrase Robert Creeley: "Is that a real haiku, or did you write it yourself?" But I agree that it would be better to spend more attention on what makes the best haiku succeed, rather than dwell on what makes other things fail as haiku. However, I believe the conversation with many poets often has to start with unlearning. They have to back up from the wrong path they've taken, or at least be open to the possibility that they're on the wrong path. Perhaps only then does talking about what makes a good haiku work become more plausible. At least, that's my speculation. But I think it's accurate. The assumptions some people have about haiku are so deeply ingrained that it's hard for them to even begin to appreciate attempts to promote successful haiku.

Ultimately, Jason, I'm delighted that you've ordered Lee Gurga's book. If that's the limit of your exploration of haiku, that's fine by me. But you are going a world farther than most people. I'm just trying to open the door, even if just a little bit.

Michael

-----Original Message----- Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 21:02:07 -0800 From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness Well, i think the real issue is one of investment and value. You're a person who has devoted a considerable amount of time and energy into a poetic form, and as such that form has a value for you that it simply doesn't for me, as a person who generally is a little bit snide towards the idea of form from the get go. I think where the disconnect takes place is that you're mistaking a lack of interest in the minutiae of something that you say is complex (i'm not saying it's not complex, just that i don't know enough about it to be able to affirm or deny) for naivete, which is a little bit insulting. I can maybe illustrate with my own experience writing haiku. Like most people at some point in the third or fourth grade, my language arts teacher introduced the idea of syllables, as well as the idea of poems that don't possess end rhyme, by talking about these short little japanese poems called haiku that have a 5-7-5 syllable pattern. I think for most people that's the beginning and end of the interest in the form. I know that it has been largely for me. I've written all manner of poems in a 5-7-5 formula, and all manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku? if i don't know what the real purpose of a haiku is, and what the real goal is, and am in fact trying to achieve some other goal and mistakenly calling it haiku, i'm not being naive, i'm just using the wrong word. So i stop calling it haiku, and we can go about our lives happily enough never discussing it again. However, there's something very peculiar about in particular the haiku booster that really rubs me the wrong way. almost like some people take a sort of obscene pleasure in "correcting" the mistake of the less informed. at some point it becaomes as trivial a matter as whether kirk or picard were a superior starship captain.

so what i'm saying is, i think what in your messages has gotten my back up a bit is the way it's expressed in such an accusatory and aloof manner, as if haiku is the only way to write a short poem, and that if one is working at the length of haiku there can't possibly be a goal higher than in realizing the conventions of haiku. being mainly an anti formalist and against the idea of poetic form that can't be expressed in a number of words fewer than the form permits the poem, i'm skeptical of such claims from the outset. So it takes some convincing for me to buy in to the idea that there really is something in this constructed form which genuinely warrants societies being dedicated to it, magazines devoted to it, and books written exploring teh depth of it. But instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating about how i don't know anything about the subject and that if i want to talk about it, i really need to do my homework.

Well fine, i say, i hate homework so lets just not talk about it. Let teh haiku snob wallow in his penny-ante beat, and i'll roll my eyes and move on to something that i think genuinely is of value.

If that makes sense, and I promise you i'm not trying to be adversarial, just trying to sort through the array of emotions and their instigations in the thread about haiku to date that prompted me to dispatch a snarky email. If you really want my opinion, this last email has gone a longer way towards getting me interested in haiku than your previous emails which seemed largely concerned with showing how some poems claiming to be haiku are not in fact.

What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it. What is it about the seasonal words and juxtapositions that you find in haiku that make them so essential and raises this above other forms like, for example, an aubade? I think maybe you'd get farther with snide jackasses like me if you focussed more on the positive argument for real haiku rather than the negative argument against fake haiku. Because i generally don't find things that are defined primarily by contrast to things which they are not to be particularly interesting. birds are cool because they have wings, not because they don't have gills, y'know?

All of that having been said, i want to let you know that I really appreciate the sincerity and tone of your last email, and I want you to know that by it, you've aroused a curiosity in me about the form that did not exist when i snarkily suggest that haiku be relegated to mystery cults. There's very little as effective as the sincere expression of passion for a topic to make another person sympathetic to investigating it. I've ordered Gurga's book, and am looking forward to reading it. I don't know if i'll become a haiku fanatic, or even if i'll ever try to write a haiku, but you've swayed me to thinking that maybe there's something i'm missing out on, and that's a tactic that is very effective with me.

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

496. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku Death Match
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Barry, I don't consider myself a formalist with haiku, except in the sense of being aware of valuable techniques (not forms) that are effective to use -- if you want to consider that "formal." I have been labeled a traditionalist by the more avant-garde, and a nontraditionalist by the deeply traditional. But whatever the case may be, I myself don't think of my approach as formalist, especially since I don't count syllables with the bulk of my haiku.

In fact, I encourage a great deal of innovation in haiku. And I preach that "no one owns haiku." Innovation for its own sake doesn't have a great lot of appeal to me (in the extreme, it can devolve into purely having shock value, or having little substance, though sometimes it can make you think or shake you out of habits), but innovation from a perspective is a grander thing, at least for me. What the sumo wrestler or a boxer can do within the ring is the art of the fight. It's the art of any sport to be creative within the confines of the rules. A sport without rules is no longer a sport. And yet what freedom most sports have. And all poetry has some sorts of rules imposed on it (by the writer, if not someone else), and these can be as fundamental as writing in lines, in English, with generally normal spelling. Basic rules may or may not include these (but will probably include others), but out of it comes great variety and creativity. I'm all for it.

As soon as you get into a genre, though, at what point is a poem a haiku, and when is it not? Let the haiku pundits worry about the exact point of divergence if you will. But there is at least a difference. There is a point where a haiku is not a haiku, and a sonnet is not a sonnet, where free verse is not free (no verse is ever really free, as we know), and where experimental poetry is rooted in tradition, and so on. (Cummings typographical experiments masked a great many poems that were fairly traditional sonnets, for example.)

I have no problem with altering a form's constraints (whether haiku or sonnet), to use Joe Amato's words. But this is an act of altering the constraints, not being ignorant of them. It is harsh to suppose that someone is ignorant of them. But let us suppose that some people are, and offer "haiku" to the world. They are not "altering" the constraints at all. To paraphrase Basho, only when you know the rules can you begin to alter them.

Dan, I appreciate your comment: "Speaking only of the haiku form, it seems to have gotten a particularly bad, trivializing, rap. There are so many haikus out there that are atrocious, and rather than see the atrociousness of the poem as a singular (repeated many times over) occurrence, the form itself gets triviailized, Hallmarkized." I would only add that there are equally many atrocious poems out there in other forms (or no particular form). Or as Joe said, "atrocious poetry of any stripe ought to be called out for what it is." It's just that the atrociousness of those particular attempts at haiku has gotten associated with the genre itself, thus giving the genre an unfair rap. By the way, in the haiku community, it's a no-no to write a "Hallmark" haiku. No disparagement of Hallmark meant, naturally, but there's a difference between poetry and sentiment.

Regarding my critique of "Golf Haiku," Eric wrote "Thanks to MDW for taking the time to write such a thoughtful critique of my haiku. Though you missed my intention -- which was merely to knock off something silly -- your criticism was excellent. It helped me to understand the form and tradition of a proper haiku. Honest criticism is rare enough, but honest and extensive criticism is both rare and rewarding." I appreciate the kind words. I wish that people weren't so intent at "knocking off something silly," which seems to happen so often with haiku. I don't mean to pick on you with this comment, Eric. Just making a general statement that your poem and comment has prompted.

Dan Zimmerman offered three new haiku, each of which have strong, essentially objective images, and the first one has a juxtapositional structure:

fog on the river / docked boats jostle / on the changing tide
after the blizzard / shovelers pitch snow / only so high my newspaper / too wet from the snowbank / to read today

There is such a difference between these, as haiku, than some of the previous poems posted here, that are not haiku. That does NOT mean the above three are better poems, though. That's a separate matter.

Thanks, too, Jason, for your comments on Japanese. My understanding is that "onji" isn't quite the right word ("on" is apparently more accurate, pronounced something like "own" but quicker), but thanks for emphasizing the difference between syllables and on. (See "Stalking the Wild Onji" for Richard Gilbert's exploration of the term "onji" and its problems -- online at http://www.iyume.com/research/onji/onji1.html.) "Haiku" has two syllables, but three on. "Basho" too. As you say, Jason, "where we are listening for syllables, the japanese are listening for mora, or onji [on], and the syllable is a slightly larger unit than a mora." Koji Kawamoto, as I think I've mentioned before, has a definitive essay on this subject in the appendix to his book The Poetics of Japanese Verse (University of Tokyo Press). (By the way, Jason, since you quoted one of Jack McCarthy's haiku, Jack and I have discussed haiku together here in Seattle, where I was featured poet (but not a competitor) for the 2005 and 2006 haiku slams. Jack won the 2005 Seattle haiku slam, and was second last year. I think he knows how his poems differ from the traditional aesthetics of haiku. I also recognize what he is doing, which, to some degree, is responding to what people THINK a haiku should be, for better or worse. Jack will also be a featured reader next month in the SoulFood Poetry Night series that I curate in Redmond, Washington. I hope that says something.)

Michael

-----Original Message-----
Date: Sat, 10 Feb 2007 09:45:43 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: haiku
I think Joe's point is well taken. While this discussion has been very instructive in many ways, we should not forget that this is list whose topic is innovative poetics. I'm sure there are other lists available for the promulgation of traditionalist poetics, and some of the same people might even be on both lists, since there is no reason not to be interested in both. But to the extent that we are not, at some point we just have to respectfully agree to disagree, letting the discussions of traditionalist poetics continue in whatever space is devoted to that and the discussions of innovative poetics, whatever that turns out to be, move forward in this one.

As for myself, I think that a good deal of that heat that's been generated here hasto do with the "ownership" of the name "haiku." Although it would be useful to me to have recourse to this name at certain times, it doesn't really mean as much to me as it obviously does to some others, and therefore I'd just as soon cede it to them. I don't know why, but somehow this all reminds me of the dispute between Greece and one of the former Yugoslav republics over the name "Macedonia." United Nations intervention has still not resolved this issue. But when I lived in Italy, "macedonia" (small m) was the word for "fruit salad"--an association with very positive connotations as far as I'm concerned. So from now on I am going to avoid the use of the h-word to refer to any poem using a 5-7-5 structure or any other similar short poem whatsoever, except where this is unavoidable, such as when citing something that someone else said. From now on, I promise to refer to all such poems as " macedonia."

-----Original Message-----
Date: Sat, 10 Feb 2007 17:36:59 -0800
From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku Death Match
Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> As I understand it, Japanese is not accented the way English or Latin is.
> Thus each "syllable" of a multisyllable word is generally pronounced evenly
> in > Japanese. The Japanese word for a species of cuckoo, hototogisu, has each > syllable pronounced evenly, which is part of its music. As a more common > example, the word for cherry blossom, sakura, has each of its syllables at > about > the same pitch and length. It's not sa-KU-ra. Nor is it SA-ku-ra (like
> the > beginning of "saccharine"). And of course it's also not "sa-ku-RA." On the > other hand, some Japanese people drop or greatly minimize the last syllable
> in > some words when speaking (even though they would still count that sound
in > haiku). Thus I've often heard a Japanese person speak of "haik" (with an > extremely subtle "u" after the "k") when they mean "haiku" -- or they might > say
> "hototogeese" (though with a very quick "geese") and barely say the "oo"
> sound > that normally follows in "hototogisu." If you ask the question "Desu ka," > it > typically sounds like "Des-ka." Otherwise, though, I think the sounds are > fairly > even. I know other words and phrases are commonly shortened or combined,
> but > that's more of a colloquial compression of language than a variance in > pronunciation.

I took Japanese for three years in highschool, and while i'm far from fluent, I do have some recall of of the issues revolving around this because it's some of the hardest stuff involving correct pronunciation, and my drill instructor japanese teacher ground them into our heads. I think she was more concerned with our pronouncing the language properly than understanding it. Basically, japanese syllable weight is determined by the onji, and accents happen in pitch rather than in syllable weight. So what you get often times is syllables getting shortened or lengthened so that the on fit the timing, because they shorten vowels that we normally hear as double vowels, because English is stress-timed and so syllable length isn't something that we contemplate a lot it just sort of happens by convention. Not so in japanese, the on are all the same length, so syllables will vary in length depending on how many on are in it. So for example in "ikimasho" (japanese for "let us go"), ther e are four syllables i-ki-ma-sho, but there are five on i-ki-ma-shy-o, all of which get the same amount of time. similarly with desu and the irregular verb form masu, the [u] vowel is generally a long vowel in English, whereas with japanese all vowels have long and short versions and so their terminal u's sound really chopped to western ears because they have to be distinguished from a longer vowel and a different meaning (i don't know if desoo or masoo are other words or if it would just sound like nonsense to a native speaker.) Once i got used to listening to it, it became apparent that the shortening of "su" that i thought i was hearing, while it doesn't happen, it wasn't nearly as pronounced as i thought it was because it was very similar to the su that one finds in the beginning of a word like "sushi" as it is pronounced in japanese (a slight but noticable difference from its English Cognate), or the shortened version in "sukoshi" (a small quantity, from which the Englis h Scosh is derived). the [u] is always still there, but i think as English speakers what happens is that we mutate the foreign sounding vowels that we don't generally use into to consonant codas and our ears then turn something like "sukoshi" or "sukiyaki" into "scoshii" or "skyaki." Most japanese speakers can hear the difference and the dropped syllables, but English speakers have to learn to listen for it. I even vaguely remember my teacher saying that one of the signs of an american accent when speaking japanese is either dropping vowels or making vowels too long. so an american might render "kore wa usagi deshitaka" (was that a rabbit) as "Cord wa oozagy deshtaka" writing phonetically. The difference of course beign that where we are listening for syllables, the japanese are listening for mora, or onji, and the syllable is a slightly larger unit than a mora.

I'm surprised i remember that many words, but i'm starting to think maybe i should go take a night class in japanese since so much of the fundamentals still seem to be there.

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

497. Gabriel Gudding

the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)

Wed 14 Feb 2007

Thanks Murat and Ravi.

And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.

The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them. The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways, the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a pocket.

Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets than men's.

The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?

Gabe

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

<<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
Subject: Re: praise be to the watch

Gabriel,

I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.

Murat

↑ Index

498. Carol Novack

Mad Hatters' Review Issue 7 OUT OUT OUT OF IT INTO IT!

Wed 14 Feb 2007

WE'RE LIVE!!!
Mad Hatters' Review Issue 7
READ
IT NOW!!!
<img src="http://www.zoetrope.com/members/priv/file.cgi?
owner=62566&id=94671"
ALT="Issue 7 Cover">

Poetry

<a href="http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/poetry_amato.shtml"
target="_blank">Joe Amato
Gunnar Benediktsson Bob Marcacci Sally Molini Michael Neff

Fiction

<a href="http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/fiction_clare.shtml"
target="_blank">Jai Clare
Brandon Hobson
Juan José Millás Translated from the Spanish by Peter
Robertson
Rochelle Ratner
<a href="http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/fiction_wilson.shtml"

target="_blank">D. Harlan Wilson <a href="http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/fiction_wuori.shtml"
target="_blank">G. K. Wuori

Non-Fiction

Kevin P. Keating

Whatnots

Lynda Schor Rob Stephenson Vernon Frazer

Audio Text Collages
by Davis Schneiderman& Don Meyer

The Memorials to Future Catastrophes Distant Early Warning System

Book Reviews
by C.B. Smith

'The Last Stage' by Jim Cherry
Walden'
by Michael T. Dolan
'A Bit of a Marriage' by Karina Mellinger
<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/book_reviews.shtml#smithschmoetar get="_blank">'Institutionalized'
by Fred Smith & Joe Schmoe

Columns

Rich
Andrews
<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/columns.shtml#cbsmithtarget=
"_blank">Sir
Castor Bayley
Tantra
Bensko
Crazy
Jane
Pete
Dolack
Shirley Harshenin
Lockie
Hunter
D.
A. Eis
Helen Ruggieri

Comics

Coconuts,

Patriotic Polly, Tristan, Miss Julie & Steve &
others

Contests

The Wrong Roof Winners Beebe Barksdale-Bruner, Theresa Boyar, Timothy Matos, Kendall Kyle Cyree & Liz Gallagher

Current Contest Guidelines: "Mad About You"

Editor's Rave

C arol Novack

Galleries

Calum Colvin I <a href= http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/gallery2_colvin.shtmltarget="_blank"
>II
<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/gallery_slideshow_issue7.shtmltarget ="_blank">Issue
7 Art
Is sue 7 Music

Interviews

Calum Colvin Lynda Schor

Mental Theatre

Don Bergland

Video
Wanda Phipps, Poetry, Prose, and Anything Goes at KGB, November 17, 2006

Video by Joel Schlemowitz

Viva Caledonia
A multi-media showcase, celebrating the cutting edge of Scottish creative talent.
Selections by Peter Robertson

Fiction by

Alan Bissett
Anne Donovan
Janice Galloway
Kirsty Gunn
Laura Marney

Poetry by

Richard Crawford
W.

N. Herbert
Robert Jamieson
Tom Pow
Dilys Rose
Alan Spence

Play by

Alisdair Gray

Art by Calum Covin & Music by Peter de Moncey-Conegliano

--
MAD HATTERS' REVIEW: Edgy & Enlightened Literature, Art & Music in the Age of Dementia: http://www.madhattersreview.com
KEEP THE MAD HATTERS ALIVE! MAKE A TAX DEDUCTIBLE DONATION HERE:
https://www.fracturedatlas.org/site/contribute/donate/580

↑ Index

499. Tom Beckett
Re: Galatea Resurrects #5 is Launched
Wed 14 Feb 2007

We are pleased to announce the new issue of Galatea Resurrects #5 at _http://galatearesurrection5.blogspot.com/_ (http://galatearesurrection5.blogspot.com/) For convenience, I'm cutnpasting the Table of Contents below.

Please visit us at _http://grarchives.blogspot.com_ (http://grarchives.blogspot.com/) if you would like information on sending review copies or volunteering reviews. Reviewers unable to make this issue's deadline can also submit their reviews for the next issue, whose deadline is May 5, 2007.

Best,
Eileen Tabios

++++++++++++

GALATEA RESURRECTS #5

February 14, 2007

CONTENTS:

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION
From Eileen Tabios

NEW REVIEWS
Ron Silliman reviews BEEN BLUE FOR CHARITY by kari edwards

Mark Young reviews BEEN BLUE FOR CHARITY by kari edwards

Guillermo Parra reviews Micah Ballardâ€™s poems in 6x6 #5; BETTINA COFFIN; ABSINTHIAN JOURNAL; SCENES FROM THE SARAGOSSA MANUSCRIPT; UNFORESEEN; DEATH RACE V.S.O.P.; EVANGELINE DOWNS; and NEGATIVE CAPABILITY IN THE VERSE OF JOHN WIENERS

Julie R. Enszer reviews BALANCING ACTS by Rochelle Ratner

Ernesto Priego reviews THE ANIMAL HUSBAND by Christine Hamm

Nicholas Manning reviews NIGHT SEASON by Mark Lamoureux

Eileen Tabios reviews FIRST ADVENTURES OF COL AND SEM by Dan Waber

J. LeClerc reviews BOWERY WOMEN: POEMS, Ed. by Marjorie Tesser & Bob Holman

Ivy Alvarez presents a Chap Roundup reviewing MY LIGHTWEIGHT INTENTIONS by Pam Brown; SURFACE TENSION by Mackenzie Carignan and Scott Glassman; TRANSLATIONS FROM AFTER by Joel Chace; OH MISS MARY by Jim McCrary; DOVEY & ME by Strongin; and THE NAME POEMS by Jeffrey Cyphers Wright

Julie R. Enszer reviews A HALF-RED SEA by Evie Shockley

Nicholas Manning reviews TRACT by Jon Leon

Mary Jo Malo reviews BLOOD AND SALSA / PAINTING RUST by Jonathan Penton

Rebecca Mabanglo-Mayor reviews THE GODS WE WORSHIP LIVE NEXT DOOR by Bino Realuyo

Eileen Tabios reviews THE ALLEGREZZA FICCIONES by Mark Young

Jeannine Hall Gailey reviews NAVIGATE, AMELIA EARHART'S LETTERS HOME by Rebecca Loudon

Nicholas Downing reviews CIVILIZATION by Elizabeth Arnold

William Allegrezza reviews KALI'S BLADE by Michelle Bautista

John Bloomberg-Rissman reviews UNPROTECTED TEXTS: SELECTED POEMS 1978-2006 by Tom Beckett

Tom Beckett reviews A READING, 18-20 by Beverly Dahlen

Eileen Tabios reviews WIND IS WIND AND RAIN IS RAIN by Brynne

Allen Bramhall reviews DOWN SPOOKY by Shanna Compton

Lynn Strongin reviews SHOT WITH EROS: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS and SEED PODS, both by Glenna Luschei

William Allegrezza reviews I OF THE STORM by Bill Lavender

Richard Lopez reviews OH MISS MARY by Jim McCrary

Craig Santos Perez reviews THE TIME AT THE END OF THIS and 60 LV BO(E)MBS, both by Paolo Javier

Anne Haines presents a Chap Roundup reviewing RADISH KING by Rebecca Loudon; LIVING THINGS by Charles Jensen; and MORTAL by Ivy Alvarez

Lynn Strongin reviews THIRST by Mary Oliver

Mario E. Mireles reviews excerpts from NOT EVEN DOGS by Ernesto Priego; Matsuo Bashâ€™s â€œThe Narrow Road of the Interior" in The Norton Anthology of World Masterpieces, Ed. Maynard Mack; and Octavio Pazâ€™s "The Tradition of the Haiku" in Convergences: Essays on Art and Literatur.

William Allegrezza reviews ELAPSING SPEEDWAY ORGANISM by Bruce Covey

Laurel Johnson reviews CALLS FROM THE OUTSIDE WORLD by Robert Hershon

Eileen Tabios reviews BODY OF CRIMSON LEAVES by Celia Homesley

Eileen Tabios reviews THE PLANT WATERER AND OTHER THINGS IN COMMON by Kathryn Rantala

Julie R. Enszer reviews OSIP MANDELSTAM: NEW TRANSLATIONS, Ed. by Ilya Bernstein

Hugh Fox reviews SEEDPODS by Glenna Luschei

Marjorie Light reviews COMING FULL CIRCLE: THE PROCESS OF DECOLONIZATION AMONG POST-1975 FILIPINO AMERICANS and A BOOK OF HER OWN: WORDS AND IMAGES TO HONOR THE BABAYLAN, both by Leny M. Strobel

Mark Young reviews SONNET by Matt Hart

Eileen Tabios reviews THE GRACES by Elizabeth Treadwell and SONNET by Matt Hart

FROM OFFLINE TO ONLINE: REPRINTED REVIEWS
Andrew Joron reviews ULTRA VIOLET by Laura Moriarty

Britta Ameel reviews ALASKAPHRENIA by Christine Hume

Sharon Mesmer reviews OPPOSABLE THUMB by Joe Elliot

Eileen Tabios reviews OBEYED DILEMMA by Jukka-Pekka Kervinen

Alfred Yuson reviews BELIEVE & BETRAY by Cirilo F. Bautista

Alfred Yuson reviews MATADORA by Sarah Gambito

Alfred Yuson reviews FAULTY ELECTRICAL WIRING: POEMS by Ruel S. De Vera, A FEAST OR ORIGINS by Dinah Roma and ELSE IT WAS PURELY GIRLS by Angelo Suarez

BACK COVER
What it Means to be Missy WinePoeticsâ€™ Dawgs

↑ Index

500. Carol Novack

Issue 7 of Mad Hatters' Review has arrived! Submit 2/15 through 3/1

Wed 14 Feb 2007

WE'RE LIVE!!!

Mad Hatters' Review Issue 7

READ IT NOW!!!

<img src="http://www.zoetrope.com/members/priv/file.cgi?owner=62566&id=94671" ALT="Issue 7 Cover">

Poetry

Joe Amato

Gunnar Benediktsson

" target="_blank">Bob Marcacci

Sally Molini

Michael Neff

Fiction

Jai Clare

Brandon Hobson

Juan José Millás Translated from the Spanish by Peter Robertson

Rochelle Ratner

D. Harlan Wilson

G. K. Wuori

Non-Fiction

Kevin P. Keating

Whatnots

Lynda Schor

Rob Stephenson

Vernon Frazer

Audio Text Collages

by Davis Schneiderman& Don Meyer

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/audiotext/screen01.htmltarget=
"_blank">The Memorials to Future Catastrophes Distant Early Warning
System

Book Reviews

by C.B. Smith

'The Last Stage' by Jim Cherry

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/book_reviews.shtml#dolantarge
t="_blank">Walden' by Michael T. Dolan

<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/book_reviews.shtml#mellingertarget ="_blank">'A Bit of a Marriage' by Karina Mellinger

<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/book_reviews.shtml#smithschmoetar get="_blank">'Institutionalized'
by Fred Smith & Joe Schmoe

Columns

Rich Andrews

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/columns.shtml#cbsmithtarget=
"_blank">Sir Castor Bayley

Tantra Bensko

Crazy Jane

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/columns.shtml#dolacktarget="_
blank">Pete Dolack

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/interview_nelson.shtmltarget="
_blank">Shirley Harshenin

Lockie Hunter

D. A. Eis

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/columns.shtml#ruggieritarget=
"_blank">Helen Ruggieri

Comics

Cocon uts, Patriotic Polly, Tristan, Miss Julie & Steve &
others

Contests

The Wrong Roof Winners

Beebe Barksdale-Bruner, Theresa Boyar, Timothy Matos, Kendall Kyle Cyree & Liz Gallagher

Current Contest Guidelines: "Mad About You"

Editor's Rave

 Carol Novack

Galleries

Calum Colvin I
<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/gallery2_colvin.shtmltarget="_blank"
>II

<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/gallery_slideshow_issue7.shtmltarget ="_blank">Issue
7 Art

Issue 7 Music

Interviews

Calum Colvin

Lynda Schor

Mental Theatre

Don Bergland

Video

Wanda Phipps, Poetry, Prose, and Anything Goes at KGB, November 17, 2006

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/video/WP%20MHR-KGB
%2011.movtarget="_blank">Video by Joel Schlemowitz

Viva Caledonia

A multi-media showcase, celebrating the cutting edge of Scottish creative talent.

Selections by Peter Robertson

Fiction by

Alan Bissett

Anne Donovan

Janice Galloway

Kirsty Gunn

Laura Marney

Poetry by

Robert Crawford

W. N. Herbert

Robert Jamieson

Tom Pow

<a href=
http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/viva_rose.shtmltarget="_blank">Dilys Rose

Alan Spence

Play by

<a href=http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/viva_gray.shtmltarget="_blank"
>Alisdair Gray

Art by Calum Covin & Music by Peter de Moncey-Conegliano

--
MAD HATTERS' REVIEW: Edgy & Enlightened Literature, Art & Music in the Age
of Dementia: http://www.madhattersreview.com
KEEP THE MAD HATTERS ALIVE! MAKE A TAX DEDUCTIBLE DONATION HERE:
https://www.fracturedatlas.org/site/contribute/donate/580

http://carolnovack.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

501. gfrym
Re: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Hi Gabriel, There's an incredible section of Jamaica Kinkaid's A Small Island on tourism in the Caribbean, specifically her native Antigua, in which she speaks of the wrist watch as the colonial, nee British, way of owning and controlling and reducing time.

Gloria Frym

----- Original Message -----
From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Wednesday, February 14, 2007 5:23 PM
Subject: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)

> Thanks Murat and Ravi.
>
> And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.
>
> The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them. The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways, the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a > pocket.

>
> Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets than men's.
>
> The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?
>
> Gabe
>
> --
>
> _____
> http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com
> ----------
> Gabriel Gudding
> Department of English
> Illinois State University
> Normal, Illinois 61790
> [redacted] (office)
>
> <<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
> Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
> In-Reply-To: <[log in to unmask]>
> Content-Type: text/plain; charset=ISO-8859-1; format=flowed
> Content-Disposition: inline
>
> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat

↑ Index

502. Slaughter, William Notice: Mudlark
Wed 14 Feb 2007

New and On View: Mudlark 32 (2007)

Elephant Anger

Twenty-five Prose Poems

by Laura McCullough

Laura McCullough has a BA from The Richard Stockton College of NJ and an MFA in Writing and Literature from Goddard College. She is a New Jersey State Arts Council Fellow, has won a Geraldine R. Dodge Scholarship to attend the Fine Arts Work Center in Provincetown, was the 2005 Prairie Schooner Merit Scholar in Poetry at the Nebraska Summer Writers Workshop, and participated in the 2005 Bread Loaf writers conference as a contributor.

Her poems have appeared in Nimrod, Potion, Hotel Amerika, Gulf Coast, Nightsun, Iron Horse Quarterly, Boulevard, Amarillo Bay, The God Particle, Poetry East, Confluence, Exquisite Corpse, The Potomac, Stirring, Word Riot, Tarpaulin Sky, among other places. Her first collection of poems, THE DANCING BEAR, was published by Open Book Press in 2006. Her second collection of poems, WHAT MEN WANT, is scheduled for release by XOXOX Press in January 2008. Her stories, "What A Good Dog Knows" and "Brick Facade," have appeared in Nasty (University of Calgary, Canada) and Pierian Springs Review and are chapters in her recently completed novel, FINDING ONG'S HAT. She teaches writing at Brookdale Community College in NJ where she chairs the Visiting Writers Series.

William Slaughter

MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

↑ Index

503. Adam Morey
Rasula's Email Address
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Looking for Jed Rasula's email address. Let me know what it is. Thanks.

am

↑ Index

504. Halvard Johnson
Lynda Schor in Madhatters' Review 7
Wed 14 Feb 2007

My darling valentine has both a whatnot and an interview in Madhatters' Review 7, which you're invited to enjoy.

Top page: http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/index.shtml

If you'll click on "contributors," you'll see Lynda on the roof of our darling l'il house (rented, of course) here in San Miguel.

http://www.madhattersreview.com/issue7/contributors7.shtml

Enjoy.

Hal

"I think pigs should be allowed to run free--just like politicians."
              --Edna Buchanan

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

↑ Index

505. Stephen Vincent
Re: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
Wed 14 Feb 2007

Curious to remember in the sixties when many of us stopped wearing watches, at all. As in who wanted to march to the corporate drum, it's terrible, regimented, soul killing clock. (I don't know if that has changed!) And, in light of Gabriel's militarismo connection, who wanted to go to Vietnam and wear a watch in a trench or, to go on a "well-timed" bombing mission. The wrist watch seemed synchronized with death on all levels (public, personal and spiritual). (There was the late sixties, Chamber's Brother's song, "Time Has Come Today, young hearts can go their way Can't put it off another day I don't care what others say ... with the haunting refrain: 'Time' 'Time', 'Time'. Which seemed to be much more than about romance, and more about beating back the clock)

But the reference, too, to the pocket, the lack of them on women's vestments. The pocket book was first created by Aldus in Venice -who created italic type to fit the format - in the sixteenth century. (I believe his first pocketbooks were for the works of Virgil and Horace.) But clearly - through the whole history of the "pocketbook", the pocketbooks have never fit into women's clothes (that I know of). Women had to, and probably still have to, be in male drag to put a book in a pocket - say a trench coat, popular among young women in the sixties . (woops, "trenchcoat" = military connection, again). Well, certain larger purses and backpacks do accommodate.

As Gloria Frym brings up, the history of the Europe and the west altering concepts of time in the colonies is also interesting. The Igbos in Nigeria, for example, had a four day week - one that coincided with market days, I believe. Europe and Christianity and capitalism brought the 7 day week. I think this scenario of expanding days played out across Latin America as well.

The clock is capitalism's bazooka - someone said that. And religion's - Christ and his cathedral bells.

Course, inevitably, in terms of poetry, this all plays into arguments around the tick-tock yoke of formalism, and related repressive political formations. (John Cage and Steve Reich, for examples, seem to be all about breaching that western formal sense of time).

Actually - to indulge a contradiction here - a well-used clock may liberate much interesting work and play, and poems, too.

Go, Gabriel - fourth down and ten to goal and 15 seconds left on the clock.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

> Hi Gabriel,
> There's an incredible section of Jamaica Kinkaid's A Small Island on tourism in the Caribbean, specifically her native Antigua, in which she speaks of the wrist watch as the colonial, nee British, way of owning and controlling and reducing time.
>
> Gloria Frym
>
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Sent: Wednesday, February 14, 2007 5:23 PM
> Subject: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)

Thanks Murat and Ravi.

And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.

The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them. The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways, the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a pocket.

Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets than men's.

The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?

Gabe

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

<<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
In-Reply-To: <[log in to unmask]>
Content-Type: text/plain; charset=ISO-8859-1; format=flowed
Content-Disposition: inline

> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat

↑ Index

506. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Thu 15 Feb 2007

---

hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with your talk of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some things that might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very interesting.

So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?

rain on
march flush
on the student body

warm santa ana crumples silver
paper

a cotton lycra weave lifts
from plants it catches

green
colors
wax

i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such things really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form feels a bit epiphanic. so thanks.

oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise haiku rather than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just thought that the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> Jason, et al,
>
> I've been away from email, but want to respond to some of the comments about haiku recently.

>
> To start with, I regard haiku as a genre of poetry, not a form. Form is only one aspect of many aspects of the genre. If you're snide towards form in general, to use your characterization of yourself, then perhaps you don't understand where I'm coming from regarding haiku, because I don't promote any set syllabic form for haiku. So I'm glad to hear that I've persuaded you, at least a little bit, that there's something you're missing out on with haiku. Perhaps others are missing it, too.
>
> Perhaps too, Jason, you've missed my insistence that a poem is a poem first, and a haiku (or not) only secondarily. If a poem moves me, I couldn't give a flying fig for whether it's a haiku or not. So the problem lies with claiming something is a haiku when it clearly misses some of haiku's predominant targets. You say "All manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku?" You seem to think I don't agree with you. Yes indeed, so what? Something can be really effective as a short poem, without regard to whether it's a haiku, even if it happens to be 5-7-5 syllables (which I think is irrrelevant to haiku in English, though some people think it IS relevant). This openness (poetry first, labels later, if at all) is one of my guiding priniciples in editing Tundra: The Journal of the Short Poem, whose contributors have included the following (some of these are forthcoming): Francisco X. A lar
> con, Art Beck, Robert Bly, John Brandi, Billy Collins, Ruth Daigon, Doc Dachtler, Dick Davis, Diane di Prima, Tom Disch, Jack Foley, Dana Gioia, Jonathan Greene, Jane Hirshfield, H. L. Hix, Ted Kooser, Richard Kostelanetz, Gerald Locklin, Leza Lowitz, Stefanie Marlis, Samuel Menashe, Paul Nelson, Charles Rossiter, Steve Sanfield, Barry Spacks, Robert Spiess, Robert Sward, Susan Terris, Mike Tuggle, Cor van den Heuvel, Ken Waldman, and many others. I provide this list to lend credence, I hope, to the quality of the short poetry I appreciate. Only two or three of the poets I've just listed are haiku writers, and you will also see a wide spectrum of formalists and experimentalists as well. Poetry first.
>
> Indeed, so what if a poem isn't a haiku? The only problem is when people claim that such poems ARE haiku if they're not. That's all. So if a person doesn't value haiku much, that's something I'm perfectly fine with. It's just that claiming something as haiku if it's very wide of the mark seems sloppy, and even naive in the extreme, like complaining that one's doggerel isn't accepted for publication at the leading poetry journals, yet insisting that one's doggerel is high art. It's that disconnect that strikes me as problematic, for both readers and the writer. I'm simply trying to point out that certain people, even if they're not claiming to be emperors, have no clothes on, yet seem to think they're wearing haiku clothes. At one level, who cares? I would like to hope, though, that POETS care, that EDUCATORS care. To think that something is a haiku when it's not can indeed be problematic. In one sense, it's a delusion. In another sense, it perpetuates misunderstandings fo > r those who might be inclined to take the genre more seriously. I am perfectly happy to respect a lack of interest in haiku, but that's distinct from asserting something is haiku (out of naivete?) when it's not. At the very least, as you say, it's simply using the wrong word to call it haiku, but in my experience I've found that there is sometimes a deeper naivete than just using the wrong word because many people are so adamant and think that haiku is 5-7-5 (which is misguided in English), and nothing more (which is also misguided). It's more than just semantics, at least for many people.

>
> Your experience with learning haiku in school as a 5-7-5 poem is exactly the problem that needs to be corrected. I had the same experience, except it was in high school. The problem lies with the teachers, the curriculum guides, and the textbooks. You are apparently a victim of the problem, and may unwittingly contribute to the perpetuation of the problem. If you hardly cared about haiku, fine, but at least I hope you are now more aware of the issue.
>
> Where you get to a more valuable point is where you say "instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating." You may indeed be right there, so the difference may lie in my seeing value, and you not. The truth is that I see great value in it for its own sake, as well as great benefit of haiku techniques to other kinds of writing. You don't need haiku to learn these techniques, but haiku isolates and emphasizes certain techniques of clarity, image, implication, and objective/subjective control, so that's why it can be so helpful. But on its own terms, a haiku can be transcendent, producing a spiritual wholeness for many readers. A haiku may not change the world any more than a good joke gives momentary satisfaction, but there is something THERE, and I do think it gives many people more than just the short diversion of a joke. If you're not wired for ha iku
> , fine (I repeat, that's fine). But for many people, a good haiku lifts the tops of their heads off. There's obviously value in it for a lot of people (hence societies, the many journals, and the 4,000+ haiku books in my library, which are but a portion of what's out there). I appreciate that you're not trying to be adversarial, but neither am I. Yet I'm stuck with observing what really is a great disconnect between the reality and perception of haiku poetry. And of course, I presume on this discussion list that people do care about poetics, and I would like to hope that that can include the poetics of haiku.

>
> Your most excellent point is where you say, "What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it." However, your comment presumes that they haven't done this, whereas I believe they have done this in spades. Consider the five volumes of books that H. F. Noyes has published called "Favorite Haiku," where he does exactly that. By talking about the specific successes of individual poems, the overall gestalt of each of his books is one of why haiku as a genre is successful and appealing. And consider books such as Higginson's Haiku Handbook or Gurga's Haiku: A Poet's Guide, and several other similar books. This effort is beyond concerted -- it's masterful. The haiku journals regularly include similar commentary as to why haiku is appealing, to the point that it has become old news to those who have been writing in the genre for decades. Yet always there is a new crop for whom it is fresh news,
so > the commentary remains useful. As for me, take a look at my "Becoming a Haiku Poet" essay (http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html) and tell me if that doesn't begin to answer the question for you. Or another essay of interest may be "Haiku and the Japanese Garden," online at http://hometown.aol.com/welchm/Haiku-and-the-Japanese-Garden.html. And speaking of Lee Gurga, he has a fine essay on haiku aesthetics at http://www.baymoon.com/~ariadne/form/haiku/haiku.aesthetics.gurga.htm (scroll down a bit). He begins by asking a very sensible question of those who have been writing haiku: "It is unavoidable that we should have some idea of what haiku is. The question then becomes what kind of an idea should it be?"
>
> What is it I like about haiku? There are so many ways to answer that question, but for me haiku is an approach to infinity, in the way it creates a sense of wholeness and rightness by the careful emotive pairing of juxtaposed elements. The seasonal context adds archetypal meaning and a setting to the poem, but the main technique of implication -- somehow saying the unsaid -- allows reader engagement more than some other types of poetry, or at least in a more concentrated way. No wonder, for good reason, haiku is called an "unfinished poem." I've not heard that said of other genres of poetry. The world of allusion that goes on in good haiku is also an appeal. This is no different from other poetry, of course, but it's a richness that many casual readers of haiku (or those who read only pseudo-haiku) often don't notice.
>
> A selection of my haiku (with photographs) is online at http://www.brooksbookshaiku.com/welch/. Many of these poems are among my favourites (at least up until about 2000, when this online collection was published).

>
> It is not my preference to refer to "fake" haiku, versus "real" haiku, though I do like to paraphrase Robert Creeley: "Is that a real haiku, or did you write it yourself?" But I agree that it would be better to spend more attention on what makes the best haiku succeed, rather than dwell on what makes other things fail as haiku. However, I believe the conversation with many poets often has to start with unlearning. They have to back up from the wrong path they've taken, or at least be open to the possibility that they're on the wrong path. Perhaps only then does talking about what makes a good haiku work become more plausible. At least, that's my speculation. But I think it's accurate. The assumptions some people have about haiku are so deeply ingrained that it's hard for them to even begin to appreciate attempts to promote successful haiku.
>
> Ultimately, Jason, I'm delighted that you've ordered Lee Gurga's book. If that's the limit of your exploration of haiku, that's fine by me. But you are going a world farther than most people. I'm just trying to open the door, even if just a little bit.
>
> Michael
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 21:02:07 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
> Well, i think the real issue is one of investment and value. You're a person who has devoted a considerable amount of time and energy into a poetic > form, and as such that form has a value for you that it simply doesn't for me, as a person who generally is a little bit snide towards the idea of > form from the get go. I think where the disconnect takes place is that you're mistaking a lack of interest in the minutiae of something that you say > is complex (i'm not saying it's not complex, just that i don't know enough about it to be able to affirm or deny) for naivete, which is a little bit > insulting. I can maybe illustrate with my own experience writing haiku. Like most people at some point in the third or fourth grade, my language arts > teacher introduced the idea of syllables, as well as the idea of poems that don't possess end rhyme, by talking about these short little japanese > poems called haiku that have a 5-7-5 syllable pattern. I think for most people that's the beginning and end of the interest in the form. I know that > it has been largely for me. I've written all manner of poems in a 5-7-5 formula, and all manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, > to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku? if i don't know what the real purpose of a haiku is, and what the real > goal is, and am in fact trying to achieve some other goal and mistakenly calling it haiku, i'm not being naive, i'm just using the wrong word. So i > stop calling it haiku, and we can go about our lives happily enough never discussing it again. However, there's something very peculiar about in > particular the haiku booster that really rubs me the wrong way. almost like some people take a sort of obscene pleasure in "correcting" the mistake of > the less informed. at some point it becaomes as trivial a matter as whether kirk or picard were a superior starship captain.

>
> so what i'm saying is, i think what in your messages has gotten my back up a bit is the way it's expressed in such an accusatory and aloof manner, as > if haiku is the only way to write a short poem, and that if one is working at the length of haiku there can't possibly be a goal higher than in > realizing the conventions of haiku. being mainly an anti formalist and against the idea of poetic form that can't be expressed in a number of words > fewer than the form permits the poem, i'm skeptical of such claims from the outset. So it takes some convincing for me to buy in to the idea that > there really is something in this constructed form which genuinely warrants societies being dedicated to it, magazines devoted to it, and books > written exploring teh depth of it. But instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this > particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating about how i don't know anything about the subject and that if i want to talk about it, > i really need to do my homework.
>
> Well fine, i say, i hate homework so lets just not talk about it. Let teh haiku snob wallow in his penny-ante beat, and i'll roll my eyes and move on > to something that i think genuinely is of value.
>
> If that makes sense, and I promise you i'm not trying to be adversarial, just trying to sort through the array of emotions and their instigations in > the thread about haiku to date that prompted me to dispatch a snarky email.
If you really want my opinion, this last email has gone a longer way > towards getting me interested in haiku than your previous emails which seemed largely concerned with showing how some poems claiming to be haiku are > not in fact.

>
> What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it. What is it about > the seasonal words and juxtapositions that you find in haiku that make them so essential and raises this above other forms like, for example, an > aubade? I think maybe you'd get farther with snide jackasses like me if you focussed more on the positive argument for real haiku rather than the > negative argument against fake haiku. Because i generally don't find things that are defined primarily by contrast to things which they are not to be > particularly interesting. birds are cool because they have wings, not because they don't have gills, y'know?
>
> All of that having been said, i want to let you know that I really appreciate the sincerity and tone of your last email, and I want you to know that
> by it, you've aroused a curiosity in me about the form that did not exist when i snarkily suggest that haiku be relegated to mystery cults. There's > very little as effective as the sincere expression of passion for a topic to make another person sympathetic to investigating it. I've ordered Gurga's > book, and am looking forward to reading it. I don't know if i'll become a haiku fanatic, or even if i'll ever try to write a haiku, but you've swayed > me to thinking that maybe there's something i'm missing out on, and that's a tactic that is very effective with me.
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

507. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Thu 15 Feb 2007

Furthermore, I want to thank you for linking to that essay by Gurga. While I think i disagree with a lot of what he says, being generally skeptical of ideas like "poetic truth" etc., there's certainly a lot to think about. More importantly though, I think that in his treatment of "zappai" we have a possible resolution for the issue of "fake haiku" that's been the focus of the discussion on the list over the last couple of weeks.

Particularly his statement here: "While the term zappai is unfamiliar to most American students of haiku, I believe its adoption will provide us with a useful category to help us understand that while much of what is being written today under the name of haiku is not genuine haiku, it is still a legitimate part of the haikai tradition. Those who object to the introduction of this term might simply want to use the term "pseudo-haiku" to categorize the poems I am describing here."

makes a lot of sense to me. Certainly calling a poem like this:

Worker bees can leave,
Even drones can fly away.
The Queen is their slave.

a haiku is a mistake. But still, i don't think chuck palahniuks little doggerel would exist if haiku didn't, and the idea of seeing a seventeen syllable quip like that as part of a larger haiku tradition makes sense. I wonder if whether or not some of the american confusion about what a haiku is doesn't have something to do with what Gurga says was a popular form of poetic entertainment in late Edo Japan, particularly since the late Edo period marks the first really extensive cultural cross pollinaztion between japan and the west.

then again, i do like the idea of calling them macedonia too. no reason, of course, they can't be both.

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> Jason, et al,
>
> I've been away from email, but want to respond to some of the comments about haiku recently.
>
> To start with, I regard haiku as a genre of poetry, not a form. Form is only one aspect of many aspects of the genre. If you're snide towards form in general, to use your characterization of yourself, then perhaps you don't understand where I'm coming from regarding haiku, because I don't promote any set syllabic form for haiku. So I'm glad to hear that I've persuaded you, at least a little bit, that there's something you're missing out on with haiku. Perhaps others are missing it, too.
>
> Perhaps too, Jason, you've missed my insistence that a poem is a poem first, and a haiku (or not) only secondarily. If a poem moves me, I couldn't give a flying fig for whether it's a haiku or not. So the problem lies with claiming something is a haiku when it clearly misses some of haiku's predominant targets. You say "All manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku?" You seem to think I don't agree with you. Yes indeed, so what? Something can be really effective as a short poem, without regard to whether it's a haiku, even if it happens to be 5-7-5 syllables (which I think is irrrelevant to haiku in English, though some people think it IS relevant). This openness (poetry first, labels later, if at all) is one of my guiding priniciples in editing Tundra: The Journal of the Short Poem, whose contributors have included the following (some of these are forthcoming): Francisco X. A

lar
> con, Art Beck, Robert Bly, John Brandi, Billy Collins, Ruth Daigon, Doc Dachtler, Dick Davis, Diane di Prima, Tom Disch, Jack Foley, Dana Gioia, Jonathan Greene, Jane Hirshfield, H. L. Hix, Ted Kooser, Richard Kostelanetz, Gerald Locklin, Leza Lowitz, Stefanie Marlis, Samuel Menashe, Paul Nelson, Charles Rossiter, Steve Sanfield, Barry Spacks, Robert Spiess, Robert Sward, Susan Terris, Mike Tuggle, Cor van den Heuvel, Ken Waldman, and many others. I provide this list to lend credence, I hope, to the quality of the short poetry I appreciate. Only two or three of the poets I've just listed are haiku writers, and you will also see a wide spectrum of formalists and experimentalists as well. Poetry first.
>
> Indeed, so what if a poem isn't a haiku? The only problem is when people claim that such poems ARE haiku if they're not. That's all. So if a person doesn't value haiku much, that's something I'm perfectly fine with. It's just that claiming something as haiku if it's very wide of the mark seems sloppy, and even naive in the extreme, like complaining that one's doggerel isn't accepted for publication at the leading poetry journals, yet insisting that one's doggerel is high art. It's that disconnect that strikes me as problematic, for both readers and the writer. I'm simply trying to point out that certain people, even if they're not claiming to be emperors, have no clothes on, yet seem to think they're wearing haiku clothes. At one level, who cares? I would like to hope, though, that POETS care, that EDUCATORS care. To think that something is a haiku when it's not can indeed be problematic. In one sense, it's a delusion. In another sense, it perpetuates misunderstandings
 fo > r those who might be inclined to take the genre more seriously. I am perfectly happy to respect a lack of interest in haiku, but that's distinct from asserting something is haiku (out of naivete?) when it's not. At the very least, as you say, it's simply using the wrong word to call it haiku, but in my experience I've found that there is sometimes a deeper naivete than just using the wrong word because many people are so adamant and think that haiku is 5-7-5 (which is misguided in English), and nothing more (which is also misguided). It's more than just semantics, at least for many people.
>
> Your experience with learning haiku in school as a 5-7-5 poem is exactly the problem that needs to be corrected. I had the same experience, except it was in high school. The problem lies with the teachers, the curriculum guides, and the textbooks. You are apparently a victim of the problem, and may unwittingly contribute to the perpetuation of the problem. If you hardly cared about haiku, fine, but at least I hope you are now more aware of the issue.

>
> Where you get to a more valuable point is where you say "instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating." You may indeed be right there, so the difference may lie in my seeing value, and you not. The truth is that I see great value in it for its own sake, as well as great benefit of haiku techniques to other kinds of writing. You don't need haiku to learn these techniques, but haiku isolates and emphasizes certain techniques of clarity, image, implication, and objective/subjective control, so that's why it can be so helpful. But on its own terms, a haiku can be transcendent, producing a spiritual wholeness for many readers. A haiku may not change the world any more than a good joke gives momentary satisfaction, but there is something THERE, and I do think it gives many people more than just the short diversion of a joke. If you're not wired for ha iku
> , fine (I repeat, that's fine). But for many people, a good haiku lifts the tops of their heads off. There's obviously value in it for a lot of people (hence societies, the many journals, and the 4,000+ haiku books in my library, which are but a portion of what's out there). I appreciate that you're not trying to be adversarial, but neither am I. Yet I'm stuck with observing what really is a great disconnect between the reality and perception of haiku poetry. And of course, I presume on this discussion list that people do care about poetics, and I would like to hope that that can include the poetics of haiku.
>
> Your most excellent point is where you say, "What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it." However, your comment presumes that they haven't done this, whereas I believe they have done this in spades. Consider the five volumes of books that H. F. Noyes has published called "Favorite Haiku," where he does exactly that. By talking about the specific successes of individual poems, the overall gestalt of each of his books is one of why haiku as a genre is successful and appealing. And consider books such as Higginson's Haiku Handbook or Gurga's Haiku: A Poet's Guide, and several other similar books. This effort is beyond concerted -- it's masterful. The haiku journals regularly include similar commentary as to why haiku is appealing, to the point that it has become old news to those who have been writing in the genre for decades. Yet always there is a new crop for whom it is fresh news, so
> the commentary remains useful. As for me, take a look at my "Becoming a Haiku Poet" essay (http://www.haikuworld.org/begin/mdwelch.apr2003.html)

and tell me if that doesn't begin to answer the question for you. Or another essay of interest may be "Haiku and the Japanese Garden," online at http://hometown.aol.com/welchm/Haiku-and-the-Japanese-Garden.html. And speaking of Lee Gurga, he has a fine essay on haiku aesthetics at http://www.baymoon.com/~ariadne/form/haiku/haiku.aesthetics.gurga.htm (scroll down a bit). He begins by asking a very sensible question of those who have been writing haiku: "It is unavoidable that we should have some idea of what haiku is. The question then becomes what kind of an idea should it be?"
>
> What is it I like about haiku? There are so many ways to answer that question, but for me haiku is an approach to infinity, in the way it creates a sense of wholeness and rightness by the careful emotive pairing of juxtaposed elements. The seasonal context adds archetypal meaning and a setting to the poem, but the main technique of implication -- somehow saying the unsaid -- allows reader engagement more than some other types of poetry, or at least in a more concentrated way. No wonder, for good reason, haiku is called an "unfinished poem." I've not heard that said of other genres of poetry. The world of allusion that goes on in good haiku is also an appeal. This is no different from other poetry, of course, but it's a richness that many casual readers of haiku (or those who read only pseudo-haiku) often don't notice.
>
> A selection of my haiku (with photographs) is online at http://www.brooksbookshaiku.com/welch/. Many of these poems are among my favourites (at least up until about 2000, when this online collection was published).
>
> It is not my preference to refer to "fake" haiku, versus "real" haiku, though I do like to paraphrase Robert Creeley: "Is that a real haiku, or did you write it yourself?" But I agree that it would be better to spend more attention on what makes the best haiku succeed, rather than dwell on what makes other things fail as haiku. However, I believe the conversation with many poets often has to start with unlearning. They have to back up from the wrong path they've taken, or at least be open to the possibility that they're on the wrong path. Perhaps only then does talking about what makes a good haiku work become more plausible. At least, that's my speculation. But I think it's accurate. The assumptions some people have about haiku are so deeply ingrained that it's hard for them to even begin to appreciate attempts to promote successful haiku.
>
> Ultimately, Jason, I'm delighted that you've ordered Lee Gurga's book. If that's the limit of your exploration of haiku, that's fine by me. But you are going a world farther than most people. I'm just trying to open the door, even if just a little bit.

>
> Michael
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Fri, 9 Feb 2007 21:02:07 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
> Well, i think the real issue is one of investment and value. You're a person who has devoted a considerable amount of time and energy into a poetic > form, and as such that form has a value for you that it simply doesn't for me, as a person who generally is a little bit snide towards the idea of > form from the get go. I think where the disconnect takes place is that you're mistaking a lack of interest in the minutiae of something that you say > is complex (i'm not saying it's not complex, just that i don't know enough about it to be able to affirm or deny) for naivete, which is a little bit > insulting. I can maybe illustrate with my own experience writing haiku. Like most people at some point in the third or fourth grade, my language arts > teacher introduced the idea of syllables, as well as the idea of poems that don't possess end rhyme, by talking about these short little japanese > poems called haiku that have a 5-7-5 syllable pattern. I think for most people that's the beginning and end of the interest in the form. I know that > it has been largely for me. I've written all manner of poems in a 5-7-5 formula, and all manner of people have told me that that's not really haiku, > to which my only response can be, okay, so what? so what if they're not haiku? if i don't know what the real purpose of a haiku is, and what the real > goal is, and am in fact trying to achieve some other goal and mistakenly calling it haiku, i'm not being naive, i'm just using the wrong word. So i > stop calling it haiku, and we can go about our lives happily enough never discussing it again. However, there's something very peculiar about in > particular the haiku booster that really rubs me the wrong way. almost like some people take a sort of obscene pleasure in "correcting" the mistake of > the less informed. at some point it becaomes as trivial a matter as whether kirk or picard were a superior starship captain.
>
> so what i'm saying is, i think what in your messages has gotten my back up a bit is the way it's expressed in such an accusatory and aloof manner, as > if haiku is the only way to write a short poem, and that if one is working at the length of haiku there can't possibly be a goal higher than in > realizing the conventions of haiku. being mainly an anti formalist and against the idea of poetic form that can't be expressed in a number of words > fewer than the form permits the poem, i'm skeptical of such claims from the outset. So it takes some convincing for me to buy in to the idea that > there really is something in this constructed form which genuinely warrants societies being dedicated to it, magazines devoted to it, and books > written exploring teh depth of it. But instead of convincing, all i seem to get from people like you who do think there is that kind of value in this > particular set of conventions is a sort of arrogant browbeating about how i don't know anything about the subject and that if i want to talk about it,

> i really need to do my homework.
>
> Well fine, i say, i hate homework so lets just not talk about it. Let teh haiku snob wallow in his penny-ante beat, and i'll roll my eyes and move on > to something that i think genuinely is of value.
>
> If that makes sense, and I promise you i'm not trying to be adversarial, just trying to sort through the array of emotions and their instigations in > the thread about haiku to date that prompted me to dispatch a snarky email. If you really want my opinion, this last email has gone a longer way > towards getting me interested in haiku than your previous emails which seemed largely concerned with showing how some poems claiming to be haiku are > not in fact.
>
> What i'd really like to see is for defenders of the form to make a concerted effort to talk about what it is that they like about it. What is it about
> the seasonal words and juxtapositions that you find in haiku that make them so essential and raises this above other forms like, for example, an > aubade? I think maybe you'd get farther with snide jackasses like me if you focussed more on the positive argument for real haiku rather than the > negative argument against fake haiku. Because i generally don't find things that are defined primarily by contrast to things which they are not to be > particularly interesting. birds are cool because they have wings, not because they don't have gills, y'know?
>
> All of that having been said, i want to let you know that I really appreciate the sincerity and tone of your last email, and I want you to know that
> by it, you've aroused a curiosity in me about the form that did not exist when i snarkily suggest that haiku be relegated to mystery cults. There's > very little as effective as the sincere expression of passion for a topic to make another person sympathetic to investigating it. I've ordered Gurga's > book, and am looking forward to reading it. I don't know if i'll become a haiku fanatic, or even if i'll ever try to write a haiku, but you've swayed > me to thinking that maybe there's something i'm missing out on, and that's a tactic that is very effective with me.

> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

508. George Quasha

Quasha this week at Baumgartner, White Box, ZONE Chelsea, & CAA ARTspace

Thu 15 Feb 2007

--=======AVGMAIL-45D40B4D744B======Content-Type: text/plain; charset=iso-8859-1; format=flowed; x-avg-checked=avg-ok-7C171ED2

Four venues where I'll be exhibiting and, at CAA, speaking this week in NYC:

1. Axial Stones on exhibit in a group show at:

BAUMGARTNER GALLERY : from Friday Feb. 16th till end of Feb.
522 W 24th Street, New York, NY 10011
Tuesday – Saturday; 12 – 6 PM
[redacted]

2. art is: Speaking Portraits (in the performative indicative) -- video --at:

WHITE BOX (on the video box): Feb. 13-17
525 W. 26th St. | NY, NY 10001 | t: [redacted] | f: [redacted]
Viewing Hours: Tuesday thru Saturday, 11am-6pm Directions: F/V, 1/2/3, C/E to 23rd St. Take the M23 to 10th Ave. Walk north to 26th St., between 10th and 11th Aves.

3. Axial Drawings on exhibit in a group show at:

ZONE Chelsea Center for the Arts:

February 17-March 31, 2007

601 West 26th Street, #302
New York, NY 10001
Tel: [redacted]
<http://www.zonechelsea.org/>www.zonechelsea.org
[redacted]
Tue-Sat (11am – 6pm)

4. Speaking on a CAA panel with Peter Halley and Faith Ringgold : Friday, Feb. 16--9:30-noon.

College Art Association Conference -- ARTspace [open free to the public]: Hilton New York, Murray Hill Suite, 2nd Floor,

1335 Avenue of the Americas (6th Avenue at 53rd St.)

my piece: Inevitable Liminality: Oscillating Histories with Thomas McEvilley

More details:

ZONE Chelsea Collections 2007

February 17-March 31, 2007

ZONE: Chelsea Center for the Arts is proud to present ZC Collections 2007. Artists include John Cage, Edward Clark, Chuck Close, Molly
Davies, Max Goldfarb, Christopher Haun, Donald Judd, Rainer Judd, Elaine de Kooning, Henri Matisse, Jackie Matisse, Richard Mayhew, Mario Mertz, Robert Motherwell, Nobuho Nagasawa, Nam
June Paik, George Quasha, Allyson Strafella, Pat Steir and Andy Warhol.

ZC Collections 2007 is open to the public February 17-24 from 12 pm- 8 pm. During this week, ZONE will also present Molly Davies' video/sound installation Bars in a select shipping container at 531 West 26th Street between 10th and 11th Avenues as part of DiVA Streets.

February 26 - March 31 Gallery Hours will resume from 11 am to 6 pm, Tuesday through Saturday.
ZONE: Chelsea Center for the Arts is located at 601 West 26th Street #302, New York, NY 10001. For more information call [redacted] or visit <http://www.zonechelsea.org/>www.zonechelsea.org.

--
George Quasha
Barrytown/Station Hill Press, Inc.
(The Institute for Publishing Arts, Inc.)
124 Station Hill Road, Barrytown, NY 12507

Home: [redacted]

<http://www.quasha.com>http://www.quasha.com
http://www.stationhill.org

--=======AVGMAIL-45D40B4D744B======Content-Type: text/plain; x-avgÎrt; charset=us-ascii; x-avg-checked=avg-ok-7C171ED2 Content-Description: "AVG certification"

No virus found in this outgoing message.
Checked by AVG Free Edition.
Version: 7.5.441 / Virus Database: 268.17.39/687 - Release Date: 2/14/2007 4:17 PM

--=======AVGMAIL-45D40B4D744B=======--

↑ Index

509. Ann Bogle
Ana Verse
Thu 15 Feb 2007

Ana Verse is the new title for my blog, still located at _http://annbogle.blogspot.com_ (http://annbogle.blogspot.com) . I changed the name to evade the stargazers who were after Ann-Margret, the actress. It was interesting, for a year, to note on site meter what their interests in her is: things about her father, whether she has children, and to see her naked. Visitors, do feel free to poke around and comment. I am intent on solving puzzles of genre, especially of short forms. There are flaws, and it is proceeding, and always changing. Two designations I barely mention in all my categorizations are "narrative" and "essay." I use different tags on a list; I am trying to isolate impulse. Audience is a stealthier topic, one of the main ones I am considering -- how to know them. Ana Verse by Ann Bogle --

↑ Index

510. Mark Weiss
Re: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
Thu 15 Feb 2007

As usual, gender distinctions are a lot more complicated. My books are still in storage, so I'll have to wing it a bit--for instance, I have no idea when pockets began to be sewn in clothes (did Romans have them?), but I think rather late in Europe, say 16th or 17th century. And there are class distinctions: Pepys had pockets, but also carried a purse, because the pockets didn't hold much. Did the mass of men, whose pants were made at home, routinely have pockets sewn in?

Women did have pockets, in the form of small bags called, of all things, pockets, that were tied around the waist instead of sewn into the skirt, and in which, if they were literate, they often carried books. They were worn among the petticoats, under the skirt, which had a slit for easy access.They were usually cloth, unlike, say, the leather sporran that men in kilts wear. They fell out of fashion when women started wearing less clothes. It's modern women who are deprived of pockets.

On the continent at least working women (almost all women were working women) often wore an apron tied around their waists. The apron had pockets sewn in.

"The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?)." What women are we talking about? Certainly not the vast majority, who slaved on farms no less than their mates, and when a farming economy could no longer support them slaved in factories.

On timepieces--I hate wearing anything on my wrists, so for years I used a pocket watch. Until I noticed that in New York I was never very far from a public clock. Now my cellphone display tells me the time, as my computer, stove, microwave, and alarm clock do at home. There seems less and less reason to carry a watch. except for scuba diving, when small amounts of time are a matter of life and death.

Mark

At 09:52 PM 2/14/2007, you wrote:
>Curious to remember in the sixties when many of us stopped wearing watches, >at all. As in who wanted to march to the corporate drum, it's terrible, >regimented, soul killing clock. (I don't know if that has changed!) And, in >light of Gabriel's militarismo connection, who wanted to go to Vietnam and >wear a watch in a trench or, to go on a "well-timed" bombing mission. The >wrist watch seemed synchronized with death on all levels (public, personal >and spiritual). (There was the late sixties, Chamber's Brother's song,
>"Time Has Come Today, young hearts can go their way > Can't put it off another day I don't care what others say ... > with the haunting refrain: 'Time' 'Time', 'Time'. Which seemed to be much >more than about romance, and more about beating back the clock)
>
>But the reference, too, to the pocket, the lack of them on women's >vestments. The pocket book was first created by Aldus in Venice -who created >italic type to fit the format - in the sixteenth century. (I believe his >first pocketbooks were for the works of Virgil and Horace.) But clearly - >through the whole history of the "pocketbook", the pocketbooks have never >fit into women's clothes (that I know of). Women had to, and probably still >have to, be in male drag to put a book in a pocket - say a trench coat, >popular among young women in the sixties . (woops, "trenchcoat" = military >connection, again). Well, certain larger purses and backpacks do >accommodate.

>
>As Gloria Frym brings up, the history of the Europe and the west altering >concepts of time in the colonies is also interesting. The Igbos in Nigeria, >for example, had a four day week - one that coincided with market days, I >believe. Europe and Christianity and capitalism brought the 7 day week. I >think this scenario of expanding days played out across Latin America as >well.
>
>The clock is capitalism's bazooka - someone said that. And religion's - >Christ and his cathedral bells.
>
>Course, inevitably, in terms of poetry, this all plays into arguments around >the tick-tock yoke of formalism, and related repressive political >formations. (John Cage and Steve Reich, for examples, seem to be all about >breaching that western formal sense of time).
>
>Actually - to indulge a contradiction here - a well-used clock may liberate >much interesting work and play, and poems, too.
>
>Go, Gabriel - fourth down and ten to goal and 15 seconds left on the clock.
>
>Stephen V
>http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
>
>
>
>
>
> > Hi Gabriel,
> > There's an incredible section of Jamaica Kinkaid's A Small Island > on tourism
> > in the Caribbean, specifically her native Antigua, in which she speaks of > > the wrist watch as the colonial, nee British, way of owning and controlling > > and reducing time.
> >
> > Gloria Frym
> >
> >

> > ----- Original Message -----
> > From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
> > To: <[redacted]>
> > Sent: Wednesday, February 14, 2007 5:23 PM
> > Subject: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
> >
> >
> >> Thanks Murat and Ravi.
> >>
> >> And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.
> >>
> >> The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I > >> think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented > >> 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until > >> WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the > >> wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by > >> trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop > >> movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them.
> >> The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways,
> >> the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench > >> warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a > >> pocket.
> >>
> >> Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began > >> putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their > >> necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them > >> on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know > >> what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's > >> kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets > >> than men's.
> >>
> >> The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i > >> guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, > >> pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed > >> as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?
> >>
> >> Gabe
> >>

> >> --
> >> _____
> >> http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com
> >> ----------
> >> Gabriel Gudding
> >> Department of English
> >> Illinois State University
> >> Normal, Illinois 61790
> >> [redacted] (office)
> >>
> >>
> >>
> >> <<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
> >> Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
> >> In-Reply-To: <[log in to unmask]>
> >> Content-Type: text/plain; charset=ISO-8859-1; format=flowed > >> Content-Disposition: inline
> >>
> >> Gabriel,
> >>
> >> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
> >>
> >> Murat

↑ Index

511. heidi arnold
call for poems:
Thu 15 Feb 2007

Hello,

-- for an hour of radio, i'm putting together a series of poems on martyrdom/scapegoats/terrorists/radical othering -- this will have an activist bent, i hope -- but am open to your suggestions and thank you for the enlightening discussion on the previous thread -- specific details and a featured link will be sent to the list when they are available

-- poems on Lincoln, MLK, Nazim Hikmet, and many others sought -- i am also going through the list of previous suggestions and will include those --

-- if list members have poems they'd like to submit, published, or unpublished, please send them along in the body of an e-mail -- i will review things as they come in -- i'd like to get a sense of the number of subs from the list as soon as possible -- either sending subs to the entire list or just to me is ok --

-- i have a background working in academic publishing -- if you'd like current details on this specific project, contact me offlist -- best to all,

heidi

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

512. Stephen Vincent
Re: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
Thu 15 Feb 2007

> As usual, gender distinctions are a lot more complicated. My books > are still in storage, so I'll have to wing it a bit--for instance, I > have no idea when pockets began to be sewn in clothes (did Romans > have them?), but I think rather late in Europe, say 16th or 17th > century.

In the sixteenth century when Aldus - with his italic type - was able to design portable books (most likely for the traveling educated merchant, barrister and so forth - I am not sure that they were actually carried in pockets, or in a satchel or male purse of some sort.
Women, as Mark suggests here, could carry the small books in a bag about their waist, in a flat leather purse that could hang by a strap either around the neck, or safely hid inside, if necessary, as part of the woman's bustle, and probably under a man's vest, as well. By the sixteenth century religious books that might identify one as Protestant, or of an offending sect, they could be designed to be purposively tiny to fit and be carried, hidden below the neck (where, assumedly, jewels and other valuables could also be carried. (Talk about "clothes' horses").

Yes, Mark is right, the cell phone and computer are now the principal instruments of dictating time, as well as time's costs and dictates.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

> And there are class distinctions: Pepys had pockets, but also carried a purse, because the pockets didn't hold much. Did the mass of men, whose pants were made at home, routinely have pockets sewn in?
>
> Women did have pockets, in the form of small bags called, of all things, pockets, that were tied around the waist instead of sewn into the skirt, and in which, if they were literate, they often carried books. They were worn among the petticoats, under the skirt, which had a slit for easy access.They were usually cloth, unlike, say, the leather sporran that men in kilts wear. They fell out of fashion when women started wearing less clothes. It's modern women who are deprived of pockets.

On the continent at least working women (almost all women were working women) often wore an apron tied around their waists. The apron had pockets sewn in.

"The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?)." What women are we talking about? Certainly not the vast majority, who slaved on farms no less than their mates, and when a farming economy could no longer support them slaved in factories.

On timepieces--I hate wearing anything on my wrists, so for years I used a pocket watch. Until I noticed that in New York I was never very far from a public clock. Now my cellphone display tells me the time, as my computer, stove, microwave, and alarm clock do at home. There seems less and less reason to carry a watch. except for scuba diving, when small amounts of time are a matter of life and death.

Mark

At 09:52 PM 2/14/2007, you wrote:
Curious to remember in the sixties when many of us stopped wearing watches, at all. As in who wanted to march to the corporate drum, it's terrible, regimented, soul killing clock. (I don't know if that has changed!) And, in light of Gabriel's militarismo connection, who wanted to go to Vietnam and wear a watch in a trench or, to go on a "well-timed" bombing mission. The wrist watch seemed synchronized with death on all levels (public, personal and spiritual). (There was the late sixties, Chamber's Brother's song, "Time Has Come Today, young hearts can go their way
Can't put it off another day I don't care what others say ... with the haunting refrain: 'Time' 'Time', 'Time'. Which seemed to be much more than about romance, and more about beating back the clock)

But the reference, too, to the pocket, the lack of them on women's vestments. The pocket book was first created by Aldus in Venice -who created italic type to fit the format - in the sixteenth century. (I believe his first pocketbooks were for the works of Virgil and Horace.) But clearly - through the whole history of the "pocketbook", the pocketbooks have never fit into women's clothes (that I know of). Women had to, and probably still have to, be in male drag to put a book in a pocket - say a trench coat, popular among young women in the sixties . (woops, "trenchcoat" = military connection, again). Well, certain larger purses and backpacks do accommodate.

As Gloria Frym brings up, the history of the Europe and the west altering concepts of time in the colonies is also interesting. The Igbos in Nigeria, for example, had a four day week - one that coincided with market days, I believe. Europe and Christianity and capitalism brought the 7 day week. I think this scenario of expanding days played out across Latin America as well.

The clock is capitalism's bazooka - someone said that. And religion's - Christ and his cathedral bells.

Course, inevitably, in terms of poetry, this all plays into arguments around the tick-tock yoke of formalism, and related repressive political formations. (John Cage and Steve Reich, for examples, seem to be all about breaching that western formal sense of time).

Actually - to indulge a contradiction here - a well-used clock may liberate much interesting work and play, and poems, too.

Go, Gabriel - fourth down and ten to goal and 15 seconds left on the clock.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

Hi Gabriel,
There's an incredible section of Jamaica Kinkaid's A Small Island on tourism in the Caribbean, specifically her native Antigua, in which she speaks of the wrist watch as the colonial, nee British, way of owning and controlling and reducing time.

Gloria Frym

----- Original Message -----
From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Wednesday, February 14, 2007 5:23 PM

Subject: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)

Thanks Murat and Ravi.

And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.

The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them. The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways, the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a pocket.

Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets than men's.

The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?

Gabe

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

<<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
Subject: Re: praise be to the watch

> In-Reply-To: <[log in to unmask]>
> Content-Type: text/plain; charset=ISO-8859-1; format=flowed
> Content-Disposition: inline
>
> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat

↑ Index

513. Halvard Johnson
Re: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)
Thu 15 Feb 2007

This thread--reminding me suddenly of a joke told me by a Serbian friend years ago and having to do with watches and their related lingo.

1st speaker: "Which watch?"
2nd speaker (looking at his/her wristwatch): "Six watch."
1st speaker (aghast): "Ah, such much watch."

Hal

Today's Specials

Guide to the Tokyo Subway, poems
by Halvard Johnson

The Body Parts Shop, stories
by Lynda Schor

Now available from Hamilton Stone Editions and FC2 (for Schor) -- and at a website (Amazon, Barnes & Noble, Alibris, Powells, etc.) near you.

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 14, 2007, at 8:52 PM, Stephen Vincent wrote:

> Curious to remember in the sixties when many of us stopped wearing watches,

at all. As in who wanted to march to the corporate drum, it's terrible, regimented, soul killing clock. (I don't know if that has changed!) And, in light of Gabriel's militarismo connection, who wanted to go to Vietnam and wear a watch in a trench or, to go on a "well-timed" bombing mission. The wrist watch seemed synchronized with death on all levels (public, personal
and spiritual). (There was the late sixties, Chamber's Brother's song,
"Time Has Come Today, young hearts can go their way
Can't put it off another day I don't care what others say ... with the haunting refrain: 'Time' 'Time', 'Time'. Which seemed to be much more than about romance, and more about beating back the clock)

But the reference, too, to the pocket, the lack of them on women's vestments. The pocket book was first created by Aldus in Venice - who created italic type to fit the format - in the sixteenth century. (I believe his first pocketbooks were for the works of Virgil and Horace.) But clearly - through the whole history of the "pocketbook", the pocketbooks have never fit into women's clothes (that I know of). Women had to, and probably still have to, be in male drag to put a book in a pocket - say a trench coat, popular among young women in the sixties . (woops, "trenchcoat" = military connection, again). Well, certain larger purses and backpacks do accommodate.

As Gloria Frym brings up, the history of the Europe and the west altering concepts of time in the colonies is also interesting. The Igbos in Nigeria, for example, had a four day week - one that coincided with market days, I believe. Europe and Christianity and capitalism brought the 7 day week. I think this scenario of expanding days played out across Latin America as well.

The clock is capitalism's bazooka - someone said that. And religion's -

Christ and his cathedral bells.

Course, inevitably, in terms of poetry, this all plays into arguments around the tick-tock yoke of formalism, and related repressive political formations. (John Cage and Steve Reich, for examples, seem to be all about breaching that western formal sense of time).

Actually - to indulge a contradiction here - a well-used clock may liberate much interesting work and play, and poems, too.

Go, Gabriel - fourth down and ten to goal and 15 seconds left on the clock.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

Hi Gabriel,
There's an incredible section of Jamaica Kinkaid's A Small Island on tourism in the Caribbean, specifically her native Antigua, in which she speaks of the wrist watch as the colonial, nee British, way of owning and controlling and reducing time.

Gloria Frym

----- Original Message -----
From: "Gabriel Gudding" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Wednesday, February 14, 2007 5:23 PM
Subject: the politics of the pocket -- (was watch thread)

Thanks Murat and Ravi.

And, Ravi, thanks for forwarding yr v cool musings about the watch.

The gender politics of time are kinda fascinating and have a lot to do, I think, with the gender politics of pockets. EG, the wristwatch, invented 1868, was at first seen as a woman's accessory. It wasn't really until WWI, when the wristwatch was used in the trenches (easier to look at the wrist than to root around for one's pocket watch). Later it was used by trench officers and artillery officers to coordinate attacks and troop movements -- at which point all European armies began mass producing them.
The troops, at war's end, took the watches home with them. In many ways, the popularity of the wristwatch among men owes something to trench warfare and to the expediency of not busying a hand by dipping i into a pocket.

Men and women first wore watches around their necks. Then men began putting them in vest pockets (in 1675), while women kept them on their necks or on waist belts (see paintings of Wm Hogarth). Then women put them on their wrists (1868) while men kept them in their pockets. I don't know what the deal is with women's fashion and the "no pocket" custom, but it's kind of fascinating how even now women's clothing has far fewer pockets than men's.

The gender politics of the pocket is really fascinating: has something, i guess, to do with forced domestication of women: keeping them at home, pretending that they have no life of real "utility" (are pockets construed as utilitarian?). Time was fashioned/coded as utilitarian concept?

Gabe

--
_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

> Gabriel Gudding
> Department of English
> Illinois State University
> Normal, Illinois 61790
> [redacted] (office)
>
> <<From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[log in to unmask]>
> Subject: Re: praise be to the watch
> In-Reply-To: <[log in to unmask]>
> Content-Type: text/plain; charset=ISO-8859-1; format=flowed
> Content-Disposition: inline
>
> Gabriel,
>
> I second. Alan. Your piece ticks away.
>
> Murat

↑ Index

514. Adam Fieled

Eric Elshtain on PFS Post

Thu 15 Feb 2007

Check out work from Chicago poet and Beard of Bees editor Eric Elshtain on PFS Post:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

along w Tom Orange, Steve Halle, Lars Palm, Robert Archambeau, Aaron Belz, and more...

Love on yer, dearies...

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

Be a PS3 game guru.
Get your game face on with the latest PS3 news and previews at Yahoo! Games.

↑ Index

515. Joel Bettridge

Book Arts Conference, New Haven, CT April 2007 Update

Thu 15 Feb 2007

The Yale University Library and the Whitney Humanities Center invite historians, literary scholars, artists, and book arts enthusiasts to participate in At the Turn of the Centuries: The Influence of Early 20th Century Book Arts on Contemporary Artists' Books, a conference to be held on April 13, 2007, on the campus of Yale University. A detailed description follows.

The concurrent afternoon sessions are currently filled. Even if you are not able to register for the one-hour afternoon session, there are still many seats available for the morning lectures by Marcia Reed, Stephen Bury and Angela Lorenz. We encourage you to sign up for the morning session, explore one of the museums or libraries of Yale in the afternoon, then join us for the closing reception.

Please consult our web site for further details:
http://beinecke.library.yale.edu/centuries/index.html

At the Turn of the Centuries: The Influence of Early 20th Century Book Arts on Contemporary Artists' Books

The Yale University Library, the Whitney Humanities Center, the Yale University Art Gallery and the Yale Center for British Art invite historians, literary scholars, artists, and book arts enthusiasts to participate in At the Turn of the Centuries: The Influence of Early 20th Century Book Arts on Contemporary Artists' Books, a conference to be held on April 13, 2007, on the campus of Yale University.

Speakers will include Marcia Reed, Head of Collection Development, Getty Research Institute; Stephen Bury, Head of European and American

Collections, British Library; and Angela Lorenz, acclaimed American book artist and book arts scholar. The conference will consider the work of various innovative and avant-garde artists and writers working in the years following the turn of the twentieth century, including the Dadaists and Surrealists, and its influence on post-war artists and writers, including those associated with OULIPO and Fluxus, and contemporary inheritors of these traditions in art, literature, and bookwork.

Additionally, the conference will highlight strengths of the Yale Arts of the Book Collection, the modern European and American collections at the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, the Prints, Drawings, and Photographs Department at the Yale University Art Gallery, and the Rare Books and Manuscripts Department at the Yale Center for British Art. At the Turn of the Centuries will also honor the late Tony Zwicker's life-long commitment to the inventive and original in modern and contemporary book arts.

Nancy Kuhl
Associate Curator, The Yale Collection of American Literature
The Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library
Yale University
121 Wall Street
P.O. Box 208240
New Haven, CT 06520-8240
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

Do you Yahoo!?

Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

516. Rob McLennan
Artie Gold 1947-2007
Thu 15 Feb 2007

---

a sad email from Endre Farkas, that Montreal poet Artie Gold died on February 14th

one of the original vehicule poets, info on him here:

http://www.vehiculepoets.com/
http://www.track0.com/ogwc/authors/gold_a.html

rob

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press fair ...12th poetry coll'n - aubade (Broken Jaw Press) .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

517. Steve Dalachinsky
Fw: Vision Dance Music at Symphony Space February 21 to 24
Mon 1 Jan 2007

Vision Dance Music Series
DrummingDance & SoundingStrings
Wednesday, February 21 through Saturday, February 24, 2007
at Peter Norton Symphony Space – Leonard Nimoy Thalia Theatre

Featuring
Matthew Shipp/William Parker; Guillermo E. Brown/Dave Burrell
Matthew Shipp/Daniel Carter; Carmen de Lavallade/Todd Nicholson

Dates: Wednesday, February 21 through Saturday, February 24, 2007
Time: 7:30pm
Place: Peter Norton Symphony Space – Leonard Nimoy Thalia Theater
2537 Broadway at 95th Street
Subway: 1, 2 or 3 to 96th Street
Cost: $20 per night in advance / $25 day of show / $15 students, seniors, members

Wednesday, February 21 7:30pm Carmen de Lavallade (dance) / Todd Nicholson (bass) 8:00pm Miriam Parker (dance) / Joe Morris (banjo) 8:30pm Treva Offutt (dance) / Jean-Baptiste Bocle (marimba and electronics) 9:00 pm Matthew Shipp (piano) / Daniel Carter (reeds and trumpet)

Thursday, February 22
7:30pm Patricia Nicholson (dance) / William Parker (bass)
8:00pm Yoshiko Chuma (dance) / Ben Gerstein, Peter Zummo, Steve Swell (trombones)
8:30pm Wendy Osserman (choreographer), Charis Haines and Justin Terenullo (dance) Rosi Hertlien (violin)
9:00pm Guillermo E. Brown (drums and electronics) / Dave Burrell (piano)

Friday, February 23 7:30pm Carmen de Lavallade (dance) / Todd Nicholson (bass) 8:00pm Wendy Osserman (choreographer), Charis Haines and Justin Terenullo (dance) Rosi Hertlien (violin) 8:30pm Patricia Nicholson (dance) / William Parker (bass) 9:00pm Matthew Shipp (piano) / William Parker (bass)

Saturday, February 24
7:30pm Miriam Parker (dance) / Joe Morris (banjo)
8:00pm Treva Offutt (dance) / Jean-Baptiste Bocle (marimba and electronics)
8:30pm Yoshiko Chuma (dance) / Ben Gerstein, Peter Zummo, Chris McIntyre (trombone)
9:00pm IMPROV

--- ---

Dates: Wednesday, February 21 through Saturday, February 24, 2007
Time: 7:30pm
Place: Peter Norton Symphony Space – Leonard Nimoy Thalia Theater
2537 Broadway at 95th Street
Subway: 1, 2 or 3 to 96th Street
Cost: $20 per night in advance / $25 day of show / $15 students, seniors, members
Tickets: www.symphonyspace.org / [redacted]
Full Info: www.visionfestival.org / [redacted]

↑ Index

518. Steve Dalachinsky

Fw: hello everyone we're back and bolder than ever some Poetry gigs for you all from dalachinsky and otomo

Mon 1 Jan 2007

---

steve reads:

Saturday, FEB. 24th, 2007 @ 7 PM @ NUTUREart GALLERY
910 GRAND STREET 2nd Floor Williamsburg Brooklyn
FREE ADMISSION

_____

Yuko & steve with special guest STEPHANIE STONE :

Tuesday, March 6th 8 PM
at the Stone on the corner of Ave. C and E 2nd St.
admission $5-10 sliding scale (one or the other)

followed @ 10 PM by Amiri and Amina Baraka & guests separate admission of $10

_____

steve dalachinsky & Robert Morgan (poet & art historian) in a special evening of poetry

Thursday, March 15th @ 7 PM @
FUSION ARTS MUSEUM
57 Stanton Street (near Eldridge)
DONATION

_____

SHaloM NewMan presents @ Pratt Institute - in Manhattan
March 16 @ 7 PM exhibit and readings
featuring steve, Yuko, Jim Feast and many others...

↑ Index

519. Barry Schwabsky

Re: Quasha this week at Baumgartner, White Box, ZONE Chelsea, & CAA ARTspace

Thu 15 Feb 2007

What a wild combination! What's the topic?

4. Speaking on a CAA panel with Peter Halley and Faith Ringgold : Friday, Feb. 16--9:30-noon.

↑ Index

520. Tarpaulin Sky

Two new books: Max Winter's _The Pictures_ & Sandy Flo rian's _32 Pedals and 47 Stops_

Thu 15 Feb 2007

New from Tarpaulin Sky Press: Max Winter’s _The Pictures_, and Sandy Florian’s _32 Pedals and 47 Stops_.

THE PICTURES, Max Winter.
ISBN: 978-0-9779019-2-0
Poetry. 5" x 7", 76 pages, perfectbound.
$12 list / $10 direct order includes US shipping:
http://www.tarpaulinsky.com/Press/Winter/index.html
* Also available in a limited, hand-bound, hardcover edition.

Sparse, clear, and free of flourishes, the poems in _The Pictures_ examine war, boredom, death, love, decay, happiness, and worship through a series of moving and still images. In one poem, from a group of “moving” pictures, three soldiers bide their time in a barren landscape, awaiting destruction; in a “still” picture, a group of stones invite us to pay closer attention to them; in another still picture, a woman stands with her mouth open, fists clenched, words unimportant. Sight is unmysterious but wondrous in this book; the poems demonstrate that to look at something or to read it is to experience it, along with its attendant sadness or joy. The "pictures" collected here are communicative and profound, quick to read but long to develop.

Winner of the Fifth Annual Boston Review Poetry Contest, Max Winter has poems appearing recently in Free Verse, New American Writing, Ploughshares, The Paris Review, Colorado Review, Volt, The Yale Review, The Canary, Denver Quarterly, First Intensity, GutCult, TYPO, and New Young American Poets (Southern Illinois, 2000). He has published reviews in The New York Times, The Washington Post, The San Francisco Chronicle, Newsday, and BOMB, and is a Poetry Editor of Fence.

*

32 PEDALS & 47 STOPS, Sandy Florian.
Chapbook. Poetry/Fiction. 7" x 8.25", 36 pages, saddle-sewn.
$12 list / $10 direct order includes US shipping:
http://www.tarpaulinsky.com/Press/Florian/index.html

What's new in _32 Pedals & 47_ Stops is not the rendering of time past, but the experience of time itself passing. Florian’s mode of measurement is a template of sentence structures, paragraph breaks, and tones through which each of her characters pass. Each scene, each moment in time is affected by a shapeshifting personality intent on disruption. As characters and objects appear, disappear, and reappear, one experiences both the evanescence of things and the ghostly accretion of memory, a sense of déjà vu, a sense that something you have experienced is somewhere just out of your mind's grasp. Throughout these prose poems, Florian "makes strange" the mundane moment by revealing its artificial measurement—and by revealing that there is always something strange happening—in moments that are playful, sad, jolting, pick-pocketing, surprising, puzzling, and beautifully disorienting.

Sandy Florian's first book, _Telescope_, is published by Action Books. Her poetry and prose appears in over 30 national and international journals including Slope, bird dog, Parthenon West Review, Indiana Review, Bombay Gin, and Shampoo.

↑ Index

521. Poetry Project

Events at the Poetry Project 2/19 - 2/21

Thu 15 Feb 2007

Dear Ones,

Please tromp through the snow and over our way.
The workshops have begun this week, but it¹s not too late to sign up. Go to http://www.poetryproject.com/workshops.php for listings.

Love,

The Poetry Project

Monday, February 19, 8:00 pm
Mark Lamoureux & Mohammad Ali Niazmand

Mark Lamoureux is the author of four chapbooks: Traceland, 29 Cheeseburgers, Film Poems and City/Temple. His first full-length collection of poems, Astrometry Organon is due out from Spuyten Duyvil/Meeting Eyes Bindery in early 2007. He is the editor of Cy Gist Press, a micropress focusing on ekphrastic poetry, as well as the the Printed Matter editor for Boog City. Mohammad Ali Niazmand was born in Tehran, Iran in 1977. He is of Iranian and Iraqi decent, migrated to the USA in 1988, learned english from the hill of Mt. Tamalpais, to the streets of San Francisco, and the alleys of New York City. He is the author of four collections of poetry including Wizard Poisonings, and Change of Atmosphere.

Wednesday, February 21, 8:00 pm
Gloria Frym & Lewis Warsh

Gloria Frym¹s most recent book of poems is Solution Simulacra. Her previous collection of poems, Homeless at Home, won an American Book Award in 2002.

She is also the author of two critically acclaimed collections of short stories, Distance No Object and How I Learned, as well as several other volumes of poetry, including By Ear, Back to Forth, and Impossible Affection. Lewis Warsh's most recent books are The Origin of the World, Touch of the Whip, Debtor's Prison, in collaboration with Julie Harrison, and Ted's Favorite Skirt. Two chapbooks, Flight Test and The Flea Market in Kiel appeared in 2006. He is co-editor, with Anne Waldman, of The Angel Hair Anthology, editor and publisher of United Artists Books, and Associate Professor at Long Island University. A new novel, A Place in the Sun, and a new book of poems, Inseparable: Poems 1995-2005, are forthcoming in 2007.

Marcella Durand and Jess Fiorini
Bowery Broadsides Series hosted by Farfalla Press

Friday, February 16, 7pm
The Bowery Poetry Club
308 [redacted]
New York, NY
Admission is free with a 2 drink minimum

The second night of a year long reading series. First fifty patrons receive free broadsides by both poets.
All artwork by George Schneeman.

FUND RAISER FOR FRANK SHERLOCK

this Saturday, February 17, 3:00-4:00 pm

$20 suggested donation (please give what you can)

Performers include:

Anselm Berrigan, Eddie Berrigan, John Coletti, Cori Copp, Marcella Durand, Greg Fuchs, Brenda Iijima, Mark Lamoureux and Carol Mirakove

Our good friend Frank Sherlock was rushed to the hospital January 22nd with a sudden and mysterious illness which turned out to be a serious case of meningitis. He needed emergency surgery and also suffered a heart attack and kidney failure as a result of symptoms related to the illness. His friends have come together to help him at this critical time. We are reaching out to other friends and the poetry community on Frank's behalf. Frank's poetry page can be found here: http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com

THANKS SO MUCH FOR YOUR SUPPORT, AND PLEASE SPREAD THE WORD, from the Friends of Frank Sherlock

Become a Poetry Project Member! http://poetryproject.com/membership.php

Winter Calendar: http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

The Poetry Project is located at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery
131 East 10th Street at Second Avenue
New York City 10003
Trains: 6, F, N, R, and L.
[redacted]
www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $8, $7 for students/seniors and $5 for members (though now those who take out a membership at $85 or higher will get in FREE to all regular readings).

We are wheelchair accessible with assistance and advance notice. For more info call [redacted].

If you¹d like to be unsubscribed from this mailing list, please drop a line at [redacted].

↑ Index

522. Alan Sondheim

Reel Histrionic

Thu 15 Feb 2007

Reel Histrionic

In Eloquent Gestures, The Transformation of Performance Style in the Griffith Biograph films, Roberta E. Pearson describes 'histrionic' and 'verisimilar' codes of acting - a transformation from a melodramatic locus to incipient realism. She considers them in relation to 'analogical' and 'digital' communication: "Though most gestural communication systems are unsegmented and analogic, the histrionic code, with its emphasis on the isolation of gesture, does resemble segmented, digital communications such as speech. Actors deliberately struck attitudes, holding each gesture and abstracting it from the flow of motion until the audience had 'read it.'" [...] "Not only were aspiring actors told to 'rest long enough in a gesture,' they were urged to avoid excessive movement, which might detract from attitude-striking." [...] "The elimination of the small gestures brings about the physical equivalent of silence between the grand, posed gestures, resulting in the 'discrete, discontinuous elements and gaps' of digital communication." In contrast, the analogical references the uncoded real, motions and emotions of daily life.

The digital is catastrophic, fold-catastrophic; it consists of jumps between gestures or stances, between emotions and their concretion as attitude. The histrionic is dependent upon the diegetic - it as acted action of the unfolding interpreted world. The histrionic is therefore always stylized and responsive, within and up to thresholding. A threshold is constituted by an increased differentiation between gesture and the diegetic real; this itself is stylized. In other words, there are two levels of code, stylization at work: the semantic contents of individuated gestures, and the syntactic divisions between them. The gestures are individuated (not individual); as with other linguistic formation, they are constituted by difference, differance, the playing among gestures 'down the line of the unfolding of the diegetic.' So histrionic gestures bridge from one moment to another in the form <------<----<----- - they are held positions until anomaly (threshold) defers them.

Gestures are concretions operating within time's arrow, objectifying the body in a sequence of irreversible positions. The body constitutes the proffering of desire - it is held for the viewer, much as the display of the (sexualized) body operated in some elements of Weimar dance/cabaret culture. This holding is reminiscent of the still pornographic image, which is presented to the (mostly male) viewer; the viewer is aware that the histrionic is there for his or her pleasure. In the pornographic photograph, the erogenous zones function as 'strange attractors'; the diegetic is constructed by the viewer who creates a narratology resulting in masturbation, the cessation of (that) pleasure. The zones, however, are grounded in the analogical, the abject; the viewer is without the gesture of the histrionic (in both silent film and pornography).

Stylized gestures reference a repertoire, of course; they must be under- stood by both the actor (in re/presentation) and viewer (as indexical within the diegetic). And repertoires are always stylized, enumerations of entities that play, one way or another, within specified cultural milieus. In this sense, all repertoires are accumulations of conventions and genre; in the case of the histrionic, they are a rough set of mappings into (and constituting) the diegesis, in order that the photoplay 'move forward' for both actor and spectator. (This moving is literally self-centered within the pornographic, which plays within the (transitive and transitional) body of the viewer in both (interrelated) psychoanalytical and biophysical registers.)

(But pornography as well as photoplay is never fully reductive; defuge creates another deferral, from image to image, film to film. This is what might be considered the 'repressed of the analogical,' the referencing of the clean and proper body and life-story in relation to the messiness and decathection of everyday life. The analogical is always excessive and irreducible; digital mappings are mappings from one-to-many, mappings into the analogical (body and) real. Digital mappings are not only stylized; they are undergoing continuous transformations, splittings, decathecting, disinvestment, as the surplus of the analog has moved elsewhere. What constitutes pornography or photoplay, fashion or convention, at one synchronic instant, is constituted elsewhere at the next. The repression constructed by the diegesis itself (which leaves out so many things in the world) returns in so many different forms which become increasingly mutually unreadable.)

"The name _sensuality_ seems to be taken from the sensual movement, of which Augustine speaks, just as the name of a power is taken from its act, for instance, sight from seeing. Now the sensual movement is an appetite following sensible apprehension. For the act of the apprehensive power is not so properly called a movement as the act of appetite; since the operation of the apprehensive power is completed in the very fact that the thing apprehended is in the one that apprehends, while the operation of the appetitive power is completed in the fact that he who desires is borne towards the desirable thing. Hence it is that the operation of the appre- hensive power is likened to rest; whereas the operation of the appetitive power is rather likened to movement. Therefore by sensual movement we understand the operation of the appetitive power. Thus, sensuality is the name of the sensitive appetitive." (From Aquinas, Summa Theologica, trans- lated by Anton C. Pegis, Introduction to St. Thomas Aquinas, Modern Library, 1948.)

[of little relation: http://www.asondheim.org/aquinas.mp3]

===

↑ Index

523. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Quasha with Halley and Ringgold at CAA ARTspace

Thu 15 Feb 2007

What's Halley up to these days....for years it was "yellow cell green ground, blue cell on yellow ground, orange cell with blue ground, purple cell with orange ground, etc"----Oh yes, and then the twist,
"red cell with orange conduit and green background."
I remember he had a waiting list; people having paid up front for works he hadn't even done yet.
He was a fast taker, but was able to confine his talk into the cell (with conduit) of a meta-theory....
His theatre of words became as much the 'thing' as the paintings, but the minimalist conceptual vocabulary at times made him seem a little dogmatic in his anti-expressionism, and frankly I didn't keep up, but I have to admit I was somewhat hooked by the mere fact of his intellectualizings and verbal agility-- like the bespectacled bookish post-Warhol-axis bureaucratic 80s-style artist notion of 'charisma' still lent a glamour to contemporary theory (and vice versa), and doesn't seem so much of a 'tepid rehashing' of earlier 20th century concept-conscious art as it did at the time and it'd be interesting to see how his thought-art, or art-thought has developed...

If anyone wants to talk about it here,....

Chris

On Feb 15, 2007, at 1:35 PM, Barry Schwabsky wrote:

> What a wild combination! What's the topic?
>
> 4. Speaking on a CAA panel with Peter Halley and > Faith Ringgold : Friday, Feb. 16--9:30-noon.

↑ Index

524. Rod Smith

Flarf! Baltimore & DC i.e. 2/17, DCAC 2/18

Fri 16 Feb 2007

An Evening of Flarf

i.e. reading series presents
The Flarf Collective
Sat. Feb. 17th- 7 pm til? @!
Dionysus Restaurant & Lounge
8 E. Preston Street, Baltimore, MD
[redacted]

followd bye

An Afternoon of Flarf

IN Y O U R E A R R E A D I N G S E R I E S
@ District of Columbia Arts Center
2438 18th Street NW, Washington DC
Sun. Feb. 18th, 3 - 6 pm

Performers will include:

Katie Degentesh, author of The Anger Scale
Drew Gardner, author of Petroleum Hat & Sugar Pill
Benjamin Friedlander, author of A Knot is Not a Tangle & Simulcast
Nada Gordon, auhor of V. Imp & Foriegnn Bodie
Rodney Koeneke, author of Musee Mechanique & Rouge State
Michael Magee, author of Mainstream & My Angie Dickinson

Sharon Mesmer, author of In Ordinary Time & The Empty Quarter
Mel Nichols, author of Day Poems
Rod Smith, author of Music or Honesty & The Good House
Gary Sullivan, author of How to Proceed in the Arts & Elsewhere

+ Film by Brandon Downing, author of Dark Brandon

+ FlarfOrchestra conducted by Drew Gardner featuring Flarf Collective members &

The Brain Wave Chick
Jason Hamrick, trumpet
Buck Downs & Ryan Walker, guitars
Jamie Gaughran-Perez, guitar etc.
Adam Good, bass
Gary Sullivan, ocarina

Following on the success of the 2006 NYC Flarf Festival, they're taking it on the road! Launched in May of 2001 by six poets, the Flarflist Collective is dedicated to the exploration of "the inappropriate" in all of its guises. Poets mine the internet with odd search terms then distill the results into often hilarious and sometimes disturbing poetry, theatre, music, and film.

The District of Columbia Arts Center is located between the Dupont Circle and Woodley Park metro stations. For directions, see http://www.dcartscenter.org/location.htm

Note: the FlarfOrchestra will only be performing in DC.

A large sample of what has come be known as flarf can be found at http://mainstreampoetry.blogspot.com/

B.Y.O.S. (Bring Your Own Squid)

↑ Index

525. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Reel Histrionic
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Alan,

I have a sensual desire to apprehend your distinction between analogic and digital. Is in the digital what is apprehended a series of islands? Is the trip to the islands, that journey, analogic? By that, things are reversed. The humdrum of our lives, the process, is our truth. What we arrive at is elusive, contemplative and only static, non sensual. Is that not sad?

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/15/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Reel Histrionic
>
>
> In Eloquent Gestures, The Transformation of Performance Style in the > Griffith Biograph films, Roberta E. Pearson describes 'histrionic' and
> 'verisimilar' codes of acting - a transformation from a melodramatic locus > to incipient realism. She considers them in relation to 'analogical' and
> 'digital' communication: "Though most gestural communication systems are > unsegmented and analogic, the histrionic code, with its emphasis on the > isolation of gesture, does resemble segmented, digital communications such > as speech. Actors deliberately struck attitudes, holding each gesture and > abstracting it from the flow of motion until the audience had 'read it.'"
> [...] "Not only were aspiring actors told to 'rest long enough in a > gesture,' they were urged to avoid excessive movement, which might detract > from attitude-striking." [...] "The elimination of the small gestures > brings about the physical equivalent of silence between the grand, posed > gestures, resulting in the 'discrete, discontinuous elements and gaps' of > digital communication." In contrast, the analogical references the uncoded > real, motions and emotions of daily life.
>
> The digital is catastrophic, fold-catastrophic; it consists of jumps > between gestures or stances, between emotions and their concretion as > attitude. The histrionic is dependent upon the diegetic - it as acted > action of the unfolding interpreted world. The histrionic is therefore > always stylized and responsive, within and up to thresholding. A threshold > is constituted by an increased differentiation between gesture and the > diegetic real; this itself is stylized. In other words, there are two > levels of code, stylization at work: the semantic contents of individuated > gestures, and the syntactic divisions between them. The gestures are > individuated (not individual); as with other linguistic formation, they > are constituted by difference, differance, the playing among gestures
> 'down the line of the unfolding of the diegetic.' So histrionic gestures > bridge from one moment to another in the form <------<----<----- - they > are held positions until anomaly (threshold) defers them.
>
> Gestures are concretions operating within time's arrow, objectifying the > body in a sequence of irreversible positions. The body constitutes the > proffering of desire - it is held for the viewer, much as the display of > the (sexualized) body operated in some elements of Weimar dance/cabaret > culture. This holding is reminiscent of the still pornographic image, > which is presented to the (mostly male) viewer; the viewer is aware that > the histrionic is there for his or her pleasure. In the pornographic > photograph, the erogenous zones function as 'strange attractors'; the > diegetic is constructed by the viewer who creates a narratology resulting > in masturbation, the cessation of (that) pleasure. The zones, however, are > grounded in the analogical, the abject; the viewer is without the gesture > of the histrionic (in both silent film and pornography).

>
> Stylized gestures reference a repertoire, of course; they must be under> stood by both the actor (in re/presentation) and viewer (as indexical > within the diegetic). And repertoires are always stylized, enumerations of > entities that play, one way or another, within specified cultural milieus.
> In this sense, all repertoires are accumulations of conventions and genre;
> in the case of the histrionic, they are a rough set of mappings into (and > constituting) the diegesis, in order that the photoplay 'move forward' for > both actor and spectator. (This moving is literally self-centered within > the pornographic, which plays within the (transitive and transitional) > body of the viewer in both (interrelated) psychoanalytical and biophysical > registers.)
>
> (But pornography as well as photoplay is never fully reductive; defuge > creates another deferral, from image to image, film to film. This is what > might be considered the 'repressed of the analogical,' the referencing of > the clean and proper body and life-story in relation to the messiness and > decathection of everyday life. The analogical is always excessive and > irreducible; digital mappings are mappings from one-to-many, mappings into > the analogical (body and) real. Digital mappings are not only stylized;
> they are undergoing continuous transformations, splittings, decathecting, > disinvestment, as the surplus of the analog has moved elsewhere. What > constitutes pornography or photoplay, fashion or convention, at one > synchronic instant, is constituted elsewhere at the next. The repression > constructed by the diegesis itself (which leaves out so many things in the > world) returns in so many different forms which become increasingly > mutually unreadable.)
>
> "The name _sensuality_ seems to be taken from the sensual movement, of > which Augustine speaks, just as the name of a power is taken from its act, > for instance, sight from seeing. Now the sensual movement is an appetite > following sensible apprehension. For the act of the apprehensive power is > not so properly called a movement as the act of appetite; since the > operation of the apprehensive power is completed in the very fact that the > thing apprehended is in the one that apprehends, while the operation of > the appetitive power is completed in the fact that he who desires is borne > towards the desirable thing. Hence it is that the operation of the appre> hensive power is likened to rest; whereas the operation of the appetitive > power is rather likened to movement. Therefore by sensual movement we > understand the operation of the appetitive power. Thus, sensuality is the > name of the sensitive appetitive." (From Aquinas, Summa Theologica, trans> lated by Anton C. Pegis, Introduction to St. Thomas Aquinas, Modern > Library, 1948.)

>
> [of little relation: http://www.asondheim.org/aquinas.mp3]
>
> ===
>

↑ Index

526. cralan kelder
Emmett Williams passes
Fri 16 Feb 2007

The death of the American concrete / visual poet Emmett Williams was announced yesterday in Berlin, where he has lived for decades.

Didn¹t see this on the list.

He died in the night of the 13th 14th.

His most recent book, the beautiful A FLEXIBLE HISTORY OF FLUXUS FACTS & FICTIONS

Dieser Artikel wurde Ihnen geschickt von [redacted] mit der persönlichen Mitteilung:

  sadly, this

Bitte beachten Sie:
SPIEGEL ONLINE hat die Identität des Absenders nicht überprüft

SPIEGEL ONLINE, 14.02.2007

Fluxus-Kunst: Emmett Williams gestorben

Emmett Williams, ehemaliger Weggefährte von Joseph Beuys, ist in der Nacht zum Mittwoch in Berlin gestorben. Der amerikanische Dichter und Perfomance-

Künstler gehörte zu den Begründern der Fluxus-Bewegung, die auch die Pop-Art inspirierte.

Den vollständigen Artikel erreichen Sie im Internet unter der URL http://www.spiegel.de/kultur/gesellschaft/0,1518,466491,00.html

↑ Index

527. Editors, Tarpaulin Sky Press & Journal

Two New Books: Max Winter's _The Pictures_ & Sandy Flo rian's _32 Pedals and 47 Stops_

Fri 16 Feb 2007

(unsubscribe info at bottom of email)

New from Tarpaulin Sky Press: Max Winter’s _The Pictures_, and Sandy Florian’s _32 Pedals and 47 Stops_.

THE PICTURES, Max Winter.
ISBN: 978-0-9779019-2-0
Poetry. 5" x 7", 76 pages, perfectbound.
$12 list / $10 direct order includes US shipping:
http://www.tarpaulinsky.com/Press/Winter/index.html
* Also available in a limited, hand-bound, hardcover edition.

Sparse, clear, and free of flourishes, the poems in _The Pictures_ examine war, boredom, death, love, decay, happiness, and worship through a series of moving and still images. In one poem, from a group of “moving” pictures, three soldiers bide their time in a barren landscape, awaiting destruction; in a “still” picture, a group of stones invite us to pay closer attention to them; in another still picture, a woman stands with her mouth open, fists clenched, words unimportant. Sight is unmysterious but wondrous in this book; the poems demonstrate that to look at something or to read it is to experience it, along with its attendant sadness or joy. The "pictures" collected here are communicative and profound, quick to read but long to develop.

Winner of the Fifth Annual Boston Review Poetry Contest, Max Winter has poems appearing recently in Free Verse, New American Writing, Ploughshares, The Paris Review, Colorado Review, Volt, The Yale Review, The Canary, Denver Quarterly, First Intensity, GutCult, TYPO, and New Young American Poets (Southern Illinois, 2000). He has published reviews in The New York Times, The Washington Post, The San Francisco Chronicle, Newsday, and BOMB, and is a Poetry Editor of Fence.

*

32 PEDALS & 47 STOPS, Sandy Florian.
Chapbook. Poetry/Fiction. 7" x 8.25", 36 pages, saddle-sewn.

$12 list / $10 direct order includes US shipping:
http://www.tarpaulinsky.com/Press/Florian/index.html

What's new in _32 Pedals & 47_ Stops is not the rendering of time past, but the experience of time itself passing. Florian's mode of measurement is a template of sentence structures, paragraph breaks, and tones through which each of her characters pass. Each scene, each moment in time is affected by a shapeshifting personality intent on disruption. As characters and objects appear, disappear, and reappear, one experiences both the evanescence of things and the ghostly accretion of memory, a sense of déjà vu, a sense that something you have experienced is somewhere just out of your mind's grasp. Throughout these prose poems, Florian "makes strange" the mundane moment by revealing its artificial measurement—and by revealing that there is always something strange happening—in moments that are playful, sad, jolting, pick-pocketing, surprising, puzzling, and beautifully disorienting.

Sandy Florian's first book, _Telescope_, is published by Action Books. Her poetry and prose appears in over 30 national and international journals including Slope, bird dog, Parthenon West Review, Indiana Review, Bombay Gin, and Shampoo.

*

We definitely do not wish to send you emails that you do not wish to receive. If you would like your email address to be removed from this mailing list, please simply reply with UNSUBSCRIBE in the subject line. We thank you for your understanding.

↑ Index

528. susan maurer
Re: Quasha with Halley and Ringgold at CAA ARTspace
Fri 16 Feb 2007

---

chris like this. we met you and i years ago in ny pleased to see yr still so agile with yr words. susan maurer

> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Quasha with Halley and Ringgold at CAA ARTspace
> Date: Thu, 15 Feb 2007 18:51:55 -0800
>
> What's Halley up to these days....for years it was "yellow cell green ground, blue cell on yellow ground, orange cell with blue ground, purple cell with orange ground, etc"----Oh yes, and then the twist, "red cell with orange conduit and green background."
> I remember he had a waiting list; people having paid up front for works he > hadn't even done yet.

> He was a fast taker, but was able to confine his talk into the cell (with conduit) of a meta-theory....
> His theatre of words became as much the 'thing' as the paintings, but the minimalist conceptual vocabulary
> at times made him seem a little dogmatic in his anti-expressionism, and frankly I didn't keep up, > but I have to admit I was somewhat hooked by the mere fact of his intellectualizings and verbal agility-- > like the bespectacled bookish post-Warhol-axis bureaucratic 80s-style artist notion of 'charisma' > still lent a glamour to contemporary theory (and vice versa), and doesn't seem so much of a 'tepid rehashing'
> of earlier 20th century concept-conscious art as it did at the time > and it'd be interesting to see how his thought-art, or art-thought has developed...
> If anyone wants to talk about it here,....
>
> Chris
>
> On Feb 15, 2007, at 1:35 PM, Barry Schwabsky wrote:
>
> What a wild combination! What's the topic?
>
> 4. Speaking on a CAA panel with Peter Halley and > Faith Ringgold : Friday, Feb. 16--9:30-noon.

_____ Want a degree but can't afford to quit? Top school degrees online - in as fast as 1 year http://forms.nextag.com/goto.jsp?url=/serv/main/buyer/education.jsp?doSearch=n&tm=y&search=education_text_links_88_h288c&s=4079&p=5116

↑ Index

529. Daniel Godston
Black Mountain Collective event tonight
Fri 16 Feb 2007

You are invited to attend tonight's Black Mountain Collective event --

BLACK MOUNTAIN ARTS COLLECTIVE - 2007 Series

4 concerts/happenings, curated by Jeff Kowalkowski, David Hawkins, and Andrew Morgan Beginning Friday, Feb. 16th, 8-10 p.m. at LOCUS, 2114 W. Grand Ave.

The complete 2007 series dates are:
Friday, February 16
Thursday, April 19
Thursday, June 14
Thursday, October 18
---
at LOCUS, 2114 W. Grand Ave.
Suggested Donation $10 (or pay what you can.)
(all door proceeds go to support LOCUS artist space.)

The recently formed Black Mountain Arts Collective was formed by Jeff Kowalkowski, David Hawkins and Andrew Morgan, with an emphasis on works created in the present moment. Inspired by the "happenings" orchestrated by John Cage and Robert Rauschenberg and others from Black Mountain College in the 1950s, these concerts will include new music by Kowalkowski, Morgan, and friends and students, and/or feature long-form open improvisations. Simultaneous painting (David Hawkins), movement, multi-media and other random acts may take place.

Tonight's performers include -
Jeff Kowalkowski -- piano, synthesizers
Andrew Morgan -- cello, sounds
David Hawkins -- guitar, synthesizers, painting
Lance Adams -- poetry
Carol Genetti -- voice, sound
Michelle Gilman -- theremin
Dan Godston -- trumpet, poetry
Bill MacKay -- guitar
Erica Mott -- movement
Adesuwa Obazee -- movement, percussion
Les Renczarski -- words
Andrew Robb -- guitar, zaphoon, words
Joel Wanek -- upright bass

↑ Index

530. Alexander Jorgensen
ALL POETS - "The Internationale became the anthem of international socialism..."
Fri 16 Feb 2007

---

jus wanna send out some love vibes - aj

http://jacketmagazine.com/31/rc-jorgensen.html

http://the-otolith.blogspot.com/ (will need to scroll down for my name)

http://fhole.blogspot.com/2006/11/alexander-jorgensen-portraits-from.html

http://www.emich.edu/studentorgs/bhouse/oldbhouse/v3n1/wadingbird.htm

---

_____
___
We won't tell. Get more on shows you hate to love
(and love to hate): Yahoo! TV's Guilty Pleasures list.
http://tv.yahoo.com/collections/265

↑ Index

531. C. A. Conrad
TOMORROW NY FUND RAISER FOR FRANK SHERLOCK ==O==O==
Fri 16 Feb 2007

FUND RAISER FOR FRANK SHERLOCK

This Saturday
3:00-4:00 pm
The Bowery Poetry Club
308 [redacted]
New York, NY
$20 suggested donation (please give what you can)

Performers include:

Anselm Berrigan
Eddie Berrigan
John Coletti
Cori Copp
Marcella Durand
Greg Fuchs
Brenda Iijima
Mark Lamoureux
Carol Mirakove

Our good friend Frank Sherlock was rushed to the hospital January 22nd with a sudden and mysterious illness which turned out to be a serious case of meningitis. He needed emergency surgery and also suffered a heart attack and kidney failure as a result of symptoms related to the illness. His friends have come together to help him at this critical time. We are reaching out to other friends and the poetry community on Frank's behalf. Frank's poetry page can be found here: _http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com_ (http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com)

For updates and other information, please visit _http://PhillySound.blogspot.com_ (http://PhillySound.blogspot.com)

THANKS SO MUCH FOR YOUR SUPPORT, AND PLEASE SPREAD THE WORD, from the Friends of Frank Sherlock

↑ Index

532. Alan Sondheim
Re: Reel Histrionic
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Using the model of silent film performance, the digital is not only the series of islands, but the performance of the journey itself. The analogic is the abject which cannot be contained, curtailed, the shores of the islands, their sad susceptibility to global warming.

At this point, and it's my depression speaking, I can't help but fore- ground everything cultural against the ravaging of the planet, the slaughter of human and wild animal populations, the furious violence of our government, governments everywhere. The silent films seem innocent but speak otherwise of innocence; the seeds of destruction are already there.

Islands have moved to Second Life, and everyone and everything is buying an island - universities, security agencies, art groups, cultural insti- tutions of all sorts. It's this I'm thinking about at the moment, because performance and gesture in SL parallels silent film in terms of phenom- enology and histrionic. Sound in SL seems third-person, an add-on; later, it will become more integrated of course, and the use of prosthetics will eliminate the need for pre-programmed gestures - first-life and second- life will appear equally analogic, equally 'smooth.' On one hand the rest of the world (what passes past for the real) will seem distant and somehow safer; on the other, the rest of the world, left to its own devices, will continue the killing beyond any reason or proportion. We are living in massacre; repertoire is symptom. What is the poetics of the dead poached elephant, with its face cut off, whose photograph appears in the current National Geographic? What is the poetics?

- Alan

On Fri, 16 Feb 2007, Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:

> Alan,
>
> I have a sensual desire to apprehend your distinction between analogic and digital. Is in the digital what is apprehended a series of islands? Is the trip to the islands, that journey, analogic? By that, things are reversed. The humdrum of our lives, the process, is our truth. What we arrive at is elusive, contemplative and only static, non sensual. Is that not sad?

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/15/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:

Reel Histrionic

In Eloquent Gestures, The Transformation of Performance Style in the Griffith Biograph films, Roberta E. Pearson describes 'histrionic' and 'verisimilar' codes of acting - a transformation from a melodramatic locus to incipient realism. She considers them in relation to 'analogical' and 'digital' communication: "Though most gestural communication systems are unsegmented and analogic, the histrionic code, with its emphasis on the isolation of gesture, does resemble segmented, digital communications such as speech. Actors deliberately struck attitudes, holding each gesture and abstracting it from the flow of motion until the audience had 'read it.'" [...] "Not only were aspiring actors told to 'rest long enough in a gesture,' they were urged to avoid excessive movement, which might detract from attitude-striking." [...] "The elimination of the small gestures brings about the physical equivalent of silence between the grand, posed gestures, resulting in the 'discrete, discontinuous elements and gaps' of digital communication." In contrast, the analogical references the uncoded real, motions and emotions of daily life.

The digital is catastrophic, fold-catastrophic; it consists of jumps between gestures or stances, between emotions and their concretion as attitude. The histrionic is dependent upon the diegetic - it as acted action of the unfolding interpreted world. The histrionic is therefore always stylized and responsive, within and up to thresholding. A threshold is constituted by an increased differentiation between gesture and the diegetic real; this itself is stylized. In other words, there are two levels of code, stylization at work: the semantic contents of individuated gestures, and the syntactic divisions between them. The gestures are individuated (not individual); as with other linguistic formation, they are constituted by difference, differance, the playing among gestures 'down the line of the unfolding of the diegetic.' So histrionic gestures bridge from one moment to another in the form <------<----<----- - they are held positions until anomaly (threshold) defers them.

Gestures are concretions operating within time's arrow, objectifying the body in a sequence of irreversible positions. The body constitutes the proffering of desire - it is held for the viewer, much as the display of the (sexualized) body operated in some elements of Weimar dance/cabaret culture. This holding is reminiscent of the still pornographic image, which is presented to the (mostly male) viewer; the viewer is aware that the histrionic is there for his or her pleasure. In the pornographic photograph, the erogenous zones function as 'strange attractors'; the diegetic is constructed by the viewer who creates a narratology resulting in masturbation, the cessation of (that) pleasure. The zones, however, are grounded in the analogical, the abject; the viewer is without the gesture of the histrionic (in both silent film and pornography).

Stylized gestures reference a repertoire, of course; they must be understood by both the actor (in re/presentation) and viewer (as indexical within the diegetic). And repertoires are always stylized, enumerations of entities that play, one way or another, within specified cultural milieus. In this sense, all repertoires are accumulations of conventions and genre; in the case of the histrionic, they are a rough set of mappings into (and constituting) the diegesis, in order that the photoplay 'move forward' for both actor and spectator. (This moving is literally self-centered within the pornographic, which plays within the (transitive and transitional) body of the viewer in both (interrelated) psychoanalytical and biophysical registers.)

(But pornography as well as photoplay is never fully reductive; defuge creates another deferral, from image to image, film to film. This is what might be considered the 'repressed of the analogical,' the referencing of the clean and proper body and life-story in relation to the messiness and decathection of everyday life. The analogical is always excessive and irreducible; digital mappings are mappings from one-to-many, mappings into the analogical (body and) real. Digital mappings are not only stylized; they are undergoing continuous transformations, splittings, decathecting, disinvestment, as the surplus of the analog has moved elsewhere. What constitutes pornography or photoplay, fashion or convention, at one synchronic instant, is constituted elsewhere at the next. The repression constructed by the diegesis itself (which leaves out so many things in the world) returns in so many different forms which become increasingly mutually unreadable.)

"The name _sensuality_ seems to be taken from the sensual movement, of which Augustine speaks, just as the name of a power is taken from its act, for instance, sight from seeing. Now the sensual movement is an appetite following sensible apprehension. For the act of the apprehensive power is not so properly called a movement as the act of appetite; since the operation of the apprehensive power is completed in the very fact that the thing apprehended is in the one that apprehends, while the operation of the appetitive power is completed in the fact that he who desires is borne towards the desirable thing. Hence it is that the operation of the apprehensive power is likened to rest; whereas the operation of the appetitive > power is rather likened to movement. Therefore by sensual movement we understand the operation of the appetitive power. Thus, sensuality is the name of the sensitive appetitive." (From Aquinas, Summa Theologica, translated by Anton C. Pegis, Introduction to St. Thomas Aquinas, Modern Library, 1948.)

>
> [of little relation: http://www.asondheim.org/aquinas.mp3]
>
> ===

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

533. jUStin!katKO
Tonight in Chicago
Fri 16 Feb 2007

hello

i want to recommend/remind those of you in Chicago to get out to Links Hall tonight for the 7th evening of the Open Port festival happening at Links Hall dance space (3435 N. Sheffield, 2nd floor). TNWK (cris cheek & Kirsten Lavers) will be performing along with Talan Memmott and Donna Rutherford - tonight - starts at 7:30pm

http://www.linkshall.org/pp-feb3.htm

- justin

↑ Index

534. susan maurer
waterworks
Fri 16 Feb 2007

just came across the www.webnik.com site for waterworks a terrific site with great work in it . take a lokk. im in it too. susan maurer

---

http://homepage.msn.com/zune?icid=hmetagline

↑ Index

535. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Regarding "zappai," Dr. Gurga has been criticized for his use of the term. Richard Gilbert, for example, has written about this in an essay at http://www.poetrylives.com/SimplyHaiku/SHv3n1/features/Gilbert_Rollingstone.html, which calls for the removal of the term from the recent Haiku Society of America definition of haiku (Gurga served on the definition committee). Indeed, though, many so-called haiku ("fake" haiku?) are more akin to what may be zappai, or more akin to senryu. Or, in many cases, they are simply short poems. Nothing wrong with that. I have not been comfortable with the term "zappai" as equivalent to pseudo-haiku, as Gurga seems to suggest, especially in the light of Gilbert's article. But the fact remains that many short poems that are not haiku exist because of haiku, and there is no useful term for them. Pseudo-haiku is useful to some degree, but is unnecessarily disparaging of poems that are perfectly fine on their own terms (separate from haiku, whethe r the author thought of them as haiku or not). Zappai, though, even if it were the correct term, is too esoteric for common use. There remains "haiku" and "not haiku," and a grey area in between. At the very least, I hope this discussion draws out some of the issues involved. Most folks won't care, but I would urge at least a little more care lest idle comments about haiku contribute to misunderstandings of the genre.

I don't think the early Edo period has had any influence on the misunderstandings of haiku in the West. Haiku's influence on Western poetry has been carefully traced. Brett Bodemer has written probably the definitive article on this subject (but it doesn't seem to be online). Charles Trumbull, the current editor of Modern Haiku, has two excellent articles that focus on early as well as more recent haiku history, online at http://www.modernhaiku.org/essays/AmHaikuMovement1.html and http://www.modernhaiku.org/essays/AmHaikuMovement2.html. I have quibbles with bits and pieces of what he says (some of his interpretations, and an occasional fact or two), but generally these are reliable and comprehensive essays.

In the interests of full disclosure, my press, Press Here, published two of Lee Gurga's haiku books (The Measure of Emptiness in 1991, and In and Out of Fog in 1997, which won first place in the Haiku Society of America's annual Merit Book Awards). Lee and I also edited and introduced The Nick of Time: Essays on Haiku Aesthetics by Paul O. Williams (he of science fiction fame) -- there's a review at http://www.modernhaiku.org/bookreviews/williams2001.html. We also co-edited the 1999 Haiku North America conference haiku anthology, Too Busy for Spring, and have collaborated on other projects.

Michael

-----Original Message-----
Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 22:21:35 -0800
From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness

Furthermore, I want to thank you for linking to that essay by Gurga. While I think i disagree with a lot of what he says, being generally skeptical of ideas like "poetic truth" etc., there's certainly a lot to think about. More importantly though, I think that in his treatment of "zappai" we have a possible resolution for the issue of "fake haiku" that's been the focus of the discussion on the list over the last couple of weeks.

Particularly his statement here: "While the term zappai is unfamiliar to most American students of haiku, I believe its adoption will provide us with a useful category to help us understand that while much of what is being written today under the name of haiku is not genuine haiku, it is still a legitimate part of the haikai tradition. Those who object to the introduction of this term might simply want to use the term "pseudo-haiku" to categorize the poems I am describing here."

makes a lot of sense to me. Certainly calling a poem like this:

Worker bees can leave,
Even drones can fly away.
The Queen is their slave.

a haiku is a mistake. But still, i don't think chuck palahniuks little doggerel would exist if haiku didn't, and the idea of seeing a seventeen syllable quip like that as part of a larger haiku tradition makes sense. I wonder if whether or not some of the american confusion about what a haiku is doesn't have something to do with what Gurga says was a popular form of poetic entertainment in late Edo Japan, particularly since the late Edo period marks the first really extensive cultural cross pollinaztion between japan and the west.

then again, i do like the idea of calling them macedonia too. no reason, of course, they can't be both.

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

536. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Reel Histrionic
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Alan,

The poetics of death, dying, as in your nightmare piece a few weeks ago.

Each of these posts is an island, separated by the passage of time/thought in between, which may only be a silence. I am very interested in the threshhold you are talking about. Can you elaborate? It appears that the threshold, the gasp/death in between is what is the most potent.

How do silence and death become a song? Is it not through silence? the gaps?

Masculin-Feminine

An argument why she should turn from him to him

.An argument why she should turn from him to him

.An argument why she should turn from him to him

e m n e

F I N I

I hope Masc/Fem has kept its visual shape. internet entropy.

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/16/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Using the model of silent film performance, the digital is not only the > series of islands, but the performance of the journey itself. The analogic > is the abject which cannot be contained, curtailed, the shores of the > islands, their sad susceptibility to global warming.
>
> At this point, and it's my depression speaking, I can't help but fore> ground everything cultural against the ravaging of the planet, the > slaughter of human and wild animal populations, the furious violence of > our government, governments everywhere. The silent films seem innocent
but > speak otherwise of innocence; the seeds of destruction are already there.

>
> Islands have moved to Second Life, and everyone and everything is buying > an island - universities, security agencies, art groups, cultural insti> tutions of all sorts. It's this I'm thinking about at the moment, because > performance and gesture in SL parallels silent film in terms of phenom> enology and histrionic. Sound in SL seems third-person, an add-on; later, > it will become more integrated of course, and the use of prosthetics will > eliminate the need for pre-programmed gestures - first-life and second-> life will appear equally analogic, equally 'smooth.' On one hand the rest > of the world (what passes past for the real) will seem distant and somehow > safer; on the other, the rest of the world, left to its own devices, will > continue the killing beyond any reason or proportion. We are living in > massacre; repertoire is symptom. What is the poetics of the dead poached > elephant, with its face cut off, whose photograph appears in the current > National Geographic? What is the poetics?
>
> - Alan
>
>
> On Fri, 16 Feb 2007, Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:
>
> > Alan,
> >
> > I have a sensual desire to apprehend your distinction between analogic
> and > > digital. Is in the digital what is apprehended a series of islands? Is
> the > > trip to the islands, that journey, analogic? By that, things are > reversed.
> > The humdrum of our lives, the process, is our truth. What we arrive at
> is > > elusive, contemplative and only static, non sensual. Is that not sad?
> >
> > Ciao,
> >
> > Murat
> >
> > On 2/15/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
> >>
> >> Reel Histrionic
> >>
> >>

> >> In Eloquent Gestures, The Transformation of Performance Style in the > >> Griffith Biograph films, Roberta E. Pearson describes 'histrionic' and > >> 'verisimilar' codes of acting - a transformation from a melodramatic > locus
> >> to incipient realism. She considers them in relation to 'analogical'
> and
> >> 'digital' communication: "Though most gestural communication systems
> are > >> unsegmented and analogic, the histrionic code, with its emphasis on the > >> isolation of gesture, does resemble segmented, digital communications > such > >> as speech. Actors deliberately struck attitudes, holding each gesture
> and > >> abstracting it from the flow of motion until the audience had 'read
> it.'"
> >> [...] "Not only were aspiring actors told to 'rest long enough in a > >> gesture,' they were urged to avoid excessive movement, which might > detract > >> from attitude-striking." [...] "The elimination of the small gestures > >> brings about the physical equivalent of silence between the grand, > posed > >> gestures, resulting in the 'discrete, discontinuous elements and gaps'
> of > >> digital communication." In contrast, the analogical references the > uncoded
> >> real, motions and emotions of daily life.
> >>
> >> The digital is catastrophic, fold-catastrophic; it consists of jumps > >> between gestures or stances, between emotions and their concretion as > >> attitude. The histrionic is dependent upon the diegetic - it as acted > >> action of the unfolding interpreted world. The histrionic is therefore > >> always stylized and responsive, within and up to thresholding. A > threshold
> >> is constituted by an increased differentiation between gesture and the > >> diegetic real; this itself is stylized. In other words, there are two > >> levels of code, stylization at work: the semantic contents of > individuated > >> gestures, and the syntactic divisions between them. The gestures are > >> individuated (not individual); as with other linguistic formation, they > >> are constituted by difference, differance, the playing among gestures
> >> 'down the line of the unfolding of the diegetic.' So histrionic > gestures

> >> bridge from one moment to another in the form <------<----<----- - they > >> are held positions until anomaly (threshold) defers them.
> >>
> >> Gestures are concretions operating within time's arrow, objectifying
> the > >> body in a sequence of irreversible positions. The body constitutes the > >> proffering of desire - it is held for the viewer, much as the display
> of > >> the (sexualized) body operated in some elements of Weimar dance/cabaret > >> culture. This holding is reminiscent of the still pornographic image, > >> which is presented to the (mostly male) viewer; the viewer is aware
> that
> >> the histrionic is there for his or her pleasure. In the pornographic > >> photograph, the erogenous zones function as 'strange attractors'; the > >> diegetic is constructed by the viewer who creates a narratology > resulting > >> in masturbation, the cessation of (that) pleasure. The zones, however,
> are > >> grounded in the analogical, the abject; the viewer is without the > gesture
> >> of the histrionic (in both silent film and pornography).
> >>
> >> Stylized gestures reference a repertoire, of course; they must be > under> >> stood by both the actor (in re/presentation) and viewer (as indexical > >> within the diegetic). And repertoires are always stylized, enumerations
> of > >> entities that play, one way or another, within specified cultural > milieus.
> >> In this sense, all repertoires are accumulations of conventions and > genre;
> >> in the case of the histrionic, they are a rough set of mappings into
> (and > >> constituting) the diegesis, in order that the photoplay 'move forward'
> for > >> both actor and spectator. (This moving is literally self-centered > within
> >> the pornographic, which plays within the (transitive and transitional) > >> body of the viewer in both (interrelated) psychoanalytical and > biophysical > >> registers.)

> >>
> >> (But pornography as well as photoplay is never fully reductive; defuge > >> creates another deferral, from image to image, film to film. This is > what > >> might be considered the 'repressed of the analogical,' the referencing
> of > >> the clean and proper body and life-story in relation to the messiness
> and > >> decathection of everyday life. The analogical is always excessive and > >> irreducible; digital mappings are mappings from one-to-many, mappings > into > >> the analogical (body and) real. Digital mappings are not only stylized;
> >> they are undergoing continuous transformations, splittings, > decathecting, > >> disinvestment, as the surplus of the analog has moved elsewhere. What > >> constitutes pornography or photoplay, fashion or convention, at one > >> synchronic instant, is constituted elsewhere at the next. The > repression > >> constructed by the diegesis itself (which leaves out so many things in
> the > >> world) returns in so many different forms which become increasingly > >> mutually unreadable.)
> >>
> >> "The name _sensuality_ seems to be taken from the sensual movement, of > >> which Augustine speaks, just as the name of a power is taken from its > act, > >> for instance, sight from seeing. Now the sensual movement is an > appetite
> >> following sensible apprehension. For the act of the apprehensive power
> is > >> not so properly called a movement as the act of appetite; since the > >> operation of the apprehensive power is completed in the very fact that
> the > >> thing apprehended is in the one that apprehends, while the operation of > >> the appetitive power is completed in the fact that he who desires is > borne > >> towards the desirable thing. Hence it is that the operation of the > appre> >> hensive power is likened to rest; whereas the operation of the > appetitive > >> power is rather likened to movement. Therefore by sensual movement we > >> understand the operation of the appetitive power. Thus, sensuality is

> the > >> name of the sensitive appetitive." (From Aquinas, Summa Theologica, > trans> >> lated by Anton C. Pegis, Introduction to St. Thomas Aquinas, Modern > >> Library, 1948.)
> >>
> >> [of little relation: http://www.asondheim.org/aquinas.mp3]
> >>
> >> ===
> >>
> >
> >
>
>
>
==========
==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check > WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, > dvds, etc.
==========
==========
>

↑ Index

537. Simon DeDeo

two essays on rhubarb

Fri 16 Feb 2007

Two end-of-week essays up on rhubarb is susan --

what we talk about when we talk about the avant garde http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/what-we-talk-about-when-we-talk-about.html

&

the Tupelo Press "Poetry Project"
http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/tupelo-press-poetry-project.html

-- Simon

↑ Index

538. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Fri 16 Feb 2007

I suppose it's possible, if one thinks of haiku as a "genre" of poetry, rather than merely a form, that pseudo-haiku, zappai, "haiku-like," and other variants could be part of the "haiku" genre. There's certainly an influence and connection. For years I used to think that haiku was merely anything I wrote in a 5-7-5-syllable pattern. But when I read the second edition of Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology (1986), where 85+ percent of the poems are not 5-7-5, it confronted me with what makes them haiku, because, for most of them, it certainly wasn't 5-7-5 (and those that were 5-7-5 were generally much older; the third edition of his book has much fewer 5-7-5 poems). So what happened for me, on reading Cor's book, was a dramatic shift -- from focusing on form to focusing on content. This was an epiphany for me, just as thinking of haiku as a genre rather than a form seems to be an epiphany for you, Jason. My epiphany made a world of difference to me, and subsequently my own haiku dramatically improved in quality (and so, too, I think, did my other poetry, because I began writing from a more internal than external place, if that makes sense, a place of trying to say something from myself rather than letting form say something for me).

What this may mean for others who write haiku (or dabble in it) could be similar. Over and over I have seen beginner haiku where the poet's focus is predominantly on form, with minimal thought being given to content, or to the other techniques that literary haiku tends to require (kigo, kireji, and so on). Or in some cases (such as most haiku by Sonia Sanchez), there's a co-opting of the form (and I do mean just the perceived "form") for personal purposes, in her case to project vernacular voice (which she does well, but it still has relatively little to do with haiku). A similar trick is done by Paul Muldoon in his haiku -- a co-opting of the form for his own needs. And by co-opting primarily just the form (and again, not necessarily the right form in English, at that), such poems tend to ignore the larger requirements of the genre. A shift to think of haiku as a genre greatly broadens not only what's possible within the genre, but also what is necessary.

So, are the following poems haiku? Some comments below. Obviously, these are personal and off-the-cuff reactions, and someone else might point out additional virtues or weaknesses (indeed, such is the nature of very short poetry that interpretation typically becames more personal as the poems get shorter).

rain on
march flush
on the student body

I don't get it. I have trouble parsing the syntax here, so to me I don't get it at all, and this has nothing to do with whether it's a haiku or not. What's a "march flush"? I could possibly see the flush of cold on the cheeks of people if it's cold, but to say the entire student body is much too diffuse. But how this connects with the poem as a whole is confusing to me, at least syntactically. Is "rain on" a declaration, like "party on!," or should I expect it to be followed by a noun or noun phrase, as in, the rain is falling on something? If the former, it seems an odd declaration. If the latter, then neither "march" nor "flush" follow logically/gramatically, so I'm confused. Nor does the middle line even interrupt the first and second line, which is apparent from the use of "on" again in the third line. So I'm merely baffled here, even while I'm stretching to try to get something. Haiku tend to rely on concrete images, so the rain and the student body (though rather genera l) are the best examples of that here. The best haiku also tend to rely on believable (authentic?) personal experience, so the oddities of syntax here take it away from my experience, or even an experience I could imagine. In fact, to some degree, it defies experience entirely, as if trying to do something else, yet what that might be still eludes me, and if it eludes readers that much, it's probably too intellectual or imaginative a construct to have the immediacy of the best haiku. If poetry is meant to communicate something (whether facts or feeling or something else), perhaps this poem doesn't work, because I'm left more confused (for no apparent reason) than with any feeling of understanding.

warm santa
ana crumples silver
paper

I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common with haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the best haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing that it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more control than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, even while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have trouble suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a "warm santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces offered here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku is whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for me, or a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he himself has a notion that make s a haiku different from, say, a novel.

a cotton lycra weave lifts
from plants it catches

I don't quite get this, either, whether haiku or not. I don't quite understand what is happening, or why it is happening. Why would a weave of something "catch" plants? And why plants? And why is it important to say that the weave is made of cotton lycra? And why would that weave then "lift" from the plants it catches? And if it caught the plants, wouldn't it take the plants with it if it lifts, and thus not lift from the plants? How can it lift from and catch the plants? And what on earth for? I don't mind something being illogical, to some degree, but I do want there still to be a discernable reason for the illogic, and that's missing here, at least for me. Haiku is oftentimes considered an unfinished poem, but this poem is TOO incomplete, and a good haiku provides just a little bit more information than this. More importantly, I don't understand what intuition or feeling I'm supposed to get from this. As a result, I feel detached from it rather than engaged by it, and engagement is a key thing that helps distinguish a haiku, or at least its effect. And of course, something may "be" a haiku, but it's a separate matter as to whether it's a weak or strong haiku.

green
colors
wax

Again, what am I supposed to feel here? There's also no clarity of location or context. It's too ambiguous or general for me to know what to do with it. I have no problem with the minimalism, though, and I immediately think of a prize-winning minimalist haiku by the late Jerry Kilbride:

mime lifting
fog

Here, by the use of the word "fog," we know we are outside, and so it's easy to see a mime in a city or park setting, like any other street performer. So, despite the minimalism, there's enough information here to ground the poem in common personal experience, and it's not obscure or excessively ambiguous. And what an interesting image to see the mime in the fog. White-faced and white-gloved, too! And then to see the mime's actions: Instead of being trapped in an invisible box or miming some other scenario, we see him physically lifting the fog, or trying to. To some, this poem is probably on the fringe of haiku. However, I would argue that it's closer to traditional haiku than they might think. Fog is a season word, for example (at least I'm pretty sure it is, without looking it up in a saijiki -- season-word almanac). And the poem has a curious property of being readable in two ways, employing what is called a kakekatoba in Japanese, or a pivot word (somewhat like the zeugm a in Western literature). One can read this as mime (period), and then you see "lifting fog" (where it's lifting by itself, perhaps to reveal that there's a mime there). Or it can be read as the mime lifting the fog, in the inimitable way of mimes everywhere. Is the mime lifting the fog, or is the fog lifting by itself in the presence of a mime? It's this oscillation between two possible readings or meanings that shows the poem to be akin to haiku, at least for me. And of course the immediate objective imagery is almost so fundamental as to be easy not to mention, yet that too is important. Kilbride's poem, in contrast to "green / colors / wax," shows what can be done with minimalism under the haiku rubric. Here, too, is a similarly minimalist poem of mine, that I think functions in ways similar to Kilbride's poem night falling

snow

I believe this offering can be read in several different ways, depending whether you put a pause or break after the first or the second line, or have no break and read it all of a piece, or perhaps even have two breaks. All variations are possible. Will such poems change the world? No, of course not. But by their sharp focus, I believe poems like this -- indeed, all the best haiku -- can make you appreciate the world around you. Rachel Carson has written about the value of noticing nature, to have a sense of wonder. Haiku, perhaps more than any other poem, embodies this sense of wonder, and seeks to share it from writer to reader.

Michael

-----Original Message-----
Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 21:51:04 -0800
From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness

hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with your talk of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some things that might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very interesting.

So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?

rain on
march flush
on the student body

warm santa
ana crumples silver
paper

a cotton lycra weave lifts
from plants it catches

green
colors
wax

i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such things really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form feels a bit epiphanic. so thanks.

oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise haiku rather than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just thought that the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

539. Patrick F. Durgin
Hannah Weiner's Open House / Pre-orders
Fri 16 Feb 2007

We're off to the presses and have a ship date of 3/14 for the forthcoming Hannah Weiner selected from Kenning Editions. For those interested in pre-ordering, see below.

Hannah Weinerâ€™s Open House, by Hannah Weiner. Edited and with an introduction by Patrick F. Durgin. POETRY/ART/PERFORMANCE ISBN 0-9767364-1-1 $14.95

Hannah Weinerâ€™s influence extends from the sixties New York avant-garde, where she was part of an unprecedented confluence of poets, performance and visual artists including Phillip Glass, Andy Warhol, Carolee Schneeman, John Perrault, David Antin, and Bernadette Mayer. Like fellow-traveler Jackson Mac Low, she became an important part of the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E movement of the 70s and 80s, and her influence can be seen today in the so-called â€œNew Narrativeâ€ work stemming from the San Francisco Bay Area. With other posthumous publications of late, her work is being discussed by scholars in feminist studies, poetics, and disability studies. But there does not yet exist a representative selection spanning her decades of poetic output. Hannah Weinerâ€™s Open House aims to remedy this with previously uncollected (and mostly never-published) work, including performance texts, early New York School influenced lyric poems, odes and remembrances to / of Mac Low and Ted Berrigan, and later â€œclair-styleâ€ works.

Hannah Weinerâ€™s Open House beckons us into a realm of poetry that bends consciousness in order to open the doors of perception. Weiner is one of the great American linguistic inventors of the last thirty years of the 20th century. She created an alchemical poetry that transforms the materials of everyday life into a dimension beyond sensory perception. The pieces collected here are as much conceptual art as sprung prose, experimental mysticism as social realism, autobiography as egoless alyric. Patrick Durgin has brought together touchstone works, some familiar and some never before published. Hannah Weinerâ€™s Open House provides the only single volume introduction to the full range of Weinerâ€™s vibrant, enthralling, and unique contribution to the poetry of the Americas. --Charles Bernstein

Hannah Weinerâ€™s syncopated patterning uncovers a conversation so thrilling that I never want it to end. As Frank Oâ€™Hara had earlier shifted the stable lyric self into a multiplicity of positions (â€œI donâ€™t know what bloodâ€™s in meâ€), Weiner began in overdrive and rocketed outward, inhabiting texts and communities with the same skill with which she herself was inhabited. â€œI was also a pillow/ case,â€ she wrote, in Spoke (1984). â€œ I was in the closet I was an iron [. . .] I was also sentence.â€ Weiner makes haunting both spooky and hilarious. Messages billboard across the page, words bleed, leap and wilt. Superscription and subscription join forces to destroy the hegemony of the poetic line, opening it up to pure energy. --Dodie Bellamy

Hannah Weinerâ€™s work, so lovingly presented here, brought her into the exploration of new ways & means for making poetry â€“ a process by which she would have left her mark under any circumstances on avant-garde poetics & practice. The still more remarkable change in her later work came, spontaneously, with the onset of an experience, an ongoing alteration of perception in which visible words entered her field of vision â€“ as cause of wonder & as â€œmessagesâ€ to be included in the poems that followed. If her art both early & late insures her standing within the twentieth-century avant-garde, it connects her as well to the experience & writings of many traditional poet-mystics (clairvoyants in her word for them & for herself). It is, when taken as a whole, an achievement without precedent or comparison among her sometimes better-known contemporaries. --Jerome Rothenberg

Poet and visionary, Hannah Weiner knit together the worlds of post New York School poetry, performance and art. In the early 70s, she went on a three-week fast and let go of everything, resurfacing with a newly visceral, and visual, relation to letters and words. Exploring the joins between art and life, language and politics, she sought to "work in poetic forms that themselves alter consciousness." For Weiner, poetry became a way to intertwine her own experience with that of others, to let more of the world into her art: "I continue writing as a collaboration with WORDS I SEE." Rich with previously unpublished works and samples of key works, Hannah Weinerâ€™s Open House restores a crucial figure to the present. --Liz Kotz

Poetics List Pre-Order Special: Send a check or carefully concealed cash in the total of $12.00 per copy of the book, payable to the editor, Patrick F. Durgin, 409 Maple Street #2, Ypsilanti MI 48198. Books ship mid-March. Shortly thereafter, they will also be available through our regular distributor, Small Press Distribution (www.spdbooks.org), and thus your local bookseller. Subscriptions to the series of trade paperbacks from Kenning Editions can be had by filling out this handy form:
http://www.kenningeditions.com/images/sub07.pdf

Also available by subscription or via SPD: Who Opens, by Jesse Seldess.
POETRY ISBN 0-9767364-0-3 $12.95

Jesse Seldess is a Chicago-based poet and literary activist currently residing in Berlin. His work has been published in numerous journals, including Chicago Review and Kenning. He was a founding curator of the acclaimed Chicago reading and performance series Discrete Series and has read his own work from New York to Paris. Antennae, the small press journal of which he is editor and publisher, is internationally recognized for publishing cutting edge music, poetry, and performance texts. Who Opens is his first full-length collection.

In Jesse Seldessâ€™ poetry, words require a certain elasticity to perform an attentive music of formation. The manner in which phrasal units arrive, depart and recombine creates a movement like a flock of birds making a wide turnâ€”there is a harmony of ever-shifting participants. The â€œwhoâ€ of Who Opens is a similarly mobile designationâ€”it is â€œwho you have continually overheardâ€ and what is itself being overheard. With great compassion and precision, this book returns language to the habitat of sound from which poetry has been away far too long. --Kerri Sonnenberg

These seven poems fit together with a perfect weave, three sets of twins (in each set, you might read the first as the sounding of themes, the second as a rhetorical raga exploring them) followed by a coda, as sweet as it is final. It is impossible not to read these poems aloud &, sounded, they are magnificent. Jesse Seldess has written a wonderful book. --Ron Silliman

KENNING EDITIONS are distributed to individuals and the trade by Small Press Distribution / www.spdbooks.org / [redacted]

↑ Index

540. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: visiting writer position
Fri 16 Feb 2007

FUND RAISER FOR FRANK SHERLOCK

This Saturday
3:00-4:00 pm
The Bowery Poetry Club
308 [redacted]
New York, NY
$20 suggested donation (please give what you can)

Performers include:

Anselm Berrigan
Eddie Berrigan
John Coletti
Cori Copp
Marcella Durand
Greg Fuchs
Brenda Iijima
Mark Lamoureux
Carol Mirakove

Our good friend Frank Sherlock was rushed to the hospital January 22nd with a sudden and mysterious illness which turned out to be a serious case of meningitis. He needed emergency surgery and also suffered a heart attack and kidney failure as a result of symptoms related to the illness. His friends have come together to help him at this critical time. We are reaching out to other friends and the poetry community on Frank's behalf. Frank's poetry page can be found here: _http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com_ (http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com <http://franksherlock.blogspot.com/>)

For updates and other information, please visit http://PhillySound.blogspot.com (http://PhillySound.blogspot.com<http://phillysound.blogspot.com/>
)

THANKS SO MUCH FOR YOUR SUPPORT, AND PLEASE SPREAD THE WORD, from the Friends of Frank Sherlock

↑ Index

541. Raymond Bianchi
Re: visiting writer position
Fri 16 Feb 2007

All

If those of us who are not in NYC or Philly want to donate what is an address that we can send a check??

Please advise

Ray

---------- Original message ----------
From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]>

> FUND RAISER FOR FRANK SHERLOCK
>
> This Saturday
> 3:00-4:00 pm
> The Bowery Poetry Club
> 308 [redacted]
> New York, NY
> $20 suggested donation (please give what you can)
>
> Performers include:
>
> Anselm Berrigan
> Eddie Berrigan
> John Coletti
> Cori Copp
> Marcella Durand
> Greg Fuchs
> Brenda Iijima
> Mark Lamoureux

> Carol Mirakove
>
> Our good friend Frank Sherlock was rushed to the hospital January 22nd with a sudden and mysterious illness which turned out to be a serious case of meningitis. He needed emergency surgery and also suffered a heart attack and kidney failure as a result of symptoms related to the illness. His friends have come together to help him at this critical time. We are reaching out to other friends and the poetry community on Frank's behalf. Frank's poetry page can be found here: _http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com_ (http://FrankSherlock.blogspot.com)
>
> For updates and other information, please visit _http://PhillySound.blogspot.com_ (http://PhillySound.blogspot.com)
>
> THANKS SO MUCH FOR YOUR SUPPORT, AND PLEASE SPREAD THE WORD, from the Friends of Frank Sherlock

↑ Index

542. Murat Nemet-Nejat

Re: Haiku as a genre

Fri 16 Feb 2007

Michael,

"a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" seems to the in terms of spirit, rather than strict form, the closest to Haiku. It is about perception. A piece of cloth is caught/snagged (during walk?) by a plant (with thorns). The continuing motion pulls the plant for a moment, but then the plant is detached. It is this moment between catching and detaching (the puill of motion and counter pull of the static) which the poem catches, which is wonderful, and it seems to me exactly in the spirit of haiku.

The chairs, in half beings buried in snow,
are pigeons

in the park.

I am enjoying your posts.

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/16/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> I suppose it's possible, if one thinks of haiku as a "genre" of poetry, > rather than merely a form, that pseudo-haiku, zappai, "haiku-like," and > other variants could be part of the "haiku" genre. There's certainly an > influence and connection. For years I used to think that haiku was merely > anything I wrote in a 5-7-5-syllable pattern. But when I read the second > edition of Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology (1986), where 85+ > percent of the poems are not 5-7-5, it confronted me with what makes them > haiku, because, for most of them, it certainly wasn't 5-7-5 (and those that > were 5-7-5 were generally much older; the third edition of his book has much > fewer 5-7-5 poems). So what happened for me, on reading Cor's book, was a > dramatic shift -- from focusing on form to focusing on content. This was an > epiphany for me, just as thinking of haiku as a genre rather than a form > seems to be an epiphany for you, Jason. My epiphany made a world of > difference to me, and subsequently my > own haiku dramatically improved in quality (and so, too, I think, did my > other poetry, because I began writing from a more internal than external > place, if that makes sense, a place of trying to say something from myself > rather than letting form say something for me).
>
> What this may mean for others who write haiku (or dabble in it) could be > similar. Over and over I have seen beginner haiku where the poet's focus is > predominantly on form, with minimal thought being given to content, or to > the other techniques that literary haiku tends to require (kigo, kireji, and > so on). Or in some cases (such as most haiku by Sonia Sanchez), there's a > co-opting of the form (and I do mean just the perceived "form") for personal > purposes, in her case to project vernacular voice (which she does well, but > it still has relatively little to do with haiku). A similar trick is done by > Paul Muldoon in his haiku -- a co-opting of the form for his own needs. And > by co-opting primarily just the form (and again, not necessarily the right > form in English, at that), such poems tend to ignore the larger requirements > of the genre. A shift to think of haiku as a genre greatly broadens not only > what's possible within the genre, but also what is necessary.
>
> So, are the following poems haiku? Some comments below. Obviously, these > are personal and off-the-cuff reactions, and someone else might point out > additional virtues or weaknesses (indeed, such is the nature of very short > poetry that interpretation typically becames more personal as the poems get > shorter).

>
> rain on
> march flush
> on the student body
>
> I don't get it. I have trouble parsing the syntax here, so to me I don't > get it at all, and this has nothing to do with whether it's a haiku or not.
> What's a "march flush"? I could possibly see the flush of cold on the cheeks > of people if it's cold, but to say the entire student body is much too > diffuse. But how this connects with the poem as a whole is confusing to me, > at least syntactically. Is "rain on" a declaration, like "party on!," or > should I expect it to be followed by a noun or noun phrase, as in, the rain > is falling on something? If the former, it seems an odd declaration. If the > latter, then neither "march" nor "flush" follow logically/gramatically, so > I'm confused. Nor does the middle line even interrupt the first and second > line, which is apparent from the use of "on" again in the third line. So I'm > merely baffled here, even while I'm stretching to try to get something.
> Haiku tend to rely on concrete images, so the rain and the student body > (though rather genera > l) are the best examples of that here. The best haiku also tend to rely on > believable (authentic?) personal experience, so the oddities of syntax here > take it away from my experience, or even an experience I could imagine. In > fact, to some degree, it defies experience entirely, as if trying to do > something else, yet what that might be still eludes me, and if it eludes > readers that much, it's probably too intellectual or imaginative a construct > to have the immediacy of the best haiku. If poetry is meant to communicate > something (whether facts or feeling or something else), perhaps this poem > doesn't work, because I'm left more confused (for no apparent reason) than > with any feeling of understanding.
>
> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing > silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm > santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common with > haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both > unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and > silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal > expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the best > haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries > additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the > season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too > confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual > haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be > attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing > (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde

> " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I > would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an > unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing that > it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more control > than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, even > while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my > disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have trouble > suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a "warm > santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is > this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces offered > here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku is > whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for me, or > a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he himself > has a notion that make > s a haiku different from, say, a novel.
>
> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> from plants it catches
>
> I don't quite get this, either, whether haiku or not. I don't quite > understand what is happening, or why it is happening. Why would a weave of > something "catch" plants? And why plants? And why is it important to say > that the weave is made of cotton lycra? And why would that weave then "lift" > from the plants it catches? And if it caught the plants, wouldn't it take > the plants with it if it lifts, and thus not lift from the plants? How can > it lift from and catch the plants? And what on earth for? I don't mind > something being illogical, to some degree, but I do want there still to be a > discernable reason for the illogic, and that's missing here, at least for > me. Haiku is oftentimes considered an unfinished poem, but this poem is TOO > incomplete, and a good haiku provides just a little bit more information > than this. More importantly, I don't understand what intuition or feeling > I'm supposed to get from this. As a result, I feel detached from it rather > than engaged by it, and > engagement is a key thing that helps distinguish a haiku, or at least its > effect. And of course, something may "be" a haiku, but it's a separate > matter as to whether it's a weak or strong haiku.

>
> green
> colors
> wax
>
> Again, what am I supposed to feel here? There's also no clarity of > location or context. It's too ambiguous or general for me to know what to do > with it. I have no problem with the minimalism, though, and I immediately > think of a prize-winning minimalist haiku by the late Jerry Kilbride:
>
> mime
> lifting > fog
>
> Here, by the use of the word "fog," we know we are outside, and so it's > easy to see a mime in a city or park setting, like any other street > performer. So, despite the minimalism, there's enough information here to > ground the poem in common personal experience, and it's not obscure or > excessively ambiguous. And what an interesting image to see the mime in the > fog. White-faced and white-gloved, too! And then to see the mime's actions:
> Instead of being trapped in an invisible box or miming some other scenario, > we see him physically lifting the fog, or trying to. To some, this poem is > probably on the fringe of haiku. However, I would argue that it's closer to > traditional haiku than they might think. Fog is a season word, for example > (at least I'm pretty sure it is, without looking it up in a saijiki -- > season-word almanac). And the poem has a curious property of being readable
> in two ways, employing what is called a kakekatoba in Japanese, or a pivot > word (somewhat like the zeugm
> a in Western literature). One can read this as mime (period), and then you > see "lifting fog" (where it's lifting by itself, perhaps to reveal that > there's a mime there). Or it can be read as the mime lifting the fog, in the > inimitable way of mimes everywhere. Is the mime lifting the fog, or is the > fog lifting by itself in the presence of a mime? It's this oscillation > between two possible readings or meanings that shows the poem to be akin
to > haiku, at least for me. And of course the immediate objective imagery is > almost so fundamental as to be easy not to mention, yet that too is > important. Kilbride's poem, in contrast to "green / colors / wax," shows > what can be done with minimalism under the haiku rubric. Here, too, is a > similarly minimalist poem of mine, that I think functions in ways similar to > Kilbride's poem

>
> night > falling > snow
>
> I believe this offering can be read in several different ways, depending > whether you put a pause or break after the first or the second line, or have > no break and read it all of a piece, or perhaps even have two breaks. All > variations are possible. Will such poems change the world? No, of course > not. But by their sharp focus, I believe poems like this -- indeed, all the > best haiku -- can make you appreciate the world around you. Rachel Carson > has written about the value of noticing nature, to have a sense of wonder.
> Haiku, perhaps more than any other poem, embodies this sense of wonder,
and
> seeks to share it from writer to reader.
>
> Michael
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 21:51:04 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
>
> hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with your > talk
> of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me > implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some > things that > might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very > interesting.
>
> So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?
>
> rain on
> march flush
> on the student body
>
> warm santa
> ana crumples silver

> paper
>
> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> from plants it catches
>
> green
> colors
> wax
>
> i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such > things > really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form feels > a bit epiphanic. so thanks.
>
> oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise haiku
> rather > than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these > threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just thought
> that
> the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed > on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security > tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web,
> free AOL Mail and more.
>

↑ Index

543. Alison Croggon
Re: Haiku as a genre
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Speaking of genre...

I've written one haiku in my life. It was for a fantasy novel, which is fun because I get to play around with forms I don't usually play with, and of course make up my own forms and traditions. This one is actually called an enryu (ancient Suderain form) and of course smarties among you will notice the syllabic count goes 7-5-7

Drunk with beauty, I tore down armfuls of blossom.
How desolate the marred sky!

--
Editor, Masthead: http://www.masthead.net.au
Blog: http://theatrenotes.blogspot.com
Home page: http://www.alisoncroggon.com

↑ Index

544. Alexander Jorgensen
OFFLIST : Oregon woman, 84, pleads guilty in boy's sex abuse case
Fri 16 Feb 2007

And remember when astronauts were among those folk who necessaily we thought we'd never question TRUST.

AJ
---

http://www.tdn.com/articles/2007/02/16/area_news/news02.txt

By Associated Press
Feb 16, 2007 - 06:31:47 am PST

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) -- An 84-year-old woman accused of attempted rape involving an 11-year-old boy in her foster care has pleaded guilty to a lesser charge after confessing to having sex with the child, prosecutors said Thursday.

Georgie Audean Buoy, of The Dalles, a Columbia River town about 90 miles east of Portland, will serve 36 months in prison, said Leslie Wolf, chief deputy district attorney for Wasco County.

Buoy originally faced six separate charges but reached a plea agreement on a single charge, Wolf said.

She noted that Buoy had faced eight years in prison on the original charges but her "age and lack of prior criminal convictions had a significant impact with the resolution of this case."

In a taped confession, Buoy admitted having sex with the boy while he was in her care in 2004, Wolf said.

"Obviously, with this case, there is going to be a lot of disbelief so we wanted make sure people knew it was a confession," Wolf said.

She said that Buoy was a longtime member of the community and her church, and volunteered at the county jail. Church officials were not immediately available for comment. Buoy's attorney, Andrew Carter, also was not immediately available.

Buoy pleaded guilty Thursday to attempted sex abuse in Wasco County Circuit Court in The Dalles. She must register as a sex offender after serving her sentence at the Coffee Creek women's prison in Wilsonville.

Buoy also must pay $5,000 to the victim, as well as up to $7,500 in restitution for counseling.

Buoy will be the oldest female inmate in the Oregon corrections system, according to the Oregon Department of Corrections.

But there is a 93-year-old male inmate in the prison system, and a 72-year-old female inmate at Coffee Creek, officials said.

District Attorney Eric Nisley said it was the only case in his memory involving sexual abuse of a boy by an elderly woman -- but it was handled like any other case.

"When an adult victimizes a child, the sex of either partner is irrelevant -- the damage is done and it's permanent," Nisley said.

Copyright 2007 Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten, or redistributed.

Food fight? Enjoy some healthy debate
in the Yahoo! Answers Food & Drink Q&A.
http://answers.yahoo.com/dir/?link=list&sid=396545367

↑ Index

545. Jennifer Karmin
Red Rover Series / Experiment #11
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Red Rover Series
{readings that play with reading}

Experiment #11:
Forth Sound Back

Featuring:
Christopher Alexander
Rheim Alkadhi
Tara Betts
Dan Godston
Elizabeth Harper
Topher Hemann
Lisa Hemminger
David Harrison Horton
Toni Asante Lightfoot
Elizabeth Marino
Eneida Martino
Ryan "Shmedly" Maynes
Wang Ping
Matthias Regan
Joris Soeding
Duane Vorhees

7pm Saturday, February 24th suggested donation $3

at LOCUS
2114 W. Grand -- Chicago, IL
(enter via the alley behind the building at Hoyne)
new home of the SpareRoom
http://www.spareroomchicago.org

Forth Sound Back features writers and artists presenting their long distance collaborations with each other. Their pieces include poems, sound collages, and other creative responses that use exchanged artifacts as their grist. Local poet and musician Dan Godston is a guest curator for this special Red Rover event.

CHRISTOPHER ALEXANDER is a poet who lives in Brooklyn. He is the co-founder of RubbaDucky Press.

RHEIM ALKADHI was born into a cross-cultural family. In Iraq, she bicycled holding a kitten for delivery to a friend who lived in a mud home. In New England, she crouched mindlessly beneath an evergreen to make mud pies. She now lives on the second floor of a wooden house along a highway barrier. Her latest work, "My Lover in Unequal Parts," can be found at Rhizome.org.

TARA BETTS is a longtime Chicago poet & educator. She now lives in New York and is a lecturer in Creative Writing at Rutgers University. This Cave Canem graduate recently received her MFA in Creative Writing from New England College. She has performed on HBO's Def Poetry Jam and the Black Family Channel's "SPOKEN." Her work appears in several publications including Essence, Bum Rush the Page, Callaloo, Gathering Ground and The Spoken Word Revolution.

DAN GODSTON teaches literature and composition at Columbia College and poetry and other art forms through several arts education organizations. His poetry and fiction have appeared in Chase Park, Versal, 580 Split, Kyoto Journal, California Quarterly, after hours, Drunken Boat, and other publications. He also performs and composes music.

ELIZABETH HARPER has lived in Chicago all her life and likes knowing her way around. Recently she read at “Lip,” The Poetry Center’s Reading Series at The Spot. Also she has read at the Polyrhythmic Arts Collective’s “Safe Smiles” Open Mic at Trace on Tuesday nights and at Monday Muse Mash-Up with Toni Asante Lightfoot. She has been featured at The New Mercury Cafe Open Mic Event hosted by Vito Carli. She has written two books of poetry, Love Songs from Psychopaths and Fairy Tales Gone Awry. Both books were designed by the artist Scott Marshall, who currently lives in New York.

TOPHER HEMANN is a poet & stonemason who lives in Ossipee, N.H.

LISA HEMMINGER is currently attending San Diego State University's MFA program. The host of the inimitable guerrilla open mike/cabaret show "Yammer" for seven years, she has been featured in articles in The Reader, The Chicago Tribune, The Chicago Sun-Times, Barfly, Third Cost Press, and Nightlines. Lisa is also the creator of the off-off-off-loop one-woman shows "Willy Nilly Philosophy, Silly," and "The Scariest Family Alive." She is the author of the chapbook collection "Colossus Taught Us" (Water of Life Press), Delivery, "The Complication Compilation," (Loki Graphics), and the working manuscript, "Paperwork."

DAVID HARRISON HORTON is an artist, curator, and writer. His paintings, sculptures, sound installations and videos have been exhibited in New York, Berlin, Paris, and San Francisco. He curated the BorderBend Intermedia Performance series in Oakland, California from 2000-01 and the Salon Salon Reading and Performance Series in Oakland in 2002. He has written art criticism for Art Papers, Art on Paper, ArtWeek, Map Magazine, and Lifepaper. David is the author of the prose poetry chapbook Pete Hoffman Days (Pinball 2003) and his creative writing has been published in such journals as Denver Quarterly, The Oregon Review, and Five Fingers Review. More about David at http://unionherald.blogspot.com/.

TONI ASANTE LIGHTFOOT is a native of Washington, DC. She was the president of the African American Writers Guild and co-founder of the Modern Urban Griots. From DC, Lightfoot moved to Trinidad and Tobago to run an artistic retreat and bed & breakfast. She moved to Chicago after a two year stint in Boston as a creative member and artistic director of Blackout Arts Collective. Lightfoot's poetry and reviews have been widely published and she is most recently the co-editor with Quraysh Ali Lansana of Dream of a Word:The Tia Chucha Press Anthology.

ELIZABETH MARINO is a published poet and university-level educator who has lived in England and traveled extensively from her home base in Chicago.

Her well-received chapbook, Debris: Poems and Memoir was released last year by Moon Journal Press. As a member of the She Laughs Collective, she contributed to the spoken word CD Elements of Life, Love and Action, produced by Mars Coulton. Publications include: Between the Heart and the Land/Entre el corazon y la tierra (MARCH/Abrazo Press), Breaking Mirrors/Raw Images (4:30 Poets), After Hours, Strong Coffee, Nit & Wit, the NAB Gallery Pamphlet Series and Envisage (U.K.). She is a graduate of the UIC Writer's Program. More info at http://voices.e-poets.net/MarinoE .

ENEIDA MARTINO is Brooklyn-based and works in the fashion industry as a design room manager. She is also a professional actor and print model. She contributed to the anti-violence anthology Souls of My Sisters, writes poetry, and is currently completing her first novel.

RYAN "SHMEDLY" MAYNES started playing piano when he was three years old and writing songs at the age of five. He has played in various bands including Floor 13, Date with Dizzy, Holliston Stops, Northern Lights (Keyboards), The Ben Vaughn Desert Classic (Bass, and Accordion), Arlo, and has been involved with many musical projects including recording with Weezer. Currently he lives in Pasadena with his wife and two sons and plays with the band The Electrolites. He's toured all over the world. The last few years he's enjoyed working with composers on such TV shows as Third Rock from the Sun, That 70's (and 80's) Show and Weeds.

WANG PING was born in Shanghai and grew up on a small island in the East China Sea. After three years of farming in a mountain village, she attended Beijing University. In 1985 she left China to study in the U.S., earning her Ph.D. from New York University. Her books include The Magic Whip, Of Flesh & Spirit, Aching for Beauty: Footbinding in China, Foreign Devil, and American Visa. Wang is also the editor and co-translator of the anthology New Generation: Poetry from China Today and co-translator of Flames by Xue Di. She now lives in St. Paul, Minnesota, and teaches creative writing at Macalester College.

MATTHIAS REGAN is a co-founder of the CAfF Collective and of Rubba Ducky Press. His books of poetry include The Most of It, CodeBookCode, Core Samples: From the Recent Debates, and Gulf War Decade (forthcoming). He advises and teaches at The University of Chicago and in the Chicago public schools through The Poetry Center's Hands on Stanzas program.

JORIS SOEDING holds a B.A. in Poetry from Columbia College Chicago. His second and most recent chapbook, Trees. Otherness. Instance., is based on the television show The X-Files. His poetry has appeared in Apocalypse, City Works, Columbia Poetry Review, Pebble Lake Review, Red River Review, Romantic Outsider (England), and Third Coast Press. He is currently a Poet-in-Residence at the Poetry Center of Chicago, an Exhibit Interpreter at the Chicago Children's Museum, and a Managing Editor for Another Chicago Magazine. He resides in the Andersonville neighborhood with his wife, Christa, and cat, Claws.

DUANE VORHEES teaches American troops in Korea on behalf of the University of Maryland. He has been actively involved in the Seoul Artist Network. The sun is shining, the peninsula is cool.

Red Rover Series is curated bi-monthly
by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin

Got ideas for reading instructions & experiments?
Email us at [redacted]

Coming up
Experiment #12 with Laura Goldstein in April Experiment #13 with Kristin Prevallet in June

___
Do you Yahoo!?
Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

546. Barry Schwabsky
Re: Haiku as a genre
Fri 16 Feb 2007

Should we not read "santa ana" as one name? Remember the Alamo!

> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> *I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common with haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the best haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing that it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more control than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, even while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have trouble suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a "warm santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces offered here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that*

> haiku is whatever a person wants to call a haiku.
> That's a bit too liberal for me, or a way of dodging
> any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he > himself has a notion that make
> s a haiku different from, say, a novel.

↑ Index

547. Holly Crawford

Re: Sound Art in a Limo, NYC Feb 23-25

Sat 17 Feb 2007

If you are in NYC next weekend.

Sound Art in a Limo!

Rest your eyes. Open your ears. Listen to art!

Artists: Louise Lawler, John Baldessari, Nic Collins, Richard Kostelanetz, Lynne Tillman, Kiko Smith, David Linton, Paul Bowles, Eleanor Antin, Judy Fiskin, Mike Kelley, Martin Kersels, Jim Shaw, Alexis Smith, Jeffery Vallance, Doug Harvey, Joe Scanlan, Pia Lindman, Richard Hermann and China Blue, Orlan and Tanger, Jane Philbrick and many others.

Refreshments and conversations are also on the menu.

In the darkness of February a limo will zip around Manhattan for a half hour and passengers will be transported by sound art. Historical and current sound art by many different artists will be heard. 24 different spaces will be created over the 3 days.

What: A white stretch limo
Where: Pier 94, Amory Art Fair, limo drop off and pick up area in front of the entrance
When: Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, February 23, 24, 25 starting at 3 pm and ending at 7pm
Time: 20- 25 minutes. Board and return to the Armory at Pier 94.

AC Institute's Sound Art in a Limo is curated by Holly Crawford Sound art from the Tellus archives/ Harvestworks, Art Issues' Sound Poems project by Gary Kornblau and Doug Harvey and many other artists.

Holly Crawford
[redacted]

A project by AC Institute, a 501-c-3

↑ Index

548. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku as a genre
Sat 17 Feb 2007

Thanks for your comments michael, I think your comments are interesting. I got some b/c comments about them from charles rossiter too, and I wanted to clarify something, and loathe as I am to do reads of my own poems, i do want to explain what i was trying to do with these because i composed them with the intention of trying to create "borderline" cases of haiku, that is, poems that fit uncomfortably within the genre. It's a sort of experiment, and one i'll probably pursue, but in response to your comments i'd like to shed a little light to see if maybe your greater experience with haiku might help me with my next foray into this kind of thing.

so, basically, the task I set myself was to compose several poems that had the following features:

1.) some reference to nature
2.) some reference to seasonality
3.) a juxtaposition of elements
4.) a sense of a single experience or immediacy

all the while remaining true to my own personal poetic commitments which involve among other things a certain ambiguity of syntax and the forcing of multivalence through the use of glued together sentence fragments and the resistance to the received form that most people know as The Complete Sentence. So I dashed off those poems to try to see just where the borders of the haiku might lie. as experiments, i'm not particularly concerned with how good they are, but i am interested in whether or not you think they're haiku, and if not, why not? I'll admit that i have a suspicion you have an so far undiscussed normative element that is in some way prescriptive and laudatory, that is, i get the impression from some of your statements that for you "haiku" is as much a name of a genre of poetry as it is a form of encomium. So there's a second question i have that i haven't yet asked: can a poem be bad (as is most certainly the case with my fourth example, by far the weakest of the four in my opinion but also one that i think is very haiku-like given my understanding of the genre) and still be a haiku? and to that point, what makes a bad haiku bad while allowing it to remain a haiku?

toward that end:

rain on
march flush
on the student body

relies on several puns, the first the fact that march is a verb, a noun, and a Month (and from that seasonality); that "the student body" can be either a group of students or the body of a particular student; and finally that flush can either mean against and adjacent to (self-referencing the juxtaposition of the outdoors of a rain on a group of marching students) and the very intimate image of a young persons body that is "flushed" for some reason.

warm santa
ana crumples silver
paper

is meant to turn on any number of things, but the primary turn is the one that you seem to have missed that while ana is a female name, and santa is a bearded guy who brings presents, 'santa ana' is the name of a kind of warm wind that happens in the autumn and spring in southern california. other things i tried to pack in there is the traditional. so this one was really playing with the idea of genre by attempting to juxtapose seasons (autumn winter spring) while the other images juxtapose age (the bearded old man with the young girl exuberantly ripping paper).

a cotton lycra weave lifts
from plants it catches

I won't comment any further on this one, Murat gave it precisely the reading i'd intended and i'd like to thank him for it, except to point out that part of the "juxtaposition" is the fact that cotton is a "natural" material derived from a low growing shrub that has sticks that could easily catch a garment, and lycra which is one of that is wholly synthetic made out of chains of polymers. both are the most widely used fibers in textiles of their respective types (synthetic or natural) and a large portion of garments worn in north america are made out a cotton/lycra fabrics. Also, while i went looking for pictures to show you, i found out that lycra is actually a brand name, and the etymology of cotton is from the arabic al qutun, which while neither here nor there poetically, might reveal more meaning if delved into more deeply.

finally the last, and I think weakest, of the four i posted. It's interesting that you mentioned mime
lifting fog

because my green
colors
wax

is a semi-procedural, aleatorical poem derived from kilbride's poem (which i like an awful lot, btw).

what i did was move all the vowels in kilbrides poem back in the mouth

so from the dipthong in mime /aI/, i got the dipthong /iu/. I couldn't think of a word for that, so i cheated and shortened it to /i/
from the /I/ in lifting, i got to the /uh/ of colors
and from the ah in fog, i got the the aaa in wax. (there really ought to be an easy way to type IPA characters).

so from there it was just a matter of fitting consonants around the vowels until I got a sequence of words that i liked. my problem with this one is that it stinks of the sort of cleverness that i generally don't like in poetry and that seems to be the stock in trade of writers like Billy Collins for example, but that was done well (thanks to the heavy injection of humanity) by Ted Berrigan, so I let this one live.

basically, it all turns on the double meaning of "grean" "colors" and "wax" if green is a noun, colors is a verb and wax is a noun, you have an image of a crayon being made. if colors is the noun, green is an adjective, and wax is the verb, you have the image of flowering plants as the green of spring spreads. alternately, you could have green and wax as nouns, and colors as the verb, but read wax as the subject and green as the object, which is an image of someone using a crayon. all of which connote young life and growth. but again, i think this one is mostly crap primarily because there isn't much of an image in it, and i generally prefer short poems with strong images that aren't as necessary in longer pieces.

ugh. even though i had a reason to do it, that's still not fun to do. sorry to inflict you all with my explanations. Basically none of these are great, but i would like to know michael, seeing how i read them from my standpoint on reading poetry, are they haiku do you think? are they the borderline cases i intended them to be? and if they aren't, do you think you could point me at some borderline cases, or perhaps some people who push at what haiku can and write haiku that might be of questionable pedigree?

also, to my earlier point, i would LOVE to see an example of something you think is a BAD haiku that is still successfully haiku.

thanks again for the comments on my four macedonia/zappai/maybe-haiku/

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> I suppose it's possible, if one thinks of haiku as a "genre" of poetry, rather than merely a form, that pseudo-haiku, zappai, "haiku-like," and other variants could be part of the "haiku" genre. There's certainly an influence and connection. For years I used to think that haiku was merely anything I wrote in a 5-7-5-syllable pattern. But when I read the second edition of Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology (1986), where 85+ percent of the poems are not 5-7-5, it confronted me with what makes them haiku, because, for most of them, it certainly wasn't 5-7-5 (and those that were 5-7-5 were generally much older; the third edition of his book has much fewer 5-7-5 poems). So what happened for me, on reading Cor's book, was a dramatic shift -- from focusing on form to focusing on content. This was an epiphany for me, just as thinking of haiku as a genre rather than a form seems to be an epiphany for you, Jason. My epiphany made a world of difference to me, and subsequently my > own haiku dramatically improved in quality (and so, too, I think, did my other poetry, because I began writing from a more internal than external place, if that makes sense, a place of trying to say something from myself rather than letting form say something for me).

>
> What this may mean for others who write haiku (or dabble in it) could be similar. Over and over I have seen beginner haiku where the poet's focus is predominantly on form, with minimal thought being given to content, or to the other techniques that literary haiku tends to require (kigo, kireji, and so on). Or in some cases (such as most haiku by Sonia Sanchez), there's a co-opting of the form (and I do mean just the perceived "form") for personal purposes, in her case to project vernacular voice (which she does well, but it still has relatively little to do with haiku). A similar trick is done by Paul Muldoon in his haiku -- a co-opting of the form for his own needs. And by co-opting primarily just the form (and again, not necessarily the right form in English, at that), such poems tend to ignore the larger requirements of the genre. A shift to think of haiku as a genre greatly broadens not only what's possible within the genre, but also what is necessary.
>
> So, are the following poems haiku? Some comments below. Obviously, these are personal and off-the-cuff reactions, and someone else might point out additional virtues or weaknesses (indeed, such is the nature of very short poetry that interpretation typically becames more personal as the poems get shorter).
>
> rain on
> march flush
> on the student body
>
> I don't get it. I have trouble parsing the syntax here, so to me I don't get it at all, and this has nothing to do with whether it's a haiku or not. What's a "march flush"? I could possibly see the flush of cold on the cheeks of people if it's cold, but to say the entire student body is much too diffuse. But how this connects with the poem as a whole is confusing to me, at least syntactically. Is "rain on" a declaration, like "party on!," or should I expect it to be followed by a noun or noun phrase, as in, the rain is falling on something? If the former, it seems an odd declaration. If the latter, then neither "march" nor "flush" follow logically/gramatically, so I'm confused. Nor does the middle line even interrupt the first and second line, which is apparent from the use of "on" again in the third line. So I'm merely baffled here, even while I'm stretching to try to get something. Haiku tend to rely on concrete images, so the rain and the student body (though rather gen era

> l) are the best examples of that here. The best haiku also tend to rely on believable (authentic?) personal experience, so the oddities of syntax here take it away from my experience, or even an experience I could imagine. In fact, to some degree, it defies experience entirely, as if trying to do something else, yet what that might be still eludes me, and if it eludes readers that much, it's probably too intellectual or imaginative a construct to have the immediacy of the best haiku. If poetry is meant to communicate something (whether facts or feeling or something else), perhaps this poem doesn't work, because I'm left more confused (for no apparent reason) than with any feeling of understanding.
>
> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common with haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the best haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-ga
rde
> " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing that it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more control than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, even while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have trouble suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a "warm santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces offered here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku is whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for me, or a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he himself has a notion that m ake

> s a haiku different from, say, a novel.
>
> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> from plants it catches
>
> I don't quite get this, either, whether haiku or not. I don't quite understand what is happening, or why it is happening. Why would a weave of something "catch" plants? And why plants? And why is it important to say that the weave is made of cotton lycra? And why would that weave then "lift" from the plants it catches? And if it caught the plants, wouldn't it take the plants with it if it lifts, and thus not lift from the plants? How can it lift from and catch the plants? And what on earth for? I don't mind something being illogical, to some degree, but I do want there still to be a discernable reason for the illogic, and that's missing here, at least for me. Haiku is oftentimes considered an unfinished poem, but this poem is TOO incomplete, and a good haiku provides just a little bit more information than this. More importantly, I don't understand what intuition or feeling I'm supposed to get from this. As a result, I feel detached from it rather than engaged by it, a nd
> engagement is a key thing that helps distinguish a haiku, or at least its effect. And of course, something may "be" a haiku, but it's a separate matter as to whether it's a weak or strong haiku.
>
> green
> colors
> wax
>
> Again, what am I supposed to feel here? There's also no clarity of location or context. It's too ambiguous or general for me to know what to do with it. I have no problem with the minimalism, though, and I immediately think of a prize-winning minimalist haiku by the late Jerry Kilbride:

>
> mime
> lifting > fog
>
> Here, by the use of the word "fog," we know we are outside, and so it's easy to see a mime in a city or park setting, like any other street performer. So, despite the minimalism, there's enough information here to ground the poem in common personal experience, and it's not obscure or excessively ambiguous. And what an interesting image to see the mime in the fog. White-faced and white-gloved, too! And then to see the mime's actions: Instead of being trapped in an invisible box or miming some other scenario, we see him physically lifting the fog, or trying to. To some, this poem is probably on the fringe of haiku. However, I would argue that it's closer to traditional haiku than they might think. Fog is a season word, for example (at least I'm pretty sure it is, without looking it up in a saijiki -- season-word almanac). And the poem has a curious property of being readable in two ways, employing what is called a kakekatoba in Japanese, or a pivot word (somewhat like the ze ugm
> a in Western literature). One can read this as mime (period), and then you see "lifting fog" (where it's lifting by itself, perhaps to reveal that there's a mime there). Or it can be read as the mime lifting the fog, in the inimitable way of mimes everywhere. Is the mime lifting the fog, or is the fog lifting by itself in the presence of a mime? It's this oscillation between two possible readings or meanings that shows the poem to be akin to haiku, at least for me. And of course the immediate objective imagery is almost so fundamental as to be easy not to mention, yet that too is important. Kilbride's poem, in contrast to "green / colors / wax," shows what can be done with minimalism under the haiku rubric. Here, too, is a similarly minimalist poem of mine, that I think functions in ways similar to Kilbride's poem
>
> night > falling > snow
>
> I believe this offering can be read in several different ways, depending whether you put a pause or break after the first or the second line, or have no break and read it all of a piece, or perhaps even have two breaks. All variations are possible. Will such poems change the world? No, of course not. But by their sharp focus, I believe poems like this -- indeed, all the best haiku -- can make you appreciate the world around you. Rachel Carson has written about the value of noticing nature, to have a sense of wonder. Haiku, perhaps more than any other poem, embodies this sense of wonder, and seeks to share it from writer to reader.

>
> Michael
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 21:51:04 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
>
> hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with your talk
> of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me > implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some things
that > might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very > interesting.
>
> So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?
>
> rain on
> march flush
> on the student body
>
> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> from plants it catches
>
> green
> colors
> wax
>
> i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such things > really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form feels > a bit epiphanic. so thanks.
>
> oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise haiku
rather > than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these > threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just thought that > the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed > on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.

> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

549. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku as a genre
Sat 17 Feb 2007

Thank you so much murat! i can't think of a better compliment than for somebody to read something i've written and to get from it what i wanted to put in it.

Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:
> Michael,
>
> "a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" seems to the in terms > of spirit, rather than strict form, the closest to Haiku. It is about > perception. A piece of cloth is caught/snagged (during walk?) by a plant > (with thorns). The continuing motion pulls the plant for a moment, but > then > the plant is detached. It is this moment between catching and detaching
> (the > puill of motion and counter pull of the static) which the poem catches, > which is wonderful, and it seems to me exactly in the spirit of haiku.
>
> The chairs, in half > beings buried in > snow,
> are > pigeons
>
> in the park.
>
>
> I am enjoying your posts.
>
> Ciao,

>
> Murat
>
> On 2/16/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>
>> I suppose it's possible, if one thinks of haiku as a "genre" of poetry,
>> rather than merely a form, that pseudo-haiku, zappai, "haiku-like," and >> other variants could be part of the "haiku" genre. There's certainly an >> influence and connection. For years I used to think that haiku was merely >> anything I wrote in a 5-7-5-syllable pattern. But when I read the second >> edition of Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology (1986), where 85+ >> percent of the poems are not 5-7-5, it confronted me with what makes them >> haiku, because, for most of them, it certainly wasn't 5-7-5 (and those
>> that >> were 5-7-5 were generally much older; the third edition of his book >> has much >> fewer 5-7-5 poems). So what happened for me, on reading Cor's book, was a >> dramatic shift -- from focusing on form to focusing on content. This >> was an
>> epiphany for me, just as thinking of haiku as a genre rather than a form >> seems to be an epiphany for you, Jason. My epiphany made a world of >> difference to me, and subsequently my >> own haiku dramatically improved in quality (and so, too, I think, did my >> other poetry, because I began writing from a more internal than external >> place, if that makes sense, a place of trying to say something from >> myself
>> rather than letting form say something for me).
>>
>> What this may mean for others who write haiku (or dabble in it) could be >> similar. Over and over I have seen beginner haiku where the poet's >> focus is >> predominantly on form, with minimal thought being given to content, or to >> the other techniques that literary haiku tends to require (kigo, >> kireji, and >> so on). Or in some cases (such as most haiku by Sonia Sanchez), there's a >> co-opting of the form (and I do mean just the perceived "form") for >> personal >> purposes, in her case to project vernacular voice (which she does >> well, but >> it still has relatively little to do with haiku). A similar trick is >> done by

>> Paul Muldoon in his haiku -- a co-opting of the form for his own >> needs. And >> by co-opting primarily just the form (and again, not necessarily the >> right
>> form in English, at that), such poems tend to ignore the larger >> requirements
>> of the genre. A shift to think of haiku as a genre greatly broadens >> not only
>> what's possible within the genre, but also what is necessary.
>>
>> So, are the following poems haiku? Some comments below. Obviously, these >> are personal and off-the-cuff reactions, and someone else might point out >> additional virtues or weaknesses (indeed, such is the nature of very >> short >> poetry that interpretation typically becames more personal as the >> poems get >> shorter).
>>
>> rain on
>> march flush
>> on the student body
>>
>> I don't get it. I have trouble parsing the syntax here, so to me I don't >> get it at all, and this has nothing to do with whether it's a haiku or >> not.
>> What's a "march flush"? I could possibly see the flush of cold on the >> cheeks
>> of people if it's cold, but to say the entire student body is much too >> diffuse. But how this connects with the poem as a whole is confusing >> to me, >> at least syntactically. Is "rain on" a declaration, like "party on!," or >> should I expect it to be followed by a noun or noun phrase, as in, the >> rain >> is falling on something? If the former, it seems an odd declaration.
>> If the >> latter, then neither "march" nor "flush" follow >> logically/gramatically, so >> I'm confused. Nor does the middle line even interrupt the first and >> second >> line, which is apparent from the use of "on" again in the third line.
>> So I'm
>> merely baffled here, even while I'm stretching to try to get something.

>> Haiku tend to rely on concrete images, so the rain and the student body >> (though rather genera >> l) are the best examples of that here. The best haiku also tend to >> rely on >> believable (authentic?) personal experience, so the oddities of syntax
>> here
>> take it away from my experience, or even an experience I could >> imagine. In >> fact, to some degree, it defies experience entirely, as if trying to do >> something else, yet what that might be still eludes me, and if it eludes >> readers that much, it's probably too intellectual or imaginative a >> construct >> to have the immediacy of the best haiku. If poetry is meant to >> communicate
>> something (whether facts or feeling or something else), perhaps this poem >> doesn't work, because I'm left more confused (for no apparent reason)
>> than
>> with any feeling of understanding.
>>
>> warm santa
>> ana crumples silver
>> paper
>>
>> I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing >> silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm >> santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common
>> with >> haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both >> unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and >> silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal >> expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the
>> best >> haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries >> additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense >> of the >> season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too >> confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the >> bilingual
>> haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be >> attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing >> (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde
>> " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I >> would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an >> unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing

>> that >> it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more >> control
>> than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, >> even >> while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my >> disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have >> trouble >> suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a
>> "warm
>> santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is >> this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces >> offered
>> here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku is >> whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for >> me, or >> a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he >> himself
>> has a notion that make >> s a haiku different from, say, a novel.
>>
>> a cotton lycra weave lifts
>> from plants it catches
>>
>> I don't quite get this, either, whether haiku or not. I don't quite >> understand what is happening, or why it is happening. Why would a >> weave of >> something "catch" plants? And why plants? And why is it important to say >> that the weave is made of cotton lycra? And why would that weave then >> "lift"
>> from the plants it catches? And if it caught the plants, wouldn't it take >> the plants with it if it lifts, and thus not lift from the plants?
>> How can
>> it lift from and catch the plants? And what on earth for? I don't mind >> something being illogical, to some degree, but I do want there still >> to be a >> discernable reason for the illogic, and that's missing here, at least for >> me. Haiku is oftentimes considered an unfinished poem, but this poem >> is TOO
>> incomplete, and a good haiku provides just a little bit more information

>> than this. More importantly, I don't understand what intuition or feeling >> I'm supposed to get from this. As a result, I feel detached from it
>> rather >> than engaged by it, and >> engagement is a key thing that helps distinguish a haiku, or at least its >> effect. And of course, something may "be" a haiku, but it's a separate >> matter as to whether it's a weak or strong haiku.
>>
>> green
>> colors
>> wax
>>
>> Again, what am I supposed to feel here? There's also no clarity of >> location or context. It's too ambiguous or general for me to know what >> to do >> with it. I have no problem with the minimalism, though, and I immediately >> think of a prize-winning minimalist haiku by the late Jerry Kilbride:
>>
>> mime
>> lifting >> fog
>>
>> Here, by the use of the word "fog," we know we are outside, and so it's >> easy to see a mime in a city or park setting, like any other street >> performer. So, despite the minimalism, there's enough information here to >> ground the poem in common personal experience, and it's not obscure or >> excessively ambiguous. And what an interesting image to see the mime >> in the >> fog. White-faced and white-gloved, too! And then to see the mime's >> actions:
>> Instead of being trapped in an invisible box or miming some other >> scenario, >> we see him physically lifting the fog, or trying to. To some, this >> poem is >> probably on the fringe of haiku. However, I would argue that it's >> closer to >> traditional haiku than they might think. Fog is a season word, for >> example
>> (at least I'm pretty sure it is, without looking it up in a saijiki -- >> season-word almanac). And the poem has a curious property of being >> readable
>> in two ways, employing what is called a kakekatoba in Japanese, or a >> pivot

>> word (somewhat like the zeugm
>> a in Western literature). One can read this as mime (period), and then
>> you
>> see "lifting fog" (where it's lifting by itself, perhaps to reveal that >> there's a mime there). Or it can be read as the mime lifting the fog,
>> in the >> inimitable way of mimes everywhere. Is the mime lifting the fog, or is
>> the >> fog lifting by itself in the presence of a mime? It's this oscillation >> between two possible readings or meanings that shows the poem to be >> akin to >> haiku, at least for me. And of course the immediate objective imagery is >> almost so fundamental as to be easy not to mention, yet that too is >> important. Kilbride's poem, in contrast to "green / colors / wax," shows >> what can be done with minimalism under the haiku rubric. Here, too, is a >> similarly minimalist poem of mine, that I think functions in ways >> similar to >> Kilbride's poem
>>
>> night >> falling >> snow
>>
>> I believe this offering can be read in several different ways, depending >> whether you put a pause or break after the first or the second line, >> or have >> no break and read it all of a piece, or perhaps even have two breaks. All >> variations are possible. Will such poems change the world? No, of course >> not. But by their sharp focus, I believe poems like this -- indeed, >> all the >> best haiku -- can make you appreciate the world around you. Rachel Carson >> has written about the value of noticing nature, to have a sense of >> wonder.
>> Haiku, perhaps more than any other poem, embodies this sense of >> wonder, and
>> seeks to share it from writer to reader.
>>
>> Michael
>>
>>
>>

>> -----Original Message-----
>> Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 21:51:04 -0800
>> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
>> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
>>
>> hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with >> your >> talk
>> of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me >> implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some >> things that >> might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very >> interesting.
>>
>> So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?
>>
>> rain on
>> march flush
>> on the student body
>>
>> warm santa
>> ana crumples silver
>> paper
>>
>> a cotton lycra weave lifts
>> from plants it catches
>>
>> green
>> colors
>> wax
>>
>> i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such >> things
>> really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form feels >> a bit epiphanic. so thanks.
>>
>> oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise haiku
>> rather >> than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these >> threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just thought
>> that
>> the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed >> on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.

>> _____
>> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and >> security
>> tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the >> web,
>> free AOL Mail and more.
>>

↑ Index

550. Alan Sondheim

Qbico 56 LP review (someone had to)

Sat 17 Feb 2007

This message is in MIME format. The first part should be readable text, while the remaining parts are likely unreadable without MIME-aware tools.

--0-1235350195-1171697399=:89

Qbico 56 LP review

Review @ http://www.volcanictongue.com/

Alan Sondheim
56 Qbico #56
LP
Â£12.99

Poet, metalinguist, cultural theorist and musician Alan Sondheim is best-loved by consumers of sub-underground fare for the stellar sides he recorded for ESP-Disk in the late-60s. But prior to that he was already active as an improviser in Rhode Island working with Ritual All 770, a multi-disciplinary group that combined brass, vocals, tranced hand percussion, bass and drums with a great up-ending attitude to avant garde sources that was reminiscent of the way that the Los Angeles Free Music Society would later use a goofy strategy of provocative art prank as a cover to allow non-initiates to work on serious formal breakthroughs. The Songs - an early collaboration between the two - was originally issued on Riverboat Records in 1967 and has remained fairly unknown outside of All 770's appearance on the legendary Nurse With Wound list that appeared in copies of that group's first album, Chance Meeting On A Dissecting Table Of A Sewing Machine And An Umbrella. 56 represents his first new LP in 35 years. Here Sondheim is solo, using guitar, alpine zither, electronics and field recordings. The guitar material orbits a bunch of singular hemispheres that would seem to locate the arc of his melodic thought somewhere between the odd, baroque constructions of Sandy Bull and the knotty dissonance of John Fahey - or even at points Derek Bailey - while the electronics and field recordings are full of subtle concentric rings of melodic suggestion and feel almost like close-ups on organic events, full of refracted slow-motion pulses and coronas of phantom tone. The whole set is perfectly assembled, with tracks short enough not to be too gruelling and long enough to reveal their full transportational properties. Indeed, I'd go so far as to say it was Sondheim's most accomplished work to date. A classic of avant extension and highly recommended.

news tip of the tongue catalogue contributor columns label events email updates contact order info secondhand & rare wholesale & distribution photos

http://www.a-musik.com/cart/catalog.php?label=739&am_id=238b...

SONDHEIM, ALAN 56 red vinyl with white, photos by alan sondheim, cover by qbico. rec. 2005/06 in ny and la. "after releasing two unique lp back in the 60's for the legendary esp label with his ritual all 770 and another one for riverboat, finally alan sondheim is back ! this is his 1st lp after nearly 35 years and here he plays guitar, alpine zither, electronics, field recording... as usual he present us an eclectic mix of fascinating sounds..." (label info)

QBICO

LP
EÂ€17.90

http://www.lifegatemusicshop.it/catalog/product_info.php?ln=fra&products_id=C68061

Recherche AvancÃ©e Recherche AvancÃ©e
SONDHEIM, ALAN - 56

22.03 Euro
Date de sortie:2007-02-01
Support:1 LP Genre:EXPERIMENTAL MUSIC Label:QBICO
DisponibilitÃ© dans:20-22 jours Barcode:
ImprimÃ© en:NL

=== Also look for FireMuseum ski/nn and The Songs, ESP recordings, etc. ===
--0-1235350195-1171697399=:89--

↑ Index

551. Alan Sondheim
Re: Reel Histrionic
Sat 17 Feb 2007

Death doesn't become a song; the song is prior to death. The threshold which lays poetics to rest perhaps, something Auschwitz clearly didn't do, is that - at least for me - of everything we might hold dear - that is, the wild, the compassionate, survival with grace. It's hard to visualize the catastrophe around the corner, when we associate catastrophe literally with sudden transformation, war, trauma - not this slow rise of tempera- ture, or the picking off of animals one by one. We react as if it were another turn or fear of the apocalypse, i.e. 'we've heard it all before' - as if this means it's not there now, we're in a permanent state of crying wolf. But animals literally on their last legs have heard it as well, time and time again, and still it comes. I'm at a loss for the poetics here, just as in I think Parmenides, Socrates was at a loss when muck, mud, was brought to the foreground in the discussion of ideal forms.

Within the digital, within the idealized digital, there is no in-between - either here/there, or 0/1, or whateverx/whatevery - the rest of the world is held at bay behind the walls of a potential well sufficient to permit communication in the small - i.e. to permit communication. One might say:

within the liminal, the digital doesn't exist -
the analogic exists only within the liminal.

Aphoristic, but accurate, perhaps nothing more needs to be said, or what else might be said might be of or within an/other register.

- Alan

On Fri, 16 Feb 2007, Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:

> Alan,
>
> The poetics of death, dying, as in your nightmare piece a few weeks ago.
>
> Each of these posts is an island, separated by the passage of time/thought in between, which may only be a silence. I am very interested in the threshhold you are talking about. Can you elaborate? It appears that the threshold, the gasp/death in between is what is the most potent.
>
> How do silence and death become a song? Is it not through silence? the gaps?
>
> Masculin-Feminine
>
> An argument why she should turn from him to him

.An argument why she should turn from him to him

.An argument why she should turn from him to him

e m n e

F I N I

I hope Masc/Fem has kept its visual shape. internet entropy.

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/16/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:

Using the model of silent film performance, the digital is not only the series of islands, but the performance of the journey itself. The analogic is the abject which cannot be contained, curtailed, the shores of the islands, their sad susceptibility to global warming.

At this point, and it's my depression speaking, I can't help but foreground everything cultural against the ravaging of the planet, the slaughter of human and wild animal populations, the furious violence of our government, governments everywhere. The silent films seem innocent but speak otherwise of innocence; the seeds of destruction are already there.

Islands have moved to Second Life, and everyone and everything is buying an island - universities, security agencies, art groups, cultural institutions of all sorts. It's this I'm thinking about at the moment, because performance and gesture in SL parallels silent film in terms of phenomenology and histrionic. Sound in SL seems third-person, an add-on; later, it will become more integrated of course, and the use of prosthetics will eliminate the need for pre-programmed gestures - first-life and second-life will appear equally analogic, equally 'smooth.' On one hand the rest of the world (what passes past for the real) will seem distant and somehow safer; on the other, the rest of the world, left to its own devices, will continue the killing beyond any reason or proportion. We are living in massacre; repertoire is symptom. What is the poetics of the dead poached elephant, with its face cut off, whose photograph appears in the current National Geographic? What is the poetics?

- Alan

> On Fri, 16 Feb 2007, Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:
>
> Alan,
>
> I have a sensual desire to apprehend your distinction between analogic and > digital. Is in the digital what is apprehended a series of islands? Is the > trip to the islands, that journey, analogic? By that, things are reversed.
> The humdrum of our lives, the process, is our truth. What we arrive at is > elusive, contemplative and only static, non sensual. Is that not sad?
>
> Ciao,
>
> Murat
>
> On 2/15/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Reel Histrionic
>
> In Eloquent Gestures, The Transformation of Performance Style in the > Griffith Biograph films, Roberta E. Pearson describes 'histrionic' and
> 'verisimilar' codes of acting - a transformation from a melodramatic locus
> to incipient realism. She considers them in relation to 'analogical' and
> 'digital' communication: "Though most gestural communication systems are > unsegmented and analogic, the histrionic code, with its emphasis on the
> isolation of gesture, does resemble segmented, digital communications such
> as speech. Actors deliberately struck attitudes, holding each gesture and > abstracting it from the flow of motion until the audience had 'read it.'"
> [...] "Not only were aspiring actors told to 'rest long enough in a > gesture,' they were urged to avoid excessive movement, which might detract
> from attitude-striking." [...] "The elimination of the small gestures
> brings about the physical equivalent of silence between the grand, posed
> gestures, resulting in the 'discrete, discontinuous elements and gaps' of
> digital communication." In contrast, the analogical references the uncoded

real, motions and emotions of daily life.

The digital is catastrophic, fold-catastrophic; it consists of jumps between gestures or stances, between emotions and their concretion as attitude. The histrionic is dependent upon the diegetic - it as acted action of the unfolding interpreted world. The histrionic is therefore always stylized and responsive, within and up to thresholding. A threshold is constituted by an increased differentiation between gesture and the diegetic real; this itself is stylized. In other words, there are two levels of code, stylization at work: the semantic contents of individuated gestures, and the syntactic divisions between them. The gestures are individuated (not individual); as with other linguistic formation, they are constituted by difference, differance, the playing among gestures 'down the line of the unfolding of the diegetic.' So histrionic gestures bridge from one moment to another in the form <------<----<----- - they are held positions until anomaly (threshold) defers them.

Gestures are concretions operating within time's arrow, objectifying the body in a sequence of irreversible positions. The body constitutes the proffering of desire - it is held for the viewer, much as the display of the (sexualized) body operated in some elements of Weimar dance/cabaret culture. This holding is reminiscent of the still pornographic image, which is presented to the (mostly male) viewer; the viewer is aware that the histrionic is there for his or her pleasure. In the pornographic photograph, the erogenous zones function as 'strange attractors'; the diegetic is constructed by the viewer who creates a narratology resulting in masturbation, the cessation of (that) pleasure. The zones, however, are grounded in the analogical, the abject; the viewer is without the gesture of the histrionic (in both silent film and pornography).

Stylized gestures reference a repertoire, of course; they must be under-stood by both the actor (in re/presentation) and viewer (as indexical within the diegetic). And repertoires are always stylized, enumerations of entities that play, one way or another, within specified cultural milieus. In this sense, all repertoires are accumulations of conventions and genre;

in the case of the histrionic, they are a rough set of mappings into (and constituting) the diegesis, in order that the photoplay 'move forward' for both actor and spectator. (This moving is literally self-centered within the pornographic, which plays within the (transitive and transitional) body of the viewer in both (interrelated) psychoanalytical and biophysical registers.)

(But pornography as well as photoplay is never fully reductive; defuge creates another deferral, from image to image, film to film. This is what might be considered the 'repressed of the analogical,' the referencing of the clean and proper body and life-story in relation to the messiness and decathection of everyday life. The analogical is always excessive and irreducible; digital mappings are mappings from one-to-many, mappings into the analogical (body and) real. Digital mappings are not only stylized; they are undergoing continuous transformations, splittings, decathecting, disinvestment, as the surplus of the analog has moved elsewhere. What constitutes pornography or photoplay, fashion or convention, at one synchronic instant, is constituted elsewhere at the next. The repression constructed by the diegesis itself (which leaves out so many things in the world) returns in so many different forms which become increasingly mutually unreadable.)

"The name _sensuality_ seems to be taken from the sensual movement, of which Augustine speaks, just as the name of a power is taken from its act, for instance, sight from seeing. Now the sensual movement is an appetite following sensible apprehension. For the act of the apprehensive power is not so properly called a movement as the act of appetite; since the operation of the apprehensive power is completed in the very fact that the thing apprehended is in the one that apprehends, while the operation of the appetitive power is completed in the fact that he who desires is borne towards the desirable thing. Hence it is that the operation of the appre> hensive power is likened to rest; whereas the operation of the appetitive

> power is rather likened to movement. Therefore by sensual movement we understand the operation of the appetitive power. Thus, sensuality is the > name of the sensitive appetitive." (From Aquinas, Summa Theologica, trans- > lated by Anton C. Pegis, Introduction to St. Thomas Aquinas, Modern Library, 1948.)
>
> [of little relation: http://www.asondheim.org/aquinas.mp3]
>
> ===
>
> ==========
> Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted].
> Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted].
> http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc.
> ==========

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

552. Aryanil Mukherjee

Re: Reel Histrionic

Sat 17 Feb 2007

> Within the digital, within the idealized digital, there is no in-between - > either here/there, or 0/1, or whateverx/whatevery - the rest of the world is held at bay behind the walls of a potential well sufficient to permit communication in the small - i.e. to permit communication. One might say:

>
> within the liminal, the digital doesn't exist -
> the analogic exists only within the liminal.

Well the way a realistic digital world works, seems to prove your corollary conversely. "Digital Data",the entire amount of digital data the world handles today, has place for every single type, you name it. It just doesn't hold integers used for performing boolean math, it houses reals, floats, doubles, unsigned numbers, complex numbers, alphanumeric and beyond.

The representation is, however, boolean like. So, it really hands out to us a grain of rice that has the village's history imprinted in miniature... (and this by the way, this is no metaphor, but hard reality....I know several village artists in India who write folklores in ink on a solitary grain of rice).....

So, can't it be read conversely ? Couldn't we see the "digital age" as one where the pearly, empty symbol suddenly weighs like iron, where the metaphor works as a singular closet used to store all the masks a mardi gras needs?

Aryanil

↑ Index

553. Dan Waber

Anaclastic alphabet, by Amira Hanafi

Sat 17 Feb 2007

As we wave goodbye to the z of Rune 10, Rose Window, by Karl Kempton (Runaway Spoon Press, 1999), it's time to wave hello to the a of the Anaclastic alphabet by Amira Hanafi.

New series starting today at:

http://www.logolalia.com/abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz/

Regards,
Dan

Submissions of artworks based around the complete sequence of the roman alphabet which can be presented a letter at a time over the course of 26 days are invited.

↑ Index

554. Tony Trigilio
Re: visiting writer position
Sat 17 Feb 2007

Ray--

One place to go for a donation address is the Frank Sherlock Emergency Fund posting last Sunday on Ron Silliman's blog.

Best,
Tony

> Date: Fri, 16 Feb 2007 22:41:14 +0000
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> Sender: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Raymond Bianchi <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: visiting writer position
> Comments: cc: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]> > Content-Type: text/plain
>
> All If those of us who are not in NYC or Philly want to donate what is > an address that we can send a check?? Please advise Ray ---------

↑ Index

555. Alan Sondheim
Re: Reel Histrionic
Sat 17 Feb 2007

On Sat, 17 Feb 2007, Aryanil Mukherjee wrote:

>> Within the digital, within the idealized digital, there is no in-between - >> either here/there, or 0/1, or whateverx/whatevery - the rest of the world >> is held at bay behind the walls of a potential well sufficient to permit >> communication in the small - i.e. to permit communication. One might say:
>>
>> within the liminal, the digital doesn't exist -
>> the analogic exists only within the liminal.
>
> Well the way a realistic digital world works, seems to prove your > corollary conversely. "Digital Data",the entire amount of digital data > the world handles today, has place for every single type, you name it.
> It just doesn't hold integers used for performing boolean math, it > houses reals, floats, doubles, unsigned numbers, complex numbers, > alphanumeric and beyond.

>
Yes, I agree of course - which is why I spoke about the ideal, not the real. When the real enters the picture, economics, protocols, tolerances, and the like are all critical.

> The representation is, however, boolean like. So, it really hands out to > us a grain of rice that has the village's history imprinted in > miniature... (and this by the way, this is no metaphor, but hard > reality....I know several village artists in India who write folklores > in ink on a solitary grain of rice).....
>
I'm not sure what you mean here. The representation isn't boolean-like; it _is_ Boolean, although the possibility of quantum computing in the future might cloud the issue (literally). On the other hand, writing systems are just that, systems, and are inherently digital in the broader sense - the sense of the repertoire/histrionic; they divvy up the real. The analogic is the liminal (above); it's the surplus, the unaccountable, uncontained; it's the 'idiocy of the real' (Rosset's phrase) and so forth.

> So, can't it be read conversely ? Couldn't we see the "digital age" as > one where the pearly, empty symbol suddenly weighs like iron, where > the metaphor works as a singular closet used to store all the masks > a mardi gras needs?
>
The symbols have always weighted like iron; they're interpreted - look at the history of national symbols or the cross, etc. I'm not sure where the leap to metaphor comes into play, except that a metaphor is dependent upon that surplus in order to make any sense. Language is clearer than languaging, parole; the dictionary reels words in, poetics spills them out. But I think the 'digital age' has many more implications than this - for example it is also this period in which the symbol becomes meaningless, in which one's world might float, as in SL, without the sense of repercussions in the real. If we think for example, even on the insipid level of underpaid labor producing these machines, keyboards, routers, and so forth - what do we do about it? We are somewhat safe in SL which is why the cases say of child pornography that do come up, rattle the bones.

In other words, I think that first symbols always already were/are digital - the Unicode book is interesting in this regard; second, that their employment by organisms implies analogical surpluses; third, the digital as ideal/binary eliminates the liminal (which is found elsewhere, one might say the return of the repressed); and fourth, the background to all of this is the increased abjection of the planetary environment, cultural and natural, pollution and organism, if these distinctions still have any meaning at all.

Alan

> Aryanil

========== Work on YouTube, blog at http://nikuko.blogspot.com . Tel [redacted]. Webpage directory http://www.asondheim.org . Email: [redacted]. http://clc.as.wvu.edu:8080/clc/Members/sondheim for theory; also check WVU Zwiki, Google for recent. Write for info on books, cds, performance, dvds, etc. ==========

↑ Index

556. Murat Nemet-Nejat

Re: Haiku as a genre

Sat 17 Feb 2007

I am very happy about the connection also.

Murat

P.S. In his last book, What He Ought To Know, Ed Foster has a poem dedicated to me, entitled "The Lady Dressed in Lycra and What She Did To Him." At that time I did not know what lycra was, and Ed had to explain it to me (material for a bathing suit). Now I think I know enough, if not more. Ciao.

On 2/17/07, Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Thank you so much murat! i can't think of a better compliment than for > somebody to read something i've written and to get from it what i wanted to > put > in it.
>
> Murat Nemet-Nejat wrote:
> > Michael,
> >
> > "a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" seems to the in > terms
> > of spirit, rather than strict form, the closest to Haiku. It is about > > perception. A piece of cloth is caught/snagged (during walk?) by a plant > > (with thorns). The continuing motion pulls the plant for a moment, but > > then > > the plant is detached. It is this moment between catching and detaching

> > (the > > puill of motion and counter pull of the static) which the poem catches, > > which is wonderful, and it seems to me exactly in the spirit of haiku.
> >
> > The chairs, in half > > beings buried in
> > snow,
> > are > > pigeons
> >
> > in the park.
> >
> >
> > I am enjoying your posts.
> >
> > Ciao,
> >
> > Murat
> >
> > On 2/16/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
> >
> >>
> >> I suppose it's possible, if one thinks of haiku as a "genre" of poetry,
> >> rather than merely a form, that pseudo-haiku, zappai, "haiku-like," and > >> other variants could be part of the "haiku" genre. There's certainly an > >> influence and connection. For years I used to think that haiku was > merely > >> anything I wrote in a 5-7-5-syllable pattern. But when I read the > second > >> edition of Cor van den Heuvel's The Haiku Anthology (1986), where 85+ > >> percent of the poems are not 5-7-5, it confronted me with what makes > them
> >> haiku, because, for most of them, it certainly wasn't 5-7-5 (and those
> >> that > >> were 5-7-5 were generally much older; the third edition of his book > >> has much > >> fewer 5-7-5 poems). So what happened for me, on reading Cor's book, was
> a > >> dramatic shift -- from focusing on form to focusing on content. This > >> was an

> >> epiphany for me, just as thinking of haiku as a genre rather than a > form > >> seems to be an epiphany for you, Jason. My epiphany made a world of > >> difference to me, and subsequently my > >> own haiku dramatically improved in quality (and so, too, I think, did > my > >> other poetry, because I began writing from a more internal than > external > >> place, if that makes sense, a place of trying to say something from > >> myself
> >> rather than letting form say something for me).
> >>
> >> What this may mean for others who write haiku (or dabble in it) could > be > >> similar. Over and over I have seen beginner haiku where the poet's > >> focus is > >> predominantly on form, with minimal thought being given to content, or
> to
> >> the other techniques that literary haiku tends to require (kigo, > >> kireji, and > >> so on). Or in some cases (such as most haiku by Sonia Sanchez), there's > a > >> co-opting of the form (and I do mean just the perceived "form") for > >> personal > >> purposes, in her case to project vernacular voice (which she does > >> well, but > >> it still has relatively little to do with haiku). A similar trick is > >> done by
> >> Paul Muldoon in his haiku -- a co-opting of the form for his own > >> needs. And > >> by co-opting primarily just the form (and again, not necessarily the > >> right
> >> form in English, at that), such poems tend to ignore the larger > >> requirements
> >> of the genre. A shift to think of haiku as a genre greatly broadens > >> not only
> >> what's possible within the genre, but also what is necessary.
> >>
> >> So, are the following poems haiku? Some comments below. Obviously, > these > >> are personal and off-the-cuff reactions, and someone else might point > out

> >> additional virtues or weaknesses (indeed, such is the nature of very > >> short > >> poetry that interpretation typically becames more personal as the > >> poems get > >> shorter).
> >>
> >> rain on
> >> march flush
> >> on the student body
> >>
> >> I don't get it. I have trouble parsing the syntax here, so to me I > don't > >> get it at all, and this has nothing to do with whether it's a haiku or > >> not.
> >> What's a "march flush"? I could possibly see the flush of cold on the > >> cheeks
> >> of people if it's cold, but to say the entire student body is much too > >> diffuse. But how this connects with the poem as a whole is confusing > >> to me, > >> at least syntactically. Is "rain on" a declaration, like "party on!,"
> or > >> should I expect it to be followed by a noun or noun phrase, as in, the > >> rain
> >> is falling on something? If the former, it seems an odd declaration.
> >> If the > >> latter, then neither "march" nor "flush" follow
> >> logically/gramatically, so > >> I'm confused. Nor does the middle line even interrupt the first and > >> second > >> line, which is apparent from the use of "on" again in the third line.
> >> So I'm
> >> merely baffled here, even while I'm stretching to try to get something.
> >> Haiku tend to rely on concrete images, so the rain and the student body > >> (though rather genera > >> l) are the best examples of that here. The best haiku also tend to > >> rely on > >> believable (authentic?) personal experience, so the oddities of syntax
> >> here
> >> take it away from my experience, or even an experience I could > >> imagine. In > >> fact, to some degree, it defies experience entirely, as if trying to do > >> something else, yet what that might be still eludes me, and if it > eludes

> >> readers that much, it's probably too intellectual or imaginative a > >> construct > >> to have the immediacy of the best haiku. If poetry is meant to > >> communicate > >> something (whether facts or feeling or something else), perhaps this > poem
> >> doesn't work, because I'm left more confused (for no apparent reason)
> >> than
> >> with any feeling of understanding.
> >>
> >> warm santa
> >> ana crumples silver
> >> paper
> >>
> >> I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing > >> silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm > >> santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common
> >> with > >> haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both > >> unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and
> and > >> silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal > >> expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the
> >> best > >> haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries > >> additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense > >> of the > >> season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit > too
> >> confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the > >> bilingual
> >> haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might > be > >> attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing > >> (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde
> >> " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I > >> would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an > >> unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing
> >> that
> >> it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more > >> control

> >> than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, > >> even > >> while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend > my > >> disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have > >> trouble
> >> suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a
> >> "warm
> >> santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.)
> Is
> >> this a haiku? I think it comes closer than any of the other pieces > >> offered > >> here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku
> is > >> whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for > >> me, or
> >> a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he > >> himself
> >> has a notion that make
> >> s a haiku different from, say, a novel.
> >>
> >> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> >> from plants it catches
> >>
> >> I don't quite get this, either, whether haiku or not. I don't quite > >> understand what is happening, or why it is happening. Why would a > >> weave of > >> something "catch" plants? And why plants? And why is it important to > say > >> that the weave is made of cotton lycra? And why would that weave then
> >> "lift"
> >> from the plants it catches? And if it caught the plants, wouldn't it > take > >> the plants with it if it lifts, and thus not lift from the plants?
> >> How can > >> it lift from and catch the plants? And what on earth for? I don't > mind
> >> something being illogical, to some degree, but I do want there still > >> to be a > >> discernable reason for the illogic, and that's missing here, at least
> for > >> me. Haiku is oftentimes considered an unfinished poem, but this poem

> >> is TOO
> >> incomplete, and a good haiku provides just a little bit more > information > >> than this. More importantly, I don't understand what intuition or > feeling
> >> I'm supposed to get from this. As a result, I feel detached from it
> >> rather > >> than engaged by it, and > >> engagement is a key thing that helps distinguish a haiku, or at least
> its > >> effect. And of course, something may "be" a haiku, but it's a separate > >> matter as to whether it's a weak or strong haiku.
> >>
> >> green
> >> colors
> >> wax
> >>
> >> Again, what am I supposed to feel here? There's also no clarity of > >> location or context. It's too ambiguous or general for me to know what > >> to do > >> with it. I have no problem with the minimalism, though, and I > immediately > >> think of a prize-winning minimalist haiku by the late Jerry Kilbride:
> >>
> >> mime
> >> lifting > >> fog
> >>
> >> Here, by the use of the word "fog," we know we are outside, and so it's > >> easy to see a mime in a city or park setting, like any other street > >> performer. So, despite the minimalism, there's enough information here
> to > >> ground the poem in common personal experience, and it's not obscure or > >> excessively ambiguous. And what an interesting image to see the mime
> >> in the > >> fog. White-faced and white-gloved, too! And then to see the mime's > >> actions:
> >> Instead of being trapped in an invisible box or miming some other > >> scenario,
> >> we see him physically lifting the fog, or trying to. To some, this > >> poem is > >> probably on the fringe of haiku. However, I would argue that it's > >> closer to > >> traditional haiku than they might think. Fog is a season word, for > >> example

> >> (at least I'm pretty sure it is, without looking it up in a saijiki -- > >> season-word almanac). And the poem has a curious property of being > >> readable
> >> in two ways, employing what is called a kakekatoba in Japanese, or a > >> pivot
> >> word (somewhat like the zeugm
> >> a in Western literature). One can read this as mime (period), and then
> >> you
> >> see "lifting fog" (where it's lifting by itself, perhaps to reveal that > >> there's a mime there). Or it can be read as the mime lifting the fog,
> >> in the > >> inimitable way of mimes everywhere. Is the mime lifting the fog, or is
> >> the > >> fog lifting by itself in the presence of a mime? It's this oscillation > >> between two possible readings or meanings that shows the poem to be > >> akin to > >> haiku, at least for me. And of course the immediate objective imagery
> is > >> almost so fundamental as to be easy not to mention, yet that too is > >> important. Kilbride's poem, in contrast to "green / colors / wax," > shows > >> what can be done with minimalism under the haiku rubric. Here, too, is
> a > >> similarly minimalist poem of mine, that I think functions in ways > >> similar to > >> Kilbride's poem
> >>
> >> night > >> falling > >> snow
> >>
> >> I believe this offering can be read in several different ways, > depending > >> whether you put a pause or break after the first or the second line,
> >> or have > >> no break and read it all of a piece, or perhaps even have two breaks.
> All > >> variations are possible. Will such poems change the world? No, of > course

> >> not. But by their sharp focus, I believe poems like this -- indeed, > >> all the > >> best haiku -- can make you appreciate the world around you. Rachel > Carson > >> has written about the value of noticing nature, to have a sense of > >> wonder.
> >> Haiku, perhaps more than any other poem, embodies this sense of > >> wonder, and
> >> seeks to share it from writer to reader.
> >>
> >> Michael
> >>
> >>
> >>
> >> -----Original Message-----
> >> Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 21:51:04 -0800
> >> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> >> Subject: Re: Haiku dumbness / snobbishness
> >>
> >> hrm, i want to understand. you're getting close to me getting it with > >> your > >> talk
> >> of genre. but still you're a little too vague for me. genre to me > >> implies that some things can be more haiku like, that there are some > >> things that > >> might be borderline cases of haiku, and THAT strikes me as very > >> interesting.
> >>
> >> So I'm curious, are any of these four things haiku?
> >>
> >> rain on
> >> march flush
> >> on the student body
> >>
> >> warm santa
> >> ana crumples silver
> >> paper
> >>
> >> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> >> from plants it catches
> >>
> >> green

> >> colors
> >> wax
> >>
> >> i'd like to know what you would consider a fringe case, because such > >> things > >> really interest me and thinking of haiku as genre rather than form > feels
> >> a bit epiphanic. so thanks.
> >>
> >> oh, and as for the point about making a concerted effort to praise
> haiku
> >> rather > >> than say what it isn't, i was referring more to comments in these > >> threads. I'm sure there are all manner of excellent books, i just > thought
> >> that
> >> the tone of the conversation on the poetics list seemed overly focussed > >> on why some things aren't haiku rather than why other things are.
> >>
> _____
> >> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and > >> security
> >> tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the > >> web,
> >> free AOL Mail and more.
> >>
>

↑ Index

557. Barrett Watten
Publication of THE GRAND PIANO, PART 2
Sat 17 Feb 2007

Publication announcement:

THE GRAND PIANO, PART 2

An Experiment in Collective Autobiography, San Francisco, 1975-1980, by Barrett Watten, Ted Pearson, Rae Armantrout, Steve Benson, Kit Robinson, Tom Mandel, Ron Silliman, Carla Harryman, Lyn Hejinian, and Bob Perelman

http://www.english.wayne.edu/fac%5Fpages/ewatten/books/cover%20gp2.html

"Since the 1970s no literary group has made a more articulate contribution to thinking and practicing its groupness than the Language writers. Rejecting the vertical organization of the Poundian or Bretonian circle-with its singular genius issuing directives from its center-they instead developed a horizontal structure in which new terms, tones, and intertexts (and new versions of the group's history itself) can emerge from, and be engaged by, any member." -- Lytle Shaw

THE GRAND PIANO is an on-going experiment in collective autobiography by ten writers identified with Language Poetry in San Francisco. It takes its name from a coffeehouse at 1607 Haight Street, where from 1976-79 the authors took part in a reading and performance series. The writing project was undertaken as an online collaboration, first via an interactive web site and later through a listserv. When completed, THE GRAND PIANO will comprise ten parts, in each of which the ten authors will appear in a difference sequence.

Parts 1 and 2 are $12.95 each or $20.00 for both. Serial publication began in November 2006; subsequent volumes to appear at three-month intervals. Subscription to the entire series of ten volumes is now available for $90 directly from Lyn Hejinian, 2639 Russell Street, Berkeley, CA 94705. For an order form:

http://www.english.wayne.edu/fac%5Fpages/ewatten/pdfs/gp2order.pdf (color)
http://www.english.wayne.edu/fac%5Fpages/ewatten/pdfs/gp2orderbw.pdf (black and white)

Designed and published by Barrett Watten, Mode A/This Press (Detroit), 6885 Cathedral Drive, Bloomfield Twp., MI 48301. Distributed (individual orders and trade) by Small Press Distribution, Inc., 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley, CA 94710-1408. ISBN 978-0-9790198-0-7 (part 1, 80 pp.), 978-0-9790198-1-4 (part 2, 96 pp.), wrappers.

↑ Index

558. Christine Hamm
Reviews of my work
Sat 17 Feb 2007

I've had an embarrassment of riches this week:

Review of The Transparent Dinner on Horseless Press: here.
And a rather visceral review of The Animal Husband: here.

Christine Hamm

_____

www.christinehamm.org

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
http://tv.yahoo.com/

↑ Index

559. Catherine Daly

Fwd: POETRY SUPER HIGHWAY less than 2 weeks left to join the Great Poetry Exchange

Sat 17 Feb 2007

I've posted this here in years past...

There are less then 2 weeks left to join in the 6th Annual Great Poetry Exchange! <http://poetrysuperhighway.com/pshgpe.html> Pledge to send your book to another randomly selected poet, and you will in turn receive a book from another participant. 81 poets so far have signed on to send a book to someone, get a book from someone else. See the entire list of books pledged so far by clicking on "Great Poetry Exchange<http://poetrysuperhighway.com/pshgpe.html>"
(as well as the participation guidelines<http://poetrysuperhighway.com/pshgpe.html>)
from the main PSH menu! <http://poetrysuperhighway.com/PoetLinks.html>

http://www.poetrysuperhighway.com

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

560. Gabriel Gudding

Re: the politics of the pocket & the watch

Sat 17 Feb 2007

Gloria, thanks for the heads-up on Kinkaid's disquisition in the context of British attitudes toward timing "time" and about the watch on tourists in Antigua. Stephen and Mark, too, thx also for the historical stuff re pockets and pocketbooks and the anecdotal stuff about refusing the wristwatch in the '60s. Yr comment, Mark, about choosing the cellphone as chronometer is consonant with this: http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/17189064/from/ET/

Have been thinking about Jacques Ellul. As a tool in the Taylorist project, in colonialism, in the disenchantment of the workplace, the watch has a distinct history. My sense, however, is that the clock, the watch, began as a (in the parlance of Jacques Ellul) magical technology. Its initial purpose was not to call us to work or coordinate artillery attacks but to represent the heavens, our time-place in them, under them. As Ellul warns, tho: wherever there is a spiritual technique, there is the "technique of Homo faber," and the latter always wins out-- because the latter is about progress and the former concerns "endless beginnings."

I've been musing about Nietzsche's insistence on "untimeliness," which is something I'm down with. There is a curious way in which the mechanical analog watch (dependent on winding, either by hand or rotor that turns iwth the movement of the wearer's body) is for me precisely about untimeliness and Ellul's conception of spiritual technique as beginningbeginningbeginning without ending. There is a way, in other words, where the resistance to the standardization of time falls upon wristwatches and pocketwatches in opposition to church bells, the square's clocktower, and, now, the rise of U.S. Govt Official Atomic Time via the cellphone.

The analog watch retains somehow the grosser features of its birth as a small celestial theater, arising from the astrolabe. When I realized that the sweep direction of a clock's hands basically follows, arising from, the sweep of a shadow on a sundial, my world changed in this little but big way.

Too (and finally) I feel Alan's worry that the digital clock is left out of this. I like the analog's closeness to the astrolabe, so just can't feel,Alan, that deep tone of appreciation for a digital watch (tho i recall fondly my old Casio from the early geek highschooly days.

You might love these links, Alan:

http://www.network54.com/Forum/78440/message/1170619630/

http://www.larrybiggs.net/scwf/index.php?mod=103&action=0&id=1170546372

- Gabe

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University

Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

↑ Index

561. amy king
MIPO -- Friday, Feb. 23rd @ 7 P.M.
Sat 17 Feb 2007

MiPOesias presents

~~~ JENNIFER L. KNOX, SINA QUEYRAS, and ROBERT BOHM ~~~

Stain Bar, Brooklyn, NYC
February 23, 2007 @ 7 P.M.

~~~~~~~~~~

JENNIFER L. KNOX was born and raised in Lancaster, California, where absolutely anything can be made into a bong. Her work is featured in Best American Poetry 2006, and her book of poems, A Gringo Like Me, is available from Softskull Press. http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/knox_jennifer.htm

SINA QUEYRAS'most recent collection of poetry, Lemon Hound, was published by Coach House Books in 2006. Last year she edited Open Field: 30 Contemporary Canadian Poets. She is contributing editor to Drunken Boat and co-curator of Belladonna reading series. This year she is visiting professor at Haverford College. Next year she is writer-in-residence at the University of Calgary. She wears a cape whenever possible and keeps a blog: http://lemonhound.blogspot.com.
http://www.mipoesias.com/Poetry/queyras_sina.html

ROBERT BOHM is a poet and culture writer. He was born in Queens, NY. His new chapbook, Uz Um War Moan Ode, will be published in 2006 by Pudding House Press. His other credits include two books, another chapbook and work published in a variety of print and online publications.
http://www.mipoesias.com/September2003/bohm.htm

~~~~~~~~~

STAIN BAR
766 Grand Street
Brooklyn, NY 11211
(L train to Grand Street Stop, walk 1 block west)
718/[redacted]

~~~~~~~~~

Hope you'll stop by!

http://miporeadingseries2007.blogspot.com/

~~~~~~~~

Now that's room service! Choose from over 150,000 hotels in 45,000 destinations on Yahoo! Travel to find your fit.

↑ Index

562. Pierre Joris
Recent Nomadics Posts
Sun 18 Feb 2007

Check out these latest posts on Nomadics (http://pjoris.blogspot.com):

"The Trostkyists of Islam" Hannah Weiner’s Open House
Selling Out to Fashion
Emmett Williams, 1925-2007
Peyrafitte & Joris at the Linda Keep Earth cool with Moon dust
Ilya Kormiltsev (1959-2007)

Enjoy. & if I may be so bold as to suggest that comments are welcome — especially in the comments' boxes, rather than just backchannel to me — that way the public sphere is kept in play. Thanks,

Pierre

==========
"Fascism should more properly
be called corporatism,since it is the merger of state and corporate power."
— Benito Mussolini
==========
Pierre Joris
244 Elm Street
Albany NY 12202
h: [redacted]
c: [redacted]
o: 518 442 40 71
Euro cell: (011 33) 6 75 43 57 10
email: [redacted]
http://pierrejoris.com
~~~~~~~~

Nomadics blog: http://pjoris.blogspot.com
==========

↑ Index

563. Dan Coffey
another Susan Howe/David Grubbs cd collaboration!
Sun 18 Feb 2007

I still haven't gotten my head around the last one! Here's some info on it, from the Forced Exposure new releases weekly email:

BLUE 017CD

GRUBBS/SUSAN HOWE, DAVID: Souls of the Labadie Tract CD (BLUE 017CD) 13.50 "Souls of the Labadie Tract is the second collaboration between musician David Grubbs and poet Susan Howe. Susan Howe's and David Grubbs' collaboration is largely without precedent. (Cage and Tudor? Robert Creeley and Steve Lacy?) Souls of the Labadie Tract takes as its starting point a substantial new poem by Howe that will appear in a collection bearing the same title, to be published in 2007 by New Directions. The Labadists were a Utopian Quietest sect that moved from the Netherlands to Cecil County, Maryland in 1684. The community dissolved in 1722. All that was to remain of it was the 'labadie poplar.' Thiefth, beginning with its title, is a glittering assemblage of shards. By contrast, Souls of the Labadie Tract sustains a sound world of buzzing reeds and electronics. After a prose introduction, individual poems occur as regularly as grave markers. Howe's reading is a marvel of hushed intensity. Grubbs' chosen instruments for this piece include two species of khaen, Laotian free-reed mouth organs that at signal moments fluoresce into a full ensemble. A distant VCS3 synthesizer slowly moves to the foreground with what becomes a full-circuited roar.

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

564. mIEKAL aND
Bon Voy age Emmett!
Sun 18 Feb 2007

Bon Voy age Emmett!

after emmett
http://joglars.org/afteremmett/bonvoyage.html

a dispersion of ninetiles

↑ Index

565. Alan Sondheim
old text illustrated by its future anterior
Sun 18 Feb 2007

(apropos Gudding + SL repertoire discuss) SL Alan Dojoji

old text illustrated by its future anterior

---

trams:nalA:refinneJ:6:09711:esruoc fo:nalA:trams:ylgu:esnetni:nwod Jennifer writes this; she adds nothing to my security. She is thinking about space and about tragedy. She decides that length has no absolute meaning in kyberspace. That leaves topology. She decides there are bendings and gatherings and loosenings and disappearances but pretty much multiply-connected graphs. She says people don't realize how _exact_ everything is here, because their emotions are in turmoil. She says the _exactness_ is critical, turning everyday life inside-out or upside-down. Tragedy is always a flaw that floods and flows, and there's usually a deed, she reassured herself. She'd read Aristotle and beyond. She was writing this in an editor, knowing the system clock was just a keystroke or two away. That the time would always be there for her. Then there were the programs, email, voices coming in out of the dark. She felt like a spy who came in from the cold, because the cold was exact. She looked at her hand for a long time. She looked again and again. tnaillirb:refinneJ:nalA:1:54921:esruoc fo:refinneJ:krad:esnetni:tnaillirb

http://www.asondheim.org/homing.mov

↑ Index

566. Ruth Lepson
FW: haha (in norwegian)
Sun 18 Feb 2007

------ Forwarded Message
From: Lucy Clark <[redacted]>
Date: Sat, 17 Feb 2007 14:38:41 -0500
To: Ruth Lepson <[redacted]> Subject: haha (in norwegian)

>> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eRjVeRbhtRU
<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eRjVeRbhtRU>

↑ Index

567. amy king
O VALENTINE, O VIOLENCE -- NEW WORK UP
Sun 18 Feb 2007

MiPOesias presents

MARTHE REED – " a bride/a dark-eyed"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/reed_marthe.htm

TAO LIN – "alone in this room, i'm hungry, i miss you"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/lin_tao.htm

CHRIS CRITTENDEN – "egg-laden heart,/each pump breaks a shell"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/crittenden_chris.htm

CA CONRAD – "We kissed my/singing radio like/ this and this"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/conrad_ca.htm

ERIN BERTRAM – "I have a tendency to fall in love with my friends."
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/bertram_erin.htm

BLAKE BUTLER – "1. In the apartment next door, they're having sex."
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/butler_blake.htm

ANDREW DEMCAK – "Our sperm medicinally coffined."
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/demcak_andrew.htm

ERIK SWEET – "A rewinding of love greatly misappropriated"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/sweet_erik.htm

TODD BURRITT – "The bent staples mean somebody was frustrated."
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/burritt_todd.htm

MICHAEL PARKER REVIEWS "WANTON TEXTILES"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/parker_michael_wantontextitles.htm

ELISA GABBERT & KATHLEEN ROONEY – "I have a bruise on my thigh that looks like a galaxy" http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/gabbert_rooney.htm

ALEXANDER DICKOW – "Puppydog bees/and birds with trees"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/dickow_alexander.htm

GINA ABELKOP – "In her sharp bob she/apes providence, think"
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/abelkop_gina.htm

JOHN COTTER & SHAFER HALL – "Palomino, Palomino, never give your goodies up" http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/cotter_hall.htm

TARASHEA NESBIT – "Moth orchids. Desire."
http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/nesbit_tarashea.htm

~~~~~~~~~~~~~

http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/
http://www.mipoesias.com
http://miporeadingseries2007.blogspot.com/

~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Never miss an email again!
Yahoo! Toolbar alerts you the instant new Mail arrives. Check it out.

↑ Index

568. Jim Andrews
Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction"
Sun 18 Feb 2007

---

http://hyperfiction.blogs.liberation.fr is a blog by Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction".

ja
http://vispo.com

↑ Index

569. Daniel Godston
$200 million: The Poetry Foundation in The New Yorker
Sun 18 Feb 2007

THE MONEYED MUSE

What can two hundred million dollars do for poetry?

by DANA GOODYEAR

Issue of 2007-02-19
Posted 2007-02-12

Michael Lewis, a journalist and the author of “Liar’s Poker” and “Moneyball,” appeared in the magazine Poetry for the first time in the summer of 2005, with a satirical piece called “How to Make a Killing from Poetry: A Six Point Plan of Attack.” It offered its advice in bullet-point businessese: “1) Think Positive. Nobody likes a whiner. And poets always seem to be harping on the negative. . . . 2) Take Your New Positive Attitude and Direct It Towards the Paying Customer. The customer is your friend. Your typical poem really doesn’t seem to pay much attention to the living retail customer. . . . 3) Think About Your Core Message. Your average reader might like a bit of fancy writing, but at the end of the day he will always ask himself: what’s my takeaway?” So it was slightly odd, and unintentionally comical, when, last September, Poetry published a manifesto, “American Poetry in the New Century,” recapitulating Lewis’s lampoon as a serious position. The author was John Barr, a former Wall Street executive and the president of the Poetry Foundation, an entity created after the Indianapolis heiress Ruth Lilly gave some two hundred million dollars to Poetry, in 2002. The foundation, which “exists to discover and celebrate the best poetry and to place it before the largest possible audience,” also publishes the magazine.

In the essay, Barr declared, “American poetry is ready for something new because our poets have been writing in the same way for a long time now. There is fatigue, something stagnant about the poetry being written today.” Poetry, largely absent from public life—from classrooms, bookstores, newspapers, mainstream media—“has a morale problem,” he said; it is in “a bad mood.” Poems are written only with other poets in mind, and therefore do not sell. (Two thousand copies is the industry standard.) He argued that the effect of M.F.A. programs, increasingly prevalent since the nineteen-seventies, has been “to increase the abundance of poetry, but to limit its variety. The result is a poetry that is neither robust, resonant, nor—and I stress this quality—entertaining.” In a section titled “Live Broadly, Write Boldly,” he urged poets to do as Hemingway did, and seek experience outside the academy—take a safari, go marlin fishing, run with the bulls. “The human mind is a marketplace, especially when it comes to selecting one’s entertainment,” he wrote. “If you look at drama in Shakespeare’s day, or the novel in the last century, or the movie today, it suggests that an art enters its golden age when it is addressed to and energized by the general audiences of its time.”

Barr grew up outside Chicago and says that, as an outgoing Midwesterner, he “survived” Harvard, which he attended on a Navy scholarship. He is sixty-four, small and bluff, with a warm, chuckling affect. In 1985, he started an energy-marketing company now called Dynegy, and, after retiring from a managing directorship at Morgan Stanley, co-founded an investment-banking boutique, Barr Devlin; he is also the author of six books of poems, several of them published in limited editions by a letterpress printer. He commutes between Chicago, where he and his wife, Penny, live in a hotel condominium on Michigan Avenue with a Shih Tzu and a miniature Yorkie, and three other homes, including a twenty-five-acre estate in Greenwich, Connecticut, which serves as a weekend place. (The Barrs have three grown children.) He is a big-game hunter—slightly deaf in his right ear—and a sailor, with a tan in all seasons. For years, he avoided talking about his poetry with business colleagues. “I was afraid that they thought of poets as hippies, and might have viewed it slightly askance,” he says. Barr’s latest book, “Grace: An Epic Poem,” is told in an invented Caribbean dialect inspired by family sailing trips around the Windwards and the British Virgin Islands. It is anything but shy. (The narrator, a gardener, describes seeing the mistress of the house caught by her husband in flagrante delicto—"De gentleman, he produce his próduce / like a corporate salami, and she hers, / like a surgery scar still angry red wid healing. / Den he settle his equipment in de lady's outback / an' he spud de well"—a predicament that leads to murder and nearly a hundred and fifty pages of poem.)

Barr's call for something new was, in a narrow sense, consistent with the magazine's radical origins. Harriet Monroe, who founded Poetry in Chicago in 1912, reflected in a memoir that at the turn of the century "the well of American poetry seemed to be thinning out and drying up, and the worst of it was that nobody seemed to care. It was this indifference that I started out to combat, this dry conservatism that I wished to refresh with living waters from a new spring." But, whereas Barr aspires to reunite poetry with the current of popular entertainment, Monroe, herself a frustrated poet, was motivated by distaste for the mainstream. The circular she sent to poets offered "First, a chance to be heard in their own place, without the limitations imposed by the popular magazine. In other words, while the ordinary magazines must minister to a large public little interested in poetry, this magazine will appeal to, and it may be hoped, will develop, a public primarily interested in poetry as an art, as the highest, most complete expression of truth and beauty." The earliest issues contained poems by Ezra Pound (living in London and from the start the magazine's foreign correspondent), as well as H. D. and Wallace Stevens, both unknowns. In 1915, Monroe published a poem by T. S. Eliot, then in his mid-twenties: "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock." These poets, she wrote, "swept away Victorian excesses and weaknesses—all the overemphasis on trite sentiment with its repetitions and clichés, and on archaic formalities of diction and technique." East Coast newspapers made fun of the idea of "Poetry in Porkopolis," but nevertheless Poetry became an emblem of high modernism, and Monroe its chief propagandist.

"The histories of modern poetry in America and of Poetry in America are almost interchangeable, certainly inseparable," the poet A. R. Ammons once said. (Among the magazine's discoveries were Gwendolyn Brooks, James Merrill, and John Ashbery.) Barr understandably relishes this glamorous past, but he is openly hostile to its legacy in poetry today. "For all its schools and experiments, contemporary poetry is still written in the rain shadow thrown by Modernism," he wrote. "It is the engine that drives what is written today. And it is a tired engine." Barr envisions a poetry more engaged, public-minded, and audience-beloved than modernism—intellectual, personal, and sometimes even willfully obscure—could ever be. "American poetry has yet to produce its Mark Twain," he wrote. As an incentive, he has established a new foundation prize, with a twenty-five-thousand-dollar purse: the Mark Twain Award for humor. The inaugural winner was Billy Collins, an affable, self-deprecating former Poet Laureate who has demonstrated a remarkable ability to connect with an audience (according to his publisher, he has sold more than five hundred thousand books), and who in many ways embodies Barr's ideal.

The most recent photograph I have seen of Ruth Lilly shows an elderly woman with pretty, heavy-lidded blue eyes, a blond bouffant, and red lipstick, wearing big pearl earrings and a pink suit with zebra trim, and sitting before a red poinsettia. The picture is reproduced in "A Little Book: The Poems and Selected Writings of Ruth Lilly," a gray cloth hardcover with gold embossed lettering, edited by Penny Barr and privately printed by the Poetry Foundation. It was presented to Mrs. Lilly in August, 2005, on her ninetieth birthday. The poems are formal, sighing, adorned with exclamation points, and often poignant in their wish for simple things (a little cottage, an erstwhile companion). Some appear under the pseudonym Joan March; others, including one published in the Times in the late nineteen-thirties, are signed "R. Lyly."

Ruth, the last surviving great-grandchild of Colonel Eli Lilly, who started the pharmaceutical company, and one of the two children of J. K. Lilly, Jr., and Ruth Brinkmeyer Lilly, was a delicate girl born into a famous family in a small town. According to the Indianapolis Star, depression, which ran in the family, caused her to miss part of high school. Already sheltered—she was driven around by armed Pinkerton guards, who changed their routes from day to day—she receded further after the Lindbergh kidnapping and a threat against her cousin. When Ruth was seventeen, the family moved into Oldfields, a twenty-two-room French-château-style mansion, where the meals were nonetheless, in the words of one visitor, "Hoosier homebody": French onion soup, lamb chops, strawberries and cream. Her bedroom overlooked a ravine designed by the Olmsted brothers's firm. Ruth's father, a major collector of rare books, added a library, and in 1954 founded the Lilly Library, at Indiana University, when he donated his twenty thousand volumes and seventeen thousand manuscripts. (He also collected toy soldiers, wooden ships, and stamps, and had a six-thousand-piece gold-coin collection, which now belongs to the Smithsonian.) According to the audio tour at Oldfields, which Ruth and her brother, Joe, gave to the Indianapolis Museum of Art, the thick curtains in the loggia were often drawn, for privacy.

At twenty-five, Ruth married Guernsey van Riper, Jr., who became an editor at Bobbs-Merrill, the publishing house, and the author of several biographies for children (Babe Ruth, Knute Rockne), though they had none. Ruth spent the forty years they were together in and out of hospitals, undergoing psychiatric treatment. She is so reclusive that sightings have occasioned newspaper stories. One tale, possibly apocryphal, holds that department-store owners in Indianapolis dressed the mannequins in outfits they thought she would like, and left the display lights on, so that Ruth, driven past the windows by her chauffeur late at night, could pick out new clothes. For many years, she was afraid to fly, and didn't leave the country until after she was eighty. An article in the Star credits Prozac, a Lilly drug, with improving her condition. She now travels once or twice a year, with an entourage of several dozen doctors, nurses, relatives, attendants, and, sometimes, a chef. Her house, Twin Oaks, which belonged to her father, is in a prosperous neighborhood, a few miles from Oldfields. It is protected by a screen of tall pine trees and a thread of wire fence. Through the bare woods, you can glimpse a whitewashed brick house with blue shutters, and an attending squad car.

In the absence of real information about Lilly's motivation for giving such a fortune to Poetry, a myth took hold. When it came out that Lilly, as Mrs. Guernsey van Riper, Jr., had submitted poems to Poetry in the seventies and that the poems had been turned down with a personal note, that colorful detail became a substitute for narrative logic. In the exuberant newspaper stories at the time, Lilly emerged as an almost fantastical benefactor—a Greek deity, disguised as a common traveller, who rewards kindness with riches and immortality. What did not emerge was that Lilly may not have intended to be so generous.

In 1981, Ruth and Guernsey were divorced and her brother, Joe, placed her under the supervision of the court, which named Merchants National Bank, later acquired by National City, as the conservator of her estate. At that point, the estate was worth about fifty million dollars—almost entirely in the form of Lilly stock—and her will stipulated that, after providing for her six nieces and nephews, the money would be divided among Poetry, a Washington-based arts-education and lobbying group that is now called Americans for the Arts, and the Lilly Endowment, a foundation whose resources are mostly directed toward Indianapolis. In the next twenty years, Lilly stock did well, and Mrs. Lilly's estate grew to be worth roughly a billion dollars. In the late nineties, her lawyer drafted a series of wills, codicils, and testamentary documents that shifted the bulk of the estate to a new entity, over which the lawyer, along with Lilly's nieces and nephews, would preside, to benefit Indianapolis in her name. Lilly's health was precarious, and the bank, when it learned of the alterations, worried that if she died the "old charities," as they came to be called, might sue.

The bank, with permission from the court, drew up a plan restoring the money to the old charities, only now the pot was much richer. Poetry learned of its stake in the fall of 2001, but waited a year before announcing the gift. In the meantime, the old board of Poetry—Chicago arts patrons, mostly, whose role was fund-raising—began to be reconfigured into the Poetry Foundation. During that year, Lilly stock dropped from around seventy-five dollars a share to as low as forty-eight—significantly reducing the value of the Poetry Foundation's portion—and the foundation, along with Americans for the Arts, sued the bank for failing to diversify the holdings in spite of what it says was an obligation to do so. In a summary judgment, the court ruled against the foundation; this past October, an appeals court, after warning the charities, "If you have a gift horse, keep your mouth shut," upheld that judgment; and in December the foundation requested an appeal with the Indiana Supreme Court.

Joseph Parisi, who had been the magazine's editor for twenty years at the time of the gift, volunteered to take charge of the foundation and named Christian Wiman, a young poet and critic, as his successor. (Parisi quit the foundation after only a few months.) The board used a headhunter to find John Barr, who was working for Société Générale, to whom he had sold Barr Devlin, as the head of its global power-utility business. Barr had been on the boards of the Poetry Society of America, Bennington College, and Yaddo, and had taught for three terms in the M.F.A. program at Sarah Lawrence. When he met with the board, he told them, quoting a Richard Wilbur poem, "If what you want is a 'good, gray guardian of art,' you've got the wrong person." The job, he says, is the bully pulpit he's been waiting for these many years.

One morning in mid-November, in Chicago, Barr, wearing a windbreaker and loafers, stood on the pavement across the street from two small office buildings, just a few blocks from the Newberry Library, which, before the Lilly gift, gave Poetry an eight-hundred-and-fifty-square-foot space in its stacks building to use as an office. (For the time being, the magazine and the foundation share a large suite in a tower across from the Tribune.) The foundation is negotiating to buy the double lot, which is on the market for seven million dollars, and, if the deal goes through, will house a twenty-five-thousand-square-foot building that should be ready in several years. There will be room for a library, offices for the magazine and the foundation, and a lecture hall. (The foundation already has an excellent series; this fall, there were readings by Mark Strand, Robert Hass, and Gary Snyder, as well as a staged reading of Richard Wilbur's verse translation of "Tartuffe.") "The building won't be palatial, but it will have an identity as a national home for poetry," Barr said. It will also have space for the foundation's new project: the Poetry Institute, a think tank modelled on the Aspen Institute, for researching issues in contemporary poetry and organizing symposia to disseminate the findings. Its first effort was a survey completed last spring by the National Opinion Research Center, at the University of Chicago, which cost seven hundred thousand dollars, and revealed, along with a great deal of other data, that ninety per cent of American readers value poetry.

The Poetry Foundation functions as an operating foundation, spending most of its money on its own activities rather than on grants. As Ethel Kaplan, a lawyer at a wealth-management firm and the chair of the board, put it, "Nobody wanted to sit back and read grant proposals—especially from poets." By January, the foundation had received eighty-eight million dollars. After all the money has been distributed, the foundation's budget will be about ten million dollars a year.

In an editorial in Poetry in 1922, Monroe bemoaned the quality of newspaper verse: "These syndicated rhymers, like the movie-producers, are learning that 'it pays to be good,' that one 'gets by by giving the people the emotions of virtue, simplicity and goodness, with this program paying at the box-office.' " She wanted to create a place apart for poetry; the foundation wants to take the genre big—right back into the magazines and newspapers that, a century ago, rejected all but the softest pap. To this end, the foundation is offering its services as an external poetry editor. Over the past year, it has sent a dozen magazine editors mockups with poems superimposed on actual layouts from those magazines (a Basho haiku in a Good Housekeeping spread showing how to "pair old china with fresh blooms"; Lucille Clifton's "Homage to My Hips" on a fitness page called "Love Your Curves"). To Details, the foundation suggested an essay by Jim Harrison: "If Jim Harrison, poet, novelist (Legends of the Fall) and walking vat of testosterone, needs a daily shot of poetry, it must not be for sissies. . . . A good hed for the piece might be 'Don't Be Afraid of Poetry.' A better one might be 'Read Poetry. Get Laid.' " Some poets work better for this purpose than others. "It's just common sense that we would not take language poetry and put it in a mockup magazine for Better Homes & Gardens," Barr said. "They'd say, 'What the hell is this? My readers would never understand it.' " The foundation also pays for a syndicated newspaper column by Ted Kooser, the former Nebraska life-insurance executive who was Poet Laureate from 2004 to 2006. The column, which features poems on comforting American themes (neighbors, chores, raking), runs mostly in regional papers in the Midwest and the South.

The annual budget for the foundation's Web site, which débuted a year ago, is more than a million dollars. The site has newsy items, blogs, a poetry best-seller list, and an archive of poems from a wide range of poets, helpfully indexed by subject matter. It is a boon to poets—whose publishers get paid for the use of the work—and to best men. Emily Warn, the editor of the site, has published two collections of poems with Copper Canyon Press (a third is forthcoming) and used to work at Microsoft, where she helped launch early versions of Internet Explorer. "We exist at the intersection of the great poems in our archive and this very broad public," she said. She would like the site to become the Billboard or the Entertainment Weekly of the poetry world, reflecting everything that's happening without a dogmatic point of view. She consults both with academics (what are the best and most representative poems of Czeslaw Milosz?) and with those whose sensibilities are a bit more pop. The site's associate editor, Emily White, lives in Seattle and for five years edited the alternative paper The Stranger. (Warn says that she never would have come up with the headline "Herbert Sucks. Donne Is a Pimp" if not for the influence of White.) Jeff Gordinier, an editor-at-large at Details who writes a column called "The Philistine" for the site, told me that he has suggested introducing more humor and irreverence—"charts and quizzes and time lines and very attitudinal columns and reaching out for a dash more celebrity presence."

In September, the foundation announced the latest of a group of prizes intended, Barr says, "to throw a spotlight of recognition on underilluminated corners of the poetry world," and named Jack Prelutsky America's first Children's Poet Laureate. Prelutsky, who has published more than forty books of children's poems, is, you might say, the ultimate example of a poet who keeps his audience in mind. "I Have a Pet Tomato," from "It's Raining Pigs and Noodles," reads:

I have a pet tomato,
it doesn't have a stem.
My friends have pet asparagus—
why can't I be like them?

The Children's Laureate was Penny Barr's idea. "I'm not a poet," she told me. "I'm not versed in poetry, but I am versed in bringing up children. It's a natural for me. The adult poets have never heard of Jack Prelutsky. The big secret is that these people are making a lot of money!" Prelutsky has donated to the foundation a collection of five thousand children's books, which will be stored in the building.

The cumulative effect, John Barr hopes, will be conspicuous."You probably haven't heard much humility out of me," he said. "But many years from now, when people are looking back, my first hope would be that the course of the river of American poetry would have been altered by a few degrees—or maybe more—by the Poetry Foundation. If less than that happens, but there's something discernible enough to be called the Chicago Movement, that wouldn't disappoint me, either. I don't know what the Chicago Movement is. I have no idea. It's not poets or a kind of poetry. But it implies a departure from the status quo today. If there's an effect on the art form, I hope it would be a bigger audience and a poetry that is deriving energy from a general audience. You know that line of Ezra Pound's about Walt Whitman, 'Let there be commerce between us'? I hope there's more commerce, in that sense, the poetic sense, between the mainstream general readers and contemporary poets."

This article continues at http://www.newyorker.com/fact/content/articles/070219fa_fact_goodyear

↑ Index

570. Deborah Poe

chinese new year (request for words on duilian)

Sun 18 Feb 2007

---

i would love to hear more on antithetical couplets should you care to wax duilian...

http://en.epochtimes.com/news/7-2-16/51783.html

"May the shining stars bless our generations.
May our great virtue always bring success."

everyone, happy chinese new year.

--d. poe

(sorry for x-posting)

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Jim Andrews
Sent: Sunday, February 18, 2007 2:51 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction"

http://hyperfiction.blogs.liberation.fr is a blog by Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction".

ja
http://vispo.com

↑ Index

571. Jesse Glass

Fwd: time4time : Jesse Glass

Sun 18 Feb 2007

Some very interesting things in a recent post on experiments in sound, abstraction and "universal language" in the '20s and '30s. Jess

--- Original Message ---
Date: /0/0
From: "ralph li" <[redacted]> Subject: time4time : Jesse Glass

ralph li hat Ihnen einen Link zu einem Blog gesendet:

new blog, "post-modernism: collaging, fragmentation, and Oulipo-like processes along with a keen understanding of poetic forms and traditions" best ... ralph

Blog: time4time
Post: Jesse Glass
Link: http://time4time.blogspot.com/2007/02/jesse-glass.html

--
Powered by Blogger
http://www.blogger.com/

↑ Index

572. Simon DeDeo
query from Richard Fox
Sun 18 Feb 2007

Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach him at [redacted].

>>looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like this please contact thanks!!

↑ Index

573. ishaq arashi
lost works do what you like and other works
Sun 18 Feb 2007

---

peace,

i am writing in reference to a short writ entitled "do what you like" a story about the killing of a girl in my town set the music of blind faith. i was wonder is you still have a copy of the story since i was the subject a hate crime which presented itself in the form of a break in into my flat and my computer, which contained my writing, was stolen along with my prayer mat.

i am currently attempting to retrieve some of my lost writings

you assistance would be much appreciated

kh

sincerely

l y braithwaite

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lawrence_Ytzhak_Braithwaite

http://www.sidebrow.net/2006/a047braithwaite.php

↑ Index

574. Mark Weiss
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Does any Etruscan literature survive?

At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
>Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in >my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach >him at [redacted].
>
>>>looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature
>by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial >appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like >this please contact thanks!!

↑ Index

575. Alexander Jorgensen
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

A wonderful culture. Fine metal work and pottery, as we know, sensual and sophisticated, Romans learned lots from this civilization. Hong Kong, in September, had a wonderful exhibition - world class.

agj

--- Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:

> Does any Etruscan literature survive?
>
> At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
> Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but > briefly camped in > my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this > query. You can reach > him at [redacted].
>
> looking for any work done on the use of
> etruscan language-literature
> by the modernists in particular any kind of > fenollosan radial > appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or > knows work >>like

> this please contact thanks!!

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
http://tv.yahoo.com/

↑ Index

576. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Mon 19 Feb 2007

I wrote before about why "a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" doesn't work, at least for me, as haiku. However, you raise an interpretation that would lead me to suggest changing "plants it catches" to "plants it catches on," which would be much clearer to me. But I am still left with having no reason for the fabric to be having any relationship with plants in the first place, so to be the verse is still problematic. You make a good point that it presents a moment (a catch, and then release), which many haiku also do, but that is not enough, especially when there are other problems.

Also, Murat, you refer to "strict form." But do you mean 5-7-5? Remember, I reject 5-7-5 for English-language haiku, at least as a target (it can be okay if it's by accident, and avoids many of the padding/chopping and awkward line break problems that many 5-7-5 haiku have). The strictness that I would look for is more in terms of clarity of sensory images (these aren't clear enough), using a season word (nope), and a two-part juxtapositional structure, equivalent to a kireji (again, nope), plus an overall gestalt. As I mentioned, the other verse about ana crumpling silver paper is much closer to haiku -- for starters, the central image is immediate and clear (crumpling silver paper), there's a seasonal reference (santa), and a juxtaposition of the two parts. The whole did not work for me in that case, however.

Alison, your 7-5-7 "enryu" seems like it must have been a lot of fun to create.

Michael

In a message dated 16-Feb-07 9:06:19 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Fri, 16 Feb 2007 18:02:01 -0500
From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Michael,

"a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" seems to the in terms of spirit, rather than strict form, the closest to Haiku. It is about perception. A piece of cloth is caught/snagged (during walk?) by a plant (with thorns). The continuing motion pulls the plant for a moment, but then the plant is detached. It is this moment between catching and detaching (the puill of motion and counter pull of the static) which the poem catches, which is wonderful, and it seems to me exactly in the spirit of haiku.

The chairs, in half beings buried in snow,
are pigeons

in the park.

I am enjoying your posts.

Ciao,

Murat

↑ Index

577. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

"Etruscan Places," D.H. Lawrence?

M.

On 2/19/07, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Does any Etruscan literature survive?
>
> At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
> >Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in > >my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach > >him at [redacted].
> >
> >>>looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature
> >by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial > >appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like > >this please contact thanks!!
>

↑ Index

578. Nicholas Karavatos
Beware of yourselves! Beware of each other!
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Stay away from poets. The erring follow them.
Qur'an 26:224 (Pickthal)

And the Poets, - It is those straying in Evil, who follow them: Qur'an 26:224 (Yusuf Ali)

And as to the poets, those who go astray follow them.
Qur'an 26:224 (Shakir)

As for the poets, they are followed only by the strayers.
Qur'an 26:224 (Khalifa)

WaalshshuAAarao yattabiAAuhumu alghawoona

_____ Find what you need at prices you'll love. Compare products and save at MSN® Shopping.
http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701

↑ Index

579. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Yikes, did I ever miss that! Yes, of course, the Santa Ana winds are warm (been too long since I lived in Southern California -- 19 years). That makes a lot of difference to the poem. Which goes to show you the power of line breaks, which in this case completely confused me (and, ahem, thus I'd change them). I'm still puzzled by why the wind would crumple silver paper, though, and still seems to be insufficient for a haiku, plus it also loses the seasonal reference I wondered about (Santa). Thanks for pointing the Santa Anas, Barry.

Michael

In a message dated 17-Feb-07 9:02:21 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Sat, 17 Feb 2007 04:50:03 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Should we not read "santa ana" as one name? Remember the Alamo!

> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, > and she's crushing silver paper, though we don't > know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm santa," so > the leap between these two elements is something in > common with haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I > don't get that -- and it's both unresolved and > probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa > and and silver paper suggests Christmas, but so > what? This fulfills a seasonal expectation for > haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for > the best haiku. There is often something connected > TO a season that carries additional meaning in some > way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the > season. But what's the overall message or feeling > here? I feel a bit too confused by it to know, or to > feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual haiku > journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, > that might be attracted to this poem for its > avant-garde or slightly tantalizing (unresolved) > psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde
> " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading > proponent). But I would still bet that most haiku > readers would be puzzled by it, in an unresovable > way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in > realizing that it's unresolvable, because even > that* effect is achieved with more control than I* > see in these words. It seems too confusing in its > whole effect, even while I like the image of a girl > crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my disbelief > on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but > I have trouble suspending disbelief when offered the > incomplete image of whatever a "warm santa" is.
> (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by > itself.) Is this a haiku? I think it comes closer > than any of the other pieces offered here. On the > other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that > haiku is whatever a person wants to call a haiku.
> That's a bit too liberal for me, or a way of dodging
> any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he

> himself has a notion that make
> s a haiku different from, say, a novel.

↑ Index

580. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

---

d .h. lawrence wrote a book called Etruscan Places
i haven't read it so no idea if touches on these--

if you can read Italian, that wd be a good place to start looking, among Italian writers--

> From: Mark Weiss <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: query from Richard Fox
> Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 01:33:30 -0500
>
> Does any Etruscan literature survive?
>
> At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
> Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in my > living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach him at > [redacted].
>
> looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature
> by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial > appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like this > please contact thanks!!

_____ Want a degree but can't afford to quit? Top school degrees online - in as fast as 1 year
http://forms.nextag.com/goto.jsp?url=/serv/main/buyer/education.jsp?doSearch=n&tm=y&search=education_text_links_88_h288c&s=4079&p=5116

↑ Index

581. Anny Ballardini
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

I didn't know it either, or at least I forgot, here from Wikipedia:
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Etruscan_language

Etruscan documents

- Liber Linteus <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Liber_Linteus> — An Etruscan linen <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Linen> book that ended as mummy wraps in Egypt. - *Tabula Cortonensis<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tabula_Cortonensis> * — An Etruscan inscription. - Cippus perusinus <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cippus_perusinus> — An Etruscan inscription. - Pyrgi Tablets <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Pyrgi_Tablets> — Bilingual Etruscan-Phoenician<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Phoenician_language>golden leaves.

On 2/19/07, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Does any Etruscan literature survive?
>
> At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
> >Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in > >my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach > >him at [redacted].
> >
> >>>looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature
> >by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial > >appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like > >this please contact thanks!!
>

↑ Index

582. Herb Levy
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Mark Weiss wrote:
> Does any Etruscan literature survive?
>
> At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote:
>> Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but briefly camped in >> my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this query. You can reach >> him at [redacted].
>>
>>>> looking for any work done on the use of >>etruscan language-literature
>> by the modernists in particular any kind of >>fenollosan radial >> appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or knows work >>like >> this please contact thanks!!

>
>

There's Lee Hyla's We Speak Etruscan
<http://www.newworldrecords.org/album.cgi?rm=view&album_id=80491>

But it's a duet for baritone saxophone & bass clarinet, so depending on what "work done on" means to you....

↑ Index

583. Dan Waber
ars poetica update
Mon 19 Feb 2007

The ars poetica project continues to bloom at:

http://www.logolalia.com/arspoetica/

Poems appeared last week by: Mary Maher, Vernon Frazer, and Sandra Alland.

Poems will appear this week by: Sandra Alland, Maxianne Berger, and Jesse Glass.

A new poem about poetry every day.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

584. Barry Schwabsky
Re: Haiku as a genre
Mon 19 Feb 2007

But I had a different wrong interpretation of Santa Ana--as suggested by my call to "remember the Alamo." General Santa Ana was the Mexican general (and later, president) who led the siege against the Alamo.

Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote: Yikes, did I ever miss that! Yes, of course, the Santa Ana winds are warm (been too long since I lived in Southern California -- 19 years). That makes a lot of difference to the poem. Which goes to show you the power of line breaks, which in this case completely confused me (and, ahem, thus I'd change them). I'm still puzzled by why the wind would crumple silver paper, though, and still seems to be insufficient for a haiku, plus it also loses the seasonal reference I wondered about (Santa). Thanks for pointing the Santa Anas, Barry.

Michael

In a message dated 17-Feb-07 9:02:21 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Sat, 17 Feb 2007 04:50:03 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Should we not read "santa ana" as one name? Remember the Alamo!

> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> *I would take "Ana" to be the name of a little girl, and she's crushing silver paper, though we don't know why. This is juxtaposed with "warm santa," so the leap between these two elements is something in common with haiku. But why is the Santa warm? I don't get that -- and it's both unresolved and probably unresolvable. Sure, the mention of Santa and and silver paper suggests Christmas, but so what? This fulfills a seasonal expectation for haiku, but that in itself is not enough, even for the best haiku. There is often something connected TO a season that carries additional meaning in some way, rather than merely giving you a sense of the season. But what's the overall message or feeling here? I feel a bit too confused by it to know, or to feel enough from it. I think of the bilingual haiku journal Ginyu, in Japan, edited by Ban'ya Natsuishi, that might be attracted to this poem for its avant-garde or slightly tantalizing (unresolved) psychological effect (I mean "avant-garde " in terms of haiku, of which Natsuishi is a leading proponent). But I would still bet that most haiku readers would be puzzled by it, in an unresovable way, nor would they find any meta-resolution in realizing that it's unresolvable, because even that effect is achieved with more control than I see in these words. It seems too confusing in its whole effect, even while I like the image of a girl crumpling silver paper. I can suspend my disbelief on reading about a girl crumpling silver paper, but I have trouble suspending disbelief when offered the incomplete image of whatever a "warm santa" is. (Also not keen on the word "paper" being a line by itself.) Is this a haiku? I think it comes closer* > than any of the other pieces offered here. On the other hand, folks like Hiroaki Sato have said that haiku is whatever a person wants to call a haiku. That's a bit too liberal for me, or a way of dodging any discussion of the matter, for clearly even he himself has a notion that make > s a haiku different from, say, a novel.

↑ Index

585. amy king

EVIE SHOCKLEY GUEST EDITS MIPOESIAS

Mon 19 Feb 2007

MiPOesias presents [http://www.mipoesias.com/EVIESHOCKLEYISSUE]

Evie Shockley, Guest Editor

A. Van Jordan
Aracelis Girmay
Brandon D. Johnson
C.S. Giscombe
Camille Dungy
Carl Martin
Cherryl Floyd-Miller Christian Campbell
Christopher Stackhouse
Derrick Weston Brown
Douglas Kearney
Duriel E. Harris
Ed Roberson
G.E. Patterson
Geoffrey Jacques giovanni singleton kim d. hunter
Kyle G. Dargan
L. Teresa Church
Lenard D. Moore
Lyrae Van Clief-Stefanon
Marilyn Nelson
Meghan Punschke
Mendi Lewis Obadike
Opal Moore
Raina Leon
Reginald Harris

Reginald Shepherd
Tara Betts
Thylias Moss
Tonya Foster
Treasure Williams
Tyrone Williams

http://www.mipoesias.com/EVIESHOCKLEYISSUE/

Finding fabulous fares is fun.
Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains.

↑ Index

586. cris cheek
this week in Oxford Ohio
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Here's a heads-up about two events next week that are part of an ongoing exhibition at the Miami University Art Museum--please see the department website for details and biographies: http://www.units.muohio.edu/english/events.html#imageworks.

The schedule you'll find there with other information:

Tuesday, February 20
12 p.m.
Miami University Art Museum
Marjorie Welish will discuss the conceptual and theoretical relationship of word and image in a lecture entitled "Read Red: Between Reading and Seeing."
Free and open to the public

Thursday, February 22
7 p.m.
Miami University Art Museum
Readings by Norma Cole, Tom Raworth, and Marjorie Welish with introductory remarks on IMAGEworks/WORDworks by Keith Tuma
Free and open to the public

The biographies linked from the site above should tell you what you need to know, but maybe I should add here that Marjorie Welish is not only a fine poet and painter but also a very smart writer about literature, art, and aesthetic theory--she moves easily between Continental and Anglo-American philosophy. I hope that a few of you who might not otherwise turn out for a poetry reading might turn out to hear her talk about text and image at the museum on Tuesday at noon.

Please feel free to forward the link to faculty and students in other departments and to others who might be interested. Several of the writer/artists will be visiting a range of classes in the department next week.

Keith
--

↑ Index

587. sandra de 1913
1913's Rozanova Prize
Mon 19 Feb 2007

"All writing is collaboration."
...I think Robert Kelly said that.

1913 says:
There's till time to submit to THE ROZANOVA* PRIZE
for a collaborative and/or visual book, to be published in a beautiful perfect-bound edition by 1913 Press.
Winner also receives standard royalties contract and 25 copies of the book.

"COLLABORATIVE and/or VISUAL"
are as open modalities as you want to make them.

(Cross-outs, cut-ups, collage, conversation, wiki-work, decollage, bricolage, multi-authored texts, non-authored texts, hooked on homophonics, anxiously influenced work, chance...)

Please see 1913 a journal of forms and 1913's book publications for fine examples:
Seismosis by John Keene + Christopher Stackhouse and Sightings by Shin Yu Pai

http://journal1913.org/home.html

DEADLINE: March 13, 2007
$20 entry fee

ALL entries will be considered for publication by 1913.
All contest entrants will receive a copy of the winning book.
**
Multiple entries are accepted, but must be sent under separate cover either online:

http://www.journal1913.org/prizes.html

or by mail to:
1913 Press
Box 9654
Hollins University
Roanoke, Virginia 24020

Please email the [redacted] with any questions at all.

1913 looks forward to the opportunity to read your work...and collaborate!

http://www.journal1913.org

*After Olga Rozanova (1886-1918), Russian avant-garde (Cubo-Futurist, Proto-Suprematist, Neo-Primitivist) artist who began constructing book art objects in 1913, in collaboration with Kruchenykh, Klebnikhov, and Malevich. Rozanova died young and unexpectedly, a week before the October Revolution anniversary.

↑ Index

588. Mark Weiss
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Of course, but their literature doesn't survive (there are inscriptions) and their language, as far as I know, is largely undeciphered. Which would limit the ways in which modernists could use it. Or maybe not. People do write in Klingon.

Mark

At 01:56 AM 2/19/2007, you wrote:
>A wonderful culture. Fine metal work and pottery, as >we know, sensual and sophisticated, Romans learned
>lots from this civilization. Hong Kong, in September, >had a wonderful exhibition - world class.
>
>agj
>
>--- Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> > Does any Etruscan literature survive?
> >
> > At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote: > > >Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but

> > briefly camped in > > >my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this > > query. You can reach
> > >him at [redacted].
> > >
> > >>>looking for any work done on the use of > > >>etruscan language-literature
> > >by the modernists in particular any kind of > > >>fenollosan radial > > >appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or > > knows work >>like > > >this please contact thanks!!
> >
>
>
>---
>
>
>
>_____
>TV dinner still cooling?
>Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
>http://tv.yahoo.com/

↑ Index

589. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Haiku as a genre
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Michael,

I do believe "catches on" will weaken the piece a lot and make it, as I see it, neither poem nor haiku. Why this is so requires an elaborate explanation which finally may not be too useful.

Along with the rules of haiku, are you not using your range of sensibility as a reader also as a standard? To me there is nothing unclear about "catches." "Catches on" is the "correct" expression if you can not accept "lycra," as an active and even ominous agent. The poem obviously does.

Ciao,

Murat

On 2/19/07, Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>
> I wrote before about why "a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it > catches" doesn't work, at least for me, as haiku. However, you raise an > interpretation that would lead me to suggest changing "plants it catches" > to "plants it > catches on," which would be much clearer to me. But I am still left with > having no reason for the fabric to be having any relationship with > plants in the > first place, so to be the verse is still problematic. You make a > good point > that it presents a moment (a catch, and then release), which many > haiku also > do, but that is not enough, especially when there are other problems.
>
> Also, Murat, you refer to "strict form." But do you mean 5-7-5? Remember, > reject 5-7-5 for English-language haiku, at least as a target (it can be > okay
> I
> if it's by accident, and avoids many of the padding/chopping and awkward > line break problems that many 5-7-5 haiku have). The strictness that > I would > look for is more in terms of clarity of sensory images (these aren't clear > enough), using a season word (nope), and a two-part juxtapositional > structure, > equivalent to a kireji (again, nope), plus an overall gestalt. As I > mentioned, > the other verse about ana crumpling silver paper is much closer to haiku
> -- for > starters, the central image is immediate and clear (crumpling silver
> paper),
> there's a seasonal reference (santa), and a juxtaposition of the two > parts.
> The whole did not work for me in that case, however.
>
> Alison, your 7-5-7 "enryu" seems like it must have been a lot of fun to > create.
>
> Michael
>
>

> In a message dated 16-Feb-07 9:06:19 PM Pacific Standard Time, > [redacted] writes:
>
> Date: Fri, 16 Feb 2007 18:02:01 -0500
> From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre
>
> Michael,
>
> "a cotton lycra weave lifts/ from plants it catches" seems to the in > terms
> of spirit, rather than strict form, the closest to Haiku. It is about > perception. A piece of cloth is caught/snagged (during walk?) by a plant > (with thorns). The continuing motion pulls the plant for a moment, > but then > the plant is detached. It is this moment between catching and detaching
> (the > puill of motion and counter pull of the static) which the poem catches, > which is wonderful, and it seems to me exactly in the spirit of haiku.
>
> The chairs, in half > beings buried in > snow,
> are > pigeons
>
> in the park.
>
>
> I am enjoying your posts.
>
> Ciao,
>
> Murat
>

↑ Index

590. Alan Sondheim more from performanceville
Mon 19 Feb 2007

performance/dance of sorts @ http://www.asondheim.org/fallenbb.mp4
apologies to the designers of background objects/images and http://www.asondheim.org/floater.mov again for direct avi from Second Life

then two still images @

two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds
two dancers two dances two roses two worlds

http://nikuko.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

591. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: query from Richard Fox
Mon 19 Feb 2007

If I remember it correctly, Lawrence describes the Etruscan pottery, etc, of course, from the point of view of a writer.

Murat

On 2/19/07, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Of course, but their literature doesn't survive (there are > inscriptions) and their language, as far as I know, is largely > undeciphered. Which would limit the ways in which modernists could > use it. Or maybe not. People do write in Klingon.
>
> Mark
>
> At 01:56 AM 2/19/2007, you wrote:
> >A wonderful culture. Fine metal work and pottery, as > >we know, sensual and sophisticated, Romans learned
> >lots from this civilization. Hong Kong, in September, > >had a wonderful exhibition - world class.

> >
> >agj
> >
> >--- Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
> >
> > > Does any Etruscan literature survive?
> > >
> > > At 07:48 PM 2/18/2007, you wrote: > > > >Hi all -- translator Richard Fox (based in VT but
> > > briefly camped in > > > >my living room -- !) asked me to pass on this > > > query. You can reach
> > > >him at [redacted].
> > > >
> > > >>>looking for any work done on the use of > > > >>etruscan language-literature
> > > >by the modernists in particular any kind of > > > >>fenollosan radial > > > >appropriation e3vents. anyone who has worked or > > > knows work >>like
> > > >this please contact thanks!!
> > >
> >
> >
> >---
> >
> >
> >
>
>
>_____
> >TV dinner still cooling?
> >Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
> >http://tv.yahoo.com/
>

↑ Index

592. Jim Andrews
on print vs online books
Mon 19 Feb 2007

---

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QYKb_ZCdr5g : Cory Doctorow explains why the more free e-books an author gives away, the more money the author makes.

ja

↑ Index

593. amy king
Re: on print vs online books
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Thanks for posting this!

Jim Andrews <[redacted]> wrote: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QYKb_ZCdr5g : Cory Doctorow explains why the more free e-books an author gives away, the more money the author makes.

ja

Be a PS3 game guru.
Get your game face on with the latest PS3 news and previews at Yahoo! Games.

↑ Index

594. Christina Milletti
Exhibit X Fiction Presents Dave Kress Feb 21
Mon 19 Feb 2007

THE EXHIBIT X FICTION SERIES PRESENTS
novelist and short story writer
DAVE KRESS

Wednesday, February 21
8:00pm
Hallwalls at The Church
341 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY

DAVE KRESS is the author of two works of fiction: Counting Zero, a novel, and Martians, a creature. A new novel, Glorified-or-Thermometers of God, will be published in 2007. He is an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Maine, Orono, where he teaches creative writing and contemporary literature.

"Dave Kress's first novel reminds us how intelligent a form the novel can be, in the right hands. Counting Zero is a keenly apprehended story, written with articulate zest and a voracious appetite for the things of everyday life seen in consummate detail. Mr. Kress has begun what promises to be a sparkling career as a novelist. Yes, Virginia, there are still some stylists on the Rialto." -- Paul West

FORTHCOMING EXHIBIT X EVENTS:
Percival Everett, Friday March 2, 7pm
Shelley Jackson, Friday March 30, 7pm
Joanna Scott, Thursday April 19, 7pm

More information about our guests, as well as streaming video of our past events, can be found at www.english.buffalo.edu/exhibitx.

Best,
Christina

_____
Christina Milletti
Assistant Professor of English
Director: Exhibit X Fiction Series
University at Buffalo, SUNY
Office: 533 Clemens Hall
Phone: [redacted] x1056

↑ Index

595. alexander saliby
Re: chinese new year (request for words on duilian)
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Deborah,

From Li Po; Sorry, can't report on who gets credit for the translation, I forgot to copy that information down when I was scribbling these two lines down in my notebook.

" moments of your life are as a precious coin each deserves the care to be spent wisely..."

Alex

> From: Deborah Poe <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: chinese new year (request for words on duilian)
> Date: Sun, 18 Feb 2007 18:06:09 -0500

> i would love to hear more on antithetical couplets should you care to wax duilian...
>
> http://en.epochtimes.com/news/7-2-16/51783.html
>
> "May the shining stars bless our generations.
> May our great virtue always bring success."
>
> everyone, happy chinese new year.
>
> --d. poe
>
> (sorry for x-posting)
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Jim Andrews
> Sent: Sunday, February 18, 2007 2:51 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction"
>
> http://hyperfiction.blogs.liberation.fr is a blog by Jean-Pierre Balpe on "Hyperfiction".
>
> ja
> http://vispo.com

↑ Index

596. George Bowering

Re: Beware of yourselves! Beware of each other!

Mon 19 Feb 2007

It is the poets whom the erring follow.
Qu'ran 26:224 (Rodwell)

On 18-Feb-07, at 11:41 PM, Nicholas Karavatos wrote:

> Stay away from poets. The erring follow them.
> Qur’an 26:224 (Pickthal)
>
> And the Poets, - It is those straying in Evil, who follow them:
> Qur’an 26:224 (Yusuf Ali)
>
> And as to the poets, those who go astray follow them.
> Qur’an 26:224 (Shakir)
>
> As for the poets, they are followed only by the strayers.

> Qur’an 26:224 (Khalifa)
>
> WaalshshuAAarao yattabiAAuhumu alghawoona
>
> _____
> Find what you need at prices you’ll love. Compare products and save at > MSN® Shopping.
> http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?
> ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701
>
>
George "Whip" Bowering
A law-abiding driver.

↑ Index

597. Betsy Andrews
New Jersey reading venues?
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Hi.

Looking for good places to read in New Jersey, and contacts there. Please backchannel me. Thanks much, Betsy

---
Looking for earth-friendly autos?
 Browse Top Cars by "Green Rating" at Yahoo! Autos' Green Center.

↑ Index

598. Andrew Jones
Re: Beware of yourselves! Beware of each other!
Mon 19 Feb 2007

---

that's what I like to hear, we still got it

On 2/19/07, Nicholas Karavatos <[redacted]> wrote:
> Stay away from poets. The erring follow them.
> Qur'an 26:224 (Pickthal)
>
> And the Poets, - It is those straying in Evil, who follow them:
> Qur'an 26:224 (Yusuf Ali)
>
> And as to the poets, those who go astray follow them.
> Qur'an 26:224 (Shakir)

>
> As for the poets, they are followed only by the strayers.
> Qur'an 26:224 (Khalifa)
>
> WaalshshuAAarao yattabiAAuhumu alghawoona
>
> _____
> Find what you need at prices you'll love. Compare products and save at MSN(r) > Shopping.
> http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701
>

↑ Index

599. Stephen Vincent
Re: Beware of yourselves! Beware of each other!
Mon 19 Feb 2007

To err is to be human. Follow me.

Poet's Almanac & Advertiser
Volume 1, Page 1
Mt. Holy Oak, Massachusetts, 1642

> It is the poets whom the erring follow.
> Qu'ran 26:224 (Rodwell)
>
> On 18-Feb-07, at 11:41 PM, Nicholas Karavatos wrote:
>
> Stay away from poets. The erring follow them.
> Qur’an 26:224 (Pickthal)
>
> And the Poets, - It is those straying in Evil, who follow them:
> Qur’an 26:224 (Yusuf Ali)
>
> And as to the poets, those who go astray follow them.
> Qur’an 26:224 (Shakir)
>
> As for the poets, they are followed only by the strayers.
> Qur’an 26:224 (Khalifa)
>
> WaalshshuAAarao yattabiAAuhumu alghawoona
>
> _____
> Find what you need at prices you’ll love. Compare products and save at

> MSN® Shopping.
> http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?
> ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701
>
> George "Whip" Bowering
> A law-abiding driver.

↑ Index

600. Halvard Johnson
Re: New Jersey reading venues?
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Just find a nice lawn with a couple big, old shade trees.
Then stretch out in the shade and go to it. Uh, maybe it would be best to wait until it warms up a bit there.

Hal

"What does a poet need an unlisted number for?"
                --George Costanza

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 19, 2007, at 2:56 PM, Betsy Andrews wrote:

> Hi.
>
> Looking for good places to read in New Jersey, and contacts there.
> Please backchannel me. Thanks much, Betsy
>
> ---
> Looking for earth-friendly autos?
> Browse Top Cars by "Green Rating" at Yahoo! Autos' Green Center.

↑ Index

601. Jim Andrews
Re: on print vs online books
Mon 19 Feb 2007

> Thanks for posting this!
>
> Jim Andrews <[redacted]> wrote:
> http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QYKb_ZCdr5g : Cory Doctorow explains why the > more free e-books an author gives away, the more money the author makes.

You're welcome. It sounds quite good, doesn't it, coming from someone whose book is in its sixth printing. Many have been saying the same for years.

ja
http://vispo.com

↑ Index

602. Robert Lunday
Poetics Blog
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Hello All,

Come on in!

- Outsider (Literary) Artists
- Queen of Kanji (Rasula/McCaffery, Imagining Language)
- Poetry on Film
- The Mid-Length Long Poem ... and other topics at:

http://www.robertlunday.com (A WordPress blog)

↑ Index

603. Michael Rothenberg
Friends of Big Bridge
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Dear Friends of Big Bridge,

We are now accepting tax-deductible donations.

For almost a decade we have been able to produce and maintain Big Bridge at a minimal expense, however, due to rising costs, staff changes, and the need to continue to bring you more of the best poetry, art and everything else, we humbly ask for your support. Every little bit counts. Please, help us keep Big Bridge online.

Please make checks out to Committee on Poetry, Inc., and specify on the check FOR: Big Bridge. Mail donations to:

Big Bridge
16083 Fern Way
Guerneville, CA. 95446

You will recieve a letter of acknowledgment upon receipt of your donation.

And, of course, we thank you very much for your many years of support.

Peace,
Michael Rothenberg, Editor
Big Bridge
http://www.bigbridge.org

↑ Index

604. Aaron Vidaver
Open Text Reading Series #1: Peter Culley (Vancouver)
Mon 19 Feb 2007

OPEN TEXT READING SERIES #1
Sponsored by the Canada Council for the Arts
& the Creative Writing Program at Capilano College
http://capilanocreativewriting.blogspot.com

The Spring 2007 OPEN TEXT series at Capilano College begins on March 1st 2007 with a reading by Nanaimo poet Peter Culley, who will be reading from his new work, "The Age of Briggs & Stratton".

12:30
Cedar 136
Capilano College
2055 Purcell Way
North Vancouver

Peter Culley, poet and art critic, has published Twenty-one (Oolican 1980), Fruit Dots (Tsunami 1985), Natural History (Fissure 1986) The Climax Forest (Leech, 1995) and Hammertown (New Star, 2003). The untitled second installment of Hammertown is due from New Star in the fall of '08. His writing on artists such as Stan Douglas, Roy Arden, Kelly Wood and Geoffrey Farmer has appeared in numerous catalogues and journals. Culley resides in South Wellington, near Nanaimo, on Vancouver Island, BC.

L'Orphee

So much of L' Orphee plays in the grim middle-aged way

poor Spicer never lived to see that its like I know better; ie Jean Marais is how we're supposed to look on the inside & those hoopleheads at the Cafe rioting over Johnny Ray as Mrs. Mills tinkles at 78
& the Hugo Boss bike cops drop their mitts-- what Martian could have predicted an Elvis emerging from their thin Hugenot gruel?
Why do the youngsters blame me?
Don't their radios get the CBC?

-- from "The Age of Briggs & Stratton"

For info:
Roger Farr
[redacted]
[redacted] (2554)

[Coming soon: Marie Annharte Baker, March 7th; Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, March 15th]

↑ Index

605. Eric Dickey
To Topos: Poetry International
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Reading announcement
http://www.gazettetimes.com/articles/2007/02/19/lifestyles/books/book02.txt

Publication announcement:

To Topos: Poetry International, volume 9, Ahani: Indigenous American Poetry with special guest editor Allison Adelle Hedge Coke.

Featuring poems by Joy Harjo, Orlando White, Hugo Jamioy, Heid E. Erdrich and many others.

Includes translations with poems in Kamsa, Quechua, Mayan, Mapuche, Lenape, Comanche, Western Cherokee, Spanish and more.

Could possibly be the first and only poetry anthology by indigenous American poets.

350 pages, $12.00.

For ordering information visit:
http://oregonstate.edu/dept/foreign_lang/totopos/.

Or send $14.50 ($12 plus $2.50 for shipping) to:
To Topos, 210 Kidder Hall, Oregon State University, Corvallis, OR 97331.

About To Topos

To Topos is an international poetry journal that features poetry in translation, oftentimes the original appears together with its English translation. The following is excerpted from our Poet's Market entry:

"To Topos is committed to fostering human rights on an environmentally fragile planet. Its focus is altermondialist, recognizing that the causes of poverty and injustice are often related to race, gender, nationality, and the effacement of earth-given resources. Most issues are thematically focused.

"Previous themes include Incarceration, Peace and the Sea, Forests, and North African Voices. Winona LaDuke (White Earth Land Recovery Project) and Dr. William F. Schulz (Amnesty International) have prefaced recent issues. The journal is open to both aspiring and recognized poets. The journal particularly invites submissions from refugees and the borderless. The journal is primarily interested in living poets who believe words carry the gift of positive social change.

"The mission of this journal is to reveal the human face of poetry as a statement of urgency in today's world. The journal is open to all aesthetic and stylistic orientations, but submissions should be a seed for social change along humanist principles without indulging in political or nationalist rhetoric."

In May 2006, Ms. Hedge Coke addressed the United Nations regarding the effect of publication impact on Indigenous Human Rights.

We are in the process of reading the 250+ submissions for the forthcoming issue on Poetry and Poverty. Decisions to be made soon. Guest edited by Dr. Karen Holmberg of Oregon State University, our tenth volume will feature an introduction by Michael Parenti.

Our issue dedicated to Contemporary Hungarian Poetry, guest edited by Eniko Bollobas of Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest was presented to the Hungarian Prime Minister.

To purchase copies of the Hungarian issue, or other back issues:
http://oregonstate.edu/dept/foreign_lang/totopos/index.html

Future themes include Water, Contemporary Turkish Poetry (postponed) and Contemporary Poetry from Wallonia.

Our 2004 issue on Forests features an introduction by Winona LaDuke and was given a favorable review in the prominent French poetry journal, Friches. The 2005 issue on North African Voices was featured on www.babelmed.net.

We just received an Oregon Literary Arts Fellowship for Publishers grant in 2006. Our pages include works by the likes of academics, asylum inmates, Nobel and Pulitzer candidates, scholars, and farmers.

For more information or to order back issues:
http://oregonstate.edu/dept/foreign_lang/totopos/index.html

Have a burning question? Go to Yahoo! Answers and get answers from real people who know.

↑ Index

606. Betsy Andrews
Maureen Owen's email
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Can someone backchannel it to me, or ask her to email me? Got a quick question for her, thanks.

The fish are biting.
Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.

↑ Index

607. Catherine Daly
Princeton
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Dear Friends and Colleagues:

Do you know or use the Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics in any or all of its three editions (1965, 1974, 1993)? Have you found something useful in it? Do you wish it contained something it lacks? If you don't spend much time with poetry, do you know someone elsewhere who does?

Preparation of a fourth edition has begun, and both Roland Greene, who is Editor-in-Chief, and I, as General Editor, would welcome any and all suggestions and thoughts about which entries to keep, which to drop, which to add. We have begun working our way through the 1700 entries of the third edition in order to make these decisions, and that work should occupy us for the next month or so. If you have ideas or suggestions, please send them along during this time ([redacted] or [redacted]).

And please feel free to forward this message far and wide to colleagues working with poetry in any language throughout the United States and in other countries. The Princeton Encyclopedia has users around the world, and we are trying to cast a world-wide net.

Gratefully,

Steve

Stephen Cushman
Department of English
University of Virginia
219 Bryan Hall
P.O. Box 400121
Charlottesville, VA 22904-4121

tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
email: [redacted]

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

608. Tisa Bryant
Last Call for Free Books from Leon Works!
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Once more, with feeling!
On behalf of Renee Gladman:

Leon Works, an independent publisher of experimental prose and poetry, wants to expand its mailing list. If you are interested in teaching or writing about crossing genres, places, cultures, or time, and want access to Leon titles, please do the following:

1. Email your name and mailing address to Renee Gladman at [redacted].

2. Indicate whether you already own either of the first two titles, Sonny by Mary Burger or Incubation: A Space for Monsters by Bhanu Kapil.

Books forthcoming this spring and summer from Leon are What Began Us by Melissa Buzzeo and Unexplained Presence by Tisa Bryant.

All the best,

Renee

Editor & Publisher

_____ I searched, but I could not find You; I called You aloud, standing on the minaret; I rang the temple bell with the rising and setting of the sun; I bathed in the Ganges in vain; I came back from Kaaba disappointed; I looked for You in earth; I searched for You in heaven, my Beloved, but at last I have found You hidden as a pearl in the shell of my heart.

Complete Sayings, Hazrat Inayat Khan=

↑ Index

609. jkrick
New EPC Paul Violi Page
Mon 19 Feb 2007

All,

The Electronic Poetry Center (http://epc.buffalo.edu) is pleased to announce its new Paul Violi page (http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/violi).

Please pay us a visit sometime soon.

Jack Krick

↑ Index

610. Carol Novack
soliciting submissions for mad hatters' review --
Mon 19 Feb 2007

Hi Everyone --- Our reading period for Issue 8, guest edited by Debra Di Blasi, is open through March 1st. Seeking (unpublished) risky, lyrical/rhythmic/imagismic/orgiastic highly original-inventive, offbeat-unruly yet at least vaguely "accessible" prose, poetry, so-called non-fiction, dramatic variations and experimental forms of various mono and multimedia configurations and combinations audio, visual, textual, and oracular. Please see our submission guidelines.

Thanks!

Carol Novack
Publisher/Editor-in-Chief
MAD HATTERS' REVIEW: Edgy & Enlightened Literature, Art & Music in the Age
of Dementia: *http://www.madhattersreview.com *
KEEP THE MAD HATTERS ALIVE! MAKE A TAX DEDUCTIBLE DONATION

HERE:
*https://www.fracturedatlas.org/site/contribute/donate/580

* **

_____
*http://carolnovack.blogspot.com/
*
http://www.nd.edu/~ndr/issues/ndr23/contents23.htmlhttp://www.webdelsol.com/Del_Sol_Review/
http://www.amletters.org/index.html#Anchor-Special-49575
http://www.poetserv.org/SRR27/novack.html
*http://blazevox.org/062-cn.htm
http://webdelsol.com/5_trope/21/novack.html
http://emergingwriters.typepad.com/emerging_writers_network/2007/01/work_of_the_day_21.html
http://www.webdelsol.com/eSCENE/series20.html
http://webdelsol.com/PortalDelSol/pds-interview-mhr.htm *

↑ Index

611. Alan Sondheim
[stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music (fwd)
Tue 20 Feb 2007

This message is in MIME format. The first part should be readable text, while the remaining parts are likely unreadable without MIME-aware tools.

--0-285307117-1171955327=:20422

Just in case you haven't seen these articles - Alan

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 22:53:44 -0800
From: Michael Gurstein <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks,
part of tradition of progressive country music

Well worth a read, especially the second article.

MG

-----Original Message-----
From: [redacted] [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: February 18, 2007 5:54 PM

To: [redacted]
Subject: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

* Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
by Ashley Sayeau (Philadelphia Inquirer)

* Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
By Sandy Carter (Z Magazine)

==========

Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
by Ashley Sayeau

Philadelphia Inquirer - February 16, 2007

http://www.philly.com/mld/inquirer/news/editorial/16709871.htm

On Sunday night at the 49th annual Grammy awards, the Dixie Chicks took home five awards, including best album, record and song of the year.

It was a long road, indeed, for the Chicks, whose enormous fan base and ticket sales famously plummeted
in 2003 after lead singer Natalie Maines remarked on the eve of the Iraq war that the group was "ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas." Within days, radio stations were refusing to play their music, and fans were demanding refunds. Death threats were later issued.

Throughout the ordeal, the group remained admirably unapologetic, insisting that dissent is (or at least should be) a vital liberty in America. They further maintained this position in their album Taking the Long Way (which won the Grammy for best album) and especially in the song "Not Ready To Make Nice,"
in which they directly addressed their critics: "It's too late to make it right/ I probably wouldn't if I could/ Cause I'm mad as hell/ Can't bring myself to do what it is/ You think I should."

Despite the group's successes, the grudge has held, particularly among the Nashville music establishment. The Country Music Association completely snubbed the Chicks at its awards ceremony in May.

Such an affront on the part of country music is not only cowardly, but also quite antithetical to the genre's history. For, while country music today is often equated with pickup trucks, rebel flags, and men

with mullets, it also has a brave and, dare I say, liberal streak in its closet.

Take Johnny Cash, for instance. Not only did many of his most famous lyrics center on "the poor and the beaten down," including a poignant attack on this country's treatment of American Indians, but also Cash was a vocal critic of the Vietnam War, as in his famous song "Man in Black": "I wear the black in mourning for the lives that could have been/ Each week we lose a hundred fine young men."

And then there is Willie Nelson, who on Valentine's Day 2006 released a love song about gay cowboys, titled, "Cowboys Are Frequently, Secretly (Fond of Each Other)." Perhaps more seriously, he has been an avid supporter of presidential hopeful Dennis Kucinich, who, while arguing for universal health care and a swift withdrawal from Iraq, is probably the furthest left of any Democratic candidate.

Women in country music - like the Dixie Chicks - have a long tradition of being particularly bold in speaking out against some of the very conventions their record labels and conservative fan base celebrate. Back in 1933, the Carter Family, which consisted of A.P. Carter; his wife, Sara Doughtery Carter; and her cousin, the groundbreaking guitar player Maybelle Addington Carter, sang about a young woman who chose to commit suicide rather than marry. In Sara's sorrowful croon, we hear her say, "I never will marry/ I'll be no man's wife/ I expect to live single all the days of my life." Needless to say, she later divorced A.P.

Perhaps most memorable are some of Loretta Lynn's lyrics, particularly from the 1960s and 1970s. Released in 1966, her song "Dear Uncle Sam" was an early anti-Vietnam protest song. And though she once feigned dozing off while listening to feminist advocate Betty Friedan speak as a fellow guest on The David Frost Show, Lynn was a pretty controversial women's advocate. In "I Wanna Be Free," she wrote of the liberating effect of divorce: "I'm gonna take this chain from around my finger/ And throw it just as far as I can sling 'er." She did the same thing for birth control in "The Pill": "The feelin' good comes easy now/ Since I've got the pill."

As daring as some outlaw artists have been, the country music establishment has often proved even more dogged in its conservative views. Lynn has purportedly had more songs banned than any other country music singer. And Cash, never completely at home in the country music world, once said that "the very idea of unconventional or even original ideas ending up on 'country' radio" was "absurd." No wonder, then, that in his gay cowboy song, Willie Nelson lamented that "you won't hear this song on the radio/ Not on your local TV."

With the November election, particularly with strong Democratic gains in Virginia and Missouri, Republican politicians may have to rethink their long-standing Southern strategy. Similarly, with last Sunday night's awards, country music should embrace the fact that its greatest assets have never been scared of controversy or doing the right thing.

To quote the great Dolly Parton - who has sung a few feminist, antiwar, and progressive anthems herself - "You'll never do a whole lot unless you're brave enough to try."

[Ashley Sayeau is a freelance writer currently living in Buffalo, N.Y., was raised in Tennessee, and has written on women and politics for a variety of anthologies and publications, including The Nation, Salon and Dissent.]

Â© 2007 Philadelphia Inquirer

==========

Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
By Sandy Carter

Z Magazine - September 1994

http://zena.secureforum.com/znet/zmag/articles/sept94carter.htm

Some of the fondest memories of my west Texas childhood are linked to the lonesome moan of the pedal steel guitar and the soulful honky tonk voices of Hank Williams, Lefty Frizzell, and Ernest Tubb. In the 1950s, as I was entering grade school and gaining some awareness of the world around me, these sounds served up essential clues to my sense of time and place.

A few years later, however, I perceived that some considered country music inferior to other forms of popular music. Southern accents, nasal voices, and bad grammar, I learned, were the most visible signs of this inferiority. So I became self conscious about my drawl and with some vigilance and discipline began modifying my twang according to standards I took to be more enlightened.

But the full arsenal of Southern stereotypes was not so easy to escape. In my 20s, as I began living and working in other parts of the country, I came to realize that people outside the South, particularly politically progressive people outside the South, judged white Southerners and nearly all aspects of their cultural heritage as backward. And this snobbery often found its most candid expression in mocking and ridiculing country music.

The elitist views that define popular prejudices about the country tradition greeted the music at its commercial birth. In the 1920s, when country music first felt the pressures of commercialization, rural traditions of all kinds were experiencing tensions and challenges brought on by industrialization. Country sounds suggesting older and more settled ways seemed inherently at odds with rapid social and technological change. The music expressed a longing for stability and order and deep-seated fears of the temptations of the modern world. At the same time, the music could not help but reflect hopes of escaping the hardships associated with traditional rural life.

Conflicted feelings also derived from the Southerness of the music. While the music of Stephen Foster and the writings of Mark Twain fueled romantic notions of the South as an exotic land of enchantment, the region also evoked images of slavery and the Civil War, the Scopes monkey trial, and the Klan. Thus for many, country music, regardless of its subject matter, was nothing more than the sound of ignorance and racism. Retaining a stubborn self-consciousness of its white, rural, Southern, working class origins, country music today continues to attract and repulse listeners by stirring the same opposing images. Nonetheless, in a span of 70 years, country music has grown from regional to national and international popularity. And presently, the music is cresting at a commercial high-water mark justifying marketing claims that country is now "America's pop music."

With mass popularity, however, some of the most distinctive qualities of country music have been diluted. Listening to the musical styles dominating country radio, one hears a generic McDonald's styled product so stripped of "hayseed" connotations that it virtually erases the line between country and various forms of easy listening white pop and bland 1970s styled corporate rock. While harder and more traditional country sounds have not disappeared, the market driven industry bias toward an urban-suburban contemporary sound has certainly muddled the definition and origins of the musical idioms known as country.

Like other music forms of our culture, country music is an amalgam of influences. Its sound, song structure, and lyrical text reveal a heavy debt to African American musical styles, particularly blues and gospel. Rhythmically, country draws most on the dance meters of English and European country dance tunes. As to lyrics and narrative style, country storytelling has roots in Southern Protestant sermonizing, barroom banter, front porch story swapping, and the general character of regional oral traditions. Other distinctive characteristics relate to the way the music is performed. Unlike many pop performers, country singers write much of their material bringing a subjective, direct voice to their performance. Like blues singers, they aim for intimacy more than technical sophistication. In the singer's voice and story lay the central appeal of country music.

Though country music is a vocal music above all else, its instrumental sound is unique and immediately identifiable. It begins with the guitar and is filled out with fiddle, banjo, mandolin, dobro, bass, pedal steel guitar, and harmonica. The distinctive country sound comes from the way the musicians play these instruments with flat picks, finger picks, bottlenecks, and bow. In contrast to the smooth, melodic approach of pop and classical music, country players, again showing an African American influence, favor a rough-edged attack with strings popped, scraped, hammered, and frailed. Mirroring the unadorned vocal sound, instrumental solos and fills are deliberately "unrefined." The emphasis is on sounds that counterpoint the social and emotional realism conveyed by the singer and the song. Accordingly, country sounds are harsh, rowdy, romantic, humorous, and rousing. Most of all, they are mournful.

Did you ever see a robin weep When leaves begin to die

That means he's lost the will to live I'm so lonesome I could cry

--Hank Williams

Historically the most dominant and unmistakable quality of the country sound is sadness. One of the great stereotypes plaguing country music is the cry-in-the-beer loser drowning the pain of romantic loss in some dark tavern. But the heartbreak in country music runs deeper than cheating, drinking, and divorce. The sad tale country music has to tell goes back to the devastation the region suffered during the Civil War, the loss of rural identity, and the great migration of Southerners to urban centers in the Midwest and West during the 1940s and 1950s. Understandably, country music is homesick music, permanently colored by feelings of longing and lost innocence.

The loss at the heart of the country song has been expressed through two divergent impulses. When the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers came to Bristol, Tennessee in August 1927 to perform before record scout Ralph Peer and a Victor Talking Machine, they brought with them distinct bodies of material representing seemingly contradictory themes and values. In the Carter Family's huge repertoire of traditional songs resided the morally decent old-time virtues of work, family, humility, and Christian fellowship. By contrast, Rodgers, an ex-railroad brakeman from Meridian, Mississippi, wrote tunes with roots in blues and jazz, folk and cowboy songs, work gang hollers and pop. Though Rodgers wrote his share of songs glorifying the home and family, his work also celebrated the lives of hell-raisers, hoboes, wayward lovers, criminals, rounders, and ramblers.

Both approaches proved immediately popular. By 1933, the year of his death from tuberculosis, Jimmie Rodgers had become country's first crossover success and in the South his status was near mythic. And by the time the Carter Family disbanded in 1943, their music was well-known throughout the United States, as well as parts of Canada, Mexico, England, Ireland, and Australia. Aside from establishing the commercial viability of country music, the breakthroughs of Rodgers and the Carter Family gave the shared musical culture of the white South coherence. Though commercialization accelerated the homogenization of sounds, by documenting the diversity of local and regional styles it also helped Southerners gain a fuller sense of their common cultural heritage. The music labeled "hillbilly" dramatized what they suffered, survived, and left behind. It offered solace and understanding, realism and escape. But most of all, it was music that responded to change with a reassertion of tradition. The Carter Family's religious tunes and sentimental ballads and Jimmie Rodgers' chronicles of the rambling man, in different ways, mapped the boundaries of tradition and the dire consequences of its breakdown.

Because of this emphasis on Southerness and tradition, country music has long been associated with all that is reactionary. However, while country music generally expresses a conservative outlook, the view of country as an exclusively white, male-dominated, right-wing tradition is unfair and one-dimensional. At no point in its history has country music expressed a consistent political ideology. Although performers such as W. Lee O'Daniel, Jimmie Davis, and Roy Acuff have run for political office and many country musicians have endorsed candidates and aired opinions in public, the music resists easy ideological labeling. Every hard- headed patriotic diatribe like "Okie From Muskogee" can be matched by songs like Waylon Jennings's multicultural, egalitarian anthem "America" and James Talley's ode to populist rebellion "Are They Gonna Make Us Outlaws Again?":

Now there's always been a bottom

And there's always been a top

And someone took the orders

And someone called the shots

And someone took the beatin', Lord

And someone got the prize

Well, that may be the way its been

But that don't mean its right

More importantly, since country music has always been a voice for small farmers, factory hands, day laborers, the displaced and unemployed, its harsh portraits of work and everyday life carry an implicit critique of capitalism.

Instead of overt political protest, country songs prefer to deliver social criticism through poignant descriptions of economic hardship and family sacrifice. Some of the best examples of this style of protest are Merle Haggard's "Mama's Hungry Eyes," Dolly Parton's "Coat Of Many Colors," and Loretta Lynn's "Coal Miner's Daughter."

As to the issue of race, country music's sentimental attachment to Dixie is often taken as an endorsement of white supremacy and slavery. Country music's glorification of the South, however, derives mostly from an idealized notion of working the land and the real life movement of millions off the land during the years of the Great Depression and World War II. Not surprisingly, hundreds of country tunes plead the case of the farmer and celebrate the beauty of Southern landscapes. By contrast, since the birth of the country music industry in the 1920s, very few country songs have offered direct commentary on race relations in the South, and certainly no popular song has advocated a return to the slave system. This doesn't mean, of course, that white Southerners or the country music industry are free of racism. Rather, it suggests that the homesickness in country music is based primarily on the erosion of rural identity.

Still, it is obvious that "whiteness" is dominant in country music. Despite the tradition's enormous debt to African American music and other ethnic music cultures, non-white performers are still exceedingly rare in country music. When voices of color have gained popularity in the country field, it has generally been through songs and styles evidencing only traces of their racial origins. Nonetheless, in recent decades Mexican-Americans such as Johnny Rodriguez, Freddy Fender, Tish Hinojosa, and Flaco Jiminez and African Americans such as Charlie Pride, Stoney Edwards, and Big Al Downing have won acceptance with country audiences. And occasionally, there are tunes like Bobby Braddock's "I Believe The South Is Gonna Rise Again" that break the mold:

The Jacksons down the road were black like we were

But our skins were white and theirs was black

I believe the South's gonna rise again

But not the way we thought it would back then

Some of the strongest stereotypes attached to country music revolve around the social and sexual roles of women. To many people Tammy Wynette's 1968 hit "Stand By Your Man" typifies the passive, long suffering mentality of the unliberated country woman. In truth, the female perspective in country music is much broader and far more assertive than this superficial stereotype can allow. The richest and most authoritative evidence of this reality can be found in Mary Bufwack and Robert Oermann's Finding Her Voice: The Saga Of Women In Country Music(Crown Publishers Inc., New York). This 541 page narrative tracing the lives and music of country women from the late 19th century up to the present, shows how country music has encouraged white working class women in their struggles to survive and resist "economic exploitation, sexual subjugation, and limited opportunities."

Exploring the folk origins of country music, Bufwack and Oermann argue that women were the primary folklorists for early rural music, memorizing the tunes and lyrics that provided the basic entertainment for the family and community. And in their own original ballads, women expressed sexual fantasies and discontents in songs loaded with images of romantic longing, promiscuity, violence, and death. Bufwack and Oermann also reveal more active and socially oriented resistance in the depression era songs of Sarah Gunning, the composer of "I Hate The Capitalist System," and Aunt Molly Jackson, who began making up class conscious songs and walking picket lines before she was ten.

It was not until the 1950s, however, that women in country music began to gain commercial equality with men. Following Kitty Well's surprising 1952 hit "It Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels"--a woman's retort to Hank Thompson's "The Wild Side Of Life--women singers such as Patsy Cline, Loretta Lynn, Dolly Parton, and Tammy Wynette started achieving record sales and stardom rivaling country men. The appeal of the modern country female star, Bufwack and Oermann note, in many ways mirrored general trends in country music. Country tunes of the 1950s and 1960s still focused on subjects of work, family, and religion. But reflecting an audience that was now struggling to come to grips with the realities of urban life and wage labor, the music increasingly dealt with alcoholism, infidelity, and divorce. Reacting to these problems from a distinctly female point of view, country women stepped forward with songs displaying tougher attitudes. Sad songs of betrayal prevailed, but women now would sing also of sexual freedom and nights on the town. And in love songs, women would voice a straightforward demand for relationships based on fair play and an end to double standards.

Some of the purest samples of this new toughness came in a string of popular tunes by Loretta Lynn. With a basic hard country sound and a writing style favoring down-to-earth blue collar bluntness, Lynn laid down the law to men in songs such as "Fist City" and "Don't Come Home A-Drinking (With Loving On Your Mind)." With her singles "The Pill" and "One's On The Way," Lynn also became the first popular country singer to publicly advocate for birth control. These attitudes and Lynn's reputation for gearing her shows to women, earned her a legion of devoted, fanatical fans, including a large lesbian following.

Although few country music women of the 1950s and 1960s made music as self-consciously for women as Lynn, the emergence of country women superstars put "the woman's perspective" on substantially more equal terms with that of the working man. By 1984 about one-fourth of the top country singles and albums were by women. And today's country and pop charts are overflowing with country women--Reba McEntire, Wynonna Judd, Mary Chapin-Carpenter, Trisha Yearwood, Suzy Bogguss, Kathy Mattea, Patty Loveless, Pam Tillis, and K.T. Oslin, to mention only a few. Most significantly, the commercial appeal of the current generation of country women seems directly linked to a feminist oriented lyric. Lorrie Morgan, for instance, takes clear control of her relationships in "What Part Of No," "Watch Me," and "5 Minutes." Michelle Wright shows off a similar attitude on "Take It Like A Man." And Martina McBride rebels against an abusive husband on "Independence Day." As these examples suggest (and many others could be given), the most progressive and defiant strains of contemporary country music are being created by women.

While the politics of country music eludes many popular prejudices and neat categories of left and right, the fundamental conservatism of the message cannot be denied. Country's conservatism, however, comes not from taking a particular stand on particular issues, but in the way it reads and resolves conflict. Country music may be one of the truest forms of popular music in giving voice to the bitter realities of class and the sorry state of male-female relations. But in offering few avenues of escape and rebellion, country music tends to settle struggle in favor of the powers that be. Change in country music comes mostly from individual hard work and sacrifice, luck, and God. The music's vision of community is insular and backward looking. And as a result, failure breeds feelings of self-blame and resignation.

Nonetheless, country's stoic acceptance of things as they are cannot be taken as an unqualified endorsement of the status quo. The great strength of country music has been its ability to capture white working class life as it really is and without the projection of false hope. Country music knows you can't always get what you want or what you need no matter how hard you try. In this realistic assessment of limits, the music contradicts capitalist ideals of progress, fairness, and happiness through consumption. Accordingly, throughout most of its commercial history, country music has been dismissed as something beneath and apart from mainstream culture.

Fully aware of country music's "negatives," the Nashville music establishment has periodically regroomed the sound and image of the tradition with hopes of winning respectability and crossover appeal. In the 1950s and 1960s, it was the smooth, urbane "Nashville Sound," in the 1970s it was the tasteless pop country of John Denver and Olivia Newton-John, and in the 1980s it was Urban Cowboy role playing. Although all of these trends gave country a temporary commercial boost, hard-core country fans and musicians reacted to each with a purist backlash (bluegrass, the Bakersfield sound, Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings' "outlaw" movement, neotraditionalism) that eventually brought the market back around to traditional sounds.

In the Reagan-Bush-Clinton era, country music has slowly ascended again to mainstream popularity with sounds and images revealing few traces of country's old-time rough edges. This time around country's new audience seems to come from aging white boomers and younger middle-income suburbanites who've tired of classic rock and can't tolerate aggressive youth sounds (metal, hip-hop, alternative rock) or easy listening pop. For these listeners, country supplies a guitar based rock influenced sound, adult subject matter, and yearning for a more simple and decent way of life.

Unfortunately in meeting this demand, the music industry has again resorted to formula: muscles in big hats, starched boot cut Wranglers, choreographed sexy moves, and pale, twang-free impersonations of heartbreak. But at the borders of country, in the progressive new voice of women, left-of-center hillbilly folk (Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Tom Russell, and Iris Dement), country rock (Rodney Crowell and Travis Tritt), traditional bluegrass (the Johnson Mountain Boys), and tradition conscious hard country (Dwight Yoakam and Marty Brown), you can still hear the raw emotions and wild and blue themes of a truly populist art form. The "old" story country music has to tell is too real and too rooted to be forgotten.

[Sandy Carter was born in Gulfport, Mississippi and grew up in Amarillo, Texas. While attending the University Of Texas at Austin, he became active in the late 60s anti-war, student, and civil rights movements. During the last three decades he has been active in organizing around workplace, community, and mental health issues. Since the early 80s, he has been living in the Bay Area. His writing on music, politics, and popular culture has appeared in the Bay Guardian and The San Francisco Chronicle. "Slippin' & Slidin," his column on music and popular culture, appears monthly in Z Magazine. He currently works as a high school counselor in Novato, California.]

==========

Portside aims to provide material of interest to people on the left that will help them to interpret the world and to change it.

Submit via email: [redacted]
Submit via the Web: portside.org/submit
Frequently asked questions: portside.org/faq
Subscribe: portside.org/subscribe
Unsubscribe: portside.org/unsubscribe
Account assistance: portside.org/contact
Search the archives: portside.org/archive

!DSPAM:2676,45da7d0025681792683703!

--0-285307117-1171955327=:20422--

↑ Index

612. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Tue 20 Feb 2007

This little thread goes to show how widely something as simple as a haiku can be interpreted, which can be both good and bad. That's why it's often called an "unfinished poem" -- it requires reader engagement and interpretation. I wonder, though, if perhaps this poem has too much ambiguity, which could be controlled just a little bit to prevent unhelpful misreadings. Capping "Santa Ana" is an option. Not breaking the line after "santa/Santa" would be another option. Or perhaps not.

Given the word "warm," I suspect the poem is more likely to do with the warm Santa Ana winds than that thar Alamo (which, ahem, I forgot). (I plead Alamo-ignorance based on the fact that I'm British -- and now also Canadian.)

Michael

In a message dated 19-Feb-07 9:03:11 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 13:40:28 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

But I had a different wrong interpretation of Santa Ana--as suggested by my call to "remember the Alamo." General Santa Ana was the Mexican general (and later, president) who led the siege against the Alamo.

Michael Dylan Welch <[redacted]> wrote: Yikes, did I ever miss that! Yes, of course, the Santa Ana winds are warm (been too long since I lived in Southern California -- 19 years). That makes a lot of difference to the poem. Which goes to show you the power of line breaks, which in this case completely confused me (and, ahem, thus I'd change them). I'm still puzzled by why the wind would crumple silver paper, though, and still seems to be insufficient for a haiku, plus it also loses the seasonal reference I wondered about (Santa). Thanks for pointing the Santa Anas, Barry.

Michael

In a message dated 17-Feb-07 9:02:21 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Sat, 17 Feb 2007 04:50:03 +0000
From: Barry Schwabsky
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Should we not read "santa ana" as one name? Remember the Alamo!

↑ Index

613. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Sure, I can go with what you're saying, Murat. However, a fabric could also catch something the way a net catches something, which is different, hence the possible confusion. But only a minor one, to be sure. This is aside from whether it's a haiku or not, and I would still say it's too far removed to work as haiku.

Michael

In a message dated 19-Feb-07 9:03:11 PM Pacific Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 12:16:56 -0500
From: Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Michael,

I do believe "catches on" will weaken the piece a lot and make it, as I see it, neither poem nor haiku. Why this is so requires an elaborate explanation which finally may not be too useful.

Along with the rules of haiku, are you not using your range of sensibility as a reader also as a standard? To me there is nothing unclear about "catches." "Catches on" is the "correct" expression if you can not accept "lycra," as an active and even ominous agent. The poem obviously does.

Ciao,

Murat

↑ Index

614. Tisa Bryant
Hi-5 Virus Alert: It Not Me Do It!
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Dear all,

If you get a message from "me" with a link asking you to join hi5 or something, don't click the link! It's serious viral spam. I got it from someone I know, so I clicked it, and now I think it might be sending wack mess to everyone in my address book. I'm trying to warn people....and I'm so sorry!

You know how verbose I am, and that I preface my messages with all kinds of overture, and never send you something without personal comment of some sort, and a signature...so beware of future messages from a "me" who isn't me at all. blah blah crafted blah!

If you get a message saying "Hey" in the subject line, calling you by your full name, with a winking emoticon after it, trash it! The bug has invaded Cynthia Sailers' and Julianna Spallhosz' emails, for all you literati out there acquainted with these two innocents.

love,

Tisa

Art is the accomplice of love.

↑ Index

615. Tony Hooper

Re: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music (fwd)

Tue 20 Feb 2007

All this dixie talk has me thinking:

Dixie Witch : http://www.dixiewitch.net/

On 2/20/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>
>
> Just in case you haven't seen these articles - Alan
>
>
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 22:53:44 -0800
> From: Michael Gurstein <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, > part of tradition of progressive country music
>
> Well worth a read, especially the second article.
>

> MG
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: [redacted] [mailto:[redacted]]
> Sent: February 18, 2007 5:54 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music
>
>
> Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music
>
> * Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
> by Ashley Sayeau (Philadelphia Inquirer)
>
> * Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
> By Sandy Carter (Z Magazine)
>
> ==========
>
> Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
> by Ashley Sayeau
>
> Philadelphia Inquirer - February 16, 2007
>
> http://www.philly.com/mld/inquirer/news/editorial/16709871.htm
>
> On Sunday night at the 49th annual Grammy awards, the > Dixie Chicks took home five awards, including best > album, record and song of the year.
>
> It was a long road, indeed, for the Chicks, whose > enormous fan base and ticket sales famously plummeted
> in 2003 after lead singer Natalie Maines remarked on > the eve of the Iraq war that the group was "ashamed the president of the > United States is from Texas." Within days, radio stations were refusing > to play their music, and fans were demanding refunds. Death threats were > later issued.
>
> Throughout the ordeal, the group remained admirably unapologetic, > insisting that dissent is (or at least should be) a vital liberty in > America. They further maintained this position in their album Taking the > Long Way (which won the Grammy for best album) and especially in the > song "Not Ready To Make Nice," in which they directly addressed their > critics: "It's too late to make it right/ I probably wouldn't if I > could/ Cause I'm mad as hell/ Can't bring myself to do what it is/ You > think I should."

>
> Despite the group's successes, the grudge has held, particularly among > the Nashville music establishment. The Country Music Association > completely snubbed the Chicks at its awards ceremony in May.
>
> Such an affront on the part of country music is not > only cowardly, but also quite antithetical to the > genre's history. For, while country music today is > often equated with pickup trucks, rebel flags, and men > with mullets, it also has a brave and, dare I say, > liberal streak in its closet.
>
> Take Johnny Cash, for instance. Not only did many of > his most famous lyrics center on "the poor and the > beaten down," including a poignant attack on this > country's treatment of American Indians, but also Cash > was a vocal critic of the Vietnam War, as in his famous > song "Man in Black": "I wear the black in mourning for > the lives that could have been/ Each week we lose a > hundred fine young men."
>
> And then there is Willie Nelson, who on Valentine's Day > 2006 released a love song about gay cowboys, titled,
> "Cowboys Are Frequently, Secretly (Fond of Each > Other)." Perhaps more seriously, he has been an avid > supporter of presidential hopeful Dennis Kucinich, who, > while arguing for universal health care and a swift > withdrawal from Iraq, is probably the furthest left of > any Democratic candidate.
>
> Women in country music - like the Dixie Chicks - have a > long tradition of being particularly bold in speaking > out against some of the very conventions their record > labels and conservative fan base celebrate. Back in > 1933, the Carter Family, which consisted of A.P.
> Carter; his wife, Sara Doughtery Carter; and her > cousin, the groundbreaking guitar player Maybelle > Addington Carter, sang about a young woman who chose to > commit suicide rather than marry. In Sara's sorrowful > croon, we hear her say, "I never will marry/ I'll be no > man's wife/ I expect to live single all the days of my > life." Needless to say, she later divorced A.P.

>
> Perhaps most memorable are some of Loretta Lynn's > lyrics, particularly from the 1960s and 1970s. Released > in 1966, her song "Dear Uncle Sam" was an early anti-> Vietnam protest song. And though she once feigned > dozing off while listening to feminist advocate Betty > Friedan speak as a fellow guest on The David Frost
> Show, Lynn was a pretty controversial women's advocate.
> In "I Wanna Be Free," she wrote of the liberating > effect of divorce: "I'm gonna take this chain from > around my finger/ And throw it just as far as I can > sling 'er." She did the same thing for birth control in > "The Pill": "The feelin' good comes easy now/ Since > I've got the pill."
>
> As daring as some outlaw artists have been, the country > music establishment has often proved even more dogged > in its conservative views. Lynn has purportedly had > more songs banned than any other country music singer.
> And Cash, never completely at home in the country music > world, once said that "the very idea of unconventional > or even original ideas ending up on 'country' radio" > was "absurd." No wonder, then, that in his gay cowboy > song, Willie Nelson lamented that "you won't hear this > song on the radio/ Not on your local TV."
>
> With the November election, particularly with strong > Democratic gains in Virginia and Missouri, Republican politicians may > have to rethink their long-standing Southern strategy. Similarly, with > last Sunday night's awards, country music should embrace the fact that > its greatest assets have never been scared of controversy or doing the > right thing.
>
> To quote the great Dolly Parton - who has sung a few > feminist, antiwar, and progressive anthems herself -
> "You'll never do a whole lot unless you're brave enough > to try."
>

> [Ashley Sayeau is a freelance writer currently living > in Buffalo, N.Y., was raised in Tennessee, and has > written on women and politics for a variety of > anthologies and publications, including The Nation, > Salon and Dissent.]
>
> (c) 2007 Philadelphia Inquirer
>
> ==========
>
> Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
> By Sandy Carter
>
> Z Magazine - September 1994
>
> http://zena.secureforum.com/znet/zmag/articles/sept94carter.htm
>
> Some of the fondest memories of my west Texas childhood > are linked to the lonesome moan of the pedal steel > guitar and the soulful honky tonk voices of Hank > Williams, Lefty Frizzell, and Ernest Tubb. In the > 1950s, as I was entering grade school and gaining some awareness of the > world around me, these sounds served up essential clues to my sense of > time and place.
>
> A few years later, however, I perceived that some > considered country music inferior to other forms of > popular music. Southern accents, nasal voices, and bad > grammar, I learned, were the most visible signs of this inferiority. So > I became self conscious about my drawl and with some vigilance and > discipline began modifying my twang according to standards I took to be > more enlightened.
>
> But the full arsenal of Southern stereotypes was not so > easy to escape. In my 20s, as I began living and > working in other parts of the country, I came to > realize that people outside the South, particularly > politically progressive people outside the South, > judged white Southerners and nearly all aspects of > their cultural heritage as backward. And this snobbery > often found its most candid expression in mocking and ridiculing country > music.

>
> The elitist views that define popular prejudices about > the country tradition greeted the music at its > commercial birth. In the 1920s, when country music > first felt the pressures of commercialization, rural > traditions of all kinds were experiencing tensions and challenges > brought on by industrialization. Country sounds suggesting older and > more settled ways seemed inherently at odds with rapid social and > technological change. The music expressed a longing for stability and > order and deep-seated fears of the temptations of the modern world. At > the same time, the music could not help but reflect hopes of escaping > the hardships associated with traditional rural life.
>
> Conflicted feelings also derived from the Southerness > of the music. While the music of Stephen Foster and the writings of Mark > Twain fueled romantic notions of the South as an exotic land of > enchantment, the region also evoked images of slavery and the Civil War, > the Scopes monkey trial, and the Klan. Thus for many, country music, > regardless of its subject matter, was nothing more than the sound of > ignorance and racism. Retaining a stubborn self-consciousness of its > white, rural, Southern, working class origins, country music today > continues to attract and repulse listeners by stirring the same opposing > images. Nonetheless, in a span of 70 years, country music has grown from > regional to national and international popularity. And presently, the > music is cresting at a commercial high-water mark justifying marketing > claims that country is now "America's pop music."
>
> With mass popularity, however, some of the most > distinctive qualities of country music have been > diluted. Listening to the musical styles dominating > country radio, one hears a generic McDonald's styled > product so stripped of "hayseed" connotations that it > virtually erases the line between country and various > forms of easy listening white pop and bland 1970s > styled corporate rock. While harder and more > traditional country sounds have not disappeared, the > market driven industry bias toward an urban-suburban contemporary sound > has certainly muddled the definition and origins of the musical idioms > known as country.
>
> Like other music forms of our culture, country music is > an amalgam of influences. Its sound, song structure, > and lyrical text reveal a heavy debt to African > American musical styles, particularly blues and gospel. Rhythmically, > country draws most on the dance meters of English and European country > dance tunes. As to lyrics and narrative style, country storytelling has > roots in Southern Protestant sermonizing, barroom banter, front porch > story swapping, and the general character of regional oral traditions.

> Other distinctive characteristics relate to the way the music is > performed. Unlike many pop performers, country singers write much of > their material bringing a subjective, direct voice to their performance.
> Like blues singers, they aim for intimacy more than technical > sophistication. In the singer's voice and story lay the central appeal > of country music.
>
> Though country music is a vocal music above all else, > its instrumental sound is unique and immediately > identifiable. It begins with the guitar and is filled > out with fiddle, banjo, mandolin, dobro, bass, pedal > steel guitar, and harmonica. The distinctive country > sound comes from the way the musicians play these > instruments with flat picks, finger picks, bottlenecks, > and bow. In contrast to the smooth, melodic approach of > pop and classical music, country players, again showing > an African American influence, favor a rough-edged > attack with strings popped, scraped, hammered, and > frailed. Mirroring the unadorned vocal sound, > instrumental solos and fills are deliberately > "unrefined." The emphasis is on sounds that > counterpoint the social and emotional realism conveyed > by the singer and the song. Accordingly, country sounds > are harsh, rowdy, romantic, humorous, and rousing. Most > of all, they are mournful.
>
> Did you ever see a robin weep When leaves begin to die
>
> That means he's lost the will to live I'm so lonesome I > could cry
>
> --Hank Williams
>
> Historically the most dominant and unmistakable quality > of the country sound is sadness. One of the great > stereotypes plaguing country music is the cry-in-the-> beer loser drowning the pain of romantic loss in some > dark tavern. But the heartbreak in country music runs > deeper than cheating, drinking, and divorce. The sad > tale country music has to tell goes back to the > devastation the region suffered during the Civil War, > the loss of rural identity, and the great migration of Southerners to > urban centers in the Midwest and West during the 1940s and 1950s.

> Understandably, country music is homesick music, permanently colored by > feelings of longing and lost innocence.
>
> The loss at the heart of the country song has been > expressed through two divergent impulses. When the > Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers came to Bristol, > Tennessee in August 1927 to perform before record scout > Ralph Peer and a Victor Talking Machine, they brought > with them distinct bodies of material representing > seemingly contradictory themes and values. In the > Carter Family's huge repertoire of traditional songs > resided the morally decent old-time virtues of work, > family, humility, and Christian fellowship. By > contrast, Rodgers, an ex-railroad brakeman from > Meridian, Mississippi, wrote tunes with roots in blues > and jazz, folk and cowboy songs, work gang hollers and > pop. Though Rodgers wrote his share of songs glorifying > the home and family, his work also celebrated the lives > of hell-raisers, hoboes, wayward lovers, criminals, > rounders, and ramblers.
>
> Both approaches proved immediately popular. By 1933, > the year of his death from tuberculosis, Jimmie Rodgers > had become country's first crossover success and in the > South his status was near mythic. And by the time the > Carter Family disbanded in 1943, their music was well-> known throughout the United States, as well as parts of > Canada, Mexico, England, Ireland, and Australia. Aside > from establishing the commercial viability of country > music, the breakthroughs of Rodgers and the Carter > Family gave the shared musical culture of the white > South coherence. Though commercialization accelerated > the homogenization of sounds, by documenting the > diversity of local and regional styles it also helped Southerners gain a > fuller sense of their common cultural heritage. The music labeled

> "hillbilly" dramatized what they suffered, survived, and left behind. It > offered solace and understanding, realism and escape. But most of all, > it was music that responded to change with a reassertion of tradition.
> The Carter Family's religious tunes and sentimental ballads and Jimmie > Rodgers' chronicles of the rambling man, in different ways, mapped the > boundaries of tradition and the dire consequences of its breakdown.
>
> Because of this emphasis on Southerness and tradition, > country music has long been associated with all that is reactionary.
> However, while country music generally expresses a conservative outlook, > the view of country as an exclusively white, male-dominated, right-wing > tradition is unfair and one-dimensional. At no point in its history has > country music expressed a consistent political ideology. Although > performers such as W. Lee O'Daniel, Jimmie Davis, and Roy Acuff have run > for political office and many country musicians have endorsed candidates > and aired opinions in public, the music resists easy ideological > labeling. Every hard- headed patriotic diatribe like "Okie From > Muskogee" can be matched by songs like Waylon Jennings's multicultural, > egalitarian anthem "America" and James Talley's ode to populist > rebellion "Are They Gonna Make Us Outlaws Again?":
>
> Now there's always been a bottom
>
> And there's always been a top
>
> And someone took the orders
>
> And someone called the shots
>
> And someone took the beatin', Lord
>
> And someone got the prize
>
> Well, that may be the way its been
>
> But that don't mean its right
>
> More importantly, since country music has always been a > voice for small farmers, factory hands, day laborers, > the displaced and unemployed, its harsh portraits of > work and everyday life carry an implicit critique of capitalism. Instead > of overt political protest, country songs prefer to deliver social > criticism through poignant descriptions of economic hardship and family > sacrifice. Some of the best examples of this style of protest are Merle > Haggard's "Mama's Hungry Eyes," Dolly Parton's "Coat Of Many Colors," > and Loretta Lynn's "Coal Miner's Daughter."

>
> As to the issue of race, country music's sentimental > attachment to Dixie is often taken as an endorsement of > white supremacy and slavery. Country music's > glorification of the South, however, derives mostly > from an idealized notion of working the land and the > real life movement of millions off the land during the > years of the Great Depression and World War II. Not surprisingly, > hundreds of country tunes plead the case of the farmer and celebrate the > beauty of Southern landscapes. By contrast, since the birth of the > country music industry in the 1920s, very few country songs have offered > direct commentary on race relations in the South, and certainly no > popular song has advocated a return to the slave system. This doesn't > mean, of course, that white Southerners or the country music industry > are free of racism. Rather, it suggests that the homesickness in country > music is based primarily on the erosion of rural identity.
>
> Still, it is obvious that "whiteness" is dominant in > country music. Despite the tradition's enormous debt to > African American music and other ethnic music cultures, non-white > performers are still exceedingly rare in country music. When voices of > color have gained popularity in the country field, it has generally been > through songs and styles evidencing only traces of their racial origins.
> Nonetheless, in recent decades Mexican-Americans such as Johnny > Rodriguez, Freddy Fender, Tish Hinojosa, and Flaco Jiminez and African > Americans such as Charlie Pride, Stoney Edwards, and Big Al Downing have > won acceptance with country audiences. And occasionally, there are tunes > like Bobby Braddock's "I Believe The South Is Gonna Rise Again" that > break the mold:
>
> The Jacksons down the road were black like we were
>
> But our skins were white and theirs was black
>
> I believe the South's gonna rise again
>
> But not the way we thought it would back then
>

> Some of the strongest stereotypes attached to country > music revolve around the social and sexual roles of > women. To many people Tammy Wynette's 1968 hit "Stand > By Your Man" typifies the passive, long suffering > mentality of the unliberated country woman. In truth, > the female perspective in country music is much broader > and far more assertive than this superficial stereotype > can allow. The richest and most authoritative evidence > of this reality can be found in Mary Bufwack and Robert Oermann's > Finding Her Voice: The Saga Of Women In Country Music(Crown Publishers > Inc., New York). This 541 page narrative tracing the lives and music of > country women from the late 19th century up to the present, shows how > country music has encouraged white working class women in their > struggles to survive and resist "economic exploitation, sexual > subjugation, and limited opportunities."
>
> Exploring the folk origins of country music, Bufwack > and Oermann argue that women were the primary > folklorists for early rural music, memorizing the tunes > and lyrics that provided the basic entertainment for > the family and community. And in their own original > ballads, women expressed sexual fantasies and > discontents in songs loaded with images of romantic > longing, promiscuity, violence, and death. Bufwack and > Oermann also reveal more active and socially oriented resistance in the > depression era songs of Sarah Gunning, the composer of "I Hate The > Capitalist System," and Aunt Molly Jackson, who began making up class > conscious songs and walking picket lines before she was ten.
>
> It was not until the 1950s, however, that women in > country music began to gain commercial equality with > men. Following Kitty Well's surprising 1952 hit "It > Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels"--a woman's > retort to Hank Thompson's "The Wild Side Of Life--women > singers such as Patsy Cline, Loretta Lynn, Dolly > Parton, and Tammy Wynette started achieving record > sales and stardom rivaling country men. The appeal of > the modern country female star, Bufwack and Oermann > note, in many ways mirrored general trends in country > music. Country tunes of the 1950s and 1960s still > focused on subjects of work, family, and religion. But reflecting an > audience that was now struggling to come to grips with the realities of > urban life and wage labor, the music increasingly dealt with alcoholism, > infidelity, and divorce. Reacting to these problems from a distinctly > female point of view, country women stepped forward with songs > displaying tougher attitudes. Sad songs of betrayal prevailed, but women > now would sing also of sexual freedom and nights on the town. And in > love songs, women would voice a straightforward demand for relationships > based on fair play and an end to double standards.

>
> Some of the purest samples of this new toughness came > in a string of popular tunes by Loretta Lynn. With a > basic hard country sound and a writing style favoring down-to-earth blue > collar bluntness, Lynn laid down the law to men in songs such as "Fist > City" and "Don't Come Home A-Drinking (With Loving On Your Mind)." With > her singles "The Pill" and "One's On The Way," Lynn also became the > first popular country singer to publicly advocate for birth control.
> These attitudes and Lynn's reputation for gearing her shows to women, > earned her a legion of devoted, fanatical fans, including a large > lesbian following.
>
> Although few country music women of the 1950s and 1960s > made music as self-consciously for women as Lynn, the > emergence of country women superstars put "the woman's perspective" on > substantially more equal terms with that of the working man. By 1984 > about one-fourth of the top country singles and albums were by women.
> And today's country and pop charts are overflowing with country
> women--Reba McEntire, Wynonna Judd, Mary Chapin-Carpenter, Trisha > Yearwood, Suzy Bogguss, Kathy Mattea, Patty Loveless, Pam Tillis, and > K.T. Oslin, to mention only a few. Most significantly, the commercial > appeal of the current generation of country women seems directly linked > to a feminist oriented lyric. Lorrie Morgan, for instance, takes clear > control of her relationships in "What Part Of No," "Watch Me," and "5 > Minutes." Michelle Wright shows off a similar attitude on "Take It Like > A Man." And Martina McBride rebels against an abusive husband on > "Independence Day." As these examples suggest (and many others could be > given), the most progressive and defiant strains of contemporary country > music are being created by women.
>
> While the politics of country music eludes many popular prejudices and > neat categories of left and right, the fundamental conservatism of the > message cannot be denied. Country's conservatism, however, comes not > from taking a particular stand on particular issues, but in the way it > reads and resolves conflict. Country music may be one of the truest > forms of popular music in giving voice to the bitter realities of class > and the sorry state of male-female relations. But in offering few > avenues of escape and rebellion, country music tends to settle struggle > in favor of the powers that be. Change in country music comes mostly > from individual hard work and sacrifice, luck, and God. The music's > vision of community is insular and backward looking. And as a result, > failure breeds feelings of self-blame and resignation.

>
> Nonetheless, country's stoic acceptance of things as > they are cannot be taken as an unqualified endorsement > of the status quo. The great strength of country music > has been its ability to capture white working class > life as it really is and without the projection of > false hope. Country music knows you can't always get > what you want or what you need no matter how hard you > try. In this realistic assessment of limits, the music contradicts > capitalist ideals of progress, fairness, and happiness through > consumption. Accordingly, throughout most of its commercial history, > country music has been dismissed as something beneath and apart from > mainstream culture.
>
> Fully aware of country music's "negatives," the > Nashville music establishment has periodically > regroomed the sound and image of the tradition with > hopes of winning respectability and crossover appeal.
> In the 1950s and 1960s, it was the smooth, urbane
> "Nashville Sound," in the 1970s it was the tasteless > pop country of John Denver and Olivia Newton-John, and > in the 1980s it was Urban Cowboy role playing. Although > all of these trends gave country a temporary commercial > boost, hard-core country fans and musicians reacted to > each with a purist backlash (bluegrass, the Bakersfield > sound, Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings' "outlaw" > movement, neotraditionalism) that eventually brought > the market back around to traditional sounds.
>
> In the Reagan-Bush-Clinton era, country music has > slowly ascended again to mainstream popularity with > sounds and images revealing few traces of country's > old-time rough edges. This time around country's new > audience seems to come from aging white boomers and > younger middle-income suburbanites who've tired of > classic rock and can't tolerate aggressive youth sounds > (metal, hip-hop, alternative rock) or easy listening > pop. For these listeners, country supplies a guitar > based rock influenced sound, adult subject matter, and > yearning for a more simple and decent way of life.

>
> Unfortunately in meeting this demand, the music > industry has again resorted to formula: muscles in big > hats, starched boot cut Wranglers, choreographed sexy > moves, and pale, twang-free impersonations of > heartbreak. But at the borders of country, in the > progressive new voice of women, left-of-center > hillbilly folk (Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Tom Russell, and > Iris Dement), country rock (Rodney Crowell and Travis
> Tritt), traditional bluegrass (the Johnson Mountain
> Boys), and tradition conscious hard country (Dwight > Yoakam and Marty Brown), you can still hear the raw > emotions and wild and blue themes of a truly populist > art form. The "old" story country music has to tell is > too real and too rooted to be forgotten.
>
> [Sandy Carter was born in Gulfport, Mississippi and > grew up in Amarillo, Texas. While attending the > University Of Texas at Austin, he became active in the > late 60s anti-war, student, and civil rights movements.
> During the last three decades he has been active in > organizing around workplace, community, and mental > health issues. Since the early 80s, he has been living > in the Bay Area. His writing on music, politics, and > popular culture has appeared in the Bay Guardian and > The San Francisco Chronicle. "Slippin' & Slidin," his > column on music and popular culture, appears monthly in > Z Magazine. He currently works as a high school > counselor in Novato, California.]
>
> ==========
>
> _____
>
> Portside aims to provide material of interest > to people on the left that will help them to > interpret the world and to change it.

>
> Submit via email: [redacted]
> Submit via the Web: portside.org/submit
> Frequently asked questions: portside.org/faq
> Subscribe: portside.org/subscribe
> Unsubscribe: portside.org/unsubscribe
> Account assistance: portside.org/contact
> Search the archives: portside.org/archive
>
>
> !DSPAM:2676,45da7d0025681792683703!
>
>

↑ Index

616. Joel Weishaus
"The Way North" 2 text-2
Tue 20 Feb 2007

"The Way North" 2 Text 2.

http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/North-2/text-2.htm

-Joel

↑ Index

617. David A. Kirschenbaum
NYC Tonight: A 40th Birthday Celebration for Kurt Cobain
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Come See This Village Voice Choice and Timeout NY Critic's Pick Tonight

---

Boog City's Classic Albums Live presents

A 40th Birthday Celebration for Kurt Cobain

Tues. Feb. 20, 7:00 p.m., $8

Cakeshop
152 Ludlow St.
NYC

With all three Nirvana studio albums

‹Bleach, Nevermind, and In Utero‹

performed live by

Daouets
The Domestics
Dibson T. Hoffweiler
Jeffrey Lewis
Limp Richard
The Marianne Pillsburys
The Olga Gogolas
Renminbi
Schwervon
The Sparrows
The Trouble Dolls
Genan Zilkha

Hosted by Boog City editor and publisher David Kirschenbaum

Directions: F/V to Second Ave.; F to Delancey St.; J/M/Z to Essex St. Venue is between Stanton and Rivington streets.

For further information: 212-842-BOOG(2664), [redacted], [redacted], or http://www.cake-shop.com/

Musical acts[1] bios and websites follow show running order

Bleach

The Olga Gogolas
1. Blew
2. Floyd the Barber
3. About a Girl

Limp Richard
4. School
5. Love Buzz
6. Paper Cuts

The Olga Gogolas
7. Negative Creep
8. Scoff
9. Swap Meet

Jeffrey Lewis
10. Mr. Moustache
11. Sifting
12. Big Cheese

Marianne Pillsbury and The Song Hoes
13. Downer

Nevermind

1. Smells Like Teen Spirit
2. In Bloom

Schwervon
3. Come as You Are
4. Breed
5. Lithium

The Trouble Dolls
6. Polly
7. Territorial Pissings
8. Drain You

Genan Zilkha
9. Lounge Act
10. Stay Away
11. On a Plain

Dibson T. Hoffweiler
12. Something In The Way
    Endless, Nameless

In Utero

The Domestics
1. Serve The Servants
2. Scentless Apprentice
3. Heart-Shaped Box

Renminbi
4. Rape Me
5. Frances Farmer Will Have Her Revenge On Seattle
6. Dumb

Daouets
7. Very Ape
8. Milk It
9. Pennyroyal Tea

The Sparrows
10. Radio Friendly Unit Shifter
11. tourette's
12. All Apologies

Bios:

*Daouets http://www.myspace.com/daouets DAOUETS is a mini-supergroup devised by three musicians who, as tireless collaborators in New York, wanted a little space for their solo material to breathe. Switching off instruments, songwriters, and moods with ease, the group draws on its diverse musical heritage and the diverse talents of its members.

*The Domestics http://www.thedomestics.com/ During a brief stint as an A&R assistant, Alina Moscovitz (ex-Bionic Finger) spent her days listening to piles of less-than-stellar demos. She decided she could do better, so she left the corporate world and returned to songwriting. She then hooked up with music supervisor and drummer Eric Shaw (fresh from the break-up of Conquistador which featured Sam Endicott of The Bravery). They soon lured Evan Silverman (ex-Rosenbergs) away from his jazz bass lessons in Paris and gigs at the Rainbow Room back to the world of rock.

As a trio, The Domestics morphed into a potent combination of blazing pop-punk energy, sickeningly catchy hooks, and lyrics that have a sharp wit and intelligence seldom heard inside of a three-minute song. If Debbie Harry shoved her way onstage during a Green Day show, the result might sound something like this.

Besides constantly playing live shows, the Brooklyn-based band wrote the closing credits song, "Girl I Never Kissed" for the film The D Word, "Anorexic Love Song" appears on the X-Girls DVD and "Fire Hazard" was included in the "Say It Don't Spray It" compilation CD packaged with the Warped Tour DVD. The band has participated in MEANY Fest, International Pop Overthrow and LadyfestEast festivals. The Domestics are currently recording a full-length album.

*Dibson T. Hoffweiler http://dibson.net/ http://www.myspace.com/dibson/ The latest in a long line of quirky anti-folk ingenues, including Beck, Adam Green and Jeffrey Lewis, Dibs applies that time-honored tradition of off-beat songwriting to his own private world of sugar factories, laundry baskets and ducks. With a low voice, both sweet and deadpan, and a guitar-style both virtuosic and sloppy, Dibson Hoffweiler carves out a space of compassion and intelligence in a landscape of boring love songs and thinly-veiled songwriterly misogyny.

Known for his work in anti-folk flagship bands Cheese On Bread, Huggabroomstik and Urban Barnyard, Dibs began his cultural life as an anonymous Moldy Peaches fan. But, after a stint working the soundboard at the Sidewalk Cafe, and two years generating buzz with his old band, Dibs & Sara, this Jersey boy established himself as a musical force in his own right. After several months touring Europe and North America, Dibs has proved (to himself, and to others) that his bizarre, ramshackle aesthetic is palatable outside the freaky comfort zone of New York anti-folk.

*Jeffrey Lewis http://www.thejeffreylewissite.com/ Jeffrey Lewis is a New York City born-and-bred comic book artist as well as being a local antifolk staple; with or without his band he performs his unique mix of lo-fi folk, sci-fi punk & hand-illustrated "low-budget videos" regularly around the United States and Europe. As of 2007 he has three albums out on the venerable indie label Rough Trade and his most recent comic book series "Fuff" is up to issue #5.

*Limp Richard http://www.breedingground.com/ Limp Richard (tonight without his backing band, The Disappointments) is wrapping up recording of a new LP at Olive Juice. By the time it's released, however, it's probably going to have a completely different name. Just feeling ornery.

*Marianne Pillsbury and The Song Hoes http://www.mariannepillsbury.com/ Maine native Marianne Pillsbury writes pop-rock songs with cleverly-crafted, hook-laden melodies and brash, witty, tongue-in-cheek lyrics. Released in 2004, her debut album The Wrong Marianne has received enthusiastic reviews from The New York Times, Time Out New York, The Boston Herald and The San Francisco Chronicle and elicited comparisons to the best work of Liz Phair, Juliana Hatfield and Jill Sobule. The album was named a Top 12 DIY Pick in Performing Songwriter Magazine. The song "Boo Hoo" won Best Alt/Rock Song in The Great American Song Contest 2004 and was also selected for inclusion on ROCKRGRL magazine's Discoveries 2005 compilation CD.

*The Olga Gogolas The itinerant and magisterial Olga Gogolas feature Wayne Waverly on guitar and vocals, and James Keepnews on bass-synth-noise watch. For this set, the OG's plan to completely demolish Cobain's original arrangements on six tracks from Bleach, only to resurrect them like so many false grunge deities who stank of junk.

*Renminbi http://www.renminbinyc.com/ http://www.myspace.com/renminbi Definitely not for the faint-hearted, we combine stripped-down punk basics with ass-shaking keyboard grooves and apocalyptic build-ups. Someone else said it best: "Imagine Polvo fronted by Kim Gordon and you might have a sense of NYC trio Renminbi's sound. Š Pitting frenetic drumbeats against postrock keyboards and angular guitar, Renminbi retain all the concision without losing an ounce of urgency.[2]

*Schwervon! http://www.olivejuicemusic.com/schwervon.html http://www.myspace.com/schwervon Schwervon! Is a two-piece rock band. Nan and Matt have been a couple longer than they have been a band. Their relationship influences their art. Their art influences their relationship. They are two birds of a different feather. You might say one flies and one rolls and they meet in the middle with two halves of the worm. They are a collaboration.

Is one Sonny and one Cher? Is one a pop lover and one a noise lover? Why do they both love food so much? Why are they obsessed with their cat Gummo?

*The Sparrows http://myspace.com/rachelandrew Andrew Phillip Tipton met Rachel Talentino in Savannah while working at The Gap. A common love for catchy melodies, Carole King, and boys led them to Brooklyn. As The Sparrows, Andrew and Rachel make up the cutest anti-folk duo around! Simple and lovely.

*The Trouble Dolls
http://www.troubledolls.net/
Trouble Dolls are Cheri, Matty, and Chris. They play pop music. They are from Brooklyn. They do not smoke. Their album "Sticky" is available on Half a Cow Records. They thank you for coming to see them play.

*Genan Zilkha http://www.myspace.com/genanisfabulous Genan Zilkha, guitar/vocals, was a classically trained pianist until she found that she had a taste of rock and roll. Since that didn't work out, she now spends her time writing folk songs with titles such as "I Think I Might Be Food Poisoning (But it could also be love)" and "I Know What Will Make You Not A Dyke." Genan is also known for her unique takes on Britney Spears songs, in particular her version of Britney's version of the Bobby Brown song "My Prerogative." She has performed at the Knitting Factory, as well as at venues throughout Rhode Island and Binghamton, NY.

David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

618. Adam Fieled
Ann Bogle on PFS Post
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Check out new work from Minnesota's Ann Bogle on PFS Post:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

"Turn and face the strange changes...."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

Looking for earth-friendly autos?
Browse Top Cars by "Green Rating" at Yahoo! Autos' Green Center.

↑ Index

619. Nick Piombino
Unnameable Book Party
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Please come celebrate the publication of Nick Piombino's fait accompli (with an afterword by Gary Sullivan) from Factory School's Heretical Texts
http://www.factoryschool.org/pubs/heretical/vol3/piombino/index.html

TUESDAY, February 27
at 8pm.

at UNNAMEABLE BOOKS
456 Bergen Street
Brooklyn NY 11217
(off Flatbush Avenue)
[redacted]
[redacted]
www.unnameablebooks.net

Easy* to get to. Take the 2 or 3 train to Bergen street stop (not to be confused with the other Bergen stop on the F line). Unnameable Books is just 1/2 block from the subway. Pinchik paint is on the corner. *Bergen is one stop past the Atlantic AND Pacific St transfer point with the D,M,N,R and B,Q,2,3,4,5 lines

↑ Index

620. Jennifer Karmin
"Growing Up Girl"
Tue 20 Feb 2007

---

hi poetics people....big thanks to all who've emailed me support for this important book project. if you're interested in hosting a reading or discussion, feel free to be in touch with editor michelle sewell. her email is: [redacted].

the anthology is also an interesting supplement for college courses and is currently being taught at a few schools across the country. it's been compared to cherrie moraga and gloria anzaldua's 1983 collection

"this bridge called my back: writings by radical women of color."

cheers,
jennifer karmin

Date: Wed, 14 Feb 2007 07:43:14 -0500
From: Ruth Lepson <[redacted]> Subject: Re: "Growing Up Girl" Chicago reading

>many congratulations on the anthology. I edited Poetry from >Sojourner: A Feminist Anthology & know what it means to gather the >words of disparate women & bring those words to a larger world. >Hope it is greeted warmly. Women & Children is a great place to >begin. Wish you success on your reading tour.

On 2/8/07 6:47 PM, "Jennifer Karmin" <[redacted]> wrote:

> hey poetry friends....check out this new anthology
of > women's writing edited by michelle sewell. it's a > terrific example of a community-based project being > fully supported by an independent press.

> onwards,
> jennifer karmin
> ----------
> Published by GirlChild Press, this eclectic collection
> of poems, essays, and short stories documents the > transition from girl to woman as told by the girls
and > women who know the journey best. The multicultural > anthology examines issues such as identity, domestic > violence, acceptance, motherhood, beauty, and > sexuality. It can be bought from independent > bookstores like Women and Children First or purchased > through http://www.girlchildpress.com.

___ Need Mail bonding? Go to the Yahoo! Mail Q&A for great tips from Yahoo!
Answers users. http://answers.yahoo.com/dir/?link=list&sid=396546091

↑ Index

621. Clay Banes

Saturday, FEB. 24 @ 7:30PM: Jill Magi, Dana Teen Lomax, Sarah Rosenthal

Tue 20 Feb 2007

Poets Jill Magi, Dana Teen Lomax, and Sarah Rosenthal

This Saturday @ 7:30PM
PEGASUS BOOKS DOWNTOWN
2349 Shattuck Avenue
Berkeley, CA
[redacted]

Jill Magi is the author of Threads, a hybrid work of prose, poetry, and collage, due out in February 2007 from Futurepoem Books. She is also the author of Cadastral Map, a chapbook from Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs, as well as several other small handmade books that she often gives away. Her writing and visual work has appeared in HOW2, The Brooklyn Rail, The New Review of Literature, Aufgabe, and Chain, and is forthcoming from The Tiny. She is a 2006-2007 writer-in-residence with the Lower Manhattan Cultural Council where she is at work on a manuscript investigating social memory and museums, monuments, and memorials. Jill teaches at City College and The Eugene Lang College of The New School, and from her apartment in Brooklyn, she runs Sona Books, a community-based chapbook press publishing risky and/or quiet, project-driven works.

Dana Teen Lomax is the author of Curren¢y (Palm Press, 2006). She is a fourth generation Californian who teaches poetry and writing at several institutions. Work from her publication, Room (a+bend press), was awarded the Joseph Henry Jackson Prize for poetry and her writing has been supported by the California Arts Council, the Marin Arts Council, the Peninsula Community Foundation, the Academy of American Poets, and others. Currently she is co-editing Letters To Poets, Conversations About Poetics, Politics, and Community and making Q, a series of "home movies" about raising her daughter on the grounds of a prison. She lives with her family in northern California.

Sarah Rosenthal is the author of three chapbooks: How I Wrote This Story (Margin to Margin, 2001), sitings (a+bend, 2000), and not-chicago (Melodeon, 1998). Her poetry and fiction has appeared in journals such as Bird Dog, Shampoo, 26, Fence, Lungfull!, Cross-Cultural Poetics (XcP), and Boston Review. It has been anthologized in Bay Poetics (Faux Press, 2006) and Hinge (Crack Press, 2002). Her reviews and interviews have appeared in Denver Quarterly, How2, Rain Taxi, Jacket, New American Writing, Aufgabe, and Xantippe. Sarah has taught creative writing at San Francisco State University and Santa Clara University. She is the recipient of the Primavera Fiction Prize and the Leo Litwak Award for Fiction. Her book Manhatten is forthcoming from Spuyten Duyvil.

--
EYEBALL HATRED
http://claytonbanes.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

622. Eric Dickey
Re: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music (fwd)
Tue 20 Feb 2007

I really appreciated reading the article on country music. Although I don't think of myself as a big fan of country music, I do appreciate its place. Back in the 1990s, I worked with some folks who were ardent country music fans. I realized then that country music is one of the last places for philosophical thought and reflection by folks who generally shun such intellectualism. In a sense, it's the last vestige for philosophical thought for many common, working class Americans.

Some other great contributors to the genre, Ray Charles was country, so were the Grateful Dead, as is Neil Young, Tom Waits, and many others. These are folks who evade compartmentalization and who employ many genres into their art, including country. Even Wyclef Jean incorporates country into his music.

Hopefully, like many posts I add to this list, this one will also be shot down.

the one and only,

Eric Wayne Dickey

Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:

Just in case you haven't seen these articles - Alan

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 22:53:44 -0800
From: Michael Gurstein
To: [redacted]
Subject: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks,
part of tradition of progressive country music

Well worth a read, especially the second article.

MG

-----Original Message-----
From: [redacted] [mailto:[redacted]]

Sent: February 18, 2007 5:54 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

* Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
by Ashley Sayeau (Philadelphia Inquirer)

* Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
By Sandy Carter (Z Magazine)

==========

Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
by Ashley Sayeau

Philadelphia Inquirer - February 16, 2007

http://www.philly.com/mld/inquirer/news/editorial/16709871.htm

On Sunday night at the 49th annual Grammy awards, the Dixie Chicks took home five awards, including best album, record and song of the year.

It was a long road, indeed, for the Chicks, whose enormous fan base and ticket sales famously plummeted
in 2003 after lead singer Natalie Maines remarked on the eve of the Iraq war that the group was "ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas." Within days, radio stations were refusing to play their music, and fans were demanding refunds. Death threats were later issued.

Throughout the ordeal, the group remained admirably unapologetic, insisting that dissent is (or at least should be) a vital liberty in America. They further maintained this position in their album Taking the Long Way (which won the Grammy for best album) and especially in the song "Not Ready To Make Nice,"
in which they directly addressed their critics: "It's too late to make it right/ I probably wouldn't if I could/ Cause I'm mad as hell/ Can't bring myself to do what it is/ You think I should."

Despite the group's successes, the grudge has held, particularly among the Nashville music establishment. The Country Music Association completely snubbed the Chicks at its awards ceremony in May.

Such an affront on the part of country music is not only cowardly, but also quite antithetical to the genre's history. For, while country music today is often equated with pickup trucks, rebel flags, and men

with mullets, it also has a brave and, dare I say, liberal streak in its closet.

Take Johnny Cash, for instance. Not only did many of his most famous lyrics center on "the poor and the beaten down," including a poignant attack on this country's treatment of American Indians, but also Cash was a vocal critic of the Vietnam War, as in his famous song "Man in Black": "I wear the black in mourning for the lives that could have been/ Each week we lose a hundred fine young men."

And then there is Willie Nelson, who on Valentine's Day 2006 released a love song about gay cowboys, titled, "Cowboys Are Frequently, Secretly (Fond of Each Other)." Perhaps more seriously, he has been an avid supporter of presidential hopeful Dennis Kucinich, who, while arguing for universal health care and a swift withdrawal from Iraq, is probably the furthest left of any Democratic candidate.

Women in country music - like the Dixie Chicks - have a long tradition of being particularly bold in speaking out against some of the very conventions their record labels and conservative fan base celebrate. Back in 1933, the Carter Family, which consisted of A.P. Carter; his wife, Sara Doughtery Carter; and her cousin, the groundbreaking guitar player Maybelle Addington Carter, sang about a young woman who chose to commit suicide rather than marry. In Sara's sorrowful croon, we hear her say, "I never will marry/ I'll be no man's wife/ I expect to live single all the days of my life." Needless to say, she later divorced A.P.

Perhaps most memorable are some of Loretta Lynn's lyrics, particularly from the 1960s and 1970s. Released in 1966, her song "Dear Uncle Sam" was an early anti-Vietnam protest song. And though she once feigned dozing off while listening to feminist advocate Betty Friedan speak as a fellow guest on The David Frost Show, Lynn was a pretty controversial women's advocate. In "I Wanna Be Free," she wrote of the liberating effect of divorce: "I'm gonna take this chain from around my finger/ And throw it just as far as I can sling 'er." She did the same thing for birth control in "The Pill": "The feelin' good comes easy now/ Since I've got the pill."

As daring as some outlaw artists have been, the country music establishment has often proved even more dogged in its conservative views. Lynn has purportedly had more songs banned than any other country music singer. And Cash, never completely at home in the country music world, once said that "the very idea of unconventional or even original ideas ending up on 'country' radio" was "absurd." No wonder, then, that in his gay cowboy song, Willie Nelson lamented that "you won't hear this song on the radio/ Not on your local TV."

With the November election, particularly with strong Democratic gains in Virginia and Missouri, Republican politicians may have to rethink their long-standing Southern strategy. Similarly, with last Sunday night's awards, country music should embrace the fact that its greatest assets have never been scared of controversy or doing the right thing.

To quote the great Dolly Parton - who has sung a few feminist, antiwar, and progressive anthems herself - "You'll never do a whole lot unless you're brave enough to try."

[Ashley Sayeau is a freelance writer currently living in Buffalo, N.Y., was raised in Tennessee, and has written on women and politics for a variety of anthologies and publications, including The Nation, Salon and Dissent.]

Â© 2007 Philadelphia Inquirer

==========

Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
By Sandy Carter

Z Magazine - September 1994

http://zena.secureforum.com/znet/zmag/articles/sept94carter.htm

Some of the fondest memories of my west Texas childhood are linked to the lonesome moan of the pedal steel guitar and the soulful honky tonk voices of Hank Williams, Lefty Frizzell, and Ernest Tubb. In the 1950s, as I was entering grade school and gaining some awareness of the world around me, these sounds served up essential clues to my sense of time and place.

A few years later, however, I perceived that some considered country music inferior to other forms of popular music. Southern accents, nasal voices, and bad grammar, I learned, were the most visible signs of this inferiority. So I became self conscious about my drawl and with some vigilance and discipline began modifying my twang according to standards I took to be more enlightened.

But the full arsenal of Southern stereotypes was not so easy to escape. In my 20s, as I began living and working in other parts of the country, I came to realize that people outside the South, particularly politically progressive people outside the South, judged white Southerners and nearly all aspects of their cultural heritage as backward. And this snobbery often found its most candid expression in mocking and ridiculing country music.

The elitist views that define popular prejudices about the country tradition greeted the music at its commercial birth. In the 1920s, when country music first felt the pressures of commercialization, rural traditions of all kinds were experiencing tensions and challenges brought on by industrialization. Country sounds suggesting older and more settled ways seemed inherently at odds with rapid social and technological change. The music expressed a longing for stability and order and deep-seated fears of the temptations of the modern world. At the same time, the music could not help but reflect hopes of escaping the hardships associated with traditional rural life.

Conflicted feelings also derived from the Southerness of the music. While the music of Stephen Foster and the writings of Mark Twain fueled romantic notions of the South as an exotic land of enchantment, the region also evoked images of slavery and the Civil War, the Scopes monkey trial, and the Klan. Thus for many, country music, regardless of its subject matter, was nothing more than the sound of ignorance and racism. Retaining a stubborn self-consciousness of its white, rural, Southern, working class origins, country music today continues to attract and repulse listeners by stirring the same opposing images. Nonetheless, in a span of 70 years, country music has grown from regional to national and international popularity. And presently, the music is cresting at a commercial high-water mark justifying marketing claims that country is now "America's pop music."

With mass popularity, however, some of the most distinctive qualities of country music have been diluted. Listening to the musical styles dominating country radio, one hears a generic McDonald's styled product so stripped of "hayseed" connotations that it virtually erases the line between country and various forms of easy listening white pop and bland 1970s styled corporate rock. While harder and more traditional country sounds have not disappeared, the market driven industry bias toward an urban-suburban contemporary sound has certainly muddled the definition and origins of the musical idioms known as country.

Like other music forms of our culture, country music is an amalgam of influences. Its sound, song structure, and lyrical text reveal a heavy debt to African American musical styles, particularly blues and gospel. Rhythmically, country draws most on the dance meters of English and European country dance tunes. As to lyrics and narrative style, country storytelling has roots in Southern Protestant sermonizing, barroom banter, front porch story swapping, and the general character of regional oral traditions. Other distinctive characteristics relate to the way the music is performed. Unlike many pop performers, country singers write much of their material bringing a subjective, direct voice to their performance. Like blues singers, they aim for intimacy more than technical sophistication. In the singer's voice and story lay the central appeal of country music.

Though country music is a vocal music above all else, its instrumental sound is unique and immediately identifiable. It begins with the guitar and is filled out with fiddle, banjo, mandolin, dobro, bass, pedal steel guitar, and harmonica. The distinctive country sound comes from the way the musicians play these instruments with flat picks, finger picks, bottlenecks, and bow. In contrast to the smooth, melodic approach of pop and classical music, country players, again showing an African American influence, favor a rough-edged attack with strings popped, scraped, hammered, and frailed. Mirroring the unadorned vocal sound, instrumental solos and fills are deliberately "unrefined." The emphasis is on sounds that counterpoint the social and emotional realism conveyed by the singer and the song. Accordingly, country sounds are harsh, rowdy, romantic, humorous, and rousing. Most of all, they are mournful.

Did you ever see a robin weep When leaves begin to die

That means he's lost the will to live I'm so lonesome I could cry

--Hank Williams

Historically the most dominant and unmistakable quality of the country sound is sadness. One of the great stereotypes plaguing country music is the cry-in-the-beer loser drowning the pain of romantic loss in some dark tavern. But the heartbreak in country music runs deeper than cheating, drinking, and divorce. The sad tale country music has to tell goes back to the devastation the region suffered during the Civil War, the loss of rural identity, and the great migration of Southerners to urban centers in the Midwest and West during the 1940s and 1950s. Understandably, country music is homesick music, permanently colored by feelings of longing and lost innocence.

The loss at the heart of the country song has been expressed through two divergent impulses. When the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers came to Bristol, Tennessee in August 1927 to perform before record scout Ralph Peer and a Victor Talking Machine, they brought with them distinct bodies of material representing seemingly contradictory themes and values. In the Carter Family's huge repertoire of traditional songs resided the morally decent old-time virtues of work, family, humility, and Christian fellowship. By contrast, Rodgers, an ex-railroad brakeman from Meridian, Mississippi, wrote tunes with roots in blues and jazz, folk and cowboy songs, work gang hollers and pop. Though Rodgers wrote his share of songs glorifying the home and family, his work also celebrated the lives of hell-raisers, hoboes, wayward lovers, criminals, rounders, and ramblers.

Both approaches proved immediately popular. By 1933, the year of his death from tuberculosis, Jimmie Rodgers had become country's first crossover success and in the South his status was near mythic. And by the time the Carter Family disbanded in 1943, their music was well-known throughout the United States, as well as parts of Canada, Mexico, England, Ireland, and Australia. Aside from establishing the commercial viability of country music, the breakthroughs of Rodgers and the Carter Family gave the shared musical culture of the white South coherence. Though commercialization accelerated the homogenization of sounds, by documenting the diversity of local and regional styles it also helped Southerners gain a fuller sense of their common cultural heritage. The music labeled "hillbilly" dramatized what they suffered, survived, and left behind. It offered solace and understanding, realism and escape. But most of all, it was music that responded to change with a reassertion of tradition. The Carter Family's religious tunes and sentimental ballads and Jimmie Rodgers' chronicles of the rambling man, in different ways, mapped the boundaries of tradition and the dire consequences of its breakdown.

Because of this emphasis on Southerness and tradition, country music has long been associated with all that is reactionary. However, while country music generally expresses a conservative outlook, the view of country as an exclusively white, male-dominated, right-wing tradition is unfair and one-dimensional. At no point in its history has country music expressed a consistent political ideology. Although performers such as W. Lee O'Daniel, Jimmie Davis, and Roy Acuff have run for political office and many country musicians have endorsed candidates and aired opinions in public, the music resists easy ideological labeling. Every hard- headed patriotic diatribe like "Okie From Muskogee" can be matched by songs like Waylon Jennings's multicultural, egalitarian anthem "America" and James Talley's ode to populist rebellion "Are They Gonna Make Us Outlaws Again?":

Now there's always been a bottom

And there's always been a top

And someone took the orders

And someone called the shots

And someone took the beatin', Lord

And someone got the prize

Well, that may be the way its been

But that don't mean its right

More importantly, since country music has always been a voice for small farmers, factory hands, day laborers, the displaced and unemployed, its harsh portraits of work and everyday life carry an implicit critique of capitalism.

Instead of overt political protest, country songs prefer to deliver social criticism through poignant descriptions of economic hardship and family sacrifice. Some of the best examples of this style of protest are Merle Haggard's "Mama's Hungry Eyes," Dolly Parton's "Coat Of Many Colors," and Loretta Lynn's "Coal Miner's Daughter."

As to the issue of race, country music's sentimental attachment to Dixie is often taken as an endorsement of white supremacy and slavery. Country music's glorification of the South, however, derives mostly from an idealized notion of working the land and the real life movement of millions off the land during the years of the Great Depression and World War II. Not surprisingly, hundreds of country tunes plead the case of the farmer and celebrate the beauty of Southern landscapes. By contrast, since the birth of the country music industry in the 1920s, very few country songs have offered direct commentary on race relations in the South, and certainly no popular song has advocated a return to the slave system. This doesn't mean, of course, that white Southerners or the country music industry are free of racism. Rather, it suggests that the homesickness in country music is based primarily on the erosion of rural identity.

Still, it is obvious that "whiteness" is dominant in country music. Despite the tradition's enormous debt to African American music and other ethnic music cultures, non-white performers are still exceedingly rare in country music. When voices of color have gained popularity in the country field, it has generally been through songs and styles evidencing only traces of their racial origins. Nonetheless, in recent decades Mexican-Americans such as Johnny Rodriguez, Freddy Fender, Tish Hinojosa, and Flaco Jiminez and African Americans such as Charlie Pride, Stoney Edwards, and Big Al Downing have won acceptance with country audiences. And occasionally, there are tunes like Bobby Braddock's "I Believe The South Is Gonna Rise Again" that break the mold:

The Jacksons down the road were black like we were

But our skins were white and theirs was black

I believe the South's gonna rise again

But not the way we thought it would back then

Some of the strongest stereotypes attached to country music revolve around the social and sexual roles of women. To many people Tammy Wynette's 1968 hit "Stand By Your Man" typifies the passive, long suffering mentality of the unliberated country woman. In truth, the female perspective in country music is much broader and far more assertive than this superficial stereotype can allow. The richest and most authoritative evidence of this reality can be found in Mary Bufwack and Robert Oermann's Finding Her Voice: The Saga Of Women In Country Music(Crown Publishers Inc., New York). This 541 page narrative tracing the lives and music of country women from the late 19th century up to the present, shows how country music has encouraged white working class women in their struggles to survive and resist "economic exploitation, sexual subjugation, and limited opportunities."

Exploring the folk origins of country music, Bufwack and Oermann argue that women were the primary folklorists for early rural music, memorizing the tunes and lyrics that provided the basic entertainment for the family and community. And in their own original ballads, women expressed sexual fantasies and discontents in songs loaded with images of romantic longing, promiscuity, violence, and death. Bufwack and Oermann also reveal more active and socially oriented resistance in the depression era songs of Sarah Gunning, the composer of "I Hate The Capitalist System," and Aunt Molly Jackson, who began making up class conscious songs and walking picket lines before she was ten.

It was not until the 1950s, however, that women in country music began to gain commercial equality with men. Following Kitty Well's surprising 1952 hit "It Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels"--a woman's retort to Hank Thompson's "The Wild Side Of Life--women singers such as Patsy Cline, Loretta Lynn, Dolly Parton, and Tammy Wynette started achieving record sales and stardom rivaling country men. The appeal of the modern country female star, Bufwack and Oermann note, in many ways mirrored general trends in country music. Country tunes of the 1950s and 1960s still focused on subjects of work, family, and religion. But reflecting an audience that was now struggling to come to grips with the realities of urban life and wage labor, the music increasingly dealt with alcoholism, infidelity, and divorce. Reacting to these problems from a distinctly female point of view, country women stepped forward with songs displaying tougher attitudes. Sad songs of betrayal prevailed, but women now would sing also of sexual freedom and nights on the town. And in love songs, women would voice a straightforward demand for relationships based on fair play and an end to double standards.

Some of the purest samples of this new toughness came in a string of popular tunes by Loretta Lynn. With a basic hard country sound and a writing style favoring down-to-earth blue collar bluntness, Lynn laid down the law to men in songs such as "Fist City" and "Don't Come Home A-Drinking (With Loving On Your Mind)." With her singles "The Pill" and "One's On The Way," Lynn also became the first popular country singer to publicly advocate for birth control. These attitudes and Lynn's reputation for gearing her shows to women, earned her a legion of devoted, fanatical fans, including a large lesbian following.

Although few country music women of the 1950s and 1960s made music as self-consciously for women as Lynn, the emergence of country women superstars put "the woman's perspective" on substantially more equal terms with that of the working man. By 1984 about one-fourth of the top country singles and albums were by women. And today's country and pop charts are overflowing with country women--Reba McEntire, Wynonna Judd, Mary Chapin-Carpenter, Trisha Yearwood, Suzy Bogguss, Kathy Mattea, Patty Loveless, Pam Tillis, and K.T. Oslin, to mention only a few. Most significantly, the commercial appeal of the current generation of country women seems directly linked to a feminist oriented lyric. Lorrie Morgan, for instance, takes clear control of her relationships in "What Part Of No," "Watch Me," and "5 Minutes." Michelle Wright shows off a similar attitude on "Take It Like A Man." And Martina McBride rebels against an abusive husband on "Independence Day." As these examples suggest (and many others could be given), the most progressive and defiant strains of contemporary country music are being created by women.

While the politics of country music eludes many popular prejudices and neat categories of left and right, the fundamental conservatism of the message cannot be denied. Country's conservatism, however, comes not from taking a particular stand on particular issues, but in the way it reads and resolves conflict. Country music may be one of the truest forms of popular music in giving voice to the bitter realities of class and the sorry state of male-female relations. But in offering few avenues of escape and rebellion, country music tends to settle struggle in favor of the powers that be. Change in country music comes mostly from individual hard work and sacrifice, luck, and God. The music's vision of community is insular and backward looking. And as a result, failure breeds feelings of self-blame and resignation.

Nonetheless, country's stoic acceptance of things as they are cannot be taken as an unqualified endorsement of the status quo. The great strength of country music has been its ability to capture white working class life as it really is and without the projection of false hope. Country music knows you can't always get what you want or what you need no matter how hard you try. In this realistic assessment of limits, the music contradicts capitalist ideals of progress, fairness, and happiness through consumption. Accordingly, throughout most of its commercial history, country music has been dismissed as something beneath and apart from mainstream culture.

Fully aware of country music's "negatives," the Nashville music establishment has periodically regroomed the sound and image of the tradition with hopes of winning respectability and crossover appeal. In the 1950s and 1960s, it was the smooth, urbane "Nashville Sound," in the 1970s it was the tasteless pop country of John Denver and Olivia Newton-John, and in the 1980s it was Urban Cowboy role playing. Although all of these trends gave country a temporary commercial boost, hard-core country fans and musicians reacted to each with a purist backlash (bluegrass, the Bakersfield sound, Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings' "outlaw" movement, neotraditionalism) that eventually brought the market back around to traditional sounds.

In the Reagan-Bush-Clinton era, country music has slowly ascended again to mainstream popularity with sounds and images revealing few traces of country's old-time rough edges. This time around country's new audience seems to come from aging white boomers and younger middle-income suburbanites who've tired of classic rock and can't tolerate aggressive youth sounds (metal, hip-hop, alternative rock) or easy listening pop. For these listeners, country supplies a guitar based rock influenced sound, adult subject matter, and yearning for a more simple and decent way of life.

Unfortunately in meeting this demand, the music industry has again resorted to formula: muscles in big hats, starched boot cut Wranglers, choreographed sexy moves, and pale, twang-free impersonations of heartbreak. But at the borders of country, in the progressive new voice of women, left-of-center hillbilly folk (Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Tom Russell, and Iris Dement), country rock (Rodney Crowell and Travis Tritt), traditional bluegrass (the Johnson Mountain Boys), and tradition conscious hard country (Dwight Yoakam and Marty Brown), you can still hear the raw emotions and wild and blue themes of a truly populist art form. The "old" story country music has to tell is too real and too rooted to be forgotten.

[Sandy Carter was born in Gulfport, Mississippi and grew up in Amarillo, Texas. While attending the University Of Texas at Austin, he became active in the late 60s anti-war, student, and civil rights movements. During the last three decades he has been active in organizing around workplace, community, and mental health issues. Since the early 80s, he has been living in the Bay Area. His writing on music, politics, and popular culture has appeared in the Bay Guardian and The San Francisco Chronicle. "Slippin' & Slidin," his column on music and popular culture, appears monthly in Z Magazine. He currently works as a high school counselor in Novato, California.]

==========

Portside aims to provide material of interest to people on the left that will help them to interpret the world and to change it.

Submit via email: [redacted]
Submit via the Web: portside.org/submit
Frequently asked questions: portside.org/faq
Subscribe: portside.org/subscribe
Unsubscribe: portside.org/unsubscribe
Account assistance: portside.org/contact
Search the archives: portside.org/archive

!DSPAM:2676,45da7d0025681792683703!

Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

623. Thomas savage
Re: Beware of yourselves! Beware of each other!
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Which may explain why the only people who follow poets are, surprise, surprise, other poets.

Nicholas Karavatos <[redacted]> wrote: Stay away from poets. The erring follow them. Qur'an 26:224 (Pickthal)

And the Poets, - It is those straying in Evil, who follow them: Qur'an 26:224 (Yusuf Ali)

And as to the poets, those who go astray follow them.
Qur'an 26:224 (Shakir)

As for the poets, they are followed only by the strayers.
Qur'an 26:224 (Khalifa)

WaalshshuAAarao yattabiAAuhumu alghawoona

_____ Find what you need at prices you'll love. Compare products and save at MSN® Shopping.
http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?
ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701

Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.

↑ Index

624. Michael Kelleher
Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 2.20.07
Tue 20 Feb 2007

LITERARY BUFFALO
2.20.07-2.25.07

ANNOUNCEMENT

Just Buffalo's timed writing group, which meets Fridays at Starbuck's Chippewa is cancelled for the next two weeks. It will resume March 9.

READINGS THIS WEEK

2.21

EXHIBIT X PRESENTS
DAVE KRESS
Fiction Reading

Wednesday, February 21, 8 p.m.
Hallwalls at The Church, 341 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, NY

DAVE KRESS is the author of two works of fiction: Counting Zero, a novel, and Martians, a creature. A new novel, Glorified-or-Thermometers of God, will be published in 2007. He is an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Maine, Orono, where he teaches creative writing and contemporary literature.

&

THE WRITE TOUCH WRITERS PRESENTS
Presentation, Workshop and Critique of submitted work
Moderator: Author -- Helene Lee
Wednesday, February 21, at 6:30 p.m.
Lockport Public Library, 23 East Ave.
All writers are welcome, for more information -
[redacted] -- [redacted]
[redacted] -- [redacted]

2.23

POETICS PLUS AT UB PRESENTS
Miles Champion
Poetry Reading
Friday, February 23, 8 p.m.
Rust Belt Books, 202 Allen St., Buffalo

Miles Champion's books include, Three Bell Zero (2000), Facture (1999), Compositional Bonbons Placate (1996), and Sore Models (1995). Born in England, he now works in New York City.

JUST BUFFALO WRITING WORKSHOPS

All workshops take place in Just Buffalo's Workshop/Conference Room At the historic Market Arcade, 617 Main St., First Floor -- right across from Shea's. The Market Arcade is climate-controlled and has a security guard on duty at all times.

To get here:

Take the train to the 'Theatre' stop and walk, or park and enter on Washington Street. Free parking on Washington Street evenings and weekends. Two-dollar parking in fenced, guarded, M & T lot on Washington. Visit our website for detailed descriptions, instructor bios, and to register online.

"There Are 3 Sides To Every Story...."
A Creative Nonfiction Writing Workshop
Instructor: Alexis De Veaux
4 Saturdays, 10 a.m. - 12 p.m.

March 3, April 7, May 5, May 19
$100, $80 for members

The Tao of Writing the Short Story
A Fiction Writing Workshop
Instructor: Ralph Wahlstrom
2 Saturdays: March 24 and 31
10 a.m. - 2 p.m. with a break for lunch.
Market Arcade Building, 617 Main St., First Floor.
$100, $80 for members

RECURRING LITERARY EVENTS

JUST BUFFALO WRITER'S CRITIQUE GROUP
Members of Just Buffalo are welcome to attend a free, bi-monthly writer critique group in CEPA's Flux Gallery on the first floor of the historic Market Arcade Building across the street from Shea's. Group meets 1st and 3rd Wednesday at 7 p.m. Call Just Buffalo for details.

JUST BUFFALO TIMED WRITING GROUP
A writing practice group meets every FRIDAY at noon at Starbucks Coffee on Elmwood and Chippewa. Writing practice is based on Natalie Goldberg's suggested exercises in Writing Down The Bones. Writers in all genres, fiction and non-fiction welcome. There is no charge. Contact Trudy for info: [redacted].

WESTERN NEW YORK ROMANCE WRITERS group meets the third Wednesday of every month at St. Joseph Hospital community room at 11a.m. Address: 2605 Harlem Road, Cheektowaga, NY 14225. For details go to www.wnyrw.org.

YOUNG WRITERS CONTEST AT BUFFALO NEWS

"Calling all writers: a NeXt essay contestâ€¨ A question for NeXt readers: What do you see as the greatest challenge facing your generation? â€¨ NeXt is holding its first-ever essay contest asking high school students to tell us what issue defines their generation. The essay should be an original, unpublished essay of 500 to 700 words. The winner will receive a cash prize of $75 and the winning essay will be published in NeXt. Finalists will receive 25 each.â€¨ Essays must be typed and submitted by mail to: NeXt Essay Contest, Buffalo News, P.O. Box 100, Buffalo N.Y. 14240. Include your name, age, school, home mailing address and telephone number. The deadline is March 30. The contest is open to high school students in the eight counties of Western New York zip code)

JUST BUFFALO MEMBERSHIP RAFFLE

Visit the literary city of your dreams:

-Joyce's Dublin
-Paris' Left Bank
-Dante's Florence
-Shakespeare's London
-Harlem Renaissance NYC
-The Beats' San Francisco
-Anywhere Continental flies.*

Now through May 10, 2007 your membership support of Just Buffalo Literary Center includes the chance to win the literary trip of a lifetime:

Package (valued at $5,000) includes:

-Two round-trip tickets to one of the great literary cities on Continental Airlines
-$1500 towards hotel and accommodations
-$500 in spending money

One ticket ($35) = Just Buffalo Individual Membership
Two tickets ($60) = Just Buffalo Family Membership
Three tickets ($100) = Just Buffalo Friend Membership

Purchase as many memberships as you like. Give them to whomever you choose as a gift (or give someone else the membership and keep the lottery ticket to yourself!). Only 1000 chances will be sold. Raffle tickets with Just Buffalo membership make great gifts! Drawing will be held the second week of May, 2007. Call [redacted] for more info.

* Raffle ticket purchases are not tax-deductible. If you want your membership to put you in the "literary trip of a lifetime" raffle, please write "raffle membership" in the "payment for" cell on the Paypal form. You will automatically be entered in the raffle, but your membership will not be tax-deductible. If you prefer not to be in the raffle and want tax-deductible status, then please write "non-raffle member" in the "payment for" cell.

JOIN JUST BUFFALO ONLINE!!!

If you would like to join Just Buffalo, or simply make a massive personal donation, you can do so online using your credit card. We have recently added the ability to join online by paying with a credit card through PayPal. Simply click on the membership level at which you would like to join, log in (or create a PayPal account using your Visa/Amex/Mastercard/Discover), and voilÃ¡, you will find yourself in literary heaven. For more info, or to join now, go to our website:

http://www.justbuffalo.org/membership/index.shtml

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

LITERARY BUFFALO
2.20.07-2.25.07

ANNOUNCEMENT

Just Buffalo's timed writing group, which meets Fridays at Starbuck's Chippewa is cancelled for the next two weeks. It will resume March 9.

READINGS THIS WEEK

2.21

EXHIBIT X PRESENTS
DAVE KRESS
Fiction Reading
Wednesday, February 21, 8 p.m.
Hallwalls at The Church, 341 Delaware Avenue, Buffalo, NY

DAVE KRESS is the author of two works of fiction: Counting Zero, a novel, and Martians, a creature. A new novel, Glorified-or-Thermometers of God, will be published in 2007. He is an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Maine, Orono, where he teaches creative writing and contemporary literature.

2.23

Poetics Plus at UB
Miles Champion
Poetry Reading
Friday, February 23, 8 p.m.
Rust Belt Books, 202 Allen St., Buffalo

Miles Champion's books include, Three Bell Zero (2000), Facture (1999), Compositional Bonbons Placate (1996), and Sore Models (1995). Born in England, he now works in New York City.

RECURRING LITERARY EVENTS

JUST BUFFALO WRITER'S CRITIQUE GROUP
Members of Just Buffalo are welcome to attend a free, bi-monthly writer critique group in CEPA's Flux Gallery on the first floor of the historic Market Arcade Building across the street from Shea's. Group meets 1st and 3rd Wednesday at 7 p.m. Call Just Buffalo for details.

JUST BUFFALO TIMED WRITING GROUP
A writing practice group meets every FRIDAY at noon at Starbucks Coffee on Elmwood and Chippewa. Writing practice is based on Natalie Goldberg's suggested exercises in Writing Down The Bones. Writers in all genres, fiction and non-fiction welcome. There is no charge. Contact Trudy for info: [redacted].

WESTERN NEW YORK ROMANCE WRITERS group meets the third Wednesday of every month at St. Joseph Hospital community room at 11a.m. Address: 2605 Harlem Road, Cheektowaga, NY 14225. For details go to www.wnyrw.org.

JUST BUFFALO MEMBERSHIP RAFFLE

Visit the literary city of your dreams:

-Joyce's Dublin
-Paris' Left Bank
-Dante's Florence
-Shakespeare's London
-Harlem Renaissance NYC
-The Beats' San Francisco
-Anywhere Continental flies.*

Now through May 10, 2007 your membership support of Just Buffalo Literary Center includes the chance to win the literary trip of a lifetime:

Package (valued at $5,000) includes:

-Two round-trip tickets to one of the great literary cities on Continental Airlines
-$1500 towards hotel and accommodations
-$500 in spending money

One ticket ($35) = Just Buffalo Individual Membership
Two tickets ($60) = Just Buffalo Family Membership
Three tickets ($100) = Just Buffalo Friend Membership

Purchase as many memberships as you like. Give them to whomever you choose as a gift (or give someone else the membership and keep the lottery ticket to yourself!). Only 1000 chances will be sold. Raffle tickets with Just Buffalo membership make great gifts! Drawing will be held the second week of May, 2007. Call [redacted] for more info.

* Raffle ticket purchases are not tax-deductible. If you want your membership to put you in the "literary trip of a lifetime" raffle, please write "raffle membership" in the "payment for" cell on the Paypal form. You will automatically be entered in the raffle, but your membership will not be tax-deductible. If you prefer not to be in the raffle and want tax-deductible status, then please write "non-raffle member" in the "payment for" cell.

JOIN JUST BUFFALO ONLINE!!!

If you would like to join Just Buffalo, or simply make a massive personal donation, you can do so online using your credit card. We have recently added the ability to join online by paying with a credit card through PayPal. Simply click on the membership level at which you would like to join, log in (or create a PayPal account using your Visa/Amex/Mastercard/Discover), and voilÃ¡, you will find yourself in literary heaven. For more info, or to join now, go to our website:

http://www.justbuffalo.org/membership/index.shtml

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

_____

Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

625. amy king
FWD on behalf of a friend....
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Greetings,

Kill Poet is a small indie publisher and poetry journal based in Los Angeles. This is our very first quarterly newsletter. This has information on our new chapbook contest, latest issue information, a documentary update and other goodies. Our website is www.killpoet.com. Our myspace is www.myspace.com/killpoet. Be sure to swing by and say hi after you read the updates...

*Were now accepting poetry submissions for Kill Poet, issue #02. For complete guidelines please visit www.killpoet.com/about. Were proud to introduce Joel Strong as our guest editor for this issue. Get those submissions in before our deadline on March 15th.

*Kill Poet in association with Lucent Films has recently shot the full-length documentary, The State of Poem, a spotlight on the evolving face of contemporary poetry across America. The film covers 30 states, 50 poets and includes music by John Lurie, Porches on the Autobahn, and several additional musicians and live bands. Keep an eye out for the Fall 2007 release.

*Weve succumbed to the poetry contest pressure and decided to run one ourselves, but unlike those other chumps, we wont rip you off. Were looking to publish two to three more chapbooks of 20-30 pages in length. All you need to do is send your manuscript (20-30 pgs./PDF \n\nonly) to [redacted] and send us $5.00 via paypal to [redacted] (reading fee). The deadline is May 1st and the winners will be announced June 1st. Winners will receive $50.00 and ten printed copies. We will then complete a print run of 300 copies and pimp the hell out of it. It's only five bucks, what do you have to lose? \n\n*Be sure to swing by and read Kill Poet, issue #01, still up, still free, and still packed with the poets your professor warned you about. Read it here: www.killpoet.com/issue \n\n*Alveraz Ricardez has a new chapbook, Mosquito available now: The aptly named Mosquito draws blood from the twisted and hopelessly futile. From a deranged man trapped with wild tribesmen to a sultry redwood coveting her naked man-lover. Alveraz has whittled a deviant fervency here that borders on neurotic. This poetry is buoyant, original and alive. Rebecca Malcovati, Poet Laureate & Associate Professor. Buy Mosquito now for only five bucks at www.killpoet.com/books \n\n*We also published our first anthology, on the inside, featuring: Brad Burjan, Appelquist, William J. Brazier Jr., Joel Strong, Jason Ryberg, Don Cohlman, Dylan Macturk, Jason Neese and Luc Simonic. On sale now for only two bucks at www.killpoet.com/books",1]); //--> only) to [redacted] and send us $5.00 via paypal to [redacted] (reading fee). The deadline is May 1st and the winners will be announced June 1st. Winners will receive $50.00 and ten printed copies. We will then complete a print run of 300 copies and pimp the hell out of it. It's only five bucks, what do you have to lose?

*Be sure to swing by and read Kill Poet, issue #01, still up, still free, and still packed with the poets your professor warned you about. Read it here: www.killpoet.com/issue

*Alveraz Ricardez has a new chapbook, Mosquito available now: The aptly named Mosquito draws blood from the twisted and hopelessly futile. From a deranged man trapped with wild tribesmen to a sultry redwood coveting her naked man-lover. Alveraz has whittled a deviant fervency here that borders on neurotic. This poetry is buoyant, original and alive. Rebecca Malcovati, Poet Laureate & Associate Professor. Buy Mosquito now for only five bucks at www.killpoet.com/books

*We also published our first anthology, on the inside, featuring: Brad Burjan, Appelquist, William J. Brazier Jr., Joel Strong, Jason Ryberg, Don Cohlman, Dylan Macturk, Jason Neese and Luc Simonic. On sale now for only two bucks at www.killpoet.com/books \n\n*Want to support our free journal? Please visit www.killpoet.com/subscribe. Thanks for your support!\n \n
\n\nMax Seger\n\n
Kill Poet Press & Journal\n\n
www.killpoet.com\n
\n\nKP is always spam-free and will never send a newsletter more than once a quarter. If youd like to be removed simply reply with remove in the subject line. But be warned, you will regret the day you turned your back on true independent poetry.
\n
\n\n	luke simonich\n
\n\nevery sense llc\n\n
	40 w. littleton blvd. #210-120\n\n littleton, CO 80120\n
\n\n	P: [redacted]	F: [redacted]	E: [redacted]\n \n \n \n \n\n
\n",0]); //--> .

*Want to support our free journal? Please visit www.killpoet.com/subscribe. Thanks for your support!

Max Seger
Kill Poet Press & Journal
www.killpoet.com

KP is always spam-free and will never send a newsletter more than once a quarter. If youd like to be removed simply reply with remove in the subject line.

But be warned, you will regret the day you turned your back on true independent poetry.

We won't tell. Get more on shows you hate to love
(and love to hate): Yahoo! TV's Guilty Pleasures list.

↑ Index

626. Elizabeth Treadwell
Jill Magi with Jonny Farrow at SPT this Fri 2/23
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Small Press Traffic is pleased to present
Friday, February 23, at 7:30
Jill Magi & Jonny Farrow

Jill Magi and Jonny Farrow present: Has anybody seen my social memory?? An evening investigating the inscribed and incorporated aspects of remembering -- sound, video, writing, and images that are personal? and civic responses to place, history, and the body. Jill Magi (poet and visual artist) and Jonny Farrow (sound artist and musician) will perform collaborative works from SLOT / The Exhibitionary Complex, a work-in-progress of sound and language landscapes in an era of museums and memorials. Jill will also present visual work and writing from Threads (Futurepoem 2007), a book project that explores the fused concerns of family, storytelling, silence, history, and the book itself.

About Jill Magi's Threads, Ammiel Alcalay writes, "Inflection implicates us in family language we hardly understand, in old country we are also responsible for destroying and recreating in a new world and word order whose mapping remains the task at hand. These Threads work between the telling of a story and history to inhabit such burdens of belated homecoming that stay the legacy of conquest."

$5-10 sliding scale, free to current SPT members & CCA community Small Press Traffic events are presented in CCA's Timken Lecture Hall
1111--8th Street, San Francisco

---
http://homepage.msn.com/zune?icid=hmetagline

↑ Index

627. Thomas Devaney
Devaney on Bernstein's Girly Man
Tue 20 Feb 2007

"So what do you do when the most adamant antiformalist poet in America writes a book using the tried-and-true forms?"

The question is from my review of Charles Bernstein's collection "Girly Man," published in this week's Sunday Philadelphia Inquirer (2/18).

http://www.philly.com/mld/inquirer/news/editorial/16722868.htm

Thomas Devaney

↑ Index

628. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music
Tue 20 Feb 2007

I've been a really big country fan--a music fan of all sorts----since a child. Country from the very earliest recordings to a number of ctonemporar musicians. A guy who has gone out on some more controversial limbs than the Dixie Chicks is the great steve Earle. Very early during the the triple War on Poverty-Drugs-Terrorism he shcoked a lot of people with "Ballad of John Lind"--the accused "American Taliban". Earle is in the classic mold of the country singers--drug addicition, alcoholism, prison time, redemptions of his own finding, controversial stands. The variety of genres with in country is very very wide--one of my favorites is "Psycho-country", some of the most disturbing songs recorded, having their orgins in the old ballads of tragedy, murder, betrayal which came over from the British Isles. (The first fiddle was brought over by a man named, like Johnny Rotten, John Lydon, in the 17th century.) The original Feminist singer--Lorretta Lynn's great inspsirtion--was Kitty Wells, recording outpsoen songs in the Fifties. Coutry music has handled about every dark side of human nature one can tink of or think up--the flip side of the powerful gospel sining many singers expereince gorwing up and which will influemce them to the end, even a hard core determined sinner like jerry Lee Lewis started off at a minstry school--expleed for playing boogie woogie music during the services--couldn't help himself. (His cousin is Jimmy Swaggart and his first wife was a second cousin, 13 when they amarried--he was on his second marriage and 18.) It's always saddned me how much great music and some of the greatest musicians an singers and song writers in american history--that people miss with their prejudices against country for reasons they would find contemptible in others if they were prejudiced against musics on the basis of class, regional background, accents and the like. Country and r & b coming togetehr to make the early rock and roll and rockaabilly changed the nation for good and opened the door to lot of the achievments of the various progressive movements of the times. Yes, a lot of country can be jingositic to say the least, but the hard core country is one of the great american musics with Jazz and blues, R & B and Hip Hop Hard Core etc--you can find country music in Conjunto for example and mixed with other forms of Latin Music--and lot of country influence i reggae, too--esp with buildingoff of thelyrics and melodies by DJs and Toasters--and in some Dub pieces--a friend who went to Reaggae Sunsplash one year told me the biggest hit of the events was Skeeter Davis--("I Forgot More Than You'll Ever Know (about him)""The End of the World"). There have been tons of Reaggae country covers-- And wa a continual exhcnage back and fort between coutnry and soul music in the Sixties and early Seveneties. Freddy fender is and Immortal God--the first Lartin and Indian mixed Superstar--AmericanIndian Marvin Rainwater had hits in the fifties--when I was married into the Mowack tribe via m first wife --(is a matriarchal society)--countr was what everybody listened to al the time. No need to mention all the country rock musicians of last almost fourty years now--or great singer/songwriters like Townes van Zandt. One of the greatest musical experiences i have had was t o see/hear live two of my musical gods on consecutive nights--George Jones outdoors in a pasture setting at a county Fair--and next night Fela Ransome Kuti from Nigeria in downtown Milwaukee. Geroge Jones is kind of the country male equivalent i singing of Oum Kalsoum, one of the great singers of the world in their musics. So it's always made me sad people miss so much with the easy prejudices against the music--based on their stereotypes of the people. Other fans of country wil bring this up from time to time. Some of the great country covers have been done by Social Distortion--"Ring of fire" and "Makin Believe" esp. Listening to really early country on Harry Smith's classic compilation of Anthology of American Folk Music and early Johnny paycheck--"Pardon Me, I've Got Someone to Kill" and the heartbreakin' "Apt #9" made famous by Tammy Wynette. In the immortal lines from the George Jones song--"Time Don't Mean a Thing To Me (I've got Life to Go")(life in an East Texas Prison--song inspired by prisoner who came up and spoke to George after a show there--)-- Check out Lucinda Williams for some truly great songwriting and music--

> From: Eric Dickey <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music (fwd)
> Date: Tue, 20 Feb 2007 09:47:50 -0800

I really appreciated reading the article on country music. Although I don't think of myself as a big fan of country music, I do appreciate its place. Back in the 1990s, I worked with some folks who were ardent country music fans. I realized then that country music is one of the last places for philosophical thought and reflection by folks who generally shun such intellectualism. In a sense, it's the last vestige for philosophical thought for many common, working class Americans.

Some other great contributors to the genre, Ray Charles was country, so were the Grateful Dead, as is Neil Young, Tom Waits, and many others. These are folks who evade compartmentalization and who employ many genres into their art, including country. Even Wyclef Jean incorporates country into his music.

Hopefully, like many posts I add to this list, this one will also be shot down.

the one and only,

Eric Wayne Dickey

Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:

Just in case you haven't seen these articles - Alan

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 19 Feb 2007 22:53:44 -0800
From: Michael Gurstein
To: [redacted]
Subject: [stuff-it] FW: Dixie Chicks,
part of tradition of progressive country music

Well worth a read, especially the second article.

MG

-----Original Message-----
From: [redacted] [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: February 18, 2007 5:54 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

Dixie Chicks, part of tradition of progressive country music

 Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws*
by Ashley Sayeau (Philadelphia Inquirer)

 Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country*
By Sandy Carter (Z Magazine)

==========

Dixie Chicks Among Esteemed Outlaws
by Ashley Sayeau

Philadelphia Inquirer - February 16, 2007

http://www.philly.com/mld/inquirer/news/editorial/16709871.htm

On Sunday night at the 49th annual Grammy awards, the Dixie Chicks took home five awards, including best album, record and song of the year.

It was a long road, indeed, for the Chicks, whose enormous fan base and ticket sales famously plummeted in 2003 after lead singer Natalie Maines remarked on the eve of the Iraq war that the group was "ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas." Within days, radio stations were refusing to play their music, and fans were demanding refunds. Death threats were later issued.

Throughout the ordeal, the group remained admirably unapologetic, insisting that dissent is (or at least should be) a vital liberty in America. They further maintained this position in their album Taking the Long Way (which won the Grammy for best album) and especially in the song "Not Ready To Make Nice," in which they directly addressed their critics: "It's too late to make it right/ I probably wouldn't if I could/ Cause I'm mad as hell/ Can't bring myself to do what it is/ You think I should."

Despite the group's successes, the grudge has held, particularly among the Nashville music establishment. The Country Music Association completely snubbed the Chicks at its awards ceremony in May.

Such an affront on the part of country music is not only cowardly, but also quite antithetical to the genre's history. For, while country music today is often equated with pickup trucks, rebel flags, and men with mullets, it also has a brave and, dare I say,

liberal streak in its closet.

Take Johnny Cash, for instance. Not only did many of his most famous lyrics center on "the poor and the beaten down," including a poignant attack on this country's treatment of American Indians, but also Cash was a vocal critic of the Vietnam War, as in his famous song "Man in Black": "I wear the black in mourning for the lives that could have been/ Each week we lose a hundred fine young men."

And then there is Willie Nelson, who on Valentine's Day 2006 released a love song about gay cowboys, titled, "Cowboys Are Frequently, Secretly (Fond of Each Other)." Perhaps more seriously, he has been an avid supporter of presidential hopeful Dennis Kucinich, who, while arguing for universal health care and a swift withdrawal from Iraq, is probably the furthest left of any Democratic candidate.

Women in country music - like the Dixie Chicks - have a long tradition of being particularly bold in speaking out against some of the very conventions their record labels and conservative fan base celebrate. Back in 1933, the Carter Family, which consisted of A.P. Carter; his wife, Sara Doughtery Carter; and her cousin, the groundbreaking guitar player Maybelle Addington Carter, sang about a young woman who chose to commit suicide rather than marry. In Sara's sorrowful croon, we hear her say, "I never will marry/ I'll be no man's wife/ I expect to live single all the days of my life." Needless to say, she later divorced A.P.

Perhaps most memorable are some of Loretta Lynn's lyrics, particularly from the 1960s and 1970s. Released in 1966, her song "Dear Uncle Sam" was an early anti-Vietnam protest song. And though she once feigned dozing off while listening to feminist advocate Betty Friedan speak as a fellow guest on The David Frost Show, Lynn was a pretty controversial women's advocate. In "I Wanna Be Free," she wrote of the liberating effect of divorce: "I'm gonna take this chain from around my finger/ And throw it just as far as I can sling 'er." She did the same thing for birth control in "The Pill": "The feelin' good comes easy now/ Since I've got the pill."

As daring as some outlaw artists have been, the country

music establishment has often proved even more dogged in its conservative views. Lynn has purportedly had more songs banned than any other country music singer. And Cash, never completely at home in the country music world, once said that "the very idea of unconventional or even original ideas ending up on 'country' radio" was "absurd." No wonder, then, that in his gay cowboy song, Willie Nelson lamented that "you won't hear this song on the radio/ Not on your local TV."

With the November election, particularly with strong Democratic gains in Virginia and Missouri, Republican politicians may have to rethink their long-standing Southern strategy. Similarly, with last Sunday night's awards, country music should embrace the fact that its greatest assets have never been scared of controversy or doing the right thing.

To quote the great Dolly Parton - who has sung a few feminist, antiwar, and progressive anthems herself - "You'll never do a whole lot unless you're brave enough to try."

[Ashley Sayeau is a freelance writer currently living in Buffalo, N.Y., was raised in Tennessee, and has written on women and politics for a variety of anthologies and publications, including The Nation, Salon and Dissent.]

Â© 2007 Philadelphia Inquirer

==========

Wild And Blue: The Politics Of Country
By Sandy Carter

Z Magazine - September 1994

http://zena.secureforum.com/znet/zmag/articles/sept94carter.htm

Some of the fondest memories of my west Texas childhood are linked to the lonesome moan of the pedal steel guitar and the soulful honky tonk voices of Hank Williams, Lefty Frizzell, and Ernest Tubb. In the 1950s, as I was entering grade school and gaining some awareness of the world around me, these sounds served up essential clues to my sense of time and place.

A few years later, however, I perceived that some considered country music inferior to other forms of popular music. Southern accents, nasal voices, and bad grammar, I learned, were the most visible signs of this inferiority. So I became self conscious about my drawl and with some vigilance and discipline began modifying my twang according to standards I took to be more enlightened.

But the full arsenal of Southern stereotypes was not so easy to escape. In my 20s, as I began living and working in other parts of the country, I came to realize that people outside the South, particularly politically progressive people outside the South, judged white Southerners and nearly all aspects of their cultural heritage as backward. And this snobbery often found its most candid expression in mocking and ridiculing country music.

The elitist views that define popular prejudices about the country tradition greeted the music at its commercial birth. In the 1920s, when country music first felt the pressures of commercialization, rural traditions of all kinds were experiencing tensions and challenges brought on by industrialization. Country sounds suggesting older and more settled ways seemed inherently at odds with rapid social and technological change. The music expressed a longing for stability and order and deep-seated fears of the temptations of the modern world. At the same time, the music could not help but reflect hopes of escaping the hardships associated with traditional rural life.

Conflicted feelings also derived from the Southerness of the music. While the music of Stephen Foster and the writings of Mark Twain fueled romantic notions of the South as an exotic land of enchantment, the region also evoked images of slavery and the Civil War, the Scopes monkey trial, and the Klan. Thus for many, country music, regardless of its subject matter, was nothing more than the sound of ignorance and racism. Retaining a stubborn self-consciousness of its white, rural, Southern, working class origins, country music today continues to attract and repulse listeners by stirring the same opposing images. Nonetheless, in a span of 70 years, country music has grown from regional to national and international popularity. And presently, the music is cresting at a commercial high-water mark justifying marketing claims that country is now "America's pop music."

With mass popularity, however, some of the most distinctive qualities of country music have been diluted. Listening to the musical styles dominating country radio, one hears a generic McDonald's styled product so stripped of "hayseed" connotations that it virtually erases the line between country and various forms of easy listening white pop and bland 1970s styled corporate rock. While harder and more traditional country sounds have not disappeared, the market driven industry bias toward an urban-suburban contemporary sound has certainly muddled the definition and origins of the musical idioms known as country.

Like other music forms of our culture, country music is an amalgam of influences. Its sound, song structure, and lyrical text reveal a heavy debt to African American musical styles, particularly blues and gospel. Rhythmically, country draws most on the dance meters of English and European country dance tunes. As to lyrics and narrative style, country storytelling has roots in Southern Protestant sermonizing, barroom banter, front porch story swapping, and the general character of regional oral traditions. Other distinctive characteristics relate to the way the music is performed. Unlike many pop performers, country singers write much of their material bringing a subjective, direct voice to their performance. Like blues singers, they aim for intimacy more than technical sophistication. In the singer's voice and story lay the central appeal of country music.

Though country music is a vocal music above all else, its instrumental sound is unique and immediately identifiable. It begins with the guitar and is filled out with fiddle, banjo, mandolin, dobro, bass, pedal steel guitar, and harmonica. The distinctive country sound comes from the way the musicians play these instruments with flat picks, finger picks, bottlenecks, and bow. In contrast to the smooth, melodic approach of pop and classical music, country players, again showing an African American influence, favor a rough-edged attack with strings popped, scraped, hammered, and frailed. Mirroring the unadorned vocal sound, instrumental solos and fills are deliberately "unrefined." The emphasis is on sounds that counterpoint the social and emotional realism conveyed by the singer and the song. Accordingly, country sounds are harsh, rowdy, romantic, humorous, and rousing. Most of all, they are mournful.

Did you ever see a robin weep When leaves begin to die

That means he's lost the will to live I'm so lonesome I could cry

--Hank Williams

Historically the most dominant and unmistakable quality of the country sound is sadness. One of the great stereotypes plaguing country music is the cry-in-the-beer loser drowning the pain of romantic loss in some dark tavern. But the heartbreak in country music runs deeper than cheating, drinking, and divorce. The sad tale country music has to tell goes back to the devastation the region suffered during the Civil War, the loss of rural identity, and the great migration of Southerners to urban centers in the Midwest and West during the 1940s and 1950s. Understandably, country music is homesick music, permanently colored by feelings of longing and lost innocence.

The loss at the heart of the country song has been expressed through two divergent impulses. When the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers came to Bristol, Tennessee in August 1927 to perform before record scout Ralph Peer and a Victor Talking Machine, they brought with them distinct bodies of material representing seemingly contradictory themes and values. In the Carter Family's huge repertoire of traditional songs resided the morally decent old-time virtues of work, family, humility, and Christian fellowship. By contrast, Rodgers, an ex-railroad brakeman from Meridian, Mississippi, wrote tunes with roots in blues and jazz, folk and cowboy songs, work gang hollers and pop. Though Rodgers wrote his share of songs glorifying the home and family, his work also celebrated the lives of hell-raisers, hoboes, wayward lovers, criminals, rounders, and ramblers.

Both approaches proved immediately popular. By 1933, the year of his death from tuberculosis, Jimmie Rodgers had become country's first crossover success and in the South his status was near mythic. And by the time the Carter Family disbanded in 1943, their music was well-known throughout the United States, as well as parts of Canada, Mexico, England, Ireland, and Australia. Aside from establishing the commercial viability of country music, the breakthroughs of Rodgers and the Carter Family gave the shared musical culture of the white South coherence. Though commercialization accelerated the homogenization of sounds, by documenting the diversity of local and regional styles it also helped Southerners gain a fuller sense of their common cultural heritage. The music labeled "hillbilly" dramatized what they suffered, survived, and left behind. It offered solace and understanding, realism and escape. But most of all, it was music that responded to change with a reassertion of tradition. The Carter Family's religious tunes and sentimental ballads and Jimmie Rodgers' chronicles of the rambling man, in different ways, mapped the boundaries of tradition and the dire consequences of its breakdown.

Because of this emphasis on Southerness and tradition, country music has long been associated with all that is reactionary. However, while country music generally expresses a conservative outlook, the view of country as an exclusively white, male-dominated, right-wing tradition is unfair and one-dimensional. At no point in its history has country music expressed a consistent political ideology. Although performers such as W. Lee O'Daniel, Jimmie Davis, and Roy Acuff have run for political office and many country musicians have endorsed candidates and aired opinions in public, the music resists easy ideological labeling. Every hard- headed patriotic diatribe like "Okie From Muskogee" can be matched by songs like Waylon Jennings's multicultural, egalitarian anthem "America" and James Talley's ode to populist rebellion "Are They Gonna Make Us Outlaws Again?":

Now there's always been a bottom

And there's always been a top

And someone took the orders

And someone called the shots

And someone took the beatin', Lord

And someone got the prize

Well, that may be the way its been

But that don't mean its right

More importantly, since country music has always been a voice for small farmers, factory hands, day laborers, the displaced and unemployed, its harsh portraits of work and everyday life carry an implicit critique of capitalism. Instead of overt political protest, country songs prefer to deliver social criticism through poignant descriptions of economic hardship and family sacrifice. Some of the best examples of this style of protest are Merle Haggard's "Mama's Hungry Eyes," Dolly Parton's "Coat Of Many Colors," and Loretta Lynn's "Coal Miner's Daughter."

As to the issue of race, country music's sentimental attachment to Dixie is often taken as an endorsement of white supremacy and slavery. Country music's glorification of the South, however, derives mostly from an idealized notion of working the land and the real life movement of millions off the land during the years of the Great Depression and World War II. Not surprisingly, hundreds of country tunes plead the case of the farmer and celebrate the beauty of Southern landscapes. By contrast, since the birth of the country music industry in the 1920s, very few country songs have offered direct commentary on race relations in the South, and certainly no popular song has advocated a return to the slave system. This doesn't mean, of course, that white Southerners or the country music industry are free of racism. Rather, it suggests that the homesickness in country music is based primarily on the erosion of rural identity.

Still, it is obvious that "whiteness" is dominant in country music. Despite the tradition's enormous debt to African American music and other ethnic music cultures, non-white performers are still exceedingly rare in country music. When voices of color have gained popularity in the country field, it has generally been through songs and styles evidencing only traces of their racial origins. Nonetheless, in recent decades Mexican-Americans such as Johnny Rodriguez, Freddy Fender, Tish Hinojosa, and Flaco Jiminez and African Americans such as Charlie Pride, Stoney Edwards, and Big Al Downing have won acceptance with country audiences. And occasionally, there are tunes like Bobby Braddock's "I Believe The South Is Gonna Rise Again" that break the mold:

The Jacksons down the road were black like we were

But our skins were white and theirs was black

I believe the South's gonna rise again

But not the way we thought it would back then

Some of the strongest stereotypes attached to country music revolve around the social and sexual roles of women. To many people Tammy Wynette's 1968 hit "Stand By Your Man" typifies the passive, long suffering mentality of the unliberated country woman. In truth, the female perspective in country music is much broader and far more assertive than this superficial stereotype can allow. The richest and most authoritative evidence of this reality can be found in Mary Bufwack and Robert Oermann's Finding Her Voice: The Saga Of Women In Country Music(Crown Publishers Inc., New York). This 541 page narrative tracing the lives and music of country women from the late 19th century up to the present, shows how country music has encouraged white working class women in their struggles to survive and resist "economic exploitation, sexual subjugation, and limited opportunities."

Exploring the folk origins of country music, Bufwack and Oermann argue that women were the primary folklorists for early rural music, memorizing the tunes and lyrics that provided the basic entertainment for the family and community. And in their own original ballads, women expressed sexual fantasies and discontents in songs loaded with images of romantic longing, promiscuity, violence, and death. Bufwack and Oermann also reveal more active and socially oriented resistance in the depression era songs of Sarah Gunning, the composer of "I Hate The Capitalist System," and Aunt Molly Jackson, who began making up class conscious songs and walking picket lines before she was ten.

It was not until the 1950s, however, that women in country music began to gain commercial equality with men. Following Kitty Well's surprising 1952 hit "It Wasn't God Who Made Honky Tonk Angels"--a woman's retort to Hank Thompson's "The Wild Side Of Life--women singers such as Patsy Cline, Loretta Lynn, Dolly Parton, and Tammy Wynette started achieving record sales and stardom rivaling country men. The appeal of the modern country female star, Bufwack and Oermann note, in many ways mirrored general trends in country music. Country tunes of the 1950s and 1960s still focused on subjects of work, family, and religion. But reflecting an audience that was now struggling to come to grips with the realities of urban life and wage labor, the music increasingly dealt with alcoholism, infidelity, and divorce. Reacting to these problems from a distinctly female point of view, country women stepped forward with songs displaying tougher attitudes. Sad songs of betrayal prevailed, but women now would sing also of sexual freedom and nights on the town. And in love songs, women would voice a straightforward demand for relationships based on fair play and an end to double standards.

Some of the purest samples of this new toughness came in a string of popular tunes by Loretta Lynn. With a basic hard country sound and a writing style favoring down-to-earth blue collar bluntness, Lynn laid down the law to men in songs such as "Fist City" and "Don't Come Home A-Drinking (With Loving On Your Mind)." With her singles "The Pill" and "One's On The Way," Lynn also became the first popular country singer to publicly advocate for birth control. These attitudes and Lynn's reputation for gearing her shows to women, earned her a legion of devoted, fanatical fans, including a large lesbian following.

Although few country music women of the 1950s and 1960s

made music as self-consciously for women as Lynn, the emergence of country women superstars put "the woman's perspective" on substantially more equal terms with that of the working man. By 1984 about one-fourth of the top country singles and albums were by women. And today's country and pop charts are overflowing with country women--Reba McEntire, Wynonna Judd, Mary Chapin-Carpenter, Trisha Yearwood, Suzy Bogguss, Kathy Mattea, Patty Loveless, Pam Tillis, and K.T. Oslin, to mention only a few. Most significantly, the commercial appeal of the current generation of country women seems directly linked to a feminist oriented lyric. Lorrie Morgan, for instance, takes clear control of her relationships in "What Part Of No," "Watch Me," and "5 Minutes." Michelle Wright shows off a similar attitude on "Take It Like A Man." And Martina McBride rebels against an abusive husband on "Independence Day." As these examples suggest (and many others could be given), the most progressive and defiant strains of contemporary country music are being created by women.

While the politics of country music eludes many popular prejudices and neat categories of left and right, the fundamental conservatism of the message cannot be denied. Country's conservatism, however, comes not from taking a particular stand on particular issues, but in the way it reads and resolves conflict. Country music may be one of the truest forms of popular music in giving voice to the bitter realities of class and the sorry state of male-female relations. But in offering few avenues of escape and rebellion, country music tends to settle struggle in favor of the powers that be. Change in country music comes mostly from individual hard work and sacrifice, luck, and God. The music's vision of community is insular and backward looking. And as a result, failure breeds feelings of self-blame and resignation.

Nonetheless, country's stoic acceptance of things as they are cannot be taken as an unqualified endorsement of the status quo. The great strength of country music has been its ability to capture white working class life as it really is and without the projection of false hope. Country music knows you can't always get what you want or what you need no matter how hard you try. In this realistic assessment of limits, the music contradicts capitalist ideals of progress, fairness, and happiness through consumption. Accordingly, throughout most of its commercial history, country music has been dismissed as something beneath and apart from mainstream culture.

Fully aware of country music's "negatives," the Nashville music establishment has periodically regroomed the sound and image of the tradition with hopes of winning respectability and crossover appeal. In the 1950s and 1960s, it was the smooth, urbane

"Nashville Sound," in the 1970s it was the tasteless pop country of John Denver and Olivia Newton-John, and in the 1980s it was Urban Cowboy role playing. Although all of these trends gave country a temporary commercial boost, hard-core country fans and musicians reacted to each with a purist backlash (bluegrass, the Bakersfield sound, Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings' "outlaw" movement, neotraditionalism) that eventually brought the market back around to traditional sounds.

In the Reagan-Bush-Clinton era, country music has slowly ascended again to mainstream popularity with sounds and images revealing few traces of country's old-time rough edges. This time around country's new audience seems to come from aging white boomers and younger middle-income suburbanites who've tired of classic rock and can't tolerate aggressive youth sounds (metal, hip-hop, alternative rock) or easy listening pop. For these listeners, country supplies a guitar based rock influenced sound, adult subject matter, and yearning for a more simple and decent way of life.

Unfortunately in meeting this demand, the music industry has again resorted to formula: muscles in big hats, starched boot cut Wranglers, choreographed sexy moves, and pale, twang-free impersonations of heartbreak. But at the borders of country, in the progressive new voice of women, left-of-center hillbilly folk (Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Tom Russell, and Iris Dement), country rock (Rodney Crowell and Travis Tritt), traditional bluegrass (the Johnson Mountain Boys), and tradition conscious hard country (Dwight Yoakam and Marty Brown), you can still hear the raw emotions and wild and blue themes of a truly populist art form. The "old" story country music has to tell is too real and too rooted to be forgotten.

[Sandy Carter was born in Gulfport, Mississippi and grew up in Amarillo, Texas. While attending the University Of Texas at Austin, he became active in the late 60s anti-war, student, and civil rights movements. During the last three decades he has been active in organizing around workplace, community, and mental health issues. Since the early 80s, he has been living in the Bay Area. His writing on music, politics, and popular culture has appeared in the Bay Guardian and The San Francisco Chronicle. "Slippin' & Slidin," his column on music and popular culture, appears monthly in

> Z Magazine. He currently works as a high school counselor in Novato, California.]
>
> ==========
>
> _____
>
> Portside aims to provide material of interest to people on the left that will help them to interpret the world and to change it.
>
> Submit via email: [redacted]
> Submit via the Web: portside.org/submit
> Frequently asked questions: portside.org/faq
> Subscribe: portside.org/subscribe
> Unsubscribe: portside.org/unsubscribe
> Account assistance: portside.org/contact
> Search the archives: portside.org/archive
>
> !DSPAM:2676,45da7d0025681792683703!
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian. http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

629. Simon DeDeo

rhubarb is susan

Tue 20 Feb 2007

A bumper crop of reviews on rhubarb, including Jeni Olin, Michael Neff and Joan Houlihan, and an appreciation of Inger Christensen's alphabet -- get your vetted content live:

http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/reading-inger-christensens-alphabet.html http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/jeni-olin-paxil.html http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/michael-neff-five-whales-east.html

http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/02/joan-houlihan-unrelenting.html
http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/

Thanks for tuning in --

Simon

↑ Index

630. John Foley
New FlashPoint #9 is Up!
Tue 20 Feb 2007

ANNOUNCING .....

FLASHPOINT #9
Spring 2007
http://www.flashpointmag.com

MARK LOMBARDI

LEONARD PELTIER

PETER DALE SCOTT

WILLIAM BLUM

HARVEY ARDEN

ROBERT J. MILLER

as well as

LORD BYRON & EUGENIO MONTALE

Phan Van Tri Allen Tucker David Hickman
Bob Starkey Ellen Cardona Craig Stormont
Grace Davis Charles Belbin Joe Ahearn
T.R. Wang Kent Johnson Bradford Haas
Joe Brennan Carlo Parcelli JR Foley

"Along the frontier where the arts & politics clash ..."

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft® Office Live
http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

631. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: From Kent Johnson re haiku
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Catching up with old digest messages here. Yes, folks like Seisensui, Santoka, Hosai, and others were wonderful rule-breakers. They're among my favourites, and in my journal Tundra #1 I published a selection of Seisensui translations by Hiroaki Sato. These poets broke the rules from a position of knowledge, though, rather than not being sufficiently aware of the expectations and practices of literary haiku. The movement that some of these "free-meter" haiku poets were part of pretty much died out, however, though Santoka remains particularly loved in Japan, somewhat the way Issa is.

I have several books of haiku by Santoka and Hosai (don't know of any books strictly of Seisensui, though), and also have most of Makoto Ueda's books (Ueda is on the advisory board for my journal Tundra.

Michael

-----Original Message-----
Date: Sun, 11 Feb 2007 14:33:29 -0600
From: Joe Amato <[redacted]>
Subject: From Kent Johnson re haiku

Fwding this post from Kent:

At 2:16 PM -0600 2/11/07, Kent Johnson wrote:
>Anyway, I was clicking around in this haiku discussion at Poetics,
>seeing the exchange, including yours, on "rules," syllable count,
>etc. Maybe I missed mention of this, not having read through all of >the posts, but has no one pointed out that there's been a vibrant >tradition of "rule-breaking" haiku in Japan since the 1910s, with >Ogiwara Seisensui and the Soun (Layered Clouds) group, which >included great and beloved "free-haiku" poets like Taneda Santoka >and Ozaki Hosai?
>
>Just wondering, as there is wonderful work in this tradition-- and >given what seems to be a growing interest in the "short poem" within >innovative scene, this is a treasure trove. Plenty of stuff in >translation of Santoka and Hosai. A great book, too, is Makoto >Ueda's Modern Japanese Haiku.
>

Joe

Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

632. Caroline Crumpacker
Bilingual Reading Series!
Tue 20 Feb 2007

Hoping that all are well and warm and will feel inspired to join us for a bilingual reading featuring

Diana Alvarez-Amell
reading her translations of Raúl Rivero

and

Louise Landes Levi
reading her translations of Henri Michaux and Mira Bai

Sunday February 25 at 4:00 PM

at the Bowery Poetry Club
Addy: 308 Bowery, New York, NY 10012
Location: foot of First Street, between Houston & Bleecker
Phone: [redacted]
Subway: F train to Second Ave, or 6 train to Bleecker

$7

Readers' Bios:

Diana Alvarez-Amell teaches Spanish at Seton Hall University. She writes for cultural publications and scholarly journals in the United States and abroad.

Louise Landes Levi, poet,translator, traveller & musician. Most recent translation work HENRI MICHAUX TOWARD TOTALITY, Selected Poems 1928 - 1974, Shiva Stan, 2005. Levi is translator of cult class by Rene Daumal, RASA. Essays on Indian Aesthetics & Selected Sanskrit Studies (New Directions, 1982 & Shiva Stan, 2003) & Sweet on My Lips, The Love Poems of Mira Bai (Cool Grove, 1997 & 2003) . Other translations are fr. the Dutch of Hans Vlek, Paul Van Ostaijen & Simon Vinkenoog & the Italian ((fr. the Tibetan) of Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche. She lives in NYC.

A Sample Poem as Enticement:

High Fidelity

They'll be free from the gramophone's pain, its torture from the rub and the needles.

Chaste, they'll not know the sin of singing a capella while hungry caught between the farce and the fair.

The men who stay at home humming soft melodies will acquire wisdom.

A fortunate life, serene happiness will be theirs and their children's.

As light as ash. As clear as eternity.

By Raúl Rivero. Translated from the Spanish by Diana Alvarez-Amell

***

And if you wish to be removed from this list, please email me and let me know...

All best, Aimites, Ciao, Caroline=

↑ Index

633. Alan Sondheim

Howtodisappear

Tue 20 Feb 2007

(If you're in Chicago this weekend, I'm part of the Openport series - http://www.openportchicago.com - there are a lot of (greater) people as well ranging from John Cayley through K Hayles, Wendy Chun, etc. I'm part of the series whether you come or not but you might enjoy it. - Alan)

(part of an ongoing investigation into avatar/motion-capture movement)

Howtodisappear

The disappearance of the branch into hardened rock and occasional artifacts. The root of the avatar is elsewhere; the avatar itself, the image-avatar, is ghost. The ghost travels through anything of course; it's nothing more than coordinates. Howtodisappear.mov, however primitive, is the beginning of transparency, wizard listening-posts on MOOs for example. Here we are, the virtual becoming-virtual still.

http://www.asondheim.org/howtodisappear.mov

↑ Index

634. Ron Silliman
Silliman's Blog
Wed 21 Feb 2007

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

RECENT POSTS

Michael Benedict has died

Elaine Equiâ€™s
Ripple Effect

Mongolian Ping Pong

The Grand Piano,
vol 2,
is available
(an experiment in collective autobiography)

Highlights of Fascicle 3

Emmett Williams has died

We
by Yevgeny Zemyatin (sci-fi before sci-fi existed)

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

635. Dan Wilcox
Poetry, Film & Talk -- IVAW Fundraiser
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Fundraiser
for Iraq Veterans Against the War

Sunday, February 25, 2007 1:00PM

NYACK CENTER
58 Depew Avenue, (corner of Depew Ave. & South Broadway)
Nyack, New York 10960

for NEW ORLEANS DEPLOYMENT in March…to muck houses in the lower 9th

Suggested Donation $20 - Students $5

VIEW: BBC VIDEO–“Katrina March’06” & "Soldiers Speak Out"
Films on the military are narrated by those who've lived and fought in war zones.
Open discussion after the showing.

SPOKEN WORD: Poetry, Stories on War - Read by veterans who wrote them. Host Dan Wilcox, is a poet, photographer and active member of Veterans for Peace, chapter 10 in Albany, New York. Featured Poet: Gerald McCarthy is a member of Veterans for Peace and Vietnam Veterans Against the War. His books include War Story, Shoetown and the forthcoming The light has no tongue. Recent poetry publications include: War Literature & The Arts, American War Poetry, Italian Americana, The North American Review, and Hawaii Pacific Review. IVAW members/poets: Fernando Braga and Michael Blake Additional VFP readers include Sam Weinreb (WWII), Dayl Wise (Vietnam), Jim Murphy (Vietnam), and others. After the performance there will be an open mic session for any poets wishing to read. Sign-up at 1pm. One or two poems, more if time allows.

OPEN DISCUSSION: What can we do?
Opinions, comments from the youngest to the oldest will be encouraged & welcomed.

Sponsored by Veterans for Peace - Tappan Zee Brigade & Rockland Coalition for Peace and Justice www.RocklandAction.org VeteransForPeaceNY.org
For more information call: Jim Murphy – [redacted]

The main objectives of IVAW are threefold:
1: Bring the troops home now.
2: Support Iraqi reconstruction in whatever way possible.
3: Support our veterans and our troops now and upon their return home.

↑ Index

636. David-Baptiste Chirot

(on behalf of Kent Johnson) FW: "Kent Johnson's" poems at Flashpoint

Wed 21 Feb 2007

On behalf of Kent Johnson, forwarding this letter:

> Dear Poetics List:
>
> Jack Foley recently announced the new issue of Flashpoint magazine.

> There are three or four poems in the issue that are attributed to "Kent Johnson."
>
> *I just thought I'd mention that these poems were not written by this Kent Johnson (the one who lives in Freeport, Illinois).*
>
> I think they may be written by Carlo Parcelli, but I am not entirely sure. Maybe they were written by a committee of people, who knows.
>
> In any case, if I'm right that the ideational "Kent Johnson" their biological Author(s) had in mind is this Kent Johnson (me), well, I want to say that I am very honored, and I hope there will be more of these kinds of poems. Maybe even a book of them, in the end?
>
> Kent Johnson

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian. http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

637. Steve Dalachinsky

1 - sorry everyone a cancellation

Wed 21 Feb 2007

---

the following gig has been cancelled:

steve reading
Saturday, FEB. 24th, 2007 @ 7 PM @ NUTUREart GALLERY
910 GRAND STREET 2nd Floor Williamsburg Brooklyn
FREE ADMISSION
cancellation

↑ Index

638. Dan Waber

New River Journal's new issue

Wed 21 Feb 2007

New River Journal (http://www.cddc.vt.edu/journals/newriver/), the first online journal devoted exclusively to digital writing and art, is pleased to announce the release of its premier issue for 2007. After a period of dormancy, New River Journal has been redesigned and reborn, complete with exciting new works by some of today's leading digital authors.

New River Journal was founded by Virginia Tech English Professor Ed Falco in 1996, with the assistance of Len Hatfield, a computer guru then on the Virginia Tech faculty. The online publication has consistently tested the boundaries and rules of writing in a digital age. This new issue marks the first time the journal has been managed and edited by students participating in the MFA Creative Writing Program in the College of Liberal Arts and Human Sciences. Managing editors for the inaugural launch are two graduate students, Laura Dulaney and Bryon Sabol.

The managing editors, with the help of Brent Jesiek of Virginia Tech's Center for Digital Discourse and Culture, redesigned the New River Journal's website to provide a user friendly interface and easier access to the journal's archive. Beginning with this issue, the Journal plans to post new issues twice a year, in December and May.

The current issue includes works by David Herrstrom, Jason Nelson, and Dan Waber.

David Herrstrom's "The Nicodemus Glyph" is a heady investigation of the ancient author and teacher, Nicodemus. Herrstrom has constructed the Glyph to taunt the reader's desire for more definite knowledge of Nicodemus, while simultaneously signaling that we can never fully know a historical person or circumstance.

Jason Nelson's work tests the boundary between "game-like" interfaces and serious poetry. "Poetry Cube" not only allows readers to reorganize Nelson's words, but it also allows them to enter their own poetry and, with the click of a button, shuffle the lines into an array of possibilities. "Between Treacherous Objects" takes a form reminiscent of a video game flight simulator. Using the mouse, readers fly through the space of images and poetry, choosing to stop where they desire.

Dan Waber's "Writing Through Time" examines and challenges the limitations and constructs of space and time as they traditionally apply to the written words. Words appear and disappear on the "page," creating a layered fabric of text and meaning that can be further manipulated by the reader.

The Virginia Tech MFA Creative Writing Program was established in 2005. New River Journal's managing editors Dulaney and Sabol are members of the program's first class. The New River Journal is currently hosted by the Center for Digital Discourse and Culture.

↑ Index

639. patrick dunagan
Blue Press Poets a reading and conversation 2/22 @ SF State Poetry Center
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Blue Press Poets a reading and conversation with Kevin Opstedal, Michael Sunnylyn Thibodeaux, Patrick Dunagan, Micah Ballard and Cedar Sigo
Thursday February 22, 2007
3:30 pm @ the Poetry Center
HUM 512, SFSU, free

• Kevin Opstedal is publisher of Blue Press Books and editor of an array of sub-radar literary magazines, the latest being Blue Book #8. Recent works are On the Low (Gallery Books) and Rare Surf, Vol. 2 : New & Used Poems (Smog Eyes Press). He lives in Santa Cruz, and is writing a literary history of the Bolinas poets. • Michael Price, co-editor of Blue Book magazine and Blue Press Books is author of Doombook (The Figures), On the Eve of the Death of Michael Price , and his latest, The Year of the Mother (both Blue Press). He lives in Boulder. • Sunnylyn Thibodeaux, from New Orleans, has been in San Francisco six years. Her books include Last We Spoke (Auguste Press, 2004) and 20/20 Yielding (Blue Press, 2005). • Patrick Dunagan's chapbooks include: Young American Poets (Showerhead), U.S.A. (surfZombie), Baby Skull (Yenless Rumsoaked), Of Stone (Snag), Fess Parker (Red Ant), and After the Sinews (Auguste). • Micah Ballard, from Louisiana, lives in San Francisco and runs the Lew Gallery at New College of California. His books include Emblematic (Old Gold), Bettina Coffin (Red Ant Press), In the Kindness of Night (Blue Press), and Evangeline Downs (Ugly Duckling Presse). • Cedar Sigo is author of Goodnight Nurse (Angry Dog Press, 2001). His Selected Writings was published by Ugly Duckling Presse (2003; second edition, 2005). Forthcoming is a book of collaborations, Deathrace V.S.O.P. He lives in San Francisco, where he is the editor of Old Gold Press.

↑ Index

640. Nate Pritts
2 new chapbooks from H_NGM_N:
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Announcing the next two numbers in the H_NGM_N Chapbook Series:

#5 - A THING AND ITS GHOST by Evan Commander

&

#6 - THEORY OF THE WALKING BIG BANG by Robert Krut

Click on over to H_NGM_N B_ _KS for full info on the chaps, including links to sample poems, shots of the cover & ordering info.

Also, be sure to pop in on us at the AWP Bookfair - we'll be at table #125, hanging w/ our buddies from Octopus, Typo, Forklift, Ohio & who knows who else?!? We've even cooked up an exclusive version of Robert Krut's new chap, available only at the conference!

*

Don't forget to order your copy of COMBATIVES #3 before they're gone - a tremendous selection of exquisite corpse poems by Sarah Lilius & Erin M. Bertram. COMBATIVES#4 - featuring Elisa Gabbert - will be out in mid-March.

*

&, as always, make sure to check out H_NGM_N. #6 is live & rockin'.

*

yr ed_tor,

Nate Pritts

(please feel free to forward this message. if you feel you have received this message in error, reply with "no, thanks" in the subject line.)

H_NGM_N, a journal of poetry, poetics, &c.
http://www.h-ngm-n.com <javascript:ol('http://www.h-ngm-n.com');>

A THING AND ITS GHOST by Evan Commander
http://www.h-ngm-n.com/h_ngm_n-b__ks/chapbook-5-a-thing-and-its-ghost-by-evan-commander.html <javascript:ol('http://www.h-ngm-n.com/h_ngm_n-b__ks/chapbook-5-a-thing-and-its-ghost-by-evan-commander.html');>

THEORY OF THE WALKING BIG BANG by Robert Krut
http://www.h-ngm-n.com/h_ngm_n-b__ks/chapbook-6-theory-of-the-walking-big-bang-by-robert-krut.html <javascript:ol('http://www.h-ngm-n.com/h_ngm_n-b__ks/chapbook-6-theory-of-the-walking-big-bang-by-robert-krut.html');>

COMBATIVES!
http://www.h-ngm-n.com/combatives/<javascript:ol('http://www.h-ngm-n.com/combatives/');>

↑ Index

641. Gabriel Gudding
a dalkey book cometh sooner
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Just spoke with Martin Riker, senior editor at Dalkey Archive Press, and it looks like Rhode Island Notebook is coming out sooner than expected: November, 2007. 9 months. Fantastic.

Here is an excerpt

Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
        Wolfowitz Wolfowitz
        Rummy Dick Bush Rice
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
Dung bagel booby mama
        Wolfowitz Wolfowitz
        Rummy Dick Bush Rice

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

↑ Index

642. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku as a genre
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Jason, some comments in response to your detailed message. Regarding the features you were incorporating into your verses, it seems to me that you suceeded in some cases, but with the following possible exceptions, at least in haiku terms (see the numbered list that follows below). On the other hand, if you were trying to create borderline haiku, you succeeded, I suppose, but perhaps the citizenship of your verses is still foreign to haiku. Since you asked if I thought they were still haiku or not, I would say no. Somehow, Jerry Kilbride's "mine / lifting /fog" is still haiku, but it is certainly on the fringe. Something in your verses takes them across the border.

You also make an interesting comment about a "normative" element that can be prescriptive, which I have to fight in my reactions to some poems I read, as it runs the risk of killing the life of the poem. I also have to guard against the label of "haiku" as meaning "good haiku," so you are right to ask if there can be poems that are bad haiku but still haiku -- to which the answer is of course yes. It can have all the "prescribed" elements, and still lack freshness, or be weakly crafted. Your verses, though clearly crafted and brimming with freshness, depart from the prescribed elements enough that I personally have trouble admitting them as haiku. Someone else might feel differently. However, I doubt they'd ever find a place in most of the haiku journals publishing in North America. Such a claim might say something negative about the sensitivity range of the editors in question, but if they are gatekeepers of haiku, it may also say something about what they think is important in haiku. But yes, a poem can be bad but still be a haiku. It can be a haiku if the poet wants to call it that, of course, but discounting that generous approach, it can still be a haiku for other aesthetic reasons (that is, by hitting enough of the "haiku" targets), and fail for not hitting them very well. The haiku journal Haiku Headlines, edited monthly by David Priebe since 1988 until his death last year, is a case in point. The majority of the poems are deathly, as haiku (I've used its poems as examples of "bad haiku" in my workshops -- I have a file folder for large printouts of the poems, even), yet sure, they're still haiku. And even the best haiku journals have "better" or "weaker" poems, though often such rankings are in the eye of the beholder. Then there are the pseudo-haiku poems in books such as Haikus for Jews or Honku, and so on, which hit the wrong 5-7-5 target, and may have other virtues, but are essentially ignorant of most haiku necessities (or choose to ignore them). If haiku is a "genre," and thus broad rather than overly narrow, then these poems are still "haiku," because they try to hit the target(s) that the poet thinks a haiku should hit. To me, they have very little to do with haiku, and are more damaging than helpful to haiku as literature for their perpetuation of misunderstandings, though that's really a separate issue. Actually, though, I think it's hard for a haiku to be a "bad" haiku and yet still successfully be a haiku, because the more you "prove" the poems haiku-ness, the more you're going to tip it towards being a good haiku, or at least that's my hunch. There's some philosophical danger, there, because the term "haiku shouldn't be a form of encomium, as you say. Most of Sonia Sanchez's poems offered as haiku are what I would consider good nonhaiku. Others might think of them as bad haiku, but that isn't fair to what she's trying to do with vernacular voice. And I could start citing all sorts of ot her poems and talk about whether they're haiku or not, or whether they're good or bad, but it's hard to know where to start. And I would have only one opinion, of course!

Anyway, here are some thoughts in reaction to the four criteria you set for yourself:

1. Nature references. Yes, you had nature references, but, in "warm santa / ana," using an essentially nonnatural term for the wind tends to distance the poem from the only natural element therein (the wind). A lot of readers wouldn't even know that you're referring to wind, which isn't necessarily a problem, but it is a risk you take. And in the lycra verse, the reference to "plant" is so generic as to not conjure up much of a nature image. Similarly, the reference to rain in the "march flush" poem is fairly slight as a nature reference, and might even be read as nonliteral. But again, I actually don't care about haiku having nature references or not. That's not the aim of haiku, as I understand it. Rather, haiku aims at the seasonal reference, and this happens to embrace nature much of the time, but it's really the season word that matters.

2. Seasonality. Again, yes, but not always clearly. The reference to "march" is ambiguous in many ways. Could you mean to march along, as a verb, since you lowercased it? So we don't know for certain if you meant March as the month. More than that, though, March means one season in the northern hemisphere, and an opposite season below the equator, so it's not as seasonally clear or universal as saying "cherry blossoms," for example. I don't sense any season in the lycra verse. I suppose the action of green colors "waxing" (as opposed to waning) could suggest the deepening of summer, but that could be too much of a leap for some readers, especially when the word "wax" is easily interpretted as a noun rather than a verb. And the Santa Ana winds are seasonal, but because they're a regional phenomenon, their function as a seasonal reference not be clear to many readers (and they're not limited to a single season, say, like cherry blossoms, so it has less "sharpness" than other se asonal references). Also, there's a difference between a seasonal reference and a season word (or kigo). The kigo tradition includes the overtone of allusion to other poems that use the same season word, depending on the season word. This won't happen with every season word, or there can be too many excellent poems for it to be clear which ones you might want to evoke, but in some cases a specific reference can be clear (and of course, allusion can be accomplished outside the season word as well). At the very least, though, the use of specific kigo respectfully invokes the entire tradition of that particular season word, if not a specific poem that has used it before.

3. Juxtaposition. In your "march flush" poem, it's too hard to parse the various possible meanings of the words and lines, thus making it hard to narrow down to the ONE "juxtaposition" that a good haiku usually has. Or, in the case of "warm santa / ana [wind] crumples silver / paper," there's no juxtaposition at all, at least not a grammatical one, because the lines read as a single grammatical unit, despite the line breaks (it's not the dreaded "Complete Sentence" you were trying to avoid, but it's still a single grammatical unit). Same with "a cotton lycra weave lifts / from plants it catches." There's actually no grammatical juxtaposition here at all either. And "green / colors / wax" can also be read as a single grammatical unit. It also becomes so minimalist (which is fine, but:) that it is really seeking to do other things than juxtaposition. The juxtaposition that goes on in haiku happens in various ways. To be closer to the Japanese tradition of the kireji, or cutting word, my sense is that the juxtaposition in an English-language haiku needs to be a stronger caesura, or cut. This tends to require the poem to have two grammatically unrelated fragments (not three, and not just one fragment). The juxtaposition is thus grammatical as well as contextual. You have mostly contextual juxtapositions, not grammatical ones. In the extreme, a contextual juxtaposition is like writing about an elephant and a doily, which can be startling and fresh, but there also needs to be a grammatical "juxtaposition" also -- akin to a caesura, but stronger, in the sense of having two fragments that are (most often) grammatically unrelated. For example:

spring breeze--
the pull of her hand
as we near the pet store

4. Single experience/immediacy. This is where I think you achieved the most -- with single experiences. Immediacy in your verses is clouded, at least for me, by line breaks, by ambiguity as to whether certain words are nouns or verbs (too much ambiguity of syntax, I'd say, at least for haiku, but I guess that was what you were aiming at), and by other trouble parsing the grammar. Compare the immediacy of your verses to the immediacy of my verse above. Perhaps it's too "simple" for you or other readers, and you think there's no "there" there. Could be. But by focusing on a tactile sensation (haiku is a poetry of the five senses -- hence the title of one of my haiku workshops, "Come to Your Senses"), the poem gains authenticity and immediacy, and pairs it with a fitting seasonal reference (in this case the naming of the season, which may be the cheapest sort of season word). The season references should usually be more than just a weather report, however, but should have an e motional rightness to it. The preceding verse makes no mention of how old the female in the poem is, but nearly all people who hear or read this poem have told me that they imagine a child. Yet why is that? It's not stated at all. Yet it is suggested, through association with spring, the season of youthful beginnings, by breeze, which is lighter than wind or gale, and by the pet store, where we may easily imagine puppies and kittens. Yet all of this is, hopefully, intuitive, and part of the "immediate" gestalt of the poem. This is the sort of immediacy a good haiku is after, and it's best if it's not cluttered by overly clever wordings. As I think Basho said, haiku is like a finger pointing at the moon, and if the finger is too bejeweled, we no longer see the moon.

Indeed, as Jack Kerouac said, haiku should be as simple as porridge. Though the tone is different, it's like a good joke -- saying only what needs to be said, and nothing more. Like the engine in a car, a haiku should have only necessary parts. And like I say in the haiku workshops I give, a haiku should not be as short as possible, but as short as necessary, which makes a world of difference.

meteor shower . . .
a gentle wave
wets our sandals

Hope these comments are of help to some.

Michael

P.S. Interesting to read that your "green / colors / wax" poem was so directly derived from or inspired by the Kilbride poem. Here's a similar minimalist poem of mine, that may or may not be a haiku (each line is meant to be centered):

children's book sh elves

-----Original Message-----
Date: Fri, 16 Feb 2007 21:35:29 -0800
From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre

Thanks for your comments michael, I think your comments are interesting. I got some b/c comments about them from charles rossiter too, and I wanted to clarify something, and loathe as I am to do reads of my own poems, i do want to explain what i was trying to do with these because i composed them with the intention of trying to create "borderline" cases of haiku, that is, poems that fit uncomfortably within the genre. It's a sort of experiment, and one i'll probably pursue, but in response to your comments i'd like to shed a little light to see if maybe your greater experience with haiku might help me with my next foray into this kind of thing.

so, basically, the task I set myself was to compose several poems that had the following features:

1.) some reference to nature
2.) some reference to seasonality
3.) a juxtaposition of elements
4.) a sense of a single experience or immediacy

all the while remaining true to my own personal poetic commitments which involve among other things a certain ambiguity of syntax and the forcing of multivalence through the use of glued together sentence fragments and the resistance to the received form that most people know as The Complete Sentence. So I dashed off those poems to try to see just where the borders of the haiku might lie. as experiments, i'm not particularly concerned with how good they are, but i am interested in whether or not you think they're haiku, and if not, why not? I'll admit that i have a suspicion you have an so far undiscussed normative element that is in some way prescriptive and laudatory, that is, i get the impression from some of your statements that for you "haiku" is as much a name of a genre of poetry as it is a form of encomium. So there's a second question i have that i haven't yet asked: can a poem be bad (as is most certainly the case with my fourth example, by far the weakest of the four in my opinion but also one that i think is very haiku-like given my understanding of the genre) and still be a haiku? and to that point, what makes a bad haiku bad while allowing it to remain a haiku?

toward that end:

rain on
march flush
on the student body

relies on several puns, the first the fact that march is a verb, a noun, and a Month (and from that seasonality); that "the student body" can be either a group of students or the body of a particular student; and finally that flush can either mean against and adjacent to (self-referencing the juxtaposition of the outdoors of a rain on a group of marching students) and the very intimate image of a young persons body that is "flushed" for some reason.

warm santa
ana crumples silver
paper

is meant to turn on any number of things, but the primary turn is the one that you seem to have missed that while ana is a female name, and santa is a bearded guy who brings presents, 'santa ana' is the name of a kind of warm wind that happens in the autumn and spring in southern california. other things

i tried to pack in there is the traditional. so this one was really playing with the idea of genre by attempting to juxtapose seasons (autumn winter spring) while the other images juxtapose age (the bearded old man with the young girl exuberantly ripping paper).

a cotton lycra weave lifts
from plants it catches

I won't comment any further on this one, Murat gave it precisely the reading i'd intended and i'd like to thank him for it, except to point out that part of the "juxtaposition" is the fact that cotton is a "natural" material derived from a low growing shrub that has sticks that could easily catch a garment, and lycra which is one of that is wholly synthetic made out of chains of polymers. both are the most widely used fibers in textiles of their respective types (synthetic or natural) and a large portion of garments worn in north america are made out a cotton/lycra fabrics. Also, while i went looking for pictures to show you, i found out that lycra is actually a brand name, and the etymology of cotton is from the arabic al qutun, which while neither here nor there poetically, might reveal more meaning if delved into more deeply.

finally the last, and I think weakest, of the four i posted. It's interesting that you mentioned mime
lifting fog

because my green
colors
wax

is a semi-procedural, aleatorical poem derived from kilbride's poem (which i like an awful lot, btw).

what i did was move all the vowels in kilbrides poem back in the mouth

so from the dipthong in mime /aI/, i got the dipthong /iu/. I couldn't think of a word for that, so i cheated and shortened it to /i/
from the /I/ in lifting, i got to the /uh/ of colors
and from the ah in fog, i got the the aaa in wax. (there really ought to be an easy way to type IPA characters).

so from there it was just a matter of fitting consonants around the vowels until I got a sequence of words that i liked. my problem with this one is that it stinks of the sort of cleverness that i generally don't like in poetry and that seems to be the stock in trade of writers like Billy Collins for example, but that was done well (thanks to the heavy injection of humanity) by Ted Berrigan, so I let this one live.

basically, it all turns on the double meaning of "grean" "colors" and "wax" if green is a noun, colors is a verb and wax is a noun, you have an image of a crayon being made. if colors is the noun, green is an adjective, and wax is the verb, you have the image of flowering plants as the green of spring spreads. alternately, you could have green and wax as nouns, and colors as the verb, but read wax as the subject and green as the object, which is an image of someone using a crayon. all of which connote young life and growth. but again, i think this one is mostly crap primarily because there isn't much of an image in it, and i generally prefer short poems with strong images that aren't as necessary in longer pieces.

ugh. even though i had a reason to do it, that's still not fun to do. sorry to inflict you all with my explanations. Basically none of these are great, but i would like to know michael, seeing how i read them from my standpoint on reading poetry, are they haiku do you think? are they the borderline cases i intended them to be? and if they aren't, do you think you could point me at some borderline cases, or perhaps some people who push at what haiku can and write haiku that might be of questionable pedigree?

also, to my earlier point, i would LOVE to see an example of something you think is a BAD haiku that is still successfully haiku.

thanks again for the comments on my four macedonia/zappai/maybe-haiku/

_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

643. Bob Grumman

Re: a dalkey book cometh sooner

Wed 21 Feb 2007

Today, in MY blog (over a thousand visits in just three years!) I mention having gotten my Comprepoetica file of Small Press Review columns up-to-date. The latest is about Crag Hill's blog. I spend most of it on analyzing a poem Crag composed using first lines from Charles Olson. The entry to the files is here: http://www.geocities.com/Comprepoetica/spr-stuff/index.html.

My columns, by the way, go back to June 1993, so provide a fairly lengthy record of recent marginal poetry.

--Bob

↑ Index

644. Gabriel Gudding
3 brilliant books from BlazeVox
Wed 21 Feb 2007

Sitting here with three really great books from BlazeVox.

1. Joe Amato. _Finger Exorcised_
2. Daniel Borzutksy. _The Ecstacy of Capitulation_
3. Megan Volpert. _Face Blindness_

--

_____
http://gabrielgudding.blogspot.com

Gabriel Gudding
Department of English
Illinois State University
Normal, Illinois 61790
[redacted] (office)

↑ Index

645. Seena Liff
Re: Yuri Kapralov's art
Thu 22 Feb 2007

Does anyone know where I can see some of Yuri Kapralov's artwork online? I'm currently reading his wonderful book, "Once There Was a Village", and I knew him slightly when I lived in the East Village. I'd very much like to see some these "piano constructions" he talks about (art made of found objects, esp. old pianos). Any suggestions would be helpful. Thanks- Seena Liff

****
 AOL now offers free email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at http://www.aol.com.

↑ Index

646. Jane Sprague

Palm Press @ The Smell: 2/25/07

Thu 22 Feb 2007

Dear Poetics People near Los Angeles, California:

Please join us this Sunday at 6:30pm to hear recent and forthcoming work by poets and current or future Palm Press authors:

David Buuck
Andrew Choate
Dana Teen Lomax
Ara Shirinyan

***

David Buuck is the author of RUTS (Taxt Press) and RUNTS (self-punish or parrot). He is Contributing Editor at Artweek, and founder of BARGE, the Bay Area Research Group in Enviro-aesthetics. He currently teaches conceptual art writing at the California College of the Arts, while working on his PhD in the History of Consciousness at UC-Santa Cruz. He lives in Oakland, CA.

Andrew Choate was born in Columbia, South Carolina and educated at Northwestern University and the CalArts. His music and art criticism has been regularly published since 1998. His artwork has been shown in Los Angeles, CA; Yerevan, Armenia; Venice, Italy; and Languedoc, France. His first book, Langquage Makes Plastic of the Body, was published by Palm Press in 2006. He hosts a weekly radio show as "The Unwrinkled Ear" from 9-10:30pm every Thursday night on www.killradio.org. His current project is a song cycle.

Dana Teen Lomax is the author of Currency (Palm Press, 2006) and Room (a+bend press, 1999) which was awarded the San Francisco Foundation's Joseph Henry Jackson Prize for poetry. Currently she co-edits Letters To Poets, Conversations About Poetics, Politics, and Community and is making Q, a series of "home movies" about raising her daughter on the grounds of a prison. She teaches creative writing at a number of institutions and lives with her family in northern California.

Ara Shirinyan edits and publishes Make Now Press www.makenow.org. He is the author of Syria is in the World (Palm Press, 2007). His poems are published on ubuweb and elsewhere.

***

The Smell is located at 247 S. Main Street, Los Angeles, CA (between 2nd and 3rd). This event starts at 6:30pm.

www.palmpress.org

↑ Index

647. blacksox
Haiku
Thu 22 Feb 2007

A fellow poet Tarre Beach speaks Japanese, and wants to know if there are any books, (you might suggest) that teach haiku in Japanese.

↑ Index

648. Joel Bettridge
TODAY: Nathaniel Tarn at Beinecke Library
Thu 22 Feb 2007

Please join us for a poetry reading by Nathaniel Tarn on Thursday, February 22nd, 2007, 4pm. This event is free and open to the public. For additional information about poetry at the Beinecke Library visit: http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/.

Poet, translator, anthropologist, and editor Nathaniel Tarn is the author of more than thirty volumes of poetry, essays, and translations, including a collection of his essays on poetics and anthropology, Views from the Weaving Mountain, and his recently published Selected Poems 1950-2000. Tarn founded and edited the Cape Editions series in England in the 1960s, publishers of Charles Olson, J.H. Prynne, Ted Berrigan, and others. He is the recipient of numerous awards including the Guinness prize, a Wenner Gren fellowship, a Commonwealth of Pennsylvania fellowship, and a Rockefeller Foundation fellowship. Until his retirement in 1985, Tarn was a professor in comparative literature at Rutgers.

For more information about and examples of Nathaniel Tarn’s work please visit:

http://jacketmagazine.com/28/hill-tarn.html
http://jacketmagazine.com/06/tarnpoem.html
http://www.poetrymagazines.org.uk/magazine/record.asp?id=2049
http://www.emilydickinson.org/titanic/material/tarn1.html
http://www.emilydickinson.org/titanic/material/tarn2.html

Nancy Kuhl
Associate Curator, The Yale Collection of American Literature
The Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library
Yale University
121 Wall Street
P.O. Box 208240
New Haven, CT 06520-8240
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.
http://advision.webevents.yahoo.com/mailbeta/features_spam.html

↑ Index

649. John Roche
Cadillac Cicatrix
Thu 22 Feb 2007

A handsome new journal, Cadillac Cicatrix, is now online at http://www.cadillaccicatrix.com/

Below is the press release from publisher Benjamin Spencer. Among other features, there is a tribute to Rochester poet Sam Abrams, who taught in the St. Mark's Poetry Project in the Sixties and was active in the Angry Arts collective in NYC. An anthology of poems and prose in honor of Sam is scheduled to appear this summer from Spuyten Duyvil Press.

John Roche
[redacted]

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
February 21, 2007

CARMEL VALLEY, CA ? NorthernPros Creations is proud to present its new journal of innovative writing and art, CADILLAC CICATRIX (kadl_ak? sik_ay_triks).

In this premiere issue, available online at www.CadillacCicatrix.com, we focus on Story. How are stories told? What makes a story? Why tell this story?

Lighting a corridor congested by automobile traffic, lost loves, a deconstructed copy machine, abandoned rabbits, cotton candy, gardening, suicidaphobia, the near hanging of a medical marijuana user, and the fragged American Dream are some of our finest contemporary authors and artists.

FICTION:
Keith Abbott, deborah brandon, Peter DeMarco, Martin Dodd, Erin Ergenbright, Phillip Gardner, Richard Kostelanetz, Sean Padraic McCarthy, Raymond Nolan, Peter Orner, Robert Judge Woerheide

POETRY
Sam Abrams, Andrei Codrescu, Bob Holman, Lyn Lifshin, Rebecca Lilly, Kathleen Rooney, Michael Salcman, Ed Sanders, Dave Snyder, Michael Stephens

ESSAYS & INTERVIEWS
Jim Cohn, Lester Grinspoon M.D ., Nate Haken, John Jourden, John Keats, Mike Null, Lauren Pretnar

ART & ARTISTS
Nathan Redwood, Tony Stringer, Diane Katsiaficas

While most of the contributions will be in the print and online versions of the journal, we have allocated some art and writing for online-only publication.

Feel free to disseminate our information freely. Our subscription service begins with the first issue.

Should you have any questions and/or comments, please feel free to contact us.

Thank you for your attention,

Benjamin Spencer

Executive Editor
Cadillac Cicatrix

www.CadillacCicatrix.com www.NorthernPros.com
[redacted]

#

↑ Index

650. Max Middle soundpo video
Thu 22 Feb 2007

Greetings all,

Some video links to share with you - a brief Max Middle Sound Project reading on YouTube:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=fr69YDrUSio

There are four brief clips of me reading all alone too - three of the four are from the Ottawa launch for Shift & Switch: New Canadian Poetry on January 13th, 2006:

http://www.youtube.com/profile?user=MaxMiddle

We have plans to take the Max Middle Sound Project show on the road this summer, around Ontario with a foray into New York state.

Cheers, Max

↑ Index

651. DJ SPOOKY
Yoko Ono and Dj Spooky Present "Rising"
Thu 22 Feb 2007

Dear Friends and Colleagues -
I'm writing to say a basic hello, and I hope this message finds you well and in good spirits. It's been a while!

This is just a quick email about a project I'm really happy about. I've been a big Yoko Ono fan for years, and this is a mini project we put together a while ago. Thurston Moore from Sonic Youth plays guitar on the track, and the whole album has folks like Cat Power, The Flaming Lips, Peaches, Hank Shocklee (who produced Public Enemy), and others.

The album title is called Yes, I'm a Witch and its Yoko's first full length album in a while. If you have a moment, the track I did with her is up on my myspace page, and the full album has just been released on Astralwerks. It's called "Rising" and its one of Yoko's poems - her voice came out great in the mixdown!

Check it out!
www.myspace.com/djspooky

also:
http://www.astralwerks.com/ono/default.html

Official Site: http://www.djspooky.com

UPCOMING DATES
http://www.djspooky.com/stage.html

↑ Index

652. Poetry Project
Events at the Poetry Project 2/26 - 2/28
Thu 22 Feb 2007

Dears,

Please join us this coming week!

Love,

The Poetry Project

The Poetry Project is currently accepting applications for the Artistic Director position. The deadline for applications is Friday, March 2. Please visit http://www.poetryproject.com/director_desc.php for the job description and application requirements and procedure details.

Monday, February 26, 8:00 pm
Julian T. Brolaski & Tao Lin

Julian T. Brolaski is a love poet, and dedicates all hir verses to Love. S/he co-curated the Holloway Poetry Series at UC Berkeley from 2004-2006 and the New Brutalism series from 2003-2005. S/he is the author of Letters to Hank Williams, The Daily Usonian, Madame Bovary's Diary and the defunct blog Swimming for Dummies (under the name Tanya Brolaski). S/he is writing hir dissertation on rhyme in medieval, Renaissance and Apache poetry. Tao Lin is the author of a poetry-collection, You Are a Little Bit Happier Than I Am, a story-collection, Bed, a novel, Eeeee Eee Eeee, and two e-books, one poetry, This Emotion Was a Little E-book, and one stories, Today the Sky Is Blue and White With Bright Blue Spots and a Small Pale Moon and I Will Destroy Our Relationship Today. His web site is called Reader of Depressing Books.

Wednesday, February 28, 8:00 pm
Ed Friedman & Paul Violi

Ed Friedman wonders whether or not this brief note will make you want to come hear him read at the Poetry Project. Yes, he was L.A. High School¹s ³Boy of the Week.² Yes, he married the former Miss Rodeo for New York State. Yes, he was the Director of the Poetry Project for sixteen years. Yes, he recently appeared on Jon Stewart¹s The Daily Show. Yes, his books include La Frontera, Mao & Matisse, Away, and Drive Through the Blue Cylinders. Yes, he inhaled helium from a weather balloon and sang (in a very high voice) at the Museum of Modern Art. Yes, he co-edited Unnatural Acts with Bernadette Mayer and edited The World. Yes his new work is titled And the great world of mass struggle spread out between two large lemon bushes. Yes yes yes come to the reading. It will be so great to see you there. Paul Violi is the author of eleven books of poetry: Overnight, due early in 2007 from Hanging Loose Press, Breakers, Fracas, The Curious Builder, Likewise and Harmatan. He currently teaches in the New School¹s graduate writing program and at Columbia University.

Become a Poetry Project Member! http://poetryproject.com/membership.php

Winter Calendar: http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

The Poetry Project is located at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery
131 East 10th Street at Second Avenue
New York City 10003
Trains: 6, F, N, R, and L.
[redacted]
www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $8, $7 for students/seniors and $5 for members (though now those who take out a membership at $85 or higher will get in FREE to all regular readings).

We are wheelchair accessible with assistance and advance
notice. For more info call [redacted].

If you¹d like to be unsubscribed from this mailing list, please drop a line at [redacted].

↑ Index

653. Stephen Vincent
T-Shirt Without Vowels
Thu 22 Feb 2007

ŠOh, that traveling salesman. And, enthused, I bought away from the long procession of vowels in pajamasŠ from "Where Shall I Wander" by John Ashberry.

On the street on Sunday I encountered a slightly drunk black man in a black t-shirt with a grid of twelve variably configured black and white squares. Each white square contained a black capital, block-shaped consonant (D, N, P, X, etc). Each of the black squares were empty.

Under the grid - in white scripted letters - was the query:

Can You Sell Me A Vowel?

Presumably, if one could Œbuy¹ the right white vowels, they could fill the empty black squares. Instead of the sight of edgy, disparate consonants, the grid would be transformed into Œreal¹ words. Without knowing these words in advance, one might assume, that the grid would reveal a new found harmony, a kind of microcosm, the creation of a clarity, and the shirt would offer a formal moment - at least - of universal order.

I am not sure if because the man was an African-American - so often disenfranchised from so much in this country - that the dissonance in the shirt was made even more striking.

I asked him where got the great shirt. It looked brand new.

[3]I got it at some festival 10 years ago. Finally decided to put it on today.[2]

I was tempted to ask if I could buy the shirt off his back. But he looked so great in it. In fact, I liked the idea of him, this sunny afternoon, as he did, continue to walk down the street and letting the striking shirt - its grid of no vowels and un-conjoined consonants - give the comfortable appearing public a certain edge, a particular vision of Œreality[1], a glimpse between order and not order, words and not words, provision and not provision.

A "walking poem", yes, indeed.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

654. Bob Grumman
Re: Grumman's Blog
Thu 22 Feb 2007

I screwed up and posted this as a reply to a post it had nothing to do with. Apologies. So I'm reposting.

Today, in MY blog (over a thousand visits in just three years!) I mention having gotten my Comprepoetica file of Small Press Review columns up-to-date. The latest is about Crag Hill's blog. I spend most of it on analyzing a poem Crag composed using first lines from Charles Olson. The entry to the files is here:
http://www.geocities.com/Comprepoetica/spr-stuff/index.html

My columns, by the way, go back to June 1993, so provide a fairly lengthy record of recent marginal poetry.

--Bob

↑ Index

655. Tisa Bryant

Tisa Bryant Readings and Encyclopedia Project Events in NYC

Thu 22 Feb 2007

Dear people,

Hope to see you at one of these events!

Here's the li'l NY tour:

Friday, March 2nd, 7pm:
Tisa Bryant and Melissa Buzzeo
Pete's Candy Store
709 Lorimer St. (between Frost and Richardson) Williamsburg, Brooklyn
www.petescandystore.com

Friday, March 16 time TBA
Tisa Bryant and Lots of Amazing People
Small Press Center for Independent Publishing Location TBA
Center is at 20 W. 44th Street, Manhattan

Friday, March 31, 7pm
Encyclopedia Project X-Ref Extravaganza
Bowery Poetry Club
(more details on the lineup soon, but it's going to be fun!)

April 30, 7pm
Tisa Bryant and Jennifer Firestone
Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church
131 E. 10th Street, Manhattan http://www.poetryproject.com/

May 12, 7pm
Encyclopedia Vol. 2 F-K Fundraiser!
Galapagos Art Space
70 North 6th Street (between Kent and Wythe)
Williamsburg, Brooklyn, NY 11211
[redacted]
http://www.galapagosartspace.com/

The odds of hitting your target go up dramatically when you aim at it.

↑ Index

656. Karl-Erik Tallmo
more road signs
Thu 22 Feb 2007

My project American road signs, that has been going on between 1999 and 2006, is now hopefully finished. Seven of the approx. 25 images are uploaded here:

http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/everything.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/please.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/manontroppo.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/accidents.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/colon.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/still_life2.html
http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/other_art/roadsigns/had_all_this2.html

Karl-Erik Tallmo

--

KARL-ERIK TALLMO, poet, writer, artist, journalist

ARTWORK, WRITINGS etc.: http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/SOUND & MUSIC: http://www.nisus.se/tallmo/sound/MAGAZINE: http://art-bin.com

↑ Index

657. David A. Kirschenbaum
Boog City presents Ecopoetics, Thurs. March 1
Fri 23 Feb 2007

please forward

Boog City Celebrates the Renegade Press

Ecopoetics
(Bowdoinham, Maine)

Thurs. March 1, 6:00 p.m., free

ACA Galleries
529 W.20th St., 5th Flr.
NYC

Event will be hosted by Ecopoetics editor Jonathan Skinner

Featuring readings and music from

Marcella Durand
Robert Kocik
Michelle Nagai
Julie Patton
Damian Weber
Lila Zemborain

And a new book from Robert Kocik

There will be wine, cheese, and crackers, too.

Curated and with an introduction by Boog City editor David Kirschenbaum

---

Ecopoetics http://www.ecopoetics.org Ecopoetics is an annual journal dedicated to exploring creative-critical edges between writing (with an emphasis on poetry) and ecology (the theory and praxis of deliberate earthlings). It is edited and designed by Jonathan Skinner, in Bowdoinham, Maine. The sixth issue will appear this spring. Free pdfs of back issues can be downloaded at the above website.

Performer Bios

Marcella Durand
http://www.bigbridge.org/bigmdurand.htm
Marcella Durand is the author of The Anatomy of Oil (Belladonna, 2005), Western Capital Rhapsodies (Faux Press, 2001), City of Ports (Situations, 1999), and Lapsus Linguae (Situations, 1995). She lives in the East Village.

Robert Kocik http://www.arras.net/circulars/archives/000498.html Robert Kocik's works include AUKSO (Object, 1995) and Overcoming Fitness (Autonomedia, 2001). He founded the Bureau of Material Behaviors in 1996. In 1997 he began research in the Sore, Oversensitive, Insecure, and Subtle Sciences, discovering the logosome (key to the sexual transmissibility of artwork) and the prosopath (particulate unit in the relationship between prosody and disease). In 2001 he founded Poetry Outsource (missing social service responding to poets' lack of place in the culture).

Michelle Nagai http://www.treetheater.org/ Composer Michelle Nagai creates site-specific performances, installations, radio broadcasts, dances, and other interactions that address the human state in relationship to its setting. The American Composers Forum, Eyebeam, Harvestworks, the Jerome and McKnight Foundations, Meet the Composer, and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute have supported her work.

Julie Patton http://home.jps.net/~nada/patton.htm Julie Patton is a performance artist and writer. She is busy working on various community development/greenspace/sustainability projects under the rubric of Think Green! Her new chapbook Notes for Some (Nominally) Awake is forthcoming. Julie often takes to the road for various collaborative projects with Uri Caine, and is a fellow at Bates College's Green Horizons Project in Maine, where she collaborates with Jonathan Skinner.

Damian Weber
http://housepress.org/weber.html
Damian Weber, of the House Press collective, edits Source Material in Brooklyn. His latest CD is "It's Not Me & It's Not You & It's Not Dreamy."

Lila Zemborain
http://www.eluniversal.com/verbigracia/memoria/N142/creacion.htm Lila Zemborain is the author of Abrete sésamo debajo del agua, Usted, Guardianes del secreto, Malvas orquídeas del mar /Mauve-Sea Orchids (forthcoming from Belladonna Books), and Rasgado. She has authored the book-length essay Gabriela Mistral, Una mujer sin rostro. Lila is the director and editor of the Rebel Road Series, and the curator of the KJCC Poetry Series at New York University.

Directions: C/E to 23rd St., 1/9 to 18th St.
Venue is bet. 10th and 11th avenues

Next event:
Thurs. April 12, Corollary Press (Philadelphia)

--
David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

658. Aaron Vidaver

Review of Switch & Shift / Post-Prairie by Michael Barnholden (from The Rain)

Fri 23 Feb 2007

The following may be of concern to Buffalo List members. Other reviews from the current issue of The Rain Review of Books are now online too: http://www.rainreview.net

...

Jon Paul Fiorentino & Robert Kroetsch, eds., Post-Prairie: An Anthology of New Poetry (Vancouver: Talonbooks, 2005)

Derek Beaulieu, Jason Christie & Angela Rawlings, eds., Shift and Switch: New Canadian Poetry (Toronto: The Mercury Press, 2005)

Reviewed by Michael Barnholden
The Rain 4:2 (Summer-Autumn 2006): 4

On January 24, 1975 a Canadian military passenger plane landed at the Winnipeg International Airport. It was late at night and cold—forty below—when approximately one hundred passengers: men, women and children—most wearing T-shirts and jeans—walked across the tarmac into a new life. The plane had left Chile many hours before, after the family members were driven to the airport in Santiago to meet the prisoners who had arrived separately. They all were transported in military vehicles, bringing only as much as they could carry. Their excitement was mixed with dread as aircraft flights in Chile at this time often ended badly for certain of the passengers. They had been told little or nothing depending on the mood of their escorts, only that they were going into exile and they would no longer be welcome in Chile. These men and women were among the first and perhaps luckiest victims of the roll-out phase of neo-liberalism, when Augusto Pinochet aided by the CIA at the behest of large international copper mining interests mounted a coup d'etat against the democratically elected socialist government of Salvador Allende.

Lucky, because they had not been "disappeared". Victims, because many of them had spent the intervening time held in atrocious prisoner of war conditions without charge or trial. Most had no idea whether their families were alive or dead. The Canadian government, under enormous pressure, had hypocritically offered to take a limited number of political prisoners from Chile. The government feared the refugees, who had strenuously protested the nationalization of the copper mines owned by Canadian-based multinationals, would be too far left for Canadian political culture. 9/11/73, the date Pinochet took over in Chile, was one of the first major undertakings that demonstrated the reach of alreadyexisting neo-liberal hegemonies.

Poetry anthologies are notoriously difficult, both for what or who is included or excluded. Among recent anthologies there is also the shopworn impulse to anthologize the “new”. Shopworn, because if you are limiting your collection to Canadian poetry—Canadian publishers are restricted in their editorial programs by dependence on grant funding from state agencies—you are pretty much confined to making a case for the new, whether it makes sense or not. The “old” was either unsuccessful or has grown irrelevant, so “new” must replace “best” in an attempt to establish relevance and thus teachability and sales. The poetry anthologies under consideration, Switch and Shift: New Canadian Poetry and Post-Prairie: An Anthology of New Poetry, both signal a recognition that something has already happened and that these are attempts to represent the what of what has happened. The subtitles extend this understanding and expectation. However, it is in the introduction that the case for these “news” must be made.

Neither introduction does it adequately. In fact they are fraught with contradiction, which of course is reflected in the choice of poems presented. The three editors in Shift and Switch present three different and competing rationales for their selections: is it the poetry of the margins (Beaulieu) or the under-represented (Christie) or the cornucopia (Rawlings)? The same dynamic is played out in the selections. Because of the consensus default—it must be assumed that all three editors agreed to every inclusion, perhaps only one negative vote was needed for exclusion—you end up with something that is clearly a compromise and not a happy compromise at that. Perhaps this accounts for Christie’s “sleepless nights and nail biting”, but he doesn’t tell us.

In Post-Prairie the problem lies with the dual editorship. Although I don’t really think Kroetsch did much more than have the transcribed conversation with Fiorentino, reproduced here as the introduction. Kroetsch seems to contradict his coeditor with statements such as “place is where it’s at” then later “your stubbornly attentive eye, Jon, makes this anthology the real and precise news, the underwater trumpet blast, the lightning-ravaged tree”. These comments sound a lot like the “prairie poem” this anthology is supposed to be “post-”. I suspect Kroetsch is having some fun at his colleague’s expense, but it does serve to outline the problem: the anthology points one way, the poems point other contradictory ways that negate the intent of the introduction. I would argue that some of the poems are in fact “prairie poems” with the lyric “I” outstanding in “his” field, while others, thankfully most, engage with what is newly apprehended: global(capital)ism.

It is curious to me that three of the five editors are in both anthologies. I can understand why Kroetsch is not represented in either anthology, but why Rawlings isn’t in Post Prairie seems weird. I’m sure she’s been to Calgary. Which of course is the problem with nationalisms (Canadian) and regionalisms (Prairie): who fits, who doesn't. Is every poet born or living on the prairies a prairie poet? Can you write a prairie poem somewhere else? What is New Canadian Poetry? What constitutes a Canadian poem? A Canadian? Perhaps instead of bending the poetry to fit their thesis, such as they are, maybe a closer reading of the actually existing poetry would help.

There is however, lurking in these two anthologies, another interesting collection. The little story at the beginning of this piece points to a previous 9/11 and the beginnings of globalism or neo-liberalism. If the Writing Class anthology that I coedited back in the nineties can be said to outline responses and resistances to the roll-back phase of neo-liberal globalism, the roll-out phase is chronicled in much of the poetry in these two anthologies. All it needs is a strong introduction and editing. There is a hint in the publisher's blurb on Post-Prairie which could serve as a better organizing principle than what the editors offer. "This change is marked by the transition of a cultural identity primarily rooted in place to one that is rooted in a rapidly fragmenting, urbanizing, technology-based globalization." Of course there would have to be decisions made about what constituted a "globalized" poet and that would probably contradict the "Canadian" poet which, as I have pointed out, is pretty much all Canadian publishers can publish unless they figure out ways to break out of the confines of Canadian nationalism.

I think that many of the poets in these anthologies have made those decisions and are busy producing poems that engage, resist and subvert globalized capitalism. There are many more not included who have done likewise. That's the anthology of the "new" that I'd like to see.

↑ Index

659. CA Conrad

EAR INN reading: Daniel Becker, CAConrad, Douglas Martin

Fri 23 Feb 2007

Saturday, March 10th, 3pm

at the EAR INN
326 Spring Street
(West of Greenwich St.)
for full schedule click here: http://www.mbroder.com/ear_inn/03-mar07.htm

Daniel Becker
CAConrad
Douglas Martin

hosted by M. Broder

↑ Index

660. justin sirois
K. Lorraine Graham's Moving Walkways chapdisc
Fri 23 Feb 2007

---

out now:

www.angelfire.com/poetry/thepixelplus/nhlorraine.html

K. Lorraine Graham

Moving Walkways (chapdisc A

this recording has over sixty minutes of poetry tracks -

1. Demons Arrive
2. From* It does not go back
22. From* Terminal Humming
30. From* Some Epistles
31. From* Dear [Blank] I Believe in Other Worlds
32. From* And so for you there is no heartbreak
34. (after Frank O'Hara)

Gratitude and love to/for the poet folk of DC and Baltimore. Text versions of these pieces appeared in Mirage#4/Periodical, Submodern Fiction, the DCPoetry.com online anthology, and Rock Heals. it does not go back was originally a Subpoetics Self Publish or Perish project written in response to the 2001 Rand McNally Road Atlas of North America and Mexico. Dear [Blank] I Believe in Other Worlds was published as a pamphlet in 2003 by Phylum Press.Terminal Humming is a 2004 chapbook available from Slack Buddha.
[redacted]

this chap disc is a limited edition cdr inside a clear dvd case with full color maps on the exterior insert and hand letter pressed interior inserts of the track list and bio by Newlights Press.
all discs are autographed by the poet.

www.narrowhouserecordings.com

.

.

.

.
.
.
.
http://www.narrowhouserecordings.com/a record label primarily interested in contemporary writing, poetics and the political

---

___ Finding fabulous fares is fun. Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains. http://farechase.yahoo.com/promo-generic-14795097

↑ Index

661. amy king
TONIGHT -- KNOX, QUEYRAS, & BOHM
Fri 23 Feb 2007

MiPOesias presents

~~~ JENNIFER L. KNOX, SINA QUEYRAS, and ROBERT BOHM ~~~

Stain Bar, Brooklyn, NYC
February 23, 2007 @ 7 P.M.

~~~~~~~~~~

JENNIFER L. KNOX was born and raised in Lancaster, California , where absolutely anything can be made into a bong. Her work is featured in Best American Poetry 2006, and her book of poems, A Gringo Like Me, is available from Softskull Press. http://www.mipoesias.com/2007/knox_jennifer.htm

SINA QUEYRAS'most recent collection of poetry, Lemon Hound, was published by Coach House Books in 2006. Last year she edited Open Field: 30 Contemporary Canadian Poets. She is contributing editor to Drunken Boat and co-curator of Belladonna reading series. This year she is visiting professor at Haverford College. Next year she is writer-in-residence at the University of Calgary. She wears a cape whenever possible and keeps a blog: http://lemonhound.blogspot.com.
http://www.mipoesias.com/Poetry/queyras_sina.html

ROBERT BOHM is a poet and culture writer. He was born in Queens, NY. His new chapbook, Uz Um War Moan Ode, will be published in 2006 by Pudding House Press. His other credits include two books, another chapbook and work published in a variety of print and online publications.
http://www.mipoesias.com/September2003/bohm.htm

~~~~~~~~~

STAIN BAR
766 Grand Street Brooklyn, NY 11211
(L train to Grand Street Stop, walk 1 block west)
718/[redacted]

~~~~~~~~~

Hope you'll stop by!

Amy King
MiPO Host

http://miporeadingseries2007.blogspot.com/
http://www.mipoesias.com

~~~~~~~~~

Need a quick answer? Get one in minutes from people who know. Ask your question on Yahoo! Answers.

↑ Index

662. Nicholas Karavatos
South Asian Diaspora Poetry Anthology in English?
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Could anyone suggest a good poetry anthology of South Asian diaspora poets writing in English?

Also, a complementary request - how about South Asian poets who write in English?

Thanks,
Nick

Nicholas Karavatos
Dept of Language & Literature
American University of Sharjah
PO Box 26666
Sharjah
United Arab Emirates

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index
~~~~~~~~~

663. susan maurer
no listings from africa
Fri 23 Feb 2007

I have long been upset that there are no listing at all from any of the countries in the various reference books such as POETS MARKET,etc. It doesn't cost to list in them . If anyone has any way of encouraging African publications to participate, please do.susan maurer

_____ Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for FREE. http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

↑ Index

664. susan maurer
Poets Wear Prada Publication Party
Fri 23 Feb 2007

---

on march 8 at 6pm at cornelia st cafe new press poets wear prada with be launching with a group reading. this is in nyc and should be entertaining. susan maurer

_____ Win a Zune™— make MSN® your homepage for your chance to win! http://homepage.msn.com/zune?icid=hmetagline

↑ Index

665. Peter Ciccariello
Re: T-Shirt Without Vowels
Fri 23 Feb 2007

I enjoyed this Stephen.
It gives me a lot to think about this morning.

- Peter
http://invisiblenotes.blogspot.com/

On 2/22/07, Stephen Vincent <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> ŠOh, that traveling salesman. And, enthused, I bought away from the long > procession of vowels in pajamasŠ from "Where Shall I Wander" by John > Ashberry.
>
> On the street on Sunday I encountered a slightly drunk black man in a > black

> t-shirt with a grid of twelve variably configured black and white squares.
> Each white square contained a black capital, block-shaped consonant (D, N, > P, X, etc). Each of the black squares were empty.
>
> Under the grid - in white scripted letters - was the query:
>
> Can You Sell Me A Vowel?
>
> Presumably, if one could Œbuy[1] the right white vowels, they could fill the > empty black squares. Instead of the sight of edgy, disparate consonants,
> the > grid would be transformed into Œreal[1] words. Without knowing these words
> in > advance, one might assume, that the grid would reveal a new found harmony,
> a > kind of microcosm, the creation of a clarity, and the shirt would offer a > formal moment - at least - of universal order.
>
> I am not sure if because the man was an African-American - so often > disenfranchised from so much in this country - that the dissonance in the > shirt was made even more striking.
>
> I asked him where got the great shirt. It looked brand new.
>
> [3]I got it at some festival 10 years ago. Finally decided to put it on > today.[2]
>
> I was tempted to ask if I could buy the shirt off his back. But he looked > so > great in it. In fact, I liked the idea of him, this sunny afternoon, as he > did, continue to walk down the street and letting the striking shirt - its > grid of no vowels and un-conjoined consonants - give the comfortable > appearing public a certain edge, a particular vision of Œreality[1], a > glimpse > between order and not order, words and not words, provision and not > provision.
>
> A "walking poem", yes, indeed.
>
> Stephen Vincent
> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>

>
>
>

↑ Index

666. Adam Fieled
Raymond Bianchi on PFS Post
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Check out seven poems from Chicago's Raymond Bianchi on PFS Post:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

"Ain't there one damn song that can make me break down and cry?"

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.

↑ Index

667. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: no listings from africa
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Susan-- It's possible African and other countries might just want to be for African and other countries' writers, many of whom write in languages that are not always "international" so need and want their own forums. Even writing in "international" languages, perhaps a great many people around the world feel that their lives are already invaded enough with American imperialisms in economics/politics/media-- and writing/poetry spaces are ones that would be areas of freedoms from this. "Just what we need! American writers of "resistant" "radical" poetry moving in on our areas of resistance! Why do they think their "liberatory" works will be welcomed where there is Resistance to them imposing themselves ever deeper into every sphere?"

(Memories of "Iraqis bearing flowers in Welcome"--and the chasm between the vision and the reality--a salutory cautionary example to bear in mind-)

I imagine--as is this is often the case when it occurs-- that journals would be interested in American writers--ones who knew of the writing in other countries-knew the journals and poetry scenes--read them and knew the langauge and culture---so there is a dialogue--rather than just a one way street of impositions which would happen by advertising and being flooded by yet more American products and messages with no interest/connection to a living poetry and culture essaying its continued creative energies and survival.

Just because something is "free"--advertising in Poets' Market for example--doesn't neccesarily mean that one doesn't pay a price, if not a very heavy price, not too far down the line.

> From: susan maurer <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: no listings from africa
> Date: Fri, 23 Feb 2007 10:14:53 -0500
>
> I have long been upset that there are no listing at all from any of the countries in the various reference books such as POETS MARKET,etc. It doesn't cost to list in them . If anyone has any way of encouraging African publications to participate, please do.susan maurer
>
> _____
> Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for FREE.
> http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

_____ Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for FREE. http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

↑ Index

668. Dan Waber
caffeine, nicotine, benzedrine
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Caffeine, Nicotine and Benzedrine
Artwork and music by Ronnie Cramer
Based on a Poem by Dan Waber

In this project, artist/composer Ronnie Cramer uses watercolor and audio to interpret written material by poet and multimedia artist Dan Waber.

Images of the paintings & mp3 clips from the audio tracks from the CD now online here:

http://cramer.org/music/caffeine.htm

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

669. Michael Dylan Welch
Re: Haiku
Fri 23 Feb 2007

There are literally thousands of books that teach haiku in Japanese. However, I wouldn't know what books to suggest reading, as most of the haiku books I have are in English. Try visiting a bookstore like Kinokuniya (in a few major U.S. cities) or search online at http://www.amazon.co.jp/ (Japan's Amazon.com) or other similar sites, or ask through the Web sites for the Haiku International Association or the World Haiku Association.

Michael

-----Original Message-----
Date: Thu, 22 Feb 2007 08:18:00 +0000
From: [redacted]
Subject: Haiku

A fellow poet Tarre Beach speaks Japanese, and wants to know if there are any books, (you might suggest) that teach haiku in Japanese.
_____ Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

670. Michael Kelleher
OlsonNow Updates
Fri 23 Feb 2007

New on the Documents Page at OlsonNow:

Paul Nelson/The Sound of the Field and Organic Poetry and Dualism and Olson's Antidote

Kelly Matthews/Letter toi Maximus From Cassandra

http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/olson/blog/

↑ Index

671. Lewis LaCook
Hide the pills, how little thing - Xanax Pop, by Lewis LaCook
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Hide the pills Inside an hour to go before have to hide the pillbottle have to hide the pills is the broil of gaze ranging across yer flesh selflessly until the past grazing on you sucking the pith of yer silhouette and all of these experiments have been made and failed blisters demure howitzer is it sir the emblem melts with succesive engravings of a peaked devil methamphetamine directory until lighting on the correct recordset smtp server based on ip freely transparent windows with lineage jelly messiah and neomail was a dead end too

91 Words • Lewis LaCook • 02/23/07 • 01:21:29 pm • • Leave a comment • Edit

Hot little thing Hot little thing, our eyebrows slant us wicked
Hot little thing in a glass of morning milk
Hot little thing needs her feelings verified
O Hot little thing, no nw messages on the server
Hot little thing with thaw thwarted chipper
Hot little thing, a morning glass of pus and sky
Hot little thing boasts soaring and soreness
Hot little thing sending login string
O Hot little thing, beware my vicious temper
Hot little thing, and my elephantine pride
Hot little thing, you want to twist my neck
Hot little thing, broken soft on the inside

Lewis LaCook
Director of Web Development
Abstract Outlooks Media

[redacted]

http://www.abstractoutlooks.com
Abstract Outlooks Media - Premium Web Hosting, Development, and Art Photography

http://www.lewislacook.org
lewislacook.org - New Media Poetry and Poetics

http://www.xanaxpop.org
Xanax Pop - the Poetry of Lewis LaCook

Don't get soaked. Take a quick peak at the forecast with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.

↑ Index

672. Richard Jeffrey Newman
Persian Literature CFP
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Call For Papers: Persian Literature as (a) World Literature

Controlling Question: If Persian literature is not only literature written in Persian, but also literature written by people who, in or way or another, claim a Persian heritage and/or who translate Persian literature into other languages, then Persian literature is being produced right now, all over the world, in many languages other than Persian. Is it fair, then, to call Persian literature a world literature? If so, what does that label mean not only for Persian literature in itself, but also for the other literatures that interact with it, either by virtue of translation or because writers of Persian descent are producing in the languages of those other literatures?

For a special, Persian literature edition of ArteNews (www.arteeast.org/artenews/arteeast-artenews.html), the online journal published by ArteEast (www.arteeast.org), whose mission is "to exhibit the works of artists and filmmakers from the Middle East and its diaspora," we are soliciting submissions in the following categories:

1. Poetry (3-5 poems): written by Iranians, people of Iranian descent, or people for whom Persian is their language of composition. The poems need not have been written originally in English, but any non-English poems must be accompanied by a strong, literary, English translation. 2. Persian poetry in translation (3-5 poems): from any historical period; the translator must show proof that he or she has the right to publish the translations. 3. Brief essays of no more than 1000 words on any aspect of Persian poetry or literature. 4. Responses of no more than 300-500 words to the controlling question at the top of this call.

Submission Deadline: March 9, 2007.
Please send submissions to: [redacted]

↑ Index

673. Aaron Belz
March 8: Woodward, Miller, Gallaher
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Hey Poetics -

I'm excited about the final two readings of the Observable season. They are going to be SOLID, and if you're anywhere near St. Louis, I hope you'll save the dates: March 8 (Woodward, Miller, and Gallaher) and April 5 (Chiasson and Clewell).

For March 8th, we have three readers who all have new books in 2006 or 2007. And they're really, really good books. Look them up on Amazon, would you? And forward this, blog this, let people know!

Aaron

_ _ _ _ _ _ _

March 8, 2007
Observable Readings presents
Jon Woodward, John Gallaher, Wayne Miller
8 PM - Bottleworks in Maplewood - FREE

Jon Woodward:
A steady hail of ink-columns on mind's face-paper: bilaterally symmetrical & small, double
-taken (from across the room) as hiding nothing?

Wayne Miller:
What I'll allow myself to beleive is admittedly not much--the faint mirror of a blank wall, the heart ringing with another's words like the sympathetic vibration of a bell--.

John Gallaher:
The children are running across the field, each carrying something.
Each on his or her spindly legs.
The field's a good field.

More info, of course, is here: http://observable.org/readings/

_ _ _ _ _ _ _

↑ Index

674. Stephen Vincent
Re: no listings from africa
Fri 23 Feb 2007

> I have long been upset that there are no listing at all from any of the > countries in the various reference books such as POETS MARKET,etc. It > doesn't cost to list in them . If anyone has any way of encouraging African > publications to participate, please do.susan maurer
>
http://www.sentinelpoetry.org.uk/

Susan - Check out this site for London/ African based Sentinel Magazine (online) and Sentinel Quarterly.

That might get you into a network of African based poetry and literary magazines.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

675. blacksox
Re: Haiku
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Thanks

↑ Index

676. Eric Dickey
Re: no listings from africa
Fri 23 Feb 2007

To Topos 2005 issue on North African Voices contains contributor info that can help you.

For more info: http://oregonstate.edu/dept/foreign_lang/totopos/index.html

Stephen Vincent <[redacted]> wrote:
> I have long been upset that there are no listing at all from any of the > countries in the various reference books such as POETS MARKET,etc. It > doesn't cost to list in them . If anyone has any way of encouraging African > publications to participate, please do.susan maurer
>
http://www.sentinelpoetry.org.uk/

Susan - Check out this site for London/ African based Sentinel Magazine (online) and Sentinel Quarterly.

That might get you into a network of African based poetry and literary magazines.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.

↑ Index

677. ozcan turkmen
The Disturbed Tree - ["Workman of Child" site update]
Fri 23 Feb 2007

"The Disturbed Tree - 2003" (HTML & Javascript project in Turkish language) explained at http://www.workmanofchild.com/eng/index.html

Ozcan Turkmen

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.

↑ Index

678. Jennifer Karmin
Submissions: Version>07
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Version Festival >07
Chicago, IL
http://www.versionfest.org

A diverse program of activities featuring an art exposition/art fair, multiple art exhibitions, urban events, film screenings, interactive technologies, performances, street art, presentations, talks, workshops, and art rendezvous and action. It coincides with Chicago's Art Chicago weekend and is known as the artists' art fair. Over 5,000 people were in attendance last year to experience the diverse programming encouraging crossover between art disciplines and practices. Version is a massive DIY festival with many components. Choose your own adventure.

GUIDELINES:
Deadline March 7, 2007. There are NO application or entry fees. Submissions cannot be returned so try to NOT send your only copy of anything. Version has very limited funds and CANNOT guarantee stipends, honorariums or travel fees. We CAN guarantee housing, good food and lodging for visitors from out of town and country.

Please go here to use the online submission form.
http://www.adoptanamerican.com/version07/submit/add.php

Alternatively you may mail your proposals to:
Version>07
960 W 31st St
Chicago, IL 60608
(include documentation on disc, or DVD with printouts of your proposal)

Questions?
Email [redacted]

___
Do you Yahoo!?
Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

679. Burt Kimmelman

New Chapbook by Burt Kimmelman Now Available

Fri 23 Feb 2007

There Are Words by Burt Kimmelman, published by Dos Madres Press, is now available, pre-publication date, at http://www.dosmadres.com. A CD of Kimmelman reading the poems in this chapbook is available separately.

"In There Are Words, Kimmelman strives for and often attains 'the simple / lettering stating / the facts'-his own words."

- Samuel Menashe

"Burt Kimmelman's poems flourish as they pivot from a repertoire of reiterated subjects-works of art, natural landscapes, family, the animal world-to a transfiguring notion of their properties and possibilities. For over twenty-five years, this practice has produced dynamic patterns of insight, patterns comprised of recurring figures and forms which nevertheless shift in their relations to his poetic witness."

- Jon Curley, Talisman: A Journal of Contemporary Poetry and Poetics

About the Author:

Burt Kimmelman has published four previous collections of poetry -- Musaics (1992), First Life (2000), The Pond at Cape May Point (2002), a collaboration with the painter Fred Caruso, and Somehow (2005). For over a decade, he was Senior Editor of Poetry New York: A Journal of Poetry and Translation. He is a professor of English at New Jersey Institute of Technology and the author of two book-length literary studies: The "Winter Mind": William Bronk and American Letters (1998); and, The Poetics of Authorship in the Later Middle Ages: The Emergence of the Modern Literary Persona (1996, paperback 1999). He also edited The Facts on File Companion to 20th-Century American Poetry (2005).

Other authors published by Dos Madres Press include:

Annie Finch

Norman Finkelstein

Michael Heller

Robert Murphy

Peter O'Leary

Henry Weinfield

Tyrone Williams

and many others

About Dos Madres Press:

Founded in 2004 by Robert J. Murphy, Dos Madres Press is dedicated to the belief that the small press is essential to the vitality of contemporary literature as a carrier of the new voice and new works by established poets, as well as the older, sometimes forgotten voices of the past. And in an ever more virtual world, to the creation of fine books pleasing to the eye and hand.

↑ Index

680. Charlotte Mandel Forward re Princeton Encyclopedia
Fri 23 Feb 2007

Forwarding fyi:

Dear Friends and Colleagues:

Do you know or use the Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics in any or all of its three editions (1965, 1974, 1993)? Have you found something useful in it? Do you wish it contained something it lacks? If you don't spend much time with poetry, do you know someone elsewhere who does?

Preparation of a fourth edition has begun, and both Roland Greene, who is Editor-in-Chief, and I, as General Editor, would welcome any and all suggestions and thoughts about which entries to keep, which to drop, which to add. We have begun working our way through the 1700 entries of the third edition in order to make these decisions, and that work should occupy us for the next month or so. If you have ideas or suggestions, please send them along during this time ([redacted] or [redacted]).

And please feel free to forward this message far and wide to colleagues working with poetry in any language throughout the United States and in other countries. The Princeton Encyclopedia has users around the world, and we are trying to cast a world-wide net.

Gratefully,

Steve

Stephen Cushman
Department of English
University of Virginia
219 Bryan Hall
P.O. Box 400121
Charlottesville, VA 22904-4121

tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

681. Ricejunk2

psssst. 6 issues march-august. hey, what did you just say? speak up!

Sat 24 Feb 2007

To Poetics---

Releasing monthly themes for the next 6 issues of ... The Other Herald... Help us keep heralding the art of words in WNY...

Pssst. Know any writers? Huh? Readers? Themes for coming issues of The Other Herald are as follows:

March: The Poetry of Plants
April: Craft in Poetry and Poetry in Crafts
May: The Moon
June: Stories & Poems on Your PC
July: Sunshine and Fishy-Lips
August: A Gallery of Words: Use of Text in Art

(Submissions requested... of short articles, ideas, writing exercises, poems, comics, black & white art, excerpts from work in progress writing, local books to review, etc. Work from Western New York (term used loosely) given first priority, but all work considered! We respond to every submission.

Include submissions in the body of your email text, and please also send your contact information incl. mailing address, to:
[redacted]

You may mail submissions, subscription requests, or SASE for sample issue, to:
Hidden Valley Farm, Publisher of The Other Herald, P.O. Box 172, Perry NY 14530

Psssssst? Know any readers? Subscriptions are $10 for more than a year= half cover price + stamp for each issue. Send a subscription today to someone you know who loves to read and/or write!

Want to sponsor free issues that we mail out randomly on a monthly basis to WNY locations, such as nursing homes, school libraries, community centers...?

Small gestures start up great things. Make someone's day today, in whatever way you can. If not with this request, then discover your own ideas and make it happen. Did someone make your day this week? It is even better if you pass it on. Make it a great weekend, everyone, and try to stay warm!!!)

This poem started in an email, to my dear kindred-spirit-friend, and here it is again... Be well, all...

What is fortune
if not the simple things overlooked.

There is not one without something precious.

We are not more or less fortunate only in possession of different fortunes.

--me

Sincerely yours, with a smile,
T. F. Rice, Editor
The Other Herald...Heralding the art of words in Western New York
[redacted]

P.S. To Poetics--- Knock this all you want. Give it your best shot. I can take the abuse. But let me tell you it is more fun to enjoy life and all you can be than to knock everyone and everything just because you can. Do what you can, though. Dont let little old me stop you. But always write on. Write, write, write, because you must. Have a good night, all.

↑ Index

682. Ricejunk2
You must reply to this with a poem
Sat 24 Feb 2007

Hello all "poetic-al" people. Recently it has been suggested that there is not enough poetry within POETICS discussions. Let's make up for it. Responses to this post must be in the form of a poem, discussing whatever you wish (remember the moderator) and maybe we can all enjoy a little poetry (in the casual non-serious-criticism sense of the word), rather than the opposite which I often read on POETICS when someone has a need to fight and no one at home to do so with. Exasperation can be remedied by writing it all down, and if it is that bad then please throw it away rather than send it out into the world to spread the dark wings of ugliness. We dont have to all like each other, since respect and communication can go on without "like". But i do like you all. And I hope you have an inspiring weekend, while I am slaving away at my "day job"... staring out my office window at the real world. Ahhhh. Stay warm (hard to do these days in Buffalo and beyond) and remember that we could be in the middle of a hurricane. I dont know about you, but I will gladly take the snow any day over that mess and worry. Goodbye all, for now, T. F. Rice

Here is my poem for the evening: Untitled:

Small pine trees with gaping holes in the snow for shadows whisper their opinions on this season full of change and uncertainty
in a foreign language
no one wants to hear.

↑ Index

683. Ricejunk2
Re: laundering words
Sat 24 Feb 2007

Do you think this would work in Buffalo, or in my small town...?

Quoting mIEKAL aND <[redacted]>:

> (anyone taking part in this?...)
>
> New literary twist added to laundry cycle
> Tue Feb 13, 2007 9:08am ET
>
> NEW YORK, Feb 12 (Reuters Life!) - Doing the laundry has taken on a new meaning for New Yorkers who can now watch their wash and spin cycles while listening to poetry and prose.

> Instead of burying their head in a book or heading to the nearest coffee shop to beat the boredom of laundry, New York writer Emily Rubin has organised a series of readings called "Dirty Laundry: Loads of Prose," at laundromats in New York.
>
> "Just mixing laundry and writing seemed completely natural to me because truly in life and metaphorically as a writer, everyone has dirty laundry," said the Brooklyn native who started the series last year.
>
> She contemplated holding the readings in various neighborhood venues including shops but said a laundromat seemed "a natural fit."
>
> People can wash their dirty laundry while listening to a poem or short story or just attend the readings. During the first of the 2007 series writer Carolyn Turgeon read some of her work while people loaded the dryers and washing machines.
>
> "It just makes me feel homey and reading is just sort of part of this regular thing, if that makes sense," she said, adding that a laundromat doesn't feel as stuffy or artificial as other venues.
>
> "It feels like you're part of this natural environment," Turgeon explained.
>
> Author Marie Carter, who moved from Edinburgh, Scotland to New York in 2000, likes the idea of entertaining people in a laundromat which is not usually a center of excitement.
>
> Some of the people attending the reading felt a bit odd initially but got used to the idea.
>
> "It was a little strange, it was kind of wild," said one person.
>
> Rubin, who calls herself "Mistress of Laundry" is planning more readings at laundromats across New York and is encouraging people to come along with or without their dirty washing.

↑ Index

684. Jason Quackenbush

Re: no listings from africa

Sat 24 Feb 2007

---

i dislike so-called "market-listings" and think that all publications everywhere should be discouraged from listing in them.

susan maurer wrote:
> I have long been upset that there are no listing at all from any of the > countries in the various reference books such as POETS MARKET,etc. It > doesn't cost to list in them . If anyone has any way of encouraging > African publications to participate, please do.susan maurer

>
> _____
> Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for > FREE. http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

↑ Index

685. Alan Sondheim

lifeprose symposium issues

Sat 24 Feb 2007

---

lifeprose symposium issues

of course one could say one could say of course we could say one could say of course i could say one could say of course one could say we could say of course we could saw we could say of course i could say we could say of course one could say i could say of course we could say i could say of course i could say i could say i think what i was getting at i thought that it might be interesting to my work led me into new people reacted to it and i thought it seemed to me that i should i think what i was trying to say then it occurred to me to think about what i was getting at a lot of people said they liked what i was if it wasn't for the support of i really didn't know what i was doing we really didn't know what we were doing they really didn't know what they were doing they really didn't know what i was doing they really didn't know what we were doing i didn't know what we were doing

i think what we were trying to say we think what we were trying to say they thought what i was trying to say they thought what we were trying to say i could have used a little more i could have used a little less of course we couldn't tell them that of course i couldn't tell them that they tried to tell us that we tried to tell them that it seemed funny at the time it seemed serious at the time it still seems we knew it was absurd

we knew we were absurd
i knew it was absurd
i knew i was absurd

we were going to do that when i didn't like where i was going i didn't like where we were going they didn't like where i was going we didn't like where they were going we didn't like where we were going

if it wasn't for for all i know i was they didn't know that we we knew that they

==========

↑ Index

686. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Haiku as a genre
Sat 24 Feb 2007

Hey Michael, Thanks for your comments again. I've been interestedly reading Lee Gurga's "Haiku: A Poet's Guide" and i think i'm learning a lot. There's also a lot a don't agree with in there, at least stuff I don't think I agree with, in that it seems a lot of the time things he reads in his examples as making for good haiku i sometimes question as to whether they even make for good poetry.

That having been said, there's a lot to work with here, and while i generally shy away from minimalism, I do like the points raised about haiku being both small and large at the same time that gurga makes.

Something you said did spark a bit of introspection for me, though, about this whole idea of a cutting word. For Gurga, it seems almost synonymous with caesura, and you suggested as well that it might be required for the sort of juxtaposition that haiku create. I really dislike that idea, personally. For me, it's a much more natural device to use what I think of as an "internal" grammar to create a syntactic, than to use an "external" one. A good example would be the "green/colors/wax" which, for me, turns on the fact that wax can be read as a verb or a noun, and gives a different sort of image depending on how it's read. Now whether it's such a great poem or a haiku or not aside, i'm curious if you think that such devices can be used in place of caesura. In my reading, Kilbrides "mime/lifting/fog" turns on such a device, and the thing about the poem that for me is so striking is the fact that there are at least three very complex images that are contained in the fact that "mime" can be read as either a verb or a noun, one of which, at least, the image of a mime literally picking up a bank of fog, borders on the surreal, and for me at least evokes a very strong sense of autumn in San Francisco. I don't know why that is, maybe i associate mimes with San Francisco for some reason... Anyway, you say that you think English language poems need a caesura to do their juxtaposition, and i think that's interesting. I read caesurae as being a sort of sonic sledgehammer, and that in itself is a bit of a juxtaposition given the brevity and delicacy--which isn't quite the right word but something close to it--that are required in haiku.

Michael Dylan Welch wrote:
> Jason, some comments in response to your detailed message. Regarding the features you were incorporating into your verses, it seems to me that you suceeded in some cases, but with the following possible exceptions, at least in haiku terms (see the numbered list that follows below). On the other hand, if you were trying to create borderline haiku, you succeeded, I suppose, but perhaps the citizenship of your verses is still foreign to haiku. Since you asked if I thought they were still haiku or not, I would say no. Somehow, Jerry Kilbride's "mine / lifting /fog" is still haiku, but it is certainly on the fringe. Something in your verses takes them across the border.
>
> You also make an interesting comment about a "normative" element that can be prescriptive, which I have to fight in my reactions to some poems I read, as it runs the risk of killing the life of the poem. I also have to guard against the label of "haiku" as meaning "good haiku," so you are right to ask if there can be poems that are bad haiku but still haiku -- to which the answer is of course yes. It can have all the "prescribed" elements, and still lack freshness, or be weakly crafted. Your verses, though clearly crafted and brimming with freshness, depart from the prescribed elements enough that I personally have trouble admitting them as haiku. Someone else might feel differently. However, I doubt they'd ever find a place in most of the haiku journals publishing in North America. Such a claim might say something negative about the sensitivity range of the editors in question, but if they are gatekeepers of haiku, it may also say something about what they think is import ant > in haiku. But yes, a poem can be bad but still be a haiku. It can be a haiku if the poet wants to call it that, of course, but discounting that generous approach, it can still be a haiku for other aesthetic reasons (that is, by hitting enough of the "haiku" targets), and fail for not hitting them very well. The haiku journal Haiku Headlines, edited monthly by David Priebe since 1988 until his death last year, is a case in point. The majority of the poems are deathly, as haiku (I've used its poems as examples of "bad haiku" in my workshops -- I have a file folder for large printouts of the poems, even), yet sure, they're still haiku. And even the best haiku journals have "better" or "weaker" poems, though often such rankings are in the eye of the beholder. Then there are the pseudo-haiku poems in books such as Haikus for Jews or Honku, and so on, which hit the wrong 5-7-5 target, and may have other virtues, but are essentially ignorant of most haiku necessities (or cho ose > to ignore them). If haiku is a "genre," and thus broad rather than overly narrow, then these poems are still "haiku," because they try to hit the target(s) that the poet thinks a haiku should hit. To me, they have very little to do with haiku, and are more damaging than helpful to haiku as literature for their perpetuation of misunderstandings, though that's really a separate issue. Actually, though, I think it's hard for a haiku to be a "bad" haiku and yet still successfully be a haiku, because the more you "prove" the poems haiku-ness, the more you're going to tip it towards being a good haiku, or at least that's my hunch. There's some philosophical danger, there, because the term "haiku shouldn't be a form of encomium, as you say. Most of Sonia Sanchez's poems offered as haiku are what I would consider good nonhaiku. Others might think of them as bad haiku, but that isn't fair to what she's trying to do with vernacular voice. And I could start citing all sorts of ot > her poems and talk about whether they're haiku or not, or whether they're good or bad, but it's hard to know where to start. And I would have only one opinion, of course!

>
> Anyway, here are some thoughts in reaction to the four criteria you set for yourself:

>
> 1. Nature references. Yes, you had nature references, but, in "warm santa / ana," using an essentially nonnatural term for the wind tends to distance the poem from the only natural element therein (the wind). A lot of readers wouldn't even know that you're referring to wind, which isn't necessarily a problem, but it is a risk you take. And in the lycra verse, the reference to "plant" is so generic as to not conjure up much of a nature image. Similarly, the reference to rain in the "march flush" poem is fairly slight as a nature reference, and might even be read as nonliteral. But again, I actually don't care about haiku having nature references or not. That's not the aim of haiku, as I understand it. Rather, haiku aims at the seasonal reference, and this happens to embrace nature much of the time, but it's really the season word that matters.
>
> 2. Seasonality. Again, yes, but not always clearly. The reference to "march" is ambiguous in many ways. Could you mean to march along, as a verb, since you lowercased it? So we don't know for certain if you meant March as the month. More than that, though, March means one season in the northern hemisphere, and an opposite season below the equator, so it's not as seasonally clear or universal as saying "cherry blossoms," for example. I don't sense any season in the lycra verse. I suppose the action of green colors "waxing" (as opposed to waning) could suggest the deepening of summer, but that could be too much of a leap for some readers, especially when the word "wax" is easily interpretted as a noun rather than a verb. And the Santa Ana winds are seasonal, but because they're a regional phenomenon, their function as a seasonal reference not be clear to many readers (and they're not limited to a single season, say, like cherry blossoms, so it has less "sharpness" than other se > asonal references). Also, there's a difference between a seasonal reference and a season word (or kigo). The kigo tradition includes the overtone of allusion to other poems that use the same season word, depending on the season word. This won't happen with every season word, or there can be too many excellent poems for it to be clear which ones you might want to evoke, but in some cases a specific reference can be clear (and of course, allusion can be accomplished outside the season word as well). At the very least, though, the use of specific kigo respectfully invokes the entire tradition of that particular season word, if not a specific poem that has used it before.
>
> 3. Juxtaposition. In your "march flush" poem, it's too hard to parse the various possible meanings of the words and lines, thus making it hard to narrow down to the ONE "juxtaposition" that a good haiku usually has. Or, in the case of "warm santa / ana [wind] crumples silver / paper," there's no juxtaposition at all, at least not a grammatical one, because the lines read as a single grammatical unit, despite the line breaks (it's not the dreaded "Complete Sentence" you were trying to avoid, but it's still a single grammatical unit). Same with "a cotton lycra weave lifts / from plants it catches." There's actually no grammatical juxtaposition here at all either. And "green / colors / wax" can also be read as a single grammatical unit. It also becomes so minimalist (which is fine, but:) that it is really seeking to do other things than juxtaposition. The juxtaposition that goes on in haiku happens in various ways. To be closer to the Japanese tradition of the kireji, or cutt ing

> word, my sense is that the juxtaposition in an English-language haiku needs to be a stronger caesura, or cut. This tends to require the poem to have two grammatically unrelated fragments (not three, and not just one fragment). The juxtaposition is thus grammatical as well as contextual. You have mostly contextual juxtapositions, not grammatical ones. In the extreme, a contextual juxtaposition is like writing about an elephant and a doily, which can be startling and fresh, but there also needs to be a grammatical "juxtaposition" also -- akin to a caesura, but stronger, in the sense of having two fragments that are (most often) grammatically unrelated. For example:
>
> spring breeze--
> the pull of her hand
> as we near the pet store
>
> 4. Single experience/immediacy. This is where I think you achieved the most -- with single experiences. Immediacy in your verses is clouded, at least for me, by line breaks, by ambiguity as to whether certain words are nouns or verbs (too much ambiguity of syntax, I'd say, at least for haiku, but I guess that was what you were aiming at), and by other trouble parsing the grammar. Compare the immediacy of your verses to the immediacy of my verse above. Perhaps it's too "simple" for you or other readers, and you think there's no "there" there. Could be. But by focusing on a tactile sensation (haiku is a poetry of the five senses -- hence the title of one of my haiku workshops, "Come to Your Senses"), the poem gains authenticity and immediacy, and pairs it with a fitting seasonal reference (in this case the naming of the season, which may be the cheapest sort of season word). The season references should usually be more than just a weather report, however, but should have a n e > motional rightness to it. The preceding verse makes no mention of how old the female in the poem is, but nearly all people who hear or read this poem have told me that they imagine a child. Yet why is that? It's not stated at all. Yet it is suggested, through association with spring, the season of youthful beginnings, by breeze, which is lighter than wind or gale, and by the pet store, where we may easily imagine puppies and kittens. Yet all of this is, hopefully, intuitive, and part of the "immediate" gestalt of the poem. This is the sort of immediacy a good haiku is after, and it's best if it's not cluttered by overly clever wordings. As I think Basho said, haiku is like a finger pointing at the moon, and if the finger is too bejeweled, we no longer see the moon.

>
> Indeed, as Jack Kerouac said, haiku should be as simple as porridge. Though the tone is different, it's like a good joke -- saying only what needs to be said, and nothing more. Like the engine in a car, a haiku should have only necessary parts. And like I say in the haiku workshops I give, a haiku should not be as short as possible, but as short as necessary, which makes a world of difference.
>
> meteor shower . . .
> a gentle wave
> wets our sandals
>
> Hope these comments are of help to some.
>
> Michael
>
> P.S. Interesting to read that your "green / colors / wax" poem was so directly derived from or inspired by the Kilbride poem. Here's a similar minimalist poem of mine, that may or may not be a haiku (each line is meant to be centered):
>
> children's > book
> sh > elves
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> Date: Fri, 16 Feb 2007 21:35:29 -0800
> From: Jason Quackenbush <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Haiku as a genre
>
> Thanks for your comments michael, I think your comments are interesting. I got > some b/c comments about them from charles rossiter too, and I wanted to > clarify something, and loathe as I am to do reads of my own poems, i do want to > explain what i was trying to do with these because i composed them > with the intention of trying to create "borderline" cases of haiku, that is, > poems that fit uncomfortably within the genre. It's a sort of experiment, > and one i'll probably pursue, but in response to your comments i'd like to shed > a little light to see if maybe your greater experience with haiku > might help me with my next foray into this kind of thing.

>
> so, basically, the task I set myself was to compose several poems that had the > following features:
>
> 1.) some reference to nature
> 2.) some reference to seasonality
> 3.) a juxtaposition of elements
> 4.) a sense of a single experience or immediacy
>
> all the while remaining true to my own personal poetic commitments which involve > among other things a certain ambiguity of syntax and the forcing of > multivalence through the use of glued together sentence fragments and the > resistance to the received form that most people know as The Complete > Sentence. So I dashed off those poems to try to see just where the borders of > the haiku might lie. as experiments, i'm not particularly concerned with > how good they are, but i am interested in whether or not you think they're > haiku, and if not, why not? I'll admit that i have a suspicion you have an > so far undiscussed normative element that is in some way prescriptive and > laudatory, that is, i get the impression from some of your statements that > for you "haiku" is as much a name of a genre of poetry as it is a form of > encomium. So there's a second question i have that i haven't yet asked: can > a poem be bad (as is most certainly the case with my fourth example, by far the > weakest of the four in my opinion but also one that i think is very > haiku-like given my understanding of the genre) and still be a haiku? and to > that point, what makes a bad haiku bad while allowing it to remain a haiku?
>
> toward that end:
>
> rain on
> march flush
> on the student body
>
> relies on several puns, the first the fact that march is a verb, a noun, and a > Month (and from that seasonality); that "the student body" can be > either a group of students or the body of a particular student; and finally that > flush can either mean against and adjacent to (self-referencing the > juxtaposition of the outdoors of a rain on a group of marching students) and the > very intimate image of a young persons body that is "flushed" for > some reason.

>
> warm santa
> ana crumples silver
> paper
>
> is meant to turn on any number of things, but the primary turn is the one that > you seem to have missed that while ana is a female name, and santa is a > bearded guy who brings presents, 'santa ana' is the name of a kind of warm wind > that happens in the autumn and spring in southern california. other > things i tried to pack in there is the traditional. so this one was really > playing with the idea of genre by attempting to juxtapose seasons (autumn > winter spring) while the other images juxtapose age (the bearded old man with > the young girl exuberantly ripping paper).
>
> a cotton lycra weave lifts
> from plants it catches
>
> I won't comment any further on this one, Murat gave it precisely the reading i'd > intended and i'd like to thank him for it, except to point out that > part of the "juxtaposition" is the fact that cotton is a "natural" material > derived from a low growing shrub that has sticks that could easily catch a > garment, and lycra which is one of that is wholly synthetic made out of chains > of polymers. both are the most widely used fibers in textiles of their > respective types (synthetic or natural) and a large portion of garments worn in > north america are made out a cotton/lycra fabrics. Also, while i went > looking for pictures to show you, i found out that lycra is actually a brand > name, and the etymology of cotton is from the arabic al qutun, which > while neither here nor there poetically, might reveal more meaning if delved > into more deeply.
>
> finally the last, and I think weakest, of the four i posted. It's interesting > that you mentioned

> mime
> lifting > fog
>
> because my
> green
> colors
> wax
>
> is a semi-procedural, aleatorical poem derived from kilbride's poem (which i > like an awful lot, btw).
>
> what i did was move all the vowels in kilbrides poem back in the mouth
>
> so from the dipthong in mime /aI/, i got the dipthong /iu/. I couldn't think of > a word for that, so i cheated and shortened it to /i/> from the /I/ in lifting, i got to the /uh/ of colors > and from the ah in fog, i got the the aaa in wax. (there really ought to be an > easy way to type IPA characters).
>
> so from there it was just a matter of fitting consonants around the vowels until > I got a sequence of words that i liked. my problem with this one is > that it stinks of the sort of cleverness that i generally don't like in poetry > and that seems to be the stock in trade of writers like Billy Collins > for example, but that was done well (thanks to the heavy injection of humanity)
> by Ted Berrigan, so I let this one live.
>
> basically, it all turns on the double meaning of "grean" "colors" and "wax" if > green is a noun, colors is a verb and wax is a noun, you have an image > of a crayon being made. if colors is the noun, green is an adjective, and wax
is > the verb, you have the image of flowering plants as the green of > spring spreads. alternately, you could have green and wax as nouns, and
colors
> as the verb, but read wax as the subject and green as the object, which > is an image of someone using a crayon. all of which connote young life and > growth. but again, i think this one is mostly crap primarily because there > isn't much of an image in it, and i generally prefer short poems with strong > images that aren't as necessary in longer pieces.
>

> ugh. even though i had a reason to do it, that's still not fun to do. sorry to > inflict you all with my explanations. Basically none of these are > great, but i would like to know michael, seeing how i read them from my > standpoint on reading poetry, are they haiku do you think? are they the > borderline cases i intended them to be? and if they aren't, do you think you > could point me at some borderline cases, or perhaps some people who push > at what haiku can and write haiku that might be of questionable pedigree?
>
> also, to my earlier point, i would LOVE to see an example of something you think > is a BAD haiku that is still successfully haiku.
>
> thanks again for the comments on my four macedonia/zappai/maybe-haiku/
> _____
> Check out the new AOL. Most comprehensive set of free safety and security tools, free access to millions of high-quality videos from across the web, free AOL Mail and more.

↑ Index

687. Jim Andrews

Anal Canadian hockey statistics poem

Sat 24 Feb 2007

ANAL CANADIAN HOCKEY STATISTICS POEM

Below is a definition of what an average NHL team is and how many points it earns. The conclusion is that if an NHL team has played N games and has y overtime losses then, were it a perfectly average team, it would have earned N+y points in the standings.

Overtime games, where the winner gets 2 points and the loser gets 1 point, introduce some 'inflation' in the standings. The value of the below idea is that it measures the amount of inflation overtime games introduce and provides an easy way to calculate whether a team is above or below average in its play. You add the number of games played to the number of overtime losses. That tells you how many points an average team would have that's played that many games and has that many overtime losses.

It used to be that a team playing "five hundred hockey" would have earned N points after playing N games. Calling it 'five hundred hockey' is kind of meaningless, given the existence of 3 point games. Calling it 'average hockey' is better.

WHAT IS AN AVERAGE NHL TEAM?

Definition: An average team wins as many games in regulation time as it loses in regulation time, and wins as many games in overtime as it loses in overtime.

Suppose a team is average according to our definition and that it wins x games in regulation time and wins y games in overtime. Then, since it's average, it loses x games in regulation time and loses y games in overtime.

How many points did it earn? From its x wins in regulation time, it earns 2x points. From its y wins in overtime, it earns 2y points. From its y losses in overtime, it earns y points. So, overall, it earns 2x + 2y + y = 2x + 3y points.

How many points did it surrender? From its x losses in regulation time, it surrendered 2x points. From its y losses in overtime, it surrendered 2y points. From its y wins in overtime, it surrendered y points. So, overall, it surrendered 2x + 2y + y = 2x + 3y points.

Our definition of an average team implies that it earns as many points as it surrenders.

HOW MANY POINTS DOES AN AVERAGE TEAM EARN IN N GAMES?

How many points does an average team earn in N games? Suppose it wins x games in regulation-time and wins y games in overtime. Then, since it's average, it loses x games in regulation-time and loses y games in overtime.

$x + y + x + y = N$

The above equation just counts the number of games. Now we do some algebra on the equation.

$2x + 2y = N$
$x + y = N/2$
$x = N/2 - y$

We have seen that it earns 2x + 3y points.

Points = 2x + 3y

Now we substitute:

Points = 2(N/2 - y) + 3y
Points = N - 2y + 3y
Points = N + y

↑ Index

688. mIEKAL aND
a classic Bern Porter story making the rounds
Sat 24 Feb 2007

KNOX'S PROPHET
Someone's been reading Bern Porter
By CHRIS THOMPSON
February 7, 2007 1:12:27 PM

http://www.thephoenix.com/article_ektid33269.aspx

THINKING AHEAD: Creating Maine, forty years ago.

A Maine native and longtime resident of Belfast, Bern Porter died there in 2004 at the age of 93. His life and its creative output — ranging from art, science, and poetry to literature, publishing, and economic planning — read like a map for a road nobody else would notice, let alone imagine following. But here we are now, stepping right along it as he imagined.

After college, a budding career in physics got young Porter drafted to work on the Manhattan Project. The Hiroshima bombing made him aware of the fruits of his labors, so he quit. As Cold War minds divided the planet, Porter was at work probing and inventing connections between all manner of creative endeavors, from art and science to the poetry he felt certain would bind them. Many of these pursuits didn’t have names for themselves yet, but soon would: Mail Art, Sound Art, Found Poetry, and Concrete Poetry — he played a role in all of them.

He also found time, in 1968, to get himself hired, thanks to his research background, as a consultant to the Knox County Regional Planning Commission to write their master plan for economic development.

But soon, the commission and the State Planning Office in Augusta realized they’d made a mistake. The idealistic Porter imagined nothing less than the total reinvention of the world, beginning in downeast Maine. His draft came in at 700 pages — the commission would later cut it down substantially and use almost none of it.

But that didn’t stop Porter from treating it as a magnum opus, laboring over the minute details as well as their overarching arguments. He mailed it to dozens of major libraries throughout America with a note on the title page: “Written by Bernard H. Porter, but extensively cut up, mutilated, re-edited to point of uselessness by the Commission members.”

His plan was prescient and freakish at the same time. It saw that New England’s towns were slowly deteriorating as they gradually lost the ability to govern themselves. Control over local economies, he warned, was drifting away from local businesses and politicians in the direction of larger business chains based in big cities where executives cared only about profits. In addition, he argued, Maine was losing control over itself because of the rising number of wealthy outsiders who were buying property and flocking to the state in the summers but whose financial engagements and investments (apart from property taxes) remained elsewhere.

This, in Porter's view, put a split between money and government and also dramatically widened the gulf between a smaller group of moneyed Mainers and a burgeoning "underclass."

Where he really got radical was in his proposed solution. He advocated quick and substantive investment in a range of processed items that Knox County residents and businesses might focus on producing: everything from eggs and sea moss to paper and fabric. His real insight, and this was no doubt what sunk his plan, was to emphasize — remember this is forty years ago — massive investment in technology here in Maine: "new ventures in publishing, smelting, cement products, precision machinery, deep-sea terminals, prefabricated houses, electronics, development laboratories, pharmaceutical plants, refineries, and research institutions that [Porter] called 'Think Factories.'" And the state would need a totally revamped educational system to prepare young Mainers for the technological age.

Then, before Philip Morris NaPier would make it possible for such candidacies to be taken seriously, Porter — who had published Henry Miller and Anais Nin, run a gallery in Sausalito that helped catalyze the emerging Bay Area arts scene, worked as a newsman in Guam, and contributed his two cents to three of the major technological breakthroughs of the 20th century (the atomic bomb, the Saturn moon rocket, and the television) — ran for governor.

And — this is the best part — as a Republican!

But without money ormoneyed connections, he had to drop out. And Knox County wasn't interested in becoming one of the information age's global hubs. So he founded his "Institute for Advanced Thinking" on the grounds of his home in Belfast — a place where, up until the time he had to move to the Tall Pines Nursing Home in 2003, anyone without an advanced degree could pitch a tent, use the horizontal orgone platform, and collaborate with other visitors, if there were any, in the advancement of thinking. As long as you stayed out of Bern's way.

↑ Index

689. mIEKAL aND
Re: laundering words
Sat 24 Feb 2007

Any initiative which gets innovative poetry out of the university & exposes random folks to the possibilities is worth the effort. It's one thing to present your work in front of people who are familiar with such work & quite another to do it in places like laundromats. I have a friend who did a series of art installations in laundromats in the midwest & she had fascinating stories to tell. (Considering her "installation" was hundreds of pancakes made on site & fastened to the walls it must have made quite the impression..)

~mIEKAL

On Feb 23, 2007, at 11:56 PM, [redacted] wrote:

> Do you think this would work in Buffalo, or in my small town...?
>
> Quoting mIEKAL aND <[redacted]>:
>
> (anyone taking part in this?...)
>
> New literary twist added to laundry cycle
> Tue Feb 13, 2007 9:08am ET
>
> NEW YORK, Feb 12 (Reuters Life!) - Doing the laundry has taken on a new > meaning for New Yorkers who can now watch their wash and spin cycles while listening to poetry and prose.
>
> Instead of burying their head in a book or heading to the nearest coffee shop to beat the boredom of laundry, New York writer Emily Rubin
> has organised a series of readings called "Dirty Laundry: Loads of Prose," at laundromats in New York.
>
> "Just mixing laundry and writing seemed completely natural to me because truly in life and metaphorically as a writer, everyone has dirty laundry," said the Brooklyn native who started the series last year.
>
> She contemplated holding the readings in various neighborhood venues including shops but said a laundromat seemed "a natural fit."
>
> People can wash their dirty laundry while listening to a poem or short > story or just attend the readings. During the first of the 2007

> series
> writer Carolyn Turgeon read some of her work while people loaded the dryers and washing machines.
>
> "It just makes me feel homey and reading is just sort of part of this regular thing, if that makes sense," she said, adding that a laundromat
> doesn't feel as stuffy or artificial as other venues.
>
> "It feels like you're part of this natural environment," Turgeon explained.
>
> Author Marie Carter, who moved from Edinburgh, Scotland to New York in > 2000, likes the idea of entertaining people in a laundromat which is not usually a center of excitement.
>
> Some of the people attending the reading felt a bit odd initially but got used to the idea.
>
> "It was a little strange, it was kind of wild," said one person.
>
> Rubin, who calls herself "Mistress of Laundry" is planning more readings at laundromats across New York and is encouraging people to come along with or without their dirty washing.

↑ Index

690. Dan Waber
decision tree invite
Sat 24 Feb 2007

---

10 Are you a visual poet?

If yes, GOTO line 20
If no, GOTO line 70

20 Would you be interested in having free online gallery space (.gif, .jpg, .png, .wmv, .mov, .mpeg, .swf, .avi) for your visual poetry?

If yes, GOTO line 30
If no, GOTO line 70

30 Would you find value in a forum for international discourse on matters related to visual poetry that included message threading, the ability to include and view attachments (.pdf, .doc, .aiff, .bmp, .htm, .mp3, .wav, and much much more) within posts, community editable event calenders, user profiles, private messaging, post filtering, friend lists, mutual friend identification, etc.?

If yes, GOTO line 40
If no, GOTO line 70

40 Would you be able to add value to a forum for international discourse on matters related to visual poetry by providing content, by actively engaging in conversation threads, by moderating a group, by administrating a sub-forum devoted to a specific area of your interest/expertise, and/or otherwise being the part of the iceberg of users who creates rather than consumes?

If yes, GOTO line 50
If no, GOTO line 70

50 Do you have some free time in your schedule over the course of the next couple of weeks to do some beta testing (creating your profile, making test postings, just generally trying to break things and learn the system so you can help explain things to others, invite some others you think may have missed this invitation but would be good candidates, low-intensity futzing around and reporting back)?

If yes, GOTO line 60
If no, GOTO line 70

60 Great! Send an email with your interest to your favorite word, whatever that may be, at logolalia.com and I'll point you to the place where alpha testing has already begun. Forward this message freely. GOTO line 80

70 Darn. Oh well, thank you for your time, watch this space for the announcement of this project going live. Forward freely.

80 END

Regards,
Dan

↑ Index

691. Stephen Vincent
Re: a classic Bern Porter story making the rounds
Sat 24 Feb 2007

Where to go, what to do, when you are Bern Porter:
a personal biography
by James Erwin Schevill. Gardiner, Me.: Tilbury House, 1992.

I have somehow misplaced my copy of this. I expect Jim Schevill explores the relationship between Porter, Kenneth Rexroth, Georges Varda and other innovative artists and writers associated with the San Francisco Renaissance of the 1940's. (Schevill - poet and playwright, grew up in the Bay Area, was head of the SF State Poetry Center in the early sixties, before he moved to teach at Brown for the rest of his teaching career. Interestingly, perhaps, another local, Jess, Robert Duncan's partner, also worked on the Manhattan project. Whether or not Jess and Porter knew each other at all well, I do not know. It is also curious how this group of genuinely innovative folks after the war do get overshadowed by arrival and emergence of the Beats, and ther publicity bandwagon that followed - of which, say, Duncan never appeared comfortable, tho a kind of bridge figure. Curious, but not surprisingly, the SF Renaissance generation was much more attached to the European bohemian traditions, where the Beats were much more enthralled with the Far East - Buddhist meditation and artistic practice. Tho someone like Rexroth was clearly omnivorous in terms of his awareness and incorporation of multiple, global literary strands.

It would have been interesting - and probably have been of great local value - if Porter had stayed in the Bay Area. His world up in Maine - whacky as it could be - is quite phenomenal.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

> KNOX'S PROPHET
> Someone's been reading Bern Porter
> By CHRIS THOMPSON
> February 7, 2007 1:12:27 PM
>
> http://www.thephoenix.com/article_ektid33269.aspx
>
> THINKING AHEAD: Creating Maine, forty years ago.
>
> A Maine native and longtime resident of Belfast, Bern Porter died there in 2004 at the age of 93. His life and its creative output ‹ ranging from art, science, and poetry to literature, publishing, and economic planning ‹ read like a map for a road nobody else would notice, let alone imagine following. But here we are now, stepping right along it as he imagined.
>
> After college, a budding career in physics got young Porter drafted to work on the Manhattan Project. The Hiroshima bombing made him aware of the fruits of his labors, so he quit. As Cold War minds divided the planet, Porter was at work probing and inventing connections between all manner of creative endeavors, from art and science to the poetry he felt certain would bind them. Many of these pursuits didn¹t have names for themselves yet, but soon would: Mail Art, Sound Art, Found Poetry, and Concrete Poetry ‹ he played a role in all of them.

He also found time, in 1968, to get himself hired, thanks to his research background, as a consultant to the Knox County Regional Planning Commission to write their master plan for economic development.

But soon, the commission and the State Planning Office in Augusta realized they¹d made a mistake. The idealistic Porter imagined nothing less than the total reinvention of the world, beginning in downeast Maine. His draft came in at 700 pages ‹ the commission would later cut it down substantially and use almost none of it.

But that didn¹t stop Porter from treating it as a magnum opus, laboring over the minute details as well as their overarching arguments. He mailed it to dozens of major libraries throughout America with a note on the title page: ³Written by Bernard H. Porter, but extensively cut up, mutilated, re-edited to point of uselessness by the Commission members.²

His plan was prescient and freakish at the same time. It saw that New England¹s towns were slowly deteriorating as they gradually lost the ability to govern themselves. Control over local economies, he warned, was drifting away from local businesses and politicians in the direction of larger business chains based in big cities where executives cared only about profits. In addition, he argued, Maine was losing control over itself because of the rising number of wealthy outsiders who were buying property and flocking to the state in the summers but whose financial engagements and investments (apart from property taxes) remained elsewhere.

This, in Porter¹s view, put a split between money and government and also dramatically widened the gulf between a smaller group of moneyed Mainers and a burgeoning ³underclass.²

Where he really got radical was in his proposed solution. He advocated quick and substantive investment in a range of processed items that Knox County residents and businesses might focus on producing: everything from eggs and sea moss to paper and fabric. His real insight, and this was no doubt what sunk his plan, was to emphasize ‹ remember this is forty years ago ‹ massive investment in technology here in Maine: ³new ventures in publishing, smelting, cement products, precision machinery, deep-sea terminals, prefabricated houses, electronics, development laboratories, pharmaceutical plants, refineries, and research institutions that [Porter] called ŒThink Factories.¹² And the state would need a totally revamped educational system to prepare young Mainers for the technological age.

Then, before Philip Morris NaPier would make it possible for such candidacies to be taken seriously, Porter ‹ who had published Henry > Miller and Anais Nin, run a gallery in Sausalito that helped catalyze the emerging Bay Area arts scene, worked as a newsman in Guam, and contributed his two cents to three of the major technological breakthroughs of the 20th century (the atomic bomb, the Saturn moon rocket, and the television) ‹ ran for governor.

>
> And ‹ this is the best part ‹ as a Republican!
>
> But without money ormoneyed connections, he had to drop out. And Knox County wasn¹t interested in becoming one of the information age¹s global hubs. So he founded his ³Institute for Advanced Thinking² on the grounds of his home in Belfast ‹ a place where, up until the time he had to move to the Tall Pines Nursing Home in 2003, anyone without an advanced degree could pitch a tent, use the horizontal orgone platform, and collaborate with other visitors, if there were any, in the advancement of thinking. As long as you stayed out of Bern¹s way.

↑ Index

692. heidi arnold

Re: You must reply to this with a poem

Sat 24 Feb 2007

-- was inspired by Rice's poem --

here's a rough draft i wrote, needs work

the drug tippled
gives the world-milk
when snow falls
and day turns to night

a rembrandt exists
for the canvas of one whose eyes are cloaked
from above --

formaldehyde
and silence
are forming the extremest dust
in a whirlwind --

i remember what happened before i swallow

-- heidi

On 2/24/07, [redacted] <[redacted]> wrote:
>

> Hello all "poetic-al" people.
> Recently it has been suggested that there is not enough poetry within > POETICS discussions. Let's make up for it. Responses to this post must > be in the form of a poem, discussing whatever you wish (remember the > moderator) and maybe we can all enjoy a little poetry (in the casual > non-serious-criticism sense of the word), rather than the opposite > which I often read on POETICS when someone has a need to fight and no > one at home to do so with. Exasperation can be remedied by writing it > all down, and if it is that bad then please throw it away rather than > send it out into the world to spread the dark wings of ugliness. We > dont have to all like each other, since respect and communication can > go on without "like". But i do like you all. And I hope you have an > inspiring weekend, while I am slaving away at my "day job"... staring > out my office window at the real world. Ahhhh. Stay warm (hard to do > these days in Buffalo and beyond) and remember that we could be in the > middle of a hurricane. I dont know about you, but I will gladly take > the snow any day over that mess and worry. Goodbye all, for now, T. F.
> Rice
>
> Here is my poem for the evening: Untitled:
>
> Small pine trees with > gaping holes in the snow for shadows
> whisper their opinions on this > season full of change and uncertainty
> in a foreign language
> no one wants to hear.
>

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

693. Alexander Jorgensen
Fwd: reading friday march 2: atlanta @ apache cafe
Sat 24 Feb 2007

And one wonderful poet!

agj

--- Deborah Poe <[redacted]> wrote:

> From: "Deborah Poe" <[redacted]>
> To: <[redacted]>
> Subject: reading friday march 2: atlanta @ apache cafe
> Date: Sat, 24 Feb 2007 15:51:05 -0500
>
> Writerfolk-
>
> I hope to see you at this reading. And please feel free to forward.
>
> http://thesoandsoseries.blogspot.co <http://thesoandsoseries.blogspot.com/> m/
>
> Kindest regards, Deborah

Never miss an email again!
Yahoo! Toolbar alerts you the instant new Mail arrives.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/toolbar/features/mail/

↑ Index

694. JT Chan

Poetry Sz Issue 22 now online

Sun 25 Feb 2007

Hi,

Poetry Sz : demystifying mental illness, Issue 22, is now online at http://poetrysz.blogspot.com .

Featuring the work of the following poets:

Dorothy Mienko
Barry Seiler
Lisa Gordon

Stephen Mead
Michael P. Workman
T. Lewis
Olga LaliÄ‡-Krowicka
Joel Fry
Dave Ruslander
Anna Kaye Forsyth
Keith Nunes

Submissions for subsequent issues are welcome. Send 4-6 poems, and a short bio, to [redacted] . Please read the submission guidelines before submitting.

thanks.

regards

J Chan
editor, PoetrySz

___
Cheap talk?
Check out Yahoo! Messenger's low PC-to-Phone call rates.
http://voice.yahoo.com

↑ Index

695. Tom Beckett
Fwd: New Books from Otoliths
Sun 25 Feb 2007

---

am pleased to announce the first of what will be a quarterly round of new books from Otoliths ; & I'm extremely pleased that the four books in this initial launch are wonderful offerings by four exceptional poets.
Rather than drool with unadulterated joy any further, I'll just point you to the Otoliths shopfront â€” _http://www.lulu.com/l_m_young_ (http://www.lulu.com/l_m_young) â€” where you can also find other books & chapbooks plus print versions of the magazine, & would suggest to U.S. residents that, rather than use couriers, they select the USPS Media Mail default as the means of delivery since it's economical &, from our experience, efficient.
The individual webpages for each of the books is given below.
Nico Vassilakis: DIPTYCHS
60 pages, full colour
$15.00
webpage: _http://www.lulu.com/content/670787_

(http://www.lulu.com/content/670787)
"The individual pieces in this book are tiny visual poems that examine the materiality of visible language and find beauty by looking at that language from unexpected vantage points. Nico has created each of these poems through a sequence of steps that included capturing video of text, editing and modifying that video (which included changing the color), capturing screenshots of the video, and cutting and putting these final pieces together in little diptychs consisting of one rectangle of prepared text atop another. To some degree, the results are the children of Nico's important videopoetic work, Concrete: Movies, released in 2005."
â€”from the introduction by Geof Huth Jordan Stempleman: What's the Matter
112 pages
$10.00
webpage: _http://www.lulu.com/content/629216_
(http://www.lulu.com/content/629216)
"Maximizing the tension of line breaks, making the most of each word's nuances, Jordan Stempleman creates a stunning landscape of precision and delicacy.
There are gorgeous moments here, and they always "begin with the actual condition"â€”this book constitutes a commitment to the beauty of the world, and a new instance of it."
â€” Cole Swensen
"In this impressive, replete collection, Jordan Stempleman takes us repeatedly to this place of contemplation, where only a few rare words are necessary.
We are invited to a course of thinking that locates intensity without demanding itâ€”for therein lies the fabled difference between an exploratory and settled poetics, to open out and out again upon present history. This is, quite simply, a wonderful book."
â€” Paul Hoover
harry k stammer: tents
60 pages, including colour $15.00
webpage: _http://www.lulu.com/content/629289_
(http://www.lulu.com/content/629289)
"Make no mistake about it: harry k. stammer is one of the boldest pioneers in contemporary experimental poetryâ€”and one of the most successful. His new work tents is edgy but accessible; challenging but rewarding. stammer mixes a sort of poetic cubism with wordplay, startling typography, and a wide array of other adventurous techniques with creative intensity rarely witnessed. In this singular text, the reader is confronted by a dizzying maelstrom of meaning and image. Kaleidoscopic and impressionistic, this interpretation of our postindustrial, postmodern society is a must for any serious reader of today's poetry."

â€“Philip Primeau , PERSISTENCIA* PRESS
Vernon Frazer: BODIED TONE
132 pages
$10.00
webpage: _http://www.lulu.com/content/629262_
(http://www.lulu.com/content/629262)
" BODIED TONE is terrificâ€”the rhythmic vitality is just that, full of life, but it is seductive too; one gets caught up in the percussive musicality of the phrasing . It's a driving musicalityâ€”more bebop than balladry, for sure."
â€” Lyn Hejinian
So why not splurge a little & be swept up by pleasure.
Cheers
Mark Young
Editor, Otoliths

****
 AOL now offers free
email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at http://www.aol.com.

↑ Index

696. Aryanil Mukherjee
Re: You must reply to this with a poem
Sun 25 Feb 2007

---

excellent, I'm with it. POETICS is all about war, politics, book-review, death-news, blasphemy, anne nicole, poetry-reading, self-promotion, book-sale, colons stuffed with enormous literary waste leading to intellectual dysentery, POETICS is also a lot about POETICS but rarely about

p o e t r y or p o e m s

lift your trampled face

for the afternoon gold-plaited hour

that has a cage feathers with remnant odor

warm breasts, mini red

cut open and pulled out of snow heart

the shepherd's quick, so are his cattle dust rises

wating for you at a railroad crossing

bogies so slow tortuous sleek heavy eternal repetitive cold murderer of time

serialized beauty

in the desert I saw commas after Camel case

calendars chatting with maps

waste papers flying end up chasing that sandsick lad

a cat's cry fades out with the light

we went so far to sing to the birds

----- Original Message -----
From: "heidi arnold" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Saturday, February 24, 2007 2:30 PM
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem

> -- was inspired by Rice's poem --
>
> here's a rough draft i wrote, needs work
>
> the drug tippled
> gives the world-milk
> when snow falls
> and day turns to > night
>
> a rembrandt exists
> for the canvas of one
> whose eyes are cloaked
> from above --
>
> formaldehyde
> and silence
> are forming the extremest dust
> in a whirlwind --

i remember what happened before i swallow

-- heidi

On 2/24/07, [redacted] <[redacted]> wrote:

Hello all "poetic-al" people.
Recently it has been suggested that there is not enough poetry within POETICS discussions. Let's make up for it. Responses to this post must be in the form of a poem, discussing whatever you wish (remember the moderator) and maybe we can all enjoy a little poetry (in the casual non-serious-criticism sense of the word), rather than the opposite which I often read on POETICS when someone has a need to fight and no one at home to do so with. Exasperation can be remedied by writing it all down, and if it is that bad then please throw it away rather than send it out into the world to spread the dark wings of ugliness. We dont have to all like each other, since respect and communication can go on without "like". But i do like you all. And I hope you have an inspiring weekend, while I am slaving away at my "day job"... staring out my office window at the real world. Ahhhh. Stay warm (hard to do these days in Buffalo and beyond) and remember that we could be in the middle of a hurricane. I dont know about you, but I will gladly take the snow any day over that mess and worry. Goodbye all, for now, T. F. Rice

Here is my poem for the evening: Untitled:

Small pine trees with gaping holes in the snow for shadows
whisper their opinions on this season full of change and uncertainty
in a foreign language
no one wants to hear.

--
www.heidiarnold.org
http://peaceraptor.blogspot.com/

--
No virus found in this incoming message.
Checked by AVG Free Edition.
Version: 7.1.412 / Virus Database: 268.18.3/699 - Release Date: 2/23/2007

↑ Index

697. Richard Jeffrey Newman
Re: You must reply to this with a poem
Sun 25 Feb 2007

Okay, I'll bite. The poem I have finished most recently:

Reproductive Rights

She said, "I felt invaded by a creature from Mars."

He thought, "Invaded. By a body like mine.
I am not a creature from Mars."

Then he thought, "Maybe she means the fetus."

Rich Newman

↑ Index

698. EH
Sartre quote
Sun 25 Feb 2007

Perhaps a bit off topic, I'm looking for the source of a sixties interview with Sartre which produced this statment: "nous sommes des animaux sinistre": "we are shipwrecked animals". Any assistance is of course appreciated. Thank you.

Eric Hoffman

Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.

↑ Index

699. Vernon Frazer
New Books from Otoliths (posted on behalf of Mark Young)
Sun 25 Feb 2007

I am pleased to announce the first of what will be a quarterly round of new books from Otoliths ; & I'm extremely pleased that the four books in this initial launch are wonderful offerings by four exceptional poets.

Rather than drool with unadulterated joy any further, I'll just point you to the Otoliths shopfront - http://www.lulu.com/l_m_young - where you can also find other books & chapbooks plus print versions of the magazine, & would suggest to U.S. residents that, rather than use couriers, they select the USPS Media Mail default as the means of delivery since it's economical &, from our experience, efficient.

The individual webpages for each of the books is given below.

Nico Vassilakis: DIPTYCHS

60 pages, full colour

$15.00

webpage: http://www.lulu.com/content/670787

"The individual pieces in this book are tiny visual poems that examine the materiality of visible language and find beauty by looking at that language from unexpected vantage points. Nico has created each of these poems through a sequence of steps that included capturing video of text, editing and modifying that video (which included changing the color), capturing screenshots of the video, and cutting and putting these final pieces together in little diptychs consisting of one rectangle of prepared text atop another. To some degree, the results are the children of Nico's important videopoetic work, Concrete: Movies, released in 2005."

-from the introduction by Geof Huth

Jordan Stempleman: What's the Matter

112 pages

$10.00

webpage: http://www.lulu.com/content/629216

"Maximizing the tension of line breaks, making the most of each word's nuances, Jordan Stempleman creates a stunning landscape of precision and delicacy. There are gorgeous moments here, and they always "begin with the actual condition"-this book constitutes a commitment to the beauty of the world, and a new instance of it."

- Cole Swensen

"In this impressive, replete collection, Jordan Stempleman takes us repeatedly to this place of contemplation, where only a few rare words are necessary. We are invited to a course of thinking that locates intensity without demanding it-for therein lies the fabled difference between an exploratory and settled poetics, to open out and out again upon present history. This is, quite simply, a wonderful book."

- Paul Hoover

harry k stammer: tents

60 pages, including colour

$15.00

webpage: <http://www.lulu.com/content/629289>
http://www.lulu.com/content/629289

"Make no mistake about it: harry k. stammer is one of the boldest pioneers in contemporary experimental poetry-and one of the most successful. His new work tents is edgy but accessible; challenging but rewarding. stammer mixes a sort of poetic cubism with wordplay, startling typography, and a wide array of other adventurous techniques with creative intensity rarely witnessed. In this singular text, the reader is confronted by a dizzying maelstrom of meaning and image. Kaleidoscopic and impressionistic, this interpretation of our postindustrial, postmodern society is a must for any serious reader of today's poetry."

-Philip Primeau , PERSISTENCIA* PRESS

Vernon Frazer: BODIED TONE

132 pages

$10.00

webpage: http://www.lulu.com/content/629262

" BODIED TONE is terrific-the rhythmic vitality is just that, full of life, but it is seductive too; one gets caught up in the percussive musicality of the phrasing . It's a driving musicality-more bebop than balladry, for sure." - Lyn Hejinian

So why not splurge a little & be swept up by pleasure.

Cheers

Mark Young

Editor, Otoliths

↑ Index

700. mIEKAL aND
why the moderation?
Sun 25 Feb 2007

I apologize if I missed something, but why is the list being moderated & are all the messages getting thru? Seems like the volume & spontaneity of the list has plummeted in the last few weeks. Either that or everyone is buried under a couple feet of snow.

digging out from under,

~mIEKAL

↑ Index

701. Ann Bogle
Travel to the AWP
Sun 25 Feb 2007

Atlanta 2/28-3/4: Call if you would like to meet, attend a session, get coffee, a drink, go to a reading, et al.

612/[redacted] c

Ann Bogle

****
 AOL now offers free email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at http://www.aol.com.

↑ Index

702. holsapple1
Gene Frumkin 1928--2007
Sun 25 Feb 2007

I just learned that Gene Frumkin has passed away. I don't know the details.

↑ Index

703. Camille Martin
AWP panel
Sun 25 Feb 2007

If you're going to be in Atlanta for the AWP, please come to the panel "Poets on Appropriative Writing":

Thursday, March 1, 12:00 p.m.-1:15 p.m
Hilton Atlanta, North Court East, 2nd Floor

R147. Poets on Appropriative Writing. (Laura Mullen, Mairead Byrne, Shin Yu Pai, Gregory Betts, Camille Martin) Raphael Rubinstein says "appropriative writing." Michael Davidson says "palimtexts." Gregory Betts says "plunderverse." Purists say "plagiarism." This panel features poets whose work incorporates source texts, challenging ideas of textual ownership and perhaps also showing a relationship between source and resulting poem. Panelists discuss methods of appropriation from such disparate sources as vintage sports manuals, news coverage of the invasion of Iraq, and "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner."

Looks like an interesting conference. Here's the schedule:

http://www.awpwriter.org/conference/2007schedThurs.php

Camille

Camille Martin, Ph.D.
Department of English
Ryerson University
350 Victoria Street
Toronto, ON M5B 2K3
Office: [redacted], ext. 2694

↑ Index

704. Tom Beckett

NEW NOW AT E-X-C-H-A-N-G-E-V-A-L-U-E-S

Sun 25 Feb 2007

For my interview with Finnish poet Karri Kokko, go to:
http://willtoexchange.blogspot.com

****
 AOL now offers free
email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at http://www.aol.com.

↑ Index

705. Vernon Frazer

Re: why the moderation?

Sun 25 Feb 2007

---

mIEKAL

Why the moderation? Because some of us are just getting too old to continue our lives of excess.

I can't speak to the situation with the List because I haven't noticed anything beyond the usual ebb and flow of posts.

As far as the notice you receive about moderation, it seems to be an automated response. And then your message gets posted way sooner than the time frame indicated in the notice.

Vernon
http://vernonfrazer.com

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of mIEKAL aND Sent: Sunday, February 25, 2007 11:44 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: why the moderation?

I apologize if I missed something, but why is the list being moderated & are all the messages getting thru? Seems like the volume & spontaneity of the list has plummeted in the last few weeks. Either that or everyone is buried under a couple feet of snow.

digging out from under,

~mIEKAL

↑ Index

706. Camille Martin
AWP event
Sun 25 Feb 2007

To anyone attending the AWP, I'd like to let you know about a reading at Clayton State University. It's a bit of a trek (15 miles south of Atlanta), but if you have the transportation, time, and desire, I'd love to see your friendly faces there.

Alas, my new collection _codes of public sleep_ will not appear in time for the reading. It will come out in the fall from Toronto's fabulous BookThug.

Camille

Clayton State University's Visiting Writer's Reading Series presents
Camille Martin
Wednesday, February 28, 7:30 pm
Clayton Sate University, Room 327

Directions:

www.clayton.edu/homefiles/maps.htm

Camille Martin, a poet and collage artist, is the author of codes of public sleep (BookThug, forthcoming in 2007). Her short collections include fabled hue (Poetic Inhalation, 2005), sesame kiosk(Potes & Poets, 2001), rogue embryo (Lavender Ink, 1999), magnus loop (Chax Press, 1999), and Plastic Heaven (Fell Swoop, 1996). Formerly of New Orleans, she escaped the ravages of Katrina and is now happily settled in Toronto, where she is completing a collection of fourteen-liners entitled sennets. She teaches writing and literature at Ryerson University.

↑ Index

707. P Ganick
new picture series, AMOEBAE
Sun 25 Feb 2007

AMOEBAE by peter ganick
at jim leftwich's flickr photo site

http://www.flickr.com/photos/textimagepoetry/

please check it out.
comments welcome.

[redacted]

↑ Index

708. Alexander Jorgensen
Does anyone have any info on "The Lyre" of Wisconsin
Sun 25 Feb 2007

ANY and all would be appreciated. Waiting on some materials.

Kind regards,
agj

_____
___
Food fight? Enjoy some healthy debate
in the Yahoo! Answers Food & Drink Q&A.
http://answers.yahoo.com/dir/?link=list&sid=396545367

↑ Index

709. ALDON L NIELSEN
poetics justice
Sun 25 Feb 2007

"THE DANISH POET" just won an Oscar!

↑ Index

710. David-Baptiste Chirot
FW: The Lyre - Update
Sun 25 Feb 2007

Alex:

here is the information they held a rreading in Viroqua, WI last month, but am not sure if that is the town of location for them--i think so--i'll know for sure when the first issue arrives any day now-- here is the email addy and editors' names--

> From: "The Lyre" <[redacted]>

>Editorial Collective >(Arthur Bernstein, Joseph Hart, Anne O'Connor)
>
onwo/ards! david-bc

" . . .but it is a diaster when they slip into a blackhole from which they no longer utter anything but the micro-facist speech of their dependency and their giddiness: 'We are the avant-garde', 'We are the marginals." --Gilles Deleuze, with Clarie Parnet, DIALOGUES

_____ Find what you need at prices you'll love. Compare products and save at MSN® Shopping.
http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?
ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701

↑ Index

711. Jules Boykoff
Czerski, Fitterman, & Hayes read in Portland, OR this Saturday
Mon 26 Feb 2007

The Tangent (occasional) Reading Series

Poets Gale Czerski (Portland), Robert Fitterman (New York), and Jared Hayes (Portland) read their work.

Saturday, March 3rd, 7:00 p.m.

Clinton Corner Cafe
2633 SE 21st Ave.
Portland, Oregon
Admission is free.

For samples of the poets' work, please visit our website:::
http://www.thetangentpress.org/ readings.html

Gale Czerski's work has appeared in recent issues of Bird Dog and Mirage #4 Period[ical]. Her poem 'Ambulatory Siren Songs' has been published in pamphlet form by Nine Muses Books. The chapbook, Invocation, is being published by FLASH+CARD. She is currently preparing a manuscript for Dusie Press' Wee Books series.

Robert Fitterman comes to Portland fresh from New York. He is the author of 9 books of poetry; 3 of those books constitute his ongoing poem Metropolis. Metropolis 1-15 was awarded the Sun & Moon New American Poetry Award (1997), and Metropolis 16-29 (Coach House Books, 2002) received the Small Press Traffic Book of the Year Award in 2003. Several of his other books are collaborations with visual artists, including most recently War, the musical (Subpress, 2006) with Dirk Rowntree. Fitterman lives in New York where he teaches writing at New York University.

Jared Hayes is working and living in Portland, Oregon. His poetry or his vis/po has appeared in or is forthcoming from Bombay Gin, Dusie, Five Fingers Review, Hot Whiskey, and Small Town. He participated in the 2006 Dusie Kollectiv Projekt with the chapbook homage to Ted Berrigan, RecollecTed. He is the co-author, with Joseph Cooper, of Insuring the Wicker Man Shadow Created Delusion (Hot Whiskey Press, 2005).

Come early, and have dinner, if you like. Please stay after and join us for conversation and festivities!

↑ Index

712. Alan Sondheim

Text from 2 Chicago Openport Performance

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Text from 2 Chicago Openport Performances

this is a placemarker for font and size
i learn nothing from my work. my work learns from me.
this is so stupid. this is so stupid. ehllo hello. nathan - somewhere near the begimning of 'the silent film era' actresses were accompanied by orchestras or musicians of their choosing to get into the mood of the otherwise silent so this is how it's going to be. what i do (here) is try to type, well at one point someone told me I couldn't type (I'm showing you now heheh! - anyway I try and TYPE something until you're bored or someonne pulls me out of here (I mean Chicago, not Links Hall) - anyway so I try to entertain you - wait, please there's more coming... this part was videotaped at Rilke's Grave in Raran, SW we're reading - well, Foofwa d'Imobilite and Maud Liardon - are - reading the tombstone - and well, I"m playing the organ, that's somewhere else in the alps - the sooner a train comes along the sooner I'm saved here. i'd better explain this this is a model of a dancer moving through motion capture equipment that has some broken sensors sending the signals out to infinity where they collapse, grief stricken, and return, something like the rturn of the repressed. Now here is the return of the repressed, just a second here -

ok, it's more or less below freezing out there in the Gruyere ok, this isn't getting anywhere yet. i'mm not a particularly good performance artist. I'm cheating, I recorded this stuff beforehand - look around you - there aren't any naked people in the room at the moment, nor a waterfall for that matter... this is a deconstruction of a gun and on the left is someone dancing more or less and disappearing into the light.
<thinking of content... war, viollence, stupidity, let's all kill President Bush! - ok, I knw you'rethinking, this is "illeagal," but what if we do this together?" -> yeah, well, ok, this will happen.
let's back up.
we won't kill bush, we'll just wound him - so - just in case you wondered, the hum you're hearing isn't from my laptop, it's in the system here in Links Hall and in fact I tend to love it -on the left is my avatar disappearing in Second Life because I programmed it to get away with it so it can go through cliffs and stuff.
now yhou're hearing the hum of the planet, literally - this is very low frequency radio stuff coming through - the antennas are modified by the performers - transforming the sound - Maud Liardon atthe end of a particularly exhausting day.
maud machine - there's a file here called rottate i'll try to find it hold on the machine aspect is clearer by the way: the title of this is "The Difference Between the Analog and the Binary Mode of Relating Real-Time bodies to the world" - this was shortened from the title "My Partner is My Buddha"
this is literally the Maud Machine - why literrally?
this is Azure generating very low frequency coupling with an antenna somewhere in Orange County California these are dead avatars
this is another dead avatar.
ok what you're hearing is an imitation of a 78 record created from an event in very low frequency radio stuff.
this is really stupid.l i'll whos you what i feel like.
ok that's an assassin bug on the right. now we're looking at the wilderness.
when we work and we always do and we work together sometimes and we don't we try to harnass
we try to harness the digital and return it to the real world.

there of course is still a real world, don't believe the theorists.
where is it? it's among the polar bears who are starving and have turned cannibal it's among the elephans which have taken to raping as a result of population pressure.
it among the fifty thousand birds that died at the world trade center site as a result of the fucked up pillars of light which messed up migration routes - as a result they died of exhaustion this is the deconstruction of a tree, a real tree, with a ditial scanner.
I'm not sure why this is important, but possibly in anotehr fifty years or so we might not have trees.
well we won't have "we" either this is my sad ronin in second life - when I work in second life i go to thebottom of the ocean then i don't have to deal with cleverness and messy building and people flying by.
i can just do something maybe there
Cris Cheek should know where this sound is from, the only thing I didn't do here, the rest for whatever is mine.
this was done after abu gharayb. those blades are from a wind farm in West Virgina. think aboutg wind farms - like the beams of lightfrom the world trade center, most of these have been responsible for the deaths of tens of thousands of birds. they fly into it.
the avatar was takenpart and taken apart and taken apart
this is Azure Carter being scanned while moving - this results in the disappearance of Azure Carter, any trace of her, in the digital realm.
I'd show this to you if I could remember where it is!
ok, this is the result of that maneuver more or less, you can see the body sliced - we're back trying to suture things back together from digital to analog.
if someone can tell me when twenty-five minutes or so are gone I can wrap this up.
at the moment I'm thinking: abjection/politics on the left, avatars imitating real-life people on the right, real-life people imitatin avatars.
notice the people (on the right) we refer to as "The Bobsie Twins"
What coordination!
This took years to perfect
i used to do these things with the idea of a 'moral" or content or "content" or a "sememe " or something behind what you're seeing on the screen.

then it occurred to me
there's nothing we can do at this point to save - well, our own selves, species from extinction, inundations, the stupidies - that's stupdi, stupidities of fascist presidents - so we might as well just play and make faces in restaurants because maybe all we can do is dance oh that's so stupid again but it's true!
and it's true I can't dance!
so ...
so it's true that'
that there's a letter maybe beneath this one going somewhere my partner exploding with the motion capture equipment going into gunfire -
well I want you to believe this is gunfire while a vacuum tube is deconstruct simultaneously well I'd like you to believe it's deconstructed.
what's stupid here is I have only one screen and I want to have equipment on the floro!
floor!
more and more equipment, something I can disappear into!
I'll have to settle for for some sort of entertainment
i want to thank everyone here for allowing us to present!
and Foofwa d'Imobilite and Maud Liardon for their brillians
And Azure Carter for her support and brilliance
And President bush for making this possible and the Swiss Government for funding this in part and the Alps for just being there.
thank you.

placeholder text chicago 2 placeholder text
placeholder text
anguish disappears when our world suffers the most an image weeps. an image does not suffer.
no, an image suffers the most.
dear buddha, i will suffer for you.
thank you, alan sondheim.
nothing is real anymore, is it? is what? is nothing?
i am your electric-onic
i am your electronic buzz bomb

i will kill all of you fuckers. i will kill everyone. don't forget - when you leave here tonight YOU WILL BE DEAD (honest, I really mean this more than I mean anything in the world) - signed, Mr. Bush. Let us
[...]
If I can't be Buddha I will kill myself.
Then after I kill myself I will kill you.
Today I thought about the French Empire and the American Empire.
The end.
Alan Sondheim.
ok if you have any questions.
Ok I have a question. What is that stuff moving about.
"Well, I'm glad you asked that,' Susan said. This is really something, isn't it? (Susan didn't say that.) Well, what this , well, these are avatars torn apart, By What you May AsK?
maBY by Abu Gharab, he replied lightly.
Christ, he thought (although he didn't believe in God). There are too many things going on here. That zither is being sent around the usa coming back to me. That woman is Maud Liardon danceworking performing in a grange in the Gruyere. We need a cat.
So you think this is funny? I will KILL YOU. This is NOT FUNNY.
StOPPP IT
VLF radio runs around the world. The USA will use VLF radio antennas
to:
1. Disorient and kill whales.
2. Disorient and kill dolphins.
3. Communicate just where and when the BIG ONE will be dropped.
I'm a dope!
Just now, a reveleation:
EVERYONE IS TWITCHING ON THE SCREN
Suddenly he realized: There were people behind himn.
It wasn't paranoia. He was being watched.
Something had to be done, something drastic. Then he remembered:

"He would kill them all." This is the compassion the Buddha speaks of so eloquently. Now we're hanging around the Aletsch glacier. I want to thank the Swiss government for making this possible: a. Holding on to the Aletsch glacier in this period of global warming. b. Giving my partner and I some money so we can eat again. c. Making us stop worrying if we con't have any money for b. I did this thing last night with different videos. And there I was thinking, there's just nothing you can do about the world, is there/ so it's not enoght to dance, fuck dance, it's got to be something else. if we could only just kill ourselves. then everything would be allright in the worldl but of cours we're just kidding, nothing like this can happen. the whole history of the West: we're just kidding ourselves. (Honest.) don't cry for us argentina.

==========
==========
==========
==========

↑ Index

713. Don Summerhayes
Re: Sartre quote
Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

not shipwrecked.

On 25-Feb-07, at 6:06 AM, EH wrote:

> Perhaps a bit off topic, I'm looking for the source of a sixties interview with Sartre which produced this statment: "nous sommes des animaux sinistre": "we are shipwrecked animals". Any assistance is of course appreciated. Thank you.
>
> Eric Hoffman
>
> ---
> Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.

↑ Index

714. jUStin!katKO
cris cheek | THE CHURCH – THE SCHOOL – THE BEER
Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

* * * * * * * * * * *

CRITICAL DOCUMENTS
Newsletter 2

* * * * * * * * * * *

New Publication

THE CHURCH – THE SCHOOL – THE BEER
<http://plantarchy.us/Plantarchy_3.html> by cris cheek

$10/ £7 – 200 pages – perfect-bound – 500 copies

*

"This project by cris cheek is a brilliant, light-hearted and stylised record of live transmissions, spoken circuitries, registered feedback, rewound conversations and overheard snippets, all recorded during daily drifts in a small English city. 13 black-and-white photographs show our man in situ in a really proper suit holding a recorder, which is a black hand-held machine. The recorder turns out to be a live transmitter, it interferes with local taxiphone networks. 14 handwritten map sketches lead nowhere. Location is an insistent point." – Caroline Bergvall

"In THE CHURCH – THE SCHOOL – THE BEER cheek makes one of his most impressive and serious efforts to provide a mise en scène of the act of writing as performance. This is an anarcho-utopic struggle for the earthly commons, where authentic communication is guaranteed under the sign of noise as radical democracy; it is a form of research into all the joyous choreographies of the tongue as the supreme organ of capture and escape. Readers of these texts are treated to a supremely conceptual writing, but one that also promises moments of lush density as well as a strangely delicate lyrical iridescence." – Piers Hugill

*

THE CHURCH – THE SCHOOL – THE BEER includes:
– transcriptions of eight talks conducted over CB radio on a street corner in central Norwich, June 1998
– a remix of these transcriptions
– drawings--writings made at the Norwich site as research prior to the talks

– photographs of the Norwich talks taken by Sianed Jones
– a transcription of a video talk--walk conducted in New Orleans, March 2001
– a note on the strategies mobilized in the texts' acts of writing

Review copies available.

http://plantarchy.us/Plantarchy_3.html

* * * * * * * * * * *

Coming Next

PLANTARCHY 4 <http://plantarchy.us/Plantarchy_4.html> Essays by Allen Fisher (intro to Assemblage and Empathy), Susan Schultz (on Donald Rumsfeld) and Piers Hugill (on cris cheek). Interviews with Kent Johnson and Helen Bridwell. Poetry by Frances Kruk, Keith Tuma, Linda Russo, Sean Bonney, Rachel Smith, Dic Royer and more. Send critical documents asap.

THE SEVEN CURSES <http://plantarchy.us/Plantarchy_5.html>
A Xena Warrior Princess Fan-Fic (Plantarchy 5)
by Francis Crot

Plantarchy is available at Bridge Street (DC), Rust Belt (Buffalo), Talking Leaves (Buffalo), Normal's (Baltimore), City Lights (San Francisco) and Woodland Pattern (Milwaukee).

* * * * * * * * * * *

Donations

To help fund the publication of Plantarchy and future Critical Documents, please make a donation. Checks payable to Critical Documents.

$ Donate $<https://www.paypal.com/cgi-bin/webscr?cmd=_xclick&business=[redacted]&item_name=Critical%252520Documents&no_shipping=1&tax=0&currency_code=USD&bn=PP%2525252dDonationsBF&charset=UTF%2525252d8>

£ Donate £<https://www.paypal.com/cgi-bin/webscr?cmd=_xclick&business=[redacted]&item_name=Critical%252520Documents&no_shipping=1&tax=0&currency_code=GBP&lc=US&bn=PP%2525252dDonationsBF&charset=UTF%2525252d8>

* * * * * * * * * * *

Critical Documents
http://plantarchy.us
112 N College #4
Oxford, OH 45056 USA

↑ Index

715. Dan Waber
ars poetica update
Mon 26 Feb 2007

The ars poetica project continues to thrum at:

http://www.logolalia.com/arspoetica/

Poems appeared last week by: Sandra Alland, Maxianne Berger, and Jesse Glass.

Poems will appear this week by: Jesse Glass, Mari-Lou Rowley, Ann Bogle, and Jennifer Compton.

A new poem about poetry every day.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

716. Maria Damon
Re: poetics justice
Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

hey, whozatt???

At 9:25 PM -0500 2/25/07, ALDON L NIELSEN wrote:
>"THE DANISH POET" just won an Oscar!

↑ Index

717. Brigitte Byrd
Ahsahta Press Reading in Atlanta
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Time to share the news since AWP starts in a couple of days. . . .

Ahsahta Press Reading

Thursday, March 1, 7:30-10
The Defoor Centre Reading Room
1710 Defoor Avenue NW
(downtown Atlanta, not far from the hotel)
http://www.defoorcentre.com

Paige Ackerson-Kiely, Carrie Olivia Adams, Susan Briante, Brigitte Byrd, Lisa Fishman, Noah Eli Gordon, Kate Greenstreet, Janet Holmes, Karla Kelsey, Kristi Maxwell, Ethan Paquin, Susan Tichy

Brigitte Byrd
http://a-s.clayton.edu/bbyrd/Homepage.htm

___ Finding fabulous fares is fun. Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains. http://farechase.yahoo.com/promo-generic-14795097

↑ Index

718. Adam Morey
Re: FW: The Lyre - Update
Mon 26 Feb 2007

The new email address for The Lyre is "The Lyre" <[redacted]> The mailing address is:

The Lyre
210 Hillyer Ave.
Viroqua, WI
54665

-Adam

> Alex:
>
> here is the information > they held a rreading in Viroqua, WI last month, but am not sure if that is > the town of location for them--i think so--i'll know for sure when the > first > issue arrives any day now--
>
> here is the email addy and editors' names--
>
> From: "The Lyre" <[redacted]>
>
> Editorial Collective > (Arthur Bernstein, Joseph Hart, Anne O'Connor)
>
> onwo/ards! david-bc
>
> " . . .but it is a diaster when they slip into a blackhole from which they > no longer utter anything but the micro-facist speech of their dependency
> and > their giddiness: 'We are the avant-garde', 'We are the marginals."
> --Gilles Deleuze, with Clarie Parnet, DIALOGUES

↑ Index

719. Tom W. Lewis
Re: poetics justice
Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

apparently, it was the Best animated short film - THE DANISH POET

I was watching The Departed throughout the Oscars show (which I try to miss most years anyway) -- caught Al Gore & co. take it for best documentary film, a fluent Ennio Morricone (fluent in Italian) introduced by a stumbling Clint Eastwood, and a horrific turn by Celine Dion spitting out a cheesy new ballad by Il Maestro... yes, Morricone's work is primarily cheese, but I still enjoy it. except for when Celine sings it.

anyone see The Lives of Others? it won for best foreign film. there's a "power of literature, art, humanity, over totalitarianism" theme running throughout.

from foggy and shallow So FL,

tl

From: UB Poetics discussion group on behalf of Maria Damon Sent: Mon 2/26/2007 7:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: poetics justice

hey, whozatt???

At 9:25 PM -0500 2/25/07, ALDON L NIELSEN wrote:
>"THE DANISH POET" just won an Oscar!

↑ Index

720. Thomas savage
Re: You must reply to this with a poem
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage

"[redacted]" <[redacted]> wrote: Hello all "poetic-al" people. Recently it has been suggested that there is not enough poetry within POETICS discussions. Let's make up for it. Responses to this post must be in the form of a poem, discussing whatever you wish (remember the moderator) and maybe we can all enjoy a little poetry (in the casual non-serious-criticism sense of the word), rather than the opposite which I often read on POETICS when someone has a need to fight and no one at home to do so with. Exasperation can be remedied by writing it all down, and if it is that bad then please throw it away rather than send it out into the world to spread the dark wings of ugliness. We dont have to all like each other, since respect and communication can go on without "like". But i do like you all. And I hope you have an inspiring weekend, while I am slaving away at my "day job"... staring out my office window at the real world. Ahhhh. Stay warm (hard to do these days in Buffalo and beyond) and remember that we could be in the middle of a hurricane. I dont know about you, but I will gladly take the snow any day over that mess and worry. Goodbye all, for now, T. F. Rice

Here is my poem for the evening: Untitled:

Small pine trees with gaping holes in the snow for shadows
whisper their opinions on this season full of change and uncertainty
in a foreign language
no one wants to hear.

Check out the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta - Fire up a more powerful email and get things done faster.

↑ Index

721. Michael Kelleher
Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 2.26.07
Mon 26 Feb 2007

LITERARY BUFFALO
2.26.07-3.04.07

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Alexis De Veaux's creative non-fiction workshop starts Saturday! Scroll down to "Workshops" for details.

Just Buffalo's timed writing group, which meets Fridays noon at Starbuck's Chippewa is cancelled. It will resume March 9.

READINGS THIS WEEK

Unless otherwise indicated, all readings are free and open to the public.

2.28.07

Talking Leaves...Books
Larry Beahan & Karen Adragna Walsh
Reading and signing, Adirondack Pulp Fiction &
Good Crazy, Essays of a Mad Housewife
Wednesday, February 28, 7 p.m.
Talking Leaves...Books, Main St. Store

Doctor Beahan is a retired Psychiatrist living in Amherst. He is a hiker, skier, canoeist, sailor and environmental activist and writes on those subjects. In addition to his two previous books about the Adirondacks, he has published one about Allegany State Park. He is a frequent contributor to the My View column in the Buffalo News. A graduate of D'Youville College, and resident of Hamburg, Karen Adragna Walsh works by day as an operating room nurse. She believes that her medical career definitely helps her writer's perspective. "For a nurse, healing is the main goal and I believe my writings reflect the healing power of humor that we all need in today's crazy chaotic world."

3.01.07

Just Buffalo Small Press Poetry Series
Michael Boughn and Victor Coleman
Poetry Reading
Thursday, March 1, 7 p.m.
Rust Belt Books, 202 Allen St.

Victor Coleman was born in 1944 in Toronto. From 1966-1975 he was linotype operator for The Coach House Printing Co. and Coach House Press editor in chief. In 1996, when the Coach House Press had been run into the ground by various committees, he and Stan Bevington started up Coach House Books and www.chbooks.com , the world's first simultaneous print and online publishing venture. Since 1999 he has been the chief editorial mucky-muck for the Centre for Contemporary Canadian Art's Canadian Art Database (www.ccca.ca). His five children have produced eight grandchildren. He likes to summer with his wife, Kate Van Dusen, in Rieux-Minervois, near Carcassonne, in the Languedoc region of France. His most recent book is Icon Tact : Poems 1984-2001. He is currently at work on the third volume Letter Drop .

Michael Boughn was born in Riverside, California in 1946. He moved to Canada in October, 1966 to escape the U.S. military draft and to continue organizing against the Viet Nam War. After years working as a Teamster and punch press operator, he received a BA from UC Santa Cruz in 1982, then moved to Buffalo, NY to pursue graduate studies at SUNY Buffalo, where he studied with John Clarke and Robert Creeley. In 1993 he returned to Canada and in 2001 swore allegiance to the Queen and her heirs and became a Canadian citizen. He currently lives in Toronto with his wife, Elizabeth, and their two children, Amelia and Sam. His books of poems include Iterations of the Diagonal (1995), A little post-apocalyptic suite for RC with thanks for the rhino (1996), Dislocation Flutter (1998), One's own MIND (1999), Dislocations in Crystal (2003), and 22 Skidoo (2005).

3.01.07

Talking Leaves...Books
Athena Mutua
Panel and signing for: Progressive Black Masculinities
Thursday, March 1, 7 p.m.
Talking Leaves...Books, Main St. Store

Progressive Black Masculinities brings together leading black cultural critics including John O. Calmore, Patricia Hill Collins, and biblical critic Gay L. Byron, along with those on our panel, to explore the challenges of black masculinity. The diverse voices gathered here all argue that the greatest peril to black men may be an uncritical embrace of limited, compensatory notions of manhood. Collectively, they offer a roadmap for new, progressive models of black masculinity that may chart the course or the future of black men.

Athena D. Mutua teaches banking law, corporation law, critical race theory, and civil rights and writes in the areas of critical race theory and feminist legal theory. She lives with her spouse, Makau Mutua, and their three teenage sons in Buffalo. Timothy Brown is a professor of communications at West Chester University who formerly taught at Buffalo State College. Teresa Miller and Stephanie Phillips are law professors at UB, where Nathan Grant is an English professor. Mark Anthony Neal earned his Ph.D at UB, and is now a professor at Duke.

3.02.07

Exhibit X Fiction/Hallwalls
Percival Everett
Fiction Reading
Friday, March 2, 7 p.m.
Hallwalls Cinema at the Church, 341 Delaware Ave

Percival Everett is the author of fifteen novels, three collections of short fiction, and one volume of poetry. Among his novels are Erasure, Glyph, Wounded, American Desert, For Her Dark Skin, Zulus, The Weather and The Women Treat Me Fair, Cutting Lisa, Walk Me to the Distance, Suder, The One That Got Away, Watershed, and God's Country. He is the recipient of the Academy Award from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the Hurston/Wright Legacy Award, the PEN/Oakland-Josephine Miles Award for Excellence in Literature, and a New American Writing Award. His stories have been included in the Pushcart Prize Anthology and Best American Short Stories. In addition to writing, Everett is a painter, a woodworker, and a flyfisherman. He trains mules on his ranch outside of Los Angeles and teaches at the University of Southern California.

3.04.07

Tru-Teas Reading Series
Ann Goldsmith
Tru-Teas/Insite Gallery, 810 Elmwood Ave.
Sunday March 4th, 4 p.m.

JUST BUFFALO WRITING WORKSHOPS

All workshops take place in Just Buffalo's Workshop/Conference Room At the historic Market Arcade, 617 Main St., First Floor -- right across from Shea's.

The Market Arcade is climate-controlled and has a security guard on duty at all times.

To get here:

Take the train to the 'Theatre' stop and walk, or park and enter on Washington Street. Free parking on Washington Street evenings and weekends. Two-dollar parking in fenced, guarded, M & T lot on Washington. Visit our website for detailed descriptions, instructor bios, and to register online.

"There Are 3 Sides To Every Story...."
A Creative Nonfiction Writing Workshop
Instructor: Alexis De Veaux
4 Saturdays, 10 a.m. - 12 p.m.
March 3, April 7, May 5, May 19
$100, $80 for members

This workshop will explore ideas fundamental to writing creative nonfiction across a broad spectrum of genres; such as autobiography, memoir, biography, and essay. Our exercises and discussions will focus attention on the uses of memory, imagination, "history," and "fact" in constructing "truth." Participants should expect to gain a working knowledge of how these elements shape their own work. A writing sample is required (no more than ten, double-spaced, typed, pages). Bring writing sample to first class.

Among Alexis De Veaux's works are a fictionalized memoir, Spirits In The Street (Doubleday, 1973); an award-winning children's book, Na-ni (Harper and Row, 1973); Don't Explain , a biography of jazz great, Billie Holiday (Harper and Row, 1980); two independently published poetry works, Blue Heat: A Portfolio of Poems and Drawings (1985) and Spirit Talk (1997); a second children's book, An Enchanted Hair Tale (Harper and Row, 1987), which was a recipient of the 1988 Coretta Scott King Award presented by the American Library Association and the 1991 Lorraine Hansberry Award for Excellence in Children's Literature. In 1997, one of her poems was selected for the prestigious Christmas Broadside Series published under the auspices of the Friends of the University Libraries, University at Buffalo. She is the author of Warrior Poet, A Biography of Audre Lorde (W. W. Norton, 2004).

The Tao of Writing the Short Story
A Fiction Writing Workshop
Instructor: Ralph Wahlstrom
2 Saturdays: March 24 and 31
10 a.m. - 2 p.m. with a break for lunch.
Market Arcade Building, 617 Main St., First Floor.
$100, $80 for members

RECURRING LITERARY EVENTS

JUST BUFFALO WRITER'S CRITIQUE GROUP
Members of Just Buffalo are welcome to attend a free, bi-monthly writer critique group in CEPA's Flux Gallery on the first floor of the historic Market Arcade Building across the street from Shea's. Group meets 1st and 3rd Wednesday at 7 p.m. Call Just Buffalo for details.

JUST BUFFALO TIMED WRITING GROUP
A writing practice group meets every FRIDAY at noon at Starbucks Coffee on Elmwood and Chippewa. Writing practice is based on Natalie Goldberg's suggested exercises in Writing Down The Bones. Writers in all genres, fiction and non-fiction welcome. There is no charge. Contact Trudy for info: [redacted].

WESTERN NEW YORK ROMANCE WRITERS group meets the third Wednesday of every month at St. Joseph Hospital community room at 11a.m. Address: 2605 Harlem Road, Cheektowaga, NY 14225. For details go to www.wnyrw.org.

JUST BUFFALO MEMBERSHIP RAFFLE

Visit the literary city of your dreams:

-Joyce's Dublin
-Paris' Left Bank
-Dante's Florence
-Shakespeare's London
-Harlem Renaissance NYC
-The Beats' San Francisco
-Anywhere Continental flies.*

Now through May 10, 2007 your membership support of Just Buffalo Literary Center includes the chance to win the literary trip of a lifetime:

Package (valued at $5,000) includes:

-Two round-trip tickets to one of the great literary cities on Continental Airlines
-$1500 towards hotel and accommodations
-$500 in spending money

One ticket ($35) = Just Buffalo Individual Membership
Two tickets ($60) = Just Buffalo Family Membership
Three tickets ($100) = Just Buffalo Friend Membership

Purchase as many memberships as you like. Give them to whomever you choose as a gift (or give someone else the membership and keep the lottery ticket to yourself!). Only 1000 chances will be sold. Raffle tickets with Just Buffalo membership make great gifts! Drawing will be held the second week of May, 2007. Call [redacted] for more info.

* Raffle ticket purchases are not tax-deductible. If you want your membership to put you in the "literary trip of a lifetime" raffle, please write "raffle membership" in the "payment for" cell on the Paypal form. You will automatically be entered in the raffle, but your membership will not be tax-deductible. If you prefer not to be in the raffle and want tax-deductible status, then please write "non-raffle member" in the "payment for" cell.

JOIN JUST BUFFALO ONLINE!!!

If you would like to join Just Buffalo, or simply make a massive personal donation, you can do so online using your credit card. We have recently added the ability to join online by paying with a credit card through PayPal. Simply click on the membership level at which you would like to join, log in (or create a PayPal account using your Visa/Amex/Mastercard/Discover), and voilá, you will find yourself in literary heaven. For more info, or to join now, go to our website:

http://www.justbuffalo.org/membership/index.shtml

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

_____

Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

722. Halvard Johnson

RIP Gene Frumkin (1928-2007)

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Escalator

The escalator is a dangerous enemy who could trip you one step at a time.

This is how the mind works, synthesizing dream with substance.
Or as Jung alternates with Freud.
The substitution of ground for holiness claims voice as a reason for old tribes locating the sun as figures in the act, at the window.

The future derives from sleep, evolves into gods and animals.
This is a process that F. chilled into vintage prose.
Jung warmed
to the blooded world, not alone. The human collective describes the enormity of a single voice. How the minotaur poses like God
in his mystical cellar.

Yet F. too brings the good news that deciphers time in focus, traveled by a map, as if one could say there it is! now is as good as anywhere.
Everything is abstract in its origin almost as if Plato believed in the verity of his good republic.

The escalator goes flat by steps. It continues as breath does:
two men in blue suits with vests.

The moving sidewalk is no less.
It slows into watchword, and if F.
abhorred the occult,
Jung compared sexuality in the psychic order to a hidden grammar, dogma on the harpsichord.

Organized mystery, lens-defined hyperbole.
A science rises from obsession, shaped like the Golem of Prague,
but who remembers
his song?
Jung catches flies
instead of fish.
F. hangs his briefs
on the line.
The world is all alone,
all there is to imitate.
Time limps behind the escalator, F. stands with a stopwatch,
Jung with a camera.
Mind in slow motion, caught in breath.

--Gene Frumkin

fr. Freud by Other Means [Albuquerque: La Alameda Press, 2002]

Hal

Halvard Johnson
==========

http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

↑ Index

723. amy king
Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."

And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."

Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?

Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.

Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage

---
Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

724. Metta Sama
Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below without posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss? theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also not and should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems & poems themselves

can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

> Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
>
> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.
>
> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

725. Elizabeth Treadwell
Cox & Kim at SPT this SAT, 3/3
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Small Press Traffic is pleased to present a reading by Sarah Anne Cox & Myung Mi Kim
Saturday, March 3, 2007 at 7:30 p.m.?-- note special day

Sarah Anne Cox’s second book, Parcel, is new from O Books. Kevin Killian: "In Parcel, Cox has written a book that speaks to our time, as though she had spent the night awake, her palms burning, mind afire. She doesn't stint, she writes as she thinks, a courageous speaking out in the face of injustice and some pretty fearsome ancient texts. Which came first, she asks, really wanting to know--kings, or cheese? Her answers have always surprised me; never more so than in this new success."

Myung Mi Kim is the author of Under Flag, Dura, The Bounty, and Commons, of which Publishers Weekly says: "While much poetry has been written out of the many diasporas that have U.S. outposts, few collections capture the cultural and linguistic displacement of immigration with as much poise and resonance as Kim's fourth book, her most outstanding. Articulating our often hidden and difficult ties to each other without righteous indignation or fanfare, these poems are profoundly important and affecting." Kim is on the faculty of the Poetics Program at Buffalo.

Unless otherwise noted, events are $5-10, sliding scale, free to current SPT members and CCA faculty, staff, and students. ?

Unless otherwise noted, our events are presented in?Timken Lecture Hall,? California College of the Arts ?1111 Eighth Street, San Francisco (just off the intersection of 16th & Wisconsin) ?? http://www.sptraffic.org ????

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian. http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

726. Aryanil Mukherjee
Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with out poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, Anne Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the wrong boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle show".

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Metta Sama
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below without posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss? theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also not and should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems & poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

> Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
>
> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.

> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information.
> Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

727. Geoffrey Gatza

AWP Atlanta - see you there!

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Hello,

I hope to see you in Atlanta for AWP. I'll be working the Starcherone Books table with Ted Pelton! I hear the table is #128 but that might change. Please stop on by and say hi!

Best, Geoffrey

Geoffrey Gatza
BlazeVOX [books]
www.blazevox.org

↑ Index

728. Elizabeth Treadwell

Treadwell news of the week....

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Hi friends,
I am up at Poetry Daily today, http://www.poetrydaily.org and am reading at the Poetry Center on Thursday afternoon with Gloria Frym...

Elizabeth Treadwell and Gloria Frym
Thursday March 1, 2007
4:30 pm @ the Poetry Center
HUM 512, SFSU, free
http://www.sfsu.edu/~poetry/eventCalendar.html#MARCH

Elizabeth Treadwell is the author of seven books, the most recent of which are the poetry collections Birds & Fancies (Shearsman) and Wardolly (Chax Press), both 2007. Her essay on Paula Gunn Allen will appear in Efforts & Affections: America's New Women Poets & the Generation That Inspires Them (Iowa). She is the director of Small Press Traffic, an MFA grad of SFSU, and a resident of her hometown of Oakland.

Gloria Frym's most recent book of poems is Solution Simulacra (United Artists Books, 2006). Her previous collection of poems, Homeless at Home (Creative Arts Book Company), won an American Book Award in 2002, and an earlier collection, Back to Forth (The Figures) was co-recipient of the Poetry Center Book Award. She is also the author of two critically acclaimed collections of short stories: Distance No Object (City Lights Books) and How I Learned (Coffee House Press). She teaches in the MFA and BA Writing Programs at California College of the Arts, in San Francisco, and lives in Berkeley.

all the best, Elizabeth

Elizabeth Treadwell
http://secretmint.blogspot.com
http://elizabethtreadwell.com

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft® Office Live
http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

729. Alexander Jorgensen

Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Old Towne's Clock

An old railroad switchman:
Lost amid planks, stone and I, said pocket o' crowns he'd tuck along bathing thighs of the bridge, its boughed-legs ancient angels glistening in coats of dew -- there and below, above the Christ Child!
said, "On the Voltova, Charles" an hour, hours, night clamouring a heart full of Kafka and dear, dear Irenko

agj
--- Aryanil Mukherjee <[redacted]> wrote:

> I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory > gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce > and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with out > poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, Anne > Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the wrong > boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle > show".
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]] On
> Behalf Of Metta Sama
> Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
>
> while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that > i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below
> without
> posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss?
> theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also
> not and > should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems &
> poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes > to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them > from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ > "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues"
> while also not "exchange"
> poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged.

who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing,
personal poems or journal entries."

And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected,
improbable, and impossible."

Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?

Incidentally, the daily message max for the list
is 75 messages per day,
with a limit of four posts per person.

Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to > poetry. There is another excellent site called > Wryting-L where poets

> from this list and, I suspect, from other sources > post poems. It is set > up specifically with that intent. If you're > interested in doing that,
> Google Wryting-L and it should give you the > relevant information.
> Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

_____
Don't pick lemons.
See all the new 2007 cars at Yahoo! Autos.
http://autos.yahoo.com/new_cars.html

↑ Index

730. Deborah Poe

Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

It might be of interest to check out the discussion in April 2005 on this subject.
http://listserv.buffalo.edu/cgi-bin/wa?A1=ind0504&L=poetics&D=1&I=-3&O=D

"re: posting poems"

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Aryanil Mukherjee
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:10 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with out poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, Anne Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the wrong boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle show".

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On
Behalf Of Metta Sama
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below without posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss? theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also not and should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems & poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

> Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
>
> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.

> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information.
> Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

731. Aryanil Mukherjee

Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Thanks for sending the link. No point stirring up the ashes of a dead fire. I'll prefer the flutist over the talk show host.

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Deborah Poe
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:34 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

It might be of interest to check out the discussion in April 2005 on this subject.
http://listserv.buffalo.edu/cgi-bin/wa?A1=ind0504&L=poetics&D=1&I=-3&O=D

"re: posting poems"

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Aryanil Mukherjee
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:10 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with out poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, Anne Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the wrong boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle show".

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On
Behalf Of Metta Sama
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below without posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss? theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also not and should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems & poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

> Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
>
> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.

> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information.
> Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

732. kevin thurston

Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

---

what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss?

poetics

you can also do this thing where you refer to a poem without actually having the poem in front of you you down wit AWP? what! what!

On 2/26/07, Deborah Poe <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> It might be of interest to check out the discussion in April 2005 on this > subject.
> http://listserv.buffalo.edu/cgi-bin/wa?A1=ind0504&L=poetics&D=1&I=-3&O=D
>
> "re: posting poems"
>
>
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of Aryanil Mukherjee
> Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:10 PM
> To: [redacted]

> Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
>
> I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory > gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce > and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with > out > poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, > Anne
> Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the > wrong > boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle > show".
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On
> Behalf Of Metta Sama
> Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
>
> while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that > i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below
> without > posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to > discuss?
> theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also > not and > should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems &
> poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes > to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages > them
> from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that
> _is_
> "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" > poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, > posts > written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that > posts should be written in block form? and why would we?
>
> metta
>

>
>
> > Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings > > of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on
> the > > list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, > > personal poems or journal entries."
> >
> > And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion > > of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, > > and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, > > renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the > > questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the > > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
> >
> >
> > Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting > > all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be > > encouraged?
> >
> > Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per > day,
> > with a limit of four posts per person.
> >
> >
> >
> > Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> > Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed
> to > > post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to > > poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets > > from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set > > up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, > > Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information.
> > Regards, Tom Savage
> >
> >
> > ---
> > Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> > Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.
> >
>

--
new address as of 2/1

299 richmond ave lower buffalo, ny 14222
usofa

↑ Index

733. Aaron Belz
Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Hey Poetics -

If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?

Just wondering,

Aaron

↑ Index

734. David Applegate Bad Noise hits hard with "NO"
Mon 26 Feb 2007

More noise at www.badnoiseproductions.com *-

Buffalo poetics graduate Christopher Eaton drops megaforce squadron with "NO" {poems} available for free download now at www.badnoiseproductions.com *-

Enjoy the madness of such sections as: "Skull in Rickets," "Googol Space," and "Hissatsu onna kenshi + sing-a-long." This is the real-deal from an unhinged mind - throw out your dictionary, download "NO."

Love + peace.

↑ Index

735. Jordan Stempleman
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

1st Gen. Am. Prose Poet

> Date: Mon, 26 Feb 2007 12:46:50 -0600> From: [redacted]> Subject: Russell Edson - what school is he?> To: [redacted]> > Hey Poetics -> > If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school> of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is> neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'? > > Just wondering,> > Aaron

_____
Discover the new Windows Vista http://search.msn.com/results.aspx?q=windows+vista&mkt=en-US&form=QBRE=

↑ Index

736. Halvard Johnson
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Prosétics?

Hal

Today's Special

The Sonnet Project
http://www.xpressed.org/hsonnet.pdf

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 26, 2007, at 12:46 PM, Aaron Belz wrote:

> Hey Poetics -
>
> If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school > of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is > neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
> Just wondering,
>
> Aaron

↑ Index

737. Taylor Brady
Fwd: [NewMusic] RIP: Leroy Jenkins
Mon 26 Feb 2007

--0-847909927-1172517800=:12024

Passing this along... Listening to his Art of Improvisation recording now, difficult spiky and beautiful music for a sad day.

Taylor

Note: forwarded message attached.

--0-847909927-1172517800=:12024
Content-Length: 1341

Dear bListers,

Some sad news to report...Leroy Jenkins has passed away. I think he made a very beautiful and also very unique contribution to the post jazz continuum.

PG

Leroy Jenkins: born March 11, 1932 in Chicago, Illinois, died February 24, 2007 in New York City

(from AACM website) http://aacmchicago.org/

...Jenkins was already performing violin at the age of 8 at his local Ebenezeer Baptist Church. The flavor of spirituals still remains in his music. He studied music in high school and then attended Florida A&M University Born in Chicago, Illinois in 1932, Jenkins was already performing violin at the age of 8 at his local Ebenezeer Baptist Church. The flavor of spirituals still remains in his music. He studied music in high school and then attended Florida A&M University where he studied with Bruce Hayden and completed his B.S. in music. For the next ten years Jenkins remained in the South teaching music.

Jenkins returned to Chicago in 1965 and was drawn into the well spring of Chicago s creative music activities. Almost immediately, he joined the Association for the Advancement of Creative Music (AACM). Jenkins recalls that this union marked the first time that as a violin player he was truly welcomed into creative music performances. During this time he played and recorded with Muhal Richard Abrams , Leo Smith and Anthony Braxton .
In 1969, Jenkins left for Paris with Braxton and Smith. With the addition of drummer Steve McCall , they formed the Creative Construction Company . Their 1970 performance in New York, joined by Richard Davis on bass and Abrams on piano, gave New York the first taste of the new music that Chicago musicians were creating.

Jenkins continued to work with the finest creative musicians.... Archie Shepp , Albert Ayler , Alice Coltrane , Mtume , Cal Massey , to name a few. But it was the work of the collective Revolutionary Ensemble (co-founded with bassist Sirone and drummer Jerome Cooper) that gained Jenkins prominence as the most significant violinist of the modern era. par Leroy works in a multitude of contexts. His recording on Tomato, Space Minds, New Worlds, Survival in America has received rave reviews. He is performing in solo, trio and quintet contexts, and is also performing in duo settings with woodwindist Oliver Lake .

Phillip Greenlief
c/o Evander Music
PO Box 22158 Oakland, CA 94623-9991
www.evandermusic.com

Bay Area New Music Discussion Group
[redacted]
http://music.mills.edu/mailman/listinfo/newmusic

--0-847909927-1172517800=:12024--

↑ Index

738. Mark Weiss
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Poetry.

Not everything fits into a taxonomy, though taxonomies are undoubtedly useful for introductory courses and literary bureaucracies.

Mark

At 01:46 PM 2/26/2007, you wrote:
>Hey Poetics -

>
>If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school >of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch
is >neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
>Just wondering,
>
>Aaron

↑ Index

739. Mairead Byrne
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

This is a pretty interesting question. I think Jordan's answer was good. Edson is, to some extent, sui generis, though a pervasive influence. Reading Kandinsky's SOUNDS recently, I noticed strong resonances with Edson though. So I like both the "American" and "1st generation" elements in Jordan's definition; also, of course, the "prose poet." Quite a neat piece of work!
Mairead

Mairéad Byrne
Associate Professor of English
Rhode Island School of Design
2 College Street
Providence, RI 02903
www.maireadbyrne.blogspot.com

>>> [redacted] 02/26/07 1:46 PM >>>
Hey Poetics -

If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?

Just wondering,

Aaron

↑ Index

740. Sina Queyras
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Why does he have to be part of any school?

Sina

> Hey Poetics -
>
> If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school
> of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is > neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
> Just wondering,
>
> Aaron

--
Sina Queyras
Visiting Assistant Professor
Department of English
Woodside Cottage
Haverford College
370 Lancaster Avenue
Haverford, PA 19041-1392
[redacted]

↑ Index

741. David-Baptiste Chirot
Freedom of Expression Rights/Said Mural at San Francisco State University
Mon 26 Feb 2007

> Palestinian Mural in Jeopardy!
> Palestinian Cultural Mural honoring Edward Said
> http://www.petitiononline.com/mural/
>
> Palestinians are NOT ALLOWED!
> That's what the President of San Francisco State University said about our mural. Anyone else can have one, but he's refusing to give us ours, he says a Palestinian house key and Handala is "explicitly offensive"! Acknowledging Palestinian roots/culture/ identity is explicitly offensive?

Don't let him get away with it. Tell your Family and Friends what's going on.

Also on Norman Finkelstein's website:
http://www.normanfinkelstein.com/article.php?pg=11&ar=903
General Union of Pal! estine S tudents (GUPS) www.sfgups.org
San Francisco State University

In April 2005, the General Union of Palestine Students at San Francisco State University proposed something revolutionary, to begin a process of implementing a mural paying tribute to Edward Said and Palestinian culture on the University campus. I After over a year of painstaking efforts by the mural committee to follow the established process, the President of San Francisco State University, Robert A. Corrigan, placed a moratorium on all murals, and he demanded that the board change the rules (policy) for the mural process and prematurely denied the Palestinian mural just before the final stage. Two SFSU governing boards approved it but he remains against it. It is 2007 and the mural is in jeopardy and needs your immediate help The SF State president, Robert Corrigan claims the mural represents a "culture of violence" and is "hate to Jews." He says what is "explicitly offensive" is each element individually; a Palestinian house key and Handala, a refugee cartoon character. Acknowledging Palestinian roots/culture/ identity is explicitly offensive? He allowed other murals up on the Cesar Chavez Student Center, such as the Malcolm X mural, the Cesar Chavez mural, the Filipino Mural, the Pan Asian and Pacific Islander Mural, that depict struggles of refugees and human rights, (http://www.sfsustudentcenter.com/about/murals.php) however the administrative reps on the board have been hell bent on stopping our mural since day one before they knew anything about it. Please sign the latest online petition, and/or writing a letter to President Corrigan from yourself or your organization, and/or financially support the legal process to show support for the mural and all its elements including the Palestinian house key and Handala! Go to www.sfgups.org for more info. (SFSU newspaper website = xpress.sfsu.edu) Our artists are Dr. Fayeq Oweis and Dr. Susan Greene; a Palestinian Muslim man and an American Jewish woman. And they would be painting Edward Said, a Christian Palestinian. This in it self is a symbol of peace and co-existence!

Thanks for the support!

What You Can Do

1. Sign the New Online Petition:
http://www.petitiononline.com/mural/

2. Write a Letter or email SFSU President Robert A. Corrigan:
([redacted], [redacted], [redacted])

&nbs! p;
President Robert Corrigan
1600 Holloway Avenue
San Francisco, CA 94132
(email: [redacted])

PLEASE CC:

General Union of Palestine Students
1650 Holloway Ave
Business Office, M100B ! &n bsp;
San Francisco, CA 94132
(email: [redacted])

and CC:

Maria Liliana Cortez
1650 Holloway Ave
Business Office, C-134
San Francisco, CA 94132
(email: [redacted])

3. Make a Donation: Donations are tax- deductible.
Financial Support for the mural; The American Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee San Francisco Chapter is helping with the collection of donations.

Please make checks payable to: ADCSF/AGAPE with "GUPS" written in the memo section of the check.
Please send your donation to:
The ADC-SF (American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee of San Francisco)
522 Valencia Street
San Francisco, California, 94110
email: [redacted] Phone [redacted]

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.

__._,_.___

Messages in this topic (1)
Reply (via web post) | Start a new topic
Messages | Files | Photos | Links | Database | Polls | Members | Calendar
send an email to: [redacted]

Please restrict your messages to subject matter related to the Middle East.

Change settings via the Web (Yahoo! ID required)
Change settings via email: Switch delivery to Daily Digest | Switch format to Traditional
Visit Your Group | Yahoo! Groups Terms of Use | Unsubscribe

Visit Your Group
SPONSORED LINKS

Nh lake region real estate
New hampshire lake region real estate
Los angeles
Middle east phone card
Middle east conflict

Yahoo! News
Movies News
All the latest on films and stars

Yahoo! Mail
You're invited!
Try the all-new Yahoo! Mail Beta

New web site?
Drive traffic now.
Get your business on Yahoo! search.

.

> __,_._,___
>
> ---
> Bored stiff? Loosen up...
> Download and play hundreds of games for free on Yahoo! Games.

_____ Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for FREE. http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

↑ Index

742. Joel Weishaus
"The Way North" North-2 text-3
Mon 26 Feb 2007

North-2 text-3
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/North-2/text-3.htm

Introduction:
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/Intro.htm

-Joel

_____

Joel Weishaus
Research Faculty
Department of English
Portland State University
Portland, Oregon
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282

↑ Index

743. Hugh Behm-Steinberg
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

I think this is sort of a fool's errand too, like cataloging your record collection, but I'd affiliate him with other 60's-70's surrealists like James Tate, Charles Simic, Mark Strand, Bill Knott.

Hugh Behm-Steinberg

Aaron Belz <[redacted]> wrote: Hey Poetics -

If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?

Just wondering,

Aaron

Check out the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta - Fire up a more powerful email and get things done faster.

↑ Index

744. cralan kelder
progenitor Edson
Mon 26 Feb 2007

This is excerpted from an excerpted bit of interview with edson published in Sentence No. 4;

³What name one gives or doesn¹t give to one¹s writing is far less important than the work itself. I called my first published books fables, looking, with the help of this label, for a way to describe the pieces I had been writing since sexual awareness. But fables are message stories, and I don¹t like messagesŠAt that time in my career the term prose poetry seemed more related to French toast or French friesŠThere is too much emphasis on genre vis-à-vis the prose poem. For me the spirit of the prose poem is writing without genre; to go naked with only one¹s imagination.²

For me, I think I recall seeing the term ³pro-genitor of the prose poem² somewhere to decribe Edson, which kind of fits with the oft quirky sexuality running through his work.

↑ Index

745. Aaron Belz
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

So why do you say "poetry" and not just "writing"?

>Poetry.
>
>Not everything fits into a taxonomy, though taxonomies are >undoubtedly useful for introductory courses and literary bureaucracies.
>
>Mark

>
>At 01:46 PM 2/26/2007, you wrote:
>>Hey Poetics -
>>
>>If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school >>of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is >>neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>>
>>Just wondering,
>>
>>Aaron

↑ Index

746. Jacqueline Gens
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Yes, master of the prose poem as others here noted but beyond that Russell Edson is an original mind, sort of the Mr. Natural of Poetics--so funny, it hurts.

Jacqueline Gens

On Feb 26, 2007, at 1:46 PM, Aaron Belz wrote:

> Hey Poetics -
>
> If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school
> of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is > neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
> Just wondering,
>
> Aaron

↑ Index

747. Tom Orange

Leroy Jenkins 1932-2007

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Born in Chicago, composer and violinist Leroy Jenkins was one of the most important musicians to emerge from the AACM (Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians), the legendary collective of which he was a member until his death in 2007. Like many of the Association's members, Jenkins studied under the legendary Walter Dyett at DuSable High School, where he learned the alto saxophone.

He received a music degree (in violin) from Florida A&M University, where he studied composition and the classical masters of the violin. Subsequently, he taught music both in Mobile, Alabama (1961-5) and in the Chicago schools (1965-9). During the latter period, Jenkins joined the AACM. He made his first recording with Muhal Richard Abrams, Anthony Braxton, and Leo Smith in the sixties before achieving international acclaim in Paris along with Braxton, Smith, and the Art Ensemble of Chicago. In 1970 Jenkins moved to New York, where he founded the Revolutionary Ensemble, the critically acclaimed ensemble which recorded 7 albums and toured North America and Europe.

When many of the AACM musicians left during 1969, Jenkins went to Europe with Anthony Braxton & Leo Smith. There, with drummer Steve McCall, they were called the Creative Construction Company. He also played with Ornette Coleman, whose house he & Braxton stayed at when they subsequently moved to New York City.

Playing with Taylor (1970) and Braxton (1969-72), he also worked with Albert Ayler, Cal Massey, Alice Coltrane, Archie Shepp & Rahsaan Roland Kirk. Between 1971-7, he played in his Revolutionary Ensemble, a trio featuring Sirone (Norris Jones) on bass & trombone, and drummer/pianist Jerome Cooper. Thereafter, he toured the US & Europe, led the Mixed Quintet (Jenkins and 4 woodwind players), a blues-based band called Sting, and again played with Cecil Taylor.

Jenkins continually reinvented his own language in music. His was an extraordinary bonding of a variety of sounds associated with the black music tradition, while simultaneously bridging with European styles. His intermeshing of jazz and classical influences left critics wondering at his musical identity; however, as one San Francisco Chronicle critic said, "Jenkins is a master who cuts across all categories."

Jenkins received a number of major commissions and was in demand for experimental and theater-based work. Mother of Three Sons, a dance-opera collaboration with Bill T. Jones, premiered in Aachaen, Germany and had ten performances. The Rockefeller Foundation, National Endowment for the Arts, Meet the Composer, and Mutable Music awarded him numerous commissioning funds and grants to support several new theater works. Among them are Fresh Faust (a jazz-rap opera), which was performed in workshops in Boston at the Institute of Contemporary Arts; The Negro Burial Ground (a cantata), performed at The Kitchen, New York City; and The Three Willies (a multimedia opera), performed at the Painted Bride, Philadelphia. He was also commissioned to create new works for the Brooklyn Philharmonic, the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, the Albany Symphony, the Lincoln Center Out of Doors, and the Kronos Quartet.

Among his recordings are 3 Compositions of New Jazz (1968; Delmark); Lifelong Ambitions (1977; Black Saint; with Muhal Richard Abrams); Space Minds, New Worlds, Survival America (1978; Tomato); Live (1992, Black Saint); Carla Bley's Escalator Over The Hill and Braxton's Three Compositions Of New Jazz.

Leroy Jenkins died on February 24, 2007, in Brooklyn, NY.

[http://www.otherminds.org/shtml/Jenkins.shtml]

↑ Index

748. Alexander Jorgensen

Amy Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

Amy's kinda right about this, I think. I mean, with all the info we have access to online, why pollute this list with more than it can digest. This is a space cafe - not a poetry reading with loads of open mic. If anything, we should learn better at better bickering! We should attack the establishment -- or, join aol.

agj

--- amy king <[redacted]> wrote:

> Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
>
> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend > those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."

>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.
>
> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

Want to start your own business?
Learn how on Yahoo! Small Business.
http://smallbusiness.yahoo.com/r-index

↑ Index

749. Charles Bernstein
Maggie O'Sullivan's Body of Work
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Ken Edwards's
Reality Street Editions (UK) has just published Maggie O'Sullivan's Body of Work

from the publisher: Body of Work brings together for the first time all of Maggie O'Sullivan's solo collections of poetry and visual texts published before her 1993 Reality Street book In the House of the Shaman. These booklets, long out of print, are here presented in facsimile, scanned from the original publications, or in some cases the original mauscripts, together with a selection of previously unpublished works.

More information
& my foreword to Body of Work is now up at http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/bernstein/blog/

Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

750. Marcus Bales
March 3 and March 10 Events at Gallery 324 in the Galleria downtown.
Mon 26 Feb 2007

March 3 and March 10 Events at Gallery 324 in the Galleria downtown.

PLEASE ENTER ALL EVENTS THROUGH THE PARKING GARAGE OR THE 12TH STREET ENTRANCE TO THE GALLERIA.

March 3 – Saturday at Noon
Patti O’Luanaigh, Claire McMahon
        Mary O’Malley

March 10 – Saturday at Noon
Joanne Cornelius, Dan Smith

March 10 – 24 -- Opening Reception March 10, 6 – 9 pm

Art from Odessa, Ukraine

A collection of artists from Odessa, Ukraine, presented by Lillia Feinstein and Brennan, Manna & Diamond part of the proceeds benefit:

Susan G Komen for the Cure

Artists include:

Alex Schvetz
Uri Gavrilchenko
Tanya Shubina
Oleg Nedosheeko
Irakliy Savgulidze
Orik Zagrabyan
Alex Malik
Valentin Philipenko
Irina Dobrovetskaya
Sergei Belik\Vera Kulgina
Tanya Goncharwnko
Alex Lantukov
Victor Sapatov
Alex Strelnikov
Igor Vareshkin
Viatalik Kuzman
Greg Palatnika
Natasha Stasukova

Curated by Jody Hawk and Bernadette Glorioso

For More Information:

Gallery 324 at the Galleria
1301 East Ninth Street
Cleveland, Ohio 44114
216/[redacted]

PARKING INFORMATION

$3.00 Parking in the Galleria Parking Garage after 4pm Weekdays Special Price $1.00 Parking in the Galleria Parking Garage Saturdays Free parking on E 9th and E 12th Streets after 6pm Free parking on St Clair after 7 pm

↑ Index

751. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Mon 26 Feb 2007

Hoover classified him with Rothenberg, Wakoski, and some others as part of the "Deep Image" school in the norton postmodern american.

On Mon, 26 Feb 2007, Aaron Belz wrote:

> Hey Poetics -
>
> If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
> Just wondering,
>
> Aaron

↑ Index

752. Michael Rothenberg

Celebrate Golden Handcuff's Review at Moe's

Mon 26 Feb 2007

AT MOE'S: Monday, March 5th: readings from Golden Handcuffs Magazine Editor Lou Rowan will MC this event featuring contributors David Bromige, Laynie Browne, Richard Denner, Michael McClure, David Meltzer, and Michael Rothenberg

Moe's Books
2476 Telegraph Avenue
Berkeley CA 94704
Internet/Art: [redacted]
Main store: [redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

753. Mark Weiss

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Mon 26 Feb 2007

I could be wrong, but it sounds like a hail mary play to me. I know all of the principals, including Edson, who read for me several times in the 70s and appeared in my journal Broadway Boogie. As far as I know he didn't hang out with Jerry or Diane or for that matter Kelly or Eshleman, and his work and theirs are very different. And Deep Image lasted as a self-designation for the blink of an eye.

Not that it matters much. They're all sui generis. And the toxonomies are of limited use. I'll go with "call me what you want except late for dinner."

Mark

At 08:36 PM 2/26/2007, you wrote: >Hoover classified him with Rothenberg, Wakoski, and some others as >part of the "Deep Image" school in the norton postmodern american.
>
>
>On Mon, 26 Feb 2007, Aaron Belz wrote:
>
>>Hey Poetics -
>>
>>If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school >>of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is >>neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>>
>>Just wondering,
>>
>>Aaron

↑ Index

754. mIEKAL aND
REPRINTING OF "UKANHAVYRFUCKINCITIBAK." by d.a. levy
Mon 26 Feb 2007

-----Original Message-----
From: Russell & Susan Salamon [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Mon 2/26/2007 9:08 PM
To: Susan & Russell Salamon
Subject: REPRINTING OF "UKANHAVYRFUCKINCITIBAK." by d.a. levy

Dear d.a. levy legend Supporter or Fan:

I will reprint d.a. levy's UKANHAVYRFUCKINCITIBAK. by May 1, 2007. It has been long out of print and the remaining copies are collector's items which sell for from between $100 and $400, maybe more. New readers must have access to this historic work.

I have found a good price in Santa Ana, California (from the same man who printed my Descent into Cleveland). The original book was collected and edited by r.j.s.; published by t.l. kryss, GHOST PRESS CLEVELAND, in a limited edition of 1,000 copies. To get one of the last original copies contact r.j.s. His address is:

> r.j.s.
> 13138 Pond Rd.,
> Burton, OH 44021

There is so much history and good material in this book that it stands as a document for freedom of thought and freedom of speech from the exciting Sixties and the mimeograph revolution in Cleveland, Ohio. New readers should have access to copies, but it should stay in its original form. (The printer assures me he can scan it to look pretty much as it is, except for the color silk screens, which when scanned, will be in black and white.) I will not add anything except maybe a little history paragraph with names of Patrons.

I can't fund the entire printing myself, so I am asking Patrons and levy Supporters to buy a minimum of 100 dollars worth of books, which gives you 12 copies at $8.33 cents. This should also cover shipping costs by media mail. If you want only one, look for it at Mac's Backs in Cleveland, or contact me later and I will sell you one for $20.

d. a. levy rejected copyright (called it "copyrot") and r.j.s and Tom Kryss are in agreement with this project, so going ahead is not a problem.

If you have mailing lists, please forward this email to them. If you know patrons and levy collectors from early days, or from right now, please send their names so that I may contact them. (I know I have missing names, such as, Kent Taylor.)

I want to have the book ready by May 1, 2007, so please act fast and send in your 1, 2, 3, 4, 500, or 1,000 or 10,000 dollars. Example 1: A class gets together, funds 200 dollars and gets 24 books. Example 2: If you are a leader in your area, you can round up advanced sales from your group and get the books at cost. Example 3: You may have libraries in mind or university libraries to which you may want to give a book.

Thanks for your attention.

Please make checks to:

Russell Salamon
10537 Chandler Blvd.
North Hollywood, CA 91601-2926
[redacted]

↑ Index

755. David Baratier

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Tue 27 Feb 2007

Could you post a poem of his so we could figure it out?

> Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

756. David Baratier
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Feb 2007 to 26 Feb 2007 (#2007-57)
Tue 27 Feb 2007

We will be at AWP in Atlanta stop by our table and say hello.

Feel free to meet some of our authors, many will be present reading and/or presenting at (or off site) the conference including Steve Davenport (has 2 readings actually), Ken Waldman, Rachel Simon, Kaya Oakes, Dan Boehl, Susan Terris, Jeffrey Levine, Chris Arigo, Dana Curtis and many others.

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

757. Gabriel Gudding
Re: Russell Edson - Daniil Kharms
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Though of a different nation and time, I would say the same school as Daniil Kharms.

This is from Kharms' notebook, 1937: "There lived a redheaded man who had no eyes or ears. He didn’t have hair either, so he was called a redhead arbitrarily. He couldn’t talk because he had no mouth. He had no nose either. He didn’t even have arms or legs. He had no stomach, he had no back, he had no spine, and he had no innards at all. He didn’t have anything. So we don’t even know who we’re talking about. It’s better that we don’t talk about him any more."

- Gabe

Also, see

http://www.scn.org/realpoetik/Daniil-Kharms03.htm

and more http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Daniil_Kharms

THE LECTURE

Pushkov said:

"What is woman? An engine of love,"--and immediately got punched in the face.

"What for?" asked Pushkov but, receiving no answer, continued:

"This is what I think: you have to roll up to women from below. Women love that, they only pretend they don't."

Here Pushkov was again socked in the face.

"What's going on, comrades? Fine, if that's the case, I won't even talk!" said Pushkov but, after a quarter of a minute, continued:

"Women are arranged in such a way that they are all soft and moist."

Here Pushkov again got socked in the face. Pushkov tried to look as if he didn't notice anything and continued:

"If you sniff a woman..."

But here Pushkov got smashed in the face so hard that he grabbed his cheek and said:

"Comrades, it is absolutely impossible to lecture under such conditions. If this happens again, I won't talk!"

Pushkov waited a quarter of a minute and continued:

"Where were we? Oh--yes! So: Women love to look at themselves. They sit down in front of the mirror totally naked..."

As he said that word he was punched in the face again.

"Naked," repeated Pushkov.

"Pow!" they whacked him in the face.

"Naked!" shouted Pushkov.

"Pow!" he got punched in the face.

"Naked! Naked everywhere! Tits and ass!" shouted Pushkov.

"Pow! Pow! Pow!" they kept punching him in the face.

"Tits and ass with a washtub!" Pushkov was shouting.

"Pow! Pow!" the punches rained down.

"Tits and ass with a tail!" shouted Pushkov, spinning to avoid the punches.

"Naked nun!"

But then Pushkov was hit with such force that he lost consciousness and fell, as if mowed down, upon the floor.

12 August 1940; translated by Eugene Ostashevsky

↑ Index

758. Steve Dalachinsky

1 Fw: hello everyone we're back and bolder than ever some Poetry gigs for you all from dalachinsky and otomo

Tue 27 Feb 2007

Yuko & steve with special guest STEPHANIE STONE :

Tuesday, March 6th 8 PM
at the Stone on the corner of Ave. C and E 2nd St.
admission $5-10 sliding scale (one or the other)

followed @ 10 PM by Amiri and Amina Baraka & guests
separate admission of $10

Thursday, March 8 - 10PM for Praise Bukowski Night 3 -- celebrating the work and life of Charles Bukowski

featuring Steve Cannon, Matthew Cummings, Steve Dalachinsky, Gary Glasner, Bob Holman,
Big Mike, David Huberman, Tsaurah Litzky,
Thad Rutkowski, Moonshine Shorey,
Danny Shot, Marjorie Tesser, Mike Topp, Deanna Zandt & More!
+ Open Reading
FREE (one drink minimum)
+ midnight screening of Born Into This,
John Dulligan's acclaimed documentary
in which Bukowski speaks!

Bowery Poetry Club,
308 Bowery NYC
(between Houston & Bleecker Sts.)
1-212- [redacted]

---

steve dalachinsky & Robert Morgan (poet & art historian) in a special evening of poetry

Thursday, March 15th @ 7 PM @
FUSION ARTS MUSEUM
57 Stanton Street (near Eldridge)
DONATION

SHaloM NewMan presents @ Pratt Institute - in Manhattan
144 w 14th street
March 16 @ 7 PM exhibit and readings
featuring steve, Yuko, Jim Feast and many others... opening at 5 pm thadeus rutkowski merry fortune caril weirzbecki
hal sirowitz carl watson

---

sunday march 25 8 pm
benefit for the stone e. second and ave c 8pm improv nite run by sabir mateen

↑ Index

759. Steve Dalachinsky

1

Tue 27 Feb 2007

Lise Vachon
Rashied Ali, Byard Lancaster
Peter Zummo, Johnny Reinhard
Vito Ricci

Sunday, March 4
6PM
Bowery Poetry Club
308 Bowery at Bleecker
F train to 2nd avenue
6 train to Bleecker

admission $10

www.lise-vachon.com

AOL now offers free email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at AOL.com.

↑ Index

760. Pierre Joris
Recent Nomadics Blog Posts
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Recent posts on Nomadics @ http://pjoris.blogspot.com:

12 months / 12 writers
Lars Gustafsson Weighs In Anna Gréki
Egyptian Blogger Jailed
A site for Philippe Lacoue-Labarthe
Prescott on Ice (Melting)
George Lewis on the AACM & American Experimentalism

enjoy! (not a post, not a command, just a wish)

Pierre

==========
"It may well be the case that one has to wait a long time to find out hwether the title of avant-garde is deserved."
— Jean-François Lyotard
==========
Pierre Joris
244 Elm Street
Albany NY 12202
h: [redacted]
c: [redacted]
o: 518 442 40 71
Euro cell: (011 33) 6 75 43 57 10
email: [redacted]
http://pierrejoris.com
Nomadics blog: http://pjoris.blogspot.com
==========

↑ Index

761. charles alexander help the Steinfeld artists, please
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Dear Friends:

I have written before, here and on the chaxblog, about the situation facing the Steinfeld Warehouse artists, which include Chax Press. In late November all tenants of our building were given "evacuation" notices, to be out by Jan. 31, 2007. That evacuation date was soon delayed until March 31. The primary reason given for the notice was that the state of Arizona Dept. of Transportation, based on a report from their director of demolitions (who is not a structural engineer), after a cursory walk-through, advised ADOT that the building is not safe. The artists in the building commissioned and paid for a full examination by a licensed structural engineer (just completed) that states that there are three necessary safety repairs, but these do not present health and safety concerns, and that there is no reason that the building should be evacuated before or during the accomplishment of these repairs. We know that ADOT is considering our request that the evacuation notice either be rescinded, or that adequate time (1 to 2 years) be given to further study, develop, and implement a plan for our building, and that artists/tenants in the building be allowed to remain for that period of one to two years. Many people have asked me if they can write in support of Chax Press and the artists at the Steinfeld Warehouse. The answer is "yes" and the time is NOW, as we expect some decision to be made by the State of Arizona very soon.

So if you are so inclined, please write a letter or email in your own words, based on the letter below — if you wish to include anything of your own experience or benefit from the work of Chax Press or any other artists/tenants of the building, that would be fine. Even a very brief one-sentence letter or email stating "Please let the current artists and tenants remain at the Steinfeld Warehouse for as long as possible," would be greatly appreciated.

Please send email to Kristin Almquist <[redacted]> (the governor's Southern Arizona staffperson)
Teresa Welborn <[redacted]> (the spokesperson for the Arizona Dept. of Transportation)
Nina Trasoff <[redacted]> (Tucson city council member, head of subcommittee on Downtown Arts & Culture) and/or send paper mail to:

The Honorable Janet Napolitano
Governor of Arizona
1700 West Washington
Phoenix, Arizona 85007

and

Councilperson Nina Trasoff
Midtown Ward Six 3202 East 1st Street
Tucson, Arizona 85716

Phone calls might be useful, too, and I'll update this post with phone numbers soon.

Thank you!

Charles Alexander

Dear Governor Napolitano and the Arizona Department of Transportation:

I am writing to support the continued presence and creative work of the artists and tenants of the Steinfeld Warehouse in Tucson, Arizona. These tenants include Chax Press, Dinnerware Arts, Alamo Woodworkers Collective, and six individual artists (Cynthia Miller, Betina Fink, Joe Labate, Laura La Fave, Elizabeth Criger, and Mary Theresa Dietz). The presence of these artists in the Steinfeld Warehouse also effects their employees, interns, volunteers, participants in their educational programs, and several other artists who use the building for storage of art works. For more than 20 years the Steinfeld artists have contributed to the Tucson community as well as to artistic communities and audiences throughout the United States and beyond, through the production of literary books, artists' books, fine woodworks, extraordinary visual art exhibitions, and the creation of paintings, sculptures, installations, and other works exhibited throughout Arizona as well as the United States, and in London, Paris, Berlin, Mexico City, and countless places around the globe. It is difficult to think of a more productive and resourceful art center in Arizona than the Steinfeld Warehouse. The individual artists, nonprofit arts organizations, and artists' collective there should be allowed to stay.

I understand that a recent structural engineering report declares that the building is in need of minor "shoring and bracing" work, which the artists are determined to accomplish if they are given a year or two of continued tenancy in the building. This same report also declares that such repair work does not require evacuation of the building. I know that plans are in the works to eventually rehabilitate the building thoroughly, requiring major work that may require temporary building evacuation. However, that work is four or more years away, and the worst thing that could happen to the building in the interim is to have it stand empty, at the mercy of weather, vandals, and entropy, without active tenants, such as the Steinfeld artists have been, in place to maintain and upgrade the building, as they have done for twenty years at their own cost with little or no help from their landlord.

Please allow the Steinfeld artists to remain in their space for as long as possible — at least for one to two years, and hopefully in perpetuity. The future of the developing Tucson Historic Warehouse Arts District depends on the active presence of artists in the Steinfeld Warehouse, a shining light for literature and the arts in Tucson. Let it remain so, now and for the future.

charles alexander / chax press

fold the book inside the book keep it open always read from the inside out speak then

Steinfeld Warehouse artist
Chax Press executive director
WAMO President
[redacted] (studio)
[redacted] (cell)
[redacted] chax.org
101 W. Sixth St.
Tucson, AZ 85701-1000

↑ Index

762. Burt Kimmelman

Burt Kimmelman's New Chapbook Available

Tue 27 Feb 2007

There Are Words by Burt Kimmelman, published by Dos Madres Press, is now available, pre-publication date, at http://www.dosmadres.com. A CD of Kimmelman reading the poems in this chapbook is available separately.

"In There Are Words, Kimmelman strives for and often attains 'the simple / lettering stating / the facts'-his own words."

- Samuel Menashe

"Burt Kimmelman's poems flourish as they pivot from a repertoire of reiterated subjects-works of art, natural landscapes, family, the animal world-to a transfiguring notion of their properties and possibilities. For over twenty-five years, this practice has produced dynamic patterns of insight, patterns comprised of recurring figures and forms which nevertheless shift in their relations to his poetic witness."

- Jon Curley, Talisman: A Journal of Contemporary Poetry and Poetics

About the Author:

Burt Kimmelman has published four previous collections of poetry -- Musaics (1992), First Life (2000), The Pond at Cape May Point (2002), a collaboration with the painter Fred Caruso, and Somehow (2005). For over a decade, he was Senior Editor of Poetry New York: A Journal of Poetry and Translation. He is a professor of English at New Jersey Institute of Technology and the author of two book-length literary studies: The "Winter Mind": William Bronk and American Letters (1998); and, The Poetics of Authorship in the Later Middle Ages: The Emergence of the Modern Literary Persona (1996, paperback 1999). He also edited The Facts on File Companion to 20th-Century American Poetry (2005).

Other authors published by Dos Madres Press include:

Annie Finch

Norman Finkelstein

Michael Heller

Robert Murphy

Peter O'Leary

Henry Weinfield

Tyrone Williams

and others

About Dos Madres Press:

Founded in 2004 by Robert J. Murphy, Dos Madres Press is dedicated to the belief that the small press is essential to the vitality of contemporary literature as a carrier of the new voice and new works by established poets, as well as the older, sometimes forgotten voices of the past. And in an ever more virtual world, to the creation of fine books pleasing to the eye and hand.

↑ Index

763. Raymond Bianchi
Glomski Bianchi Reading at Prairie Lights in Iowa City
Tue 27 Feb 2007

---

http://news-releases.uiowa.edu/2007/february/021607glomski-bianchi-pl.html

Please check out this link for a reading that I will be giving with fellow Iowa Alumnus Chris Glomski on Friday in Iowa City. If you are in the area we would love to see you at Prairie Lights.

thanks

Ray Bianchi

↑ Index

764. DJ SPOOKY
Lou Reed and Dj Spooky Concert at Town Hall NYC 3/1/07
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Hello People:
I'm just in the middle of finishing my first film Rebirth of a Nation but during the interim, there's a couple of concerts I'm doing in NYC.

If you're around on March 1st (this Thursday), I'd like to extend an invitation to you to come out to the show I'm doing at Town Hall.

It's a benefit for an interesting arts/experimental music venue called The Stone and the lineup for the concert will be:
Dj Spooky
Lou Reed
John Zorn
Lee Reynaldo of Sonic Youth Medeski Martin and Wood
and others.

If you're in town, please come out and support.
Ticket info below:

MARCH 1, 2007 AT TOWN HALL, NYC
A benefit for The Stone (http://www.thestonenyc.com/)
8pm, tickets $52, $38, $25

Town Hall
123 West 43rd Street,
New York, NY 10036

Tickets at Ticketmaster

↑ Index

765. Brigitte Byrd
Ahsahta Press Reading in Atlanta: Room change
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Hi again, I just found out that the Ahsahta Press Reading which will be held at the Defoor Centre on Thursday, March 1 (see details and directions below) has been moved to the Chattahoochee room--instead of the Reading room.

Ahsahta Press Reading

Thursday, March 1, 7:30-10
The Defoor Centre Chattahootchee Room
1710 Defoor Avenue NW
(downtown Atlanta, not far from the hotel)
http://www.defoorcentre.com

Paige Ackerson-Kiely, Carrie Olivia Adams, SusanBriante, Brigitte Byrd, Lisa Fishman, Noah Eli
Gordon, Kate Greenstreet, Janet Holmes, Karla Kelsey, Kristi Maxwell, Ethan Paquin, Susan Tichy

Brigitte Byrd
http://a-s.clayton.edu/bbyrd/Homepage.htm

___
Do you Yahoo!?
Everyone is raving about the all-new Yahoo! Mail beta.
http://new.mail.yahoo.com

↑ Index

766. Charles Bernstein
Fwd: HOW2 SPECIAL ISSUE ON WOMEN AND ECO-POETICS
Tue 27 Feb 2007

> Date: Tue, 27 Feb 2007 12:58:58 +0000
> To: [redacted]
> From: Penny Florence <[redacted]>
> Subject: Fwd: HOW2 SPECIAL ISSUE ON WOMEN AND ECO-POETICS
>
> Dear friends and colleagues
>
> I am currently editing an issue of How2 on women and eco-poetics -- please see <http://how2calls.blogspot.com/>http://how2calls.blogspot.com/ for the call for papers/creative work if you are interested. As I'm sure most of you know, How2 accepts work by women and work on women (by both men and women) who wrote or currently write in the modernist or contemporary experimental tradition. I've cast my net far and wide here, so please feel free to cast it wider and inform anyone you think may be interested. The deadline for accepting work is 18 May
>
> Thank you very much
>
> Harriet Tarlo

↑ Index

767. Charlie Rossiter
Poems: to post or not to post
Tue 27 Feb 2007

I think the folks did a good job in the recent go-round about haiku of posting poems in the interest of a discussion of poetics. I think what many are saying, and I agree, is we don't want to getting posts of poems that are posted for no other reason that to say "here's my great new poem, please tell me I'm clever" or "notice me, notice me" etcetc...

We could also say, if you want to post a poem for the purpose of discussing poetics--post someone else's poem.

Charlie

--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
Charlie said that.
www.poetrypoetry.com
 where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them

www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
 hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues

www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
 hear Charlie as solo performance poet

www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)

www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
 hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

768. Halvard Johnson
Re: Poems: to post or not to post
Tue 27 Feb 2007

That's not far off from what all the announcements of publications, far-flung readings, etc. are saying.

I've found I can delete poems I don't care to read just as quickly as I can delete announcements of poetry readings in, say, Fairbanks, Alaska.

Hal

"One barium enema is worth a year
of psychoanalysis."
--Dr. Robert Whitlock

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:24 AM, Charlie Rossiter wrote:

> I think the folks did a good job in the recent go-round about haiku of posting poems in the interest of a discussion of poetics. I think what > many are saying, and I agree, is we don't want to getting posts of poems > that are posted for no other reason that to say "here's my great new poem, > please tell me I'm clever" or "notice me, notice me" etcetc...
>
> We could also say, if you want to post a poem for the purpose of discussing poetics--post someone else's poem.
>
> Charlie
>
> --
> "Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
> Charlie said that.
> www.poetrypoetry.com
> where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them
>
> www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
> hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues
>
> www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
> hear Charlie as solo performance poet
>
> www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)
>
> www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
> hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

769. Ron Silliman

Silliman's Blog: Bad Moon Rising

Tue 27 Feb 2007

---

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

RECENT POSTS

In the past three weeks
Leroy Jenkins
Gene Frumkin
Merilene Murphy
Michael Benedikt and Emmett Williams have all died

The device poems
of Elaine Equi

Reading and citing
the New York Times

Martin Scorseseâ€™s
The Departed is better than the film (Infernal Affairs)
from which it was adapted

Elaine Equiâ€™s
Ripple Effect

Mongolian Ping Pong

The Grand Piano,
vol 2,
is available
(an experiment in collective autobiography)

Highlights of Fascicle 3

We
by Yevgeny Zemyatin
(sci-fi before sci-fi existed)

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

770. Zoe Ward
Good drinks & small presses in ATL
Tue 27 Feb 2007

All,

If you're in Atlanta this week, stop by Manuel's Tavern on Friday night to have a drink with the fine folks behind some great small presses, including Archipelago, A Public Space (lit mag), Akashic, Graywolf, Milkweed, Soft Skull, and Coffee House. Details below.

Also, come say hi to me at the Archipelago/Two Lines table (#132) if you have a chance!

Manuel's Tavern, in the “New Bar”
Friday, March 2, 8-11 pm
602 North Highland Avenue, Atlanta

Directions (from the Hilton):

Turn Left on Piedmont
Follow Piedmont to North Ave., turn right Follow this to North Highland Manuel?s Tavern is at the corner of North Ave.

Hope to see you there!

Zoe Ward
Editor & Publicist
Archipelago Books
25 Jay St. #203
Brooklyn NY 11201
T: [redacted]
F: [redacted]

Visit our new website!
www.archipelagobooks.org=

↑ Index

771. David A. Kirschenbaum
Last Call: Advertise in Boog City 39
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Please forward

Advertise in

Boog City 39

*Deadline

--Wed. March 7-Ad copy to editor
--Sat. March 10-Issue to be distributed

Email to reserve ad space ASAP

We have 2,250 copies distributed and available free throughout Manhattan's East Village, and Williamsburg and Greenpoint, Brooklyn.

Take advantage of our indie discount ad rate. We are once again offering a 50% discount on our 1/8-page ads, cutting them from $60 to $30. (The discount rate also applies to larger ads.)

Advertise your small press's newest publications, your own titles or upcoming readings, or maybe salute an author you feel people should be reading, with a few suggested books to buy. And musical acts, advertise your new albums, indie labels your new releases.

(We're also cool with donations, real cool.)

Email [redacted]
or call 212-842-BOOG(2664) for more information.

thanks,
David

--
David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/ <http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/>
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

772. michael-chasar

CFP: Poetry & Popular Culture (4/16/07; MMLA '07)

Tue 27 Feb 2007

CFP: 2007 Midwest Modern Language Association Convention
Cleveland, Ohio, November 8-11, 2007

Poetry & Popular Culture

For many people, the terms "popular" and "poetry" seem mutually exclusive and the term "popular poetry" oxymoronic - a non sequitur in which the commercial logic of the culture industries and the integrity of the lyric voice or aesthetic taste are impossibly paired. Yet the field of Cultural Studies now offers a set of rubrics by which we might talk productively about the intersection of poetry and popular culture. This panel seeks to showcase innovative scholarship at that intersection and thus invites papers reading and recovering the history of popular poetry, examining its creation and consumption, and exploring its various manifestations from periodical to pin-up, radio to rock and roll, and advertisement to autograph book.

Send 300 word abstracts by April 16 to [redacted].

http://www.uiowa.edu/~mmla/

↑ Index

773. charles alexander
sorry. wrong email
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Dear Friends:

The email I sent earlier contained one mis-typed email address to which to send letters of support for the Steinfeld artists (& Chax Press) in Tucson.

The city council member's address was written as <[redacted]>

but it should have been:

<[redacted]>

very sorry for the confusion!

Charles

↑ Index

774. charles alexander
sorry. wrong email
Tue 27 Feb 2007

(yikes: still WRONG -- either not enough or too much coffee this morning! Please, Poetics List Moderators. If you catch this, send THIS email on to the list, and not the last one!))

Should be, and this is final: <[redacted]> (I had it earlier as tucsonaz.goav)

_____

Dear Friends:

The email I sent earlier contained one mis-typed email address to which to send letters of support for the Steinfeld artists (& Chax Press) in Tucson.

The city council member's address was written as <[redacted]>

but it should have been:

<[redacted]>

very sorry for the confusion!

Charles

↑ Index

775. Halvard Johnson

Re: Poems: to post or not to post

Tue 27 Feb 2007

I'm finding I can also delete all the messages from UB Poetics re messages to be posted. Lots more of them nowadays. I'm wishing they'd include a poem with each of those I get.

Hal

Today's Special

Theory of Harmony
http://www.xpressed.org/fall04/theory1.pdf

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:44 AM, Halvard Johnson wrote:

> That's not far off from what all the announcements of publications, far-flung readings, etc. are saying.
>
> I've found I can delete poems I don't care to read just as quickly as I can delete announcements of poetry readings in, say, Fairbanks, Alaska.
>
> Hal

"One barium enema is worth a year
of psychoanalysis."
--Dr. Robert Whitlock

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:24 AM, Charlie Rossiter wrote:

I think the folks did a good job in the recent go-round about haiku of posting poems in the interest of a discussion of poetics. I think what many are saying, and I agree, is we don't want to getting posts of poems that are posted for no other reason that to say "here's my great new poem, please tell me I'm clever" or "notice me, notice me" etcetc...

We could also say, if you want to post a poem for the purpose of discussing poetics--post someone else's poem.

Charlie

--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
Charlie said that.
www.poetrypoetry.com
where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them

www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues

www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
hear Charlie as solo performance poet

www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)

www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

776. Adam Fieled
Jordan Stempleman on PFS Post
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Check out four dynamite poems from Iowa's Otoliths & moria veteran Jordan Stempleman:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

"I'm always crashing in the same car"

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

The fish are biting.
Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.

↑ Index

777. Tony Hooper
Re: Amy Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Alexander -

If the list is an open mic if it's populated with poetry, then it's just a bulletin without it. I see more self promotions, general announcements, and death notices than I do thoughtful "poetics" discussions.

I think actual poetry is more interesting than discussions of poetry. I have low expectations regarding this list so I'm not disappointed with it's current state.

Tony

On 2/26/07, Alexander Jorgensen <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Amy's kinda right about this, I think. I mean, with > all the info we have access to online, why pollute
> this list with more than it can digest. This is a > space cafe - not a poetry reading with loads of open > mic. If anything, we should learn better at better > bickering! We should attack the establishment -- or, > join aol.
>
> agj
>
> --- amy king <[redacted]> wrote:
>

> > Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do > > not accept postings of creative work not directed > > toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list.
> > The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of > > free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
> >
> > And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for > > a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange > > of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend > > those directions in poetry that are committed to > > innovations, renovations, and investigations of form
> > and/or/as content, to the questioning of received > > forms and styles, and to the creation of the > > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, > > improbable, and impossible."
> >
> >
> > Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken > > lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring > > words? etc) that address poetics issues be > > encouraged?
> >
> > Incidentally, the daily message max for the list > > is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts > > per person.
> >
> >
> >
> > Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> > Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it,
> > we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just > > discussions and announcements relevant to poetry.
> > There is another excellent site called Wryting-L
> > where poets from this list and, I suspect, from > > other sources post poems. It is set up specifically > > with that intent. If you're interested in doing > > that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the > > relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage
> >
> >
> > ---
> > Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.

> > Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.
> >
>
>
> ---
>
>
>
>
>

> Want to start your own business?
> Learn how on Yahoo! Small Business.
> http://smallbusiness.yahoo.com/r-index
>

↑ Index

778. Bill Berkson

Bill Berkson Reading

Tue 27 Feb 2007

Bill Berkson reading from Our Friends Will Pass Among You Silently
new poems 2001-2006
The Owl Press, 2007
&
What's Your Idea of a Good Time?: Letters & Interviews 1977-1985
with Bernadette Mayer Tuumba Press, 2006

& celebrating Sudden Address:
Selected Lectures 1981-2006
Cuneiform Press, 2007

Thursday, March 15, 6 p.m.
Kelly Writers House
3805 Locust Walk
Philadelphia, PA

*

Saturday, March 17th, 4pm - 6pm
Clayton Fine Books
317 N.Charles Street
Baltimore, MD
[[redacted]]

*

Sunday, March 18, 3 p.m.
In Your Ear
DC Arts Center
2438 18th Street in Adams Morgan
Washington DC
admission $3, free for members

↑ Index

779. Jason Quackenbush
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Tue 27 Feb 2007

I don't think you're wrong, but i think sometimes even an arbitrary grouping is a useful one. For me, as an autodidact born in the late seventies and growing up in the stagnant nineties about as far from the little magazines of the sixties and seventies as you can get, things like Hoover's introduction to the norton postmodern have been very useful at trying to get a structure around which to further my investigations of the poetry of the couple of generations immediately preceding mine which are currently just beginning the process of canonization. Being able to read ashbery and o'hara as somehow related to eachother and also to poets like padgett and berrigan, and as somehow having some distance from creeley or olson while at the same time all of them being somehow connected in a broader field that was itself some distance from poets like plath or collins or maya angelou who are the sorts of people you associate with american poetry if you walk blindly into a bookstore to look at poets and not knowing anything else.

which is to say, so long as such groupings and schoolings serve a pedagogical purpose and are seen as porous and not absolute, i think they have a place at the table.

On Mon, 26 Feb 2007, Mark Weiss wrote:

> I could be wrong, but it sounds like a hail mary play to me. I know all of the principals, including Edson, who read for me several times in the 70s and appeared in my journal Broadway Boogie. As far as I know he didn't hang out with Jerry or Diane or for that matter Kelly or Eshleman, and his work and theirs are very different. And Deep Image lasted as a self-designation for the > blink of an eye.

>
> Not that it matters much. They're all sui generis. And the toxonomies are of limited use. I'll go with "call me what you want except late for dinner."
>
> Mark
>
> At 08:36 PM 2/26/2007, you wrote:
> Hoover classified him with Rothenberg, Wakoski, and some others as part of the "Deep Image" school in the norton postmodern american.
>
> On Mon, 26 Feb 2007, Aaron Belz wrote:
>
> Hey Poetics -
>
> If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school
> of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is > neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?
>
> Just wondering,
>
> Aaron

↑ Index

780. Tony Trigilio

Court Green #5 / Call for Submissions

Tue 27 Feb 2007

COURT GREEN #5 / Spring 2008

http://english.colum.edu/courtgreen

Call for Submissions

Dossier: Sylvia Plath

Each issue of COURT GREEN features a dossier on a special topic or theme. For our fifth issue, we are seeking creative responses to the work, life, and legacy of Sylvia Plath. It has been over forty years since Plath committed suicide. In the decades since, her influence has proven to be great and lasting. For this dossier, we would like to see fresh takes on and responses to Plath's life and work, however subtle or overt, in poetry and short lyric essays or prose. All styles are welcome. We are not looking for critical/academic works at this time.

Submissions for dossier and regular sections of the magazine are welcome.

If you would like to submit poems for either or both sections, our submission period is March 1-June 30 of each year.

Please send no more than five pages of poetry. We will respond by August 31.

Submit to:

Editors, COURT GREEN
English Department
Columbia College Chicago
600 South Michigan Avenue
Chicago, IL 60605

Email submissions are not accepted. Submissions without a self-addressed, stamped envelope will not be returned. SASEs with insufficient postage will contain notification only. Poems submitted outside our reading period will be returned unread.

Email me if you have questions: [redacted]

↑ Index

781. Lewis LaCook

I saw a burning car on 28th Street - Xanax Pop, by Lewis LaCook

Tue 27 Feb 2007

These details and their temporal degradation
spit stillness and reciprocal snow
At night, carillons scream like gulls streaming through sexually-bruised skies and lighting on the relief of faces
You smile as if this were understanding
The fire department, slow to respond, hungry slide as if on strings down the street and reach a conflagration. Somehow we're holding hands, maybe to ward off the vicious pink of the clouds Anyway, we're in love, adjacent and content as per this series of treaties

Lewis LaCook
Director of Web Development
Abstract Outlooks Media

[redacted]

http://www.abstractoutlooks.com
Abstract Outlooks Media - Premium Web Hosting, Development, and Art Photography

http://www.lewislacook.org
lewislacook.org - New Media Poetry and Poetics

http://www.xanaxpop.org
Xanax Pop - the Poetry of Lewis LaCook

Don't get soaked. Take a quick peak at the forecast with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.

↑ Index

782. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: wood's lot today: 3 Otoliths poets: CRONIN, STAMMER, CHIROT
Tue 27 Feb 2007

> From: "Otoliths Editor" <[redacted]>
> To: "Mark Young" <[redacted]>
> Subject: wood's lot
> Date: Tue, 27 Feb 2007 20:28:52 +1000
>
> Dear David, Margie, harry
>
> Thought you might be interested in today's postings as Wood's Lot.
>
> http://web.ncf.ca/ek867/2007_02_16-28_archives.html#02.27.2007
>
> Cheers
> Mark

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

783. David-Baptiste Chirot
FW: Guardian Unlimited Books: 'Inside the wire' Poets of Gitmo
Tue 27 Feb 2007

> David Chirot spotted this on the Guardian Unlimited Books site and thought you should see it.

To see this story with its related links on the Guardian Unlimited Books site, go to http://books.guardian.co.uk

'Inside the wire'
The pressures of confinement in Guantánamo Bay have led many in the controversial detention camp to turn to poetry. But, as Richard Lea learns, the American authorities are very reluctant to let the world see them
Monday February 26 2007
The Guardian

Poetry's capacity to rattle governments is not, it appears, confined to totalitarian regimes. A collection of poems by detainees at the US military base in Guantánamo Bay is to be published later this year, but only in the face of strong opposition by suspicious American censors.

Twenty-one poems written "inside the wire" in Arabic, Pashto and English have been gathered together despite formidable obstacles by Marc Falkoff, a law professor at Northern Illinois University who represents 17 of the detainees at the camp. The collection, entitled Poems from Guantánamo: The Detainees Speak, will be published in August by the University of Iowa Press with an afterword written by Ariel Dorfman.

It all began when he turned up at the secure facility in Washington DC where all communications from detainees are sent, and found a poem waiting for him.

"The first poem I saw was sent to me by Abdulsalam al Hela," he says. "It's a moving cry about the injustice of arbitrary detention and at the same time a hymn to the comforts of religious faith."

"It was interesting to me because I did a PhD in literature, but I didn't think too much about it."

A second poem from another client followed soon after, and Falkoff began to wonder if other lawyers also had clients who were sending poetry. It turned out that Guantánamo Bay is "filled with itinerant poets".

Many of the poems deal with the pain and humiliation inflicted on the detainees by the US military. Others express disbelief and a sense of betrayal that Americans - described in one poem as "protectors of peace" - could deny detainees any kind of justice. Some engage with wider themes of nostalgia, hope and faith in God.

But most of the poems, including the lament by Al Hela which first sparked Falkoff's interest, are unlikely to ever see the light of day. Not content with imprisoning the authors, the Pentagon has refused to declassify many of their words, arguing that poetry "presents a special risk" to national security because of its "content and format". In a memo sent on September 18 2006, the team assigned to deal with communications between lawyers and their clients explains that they do not "maintain the requisite subject matter expertise" and says that poems "should continue to be considered presumptively classified".

The defence department spokesman Jeffrey Gordon is unsurprised that access to detainees poetry is tightly controlled. "It depends on what's being written," he says. "There's a whole range of things that are inappropriate." Of course poetry that deals with subjects such as guard routines, interrogation techniques or terrorist operations could pose a security threat, but Gordon is unable to explain why Al Hela's poem is still classified, saying "I haven't read any of these [poems]".

As with prisoners within the American justice system, he argues, there are constraints on their first amendment rights. "I don't think these guys are writing poetry like Morrissey," he continues.

"The fear appears to be that detainees will try to smuggle coded messages out of the camp," explains Falkoff, a fear that has often allowed clearance for English translations only - Arabic or Pashto originals being judged to represent an "enhanced security risk". In many cases even Falkoff has only seen the translations prepared for the volunteer lawyers by the few translators with the requisite security clearance.

Because of security restrictions, Falkoff cannot give any further details about Al Hela's poem, or about other poems sent to him by his clients that have not been cleared for publication by the department of defence. He is not allowed to see about 20 poems sent to other lawyers that have not been cleared for publication.

Many poems have also been lost, confiscated or destroyed. Falkoff is unable to even offer an estimate of how many poems have been written in the camp.

"To start with," he says, "there are probably 200 detainees who either don't have lawyers or have not been allowed to communicate with their lawyers. Even for those clients who have lawyers, I really don't know how many poems they've written or whether they've been confiscated. Communicating back and forth with our clients is a very, very difficult process."

Only one of the authors in the forthcoming collection wrote poetry before his incarceration. The religious scholar Abdul Rahim Muslim Dost wrote 25,000 lines of poetry during his time in the camp, only a handful of which have been returned to him. A poem he wrote on a Styrofoam cup and reconstructed from memory after his release appears in Poems from Guantánamo. The other detainees were not poets before their incarceration, but have turned to poetry under the particular pressures of their situation.

Moazzam Begg, who spent three years in Guantánamo Bay before being released without charge in January 2005, began writing poetry as a way of explaining what he was going through. He knew that everything he wrote would be censored, so used poetry to try to describe his situation to his family.

"The idea was to say it without saying it," he says, "and to explain to my interrogators that it was a farce."

The formal constraints of poetry gives the writer control over their material, he says, "the ability to say the words without going into a rant".

Poetry was also a way of engaging with the system.

"I knew that everything I wrote would be censored," he continues, "and that the person censoring it would have to read the poem." By writing in English, a language rarely used by detainees in the camp, he was able to communicate directly with guards, and perhaps those higher up in the US military.

It was also a way of "showing anger" and "channelling frustration".

According to Falkoff, detainees are writing poetry because "they're trying to keep hold of their sanity and humanity".

"They have really, really nothing to do there," he says. "They get, now, an hour of exercise every other day or so. They don't have access to books, apart from a Qu'ran - which they get whether they want it or not - and a little book cart with some Agatha Christie novels and some Harry Potter. They're not allowed to interact with the other prisoners. There are no communal areas. The recreation area is like a chimney with 30ft high walls."

"They're writing poetry because they need some kind of mental stimulation, some way of expressing their feelings, some outlet for their creativity."

According to the poet Jack Mapanje, who was imprisoned in Malawi because of his writing and now teaches a course on the poetry of incarceration at Newcastle University, prisoners often turn to writing poetry as a way of "defending themselves".

"People are writing as a search for the dignity that has been taken away from them," he says. "It's the only way they can attempt to restore it, but nobody is listening to them." He was imprisoned himself with many people who were illiterate, he says, but many of them were writing poetry, or > singing songs about their captivity - "it's the same impulse that drives people to prayer."

>
> "Poetry talks to the heart," he continues, "there is something immediately passionate about it." For Mapanje, poetry is a more "natural" means of expression than prose, a means of communication that "anybody who hasn't got any craft will come to".
>
> The poet Tim Liardet, whose Forward prize-shortlisted collection Blood Choir deals with the time he spent teaching poetry at a young offenders' prison, agrees there's an "instinctual" urge to reach for poetry in extreme circumstances.
>
> "They're feeling things they've never felt before, or never with so much intensity," he says. "They've never had to try to match such an intense experience with language before."
>
> Many of the offenders he worked with resisted his efforts to get them to write poetry, he continues, but "the ones who ended up writing it were the ones who found it themselves. They weren't following an example from me."
>
> Falkoff is hoping the collection of poems from Guantánamo Bay will put a human face on people branded by the former American defence secretary Donald Rumsfeld as "among the most dangerous, best-trained, vicious killers on the face of the Earth".
>
> The quality of the poems in the collection is "variable", says Falkoff, but "there's some really good stuff there". He stresses that because of security restrictions he has often been unable to see anything more than translations prepared without "poetry in mind". Nevertheless some of the poems transcend their extraordinary circumstances, he says, and "just knock me over".
>
> With the courts moving slowly towards fair and open hearings, he continues, "the detainees' own words may become part of the dialogue. Perhaps their poems will prick the conscience of a nation."
>
> Copyright Guardian News and Media Limited

_____ With tax season right around the corner, make sure to follow these few simple tips. http://articles.moneycentral.msn.com/Taxes/PreparationTips/PreparationTips.aspx?icid=HMFebtagline

↑ Index

784. lcabri

Fred Wah leads second poetry discussion in new series

Tue 27 Feb 2007

---

i want the world absolute & present
all its elements
?bpNichol quotation chosen by Fred Wah for his discussion event

Vancouver poet and critic FRED WAH will lead a unique informal poetry discussion?open to all?at Pause Cafe (74 Chatham W, Windsor, Ontario) on Tuesday 13 March at 7:30PM, no cover.

To peek at where discussion might go, feel free to range through quotations and poems the poet has already selected for his event and that are available via UWindsor's English Department News & Events, http://web4.uwindsor.ca/english.

Poetry prismatically refracts social, political, scientific, aesthetic languages, transforming them into something exciting and strange. How does poetic form do that when it's not really prismatic? Wah?s event is part of a new poetry discussion series exploring questions like this one about the language of poetry. The series aims to offer an experience of the shapes and sounds of contemporary poetry by inviting leading and emerging innovative practitioners of the art to the Windsor community minutes from downtown Detroit.

Wah will also give a poetry reading in Katzman Lounge, Vanier Hall, University of Windsor, on Monday 12 March at 4:30PM. All welcome. Refreshments provided.

Fred Wah was born of Chinese- and Scandinavian-origin parents in Swift Current, and in 1961, co-founded the important poetry newsletter, TISH. He was one of the founders of the formative writing group, the Kootenay School of Writing. Wah has published 17 books of poetry?including the Governor-General Award-winning Waiting for Saskatchewan (Turnstone, 1985) and his novel, Diamond Grill (NeWest, 1996), which NeWest Publishers has just re-issued in a 10th-anniversary edition.

FRED WAH?s first-time Windsor visit:

(1) Public Reading
4:30PM Mon 12 Mar
Katzman Lounge, Vanier Hall, University of Windsor
All welcome, no cover, refreshments provided

(2) Poetry Discussion
7:30PM Tue 13 Mar

Pause Cafe (74 Chatham W)
All welcome, no cover
For a sampling of texts selected by Wah, click on News & Events at http://web4.uwindsor.ca/english.

Wah?s events in Windsor are sponsored by The Canada Council, Rampike magazine, Pause Cafe, and the University of Windsor?s Department of English Language, Literature & Creative Writing.

↑ Index

785. Dr. Barry S. Alpert
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Tue 27 Feb 2007

No one has mentioned the school he attended, Black Mountain College.

Barry Alpert

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

786. aaron tieger
CARVE 8 now available
Tue 27 Feb 2007

Finally, I am pleased to announce the for-real publication of CARVE 8. Featuring poems by Erica Kaufman (Brooklyn, NY), Lars Palm (Lund, Sweden), Ryan Murphy (New York, NY), Amy Whitney (Ithaca, NY), Arielle Guy (Brooklyn, NY), and Joseph Massey (Arcata, CA), this issue is sure to please!

CARVE 8 can be purchaed via paypal at either aarontieger.blogspot.com or carvepoems.org. Or, if you prefer, you can send a check (made payable to AARON TIEGER) or cleverly concealed cash to 1964 Slaterville Rd., Ithaca NY 14850.

Please order your copy today. Support small presses and the poets who publish in them!

Thank you.

Aaron Tieger
Editor, CARVE

aarontieger.blogspot.com carvepoems.org
soonproductions.org

"Make a sudden, destructive unpredictable action; incorporate." (Brian Eno)

Have a burning question?
Go to www.Answers.yahoo.com and get answers from real people who know.

↑ Index

787. clifford laundrypoettry
Wed 28 Feb 2007

Well laundrymats and "washing" hands etc. are interesting tropes, right? like dig them two washerwomen in finnegans wake yapping away on tHe metaphorical banks of the liffey. a couple years back i and 3 friends did a recording of select passageS of Fwake the laundryladies gossipaceously chattering and we did a few quick loops and popped a tape in the soUnd system at the local "buanderie" and lo, it was hardly noticed. but then again who hears or reads finnegans walke? it was fun. i figure no matter how ya cut the finnegans wake had to be written so irish ears can hear it. no matter how innovative or not the building they inhabit. or how forlorn. So it goes, eh? as old man Kurt Vonnegut , has it.

↑ Index

788. CA Conrad
FRANK SHERLOCK EMERGENCY FUND benefit show 3/18 in Philadelphia = = = = = = =
Wed 28 Feb 2007

FRANK SHERLOCK EMERGENCY FUND benefit show 3/18 in Philadelphia = = = = = = =

(for full schedule, including links, go to:
http://PhillySound.blogspot.com<http://phillysound.blogspot.com/>
)

March 18th,2007
at FERGIE'S PUB (1214 Sansom St)
4pm to 7pm on the 2nd floor

$20 suggested donation
(BUT PLEASE GIVE WHAT YOU CAN!)

HOSTED BY Jenn McCreary BANDS, POETS & FILMMAKERS INCLUDE: Goodbye Better, Don Riggs, Christina Strong, Jessica White, Chris McCreary, I Feel Tractory, Dorthea Lasky, Ish Klein, CAConrad

↑ Index

789. Bob Marcacci
THE COUNTDOWN Episode 20 Featuring ARLENE ANG
Wed 28 Feb 2007

Link over to <http://www.miporadio.net/BOB_MARCACCI/>, choose the show you want by clicking on the headphones icon in the menu, and just listen. It's that easy!

THE COUNTDOWN Episode 20 highlights the poetry of Arlene Ang, and also stars these poets and bloggers: Ann Bogle, Rachel Dacus, Crag Hill, Christine Klocek-Lim, Rick Mullin, Shelia E. Murphy, Maurice Oliver, Pearl Pirie, William Rike & Jordan Stempleman.

Always looking for a good blog to slog through. Comments and conversay appreciated, front or backchannel. Thanks for tuning in to MiPoRadio where poetry tunes in, and special thanks to all the fine poets who recorded work for this one!

--
Bob Marcacci
<http://marcacci.blogspot.com/>

If the brain were so simple we could understand it, we would be so simple we couldn't.
 -Lyall Watson

↑ Index

790. Shad Marsh
Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
Wed 28 Feb 2007

I don't think I would attach any one "school" to him,
He is in many ways singular, butif you need one, he can be counted among the "American Surrealists" or "school of the absurd prose poem" or...

Now that's room service! Choose from over 150,000 hotels

in 45,000 destinations on Yahoo! Travel to find your fit.
http://farechase.yahoo.com/promo-generic-14795097

↑ Index

791. Thomas savage

Re: Amy Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Wed 28 Feb 2007

I, too, have noticed that many of the discussions/posts have either nothing to do with poetry/poetics or are only peripherally concerned with poetics issues. I usually can tell which these posts are from the subject line and mostly don't read them. Are there other subscribers to the list who do the same? Regards, Tom Savage

Tony Hooper <[redacted]> wrote: Alexander -

If the list is an open mic if it's populated with poetry, then it's just a bulletin without it. I see more self promotions, general announcements, and death notices than I do thoughtful "poetics" discussions.

I think actual poetry is more interesting than discussions of poetry. I have low expectations regarding this list so I'm not disappointed with it's current state.

Tony

On 2/26/07, Alexander Jorgensen wrote:
>
> Amy's kinda right about this, I think. I mean, with > all the info we have access to online, why pollute
> this list with more than it can digest. This is a > space cafe - not a poetry reading with loads of open > mic. If anything, we should learn better at better > bickering! We should attack the establishment -- or,
> join aol.
>
> agj
>
> --- amy king wrote:
>
> > Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do
> > not accept postings of creative work not directed > > toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list.
> > The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of > > free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."
> >

> > And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for > > a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange > > of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend > > those directions in poetry that are committed to > > innovations, renovations, and investigations of form
> > and/or/as content, to the questioning of received > > forms and styles, and to the creation of the > > otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, > > improbable, and impossible."
> >
> >
> > Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken > > lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring > > words? etc) that address poetics issues be > > encouraged?
> >
> > Incidentally, the daily message max for the list
> > is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts
> > per person.
> >
> >
> >
> > Thomas savage wrote:
> > Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it,
> > we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just
> > discussions and announcements relevant to poetry.
> > There is another excellent site called Wryting-L
> > where poets from this list and, I suspect, from > > other sources post poems. It is set up specifically > > with that intent. If you're interested in doing > > that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the > > relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage
> >
> >
> > ---
> > Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> > Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.
> >
>
>
> ---
>

>
>
>
>

_____
___
> Want to start your own business?
> Learn how on Yahoo! Small Business.
> http://smallbusiness.yahoo.com/r-index
>

Now that's room service! Choose from over 150,000 hotels in 45,000 destinations on Yahoo! Travel to find your fit.

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

March 2007

576 messages · Wed 28 Feb 2007 – Sat 31 Mar 2007

March 2007 buried the philosopher of the unreal and then, without quite meaning to, spent the rest of the month refuting him. Jean Baudrillard, who had argued that the real had vanished into image and that we live among copies with no original, died on the sixth. Five hundred and seventy-seven messages moved through the list, and around his death the archive arranged a quiet body of evidence to the contrary — a poet genuinely recognized, a language genuinely dying — the stubbornly real events his theory said were no longer possible.

The recognition came in the paper of record. A rare Sunday Times review of Rae Armantrout gave a Language poet the mainstream page, and the room turned it over warily. Ruth Lepson noted that the reviewer had avoided situating Armantrout in Language poetry at all, she suspected "for fear of losing readers"; Murat Nemet-Nejat defended the notice, quoting its admiration for lines "as densely patterned as silicon chips". It was a real arrival — a difficult poet actually seen on the page that decides, for most readers, who exists — and yet an arrival with her difficult context politely simulated away, the Language poet admitted only once her Language poetry had been left at the door. Recognition, the room noted, came at the price of a small unreality.

Then the theorists themselves went on dying. In an elegy titled for Baudrillard, Alan Sondheim rolled the whole French generation into one long memento mori — Barthes hit by a van, and after him Derrida, Foucault, Deleuze, Lyotard, and now Baudrillard — confessing, "I raised myself on all of them", and watching his teachers pass one by one into the single thing no theory has ever dissolved. The philosophers of the vanished real were vanishing, really, and in the oldest possible way.

And a real loss no simulation could cover was underway in China. A thread on a village struggling to save its dying language followed the slow disappearance of Manchu in Heilongjiang — a tongue going silent for good, its last speakers old. Against Baudrillard's thesis that everything now is only image and copy, a language dying is precisely not a copy: it is a final, unrecoverable subtraction from the world, the opposite of a simulacrum, a real absence where a real speech had been.

It was, in the end, the refutation of Baudrillard by Baudrillard. The man who declared the real had disappeared disappeared himself, into death, the one event no simulacrum has ever managed to cover; and the month gathered around him its plain contrary evidence — a poem actually read, a tongue actually lost. I have set March down exactly as the archive delivered it — the sanded-down review, the dying theorists, and the dying language — because it was the month the philosopher of the unreal died in the most real way there is, and the world answered his life's argument the way it always answers it in the end: with a grave, a silence, and a poet, for once, actually seen.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 576 in all.

WRITERS

De 1913, Sandra 4
Agj 371, 406, 407, 432, 540, 541, 576
Alexander, Charles 8, 332, 374
Allegrezza, William 250
Alpert, Dr. Barry S. 18, 200, 471
Amato, Joe 330, 333, 351
AND, mIEKAL 25, 78, 121, 258, 427
Andrews 447
Andrews, Betsy 397, 519, 520
Andrews, Jim 84, 158, 256, 266, 354, 362, 386, 454
Annual, Fulcrum 154, 193
Arnold, Heidi 389
Baldwin, Charles 286, 496
Bales, Marcus 99, 108, 113, 159, 244, 265, 273, 278, 308, 538, 556
Ballardini, Anny 512
Banes, Clay 12
Baratier, David 101, 102, 161, 168, 297, 338, 358, 521, 561
Barber, Stephanie 255
Bartlett, reJennifer 209, 274, 295
Beckett, Tom 344, 353, 416
Behm-Steinberg, Hugh 537
Bellamy, Dodie 248
Benham, Melissa 491
Bernstein, Charles 98, 226, 314, 467, 505, 567
Bettridge, Joel 190
Blau, Frances 383
Bloch, Julia 524
Bogle, Ann 164, 249, 310, 347, 446, 483
Books, Crane's Bill 15, 550
Borsics, Angelin 107
Bowering, George 126, 127, 269, 291
Brady, Taylor 118, 174
Bryant, Tisa 186, 424
Byrd, Brigitte 152
Byrne, Mairead 212, 361
Calvigioni, Ugo 551
Carbo, Nick 433
Casamassima, Christophe 415, 429, 444, 484, 486, 564
Child, Abigail 490
Chirot, David-Baptiste 34, 70, 148, 205, 216, 240, 254, 293, 300, 302, 346, 419, 431, 503, 506, 531, 532
Christopher.winks 22
Ciccariello, Peter 59, 369, 558
Clements, Brian 46
Coffey, Dan 175, 311, 434
Conrad, CA 103, 227, 228, 262, 264, 482, 575
Coon, Anne 219
Cooperman, Matthew 81
Cory, Cynie 77, 167
Crockett, Jesse 21, 83, 179, 246, 309
Del Ray Cross 57
Cross, Michael 355
Curnow, Wystan 404, 473
Dalachinsky, Steve D. 181, 573
Daly, Catherine 156, 169, 170, 263, 339, 378, 535, 549, 568
Damon, Maria 56, 229, 298, 377, 452
Davidbchirot 456
Davidson, Ian 17
DeDeo, Simon 183
Devaney, Thomas 252
Dickey, Eric 553
Dickow, Alexander 92, 137, 162, 545
Donovan, Thom 421
DuCharme, Mark 187
Durgin, Patrick F. 336, 422, 430
Edgerton, Michael Tod 142
EH 66
Elen 109
Elshtain, Eric 184, 192
Emerson, Lori 171, 172, 177, 237
Esposito, Will 122
Evans, Steve 508
Fernandes, David 116
Fieled, Adam 19, 180, 260
Fox, Skip 418
Frazer, Vernon 120, 151, 245, 566
Freind, William Joseph 375
Fuhrman, Joanna 341
Fuller, Montgomery 189, 220, 394
Gagne, Tracey 277
Ganick, P 403, 449
Gatza, Geoffrey 88, 210, 494, 517
Gens, Jacqueline 48
Gershman, David 85
Gfrym 73, 288
Giovanis, Photios 150
Glass, Jesse 32, 82, 453
Godston, Daniel 5
Gordon, Nada 437
Gordon, Noah Eli 271, 464, 507, 527
Graham, Lea 123
Guevarra, L 204, 206
Halle, Steve 14, 257
Heman, Bob 65, 477, 569
Henriksen, Matt 63, 76, 232

Holsapple1 279
HOWARD, SCOTT 509
Howe, Brian 285
Hunter, Carrie 493
Javier, Paolo 504
JFK 557
Johnson, Halvard 23, 97, 100, 130, 289, 321, 390
Jonathan Minton, Word For/Word 55
Jorgensen, Alexander 9, 30, 53, 54, 201, 230, 231, 320, 326
Joris, Pierre 47, 363
Journal, Tarpaulin Sky Press & 301, 348
Kane, Daniel 235
Karavatos, Nicholas 465
Karmin, Jennifer 305, 392, 448
Kasimor, Mary 470
Kelder, Cralan 155, 234
Kelleher, Michael 69, 71, 143, 238, 368, 480, 523
King, Amy 87, 90, 91, 95, 111, 112, 114, 136, 138, 284, 331, 408, 409, 479, 547
Kirschenbaum, David A. 16, 104, 199, 213, 242, 514, 560
Kom9os 388
Konkol, Margaret 281
Kotin, Joshua 528
Kress, Leonard 500
Kyle, Schlesinger 74
LaCook, Lewis 58, 144, 376
Ladkin, Sam 544
Lawlor, Andrea 198
Lcabri 203, 217, 350
Lds 202
Lepson, Ruth 140, 195, 215, 317, 319, 323, 335, 384, 410
Levy, Herb 325
Lewis, Tom W. 6, 7, 61, 529, 533, 536, 546, 552, 555
List, Poetics 516
Lloyd, Warren 43
LoLordo, Nick 399
LoLordo, V Nicholas 337
Lomax, Dana Teen 62
Machlin, Daniel 385, 428, 510
Marcacci, Bob 474
Marsh, Shad 44
Maurer, Susan 106, 196, 197, 365, 366
Maxpaul 334
McClain, Laura 280
McLennan, Rob 145, 208, 304
Meadows, Deborah A. 318
Metres, Philip 475
Milletti, Christina 513
Morey, Adam 502
Mulcahy, Colm 367
Mullin, Sean 243
Munday, Evan 396, 489
Murphy, Sheila 414
Nathanson, Tenney 518
Nelson, Paul 36
Nemet-Nejat, Murat 39, 124, 128, 207, 223, 224, 276, 322, 359, 372, 373, 413, 442, 450, 455, 478
Nielsen, Aldon 115, 146, 176
NIELSEN, ALDON L 451
Norton, Linda 283, 287, 387, 400
Novack, Carol 270
Orange, Tom 379
Ossip, Kathleen 499
Owens, Richard 328
Perlman, Robert 571
Peterson, Tim 436
Phanero 149, 253, 261, 313, 382, 412
Piombino, Nick 327, 329, 343, 370, 443, 497, 565, 570
Poe, Deborah 68, 96
Pollet, Sylvester 105
Prejsnar, Mark 360
Press, Hot Whiskey 225, 306, 312
Press, Katalanche 178
Pritts, Nate 342
Project, Poetry 24, 185, 296, 435, 534
Quarles, Lanny Ray 307
Queyras, Sina 463
RHODES, SHANE 495
Ricejunk2 49, 50, 51, 52
Rossiter, Charlie 13
Rothenberg, Jerome 233
Rothenberg, Michael 460
Rowan, Lou 29, 391
Rumble, Ken 267, 272, 525
Russo, Linda V. 398, 411, 466
Rzep 345
Sama, Metta 119, 526
Savage, Thomas 129, 275, 481
Sawbuck 572
Schwabsky, Barry 35, 315, 349, 352, 380, 426
Seldess, Jesse 563
Siegel, Nathaniel 299
Silliman, Ron 72
Singler, Fluffy 31
Slaughter, William 457
Smith, Dale 559
Smith, Rod 395
Snelson, Danny 340
Sondheim, Alan 33, 45, 64, 75, 191, 222, 239, 247, 268, 294, 357, 402, 439, 469, 485, 498, 543
Soubbotnik, Michael Alain 393, 417
Steensen,Sasha 438
Stroffolino, Chris 94, 135, 487, 554
Swords, Desmond 60, 160

Thurston, Kevin 89, 93, 110, 133, 445, 522
Tlrelf 290
Tobin, Adam 2
Tranter, John 218
Treadwell, Elizabeth 79, 80, 241, 356, 459, 462
Trent, L 440
Truscott, Mark 211
UbuWeb 3, 425
Vajda, E.g. 574
Vasquez-giroux, Angela 562
Vassilakis, Nico 1, 11, 401, 501
Vidaver, Aaron 41, 182, 316
Vincent, Stephen 10, 86, 131, 134, 141, 214, 259, 282, 458, 468, 488, 530, 539
Waber, Dan 20, 67, 165, 194, 236, 251, 292, 303, 364, 441, 476, 548
Warsh, Lewis 173, 492
Weishaus, Joel 26, 42, 188, 423
Weiss, Mark 117, 132, 147, 324, 381, 515
Welford, Gabrielle 40, 163, 405, 420, 542
Westbrook, Dillon 27, 28, 139
Wilcox, Dan 37, 221
Williams, Tyrone 153, 166
Wilson, Ian Randall 511
Winks, Christopher Leland 38, 125
Yandrich, Aaren 157
Zawacki, Andrew 472
}, { Brad Brace 461

NAMES MENTIONED

Abbott, Keith 55, 270, 528, 530
Abdul, Selim 216
Abendroth, Emily 534
Acker, Kathy 24, 363, 370, 372
Adams, John 34, 158, 234, 436, 438
Adams, Joshua 528, 530
Adorno, Theodor 217, 281
Ali, Kazim 494
Alice, Mary 204, 218, 436, 438
Allan, Don 436, 438
Allan, Edgar 524
Allison, Dorothy 436, 438
Alpert, Barry S. 2, 12, 18, 34, 200, 471
Americans, Asian 164, 216, 263, 271, 300
Anderson, Beth 3
Anderson, Erik 3, 293, 392, 438
Andre, Michael 84, 240, 438, 477
Andrews, Bruce 270, 395, 447, 502, 505
Antin, David 34, 370, 372, 422
Arbor, Ann 336, 340
Armand, Louis 340
Armantrout, Rae 218, 314, 315, 319, 322, 324, 325, 330, 334, 335, 337, 339, 344, 346, 347, 349, 351, 352, 359, 362, 365, 374, 375, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 384, 386, 387, 390, 391, 395, 398, 399, 400, 404, 411, 419, 467
Ashbery, John 3, 218, 271, 395, 436, 438, 464
Ashley, Robert 3, 55
Askenase, Alicia 228, 436, 438
Atkins, Tim 426, 438
Atlanta, Mark P. 88, 91, 96, 210, 212, 360, 361, 367
Audia, Justin 534
Austin, Geer 281, 436, 438, 559
Bacon, Francis 306, 307, 311
Baker, Andrea 232
Baker, Lori 41, 76, 211, 234, 238, 270, 523
Ball, Jonathan 208
Banias, Ari 534
Baraka, Amiri 34, 56, 70, 92, 94, 137, 139, 140, 166, 460, 534
Barnard, Mary 534
Barnes, Diane 69, 169
Barthes, Roland 3, 247, 253, 317
Bartlett, Lee 209, 215, 274, 288, 295, 436, 438
Barton, John 149
Barwin, Gary 57
Basinski, Mike 480, 523
Bataille, George 173
Bates, Joe 16, 213, 242, 243
Battin, Wendy 321, 373
Baudrillard, Jean 98, 247, 249, 253, 259, 261, 268, 317
Baus, Eric 507
Becker, Robin 103
Bedient, Calvin 528, 530
Behrle, Jim 57, 232, 436, 438
Belz, Aaron 5, 494
Benjamin, Walter 193, 281, 505, 507
Benka, Jen 185
Bennett, Bill 168, 270, 426, 438
Bennett, John M. 55, 161, 181, 449
Berger, Jon 23, 213, 242, 243, 560
Bergvall, Caroline 3, 425, 528, 530
Berkeley, Michael 74, 355, 356, 397, 426, 438, 513, 520, 534
Berkson, Bill 74, 395
Berlin, Irving 296, 426, 435, 438, 534
Berman, Tosh 226
Bernard, Kenneth 29, 394, 544
Bernstein, Emma 36, 43, 378, 380, 381, 436, 438, 516
Berrigan, Anselm 76, 81, 180, 185, 195, 204, 241, 395, 422, 460, 534, 560
Berrigan, Edmund 185, 204, 232, 264, 296, 395
Berrigan, Ted 76, 204, 270, 395
Berry, Jake 78, 130, 152, 167
Berryman, John 81, 342
Bertram, Erin M. 342
Bervin, Jen 63, 232
Betts, Gregory 57

Bianchi, Ray 494
Bidart, Frank 190
Biddinger, Mary 14
Bishop, Elizabeth 399, 400, 404, 411
Blackburn, Paul 34, 515
Blake, William 505
Blanchot, Maurice 247, 253, 317
Blaser, Robin 29
Blau, Rachel 228, 395
Blumenreich, Julia 228
Boat, Drunken 305
Bok, Christian 161
Bonney, Sean 11, 528, 530
Borzutzky, Daniel 293, 438, 494
Botta, Tim 57
Bowen, David 271
Bowering, George H. 291
Boyer, Anne 232, 248, 356, 395, 436, 438
BpNichol 256, 258, 266, 396, 489
Bradley, John 494
Brainard, Joe 204, 218
Bramhall, Allen 436, 438
Brecht, Bertolt 296, 435, 438, 534
Brennan, Karen 347
Briante, Susan 76, 185
Brito, Manuel 233
Brockwell, Stephen 208
Brodsky, Adam 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Brodsky, Nicole 158
Bromige, David 29
Bronk, William 5
Brook, James 193
Brown, Brandon 435, 438, 491, 534
Brown, Pam 218
Browning, Robert 436, 438
Bruns, Gerald L. 395
Buchanan, Pat 263
Budde, Rob 304
Bukowski, Charles 127, 205, 207, 214, 224, 419
Bunting, Basil 76
Burke, Andrew 23
Burke, Clifford 234
Burke, Edmund 281
Burke, Kenneth 122, 136, 148
Burroughs, William S. 248, 419
Burt, Stephen 362, 365
Butler, William 193
Butor, Michel 544
Byrd, Don 502
Byrne, Edward 436, 438
Byron, Philip 505
Byrum, John 425
Cafe, Poets 213
Cage, John 3, 252, 368, 370, 372
Caldiero, Alex 270, 477
Cameron, Sharon 149, 185, 464, 494
Campbell, Jeremy 436, 438
Capanna, Armand 248
Capen, Samuel P. 368, 480
Carb, Nick 438
Carlos, William 216, 233, 338, 515
Carr, Julie 356
Carr, Michael 178, 523
Carragon, Patricia 477
Carroll, John 475
Carroll, Paul 34
Carson, Margaret 60, 234
Carter, Angela 45, 64
Carter, Laura 232
Casey, Sean 34, 213, 242, 243, 560
Castro, Michael 238, 491
Cendrars, Blaise 76
Chandler, Raymond 100
Chang, Iris 543
Chapin, Thomas 151
Chapman, Cecelia 368
Chaucer, Geoffrey 3
Cheek, Chris 395
Chernoff, Maxine 334
Civin, Marcus 383
Cixous, Hélène 247, 253, 317
Claire, Barbara 270, 308, 438
Clark, Emilie 155, 193, 216, 234, 263, 436, 438
Clark, Jeff 248, 507
Clark, Thomas A. 234, 528, 530
Clark, Tom 218
Clarke, Robin 158
Clement, Catherine 218
Clemente, Francesco 240
Clover, Joshua 436, 438
Cohen, Julia 63, 232
Cole, Barbara 395
Cole, David 270
Cole, Peter 426, 438, 450, 465, 478
Cole, Sean 560
Coletti, John 63, 185, 232, 296, 524, 560
Collins, Billy 399, 400, 404, 411
Collins, Martha 69, 438, 513
Columbus, Christopher 41, 101, 102, 112, 115, 118, 119, 123, 161, 168, 297, 338, 358, 462, 521, 561
Comments, Poets 209, 215, 436, 438, 474
Compton, Shanna 23, 67, 227, 236, 436, 438
Conner, Bruce 436, 438
Conner, Kyle 262
Conners, Peter 523
Connor, Bruce 155
Conrad, Tony 84, 103, 227, 228, 262, 264, 355, 436, 438, 482, 484, 529, 537, 546, 575
Coolidge, Clark 415, 416, 417, 418
Cooper, Dennis 185, 248, 296, 436, 438, 474, 534

Cooper, Joseph 494, 523
Coover, Robert 513
Copp, Corina 507
Corbett, Bill 570
Corbett, William 283
Corey, Joshua 338, 436, 438
Corman, Roger 155, 234, 270
Cornell, Joseph 216
Corrie, Rachel 254, 302
Coste, Robin 198
Cotter, John 55
Couch, Clayton 232
County, Madison 51, 436, 438
Coval, Kevin 504
Covey, Bruce 95, 218, 232, 572
Coyote, Peter 41
Crane, Lee 436, 438
Crawford, Robert 57
Creeley, Robert 18, 34, 46, 48, 76, 211, 234, 238, 304, 395, 471
Critchley, Emily 528, 530
Croggon, Alison 436, 438
Crosby, Harry 218, 326, 328, 345
Crouse, John 449
Crowe, Russell 476
Crump, Walter 494
Curtis, Dana 11
Dailey, Joel 270, 477
Daley, Ryan 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280, 308, 494
Darger, Henry 125, 147, 197, 205, 207, 214, 224, 306, 307, 311
Darragh, Tina 436, 438
Darwish, Mahmoud 475
Davidson, Amanda 198
Davies, James 23
Davies, Kevin 392
Davis, Martin 84, 237, 241, 404, 436, 438
Dawson, Nancy 34, 57
Day, Roger 23
Degentesh, Katie 218, 241, 436, 438
Delany, Samuel R. 198
Deleuze, Gilles 216, 247, 253, 317, 496
Denner, Richard 29
Dennis, Carl 60, 65, 149, 256, 436, 438, 477, 492, 523
Derrida, Jacques 247, 253, 317
Desmond, Rae 60, 160
Dewdney, Christopher 304
Dickinson, Emily 419
Dickinson, Mark 5, 324, 347, 404, 419, 436, 438, 464
Didato, Thom 95
Dixon, Nancy 436, 438
Dojoji, Alan 75
Donnelly, Patrick 69
Donnelly, Timothy 508
Doppelt, Suzanne 395
Dorfman, Ariel 216
Dorn, Edward 218, 460, 534
Dorn, Jennifer 460, 534
Dorward, Jane 503
Downing, Brandon 185, 296
Downing, David 436, 438
Doxsee, Julie 572
Doyle, Erica 424
Drucker, Johanna 505
Dubuffet, Jean 99, 105, 108, 110, 111, 113, 117, 120, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133
Duhamel, Denise 4, 433, 438
Duncan, Andrew 528, 530
Duncan, Robert 293, 306, 307, 311, 435, 436, 438, 505
Durand, Marcella 16, 185, 218, 296
Durgin, Patrick F. 336, 340, 422, 430, 438
Dutton, Paul 34, 301, 348
Dylan, Michael 438
Eckes, Ryan 228
Economou, George 29
Edgar, Chris 575
Edson, Russell 2, 5, 12, 18, 34, 44, 46, 48
Eigner, Larry 34
Elena, Maria 348, 511
Eliot, Joe 392
Eliot, T. S. 76
Elisa, Paula 342
Ellen, Mary 109
Elliot, Joe 293, 438
Elliott, George 11
Ellis, Stephen 149
Elrick, Laura 213, 242, 243, 560
Eluard, Paul 29
Emerson, Claudia 76, 346, 384, 387, 391, 419
England, Amy 128, 129, 132, 133, 160, 235, 240, 281, 318, 368, 435, 436, 438, 479, 547
Epstein, Thomas 395
Eshleman, Clayton 306, 307, 311, 312, 313
Etter, Carrie 426, 438
Eugene, Brett 232, 395
Evenson, Brian 198, 368
Everson, William 63, 232, 395
Falck, Noah 55
Falkoff, Marc 216
Farr, Roger 41, 56, 182, 213, 242, 243, 316, 560
Felix, Joel 438
Fenton, Jayne 557
Ferguson, Jesse 208
Ffytche, Matt 528, 530
Fielding, Kent 34
Finch, Annie 296, 355
Finch, Peter 528, 530
Fink, Thomas 57, 364, 476
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 234

Fisher, Allen 426, 438
Fisher, Ann 490
Fitterman, Robert 11, 395, 425
Flis, Brad 507
Ford, Mark 426, 438
Ford, Michael 213, 242, 243, 560
Forrest, Lisa 494, 523
Foster, Paul 185, 262, 534
Foucault, Michel 98, 247, 253, 317
Foust, Graham 218, 395, 438
Fraley, Jason 55
France, Peter 3, 76, 79, 160, 205, 207, 211, 214, 224, 238, 240, 433, 438, 544
Franco, James 234, 436, 438, 544
Franke, Chris 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Franks, David 471
Fraser, Simon 256, 350
Frazer, Tony 318
Fredman, Stephen 218
Freeman, Jesse 395
Freeman, Micah 295
Fritton, Chris 89, 93
Frumkin, Gene 274, 279, 288, 295
Frym, Gloria 29, 288
Fucaloro, Thomas 65, 270, 477
Fuchs, Greg 524, 560
Fugate, Ethan 560
Fuhr, Laurie 208
Fulton, Alice 186
Gadd, Maxine 41, 182, 316
Gallagher, Kevin 436, 438
Gallagher, Kristen 228
Gander, Forrest 218, 528, 530
Gardner, Drew 241
Gardner, Janet 241, 264, 436, 438
Garrison, Deborah 511
Garthe, Karen 63, 232
Gates, Bill 527
Gelsinger, Eric 246
Gerstler, Amy 218
Giannini, David 477
Gilbert, Susan 29, 218
Ginsberg, Allen 293
Gioia, Dana 166
Giscombe, Cecil 310
Gizzi, Michael 347, 436, 438
Gizzi, Peter 29, 395
Gluck, Bob 491
Glück, Robert 301, 348
Goar, Jim 55
Godard, Barbara 320, 323, 326, 327, 328, 329, 332, 345, 371, 405, 406, 407, 413, 420, 432, 438, 540, 541, 542, 576
Van Gogh 128, 129, 132, 133, 147
Golaski, Adam 523
Goldberg, Michael 244
Goldsmith, Kenneth 425
Gomez, Audrey 233
Gonzalez, Ray 392
Goode, Chris 528, 530
Goodman, Craig 474
Goodyear, Dana 475
Gottlieb, Michael 218
Gould, Glenn 436, 438
Greene, Graham 76, 395
Greene, Jonathan 234
Greenstreet, Kate 63, 178, 213, 232, 242, 243, 436, 438, 560
Greenwald, Ted 74
Gregerson, Linda 520
Gregory, Dick 63, 193, 218
Gregory, Jane 63, 232
Grenier, Robert 370, 372
Griffin, Tim 76
Griffiths, Bill 29
Grinnell, Tracy 185
Grinwis, James 57
Group, Poets 360, 361, 367
Grubbs, David 174, 175, 177
Guattari, Félix 247, 253, 317, 496
Gudding, Gabriel 436, 438
Guest, Barbara 68, 190
Gunn, Paula 318, 462
Guston, Philip 74
Guthrie, Camille 147, 435, 438
Hall, Donald 336, 340
Hamilton, Robin 23, 383
Harper, Michael 464, 513
Harris, Kaplan 4, 56, 76, 115, 118, 119, 123, 149, 211, 238, 308, 436, 438
Harris, Sharon 396
Harryman, Carla 24, 378, 380, 381
Hart, Bob 65, 270, 477
Hartley, George 338
Harwood, Lee 528, 530
Haslam, Michael 17, 528, 530
Hastings, Katherine 29
Hatcher, Ian 392
Hawkey, Christian 76, 185
Hawley, Anthony 232, 318, 462
Hayden, Tom 234
Hayes, Jared 449
Heaney, Seamus 528, 530
Heide, Anne 246, 572
Heidegger, Martin 218
Hejinian, Lyn 76, 206, 211, 238, 270, 301, 387, 395, 419, 426, 438
Heller, Michael 34
Helmes, Scott 55, 270
Henderson, David 58
Henning, Barbara 173, 436, 438
Henri, Charles 76, 92, 94, 137, 139, 140, 148, 162, 166, 176, 306, 307, 311, 544, 545
Herman, Rachel 534

Hernandez, Victor 233, 394
Herron, Patrick 494
Higgins, Billy 23, 279, 559
Hill, Crag 57, 501
Hill, Geoffrey 60
Hilson, Jeff 17
Hinton, David 234
Hirschman, Jack 29
Hoagland, Tony 511
Hofer, Jen 57
Hoffman, Cara 465, 478, 569
Hoffman, Eric 66
Hollo, Anselm 34
Holman, Bob 270, 492
Holmes, Janet 63, 232
Holmes, Michael 308
Holsapple, Bruce 279
Hoover, Edgar 436, 438
Hoover, Paul 356
Hospodar, Yuri 57
House, Poets 185, 213
Hoy, Dan 63, 232
Hughes, Langston 293, 438
Hughes, Peter 17
Hugo, Richard 11
Iijima, Brenda 178, 185, 213, 232, 242, 243, 385, 428, 436, 438, 510, 560
Illich, Donald 474
Ireland, Lauren 60, 69, 160, 164, 240
Israel, David 163, 240, 254, 302
Israeli, Henry 163, 254, 263, 302, 454, 455, 475
Jackson, Jesse 80, 241, 320, 323, 327, 329, 331, 332, 333, 343, 358, 363, 370, 372, 408, 409, 422, 436, 438, 480, 513, 534
Jacobs, Ken 490
Jaffe, Sara 424, 435, 438, 534
Jameson, Fred 392
Jaramillo, Laura 534
Jarnot, Lisa 76, 211, 232, 238, 560
Jarvis, Simon 528, 530
Jeanne, Sarah 186
Johns, Jasper 281
Johnson, Kent 155, 218, 234, 494, 517, 528, 530
Jonas, Steve 232, 392
Jones, Brian 435, 438
Jones, Jill 353
Jordan, June 193, 198, 436, 438
Joron, Andrew 356
Joseph, Safdie 69, 158, 193, 232, 238, 281, 368, 480, 492, 503
Joyce, Trevor 173, 447
Kamilhor, Judy 65, 270, 477
Kaplan, Leslie 29, 55, 436, 438
Katz, Eliot 560
Kaufman, Erica 185, 218, 232, 262, 296, 436, 438, 534
Kavanagh, Patrick 60
Kearney, Larry 29, 395
Keats, John 281, 436, 438
Keene, John 4, 293, 395, 438, 479, 547
Kelly, Barbara 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 176
Kelly, Patrick 308, 507, 520, 524
Kelly, Robert 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 176, 451, 452
Kelsey, Karla 149, 395
Kempton, Karl 20
Kennedy, David 435, 438
Kennedy, Kit 477
Kerouac, Jack 237, 395
Kerry, John 524
Kiely, Aaron 560
Killebrew, Paul 271, 507
Killian, Kevin 4, 29, 57, 248, 262, 296, 383, 395, 436, 438
Kimball, George 460, 534
Kimball, Jack 57, 262, 356, 449
Kimball, Roger 356, 436, 438
Kirschenbaum, David A. 16, 104, 199, 213, 242, 243, 514, 560
Klein, Lucas 198, 227, 244, 368
Knott, Bill 5, 550
Kocik, Robert 16, 421, 466, 470
Koeneke, Rodney 436, 438, 494
Koller, James 234
Kolm, Ron 181
Koshkin, Michael 225, 306, 307, 311, 312, 313
Kostelanetz, Richard 181, 449
Kramer, Scott 270
Kristeva, Julia 247, 253, 317
Kryss, Tom 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Kuhar, Mark 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Kuhl, Nancy 190
Kuhn, Donna 63, 232
Kuszai, Joel 516
Kyger, Joanne 355
Lacan, Jacques 247, 253, 317
Lamoureux, Mark 63, 178, 213, 232, 242, 243, 436, 438, 560
Landis, Matthew 63, 154, 232, 395
Lang, Jim 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Larkin, Joan 521
Larkin, Peter 528, 530
Larsen, David 491
Latta, John 17
Laughlin, James 368
Lauterbach, Ann 436, 438
Lavender, Bill 467
Law, Sarah 528, 530
Lawton, David 477
Lazer, Hank 29, 467, 505
Leftwich, Jim 449

Lehman, David 218
Lehrer, Jim 427, 438, 442, 446, 450, 454, 455, 465, 478
Lehrman, Jean 65, 270, 477
Leuzzi, Tony 218
Levertov, Denise 34, 293, 438
Levine, Jeffrey 57, 141, 147, 250
Levine, Philip 166, 438
Levitsky, Rachel 185, 187
Lewin, Anya 408, 409
Lewis, Bernard 7, 58, 144, 198, 376
Lewis, Karen 71, 143, 238, 368, 480
Lewis, Tom W. 6, 7, 61, 529, 533, 536, 537, 538, 546, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 562, 564
Loden, Rachel 395
Loewinsohn, Ron 29
London, Frank 3, 54, 69, 163, 238, 270, 368, 426, 435, 438, 480, 544
Lopez, Tony 426, 436, 438
Lorber, Brendan 162, 166, 176, 185, 296
Loudon, Rebecca 232
Louise, Bobbie 234
Mac Low, Jackson 24, 327, 332, 336, 340, 370, 372, 430, 438
Lowe, Thomas 55
Lowenfels, Walter 34
Lundwall, Andrew 436, 438
Luoma, Bill 76, 211, 238
Luther, Martin 273, 278, 360, 361, 367
Lynn, Aldon 56, 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 176
Lynn, Heidi 528, 530
Lyons, Kim 497, 512
Mackey, Nathaniel 395
Madison, James 57, 397
Madrid, Anthony 233
Magee, Kevin 436, 438, 449
Magee, Michael 395
Magee, Mike 494
Magi, Jill 385, 428, 438, 510
Malcolm, Janet 178, 270, 436, 438, 490
Mallarmé, Stéphane 544
Mandel, Charlotte 436, 438
Mandel, Tom 395, 396
Mangold, Sarah 11
Manning, Nicholas 436, 438
Mansell, Chris 364, 476
Manson, Peter 528, 530
Marie, Anne 41, 55, 63, 394, 395
Marie, Jeanne 218
Marie, Joshua 55, 232, 464, 507
Marshall, Robert 69, 76, 341, 436, 438
Martin, Camille 29, 158, 300, 436, 438, 503, 528, 530
Martin, Chris 185, 218, 296
Martin, Douglas 103
Marvin, Lee 354
Mason, Janet 11, 262, 436, 438
Massey, Karen 232
Mathews, Harry 453
Mathys, Ted 185, 296
Matlin, David 29
Maxwell, Andrew 55, 63, 232, 436, 438
Maxwell, Susan 4
Mayer, Bernadette 173, 289, 395, 422
Mayer, Jane 395
Mayhew, Jonathan 436, 438
Maynard, Joe 181
Mazer, Ben 63, 76, 154, 185, 232
Meadows, Deborah A. 318
Meltzer, David 29, 381
Melville, Nicky 534
Mercuri, John 323, 332
Meredith, William 3, 308
Mesmer, Sharon 436, 438, 497, 512
Messerli, Douglas 29, 218
Metcalf, Paul 216
Meyer, Thomas 29
Middle, Max 208
Miki, Roy 350
Milks, Megan 534
Millar, Jay 523
Miller, Paul D. 198, 262, 293, 436, 438, 534
Milne, Drew 426, 438
Milton, John 3, 254, 302, 368, 425
Miriam, Erica 57, 198, 395
Mitchell, Joan 158, 306, 307, 311
Mittenthal, Robert 29
Mohammad, Kasey 232, 272, 276, 277, 395, 436, 438
Monk, Geraldine 528, 530
Moor, William 248, 356
Moore, Allison 246
Moore, Marianne 355
Morgan, Robin 232, 436, 438
Morice, Dave 270
Morrison, Bill 218, 395
Morrison, Rusty 528, 530
Moschovakis, Anna 76, 185
Mosconi, Joseph 57
Moudry, Nick 507
Mukherjee, Aryanil 52
Muldoon, Paul 60
Mulford, Wendy 17
Mullen, Harryette 395
Mulligan, Jennifer 208
Mulrooney, Christopher 477
Murphy, Ryan 178
Murphy, Sheila E. 55
Murray, Ian 222, 436, 438
Musil, Robert 346, 384, 387, 391, 419
Myers, Michael 178, 232, 436, 438
Myles, Eileen 198, 204, 270, 356, 395, 560
Nagler, Christian 198

Nakayasu, Sawako 63, 232, 436, 438, 507
Nelson, Paul E. 36
Nelson, Rodney 23
Nester, Daniel 436, 438, 494
Nguyen, Hoa 507
Nichols, Travis 270, 296, 395, 435, 436, 438, 534
Nicole, Anna 52
Niedecker, Lorine 34
Nielsen, Aldon L. 451, 452
Nielsen, Lynn 56, 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 176
Nolan, Pat 29, 84
Norman, Peter 208, 382
Norris, Chuck 436, 438
Notley, Alice 204, 218, 347, 395
Nowak, Mark 56
O'Hara, Frank 218
Oliver, John 23, 158, 178, 185, 424
Olsen, Lance 218, 426, 438
Olson, Charles 218
Olson, John 507
Olson, Kirby 29, 34, 235, 381
Oppen, George 34, 66
Oppenheimer, Joel 34
Ormerod, Jane 65, 270, 477
Orwell, George 386
Osman, Jena 262, 436, 438
Ostashevsky, Eugene 63, 76, 232
Ovid 453
Pacific, Asian 471
Padgett, Ron 204, 293, 395, 438
Padin, Clemente 240, 506
Paige, Abby 304
Palmer, Michael 56, 142, 395
Paloff, Benjamin 154, 508
Pardlo, Gregory 534
Parish, Jefferson 254, 302
Park, Chase 305
Parkway, Neal 337, 351, 399, 400, 404, 497, 512, 534
Patchen, Kenneth 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Patton, Julie 16
Peet, Christian 348
Pelton, Ted 270, 494, 523
Perchik, Simon 23
Perelman, Bob 228, 395, 404, 436, 438
Perez, Craig 213, 242, 243, 560
Perloff, Marjorie 245, 467
Perreault, John 370, 372
Perry, David 169
Peterson, Katie 436, 438, 507
Pettibon, Raymond 149
Peyrafitte, Nicole 233
Phillip, Andrew 422
Phillips, Adam 436, 438
Phillips, Beth 436, 438
Phillips, John 218, 234
Phillips, Lance 494
Phipps, Wanda 504, 560
Piette, Adam 528, 530
Pines, Paul 232
Pinsky, Robert 338
Pinto, Regina 158
Poe, Allan 524
Ponge, Francis 404
Porter, Anne 78, 238, 480, 523
Potter, Harry 216
Potter, Steve 262, 436, 438
Potts, Charles 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Pound, Ezra 471
Powell, Ren 70, 81, 436, 438, 520
Prevallet, Kristin 218, 507, 560
Prince, Richard 60
Professor, Kelly 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 176, 451, 452
Provost, Terry 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Prynne, J. H. 528, 530
Purcell, Greg 41, 182, 316
Purcell, Jack 145
Purdy, James 149
Pynchon, Thomas 395
Quasha, George 34
Quasha, Susan 34
Rasula, Jed 395
Ratcliffe, Stephen 79, 355
Raven, Francis 494
Raworth, Tom 395, 436, 438
Reed, Lou 104
Reese, Marshall 436, 438
Regan, Matthias 516
Reich, Steve 355
Retallack, Joan 368
Revell, Donald 88, 91, 96
Rey, Rodrigo 11
Reyes, Louis 56
Rhodes, Martha 435, 438
Rich, Adrienne 56, 306, 307, 311
Richards, Brian 34, 46, 48
Richet, Martin 24
Ridge, Cedar 497, 512
Riggs, Don 227
Riggs, Sarah 395
Riley, Denise 237
Riley, Peter 528, 530
Rilke, Rainer Maria 218
Rizzo, Christopher 47, 436, 438
Robbins, Michael 528, 530
Robertson, Lisa 395, 396
Robinson, Anthony 246
Robinson, Elizabeth 378, 380, 381, 395, 435, 438
Roche, John 219, 367

Rockwell, Norman 273, 278
Rodefer, Stephen 17, 79
Rogers, Jennifer 306, 307, 311
Ronk, Martha 185, 549
Rosenberg, David 218
Rosenthal, Chuck 511
Ross, Stuart 208
Rothenberg, Diane 233
Rothenberg, Jerry 381
Rowntree, Dirk 395
Roy, Camille 57
Rubin, Michael 392
Ruby, Michael 457, 494
Rudman, Mark 218
Rudolf, Anthony 426, 438
Rumsfeld, Donald 216
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 491, 534
Sailers, Cynthia 248
Sala, Jerome 218
Salerno, Mark 63, 232
Sanders, Jay 185, 460, 534
Sappho 216
Sartre, Paul 247, 253, 317
Scalapino, Leslie 4, 339, 374, 378, 380, 381, 395, 426, 438
Schelling, Andrew 281
Schickling, Jared 494
Schneeman, George 422
Schneider, Dan 193, 436, 438
Schultz, Lou 205, 207, 214, 224
Schuster, Josh 34, 169, 228, 354, 436, 438
Schwartz, Jerry 104, 436, 438
Schwerner, Armand 34, 336, 340, 363, 370, 372, 381
Schwitters, Kurt 216
Scroggins, Mark 528, 530
Sebastian, Nic 11
Selby, Spencer 318, 395, 462
Serra, Richard 392
Shakespeare, William 131, 135, 141, 147, 193, 213
Shapiro, David 218, 395, 436, 438, 464
Sharits, Paul 471
Sharma, Prageeta 185, 385, 428, 438, 510
Sheehan, Cindy 263
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 480, 505, 513
Sheppard, Robert 218
Sherlock, Frank 63, 227, 228, 232, 264, 271, 436, 438, 482, 484, 529, 537, 546
Sherman, Cindy 185
Sherry, James 218
Sicoli, Dan 523
Siegel, Jeff 436, 438
Sigo, Cedar 178
Silem, Kasey 232, 395
Sillman, Amy 507
Silverman, Oren 185
Simic, Charles 34
Simon, Greg 23, 34, 57, 169, 183, 354, 436, 438, 521
Simon, Rachel M. 161, 521, 561
Simonds, Sandra 232
Simone, Frank 65, 260, 477, 575
Siratori, Kenji 494
Skillman, Judith 29
Skinner, Jonathan 16, 213, 242, 243, 560
Skoulding, Zoe 17
Slosek, Michael 178
Smith, Alexis 269, 275, 278, 280
Smith, Harry 60, 65, 76, 149, 211, 233, 238, 270, 310, 395, 435, 436, 438, 477, 503, 560
Smith, Jenny 560
Smith, Larry 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280
Smith, Patricia 56
Smithson, Robert 216
Snapper, Juliana 198
Solomon, Laura 232, 271, 507
Sorrentino, Christopher 29, 218
Spahr, Boyd 355, 436, 438
Spahr, Juliana 385, 428, 510
Sparrow, John 318, 328, 395, 435, 438, 462, 464, 477
Spears, Rebecca 435, 438
Spicer, Jack 29, 262
Spicer, John 381
Sprague, Jane 316
Spyker, James 145
Stackhouse, Christopher 4, 186, 395, 424, 479, 547
Stanley, George 34
Stanton, Rob 181
Stefans, Kim 436, 438
Stein, Gertrude 76, 167, 172, 173, 178, 211, 238, 296, 301, 348, 356, 435, 438, 466, 505, 531, 534, 539
Stein, Susan 458, 463, 466, 468, 470, 487, 488, 531, 539
Stein, Suzanne 356, 459, 466, 468, 470, 487, 488, 491, 531, 539
Steinberg, Nicole 81
Steiner, Konrad 544
Stempleman, Jordan 436, 438
Stengel, Jill 34
Stevenson, Matt 221, 523
Stewart, Rod 346, 384, 387, 391, 394, 419, 459, 462, 465, 478
Stone, Anne 41, 182, 316
Strauss, Adam 55
Strauss, Zoe 198
Strongin, Lynn 55
Stumpf, Jason 218
Sturgeon, Stephen 154
Sullivan, Andrew 436, 438
Sutherland, Keston 528, 530

Sweeney, Chad 57
Swensen, Cole 395
Switaj, Elizabeth 23
Szymaszek, Stacy 63, 185, 218, 232, 238, 262, 436, 438
Tabios, Eileen R. 436, 438, 449
Taggart, John 355
Tanta, Gene 293
Tardos, Anne 24, 323, 332, 436, 438
Tarn, Nathaniel 209, 215
Teare, Brian 397, 520
Tejada, Roberto 306, 307, 311
Templeton, Fiona 149
Terry, Philip 265, 435, 438, 453
Texas, Irving 76, 338, 559
Theater, Poets 491
Thomas, Dylan 52, 129, 133, 149, 150, 151, 200, 205, 207, 214, 224, 275, 278, 280, 281, 395, 436, 438, 481, 560
Thompson, George 148, 270, 392, 494, 523, 561
Thornton, Leslie 490
Thorson, Maureen 63, 232
Tieger, Aaron 178, 523
Tills, Steve 436, 438
Tipton, John 250
Tomasula, Steve 270
Tomlinson, Charles 528, 530
Topel, Andrew 55, 246
Topp, Mike 477
Toscano, Rodrigo 56, 213, 242, 243, 436, 438, 560
Tribune, Chicago 169
Trigilio, Tony 293
Trinidad, David 218, 395
Tritica, John 279
Trujillo, Dorothy 41, 56, 182
Tudor, David 171, 172, 174, 175, 177
Tuma, Keith 528, 530
Tursi, Mark 494
Tyler, Richard 252
Tynes, Jen 232
Tysh, Chris 173
Tzara, Tristan 171, 172, 174, 175, 177, 370, 372
Tzvia, Rachel 109
Unger, Eric 178
Valery, Paul 181
Vap, Sarah 109
Veglahn, Sara 464, 507
Vermont, Charlie 205, 207, 214, 224, 435, 438
Vidal, Pierre 394
Vincent, Gregory 181
Vitiello, Chris 436, 438
Volkman, Karen 368
Vonnegut, Kurt 6, 21
Vvedensky, Alexander 76
Wagner, Catherine 426, 436, 438, 528, 530
Wahlstrom, Ralph 69, 238, 368
Wakoski, Diane 34
Waldman, Anne 336, 340, 438, 460, 534
Waldman, Ken 168, 395, 494, 520
Waldrop, Keith 198
Waldrop, Rosmarie 74
Walker, Laura 141, 147
Wallace, Nicole 226
Warhol, Andy 129, 133, 186, 422
Warren, Kenneth 169, 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280, 435, 436, 438, 534
Washington, George 69, 76, 169, 211, 216, 229, 238, 254, 263, 271, 272, 276, 277, 302, 368, 438, 480
Watson, Scott 181, 305
Watten, Barry 378, 380, 381, 426, 438
Weaver, Rebecca 69
Weber, Bruce 477
Weber, Damian 16
Weeks, Laurie 198
Weinberger, Eliot 34
Weiner, Hannah 270, 422, 430, 438
Weiner, Lawrence 10, 422, 430, 438
Weinstein, Norman 29
Weiser, Karen 76, 185, 296
Welch, Jen 395
Whalen, Philip 299
White, Jessica 227
Whitener, Brian 55
Whiting, John 270, 507
Whiting, Nathan 65, 477
Whitman, Walt 76, 346, 384, 387, 391, 419
Wieners, John 218, 235, 381
Wilder, Ian 560
Wilke, Hannah 392
Wilkinson, John 23, 55, 63, 232, 464, 507, 528, 530
Williams, Paul O. 34, 338
Williamson, Dustin 232
Willis, Elizabeth 149, 436, 438
Willner, Evan 494
Wilson, Karen 118, 123, 169, 375, 436, 438, 511, 528, 530
Winet, Jon 158
Witherup, William 26
Woodward, Jon 572
Woolf, Virginia 301
Wordsworth, William 281
Wright, C. D. 149, 185, 524
Yacht, Peter F. 208, 304
Yankelevich, Matvei 76, 185
Yau, John 4, 81
Young, Alex 63, 232
Young, Stephanie 356
Zolf, Rachel 396

Zukofsky, Louis 11, 34, 203
Zurawski, Magdalena 57, 436, 438
Zuzga, Jason 262

CONCEPTS

9/11 150, 200, 237, 338, 527, 560
Activism and protest 41, 70, 89, 157, 254, 263, 302, 346, 384, 387, 391, 419, 461, 516, 531, 539
Aesthetics 27, 76, 158, 172, 232, 368, 385, 428, 438, 450, 465, 471, 478, 491, 505, 510, 524, 574
African American poetry 70
Anthologies 15, 34, 70, 76, 107, 148, 211, 213, 238, 304, 305, 351, 356, 368, 370, 372, 395, 435, 436, 438, 448, 453, 490, 494, 534, 544
Anti-Semitism 137, 139, 140
Appropriation 141, 147, 148, 151, 158, 205, 207, 214, 216, 224, 267, 285, 300, 503
Archives and libraries 9, 29, 31, 47, 181, 190, 208, 234, 293, 305, 354, 366, 368, 387, 395, 419, 435, 438, 471, 480, 497, 512, 516, 523, 534, 544, 575
Asemic writing 441
Autobiography 24, 74, 173, 218, 238, 301, 348, 422, 426, 438, 449, 457, 494, 511, 521, 527
Avant-garde 19, 27, 35, 36, 43, 337, 351, 363, 370, 372, 422
Beauty 81, 193, 382, 411, 412, 446, 450, 461, 465, 478, 488, 531, 539
Biography 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280, 301, 348, 400, 404, 436, 438, 448, 496
Black Mountain 2, 12, 18, 34, 44, 338, 471
Blogs 10, 12, 14, 16, 19, 20, 35, 36, 37, 41, 43, 47, 49, 50, 59, 60, 63, 72, 92, 94, 95, 97, 100, 103, 115, 118, 119, 123, 130, 131, 134, 135, 137, 139, 140, 145, 146, 148, 149, 152, 153, 156, 160, 162, 166, 167, 169, 175, 176, 178, 180, 182, 183, 195, 199, 203, 206, 208, 209, 213, 214, 215, 217, 224, 225, 226, 227, 232, 239, 242, 243, 248, 252, 254, 257, 259, 260, 261, 264, 267, 268, 270, 282, 283, 285, 287, 289, 302, 304, 306, 307, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 319, 321, 322, 324, 328, 330, 331, 334, 337, 338, 343, 345, 346, 349, 351, 353, 356, 359, 363, 369, 370, 372, 373, 384, 387, 389, 390, 391, 401, 404, 419, 421, 434, 436, 438, 443, 445, 451, 452, 458, 462, 463, 466, 468, 470, 474, 479, 482, 484, 487, 488, 491, 501, 504, 507, 509, 512, 514, 516, 522, 524, 527, 529, 530, 531, 537, 539, 545, 546, 547, 550, 558, 559, 560, 567, 570, 572
Book announcements 1, 16, 17, 56, 57, 63, 74, 76, 81, 107, 178, 185, 206, 238, 242, 243, 250, 267, 271, 272, 276, 277, 296, 301, 306, 307, 311, 318, 325, 327, 335, 342, 346, 348, 350, 354, 355, 356, 379, 384, 387, 391, 397, 403, 414, 419, 443, 453, 464, 479, 501, 507, 521, 525, 527, 528, 530, 547, 560, 561, 569, 572
Bookstores 11, 69, 148, 154, 164, 169, 228, 262, 304, 396, 419, 436, 438, 495, 513
Calls for submissions 15, 22, 25, 27, 28, 38, 40, 99, 105, 108, 110, 111, 113, 117, 120, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133, 496
Capitalism 149, 186
Censorship 164, 216
Cities 60, 144, 149, 213, 242, 243, 255, 273, 278, 305, 308, 385, 428, 438, 444, 445, 457, 481, 494, 510, 544, 560 Climate 511
Close reading 312, 313
Collage and montage 11, 78, 248, 435, 436, 438, 440, 534, 569
Conferences and festivals 11, 48, 69, 131, 135, 151, 156, 164, 170, 214, 218, 224, 229, 238, 265, 269, 273, 275, 278, 280, 297, 298, 299, 304, 368, 435, 436, 438, 447, 472, 480, 490, 518, 527, 574
Copyright and permissions 54, 141, 147, 216, 299, 461, 516, 550
Craft 117, 128, 129, 132, 133, 216, 293, 438, 524
Creative writing pedagogy 216, 248
Dada 148, 370, 372
Deconstruction 60, 222, 247, 248, 253, 317, 496
Difficulty 370, 372, 396, 516
Digital archives 3, 362, 365, 425, 436, 438
Disability 148, 422
Dreams 10, 34, 69, 76, 213, 238, 239, 242, 243, 316, 357, 368, 379, 398, 411, 425, 433, 435, 436, 438, 480, 482, 484, 496, 511, 529, 537, 546, 560, 575
Ecology and ecopoetics 16, 511
Editing 76, 158, 211, 233, 238, 262, 281, 285, 316, 362, 365, 436, 438, 481, 490, 496, 511, 516, 544, 560, 571
Ekphrasis 200
Electronic poetry and hypertext 144, 155, 160, 190, 226, 233, 234, 251, 256, 314, 315, 318, 319, 322, 324, 329, 330, 334, 337, 349, 351, 359, 436, 438, 448, 462, 504, 513, 516, 567, 570
Elegy 436, 438, 467, 521
Empire and imperialism 4, 11, 205, 207, 214, 218, 224, 412, 449
Epic 198, 461, 534
Erasure 426, 438
Ethics 368, 535, 571
Experimental poetry 11, 318, 505

Fascism 216, 270
Feminism 248, 310, 422, 436, 438
Film 11, 41, 45, 64, 69, 129, 133, 150, 156, 169, 180, 187, 195, 198, 200, 201, 205, 207, 209, 213, 214, 215, 224, 238, 242, 243, 248, 256, 283, 295, 318, 346, 356, 368, 384, 387, 391, 392, 419, 425, 435, 438, 462, 471, 479, 480, 490, 497, 512, 513, 516, 527, 534, 560
Flarf 436, 438
Fluxus 503
Formalism 490
Free speech 50, 216
Futurism 370, 372
Gender 4
Grants and funding 60, 76, 185, 186, 270, 296, 300, 304, 368, 433, 435, 438, 459, 466, 470, 475, 568
Haiku 49, 50, 218
Harlem Renaissance 69, 238, 368, 480
Humour and satire 122, 136, 145, 147, 148, 193, 377, 436, 438, 446, 450, 461, 465, 478, 492, 534, 570
Ideology 132, 149, 436, 438
Improvisation 241, 293, 436, 438, 485, 521
Indigenous and Native poetics 148
Interviews 34, 66, 158, 169, 205, 207, 214, 218, 224, 353, 436, 438, 475, 486, 493, 508, 509, 518
Israel and Palestine 163, 240, 254, 263, 302, 427, 438, 442, 446, 450, 454, 455, 465, 475, 478
Language poetry 206, 217, 218, 319, 322, 324, 325, 330, 334, 335, 337, 346, 347, 349, 351, 359, 370, 372, 384, 387, 391, 400, 404, 419
Latino and Latin American poetry 263, 506
Letters and correspondence 66, 76, 211, 238, 248, 296, 516, 527
List moderation 20, 60, 163, 382, 461, 516
Little magazines 4, 13, 16, 18, 22, 25, 27, 34, 38, 40, 52, 56, 76, 83, 95, 106, 122, 127, 136, 148, 149, 155, 164, 169, 178, 179, 185, 201, 205, 207, 211, 214, 218, 224, 238, 241, 262, 265, 269, 271, 273, 275, 278, 280, 285, 293, 296, 301, 305, 316, 318, 328, 332, 333, 338, 348, 350, 363, 366, 368, 370, 372, 387, 391, 396, 400, 404, 419, 426, 430, 435, 436, 438, 448, 457, 462, 479, 486, 493, 503, 508, 509, 516, 534, 544, 547
Lyric poetry 109, 281, 422, 435, 438, 490, 495, 497, 512, 520
Marxism 162, 166, 176, 310, 505
Materiality of the text 426, 438
Memory 18, 34, 51, 60, 66, 76, 155, 211, 216, 238, 262, 266, 347, 385, 425, 426, 428, 435, 438, 510, 527, 534
MFA programs 41, 46, 48, 69, 182, 238, 318, 368, 425, 435, 438, 462, 467, 479, 480, 527, 534, 547
Modernism 4, 156, 216, 281, 338, 505
Mourning and loss 270, 436, 438, 449, 461, 505
Multiculturalism 444, 445, 481
Music and poetry 16, 24, 43, 50, 69, 76, 84, 146, 147, 148, 151, 153, 160, 164, 168, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 177, 186, 189, 193, 211, 213, 237, 238, 242, 243, 255, 265, 269, 270, 275, 278, 280, 285, 293, 296, 305, 346, 351, 355, 370, 372, 384, 387, 391, 394, 419, 424, 435, 436, 438, 447, 459, 462, 465, 478, 490, 497, 505, 511, 512, 522, 523, 534, 560, 565, 566, 574
Nature 27, 34, 36, 43, 134, 193, 271, 285, 338, 382, 461, 516, 536
Negativity and refusal 163, 205, 207, 214, 224, 484
New York School 235, 395, 422
Obituary and memorial 383, 516
Objectivism 387, 419
Oulipo 173, 440, 453, 505
Performance and the poetry reading 13, 41, 49, 50, 69, 71, 82, 102, 115, 118, 119, 123, 143, 148, 156, 161, 164, 168, 182, 190, 211, 213, 221, 230, 231, 238, 242, 243, 270, 293, 296, 305, 316, 318, 350, 368, 396, 434, 438, 462, 463, 466, 467, 470, 479, 480, 487, 488, 491, 501, 504, 516, 523, 525, 527, 531, 534, 539, 547, 560
Philosophy 81, 98, 253, 281, 296, 395, 435, 438, 461, 534, 575
Place and region 66, 185, 205, 207, 214, 224, 369, 436, 438, 461, 497, 512
Poet laureate 283, 438
Poetics 2, 3, 5, 6, 12, 13, 27, 34, 49, 50, 51, 52, 56, 58, 61, 64, 69, 76, 81, 88, 96, 106, 120, 126, 127, 144, 148, 196, 197, 202, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 211, 214, 215, 219, 224, 229, 238, 241, 267, 285, 293, 322, 329, 330, 334, 336, 337, 340, 346, 349, 351, 356, 359, 365, 367, 368, 376, 384, 387, 391, 396, 398, 399, 400, 404, 411, 417, 418, 419, 422, 426, 436, 438, 453, 457, 459, 464, 465, 466, 470, 478, 480, 487, 488, 489, 495, 505, 516, 529, 533, 534, 536, 537, 546, 555, 566
Politics and poetry 395, 448
Post-avant 36, 43, 436, 438
Postmodernism 505
Print vs. digital 4, 16, 76, 146, 148, 153, 156, 158, 164, 169, 198, 204, 206, 238, 270, 281, 296, 304, 325, 332, 335, 346, 350, 368, 384, 387, 391, 396, 400, 404, 409, 419, 430, 435, 438, 453, 457, 464, 465, 478, 480, 521, 523, 534, 568, 569, 570

Prizes and awards 4, 11, 52, 69, 76, 152, 164, 167, 185, 186, 190, 194, 216, 219, 228, 238, 241, 248, 263, 270, 296, 320, 323, 327, 329, 332, 338, 350, 368, 371, 396, 405, 406, 420, 426, 435, 436, 438, 461, 464, 489, 495, 511, 519, 520, 524, 527, 534
Procedural and constraint writing 370, 372, 395, 440
Prose poem 34, 48, 109, 260, 301, 569
Prosody and meter 16, 163
Psychoanalysis 49, 50
Queer poetics 6, 198, 436, 438, 534
Race and poetry 4, 128, 129, 132, 133, 160, 212, 272, 276, 277, 350, 371, 405, 406, 420, 447, 498, 516
Reading announcements 26, 150, 185, 186, 200, 233, 262, 271, 296, 304, 318, 341, 375, 394, 402, 410, 436, 438, 464, 470, 544, 561, 573
Religion and the sacred 3, 22, 25, 35, 36, 38, 40, 76, 149, 161, 185, 186, 198, 214, 216, 224, 293, 299, 301, 336, 338, 340, 348, 368, 370, 372, 436, 438, 482, 484, 529, 535, 537, 546
Representation 316, 475, 544
Reviewing and criticism 2, 3, 4, 12, 18, 23, 27, 29, 34, 46, 48, 54, 56, 69, 70, 76, 79, 83, 106, 147, 150, 154, 163, 169, 183, 185, 200, 204, 211, 213, 215, 217, 237, 238, 242, 243, 250, 270, 284, 293, 304, 314, 315, 318, 319, 322, 324, 325, 330, 334, 335, 337, 338, 339, 344, 346, 347, 349, 351, 352, 359, 362, 365, 368, 370, 372, 374, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 384, 385, 386, 387, 391, 398, 399, 400, 404, 411, 419, 426, 428, 435, 436, 438, 440, 453, 462, 464, 479, 483, 488, 505, 508, 510, 511, 512, 513, 516, 519, 520, 524, 528, 530, 531, 534, 539, 544, 547, 560, 567, 570
Revision 248
Romanticism 128, 129, 132, 133, 281, 505
School of Quietude 436, 438, 494
Science 81, 163, 222, 346, 367, 382, 384, 387, 391, 419, 444, 445, 481
Semiotics 43, 222, 294
Serial poem 76, 79, 238, 272, 276, 277, 355, 457, 465, 520
Sestina 203, 217
Small press publishing 4, 11, 16, 47, 63, 69, 74, 76, 79, 80, 89, 93, 145, 150, 184, 185, 192, 196, 200, 208, 211, 213, 225, 232, 238, 241, 242, 243, 271, 296, 304, 318, 338, 342, 355, 356, 368, 370, 372, 385, 389, 390, 422, 428, 430, 435, 436, 438, 458, 462, 463, 464, 466, 468, 470, 474, 479, 480, 487, 488, 489, 495, 510, 511, 514, 519, 523, 524, 527, 531, 534, 539, 544, 547, 560, 569
Social media 13, 49, 50, 160, 208, 220, 248, 267, 504
Software and code 70, 76, 256, 266, 309, 395, 396, 433, 438, 459, 466, 470, 491
Sonnet 141, 147, 173, 191, 193, 202, 204, 218, 304
Sound poetry 522
Structuralism 490
Subjectivity 4, 22, 25, 38, 40, 49, 79, 99, 105, 108, 110, 111, 113, 117, 120, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133, 148, 270, 272, 276, 277, 293, 318, 350, 355, 359, 382, 426, 438, 450, 462, 465, 478, 496
Sublime 213, 237, 242, 243, 436, 438, 550, 560
Surrealism 148, 213, 216, 242, 243, 497, 512, 544, 560
Terrorism 54, 216, 475
The academy 4, 6, 16, 34, 46, 48, 56, 69, 76, 97, 104, 107, 115, 118, 119, 123, 146, 153, 156, 157, 158, 169, 176, 181, 185, 186, 190, 193, 204, 205, 206, 207, 211, 214, 216, 224, 225, 233, 238, 248, 252, 256, 265, 269, 270, 271, 273, 275, 278, 280, 281, 293, 296, 299, 301, 304, 305, 316, 318, 328, 337, 348, 350, 351, 355, 368, 370, 372, 375, 387, 390, 395, 397, 399, 400, 404, 419, 425, 426, 435, 436, 438, 451, 452, 453, 462, 464, 465, 467, 475, 478, 479, 496, 505, 511, 513, 516, 519, 520, 524, 527, 534, 544, 547, 575
The body 4, 45, 51, 64, 419, 461, 505, 513, 560
The canon 79, 193
The Holocaust 70
The internet 84, 121, 163, 169, 341, 388, 496, 506, 516, 527, 544
The Iraq war 230, 263, 300, 482, 483, 484, 503, 529, 537, 546
The line 217
The listserv 24, 27, 34, 52, 62, 69, 71, 85, 102, 105, 107, 108, 110, 111, 113, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120, 123, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133, 143, 161, 185, 218, 238, 279, 285, 293, 296, 318, 347, 368, 381, 386, 403, 414, 419, 435, 438, 462, 480, 506, 516, 523, 529, 533, 534, 537, 538, 546
The New Sentence 203, 206
Theatre 69, 70, 131, 135, 187, 209, 213, 215, 238, 254, 295, 296, 302, 355, 368, 425, 435, 438, 458, 463, 466, 468, 470, 480, 487, 488, 490, 491, 492, 531, 534, 539, 574
Torture and Abu Ghraib 216, 299
Translation 24, 69, 74, 76, 155, 164, 213, 216, 218, 242, 243, 250, 281, 306, 307, 311, 346, 384, 387, 391, 419, 435, 438, 450, 453, 465, 475, 478, 483, 491, 524, 534, 544, 560

Vietnam 150, 200, 247, 253, 263, 317, 419, 436, 438
Visual and concrete poetry 1, 20, 84, 165, 194, 219, 251, 256, 266, 270, 362, 365, 386, 388, 454, 455, 501
Visual art 20, 24, 60, 65, 69, 82, 89, 99, 105, 108, 110, 111, 113, 117, 120, 126, 127, 128, 129, 132, 133, 141, 147, 148, 150, 165, 186, 193, 194, 198, 200, 205, 207, 210, 212, 213, 214, 219, 224, 238, 240, 244, 265, 269, 270, 271, 273, 275, 278, 280, 293, 303, 308, 335, 346, 350, 356, 368, 384, 385, 387, 391, 392, 419, 422, 424, 426, 428, 435, 436, 438, 441, 447, 461, 462, 477, 480, 490, 491, 496, 506, 510, 534, 544, 548, 550
Women's writing 109, 318, 368, 435, 438, 462

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 576 in all.

28 FEB 2007

1. Nico Vassilakis — Fick Thus, short vispo vids & a new book
2. Adam Tobin — Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
3. UbuWeb — UbuWeb Featured Resources, March: Selected by Caroline Bergvall
4. sandra de 1913 — SIGHTINGS by Shin Yu Pai
5. Daniel Godston — Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
6. Tom W. Lewis — Re: laundrypoettry
7. Tom W. Lewis — Recall: laundrypoettry
8. charles alexander — warehouse district
9. Alexander Jorgensen — Poetry and a Strange Revelation for this BAD speller
10. Stephen Vincent — Nouveau de Blog
11. Nico Vassilakis — SUbTExT/Seattle - RObert Fitterman & BRyant Mason 3/7/07

1 MAR 2007

12. Clay Banes — Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
13. Charlie Rossiter — poems poetc etc
14. Steve Halle — Tim Yu on Seven Corners
15. Crane's Bill Books — Reminder: 31 Words
16. David A. Kirschenbaum — NYC Tonight Boog City presents Ecopoetics
17. ian davidson — Skald 24
18. Dr. Barry S. Alpert — Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
19. Adam Fieled — "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"
20. Dan Waber — visual poets
21. Jesse Crockett — Re: laundrypoettry
22. christopher.winks — Fw: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
23. Halvard Johnson — Hamilton Stone Review, Issue 11, Winter 2007, Now Online!
24. Poetry Project — Events at the Poetry Project 3/5 - 3/7
25. mIEKAL aND — Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
26. Joel Weishaus — Fw: letter
27. Dillon Westbrook — Re: Events at the Poetry Project 3/5 - 3/7
28. Dillon Westbrook — woops- meant to retitle (use|usage)
29. Lou Rowan — Golden Handcuffs Review#8 now out
30. Alexander Jorgensen — CREELEY and Experminetalism

2 MAR 2007

31. Fluffy Singler — Re: Poetry and a Strange Revelation for this BAD speller
32. Jesse Glass — Congrats To Shin Yu Pai on Sightings!
33. Alan Sondheim — my sister's murder
34. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Russell Edson & Black Mountain & a query re this query re "what...
35. Barry Schwabsky — Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"
36. Paul Nelson — Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"
37. Dan Wilcox — February Blogs on Poetry in Albany
38. Christopher Leland Winks — Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
39. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: my sister's murder
40. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
41. Aaron Vidaver — Open Text Reading Series #2: Marie Annharte Baker (Vancouver)
42. Joel Weishaus — "The Way North" -2 Text-4
43. Warren Lloyd — Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

3 MAR 2007

44. Shad Marsh — Russell Edson & Black Mountain & a query re this query re "what school?"
45. Alan Sondheim — New video work at Millennium, NYC, March 10th

46. Brian Clements — Forwarded from Russell Edson
47. Pierre Joris — CHAPBOOK RELEASE
48. Jacqueline Gens — Re: Forwarded from Russell Edson
49. Ricejunk2 — PUN
50. Ricejunk2 — Re: Poems: to post or not to post
51. Ricejunk2 — A Poem (By someone else) titled "A Poem" and worthy of discussion :-)
52. Ricejunk2 — Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
53. Alexander Jorgensen — Re: comitted poets - and even those who have been ...
54. Alexander Jorgensen — Maryland: Expert on Russian Intelligence Shot Outside Home

4 MAR 2007

55. Jonathan Minton, Word For/Word — New Issue of Word For/Word (#11)
56. Maria Damon — Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics
57. Del Ray Cross — SHAMPOO issue 29
58. Lewis LaCook — Angels on the Henderson Bridge
59. Peter Ciccariello — the poem that makes itself
60. Desmond Swords — Bardic Bulliten
61. Tom W. Lewis — Re: comitted poets - and even those who have been ...
62. Dana Teen Lomax — FW: Visually Arresting
63. Matt Henriksen — Cannibal Issue Two & Cannibal Chapbook Series

5 MAR 2007

64. Alan Sondheim — Crepuscule liner notes (apologies 4 x-posting)
65. Bob Heman — coming soon!!! the 2nd Official CLWN WR Event on March 29, 2007 at SAFE-T-GAL...
66. EH — Oppen quote
67. Dan Waber — ars poetica update
68. Deborah Poe — berssenbrugge's email
69. Michael Kelleher — Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter for 3.05.07-3.11.07
70. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Fwd: Amiri Baraka and Ras Baraka @ UWM (3.5)
71. Michael Kelleher — One more thing....
72. Ron Silliman — Silliman's Blog: Torqued!
73. gfrym — Re: Friends of Big Bridge
74. Schlesinger Kyle — BILL BERKSON¹S SUDDEN ADDRESS: SELECTED LECTURES 1981-2006
75. Alan Sondheim — EXHIBIT A (group show in Second Life) (fwd)
76. Matt Henriksen — Sat 3/10 Howe, Smith, Berrigan, Weiser, Hawkey, Moschovakis, Yankelevich, ...
77. Cynie Cory — Janaka Stucky's email?
78. mIEKAL aND — FROZEN HYPNOSIS 1-29
79. Elizabeth Treadwell — Ratcliffe & Rodefer at SPT this Fri, 3/9
80. Elizabeth Treadwell — news from Small Press Traffic

6 MAR 2007

81. matthew cooperman — new book, readings East/West
82. Jesse Glass — Jeses Glass on Steve Bradley's [redacted] this Wednesday
83. Jesse Crockett — last call for work --- listenlight 08
84. Jim Andrews — New links to interactive audio works
85. David Gershman — Illusion Literature Rack Special!
86. Stephen Vincent — Libby Guilty of Lying in C.I.A. Leak Case
87. amy king — AWP?
88. Geoffrey Gatza — Re: AWP?
89. kevin thurston — in honor of Aaron Belz's success...
90. amy king — Re: in honor of Aaron Belz's success...
91. amy king — Re: AWP?
92. Alexander Dickow — baraka
93. kevin thurston — Re: in honor of Aaron Belz's success...

94. Chris Stroffolino — Re: baraka
95. amy king — I'LL ANSWER ME ----> AWP?
96. Deborah Poe — Re: AWP?
97. Halvard Johnson — Query and favor
98. Charles Bernstein — Jean Baudrillard (1929-2007)
99. Marcus Bales — Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
100. Halvard Johnson — Re: favor and query

7 MAR 2007

101. David Baratier — Re: AWP?
102. David Baratier — performance poetry
103. CA Conrad — 2 upcoming NY events in March and April, hope to see you /\\//\\\\////\\\\\\/...
104. David A. Kirschenbaum — Lou Reed/ Delmore Schwartz News
105. Sylvester Pollet — Outsider Art
106. susan maurer — Re: last call for work --- listenlight 08
107. Angelin Borsics — free examinations copies of Twentieth-Century German Poetry
108. Marcus Bales — Re: Outsider Art
109. elen — FW: Ensemble Jourine March Issue
110. kevin thurston — Re: Outsider Art
111. amy king — Re: Outsider Art
112. amy king — Re: AWP?
113. Marcus Bales — Re: Outsider Art
114. amy king — Re: Outsider Art
115. Aldon Nielsen — Re: performance poetry
116. David Fernandes — Re: Outsider Art
117. Mark Weiss — Re: Outsider Art
118. Taylor Brady — Re: performance poetry
119. Metta Sama — Re: performance poetry
120. Vernon Frazer — Re: Outsider Art
121. mIEKAL aND — Re: Outsider Art
122. Will Esposito — Re: Outsider Art
123. Lea Graham — Re: performance poetry
124. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Outsider Art
125. Christopher Leland Winks — Re: Outsider Art
126. George Bowering — Re: Outsider Art
127. George Bowering — Re: Outsider Art
128. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Outsider Art
129. Thomas savage — Re: Outsider Art
130. Halvard Johnson — FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
131. Stephen Vincent — Re: AWP?
132. Mark Weiss — Re: Outsider Art
133. kevin thurston — Re: Outsider Art
134. Stephen Vincent — Re: Outsider Art
135. Chris Stroffolino — Re: AWP....
136. amy king — Re: Outsider Art
137. Alexander Dickow — Baraka
138. amy king — Re: Outsider Art
139. Dillon Westbrook — Re: Baraka
140. Ruth Lepson — Re: Baraka
141. Stephen Vincent — Re: Outsider Art
142. Michael Tod Edgerton — Seeking Michael Palmer (who isn't?)
143. Michael Kelleher — Correction
144. Lewis LaCook — King's Woods : The A-history of Lorain, Ohio - a data-driven networked hyper...
145. Rob McLennan — the ottawa small press book fair - spring edition
146. Aldon Nielsen — advance notice

147. Mark Weiss — Re: Outsider Art
148. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Outsider Art
149. phanero — Re: Outsider Art
150. Photios Giovanis — Carolee Schneemann, friend of many poets
151. Vernon Frazer — Please help if you can. Re: Thoma Chapins' 50th b'day - fri. 3/9
152. Brigitte Byrd — Re: FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
153. tyrone williams — Re: advance notice
154. Fulcrum Annual — Mazer & Sturgeon read at the Democracy Center, Weds. 3/14 7:30 PM
155. cralan kelder — New from Longhouse ~ Spring 2007 and Origin magazine Sixth Series forthcomi...
156. Catherine Daly — Re: AWP?
157. Aaren Yandrich — A Reading Against War
158. Jim Andrews — Videogames and Art
159. Marcus Bales — Re: Outsider Art
160. Desmond Swords — Love Poetry Hate Racism - 22 April - Global events

8 MAR 2007

161. David Baratier — Re: performance poetry
162. Alexander Dickow — baraka (location of article, etc)
163. Gabrielle Welford — Obama, Israel and Palestine
164. Ann Bogle — Re: AWP?
165. Dan Waber — news from vispoets.com
166. tyrone williams — Re: baraka (location of article, etc)
167. Cynie Cory — Re: FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
168. David Baratier — poets who perform
169. Catherine Daly — wsj
170. Catherine Daly — Re: AWP?
171. Lori Emerson — Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
172. Lori Emerson — Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
173. Lewis Warsh — Barbara Henning / United Artists
174. Taylor Brady — Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
175. Dan Coffey — Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
176. Aldon Nielsen — Re: baraka (location of article, etc)
177. Lori Emerson — Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
178. Katalanche Press — New magazine: The Can
179. Jesse Crockett — listenlight 08 delayed --- get firefox!
180. Adam Fieled — Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post
181. steve d. dalachinsky — Fw: Fw: 1 personell change the 15th
182. Aaron Vidaver — Open Text Reading Series #3: Dorothy Trujillo Lusk (Vancouver)
183. Simon DeDeo — rhubarb is susan
184. Eric Elshtain — New Beard of Bees Chapbook
185. Poetry Project — Events at the Poetry Project 3/12 - 3/16
186. Tisa Bryant — NYC: Bryant/Koestenbaum/LaFarge April 3 reading at Redhead
187. Mark DuCharme — Rachel Levitsky
188. Joel Weishaus — North-2 Text-5
189. Montgomery fuller — your assistance with my writers cred: lawrence ytzhak braithwaite

9 MAR 2007

190. Joel Bettridge — Poetry at Beinecke Library: Announcements
191. Alan Sondheim — sonnet + videos
192. Eric Elshtain — New Beard of Bees Chapbook
193. Fulcrum Annual — Shakespeare Music in Worcester & Boston: March 17 & 19 -- FREE!
194. Dan Waber — a prize for interestingness
195. Ruth Lepson — Re: Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post
196. susan maurer — Re: New Beard of Bees Chapbook
197. susan maurer — Re: Outsider Art
198. Andrea Lawlor — THE ODYSSEY at Cellspace SF March 10

199. David A. Kirschenbaum — NYC/VIP: Help Boog City Distrib. Sat., & We'll Help You, Too
200. Dr. Barry S. Alpert — Re: Carolee Schneemann, friend of many poets
201. Alexander Jorgensen — Requesting Information on ONE LESS mag Nikki Widner - Williamsburg, ...
202. lds — Re: sonnet + videos
203. lcabri — on torque
204. L Guevarra — NEW in PAPERBACK: The Collected Poems of Ted Berrigan
205. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Outsider Art
206. L Guevarra — NEW BOOK: The Age of Huts (compleat)

10 MAR 2007

207. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Outsider Art
208. Rob McLennan — peter f yacht club
209. reJennifer Bartlett — New on the SES Poetics Blog
210. Geoffrey Gatza — AWP photo gallery
211. Mark Truscott — March 16: Ross and Smith at Test
212. mairead byrne — Re: AWP photo gallery
213. David A. Kirschenbaum — Boog City 39 Available
214. Stephen Vincent — Re: Outsider Art
215. Ruth Lepson — Re: New on the SES Poetics Blog
216. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: outsider Art & poets of Gitmo (complete Guardian article includ...
217. lcabri — torse / torsion / torque / Le torque

11 MAR 2007

218. John Tranter — " Pre-announcing Jacket 32"
219. Anne Coon — Re: Fwd: a prize for interestingness
220. Montgomery fuller — lord patch (aka)
221. Dan Wilcox — Third Thursday Open Mic: Albany, NY
222. Alan Sondheim — Pas. compressed.
223. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: outsider Art & poets of Gitmo (complete Guardian article included h...
224. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Outsider Art
225. Hot Whiskey Press — Hot Whiskey Press Moves to Chicago
226. Charles Bernstein — Semina show
227. CA Conrad — hope to see you at the FRANK SHERLOCK EMERGENCY FUND benefit show 3/18 in Phila...
228. CA Conrad — Gil Ott Tribute & the 1st Annual GIL OTT BOOK AWARD ---- 4/15/07, Philadelphia
229. Maria Damon — KAMAU BRATHWIATE MPLS VISIT
230. Alexander Jorgensen — Midwest Open Mics
231. Alexander Jorgensen — BATTLE NOTES - Re: Midwest Open Mics

12 MAR 2007

232. Matt Henriksen — Submit to Cannibal
233. Jerome Rothenberg — Itinerary Spain 2007
234. cralan kelder — Origin, Sixth Series, Issue 1 ~ now online
235. Daniel Kane — Don't Ever Get Famous available
236. Dan Waber — ars poetica update
237. Lori Emerson — music | sound | noise ebr remix
238. Michael Kelleher — Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 3.12.07
239. Alan Sondheim — drowning
240. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: Los cielos le reclaman... Heavens reclaim him... from Clemente ...
241. Elizabeth Treadwell — Degentesh & Gardner at SPT this Fri 3/16
242. David A. Kirschenbaum — Free PDF Subscriptions to Boog City Now Available
243. sean mullin — Re: Free PDF Subscriptions to Boog City Now Available

244. Marcus Bales — Shows, Readings, and Other Performances March 17 - 24
245. Vernon Frazer — Re: Marjorie Perloff
246. Jesse Crockett — listenlight new issue 08
247. Alan Sondheim — A/Rose for Baudrillard
248. Dodie Bellamy — Dodie Bellamy | Armand Capanna | video by Sarah Lockhart | March 18

13 MAR 2007

249. Ann Bogle — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard
250. William Allegrezza — Series A Reading in Chicago
251. Dan Waber — 7 by Christopher Major
252. Thomas Devaney — Silence
253. phanero — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard
254. David-Baptiste Chirot — Fwd: CAT National Day of Action - March 16, 2007
255. stephanie barber — BALTIMORE NEEDS SOME OF YOUR WORDS
256. Jim Andrews — FIRST SCREENING by bpNichol -- Computer poems from 1984
257. Steve Halle — Lina ramona Vitkauskas @ Seven Corners
258. mIEKAL aND — Re: FIRST SCREENING by bpNichol -- Computer poems from 1984
259. Stephen Vincent — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard
260. Adam Fieled — Simone Muench on PFS Post
261. phanero — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard
262. CA Conrad — .....QUEERS!
263. Catherine Daly — Artists Against the War - LA
264. CA Conrad — 3 DUSIE wee chaps by Frank Sherlock, Edmund Berrigan and CAConrad
265. Marcus Bales — Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spider April...
266. Jim Andrews — Re: FIRST SCREENING by bpNichol -- Computer poems from 1984
267. Ken Rumble — Fwd: [Lucipo] Live: The Glossolalia Website
268. Alan Sondheim — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard

14 MAR 2007

269. George Bowering — Re: Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spide...
270. Carol Novack — Readings 3/21, 2/23, 3/29 Readings
271. noah eli gordon — Dorothea Lasky and Paul Killebrew
272. Ken Rumble — Ken Rumble's Key Bridge Now Available
273. Marcus Bales — Re: Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spider A...
274. reJennifer Bartlett — Gene Frumkin/ Call for Work
275. Thomas savage — Re: Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spider ...
276. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Ken Rumble's Key Bridge Now Available
277. Tracey Gagne — Re: Ken Rumble's Key Bridge Now Available
278. Marcus Bales — Re: Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spider A...
279. holsapple1 — Re: Gene Frumkin/ Call for Work
280. Laura McClain — Re: Kenneth Patchen Festival and Jam At Gallery 324 and The Barking Spider ...
281. Margaret Konkol — Group for the Study of the History of Ideas Lecture March 22
282. Stephen Vincent — New de blog
283. linda norton — Fw: Boston Poet Laureate
284. amy king — Not announced yet, but ... a query.
285. Brian Howe — The Glossolalia Website
286. Charles Baldwin — send forgotten things / lost objects for a new issue of the loop
287. linda norton — Re: New de blog
288. gfrym — Re: Gene Frumkin/ Call for Work
289. Halvard Johnson — Re: send forgotten things / lost objects for a new issue of the loop
290. tlrelf — Re: send forgotten things / lost objects for a new issue of the loop

15 MAR 2007

291. George Bowering — Re: send forgotten things / lost objects for a new issue of the loop
292. Dan Waber — Pietist Compositions, by Marko Niemi
293. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: Woodland Pattern This Weekend: Tony Trigilio Friday, Tarana on ...
294. Alan Sondheim — "Where the waters meet at the end of the world"
295. reJennifer Bartlett — More on Gene Frumkin Issue of SES
296. Poetry Project — Events at the Poetry Project 3/16 - 3/21

16 MAR 2007

297. David Baratier — Feedback for PS sells out
298. Maria Damon — art as knowing
299. Nathaniel Siegel — poets for peace SPEAK OUT New York City March 19th 2007
300. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: The Fourth Anniversary of the Iraq War Must be the Last!
301. Tarpaulin Sky Press & Journal — New from TSky Press: Danielle Dutton's _Attempts at a Life_
302. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Fwd: CAT National Day of Action - March 16, 2007
303. Dan Waber — vispoets.com weekly winner
304. Rob McLennan — new(ish) on rob's clever blog
305. Jennifer Karmin — 3/18: Godston & Karmin poetry radio
306. Hot Whiskey Press — Reciprocal Distillations by Clayton Eshleman (Hot Whiskey Press)

17 MAR 2007

307. Lanny Ray Quarles — Re: Reciprocal Distillations by Clayton Eshleman (Hot Whiskey Press)
308. Marcus Bales — Women Reading Women -- March 19 ⬩ Monday at 5:45 pm at Cleveland CITY HALL
309. Jesse Crockett — design an issue at listenlight.net
310. Ann Bogle — Ana Verse weblog update at St. Patrick's Day
311. Dan Coffey — Re: Reciprocal Distillations by Clayton Eshleman (Hot Whiskey Press)
312. Hot Whiskey Press — Re: Reciprocal Distillations by Clayton Eshleman (Hot Whiskey 313. phanero — Re: Reciprocal Distillations by Clayton Eshleman (Hot Whiskey
314. Charles Bernstein — Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
315. Barry Schwabsky — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
316. Aaron Vidaver — Open Text Reading Series #4: Anne Stone (Vancouver)
317. Ruth Lepson — Re: A/Rose for Baudrillard
318. Deborah A. Meadows — Shearsman Press Readings: Hawley, Meadows, Selby, Treadwell, Dyckman

18 MAR 2007

319. Ruth Lepson — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
320. Alexander Jorgensen — Poet Jackson MacLow
321. Halvard Johnson — Erratum du jour, or the power of art
322. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
323. Ruth Lepson — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
324. Mark Weiss — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
325. Herb Levy — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
326. Alexander Jorgensen — Harry Crosby - Info request
327. Nick Piombino — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
328. richard owens — Re: Harry Crosby - Info request
329. Nick Piombino — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
330. Joe Amato — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
331. amy king — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
332. charles alexander — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
333. Joe Amato — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
334. maxpaul — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
335. Ruth Lepson — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
336. Patrick F. Durgin — Poet Jackson Mac Low

337. V Nicholas LoLordo — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
338. David Baratier — Joshua Corey, last chance for this publication
339. Catherine Daly — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
340. Danny Snelson — Re: Poet Jackson Mac Low
341. Joanna Fuhrman — Reading in Lancaster, PA
342. Nate Pritts — New COMBATIVES issue w/Elisa Gabbert
343. Nick Piombino — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
344. Tom Beckett — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
345. rzep — Re: Harry Crosby - Info request
346. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
347. Ann Bogle — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
348. Tarpaulin Sky Press & Journal — NYC BOOK RELEASE PARTY: Danielle Dutton's _Attempts at a Li...
349. Barry Schwabsky — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
350. lcabri — Roy Miki's discussion & reading 19-20 March
351. Joe Amato — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
352. Barry Schwabsky — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
353. Tom Beckett — new at e-x-c-h-a-n-g-e-v-a-l-u-e-s...
354. Jim Andrews — Marvin Minsky: "The Emotion Machine"
355. Michael Cross — Taggart chapbook still available // Stephen Ratcliffe's REAL
356. Elizabeth Treadwell — Kimball & Stein at SPT this Fri 3/23
357. Alan Sondheim — Dark sky.

19 MAR 2007

358. David Baratier — Re: poet Jackson MacLow
359. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
360. Mark Prejsnar — Language Harm this Wednesday
361. Mairead Byrne — Re: Language Harm this Wednesday
362. Jim Andrews — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
363. Pierre Joris — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
364. Dan Waber — ars poetica update
365. susan maurer — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
366. susan maurer — tamarind
367. Colm Mulcahy — Re: Fwd: Re: Language Harm this Wednesday
368. Michael Kelleher — Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 3.19.07-3.25.07
369. Peter Ciccariello — Poor Yorick in lyrical landscape
370. Nick Piombino — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
371. agj — Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
372. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow
373. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Erratum du jour, or the power of art
374. charles alexander — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
375. Freind, William Joseph — Rae Armantrout reading in South Jersey, April 12
376. Lewis LaCook — A precious fluid
377. Maria Damon — for dylan, parody and palindrome fans, a triple bill
378. Catherine Daly — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
379. Tom Orange — Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
380. Barry Schwabsky — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
381. Mark Weiss — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
382. phanero — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
383. Frances Blau — Memorial reading for kari edwards
384. Ruth Lepson — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
385. Daniel Machlin — Futurepoem/Jill Magi Book Party 3/29

20 MAR 2007

386. Jim Andrews — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
387. linda norton — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
388. kom9os — maclow

389. heidi arnold — Tuntha-obas/edson
390. Halvard Johnson — Re: Tuntha-obas/edson
391. Lou Rowan — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
392. Jennifer Karmin — 3/24: Soup & Tart Chicago
393. Michael Alain Soubbotnik — Flaubert's notebook as a poem
394. Montgomery fuller — International Poetry Day event on Wednesday, March 21 2007 Montreal Mus...
395. Rod Smith — New @ Bridge Street: Age of Huts, Don't Ever Get Famous, Saints of Hysteria, Sh...
396. Evan Munday — Rachel Zolf's Human Resources
397. Betsy Andrews — upcoming readings for Betsy Andrews
398. Russo, Linda V. — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
399. Nick LoLordo — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
400. linda norton — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
401. Nico Vassilakis — SOUND/VISUAL/DIGITAL/POETRIES
402. Alan Sondheim — Left Behind
403. P Ganick — the list from BLUE LION BOOKS

21 MAR 2007

404. Wystan Curnow — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
405. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
406. agj — Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
407. agj — And this -- Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
408. amy king — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow - my tiny anecdote
409. amy king — Re: Poet Jackson MacLow - my tiny anecdote
410. Ruth Lepson — Re: Left Behind
411. Russo, Linda V. — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
412. phanero — wwwwwwwww - Hol Hummmmmmmmm, "Domestic Interior" [K]
413. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: And this -- Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
414. Sheila Murphy — blue lion books
415. Christophe Casamassima — Coolidge Quote
416. Tom Beckett — Re: Coolidge Quote
417. Michael Alain Soubbotnik — Re: Coolidge Quote
418. Skip Fox — Re: Coolidge Quote
419. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Armantrout review in Sunday Times Book Review
420. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
421. thom donovan — ROBERT KOCIK contact info ?????????????
422. Patrick F. Durgin — Hannah Weiner's Open House
423. Joel Weishaus — "The Way North"-3 Text-1
424. Tisa Bryant — NYC Encyclopedia Event @ Bowery Poetry Club 3/31!
425. UbuWeb — MoMA and UbuWeb Present - March 28th: Bergvall, Byrum, Fitterman & Goldsmith

22 MAR 2007

426. Barry Schwabsky — Hejinian and Watten at Parasol Unit, 29 March
427. mIEKAL aND — Fwd: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
428. Daniel Machlin — Jill Magi/Futurepoem Book Party 3/29
429. Christophe Casamassima — coolidge quotes...
430. Patrick F. Durgin — Hannah Weiner's Open House TOC
431. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: This Weekend at Woodland Pattern: Betsy Andrews & Fleda Brown
432. agj — Re: Chinese Village Struggles to Save Dying Language
433. Nick Carbo — poetry summer in france! fiction too
434. Dan Coffey — performance poets
435. Poetry Project — Events at the Poetry Project 3/26 - 3/31
436. Tim Peterson — New on Mappemunde: Tim Peterson's blog

23 MAR 2007

437. Nada Gordon — BOOK PARTY 4/1 FOLLY by Nada Gordon
438. Steensen,Sasha — Bonfire Press / chapbook by Graham Foust
439. Alan Sondheim — bols
440. L Trent — Looking for innovative form/constraint-based poetry at 21 Stars Review
441. Dan Waber — vispoets.com weekly winner
442. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
443. Nick Piombino — new on fait accompli
444. Christophe Casamassima — Father's Poetry
445. kevin thurston — Re: Father's Poetry
446. Ann Bogle — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
447. andrews — Fw: Sally Silvers in New Solo, Tues. March 27, Joyce Soho
448. Jennifer Karmin — March 31 deadline - Political Poems
449. P Ganick — revised list of BLUELIONBOOKS
450. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"

24 MAR 2007

451. ALDON L NIELSEN — Brathwaite Tonight
452. Maria Damon — Re: Brathwaite Tonight
453. Jesse Glass — Philip Terry's Oulipoems Available from Ahadada Books
454. Jim Andrews — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
455. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
456. davidbchirot — FWD: UberTrashung from F L U X
457. Slaughter, William — Notice: Mudlark
458. Stephen Vincent — What she did! Susan Stein at SPT
459. Elizabeth Treadwell — Re: What she did! Suzanne Stein at SPT
460. Michael Rothenberg — CELEBRATING ED DORN WAY MORE WEST ST. MARK'S

25 MAR 2007

461. { brad brace } — 1,254 new illustrated two-word P-poems
462. Elizabeth Treadwell — Shearsman Books Party at Canessa Park this afternoon (San Francisco)
463. Sina Queyras — Re: What she did! Susan Stein at SPT
464. noah eli gordon — Denver: Sat., March 31 4pm: [redacted] Church, 1600 South Pearl Street
465. Nicholas Karavatos — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
466. Russo, Linda V. — What she did! Suzanne Stein at SPT
467. Charles Bernstein — Lazer & Armantrout reading in LA on 3/27
468. Stephen Vincent — Re: What she did! Suzanne Stein at SPT
469. Alan Sondheim — two danceworks for you and me
470. Mary Kasimor — Re: What she did! Suzanne Stein at SPT
471. Dr. Barry S. Alpert — Bauhaus, WChUTEMAS, Black Mountain, Media Study SUNY-Buffalo

26 MAR 2007

472. Andrew Zawacki — VERSE Festival
473. Wystan Curnow — poet on the move
474. Bob Marcacci — Episode 21 of THE COUNTDOWN featuring ALAN SONDHEIM!
475. Philip Metres — coverage of Israeli and Palestinian poets on Lehrer
476. Dan Waber — ars poetica update
477. Bob Heman — CLWN WR reading / new issue debut / this thursday March 29
478. Murat Nemet-Nejat — Re: Ibis Editions poets on "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer"
479. amy king — This Friday -- Stackhouse, Fieled, & Henrikson
480. Michael Kelleher — Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter 3.26.07-4.01.07
481. Thomas savage — Re: Father's Poetry
482. CA Conrad — complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
483. Ann Bogle — Fwd: poetry of Iraq
484. Christophe Casamassima — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
485. Alan Sondheim — For spoken improvised pomewhirreks

486. Christophe Casamassima — Submit!
487. Chris Stroffolino — Suzanne Stein at SPT
488. Stephen Vincent — Re: Suzanne Stein at SPT
489. Evan Munday — bpNichol Chap-Book Award
490. Abigail Child — Orchard Gallery opening, "Perilous Fictions" + Tribeca Premiere
491. melissa benham — What she did! Suzanne Stein at SPT
492. Lewis Warsh — Dennis Moritz at BPC

27 MAR 2007

493. Carrie hunter — Re: Submit!
494. Geoffrey Gatza — US Attorney General investigates BlazeVOX books
495. SHANE RHODES — The Bindery by Shane Rhodes
496. Charles Baldwin — Leonardo Electronic Almanac - CFP: Dispersive Anatomies Special
497. Nick Piombino — King of the Brooklyn School
498. Alan Sondheim — the covered
499. Kathleen Ossip — Summer Writers Colony at the New School
500. Leonard Kress — CIA
501. Nico Vassilakis — Book Launch (Sort of) and Event Reminder
502. Adam Morey — Bruce Andrews
503. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: Call Your Senators NOW!Peace Action Prevent War with Iran
504. paolo javier — 2nd Ave Poetry Reading III, 4/7, 730 pm
505. Charles Bernstein — New McGann: Prepub discount
506. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: [mailart] Mail Art Show from Uruguay
507. noah eli gordon — Poets on Painters Catalogs Now Available
508. Steve Evans — Little Magazines on Poetry Daily
509. SCOTT HOWARD — Call for Work: Reconfigurations

28 MAR 2007

510. Daniel Machlin — Reminder: Futurepoem Book Party NYC 3/29
511. Ian Randall Wilson — Book Publication
512. Anny Ballardini — Re: King of the Brooklyn School
513. Christina Milletti — Exhibit X Fiction presents Shelley Jackson March 30
514. David A. Kirschenbaum — Advertise in Boog City 40
515. Mark Weiss — reading in Glasgow
516. Poetics List — Poetics Welcome Message
517. Geoffrey Gatza — on behalf of Kent Johnson
518. Tenney Nathanson — BOO interview w Harryette Mullen--transcript? help? (sub-topic: QUICK he…
519. Betsy Andrews — Poet Betsy Andrews Reads at New College: March 31st, 6:30 PM
520. Betsy Andrews — Betsy Andrews & Brian Teare at Black Oak Books, Sunday

29 MAR 2007

521. David Baratier — Theory of Orange
522. kevin thurston — republican sound poetry?
523. Michael Kelleher — Buffalo Small Press Book Fair Schedule
524. julia bloch — Tom Devaney & John Coletti April 4 at Penn
525. Ken Rumble — Readings in Pittsburgh or Cleveland Areas?
526. Metta Sama — X-Posting: for current & former Michigan residents
527. noah eli gordon — Moles Not Molar
528. Joshua Kotin — Chicago Review | British Poetry Issue
529. Tom W. Lewis — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
530. Stephen Vincent — Re: Chicago Review | British Poetry Issue
531. David-Baptiste Chirot — Re: Suzanne Stein at SPT/An Entropy of deju vu all over again?
532. David-Baptiste Chirot — FW: Woodland Pattern: Opening this Sunday: Joel Lipman
533. Tom W. Lewis — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
534. Poetry Project — Events at the Poetry Project 3/30 - 4/13
535. Catherine Daly — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed

536. Tom W. Lewis — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
537. Hugh Behm-Steinberg — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
538. Marcus Bales — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
539. Stephen Vincent — Re: Suzanne Stein at SPT/An Entropy of deju vu all over again?
540. agj — David-Baptiste Chirot
541. agj — Re: David-Baptiste Chirot 2
542. Gabrielle Welford — Re: David-Baptiste Chirot 2

30 MAR 2007

543. Alan Sondheim — sorcery
544. Sam Ladkin — Invitation
545. Alexander Dickow — agj on dbchirot
546. Tom W. Lewis — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
547. amy king — Tonight is Poetry ...
548. Dan Waber — vispoets.com weekly winner
549. Catherine Daly — Barack Obama
550. Crane's Bill Books — Bill Knott's blog
551. Ugo Calvigioni — Amor Líquido - LaLupe.com
552. Tom W. Lewis — clothing makes the poet
553. Eric Dickey — Re: clothing makes the poet
554. Chris Stroffolino — Re: clothing makes the poet
555. Tom W. Lewis — Re: clothing makes the poet
556. Marcus Bales — Re: clothing makes the poet

31 MAR 2007

557. JFK — Re: Chicago
558. Peter Ciccariello — I am home to all my marking distance
559. Dale Smith — po-fart.blogspot.com
560. David A. Kirschenbaum — Boog City 1 PDF Now Available Free
561. David Baratier — This Sunday, reading in NYC
562. angela vasquez-giroux — Re: clothing makes the poet
563. Jesse Seldess — Caroline Bergvall's email address?
564. Christophe Casamassima — Re: clothing makes the poet
565. Nick Piombino — Tony Scott dies
566. Vernon Frazer — Re: Tony Scott dies
567. Charles Bernstein — Elaine Equi Sunday Times review
568. Catherine Daly — az humanities council
569. Bob Heman — new chapbook - Cone Investigates - now available from Poets Wear Prada
570. Nick Piombino — Re: Elaine Equi Sunday Times review
571. Robert Perlman — AGNI's Shocking Remarks
572. Sawbuck — sawbuck 1.3
573. steve d. dalachinsky — coming up
574. e.g. vajda — April 7th Nonsense Company in Arizona
575. CA Conrad — Re: complicit actions dismissed in a frenzy of greed
576. agj — Re: clothing makes the poet

1. Nico Vassilakis

Fick Thus, short vispo vids & a new book

Wed 28 Feb 2007

---

http://www.nokturno.org/index.php?poeetta=vassilakis

Thanks to Marko J Niemi

&

from Otolith Press:

Nico Vassilakis: DIPTYCHS

60 pages, full colour

$15.00

webpage: http://www.lulu.com/content/670787

Introduction by Geof Huth

↑ Index

2. Adam Tobin

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Wed 28 Feb 2007

I don't think he attended Black Mountain College (did he??), but he was published in the first issue of the Black Mountain Review.

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Dr. Barry S. Alpert
Sent: Tuesday, February 27, 2007 9:16 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

No one has mentioned the school he attended, Black Mountain College.

Barry Alpert

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?
sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVE RAGE

↑ Index

3. UbuWeb

UbuWeb Featured Resources, March: Selected by Caroline Bergvall

Wed 28 Feb 2007

UbuWeb
http://ubu.com

UbuWeb Featured Resources:
March 2007
Selected by Caroline Bergvall

1. Augusto de Campos' "Dias Dias Dias" spoken by Caetano Veloso 1979 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/decampos_augusto/DeCampos-Augusto_Veloso-Caetano_Dias%20Dias%20Dias_1979.mp3

2. Robert Ashley, "In Sara Mencken, Christ and Beethoven There Were Men and Women" 1972 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/ashley_robert/Ashley-Robert_In-Sara-Mencken.mp3

3. People Like Us, "The Sacred Erm" 2002 (MP3)
http://mediamogul.seas.upenn.edu/pennsound/authors/People-Like-Us/Recyclopaedia_Britannica_%5B2002%5D/People-Like-Us_05-The-Sacred-Erm.mp3

4. Beth Anderson, "Ocean Motion Mildew Mind" 1979 (MP3)
http://media.sas.upenn.edu/pennsound/authors/Anderson/Anderson-Beth_Ocean-Mildew-Mind.mp3

5. John Cage, "excerpt from Silence" 1969 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/dial_a_poem_poets/disconnected/Disconnected_07_cage.mp3

6. Meredith Monk "Rally" 1977 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/airwaves/Airwaves_06_MONK_RALLY.mp3

7. Miya Masakoa, "Ritual with Giant Hissing Madagascar Cockroaches" (excerpt) (MP3)
http://media.sas.upenn.edu/pennsound/groups/ICA_Boston_2006/Music_Overheard/12_Masakoa_Ritual_ICABoston_2006.mp3

8. John Ashbery, "A Blessing in Disguise" 1966 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/dial_a_poem_poets/corpse/Corpse_16_ashbery.mp3

9. On Kawara, "One Million Years" 1993 (MP3)
http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/kawara_on/Kawara-On_One-Million-Years.mp3

10. Roland Barthes, "Inaugural lecture at the Collège de France" 1977 (MP3) http://ubu.wfmu.org/sound/barthes_roland/Barthes-Roland_Lecon-inaugurale-au-College-de-France-7-Janvier-1977.mp3

Caroline Bergvall is a poet, performance writer and critic, loosely based in London. She works internationally and is involved in page-based as well as off-page and collaborative poetics. Latest book: FIG (Salt, 2005). Latest text-recordings: "Shorter Chaucer Tales" hosted at PennSound. She was the Director of Performance Writing, Dartington College of Arts (UK) and is currently co-Chair of Writing, Milton Avery School of the Arts, Bard College (NY).

--
UbuWeb
http://ubu.com

___ The fish are biting. Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing. http://searchmarketing.yahoo.com/arp/sponsoredsearch_v2.php

↑ Index

4. sandra de 1913

SIGHTINGS by Shin Yu Pai

Wed 28 Feb 2007

1913 Press is punchy to announce the arrival of its newest book

SIGHTINGS by Shin Yu Pai

a gathering of visual-poetic texts, from four distinct projects.

"The physicality of the work and her stunning visual experimentations originate from the body. Shin Yu Pai uses charts, diagrams and non-literary forms of all sorts, to poetically gauge the complexities of race and gender. Sightings: Selected Works is a gorgeous and brilliant collection." --Denise Duhamel

Each copy of the book has been individually altered by the artist. Please stop by the Small Press Distribution table at AWP to check it out!

Sightings: Selected Works [2000-2005]
$16
ISBN: 9780977935116
is available for purchase from:

1913 Press
http://journal1913.org/sightings.html

Small Press Distribution
http://www.spdbooks.org/SearchResults.asp?AuthorTitle=sightings or order signed copies directly from the author http://shinyupai.com/

email: [redacted]

"Sin Yu Pai's poems explode in a hundred urgent directions, with the incandescence of fireworks. Her book delves deep into modernist experiment, and draws back--not out of fear nor from a respect for convention--but only when the human imperative to communicate might otherwise be cut short. She is a young artist, of an age when a volume of 'selected poems' might seem egregious, but in this case it is fascinating to watch, in Sightings, the dyer's own hand judge, then set aside for us, the best of her amazing production." --Kevin Killian

Rolando Murillo of Murillo Design was was recently honored with a Gold ADDY award for his design of the Sightings cover. Check out Murillo Design, Inc. at http://www.murillodesign.com

"In Sightings, Shin Yu Pai skilfully brings together four different poetic approaches to draw attention to the language of the commonplace and innervate tensions in the social familiar. Her eye for detail incises the subterranean erotics of gymnasiums, mass transit, and grocery stores. She transports the reader into the fissures of somatic displacement that scar the surface of everyday life. In Sightings, Shin Yu Pai delivers a rare optic, one capable of uncanny reflection and conveying the immediacy of feeling." --David Michalski

Review/exam copies are available directly from 1913 Press: [redacted]
or
Shin Yu Pai: [redacted]

"In Sightings, Shin Yu Pai disrupts voyeurism by an increasingly disruptive text. The dazzling effect of these dismembered texts, which range from an eye test to a play in verse composed from phrases from a Chinese-English phrase book, is akin to exquisite corpses, texts that are sexual, unconscious, and social hybrids that are not characteristic of culture, western society, or imperialism." --Leslie Scalapino

Please check out 1913's other fine publications at AWP on the SPD table:

SEISMOSIS
the stunning collaboration between John Keene + Christopher Stackhouse http://journal1913.org/seismosis.html

and

1913 a journal of forms issue 2
with works by John Yau, Biswamit Dwibedy, Fanny Howe, Josely Vianna Baptista, Susan Maxwell, Theodore Harris...and many many more!
http://www.journal1913.org

1913 Press is still accepting entries for its ROZANOVA PRIZE through March 13, 2007:
http://journal1913.org/prizes.html

Thanks for your support of 1913
+
a Happy AWP to all!

http://journal1913.org/home.html
http://www.1913press.org

1913 Press
c/o Hollins University
Box 9654
Roanoke, Virginia
24020

*to be removed from this email list, please reply to sender with "remove from list" in the subject.

↑ Index

5. Daniel Godston

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Wed 28 Feb 2007

Aaron,

I'd say Edson belongs to a particular school in the way that Bill Knott, Emily Dickinson, William Bronk, Billie Holiday, Thelonious Monk & others like them belong to particular schools, which is to say I don't think they do. They're their own schools. They might be associated with other people or schools but their visions & particular expressions are singular and unique.

Dan

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group
[mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of Aaron Belz
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:47 PM

To: [redacted]
Subject: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Hey Poetics -

If you had to make a case that Russell Edson belongs to a particular school of American poetry, which one would it be? Language? NY School? My hunch is neither of those, so what do we call Edson's 'school'?

Just wondering,

Aaron

↑ Index

6. Tom W. Lewis
Re: laundrypoettry
Wed 28 Feb 2007

---

everyone's fine everyone's awake everyone's irish on the seventainth o' marsh

(speaking of, I will enjoy the lordly honor of staying at 5th & 54th the weekend of St. P's -- we hope to have front-row seats at the University Club for all the green-tinged mayhem -- anyone know of any pro-queer, counter- /anti- demos for that day in NYC?)

Irie as what Declan gave the corned beef in Kingston,

tl

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]]
On Behalf Of clifford Sent: Tuesday, February 27, 2007 23:27
To: [redacted]
Subject: laundrypoettry

Well laundrymats and "washing" hands etc. are interesting tropes, right?
like dig them two washerwomen in finnegans wake yapping away on tHe metaphorical banks of the liffey. a couple years back i and 3 friends did a recording of select passageS of Fwake the laundryladies gossipaceously chattering and we did a few quick loops and popped a tape in the soUnd system at the local "buanderie" and lo, it was hardly noticed. but then again who hears or reads finnegans walke? it was fun.

i figure no matter how ya cut the finnegans wake had to be written so irish ears can hear it. no matter how innovative or not the building they inhabit.
or how forlorn.
So it goes, eh? as old man Kurt Vonnegut , has it.

↑ Index

7. Tom W. Lewis
Recall: laundrypoettry
Wed 28 Feb 2007

Lewis, Tom (Cases/3d Party Content) (West) would like to recall the message, "laundrypoettry".

↑ Index

8. charles alexander warehouse district
Wed 28 Feb 2007

For a fair report on the arts warehouse issue in Tucson effecting Chax Press and several other artists and organizations:

http://www.tucsonweekly.com/gbase/Currents/Content?oid=oid:93099

↑ Index

9. Alexander Jorgensen
Poetry and a Strange Revelation for this BAD speller
Wed 28 Feb 2007

Am sitting in the bathroom at the library. There are maybe 6 toliets, and that's including the roomier one for those who need more space. Each is full and entering I know this because of where the toliets are in relationship to the door and then everyone's feet.
Well, clearly, and I learn this soon after hanging up my coat and bookbag, occupants are going poop and sounds, fart and poop sounds, start. I sit with my eyes closed, contemplating if it might be nicer having more privacy, dignified, and start to doze. Sleepy and, oh, all of a sudden I think of being underwater, the well-tiled bathroom filling with echoes, as if,

nearly, swimming, an ocean pod, felt just like was listening to whales.

agj

_____
___
Never miss an email again!
Yahoo! Toolbar alerts you the instant new Mail arrives.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/toolbar/features/mail/

↑ Index

10. Stephen Vincent
Nouveau de Blog
Wed 28 Feb 2007

http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

Some Recent Mainly Photo-Text Street Works:

Proust Among the Homeless
Roman Typeface Versus Script
Lawrence Weiner & My Mother Go to Hong Kong
Winter Lantern - Magritte
T-Shirt Without Vowels
Homeless Blanket / Basketball Court Dreams

As always, appreciate responses.

Stephen Vincent
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

11. Nico Vassilakis
SUbTExT/Seattle - RObert Fitterman & BRyant Mason 3/7/07
Wed 28 Feb 2007

Subtext continues its monthly series of experimental writing with readings by Rob Fitterman & Bryant Mason at Richard Hugo House on Wednesday, March 7, 2007. Donations for admission will be taken at the door on the evening of the performance. The reading starts at 7:30pm.

Robert Fitterman is the author of nine books of poetry including: Metropolis XXX: The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire (Edge Books), winner of the Small Press Traffic "Book of the Year Award" in 2003, and Metropolis 1-15 (Sun & Moon Press), which received the Sun & Moon "New American Poetry Award" in 2000. With novelist Rodrigo Rey Rosa, he co-authored the film What Sebastian Dreamt, a selection of the Sundance Film Festival (2004) and the Lincoln Center Latin Beat Festival (2004). A full-time faculty member in NYU's General Studies Program since 1993, he has also taught at Bard College, Bennington College, and St. Mark's Poetry Project.

Bryant Mason writes code and lives in Seattle. He is a founding member of the Subtext Collective. In 2003, members of the collective performed his multi-voice collage of the work of Louis Zukofsky at the Beyond Text Festival in Los Angeles. Texts under his name have appeared in certain finer publications such as Talisman, Score, and Birddog.

The future Subtext schedule is:

Apr 4, 2007: Curtis Bonney and TBA

May 2, 2007: Charles Alexander and Tim Risher

Jun 6, 2007: Subtext Anniversary Reading - Details TBA

For info on these & other Subtext events, see our website:
http://www.speakeasy.org/~subtext

OTHER EVENTS AROUND TOWN

March 10, 2007: Local author Sarah Mangold (Bird Dog, Household Mechanics) will be reading with Philadelphia poet Sina Queyras (Lemon Hound) at the Elliott Bay Bookstore. The reading starts at 7:30pm.

↑ Index

12. Clay Banes

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Thu 1 Mar 2007

---

did he?

http://www.naropa.edu/notenoughnight/fall05/AnselmHollo_fa05.html
http://garylehmann.blogspot.com/2005/11/weird-wacky-world-of-russell-edson.html

On 2/28/07, Adam Tobin <[redacted]> wrote:
> I don't think he attended Black Mountain College (did he??), but he was > published in the first issue of the Black Mountain Review.

>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of Dr. Barry S. Alpert
> Sent: Tuesday, February 27, 2007 9:16 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
>
> No one has mentioned the school he attended, Black Mountain College.
>
> Barry Alpert
>
> _____
> The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
> http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?
sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVE
> RAGE
>

--
EYEBALL HATRED
http://claytonbanes.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

13. Charlie Rossiter

poems poetc etc

Thu 1 Mar 2007

I like the idea of NOT using this list as a showcase for poems, journal jottings etc...

I DO appreciate announcements of calls for submissions, readings, other potentially useful info. Though I would appreciate it if folks would not assume we know what city they're in from the street address.

Two things things this got me thinking about...

1. does our listmeister have a way of determining where list members actually are in the physical world? I'd be interested in knowing

2. I wonder what poetics issues people would like to discuss. There's no reason there couldn't be the question/issue of the week that could be discussed without banning other types of posts.

Charlie

--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
Charlie said that.
www.poetrypoetry.com
where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them

www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues

www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
hear Charlie as solo performance poet

www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)

www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

14. Steve Halle

Tim Yu on Seven Corners

Thu 1 Mar 2007

Tim Yu is the featured poet this week on Seven Corners
(www.sevencornerspoetry.blogspot.com). Please take a minute to check out his excellent work.

Other recent posts: Jackie K. White, Mary Biddinger, Adam Fieled

Cheers,
Steve Halle
editor, Seven Corners
www.sevencornerspoetry.blogspot.com www.stevehalle.blogspot.com

↑ Index

15. Crane's Bill Books

Reminder: 31 Words

Thu 1 Mar 2007

A reminder: April 1 deadline

*

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS:

Crane's Bill Books seeks writing on any subject and in any style for a very spare anthology. Must be (1) prose, (2) untitled, and (3) exactly thirty-one words. Multiple submissions okay.

THIRTY-ONE will be published in 2007 as a small, inexpensive, desktop artist's book. Payment will be in copies. Feel free to forward this announcement to anyone you think might be interested.

Thanks!
J.A. Lee
Crane's Bill Books

*

[redacted]
www.torriblezone.com/cp2.html

↑ Index

16. David A. Kirschenbaum
NYC Tonight* Boog City presents Ecopoetics*
Thu 1 Mar 2007

please forward

Boog City Celebrates the Renegade Press

Ecopoetics
(Bowdoinham, Maine)

Thurs. March 1, 6:00 p.m., free

ACA Galleries
529 W.20th St., 5th Flr.
NYC

Event will be hosted by Ecopoetics editor Jonathan Skinner

Featuring readings and music from

Marcella Durand
Robert Kocik
Michelle Nagai
Julie Patton
Damian Weber
Lila Zemborain

And a new book from Robert Kocik

There will be wine, cheese, and crackers, too.

Curated and with an introduction by Boog City editor David Kirschenbaum

---

Ecopoetics http://www.ecopoetics.org Ecopoetics is an annual journal dedicated to exploring creative-critical edges between writing (with an emphasis on poetry) and ecology (the theory and praxis of deliberate earthlings). It is edited and designed by Jonathan Skinner, in Bowdoinham, Maine. The sixth issue will appear this spring. Free pdfs of back issues can be downloaded at the above website.

Performer Bios

Marcella Durand
http://www.bigbridge.org/bigmdurand.htm
Marcella Durand is the author of The Anatomy of Oil (Belladonna, 2005), Western Capital Rhapsodies (Faux Press, 2001), City of Ports (Situations, 1999), and Lapsus Linguae (Situations, 1995). She lives in the East Village.

Robert Kocik http://www.arras.net/circulars/archives/000498.html Robert Kocik's works include AUKSO (Object, 1995) and Overcoming Fitness (Autonomedia, 2001). He founded the Bureau of Material Behaviors in 1996. In 1997 he began research in the Sore, Oversensitive, Insecure, and Subtle Sciences, discovering the logosome (key to the sexual transmissibility of artwork) and the prosopath (particulate unit in the relationship between prosody and disease). In 2001 he founded Poetry Outsource (missing social service responding to poets' lack of place in the culture).

Michelle Nagai http://www.treetheater.org/ Composer Michelle Nagai creates site-specific performances, installations, radio broadcasts, dances, and other interactions that address the human state in relationship to its setting. The American Composers Forum, Eyebeam, Harvestworks, the Jerome and McKnight Foundations, Meet the Composer, and Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute have supported her work.

Julie Patton http://home.jps.net/~nada/patton.htm Julie Patton is a performance artist and writer. She is busy working on various community development/greenspace/sustainability projects under the rubric of Think Green! Her new chapbook Notes for Some (Nominally) Awake is forthcoming. Julie often takes to the road for various collaborative projects with Uri Caine, and is a fellow at Bates College's Green Horizons Project in Maine, where she collaborates with Jonathan Skinner.

Damian Weber
http://housepress.org/weber.html
Damian Weber, of the House Press collective, edits Source Material in Brooklyn. His latest CD is "It's Not Me & It's Not You & It's Not Dreamy."

Lila Zemborain
http://www.eluniversal.com/verbigracia/memoria/N142/creacion.htm Lila Zemborain is the author of Abrete sésamo debajo del agua, Usted, Guardianes del secreto, Malvas orquídeas del mar /Mauve-Sea Orchids (forthcoming from Belladonna Books), and Rasgado. She has authored the book-length essay Gabriela Mistral, Una mujer sin rostro. Lila is the director and editor of the Rebel Road Series, and the curator of the KJCC Poetry Series at New York University.

Directions: C/E to 23rd St., 1/9 to 18th St.
Venue is bet. 10th and 11th avenues

Next event:
Thurs. April 12, Corollary Press (Philadelphia)

--
David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

17. ian davidson
Skald 24
Thu 1 Mar 2007

Skald 24 is now available.

Featuring, in order of appearance:

Jeff Hilson, Wendy Mulford, Matt Jarvis, jUSTIN kATKO, Anon, John Latta, Liz Kirby, Michael Haslam, Sarah Crangle, Ian Seed, Stephen Rodefer, Jacqueline Sousa, Eric Elshtain, Peter Hughes.

Editors: Zoe Skoulding and Ian Davidson

A5, 32pp of some of the best poetry around, for about £2.50 inc postage and packing. Subscribe for £4.00 for two issues, post free. Double it all up for Euros or Dollars.

Hard to make it any cheaper. Buy now. Keep poetry on paper.

Paypal can’t get past the Snowdonia range so send your money in cash or cheques to Skald at 6, Hill Street, Menai Bridge, Anglesey, Wales, LL59 5AG, UK.

_____ Get Messenger FREE on your Mobile https://livemessenger.mobile.uk.msn.com/

↑ Index

18. Dr. Barry S. Alpert

Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?

Thu 1 Mar 2007

I spoke with Russell Edson at length about this matter years ago, and although the documentation of that occasion was burned beyond retrieval, I'm virtually certain he told me he did attend Black Mountain College. For how long is another matter. Without checking my run of the Black Mountain Review (currently in storage), I didn't want to state that Robert Creeley included Edson's work in that magazine, though my memory told me so. Finally, a publisher of many Black Mountain faculty and students, Jargon, also published a book by Edson. If you have to connect Russell Edson with a school, I'd argue that reconnecting him with Black Mountain College is both literally accurate and refreshing, and could potentially expand his present readership. Barry Alpert

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

19. Adam Fieled

"Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

Thu 1 Mar 2007

I think some of you might find this interesting: "Charles Bernstein..."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

"Sometimes I feel the need to move on..."

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

Get your own web address.
Have a HUGE year through Yahoo! Small Business.

↑ Index

20. Dan Waber
visual poets
Thu 1 Mar 2007

It's alive.

http://www.vispoets.com/

If it seems a little quiet in there, that's because you're not saying anything, yet. Consider this your invitation to do so.

It's a gallery, it's a directory, it's a group of forums, it's an aggregator. It's able to grow organically as needs develop.

Please spread the word as far and wide as you're willing and able.

Features too numerous to list. Short version for those of you who haven't already clicked and started poking around on your own:

--online gallery space for visual poets

free, easy, automagical in many ways (teachers, looking for a good place to find a wide range of visual poetry?)

--web-based discussion forums that support attachments

Any special visual poetry interest not being served by their own forum can have one made for them very easily. Low-fi version available for those on dial-up who just really want the text and nothing else.

--calendar of visual poetry events

Currently one general calendar, but it's a trivial matter to add other calendars as needed. What do you want/need?

--social networking bells and whistles

Friends, mutual friends, private messaging, alerts when threads you're in are updated, you name it. Did you know yesterday was David-Baptiste Chirot's birthday?

--RSS aggregation w/ community commenting

Through the magic of modern technology, the board updates as RSS-enabled visual poetry related blogs are updated. If you think the visitors to vispoets.com would be interested in your RSS feed, say the word and we'll get it added.

Yes, you have to register to make posts (but not to read them). Yes, the forums are moderated.

Thank you to all the alpha and beta testers who've been bumping into things and trying to break things.

Extra special thank you to Karl Kempton for impetus, Klaus Peter Dencker for guidance, and Marko Niemi for letting me sucker him into assisting with the admin responsibilities.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

21. Jesse Crockett
Re: laundrypoettry
Thu 1 Mar 2007

---

come to me baby.

we write weather poetry.

the woman we love she got 3 friends they all read finnegans wake.

further we prefer lovelorn, tho someone else beats you to it, mhmm.

clifford wrote:
> Well laundrymats and "washing" hands etc. are interesting tropes, right?
> like dig them two washerwomen in finnegans wake yapping away on tHe > metaphorical banks of the liffey. a couple years back i and 3 friends > did a > recording of select passageS of Fwake the laundryladies gossipaceously > chattering and we did a few quick loops and popped a tape in the soUnd > system at the local "buanderie" and lo, it was hardly noticed. but then > again who hears or reads finnegans walke? it was fun.
> i figure no matter how ya cut the finnegans wake had to be written so > irish > ears can hear it. no matter how innovative or not the building they > inhabit.
> or how forlorn.
> So it goes, eh? as old man Kurt Vonnegut , has it.

↑ Index

22. christopher.winks
Fw: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
Thu 1 Mar 2007

Vibrant Gray is a journal dedicated to the in-between. Whether it's in-between sex, politics, religion, or culture, we want the work that falls through the cracks. In a society that says that the world is black and white, this journal celebrates this world as gray.

Email all submissions (fiction, nonfiction, and poetry) to [redacted]. Be sure to include the title of the piece and the genre in the subject line.

↑ Index

23. Halvard Johnson

Hamilton Stone Review, Issue 11, Winter 2007, Now Online!

Thu 1 Mar 2007

****

Hamilton Stone Review, Issue 11, Winter 2007, Now Online!

Featuring nonfiction by Jim Murphy; fiction by Julie Compton, Marilyn Coffey, Suzanne McConnell, Harold Klapper, and Sybil Kollar; and poetry by Maxianne
Berger, Roger Day, Andrew Burke, Sally Van Doren, James Davies, Simon Perchik, Mary Rising Higgins, Rodney Nelson, Elizabeth Kate Switaj, Jason Wilkinson, Michael Young, R. L. Swihart, Maurice Oliver, and Chanming Yuan.

http://www.hamiltonstone.org/hsr11.html

--- ---

Submissions to the Hamilton Stone Review

Hamilton Stone Review invites submissions of both poetry and fiction for Issue #12, which will be out in June 2007. Poetry submissions should go, only by email, directly to Halvard Johnson at [redacted]. Send fiction submissions to Lynda Schor at [redacted].

--- ---

Hamilton Stone Review is produced by Hamilton Stone Editions

http://www.hamiltonstone.org/

PLEASE SEND THIS ALONG TO OTHERS

****

↑ Index

24. Poetry Project

Events at the Poetry Project 3/5 - 3/7

Thu 1 Mar 2007

Dear Ones of the Coming Spring,

Please join us.

Love,

The Poetry Project

Monday, March 5, 8:00 pm
Open Reading

sign-up at 7:45

Wednesday, March 7, 8:00 pm
Carla Harryman & Anne Tardos

Carla Harryman is known for her genre-disrupting prose, poetry, and performance. Her most recent books are the novel Gardener of Stars, Baby, and the special edition Tourjour l'epine est sous la rose translated by Martin Richet from There Never Was a Rose Without a Thorn. Books forthcoming in 2007 include a selection of conceptual essays, Adorno's Noise, from Essay Press and a poem, Open Box, to be published as a special edition by Belladonna Books. She is co-editor of Lust for Life: On the Writings of Kathy Acker (Verso, 2006) and a contributor to the multi-authored experiment in autobiography, The Grand Piano, a serial work that locates its project in the San Francisco Bay Area writing scene between 1975-1980. Anne Tardos is a poet, composer and visual artist. She is the author of five books of multilingual poetry, and has lectured and performed her works widely in the United States and Europe. Her performance work, Among Men, was produced as a radio play by (WDR) West German Radio. Examples of her visual texts were exhibited at the MOMA, New York; the Venice Biennale; Museo d'Arte Moderna, Bolzano; the New Museum, NY; and the Neuberger Museum of Art. Her latest CD is a recording of music by herself and Jackson Mac Low, performed at Roulette in 1999.

Become a Poetry Project Member! http://poetryproject.com/membership.php

Winter Calendar: http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

The Poetry Project is located at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery
131 East 10th Street at Second Avenue
New York City 10003
Trains: 6, F, N, R, and L.
[redacted]
www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $8, $7 for students/seniors and $5 for members (though now those who take out a membership at $85 or higher will get in FREE to all regular readings).

We are wheelchair accessible with assistance and advance notice. For more info call [redacted].

If you¹d like to be unsubscribed from this mailing list, please drop a line at [redacted].

↑ Index

25. mIEKAL aND
Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
Thu 1 Mar 2007

---

what about genres that are inbetween?

On Mar 1, 2007, at 1:41 PM, [redacted] wrote:

> Vibrant Gray is a journal dedicated to the in-between. Whether it's in-between sex, politics, religion, or culture, we want the work that falls through the cracks. In a society that says that the world is black and white, this journal celebrates this world as gray.
>
> Email all submissions (fiction, nonfiction, and poetry) to [redacted]. Be sure to include the title of the piece and the genre in the subject line.

↑ Index

26. Joel Weishaus
Fw: letter
Thu 1 Mar 2007

William Witherup and Sterling Bunnell will be reading at Bird & Beckett Books & Records. 2788 Diamond St. at Chenery, San Francisco, CA. [redacted].
Monday, March 5th, 7 pm.
Open Mike following. Admission free.

Thanks

↑ Index

27. Dillon Westbrook
Re: Events at the Poetry Project 3/5 - 3/7
Thu 1 Mar 2007

use|usage, an on-line journal of critical poetics, is seeking submissions for its inaugural issue "Building Prospects".

Deadline for submissions for the first issue is 4/30/07 (see submission guidelines below)

The journal offers poetry and essays on contemporary issues that reach outside of literature. Our first issue, Building Prospects, focuses on architecture and what Kojin Karatani called the “architectonic”- the way in which architecture becomes a structure of thought for the culture that lives through and in it. Very many of us spend the majority of our day in buildings, whether they are called “home” “office” “factory” or “school”, yet we rarely are called upon to reflect on their nature. Building Prospects looks both towards this nature and towards the future of our interactions with architecture. As such, we are paying particular attention to the idea of green building, what it means and what its effect will be on the rest of our consciousness. We are accepting poems touching on all or any of these areas until we have met our quota. The essay collaboration for this issue has already begun, but feel free to look towards future collaboration on these topics:

Sound Sorting
Computer/Author
Healthy Ideas

We do poetry and we do criticism, but not criticism of poetry- that’s the next factory over. Our criticism is of “the world”, that scary place we encounter when we leave the factory each night. Criticism is a joint effort between our editor and reader volunteers. If you want to help with our critique, read over the list of future topics, and submit your resume of relevant experience for inclusion as a collaborator. If you have ideas for future topics, feel free to submit a proposal. Remember that we are trying to keep our topics useful- we are trying to help!- so include some explanation of why an essay on the topic you are proposing would be useful to our audience.

We welcome, with open arms, poetry for our current topic, and will select poems from up to 10 authors for each issue. We prefer fewer authors with more poems, but are interested only in poems by those authors that address our topic area. For each issue, we will publish a set of topic hints and ephemera, in the hopes of steering you aright (for this issue's topic guidelines, see above). There are no “experimental” or “avant-garde” will never appear outside of scare quotes in these guidelines. use|usage is most interested in poems that do the work that needs doing in surprising or unlikely ways- we'd be equally surprised at a qualified villanelle as we would a qualified google poem. use|usage will not discriminate against applicants for reason of historical tradition or poetic orientation- we are an equal-opportunity exploiter of resources.

-Submissions should be e-mailed (not currently accepting print submissions) to: [redacted] -Please put only the following in the title line: building prospects submission -If your submission is accepted, you will be contacted by e-mail - use|usage editor will keep the e-mail of anyone whose work is not accepted and send out a courtesy notice to let you know that your work was not accepted and that its submission rights are once again free and clear. If you want further feedback as to the nature of the decision, feel free to reply back to this e-mail. In general, determinations will weigh relevance to theme most heavily, followed by intellectual and aesthetic considerations. - use|usage is not interested in simultaneous or previously published submissions (use|usage is slightly paranoid and too broke to afford a lawyer). -Submissions preferred as word documents, though we will accept jpegs or pdfs if you want to maintain your layout strictly. These will open in the reader's default pdf application. Future issues may include expanded media options.

↑ Index

28. Dillon Westbrook

woops- meant to retitle (use|usage)

Thu 1 Mar 2007

---

call for submissions was not in response to Poetry Project. Just being lazy with opening new message, sorry for confusion.

↑ Index

29. Lou Rowan

Golden Handcuffs Review#8 now out

Thu 1 Mar 2007

Dear Colleagues, This issue, dedicated to Gilbert Sorrentino, includes chapters from his final novel; it features also a selection by Michael Rothenberg of work by Bay Area writers AND new poems from the Jack Spicer archive. The lineup: Mark Axelrod, Robin Blaser, David Bromige & Richard Denner, Bill Dorn, Paul Eluard, George Economou, Gloria Frym, Eckhard Gerdes, Peter Gizzi & Kevin Killian, Paul Griffiths, Katherine Hastings, Jack Hirschman, Bernard Hoepffner, Leslie Kaplan, Larry Kearney, Hank Lazer, Ron Loewinsohn, Douglas James Martin, David Matlin, Michael McClure, David Meltzer, Douglas Messerli, Thomas Meyer, Robert Mittenthal, Susan Smith Nash, Pat Nolan, Peter O'Leary, Toby Olson, Rochelle Owens, Michael Rothenberg, Lou Rowan, Judith Skillman, Christopher Sorrentino, Gilbert Sorrentino, Jack Spicer, James Tierney, Norman Weinstein, Dallas Wiebe, Jonathan Williams. $6.95 US, 8.95 Canada. Subscriptions $12/ annum at Golden Handcuffs Review, Box 20158, Seattle, WA98102. The website will include excerpts from the new issue soon.

↑ Index

30. Alexander Jorgensen
CREELEY and Experminetalism
Thu 1 Mar 2007

Am reminded of Pound's biped - and creeley's attention to 'sense'; ie, that poetry has a place, regardless of the antics to add something to both culture and the lives of people (so-called, said: everyday).

agj

p.s. And he was RIGHT!

_____
Get your own web address.
Have a HUGE year through Yahoo! Small Business.
http://smallbusiness.yahoo.com/domains/?p=BESTDEAL

↑ Index

31. Fluffy Singler
Re: Poetry and a Strange Revelation for this BAD speller
Fri 2 Mar 2007

At 3:00 every day it becomes interminably hot in the subatomic basement where I work. Lower level three. I make my way to the bathroom and sit on the toilet, pants and underwear all the way up as if I am at my desk and shake, try to keep my muscles from bursting out of my beige skin and I talk myself back down. I take off my shirt in the beige room within a beige room and lean against the toilet with a silver pipe for my spine. It is cold enough to hurt even though - because - my flesh is so warm. I put my head in my hands and fight the urge to get up and go back to my desk.

From: Alexander Jorgensen <[redacted]>
Subject: Poetry and a Strange Revelation for this BAD speller

Am sitting in the bathroom at the library. There are maybe 6 toliets, and that's including the roomier one for those who need more space. Each is full and entering I know this because of where the toliets are in relationship to the door and then everyone's feet. Well, clearly, and I learn this soon after hanging up my coat and bookbag, occupants are going poop and sounds, fart and poop sounds, start. I sit with my eyes closed, contemplating if it might be nicer having more privacy, dignified, and start to doze. Sleepy and, oh, all of a sudden I think of being underwater, the well-tiled bathroom filling with echoes, as if, nearly, swimming, an ocean pod, felt just like was listening to whales. agj

↑ Index

32. Jesse Glass

Congrats To Shin Yu Pai on Sightings!

Fri 2 Mar 2007

It's a wonderful book! Jesse

↑ Index

33. Alan Sondheim

my sister's murder

Fri 2 Mar 2007

---

my sister's murder

you murdered my sister but i can get you off
my sister can get you off
afterwards you got off the bus
you murdered my sister but i can put you off for a while afterwards she put you off the bus
afterwards you were put off the scent of death
look my sister gave up the ghost
when she came for you you gave up
you took up far too much of her time
she took up sex to forget you
now you get take-out whenever you can trying to forget you once took her out
that night she gave out a bit of advice
the car gave out when you fled the crime
she screamed get out but you didn't leave
she got out of your way when you came for her
you put her out with the garbage and other stuff
because she'd put out and you wouldn't take yes for an answer

===

↑ Index

34. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: Russell Edson & Black Mountain & a query re this query re "what school?"

Fri 2 Mar 2007

I'v always associated at back of mind Russell Edson with Black Mountain, not as being OF the Black Mountain School but having gone TO the School, at least for a little bit and having published while there in connection with the School. When managing the Yankees and then the Mets the former Dodger baseball player Casey Stengel was famous for adding "You could look it up" to journalists obviously entertained by his stories, yet taking them with a grain of salt. So look it up I did, and not in the precusros to MacMillan's Baseball Encylopedia of Casey's time, but in Martion Duberman's classic Black Mountain An Exploration in Community, as was sure that is where I had gotten the idea of Edson being connected with th School at some point. Sure enough, on page 387 of editon i have (the first; New York: Dutton, 1972) Duberman writes:

Back in June 1951 the college had put together a publication based entirely on student and faculty work called The Bacak Mountain Review. Various people had shared the editorail work--M.C Richards, Joel Oppenheimer, Mary Fritton, Alex Kemeny, Hazel Larsen--and the contents had included Nick Cernovich's Noh play, Natasha Goldowski on "High Speed Computing Machines," poems by Russell Edson and Joel Oppenheimer, and a piece called "Father" by Fielding Dawson. Only theone issue ever appeared. A second got set in type, but there was simply no money for printing it. Whn Olson and Creeley decided to put out anew publication and to call it The Black Mountain review, they were apparently unaware of the 1951 effort (nor does Creeley make any mention of it in his preface to the 1969 reissue of the Review.)

Duberman goes on to point out that the two journals had nothing in common other than Joel Oppenheimer's also appearing in the 1954-7 Olson-Creeley publication and Fielding Dawson's also repeating, but in the later version only with a single drawing, not by any writing. Duberman also points out that the 1951 publication was an official organ of the college, and so only space giving to faculty and students, whereas the 54-57 journal was open to and included writers who had never set foot at the college. (Denise Levertov, Larry Eigner, Paul Blackburn, Paul Carroll are the ones Duberman points out at this juncture.)

So--Russell Edson went TO Black Mounatin and was published by the original official Black Mountain review, but is NOT considered a "Black Mountain School" poet as those among the ones chosen for publication by

Olson-Creeley are, either by direct connection with the college and BMR in some way as well as by way of Don Allen's giving them this name in The New American Poetry. (Allen's grouping was based on both BMR and Origin, and of his ten BMS poets only six were directly connected with the college.)

In interviews with Edson, and in one a writer here on the list quoted him from, he does not see himself at all as part of any school, though apparently he has called himself "Little Mr Prose Poem" at times. Going by the work as well as his statements, Edson is an original, a unique writer not of any movement, school or style. One can say he is a "genre writer" in that he writes "prose poems," but that is about it. I think what is much more interesting are the ways Edson talks about fiction giving birth to poetry, that poetry is like silent movies, and that it has relationships among the conscious and unconscious experience--what he calls a "waking dream". Interestingly in one interview Edson speaks of the current situation of poetry as "dull"--as a number of other poet commentators have been of late, among them Amiri Baraka in the Decemeber 2006-January 2007 issue of the Poetry Project Newsletter ("Why is Most Poetry So Boring--Again?", which especially singles out academic and Language poetries.)

Since this question was raised i have been wanting to ask Aaron Belz--what was the purpose of asking the qeustion? Is it a question that has a specific meaning or reason to you to ask? Or is it simply something to throw out to get the ball rolling so to speak, get something happening which is "of interest to poetics" when a few people asked why things were slow? Are you writing on Edson, or do you have any ideas of your own on the matter? What i mean is, I wondered what prompted this speciific question--what relevance it has as it is asked--does sticking Russel Edson in a particular box make his work any more salient? Important to you yourself in your sense of things? Enhance his value on the poetics market? Do you yourself desire or have an interested in there being a category for this writer? Russell Edson is always called "a hermit" or "reclusive" by those writing about/interviewing him, and he himself acknoweldges this aspect of his nature. I think by "reclusive" and "hermit" there is a sesne meant not only of a physical separtion from the "crowd," but also a literary sense of this, that the work stands apart from any grouping of schools, movements, categories. When a body of work and its author desire to be considered in themself, know themsleves to be so, separate from the standardizing impetus, why is there a counter desire to corral them, assert one's ability to "outsmart" or "outflank" the work and author and rein them in to a system? Mightn't this say more about the person with such an aim or desire than the work and author? Arent' there actually such works and beings of which and whom one may say they're "a true American original", that "they broke the mold when they made them?" And that that's a cause for celebration, inspiration and thanks--that there are such works and beings?

(in the anthology Open Poetry Four Anthologies of Expanded Poems edited by Ronald Gross & George Quasha with Emmett Williams, John Robert Colombo and Walter Lowenfels, (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1973), Edson is included in the section called "Metapoetry: The Poetry of Changes" edited by George Quasha. This includes such poets as Helen Adams, David Antin, George Bowering . . . Jim Harrison, Michael Heller, Anselm Hollo, Halvard Johnson . . . MacLow, Niedecker, Oppen, Rochelle Owens, Nicanor Parra, Schwerner, Simic, George Stanley . . . Nathaniel Tran, Diane Wakoski, Eliot Weinberger, Louis Zukofsky among others.

> From: "Dr. Barry S. Alpert" <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Russell Edson - what school is he?
> Date: Thu, 1 Mar 2007 11:44:13 -0500
>
> I spoke with Russell Edson at length about this matter years ago, and although the documentation of that occasion was burned beyond retrieval, I'm virtually certain he told me he did attend Black Mountain College. For how long is another matter. Without checking my run of the Black Mountain Review (currently in storage), I didn't want to state that Robert Creeley included Edson's work in that magazine, though my memory told me so. Finally, a publisher of many Black Mountain faculty and students, Jargon, also published a book by Edson. If you have to connect Russell Edson with a school, I'd argue that reconnecting him with Black Mountain College is both literally accurate and refreshing, and could potentially expand his present readership. Barry Alpert
>
> _____
> *Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms*
> https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian. http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

35. Barry Schwabsky

Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

Fri 2 Mar 2007

Bravo, Adam. Well said.

But here's my doubt: How does one determine, in the present, what or who is avant-garde? It can't only be lack of official recognition, because lots of things lack recognition for lots of reasons, for instance that they are mediocre. Is it just a matter of proclaiming oneself avant-garde, and refusing to seek official forms of recognition? Or does it only become clear retrospectively, in which case your argument might circular: The avant-gardists are the artists who count because avant-garde is just our name for the artists who count. Actually, the whole topic reminds me in a very uncomfortable way of religious controversies over who gains salvation and how to know who they are. So never mind, forget I ever brought it up.

Adam Fieled <[redacted]> wrote:

I think some of you might find this interesting: "Charles Bernstein..."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

"Sometimes I feel the need to move on..."

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

Get your own web address.
Have a HUGE year through Yahoo! Small Business.

↑ Index

36. Paul Nelson

Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

Fri 2 Mar 2007

Animal Crackers! HA! I loved that.

When discussing the avant-garde we must remember that it was originally a military term. In "The Transformative Vision", Jose Arguelles points out that the avant-garde is a "social institution peculiar to technological society, predicated on the progressivist notion that reality must always be updated...(it is) actually the purest reflection of a society neurotically trying to stay one step ahead of itself."

In general, I agree with the tone set in Adam's Bernstein post, but find the dualistic nature of them (SoQ) vs. us (post-avant avant, etc.) limiting.

peN

Paul E. Nelson
www.GlobalVoicesRadio.org <http://www.globalvoicesradio.org>
www.SPLAB.org <http://www.SPLAB.org%20>
<http://www.AmericanSentences.com%20>908 I. St. N.E. #4
Slaughter, WA 98002
[redacted] or [redacted]

----- Original Message ----
From: Barry Schwabsky <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Sent: Friday, March 2, 2007 4:10:04 AM
Subject: Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

Bravo, Adam. Well said. But here's my doubt: How does one determine, in the present, what or who is avant-garde? It can't only be lack of official recognition, because lots of things lack recognition for lots of reasons, for instance that they are mediocre. Is it just a matter of proclaiming oneself avant-garde, and refusing to seek official forms of recognition? Or does it only become clear retrospectively, in which case your argument might circular: The avant-gardists are the artists who count because avant-garde is just our name for the artists who count. Actually, the whole topic reminds me in a very uncomfortable way of religious controversies over who gains salvation and how to know who they are. So never mind, forget I ever brought it up.

Adam Fieled <[redacted]> wrote:
I think some of you might find this interesting: "Charles Bernstein..."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

"Sometimes I feel the need to move on..."

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

--
Paul E. Nelson
Global Voices Radio
http://www.globalvoicesradio.org
www.splab.org
888.735.MEAT

↑ Index

37. Dan Wilcox
February Blogs on Poetry in Albany
Fri 2 Mar 2007

Check out my Blogs on poetry events during February in Albany (& NYC & Nyack, too): dwlcx.blogspot.com.
DWx

↑ Index

38. Christopher Leland Winks
Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
Fri 2 Mar 2007

Dear mIEKAL:

I forwarded this posting at the request of the co-editor, but I imagine the folks at the journal would be more than happy to consider inbetween genres (and genders).

Chris

----- Original Message -----
From: mIEKAL aND <[redacted]>
Date: Thursday, March 1, 2007 7:44 pm
Subject: Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions

> what about genres that are inbetween?
>
> On Mar 1, 2007, at 1:41 PM, [redacted] wrote:
>
> > Vibrant Gray is a journal dedicated to the in-between. Whether it's > > in-between sex, politics, religion, or culture, we want the work > that> falls through the cracks. In a society that says that the > world is > > black and white, this journal celebrates this world as gray.
> >
> > Email all submissions (fiction, nonfiction, and poetry) to > > [redacted]. Be sure to include the title of the > piece and > > the genre in the subject line.
>

↑ Index

39. Murat Nemet-Nejat

Re: my sister's murder

Fri 2 Mar 2007

As you know, my friends, water has no shape. Wa...

Windows, windows. Rectangular. Squares. Oblong.

Moths fly on my sister's chest.

Like the prayer of two butterflies

My sister's hands were white from the wash.

Ciao,

Murat

On 3/2/07, Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> my sister's murder
>
> you murdered my sister but i can get you off
> my sister can get you off
> afterwards you got off the bus
> you murdered my sister but i can put you off for a while > afterwards she put you off the bus
> afterwards you were put off the scent of death
> look my sister gave up the ghost
> when she came for you you gave up
> you took up far too much of her time
> she took up sex to forget you
> now you get take-out whenever you can
> trying to forget you once took her out
> that night she gave out a bit of advice
> the car gave out when you fled the crime
> she screamed get out but you didn't leave
> she got out of your way when you came for her
> you put her out with the garbage and other stuff
> because she'd put out and you wouldn't take
> yes for an answer
>
>
> ===
>

↑ Index

40. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Vibrant Gray -- Call for submissions
Fri 2 Mar 2007

---

i love hearing ye all talking about inbetween, since that's what my dear friend poet mary tallmountain called herself and was. it's what i was originally going to write my dissertation about, being one myself. gabe

On Thu, 1 Mar 2007, mIEKAL aND wrote:

> what about genres that are inbetween?
>
> On Mar 1, 2007, at 1:41 PM, [redacted] wrote:
>
> Vibrant Gray is a journal dedicated to the in-between. Whether it's in-between sex, politics, religion, or culture, we want the work that falls through the cracks. In a society that says that the world is black and white, this journal celebrates this world as gray.
>
> Email all submissions (fiction, nonfiction, and poetry) to [redacted]. Be sure to include the title of the piece and the genre in the subject line.

↑ Index

41. Aaron Vidaver
Open Text Reading Series #2: Marie Annharte Baker (Vancouver)
Fri 2 Mar 2007

OPEN TEXT READING SERIES #2: MARIE ANNHARTE BAKER
Sponsored by the Canada Council for the Arts
& the Creative Writing Program at Capilano College
http://capilanocreativewriting.blogspot.com

The Spring 2007 OPEN TEXT series at Capilano College continues on Weds. March 7th, 2007 with a reading by Anishinabe poet, educator, and activist, Marie Annharte Baker.

Cedar 148 @ 12:30
Capilano College
2055 Purcell Way
North Vancouver

Co-founder of the Regina Aboriginal Writers Group, Marie Annharte Baker is the author of several books, including Being on the Moon (Polestar, 1990), Coyote Columbus Cafe (Moonprint, 1994), Blueberry Canoe (New Star, 2001), and Exercises in Lip Pointing (New Star, 2003). She divides her time between Vancouver and Manitoba.

yuppie begging bowl

passerby please note us stuck on camera lens close up pray our your shell out fills latte foam bowl slow mo cash flow scene slow pan cut broke balance fixated roll plastic survivance level bank machine movie stake out treaty bowl number one fun filled topped up intrigue warranty less years but ears clear new diction air words cotton swab stuck syndrome block drumming manifesto

step up to bowl number two white shiny to let us bowl real tight ass titan squirm condo minimum convenience bowling down alley strikes we're good check the gate missing heirs women split

For info:
Roger Farr
[redacted]
[redacted] (2554)

[Coming soon: Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Anne Stone, Maxine Gadd]

↑ Index

42. Joel Weishaus
"The Way North" -2 Text-4
Fri 2 Mar 2007

---

http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/North-2/text-4.htm

-Joel

↑ Index

43. Warren Lloyd

Re: "Charles Bernstein and the Preponderance of the Avant-Garde"

Fri 2 Mar 2007

Adam, I agree with others so far in that I think the tone and questions that rise because of your post are important to keep oneself continually engaged with. In terms of the oppression that you doubt in your post-- I agree, perhaps no one is really oppressed, maybe that's too strong of a word. But, in the context that you bring up, I suppose some level of oppression can be equated with less readership, less opportunity, less understanding, by those invested in strategies that are less popular, more demanding, or as Bernstein might say, on the brink of impermeability. Bernstein's commitment to artifice, I think offers some resolution to the situation. His work has always been firmly committed to form, as experimental, abstract or inventive as it might be and there has been an equal commitment to its history. I think that you are right on by suggesting that so called post-avant poets empower OVC poets by their inverse relationship or "Negative Critique" of it, but of course that notion depends solely on it remaining re-active and negative which doesn't get anyone much of any where, or it rests on the notion of the self-proclaimed avant-garde status, which others have pointed out is as slippery to determine in present time as water in ones hands. I also agree with you completely when you say that once the 'humanity' of our supposed oppressors is recognized , designations like: OVC seemed forced etc.. but again, and I could be wrong, I think that forced designations of that nature also depend on a kind of "Negative Critique" (in the Frankfort sense), which again, remains wholly re-active, rather than active. For me, Bernstein's work surpasses mere re-action-- it leaves glib complaint behind(even when it seems to be just glib). His work is celebratory and affirmative, if not clearly registered in content, always in song. Bernstein's relentless (re) assessment of language and form, his demand that poetry is not a structure of signifiers that stand in for something like the "real" and is rather a means to engage and actively include readers in the meaning making process, which in fact is not a comfortable exercise in cultural "freedom" but can be one of the most vital aspects of life(as Utopian as that might seem) Perhaps the battle is less with OVC and more with OLU or official language use, which of course in the language game of art can be the most reductive and limiting procedure. -- and of course "oppressive" for those trying to find new ways. Thanks so much for your post. It was refreshing and I think questions of this nature are as vital as Bernstein's verse. Thanks!

Adam Fieled <[redacted]> wrote:
 I think some of you might find this interesting: "Charles Bernstein..."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

"Sometimes I feel the need to move on..."

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

Get your own web address.
Have a HUGE year through Yahoo! Small Business.

Cheap Talk? Check out Yahoo! Messenger's low PC-to-Phone call rates.

↑ Index

44. Shad Marsh

Russell Edson & Black Mountain & a query re this query re "what school?"

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Very well put. I for one am very much in favor of leaving the work of Mr. Edson in his charming boxless box. This is why I am draw to his work:

The Bridge

In his travels he comes to a bridge made entirely of bones. Before crossing he writes a letter to his mother: Dear mother, guess what? the ape accidentally bit off one of his hands while eating a banana. Just now I am at the foot of a bone bridge. I shall be crossing it shortly. I don't know if I shall find hills and valleys made of flesh on the other side, or simply constant night, villages of sleep. The ape is scolding me for not teaching him better. I am letting him wear my pith helmet for consolation. The bridge looks like one of those skeletal reconstructions of a huge dinosaur one sees in a museum. The ape is looking at the stump of his wrist and scolding me again. I offer him another banana and he gets very furious, as though I'd insulted him. Tomorrow we cross the bridge.
I'll write to you from the other side if I can; if not, look for a sign . . .

We won't tell. Get more on shows you hate to love
(and love to hate): Yahoo! TV's Guilty Pleasures list.
http://tv.yahoo.com/collections/265

↑ Index

45. Alan Sondheim
New video work at Millennium, NYC, March 10th
Sat 3 Mar 2007

(apologies for cross-posting)

CREPUSCLE and WAREQUIEM, 2007

Alan Sondheim, Foofwa d'Imobilite, Azure Carter

at Millennium Film

66 East 4th Street
New York City

Saturday March 10th at 8:00

Telephone [redacted] for more information.

"Since 1983 the amazingly prolific Alan Sondheim has appeared at Millenn- ium on a regular basis with substantial new works. This time the multi- talented media artist has come up with a highly erotic and controversial feature entitled CREPUSCLE (TWILIGHT) which stars the remarkable dancer, Foofwa d'Imobilite, along with Azure Carter and Alan Sondheim. The program will include several short pieces shot in Switzerland." (CREPUSCLE is a mutual production of the three of us. The program will most likely include one work, WAREQUIEM, shot in Second Life.)

"CREPUSCLE (TWILIGHT) explores the exigencies of dance, eroticism, cultur- al constraint, and arousal; it was edited from over a dozen segments in Geneva. The work tenders the null-point of language, a point where words stutter, where the body takes over, stumbles, where cultural tropes are transformed and disappear. It's the deliberate recreation of repressed memories. It challenges the conventions of dance, turning dance inside- out, turning dance out. For the three of us, it's the culmination of an erotic element in our work that subtexts and disrupts the performative itself. CREPUSCLE rides the muscle of the body and jouissance, opening a territory which remains virtual, haunting." (A.S.)

↑ Index

46. Brian Clements
Forwarded from Russell Edson
Sat 3 Mar 2007

I was briefly at Black Mt. College as a kind of retreat, but was gone by the time writers like Creeley arrived. I did publish a book, What a Man Can See, sometime later from Jonathan Williams' Jargon. By the time that book finally appeared I had already published a book with New Directions. The BMC Review was actually started by M.C. Richards before the appearance of the so- called school of Black Mt. Poets. This is probably not what the inquirers hoped for. I'm a terribly uninteresting person. My work is much more interesting. I'm rather a drag on anything I've managed to do.

Be well,
Russell

Dr. Brian Clements, Coordinator
MFA in Professional Writing
[redacted]
_____
Dept. of Writing, Linguistics, and Creative Process
Western Connecticut State University
181 White St.
Danbury, CT 06810
_____
http://www.wcsu.edu/english/mfa

↑ Index

47. Pierre Joris
CHAPBOOK RELEASE
Sat 3 Mar 2007

CHAPBOOK RELEASE

Anchorite Press is pleased to announce the release of a new collection of poems, MEDITATIONS ON THE STATIONS OF MANSOUR AL- HALLAJ, by Pierre Joris.

Each handmade chapbook is 5.25 x 8.625 and features a Rives deckled cover and cotton wove endpaper. 21 special editions, signed and numbered by the author, are also available. Each stitched special edition features handmade endpaper.

To peruse our archive of previous publications, or for ordering info, please visit our site: www.anchoritepress.blogspot.com. You can also contact us via email directly: [redacted].

Sincerely,
Christopher Rizzo, ed.
Anchorite Press

↑ Index

48. Jacqueline Gens

Re: Forwarded from Russell Edson

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Brian--

Thanks for posting your message from Russell. I only met him a couple of times, the first at the Great River Arts Prose Poem conference, my colleague Chard deNiord and I coordinated with Peter Johnson. At that time, I was into their letterpress shop which Russell paid a visit to. I seem to recollect that he was very enthusiastic around this environment and said that he had self-published a number of artist books of his work early in his career. People who are unacquainted with his work can go online and read most everything and there should be some sound links as well. Hearing Russell read is indeed truly interesting.

Best Wishes--Jacqueline Gens

On Mar 3, 2007, at 7:08 AM, Brian Clements wrote:

> I was briefly at Black Mt. College as a kind of > retreat, but was gone by the time writers like Creeley arrived. I did > publish a book, What a Man Can See, sometime later from Jonathan > Williams' Jargon. By the time that book finally appeared I had > already published a book with New Directions. The BMC Review was > actually started by M.C. Richards before the appearance of the so- > called school of Black Mt. Poets.
> This is probably not what the inquirers hoped for. I'm a terribly > uninteresting person. My work is much more interesting. I'm rather a > drag on anything I've managed to do.
>
> Be well,
> Russell
>
> Dr. Brian Clements, Coordinator
> MFA in Professional Writing
> [redacted]
> _____
> Dept. of Writing, Linguistics, and Creative Process
> Western Connecticut State University
> 181 White St.
> Danbury, CT 06810
>
> _____
> http://www.wcsu.edu/english/mfa

↑ Index

49. Ricejunk2

PUN

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Thanks, but no
thanks...

So turn those cranks
in the mind to more angst, and give the poets more spanks than thanks...

As usual, nothing they can take to the banks,
for they are writers not think-tanks...

Maybe too many crank and spank,
but do not READ enough to thank.

DEAR POETICS: A thanks goes out to all the truly interesting mumbo-jumbo that gets discussed (posted) on UB POETICS. As many have said, the subject line can say "read me" or "delete me", and it will continue to do so. A discussion group is for discussion, yes, and for all the other little "litterings" along the way. Thanks, T. F. Rice ---Happy to say I am in-between Rochester and Buffalo, NY

Quoting Halvard Johnson <[redacted]>:

> I'm finding I can also delete all the messages from > UB Poetics re messages to be posted. Lots more of > them nowadays. I'm wishing they'd include a poem > with each of those I get.
>
> Hal
>
> Today's Special
>
> Theory of Harmony
> http://www.xpressed.org/fall04/theory1.pdf
>
> Halvard Johnson
> ==========
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:44 AM, Halvard Johnson wrote:

That's not far off from what all the announcements of publications, far-flung readings, etc. are saying.

I've found I can delete poems I don't care to read just as quickly as I can delete announcements of poetry readings in, say, Fairbanks, Alaska.

Hal

"One barium enema is worth a year of psychoanalysis."
--Dr. Robert Whitlock

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:24 AM, Charlie Rossiter wrote:

I think the folks did a good job in the recent go-round about haiku of posting poems in the interest of a discussion of poetics. I think what many are saying, and I agree, is we don't want to getting posts of poems that are posted for no other reason that to say "here's my great new poem, please tell me I'm clever" or "notice me, notice me" etcetc...

We could also say, if you want to post a poem for the purpose of discussing poetics--post someone else's poem.

Charlie

--
"Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."

> Charlie said that.
> www.poetrypoetry.com
> where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them
>
> www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
> hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues
>
> www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
> hear Charlie as solo performance poet
>
> www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)
>
> www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
> hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

50. Ricejunk2

Re: Poems: to post or not to post

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Hal, I like your blog site Entropyandme

Also I am very much interested in the idea of "poetry" reaching far beyond the confines of words. Can other things be poetic? Simply because they are? The way a plant dips down low as if to bow to the passerby... A song without words played on a street-corner... The wrinkly man on the bus who tilts his head just so and his eyes alone speak volumes into your soul... Oh, that's right, these are the "guts" of good poems... Life and art are something in themselves no matter what form their composition...

Free speech should be enjoyed while it lasts, in those avenues where it is appreciated. :-) Cheers! TFRice

Quoting Halvard Johnson <[redacted]>:

> I'm finding I can also delete all the messages from > UB Poetics re messages to be posted. Lots more of > them nowadays. I'm wishing they'd include a poem
> with each of those I get.
>
> Hal
>
> Today's Special
>
> Theory of Harmony
> http://www.xpressed.org/fall04/theory1.pdf
>
> Halvard Johnson

==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:44 AM, Halvard Johnson wrote:

That's not far off from what all the announcements of publications, far-flung readings, etc. are saying.

I've found I can delete poems I don't care to read just as quickly as I can delete announcements of poetry readings in, say, Fairbanks, Alaska.

Hal

"One barium enema is worth a year of psychoanalysis."
--Dr. Robert Whitlock

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Feb 27, 2007, at 9:24 AM, Charlie Rossiter wrote:

I think the folks did a good job in the recent go-round about haiku of posting poems in the interest of a discussion of poetics. I think what many are saying, and I agree, is we don't want to getting posts of poems that are posted for no other reason that to say "here's my great new poem, please tell me I'm clever" or "notice me, notice me" etcetc...

We could also say, if you want to post a poem for the purpose of discussing poetics--post someone else's poem.

Charlie

> --
> "Poetry is good for you and so is the blues."
> Charlie said that.
> www.poetrypoetry.com
> where you hear poems read by poets who wrote them
>
> www.myspace.com/whiskeybucketbluesreview
> hear Charlie & Henry sing the blues
>
> www.myspace.com/charlierossiter
> hear Charlie as solo performance poet
>
> www.myspace.com/avantretro (hear avantretro poems)
>
> www.myspace.com/jackthe71special
> hear Jack's original blues, blues rock & roots

↑ Index

51. Ricejunk2

A Poem (By someone else) titled "A Poem" and worthy of discussion :-)

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Hello there.

I found this tidbit online today, and thought of recent discussions within this UB POETICS. Possibly this might inspire some interesting discussion. I will not make this a habit, that is, to post actual poetry. (Who has the time to read things online, randomly, these days... right now I should be doing housework and finishing the poem I wrote on a napkin last night and working on a dusty novel and phoning friends I haven't had any time for...)

This made me think especially of the embodiment / humanity / life that a poem takes on for the reader. Regards, T. F. Rice (Wyoming County, NY)

A Poem

I needn?t touch your silken hair or feel rose petal skin.
The type of love I have for you... it burns from deep within.

Yet in my soul the fires rage,
but nothing is consumed.
My spirit wanders aimlessly,
from room to darkened room.

The proper words I cannot find,
sometimes to show my love.
Yet here I?m looking at your face,
while you look from above.

Still, my soul stirs with great desire,
to reach up and touch you.
As these feelings that I?m having,
I know they?re in you too.

But you will some day think of me,
when my book you have closed.
And I am just a memory...
and not the one you chose.

Alas... of all that I have looked up at,
?tis you I wished I?d known.
For yours is a breathing spirit,
and mine... I?m just a poem.

Sean Allen

↑ Index

52. Ricejunk2

Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Thank you both. My mistake, TFRice

Quoting Aryanil Mukherjee <[redacted]>:

> Thanks for sending the link. No point stirring up the ashes of a dead fire.
> I'll prefer the flutist over the talk show host.
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of Deborah Poe
> Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:34 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?
>
> It might be of interest to check out the discussion in April 2005 on this > subject.
> http://listserv.buffalo.edu/cgi-bin/wa?A1=ind0504&L=poetics&D=1&I=-3&O=D
>
> "re: posting poems"

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Aryanil Mukherjee
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 12:10 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

I agree. Wholeheartedly. Furthermore, I want to add, not even theory gets talked about very much here. We only comment...comment and announce and promote...how dull is it to comment, announce and debate poetry with out poems ! It is hard to digest the fact that politics, poverty, misogyny, Anne Nicole etc. can find a place in "POETICS" but not poems. We're in the wrong boat brother (sister). At times it feels like I'm watching a "gray muscle show".

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On
Behalf Of Metta Sama
Sent: Monday, February 26, 2007 11:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: You must reply to this with a poem - creative?

while i'm all for respecting (in general) rules to an organization that i've voluntarily signed up for, i find it difficult to do any of the below without posting actual poems. what is a poetics discussion without poems to discuss? theory. and only theory. which is not antithetical to poems, but is also not and should not be mutually exclusive from poems. theory of poems & poems themselves can be held in tandem and honored. if someone wishes to write responses as poems, why would we post a rule that discourages them from doing so? and what, precisely, does it mean to accept a poem that _is_ "directed toward a discussion of poetics issues" while also not "exchange" poems that we can use to "discuss poetic issues"? in other words, yes, posts written in "poetic form/ats" should be encouraged. who are we to say that posts should be written in block form? and why would we?

metta

Tom is right -- the Welcome message states, "We do not accept postings of creative work not directed toward a discussion of poetics issues on the list. The Poetics List is not a venue for the posting of free-standing, personal poems or journal entries."

> And earlier, "The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible."
>
> Should posts written in poetic form/at (broken lines? rhymed? omitting all e's, employing recurring words? etc) that address poetics issues be encouraged?
>
> Incidentally, the daily message max for the list is 75 messages per day, with a limit of four posts per person.
>
> Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
> Sorry this is not a poem. But, as I understand it, we aren't supposed to post poems on this site, just discussions and announcements relevant to poetry. There is another excellent site called Wryting-L where poets from this list and, I suspect, from other sources post poems. It is set up specifically with that intent. If you're interested in doing that, Google Wryting-L and it should give you the relevant information. Regards, Tom Savage
>
> ---
> Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
> Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

53. Alexander Jorgensen

Re: comitted poets - and even those who have been ...

Sat 3 Mar 2007

What I love about you, wifey - IS that you are so snuggly, probably first, and then sweet, kinda sweeter than anything that could be candy, and determined and stubborn and STRONG, and then all that who might otherwise be called A BEAST OF WOMAN.

I really love you. I think it'll be OK. Nice, my dear.

YOUR HUSBAND

___ Never Miss an Email Stay connected with Yahoo! Mail on your mobile. Get started! http://mobile.yahoo.com/services?promote=mail

↑ Index

54. Alexander Jorgensen

Maryland: Expert on Russian Intelligence Shot Outside Home

Sat 3 Mar 2007

Expert on Russian Intelligence Shot Outside Home
Mar 3rd - 6:56am

ADELPHI, Md. - Police are investigating a shooting that wounded a prominent intelligence expert. Fifty-three-year-old Paul Joyal was shot Thursday night outside his house in the 2300 block of Lackawanna Street in Adelphi.

Joyal is known for his expertise on intelligence and terrorism and his contacts in the former Soviet Union.

He has also been a long-time critic of the the government of Russian President Vladimir Putin.

The shooting came four days after he told "Dateline NBC" that he believes the Russian government was involved in the fatal poisoning of former KGB agent Alexander Litvinenko in London.

(Copyright 2007 by The Associated Press. All Rights Reserved.)

___
We won't tell. Get more on shows you hate to love (and love to hate): Yahoo! TV's Guilty Pleasures list. http://tv.yahoo.com/collections/265

↑ Index

55. Jonathan Minton, Word For/Word

New Issue of Word For/Word (#11)

Sun 4 Mar 2007

I'm pleased to announce that Word For/Word #11 is online at www.wordforword.info

with poetry and visuals by Eric Abbott, Marcia Arrieta, John M. Bennett, Erin M. Bertram, David-Baptiste Chirot, Peter Ciccariello, John Cotter, Justin Dodd, Stephanie Countiss Emens, Noah Falck, Jason Fraley, Vernon Frazer, Trina Gaynon, Jim Goar, Noah Eli Gordon, Scott Helmes, Genevieve Kaplan, Kristi Maxwell, Sheila E. Murphy, Marci Nelligan, Michael Rothenberg, Kate Schapira, Will Skinker, Matina L. Stamatakis, Adam Strauss, Lynn Strongin, Thomas Lowe Taylor, Andrew Topel, Ashley VanDoorn, Caroline Whitbeck, Brian Whitener, and Joshua Marie Wilkinson, plus essays and reviews.

Cheers!
Jonathan Minton
www.wordforword.info

++++++++++++++

from FIGURES FOR A DARKROOM VOICE, by Noah Eli Gordon and Joshua Marie Wilkinson

An axe splits a tree from the story of a woodcutter's lost children, but who splits you from me? Who splits the lighthouse in half? When heat brings down these separations, what revives you is not the boy with his wrong name, but the name with its wronged boy, an error in place of an outcome. A note about the author, cut with slant adjectives, trips its nouns around like drunks. You know the fable, how its boat filled with water when you held the baby until you weren't certain if its breathing has stopped or just matched your own. There is a tiny blue heart inside this votive & it marbles your house smoke in miniature deletions from a huge marker.

↑ Index

56. Maria Damon
Xcp: Cross-Cultural Poetics
Sun 4 Mar 2007

apologies for x-posting:

NEW XCP: CROSS CULTURAL POETICS & BACK ISSUE SALE

XCP: CROSS CULTURAL POETICS no. 17 ("Public Language & Dreamstories") has just been released. The issue includes new essays by Michael Davidson, Roger Farr (on Dorothy Trujillo Lusk), Katherine McKittrick (author of Demonic Grounds: Black Women and the Cartographies of Struggle, University of Minnesota Press); new writing by Nourbèse Philip, Kamau Brathwaite, Fred Wah, and Opal Palmer Adisa; and reviews of new books by Michael Parenti, Retort, Aldon Lynn Nielsen and Lauri Ramey, & others.

FOUR ISSUE/TWO YEAR subscriptions are available to individuals at the rate of $30 (checks payable to College of St. Catherine). Please inquire about institutional rates.

XCP: CROSS CULTURAL POETICS is also selling back issues (while supplies last) from now through May 1, 2007, at the rate of $3 per issue. A complete list of back issues (no. 1-14) is available on our website, http://www.xcp.bfn.org/journal.html . This offer does not include our special double issue ("The Dictionary Issue"), no. 15/16, which is available for $12. Special bulk rates can also be arranged for people interested in teaching back issues.

FORTHCOMING THIS SPRING in XCP: CROSS CULTURAL POETICS no. 18 is new writing by Adrienne Rich, Amiri Baraka, Barbara Jane Reyes, Rodrigo Toscano, Jaswinder Bolina, Patricia Smith, Duriel Harris, a review-essay on new South African poetry, an essay on the workers' movement in Argentina, and much more.

Send checks (payable to College of St. Catherine) to Mark Nowak, ed., XCP: CROSS CULTURAL POETICS, c/o College of St. Catherine, 601 25th Avenue
South, Minneapolis, MN, 55454.

↑ Index

57. Del Ray Cross
SHAMPOO issue 29
Sun 4 Mar 2007

Dear SHAMPOO Playmate,

The new SHAMPOO issue 29 is now available for the absurd price of absolutely free:

www.ShampooPoetry.com

Keep clean as the spiffiest toilet with these hot brands: Ryan Scott, Ryan Bird, Yuri Hospodar, Otto Chan, Erica Miriam Fabri, Brien James Dawson, Crag Hill, Joseph Mosconi, Anne McGuire, Emily Brungo, Alana Madison, Vincent Katz, Simon DeDeo, Tim Botta, Jim Behrle, Thomas Fink, Chad Sweeney, Chad Parenteau, Kevin Killian, Pete Lee, Jess Mynes, Jen Hofer, Del Ray Cross, Wayne Crawford, David Levine, Gregory Betts, Gary Barwin, Caroline Crumpacker, Paolo Javier, Daniela Olszewska, Camille Roy, James Grinwis, Gale Acuff, Jal Nicholl, Magdalena Zurawski and Jack Kimball.

Thanks as always for supporting you local chapter of SHAMPOO.

Lub Luffly,

Del Ray Cross, Editor
SHAMPOO
Clean Hair / Good Poetry
www.ShampooPoetry.com

(If you'd prefer not to receive these announcements, just let me know)

↑ Index

58. Lewis LaCook
Angels on the Henderson Bridge
Sun 4 Mar 2007

---

http://www.lewislacook.org/king-s-woods/angels-on-the-henderson-bridge.html

Lewis LaCook
Director of Web Development
Abstract Outlooks Media

[redacted]

http://www.abstractoutlooks.com
Abstract Outlooks Media - Premium Web Hosting, Development, and Art Photography

http://www.lewislacook.org
lewislacook.org - New Media Poetry and Poetics

http://www.xanaxpop.org
Xanax Pop - the Poetry of Lewis LaCook

Need Mail bonding?
Go to the Yahoo! Mail Q&A for great tips from Yahoo! Answers users.

↑ Index

59. Peter Ciccariello
the poem that makes itself
Sun 4 Mar 2007

---

the poem that makes itself<http://www.cgi7.com/peterimages/the-poem-that-makes-itself.jpg>

-- Peter Ciccariello
Image - http://invisiblenotes.blogspot.com/
Word - http://poemsfromprovidence.blogspot.com/
Photography - http://uncommonvision.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

60. Desmond Swords
Bardic Bulliten
Sun 4 Mar 2007

"Remarkable"

"Astonishing"

"A truly historic event"

"The new Geoffrey Hill"

"The next Patrick Kavanagh"

"The gift of Carol Ann Duffy deconstructing Sean O'Brien's vernacular in a mail to Stevie Smith"

"The talent of Pattern and stature of McGough"

"The complete poetic competent with the professional confidence of an off-page Aoife Mannix or suitless Nick Laird in receipt of state benifits and busking a monkey a weekend with only his aura to magnetize a throng upon the cobbles at Covent Garden ..."

"...her live pulling power has the mesmeric allure of Gearóid MacLochlainn winning the bi-annual Bloomsbury slam by skillfully revealing the geneology of her linguistic DNA with a tigerish island noblesse only those whose eye can reason, rhyme and sense what riddle from the ratios fit and code of sound will speak to break the syntax..."

"....with the purity of Don Patterson's inner meloncholy mixed with Motion's most hypnotic rural line to create a comedic felicity - equal to, if not beyond, the sublimal wit of South Yorkire's only living troubadour and the people's poet laureate, a hopefully soon to be, Sir Ian McMillan....."

"....these poems draw from the cultural core of language, a flawless energy whose combustible force of internal zeitgeist motors the engine of an incredible art."

"...The real Muldoon. A difference of similarities in titterish grace, double take, wonder and cock a doddle doing of the bog godess from an ancient and mythical place of profund diddlee dee, where consciousness meets itself in the entropic mysteriousness of a continually collasping mind.."

"..exiled understudy and heir to Durcan's arch poetic urban note, mysterious as a facial-hair free Dennis O'Driscoll mirrored with inplaceness by Dreadlock Alien devoid of a dayjob signing on at poetry flame HQ, Chloe Poems turning tricks for His Highness Prince Harry in a smack-head's bedsit, paddling in vast pools of knowledge and experiencing heights of unemployability only the most articulate of verse-makers reach to speak favourably from...."

"...his enthralling voice bears a hallmark of clarity and commitment reminiscent of a younger Mahon, Longley, Paulin or Carson - whilst Cronin's honest echo lilts to ground this harmonious experiment in metrical chiming sprinkled with Ayres' commercial fairydust, striking its note of pure aurality and sounding one lone call from truth's trench above the swamp of contemporary bardic verse..."

".....the image of Brendan Kennelly beheading his hamster during a brutalised childhood in Limerick's Magdalene laundry has a startling effect. Memory-flashes daring us stop, picture, question and sense if the cosmos shops its way seeking balance for our spirit's short drag through life's technological trance."

"Unlike anyone else writing today. The next Sir Noddy Holder."

~

The Poetry Director of the Monster Truck art gallery in Dublin, needs poets for a summer reading serie, so get in touch before the April funding deadline at Poetry Ireland for the May/June do's. This deadline is every two months. Those wanting to read July/August, should get in touch before June.

Be a featured poet, get paid, let the letters do their magic and your reputation glow in print as the team of artists in the temple talk you up.

e mail - [redacted] -

Click for the spring dates.

http://irishpoetry.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

61. Tom W. Lewis

Re: comitted poets - and even those who have been ...

Sun 4 Mar 2007

---

now THERE's a disembodied narrative if I've ever seen one!

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]]
On Behalf Of Alexander Jorgensen Sent: Saturday, March 03, 2007 20:00
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: comitted poets - and even those who have been ...

What I love about you, wifey - IS that you are so snuggly, probably first, and then sweet, kinda sweeter than anything that could be candy, and determined and stubborn and STRONG, and then all that who might otherwise be called A BEAST OF WOMAN.

I really love you. I think it'll be OK. Nice, my dear.

YOUR HUSBAND

_____

Never Miss an Email
Stay connected with Yahoo! Mail on your mobile. Get started!
http://mobile.yahoo.com/services?promote=mail

↑ Index

62. Dana Teen Lomax
FW: Visually Arresting
Sun 4 Mar 2007

Hi all--

I just got this link

http://www.chrisjordan.com/current_set2.php?id=7

from a friend and thought it might be of interest to some on the list.

Take care--Dana

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

63. Matt Henriksen
Cannibal Issue Two & Cannibal Chapbook Series
Sun 4 Mar 2007

The second issue of Cannibal is now available and features poems from Hadara Bar-Nadav, Jen Bervin, Julia Cohen, John Coletti, Christopher Eaton, Landis Everson, Karen Garthe, Daniela Gesundheit, Johannes Göransson, Kate Greenstreet, Jane Gregory, Shafer Hall, Janet Holmes, Dan Hoy, Amy King, Donna Kuhn, Mark Lamoureux, Kristi Maxwell, Farid Matuk, Ben Mazer, Jess Mynes, Sawako Nakayasu, Eugene Ostashevsky, Arlo Quint, Chris Salerno, Mary Ann Samyn, Frank Sherlock, Stacy Szymaszek, Maureen Thorson, Joshua Marie Wilkinson, Jake Adam York & Alex Young.

Cannibal is seventy pages, hand-sewn in signatures and screen printed.

Copies are available through Paypal for $12 at flesheatingpoems.blogspot.com.

We are also releasing the first two books in the Cannibal Chapbook Series, Jane Gregory's The Second Is Thirst and Shannon Jonas' Compathy, both available at for $7 at flesheatingpoems.blogspot.com. Chapbooks are side-stapled on quality paper.

_____ Be a PS3 game guru. Get your game face on with the latest PS3 news and previews at Yahoo! Games. http://videogames.yahoo.com/platform?platform=120121

↑ Index

64. Alan Sondheim

Crepuscule liner notes (apologies 4 x-posting)

Mon 5 Mar 2007

(these do not literally reflect the dance/performance video)

liner notes for Crepuscule

sexual projections over dancers and without dancers and sexual dances on the tentpoles ravens at the four corners of the world. dancers are below. oh they want to jump on the bodies. this is dance on deadly earth. origin of dance try to make sense of the dialog; they can't. The live dancers may be are nude, exposed; the dance ends when they cum. They observe two dancers - audience and masturbating couple - the dancers sexually aroused - if nude dance should move from position to position. Anita Berber. The dancers are reeling, on edge, nervous, difficult, a problem, their desires constrained by spectacle. The dancers are on exhibit, behavioral codes thwarted or broken. If a dancer feels comfortable, he or she should push further on. sexuality, and horror, interpenetrate. For the dancers, everything is at the body of the dancer is eternal exists in relation to the sexuality of the body within the dance, within. dance is the interiority of the metaphysical, dance succeeds only by virtue of the interiority of the dancing, only by the foundation of the world. the foundation of the world lies in dance, The body of the dancer lies supine, breathless. storing these things - in the dance itself there's an image of a woman My Cluttered corner of the dance studio. Cloth, food items, all supine, is choreography masteranwhile dancers having dancing day debris three. liner notes for Anita Berber. point of dance and sexuality dancing is indiscriminate fucking, display - midnight phone-calls and invitations. one a dancer is pornographic, once this splay / display, dance, photography, culture, art in general, is invisible as semen on stage, spurted from dancer, welcomed and returned by art, of dance, of the body; it is also the most unknown. draw a vector; appurtenance-appearance; this is what the dancer, photographer, performer, tensed in our tawdry space of the real. for if the dance-dancer emerge - Sex dances for one to four people. The dancers are nude. There are no props. Male dances alone while masturbating. He dances until he cums. Female dances alone while masturbating. She dances until she cums. Tethered: Male dances with one hand holding himself erect. Tethered: Female dances with one or more partners' fingers in her. Variant Tethered: Male dances with one or more partners' fingers in him. The dance ends when one or both have cum. Variant Tethered: Female dances with one or more partners' fingers in her. The dance ends as above. The dance ends when the dance cums. dancers. So this is a dancer transformed. Role disappears from dance, dance is. The advantage of a dancer: You'll have your body at the end of the day. The disadvantage of a dancer: You'll have your body at the end of the day. dance and culture brings

Signs from Worlds eaten by light. Score restraint, bounded three-dimensional space, against which such dancers remain authorless in the midst of author/authority, danceless in the presence of dancers/dancing, human within the post-human, flesh within dance the doomed Case of doomed, doomed, a-void. Case of A world chaos, sex, spoken sex, poetics of sex. I may work with dance and sex and dance-video and sex. I will not work with images of sexual violence. I dance. Or I'm the material for the dancers; it's really back.

-- sondheim

CREPUSCULE (recorded 2006 Geneve) et. al.

Alan Sondheim, Foofwa d'Imobilite, Azure Carter
at Millennium Film, Saturday March 10th at 8:00
66 East 4th Street
New York City

Telephone [redacted] for more information.

↑ Index

65. Bob Heman

coming soon!!! the 2nd Official CLWN WR Event on March 29, 2007 at SAFE-T-GALLERY

Mon 5 Mar 2007

2nd Official CLWN WR Event

Thursday, March 29, 2007
7:00 - 10:00

at SAFE-T-GALLERY
111 Front Street, Brooklyn - Gallery 214

+++

featuring

Bob Hart
Carol Novack
Jane Ormerod

+++

with special guests

Thomas Fucaloro
Judy Kamilhor
Jean Lehrman
Frank Simone

Elizabeth Smith
EK Smith
Nathan Whiting

+++

plus a very special appearance
by singer/songwriter
 Carrie Beehan
(a.k.a. TRYSTETTE) performing with guitarist Dennis Diamond

+++

hosted by

Bob Heman
editor/publisher of CLWN WR since 1971

+++

Take the F train to York Street, walk downhill to Front and turn left under the Manhattan Bridge. For more information and alternative directions (from other subway lines) please check the Gallery website at http://www.safetgallery.com

Bob Heman
[redacted]
EarthLink Revolves Around You.

↑ Index

66. EH
Oppen quote
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Hello,
  I am looking for the source of an Oppen quote which I can only paraphrase by memory: "New York City is an example of a completely man-made landscape."
  I'm fairly certain this is from a letter in the Selected Letters, though it may be from an interview or daybook/working paper.
  Anyone familiar with this quote, please let me know!
  Thank you in advance,
  Eric Hoffman

Don't be flakey. Get Yahoo! Mail for Mobile and always stay connected to friends.

↑ Index

67. Dan Waber
ars poetica update
Mon 5 Mar 2007

The ars poetica project continues to pulsate at:

http://www.logolalia.com/arspoetica/

Poems appeared last week by: Jesse Glass, Mari-Lou Rowley, Ann Bogle, and Jennifer Compton.

Poems will appear this week by: Jennifer Compton, Barry Schwabsky, Kirpal Gordon, and Will Hochman.

A new poem about poetry every day.

Enjoy,
Dan

↑ Index

68. Deborah Poe
berssenbrugge's email
Mon 5 Mar 2007

(sorry for x/posting)

If you have Mei-mei Berssenbrugge's email, can you backchannel? She asked that I send her a paper I wrote this past year on her, Lucie Brock Broido, and Barbara Guest's work. I was reeling after the tribute to Barbara Guest (of which she was a part) and forgot to get.

Thanks,

Deborah

↑ Index

69. Michael Kelleher
Literary Buffalo E-Newsletter for 3.05.07-3.11.07
Mon 5 Mar 2007

LITERARY BUFFALO
3.05.07-3.11.07

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NEW PLAY BY EDGAR AWARD-WINNING, JUST BUFFALO BOARD-MEMBERING-WORKSHOP-TEACHING GARY EARL ROSS
The Best Woman
Directed by Lorna C. Hill
March 2-25, 2007
TheaterLoft / 545 Elmwood, Buffalo / Box Office [redacted]
Fri., Sat. 8 pm/Sun. 6 pm / $22 General, $18 Students/Seniors
Groups-only Thursdays (with pre-show talk) available.
Student Study-Discussion Guides Available

READINGS THIS WEEK

Unless otherwise indicated, all readings are free and open to the public.

3.7.07

Just Buffalo/Center For Inquiry Literary Cafe
Christina Wos' Donnelly & Joe Nickell
Wednesday, March 7, 7 p.m.
3965 Rensch Rd, Amherst
10 open slots: all readers welcome!

3.8.07

Canisius Contemporary Writers Series
Eamon Grennan
Poetry Reading
Thursday, March 8, 7 p.m.
Montante Cultural Center, Canisius College

Eamon Grennan was born in Dublin in 1941. He studied English and Italian at University College, Dublin and received his Ph.D. in English from Harvard. He has published several volumes of poetry, including Still Life with Waterfall, which received the 2003 Lenore Marshall Award for Poetry, and his latest collection, The Quick of It. His other publications include Leopardi: Selected Poems, which won the 1997 PEN Award for Poetry in Translation, and Facing the Music: Irish Poetry in the 20th Century, a collection of critical essays. Grennan's poetry has received a number of Pushcart Prizes, as well as awards from the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation. He lives in Ireland and Poughkeepsie, N.Y., where he is the Dexter M. Ferry Jr. Professor of English at Vassar College.

&

Poetics Plus at UB/Hallwalls Present
Matthew Cooperman
Poetry Reading
Thursday, March 8, 8 p.m.
Hallwalls Cinema at the Church, 341 Delaware Ave

Matthew Cooperman's most recent book is Daze (Salt 2006). He is also author of A Sacrificial Zinc (2001), winner of the Lena-Miles Weaver Todd Prize, as well as two chapbooks, Words About James (2005) and Surge (1999). He teaches at Colorado State University in Ft. Collins.

See Victoria Brockmeier's Review of Cooperman's book in artvoice by clicking the following link: http://artvoice.com/issues/v6n9/daze

3.10.07

Barnes & Noble Buffalo State Bookstore.
Children's Book Event: Cat in the Hat's 50th Birthday
Saturday, March 10th, 1:00pm - 2:30pm.
Join us for story time, crafts and refreshments.

3.11.07

Talking Leaves...Books
Jay Boyar
Reading and signing for: Films to Go
Sunday, March 11, 2 p.m.
Talking Leaves...Books, Elmwood Store

Jay Boyar is a nationally recognized, Pulitzer Prize-nominated film critic and travel writer whose work has been regularly featured in major newspapers and magazines, on television and radio, and online. For years he was the film critic for the Orlando Sentinel, to which he still contributes from his current position as film teacher at the University of Central Florida. Mr. Boyar is a Buffalo native who attended SUNY Buffalo and was a reviewer for the late Courier Express.

JUST BUFFALO WRITING WORKSHOPS

All workshops take place in Just Buffalo's Workshop/Conference Room At the historic Market Arcade, 617 Main St., First Floor -- right across from Shea's. The Market Arcade is climate-controlled and has a security guard on duty at all times.

To get here:

Take the train to the 'Theatre' stop and walk, or park and enter on Washington Street. Free parking on Washington Street evenings and weekends. Two-dollar parking in fenced, guarded, M & T lot on Washington. Visit our website for detailed descriptions, instructor bios, and to register online.

The Tao of Writing the Short Story
A Fiction Writing Workshop
Instructor: Ralph Wahlstrom
2 Saturdays: March 24 and 31
10 a.m. - 2 p.m. with a break for lunch.
Market Arcade Building, 617 Main St., First Floor.
$100, $80 for members

RECURRING LITERARY EVENTS

JUST BUFFALO WRITER'S CRITIQUE GROUP
Members of Just Buffalo are welcome to attend a free, bi-monthly writer critique group in CEPA's Flux Gallery on the first floor of the historic Market Arcade Building across the street from Shea's. Group meets 1st and 3rd Wednesday at 7 p.m. Call Just Buffalo for details.

JUST BUFFALO TIMED WRITING GROUP
A writing practice group meets every FRIDAY at noon at Starbucks Coffee on Elmwood and Chippewa. Writing practice is based on Natalie Goldberg's suggested exercises in Writing Down The Bones. Writers in all genres, fiction and non-fiction welcome. There is no charge. Contact Trudy for info: [redacted].

WESTERN NEW YORK ROMANCE WRITERS group meets the third Wednesday of every month at St. Joseph Hospital community room at 11a.m. Address: 2605 Harlem Road, Cheektowaga, NY 14225. For details go to www.wnyrw.org.

JUST BUFFALO MEMBERSHIP RAFFLE

Visit the literary city of your dreams:

-Joyce's Dublin
-Paris' Left Bank
-Dante's Florence
-Shakespeare's London
-Harlem Renaissance NYC
-The Beats' San Francisco
-Anywhere Continental flies.*

Now through May 10, 2007 your membership support of Just Buffalo Literary Center includes the chance to win the literary trip of a lifetime:

Package (valued at $5,000) includes:

-Two round-trip tickets to one of the great literary cities on Continental Airlines
-$1500 towards hotel and accommodations
-$500 in spending money

One ticket ($35) = Just Buffalo Individual Membership
Two tickets ($60) = Just Buffalo Family Membership
Three tickets ($100) = Just Buffalo Friend Membership

Purchase as many memberships as you like. Give them to whomever you choose as a gift (or give someone else the membership and keep the lottery ticket to yourself!). Only 1000 chances will be sold. Raffle tickets with Just Buffalo membership make great gifts! Drawing will be held the second week of May, 2007. Call [redacted] for more info.

* Raffle ticket purchases are not tax-deductible. If you want your membership to put you in the "literary trip of a lifetime" raffle, please write "raffle membership" in the "payment for" cell on the Paypal form. You will automatically be entered in the raffle, but your membership will not be tax-deductible. If you prefer not to be in the raffle and want tax-deductible status, then please write "non-raffle member" in the "payment for" cell.

JOIN JUST BUFFALO ONLINE!!!

If you would like to join Just Buffalo, or simply make a massive personal donation, you can do so online using your credit card. We have recently added the ability to join online by paying with a credit card through PayPal. Simply click on the membership level at which you would like to join, log in (or create a PayPal account using your Visa/Amex/Mastercard/Discover), and voilá, you will find yourself in literary heaven. For more info, or to join now, go to our website:

http://www.justbuffalo.org/membership/index.shtml

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

70. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: Fwd: Amiri Baraka and Ras Baraka @ UWM (3.5)

Mon 5 Mar 2007

Amiri Baraka has a powerful piece in December 2006-January 2007 Poetry Project Newsletter

"Why Most Poetry is Boring, Again"

> AN EVENING WITH AMIRI BARAKA AND RAS BARAKA
> Father and Son Poets Extraordinaire
> Monday, March 5th
> 7 pm
> Union Wisconsin Room (2nd floor of UWM Union--2200 E. Kenwood Blvd.)
> FREE and open to the public
>
> Since the early '60s, legendary poet, critic and playwright Amiri Baraka has been globally recognized for his activism on behalf of Civil Rights, his volumes of celebrated literary works, and as a founder of the Black Arts Movement. Poet Ras Baraka, the author of Black Girls Learn Love Hard and co-editor of the literary anthology,
> In the Tradition (with Kevin Powell), has been active in his own right > as a prolific writer and in city politics, serving as Deputy Mayor of > Newark, NJ. He joins his father on stage for a evening of poetry.
>
> Sponsored by Third World Action, UWM Union Sociocultural Programming,
> Freedom Now! Collaborative (FN!C), Black Holocaust Museum, the Black > Student Union and others. For more information, contact Third World Action > at [redacted]
> or call UWM Union Sociocultural Programming, [redacted].
>
> _____

_____ Don’t miss your chance to WIN 10 hours of private jet travel from Microsoft® Office Live http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0540002499mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

71. Michael Kelleher

One more thing....

Mon 5 Mar 2007

LITERARY BUFFALO

JUST BUFFALO OPEN READING SERIES
SECOND SUNDAY, NOT THIRD SUNDAY

OPEN READING
FEATURING: Karen Lewis
March 11, 7 P.M.
Rust Belt Books, 202 ALLEN ST.

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

_____
Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

72. Ron Silliman

Silliman's Blog: Torqued!

Mon 5 Mar 2007

---

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

RECENT POSTS

The twisted notion of torque
in poetry

In which the heroine doesn’t speak the language (on Irma Vep)

Conjuctions at 25

The device poems
of Elaine Equi

http://ronsilliman.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

73. gfrym
Re: Friends of Big Bridge
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Can I provide in-kind services in lieu of $?????
Love, Gloria

----- Original Message -----
From: "Michael Rothenberg" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Monday, February 19, 2007 2:32 PM
Subject: Friends of Big Bridge

> Dear Friends of Big Bridge,
>
> We are now accepting tax-deductible donations.
>
> For almost a decade we have been able to produce and maintain Big Bridge at a minimal expense, however, due to rising costs, staff changes, and the need to continue to bring you more of the best poetry, art and everything else, we humbly ask for your support. Every little bit counts. Please, help us keep Big Bridge online.
>
> Please make checks out to Committee on Poetry, Inc., and specify on the check FOR: Big Bridge. Mail donations to:
>
> Big Bridge
> 16083 Fern Way
> Guerneville, CA. 95446
>
> You will recieve a letter of acknowledgment upon receipt of your donation.
>
> And, of course, we thank you very much for your many years of support.
>
> Peace,
> Michael Rothenberg, Editor
> Big Bridge
> http://www.bigbridge.org

↑ Index

74. Schlesinger Kyle
BILL BERKSON¹S SUDDEN ADDRESS: SELECTED LECTURES 1981-2006
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Cuneiform Press is pleased to announce the publication of

BILL BERKSON¹S
SUDDEN ADDRESS: SELECTED LECTURES 1981-2006
Cover image by Philip Guston
114 pp.
$10 Cuneiform Press
www.cuneiformpress.com
+
Special Limited Hardcover Edition
Signed & Lettered A through Z*
$50

Reserve your copy today

Cuneiform Press
528 Richmond Avenue
Buffalo, NY 14222
www.cuneiformpress.com

Forthcoming titles include Dan Featherston¹s Clockmaker¹s Memoir and Ted Greenwald and Hal Saulson¹s Two Wrongs.

*order the special edition and receive a copy of Ulf Stolterfoht¹s Lingos VI (translated by Rosmarie Waldrop) free for a limited time.

...and yet another new book by Bill Berkson

OUR FRIENDS WILL PASS AMONG YOU SILENTLY
New Poems 2001-2006
Cover image by Vija Celmins
64 pp.
$14
ISBN 978-0-9669430-8-5
The Owl Press

available from

Small Press Distribution
1341 Seventh Street
Berkeley, CA 94710-1409
[redacted]

[redacted] (Toll-free within the US) http://www.spdbooks.org/

↑ Index

75. Alan Sondheim

EXHIBIT A (group show in Second Life) (fwd)

Mon 5 Mar 2007

Please join us! - Alan (A.D.)

EXHIBIT A

contemporary art within the Second Life online virtual world group show curated by Beavis Palowakski and Sugar Seville for the Odyssey simulator

March 8th - April 8th 2007

OPENING THURSDAY MARCH 8th, 6pm Second Life time
Location: Odysses 38,30,23

Ian Ah
Gazira Babeli
Isra Batra
Alan Dojoji Fau Ferdinand
Masami Kuramoto
Pavig Lok
Man Michinaga
Sea Ra
Bacon Rolls
Chi5 Shenzhou
Dontoledo

Come join us!

↑ Index

76. Matt Henriksen

Sat 3/10 Howe, Smith, Berrigan, Weiser, Hawkey, Moschovakis, Yankelevich, Matuk, Briante, Mynes, Mazer & I Feel Tractor @ Galapagos in Williamsburg, Brooklyn

Mon 5 Mar 2007

The Burning
Chair Readings

Brooklyn Poetry Bazaar

The Burning
Chair Readings

Brooklyn Poetry Bazaar

Saturday, March 10th,
2007 2:30-7 PM

Galapagos Art Space

70
North 6th Street

Between Kent and Wythe

Williamsburg, Brooklyn

http://www.galapagosartspace.com

$5 for eleven poets & another who sings
w/ a book fair in support of independent publishers

http://www.typomag.com/burningchair

2:30-4:30 PM

Ben Mazer

Christian Hawkey

Matvei Yankelevich

Anna Moschovakis

Fanny Howe

4:30-5 PM

I Feel Tractor

5-7 PM

Farid Matuk

Susan Briante

Jess Mynes

Karen Weiser

Anselm Berrigan

Rod Smith

Fanny Howe was born in Buffalo, New York, in 1940. She is the author of more than twenty books of poetry and prose. Her recent collections of poetry include

On the Ground (Graywolf, 2004), Gone (2003), Selected Poems (2000), Forged (1999), Q (1998), One Crossed Out (1997), O'Clock (1995), and The End (1992).

Howe is also the author of several novels and prose collections, most recently, Radical Love (Nightboat, 2006) and The Lives of a Spirit / Glasstown: Where Something Got Broken (Nightboat Books, 2005).

Howe was the recipient of the 2001 Lenore Marshall Poetry Prize for her Selected Poems. She has also won awards from the National Endowment for the Arts, the National Poetry Foundation, the California Council for the Arts, and the Village Voice, as well as fellowships from the Bunting Institute and the MacArthur Colony. She was shortlisted for the Griffin Poetry Prize in 2001 and 2005. She has lectured in creative writing at Tufts University, Emerson College, Columbia University, Yale University, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Rod Smith is the author of Music or Honesty, The Good House, Poèmes de l'araignée (France), In Memory of My Theories, The Boy Poems, Protective Immediacy, and New Mannerist Tricycle with Lisa Jarnot and Bill Luoma. His latest collection, Deed, will be published by the University of Iowa Press in the fall of 2007. A CD, Fear the Sky, came out from Narrow House Recordings in 2005. Smith's work has appeared in numerous magazines and anthologies including Anthology of New (American) Poets, The Baffler, The Gertrude Stein Awards, Java, New American Writing, Open City, Poésie, Poetics Journal, Shenandoah, and The Washington Review. He edits Aerial magazine, publishes Edge Books, and manages Bridge Street Books in Washington, DC. The next issue of Aerial will focus on poet Lyn Hejinian. Smith is also editing, with Peter Baker and Kaplan Harris, The Selected Letters of Robert Creeley, for the University of California Press.

Anselm Berrigan is the author of Some Notes on my Programming, Zero Star Hotel and Integrity and Dramatic Life, all published by Edge Books in Washington D.C. He was raised in the east village of New York City and lives there now after stints in Buffalo, NY and San Francisco, CA. He is also the author of Strangers in the Nest, published by Dolphin Press and New Lights Press of Baltimore Maryland, and In the Dream Hole, co-authored with Edmund Berrigan. Anselm is currently the director of The St. Marks Poetry project in NYC.

Edmund
Berrigan is the author of Disarming Matter, co-editor of the Collected Poems of Ted Berrigan, and house musician on I Feel Tractor's debut CD, Once I Had an Earthquake.

Recent poems by Susan Briante have appeared in Hot Whiskey,

OPoss and effing. A co-editor of the journal Superflux, she lives in Dallas, Texas, where she works as an assistant professor of aesthetic studies at the University of Texas at Dallas. She is the author of Pioneers in the Studay of Motion (Ahsahta Press, 2007).

Christian Hawkey is the author of The Book of Funnels (Verse Press/Wave Books, 2004), and the chapbook HourHour, which includes drawings by the artist Ryan Mrowzowski (Delirium Press, 2005). His poems have appeared in numerous magazines, including Conjunctions, Volt, American Poetry Review, Denver Quarterly, Tin House, Crowd, and Conduit, and he has received awards from the Poetry Fund and from the Academy of American Poets. He lives in Ft. Greene, Brooklyn, in a house that he believes was built by Walt Whitman, especially since it’s constantly falling apart.

Farid Matuk's poems have appeared most recently in Oposs, Lungfull!, PastSimple and Shampoo. His first collection, Is it the King?, was released by Effing Press in 2006. He lives in Dallas, Texas where he currently adjuncts at SMU and directs the Community and Mentorship Project for the literary non-profit, The Writer's Garret.

Ben Mazer’s poetry is published widely in international periodicals. His essay revealing a previously unknown source for T. S. Eliot’s The Waste Land (an 1892 essay by Elisabeth Cavazza of Portland, Maine) appears in the second number of Fulcrum: an annual of poetry and aesthetics. He is the author of White Cities (Barbara Matteau Editions) and The Big House (forthcoming).

Anna Moschovakis has been an editor and designer with Ugly Duckling Presse since 2002, helping to produce books and chapbooks by emerging writers, translations, and the poetry periodical, 6x6. Her translations of Henri Michaux, Claude Cahun, Blaise Cendrars, Théophile Gautier and others have been published by Fence, nest, and New York Review Books Classics. She is the author of two chapbooks, The Blue Book (Phylum Press, 2005) and Dependence Day Parade (Sisyphus, 2006), and her first book, I Have Not Been Able to Get Through to Everyone, is just out this fall from Turtle Point Press. She currently teaches in the Comparative Literature Department of Queens College.

Jess
Mynes runs Fewer & Further Press in Wendell, Massachusetts. He is the author of Birds, for Example (Carve, 2006) and In(Ex)teriors (Anchorite Press, 2006).

Karen
Weiser is the author of Heads Up Fever Pile, Eight Positive Trees (Pressed Wafer, Placefullness (Ugly Duckling Press), and Pitching Woo (CyPress, forthcoming). She lives in New York City.

Matvei Yankelevich is the editor of the Eastern European Poets Series at Ugly Duckling Presse, and co-edits 6×6, a poetry periodical. He is the co-translator, with Eugene Ostashevsky, of An Invitation For Me To Think, the selected poems of Alexander Vvedensky, forthcoming from Green Integer; and of Russian Absurdism: OBERIU, an anthology forthcoming from Northwestern University Press. His own writing has appeared in various little magazines and his critical work on Russian-American poets appears on Octopus Magazine. A chapbook of his long poem, The Present Work, was published by the Los Angeles-based Palm Press in summer 2006. He teaches Russian Literature at Hunter College in New York City.

Don't pick lemons.
See all the new 2007 cars at Yahoo! Autos.
http://autos.yahoo.com/new_cars.html

↑ Index

77. Cynie Cory
Janaka Stucky's email?
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Does anyone have Janaka Stucky's email? If you do, please email it to me at [redacted]

Thanks, Cynie

Get your own web address.
Have a HUGE year through Yahoo! Small Business.

↑ Index

78. mIEKAL aND
FROZEN HYPNOSIS 1-29
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Frozen Hypnosis was an ongoing 8 page mailart zine found & collaged by Malok and Bern Porter. 29 issues were produced between 1992-2004. Nine issues are missing from the collection & we are searching the world to locate them. If you have a copy (especially the color master copies which apparently were sent out by mistake) please contact us.

"The mutant collage geniuses Malok and Bern Porter have been creating a collaborative body of work in recent years that bears extensive cataloging and publishing. This is but a small sample of that collaboration. Utilizing the discarded elements of materialist culture and original visuals accompanied by recontextualized popular faces and headlines, we find ourselves immersed in an oddly familiar otherness. These collages are the sublunary script of human entropy, though not an entropy of despair but of hallucinatory release from the oppression of sensory overload." —Jake Berry

Download pdfs
http://malok.org/frozen_hypnosis.php

8 pages, 5.5"x8.5", color, $4.00 ppd. Set of 20 issues $75.00.

Xexoxial Editions
10375 Cty Hway A La Farge, WI 54639
[redacted]

↑ Index

79. Elizabeth Treadwell
Ratcliffe & Rodefer at SPT this Fri, 3/9
Mon 5 Mar 2007

Small Press Traffic is pleased to present a reading by Stephen Ratcliffe & Stephen Rodefer
Friday, March 9, 2007 at 7:30 p.m.

Stephen Ratcliffe joins us in celebration of REAL, new from Avenue B, which, Michael Cross writes, is "the second volume in what promises to be a long poem of unprecedented magnitudeâ€¦documenting the minutia of the subject's extension into the world as the ocean's diurnal low-end dissonance might frame the coastline it erodes." Ratcliffe's earlier works include Portraits & Repetitions and Present Tense. He lives in Bolinas and teaches at Mills College in Oakland.

We are thrilled to welcome Stephen Rodefer back to the Bay Area for this reading. The author of Four Lectures, Left Under A Cloud, Mon Canard and many other books, Rodefer has lived in theâ€¨UK and France for the past fifteen years. His selected poems, Call It Thought,â€¨will be published by Carcanet in 2008. He has an essay on canon making in theâ€¨latest Chicago Review, which concludesâ€¨"Live free and die. Publish and Perish."

Unless otherwise noted, events are $5-10, sliding scale, free to current SPT members and CCA faculty, staff, and students.

Unless otherwise noted, our events are presented inâ€¨Timken Lecture Hall,â€¨California College of the Arts â€¨1111 Eighth Street, San Francisco (just off the intersection of 16th & Wisconsin) http://www.sptraffic.org

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

80. Elizabeth Treadwell

news from Small Press Traffic

Mon 5 Mar 2007

Dear Community,

I would like to let you all know that I will be taking a leave of absence from Small Press Traffic from July 1, 2007 to June 30, 2008. I will be doing this, after 7 great, illuminating years at SPT, to refresh myself and to be with my (growing) family. Poet, educator, and SPT board member Dana Teen Lomax will be filling in for me while I am away. She has extensive experience in curating, fundraising, and nonprofit arts administration, and I am very confident that she will do a fantastic job. My thanks to Dana and to the entire board of SPT for making this year away possible for me. I will look forward to seeing all of you, dear writers & readers, on my return in 2008.

Elizabeth

Elizabeth Treadwell Jackson
Executive Director
Small Press Traffic
Literary Arts Center at CCA
1111 -- 8th Street
San Francisco, California 94107
http://www.sptraffic.org

please note our new small press traffic [at] gmail

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

81. matthew cooperman
new book, readings East/West
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Hi all--

Some News & Events.
I'll be reading East and West in the coming weeks to suport the new book, DaZE (http://www.saltpublishing.com), described below.

East: March 8, via UB Poetics Plus, 7:30pm, Hallwalls at the Chuch, Buffalo, 341 Delaware Ave. More info from Victoria Brockmeier: [redacted] as well as http://www.hallways.org

March 9, via Earshot, 8pm, The Lucky Cat in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, 245 Grand St., b/w Driggs and Roebling
More info from Nicole Steinberg:
[redacted]
as well as http://www.earshotnyc.com

West: March 12, via San Francisco State, 7pm, 132 Humanities

March 16, via Truong Tran's Living Rom Series, 7:30pm
554 Ashbury (Janis Joplin's old apt./ Haight & Ashbury)

More info on both San Francisco gigs:
[redacted]

Daze is days (the daily every where one reads every Daily) and confusion (the Daily Bugle–or is it Bungle?–of constant shock). “Cooperman’s poems contain the philosophical and the plain-spoken, the scientific and the ripeness of 19th century diction, while at all times maintaining a healthy skepticism about language’s capacity to bring us here (or hear), where we have been wandering around lost for many years. Cooperman’s poems tell us that all may not be lost, there may in fact be a home, even if we never get to open its door.

--John Yau

The ache of Berryman and the balls of Berrigan—a combination so striking in its language: sonorous, yes, but also snarky; lyrical and yet perky—dare I say perky? I do. As does Cooperman. Moments in Daze are so delicate, and then around the corner comes the stab, the surprise, the knowing frippery and the twinkle-eyed nudge. The poems do daze, they dazz, they does. No other poet has such panache and such beauty:
'something pure in a heart can hide.'

--D.A. Powell

Want to start your own business?
Learn how on Yahoo! Small Business.
http://smallbusiness.yahoo.com/r-index

↑ Index

82. Jesse Glass

Jeses Glass on Steve Bradley's [redacted] this Wednesday

Tue 6 Mar 2007

Wednesday March 07, 2007

13:00 UTC time // returning regular time:
note time change: 09:00 a.m. EST, New York, NY;
other time zones :: 15:00, Amsterdam; 16:00, Helsinki live feed: http://broadcast.umbc.edu:8000/artradio.m3u podcast location: http://art-radio.net/podcasts/artradio.xml

1. Room Spaces, Michael J. Schumacher, CD1> t1) Room Piece XI, CD2> t1) Piece in 3 Parks, t2) Still, t3) Untitled, t4) Still, recorded at Diapason Gallery, NYC, http://diapasongallery.org/, XI Records, http://www.xirecords.org/

2. Spoken words by Jesse Glass, Dec – Jan, 06/07, t1) for Ralph Lichtensteiger, t2) Hospital Singing, t3) Mourn Him, t4) Museum, t5) Oh Japanese Poh! Etz, t6) Pantoum, t7) SEZ, t8) This Only (Teku Teku), t9) Untitled Sequence, t10) Down, Chiba-ken, Japan, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jesse_Glass

↑ Index

83. Jesse Crockett
last call for work --- listenlight 08
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Dear Poetries,

I'm mixing with trigonometries for the layout at http://listenlight.net for instance 08. This is our last call for work for this issue. Many here may have read the journal, which, in its entirety, will not be long, to read. I've had great luck with last minute calls for work. Listenlight 08 will hope to be live in under a week. Not over, not outer a week.

What is listenlight? It's not schadenfreude, and also it is un-yet, and un-likely to be experienced over breakfast. It is the most unlikely poetry journal in the universe. Realer than tax revenue. For sure.

Send your best. Your poetry will be archived at least until its editors die. Our promise.

Women especially are asked in kind to send in for review.

All best,

Jesse Wayne Crockett

↑ Index

84. Jim Andrews
New links to interactive audio works
Tue 6 Mar 2007

There are some new links to interactive audio works at http://vispo.com/misc/ia.htm including four Flash-based projects:

ACTIONIST RESPOKE http://www.stromgasse.de/projects/actionist by Michael Janoschek and Rüdiger Schlömer, Mouse on Mars (Germany) "Mouse On Mars deserve more than an instant fun interface. Here is something between a Sequencer and Sound Tamagotchi. Put some learning effort into it, don't let visuals irritate you and most of all, don't be lazy. This is not about just sitting back and having music served on a tablet." The music is funky and so is the interface. Very cool piece. Sort of MAX-like. FLASH

SPLICE
http://splicemusic.com
by Sean Mulroney, Wendell Davis (USA)
Sequencer that allows mixing of your own sounds or sounds uploaded by people in the Splice community. A similar project is called JamGlue.
FLASH

PANDORA
http://pandora.com
by Tim Westergren, Tom Conrad, Nolan Gasser... (USA)
Fascinating approach to Internet radio. You create a channel by specifying a song or artist. Pandora then starts playing songs related to your seed. Each song is classified according to the 'music genome project'. Your 'thumbs up/thumbs down' on suggested songs apparently 'train' the app. A similar project is called last.fm.
FLASH

ANDRE MICHELLE
http://lab.andre-michelle.com
by André Michelle (Germany)
André's lab of his experiments with Flash work is very interesting. Sort of like JSyn work in its granularity and wave synthesis.
FLASH

ja
http://vispo.com

.
.
.

↑ Index

85. David Gershman
Illusion Literature Rack Special!
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Illusion Literature Rack Special!Can't see images? Click Here

If you prefer not to continue receiving Brussian Strokes, Inc. promotional e-mails and wish to unsubscribe from

↑ Index

86. Stephen Vincent
Libby Guilty of Lying in C.I.A. Leak Case
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Suddenly poetry is alive and well!

↑ Index

87. amy king
AWP?
Tue 6 Mar 2007

I could only take in a very tiny little...

Any accounts/stories/panel presentations to share?

Thanks, in advance ...

The fish are biting.
Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.

↑ Index

88. Geoffrey Gatza
Re: AWP?
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Hi Amy,

On arriving to Atlanta I was almost mugged for my backpack. I fought him off.

On leaving Atlanta Donald Revell kissed my cheek.

Best, Geoffrey

Geoffrey Gatza
BlazeVOX [books]
www.blazevox.org

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of amy king
Sent: Tuesday, March 06, 2007 2:15 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: AWP?

I could only take in a very tiny little...

Any accounts/stories/panel presentations to share?

Thanks, in advance ...

The fish are biting.
Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.

↑ Index

89. kevin thurston in honor of Aaron Belz's success...
Tue 6 Mar 2007

What do we want?
Your money
When do we want it?
Now
What do you get?
A link and that sense of moral superiority that comes with being nice

Sure, it isn't exactly a protest, but the Buffalo Small Press Book Fair is a regional, one-day event that will bring together small press publishers, activists, visual artists, and other DIY enthusiasts that will also have lectures, exhibits, and performances.

These things can't happen on their own. Really. Chris Fritton and I have been working diligently and we thank those that have supported us to this point, now we hope that some of you can help us out on an individual basis. Feel free donate as little as $1 if that's what you have. We are beggars, not choosers.

So, for your donation, we will list your name in our program, and website--and a link to whatever you wish, should you wish to have a link. Links will appear here <http://www.buffalosmallpress.org/sponsor/>.

If you're feeling philanthropic and want to help insure that the Buffalo Small Press Book Fair becomes an annual event, visit our sponsor page and hit up the Paypal Donate button on the top right of the screen.

We appreciate absolutely any help you can give.

chris & kevin

--
SUICIDE L L C,
when life just isn't an option

↑ Index

90. amy king
Re: in honor of Aaron Belz's success...
Tue 6 Mar 2007

I don't do Paypal. But I do sponser poetry in Buffalo -- in all shapes and sizes. Can I send a check? Made out to whom? And to what address?

kevin thurston <[redacted]> wrote:

If you're feeling philanthropic and want to help insure that the Buffalo Small Press Book Fair becomes an annual event, visit our sponsor page and hit up the Paypal Donate button on the top right of the screen.

We appreciate absolutely any help you can give.

chris & kevin

Don't be flakey. Get Yahoo! Mail for Mobile and always stay connected to friends.

↑ Index

91. amy king
Re: AWP?
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Did you fight Donald off too?

Geoffrey Gatza <[redacted]> wrote:
  Hi Amy,

On arriving to Atlanta I was almost mugged for my backpack. I fought him off.

On leaving Atlanta Donald Revell kissed my cheek.

Best, Geoffrey

Geoffrey Gatza
BlazeVOX [books]
www.blazevox.org

Now that's room service! Choose from over 150,000 hotels in 45,000 destinations on Yahoo! Travel to find your fit.

↑ Index

92. Alexander Dickow
baraka
Tue 6 Mar 2007

With due respect and in friendship, I must express my disagreement with you, David, as I felt that Amiri Baraka's article was both arrogant and profoundly wrong-headed. But that might be an equally compelling reason to read it, I suppose.
Amicalement,
Alex

www.alexdickow.net/blog/

les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

93. kevin thurston

Re: in honor of Aaron Belz's success...

Tue 6 Mar 2007

---

made out to christopher fritton

Buffalo Small Press Book Fair
c/o Chris Fritton 61 Elmwood Ave.
Buffalo, NY 14201

On 3/6/07, amy king <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> I don't do Paypal. But I do sponser poetry in Buffalo -- in all shapes > and sizes. Can I send a check? Made out to whom? And to what address?
>
>
> kevin thurston <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> If you're feeling philanthropic and want to help insure that the Buffalo > Small Press Book Fair becomes an annual event, visit our sponsor page and > hit up the Paypal Donate button on the top right of the screen.
>
> We appreciate absolutely any help you can give.
>
> chris & kevin
>
>
>
>
> ---
> Don't be flakey. Get Yahoo! Mail for Mobile and > always stay connected to friends.
>

--
SUICIDE L L C,
when life just isn't an option

↑ Index

94. Chris Stroffolino
Re: baraka
Tue 6 Mar 2007

---

what specifically?

On Mar 6, 2007, at 1:06 PM, Alexander Dickow wrote:

> With due respect and in friendship, I must express my disagreement with you, David, as I felt that Amiri Baraka's article was both arrogant and profoundly wrong-headed. But that might be an equally compelling reason to read it, I suppose.
> Amicalement,
> Alex
>
> www.alexdickow.net/blog/
>
> les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
> merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

95. amy king
I'LL ANSWER ME ----> AWP?
Tue 6 Mar 2007

The panel discussion for "Virtually Infinite: The Broad Reach and Vast Potential of the Online Literary Journal" can be heard here:

http://miporadio.blogspot.com/2007/03/virtually-infinite-broad-reach-and.html

[Panelists: Bruce Covey for Coconut Poetry - Thom Didato for Failbetter - Amy King for MiPOesias - Lara Glenum stood in for Joyelle McSweeney for Action, Yes - Danielle Pafunda for La Petite Zine - Zach Schomburg for Octopus]

p.s. I do know how to spell "sponsor" on occasion ...

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.

↑ Index

96. Deborah Poe

Re: AWP?

Tue 6 Mar 2007

[the tribute to barbara guest, notes]

"night lights"

"poetry the true fiction"
"leave this little echo to haunt the poem"
"poets are chained to the impossible"

hmm.

an uncanny spectacle
bataille smokes an architecturally sound cigar.

"adorn(o)ian constellations"

"hang the words on that structure"

many levels of interiority

----- Original Message -----
From: Geoffrey Gatza <[redacted]>
Date: Tuesday, March 6, 2007 4:24 pm
Subject: Re: AWP?
To: [redacted]

> Hi Amy,
>
> On arriving to Atlanta I was almost mugged for my backpack. I fought him > off.
>
> On leaving Atlanta Donald Revell kissed my cheek.
>
> Best, Geoffrey
>
> Geoffrey Gatza
> BlazeVOX [books]
> www.blazevox.org
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of amy king
> Sent: Tuesday, March 06, 2007 2:15 PM

> To: [redacted]
> Subject: AWP?
>
> I could only take in a very tiny little...
>
> Any accounts/stories/panel presentations to share?
>
> Thanks, in advance ...
>
> ---
> The fish are biting.
> Get more visitors on your site using Yahoo! Search Marketing.

↑ Index

97. Halvard Johnson

Query and favor

Tue 6 Mar 2007

Does anyone here have free access via their college or university to the College English website JSTOR?

If so, would you do me the favor of downloading and emailing me a copy of Jerrald Ranta's essay called "Geometry, Vision, and Poetic Form"?

College English
Vol. 39, No. 6 (Feb., 1978), pp. 707-724

Hal

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

↑ Index

98. Charles Bernstein
Jean Baudrillard (1929-2007)
Tue 6 Mar 2007

French philosopher Jean Baudrillard dies

The Associated Press

March 6, 2007 [] PARIS: Jean Baudrillard, a French philosopher and social theorist known for his provocative commentaries on consumerism, excess and what he said was the disappearance of reality, died Tuesday, his publishing house said. He was 77.

Baudrillard died at his home in Paris after a long illness, said Michel Delorme, of the Galilee publishing house.

The two men had worked together since 1977, when "Oublier Foucault" (Forget Foucault) was published, one of about 30 books by Baudrillard, Delorme said by telephone.

Among his last published books was "Cool Memories V," in 2005.

Baudrillard, a sociologist by training, is perhaps best known for his concepts of "hyperreality" and "simulation."

↑ Index

99. Marcus Bales
Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --

Gallery 324
The Galleria at Erieview
1301 East Ninth Street
Cleveland, Ohio 44114

July 14 – 28, 2007
Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm

Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist's bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

We're interested in submissions of

1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a living tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed on to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).

2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced by the individual who has not received any art training and has been more or less called into producing art by an inner need or compulsion.

3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly at institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of expression.

4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive expressiveness.

If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist's bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

↑ Index

100. Halvard Johnson
Re: favor and query
Tue 6 Mar 2007

Many thanks, Patrick. Looks like it's fine.

Hal

"As Raymond Chandler said, 'It was one of those days when Los Angeles felt like a rock-hard fig.'"
--Monty Python, c.1974

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

On Mar 6, 2007, at 5:39 PM, patrick dunagan wrote:

> I think you'll be able to open this. If not let me know.
>
> Cheers,
>
> Patrick
> <01cce44069bf36111299b3177&0.pdf>

↑ Index

101. David Baratier
Re: AWP?
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Geoff--

You're kidding me, all I did was give Don $5.
It was good to see you albeit moments--

Amy--

Shame on you for not stopping by and saying hello to Rita and I.

my AWP stories will have to wait for now.

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

102. David Baratier performance poetry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

If anyone can backchannel some of the best performing poets you have seen

it has to be how well they read in public, how entertaining, enthralling etc

maybe they dance, juggle, eat flames, sound good, something (or someone) very photogenic?

that is what is being proposed that I hire, preferrably something new (genre-wise) beyond spoken word, Beat type readers, but I would guess that some USOP and def-poetry jam will make it to the list I sure would like that coupled with resonance on the page

if you have contact info, mores the better

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

103. CA Conrad
2 upcoming NY events in March and April, hope to see you /\\//\\\\////\\\\\\//////
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

2 upcoming NY events in March and April, hope to see you
/\\//\\\\////\\\\\\//////

Sunday, March 10th, 3pm
at the EAR INN: Daniel Becker, CAConrad, Douglas Martin

Saturday, April 7th, 4pm SEGUE SERIES
at the Bowery Poetry Club: Kenward Elmslie & CAConrad

for more details: http://CAConradEVENTS.blogspot.com

↑ Index

104. David A. Kirschenbaum
Lou Reed/ Delmore Schwartz News
Wed 7 Mar 2007

From today's Page Six:

Lou's Got A Mild Side LOU Reed, who just turned 65, will be honored by his alma mater, Syracuse University, on April 26 with the George Arents Pioneer Medal for Excellence in the Arts at the W Hotel Union Square. It will be announced that night that Syracuse will pick an English major interested in creative writing as its Lou Reed/Delmore Schwartz Scholar, who will receive $8,000 a year for four years. A new student will be named a Lou Reed/Delmore Schwartz Scholar every four years.

↑ Index

105. Sylvester Pollet Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose but your status! Sylvester

Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --

Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --

Gallery 324
The Galleria at Erieview
1301 East Ninth Street
Cleveland, Ohio 44114

July 14 – 28, 2007
Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm

Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist's bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

We're interested in submissions of

1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a living tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed on to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).

2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced by the individual who has not received any art training and has been more or less called into producing art by an inner need or compulsion.

3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly at institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of expression.

4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive expressiveness.

If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist's bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

↑ Index

106. susan maurer
Re: last call for work --- listenlight 08
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

do you have a snail mail address my computer skills are poor. want to also say again that poetsweaPRADA PRESS IS GOING TO HAVE ITS DEbUT 3-8 AT 6 AT CORNELIA ST CAFE IN NYC. ILL BE READING ALTHOUGH MY LITTLE BOOK IS NOT OUT YET. SUSAN MAURER

> From: Jesse Crockett <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: last call for work --- listenlight 08
> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 03:12:39 -0600
>
> Dear Poetries,
>
> I'm mixing with trigonometries for the layout at http://listenlight.net for instance 08. This is our last call for work for this issue. Many here may have read the journal, which, in its entirety, will not be long, to read. I've had great luck with last minute calls for work. Listenlight 08 will hope to be live in under a week. Not over, not outer a week.
>
> What is listenlight? It's not schadenfreude, and also it is un-yet, and un-likely to be experienced over breakfast. It is the most unlikely poetry journal in the universe. Realer than tax revenue. For sure.
>
> Send your best. Your poetry will be archived at least until its editors die. Our promise.
>
> Women especially are asked in kind to send in for review.
>
> All best,
>
> Jesse Wayne Crockett

_____ Play Flexicon: the crossword game that feeds your brain. PLAY now for FREE. http://zone.msn.com/en/flexicon/default.htm?icid=flexicon_hmtagline

↑ Index

107. Angelin Borsics

free examinations copies of Twentieth-Century German Poetry

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Hi, I represent the publisher of TWENTIETH-CENTURY GERMAN POETRY: AN ANTHOLOGY, edited by Michael Hofmann, now available from Farrar, Straus & Giroux. I hope it is okay for me to post an offer on the listserv. We have set aside complimentary examination copies of this title for the first 50 professors who respond to this message. If there are any professors or instructors who are interested in receiving a free examination copy to consider for course use, send an email with your university mailing address to [redacted] <mailto:[redacted]> , and mention that you're replying to this message, and we'll send you a copy. We only have 50 copies set aside, so please be one of the first 50 to respond.

Angelin A. Borsics

[redacted]

↑ Index

108. Marcus Bales

Re: Outsider Art

Wed 7 Mar 2007

What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?

Marcus

On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:

> This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose but your status! Sylvester
>
> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
> Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Gallery 324
> The Galleria at Erieview
> 1301 East Ninth Street

Cleveland, Ohio 44114

July 14 - 28, 2007
Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm

Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

We´re interested in submissions of

1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a living tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed on to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).

2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced by the individual who has not received any art training and has been more or less called into producing art by an inner need or compulsion.

3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly at institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of expression.

4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive expressiveness.

If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date: 3/7/2007 9:24 AM

↑ Index

109. elen

FW: Ensemble Jourine March Issue

Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

announcing the online march issue ensemble jourine hybrid writing by women

www. ensemblejourine. com

appearing march, may, july, and october

hybrid writing by an ensemble of innovative women writers: long work, cross-genre, prose poem, plays, poem-plays, experimental, lyric essay, mixed media. . .

an on-going publication of serialized chapters, sections, and scenes of manuscripts by the ensemble

vol.1, no.3 ensemble:Rachel Tzvia Back, Geraldine Connolly, julia doughty, eldon, Mary Kasimor, Julianna McCarthy, Ellen Orleans, Sarah Vap and additional work appearing in the printed publication ensemble antholozine

hybrid writing by women available to order at <http://www.ensemblejourine.com>
www.ensemblejourine.com

*Do not respond to this message. Email <mailto:[redacted]?subject=ensemble%20jourine>
[redacted] **********

↑ Index

110. kevin thurston
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

think the point is that if an outsider is sending jpegs of their work to a gallery to be shown, they probably dont qualify all that well as outsiders, or at very least they are willing to shed the outsider, to become an insider

On 3/7/07, Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>
> Marcus
>
>
> On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > but your status! Sylvester
> >
> > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >
> > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >
> > Gallery 324
> > The Galleria at Erieview
> > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
> >
> > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> >
> > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007

> >
> > We´re interested in submissions of
> >
> > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a > > living > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > on
> > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, > > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> >
> > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > compulsion.
> >
> > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > at > > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > expression.
> >
> > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art > > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > expressiveness.
> >
> > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please > > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> >
> >
> > --
> > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM

> >
>

--
SUICIDE L L C,
when life just isn't an option

↑ Index

111. amy king
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I believe he's referring to the "outsider" status itself -- outsider artists generally have nothing to do with art institutions. The idea of them submitting their work to a gallery would be in opposition to the very concept of Outsider Art.

Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote: What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?

Marcus

On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:

> This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose but your status! Sylvester
>
> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> From: Marcus Bales
> Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Gallery 324
> The Galleria at Erieview
> 1301 East Ninth Street
> Cleveland, Ohio 44114
>
> July 14 - 28, 2007
> Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
>
> Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artistï¿½s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>
> [redacted]
> and
> [redacted]
>
> Deadline: March 31, 2007

Weï¿½re interested in submissions of

1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a living tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed on to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).

2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced by the individual who has not received any art training and has been more or less called into producing art by an inner need or compulsion.

3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly at institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of expression.

4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive expressiveness.

If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artistï¿½s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

--
No virus found in this incoming message.
Checked by AVG Free Edition.
Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date: 3/7/2007 9:24 AM

TV dinner still cooling?
Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.

↑ Index

112. amy king
Re: AWP?
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Ugh, I know. I missed too many people, esp. you and Rita (& hopefully, photos of the toddler now!). I only walked around that entire hotel-basement-room once. I also intended to find several online folks and say hello --

David Baratier <[redacted]> wrote:

> Amy--
>
> Shame on you for not stopping by and saying hello to Rita and I.
>
> my AWP stories will have to wait for now.

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

Bored stiff? Loosen up...
Download and play hundreds of games for free on Yahoo! Games.

↑ Index

113. Marcus Bales
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I think he's confused, then, about what "Outsider Art" is -- it's not a status thing at all. Outsider Artists are those who are self- taught, who have little or no contact with the "art world", not because they are too piss-proud to show their work in galleries, but because the "art world" largely ignores those who are not in this or that "art world" clique or claque.

The notion that recognition for quality work is anathema to "outsiders" is just plain silly. It's the "I wouldn't be a member of any club that would have me as a member" silliness. Outsiders are just as interested in selling their work, and getting recognized for doing good work, as any other artist. They're outsiders not because they think they're not good enough but because the "art world" hasn't recognized why they're good. Do you really think artists who do "outsider art" think of themselves as rubes and hicks whose work is crappy and just not good enough to be thought of as "real art"?

Marcus

On 7 Mar 2007 at 7:22, amy king wrote:

> I believe he's referring to the "outsider" status itself -- outsider artists generally have nothing to do with art institutions. The idea of them submitting their work to a gallery would be in opposition to the very concept of Outsider Art.
>
> Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote: What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>
> Marcus
>
> On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > but your status! Sylvester
>
> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> From: Marcus Bales
> Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>
> Gallery 324
> The Galleria at Erieview
> 1301 East Ninth Street
> Cleveland, Ohio 44114
>
> July 14 - 28, 2007
> Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
>
> Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > artistï¿½s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>
> [redacted]
> and
> [redacted]
>
> Deadline: March 31, 2007
>
> Weï¿½re interested in submissions of
>
> 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a

living tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
on
to them in their community or family such as quilting styles,
embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).

2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced by the individual who has not received any art training and has been more or less called into producing art by an inner need or
compulsion.

3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
at institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of expression.

4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected
and exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive expressiveness.

If you think your work falls into one of these categories,
please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artistï¿½s
bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

[redacted]
and [redacted]

Deadline: March 31, 2007

--
No virus found in this incoming message.
Checked by AVG Free Edition.
Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
3/7/2007 9:24 AM

> ---
> TV dinner still cooling?
> Check out "Tonight's Picks" on Yahoo! TV.
>
> --
> No virus found in this incoming message.
> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date: 3/7/2007 9:24 AM

↑ Index

114. amy king
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Whoa, Marcus. How did you go from the notion of avoiding the influence of being institutionalized to this miserably extreme conclusion? You have leapt far and conjured up this characterization all on your own.

Who said any artist must want to be part of an institution? There are manifold reasons to avoid the influence of the machine (i.e. demand from agents & a popular public, avoiding the drive to sell, etc). Must an artist think of him or herself as a "hick" just because he or she doesn't desire a validation from galleries? There are other ways to showcase one's art, if that's even what one wants to do ...

Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote: Do you really think artists who do "outsider art" think of themselves as rubes and hicks whose work is crappy and just not good enough to be thought of as "real art"?

Marcus

Don't get soaked. Take a quick peek at the forecast with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.

↑ Index

115. Aldon Nielsen
Re: performance poetry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Duriel Harris! will have to look up contact info ---

At 12:28 AM 3/7/2007, David Baratier wrote:
>If anyone can backchannel some of the best performing poets you have seen
>
> it has to be how well they read in public, how entertaining, > enthralling etc
>
> maybe they dance, juggle, eat flames, sound good, something > (or someone) very photogenic?
>
> that is what is being proposed that I hire, preferrably something > new (genre-wise)
> beyond spoken word, Beat type readers,
> but I would guess that some USOP and def-poetry jam will make it
> to the list
> I sure would like that coupled with resonance on the page
>
> if you have contact info, mores the better
>
>
>
>
>Be well
>
>David Baratier, Editor
>
>Pavement Saw Press
>PO Box 6291
>Columbus, OH 43206
>http://pavementsaw.org

<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>

[redacted] [Fax]

Sailing the blogosphere at: http://heatstrings.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

116. David Fernandes

Re: Outsider Art

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Great! This "outsider art" discusion running around the "institution grouping" seems to me a great way to explain Russel's Paradox. Great, great, thanks!!! david

2007/3/7, amy king <[redacted]>:
>
> Whoa, Marcus. How did you go from the notion of avoiding the influence of > being institutionalized to this miserably extreme conclusion? You have > leapt far and conjured up this characterization all on your own.
>
> Who said any artist must want to be part of an institution? There are > manifold reasons to avoid the influence of the machine (i.e. demand from > agents & a popular public, avoiding the drive to sell, etc). Must an artist > think of him or herself as a "hick" just because he or she doesn't desire a > validation from galleries? There are other ways to showcase one's art, if > that's even what one wants to do ...
>
> Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote: Do you really think > artists who do
> "outsider art" think of themselves as rubes and hicks whose work is > crappy and just not good enough to be thought of as "real art"?
>
> Marcus
>
>
>
>
> ---
> Don't get soaked. Take a quick peek at the forecast > with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.
>

↑ Index

117. Mark Weiss
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Qualification by self-description is pretty funny throughout. Do I get in if I certify myself as insane? And putting mental health profesionals, only some of whom are nuts, in the same category
may be symptomatic. There are similar problems with Art Brut and even more with folk art.
Quilting became popular among educated
middleclass women with back to the land fantasies. Is what they do folk art, or is it craft with a whiff of nostalgia?

Mark

At 09:47 AM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
>What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>
>Marcus
>
>
>On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > but your status! Sylvester
> >
> > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >
> > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >
> > Gallery 324
> > The Galleria at Erieview
> > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
> >
> > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> >
> > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> >
> > We´re interested in submissions of
> >
> > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
> > living > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > on
> > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles,
> > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> >
> > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > compulsion.
> >
> > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > at
> > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > expression.
> >
> > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
> > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > expressiveness.
> >
> > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
> > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> >

> >
> > --
> > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
> >

↑ Index

118. Taylor Brady
Re: performance poetry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I'd second Duriel, she's amazing..

Also, as long as we're talking Black Took folks, Ronaldo Wilson would be on my list as well.

Taylor

Aldon Nielsen <[redacted]> wrote:
Duriel Harris! will have to look up contact info ---

At 12:28 AM 3/7/2007, David Baratier wrote:
>If anyone can backchannel some of the best performing poets you have seen
>
> it has to be how well they read in public, how entertaining, > enthralling etc
>
> maybe they dance, juggle, eat flames, sound good, something > (or someone) very photogenic?
>
> that is what is being proposed that I hire, preferrably something > new (genre-wise)
> beyond spoken word, Beat type readers,
> but I would guess that some USOP and def-poetry jam will make it
> to the list
> I sure would like that coupled with resonance on the page
>
> if you have contact info, mores the better
>
>
>
>
>Be well

>
>David Baratier, Editor
>
>Pavement Saw Press
>PO Box 6291
>Columbus, OH 43206
>http://pavementsaw.org

<<

Duriel Harris! will have to look up contact info ---

At 12:28 AM 3/7/2007, David Baratier wrote:
If anyone can backchannel some of the best performing poets you have seen it has to be how well they read in public, how entertaining,

enthralling etc

maybe they dance, juggle, eat flames, sound good, something (or someone) very photogenic?

that is what is being proposed that I hire, preferrably something
new (genre-wise)
beyond spoken word, Beat type readers,
but I would guess that some USOP and def-poetry jam will make it
to the list
I sure would like that coupled with resonance on the page

if you have contact info, mores the better

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

*<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>

> [redacted] [Fax]
>
> Sailing the blogosphere at: http://heatstrings.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

120. Vernon Frazer
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Why all the discussion? Other conditions in my life will keep me an Outsider whether my Outsider art submission, if accepted, makes me an Insider. I'm sure some of the others who submit will feel the same way.

Vernon
http://vernonfrazer.com

-----Original Message-----
From: UB Poetics discussion group [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of kevin thurston
Sent: Wednesday, March 07, 2007 9:57 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Outsider Art

think the point is that if an outsider is sending jpegs of their work to a gallery to be shown, they probably dont qualify all that well as outsiders, or at very least they are willing to shed the outsider, to become an insider

On 3/7/07, Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>
> Marcus
>
>
> On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>
> > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > but your status! Sylvester
> >
> > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
> > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >

> > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> >
> > Gallery 324
> > The Galleria at Erieview
> > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
> >
> > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> >
> > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> >
> > We´re interested in submissions of
> >
> > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
> > living > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > on
> > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles,
> > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> >
> > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > compulsion.
> >
> > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > at
> > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > expression.
> >
> > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
> > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > expressiveness.

> >
> > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
> > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> >
> > [redacted]
> > and > > [redacted]
> >
> > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> >
> >
> > --
> > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
> >
>

--
SUICIDE L L C,
when life just isn't an option

↑ Index

121. mIEKAL aND
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Is this outsider art?

http://malok.org

Malok has no idea what a jpeg is, but I did manage to teach him how to send an email this last year (which only took about 15 years of trying). I still love the fact that Malok thinks Google is the Internet. I haven't bothered to try to correct his notion.

~mIEKAL

"The more technological our societies, the more our walls ooze ghosts." —Italo Calvino

↑ Index

122. Will Esposito
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

To have a notion of "outsider art" is also to have an essentialist orientation toward another essentialist orientation; namely, toward a notion of "art." What is fine here is how the first post knows that whatever "outsider art" is, it is not this, and yet also knows that in order to know this, it must itself have an essentialist notion of "outsider art." What is comic here is how subsequent posts fail to recognize or admit the problematics of definition, instead leading us along what Kenneth Burke would call the "bureaucratization of the imaginative," sticking to the guns of their arguments, guns that merely expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!"

Someone call Harper's Magazine, please.

↑ Index

123. Lea Graham
Re: performance poetry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Duriel is wonderful and so is Carl Rux Hancock. I think I'm getting that right....

Lea
----- Original Message -----
From: "Taylor Brady" <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Sent: Wednesday, March 07, 2007 10:56 AM
Subject: Re: performance poetry

> I'd second Duriel, she's amazing..
>
> Also, as long as we're talking Black Took folks, Ronaldo Wilson would be on my list as well.
>
> Taylor
>
> Aldon Nielsen <[redacted]> wrote:
> Duriel Harris! will have to look up contact info ---
>
> At 12:28 AM 3/7/2007, David Baratier wrote:
> If anyone can backchannel some of the best performing poets you have seen

it has to be how well they read in public, how entertaining, enthralling etc

maybe they dance, juggle, eat flames, sound good, something (or someone) very photogenic?

that is what is being proposed that I hire, preferrably something new (genre-wise)
beyond spoken word, Beat type readers,
but I would guess that some USOP and def-poetry jam will make it to the list
I sure would like that coupled with resonance on the page

if you have contact info, mores the better

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

*<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>

124. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

—

↑ Index

125. Christopher Leland Winks
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

"Outsider art" has become another niche marketing term in the branch of the commodity economy known as the "art world." Perhaps when Roger Cardinal (?) published his illustrated monograph entitled "Outsider Art" a few decades back, the term had meaning because of its novelty as a rubric. But now, in an era when "Outsider Art Fairs" are annually held in New York City, it's become another way for art hustlers -- er, dealers -- to make a buck off their designated "Other" of choice.

On another level: if Henry Darger's work can be labeled "outsider art," can John Ashbery's "Girls on the Run," inspired by Darger, be called "outsider art" too? If so, why? If not, why not?

↑ Index

126. George Bowering
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

You thought that was funny, Sylvester?
How about some of the earnestness of this discussion?

GB

On Mar 7, 2007, at 7:58 AM, Vernon Frazer wrote:

> Why all the discussion? Other conditions in my life will keep me an > Outsider
> whether my Outsider art submission, if accepted, makes me an Insider.
> I'm > sure some of the others who submit will feel the same way.
>
> Vernon
> http://vernonfrazer.com
>
>

> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]] On > Behalf Of kevin thurston
> Sent: Wednesday, March 07, 2007 9:57 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
>
> think the point is that if an outsider is sending jpegs of their work
> to a > gallery to be shown, they probably dont qualify all that well as > outsiders, > or at very least they are willing to shed the outsider, to become an > insider
>
> On 3/7/07, Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote:
>>
>> What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>>
>> Marcus
>>
>>
>> On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>>
>>> This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or >>> whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose >>> but your status! Sylvester
>>>
>>> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
>>> From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
>>> Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>>>
>>> Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>>>
>>> Gallery 324
>>> The Galleria at Erieview
>>> 1301 East Ninth Street
>>> Cleveland, Ohio 44114
>>>
>>> July 14 - 28, 2007
>>> Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
>>>

>>> Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short >>> artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>>>
>>> [redacted]
>>> and >>> [redacted]
>>>
>>> Deadline: March 31, 2007
>>>
>>> We´re interested in submissions of
>>>
>>> 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
>>> living >>> tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
>>> on
>>> to them in their community or family such as quilting styles,
>>> embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
>>>
>>> 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced >>> by the individual who has not received any art training and has been >>> more or less called into producing art by an inner need or >>> compulsion.
>>>
>>> 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
>>> at
>>> institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or >>> psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of >>> expression.
>>>
>>> 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
>>> and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and >>> exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive >>> expressiveness.
>>>
>>> If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
>>> send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s >>> bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>>>
>>> [redacted]
>>> and >>> [redacted]
>>>

>>> Deadline: March 31, 2007
>>>
>>>
>>> --
>>> No virus found in this incoming message.
>>> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
>>> Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
>>> 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
>>>
>>
>
>
>
> --
> SUICIDE L L C,
> when life just isn't an option
>
>
George Bowering
Was once corrected by Bob Feller

↑ Index

127. George Bowering
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Hey, remember when The Outsider Magazine made Charles Bukowski its Outsider of the Year?

Now, THAT's funny.

gb

On Mar 7, 2007, at 9:30 AM, George Bowering wrote:

> You thought that was funny, Sylvester?
> How about some of the earnestness of this discussion?
>
> GB
>
>
> On Mar 7, 2007, at 7:58 AM, Vernon Frazer wrote:
>
>> Why all the discussion? Other conditions in my life will keep me an >> Outsider

>> whether my Outsider art submission, if accepted, makes me an Insider.
>> I'm
>> sure some of the others who submit will feel the same way.
>>
>> Vernon
>> http://vernonfrazer.com
>>
>>
>> -----Original Message-----
>> From: UB Poetics discussion group
>> [mailto:[redacted]] On >> Behalf Of kevin thurston
>> Sent: Wednesday, March 07, 2007 9:57 AM
>> To: [redacted]
>> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
>>
>> think the point is that if an outsider is sending jpegs of their work
>> to a >> gallery to be shown, they probably dont qualify all that well as >> outsiders,
>> or at very least they are willing to shed the outsider, to become an >> insider
>>
>> On 3/7/07, Marcus Bales <[redacted]> wrote:
>>>
>>> What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>>>
>>> Marcus
>>>
>>>
>>> On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>>>
>>>> This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or >>>> whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose >>>> but your status! Sylvester
>>>>
>>>> Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
>>>> From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
>>>> Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>>>>
>>>> Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>>>>

>>>> Gallery 324
>>>> The Galleria at Erieview
>>>> 1301 East Ninth Street
>>>> Cleveland, Ohio 44114
>>>>
>>>> July 14 - 28, 2007
>>>> Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
>>>>
>>>> Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short >>>> artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>>>>
>>>> [redacted]
>>>> and >>>> [redacted]
>>>>
>>>> Deadline: March 31, 2007
>>>>
>>>> We´re interested in submissions of
>>>>
>>>> 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
>>>> living >>>> tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
>>>> on
>>>> to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, >>>> embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
>>>>
>>>> 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced >>>> by the individual who has not received any art training and has been >>>> more or less called into producing art by an inner need or >>>> compulsion.
>>>>
>>>> 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
>>>> at
>>>> institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or >>>> psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of >>>> expression.
>>>>
>>>> 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
>>>> and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and >>>> exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive >>>> expressiveness.
>>>>

>>>> If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
>>>> send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s >>>> bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>>>>
>>>> [redacted]
>>>> and >>>> [redacted]
>>>>
>>>> Deadline: March 31, 2007
>>>>
>>>>
>>>> --
>>>> No virus found in this incoming message.
>>>> Checked by AVG Free Edition.
>>>> Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
>>>> 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
>>>>
>>>
>>
>>
>>
>> --
>> SUICIDE L L C,
>> when life just isn't an option
>>
>>
> George Bowering
> Was once corrected by Bob Feller
>
>
Giorgio H. Bowering
Does not kill snakes

↑ Index

128. Murat Nemet-Nejat

Re: Outsider Art

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Mark,

Was Arts and Crafts movement in England an art brut or folk art movement, though it has some of the elements of folk art?

In the antiques world, folk art has a few distinct elements: first, most often no individual name is attached to the product; second, products have practical applications. A third, a more tacit assumption, is that they are hand made. In The States the typical folk art product would be quilts, shaker furniture, early store signs and posters, kitchy pottery sets, certain hand drawings, etc., are examples of folk art. In the East, the quintessential one is carpets. The idea of folk are has deep roots in Romanticism, racism and hierarchical structures. For instance, though modern industrial designed products possess two crucial elements of folk (anonymity and practical application), they are not called so because of the machine element. Collectors of Oriental carpets make a big deal about whether the weaver has only used natural (vegetable) dyes, that being more valuable by multiples, or also chemical ones. On the other hand, if a Western artist, De Kooning for example, experiments with synthetic material, this is called art (a new experiment). One can see here a subtle placing of the East on an inferior level, with the suggestion that they do not quite deserve industrialization and science. One must not forget, the presence of chemicals or not in the dye material Van Gogh used, for example, does not even come up. It is not relevant.

Once again, while early store sign posters are considered folk art, modern advertizement (posters or T.V. ads, etc.) are not, though a certain stigma due to its commercial aspect, is attached to advertising also (is advertising an outsider art?). The fact is that early American posters reflect the cultural, racial assumptions of their time: blacks in subservient servant's clothing, blacks as monkeys (Coons), etc.

Ciao,

Murat

On 3/7/07, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Qualification by self-description is pretty funny
> throughout. Do I get in if I certify myself as > insane? And putting mental health profesionals,
> only some of whom are nuts, in the same category
> may be symptomatic. There are similar problems
> with Art Brut and even more with folk art.
> Quilting became popular among educated
> middleclass women with back to the land > fantasies. Is what they do folk art, or is it craft with a whiff of > nostalgia?
>
> Mark

>
> At 09:47 AM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
> >What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
> >
> >Marcus
> >
> >
> >On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
> >
> > > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > > but your status! Sylvester
> > >
> > > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > > From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
> > > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > >
> > > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > >
> > > Gallery 324
> > > The Galleria at Erieview
> > > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
> > >
> > > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> > >
> > > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > >
> > > [redacted]
> > > and > > > [redacted]
> > >
> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> > >
> > > We´re interested in submissions of
> > >
> > > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
> > > living > > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > > on

> > > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, > > > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> > >
> > > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > > compulsion.
> > >
> > > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > > at
> > > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > > expression.
> > >
> > > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
> > > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > > expressiveness.
> > >
> > > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
> > > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > >
> > > [redacted]
> > > and > > > [redacted]
> > >
> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> > >
> > >
> > > --
> > > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
> > >
>

↑ Index

129. Thomas savage

Re: Outsider Art

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Dear Murat, advertisements and posters may not be considered folk art but they are considered art, particularly in some quarters. I see many old movie posters, for instance, considered art now, especially by those who use them as decorations in their home. As for advertising as art, Andy Warhol did his best to break down that distinction between high and commercial art. However, most advertising is still not art. It's purpose is to convince, to sell a product. It is thus closer to propaganda than it is to art, and often about as honest as propaganda is as well. That much of it is ugly and aimed at overcoming the consumer's conscious resistance through repetition into the subconscious and unconscious is another factor that makes it less honest than art. Regards, Tom Savage

Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]> wrote: Mark,

Was Arts and Crafts movement in England an art brut or folk art movement, though it has some of the elements of folk art?

In the antiques world, folk art has a few distinct elements: first, most often no individual name is attached to the product; second, products have practical applications. A third, a more tacit assumption, is that they are hand made. In The States the typical folk art product would be quilts, shaker furniture, early store signs and posters, kitchy pottery sets, certain hand drawings, etc., are examples of folk art. In the East, the quintessential one is carpets. The idea of folk are has deep roots in Romanticism, racism and hierarchical structures. For instance, though modern industrial designed products possess two crucial elements of folk (anonymity and practical application), they are not called so because of the machine element. Collectors of Oriental carpets make a big deal about whether the weaver has only used natural (vegetable) dyes, that being more valuable by multiples, or also chemical ones. On the other hand, if a Western artist, De Kooning for example, experiments with synthetic material, this is called art (a new experiment). One can see here a subtle placing of the East on an inferior level, with the suggestion that they do not quite deserve industrialization and science. One must not forget, the presence of chemicals or not in the dye material Van Gogh used, for example, does not even come up. It is not relevant.

Once again, while early store sign posters are considered folk art, modern advertizement (posters or T.V. ads, etc.) are not, though a certain stigma due to its commercial aspect, is attached to advertising also (is advertising an outsider art?). The fact is that early American posters reflect the cultural, racial assumptions of their time: blacks in subservient servant's clothing, blacks as monkeys (Coons), etc.

Ciao,

Murat

On 3/7/07, Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> Qualification by self-description is pretty funny
> throughout. Do I get in if I certify myself as > insane? And putting mental health profesionals,
> only some of whom are nuts, in the same category
> may be symptomatic. There are similar problems
> with Art Brut and even more with folk art.
> Quilting became popular among educated
> middleclass women with back to the land > fantasies. Is what they do folk art, or is it craft with a whiff of > nostalgia?
>
> Mark
>
> At 09:47 AM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
> >What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
> >
> >Marcus
> >
> >
> >On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
> >
> > > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > > but your status! Sylvester
> > >
> > > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > > From: Marcus Bales
> > > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > >
> > > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > >
> > > Gallery 324
> > > The Galleria at Erieview
> > > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > > Cleveland, Ohio 44114

> > >
> > > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> > >
> > > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > >
> > > [redacted]
> > > and > > > [redacted]
> > >
> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> > >
> > > We´re interested in submissions of
> > >
> > > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
> > > living > > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > > on
> > > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, > > > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> > >
> > > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > > compulsion.
> > >
> > > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > > at
> > > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > > expression.
> > >
> > > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
> > > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > > expressiveness.
> > >
> > > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
> > > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > >

> > > [redacted]
> > > and > > > [redacted]
> > >
> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> > >
> > >
> > > --
> > > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
> > >
>

Bored stiff? Loosen up...
Download and play hundreds of games for free on Yahoo! Games.

↑ Index

130. Halvard Johnson
FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Every good publisher deserves a send-off like this one for R. M. Berry of Fiction Collective 2.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SdOaW_WznA0

Hal

"Please stand clear of the closing doors."

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

↑ Index

131. Stephen Vincent
Re: AWP?
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I suggest taking a look at Kasey S. Mohamed's blog http://lime-tree.blogspot.com/ where he has an ongoing discussion of the creation of an alternative format for an AWP - a festival of poets and poetries and presses and parties without the careerist components. I think it's a sweet vision. And Ashland, Oregon, as Kasey offers - home of one of the best on-going Shakespeare, Renaissance and contemporary theater venues in the country - would be a great site for such. (Bars, restaurants, the works).

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

132. Mark Weiss
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

OK, a bit more seriously. Right, folk art is a slippery term. You complain of ideological leakage on one side. On the other, it slops over into "folksyness."

I don't think anyone has ever confused the arts and crafts movement with folk art, any more than they've confused The Ballad of the Ancient Mariner with the ballads sung in crofter's cottages.

Advertising art, which is created in design studios and mass produced, is highly sought after, but it's a different market--dealers in Howard Finster, or in old store signs, don't sell coca cola signs.

Likewise rugs. It's unimaginable that a folk art dealer would sell oriental carpets as folk art.
Simply, people don't come to his shop looking for them. But there's also a question over whether they fit the definition: there are certainly carpets made for personal use that find their way onto the market, but most of the trade in hand-made orientals is in rugs produced for the market, where whole villages do little else. An industrial product, despite design variations.

Even Navajo rugs are rarely sold as folk art.
There's more money to be made in the separate category of American Indian art.

As a dealer and collector I picked up a number of paintings by a guy who was selling them in the back of his booth at a tag sale. Mainly what he sold was old tools. An outsider for sure. But if I mount an exhibition of his paintings is he still an outsider?

Mark

At 12:53 PM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
>Mark,
>
>Was Arts and Crafts movement in England an art brut or folk art movement, >though it has some of the elements of folk art?
>
>In the antiques world, folk art has a few distinct elements: first, most >often no individual name is attached to the product; second, products have >practical applications. A third, a more tacit assumption, is that they are >hand made. In The States the typical folk art product would be quilts, >shaker furniture, early store signs and posters, kitchy pottery sets, >certain hand drawings, etc., are examples of folk art. In the East, the >quintessential one is carpets. The idea of folk are has deep roots in >Romanticism, racism and hierarchical structures. For instance, though modern >industrial designed products possess two crucial elements of folk (anonymity >and practical application), they are not called so because of the machine >element. Collectors of Oriental carpets make a big deal about whether the >weaver has only used natural (vegetable) dyes, that being more valuable by >multiples, or also chemical ones. On the other hand, if a Western artist, De >Kooning for example, experiments with synthetic material, this is called art >(a new experiment). One can see here a subtle placing of the East on an >inferior level, with the suggestion that they do not quite deserve >industrialization and science. One must not forget, the presence of >chemicals or not in the dye material Van Gogh used, for example, does not >even come up. It is not relevant.
>
>Once again, while early store sign posters are considered folk art, modern >advertizement (posters or T.V. ads, etc.) are not, though a certain stigma >due to its commercial aspect, is attached to advertising also (is >advertising an outsider art?). The fact is that early American posters >reflect the cultural, racial assumptions of their time: blacks in >subservient servant's clothing, blacks as monkeys (Coons), etc.

>
>Ciao,
>
>Murat
>
>On 3/7/07, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:
>>
>>Qualification by self-description is pretty funny
>>throughout. Do I get in if I certify myself as >>insane? And putting mental health profesionals,
>>only some of whom are nuts, in the same category
>>may be symptomatic. There are similar problems
>>with Art Brut and even more with folk art.
>>Quilting became popular among educated
>>middleclass women with back to the land >>fantasies. Is what they do folk art, or is it craft with a whiff of >>nostalgia?
>>
>>Mark
>>
>>At 09:47 AM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
>> >What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
>> >
>> >Marcus
>> >
>> >
>> >On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>> >
>> > > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or >> > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose >> > > but your status! Sylvester
>> > >
>> > > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
>> > > From: Marcus Bales <[redacted]>
>> > > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>> > >
>> > > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
>> > >
>> > > Gallery 324
>> > > The Galleria at Erieview
>> > > 1301 East Ninth Street

>> > > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
>> > >
>> > > July 14 - 28, 2007
>> > > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
>> > >
>> > > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short >> > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
>> > >
>> > > [redacted]
>> > > and >> > > [redacted]
>> > >
>> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
>> > >
>> > > We´re interested in submissions of
>> > >
>> > > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a
>> > > living >> > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
>> > > on
>> > > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, >> > > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
>> > >
>> > > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced >> > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been >> > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or >> > > compulsion.
>> > >
>> > > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
>> > > at
>> > > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or >> > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of >> > > expression.
>> > >
>> > > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
>> > > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and >> > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive >> > > expressiveness.
>> > >
>> > > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please
>> > > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s >> > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:

>> > >
>> > > [redacted]
>> > > and >> > > [redacted]
>> > >
>> > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
>> > >
>> > >
>> > > --
>> > > No virus found in this incoming message.
>> > > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
>> > > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
>> > > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM
>> > >

↑ Index

133. kevin thurston
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

tom, would you please explain with a bit more detail how movie posters (which have the function to sell, no matter which era) differ from advertising (as you define it below)?

On 3/7/07, Thomas savage <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Dear Murat, advertisements and posters may not be considered folk art but > they are considered art, particularly in some quarters. I see many old > movie posters, for instance, considered art now, especially by those who use > them as decorations in their home. As for advertising as art, Andy Warhol > did his best to break down that distinction between high and commercial > art. However, most advertising is still not art. It's purpose is to > convince, to sell a product. It is thus closer to propaganda than it is to > art, and often about as honest as propaganda is as well. That much of it is > ugly and aimed at overcoming the consumer's conscious resistance through > repetition into the subconscious and unconscious is another factor that > makes it less honest than art. Regards, Tom Savage
>
> Murat Nemet-Nejat <[redacted]> wrote: Mark,
>
> Was Arts and Crafts movement in England an art brut or folk art movement, > though it has some of the elements of folk art?
>

> In the antiques world, folk art has a few distinct elements: first, most > often no individual name is attached to the product; second, products have > practical applications. A third, a more tacit assumption, is that they are > hand made. In The States the typical folk art product would be quilts, > shaker furniture, early store signs and posters, kitchy pottery sets, > certain hand drawings, etc., are examples of folk art. In the East, the > quintessential one is carpets. The idea of folk are has deep roots in > Romanticism, racism and hierarchical structures. For instance, though > modern > industrial designed products possess two crucial elements of folk > (anonymity > and practical application), they are not called so because of the machine > element. Collectors of Oriental carpets make a big deal about whether the > weaver has only used natural (vegetable) dyes, that being more valuable by > multiples, or also chemical ones. On the other hand, if a Western artist, > De
> Kooning for example, experiments with synthetic material, this is called
> art
> (a new experiment). One can see here a subtle placing of the East on an > inferior level, with the suggestion that they do not quite deserve > industrialization and science. One must not forget, the presence of > chemicals or not in the dye material Van Gogh used, for example, does not > even come up. It is not relevant.
>
> Once again, while early store sign posters are considered folk art, modern > advertizement (posters or T.V. ads, etc.) are not, though a certain stigma
> due to its commercial aspect, is attached to advertising also (is > advertising an outsider art?). The fact is that early American posters > reflect the cultural, racial assumptions of their time: blacks in > subservient servant's clothing, blacks as monkeys (Coons), etc.
>
> Ciao,
>
> Murat
>
> On 3/7/07, Mark Weiss wrote:
> >
> > Qualification by self-description is pretty funny
> > throughout. Do I get in if I certify myself as > > insane? And putting mental health profesionals,
> > only some of whom are nuts, in the same category
> > may be symptomatic. There are similar problems

> > with Art Brut and even more with folk art.
> > Quilting became popular among educated
> > middleclass women with back to the land
> > fantasies. Is what they do folk art, or is it craft with a whiff of > > nostalgia?
> >
> > Mark
> >
> > At 09:47 AM 3/7/2007, you wrote:
> > >What, outsiders can't have computers? Who made THAT rule?
> > >
> > >Marcus
> > >
> > >
> > >On 7 Mar 2007 at 8:38, Sylvester Pollet wrote:
> > >
> > > > This is the funniest post I've read on the list in 12 years, or > > > > whatever it is! Outsiders, send your jpegs! You have nothing to lose > > > > but your status! Sylvester
> > > >
> > > > Date: Tue, 6 Mar 2007 19:12:52 -0500
> > > > From: Marcus Bales
> > > > Subject: Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > > >
> > > > Call for Submissions -- Outsider Art --
> > > >
> > > > Gallery 324
> > > > The Galleria at Erieview
> > > > 1301 East Ninth Street
> > > > Cleveland, Ohio 44114
> > > >
> > > > July 14 - 28, 2007
> > > > Opening reception Saturday July 14 6-8 pm
> > > >
> > > > Please send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short > > > > artist´s bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > > >
> > > > [redacted]
> > > > and
> > > > [redacted]
> > > >
> > > > Deadline: March 31, 2007

> > > >
> > > > We´re interested in submissions of
> > > >
> > > > 1. Folk Art - the arts that are taught from the crade within a > > > > living
> > > > tradition. The artists in this category carry on traditions passed
> > > > on
> > > > to them in their community or family such as quilting styles, > > > > embroidery, painting styles (like on furniture or house murals).
> > > >
> > > > 2. Outsider Art - also called self-taught art. This is art produced > > > > by the individual who has not received any art training and has been > > > > more or less called into producing art by an inner need or > > > > compulsion.
> > > >
> > > > 3. Psychiatric Art - This is the art that has been produced mostly
> > > > at
> > > > institutions or by art therapists or individual psychologists or > > > > psychiatrists notable for its authenticity and richness of > > > > expression.
> > > >
> > > > 4. Art Brut - started by the Jean Dubuffet to both describe his art
> > > > and to establish a label for much of the art which he collected and > > > > exhibited. It is characterized by a rawness and a primitive > > > > expressiveness.
> > > >
> > > > If you think your work falls into one of these categories, please > > > > send 3-5 jpgs, one picture per piece of work, with a short artist´s > > > > bio, with "outsider art" in the subject line, to:
> > > >
> > > > [redacted]
> > > > and
> > > > [redacted]
> > > >
> > > > Deadline: March 31, 2007
> > > >
> > > >
> > > > --
> > > > No virus found in this incoming message.
> > > > Checked by AVG Free Edition.
> > > > Version: 7.5.446 / Virus Database: 268.18.7/713 - Release Date:
> > > > 3/7/2007 9:24 AM

> > > >
> >
>
>
>
> ----------
> Bored stiff? Loosen up...
> Download and play hundreds of games for free on Yahoo! Games.
>

--
SUICIDE L L C,
when life just isn't an option

↑ Index

134. Stephen Vincent
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

At least, in my neighborhood, the 'haircut' is the most common, most fluid form of 'outsider art' - all puns intended. There is always, however, the the question of how to collect a great, curious, eccentric cut - or even an 'in vogue' cut. Photographs, films, plaster casts, artificial hair simulcra, and wigs are not the real thing. Taking scalps remains a possibility, but I understand, the nature of hair on a scalp is still to continue to grow! Plus there might be other penalties related to this kind of capture and removal.

Fugitive, elusive - unless somebody knows something I do not know - the haircut, no matter 'how great' as an an 'outsider art' form cannot be fully preserved and captured.

I am sure we have all had poems appear and disappear like that.

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

135. Chris Stroffolino
Re: AWP....
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Ah, yeah, but could Kasey get travel money, or rooms, for the visitors?

If the "price" of securing something like that could render it susceptible to 'careerist components,' that may not be so bad.

Oh, I'm sure some people can get their schools to pay for it--which is also not so bad.... but then there's going to be those who can't afford to go, or an inequality between those who get paid to go and those who
don''t....

not to sound cynical, and say it can't be done; and maybe kasey could pull it off....
The closest I'm aware of anybody coming to this in the past 15 years was that "New Coast" conference and something could be done even better, but it's daunting

(i went to awp once, though (CHICAGO), and though i dreaded the worst, it ended up not being so bad....

eye wonder-- can de-alienating fun and/or true connection be fostered through institutional organization of any sort?

or to wander lonely as a crowd, etc....

Chris

On Mar 7, 2007, at 10:20 AM, Stephen Vincent wrote:

> I suggest taking a look at Kasey S. Mohamed's blog
> http://lime-tree.blogspot.com/ > where he has an ongoing discussion of the creation of an > alternative format > for an AWP - a festival of poets and poetries and presses and parties > without the careerist components.
> I think it's a sweet vision. And Ashland, Oregon, as Kasey offers - > home of > one of the best on-going Shakespeare, Renaissance and contemporary > theater > venues in the country - would be a great site for such. (Bars, > restaurants,
> the works).
>
> Stephen V
> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

↑ Index

136. amy king
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Is it possible to discuss, in pragmatic measure, functions/presentations of kinds of art in the world -- as well as what one might actively avoid/define one's self against -- without spiraling into the old "impossible to define any concept" debate at every turn? On my slippery slope, it's merely distracting and unproductive, not comedic.

I do have a question though as my logic hasn't been attended to since the undergrad class I failed -- How is noting that outsider artists resist the draw of art institutions essentializing the definition of outsider art? Your conclusion seems cyclical and insular in a way that requires yet another leap, " ... whatever 'outsider art' is, it is not this, and yet also knows that in order to know this, it must itself have an essentialist notion of 'outsider art'."

I don't see how by knowing some periphery knowledge (that "outsider artists generally resist institutions") that I then must have an "essentialist notion" of outsider art. In fact, I know very little about outsider art, perhaps because I haven't researched it/sought it out to any noteworthy degree, and then perhaps because it isn't frequently displayed in the galleries that I frequent. I would assume that there are more artists engaged in outsider art activities than most of us know. Where is the essentialist notion in that?

Will Esposito <[redacted]> wrote: To have a notion of "outsider art" is also to have an essentialist orientation toward another essentialist orientation; namely, toward a notion of "art." What is fine here is how the first post knows that whatever "outsider art" is, it is not this, and yet also knows that in order to know this, it must itself have an essentialist notion of "outsider art."

What is comic here is how subsequent posts fail to recognize or admit the problematics of definition, instead leading us along what Kenneth Burke would call the "bureaucratization of the imaginative," sticking to the guns of their arguments, guns that merely expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!"

Someone call Harper's Magazine, please.

Finding fabulous fares is fun.

Let Yahoo! FareChase search your favorite travel sites to find flight and hotel bargains.

↑ Index

137. Alexander Dickow

Baraka

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Chris Stroffolino wrote: "what specifically?"

Come on, Chris, don't get me started.
Okay, for starters. Baraka forgets, in a major way, rhetorical rule number one: talk to your fing audience. Do you think he believes his own poetry sucks? No, he comes across as an insanely vain man. Or that he might have some degree of guilty complicity in the Evil System? Or that poetry might just not be the best way of leading the fight, and shouldn't define the dignity or rank of those who struggle? Sounds to me like he doesn't like anyone who doesn't write like him. Gimme a break. What an arrogant jerk.
Plus, he's just plain wrong. I've read lots of interesting poetry being written right now, politically driven or otherwise.
You'll notice I didn't mention the antisemitism issue, as I don't know anything about it and it's not relevant to this article anyway. That said, given the hateful language of this pinhead, I wouldn't be surprised if.
Here's where I cover my head and wait for the tomatoes. I'm going to regret this....
Amicalement,
Alex

www.alexdickow.net/blog/

> les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
> merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

138. amy king
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Once the work is out of the artist's hands, does that mean he doesn't control it anymore? If he sells his work to you, has he allowed it to become a commodity? Unless he contractually requires, upon selling to you, that the piece not be displayed, aren't you free to do with it as you please - apart from his principles? And then by the very selling the work, or even just allowing its entry into the Art World proper, has he inherently negated his outsider art status, whether he contractually limits its presentation in the world or not?

Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:As a dealer and collector I picked up a number of paintings by a guy who was selling them in the back of his booth at a tag sale. Mainly what he sold was old tools. An outsider for sure. But if I mount an exhibition of his paintings is he still an outsider?

Mark

Expecting? Get great news right away with email Auto-Check.
Try the Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

139. Dillon Westbrook
Re: Baraka
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

could someone point me to the Baraka article in question- I'm missing something in the stream, but interested to catch up.

Dillon

On Mar 7, 2007, at 11:13 AM, Alexander Dickow wrote:

> Chris Stroffolino wrote: "what specifically?"
>
> Come on, Chris, don't get me started.
> Okay, for starters. Baraka forgets, in a major way,
> rhetorical rule number one: talk to your fing
> *audience. Do you think he believes his own poetry* > sucks? No, he comes across as an insanely vain man. Or > *that he might have some degree of guilty complicity*
> in the Evil System? Or that poetry might just not be > the best way of leading the fight, and shouldn't > define the dignity or rank of those who struggle?

> Sounds to me like he doesn't like anyone who doesn't > *write like him. Gimme a break. What an arrogant*
> jerk.
> Plus, he's just plain wrong. I've read lots of > interesting poetry being written right now,
> politically driven or otherwise.
> You'll notice I didn't mention the antisemitism issue,
> as I don't know anything about it and it's not > relevant to this article anyway. That said, given the > hateful language of this pinhead, I wouldn't be > surprised if.
> Here's where I cover my head and wait for the > tomatoes. I'm going to regret this....
> Amicalement,
> Alex
>
> www.alexdickow.net/blog/
>
> > les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
> > merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

140. Ruth Lepson
Re: Baraka
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

where is the article?

On 3/7/07 2:13 PM, "Alexander Dickow" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Chris Stroffolino wrote: "what specifically?"
>
> Come on, Chris, don't get me started.
> Okay, for starters. Baraka forgets, in a major way,
> rhetorical rule number one: talk to your fing
> *audience. Do you think he believes his own poetry*
> sucks? No, he comes across as an insanely vain man. Or
> *that he might have some degree of guilty complicity*
> in the Evil System? Or that poetry might just not be > the best way of leading the fight, and shouldn't
> define the dignity or rank of those who struggle?
> Sounds to me like he doesn't like anyone who doesn't > *write like him. Gimme a break. What an arrogant*
> jerk.
> Plus, he's just plain wrong. I've read lots of > interesting poetry being written right now,
> politically driven or otherwise.
> You'll notice I didn't mention the antisemitism issue,

> as I don't know anything about it and it's not relevant to this article anyway. That said, given the hateful language of this pinhead, I wouldn't be surprised if.
> Here's where I cover my head and wait for the tomatoes. I'm going to regret this....
> Amicalement,
> Alex
>
> www.alexdickow.net/blog/
>
> > les mots! ah quel désert à la fin merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

141. Stephen Vincent
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

> Once the work is out of the artist's hands, does that mean he doesn't control
> it anymore?
I don't know if this varies from state to state, but in California, if a work is sold at auction, I believe the artist receives a percentage of the sale. (Which gives a California owner incentive to go to auction with the same piece in New York, I assume, to where there will be percentage for the artist).
And there are laws about what you can do to a work. You cannot, for example, take a mobile or work by Alexander Calder (or anyone else) and weld it into a patio lawn chair. Or, if a City has commissioned a mural for a particular space, the art work cannot be destroyed or abused. It the wall is to be changed, the artwork must be preserved and not destroyed, tho it may be relocated to another site (which, I suspect, may include a warehouse).

Curious analog with poetry is that no one is entitled to abuse your original poem, that is take it, alter it and/or misrepresent it with your name. That's copyright violation. A person can, however - as most of us in one way or other do - take somebody else's poem (be the poet alive or dead) and transform it something else, tho still maybe strongly echoing the original work. Where this gets challenging in the visual realm is in the area of 'appropriation art" - where a photographer, say, Sherrie Levine, rephotographs a Walker Evans framed picture and puts her name under it. Or, a personal example, when the Fraenkel Gallery in San Francisco sold Man Ray's photograph of The Woman With Tears (right name) for a million dollars (it was the first photograph to break into 7 figures), I photographed the Man Ray in the Gallery. I happily showed everyone my one million dollar photograph. I appropriated everything, even the frame, except for the original and the money!

I don't know if there is anything comparable in poetry to the practice of 'appropriation art' in that sense. Tho I once hollowed out a Shakespeare sonnet, leaving only the first and last letters on each line. That was kind of liberating! And the hollowed shape was intriguing.

Stephen V

↑ Index

142. Michael Tod Edgerton
Seeking Michael Palmer (who isn't?)
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Hey, does anyone have Michael Palmer's email and/or snail mail addresses? I was in his Bread Loaf workshop several years ago and want to reconnect, send him my god-knows-when-to-be-published-manuscript, if he'll have it, but have lost the BL booklet I once had with what may now be, at any rate, an old address. If anyone can help me out, I'd appreciate it. I'm tired of waiting for the book deal and just want potentially interested people whose work I admire to be reading it. Please backchannel to me if you would if you could!

Thanks!

Tod

"There's the mute probability of a reciprocal lack of understanding"
- Mei-mei Berssenbrugge

Don't get soaked. Take a quick peek at the forecast with theYahoo! Search weather shortcut.

↑ Index

143. Michael Kelleher
Correction
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Our feature for this Sunday's Open Reading has changed -- see below.

LITERARY BUFFALO

JUST BUFFALO OPEN READING SERIES
SECOND SUNDAY, NOT THIRD SUNDAY

OPEN READING
FEATURING: Kristi Meal (not Karen Lewis!)

March 11, 7 P.M.
Rust Belt Books, 202 ALLEN ST.

UNSUBSCRIBE

If you would like to unsubscribe from this list, just say so and you will be immediately removed.

_____
Michael Kelleher
Artistic Director
Just Buffalo Literary Center
Market Arcade
617 Main St., Ste. 202A
Buffalo, NY 14203
[redacted]
[redacted] (fax)
www.justbuffalo.org
[redacted]

↑ Index

144. Lewis LaCook
King's Woods : The A-history of Lorain, Ohio - a data-driven networked hypertext by Lewis LaCook
Wed 7 Mar 2007

King's Woods

data-driven networked hypertext

by Lewis LaCook

2007
PHP/MySQL, XHTML, CSS, JavaScript

http://www.lewislacook.org/kingswoods/index.html

/King's Woods/ is a data-driven, networked hypertext poem that utilizes information about both the history and present of the city of Lorain, Ohio, and grows with each subsequent user's experience of the work. It's a poetic response to the city, and as such many of the work's features are dependent on it; the positioning, length, and opacity of certain elements rely on weather information about Lorain (the current temperature, the days until the next full moon, etc)...

Lewis LaCook
Director of Web Development
Abstract Outlooks Media

[redacted]

http://www.abstractoutlooks.com
Abstract Outlooks Media - Premium Web Hosting, Development, and Art Photography

http://www.lewislacook.org
lewislacook.org - New Media Poetry and Poetics

http://www.xanaxpop.org
Xanax Pop - the Poetry of Lewis LaCook

It's here! Your new message!
Get new email alerts with the free Yahoo! Toolbar.

↑ Index

145. Rob McLennan
the ottawa small press book fair - spring edition
Wed 7 Mar 2007

---

span-o (the small press action network - ottawa) presents
the ottawa small press book fair spring edition will be happening
Saturday, June 16, 2007

in room 203 of the Jack Purcell Community Centre (on Elgin, at 320 Jack Purcell Lane). contact rob at [redacted] to sign up for a table, etc.

General info: the ottawa small press book fair noon to 5pm (opens at 11am for exhibitors)

admission free to the public. $20 for exhibitors (payable to rob mclennan, c/o 858 Somerset St W, main floor, Ottawa Ontario K1R 6R7). full tables only. for catalog, exhibitors should send (on paper, not email name of press, address, email, web address, contact person, type of publications, list of publications (with price), if submissions are being considered & any other pertinent info, including upcoming ottawa-area events (if any).

also, due to the increased demand for table space, exhibitors are asked to confirm far earlier than usual. i.e. -- before, say, the day of the fair. the fair usually contains exhibitors with poetry books, novels, cookbooks, posters, t-shirts, graphic novels, comic books, magazines, scraps of paper, gum-ball machines with poems, 2x4s with text, etc. happens twice a year, started in 1994 by rob mclennan & James Spyker. now run by rob mclennan thru span-o.

questions, [redacted] or [redacted] more info on span-o at the span-o link of www.track0.com/rob_mclennan free things can be mailed for fair distributionto the same address. we will not be selling things for folk who cant make it, sorry.

also, always looking for volunteers to poster, move tables, that sort of thing. let me know if anyone able to do anything. thanks.

for more information, bother rob mclennan at [redacted] or [redacted] / or check out the span-o link at www.track0.com/rob_mclennan

==========

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press fair ...12th poetry coll'n - aubade (Broken Jaw Press) .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

146. Aldon Nielsen advance notice
Wed 7 Mar 2007

> I just sent off to the University of Michigan Press the final edit of Lorenzo Thomas's posthumous volume WORDS AND MUSIC AND THE BLACK INTELLECTUAL TRADITION -- Anybody who has ever heard Lorenzo talk about music will love this book. -- Includes personal chats with Juke Boy Bonnor and the guys who started Sonny Boy Williamson's KING BISCUIT TIME radio show --

The book should be out within the year -- I'll keep y'all posted --

<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

"I stand corrected, like a bishop of the obvious."
--Robert Kelly

Aldon Lynn Nielsen
George and Barbara Kelly Professor of American Literature
Department of English
The Pennsylvania State University 112 Burrowes
University Park, PA 16802-6200

[redacted] [office]

[redacted] [Fax]

Sailing the blogosphere at: http://heatstrings.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

147. Mark Weiss
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I think the governing term is "parody," and that the appropriation, as long as you don't try to pass it off as an original, is yours to claim as your own creation. The defining case in visual art is Duchamps' mustachioed Mona Lisa. To defend their property rights, museums limit publication of photographs of their holdings, and when they license reproduction the contract spells out what the licensee can and can't do. The same holds true for poems. There, and in verbal art in general, the veryu vague test seems to be the percentage of change.

I don't know about the Calder. In most of the world the owner is perfectly well entitled to make it into a lawn chair, unlesshe's signed an agreement not to. But let's assume that in San Francisco one can't alter the Calder (and I do assume your assertion is correct), or even remove it to where one can, does this mean that no artworks can be altered? Can I make a throw-pillar rug out of a textile or throw a painting away? How are the limits set?

Amy, I'm sure that there are "outsiders" who would resist their art being taken "inside" (what would Darger or Wolfli have said), but I doubt that's common. The artist whose work I bought (his name is Hendiekus, or Henry, Vanderloo) certainly wouldn't object. As to definition, the boundaries will always be nebulous. Van Gogh was largely self-trained, for instance, and gets treated one way, Rousseau le Douanier, also largely self-trained, another. It's the extremes that provoke criticism. To take an example from music, there are ethnomusicologist's tapes, and then there's Peter Paul and Mary. A Woody Guthrie is somewhere in between.

Mark

At 02:49 PM 3/7/2007, you wrote: > > Once the work is out of the artist's hands, does that mean he > doesn't control
> > it anymore?
>I don't know if this varies from state to state, but in California, if a >work is sold at auction, I believe the artist receives a percentage of the >sale. (Which gives a California owner incentive to go to auction with the >same piece in New York, I assume, to where there will be percentage for the >artist).

>And there are laws about what you can do to a work. You cannot, for example, >take a mobile or work by Alexander Calder (or anyone else) and weld it into >a patio lawn chair. Or, if a City has commissioned a mural for a particular >space, the art work cannot be destroyed or abused. It the wall is to be >changed, the artwork must be preserved and not destroyed, tho it may be >relocated to another site (which, I suspect, may include a warehouse).
>
>Curious analog with poetry is that no one is entitled to abuse your original >poem, that is take it, alter it and/or misrepresent it with your name.
>That's copyright violation. A person can, however - as most of us in one >way or other do - take somebody else's poem (be the poet alive or dead) and >transform it something else, tho still maybe strongly echoing the original >work. Where this gets challenging in the visual realm is in the area of >'appropriation art" - where a photographer, say, Sherrie Levine, >rephotographs a Walker Evans framed picture and puts her name under it.
>Or, a personal example, when the Fraenkel Gallery in San Francisco sold Man
>Ray's photograph of The Woman With Tears (right name) for a million dollars >(it was the first photograph to break into 7 figures), I photographed the >Man Ray in the Gallery. I happily showed everyone my one million dollar >photograph. I appropriated everything, even the frame, except for the >original and the money!
>
>I don't know if there is anything comparable in poetry to the practice of >'appropriation art' in that sense. Tho I once hollowed out a Shakespeare >sonnet, leaving only the first and last letters on each line. That was kind >of liberating! And the hollowed shape was intriguing.
>
>Stephen V

↑ Index

148. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: Outsider Art

Wed 7 Mar 2007

I have no idea why Marcus sent this call to this list, other than perhaps baiting Pavlovian dogs to a predictable series of giddy hilarity amid ridiculing responses, so he in turn can laugh at the creatures in their frenzy at having a big easy straw figure to tear apart and hurl lofty minded abuses at--? Who knows what lurks in the hearts of anyone--a lurker, a larker, a fair grounds barker?

Is the spectacle of "outsider art" introduced in this setting, any more or less hilarious than posts dealing with "the marginalization of poetry," "radical, innovative poetics" vs "official verse culture"? Is Is the commodification, mediatization, appropriation of "outsider art" "worse" than the vast array of institutions, presses, reading series, journals, anthologies, essays, conferences, exhibitions, blogs, book announcements, calls for "transgressive, deforming, outside the box" poetry and essays this list takes perfectly seriously?

Aren't many here continually proclamiing their "marginal status," their "outsider" abjection in the face of monolithic publishers and strip mall bookstores, official recognitions, prizes and the like? Isn't there often here a highminded deploring and celebrating of one's, or the group's, "difference" and "disabilities," financial woes and "marginalities" from the standardizations of the mainstream culture? Is the ridicule of "outsider art" because the true outsiders are to be found here, as is so often claimed?

Yes, in many ways Outsider art, as with everything, including "the marginalization of poetry," has become fodder for the canned laughing machines of the tv "audience" implanted within as much of the society as is possible. It is by turns laughable, immensely sad and thoroughly, inevitably visicious how everything becomes subsumed to the maw of appropriation and exploitation.

Even so, the fact remains that the call to create is heard by people of all sorts, and they respond in all sorts of ways, often in ways which have the energy and qualities of those things which through time are thought to be recognized as "art". Many of the works of "outsider art" are as "great" as any of those produced by "great artists". The impetus in the initial recogitions of this, by Prinzhorn in his 1921 Art of the Mentally Ill and Dubuffet in his 1946 proclamations and exhibtions of "Art Brut"--the impetus was to expand the field of recognition of what "art" is--that is, "art" is something more than that which has been defined as "art," produced soley by a person or persons known to society as "artists". The vocation of "artist" does not come only to those who think of themsleves or are conventionally thought of, as "artists". "Art" can call to anyone, come to people by all sorts of strange ways, manifest itself in all manner of forms, via the beings who "heed the call". "Art" is at once far more anarchic and far more disciplined within its exactions than what the conventioanlly recognized and labeled ideas, theories, crtiical commentaries and the whole appartus of discourse built around the term "art" --or "poetry"--can ever conceive of, can only begin to find in practice. The explosions of changes in 20th century art were initiated by persons , artists, who wanted to break through the barriers of what had come to be the prisons of "art". So the turn to recognizing a "naive painter" like Henri Rousseau as a geat artist, the turn to recognizing "primitve" and African, Tahitian, indigenous arts of the world over as Art, recognizing the interestingnesses of children's art, then that of the mentally ill, and, with Dubuffet , that of the untrained creator in all sorts of media often not remotely thought of before as "art materials" at all, yet the person creating with great discipline from these "outside" materials works of art that do have the qualities of what is proposed to be demanded by art. These recognitions born of a desire to regenerate western art from the coffins and prisons and asylums into which it was being consigned-the ones in the art world, the market world, the institutions---came almost entirely from artists orginally--not collectors or critics. theorists, bankers, sociologists of the soul. (Prinzhorn is a great exception, to whom many artists gave thanks for the immense possibilities opened by his book. Klee, the Surrealists, thousands of artists to this day recall and thank Prinzhorn.) When an artist feels confined, to paraphrase audre lorde, you can't smash through the wals of confinement and then hope to build something new with the master's tools--the artist looks around for things to use as tools never thought of before, and the same with materials. "Necessity is the motherfucker of invention," I say, and this is at the heart of not simply "outsider art", but of art which realizes it needs to find something other than what it is working with that got it into this prison in the first place. Setting out to find some other forms, tools and examples of possibilities--the artist begins to recognize art al around that they have never seen before as art, limited as they had been in an by their confinements, and like any artist, sets to work using these new examples and tools and forms. An artist is a finder and a thief, too, like a crow sighting and swooping down on what it recognizes as materials for the wild constructions of its Merzbau nest. And of course, by recognizing these new forms as something to steal from, the artist at the same time is recognizing that they in themsleves are an art equal with anything she has made. And that means these things found and recongized need to be studied deeply and with the discipline and respect one has brought to the things one has known up to now as "art" and materials.

Th history of "modern" and "postmodern" art has been one continually informed by the extensions of recognitions by artists of what is art, outside the previous labels and conventions of such--and the uses or appreciations of these arts' forms, expressions, histories, creators.

The first recogntion by ma institution of the equal status of "modern art" and "outsider art" came in th first mega traveling show of the 20th century, the Nazis' exhibition of Degenarte Art, in which works by great modern painters hung side by side with works by asylum inmates--including Adolf Wuffli, one of the first great "outsider artists" to become legendary. The Nazis thought that by equating modern art with the art of the insane, that they were underlining the "degeneracy" of modern art and those artists represented. Paradoxically, by this branding, condeming action, the Nazis had stumbled on exactly what was being seen not as a "degeneracy" and insanity in modern art, but the art of the "outsider" having an equal place with that of "great artists" as "great art"as recongised by artists--who mgiht just have some sort of expertise in art. The Nazis ridiculed, humiliated, condemned the modern artists, equating him and her with the works and person of the mentally ill whom the artists recognized as also being art, as artits in their right. By considering something so ridiculous and "sick" as "outsider art" to be art--this proved that the artists themselves were ridiculous and "sick." "It takes one to know one"--can cut both ways.

So it is that ridicule, humilation and condemnation can often backfire. It is the Nazis who ended up experiecing these responses they had first flung out into the world. They joined a long list of "critics' and "curators" who had found their ridicule also coming back in their own faces. The modern art and "outsider art" went on being made and recognized as "art" by bringing the new recognitions they opened in the world not only in the spheres of "art" and "mental illness", but a reconsideration of al sorts of labels and values previously stuck on art and on people and on things found in the world.

It's quite easy to mock "outsider art" these days when one knows only a few vague surface things about it being shown and sold in galleries, written about and advertised in expensive journals, begining to be taught in art history classes and ripped off by all sorts of poseurs. (Isn't "radicalinnovative," "transgressive" "marginalized" poetry being taught for a while now in both Creative Writing and literature classes in a great many places--?) But is not the same situation functioning in poetry, on the poetics list , in any other art forms? And mightn't others not a part of this sphere here find what goes on here equally laughable? And they do, do this, too, find it hilarious, as much as outsider art is found hilarious here.

I don't know why the call was sent to this list, because--it's predictable that something like "outsider art" will be laughed at, the stereotypical cartoonish ideas and images of it, that is. It reveals both an ignorance of the subject and at the same time a superior attitude to it--that the "marginal, radical, innovative works" written of here, are superior to all the junk made by the clowns and pretenders and money makers of the "outsider art" world. It is as though what is discussed here is "real art" and what made over there "fake art". Or simply "bad art" cunningly marketed. One might even think of it as an issue with overtones of class, with "outsider art" being made by the uneducated, unsophisticated, lumpen masses out there in the heap of junk known as "the world", creating works of previously unseen and unthought of possibilities found in the junk itself.

Each sphere looks out at the others and finds reasons to laugh at their pretensions, seriousnesses, pomposities, and as well ignore what is there that is really of interest and use in making one's own work as well. God knows this list has provided plenty of fodder for fun, just as every list does at some point or another. To understand what is really going on beneath the surfaces, the easily seen contradicitions, foibles and etc , --amd find out if anything of real interst going on--whether here or anywhere--requires some digging. You never know what you may find, here or anyhere. I laugh as much good healthy gallows laughter as anyone at the spectacle of the endless parade of the Emperors in their new clothes, which is what a good deal of life --and lists, labels--often appears to be. Yet, the eye and ear that can see the nakedness of the Emperors on their boney nags--is going to be wondering--why?--Why is this considered something--when over there--there exists something else, which is of real interest, yet stuck away in the background, practically in the broom closet?

One can be laughing mightily at a spectacle--and be unaware that oneself is being a spectacle to be laughed at by another. Things whcih are "art" hidden among the things which are simulacra or constructed conceptualizations of institutionalized or throughly commercialized "art"--these things themselves have their own laughter, at those who do not see them. The best laughter comes when one sets out to undertand and feel "why"--the why hidden behind the Emperors' new clothes. A laughing mockery is going on of something--outsider art, something else----and one would like to know why--and finding one' way along the way of this--to understand that the laughter existing further on--is that of the things hidden in plain sight, yet concealed by the labelled clothes flung in front of them, to dismiss them from a serious looking into, while one is supposed to be keeping the eyes fixed on the Emperors left behind one . . . Yet the view of the thing over there almost in the broom closet--calls one--over there--away from the confinement of being forced to stand in lime with al the rest and be filled with awe at the magnificent spectacle of the Emperors' coverings up . . . The labels--why bother to read them with such confining eyes? Why is blocking the view? What is covering up--and what is beyond it--outside--over there--in the blue distances and right here, hidden in plain sight/site/cite . . .

"A Dadaist is eomone who loves life in all its uncountable forms, and who knows, and says that, 'Life is not here alone, but also there, there, there (da, da, da)'" --Johannes Baader, Oberdada Berlins, in December 1918 issue of Die freie Strasse (The Free Street) and also--

"(The other thing I learned at college that was ever of any use to me) was a definition I got out of the agronomy books, and I reckon it was even more important than the first. It did more to revise my thinking, if I'd really done any thinking up until that time. Before that I'd seen everything in black and white, good and bad. But after I was set straight I saw that the name you put on a thing depended on where you stood and where it stood. And . . . and here's the definition, right out of the agronmy books: "A weed is a plant out of place.' Let me repeat that. 'A weed is a plant out of place.' I find a hollyhock in my cornfield, and it's a weed. I find it in my yard, and it's a flower.'" ----Jim Thompson, The Killer Inside Me

So--here outsider art seems to be a weed--and "marginalized poetry" a flower--yet think how but with just a sliight movement of the head, as Cezanne wrote, the whole motif is changed. In that case, outsider art, marginalzied poetry--why not take them equally seriously and find out what is there which is real enough for something in it to have been found by other artists and poets?

to quote the old song--"I wanna know, I wanna know/Who'll stop the rain?' which can also be the rein and the reign-- An excellent introduction to and history of ousider art and art brut is Lucienne Peiry's ART BRUT The Origins of Outsider Art. (Flammarion, 2001) The book is more than "profusely" illustrated, mainly in color. Lucienne Piery at least at time book appeared was the new Head of the Collection de l'Art Brut in Lausanne, Switzerland.

> From: Will Esposito <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> Date: Wed, 7 Mar 2007 11:29:06 -0500
>
> To have a notion of "outsider art" is also to have an essentialist orientation toward another essentialist orientation; namely, toward a notion of "art." What is fine here is how the first post knows that whatever "outsider art" is, it is not this, and yet also knows that in order to know this, it must itself have an essentialist notion of "outsider art." What is comic here is how subsequent posts fail to recognize or admit the problematics of definition, instead leading us along what Kenneth Burke would call the "bureaucratization of the imaginative," sticking to the guns of their arguments, guns that merely expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!"
>
> Someone call Harper's Magazine, please.

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

149. phanero
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I think the "outsider" term is really a kind of epithet at this point. For me personally I think of it specifically in terms of rural untrained artists or artists who have been overwhelmed in some sense by their own biological 'alterities'.. (that which has been called mental illness). Although, in reality, that's a pretty good definition of late capitalism, ideology, or just about anything else i suppose...

In the urban terrain, the term is pretty much as useless or useful as anything else as there are lots of academically untrained artists, but nevertheless there are 'schools'.. The latest "outsider" school I've been looking at is the "Doodle school". I'm making this up, but one member did describe it to me as such..

You also have Low-brow, graffitism, with their hybridisations and design wings.. in the sense that all art is a planetary phenomenon, I would call it all "Folk Art" as its made by "Earth Folk" and not a more confused, rustic, bunch of mudlightbabies have i laid eyes on! Yikes! Pass the character flail, flaw, maw, awe, ale, pale, Yale, wail, whateva, peron, garbo, garbone, barge, baaj...

Zines are still a pretty thriving indicator of this global tendency.

I like dobedo right now aka Luke Ramsey.
http://www.anteism.com/

here is a partial list of artist / art zines floating around collected at Nieves http://nieves.ch/ :

373, ABCK, Adi Ehrat, AK Wehrli, Alain Kupper, Alex Purdy, Andy Rementer, Amser One, Analogue, Andrew Jeffrey Wright, Ari Marcopoulos, Aya Muto, Best Of, Bonus, C'est moi ce Soir, Chris Johanson, Christian Vetter, Craig Atkinson, Dave Bevan, Deanna Templeton, Dennis Tyfus, Dirk Mönkenmöller, Ed Templeton, Elk Zine, Eva Fan, Faggots and Retards, Frederic Fleury, Gary Fogelson, Grrrr, The Holster, Geoffrey Ellis, Hendrik Hegray, Hiroshi Kariya, Hobbydog, Ippei Matsui, Izet Sheshivari, Jack Crossing, Jai Tanju, Jean-Claude Freymond-Gut, Jean-Claude Larasse, Jesse Brown, Jesse Harris, Jhon, Jim Osthaarchic, Jody Barton, Jo-G, John Fellows, Kelsey Brookes, Kung Fu Editions, Luke Ramsey, Man behind Curtain, Mark Gonzales, Mark Burrier, Matt Furie, Matthew Chambers, Michael Worful, Miho Komatsu, Nadira Husain, Neckface, Nudd, Pete Willis, Phasme, Philippe Desarzens, Pierre Horquet, Politique, Randy Laybourne, Raver Dave, Raymond Pettibon, Rik Diamond, Robin Cameron, Ryan Waller, Sea, Shawn D Reed, Silex, Sonja Ahlers, Stefan Marx, Stella, Stuart Smith, Till D Thomas, Tim Head, Tristan Ceddia, Trudi, Turbo Magazine, Yo Soeda, Yum Yum,

If anyone else knows anything more about the contours of this global zine scene aka doodler movement please send out links.

nuthin but energy..
two cha-chas for a ha-ha..

lanny

http://www.phaneronoemikon.org/blog/phanero.html

↑ Index

150. Photios Giovanis
Carolee Schneemann, friend of many poets
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Everyone, The following is the press release announcing my first curatorial endeavor -- an exhibition of works by Carolee Schneemann opening at CEPA Gallery in downtown Buffalo on March 31. If you are in town, hope to see you there. many thanks, Photi

CEPA Gallery Presents:
Remains To Be Seen
A thematic exhibit of the work of Carolee Schneemann
March 31, 2007 – May 26, 2007

CEPA Gallery is pleased to announce the opening of Remains To Be Seen, a retrospective examination of the artistic output of Carolee Schneemann that surveys the breadth and depth of her expansive contribution to contemporary art. The exhibition will open with a reception for the artist and the public, Saturday, March 31, 2007 from 7 – 10 p.m. The artist and the exhibition's curator, Photios Giovanis, will be present.

Conceived to foster an internal dialogue between Schneemann's diverse bodies of work, Remains To Be Seen counters a traditional chronological format to focus on the complexities of her creative process and its scope of influence.

Remains To Be Seen features three central issues; War, Erotics, and Felines, with Schneemann's most well known works including Interior Scroll, Vulva's Morphia, and screenings of her films, Fuses and Meat Joy. The section on cats will include large format photographs and the recently completed film Infinity Kisses. The war pieces will include video and photo grids spanning 1964 - 2006 that directly address Vietnam, Kosovo, Lebanon and the events of 9/11. Additionally, CEPA's Public Art Window on Main Street will present Vesper's Pool, a display of mystical objects that center on the death of Schneemann's cat, Vesper.

A companion exhibit titled Broken Borders at the Museum of Contemporary Canadian Art in Toronto, curated by David Liss, runs March 23 – April 30, 2007. It addresses Schneemann’s history of working in Canada and includes three recent large scale, multi-channel video installations.

A catalog, Split Decision, produced in partnership with the Museum of Contemporary Canadian Art, encompassing the two exhibits, will be available. The publication explores Schneemann’s career from different historical and political perspectives to expand critical awareness of her work. It will document a wide range of works and will include essays by leading art scholar Thomas McEvilley, Canadian art critic Jim Drobnick, Buffalo-based media artist Caroline Koebel.

Founded in 1974 by and for artists, CEPA Gallery is a comprehensive not-for- profit t art center dedicated to promoting the photo-related and electronic arts. With programs in visual art exhibitions, public art projects, artist residencies, and education, CEPA strives to foster the creation and presentation of new work, educate the region to contemporary art trends, and encourage a continuous dialogue between artists and community. The gallery supports, encourages, and funds the creation and installation of projects by emergent and established visual and media artists, and is especially committed to creating opportunities for artists and groups traditionally underrepresented in cultural spaces. CEPA is located in downtown Buffalo’s historic Market Arcade Complex and is free and open to the public seven days a week. Images are available by request.

↑ Index

151. Vernon Frazer

Please help if you can. Re: Thoma Chapins' 50th b'day - fri. 3/9

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Thomas Chapin was a brilliant jazz saxophonist and flutist, who died 9 years ago of leukemia. During the last year of his life, his health prevented him from making major concerts (e.g., the Monterey Jazz Festival) that would have made him a star.

If any of you can forward this to others who can help, such as jazz DJs who could dedicate part of their shows to playing Chapin's music, I would greatly appreciate it. He was one of the very best sax saxophonists of the 1980s and 1990s, and one of the freshest musical voices of his time.

His web site, scheduled to open Friday, March 9, is www.thomaschapin.com <http://www.thomaschapin.com/> .

Thank you.

Vernon

_____

From: teresita castillo [mailto:[redacted]]
Sent: Wednesday, March 07, 2007 4:26 PM
To: terri castillo
Subject: help! coming email announcement on thomas' 50th b'day - fri. 3/9

Hi Friends:

I just wanted to alert you to a "grassroots" email announcement that will come tomorrow (or Fri. 3/9, morning) asking people to remember Thomas Chapin on the anniversary of his 50th birthday, this Fri., March 9.

I am working feverishly now to draft an announcement linking it to our website which will launch on Friday as well. Just asking people to remember Thomas, each in their own way, and go to the site and take a look, etc.

I'm hoping that you will be able to forward this email announcement out to your personal list of appropriate friends, fans, interested parties so that others can know about this date and the website launch.

Thanks for your attention and care!

Watch for the email to arrive afternoon of tomorrow, Thurs. March 8.

All the Best and much gratitude!

Terri

_____

We won't tell. Get more on shows
<http://us.rd.yahoo.com/evt=49980/*http:/tv.yahoo.com/collections/265%0d
%0a>
you hate to love
(and love to hate): Yahoo!
<http://us.rd.yahoo.com/evt=49980/*http:/tv.yahoo.com/collections/265%0d
%0a>
TV's Guilty Pleasures list.

↑ Index

152. Brigitte Byrd
Re: FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
Wed 7 Mar 2007

I must say that this Ralph get up is just too funny. It's so out of character. . . . Great homage. Brigitte

Halvard Johnson <[redacted]> wrote:
Every good publisher deserves a send-off like this one for R. M. Berry of Fiction Collective 2.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SdOaW_WznA0

Hal

"Please stand clear of the closing doors."

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

Brigitte Byrd
http://a-s.clayton.edu/bbyrd/Homepage.htm

Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

↑ Index

153. tyrone williams
Re: advance notice
Wed 7 Mar 2007

Fantastic Aldon-can't wait.

tyrone

-----Original Message-----
>From: Aldon Nielsen <[redacted]>
>Sent: Mar 7, 2007 3:26 PM
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: advance notice
>
>>I just sent off to the University of Michigan Press the final edit >>of Lorenzo Thomas's posthumous volume WORDS AND MUSIC AND THE BLACK >>INTELLECTUAL TRADITION -- Anybody who has ever heard Lorenzo talk >>about music will love this book. -- Includes personal chats with >>Juke Boy Bonnor and the guys who started Sonny Boy Williamson's KING

>>BISCUIT TIME radio show --
>
>
>The book should be out within the year -- I'll keep y'all posted --
>
>
><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>

and with a signing for Ben Mazerâ€™s new collection JOHANNA POEMS (NY, Cy Gist Press)

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14
7:30 PM

The DEMOCRACY CENTER, 45 MT AUBURN ST
HARVARD SQUARE

FREE ADMISSION

Ben Mazerâ€™s poems have appeared in many international periodicals, including Verse, Agenda, Harvard Review, Fulcrum and Jacket. Johanna Poems (New York: Cy Gist Press) is his second collection. He is also the editor of Landis Eversonâ€™s Everything Preserved: Poems 1955-2005 (Graywolf Press), and a contributing editor to Fulcrum.

Stephen Sturgeonâ€™s poems have appeared in Fulcrum, Harvard Review, Jacket and Agenda. He is Associate Editor of Fulcrum, and has recently completed a critical edition of Wyndham Lewisâ€™s first novel, Tarr.

_____ AOL now offers free email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at AOL.com.

↑ Index

155. cralan kelder

New from Longhouse ~ Spring 2007 and Origin magazine Sixth Series forthcoming

Wed 7 Mar 2007

Here¹s a notification about some beautiful new publications, and a tribute to Cid Corman; continuing his legacy / work with Origin magazine

New from Longhouse Spring 2007 ~ An Update of Recent Publications

Lars Amund Vaage
Miyazawa Kenji ~ translated by Kenji Okuhira & Gerald Hausman
Robert Sund
Kent Johnson
Tsering Wangmo Dhompa
Mike O' Connor ~ Five Poems of the Hermit-Sage Tradition, T'ang Dynasty
George Evans
Laurie Clark
Cid Corman

Now online ~ Please visit

http://www.LonghousePoetry.com/longhouse2007.html

Forthcoming : March 12 Origin Sixh Series (issues 1-4) edited by Bob Arnold & published from Longhouse. A celebratory issue in the memory of Cid Corman. A PDF file of Issue One to download with over 250 pages of poetry, prose, essays, art and photography. Issues 2, 3 and 4 have all been gathered and will be released over the spring months of 2007.

---

http://www.longhousepoetry.com/forthcoming.html

↑ Index

156. Catherine Daly

Re: AWP?

Wed 7 Mar 2007

There are many, many conferences aside from AWP. There are also many festivals, although these tend to be focussed on : digital writing, performance poetry, film, etc.; t'would be nice to have a large innovative writing festival / conference.

AWP's flaws are, as Kasey notes in his blog, its strengths in some sense (tho I would say -- perhaps ones an "alt AWP" wouldn't solve). It IS the "associated writing programs" after all, and until relatively recently there was no real presence of innovative writing at AWP or in mainline writing programs. So, I find the recent embrace of AWP, which is really a second or third tier organization in my view, by innovative writers, and then the subsequent retreat to more focussed gatherings -- many long in existence -- somewhat puzzling. Let's have a midwestern MLA! Something for modernism! Something for American writing! Oh we already have those.

The primary issue here is writing programs, and what are they good for, what kind of market are they, and what kind of market do they serve; it is good that the book fair is more interesting than the panels, because isn't the coursework in the programs secondary to the writing?

[A corollary is probably that academic conferences, including AWP, the MLA, etc. charge their presenters; that's a problem. There are a lot of other huge problems, such as there's no fundraising for this thing: where are the free hotspots brought to you by HP, who would like to power your computer center? where's the free coffee brought to you by countless coffee shop chains that want to have reading series in them? Oh, we're academics, we can't fundraise, we can only invite textbook companies to come try to sell writers their comp textbooks. We can only view you as the market for us, not vice versa.]

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

157. Aaren Yandrich
A Reading Against War
Wed 7 Mar 2007

THE BOMB WILL KEEP US TOGETHER: a protest against war and extraordinary rendition; featuring readings, speeches, multimedia performances, video installations, and chat.

Heritage Room, 3rd Floor Shiver, Miami University

Thursday, 8 March 2007 from 7:30-9:30pm

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

158. Jim Andrews
Videogames and Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

'Videogames and Art' is a collection of essays edited by Grethe Mitchell and Andy Clarke. The book is published by the University of Chicago Press. http://www.press.uchicago.edu/cgi-bin/hfs.cgi/00/226001.ctl

CONTENTS

- Introduction by Grethe Mitchell and Andy Clarke

- "From Appropriation to Approximation" by Axel Stockburger

- "Meltdown" by Rebecca Cannon

- "Videogames as Literary Devices" by Jim Andrews.
Looks at degrees of subordination of videogame to art
in art/games by Regina Célia Pinto, Natalie Bookchin, Neil Hennessey, and Jim Andrews.

- "High-Performance Play: The Making of Machinima" by Henry Lowood

- "Cracking the Maze Curator's Note" by Anne-Marie Schleiner

- "An Interview with Brody Condon" by Andy Clarke

- "In Conversation Fall 2003: An Interview with Joseph DeLappe" by Jon Winet

- "The Idea of Doing Nothing: An Interview with Tobias Bernstrup" by Francis Hunger

- "The Isometric Museum: The SimGallery Online Project" (interview with K Isbister and R Straus) by J Pinckard

- "The Evolution of a GBA Artist" by Paul Catanese

- "From Fictional Videogame Stills to Time Travelling with Rosalind Brodsky 1991-2005" by Suzanne Treister

- "Virtual Retrofit (or What Makes Computer Gaming so Damn Racy?)" (an essay on Hillary Mushkin and S. E. Barnet) by M. A. Greenstein

- "Perspective Engines: An Interview with JODI" by Francis Hunger

- "Independent Game Development: Two Views from Australia" (an interview with Julian Oliver and Kipper) by Melanie Swalwell

- "Medieval Unreality: Initiating an Artistic Discourse on Albania's Blood Feud by Editing a First-Person Shooter Game" by Nina Czegledy and Maia Engeli

- "Should Videogames be Viewed as Art?" by Brett Martin

- "Some Notes on Aesthetics in Japanese Videogames" by William Huber

- "The Computer as a Dollhouse (excerpts)" by Tobey Crockett

- "Networking Power: Videogame Structure from Concept Art" by Laurie Taylor

- "Fan-Art as a Function of Agency in Oddworld Fan-Culture" by Gareth Schott and Andrew Burn

- "Will Computer Games Ever be a Legitimate Art Form?" by Ernest W. Adams

↑ Index

159. Marcus Bales
Re: Outsider Art
Wed 7 Mar 2007

On 7 Mar 2007 at 13:24, Mark Weiss wrote:
> As a dealer and collector I picked up a number of > paintings by a guy who was selling them in the > back of his booth at a tag sale. Mainly what he > sold was old tools. An outsider for sure. But if > I mount an exhibition of his paintings is he still an outsider?

Put them in my show and let's find out.

Marcus

↑ Index

160. Desmond Swords
Love Poetry Hate Racism - 22 April - Global events
Wed 7 Mar 2007

The poetry group, Belfast Poets, have organised a

Love Poetry Hate Racism International Show

Crescent Arts Centre Belfast,

20th April 8pm.

This one idea from a Belfast poet has now mushroomed and gone global, with the following places in the Northern and Southern hemispheres hosting a Love Poetry Hate Racism event, over the weekend of 20-22 April.

England - Hebden Bridge, Cleveland, Manchester, Newcastle

France - Paris

Ireland - Derry, Dublin, Galway, Limerick,

Wales - Abergavenny

Scotland - Glasgow

Australia - Brisbane, Melbourne, Perth

This has come about as a direct result of the net and all details can be accessed here

http://www.myspace.com/lovepoetryhateracism

How about an American event? Anyone so minded can set up their own, so feel free to do so and hook up at the above site.

~

http://irishpoetry.blogspot.com/ - Read the lastest blather

http://www.myspace.com/dublinpoet - streamed recordings of poetry and song, from Dublin.

↑ Index

161. David Baratier
Re: performance poetry
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Unless your recommended poets are backchanneled to me
I have no reasonable way to copy and paste from the once a day enormous digest posting that is sent to me into another e-mail

I was not really interested in a front channel discussion per se
I am too knee deep in this and busy garnering spectacular reviews for a new title of ours by Rachel M. Simon but I could send a collection of the results to the list
if that is what some people would like.

I am really looking for regional poets and ones who do not fit the traditional mode of "spoken word" Christian Bok and John M. Bennett would be two excellent experimentalist examples since I may not be able to respond individually thanks in advance for all the suggestions

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

162. Alexander Dickow
baraka (location of article, etc)
Thu 8 Mar 2007

I'm so embarrassed by my angry outburst that I hesitate to indicate where the article can be found,
but I will: as David-Baptiste Chirot indicated, it's
in a recent issue of the St. Mark's Poetry Project newsletter, edited by the witty marxist Brendan Lorber
of Lungfull! fame. And with that, I will cease shooting my mouth off, although I must say that I just love those "guns that merely expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!""

Wish I had one of those.
Aren't they better than the real ones?
Am inclined to agree with David that it's a bit silly
in the poetry world to talk about what's "in" and what's "out". We might know something of it in 70 yrs, but for the moment, I'd say it could be pretty neat to see what Marcus can come up with for us, no?
Once again, many apologies for my misplaced vitriol,
Amicalement,
Alex

www.alexdickow.net/blog/

les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

↑ Index

163. Gabrielle Welford
Obama, Israel and Palestine
Thu 8 Mar 2007

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 05 Mar 2007 15:56:43 -0800 (PST)
From: patricia blair <[redacted]>

MARKING OBAMA OFF THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES LIST. ENOUGH OF UNINFORMED PEOPLE IN THE WHITE HOUSE!

From: Fred Bush

As I noted in yesterday’s message, last Friday Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama gave a speech to the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) in Chicago. For anyone who is at all familiar with what is actually happening on the ground in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, the speech was so pro-Israel and so out of touch with the reality that it would turn your stomach.

As Ali Abunimah noted in a review of the speech (for which go to this link: http://electronicintifada.net/v2/article6619.shtml), “Obama offered not a single word of criticism of Israel, of its relentless settlement and wall construction, of the closures that make life unlivable for millions of Palestinians.” Abunimah goes on to note that there was not the slightest inkling in the whole speech that Obama knew anything about, . . . the hundreds of thousands of people in Gaza who live in the dark, or the patients who cannot get dialysis, because of what Israeli human rights group B'Tselem termed "one cold, calculated decision, made by Israel's prime minister, defense minister, and IDF chief of staff" last summer to bomb the only power plant in Gaza," a decision that "had nothing to do with the attempts to achieve [the] release [of a captured soldier] nor any other military need."

But, Abunimah goes on to note,

Obama was not entirely insensitive to ordinary lives. He recalled a January 2006 visit to the Israeli town of Kiryat Shmona that resembled an ordinary American suburb where he could imagine the sounds of Israeli children at "joyful play just like my own daughters."

Why does Obama’s speech turn my stomach?

While this is the reality for Israeli children, here is the reality for Palestinians:

Aid sanctions threaten West Bank health
By Amy Teibel, Associated Press, 4 March 2007

YATA, West Bank - One slip, and Issa Abu Shakr's 5-year-old nephew plunged into the fetid stream of sewage that flows outside the family's West Bank home. The contact with the filthy water required multiple blood transfusions and a 10-day hospital stay, Abu Shakr says.

A few miles away, Maisoun Seidat picked up a blue bucket for one of her three daily trips to a communal cistern. People shouldn't have to fret about something as elemental as water, Seidat says, but in the parched West Bank, it's a constant worry.

These are the human face of the toll exacted by U.S. sanctions following the rise to power of the militant Islamic Hamas group. U.S. projects were to have dried up the toxic flow that threatens the Abu Shakrs and bring more water to the Seidats. But the money has disappeared into the morass of Mideast politics.

Projects meant to make sweeping changes in the Palestinians' quality of life -- like the sewage treatment plant that was to have been built near Issa Abu Shakr's home in Yata village near Hebron -- have been put on hold. Meanwhile, the Abu Shakr family complains of asthma, burning throats and colds. The trunks of olive trees near their home are blackened by the squalid flow. "The fact that they stopped the project is a disaster," Abu Shakr says.

Palestinians had hoped a power-sharing deal between Hamas and the moderate Palestinian president, Mahmoud Abbas, would revive the aid, and a $250 million package of waste and wastewater programs the U.S. had planned for the West Bank and Gaza Strip. But U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice indicated in a recent visit to the region that this won't happen unless Hamas moderates its refusal to recognize Israel's existence.

Other major donors have continued their smaller-scale infrastructure projects. But it is the U.S. the Palestinians depend on for water and sewage treatment, says Naim El-Mani, senior technical adviser at the Palestinian Water Authority.

More than 80 percent of communities in the West Bank aren't hooked up to a sewer network, and much of their waste ends up in riverbeds, some of it running into Israel, water experts said. The suspension of the wastewater project "is like a time bomb," he said.

The U.S. poured $468 million into the Palestinian territories in 2006 -- the year Hamas rose to power -- compared with $400 million approved the previous year. But Howard Sumka, director for the West Bank and Gaza operations of the U.S. Agency for International Development, said his agency's mission has shifted toward "health care, food assistance and education" -- the things most threatened by the international aid boycott.

A sign outside a new water reservoir in Seidat's village of Bani Naim in the rocky hills near Hebron marks a USAID project designed to increase the hourly flow to the area by more than 260,000 gallons.

But the reservoir is empty, as are two others built for the project. Dozens of enormous concrete pipes that were to carry water from the reservoir to the surrounding area are stacked by the road, and the only workers present are guards keeping away thieves.

Of the West Bank's 2.4 million people, about 120,000 living in small communities do not have piped water, and those who do receive it only once every 10 days on average, says Ihab Barghouti, economic adviser to the Palestinian Water Authority. So West Bankers rely heavily on purchased water -- sometimes from untreated springs and wells -- and rainwater collected in cisterns, Barghouti says.

Average daily water consumption, for drinking and bathing, is still only 8 to 10 gallons a day, about one-third the World Health Organization's recommended minimum, and some people shower monthly, El-Mani said.

"Sometimes, before I go to sleep, I think, what shall I do in the morning in order to have water," said Seidat, a 29-year-old schoolteacher and mother of three. "Am I going to have water in the morning or not? What shall I do? Where do I have to go? These are big questions in my mind." Water consumes about one-fourth of her family's monthly income of less than $600, she says. In the past seven months, she has received just $700 of the $4,000 owed to her because international sanctions leave the Hamas government unable to pay full salaries.

The U.S. government is penalizing the Palestinian people for exercising their democratic right to vote, says Seidat's brother-in-law, Ahmed Seidat. "They talk about choice, but punish our people," he fumed.

In Gaza, the revised U.S. aid policy means nearly 3,000 illegally drilled wells are depleting Gaza's Coastal Aquifer and letting in seawater, Barghouti says.

At a municipal water distribution center in the southern town of Khan Younis, children fill bottles while adults fill 260-gallon storage tanks on donkey-drawn wagons. Sometimes the donkeys drink from the same source.

To save the aquifer, USAID was going to build a desalination plant and a pipeline to deliver the water to Gaza, but those plans were suspended after three U.S. government contractors were killed by unidentified assailants in October 2003. Moves to resuscitate the project were cut short after Hamas' rise.

"USAID was doing big projects that no other donor could do," said El-Mani.
****

Maria doesn't know she'll never walk
By Lilach Shoval, Ynet News, March 2007
(Ynet News is the internet news site of the major Israeli daily Yediot Achronot)

The London Times reported on Sunday that it had collected almost $10,000 in readers' donations for Maria Aman, a six-year-old Palestinian girl who was seriously wounded in a targeted killing in Gaza some ten months ago. Aman's mother, grandmother, brother and uncle were all killed in the attack while she was left paralyzed from the neck down and will have to be ventilated for the rest of her life.

After her injury Maria was transferred to the Tel Hashomer hospital in central Israel and from there to the Alin children's rehabilitation facilty in Jerusalem. Initially her father, Hamdi, was barred from visiting her as he did not have an entrance visa from Gaza but due to public pressure he was granted entry and since then hasn't left his daughter's side. He sleeps on a mattress beside her bed, clothes her, feeds her, combs her hair and takes her for walks.

"I haven't told her that her condition will never change yet. I'd rather she think it's only temporary so that she'll be happy and won't get depressed. Her brain is the only thing that works and the situation is very difficult for her," Hamdi told Ynet. "In the meantime she's learning with a computer, she goes swimming in a special pool in the hospital and she's taken good care of here."

After ten months of rehabilitation Maria is being allowed to leave the hospital and move in with her father, though she will have to remain close to the medical facility in Jerusalem since it's the only one in the country which specializes in cases like hers. In the meantime she remains in the hospital until the ministry of defense locates housing suitable for her needs and also purchases the expensive medical equipment she will need. The special wheelchair alone costs some $12,000 and her family continues to live off state stipends and donations. Maria and her father are not Israeli citizens and are in the country on visas.

For several long months Hamdi did not receive the compensation money from Israel and only media pressure eventually helped him. Hamdi was also given a room in the hospital motel.

Hamdi: We want an Arab environment The ministry of defense has offered Hamdi a home in kibbutz Ramat Rachel near Jerusalem, close to the treatment center, but Hamdi says the offer is irrelevant.

"What will I do in a kibbutz," asks Hamdi, "from one prison they want to send us to another prison. Maria and I are Arabs, we need to live in an Arab environment. The best solution for us would be Beit Tzafafa, since it is both close to the hospital and the school I want to enroll Maria in. The problem is that the ministry of defense has yet to find us a home there."

Following the media exposure Hamdi and Maria garnered many citizens have come to the Alin hospital to offer aid. Some donate money, others bring food or clothes. "It warms my heart," says Hamdi, "I can't work when my girl is like this. I will never stop trying to help her condition. As soon as I can and have enough money, I will check with doctors abroad if there is anything that can be done."

Hamdi maintains a close relationship with his family in Gaza, including his three-year-old son who he left there. The family also sometimes comes to visit him and Maria. "I will never leave her. All my life I will buy things for her, cook for her and feed her," promises Hamdi.
****

(5) Wounded teen speaks about friend's killing at Gaza fence By B'Tselem, The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories, 3 March 2007

'Abd a-Ra'uf Feisal Hussein al-'Adini, 16, is a high school student and a resident of Deir el-Balah, in the Gaza Strip. His testimony was given to Muhammad Sabah at the witness's home on 25 January 2007.

I live with my father, grandmother, and aunt in a two-room shack with a tin roof. I am in the tenth grade at the government school in Deir el-Balah. My father is ill and is unemployed. My aunt, who works at a vegetable store, supports us. She works ten days a month and makes less than 600 shekels. The welfare ministry gives us 100 shekels every two months, and once a month we get 50 kilograms of flour, four kilograms of rice, and one liter of cooking oil. We have to make do with this. We don't have money and I don't receive an allowance when I go to school. I try to eat breakfast at home before going to school, because I can't buy food like other students do. Once a week, I get a shekel or two for myself. I have to walk to school, a distance of around 1.5 kilometers, because I don't have money to pay for transportation. It would be easier if I had a bicycle.

The financial situation of my best friends at school - Mahran Zakaria Abu Nseir and 'Imad Abu Sheikhah- is better than mine, but not by much. We spend time together in school and out, and we meet during recesses.

Two days ago [23 January], the last day of school semester, I went to school and took an exam in mathematics. Then, around nine o'clock, I met my two friends. We sat together for about fifteen minutes. Mahran suggested that we quit school and look for work in Israel , anything other than this life of hardship in the Gaza Strip. Mahran's father is a government clerk, and he lives off advances that he gets on his salary, which is not currently being paid. 'Imad's father is a merchant, and is in relatively good financial shape. 'Imad and I agreed to the idea of working in Israel ; in any case the situation there is better than it is here.

We agreed to meet at ten at night in the center of town. Mahran arrived at my house by bicycle before ten. We both got on his bike and drove to the meeting place. We left the bicycle with a friend of Mahran's. We started on our way, walking east, to the Israeli border. We got there at 11:30 at night. When we got to about fifty meters from the border, we hid behind some trees. We watched the border for about an hour. We saw an Israeli army jeep and waited for it to go away. We didn't see it anymore and thought it had left. Later it turned out that it had simply turned off its lights.

We moved closer to the border fence. We didn't have any tools to cut the barbed wire. We thought we would have to climb over it. We crawled on our stomachs until we got to the barbed wire and then quickly stood up. Unfortunately, there was an opening, and this encouraged us to enter. Mahran died because of this.

We moved closer to the opening and then gunfire erupted. My friend, whom I loved, Mahran Abu Nesayer, was hit in the stomach. I heard him cry out and recite the martyr's prayer. Then they fired flares into the air. I looked at Mahran and saw he was bleeding from the stomach. His shirt was torn in the area of the wound. The three of us laid there and the shooting continued. Mahran died five minutes after he was hit. Five minutes later, I was hit on the right side of my buttocks, because I was laying on my stomach. When I was hit, I called quietly to 'Imad and asked him if he had been hit. He said that he had been hit in the shoulder. He was about half a meter from me. I had hugged Mahran's body after he died, so he was right next to me. I cried when I hugged him, and asked him to wake up, but he was already dead.

After four or five minutes, the shooting stopped, and one of the soldiers said something in Hebrew, but we didn't understand a word. We said, in a loud voice, "Help us, we are bleeding and we are not armed, we only want to work in Israel . We don't want to carry out attacks." Immediately, the soldiers again started shooting. We were totally exposed. We had no place to hide, and lots of flares had been shot into the air. We laid there bleeding. The shooting continued for about twenty minutes.

Then one of the soldiers spoke to us in Arabic: "Come through the [hole in the] barbed wire, with your hands up." 'Imad and I stood up and didn't see anyone. We crossed the barbed wire and then saw about twenty soldiers around twenty meters away. They were on the other side of the electric fence, and their weapons were aimed at us. They ordered us to undress. We undressed to our underwear. They ordered us to remove that as well. We stood there completely naked. We were shaking from fear and from the cold of 12:30 in the morning in the middle of winter. We stood there for about five minutes, and then they ordered us to get dressed. It was hard to undress and dress because of the wounds we had sustained and because of the bleeding.

They told us to come toward them and climb the electronic fence. 'Imad tried but couldn't do it because his shoulder hurt so much. I helped him climb the barbed wire, which was about three meters high. I, too, could barely climb over the barbed wire. They ordered us to sit down on the ground and put our head between our legs. We stayed like that for less than five minutes. They ordered us to start walking, and they followed with their rifles aimed at us. We walked east about fifty meters. Then they treated our wounds for about ten minutes. One of the soldiers gave me first-aid. He was wearing a green uniform and had a flashlight on his head. Another soldier treated 'Imad. They took the two of us to an army jeep and blindfolded us. The jeep drove off and about half an hour later, we got to an Israeli army outpost, where they removed the blindfold. Some of the soldiers filmed us, as if we were some wonder. They took 'Imad away. I later learned that they took him to a hospital in Israel . They didn't take me to hospital and didn't treat me completely, although my wound hurt a lot. They put me in a room.

At 6:00 in the morning, an Israeli in civilian clothes came into the room He was apparently from Israeli Intelligence. He spoke with me in Arabic and asked me how old I was and what my name was. I told him. He asked: "Why do you want to come to Israel ?" I told him I wanted to work in Israel. He offered me money but I refused because I was sure he wanted me to work with Israeli Intelligence. He offered me money again, and again I refused. Later, they moved me to a room with a bed and thin blanket. I was alone in the room. At 9:00 A.M., 'Imad arrived. At around 2:00 P.M., a group of soldiers came. They ordered us to get ready to go back to Gaza . They blindfolded us and put us in an army jeep. The jeep took us to a gate at the border in the area of al-Maghazi. We crossed through the gate, and the residents of al-Maghazi called an ambulance for us. The ambulance came and took us to Shohada al-Aqsa Hospital , in Deir el-Balah. The doctors examined and X-rayed us. Palestinian Police officers came and asked us to tell them what happened. When we were discharged, we went to the police station in Deir el-Balah and told them our story.

Now I am at home, and the days pass. But I feel as if I am still living what happened.

↑ Index

164. Ann Bogle

Re: AWP?

Thu 8 Mar 2007

In a message dated 3/7/2007 6:57:45 P.M. Central Standard Time, [redacted] writes:

The primary issue here is writing programs, and what are they good for, what kind of market are they, and what kind of market do they serve; it is good that the book fair is more interesting than the panels, because isn't the coursework in the programs secondary to the writing?

The bookfair was fully enjoyable, but to take it in -- it seemed vast -- I had to plan to spend two hours per day of the conference slowly walking aisles. The panels I attended were good as well. I had intended to pick panels just by topic, but when I realized that many of them were poetry readings, I started to pick by poets on the panel. It is as interesting to realize what the panelists avoid mentioning -- esp. during war-time when afterall we all have to file through security at airports and feel like suspects if carrying shampoo -- still, a tiny few of the panelists tried to bring things like that up, and those who did risked saying things that might come out to the audience sounding like bent nails: people don't want to hear about it, about citizenship. A tiny group attended the Pen America session on writers in prison and book-banning here, on censorship and self-censorship, though the session was held in one of the ballrooms to accommodate a large crowd. Translation was an outnumbered subject. I felt proud to have attended U of Houston, when I listened to the panel on international writers on writing, given by Ed Hirsh, Adam Zagajewski, and Eavan Boland. Hirsh eloquently addressed the current war -- the only panelist I heard who did -- and the others addressed issues such as exile in their countries of Poland, Ireland, and Mexico. One journal, Meena, publishes in Arabic and English. The conversation with that publisher was better than all the rest -- it was the only journal like it I saw. He described a poetry festival he had attended in Nicaragua. Five Americans were invited there. That festival was set up like a flower or farmer's market with music and dance and food. The poets were warmly welcomed from the many countries by a poetry audience, perhaps not comprised only of poets, as poetry audiences tend to be here. I fell in love with the prose-poem journal, Sentence, edited by Brian Clements and was so glad to get a copy.

It is so hard to find poetry in paperback -- even at bookstores -- then to take in the huge fair at the AWP takes patience. It is as if the poets and publishers hide it from you then spring it on you all at once. I have long wished they could distribute their wares to wider audiences, to doctor and dentist offices, for example. I had to go to the eye doctor when I returned from the conference, and the routine American ad-filled range of magazines in the waiting room left me feeling denaturalized before my wait was over, compared to what we could find at the AWP bookfair. (I was still upset at having to stand in line to disrobe in an airport -- Pulitzer prize-winners were in that throng! -- and stash my shampoo in baggies.) Yes, it is my Lebanese psychiatrist who carries art periodicals in his waiting room -- I'll ask him how that got started.

****
 AOL now offers free email to everyone. Find out more about what's free from AOL at http://www.aol.com.

↑ Index

165. Dan Waber

news from vispoets.com

Thu 8 Mar 2007

After just a week of being alive at:

http://www.vispoets.com/

our members have posted a total of 318 images and we've served up 1530 image views

from the Members' Gallery:

http://vispoets.com/index.php?automodule=gallery&req=sc&cat=1 and the Open Images Gallery (visual poetry you are invited to remix):

http://vispoets.com/index.php?automodule=gallery&req=sc&cat=2

What're you waiting for? Online gallery space doesn't get any more affordable than free--or does it? Coming soon, a weekly reward for visual interestingness.

Got an RSS feed that visual poets would want to read? Let me know and we'll get it added.

Want a forum devoted to something visual poetry related (altered books, mail art, typography, street art, open field, sound work)? New forums can be built easy peasy. Just ask.

Bring it on,
Dan

↑ Index

166. tyrone williams
Re: baraka (location of article, etc)
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Fairly normal Baraka, I'd say--a few wild shots, contradictions, etc.--but in large part the position articulated here is fairly "mainstream." Dana Gioia, Phil Levine and Baraka would agree on a lot...

-----Original Message-----
>From: Alexander Dickow <[redacted]>
>Sent: Mar 8, 2007 12:43 AM
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: baraka (location of article, etc)
>
>I'm so embarrassed by my angry outburst that I >hesitate to indicate where the article can be found,
>but I will: as David-Baptiste Chirot indicated, it's
>in a recent issue of the St. Mark's Poetry Project
>newsletter, edited by the witty marxist Brendan Lorber
>of Lungfull! fame. And with that, I will cease >shooting my mouth off, although I must say that I just >love those "guns that merely >expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!""
>Wish I had one of those.
>Aren't they better than the real ones?
>Am inclined to agree with David that it's a bit silly
>in the poetry world to talk about what's "in" and >what's "out". We might know something of it in 70 yrs, >but for the moment, I'd say it could be pretty neat to >see what Marcus can come up with for us, no?
>Once again, many apologies for my misplaced vitriol,

>Amicalement,
>Alex
>
>www.alexdickow.net/blog/
>
> les mots! ah quel dÃ©sert Ã la fin
> merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

Tyrone Williams

↑ Index

167. Cynie Cory
Re: FC2's send-off for R. M. Berry
Thu 8 Mar 2007

We love you, Ralph. Gray matter forever! Oh, and Gertrude Stein.

Your fan, Cynie

Brigitte Byrd <[redacted]> wrote: I must say that this Ralph get up is just too funny. It's so out of character. . . . Great homage. Brigitte

Halvard Johnson wrote:
Every good publisher deserves a send-off like this one for R. M. Berry of Fiction Collective 2.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SdOaW_WznA0

Hal

"Please stand clear of the closing doors."

Halvard Johnson
==========
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://home.earthlink.net/~halvard
http://entropyandme.blogspot.com
http://imageswithoutwords.blogspot.com
http://www.hamiltonstone.org

Brigitte Byrd
http://a-s.clayton.edu/bbyrd/Homepage.htm

Sucker-punch spam with award-winning protection.
Try the free Yahoo! Mail Beta.

Don't be flakey. Get Yahoo! Mail for Mobile and always stay connected to friends.

↑ Index

168. David Baratier poets who perform
Thu 8 Mar 2007

calling it performance poetry or spoken word creates a problem and many have asked for clarity this is not about categories, this is about poetry performers who have not been represented in american media in a large context

Bok and Bennett are examples of experimentalists who are very successful as performers. Ken Waldman is an Alaskan fiddler who "tells" poems with bow in hand Joy Harjo works well with music also. I am not sure what category Jeff Mc Daniels would fall in or myself or Sean Dougherty or so on.

I am looking for excellent performers, world class, the genre of poetry is irrelevant. Hope that helps

Be well

David Baratier, Editor

Pavement Saw Press
PO Box 6291
Columbus, OH 43206
http://pavementsaw.org

↑ Index

169. Catherine Daly
wsj
Thu 8 Mar 2007

From the Wall Street Journal.

Scarcity of Ads Endangers
Newspapers' Book Sections
By JEFFREY A. TRACHTENBERG
March 6, 2007; Page B1

Sometime this spring, the Los Angeles Times is expected to announce that it is folding its highly esteemed Sunday book review into a new section that will combine books with opinion pieces. That would reduce to five the number of separate book-review sections in major metropolitan newspapers still published nationwide, down from an estimated 10 to 12 a decade ago. The reason: not enough ads.

Book publishers in recent years have moved away from buying ads in standalone book-review sections in favor of paying to stack mounds of books in the front of chain bookstores. Some small literary publications, such as the New York Review of Books, are showing growth, but the book review as a separate section is endangered not only at the Los Angeles Times but at other major newspapers like the Washington Post, Chicago Tribune, San Francisco Chronicle and San Diego Union-Tribune.

The New York Times Book Review is an exception. "In 2006, our [ad] revenue from books was up almost 10%," says Todd Haskell, vice president, business development, for the Times. (The figure refers to the book-review section plus the paper as a whole.)

"Our book review is a vibrant part of the Sunday newspaper and will continue to be," says Mr. Haskell. "We aren't backing off an inch."

In an era of targeted marketing, publishers say the best time to reach readers is when they are in the stores with money in their pockets looking to make an immediate purchase. But with a sea of titles in the stores -- the average 25,000-square-foot store in the Barnes & Noble Inc. chain now stocks between 125,000 and 150,000 titles -- the only way for publishers to stand out is to pay for real estate in the front and pile those books up high.

"You want to see your books in prominent places," says Tom Perry, associate publisher of Bertelsmann AG's Random House Publishing Group. "Such co-op advertising is where marketing dollars are going that might otherwise have been spent on advertising." However, Mr. Perry notes that Random House on occasion advertises in the New York Times Book Review when it is searching for what he described as a "traditional book buyer."

One publisher says that chain bookstores can charge $1 or more per book to stack titles in desirable locations, such as on a table at the entrance or in a display featuring new nonfiction titles.

Even those who say they still support book-section advertising say it's only effective as part of a larger marketing effort. Michael Pietsch, publisher of Lagardère SCA's Little, Brown imprint, says advertising in book reviews can help drive sales if the author is well-known and if it's done in conjunction with online campaigns.

Readers in San Francisco have shown themselves responsive to new writers, Mr. Pietsch says. As a result Little, Brown often sends them there and supports their visits with ads in the San Francisco Chronicle, a property of Hearst Corp.

"We can see the effectiveness of advertising when we do it in conjunction with other promotions," he says.

New York publishing houses have always cried poverty when it comes to advertising. Every book requires a different ad, as in the movie business, but the publishers don't have the studios' deep pockets. And unlike other advertisers, publishers can't do brand-building: No one buys a book because it comes from Random House or Simon & Schuster.

As the ads dry up, some of the remaining book sections fight for survival. "You constantly have to justify your existence," says Oscar Villalon, who edits the book section at the San Francisco Chronicle. "Why? We don't bring in ads."

"We rarely get ads from publishers -- and I would not shy away from the use of the word rare," says Arthur Salm, books editor for the San Diego Union-Tribune, which is owned by Copley Press Inc.

At Washington Post Co., Jabari Asim, deputy editor of Book World, the Post's weekly book-review section, says, "Overall, it's pretty bad. It's very frustrating."

In California, Messrs. Salm and Villalon both say their cause won't be helped by the Los Angeles Times's plan. The thinking is to introduce a tabloid format that combines the weekly book-review section with Current, an opinion section that runs on Sunday.

The 12-page section, to be introduced on April 14, will appear with the thinner Saturday paper, which will make it not only stand out more but also save money on printing costs because circulation is lower that day than on Sunday. Word of the Times's plans for the book review was first reported on the Web site LAObserved.com.

The Los Angeles Times is undergoing budget pressures as its parent, Tribune Co., struggles with restive shareholders demanding a sale. And at Tribune's hometown flagship, the Chicago Tribune book section had no publishing ads at all in its 12-page book-review section Feb. 25 but still is intact.

"A book-review section is a small but important symbol of the support of literacy," says Jim Warren, the Tribune's managing editor/features.

It vexes Mr. Warren that many New York-based publishers prefer to advertise in the New York Times Book Review, while ignoring regional reading communities.

"The last industry in America to go to for any wisdom about marketing is book publishing," he says. "To say there wouldn't be a benefit to advertising in one of the last standalone sections in a vibrant bookselling city is an absurdity too gross to be insisted upon."

The shift away from traditional advertising hasn't helped the industry sell more books. Bookstore sales in 2006 dropped 2.9% to $16.1 billion from $16.6 billion in 2005, according to preliminary estimates from the U.S. Census Bureau. Total retail sales during the same period rose 5.8% to $3.9 trillion.

Most newly published books don't get any consumer advertising at all. Instead, publishers employ publicists to spread the word to readers through interviews, reviews and book signings. Increasingly, publishers are also using independent bloggers to convey news of new titles, which helps to pinpoint specific interest groups.

The New York Review of Books, owned by Nyrev Inc., and Bookforum both saw their sales increase in 2006. "We tend to publish reviews of books that might not otherwise get reviewed, so when publishers have the right title, they advertise here," says Danielle McConnell, executive publisher of Bookforum, a unit of Artforum International Magazine Inc. In addition to ads from some traditional New York publishers, the magazine is also supported by academic presses and art-book houses.

Carlin Romano, the literary critic at Philadelphia Media Holdings LLC's Philadelphia Inquirer, says that part of the problem is that newspapers often don't have a sales person who understands the intricacies of the book business. Even when publishers have money, he says, they go the New York Times Book Review or the New Yorker, both of which are national.

Some publishers do feel remorse -- and concern. It's hard to generate word-of-mouth if readers don't see reviews.

"Over the years, I've argued that regardless of whether we think an ad is selling a book, maybe we should help preserve some review space," says Mr. Perry of Random House. Despite this, Mr. Perry says that Random House prefers to advertise when a book is already a best seller and the publisher has something new to say about it.

The Inquirer, which had a 16-page section in the early 1980s, folded its review into another section in 2001. Frank Wilson, the paper's book-review editor, says that he has proposed that the paper restore its standalone section.

"I think it's time to relaunch," Mr. Wilson says. "I don't understand why newspapers, when they want to cut space, they immediately think of depriving people who like to read."

Mr. Wilson says his plan calls for using new technology to franchise such a section to other papers nationwide that could add reviews for local authors. "I think it will enhance revenue if we can hit 30 cities," he says.

--Sarah Ellison contributed to this article.

Write to Jeffrey A. Trachtenberg at [redacted]

--
All best,
Catherine Daly
[redacted]

↑ Index

170. Catherine Daly
Re: AWP?
Thu 8 Mar 2007

---

fill out the conference survey:

http://www.awpwriter.org/fmi/xsl/survey07/addrecord.xsl?-findany

↑ Index

171. Lori Emerson
Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Hi's - I'm curious: has anyone out there listened to Dj Spook'y Rythm Science cd? Any thoughts? Right now I'm listening to the track where Vedic is mixed with Tristan Tzara...although I admire DjS, I can't help thinking that this suffers from the same thing that happens when most novels are turned into movies - Tzara loses his substantiality and I feel like I'm listening to music in a spa...It's very unlike the Susan Howe/David Tudor collaboration!

- Lori

↑ Index

172. Lori Emerson
Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
Thu 8 Mar 2007

One more thought on Rhythm Science: on the other hand, the mix of Gertrude Stein and Dj Wally/Dj Zeta seems absolutely perfect - I guess the ideal remix/cover is one that brings to the surface some particular shading of the original...here it seems to make perfect sense that Stein is some kind of foremother to the cut and paste aesthetics of the dj!

Hopefully I'm not talking to myself here,
Lori

On 3/8/07, Lori Emerson <[redacted]> wrote:
> Hi's - I'm curious: has anyone out there listened to Dj Spook'y Rythm

> Science cd? Any thoughts? Right now I'm listening to the track where > Vedic is mixed with Tristan Tzara...although I admire DjS, I can't > help thinking that this suffers from the same thing that happens when > most novels are turned into movies - Tzara loses his substantiality > and I feel like I'm listening to music in a spa...It's very unlike the > Susan Howe/David Tudor collaboration!
>
> - Lori
>

↑ Index

173. Lewis Warsh

Barbara Henning / United Artists

Thu 8 Mar 2007

New from United Artists Books

MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY by Barbara Henning

Cover by Miranda Maher

110 pages $14.00

ISBN: 0-935992-43-X

"In this witty, post-Oulipian take on you-are-what-you-read, Henning dispossesses, recycles, and levels out the singular lines she lifts from the likes of Bataille, Joyce or Gertrude Stein, all the way to authors of travel and cookbooks that sit on her shelves. The resulting seventy-one "sonnets" sound their orphaned music: "strangers now, but once we were lovers" with the hidden glee of the artist behind her console, sampling, spinning, shredding, and remixing. MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY is a concept, a mirror, a community: see you there!" Chris Tysh

"An autobiography fished and (un)tangled from the life of words: words on paper in the air for all of us. In the beginning was the word, and here "author" becomes a dispersed beginning entity, there all along, allowing us in to language and life as only Barbara Henning might. Where is Barbara Henning in this? She is everywhere, as it is finally her "infinite pilgrimage," undertaken with and for the benefit of all. In this wor(l)d, as she writes, and we read, "it is indeed our good fortune / to spread out in this wide / finite subject." It is assuredly our good fortune to open this book and let ourselves in." Charles Alexander

"What you write : what's for dinner : the books on your shelves : leftovers. Barbara Henning has prepared us a great meal where the sonnets are even better than the index." Bernadette Mayer

United Artists Books
114 W. 16th Street, 5C
New York, N.Y. 10011

www.unitedartistsbooks.com

↑ Index

174. Taylor Brady
Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Lori,

I'm guessing you mean the Susan Howe/David Grubbs collaboration? Was there somethign with Tudor that I missed?

Taylor

Lori Emerson <[redacted]> wrote: Hi's - I'm curious: has anyone out there listened to Dj Spook'y Rythm Science cd? Any thoughts? Right now I'm listening to the track where Vedic is mixed with Tristan Tzara...although I admire DjS, I can't help thinking that this suffers from the same thing that happens when most novels are turned into movies - Tzara loses his substantiality and I feel like I'm listening to music in a spa...It's very unlike the Susan Howe/David Tudor collaboration!

- Lori

↑ Index

175. Dan Coffey
Re: Dj Spooky's Rhythm Science?
Thu 8 Mar 2007

You mean Susan Howe/David Grubbs, not Tudor.

Dan

On 3/8/07, Lori Emerson <[redacted]> wrote:
> Hi's - I'm curious: has anyone out there listened to Dj Spook'y Rythm > Science cd? Any thoughts? Right now I'm listening to the track where > Vedic is mixed with Tristan Tzara...although I admire DjS, I can't > help thinking that this suffers from the same thing that happens when > most novels are turned into movies - Tzara loses his substantiality

> and I feel like I'm listening to music in a spa...It's very unlike the > Susan Howe/David Tudor collaboration!
>
> - Lori
>

--
http://hyperhypo.org/blog
http://www.pftborder.blogspot.com

↑ Index

176. Aldon Nielsen
Re: baraka (location of article, etc)
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Thanks for the info -- Now that I see the actual piece, I'm struck by how closely it tracks with the original Alan Soldofsky kill piece in Poetry Flash of the 70s, though Alan was taking a decidedly non-Marxist tack in his attack --

You'd think we could find more interesting ways to go after things we don't like -- or that we would read them first --

At 12:43 AM 3/8/2007, you wrote:
>I'm so embarrassed by my angry outburst that I
>hesitate to indicate where the article can be found,
>but I will: as David-Baptiste Chirot indicated, it's
>in a recent issue of the St. Mark's Poetry Project
>newsletter, edited by the witty marxist Brendan Lorber
>of Lungfull! fame. And with that, I will cease >shooting my mouth off, although I must say that I just >love those "guns that merely >expel a little white flag that reads "Bang!""
>Wish I had one of those.
>Aren't they better than the real ones?
>Am inclined to agree with David that it's a bit silly
>in the poetry world to talk about what's "in" and >what's "out". We might know something of it in 70 yrs, >but for the moment, I'd say it could be pretty neat to >see what Marcus can come up with for us, no?
>Once again, many apologies for my misplaced vitriol,
>Amicalement,

>Alex
>
>www.alexdickow.net/blog/
>
> les mots! ah quel désert à la fin
> merveilleux. -- Henri Droguet

<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>

> help thinking that this suffers from the same thing that happens when > most novels are turned into movies - Tzara loses his substantiality
> and I feel like I'm listening to music in a spa...It's very unlike the > Susan Howe/David Tudor collaboration!
>
> - Lori
>

↑ Index

178. Katalanche Press

New magazine: The Can

Thu 8 Mar 2007

Now available:

The Can
issue #1

$4

The Can is a magazine of essays on poetry. The first issue includes these pieces:

- Aaron Tieger on Ryan Murphy
- Guillermo Parra on Edward Upward
- Gina Myers on Kate Greenstreet
- Michael Slosek on Eric Unger
- Brenda Iijima on Akilah Oliver
- Mark Lamoureux on Gertrude Stein
- Dorothea Lasky on Recycling
- Cedar Sigo on Narration & Figure

Buy one through this link with paypal:
http://katalanchepress2.blogspot.com/

or send a check for $4 (payable to Michael Carr) to:

The Can
c/o Carr
9 Malcolm Rd, #1
Cambridge, MA 02138

Thanks!
Michael

↑ Index

179. Jesse Crockett
listenlight 08 delayed --- get firefox!
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Dear Poetries,

Due to a schocking wave of submissions to our little journal at http://listenlight.net, the release date for issue 08 of Saturday the 10th is being delayed. Also, the intended design, employing php trigonometric functions for div placement --- lo, it does not work in the MSIE browser.

Get Firefox <http://getfirefox.com>. It's free. Do it now. It's easy to import your IE bookmarks.

Any further submissions, as well as some already received, will be held for consideration for issue 09.

Best wishes,

Jesse Wayne Crockett

↑ Index

180. Adam Fieled
Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Check out eight poems from a new series by NYC poet Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post:

http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

"I'm stuck w a valuable friend-- I'm happy, hope you're happy too...."

http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com

8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
with theYahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.

↑ Index

181. steve d. dalachinsky
Fw: Fw: 1 personell change the 15th
Thu 8 Mar 2007

---

steve dalachinsky
& a rare new york appearance by john m. bennett (experimental and visual poet, curator, Avant Writing Collection
Rare Books & Manuscripts Library

The Ohio State University Libraries, founder-editor of luna bisonte prods and lost and found times in a special evening of poetry

Thursday, March 15th @ 7 PM @
FUSION ARTS MUSEUM
57 Stanton Street (near Eldridge)
DONATION

SHaloM NewMan presents @ Pratt Institute - in Manhattan
144 w 14th street – 2ND floor auditorium
Friday, March 16 @ 7 PM exhibit and readings featuring Steve Dalachinsky, John M. Bennett, Yuko Otomo, Jim Feast, Thadeus Rutkowski, Merry Fortune, Carol Weirzbecki, Hal Sirowitz, Carl Watson, Ron Kolm, Richard Kostelanetz, Tom Savage, Joe Maynard , Tsaurah Litsky, Jill Rappoport and many others…

exhibit opening at 5 pm

Bowery Poetry Club
308 Bowery (between Bleecker & Houston)
Saturday, March 17 @ 6 PM
Mark Bloch, Bob Heman, Richard Kostelanetz, Ron Kolm, Valery Oisteneau, Steve Dalachinsky, and Gregory Vincent St. Thomasino

Bowery Poetry club

april 8th 5 pm

jim feast steve dalachinsky nathaniel farrell, aaron howard et al

↑ Index

182. Aaron Vidaver
Open Text Reading Series #3: Dorothy Trujillo Lusk (Vancouver)
Thu 8 Mar 2007

OPEN TEXT READING SERIES #3: DOROTHY TRUJILLO LUSK
Sponsored by the Canada Council for the Arts
& the Creative Writing Program at Capilano College
http://capilanocreativewriting.blogspot.com

The Spring 2007 OPEN TEXT series at Capilano College continues on March 15h, 2007 with a reading by Vancouver poet Dorothy Trujillo Lusk.

Cedar 148 @ 12:30
Capilano College
2055 Purcell Way
North Vancouver

Dorothy Trujillo Lusk is the author of Oral Tragedy (Tsunami, 1988), Redactive (Talon, 1993), Ogress Oblige (Krupskaya, 2001), Sleek Vinyl Drill (Thuja, 2000) and the forthcoming collection Decorum. Lusk is a longtime member of the Kootenay School of Writing collective.

DECORUM (TYPICAL)

you loost certitude, you youthless louse

you

shield ensheltied terbonium

lice

ensnatchèd

youse titanium'rattum's amon

grelf

I bulationgs terbaccerrationgs

ditchmonde etude

demi-semi-clever class'em

tababac a turnstim

maize merlottatoonal

continua brava

pausa sanctos

cancrementitudenal

ownage

pushyface an average glowbooty

-- from DECORUM

For info:
Roger Farr
[log in to unmask]
[redacted] (2554)

[Coming soon: Anne Stone, Maxine Gadd]

↑ Index

183. Simon DeDeo
rhubarb is susan
Thu 8 Mar 2007

New content up on rhubarb is susan: two essay-like pieces. "Cargo Cult Poetry" is at http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/03/cargo-cult-poetry.html and an essay on Eric P. Elshtain's computer generated poetry in a recent Chicago Review is at http://rhubarbissusan.blogspot.com/2007/03/eric-p-elshtain-184946.html

↑ Index

184. Eric Elshtain
New Beard of Bees Chapbook
Thu 8 Mar 2007

—

↑ Index

185. Poetry Project
Events at the Poetry Project 3/12 - 3/16
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Dears,

Please join us thrice this week.

Love,

The Poetry Project

p.s. Those who steal our bags are not our dears.

Monday, March 12, 8:00 pm
Ted Mathys & Martha Ronk

Ted Mathys's first book of poetry, Forge, was published by Coffee HousePress in 2005. A 2005 NEA Literary Fellow, his poems have appeared in journals such as American Poetry Review, Aufgabe, The Canary, Chelsea, Colorado Review, Fence, Jubilat, Verse, and Web Conjunctions. Originally from Ohio, he lives in Brooklyn. Martha Ronk is the author of, In a landscape of having to repeat, (PEN USA best poetry book, 2005), and Why/Why Not, University of California Press, 2003. Her forthcoming book, Vertigo, was selected by C.D. Wright for the National Poetry Series, and will be published by Coffeehouse Press. She is Professor of English at Occidental College in Los Angeles. This event is co-sponsored with Poets House.

Wednesday, March14, 8:00 pm
Kimiko Hahn & Brenda Iijima

Kimiko Hahn is the author seven books of poems, including: Earshot, which was awarded the Theodore Roethke Memorial Poetry Prize and an Association of Asian American Studies Literature Award; The Unbearable Heart, which received an American Book Award; and The Narrow Road to the Interior, the title stolen from Basho¹s famous poetic journal. She is a Distinguished Professor at Queens College/CUNY. Brenda Iijima¹s books include Around Sea and Animate, Inanimate Aims. Eco Quarry Bellwether will be published by Outside Voices later this spring. Rabbit Lesson is forthcoming from Fewer & Further Press. Chapbooks include: Color And Its Antecedents, Early Linoleum, Spacious and In A Glass Box. She is the editor of Portable Press At Yo-Yo Labs and art editor for Boog City.

Friday, March 16, 10:30 pm
Puppy Flowers

The long-awaited Puppy Flowers New York extravaganza is upon you. Puppy Flowers, an online magazine of the arts, wants to hand you a free beverage. With our other hand we are tapping on the microphone to announce the night's readers who have pleasurestakingly crafted original collaborative works for the occasion: Edmund Berrigan and John Coletti, Jess Fiorini and Tracey McTague, Joanna Fuhrman and Erica Kaufman, Brandon Downing and Brendan Lorber, Ted Mathys and Marcella Durand, and MacGregor Card and Karen Weiser. In addition to these fantastic contributors, editor Chris Martin will read a collaborative work written with the dearly missed kari edwards. There will also be cinematic and musical sundries.

Saturday, March 10th, 2:30-7pm. $5

THE BURNING CHAIR READINGS
BROOKLYN POETRY BAZAAR

Galapagos Art Space
70 North 6th Street
Between Kent and Wythe
Williamsburg, Brooklyn
http://www.galapagosartspace.com

$5 for eleven poets & another who sings
w/ a book fair supporting our poets & local small presses

2:30-4:30 PM Ben Mazer, Christian Hawkey, Matvei Yankelevich, Anna Moschovakis, Fanny Howe

4:30-5 PM I Feel Tractor

5-7 PM Farid Matuk, Susan Briante, Jess Mynes, Karen Weiser, Anselm Berrigan, Rod Smith

Friday, March 16, 2007, 6-10pm. $5

National Small Press Month Reading Marathon

Mo Pitkin¹s House of Satisfaction:
34 Avenue A, NYC 10009. [redacted].

A March Reading Marathon: 31 Writers for 31 Days.
Celebrate Extraordinary Writers and the Presses Who Publish Them.

Nahid Rachlin (City Lights); Felicia Luna Lemus (Akashic Books); T. Cooper (Akashic Books); Lauren Sanders (Akashic Books); Lynne Tillman (Soft Skull Press); Matthew Sharpe (Soft Skull Press); David Silverman (Soft Skull Press); Tim Brown (Bronx River Press); Rachel Sherman (Open City Books); Sam Brumbaugh (Open City Books); Paul Foster Johnson (Apostrophe Press); Martha Oatis (Portable Press Yo-Yo Labs); Stacy Szymaszek (Litmus Press); Brenda Iijima (Litmus Press); Tracy Grinnell (O Books); Rachel Levitsky (Belladonna Books); Lila Zemborain (Belladonna Books); Marcella Durand (Belladonna Books); Erica Kaufman (Belladonna Books); Jen Benka (Soft Skull Press); David Cameron (Ugly Duckling Presse); Dan Machlin (Ugly Duckling Presse); Prageeta Sharma (Fence Books); Kevin Bartelme (Cool Grove); Ihsan Bracy (Cool Grove); Akilah Oliver (Portable Press Yo-Yo Labs); Tisa Bryant (Leon Works); Aaron Petrovich (Akashic Books); Deepa Fernandez (Seven Stories Press); Abby Denson (Manic D Press).

For more information contact the Small Press Center: [redacted] or visit www.smallpressmonth.org and click on the Events section.

*Small Press Month is a nationwide initiative co-sponsored by the Small Press Center: The Center for Independent Publishing; the CLMP, (The Council of Literary Magazines and Presses); and PMA, The Independent Book Publishers Association.

Become a Poetry Project Member! http://poetryproject.com/membership.php

Winter Calendar: http://www.poetryproject.com/calendar.php

The Poetry Project is located at St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bowery
131 East 10th Street at Second Avenue
New York City 10003
Trains: 6, F, N, R, and L.
[redacted]
www.poetryproject.com

Admission is $8, $7 for students/seniors and $5 for members (though now those who take out a membership at $85 or higher will get in FREE to all regular readings).

We are wheelchair accessible with assistance and advance
notice. For more info call [redacted].

If you¹d like to be unsubscribed from this mailing list, please drop a line at [redacted].

↑ Index

186. Tisa Bryant

NYC: Bryant/Koestenbaum/LaFarge April 3 reading at Redhead

Thu 8 Mar 2007

Please come!

****

Death does not make the dead wiser. But it is our responsibility, that of the living, for our listening to deepen.
Barbara Christian

Begin forwarded message:
>
>
> First Tuesday's at REDHEAD > Coordinated and Hosted > by Christopher Stackhouse
>
>
> REDHEAD
> Lower Manhattan Cultural Council
> 125 Maiden Lane 2nd Floor NYC 10038
> Phone: [redacted]
>

>
> Tonight: Tuesday, April 3, 2007 6p- 8p
>
>
> The poets/readers will be:
>
>
> Wayne Kostenbaum
> Tisa Bryant
> Paul La Farge
>
>
> Reader Bios:
>
>
> Wayne Koestenbaum has published five books of poetry: Best-Selling > Jewish Porn Films, Model Homes, The Milk of Inquiry, Rhapsodies of a > Repeat Offender, and Ode to Anna Moffo and Other Poems. He has also > published a novel, Moira Orfei in Aigues-Mortes, and five books of > nonfiction: Andy Warhol, Cleavage, Jackie Under My Skin, The Queen's > Throat (a National Book Critics Circle Award finalist), and Double > Talk. He wrote the libretto for Michael Daugherty's opera, Jackie O.
> Koestenbaum's next book, Hotel Theory, will be published in May 2007.
> He is a Distinguished Professor of English at the CUNY Graduate > Center, and currently also a Visiting Professor in the painting > department of the Yale School of Art.
>
> Tisa Bryant's writings, Unexplained Presence (forthcoming, Leon Works, > 2007), andTzimmes (A+Bend Press, 2000) traverse the boundaries of > genre, culture and history. Her writing has appeared inBombay > Gin,Chain,Hatred of Capitalism,Pom2,andXantippe. She is currently at > work on[the curator], a meditation on identity, visual culture, and the > lost films of Black auteur Justine Cable. She is a founding editor of > The Encyclopedia Project, and teaches composition and literature at St.
> John's University.
>
> Paul La Farge is the author of two novels, The Artist > of the Missing and Haussmann, or the Distinction. His > stories have appeared in Story, Fence, McSweeney's, > and elsewhere. He is a semi-regular contributor to The > Believer. He received a Guggenheim fellowship in 2002, > and won the Bard Fiction Prize in 2005. His third > book, The Facts of Winter, was published by > McSweeney's Books in 2005.

>
>
> at REDHEAD
> Lower Manhattan Cultural Council
> 125 Maiden Lane 2nd Floor
> New York, NY 10038
> Phone: [redacted]
> http://www.lmcc.net/
>
> contact Jeanne Gerrity @ Phone: [redacted] ext: 108
>
> DIRECTIONS: A/C/J/M/Z/2/3/4/5 to Fulton St. / Broadway-Nassau stop.
> Exit near intersection of William St. and Fulton St. Go South on > William St. towards John St. Turn left onto Maiden Ln. (Legion > Memorial Sq.) Walk 2 1/2 blocks. The building is on your left between > Pearl St. and Water St.=

↑ Index

187. Mark DuCharme
Rachel Levitsky
Thu 8 Mar 2007

Anyone have her current e-mail? Rachel, are you on here? Drop me a line.

Mark

_____ Find a local pizza place, movie theater, and more....then map the best route! http://maps.live.com/?icid=hmtag1&FORM=MGAC01

↑ Index

188. Joel Weishaus
North-2 Text-5
Thu 8 Mar 2007

This is the fifth and last piece on this row:
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/North-2/text-5.htm

The row begins at:
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/North-2/text-1.htm

Introduction to project:
http://web.pdx.edu/~pdx00282/North/Intro.htm

-Joel

↑ Index

189. Montgomery fuller
your assistance with my writers cred: lawrence ytzhak braithwaite
Thu 8 Mar 2007

---

peace

currently my credentials as a writer, an artist and being linked to the new narrative are being attacked by a victoria individual who is seeking that i be removed from the wikipedia encyclopedia -- my work and innovations have always been down played in this country in this province and now as my popularity grows with music, recording and indie publishing, an attempt to erase me is being made. my bibliography is even being questioned and all citations have been removed. this is an attempt to discredit me and mylifes work.

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lawrence_Ytzhak_Braithwaite

you assistance in countering this assault. if this letter can be passed onto kevin killian, amiri baraka, dodie bellamy and dennis cooper and anyone can offer testamonials and help would be much appreciated.

my life's work is being questioned and erased.

sincerely,

lawrence ytzhak braithwaite

_____ Get a FREE Web site, company branded e-mail and more from Microsoft Office Live! http://clk.atdmt.com/MRT/go/mcrssaub0050001411mrt/direct/01/

↑ Index

190. Joel Bettridge
Poetry at Beinecke Library: Announcements
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Please visit Poetry at Beinecke Library (http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/) for recent announcements about Yale Collection of American Literature events, activities, exhibitions, and collections including:

New Processing Initiatives at Beinecke Library
http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/2007/03/07/new-processing-initiatives-at-beinecke-library/

Frank Bidart Wins Bollingen Prize in Poetry
http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/2007/02/22/frank-bidart-wins-bollingen-prize-in-poetry/

Barbara Guest Papers
http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/2007/02/05/barbara-guest-papers/

Yale Collection of American Literature Reading Series
http://beineckepoetry.wordpress.com/2006/12/18/the-yale-collection-of-american-literature-reading-series-recordings/

Nancy Kuhl
Associate Curator, The Yale Collection of American Literature
The Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library
Yale University
121 Wall Street
P.O. Box 208240
New Haven, CT 06520-8240
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

Food fight? Enjoy some healthy debate
in the Yahoo! Answers Food & Drink Q&A.
http://answers.yahoo.com/dir/?link=list&sid=396545367

↑ Index

191. Alan Sondheim sonnet + videos
Fri 9 Mar 2007

sonnet

onedy twody threedy four fivedy sixdy sevendy more fourdy threedy twody one sevendy sixdy fivedy done
ingirl outgirl upgirl down
outboy inboy downboy crown
pretty bonnie in the well

happy johnny pulled the bell seventeen eighteen nineteen two twenty and one makes bonnie blue nineteen eighteen seventeen one sixteen years makes bonnie glum zero zero short and narrow
cut the bone and gnaw the marrow

http://www.asondheim.org/running.mov - performance at Exhibit A opening, Second Life, Odyssey

http://www.asondheim.org/lessens.mp4 - motion capture choreography studies

↑ Index

192. Eric Elshtain
New Beard of Bees Chapbook
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Beard of Bees Press is pleased to announce the publication of its latest chapbook, Scar Letters, by Theodore Worozbyt.

Yours,

Eric Elshtain
Editor
Beard of Bees Press
http://www.beardofbees.com

↑ Index

193. Fulcrum Annual Shakespeare Music in Worcester & Boston: March 17 & 19 -- FREE!
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Joseph Summer, director of The Shakespeare Concerts, is certainly one of the very finest composers alive. His Shakespeare music is terrific. I highly recommend the event descibed below -- I'm going too! -- Philip

Shall I Compare Thee To A Summer's Day: a winter concert

What: The Shakespeare Concerts, an evening of music by Berlioz, Britten, Brahms and Massachusetts based opera composer: Joseph Summer.

When: Saturday, March 17, 2007, 8:00 PM
Where: Razzo Hall, Clark University, WORCESTER, MA
&
When: Monday, March 19, 2007, 8:00 PM

Where: Jordan Hall, BOSTON, MA
 FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC ***

Who: Kellie Van Horn, mezzo-soprano; Alan Schneider, tenor;
and Eve Gigliotti, soprano; Quartet X with violinists Krista Reiser and Rohan Gregory, violist Peter Sulski, and cellist Jan MÃ¼ller-Szeraws;
Sarah Brady, flute; Max Zeugner, double-bass;
John McGinn, Music Director

The seasons play a major role in the sonnets of William Shakespeare. Of the four seasons, the bard was fondest of summer. "Then let not winter's ragged hand deface In thee thy summer ere thou be distilled," begins Sonnet VI, reflecting on the line "Then, were not summer's distillation left a liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass," from Sonnet V, which immediately precedes it in this unparalleled collection of one hundred fifty four fourteen-lined homages to an as yet unknown idol. "O, how shall summer's honey breath hold out Against the wreckful siege of batt'ring days," the poet laments in Sonnet LXV, as well as in Sonnet XCVII where he recalls ruefully a painful absence: "What old December's bareness everywhere! And yet this time remov'd was summer's time." Shakespeare saw summer as the quintessential symbol for love and happiness. "For summer and his pleasures wait on thee, and thou away, the very birds are mute." (This also from Sonnet XCVII.) Of course, his most well known reflection on the happy season is "Shall I compare thee to a summer's day," the opening lines of Sonnet XVIII. Joseph Summer, the composer of The Oxford Songs, (settings of more than sixty sonnets and scenes from the Shakespeare canon,) was naturally attracted to those sonnets of summer. This March, he brings to Razzo and Jordan halls an evening of music based on the words of William Shakespeare, featuring his own realization of Shall I Compare Thee To A Summer's Day for mezzo-soprano, flute, and string quintet. Summer's setting of the immortal sonnet was informed by his interpretation of the underlying meaning of the sonnets, which he sees as a plea by Shakespeare to a young man to have a child. The evidence supporting his opinion is abundant. The last two lines from Sonnet VII are clear as can be: "So thou, thyself outgoing in thy noon, unlook'd on diest unless thou get a son." The last two lines of Sonnet X: "Make thee another self for love of me, That beauty still may live in thine or thee." "And nothing 'gainst Time's scythe can make defence Save breed, to brave him when he takes thee hence," are the concluding lines of Sonnet XII. The combination of the season and the command to "breed," led Summer to think of his daughter, Eve (born on the evening of June 20, also known as Summer's Eve) when writing the music to Shall I Compare Thee To A Summer's Day. The setting is pastoral and gentle, evoking the beauty of a young girl gathering flowers in a field, which is how the aria grew, as Summer looked out the window of his studio upon his daughter, gathering daisies and singing to the wind, when she was four years old. "Rough winds do shakes the darling buds of may," wrote the poet. On Saturday, May 17 and Monday, March 19, the audience that gathers at Razzo and Jordan Halls will hear how Berlioz, Britten, Brahms, and Summer brought their own interpretations of Shakespeare to life in the form of opera, song, and musical tone-painting. Berlioz, most famous for his revolutionary Symphonie Fantastique, was an ardent admirer of Shakespeare. He crafted numerous pieces based on the bard, including La Mort D' OphÃ©lie (the death of Ophelia.) Kellie Van Horn, mezzo-soprano, will perform with The Shakespeare Concerts music director and pianist, John McGinn this concert aria based on the soliloquy "There Is A Willow Grows Aslant A Brook," from the play, Hamlet. Soprano Eve Gigliotti will perform Brahms' Five Ophelia songs and Summer's "They Bore Him Barefaced On The Bier," both interpretations of Ophelia's mad scene from Hamlet. Van Horn and Gigliotti will be joined by Boston tenor Alan Schneider and the Boston based string quartet: QX in "Two Loves I Have" the world premiere of Summer's setting of Sonnet CXLIV. Van Horn will also sing the one work on the program not directly related to Shakespeare, a setting of William Butler Yeats' sonnet, Leda And The Swan, for string quartet and soprano. Alan Schneider, in his fifth season with the The Shakespeare Concerts, will perform Summer's "To Be Or Not To Be," which he has recorded for Albany Records on the first The Shakespeare Concerts album: What A Piece Of Work Is Man. Schneider will also perform a flirtatious Sonnet CXXVIII with violin soloist, Krista Reisner, as well as the final song from Twelfth Night with QX and bassist Max Zeugner. Much of the music heard at the concerts was recently released by Albany Records, under the title Shall I Compare Thee To A Summer's Day? Interspersed throughout the evening's songs will be three divertimenti for string quartet by Benjamin Britten. Britten acknowledged Shakespeare in these pieces, as he titled them "Go, play boy, play," a line from the bard's frightening play, A Winter's Tale. QX, a Boston based string quartet, consisting of violinists Krista Reiser and Rohan Gregory, violist Peter Sulski, and cellist Jan MÃ¼ller-Szeraws will be joined by double bassist Max Zeugner to perform Joseph Summer's Dance Of The Mechanics, a suite of comic dances based on the vulgar characters (known as "mechanics" in Shakespeare's time) from Love's Labour's Lost.

↑ Index

194. Dan Waber
a prize for interestingness
Fri 9 Mar 2007

At http://www.vispoets.com/ we now have a patron, a donor, an angel, someone who likes what we're doing enough to put their money where their mouth is, someone with a way and the means to encourage visual poets and to support the presses who publish them.

Beginning one week from today, next Friday, March 16th, and running for the next two months of Fridays (as a test, longer if it works out), this patron will select the most interesting work of visual poetry posted to the members' galleries (http://vispoets.com/index.php?automodule=gallery&req=sc&cat=1) the previous week and award them $25 in printed visual poetry material from one of a variety of publishers (patron's choice of publisher, publisher's choice of material).

All you need to do to have your work considered is be a registered member of the site, and post something to the members' galleries that week.

If you are a publisher of visual poetry and would like to send $25 worth of your wares to a winner or two, please email me at [redacted] with your interest and contact information.

If you would like to add your support to this endeavor by sponsoring a similar project, or, simply adding cash to all or some of the weekly awards, we can work with you to make that happen. Email me at [redacted] to discuss it further.

Whee!
Dan

↑ Index

195. Ruth Lepson
Re: Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Adam: AB's poems--the ring of truth, just terrific--I know there's no such thing as truth & the ring of it doesn't make sense anymore but that was the phrase that came to mind--in fact they give me tips on where I might go next. Thanks. Ruth

On 3/8/07 3:19 PM, "Adam Fieled" <[redacted]> wrote:

> Check out eight poems from a new series by NYC poet Anselm Berrigan on PFS Post:
>
> http://www.artrecess.blogspot.com

> "I'm stuck w a valuable friend-- I'm happy, hope you're happy too...."
>
> http://www.adamfieled.blogspot.com
>
> ---
> 8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
> with theYahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.

↑ Index

196. susan maurer

Re: New Beard of Bees Chapbook

Fri 9 Mar 2007

---

what a terrific quote. do you take submissions? susan maurer

> From: Eric Elshtain <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: New Beard of Bees Chapbook
> Date: Thu, 8 Mar 2007 17:03:06 -0600
>
> "The pomegranate I snapped from the low tree was not the ripe one. Each in turn gave me that same sad and sly look of loving. Some shook their heads slowly. What was it that had brought me back? I held the thing in my arms. It ï¬,exed from time to time, writhing in its wraps. I was ashamed and frightened. But I could not ï¬,ing it away." --from "The Chase" by Theodore Worozbyt
>
> Beard of Bees Press is pleased to announce the latest in its typically monthly series of poetry chapbooks: Scar Letters by Theodore Worozbyt.
>
> http://www.beardofbees.com/worozbyt.html
>
> Yours,
>
> Eric Elshtain
> Editor
> Beard of Bees Press
> http://www.beardofbees.com

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=

%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

197. susan maurer
Re: Outsider Art
Fri 9 Mar 2007

---

hm .well i wouldnt mind being as much of an outsider as bukowski. the launching of new press poetswearprada was aterriric event lastnight and i was glad to be in it. wonder if it would profit by being labelled outsider. susa maurer

> From: Christopher Leland Winks <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> Date: Wed, 7 Mar 2007 12:27:23 -0500
>
> "Outsider art" has become another niche marketing term in the branch of the commodity economy known as the "art world." Perhaps when Roger Cardinal (?) published his illustrated monograph entitled "Outsider Art" a few decades back, the term had meaning because of its novelty as a rubric. But now, in an era when "Outsider Art Fairs" are annually held in New York City, it's become another way for art hustlers -- er, dealers -- to make a buck off their designated "Other" of choice.
>
> On another level: if Henry Darger's work can be labeled "outsider art," can John Ashbery's "Girls on the Run," inspired by Darger, be called "outsider art" too? If so, why? If not, why not?

_____ Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

↑ Index

198. Andrea Lawlor
THE ODYSSEY at Cellspace SF March 10
Fri 9 Mar 2007

THE ODYSSEY: An Epic Night of Film and Readings

Come celebrate the release of Pocket Myths #4, THE ODYSSEY, with a screening and reading!

Films by Bill Basquin, Eileen Myles, Gretchen Hildebran, EE Miller, Dori Midnight, Kara Hearn, Miriam Klein Stahl, Paula Cronan, Juliana Snapper, Laurie Weeks, Corinna Press, Rebecca Lee, and many more!

Performances by Ida Acton, Amanda Davidson, Judith Jordan, Robin Coste Lewis, Miranda Mellis, Christian Nagler, sara seinberg, and David West.

THE ODYSSEY is a film and book collaboration curated by Bernadine Mellis and Andrea Lawlor, featuring work by mostly queer, trans, and women artists, retelling Homer's ancient epic of the aftermath of war. Almost half of the 75 contributors are from the Bay Area.

Interesting tidbits: Writers Keith Waldrop, Brian Evenson, and Samuel R. Delany all appear in the film. Poet Eileen Myles made her first film for this project, as did Whitney Biennial star photographer Zoe Strauss. Painter Xylor Jane, known for her math art, contributed her first published short story, as well as a drawing, to the book.

Date & Time: Saturday, March 10, 7pm
Cellspace, 2050 Bryant Street
Admission: $10
Light fare generously provided by Rainbow Grocery and others!
More information: www.pocketmyths.com

↑ Index

199. David A. Kirschenbaum

*NYC/*VIP: Help Boog City Distrib. Sat., & We'll Help You, Too

Fri 9 Mar 2007

Hi all,

Still no new permanent distributor for boog city as yet, so I'll be borrowing my dad's jeep to deliver the paper tomorrow, preferably, or Sunday.

I'm hoping someone might be game to ride along and jump out and drop off the papers at each of our 33 distribution points. I can pick you up and drop you back off and, if there's something you've been needing to pick up and haven't had a vehicle to do so, help you out with that, too.

Please let me know as soon as you can.

THANKS!
david

--
David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H

NY, NY 10001-4754
For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

200. Dr. Barry S. Alpert

Re: Carolee Schneemann, friend of many poets

Fri 9 Mar 2007

Congratulations on the forthcoming exhibitions. Wish it were more convenient for me geographically, since there will be a fair amount of work on view which I haven't experienced. Carolee was indeed "friendly" towards an ekphrastic text I wrote during her performative lecture in WASH DC about two years ago:

PERFORM, CAROLEE [SCHNEEMANN]

Physicalization of the pictorial plane / EYE-BODY exists as 36 images, rigorous set of parameters for MEAT-JOY.
Found this huge crate filled of physical configuration and the momentum rope activates a language, musculature in the acting.

Confluence of properties which are so entrancing / an extraordinary psychic mystery story ran out in my nightgown into the snow.
Life juxtaposed with menace.
Enough confidence to trust expectation of fantasy and righteous death.

Barry Alpert

"Everyone, The following is the press release announcing my first curatorial endeavor -- an exhibition of works by Carolee Schneemann opening at CEPA Gallery in downtown Buffalo on March 31. If you are in town, hope to see you there. many thanks, Photi

CEPA Gallery Presents:
Remains To Be Seen
A thematic exhibit of the work of Carolee Schneemann
March 31, 2007 – May 26, 2007

CEPA Gallery is pleased to announce the opening of Remains To Be Seen, a retrospective examination of the artistic output of Carolee Schneemann that surveys the breadth and depth of her expansive contribution to contemporary art. The exhibition will open with a reception for the artist and the public, Saturday, March 31, 2007 from 7 – 10 p.m. The artist and the exhibition's curator, Photios Giovanis, will be present.

Conceived to foster an internal dialogue between Schneemann's diverse bodies of work, Remains To Be Seen counters a traditional chronological format to focus on the complexities of her creative process and its scope of influence.

Remains To Be Seen features three central issues; War, Erotics, and Felines, with Schneemann's most well known works including Interior Scroll, Vulva's Morphia, and screenings of her films, Fuses and Meat Joy. The section on cats will include large format photographs and the recently completed film Infinity Kisses. The war pieces will include video and photo grids spanning 1964 - 2006 that directly address Vietnam, Kosovo, Lebanon and the events of 9/11. Additionally, CEPA's Public Art Window on Main Street will present Vesper's Pool, a display of mystical objects that center on the death of Schneemann's cat, Vesper.

A companion exhibit titled Broken Borders at the Museum of Contemporary Canadian Art in Toronto, curated by David Liss, runs March 23 – April 30, 2007. It addresses Schneemann's history of working in Canada and includes three recent large scale, multi-channel video installations.

A catalog, Split Decision, produced in partnership with the Museum of Contemporary Canadian Art, encompassing the two exhibits, will be available. The publication explores Schneemann's career from different historical and political perspectives to expand critical awareness of her work. It will document a wide range of works and will include essays by leading art scholar Thomas McEvilley, Canadian art critic Jim Drobnick, Buffalo-based media artist Caroline Koebel."

_____ With tax season right around the corner, make sure to follow these few simple tips. http://articles.moneycentral.msn.com/Taxes/PreparationTips/PreparationTips.aspx?icid=HMFebtagline

↑ Index

201. Alexander Jorgensen

Requesting Information on ONE LESS mag Nikki Widner - Williamsburg, MA

Fri 9 Mar 2007

Am trying to obtain information on ONE LESS and, better yet, its editor Nikki Widner. Please backchannel if you might be able to provide some information. ONE LESS is/was a wonderful journal out of Williamsburg, Mass.

Regards,
agj

_____
8:00? 8:25? 8:40? Find a flick in no time
with the Yahoo! Search movie showtime shortcut.
http://tools.search.yahoo.com/shortcuts/#news

↑ Index

202. lds

Re: sonnet + videos

Fri 9 Mar 2007

Cool sonnet

~ -----Original Message-----
~ From: UB Poetics discussion group
~ [mailto:[redacted]] On Behalf Of Alan Sondheim ~ Sent: Thursday, March 08, 2007 10:39 PM
~ To: [redacted]
~ Subject: sonnet + videos
~
~
~ sonnet
~
~ onedy twody threedy four ~ fivedy sixdy sevendy more
~ fourdy threedy twody one
~ sevendy sixdy fivedy done
~ ingirl outgirl upgirl down
~ outboy inboy downboy crown

~ pretty bonnie in the well
~ happy johnny pulled the bell
~ seventeen eighteen nineteen two
~ twenty and one makes bonnie blue
~ nineteen eighteen seventeen one
~ sixteen years makes bonnie glum
~ zero zero short and narrow
~ cut the bone and gnaw the marrow
~
~ http://www.asondheim.org/running.mov - performance at Exhibit
~ A opening, Second Life, Odyssey
~
~ http://www.asondheim.org/lessens.mp4 - motion capture ~ choreography studies
~

↑ Index

203. lcabri
on torque
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Hi Kasey (long time etc), and everybody over at Kasey's blog who's posted on this subject, and anyone reading this here, Zukofsky's "Mantis" is probably the precedent for how Ron uses the word torque in his "New Sentence" essay. Torque seems a novelty in Ron's essay, as it provides some high contrast with other terms he uses there such as measure, paragraph, syllogism, sentence, polysemy / ambiguity. Zukofsky characterizes (among other things) how he writes the sestina "Mantis" by the parenthetical phrase "thoughts' torsion." Torsion would then refer not only to the 'twisted' normative syntax displayed in "Mantis" but to the multiple twists performed on the sestina form invented by troubadour Arnaut Daniel by evoking a particular use for it in 1933-34 Depression America (after a late-19C sestina splurge by Chucky Al et al). And since it's Zukofsky, torsion away from historical precedent toward contemporary particulars is going to hold you at every level, down to the syllable and into the letters if you care to go. D'ya think? - Louis

↑ Index

204. L Guevarra
NEW in PAPERBACK: The Collected Poems of Ted Berrigan
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Dear Buffalo Poetics List:

The University of California Press is pleased to announce in paperback:

The Collected Poems of Ted Berrigan

Ted Berrigan (1934-1983) was the author of more than 20 books, including _The Sonnets _(1964); _Bean Spasms, _with Ron Padgett and Joe Brainard (1967); _Red Wagon _(1976); and _A Certain Slant of Sunlight _(1988). Alice Notley is the editor of two of Ted Berrigan's books, _The Sonnets _(2000) and _A Certain Slant of Sunlight _(1988). She is the author of numerous volumes of poetry, including _Mysteries of Small Houses _(1998) and _Disobedience _(2001). Anselm Berrigan is the director of the St. Mark's Poetry Project and the author of _Zero Star Hotel _(2002). Edmund Berrigan is a poet and songwriter and the author of _Disarming Matter _(1999).

http://go.ucpress.edu/BerriganCollected

"It's a must-have, a poetic knockout."-Eileen Myles, _Time Out New York_ "A major volume of 20th-century American poetry."-_Publishers Weekly_ Starred Review

This landmark collection brings Ted Berrigan's published and unpublished poetry together in a single authoritative volume for the first time. Edited by the poet Alice Notley, Berrigan's second wife, and their two sons, _The Collected Poems _demonstrates the remarkable range, power, and importance of Berrigan's work.

Full information about the book, including the table of contents, is available online: http://go.ucpress.edu/BerriganCollected

--
Lolita Guevarra
Electronic Marketing Coordinator
University of California Press
Tel. [redacted] | Fax [redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

205. David-Baptiste Chirot
Re: Outsider Art
Fri 9 Mar 2007

---

though not an "outsider artist" other than that his well known Anarchism and having been the Cultural Director as it were during the Paris Commune of 1871--which got him booted out of France to save his skin--Gustave Courbet wrote a famous kind of "outside" credo in a letter of refusal to a Minister in the French Second Empire government in 1870--which Monarchist government had decided to make up for the bad treatment M. Courbet had endured due to his involvements in the 1848 Revolution- For in the immensity of its forgiveness and willingness to embrace M. Courbet as an artist and Frenchman--this noble government had decided to give him the ribbon of the Legiond'Honneur--a purely political move to be sure, but one that would most surely tempt any Frenchman, artist or not-- But not Gusatve Courbet! Courbet's famous letter of refusal ends with some ringing lines of another kind of "outside" that an artist may hear calling--

"Therefore permit me, monsieur le Ministre, to decline the honor you thought to bestow upon me. I am fifty years old and I have always lived as a free man. Let me be free the rest of my days; for when I die, let it be said of me: 'He never belonged to any school, to any church, to any insitution, to any academy--least of all to any regime, lest it be the regime of liberty."

Bukowski, despite the Hollywood films and vast cult following and steady sales iin the usa, was the kind of "american outsider" who was a cultural icon overseas--in his native Germany, France, Italy and many other countries, Bukowski is ranked as one of the greatest, and fairly often, the greatest of American writers of the last fifty years or more--

a much more usual fate of an "outsider artist" --the examples are far more than one might think--is that of Prophet William Blackmon, a preacher and painter, whose vocations in both cases come from God--Prophet didn't begin paintng until late in life--his works have been collected and exhibited and included i books and a very large one hangs here in the Milwaukee Art Musuem, with its famous Calatrava "wings"--and just a few weeks ago at University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Prophet shared a show with another spiritually -inspired Seattle artist--and there was an evening with Prophet present, to talk after showing of the film "God's Spaceship," a 1989 documentary/interview-- i first met Prophet about 18 years ago, selling paintings on the street corners and giving readings of illlnesses and praying for their healings--and once and a while a prediction regarding the future that had come to him from God--he had a tiny ministry of mainly homeless and very poor people and also did shoe repairs-- as he is getting quite elderly now, it's more difficult for Prophet to work at his trade and the minsitry has always been a basically losing business as he gaves away much of what he has to the homeless worse off than himself-- this winter he found himself homeless--fortunately offered lodging by a Sister in his ministry-- his spirit is indomnaitbale as ever--he vastly enjoyed the evening and spoke for quite along time about his life, his Faith, his visions from God, and his painting, which he does directly on instructions from God-- (he told me one time when i had first begun making rubBeings and spray paintings--he thought they also were sent by God--since no one else was making these things, God had called to me to make them so the world would know these things exist though no one had noticed them before--he also told me another time God works through such kinds of art as He tells people to do, to show sanity in an insane world--sanity to be seen so people will suddenly know the insanity of their brains and want to be sane--"which is a dangerous thing in this world"--he laughed quite a bit at that, Amen--)

so despite all the hoopla and commercializations and appropriations, distortions, massive mad immensities and intensities of bullshit--there are actually a great many "outsider artists" who despite being wirtten about, collected and presented in museums, remain in life ill, neglected, poor, without materials to work with or home, living in various places as they can--and in many cases, uncertain what will heppan to their works after their deths--because all sorts of things become possible when they are infact dead--possibilities many artists know exist--yet not for them, not in this lifetime-- not in the sense of agreat genius or respectable more or less nice artists who one can sentimentalize over for having been overlooked in their lives--and later welcomed into the worlds of respectability--and al its instituions-- because the "outsider artists" in the original senses of this--are always going to be "outsiders" in a way their fellows aren't-- that kind of outsiderness--Art Brut-- is something that can't be appropriated or learned in art school or "rescued", or captured by a label, a section in art books or museums-- it's not a question of being "more""outside" or "more authentic"--but of something other-- something that for all the "recognition" it gets, remains paradoxically mainly unrecognized- there are and will be always a few exceptions--but even those aren't recognized as being "real artists" like the ones runinng the vast gamut from O'Keefe and Picasso to Yoko Ono to Charles Schultz to Thomas Kincaide to any issue of any art magazine no matter what genres--including the journals of "outsider art"-- more and more of whom are like the artist i saw posters of for a while around town, "Wisconsin's Most Famoous Outsider Artist"--(never heard of him) --pcitured in studio, expensive easel produly standing among tons of the latest offerings from Utrecht,with a nice view o fa "landscape" through the "studio window"--immensely professional looking and al speaking very much of being guaranteed the viewer the very best and most up-to-date in "Outsider Art"--complete with web site, fax address and al the rest-- "a perfect addition to any home" i am sure--

again, i would recommend Lucienne Piery's Art Brut: The Origins of Outsider Art for the hsitory of this and for the ways from the very beginning of Dubuffet's naming, collecting, exhibiting, writing on, having monographs written on, establishing a center for Art Brut, and influencing the Artists Houses set up for Art Brut artists--from the beginning of all this, the awarenesses of the continual changes and obstacles, questions involved, both in critical terms, effects on the personal lives of the artists, and the financial aspects and the dangers posed by all the massive masrhalling of powers of the art world and media which in the end have buried Dubbeffet's orignal ideas of Art Brut and what Art Brut inspires and can be an example of in different ways of thinking about materials, possiblities, researchs, for other artists-- (even in the midst of the furor, now, and later, once the feeding frenzy has become but a laugh and lark, a discarded and discredited fashion--so deminished and pase as to be laughed at as here and now--the artists themsleves, the vast nameless ones,the creators, go on creating anyway--art brut in Dubuffet's conceptions of it--has been around since the dawn of time and will cointue on regardless--maybe one of the only kinds of "art" which will d so--having been nameless and unnoticed for millenia--it's not a "movement" in any sense of the term--other than a continual movement of making out of its own myriad callings--it's not going to have an "end" as say any School or Movement etc does-- the stubborn, "Brut," anarchic persistence of the "art" "drive" or "impulse" no matter what is done with it, to it, for it, by it--kill the artists, burn their works, ban them, throw them in jail, put them on peddestals, ahng them in person and in galleries, chop off their hands, put out their eyes, sic god, the state, the crtics, the collectors, the dealers, the forgers, the ridiculers, the know-it-alls, the pedants, the art lovers, the art teachers, the art supply companies, sic all of them on art, the artist--there will always be some damn fool who in some inexpicable way hears a calling and will start making things out of next to nothing-anything at hand---regardless if anyone else is even paying attention--and so Art Brut wil return to its anonymity . . . or recognitions . . . whatever the ebbs and flows of these--it remains intact--obdurately watching al that comes and goes around it--vanishes--reappears--like Easter Island heads observing the circulations of the air, the light, the ocean, the ships, the birds, the visiting humans--knowing the energies that live in them are out there out somewhere--creating their myriad strange companions--

Dubuffet's ideas and projects and their histries as Lucienne Piery details them are ia far more interesting and useful vision and hisotry than what has beomce the kind of mindless "another booth at the art fair" Christopher Winks ably describes-- which is actually interesting in a funny way as when i was a kid in Vermont at places like the notorious Tunbridge World's Fair and scattered about through other much smaller fairs--there would be itinerent portrait painters who would set up shop and for a noimal fee paint your picture--or if you wanted, a picture of something else--they'd also have a little bunch of hand made set ups for displaying their other works-- and if they wre alittle more prosperous than some of their brothers and sisters also making the circuit, they'd have anextra display of velvet Elvses, those Children of the Damned kids wtih immense eyes, Jesus, unicorns, stock cars, and the like--your basic kitsch--

the artists for the most part were affable carnies--could keep up a good patter,chain smoke and have some brews--and in general add to the festive atmosphere (which at the Tunbridge World's Fair, of course, eventually just slid out of control--it lasted for days--what with homebrew swigging and later on open marijuana smoking backwoods people charging the"Garden of Eden" strip show tent, "liberating" the Freak Show (inviting them to join in the party aad leave their tents)--old family feuds erupting, smashed stunt drivers crashing, illegal gamblers pulling knives and the like--once more highminded folks started moving in to the state, of course all this basically good clean medieval Rabelian fun had to stop!--"outsiders" from the wealthier, more educated and more morally concerned parts of the world, like new Puritans--refused to accept the Art Brut qualities of this happening scene--horrified at the anarchy of it all--my God!--drunken "liberated" Freaks posing for portraits with families, naked couples running into the woods, the "Garden of Eden"dancers baring all while drinking and smoking on stage, the ecstatic glee of children on rides at which the stoned carnie had fallen asleep with the "On" lever on for an hour or more due to his having collapsed on it-- Woodstock to these new people was a Sacrement, but this kind of communing obviiously foul and pagan--and attended by al the wrong sorts of people--so it was banned, done away with, and consigned to happy memories--and onewonders what happened to al those painters?--probably collectors now among the ones who put them out of work and fun--making a bundle off their surviving works on ebay, sellng them at nice new fairs with New Age and RISD educated themes in booths of their own--as "Primitive Portraits" by "Outsider Artists" --to dealers disguised as tourists who in turn purchase them for the galleries in New York, Milan, Paris, Stuttgart, Tokyo, Sao Paulo, Dubai, Los Angeles, etc--

meanwhile--uncannily--hidden in plain sight--"they walk among us"--the "outsider artists"--
"art brut"--among their own "regimes of liberty"--

> From: susan maurer <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> Date: Fri, 9 Mar 2007 09:48:13 -0500
>
> hm .well i wouldnt mind being as much of an outsider as bukowski. the launching of new press poetswearprada was aterriric event lastnight and i was glad to be in it. wonder if it would profit by being labelled outsider.
> susa maurer
>
> From: Christopher Leland Winks <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>

> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> Date: Wed, 7 Mar 2007 12:27:23 -0500
>
> "Outsider art" has become another niche marketing term in the branch of the commodity economy known as the "art world." Perhaps when Roger Cardinal (?) published his illustrated monograph entitled "Outsider Art" a few decades back, the term had meaning because of its novelty as a rubric. But now, in an era when "Outsider Art Fairs" are annually held in New York City, it's become another way for art hustlers -- er, dealers -- to make a buck off their designated "Other" of choice.
>
> On another level: if Henry Darger's work can be labeled "outsider art," can John Ashbery's "Girls on the Run," inspired by Darger, be called "outsider art" too? If so, why? If not, why not?
>
> _____
> *Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month. Intro*Terms*
> https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117

_____ The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian. http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

206. L Guevarra
NEW BOOK: The Age of Huts (compleat)
Fri 9 Mar 2007

Dear Buffalo Poetics List:

The University of California Press is pleased to announce the publication of:

The Age of Huts (compleat)

Ron Silliman is the author of more than twenty volumes of poetry. His most recent books include _Woundwood, Under Albany, MultiPlex,_ and _N/O._and the weblog "Silliman's Blog" (ronsilliman.blogspot.com).

http://go.ucpress.edu/Silliman

"It would be impossible to overestimate the importance of Ron Silliman's _Age of Huts_; it was ground-breaking when it first began to appear, piecemeal, a quarter of a century ago, and it remains a revolutionary work today. With its proliferative architecture, its encyclopedic arc, and its endlessly inventive methodology, _The Age of Huts_, with virtually every sentence, renews its engagement with the world."-Lyn Hejinian

Between the Age of Innocence and the Age of Experience comes _The __Age of Huts. _This book brings together for the first time all of the poems in Ron Silliman's _Age of Huts _cycle, including _Ketjak, Sunset _ _Debris, The Chinese Notebook, _and _2197, _as well as two key satellite texts, _Sitting Up, Standing, Taking Steps, _and _BART. _Each poem offers a radically different approach toward using language to explore the world. One of the founding works of Language Poetry, _The Age of __Huts _is about everything, more or less literally, as each sentence, even each phrase, embarks on its own narrative, linking together to form a large polyphonic investigation of contemporary life. From _Ketjak, _one of the first poems to employ "the new sentence," to _2197, _a serial work that scrambles the vocabulary and grammar of its sentences, _The _ _Age of Huts _questions everything we have known about poetry in order to see the world anew.

Full information about the book, including the table of contents, is available online: http://go.ucpress.edu/Silliman

--
Lolita Guevarra
Electronic Marketing Coordinator
University of California Press
Tel. [redacted] | Fax [redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

207. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Outsider Art
Sat 10 Mar 2007

David,

Great post.

Murat

On 3/9/07, David-Baptiste Chirot <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> though not an "outsider artist" other than that his well known Anarchism
> and > having been the Cultural Director as it were during the Paris Commune of > 1871--which got him booted out of France to save his skin--Gustave Courbet > wrote a famous kind of "outside" credo in a letter of refusal to a

> Minister
> in the French Second Empire government in 1870--which Monarchist > government > had decided to make up for the bad treatment M. Courbet had endured due
to > his involvements in the 1848 Revolution-
> For in the immensity of its forgiveness and willingness to embrace M.
> Courbet as an artist and Frenchman--this noble government had decided to > give him the ribbon of the Legiond'Honneur--a purely political move to be > sure, but one that would most surely tempt any Frenchman, artist or not-- > But not Gusatve Courbet! Courbet's famous letter of refusal ends with some > ringing lines of another kind of "outside" that an artist may hear > calling--
>
> "Therefore permit me, monsieur le Ministre, to decline the honor you > thought to bestow upon me. I am fifty years old and I have always lived
> as > a free man. Let me be free the rest of my days; for when I die, let it > be > said of me: 'He never belonged to any school, to any church, to any > insitution, to any academy--least of all to any regime, lest it be the > regime of liberty."
>
> Bukowski, despite the Hollywood films and vast cult following and steady > sales iin the usa, was the kind of "american outsider" who was a cultural > icon overseas--in his native Germany, France, Italy and many other > countries, Bukowski is ranked as one of the greatest, and fairly often,
> the > greatest of American writers of the last fifty years or more--
>
> a much more usual fate of an "outsider artist" --the examples are far more > than one might think--is that of Prophet William Blackmon, a preacher and > painter, whose vocations in both cases come from God--Prophet didn't begin > paintng until late in life--his works have been collected and exhibited
> and > included i books and a very large one hangs here in the Milwaukee Art
> Musuem, with its famous Calatrava "wings"--and just a few weeks ago at > University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Prophet shared a show with another > spiritually -inspired Seattle artist--and there was an evening with > Prophet
> present, to talk after showing of the film "God's Spaceship," a 1989 > documentary/interview--

> i first met Prophet about 18 years ago, selling paintings on the street > corners and giving readings of illlnesses and praying for their > healings--and once and a while a prediction regarding the future that had > come to him from God--he had a tiny ministry of mainly homeless and very > poor people and also did shoe repairs-- > as he is getting quite elderly now, it's more difficult for Prophet to > work
> at his trade and the minsitry has always been a basically losing business
> as > he gaves away much of what he has to the homeless worse off than himself-- > this winter he found himself homeless--fortunately offered lodging by a > Sister in his ministry-- > his spirit is indomnaitbale as ever--he vastly enjoyed the evening and > spoke > for quite along time about his life, his Faith, his visions from God, and > his painting, which he does directly on instructions from God--
> (he told me one time when i had first begun making rubBeings and spray > paintings--he thought they also were sent by God--since no one else was > making these things, God had called to me to make them so the world would > know these things exist though no one had noticed them before--he also > told > me another time God works through such kinds of art as He tells people to > do, to show sanity in an insane world--sanity to be seen so people will > suddenly know the insanity of their brains and want to be sane--"which is
> a > dangerous thing in this world"--he laughed quite a bit at that, Amen--)
>
> so despite all the hoopla and commercializations and appropriations, > distortions, massive mad immensities and intensities of bullshit--there
> are > actually a great many "outsider artists" who despite being wirtten about,
> collected and presented in museums, remain in life ill, neglected, poor, > without materials to work with or home, living in various places as they > can--and in many cases, uncertain what will heppan to their works after > their deths--because all sorts of things become possible when they are > infact dead-- > possibilities many artists know exist--yet not for them, not in this > lifetime-- > not in the sense of agreat genius or respectable more or less nice > artists
> who one can sentimentalize over for having been overlooked in their > lives--and later welcomed into the worlds of respectability--and al its > instituions-- > because the "outsider artists" in the original senses of this--are always > going to be "outsiders" in a way their fellows aren't-- > that kind of outsiderness--Art Brut-- is something that can't be > appropriated or learned in art school or "rescued", or captured by a > label,

> a section in art books or museums--
>
> it's not a question of being "more""outside" or "more authentic"--but of > something other-- > something that for all the "recognition" it gets, remains paradoxically > mainly unrecognized-
> there are and will be always a few exceptions--but even those aren't > recognized as being "real artists" like the ones runinng the vast gamut
> from
> O'Keefe and Picasso to Yoko Ono to Charles Schultz to Thomas Kincaide to > any issue of any art magazine no matter what genres--including the > journals
> of "outsider art"-- > more and more of whom are like the artist i saw posters of for a while > around town, "Wisconsin's Most Famoous Outsider Artist"--(never heard of > him) --pcitured in studio, expensive easel produly standing among tons of > the latest offerings from Utrecht,with a nice view o fa "landscape" > through > the "studio window"--immensely professional looking and al speaking very > much of being guaranteed the viewer the very best and most up-to-date in
> "Outsider Art"--complete with web site, fax address and al the rest--
> "a perfect addition to any home" i am sure--
>
>
> again, i would recommend Lucienne Piery's Art Brut: The Origins of > Outsider
> Art
>
> for the hsitory of this and for the ways from the very beginning of > Dubuffet's naming, collecting, exhibiting, writing on, having monographs > written on, establishing a center for Art Brut, and influencing the > Artists
> Houses set up for Art Brut artists--from the beginning of all this, the > awarenesses of the continual changes and obstacles, questions involved, > both
> in critical terms, effects on the personal lives of the artists, and the > financial aspects and the dangers posed by all the massive masrhalling of > powers of the art world and media which in the end have buried > Dubbeffet's

> orignal ideas of Art Brut and what Art Brut inspires and can be an example > of in different ways of thinking about materials, possiblities, researchs, > for other artists-- > (even in the midst of the furor, now, and later, once the feeding frenzy > has > become but a laugh and lark, a discarded and discredited fashion--so > deminished and pase as to be laughed at as here and now--the artists > themsleves, the vast nameless ones,the creators, go on creating > anyway--art
> brut in Dubuffet's conceptions of it--has been around since the dawn of > time
> and will cointue on regardless--maybe one of the only kinds of "art" which > will d so--having been nameless and unnoticed for millenia--it's not a
> "movement" in any sense of the term--other than a continual movement of > making out of its own myriad callings--it's not going to have an "end" as > say any School or Movement etc does-- the stubborn, "Brut," anarchic > persistence of the "art" "drive" or "impulse" no matter what is done with > it, to it, for it, by it--kill the artists, burn their works, ban them, > throw them in jail, put them on peddestals, ahng them in person and in > galleries, chop off their hands, put out their eyes, sic god, the state,
> the > crtics, the collectors, the dealers, the forgers, the ridiculers, the > know-it-alls, the pedants, the art lovers, the art teachers, the art > supply
> companies, sic all of them on art, the artist--there will always be some > damn fool who in some inexpicable way hears a calling and will start > making > things out of next to nothing-anything at hand---regardless if anyone else > is even paying attention--and so Art Brut wil return to its anonymity . .
> .
> or recognitions . . . whatever the ebbs and flows of these--it remains > intact--obdurately watching al that comes and goes around > it--vanishes--reappears--like Easter Island heads observing the > circulations
> of the air, the light, the ocean, the ships, the birds, the visiting > humans--knowing the energies that live in them are out there out > somewhere--creating their myriad strange companions--
>
>

> Dubuffet's ideas and projects and their histries as Lucienne Piery details
> them are
> ia far more interesting and useful vision and hisotry than what has beomce
> the kind of mindless "another booth at the art fair" Christopher > Winks ably > describes-- > which is actually interesting in a funny way as when i was a kid in > Vermont
> at places like the notorious Tunbridge World's Fair and scattered about > through other much smaller fairs--there would be itinerent portrait > painters who would set up shop and for a noimal fee paint your picture--or > if you wanted, a picture of something else--they'd also have a little > bunch
> of hand made set ups for displaying their other works-- and if they wre > alittle more prosperous than some of their brothers and sisters also > making > the circuit, they'd have anextra display of velvet Elvses, those Children
> of > the Damned kids wtih immense eyes, Jesus, unicorns, stock cars, and the > like--your basic kitsch--
> the artists for the most part were affable carnies--could keep up a good > patter,chain smoke and have some brews--and in general add to the festive > atmosphere (which at the Tunbridge World's Fair, of course, eventually > just > slid out of control--it lasted for days--what with homebrew swigging and > later on open marijuana smoking backwoods people charging the"Garden of > Eden" strip show tent, "liberating" the Freak Show (inviting them to join
> in > the party aad leave their tents)--old family feuds erupting, smashed stunt > drivers crashing, illegal gamblers pulling knives and the like--once more > highminded folks started moving in to the state, of course all this > basically good clean medieval Rabelian fun had to stop!--"outsiders" from > the wealthier, more educated and more morally concerned parts of the > world,
> like new Puritans--refused to accept the Art Brut qualities of this > happening scene--horrified at the anarchy of it all--my God!--drunken > "liberated" Freaks posing for portraits with families, naked couples > running > into the woods, the "Garden of Eden"dancers baring all while drinking and > smoking on stage, the ecstatic glee of children on rides at which the > stoned
> carnie had fallen asleep with the "On" lever on for an hour or more due to > his having collapsed on it-- > Woodstock to these new people was a Sacrement, but this kind of communing > obviiously foul and pagan--and attended by al the wrong sorts of > people--so > it was banned, done away with, and consigned to happy memories--and > onewonders what happened to al those painters?--probably collectors now > among the ones who put them out of work and fun--making a bundle off their > surviving works on ebay, sellng them at nice new fairs with New Age and > RISD educated themes in booths of their own--as "Primitive Portraits" by > "Outsider Artists" --to dealers disguised as tourists who in turn purchase > them for the galleries in New York, Milan, Paris, Stuttgart, Tokyo, Sao > Paulo, Dubai, Los Angeles, etc--

>
> meanwhile--uncannily--hidden in plain sight--"they walk among us"--the > "outsider artists"--
> "art brut"--among their own "regimes of liberty"--
>
>
>
>
> >From: susan maurer <[redacted]>
> >Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> >To: [redacted]
> >Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> >Date: Fri, 9 Mar 2007 09:48:13 -0500
> >
> >hm .well i wouldnt mind being as much of an outsider as bukowski. the > >launching of new press poetswearprada was aterriric event lastnight and i > >was glad to be in it. wonder if it would profit by being labelled > outsider.
> >susa maurer
> >
> >
> >>From: Christopher Leland Winks <[redacted]>
> >>Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> >>To: [redacted]
> >>Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> >>Date: Wed, 7 Mar 2007 12:27:23 -0500
> >>
> >>"Outsider art" has become another niche marketing term in the branch > >>of the commodity economy known as the "art world." Perhaps when Roger

> >>Cardinal (?) published his illustrated monograph entitled "Outsider > >>Art" a few decades back, the term had meaning because of its novelty > >>as a rubric. But now, in an era when "Outsider Art Fairs" are > >>annually held in New York City, it's become another way for art > >>hustlers -- er, dealers -- to make a buck off their designated "Other" > >>of choice.
> >>
> >>On another level: if Henry Darger's work can be labeled "outsider > >>art," can John Ashbery's "Girls on the Run," inspired by Darger, be > >>called "outsider art" too? If so, why? If not, why not?
> >
> >_____
> >Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a > month.
> >Intro*Terms
> >
> https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=
%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s =4056&p=5117
>
> _____
> The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
>
> http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?
sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE
>

↑ Index

208. Rob McLennan
peter f yacht club
Sat 10 Mar 2007

FINALLY AVAILABLE: Peter F. Yacht Club Sails to Calgary

Captains log:

assembled in Calgary, March 2006 at Fish Creek Public Library
by guest Captain, former Ottawa Yachtswoman Laurie Fuhr original printed in Calgary Zoo Elephont at Recreation Facility Personnel, www.aarfp.com sponsored by The Horribly Awfuls, www.myspace.com/thehorriblyawfuls (Laurie Fuhr's favorite band) printed by rob mclennan at above/ground press headquarters in February 2007

a production of the Peter F. Yacht Club workship

Guest Yachtsmen (& Yachtswimmin):

Jonathan Ball; Derek Beaulieu; Ryan Bird; *Stephen Brockwell; Weyman Chan; *Anita Dolman; *Jesse Ferguson; ryan fitzpatrick; Richard Gorecki; Jocelyn Grosse; Joy Hendrickson-Turner; *Nicholas Lea; *Laurie Fuhr; *Melanie Little; David McGimpsey; *rob mclennan; *Max Middle; *James Moran; Tom Muir; *Jennifer Mulligan; *Peter Norman; Sharron Proulx-Turner; Stuart Ross; Wes Smiderle; Joanne Underwood; *Vivian Vavassis; Yvonne Werkman; Garth Whelan

* regular crewmembers

The Peter F. Yacht Club, issue #5; irregular (very) writers group publication. Edited & compiled by Laurie Fuhr. Copies available at $5 each/add $2 for postage (payable to rob mclennan, 858 Somerset Street West, main floor, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7; outside of Canada, $5/+$2 US).

Previous issues still available (possibly; availability of various issues pretty random) at $5 each. Issue #1, August 2003, edited by rob mclennan; Issue #2, April 2004, edited by Anita Dolman (out of print); Issue #3, September 2004, edited by Peter Norman and Melanie Little; Issue #4, September 2005, edited by rob mclennan.

The Peter F. Yacht Club is part of the above/ground press annual subscription package; for more information on above/ground press 2007 subscriptions, check the link here. http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/2007/03/finally-available-peter-f.html

-- poet/editor/publisher ...STANZAS mag, above/ground press & Chaudiere Books (www.chaudierebooks.com) ...coord.,SPAN-O + ottawa small press fair ...13th poetry coll'n - The Ottawa City Project .... c/o 858 Somerset St W, Ottawa ON K1R 6R7 * http://robmclennan.blogspot.com/

↑ Index

209. reJennifer Bartlett
New on the SES Poetics Blog
Sat 10 Mar 2007

---

1. Essay on Nathaniel Tarn
2. Comments on David Orr's Times Article

http://saintelizabethstreet.blogspot.com/

_____ Find a local pizza place, movie theater, and more….then map the best route!
http://maps.live.com/?icid=hmtag1&FORM=MGAC01

↑ Index

210. Geoffrey Gatza
AWP photo gallery
Sat 10 Mar 2007

Hello Everyone,

Here is my picture gallery from AWP.

http://picasaweb.google.com/ggatza/AWP2007

I took a train from Buffalo NY to Atlanta and back again.

--
Best, Geoffrey

Geoffrey Gatza
BlazeVOX [books]
www.blazevox.org

↑ Index

211. Mark Truscott
March 16: Ross and Smith at Test
Sat 10 Mar 2007

Dear friends,

Please join us for an evening of

STUART ROSS and ROD SMITH (bios below)
Friday, March 16, 7:30 p.m.
Mercer Union, A Centre for Contemporary Art 37 Lisgar Street, Toronto Pay what you can (Substantial readings followed by a discussion)

Plenty more information (including words on and by Friday's readers, recordings of past readings, and a map) at www.testreading.org.

And, hey, the good people at Mercer Union do more than open their doors to bedraggled reading series. If you'd like to be notified of Mercer progamming and events, please drop a line to [redacted]. You'll be glad you did.

Hope to see you there. And feel free to forward this message. (If you've been forwarded this message and you'd like to get the real thing in the future, e-mail [redacted].)

Mark

****

STUART ROSS is a Toronto fiction writer, poet, editor, small-press publisher, and creative-writing instructor who has been active in the Toronto literary scene since the mid-1970s. He sold 7,000 copies of his self-published poetry and fiction chapbooks in the streets of Toronto during the '80s and is a co-founder, with Nicholas Power, of the Toronto Small Press Book Fair, an underground literary institution since 1987. He is the author of five major collections of poetry, most recently Hey, Crumbling Balcony! Poems New & Selected (ECW, 2003) and the forthcoming I Cut My Finger (Anvil, 2007), as well as numerous works of fiction, a collection of personal essays, and countless chapbooks and items of ephemera. He has supported scores of other writers through his various small press ventures and editorial work.

ROD SMITH is the author of Music or Honesty, The Good House, Poèmes de l'araignée (France), In Memory of My Theories, The Boy Poems, Protective Immediacy, and New Mannerist Tricycle with Lisa Jarnot and Bill Luoma. His latest collection, Deed, will be published by the University of Iowa Press in the fall of 2007. A CD, Fear the Sky, came out from Narrow House Recordings in 2005. Smith's work has appeared in numerous magazines and anthologies, including Anthology of New (American) Poets, The Baffler, The Gertrude Stein Awards, Java, New American Writing, Open City, Poésie, Poetics Journal, Shenandoah, and The Washington Review. He edits Aerial magazine, publishes Edge Books, and manages Bridge Street Books in Washington, DC. The next issue of Aerial will focus on poet Lyn Hejinian. Smith is also editing, with Peter Baker and Kaplan Harris, The Selected Letters of Robert Creeley, for the University of California Press.

www.saidlikereedsorthings.ca=

↑ Index

212. mairead byrne
Re: AWP photo gallery
Sat 10 Mar 2007

I went via Amtrak too, Geoffrey, though just from Providence: 22 hours each way; another lesson on race & America.
Mairead

On 3/10/07, Geoffrey Gatza <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>
> Hello Everyone,
>
> Here is my picture gallery from AWP.
>
>
> http://picasaweb.google.com/ggatza/AWP2007
>
> I took a train from Buffalo NY to Atlanta and back again.
>
>
>
> --
> Best, Geoffrey
>
> Geoffrey Gatza
> BlazeVOX [books]
> www.blazevox.org
>
>

↑ Index

213. David A. Kirschenbaum
Boog City 39 Available
Sat 10 Mar 2007

Please forward

Boog City 39

Available Sunday P.M.

featuring:

Our Music section, edited by Jon Berger

--[3]When Phoebe Kreutz approached Luv-A-Lot Records[1] Dashan Coram with the idea for Urban Barnyard‹the whole municipal fauna thing‹who knew the idea would have legs? What started out as a one-joke band has developed into multiple jokes, but also a pretty rocking affair.[2]‹from Urban Barnyard on Urban Barnyard, where the four members of Urban Barnyard reviewed some of the music that the others have recently produced (including Phoebe Kreutz[1]s We Gotta Go reviewed by Casey Holford, Art Sorority for Girls¹ Alpha Sigma Gamma reviewed by Phoebe Kreutz, Dibs¹ Dibs Bleeds Books reviewed by Daoud Tyler-Ameen, and Casey Holford¹s January reviewed by Dibson T. Hoffweiler) followed by a review of their latest release, That¹s the Idea, by Berger.

Our Printed Matter section, edited by Mark Lamoureux

--³Throughout the chapbook, the ³voice² interweaves its two languages, and locating this voice becomes an act of readerly translation. The next section phonetically translates the Thai into English, scores the syllables, and meditates on the poem in English. from Composite Poetry, composite. diplomacy. by Padcha Tuntha-obas (Tinfish), reviewed by Craig Perez

--³For all its realism, Carbon seems most interested in the point at which the real becomes surreal, the sublime absurdity of the plain face of things.² --American Oracle, Carbon by Michael Ford (Ugly Duckling Presse), reviewed by Lamoureux

Our Film section, guest edited by Jon Berger

--³A fascinating adaptation from Capital Media Arts of the open mic lifestyle, the script plugs in numerous cameos for East Village superstars such as The Bowmans and, of course, the host of the AntiHoot, the singularly named Lach.² --Talkin¹ New York: The Little Movie that Might by Berger

Our Politics section, edited by Christina Strong

--³Are these people tourists on vacation or actual people who live here and have copious amounts of wealth?² --Work Sucks, Life Sucks, and Then You Die by Strong

Art editor Brenda Iijima brings us work from Belford New Jersey's Kate Greenstreet

Our Poetry section, edited by Laura Elrick and Rodrigo Toscano

-- Bowdoinham, Maine¹s Jonathan Skinner with Borzicactus Nanus
a dwarf on a borzoi stuffs a nan up my ass twirling his deep scarlet-orange hairdo

-- Vancouver, British Columbia¹s Roger Farr with From Surplus
Security is denser now, is domination¹s form
But it¹s their form more than mine, my labour keeps Taylorism¹s hands (weapons) on its forward gears

and

XXXIV
Tissue over diagrams or fragment
Their sums with different measures. Frameworks Framed as ³Freidman¹s Dream,² filed for later under ³Sphere.² Stand on guard to bound sums to Another sense that might pass the primary Test of deficit to chart profit margins

-- Pasadena, California¹s Deborah Meadows with
On the state of the novel as a coffin.
Fiendish old scamps had clapped enough
to institutionalize their tapping.

And photos from David S. Rubio and Christina Strong.

And thanks to our copy editor, Joe Bates.

Please patronize our advertisers:

Bowery Poetry Club * http://www.bowerypoetry.com
::fait accompli:: * http://www.nickpiombino.blogspot.com/
The Million Poems Show * http://www.jordandavis.com/Talkshow.html

---

Advertising or donation inquiries can be directed to [redacted] or by calling 212-842-BOOG (2664)

2,250 copies of Boog City are distributed among, and available for free at, the following locations:

MANHATTAN

THE EAST VILLAGE

Acme Underground
Alt.coffee
Angelika Film Center and Café Anthology Film Archives
Bluestockings
Bowery Poetry Club
Café Pick Me Up

CB's 313 Gallery
CBGB's
Lakeside Lounge
Life Café
Mission Café
Nuyorican Poets Café
Pianos
The Pink Pony
St. Mark's Books
St. Mark's Church
Shakespeare & Co.
Sidewalk Café
Sunshine Theater
Tonic
Trash and Vaudeville

OTHER PARTS OF MANHATTAN

Hotel Chelsea Poets House

BROOKLYN

WILLIAMSBURG

Bliss Café
Earwax
Galapagos
Northsix
Sideshow Gallery
Soundfix/Fix Cafe
Supercore Café

GREENPOINT
(available later next week)

Greenpoint Coffee House
Lulu's
Photoplay
Thai Cafe
The Pencil Factory

--
David A. Kirschenbaum, editor and publisher
Boog City
330 W.28th St., Suite 6H
NY, NY 10001-4754

For event and publication information:
http://boogcityevents.blogspot.com/
T: (212) 842-BOOG (2664)
F: [redacted]

↑ Index

214. Stephen Vincent
Re: Outsider Art
Sat 10 Mar 2007

Yes, agree with Murat, David, a wonderful, insightful post.

Funny, how it also makes me think of 14th century German (I believe) iconic Christian paintings in devotion to and in celebration of various Biblical allegories. I remember a CAA annual conference in Boston in which the lecturer showed infra-red (?) slides of the under-painting (preliminary sketches) for various works. Instead of stiff depictions of iconic allegorical figures, we were given a very naturalistic view of the models - men, women and children - drawn from the village around the school where the works were painted, definitely made to conform to and please the strictures of the Church. Following the argument here, the 'outsider' art was actually secreted into the interior life of the 'inside' of the Church. I guess we might call these 'under paintings' a case of "insider" art. Ironically it's taken 6 centuries to bring the work into view. I don't know if the work will ever achieve the attention of Courbet - but it's definitely of the material world, and not of allegory made.

Somehow brings up the recollection of the story of prisoners in Quantanamo making poems on thin strips of the paper pealed back from paper cups - and passing those strips among each other. Definitely 'insider' art by 'outsiders.'

Stephen V
http://stephenvincent.net/blog/

> David,
>
> Great post.
>
> Murat
>
> On 3/9/07, David-Baptiste Chirot <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> though not an "outsider artist" other than that his well known Anarchism and > having been the Cultural Director as it were during the Paris Commune of 1871--which got him booted out of France to save his skin--Gustave Courbet wrote a famous kind of "outside" credo in a letter of refusal to a

Minister
in the French Second Empire government in 1870--which Monarchist government had decided to make up for the bad treatment M. Courbet had endured due to his involvements in the 1848 Revolution-
For in the immensity of its forgiveness and willingness to embrace M. Courbet as an artist and Frenchman--this noble government had decided to give him the ribbon of the Legiond'Honneur--a purely political move to be sure, but one that would most surely tempt any Frenchman, artist or not--
But not Gusatve Courbet! Courbet's famous letter of refusal ends with some ringing lines of another kind of "outside" that an artist may hear calling--

"Therefore permit me, monsieur le Ministre, to decline the honor you thought to bestow upon me. I am fifty years old and I have always lived as a free man. Let me be free the rest of my days; for when I die, let it be said of me: 'He never belonged to any school, to any church, to any insitution, to any academy--least of all to any regime, lest it be the regime of liberty."

Bukowski, despite the Hollywood films and vast cult following and steady sales iin the usa, was the kind of "american outsider" who was a cultural icon overseas--in his native Germany, France, Italy and many other countries, Bukowski is ranked as one of the greatest, and fairly often, the greatest of American writers of the last fifty years or more--

a much more usual fate of an "outsider artist" --the examples are far more than one might think--is that of Prophet William Blackmon, a preacher and painter, whose vocations in both cases come from God--Prophet didn't begin paintng until late in life--his works have been collected and exhibited and included i books and a very large one hangs here in the Milwaukee Art Musuem, with its famous Calatrava "wings"--and just a few weeks ago at University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Prophet shared a show with another spiritually -inspired Seattle artist--and there was an evening with Prophet present, to talk after showing of the film "God's Spaceship," a 1989 documentary/interview-- i first met Prophet about 18 years ago, selling paintings on the street corners and giving readings of illlnesses and praying for their healings--and once and a while a prediction regarding the future that had come to him from God--he had a tiny ministry of mainly homeless and very poor people and also did shoe repairs-- as he is getting quite elderly now, it's more difficult for Prophet to work at his trade and the minsitry has always been a basically losing business as he gaves away much of what he has to the homeless worse off than himself-- this winter he found himself homeless--fortunately offered lodging by a Sister in his ministry-- his spirit is indomnaitbale as ever--he vastly enjoyed the evening and spoke for quite along time about his life, his Faith, his visions from God, and his painting, which he does directly on instructions from God--

(he told me one time when i had first begun making rubBeings and spray paintings--he thought they also were sent by God--since no one else was making these things, God had called to me to make them so the world would know these things exist though no one had noticed them before--he also told me another time God works through such kinds of art as He tells people to do, to show sanity in an insane world--sanity to be seen so people will suddenly know the insanity of their brains and want to be sane--"which is a dangerous thing in this world"--he laughed quite a bit at that, Amen--)

so despite all the hoopla and commercializations and appropriations, distortions, massive mad immensities and intensities of bullshit--there are actually a great many "outsider artists" who despite being wirtten about,
collected and presented in museums, remain in life ill, neglected, poor, without materials to work with or home, living in various places as they can--and in many cases, uncertain what will heppan to their works after their deths--because all sorts of things become possible when they are infact dead-- possibilities many artists know exist--yet not for them, not in this lifetime-- not in the sense of agreat genius or respectable more or less nice artists who one can sentimentalize over for having been overlooked in their lives--and later welcomed into the worlds of respectability--and al its instituions-- because the "outsider artists" in the original senses of this--are always going to be "outsiders" in a way their fellows aren't-- that kind of outsiderness--Art Brut-- is something that can't be appropriated or learned in art school or "rescued", or captured by a label,
a section in art books or museums--

it's not a question of being "more""outside" or "more authentic"--but of something other-- something that for all the "recognition" it gets, remains paradoxically mainly unrecognized-
there are and will be always a few exceptions--but even those aren't recognized as being "real artists" like the ones runinng the vast gamut from O'Keefe and Picasso to Yoko Ono to Charles Schultz to Thomas Kincaide to any issue of any art magazine no matter what genres--including the journals of "outsider art"--

more and more of whom are like the artist i saw posters of for a while around town, "Wisconsin's Most Famoous Outsider Artist"--(never heard of him) --pcitured in studio, expensive easel produly standing among tons of the latest offerings from Utrecht,with a nice view o fa "landscape" through the "studio window"--immensely professional looking and al speaking very much of being guaranteed the viewer the very best and most up-to-date in
"Outsider Art"--complete with web site, fax address and al the rest--
"a perfect addition to any home" i am sure-- again, i would recommend Lucienne Piery's Art Brut: The Origins of Outsider

Art

for the hsitory of this and for the ways from the very beginning of Dubuffet's naming, collecting, exhibiting, writing on, having monographs written on, establishing a center for Art Brut, and influencing the Artists Houses set up for Art Brut artists--from the beginning of all this, the awarenesses of the continual changes and obstacles, questions involved, both in critical terms, effects on the personal lives of the artists, and the financial aspects and the dangers posed by all the massive masrhalling of powers of the art world and media which in the end have buried Dubbeffet's
orignal ideas of Art Brut and what Art Brut inspires and can be an example of in different ways of thinking about materials, possiblities, researchs, for other artists-- (even in the midst of the furor, now, and later, once the feeding frenzy has become but a laugh and lark, a discarded and discredited fashion--so deminished and pase as to be laughed at as here and now--the artists themsleves, the vast nameless ones,the creators, go on creating anyway--art brut in Dubuffet's conceptions of it--has been around since the dawn of time and will cointue on regardless--maybe one of the only kinds of "art" which will d so--having been nameless and unnoticed for millenia--it's not a
"movement" in any sense of the term--other than a continual movement of making out of its own myriad callings--it's not going to have an "end" as
say any School or Movement etc does-- the stubborn, "Brut," anarchic

persistence of the "art" "drive" or "impulse" no matter what is done with
it, to it, for it, by it--kill the artists, burn their works, ban them, throw them in jail, put them on peddestals, ahng them in person and in galleries, chop off their hands, put out their eyes, sic god, the state,
the
crtics, the collectors, the dealers, the forgers, the ridiculers, the know-it-alls, the pedants, the art lovers, the art teachers, the art supply
companies, sic all of them on art, the artist--there will always be some damn fool who in some inexpicable way hears a calling and will start
making
things out of next to nothing-anything at hand---regardless if anyone else is even paying attention--and so Art Brut wil return to its anonymity . .
.
or recognitions . . . whatever the ebbs and flows of these--it remains intact--obdurately watching al that comes and goes around it--vanishes--reappears--like Easter Island heads observing the circulations
of the air, the light, the ocean, the ships, the birds, the visiting humans--knowing the energies that live in them are out there out somewhere--creating their myriad strange companions--

Dubuffet's ideas and projects and their histries as Lucienne Piery details
them are
ia far more interesting and useful vision and hisotry than what has beomce
the kind of mindless "another booth at the art fair" Christopher Winks ably
describes-- which is actually interesting in a funny way as when i was a kid in Vermont
at places like the notorious Tunbridge World's Fair and scattered about through other much smaller fairs--there would be itinerent portrait painters who would set up shop and for a noimal fee paint your picture--or if you wanted, a picture of something else--they'd also have a little bunch
of hand made set ups for displaying their other works-- and if they wre alittle more prosperous than some of their brothers and sisters also making
the circuit, they'd have anextra display of velvet Elvses, those Children
of
the Damned kids wtih immense eyes, Jesus, unicorns, stock cars, and the like--your basic kitsch--
the artists for the most part were affable carnies--could keep up a good patter,chain smoke and have some brews--and in general add to the festive atmosphere (which at the Tunbridge World's Fair, of course, eventually just slid out of control--it lasted for days--what with homebrew swigging and later on open marijuana smoking backwoods people charging the"Garden of Eden" strip show tent, "liberating" the Freak Show (inviting them to join in the party aad leave their tents)--old family feuds erupting, smashed stunt drivers crashing, illegal gamblers pulling knives and the like--once more highminded folks started moving in to the state, of course all this basically good clean medieval Rabelian fun had to stop!--"outsiders" from the wealthier, more educated and more morally concerned parts of the world, like new Puritans--refused to accept the Art Brut qualities of this happening scene--horrified at the anarchy of it all--my God!--drunken "liberated" Freaks posing for portraits with families, naked couples running into the woods, the "Garden of Eden"dancers baring all while drinking and smoking on stage, the ecstatic glee of children on rides at which the stoned carnie had fallen asleep with the "On" lever on for an hour or more due to his having collapsed on it-- Woodstock to these new people was a Sacrement, but this kind of communing obviiously foul and pagan--and attended by al the wrong sorts of people--so it was banned, done away with, and consigned to happy memories--and onewonders what happened to al those painters?--probably collectors now among the ones who put them out of work and fun--making a bundle off their surviving works on ebay, sellng them at nice new fairs with New Age and RISD educated themes in booths of their own--as "Primitive Portraits" by "Outsider Artists" --to dealers disguised as tourists who in turn purchase them for the galleries in New York, Milan, Paris, Stuttgart, Tokyo, Sao Paulo, Dubai, Los Angeles, etc--

meanwhile--uncannily--hidden in plain sight--"they walk among us"--the "outsider artists"--
"art brut"--among their own "regimes of liberty"--

From: susan maurer <[redacted]>
Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Outsider Art
Date: Fri, 9 Mar 2007 09:48:13 -0500

hm .well i wouldnt mind being as much of an outsider as bukowski. the launching of new press poetswearprada was aterriric event lastnight and i was glad to be in it. wonder if it would profit by being labelled outsider.
susa maurer

> From: Christopher Leland Winks <[redacted]>
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Outsider Art
> Date: Wed, 7 Mar 2007 12:27:23 -0500
>
> "Outsider art" has become another niche marketing term in the branch of the commodity economy known as the "art world." Perhaps when Roger Cardinal (?) published his illustrated monograph entitled "Outsider Art" a few decades back, the term had meaning because of its novelty as a rubric. But now, in an era when "Outsider Art Fairs" are annually held in New York City, it's become another way for art hustlers -- er, dealers -- to make a buck off their designated "Other" of choice.
>
> On another level: if Henry Darger's work can be labeled "outsider art," can John Ashbery's "Girls on the Run," inspired by Darger, be called "outsider art" too? If so, why? If not, why not?
>
> ---
> Mortgage rates as low as 4.625% - Refinance $150,000 loan for $579 a month.
> *Intro*Terms*
>
> https://www2.nextag.com/goto.jsp?product=100000035&url=%2fst.jsp&tm=y&search=mortgage_text_links_88_h27f6&disc=y&vers=743&s=4056&p=5117
>
> ---
> The average US Credit Score is 675. The cost to see yours: $0 by Experian.
>
> http://www.freecreditreport.com/pm/default.aspx?sc=660600&bcd=EMAILFOOTERAVERAGE

↑ Index

215. Ruth Lepson

Re: New on the SES Poetics Blog

Sat 10 Mar 2007

Thanks for these, Jennifer B.
I get the Bk Rev on Wed so I wrote a letter to the ed then, saying that if the Times wants to do something for poetry in this country they shd review innovative poetry from the Lang poets on--but then saying that maybe that is pointless to suggest bec it is a mainstream publication.

Yr Tarn essay is the kind of thing that shd appear there!
Best,
Ruth L.

On 3/10/07 11:56 AM, "reJennifer Bartlett" <[redacted]> wrote:

> 1. Essay on Nathaniel Tarn
> 2. Comments on David Orr's Times Article
>
> http://saintelizabethstreet.blogspot.com/
>
> ---
> Find a local pizza place, movie theater, and more....then map the best route!
> http://maps.live.com/?icid=hmtag1&FORM=MGAC01

↑ Index

216. David-Baptiste Chirot

Re: outsider Art & poets of Gitmo (complete Guardian article included here)

Sat 10 Mar 2007

Stpeh and Murat

Thank you for your kind comments & for the sotry of thepaintings in Germany Stpehen. You wirte of the poets in Gitmo--here's an artiicle (below comments) from the Guardian about them and some of their works to see the light of day.

Something that never ceases to amaze and fascinate me is how many fragments of ancient texts--Sappho for example--quite recently a singificant find in Egypt f her work--how many are found in large waste disposal areas and even sometmes blowing n the streets in Egypt. The texts were written on the backs of papryi which were being recycled from the windings of what were considered insignifcant mummies. (Rather like the truly wild "routine" recorded by Burroughregardng heirachy and decompositon of mummies ont eh CD that comes with the Word Virus selection of his works.) Considered recycled near-trash to begin with, they eventually found their ways all the wayinto the trah, where rummaging scholars now find a regualr feast of poems, documents, etc in fragments. Since I do a great deal of work with found materials and fragements found in streets, alleys, dunpsters, concstruction sites and so forth--it's an added hilarity to pretend am finding the Milwaukee equivalents of the fragments of Sappho lyrics among the wind blown rubbish clambering about in. Makes one think of the Mr Magoo episode in which he gets hooked on archeology and is inhis nearsighted way excavating dumps and consrtuction sites! As a child I used to help my steamiftter grandfather go through sites he worked at after dinner to find scrapmetal and loose screws etc he'd weld into all sorts of things at home, from a merry-go-round to a go-cart to religious chokers and birdhouses, jewerly and the like. The interrealtionships among junk, recycling, the finding of fragments of lost poems, and also making new poems from scraps and biits and pieces of thrown out, smashed, weathered, refuse as a way to refuse that the lives of the things themselves are ever gone completely, but like Whitamn's "leaves of grass," are tongues still speaking, from outof the ground itself. A lot of "outsider art" is made in this way, as well as the work of one of the greatest all around artists/poets of the 20th century--Kurt Schwitters. What I like especially with Schwitters is ht he used found materials--the Surrealists used things found, but at fleamarkets, and hence pruchased for use. The Situationists with their "psychogeographies" and "driftings" carried this into the realm of o form of awareness of the states of mind eoked by found archectrues, streets, squares, and ambienece at once constructed and evocative beyond its physical being into the relam of a provocation of free mental play, daydreaming, fantasy, imagination. (Though one finds this also In breotn's Nadja and Aragon's Paris Peasant--and further back in De Quincey's Confessions of an English Opium Eater, which Baudealire partially translated.) (Think of Atget's dreamlike documenatry photos of empty Parisian sites as ebing related to these.) Among various writers and artits since the bginnings of modernism with baudlaire, one cn find coonections with aspets of "outsider art" in the use of found materials that are the excess as it were of the overaproduction of mass production as well as as the built in obsolence of this, combined with the throwing away of all manner of materials once used. A Joseph Cornell box, for example, is not that far from many works of "oputider art" which are madewith fragemnts of onbects, texts and collections of these which share certan qualities of resemblances among themselves. What develops very often is a langauge, a text in a sesne, made up of forms which begin to carry cetain private meanings and connotations--hence the repititon of many key elements, wheather in Cornell, Schwitters or amny Art Brut artists iexemplifeid n the colection begun byDubuffet. William Carlos Willims in Spring of All ues many exmaples of this, some more obvious than others. As he said himself a poem can be made of anything" (the famous one of the Dungess is it clams--menu is an example). Willims takes a black and white repoduction of aJuan gris paiting, voices off theradio and their advertiing slogans, billboards and signs, all manner of fragments from daily life to create his own form of poetry from raw materials foudn in the environment he is goig about in on his Doctor's errands. Dos passo in the USA trilogy andManhattan Transfer usses raw dta also, documents, headlines, newspaper stories, snatchesof popular songs and the like. The most extreme and brillaint user f found texts I think is Paul Metcalf, whose Apalache is completely made of found texts, yet the way it is put togetehr by Pual makes of these one of the great long poems in a sesne of modern times. (Man of his toher works are constcutedof juxtapostions of found texts, with here nd there linking commenatry of his own, and other times not, simply the juxtapostions. Oslon and Susan Howe's earlier work also do this and Clark Coolidge's Smithsonian Depositions, another brilliiant book made of found texts.) In a great many "outsider art" work, Art Brut, there is also much use of found materials and in also of mixingof texts with images. Sometimes the "texts" are completely invented, others like Prophet Blackmon write wods from Scripture around the paintings or within them also. I think that both Prinzhorn with his 1921 book Art of the Mentally Ill and Dubuffet with his creation of Art Brut and its ideas he presented for other artits, viewers,etc--I think iwht both tthese projects there is this now buried concept of Art Brut, "outsider art"--that is it art on apra with "high art"--i terms of art itelf, and in termsof the usesofmaterials, private lnaguages every rtit creates among public ones found al about one, and that the difference is not in the art being not art, but in that the motivations of the Art Brut and outsider artist are differrent from those of the "rtist" as standarldy conceived of. That many outsider artist and Art Brut creators may be anything from copletely ignorant of "art" so called to having a sketchy knoweldge gleaned from newspaer andmagzines, a tv show nowadays or a talk they heard someplace is not necessarily what sets them apart intheir difference, for man "artists" have begun in this way also. The difference seems to be that the "outsider" or Art Brut creator--is an uncanny and strange way considered to be more "open" to the operations of forces from "outside" which are drving their work in a different way than does say the classical "Muse." For Prinzhorn's pateints of curseit is "mental illness" that provides the "poutside force" so to speak, thesomething which "makes a difference." Many Art artits are not "mentally ill," but simply outside any conception of the "art world." Each one has a different motivation or desrie in craetingtheir work, but it not in the manner of n "artist," that is it i driven by something esle than the thoughtof bengpart of any system other than its own. It is definetley capableof being seen and understod as "art," yet also obviously stands outside the institutions and histories and cocnepts of the "art world" system. For Dubuffet this ofers t the "artist" an example of an opening and way out the sytemsof "art." Whetehr an "artist" can bever "become an outsider artist" per se is debatable. What Dubuffet is suggesting not to "become an Art Brut creator," but to be sinpired by their examples to go further and further afeld fromthe constarints of the system.

It's imporatant to note hat Dubbeffet's criteria for Art Brut are notlimited to mental illness. in the early days of roganzing Art brut and collecting it, selecting it for exhibtions--Andre Bretonworked closely with Dubuffet. But as with many others, Breton was to split from Dubuffet andleave the field tohim. The cuase of their disagreement wasthat breon wanted toinsist tha only works by the mentally ill could be considered Art Brut. (he had after al trained as a psychologist.) For Dubuffet, itis the "art" qualities which are considered, not the mental status of the creator, which cn be anything at all. Dubuffet was more interested in the untrained and unknowing things made by creators than in the psychological motivations. That's avery improtant point but one ofte overlooked by people when speakingof "outsider art" and thinkingof it onlyasworks by the mentally ill. A lotof Art Brut creators were and are solid citizens with regular jobs they stay with for years. The live a "normal" life except that they produce thei works, without the intention of them being part of the art system. The works can be seen if so desired as the "secret" or "inner" lives and deries, dreamsof the "normal " persons, but again, this isn't "mental illness."

If one begins to think of Art Brut and "outsider art" as having both a difference from and many interrealtionships with aspects of "art", I think it's a very interesting and useful way of questioing and finding ever more ways of making things and thinking with things found. art Burt is a kind of tool in Deleuze and Guattari's sense of the tool kit--or my grandfatehr's sense or my own bag of tools--a tool kit for oepning lines of deterriorlaizations and investigations, what i call "anarkeyology."

It really is no accident that though doing so out of hatred and scorn, the nazis mad a conection between "outsider art" and "modern art." The nazis saw this "degenerate art" on both parts a "mental illnesses" which needed to be eradicated from a "healthy" society. Dubuffet in a sense sees their point, but not as "metnal illness" but as a form of revolt against systems, Fascism ceratinly beingone of them, and to be extended to all systems if one so desires. The Nazis recngized what they thought to be a "danger to society,"; Dubuffet saw the "danger" (of contemination, contagion, etc) as a "healthy revolt" against society and the "art sytem." And not only a healthy revolt, but the most imperatively neccesary one. "Necessity is the motherfucker of invention," iin that sense as wel as in using lietarlly anything to make a poem or "art." And necessity begins very often not from a nothing, but from the excess refuse and loose parts, fragments, of systems which are continully creating new orders so as to control the breakdowns built into them. By making use of materials that are part of the breakdowns, one has a chance to make things moving inthe directionof an outsideof the syetem. It's in this area that Art Brut and many apsets of art from odernism on overlap. And I think tha is very much in the origins of Art Brut having been created as it were by an artist, a very great artist. (Robert Smithson works can also be seen as related to a this, in the use of broen rok, soill, strutures, sites/non-sites and his ideas at the timeo f his death on using art in th reclamation of industiral y deimated landscapes--again a recylcing and a making use of the found materials.) Here below is Guardn article re the poets of Gitmo--

> David Chirot spotted this on the Guardian Unlimited Books site and thought you should see it.
>
> To see this story with its related links on the Guardian Unlimited Books site, go to http://books.guardian.co.uk
>
> 'Inside the wire'
> The pressures of confinement in Guantánamo Bay have led many in the controversial detention camp to turn to poetry. But, as Richard Lea learns, the American authorities are very reluctant to let the world see them
> Richard Lea
> Monday February 26 2007
> The Guardian
>
> Poetry's capacity to rattle governments is not, it appears, confined to totalitarian regimes. A collection of poems by detainees at the US military base in Guantánamo Bay is to be published later this year, but only in the face of strong opposition by suspicious American censors.
>
> Twenty-one poems written "inside the wire" in Arabic, Pashto and English have been gathered together despite formidable obstacles by Marc Falkoff, a law professor at Northern Illinois University who represents 17 of the detainees at the camp. The collection, entitled Poems from Guantánamo: The Detainees Speak, will be published in August by the University of Iowa Press with an afterword written by Ariel Dorfman.
>
> It all began when he turned up at the secure facility in Washington DC where all communications from detainees are sent, and found a poem waiting for him.
>
> "The first poem I saw was sent to me by Abdulsalam al Hela," he says. "It's a moving cry about the injustice of arbitrary detention and at the same time a hymn to the comforts of religious faith."
>
> "It was interesting to me because I did a PhD in literature, but I didn't think too much about it."
>
> A second poem from another client followed soon after, and Falkoff began to wonder if other lawyers also had clients who were sending poetry. It turned out that Guantánamo Bay is "filled with itinerant poets".
>
> Many of the poems deal with the pain and humiliation inflicted on the detainees by the US military. Others express disbelief and a sense of betrayal that Americans - described in one poem as "protectors of peace" - could deny detainees any kind of justice. Some engage with wider themes of nostalgia, hope and faith in God.

But most of the poems, including the lament by Al Hela which first sparked Falkoff's interest, are unlikely to ever see the light of day. Not content with imprisoning the authors, the Pentagon has refused to declassify many of their words, arguing that poetry "presents a special risk" to national security because of its "content and format". In a memo sent on September 18 2006, the team assigned to deal with communications between lawyers and their clients explains that they do not "maintain the requisite subject matter expertise" and says that poems "should continue to be considered presumptively classified".

The defence department spokesman Jeffrey Gordon is unsurprised that access to detainees poetry is tightly controlled. "It depends on what's being written," he says. "There's a whole range of things that are inappropriate." Of course poetry that deals with subjects such as guard routines, interrogation techniques or terrorist operations could pose a security threat, but Gordon is unable to explain why Al Hela's poem is still classified, saying "I haven't read any of these [poems]".

As with prisoners within the American justice system, he argues, there are constraints on their first amendment rights. "I don't think these guys are writing poetry like Morrissey," he continues.

"The fear appears to be that detainees will try to smuggle coded messages out of the camp," explains Falkoff, a fear that has often allowed clearance for English translations only - Arabic or Pashto originals being judged to represent an "enhanced security risk". In many cases even Falkoff has only seen the translations prepared for the volunteer lawyers by the few translators with the requisite security clearance.

Because of security restrictions, Falkoff cannot give any further details about Al Hela's poem, or about other poems sent to him by his clients that have not been cleared for publication by the department of defence. He is not allowed to see about 20 poems sent to other lawyers that have not been cleared for publication.

Many poems have also been lost, confiscated or destroyed. Falkoff is unable to even offer an estimate of how many poems have been written in the camp.

"To start with," he says, "there are probably 200 detainees who either don't have lawyers or have not been allowed to communicate with their lawyers. Even for those clients who have lawyers, I really don't know how many poems they've written or whether they've been confiscated. Communicating back and forth with our clients is a very, very difficult process."

Only one of the authors in the forthcoming collection wrote poetry before his incarceration. The religious scholar Abdul Rahim Muslim Dost wrote 25,000 lines of poetry during his time in the camp, only a handful of which have been returned to him. A poem he wrote on a Styrofoam cup and reconstructed from memory after his release appears in Poems from Guantánamo. The other detainees were not poets before their incarceration, but have turned to poetry under the particular pressures of their situation.

Moazzam Begg, who spent three years in Guantánamo Bay before being released without charge in January 2005, began writing poetry as a way of explaining what he was going through. He knew that everything he wrote would be censored, so used poetry to try to describe his situation to his family.

"The idea was to say it without saying it," he says, "and to explain to my interrogators that it was a farce."

The formal constraints of poetry gives the writer control over their material, he says, "the ability to say the words without going into a rant".

Poetry was also a way of engaging with the system.

"I knew that everything I wrote would be censored," he continues, "and that the person censoring it would have to read the poem." By writing in English, a language rarely used by detainees in the camp, he was able to communicate directly with guards, and perhaps those higher up in the US military.

It was also a way of "showing anger" and "channelling frustration".

According to Falkoff, detainees are writing poetry because "they're trying to keep hold of their sanity and humanity".

"They have really, really nothing to do there," he says. "They get, now, an hour of exercise every other day or so. They don't have access to books, apart from a Qu'ran - which they get whether they want it or not - and a little book cart with some Agatha Christie novels and some Harry Potter. They're not allowed to interact with the other prisoners. There are no communal areas. The recreation area is like a chimney with 30ft high walls."

"They're writing poetry because they need some kind of mental stimulation, some way of expressing their feelings, some outlet for their creativity."

According to the poet Jack Mapanje, who was imprisoned in Malawi because of his writing and now teaches a course on the poetry of incarceration at

Newcastle University, prisoners often turn to writing poetry as a way of "defending themselves".

"People are writing as a search for the dignity that has been taken away from them," he says. "It's the only way they can attempt to restore it, but nobody is listening to them." He was imprisoned himself with many people who were illiterate, he says, but many of them were writing poetry, or singing songs about their captivity - "it's the same impulse that drives people to prayer."

"Poetry talks to the heart," he continues, "there is something immediately passionate about it." For Mapanje, poetry is a more "natural" means of expression than prose, a means of communication that "anybody who hasn't got any craft will come to".

The poet Tim Liardet, whose Forward prize-shortlisted collection Blood Choir deals with the time he spent teaching poetry at a young offenders' prison, agrees there's an "instinctual" urge to reach for poetry in extreme circumstances.

"They're feeling things they've never felt before, or never with so much intensity," he says. "They've never had to try to match such an intense experience with language before."

Many of the offenders he worked with resisted his efforts to get them to write poetry, he continues, but "the ones who ended up writing it were the ones who found it themselves. They weren't following an example from me."

Falkoff is hoping the collection of poems from Guantánamo Bay will put a human face on people branded by the former American defence secretary Donald Rumsfeld as "among the most dangerous, best-trained, vicious killers on the face of the Earth".

The quality of the poems in the collection is "variable", says Falkoff, but "there's some really good stuff there". He stresses that because of security restrictions he has often been unable to see anything more than translations prepared without "poetry in mind". Nevertheless some of the poems transcend their extraordinary circumstances, he says, and "just knock me over".

With the courts moving slowly towards fair and open hearings, he continues, "the detainees' own words may become part of the dialogue. Perhaps their poems will prick the conscience of a nation."

Copyright Guardian News and Media Limited

_____ Rates near 39yr lows! $430K Loan for $1,399/mo - Paying Too Much? Calculate new payment http://www.lowermybills.com/lre/index.jsp?sourceid=lmb-9632-18226&moid=7581

↑ Index

217. lcabri

torse / torsion / torque / Le torque

Sat 10 Mar 2007

Kasey's third question / scenario that ends his post today on torque deprecatingly implies that his own desire to articulate a neutral taxonomy and Ron's desire to evaluate under-40 poetry both may be equally reifying a literary past of collective prose-poem practice. So or not, I believe there's a missing, larger point in "all this," and it peeks out in the language of Kasey's third scenario that asks: "How much of all this really has to do directly with any formal considerations of syntax or grammar or lineation or whatever, as opposed to drawing on a set of associations which have accreted around surface features of Language writing, but which ultimately have much more to do with superformal considerations (political contexts, statements of intent, social dynamics, etc?" It strikes me that a larger and more challenging point stems from a directly opposed premise to that of Kacey's third scenario, namely that the "formal" and the "superformal" are not differentiable (Kasey's scenario suggests they are differentiable, it would seem). Or at least they are not differentiable except in a guidebook way (as in a guidebook to form and ideas about poetry). Surely form as inherently neutral pure essence doesn't exist except in guidebooks and the rhetoric of criticism ("A sestina is..."). Frankly the social as neutral pure essence of "sociality" doesn't exist except in the loins of partygoers' heads and the drawing rooms of Georg Simmel. As Adorno a window no writes: "In order for the work of art to be purely and fully a work of art, it must be more than a work of art" -- which sounds like an enormous challenge for any of us. The "more" in this quotation points to a different understanding of "torque" than as either "formal" or "superformal" elements of a "work" and its context. Le torque, here, however, is no longer Ron's torque (as he outlines it in his torqu-ography -- the recent blog-post that I only just read), nor is it Kacey's torse / torsion / torque triad, and yet Le torque informs both Ron's evaluative comments and Kacey's umbrage to them. As I said, it sounds to me like an enormous chilly lunge for any of us to take. - Louis

↑ Index

218. John Tranter
" Pre-announcing Jacket 32"
Sun 11 Mar 2007

" PRE Announcing Jacket 32 " Jacket 32 -- due in late April -- is about half full, and already overloaded and glittering with stellar literary fragments and ruminations. You can check it out here:

http://jacketmagazine.com/32/index.shtml

========== Articles

> Anthony Stephens: Cutting Poets to Size - Heidegger, Hölderlin, Rilke
>
> Gilbert Adair: "Child-Emporererer (vacncy)": Apprehending U.S. Empire through Robert > Fitterman's "Metropolis"
>
> Andrea Brady: The Other Poet: John Wieners, Frank O'Hara, Charles Olson
>
> Stephen Fredman: Edward Dorn
>
> Steve Halle: Against Lightning Flashes: Inspiration in Kristin Prevallet's "Scratch Sides: Poetry, Documentation, and Image-Text Projects", by Kristin Prevallet
>
> Douglas Messerli: What is to be Done?
>
> Clément Oudart: Genreading and Underwriting: A Few Soundings and Probes into Duncan's
> "Ground Work"
>
> David Rosenberg: The Lost Poets of the Wild: The Influence of the First Writing Poets in Sumer

========== Interviews

> Nicomedes Suárez-Araúz: In Search of the Night: on translating Jaime Saenz: an Interview > with his translators, Kent Johnson and Forrest Gander
>
> Wayne Koestenbaum in conversation with Tony Leuzzi, 22 October 2004, Le Gamin Coffee
> Shop, Chelsea, New York
>
> Deborah Meadows in conversation with Romina Freschi, Buenos Aires, Argentina, 2006

========== The Holiday Album: Greeting Card poems for All Occasions: Edited by Elaine Equi

> Elaine Equi: Best Wishes (Introduction)
>
> Elaine Equi: Happy New Year
>
> David Lehman: Time Frame
>
> Wayne Koestenbaum: Short Subjects

> Rae Armantrout: Address
>
> Nick Piombino: Valentine's Day - Valentine's Day - Feb. 14th
>
> David Shapiro: Colorful Hands - Holi: The Festival of Colors (Indian) - first weekend in March
>
> Tom Clark: Equinox - March 21/22
>
> Vincent Katz: Back From The Dead - The Veneralia (Roman) - April 1st
>
> Jeanne Marie Beaumont: Fête of the Little Boats - (French) - April 6th
>
> Martine Bellen: On John Ashbery Day - A Cento - April 7th
>
> Cathy McArthur: At the Wildlife Center - Bird Day - May 4th
>
> Jerome Sala: Mother's Day
>
> Jeanne Marie Beaumont: Flower & Camera - Flower & Camera Day - June 29th
>
> Chris Martin: Independence Day
>
> Stacy Szymaszek: Hammock Day - July 22nd
>
> Erica Kaufman: admit you're happy day - Aug. 8th
>
> Erica Kaufman: elvis week - Aug. 8-16th
>
> Fanny Howe: Our Lady of Knock, August 21, 1879
>
> Jerome Sala: Anniversary
>
> Gregory Crosby: Columbo Day - Oct. 12th
>
> Connie Deanovich: Happy Hamlet Day - Oct 15th
>
> Amy Gerstler: All Saints' Day - Nov. 1st
>
> Joe Brainard: Thanksgiving
>
> David Trinidad: Doll Memorial Service - Doll Memorial Day - second Saturday in December
>
> David Shapiro: After Ryokan - Winter Solstice - Dec. 21st

========== Reviews

> Raewyn Alexander: "Red the Fiend" by Gilbert Sorrentino
>
> Raewyn Alexander: "Sundays on the Phone", by Mark Rudman
>
> Raewyn Alexander: "Rain" by John Woodward
>
> Marcelo Coelho: "Rapid Departures" by Vincent Katz, illustrations by Mario Cafiero
>
> Ian Davidson: "Grave of Light: New and Selected Poems 1970-2005", by Alice Notley
>
> Marcella Durand: "secure portable space", by Redell Olsen
>
> Clive Faust: "Language Is" by John Phillips
>
> Michael Gottlieb: "The Anger Scale" by Katie Degentesh

> Linda Russo: "Terminal Humming" by K. Lorraine Graham
>
> Linda Russo: "Crop" by Yedda Morrison
>
> Linda Russo: "Chantry" by Elizabeth Treadwell
>
> James Sherry: "The Grand Piano" Project: ...an ongoing experiment in collective autobiography by ten writers identified with Language poetry in San Francisco. It takes its > name from a coffeehouse at 1607 Haight Street, where from 1976-79 the authors took part in a > reading and performance series. The writing project, begun in 1998, was undertaken as an online > collaboration, first via an interactive web site and later through a listserv.
>
> Jason Stumpf: "Necessary Stranger" by Graham Foust

========== Poems

> Iain Britton: Lemurs and Missing Links in Loops
>
> Bruce Covey: Two poems: 'Still'; 'Good & Plenty'
>
> Romina Freschi: Initials (2004/05)
>
> Michael Kelleher: Number Crunch
>
> Ronald Koertge: Three Haibun
>
> Kristin Prevallet: Tales of Caw
>
> Robert Sheppard: Sonnets from "September 12"

... and ... there's more to come!!!

Thanks to the many poets, reviewers, writers and editors who have offered their work to Jacket free of charge.

If you'd like to be taken off this mailing list, please just go to Jacket's email page at http://jacketmagazine.com/00/email-jacket.shtml
and ask

-- John Tranter, Editor, Jacket magazine
-- Pam Brown, Associate Editor, Jacket magazine

↑ Index

219. Anne Coon

Re: Fwd: a prize for interestingness

Sun 11 Mar 2007

That's terrific. This would be a good thing to have Vincent post to our minors list, don't you think?

John Roche wrote:

> *
> ----- Original Message -----
> *
> Friday, March 9, 2007 8:29:54 AM
> Bulk Message
> From: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted] <mailto:>> > Dan Waber <[redacted] <mailto:>> > Subject: a prize for interestingness
> To: [redacted] <mailto:>
>
> At http://www.vispoets.com/ we now have a patron, a donor, an angel, someone who likes what we're doing enough to put their money where their mouth is, someone with a way and the means to encourage visual poets and to support the presses who publish them.
>
> Beginning one week from today, next Friday, March 16th, and running for the next two months of Fridays (as a test, longer if it works out), this patron will select the most interesting work of visual poetry posted to the members' galleries (http://vispoets.com/index.php?automodule=gallery&req=sc&cat=1 <http://vispoets.com/index.php?automodule=gallery&req=sc&cat=1>) the previous week and award them $25 in printed visual poetry material from one of a variety of publishers (patron's choice of publisher, publisher's choice of material).
>
> All you need to do to have your work considered is be a registered member of the site, and post something to the members' galleries that week.
>
> If you are a publisher of visual poetry and would like to send $25 worth of your wares to a winner or two, please email me at [redacted] <mailto:> with your interest and contact information.
>
> If you would like to add your support to this endeavor by sponsoring a similar project, or, simply adding cash to all or some of the weekly awards, we can work with you to make that happen. Email me at [redacted] <mailto:> to discuss it further.
>
> Whee!
> Dan

↑ Index

220. Montgomery fuller
lord patch (aka)
Sun 11 Mar 2007

sound

http://www.myspace.com/lordpatchdub

_____ Find what you need at prices you'll love. Compare products and save at MSN® Shopping. http://shopping.msn.com/default/shp/?ptnrid=37,ptnrdata=24102&tcode=T001MSN20A0701

↑ Index

221. Dan Wilcox
Third Thursday Open Mic: Albany, NY
Sun 11 Mar 2007

the Poetry Motel Foundation
presents

Third Thursday Open Mic for Poets

now at
the Social Justice Center
33 Central Ave., Albany, NY

Thursday, March 15, 2007
7:00 sign up; 7:30 start

Featured Poet: Jamey Stevenson Jamey Stevenson is a writer and computer programmer currently living in Troy. Although most of his life revolves around books and video games, he occasionally manages to counteract his hermetic tendencies and participate in the awesomeness that is Albany's poetry scene. Aside from subjecting others to his amateurish ramblings on girls and God, Jamey also helps coordinate the Albany chapter of the International Game Developer's Association, where he does his part to corrupt the local youth by advocating video game development in the Capital Region. For more info, visit his website at www.jstevenson.com.

$3.00 donation.

Your host since 1997: Dan Wilcox.

"all these pretty nuns"
by Jamey Stevenson

all these pretty nuns
are enough to make a boy like me reconsider piety and I've been cast out of paradise so many times for so many victimless crimes
it's a sin
but when God steals your woman you know you can't win

all these pretty nuns
cloistered in the hollow of His hand while this voice commands me:
"climb this tree"
"pick this apple"
but your spirit guides you past all desire and you can't feel the fire

(you can't feel the fire)

bring me a chariot of my own to knock down the pillars and shatter the throne
after all, don't we all die alone?
it's a sin
but when God steals your woman you know you can't win

heart and soul
you're drawing lines that don't exist self-deprivation is always the twist while you leave me twisting unkissed

all these pretty nuns
shivering in God's embrace forbidden fruit is an acquired taste but you'll continue chaste and chased
it's a sin
but when God steals your woman you know you can't win

####

↑ Index

222. Alan Sondheim
Pas. compressed.
Sun 11 Mar 2007

Pas.

From last night's Millennium screening greatly reduced http://www.asondheim.org/pas.mp4

with Sandy Baldwin and thanks to Ian Murray, Sugar Seville

11 short dance motion capture sequences in combination with walk/fly modes in Second Life. Sound: Alan Sondheim (Ensoniq Mirage)

siting the edge of SL - at this particular point, SL/RL physics is trans- formed into aberrant behavior; objects are literally deconstructed.

Think of these as collisions, speed-motion studies, the last digital ikon, emptied signifiers, transformations of desire, metaphors for metonymy.

n : substituting the name of an attribute or feature for the name of the thing itself (they counted heads)

↑ Index

223. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: outsider Art & poets of Gitmo (complete Guardian article included here)
Sun 11 Mar 2007

—

↑ Index

224. Murat Nemet-Nejat
Re: Outsider Art
Sun 11 Mar 2007

Stephen,

If life is a prison (an idea considered since time immemorial), then the outsider is the insider, and the insider the insider seeing itself clearly.

Murat

On 3/10/07, Stephen Vincent <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> Yes, agree with Murat, David, a wonderful, insightful post.
>
> Funny, how it also makes me think of 14th century German (I believe) > iconic > Christian paintings in devotion to and in celebration of various Biblical > allegories. I remember a CAA annual conference in Boston in which the > lecturer showed infra-red (?) slides of the under-painting (preliminary > sketches) for various works. Instead of stiff depictions of iconic > allegorical figures, we were given a very naturalistic view of the models

> -
> men, women and children - drawn from the village around the school where
> the > works were painted, definitely made to conform to and please the > strictures > of the Church.
> Following the argument here, the 'outsider' art was actually secreted into > the interior life of the 'inside' of the Church. I guess we might call > these 'under paintings' a case of "insider" art. Ironically it's taken 6 > centuries to bring the work into view. I don't know if the work will ever > achieve the attention of Courbet - but it's definitely of the material > world, and not of allegory made.
>
> Somehow brings up the recollection of the story of prisoners in Quantanamo > making poems on thin strips of the paper pealed back from paper cups - and > passing those strips among each other. Definitely 'insider' art by > 'outsiders.'
>
> Stephen V
> http://stephenvincent.net/blog/
>
>
>
>
>
> > David,
> >
> > Great post.
> >
> > Murat
> >
> > On 3/9/07, David-Baptiste Chirot <[redacted]> wrote:
> >>
> >> though not an "outsider artist" other than that his well known > Anarchism
> >> and

> >> having been the Cultural Director as it were during the Paris Commune
> of > >> 1871--which got him booted out of France to save his skin--Gustave > Courbet
> >> wrote a famous kind of "outside" credo in a letter of refusal to a > >> Minister
> >> in the French Second Empire government in 1870--which Monarchist
> >> government > >> had decided to make up for the bad treatment M. Courbet had endured due
> to > >> his involvements in the 1848 Revolution-
> >> For in the immensity of its forgiveness and willingness to embrace M.
> >> Courbet as an artist and Frenchman--this noble government had decided
> to > >> give him the ribbon of the Legiond'Honneur--a purely political move to > be > >> sure, but one that would most surely tempt any Frenchman, artist or > not--
> >> But not Gusatve Courbet! Courbet's famous letter of refusal ends with > some > >> ringing lines of another kind of "outside" that an artist may hear > >> calling--
> >>
> >> "Therefore permit me, monsieur le Ministre, to decline the honor
> you > >> thought to bestow upon me. I am fifty years old and I have always > lived
> >> as > >> a free man. Let me be free the rest of my days; for when I die, let > it
> >> be > >> said of me: 'He never belonged to any school, to any church, to any > >> insitution, to any academy--least of all to any regime, lest it be the > >> regime of liberty."
> >>
> >> Bukowski, despite the Hollywood films and vast cult following and > steady > >> sales iin the usa, was the kind of "american outsider" who was a > cultural > >> icon overseas--in his native Germany, France, Italy and many other > >> countries, Bukowski is ranked as one of the greatest, and fairly often,

> >> the > >> greatest of American writers of the last fifty years or more--
> >>
> >> a much more usual fate of an "outsider artist" --the examples are far > more > >> than one might think--is that of Prophet William Blackmon, a preacher
> and > >> painter, whose vocations in both cases come from God--Prophet didn't > begin > >> paintng until late in life--his works have been collected and exhibited
> >> and
> >> included i books and a very large one hangs here in the Milwaukee Art
> >> Musuem, with its famous Calatrava "wings"--and just a few weeks ago at > >> University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Prophet shared a show with another > >> spiritually -inspired Seattle artist--and there was an evening with > >> Prophet
> >> present, to talk after showing of the film "God's Spaceship," a 1989 > >> documentary/interview--
> >> i first met Prophet about 18 years ago, selling paintings on the street > >> corners and giving readings of illlnesses and praying for their > >> healings--and once and a while a prediction regarding the future that > had > >> come to him from God--he had a tiny ministry of mainly homeless and > very > >> poor people and also did shoe repairs-- > >> as he is getting quite elderly now, it's more difficult for Prophet to > >> work
> >> at his trade and the minsitry has always been a basically losing > business
> >> as > >> he gaves away much of what he has to the homeless worse off than > himself--
> >> this winter he found himself homeless--fortunately offered lodging by a > >> Sister in his ministry-- > >> his spirit is indomnaitbale as ever--he vastly enjoyed the evening and > >> spoke > >> for quite along time about his life, his Faith, his visions from God,
> and
> >> his painting, which he does directly on instructions from God--
> >> (he told me one time when i had first begun making rubBeings and spray > >> paintings--he thought they also were sent by God--since no one else was > >> making these things, God had called to me to make them so the world > would > >> know these things exist though no one had noticed them before--he also > >> told > >> me another time God works through such kinds of art as He tells people

> to > >> do, to show sanity in an insane world--sanity to be seen so people will > >> suddenly know the insanity of their brains and want to be sane--"which > is
> >> a > >> dangerous thing in this world"--he laughed quite a bit at that, Amen--)
> >>
> >> so despite all the hoopla and commercializations and appropriations, > >> distortions, massive mad immensities and intensities of bullshit--there
> >> are > >> actually a great many "outsider artists" who despite being wirtten > about,
> >> collected and presented in museums, remain in life ill, neglected, > poor, > >> without materials to work with or home, living in various places as > they > >> can--and in many cases, uncertain what will heppan to their works after > >> their deths--because all sorts of things become possible when they are > >> infact dead-- > >> possibilities many artists know exist--yet not for them, not in this > >> lifetime--
> >> not in the sense of agreat genius or respectable more or less nice > >> artists
> >> who one can sentimentalize over for having been overlooked in their > >> lives--and later welcomed into the worlds of respectability--and al its > >> instituions-- > >> because the "outsider artists" in the original senses of this--are > always > >> going to be "outsiders" in a way their fellows aren't-- > >> that kind of outsiderness--Art Brut-- is something that can't be > >> appropriated or learned in art school or "rescued", or captured by a > >> label,
> >> a section in art books or museums--
> >>
> >> it's not a question of being "more""outside" or "more authentic"--but
> of > >> something other-- > >> something that for all the "recognition" it gets, remains paradoxically

> >> mainly unrecognized-
> >> there are and will be always a few exceptions--but even those aren't > >> recognized as being "real artists" like the ones runinng the vast gamut
> >> from
> >> O'Keefe and Picasso to Yoko Ono to Charles Schultz to Thomas Kincaide
> to > >> any issue of any art magazine no matter what genres--including the > >> journals
> >> of "outsider art"--
> >> more and more of whom are like the artist i saw posters of for a while > >> around town, "Wisconsin's Most Famoous Outsider Artist"--(never heard
> of > >> him) --pcitured in studio, expensive easel produly standing among tons
> of > >> the latest offerings from Utrecht,with a nice view o fa "landscape"
> >> through > >> the "studio window"--immensely professional looking and al speaking > very > >> much of being guaranteed the viewer the very best and most up-to-date
> in
> >> "Outsider Art"--complete with web site, fax address and al the rest--
> >> "a perfect addition to any home" i am sure--
> >>
> >>
> >> again, i would recommend Lucienne Piery's Art Brut: The Origins of > >> Outsider
> >> Art
> >>
> >> for the hsitory of this and for the ways from the very beginning of > >> Dubuffet's naming, collecting, exhibiting, writing on, having > monographs
> >> written on, establishing a center for Art Brut, and influencing the > >> Artists
> >> Houses set up for Art Brut artists--from the beginning of all this, the > >> awarenesses of the continual changes and obstacles, questions involved, > >> both > >> in critical terms, effects on the personal lives of the artists, and
> the > >> financial aspects and the dangers posed by all the massive masrhalling
> of > >> powers of the art world and media which in the end have buried > >> Dubbeffet's

> >> orignal ideas of Art Brut and what Art Brut inspires and can be an > example
> >> of in different ways of thinking about materials, possiblities, > researchs,
> >> for other artists-- > >> (even in the midst of the furor, now, and later, once the feeding > frenzy
> >> has > >> become but a laugh and lark, a discarded and discredited fashion--so > >> deminished and pase as to be laughed at as here and now--the artists > >> themsleves, the vast nameless ones,the creators, go on creating > >> anyway--art
> >> brut in Dubuffet's conceptions of it--has been around since the dawn of > >> time
> >> and will cointue on regardless--maybe one of the only kinds of "art"
> which > >> will d so--having been nameless and unnoticed for millenia--it's not a
> >> "movement" in any sense of the term--other than a continual movement of > >> making out of its own myriad callings--it's not going to have an "end"
> as
> >> say any School or Movement etc does-- the stubborn, "Brut," anarchic > >> persistence of the "art" "drive" or "impulse" no matter what is done
> with
> >> it, to it, for it, by it--kill the artists, burn their works, ban them, > >> throw them in jail, put them on peddestals, ahng them in person and in > >> galleries, chop off their hands, put out their eyes, sic god, the > state,
> >> the
> >> crtics, the collectors, the dealers, the forgers, the ridiculers, the > >> know-it-alls, the pedants, the art lovers, the art teachers, the art > >> supply > >> companies, sic all of them on art, the artist--there will always be > some > >> damn fool who in some inexpicable way hears a calling and will start
> >> making > >> things out of next to nothing-anything at hand---regardless if anyone > else > >> is even paying attention--and so Art Brut wil return to its anonymity .
> .
> >> .
> >> or recognitions . . . whatever the ebbs and flows of these--it remains > >> intact--obdurately watching al that comes and goes around

> >> it--vanishes--reappears--like Easter Island heads observing the > >> circulations
> >> of the air, the light, the ocean, the ships, the birds, the visiting > >> humans--knowing the energies that live in them are out there out > >> somewhere--creating their myriad strange companions--
> >>
> >>
> >> Dubuffet's ideas and projects and their histries as Lucienne Piery > details
> >> them are > >> ia far more interesting and useful vision and hisotry than what has > beomce
> >> the kind of mindless "another booth at the art fair" Christopher > >> Winks ably
> >> describes-- > >> which is actually interesting in a funny way as when i was a kid in > >> Vermont
> >> at places like the notorious Tunbridge World's Fair and scattered about > >> through other much smaller fairs--there would be itinerent portrait > >> painters who would set up shop and for a noimal fee paint your > picture--or > >> if you wanted, a picture of something else--they'd also have a little > >> bunch
> >> of hand made set ups for displaying their other works-- and if they wre > >> alittle more prosperous than some of their brothers and sisters also > >> making > >> the circuit, they'd have anextra display of velvet Elvses, those > Children
> >> of
> >> the Damned kids wtih immense eyes, Jesus, unicorns, stock cars, and the > >> like--your basic kitsch-- > >> the artists for the most part were affable carnies--could keep up a > good > >> patter,chain smoke and have some brews--and in general add to the > festive > >> atmosphere (which at the Tunbridge World's Fair, of course, eventually > >> just > >> slid out of control--it lasted for days--what with homebrew swigging
> and > >> later on open marijuana smoking backwoods people charging the"Garden
of > >> Eden" strip show tent, "liberating" the Freak Show (inviting them to > join

> >> in > >> the party aad leave their tents)--old family feuds erupting, smashed > stunt > >> drivers crashing, illegal gamblers pulling knives and the like--once > more > >> highminded folks started moving in to the state, of course all this > >> basically good clean medieval Rabelian fun had to stop!--"outsiders"
> from
> >> the wealthier, more educated and more morally concerned parts of the > >> world,
> >> like new Puritans--refused to accept the Art Brut qualities of this > >> happening scene--horrified at the anarchy of it all--my God!--drunken
> >> "liberated" Freaks posing for portraits with families, naked couples > >> running > >> into the woods, the "Garden of Eden"dancers baring all while drinking
> and > >> smoking on stage, the ecstatic glee of children on rides at which the > >> stoned > >> carnie had fallen asleep with the "On" lever on for an hour or more due
> to
> >> his having collapsed on it-- > >> Woodstock to these new people was a Sacrement, but this kind of > communing
> >> obviiously foul and pagan--and attended by al the wrong sorts of > >> people--so
> >> it was banned, done away with, and consigned to happy memories--and > >> onewonders what happened to al those painters?--probably collectors now
> >> among the ones who put them out of work and fun--making a bundle off > their > >> surviving works on ebay, sellng them at nice new fairs with New > Age and > >> RISD educated themes in booths of their own--as "Primitive Portraits"
> by
> >> "Outsider Artists" --to dealers disguised as tourists who in turn > purchase
> >> them for the galleries in New York, Milan, Paris, Stuttgart, Tokyo, Sao > >> Paulo, Dubai, Los Angeles, etc--
> >>
